December Consumer Prices Up

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices rose a moderate 0.4 percent in December, bringing the overall rise in prices in 1977 to 6.8 percent, the government reported today.

The inflation rate was about in line with what the Carter administration predicted for the year and compared with a 4.8 percent price rise in 1976.

The Labor Department blamed last year's acceleration of inflation on higher food prices during the first half of the year when severe winter weather affected crops and reduced supplies.

The administration originally projected consumer prices to rise 6.7 percent in 1977 but revised its forecast in April to 6.9 percent because of the weather's effect during the first three months of the year.

Although inflation was higher last year than in 1976, the rate cooled during the second half of the year. Consumer prices rose at a seasonally adjusted 4.6 percent annual rate during the final three months of 1977, compared with a 10 percent annual rate in the first quarter.

Administration economists predict inflation in 1978 will rise at about the same rate as last year, with the average family's food costs increasing 4 to 6 percent.

It in his State of the Union speech Thursday night, President Carter expressed concern with the high rate of inflation and proposed a new, voluntary program to combat it through wage and price restraints. He called on government, business, labor and other groups to hold wage and price increases in each sector of the economy during 1978 below the average increases of the last two years.

"A sincere commitment to voluntary constraint provides a way — perhaps the only way — to fight inflation without government interference," Carter said.

The 6.8 percent inflation rate last year compares with inflation rates of 7 percent in 1975, 12.2 percent in 1974 and 8.8 percent in 1973.

Food prices rose 8 percent last year following an increase of only 0.6 percent in 1976.

The increase was led by higher prices for meats, poultry, processed fruits and vegetables, sugar and cereal and bakery products, all of which declined in 1976, the government said.

Although coffee prices have declined since mid-year, the increase of 47.8 percent in 1977 was only slightly less than the rise of 57.9 percent in 1976.

In announcing the year-end figures, the Labor Department also reported that the purchasing power of the average worker's paycheck declined 0.3 percent in December because of inflation and a drop in weekly pay.

Over the year, real spendable earnings — take-home pay after reductions for inflation and taxes — were up 3.4 percent because of a reduction in federal income taxes last June.

Resupply Mission

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union today launched an unmanned resupply spacecraft to dock with the manned Salyut-6 orbiting space station, the Tass news agency said.

The spacecraft, called Progress-1, will dock at the space station alongside the cosmonauts' Soyuz-27 spacecraft, Tass said.

It did not give the time of the launching or the scheduled time for docking.

Progress-1 presumably will use the same docking port used Jan. 11 by the spacecraft of two other cosmonauts fired into space on an resupply mission.

Those cosmonauts stayed aboard for five days with the first pair of spacemen and departed last Monday.

Storm After Storm

By The Associated Press

A howling winter storm — the third in a week — swept up the Atlantic Coast today, dumping up to 10 inches of new snow on areas still frozen from the last onslaughts.

"It's unusual that we get this many (storms) right behind one another," Carl Smelgus, weather forecaster at the Wilmington, Del., airport, said Thursday night.

A state police dispatcher in Waldorf, Md., southeast of Washington, D.C., where up to seven inches of snow fell, said even main roads would be "a thrill a minute" during the morning rush hour.

The swift-moving new storm packed more moisture than either of its predecessors. Seven inches of snow fell on New York City in six hours and forecasters predicted 10 inches before it turned to freezing rain. Even more built up further inland.

A snow emergency was declared in New York City for the first time this winter. Drifts on Manhattan streets were several feet deep. All three major airports serving the area — Kennedy, LaGuardia and Newark — were closed.

Philadelphia — buried under 10 inches of new snow within 12 hours — closed its airport, all public and parochial schools and state offices. State buildings in Pittsburgh and Harrisburg also shut down.

However, shoving the storm ahead of it was warmer air from the South, which was turning the snow to sleet and freezing rain and, finally, just heavy rain as it moved north.

Rain soaked the Southeast from Mississippi eastward Thursday and was pushing through the mid-Atlantic states early today, reaching Philadelphia several hours before dawn.

The combination of warmer temperatures and rain raised another danger — local flooding — for northern sections still blanketed by snow and ice.

As it passed through Thursday, the storm dropped snow as far south as southwestern Louisiana — which had not had any for five years — and left up to five inches in northern Alabama.

Tennessee and Kentucky, which have been buried under more snow in the past couple of weeks than they sometimes get in an entire season, got another layer Thursday.

Schools were closed in much of Tennessee again today. Officials in Memphis are talking about canceling the week-long spring vacation to make up for lost time.

Voluntary Restraints
$25 Billion Tax Cut Tops Carter Economic Program

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's plan for the U.S. economy mixes a $25 billion tax cut this year and an anti-inflation program pegged to voluntary restraints by business and labor on wages and prices.

In his first annual economic message to Congress today, Carter said his economic package, if approved by the House and Senate, will reduce taxes by $258 for a typical family of four with $15,000 annual income, a reduction of nearly 20 percent. About 96 percent of all taxpayers will receive some reductions, he said.

Presidential aides said the tax reduction, however, would only be intended to offset increases in other taxes such as Social Security during 1977 and 1978.

The president also promised to consider additional tax reductions on a regular basis, perhaps annually, to keep the tax burden on Americans from cutting further into their income.

In announcing his economic program, Carter said it contains "my economic priorities for the years ahead and my strategies for achieving them."

It is intended, in part, to meet criticism from the business community which has complained it did not understand Carter's economic policies.

"I have begun from the premise that our economy is basically healthy, but that well-chosen government policies will assure continued progress toward our economic goals," Carter said in the report he sent to Congress.

There was little that was new in the program that had not already been leaked by the administration to reporters. But some of the goals of the program for unemployment and inflation were changed.

A chief aim is to reduce the nation's jobless rate from the current 6.4 percent to as low as 6.1 percent by the end of this year and 5.5 percent by the end of 1979.

Carter virtually abandoned his commitment to a balanced budget by 1981, pledging instead to work for a balanced budget when the economy is near full strength.

He also abandoned his previously stated goal of reducing inflation to 4 percent by the end of 1978.

He said his economic program should ensure growth in the economy of 4.5 percent to 5 percent a year and a reduction in unemployment of about one-half percent each year. The economy grew by nearly 5.8 percent in 1977.

"Our problems cannot be solved overnight," Carter said. "But we can resolve them if we fix our sights on long-term objectives, adopt programs that will help us to realize our goals and remain prepared to make adjustments as basic circumstances change."

The most controversial part of Carter's program will be his effort to get labor unions and business leaders to accept smaller increases in wages and prices in order to reduce inflation by one-half percent a year.

Carter's chief economic spokesman, Charles L. Schultze, acknowledged to reporters that the initial reaction of business and labor ranged from "wary acceptance to a little bit of grumbling." But if successful, he said, inflation could be reduced to 4 percent by 1981.

Some Suggest State Of Union Views Inadequate

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's long State of the Union agenda, while drawing the expected praise from Democratic leaders, is encountering some complaints that may signal a renewal of the problems that marked his first year of dealing with Congress.

Carter's first State of the Union message before a joint session, while interrupted 43 times by applause, brought criticism from Republicans and a few Democrats who felt the president's proposals were inadequate to deal with the nation's most pressing problems.

In a 50-page compendium of proposals accompanying his speech, Carter said the year's top priorities are a strong energy bill, creating new jobs, reducing taxes, eliminating inequities in the tax laws, revamping the federal Civil Service system and ratifying the Panama Canal treaty.

Carter was criticized last year for overburdening the legislative process with too many proposals and for not consulting sufficiently with congressional leaders. The problems were most visible in connection with his energy program, which Carter had said would be the judge of his first year in office — and which fell into a congressional quagmire.

House Minority Leader John Rhodes immediately linked the program to the last session, calling the program "a collection of cliches which, like the administration's record so far, lacked focus and direction."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., one of Carter's most effective allies, said Carter's chiding of Congress for failing to act on the energy package was "on the mark."

Carter, addressing the continuing energy bill deadlock, said, "We have failed the American people. ... Not much longer can we tolerate this stalemate."

But the president suggested no new approach that might break the deadlock that has persisted for months.

Distinguished Service Award To Brady At Annual Program

Don Brady, popular Greenville contractor who has served the local Jaycees in a variety of capacities, received the plaudits of the chapter last night for his overall service endeavors as he was named recipient of the annual Distinguished Service Award.

Brady received the 1977 service citation during emotional ceremonies at the Jaycees' 32nd annual DSA and Bosses Night activities.

Former Jaycee president Tom Reese, who announced the DSA recipient, told the gathering that, "There has never been a Jaycee who lived more by the creed, "That service to humanity is the best work of life.""

The Jaycees also honored Jim Sullivan, partner in the Greenville CPA firm of John C. Proctor & Co., as the 1977 Boss of the Year. Sullivan, who was nominated by Mike Joyner, became the chapter's fourth recipient of the award.

Meeting at the Candlewick Inn, the Jaycees welcomed East Carolina University Chancellor Dr. Leo Jenkins as the guest speaker for the recognition banquet.

Reese, in making the DSA announcement, observed that, "The man we honor...has been a member of more teams than I could mention." He said that Brady "has stood by while others reaped the awards."

A native of Selma in Johnston County, Brady demonstrated his personal leadership and character as a high school student, serving as president of his graduating class. He also attained the prized Eagle Scout ranking during his school tenure.

The DSA nomination data submitted by a fellow Jaycee pointed out, "The contributions Don has made to the community have been accomplished through great personal sacrifice. They were not job related activities and therefore that extra spark and genuine concern for people were the motivation that caused him to be an important part of any endeavor he undertakes. Don's entire life during his Jaycee involvement has been one of steady personal growth."

Brady served the local Jaycees as a member of the board of directors in 1967 and then completed a year as a State Jaycee Director in 1968. He was elected vice president of the Greenville chapter in 1970, district vice president of the North Carolina Jaycees in 1971, and local president in 1972.

In 1969, he was appointed to the board of trustees of Boys Home of North Carolina and he served three tenures (1969, 1975 and 1976) as state chairman of the Boys Home All Star Game.

As head of the Greenville chapter, Brady was involved in the sponsorship of the first city-wide July 4th celectation, the raising of over $2,000 for the Boys' Club, presentation of over $1,200 to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, and the initiation of work on Jaycee Park.

The nomination data pointed out that, "In 1973, Don led a campaign across the state to gain support for the idea of an East Carolina University Medical School. This involved 3,000 miles of travel to make speaking engagements, and promoted a campaign to have petitions signed and letters written to the legislators in the medical school's behalf."

For his accomplishments as president of the Greenville Jaycees, Brady was the first from Greenville to be recognized by the State Jaycees as the Outstanding Local Chapter President. In 1969, 1970 and 1971, he was honored by the local chapter as recipient of the Spark-Plug of the Year recognizing involvement in Jaycee and community activities.

"Speak to any Jaycee across the state," the nomination data pointed out, "and I'm sure they will know Don Brady or know someone who has been involved with him in some area of Jaycee work that is providing service to his community and state and providing a service to people."

A graduate of N.C. State University with a B.S. degree in engineering operations, he was employed by Union Carbide Corp. here in 1966 as an industrial engineer. From 1969 to the [illegible]nt, he has been involved in various areas of the co

Go Along On Crop Cutbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Carolina delegates to the American Agricultural Movement rally this week in Washington, D.C., have voted to go along with plans to cut production of corn, soybeans, barley and other grains by 50 percent.

The purpose of the crop cutback is to speed a new farm bill through Congress. Tobacco and peanuts are not included in the plan, since both receive federally-sponsored price supports, movement leaders said.

Vance Apparently Fails Sway Sadat To Resume

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance apparently failed today to persuade President Anwar Sadat to quickly revive the Egyptian-Israeli peace talks. Sadat denounced Israeli "arrogance" and the "twisting" of peace efforts.

NBC News reported, meanwhile, that it has learned Sadat might fly to Washington Sunday for talks with President Carter and that Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin might also go to Washington. There was no official confirmation of the report in the Mideast or in Washington.

Sadat told reporters after conferring with Vance that the political negotiations with Israel can be resumed only if the Israelis agree not to "tread on anyone's sovereignty" by insisting on maintaining settlements in Sinai.

Israel's position on the settlements is "a joke," he said.

"The whole approach to peace is being twisted. We are losing time," he said.

The Egyptian leader did not say what the next step might be but, responding to questions at a news conference, he said Egypt would study alternatives brought to him by Vance. He did not divulge any details.

Vance said, "The door for peace is not closed."

Sadat's comments reaffirmed that the gulf between the two sides that led to his suspension of the talks in Jerusalem was still wide.

At the same time, he said, there was an agreement to resume the work of an Israeli-Egyptian military committee in Cairo but it was unclear whether this had Israel's approval.

"They want land, they want security, they want everything," Sadat said of the Israelis, "and they are not ready to understand that peace cannot be achieved without justice."

Sadat accused Begin of arrogance, his most outspoken direct criticism of the Israeli leader since Sadat visited Jerusalem two months ago and started the peace process.

"Mr. Begin in his arrogant way said in the Knesset (parliament) that he does not need recognition of anyone here," Sadat said. "Very well, let us not start commenting on this because it is still the old arrogant way, and today or tomorrow he will see that Israel will not gain by it at all."

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

There's a phrase in George Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" that I've always loved. Maybe you have, too. It's "The living is easy" in the song "Summertime."

Well, the living can be easy in wintertime if you devise simple dishes or choose simple recipes to prepare. For example, a compote I call Sangria Figs.

I devised it recently when I was rushed for time and needed a dish on hand that could be used a couple of ways — as a dessert or as an accompaniment to a main dish.

A package of dried figs faced me on the kitchen counter. Why not couple the fruit with Sangria for a compote? Red wine, sugar and some fresh fruit with figs would be the only ingredients needed. All on hand.

The compote was a success, especially with tasters who shy away from anything really sweet. I served the Sangria Figs as a dessert at brunch and as a snack, with cookies, for evening refreshment. I also used them as an interesting accompaniment for roast chicken, but they would be equally good with other poultry and some meat dishes.

Sangria is of course the popular Spanish drink. True Sangria, according to one Spanish authority, is made with a bottle of red wine, lemon and club soda. But there are many versions of it. Often, in the United States, sugar is added and so are slices of apple, orange and pear.

SANGRIA FIGS

½ cup sugar
2¼ cups dry red wine
12 ounces dried figs (about 36), see Note below
1 red apple, unpeeled
1 orange, unpeeled

In a glass or ceramic container (cylindrical or wide-mouth), stir together the sugar and wine until the sugar is entirely or almost dissolved. Add the figs. Quarter the apple and core; cut into thick lengthwise slices and add. Cut the ends from the orange and discard; slice the orange fairly thin, halve the slices and add. The figs and apple slices should be covered with the wine, but it doesn't matter if all the orange slices are not covered. Cover the container and refrigerate overnight. Makes 9 to 12 servings.

Note: For this compote use soft, not pulled, golden or Mission (dark) figs.

Italy Looks To U.S. Wine Market

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON

MODENA, Italy (AP) — Italian wineries, eyeing an expanding market in the United States, are starting to adapt their production to meet American tastes.

And after a wet and cold summer in northern Italy, producers are now optimistic that 1977 will be a good if not great year for their vintages.

Wine making is big business in Italy, where exports reached $374 million last year. To get a foothold in the growing market across the ocean, producers are pushing light reds and whites favored by Americans.

One of the hottest exports to the United States is Lambrusco, a light bubbly wine its detractors call "red Coca Cola."

Not to be outdone, the makers of Chianti, the noble Tuscan red, are now engaged in a fierce debate over producing a Chianti white geared specifically to the American market.

The Italian Trade Commission has issued a study for Italian producers noting that per capita consumption in the United States has nearly doubled in the past 15 years to about 1.7 gallons. It asserted there was good potential for Italian wines to penetrate the market provided there was the right combination of advertising, organization and price.

The success of Lambrusco, produced from vineyards stretching from Modena to Parma north of Bologna, is nothing short of phenomenal.

"In 1960 Lambrusco was virtually unheard of in the States," said Saverio Cavlieri, sales manager of a wine cooperative here. "This shows that Americans are not bound by tastes and are willing to buy new things."

The figures bear him out as Lambrusco exports to the United States nearly doubled from 1973-75, "and it is expected that the demand for Lambrusco will continue to grow through 1980," according to the trade commission.

In the meantime, Chianti exports slipped somewhat in a blow to the wine that some historians claim can be traced to the Etruscans who settled in Tuscany in 800 B.C.

This has been blamed on a combination of price — it is generally undersold by $2-a-bottle Lambrusco — and the fact that Americans tend to prefer white wine.

Thus the great debate among Chianti producers on whether to start producing whites. At a recent heated forum in Greve in Chianti, the heart of Tuscan wine country, some houses claimed that a white made from the same grapes would make an excellent wine that would keep the region competitive. They pointed out that French champagne is mostly from red grapes.

Others, however, argued that such a change in emphasis would hurt the image of Chianti red among consumers.

Cold, rain and hailstorms in the north raised fears that the quantity and quality of this year's wine would be compromised, but a later sunny turn has given rise to optimism that 1977 will be an "annata abbondante" — fruitful year.

In any case, there is no question about wines from the south of Italy, where warm, dry weather has ensured bountiful production of muscatel, marsala and other vintages which provide strong competition for lower-priced French wines.

Develop Family Games To Aid In Those Household Chores

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

Making a family game of chores and teaching youngsters how much it costs to run a house can be an uncomplicated procedure that provides rewards for the entire family. Youngsters can learn about conservation and energy in the way it hits home — dad's pocketbook.

Peggy and Bill Houlton of New York say they have had a lot of fun themselves as the years have gone by, playing various chore games with their two girls.

Balancing bank statements was a frustrating chore for the busy Houltons — and one day Mrs. Houlton bought an inexpensive calculator and it gave her an idea: Why not get the girls into the bank act? It was so much fun that the then 6-year-old Betsy, and Jenny, then 9, looked forward to the bank statement in the mail.

Either Betsy or Jenny would become bank manager each month by working the calculator. The others worked as bank teller, accountant and auditor.

The teller pulled a check out of the envelope and the accountant would call out that she had found the item on the bank statement and mark it off. The auditor would find a stub and check it off. Deposits and deposit slips were checked.

Another game involved paying bills. All the bills were put in a big container. When it came time to pay the bills, one girl played the digger and check writer, and the other entered it in the checkbook. A third person, Peggy or Bill, signed the checks addressed and stamped the envelope and inserted the check plus any other required matter.

"It's a great way for children to get an idea of how much everything costs. For example, when we got to the light bill Betsy realized she hadn't really known that every time we turned on the dishwasher or switched on a light we had to pay a company.

"How can they possibly tell when we turned on a light?" the youngster asked incredulously.

Her mother guided her to the electricity meter and "was surprised to learn that she actually thought the lights came free with the house," she said.

As a result daughter Betsy, now 12, turns lights off when she leaves a room, and has become more aware of conserving energy.

Awareness can come when telephone bills, clothing bills, and all the others are encountered by the youngsters. And they may be sympathetic even when you balance the books.

Another of the Houltons' games — a make-believe employment agency — also was founded when Betsy was six. It was based on her "Make Pretend" games which she played alone.

This "agency" dispatches a pair of house cleaners, one animal and one human. Betsy had played the animal parts: she was small enough to wriggle under beds to retrieve socks, papers and slippers strewn by a puppy.

When Jenny was 11, she became too sophisticated to play "Let's Pretend." Now at 15, she has a role on the "The Doctors," a TV soap opera — so Betsy and her mother continued the chore games together and still give them a new twist.

When the family cleans together — daddy Bill does the big chores, such as floors and rug shampooing — other weekly chores are distributed.

"We would have to pay someone to clean the house, so why not pay ourselves? It was an idea and we began paying $2.50 an hour for each worker into a glass jar each week.

"With the money accumulated we go on a family vacation to a favorite vacation spot," Mrs. Houlton said.

The Houltons have a housekeeping chart which is used to check off and rotate the weekly chore assignments for their New York brownstone. Peggy may take the first and second stairway; Betsy, the third floor bath; Jenny, the parlor. Or there might be an assignment to clean one-half of the kitchen or dining area thoroughly.

The chart is placed where everyone will see it — on the refrigerator.

Teen-Ager Sets Sights On Being 'Best'

SOUTH LAKE TAHOE, Calif. (AP) — Steffan Baumann, a 15-year-old high school student, has come a long way since he sold his first painting at age 11. And he is selling more all the time.

His goal is to be the best, and he is relentless in his quest.

Steffan's most recent work is a depiction of some Indian tepees set in a lush forest. It sold for $800.

Willie Baumann wanted his son to go into the bakery business, to follow his footsteps. Steffan balked. His father didn't understand. But that has changed.

"My parents are very supportive of me now. They encourage me and understand and appreciate what I am trying to do and what I want to be," said Steffan.

The Baumanns have built a studio in their home near Steffan's room, and he spends eight hours a week inside, applying a mixture of oils, talent and feeling onto canvas.

Steffan describes himself as a loner, spending his spare moments watching light reflect from objects, to file the moment away for reproduction on canvas some other time.

Most of his friends are older. He says he doesn't have time to play football or anything else. In addition to his painting, he is studying the accordion and classical piano, and plays his accordion weekends at a local restaurant. And somehow he finds time to collect South American antiques.

But his first love is painting.

"I'm going to Europe next year to study art and see some of the works by the masters, and I'm looking forward to that," he said.

His friends call Steffan a perfectionist, an artist who paints each leaf, one at a time, unlike some who dip and daub. Not every painting is a masterpiece, he conceded, but he is learning on each canvas.

"I turn out maybe 15 paintings a year. Most of them are landscapes, my favorite," he added.

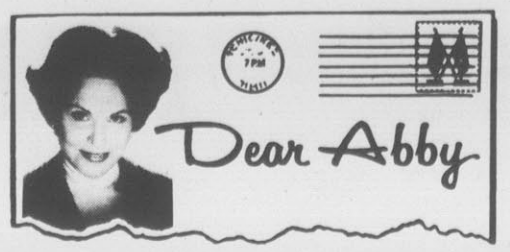

What does he do with the money from his paintings?

"I'm saving for a van so I can carry my paintings to art shows in California when I'm old enough to drive," he said.

Seeks Relief From Husband's Bondage

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Until I read your column today I thought I was the only woman in the world whose husband didn't trust her out of his sight.

We've been married a year and I feel like a prisoner. I have my own car (which I paid for myself), but my husband carries the keys and if I have to go anywhere he insists on driving me there.

When he comes home from work I get the third degree. "Was anybody here today? Who did you talk to?" (He places the telephone cord in a certain way so he will know if the phone has been used.)

I've never lied to him and have no reason to, but he doesn't believe a thing I say. I am his fifth wife, and now I know why the first four couldn't live with him.

Please don't write me at home because he gets all the mail before I do. Just write a message to "Stuck in Penna." and tell me what to do.

STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Obviously you are able to write, so if you really want out of that miserable marriage, write to a friend or relative and ask them to come and get you.

You appear to fear your husband, so if you have reason to believe that he's capable of doing you bodily harm, ask whoever is coming to rescue you from this tyrant to bring along police protection.

If you have no one to whom you can write, tell your husband you want to leave, and if he doesn't give you the keys to your car, telephone the police (or sheriff) and ask THEM to come and get you.

DEAR ABBY: I am the office manager for a law firm and have several women working under me. Is there in existence anywhere a standard dress code for the office?

I realize that times are changing, and office attire is more casual now, but surely there must be a limit to some of the "get-ups" women are allowed to wear to the office.

I have an extremely difficult time getting the idea across to some of my girls. Can you help?

FORT WORTH

DEAR FORT: For what it's worth, there is no "standard dress code" for all offices.

I don't know what kind of "get-up's you consider "the limit," but if you spell out specifically what you consider inappropriate attire for your office, you'll have your own dress code.

DEAR ABBY: I am in my middle 40s, single by choice, and I have an excellent position. My widowed mother lives with me and I am not lonely.

A few months ago my favorite cousin died. She was a few years older than I, and her husband was 12 years her senior. Well, the new widower has been coming here very often to visit "us." Both Mother and I agree that he is interested in ME. The problem is, I am not interested in HIM.

So far I've been able to avoid being alone with him, but he is very persistent. If he doesn't catch on pretty soon, I may have to hurt his feelings in order to discourage him. Can you give me a few pointers?

NOT FOR HIM

DEAR NOT: Keep the conversation impersonal, don't let him get you alone, stay out of his reach, and retire early. He'll get the message. (P.S. How about introducing him to a friend? One woman's leftovers can be another woman's banquet.)

Deformed Infant Is Repaired By Surgical Effort

By LORI COOKE
Associated Press Writer

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — When Clayton Briley was born on Dec. 2, 1977, his face was seriously deformed, the middle section bearing the tell-tale pushed-in look of the congenital birth defect known as Crouzon's disease.

He was six weeks old when doctors operated on him for six hours, rolling back the skin of his face and manipulating his brain by hand so they could cut the bones of his skull and rearrange them like a normal face.

Clayton is getting ready to go home today, eight days after his surgery, with nothing but an ear-to-ear scar across his scalp to mark his ordeal. He may be the youngest child ever to undergo such surgery. He is certainly the youngest at Duke Medical Center here, which performs similar operations about once a month.

Crouzon's is a birth defect which affects what doctors call sutures in a baby's skull — the openings where the skull hasn't closed yet which normally show up as soft spots on a baby's head when he's born.

In a baby with Crouzon's the openings are closed when he is born — forcing the brain to grow toward the top of the head, so the child ends up with an elongated skull structure.

The midsection of the face around the eyes and nose is not developed. The eyes bulge out and the face is usually wider than normal. Dr. Robert Wilkins, the neurosurgeon who was one of the team that operated on Clayton, recalled that one child at Duke had an eye bulge so pronounced that when the child cried the eye bulged out of the face and the lid closed behind it.

The breathing passages are smaller than normal and the child often breathes through his mouth, adding to the abnormal look. The condition can lead to later breathing and vision problems, Dr. Wilkins said, and in rare cases, when the brain can't find room to grow, to brain damage.

On Jan. 12, when Clayton was a day short of six weeks old, doctors at Duke made the first ear-to-ear incision across his scalp and rolled the skin down the front of his face. Because the two bones had not fused at the top of Clayton's skull — a normal condition in infants — Dr. Wilkins and his neurosurgical team lifted them out and set them aside.

While the bones hadn't grown together at the top of Clayton's skull, he had been born with the two skull openings that babies usually have at the front and backs of their heads prematurely grown together. Doctors had to separate the bones again so Clayton's brain would grow normally.

But with the openings made, doctors had to move Clayton's brain out of the way so they could work on reshaping his face. Dr. Wilkins explained that they placed a needle in the baby's spine to drain off his spinal fluid "which deflates the brain a little."

Then they reached in and gently edged Clayton's brain away from the edge of his skull, slowly loosening it from the front of the skull and pushing it toward the back. With that done, the nuerosurgical team stepped back and the plastic surgeons took over.

Led by Dr. Calvin Peters the team loosed Clayton's eye, eye muscles and optic nerve from his eye socket. The mass of muscles and nerve resemble a cone with the eye on top. With most of that freed, Dr. Peters started cutting through the outer edge of Clayton's eye sockets, down from the skull.

He continued cutting across into the sockets and across the foread are, then into the other eye socket and through the outer edge. He also made a cut across the bone which forms the bridge of the nose, loosening it but not cutting through.

Then the skull was settled forward into a normal position, the eyes settling into their sockets instead of bulging out. Dr. Peters used tiny struts or wedges of bone taken from Clayton's skull bones along the edges of the eye sockets to hold them in their new position.

Clayton had no eyebrows before the operation, but he does now. Dr. Peters created a bony eyebrow as he cut across the forehead area and moved the nose and eye area of the skull forward.

With all that done, doctors rolled the baby's skin back off the back of his head and opened up a second suture there, giving him both the skull openings that normal babies have. Then they replaced his skull bones in the front of the brain and closed up their original ear-to-ear incision.

Clayton snapped back beautifully. "He came screaming out of the anasthesia," said his mother, Mrs. Aseath Briley. Clayton was sleepy for the next day or so, which Dr. Wilkins said is normal due to the handling of the brain during the operation.

"I'm in a state of shock," Mrs. Briley said, after returning her baby to the intensive infant care nursery after showing him to visitors. Clayton stopped crying when his mother took him and hiccuped, gurgled and smiled for visitors.

"I'm just mobile and that's all," she added.

Mrs. Briley was told a few hours after her son was born by her pediatrician, Dr. Robert Sheridan of Rocky Mount, that the doctor did not like the way the baby's head was formed.

Nursing fears of mental retardation or Mongolism, Mrs. Briely and her husband, Clayton, brought their infant child to Duke, where Dr. Jane Brazy diagnosed Crouzon's.

"It's just awful to think your child is one out of a million to have something like this," Mrs. Briley said. The parents decided to go ahead with the high-risk surgery because, Mrs. Briley said, "We wanted to give him every chance in life we could."

Nevertheless, "when I saw the way he was going to be cut, my reserve almost broke down," Mrs. Briley said. Her husband, she said, took it even harder than she did.

"It hurt him more," she explained. "He wanted a boy so badly." The Brileys have a four-year-old daughter, Christian, who is normal, as are the other members of the family.

Doctors at Duke say they'll have to watch Clayton for several years to see how he's progressing. He may need further surgery later on, but they won't know that for some time. They say there is very little chance Clayton will be mentally retarded.

"I'm just so glad he's alive," Mrs. Briley said.

State Of Union...

Carter called for voluntary restraints to control prices and wages. Rep. Paul Simon of Illinois, a liberal Democrat, said the call was "a little anemic. ...The president should be asking for standby wage and price controls."

The president also proposed a $25 billion tax cut, coupled with a revision of the tax laws, a move certain to generate a long and bitter debate on Capitol Hill.

Two members of the Senate Finance Committee, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and Sen. William V. Roth of Delaware, both Republicans, attacked the tax cut proposal.

Dole said Carter's proposal "offered token tax relief to the American people while increasing Social Security and energy taxes by many more billions." Roth said the tax cut "is neither big, bold nor beneficial."

Two other major Carter proposals, the Civil Service revamping and creating a cabinet-level Department of Education, also seem sure to run into strong opposition.

On the Education Department issue, for example, the National Education Association and the American Federation of Teachers already have split on the proposal, and special interest groups are lining up for and against the idea based on how they see it affecting their favorite projects.

Carter acknowledged the plight of farmers fighting for higher prices in remarks inserted into his text.

For two days, farmers have clogged roads leading into Washington with their tractors and have picketed the Capitol, the White House and government agencies in their campaign to dramatize their demand for higher crop prices to offset spiraling csts of production.

He said the farm bill passed last year would "help a great deal" but added that "it's incumbent on us to monitor very carefully the farm situation and continue to work harmoniously with the farmers of our country.

"What's best for the farmers, the farm families in the long run, is best for the consumers of our country."

But Carter offered no specific proposals to raise prices paid to farmers and it is too early to tell whether the farmer protests are generating enough support in Congress for early action with or without White House recommendations.

Turning to foreign policy, the president appealed for ratification of the Panama Canal treaty, which he described as "important and controversial" but which he said would "discourage the spread of hostile ideologies in this hemisphere, and directly contribute to the economic well-being and security of the United States."

His appeal drew prolonged applause. Carter grinned as it died down and quipped, "I have to say that's very welcome applause."

Sen. Harrison Williams Jr. of New Jersey, another Democrat normally among Carter's allies, said he was "frankly a little disappointed in his lack of detail on mass transit."

As chairman of the Senate Human Resources Committee, Williams has a key role in handling many of Carter's domestic proposals.

Church Group Demands Proof Risk To Joan

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A North Carolina church group has called on a New York churchman to either prove or retract his statement that the life of Joan Little would be endangered if she is returned to woman's prison here.

Bishop Robert M. Blackburn of the North Carolina United Methodist Conference and 12 district superintendents of the conference made public today a resolution addressed to Lucius Walker Jr. of the Division of Church and Society of the National Council of Churches.

The resolution noted that Walker had been quoted in news dispatches as telling New York Gov. Hugh L. Carey that Miss Little's life would be endangered if she is returned to a North Carolina prison.

"Our inquiry has revealed no such dangers exist," the North Carolina United Methodist leaders said in their resolution.

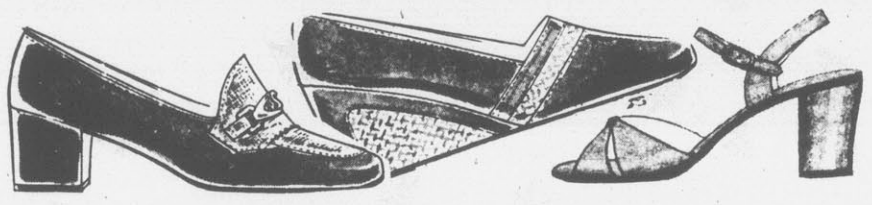

Miss Little escaped in October from the Correction Center for Women here and she was recaptured in New York last month after a high speed chase through Brooklyn.

Success Could Mean A Saving

Should Greenville intervene with other cities, in N. C. Natural Gas general rate filing?

You bet your booties we should.

Greenville Utilities decided to do just that on the advice of its engineer consultants.

R. W. Beck and Associates said four cities might avoid a $126,000 proposed annual increase in natural gas costs by intervening.

The firm also saw the possibility of a reduction in current rates, saying that present rates produce annual revenues in excess of allocated cost of service by $485,000.

Total savings could be $611,000 annually for the four cities. Legal and engineering work would cost $50,000 to $75,000 with Greenville's share of this 15 percent.

While the engineers recommended intervention there was, of course, no guarantee of certainty as to the outcome.

Intervening in the case is a good risk for Greenville, we feel. If there is a chance of improving the cost of natural gas to local customers we should do whatever is needed.

Stormy Negotiations Are Expectable

Hopes went down for the Egypt-Israel peace talks Wednesday when Egyptian President Anwar Sadat ordered his foreign minister home from the talks.

We would expect talks between the two countries to be stormy, to say the least. It is far too soon, however, to say the peace movement is a failure. The negotiations will be a painstaking process.

Dissidents Are Warned

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — In an attempt to muzzle those who disagree with them, leaders of the North Carolina Association of Educators have brought charges against at least two school principals.

The unprecedented move seeks to either expel from membership in the association, or to censure, the principals for "lobbying against the NCAE legislative program in violation of the established policies of the Association," states a notice of preliminary inquiry.

The preliminary investigation by a staff committee of the educators' organization has resulted in formal charges by the Professional Rights and Responsibilities Commission. Trail is scheduled January 30 at a public hearing in Raleigh.

The two principals have been notified of the proceedings in documents addressed: "To Defendants . . . From Plaintiffs . . ."

Disagree

What the principals are charged with is disagreeing with established legislative goals of the union of educators, and publicly saying so. Invariably, those legislative goals primarily concern themselves with salary increases, increased fringe benefits, improved retirement and insurance programs, and better working conditions for teachers.

Another primary goal is professional negotiations which the organization seeks to establish bargaining rights between teacher organizations and public officials—either school boards or boards of county commissioners.

A policy of the organization adopted in 1977 says that once the leadership establishes the legislative program it must be embraced by all members, and the union "shall take appropriate action" when any leader actively lobbies against it.

The legislative program is "arrived at democratically, either in convention or by the directors . . . the presidents of divisions or other officers are expected to stick with these policies; not work against them," says Charles D. Mooney, public relations assistant on the NCAE staff.

NOBLITT

Split

There has been growing dissension between the principals' and the classroom teachers' divisions of the NCAE. Superintendents have already formed a separate organization, and efforts have been made by principals to do the same.

Disagreement with the legislative goals has become more outspoken recently, with administrators objecting to the constant emphasis on more pay as the solution to educational problems.

Dissidents have told members of the General Assembly both publicly and privately that more attention needs to be given to classroom size, teacher allotments, materials, teacher certification and other areas in order to truly address educational needs of the state.

As one principal told a study commission recently: "You can pay me $50,000 a year, and if we don't get these other things, education won't improve."

A superintendent stated to that same group: "Salary raises would be nice . . . I hope you do the best you can . . .but that will not solve our educational problems."

Named in the NCAE action are Ralph Kimel, principal at Northwest Elementary School in Davidson County, and John Kiger, principal at Walkertown Elementary School in Forsyth County. Kimel is a past president and a member of the NCAE board of directors. A third principal was named earlier but is not included in the present action.

In Husband's Footsteps

WASHINGTON — The Los Angeles Chapter of the National Organization for Women (NOW) has criticized Rosalynn Carter for following the Saudi Arabian custom of walking several feet behind her husband during his trip to the Middle Eastern nation.

The LA persons complained that Mrs. Carter should not have gone if she could not walk beside the President, instead of bringing up the rear.

While NOW may have a point, there is another school of thought that says the custom of walking behind one's husband is not demeaning and has many advantages. This school, which meets at McNulty's Bar and Grill around the corner from my office, was in session late in the afternoon the day the LA protest story appeared in the newspapers.

I believe it was Nolan who brought it up. "I don't think we should be too critical of Arab customs, even though they're socking it to us on the oil."

Novak agreed. "There are many advantages to a wife walking behind her husband and the American woman should examine them before she criticizes Mrs. Carter."

"What are they?" McNulty wanted to know.

"Well, for one thing," Novak said, "if the wife walks behind the husband she can tell if anyone is following him."

"I'll drink to that," Doyle said.

"For another, she can warn her husband if a camel is going to knock him down," Novak continued.

"But camels don't knock down husbands in America," Siegel protested.

"They don't now," Novak replied. "But they might at some future time."

"I'll drink to that," Doyle said again.

ART BUCHWALD

"Suppose it's a slushy day and cars are splashing people on the sidewalk. A wife, if she's walking behind her husband, could caution him in time and he could jump out of the way," Stevens said.

"She could also keep her eyes open when her husband walks under a scaffolding, and throw her body in the way in case someone accidentally dropped a brick," Novak added.

"That's true," Evans agreed. "If she was walking next to him they both might be killed. Walking behind your husband is no different than flying in different airplanes to protect the children."

Doyle raised his glass. "I'll even drink to that."

"If the husband is up in front, and the wife is behind, she can keep an eye on him in case he starts ogling pretty girls walking the other way," Hackett said.

Someone said, "And let's not forget muggers. It's much safer for a couple to walk in tandem. Then one or the other can scream for help."

"I don't see why the NOW people are so uptight about Rosalynn walking behind her husband," Novak said. "It gave a lot of dignity to the President's trip to Saudi Arabia, and provided the press with its most newsworthy story."

Someone at the end of the bar chimed in. "You're right. The trip could have been a bust if the Carters walked together, especially since they had done it already at their Inauguration. What's wrong with the First Lady following in her husband's footsteps?"

Usually A Fair Report

By DAVID TOMLIN
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Looking for somebody to do your income tax return for you? Don't know whom to trust? Relax. This seems to be one of those rare industries where being a rascal is more touble than it's worth.

That's the assessment of a local office manager for the giant in the field — H. and R. Block, and performance of income tax preparers in North Carolina appears to bear him out.

"I don't know if this is true or not, but the story is that there used to be one guy around here who was claiming dogs and cats for dependents for his clients," said Bill Ferguson. "You don't hear much about that sort of thing any more."

Although North Carolina does not license income tax preparers or attempt to regulate them in any way, federal officials say that returns prepared commercially in the state

THE GALLUP POLL

Assessing A Presidency

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — The public's assessment of the Carter presidency at the end of his first year in office shows the President well regarded as a man, receiving majority approval for his handling of his job, but receiving relatively poor marks on his record to date:

* Eight in 10 persons say they have either a "great deal" or "some" trust and confidence in Carter, while only about one person in eight (13 per cent) indicates he or she has "hardly any" or "no" confidence in the chief executive.

* About six in 10 (57 per cent) approve of the way Carter is handling his job as President.

* Only about four in 10 (37 per cent) think Carter has done an "excellent" or "good" job in dealing with the problems facing the nation.

As further evidence of a generally negative assessment of Carter's first-year record, a recent Gallup survey indicates that nearly half of Americans (47 per cent) are unable to name Carter's "most important achievement to date."

Among the one-half who are able to do so, the President's efforts in the area of foreign policy are cited most often, including his efforts to bring about peace in the Middle East and his stand on human rights.

Others applaud his efforts to alert Americans to the seriousness of the energy situation, while still others feel his most important accomplishment is an "open and honest presidency."

Following are the questions which deal with the three key aspects of the Carter presidency, and the national findings:

"How much trust and confidence do you have in President Carter the man — a great deal, some, hardly any, or none?"

A great deal	30%
Some	52
Hardly any	9
None	4
No opinion	5

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way Carter is handling his job as President?"

Approve	57%
Disapprove	27
No opinion	16

President Carter's final first-year approval rating is higher than the first-year ratings given Presidents Gerald Ford and Harry Truman, but lower than the ratings given Presidents Richard Nixon, Lyndon Johnson, John Kennedy and Dwight Eisenhower.

The following table shows the approval ratings given Carter and his six predecessors at the end of their first year in office:

Carter	57%
Ford	46
Nixon	61
Johnson	69
Kennedy	78
Eisenhower	71
Truman	50

"How would you rate President Carter's record to date — do you think he's done an excellent job in dealing with the problems facing the nation, a good job, a fair job, or a poor job?"

Excellent	5%
Good	32
Fair	46
Poor	13
No opinion	4

Differences By Party Affiliation

As might be expected, differences emerge on the basis of the political party persuasion of survey respondents, with Democrats more likely than Republicans or independents to give Carter a high rating on each of these three aspects of his presidency.

The differences are least pronounced in the case of ratings given Carter "the man."

Following are the comparisons on the basis of political party affiliation:

Carter The Man?
(Those saying "great deal" or "some" confidence)

NATIONWIDE	82%
Republicans	78
Democrats	85
Independents	77

Carter — His Handling Of Job
(Those expressing approval)

NATIONWIDE	57%

Other Editors Say
Defy The Board?

(Washington Daily News)

Can private church schools in North Carolina defy the State School Board committee?

Ordinarily, we would say that defiance will neither be right nor smart. But the argument, insofar as the church related private schools are concerned, seems to revolve around charges that the state board is trying to "license God's work".

Now, if these schools, some 60 in number, look at the dispute solely in terms of religion instead of regular education, neither side can possibly win. And both sides stand to lose.

As we study this difference of opinion, we can see how such private schools might be incensed by what it feels is interference from a state board. And perhaps the state board did not use the proper finesse. We do not know, but it is our very strong feeling that the state of North Carolina ought to have the right to say that a private school, be it church related or not, is measuring up to certain educational standards required of public schools.

If the academic side only is approached, and if the religious issue is put aside, it seems to us that there ought to be a workable relationship. We fear however that there might be reasons involved other than the religious matter already publicized.

We are advised that annual reports required by the state include information on the number of pupils and teachers, curricula, and details of fire and health insurance inspections.

If the above information is all the state requires, then we see nothing there except possibly that word "curricula", which might in any manner relate to religion. And if in curriculum, any references to religion in any form can be omitted, should not the two parties then sit down together and be friends?

We just cannot believe the state is even interested in trying to "license God's work" in any manner.

We could say that we believe that the present dispute is unfortunate, and we believe it is, but "unfortunate" is not exactly the word. The dispute is unnecessary, and it should not have happened.

The state, it seems to us, has a right to know that quality educational opportunity is being given, academically speaking. The state has no right and no wisdom to seek in any manner to regulate, interfere with, or in any manner participate in the religious aspects of such schools.

The schools may defy the state and get away with their actions.

But we doubt that very much.

One hundred and fifty highway safety textbooks have been received at the offices of the Pitt County Board of Education and will be distributed in the various schools this week.

The books, entitled Man and the Motor Car, will be taught in each school in the county system. They will be used largely in conjuction with the civic classes and be studied by students in the eighth grades.

Miss Mary Lea Smith, assistant Superintendent of East Carolina Teachers College infirmary, was chosen president of the Eighth District of the North Carolina Nurses Association at a recent meeting of that organization in Wilson.

The Eighth is a large district, consisting of the 23 counties that make up eastern North Carolina.

Strength For Today

LIVING FAITH

A converted man was telling about the joy which came into his life when he "got religion". "When I was converted," he declared, "the words of the Bible got up on their feet and walked about the room."

Before his life had been touched by the supernatural power of a great religious experience, the words of the Bible were dead and sterile. But the experience of conversion put life into them. Jesus said that when people "got religion" the Holy Spirit would come to them and be their guide, revealing the truth of things they had previously not understood.

The significance of religious truth is reserved for those who are sincere in their seeking. When this sincerity leads one to yield his or her life to the vast spiritual powers that undergird the universe and have been personalized for us in the life and message of Christ, then religious truth suddenly comes to life before our eyes.

Can Congress Shed Old Habits?

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's nothing like a good, old-fashioned crisis to get Congress moving. President Carter wants the government to kick that habit.

That goal is perhaps more ambitious than any item on his long State of the Union agenda. There are nearly 60 proposals, with a $25 billion tax cut as the feature attraction, on the list he sent up for election-year action.

He'll be doing well to get half what he seeks. Indeed, his 50-page agenda seems at odds with his earlier statements that he would not again press upon Congress more than it could handle.

There is nothing unusual about an administration shopping list that exceeds its grasp. In an election year, that helps make the record. Come autumn, the Democrats can claim to have confronted the problems, even if they aren't solved.

But Carter's message calls for a change more basic than any bill. Presiding in a time of relative tranquility, he has seen what happens when there is no real pressure for action.

His stalled energy bill is a prime example. It didn't take long to enact an emergency program when the winter of 1977 led to critical shortages of natural gas. But the broader energy program is still snarled in a stalemate Carter said is becoming intolerable.

At times when there is "no single overwhelming crisis," there is grave risk of inaction, Carter told Congress. Then, he said, it is the task of leaders to prepare for the future.

Carter said that for the first time in a generation, the nation is not haunted by crisis abroad or turmoil at home. "....We now have a rare and priceless opportunity to address the persistent problems which burden us as a nation and which became quietly and steadily worse over the years," he said.

There is also an opportunity to relax and enjoy the peace and quiet. And the fate of Carter's programs may depend on whether Congress reads that, or the activism the president urges, to be the mood of the voters.

"We must move away from crisis management and establish clear goals for the future which will let us work together and not in conflict," Carter said.

No one is going to argue with that statement, although, there can be endless argument about what the goals should be and how they should be sought.

But a political problem stands between the theory and its realization. It is a simple fact that when the pressure is off, it is hard to persuade the voters that hard questions have to be answered immediately and harsh steps have to be taken lest harsher steps be necessary later.

'Most Influential' In Religion Voted

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Persons of varied pursuits, ranging from evangelism to the U.S. presidency and from the academic world to the ghetto streets, have been singled out as the 10 most influential American figures today in the field of religion.

Only one of them is an official of the institutional churches, which seems to say something about where the religious leverage is these days, the indications being that it's outside the establishments.

The selections were made through a poll by the ecumenical weekly, Christian Century; of the religion specialists of the major secular newspapers and other media and of editors of the nation's religious publications.

Chosen almost unanimously as the most influential religious figure was Southern Baptist evangelist Billy Graham, described by various responses as the "personification of religion in American life," the "one and only" who has "preached the gospel to more persons than anyone in history."

In the poll, respondents were cautioned not to consider "who ought to be most influential" or whose influence was "good or bad," but simply to name those with the most impact, whatever its quality.

A total of 109 Americans got at least one ballot. Following are the other nine among the top 10 most frequently listed, along with some of the comments about them:

The Rev. Dr. Martin Marty, church history professor at the University of Chicago, a Lutheran, prolific author and speaker, termed the "No.1 idea broker" in religion, "trying to make sense of it all."

President Jimmy Carter, Southern Baptist, described as demonstrating that "evangelical religion and politics mix," who "sets the style for the born-again movement" and who has "made civil religion respectable again without losing us in the piety."

Rabbi Marc Tanenbaum, interreligious affairs director for the American Jewish Committee, called an interfaith "wheeler-dealer" whose diplomacy and wide involvement were credited as being instrumental in "improving Christian-Jewish relationships in this country" and in forging evangelical-Jewish bonds.

The Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of the University of Notre Dame, former head of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, a Roman Catholic. "When he speaks, the pope and the president listen," was among comments. "He carries more weight outside the church than within."

Oral Roberts, the Pentecostal faith healer turned United Methodist after gaining stature as an evangelist and who now has an extensive television ministry, heads a university in Tulsa, Okla., that bears his name and plans a new hospital and health center there.

Bill Bright, founder and president of Campus Crusade for Christ International, the strategist behind the recent "Here's Life, America" campaigns in many cities, now heading a drive to raise $1 billion to "win the world for Christ in this generation."

Jesse Jackson, a black Baptist clergyman in Chicago who heads Operation PUSH — People United to Save Humanity. A "moral force," a respondent called him, who "continues to believe that the church is the basis for community action."

Anita Bryant, singer, entertainer, Southern Baptist and television promoter of Florida orange juice and an influential crusader against homosexuality, described as galvanizing "scattered religious opposition to homosexual-role rights."

William P. Thompson, chief executive of the United Presbyterian Church, president of the National Council of Churches and former head of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. A onetime practicing attorney, he was termed now the "top Protestant establishment figure."

High Hopes In New Ministry

TULSA, Okla.(AP) — Tulsa's big, growing Eastwood Baptist Church has adopted a "house ministry" approach expected to increase the church's membership of 3,346 to 50,000 in 10 years.

Instead of bringing new prospects to church, it will use 25 buses to take teachers to the people for worship and Bible study in neighboring homes of members.

"If this program goes the way we think it will, there will not be enough room to get them all together at one time," says the Rev. Tom Elliff, Eastwood's pastor.

Dedication Service For Gift To Church

AYDEN — A hand-carved oak cross has been given the Ayden Christian Church in memory of Mrs. Retha Edwards Tripp.

The cross, which is nine feet long and has a six-foot span, is mounted on the south wall of the church sanctuary. It is backlit for a halo effect and has IHS (In His service) inscribed in gold leaf.

A dedication service will be held as part of a morning worship service on a Sunday in the near future, the pastor, the Rev. Ralph Messick said.

The gift was made to the church by Lt. Col. and Mrs. James S. McCormick. Col. McCormick is the grandson of Mrs. Tripp and the son of Mrs. Bonnie McCormick of Ayden.

Mrs. Tripp was a life-long member of the Ayden Christian Church and was its second oldest member at the time of her death Nov. 16, 1977. Her family requested that her funeral be a "time of celebration and praise, rather than mourning."

The artisan of the cross was Mike Ervin of near Ayden. He is a North Carolina native who has retired from the Air Force and is now working full-time as a wood carver.

Moral Standard Said Still High

CHICAGO (AP) — On the basis of surveys over the past five years, sociologist William McCready says the much-publicized "collapse of moral standards" of Americans is largely non-existent.

McCready, a senior director of the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago, reports in "Overview: A Continuing Survey of Issues Affecting Catholics" that most indicators show a low level of change regarding moral choices and standards.

"Condemnation of extramarital sexual relations ran about 69 per cent in 1973 and 72 per cent in 1977. People who said they had seen an X-rated movie totaled 25 per cent in 1973 and 18 per cent in 1976. In 1973, 25 per cent of the response said that 'there was no right or wrong way to make money, only easy and hard,' and in 1976 the figure was 26 per cent."

generally seemded to have been done by competent people.

The federal government, makes some token attempts to be sure that commercial income tax preparers are accountable for their work.

Individuals who do the work must be registered with the Internal Revenue Service. Since last year, they have had to sign their names and social security numbers to each form they complete, furnish a copy to the customer and retain another in their files.

The new law also provides fines of up to $500 for negligence in the preparation of another person's income tax form, but North Carolina forms that were turned in since the law took effect aren't providing grounds for many such charges.

"We're really just getting into the program," said IRS public affairs officer Glenn Jones in Greensboro. "But it's very seldom that we find a problem. Most of the people who do tax returns are up on all the information they need. Some companies even send them to special schools."

But Jones said no such special training is required by law for income tax preparers. "We don't try to regulate preparers, but we do want to make sure the taxpayer is protected. We leave licensing to the states."

Jones said that of the 3 million individual and business income tax returns submitted each year, between 40 and 50 percent were done by commercial preparers.

Ferguson said he believed there should be a test and licensing for income tax preparers. But he said the new federal law had probably driven most of the "fly-by-night" operators out of the business.

"There's a lot of expense now in trying to come into business for just a few months around tax time, make a few bucks and leave," he said. "For example, the law says now you have to keep a file copy of all forms you fill out.

"In the future we'll probably be governed even more closely," he said.

. . . as a very small child, you trudged off to church tightly holding your mother's hand?
It was quite an event . . . you sat very straight . . . listening intently, wide-eyed . . . perhaps you did fidget a little during the sermon, but you thrilled to the wonderful music of the organ and the choir . . . and you proudly raised your own small voice in singing the hymns.
After the service, surrounded by all the smiling faces, you somehow felt good and happy, deep down inside. Yes, going to church was worthwhile.
Down through the years, you have come to realize, more and more, that your church can play an important part in your life, in the lives of those dear to you and in the life of your community. It can bring a message of goodwill and friendliness, of hope and courage . . . that you can't afford to shut out of your life.
Yes, going to church really is worthwhile.

I guess it was Nolan who summed it up when he said, "American women could learn a lot from the customs of Saudi Arabia. Everyone knows the only reason it's the richest country in the world is because their women walk behind their men."

Doyle was delighted with this last thought and without even making an announcement drank to it.

Opening lead: Ten of ♡.

We would all rather hold good hands than poor ones. But making a bid to reveal our goodies is not always a blessing as East discovered on this deal.

If there is a culprit in the auction, it is South. His decision to leap to four spades with a hand that contained no singleton or card outside the spade suit was that of a typical hand-hog. With six running tricks, there is no excuse for his failure to bid three no trump, a contract that would have been laydown. Fortunately for his partner, he had the skill to land his contract.

A club lead would have netted the defenders four tricks, but in view of the auction, that would have been a strange lead indeed. Instead, West made the normal decision to lead his partner's suit. The queen lost to the ace, and the heart continuation went to dummy's king. Two rounds of trumps drew the outstanding cards in that suit.

Had there been no adverse bidding, declarer might have tried playing three rounds of diamonds, or leading a club to his king. Either would have led to the contract's defeat. But since the bidding and play virtually marked East with at least six hearts and the ace of clubs, declarer saw a way that would almost guarantee his contract.

Declarer cashed the ace and king of diamonds, then led dummy's last heart. When East covered with the eight, declarer discarded his remaining diamond, and East was end played.

A heart would allow declarer to discard a club while ruffing in dummy, so he would lose only two hearts and a club. A club lead would have the same effect. And if East could return a diamond, declarer could ruff. If diamonds were 3-3, the thirteenth diamond in dummy would be established for a club discard, with the ten of trumps as an entry. And if East turned up with four diamonds, he could have only a singleton ace of clubs, so declarer would lead a low club and duck in dummy, setting up the king as the game-going trick.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provides the cure for unending rubbers. Fred Silverman Switches To NBC-TV

NEW YORK (AP) — Fred Silverman, who took the ABC television network from the bottom of the ratings to the top by using his college thesis as a guide, has signed on with NBC to repeat the chore.

Sources at both networks said Silverman, 40, would be named president of NBC at a news conference today, to take over the network in June when his ABC contract expires.

Silverman will replace Herbert Schlosser who has been president of NBC since 1974. It was not known whether Schlosser would be fired or given another position.

Frederick Pierce, president of ABC, confirmed that Silverman was leaving his $300,000-a-year post as president of ABC Entertainment.

"While we are sorry to see Fred leave, we have achieved our leadership through a long-term team effort, and I am confident that we will continue that leadership," Pierce said.

The move means Silverman will have served in powerful positions in all three major networks.

ABC captured the ratings lead during Silverman's tenure. When he joined ABC in May 1975 after 12 years at CBS, the network was at the bottom of the viewing pile.

As a student at Ohio State University, Silverman wrote his master's thesis on how ABC should compete with the other networks. Among his innovations was a "living schedule," a schedule of programs unbound by traditional "seasons" which are introduced at different times of the year.

Silverman also developed a "cross-pollination" theory, taking secondary characters from popular series and giving them their own shows — "spinoffs," as they are known. "Laverne and Shirley," for example, were first seen as characters on the show "Happy Days."

The two shows often have placed first and second in weekly ratings this year.

During Silverman's tenure as programming chief at CBS, the popular "Mary Tyler Moore Show" spun off "Rhoda" and "Phyllis."

After working at stations in Chicago and New York, Silverman was hired by CBS as director of daytime programs at the age of 25. He was named vice president for programming at CBS in 1970, the post he held until he was hired by ABC.

Last year, ABC averaged a 21.5 rating, the highest rating level of any network in recent years and a 2.8 lead over CBS.

NBC trailed in the ratings, causing wholesale firings at the RCA-owned network this fall.

Part of ABC's success last year can be attributed to the dramatization of "Roots," a search by author Alex Haley for his past. The program, one of Silverman's special projects, was watched at least in part by 130 million people during its eight-night run.

Silverman's critics scoff at his taste in programming, charging that such hits as "Donny and Marie," "Starsky and Hutch" and "Happy Days" are "low-brow" entertainment.

Paul Klein, programming chief at NBC, has denounced ABC's shows as "comic-book" material. Silverman soon will be Klein's boss.

"I'm not jealous of ABC's programs," Klein has said. "I am a little envious of the size of their audience, but only 5 percent envious."

Art Of Sci-Fi Roles Will Have Its Awards

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dr. Donald Reed used to grouse that the Oscar voters rarely honor what you'd call weird movies. So he did something about it. He started his own honors emporium here in 1972.

It's "The Academy of Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror Films."

This Saturday, for the first time, its annual awards bash is being televised nationally, to 80 cities, on a network set up by the Robert Wold Co., which transmitted last year's Nixon-Frost interviews.

The honors festival was taped here last Saturday. Among those on the show: Darth Vader and Mark Hamill of "Star Wars," William "Star Trek" Shatner and Buster "Flash Gordon" Crabbe.

For Reed, 40, a law librarian at tiny Woodbury University here, the 90-minute program marks a great leap forward for the do-it-yourself academy he founded "with just a few friends and family."

He says the academy now has 600 members, two-thirds of them from the Los Angeles area, the rest from around the nation. The tab for adult members is $25 annually, $15 for school-age participants.

The ranks include such sci-fi notables as veteran director George Pal and writer Ray Bradbury, but Reed emphasizes membership isn't restricted to makers of science fiction, fantasy or horror films.

"It's open to anyone devoted to a serious study of these films, anyone who enjoys them," says the academy president, who got hooked on moviedom's weirder wares as a kid growing up in New Orleans.

"Most people enjoy Halloween once a year, but I have it practically every day," he laughed, listing his favorites as "The Mummy" with Boris Karloff, "Dracula" with Bela Lugosi and "Star Wars."

He pronounced himself mightily pleased that the two hottest movies of 1977 are sci-fi flicks — "Star Wars" and "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

"Horror films, fantasy films and science fiction films have always been a staple, always made money," he said. "But it's only now that they're getting their recognition (in the industry)."

Why so?

"People tended to look down on these films," he theorized. "They don't consider them culturally important. But they're not only entertaining, they also are great works of charm."

Granted, some may not think, say, "The Mummy," is quite that. But to enthusiast Reed, "the horror film is a medieval morality play brought up to date.

"These pictures are deeply spiritual. In the traditional horror film — and there are some exceptions — a moral lesson is taught. And good is rewarded, evil is punished."

An OD For Punk Rocker

NEW YORK (AP) — The Sex Pistols are going out with a bang.

Only hours after the lead singer announced the punk rock group is breaking up, the bass player was carried off an airplane on a stretcher.

Doctors said Sid Vicious — his real name is John Ritchie — was hospitalized for a drug overdose.

Johnny Rotten started the episode Wednesday night when he announced at the CBGB nightclub in New York that he would no longer be performing with the other three members of the British band.

Then came Vicious, arriving Thursday in the first-class section of a Trans World Airlines flight from Los Angeles.

"Everybody thought he was sleeping, which he was, but when it came time to get off, he was still sleeping," an airline spokesman said.

He was rushed to Jamaica Hospital where a spokesman said: "He's young and he's healthy. All vital signs are good."

Still waiting to be heard from are the other two members of the group — Paul Cook, the drummer, and Steve Jones, the guitarist.

Beau Bridges In TV Movie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Beau Bridges stars as an intelligence agency courier whose sister is accused of being a Soviet spy in "The President's Mistress" on CBS Feb. 10.

Karen Grassle, from "Little House on the Prairie," plays his sister, who is also the president's mistress.

Bridges was last seen in "Four Feathers" on Jan. 1

Chilly Review Of Henry K.

MOSCOW (AP) — Henry Kissinger's act is not playing well in Moscow.

The Soviet government paper Izvestia says the former U.S. secretary of state engaged in slander for pay last week in his debut as an NBC network television commentator.

Izvestia said Kissinger "went so far as to make absurd hints that terrorist actions are directed from the Soviet Union and other socialist countries."

The newspaper said Kissinger will be paid $1.5 million for five programs.

"This only confirms the truth that for a certain pay...one finds it difficult to resist the temptation of saying what is expected by masterminds of anti-Communist propaganda, and that one even goes so far as to resort to slander," it said.

Violation Of Court Order Is Decided

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal court has found the nation's second largest textile chain in contempt court for failing to bargain in good faith with labor unions.

The Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said that J.P. Stevens violated six-year-old court orders related to bargaining with the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union.

A three-judge panel of the court ordered the National Labor Relations Board to find out if the huge firm shut down its Statesboro, Ga., plant in 1975 to avoid bargaining with the union.

The court threatened the company with fines of $10,000 for violating future court orders and fines of $5,000 a day for continued violation.

The Statesboro plant was closed following a report in May 1975 by NLRB Special Master William Fauver that the company had purposely "failed to bargain in good faith." The court said that Fauver should again investigate Stevens' labor practices.

J.P. Stevens has annual sales of more than $1.4 billion and employs more than 44,000 workers at plants throughout the South. It has been battling union attempts to represent its workers for a number of years.

The appeals court said that Stevens must make available to the special master all of its financial records related to the Statesboro plant from Jan. 1, 1970, until its closure.

It also said that the company must pay the cost of such an investigation by Fauver and the NLRB.

The court said that if the company reopened the Statesboro plant, it would have to deal face-to-face with the union and grant its representatives access to the plant for one year.

It further said that in the event the plant opened again, Stevens could not change wages and working conditions without telling the union about such moves. It said that copies of the court's order must be sent to every employee of the plant.

The notice of working condition changes also applies to all Stevens plant within the jurisdiction of the Fifth Circuit — Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida and the Canal Zone — the court said. It said that copies of its order should be posted at those plants as well.

Ass'n Seeks Funds For Historic Coastal Tract

SOME OF THE BUILDINGS . . . Shown here are some of the buildings of the historic Chicamacomico Lifesaving Station at Rodanthe, recognized as the most historic of all U.S. Lifesaving Service facilities. The buildings are owned by a historical society, and a campaign is underway to raise funds to purchase the land so that the buildings will not have to be moved to another site. RODANTHE — A deadline campaign is on by the Chicamacomico Historical Association (CHA) to raise additional funds to purchase the ten-acre tract of land on which a group of historic Coast Guard buildings stand.

The association already owns the buildings, and had hoped to acquire the land in a public auction held on Friday, Jan. 13.

However, Hiram Gallop of Wanchese was successful bidder in the sale, which was held in response to a petition in the Dare County court for public auction of the tract.

The land has remained in multiple ownership by more than 100 people since the 1954 abandonment of the property by the U.S. Coast Guard, which utilized the outpost since 1874.

Originally the property of John Allen Midgett and his family, the Chicamacomico tract reverted to the heirs of the Midgett family when the Coast Guard discontinued use of the facility.

CHA president Carolista Baum notes "the association has only until Jan. 23 to produce an upset bid. We are diligently working to acquire individual contributions and foundation pledges in order to save the historic site. (Ms. Baum was instrumental a couple of years ago in efforts to raise funds to preserve Jockey's Ridge and have it acquired as a state park property).

In an effort to collect as much money as possible for an upset bid, the association has launched a fund-raising campaign called the Lifesavers Club, with contributors to be recognized in graduations by titles related to staff positions in Lifesaving stations such as the one at Chicamacomico.

Contributors are being solicited for the following categories — Lifesaving Station Inspector, $5,000; Lifesaving Station Keeper, $1,000; Surfman I, $500; Surfman II, $100; Surfman III, $50; Surfman IV, $25; Surfman V, $10; and Surfman VI, $5.

Persons, groups or organizations who might be interested in making contributions are to mail them to CHA, P. O. Box 140, Rodanthe, N. C., 27968. The Dare County Tourist Bureau can also be contacted, the number is 473-2751.

Dollar Sags In Exchanges

LONDON (AP)—The dollar dropped sharply in the first hour of trading on European foreign exchanges today as dealers expressed disappointment with President Carter's State of the Union address.

By midmorning, however, the dollar recouped some of its losses and showed a fractional gain against the Swiss franc in Zurich. Dealers said profit-taking and the buying of "cheap" dollars contributed to the rise.

"It's a lot of waffle," one dealer at a major U.S. bank in London said of the president's speech. His remark was echoed by money experts across Europe.

They said the speech contained nothing new and showed no sign that the United States will tackle effectively the main cause of the dollar's decline over the past year, the huge deficit in America's balance of payments deficit.

News of Japan's $2.2 billion trade surplus for December "certainly hasn't helped the dollar," a Frankfurt dealer commented.

Midmorning quotes in major financial centers compared with prices late Thursday were 2.0070 Swiss francs in Zurich, up from 1.9985; 2.1190 Deutsche marks in Frankfurt, down from 2.1250; 4.72875 French francs in Paris, down from 4.7470, and 872 lire in Milan, down from 873.45

In London, the pound sterling rose very slightly, to $1.9355 from $1.9333.

Traders in Asia reported Carter's speech had little or no effect on the dollar there.

Charge Driver In Auto Mishap

Debra Jordan Todd of Route 2, Chocowinity was charged with failing to see her intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of an 8:20 a.m. mishap yesterday at the intersection of Greenville Boulevard and Tenth Street.

Police reported the Todd car collided with an auto driven by Gary William White of Greensboro, causing an estimated $400 damage to the Todd car and $700 damage to the White car.

Almost A Rescue

Greenville firemen yesterday succeeded — or failed, depending on your viewpoint — to rescue a cat from a tree at 110 Lakewood Dr.

Usually the fire department rejects requests for assistance in helping wayward cats from trees. But about 4:43 p.m. yesterday they honored a request from City Manager James Caldwell to go to the home of Mrs. Samuel A. Sewell to remove a cat from a tree in her yard.

Firefighters, responding in the rain and cold with a 1,000 gallon per minute pumper and the department's aging aerial ladder truck, went to the Lakewood Pines address to make the rescue.

As the firemen extended the long aerial ladder into the tree, the cat — as hastily as it had climbed up — ran down from its high perch and away from all the commotion.

May Act On Baby Eels

GRANTSBORO, N.C. (AP) — You don't hear anyone clamoring to save the baby eels along the North Carolina coastal plain, but a federal researcher says something needs to be done for the tiny delicacies.

The two-inch baby eels — called elvers — travel from the Sargasso Sea near the Gulf of Mexico to the brackish rivers and creeks along the North Carolina coast.

They're worth up to $120 a pound to nations like Japan which savor them, and the government may soon step in to limit the quantities that fishermen are scooping up.

Walter Jones of New Bern, who is involved in a federally funded Sea Grant research program, said that "people are coming from all over the world" to harvest elvers for breeding in tanks or for sale to nations whose citizens have a taste for them.

At certain times during the winter, when the elvers are running up the coastal streams, thousands of them can be scooped from the water with a net.

Elvers are bringing $100 to $120 per pound on the market, with 5,000 to 6,000 elvers to a pound, Jones said. Cultured adult eels — those raised in captivity to meet taste standards — bring $4.87 per pound, he said, and wild eel 40 to 45 cents per pound.

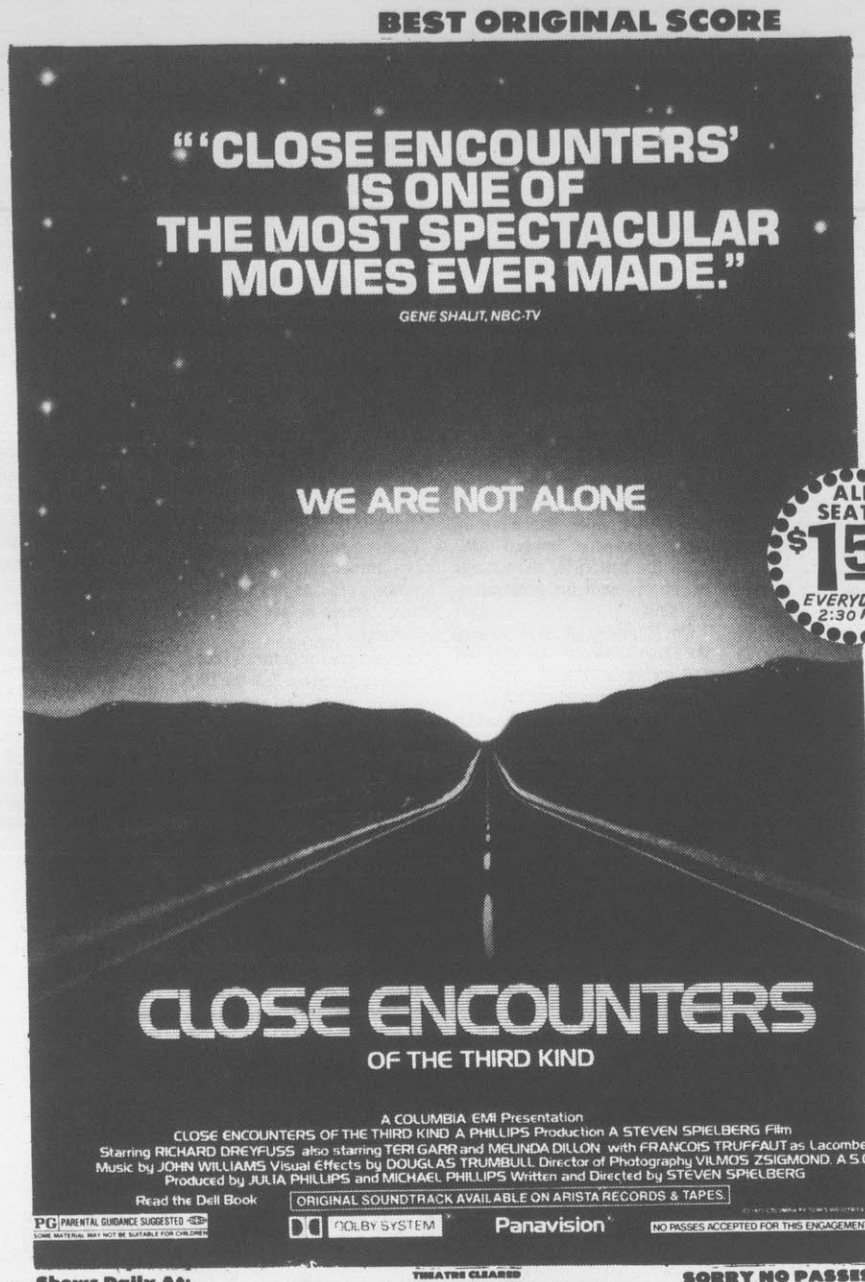

But Jones told an overflow crowd of fishermen at an eel harvesting seminar this week, he expects stiff government regulations soon that will protect the elvers.

Fired Teacher Files Big Suit

ROXBORO, N.C. (AP) — Jane Ellis Rhodes, who says she was fired from her job as a schoolteacher in Roxboro for refusing to do lunchroom duty, has filed a $750,000 suit against the Person County Board of Education.

Ms. Rhodes worked for the school system for eight years. She was fired last October. The suit alleges that lunchroom duty was "outside the scope of legitimate professional responsibilities."

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks drifted lower today as the New York Stock Exchange and the American Stock Exchange opened two hours late today because a snowstorm snarled transportation in the metropolitan area.

While the New York markets were idle, nationally traded stocks drifted lower in ative trading on regional exchanges.

On the Pacific Stock Exchange in San Francisco American Telephone & Telegraph was off ⅛ to 57⅞, Bausch & Lomb fell ¼ to 46½, IBM dropped 1½ to 266 and Royal Dutch Petroleum rose ¼ to 56.

On the Midwest Stock Exchange in Chicago, volume was 305,000 shares in the first hour of trading, up from 215,000 in the first hour Thursday, as some business that normally would have been conducted in New York was shifted because of the snow.

A block of 109,800 shares of American Broadcasting Cos. stock was sold at 35, down 2½ from Thursday's closing. On the Boston Exchange, a block of 35,000 shares of ABC also was traded.

ABC's president for entertainment, Fred Silverman, will resign in June to become president and chief executive of NBC. Silverman moved ABC from the bottom of the ratings to the top with his programming skill.

On Thursday on Wall Street, the Dow Jones average dropped 7.63 points to 778.67.

Advances numbered 672, declines 699 and 483 issues were unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 21.50 million shares against 21.39 million inthe previous session.

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 stocks fell .22 to 49.82.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market-value index rose .40 to 121.59.

struction business.

He passed the North Carolina General Contractors Licensing exam in 1976 and is also licensed as a real estate broker. A member of Oakmont Baptist Church here, Brady is married to the former Mary Pat White.

Sullivan, a native of Lucama, graduated from ECU Magna Cum Laude and was recognized as the outstanding senior in the School of Business at the university.

He passed the Certified Public Accountant exam in 1962 with national honors, earning the highest score statewide at that time. Following graduation, he joined the John C. Proctor firm here and became a partner in 1965. He is currently senior partner in the firm.

The Boss of the Year presently has two Jaycees as partners in the firm and one Jaycee and a Jaycette working for him, it was pointed out.

In 1968, he was elected to the advisory board of the Salvation Army and he presently serves as treasurer of the organization. An active Rotary Club member, he served as secretary-treasurer in 1976 and was responsible for compiling their local newsletter.

Sullivan and his wife, Eleanor, have three children and are members of St. James Methodist Church where he has served as treasurer.

In his remarks to the Jaycees, Jenkins pointed out that the DSA occasion "shows that you can accomplish things locally." He said that "you don't have to run to Washington, D.C." to get things done.

The chancellor credited the Jaycees with helping to build North Carolina and said that "much of the advancement in North Carolina is due to the aggressiveness of our young business and professional communities."

Jenkins cited the chapter members for their enthusiasm and assistance in ECU's struggles for university status, medical school location and other areas, noting that, "Whenever we needed assistance, you could always count on the Jaycees."

He said that during his "31 years of running around North Carolina, I've gotten to know people and I've learned that every state and every city in every state is divided into three types of people." Jenkins identified those types as minimum citizens, middle or average citizens, and maximum citizens.

The minimum citizens, who Jenkins said do not vote but are the first to criticize, are the same people who fought against East Carolina in its campaigns to gain university designation and secure medical school consideration.

The middle citizens, he added, are likable people who "jump on the band wagon but never start one." Jenkins said that middle citizens "play the game of follow the leader."

Maximum citizens are the "type that built America," Jenkins observed, and love their country without thinking it is old fashioned to say so. "He will not compromise with mediocrity," he said.

"The maximum person is one who will do something he doesn't have to do," he added. Jenkins said that the maximum citizen "has a magnificent obsession to do more than others."

He noted, "This banquet room is filled with maximum citizens."

During the meeting, seven new members received their Jaycee oaths and were inducted into the chapter by Mike Peters, past president. The new members included Dale Rice, Preston Sisk, John Murray, Jackie Speight, David Ruffin, James Herring, and Don Fleming.

Three members who were appointed to offices within the chapter were also formally installed. They were: Ron Hartis, external vice president; Clint Crites, director, and Don Fleming, director.

The Jaycees also recognized several past DSA recipients and former presidents of the local organization who attended the annual session.

Testing Drug Against Cancer

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK (AP) — Research scientists at Burroughs Wellcome Co. are experimenting with a drug which works against cancer by strengthening the body's natural defenses against the disease.

The drug is called C. parvum, and company officials say thousands of cancer patients across the country are taking it now.

"Someday we might be able to vaccinate against cancer before a patient has a tumor," said John K. Whisnant, head of the company's immunology section. "We will be able to diagnose a tumor very, very early and treat a tumor after it has arisen."

Immunotherapy, the concept behind C. parvum, is based on the body's ability to reject foreign cells and attack them with killer cells called lymphocytes. C. parvum is a batch of bacteria that act as a kind of booster for the killer cells, sharpening their response to cancer cells.

"If we could make the patient allergic to the antigen (on the cancer cells) then we could help the patient get rid of the tumor without doing these other things," said Whisnant.

"Other things" include chemotherapy, radiation or surgery.

The results are inconclusive so far, Whisnant says, except that it is known that immunology won't work for advanced cancers. For less severe cases, it won't be known how well the C. parvum works until the summer of 1979, but Whisnant says he's encouraged.

"I don't talk about a cancer cure," he said. "We talk about cancer control. And immunotherapy has been effective in cancer control in some circumstances."

A New Industry For Statesville

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Permali Inc., a unit of BTR Ltd. (British Tire and Rubber) has announced it will open a plant here.

Peter A. Doorley, company president, said Permali has purchased a building and 6½ acres on the Old Mountain Road at Interstate 40 west of Statesville. Production will begin in about 60 days on "high technology plastic products for business machines, farm equipment and the automotive and power industries," he said.

About 250 workers will be employed when the plant gets in full production, Doorley added.

He said the plant will represent an investment of about $2 million in land, building and machinery.

It will be the third Permali plant in North America. Others are at Toronto, Canada, and Mount Pleasant, Pa.

Big Prize For Art Students

CARBONDALE, Ill. (UPI) — A Southern Illinois University art student could net as much as $20,000 in a contest that starts early this year. The annual Rickert-Ziebold Award competition was made possible by a $250,000 bequest to the university from Marguerite L. Rickert, a former Waterloo, Ill., woman who died six years ago in North Carolina. She left a third of her estate to the university to help art students.

The family of Hettie Ray Biggs of Everetts, N.C. wish to thank the Doctors and Staff of Quadrangle Internal Medicine, P.A., the Doctors and Staff of Pitt Surgical Associates, and the Staff and Nurses and all employees of Pitt Memorial Hospital for the services rendered to her during her long illness and death.

First Aid Tips In Medical Guide

CHICAGO (UPI) — General recommendations of the American Medical Association for first aid are included in the newly revised edition of the AMA's First Aid Guide.

"First aid is the immediate care given to a person who has been injured or has been suddenly taken ill until professional emergency services can be obtained," says the introduction to the booklet.

The book is now called a Guide, rather than a Manual, and the AMA points out that "it supplements but does not replace instruction in first aid techniques. Every person should receive basic instruction in first aid." Contact your local chapter of the American National Red Cross or the American Heart Association for information on where to obtain training, the AMA advises.

Vice President Goes To Mexico

By TOM FENTON
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Vice President Walter F. Mondale comes to Mexico today to sign an aviation agreement, see some of the sights and listen to officials talk about the Mexican workers who are crossing the U.S. border and the Mexican natural gas that is not.

Arriving from Washington in midmorning, Mondale's two-day visit was to begin with a private meeting with President Jose Lopez Portillo and a session with other top-ranking Mexican officials.

The visit is a courtesy call repaying Lopez Portillo's trip to Washington in February. Mondale will sign an agreement providing for new or improved service by both nations' airlines to 53 U.S. and 21 Mexican cities. In his talks, "he'll be listening to what the Mexican officials say, but he won't be doing any negotiating," an aide said. And he and his wife will see the Mayan ruins in Yucatan.

The most immediate issue between the two countries is the proposal by six U.S. companies to import 2 billion cubic feet of natural gas a day via pipeline from the Reforma oil field in southern Mexico.

Mexico wants about $2.60 per thousand cubic feet. The Carter administration is waiting for congressional approval of its energy legislation, but Energy Secretary James Schlesinger says the administration will not allow an import price higher than $2.16, the price paid for Canadian gas.

Local newspapers put banner headlines Thursday on statements by Mexican officials that the government "will never lower its asking price for natural gas."

"We're not going to take one step back because our position is firm, fixed and thought out," said Director Jorge Diaz Serrano of PEMEX, the government petroleum monopoly.

The other major issue between the two countries is the millions of Mexicans crossing the border illegally every year to seek work in the United States. The U.S. Border Patrol says it apprehended more than a million in 1977 and believes 2 million more got across undetected.

Carter legislation pending in Congress would legalize aliens who entered the country before Jan. 1, 1970, grant nondeportable status to those who came in before Jan. 1, 1977, fine employers who hire illegal aliens and beef up the border patrol.

Water Secret Of Good Coffee

LOMBARD, Ill. (AP) — "If water doesn't taste good as it flows from the tap, it won't taste good in your coffee," says Richard E. Weickart, technical director of the Water Quality Association. "Over 98 percent of brewed coffee is water, so the kind of water you use in making it is of critical importance."

Noting that the quality of drinking water is increasingly coming under question, Weickart said, "A home water filter, using activated carbon, can remove unwanted tastes and odors as well as many unwanted chemicals. Without these impurities, coffee's flavor can shine through."

Iona Runs Past East Carolina, 96-74

Dunk Causes Problems

A slam dunk by Iona College's big 6-10, 230-pound center, Jeff Ruland, resulted in a bent rim (inset) on the Gael's basket early in the first half of action last night in Minges Coliseum. The basket was lowered so that it could be straightened. Iona coach Jim Valvano checks the rim, while official Lenny Wirtz (left) stands in a chair to make sure it looks straight as ECU's Greg Cornelius and Herb Gray (20) and official Hank Armstrong look on. The rim straightening satisfied everyone and the game continued. (Reflector Photo by Jim Kyle).

Iona College used the free throw line to great advantage last night, as it captured a 96-74 victory over the East Carolina University Pirates.

Iona cashed in on 24 of 33 free throws, while the Pirates were able to hit on just eight of 15 shots. Iona had only three more field goals than did the Pirates, 36 to 33, and that margin came in the final 1:20 when Iona got its last three baskets while the Pirates did not score.

Coach Larry Gillman blamed the loss on a lack of emotion, and a general tiredness by the Pirates.

"We didn't play a good game. We had to come back from an emotional one-point loss (to William & Mary on Tuesday).

"Our rebounding was poor, our shooting was poor and our ball-handling was poor," Gillman said. "I haven't felt this way about the team since before the breaks."

The Pirates were badly beaten on the boards, 46-29, with Iona's big, strong freshman, 6-3, 230-pound Jeff Ruland pulling away 10 rebounds. Kevin Vesey, another 6-10 frosh, also snatched off ten loose balls.

Herb Gray led the Pirate rebounding with eight, while Greg Cornelius had seven.

The Gaels hit on 57.1 per cent of their shots during the game, while the Pirates made only 45.8 per cent of theirs, including just 40 per cent in the second half.

Surprisingly, East Carolina had fewer turnovers, 18 to 23.

"Iona was just ready to play. They had had four or five days rest, and were prepared," Gillman said. "I think fatigue caused poor execution at times. We were sluggish at times, but I think we tried hard.

"Iona is a very fine basketball team. They are not a Maryland or A State, but they are definitely upcoming," Gillman added. "Their strength is the leadership of (senior guard Glenn) Vickers, and the rebounding of Ruland, Vesey and (Dave) Brown (who had six rebounds)."

Iona Coach Jim Valvano said the Gaels had three goals in the game, and accomplished them all. "One was to keep them off the boards, the second was to control their fast break and the third was to stop their guards. I don't think East Carolina was emotionally ready to play against us after their close game with William & Mary the other night."

Iona held Oliver Mack to only 19 points, his lowest total since the first two games of the season. "Mack was sluggish," Gillman said, "but he's still trying to shake off a nagging case of the flu that he's had for a week or so. He's lost seven pounds, and it's really bothered him."

Ruland, who held the game up for about ten minutes early in the contest after bending the rim on the basket with a slam dunk, accounting for 23 of the Iona points. Vickers added 21 and Dave Brown hit 17. Lester George added 14 more.

East Carolina was led by Mack's 19, while Gray and Herb Krusen each had 14.

East Carolina was able to lead early in the game, at 2-0 and 6-4, and held its biggest margin at 8-4.

But Iona came back and after the Pirates tied it at 10-10 with 16:05 left on a Mack jumper, the Gaels took the lead on a rebounding shot by Brown, 12-10, and were never caught again.

Iona reeled off seven straight points to take a nine-point edge, 19-10, as Vickers hit two free throws, Ruland made a three-point play, and Vickers hit off a drive.

The Pirates closed within three, but could come no closer.

Iona built its lead out to as much as 17 points late in the half, and held a 52-38 lead at halftime.

During the first half, both teams pushed in 19 field goals, but Iona had 18 trips to the line, hitting on 14, while the Pirates were 0-for-4.

Twice in the second half, the Pirates put on a rally that cut the lead back to as little as eight, at 54-46 and at 65-57, but each time, Iona came back with nine in a row to pull away again.

"It was just an example of our tiredness," Gillman said. "We'd just run out of steam."

The Pirates, who fell off to 3-9, play host to UNC Asheville on Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at Minges Coliseum. Iona, now 10-5, will be in Raleigh Saturday to meet N.C. State.

Pirates Host Asheville Team

East Carolina University finishes up its current home stand in basketball Saturday night against UNC Asheville. Then, it's back on the road for the Pirates for a three game set, all during the coming week.

It's just the start of a busy week for East Carolina athletics, which will see all of the winter sports teams in action between now and next Friday.

Tonight, the East Carolina women's basketball team travels to Greensboro to meet UNCG, and they will be at Boone on Saturday to face Appalachian State. Tuesday night, the Lady Pirates are at home, hosting High Point. Then, on Friday, they travel to Richmond to meet Virginia Commonwealth.

Saturday, in addition to the men's basketball game with Asheville, the gymnastics team is host to Duke at 1 p.m., while the swim team is at Richmond.

Monday, the basketball team opens its road trip by facing new Southern Conference member UT-Chattanooga. Wednesday, the Pirates travel on down to Statesboro, Ga., to face Georgia Southern.

The gymnastics team meets William & Mary in Williamsburg, Va., also on Wednesday.

Thursday, the N.C. State wrestling team visits the Pirates for an 8 p.m. meet, and Friday, the track team will be at the Pitt Invitational Meet.

UNC Asheville brings in a 9-10 record so far this winter, but only three of those wins came on the road.

Tony Bumphus, a 6-7 senior forward, is the leading scorer and rebounder on the team, averaging 16.5 points and 9.4 rebounds a game.

He's joined in the starting lineup by two more double figure scorers. They are Bamford Jones, a 6-3 senior guard, hitting 15.6 points a game, and George Gilbert, a 5-10 sophomore guard, hitting 13.5.

Rounding out the starting lineup are 6-4 junior forward Ben Harper (7.1 ppg) and 6-6 senior center Scott DeVries (3.4 ppg).

"We look for them to play a man-to-man defense, and we know that they are good athletes," Coach Larry Gillman said. "I hope that we will be ready to play since we'd like to go back on the road with a victory behind us."

The Pirates come into the game with only a 3-9 record, having lost last night to Iona College, 96-74, their second straight defeat in a row. Asheville comes into the game after a loss to Belmont Abbey in their last outing.

Southern Illinois Hands First Defeat To Bird, Indiana State

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

For a bunch of supposedly toothless underdogs, the Southern Illinois Salukis showed a lot of bite.

"They played the finest game we've seen this season, particularly on offense," said Indiana State Coach Bob King.

It was good enough at least to erase a 38-point performance by the inimitable Larry Bird and knock the fourth-ranked Sycamores out of the unbeaten ranks with a 79-76 upset Thursday night.

"They showed excellent shot selection and their usual great quickness," said King. "Seventy-six points usually is enough to win a game, but we just didn't get down and play good enough defense.

"We seemed to be a half-step slow defensively and we're going to do our best to straighten that out at Illinois State Saturday afternoon."

Indiana State's first loss after 13 victories became a certainty when the Salukis' Milt Huggins converted two free throws in the last 30 seconds of the Missouri Valley Conference game.

Trailing 77-70 with 55 seconds left, the Sycamores pulled within three points of the Salukis on field goals by DeCarsta Webster and Bird. Huggins was then fouled and connected on his 17th and 18th points of the contest. Wayne Abrams was high for the winners with 22 points.

Elsewhere, No. 7 Notre Dame edged Villanova 70-69; No. 10 Michigan State turned back Purdue 60-51; No. 11 Syracuse defeated La Salle 106-96; Indiana outscored Ohio State 77-63; Iona crushed East Carolina 96-74; West Virginia beat Duquesne 87-74; Minnesota defeated Illinois 70-66 and Michigan whipped Wisconsin 83-64.

Don Williams sank two free throws with 11 seconds left as Notre Dame squeezed by Villanova. The Fighting Irish were helped by Villanova's inconsistency at the foul line, where the Wildcats missed seven of 20 shots.

"We are probably the best, or one of the best foul-shooting teams in the country, and we could have won the game on foul shooting," said Villanova Coach Rollie Massimino. "But we didn't."

Noted Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps: "Villanova came into South Bend sky-high after beating us last year. With 11 seconds left, I said, 'Duck, step to the line and sink two.' He did."

Freshman Earvin Johnson scored 21 points, including eight straight free throws in the last three minutes, and grabbed 12 rebounds to lead Michigan State past Purdue.

"He is the finest freshman I've seen," said Purdue Coach Fred Schaus of Johnson. "We did what we wanted to do by not getting into a running game with them, but we didn't shoot well enough and we're not going to win games shooting only 33 percent."

Eddie Moss and Kevin James came off the bench to score eight points and lead Syracuse over La Salle; Ray Tolbert's career-high 24 points led Indiana's victory over Big Ten colleague Ohio State; Iona defeated East Carolina as Jeff Ruland scored 23 and West Virginia stopped Duquesne as Lowes Moore poured in 37 points.

Goldsboro Downs Jags

GOLDSBORO — Goldsboro's Henry Coley hit with 11 seconds to play to give Goldsboro Junior High School a 68-66 win over E.B. Aycock yesterday.

Aycock had rallied from eight points down to tie the score at 66-66 with 30 seconds left.

Billy Dough led the Aycock scoring with 24, while Carlton Smith had 16 and Billy Sheppard had 11. Coley had 22 to pace Goldsboro, with Ronnie McClary adding 14 and Robert Reddick hitting 11.

Aycock, now 3-3, plays host to Washington on Tuesday.

Fun Run Scheduled

BETHEL — The Coastal Carolina Track Club will hold its weekly Fun Run Saturday at 8:30 a.m. starting at the North Pitt High School parking lot.

All people interested in jogging or running are asked to attend.

The club has also scheduled its quarterly meeting for Sunday at 6 p.m. at Parkers' Barbecue. Clinics for physical fitness are also being planned by the club.

NO KNOW-IT-ALL

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Head football coach Lynn Stiles of San Jose State admits to a certain lack of knowledge about the game but sounds tongue-in-cheek as he does.

"When I started coaching," Stiles said, "I realized I only knew about half what I did as a player. Then, after I graduated to head coach, I saw the light. Fans know it all, players know about half as much, assistant coaches a fourth as much and head coaches don't know anything."

Rosie Thompson Was A Football Discovery

Pat Dye, head football coach at East Carolina University, definitely knows a good thing when he sees it. He spotted Rosie Thompson at her high school's athletic banquet, saw how she was reaping awards, and immediately decided that she was ECU material. The next thing Rosie knew, a man from the admissions department at ECU was knocking on her door. So, by the way of Dye's recruiting tactics, Thompson enrolled at East Carolina.

Thompson claims she had no intentions of playing basketball at ECU when she arrived. She had made the all-conference team the three years that she played at Chocowinity High School. She also collected all-tournament honors two years in a row. Those same two years saw Rosie Thompson as the tournament MVP. After Thompson's team lost out in the district playoffs her senior year, she cried, thinking her days of playing basketball were over. But, as the familiar saying goes, she'd only just begun.

Thompson "just tried out" for basketball her freshman year at ECU and she's been going strong ever since. "I really didn't start playing decently until I got here. Then I had to play well to be able to stay in the game with the other girls," Thompson said. Thompson's sophomore season was marred by a leg injury that kept her out almost the entire season. So this year, Rosie is making up for lost time.

Thompson has made 38 of 80 shots from the floor for a .475 average. She is 21 for 28 (.751) at the free throw line and averages 19.4 points per game. Thompson has brought down 58 rebounds for an 11.6 average. When East Carolina met Appalachian for the first time this season, Thompson pumped in a career-high 39 points. She holds the individual mark for rebounds so far this season with 22 against Western Carolina.

After the Appalachian game, ECU coach Catherine Bolton remarked, "Rosie's a tremendous athlete. You just can't say enough about her."

Yet, with all the figures going her way, Thompson is not pleased with her performance thus far. "I'm not rebounding as well as I can and my shooting percentage is not that good," she said.

Thompson is not a selfish ballplayer. She believes in togetherness and has a lot of good things to say about the Lady Pirates. "We have the capability and potential to beat anyone on our schedule. We just have to get things working for us the moment we walk on the court. Turnovers are really hurting us. We had 37 against Western Carolina."

When asked about the N. C. State game, which ECU lost 75-59, Thompson commented, "The old players were tense and tight. To the new players, it was just any other game, so they went on the court and did a good job. State played good defense and we weren't moving well. But it might be a different story when they come here.

On the court, off the court, in whatever she does, Thompson always keeps things moving at ECU.

Jack Says He's Rusty

By ERIC PREWITT
AP Sports Writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus describes his golf game as rusty and it has nothing to do with the rain that set back the opening of the 37th Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"At this time of year, I never know what's going to come out of the bag," said Nicklaus, ready and eager to end his longest layoff ever from tournament competition.

The Crosby, which was to begin Thursday but was postponed until today because the waterlogged courses were unplayable, has become the traditional season starting point for Nicklaus, who has a record 16 major titles on his record.

It's been four months, since he failed to make the cut at the Ohio Kings Island Open, that Nicklaus has been away from the tour. He played a lot of tennis and got in some skiing before taking out his golf clubs two weeks ago for pratice rounds.

Nicklaus, whose 38th birthday is Saturday, feels he needed the recent four-month layoff. His schedule this year, as he announced late last season, will take him to less than 15 tour events.

The challenge of the Pebble Beach course, which Nicklaus will reach Sunday if weather permits him to play Cypress Point and Spyglass Hill the first two rounds, should help charge him up now.

"If I had to choose just one golf course I could play the rest of my life, it would be Pebble Beach," he said.

Rocky Mt. Tops EBA

ROCKY MOUNT — Rocky Mount Junior High School romped to a 51-10 victory over the E. B. Aycock girls' basketball team yesterday.

Kolehma led the Rocky Mount scoring with 20 points, while Thorne had 16.

The defeat dropped the fledgling Jaguar girls to 0-5 on the year. They travel to Bertie on Monday.

Farmville Takes Two

GRIMESLAND — Farmville Middle School gained a pair of victories at the expense of G. R. Whitfield yesterday.

Farmville won the girls' game, 23-13. Rose Lang led Farmville with nine points.

In the boys' game, Farmville took a 34-33 victory. Carl Reid led Farmville with 11 points, while Keith Gatling had 16 to pace Whitfield.

Cox Wins Two Games

WINTERVILLE — A.G. Cox Junior High School took two games from Bethel Junior High yesterday.

Cox took the girls' game, 38-19. Rene Mobley led Cox with 14 points, while Vivian Barrett had 12. L. Barnhill led Bethel with 13.

In the boys' game, Cox edged to a 36-32 win. Sammy Tyson led Cox with 17 points. Greg Hines had 16 to lead Bethel, with C. Spellman adding 12.

The future of East Carolina football is not a dark one, regardless of what happens in the next day or so with head coach Pat Dye.

Dye, as everyone knows by now, is one of the top candidates for the same job at the University of North Carolina. He was interviewed Wednesday for the job, to replace Bill Dooley, who left UNC for the football-AD job at Virginia Tech.

Whether Dye is chosen by the UNC selection committee will probably be known in the next couple of days.

Dye apparently has good backing from a number of alumni at the University, who have been vocal in their support.

Bill Cain, athletic director at East Carolina, said Tuesday at the Greenville Sports Club, that whenever Dye's name comes up for another job, it is a reflection of his success and the success of the East Carolina program.

What some folks around here can't understand, however, is how the powers at Carolina can tell the people down here, in their roundabout way, that the ECU program isn't prestigeous enough to warrent a continuation of the football series, then turn right around and say that the program and coach must be pretty good, since he's a top candidate for the job, and may get it.

Another question will arise, should Dye get the job. How will he feel about playing East Carolina in the future as the UNC head coach? Will he work to get East Carolina back on future schedules?

Well, we'll see.

If Dye Goes, Then What?

If Dye does get the Carolina job, how will it affect East Carolina?

Right away, the biggest effect could be on recruiting.

Reportedly, the Pirates have already signed some 15 players for the coming season. None of them, however, have signed the more-binding National letter of intent.

So some, probably, could be lost. Others will come regardless.

A lot will depend on who the new head coach might be. Losing a head coach this late in the recruiting season is not good, at any rate, since so many plans must be altered late in the year.

As to who might be a successor to Dye, we would not want to speculate now. If and when Dye leaves East Carolina, we may have our personal candidate, but it would be unfair to everyone involved to mention names at this time.

Hopefully, Carolina's decision will come quickly. The Tar Heels need the new leadership right away. And if they pick East Carolina's coach, the Pirates will need to work swiftly also.

New Football Rules

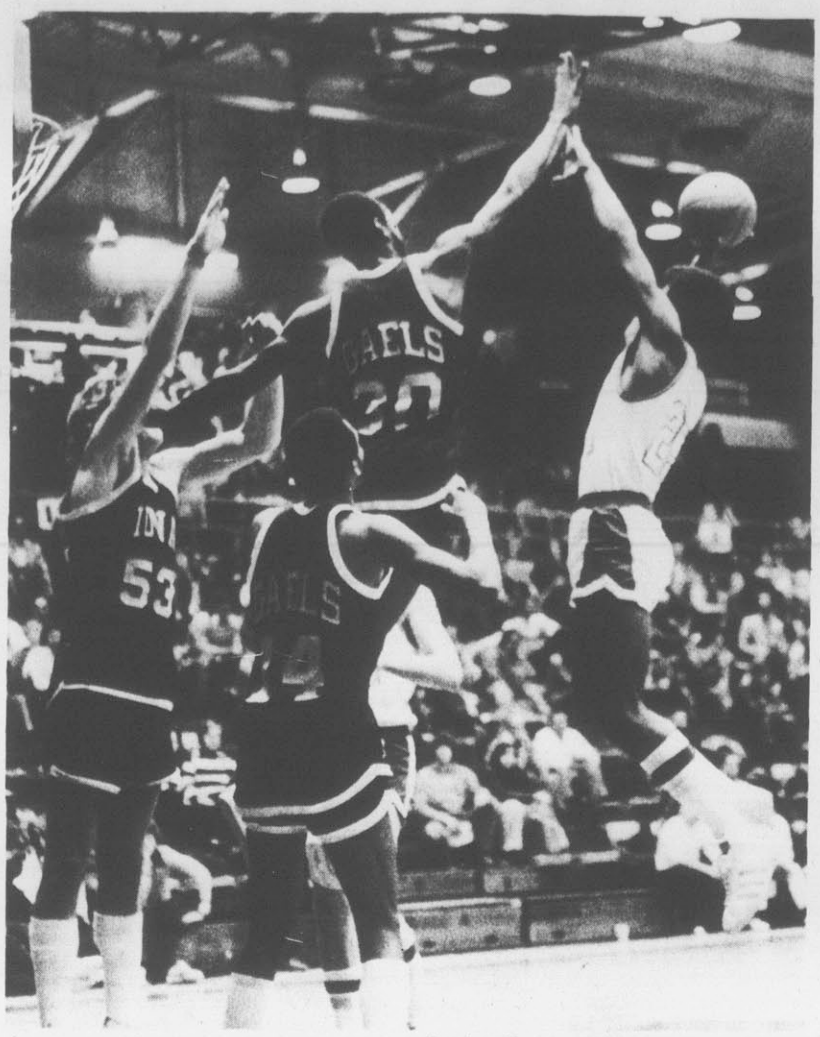

The Football Rules Committee of the NCAA approved several new rules this week.

The most important deals with field goal attempts. Unsuccessful kicks will now be brought back to the previous line of scrimmage when that line is outside the 20, as the pro rules now state. Those from inside the 20 will continue to return to the 20.

This may cut down on the number of kicks from long distance. Last year, over 4,000 kicks were attempted, with nearly half of them beyond the 20.

New rules also allow a receiver to be knocked out of bounds and return to catch a pass. Those who leave the field on their own will continue to be ineligible as in the past.

Also, a pass must be thrown in the area of an eligible receiver. Former rules called for someone from either team to be in the vicinity.

Leaping To Guard

Oliver Mack of East Carolina goes up with a one-handed shot against the defense of Iona College last night. Guarding him with the big leap is Lester George (30), while Kevin Vesey (53) and Kevin Hamilton (14) stick closer to the ground. The Gaels rolled up a 96-74 victory over the Pirates in the contest. Matthews Issues Call For A Hall Of Shame

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The newest member of baseball's Hall of Fame thinks some of the modern players belong in the Hall of Shame.

"The one thing I'm proudest of is that every day I played, I gave the best I had," said Eddie Mathews, the latest pledge in the fraternity of stars at Cooperstown, N.Y. "I don't think the players today do that.

"And I don't think they're as happy as we were. I feel sorry for them. Every day you read about how they don't like the way the uniform fits or their locker is too close to the shower. For the money they make, I don't think the production or attitude is there."

Mathews, the slugging third baseman of the Boston, Milwaukee and Atlanta Braves in the 1950s and 60s, made the Hall of Fame because of his skill with the stick, blasting 512 home runs in a 17-year career. His three years as manager with Atlanta were much less distinguished and they have obviously left a sour taste in his mouth.

"I have no desire to manage or coach again," said Mathews, now a scout with the Milwaukee Brewers. "Basically, it's because of the attitude of the players. They're making good money, but they can't run to first base. You ask them 'Why?' and they say 'I can't get my head together.' You ask them to take extra batting practice, and they say they have to take the wife to the grocery store."

Mathews said his top salary was $67,500, which he made "fairly steady most of my career. I considered it a darn good salary."

The Baseball Writers Association of America felt he had better than a darn good career, voting him into the historic shrine in his fifth year of eligibility. He received 301 votes out of the 379 cast, a comfortable margin over the 285 (75 percent) required to gain entry into the Hall.

"This is the most exciting day of my life," said the lifetime .271 batter and the fifth third baseman to gain immortality. "I think last year I was a little more excited. This year I fought it. I used reverse psychology. I just didn't want to get my hopes up again. Last year was very disappointing, but this was well worth waiting for."

Last year, Mathews, 46, finished second in the BBWAA balloting, trailing Ernie Banks, the only player selected by the writers in 1977. Banks, the buoyant Mr. Cub who is tied with Mathews in the ninth spot on the all-time homer list, called Mathews last year to help cheer him up.

Mathews said he appreciated the gesture, but he wasn't going to make any calls to this year's also-rans. Enos Slaughter finished second with 261 votes, just 24 short of the necessary total, Duke Snider had 254, the late Gil Hodges had 226 and Don Drysdale picked up 219 votes. No other player reached the 200-vote total.

Mackovic Is Wake's Choice

By The Associated Press

John Mackovic has been picked as head football coach at Wake Forest, while insiders say the head football coaching job at North Carolina will go to North Carolina assistant coach Jim Donnan.

Mackovic, 34, is currently offensive coordinator and assis- head coach at Purdue. He was the top offensive player in the Atlantic Coast Conference when he quarterbacked the Deacons in the 1964 season.

His other coaching duties included stints as offensive coordinator, offensive backfield coach and offensive receiver coach aat San Jose State from 1969 to 1971. He was offensive coordinator at Wes Point in 1971 prior to joining the staff as offensive backfield coach and assistant coach under Jim Young at Arizona.

Terms of his contract were not announced. Mackovic, who replaces fired Coach Chuck Mills, will hold a news conference on the Wake Forest campus at 11 a.m. Saturday.

Two more candidates interviewed with the North Carolina selection committee Thursday. They were Dick Crum, head coach at Miami of Ohio, and Bill Battle, former head coach at Tennessee.

The committee has talked to 15 men since the job was vacated when Bill Dooley resigned to become athletic director and head coach at Virginia Tech.

The committee has made no public statements, but sources within the UNC athletic department say Donnan, a former North Carolina State quarterback, will get the job.

Battle stepped down at Tennessee in 1976. He now is in private business in Selma, Ala.

Crum has a 34-10-1 record in four years at Miami of Ohio. The record includes three Mid-American Conference championships and Tangerine Bowl victories over Georgia and South Carolina. His 1977 team finished 10-1.

Bulls Coach Claims Gilmore Is The Best

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Chicago Bulls Coach Ed Badger has begun a talent search of sorts. He wants to know if there's a better center in the National Basketball Association than his — Artis Gilmore.

"If anybody in the league is playing better than Gilmore, I don't know who he is," Badger said after the 7-foot-2 center scored 21 points, grabbed 12 rebounds and led the Bulls to a 105-95 victory Thursday night over the Atlanta Hawks.

"He's playing better than Jabbar right now."

Atlanta Coach Hubie Brown said Gilmore "played a great game," not only scoring and rebounding but "our two centers went 5 fmr 20." Brown was talking about starting center Steve Hawes, who had one field goal for 2 points, and rookie Tree Rollins, who hit four field goals for 9 points.

Forward Scott May hit 27 points for Chicago, 10 in the third period alone to give the Bulls a 79-70 lead. John Drew, who led Atlanta with 21 points, pulled the Hawks within 7 points early in the fourth period, but they could get no closer.

The game was the first regular-season pro contest in Louisville since the Kentucky Colonels of the American Basketball Association played there. And it marked the return of Brown, who coached the Colonels, and Gilmore, who played for them.

"I would like to commend the 2,200 people who braved extreme and difficult weather dictated by Mother Nature," Brown said of the unexpectedly small turnout at Freedom Hall. "They all should have been given $5 for showing up."

In the only other NBA action Thursday night, Cleveland downed Philadelphia 117-109, Milwaukee beat Denver 114-109 and Phoenix clobbered New York 134-114.

Cavs 117, Sixers 109

Elmore Smith, Cleveland's heavy-handed center, scored 27 points after sitting out the second period in foul trouble and helped the Cavaliers snap Philadelpia's nine-game winning streak. The Cavs also snapped a four-game losing skein.

Julius Erving topped the 76ers with 43 points and now has scored 67 points in the last two games while Philadelphia's other forward, George McGinnis, has been sidelined with tendinitis in his left knee.

Bucks 114, Nuggets 109

Marques Johnson scored 27 points as Milwaukee snapped Denver's 10-game win streak. Bucks forward Alex English scored 4 points in a 9-2 spurt that put the game away.

David Thompson led Denver with 34 points.

"This was a must win for us, without a doubt," said Bucks Coach Don Nelson. "We hadn't been playing good, especially on the road. We had to win it, period, and we did."

The Bucks had lost three of four coming into the game.

Suns 134, Knicks 114

Paul Westphal scored 31 points, 15 in the fourth quarter, as Phoenix dealt New York its fifth loss in a row, ell to acific Division teams, on its current eight-game road trip.

Walter Davis added 25 points to the Phoenix scoring barrage while Bob McAdoo led the Knicks with 33 points.

Knicks center Lonnie Shelton was ejected early in the eecond quarter for mouthing off to a referee.

Browner Wins Lombardi Ward

HOUSTON (AP) — Notre Dame defensive end Ross Browner gave the No. 1 signal twice during his final collegiate football season.

The first time came when the Fighting Irish beat Texas in the Cotton Bowl to win the national championship. The second time was Thursday night when he won the Vince Lombardi Award as the nation's outstanding collegiate lineman.

And maybe the second time had a deeper personal meaning.

"I wanted to go out with a national championship," the senior 6-foot-3, 247-pounder said. "We accomplished that and now I feel I can give the No. 1 signal to my father because I came out on top in this, too."

Browner's father, Jimmy Lee Browner Sr., died of cancer in 1976.

"I do have some reasons to dedicate the rest of my life to the fight against this dreaded disease," Browner told the sell-out crowd of 1,200 at the $100 per plate dinner. "I got a lot of the discipline that I have today from my father."

Browner, a finalist for the Lombardi Award last year when the trophy went to Houston's Wilson Whitley, won this year over teammate tight end Ken MacAfee, Texas defensive end Brad Shearer and Kentucky defensive end Art Still.

Training Session Held For Girl Scout Board

Mrs. Richard Pilsbury, member of the National Board of Directors of the Girl Scouts of the U.S.A., conducted a training session for Board members and Nominating Committee members of the Girl Scout Council of Coastal Carolina in Greenville yesterday.

Mrs. Pilsbury of Laurens, S.C., is a volunteer Regional Trainer. According to Pilsbury, she travels throughout the eight southeastern states in Region III to train other volunteers in administrative positions.

As a National Board member, she travels all over the U.S. on special assignments.

Having spent 25 years in the Girl Scouts, Pilsbury expressed her enthusiasm in her job, saying, "I really do spend 50 percent of my time as a Girl Scout volunteer. The rewards I receive are so satisfying and I meet the most wonderful people all over the country."

Major topics covered in the training were nominating elective officers and the function of a Girl Scout Council's Board of Directors.

Attending from Greenville were Board members Mrs. Nelson Crisp, chairman of the Council's Nominating Committee, and Mrs. Annie Holder, Committee member.

Others attending were: Mrs. Patsy Mollison of Washington, Council president; Mrs. Frances McLellan of Jacksonville, first vice president; Mrs. Ann Johnson of Goldsboro, second vice president; Mrs. Gerry Jolly of Wilson, third vice president; Mrs. Gloria Hayes of Camp Lejeune, Board member; Mrs. Lib Rose of Rocky Mount, Board member; Mrs. Virginia Bass of Wilson, Board member; Mrs. Barbara Hutchins of Plymouth, Nominating Committee; and Mrs. Lucille Powell of Rocky Mount, Nominating Committee.

About 2 Inches Of Rain Here

By DEBBIE JACKSON
Reflector Staff Writer

Approximately two inches of rain that fell on the Greenville area within the 24-hour span leading up to 8 a.m. today produced some problems for drivers, and the Department of Public Works, and the N.C. Department of Transportation.

According to Gentry Mills, superintendent of the Street Division of Public Works, water was high in a couple of places in the city — on Deck Street and in Meadowbrook Subdivision.

"The water on Deck Street is about six inches high due to the water level in Green Mill Run," said Mills. He added that water should run off later in the day.

Heavy rains also delayed construction on a 42-inch storm sewer that Public Works is building on Evans Street. Mills said that he knew of no other problems, and that if the rain ended today, the places where are problems for drivers should clear up soon.

Charles Clark of the Department of Transportation noted that there are several dirt roads in the area that are "really muddy" and a couple of roads were under water this morning.

"All the roads are open except for SR 1800. It's under water, but it's still passable," said Clark.

N.C. 33 was under water last night at Chicod Creek, but Clark said that it is passable today. The west-bound lane was still covered, though.

Clark cautioned drivers that roads are quite slippery. He added that although "some dirt roads are in pretty bad shape now," he does not anticipate any more trouble, with conditions clearing today.

Heavy rainfall is not good for the crops around Greenville either, but Agricultural Agent Leroy James said that most of the tobacco plants have been covered, so there should not be too much damage to the plants.

He noted that some of the small grain crops will probably have to be fertilized again due to yesterday's storm.

"There was no damage to the livestock, because there wasn't much in the fields for them to eat anyway," said James.

Greenville Utilities Commission measured precipitation at 2.06 inches. The Tar River level on the National Weather Gauge stood at 13.3 feet today at 8 a.m.

This morning's temperature was 37 degrees. Yesterday's reported high was 44 degrees with a low temperature of 32 degrees.

EXTENDED WEATHER OUTLOOK FOR N.C.

A chance of precipitation Sunday, clearing Monday and fair Tuesday. Lows mostly in the 20s Sunday and Tuesday, except teens in the mountains. Warmer Monday. Highs in the 30s during period except 40s along the coast.

Porn Law Is Suit Target

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — A Jacksonville adult bookstore and theater operation, closed by court action as a dealer in "hard-core pornography," has filed suit asking that the state's new obscenity laws be declared unconstitutional.

The business, Chateau X Inc. on U.S. 17 South in Jacksonville, names Onslow County Sheriff Thomas J. Marshall, Superior Court Judge Herbert Small and District Attorney William H. Andrews as defendants.

The Chateau X was found guilty of violating the statutes in a Jan. 4 trial and Small ordered the business closed and all materials confiscated and destroyed. The judge described the business as a "passion pit."

Attorneys for Chateau X contend the firm was a victim of unequal enforcement, since other similar operations continue to do business in Jacksonville, and that Judge Small disregarded a federal court ruling that a portion of the state's obscenity statute is unconstitutional.

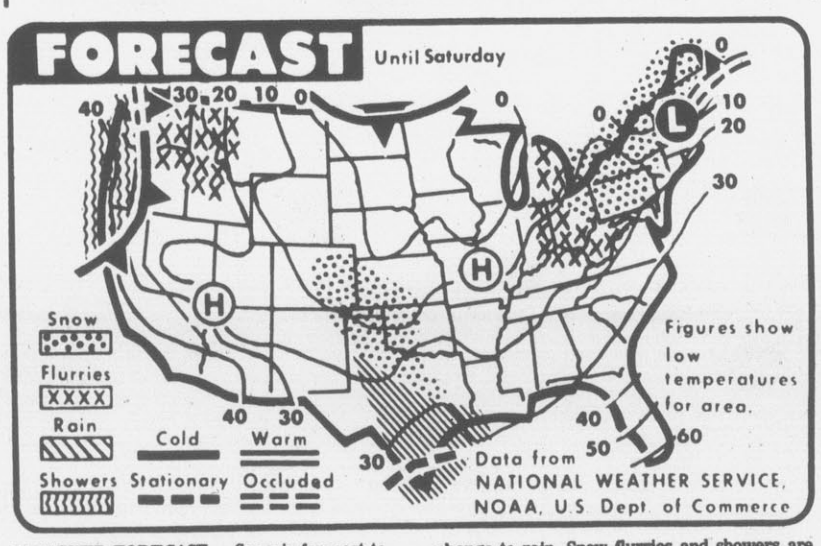

The firm is seeking a temporary restraining order against destruction of its contents and also asking $50,000 in damages for profits lost.

The lawsuit has been referred to Larkins for action, but a hearing date has not yet been set.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Snow is forecast today in the Northeast. Snow is also expected from the central Plains into Texas where it will change to rain. Snow flurries and showers are due in the Northwest. Cold weather for most of the country. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press

The second winter storm in a week brought fresh snow to North Carolina's mountains and foothills and spread a sheath of ice over much of the central part of the state today, leaving thousands without power, giving thousands of school children an unscheduled holiday and hampering traffic.

Heavy snow warnings were posted in the mountains, mainly for the higher elevations, and a flash flood watch remained in effect east of the foothills. A travelers advisory was in effect for the interior of the state and gale warnings were up along the coast.

The storm was moving northward and by late in the day it was expected to be well past North Carolina with colder but drier air moving in behind it.

Power lines that snapped under the weight of ice, and broken by uprooted ice-laden treeks and limbs, left an estimated 113,000 customers through a wide area of central North Carolina without power.

Duke Power Co. estimated that it had 85,000 customers without power and the utility was flying in crews from as far away as Kentucky to help with repairs. Carolina Power and Light Co. said it had 28-29,000 customers without power.

Spokesmen for the two utilities, which provide service for most of the state, said they could not predict when power would be restored, saying it would depend on improvement in the weather.

The latest storm brought a variety of precipitation, ranging from thunderstorms along the coast to snow in the mountains. In between were rain, freezing rain and sleet.

The state Highway Patrol recommended that motorists use snow tires or chains in traveling over highways in the northwestern part of the state where the heaviest snows were reported.

"Both primary and secondary roads are extremely hazardous and snow tires or chains are recommended," a patrol spokesman said.

Highways were clear in the eastern part of the state.

Early morning temperatures hovered around the freezing point over much of the state, with 29 at Greensboro, 30 at Asheville, Hickory and Rocky Mount, 32 at Charlotte and 33 at Raleigh.

Some clearing was expected over most of the state tonight with snow flurries in the mountains.

Burlington and other towns in Alamance County were among the hardest hit with massive power outages caused by the ice. County Commission Chairman Harvey E. Newlin declared an emergency situation in the county shortly after 6 a.m. It was estimated more than 15,000 power customers in the county were without electricity.

Snow made roads in Western North Carolina all but impassable in some areas, forcing schools to shut down.

Still closed today were schools in Buncombe, Avery, Jackson, McDowell, Mitchell, polk, Swain, Transylvania and Watauga counties. Other school systems in mountain counties said they might close too but would wait until this morning before deciding.

The slippery roads were responsible for at least one traffic death Thursday, Raleigh Hollifield of Marion, who lost control of a pickup and collided with a logging truck on U.S. 221 in Marion.

There were a number of other less serious weather-related accidents on mountain roads, including one in which a man backed into a gasoline pump because snow had obscured the view through his rear window.

There were gale warnings along the coast Thursday and flash flood watches in the Piedmont Thursday. The state was taken by suprise when the storm, which developed in the Gulf of Mexico, moved further east than expected.

Unpaved roads in Alexander, Catawba, Cleveland, Gaston, Iredell and Lincoln counties took a beating from the snow and ice Thursday, and state crews had to be dispatched to repair them before they became completely impassable.

Area Members At Ruritan's Annual Meet

Several local Ruritan members were among the more than 2,500 Ruritan delegates who met in Washington, D. C. at the first of this week for the organization's 47th annual meeting.

Among the delegates from local Ruritan Clubs were Lt. Gov. Ed Congleton of the Stokes Club; National Director Leck Keeter of the Winterville Club; J. M. Keeter of the Winterville Club; and Past District Governor H. D. Weaver of the Winterville Club.

Leck Keeter and Weaver were on the convention program. Also on the program were Howard Baker, U. S. Senate Minority leader, and John W. Warner, former Secretary of the Navy and current candidate for a U. S. Senate seat from Virginia.

Ed Cartner of North Carolina is treasurer of the national group and A. J. Stephenson of Red Springs and Ervin Miles of Elon are members of the National Board of Directors.

Charge Illegal Credit Card Use

Greenville Police yesterday arrested Michael Wayne Spivey, 21 of Hertford, on charges of illegally using a credit card.

Chief Glenn Cannon said Spivey was taken into custody after he attempted to purchase a turntable at a downtown stereo shop with a credit card belonging to another individual.

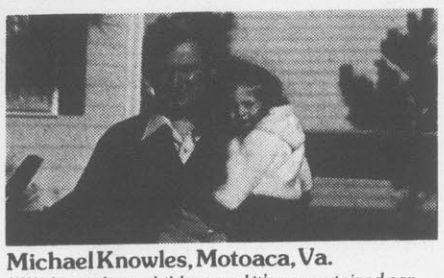

Spivey was placed under a $500 bond pending hearing of the case in court.

FORD FAIRMONT IS AMERICA'S BEST SELLING NEW CAR IN HISTORY.

VIRGINIA-CAROLINA OWNERS TELL YOU WHY.

"I like the Fairmont's style and I like its handling. But the mileage is what I bought the car for."

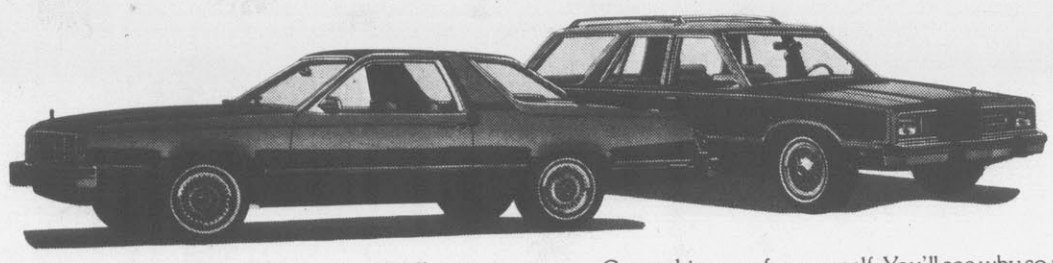

Michael Knowles, Motoaca, Va.
"We have three children and it's a good sized car for us. Gas mileage has been real good."

Gladys Edwards, Greenville, N.C.
"I saw it on the lot and I liked it. And when I tried it, I said, this is it. I'm buying gas a lot less often now."

Col. James Zieg, Goldsboro, N.C.
"It's got about 90% of the space of the large station wagon that I had before. And it cost a great deal less."

In its first 40 days, the new Ford Fairmont took off at an even faster sales pace than the original Mustang. Virginia and Carolina owners can tell you why.

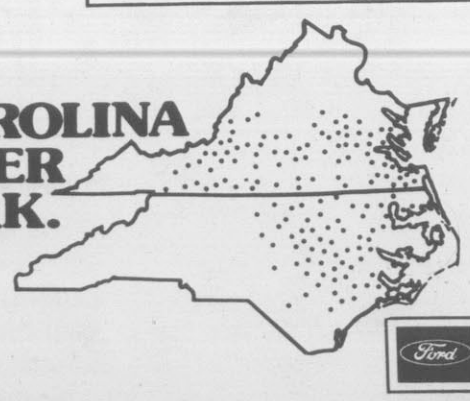

They were first attracted to Fairmont by its excellent fuel economy. And when they drove one, they were thoroughly impressed with its roominess, its handling and ride.

And they were completely sold by the Fairmont's clean, good looks and the lowest sticker price of any mid-size car in America.

Come drive one for yourself. You'll see why so many people are sold on the new Ford Fairmont.

TVA May Be Unable To Meet Power Needs

By ERIC NEWHOUSE
Associated Press Writer

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Projections indicate the Tennessee Valley Authority may be unable to meet peak power demand without help next summer and the winters of 1983 through 1985.

At a news conference Thursday, Jim Cross, assistant director of power resource planning, displayed a chart which projected power capacity compared with peak demand through the mid-1980s.

Demand edged capacity during the four seasons and the deficit increased when potential construction delays were added.

Raccoon Mountain nuclear power plant, scheduled to begin generating electricity next summer, has been delayed a year and TVA has been unable to construct power plants fast enough to ease an anticipated power crunch in the mid 1980s.

"We're not saying we face massive blackouts or brownouts," Cross said. "But there may be times when we have to issue a call for public conservation or to call on other power systems to help us out." He said purchasing power from other systems would boost electric rates.

Power Manager N.B. Hughes said TVA would be able to meet load demand. He said actual demand had been overstated about 25 percent to create a reserve to meet peak demand.

"It merely means we won't have the reserves we would like," he said. "I'm sure we would never deliberately plan to produce less power than we foresaw us needing. And we would never plan for curtailments to our customers, although it might be forced upon us at some point."

Hughes said TVA doesn't have the generating capacity it needs. Coal-fired power plants, which produce about 66 percent of the government-owned utility's electricity, have been breaking down because they have been operating beyond normal maintenance times, he said.

The nation's largest utility will have problems if the United Mine Workers strike continues another month, Hughes said.

"We started out with very good stockpiles of coal on Dec. 6," he said. "But right now our coal stockpile has decreased considerably."

Hughes said the amount of coal stockpiled varied from plant to plant but averaged 60 days throughout the seven-state system.

"We'd like to time it so all our plants ran out at once," he said. "We're going to have no difficulty over the next week or so, but if the strike lasts into February, we could have some difficulties."

Hughes said TVA has traditionally considered a 30-day supply of coal a critical point, at which time emergency measures are required. One measure would be finding new coal, he said.

"We are investigating the possibiliy of emergency purchases of coal from the West," he said. "We are talking to two or three Western coal suppliers that we have done business with in the past to see whether we could buy coal from them."

Hughes praised consumers for their response to a power conservation plea in early December. He said the load was reduced some 300,000 kilowatts — about 2.5 Chickamauga Dams.

Marston Seeing Atty' General

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — David Marston, who is fighting his removal as U.S. attorney in Philadelphia, is heading to see Attorney General Griffin Bell for a meeting that may decide how long Marston stays in his job.

Bell summoned Marston and the U.S. attorney's four top assistants to Washington to discuss the Carter administration's plans to fire the Republican prosecutor.

Today's scheduled meeting comes on the heels of new confirmation Thursday that Marston's office is investigating the law office of Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa., the congressman who urged President Carter to replae Marston.

The matter sparked a growing controversy after Carter disclosed last week that at Eilberg's urging in November he had asked Bell to speed up Marston's ouster. Bell later said he already had intended to replace him, and the administration has denied knowledge of any investigation of Eilberg until this week.

It was learned Thursday that there has been some sentiment in the Justice Department to keep Marston in his job in hopes of rescuing the administration from further embarrassment.

At least one high-ranking department official has said privately that Bell may be better off settling his differences with Marston.

The official, who asked to remain anonymous, described Marston as inexperienced in trial work and insubordinate for challenging Bell and Carter publicly.

But the official, in outlining a rationale for keeping Marston in the post, said Bell might decide it is "in the best interest of criminal justice" to retain him.

Other administration officials suggested that the 35-year-old U.S. attorney, who has 2½ years remaining in his four-year term, might be allowed to stay on until pending investigations are completed.

Marston's first assistant, Kirk Karaszkiewicz, said that Bell's deputy, Michael Egan, called Marston Thursday and said the attorney general wanted to meet with him.

"Nothing else was said," Karaszkiewicz related. The five men were scheduled to take a train to the capital and meet with Bell at 2 p.m.

Dr. Cramer Is Visiting Japan

ECU News Bureau

East Carolina University geographer Robert Cramer is in Japan this semester as visiting scientist and research grant recipient from the Japan Society for the Promotion of Sciences.

Of the 253 scientists representing many nations, Dr. Cramer is the only geographer.

He is lecturing at the Tokyo Gakugei University and is engaged in research on land use and cartographic application in three regions: the Kofu Basin in central Japan, an area noted for mulberry trees and the silk industry, the Shizouka-Shimzu district along the Pacific Coast, where strawberries are grown throughout the winter; and the western suburban area of Tokyo, where rice fields are in competition with urban development.

The Central American republic of Nicaragua lies between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean and has 200 miles of coastline on each side.

Life At The South Pole Has Its Lighter Moments

By ROBERT C. MILLER

SOUTH POLE, Antarctica (UPI) — Marshall Soares' eyes saw no sun for six months. His body endured 159 below zero cold.

But, as the only computer programmer living at the South Pole, Soares, 24, of Concord, Calif., also hosted cocktail parties, attended formal dinners and watched the movie "Blazing Saddles" 26 times.

Of 21 "pole souls," 20 joined what is called the 300-degree Club by rushing nude from a sauna in the pole station outdoors when the difference in temperature between the two was 300 degrees.

Soares did not. He preferred lying outside on his back in the 50-below nights warmly clad in his bunny suit watching the Aurora Australis, the Southern Lights.

Describe them? How can you describe something that is so fantastically beautiful it is almost beyond comprehension, he asked.

"During the periods of the most intense cosmic activity there were giant pillars of blood red that seemed to be supporting a universe that constantly changed from blues to greens to blends you'd never find in a paint store. It was a mind blower."

From Valentine's Day to just before Thanksgiving the bearded Soares and his 20 companions lived a cocoon existence at the bottom of the world, snugly warm under a huge aluminum dome that housed the various units of the lonely colony of scientists and technicians.

Outside was the moonscape which stretched for thousands of square miles with an average temperature of -56 Fahrenheit. In September it dropped to 103 below zero, and another time when it was bitterly cold and windy, Soares and another scientist had to brave a -159 chill factor to repair an antenna.

"It was beyond the feeling of cold," he said, still visibly shivering from the memory. "It was unendurable pain. No clothing could protect you from it. We could only stand it a few minutes at a time."

The South Pole station has been manned by the National Science Foundation for 20 years and the new geodesic dome was completed nearly three years ago. Already the old pole station is buried under 40 feet of snow and ice, but it still has a ways to go before it sinks to bedrock, as the ice is 9,000 feet thick at the pole.

Soares, who was born in Tooele, Utah, operates and services the two computer systems run by the University of California at Davis that are used to compile data for the various experiments and polar research programs.

Watching the never-setting moon was another unforgettable sight.

"The moon would stay up for the entire 14-day cycle," Soares said. "It just kept circling around overhead, swelling to full and then shrinking to the last quarter. The full moon was like a spotlight and created vivid contrasts and sharp shadowing. The silence was almost suffocating, and when combined with that science-fiction moonscape, it made an incredible scene."

Every comfort has been provided by the Holmes and Narver housekeepers to make the lonely vigil as comfortable as possible, including the sauna.

Some 60 movies are available, of which Mel Brooks' "Blazing Saddles" was shown so many times the film broke. The bar was stocked with just about every quality brand of beer and booze at 25 cents a serving.

"You didn't drink as often as you did on the outside," explained Soares, "but when you tied one on, it was usually a good one because there was no problem of driving home, for your bed was just around the corner."

Soares said that even at 25 cents a round, his bar bill for one party was $42.

The guitar-playing scientist said the biggest misconception about wintering over at the South Pole was that everyone had a morale-dropping period of depression when the last Navy C-130 Hercules left in mid-February.

"On the contrary. We were all glad to get rid of the summer visitors and happy to be left alone so we could get on with our work. Of course, as the time came closer for the arrival of that first flight in November, the anticipation became almost unbearable.

"By that time we had run out of freshies — fresh fruits and vegetables — and we sent word out that freshies were to be flown in on that first flight even if mail and cargo had to be left behind."

Without exception, the entire 21 inmates gorged themselves on food during the long, dark winter, but none gained any weight. "We just seemed to eat and eat," Soares said. "At Thanksgiving the 21 of us devoured three 20-pound turkeys."

The biggest dinner was the one held on the 21st of June when the sun starts its long journey south again.

"Just about all work stops for three days. It's New Year's in June. Everybody hosts everybody else. There are breakfast parties, luncheons, cocktail parties and finally the big, formal dinner on the night of June 21. The tradition goes all the way back to the first explorers who wintered over in the Antarctic, and nobody can say we didn't uphold the tradition."

Soares said there were no cases of "cabin fever" or fights during their long confinement. He attributed this to the fact that each person could go off by himself, either in his laboratory or his room. He said time passed in spurts.

"Every morning seemed like an age, and when you looked ahead it seemed the winter would never end. But when you looked back, you asked yourself where the time went. Down here you had no boss. Sometimes you'd work a 10 or 12 hour day. At other times I'd take the day off and go up in the observation tower and play my guitar."

What was it Soares and the other 20 "pole souls" missed the most during their imprisonment?

"There was really only one thing we missed during wintering over," he answered. "G-i-r-l-s!"

Court Enjoins Cargo Shift

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A New York shipping firm has been temporarily enjoined from picking up cargo by truck in Wilmington and shipping it to the port of Norfolk for export.

The State Ports Authority and dock workers unions are opposing the proposed shipping plan of Dart Containerlines Limited because it would take business away from the port of Wilmington.

The matter goes now to the Federal Maritime Commission, where it may be three or four years before a decision is made.

Staton House Chief Honored

Darrell Williams, Staton House fire chief, last night was named "Fireman of the Year" by the Pitt County Insurance Exchange.

The presentation was made at the Pitt County Firemen's Association Ladies Night dinner at the Wellcome Middle School cafeteria.

Pitt County Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner said that the award represented Williams' "outstanding duties" as a fireman.

Approximately 220 persons attended the dinner. Normal business of the County Association was held, followed by a meal and entertainment. Carl Hunt of Pitt Technical Institute and a banjoist provided music.

According to Joyner, Williams in the past year has attended 90 fires, put in 196 hours of training, and attended 20 meetings at his fire station.

Williams, a native of the Staton House Community, and his wife Clara have six children.

Nixons Await A Grandchild

WASHINGTON (AP) — Granddaddy Richard? Grandpa Dick?

It looks like the former president will be making a decision soon on what he wants to be called when his younger daughter has her first child.

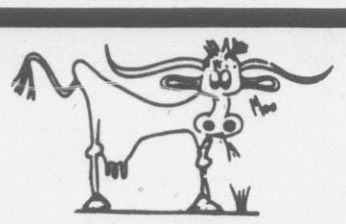

It happens in August, according to a close personal friend of Julie Nixon Eisenhower.

Julie and her husband, David Eisenhower, live in Capistrano Beach, Calif., about 30 miles south of her father's home at San Clemente.

There was no comment from her or other family members.

Eisenhower is working on a book about his grandfather, former President Dwight Eisenhower, and Mrs. Eisenhower is reported to be writing a book about her mother, Pat Nixon.

It would be the first grandchild for the Nixons, whose other daughter, Patricia, is married to lawyer Edward Cox.
