Mayor Cox Broke Tie On Assessment Resolution

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

Mayor Percy Cox cast the tie-breaking vote as the City Council adopted a resolution confirming the assessment roll and levying assessments for the improvement of the section of Fourth Street from Hilltop to Hickory.

Cox offered his vote in favor of the resolution after the six-member Council split in their vote on the matter, which has long been the subject of controversy over improvement of the unpaved corridor section.

Thursday night's vote, which followed a public hearing, saw Council members John Howard, Joe Taft Jr. and Mildred McGrath endorsing the assessment resolution and Clarence Gray, Judy Greene and Charles Vincent opposing the motion.

During the public hearing, local attorney James T. Cheatham and W. A. Heath Jr. of Charlotte, both representing the Brown heirs who own the property ty on the Fourth Street segment, requested that the owners not be assessed for the improvements.

Cheatham, saying that he represented Mrs. Elvira Tolson, explained that the heirs did not desire the street improvements and he asked that the Council delay the assessments and seek other sources for the expenses, which amount to an overall total of $14,521.77.

The attorney noted that a special bill was passed in the General Assembly allowing the city to assess without petition. He said the matter involves a "taking of property."

The new assessment authority has not been challenged in court, according to Cheatham, who added that the Brown heirs will not take the matter to court.

Heath, who has appeared before the Council on several occasions regarding the Brown property, said he believed the adoption of the assessment roll would cause an injustice to the property owners.

Suggesting that paving the street was only a convenience for neighboring residents, Heath requested that the board reconsider and vote to pay the street improvement costs out of city funds.

Vincent said that he had talked with residents of the neighborhood and for years they had wanted the section paved but when it came down to assessing property owners for the work, they were opposed.

He asserted that if the Council assesses the owners in this case where they can afford it, what will happen when the assessed owners can not afford it? Vincent said that adoption of the resolution was setting a bad precedent and he was opposed to it.

Mrs. McGrath contended that Community Development funds can not be used except in low income neighborhoods and she noted that the Fourth Street case is unique in that the heirs own property on both sides of the street.

The Council member said that there are many cases where paving is undertaken when 51 per cent of the property owners on a street approve participation.

Cox said the action was needed to continue the growth of Greenville.

Vincent offered a motion not to adopt the resolution but Mrs. McGrath's substitute motion for approval received the first vote.

The Council gave its approval to the South Evans Redevelopment Project with Gray opposing the vote. Gray said that he had talked with some of the citizens in the project area and they indicated concern over the proposed location of the Public Works garage facility.

The adopted plan calls for improvement of 14th Street from Charles Boulevard westerly to Seaboard Coast Line Railroad. The street will be widened to a 60-foot right-of-way with four traffic lanes.

Land acquisition to accomplish the improvement will be on the south side from Charles to Cotanche and on the north from Cotanche westerly. Cox noted at last month's public hearing that the proposal was more feasible than half and half acquisition on each side of the street since the General Cash and Carry Inc. structure and

More Warnings Of Growing Inflation

By MICHAEL DOAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

New warnings of worsening inflation were signaled today by a government index that measures prices received by wholesalers.

The Labor Department's index of finished goods prices, the last stage before consumers buy products, rose 0.6 percent in January.

The increase was about the same as monthly increases last fall, as food prices continued a steady climb.

However, prices rose more sharply in earlier stages of production, indicating further price increases may be on the way.

"A more rapid pace of inflation was particularly pronounced at the intermediate stage of production, partly because the unusually high level of residential construction activity resulted in higher prices for most construction-related products," the department said.

The price index for crude goods, such as mining and farm products, rose 2 percent in January, the fourth straight monthly increase. Prices at the intermediate stage, where commodities require further processing, rose 0.9 percent, the largest increase since last April.

Grocers paid 1.1 percent more in January for consumer foods, one of the largest increases in eight months. It was surpassed by a 1.2 percent increase in Number and a 1.4 percent rise last May.

Prices for all wholesale commodities rose 0.9 percent, the biggest increase since a 1 percent rise last April.

The department had depended on the all-commodities wholesale price index until December but is phasing it out on grounds it exaggerates the impact of inflation by counting many price increases more than once.

Instead, the department is emphasizing the finished goods index, which measures prices of such goods as automobiles and food just before they are sold to the consumer.

The price index for consumer finished goods rose 0.7 percent in January, somewhat faster than the 0.4 percent rise in December.

Prices for fresh fruits and vegetables turned up after declining in December. Prices rose faster in January for beef, veal and processed poultry, but turned down for eggs, fish, pork and bakery products.

Prices for such goods as cars, jewelry, household appliances and furniture rose a total of 0.7 percent, more than the 0.4 percent rise in December.

Gasoline prices rose slightly less than in December, but tobacco products were up from the previous month.

For all of 1977, wholesale prices of finished goods were up 6.6 percent, close to the 6.8 percent increase in consumer prices for the year.

The Carter administration is hoping the inflation rate for 1978 will not exceed 6.8 percent.

Warn Soviet Of More Expulsions

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada threatened the expulsion of more Soviet diplomats if Moscow kicks out Canadian personnel in retaliation for the banning of 13 alleged Soviet spies.

Announcing the crackdown on one of the largest spy rings reported in Canadian history, External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson told the House of Commons Thursday the government would retaliate on a "one-for-one basis" if Canadian personnel were expelled from the Soviet Union.

Jamieson said four of the 13 Soviet officials were ordered to leave the country by next Monday, seven were given until Feb. 23 to get out and two who are out of the country will not be allowed to return.

The Russians, who were accused of trying to get information on the security service of the Mounted Police from a high-ranking Mountie official, included the first secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, Igor Vartanian, and two second secretaries.

Canada's embassy in Moscow has more than 40 staff members, while the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa has had 64.

Jamieson said the affair was a serious setback to Canadian-Soviet relations. He told the House he refused an invitation to visit the Soviet Union because of it.

A Soviet Embassy press officer refused to say what action his government might take.

"Call us back next week," he said. "We will make up our minds with the help of Moscow."

Jamieson told Parliament two Soviet officials approached the officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Canada's equivalent of the FBI, early last year and offered "an unlimited sum of money to spy for them."

He said the Canadian, whom he did not identify, knew one of the agents from a previous assignment and immediately reported the overture to his superiors.

The RCMP authorized him to try to trick the Russians, Jamieson continued, and the officer met with Vartanian seven times to hand over doctored information.

C-of-C Group Weighs Issues Of Annexation

A Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce committee met this morning with members of the City Council to discuss the possible annexation of the industrial park North of the city.

Chamber president Charles Burnette appointed the committee yesterday to study the annexation proposal. The committee plans to meet with county officials and industrial representatives also, in an effort to collect a complete report of the facts concerning the proposal.

Burnette, who said, "Right now I haven't got any comment," on the meeting with the council, emphasized, "we are gathering information."

According to Burnette, "It is the chamber's role to promote and protect the proper and orderly growth of the Greenville area. For this reason, he said, the committee was appointed, 'to carefully study all issues concerning the proposed annexation.'"

City officials Tuesday made known that an annexation proposal was being prepared for consideration by the council.

Mayor Percy Cox said yesterday that the annexation matter has been "blown out of proportion," and he emphasized that nothing is positive regarding the plan. "We haven't decided anything," the mayor said.

According to Cox, the city's plans are to talk with people in each area to make sure, "all the kinks were ironed out," adding that, "if we find out it will be detrimental, then we will not go through with it."

He continued by saying if industry is, "dead set against," annexation, and if, "they think it will be detrimental, then we will back off."

Cox said that contrary to what has been implied, the city is not trying to hide the matter. He added that the industrial area was mentioned first as an annexation possibility since services are already available there.

Indicating that there are no building lots left within the city limits, Cox said there is a need to bring in more area.

The annexation study, he noted, is not confined to the industrial areas, but involves Brook Valley and several other areas surrounding Greenville.

Councilman John Howard this morning said, "absolutely no definite steps have been taken," toward annexation of any property around the city.

Howard noted that since, "there are misconceptions concerning the facts about annexation," the chamber has become involved. Their purpose is to promote better understanding between the council and the industries involved."

Howard too, emphasized that the annexation of the industrial area is, "only one of several considerations."

The council member said Brook Valley has been considered for annexation, but noted, "there is a tremendous problem," with annexing that area, "in that it would change the voter mix of the city."

Howard explained that Rocky Mount recently annexed property that changed the voter mix of that city and noted that court action has been taken because, "some group is trying to have that annexation voided on those grounds."

"We would have to proceed very carefully if we were to annex Brook Valley and Cherry Oaks and those areas east of the city," for that reason, Howard commented.

"I don't know that annexing the industrial park is the way we should go at all," Howard added. "We haven't gotten that far into it."

However he said, "We should not allow this (the annexation question) to boil and fester for 60 days. It would do irreparable harm to this community. We need to get on with it," and take some action one way or the other.

Council member Joe Taft echoed the lack of information as to which direction to take. "Right now there is not enough information available to make any decisions," he said.

Taft added, "Hopefully, in the next few days, more information will be forthcoming for study and consideration."

"A study is all that this is at this time," Taft said.

City manager Jim Caldwell said Tuesday that the city was studying the possible annexation of property in an effort to raise additional revenue for operating funds and capital improvement projects.

Physicians Assistant Program At Pitt Tech Is Being Phased Out

By DEBBIE JACKSON
Reflector Staff Writer

The proposed Physicians Assistant program at Pitt Technical Institute is being "phased out" due to lack of local support, according to President of the institution William E. Fulford Jr.

Following inquiries by the Daily Reflector, Fulford said that Pitt Tech will not be offering the program anytime in the near future.

The proposed two-year program was designed to train primary care physicians assistants. Fulford said that "two years ago, the State Board gave us a grant to study the feasibility of the program." Later, the Coastal Plains Regional Commission granted the school $50,000 to continue the study.

"Then, we thought that it was absolutely necessary to get a physician on board, so they (Coastal Plains) gave us another $25,000.

The program, which was due to begin in September of this year, had been "primarily accredited" by the American Medical Association, according to Fulford. This initial accreditation, based on preliminary plans, was granted "about a year ago," he said.

Several consultants had visited Pitt Technical Institute to help organize the program. Dr. James Pharris of Bowman-Gray and "several visitors from Duke University" were among those consultants.

This year's proposed budget was $75,000, Fulford added. Three people were actually hired to implement the idea — Dr. John Wimberly, M.D. to serve as director, an assistant, and a secretary.

Fulford noted that the program had been funded through June and that the institute will be "phasing out" the program until that time.

He added that "the results of Pitt Tech's feasibility study of a P.A. program revealed that such a program was feasible and practical for Pitt Tech."

However, "unforeseen circumstances, such as the inability of the East Carolina University Medical School to affiliate with us at this time and difficulties in obtaining affiliations with any other School of Medicine," were cited by Fulford as the major reasons for not offering the Physicians Assistant Program in the fall.

Students who had applied to the Pitt Tech program were able to apply at Bowman-Gray.

East Carolina University Medical education officials said that there is a "movement in the State Board of Public Instruction to enable students to increase their knowledge of world affairs by drafting resolutions and discussing current issues which relate to international peace and security.

Participating delegations study social, economic and political conditions in the nations they represent, and are thus able to form opinions and make decisions on world concerns from the perspective of different cultures.

AERIAL PHOTO

My husband and I agreed to buy a $99 photo of our home taken from the air by the Champion Air View company of Pennsylvania, N. J. We were shown a beautiful touched up photo in several sizes (there was a choice — we chose the least expensive) of someone else's home. We were also shown a small photo of our home and we went over it with the salesman, telling him exactly what "eyesores" like clotheslines should be removed, how it should be centered, how certain things like the roof, the porch, etc. should be touched up and with what color. We got the "finished product" C. O. D., minus the deposit we had already paid. When we opened it, we found a picture not at all touched up which looked perfectly terrible. We feel we were misled. We have contacted the company. Mr. Champion has agreed to touch the picture up further, but will not refund our money. We want a refund. Mrs. P. U.

Hotline talked to Nancy Leonard in the Consumer Protection Division of the N. C. Attorney General's Office. She said there is probably nothing you can do, except to insist on a greatly improved picture. She suggested that you send a very detailed list of the changes you want made in the picture to the company. She said you are at a disadvantage in getting a refund, since you signed to receive the picture both when you made the deal and when you got it from the Post Office. The contract said, "No refunds made since this is custom work."

Speaks For The Hard Of Hearing

DEAR ABBY: I notice that you commend restaurants that provide their blind customers with menus in braille. Will you please do a little favor for those of us who are hard of hearing or partially deaf:

Suggest that some enterprising novelty or gift manufacturer make up large, easy-to-read buttons that we can wear on our coats and dresses reading as follows: PLEASE SPEAK UP—I'M HARD OF HEARING. I for one would be glad to buy one and wear it.

I am so tired of having to ask people who mumble to please repeat what they have said. I'll bet those "Speak up" buttons would sell like hotcakes!

HARD OF HEARING.

DEAR HARD: Oddly enough, many people who have a hearing disability are so self-conscious about it, they refuse to wear even the most inconspicuous hearing aid. But to your suggestion, I say, "Hear! Hear!" Such buttons would be a blessing for those who want them.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this in response to JUST PLAIN JEALOUS, who resents her husband's taking business trips with an attractive young female co-worker.

Dear Just Plain Jealous: I am a professional woman. The fact that I am young and attractive should be in my favor, but it isn't. It's just the opposite. I'm tired of hearing those "what will my wife think" comments from men who refuse to travel with me, and the snide remarks made about men who do.

Believe me, I am not interested in seducing your husband. I'm just trying to do my job, and it's women like you who make it very difficult. Your insecurities are YOUR problem, please don't make them MINE.

It's not fair for attractive professional women to be held back by men with jealous wives, so next time you kick up a fuss because your husband has an out-of-town assignment with a woman, try walking a mile in my shoes. It's not easy. Sign me...

PROFESSIONAL GAL

DEAR PRO: You make a good point. Youth and beauty are not always advantages to a professional woman. They're sometimes handicaps.

DEAR ABBY: A friend telephoned and invited me and my husband to her home for a dinner party. I asked very politely, "Who else have you invited?"

She replied, "You'll find out when you get here." Do you think my question was out of line? And how about her answer?

JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: You asked because you wanted to know. Nothing wrong with that. And she resented your question and refused to answer it. Nothing wrong with that either.

If you feel left out and lonely, or wish you knew how to get people to like you, my new booklet, "How To Be Popular; You're Never Too Young or Too Old," is for you. Send $1 along with a long, self-addressed, stamped (24 cents) envelope to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Heel Heights Range Widely For Spring

NEW YORK (UPI) — Spring footwear for women has something for everyone, a trade association says.

There are frankly feminine designs with very high heels, thin ankle or instep straps or wrapped ties; a menswear look with slightly higher heels than usual; functional active sports shoes; and "Mary Jane" party flats with half-inch heels.

Among mid-high heels, one to two and a half inches are the strongest trend, says The Footwear Council, but they are narrower than usual.

Platforms will remain strong, but the clunky, sky-high versions are being replaced by smaller flexible polyurethane bottoms already popular in Europe. Wedges will also remain big fashion trends and classic espadrilles are expected to become even higher.

Cites Belief Safeguards 'Overdone'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A nuclear expert told the North Carolina Utilities Commission Thursday that increasing numbers of scientists believe that safety regulations for nuclear power plants are too stringent and perhaps should be relaxed.

Dr. Thomas S. Elleman, head of N.C. State University's nuclear engineering department, said experiments in nuclear reactor safety show that "if we have erred, we have erred on the side of being conservative — perhaps too conservative."

Nuclear power is a "satisfactory and desirable way of generating electricity," said Elleman, who was testifying at the request of the commission's consumer advocate Public Staff.

It "will be required in the Southeast and the nation as a significant energy source over the remainder of this century and well into the next," Elleman added.

Nuclear plants represent less of a threat to the public than the effects of mining and burning coal, he said. And although the problem of disposing of radioactive wastes created by nuclear plants has not been resolved, "We have the means to satisfactorily handle radioactive wastes," Elleman said.

The utilities commission is conducting hearings to determine what the state's future power needs will be and how they should be met. The power companies and Public Staff agree that nuclear power will be the most economical way to generate electricity.

More than a dozen members of the public testified during the first two days of the hearing. They charged that nuclear power plants were unsafe or that power companies were driving up electric rates by building nuclear plants more rapidly than they were needed.

Most of the public witnesses contended that the need for new plants could be eliminated or delayed by conservation.

But Elleman said that 76 percent of the nation's energy comes from oil and natural gas. As those resources diminish, the demand for electricity is likely to increase, perhaps even more rapidly than the power companies and the public staff predict, he said.

May Retain Tobacco Research

There is hope that tobacco research funds, which the president had proposed eliminating from the budget, will now remain in.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said he and other senators had met with a U. S. Department of Agriculture official and the chances of restoration of the funds seem promising.

If so, a federal tobacco research station at Oxford, N. C. would continue in existence. The station's funds are included in tobacco production and marketing research funds which the president had proposed to drop from the 1978 budget.

A USDA official said cuts to meet a ceiling on the budget would be searched for in other areas.

Sen. Helms said he felt the research money would be restored. "If they can justify doing anything, they can justify leaving it alone," he said. "There's not a significant amount of money involved."

Thus the picture for tobacco production research is considerably brighter than it was a short time back, when it appeared the funds might be eliminated.

Research can lead to a better quality tobacco which should strengthen U. S. grown tobacco in the world market.

Tobacco Exports Important To All U.S.

Taiwan representatives have signed contracts which will lead to the purchase of $12 million in American tobacco.

There was also a promise to purchase another $60 million worth of tobacco in 1978.

This year's purchases will be three times what was bought last year, and Taiwan is looking at the agreement as a way to reduce its trade surplus with the United States.

The international market is extremely important to the U. S. tobacco industry. . . and, as the Taiwan agreement shows, the export of tobacco is important to the nation's economy.

Sentencing Reform Next

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — The homework has already been done for major reform of North Carolina laws on sentencing convicted criminals.

Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr., in his statewide talk about the Wilmington 10 case made it clear that some elements of that situation dramatize the need for reform. He will push in that direction.

It is now four years since the first serious legislative study into sentencing practices began. The Commission on Sentencing, Criminal Punishment, and Rehabilitation called for action in the 1975 General Assembly.

When it became clear that resistance to sentencing reform would stall that subject, the legislative study was continued by the Commission on Correctional Programs. Former State Senator Eddie H. Knox, a Charlotte attorney and close friend and political ally of Gov. Hunt, has been chairman throughout.

Another Try
Sentencing reform was again spelled out in detail in the report to the 1977 General Assembly, with supporting data and elaborate backup material.

While numerous other measures proposed by the commission (speedy trials, community based approaches, inmate idleness solutions, volunteer programs, prison facilities, among many) have been passed into law, sentence reform remains a sore spot.

At the bottom, two factors make up that opposition: —Public response has been unfavorable because the system would generally call for shorter sentences, a move which the study commission found important because sentences are already too severe, and because the sentences may result in about the same time in prison since parole eligibility at one-fourth would not be retained.

—Judges and both prosecution and defense lawyers say the reform would end discretion, and take away flexibility and consideration of numerous mitigating circumstances. Commission members felt such discretion often resulted in favoritism based on political or personal relationships among principals.

NOBLITT

Gov. Hunt has apparently managed to blunt the opposition from the courtroom specialists. He has set up a trial run on merit selection of judges based on a scheme worked out by representatives of the State Bar Association. If the system proves workable, he has promised to push for revised law. In exchange, he has sought an end to opposition to sentencing reform.

As detailed in the Final Report of the Legislative Commission on Correctional Program presented to the General Assembly in February, 1977, here is how the reform plan would work:

Classified
Crimes would be classified into groups, with a sentence indicated which is "presumed" suitable for particular kinds of crimes. Repeat offenses would lead to increasingly severe sentences.

Specific circumstances spelled out in law would allow judges some sentencing discretion—but only if the judge will set forth in writing exactly the conditions he considered.

On appeals, both procedural and sentencing records would be reviewed to make sure the system is followed. Sentencing is not a subject of review presently.

The parole system in which politics, personal attitudes, and inmate relations with prison officials can and do influence decisions would be scrapped in favor of a guaranteed release date—the original sentence plus one day off for every day of good behavior.

Such reform, the commission felt, would end the "wide variation" imposed upon individuals convicted of the same offense . . . not supported by any aggravating or mitigating circumstances appearing in the record."

Widening Of The Gap

WASHINGTON — Americans were shocked to read last week that a recent survey of teen-agers showed they were completely ignorant of how the American government operated as well as who was in charge.

Some of the findings: Fewer than half could name one of their senators or their representative in the House. About a third did not know a senator was elected. More than a third did not believe a newspaper should be allowed to publish criticism of elected officials. A fourth didn't know that the Senate is part of Congress. A third did not know that the Constitution outlines their civil rights.

While this is very revealing as to where teen-agers' heads are these days, another survey taken at the same time came up with some even more frightening data. In interviews with 150,000 people over 35 years of age, the study disclosed a startling ignorance on the part of Americans in the middle and older age groups when it came to the really important issues of the country.

For example, while 70 percent of those questioned knew Guy Lombardo had died, only 25 percent were aware that, although Elvis Presley had passed away, he still lives in the hearts of his fans through a multimillion dollar souvenir business. Although for all intents and purposes he is gone, Elvis will still outsell President Carter on a magazine cover.

Only 15 percent of those questioned knew the difference between "Laverne and Shirley."

Less than a third of the senior citizens over 65 had any knowledge that Burt Reynolds was now dating actress Sally Field, who is only 31 years old.

Harvey Rothmere, a teenager who had taken the survey, said the ignorance of grown-ups when it comes to rock music was appalling.

"Less than two percent knew that one of the Sex Pistols had OD'ed on a plane from L.A. to New York."

"What's a Sex Pistol?" I asked.

"There you have it," Harvey said. "That's one of the reasons grown-ups have no idea what's going on. You media people are not doing your job. The Sex Pistols are a punk rock group from England."

"What's a punk rock group?" I asked.

"It's a group of people who play punk rock and do sickening things on the stage that make you want toretch."

"Beautiful," I said, "but what does punk rock have to do with our generation?"

"What does the Senate have to do with ours?" Harvey retorted. "If you don't know Johnny Rotten, why should we know the name of our congressman?"

"Well, you should at least know something about the Constitution," I said.

"We don't have time. We have to keep up with Cher's divorce from Greg Allman. You grown-ups think we're stupid just because we don't know the name of the Vice President of the United States. But can anyone over

Public Hears Drama

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — The arguments are familiar, but the Panama Canal debate is giving Americans the opportunity to hear a rare experience: a genuine gloves-off, give-and-take debate on the Senate floor.

Time after time, senators took the floor Thursday to give their views on the history, politics, legality or economics of the canal issue. But each time, someone from the opposition interrupted to question the accuracy of the speaker's point.

It was not a normal Senate session, in which debate often seems a lost art.

So why the unusual drama that playing itself out coast-to-coast via National Public Radio?

Because, as Senate Minority Leader Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn., noted, the treaties "still don't have the votes to pass the Senate. What goes on here will decide the outcome."

Baker, who supports the treaties, agrees with his opponents that this debate is a rarity in that arguments on the floor might change key votes or sway one of the handful of undecideds.

Most polls indicate opponents are about three votes shy of the 34 needed to preclude the treaties' ratification. Both must be approved by a two-thirds majority.

Thursday's debates covered a multitude of points.

Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., sparred with James Allen, D-Ala., and Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., over whether a Panamanian had signed the 1903 treaty that gave the United States the Canal Zone.

Byrd said no Panamanian actually signed the document.

Laxalt interrupted him. "The treaty was ratified by the people and the federal government of Panama," he told Byrd.

"As if it were with a pistol at its temple," Byrd parried.

Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Clifford Case, R-N.J., debated whether the treaties would require large appropriations of American tax dollars to keep the waterway open in the future.

Hatch, one of the opposition's leading spokesmen, clashed

40 Years Ago Today

February 10, 1938

Adolf Hitler, the ambitious ex-corporal who 19 years ago started out to Nazify the German army, is renewing the task.

Some have posed the question whether he could do it this time.

Nineteen years ago, Hitler was a mere party leader trying to win adherence within the army.

This time he is head of the state, with direct control of all its armed forces and it would be a stout-hearted general indeed who denied him openly.

Nevertheless, diplomatic quarters heard reports yesterday that three generals offered their resignations in protest.

The report raised the questions whether Hitler was stronger than these generals, whether there were many such discontented higher officers in the army and what would result.

Opinions differed among veteran observers, but few saw any likelihood Hitler would back down on his Nazification program, beginning with last week's army and cabinet shake-ups.

Tangled Debate On Treaty

By WALTER R. MEARS

AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Without a rulebook it's hard to tell your reservations from your understandings. All three will be turning up in the Senate debate on the Panama Canal.

At this point it looks as though there will be about 30 amendments although some overlap or duplicate others, and not all of them will come to Senate votes.

There are four proposed understandings which, in effect, amplify a point without seeking to change treaty terms.

And that's for openers. According to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee an almost infinite variety of options are open to the Senate "to put its mark on a treaty short of rejecting it outright."

The Senate does not ratify treaties. It tells the president whether he can do so, in resolutions certifying its approval — or reporting its rejection. That takes a two-thirds vote.

In order to change the content, effect or interpretation of a treaty, the Senate can write into the resolution binding instructions on the points it wants altered, clarified or interpreted so as to reflect its judgment. That can be done by majority vote.

That system can, and has led to the virtual redrafting of treaties on the Senate floor. But there's no realistic prospect of any action that drastic on the canal agreement. For if the opponents had the votes to make wholesale changes, they would have more than enough votes to block the treaties outright.

Only two amendments have substantial support, and those are the two proposed by the Senate's floor leaders, Democrat Robert C. Byrd and Republican Howard H. Baker Jr., declaring U.S.

rights to defend the canal militarily and to have priority use of the waterway in time of emergency. The Foreign Relations Committee endorsed both, and they have more than enough sponsors to insure approval.

President Carter does not support the amendments, saying they make "changes which we do not feel are needed." But the administration apparently is not going to argue the point. It would be a losing game.

The amendments would write into the treaties the terms Carter and Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos agreed upon to clarify rights of defense and priority passage, two major points seized upon by the opposition.

That will require a reopening of negotiations, although it is not clear at this point how Panama would handle the changes. Its voters approved the original treaty terms by referendum on Oct. 23.

Panamanian law doesn't specify whether there would have to be another popular vote to accept amendments to the treaty terms.

One way or another, Torrijos will have to gain Panamanian acceptance, because the Senate isn't likely to budge. Baker and Byrd endorsed the canal agreement only with two changes, and said that without the amendments, they couldn't gain Senate approval.

But back to the rulebook. A reservation is a formal declaration that changes the effect although not the language of a treaty. It would change the obligations of the United States under the treaty to which it was attached. So in impact, a reservation isn't that much different from an amendment.

Understandings are another matter. They are used to explain or clarify U.S. policies or positions on issues raised by a treaty. For example, one that is likely to be approved on the canal treaty provides that it shouldn't be read to preclude U.S. discussions on a sea level canal with a nation other than Panama.

The Senate seldom rejects treaties by direct vote, although it sometimes leaves them in limbo without any action, as is the case now with a long-pending treaty against genocide.

Only three that reached the floor have been rejected since the Senate blocked the League of Nations treaty in 1920. That treaty was undone

Other Editors Say Preventive Action

The Raleigh Times

The statewide high school competency test's first trial run is slated for late this month and early next in Wake and other high schools.

This round won't officially count, so current 11th graders need not panic. But the state is already seeking $8.7 million for remedial help for next year's 11th graders expected to flunk in October when testing starts in earnest.

Money will indeed be needed for those already nearly through high school who can't go back and start over. They deserve help in trying to earn their diplomas by retaking the test.

But Wake should take preventive action long before the 11th grade so failure rates in a few years will be far lower than next year's predicted minimum 20 percent of all juniors.

Much testing goes on now in the lower grades. More will occur as new special reading and basic-skills programs are extended to more and more schools.

It is essential that these tests incorporate questions on the same real-life skills 11th graders will be required to show—completing tax returns, balancing checkbooks, figuring discount prices and sales taxes, filling out job applications, reading and comprehending the rules of the various games that make up our lives.

Even at third grade, certainly by fifth or sixth, some clues are available as to who is having trouble with which skills. So it is also essential that teachers pay attention to correcting each student's weaknesses as shown on these earlier tests.

Social promotion is if anything less justified with young children than it is in high school. The failure cycle — non-comprehension of basics leading to non-understanding of more complex material and so on — is easier to break in early years, with less subsequent waste of learning time. And this approach would help free society from the maze of "affirmative action" and "reverse discrimination" messes our schools and employers are in now.

Wake and North Carolina schools' goal should be to take strong remedial action not in 11th grade, when the die is cast almost beyond changing, but whenever the need for remedies is discovered, even if it's in kindergarten.

More Are Seeing The Sunshine

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Now in the dark of winter there comes a pause in the critic's occupation, which until recently has been to carp about Carter and bemoan the nation's alleged economic mismanagement.

We seem to have begun noticing the sunshine instead of the clouds around Christmas, when the consumer began buying more than the ubiquitous economic observer said we were capable of doing.

At about that time too the unemployment rate dropped sharply, an improvement that continued into early 1978, when a bullish index of leading economic indicators added more sunshine and warmth.

Then came the consumer confidence reports that verified what consumers already had demonstrated, that is, that there was more buying energy pulsing through the economy than the economic doctors had detected.

Time to reflect, the doctors thought. Maybe Jimmy Carter didn't understand business or economics or management or the presidency itself. Somehow, though, things weren't as bad as they should be.

Not that they could be wrong. His economic goals were inconsistent and unrealistic. And the dollar was in real trouble for a while and might still be. Moreover, inflation and higher interest rates would worsen.

But the dark clouds that hung over the heads of economic observers apparently kept them in the dark. Others were out there in the sunshine, buying and selling and planning ahead.

Then the stock market began to take notice, perhaps only for a day or so — who knows? Significant is that some gloomy analysts began to suspect their own personal cloud might not be a general condition.

Morgan Guaranty Survey, the monthly publication of the big trust company, observed that some of the pet economic analyses of the negative thinkers were a bit out of date and should be discarded as rubbish.

That, for example, industry was reluctant to invest because of the great many unknowns confronting it, especially in regard to energy.

The lagging investment argument, said Morgan, "is either a bit stale or overly influenced by reports of spending plans that are relatively weak." Such reports "often are misleadingly low in a period of economic expansion," it observed.

As Morgan puts it, in an assessment that seems to have more believers than a few weeks ago, "the stage has been set for a surge in economic activity by a combination of better-than-expected sales and timid inventory policies."

The clouds are all out there, just as they were before. There is no energy policy. There is the prospect of more inflation and higher interest rates, partly because of federal deficits. The dollar is weak.

But the viewpoint is different from that of several weeks ago.

Strength For Today

A CHRISTIAN?

There are many fine people who are afraid to admit that they are Christians. As they look at what they believe to be their unworthy lives, they cannot bring themselves to believe that they have a right to bear the name of Christ.

Dr. Wilbur Chapman, who late in life became a famous evangelist, felt this way for many years. One day he explained his feelings to Dwight L. Moody, who was already a well-known evangelist. In response to Chapman, Moody opened his Bible to John 5:24:

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."

The Bible assures us that if we repent of our sins and accept the forgiveness God offers us through Christ, we are Christian. And we are Christian under these circumstances because we have trusted God and have accepted with Confidence the priceless gift he has offered.

See Science Opening Religion's Doors

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

The man chosen to receive the $97,000 Templeton Foundation Prize for Progress in Religion maintains that the modern shattering of science's mechanistic concepts of reality opens new doors to religious knowledge.

Discovery of the "indissoluble unity of form and being" has immense implications for all human understanding, says the Rev. Dr. Thomas Torrance of Edinburgh, Scotland.

"A massive new synthesis is in the process of emerging," he says, adding that "the deep cultural split between the sciences and the humanities are in process of being overcome ... in the very foundations of our knowledge of the universe."

Torrance, professor of Christian dogmatics at the University of Edinburgh and former moderator of the Church of Scotland (Presbyterian), has become known for exploring links between scientific and theological truth.

He has "pioneered and influenced the new field of the theology of science," the foundation said last week in naming him for the award, begun in 1972 by American financier John Templeton to spur advances in religious knowledge.

An international ecumenical panel of judges chose Torrance for the 1978 prize, to be presented March 21 in London's Guild Hall.

Torrance, whose work has versed him in the methods both of science and theology, has elaborated his ideas in such books as "Space, Time and Incarnation" and "The Integration of Form in Natural and Theological Sciences."

In a recent paper, Torrance says the modern revolution in basic scientific theory of reality impinges on theology and every area of knowledge in eliminating a past "false dualist" approach to it.

Previously, he notes, scientific analysis divided reality into objective and subjective views, insisting "we have no knowledge of things in themselves but only ... as they appear to us."

As a result, he says, "there arose the mechanistic conception of the universe which has so cruelly fettered the human spirit."

But at least in pure sciences today, he adds, "this whole way of thinking has collapsed," recognizing that processes and facts have an "inherent intelligibility in themselves" regardless of the observer's view. As Einstein put it, "God does not play dice."

In other words, Torrance says, the fundamental scientific insight now sees an "objective intelligibility of the universe, independent of our conceptual construction."

While "we can apprehend it only at relatively elementary levels," he says, it nevertheless remains open to rational pursuit, offering a glimpse into "reality at its depth."

He says "the recognition of such a transcendent rationality" beyond reduction to empirical terms, "is now discerned by the scientist not only to be essential to pure science but to human rationality as such."

Torrance says this advanced scientific approach is "much more congenial to classical Christian understanding" than the old positivist, mechanistic outlook separating reality into object and subject.

He says the old dualist approaches "make havoc of divine revelation," separating appearances from their objective ground, and leading to their being interpreted only as "symbolic representations," depending on primitive observation and experience.

In the new scientific view, however, Jesus would not be seen merely by trying to fit him into "surface regularities" but by "penetrating into the non-observable, intelligible reality."

"In other words," Torrance says, "the sheer humanity of Jesus, far from being a mask or a symbol of a divine reality detached from it, is found to be the constitutive form of God's self-giving to us in indissoluble union with himself."

"In Jesus Christ, God has revealed himself and imparted himself to us within the space-time continuum of this world in such a way that what he is inherently in himself he is toward us in Jesus..."

There were disagreements over Panamanian politics, over how well Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos might adhere to the treaties and over his government's human rights record. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, another supporter of the proposed treaties, said the 1903 agreement was "unjust."

Jake Garn, R-Utah, interjected that, as a real estate bargain, the 1903 deal was dwarfed by the U.S. purchase of Alaska from the Russians.

"We really ripped off the Russians like no other deal in the history of the earth," Garn said.

"The big difference," Gravel shot back, "is when we signed the treaty for Alaska, the Soviet Union signed it."

Sarbanes, a leader of the pro-treaty forces, jumped in to note that "Manhattan was bought from the Indians for $24 ... The important thing is that the United States is in a position where we have to have a continuing relationship with the Republic of Panama and the Panamanians."

The VOID

Not so long ago they liked to look at the pictures, but the words were just black squiggles which Mommy had to interpret. Now they can read. With each passing month more and more words have meaning, and a whole new world is revealed.

Think of the tremendous void in life if you had never learned to read — almost as great as if you'd never gone to church and learned what it is like to be a useful member in God's House.

Is there a void in your life?

Paul Winfield, As King, A Certain Emmy Winner

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) —
Okay, give Paul Winfield his Emmy award now. No way any actor this season can top his work as Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. in NBC's "King," which starts its three-night run

Sunday.

The movie, by Abby Mann, dramatizes the life and times of the controversial black civil rights leader, from his early manhood to his assassination in Memphis, Tenn., in April 1968.

NBC notes that in some instances, none specified, "dialogue, action and composite characters were created to advance the story." Actual news-film footage of King's era also is used in the movie.

It's bound to cause fresh arguments over the use of history as entertainment or vice versa, but I don't think there'll be any argument about Winfield's powerful performance in the title role.

Sunday's premiere starts with recreated news footage of King's 1968 trip to Memphis and the demonstration he led in support of black garbage workers that turned into a riot, left one black youth dead and the Nobel Peace Prize winner
blaming himself for the tragedy.

It ends in a scene a few years earlier, with FBI chief J.
Edgar Hoover (Dolph Sweet),
angered by King's criticism, telling reporters: "Martin Luther King is the most notorious liar in the United States."

In between are re-creations of King's early work in desegregation and his wooing, while a divinity student, of Coretta King (Cicely Tyson) even though he was engaged to another woman in Atlanta at the time.

The courtship, the hints he was to be more than just another minister like his father (Ossie Davis), aren't sketched very well.

But impact begins building at the historic moment a black woman, Rosa Parks (Yolanda King), refuses to move to the rear of a bus in Montgomery,
Ala., and is arrested for violating segregation laws.

It puts King, the new pastor of a Baptist church in Montgomery, on his long march for civil rights, preaching non-violence and meeting plenty of
— along the way.

It includes his initially reluctant leadership of a 382-day boycott by blacks of Montgomery buses, but this chapter is muddled by the arrival of two New York men who stay with him in his rise to prominence.

One is a black lecturer-writer, the other a white lawyer. Why they've shown up isn't clear. They seem vague, self-appointed advisers to King in matters of strategy and national publicity.

The Kennedys, President
John F. (William Jordan) and his Attorney General brother, Robert (wildly overacted by Cliff DeYoung), don't come off too well in Sunday's premiere.

After meeting with them to seek support, and not getting it,

King sadly remarks: "The New Frontier is not nearly new enough and the frontier is set too close to the rear."

How all that changes, how King's civil rights fight is widened to protest the Vietnam War, is told Monday and Tuesday nights.

Some 2,000 Cubans In Conflict

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Some 2,000 Cubans are involved "in combat roles" on the side of Ethiopia in its conflict with Somalia, dampening U.S. hopes of improved relations with Havana, says Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance.

The estimate goes beyond earlier State Department figures tying Cubans to the Ogaden desert fighting. Vance cited the new numbers Thursday in a speech to a group of business leaders at the State Department.

The Somalis have been reporting Cuban involvement both in ground fighting and in jet fighter attacks since the level of hostilities began increasing a few weeks.

Nearly a week ago, a State Department official confirmed the probable truth of Somali reports that Cubans were flying Soviet-made aircraft in dawn to midnight attacks on Somalia.

Somali-backed insurgents have managed to gain control over large sections of the Ogaden, the region along Ethiopia's eastern border with Somalia.

The Soviet Union began assuming a military presence in Ethiopia after the United States left the country last April under pressure from the new Marxist government.

Three months later, the Somalis broke a military pact with the Soviets and have been without a source of arms or military advisers, as the U.S. has refused to aide the Somalis, seen as the aggressor in the conflict.

"The Cubans are playing an increasingly active role in Africa in terms of the number of people they have sent to Africa and in the countries in which they are involved," he said.

"This is particularly true in such recent events as the conflict in the Ogaden, where they have some 2,000 people actually involved in a combat role, according to our best statistics, and more probably on the way."

Vance's report reflected increased U.S. concern with a Cuban presence that his department said last November involved 27,000 men in 16 African countries, mostly in Angola.

Earlier, the Carter administration, acting to repair a 16-year diplomatic rupture, reached a fishing zone agreement with Cuba, and the two countries opened offices — called "interest sections" — in the other's capital.

Calling these two steps "constructive," Vance told the businessmen that the earlier moves had opened a dialogue with Havana on a number of matters, but that the Cuban intervention in Africa "stood between us."

He said Havana's response to recent U.S. inquiries was "disappointing" in that the United States had "hoped that as a result of our conversation with them, this activity would decrease."

Rose High Sending Student To Session

J.H. Rose High School will participate in a government study program in Washington, D.C., by sending a student representative to attend the 1978 Presidential Classroom for Young Americans.

Gigi Branch will represent her community and state as a member of the Classroom's National Student Body on Feb. 18-25.

During the one-week program, Gigi will join other outstanding high school students from across the nation and overseas in meeting with government leaders and Washington observers. Students attend formal seminars at which national decision-makers representing a wide range of political ideologies discuss the numerous operations and responsibilities of the federal government.

The goal of the program is to foster leadership potential and civic responsibility among student leaders by exposing them to the dynamics of our democratic system at its nucleus—Washington, D.C.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Snow is forecast today from the eastern Rockies into the central Plains. Rain is expected in the Southwest. Cold weather is due for most of the country. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
High pressure will be moving over North Carolina tonight and Saturday, bringing fair weather with it. To the west, however, a storm system is brewing and the threat of rain is posed for the state about the first of the week.

Skies were generally clear over most of the state Thursday with lingering cloudiness along the upper coast, producing generally warmer temperatures in western sections.

Asheville had the warmest reported temperature of the day with 50 degrees. Charlotte's high was 48 and Hickory reported 45. Other high readings Thursday included Greensboro 42, Raleigh 43 and Wilmington 47. Cape Hatteras, however, got no warmer than 38 and Elizabeth City had a high of 39.

Low readings this morning generally were in the 20s except for Greensboro with 19. Highs today were expected to range in the 40s with about the same Saturday. Sunday is expected to be fair but there's a chance of rain Monday and Tuesday. High temperatures should be in the 40s and lows in the 20s to the 30s.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today under the influence of some adverse inflation news.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 1.39 at 776.42.

Losers outpaced gainers by a small margin in the broad tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Before the opening the government reported a 0.9 percent rise in the wholesale price index for January.

The Labor Department's index of prices of finished goods—the next to last step in the distribution system before merchandise is priced for retail sale—rose 0.6 percent in the month.

Analysts said both figures came in higher than Wall Street generally had been expecting.

Brokers said traders also were waiting for the outcome of negotiations to end the coal strike that began more than two months ago. A demonstration today delayed a scheduled meeting of the United Mine Workers bargaining council to decide whether to submit a tentative agreement to a vote of the union membership.

CNA Financial gained 7½ to 8¼ in active trading. The company cited a favorable research report on it by a brokerage firm.

Medical Experts Agree Flu Has Reached Epidemic Stage

ATLANTA (AP) — Medical experts here have confirmed what half-empty office buildings around the country have been witness to for the last month — the flu has reached epidemic proportions in the United States.

The national Center for Disease Control reported that there were more than 3,000 deaths attributed to influenza and pneumonia in the United States in the last four weeks, 1,000 more than were expected.

On the basis of those figures, the CDC said Thursday it had concluded that influenza had reached epidemic proportions.

CDC officials said most of the damage is being done by older strains of the virus, although cases of the new Russian flu have been reported in Wyoming, Colorado, Michigan, Texas and New York.

However, a flu specialist at Memphis, Tenn., said the Russian virus has been isolated in a 14-year-old boy.

Dr. Robert Webster, director of the World Health Organization Collaborating Laboratory at St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital, said Russian flu may be the cause of an increase in school absenteeism in Memphis.

Illinois health officials said that state is under attack from a virus which appears to be Russian flu.

The state Division of Disease Control said outbreaks of flu-like illness have been reported in recent days at the University of Illinois in Champaign-Urbana, Chanute Air Force Base at Rantoul, Northwestern University at Evanston, Western Illinois University at Macomb and at the Great Lakes Naval Training Center near Waukegan.

In Washington, a Navy doctor, Capt. Peter Flynn, told a reporter that it took the virus four to six weeks to sweep Russia, "and we assume it will be the same here."

Other viruses, including the more familiar A-Texas and A-Victoria strains, have been reported in practically every state, the CDC said.

"It would appear that the level of intensity is below the last epidemic, which was in the spring of 1976 when there were 20,000 deaths at that time," CDC public affairs spokesman Don Berthel said.

He added that Russian flu has not been linked to any deaths "that we're aware of."

That strain, which surfaced in the Soviet Union and in Hong Kong last December, is not considered any more severe Heaviest damage was reported in a 6:10 p.m. mishap involving cars driven by Robert Little Jr. of 802 Ward St., and Randy Gilbert Creech of Route 2, Pink Hill.

Damage from the collision at the intersection of Charles Street and Red Banks Road was set at $600 to the Little car and $1,200 to the Creech vehicle.

Little, officers reported, was charged with failing to stop for a stop sign.

An 11:45 a.m. mishap at the intersection of Cotanche and Reade Streets involved a car driven by John Ray Jackson of 603 Eleanor St., and a truck driven by Paul Carrillo of Winterville.

Damage was set at $175 to the car and $600 to the truck.

Cars driven by Jim Turner of Tripp of Route 2, Greenville, and Thomas David Coltrain of 1401 East Wright Rd. collided about 3:55 p.m. on Greenville Boulevard, 300 feet East of the Evans Street intersection, resulting in an estimated $150 damage to the Tripp car and $300 damage to the Coltrain auto.

Iowa State Coach Is Angry At Big Ten Refs

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Lute Olson feels that he is being double-crossed by a double standard in the Big Ten. "I'm tired of one set of rules for the second division and one for the first, second and third-place teams," says the Iowa basketball coach.

Olson emphasized his long-time pet peeve Thursday night after his Hawkeyes dropped a 71-70 decision to 10th-ranked Michigan State.

He was particularly upset by what he thought was preferential treatment given Michigan State Coach Jud Heathcote by the officials. Olson insisted that Heathcote's frequent sideline rantings "intimidated" the referees, allowing more than the usual amount of calls to go to the Spartans' way.

Michigan State had more free throws and Iowa fouled two players, compared to one for Michigan State, in the game at Iowa City.

"It was a key factor in the outcome," noted Olson. "I think our kids got cheated."

Another key factor was the Hawkeyes' inability to hit their foul shots with consistency. They only made 14 of 26.

"We lost it at the foul line, no doubt about that," said Olson. "That's the thing that kills us."

In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, No. 2 Arkansas edged Texas A&M 80-79 and No. 6 New Mexico routed Arizona 103-85.

Robert Chapman's two free throws with four seconds left gave Michigan State its winning points. The victory, coupled with Purdue's 65-64 loss at Indiana, launched the Spartans into sole possession of first place in the Big Ten.

The foul shots by Chapman, who led all scorers with 22 points, gave Michigan State a 71-68 lead and shut off a late rally by the Hawkeyes after the Spartans had taken a 65-58 lead with just 1:31 to play.

"We lucked out tonight but we'll take it," said Heathcote, who praised the Hawkeyes' defense. "Iowa played better than we did."

Ron Brewer sank two free throws with 12 seconds remaining as Arkansas survived a second-half Texas A&M comeback to beat the Aggies. The Razorbacks blew most of a 49-36 half-time lead.

"It's always been tough for us to win here," said Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton after the game at College Station, Tex. "We had a 13-point halftime lead here last year, too. A&M made a great run at us."

WILMINGTON — East Carolina University, cut down to a skeleton crew by the flu, came up with a winning combination last night, gaining sweet revenge over the University of North Carolina-Wilmington, 90-85.

The trio of Oliver Mack, Herb Gray and Greg Cornelius sparked the Pirate scoring, hitting 80 of the 90 points. Mack was high with 34 points, hitting 14 of 26 shots from the floor and 6 of 7 at the line.

Gray finished with 26, his season's high, making an astounding nine of ten from the floor and eight of 12 at the stripe. Cornelius ended up with 20, hitting nine of 12 field goals and two of four at the line.

Cornelius also led the Pirate rebounding with 10, while Gray added eight and Mack six. The Pirates outrebounded the Seahawks, 24-16.

East Carolina's offensive play was close to its best, if not at its best, as the Pirates tossed in 61 per cent of their shots, and made good on 69.6 per cent in the second half.

Wilmington, which ranks as the number two field goal shooting team in the country, hit on 56.5 per cent of its shots, but that wasn't enough.

Most of their field goals, 25 of the 35, came on inside shooting or rebounding. The Seahawks were cold from the outside in the first half, and only managed to stay close because of their offensive rebounding during the period.

In the second half, the Pirates were finally able to cut them off the boards, but they began to connect from the outside.

East Carolina was especially effective in getting the ball inside itself. Many of Gray's, Cornelius' and Mack's points came on shots inside the five-foot range.

As it was, the Pirates had to survive several rallies by the Seahawks, who erased a ten-point halftime deficit to come back and hold the lead several times in the second half.

Then, after the Pirates had established a seven-point lead with two minutes left, they survived a potential six-point play by the "Hawks. That came in the final minute and a half of the game after the Pirates had built up an 84-77 lead.

Bobby Martin was fouled by Herb Gray in a shooting situation, and when a fight broke out between Cornelius and Garry Cooper, the Pirate center was ejected and a flagrant technical called on him, giving Wilmington two more shots and the ball out of bounds. The Seahawks made all four free throws, but missed on their field goal and the Pirates got the rebound. They then moved the lead out from 84-81 to 88-81 by sinking four free throws during the next minute, and after that, it was all over.

"We played an excellent game," Coach Larry Gillman said, relishing the win. He had earlier called the loss to Wilmington in Greenville (92-66) the most "embarrassing" of his career.

"They scored most of their points in the first half off offensive rebounds, but we were able to counter that in the second half."

"Gray came to the front again. He's remembering that he can do it and he's getting it done. Mack was superb tonight. Forget the scoring, he's showing great leadership out there. When he and Gray are playing well together, it's a strong game. (Kyle) Powers also came in and gave us a lift defensively."

Cornelius, who had his best offensive game, did "an excellent job on the boards," according to Gillman, who also praised the play of Don Whitaker, who played the contest with a 100 degree temperature. "He did a good job at the point and didn't turn the ball over a lot. He's a senior, and it showed."

Whitaker, who went the entire game for Walter Moseley, who was also ill and did not dress, had only two turnovers, and the team had only 14 in the game.

"Pride was at stake," the coach added. "We gutted it out well, and it was a game we needed to win. We showed a lot of maturity at the end in keeping our poise and getting the lead back after they had come back."

The game stayed close during the first eight minutes of the half. Wilmington got the initial lead, but East Carolina tied it up, then moved out to a 6-2 lead on baskets by Gray and Cornelius.

Wilmington came back to move ahead at 10-8, but the Pirates tied it up the next eight trips down the court for a 24-24 score.

Then, with 8:36 left, Mack stole the ball for a basket for a 26-24 ECU lead, and the Pirates held it and extended it the rest of the half.

Cornelius hit two in a row to put it to five, then scored off an Alley-Opp to run it to 35-29 with 4:51 left. Mack and Gray both hit short jumpers and Mack added two free throws to run the lead to 41-29 before Wilmington broke a four and a half minute drought. The Bucs led, 45-35 at the half.

Wilmington began to come back in the early minutes of the second half, but it wasn't until the midpoint of the half that they finally regained the lead on a fast break basket by Denny Fields, 63-62. The two teams swapped baskets for the next couple of minutes, trading the lead seven times until Mack and Cornelius combined for four points and a 72-69 Pirate advantage.

Gray followed that up with a steal and a stuff to up the lead to five again. Wilmington cut it back to two, 76-74, but Mack hit from the lane, and after another Seahawk basket, Mack and Whitaker each scored to up the lead to six with 2:42 remaining.

Then after Wilmington nearly converted the six-point play, the Pirates used the foul line to pull away again and wrap it up.

Cooper led Wilmington with 24 points, while Fields had 20, Bobby Martin had 14, Billy Martin had 12 and Dave Wolff had 10.

The win left East Carolina with a 6-14 record, while Wilmington fell off to 14-6. The loss snapped a six-game winning streak for the Seahawks.

East Carolina returns home Saturday to host USC-Aiken, looking for its third win in a row. The Pirates haven't won three in a row since Dave Patton's first season, back in 1974-75.

ECU Host To Swim Event

East Carolina University's Pirates return home Saturday night to play their next-to-last home game of the season.

The Pirates will be hosting USC-Aiken in a 7:30 p.m. game in Minges Coliseum.

Elsewhere, the Lady Pirate cagers are involved in the Winthrop Invitational Tournament, which got underway yesterday and continues through Saturday.

The Pirate track team will split up, going to the N.C. State Invitational and the Delaware Invitational on Saturday.

The basketball team travels to Old Dominion on Tuesday for a rematch with the team that handed it its worst defeat of the year.

Then, on Wednesday, the Lady Pirates entertain North Carolina State University's second-ranked Lady Wolfpack.

Tonight, the East Carolina wrestling team hosts Old Dominion.

Aiken, which went into last night's game with Newberry with a 9-14 record, is somewhat of an unknown quantity for the Pirates. Little information has been received in Greenville about the school, a branch of the University of South Carolina. The Pacers were 9-21 last season.

The Atlantic Seaboard Interscholastic Swimming and Diving Championships will hold its 23rd renewal Saturday. According to ECU Swim Coach Ray Scharf, a total of 54 boys and 71 girls teams have entered the competition this year. Over 600 boys and girls are expected to descend on Minges Natatorium for the meet.

Diving gets underway at 9 a.m. Saturday, along with the preliminaries of the swimming events. Finals are scheduled to start at 5 p.m.

Boys events include the one-meter diving, the 200-yard medley relay, the 200-yard freestyle, the 200 individual medley, the 50 free style, 100 butterfly, 100 freestyle, 500 freestyle, 100 backstroke, 100 breaststroke and 400 freestyle relay.

The same events will be held for the girls' division.

Points will be awarded to the top 16 in each event with medals for the top eight. Medals will also be given to the top three relay teams, and the first six teams in points will receive a trophy.

Scharf lists Calvert Hall of Maryland as again being the favorite in the boys' division. Calvert Hall is the defending champion and had little trouble in winning last year.

Fort Hunt, Va., and Greensboro Grimsley are listed as top competitors.

Among the girls, Merceburg, Va., is the defending champion and is favored again. Clearwater, Fla., is its top competitor along with Fort Hunt.

"This is the largest field we've ever had," Scharf said. "We've increased the field by about 30 percent despite cutting the minimum standards this year."

Chicod In Two Wins

AYDEN — Chicod defeated Ayden in a pair of junior high basketball games played here yesterday afternoon. The Chicod girls won 29-16, while the Chicod boys took a 58-51 victory.

The girls' game featured a couple of top individual performances as Chicod's Diane Roach scored 24 points, while Ayden's Linda Brown hit for 14.

In the boys' game, Chris Strickland led all scorers with 27 points for Ayden, while Chicod was paced by Billy Bunting with 17, Eddie Roberson with 14 and Roy Lassiter with 13.

Revils Making Waves During First Season

Not since the days of All-American Bill Hill has a wrestler at East Carolina made such an impact during his very first season.

Solomon Revils, otherwise recognized as "Butch" to his teammates, has produced results nothing less than spectacular for the Pirates this season and appears destined to follow the footsteps of his head coach—Bill Hill.

Revils, like Hill and teammate D.T. Joyner, is another Norview High School product from Norfolk, Va. He has already won tournament championships this season in the prestigious Wilkes Open and the Monarch Open, took second place in the Carolina Invitational and owns an impressive 14-1-1 record.

His credentials have been very impressive so far this season, especially for someone who simply wanted a chance to wrestle during his first year at East Carolina.

"When I came down here all I wanted to do was to get a chance to wrestle a lot," explained the 167-pounder. "I was kind of surprised that I got off to such a good start, but I hate to lose, and I don't see any need to go out there and give a poor effort. I go out there to wrestle and win."

Revils' very first collegiate tournament was the Monarch

Open in Norfolk where all his family, friends, and his old head coach were on the sidelines watching. But Butch calmly responded to the pressure as he won four matches, all over top-seeded opponents, to win the title and was named the Outstanding Wrestler in the event.

He knocked off fourth-seeded Ben Hill of Tennessee in the second round with a 5-4 overtime decision, and advanced to the semifinals with another 5-4 decision over fifth-seeded Norman Walker of North Carolina. After winning by default over top-seeded Rick Rodriguez of N.C. State, he took the title with a dramatic 1-0 overtime decision against North Carolina's Carl Hoffman.

"I was really up for that tournament," said Revils. "Everybody was right there pulling for me, my coach, my parents and all my friends. I guess I was lucky in some ways, but I was sure glad to do so well in my first tournament."

Success has been nothing new to Butch. During his two year career at Norview High under Kenneth Whitley, he posted a 62-5-2 record and went 27-0 his senior season, winning the districts, regional and state championships.

Revils attributes most of his success thus far this season to wrestling in a weight class lower than he wrestled in high school.

"I wrestled at 185 during high school and I was always up against guys that were a lot bigger than I was," Revils said. "Now since I've been wrestling down at 177 and 167, it seems like the guys are smaller and it sure gives me a lot more confidence."

And just like most collegiate wrestlers, Revils' goal is to qualify for the NCAA championships and have a chance to reap All-American honors.

"That's my goal, to win at the Eastern Regionals so I'll get a chance to go to the nationals," he said. "I guess I've surprised a lot of people so far this season. I just hope I can continue to wrestle well and peak at the end of the season."

At the end of the regular 1977 college football season, Michigan could look back on 16 consecutive crowds of 100,000 or more at home.

Carolina Sales building now would not be involved.

The adopted plan will also indicate an exception from the proposed map that provides the purchase of a severance rather than total acquisition of the lot containing the Quonset building on the north side of 14th.

Some 118 acres are involved in the South Evans plan, with the boundaries generally Tenth Street to the north, Charles Boulevard to the east, Seaboard Coast Line to the west and Norfolk and Southern Railroad to the south.

In addition to 14th Street improvement, the major improvements in the area would involve right-of-way acquisitions, including right-of-way on Evans Street.

The area, according to Community Development director John Schofield, would probably be the last major area of substandard housing in the city.

The plan would cost an estimated $2.5 with funds utilized from the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. Implementation of the plan will be take several years.

Approval was also given by the Council, following a public hearing, to the city's 1978-79 Community Development Program.

The proposed budget for the program calls for anticipated revenue of $1,590,000, including $1,250,000 as the city's fourth year CD entitlement, $175,000 in carry over from the 1977 program, and $165,000 in transfer funds from the parking deck project.

Projected expenditures under the fourth year program include: acquisition of Central Business District parking lots, $165,000; West Meadowbrook acquisitions, $255,000; South Evans acquisitions, $100,000;

Improvements on 14th Street from Charles to the railroad, $200,000; construction of tennis courts at Guy Smith and Evans Parks, $85,000; Southside water and sewer improvements, $60,000;

Code enforcement, $38,000; rehabilitation, $85,000; public services (addition of a crime prevention officer), $19,000; relocation in West Meadowbrook, $323,000; relocation in South Evans area, $100,000; clearance and demolition, $16,000; planning and management, $60,000; and administration, $50,000. An unprogrammed balance of $34,000 is projected.

During the public hearing, Bernard Haselrig cited the need for playground facility improvement at Third Street School and he appealed for funds for the facilities. Haselrig was informed that the matter was included in funding proposals under the General Neighborhood Improvement Program.

Patricia Dunn, first vice president of the League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County, read a statement from the organization that recommended that "in the future, a complete courage P.A. programs in technical institutes."

The State Board of Medical Examiners, however, traditionally prefers such programs to be based in "well-established, fully-operated medical schools where they can take on the programs as only a minor part of their full operation."

Officials added that the State Board of Medical Examiners must license graduates of technical P.A. programs and "certify that they are of sufficient quality."

They added that the East Carolina University Medical School, which would have to train the Pitt Tech students, is "too preoccupied" in establishing its program at the time, to take on another responsibility.

"We have enough to do now for the next four years," said one top Medical School official.

The major problem cited by Medical School authorities was in the "timing of the implementation."

They would not comment on the possibility of a P.A. program at Pitt Tech in the future.

Students for the Pitt Tech Physicians Assistant Program were to be recruited on a priority basis from eastern North Carolina.

During the next few months, the Pitt Tech staff, headed by John Wimberly, will be consolidating and preparing the information and materials obtained in the feasibility study for publication. The findings of the feasibility study will be available to institutions and organizations interested in such programs.

and descriptive list of all suggestions for CD expenditures be made available for public scrutiny prior to the public hearings held by the Council."

She said that the League was concerned that, although the neighborhood CD meetings were seen as "noteworthy, because the suggestions made by participants at the sessions were not fully publicized, it is impossible for the public to make a thorough review and evaluation of the present CD proposals."

Rocky Fallon asked if any of the requests made by residents of the Higgs Neighborhood were brought to the Council's attention. Cox said that they were included in the neighborhood improvement funding.

The Council received the lists of requests for general neighborhood improvements under the CD program. City Manager Jim Caldwell explained that as part of the 1976 and 1977 CD programs, the city allocated $80,000 for the improvement program for the Higgs, Riverdale and Greenfield Terrace neighborhoods.

The purpose of the project, he reported, has been to allow the various neighborhoods to establish their own priorities and to allow the city flexibility in working with the individual requests.

Caldwell said that the city needed to select priority lists and begin to work on them.

Each neighborhood would be eligible for between $25,000 and $26,666 in projects, it was pointed out. A top priority involves street lighting improvements in the Higgs and Riverdale sections.

The Council accepted the $19,189 bid offered by Thomas Built Buses Inc. for a new transit vehicle. Caldwell said the city advertised for bids for a 19-26 passenger vehicle and received only one offer.

The firm proposed a 60-day delivery on the gasoline powered vehicle, it was noted.

Other business conducted during the meeting included:

— Appointment W. W. Speight, Dr. John Wooten, Dr. Herbert Hadley, and Marvin Blount Sr. to their former terms on the reestablished Greenville Foundation with their staggered term expirations following the same rotation as under their original appointment;

— Tabling of action on the closing of a portion of Cedar Street extending from Fourth Street southerly to Fifth Street;

— Adoption of an order closing a portion of Seventh Street between Evans and Reade Circle;

— Approval of a request by Bernice Branch for rezoning of 21.4 acres west of the city landfill from RA-20 to R-6;

— Adoption of an ordinance making technical amendments to the cable television ordinance;

— Approval of a resolution endorsing the transfer of effective ownership and control of the franchise and cable television system of Greenville Cable TV, Inc. (effective control of the company remains unchanged);

— Acceptance of Barnes Street located in Section III of Windy Ridge with recordation of the acceptance contingent upon the clearing of gutters along the street;

— Granting of a renewal permit to Fred Webb Inc. for a mobile home located at 1405 N. Green Street;

— Approval of the five-year Transit Development Program as adopted by the Public Transportation Commission, with a change in wording from consolidation involving the city and university systems to coordination;

— Authorization of a bond order for the issuance of $200,000 in electric system bonds for the purpose of enlarging, extending and improving the city's electric system;

— Adoption of a resolution of appreciation to the late Dr. M. B. Massey, who served as an alderman of the city from 1935 until 1947;

— Adoption of a resolution of intent to close a portion of Radio

NEW BERN — "The worst thing in this case is the fact that Eli Bloom is the District Attorney," Norman Kellum told the court in his closing arguments shortly before Bloom was found not guilty on charges of assaulting a New Bern woman here April 4, 1977.

"The fact that Eli is a public official," defense attorney Kellum said, was the prime reason, "he has to come in here to be subjected to this. Mr. Bloom's character has not been impeached. He's the most gentle person you can find," the lawyer told Judge George Bason.

Bason, a short time later, said the state had failed to, "establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did what the warrant said," and declared Bloom not guilty of assaulting Mrs. Hazel Jones.

The chief district court judge in Wake County, Bason was assigned to hear the Bloom case in Craven County District Court, while William Griffin of Williamston, District Attorney for the Second District, was assigned to prosecute for the State.

Bloom is District Attorney for the Third District which includes Craven County.

Bloom was charged in a warrant issued January 28, with assaulting Mrs. Jones on April 4, 1977.

Mrs. Jones, the only witness tendered by the State, testified that she was at the Craven County Court House for the trial of her son Donald, charged with larceny in connection with the theft of a quantity of tobacco. The case, she said, "was calendered to come up and it didn't."

She said during the lunch break that she, along with her son and her husband Jack, were standing, "pretty close to the front door," of the court house when she saw Bloom, along with Judge E. S. Peel and, "someone else," walking down the hall.

Mrs. Jones said she approached Bloom and said, "Mr. Bloom, I'd like to speak to you please."

Saying the judge and the,

"other man...went on out the door." Mrs. Jones continued, "I asked him why, when cases were calendered, why they were not tried...asked him why he wouldn't try it...why he was covering for the Sheriff's Department."

"He (Bloom) grabbed my arm, gripped his teeth...and was grinning like a 'possum. I don't know what he was saying he was talking so fast...shaking his finger in my face," she testified.

Mrs. Jones then said Bloom, "hauled back and swung at me. My husband pulled me back," and Bloom's hand, "sort of brushed my coat."

According to Mrs. Jones,

Bloom then ran out the front door. "I ran to the front door, stuck my head out and said, 'You hit me, didn't you?'"

Bloom, she said, then turned and said, "yes...why don't you get out a warrant?"

Upon questioning by Griffin, Mrs. Jones said she did not secure a warrant for Bloom until almost 10 months later because of her health.

Under cross examination, Mrs. Jones said at the time she approached Bloom at the noon recess, she, "was upset because the case had not been tried," and did not know at that time that the charges against her son had been dismissed.

She also testified that, "never once," did she touch Bloom.

Mrs. Jones indicated that she had never reported the incident to New Bern police or to the Craven County Sheriff's Department, but added that she had talked with a staff writer for The Sun Journal (a New Bern newspaper), and said, "Yes, I asked him to my home (on January 28) and then asked him to go with me," to the magistrate's office in Dover (about 20 miles west of New Bern on U.S. 700 where she obtained the assault warrant.

Kellum then asked Mrs. Jones why her 26-year-old son or her husband didn't do anything if Bloom had hit her as she had alleged.

"No one had a chance to," Mrs. Jones replied. "He (Bloom) went on and got tangled up in the door. He tried to get out so fast."

Craven County Tax Collector Ivy Lynn Rawls took the stand for the defense and said she, "heard this loud, boisterous talking out in the hall. I got up from my desk to see what was going on."

The witness said she saw Mrs. Jones in the hall and said the woman was berating, "all the lawyers," and saying the, "courts were crooked."

By that time, according to Mrs. Rawls, Bloom, Judge Peel and assistant district attorney Tom Haigwood were, "coming down the hall," toward Mrs. Jones.

"I saw Mrs. Jones grab Mr. Bloom's left arm and he jerked his arm away from her. The judge and Mr. Haigwood took a step or two forward, toward the door, then he (Bloom) followed them on out the door."

Mrs. Rawls said she heard Mrs. Jones say something to Bloom which she could not understand, then heard Bloom say something like, "that's a matter for the court." But, Mrs. Rawls said, she did not see Bloom grin like a 'possum, point his finger, or touch Mrs. Jones.

Bloom, district attorney for the Third District for the past seven years and prosecutor for the Greenville Municipal Records Court for 39 years before that, said he took a voluntary dismissal in Donald Jones' case that day and that "Judge Peel issued an order holding the money ($5,000 which was derived from the sale of the tobacco allegedly taken by Jones) until it could be determined who it belonged to."

The defendant, who is 73 years old, said as he walked down the hall, "Mrs. Jones grabbed me by my arm. I pulled away," and Mrs. Jones said, "You've got my money." I said, "That will have to be settled by the court."

Judge Peel, who testified, said, "I recall a lady coming up...addressed Mr. Bloom," but said he saw no blows passed or any grabbing by either party.

Peel did testify that, "I recall him (Bloom) saying the woman grabbed my arm and said something about the money in the Jones case."

Haigwood, an assistant district attorney for the past five years, said he "observed some lady approach Mr. Bloom," but continued walking.

"I glanced back," he said, and, "observed this lady grasp Mr. Bloom's left arm," and, "observed Mr. Bloom pull away." The witness also said he, "heard her say words, but don't recall what words she said."

Noting that he recalled Bloom ask, "Did you see that woman grab me," Haigwood said, "I don't recognize her today as being Mrs. Jones or being the woman."

Kellum tendered Marie Newell, the magistrate who issued the warrant, as a witness. She said a reporter from The Sun Journal accompanied Mrs. Jones to the magistrate's office and noted that the reporter made a statement to her (Mrs. Newell) when she expressed reluctance to issue the warrant.

Kellum told the court that he wanted to show that the magistrate was intimidated by the reported, but Judge Bason would not allow Mrs. Newell to repeat what the Sun Journal reporter said to her.

An array of character witnesses appeared for Bloom, including four district court judges and one former judge.

Charles Whedbee, chief district court judge for the Third District, told the court that, "I have known Mr. Bloom for almost 50 years. He has the reputation for good. He has the reputation for being a gentle person."

Former chief district court judge J. W. H. Roberts, who said he has known Bloom since 1936, termed the prosecutor, "the most anti-violent...one of the kindest men I have ever known."

In his argument to the court, Kellum said Mrs. Jones' son and husband were there with her. "If what Mrs. Jones said occurred, I don't know of any man that would not come to the aid of his mother."

Kellum also said the state, in its case against Bloom, was relying on, "the uncorroborated testimony of one witness," when they could have tendered Mrs. Jones' son and husband, and cited the lack of, "timeliness of bringing this action."

Griffin countered by saying Mrs. Jones' son did not interfere because, "I don't think her son's that big a fool. Here comes the power of the State of North Carolina," down the hall. Griffin continued, pointing to the fact that the judge, the district attorney and the assistant district attorney were all present.

Leading Death Cause

WASHINGTON (AP) — Automobile accidents are by far the leading cause of death among young people, new government statistics show.

The Census Bureau reported figures Thursday that showed that 20,279 persons between the ages of 1 and 24 were killed in highway accidents during 1975.

The next leading cause of death in that age group were homicides, which took 6,195 lives; cancer, 5,219 deaths; suicide, 4,736 deaths, and birth defects, 1,883 deaths.

The bureau said 1975 was the latest year tabulated.

For the same year, the figures showed that automobile accidents accounted for 65 percent of all accidental deaths among youths aged 15 to 24.

Bobby Boaz, a spokesman for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, said one reason highway accidents account for such a large percentage of deaths among the young is that they are not as susceptible as older persons to heart attacks, strokes, and cancer.

Furthermore, he said, young people often are inexperienced in driving and take unnecessary chances. He said they also often do not know their own tolerance for liquor and its effects on driving.

Women Provide A Great Show

Thursday night was ladies night with John Houseman's The Acting Company presenting Elinor, Jones' new play, The Other Half, in McGinnis Auditorium on the ECU campus. The women had the stage to themselves, and what a show they gave!

Directed by Amy Saltz, Ms. Jones' play salutes great women writers and the characters they created. It is a masterful tribute to the spirit, dedication, and creativity in all womankind.

Six of the actresses of The Acting Company — Mary Lou Rosato, Frances Conroy, Leslie Geraci, Harriett Harris, Patricia Hodges, and Diane Kemp — were cast in the roles of famous literary women — Sappho, Mary Shelley, the Bronte Sisters, Christina Rossetti, Jane Austen, Virginia Woolf and George Eliot.

The Other Half opens with notable quotes from male authors concerning women, including jewels such as "A woman, an ass, and a chestnut tree bear the more fruit the more beaten they be," — quotes clearly expressing attitudes held by most people in the past when women first attempted to find a place and make a name for themselves in the area of literature. It was considered inconceivable that women could have such talents.

As Virginia Woolf, Ms. Rosato presented the unifying idea of the play when she said "A woman must have money and a room of her own if she is to write fiction."

One of the memorable moments is a recreation of the harrowing life of the three Bronte sisters — Charlotte, Emily, and Anne — who resorted to masculine pseudonyms when they began their writings. Later, they had to fight for recognition as women. Leslie Geraci's performance as Emily's heroine Catherine Earnshaw in a scene from "Wuthering Heights" is chilling.

Ms. Rosato's hilarious characterization of Aphra Behn, the first woman dramatist, and Ms. Harris' delightful impersonation of Fanny Burney both deserve special recognition.

Director Saltz says the play is still in the process of being completed. Some scenes were rewritten for last night's performance.

In this year of increasing popularity and artistry of women's films, The Other Half might well become a landmark in women's theater. Its message is that women need an outlet for creative faculties just as much as their brothers do. There is an equal greatness of mind if they but have the will to use it.

The Other Half expresses a hope, in the words of Virginia Woolf, that "Shakespeare's sister will soon be born." The concluding dialogue has the cast simultaneously recalling great women authors and poets in history. The last name mentioned, that of Lillian Hellman, gives a ray of hope for the future. A blacklisted Hollywood writer denied the right to pursue her profession during the Red Scare of the 50's, Ms. Hellman is just now beginning to gain the full recognition she deserves — partly through Jane Fonda's characterization of her in the movie Julia.

The Acting Company gives its final Greenville performance at 8:15 p.m. tonight with Shakespeare's King Lear.

Edmisten Had Words Cut Off

WASHINGTON (AP) — N.C. Attorney General Rufus Edmisten hardly got a chance to get a word in edgewise when he sought to testify in opposition to a bill being considered by the Senate constitutional rights subcommittee in Washington.

But Edmisten, who worked for the same subcommittee seven years under former Sen. Sam Ervin, said it was just what he expected.

"I understand it so well it doesn't offend me in the slightest," Edmisten said after the hearing. "That's the way it works in committee...When you're doing the questioning, you can hear what you want. I know. I've done it many times. I've been on the dishing out end many times."

The bill Edmisten opposed would make it easier for people to sue local and state governments in federal court when they think their civil rights have been violated.

Edmisten, appearing as a representative of the National Association of Attorneys General, told the committee that all 50 of them oppose the measure.

"I believe we are altering our form of government very seriously," Edmisten said. He added that the bill would result in government by U.S. District Court judges.

Then Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who was conducting the hearing, interrupted. He pointed out several examples of federal involvement which states favor, including tobacco subsidies. He said states favor federal action "until it steps on your toes."

When Metzenbaum finally paused, Edmisten tried again. He said that if the cop on the beat thinks city hall will pay for his mistakes, there will be no incentive for him to observe the fine points of civil rights.

But Metzenbaum interrupted to contend that if the towns know they will have to pay, they will discipline their officers better.

Later, Edmisten observed, "I don't believe that Metzenbaum gave me enough time to make an English sentence, to show I could put a subject and verb together."

Unite On Inner City Programs

NEW YORK (AP) — Calling it a "revival of the 1960's civil rights coalition" between blacks and Jews, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People jointly have launched a program to train black and Jewish college graduates to work on problems of inner cities.

The two groups agreed to work together on such common concerns as employment, housing, equal educational opportunities, quality of urban life and crime. Said Benjamin Hoos, NAACP executive director:

"We can no longer afford the divisiveness that has cropped up in recent years between blacks and Jews."

Lenten Message Urges Sharing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lent, the 40 week-days before Easter observed as a period of penitence and self-disciplining reform, started Feb. 8 on Ash Wednesday.

That opening day, marked in Roman Catholic and some Protestant churches by marking the foreheads of worshippers with ashes, emphasizes human mortality, failures and dependence on God's forgiveness.

In a Lenten message released in the country by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Pope Paul VI urged showing "love for one's neighbor" by deeds and gifts for the needy. Sharing, he said, is fundamental to Christianity.

Ordained Four Women Priests

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — Against a background of dissent, New Zealand's Anglican Church has ordained its first four women priests. This makes three of the 22 national branches of Anglicanism — previously in the United States and Canada — that have ordained women, plus the mission diocese of Hong Kong.

By JOE FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Times Square is one of those places you have to see to believe. It is a gaudy, improbable stew of massage parlors, Broadway theaters, classy restaurants, porno shops, live sex shows and under-age hookers. They line up like fence pickets along 8th Avenue, better known these days as the Minnesota Strip.

"Going out?"

"Going out tonight?"

"Ya wanna go out?"

It's the standard pitch. Upstairs in brothels that don't pretend to be anything else, there are hundreds, possibly thousands like them.

The teen-age sex business does a lot of the Times Square area sex trade. The city estimates grosses $1.5 billion a year.

There are half a dozen major callboy operations plus dozens of smaller ones dealing in boys in their teens.

Most are runaways unable to make any other living. And each night a few more find their way to "Under 21" on 44th street — the heart of the strip.

$500,000 of that, mostly through donations of individuals and churches. Most of the rest comes from state funds.

All kinds come to Under 21. Most are 15-18, more than half are boys, many of whom became male hustlers to survive.

Just over half are from the New York area, with most of the rest coming from the South or Midwest.

Most are from poorer, one-parent homes, and have no job training. Illiteracy is common.

Visitors at Under 21 have included a pimp offering $500 for a young girl who took refuge there, a 14-year-old boy being chased by his pimp, who had a broken bottle, and a 16-year-old boy with a contract out on him. He had made the mistake of stealing from a customer.

Many show up brutally beaten by pimps or customers.

"They call it a victimless crime, but look at these kids," said Ritter. "I have a love-hate relationship with the New York City police right now. I think most of the cops on the beat are decent, honorable guys who don't like this sort of thing any better than I do."

But Ritter said they are shackled by bureaucracy and high-level apathy.

While some of the kids at Under 21 return home and others find jobs, return to schools or are placed in other programs, Ritter knows most won't come in at all. Of those who do, many will return to the street.

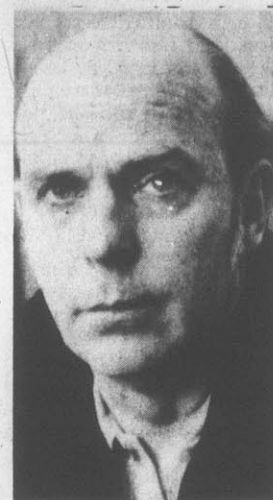

"I can't tell you how many times I've heard a kid say, 'Bruce, I'm not going to make it; I'm going to die out there; the street is going to kill me.'"

"We have one kid who comes in here now. A beautiful kid. A bright, articulate kid. If he were yours, you'd think of him in terms of a doctor. He's a hustler. He has jumped into a thousand cars, slept in a thousand beds. He's 17, and he gets drunk every day. That's how he forgets what he does. He's black, he can't read or write, and he has no job skills."

"And he knows he's going to die out there. He knows it just as sure as we're sitting here."

BRUCE RITTER

There, the Rev. Bruce Ritter wages a lonely war that he admits is not going well.

At Under 21 boys and girls can get a shower, medical aid, clean clothes, a meal, a place to sleep and a chance to go home if they want to. Most don't want to.

"How could a kid go home again to, say, a small town in upstate New York, after working on the strip for two or three years?" asked the 50-year-old balding Franciscan priest. "Maybe 12 to 15 percent go home again. Often their parents don't want them back."

In the nine months Under 21 has been open, more than 3,000 kids have come for help. Ritter says 60 percent to 70 percent have been involved in prostitution or pornography in a city that police say has 20,000 runaways aged 15 or under. If they come to New York by bus, the first place they see when they get off is the strip.

"We're seeing up to 70 or 80 kids a day now," said Ritter. "We're overcrowded, but I refuse to turn anybody away."

It costs about $800,000 a year to operate Under 21, and Ritter says he has to raise about

"You might recall that TCT was, ordinarily, a very undistinguished player. His bidding was poor, his judgment worse and, most of the time, his play of the cards could be described as mediocre. But give him a difficult trump contract to play and his whole manner changed—he became sharp as a blade. Here is a typical example of his skill from a recent game at the club.

"If Tommy wanted to bid over East's preemptive jump to six diamonds, he would have been better advised to try seven clubs. But bidding judgment was never his forte, and he gambled six hearts. West would have doubled any other player in the club, but he was aware of Tommy's prowess.

"Tommy ruffed the opening diamond lead, reducing himself to three trumps as against West's five, but he still made light work of his task. He cashed the ace of trumps to reveal the bad break. Faced with this development, most players

EXHUMED — A buried Ferrari, reported stolen in 1974, is dug up from a backyard in Los Angeles. Some children playing in the mud in the backyard told police they found something unusual just below the surface and it turned out to be the Ferrari that was reported stolen in December, 1974 by its owner, Rosendo Cruz, of nearby Alhambra, Calif. The car was valued at $18,000 when new. (AP Laserphoto)

Mother Chose A .38 -Caliber Pistol To Enrich Drab Life

HOUSTON (AP) — Sylvia Jean Brown tired of tending house and raising children. Looking for something to enrich her life, she chose a .38-caliber pistol, a .45-caliber automatic, a sawed-off shotgun and five years of crime.

The 5-foot, 110-pound Mrs. Brown was caught and sentenced to 25 years in prison for seven armed robberies, two forgeries and a burglary.

"I don't really know exactly what happened," she said in a recent interview. "There was always something about me which called for an independent life. I had lost my individuality."

"I was trying to be so many different people and I wasn't myself. I said to myself, here I am 30 years old, and I've never done anything or been anywhere."

Prosecutors called the petite redhead, now 35, "a regular Ma Barker," a desperado of the 1930s.

"If I had lived in her time, life would have been gorgeous," she said, and pointed out she would not have needed a Pretty Boy Floyd or Clyde Barrow to help her.

"The thing that makes me mad," she said, "is when police act like I couldn't do it all by myself without some man along."

"My femininity is the element of surprise. You should see the look on their faces when I pull a gun and tell them what I want. My life's dream has been to have lived in the 1920s or the 1930s. I can imagine being an outlaw then. Women then were always in the background."

Mrs. Brown said it began when she moved from Huntsville to Houston in 1973 and decided her children "are going to have what I want them to have."

She stole a car and sold it. As well as the money, the theft gave her "a complete, natural high, a feeling of knowing I could do it. It was power."

A few months later, she said she left the children with her former husband and took off with an ex-convict named Erik, stealing cars, duping a salesman out of a mobile home, embezzling, robbing and dealing in drugs. A hostage was taken in Arizona.

She said she was back in Houston for a bank robbery when she was arrested while visiting her children. Extra-dicted to Arizona, she pleaded guilty to kidnapping and served some time, then "hit the streets again in '75," she said.

Mrs. Brown was arrested last August by Bryan police while driving a stolen car. Officers found the three weapons in the auto, and an investigation led to her prison sentence.

"It's too bad there is no legal way people can live like this," she said. "It's strictly the freedom and the type of excitement this life can afford."

Mrs. Brown said she has no regrets other than the suffering of her family.

"I know I have a conscience because I regret my loved ones having gone through this," she said. "They suffered more than me, but I was just making a living."

Nuke Waste Is Piling Up

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Duke Power Co. says it is running out of storage room for used nuclear fuel at one plant, and the company wants to begin taking that material to the McGuire nuclear plant near Charlotte.

Duke plans to ask the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for a permit to take spent fuel from its Oconee nuclear station near Clemson, S.C., through Charlotte by truck to McGuire on Lake Norman about 15 miles northwest of town.

The uranium would be shipped in heavy casks specially designed and tested under "every type of situation," Duke spokesman Angie Howard said Thursday.

Used fuel from Oconee has been shipped through Charlotte before but on a limited basis, Ms. Howard said.

Spent fuel from Oconee must be moved starting in March, 1979, because the plant is running out of storage space. In a letter to the NRC last year, Duke said Oconee would have to shut down if the fuel could not be shipped elsewhere for storage.

The federal government has delayed construction of a nuclear fuel processing plant near Barnwell, S.C., and that has caused the wastes to begin piling up.

"It might be that we will have to move fuel here for a while until the government decides what it's going to do," Ms. Howard said.

Oconee's three reactors each contain about 180 uranium fuel assemblies, and a third of the assemblies have to be replaced each year. A fuel assembly contains about seven million uranium pellets three fourths of an inch long.

The McGuire plant is still under construction and Ms. Howard said the spent fuel storage area at the Catawba station on Lake Wylie southwest of Charlotte is being enlarged.

Church Agency Backs Farmers

Uneasy Ceasefire For Syrians And Lebanese

By FAROUK NASSAQ
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Lebanese Christian forces observed an uneasy cease-fire today after three days of heavy fighting in which 150 killed and 250 wounded were reported.

Burned-out cars, gaping holes in shop shutters and debris in the streets testified to the intensity of the fighting that raged in the low-income Christian residential quarter of Ein Rummaneh.

The Syrians sent armored vehicles into the district Thursday, fought house to house against Christian militiamen and set up new positions afterward.

They also maintained a ring of tanks and multiple rocket launchers around a Lebanese Army garrison of 600 troops, most of them Christians, at the Fayadiyah Barracks, where the fighting erupted Tuesday on the outskirts of the Christian sector of Beirut.

Syria's military commander in Lebanon, Gen. Ali Aslan, ordered his troops to stop attacking Christians Thursday and said his men were to fire only in self-defense.

A Lebanese delegation was negotiating in Damascus. The newspaper As Safir, which has access to Syria's highest government echelons, said President Hafez Assad told the Lebanese they should disband their army, which broke up during the civil war and was slowly rebuilt after the cease-fire 15 months ago.

"This army is made up of factions loyal to political parties," Assad reportedly said in a reference to the Christians. "It should be disbanded to make way for rebuilding the real army of unified Lebanon."

The fighting started when Christian soldiers at Fayadiyah demanded the Syrians remove a checkpoint outside the barracks. Sources said the Syrians set up the checkpoint to prevent the soldiers from running guns to the private armies of Christian political factions.

The Syrians quickly ringed the garrison with tanks and opened fire. The fighting died down after two hours but resumed on Wednesday and spread to adjacent Christian East Beirut when Christian militiamen began attacking Syrian positions.

Informants said the Syrians were demanding the removal of the Christian commander of the Fayadiyah garrison, Col. Antoine Barakat, who they accused of ordering an attack on the checkpoint Tuesday. The Lebanese army commander, Brig. Victor Khoury, reportedly rejected the demand and said Barakat and his men "opened fire only in self defense."

The fighting tapered off after midnight Thursday. There were a few explosions and some sniper fire, but people ventured out to buy food. Government offices and schools in the Christian sector stayed shut, and traffic with the western Moslem sector was slight.

Pilot Program In Health Plan

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A health education and screening pilot program will be available to an estimated 10,000 state employees, excluding school teachers, in Burke, Pitt and Wayne counties, state officials announced Thursday.

Cannon Mills in Kannapolis began a similar program two years ago in an effort to promote early detection of diabetes, high blood pressure and cancer. The state program will include educational sessions and examinations for cancer, hypertension and diabetes.

"We want to try this program on a limited basis at first," said Gov. Jim Hunt in a prepared release. "and if it proves successful, we think it has great potential as an overall part of our health plan for state employees."

Retirees Group Meets Monday

The regular monthly meeting of the Greenville Chapter (No. 2016) of the American Association of Retired Persons, will be held Monday, Feb. 13 at 2:30 p.m. at the Memorial Baptist Church.

The entertainment portion of the program will be given by Bob Knapp, on his recent trip to Ecuador with color slides and commentary as well as a question-and-answer session. Refreshments will be served.

Monday's meeting will be the first meeting of the year for newly-elected officers installed at the January gathering: Peter Anderson, president; Ruth Harris, vice president; Elizabeth Deal, secretary; and Ropsy Baker, treasurer.
