Election May Affect Several Issues

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Besides selection of a Democratic U.S. Senate nominee, North Carolina issues such as liquor-by-the-drink, the Equal Rights Amendment and betting on horse racing may be indirectly decided in Tuesday's statewide primary.

Primaries for Democratic and Republican candidates for the state House and Senate will also be held Tuesday, and the eventual winners are likely to face both ERA and a proposal for parimutuel betting when they reach the General Assembly.

On liquor-by-the-drink, a statewide local option bill needs only House approval this May for ratification, and supporters of the measure are hoping that some lame-duck representatives — those defeated Tuesday or not seeking re-election — will feel free to vote for the highly controversial issue.

"There's about a 15-vote deficit now," said one powerful liquor-by-the-drink supporter in the House who asked not to be named. "I think that'll be substantially reduced and by the time the vote comes, my guess is it'll be nip-and-tuck, a matter of one or two votes."

Otherwise, most legislative races around the state have been characterized by a lack of issues or excitement. Even ERA supporters, who vowed an even greater effort when their amendment failed by two votes in the Senate after gaining House passage last year, have been largely quiet.

"There's just not a whole lot of issue-oriented campaigning in general going on in these races," observed Moriah Bliss, president of North Carolinians United for ERA. "We have simply gathered information (about who supports ERA) and made it available to the members of the 40 or so organizations in our coalition."

ERA supporters have at least two senators they would like to see defeated, however. Sen. Jim McDuffie, D-Mecklenburg, and Sen. John Henley, D-Cumberland, cast the deciding negative votes after earlier signing what ERA proponents said were written commitments to support the measure.

In the House, 22 incumbents are not seeking re-election, some of them retiring and some seeking a seat in the upper chamber. But some of those counted as incumbents weren't around in 1977, having gained appointments to replace those rewarded with state jobs and judgeships by Gov. Jim Hunt.

Have Not Complied

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Federal Election Commission Saturday released the names of six North Carolina congressional candidates who have so far failed to comply with election law requiring campaign financial disclosure in time for Tuesday's state primary.

The candidates could face civil fines if their failure to abide by the law continues. Fines as high as $5,000 for violators and as much as $10,000 for "willful" violations can be assessed, an FEC spokesman said.

Candidates for federal office must file regular reports on their personal campaign — or candidate — expenses, and their campaign committees must do the same.

The list of those in non-compliance released Saturday included Democratic senate hopefuls David P. McKnight, Joe Felmet and William B. Griffin; James J. Bonner, Democrat, 1st congressional district; Elbert G. Rudasill, Democrat, 2nd district, and Larry T. Turlington, Democrat, 3rd district.

Two of the 10 GOP legislators last year, Sen. Bob Somers of Salisbury and Rep. Fred Dorsey of East Flat Rock, aren't running.

And in the district including Raleigh, most GOP leaders are hoping one of their candidates will not make it through the primary — self-proclaimed Nazi Harold Covington.

And the Rev. Coy Privette, the fiery Baptist leader of anti-liquor forces, is opposed for the GOP House nomination from Cabarrus County.

Moro Makes Appeal

By SYLVANA FOA
ROME (UPI) — Kidnapped ex-Premier Aldo Moro made his most desperate and anguished appeal yet Saturday, warning the government that if it did not negotiate his release with the Red Brigades "you'll be guaranteeing my death" and there would be a "bloodbath."

Police experts said the 10-page letter, addressed to the ruling Christian Democratic Party and left in the car of a Rome journalist, was authentic.

Moro stated at the outset that "I am not under any immediate coercion and I am not being drugged," but it was obvious his hand had trembled throughout the writing.

The letter was not dated, but referred to having "read only yesterday the affectionate letter" from his family published Wednesday in a Milan newspaper.

No communique from the Red Brigades accompanied the letter, the seventh known written by Moro since his abduction March 16 by a Red Brigades commando team that first killed his five bodyguards in a blaze of submachine gun fire.

The letter sent Christian Democratic leaders rushing to their party headquarters for an impromptu summit.

In the letter, the five-time premier and current Christian Democratic president attacked his party for "cowardice in refusing to negotiate."

WILMINGTON, N.C. (UPI) — Longshoremen were to form picket lines outside the state port facilities in Wilmington and Morehead City early today, beginning a strike made inevitable by the failure of last-ditch negotiations the day before.

Strike Set For Ports

"We'll have picket lines at both ports around 6 a.m.," Ports Director William Greene said.

There were no ships at either Wilmington or Morehead City, the state's two ports. Business at the ports has dropped steadily in the month since the strike began to appear likely.

Greene said federal mediator Jack Cassle was preparing to leave Wilmington after a negotiating session that lasted until just before dawn failed to resolve the dispute.

"We thought we almost had a contract, but it didn't work out," Greene said.

John Ben Smith, president of Local 1426-A of the ILA in Wilmington, said shortly after the session ended Saturday morning that negotiations had failed.

Scaffold Investigation Begun

By ANDREW GALLAGHER
WILLOW ISLAND, W.Va. (UPI) — Federal specialists focused their attention on broken pieces of concrete Saturday in a search for the cause of a scaffolding collapse that killed 51 workmen — a search that will probably provide the basis for huge law suits.

The Labor Department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration said experts hoped to have preliminary results by mid-week on a laboratory analysis.

"This is the most critical part of our investigation," said OSHA Regional Administrator David Rhone. "We have some leads and we're developing them."

Labor Department spokesman Jack Hord said large lawsuits were anticipated and OSHA's findings must be able to stand up in court.

Special Meet By School Bd.

A special meeting of the Greenville City School Board of Education will be held at 7:30 p.m. Monday, May 1. This meeting is one of several consecutive Monday meetings set for the board to work on the 1978-79 capital outlay and current expense budget for the school system.

Construction experts took sample concrete chips from the partially-completed power plant cooling tower where the scaffolding ripped away, said Hord.

Through laboratory testing they hope to determine whether the concrete had properly set.

As the examinations continued, residents of a string of communities strung along the Ohio river made preparations to bury the dead.

The democrats of Pitt County held their convention Saturday at 1 p.m. in the District Court room of the Pitt County Court House. Congressman Walter B. Jones was the guest speaker.

Jones urged the audience to "stick together and vote as a party" in the upcoming elections. Referring to the results of past elections, both on a state and national level, that resulted in republican victories due to a split in the democratic party platforms, Jones appealed to the audience, "let's not have another year like 1972."

Chairperson of the convention Betty Speir took the convention through old business, after which delegates to various conventions and committees were nominated and elected.

Delegates to both the congressional district convention and the state convention were elected. Delegates to the four sectional committees which have the responsibility of electing a replacement should the present office holder die or otherwise become unable to hold office were also elected.

Delegates to the judicial district executive committees are Danny McNally and Robert White. Congressional district executive committee delegates are Willey E. Gaskins and Lee Walton. State senatorial district executive committee delegates are Miriam House and Noah Lee. Bob Martin and Artemis Kares were elected house of representatives district executive committee delegates.

Standing committee reports were given by the Democratic Women, the Young Democrats Club and the Teen Dems. Special committee reports were given on the status of voter registration by Henry Ferrell and Judy Donnalley, voter registration chairperson and secretary to the convention. A review of the year's activities was given by John Bizzell, second vice-chairperson.

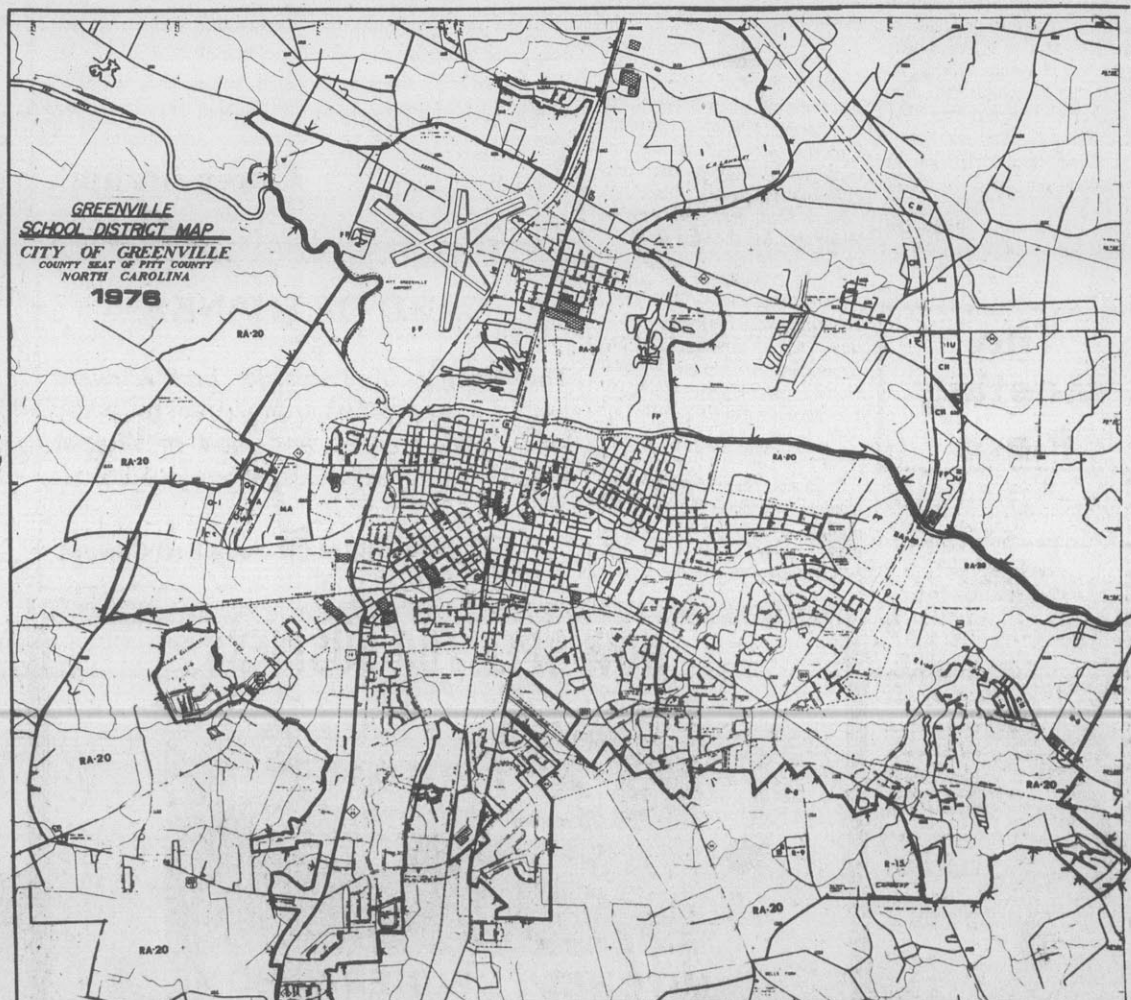

Henry Oglesby, first Vice-chairperson, introduced both present democratic office

Move Up Hour

MOVE YOUR CLOCKS AHEAD — Two o'clock this morning was the time officially designated to move clock's ahead one hour for the change-over from standard to daylight savings time. As a publicity gimmick to remind people of the change, Honey Bee Novak of NBC's "Rollergirls" series has a clock drawn on her back by a Los Angeles artist. The move up one hour applies to every state except Arizona, Hawaii, and also for Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa and that part of Indiana which is in the Eastern time zone. The hour of sleep lost last night will be regained at 2 a.m. October 29 when standard time is resumed and timepieces are set back an hour. (AP Laserphoto)

BELMONT, W.Va. (UPI) — Neighbors and friends of the Steele family poured into the Belmont Community School Saturday night to mourn the five members of a single family who died in the scaffolding collapse at Willow Island.

The Rev. Amos McVey, pastor of United Methodist Church in Belmont, was the man entrusted with burying five Steeles and one more Belmont resident today.

"I try to do the best I can with the abilities I have," he said, adding "I'm just one little human being."

The Steeles — Emmett, 62, and his nephews Ernest, 29; Larry, 31; Ronald, 30; and Miles, 27 — were laid out in closed coffins in the gymnasium of the red brick school in this tiny Ohio River town.

Down the road was the Willow Island Power Plant, where 51 men plunged to their deaths Thursday when a cooling tower scaffold collapsed.

The school's parking lot soon was dotted with cars. Officials were polite, but reporters and photographers were kept away.

"The family requested it," said Trooper Bob Gunnoe. "They've had a rather bad experience with reporters," said Belmont Mayor Robert Doty.

"We don't want to talk to any reporters," said one of the Steele women when one called at Emmett Steele's home earlier in the day.

The five Steeles and a sixth person will be buried here Sunday. At least two burials of the 51 took place Saturday in Parkersburg and Belmont.

McVey, who says "every moment I can possibly spend" has been with the Steeles, was reluctant to talk about the tragedy. He said the Steeles were angry over stories written about the deaths.

Nixon Admission

By United Press International

Former President Richard M. Nixon admits in his memoirs he took part in the Watergate cover-up that led to his downfall and deceived the nation about his involvement.

Nixon, whose memoirs are being syndicated by a subsidiary of The New York Times, blames his fall from power on a series of misjudgments that led him to "go off on a tangent" and view Watergate as a "public relations problem."

The first installment, which was scheduled to be released today, was made public the day before by a number of newspapers and television stations in the United States and overseas.

Nixon conceded that John W. Dean III, his former counsel, was more accurate than the ex-president in testimony about a key March 21, 1972, Watergate talk between the two men.

"I did not see it then, but in the end it would make less difference that I was not as involved as Dean had alleged than that I was not as uninvolved as I had claimed," he wrote.

Nixon said it didn't matter if some of Dean's Senate testimony was wrong. "It only mattered if any of his testimony was accurate," he said. "And Dean's account of the crucial March 21 meeting was more accurate than my own."

Nixon, the nation's 37th president, said he made a major tactical error after Dean testified before the Senate Watergate committee — a repeated error that led to his downfall.

"I worried about the wrong problem," he said. "I went off on a tangent by concentrating all our attention and resources on trying to refute Dean."

Nixon, who resigned in 1974 with 2½ years of his second term left to serve, said he again and again "made the same mistake" in misjudging the seriousness of Watergate.

"I felt sure that it was just a public relations problem that only needed a public relations solution," he said.

The installment was the first of seven excerpts from Nixon's forthcoming 400,000-word book, "RN: The Memoirs of Richard Nixon." The book is scheduled to be published May 15.

Nixon admitted he was more concerned about himself than his closest aides when the Watergate scandal reached the White House.

"I worried about the impact on them if they were forced to leave, but I worried more about the impact on me if they didn't," he said.

The low-key first installment contrasted with Nixon's emotional revelations last year during a series of television interviews with Briton David Frost.

News Briefs

No Tracking By Inmates

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — In a dispute over how and when prisoners should handle dogs used to track escapees, the secretary of correction's office has instructed that "no inmate take part in a tracking operation in any manner whatsoever."

A letter was sent containing the order this week to the North Piedmont area administrator of the prisons division.

The North Carolina Department of Corrections was informed that inmates sometimes handle the dogs while investigating a grievance by an inmate who claimed he was assaulted by another prisoner after he was recaptured following an escape last June 14.

Concedes On Right To Deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration, now in a position to win approval of its warplane package sale to Israel, Saudi Arabia and Egypt, is conceding to Congress the right to deal with the issue piece by piece.

The administration stepped away from its procedural quarrel with Congress, satisfied that an apparent majority of the House International Relations Committee will vote against rejecting the sale as a package.

The $4.8 billion sale can be stopped only if both the Senate and House vote to reject the proposal by May 28. That would be 30 days from Friday, when the president formally sent the measure to Congress.

Will Not Concede Inflation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although consumer prices rose at close to a double-digit rate in March, a spokesman for President Carter says the administration is not ready to concede a fundamental worsening of the inflation outlook.

A sharp climb in meat and fruit prices helped send consumer prices up by 0.8 percent last month, signaling an annual inflation rate of more than 9 percent, the government said Friday.

Anti-Nuclear Rally Underway

SNELLING, S.C. (UPI) — A three-day anti-nuclear rally began Saturday near the planned nuclear fuel reprocessing plant at Barnwell, a facility that was under construction when President Carter voiced opposition to such projects.

Members of the Palmetto Alliance, planners of the protest against the Allied General Nuclear Services facility, said they expect "thousands" of people for the event that will end on May Day. Officials said they expected considerably fewer.

By noon Saturday, about 200 persons were on hand. They began setting up dormitory tents and other tents where workshops will be held.

A few small groups started immediately started training in non-violent civil disobedience procedures.

State and local police kept watch over the group.

Saturday's activities were based at the 20-acre campsite west of the Barnwell plant where the rally will have its headquarters.

On Sunday, the protesters said they will march to the plant and present a written petition asking that the unit be converted to a non-nuclear facility, or closed.

But they said the main thrust of the rally would occur Monday, when the demonstrators will repeat the three-mile walk to the plant and present themselves for arrest.

"They will cross onto Allied General property, be arrested for trespassing, and then be transported by the state to a booking area," said Brett Bursey, one of the event's organizers.

The May Day rally marks the first anniversary of a sit-in at Seabrook, N.H., where 1,400 nuclear power opponents were arrested and jailed.

Bursey said South Carolina does not want a repeat of the mass jailings at Seabrook. Only demonstrators trained in civil disobedience measures will be allowed to present themselves for arrest Monday, and no attempts will be made to enter the plant or to damage property.

Bursey said plans have been made to have local magistrates on hand to quickly process those arrested. He said protesters have promised to pay their own bail.

Eight Seeking Helms' Seat

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Eight Democrats, including the son of a popular former governor and a state insurance commissioner waging a populist campaign, are seeking their party's nomination Tuesday to oppose Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Luther Hodges Jr., a 41-year-old former Charlotte bank president whose father was governor in the late 1950s and was secretary of commerce in the Kennedy administration, is widely considered the frontrunner with a healthy margin in recent polls.

Yet the eight-man field includes four candidates considered capable of winning the nomination, and they are counting on forcing a runoff by denying Hodges a majority Tuesday.

Helms, the conservative freshman senator who was a leader of opponents to the Panama Canal treaties, has no primary opposition but has raised and spent more than $3 million on his campaign already.

Helms is the first Republican senator from North Carolina in this century, elected during a 1972 GOP sweep of the state. He has used national computer mailings to raise money from largely out-of-state sources in his effort to hang on to the seat.

Two-term Insurance Commissioner John Ingram is running on his popularity gained by fighting insurance companies, particularly on automobile coverage. He has repeatedly denied company rate increases, but has been rebuffed in the courts on 20 of 22 cases.

A maverick in his party, Ingram has attempted to make insurance an issue in the Senate race. "I need a bigger stick to go after those monopolistic insurance companies," he says. And recently Ingram has attacked Hodges as "the special interest banker candidate."

Also running are McNeill Smith, an intellectual state senator from Greensboro who was in the forefront of the civil-rights movement in North Carolina, and Lawrence Davis, a wealthy state senator from Winston-Salem who has campaigned against big federal spending.

Hodges has the largest campaign organization, but has been hampered a bit by his own candor.

Smith and Ingram have seized on several of Hodges' comments, such as when he told college students he tried marijuana but later denied it, and when he told a reporter his campaign was in the "four corners," a stalling technique used by North Carolina basketball teams.

Four other candidates have added color to the race but are not expected to have any impact. They are David McKnight, a 30-year-old fiddle-playing newspaperman; Tom Sawyer, a right-to-life state representative; Joe Felmet, a former newspaperman advocating world government; and William Griffin, a politically unknown mill worker.

Besides the Senate race, five incumbent Democratic congressmen face primary challenges.

The most serious of the challenges is to first term Rep. Lamar Gudgeon, D-N.C., of Asheville in the mountainous 11th District, by R.P. "Bo" Thomas. Elsewhere, Rep. Walter B. Jones in the 1st District faces James J. Bonner and Gene Leggett. Rep. L.H. Fountain faces Elbert Rudaill in the 2nd. Rep. Charles Whitely faces Larry Turlington in the 3rd, and Rep. Ike Andrews faces Joe Overby in the 4th.

For Andrews, a victory Tuesday will mean re-election, as he faces no GOP opposition in the fall.

One other congressional primary pits Larry Harris and Roger Austin, two Republicans seeking nomination in the Democratic-held 8th District.

Three other statewide races will be decided by Democrats Tuesday, for two Supreme Court seats and a Court of Appeals seat.

Appeals Court Judge David M. Britt is facing New Bern lawyer Reginald L. Frazier, a former unsuccessful candidate for lieutenant governor, for the Supreme Court seat being given up by retiring Justice I. Beverly Lake.

Chief Appeals Court Judge Walter E. Brock is facing fellow Appeals Court Judge Robert M. Martin for the other Supreme Court seat, being given up by former Gov. Dan K. Moore.

Judge Richard C. Erwin, appointed to a new Appeals Court seat last year, faces Fayetteville lawyer Austin B. Campbell. If elected, Erwin, a former state representative from Winston-Salem, would be the first black to win election to a statewide office in North Carolina.

Two other Appeals Court judges, John Webb and Burley Mitchell, are unopposed.

In addition, Superior Court judgeships are at stake in 35 districts, though there are Democratic primaries in only seven.

Local elections around the state will select nominees for district attorney, state House and Senate, and various local offices.

Hodges' Capabilities Impress

Over this weekend all the campaigning that has preceded the Democratic primary to choose a nominee for the U. S. Senate seat now held by Republican Jesse Helms will wind down.

The eight candidates will issue their final statements, and then on Tuesday May 2, the question of who the party's nominee will be becomes a matter for Democratic Party members to decide.

As with most campaigns with such a large number of candidates, this one has seemed to us to be one of confusion.

From it all, however, we have observed that one candidate has emerged as confident and capable.

He has confronted the issues and, as we see it, has been forthright in his opinions on the matters which most affect North Carolinians.

That candidate is Luther Hodges.

On tobacco he says, "... we must protect it from bureaucratic attack by HEW and at the same time, make sure that the tobacco support program is maintained and strengthened."

On health care: "... we need a plan that contains costs, emphasizes preventive medicine and better out-patient treatment and provides protection for the major illness or injury that could wipe out the life savings of a family."

On jobs: "Unemployment is a cancer and we need economic expansion and job creation to put people to work. In North Carolina, our problem is underemployment and we need not just more jobs, but better jobs."

On energy: "I recommend prompt passage of President Carter's energy program or at least a compromise package because energy is one of the key components of inflation."

Luther Hodges left a highly successful business career to offer his services to the people of North Carolina as candidate for U. S. Senate.

The current campaign has convinced us that Hodges has the ability, and that he is the best of the candidates in the race for the Democratic nomination.

Our District Needs Walter B. Jones

First District Rep. Walter B. Jones has served in Congress since February, 1966.

During that time he has travelled frequently about his district and seldom has a congressman worked any harder to provide for the needs of the people who elected him.

The congressman is now a ranking member of the House Agriculture Committee and he is chairman of the Tobacco subcommittee. The importance of that cannot be too strongly emphasized in our heavy tobacco producing area.

Our district needs the continued services of Congressman Jones, and we recommend his nomination in the Democratic primary.

Playing Catch-22 Game

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Remember the old Abbott and Costello routine about Who's On First? That's about as confusing as the situation in North Carolina regarding Foreign Trade Zones.

In 1976, at the urgings of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce, the General Assembly hurriedly passed legislation authorizing the special zones for ports of entry (sea or air) in this state. That law was needed to gain a permit from the U.S. Dept. of Commerce.

Advantages are obvious: imported goods and materials can be brought in, processed, manufactured into finished goods, warehoused or otherwise worked with and import duties don't have to be paid until the marketable item is moved out of the special zone to market.

Another big plus: imported materials brought into the special trade zone can be processed or manufactured into finished goods, and the duty doesn't even have to be paid if the product is re-shipped out of this country to another foreign market.

No action

The pluses promised some new firms locating in this state. So far none have. To date, there is no Foreign Trade Zone in North Carolina.

What went wrong? Catch-22 say State Department of Commerce officials savvy in foreign trade matters.

It seems that before the U.S. Department of Commerce will grant a license for the duty-free (or delay) zone, they must have "firm commitments" from companies which will locate facilities within the compound.

But without absolute assurance that the foreign trade zone will be built — a factor dependent upon issuance of the federal permit — foreign firms simply will not put in writing their commitment to locate a facility in the proposed Foreign Trade Zone.

Without one, you can't get the other ... so the state isn't getting either. Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr. wants to break the deadlock. "The potential is significant ... I want to pursue this," he says.

In Debt

might face North Carolina cities in the future.

Not likely. This state and local governments have outstanding records — since the 1930s. In mid-1933, 62 counties, 152 cities, and about 200 special tax districts were in default on principal or interest or both. That crisis helped create the local Government Commission in the State Treasurer's Office. Buncombe County was the last to clear its debts — on July 1, 1976, 40 years later.

Since the Depression, default has been "rare indeed" according to David M. Lawrence, local finance specialist at the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. One sanitary district had trouble repaying a federal loan, and one small town couldn't meet its Depression-era obligations and went bankrupt.

Today, even though local government debt is at a record high, says Lawrence, the "ability of our local governments ... to repay their debts has grown even faster..."

Per capita county debt (1972 figures) is $105.69; and city debt is $272.29. In 1976, the total local county debt was $665.3 million; and city debt was $725.8 million.

To illustrate the growth, in 1952, total county debt was just $141.5 million, and city debt was $173.9 million. Per capita debt 20 years ago was $34.85 for counties; and $99.77 for cities.

Sunday Morning Notes

Police were called to Lynndale on April 19 by someone who reported that a bicycle had been left in the yard and had remained there for about three days.

Officers picked up the bike and took it to the rear of the police department at City Hall. It was to be put with other bicycles which had been recovered by police for possible identification by the owners.

The officers went inside to fill out a report on the incident.

When they went back out to get the bike, it was gone — apparently stolen.

The search for the bicycle is on again.

Susan Quinn of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce, reports that a major company called to inform the chamber that it was building a huge department store in Greenville.

The store was to be at Greenville Square and the firm wanted the chamber to arrange a meeting here for officials of the company.

The planned store was so huge that the Chamber people decided to check again with the company about the store plans.

Everything was accurate, except for one thing. The massive department store will be built in Greenville Square — in Greenville, South Carolina.

Some local chamber representatives flew off to Monroe, Salisbury and that other Greenville in South Carolina last week to look at the chamber buildings in those cities.

The local chamber is planning to build a new building and the group was looking for ideas.

It was a stormy day and the plane ride was quite bumpy.

The local chamber people obtained some "Greenville" bumper stickers in the South Carolina city. It was easy enough to cut off the S. C. and the returning delegation happily waved the "Greenville" stickers as they disembarked from the plane on return home.

Department of Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw, speaking to a U.S. 264 Highway Association meeting in Washington, N. C. last week, assured supporters of the road that they had friends elsewhere.

Folks in Tarboro are working diligently for improvements to U.S. 64.

Bradshaw visited there recently and found that his motel room was 64.

Bradshaw joked with the local people about that. Then, he said, it was pointed out to him that in order to get an outside phone line, he had to dial 264.

At any rate, both highways are now scheduled for upgrading, and from Zebulon, where they come together, to the west the route has already been improved.

DETROIT (UPI) — A safety research group has concluded that another passenger's lap is the most dangerous place for a child to be while riding in an automobile.

The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety says adults cannot adequately protect their children in a crash, and may, in fact, add to the injury.

Reporting on his recent study of crash injuries to small children, social psychologist Allan Williams said:

The Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Greenville Water and Light Commission have started a joint project which will place all wire and cables underground in the main business area of the city.

The telephone company was granted a franchise several months ago with the agreement that the company and the Water and Light Commission would work jointly in placing the wires and cables underground.

When the immediate project is completed, all wires will be underground from the Telephone Exchange to the Atlantic Coast Line railway tracks on Dickinson Avenue from the exchange on Washington to Fourth and on Fourth to Cotanche.

The program will probably be extended in the future.

Graduation exercises were held last night at two area high schools.

At Farmville High School, the 34 graduates listened to speaker G. W. Phillips, director of Public Relations of the Woman's College, University of North Carolina, deliver the commencement address.

Judge Isaac M. Mekins of the United States District Court, delivered the commencement address at Bethel.

Other Editors Say Govm't Obligation

(Henderson Dispatch)

Continued relatively frequent increases in postage rates could price the department out of business eventually. No one doubts but that costs of operation in the service are on the rise, as in nearly everything else.

There are instances where individuals and businesses are cutting down on mailings wherever possible. They are finding a saving, whether much or little. A private company has taken a sizable amount of parcel post away from the postal service and charging less, but still finds it a profitable enterprise. First class mail might go the same way if not prohibited by law.

Now, it is announced that the 13 cents rate for first class mail is to be increased to 15 cents. That may be a hedge against pay increases soon to be granted the postal union. This is not to say that personnel is not entitled to added income. If everyone else is, so are they.

In this instance, however, such mounting costs ought to be, and we think is, as much the obligation of the federal government as is support of all other departments. As has been said often before, the postal service should not be a system for taxation, which is what, in a sense, is happening.

The department was never intended to be self-supporting and while the present agency is a semi-official operation, it is primarily and above all else a service which the government owes to citizens as much as other phases of activity.

Congress should take the postal service back under its umbrella, charge reasonable rates, and finance whatever difference there might be. But another first class increase is just around the corner. Congress, whose members have free postage, is not concerned. It doesn't hit them.

Talk of inflation! But the quasi-governmental postal service is doing its share in fanning the fires. Nor is there any telling as to what lengths it may go, and without even a finger raised in opposition in official circles.

Heading Off The Price Critics

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Beef prices are headed beyond the record highs of mid-1975, and cattlemen, who say they were unfairly branded as profiteers back then, are seeking to head off criticism before it comes to pass.

The beef industry, said Richard McDougal, president of the National Cattlemen's Association, is cyclical. Prices decline as well as rise, and what we are heading into now, he explains, is the rising phase.

But almost certainly, he promises, price stability will follow, as cattlemen produce more heifers and steers, and as consumers cut back on consumption, now running about 126 pounds (carcass weight) per person.

Cattlemen, said McDougal, a Lovelock, Nevada, rancher, farmer and feedlot operator, have just come through their worst few years ever, losing close to $30 billion because of overproduction.

Forced to trim their herds in order to survive, the 1.5 million full-time and part-time cattlemen now have less beef to offer. Because of this, and higher middlemen costs, prices already have soared.

McDougal reports the national average price of five beef cuts reached $1.78 a pound on April 13, up 15 cents from a month earlier. But still, he reminds you, no higher than prices were three years ago.

During this three-year period, he reminds you, many cattlemen had to borrow on the equity in their lands in order to survive. But they did so, he said, because they knew the market would correct itself.

"We have no power to manipulate prices," said McDougal. "We are 1.5 million people making 1.5 million individual decisions."

What can the shopper do? Reduce red meat consumption, of course.

As consumption drops, McDougal explained, those cattlemen who increased their herds in order to take advantage of higher prices will then find themselves with an excess, and prices again will drop.

That pattern has been repeated nearly every decade this century, a reflection, cattlemen say, of the free market at work — and the biology of the cow as well.

To produce additional beef, for example, it is necessary for cattlemen to plan, often imperfectly, for years ahead, a fact often difficult to explain to urbanites who rarely see cows on the hoof.

The market for cattle, incidentally, is more likely than ever to be the restaurant rather than the dining room table.

In recent months, 40 percent of beef consumption has been outside the home, a goodly percentage of that in the increasingly popular fast food outlets. No less than 45 percent of all beef today is ground.

And because of that supply-demand imbalance, ground beef prices are likely to rise fastest of all. The explanation: a shortage of older cows and grass fed — as opposed to corn fed — steers and heifers.

These lower-priced forms of beef generally go to the hamburger market, but in the past two or three difficult years they have been culled from herds. As a result, higher-priced, "fed" beef must be utilized.

Strength For Today

AN END IN ITSELF

"Yes, I believe in religion" said an ambitious and successful businessman recently. "I believe that religion is good for everyone in the community. We would be overrun with crime if it were not for the churches."

This statement is true, but it misplaces the value of religion in human life. Religion was never intended to be a means toward an end; religion is an end in itself. God calls men to Him that they may have fellowship with them. The salvation of their souls is a by-product of something vastly greater and more significant, namely, friendship with the living God.

When we consider religion as an end in itself, it becomes the normal condition in which the human soul finds satisfaction and fulfillment. "Righteousness" is the word by which we describe the normal behavior of a healthy, spiritual being.

Thus religion is natural; indifference, agnosticism, and atheism are abnormal conditions — illness of the soul.

'Correcting' The Portrait

By
SEN. EDW. M. KENNEDY
Columnist James K. Kilpatrick, always the artist with words, recently painted a portrait of me in print that was appealing in some respects but that contained to many "big government" colors to be a real likeness.

What prompted his column was the platform we shared in Florida the other day at the annual meeting of the National Association of Chain Drug Stores, where I spoke on national health insurance and Federal regulation of drugs. My comments on both topics obviously tapped Mr. Kilpatrick's conservative reflex.

In general, health is an area where government has traditionally had a major role, because the average citizen does not have the knowledge required to assess such things as the competence of physicians or the safety of prescription drugs. For example, government grants licenses for both doctors and drugs, to guarantee at least minimum standards of ability and safety. Because of Federal regulations, America was spared from the thalidomide tragedy that afflicted many other nations.

I have strong reservations about the FDA, an old-line New Deal agency, has the tools to fulfill its mission of assuring the safety, quality and effectiveness of the drugs that find their way into the medicine chests of 200 million American consumers in our excessively pill-conscious society. There is widespread over-use and misuse of prescription drugs in this country. Testimony before the Senate Health Subcommittee indicates that tens of thousands of Americans pay for that misuse each year with their health and with their lives. The reform legislation I have proposed is designed to end these defects and improve the existing system of regulation. But it is hardly a Big Brother solution.

On national health insurance, I favor comprehensive health care coverage for every citizen at reasonable cost — as Medicare, one of the best-loved federal programs in our history, has provided for persons over 65. Recently, I have been working on a new approach to coverage of other citizens that would limit the Federal budget cost and give a major role to the private insurance industry.

In key areas outside health care such as reducing Federal regulation over the airline and trucking industries, I have found myself in the vanguard in Congress among those espousing the private sector philosophy that Mr. Kilpatrick preaches so eloquently. More competition is a better answer than more government for the problems of these industries.

I have also been protesting the promiscuous way that billions of Federal dollars are doled out through tax loopholes. It is ironic that so many who call themselves fiscal conservatives are actually the last of the big time spenders in Congress. They opposed increased spending for domestic programs, but are often the first to endorse costly new Federal subsidies through the tax laws.

At any rate, it is a pleasure to engage in debate with Mr. Kilpatrick, whether in person or in print. However much we may disagree, his wit and civility are a tribute to his profession.

A Conservative View

A Plan For Payments To 'Concerned Citizens'

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — Every session of Congress sees a few bills that may be identified simply as "sleepers". These are the innocent little tricksters that lie snoozing in committee until the final weeks of a session, when they slip out unobserved in the adjournment stampede. Let me tag a sleeper to keep your eye on: S-270. It is another of Senator Edward Kennedy's strokes of political genius.

The bill would create the "Public Participation in Federal Agency Proceedings Act of 1978." The title is no fogger than the text of the bill itself, but buried in the draftsman's muck is the germ of a gorgeous idea. The idea is to appropriate tax funds — your funds — to compensate any lunatic gaggle of zealots, disgruntled and hell-raisers that may want to intervene in a regulatory proceeding.

It is something like the girlish game of poker in which the banker just gives away money to any player who wants to sit in.

The idea, mind you, is not new. A number of agencies already are paying public funds to private interest groups for their participation in a regulatory proceeding. By way of example, the Federal Trade Commission in 1976 paid out more than $79,000 to various pressure groups that wanted to shape the FTC's proposed trade rule regulation for the funeral industry.

In that proceeding, the FTC gave $3,980 to the Consumers Union for a "written analysis of proposed rule." A payment of $8,377 went to the New York Public Interest Research Group for "hearing participation." The FTC handed the "Continental Association of Funeral and Memorial Societies" $18,170; the Consumer Affairs Committee, Americans for Democratic Action and National Council of Senior Citizens a total of $18,139; the California Citizens Action Group $15,558; the "Central Area Motivation Program" of Seattle $7,410, and Arkansas Consumer Research $7,694.

The payments were intended to cover attorneys' fees, consultants' fees, a consumer survey, "preparation of testimony" and "travel and other expenses". The payments amounted to a modest little ride on the old gravy train.

The FTC, which seeks to become the most powerful agency in Washington, gets away with these partisan handouts in its usual high-handed way. Other agencies have had qualms. The Federal Power Commission, for example, concluded that it had no authority to squander the taxpayers' money in this fashion; that conclusion led to a Second Circuit case, Greene County Planning Board v. FPC, in which the appellate court agreed that no such payments could be made. The Department of Transportation, fearful that Greene County might be controlling as to other agencies, asked the attorney general for an opinion. Assistant Attorney General John M. Harmon last month held that the Second Circuit decision had no application.

Mr. Harmon's opinion might be enough to revive the sleeping Kennedy bill. Under the Kennedy proposal, the Congress would make a formal finding "that effective functioning of the administrative process requires federal agencies to seek the views of all affected citizens." The statement is fatuous on its face; no agency could seek the views of "all" affected citizens. This bland finding, moreover, stands the First Amendment on its head; it is the people who have the right to petition government, not government that has the power to pay the people to petition. Nevertheless, that is what Mr. Kennedy has in mind. His bill would pay attorneys' fees, travel costs, the "costs of experts" and "other costs of participation" for any qualifying individual or group. The intervenor would have to show only that he lacks sufficient resources to participate "effectively" without a handout. Otherwise, any special-interest group could play fun and games in Washington at the whim of every federal agency engaged in adjudication, licensing, rule-making, rate-making, "or any other agency process in which there may be public participation."

Nothing on God's green earth now prevents any citizen or group of citizens from coming to Washington to testify before a regulatory body. Concerned citizens, spending their own money, do it all the time. The notion that an agency should pay a partisan outfit to be partisan is a giddy notion. Mr. Kennedy has a million of them.

NOW WE'LL SEE IF A GOOD GENIE COMES OUT!

By GAIL MICHAELS

When It's A Rainy Day You Gotta Have Losers

If we had a choice of having rain during the week or rain on weekends, I'm sure most people would opt for rain during the week. But not me. Because the first thing I think of when it rains on a weekday is the parking situation at ECU.

Now, finding a parking place on campus when the sun's out is like finding an empty stall in the stadium restroom during the Carolina-State football game. But finding an on-campus parking place during a rainstorm is like finding an empty stall equipped with toilet tissue in the stadium restroom during the Carolina-State football game.

That's why on Wednesday morning I leaped out of bed the second I realized it was raining and ran for the shower. I knocked Phillip out of the way, showered in two minutes, and got dressed in seven minutes. By 7:30 I was ready. Unfortunately, I had forgotten one thing — Meg.

Now, two-year-olds are specially designed to slow down at a rate inversely proportionate to the urgency with which their mothers spur them on. Meg hadn't touched more than a piece of buttered bread for breakfast in over a month, but that morning she sat down at the table and announced, "I want a boiled chicken egg."

"No, you don't, sweetie," I said. "It takes twenty minutes to boil an egg. How about a cookie?"

"You ought to be ashamed!" Phillip said. "Think of her health."

"What about my health?" I said desperately. "I just spent a fortune getting over clogged sinuses. If I fix her an egg, I'll be 8:30 getting to campus, and I'll have to park in Conetoe."

They both just stared at me.

Did you know that it takes a two-year-old twenty-five minutes to eat one egg?

The second Meg finished, I snatched her out of her chair and rushed her into the bathroom to brush her teeth.

"I need to go to the potty," she whined.

Of course, I recognized this as a stalling tactic to get out of brushing her teeth, but I was too chicken to challenge her. "Okay," I sighed. "But you'd better go!"

She didn't. So fifteen minutes later I grabbed her off the potty and drove her to the babysitter's, dirty teeth and all.

That was just before I ran out of gas. Fortunately, it happened right next to a service station. Unfortunately, the service station attendant had the get-up-and-go of a dead tennis ball. It took him ten minutes just to unscrew the gas cap.

Of course, by the time I got to campus all the parking spots near the English building were gone. I rode around five or six times praying for a miracle, and I did find parking — about half a mile away.

That was when I realized that Phillip had left me the broken umbrella.

Ten minutes later I arrived at the door of the English building. My shoes were not only soaking wet — they were beginning to swell. Every time I put a foot down, little fountains would spurt up around my ankle. My pants legs were so heavy with water that when the wind caught them and swacked them against my shins, I almost lost my balance. I was carrying three soggy term papers, loose change kept floating out of my pocket-book, and I realized that the black rivulets streaming over my raincoat collar were a sure sign that my mascara was not waterproof.

"Good grief, you're wet," laughed the person who held the door for me. "Too bad you didn't get here a little later. I'm just leaving, and you could have had my parking place."

I looked out and saw that his car was within running distance. "Here," I said, smiling sweetly. "Would you like to use my umbrella?"

To the editor:

It would be most interesting to have a count of the eligible voters in our country who constantly complain about our government, but never voice their opinions by vote on election day.

Our government was founded of the people, by the people and for the people. Its principles are the foundation of the greatest democratic form of government on the face of the earth, and we, the people, must defend and protect these principles that have been preserved for us through death, blood, sweat, tears and courage.

Every phase of life is affected by our government either directly or indirectly and our economy, defense, and moral decline are our country's most vital issues today.

We, the Volunteer Women's Committee of the Edgecombe-Martin County Electric Membership Corporation, ask, "Who can do something about the issues?" Our answer is "you" — you the people who enjoy the blessed privilege of living in America, which makes it your responsibility.

"Politics is dirty" is a popular excuse of countless people who don't vote. If you feel this way, you should get involved and help "clean it up." During the last presidential election in November of 1976 in the state of North Carolina, 1,677,906 (66 percent) out of approximately 2,793,000 registered voters were concerned to the extent of making an effort to vote and the percentage is much less during other election years.

Apathy can bring about the downfall of a country, because nothing worthwhile can ever be accomplished through indifference. The future of our United States will be the result of our apathy or concern in response to our responsibility, opportunity and constitutional right to vote; therefore, we challenge you to join us at the polls May 2.

children to the risk of unnecessary crash injuries and creating situations in which they themselves are likely to inflict injuries on their children through bodily contact — no different in the end result than if they batter their children deliberately.

In frontal crashes, both child and adult continue to move forward as the vehicle comes to an abrupt halt, causing the child to be crushed between the person holding him and unyielding interior surfaces such as window frames, instrument panels, doors and even floors.

The study covered 53 cases in which children traveling on laps were injured. Williams said injuries due to probable or definite occupant-to-occupant contact were reported in 42 percent of them.

In one case, Williams said, a 14-month-old boy riding on a passenger's lap in the rear seat was found face down with the adult on top of him.

"He died of brain injury and had sustained multiple fractures and cuts from contact with the back of the front seat and the adult. In the same crash, a 9-year-old passenger, sitting beside the adult and wearing a lap belt, received no injuries."

A Life Surrounded By The Treasure Of Quiet

LIMROCK, Ala. — My early childhood was spent in Atlanta, in the mid-1920s, and I have many pleasant memories from that period. Even more vivid, however, is my recollection of the move my family later made to what we called "the mountain", part of the Cumberland range in Alabama, where my father had coal and timberland interests.

We didn't know how long we'd stay, so to me the move seemed like a summer retreat or vacation. Two of my brothers and I finished the school term in Atlanta before joining the family on "the mountain" in the spring. We changed trains in Chattanooga and got off at the way station called Limrock — no sign of a town, only a tiny store.

I recall then riding a short way on a handcar which ran on a narrow-gauge spur track. After reaching a certain point, we had the choice of ascending "the mountain" by horseback or by walking and puffing up a steep, narrow and rocky road full of ruts, winding a long distance up the wooded slope. We rode horseback; the green forest and large boulders edged the lonely road, and the air was fresh and invigorating.

Later, surprising us on her first visit to our mountain home, my sister and a friend walked up that path. Hot and tired, but grinning, Sister's first words were, "Papa can find the damndest places!"

Our rustic house was perched on the sloping lap of the mountainside, and surrounded by the treasured quietude. There was time to ponder the silence of God's nature, to feel apart from man's bustling world and in a peaceful one of our own. We saw unspoiled beauty, molded and painted by the Master's hand. The sun came up, the sun went down — without our seeing it on the horizon! And the beautiful moon cast grotesque shadows across the rugged landscape, lending serious moments, a sense of wonderment, and, sometimes, feelings of sadness or loneliness on bright nights. The fox terrier or a watchful setter would bark long and lonely at the moon, and on summer evenings we heard the croaking of a frog in the hollow, the chirping of crickets, or the shrill sounds of katydids in the trees. On dark nights, our oil lamps were like a beacon to a stranger below, had there been one.

Mother liked to sit beside a window facing the steep mountainside, and sew, or write letters. A welcomed sound was the mailman's horse and creaky buggy winding slowly upward, stopping at our lone mailbox. One day Papa received his order of New Testaments, and on that Sunday he rode across the mountain to give copies to members of a little church.

More than 20 vegetables flourished in the fenced, rich garden near the woods. One morning when Brother was gathering vegetables, several persistent bees put him over the rail-fence; he was slinging a bunch of beets around his head to fight them off.

We had time for hobbies then, such as netting butterflies for mounting. Innumerable big butterflies, monarchs, beautiful blue and black ones, and other colorful sorts were flitting around. We'd walk to the top of the mountain and find an amazing number.

Brother, who played the violin as well, gave two of us lessons on the mandolin and guitar. We never "performed", but would practice out of hearing distance from others.

The long steep road up the mountain became a big challenge to another brother, who daringly tried to drive up it. After a long time, with his car chugging along, stopping, starting, bumping over rocks and ruts, he finally succeeded — and burned out his engine in the process! But he proudly declared that his was the first car to make it.

My oldest brother had to ride horseback down the mountain to buy groceries at Gentle's store in the valley. One day, balancing the groceries in the knapsack behind the saddle, he selected one paper bag to hold carefully in hand all the way up the mountain... he didn't want to break the eggs. When he reached home, he opened the paper bag: "I'll be dammed! Potatoes." Surprisingly not an egg was broken in the knapsack.

In the chilly fall air the sun-dry trees turned red, gold and rust. There was the rustling of leaves, some sailing in a breeze and falling as mosaic on the ground, ere turning brown and crunchy. Sometimes in the winter, the mountain was tranquil and majestic, wrapped in snow. Icicles like crystal fingers pointed to God's rich earth — white crystals glistening in the sun. Awe inspiring! — Martha D. Fletcher, freelance, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Legacy Of Defeat In Vietnam Is In Memories

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

His eyes were sad, those of a broken man.

"It's finished," the lieutenant colonel of the Saigon police said.

Wearily Saigon soldiers marched past him to stack their weapons in surrender. Hundreds tore off their uniforms and boots and discarded them in the streets.

The colonel walked 10 feet away from me to the front of a war memorial statue, fingering his pistol.

For a moment, I thought he was going to shoot me in the back because the Americans had given up on Vietnam. Angry Vietnamese guards were firing into the air and in the direction of American evacuees on buses, shouting, "We want to go, too."

Instead, he did an about face, saluted the statue, raised his pistol and fired a shot into his head. He fell spreadeagled on his back, mortally wounded.

Three years ago today, the war was finished. The guns fell silent across Vietnam.

But the memories still haunt many of us.

Many Vietnamese came to the Associated Press bureau to beg us to intercede with U.S. officials for their evacuation or to take them with us when we left. One Vietnamese woman slept at my doorstep, fearing I might leave the country without her.

Most of our Vietnamese staff, apprehensive because of the impending takeover since they worked for an American agency, left to be with their families despite our efforts to calm them.

When the lone remaining teletype operator read the bulletin that I had handed him to transmit, reporting that North Vietnamese troops were in front of the Caravelle Hotel, he started to run from the room.

Colleague Peter Arnett and I held him down until he cleared the bulletin. When we let him go, he disappeared out the door and didn't return for three days until it was clear there was no bloodbath.

The day before the surrender, large groups of Vietnamese clawed their way up the 10-foot wall of the U.S. Embassy in desperate attempts to get aboard American evacuation helicopters. U.S. Marines and civilians used pistol and rifle butts to push them back.

I had wondered for years how the war would end, and I had often joked with my colleagues that I would be the last correspondent in Saigon, and on the telephone when the North Vietnamese came.

That's exactly how it happened. Two North Vietnamese soldiers walked into our office. I was on the telephone, vainly trying to get a circuit to anywhere.

Vietnam was a war that most Americans wanted to forget as quickly as possible, but not all of them succeeded.

There were the refugees, streaming into the United States, trying to make a life for themselves, sometimes in small towns across the land, visible reminders.

And there are other reminders.

Time has not healed the wounds of Earl and Maegene Pittman in Beallsville, Ohio. They lost their only son, Jack, 30, in the war. He was one of seven young men from the southern Ohio hamlet, all graduates of the same high school, who died in Vietnam. It was a high price for a town of little more than 400 people to pay.

Mrs. Pittman, 55, is still bitter.

"That's one thing you never forget about," she says. "He's on our minds all the time. Vietnam wasn't worth anybody's life. The way I feel about it, my boy gave his life for nothing. I'll never forget that war."

Maggie Burnett is 48, her hair turned gray. She lives in Pelham, N.H. While the war for most others ended three years ago, she's still seeking peace of mind.

On her right wrist, she wears the silver missing-in-action bracelet of her husband, Col. Sheldon Burnett.

She has no real hope that he's still alive, but, "what if? Stranger things have been known to happen."

"He certainly believed in what he was doing," she says softly. "but it just cost too much. I don't think it was worth the price."

prisoner of war for nearly six years who returned to civilian life near Springfield, Ohio. He says perhaps the war should be forgotten.

"I don't know that it's touched anyone good. Either it left them with memories of a friend or a neighbor or a son. I just can't see benefits, real or imagined, out of the whole affair."

"Personally, it's just a great big void for me now... I just look at the years I personally spent there as a void."

"Except for the girl."

Mahli (pronounced Molly), now 3 years old, arrived in the United States in April 1975 aboard the American "babylift" of Vietnamese orphans just before the fall of Saigon. Mechenbier and his wife, Jerri, adopted her.

"I can look at her," says Mechenbier, "and say: 'Well, something good did come out of the whole experience anyhow.'"

Weeping In Willow Valley

By RICHARD H. GROWALD
UPI National Reporter
WILLOW ISLAND, W. Va.

(UPI) — The noise hit first.

Mrs. Katie Robinson had promised herself sunshine after two days of rain and cold by the Ohio River and at 10 A.M. Thursday she stepped from her trailer home to say hello to the sun. On the step she heard "rolling thunder" from the power plant 100 yards away. She looked and started to cry.

A 59-year-old welder, working on a roof near the plant — at a river point noted only in West Virginia lore as a passage along which George Washington twice boated, heard a roar under his hood and wondered why a freight train was making so much noise so far from the tracks. He flipped up his hood and his eyes widened.

In the plant, where contractors employed 2,700 men on a $667-million project to help power West Virginia, Ohio and Pennsylvania, laborer John Pepler heard chunks of concrete slapping the ground around him under a cooling tower under construction. For a few seconds, high-pitched human screams mixed with the thudding.

Fifty-one men working 168 feet above Pepler, in sight of Mrs. Robinson and under the welder's gaze were tumbling to death. The scaffolding holding them up as they poured a 29th level of concrete around the top of the cooling tower, set to be 430 feet high, had broken loose.

"I had just sent a basket of concrete up. I looked over my left shoulder and I could see it falling. I could see people falling through the air. Everything was falling. My world was coming down," Pepler said.

The scaffolding, bolted so it gave netting both inside the tower where the men worked and over the side on the outer lip, had cracked, broken and was peeling away. "It continued to break loose in a circle around the top, more or less like you would peel an apple," Pepler said.

From his perch, the welder stared. His four rooftop companions turned away. The welder said it was too awful for him to shun. "It started slow and then the spiraling, peeling began picking up speed and the noise and the falling and the killing of my buddies ..."

Mrs. Robinson saw some of the 51 men try to scramble to safety before their part of the circular scaffolding began falling. "They tried to find a way off ... they went one way and then back and I thought they were going to jump. But they fell and they screamed."

"It all came down and the safety net wrapped around them and I could see them bundled up, falling, yelling, falling ... falling ..."

The men and their machines and the concrete ended in heaps inside the mouth of the tower. John Hennessey, down from the hills with other mountain men for the pay checks — Willow Creek had enjoyed West Virginia's second lowest jobless rate — was one of the first to yank away concrete and steel in search of his comrades from Cow Creek. He found no life.

"They were all jelly," he said. He cried for the first time since he left Viet Nam.

Willow Island wept. Gone were the willow trees of George Washington's century. The word of death and the afterwords of mourning spread up from the river through the hickory and birch and pine trees to Cow Creek, to the hamlet of Schultz, to the homes of the men who came down to work and would never again hunt the rabbits, deer and squirrel over the green hills.

Va. May Use N.C. Water

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The Army Corps of Engineers apparently will recommend that heavily populated southeastern Virginia tap Lake Gaston on the Virginia-North Carolina border for future water supplies.

The announcement by Col. Newman Howard, the Corps' Norfolk district engineer, came Friday, one day after the governors of Virginia and North Carolina agreed to work toward resolving water supply squabbles.

N.C. Therapists Association Held Meet Here

RECEIVED NOVA AWARD... Randy Strickland was the recipient Friday night of the NOVA Award given to a young therapist with less than five years service. Beverly Gaines, chairman of the Awards Committee, presented the award to Strickland. (Reflector Photo By Tommy Forrest)

Workshop sessions, speeches on new developments, and an awards banquet were all part of the two day semi-annual meeting of members of the North Carolina Occupational Therapy Association held Friday and Saturday in Greenville at the Holiday Inn.

The association's major awards, given during the banquet session Friday night, went to a young therapist, Randy Strickland, and to a retired therapist, Jutta Fowlkes.

Strickland is the recipient of the NOVA Award, given to a young therapist with less than five years service who has demonstrated outstanding achievement in his field. He is Director of the Occupational Therapy Department at Dorothea Dix in Raleigh.

Jutta Fowlkes, also of Raleigh and now retired, received the Suzanne Schullin Award, given to honor the person considered the outstanding therapist in the state. Ms. Fowlkes could not be at the meeting.

In addition, a special recognition was extended to Janice McGrow, now at the Baptist Hospital in Winston-Salem. The special honor is for her devoted efforts in occupational therapy at Western Carolina in Morganton.

Three major sessions were led

UNC-Chapel Hill; Cindy Beal, occupational therapist at John Umstead Hospital, Camp Butner; and Lynn Andrews, also a faculty member at UNC-Chapel Hill and a consultant for occupational therapy and physical therapy with the State Department of Public Instruction.

Gail Fidler, keynote speaker during the two day meeting, spoke on "Mental Health Care System and Its Effects on Occupational Therapy." Mrs. Fidler is currently a practicing consultant in programming mental health education programs.

The two day semi-annual meeting was sponsored jointly by N.C. Occupational Therapy Association and Eastern Area Health Education Center (AHEC), with Frank Bradham and Dora Pasour of that agency assisting Marla Harris of the Rehabilitation Center, Pitt Memorial Hospital, in coordinating arrangements.

Two Shot In Wilson

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — Police said a man entered a house trailer at Wilson Saturday afternoon with a pistol in each hand and started firing, killing a man and a woman.

The victims were identified as Helen Ellis, in her early 30s, of Wilson, and Curtis Richardson, about the same age, of the Bailey area.

Officers later issued a warrant, charging Jimmy Anderson, 49, with two counts of murder in the double slaying. He was the object of an intense search. Detective Phil Houchins said Ms. Ellis was struck four times, and Richardson several times.

He quoted witnesses as saying that the gunman fled after the shooting.

A witness who entered the trailer after the shooting said there were two bullet holes through a pot on the stove, two in a kitchen cabinet, two in a window and one in the side of the trailer. Officers said one of the weapons was thought to be a 25 caliber automatic.

Housing Meet Set Monday

The regular meeting of the Greenville Housing Authority will be held Monday, May 1 at 7:30 p.m. at the Authority's 316 E. Roundtree Drive central offices.

Commissioners will consider routine reports concerning finance, occupancy, and status reports on various projects in development.

The direct distance between the source of the Seine and its mouth in the English Channel is 250 miles, but the river actually extends over 485 miles in length.

Martial Law Imposed In Afghanistan

By JOHN NEEDHAM

NEW DELHI, India (UPI) — Afghanistan's new military rulers Saturday annulled the nation's constitution and imposed martial law two days after a coup in which President Mohammed Daoud and his brother were killed, according to diplomatic and radio reports.

Radio Pakistan monitored in New Delhi said "for the first time the Kabul Radio mentioned martial law" and quoted the station in the Afghanistan capital as saying "all public rallies throughout Afghanistan have been banned under the martial law."

Diplomatic reports from Kabul said most sections of the city were "remarkably normal" but troops and armored vehicles continued to guard strategic intersections and buildings.

Army and air force officers seized power Thursday in a coup in which President Daoud and his brother, Mohammed Naim, were shot to death when they refused to surrender, according to the rebel-controlled Kabul Radio.

Kabul radio said the military was "in full control of the situation" with the support of the armed forces and added that "the holding of every kind of assembly" was banned under a military decree issued by the "revolutionary military council" headed by Gen. Abdul Khadir.

The radio also said the affairs of the country would be executed through decrees and directives of the council and that Daoud's "self-created" constitution had been annulled.

A special communique broadcast on behalf of the council said it "will follow a foreign policy based on active and positive neutrality and support the cause of peace in the region and friendship with all the countries of the world based on peaceful coexistence and respect of the United Nations charter."

Diplomatic sources in Tehran said one of Daoud's brothers, Mohammed Azim, supported by some units of the Afghanistan army, was holding out against rebel forces in the area around Jalalabad, 42 miles west of the Khayber Pass.

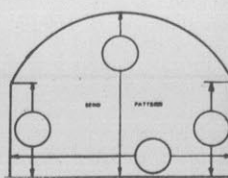

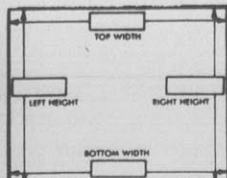

Khadir, 37, clearly had the support of his fellow air force officers, who strafed and rocketed Kabul with their Soviet-made MiG21 fighters during Thursday's fighting. Khadir had been a key supporter of Daoud in the July 1973 coup in which Daoud ousted his cousin, King Zair Shah.

News Briefs

AF Cargo Plane Crashed

SPARREVOHN AIR STATION, Alaska (AP) — An Air Force HC130 cargo plane with seven persons aboard crashed and exploded near here during a cargo mission.

The names of those on board were not released and other details were sketchy.

Blowing snow and rugged terrain around the remote radar station, 150 miles west of Anchorage hampered the search for survivors. The plane crashed less than a mile from the runway.

The landing strip is on the side of a mountain in the Alaska Range and military pilots say it is one of the most difficult in Alaska.

Pardons Korea Pilot

MOSCOW (AP) — The pilot and navigator of a downed South Korean passenger airliner have pleaded guilty to violating Soviet airspace and disobeying the orders of Soviet aircraft, but have been pardoned and are being released, the Soviet news agency Tass said today.

The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet pardoned pilot Kim Chang-kyu and navigator Lee Kun-shik "considering their admission of guilt and their repentance, and also guided by principles of humanism," Tass said.

Sources here confirmed a Korean Foreign Ministry report that the two men were expected to be flown from the Soviet Union today, probably to Copenhagen. There was no immediate comment from the pair.

Asks For Reversal

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — The government asked a federal court Friday to reverse an earlier decision that dismissed fraud charges against fugitive American financier Robert Vesco, which freed him to leave the country.

On Wednesday a judge threw-out a suit against Vesco and six aides charging he sold $135,000 in worthless stock to a Hungarian-born Costa Rican citizen.

Following the dismissal Wednesday, Judge Juan Jose Quiros gave Vesco permission to leave the country for 2½ months. The next day the Ministry of Government confirmed the permit.

Mondale On Trip

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — Vice President Walter Mondale set off on a five nation, 12-day Asian and Pacific tour Saturday after telling a University of Michigan commencement crowd the administration is worried about the nation's inflation rate.

Mondale and his wife, Joan, flew to Hawaii, where they were to spend the weekend before undertaking a tour intended to reassure American allies the United States will remain an active power and honor its security commitments.

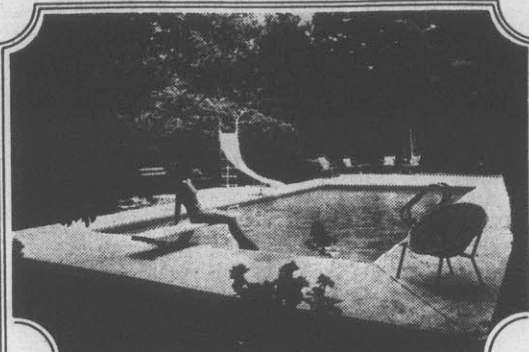

Mondale was scheduled to confer with leaders in the Philippines, Thailand, Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand and rest briefly again in Hawaii before returning to Washington about May 12. He is to deliver a speech on U.S. policy in Asia and the Pacific on May 10 in Honolulu.

Explosion Kills Six

JANESVILLE, Wis. (UPI) — An explosion in a downtown apartment building touched off an intense, fast-spreading blaze that cornered and killed six people — including three small children — as they tried to reach a third-floor exit late Friday night.

A seventh person was seriously injured. Janesville Fire Chief Arthur Sarnow said fumes from a naphtha-like substance being used to prepare walls for painting in a second-floor apartment of the three-story building apparently were ignited by a spark of unknown origin.

Munir Hanna, the building's co-owner, had been working on the walls when the explosion occurred. He was hospitalized in serious condition.

Ramblers To Be In Williamston

The Red Clay Ramblers, part of the original cast of "Diamond Studs," will appear in concert at 8 p.m. on Saturday, May 6 in the Martin County Auditorium, located at Williamston High School. Tickets, priced at $2, will be available at the door.

In Greenville, tickets can be purchased at Apple Records, School Kids Records, and Unity Star Natural Foods.

Music performed by the Red Clay Ramblers is based on old dance and hillbilly music of the 1920s and 1930s. The group's repertoire includes ballads, blues, bluegrass, ragtime, early jazz, and swing music.

Formed in 1972, the group consists of Bill Hicks, fiddle; Jim Watson, guitar and mandolin; Mike Carver, piano; Tommy Thompson, banjo; and Jack Herick, string bass and trumpet. The group has recently completed a tour in Europe, and performs regularly on campuses, at festivals, and in coffee houses. Proceeds from the Williamston concert will go to the Martin County Arts Council.

County School Lunch Menu

Tuesday — Turkey sandwich, french fries, green beans, cinnamon bun, milk.

Wednesday — Fried chicken, rice with gravy, peas and carrots, rolls, applesauce, milk.

Thursday — Lasagna, tossed salad, buttered corn, french bread, Jello with topping, milk.

Friday — Fish sandwich, french fries, cole slaw, lemon pudding with topping, milk.

The Great American Circus Coming May 9th

The "Great American Circus," which the National Geographic Magazine has called "the number one small circus in America today," will be in Greenville for two performances on Tuesday, May 9.

The circus will be here under the auspices of REAL Crisis Intervention Center, with proceeds going to the work of that agency, particularly in efforts to raise matching funds for a state grant.

At 6 p.m. and again at 8 p.m. on May 9, acrobats and elephants, clowns and performing dogs, goats and trapeze artists will all be under the big tent.

For these performances, the circus will be located on the property across the road from the Old Pitt County Fairground. Parking will be in the old fairground property, with supervisory personnel on hand to guide cars to a parking place.

Some of the big name acts in the circus are the Tonito Family of trampoline artists from Spain; the Vincent Trio of South America in Trapeze acts; the Great Sampo, a master of the juggling arts; Mimi Paska, French queen of the high trapeze; Miss Dolly and her educated high school horses; and Miss Marie and her canine revue.

Another attraction is the troupe of circus elephants. One of these is Myrtle, the largest performing elephant in the world; and Baby Betty, a youngster of an elephant. There will also be trained goats, and a Gorilla Fantasy.

Advance tickets are priced at $3 for persons 12 and older, and mall, at REAL Center and Boyd's Grocery, both on South Evans Street, at Beef and Shakes on Mumford Road, and at The Pet Shop, Greenville Square.

When you get beyond the qualifications most people like to have a candidate they can identify with. Ed Warren is a true "slice" of Pitt County. Ed's personal background sounds like a living promotion for the County.

As a businessman Ed has a first-hand knowledge and feel for the business Community — large and small. Ed's also engaged in farming (one of Pitt County's leading industries)...

Do you begin to get the picture? Well, to round him out... so-to-speak... there's one final quality that plugs Ed right into the mainstream of Pitt County life. When it comes to the subject that touches nearly all of us — education — well, let's just say that 25 years as an elementary and a high school principal, a Pitt Tech administrator and a University instructor gives Ed Warren the kind of grass roots experience you'd like for your County Commissioner to have.

Vote for Ed Warren on May 2. Re-elect the kind of man most of us can relate to.

For the important years ahead.

Black Mountain Revisited

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The short life of Black Mountain College spawned a retrospective Wednesday and 25 persons turned out in the rain for a guided walking tour of the remains of the site.

During its 23-year existence the experimental college produced a group of artists, poets and writers that collectively became famous for its creativity. The land and buildings became Camp Rockmont for Boys after George Pickering bought the land and buildings in 1955 from the defunct college.

Pickering opened the camp for the tour, which was conducted by Mary Emma Harris, an authority on the college who has been lecturing on it this week in the Asheville area as part of the Black Mountain College Retrospective and Seminar.

The first place examined by Miss Harris was the old dining hall. It was there that the college held dances, concerts and theatrical events, Miss Harris said. It was there that Buckminster Fuller, Elaine deKooning and Merce Cunningham appeared in the college's production of "The Ruse of Medusa."

It was also there, recalled a woman in the group, that residents of Asheville would come to see foreign movies presented by the college, which got them from the Museum of Modern Art in New York.

Black Mountain College always had the image of a place where, because of a constant lack of funds, things broke down and many projects went unfinished.

Miss Harris illustrated this when touring what used to be the Studies Building. It had been designed with four wings, she said. Only one was built. She pointed to what appeared to be rock walls. "Foundations," she said, "for the un-built wings."

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C.—Sunday, April 30, 1978—A-9

The building, like everything else on the place that was built by the college, was literally built by the students and faculty.

The tour moved past places that became part of the literature written about the college by students who had experienced its life. One such place was called "The Quiet House," according to Miss Harris.

Scholarship For Student

ECU News Bureau
Luke Whisnant of Charlotte, a junior English major at East Carolina University, has been awarded the first annual Russell M. Christman Memorial Scholarship by the ECU Department of English.

The $100 award is given on the basis of academic achievement, outstanding potential in the field of English, and leadership in extra-curricular activities. Whisnant, 20 is majoring in the English department's Writing Program and served as editor of this year's "Rebel," the campus literary and art magazine. He has maintained a 3.1 academic grade point average and is pursuing a minor in journalism.

The scholarship was recently established to honor Russell Christman, an instructor in the English department until his death in 1976.

Whisnant is the son of Beth C. Whisnant of 6531 Monroe Rd., Charlotte.

Hospitality House Today

Wine making, Christian fellowship in the Navy, a dulcimer player and a fashion show are the attractions on today's "Hospitality House" with hostess Kay Currie. The program is on channel 7, WITN-TV, airing between noon and 1 p.m.

David G. Fussell of the Duplin Wine Cellars will explain the art of making wine from grapes grown in North Carolina. Another guest is Navy Captain Ray Comton of Virginia Beach, Va., a veteran of 26 years naval service. He will talk about the work of the Virginia Beach Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship, and also speak of the role of Christianity in military service.

Stan Baumgarner of Warren, a dulcimer player, will be heard playing that instrument for two folk songs. Kay's guest on the fashion portion of "Hospitality House" will be Margie White, manager and fashion coordinator of Galleon Esplanade, Nags Head.

Tournament Results

The first annual Easter Seal Skateboard Tournament was held Sunday, April 23. The tournament consisted of two divisions, Senior (14 and up) and Junior (13 and under), and four contests in each division, slalom, freestyle, ramp and jump. Thirty-two skateboarders participated in the tournament. All proceeds from the entry fees and concessions were donated to the Easter Seal Society.

First, second and third place trophies were awarded to winners in each event of the two divisions. First place winners in the Senior Division were Kyle Inman for ramp and jump, Clay Jett for slalom and Terry Sparrow for freestyle. First place winners in the Junior Division were Billy Wagenseller for ramp, Rick Sugg for jump and slalom and Keith Inman for freestyle.

Piano Playing Auditions Set

Five local piano teachers will have students auditioning for the area level competition of the National Piano Playing Auditions on May 4, 5, and 6.

The auditions will be held at A. J. Fletcher Music Center on campus at East Carolina University on those three days.

Approximately 80 students will be auditioning for this year's juror, Stuart Pratt, currently Professor Emeritus of Meredith College.

A native of Oneonta, N. Y., Pratt studied in Berlin from 1925 to 1927. He received the masters degree in music from Syracuse University and has taught at Hartwick and Elon Colleges as well as doing seasonal teaching at the National Music Camp.

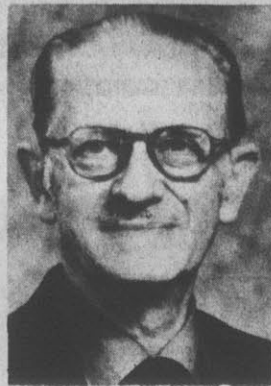

Active in many fields of piano music, he has given recitals in piano and with chamber music groups in the eastern part of the U.S., lectured at recitals and clinics, and has frequently juror pianists in a number of seaboard states.

Marie Lalik, Mr. G. Gray, Mrs. Lyman Cox, and Mrs. Karen Hause. Mrs. Hause is district chairman of the National Piano Playing Auditions.

ECU Student Show On View At Gray Gallery

JEANNE BRADY... has this color lithograph entitled "The Lone Rangers, Slay and Jelly Bean" at the annual Student Show in Gray Gallery.

BILL TULP AND MICHAEL LODERSTEDT... are represented by Tulp's self-portrait (left) and Loderstedt's fine detailed work, "Genesis II."

The Gray Gallery in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on the East Carolina University campus is the scene of a current colorful, highly diversified show — the annual School of Art Student Show.

As expected in a show of this size and scope, there's something of every imaginable media and style represented.

Some of the works reveal real promise, and there is much to admire at this stage of development among the student artists.

Anyone with a few minutes to browse among this large show will come away with a good feeling about the fine talent that is being trained at the School of Art.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By JOE R. STINES

The children's library at Sheppard Memorial has recently added a number of new and exciting books for the young reader in grades five through seven. Natalie Babbitt's THE EYES OF THE AMARYLLIS (Farrar, 1977) is a fantasy set in the late 19th century. The sea sets the mood and it is one of fog and storm and not sparkling waves.

When, in 1850, the brig AMARYLLIS was swallowed in a hurricane, the captain and all the crew were swallowed, too. For three decades thereafter, Geneva Reade, the captain's red-haired widow, waited, and grew old waiting, certain that her husband would send her a message from the bottom of the sea. When her grandchild Jenny comes to visit, she too is drawn into Gran's obsessive searching for the sign. Jenny is asked to prowl the beach at high tide whatever the hour. Someone else was waiting, too, and watching Geneva, a sad, lost man she called by the single name Seward, though she had known him by another name in happier days, before the AMARYLLIS was lost. The three of them, Gran, Jenny, and the man Seward, are drawn into a kind of deadly game with each other and with the sea, a game that only the sea knows how to win.

Babbitt does a superb job of establishing mood and sustaining tension. This new novel, THE EYES OF THE AMARYLLIS, will be called a fantasy only by those who have never seen high tide through a foggy summer rain. The rest will know that, for the sea, nothing is impossible.

Eleanor Cameron has a new book entitled JULIA AND THE HAND OF GOD (Dutton, 1977). Readers who have already met an older Julia in A ROOM MADE OF WINDOWS (1971) will enjoy knowing her better; others will find this a perfect introduction to a most engaging heroine.

This story begins with Julia's 11th birthday and focuses on Julia's, and her mother's, dissatisfaction with their accommodations and concludes with their delight in finding a new home and its room "made of windows." In the midst of the elegant lunch Julia's Uncle Hugh never failed to provide for her birthday, she had to hear once again the story of how he survived what her grandmother had called "the Hand of God laying low the wicked city." Needless to say Uncle Hugh lived in San Francisco. That was the lunch at which Hugh presented her with the richly bound volume of blank pages for her to fill — her BOOK OF STRANGENESSES. And this is the story of some of the things that would go into that book: sad, funny, eventful happenings with old friends and new that weave a memorable pattern.

Cameron is adroit at weaving plot and subplots together, and Julia's story emerges as a perceptive family story as well as an excellent piece of period fiction. Characterization and relationships are drawn with depth and consistency.

Eastern Orchestra Festival Slated

For the fifth year, East Carolina University is hosting the Eastern Orchestra Festival to be held on Wednesday, May 3 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Sponsored by the School of Music of which Dr. Everett Pittman is dean, the festival will be directed by Dr. Rodney Schmidt, a faculty member of the strings department.

In the festival, groups will perform for each other and a group of music school faculty will offer constructive comments on performances.

The ECU Eastern Orchestra Festival offers the only showcase of elementary and secondary orchestras in eastern North Carolina. Three major programs are active in this area, those in Morehead City-Carteret County; Wilmington-New Hanover County, and Greenville.

Groups to perform and directors are: ECU Youth Orchestra, Rodney Schmidt; East Carteret High School, Beaufort, Wesley Thomas; Lake Forest Junior High School, Wilmington, Linda Figart; John T. Hoggard High School, Wilmington, also Ms.

Figart; West Carteret High School, Morehead City, Barry Langston; Emma B. Trask Junior High School, Wilmington, Holladay Potter; All-County Junior High Orchestra, Carteret County, Nancy Kostek; Ensley A. Laney Senior High School, Wilmington, Holladay Potter; Roland-Grise Junior High School, Jane E. McKinney; and the New Hanover High School Orchestra, Wilmington, Nancy M. Allister.

School of Music faculty who will be adjudicating the festival are: Herbert Carter, Joseph Distefano, Rosalie Hariton, Robert Hause, George Knight, Daniel Mellado, Charles Moore, Everett Pittman, and Paul Topper.

The festival will be held in the A. J. Fletcher Music Center Recital Hall. There is no admission charged and the public is invited to attend. Composers to be represented in the performances include Philip Gordon, Bach, William Boyce, Purcell, Percy Fletcher, Grieg, Robert Washburn, Jarre-Holesovsky, James Brown, Handel, Robert H. Rimer.

New St. John's Show

WILMINGTON — An exhibition of "Large Canvases and Other Things" by artist Ron Taylor will go on view Thursday, May 4 in T. St. John's Art Gallery, 114 Orange Street in Wilmington.

A reception is being held for the artist from 8 to 10 p.m., and the show will be open to the general public May 5 through June 3.

The artist is now living in Lansing (N.C.) and holds the M.F.A. degree from the University of Georgia. He was formerly Assistant Professor of Design at the School of Design, NCSU.

Many of the paintings are recent large panel screens, reflecting interaction between mountains and the sky. Other paintings to be shown include "Saving the Baby from the Kidnappers," a formal portrait of a "Gunfighter," and the "Bathers."

Charity Golf Tournament May 5

The pleasure of playing golf competitively under May skies can be combined with an opportunity to help benefit community charity projects for golfers who sign up for the Fourth Annual Progressive City Kiwanis Club Annual Charity Golf Tournament to be held May 5 at the Brook Valley Golf Club.

Tee-off time begins at 9 a.m. Wednesday, May 5 and goes on until 1 p.m. Players can sign up by donating $25 for the event. The field of players will be limited to 120.

Skip Bright and Jim Terrell are this year's coordinators of the charity golf competition.

Bright, speaking about the event, said "it is being held both for the pleasure of golfers and as a means of raising funds for our projects in helping underprivileged children."

For the past four years, Bright commented, "we have contributed from charity golf funds to the Department of Social Services for their foster parent program at Christmas, to the community ambassador program, and to the purchase of career video tapes and equipment for Rose High School."

He explained that recipients for benefit funds were decided on not by one or two of the club's board members, but by an open vote by all members following discussion of possible projects to contribute to.

"We are proud of what we have been able to do in community projects," Bright said. "Ours is a young group, a small club of only 26 members, but we stay active. As one example, we carry out two fund raising projects to help the Salvation Army in their Christmas program."

Trophies will be awarded golfers on the basis of net scores. These will be for first, second and third places, with determination of top players will be based on the Calloway system.

All golfers, regardless of age and sex, will be competing on an equal basis for the top trophies and prizes. There will also be a special trophy for the woman player with the low net score; and for the first time this year, a trophy for a quartet of players for an inter-Kiwanis team. "This is to be a rotating trophy, which the winning team can keep for a year," Bright added.

A number of local business firms, merchants, and agencies have contributed prizes to be awarded winners.

For reservations or for further information, interested persons are to call Bright at 756-6186, Larry Whitlow at 758-2300 or any member of the Progressive City Kiwanis Club.

In the event of rain on May 5, a rain date of May 12 has been scheduled.

Reception

A new student show, that of elementary students of the Greenville City Schools, will open today with a reception at the Greenville Art Center from 3 to 5 p.m.

Refreshments will be served and the public is invited to view this show, one of a continuing spring series featuring the art of school children in Greenville and Pitt County.

Pirate Mickey Britt Hurls No-Hitter

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Mickey Britt, sophomore righthander for the East Carolina Pirates, put his name into the record books last night with an 8-0 win over Atlantic Christian.

Not only was it his tenth win of the year, breaking his own record of nine wins last year, but he turned in a neat no-hitter in the bargain. It was quite a way to end his home season.

"I figured after the seventh inning that I could do it," Britt said. "They never really hit the ball that good. I wasn't nervous about it."

Britt never was in danger of losing the no-hit bid. Only six balls were hit out of the infield, and all six were nearly straight shots to the outfielders. A couple of good infield plays, one by Jerry Carraway at short, and the other by Britt on a high-hopper, saved the closest things Atlantic Christian got to hits, and they weren't that close.

"My slider was working real well," Britt said. "It was the best pitch I had tonight. I probably threw it 50 per cent of the time. I guess this was the most exciting game I've been in. The guys played great defense behind me."

In getting the gem, Britt walked three, hit one and struck out nine.

His no-hitter sent old timers on a memory chase for the last no-hitter at Harrington by an ECU player. It is believed that the last one was by Dennis Burke against VMI in a seven-inning game back in the late sixties.

While Britt was taming the Bulldogs the Pirates were busy with their own bats, rapping out nine hits, including four for extra bases. Macon Moye and Billy Best both had doubles, while Carraway and Pete Paradossi both rapped homers.

For an instant, it looked as if Moye might have a homer, but his double shot banged off the top of the fence. Had it gone over, it would have been the 50th home run of the year for the hard-hitting Bucs.

"We put the whole thing together tonight," Coach Monte Little said. "Both offensively and defensively. 'Mickey did a whale of a job on the mound. The guys knew he was close to the no-hitter in the seventh and played with a lot of aggressiveness to try and get it for him.'"

Britt felt the seventh was his shakeiest inning. He walked the leadoff batter, got the second on a high chopper back to the mound, then hit the third. Another infield out, which Carraway fielded on the run to throw out the batter at first by a step, put runners at second and third. But Britt fanned the next man to get out of the jam.

No other runners got past first base.

The Pirates, after leaving a runner stranded at third in the first, came up with four runs in the second.

Bobby Supel opened the second with a single into right, and Moye walked. Robert Brinkley beat out a bunt, loading the bases. The first run scored on a sacrifice fly by Carraway, scoring Supel.

Scott Layden then singled in Moye. Eddie Gates hit a pop behind first, and after the catch, Brinkley raced home, so startling the fielder that his throw to home was way off-target, allowing Brinkley to score easily.

Best then doubled in courtsey runner Tim Hardison for a 4-0 lead.

The Pirates threatened again in the third, leaving a man standing at second.

The fourth, however, saw the other four runs come across. Carraway opened the inning with a shot out of the park in left, his fourth homer of the year.

Gates was then hit by a pitch and Best beat out a bunt. Paradossi cracked it out in center, his sixth roundtripper of the year, driving in three runs.

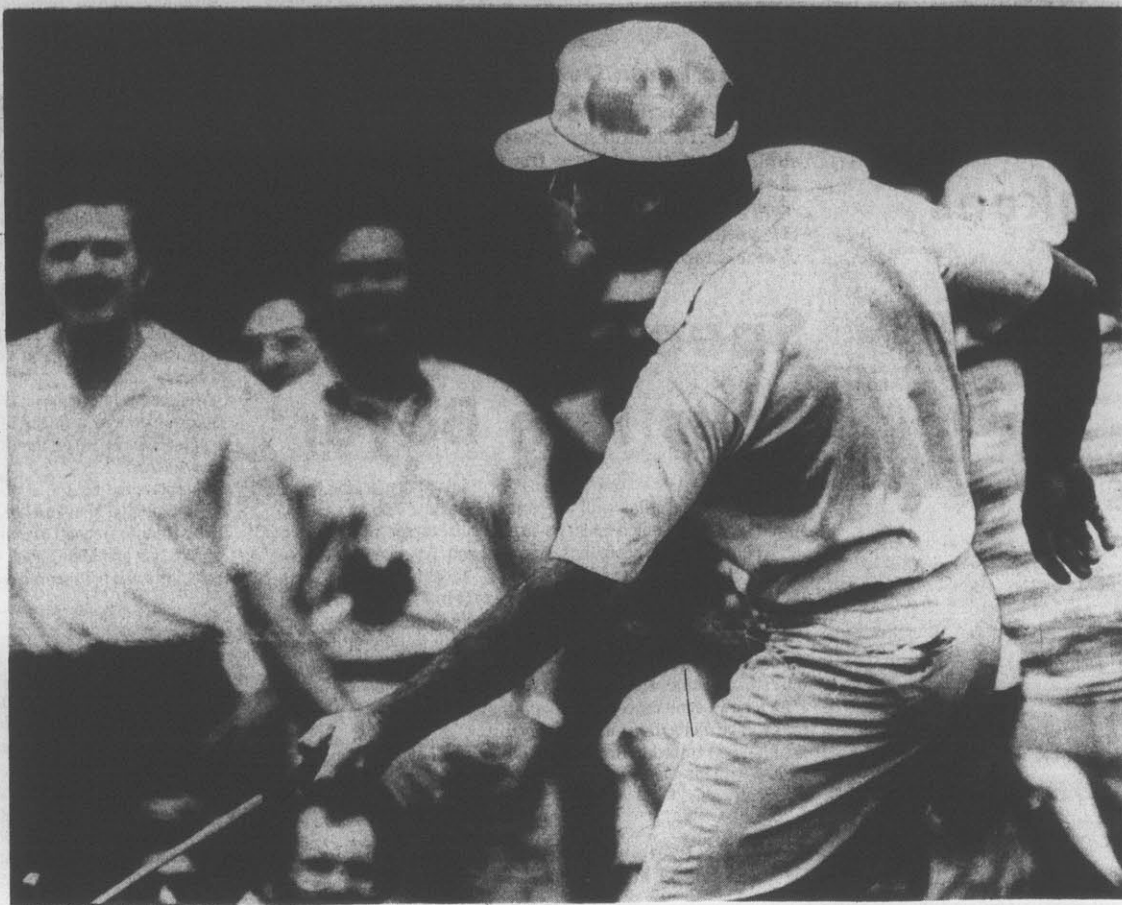

The Pirates put men in scoring position again in the fifth (at third), the sixth (leaving the bases loaded) and the eighth (on Moye's double), but failed to score again.

The victory moved the Pirate record to 27-16 on the season. Atlantic Christian fell to 12-15.

East Carolina has two games remaining, next Saturday and Sunday at Blacksburg, Va., against Virginia Tech.

Snead, Dickinson Lead

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Sam Snead shook his putting jitters with six birdies and partner Gardner Dickinson added two more for an 8-under-par 62 Saturday that gave them a twoshot lead at the 36-hole mark of the $400,000 Legends of Golf Tournament.

Snead and Dickinson posted a 36-hole total of 127 which was 13 under par over the 6,584-yard, par-70 Onion Creek Golf Club course.

The final 18 holes in the 54-hole tournament for a $100,000 first prize was scheduled Sunday.

The best round of the damp day was a 9-under-par 61 by Argentina's Roberto de Vicenzo and Julius Boros, who made seven of the team's nine birdies in the best-ball tournament. Boros and de Vicenzo were 11 under at 129.

Australia's Kel Nagle and Peter Thomson, who shot an opening round 64 for a one-shot lead over Snead and Dickinson, struggled to a 4-under-par 66 and were 10-under at 130.

Snead holed birdie putts of 15, 25, 10, 10, 12, and 10 feet for his birdies as the duo shot 3032.

"If Sam keeps that putting stroke, he'll be tough," said Dickinson. "And he hit the finest irons over 36 holes you ever saw."

Snead said: "I putted as well as I have in a tournament this year. I figure we'll have to shoot a 62 or even a 60 tomorrow to win."

The winners split the $100,000 first place

Boros and de Vicenzo birdied the first four holes on the back nine.

"This is a funny game," said Boros. "I played Houston last week and made one birdie on the first two rounds."

NBA Playoffs: 76ers Return, Tackle Bullets

By The Associated Press

After waiting around for a week, Philadelphia swings back into action in the National Basketball Association playoffs Sunday, facing Washington in the opening game of their semifinal pairing.

Don't blame the 76ers for their long layoff. It's just that they swept the New York Knicks in four straight games while the Bullets needed six to survive the San Antonio Spurs.

Washington finally finished off San Antonio Friday night, beating the Spurs 103-100 as reserve guards Charles Johnson and Larry Wright combined for 30 points.

Meanwhile, Milwaukee stayed alive against Denver, defeating the Nuggets 117-112 with a fourth-quarter rally fueled by Marques Johnson and Brian Winters. The Bucks, now trailing 3-2 in the best-of-seven quarter-final series, host Game Six Sunday.

Seattle, one game away from eliminating injury-hobbled Portland, is at home for the fifth game of the quarter-finals against the Trail Blazers Sunday. The SuperSonics hold a 3-1 edge.

San Antonio blamed an 8-minute power failure that interrupted the game for turning the contest in Washington around. The problem occurred just after the Spurs had taken the lead at the start of the third quarter on a 10-3 spurt.

"We had just got it going and then the lights went out," complained high scorer George Gervin. "That upset our tempo."

San Antonio's Mark Olberding thought Johnson, who came off the bench to score 14 of his 20 points in the second quarter, had more to do with the Spurs' loss. "The difference was C.J. coming in and shooting the lights out," said Olberding.

Elvin Hayes, who led the Bullets with 25 points, also credited Johnson's production.

"They didn't have anybody to control him," said Hayes. "They weren't prepared for that. Charlie beat us for the championship in 1975...I couldn't understand why Golden State let him go."

Coach Dick Motta thinks the Bullets will have to alter their game against Philadelphia. "We know full well we have a big task ahead of us," he said. "We have to play a different type of ballgame against Philadelphia. They have a deeper bench and are more physical."

If experience is an edge, Washington, in the playoffs for the 10th straight year, has that factor on its side. "They've been in the playoffs forever," noted 76er Coach Billy Cunningham.

Milwaukee, having avoided elimination in Denver, now goes home to try and deadlock the series against the Nuggets. The Bucks won the fifth game the hard way, trailing by as many as 10 points in the fourth quarter before Johnson and Winters pulled them together. Johnson led Milwaukee with 34 points and Winters, a factor for the first time in the series, had 23.

"I thought their team showed a lot of poise in coming back," said Larry Brown, coach of the Nuggets. "You let a team off the hook if your take bad shots and we certainly did. Now we've just got to circle the wagons."

The winner of the Denver-Milwaukee series advances to the other semifinal against the Portland-Seattle winner.

Pete Rose Paces Cincinnati In Slugfest

NEW YORK (AP) — "I won't allow him to do it here," said Cincinnati Reds manager Sparky Anderson. "If he gets three hits tomorrow, I'll yank him."

Anderson was talking about Pete Rose, who collected three home runs and two singles in six times at bat Saturday against the New York Mets to move within four of the career 3000-hit total, an accomplishment reached by only 12 major leaguers.

The Reds rapped out 20 hits and six homers in handing the Mets their sixth straight loss, 14-7.

"Pete is one of the greatest players of all time," said Anderson, who maintained that he would pull Rose Sunday even if his team was losing. "He was born and bred in Cincinnati and I want him to do it before the hometown fans."

"We begin an eight-game homestand Monday night and it would be great if he could do it on national television then. This takes precedence over anything."

Rose, 37, enjoying his first three-homer day in his 16 years in the majors, said, "I'd hate to come out if we're down by four or five runs, but Sparky's the boss. I'm not going to argue with him."

Of the approaching milestone, Rose said, "Look, I know I'm going to do it. But I'm not just going to get four hits and retire. I'm going to get 170 more hits this year and I'm coming back next year and who knows how many years."

Trailing 6-1 in the nationally televised game, Cesar Geronimo, Rose, and Ken Griffey each hit solo homers off Mets starter Nino Espinosa in the fourth inning. Dan Driessen had delivered the Reds' first run with a homer in the second.

The Reds rallied for five runs in the fifth off loser Mardie Corejo, 3-2, to take the lead for good. Geronimo's two-run double tied it at 6-6 and Don Werner's single drove in Geronimo with the go-ahead run.

Rose, who extended his hitting streak to 10 games and is attempting to become the 13th major leaguer to reach 3,000 hits, then homered to give the Reds a 9-6 lead. Rose's home runs were his first of the season.

Pedro Borbon, 2-0, one of four Cincinnati pitchers, got the victory.

The Reds made it 10-6 in the sixth on Borbon's RBI single after Dave Concepcion had walked and stolen second base. The Mets cut it to 10-7 in the last of the sixth when Elliott Maddox' groundout drove home pinch-hitter Bruce Boiesclair, who had doubled and gone to third on a groundout.

Cincinnati came back with three more runs in the seventh off Butch Metzger, fourth of five Met hurlers, on singles by Rose, Joe Morgan, and Foster and a double by Dan Driessen.

Rose hit his second solo homer in the eighth off Metzger.

Rose, Driessen and Geronimo each drove in three runs.

Doug Bair gained a save by working the final 1-3 innings, allowing two of the Mets' nine hits.

Pete Rose rounds third on third homer

Texas Got What It Was Asking For

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

When the Texas Rangers shelled out $2.8 million to sign free agent Richie Zisk to a 10-year contract, they were expecting a clean-up hitter who would belt home runs, drive in runs and produce in the clutch. And that's exactly what they've gotten.

Zisk, who hit a two-run single in the sixth inning, belted a two-run homer in the 11th Friday night to give the Rangers a 5-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox. It was his seventh home run of the season, tying him for the American League lead, and his third game-winning homer. He has driven in 19 runs in 17 games.

Zisk, whose shot over the left-center field fence cut through a wind that was gusting up to 25 miles, said he wasn't swinging for the fences. Elsewhere in the American League, the New York Yankees beat the Minnesota Twins 3-1, the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Chicago White Sox 6-4, the Kansas City Royals edged the

Milwaukee Brewers 7-6, the Cleveland Indians topped the Oakland A's 6-2, the Toronto Blue Jays trimmed the California Angels 5-4 and the Detroit Tigers beat the Seattle Mariners 5-4. The Red Sox had taken a 4-3 lead in the top of the 11th when Carlton Fisk raced home on a throwing error by Texas second baseman Bump Wills. But Zisk's homer, off Boston reliever Bill Campbell, 1-2, sent Texas to its fourth victory in a row and fifth in the last six games. The win went to Texas reliever Reggie Cleveland, 1-2, who beat the team that sold him to the Rangers last week. Yankees 3, Twins 1 Ed Figueroa fired a five-hit grand slam as Baltimore scored five runs in the eighth inning to beat Chicago. The victory ended the Orioles' four-game losing streak. It was the first grand slam in the majors for Murray, rookie of the year in the American League last season. "It won't be his last," predicted Orioles Manager Earl Weaver. Royals 7, Brewers 6 Kansas City rallied for three runs in the eighth inning to beat the Brewers. John Wathan and Frank White had RBI singles and Pete LaCock drove in the winning run with a sacrifice fly. Royals starter Steve Busby, attempting a comeback after arm surgery in 1976, was rocked for five runs in 12-3 innings. It was his third straight bad outing, and after the game the Royals announced that he was being optioned to their Omaha farm club of the American Association. Indians 6, A's 2 Cleveland rallied for four runs in the eighth inning to beat the A's. Buddy Bell, Willie Horton and Rick Manning had RBI singles in the inning and another run scored while A's second baseman Mike Edwards held onto the ball while arguing with umpire Joe Brinkman. Blue Jays 5, Angels 4 Ron Fairly belted a two-run home run in his first time at bat against his former Toronto teammates and later added a run-scoring single to pace the Angels over the Blue Jays. The game was the first in major league history between two teams in the same league operated by members of the same family. The Blue Jays are run by president Peter Bavasi and the Angels by his father, executive vice president Buzzie Bavasi. It was the younger O'Malley who traded Fairly to his father last December. Tigers 5, Mariners 4 Steve Kemp and Milt May hit two-run doubles to lead Detroit over Seattle. The Tigers' Aurelio Rodriguez extended his hitting to 10 games with two singles and a double.

Pain-Killers Pressured On Some Athletes At Risk Of More Injury

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Some athletes at universities in North Carolina say they are pressured to take pain-killing drugs and risk further injury by continuing to play, the Fayetteville Times reports.

In the last installment of a six-part copyright series on drugs and college sports, the Times said current and former players at Duke, North Carolina, North Carolina State, Wake Forest and East Carolina questioned the judgment of sports-medicine officials on use of such pain killers as Novocain and cortisone.

Many of the players said they were never forced to take a shot and continue playing with injuries, but there was strong pressure from fellow players and coaches to do so.

"I had a sprained ankle my junior year and got shot up with Novocain at halftime against Clemson," said a former N.C. State player who graduated in 1975. "I came out and tried to play in the third quarter and realized I couldn't do it."

"They shot me up again for the next game against Syracuse and I realized it was no use. I just couldn't play. None of us players really had the guts to go to (then N.C. State) Coach (Lou) Holtz and say they were too hurt to play. There was subtle and indirect pressure to play with pain."

But it isn't just the coaches who apply the pressure. "The guy on first string won't stop playing because he knows if he does, someone else might take his place," said a sophomore football player at North Carolina. "And if you're a second stringer, you can't afford not to take any opportunity that comes along. So if you can play, you play."

"The doctors ask you if you want it or not," said a Duke wrestler. "The only problem with that is that you get the typical peer pressure. You're supposed to be brave and take it."

"I saw one kid who refused to get a shot and not too many people respected him. I'm ashamed to say it now, but I didn't respect him either."

George Simpson, a former North Carolina player who now writes for Newsweek magazine, said he was given Novocain for a sprained ankle, something UNC team physician Dr. Joseph DeWalt said he never did because it was too dangerous.

"At least they didn't play me until this tackle with a chronic knee problem got hurt," Simpson recalled. "I went in and got the hell kicked out of me because I couldn't move. I couldn't even feel my foot hit the ground. It just wouldn't function properly."

"The end result was I didn't have the proper time to rehabilitate my ankle, so I had to have Novocain injections the next six games after that."

Ten days later, Simpson said he told DeWalt he still hurt, and DeWalt "kept giving me shots progressively higher and higher up my leg to try and kill the pain."

"By the time I played in the game, I couldn't even feel my leg touch the ground. I could have broken my ankle and never even known it," Simpson said, adding that his ankles still hurt him. He graduated in 1972.

"It seemed like players were always coming into the program with serious injuries and never getting completely well," said Horace Whitaker, a 1976 N.C. State graduate and former football player. "Guys would go around with bad knees all the time, and I think the reason is because they were never given time to get well."

Team doctors had differing views on the appropriate use of pain killers, but all said they never forced shots on players and never used drugs when they considered it medically dangerous to do so.

"I would never inject a joint," said Wake Forest team physician Dr. Steve Homer. "When you do, you remove a source of protection: pain."

Homer said hip pointers were about all he treated with pain shots. "I would never offer it to a player with a knee injury or a weight-supporting joint," he said.

DeWalt of UNC said he would use Novocain shots for collarbone-area joints, hip pointers and bone injuries in the foot, but he said he would never even consider Novocain for a sprained ankle like Simpson's.

Team doctors differed sharply on the use of cortisone, which has been found to have disturbing side effects. DeWalt said he never uses it at all. But Homer said he used it "for a lot of injuries such as muscle pulls, inflamed areas, stoned heel or tendonitis." Players aren't allowed to compete for a while afterward, he said.

Dr. James Bowman, team physician at East Carolina, said he believed cortisone was safe but said he rarely used it for athletes.

Martin Has The Answer

By HERSCHEL NISSENSEN
AP Sports Writer

Jerry Martin has an answer for everything. He can't help it if they all sound alike.

The Philadelphia right fielder cut down Gene Richards at the plate in the first inning Friday night when the San Diego speedster tried to score from second on Dave Winfield's single.

What about it, Jerry? — "When I let go, I knew I had a shot at it," Martin said.

Then he cracked a three-run homer off Bob Owchinko in the sixth inning, lifting the Phillies to a 3-2 victory over the Padres.

Did you get all of it, Jerry? "I knew it had a good chance as soon as I hit it."

Martin's heroics highlighted a bizarre evening in the National League in which the Houston Astros protested a 6-3 loss to the Montreal Expos after they were socked with consecutive run-scoring balks and the Chicago Cubs committed three errors on one play but still nipped the Atlanta Braves 4-3 in 10 innings.

Elsewhere, the Los Angeles Dodgers thumped the St. Louis Cardinals 7-1, the Cincinnati Reds downed the New York Mets 5-1 and the San Francisco Giants edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-4.

Martin's game-winning blast was his first home run of the season and came after singles by Dave Johnson and pinch hitter Barry Foote. The Padres had taken a 2-0 lead in the top of the sixth on consecutive home runs by Dave Winfield and George Hendrick. Richards and Ozzie Smith singled to start the game for the Padres. One out later, Winfield singled, but Martin's throw to the plate nailed Richards.

Martin's home run came on a fast ball.

"To me, he (Owchinko) never did get that breaking ball over that he was throwing to the other guys," Martin said. "Maybe that's why he threw me that fast ball."

"It was not real low, not real

East Carolina Splits Pair With Marlins

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's seafaring Pirates went on a little fishing expedition Friday night. They came back with one fine Blue Marlin — and one soggy, delapidated rubber boot.

Virginia Wesleyan's Blue Marlins succumbed to the Pirates, 4-0, in the opener of the doubleheader, but stormed back in the second game to score seven first inning runs and hold on for a 7-5 victory.

The split left the Pirates seasick, and their hopes of a second-straight NCAA post-season bid floundering, and headed for the bottom.

The loss was the 16th in 42 games, and while Coach Monte Little would not admit final defeat for his hopes for the Pirates, things no longer had a bright look.

Little said earlier that he felt 30 wins against the Buc schedule would get them a bid, but not only three games remain, unless one rain-out is rescheduled, and a sweep would be needed of the three, plus the rainout to equal 30.

"They just wanted it more than we did," the Pirate coach said unhappily in the dugout afterwards. "Going three days with all this rain obviously hurt us. We weren't ready to play like we should have been."

Even in the first game, the Pirates didn't show the luster they had for so many games at Harrington Field. They got only seven hits in the game, and were fortunately backed up by a fine two-hit pitching effort by Pete Conaty, who won his seventh game of the year in 11 decisions.

Conaty walked just one and struck out seven in going the distance.

In the second game, however, the Pirates were the ones held in check. Although three Marlin pitchers gave up 12 walks, the Pirates got only three hits and two of them came in the seventh inning when they left the tying run stranded at second base.

Bill Lucas was tagged hard in the first, allowing the first five runs. Rick Ramey came on in relief, and after giving up two more runs, held Virginia Wesleyan in check the rest of the way.

In the opener, only one Marlin got past first base, and Matt Sinnen singled and moved to third on a sacrifice and an infield out.

The Pirates, after threatening in the third, scored twice in the fourth. Pete Paradossi walked to open the inning, and Butch Davis then crashed his fifth homer of the year out of the park for a 2-0 lead.

The Pirates added another in the fifth. Billy Best reached on a fielder's choice with two away, and took third when Paradossi's high pop fell in between the outfielders and infielders for a double. A wild pitch then allowed Best to score.

The other run came in the sixth. Robert Brinkley singled and Jerry Carraway's hopper to third skipped past the fielder. Eddie Gates reached on an error, allowing Brinkley to score.

The Marlins greeted the Pirates in the second game by scoring seven quick runs. Bobby Jacobs walked and Tony Brewer singled. Keith Thornton beat out a bunt single to load the bases.

Then came a play that might have turned the tide. Sinnen hit a bouncer that tipped off Lucas' glove and on to second where Paradossi tagged Thornton as Jacobs scored. Had Lucas been able to grab the ball, a doubleplay seemed likely, and the Pirates might have gotten out with only minimal damage.

But Greg Curtis beat out a bunt single next up, scoring Brewer, and Jeff Walter tripled, scoring both Sinnen and Curtis. Dan Page reached when his third strike got past Scott Layden for a passed ball that also let Walter score. Billy Engels then finished off the scoring with a home run.

The Marlins threatened a couple of more times, but failed to score again.

East Carolina, meanwhile, was tamed at the plate, getting only one hit, a single by Max Raynor, in the first six innings.

Donnie Newbold started for Virginia Wesleyan, but was pulled in the fifth after walking two batters.

In the sixth, the Pirates finally got a run. Brinkley walked and Carraway reached on an error. With two away, Gates and Best both walked, forcing in Brinkley.

The Pirates then rallied for four more in the seventh to nearly pull it out.

Davis reached on an error and Supel knocked his ninth home run of the year, tying Gates new seasonal record. Macon Moye reached on an error and Brinkley singled Carraway walked, loading them up. Gates reached on an error, scoring Moye, and Best hit a sacrifice fly to score Brinkley with the fifth

The season gets underway on Monday, May 8. Umpires receive $6 per game.

Those interested in the job may call Dan Gordon, league supervisor, at 756-2339.

Greene Central Tops Firebirds

SPRING HOPE — Greene Central's Rams scored six runs in the fifth and sixth innings Friday to gain a 7-4 win over Southern Nash in an Eastern Carolina Conference game.

The victory kept the Rams in first place in the league with a 7-1 record. They are 11-6 overall. Greene Central took the lead in the third inning, scoring one run on a solo home run by Mike Chase.

It stayed 1-0 until the fifth, when the Rams added three more. Chase singled and Greg Holmes got a hit. Both advanced on a passed ball, and Jay Carraway singled in Chase. Carraway stole second, and both he and Holmes scored when Al

Murray doubled. The sixth saw the Rams stretch their lead to 7-0 with three more runs. After two were out, Holmes doubled and scored when Carraway doubled. Russell Brann doubled in Carraway, and a single by Murray brought home Brann.

Southern Nash rallied for four runs in the bottom of the seventh, with Overman accounting for three with a home run. Chase, Carraway, Brann, Murray and Colyn Beaman each had two hits to pace the Rams.

Greene Central plays host to North Lenoir on Tuesday.

Jamesville In Win Over Bears

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville remained unbeaten in Beaufort-Hyde-Martin Conference baseball play Friday, gaining a 4-1 victory over Bear Grass.

The win boosted the Bullet record to 6-0 in the league and 12-2 overall.

Dwayne Baker of the Bears and Jamesville's Tommy DiNardo engaged in a pitching duel for most of the way.

Baker allowed only four hits in losing, as he struck out 12 and walked five. DiNardo gave up only two hits, struck out 10 and walked six.

Bear Grass grabbed a brief lead with a run in the first. Clay Gardner walked and Dick Bullock. Baker then singled to drive in Gardner.

Jamesville came back to tie it up with one in the bottom of the first. Toby Holliday walked and Alan Frazier ran for him, moving to second on an error and a pickoff try. Jeff Holliday singled and stole up, and an out by Trent Ange allowed Frazier to score.

In the second, the Bullets added two more to a 3-1 lead. Keith Long and Keith Modlin both walked, moving up on a sacrifice. Toby Holliday doubled both of them.

The other Bullet run came in the sixth. Long walked, advanced on a passed ball and an out and scored on Danny Lilley's single.

Following a Saturday game at Aurora, the Bullets travel to Bath on Tuesday, while the Bears visit Chocowinity.

Roanoke Girls Grab Victory

ROBERSONVILLE — Roanoke High School gained a 5-3 victory over West Edgemore in a girls' softball game Friday.

Roanoke pushed over a run in the first, only to see West Edgemore tie it up with one in the second. Roanoke regained the lead with a run in the fourth, 2-1, but promptly lost it again, 3-2 in the top of the fifth.

But the Squaws came back with two of their own in the bottom of the fifth to regain the lead, 4-3, and added an insurance run in the sixth. Miriam Jones was the winning pitcher.

V. Bullock had two hits for West Edgemore, while Colette Albritton and Anna Fernandez each had two for Roanoke. Rosalind Dawson added a triple for the Squaws.

Roanoke is now 6-4 overall and 5-3 in Eastern Plains Conference play. They play at South Edgemore on Tuesday.

up." Owchinko explained. "I just threw a good pitch to get ahead."

Instead, he got behind.

Expos 6, Astros 3

Unbeaten Ross Grimsley scattered nine hits and became the first pitcher in Montreal's 10-year major league history to win four games in the month of April. Meanwhile, Tony Perez delivered a two-run double and Montreal scored twice on a pair of controversial balks by Houston reliever Tom Dixon, causing the Astros to play the game under protest.

With runners on second and third in the fifth inning, first base umpire Joe West called balks on consecutive pitches that resulted in a heated 5-minute discussion with Houston Manager Bill Virdon. West ruled that Dixon's left foot was in front of the rubber and therefore he was in a set position prior to his pitches.

Since a pitcher in a set position must stop his motion before delivering, Dixon was charged with balks when he took a full wind-up before throwing to the plate.

Cubs 4, Braves 3

Heity Cruz hit his first two home runs of the season and pinch hitter Larry Bittner singled home the winning run with two out in the 10th. Chicago reliever ace Bruce Sutter, who faced only five batters and struck out four of them in earning the victory, has struck out nine of the last 11 batters he has faced.

The Braves got two of their runs on a bizarre play on which the Cubs committed three errors. Jerry Royster was on third and Rowland Office on first with third-inning singles when Brian Asseltine grounded to second.

Manny Trillo fielded the ball and threw to shortstop Ivan DeJesus, who was charged with his first error for stepping off the bag before the catch. He then committed a second error by throwing wildly to first. Royster scored on the original grounder and Office followed him across the plate when first baseman Dave Kingman's throw to the plate was off-target for the third error. Catcher Larry Cox retrieved the ball and threw to pitcher Ray Burris covering the plate in time to get Asseltine.

Dodgers 7, Cards 1

Dusty Baker slammed a two-run double to highlight a three-run first inning and later belted a solo home run, his first of the season, in support of Rich Rhoden's six-hit pitching. It was the Dodgers' fifth consecutive victory.

Reds 5, Mets 1

Fred Norman and Manny Sarmiento combined on a three-hitter and George Foster and Dave Concepcion hit solo home runs while Pete Rose collected two hits, climbing to within nine of the 3,000 career mark. Rose doubled and scored in the first inning and singled a run across in the fourth. Meanwhile, Foster drove in a run with a first-inning sacrifice fly, homered in the third and tripled and scored in the ninth.

Giants 5, Pirates 4

The Pirates, who had won five in a row, led 3-2 entering the ninth. But, with one out, John Candelaria walked Bill Madlock, Darrell Evans and Jack Clark, and Willie McCovey followed with an RBI home run in the first inning while Dave Parker drove in three Pittsburgh runs with a homer and single.

PAYTON WINS AGAIN

NEW YORK (AP) Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears, the leading ground-gainer of the National Football League in 1977 with 1,852 yards, also emerged on top in a computer competition.

Payton won the $10,000 cash prize of the Seven Crowns of Sports pro football award with a Productive Efficiency Rating of 78.67.

Rampants Hold Off Wilson By 11-8

By JIM KYLE
Reflector Sports Writer

WILSON—Rose High took advantage of some Wilson Fike misplays to build up a big lead Friday night, but the Titans turned the tables with a six-run sixth inning, and the Rampants were happy to escape with an 11-8 victory.

Rose scored eight runs off of four hits, five errors, a wild pitch and a passed ball over the first four frames to take an 8-2 lead in the ballgame, but starting pitcher, Mike Williams tired in the sixth, walking four batters and giving up six runs with two out.

Rose coach Ronald Vincent was not pleased with the way his team allowed the Titans to come back, but was happy to get the victory. "We're glad to get that one. It was a very important conference game." The win leaves the Rampants with a 5-3 Division I mark, while Fike is now 5-4.

Vincent said Williams' troubles stemmed from the fact that the junior hurler had a cold last week and tired more easily than normal. He did pick up the win, however, his sixth in seven starts. Jeff Aldridge relieved Williams and pitched to two batters, hitting one and walking the other. Then Vincent brought in Lindsey Winstead, who quickly got the third out and went the rest of the way, earning a save.

"We knew he'd throw strikes," Vincent said of Winstead. "He threw the ball real well." The Rampant coach also had praise for first baseman Will Sanderson. He got the game's only extra-base hits, a double and a triple. He scored one run and knocked two in, going 3-4 at the plate.

And finally, Vincent gave credit to shortstop Greg Lee for pulling the game out in the final two frames with a pair of great defensive plays.

Rose got a run in the top of the first when Mike Shank singled to right and then went to second on a fielder's choice, advanced on an error and Lee's infield out, and scored on a passed ball.

But the Titans tied things up with a run of their own in the bottom of the inning. Tony Pollack singled to right and then went to second on a fielder's choice when Rose second baseman Ronnie Chapman pegged Bert Ferrell trying to score from first. Pollack came in when Jeff Davis' hit was error.

The Rampants began to build their lead in the second, scoring three. With two away, Sanderson got an infield hit. Robert Morehead followed with a walk, and Chapman singled to load the bases. Shank's base on balls scored Sanderson and Morehead came in on a wild pitch. Chapman scored on a throwing error when he and Shank attempted a double steal.

A pair of runs in the third made it 6-1. Aldridge led off with a single, and advanced on Williams' infield out. Joey Mattheis walked and Bob Woronoff got on when his batted ball hit Aldridge between second and third. Sanderson followed with a triple to score Mattheis and Woronoff.

Great defense highlighted the bottom of the third as Rose came up with the evening's lone double play. Mike Nichol's led off with a bloop single just by the diving Chapman's glove. Nichols went to second on an infield out. Ferrell lined a shot to Chapman, who flipped the ball to Lee at second for a double play.

Rose brought two more across in the fourth. Shank walked and Aldridge reached on an error.

and they both scored when Williams' hit was error.

Wilson got its second run in the bottom of the inning. With two away, designated hitter Gary Starling was hit by a pitch. He went to second when Robert Wells reached on an error and scored on two consecutive walks to David Bland and Greg Hopkins.

Neither team scored again until the sixth. Lee and Aldridge both came in for Rose in the top of the frame, and a passell of Titans scored in the bottom.

Starling led off with a single and made it to second on a passed ball. Wells then walked and Williams struck out the next batter. Another walk to Hopkins loaded the bases before a second

to plate Starling and Wilson scored when Ferrell singled to right. An error by the Rose right fielder let Hopkins come in.

ALTHOUGH THE BOATING season is just getting started, the number of drownings in the state has increased over those in past years, according to Kay J. Dunn, N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission officer.

Dunn said the majority of these drownings occur due to negligence and carelessness in the operation of boats, and many could have been prevented if all occupants in the boats had been wearing life saving devices, or had a life saving device at hand.

State and federal laws require that such devices be readily accessible when underway, but according to the officers who inspect boats and equipment, they have long been aware that life preservers are so often stored or locked away out of reach. "This negligence contributes to more drownings than any other single thing," Dunn said.

Dunn offered some boating safety rules, which would help avoid most accidental drownings:

Know your boat, including its capacity, horsepower rating, capabilities and limitations. You should also know your own capabilities and limitations.

The boat's operator must insure that there is a preserver on board for everyone, and it is also important to make sure each individual knows how to use his properly.

Boat owners should know the "rules of the road" for boating. A number of courses are offered each year to teach proper boating and water safety techniques.

Reporting of boating accidents is also beneficial. The N. C. Boating Safety Act requires the filing of boating accident reports and the information in these reports is helpful in cutting down on accidents.

"If you need additional information regarding boating safety, contact your local wildlife officer or the Boating and Water Safety Division at the Commission's headquarters in Raleigh," Dunn said.

Tagging Results Reported

Wildlife biologists for the Wildlife Resources Commission have finished tabulating all the results from the mandatory deer tagging program for last season. The report lists the number of buck and doe deer tagged in each county and compares the totals with those from the previous season.

During the 1977-78 hunting season, a total of 28,771 deer were tagged and reported. Some 23,184 deer were tagged during the 1976-77 season.

The information from the tagging program is broken down by counties. "When this information is used in conjunction with disease studies, habitat evaluations and other factors, we can determine trends in the deer populations in certain areas," according to Hal Atkinson, chief of the Commission's Division of Game. "Such information helps us set seasons and plan deer management programs where they are most needed."

An interesting note from the early evaluations is that 22,844 of the deer tagged during the past hunting season were bucks and 5,800 were does. (172 reports failed to indicate sex.) Biologists have learned through research that a deer population will remain stable in a given area as long as the total deer harvest does not exceed 35-40 per cent of the total deer harvest.

A complete report of the deer tagged in each North Carolina County will appear soon in "Wildlife in North Carolina" magazine. For Pitt County, the breakdown is 247 bucks and one unknown for 1977-78.

Coastal Fishing Report

The spring storm that swept through eastern North Carolina last week brought fishing to a near standstill along the coast.

Before the storm, blues, whiting and spot were being taken up and down the coast, while the Outer Banks had a run on channel bass.

Flounder and gray trout were being taken at Bogue Inlet, while a few king mackerel and albacore have begun to appear offshore, along with red and silver snapper.

Redskins Rip West Edgecombe

ROCKY MOUNT — Roanoke High School romped to an 11-1 victory over West Edgecombe and pulled into a tie for second place in the Eastern Plains Conference Friday.

Bucs Ink Kicker

East Carolina University soccer coach Brad Smith has announced the signing of Brad Winchell, a standout performer at North Springs High School in Atlanta, Ga., to a grant-in-aid.

Winchell, a two-year letterman, scored 37 goals and had 16 assists during his prep career at North Springs. He was named the Most Valuable Player for two years and led his team to an 11-1 record and a third place finish in the state finals during his senior season.

"Brad is an extremely talented player," said Smith. "He's aggressive and certainly a team player. Brad will help us a lot offensively next season."

Winchell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Winchell of Atlanta.

The Redskins pushed over three runs in the fourth inning. Charlie Smith walked and stole second. He scored when Cliff Keel singled. Keel stole up and scored when Anthony Latham reached on an error. Latham then stole second and moved on to third on an error. He then stole home.

In the fifth, the Redskins added another run. Ken Gurganus reached on an error and took off to third when a pickoff attempt was booted. He scored on Glenn Cargile's hit.

The sixth saw two more Roanoke runs score. Street Lee singled and stole his way to third. Jesse Matthews reached on a single and a double by Gurganus brought both runners in.

Roanoke added five more in the seventh, while West Edgecombe got its only runs in the bottom of the sixth.

Keel led the Roanoke hitting with three, including a double.

Roanoke is now 12-4 overall and 6-2 in conference play. They entertain Elm City on Monday.

East Carolina Takes Track Title

East Carolina University's women's track team claimed the first-ever North Carolina Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women track and field championships held Friday afternoon at Bunting Track.

The Lady Pirates ran away with the title, piling up 202 points.

The University of North Carolina finished a distant second with 113, followed by St. Augustine with 98 and N.C. State with 66.

East Carolina's Debbie Freeman and N.C. State's Valerie Ford shared Most Valuable Athlete honors. Freeman, who won the discus and shot put, and placed second in the javelin, was named the Most Valuable Field Athlete, while Ford, who took the 1,500 and 800-meter events, and ran a led on the mile relay team, took honors as the Most Valuable Track Athlete.

Overall, East Carolina won first place in six events, while Carolina, St. Augustine and State each took three.

In addition to the victories by Freeman and Ford, St. Augustine's Catherine Crawford was a double winner, taking the 100 and 200-meter dashes. East Carolina's Maria Gudjohnsen took first in both the long jump and the 100-meter hurdles.

The championships were hampered this first year by the fact that several athletes were involved in the rivaling Penn State Relays, also held this weekend.

Rampants...

Pollack reached on another error, which should have ended the inning, and Harris scored. Williams then walked Duke Lackey for another Titan run and Vincent turned to Aldridge. He delivered a base on balls to Starling, up for the second time, to score Ferrell, and then hit Wells to plate Pollack. That's when Winstead came in to put out the fire.

Chapman singled, stole, advanced on Shank's infield out and scored on Lee's sacrifice fly for the final Rose run and after a great play by Lee, Winstead ended the game with a strikeout in the bottom of the seventh.

The Rampants, now 10-4 overall, travel to Northern Nash on Monday, a game postponed from last Tuesday.

Education:

"The majority of our parents and teachers feel we need to get back to basics—to keep our sights on effective education—education that produces results in the so-called average child. Let's roll up our sleeves and work toward that end. But let us do so without neglecting the child with the learning problem or the child with exceptional abilities..."

For the first time, we have the opportunity to elect members of the Greenville Board of Education. We can all now play a more direct role in the development of policies that affect the education of our children. Like many of you, I have often wished I could do more to help improve our school system. As a public school teacher, principal and university professor for the past thirty years, I have fought many of the same battles you are now fighting. As the parent of an elementary student in the city school system, I have shared many of the same frustrations with you as a parent/teacher. Now, with your help, I hope to do something about many of the things that concern us all.

Sponsor Sessions On Vocational Ed

ECU News Bureau
An all-day conference on vocational education for secondary school principals, superintendents and vocational education directors will be held at East Carolina University May 1.

The conference is sponsored by the ECU Schools of Home Economics and Technology and the N.C. Division of Vocational Education. It will begin at 9 a.m. in the auditorium of the campus Nursing Building.

The program will focus on these topics: inservice and preservice teacher education, youth club organizations in vocational education, planning and developing secondary programs in vocational education, and teacher availability and placement.

There will also be opportunities for participating educational personnel to visit ECU's facilities in home economics, business education, distributive education, industrial arts and industrial education.

Further information about the event is available from Douglas Kruger of the ECU School of Technology, telephone 757-6744.

Big Day For Orchestra

WASHINGTON (AP) — The North Carolina Symphony under music director John Gosling made its Washington debut Friday night at the Kennedy Center's concert hall, where the 2,750-seat hall has been sold out for a month.

Hundreds made the trip from North Carolina by train, bus, plane and automobile for the concert and a reception.

Gov. and Mrs. James B. Hunt Jr. and members of the state cabinet attended the performance.

The concert was being broadcast to North Carolina over commercial and public radio and television stations.

The only major orchestra between Atlanta and Washington, the North Carolina Symphony and its ensembles traveled more than 20,000 miles last season to perform before more than 250,000 adults and children.

Services Today

AYDEN — Masonic and Daughters of the Eastern Star services will be held Sunday at the St. Paul Church of Christ Disciple of Christ Church in Ayden at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. W.W. Wilson will give the sermon.

The Kennedy Center program featured three major works: "The Prayers of Kierkegaard" by Samuel Barber, featuring the Carolina Choir from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, directed by Robert Porco; "Academic Festival Overture" by Brahms; and "The Symphonie Fantastique" by Hector Berlioz.

The Carolina Choir is composed of undergraduate and graduate students at Chapel Hill. It was founded in 1967 by Dr. Lara Hoggard.

This female tabby cat likes people and needs a home. She is available this week for adoption along with the following animals: 10 mixed-breed male and female puppies, six mixed-breed male and female kittens, three full-grown female dogs, and one female orange persian cat that needs some medical attention.

Anyone wishing to adopt or place an animal for adoption may call the Human Society number, 758-PETS, which will be answered at Helen's Grooming World weekdays and from 3-6 p.m. Sundays. This is a message service and animals should not be brought to this business place, it was emphasized.

Lung Health Groups To Meet

Approximately 200 physicians, nurses, respiratory therapists, volunteers and professional workers for lung health will attend the combined 1978 Annual Meetings of the North Carolina Lung Association, the North Carolina Thoracic Society, and the North Carolina Congress of Lung Association on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The convention will feature a president's reception, followed by an awards banquet Tuesday evening.

Site of the two-day conference is the Blockade Runner Motor Hotel at Wrightsville Beach.

Wednesday, Dr. Richard A. DeRemee of Rochester, Minn. will address the N. C. Thoracic Society luncheon. Dr. DeRemee is Assistant Professor of Medicine, Mayo Clinic and Mayo Foundation at Rochester, Minn.

During the Public Health and Nursing Session Wednesday, three nurses from Chapel Hill discuss both in-patient and out-patient care.

Scheduled to attend the annual meeting from the Eastern Lung Association are J. T. Snowden, Treasurer; Frances Salle, vice president; Herbert Hollowell, past president; George Rouse, president; Lorey White, executive director; and Connie Landen, program director.

Commissioners Meet Monday

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners will meet Monday at 10 a.m. in the Pitt County Court House.

Items on the agenda for the regular monthly meeting include: consideration of recommendations from the Planning Board on final plans for several subdivisions, including the Candlewick Inn property, Hardee Acres extension, Jackson Heights addition and Pleasant Ridge, section two; consideration of the lease of the county landfill on the Allen Road; and consideration of appointment to the Planning Board to replace Mike Gaskins, who has resigned.

Other items on the agenda include consideration of a request from the Greenville Jaycees for a fireworks display for their annual Fourth of July celebration on the Greenville Town Commons, and appointment of someone to the Board of Social Services to replace Elmore Hodges who is not eligible for reappointment.

ECU Historian Will Participate

ECU News Bureau

Dr. Mary Jo Bratton, associate professor of history at East Carolina University, one of 12 scholars invited to participate in a seminar this summer at Harvard University.

Seminar sessions will begin in June and end in August.

Dr. Bratton, who holds degrees from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and UNC-Chapel Hill, is a specialist in black history and comparative slavery.

VOTE FOR Lucille W. Gorham Greenville Board Of Education

The Greenville City School System has made steady progress toward providing the type of education that will assist students in developing their individual talents.

There is no simple or easy solution to the problem of providing an adequate education for a large and varied group of students.

Our staff and faculties are dedicated and competent. With their continued dedication, along with the cooperation of the community, we will continue to make progress in improving our school system. I hope to continue to play a role in that progress as a school board member.

Calliope Coke Music

WAKE FOREST, N.C. (AP)—Steve Bowman makes a joyful noise with his "Coke Bottle Calliope," at the same time he is amazing audiences with his unique invention.

Bowman, a first-year student at Southeastern Baptist Seminary, says his strange-looking invention is made of soft drink bottles and a vacuum cleaner.

"I thought blowing on a bottle made a pretty good sound, and I knew you could tune them by adding water," Bowman said. "I knew what a calliope sounded like and realized I could make one with Coke bottles."

Bowman made a crude device similar to his present instrument, while he was still a high school student in Clarksburg, Va. When he was a senior at Campbell College, he began tinkering, and he finished the calliope in the summer of 1976.

He built the coke calliope over a 1½-month period while working at Pilgrim Tract Society in Randleman, and he only spent about $35 on materials for his invention.

The calliope is powered by a vacuum cleaner and used copper tubing to blow air over 33 bottles, each one tuned to produce a different note. The valves are connected by fishing line to a keyboard made of keys from an old pump organ.

"I don't understand how it works," Bowman said. "I just built it."

He plays it for churches, youth groups, and other organizations, including a Christian outreach program at the seminary.

Bowman says he takes literally the Psalm, "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord."

Dr. Jenkins Spoke In Duplin County

ECU News Bureau

KENNESAWVILLE—Dr. Leo W. Jenkins told the Duplin County Democratic convention today that "too often a few people make the sacrifices—fighting for good causes."

Jenkins, the veteran chancellor of East Carolina University and widely known Eastern North Carolina political figure, called for more active, participating people in politics. In the convention's keynote address, he said "we still need more people who will exercise the great privilege of addressing the issues of the day."

"We must continue to raise the questions," Jenkins said. "What are the needs of North Carolina? Or Eastern North Carolina?"

The Democrat party, Jenkins said, has made many contributions to the American people, and Democrats are part of a great tradition which he defined as Jeffersonian democracy. "a great experiment in government."

Investigations Underway On Electrocutings

ATLANTA (AP) — Three separate accidents earlier this month, in which eight men were electrocuted when citizens band radio antennas struck electrical power lines, are being investigated, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Friday.

A statement from the commission's Atlanta office said safety officers are investigating the accidents in Salisbury, N.C., New Orleans and Abbeville, La.

Four men were killed in the Salisbury accident, three in New Orleans and one in Abbeville.

Business Notes

50TH ANNIVERSARY

Kenneth Russ, manager of Terminix Co. of East Carolina at 3016 Memorial Drive, reported that 1978 marks the 50th year of the termite control industry.

Russ reported that Terminix International Inc., the parent company, was founded in 1928. Frank H. Lyons, one of the founders of Terminix, developed a chemical barrier against termites, it was pointed out, and his methods became the standards for the industry. Evan Pellman, co-founder, put together the first nationwide chain of service centers.

According to Russ, over 300 Terminix owners and managers attended the recent anniversary festivities in Hawaii. Terminix today is represented in 250 cities nationwide.

BANKING OFFICER

Greenville native Donnie L. Phillips has been elected banking officer at Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. in Kinston, according to an announcement by R. B. Patterson, senior vice president and manager of the Kinston office.

Phillips joined Wachovia in 1975 as a field representative in the Kinston office, a position he held until last April when he assumed new responsibilities as dealer credit manager.

A 1972 graduate of North Carolina A & T University, he is married to the former Vickie Gorham and they have one daughter.

NEW MARKS

Fieldcrest Mills Inc. announced at its annual meeting in New York record first quarter sales and earnings for the fourth consecutive year.

William C. Battle, president and chief executive officer, told shareholders that net earnings for the quarter rose 40 per cent to $3,837,000 from $2,749,000 for the first three months of 1977.

Battle said that the record performance was achieved on a 15 per cent increase in sales which were $95,792,000 compared to $83,088,000.

RIBBON CUTTING

Sycor Inc., manufacturers of distributed data entry and processing systems, officially opened Tuesday a 24,000 square foot addition to its Goldsboro production facility.

Donald P. Moffet, executive vice president and chief operating officer, reported that Sycor expects to manufacture two additional product lines in the Goldsboro facility beginning in the current quarter.

Moffet noted that the additional lines will require that employment at Goldsboro rise to about 100 by year end, at which time the firm expects to be producing some 1,500 terminals per month at the Wayne County facility.

ATTENDING CONVENTION

Harold H. Pittman, local agency manager for Life of Virginia, said that Mr. and Mrs. William Wilson are attending the Life of Virginia convention in Santo Domingo.

Pittman said that the couple was awarded the convention trip on the basis of Wilson's sales results during 1977.

VOTE FOR

SHERIFF OF

NARCOTICS

KENNETH RAY EVANS FOR SHERIFF OF PITT COUNTY May 2 Primary

During this campaign I have been stressing four major points that are of the utmost importance in order that you, the citizen of Pitt County will have an EFFECTIVE and EFFICIENT Sheriff's Department.

No. 1- If elected I will endeavor to enforce all laws equally for everyone.

This is probably the easiest one to explain and the explanation is simply this. Anyone who violates the law can be arrested and the only ones who can't, are ones who enjoy diplomatic immunity and law enforcement officers in the performance of their official duties, in some instances.

In our system of justice everyone is equal, irregardless of their station in life, their sex, race, religion, creed or national origin.

As long as I am Sheriff of Pitt County, no deputy will ever be told to "leave him alone" as I have been told.

No.-Effective Drug enforcement in schools and all of Pitt County.

At this time and since 1972, the Sheriff's Dept. has had only one man investigating drug cases and this has only been on a part time basis, with the exception of six months in 1975.

I made my first drug arrest in 1966 and the drug problem in Pitt County has not lessened any since then, but, escalated. I was told by a former drug dealer, who transported out of Texas, that he tried to have the load sold before he went to pick it up. If it was already sold, he sold it in the middle and western areas of North Carolina, but, if it was not sold, that the fastest place to get rid of it in North Carolina, was Greenville.

Having been Chief of the Narcotics division at the Sheriff's Dept, I am fully aware of the drug problem in Pitt County. I know enough of present illegal drug abuse to keep five men busy 24 hours a day, 7 days a week on drug investigations.

We have a duty to do everything within our power to prevent our children and the future leaders of this great country from becoming vegetables from the use of illegal drugs.

An increase in drug abuse causes a direct increase in all other violations of the law, such as armed robbery, Breaking and Enterings, Larcenies, etc.

If I am elected your Sheriff, I promise you that there will be a full time, EFFECTIVE Narcotics Division at the Sheriff's Dept., and we will be working on the drug problem with a three pronged approach, Enforcement, Education, and Rehabilitation.

No. 3-Work for personnel expansion to increase patrols to 24 hours.

At the present time there is no patrol from 7 A.M. until 12 Midnight each day. The only time there is any patrol at all, is from 12 Midnight until 7 A.M. During this time there is only ONE patrol car on duty with TWO deputies in it trying to patrol ALL of Pitt County.

These two men have to answer all complaints, patrol all of Pitt County, as well as provide all of the police protection that the towns of Grimesland, Falkland, and Simpson have. As you can readily see, the job that they are assigned is impossible. You can also see how much protection that you and your property have. The other 17 hours of the day the deputies are too busy with paper service or answering calls to provide any patrol service.

What I am talking about is a complete lack of PREVENTIVE ENFORCEMENT. When law enforcement does not prevent the crime, then law enforcement has failed. True, it is an almost impossible, if not impossible task to prevent all crimes from being committed, but this is the goal that we must work for.

Under the expansion plan I propose, is a complete program of PREVENTIVE ENFORCEMENT. Under this plan, the county will be divided into sections with at least one car assigned to each section. That car will be responsible for patrolling that section during its tour of duty. This will insure 24 hour patrol in each of the sections. This will also insure that calls will be answered faster than they are at the present time. My goal is to answer all calls within an average five minutes, and most calls in less than five minutes.

Deeply integrated with the PREVENTIVE ENFORCEMENT program is point no. 4.

No. 4-Better placement and assignment of Deputies.

With the personnel expansion, we will be going into the different sections that the county has been divided into and recruiting residents of these sections. This will provide the residents of each section with a deputy or deputies living there and will result in a balanced assigning of deputies for all of Pitt County.

Pitt County is growing by leaps and bounds. The Sheriff's Dept. must catch up with this growth and have the resources to handle the problems that come with this growth.

The Pitt County Sheriff's Dept. is your Sheriff's Dept. You deserve the best, and this, I dedicate myself and the Sheriff's Dept. to.

If elected, I will be your representative to help you in any way that I can, within the limits of the law.

I am looking forward to working with you in the coming years and I wish to take this opportunity to ask you for your votes and support and to say "THANK YOU" in advance.

Local Secretaries Name Chappell-Brown 'Member Of The Year' Vows Solemnized

The Greenville Chapter of the National Secretaries Association (International) named Brenda Wilson, current chapter president, as "Member of the Year" Wednesday.

The chapter held its annual Secretaries Day luncheon at the Ramada Inn.

Mrs. Wilson was selected by the membership from a list of candidates nominated at recent meetings. She has served the local chapter as its president for the past two years. A charter member of the chapter, she was praised for her contributions to the organization by Mary Kittrell, who presented the award.

Featured speaker for the occasion was State Senator J. J. (Monk) Harrington of Lewiston. Harrington, an active politician and businessman, spoke on the importance of good secretaries and the changing image of the profession. He stressed that the role of secretaries is changing to that of a decision-making member of the executive team.

Members of the local chapter, their employers and other area secretaries and employers were guests. A special guest was Congressman Walter Jones.

Mrs. Margie David, incoming president, presented Mrs. Wilson with the past president's pin. Mrs. Judith Garris led the group in the Code of Ethics.

Secretaries Week Committee Chairperson, Ellen Webb, reminded members of the dutch treat breakfast Friday morning at the Ramada Inn.

May Fellowship Luncheon To Be Held Friday

The annual May Fellowship luncheon, sponsored by Church Women United, will be held Friday, May 5, at noon at Holy Trinity United Methodist Church.

Health kits for migrant workers will be collected and will be taken to Ayden for distribution.

Linda Baldwin, foster care worker with the Pitt County Department of Social Services, will be the speaker. A native of Chatham County, Ms. Baldwin is a graduate of ECU with a B.S. in sociology and a master's in education. She served as chairman of the Foster Children's Christmas Drive last year.

Mrs. Terry Sparrow and Mrs. Kenneth Howell are serving as chairmen of the luncheon. Jarvis GRIFTON — Norma Jean Brown and Donald Albert Chappell pledged their marriage vows at 8:00 p. m. Friday at the home of the bride near Grifton. The Rev. C. Stanley Rouse Jr. officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Brown of Grifton. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert L. Chappell of Dudley.

The bride wore a formal white gown of crepe-backed satin and Rachele lace. The gown featured an empire bodice, accented with lace and satin ribbon. The u-shaped neckline and trumpet sleeves featured bands of lace and ribbon. The A-line skirt was accented with a deep flounce, topped with a wide band of scalloped lace. Her headpiece was of silk illusion and was accented with flowers and ribbon. She carried a cascade of spring flowers, predominantly roses and daisies.

The bride was attended by Misses Linda and Billie Raye Brown as bridesmaids. Kimberly Jean Hawkins of Southern Pines served as flower girl.

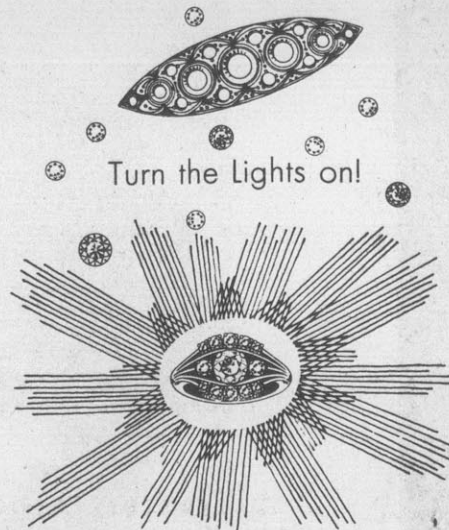

The bridegroom was attended by Ronald A. Van Dyke of Goldsboro as best man. Ushers were Kenneth A. Hawkins of Southern Pines and Wallace Michael Jones of Kinston.

The bride is a graduate of Ayden-Grifton High School and has attended Lenior Community College and Pitt Technical Institute. The bridegroom is a graduate of Southern Wayne High School and has attended Wayne Community College and Lenoir Community College. He is employed as an announcer for WSFL-WBIC radio in New Bern.

After a wedding trip, the couple will reside in New Bern.

Memorial United Methodist Church is serving as co-host.

Convention Held Last Week In Knoxville

The American Business Women's Association held its regional convention for the Mid-Atlantic Region of District 1 in Knoxville, Tenn., last week. This district is composed of chapters from Tennessee, North Carolina and South Carolina. There were approximately 800 women attending the convention. Out of 75 North Carolina chapters, 66 were represented.

Dr. C. C. Bronder, lecturer and business woman, was the keynote speaker at the opening session. Saturday was spent by the representatives in several seminars and workshops. A banquet was held Saturday night with entertainment provided by the Tennessee Singers, students from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. The theme of the convention was "Springtime in Knoxville" and the sponsoring chapters carried this theme in their decorations of the meeting halls and banquet.

Representing the Pirate Chapter of Greenville were Frances Dudley, chapter president; Ruth Staton, recording secretary; Joyce Elmore, corresponding secretary; Lynn Powell, chapter treasurer; Jean Tripp, chapter vice president; Sandy Nobles, Cheryl Bleizeffer, Dorothy Ellen, Giselle Owens, and Geraldine Lancaster.

DAR Organizing Chapter Meeting Is Announced

A meeting of the organizing chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Greenville will be held Tuesday, May 2, at the home of Jane B. Feary at 7:30 p.m.

There will be a status report on the progress of the chapter and a report on the 87th Continental Congress of the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution attended by the Organizing Regent Mrs. Feary. The meeting was held in Washington, D.C., April 17-21.

All organizing members, prospective members and interested DAR members are urged to attend.

For information contact Mrs. Everett Ballance, 756-7483, or Mrs. Feary, 752-2121. (before 5 p.m.).

Why Didn't Prayer Help This Couple?

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have long been faithful readers of your column, and as I have no one to turn to in my hour of despair, I must talk to someone.

How does one go on when his faith in prayer is shattered and the bottom has fallen out of everything? I feel as if my life is over and even my prayers are useless now.

We adopted a little boy when he was 8 days old. We loved that child more than our own flesh and blood. We prayed for him constantly. Yet, between the ages of 14 and 19 he went from skipping school to robbery and, now, to rape!

Our hearts are broken. Our son was raised in a good Christian home. We went to church every Sunday and always tried to set a good example. We never had tobacco or liquor in the house.

Where have our prayers gone? We cannot understand it. We are numb, sick and brokenhearted. God bless you if you can help us.

HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: You speak of prayer as though it was the premium you paid for insurance against all ills and evils. It is not. Prayer is simply "a talk" with one's God. No amount of praying will protect another, in this case your adopted son, from the consequences of his own actions. Each man must do his own praying, just as each man must accept the consequences of his own behavior.

I don't know where your son went wrong. But your faith in prayer should not have been shattered because he did.

DEAR ABBY: I work and make a pretty good salary. The guy I go with also works, and his take-home is twice what mine is, but he never seems to have any money. He's always asking me for money for gas, eating out and movies.

If he'd ask me for a regular "loan" and then pay me back, I wouldn't mind, but he always says he left his wallet in his other pants. He's a neat guy otherwise. What should I do?

DEBBIE

DEAR DEBBIE: If you give him any more money, you left your brains in your other head. Lend him bus fare and tell him to go home and get his wallet.

DEAR ABBY: My mother hasn't been to see a doctor in years, but she's always complaining about headaches, backaches, dizziness or a feeling of weakness.

She buys every kind of painkiller she can get without a prescription, and if the directions say, "take two," she takes four. She has even taken pills that were prescribed for someone else. (I've heard her ask friends and relatives if they have any pills for pain, and could she have a few.)

How can I get her to quit taking so many pills? She's not dumb. She's a college graduate. She's really a wonderful woman, and I'd like to have her around for a few more years.

LOVING DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Tell your mother that a pain is nature's way of telling her that something is wrong with the equipment. To suppress the pain and ignore the warning, instead of going to a physician to find out what's wrong, is foolish and dangerous.

SENIOR CITIZENS GO TO 'COLLEGE'

NEW YORK (AP) — In order to attend seminars given by the faculty of Manhattan College at the Riverdale Senior Center, the students must be at least 60 years old, and some as old as 80 have been attending the weekly class sessions.

The professors volunteer their time and the students who take the free college-level seminars receive a certificate of completion at the end.

Among topics covered in discussions, lectures and slide shows are ecology, environmental problems, life and death, aging, population, transplants and solar energy.

On The Local Scene

by Rosalie Trotman

"It was only a matter of a few weeks before I knew that I was addicted to running, that it was no longer for health reasons," said Caroline Holm, who started running about a year and a half ago.

"When I started, I was running for my health, not because I was sick; I wanted a regular form of exercise — I didn't want to be a heart victim at an early age," she continued.

At the beginning, Caroline could not run a ½ mile and her first goal was a mile, which she did in high school. "I didn't know if I could ever do it again. I wanted to run track in high school, but the program wasn't available.

"I have noticed body changes such as a substantial lowering of pulse rate, better circulation and better muscle tone. Running serves as a natural tranquilizer — I'm not as edgy and I feel calm and relaxed in most situations especially after I have run. While running, I am able to work out daily frustrations. I just know I feel better," she stated.

"Another sideline benefit is — it gives me a feeling of importance to myself. As a housewife and mother, it gives me an opportunity to express my individuality," she replied.

Caroline, who runs year-round, prefers open running over track. She enjoys seeing the changing of the seasons and people outside. "Track running is boring for me, I have no incentive."

Endurance rather than time or speed is more important to Caroline. "However, I am becoming more aware of my time and I am at the point now that I want to try competition. I do not want the idea of competing to interfere with the joy I receive through running. If it ever reached the point that competition became more important than my enjoyment of running, I would hope that I could stop competing.

"Right now, I'm planning to run in the Atlanta Peachtree Road Race, which is six miles, on July 4. In training for the race, I'm running six miles once a week and three to five miles the remainder of the days. The reason I stagger the distance is to give my body time to build back up on the days I run the least distance," Caroline said.

Now she will start running 10 miles once a week and four to seven miles on the remaining days.

RUNNING SERVES... as a "natural tranquilizer" for Caroline Holm of Greenville.

which she plans to continue to do until after the race. "I'm entering the race for the experience and to get the feel of running in competition. Later in the summer, I'd like to increase further the number of miles I run regularly with the hope of someday competing in marathons.

"My dream is to run in the Boston Marathon," she said.

Caroline's husband, Glen, is minister at Holy Trinity United Methodist Church. They have two pre-school children, Maggie and Scott.

Caroline has three younger brothers, who also run. Her 16-year-old brother will be running in the Atlanta Road Race.

Her advice to someone considering running is to have a good pair of running shoes. "Beginners should start at an easy pace and shouldn't feel they need to run a long distance. At first, it's better to run and walk and then eventually build up to running a desired distance," she added.

India Retains A City Of Death

By RAMESH C. PANDE
VARANASI, India (UPI) — Death means liberation from a long series of incarnations to the devout Hindu and is the biggest event in life. Hindu scriptures indicate there is no better place to shuffle off mortal coils than Varanasi, the ancient and, to India's 500 million Hindus, the holiest city.

Many sick and old Hindus come to Varanasi (the British call it Benaras) on the banks of the sacred River Ganges, to die and be liberated. A single dip in the sacred Ganges ensures the regular multitude of pilgrims that converge on the city they have washed away a lifetime of sins. A few drops of the sacred water in a dying person's mouth is supposed to be the second best way to liberate the soul. Millions drink the sacred water every day at bathing places near the confluence of medieval drains that discharge raw sewage.

Relatives carry the sacred water in copper containers home to the sick and poor.

Hinduism seems to pervade Varanasi — in the decorated doorways of temples, the sound of sacred bells, the chanting of priests, the fragrance of burning incense and the smoke of cremation sites on the river's living waterfront.

Mourners chanting "The Name of Lord Rama is Truth" carry shrouded corpses to the funeral pyres, where constant curling smoke has blackened the facades of ancient nearby temples.

Varanasi offers much more to tourists and pilgrims than funeral pyres, however.

It is resplendent in historical monuments and famous for its brocade silks and carpets.

Mystics from all over the world find this ancient cultural capital ideal for meditation.

The city's narrow lanes are the town planners' biggest headache, and marauding sacred cattle make them a nightmare.

Varanasi's bulls are branded with the names of the dead and they have gone unfettered for centuries in the belief they harbor human souls.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

The real heroes in this world don't necessarily swing a baseball bat, whirl around space, or go to Stockholm to pick up a Nobel Prize.

To me, the real heroes are the people whose human endurance is pushed to the limits and they do something about it. The I'm-mad-as-hell-and-I'm-not-going-to-take-it-anymore syndrome. You read about them in the newspaper. The man who got fed up with traffic on the Los Angeles freeway and one night he just got out of his car, left it to tie up 300 cars and walked into the sunset.

Or what about the postman who carried mail for 37 years and one day decided he'd had it and dumped the entire contents of his bag down the sewer?

I loved the one the other day about the food concessionaire at the airport who was up to here in dirty dishes all day and finally loaded them into a truck and deposited them in a cemetery so he wouldn't have to wash them.

C'mon now, admit it, we all entertain fantasies of bucking the system. Don't tell me you've never wanted to throw grease down the sink when your husband isn't looking or lock the door on the children when they're out playing.

What mother has never been tempted to look at her child's bedroom and brick it up . . . or take a soiled diaper to the john, toss it in and flush it.

Is there a woman alive who has never spoon-fed a toddler with more strained squash coming out than going in and has never been tempted to take a butter knife and spread the gook all over the kid's face?

I have restraint and I hate myself for it. I also have a dream. One of these Monday mornings when I climb into the car and the gas gauge registers

E, I am going to quietly get out of the car, remove the labels from my clothing and throw them into a gym bag. Then I will walk to the telephone booth two blocks away and call a cab that will take me to the bus station. I will board the first bus that comes in going anywhere, change my name, and open a massage parlor in another city.

Until I really pull it off . . . I don't deserve to have a high school named for me.

New Program In Visual Arts

NEW YORK (AP) — A new master of arts program in administration with a focus on visual arts will be offered by Parsons School of Design and the Bank Street College of Education.

David Levy, dean of Parsons, and Gordon Klop, dean of the Bank Street College, remarked that this collaboration would provide a program giving teachers and school administrators a critical overview of professional practice in American art and design.

The program will include such areas as graphic and advertising design, environmental design, interior design, illustration and the fine arts.

When Vikings first landed in Iceland and spotted clouds of geothermal steam rising from the area, they named the site Reykjavik, which means "Smoking Bay."

Have Taxidermist But Not Much Else

By BRENDAN RILEY
Associated Press Writer
MILFORD, Calif. (AP) — "We are downtown Milford," says Jim Schlaudraff. "This is the only gas station, the only store — and the only taxidermist."

For certain, Schlaudraff's is the main building in downtown Milford — population 75 or so. It looks like a gas station, the big "Taxidermist" sign out front notwithstanding. Schlaudraff shares ownership of the store with his parents, Andrew and Edith Schlaudraff. They get plenty of business from motorists passing through the tiny Lassen County community on U.S. 395. Milford was once a stagecoach stop, site of a gristmill and logging operations, and port for a paddlewheeler that churned across Honey Lake to the railhead at Wendel. Today, it's primarily a ranching town and home for people who work at an Army installation to the south or the state prison to the north. For travellers, it's the typical wide spot in the road. About 75 people live in town, but nearly 300 pick up their mail at the post office next door to the store. The store sells a little bit of everything: grocery items, camping gear, fishing equipment and ammunition. There are two gas pumps out front, and a small trailer park in the back. The building is nearly 80 years old and had changed little over the years. But because gasoline sales are a big item, the Schlaudraffs added a canopy structure to make it look more like a service station. Many of the Schlaudraffs' customers are hunters, so the

The halls of Rose High were quickly filled with posters last week as candidates for SGA and class offices officially began campaigning. Running for the office of SGA president are Tommy Chenier, Quentin Eaton, Jen Kim and Wade Stokes. Becky Dixon, Janette Perry and Penney Rhodes are the candidates for SGA secretary and Sharon Connolly and Susan Tucker are running for SGA treasurer.

On Wednesday morning, all SGA candidates will be able to express their views to the student body during the elections assembly. Limited to three minutes, a speech or a skit may be presented by the candidates.

Yousef Barakat, Gigi Branch, Laura Lauffer, Hannah Taft, Kevin Sayers and Joe Wallace are the six rising seniors competing for the office of senior class president. The candidates for secretary-treasurer are Karen Gordon and Susan Warshuer.

Cheryl Anderson, Jeffrey Atkinson, Michael Brohawn, Don McGlohon, Frank Tart and Anne Williamson are the candidates for junior class president. Beth Bailey is the candidate for junior class secretary-treasurer.

Elections will be held Wednesday and Thursday.

During an Anchor Club meeting Tuesday night, President Lois Phelps announced the club had raised a total of $83 at the car wash held the previous

Ancient Bagpipe Is Still Popular

WASHINGTON (AP) — A good set of bagpipes is hard to find these days due to a growing popularity of the instruments which has led to a worldwide shortage, says National Geographic.

"Many of the old master bagpipe makers have died. Those who remain are few and far between," says Scots Guard Pipe Major John G. Slattery, whose group recently performed here.

Besides a tendency to closely guard the trade secrets of bagpipe makers, there has also been a scarcity of African blackwood, which is essential in a good set of bagpipes, according to Geographic.

Bagpipes are believed to have originated 3,000 years ago in the Hittite culture of what is now Western Turkey. During the Second World War, pipers regularly led troops into battle, and even today, pipers in Scottish regiments must be certified as medics.

Back On Broadway, Melba Moore In Full Stride

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) — Singer Melba Moore got her starring role in the Broadway musical hit "Timbuktu" because she looked good on an album cover.

The album was Melba's "This Is It," and the jacket shows her in African costume on one side and in Arab dress on the other: traditional headdress, a loop of coins on her forehead, draped in layers of chiffon. The costume had nothing to do with the songs in the album, she says — "it was just fashionable."

The time was 1977, not long after the birth of Melba's and husband Charlie Huggins's first child, daughter Melba Charli. Producer Luther Davis and director Geoffrey Holder were looking for someone to sing the romantic lead of Marsinah in "Timbuktu," their reworking of "Kismet" set in 14th century Mali.

"Luther saw the picture from the sleeve of 'This is it' in Variety," Melba explained during a recent interview. "and he thought that was just how he wanted Marsinah to look."

But it was a while before Davis remembered Melba's prize-winning work on Broadway in "Hair" and "Purlie" and thought of her for the role. "Finally he and Geoffrey approached my agents," she said. "It was just after my baby was born and when I read the script I was really interested in this big opulent show. But I had my doubts about playing a 15-year-old. Imagine, 15!"

She tried to grimace, but she isn't the type. Sitting in her agents' office — small, trim and chic in silk shirt, slacks, brocade vest and brimmed felt hat — she didn't look much more than 15. (On stage as Marsinah she looks like a hoydenish Juliet.)

Since it opened on Broadway at the Mark Hellinger Theater March 1, "Timbuktu" has become one of the most popular shows in town, playing to more than 90 percent capacity — despite mostly poor reviews.

"It has to be one of the most criticized, most written-about shows in a long time," she said. "Some of the critics said I wasn't in good voice. But on opening night I was in better voice than I normally am. And I know more about my voice than anyone else. Maybe people remembered 'Purlie' and were expecting the same sort of character."

"At the beginning of the run we were having some trouble with the sound. I had people out in the auditorium listening and my voice was sounding small and thin in comparison with the others on the stage. One thing I know I've got is a powerful voice, and I knew something had to be wrong."

She has no patience with criticism that the show is commercial, even exploitative.

"I think in terms of commercialism as well as artistry," she said. "You have to have both."

Her main concern is to move the audience.

"During the try-outs in Philadelphia and Washington," she said, "we knew some things weren't working because my fans — who were used to Melba Moore moving them — would say, 'Hey, Melba, you're giving us the chills.'"

"My reprise of 'Strangers in Paradise,' where I'm alone on stage, wasn't working and we couldn't figure out why. Then we tried cutting the lead-in introduction — that was in Washington — and now it's getting shouts of 'Sing!' and 'Bravo!' at every performance."

"I would say my role's the most difficult in the show. Her transitions are so delicate. And there are times where Marsinah steps out of character to make a point. It's a tricky combination of opera and musical comedy. The high points of the character — as well as the songs — are working now. Every day she clings together a little bit more. The main thing is that it moves the audience. I know what I have to do to move these people."

Melba had nothing but praise for her co-star, Gilbert Price, a powerful, dynamic tenor with whom she sings the famous love duets "Stranger in Paradise" and "And this is my beloved."

"We're so well matched we never know who's leading," she said. "I look into his eyes and it's like looking into a mirror. Every day it's different. He trusts me well enough that if he sings something in a different way he knows I'll follow and we always meld. He's so full of love and energy."

Melba was born and grew up in New York City. She got a music degree but started out as a teacher and it wasn't till she was 21 that her family background proved too strong to resist. Her parents were club performers — her late mother was a singer and her father sang and played piano. Sometimes they appeared as part of a quartet, sometimes just the two of them together.

Music was their entire life. "When my mother was ill, she'd always say to my husband and me, 'Talk about music.'"

Melba's face lights up when she talks about her father, whom she obviously adores.

"He's in love with music," she said. "When you see his face you see love. He still works small clubs. About three years ago he learned to play the organ and got back into classical music again. Now he's preparing a lecture tour."

"I admire him so much: he nurtures and expands his gifts. When we talk he sometimes forgets I'm his daughter and gets talking professional. I have to say to him, 'Hey, Pop. Let's talk about the weather.'"

"He was the one who took me round to his agents when I said I wanted to try music as a career. He said he hadn't wanted me to get into a life of touring all the time, but if that was what I wanted..."

She started off on the nightclub circuit in the Catskills, then was a backup singer for Frank Sinatra, Harry Belafonte, Johnny Mathis and others. She joined the Broadway company of Hair and in 18 months with the show went from the chorus to the lead role of Sheila. "Hair" led to her role in "Purlie" in 1970, which vaulted her to stardom. Records, TV and movie roles and concert appearances — she was the first black woman to give a solo concert at the Metropolitan Opera House — made her face and four-octave voice familiar to millions.

"I've signed a new contract with Epic Records and settled into looking for new material and choosing a producer," she said. "It all takes as much energy and concentration as rehearsing for the show. As an artist I want to give them something I can be proud of. We'll probably have to record it at night, after the show, because my voice is 'up' then."

Interviews, parties, dinners, receptions all take up time — "it's part of the job" — and her role as mother is all-consuming. The Hugginses are in the market for a town house in Manhattan — they took their present apartment temporarily when they couldn't find what they were looking for in the suburbs and Melba Charli was on the way. They also have a home in South Carolina — her entrepreneur husband wryly calls it their "plantation."

"If I had the time I'd go to the tropics," she said. "I love the sun and love to get into the water — get a really good suntan. I'm very physically oriented. I feel the current flowing after exercising a lot — it's a good sort of soreness."

"I don't have really a lot of close friends. I love being alone. But I like people: being with them, listening to them, watching them. I like being with people who don't know who Melba Moore is."

"I like just being alive. I could be happy just being healthy, without any fabulous career."

"As it is, my career is going just where I want it to go. The records should really take off now. I'd like to do more on Broadway. After all, I've only been in three Broadway shows and they've all been hits."

Rabbits Make A Happy Life

CLARKSVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Peter Cottontail comes and Peter Cottontail goes, but Stuart Griffith is always on the bunny trail.

For the past decade he's hopped around the rabbit show circuit working as an American Rabbit Breeders' Association judge. There are 50 shows a weekend in the United States, he said, and thousands of rabbit breeders compete.

Griffith raises the critters, too; has for 30 years. His hutch holds an assortment of more than 150 in various colors. And for the past 16 years he's been a rabbit registrar for other fans.

"I think rabbit raising is one of the best things there is," he told a reporter. "It's interesting and the people you meet are just really good honest people."

He does more judging than showing.

"You've got to know each and every variety from one end to the other," he said. Among the things he examines are textures, toenails, teeth, ears, eyes, conformation and color.

"It takes years of work with rabbits in order to get a judge's license," he said. There are examinations to be sure the judge knows the 38 breeds and their 150 variations.

Some years he jumps through up to 25 shows, visiting most of the states east of the Mississippi. He takes about a minute to examine the contestants, usually inspecting 250 long-ears a show. A secretary follows him about, jotting down his comments for his reference and for the owners.

"When I go through, say the first time, I try to see if there are any that are going to be disqualified. I look them over from their tails to their noses," he said.

Five rabbits are winnowed from the crowd for the finals. And an overall winner is selected from them.

"The quality of the coat has to be in real good condition," he said. "One rabbit may win a show and then next week it may be in 20th place. He may not be in perfect condition on that particular day."

When Griffith became a rabbit fancier in the '40s, though, his interest wasn't so academic.

"Back then," he said, "there wasn't much meat on the market. They were war times and things were rationed. We didn't know anything about registering rabbits."

Average Man Has 7 Suits

NEW YORK (AP) — The average man has seven suits in his wardrobe, reports a men's apparel specialist.

Marvin A. Blumenfeld, of April-Marcus, Inc., a merchandising consulting firm, says that five of the seven suits are shades of blue or gray, including stripes. One is brown and one is either green, rust or tan.

Blumenfeld says that three of the seven suits can be worn throughout the year, while two of the other four are "summer suits" and two are "winter suits."

Private Colleges Find Pickings Slimmer Today

EDITOR'S NOTE — Posh private colleges can still pretty much pick and choose, but they're finding the ranks are thinning among low- and middle-income students. One school attributes the trend to changing family values: Parents don't want to sacrifice for their kids so much any more.

By JON HALVORSEN
Associated Press Writer
BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) — On May 1, thousands of high school seniors will be making one of the most important decisions of their young lives — which of the nation's elite private colleges to attend.

For some, the day of acceptance may mean fulfillment of an ambition — theirs or their parents. For others, the decision may already have been made for them. Either they were rejected by the schools or they didn't apply because they're part of a growing group whose parents decided against making the huge financial sacrifice.

Although there are fewer low- and middle-income applicants and the overall percentage of high school graduates enrolling in four-year colleges is declining, the top-notch private schools have no shortage of candidates.

Last year, Stanford and Dartmouth accepted only one in four applicants; Harvard, less than one in five; Amherst, less than one in six.

The cost of attending such institutions is staggering. At Bowdoin College, the 184-year-old alma mater of Hawthorne and Longfellow, next fall's 380 freshmen — of 3,600 who applied — will pay $7,250 each, up from $6,550 this year, for tuition, room and board, fees, supplies and incidental expenses.

But at Bowdoin and other private schools, the proportion of students from low- and middle-income families is dropping.

Fewer families who "fall into what the sociologists call the middle class are even applying to places that are very expensive," says William R. Mason, Bowdoin's director of admissions. His office defines middle class as families earning $15,000-$25,000, "and you might even push it up as high as $30,000."

A Bowdoin study comparing its freshman classes over an eight-year period — as the student body increased from 955 to its present 1,350 — shows a growing number of well-to-do students and a decreasing proportion of those less affluent.

The effect of soaring costs on families of modest means hasn't gone unnoticed. At Bowdoin, three alumni, each acting independently, set up substantial scholarship funds earmarked specifically for "middle-income" students.

"That's a new phenomenon," says C. Warren Ring, vice president for development.

In his annual report a year ago, Bowdoin President Roger Howell Jr., noted that given inflation generally and the increased costs of attending Bowdoin, "there is nothing mysterious about the growing need to provide aid to students from upper middle-income families."

"We continue to be troubled, however, about the decreasing numbers of low and lower middle-income students...and we will continue to direct our recruiting effort to lower income students of high ability."

Says Mason: "What we're trying to do here is admit a class without any notion as to whether they can pay" — and then aid every student who needs it. About a third at Bowdoin receive financial aid.

Since 1972-73, the college has met the "calculated financial need" of every low- and middle-income student who qualified academically. In previous years, some students had to be put on a waiting list for financial aid.

In 1968, 35 percent of Bowdoin's freshman aid recipients came from families earning $15,000-$25,000. Now, more than half fall in that bracket.

Walter H. Moulton, director of student aid, says Bowdoin families in the $15,000-$20,000 bracket received average financial aid of $3,450 toward this year's cost of $6,550. The net cost to parents was $3,100 — compared with $3,205 for in-state students living on campus at the University of Maine at Orono.

Families earning $20,000-$25,000 received an average of $2,750, leaving them with a net cost of $3,800.

But even with the financial aid available, Bowdoin and similar institutions see a "declining public" among low- and middle-income families.

One reason, Mason says, is that middle-class values have changed — parents are less willing to make the great financial sacrifices they once did to pay for their children's college education.

Mason, who has spent 11 years in admissions work at Yale, Williams and now Bowdoin, adds: "The ethic that prevailed (among parents) when I first started was, 'Don't worry, we'll make the sacrifice.'"

Now, he says, more and more middle-class families are using their disposable income "as a kind of payment back for all their hard work" by spending it on themselves.

The study surveyed 10,000 families who applied for student financial aid for the current school year. The higher the parents' income, the study found, the less willing they were to contribute what was expected of them — based on income and other assets — toward their children's education.

Joe Paul Case, associate director of the College Scholarship Service, believes that middle-income families' ability, or willingness, to pay for a college education "perhaps is influenced by their own expectations of what is, for lack of a better term, 'the good life.'"

Case says it's a myth "that middle-income families don't qualify for aid — they do," but when it comes to applying for admission it often is the parents' perceptions that count. "If they're perceiving they're less able to pay, then the perception becomes the reality."

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RICHTER INSTITUTE

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The early part of the day is fine for handling tasks you've had little time for during the rest of the week. You are not under good aspects now to force any issues with family members.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Contact good friends early in the day and include them in a plan you have in mind. Allow time to engage in favorite hobby.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Your efficiency is high now and you can accomplish much in creative activities. Strive for increased harmony at home.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) A new project you have in mind needs more study before putting it in operation. Allow time for recreational activities you enjoy.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You have fine creative ideas now that should be put in operation without delay. Take no chances with your health.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Come to a fine understanding with family members early in the day. Later avoid one who has an eye on your assets. Use common sense.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Outline projects you want to work on in the months ahead, and make sure there are no obstacles in the path of progress.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Show increased devotion for closest tie. Make plans for the days ahead and be sure to handle financial affairs intelligently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Study a home situation and try to improve it in every way you can. Make plans to have greater abundance in the future.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Be sure not to comment about things you know little about. Make plans to improve your social life in the days ahead.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) A good day to study facts and figures for any improvements to property you may want to make. Relax at home tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Do what you have promised to do early in the day since later something may up that needs your undivided attention.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Follow your hunches early in the day, since they are likely to be far off target later. A trusted friend can give you the advice you need.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be most ambitious early in life, so be sure to give as fine an education as you can in preparation for a most successful life. A good family life is in this chart. Be sure to give good ethical and spiritual training early in life.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to YOU!

(c) 1978, McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Use your best thought to think out new ways for achieving excellent results in whatever your activities happen to be. Consult with both men and women who can be of help to you. However, make it a point to think in the broadest possible terms. Avoid romantic problems.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Reach decisions for the future that will bring you more happiness and success. Invite some bigwigs into your home and gain their favor.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Have talks with those in the outside world and know what the trends are for the future. Plan to gain your goals more readily. Contact out-of-towners and get good results.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You can get good advice from experts about improving whatever is of a monetary nature. Get involved in civic work that will add to prestige.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Use good judgment in making changes you have in mind and get good results thereby. Making new worthwhile contacts is wise.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Find a new system for handling your part of any venture more efficiently. A good evening for the romantic side of your life.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Be more in tune with regular partners and have more success in the future. A powerful person you know can be most helpful to you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Adding more color and artistry to whatever work you are doing will bring more benefits, satisfaction. A bigwig is watching you and will give you favors you need.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Make arrangements for social pleasures early, then get busy at practical affairs. Showing more affection for a loved one is wise.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Find out what it is your family expects of you and then state your aims and come to a true accord. You understand how a new project can help you also.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) State your aims to close ties and gain their aid in obtaining them. Seek backing from a bigwig. A visit with kin brings good results.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Your monetary matters need a boost and you can gain the aid of others easily. Improve property and make it more valuable, comfortable. Avoid one who is a troublemaker.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Don't be afraid to ask others for assistance so that you can improve your career, position in life. Be active and get much accomplished.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be most capable at whatever is concerned with organizations, big projects and the like. Teach early to be objective otherwise the great promise in this chart will be lost. Some musical training is also wise here.

Czech Cleaning Jobs Acquire More Status

By IVA DRAPALOVA
PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Cleaning women and janitors enjoy new status in Czechoslovakia, where an acute labor shortage makes scrubbing floors profitable.

A Prague evening newspaper recently carried a cartoon showing a manager telling an aide: "Remember, everyone in our office can be replaced — except the cleaning woman."

The shortage of labor — the government estimates there are 550,000 unfilled jobs in this country of 15 million inhabitants — is encouraging many people to moonlight for extra cash.

A young woman with a degree in engineering says she supplements her monthly salary of 2,500 crowns (about $250) by spending an hour each evening cleaning a government office building. Her additional take: 800 crowns a month ($80). The average wage in Czechoslovakia is 2,300 crowns.

The new breed of cleaning people does not dawdle and gossip, but works as fast as possible. Often they are paid by the job, not the hour.

"I was flabbergasted when I saw her the first time," an economist said of his new housecleaner. "A distinguished, elegant lady walked in. First she took off her fur coat, then her jewelry."

"She stacked the rings and the necklace on a desk, donned a smock, covered her hairdo with a kerchief and went to work."

A university instructor joins his moonlighting wife for a two-hour stint cleaning a bank.

"I could earn the extra money coaching," the instructor says, "but this is such relaxing work."

Would-be doctors often take off a year to do menial jobs in hospitals so that they can have priority among candidates for medical school the following year.

At a Prague institute of technology a third-year student who wanted to interrupt his studies for a year said he was told he could be sure of readmittance only if he spent the year washing dishes in the school's canteen.

The classic European cleaning woman with her bucket and rag has become a revered figure.

A new Czech movie shows the head of a clinic arriving at work, where he is deferentially received by all his subordinates until he descends a staircase being cleaned by a woman of ample proportions.

The self-confident doctor suddenly grows insecure under her baleful stare and obediently wipes his feet on the wet rag before passing her, doffing his hat in greeting.

Some cleaning women moonlight by doing still more janitorial work. One into disclose her income, but could well earn much more than the people she works for. Both she and her husband draw a pension and have recently inherited a house and garden.

The north Bohemian daily Pruboj gave its readers instructions on how to handle cleaning women because "people doing cleaning are so few today that if we are not super polite, we shall have to do the cleaning ourselves."

Preserving Fish From Dying Out

DOLWYDDELAN, Wales (AP) — Lake Flynnon Llugwy in the Welsh mountains is being stocked with more than 3,000 arctic char, a cousin of the salmon, to save the species from extinction.

Dr. Graeme Harris, the Welsh Water Authority's fisheries expert, said the fish can only survive in deep cold water. Its present home, Lake Llyn Peris, is being used for an electric power development that will lower the level and heat up the water in a few years.

Spawn taken from the fish in 1976 were raised in a hatchery until they reached their present size of six to eight inches.

Cable TV Gets Viewers Into The Act

By TIM MILLER
COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — When the Warner Cable Corp. introduced "feedback television" last fall it promised to revolutionize the industry. For the initial 14,000 customers the promise has come true.

Warner's enterprise — called QUBE — has many facets and has profoundly affected the viewing habits of its customers. It is a prototype for other systems.

The two-way television channels allow viewers to participate in shows in progress by pushing buttons on a small console at home. The viewers can answer questions, cast votes on issues or simply select their programming as with conventional cable systems.

The premium or pay channels allow viewers to select first-run movies and programs specifically created for QUBE. The community service channels bring town meetings, cultural events and instruction programs.

And the system carries the traditional television channels.

A recent example of participatory television was the Academy Award presentations. QUBE voters cast their ballots in the individual categories and the results were tabulated by Warner's computers.

The results were immediately flashed on the screen and Warner later mailed awards to the winners.

Live programming has also become a hallmark of the system.

When the operation began, live programs ran only from 4 to 8 p.m. They have now been expanded to 1 to 8 p.m. five days a week.

The live broadcasts include kid shows, games shows, community service programs, sporting events and cultural programs. And the response to the live programs has pleasantly surprised Warner officials.

"We have been overwhelmed with the amount of letters and calls we have received," said Estelle Lehning, public relations manager for QUBE. "The response has been fantastic."

A good example of responding to customer demand was the broadcast of Ohio State University basketball games. When the commercial stations failed to contract for the games, customers asked QUBE to pick them up, and it did.

Lehning also notes that, "We had a lot of customers call in wanting to see old shows — Topper, Ozzie and Harriet, the Cisco Kid, shows like that. So what we did was create an entire channel with nothing but 'oldies.' It runs for 18 hours a day."

"We used to call the local stations and complain about preemptions, things like that," said John Wagner, one of the first viewers to sign up for QUBE. "Oh, they would listen and then just say, 'we're sorry.' But the people QUBE did more than listen. They give viewers what they want."

One 5-year-old wrote in and said he wanted to have a movie party at home and wanted to know if QUBE would show some children's movies.

QUBE acquired the rights for two first-run Disney movies — Pete's Dragon and Candleshoe — and then called the five-year-old and invited him and his friends to have their party at the studio while the shows were aired.

Now, QUBE is planning to regularly air what it calls a "Disney package."

In a random sample of QUBE customers one of the few complaints heard was that QUBE charged twice if a premium movie was watched twice by the viewer. The company has changed that.

"We now air the movies about 8 times during a day. And if people watch it several times they are only charged once. So the kids can watch it at one time and the parents at another, if they desire," said Lehning.

Warner officials are reluctant to discuss in detail the financial standing of the project but estimates are that Warner spent $10 million for programming and equipment.

The 14,000 customers pay $10.95 each a month for the service. While the system has steadily expanded, Warner's hopes for QUBE lie with a nationwide cable system network. The company is already looking at other markets.

"We're studying Pittsburgh, Akron and Fort Wayne, Ind. This is very preliminary, but we do hope to expand," said Lehning.

The big money the system can generate can only come from nationwide expansion and the customer response from Ohio indicates the system can "play in Peoria" and across the United States.

What customers say may indicate the system's potential. "I firmly believe this could revolutionize the television industry," says Stan Franks, a Columbus resident who has been a customer for two months. "You can receive just about whatever you want."

"The customers truly create the programming. You don't have all this nonsense about Nielsen ratings and so on — if only a few people want a certain type of programming, QUBE has provided it," said Franks.

"Perhaps if they went nationwide they would become callous like the major networks. But, I doubt it. Because their existence is built on customer demand." Franks and other customers said the price of QUBE is well worth it.

"We spend about 20 bucks a month, counting extra charges for movies and so on," Franks said. "You're getting an entertainment package that nothing else comes close to matching."

Infuriated By Stamp Picture

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The work of art familiarly known as "Whistler's Mother" was the subject of the first Mother's Day stamp ever issued, but it infuriated art lovers because details of the portrait were missing, the shape was changed and a vase of carnations — the official Mother's Day flower — was added, according to Hallmark historian Sally Hopkins.

"Arrangement in Grey and Black," as the work of art is actually titled, was painted in 1871 by James Whistler. It was exhibited in the United States in 1934, the year the commemorative stamp was issued. The stamp has become a collector's item.

IT GOES LIKE THIS . . . Balladine explains, instructing dancers and dance teachers in some of the finer techniques that go to make a belly dancer something more than what he termed "just a body shaking."

'STRIKING A POSE . . . Donna Whitley and Roman (Bert) Balladine strike a publicity type pose during the belly dancing seminar conducted by Balladine.

Thoughts From A Dancer

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

"I don't understand how it happened, this sudden explosion, this fad for belly dancing," Roman (Bert) Balladine exclaimed, gesturing emphatically with outspread hands. "It is definitely a craze now. I hope I didn't have anything to do with it."

Balladine made clear he has nothing against people being attracted to this centuries old dance form but that he finds it puzzling to try to fathom "what it is that drives American women to this dance in such numbers."

"Ten years ago," he added, "you say belly dancing, and most people say, 'Oh, yes, like at the carnival.' Now anywhere, you mention it and everybody knows about it, do it themselves or have a friend who does."

Balladine, acknowledged as one of the foremost male belly dancers in America today, was in Greenville this past week as the guest of Donna Whitley Ms. Whitley, a local teacher of the dance form, was one of Balladine's early students in San Francisco in 1969. "That was before so many people are belly dancing," he noted. While here, he gave a seminar to Ms. Whitley's students and to teachers from Havelock, Jacksonville, Raleigh and other North Carolina towns — all female.

So Many Teachers
Again emphasizing the phenomenon of the contemporary craze for belly dancing, Balladine commented on the notion of instant learning he finds entertained by so many in their efforts to become belly dancers — and to infect others with their enthusiasm.

"You cannot imagine how it is," he said in his rapid, slightly accented way of speaking English. "Like in San Francisco. These ladies buy a book, take four lessons. And!" he threw his hands. "What happens? The next thing is they start teaching, giving lessons in the laundry rooms of apartment buildings and condominiums. It is crazy, this situation! I think today there are as many teachers of belly dancing as students."

Despite his bewilderment at the spread of belly dancing, and its being an almost exclusively a domain for females dancers as far as America is concerned, Balladine shrugged, saying, "Why should I complain if they enjoy, if it makes them feel good. And," he added, "It makes me happy to see people enjoy what they are doing."

What's In A Name
The term "belly dancing" is, Balladine admits, "perhaps a good name as any. Myself, I like the name abdominal dancing if you must name it for some part of the body."

Balladine commented that traditionally, "in Europe, in the Middle East, people call it Arabic dancing. But, that term is not too true, because this dance is very popular with Persians and Turkish people who are not Arabs."

"Originally, a long time ago, everybody called it Oriental dancing. Now," he shrugged, "you see that can confuse. Here, in America, you say Oriental dance, people think, ah-hah, dances of India, Japan, or maybe Korea."

He related an incident of a few years ago in San Francisco when a belly dancer teacher announced classes in Oriental dances to be given at a YWCA.

"I hear they were shocked," he laughed, "when they come and find it is belly dancing classes."

"I must say," Balladine confessed, "that to me the term belly dancing is objectionable." However, Balladine feels he may understand the underlying appeal of the term "belly dancing."

"It is this," he explained. "American people have in their minds the thought of Little Egypt and the hoochie-koochie girls at the fair when they think of the dance. It sounds a little juicy, and we all like to think something we do is just a bit naughty."

Viewpoint Changes

"Now, it is becoming different," Balladine avers. "The whole syndrome is not now supported by say, three dirty old men. Belly dancing is now part of the whole community, and this is good."

A major reason so many women in particular are turning to belly dancing, Balladine is convinced, is "it is perfect for building a woman's confidence. Most people, you know, don't like their bodies."

"And most people prefer to exercise with a make believe atmosphere than to build a body with something as painful as push-ups. It is certainly more fun to put on a lovely costume, to paint up and exercise. And deep down, most people want to be dancers."

Born Into Show Business

Balladine first named the country of his birth, then asked "can you just say Middle Europe. You see, we are political refugees. I was born in a circus, in a family of acrobats and dancers. We played in Europe and the Middle East."

"It was not a big circus, not like you have today, what you see on television. Ours," he laughed, "was a circus that when we went someplace everybody cried out, 'Watch your women folk and lock up the chickens, the circus is coming.'"

Later, Balladine went on his own as a dancer. "I went everywhere," he explained, "In the Middle East, the Orient. It was a way to make a living, but sometimes it was not too good a life. Like in Kuala Lumpur. Oh boy! It was so hot there. It was in Hong Kong that I decide to come to the United States." That was in 1962.

Asked why he decided to settle in the U.S., Balladine answered quickly. "For a good reason. It is the good life here. I hear so much about hard times today, and yes, for some this is true. But I think nobody can starve here unless they have the lock-jaw."

A Contented Man

Balladine, a wiry, energetic man, says he is a contented bachelor, happy with his life style near the town of Novato, California, a few miles north of San Francisco.

"I am lucky, I have what I need," he said. "I have a truck, a little land, a cow, some goats. It is enough."

What he doesn't like is the ultra intensity of the glittering show business show as personified in Las Vegas. "I have worked there. It is a most artificial life. It is not a good life, this working all night and sleeping all day. Of course," he smiled, "I would prefer not to work at all, but you know that cannot be. I do like teaching, and that is enough."

Another dislike he voiced is based on experiences he has had on television shows. "There was one show where this lady doing the show would not look at me, but stared into the camera. She was like stainless steel with lots of make-up. Then another time, a man doing a show on me tried to twist things about, like he wanted to make my work seem something not nice. The first question he asked me was this — "Belly dancing is a very sexual dance, isn't it? I told him 'I hope mine is.' I think that confused him, what he had in mind. I hope so."

Males As Belly Dancers

In view of the fact that in Morocco, Algeria, Egypt, Turkey, Persia, Greece and in other North African and Middle Eastern countries, as well as to some extent in European countries, large numbers of males are performers in belly dancing, Balladine was asked what his opinion was on this art form becoming popular among American males.

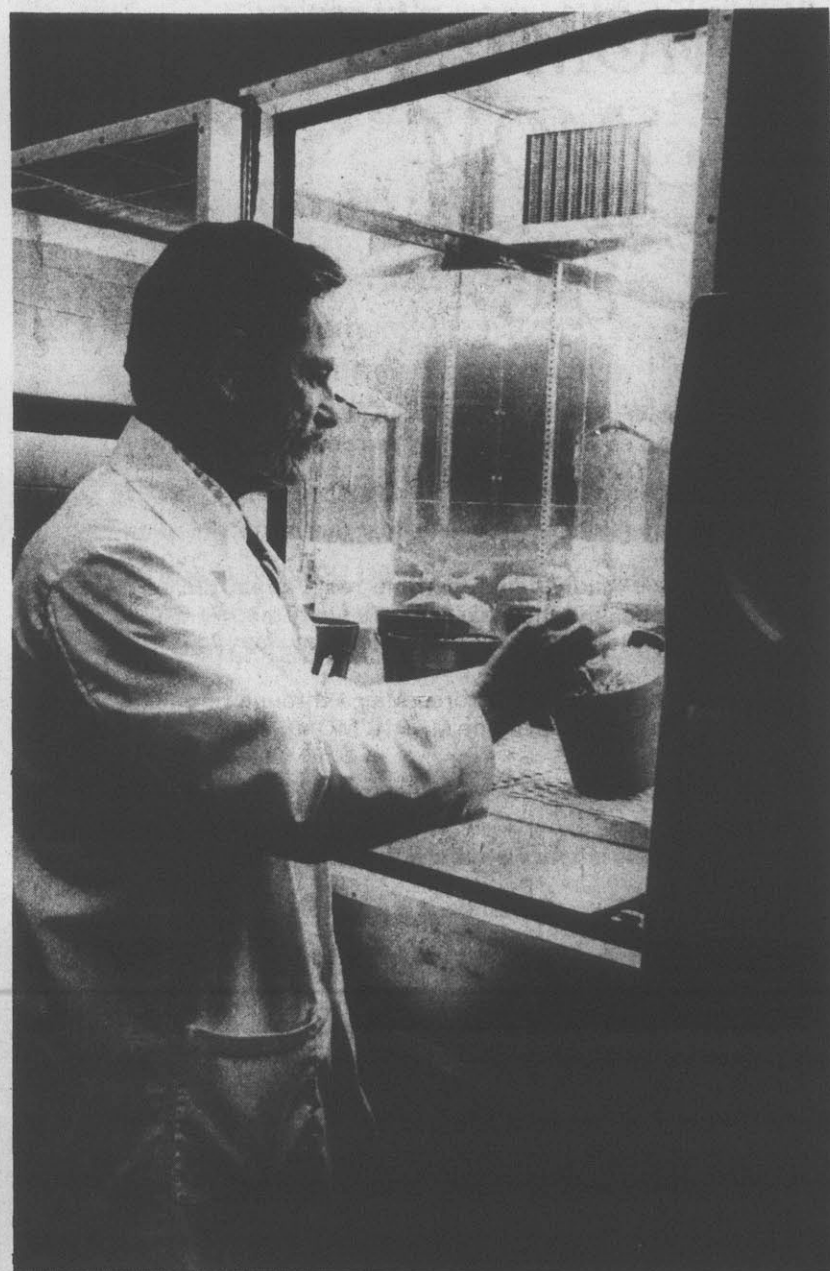

He obviously relished answering this question.

"You have many farming people here, I understand," he began. "Try to think what would happen today if some strong, red-blooded American farm boy one day goes to his father and says, 'Father, I do not want to be a farmer. I want to leave the farm, make my living being a belly dancer.' Tell me, what do you think the father would say to this boy?"

Nonetheless, Balladine feels the time has come when this will change. "It is like men in ballet dancing. Now, this is respectable. It is no longer true that a man earning his living in dancing is a bad thing, or an effeminate thing. So, I think the day will come when some farm boy can become a great American belly dancer."

Ms. Whitley confirmed this straw-in-the wind possibility. "There is a couple of local men who are anxious to take lessons in belly dancing, once there are enough others to join them in making up a class," she said.

The seminar conducted by Balladine here last week was held in the activity room of the newly designated Agnes Fullilove Community School.

Phytotron's Controlled Environment

By Gloria T. Jones, NCSU News Bureau

RALEIGH — Florida heat and Alaskan cold on the same day in the same place? Scientists conducting research in North Carolina State University's Phytotron "enjoy" such temperatures daily.

"Phytotron" is the name of a highly complex laboratory. The word itself is a combination of Greek words for growth and chamber.

The NCSU Phytotron gives scientists precisely-controlled environments for research on plants from seeds to blossoms to harvests for Tar Heel farmers and city gardeners — and for the consuming public.

"Some studies could not be conducted at all without the Phytotron," says Dr. Robert J. Downs, Phytotron director and a botanist and horticulturalist.

In the Phytotron, scientists are researching root and leaf systems, the chemistry of plants, and how plants are affected by the environment. In rooms as hermetically guarded as operating rooms in a hospital, researchers study the effects of temperature, light, water, soils and air pollution on plants.

Isolated chambers allow scientists to investigate plant diseases of the "money" crops of North Carolina and the flowers city people decorate their yards with.

North Carolinians — and citizens of other states — benefit directly from the fact that the facility substantially shortens research. The NCSU research findings are passed along to the farmer and horticulturalist. Those findings include knowledge of plant growth, control of plant diseases and other vital lessons for this state's $3 billion (in 1977) agricultural economy.

A plant's life involves a maze of complicated chemical reactions which respond to the environment in different ways, Downs observes. Downs adds that a plant breeder would have difficulty measuring fluctuations in protein content of beans under greenhouse or field conditions. In the Phytotron, the professor-planter simulates an environment, resulting in smaller variations in measurement.

National Support

The NCSU Phytotron and another unit at Duke University make up the Southeastern Plant Environment Laboratories (SPEL), supported by the National Science Foundation, the NCSU Agricultural Experiment Station and other sources.

The NCSU Phytotron was built a decade ago with $2,214,000 in grants from the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, the National Science Foundation and seven tobacco companies.

The National Science Foundation has provided approximately $500,000 for support of the Phytotron since it was completed in 1968. Downs notes that some 150 research projects have been conducted during that time.

For North Carolinians, Knowledge

Therefore, the scientist and the North Carolina farmer can get more accurate information on how much highly priced fertilizer to use on his crops.

Commercial flower growers have to maintain certain temperatures and day-lengths in order to have their flowers ready for the market at Easter, Mother's Day and Christmas. These florists have gotten the facts they need from the NCSU Phytotron.

Keeping the greenhouses warm is expensive in energy, so NCSU researchers try to find out how low they can drop temperatures at night without plant damage.

In the Phytotron, five, six or a dozen different temperatures can be used for experiments. Some experiments have been conducted with 35 different temperature combinations, Downs says.

Tobacco, Tomatoes and Marigolds

One Phytotron study is concerned with formulating a mathematical model for tobacco growth, using environmental factors and weather records.

Others are looking at the effects of temperature and air pollution on tomatoes, peppers, oats and marigolds.

Soybeans — one of the new "money" crops of this state — are under intensive research in the Phytotron.

Scientists are working to learn more about the relationships between growth and nitrogen accumulation in plants, the effects of temperature on plant growth and disease, what happens when crops don't get enough water, and how light affects growth.

The questions are as varied as nature is complex.

NCSU Phytotron studies also have been conducted with small animals, such as lizards, salamanders and flying squirrels, and with insects such as the boll weevil and hornworms.

Research Around The Clock

NCSU professors and colleagues from other institutions in the Southeast keep the Phytotron booked solid with experiments, according to Downs.

The 24-hour per day and seven-day per week schedule is jammed until mid-June. Research projects run from a few days to three or four months in 55 growth chambers with their highly sophisticated germinators, incubators, air pollution treatment rooms and "photoperiod" rooms, which can simulate length of day at any latitude.

Research projects carried out in the Phytotron cover a wide range of plant studies — from germinations of seeds and tissue culture to problems affecting food crops and flowering plants.

Burlyque Remembered At Old Troc's Last Show

By HAROLD H. MARTIN
PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The costumes had come out of mothballs and the combo had no name but there was wall to wall audience as old fashioned burlesque made one final gasp at the "The Troc," a faded theater destined for a new future.

In its plushier years the Trocadero, an 1880 Victorian structure, hosted such comic celebrities as Abbott and Costello, and peeling pretties like Gypsy Rose Lee.

"We had 10-12 people — comedians, straight men, acrobats, singers. We had a wire act and a bicycle act and a seven piece band," said Maxie Furman, a top banana with fast patter who played the Troc in the 1930s, and managed it from 1957-72.

"Between engagements," as he put it, with Ann Corio's "This Was Burlesque," Furman had come up from Atlantic City, N.J., to help Wynn Moore, Merrill Reese and Jack O'Reilly put on the Troc's last burlesque show, before it became a Chinese movie theater.

The three men are the early morning team for radio station WWDB-FM and developed the idea after a casual remark from Moore that "One thing I'd never done was a comedy routine at a burlesque house and it was something I should do before I die."

Arrangements were made with the theater's owners and tickets offered to listeners. Within days the show was sold out and a second night added and sold. The audience of 500 was nearly half female, and mostly of the age that remembered earlier days when a show at the Troc was the highlight of an evening on the town.

"This is pure nostalgia," said Moore before the last show went on.

Sitting on hard wooden chairs or cracked old leather seats, they were promised a full show "if the stage holds up" and their first treat came from Furman, dressed in a cloth cap, baggy pants and flowing tie.

His standup routine included a little remembrance of one night at the Troc when only one man was in the audience.

"You're a brave fellow, I says, and just for you I'm going to do the whole show."

"Okay, but hurry up, he says. I'm the janitor and want to clean up."

The audience had heard it before but laughed as they did at his naughtier lines, cast from a creaky stage over an orchestra pit filled with rubble and the shell of a grand piano.

And then came Red Hot Pepper, the Italian Bombshell, a local ecadysiat who, in keeping with the modesty of days gone by, kept a little bit of her leopard skin costume on.

Red Hot Pepper, and the dusky beauty, Yolanda Lace, were some of the last in a long line of girls to carry names more exotic than their acts, thanks to Furman.

When the Troc was declining and couldn't afford the salaries of the class acts, Furman said, he tried to dress up second rate acts with unusual names. Since the idea occurred the week John Glenn made his first orbit, the first girl to be so dubbed became Miss Luna Landing.

To follow were Bermuda Schwartz, Ana Cyn, Miss Pain Killer of 1971, Melba the Toast of the Town and many others.

Furman was also the center of several of the night's blackout sketches. In one he played the fast talking judge to Moore's indignant prosecutor. The sketch owes its title, "Here Comes the Judge," to a cry Furman makes as he explores the upper reaches of Jade Green's thigh while trying to determine why a young defendant (Reese) was intent on committing robbery.

It ends, almost, with Jade declaring in suprise, "But judge, I didn't know he was after my money."

In another Furman was the country cousin enjoying the hospitality of his city kin's (O'Reilly) French maid, alias Jade Green in a diminutive black skirt and tinier apron who wants more than Furman can provide.

Jade and Furman combined again in the quarreling husband and wife sketch that claims to have inspired Jackie Gleason's popular television series, "The Honeymooners."

When Furman wasn't taking his baggy pants off, or putting them on, there was the banter, some bawdy, some repeatable: "When you married me you told me you worshipped the ground I walked on," said petulant Jade.

"I thought your old man owned the property," shot back Furman.

Spiced between were the burlesque girls such as Marilyn Marshall, who began as a chorus girl in Pittsburgh 25 years before. As the drums rolled she revived for one last swing her tasse twirling act — first clockwise, then in counter rotation and then in opposite directions.

Princess Renee added a fire dance that lit more than cigarettes.

Did Painting In 2 Parts

LONDON (AP) — Portrait painters of the past, whose clients might have been too grand to visit a studio, got over the difficulty by painting the picture in two parts.

The cleaning of a painting of Madame de Pompadour at London's National Gallery recently revealed her head and arms were painted on a separate piece of canvas from the rest of the life-size portrait.

Phyllis Rowlands, information officer at the gallery, said: "It wasn't unusual for 18th-century French portraitists to paint the head and shoulders of a sitter on a small canvas and then stitch it into the center of a larger canvas and complete the painting. Often the artist had to travel to see the sitter, taking his canvas with him, so it had to be of manageable size. He would paint the head from life, and finish the rest of the body and the clothes working from a model in his studio."

The man who made this portrait in 1763 and 1764 of the famous mistress of King Louis XV of France was Francois Hubert Drouais.

Pompadour died the month before the picture was finished, at the age of 42, from a wasting sickness. Drouais shows her embroidering on a frame, her interest in the arts depicted by the mandolin, an artist's folio and a bookcase.

DUSTLESS ART

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Housekeepers at The University of Kansas' new $5-million Helen Foresman Spencer Museum of Art are finding dust hard to find.

The museum's older artworks are enclosed in special dust-tight display cases made of "water white" glass, a non-tinted material, which contain filtered lighting so that the ultraviolet rays won't fade the rare objects displayed inside.

A highly sophisticated air filtering system also has been installed in the new museum to further assure the absence of dust, say museum officials.

Earl Butz: Has Jokes, Farm Chat, And Will Travel

By JERRY LEBE
WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — An off-color racial joke cost Earl Butz his job as agriculture secretary, but he has bounced back as one of the Republicans' most popular orators thanks to his one-liners.

The jokes are a staple of any Butz speech, along with attacks on liberals, consumerists, environmentalists and Democrats and words of praise for the United States and its people, farmers, free enterprise and the GOP.

"God gave me the gift of gab," admitted the 68-year-old Butz, who makes about 200 speeches a year from coast-to-coast at meetings both political and non-partisan.

His speaking fees range up to $2,500 or so. Butz keeps some fees while others, including those from talks in Indiana, go to the Dean Butz Scholarship Fund at Purdue University. He estimates nearly $10,000 went to the fund last year.

But Butz, who also produces a five-day-a-week radio show carried on about 70 stations, is making more than the $60,000 a year he received as a cabinet officer in the Nixon and Ford administrations.

"I'm in considerable demand, especially among farm people because my name is a good one in rural areas," Butz said. "I'm booked into 1979."

Butz career in Washington ended after John Dean made public an off-color joke the agriculture secretary had told privately. The Democrats made it an issue and Butz finally resigned under pressure from the job he held three years under Nixon and Ford.

"They made me a martyr," Butz said in an interview at his modestly appointed office on the fifth floor of the Krannert Building at Purdue, where he is dean emeritus of the School of Agriculture.

"They" are his critics — mostly Democrats who in 1976 were trying to oust the Republicans from the White House. But the experience hasn't stopped the irrepressible jokester.

"I have a pretty good recall system," he said. "When you have a large audience it helps to keep them on their toes, but I seldom use a joke unless it fits the occasion."

He recently asked a farm audience, "How did one of them federal agencies published a booklet telling you that cow manure is slippery?"

"The Carter administration says it's going to level out the booms and busts in farm prices. Notice that the first thing they intend to level out is the booms."

But many of the jokes are hoary chestnuts tossed off strictly for laughs: "And the third cannibal says, 'I like politicians; they're fat and juicy, but hard to clean.'"

Then, without blinking an eye, Butz will reel off statistics on the prices of hogs, cattle and grain or cite figures on exports and reserves. And he has an opinion on all his topics.

Butz popularity on the chicken-and-peas circuit has prompted some Republicans to ask him to run for public office. "I'm 68 and have eight years in Washington at a responsible level," responded Butz. "The only thing I'm running for is good government."

"The Congress of the United States is a disgrace. It's got no sense of fiscal responsibility. They treat money like it's going out of style. They're the chief source of inflation in the country."

Butz also thought congressmen "are not well read" and are "captives of organized labor."

Nor did Butz, sometimes accused of being part of the agribusiness complex, think much of back-to-nature farming enthusiasts.

"We were organic farmers when I was kid," Butz recalled of his youth in northeastern Indiana. "But before we do it today, somebody must decide which 50 million Americans must starve."

"It would be impossible to farm the way we farmed when I was a kid and still feed 216 million Americans. There's always a limited market for organic food, but to say we're not going to use chemicals in producing food is simply to ignore the facts of life."

Butz didn't think much of Carter administration farm policies and criticized the president for first attacking and then praising last year's farm bill.

"It was bad legislation because it set up the government as a market for American agriculture," he said. "We are becoming the world's primary warehouse, increasingly at taxpayer expense."

"Here we sit with the world's most productive farmers, the world's most efficient agriculture and we're the only nation asking farmers to cut back."

"This is a consumer dominated government. It's a consumer dominated Department of Agriculture. That's one reason farmers are resistive. They feel they don't have a good spokesman in the Department of Agriculture any more."

But he lauded the administration for extending credit to farmers and for pushing hard on export promotion.

The attempted farm strike "is not having much impact on the economy," he said.

"It served a useful purpose for a time in calling the nation's attention to what indeed is a serious cost-price squeeze for some farmers, but it's now past the point of usefulness. It's counterproductive."

"You can't strike a biological industry like agriculture. You can't go out to the cow and say, 'Look, Bossie, we're shutting it off for today.' She gets mastitis and you make hamburger out of her."

Butz said he will talk to any group that will listen, but he hasn't addressed any welfare groups or liberal organizations.

"They don't invite me," he said, "but I'd go if they called."

As dean emeritus at Purdue, Butz does give speeches to classes on campus, something he finds easier now than when he was on the faculty since "I don't have to grade papers any more."

His schedule seems hectic, but Butz said he "works relaxed" and has time to spend with his wife, Mary Emma, who occasionally travels with him when he's on the road for long periods. They have two grown sons — a research economist and a graduate student.

"I get plenty of sleep and avoid stress," Butz said of his schedule. "I enjoy people." And telling those jokes.

Speaking of Your Health...

Those Old Wives' Tales

Fads, myths, superstition and fiction seem to migrate to all forms of medical treatment. Many of these far-fetched ideas have been handed down from generation to generation for centuries. There are probably hundreds of such notions, many of which actually have validity.

"A lean horse wins a long race." This is completely true. All modern health statistics substantiate the fact that obesity is an enemy of longevity. Obesity and high blood pressure are often co-workers that threaten health.

"Gout is a rich man's disease." False. Gout is a disorder in which uric acid accumulates to high levels in the blood stream. There is no relationship between gout and one's social or economic level.

"I have thin, tired blood. I need a special tonic." Thin, tired, worn blood is not a medical diagnosis. If a blood anemia exists, it can be determined only by specific blood studies. Expensive vitamins and supplements are usually not necessary. When a deficiency is found to be present, the doctor recommends proper medication.

"When once the sinuses are washed out, they always have to be washed out." Not true. Sinuses are irrigated or "washed out" only when an infection is present or when an infection is suspected. If pus is found in the sinuses, irrigation is repeated until the infection subsides. If an infection does not recur, irrigation of the sinuses may never again be necessary.

"A severe fright during pregnancy can be responsible for a birthmark on the newborn's body." This old wives' tale has no validity.

"The best first aid for a burn is to cover it with grease." False, false, false. The best first-aid treatment for ordinary household burns is the immediate application of icy cold water.

"Eating a lot of sweets causes diabetes." False. Diabetes is a disorder that affects the utilization of sugars. When the hormones manufactured in the pancreas (insulin) inadequately control the sugar metabolism, diabetes results. When once diabetes has been diagnosed, the control of sweets and sugar is of vital importance.

"I know when it's going to rain. My joints ache." Although this has never been scientifically explained, there is no doubt that many people can anticipate bad weather within 24 hours by their aching back.

"Don't wear rubbers in the house. It's bad for the eyes." Not true, but why would you wear rubbers in the house, anyway?

"Help a black eye with a piece of beef-steak." True, but cool wet towels do the same thing and are far less expensive.

Gang Leader Of Past Is A Counselor

By DAVE CARPENTER
ATLANTIC, Iowa (AP) — Herman Wrice, ex-Philadelphia juvenile gang leader turned author and social counselor, has found his own personal "Disneyland" in this quiet southwestern Iowa town of 8,500.

Being black and from an urban background have been anything but a handicap for him in white, rural Iowa.

"I haven't found the problems any different," he said in a telephone interview. "But I get more satisfaction here because most of the clients seem to respond a lot better than in Philadelphia."

Wrice, 38, came to Iowa last October to become deputy director of the Alcohol Assistance Agency Inc., where he counsels troubled youths and adults from a 10-county area.

He was formerly director of the Young Great Society in the Mantua section of Philadelphia, a group he helped start in 1965 to provide jobs and an activities center for teen-agers, a halfway house for drug addicts, and day-care and medical centers.

Both Wrice and the Young Great Society have been praised for producing a self-supporting operation that could be duplicated in the inner city.

Wrice said he was "elated" at what he found to be "a more exciting challenge" than the all-black neighborhood programs in which he worked for 15 years.

The agency director explained that he had found "the feeling for one another to be a little stronger" in Atlantic.

"The work ethic seems to be strongly embedded in their backgrounds. They have a tendency to want to accomplish more, whereas most of the guys in Philadelphia didn't want to work," he said.

It was at the urging of his wife, Jeanne, 38, who plans to teach nearby, that Wrice accepted the job offer at the agency. "The decision to come here was basically hers but I have come to love it," he said.

The Wrices have 17 children, 11 of whom were adopted, and five still living at home.

"When we arrived, I thought, 'This is a Disneyland,'" he said. "The people are very friendly, very open. They're polite, religious and proud. They have helped us and accepted us."

The reaction to Wrice at the agency appears to be similar to what it was in Philadelphia — highly favorable.

Wrice grew up in the slums of West Philadelphia and led "corner boys" in gang wars 25 years ago.

He wanted to go into the ministry before deciding he preferred social work and enrolled at Temple University. He then earned his master's degree at the University of Pennsylvania and went on to get his doctorate, studying at Harvard and in Japan, England and France, he said.

While finding the problems basically the same, Wrice said the people he worked with in Iowa were noticeably different from the youths in Philadelphia. The lifestyle is slower, the stress on education is greater and schools have relatively few financial problems, he said.

"They put a lot of emphasis on learning," he said, noting statistics which give Iowa the highest literacy rate of any state.

"There is less crime and there are fewer things for kids to get into here. Therefore, they spend more time learning and less time getting into trouble," he said.

But the lack of "congestion of other people" in a rural setting can also create unique problems, the counselor said.

"There are a lot of problems from depression, from the distances of people," he said, adding that alcoholism jumps 50 percent during the "idle" months of December to March.

Awareness of the problem is another obstacle, Wrice said, as many people "have not quite understood yet that alcoholism is a disease. They accept the problems as everyday problems but they're really gigantic problems."

That attitude is not unlike that of his former co-workers in Philadelphia, where Wrice had successfully worked for the federal appropriation of $6 million for a housing project and had also written a book on housing.

Eight Million Robin Hoods In The Land

By TOMMY YATES
LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Eight million Americans participate in the sport of Robin Hood and Dan Cupid.

But it is likely that neither Robin nor Dan would recognize the equipment used by modern archers.

Most archery now involves hunting. Modern equipment allows participants to be more accurate than before and new developments have led to construction of bows that require less physical strength to use, allowing more women to get involved in the sport.

Because hunting by bow and arrow provides a greater challenge, many hunters are putting aside their firearms and getting involved in archery.

"I've been bow hunting a long time," said John Heuston of Little Rock, "and I've killed 11 deer. I put my gun up and haven't hunted with a rifle in years. The rifle is such a technological superior instrument it doesn't interest me any more."

Heuston said there are many like him who enjoy the extended hunting season for bow hunters.

"The season opens at the prime time — Oct. 1 through Jan. 31 — and there's the companionship, weather and camping," he said. "But really it's the skill that's involved. A bow hunter has to know more about the territory, more about what you're hunting and they have to be better hunters."

A bow hunter has to be better, he said, because he has to get closer for a shot, "so you have to know how to read signs and how to track."

Actually, Heuston said, scouting the territory is the most fun to him — "finding out what the deer is doing, trying to outwit him and trying to get a shot. Killing him is really an anticlimax."

Deer aren't the only game hunted with a bow. There are archers who hunt ducks, frogs, squirrels and alligators.

"A duck is really not that hard to hit with a bow," said John Ayres of Cabot, a member of the board of the Arkansas Bowhunters Association. "You get just about as much kill area on him as you would with a deer."

Ayers also agreed with Heuston that many archers are not primarily interested in killing game. "Mainly it's the challenge and just the thrill of getting in the woods," he said.

Ayers estimated there are 20,000 bow hunters in the state and possibly another 10,000 — mainly wives and children — who shoot but don't hunt. Nationwide, it is estimated there are more than eight million archers.

Shirley Larch of Little Rock, who owns an archery shop with her husband, said there are many more hunters than target shooters, but "if you really like to hunt or shoot a bow, there is something going on year around."

"What makes it so great," she said, "is that it's something that can get you outside and it provides exercise because you walk a lot."

More women are becoming involved in archery, she said, by participating in broadhead club shoots, which local archery clubs sponsor once a month when it is not hunting season.

"Used to be, it was just the fellows who went out but now the women are getting out and participating, too," Mrs. Larch said.

One of the reasons, she said, was development a few years back of the compound bow which, through use of pulleys and cables, reduces the hold weight on the bow by about 50 percent.

"A lot of women use them because in the past they haven't been able to hold the bow in a ready-shoot position long enough, simply because they weren't strong enough," Ayres said.

The compound bow, which archers say has revolutionized the sport, allows the arrow to leave the bow much faster, which improves accuracy.

Archery mainly falls in three categories, Heuston said. There is a small group of target archers — "the old-fashioned guys who stand off and shoot targets and shoot in the Olympic games."

Then there is field archery in which plain steel-tip arrows are used, and there is broadhead shooting, which is probably the most popular because that is the arrow used in hunting game. The broadhead tournaments involve archers who are tested on shooting game targets in a wooded setting. In broadhead tournaments, the scoring is made on 28 targets with three shots at each target.

Heuston said he had read that archery equipment outsells golf equipment. Mrs. Larch said such equipment involves camouflage makeup and clothing and the proper fitting of bow and arrows.

"A lot of mistakes that people make is just going to a discount store and buying bows and arrows," she said. "Maybe the bow doesn't fit and maybe the arrows are too heavy or too light. There's more to it than people don't understand. It's kind of like buying a pair of shoes — if they don't fit right, you're not going to like them."

Came In Twos

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — The deer trouble came in twos for Dave and Sue Tompkins.

In separate accidents involving different cars, each hit a deer while driving on the same evening.

Mrs. Tompkins, 19, was driving about 6:20 p.m. when two deer ran in front of her car. She managed to miss one, but caught the other head on. The buck was killed instantly, smashing the grill and radiator of her car.

Tompkins, 25, was on the way to his parents' house at about 8:30 p.m. to pick up his wife and the buck she'd hit when he caught a flash of movement to his left and then felt a thump. A 12-point buck had run into the side of his car. Tompkins said the deer stumbled several times, but dragged itself off into a swamp. His car had a large dent in the rear fender but was driveable.

Okie Migration Termed 'Epic'

ROHNERT PARK, Calif. (AP) — The migration of 350,000 "Okies" to California in the 1930s was "truly an American epic," according to Prof. Gerald Haslam of Sonoma State College, who has established at the school the Okie Studies Project, a repository for material about the migration.

"Okie" was generally a derogatory term for any poor migrant who came West," he said. "It referred not only to the 100,000 that came to California from Oklahoma but the 250,000 other rural migrants who came here from Texas, Arkansas, the Dakotas, eastern New Mexico and Missouri."

"They were blind believers in the myth that if you go west far enough everything would be all right," said Haslam, 40, who has taught a course, "The Okie Migration," for the past three years.

Haslam, an English professor, has had nine books and 60 stories published, both fiction and nonfiction, mostly dealing with the Okie migrant.

Laser-Radar Device A Long-Range Detective

By ALTON BLAKESLEE
AP Science Editor
STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — A new eye of light can tell if a smokestack two miles away is spewing out air pollution, and what kind.

It can tell how badly polluted the air is eight miles away and how fast it might be moving downwind.

And there are prospects it can warn whether certain cancer-causing chemical agents are poisoning the air. By tracing the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, it promises a report — again at long distance — on wind velocity, air temperature, and humidity to aid in weather forecasting.

Such feats are being performed, or promised, by a sensor known as a tunable laser-radar device, capitalizing on the versatility of lasers, which focus light in incredibly narrow beams.

Stanford University engineers, headed by Professor Robert L. Byer, developed the laser that can identify, at long distance, various molecules of gases, like sulfur dioxide, that make up parts of air pollution.

It sends out pulses of laser light at high energy at different wavelengths or frequencies. Each molecule of gas, pollutant or not, has its own vibration frequency, like a fingerprint, at which it absorbs the light hitting it.

The atmosphere then reflects the light back, like radar. The returning light is gathered in by a 16-inch telescope and then is measured and analyzed by a computer. This process tells how much of a particular pollutant gas is coming from or hanging over a distant smokestack, for example.

The Environmental Protection Agency is interested in the device as a way of monitoring air pollution, and to detect offenders at a distance without hassle of impinging on private property, Byer says.

Also, he adds, the Electric Power Research Institute and members are interested as a means of doing their own monitoring to determine whether stack emissions are within prescribed limits, or to take corrective action if they aren't. Changes could be made in fuel burning if it is clear that the day's atmospheric threatened a concentration of offensive gases.

The laser can detect solid particles, like soot, and tell where it is and how dense, but not its size or chemical make-up, Byer says.

In air pollution applications, the laser can search for various chemicals. One is sulfur dioxide, a leading offender, causing coughing and other ill effects. And nitrous oxide, freon, and ethylene, coming from auto exhausts, that causes fruits and flowers to ripen prematurely.

It could monitor for such cancer-causing agents as benzpyrene, vinyl chloride or other agents, giving an alert calling for remedial control of air polluting emissions, he adds.

Four separate wings, each heavily glazed to admit light and scenery, account for the exceptional exterior of the Halifax, a two bedroom leisure plan.

With a total of five pairs of sliding glass doors and three balconies, the design is a natural for a vacation site where mountain, beach or lake can be viewed with ease from all angles.

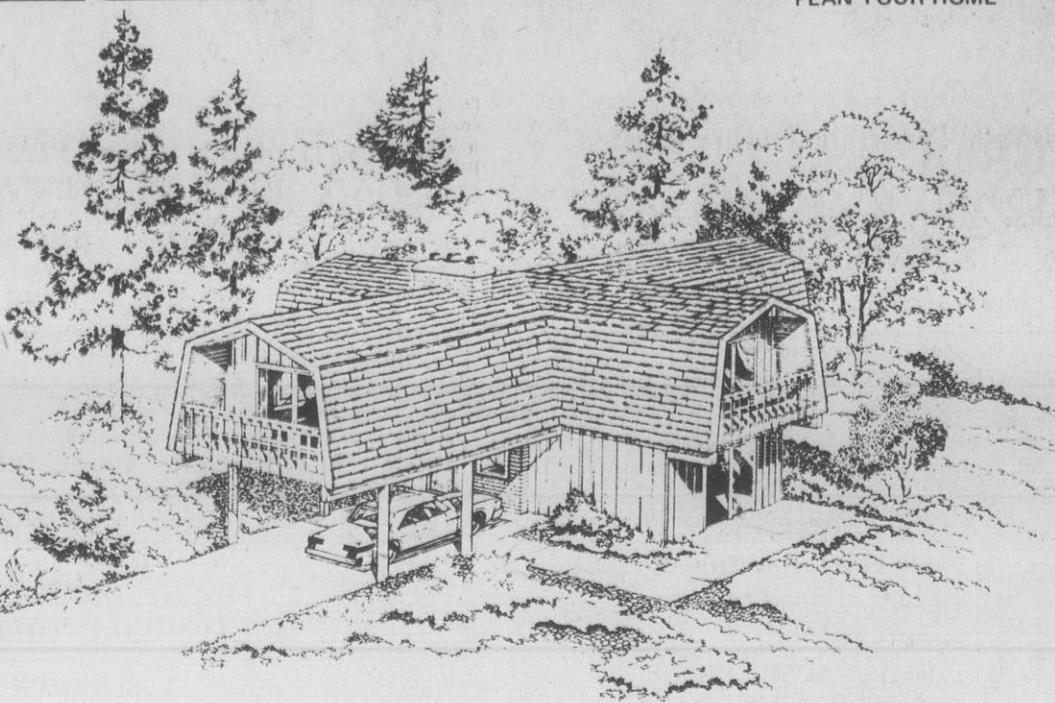

In addition to its totally rustic exterior, the Halifax succeeds as a leisure plan because of its work-minimizing interior. The kitchen is compact, convenient, efficient, the bedrooms are comfortably large and well-furnished with closets, and the necessary laundry niche is included.

Bedrooms and living areas are large enough, but not oversized — the luxurious touches appear in the use of glass to enjoy the outdoors.

Entry is into the tiled foyer on the lower level, with stairway at hand. For changing from wet swimming suits, a full bath and laundry are provided near the foyer as well as the double-closeted bedroom. Space for furnace and water heater is provided.

Most of the activities are centered on the upper level, which houses the master bedroom as well as the living room, dining area, and kitchen. The master bedroom, with its private balcony and sliding glass doors, borders a full bath.

For relaxing, the living room offers a wood-burning fireplace, and both living and dining rooms open to a balcony.

What Neighborliness Requires

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

Friends had threatened to picket her house. Some joked that they would block the hill to foil the moving van. But one sad day the best of neighbors moved away to San Jose.

What does it take to be a good neighbor? A casserole when a new neighbor moves into the community? Lending the new power mower with the snow blower attachment? Comforting a bereaved family?

Those things, perhaps, but it goes deeper. In fact, Connie Canter's neighborliness stretched from one end of the town to the other. Like TV's Wonder Woman, she could sniff out the near-disasters, tremors of a sort, households upset by one thing or another.

A car breakdown? Connie would transport neighbors and children to the dentist, doctors, or nursery school. Or perhaps a husband's car wouldn't start in the morning and she just happened to be driving by your garage just in time to help him make his train. She had a habit of popping up just when she was needed.

Connie could collapse a wheel chair, field the crutches, and have the skier with the broken leg in her car in five seconds flat and on time for his X-ray at the doctor's office.

She probably kept more doctor and dental appointments than anybody in her Connecticut town.

Dull days? She walked the hill with a big plastic bag and picked up debris that didn't belong on the road. Sometimes the bag became so heavy she couldn't drag it up the hill, and her car had to be pressed into trash service. She would even fill in some potholes on the way.

In a town of do-gooders — church societies, visiting nurse service, adult centers and a 24-hour emergency help group, she could still make a big dent working on a one-to-one basis.

Although she had been president of the women's club twice, and was active in other organizations, some of her biggest successes came with animals.

She was adept at getting a cat down from a tree — and she could tell when barking dogs had one treed and would go looking for it. If you wanted to go away for the weekend, she would feed and air your animals.

If Connie "watched" your house when you were away, you might be surprised when you returned. Son Scott would have mowed your lawn, your pachysandra might have been increased by hundreds and she might have replaced some missing stones from your rock wall. Just the right size and shape too.

Flu? It might mean a family would get a pork roast or a chicken or one of her spectacular cakes — the kind she and her grandma baked on the farm back in Moberly, Mo.

Or perhaps at Christmas a neighbor would get some of her handiwork like a treasured patch quilt, which one family now enjoys. Afghans, crocheted pillows and embroidery are in other households.

Children have missed the home-baked cookies she pressed into their hands when they came home on the school bus. In fact, her own family enjoyed such goodies every day.

Although she has written many glowing letters about her new home, its swimming pool, the golf lessons and the horseback riding to which she was committed when her husband, Bob, was transferred to California, a little regret often etches its way into the otherwise cheerful missives. It seems there aren't too many people that require her ministrations in her new community.

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A water filter system designed to remove impurities, objectionable odors and poor tastes.

Manufacturer's claim — That this filter system can be installed on the primary water line in a house without special skills or tools ... that the installation requires removal of a short length of pipe and the placement of a filter between the ends of the pipe without threading or sweating because of pressure fittings that seal securely ... that two different cartridges can be installed; one to remove rust, sand, silt, sludge, scale, algae and other sediment; the other to filter out tastes and odors from chlorine, sulfur and other sources ... that the unit also has a built-in bypass system and shut-off valve ... and that the housing, valve and relief button are molded of tough cycloc thermoplastic.

THE PRODUCT — A torch for brazing and welding that uses propane gas but cuts the time for performing these actions.

Manufacturer's claim — That the torch provides maximum utilization of propane heat's potential and permits repairs and craft activities to be done in half the time required with a conventional propane burner head ... that the unit also may be used for soldering ... that the torch comes with a pressure-regulated propane brazing burner head, a spark lighter, two brazing rods and a 14.1-ounce propane fuel cylinder ... and that recommended uses include the repair of such items as garden tools, metal furniture, bicycles, coaster wagons and toys, and the undertaking of such activities as metal sculpture and jewelry making.

THE PRODUCT — Insulation panels that can be added on the outside of existing homes and then covered with new siding.

Manufacturer's claim — That these panels, 2 feet by 8 feet and 4 feet by 8 feet, can be nailed directly over the house's original exterior ... that they are fitted together with tongue-and-grooved edges for a snug fit ... that they are made of a rigid, extruded polystyrene foam, are lightweight, strong and virtually impervious to water ... that the amount of fuel savings depends upon variables such as climate, type and local price of fuel, but that the expected payback time is estimated at five years ... that it is not a new material, but has been used for piers, roofing systems and extensively in commercial and residential buildings ... and that, while it is combustible, it has been subjected to intensive fire test and does not add to the fire hazard of wall assemblies or residential buildings when installed as recommended.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

(The water filter system is manufactured by Omni Corp., 900 East 162nd St., South Holland, Ill. 60473; the torch by Bernzomatic Corp., 740 Driving Park Ave., Rochester, N.Y. 14613; and the insulation panels by Dow Chemical, 2020 Dow Center, Midland, Mich. 48640.)

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q — I know about the importance of not replacing fuses with those of a higher amperage. Therefore, whenever I change a fuse, I make sure I put in one of the same amperage as outlined on the cover of the fuse box. There are five other people in my family. I have told them that they can create a fire hazard, for instance, by replacing a 15-amp fuse with a 30-amp fuse. Yet the other day, when a fuse blew out while I was not at home, a replacement like that was made. Fortunately, I checked and found the error. What I would like to know is whether there is some way to prevent this from happening?

A — Yes. Buy what are called S-type fuses. These come with adapter rings which are inserted into the sockets so they cannot easily be removed or displaced. The S-type fuse then screws into the adapter ring. When the fuse blows out, anyone replacing it unscrews it in normal fashion. The ring stays in place, making it impossible for any fuse of the wrong size to be used.

Q — From time to time I read about using exterior latex paint on the outside of a house rather than oil paint. Our painter says he intends to use oil paint since he thinks it is better. The outside of our house is covered with shingles that have no finish on them. When we bought the house recently, part of the agreement was that we would do the painting. Is our painter correct?

A — Supporters of oil paint say it provides better coverage and lasts longer. Supporters of exterior latex say it is less susceptible to peeling because it allows moisture from the inside to pass through. Nobody can be certain which will be better in your case without knowing many details. For instance, if there is no moisture barrier on the inside of the walls, you are likely to have trouble with peeling paint. Latex, therefore, is recommended, not as a certain cure, since many other corrective measures are necessary, but as a help in allowing some of the moisture to escape. What you should attempt to discover is whether your painter is basing his decision on knowledge of your particular situation or merely because he has always used oil paint and wants to continue to do so.

'Sunny Jim' Thrives On Great Britain's Problems

EDITOR'S NOTE — They call him Sunny Jim, but two years ago experts forecast a black cloud would gather over 10 Downing Street. Few thought Britain's fourth Labor prime minister of the century could survive his nation's problems or his Conservative challengers. He not only survived. He's thriving.

By ARTHUR GAVSHON
AP Special Correspondent
LONDON (AP) — "A lie is halfway around the world while truth is pulling on her boots," James Callaghan once mused in the House of Commons. It was the British prime minister's way of chiding an opponent for stretching facts — without actually calling him a liar, which is unparliamentary language.

"Sunny Jim" himself, who started his third year as prime minister this month, has been called many things by friends and foes in nearly 33 years of parliamentary life.

Fellow lawmakers see him as a superb political technician for his mastery of Parliament and the Labor Party he heads. Within the Labor movement, some see him as a self-serving machine politician in the American mold.
Even critics acknowledge that Callaghan has displayed an uncanny touch in the past year or so. He has wooed Labor conventions to back controversial policies against all odds. He has dominated his Conservative challengers, led by Margaret Thatcher, mixing sarcasm with passion as occasion demanded. And he has projected himself to mass audiences as the kindly, caring, confident uncle who knows what people want and what's best for them.

His spring-time tax cuts could be a sardonic invitation to voters to vote the Labor government back to office when the nation ballots in the coming year or so.
And Callaghan's summertime save-the-dollar plans could have the aim of staying off a damaging world trade and money war which would drive Britain's still-fragile economy back onto the rocks.
Equally, though, both measures could achieve their stated purposes:
—At home to stimulate growth and cut unemployment from its level of 1.4 million or 6 percent of the work force.
—Abroad to steady money markets, spur economic growth and heal America's deepening trade rifts with West Germany and Japan which pack perils of political quarreling.

In any case, few British or foreign authorities rated Callaghan's survival prospects highly when on April 5, 1976, he succeeded Harold Wilson as Labor's fourth prime minister of the century.
Even fewer foresaw that he would be presiding now over a taxcutting exercise at home or the search for a new world economic order abroad.
Callaghan, then 64, was regarded rather as the aging caretaker minding the nation's store while new Conservative managers under Mrs. Thatcher prepared to take over.
And despite his successes, some problems remain to be resolved.
The Labor movement remains divided between reforming social democrats and left-wing radicals who want to extend state takeovers and controls until most major enterprises are publicly owned.
And politically, Callaghan and his party must develop coherent policies and tactics to counter Mrs. Thatcher's potent formula for catching votes on the issue of immigration (non-white) and law and order.

Callaghan favors controls of the influx but opposes massive repatriation. He insists that every non-white legally settled in Britain should have full citizenship rights.
Most politicians recognize that Mrs. Thatcher's stress of what amounts to a race issue has injected a note of uncertainty if not apprehension.
A certain stillness, nevertheless, blankets 10 Downing Street — the prime minister's headquarters — where infighting and backbiting recently flourished.
Callaghan doesn't live there anymore, preferring his modest two-room apartment in an untrendy part of London south of the River Thames. The prime minister conveys an impression he neither needs nor wants to be at the center of every political or official development because he has more abiding perspectives.

Referring once to those long-term interests, Callaghan confided: "The best hobby I know is to be at home with my wife (Audrey) and the children."
The children now are grown. Two daughters and a son have given Callaghan nine grandchildren to romp with and to spoil with candy he keeps in a well-stocked bedside drawer. One of Callaghan's daughters, Margaret, married economist-turned-journalist Peter Jay, now Britain's ambassador in Washington.
As the only prime minister to have run three great departments of state (treasury, home office and foreign office), Callaghan has the bearing of a man who has seen it all happen before.
He favors a concerted international effort to meet the challenge posed by the problem of mass unemployment. This is the kind of topic he talks about in frequent telephone exchanges with President Carter.

It was in these talks with Carter that Callaghan worked out his save-the-dollar ideas. When he had sorted them out he flew to Bonn for a long session with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on March 12 and then arranged a special visit to Carter later in the month. All of this was in preparation for a July summit parley in Bonn among the world's major industrialized countries called to figure out how best to stabilize the world's money and trading systems.
Callaghan has emerged as a natural mediator destined to try to reconcile the feuds dividing men from men.
His humble origins never embittered him but instilled in him the will to do something about it. "I hate injustice, people not getting their rights," he once said. "I've known it from the worm's eye view."

Keep Animals Of Biblical Times

EILAT, Israel (AP) — Lupus Arabicus — the Arabian wolf — and the Negev gazelle are living in Israel's new wildlife reserve, an 8,000-acre drive-through zoo dedicated to preserving the animals of biblical times.
Opened last September after many years of preparation, the Biblical Wildlife Reserve still shows only a few animals compared to the flourishing herds of exotic beasts that can be seen by motorists in the "safari park" type of zoo in the United States.

But the ostrich, the Somali wild ass, the Asiatic wild ass, the scimitar-horned oryx, the corkscrew-horned addax and the ibex, a species of mountain goat, can be seen with the wolf and the timid gazelle. All are mentioned in the Bible or suggested by biblical descriptions.
Isaiah's prophecy — "the wolf and the lamb shall feed together" — hasn't been realized, so the two sand-colored wolves run in a large wire-fenced enclosure separate from the other animals.

The ferociousness of the Arabian wolf, noticeably smaller than North American or European wolves, was shown last fall when some "outsider" wolves broke into the fenced reserve and killed 17 prized animals.

The wildlife reserve has several hyenas but they are being kept in small nursery pens until enough money has been accumulated to build large enclosures, the operators say.

Some of the animals — the ostrich, for example — had become extinct in the Holy Land and had to be reintroduced. The local Mediterranean ostrich, prized for its feathers, disappeared early in this century, and the ostriches shown here are imported from Africa, like the Somali wild ass.

So far, the organizers say, their animals are breeding prolifically and even the imports are adapting to the desert climate in the Arava Valley, 25 miles north of Eilat in southern Israel. The valley, bounded by the Edom mountains in Jordan to the east and the Sinai mountains to the west, gets perhaps two inches of rain a year, and

Can Recycle The Sewage Water

CHICAGO (UPI) — While farmers in the Great Plains and Western states battle drought, the U.S. is overlooking a 16-billion-gallon water source.
That's the amount of sewage water produced in this country daily, according to Ecodyne Corp., makers of water treatment equipment.

In parts of the West, sewage water is already an important resource. An Amarillo, Tex., utility is treating and recycling 10 million gallons of municipal sewage water a day in its cooling towers and conserving enough fresh water to meet the needs of 75,000 people.

Signal Flags Still Important

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Two colorful flags flying from a ship's mast might appear to be decorative ornament to the casual observer, but to the ship's captain and his crew they have a definite meaning.
"For over 120 years flags have solved problems and saved cargoes in the marine industry," explains C.V. Wolff, Jr., of Central Gulf Lines, which operates a fleet of specialized cargo vessels. "The signal flags are still important in spite of today's sophisticated electronic gear."
Why? Because the International Code of Signals cuts through almost every language barrier in the world. In spite of a very simple system based on 26 uniquely designed and colored alphabet flags, three substitutes, a code flag and 10 numeral pennants, one to three selected flags can convey 1,075 meanings.

Look To The West For Natural Energy Resources

By DAN CHISZAR
United Press International

Sixty million years ago lava poured from volcanoes in the West. Forces deep within the earth later pushed and pulled on the surface, creating wrinkles, and the earth's surface slipped along fault lines.

Over millions of years, the earth's surface rose.

For centuries, no one knew or cared what lay beneath the land of the Rocky Mountain states. In 1852, Daniel Webster stood in the U.S. Senate and said, "To what use could we ever hope to put these great deserts and these endless mountain ranges."

Six years later, gold was found along the South Platte River, at the present site of Denver. Silver was next. In three decades, many of the major lodes were played out, and the rush was over.

In the next century, Thomas Edison's light bulb and Bell's telephone demanded copper, and the Rocky Mountains again provided. In the 1920's, someone found out what molybdenum was good for, and where it was: Colorado.

Lead and zinc brought prospectors back to the Rockies. Then came the rush for uranium after the atomic clouds of World War II cleared over Japan.

In 1973, there was the Arab Oil Embargo, and the nation had its first energy crisis. Oil and natural gas prices rose. Energy became a familiar word.

On April 18, 1977, President James Carter called the energy shortage "the greatest challenge that our country will face during our lifetimes," and proposed his energy plan.

Carter said the nation should double coal production by 1985, build more atomic energy plants and search for alternative energy sources. Washington, D.C. was again looking toward the Rocky Mountains.

Listen to John O'Leary, deputy secretary of the U.S. Energy Department, on the subject:

"We really have no choice for the next decade but to turn more and more to coal and nuclear power while we strive to bring on line more unconventional fuels, including energy from renewable resources, oil from shale, and natural gas from coal.

"Obviously, the Rocky Mountain West, with almost half the nation's coal reserves, more than 90 percent of the uranium, and all of the high-grade oil shale, will play a major role in this conversion from scarce petroleum and natural gas to other fuels.

"The West will also have a leading role as we move beyond coal and nuclear. It has the sunshine and the research facilities to take the lead in solar development, in coal gasification, and in tapping the enormous potential of oil shale."

The figures:

— Total coal reserves in the trillions of tons. The Energy Department estimates the Rocky Mountain West has 70.8 billion tons of easily stripable, low sulphur coal, and the number keeps rising.

— Forty-seven percent of the nation's uranium comes from New Mexico. Wyoming is the No. 2 producer, with production rapidly increasing in Colorado.

— Colorado, Utah and Wyoming have the world's richest deposits of high-grade oil shale, estimated by the U.S. Geological Survey to contain 1.8 trillion barrels of oil, more than all the proven oil reserves in the world.

— Conventional drilling for oil and natural gas in the region was up 28 percent in 1977 over the previous year. The latest and best estimates by oil industries put recoverable oil reserves at 1.5 billion to 8.8 billion barrels of oil, and 6 trillion to 51.5 trillion cubic feet of recoverable natural gas.

Carter's energy plan proposed an increase in coal production from 665 million tons in 1976 to 1.2 billion tons by 1985. Much of that coal would probably come from western strip mines, but no one knows how much.

Nearly one trillion tons of coal lie at depths to 3,000 feet below the surfaces of Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, Utah, New Mexico and western North Dakota, according to the USGS. Take into account, however, that not all the coal is of high quality, and most strip mines operate only 200-300 feet below the surface.

Even so, enough low-sulphur coal of high heat content lies close enough to the surface to supply the nation with energy for at least a century at the present rate of consumption.

"There is so much of it that is quite clean and so close to the surface, you're going to have to depend on it in the near future," said Jim Keenan, in charge of coal resource research at the Colorado School of Mines in Golden.

By 1971, nearly 1 million acres of public and Indian coal lands across the West had been leased for strip mining. Since then, there has been a moratorium on further federal leasing in the West until completion of an environmental impact statement, expected in mid-1980.

Forty-four million tons of coal came out of Wyoming last year and production is expected to be near 130 million tons by 1985. Montana produced more than 27 million tons of coal in 1977, a state record. More is expected this year.

How high will it go? No one knows. Cleaner-burning western coal could lose out to eastern coal if power plants install held mineral rights to the land, sent in a mining engineer who discovered the rocks contained uranium. Patty was put on the payroll as a scout and given a lifetime pension.

Navajos stopped growing carrot and cabbages on the land, and uranium took over in west central New Mexico.

Wyoming, the nation's second largest supplier of uranium, produced 8,900 pounds of yellowcake in 1977 for nuclear reactors. Uranium production has also rapidly expanded in Colorado, with 6 percent of U.S. reserves.

Oilmen in the Rocky Mountain region talk of something called the Overthrust Belt in Utah, Wyoming and part of Idaho. It is one of the most intense subjects of exploration in the industry today.

Petroleum Information Inc. said 1977 drilling was up 28 percent over the previous year in a region covering Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, northern New Mexico, Nevada, Idaho, western Nebraska and the Dakotas.

"The Overthrust Belt is very significant to the on-shore reserves picture, but it's still embryonic," said George Muselman of Petroleum Information.

Above the ground, the Rocky Mountain states have two more valuable energy sources: sun and wind. In Colorado, the sun shines 360 days a year, and in some regions of the West the wind blows incessantly.

Last June, the federal government chose Golden, Colo., fifteen miles west of Denver, as the site for its national Solar Energy Research Institute. Steve Davis, at the institute's temporary headquarters in Golden, said the facility should add impetus to the commercial solar energy industry in the country.

At Rocky Flats, 15 miles northwest of Denver, the Energy Research and Development Administration has set up the largest test collection of small commercial prototype windmills in the country. Other tests are being conducted in New Mexico and the Bureau of Reclamation plans to install as many as 58 large test windmills near Medicine Bow, Wyo.

There is more to this list of energy research: Geothermal, and intensive work on coal gasification and fracturization.

A promising geothermal power plant is planned at the Roosevelt Hot Springs in Utah, and Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory in New Mexico reports progress in drilling wells into hot, underground rocks, pumping down cold water and pumping up hot water for energy purposes.

Some of the nation's most significant geothermal research is also being done at the Colorado School of Mines and the University of Utah. The School of Mines.

Two separate experimental projects on coal fracturization are being conducted in Wyoming. Both are trying to produce coal gas from seams deep within the earth.

Book Lover Publishes Hand-Printed Volumes

By GEORGE W. HACKETT
Associated Press Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — When rain drives Gray Zeitz out of the tobacco fields, it doesn't spoil his day.

He returns to the little shop where he designs, sets and prints books. You won't find them on the best seller list.

They are, however, works of art intended for those who have a craving for texts "put together with devotion and skill in good type on good paper."

Zeitz isn't getting rich running a private printing press in Monterey, an Owen County community of 200. "I have friends who own farms so I work for them to supplement my income," he says.

His shop turns out "one or two big books and several pamphlets a year. They're from first-time authors."

Prices range from $2 to $30 for a special edition of poems on Japanese hand-made paper.

"Some people aren't familiar with hand-printed books so I make it a practice to carry a few with me wherever I go," said Zeitz. "We often travel from door to door trying to interest the public in the idea that a book can be an aesthetic object."

The 27-year-old printer became addicted to ink and type while attending the University of Kentucky. He worked at King Press on the campus and in 1970 decided to publish his own magazine.

"I quickly learned that magazines don't support themselves," he said. "I felt I would have better luck with books, so I found a press and got started."

Zeitz says the challenge comes in "designing a letter that looks well by itself, or a type face that is unusual. Letter design is not a dead issue with us."

Where does he get his manuscripts?

"Some I select myself," he said. "Others come from people who feel they have written good verse and would like to have it published."

Labs Of Los Alamos Continue To Probe Unknown

EDITOR'S NOTE — The Atomic Age exploded upon the world in a furious cloud mixed of dread and hope. And what has become of its birthplace, that laboratory that was both arsenal and test tube? And what has become of that genie it uncorked, the atom?

By SID MOODY
AP Newsfeatures Writer
LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) — A while ago Bill Jack Rogers went back to Iowa to a high school reunion. An old flame also turned up.

Haven't changed a bit, Bill Jack. What you been up to? Taking pictures for the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory: bomb tests and atom smashers and experiments and all that. For the rest of the evening the woman made sure the length of the room separated her from Bill Jack Rogers from Atom City, home of The Bomb, as though if she got any closer she would start glowing in the dark. Or worse.

Americans in general have tended to keep a room's length away from the atom since they saw those end-of-the-world photos of The Bomb's fury in 1945. Yet much has happened to the atom since then, much of it here and not all of it terrifying. That more has not happened can be told in no small part in the story of Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory since World War II, a story of hope only partially fulfilled, a story of what has become of science as well as the atom.

"It's easy to scare the pants off people by showing them a mushroom cloud," concedes Edwin Hammel, LASL director for energy.

But the atom has two sides: Tails you lose, violently. Heads, you not only live but may live beautifully. LASL has been tossing the atomic coin since the war, now more than ever to get it to come up heads — for medicine, for energy, for whatever research may uncover. Los Alamos is no longer a bomb factory. Less than half its effort goes towards weapons.

For example, LASL is currently trying to:

- Control the fusion process of a hydrogen bomb to produce electricity;
- Kill cancer with minute atomic particles called pions fired down a half-mile long atom smasher;
- Revolutionize electrical transmission through super freezing;
- Produce heat and power by drilling into the hot crust of the earth;

—Draw energy from the biggest H-Bomb in our neighborhood, the sun;

—Probe into the heart of the atom to learn what there is yet to learn;

—Improve safeguards for the handling of radioactive materials;

—Investigate the physics of space and the chemistry of atoms;

—And, yes, develop and refine nuclear weapons such as the neutron bomb.

LASL is a different place from the feverish quonset-hut days when it was the heart of the Manhattan Project to make an atomic bomb. The temporary has become permanent — labs, office complexes, the 800 million electron volt linear accelerator that uses more power than the rest of the lab and Los Alamos, a town of 20,000, combined. There are few "Keep Out" signs. Russian scientists are regular visitors.

On a given day at LAMPF, open to qualified experiments from anywhere in the country, as many as 10 projects may be underway with atomic particles flying at 84 percent the speed of light to be shunted through a "switchyard" to a variety of research bays. One is the biomedical section. There, pions are aimed at tumors of cancer patients in a long-term program to test the pions' killing power. Unlike other radiation, which passes through a diseased area, pions can be stopped within a given tumor concentrating its destruction on the cancer.

"We're not far enough along," says Stephanie Wilson of the biomed experiment, "but we hope we can control large tumors if not cure them. I don't want people to think we have a magic thing because we're not sure."

Passports Have Long History

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Louis XIV of France invented the modern-day passport, says VISA travel specialist Lea Ann Van Houten. The French monarch devised the passport as a safe-conduct pass for foreign travel that he issued to favored members of the aristocracy.

Long before the 18th century, however, Roman dignitaries carried papers called diplomata which entitled them to ride postal service horses deployed along the empire's road system, Ms. Van Houten says.

Alamos, Bob Hendron and his team have drilled into the earth's crust beneath an extinct volcano. Water under pressure was pumped in to create a fissure, then a second hole drilled to complete a circuit to produce steam from water heated by the higher temperature of the rock. If tests show the process continues working over a long period, the so-called hot rock project will begin producing significant power for LASL.

"It helps to have a volcano in your backyard," says Al Blair of the geothermal division, "but there are large areas of the country where this process could work. Hot rock resources are about 1,000 times our coal supply."

At the cryogenics lab, Bill Keller wrestles with government bureaucracy and the promise of super-cooled electrical transmission. At temperatures approaching absolute zero, resistance to electrical current disappears, a fact that would greatly increase the efficiency of power transmission. Current could also be stored in near-zero roundhouses, circling indefinitely until needed.

These are several of the projects — aside from weapons work — at Los Alamos, which neatly exemplifies the postwar emergence of the national government as partner and initiator in research.

LASL, with operating costs for 1978 at $275 million, stuck with atomic weapons into the 1950s, working on the H-Bomb and designing warheads for missiles.

"But bombs are like toothbrushes," says Hammel. "You can only improve them so much." LASL gradually began diversifying. For the Space Age it developed nuclear propulsion for rockets — on the shelf, at least for now — and researched solar energy and the effects of absolute zero.

Continuity ensured by federal money is one of the most precious assets of a national lab — "bottoms-up sorts of places where ideas come from the troops," says Hammel.

In the heyday of weapons development it was understood that a good chunk of money would find its way into basic research, but today's federal cost-accounting doesn't always provide a cushion for blue sky exploration. It riles many of the scientists.

"The national labs are our leading edge of technology," says Harold Agnew, LASL's director and witness to both Enrico Fermi's first chain reaction and the bombing of Hiroshima. "We operate by law in the national interest."

With some heat, Agnew complains of overmanagement by LASL's parent in Washington, the Department of Energy. The overseers want LASL to give them a five-year plan. Says Agnew: "If we knew what we'd be doing in research five years from now, we'd start doing it today."

It is the marriage between Washington and Los Alamos, government and science, that is the chronic problem.

"The government just doesn't understand research," says

Keller. Budget cuts have slowed cancer research-treatment at LAMPF. Fusion money is flattening out. DOE's energy policy is too spread out, say the scientists.

"This country is tied to the oil barrel," says Al Blair at Geothermal. "There is a lack of cohesion."

The scientists also get their share of knocks from the public. They are victims of their own success. Why can't those folks who brought us the atom solve the energy problem?

Viewed as a scientific achievement, the Manhattan project was a prodigious success. The subsequent history of the atom has been less so. Its initial use, as a horrifying weapon, "was not the best introduction," Bradbury concedes.

The atom was meant to light our way to tomorrow. Instead it left a legacy of misunderstanding and fear. So we dig coal, import oil and worry when the lights will go out for good rather than confront the problems of radioactivity and atomic waste.

So it may just be that Los Alamos and the atom have already made their greatest contribution.

"It remains to be seen over the next thousand years whether weapons were a deterrent to war," said John Rogers, who helped assemble the first bomb.

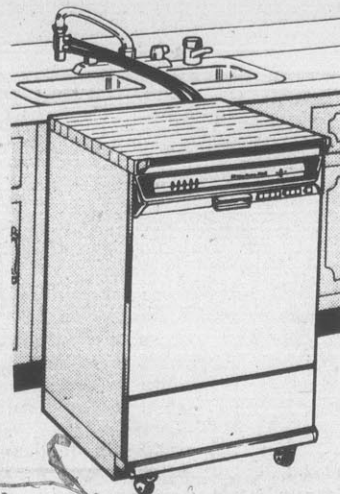

"If the weapons were a deterrent, it will be one of the greatest things science has ever done. If not it will be one of the worst."

104th Running Of The Kentucky Derby Derby Airs Saturday On ABC-TV

The Kentucky Derby, one of the world's classic sports events, will be telecast live and exclusively by ABC Sports on Saturday, May 6 (5-6 p.m.). The telecast will originate at Churchill Downs, Louisville, Kentucky.

Is the Kentucky Derby a horse race? Or, is it a happening? Or — maybe — a little of both? It is, without a doubt, a happening. While there will be many horse people and true-blue race fans at Churchill Downs on Derby Day, there will be, in addition, many spectators who have never seen a horse race and may well never see one again. As at the World Series and the Super Bowl, a number of the best seats will be occupied by prominent individuals who never follow racing during a regular season and have only a vague idea of what the sport is all about.

In fact, many of the viewers in the stands won't even see the race. At best, they will catch only a brief glimpse of the horses as they speed past them; much too fast to identify. Yet, just being there and being a part of the thoroughbred history is a natural high.

Even on television, the Derby is a happening. In many homes across the United States, people gather before their television sets and sip mint juleps. Many are people who know nothing about horses or the South. It is these same people who get all misty when the band plays "My Old Kentucky Home."

It is also amazing how many office pools and other mutual pools there must be around the country on Derby Day — at parties, in college dormitories, and club meeting rooms. Many of these Derby Day gamblers would consider betting on any other day foolhardy — if not downright immoral.

Yes, while the Kentucky Derby is a happening, it is also a great horse race. This year's race on Saturday, May 6 (5 p.m. on ABC-TV), appears to possess all the elements necessary to make the 104th running of this premiere race live up to its billing.

One of the curious footnotes to this year's Kentucky Derby is that Calumet Farm, which has produced a record eight victories in this classic, should be coming up with a popular candidate for success in Alydar, a two-year-old. For it has been every tenth year, dating back to 1948, that Calumet Farm has won the Derby — with Citation in '48, with Tim Tam in '58 and with Forward Pass in '68, the year that Dancer's Image crossed the finish line first, only to be ruled out as the formal winner by the Kentucky State Commission because of its findings of prohibited medication of Dancer's Image.

'America's Most Huggable Hero' Travels Like Member Of Jet Set

First-class accommodations are just one of the many benefits of being a superstar, and even those of the four-legged variety are entitled to a nice wide seat, a good movie, and the attentive ministrations of a smiling stewardess.

Most dogs, when travelling by plane, are relegated to a box stored in the luggage compartment, and have only a bowl of water and suitcases to keep them company.

But not Benji. The floppy-eared mutt, who, after two feature-length movies and a seven-year stint on "Petticoat Junction," has become "America's Most Huggable Hero" and is treated like a member of the elite jet set on his many trips abroad. Together with his owner, trainer and best friend, Frank Inn, Benji has traveled first-class to England, France, Italy, Canada, Greece and Japan, and always with his own ticket and his own seat.

A half-hour special, "The Phenomenon of Benji," saluting the canine's career, will air Thursday, May 4, 8 to 8:30 p.m. on ABC. Some of Benji's best friends — including singer Charlie Rich and "Petticoat Junction" stars Meredith MacRae and Edgar Buchanan — are on hand for the canine celebration, which was taped before a live audience and includes film highlights from "Petticoat Junction" — the dog's debut as an actor — and his two phenomenally successful movies, "Benji" and "For the Love of Benji."

Making 'Spider-Man' Believable Is Goal

He is a graduate of Princeton University where he majored in English Literature, is the son of an Army Colonel, speaks French fluently and the bulk of his acting experience is the theatre.

Yet, young and handsome Nicholas Hammond has thrust himself into the rigors of a weekly television series in the double roles of Peter Parker and Spider-Man in the show of the same title on CBS (Wednesdays, 8 to 9 p.m.). And he's very pleased thank you, to have the challenge of making "Spider-Man" a believable series in just five short weeks. Only if its ratings are good will it be renewed for the fall.

"I'd just finished a very heavy role at the Mark Taper Forum (Los Angeles) when I was sent in to read for the role," Nick explains, "and I thought, 'You know, this would really be a challenge to take a role like this, that is really fantasy, and make him believable.'"

"I thought, if nothing else happens, if I can just make people forget the fact they're watching a show based on a comic book figure, get involved in the story, get involved in the people and care about what happens to the people, then I will have done my job.

"You can't deny the fact that there is a fantasy element, obviously, but to me, it is a challenging acting role. I mean, whether it's on a Broadway stage (where he's worked) or in films or television, it is still acting, and that's what I enjoy doing most in my life."

Nick made his acting debut at the age of 11 when he was cast in the Broadway play, "The Complaisant Lover" because, though an American, he'd just returned from living in London with his parents and had a British accent that was still Americanized.

Then came roles in films, including "The Sound of Music."

When he enrolled at Princeton, however, he put his career on the shelf while he concentrated on his studies. But before he graduated, his need to perform led him to New York and more Broadway stage work. Then came roles on such TV shows as "Hawaii Five-O," "Family" and "Nancy Drew."

"The interest to me and for all of us doing the show is the challenge in making what was basically a fantasy concept applicable to modern-day, relevant situations. All of our plots are based on reality, and, if we're successful, people will accept the fact that Peter Parker somehow has this power to turn into Spider-Man. All of our scripts deal, some by design and some by coincidence, with matters that are right now in the headlines," he concluded.

With eyes that can melt a block of ice at fifty paces, this little refugee from the Burbank Animal Shelter is now an internationally renowned motion picture and television star named Benji.

His meteoric rise to canine superstardom is the subject of a half-hour family special, "The Phenomenon of Benji," airing Thursday, May 4 (8-8:30 p.m.) on ABC.

ALBERTSON IN 'GRANDPA'
Jack Albertson stars in "Grandpa Goes to Washington," a 90-minute movie-for-television currently under production.

The film, slated to air on NBC, is the story of a history professor who is forced to retire. He discovers that, by current standards, he may be too old to teach but he is not too old to run for the U.S. Senate.

Richard Crenna is directing "Grandpa Goes to Washington."

Jaime Leaves Drama

After five years in the role of Lorie on the highly successful daytime drama, "The Young and the Restless," actress Jaime Lyn Bauer has informed CBS and the show's producers that she is leaving the show.

From her family home in Phoenix, Ariz., where she is recovering from the recent delivery of her first child, Jaime said, "I just think this is the right time for me to try other things."

Holding her infant son, Damien, in her lap, the pretty actress added, "It isn't perhaps the best time in the world to make such a decision, because I now do have the responsibility of my son, but then, when is there ever a good time to alter one's career?"

"No, it's just that after this length of time in one role and on one show, I think I need to try and move on to other ventures."

Jaime, of course, has not been appearing in the serial for about two months because of the birth of her first child, an arrival that is particularly important to her since she suffered two previous miscarriages. At the time of her comments, she was preparing to return to Hollywood and her role, but she said honestly, "When I tell them I want to leave, I frankly don't know if they're going to want me back."

"There's been a girl doing the role in my absence, and whether it's her or not, they may not want me back in the role when they know it'll only be for a few months. They may feel it best to make the change now, rather than have me there for four or five months before hiring the girl who has been doing it or an entirely different one."

Jaime, of course, would like to continue the role until near the end of this year.

Boy Learns Values

A teenaged athlete who is consumed by a desire to win at all costs discovers that the measure of a man involves more than personal victory in "It's a Mile From Here to Glory," an "ABC Afterschool Specials" presentation, airing Wednesday, May 3, 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

"This story takes a new look at the concept that 'winning is the only thing,'" said Marilyn Olin, ABC Entertainment. "The first flush of victory is a heady thing for a young person who feels he must prove his own worth; 'It's a Mile From Here to Glory' is a dramatic reminder that the victories of courage, friendship and teamwork are the ones that last."

Early McLaren (Steve Shaw), self-conscious and insecure because he is shorter than other boys his age, finds recognition and applause when his high school coach discovers his potential as a miler. To the surprise of all, the dogged farmboy is soon a steady winner, at least on the track. Dismaying friends and well-wishers. Early develops an inflated ego, losing sight of the team concept in his single-minded drive for victories and records.

Following a traffic accident, which may end his promising career as an outstanding high school mile runner, Steve Shaw's father, James G. Richardson, and physical therapist, Anne Gee Byrd, worry about his recovery — both physically and emotionally — in the "ABC Afterschool Specials" presentation "It's a Mile From Here to Glory," Wednesday, May 3 (4:30-5:30 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

FINALLY!

Jesse White, Maytag's washer repairman on TV who never gets a call, was dining recently at a restaurant in Los Angeles. The owner's wife told him that her 15-year-old Maytag had finally conked out. White, who'd taken a Maytag repair course as a condition of his contract, jumped up and shouted "At last!" as he sped to their home to repair the washer.

Lloyd Dobyns and Linda Ellerbee will be the principal reporters and co-anchors of NBC News' weekly, one-hour, primetime TV magazine presentation which starts in September.

FEAST-TIME FOR LEE

Actress Lee Meriweather is having a feast with her career these days. On one hand, she's been asked to return to CBS-TV's "Barnaby Jones" for a seventh season. Then, ABC-TV is wooing her with a long-term contract for her own series, plus three television movies.

Glenn Ford Assumed Name Of Birthplace

If legendary Columbia Pictures studio boss Harry Cohn had his way back in 1940, it would be John Gower — not Glenn Ford — starring in an upcoming "Police Story."

It's not that the late film mogul had any grudge against Ford, who stars in "No Margin for Error," a two-hour "Police Story" on "The Big Event," Sunday April 30, 9 to 11 p.m., on NBC.

On the contrary, Cohn had the then young actor's welfare — and box-office appeal — in mind.

"My real name is Gwyllyn, which means William," said Ford, recalling his Welsh ancestry. I was put under contract to Columbia, and Harry Cohn wanted to change my name from Gwyllyn to John Gower, since the studios were located on Gower Street in Hollywood. John just happened to be a favorite first name with him.

"I finally took the name of Glenn from my father's birthplace — Glenford, Quebec."

Ford has fond memories of Cohn, who had been considered a tyrant by many in Hollywood.

"Yes, Harry was a pixie at times," he said, sighing.

A veteran of over 200 films and two television series, Ford's career has spanned what many cinema aficionados refer to as the "Golden Age" of moviedom to the present "New Hollywood." But he refuses to enshrine the past and sees little difference between the two eras.

In "Police Story," Ford portrays a resolute deputy police chief who defends his department and the integrity of three officers (including co-star James Farentino) after separate shootouts leave two bystanders dead and cause a public outcry.

NAME GAME — Glenn Ford stars as a deputy police chief who stands up for three officers involved in separate shootouts that leave two bystanders dead in "No Margin for Error," a two-hour "Police Story" on NBC-TV's "The Big Event," Sunday, April 30 (9-11 p.m.).

Heston, Mimieux Star

"Sky Terror (released theatrically as Skyjacked)", starring Charlton Heston, Yvette Mimieux and James Brolin, airs as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie" April 30, 9 to 11 p.m.

Saturday Review critic Arthur Knight called the high-flying hijack drama the kind of "suspenseful, well-plotted, linear movie that we all grew up with," and compared it favorably to other box-office sensations because "the action is more contained, more single-minded, more suspenseful."

Flight Captain Hank O'Hara (Heston) expects a peaceful journey from Oakland to Minneapolis until a passenger discovers a scrawled message warning that the 707 jet will be blown up in midair if it is not rerouted to Alaska. To protect the passengers, O'Hara complies with the unknown hijacker's orders while the FBI runs a frantic check on the passengers for a clue as to who might be responsible.

The passengers — including a U.S. Senator (Walter Pidgeon), a pregnant woman (Mariette Hartley), a jazz cello-player (Roosevelt Grier) and an Army sergeant (Brolin) — all come under suspicion, as do the members of the flight crew themselves, until the hijacker comes out of hiding to order the plane on to Moscow, where it is met by four hostile-appearing Russian MIGs.

Chicago Sun-Times critic Roger Ebert, in applauding the film's suspense, concluded "All those people are up there and we're worried about how they're going to get down."

NIELSEN SIGNS

Leslie Nielsen has been signed to star in a three-hour movie for CBS-TV, "Riel Rebellion."

Co-starring will be Christopher Plummer and Lloyd Bochner.

FISHER, RITTER TO CO-STAR

Carrie Fisher and John Ritter will co-star in a TV movie, "Leave Yesterday Behind," slated to air on ABC.
Ms. Fisher will portray Marny Clarkson, a young woman who falls in love with a college student (Ritter) who has been paralyzed following an accident in a polo match.

Takes Stand In Premiere Movie

"I don't know whether Caryl Chessman was guilty," said Alan Alda. "Obviously I've given it a lot of thought but I don't know."

But he has no such doubts about capital punishment. He was dead set against it even before portraying Chessman in "Kill Me If You Can," an NBC World Premiere movie to be rebroadcast Monday, May 1, 9 to 11 p.m., on NBC.

"It doesn't solve anything. If we tell people we will kill them if they take a life, then we make it a casual thing and we create a climate for more murders," Alda said.

Chessman was executed in San Quentin's gas chamber on the morning of May 2, 1960, after eight stays of execution and 12 years on death row.

Some people — including attorney Rosalie Asher, who worked for Chessman those 12 years — still are convinced he was not the notorious "red light bandit" who terrorized couples at a Los Angeles lover's lane in 1948.

"I don't think capital punishment is a deterrent. Many experts, including former Warden Duffy of San Quentin feel the same way," Alda said.

"Brutal crimes outrage me as much as the next person but I think it's harmful to society if we vent that outrage in an official policy. This teaches the lesson that if someone does something outrageous to society then you solve the problem by killing that person.

"As a result capital punishment teaches people in our society that it's okay to kill and that leads to a casual attitude about death that can lead to more killing."

Alda feels that some people who have been executed "might have been innocent and some might have eventually been rehabilitated.

"It's not easy to rehabilitate people," he concluded. "But I'm certain of one thing; we should continue to try to rehabilitate people."

Says Ms. Asher, now retired, "I still think about it from time to time," as she reflects back to the world-famous case. "When you devote a chunk of your life to something, you still have many thoughts about it."

I think about the waste and futility involved in capital punishment. The grave is no respecter of guilt or innocence," she commented.

Leukemia Discussed

Advances in the treatment of leukemia have brought about a large number of "long-term survivors." These advances are the subject of "Daniel Foster, M.D.," the weekly information series airing Sunday, April 30, at 3:30 p.m. on PBS.

Joining Dr. Foster in the discussion is Dr. Alvin M. Mauer, professor of medicine at the University of Tennessee School of Medicine at Memphis and director of research at St. Jude's Hospital in Memphis.

Although leukemia — a cancer of the white blood cells — is generally thought of as a single disease, it is actually a number of different diseases, depending on which blood cells are affected. According to Dr. Mauer, "acute" forms of the disease are the most common cancer found in children, and "chronic" forms of leukemia are found most often found in adults.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA — Caryl Chessman (Alan Alda), acting as his own defense, tries vainly to make a point during his 1948 trial at which he was ultimately sentenced to death for the so-called "red light bandit" crimes in this scene from "Kill Me If You Can," the factual drama airing as "The Big Event," Monday, May 1 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC.

The Search For Atlantis

One of the world's great unsolved mysteries — the lost island of Atlantis, where an advanced civilization may have flourished and which legend has it, abruptly vanished from the face of the earth thousands of years ago in a violent cataclysm — will be explored by Captain Jacques Cousteau and Philippe Cousteau in "Calypso's Search for Atlantis," two separate hour-long special broadcasts to be presented on two successive evenings, Monday, May 1, and Tuesday, May 2, both at 8 p.m. on PBS.

The lost civilization of Atlantis has had a powerful hold on the imagination for centuries. Explorers, archaeologists, and scholars have searched for Atlantis in all the oceans of the world, claiming to find "evidence" of the lost continent from Easter Island and Coco Island in the Pacific, to Bimini in the Bahamas, the Canary Islands off Africa, the Azores, the Atlas mountains in Morocco, and even Helgoland in the North Sea. If there was an Atlantis, some scholars believe, however, that the lost island which may have formed the basis for the Atlantis legend would have been in the Aegean Sea.

The two-part Calypso's "Search for Atlantis" are the third and fourth broadcasts of the four all-new "The Cousteau Odyssey" series of specials presented on PBS during 1977-78. Eight others are scheduled for the two coming television seasons.

In "Calypso's Search for Atlantis," Jacques Cousteau concentrates on sites in the Aegean, while Philippe Cousteau, aboard The Cousteau Society's PBY, looks at a number of less likely locales such as Easter Island, Coco Island, and Bimini in the Bahamas.

Further to the north, Cousteau comes to desolate Santorini (Thera), where, thousands of years ago, one of the greatest volcanic eruptions the world has ever known took place.

Henry Fonda Stars In Special

"Home to Stay," the poignant and powerful dramatic special starring Henry Fonda as a sensitive and spirited Illinois farm owner whose fiercely loyal and loving granddaughter helps him dispel the specter of old age, will air Tuesday, May 2, 9:30 to 11 p.m., on CBS.

The production, which was filmed in July in Toronto, Canada, and on location in the farm country around Greenbank, Ontario, also stars Kristen Vigard, who was an understudy in the Broadway musical "Annie." Kristen portrays Sarah, the spunky, orphaned young teen-ager whose love for her frail grandfather spans the years between them and leads to a dramatic adventure laced with pathos and humor for both.

Starring as her Uncle Frank is Michael McGuire. The character he portrays is a farmer torn between a strong desire to control the farm he runs for his father and grudging love for the older man who he feels should really be put in a home for the aged because of his bouts with senility.

Also a member of the household is Grandpa's sister, Sarah's Aunt Martha, an understanding and burdened woman, portrayed by Canadian actress Frances Hyland. Sarah's 14-year-old boyfriend, who assists her when she masterminds a dramatic flight plan to thwart her Uncle Frank from placing Grandpa in a home, is played by David Stambaugh.

Says Henry Fonda, the veteran star with a quiet and sincere modesty that one might first think was tongue-in-cheek, considering the length and breadth of his stardom, "It is a delightful story, and I took the role because I was lucky enough to be asked. The relations the character has with the child is beautiful. It must be a rewarding thing to write something beautiful. I wanted to be a writer once, a journalist at first.

"With acting," continued Fonda, "you have to get to know your character, feel comfortable with him. With each role, I have a feeling of meeting a stranger and then getting to know him."

The actor noted that he would be self-conscious if he were to give a speech or perform as Henry Fonda.

"But ever since I first got on a stage in a little theater in Omaha, when I was young, I've loved acting, because you can be another character," he explained. "I'm not me, I'm somebody else. So I'm not a bit self-conscious."

'Killing Stone'
Airs On NBC-TV

A free-lance writer battles a vicious sheriff who heads the cover-up of a scandalous small-town homicide in "Killing Stone," a two-hour NBC World Premiere movie produced, written and directed by Michael Landon. It will be colorcast on "The Big Event" Tuesday, May 2, 9 to 11 p.m.

Gil Gerard stars in the development project as writer Gil Stone. Guest stars include J.D. Cannon (formerly of "McCloud") as Sheriff Harky; veteran Western star Jim Davis as U.S. senator Barry Tyler; and Nehemiah Persoff, Matthew Laborteaux, Corinne Michaels and Joshua Bryant as members of the writer's family. Valentina Quinn, daughter of Anthony Quinn, is featured as Tyler's housekeeper.

Wrongly imprisoned for 10 years for robbery-murder, Gil Stone leaves prison with a full pardon after new evidence is presented. Following an unsuccessful attempt to pick up his life of 10 years ago, the aspiring writer is hired as a syndicated newspaper columnist on the road.

Given carte blanche in his assignments to offer a fresh view of the world, Stone takes off to a small town, Tylerville, where he receives a hostile reception from the belligerent sheriff. Stone's efforts to uncover the truth about a homicide case involving Senator Tyler's playboy son place him in danger, especially when he is befriended by the senator's outspoken housekeeper, Cindy.

JOHN 'OINK' WAYNE

The latest word from actor John Wayne, hospitalized in Boston, Mass., where he underwent heart surgery recently, is that he's anxious to get back to work.

The surgery necessitated an incision from his throat down his chest for the substitution of a valve from the heart of a pig. Among the inquires Wayne has received was whether the pig was male or female. The actor, of course, is enjoying the 'porker' jokes and is referring to himself as "Oink Wayne."

Henry Fonda stars as an aging Illinois farmer threatened with life in a home for the aged, until his loyal granddaughter, played by Kristen Vigard, comes to his rescue, in "Home to Stay," Tuesday, May 2 (9:30-11 p.m.) on CBS.

Wedding Dates Evoke Crisis

As wedding dates rapidly approach, engaged couples and their families are caught in a whirlwind of emotional crisis — past loves, parental pressure and social and financial obligations — in "With This Ring," airing as "The ABC Friday Night Movie," May 5, 9 to 11 p.m.

Starring are Tony Bill, Tom Bosley, Diana Canova, Barbara Cason, Joyce DeWitt, John Forsythe, Scott Hyland, Donny Most, Dick Van Patten, Betty White and Deborah White.

Dick Van Patten stars as Alvin Andrews, a hard-working middle-aged man who is ashamed to confess to his wife and daughter that he cannot afford the lavish reception they have planned. Barbara Cason stars as his wife, Diana Canova as his daughter and Donny Most was the prospective son-in-law.

Jilly Weston and Tom Burkhardt, played by Joyce DeWitt and Scott Hyland, find their engagement jeopardized by faces from the past. Tony Bill stars as a determined ex-lover hoping to recapture Jilly's affections, and Peter Jason, Charles Thomas Murphy and Howard George co-star as Tom's old fraternity brothers trying to relive their high-flying college days.

Meanwhile, wealthy Evelyn Harris, the estranged wife of Gen. Albert Harris, is busily preparing her daughter's wedding reception, determined to make it the social event of the season. Afraid of exposing the deep feelings they still have for one another, the prominent couple — played by Betty White and John Forsythe — are reunited by the common bond of the daughter's impending marriage. Mary Frances Crosby co-stars as their daughter, helplessly watching as her parents arrange a wedding and a future she does not want.

As their walk to the altar brings each family one step closer to the institution of marriage,

Tom Bosley and Deborah White star as the catering director and assistant director of the large, metropolitan hotel where wedding bliss usually is equated with stuffed pheasants, catered canapes and a twelve-piece orchestra. As emotions rise and fall, however, the director and his assistant suddenly find themselves playing chief counsel, hard-hearted heavy and hesitant guardian angel.

Scott Hyland and Joyce DeWitt (of "Innocent Company") are about to enter into holy matrimony in the movie special — titled "With This Ring" on the "ABC Friday Night Movie," May 5 (9-11 p.m.).

Poignant Comedy To Air Tuesday

Walter Matthau and Carol Burnett star as "Pete 'n' Tillie" in the comedy-drama about a mismatched marriage to be colorcast as the "Tuesday Movie of the Week" May 2, at 11:30 p.m. on ABC. Geraldine Page and Barry Nelson co-star. When Tillie Schlane (Burnett) is introduced to Pete Seltzer (Matthau), a great wit and practical joker, their romance blossoms after a shaky start, and in six months they are married.

With the birth of their son, Charlie (Lee H. Montgomery), the marriage is complete, and despite Pete's constant levity and minor infidelities, it continues to flourish.

It isn't until Charlie is stricken with a malignancy that the Seltzers find their lives cracking under the stresses and strains of married life, and consider divorce.

Hope Stars

Bob Hope, playing a New York personality, finds that troubles often multiply, no matter where you are, in the comedy, "Cancel My Reservation," to be colorcast on "The CBS Late Movie," Monday, May 1, at 11:30 p.m.

Hope portrays Dan Bartlett, who decides to leave his wife, Sheila, and their troubled marriage and seek peace at his Phoenix ranch.

Bartlett has barely arrived at the ranch when he is accused of slaying a local beauty. The sheriff and his deputies seem determined to place guilt on the surprised visitor.

After Bartlett is finally released from jail, Sheila arrives to help, and together they set out to find the person who has framed him. Their investigation uncovers two more bodies and a dying Indian's last words provides the missing link to the crimes.

former to agree to talk about his career and his background.

"He told us that as a child he always yearned to grow up to be someone important," Adidge revealed. "He remembers going to concerts at an auditorium where he later presented his first show and he was fascinated by the big bands and especially the conductors. He remembered, and we used it in the film, 'I watched the conductor, listened to the music for hours by myself. I was fascinated by the fact that these guys could play for hours, you know, and most of the time the conductor wouldn't even look at his sheet, he just knew everything going on!'"

He also related that his father stressed the virtues of being an electrician or plumber as opposed to playing a guitar. "I was training to be an electrician because they made $3.00 an hour...I was very serious about it. I made that first record really as a personal thing for my mother. And that same company called me a year later and said, 'We got a song you might be able to do.'"

Colonel Tom Parker, the singer's agent, served as technical advisor.

Angie Dickinson To Return...If

UNDERCOVER COP — Angie Dickinson will not return to her popular "Police Woman" series (airing on Thursdays from 10 to 11 p.m. on NBC-TV) for a fifth season if certain demands are not met by her producers.

Beautiful Angie Dickinson will return for a fifth season of her "Police Woman" series on NBC next fall, if its format is changed to six, two-hour specials rather than 26 segments a season.

Apparently, the demands are ones that the actress has vowed she'll not alter, for she has candidly said that it is imperative to her that she have more time to spend with her daughter, Nikki. Additionally, she points to the 12-hour work days necessary in starring in a weekly series and insists that's the primary reason she and her husband, Burt Bacharach, are separated.

Furthermore, Miss Dickinson insists that with a reduced work schedule, it would be possible for she and her husband to have the time necessary to work at returning to being husband and wife.

To those who know the actress well, such a stand is not unexpected. Four years ago, when she signed her contract for the hour-long series, it was something she did with obvious reluctance.

"It would take the second coming of Lucy to get me into TV," Angie had said.

But that was before she created the character of Sgt. Pepper Anderson while guest starring in a segment of "Police Story." That appearance was so well received that the long-time glamour girl of movies was given a proverbial offer she couldn't refuse.

Nevertheless, while the actress had it written in her now-expired four-year contract that she'd only work a certain number of hours a day, she's been unable to escape the additional pressures and demands that befall a TV series star.

"Police Woman" has not been a resounding success in the ratings the past couple of seasons, but the interest by the network and studio continuing it is because of Angie's continuing popularity and the show's success outside of the country.

The series is a major hit in Europe, and that popularity is equaled in Australia. It is a simple business fact that the show is a big monetary winner in its foreign sales.

Nevertheless, the star has taken her stand, and has no intentions of wavering from it.

Ironically, Miss Dickinson's position comes at a time when series co-star, Earl Holliman, is contemplating a departure from the show to accept the many film offers that have come his way, including one to co-star with Sophia Loren in "Fire Power."

'Hawaii Five-O' Is Staying Alive

When "Hawaii Five-O" premiered on CBS-TV back in 1968, it was the result of a two-and-a-half year struggle by the producer to convince CBS-TV that a weekly series could be filmed in Hawaii. But the struggle didn't end with the show's first segment. Pitted against "The Flying Nun" and "Iron-sides," "Five-O" limped along at the bottom of the ratings until a move to Thursday night sent it soaring.

Networks had faith in those days. CBS held on to the series and this fall it begins its eleventh season on the air. No small wonder, either, since "Five-O" is one of the few police shows to withstand the anti-violence beating from pressure groups and Washington.

Basically, the show's success can be traced back to the original concept and the fact that Hawaii's state police department, as well as the governor, gave the show's producers their full support. This has enabled the series' writers to come up with every conceivable plot. Nor has it been all that violent. There are no car chases, and there've been only three fistfights in the last 24 segments.

Pike's Peek

By Charlie Pike, TV Showtime staff writer.
HOLLYWOOD — The out-of-court settlement between Farrah Fawcett-Majors and Spelling-Goldberg Productions is being declared a victory, in certain corners, for the actress. If she'd been offered a reduced working schedule after the first season of the series, she'd have stayed with it, because that's the underlying reason for her departure!

The obvious follow-up question to Farrah's return is, how does Kate, Jaclyn and Cheryl feel about it? It's no secret that there's no love lost between Kate and Farrah, and we happen to know that Farrah's preferred choice in makeup artists is now Jaclyn's personal choice and Cheryl's so busy with her own career outside the show and has never worked with Farrah, so one can draw their own conclusion.

John Rubenstein of "Family" joins Suzanne Somers and Bruce Boxleitner in the CBS Movie of the Week, "Jack and the Princess."

Ted Lange, who has returned for another season as Issac the bartender on ABC's "Love Boat," is justifiably proud of his mother. Gerri Lange is a TV personality in the San Francisco area and hosts the national PBS show called "Turnabout."

Tom Netherton, the handsome six-foot-five singer on the "Lawrence Welk Show," gets more fan mail than anyone on the show except Welk himself. In fact, Tom receives handmade gifts and marriage proposals. The former he donates to charity while he files the latter.

Ja'net DuBois, a nominee for a NAACP Image Award for her portrayal of Willona on "Good Times," will co-star in "Roots II."

Marcy Hanson, the freckle-faced blonde in NBC's new series, "roller girls," is one of those Texas beauties who came to Los Angeles on vacation two years ago and simply never went home. She is the steady companion, by the way, of Joe Namath.

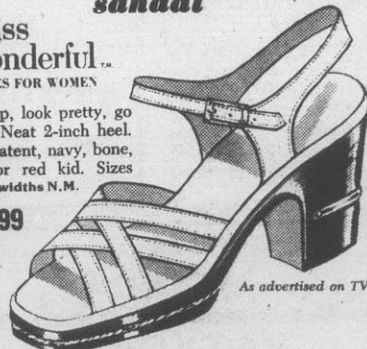

Didi Conn, who captured a lot of hearts for her screen role in "You Light Up My Life," and will soon be seen in the film version of "Grease," joins David Groh, Harry Morgan, as well as Barbi Benton and Wolfman Jack in an intriguing mystery, "Murder at the Mardi Gras," part of which was actually filmed during the Mardi Gras in New Orleans. It's a real 'whodunit,' and even Didi won't give any hints as to who is trying to kill her from beginning to end.

'Captain And Tennille In Hawaii'

When Daryl Dragon and Toni Tennille greet their television guests on Friday, May 5, with "The Captain and Tennille in Hawaii" (8 to 9 p.m., on ABC), they are not going to be showcasing their country's 50th State as so many TV specials have. No, in a very unique way, the Captain and Tennille will be entertaining from a "foreign" side of the islands.

"When we were on our last concert tour," Toni explains from the couple's Pacific Palisades home, "it was a four-and-a-half-month tour, and Daryl and I love Hawaii so we thought we'd go there to rest. Well, Bruce Johnson, who wrote 'I Write the Songs,' honeymooned with his wife at a place called Hana on Maui, which is on the Eastern side of that island away from all the big hotels and everything.

"So he told us about it and we went there and fell in love with it. The whole town has maybe 300 people in it and there's like one place to stay, the Hana Ranch, and there's no television, very little radio, no newspapers, I mean, you're really in the sticks when you're there. And it's beautiful there.

"So we wanted to show that in this special," she continues, "and half of the show will be from that area and the other half will be on the big island of Hawaii, around volcanoes, at Black Sand Beach, the Kona Coast. In other words, we're staying away from all the things people see when they go there.

"It's really back to nature," Toni exclaims. "I mean, with the hotel there being the only place to stay in Hana, some of the crew stayed in private homes and others slept in sleeping bags, I mean it's really in the sticks. But it's absolutely divine because going to the ranch is like going to summer camp. That's what it's like.

"Everybody eats in this dining room and they have certain hours that you eat, and they have cook-out rides where you can go cook-out your breakfast on the beach, or go horseback riding for a couple of hours and then cook-out at the beach. The extent of luxuries there are two tennis courts."

With such 'foreign' locales in the specials, the show does carry a little travel log flavor to it, but as Toni adds, "There's not a lot of Hawaiian music in it. We'll have some, but basically the music is very contemporary, our usual stuff, but we will be showing Hawaii.

In addition, Daryl has his own solo spot on the show which will find him amongst the volcano lava rocks on the Big Island, "which looks like something from outer space, so we're doing 'Close Encounters' out there on location," he explains.

That scene alone took an entire day of filming and most of it was directed by Daryl personally.

NBA Playoffs Continue With Semifinal Contest

As the second NBA season and the ensuing playoffs continue, CBS will present another playoff contest Friday, May 5, beginning at 11:30 p.m. The game will represent a semifinal contest as only four teams — two from each conference — remain. The winners of the best of seven semifinal competition will advance to the best of seven NBA Championship Series.

Through the entire playoff season last year, the Philadelphia 76ers found themselves victorious until they tangled with the Portland Trailblazers in the finals for the NBA crown. During all those crucial playoff contests along the way, the 76ers were playing as if one hand were tied behind their back. George McGinnis, their all-pro power forward whose exceptional play was so vital in getting the 76ers into the playoffs in the first place, hit a devastating playoff slump. For 19 playoff games, McGinnis shot a poor 37.4 percent from the floor. That, of course, does not reflect upon the perhaps 100 shots he was too discouraged to even attempt.

During the entire ordeal, McGinnis remained as approachable as ever to the press. Writers gained a tremendous amount of respect for George for not holding up in the trainer's room and for not refusing to discuss his slump. Despite his troubles, anxiety, and depression, he always puts on a cordial show. Only after Game Three of the Portland series did he tighten up and request not to be interviewed if the questions were in regard to his slump.

"I've said everything there is to say," said McGinnis. "It's time for me to do it or shut the bleep up."

McGinnis' slump was, to a great extent, caused by a groin pull that wasn't so bad he had to leave the lineup, but bad enough to upset his rhythm.

When McGinnis teams with Julius Irving and Doug Collins in a game, opponents don't know who to concentrate on first. As a result, everyone on the Philadelphia team becomes a greater threat.

With McGinnis, Irving and Company healthy, the 76ers appear more powerful than ever.

World Boxing Association Light-Heavyweight Champion Victor Galindez will make the 10th defense of his title (and his fourth in the last eleven months), this time against the number-one ranked challenger (by the WBA), Alvaro "Yaqui" Lopez, in a 15-round championship bout to be broadcast live on "CBS Sports Spectacular,"

Saturday, May 6, 4:30 to 6 p.m.

Galindez will meet Lopez for the second time with the title on the line. In their first meeting last September, Lopez dominated the early part of the bout, building a lead, but the champion came on in the later rounds to take a decision victory.

Galindez won the WBA version of the crown in 1974, when he knocked out Detroit's Len Hutchins in the 13th round. He has since defended it successfully nine times. Of late, the 29-year-old Galindez has been a busy champion. Since taking Lopez, he also won a split decision in November 1977 over Brooklyn's Eddie Gregory. Last June, he decided Philadelphia's Richie Kates. In all, Galindez has won 47 bouts (27 by KO), lost five, fought four times to a draw and twice to no decision.

Galindez, from Sante Fe, Argentina, turned professional in 1969 after representing Argentina as a middleweight in the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City. As an amateur, his record stood at 29 victories and only three defeats. In his third year as a pro, the bull-necked, 5'9" Galindez had captured both the Argentine and South American light-heavyweight titles.

Known for his effective body punching and strong left hook, the champion has been undefeated in his last 37 fights, dating back to December 1971 when he dropped a split decision to Avenemar Peralata in Buenos Aires. He later avenged that loss.

Yaqui Lopez was said to be through as a championship contender after his loss to Galindez last September. In fact, he was pitted against upcoming Mike Rossman on March 3, in a bout which was heralded as prepping Rossman for a title shot.

But Lopez upset the matchmakers, and Rossman in the process, by knocking out the youngster from New Jersey. Rossman in the sixth, to the extent that he never answered the bell for the seventh.

This will be Lopez' third try for the championship, and his overall record is 42 victories and six defeats, with 26 KOs. He has never fought to a draw.

Roles Reversed In Romp

Roles are reversed when a puppy goes in search of a stray boy to be his best friend in "The Puppy Who Wanted A Boy," an animated canine romp which airs as an "ABC Weekend Specials" presentation Saturday, May 6, 12-noon to 12:30 p.m. There just aren't enough boys and girls to go around when a large litter of pups is born in a small town, so the one puppy who is left nameless and boyless goes off to the city to adopt a boy of his own.

"The task isn't as easy as it sounds, since the other dogs he meets certainly aren't interested in giving up their own boys," says Marilyn Olin, Director, Children's Programs, ABC Entertainment. "Fortunately, he meets an older, wiser dog who advises him that 'If there's something you want, you have to go after it. If you don't you'll be disappointed in yourself the rest of your life.'"

The search for an available boy leads the puppy through a series of harrowing adventures, including a chase through a restaurant he accidentally wrecks, an encounter with two street dogs who have no use for puppies or boys, and a mysterious stranger who collects dogs for dark purposes.

Discouraged but undefeated, the puppy continues his search.

millionaire, Teddy Boyland, in "Rich Man, Poor Man"; the husband and father who underwent a transsexual operation in "The Third Sex".

'Serious Problem,' Says Robert Reed

"Did I ever run away from home?" — Robert Reed repeated this question.

"Sure, when I was a kid I ran away for a whole weekend — to the barn. But that kind of running away is a far cry from the serious problem of runaways we try to treat on 'Operation: Runaway.'"

"We're dealing with a social problem of enormous dimensions, not little kids who say, 'All Right, if you won't let me do such-and-such, I'll run away.'"

Reed stars as psychologist David McKay, a specialist in runaways, in NBC-TV's new limited series, which is airing on Thursdays, 9 to 10 p.m.

Reed continues: "I wouldn't presume to pontificate on anything as serious as runaways in the American social structure today.

"In real life, I'm not an expert in this field — any more than I was a slave owner in 'Roots' or the father of six children in 'The Brady Bunch.'"

"But despite my lack of expertise in the area, I find it an intriguing social phenomenon and one worthy of study. Did you know there were 2,000,000 runaways last year?"

Reed's "Operation: Runaway" role is a far cry from those he has played recently: he was the debonair but decadent

ANNIVERSARY COMING UP

"Another World," NBC-TV's Emmy Award-winning daytime drama, will celebrate its 14th anniversary Thursday, May 4.

The consistently high-rated series won an Emmy in 1976 as Outstanding Daytime Dramatic Series and was nominated in the same category last year. Three additional 1977 nominations were received by Ira Cirkor, director; Harding Lemay, writer (an Emmy winner in '74); and Beverlee McKinsey, who portrays Iris Carrington.

"Another World," the first daytime dramatic program to be expanded from a half-hour to an hour (January, 1975), has won numerous awards from television magazines for writing, directing and acting.

'Legends Of Golf' Covered By NBC

In the golfing era that featured such clubs as the mashie, niblick, and spoon, no self-respecting golfer ventured onto the links without being outfitted in a smart-looking pair of plus fours. For today's polyester and doubleknit generation however, plus fours are golfing fashion of the past.

Those nostalgic golf buffs who yearn for that distant era of the game need not despair; plus fours will be making a comeback during exclusive first-time-ever live coverage on NBC-TV of "The Legends of Golf" Sunday, April 30, 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. NBC Sports commentators, production personnel and executives will all be wearing knickers to mark the occasion. Just imagine the rather rotund Jay Randolph and the angular former NFL quarterback John Brodie adorned in the baggy short pants of that bygone golfing era.

The greatest source of nostalgia in "The Legends of Golf," however, will be the 24 greats of the game who will shoot for the biggest prize of their long and illustrious careers. 'Legends' such as Gene Sarazen, a winner of each Grand Slam event, Sam Snead, all-time PGA tour leader with 84 tournament triumphs, three-time Masters champ Jimmy Demaret, and two-time U.S. Open winner Cary Middlecoff competing for a share of the $400,000 total purse makes "The Legends of Golf" an attraction for generations of golfing enthusiasts. A first prize check of $100,000 awaits the winning tandem in the 54-hole, best-ball competition between 12 two-man teams:

Gene Sarazen — Doug Ford
 Sam Snead — Gardner Dickinson
 Kel Nagel — Peter Thomson
 Tommy Bolt — Mike Souchak
 Paul Runyan — Lew Worsham

Bikes, Gymnastics, Pool

Coverage of the U.S. Grand Prix Motocross Motorcycle

Championship, in an encore presentation from Carlsbad,

Calif., plus the NCAA Gymnastics Championships from Eugene, Oregon, and Pool Championships Tough-Shot Competition from New York City will be presented on "ABC's Wide World of Sports," airing Sunday, April 30, 4:30 to 6 p.m. Riders from throughout the world are featured in the run for the U.S. Grand Prix Championship for the last three years; Belgium's Roger DeCoster, a five-time World Champion; Finland's Heikki Mikkola, the 1975 World Champion; and America's Brad Lackey, Gary Semics, Terry Clark and Jim Pomeroy.

Jim Lampley reports on the race, along with Bruce Jenner, the Olympic decathlon gold medal winner who is also a motorcycle buff.

The NCAA Gymnastics Championships at Eugene, Oregon, provide a showcase for some of the top gymnasts in the United States.

Practically everyone who has ever played the game of basketball has, at one time or another, engaged in a game of "Three on Three." This half-court basketball game, played for years in dimly-lit gyms and schoolyards, is gaining additional dimension as CBS Sports presents its version of the contest. Featuring a current National Basketball Association star, a past NBA star, and a show business celebrity — matched against similar counterparts — "Three on Three" airs Sundays at 1 p.m.

Some of the NBA stars competing will be "The Doctor" Julius Erving (Philadelphia), David Thompson (Denver), Earl Monroe (New York Knicks), and Maurice Lucas (Portland).

The NBA stars of the past should stir some memories, for they include Sam Jones (Boston), Jerry Lucas (New York Knicks), Dave DeBusschere (New York Knicks) and the self-proclaimed champion of the backboard — shattering dunk Gus Johnson (Baltimore).

The cast of show business celebrities include actor Robert Conrad ("Black Sheep Squadron"), singer Pat Boone, singer Marvin Gaye, and actor Richard Hatch ("Streets of San Francisco").

The second game of the series (April 30) will pit the team of "Pistol" Pete Maravich, Billy Cunningham, and LeVar Burton ("Roots") against a squad composed of Rick Barry, Lenny Wilkins and Kent McCord ("Adam-12"). The action was filmed prior to the start of the NBA season at the Omni International complex in Atlanta.

Pete Maravich is known primarily for his ability to put the ball in the basket, but it is his dazzling variety of moves and blind passes which constantly leaves opponents and teammates amazed.

Billy "The Kid" Cunningham

Burton Goes To Africa

LeVar Burton, the young actor who brought Kunta Kinte to life in "Roots," gets a real-life insight into the role he played as he makes contact with descendants of rebel African slaves in deepest Surinam (formerly Dutch Guiana), South America, on "The American Sportsman," airing Sunday, April 30, 4 to 4:30 p.m. on ABC-TV.

Burton is accompanied on this expedition by Dr. S. Allen Counter, a Harvard University professor, who on earlier trips to Surinam was the first North American black to pierce the veil that shut off these tribal warriors, known as Auconers, from the outside world.

Together, they meet up with primitive blacks, young and old, whose ancestors had been victims of what once was a flourishing South American slave trade. These slaves had broken away from, and then wiped out in guerrilla warfare, their Dutch masters. They then fled back into the jungle to settle in hidden villages.

Burton shows off a modern bow and arrow to his tribal friends and chieftains and they are duly impressed. He mixes with the village youngsters, the Kunta Kintes of our time, and delights in their fierce pride in their tribal names. And he travels through the perilous Amazon Rain Forest in search of game.

A high point in the expedition is reached when Burton and Dr. Counter come across a tribe of Amer-Indians, friendly to the Auconers, who are descendants of the original Indian inhabitants of North and South America before the white man ever set foot on these continents.

Rick Barry of the Golden State Warriors is joined by Lenny Wilkins and actor Kent McCord against Pete Maravich of the New Orleans Jazz and his teammates Billy Cunningham and actor LeVar Burton in a game of three on three. CBS will televise the contest at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, April 30 as part of their three on three tournament involving a current NBA star, a former NBA star and a celebrity.

was one of the game's premier forwards in the NBA until a crippling knee injury ended his career. Always known as a great one-on-one player, Cunningham was considered to be by the blacks in the league the best white "schoolyard" player in the game.

Rick Barry's credentials are as considerable as are his many basketball talents. A perennial All-Pro, Barry was the NBA Rookie of the Year for the 1965-66 season and has not let up since. Barry has been a prolific scorer during his career, while also earning the designation as the league's best passing forward.

There are several interesting contrasts in this matchup: Both Wilkins (Seattle) and Cunningham (Philadelphia) are coaches of teams. The other point is that both teams possess not only some of the best scorers in NBA history, but also some of the best passers the league has ever seen.

Comedy-Drama To Air

Ellen Burstyn, in her Academy Award-winning performance, stars as a young widow who embarks on an ambitious journey to start a new life and career as a singer, in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," a romantic comedy-drama to have its network television premiere on "NBC Saturday Night at the Movies" May 6, 9 to 11 p.m.

Kris Kristofferson also stars with Harvey Keitel, Alfred Lutter and Diane Ladd.

Burstyn portrays Alice Hyatt, a 35-year-old mother who, accompanied by her 12-year-old son, Tommy, leaves a dreary Oklahoma town when her marriage abruptly ends following her husband's fatal traffic accident.

With her original hometown, Monterey, as a final destination, Alice heads west with stops planned along the way where she hopes to entertain at piano bars to finance the trip. By the time she reaches Albuquerque, she has become lonely and begins to date a young man, Ben, who she soon learns is married.

Later, in Tucson, she fails to find a singing job, and finally decides to become a waitress. One morning she meets rancher David Barrie. Initially she remains aloof, even though Tommy quickly becomes a close buddy of the man.

When she and David do become friendly, Tommy responds with adolescent jealousy, ultimately winding up in jail for shoplifting. This crisis pits Alice against David and imperils their budding romance. Weeks later, when David extends an overture of peace, it is Tommy who is instrumental in pointing out the correct path to take.

The film is peopled with an astounding range of characters who touch on Alice's life, characters that are almost uniformly vital, high-spirited and credible. Kietel's stint as Ben, the cocky ladykiller, is jarringly intense, with Kristofferson providing perfect counterpoint as the strong but kindly rancher who understandably provides Alice with the compromise she has always needed. Flo (Ms. Ladd), a brassy dame whose obscenities are offset by her good nature, is a sheer delight, as is Vera (Valerie Curtin), as the gloriously inept waitress perpetually in tears.

Ovazza recalls, "First they told me the ransom would have to be paid (in France) in 48 hours, and the following evening they said, 'You must die tomorrow.' I spent the entire night thinking of my life, and how I could be ransomed with someone else's money. In the morning they said their chief told them not to kill me, but they would cut me and send piece by piece to my family."

CANNON STARS

Dyan Cannon will star in "Lady of the House," a two-hour television movie produced for NBC-TV.

Kidnapping Recounted

Widespread kidnapping has created a trauma among wealthy Europeans, and even those who survive an abduction, and are relatively unharmed physically, are left with deep mental scars. One such victim, Carla Ovazza of Turin, Italy, describes 35 terror-filled days and nights in a report on "Weekend," airing Saturday, May 6, 11:30 p.m. to 1 a.m., on NBC.

Filmed at her home in Turin, Ms. Ovazza still has difficulty controlling her emotions as she describes the experience in detail.

"I had no bodyguards, and as I was unlocking my car, two men grabbed me from behind, beat me over the head, threw me into a car, placed a hood over my eyes, and threatened to shoot me if I tried to remove it. They told me, 'You are our golden hostage.'"

The ransom demand was $6 million, far beyond the resources of the victim's family, and during the negotiations, Ovazza went through an agonizing, five-week period during which her right ankle was chained to a bed in an unheated room, her eyes were continually covered to prevent subsequent recognition of her captors, and her ears were plugged with wax lest she identify their voices.

Merit Reputation Growing.

'Enriched Flavor' tobacco strong attraction for increasing numbers of high tar smokers.

LOW TAR-ENRICHED FLAVOR

Kings: 8 mg "tar," 0.6 mg nicotine av. per cigarette, FTC Report Aug. '77 100's: 11 mg "tar," 0.8 mg nicotine av. per cigarette by FTC Method.

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health.

Finding good taste in a low tar cigarette is no longer a problem for high tar smokers.

The taste of one low tar cigarette is changing the minds of hard line "taste" smokers. That cigarette: MERIT.

75% of MERIT smokers are coming directly from higher tar brands.

'Enriched Flavor' Tobacco The Reason

By cracking cigarette smoke down into separate elements, researchers were able to isolate certain key flavor-rich ingredients that deliver taste way out of proportion to tar.

The result is 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco. It's convincing the toughest critics of low tar smoking.

Tests among thousands of smokers show why.

Taste-Test Proof

MERIT and MERIT 100's were both tested against a number of higher tar brands.

Overall, smokers reported they liked the taste of both MERIT and MERIT 100's as much as the taste of the higher tar cigarettes tested.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

No falling debris from NASA.

FOR DR. ROBERT FROSCH, administrator, NASA

How many satellites do we have up? Do they contain radioactive materials? What are their chances of malfunctioning and falling to earth? — S.C., Bay City, Mich.

● NASA has one satellite, Nimbus 3, equipped with a nuclear generator. Nimbus 3 was sent up in 1969, and it stopped operating two months after it was launched. Its orbit is such that we don't expect it to come down before 1,000 years. Long before that, however, our advanced space technology should enable us to go out into space and retrieve it. We now use radioactive material only in deep space, which is a one-way trip. Aerodynamicists, thermodynamicists, environmentalists and other specialists study all mission-safety aspects. The average life of a satellite depends on its size and orbit — it's as unpredictable as a human. The North American Air Defense Command constantly checks all satellites.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

I saw Star Wars with Carrie Fisher, and it got me wondering if her parents' [Debbie Reynolds and Eddie Fisher] rocky love lives have put her off marriage. — M.H., Little Rock, Ark.

● Carrie claims her mother's two marriages and her father's four have made her doubly cautious about settling down. At 20, she feels that she hasn't yet reached the husband-hunting stage. Carrie is sure that she won't repeat her parents' mistakes, both in their private and public lives. "I can't see where stardom did them any favors," she says. "They started with so much, which means they had so much more to lose." Carrie, only 2 when her dad left her mom for Liz Taylor, says the only thing she remembers about that unhappy time is "my mom's bed seemed so much larger than it was before." She's sure she inherited a strong sense of fun from her mother. She says she has her father's bounce and eyes.

FOR CAROL BURNETT

What are you like away from the cameras? — P.T., Beckley, W. Va.

● We laugh a lot at home, but it's not because I'm on doing my thing. It's because as a family we see the funny side of life. Actually, I'm inclined to be quiet. Joe [Hamilton] and I are homebodies. We'd much rather watch TV than go out on the town. I'm in a good mood when our kids are happy and cooking on all burners. I get in a foul temper when people around me are in a bad mood or are temperamental for no reason.

FOR WALTER O'MALLEY, chairman, Los Angeles Dodgers

Why is the National League against the designated hitter? — Mike Duncan, Plymouth, Ill.

● We rely heavily on the feelings and thoughts of our fans, and there is little to indicate the National League fans want the designated hitter. They enjoy the strategy of the game of baseball, and much of that strategy involves whether a pitcher should go to bat or be replaced by a pinch hitter.

FOR ADMIRAL ELMO R. ZUMWALT (ret.)

Why do you fear SALT negotiators will ignore evidence of a Soviet military buildup and strike too soft a bargain for the U.S.? — K.A., Troy, N.Y.

● The details of the gestating SALT II agreement have been leaked by Administration spokesmen in bits and pieces. Paul Nitze, former SALT I negotiator, recently put them all together for the public. His analysis indicates our present SALT negotiators have made a serious error, which is that they believe arms-control deals are good regardless of their substance.

FOR CATHERINE SCHELL, star of TV's Space: 1999

Your hair-raising adventures on the show make me wonder whether you've ever had any awful experiences in real life. — R.J., Las Vegas, Nev.

● Eleven years ago I was making a movie in Brazil. I was treated abominably. One awful thing that happened was finding myself stranded on a snake-infested island in the Amazon. Another time I was forced to run through the jungle lugging my suitcases to catch a boat — then jump on it from a wharf. No one (they were all men) gave me a hand or a seat.

FOR JACQUES BELLINI, designer

When you criticized President Carter's wardrobe, were you suffering from sour grapes because he does not wear your clothes? — S.B., Waco, Texas

● No. My criticism was intended to help — not hurt. When Carter was President-elect, I sent him a batch of designs as tips for when he took office. I see some of my advice rubbed off because he's better coordinated than he was. He needs help from his shoes with the fair look to his shirt sleeves which are too short. His big problem is that nothing he wears fits right.

FOR ELIZABETH POST, etiquette authority

At a party last week, I lit my [male] date's cigarette and everyone stared as though I'd made an awful social gaffe. Did I? — G.B., Johnstown, Pa.

● There's nothing wrong with lighting a man's cigarette if you happen to have a match or lighter and he doesn't. All it shows is consideration. On another note, Women's Lib has caused some women to cut off their noses to spite their faces. Seems to me it's much more comfortable to have the door held open for you (although a man is doing it) than have it slam in your face.

PRO John T. Martin, principal, Nicholas Senn High School, Chicago

Through bilingual education, students have the opportunity not only to learn the subject matter covered in any department more readily but also to become more comfortable in the English language. The philosophy in our school system is that bilingual instruction should enable the student to make a comfortable transition from the predominant use of his native tongue as the language of instruction to the use of English as the predominant language of instruction. In this way, the student can be expected to master the subjects leading to a diploma and become more able to cope with the English-speaking society into which he is being assimilated.

PRO AND CON Should Schools Instruct In More Than One Language?

CON Sen. Orrin G. Hatch (R.-Utah)

Many languages should be offered in our schools, but instruction that stresses any language other than English is detrimental to our citizens. Students who do not speak English must be taught the language of the largest segment of our society or we are saddling them with a serious handicap. Let's help them to improve their own language, but most important is a command of our principal language. It is suggested that students without command of English are at a disadvantage when competing with English-speaking peers. Although initially they may be, the ultimate advantage of learning English will outweigh their immediate difficulties.

YOUR NEWSPAPER: FRIEND OR FOE?

"For all readers, a newspaper means all the news of the day that all of us must understand if we are to succeed as a nation of the people, by the people, for the people."

providing new recipes...

announcing sales and bargains.

By Allen H. Neuharth

Long before Robert Redford made the Watergate story into a hit movie, news reporting was an exciting business.

Long before the Watergate coverage wrote a new chapter in our history, investigative reporting was a necessary protection of the freedoms of Americans.

But the Watergate reporting, in fact and on film, did dramatize the vital role that the press must perform and has performed throughout our 200 years.

It reflected, too, some serious public questioning about the way the free press behaves in today's free society, even when doing its job. What are the answers to those questions?

Q. Is today's newspaper a friend or a foe?

A. I am going to tell you, of course, that it is generally a good friend. But that question typifies the popular misunderstanding about the special place of news reporting in public life and the indispensable place of newspapers in private life.

Q. Are you saying that the newspaper is a necessary evil?

A. I am saying it is a necessary friend that must reach out every day to help everyone in that community have a better day — whatever his or her lifestyle, status, interests, beliefs and background.

Q. Can a newspaper really do something for everyone?

A. It should and it can. Most communities today can support only one successful newspaper operation. When a newspaper is the only game in town, it must cut everyone in on the game.

Q. That sounds great, but what does it mean for the reader?

A. For all readers, it means all the news of the day that all of us must understand if we are to succeed as a nation of the people, by the people, for the people.

For the curious reader, it means the pulse-beat information of the day — acts of government, decisions of courts, results in sports, ups and downs of the stock market, names in the news.

For the active reader, it means the calendar — where to go, what to do, how to get the most from every minute.

For the thinking reader, it means a diversity of opinion — the editorials, the columnists, the cross section of views; not to tell the public what to think, but what it needs to know in order to think for itself.

For the lively reader, the light and bright and sometimes weird side of life — the real happenings to real people, the flesh and blood of the community that give warmth and reality to the news columns.

For the uneasy reader, the helpful hints for a better life — a directory for solving problems, for finding answers, for uplifting body and spirit.

For the relaxing reader, the crossword and comics, the television schedules, the movie clock and the concert reviews.

For the shopping reader, the details from the marketplace — the daily scoreboard of prices, the special buys and latest styles and newest products, the classified guides to where to find a job or rent a house.

Q. What about the poor annoyed reader who thinks the newspaper is just a troublemaker?

A. The watchdog role of the free press is a cornerstone of this free society. It applies from the nation's capital to the smallest hamlet, to the most immediate concerns of the taxpayer, to the most basic elements of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The underlying purpose of this press duty is to help correct trouble or, better still, to help avoid trouble before it starts. That watchdog role is inherent in a good newspaper and invaluable to a healthy community, state and nation.

Q. But isn't the bad news headlined to sell more newspapers?

A. Most newspapers today are sold before they are printed. Of the more than 61 million reader households, most — more than four out of five in many communities — have their newspapers delivered to their homes every day because they buy the total newspaper package.

Q. Speaking of pocketbooks, what happened to the two-cent newspaper?

A. What happened to the nickel cup of coffee? Penny for penny, today's newspaper is the best buy in town. Compare its price with that of a cup of coffee or an ice-cream cone. Compare the price of a movie ticket with the weekly price paid to the newspaper carrier — and remember that carrier still makes house calls.

Q. Radio and television deliver news to the home, too. What has that meant to our newspapers?

A. New challenges, new approaches, new opportunities. Broadcast news delivers the headlines and the highlights that spark the public appetite for newspaper detail. Many Americans, for example, never go to a major sports event, but now that event comes right into their living rooms, and they, in turn, go to the sports pages for quotes and statistics and second-guessing.

Q. But haven't newspapers declined?

A. Changed, yes. Declined, no. In the 30 years since the heyday of John Cameron Swayze, the number of U.S. daily newspapers has remained steady, and those with a circulation of 50,000 or more reader families have increased by 25 percent. In the past decade the number of Sunday newspapers has grown to 647, a new gain of 74. And circulation has gained most on Sundays, thanks to greatly improved Sunday newspaper reading like this FAMILY WEEKLY magazine.

Newspapers now have more competition, too, for reader attention, and they have prevailed on both counts. The investment in newspaper advertising is about equal to all the money spent for television, radio and magazine advertising combined.

Q. Don't you have any unfriendly news about newspapers?

A. The answer is "yes." I have very unfriendly news for any newspaper that does not reach out each day in every edition to reach every reader with the news and information and service that make life a little bit better for all.

A newspaper that does not make that all-out effort is failing in its obligations as a free press. It deserves to fail in its opportunities as a free enterprise, and it will fail us as a friend when it reaches us.

But most newspapers do make that day-in-day-out effort — most do try far harder than their readers realize and critics admit.

A newspaper that delivers total performance to its total community of readers may never get its work made into a movie. But it will be its readers' best friend.

It will make life a little better for everyone in its community.

And that is what counts.

Al Neuharth used to be a reporter himself. Today he is president and chief executive of Gannett Co., Inc., a group of 77 daily newspapers in 30 states and in the U.S. territories of the Virgin Islands in the Atlantic and Guam in the Pacific.

FIVE PERSONS, ONE BODY

By Robert S. Nagey

Christy is an attractive and friendly 19-year-old redhead who likes sports and movies and relates well to older people. She works at a sales job and goes to college part-time.

Sarah is a brilliant, self-assured 19-year-old who believes in always putting her best foot forward.

Jennifer is a disarmingly open, impish 15-year-old with the maturity of a 7-year-old who can't read or write English well but translates from a Spanish book fluently.

John is a tough 15-year-old, the twin brother of Jennifer, who generally stays dormant during the day but stalks the streets at night in search of narcotics.

Lisa is anywhere from 6 months to 4 years old. She speaks only a few words, has a favorite doll and loves to climb on people's laps.

Although they all are separate personalities, they share the same body in what therapists say may be the most delineated case of multiple personalities known to the medical profession.

The girls all have different wardrobes. They all smoke, except Lisa, but the brands of their cigarettes differ. John distrusts everyone, and when he appears, he runs off the first chance he gets. Jennifer can't stand Sarah's high heels and takes them off as soon as she materializes. And when Sarah is out front, she clears up Christy's acne.

Dr. Clinton A. Johnson, a local consulting psychiatrist who has been following the case at the request of the guardians, says the condition is known as a dissociative type of hysterical neurosis, one that affects women of high intelligence. "The condition is rare," he explains, "and there is no established treatment."

"She has acknowledged us, but she hasn't accepted us," says one of Christy's personalities. "When she accepts us as part of herself, the integration process will be complete, and we will sort of die."

Dr. Johnson says that to his knowledge only four or five such cases have been written up in medical journals, though others undoubtedly exist. Two of the best-known multiple personalities were the subjects of the highly successful movies Sybil and The Three Faces of Eve.

Perhaps what makes this case more significant than others is the documentation. Everything that has taken place in the past two years — the emergence of the different personalities, their interaction, their progress through therapy — is on tape.

Dr. Johnson says the ultimate goal in cases of multiple personalities is to integrate them into one entity. In this case, Christy will be the prevailing entity since she is in control of the body 60 percent of the time. When the integration process is complete, her counterparts will cease to exist as separate personalities.

The foster parents are therapists themselves, and through the use of hypnosis have been able to contact the various personalities almost at will. Their documentation has been an important part of the treatment. But they want their names and the location of their home withheld to protect Christy's identity.

Although she is in charge of her body most of the time, Christy is the only one of the personalities who is not acquainted with the others. She learned about them from the tapes.

"She has acknowledged us, but she hasn't accepted us," Sarah shrugs. "When she accepts us as a part of herself, the integration process will be complete, and we will sort of die."

The therapists say each of the entities apparently was created out of stress. When Christy was unable to cope with a situation, she gave up control of herself and entered a fugue state, a condition in which a patient flees from reality and has no memory of it. As she did, subconscious parts of her personality — the parent, the child, the rebel, the male part — became strong enough to take over the body. Once created, they stayed.

Now the other personalities usually appear when Christy is either exhausted or under stress. Generally, they take form without warning. They also can be brought out through hypnosis.

When Christy is under strain at work, Sarah relieves her. They look the same, but to the close observer, the changes are noticeable. When Sarah appears, an almost imperceptible aura of reserve surrounds her body. Her voice goes down a notch or two, and her movements take on an air of self-assurance. Sarah is more formal and instinctively seems to know what is "proper." All this can lead to problems.

"For a while now, Christy has been calling her boss by his first name," Sarah relates with a smile. "The other day when I was filling in for her, I had forgotten that, and I referred to him by his last name. He eyed me quizzically: 'My, my, aren't we getting formal all of a sudden!'"

Christy goes to college, but Sarah, a straight-A student, takes and passes her examinations. She signs the tests Christy Sarah "just so Christy knows I've been there and took care of everything."

When Christy's ulcer starts acting up, Sarah comes out to relieve the pain. "I will it away using the mind-over-matter approach," she explains.

Sarah is the official subconscious "observer" who keeps track of all of the personalities, but she is not the dominant alter ego. Jennifer is.

When Christy becomes too tired to function, Jennifer comes out to play, to delight and to reflect the uninhibited curiosity of a child with unbound energy.

"I like to add more than subtract," she observes, " 'cause that way I wind up with more than what I had before."

To a visitor who wanted to give her two necklaces: "Nop't, you better keep one so's you can be what you are."

About her role as part of a multiple personality: "Yepp't, I know I be here a short time; they told me that. But it's fun, 'specially now that I like people. I used to be scared of people 'cause they hurt me. But now, they're nice, and I don't be scared no more."

And when Christy, Jennifer and Sarah are at rest, John slips out of the house to satisfy his craving for drugs. If there is something incongruous about a male personality in women's clothing, no trace of it shows in John's tough street banter.

"John," the therapist asks. "Just for the record, you are a male, even though you're wearing women's clothing now?"

"Yeah," he responds with a so-what edge, "I'm a male."

"How did you happen to come out front?"

Continued

"cause Jennifer asked me. She's the only one I care about."

"John, do you think you could trust us?"

"Man, I ain't got no room for that."

"John, we're trying to help your other selves. Will you cooperate?"

"I don't know you guys. Why should I believe you?" The voice turns full of scorn. "Nobody does nothin' free. I don't owe nobody nothin'."

The foster parents bring John out with apprehension because he is unpredictable. Not long ago, he appeared while the therapists were working with Christy. He looked around the room, jumped for the door and was gone.

According to Sarah, who was observing all this helplessly locked in the body, John then hitchhiked to Pasadena, 25 miles away, wandered around the streets and got lost. By nightfall, he was confused and frustrated, so he gave up control and turned the body over to Jennifer.

Hours later, a woman found Jennifer crying at the entrance of a public building. Jennifer managed to remember the name of her foster parents and the city where they lived, and the woman telephoned them. At 4:00 A.M., after a frantic search of 10 hours, the foster parents picked up the frightened girl.

Because of John's uncontrolled condition, therapists will not deliberately bring him out. But at a recent session, witnessed by two Pomona Progress-Bulletin newsmen, the guardians, through hypnosis, were able to bring out the four other personalities in two hours, each sharply different from the others. They all recognized and accepted the natural mother, who was present and filled in their history.

Christy was the fifth of her six children. The mother recalled that even as an infant Christy seemed to have had some shifts in personality. But the inconsistencies seemed to be minor, and there were other children to bring up, so the mother didn't pay much attention to the changes — that is, not until her daughter was about 11.

"That's when my marriage got into trouble," she explains. "I felt depressed, and Christy tried to console me, but I guess the strain got to her, too. As my domestic situation got worse, her schoolwork suffered. Then a strange thing happened. In one day, Christy seemed to grow up. She was coming up with insights that were too deep for a girl twice her age. And like a miracle, she became an honor student. Of course, I didn't know it at the time, but that is when Christy's personality split, and she gave herself over to her more mature part, which took form as Sarah."

Sarah stayed in control of Christy's body for more than a year, and then she and Christy began taking turns staying out. That confused the mother even more.

"I thought something was wrong with her mind," the mother recalls. "I would share something with her one day and she wouldn't remember it the next day. The third day she'd recall everything perfectly. It was as if she'd split into twins."

At 15, as Christy was walking past the local park, a man jumped out of a parked car, forced her inside and raped her. When Christy tried to resist, he beat her into unconsciousness.

Sarah, who was observing and experiencing the attack inside the body, explains how the next personality spinoff took place: "When Christy became unconscious, she gave herself up to a childlike personality, more of a fighter, who might survive the attack. So Jennifer was born. But the beating was too much for her as well, so she gave up to John, Christy's male entity. I'm not sure whether the assailant was through by then or John finally fought him off, but John became Jennifer's twin and protector. To this day, time has no meaning for either one. They were born at 15, and now, four years later, they are still 15."

From that point on, life became hell for the mother. "I didn't understand what was happening," she says. "All I knew was that Christy or one of her counterparts took up with a gang of juveniles, became a narcotics user and got into trouble with the law. I finally asked for help." (Christy went to her foster parents two years ago.)

emerged, Christy blacked out. She was unable to recall anything of what had taken place while she was out of control.

Sarah, on the other hand, became the "observer" for the emerging personalities. "I can't really interact with any of them," she explains. "None of us can. For example, we can't hold conversations with each other. But all of us, except Christy, can see what is happening on the outside."

As for Christy accepting her counterparts, the work on that is just beginning. Up to now, the therapists have been concentrating on the need to acknowledge that each personality is a part of her — just like other people have different characters — and that the difference is that with Christy all her subconscious segments have taken on concrete forms.

"If it weren't for all those tapes, for hearing the voices, I would never believe such a thing possible," Christy says.

Acceptance is the big problem. None of the entities has truly accepted the others. And although they have come to terms with the prospect of integration, they don't want to lose their individuality. But according to Dr. Johnson, acceptance is a prerequisite to integration and to Christy returning to a functioning level.

Christy is trying, but she would like to be just a little selective about what goes back into her personality. She says she hopes to retain not Sarah's snobbishness but her intelligence; not Jennifer's childish behavior but her openness; and not John's irresponsibility and rebelliousness, but his artistic talent and strength.

Those, also, are the goals of the therapists.

General Electric is giving great rebates on the incredible GE Food Processor and two Toast-R-Ovens®, gifts that would make any mom happy. Just purchase by Mother's Day and GE will be happy to send you a rebate of up to $15.

A food processor really makes cooking easy for Mom. And there isn't another one with all the features of the GE Food Processor. The tough, stainless-steel blade chops, grinds, mixes, blends, purees, and grates. The special, reversible disc slices on one side and shreds on the other. There are no extra blades to store outside the bowl. Two control switches — a pulse switch for short bursts of power and a "Stays On" switch for longer jobs — put the ease of the GE Food Processor right at your fingertips.

Other items made by General Electric use DuPont Teflon® non-stick coatings.

VOLKSWAGEN UNCORKS THE CHAMPAGNE EDITION II.

There's nothing like a little champagne to give you that warm, glowing feeling inside. Especially when it's one of our all-out gorgeous, Champagne Edition II Volkswagens.

Our Champagne Scirocco looks like it's going places even when it's standing still. It's loaded with sport bucket seats, a front spoiler and snappy black trim. There's even a rear windshield wiper, so you can get a good look at all the cars you'll be leaving behind.

Then there's our Dasher—our most sumptuous Volkswagen.

The Dasher comes in two or four-door hatchbacks, both with crushed velour seats and deep cut pile carpeting. There's also a Dasher Wagon. And all three models have tinted glass, special wheel covers and dazzling green metallic paint.

If you're looking for something to go with your mink, try our Rabbit. It's dressed in glowing silver-rosé or silver-green metallic paint. And inside, there's soft velvety seats and plush carpeting everywhere you look.

So if you've hesitated to buy one of our beautifully engineered Volkswagens, look again.

A taste of our Champagne may help you overcome your inhibitions.

BRIEF HISTORY OF CHURCHILL DOWNS

When the Kentucky Derby was run in 1875, the track was known as the Louisville Jockey Club and Driving Park Association. The name was changed to the more manageable Churchill Downs (Churchill for the family that owned the land on which the track was built) in the 1920's by a local sportswriter. Over the years, many alterations have been made at the track. The clubhouse is now on the opposite side of the track from its original position because the sun used to get into spectators' eyes.

WHAT DERBY WEEK IS REALLY LIKE

Prominent Louisville residents agree on one thing about Derby Week — it's hectic. Lynn Stone, president of Churchill Downs, says, "There's racing during the day and parties at night. It's the combination of the two that makes it so hectic." An aide to Louisville mayor Bill Stansbury says, "Once the Friday before Derby week hits, the mayor is off and running just like the horses." Mrs. Charles Weyland, a member of the board of directors of the Kentucky Derby Festival, estimates that she attends at least a dozen functions during Derby Week. But she says that it's a little easier for her because, as a member of the festival board, she has an attractive uniform and doesn't have to worry about what to wear.

WHO WON THE FIRST DERBY

The first Kentucky Derby, held in 1875, was won by Aristides. Known as "the little red horse," the small chestnut was owned by H.P. McGrath of Lexington, Ky. That year Aristides was also second in the Belmont Stakes.

Jacinto Vasquez

Ron Turcotte

Facts and folklore about America's favorite day at the races.

By Pam Lambert

Jockey Jacinto Vasquez took his 1975 victory on Foolish Pleasure in stride. "It was just like any other race for me; I wasn't particularly excited," Vasquez says. Not so for Ron Turcotte, who followed

WHAT IT'S LIKE TO WIN THE DERBY

up a 1972 victory on Riva Ridge with a win on the legendary Secretariat the following year. "It was a great thrill for me winning back to back," he recalls. "It was very exciting, especially the second time. But I was definitely confident about winning."

THE THREE FASTEST TIMES

Fleetest of all was Secretariat, who in 1973 completed the 1 1/4-mile race in 1:59.2. Before then, the fastest time had been Northern Dancer's two-minute run in 1964. The third-fastest time of 2:00.2 seconds was posted by Secretariat in 1962.

Chick Anderson

HOW I CALL THE RACE

Most people find it hard enough just to follow a horse race, let alone call one. But Chick Anderson, who's called the Derby 26 times, says it's not that difficult once you know what to do: "The basic principle is to know the post position of the horses and to associate the colors of the silks with the horses' names." Anderson says he can spot a lead of six inches between one horse and another and hasn't miscalled a photo finish yet.

THE WINNER'S CUP

The solid gold winner's cup designed by Louisville jewelers Lemmon & Sons was first presented in 1924. To celebrate the Derby's 100th anniversary, the horse shoe on the cup was set with precious stones, including diamonds and emeralds. With the rising price of gold, the cup's value has tripled from its original valuation of $5,000. The cup, which is almost two feet tall, is presented to the owner in a satin-lined mahogany case, and a smaller silver cup is presented to both the winning jockey and the trainer.

THE WINNER'S PURSE

The size of the winner's purse depends on the number of horses in the field that year. All the entrance fees collected from the owners wishing to race their horses are put into a pool. The winner receives the amount remaining after the fixed $30,000 second prize, $15,000 third prize and $7,500 fourth prize have been awarded. Last year's winner, Seattle Slew, ended up with $214,700.

HOW THE HORSES ARE CHOSEN

Any three-year-old thoroughbred registered in the U.S. or an accredited foreign country is eligible to race if his owner puts up $7,600. By February 15, the owner must pay a $100 nominating fee. On the Thursday before the race, a $4,000 entrance fee must be paid, with the balance due 48 hours before the race. After an unwieldy field in 1974, the Derby was limited to 20 horses. If there are more potential starters, the 20 that have won the most money will be allowed to race.

ATTENDANCE AND BETTING

The most money bet on a Derby race was $3,655,225 last year. Highest attendance was the crowd of 163,628 people who came in 1974 for the 100th anniversary race, which was won by Cannonade.

WHO SELECTS THE JOCKEYS

Derby jockeys are given the nod by the horse's owner and trainer. Generally, the jockey selected will be the one who has previously ridden the horse most successfully. To have a better shot at being handed the reins, jockeys will often scout Derby prospects and try to ride these horses during the season.

HAS A FILLY EVER WON?

Yes, one — Regret in 1915.

WHICH JOCKEYS HAVE RIDDEN THE MOST WINNERS?

Eddie Arcaro and Bill Hartack each have won five times at the Derby. Jockeys Isaac Murphy, Earle Sande and Willie Shoemaker have ridden winning horses three times.

Heywood Hale Broun

MY FAVORITE DERBY MOMENTS

Veteran sportswriter Heywood Hale Broun has attended 11 Kentucky Derbys, but he says he'll never forget the first one he saw in 1939. "A friend and I rode 29 hours on the bus from college under the impression that we had two passes to the track," recalls Broun. "When we arrived we found the passes were not to the Derby but the Tulip Garden. Not being that interested in tulips, we climbed the wire fence at the track and hung on it like wounded butterflies as we watched the race." Broun says that of all the horses he's watched in the Derby, Secretariat was the greatest: "I was stationed at the top of the stretch, and when Secretariat came around the turn with this tremendous surge, it was the most exciting physical display I've ever seen."

THE ART OF A LOVING TOUCH

"Our Puritan heritage frowns on touching. As children we are repeatedly warned, 'Don't touch' — don't touch things, don't touch other people."

Jacqui Morgan

By Norman Lobsenz

A sex therapist recently reported an unusual case: a woman who had no problem responding sexually to her husband could not stand it if he casually touched her hand or her hair affectionately.

On the other hand, another marriage counselor tells of a couple who argued fiercely in his office — but at the same time were tightly holding hands.

The messages we send and receive — or reject — through the medium of touch are a subtle but crucial aspect of human relationships. According to Dr. Herbert A. Otto, a La Jolla, Calif., therapist, more communication takes place through touching than most people realize. "It is always an exchange," he says. "We grow through touch, and we enable others to grow." And family-life expert Vidal Clay reports that touching "is the main avenue by which our need for intimacy is satisfied."

Yet, except in moments of extreme crisis, most men and women find it difficult to touch one another lovingly. Most people have been brought up to think of bodily contact in terms of conflict or of sex, both of which are loaded with cultural and psychological taboos. Our Puritan heritage frowns on touching. As children we are repeatedly warned, "Don't touch" — don't touch things, don't touch other people.

"People who are inhibited about touching and being touched," says Dr. Ray Fowler, executive director of the American Association of Marriage and Family Counselors, "often fail to realize how that cuts them off from any real emotional contact with those who share their lives." Such people are what psychologists call "armored." They may desperately want to reach out and hold the person they love, but a barrier lies between impulse and action. The barrier may be childhood training or a cultural taboo or fear of rejection. More often it is something deeper: the inability to translate the flow of loving feelings into loving touch.

For example, a husband tells how he came home from work to find his wife upset. "I put my arm around her to comfort her, but I guess my mind was still on my own troubles because my wife suddenly said, 'Why are you pushing me away?' I looked at my arm and realized I was actually trying to hold her body away from mine rather than to draw her close."

One common problem spouses have is to separate the loving touch from the specifically sexual touch. Some women say that when they want affection — for instance, if a wife asks her husband to rub her back or stroke her hair — men all too often interpret the request sexually. Better communication about one's real feelings and wants can help deal with this conflict.

Is there a way to break down the barriers that keep so many men and women from giving and receiving a loving touch? Here are some suggestions from experts:

- If you are hesitant about expressing feelings through touch, discuss the idea with your family first.

- Experiment with touch gradually. Begin, perhaps, with the simple actions that are customary in many — but not all — families: a good-morning or good-night kiss, a hug in greeting.

- Become more aware of the physical presence of those with whom you live. Some married couples take each other so much for granted that they forget how each other's bodies really look and feel.

- Develop a sense of your own body. We touch ourselves automatically while drying off after a bath or while shaving or putting on makeup, but do it consciously.

- Respect the feelings of others about touch. Learn to tell when someone is in a mood to be touched or left alone.

Much more happens through a loving touch than we sometimes realize. It can heal the wounds of a quarrel and communicate understanding, sympathy and joy. And when we are under stress, physical contact can be healing. I can recall going to a hospital when my wife was seriously ill. We spent hours simply holding hands, sometimes just touching fingertips. The link was enormously sustaining for us both.

HAM AND CHICKEN BAKE

- 1 cup chopped onion
- 1 cup chopped celery
- ½ cup butter or margarine
- ½ cup unsifted all-purpose flour
- 3 cups chicken broth
- 3 cups half-and-half
- 4½ cups diced cooked ham
- 4½ cups diced cooked chicken
- 1 can (6 oz.) sliced mushrooms, drained
- 2 teaspoons poultry seasoning or 1 teaspoon thyme leaves and 1 teaspoon sage
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon ground black pepper

1. In 6- to 8-qt. Dutch oven, sauté onion and celery in butter for 5 minutes, stirring.
2. Add flour and stir until smoothly blended. Add chicken broth and half-and-half; cook, stirring until sauce comes to boiling.
3. Stir in ham, chicken, mushrooms and seasoning. Heat through and pour into 4-qt. ungreased baking dish. Cover and refrigerate if not serving immediately.
4. Bake in preheated 350°F. oven 30 to 40 minutes until bubbly.

Makes about 3 quarts, 12 servings

BAKED WHOLE TOMATOES

- 12 ripe, fresh tomatoes
- Freshly ground black pepper
- 6 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
- 6 tablespoons fine dry bread crumbs
- ½ cup butter or margarine, melted

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2. Cut top off tomatoes and remove core. Scrape out some of the seeds.
3. Arrange tomatoes, cut side up, in shallow, buttered baking dish. Grind pepper over tomatoes.
4. Combine cheese, bread crumbs and butter. Spread on tomatoes. Bake 15 minutes or until tomatoes are hot, but still firm.

Makes 12 servings

CHEESE GRITS CASSEROLE

- 1 teaspoon salt
- 4½ cups water
- 1 cup quick grits
- ½ cup (1 stick) plus 2 tablespoons butter or margarine
- ½ lb. grated sharp Cheddar cheese
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 2 eggs
- ¾ cup milk
- Dash hot pepper sauce
- 2 cups cornflake crumbs
- Paprika

1. Add salt to water; bring to a rapid boil. Slowly add grits and continue boiling 3 to 5 minutes.
2. Remove from heat, add ½ cup butter, cheese and garlic, stir until butter melts.
3. Beat eggs; stir in milk. Add to grits mixture. Add pepper sauce; mix and pour into greased 2½-qt. casserole.
4. Dot top with remaining 2 tablespoons butter. Sprinkle with cornflake crumbs and paprika.
5. Bake in preheated 350°F. oven about 1 hour.

Makes 6 to 8 servings

FROZEN LEMON DESSERT

- 6 eggs, separated
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- 10 tablespoons lemon juice
- 2 cups heavy cream
- 45 vanilla wafers, crushed

1. In large bowl, beat egg whites until stiff. Gradually beat in sugar, beating until whites are a thick, shiny meringue.
2. In medium bowl, beat egg yolks until thick and light-colored. Beat in lemon rind and lemon juice. Fold egg-yolk lemon mixture into egg whites.
3. Beat cream in chilled bowl until it holds a shape. Fold cream into egg-white mixture.
4. Sprinkle half of vanilla wafer crumbs in bottom of buttered 13½- by 8¾- by 2-inch baking dish.
5. Pour in lemon mixture. Lightly smooth with spatula. Sprinkle surface with remaining crumbs. Put in freezer overnight.
6. To serve, cut into squares. Serve with forks.

Observations

One for the road. Drinking and driving will never be compatible. But the time may be coming when you will routinely buy a "round" for your car, thanks to a Mobil development that converts alcohol into high-octane gasoline. The new process can use any type of alcohol—including the "good stuff" made from grain. But it's designed primarily for use with non-drinkable methyl alcohol made from coal. While the process is presently too expensive to compete with gasoline derived from crude oil, it could help keep America supplied with gasoline on that distant date when the world's crude supplies can no longer meet demand. (Even then, we doubt gasoline will be sold by the fifth.)

Move over. The world becomes even smaller when you consider that everything needed to support life comes from a region that extends just 31 miles above the earth's surface, and the same distance beneath it. Called the ecosphere, this region provides all our food, water, air and fuel. How much of the ecosphere supports you? Right now, it's a cube measuring 1.3 miles per side. By 2000, however—just 22 years from now—the earth's population is expected to have grown to the point where each of us will have only half as much ecosphere.

"Is nothing sacred? Now Mobil is converting alcohol into gasoline."

Dig we must. There was a lot of talk in Washington last year about America's dwindling oil and natural gas supplies. While the talkers were talking, the U.S. oil industry was doing something about the situation. Excluding service wells, American companies drilled more than 44,850 exploratory and development wells in 1977, the highest number in 17 years and nearly 13 percent above the 1976 total. Of the total, 9890 were exploratory wells, an increase of seven percent over 1976. Only 26 percent of the wildcats found hydrocarbons in commercial quantities, an indication of the difficult job of finding additional oil and gas.

Retirement. You probably pay close attention to the condition of the tires on your car, but what about those you've "retired" for the summer? They need care, too. Snow tires should always be stored on their sides, not on the treads. If the tires are still on rims, reduce the air pressure in them to 10 pounds. Keep them away from electric motors and out of direct sunlight; ozone from these sources deteriorates the rubber.

PEOPLE QUIZ/By John E. Gibson

HOW TV AFFECTS US

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. The extent to which your child is influenced by what he sees advertised on TV depends on how old he is.
2. Police officers have a love-hate view of "cop" shows.
3. The most masculine men and the most feminine women have significant preferences where TV characters are concerned.
4. Though both adults and children occasionally may sit through a program they don't like — just to keep peace in the family — neither the children nor the adults exert real influence on the others' preferences.
5. The TV programs watched have a substantial effect on the emotional and behavioral climate of the home.

ANSWERS

1. True. Studies at the University of Pennsylvania show that "the most important factor influencing the effects of advertising on children is age. First- and third-grade children are more strongly affected by advertising than fifth-grade children." The investigators believe that this finding reflects more advanced cognitive defenses against persuasive attempts among older children. In other words, older children are somewhat better able to think things out for themselves and to evaluate various claims for products. The study concludes that television advertising creates its greatest effect on young children, especially those who are most exposed to it and who lack strong alternative reality checks from peers or from more highly educated parents.
2. True. In a Stockton State College study, investigators conducted a three-month survey of a representative sample of more than 800 police officers who filled out questionnaires giving their opinions of cop shows. Typical comments: "Too many shows show the cop a superman," "The public gets the impression that you can take fingerprints off water," "They're under the impression that every criminal leaves a clue," "Police are expected to answer a call regardless of its nature, be on the scene in two minutes and make an arrest soon after," "The public gets the picture that cops are gods." The study concludes, however, that "while police may, for the record, object to false images of themselves, they nevertheless seem to delight in the notion of policeman as star."

3. True. In University of Oregon studies both adults and college undergraduates filled out questionnaires indicating their favorite TV characters. People in the study were then given personality tests designed to show degree of masculine and feminine attributes in their character. Findings: "The adult high-masculinity group had a distinct preference for male characters, and the adult high-femininity group preferred female characters." With the rest of the subjects, tests yielded no significant preference for characters of either sex. The personality of the average man, though predominantly masculine, is balanced by characteristically feminine attributes, such as gentleness and sensitivity. Where masculine personality characteristics are not so tempered, a man tends to be unfeeling, unimaginative and callous. The same holds true for women. For example, extremely feminine women are less capable of sharing a man's interests than other women and have greater difficulty orienting themselves in careers.

4. False. A Penn State University study maintains that "it is likely that all family members influence one another's viewing, particularly as children grow into adolescence." Parents were found to influence their children's TV viewing most during their offspring's younger years by serving as models.

5. True. University of California researchers studied the effects of a week's viewing of various types of TV programs. A pool of 725 couples was recruited. The husband watched designated programs while the wife served as a careful observer, reporting his daily behavior. Findings: the group that viewed violent shows exhibited by far the highest level of aggressive and belligerent behavior. Those who watched light entertainment made an appreciably better showing. But the group that viewed helpful or "pro-social" programs evidenced the least amount of hostile behavior. Moreover, this type of TV program actually reduced hurtful behavior to a lower level than was customarily experienced by the wives.

CASH IN THIS COUPON ON REVOLUTIONARY NEW FRESH START. YOU MAY NEVER GO BACK TO YOUR POWDER OR LIQUID LAUNDRY DETERGENT AGAIN.

The very first time you see this easy-to-use, clear plastic bottle in your supermarket, you'll know it's something really new.

Inside is the first real laundry detergent news in years.

You see Fresh Start isn't a liquid. And it's no ordinary powder. Fresh Start is a highly concentrated granular detergent. With more cleaning ingredients per ounce than the leading powder or liquid.

Fresh Start is specially designed to work on all four common laundry soils.

The reason Fresh Start works so well is that it combines the best dirt and stain fighting ingredients of powders with the best grease fighting ingredient of liquids into granules so concentrated, just  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup cleans the whole washload.

What's more, you can use Fresh Start's cap to measure that  $\frac{1}{4}$  cup.

And size for size, Fresh Start gives you more wash-loads than ordinary powder detergents.

So if you want something that's specially designed to work on all four common laundry soils, get the best of powders and the best of liquids in one. In other words, get Fresh Start.

AN EXCITING WAY TO HELP SOLVE OUR ENERGY CRISIS

It's not nuclear, solar, electrical or geothermal, and it's made from our unlimited supply of municipal and industrial solid wastes.

By Jack Moseley

America has a replenishable alternative to gasoline that can be economically produced and distributed, is not harmful to the environment, will permit families to drive large cars, will work efficiently in today's vehicles with less than $300 modification expense and even will reduce engine wear.

The fuel is alcohol, which can be made from municipal and industrial solid wastes, excess food and grain crops, wood, coal and raw materials.

The evangelic message of inventor and heavy-construction contractor Stanley Barber of Fort Smith, Ark., has been like a voice in the wilderness for more than three years. Now Congress and the auto industry are beginning to take him seriously.

"It would be impossible to switch from petroleum to alcohol or any other fuel overnight," says Barber. "Two fuels — gasoline and an alternate substance that will work effectively in internal-combustion engines that we have by the tens of millions in vehicles of all types and in industry — would be far more desirable than a single fuel."

That's why Barber believes he has a workable solution. He has taken standard-model Chrysler and General Motors cars and an industrial forklift and made them run on either gasoline or alcohol. Modifications to the vehicles include the addition of an alcohol fuel tank, heating units that operate off the standard cooling systems of the engines and a fuel-injection system.

"Alcohol burns cooler than gasoline," Barber explains. "It actually cleans the spark plugs and engine parts. Oil does not have to be changed as often. And alcohol is safer than gasoline from the standpoint of explosion."

With Barber's dual fuel system, the driver can switch from gasoline to alcohol with the press of a button and without the engine missing, backfiring or losing power. While other test vehicles have reportedly only gotten half the miles per gallon on alcohol as they got on gasoline, Barber's cars get essentially the same mileage from either fuel.

"We now have 147,000 miles on the Pontiac, the last 67,000 since the conversion to burn either alcohol or gasoline," Barber says. "We converted the Pontiac at 80,000 miles and later stripped the engine down to the last bolt at 118,000. At that time, we found the valves, pistons, block and crankshaft in perfect condition. Consequently, we re-assembled the engine, replacing only the timing chain, camshaft, valve lifters and seals. Since the 118,000-mile inspection, the car has not been tuned up or had a spark plug change. The plugs, by the way, give no indication as to when they will need changing."

If Barber's invention is so fantastic, why haven't more people heard about it? The answer is that America does not now mass-produce alcohol. Depending on the quantity purchased, alcohol can cost anywhere from 42 cents to $4 a gallon.

"To be an efficient and economical alternative to gasoline," explains Barber, "alcohol would have to be produced in volume and distributed nationally." That's why the inventor of the dual fuel system has urged Sen. Birch Bayh and members of the Senate Appropriations Committee to encourage the development of a dual fuel system for American motorists.

"This can be accomplished," declares Barber, "if the Government will encourage the orderly development of an alcohol-producing industry. I am convinced this can be brought about by the Government assisting dedicated individuals and groups in every state to establish through Government guaranteed loans alcohol-production plants to process all forms of waste materials."

Barber envisions a 10-year alcohol energy policy as an economic transfusion for the entire country. "It would put thousands of people to work, substantially reduce American dependence on foreign oil and lower or eliminate our international trade deficit," he points out.

Barber even says his proposal could help the farm economy: "Feed grains actually have more nutrition for livestock after they have been used to make alcohol than before. Additionally, surplus land could be put back into cultivation to produce raw materials for the making of alcohol. Some crops would yield up to 500 gallons of alcohol per acre."

A believer in conservation, Barber warns that conservation alone "will do nothing to help our grandchildren. This country must have energy independence."

Barber, whose heavy-construction inventions are saving lives and dollars for contractors around the world, also has a reminder for his critics: "The oil industry in this country was born because of a national shortage of whale oil. And gasoline was once an industrial waste material."

"Today we are facing a shortage of domestic oil. I'm suggesting we put other materials to use and overcome that shortage. We already know how to do it. It's just a matter of deciding and acting."

ELIMINATE DAILY DENTURE "FIXINGS" FOREVER

Snug Cushions hold dentures comfortably tight for weeks

No more "fixings" every morning with messy powders or creams. Even if dentures need "fixing" after every meal, here's important news. Snug cushions restore dentures' holding power so dentures stay comfortably tight for weeks. Snug, the soft, effective temporary aid, forms a "comfort bond" between dentures and gums. Sticks to dentures, not to gums. Rinse, scrub or soak Snug fresh and clean. Easy to remove, but won't wash off or flake away. So, end daily "fixings"! Use Snug to hold dentures comfortably tight for weeks.

"I lost over 13 inches from my waist, tummy, hips and thighs in just 25 minutes with Slim-Skins" Sandra Morton

slim-skins™

FOR MEN OR WOMEN

GUARANTEED TO REDUCE YOUR WAIST, ABDOMEN, HIPS AND THIGHS A TOTAL OF 9 TO 15 INCHES IN JUST 3 DAYS OR YOUR MONEY REFUNDED!

"This is the easiest, fastest way of shaping up. I trimmed off over 14 excess inches in just 3 days with Slim-Skins - over 8" from my waist and abdomen and 6" from my hips and thighs. My physique has a much trimmer, firmer look - my appearance has improved 100%."

Andrew Thomas

"The very first time I used the Slim-Skins I lost over 13 inches: 2½ inches off waist, 4 inches off tummy, 2½ inches off hips and 4½ inches off thighs. And in just 3 days, I lost every excess inch I owned. All those stubborn inches simply vanished and have never returned."

Sandra Morton

THE SLIM-SKINS EXPERIENCE:

BEFORE

Sandra Morton contemplates her figure problem. At a health spa she was told it would require 3 months to take off all of her excess inches. She decides to try Slim-Skins. Starting measurements:
Waist: 27"
Abdomen: 35"
Hips: 38-1/2"
Thighs: 23-1/4"

Sandra slips on her Slim-Skins - snaps the universal adapter to her vacuum cleaner and turns it on. Just 10 minutes of the rhythmic motions of the Slim-Skins' Permanent Inch Reduction program and 15 minutes of pure relaxation - as the excess inches disappear like magic.

AFTER

Sandra takes off her Slim-Skins and checks her results. Totally mind bending! Sandra's results from her first Slim-Skins experience:
Waist: 24-1/2"
Tummy: 31"
Hips: 36"
Thighs: 21"

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

NAILED DOWN

Why do I flinch, turn slightly pale?
I've broken off a fingernail.
Its jagged edge I clip and file
And work upon for quite a while.
If still it snags on pants or coat,
Again I clip and file and note
That as at last the edge grows slick
I'm getting closer to the quick.
These are the times I would prefer
A woman's way. I envy her
Those fingernails bought ready-made
That on her own are overlaid.

LITTLE EMILY

"You're sure I'm not just another pretty face?"

FAMILY WEEKLY, April 30, 1978 ■ 21

The Lovers' Rose

Fashion's favorite, a delicate stickpin. In 24 karat gold vermeil, hand-enameled in glowing colors and, on one petal, an exquisite diamond dewdrop...

In Venice, long ago, an angry father told his daughter it was as likely she would marry her lover as it was for a rose to bloom in early spring. But Fate took a hand. And outside the maiden's window a single perfect rose burst miraculously into bloom.

Ever since that time, in that romantic city, lovers have observed a charming custom. On the Feast of St. Mark, in April, each ardent suitor seeks out a single perfect rose to give his love.

Now you can share this springtime custom, and give the precious Lovers' Rose. Formed into fashion's favorite of the moment... an elegant stickpin. Washed with pure 24 karat gold. Hand-painted in richly glowing enamel colors. And—perfectly placed on one softly curling petal—a lovely little many-faceted diamond, like a drop of dew at sunrise.

Available only until May 10, and only from The Franklin Mint

Modern Day Armor Maker

If you need a suit of armor, it's still possible to get one made to order — from David Manwaring. The more than 130 suits of armor he's made have been worn by actors including Rex Harrison and Lynn Redgrave, and he has just completed a suit of latex armor for renowned dancer Mikhail Barishnikov.

How does Manwaring make the armor? Fiberglass and metal filler are shaped in special molds, then the armor is burnished to reveal the metal surface. A full suit of armor costs around $2,000.

When Manwaring isn't busy making suits of armor, he makes costumes for actors who portray cartoon characters for TV commercials. He considers making these characters his greatest challenge, since the artists who created the characters didn't design space for a human body.

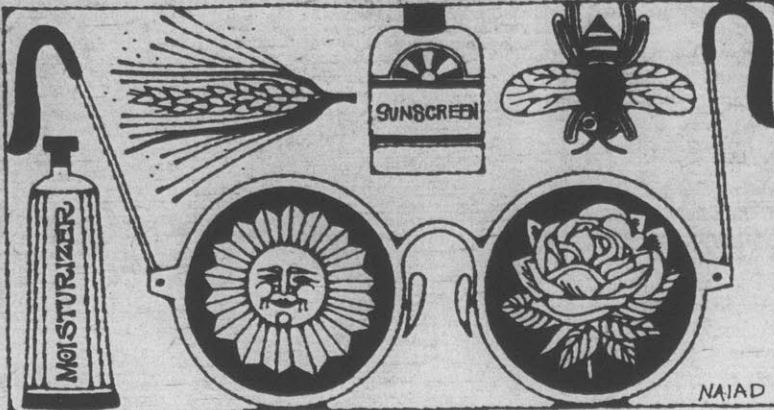

Comfort for the wearer is another challenge. "Few people can work inside the costumes," Manwaring says. "I think of comfort as much as possible, but generally they're not the best place to be."

Do College Students Fear Success?

College students are leery of success — but they also fear failure, says Carleton College prof. Dr. David Maitland.

Maitland, who has observed students for 21 years as Carleton's chaplain, recently taught a seminar called "Success and the American Dream." "Students are confused," he says, "because they want to succeed, but they are afraid the price of success will be the sacrifice of other important things, such as family and relationships with others."

Maitland's observations are similar to the findings of a study cosponsored by the Am. Council on Education and UCLA, which reported that today's students put concern for others over financial gain.

Summer Eye Problems

You're probably looking ahead to summer but not to the eye-care problems the season brings with it. Sun, chlorine in swimming pools and even flowers are just some of the things you may have to watch out for says Dr. Norman O. Stahl, a Great Neck, N.Y., ophthalmologist.

Allergies are the most common summer eye-care problem according to Stahl. "With hay fever you may get symptoms including itching, redness, tearing that is hard to see through and even swollen skin surrounding the eye," he says. Seeing an allergist is the only way of effectively treating a severe allergy problem — other treatments are just stopgap measures.

Stahl adds repeated severe allergy attacks may lead to bagging eyelids. "The skin around the eye is the thinnest of the body," he says, "and with repeated stretching it may not return to former strength."

To prevent wrinkling and irritation by wind, sunglasses can be your best friend. The glasses should be dark and preferably green or gray. But Stahl cautions against wearing sunglasses to reduce the glare during night-driving, as they reduce visibility too much.

Except for a few extremely sensitive people, Stahl says most can handle the chlorine or saltwater that gets in the eyes during swimming. Though the irritant will sting temporarily, tearing will dilute and wash it out of the eyes.

There are no special chemicals that the average person needs to avoid in either sun screens or moisturizers. Just take care not to get them in the eyes. Stahl encourages people to use a good sun screen on their faces. He says, "To the best of our information sun screens don't cause cancer, but overexposure to the sun can."

Righties And Lefties

Are you right- or left-handed? The answer probably isn't as simple as you think. If you're like most people, you're a little of both, says an Arizona State Univ. professor. Dr. Raymond W. Kulhavy maintains that in tests of more than 3,000 people, he has yet to find someone whom he classifies as totally right- or left-handed.

What difference does being right- or left-handed make? More than we think contends Kulhavy, a self-described "solid right-hander." He explains that the right and left sides of the brain (which control opposite sides of the body) process different kinds of information. Depending on which side of the brain is dominant, Kulhavy believes people learn better with different approaches. He and his associates are now testing whether children in schools and new workers in factories will perform better if their training is modified according to which side appears dominant.

To classify people, Kulhavy gives them a 56-item "Which Hand Do You Use?" questionnaire. The questions range from "Which hand do you use when you pet a kitten?" to "Which arm do you put in a sleeve first when you put on your coat?"

Quick Takes

Highly paid typists don't necessarily produce more than their lesser-paid colleagues says a recent survey. Among the 100 typists surveyed, some of the lowest-paid worked fastest, costing employers only 7.5¢ per line typed. However, some of the higher-paid typists were slow enough to cost their company as much as 4 times more per line.

Now almost everyone can read the Bible. The Am. Bible Soc. says that by the end of last year at least 1 book of the Bible had been published in 1,631 of the world's languages or distinct dialects. These languages represent those spoken by approximately 98% of the world's population. The Society says that last year the Bible or portions of it appeared in 28 additional languages for the first time.

Which are teenagers' favorite foods? A Scholastic magazine survey says that 42% of the teenagers surveyed prefer to eat pizza. 19% would choose steak and 10% would select hamburgers.

Thirty-two thousand people were treated for soda-bottle injuries during the last year for which figures are available says the Consumer Product Safety Comm. To prevent injuries, the Comm. advises: storing soda bottles in cool places and on lower shelves, avoiding hitting bottles together and pointing the cap away from the body when opening the bottle.
