Formal Meet Set On Economic 'War'

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The first formal meeting of the two sides' leaders in the Sunbelt-Snowbelt controversy, an economic war between regions over billions of dollars in federal aid, is scheduled to begin later this month.

The fight is over complex formulas used to calculate how the money is distributed. Southern leaders have disagreed with northern efforts to change the formulas to benefit their area, and began fighting back when they started losing dollars.

And the war is not likely to end soon. "While the olive branch has been extended from the southern side, and while efforts are underway to seek shared solutions to common regional problems, we have not yet arrived at Appomattox or the Bennett Place," said N.C. state Sen. Willis Whichard, vice chairman of the Southern Growth Policies Board, which represents the region in the dispute.

The comparisons to warfare are everywhere. Whichard is called the South's field general for his activity. The talks, tentatively set for Aug. 25 in Boston, were preceded by a meeting of the staffs of the southern board and several northern organizations to discuss, among other matters, seating arrangements at the peace talk tables.

Georgia Gov. George Busbee is current chairman of the policies board. He will be accompanied to the August meeting by North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt, chairman-elect; Whichard; and Blaine Liner, executive director of the board, which is based at Research Triangle Park, N.C.

"We don't expect to come out with any agreement to resolve the issue, but do hope to perhaps have a better understanding of each other's position," Hunt said. "We may find some areas of common ground."

One goal, Hunt said, is to establish a common "data base," a set of statistics on growth, income, poverty and demographics that both sides can use without challenge by each other.

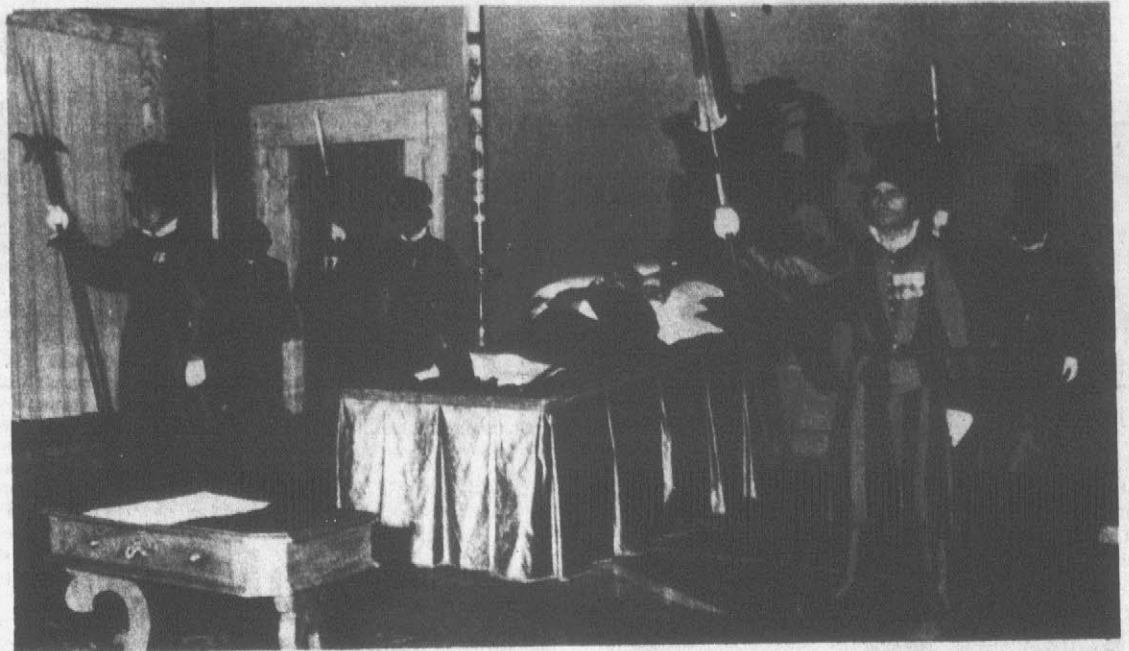

The formulas at issue will determine how $80 billion in federal domestic programs is spent in the next fiscal year. They involve all types of programs, for housing, aid to cities, education and welfare.

The major southern loss in the battle came in the formula for the Department of Housing and Urban Development's Community Development Block Grant Program. Northeast and central states gained $412 million when a factor called "growth lag," or the slowdown of growth, was added while the importance of poverty and dilapidated housing was lessened.

As a result some wealthy northern suburbs received windfalls, according to Liner.

Hunt said need in the South has been minimized as has the extent of poverty. According to Commerce Department figures released this year for 1975, 15.3 percent of the South's population is in poverty compared to 8.9 percent in the Northeast and 9.4 in the Midwest.

The outcome of the Boston meeting and the federal dollars involved are important to the average citizen since it could make the difference in holding the line or raising taxes.

Body Of Paul VI Is Put On Public View

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

VATICAN CITY (AP) —

Faithful mighty and humble mourned beside the body of Pope Paul VI today and the Roman Catholic Church readied the ancient machinery of succession to elect a new pontiff for its 550 million members.

The body, clad in red robes, white miter and red shoes, was put on view in a marble-floored salon at the papal summer palace in Castel Gandolfo, in the Alban Hills south of Rome where he died Sunday night after a reign of 15 years.

It lay on a slanted platform covered in green velvet, his head on three white pillows, hands crossed and a rosary entwined around the fingers.

Italy's President Sandro Pertini was the first to pay his respects, followed by the mayor of Castel Gandolfo, the pope's relatives and finally the public. Hundreds outside sang hymns as they waited to enter.

"Look at his sweet face," said Sister Maria Luisa Sicaletti of the Sisters of San Giuseppe from nearby

Albano. "He looks so holy. He almost seems as if he is in deep and serene sleep."

The body will be brought to the Vatican Tuesday, opening a nine-day mourning period. It will lie in state for three days in St. Peter's Basilica while the public files past it.

On Friday, it will be enclosed in a triple coffin and placed in the crypt below the basilica while Masses are said for the remaining six days of mourning. The last of these will be a solemn high requiem attended by religious and political leaders from around the world.

The church's 130 cardinals were summoned to Rome to oversee the last rites for Pope Paul and choose his successor. Sometime within the next two weeks, the 115 of them who are under the age of 80 will begin voting in a secret conclave in the Sistine Chapel, beneath its resplendent frescoes by Michelangelo, to elect the new pope.

Six cardinals were most frequently mentioned as possible candidates. Three are Italians: Giovanni Benelli, believed to have been Pope Paul's choice, Sergio Pignedoli and Sebastiano Baggio. The three non-Italians are Johannes Willebrands of the Netherlands, Eduardo Pironio, an Argentine of Italian descent, and Franz Koenig of Austria.

Vatican sources said Pope Paul died peacefully in his bedroom at Castel Gandolfo at 9:40 p.m. Sunday (3:40 p.m. EDT) after suffering a heart attack nearly three and a half hours before. He was 80.

The pope had been put to bed Saturday after a recurrence of arthritis, the painful disease of the joints that afflicted him in his later years. A medical bulletin today said he developed an acute inflammation of the bladder Saturday afternoon and after more than 24 hours of high fever suffered a heart attack late Sunday afternoon as his personal secretary was celebrating Mass at his bedside.

The pope was reported lucid almost to the end. After the heart attack he was placed in an oxygen tent, but Vatican sources said up to an hour before his death he prayed with his associates. Then he became dizzy and motioned to the others to continue the prayers.

Often of late the pope had spoken of his own death. Last Tuesday, on a visit to the tomb of a cardinal who once was his superior, he said: "We hope to meet him after death, which for us could not be far away."

Bishop Gaetano Bonicelli of Albano, an old friend who visited him Sunday morning, said the pope told him: "The death of a pope is like that of any man, but men can always learn something."

With Pope Paul's death, the interim leadership of the church passed to Cardinal Jean Villot, 72, the Vatican's French secretary of state, who will fix the nine-day mourning period and set the date for the conclave of cardinals to elect the new pope.

The yellow flag of the Vatican State was lowered to half staff at the Vatican and at Castel Gandolfo, and chains were put across the doors of the papal palace to signify the death of the pontiff.

Crowds knelt in silence before the copper-colored summer palace in Castel Gandolfo Palace. More than 1,000 mourners stood in St. Peter's Square and looked up to the dark papal apartment.

But most Italians were at the seashore or in the mountains for the traditional August vacation and the late hour held back any outpouring of national grief similar to that for Paul's predecessor, John XXIII.

All cardinals present in Rome met today in the first

Commissioners Receive School Systems Survey

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners this morning received a 210 page survey of the Pitt County and City of Greenville school systems, prepared by the Division of School Planning of the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction.

In presenting the survey, City School Superintendent Glenn Cox and County School Superintendent Ott Alford indicated the study was conducted after the Board of Commissioners last September asked that the two boards study a possible merger of the two systems.

Cox noted that the report from the Division of School Planning does not contain any recommendations as to a merger of the systems. "They were asked not to make recommendations," Cox explained.

The school officials told commissioners that a public meeting will be scheduled in September or October to inform county residents of the contents of the report and give area residents an opportunity to comment.

Alford noted that the survey indicated that the Pitt County system is, "in dire need of facilities as compared with Greenville."

In other business this morning, the board accepted a bid for warning system for all school buildings in the city and county systems.

Pitt Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner said the system — to include radio monitors in each school building — would provide a means of warning the various facilities of tornados, hurricanes and other emergencies.

The only bid submitted was from Motorola, which totaled $10,847. Half the cost would come from the school's budgets while half would come from a federal grant.

Commissioners this morning also gave their approval to phase one of the Swift Creek Watershed Work Plan.

Roy Beck, conservationist with the Pitt Soil and Water Conservation Service said contracts for the stream channel improvements included in phase one should be let by the end of September.

Full House Preparing Debate Tax Reduction

WASHINGTON (AP) — Months after President Carter proposed cutting income taxes by $25 billion, the full House plans this week to begin debate on a considerably altered $16.2 billion tax reduction bill.

The first tests of the bill will come before the House Rules Committee on Tuesday, as proponents of a compromise and Republicans who want a vote on a totally different measure argue for a chance to put their ideas to a House debate.

The current bill, recommended to the House by its Ways and Means Committee after weeks of negotiation, is criticized by Carter and liberal Democrats for the substantial reductions it would make in the taxation of capital gains — the profits on stocks, real estate and other assets sold after being held at least a year.

Several Democratic critics have joined forces behind an amendment package that would reshape the measure into an $18 billion tax relief bill. The package would treat capital gains less leniently and direct more tax relief to lower- and middle-income brackets. Going as high as the $50,000 income level, the Democratic amendments would cut taxes more than does the committee bill.

The administration supports the compromise for lack of anything closer to its original proposals, long discarded by Congress.

Other Democratic liberals also want to write in a partial income tax break to offset higher Social Security taxes next year. And they would delete a Ways and Means Committee provision adjusting capital gains taxation, after 1980, to allow for inflation.

Meanwhile, Republicans are seeking full debate and a vote on their officially endorsed proposal to cut income tax rates by one-third over three years.

If the Rules Committee resolves all these issues and the House itself stays on schedule, debate on the tax bill should begin on Thursday.

Also on the House agenda for the week are a $19 billion Defense Appropriations bill and a $17.3 billion measure to extend the major federal training and public service employment programs.

Hickory Chemical Fire Forces Hundreds Flee

HICKORY, N.C. (AP) — A toxic potpourri of chemicals inside a burning storage facility forced hundreds of people from their homes early today, but tanks of explosive hydrogen and deadly chlorine escaped the flames. No one was seriously hurt.

David Yount, an emergency worker in charge of the evacuation Sunday night and early today, said 350 people were kept from their homes for about eight hours until it was judged safe to return at 5 a.m.

As many as 18 chemicals may have fed the blaze, but the main ingredient of irritating fumes that rose from the fire was reportedly hydrous sulfate, Catawba County deputies said.

Nearly 400 firemen from 11 fire departments battled the blaze at the S&W Chemical Co., for nearly three hours before it was brought under control and finally put out not long after midnight.

Several firemen were treated for inhalation of smoke and toxic fumes and burns. None were reported hospitalized.

Several of the evacuated residents also were overcome by the toxic fumes after they were taken from their homes. They were treated and released at nearby hospitals, authorities said.

The evacuees spent the night at the Catawba Valley Technical Institute on cots and makeshift beds. All were originally taken to Catawba General and Glenn R. Frye hospitals to wait in the cafeteria. But officials said they were taken later to the institute for the night.

According to Deputy Gene Scruggs of the Catawba County Sheriff's office, health officials were primarily concerned about the presence of hydrogen sulfide vapor. Scruggs said the vapor caused extreme eye irritation and sickness but was not fatal.

The cause of the fire had not been determined early today. There were thunderstorms in the area Sunday night, and one resident said he believed he saw lightning strike the chemical plant.

Authorities said the fire spread through 18 canisters of different chemicals and there were explosions.

The plant, which is about five miles out of town, housed tens of thousands of gallons of chemicals, authorities said. Plant co-owner Merle Whitener said the fire destroyed two offices, two laboratories and a storage unit.

Agenda Announced For Pitt School Bd. Meet

Highlights of the August agenda for the Pitt County Board of Education meeting set for Tuesday, 2 p.m., Pitt County Courthouse, are as follows:

— John McKnight, director of Pitt County Schools Testing, Research and Planning, will present test score data from grades 1, 2, 3, 6 and 9.

— Superintendent Ott Alford will recommend that the opening of school be delayed until Tuesday, Sept. 5, which will serve as an orientation day for students, with Sept. 6 to begin the 180-day term. Superintendent Alford will also request that members of the Planning Team and several teachers be given permission to rework the school calendar, with official consideration to be given to the calendar by the board at the Sept. 5 meeting.

— Superintendent Alford will recommend Alma Barnes to serve as Title One Project Coordinator to replace John Moore who has requested to return to his position at North Pitt High School.

— Janie Manning, principal at Bethel Elementary School, has submitted a request asking that her students be granted early dismissal (2:35 p.m.) so that teachers may have planning periods, as well as time to meet with parents to discuss individual children's needs.

— Assistant Superintendent J. L. Keeter will discuss with the Board the state salary schedule for personnel, as well as give an update on approval of federal projects.

— The Board will hear a recommendation on the resolution of conflict between the required 18 units for graduation from county high schools and the competency tests requirements for reading and mathematics.

— School Finance Officer Dan Thomas will present the 1978-79 budget resolution.

Non-Catholics See Stake In New Pope

Two Qualified Area Services For Nationals For Pope Paul

Two of Greenville's younger residents traveled to Miami Beach, Fla., over the weekend to compete in the 1978 Southern Regional Waterskiing Competition sponsored by the Greater Miami Ski Club.

Kristi Overton and Jackie Rollins, both eight years old, placed first and second respectively in the Junior Girls Tricks division. Junior Girls include all those 13 and under. By placing in these positions the girls both qualified to participate in the National Waterskiing Championship to be held in Southfield, Michigan, August 23-26.

Kristi is the daughter of Parker and Betty Overton. Jackie is the daughter of Jack and Carolyn Rollins. Both girls are students at Greenville Christian Academy.

To qualify for the nationals, a skier must have an E.P. rating (exceptional performance) or place first or second in the seven-state regional competition. Kristi had previously earned her E.P. rating in the North Carolina State Championships held July 22-23.

St. Peter's and St. Gabriel's Catholic Churches in Greenville will offer masses at the regular times next Sunday in behalf of Pope Paul VI, according to Father Philip Walsh, who spoke in behalf of Fathers Paul Byron and William Elissor, priests for the churches.

Father H. C. Mulholland of the Catholic Church in Washington and formerly of Greenville, said that a special mass will be offered at his church Thursday morning, 9 a.m.

Father Mulholland was in a special audience in Rome, 1968, where he saw and shook hands with Pope Paul VI.

"A priest friend of mine was to be ordained in Rome, and a special audience of friends and parents was held," Mulholland commented. "The Pope presented the men to be ordained with a dissertation on the priesthood and spoke briefly with the parents and friends."

Mulholland added that a papal audience creates "an occasion."

"Persons in a papal audience feel close to history, close to a great person," he said.

Father Mulholland felt that Pope Paul's death was expected.

"Pope Paul was old and he had been in bad health for some time," Mulholland said. "Pope Paul succeeded in his papacy, but he perhaps was not as loved as Pope John."

"When Pope John died, even non-Catholics came to the church," Mulholland continued.

Mulholland gave a general description of how the new pope will be selected.

"Those who are designated cardinals in the church will be called together to the Vatican to decide on the Pope," he stated. "I'm not sure, but I think only those cardinals 80 years of age or younger will be allowed to participate."

Mulholland added that perhaps there will be some clash in liberal and conservative Catholic circles in the selection of the new pope.

"This may be the first consistory held where a non-Italian will be selected for the papacy," Mulholland said. "I don't believe that situation has come up since the 16th century."

By The Associated Press

While an estimated 700 million Catholics around the world mourned the death of Pope Paul VI, Christians of all faiths wondered what kind of man would succeed him.

"The main thing that Protestants want to emphasize is the stake that all Christians, and indeed the whole world, have in the leadership of the largest single body in the Christendom — the Roman Catholic Church," theologian Theodore Runyon said Sunday. "It's not simply an internal Catholic matter."

Runyon, professor of systematic theology at Emory University's Candler Theology School, said the Roman Catholic Church "has made exceptional advances in the ecumenical movement under Pope John and Pope Paul." But he added that "there are many who would like to reverse this progress."

"It is inevitable at this juncture that those forces will exert all the political influence they can muster," he said. "This is their chance. It's either now or never."

But he added that it was questionable that any pope, no matter how conservative "could set back the clock at this stage."

In New Orleans, Bishop Stanley Ott predicted that the successor would be a moderate, committed to the same ecumenical goals as were John and Paul.

"I really don't see a new man coming in with any kind of sweeping change for the church," the bishop said. "The church just doesn't operate that way."

"As for dogma and so on, I don't think we will see changes in that to speak of."

Three non-Italians have been mentioned along with three Italians as possible successors to Paul, bringing up the possibility that the first non-Italian will serve in that position since Adrian VI, a Dutchman who served for a year before his death in 1523.

But whatever his nationality, the 263rd pope will have to deal with complaints by younger Catholics that the church is behind the times on some issues, according to Father Noel Burtenshaw, director of communications for the Atlanta Archdiocese.

"One of the main concerns of the younger Catholics, all over the world but perhaps especially in the United States, is the issue of birth control," he said. "I think they would like to see some changes made in that policy."

Paul's positions on birth control, celibacy and abortion angered some liberal Catholics who felt he was turning the church away from the progressive path set by his predecessor.

But Burtenshaw pointed out that "John was the instigator and Paul was the implementer."

"He had to implement the things that John dreamed of for the church, and when it comes to practicalities, it's often more difficult than the initial idea."

According to the Most Rev. James D. Niederges, bishop of the Nashville Catholic Diocese, the troubled times through which Paul guided the church will not obscure his contributions.

"Although his 15 years as Pope have been marked with discord in the world and in the church, I believe he has been a singular figure of holiness, strength, compassion and faith," Bishop Niederges said.

Plan Search For Meteor

DENVER (UPI) — Gates Planetarium officials said a search for a suspected meteor that streaked over the Rocky Mountain region would begin this week based on information from more than 300 persons who claim to have seen the spectacle.

"From these reports, we have concluded that the meteor either disintegrated or landed near the Colorado-Wyoming border," Dave Baysinger, special projects coordinator for the planetarium, said Friday.

"The Denver Museum of Natural History's Planetarium and Geology Departments are preparing to narrow the landing point over the weekend, if the meteor did in fact land, and will begin a ground search early next week," he said. "Although neither the size of meteor nor its exact landing position has been determined, researchers hope that a specimen can be retrieved for study."

Baysinger said reports on the meteor, which zipped across Colorado about 3:10 p.m. Wednesday, had been received from New Mexico, Nebraska and Utah.

Baysinger said an unidentified woman in Colorado Springs called the planetarium to report she had seen the meteor.

"I saw it, but I wasn't going to tell anyone because I didn't want them to come and carry me away," he quoted the woman as saying. "But since I heard it on the radio, I decided it'd be all right to call."

the daily "general congregations" they are required to hold until the new pope is elected.

At one of the first meetings, the dean of the college of cardinals, 85-year-old Carlo Confalonieri, will smash the fisherman's ring that Pope Paul wore as the symbol of papal authority. He will use a hammer and chisel in an ancient tradition to signify the end of a papal reign. The carved gold ring, largely symbolic, depicts St. Peter in a fishing boat. A new one will be given to the next pope after his election.

Because less than a third of the voting cardinals will be Italian, Pope Paul's death touched off immediate speculation that a non-Italian pope might be elected for the first time since Adrian VI, a Dutchman, in 1522-23. But the Italians still dominate the electoral process and are expected to prevail in the election.

Of the three Italian "papabili" most frequently mentioned, Cardinal Benelli, 57, was Pope Paul's right-hand man as the Vatican's undersecretary of state until the pope appointed him archbishop of Florence last year. A conservative, he led the unsuccessful fight against Italy's new abortion law.

Cardinal Baggio, 65, is prefect of the Congregation for Bishops, a former Vatican diplomat in Europe and Latin America and has been identified with neither the conservative nor liberal wings of the Curia, the Vatican administration.

Cardinal Pignedoli, 68, is a progressive and as president of the Secretariat for Non-Christians has fostered new relations with Islam and other creeds in the Third World.

The Dutch primate, Cardinal Willebrands, 68, is another progressive who formerly headed the Congregation for Christian Unity at the Vatican. Cardinal Pironio, 58, a moderate progressive, heads the Congregation for the Religious and is a former secretary-general of the Latin American Conference of Catholic Bishops. Cardinal Koenig, 73, played an important part in Pope Paul's efforts to improve relations between the church and the Communist governments of eastern Europe, but his age is considered a factor against his election.

The new pope will inherit a church wracked by divisions over reform and modernization that plagued Pope Paul throughout his reign.

Considered a progressive when he was elected to succeed Pope John, he steered his predecessor's reforming ecumenical council, Vatican II, to a successful conclusion. It modernized the Mass, consecrated the right of religious freedom and proclaimed the Jews free of any collective guilt for the crucifixion of Christ.

But in the years that followed, Pope Paul angered both liberals and conservatives. "Renewal, yes; arbitrary change, no," he said.

He reaffirmed the church's strict ban on artificial contraception, unsuccessfully fought Italy's liberalized divorce law and its recent new abortion law, insisted on priestly celibacy and defended traditional morality.

On the other hand, he angered conservatives by fostering the modernization of the Mass and other ancient rituals, improving relations with the Communist world, sponsoring Christian unity committees and making contact with leaders of other Christian religions.

He was the most traveled pope, making journeys to the Holy Land, India, the United States, Colombia, Portugal, Turkey, Switzerland, Uganda, the Far East and the Pacific.

In November, 1970, on his arrival in the Philippines, a deranged Bolivian painter, Benjamin Mendoza y Amor, lunged at him with a knife in what was said to be the first assassination attempt against a pope in five centuries. Paul was not hurt.

Nursing Center Opening Set

The grand opening of University Nursing Center Inc. on Highway 43 west of Greenville is scheduled for the afternoon of Aug. 13, it was announced by Hugh Parker, administrator.

Parker said that the new center, located across from the Walter B. Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center, is a 120-bed nursing facility.

He reported that the nursing center plans to take in private patients as well as Medicaid and Medicare patients.

Dr. George Salle is serving as medical director for the new facility, Parker said, while Mrs. Bess McLamb is employed as director of nurses.

University Nursing Center is managed by Nationwide Health Care Management, based in Charlotte. The company operates other nursing facilities in the western part of the state.

Parker added, noting that the Greenville facility is the first for the business in the eastern section.

The administrator invited the general public to attend the grand opening activities.

Urge Study Of Annulments

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — The National Wanderer Forum, bringing together about 300 conservative Roman Catholics, has urged U. S. bishops to investigate what it calls the "nullity scandal" in this country.

Declaring that church annulments of marriages have soared to thousands annually, the group said in a resolution that the "alarming development" stems from greater latitude allowed at local levels, with annulments based increasingly on psychological factors.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

High Blood Pressure Out of the Blue?

My husband is 48 years old. Out of the blue, he was told that he has high blood pressure. How can this come on so suddenly in a person who always feels fine? — Mrs. V.S., Wash.

Dear Mrs. S.: When you ask how this could come on so suddenly I must emphasize a little-known truth. Thousands of people may have early, or even advanced, high blood pressure (hypertension) without being aware of it.

Uncovering the potential hypertensive person is one of the great educational drives of modern medicine. Many people go on for years without any symptoms. An occasional headache, a dizzy spell or an attack of rapid heartbeat may be casually dismissed. It is for this reason that routine medical checkups are important, to bring out into the open the undisclosed cases of high blood pressure.

The astonishing advances in the treatment of high blood pressure, with diet and drugs, and with the elimination of emotional stress should relieve the anxiety about your husband's condition. Uncovering his high blood pressure may be the proverbial blessing in disguise. For, with new drugs, reduction in his consumption of animal fat and elimination of salt from his diet, his condition will undoubtedly be kept under safe control.

Loss of weight, decrease in tobacco consumption and an attempt to eliminate disturbing social and occupational pressures will also contribute greatly to the control of his high blood pressure.

I want to emphasize the importance of salt as a factor in the production of high blood pressure and in its control. Some people with high blood pressure are shown to have had a preference for a high salt intake. Research physicians interested in hypertension stress the direct relationship between salt and high blood pressure. Many foods, normally not considered to be high in salt content, do have "hidden" amounts of salt. Sauerkraut, sausage, cured ham, frankfurters, frozen oysters, bacon, bouillon, cheese, olives, pickles, pizzas, tuna canned in oil, potato chips, and popcorn are all high in salt content. Relishes, canned corn beef, pretzels and salted nuts are also on this list.

At first, it may sound as if your husband is faced with dietary limitations that will be hard to observe. Actually, when one is aware of the "no-no's" one can still find many delicious foods that compensate for the deprivation of salty ones.

Salt limitation is a small price to pay for good health. Since there is some hereditary factor in high blood pressure, children, too, should be guided away from the obviously salty foods. A family program of cooking with modified salt intake is an excellent way of getting the children accustomed to less salty foods.

Williams-Morris Vows Solemnized On Sunday

Gloria Jean Morris and Charles Duane Williams, both of Greenville, said their marriage vows Sunday at 4 p.m. at the St. Paul Pentecostal Holiness Church. The Rev. Samuel J. Phillips, uncle of the bridegroom of Oklahoma City, Okla., assisted by the Rev. Maurice Phelps of Greenville, officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lathon Morris of Vanceboro. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Williams of Greenville.

Mrs. Nancy L. Lancaster of Greenville, organist, presented a program of wedding music. Mrs. Erlene Stocks of Greenville, soloist, sang "Jesus, Guest at Cana's Wedding" and "The Wedding Prayer." The Morris Sisters Trio of Vanceboro sang "Colour My World." The bridal couple sang "Together."

R. Jackson Williams, Brent Stocks, Kenny McDaniel, all of Greenville, and Perry L. Morris of Vanceboro, nephew of the bride, served as trumpeters. Richard J. Williams Jr., nephew of the bridegroom, Jerry L. Morris, Keith A. Morris, and Allen M. Morris, all nephews of the bride, served as acolytes.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her brother, Curtis L. Morris, chose a formal gown of white silk organza over peau de soie. The gown was fashioned with a high neckline of lace and seed pearls, a raised waist and sheer bishop sleeves decorated with appliques of re-embroidered alencon lace and seed pearls. Matching lace adorned the full bodice and appliques of alencon lace were scattered over the A-line skirt and attached chapel length train. She wore a cathedral length veil of bridal illusion accented with alencon lace appliques and attached to a caplet of Venise lace and seed pearls. The bride carried a bouquet of yellow sweetheart roses, miniature carnations and baby's breath in cascade style.

Mrs. Joseph E. Thomas and Mrs. Peggie M. Mills of Vanceboro, sisters of the bride, served as matrons of honor. They selected gowns of maize polyester with empire waistlines accented with raised ace and tiered chiffon capes. They carried nosegays of baby's breath and daisies and wore matching halos in their hair.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Oral D. Morris and Mrs. Shade A. Bland, niece of the bride, both from Vanceboro, Mrs. James Furr of New Bern, niece of the bride, Mrs. F. Tyrone Williams of Hampton, Va., Mrs. Van C. Williams of Greenville, Mrs. Ronnie G. Dean, of Clayton and Mrs. Kenneth E. Shirley of Warner Robbins, Ga. Their gowns matched those of the honor attendants and they carried matching nosegays.

Miss Jennifer Lynn Williams of Greenville, niece of the bridegroom, served as junior bridesmaid. She chose a gown of maize polyester overlaid with floral flocked chiffon and matching cape. Her flowers and hairpiece matched those of the honor attendants.

Emma Jo-Lin Thomas of Vanceboro, niece of the bride, served as the miniature bride. Tricia Dawn Williams, niece of the bridegroom of Greenville, served as flower girl.

Walter J. Williams of Greenville served as his son's best man. Ushers included R. Jackson Williams and Van C. Williams, both of Greenville, F. Tyrone Williams of Hampton, Va., all brothers of the bridegroom, Oral Dean Morris of Vanceboro, twin brother of the bride, Joseph E. Thomas and Creed D. Mills, both of Vanceboro.

Keith Phelps of Greenville served as the ring bearer. Joel Bryan Thomas of Vanceboro, nephew of the bride, was the miniature bride-groom. The junior usher was Scott E. Thomas of Vanceboro, nephew of the bride.

The reception was held in the church parlors. Mayor and Mrs. Jimmie L. Morris of Vanceboro, brother of the bride, greeted guests. Mrs. Curtis L. Morris of Vanceboro presided at the guest register. Mrs. Wilmer Wetherington served punch from a lighted fountain. Mr. and Mrs. Scott Dixon of Greenville directed the wedding.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of Emmanuel College, Franklin Springs, Ga., and East Carolina University. She is employed by Weyerhaeuser Co., New Bern. The bridegroom attended East Carolina University and is owner of Williams Realty.

MRS. CHARLES DUANE WILLIAMS

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents Saturday night at the Three Steers Restaurant, Greenville.

A bridesmaids' luncheon was held Saturday noon at the home of Mrs. Ruby S. Whichard, Greenville. Hostesses were Mrs. Ruby S. Whichard, Mrs. Dorothy H. Dixon and Mrs. Erlene H. Stocks. The bride, attendants and mothers of the bridal couple attended.

Abby's Readers Have Big Hearts

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR READERS: A few months ago I urged my readers to donate their organs after death by writing to The Living Bank for a donor card. The response was overwhelming!

I want to share a few of the heartwarming letters received by The Living Bank:

DEAR SIR: I wish to leave any part of my body that will help someone to see, or hear, or to make their kidneys function normally. I am living a healthy, normal life, but I know there are many people who aren't, so if I can donate my healthy organs after I die to someone less fortunate, it would give my life more meaning.

Please send me a donor card to carry in case God calls me home unexpectedly in an accident. I am only 14, but I know I will feel the same way when I am 18, because I have felt this way since I was 10.

CYNTHIA C.

DEAR SIR: Please send me a Living Bank donor's card to fill out. My brother, Buddy, was killed instantly in a motorcycle accident two years ago. He was 18 and healthy, and such a sweet and generous kid, I'm sure he would have willed his eyes and kidneys—and any other parts that could have been used for transplants—had he only known how to do it.

What a pity my brother's death couldn't have meant life to two people who were waiting for kidney transplants, and sight to two blind people who needed cornea transplants. I think to bury perfectly good organs is a terrible waste.

TOM G.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I think Dear Abby's column about donating one's organs should be printed in every newspaper in the world. She has changed my mind about any "organ bank."

I am a Catholic, and now I realize that God wants only my soul. I want to give the rest of me to anyone who needs it.

Please send me a dozen organ donor cards, so I can give them to others who feel as I do.

God bless all you people involved in this wonderful cause!

MRS. JOYCE F.

DEAR SIR: I read about The Living Bank in Dear Abby's column and want to donate my organs after death. I work in an emergency room of a hospital and have seen many people die because no transplants were available.

Only God knows when I will die. Please send me a donor card, so that my family and doctors will know what to do when the time comes.

LORRAINE B.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I just finished reading Dear Abby and want to leave my organs after death, so please send me a card.

As Abby put it: "There is nothing I could leave after my death that would be of greater value."

I feel exactly as Abby does.

JANET H.

DEAR SIR OR MADAM: I am 80 and in fairly good health. I want to leave any part of my body that can be used. It has served me well. My eyes are good and so is my hearing, and I can eat anything.

I had rheumatic fever twice when I was a kid, and the doctors gave me only 10 years to live, but I fooled them.

WILLIAM E.

READERS: To obtain a donor card, or free information about The Living Bank, write to P.O. Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77005. Please enclose a long, self-addressed, stamped [15 cents] envelope for their reply as they are a nonprofit organization. God bless you. And He will.

ABBY

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a husband who spends two nights a week in a life-painting class scrutinizing the anatomy of a young, voluptuous, female model, when he knows that his wife is strongly opposed to it?

My husband insists that he is a serious artist, but even in the name of art, a nude woman assuming various seductive positions under soft lights with background music can be a turn-on for most men—even artists.

This is causing a lot of dissension in our home, and I need your opinion on this thorny problem. We are practically newlyweds, having been married only two years.

JUST PLAIN JEALOUS

DEAR JEALOUS: A serious art student is not likely to be turned on by a model; but if your husband is, and he goes directly home after art class, you will be the beneficiary of the fallout, so why complain?

DEAR ABBY: You told some woman whose husband had lost all interest in sex to take him to a doctor.

Well, my husband lost all interest in sex years ago, and he IS a doctor?

Who should I take him to?

HILLSBOROUGH WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Some other doctor. A physician who tries to treat himself has a fool for a patient.

If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters For All Occasions." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Miss Umphlett, Mr. Collins Say Vows Sunday Afternoon

MRS. MARVIN MICHAEL COLLINS

Wanda Kaye Umphlett and Marvin Michael Collins were united in marriage Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Immanuel Baptist Church. The double ring ceremony was solemnized by Gene Adams.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Umphlett of Elizabeth City. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Myrtle Collins of Rocky Mount and the late Mr. Collins.

Mrs. Teresa Baker of Rocky Mount presented a program of pre-nuptial music. Miss Lou McCain was guitarist. Tony King, soloist, sang "The Wedding Prayer."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of white organza over white peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in sculptured silk Venise lace. The waistline of the empire bodice featured appliques of floral Venise lace. Self-fabric covered buttons extended down center back from the neckline. The sheer fitted sleeves were enhanced by motifs of floral lace with the cuffs edged in sculptured lace and covered button closures.

The modified A-line skirt and attached chapel length train featured sculptured silk Venise lace at the hemline. Her fingertip length veil was made of silk illusion and bordered with Venise lace. The bride carried a cascade of apricot rosebuds and white daisies.

Miss Lou McCain of Elizabeth City served as maid of honor.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Hilda Lopez Brannan of Myrtle Beach, S. C., Miss Gail Collins and Mrs. Sheila Collins Taylor, both of Rocky Mount, sisters of the bridegroom, and Miss Dottie Dean Sullivan of Thomasville.

They wore formal length gowns in apricot complemented by accordion-pleated cap-sleeved jackets. They carried nosegays of yellow and white daisies and apricot gladioli.

Jimmy Taylor, brother-in-law of the bridegroom from Rocky Mount, served as best man. Ushers included Eddie Baker of Rocky Mount, Frank Brannon of Elizabeth City, Mike Johnson and Darrell Williams, both of Whitakers.

Following a trip to the Tennessee mountains, the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride graduated from East Carolina University with a degree in special education. She is presently employed as a teacher at Ayden-Grifton High School. The bridegroom is also a graduate of ECU. He is employed by Worsley, Farley and Prescott, Inc.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Mrs. Jill U. Foster, sister of the bride, presided at the guest register. The refreshment table was covered with lace and centered with a summer garden arrangement.

Mrs. Linda Brown, Mrs. Ann Cannon, Mrs. Rita McCain and Mrs. Gerald Sullivan assisted with the serving.

Mrs. Hilda Brannan, Miss Lou McCain and Miss Dottie Sullivan entertained at a bridesmaids' luncheon Saturday.

Deficiencies Now Recognized

The results of North Carolina's first competency tests have been released, and the results are mixed in comparison with national scores. Gov. Hunt said as the tests scores were released that the results contained "some good news and some bad news."

North Carolina students are performing at or above the national norms in reading and math for grades one and two. However, students in higher grades fell below the national norms.

What counts, however, the governor said, is that the state has some measure of how its pupils are doing.

"For the first time, we have a means of accurately identifying our problems and of measuring the progress we are making," the governor said.

"I believe these results show us, for example, that we must continue our emphasis on the early years, with our kindergarten and Primary Reading Program. We can see that we still have a job to do in the elementary and upper grades."

"We are beginning a process that can help us insure that no student will graduate from high school in this state without being able to read, write and do math at a minimum, survival level," he concluded.

The tests results show that we have deficiencies, but they also indicate that perhaps we are already beginning to correct those deficiencies. Children in the first and second grades are showing up better on reading and math tests, and that could continue to be reflected as these children move on up into higher grades.

A Gas Chamber, If N.C. Requires One

Architects for the new Central Prison in Raleigh had the task of designing a gas chamber in which a death penalty can be carried out.

The present gas chamber has had no use for many years as a national debate over capital punishment raged. Still the death penalty is being meted out by the courts and the state may eventually have to carry out the death sentence again.

The new gas chamber will be a simple air tight room and the architects say it could be used for something else.

The gas chamber is a grim little room, but it will be available in the new prison if the courts ever dictate its need.

Four-County Transit Plan

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — National attention will focus on a 4-county area of northeastern North Carolina shortly as a unique bus system grinds into gear.

The Choanoke Area Development Association will put 14 buses on the road this fall, taking on all riders whether the general public or people entitled to free rides by virtue of age, poverty status, or participation in a host of human services programs.

A federal grant of nearly half-a-million dollars is behind the pilot project, along with a few thousand in state funds, and those running the system are hoping that at the end of 3 years the transit program will at least be at a break-even point.

"We don't really expect ever to make a profit. You can't really when you are serving a sprawling area with a population of 50 per square mile. Buses serving cities with densities of 1,000 people per square mile are having trouble these days," says Jim Barnett, guiding hand behind the bus system.

Four Counties
Operating in largely rural

Bertie, Hertford, Halifax, and Northampton counties, the Choanoke Development Association takes its name from the two major rivers which mark the area — the Chowan and the Roanoke. The association is one of the community action efforts which originated in the 1960s to fight poverty, and continues involvement in governmental, civic, and social activities to uplift residents of the area.

One of the functions has been transportation for job trainees, the elderly, the poor and others who qualify to a variety of occupational, health, rehabilitation or social activities.

Barnett says roughly 30 percent of the residents in the four-county area simply don't have access to a car, and in a rural section with no alternatives, this causes problems for even routine shopping trips or visits to town.

"And many of those who do own cars have them only as status symbols ... they park them at the house, but they aren't running. Or, the male head of the household takes the car and leaves the family with no transportation," Barnett said.

change points will effectively become floating bus stations. About 40 percent of the trips in the section cross county lines, so the regional system is favored over more limited routes.

Then, as experience develops and it can be determined who will be needing to ride the buses when and on what routes, plans call for refinement of a "demand" bus system on a subscription basis. Thus, regular routes may be run when business is sufficient; at other times a list of riders who want to go shopping or to town to visit will cause a special bus to make a run.

With many of the users riding free because of their participation in aid programs, Barnett expects to continue getting state and federal assistance.

Federal officials have gotten interested in rural transportation only in the last five years, and the three-year pilot project in North Carolina is the first in the nation to seek to combine existing human services transit with general public transit, particularly over such a large area.

An earlier step of the development association was to combine the various public or non-profit agency vehicles being used for transportation into a coordinated system by contracting to operate the transit program for all participants.

"But that was not really affording mobility to the people. You are still bound by regulations and restrictions as to persons who could ride, and their destinations. Also, that is still a poverty approach," Barnett said.

BILL NOBLITT

The answer, he felt, would be to use the nucleus of a transit program and expand it to serve anybody who needed a ride. When operational, some who can afford will pay the fare; others will ride free.

Demand Response
At the start circular main routes will be used, with large buses running. Smaller feeder lines will be used and the intersections and exchange points will effectively become floating bus stations. About 40 percent of the trips in the section cross county lines, so the regional system is favored over more limited routes.

Then, as experience develops and it can be determined who will be needing to ride the buses when and on what routes, plans call for refinement of a "demand" bus system on a subscription basis. Thus, regular routes may be run when business is sufficient; at other times a list of riders who want to go shopping or to town to visit will cause a special bus to make a run.

Shock Of Recognition

Art Buchwald is on assignment for a few weeks trying to find out if there are any Cuban troops on Cape Cod. He left behind his all-time favorite columns.

Recently, New York City had a blackout which caused all nine television stations in the area to go out for several hours. This caused tremendous crisis in families all over the New York area, and proved that TV plays a much greater role in people's lives than anyone can imagine.

For example, when the TV went off in the Bufkins house in Forest Hills, panic set in. First, Bufkins thought it was just his set in the living room, so he rushed into his bedroom and turned on that set. Nothing.

The phone rang and Mrs. Bufkins heard her sister in Manhattan tell her that there was a blackout.

She hung up and said to her husband, "It isn't your set. Something's happened to the top of the Empire

State Building."

Bufkins stopped and said, "Who are you ..."

"I'm your wife, Edith."

"Oh," Bufkins said. "Then I suppose those kids in there are mine."

ART BUCHWALD

"That's right," Mrs. Bufkins said. "If you ever got out of that armchair in front of the TV set, you'd know who we were."

"Boy, they've really grown," Bufkins said, looking at his son and daughter. "How old are they now ..."

"Thirteen and fourteen," Mrs. Bufkins replied.

"I'll be darned. Hi, kids."

"Who's he ...?" Bufkins' son, Henry, asked.

"It's your father," Mrs. Bufkins said.

"I'm pleased to meetcha," Bufkins' daughter, Mary, said shyly.

There was an embarrassed silence all around.

"Look," said Bufkins finally. "I know I haven't been much of a father, but now that the TV's out, I'd like to make it up to you."

"How ...?" asked Henry.

"Well, let's just talk," Bufkins said. "That's the best way to get to know each other."

"What do you want to talk about ...?" Mary asked.

"Well, for starters, what school do you go to ...?"

"We go to Forest Hills High," Henry said.

"What do you know ...?" Bufkins said. "You're both in high school ..."

There was dead silence.

"What do you do ...?" Mary asked.

"I'm an accountant," Bufkins said.

Needs A New Image

By ROBERT B. CULLEN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter recently hired Gerald Rafshoon, the advertising man, to refurbish his image. Rafshoon might take on Andrew Young as his first project.

Nearly everyone in the world knows about Young's remarks last month when he told a French interviewer that there were hundreds, perhaps thousands of people he would consider political prisoners in the United States.

His remarks were trumpeted around the world. There were repeated calls for his resignation and a resolution of impeachment was introduced in the House, where it received 82 votes.

More recently, the diplomacy of Young and his deputy, Dnald McHenry, has won for the administration a substantial victory in Africa. But who has heard of Andrew Young and the Namibian settlement?

One problem Rafshoon would encounter is that Namibia is one of the most obscure corners of the world. It is a large, barren desert territory with about one million inhabitants. On most maps, it is called SouthWest Africa.

It was a German colony until World War I when South Africa overran the small German garrison there and took control. In 1920, the League of Nations legitimized the occupation by entrusting the territory to South Africa until it could become independent.

That time came, in the view of the United Nations, 10 years ago. But South Africa refused to give up control. Meanwhile, blacks in the territory had formed the South-West Africa People's Organization and were waging a guerrilla war against the South Africans.

High Price Is Spelled Out

ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The chill among members of the Republican National Committee after NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks finished addressing them in Detroit recently was really aimed at national chairman William Brock.

Hooks told the Republicans what they did not want to hear: the only way they can compete with Democrats for the black vote is to advocate racial quotas and turn against the tax revolt. For Republican politicians cited over Proposition 13 and Kemp-Roth, Hooks was saying that the price of wooing blacks was to alienate the white, middle-class Republican constituency and abandon traditional Republican principles.

Committee members asked, why did Brock ask Hooks to speak anyway ... In broader terms, they wondered whether the national chairman's quest for black votes is not only futile but potentially damaging by inhibiting Republican positions on quotas and school busing.

This raises a question of overall strategy for reviving the long comatose Republican party: by trying to imitate coalition tactics that have served the Democratic party for two centuries, is the GOP violating its basic nature as a party of American homogeneity just when that characteristic might become politically successful ...

Actually, Brock is easily the most popular national chairman since Ray C. Bliss was sacked by President Nixon in 1969. Apart from scattered grumbles about the swelling bureaucracy at national headquarters; his industry gets high marks.

Brock's first, highly publicized quest for black votes also won praise. Committee members envisioned an election day harvest when the Rev. Jesse Jackson addressed them last January, saying what they wanted to hear by extolling self-help and exhorting Democrats. Ecstatic Republicans ignored Jackson's fine print demanding a multi-billion-dollar Marshall Plan for the cities.

Only gradually has the cost of Brock's strategy become clear. Seeking black votes, he has carefully

Comeback By Trading Stamps

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Either people change or marketing strategy does, or maybe both, because trading stamps are coming back, books of them, billions of them, wallpaper-size rolls of them.

Consumers are in the mood to get a little something extra for their money," said Daniel Doherty, a spokesman for A&P, which has just announced it will be offering stamps in 47 of its 1,800 stores.

Now flash back a few years. Wasn't it A&P that led the retreat from stamps, claiming the public, harried by inflation, was sick of gimmickry and instead wanted just good honest bargains? Yes, it was.

But so few stores now offer stamps — sales to retail outlets have fallen from $900 million in 1969 to under $400 million this year — that once again it might be profitable to encourage stamp saving.

Stamps, you see, convey benefits on both retailer and customer by raising a store's sales, but only so long as the competition doesn't offer them. When every store gets into the act nobody benefits.

Stamps, that is to say, can spur one food store's sales only at the expense of another. When the other fellow employs a strong stamp program he gets his business back. The result: a costly stalemate.

But in the return to stamps of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company there is more than a store involved. At stake is the future of the entire chain, a giant splattered by red ink.

Not long ago and for decades before, A&P was the nation's largest food retailer. It lost that crown to Safeway Stores. Now it is fighting to keep from falling into third place, behind Kroger.

It isn't just waiting for that to take place. Since 1975 it has been rehabilitating itself, closing in that time no less than 1,800 stores, replacing them with much fewer but very much larger units.

The program's goal is to increase the return on sales, which for most food retailers these days is less than one cent per dollar, a rate probably bettered by the delivery boy's return from tips.

Included in the program are new techniques for moving goods.

Economy Corners in 700 of the stores offer unbranded items for 30 percent less than national brands. The quality is lower, but the nutritional value, when foods are involved, is claimed to be the equal.

Under an Action Price program, certain goods are offered to customers at a discount when the company itself is able to obtain discounts or allowances from its manufacturers and suppliers.

Stamps are an integral part of this rehabilitation program, as you will see, the purpose of them being to raise the amount of sales per transaction from the $9.75 figure that prevailed early this year.

In 165 Chicago and Milwaukee area stores S&H Green Stamps will be offered, the stamps later to be redeemed for goods listed in a catalogue. In 282 Northeastern stores, another plan is being tested.

In the latter instance, Gold Bond Trading Stamps, part of the Minneapolis-based empire of Curtis Carlson, can be redeemed for fairly large discounts on a select group of items.

Strength For Today

RELIGION IN LIFE

There are millions of people who go through life paying no attention to God, church, Bible, or prayer. Sometimes a severe jolt makes them realize their mistake. But there are many more who go from the cradle to the grave never giving the least attention to these things.

In their view the church is all right for marrying and burying. The Bible, they say, is perhaps rewarding for people who have the time to read it. But it really isn't very practice in the twentieth century. All in all, life rolls along pretty well without the extra complications that come with religion.

Someone has said that until we kneel before God we are never able to stand up to anything. Although it sounds paradoxical, humility before God gives tremendous new resources for meeting crises in life. Religious faith puts something into the heart which enables us to face the issues of life unafraid and with a deepening understanding of their meaning. — Elisha Douglass

Acronyms Breeding Like Rabbits In Government

By JIM ANDERSON
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a very real sense, as they say in Foggy Bottom, MEW has a lot to do with CAT. Officials also say that it is a pity that GOI can't get along with GOE.

CAT (Conventional Arms Transfers, or weapons sales) is a frequently used abbreviation and, in the sense that no nation has infinite wealth, the money that is spent on arms can't be spent on food and housing, two items which go to make up a new measurement of national wealth, measurable economic welfare, or MEW.

GOI (which, ironically, is a variation on the spelling of the Yiddish word for a non-Jew) is how the State Department telegrams refer to the Government of Israel. GOE, of course, is the Government of Egypt.

Initials can be used as verbs, as well as nouns, in this kind of buro-speak. It would be an absolute nightmare, in state department terms, were a DCM to be PNGed.

DCM is deputy chief of mission, the number two man in any embassy and to be declared Persona Non Grata is to be thrown out of the host country for some offense, real or imagined.

Nothing seems to produce acronyms faster than the field of arms control. In a recent seminar on the SALT (Strategic Arms Limitation Talks), a speaker recently uttered the following sentence: "ALPS, of course, is just a quick-fix MAP, since both could be described as an MX." Everybody around the table nodded gravely.

The subject was the mobile missile that the United States wants to build (or MX, for short). Multiple aim point, or MAP, is a more elaborate and expensive way of moving missiles around underground than ALPS, or alternate launch point system. Both are designed to make U.S. land-based missiles invulnerable to a Soviet first-strike attack.

The acronyms breed like rabbits in ACDA (Arms Control and Disarmament agency). First there was MIRV (Multiple independently targetable re-entry vehicle) or a multi-headed missile. It's more sophisticated than MRV (Multiple Re-entry Vehicle), but not nearly as tricky as MARV (Maneuverable Re-entry Vehicle).

The United Nations bears a heavy responsibility for a whole family of jargonized initials and acronyms. It is possible to say, and be understood, by fellow avoided any position on the Bakke case or on racial quotas generally. While engaged in a quest for black votes, he was ignoring potentially more fruitful courtship of whites including many Democrats furious that the quota system aimed at helping blacks was discriminating against them.

The high cost was candidly spelled out by Ben Hooks in Detroit. "You cannot win black votes," he told the Republicans "unless you are prepared to take black people and their interests seriously. Black America will vote their interests." That means, he added "the Republican party will have to change."

Hooks did not waffle: "It is not sufficient to remove 'roadblocks to equal opportunity.' A map must be drawn. Timetables must be set. Goals must be established for advancing minorities to positions in every profession, every career and every school." In other words, the Republican party must embrace racial quotas if it wants black votes.

Nor was that all. Unlike Jesse Jackson, Hooks bluntly laid out what the Grand Old Party must do to reclaim Lincoln's heritage: oppose "the Proposition 13 strategy"; support tax legislation "to close loopholes that advantage the wealthy"; oppose welfare cuts; support the Humphrey-Hawkins bill for full employment; invoke economic sanctions against South Africa; support "freedom for the Wilmington Ten."

As Hawks ticked off these demands, the frown on the face of Mississippi's veteran national committeeman Clarke Reed deepened. To Reed, Hooks was calling for the Republicans to become a Democratic clone. But apart from Republican difficulty in embracing the NAACP program, Reed worried that the party was heading down the wrong road in Detroit.

On the night before Hooks addressed the committee, the Brock strategy was dramatized by a mammoth reception in which individual ethnic groups held separate parties. The theme was sounded at lunch the next day when columnist Michael Novak, an expert on ethnic politics, addressed the committee. Brock was taking dead aim on the ethnic preserves of the Democrats.

But ethnic solidarity is declining, especially among young people — with the conspicuous exception of the black and Latin minorities. Considering this homogenization of American society, a broad Republican approach based on lower taxes, and appealing to blacks and Latins as to all other Americans, looks more profitable than mimicking traditional Democratic ethnic politics.

The Democrats drew even with the once dominant GOP and then passed it by capturing the immigrant vote. Now, as most Americans move toward far more homogeneity, realistic political analysis shows that a new Republican opportunity may be at hand. That is why some party leaders are disturbed over chairman Brock's strategy, epitomized by the list of demands presented in Detroit by Ben Hooks.

PLK is a sardonic tribute to King Hussein of Jordan, who is frequently referred to by Middle East experts as the "Plucky Little King." The acronyms are proliferating so fast in the area of national security affairs that it may soon become a job for OES-CP (the State Department's Office of Population Control).

That is an insider's way of recounting that the Economic and Social Committee, and the Special Session on Disarmament, as well as the hearings on the second Katangese invasion of Zaire's Shaba province have made the United Nations headquarters a busy place.

The abbreviations are catching, and any hackneyed phrase soon finds itself reduced to a set of initials. Newsmen, for example, have heard successions of secretaries of state talk about a "Just and Lasting Peace in the Middle East." That is now reduced to JLP in their notes.

That was the situation when Carter and Young took office, with Young taking the lead in revising American policy toward Africa.

Young advocated cultivating emerging regional powers like Nigeria. He felt the United States had two advantages to offer them. It could act as a mediator with the remaining white regimes. And it could offer the economic and technical expertise, as well as the markets, that African countries need to develop their resources.

Young's strategy ran into trouble within the administration when the Soviets and their Cuban allies sent troops to Ethiopia and were, according to the administration, involved in a rebel invasion of Zaire's Shaba Province.

A faction based within Zbigniew Brezezinski's National Security Council staff favored a stiff reaction to the Soviets. At one point, the director of the Central Intelligence Agency was dispatched to Capitol Hill to sound out congressional sentiment on covert aid to Angolan guerrillas fighting against the Marxist regime of Augustino Neto.

But Young, with the backing of Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, won out. Instead of backing a covert war against Angola, the administration said it would like to work toward more normal relations. That was the key to the Namibian settlement.

"That was two years ago. Didn't I tell you I changed jobs," Bufkins said.

"Not, you didn't. You haven't told me anything for two years."

"Yup, I'm doing quite well, too," Bufkins said.

"Then why am I working in a department store," Mrs. Bufkins demanded.

"Oh, are you still working in a department store. If I had known that I would have told you you could quit last year. You should have mentioned it," Bufkins said.

There was more dead silence.

Finally, Henry said, "Hey, you want to hear me play the guitar..."

"I'll be darned. You know how to play the guitar. Say, didn't I have a daughter who played the guitar."

"That was Susie," Mrs. Bufkins said.

"Where is she..."

"She got married a year ago, just about the time you were watching the World Series."

"How about that..."

Bufkins said, very pleased.

Vaccinate!

The Pitt County Health Department is urging parents of children who will start school in the fall to get them vaccinated now if they have not done so.

"Those who wait until late summer will find doctors' offices and the Health Department very crowded," Health Director Roger Barnaby said.

He reminded parents that state law requires a child to be immunized against childhood diseases before he or she enters school.

"Of course, children ready for school should have received their shots a long time ago," he said. "The critical years for infectious diseases that can kill or cripple begin soon after birth. Vaccinations against polio, whooping cough, diphtheria, and tetanus should begin at about two months, and by the time a child is two years old, these, along with immunizations against measles, rubella (German measles) and mumps, should have been completed.

Global Campaign For Renegade CIA Agent

By DANIEL F. GILMORE
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — Renegade CIA agent Philip Agee has begun a world-wide campaign to uncover and identify every American intelligence officer working abroad.

Agee has given his followers detailed instructions on how to find the intelligence offices, demonstrate outside their homes and exert pressure to have them expelled from host countries. If this exposes an agent to possible danger, Agee said, it would be the responsibility of the CIA to transfer the man out.

The CIA and at least two senators are trying to determine how to stop him.

Agee revealed his plans last week in Havana during a communist-sponsored World Festival of Youth and Students. He took the occasion to chair a well-publicized "tribunal" on the CIA, which he branded "the Gestapo and SS of our time."

He also announced publication of a new bi-monthly journal "Covert Action Information Bulletin." A limited number of copies are circulating in Washington.

The first edition, which also carries the introduction of Agee's new book, "Dirty Work: The CIA in Western Europe," gave "as a service to our readers" the name of a man who was identified as the new CIA Station Chief in Jamaica, with alleged details of his previous posts.

"We will never stop exposing CIA personnel and operations whenever and wherever we find them," said Agee, a CIA veteran of 12 years.

Agee said his new book carries "detailed biographies of more than 700 undercover CIA and National Security Agency personnel lurking in embassies and military installations in virtually every country on earth." He said he is going after the rest.

"The CIA probably has no more than 5,000 officers experienced in running clandestine operations and it should be possible to identify almost all of those who have worked under diplomatic cover at any time in their careers," he said.

Commenting on the latest Agee campaign, CIA spokesman Herbert Hetu told UPI, "The most frightening and frustrating thing to us is that people like this can do something like this and we have no laws to stop it."

"These things cost money," Hetu said. "You don't hand out free copies without getting money from some place. I'd love to know where they're getting the money."

University Admits An Eight-Year-Old

By CLARA HENNING
 Associated Press Writer
 NEW YORK (AP) — An 8-year-old boy will become the youngest student ever known to attend college when he enters the University of Washington in Seattle this fall, a university spokesman says.

The admission to college of Sayed Jalal of Afghanistan culminated a three-month search by private individuals convinced of the boy's genius, although intelligence scores and private observations have not yet confirmed it.

The boy will take regular college courses, supplemented by tutoring and a special high school program for gifted children, according to Halbert Robinson, professor of psychology and director of the university's Child Development Research Group.

Nineteen children aged 10 and over are now receiving similar attention, Robinson said Friday.

Jalal, who arrived in New York on May 4 with his father, Sayed Karim, while his mother and three sisters are waiting to join them, reportedly covered 12 years of school work in 18 months with the help of tutors.

There has been some question whether Afghan high schools can be compared with American programs. Mohammad Anwal, Afghanistan's consul here, said a 12-year school program in his country consists of standard courses — history, geography, math and the sciences.

"He is a genius. I heard him on radio when he was 6, and he answered questions about geography and history most adults don't know," Anwal said.

During a series of intelligence tests administered by Columbia University's Teachers College in June, the boy scored 125, which ranks below the category of "exceptional" children. But it may be impossible to test him properly until he learns English.

Jalal's admission to the University of Washington makes him the youngest college student on record, Robinson

Bundy Speaking Schedule Set

State Rep. Sam D. Bundy has the following schedule for the remainder of August:

Thursday, Aug. 10, Spouses Night of the Bright Leaf Chapter of Data Processing Management Association, Raleigh;

Saturday, Aug. 12, Woman's Club Family Night Banquet, Oak City;

Monday, Aug. 14, University City Kiwanis Club, Greenville;

Tuesday, Aug. 15, meeting of the Tax Study Commission, Raleigh;

Wednesday, Aug. 23, Public Libraries regional meeting, Williamston;

Monday, Aug. 28, Onslow County N. C. Association of Educators, Jacksonville;

Tuesday, Aug. 29, regular meeting of Mount Olive College Board of Trustees;

Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 30-31, in Atlanta to study Georgia's system of auto ad valorem taxation.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, D-Ariz., told the Senate Intelligence Committee last Thursday that Agee's citizenship should be revoked, and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, Friday urged the Senate to pass legislation as quickly as possible to make unauthorized disclosure of the identity of CIA agents a crime.

Asked if any action would be taken to stop the new Agee publications in the United States, a Justice Department spokesman said none had been requested.

The first 24-page edition of the Covert Action Bulletin was issued "at no charge" and readers were offered a $10 rebate on future subscriptions if they put out $24.95 for Agee's new book.

Agee resigned from the CIA in Mexico in 1969. Contrary to CIA regulations, Agee published his "Inside the Company" expose in 1975 without CIA clearance and has remained outside the United States even though there is no existing law under which he could be charged.

President Left Wilson 'Aglow'

By SHARON BOND
Associated Press Writer

WILSON, N.C. (AP) — It is history now. But for a few hours Saturday, this eastern North Carolina town played host to the president of the United States.

The president was in town to campaign for Democratic Senate nominee John Ingram and to boost his support among the tobacco people. The reception he received was warm, but the number of people that turned out was smaller than anticipated — about 10,000 instead of the predicted 40,000.

Those that got close to him, however, were clearly pleased and excited. It was the first time an incumbent president has visited the town in its 130-year history. And as Mayor H.P. Benton said, it might be the only time the town got such a visit.

Carter spent about three hours in Wilson, accompanied by Gov. Jim Hunt, Ingram, U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., and a host of other state officials and political figures. He gave short speeches at his stops at the Wilson Public Library, a luncheon and a mock tobacco auction. At some of the stops, he mingled with the crowd, shook hands and kissed a few here and there.

He appeared casual and relaxed and according to the mayor enjoyed himself.

"The president said he enjoyed it and felt at home," Benton said. "He acted like he did. And he said he was coming back if Ingram needed him later on. He enjoyed himself because he said he was in the same type of atmosphere he lived in in Georgia."

Benton said he was happy with the visit because now other people and places will know where Wilson is.

Although there had been some negative comments from tobacco farmers reported before Carter's visit, the mayor and Hunt described the trip as a success. Hunt dismissed the negative comments as typical response from the usual group of "antis."

Carter's library remarks were interrupted by more than a dozen sign-waving protesters who chanted, "Free the Wilmington 10." The chanting kept up until Carter finally acknowledged it by telling the crowd on the library lawn that, "There is a time in our country to recognize basic human rights. One of those is the right to speak, or even shout, when others are trying to speak."

At a mock auction at Growers Cooperative Warehouse, Carter repeated his support for the tobacco price-support program. But he also said earlier in the day that the anti-smoking campaign begun this year by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare would continue.

When speaking of the anti-smoking effort which has angered many North Carolina tobacco farmers, Carter did not refer to as such, but instead called it a health issue.

"We'll continue these joint programs within which I don't see any incompatibility," the president said.

Now that it is all over, Benton said he wasn't sorry for the eight or nine days the town spent in preparation for the presidential visit. The mayor said he didn't know yet how much was spent by the town on the preparations, but he said it would probably run into the thousands of dollars.

Since the trip was meant primarily to boost Ingram's campaign, the state Democratic Party or the Ingram campaign will pay much of the expense. A White House aide said the trip will probably cost state Democrats from $5,000 to $6,000.

But the town will have to foot the bill for extra police and other personnel and the sprucing up that was done.

The mayor said it was well worth the cost and trouble to have the president in town.

"You and I know the visit was motivated by political reasons," Benton said. "But we in Wilson think of it as a visit by the president."

Guidelines For The Chauvinist

By MARCIA STEPANEK

CHICAGO (UPI) — How do I love thee?

Confused, pregnant and, ultimately, dependent, says Ron Fenton, editor-publisher of "Male Chauvinist," one of the country's newest magazines.

Fenton hopes other men who like women the same way will come out of the closet to make a success of the magazine.

In its premier issue, the magazine provides would-be chauvinists a list of 10 ways to keep women in their places, which, Fenton says, are the kitchen, the boudoir and the delivery room.

The keys to successful chauvinism: Keep 'em pregnant, hand 'em an IRS tax form and convince 'em to join women's lib — to channel their energies into a "useless cause."

Viva and Working Women and all these kinds of women's books.

"On the other hand, men's books are chocked full of nude girls with no information on how they should cope with the war of the sexes. Society is changing... man is living in a confisatory society when he gets married — he's nailed to the wall. Men really are chauvinists and they never had a chance to admit it before. Maybe this will help."

Fenton, in his 40s, is twice divorced and a self-proclaimed "swinging single."

"Women are nice and great and I don't think they should be horse-whipped and chained in a stall," he said, "but they should be put someplace in between," he said.

The chauvinist revolution was bound to happen, says Fenton, a former executive of Hustler and Gallery magazines.

So he has dedicated his magazine to the furtherance of the male cause and the ultimate putdown of the American female.

To make sure there's no mistaking his opinion, the magazine's cover features a tuxedo-clad man sitting on a throne with two very attractive women kissing — if not groveling at — his feet.

Articles include:

- "How to Cheat on Your Wife and/or Girlfriend!"
- "Living With 2 or More Females — It Can Be Fun!"
- "Why Younger Women Are Better"

— "An In-Depth Look At the Nimble Female Mind"

Also included are the ten ways to keep women in their place.

In addition to keeping the ladies pregnant and confused by tax forms, the article suggests that men make sure their wives or girlfriends are known in the community only as "the wife of John Smith or the girlfriend of John Smith."

"That way," says Fenton, "a man doesn't have to lose his identity."

The commandments also advise the chauvinist to keep his wife or lover on a strict allowance, read her poetry — "any will do, she won't know the difference" — and to avoid, at all costs, telling her the truth.

"I started this magazine because women have become so grabby," Fenton said in an interview.

"This is basically a backlash to magazines like Cosmo, Ms.,

Bell Says He's Willing To Help Wilmington 10

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Griffin Bell said he has done all he can in the case of the Wilmington 10. But Bell says he is willing to do more.

Bell said Sunday the 10, a group that Amnesty International claims is an example of political prisoners in the United States, is "a problem because it's an internationally known case."

He suggested the Justice Department is willing to re-enter the case in which nine black men and one white woman were convicted in the firebombing of a white-owned store during racial unrest at Wilmington, N.C. in 1971.

"I've done all I can do in the case, and I'm available to do more if anyone can bring something to my attention to help resolve that problem," Bell said on the CBS television program "Face the Nation."

But Bell, when asked about United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young's recent comment that there are political prisoners in the United States, said he didn't know of any himself.

The woman was freed about two years ago, and four of the men convicted of arson and conspiracy in the case were released this year on parole because North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt reduced their sentences. Four others are eligible for parole before the end of this year. Ten leader Ben Chavis will become eligible in 1980. Bell declined to say whether he thought the 10 defendants got fair trials.

"I have from the beginning tried to be certain that they had a fair trial," he said. "I even convened a federal grand jury for that purpose. I sent the FBI in to interview some witnesses. I made all that available to each side — to the state — to the lawyers for the defendants."

Bell's comments came several weeks after the Carter administration scolded the Soviet Union for the conviction and imprisonment of two Jewish dissidents.

Papal Selection Often Surprises Prognosticators

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

About a dozen names have figured most prominently in speculation about who will succeed Pope Paul VI, but trying to specify the choice is about like picking a number on a roulette wheel.

In recent papal elections, the outcome generally has come as a surprise, confounding the parlor-games prognosticators.

Nevertheless, the guesswork is inevitable, both in upper hierarchical echelons and in Roman Catholic households around the world, and informed Vatican watchers have pointed to several prelates as "papabili."

That means with credentials making them likely papal prospects.

Yet none of the 115 active cardinals from whom the pope will be chosen openly campaigns for the job nor offers a program, which leaves the decision all the more wrapped in the secrecy of their conclave.

The history of the last five centuries would indicate it would be an Italian, as have been all the popes of that period, and that still seems the the likeliest possibility.

However, for the first time, non-Europeans hold a majority in the College of Cardinals, adding a new element to the process, making speculation more uncertain, but adding a wider spectrum of potential popes.

Those cited in this category include Cardinal Johannes Willebrands, 68, of Utrecht, Netherlands, the long-time head of the Vatican Secretariate for Christian Unity, widely known among leaders of various churches.

A moderate, but with a sensitivity to the new ecumenical winds in Christendom, he has been closely associated both with Pope Paul and his predecessor, the late John XXIII.

However, Willebrands' non-Italian roots make him a long shot, as is the case with Cardinal David Hume, 55, of Westminster, England, a newly risen eminence on the church scene, and Cardinal Eduardo Pironio, 57, an Argentinian and progressive now heading the Vatican's department for religious orders.

A similar hurdle applies to Cardinal Franz Koenig, 73, of Vienna, an Austrian whose age also is deemed a drawback. However, he rose to prominent influence in the late Pope John's regime and has continued to be a powerful voice under Pope Paul.

Koenig has been the key figure in negotiating a more liveable status for the church under Communist regimes.

The Italian cited most in speculation about Pope Paul's choice to succeed him is Cardinal Giovanni Binelli, 57, long the pope's right hand man as the Vatican's undersecretary of state.

He was appointed last year as archbishop of Florence, Italy, seen at the time as a further step grooming him for the top office, since moving from the Vatican to a major see has been a common route to the papacy.

Binelli is considered a conservative in church policies.

Recently, however, with Paul's declining health and activity, attention has shifted to others as emerging prospects, most of them involved in administration of the various Cabinet branches of the Vatican.

Among them are Cardinals Pericle Felici, 66, head of the Vatican Congregation of Canon Law with a reputation for conservatism; and Sergio Pignedoli, 68, head of the Secretariate for Non-Christians, regarded as a liberal who has brought new interchange with Islamic and other third-world religions.

Another Vatican hand mentioned is Cardinal Sebastiano Baggio, 65, head of the Congregation of Bishops, highly esteemed for his diplomacy in dealing both with the conservative and liberal wings of the church.

He has filled church diplomatic posts both in Latin America and Europe.

At the time of Pope Paul's election in 1963, the man seen as the most likely non-Italian possibility was Cardinal Leo Joseph Suenens, 64, of Malines-Brussels, Belgium.

He has become known worldwide as an outspoken backer of the charismatic movement, emphasizing heightened spontaneity in worship and intensified prayer life, often in closer relationship with Protestants.

But insiders say his work and extensive writings have irked conservatives, and virtually ruled out his chances.

Although Americans rarely are listed among the prospects, the two regarded as having the most clout in Vatican affairs are Cardinals Terence Cooke, 57, of New York, and John Krol, 67, of Philadelphia.

Whoever the choice, it seems certain that a powerful voice at the conclave will be that of Holland's Cardinal Bernard Alfrink, 78, retired from the see of Utrecht but long a widely influential churchman since the days of the 1962-65 Second Vatican Council.

But what happens when the international company of cardinals convene in seclusion to name the church's 263rd pope is regarded ecclesiastically as not a matter of politics, personal preference or partisanship, but of guidance by the spirit of God.

In fact, cardinals are not supposed even to discuss papal succession during the lifetime of a pope, and until they go into that guarded arena to pick a new one.

That tends to leave the oddsmakers pretty much in the realm of conjecture.

A Least Eight Died In Traffic

By The Associated Press

At least eight persons have been killed on North Carolina's highways this weekend, including two 3-year-old children who were killed in separate accidents in the state, according to the Highway Patrol.

The fatalities bring the state's yearly highway death toll to 779, compared with 866 during the comparable period last year.

A 3-year-old Raeford boy was killed Sunday afternoon when he ran into the path of an oncoming vehicle, the patrol said. The victim was identified as Delmont Fredel Melvin.

A patrol spokesman said Laurie Ann Talford, 3, of Charlotte, was killed Saturday night when she ran in front of a car.

Vickie Lynn Holt, 21, of Pinnacle was killed Saturday night on a rural road about 11 miles south of Danbury when her car was struck head-on by another vehicle, the patrol said.

Edward Earl Wilson, 50, of Vanceboro, was killed near Banner Elk Saturday night when his motorcycle was struck by a car. The patrol spokesman said another motorcyclist riding with Wilson was also hit by the car and seriously injured.

An Edenton pedestrian, Earl B. Privott, 48, was killed Saturday night by a hit-and-run driver, according to the patrol.

Alonzo Elliott, 44, of Mount Olive, was killed early Sunday morning when he was run over by a car while he was lying in the road, the patrol said.

A White Oak man, Clarence McLemore Jr., 49, was killed on a Bladen County rural road Friday night when his tractor was struck from the rear by a car. The patrol said McLemore was operating his tractor without lights.

Jerry Lee Baldwin, 40, of Roanoke, Va., was killed Friday night near Whiteville when a car turned in front of his motorcycle.

Poll Points To Adoption

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) —

A poll taken in Mecklenburg County Sunday by WSOC News Radio showed that liquor by the drink will pass its first test by an overwhelming majority.

Voters in Charlotte and Mecklenburg County will vote Sept. 8 on mixed drink sales and the poll of 600 of those voters showed the issue passing with 63 percent of the total vote.

The survey, which was conducted by telephone and involved voters from throughout the county, showed only 27 percent of the respondents were planning to vote against liquor by the drink.

Of the voters who answered the survey, 10 percent said they were undecided about whether mixed-drink sales should be allowed.

WSOC said the voters who were polled were selected at random from throughout the county. The station said the margin for error in a poll with 600 responses was plus or minus five percent.

The results of Sunday's poll were similar to those from a poll taken recently by Mecklenburg County opponents of liquor by the drink. In that poll, 64 percent were in favor of the measure.

After Sunday's results, opponents said a media blitz on radio and television would be launched before the Sept. 8 vote. Mecklenburg will be the first area to hold a referendum on the local-option law passed by the General Assembly in June.

Queen Elizabeth II and her 14-year-old son, Prince Edward, flew back to England from here after a 12-day tour that took the royal family across Canada.

Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and a large crowd were at the Canadian Forces Base Namao Airport for the queen's departure Sunday night.

Faith Assembly of God, located on Statonsburg and Allen Roads, Greenville, will hold a dedication service Sunday, Aug. 13, 2:30 p.m., at the church.

The new multi-purpose church building is located on approximately 5.6 acres, with an assembly seating area for 160 persons, a nursery, five classrooms and rest rooms. The building is completely air-conditioned and totals 3,200 square feet.

The Nelms Family will sing Sunday at the 11 a.m. services. A homecoming meal will be served at 1:30 p.m. The Rev. Charles Cookman, superintendent of the North Carolina District Council of Assemblies of God, Inc., will be the guest speaker at the dedication ceremony.

The minister and founder of the church, the Rev. Steve R. Jones, invites the public to come and join in the dedication ceremony.

Iowans Love Billy Carter

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) —

Billy Carter was disappointed. He wanted to compete in the demolition derby, but didn't have a driver's license.

But his spirits soon were boosted when he allowed "death-defying" motorcycle stunt drivers to soar over him as he lay on the ground.

His adventure Sunday at the Great Mississippi Valley Fair led him to proclaim, "You're all about the best Yankees we ever met."

President Carter's peanut-farmer-turned-celebrity brother spent the afternoon and evening at the fair shaking hands, signing autographs and, of course, drinking beer.

He also received a key to the city.

Carter, wearing a checked shirt and blue jeans, arrived riding a fire truck in a parade. "Hang in there, Billy," yelled a ruddy-faced man in a seed cap. "Bless his heart, he's a doll," added a woman.

Unwanted Dog Is Blood Donor

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ten years ago, an undistinguished puppy of German shepherd and other undetermined heritage was brought into the office of Dr. Raymond Pahle.

The owner did not want the pup and asked the veterinarian to put it to sleep. The veterinarian asked whether it would be all right if, instead of killing the dog, he kept it alive and used it to help keep other dogs alive.

And that's what happened. The once-unwanted dog became a blood donor to other dogs at Pahle's clinic. The clinic also has a cat named Joey who is a blood donor.

Just as a human being, a dog or cat can be in urgent need of a blood transfusion, but there are no animal blood banks. So it is practical to keep donors as permanent residents of animal hospitals, the veterinarian said.

The animals, Shep and Joey, are not often needed for this purpose, so they are really part-time blood donors and full-time pets, he said.

Fears Image Of Guitar Music

EAST LANSING (AP) — The spreading use of guitar music in church worship endangers the church's heritage of great music, says noted German composer Heinz Werner Zimmermann.

Zimmermann of the State Music Academy in Frankfurt told a workshop at Michigan State University that he advocates genuine "contemporary expressions in church music, but I reject a modern style defined only by triviality."

"Guitarists have a liking for syncopation, just as I do, but church music, even in syncopated style, should express something more than activism — something spiritual, something timeless," he said.

"Where guitarists prefer to make church music as simple as possible, I prefer to make church music as rich as possible."

Washington Monument Climb Discouraged; Few Are Allowed

By SAM HARTZ
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Once it was the poor man's Pike's Peak, but no more.

For 84 years, the highest, steepest climb many Americans made was the tortuous, 898-step hike to the 500-foot observation platform of the Washington National Monument.

Millions accepted the challenge. For many high school students, it was the highlight of a visit to the capital. Three out of 10 took the stairs in 1963.

But the number of climbers has slowed to less than a trickle after a National Park Service clampdown because of robberies, heart attacks, vandalism and fighting on the narrow steps and landings leading up the monument.

With 5,000 to 6,000 visitors on peak days, the crush of up and down traffic is more than personnel can manage, said George Berklaey, a National Parks spokesman.

Now it takes special permission and an unusually good reason to go by foot instead of elevator.

"If the chap who conquered Mt. Everest said, 'Look, I'd like to climb those steps because they're there,' we'd obviously honor that request," he said.

Lesser figures who got okays were the son of a donor of one of 190 memorial stones that line the stairs and a group of students from Howard University in the capital.

International groups get consideration too, particularly those from countries which donated memorial stones — including Brazil, China, Japan, Greece, Thailand, Turkey and half a dozen others.

But the average tourist has to come up with a very solid reason for making the historic climb.

You can walk down, with ranger supervision, after taking the elevator up. But that's somewhat like riding a bike in the Boston Marathon or crossing the English Channel in a motorboat.

In a way, the climbing ban marked the end of an era in which young people were in better physical shape, a Park Service employee says.

"Kids are softer now, they're brought up on TV," said Terry Barbot, adding that she had to rescue two students who couldn't make it down the stairs — let alone up.

That was a far cry from the feat of Gustav A. Hergert who made the 500-foot climb almost daily from 1958 through 1963 when he was 72.

In 1958, Herbert J. Blitz, 29, climbed to the top in leg braces and crutches. Victim of a broken back, Blitz wanted to prove to prospective employers he could manage stairs.

And, records show Floyd T. Voris re climbed the stairs in 1962 after having made his first trip in 1902.

Even walking down is more restricted, now. No more stunts.

On Dec. 28, 1949, acrobat Glen-Marlin Sundry walked down the 898 steps on his palms in an hour and 25 minutes. That was topped on May 14, 1950, by a Norfolk, Va. gymnastics instructor, Marvin Byrum, who was clocked in 41 minutes and 30 seconds.

Protest Use Nuke Power

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Members of the Safe Energy Alliance demonstrated peacefully Sunday at Duke Power Co.'s uncompleted McGuire Nuclear Plant as part of a national anti-nuclear protest.

The protesters were marking the 33rd anniversary of the date the United States dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima, Japan in 1945.

"We're here to commemorate the deaths of the first humans by atomic fission," said Lee Manchester of Clover, S.C., who coordinated the demonstration at a public overlook next to the plant.

And "we're here to say no (to) the generation of electricity by atomic fission," he said.

The energy alliance, formed in May, claims about 100 Charlotte area members. At Sunday's protest at McGuire, alliance members and Duke officials casually debated the pros and cons of nuclear energy.

"It's hazardous," 21-year-old Margaret Reville of Charlotte told Duke's Morris McIntosh as a red "Nukes Make Nice Neighbors" sign tethered to a truck drifted in the breeze.

"We feel like its appropriate to point out the positive aspects of nuclear energy," said McIntosh, the McGuire plant manager. The plant is scheduled to begin operation in mid 1979.

New Life After PGA For Mahaffey

By GARY MIHOSES
Associated Press Writer

OAKMONT, Pa. (AP) — John Mahaffey, who's known personal and playing woes on the pro golf tour, talked of new life after his sudden-death triumph in the PGA Championship.

"It's been a long road back with lots of disappointments, but this makes up for every bit of it," he said after his 12-foot birdie putt on the second extra hole Sunday gave him victory over Jerry Pate and Tom Watson.

"I really think I deserve it. I've worked hard," added the 30-year-old Texan, who early Sunday was 7 strokes behind the front-running, seemingly secure Watson.

The victory, just the second of Mahaffey's eight-year pro career, brought him $50,000, a 10-year exemption from qualifying for PGA tour events, and hugs and kisses from his new wife, Susie.

But don't get the impression pro golf has been all green grass and glory for Mahaffey, who leaped into the air with elation while his winning putt was still inches from the hole.

In 1975, he lost the U.S. Open in a playoff with Lou Graham. A year later, he had a cozy lead in the same championship before Pate, then a rookie sensation, overtook him with a birdie on the last hole.

Then came a divorce from his first wife, a drinking problem, an elbow injury sustained during a swing, a broken hand sustained in a fall from a ladder and the collapse of a career that had earned him over $300,000 in three years.

"I really don't want to talk about the past. There were a lot of personal problems. There were injuries. And all of it culminated in one thing — my game deteriorated," he said.

"But now I'm healthy. And I've got a more than healthy marriage," he said as his second wife sat nearby with an armful of yellow roses.

"I've got a wife that works me. She won't let me home from practice until it gets dark, and I really think it's paid off."

Mahaffey spent long hours early last week on the practice

tee. But the pretournament talk of Jack Nicklaus, four-time PGA champion.

As it turned out, Nicklaus didn't make the cut after two rounds, and Watson took command, shooting 67-69-67 to drop 10-under par and take a 5-stroke lead into Sunday's final holes.

Watson led by 7 strokes after he birdied the fourth hole Sunday to drop 11-under-par overall.

But after an eagle on the ninth hole, he three-putted the 10th to begin a slide that left him at 8-under 276 after 72 holes. His final round 73 left him in a deadlock with the Pate, who shot a 68, and Mahaffey, who had a 66.

Pate, who began the day at 5-under, missed a 4-foot putt on the 18th hole that would have won it.

Mahaffey, who had a 75 in the first round Thursday, took the lead at 9-under-par with a birdie on the 14th hole Sunday. But he bogeyed the 16th to drop back into a tie and remind himself of his previous U.S. Open collapses.

The first three-way playoff in the 60-year history of the PGA Championship followed.

All three players parred the first hole. Then came Mahaffey's winning birdie on the second.

The $50,000 top prize raised his tour earnings for the year to $91,764, nearly 10 times the $9,847 he made last year. Watson and Pate got $25,000 each.

Tied for fourth at 280 were Tom Weiskopf and Gil Morgan, who had a hole-in-one Sunday. Lee Trevino, Andy Bean and Australian Graham Marsh were next at 284.

Morgan, a non-practicing optometrist from Oklahoma, made his hole-in-one on the par 3, 255-yard No. 8 hole — and he made it on the fly.

That's right — on the fly. His one iron shot went directly from the tee to the cup. The ball took a piece of turf from the lip of the cup as it pushed past the flag stick.

"The people on the tee and myself weren't certain what I had holed it for a while," said Morgan, who shot 66 and 67 in his last two rounds.

"The reaction at the hole was delayed too. I think everybody was wondering, 'Where did it go?'"

Pond Wins Fastest 500 Ever

By JERRY GARRETT
AP Motorsports Writer

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — "I'd heard it all," Lennie Pond acknowledged wearily. "I'd heard I couldn't drive super-speedways. I'd heard I couldn't do a lot of things."

"When I went into the race, I felt to win it I'd have to beat the whole world."

Pond, a likable 37-year-old from Chester, Va., looked like a world-beater as he won the fastest 500-mile auto race in history Sunday, the 10th annual Talladega 500 at Alabama International Motor Speedway. Pond, who ran laps in traffic at over 200 mph, averaged a record 174.700 mph, which was slowed by four caution periods and regular pit stops. He beat Donnie Allison by a car length.

"It was a long time coming," said Pond after the first Grand National stock car victory of his career. "I've gotta talk to a lotta people now and get a few things straightened out. I think this should have some bearing on my future with this team."

Pond was referring to rumors his team members were dissatisfied with his lack of victories this season despite topflight equipment.

It was speculated last week that Pond either had already been fired or would be replaced at the end of the year by Darrell Waltrip. Pond denied any knowledge of those actions, but admitted, "We've got a few things to get squared away. When we do, we'll make an announcement."

Pond drew immense satisfaction from winning not only the fastest 500-mile ever, but also the most competitive. There were a record 67 official lead changes among nine drivers.

Pond, who led 22 of the 188 laps, pulled in front for the last time with five laps to go, after pole position starter Cale Yarborough had been knocked out of contention by a too-late pit stop.

With Pond leading a pack of four cars down to the white flag signaling one lap remaining, a slower car blew a tire and left huge chunks of rubber and a six-foot blade of metal on the track in front of the leaders.

"I couldn't miss it. I didn't see it until I was on top of it," Pond said. "I ran right over it and felt it hit under my car. But it didn't hurt me."

But the debris kicked up and hit Benny Parsons' car and bent a fender against a tire. Some of the trash then smashed into Donnie Allison's windshield and sprayed all over David Pearson's car. Parsons and Pearson backed off, while Allison stayed in the chase.

But Pond, whose car had been running flawlessly since an early pit stop to make a chassis change, held the car length edge over Allison all the way around to the checkered flag.

Pond took a victory lap not, he said, to doubly insure victory, but "to stop crying before I went in."

Allison said, "Maybe that'll end all the talk that Lennie can't drive. I was glad to see him win if I couldn't."

Pond had numerous second-place finishes but no previous firsts in his seven-year Grand National career.

Yarborough, who with Buddy Baker led much of the race, passed Parsons and Pearson on the last lap for third. Baker retired after about 400 miles with engine failure.

Giants, L.A. Renew Rivalry

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Since moving to the West Coast in the late 1950s, the Los Angeles Dodgers and San Francisco Giants haven't had too many glowing moments reminiscent of their flaming baseball rivalry in New York.

This season, however, is different.

As they once did at Ebbets Field and the Polo Grounds, the Dodgers and Giants are getting the best out of their association — and the crowds are loving each competitive moment.

Jim Dwyer's RBI single. Reds 3, Padres 1

Johnny Bench's tie-breaking sacrifice fly in a three-run seventh inning led Cincinnati over San Diego. Prior to Bench's game-winning RBI, Randy Jones had permitted only one fly ball, handcuffing the Reds with low-breaking sinkers.

Fred Norman, recently demoted to the bullpen after struggling as a starter, got the victory in relief of Bill Bonham. Norman, 10-6, struck out five of the six batters he faced. Doug Bair pitched the last two innings to record his 21st save.

Phillies 3-5, Pirates 2-0

Larry Bowa singled home two runs in the fourth inning to lead Philadelphia over Pittsburgh in the first game of their doubleheader as the Pirates' Willie Stargell set an all-time major league strikeout record.

Dick Ruthven gave up eight hits and struck out three batters, including Stargell's record-breaker in the ninth. It was the 1,711th time that Stargell has fanned in his career and sent him past Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees in that category.

Steve Carlton pitched a three-hitter, drove in a run and scored once to pace the Phillies to their second-game victory.

Expos 2-3, Cubs 1-4

Gary Carter and Andre Dawson hit homers to lead Steve Rogers and Montreal to their first-game victory over Chicago. Carter hit his 12th homer of the season to open the third inning and Dawson hit his 20th in the sixth. Along with his 22 stolen bases, Dawson became the first Expo in history to hit 20 home runs and steal 20 bases in the same season.

Rogers improved his record to 13-7 with last-out relief help from Darold Knowles.

Greg Gross' run-scoring double and Mike Vall's pinch-sacrifice fly highlighted a three-run eighth inning rally that provided the Cubs with their victory in the nightcap.

Braves 3, Astros 2

Rookie left-hander Larry McWilliams recorded his fourth straight victory and rookie infielder Bob Horner drove in two runs, leading Atlanta over Houston. McWilliams gave up just four hits before being relieved in the sixth by Gene Garber, who earned his 16th save.

Cardinals 3, Mets 1

Red-hot George Hendrick smashed a solo home run and an RBI single, leading St. Louis over New York. Hendrick pounded both his hits off Jerry Koosman in handing the Mets' left-hander his fourth straight loss. In his last five games, Hendrick has had 11 hits in 20 at-bats.

Winner Silvio Martinez gave up five hits, walked four and fanned one before needing eighth-inning relief help from Roy Thomas.

Lopez Eyes Wright's Record Of 15 Wins

SUNNINGDALE, England (AP) — Mickey Wright's 15-year-old record of 13 tournament wins in a single year is in danger—Nancy Lopez has her eyes on it.

Lopez, the wonder girl of modern golf, has two ambitions. One is to break Wright's record and the other is to be the first girl to win $200,000 in a single year. Judy Rankin held the record with $150,734 won in 1976, but Lopez already has beaten that by picking up $15,000 for winning the European women's championships at Sunningdale Sunday.

and there are around 13 more tournaments still to go.

"It's going to be hard to beat Mickey's record," said Lopez. "I've got to get a move on."

"And I'd like to be the first to win $200,000 in a year. It can be done — I've got through a bad patch and my confidence is coming right back to me. You feel like a champion when you can go out on top and stay there. It makes me feel good."

Lopez sliced through the field of 80 consistently after shooting an opening-round 1-over-par 73, good for eighth place. She followed that with a 71 and a 72 and went into the final round Sunday in the lead, 6-under par.

Dwyer and Joann Carner, both of whom were pressing her hard midway through the round.

Dwyer, Carner and Sally Little of South Africa — who had led for the first two rounds — all finished with 4-under-par 292s for the 6,174-yard par-74 course, three strokes behind Lopez.

She putted her way to victory, not the slightest bit bothered by sudden and unexpected surges through the field by Mary

The fall sports scene is just about upon us. Every afternoon and evening now, high school football teams can be seen practicing as they get ready for the coming season.

While most teams will begin play on September 1, at least three area teams are slated to open their year on August 25, just two weeks from this coming Friday.

The season will spell the end of at least one area conference, and affect changes in three others when the winter basketball season begins.

The Eastern Plains 2-A Conference, which has already seen schools in Wilson and Edgecombe counties consolidate, will disappear following football.

Making up that league this season will be Roanoke in Robersonville, along with North Edgecombe, and North Johnston, three old members of the league. Joining them will be Wilson Hunt and Wilson Beddingfield, along with Southwest Edgecombe, all newly consolidated schools.

After football season is over, Hunt and Beddingfield will move up to the 4-A ranks, joining Division I. Southwest Edgecombe will become a member of the 3-A Eastern Carolina Conference.

Roanoke is slated to join the 3-A Northeastern Conference, which already includes cross-county rival Williamston. North Johnston and North Edgecombe have also found homes in other leagues outside "The Daily Reflector" coverage area.

It shows once more the changing face of athletics in the East.

Some Notes From The Area

Ott Alford, superintendent of the Pitt County School system, is serving this year as the vice-president of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association. This group, as most everyone knows, is the one which controls athletics in most of the state's schools.

Alford, as vice-president, is slated to move up to the president's position next year.

Bill Carson, the track coach at East Carolina University, may be leaving soon. Carson is considered one of the top candidates for the job at North Carolina State University.

It is expected that something will be announced on who State will pick in the next few days.

One of Carson's top athletes, Otis Melvin, has been in attendance at pre-Olympic training for the past few weeks, showing the quality of people he has brought to East Carolina over the past few years.

Kelly Heath, Greenville native in the professional baseball ranks, has had his troubles this season. Now playing for Jacksonville in the AA Southern League, Heath suffered a broken wrist earlier and was home for several weeks while it healed.

But it appears that he may have come back to the field a little earlier. "The Sporting News" recently reported that Heath, playing in only his second game since his injury, committed five errors.

That, however, is probably the only time Kelly would do anything like that. He's considered a bright prospect in the Kansas City Royals organization.

Work around Ficklen Stadium is coming to an end in the very near future, and it appears that the deadline of August 31 will easily be met. Work should start soon on the fences around the stadium, and the new scoreboard is reported to be on its way to Greenville.

The press box is nearing completion, which is something we are glad to see.

Now, it's up to the fans to come out and fill the place up and show the Pirates that they can expect the support they need. The Bucs open on September 2 against Western Carolina, then hit the road for games against rivals N.C. State and North Carolina.

Catfish, Tiant Sparkle

By TOM CANAVAN AP Sports Writer

Luis Tiant and Catfish Hunter may not qualify as oldtimers but their pitching performances Sunday brought back a lot of old memories.

Tiant scattered eight hits as the Boston Red Sox beat the Milwaukee Brewers 4-0 and Hunter hurled a five-hitter to pace the New York Yankees to a 3-0 triumph over the Baltimore Orioles.

"In 1968, I blew smoke by everybody. I threw twice as hard as anybody and I was the best starting pitcher in the big leagues," said Tiant, 84, after recording his first victory since June 24.

"Now I think pitching more, and I've been pitching just as good as in '68," he added, referring to the season he won 21 games.

Red Sox 4, Brewers 0

Rick Burleson's RBI single capped a three-run second inning as Boston handed Milwaukee its ninth loss in the last 13 games.

"We're still in second place, and that's great," Brewer Manager George Bamberger said.

Dwight Evans added a run-scoring single in the eighth for Boston.

Royals 12, Blue Jays 5

Al Cowens smashed his first grand slam home run and Hal McRae added a two-run double as Kansas City blasted Toronto and maintained a two-game lead over the California Angels in the AL West.

Rookie Rich Gale, 13-3, gave up eight hits in six innings, while Rico Carty and John Maberly homered for the Blue Jays.

Angels 4, Twins 3

Carney Lansford's one-out ninth-inning single scored Ken Landreaux from second base as California defeated Minnesota and rolled to its fifth victory in the past six games.

Don Baylor's home run, his 24th of the season, off Twins' starter Geoff Zahn tied the game 3-3 in the eighth inning.

California's starter Nolan Ryan struck out 10 to regain the AL strikeout lead from New York's Ron Guidry, 174 to 173.

Tigers 8, White Sox 0

Steve Kemp hit a three-run homer and Rusty Staub had a two-run shot, backing the sixth pitching of Jim Slaton as Detroit blanked Chicago, the Tigers' eighth win in the last nine games.

Staub hit his 18th homer in the third inning, while Kemp, who drove in four runs, crashed a three-run shot in the fifth.

A's 4-4, Mariners 3-3

Dell Alton, recalled from the minors Saturday, delivered a seventh-inning single to score Rob Picciolo from second as Oakland defeated Seattle and swept a double-header. Taylor Duncan's eighth-inning bloop single scored pinch runner Darrell Woodard from second as Oakland won the first game.

The A's, who have beaten the Mariners in 13 of 15 games this season, moved within four games of division leading Kansas City.

Rangers 3, Indians 2

Pinch hitter Gary Gray blasted a two-out, two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth inning as Texas edged Cleveland. Gray's shot hit the left field foul pole and made a winner out of Jon Matlack, who entered the ninth with a 1-0 lead. The left-hander, however, was touched for two runs on Ron Pruitt RBI double and Ted Cox's sacrifice fly.

Rhodesian Army Has No Trouble In Its Recruiting

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

BALLA BALLA, Rhodesia (AP) — When the Rhodesian army goes into combat against black nationalist guerrillas, it is generally black who fights black.

While it is commanded mostly by white officers, the Rhodesian army is 80 percent black, and even though guerrilla leaders talk confidently of victory and have a growing force, the army also is having no trouble getting more black recruits.

At this regimental base for the Rhodesian African Rifles, for example, 600 trained black soldiers are turned out every six months.

The pay is comparatively good; food, lodging, clothing and medical care are free — and for many it is a job when times are hard.

But fight fellow blacks? "I fight for Rhodesia or Zimbabwe. I don't mind," said recruit Denica Mpala, 21. "What I mind about is that I get enough for me and my future family and the family at our home."

Zimbabwe is what Rhodesia will be called when a biracial interim government hands the reins to the nation's black majority by Jan. 1.

The Rhodesian army has been fighting over the past six years against Communist trained insurgent forces of Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo.

Though black-majority rule is imminent for Rhodesia, there is no ceasefire in sight and a real possibility exists for a black civil war in the future. Thus the dilemma of black troops would seem acute.

But at this training depot in the sparsely populated southwest, 50 miles from Rhodesia's second largest city of Bulawayo, there is little concern expressed about the possibility of civil war.

The Rhodesian African Rifles has no difficulty getting recruits to train under a stepped up program at Balla Balla, a white boys private school until three years ago.

For the men who head here rather than become guerrillas, the need for a job is clearly a prime motive. Unemployment, always chronic, is getting worse among the 6.7 million black majority.

Soldiering is relatively lucrative. Recruits earn $960 a year, with free board, uniforms and medical care. The money is about a third of the basic pay of recruits in the army's only white regular battalion, the Rhodesia Light Infantry, but five times the average black income.

There is pay parity between whites and blacks in senior non-commissioned and commissioned ranks.

A financial motive was evident in interviews with recruits here.

Recruit Mpala has an 11th grade education — some four years more than most other recruits. He says he wanted to be a clerk but could not get a job or training, so he joined the police and then the army.

Jordan Sibanda, 32, who has two soldier brothers, says he stayed home in his reservation while some friends left to become guerrillas.

"Terrorists tried in 1973 to kill all my family," said Sibanda. "They said, 'Why do your brothers join the army? I want only to live in my country. I have joined to serve my country.'"

Black members of the army and the predominantly black police force account for about half the 548 security force casualties of the war.

Blacks have shown courage in combat, including risking their lives for white comrades.

Danger reaches off the battlefield, too, with records showing 104 soldiers on leave were slain by guerrillas. There are now avacation centers where families can visit soldiers who do not go home.

"We hope it is a temporary measure," says Balla Balla's white commanding officer, Maj. Peter Morris.

The family history of Regimental Sgt. Maj. J.V. Manunure, the army's senior black non-commissioned officer, reflects the perils. Of his eight brothers in the police or army, one was killed in action last year and a second slain on his way home to arrange the funeral.

The Manunures are Karangas — one of the seven groups of Rhodesia's majority Shona tribe. Until recruitment widened about a decade ago, the elitist Karangas provided most of the men for the Rhodesia African Rifles and police. Karangas also dominate the high command of Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union guerrilla forces.

"Negative," barks the British-trained Manunure, 46, when asked whether he has second thoughts about an army career. "If the terrorists want to carry on, we will — and we will conquer."

Race barriers in the military eased since this war started — though here there are separate messes still for white and black NCOs.

Black troops are posted to companies outside the African Rifles, including the secret Selous Scouts commando unit, which is thought to be about 70 percent black. There are now integrated bush patrols, too.

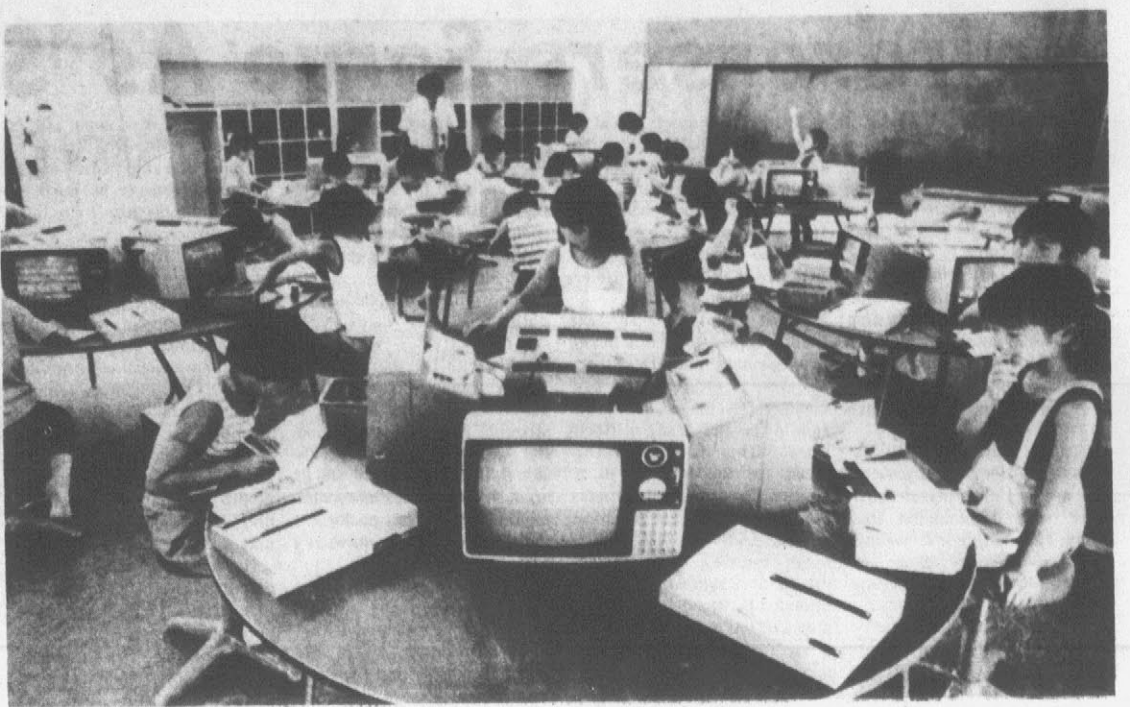

Until 18 months ago the Rhodesian army had no black officers. Lt. Fani Ndlovu, 36, one of the first seven blacks commissioned, takes a simplistic view of political change.

"I'll fight for the country regardless of who is ruling," he says. "But it must be official. So long as the general comes around and says it is official and this man is ruler of the country, nothing will change and nothing should change."

British-born Morris speaks more frankly of uncertainty. "The guys here are just as confused as I and everyone else," he says. "Nobody knows how it's going to turn out. But we can't afford to let that disturb our day-to-day work."

Moderate black leaders scheduled to take over at year's end want an intact army, police and air force — estimated to total 20,000 regulars and 35,000 mainly white reservists.

A Western diplomat commented recently: "Whoever takes over here won't want those guys running around loose and unhappy. They are probably the best-trained troops in Africa."

Fourteen-Year Study By AMA Confirms Smoking Dangerous

CHICAGO (AP) — A study sponsored by the American Medical Association says nicotine may cause peptic ulcers and confirms that cigarette smoking helps cause lung and heart diseases.

The 14-year study cost $15 million and was financed by six major tobacco companies.

Recently released in a 369-page hardbound book, the study concluded:

"The bulk of research sponsored by this project supports the contention that cigarette smoking plays an important role in the development of chronic obstructive pulmonary diseases and constitutes a grave danger to individuals with pre-existing disease of the coronary arteries.

"... studies include new mechanisms by which nicotine may influence production of peptic ulcers."

AMA spokesman Frank Chappell said Saturday that the study doesn't contain much that is new, but confirms what other studies have found.

The impact of the study, however, seemed to be that research funded by the tobacco industry supported earlier research that smoking is hazardous.

The tobacco industry had argued that a 1964 report by the U.S. surgeon general which said that cigarette smoking is a health hazard was based on inconclusive evidence. The industry began funding the work of the Committee for Research on Tobacco and Health that year.

The study is a compilation of the work of 844 researchers in 85 American and 13 foreign institutions.

"At no point in the 14 years of this project was any attempt ever made to influence the research areas to be pursued or the committee's final result," said Dr. James H. Sammons, executive vice president of the AMA.

The companies which financed the study were American Brands Inc., Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corp., Liggett Group Inc., Lorillard Co., Phillip Morris Inc., and R.J. Reynolds Industries.

The study said cigarette smoking reduced the length of time and amount persons could exercise.

At one hospital, doctors found a "highly significant acceleration" of cholesterol deposits in blood tested 30 minutes after heavy smoking.

In addition, the report said smoking inhibits cells in the lungs that consume bacteria, which means smokers may be more susceptible to infection than nonsmokers.

"Why people smoke tobacco is still a mystery..." one report dealing with cigarette addiction said. "One factor, among many, in tobacco smoking appears to be nicotine itself. It has been shown that nicotine given intravenously in relatively large amounts to normal volunteer smokers causes a small but statistically significant decrease in the number of cigarettes smoked."

Honeymoon Is Interrupted

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Urgent business is the only reason Christina Onassis Kazov suddenly returned here without her husband of six days, insist her aunt and her Athens business director.

"Christina was forced to interrupt her honeymoon (in the Soviet Union) because an urgent business matter arose which demanded her personal presence in Greece," her aunt, Artemis Onassis-Garoufalidou, said Sunday.

She denied that her 27-year-old millionaire niece had come to arrange a Greek Orthodox church wedding with her third husband, Soviet Communist Party member Sergei Kazov.

"All other speculation around the purpose of her sudden trip, and the fact that she arrived without her husband, is unfounded," she said.

EMBRYO TRANSPLANT SUCCESS — This Quarter Horse filly, right, foaled Feb. 13, is the first equine produced by embryo transplant in the U.S. according to Dr. Duane C. Kraemer of Texas A&M Univ., College Station, who headed the operation. The donor, TAMU Reyetta was bred to The Eyes of Texas, after which Dr.

Kraemer transplanted the embryo into Badger Rena, shown above with the offspring. Dr. Kraemer described both mare and filly as normal, except the mare is not the filly's "mother", although they look alike. The horses belong to Texas A&M University. (AP Laserphoto)

Hairdressers Serve As 'Shrink'

By DOLORES BARCLAY
Associated Press Writer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The reclining "patient" rambles through a litany of troubles and woes while the "doctor" listens intently.

But the lamenting lady is buried beneath puffs of white, creamy lather, her head resting over a sink, not on an analyst's couch. And the "doctor," along with listening, works his fingers expertly through the woman's hair and scalp.

Yes, it's hairdresser and customer, not doctor and patient. But a new University of Rochester study has found that along with cutting and curling, hairdressers spend about one-third of their time discussing with their customers' most intimate and challenging problems, sometimes giving advice, sometimes just listening.

And as with bartenders and taxi drivers, most people think shampoo shrinks are cheaper and easier to see than professional analysts.

"Most people do not take their problems to mental health professionals," says Dr. Emory L. Cowen, professor of psychology, psychiatry and education at the University of Rochester. "This has been recognized for the past 15 to 20 years. The informal process has greater interest for most people."

"Of course, some mental health professionals might be offended by this development," said Cowen, a co-author of the study. "But these activities are a part of the world of reality. We must do what we can to support and strengthen these informal caregivers."

The study, "Hairdressers as Caregivers: A Descriptive Profile of Interpersonal Help-Giving Involvements," was conducted among 90 hairdressers in the Rochester area. It also found hairdressers felt that the time they spent on customers' problems was an important part of their work day.

Most hairdressers said they offered support and sympathy, tried to be lighthearted or just listened. The feelings of hairdressers in discussing these problems with clients ranged from gratification and sympathy to helplessness, boredom and anger.

Sometimes customer problems were discussed again at subsequent hair appointments, in after-business phone calls and visits to the hairdresser's home. But the study did not measure the effectiveness of the time and advice given by the beautician.

One woman who falls into the patient-customer category — call her Betty S. — was having trouble with her marriage and family finances. The problem generated a great amount of stress in her day-to-day living. But she hadn't gone to a professional. Instead, she said, she increased the number of appointments at her beauty parlor.

ROCHESTER: beauty parlor. "Lisa, my hairdresser, is the best listener in the world," Betty said. "I mentioned what was happening with my husband and me and Lisa told me about at least half a dozen other women just like me. 'I felt good afterwards, plus my hair was super.'"

One hairdresser quoted in the study noted her neighboring competitor, an excellent hairdresser, was going out of business. "He can't listen to people," she said. "Me, I'm a B minus hairdresser, but business is booming because I can hear and help people."

In the Rochester study, clients seen by hairdressers were primarily middle class. About 25 percent were upper class and only 6 percent came from lower-income families. About 95 percent were female. Most were between the ages of 30 and 60.

Their problems ranged from troubles with their children to health to marital difficulties and depression, to sex, drugs and alcohol.

He said the study was an extension of other projects that "broke through the preciousness of mental health professionals." The first such study, in 1960, found that of those seeking help for emotional problems, only 18 percent went to psychologists and psychiatrists. The rest went to clergymen, general physicians and others.

"We don't have adequate mental health resources and shrinks aren't always sought out," said Cowen, who served on President Carter's mental health commission.

"Knowing, trusting and having access to a prospective helper are more important to many people than the helper's specific training or job label in making decisions about where to take one's personal trouble," the report noted.

From his study, Cowen said, it may be possible to develop consultation and training programs for such "informal care givers" as hairdressers, bartenders and cab drivers whose services are free and who often are known and trusted by regular customers.

"We do not know how effective given hairdressers' strategies are with given clients under given circumstances," Cowen said in the report. "Until such data are available, mental health professionals are well advised to approach care-giver training with humility, openness and a willingness to learn as well as to teach."

It is estimated that about one-half of the 1977 tobacco crop was cured in bulk barns and that more than half of the 1978 crop will be cured in bulk barns. Regardless of the type of barn being used, good management can reduce most of the curing problems, reduce fuel consumption and improve the quality of the finished product.

Reduced to the very simplest terms, curing is allowing desirable chemical and physical changes to occur during the early stages and then killing the leaf at the desired time by drying. Proper moisture control during the different stages of cure is really the key to successful curing. During the yellowing period, sufficient moisture must be maintained to keep the leaf alive, but it must be dried enough so that it can be killed quickly at the end of the yellowing period with just a little more drying.

Heat during the yellowing period increases the rate of chemical and physical changes in the leaf, but the major advantage of heat is to increase the water-holding capacity of the air, thereby increasing the drying rate. In conventional type barns, the heat also increases the upward movement of the air, which is necessary to get uniform by the amount of drier outside air that passed through the mass of tobacco. Therefore, moisture control, or the rate of drying throughout the curing period, is controlled by the temperature and the amount of ventilation that is provided.

There are several management practices during the production, harvesting and curing periods that can greatly influence the success of curing.

Harvesting uniform tobacco starts way back in the plant bed. Good quality uniform plants are needed to grow a uniform crop. Also, such things as controlling soil insects and avoiding fertilizer and fumigant injury can influence the uniformity of the crop and, therefore, the uniformity of the harvested leaves. Tobacco which has had too much nitrogen is difficult to cure. The leaves are usually thin, low in oils and slow to ripen, which often results in too much brown or "K" tobacco.

Mature, but not quite ripe, tobacco can be cured, but ripe leaves usually cure best. Also, ripe tobacco requires a shorter yellowing time. The result is a saving in curing fuel. Regardless of the exact degree of maturing, it is highly desirable to have all tobacco in a given barn as near the same degree of maturity as possible. A barn of tobacco that ranges from green to over-mature is difficult to cure. Some will be green or some will be over-yellowed and will end up with a brown color.

The most difficult tobacco to cure is that from the flower stalk position, especially if it is harvested during or immediately following a wet period. These lower leaves normally contain more moisture than up-stalk leaves, and if they are harvested with even more water on and in the leaves, it is difficult to get rid of enough moisture fast enough or prevent damage during the yellowing period. It is generally suggested that no tobacco and especially down-stalk leaves be harvested during a rainy period. In fact, the lower leaves should not be harvested early in the morning when they contain a lot of dew.

On the other extreme, tobacco harvested during extreme drought is difficult to cure because it may not have enough moisture to allow yellowing before it dries yellowing before it dries excessively. This is more often a problem to conventional type barns because in bulk barns the ventilators can be closed and the air recirculated so that the moisture is conserved. Under extreme drought conditions, harvesting should be done as early in the morning as possible when the leaves have maximum moisture content.

Since the rate of curing, and thus the rate of curing, is dependent upon the rate and nature of air movement through the mass of leaves, to get a uniform cure the barns must be loaded uniformly. Loading the barns uniformly is important in any type of barn, but more often a problem in bulk barns than in stick barns, especially in the bulk barns that use boxes rather than racks. In stick barns, the same quantity of tobacco should be on each stick, and the same number of sticks should be put on each tier.

In bulk barns using racks, be sure each rack contains the same quantity of tobacco and that the racks are uniformly loaded for one end to the other. Different degrees of tightness will result in different rates of drying, and that can adversely affect quality and extend the total curing time, thus increasing curing costs.

Getting uniformly loaded boxes may be even more difficult than in the racks; therefore, special care should be taken to be sure that all portions of the boxes are evenly packed corners, edges, bottom, middle and top. Some growers are finding that they can get a more uniform pack in boxes, and even in racks which are loaded at the barn rather than in the field. The shaking in transit may tend to excessively pack the tobacco at the bottom of the container if it is hauled in the loading position.

Syndicated ESP Show Bigger In Its Revival

By JAY SHARBUTT AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In 1959-61, John Newland hosted ABC's mind-moving "One Step Beyond." The famed half-hour series that dramatized tales of psychic phenomena. Now, at age 60, he's at it again.

"The Next Step Beyond" is the name of the revival. It's syndicated to 90 stations and starts its initial 24-week run this fall. And, as in the old days, Newland both hosts and directs it.

The tall, silver-haired ESP explorer was directing Episode No. 5, "Out of Body," last week at a large old house in the elegant Hancock Park section here when asked about his new "Step."

"It doesn't vary from the old at all," he promptly replied. He was tanned, fit-looking and clad for work in a plaid shirt and shorts. "It's precisely the same show, except I'm somewhat older."

"The format is the same, and again, these (stories) are fully documented, recorded evidences of psychic phenomena."

The series, backed by Procter & Gamble, is returning partly for "counter-programming" reasons, he said, meaning P&G feels the show can do well against game shows in TV's early evening hours.

Another reason: "The credibility factor for psychic phenomena, I'm sure, is much higher today than in 1960."

Among those sighted on "Step" in its first run were Jack Lord, Louise Fletcher, Charles Bronson and Warren Beatty. And host Newland even guest-starred in one memorable show.

It was "The Sacred Mushroom." He calls it "the most bizarre experience I ever had." It was an actual search for and experiment with a mushroom thought to affect one's powers of ESP.

Aired in 1961, well before America's flower children began gobbling LSD, which Newland says draws part of its chemicals from the mushroom he found. As far as he's concerned, the show was TV's first depiction of the effects of hallucinogens. And it wasn't make-believe.

The trip began with one deep into Mexico. He said he went there with a pharmacologist and a Stanford professor to film effects of "holy" mushrooms used by a local religious cult. A resident witch doctor led the way. In time, they arrived at a mountain peak.

"We filmed such crazy things that night, the professor ingesting massive tons of mushrooms and praying to the moon god," he recalled. "It was all so goofy-looking, almost as if we'd staged it."

"We didn't think we could show it as is. Nobody'd believe it."

So, when the explorers returned here, he said, he partook of a mushroom brew as a scientific test under laboratory conditions. A film crew was on and to record his reactions.

"I said, 'Fellows, what you're going to see is it. If this works, you'll see it on television. If it doesn't, it doesn't. And if I die'—Newland began laughing—"it's your fault."

Upon sipping the brew, he said, he was promptly whisked to what he calls "many spheres."

Detailed interviews were also conducted with current MERIT smokers.
