FUNERAL CEREMONY ... The coffin with the remains of late Pope Paul VI stands on a carpet in front of an alter outside the St. Peter's Basilica Saturday while the funeral service was under way. The dean of the cardinals, cardinal Carlo Confalonieri concelebrates the service. (APLaserphoto)

Pope Paul VI Passes The 'Door Of Death'

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope Paul VI, mourned by the mightiest congregation in Christian history, passed through the "door of death" to his final rest among the saints of the Church of Rome Saturday. A majestically simple requiem mass was concelebrated by 104 cardinals — one of whom most likely will succeed him.

Glorious sun bathed St. Peter's Square at the hour of vespers as a crowd of 100,000 pilgrims — despite its size less than half the number expected — joined millions around the world watching the mass on live television.

"Eternal rest grant him, O Lord," chanted five princes of the church and the pope's few remaining relatives as the pope's body was placed in a tomb in the dark, damp grottoes some 60 yards from tomb of Peter, the fisherman from Galilee whom Catholics believe was the first pope.

The personally-chosen resting place of the man who led the world's 700 million Roman Catholics for 15 years was a grave 8 feet, 10 inches long, 6 feet, 2 inches wide and 4 feet, 7 inches deep.

The tombstone, a chest-nutcolored slab of travertine stone from a quarry near Tivoli, bore the inscription "Paulus pp VI" (Paul Pope VI) and the Greek letters "XP," the monogram for "Christ."

In keeping with the pope's last wishes for a "simple funeral," his stark, cypress coffin was adorned only with a large open Bible.

The Bible was opened to the passage of the Gospel of St. John where Jesus asks Peter three times, "Dost thou love me?" Each time, Jesus exhorts Peter, "Feed my sheep."

The pope's body, which had been viewed by nearly 500,000 during two days of lying in state in St. Peter's basilica, was borne by 12 pall-bearers and placed on a rich, oriental tapestry before an altar at the top of the steps leading to St. Peter's.

Two altar boys preceded the coffin as the Sistine Chapel choir intoned the Gregorian chant "Requiem Aeternam" ("Eternal Rest") and an army of 7,000 police spread through the square to guard a host of world leaders sitting in special pews near the altar.

First Lady Rosalynn Carter, Sen. Edward Kennedy and New York Gov. Hugh Carey led the U.S. delegation at the funeral. During communion, Kennedy and Carey, both Roman Catholics, stepped forward to receive the wafers and wine. Mrs. Carter, a Baptist, remained seated and did not take communion.

The 104 cardinals taking part in the funeral followed the altar boys in procession two-by-two from inside the basilica and knelt in simple homage at the large altar. The Sistine Chapel choir intoned the chant, "May the angels lead you into paradise."

Cardinal Carlo Confalonieri, the dean of the college of cardinals, was the last. He sprinkled holy water on the altar and took the censer to send clouds of incense wafting above the cobblestones of which Pope Paul once said, "I have made of this square an altar."

The requiem lasted about two hours and the sun was just setting over the Alban Hills as the cardinals and 150 priests who had distributed communion filed back into the largest church in Christendom, beneath the sculpted portals depicting Christ handing the keys of the church to Peter.

The skies were a deep blue, with the sun only a light shading of pink on the horizon as the giant doors of St. Peter's were closed and the pallbearers passed down the massive church's center aisle, past Michelangelo's marble statue of the Pieta and on to the confessional altar.

Within 10 minutes after the requiem had finished, the hawkers who normally ply their trade but who had been chased away by police during the pope's lying in state, had returned to the square.

Inside the basilica, at the altar, the coffin, the pallbearers, five cardinals, canons of the church and Paul's closest relatives — his elder brother Ludovico Montini, 81, his wife and their children and nephews and nieces of the pontiff — turned to the left and passed through the "Door of Death" to reach the grottoes beneath the main altar.

The pope's cypress coffin was placed inside an 880-pound lead casket and that inside another oaken coffin.

Both the lead and oak caskets contained bronze plaques with the Latin inscription:

"Body of Paul VI, Supreme Pontiff. He lived 80 years, 10 months and 10 days and headed the universal church for 15 years, one month and 16 days. He died the 6th day of the month of August, 1978 A.D."

Embossed above the inscription was a cross with a skull and crossbones at its foot. Below that was Paul's coat-ofarms — a shield with six stylized mountains and three lilies.

Officials said workmen would labor throughout the night to install the giant 660-pound marble slab over the tomb to have it ready for public viewing Sunday morning.

Among the 105 dignitaries who had attended the Requiem were U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, two presidents, two first ladies, two princes, nine vice presidents, six prime ministers, five vice prime ministers and 20 foreign ministers.

Princeton Scientists Achieve Nuclear Fusion Breakthrough

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Princeton University scientists achieved a major breakthrough in nuclear fusion that could lead to a cheap, abundant and safe power source in the next century, a top Energy Department official said Saturday.

The experiment uses the same power that is in the sun and the hydrogen bomb and, if perfected, could be used to create energy out of sea water.

The Princeton scientists used a small test reactor to produce sun-like temperatures for a moment inside a kind of magnetic "bottle."

Fusion — the nuclear reaction that powers the sun — is the joining of two atomic particles at high temperatures. It has been duplicated in an uncontrolled form in the hydrogen bomb, but harnessing it for power production has proven more elusive.

"For the first time in history, the actual conditions of fusion have been produced in a fusion reactor in scale model," said Stephen Dean, director of the department's magnetic confinement systems division.

"Experiments at Princeton University which began three weeks ago and are now in progress are the most significant development in the 27 years of the fusion program."

"It has laid to rest the question of whether fusion is feasible from a scientific point of view — there is now a scientific basis for embarking on engineering development" of fusion reactors, he said.

Scientists produced fusion in the hydrogen bomb. But it has proven far more difficult to design a reactor capable of containing the sun-like temperatures of a fusion reaction and to produce a sustained reaction that gives off more energy than is needed to trigger it.

Current nuclear reactors use fission, or the spliting of atomic particles. Those plants produce high amounts of radioactive wastes which need to be stored to protect human health. Their fuel could be used to produce new atomic bombs. In addition, the plants depend on a limited supply of uranium.

"The advantage (of fusion) for the world is that the fuel for the fusion reactor is universally available from sea water — there will be no fuel crisis because of the cost or availability of depletable fuels such as oil and natural gas," Dean said.

The reactors use deuterium and tritium, which can be derived from the hydrogen in sea water, he added.

In addition, the fusion reactor produces "one millionth" of the radioactive waste of a fission reactor. "It is considered acceptable from an environmental point of view," he said, adding only the walls and the structure of the facility become radioactive, but there is no waste product like spent fuel.

The Princeton experiment involved a small reactor called the Torus Tokamac, a donut-shaped device using a magnetic field to bottle up the blazing gas produced by the fusion reaction and keep it from touching metal walls it would otherwise melt.

"The sun uses gravity to keep its fusion reactions in control, but we use magnetic fields," he said.

A beam of hydrogen atoms was shot through the core of the reactor, producing temperatures of 60 million degrees centigrade for one-tenth of a second, Dean said.

Last fall, scientists produced temperatures of 25 million degrees centigrade. A temperature of 44 million degrees is needed to produce a self-sustaining fusion process, he said.

Dean said formal announcement of the breakthrough was planned for later this week.

"We now know how to set the size of the reactor and how to calculate and scale it up in size," he said, adding working reactors could be developed in 10 to 15 years and "it would probably be 30 years" before fusion reactors are used to produce electricty.

Dean said the temperature experiment was one of two major breakthroughs expected in the fusion reactor field. The second, expected next year, will be to sustain the temperature for longer periods.

No Noah's Ark

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — A Biblical studies professor claims there is no evidence the remains of Noah's ark are atop Mount Ararat in Turkey.

Dr. Lloyd R. Bailey, a professor at the Duke University Divinity School in Durham, said in a telephone interview he can find "no reliable scientific evidence that Noah's ark has survived anywhere."

Bailey has authored "Where is Noah's Ark?" a work he said he wrote in response to a recent television movie and several other books presenting evidence the ark's remains are locked in ice atop Mount Ararat.

He said he saw the movie and set out to write "a 30-page article examining the sweeping claims, but by the time I'd finished, it had grown to 140 pages."

He suggests several alternative theories on what the structure seen on the mountain is. He said it could be a monastery, a shrine, a hermit's hut, a replica of the ark built by monk's to attract pilgrims, or wood, such as 10-foot crosses brought by pilgrims to the spot.

There are several medieval accounts of pilgrims bringing crosses up the mountains, as well as accounts of monasteries there, said Bailey. In fact, he said, there are two other ruined monasteries elsewhere on Ararat.

Bailey concludes there is no valid photographic, literary, scientific or witnessed evidence the remains of the ark are on the mountain. He said he would welcome new evidence if a reputable expedition were launched and even if the "structure" proves to be an 8th century monastery "it would be a valuable archaelogical find."

Bailey, who said he has not been to the site himself, said he takes no position on the question of whether the ark ever existed or the flood ever occurred. To do so, he said, would "cloud the issue" and involve him in matters of religion he preferred to stay out of.

Bailey said claims of the ark's existence on the mountain rest on four types of evidence, all of which he said are questionable or demonstratably false

The first, he said, is ancient literature recounting sightings of the ark. The accounts vary greatly, mentioning as many as eight different mountains purported to be the one where the ark came to rest, he said. In addition, he said, the Biblical account of the flood mentions "the mountains of Ararat" rather than Mount Ararate, which acquired the name in the 11th century.

Japan, China Sign Treaty

TOKYO (UPI) — Japan and China Saturday signed a nonaggression treaty favored by President Carter but bitterly opposed by the Soviet Union.

Diplomats in Tokyo said the treaty of "peace and friendship," signed in Peking and pledging "durable relations," could speed up the normalization of ties between the United States and China.

The treaty further chilled Peking's relations with the Soviet Union, and Japan's Foreign Minister Sunao Sunodo said in Peking that China expressed a willingness to scuttle its 30-year military pact with the Soviet Union. Peking can renounced that 1950 pact in April, 1979.

The Kremlin has bitterly opposed the treaty and on Friday, the Soviet Union charged Peking with trying to start a new war and warned that "the Soviet Union and its friends have enough strength and means to protect its interests."

But the Sino-Japanese treaty, signed in the Great Hall of the People, had the approval of the United States. The State Department said Thursday it will contribute to "stability and security" in the Far East.

Japanese news media said the treaty was encouraged by President Carter at a meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda in Washington earlier this year.

Foreign Minister Sonoda of Japan and Huang Hua of China signed the red bound copies of the teaty in a ceremony attended by by Chinese Premier Hua Kuo-feng and Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping — an indication of the importance Peking attached to the pact.

Immediately after the signing, Hua told Sonoda that Vice Premier Teng will come to Tokyo this year to exchange ratification papers on the treaty. Teng will be the highest Chinese official to visit Japan in the six years since Tokyo-Peking diplomatic relations were established.

The biggest Soviet objection to the treaty lay in a clause saying Japan and China were "opposed to efforts by any other country or group of countries to establish ...hegemony" in Asia. Hegemony is China's diplomatic word for Russian imperialism.

Bottle-Borne Note Is Said Authentic

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — The director of the Charlotte Mint Museum says he is satisfied with authenticity of a century-old Massachusetts sailor's note found sealed in a small bottle by a surprised teenager on a South Carolina beach last week.

"There is no doubt in my mind that this is authentic," Milton Bloch said Friday.

"The glass, the paper, the writing are compatible in age. There is nothing here commending itself to a hoaxer."

The bottle, which consisted of two halves seamed together and a wax-sealed neck, was discovered at Crescent Beach, S.C., Aug. 7 by Deeb Fadel, 15.

It contained a shark's tooth and a brittle yellow piece of newsprint apparently torn from a British newspapers. The strip contained a note written in graceful script on the margin:

"To the finder. My name is Robert White. I write this from abaord the Ann Alexander out of New Bedford. We killed our first whale yesterday and I cast this into the sea for good luck. Please post a letter to me telling the whereabouts you found this. Send to Robert White, 310 Salisbury Road, New Bedford, Mass. 17 Sept. 1877.

After finding the bottle, Fadel called a local newspaper, which dampened his enthusiasm some by telling him that it has received several prank calls and hoaxes in similar cases.

When he returned to Charlotte Wednesday, he contacted the museum.

"They want to display it," he said. "I'll let 'em.

"I have already written a letter to 310 Salisbury Street, New Bedford. We're writing the whaling museum there, too."

New Bedford police said 310 Salisbury Street no longer exists. The highest number is now 130.

"I am satisfied with the authenticity," Bloch reiterated.

"Certainly there are further checks such as ship registries of the period. It is certainly a historical curiosity."

Mrs. Fadel said there has been much speculation as to why the bottle was not discovered earlier.

"We were told that sharks and whales have been known to swallow foreign objects found long after they had died and decomposed," she said. "It's a real adventure and treasure for Deeb."

Friday Disaster Went Well

A major disaster drill was staged Friday afternoon at Burroughs Welcome Co. just North of Greenville, with county rescue squads, Pitt Memorial Hospital, the Walter B. Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center and other emergency organizations taking part.

The plant's fire alarm was sounded shortly before 2 p.m. and the building was cleared and the company's fire bregade arrived within three minutes. Shortly thereafter, the Staton House fire department was called, then the nearest rescue squad — Greenville — was summoned. Ultimately, all rescue units in the county, as well as the North Carolina Highway Patrol and Pitt County Sheriff's deputies were on hand to help treat the "injured" Pitt Technical Institute nursing students, handle traffic and establish a command post at the disaster site.

Pitt County Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner and hospital officials said yesterday's drill went well, with all victims treated and transported to the hospital and the ARC in less than 90 minutes.

Burroughs Wellcome Co. officials said the firm was more than happy to take part in the Friday disaster. They noted that a new disaster plan has recently been put into effect at Burroughs Wellcome and that the Friday drill proved it effective.

Joyner, who noted that medical facilities such as the hospital and the ARC are required to have two disaster drills each year, said such drills also provide rescue squads and other emergency service organizations with training and experience to cope with a real emergency situation.

Hopes Are High For Epidemic

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — It is only fitting that men are trying to kill off mosquitoes, one of the world's worst carriers of disease, by setting off vast epidemics of mosquito diseases.

The complex search for germs, worms or fungus that would wreck mosquito health — without bothering anything else — centers here at the Gulf Coast Mosquito Research Laboratory.

"For the next five years we will be concentrating on the salt marshes that you find along the coast from New York to the Mexican border," said Director Harold Chapman.

"That means we study types of salt marsh mosquitoes to see what specific diseases they have and decide which ones we can grow under laboratory conditions and then take back out and spread around."

Disease germs or microscopic nematodes would be scattered over marshes by airplanes — an invisible veil to create roaring epidemics to kill billions of mosquitoes without the nasty pollution or environmental damage left by chemical insecticides.

If germ-worm warfare actually works, it couldn't happen to a better species.

Who would mourn if Chapman and friends succeed in making mosquitoes extinct? Not many. Except for serving as food for some birds and bats and dragonflies, about the only role mosquitoes have played in nature's scheme of things was to limit the human population by spreading disease.

"The two main species that breed in the salt marshes are some of the nastiest critters there are," said Chapman. "At least one of them is incriminated as vectoring sleeping sickness in the East."

He heads a six-scientist laboratory with a $230,000 annual budget. It is the only federal facility in the nation dedicated to killing mosquitoes by helping its natural biological enemies.

Thus far, everything is at the experimental stage — and all the experiments have involved fresh water mosquitoes. Biological warriors developed for fresh water can't stand salt.

Chapman's crews have run field tests with their natural mosquito killers in fresh water areas of Louisiana, California, Florida, Thailand, Tiawan and El Salvador.

The biggest success thus far was in El Salvador, where nematodes sown over an isolated 100-acre lake reduced the malaria-carrying mosquito population 94 per cent in seven weeks.

Heavy Damage From Wreck

More than $2,650 damage resulted from a 10:41 a.m. collision Saturday on Charles Street, 800 feet North of the Elm Street intersection.

Police reported a car driven by Mattie Mercer Tucker of 2104 Southview Dr. collided with a parked car owned by Dorothy Greene Daniels of Route 3, Greenville, then collided with a house at 2208 Charles St.

Officers, who charged Mrs. Tucker with failing to reduce her speed enough to avoid an accident, estimated damage to her car at $1,250 and set damage to the Daniels car at $1,400.

No estimates of damage to the house were available, although investigators reported a column at the front of the dwelling, a window, and the lawn were damaged.

Mrs. Tucker was taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital for treatment of injuries received in the mishap and later released.

New Bridge To Close Gap In Blue Ridge

MOUNTAIN HIGHWAY ... This montage shows the 1,243-foot-long bridge, the last remaining gap in the Blue Ridge Parkway, to be built at Grandfather Mountain. It's European style, designed not to disturb the mountain's senic beauty, is the first of it's kind in the United States. (AP Laserphoto)

LINVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The owner of Grandfather Mountain says he is pleased that plans for a bridge closing the last gap in the Blue Ridge Parkway call for preservation of the mountain and the use of colored concrete so the bridge will blend in with the environment.

But Hugh Morton says he doesn't understand why the bridge won't be completed before 1985. Seven years to build a bridge is a unreasonable time, he said.

"It sounds like a very imaginative and resourceful way to do it — but I don't understand why it will take seven years," Morton said.

The bridge will be built using a new technique perfected in Europe. Builders will erect the 1,243-foot bridge over a boulder-strewn slope of the mountain to complete the parkway.

The bridge, to be built with techniques designed not to disturb the mountain's scenic beauty, will be the first of its kind in this country.

Plans for the parkway bridge, which will curve along the contours of the mountain, were revealed Thursday when the Federal Highway Administration advertised for construction bids to be opened Sept. 14.

The bridge will be built of precast concrete sections. It will rest on seven piers, ranging up to 60 feet in height. The 50-ton roadbed sections will be lifted into place by a crane sitting on the end of the bridge which will move forward gradually until the gap is closed.

The piers also will be built from the deck of the bridge, also using precast sections. In addition, temporary supports will be erected midway between each pier. As construction proceeds from pier to pier, the temporary supports will be removed and the ground restored to its original condition.

Another environmental feature will be the use of colored concrete to blend the bridge with the dark gray rock of the mountain.

While a completion date of 1985 has been scheduled, construction of the bridge is expected to be completed by 1983. But an adjoining 1.4-mile section of the parkway, completing the 470-mile route, will not be opened until 1985. However, a Federal Highway Administration spokesman said the 1.4 mile section, which will require six small bridges, has not yet been funded.

FBI Is 'Curious' About Death

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The FBI says it is "curious" about the death last month of a cigarette wholesaler who was the object of state and federal investigations. But that agency says it has no plans to have his body exhumed for an autopsy, even though the medical examiners of North Carolina and Virginia say one would have been performed if they had known about the investigations at the time of death.

The death of Paul Vinson Jr. of Goldsboro, owner of Southern Wholesale Co., the largest wholesale distributor of cigarettes in North Carolina, has been a setback to investigations into cigarette smuggling operations, investigative sources have said.

No autopsy was performed on Vinson, 41, after he was stricken while riding a train and pronounced dead on arrival at a Fredericksburg, Va., hospital July 21.

Herbert Monahan, FBI special agent in charge for North Carolina said that agency was curious about Vinson's death but had no plans to seek a court order to have the body exhumed.

Death was officially attributed to a cerebral hemorrhage, or stroke. But law enforcement agents here, including the FBI, said Friday they understand Vinson had suffered a heart attack.

State Medical Examiner Dr. Page Hudson said Thursday he contacted Virginia medical authorities to see if an autopsy has been performed after he learned of the investigations involving Vinson.

Hudson said Virginia's medical examiner, Dr. David Wiecking, said he wished he had known of the information available about Vinson at the time of his death. And Wiecking said nobody in Fredericksburg knew Vinson was of any interest to law enforcement.

The medical examiner in Fredericksburg who certified Vinson's death said he did so without an autopsy because it appeared to be a natural death.

The name of Vinson's company surfaced in several recent investigations into cigarette smuggling from North Carolina to states where cigarettes are more highly taxed. No charges had been filed.

Monahan said the company had been under investigation in the FBI's probe into organized crime links to cigarette smuggling. Southern Wholesale records had been subpeonaed by the FBI.

Al Felton, a state alcohol investigator assigned to the cigarette case, said Friday that Vinson's death had been regarded as suspicious and "convenient" by some out-of-state agents looking into cigarette smuggling.

But Jim Whittington, FBI supervisory special agent in Charlotte, said, "we have no reason to believe he died of anything other than natural causes.

"An autopsy would certainly have resolved it," he added however.

Residents Are Bitter Over Government Report

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

MADISONVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Rural residents whose land was taken for a proposed reservoir behind Tellico Dam reacted bitterly to a government report suggesting that completing the project without a lake may offer as many benefits.

The 113-page report by the Interior Department and the Tennessee Valley Authority was released Thursday, two months after the Supreme Court ruled that the population of a three-inch minnow was more important than was the lake under the Endangered Species Act.

Even though $109 million already has been spent on the project, the report concluded that a "dry dam," to be used only in case of severe flooding, might provide as much benefit as a permanent lake if strictly non-economic factors are considered.

TVA bought or condemned 38,000 acres of land, much of it prime farmland, when the project was begun 12 years ago. At that time, officials envisioned a 14,000 acre lake with a model community and recreation and industrial development along its shores.

"The government took our land under false pretenses," Taylor Howard of Madisonville said at a meeting with TVA and Interior officials Friday.

The report indicated that at least another $20 million would have to be spent on the project with either the lake or river options. But it would cost another $33 million to finish the project as a flood-control "dry dam" because new spillways would have to be added to meet government safety standards.

George Kimmons, TVA's chief engineer, said the Tellico Dam was intended to divert half of the water from the Little Tennessee River through neighboring Ft. Loudoun Dam on the larger Tennessee River.

If Tellico has to handle all of the water from the Little Tennessee, it doesn't come close to meeting the safety standards, which show it might overflow under a flood about twice as large as any on record.

"It would take what I call Noah's flood-plus-one but that was the standard adopted after the Teton Dam collapse," Kimmons said. "Theoretically with a canal connecting Tellico and Ft. Loudoun, we should never have to use the spillways."

Kimmons said that the canal connecting the two rivers cannot be opened under the dry dam concept without draining the lake behind Ft. Loudoun Dam.

Monroe County Attorney Robert Pennington questioned TVA's Tellico coordinator, Jane Parker, about why local officials were not asked to help prepare the TVA-Interior study.

Pennington read a July 7 letter from TVA Chairman S. David Freeman saying that he would be contacted by Ms. Parker for his advice on what should go into the report.

Ms. Parker said the report was merely a draft and citizens would have time to comment on it before the final report is submitted. However, Pennington said the draft is what Congress will be using when it acts on amendments to the Endangered Species Act and appropriations for the project.

SBI Looking For Tanker

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Officials are looking for a big darkcolored tanker truck an Angierarea woman said she saw Aug. 1 in front of her house on N.C. 210. The area she lives in is one of several where cancer-causing polychlorinated biphenyls have been dumped recently in a string of what state officials believe may have been intentional chemical spills.

Agents from the State Bureau of Investigation are also hoping to find two men who were following the truck in a station wagon in an effort to flag the driver down to tell him he was losing his cargo. The driver refused to stop so the two gave up trying to stop him.

Janie Pleasant who lives near Angier, said she woke up about 1 a.m. the morning of Aug. 1 and saw a dark-coled tanker truck being followed by a station wagon with the horn blowing.

Mrs. Pleasant said the truck almost came to a stop in front of her house and one of the men got out of the car. She said the truck pulled away and the man from the car told his companion to let the truck driver go if he wouldn't stop to be told material was coming out of the tank.

The SBI, which has seven agents working fulltime on the investigation of the chemical dumping, appealed for the two men described by Mrs. Pleasant to contact the SBI for interviews.

The presence of PCBs, used for insulation on electrical transformers and other equipment, has been confirmed in spills along about 115 miles of highway in the state.

The latest confirmation of PCBs is from highways in Granville, Wake, Nash and Franklin counties. One is along N.C. 96 from Oxford to the Virginia line at Virgilina and back down U.S. 49, a total of about 23 miles. The other begins on State Route 2368 near Zebulon, stopping on the outskirts of the town and picking up east of Zebulon on N.C. 97 and continuing along State Route 1137, N.C. 231, U.S. 64 and N.C. 98 for about 20 miles.

State health officials say the substance should not cause any ill effects unless it is taken internally, but they note that PCBs, which have been shown to cause cancer in mice, do not break down and are dangerous because they build up in the food chain, collecting in the fatty tissue of humans.

Officials have been monitoring creeks, wells and cattle from the areas where the spills were reported.

Proposition 13

By BOB EGELKO
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The California Supreme Court, beginning deliberations on the fate of Proposition 13 despite anonymous threats against its members, was urged to let the voters control their government.

The seven justices, four of whom are up for re-election in November, heard three hours of argument Friday on three lawsuits challenging the validity of the amendment to the state constitution that requires a $7 billion reduction in property taxes.

The hearing began dramatically. Before a packed courtroom, Chief Justice Rose Bird disclosed that justices had received threats related to Proposition 13, which was approved overwhelmingly in a June referendum.

"The justices of this court have been threatened with recall, with defeat at the polls, and even with an anonymous threat of physical violence against themselves and their families if they fail to vote in a particular way," Miss Bird said.

Later in the day, state Police Chief William Skelton said Miss Bird had received an unsigned letter July 5 threatening to bomb all the justices and also harm their families if they overturned Proposition 13, also known as the Jarvis amendment after its prime sponsor, tax crusader Howard Jarvis.

Miss Bird said the court would not be influenced by the threats.

"Our oath does not ask us to make popular decisions, to act as barometers of public opinion or to serve as interpreters of the Gallup Poll," she said. "Rather, the oath demands that we have the courage to follow the law and obey our conscience."

Proposition 13 is being challenged by several school districts and counties and by the city of San Francisco, all of which suffered reductions in property tax revenues after its passage. The suits are supported by several public employee groups.

State Attorney General Evelle Younger, defending the legality of the amendment, said that declaring it unconstitutional would be "a statement by this court that people have lost control of their government."

Younger, the Republican candidate for governor, called the lawsuits "an attack on the democratic process itself," but agreed that the court could overturn voter-approved initiatives.

William Norris, representing 29 school districts and associations challenging the initiative, said his clients do not oppose property tax relief, but believe that Proposition 13 contains other sweeping provisions that violate the state constitution.

Norris said the measure violated the concept of home rule by taking away from local governments the power to determine tax rates and making them "totally dependent on the state" for support.

School Equalization Plan Is Proposed

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — An Equalization Plan has been proposed by the Governor's Commission on Public School Finance that would channel millions of dollars of state money into the poorer school districts.

This plan will be sent to Gov. Jim Hunt next week and educators hope the 1979 General Assembly will consider the proposal.

Its objective is "to make education more equally accessible to all children regardless of where they live or the economic conditions of their parents or community," said a commission report released Friday.

The commission said the most apparent differences among school districts were in course offerings in cultural arts, foreign languages and certain elementary and exceptional education courses.

The state puts up 67 per cent of school costs, causing inequalities in North Carolina generally to be less than what they are in most other states where schools are funded primarily through local taxes.

But the commission report said the existing inequities needed to be remedied.

It noted that while the small rural school district of Maxton in Robeson County was contributing $134.07 per pupil in 197677, the Chapel Hill-Carrboro school district was contributing $522.04 per pupil.

Under the proposal, there would be a two-tier system of funding. All 145 school districts — rich and poor alike — would continue to get a state Basic Aid Fund at existing levels. But the state would provide additional money to poor districts through the Equalization Aid Fund.

That commission also recommended adoption of a more flexible plan of state school financing to provide more state money to districts with greater special needs.

Distributing the Basic Aid Fund to a school district in one lump instead of 36 categories and determining for the first time whether a county is contributing its "fair share" of tax money to local schools were also recommendations of the commission.

The commission has discussed a $40 million annual Equalization Aid Fund, but educators say privately that the legislature probably would consider a smaller amount.

No one stopped except a photographer, who took his picture and hired a cab for the veteran. (AP Laserphoto)

Poison-Dumping Is Appalling

A dangerous chemical — polychlorinated biphenyl. (PCB) — has been dumped along rural roads in North Carolina.

The SBI and other agencies are investigating and Howard N. Lee, secretary of natural resources and community development, said a $2,500 reward has been offered for information.

Some 70 miles of spills containing the chemical have been found in a number of counties including Nash and Wilson.

Investigators now believe the chemical is being hauled in from other states and dumped along roads to avoid the cost of disposing of it properly. The chemical is used in the repair and manufacture of electrical transformers.

It is, of course, against the law to dump the chemical with fines up to $5,000 per violation and up to six months in prison. Clean up costs can also be assessed against the violators.

It is appalling that anyone would dump a dangerous chemical along a public highway to save a little money. All that such people can understand, however, is the full force of the law.

North Carolina, and hopefully federal authorities if the chemical came across state lines, should spare no effort to find the guilty parties. Upon conviction the full penalties allowed by the law should be assessed.

In Effect, Subsidizing Of The Sword

The Associated Press reported last week that the World Council of Churches has made an $85,000 grant to a guerrilla group which is fighting in Rhodesia.

WCC officials say the money is from funds designated for an anti-racism program and would be used only for humanitarian purposes.

Even so the council is putting itself in a precarious position that could undercut its support throughout the Christian world.

It is in effect subsidizing the sword as the way to settle differences, and for a group which embraces Christian principles, that is a shame.

Economic Outlook Dims

By ALVIN TAYLOR

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Has North Carolina crossed the peak in recovering from the recession?

State economists think so, and are predicting that the economy will slide into a slump for the next year or so — but not one of proportions near those of 1974-75.

It does mean, however, some trying times ahead as inflation continues to rampage while "there will be a large number of additonal people out of work during most of next year."

What is happening? "The main reason that growth is slowing hinges around the current inflation situation and the financial environment. Price increases have been severe and the response of monetary policy makers (increased interest rates for example) is affecting the economy.

"Housing and investment are already starting to dampen", the economists have informed Gov. Jim Hunt and his cabinet.

There are, the experts conclude, "pervasive signals that we have passed the peak in growth".

The key to the economy is whether consumers continue to buy. Sales are slowing already. Conditions will remain gloomy until inflation slows and interest rates come down.

"At that point, we can expect a resumption of moderate growth in late 1979 and 1980," the report suggests.

What this means to state government can be simply put: ". . . there will be a substantial reduction in the growth rate of revenues, especially from corporate income taxes and sales and use taxes."

Close Call

Who says a single vote doesn't count? Second primary balloting for a county commission seat in Union County between V.T. Helms and Lex Funderburk ended in a deadlock with each candidate getting 1,999 votes.

BILL NOBLITT

Jerry Elliott, director of information for the Association of County Commissioners and a veteran political reporter and observer in this state, says this is the first tie he has ever heard of.

Recounts of recounts led up to the deadlock. Funderburk was ahead by seven votes; a recount put Helms ahead by one; but another ballot was in question. The disputed ballot went to Funderburk.

The County Democratic Executive Committee had to break the tie, and gave the nod to Helms.

Land Policy

Another outing for a statewide land use and management policy paralleling the one in place in 20 Coastal counties is planned in the 1979 General Assembly.

Howard Lee, secretary of Natural Resources and Community Development, said a staff committee in his agency is now at work drafting a plan to be presented to the General Assembly.

The Coastal Plan was adopted in 1974 after years of study and debate. It calls for development plans to show where specific kinds of growth can take place, and establishes protection for environmentally important or fragile areas in which growth is restricted or prohibited.

A similar plan for statewide application was written along with that for the Coast but has been regularly delayed by legislators.

Sunday Morning Notes

The press corps which covers ECU home football games is practically drooling this year.

Its members will be housed in a spacious, new press box, as good as any in the south

What really has the sports writers excited, however, is the elevator which was installed as a part of the stadium expansion and improvement. The elevator will whisk the writers, photographers and broadcast people right up to the proper level of the press box.

Well the ECU sports department held a Media Day the other day for all the press people.

Enroute to the stadium they were told they would get a "free ride" up the elevator.

Free ride? the newsmen asked.

"Oh sure," a spokesman insisted. They would charge the media people a nickle a ride once the games started.

Everyone chuckled at that. There were groans at the stadium, however. Upon arrival it was determined that the new elevator wasn't working.

The "free ride" turned out to be the age old hike up the stadium steps to the new press box.

There was a crush of national and regional press representatives covering the visit, and in limited space.

At one point the news people were huddled together elbow-to-elbow on the warm day.

Spots close to the president are prized by the news photographers, and naturally the national press gets prority.

For Tommy, though, there was a break. As the president was leaving his plane, he waved to some people standing along a chain link fence at the airport.

Carter made a sudden change from the plans and strolled over to the fence to shake hands with some of the crowd.

By luck Tommy had stationed himself at the fence and the president was only a few feet from him. There was adequate time for a number of close-ups.

Other Editors Say Get No Answers

(Washington Daily News)

In our America today there seems to be a lot of questions for which no good solid answers are forthcoming.

Recently in the city of Durham, N.C. a law enforcement officer was brought into court charged with beating a prisoner with a nightstick. Too often we see a racial issue at every corner, and we feel racial bias with every criminal act whether it be truly justified or not.

In this case in Durham in Superior court there where nine white jurors and three black jurors. The charge against the officer among the jurors was dropped to a charge of simple assault, but that jury divided on this case nine to three — the nine white jurors favoring acquittal and the three black jurors wanting to convict.

One of the lawyers involved had been supposedly hired by black people to help prosecute. He allegedly observed that "had there been six whites and six blacks, the division would have been six to six." And we fully believe what he said.

One of the truly great tragedies upon us today is that we cannot look at even small acts with absolute detachment and with absolute absence of racial bias.

United States Senator Edward Brooke, Republican of Massacusetts, (a black), openly admitted to lying under oath, but he will not be prosecuted in court. Would old Joe Blow, be he black or white, be prosecuted for exactly the same lying?

We see two youngsters in a scrap and because on is black and one is white, too many adults see the difference as a racial one and not truly one merely involving two little boys.

We cannot find true justice in our courts in this great land when verdicts are determined by the color of the skins of the jurors.

We look at Joan Little, the Wilmington "10", and we wonder on which side of the scale, if either, the wings of justice have been tilted.

If the verdicts are determined, not by right and wrong but by where the trial is held or by geography in any sense, have we not relegated pute justice to a secondary position?

We need to make all-out fights in behalf of parallel courses for right and justice on the one hand or for wrong and injustice on the other hand. We need to do some separations, not for racial reasons, but for the sake of all humanity.

In fact, we should have no racial reasons and it should be inhuman to try to find any such reasons.

We cannot sweep some matters under any rug and we should not try. And in a world looking always for better answers, some questions just do not seem to bring on any answers whatsoever. Why?

Desert Can Be Deadly

By PATRICK ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Every spring police and health officials here issue warnings — based on common sense — on how to survive in the desert and its intense heat. And every summer people die, often because they didn't follow the warnings.

"People do just exactly what they want to do," said Dick Mayne, the chief deputy Clark County coroner. "It's a lemming syndrome. That's what we get around here. People want to do their own thing and they discard all elements of caution."

THE INSIDE REPORT

Limit To The Tax Revolt

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

RICHLAND, Mich. — While the tax revolt soars out of control and President Carter's standing keeps dropping in this middle-class Midwestern community, a veteran Republican congressman is threatened with a battle for survival.

Our interviews in Precinct No. 1 of Richland Township in southern Michigan west of Kalamazoo, conducted with help from Pat Caddell's Cambridge Survey Research, point up Republican difficulty in making major congressional gains. If six-term Rep. Garry Brown has trouble retaining his seat here, Republican chances for unseating many Democratic incumbents are bleak indeed.

These interviews suggest that Brown faces another tight race against Democratic challenger Howard Wolpe, barely edged out by Brown in 1974. The unmistakable conclusions: first, the Carter political fiasco is not hurting Wolpe; second, Brown is not helped by the tax revolt. Questioning 69 registered and probable voters in Precinct No. 1, which was selected by Caddell as a barometer of the 3rd Congressional District, shows Mr. Carter losing a net nine voters to Michigan favorite son Gerald Ford since the 1976 election. These voters now divide 47 for Ford, 18 for Carter, 4 undecided. The president's job rating is 34 percent.

Simultaneously, middle-income voters here (mean salary: $17,100), mainly white-collar and skilled crafts, have tax-cut fever. They favor both President Carter's tax reduction and the deeper Republican Kemp-Roth cut, both by more than 2-to-1.

More significantly, they divide 4-to-1 for the Tisch amendment, a proposed sharp cutback in state property taxes on the November ballot roughly similar to California's Proposition 13 and similarly opposed by leaders of both parties. Although many voters expressed hesitancy because of reductions in government services, three out of four Tisch supporters conceded that such services probably would be cut back.

With inflation overwhelmingly picked as the nation's most important problem, these voters are desperate for relief. "Too much money is wasted in the government," a 20-year-old community relations worker told us. The 39-year-old wife of a small businessman proclaimed the tax revolt's slogan: "Things are getting out of hand."

The anti-Carter, anti-tax mood would seem ideal for 54year-old conservative Republican Brown (a sponsor of Kemp-Roth) against 38-year-old liberal Democrat Wolpe (until recently a field representative for Sen. Don Riegle). Yet our interviews show that the liberal National Committee for an Effective Congress (NCEC) is realistic in putting Brown pn its conservative hit list. Brown carried Precinct No. 1 with 50.9 percent in 1976, while winning the district with 51 percent. Our 69 interviews (comprising about one-tenth of the precinct's 1976 voters) split 33-to-29 for Brown with 7 undecided — much too close to call. What's more, these interviews tend to confirm the NCEC strategy placing personality over taxes. As to which candidate is "too political," Brown leads Wolpe 5-to-1; Wolpe is viewed by a substantial majority as closer to them and a warmer, more decent person. A 66-year-old retired salesman who voted for Mr. Carter last time would not now because "Carter's too wishy-washy." While supporting the Tisch amendment and Kemp-Roth, this voter favors Wolpe "because Brown's not concerned

Strength For Today

YOUTH OVERHEARS

About the year 1560 two weatherbeaten Engish sailors used to sit sunning themselves on a dock in Bristol telling of far-away places and adventures. They did not realize that a young boy who played on the dock near them was listening to everything they said. The boy's name was Walter Raleigh, destined to become a great figure in the exploration and settlement of America.

Children are often influenced more by what they overhear than what they hear. If we try to teach them, they often put up defenses. But they are greatly influenced by the chance remark the unmeditated observation coming from an older person.

This is why so much education, for good or evil, comes from outside the schools. And this tendency of children places a great responsibility on all of us who have them in our care.

Some of these children may grow up to expand human frontiers, as did Raleigh. And the motivation may have begun with a chance word from us.

Rules Of Thumb Reexamined

By JOHN CUNNIFF
Ap Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Those rules of thumb by which we gauge our economic performance should be reviewed every so often, said the financial adviser, if only because they get bruised by fickle fate.

Fate, in this instance, generally is the persistence of inflation, a factor so generally ignored by many rules of thumb that they point people in the wrong direction altogether.

Consider, for example, the Rule of 72, often used in calculating the number of years it takes for savings to double at specific rates of interest. The answer comes from dividing the interest rate into 72.

At today's maximum passbook rate of 5.25 percent, for example, it takes about 13.7 years, which works out to about 13 years, 8 months.

Save $1,000 today and it becomes $2,000 in 13.7 years. But the buying power those dollars could shrink to under $1,000 rather than grow to $2,000, as our understanding of the Rule of 72 suggests.

In truth, the problem lies not so much with the rule as it does with the incomplete use of it, i.e., with not using it to estimate the erosion of inflation also.

The Rule of 72 states that if you divide the rate of inflation into 72 you'll obtain a rough idea of how long it takes to cut in half the buying power of your dollar. Try dividing 10 into 72. Shocking?

A familiar rule of thumb — that you should spend no more for a home than 2½ times your annual income — is also becoming bruised by attempts to make it fit today's inflated economy.

To illustrate: The median family income now is approaching $16,000 a year, which suggests, according to the rule, that the typical house might be selling for about $40,000. But it isn't; it's over $50,000.

This doesn't mean the rule has failed; not at all. Financial advisers still maintain it as a measure. But it does indicate that many families are having a difficult time living within the rule.

Another rule might also be examined, the one that says a family man should maintain life insurance in an amount four to five times his annual income. Watch out for that one; inflation does a job on it.

The assumption is that your family should be left a sum sufficient to enable it to maintain its standard of living at least during a readjustment period. And that the sum should pay for educations also.

Being generalities and approximations, rules of thumb often do not apply at all. While the "four to five times" rule often is cited by salesmen, the truth is that each family's needs are different.

One, for example, might have many debts that must be covered in the event of death or disability. Another might have a huge mortgage. Another might have a disabled child. But some might have no children.

Observations From Editorial Columns

Not Now For Public Use

The state Division of Parks and Recreation made the right move recently in prohibiting the launching of motorized hang gliders off Jockey's Ridge; but it didn't go far enough.

Saying that it was "concerned with safety problems", it acted under existing park service regulations which ban any type of flying craft from taking off or landing in state parks.

Non-powered hang gliders will escape the ban because of a loophole that allows aircraft to be used in the park if a permit is obtained.

The latter have taken over the towering sand dune at Nags Head, on North Carolina's Outer Banks. No longer can children, or anyone else, walk up it now, even if they can find the space, without putting life or limb in danger.

Certainly, hang gliders are aircraft of one sort or another. And if permits can be granted, they also can be denied — if not revoked. It is good to see the Town of Nags Head considering following the lead of the Division of Parks and Recreation by also banning powered gliders in the air above its town limits. Certainly, such motorized craft endanger life and property of others in the area, not just those inside the boundaries of the park.

It is a bit ironic, we admit, that such regulations appear necessary so near the site of man's first powered air flight.

But then, the Wright brothers were endangering their own property and necks, not also those of so many people below them.— The Durham Sun.

Agents Out Of Character

A couple of FBI agents have opened the silly season in North Carolina with a $22 million civil suit against persons associated with The Northwestern Bank's money handling troubles last year.

The agents, Thomas J. Brereton of Greensboro and Zachary T. Lowe of Winston-Salem, seek $11 million each for injury done their civil rights when they were investigating the matter.

The hurt was that the people they were investigating bugged the room they were using.

It matters in appearance, if not in law, that the principal targets of this civil suit (former bank officers Edwin M. Juncan, Jr. and Gwen E. Bowers) got caught and convicted for the bugging, and were punished under the criminal statutes.

If one assumes that Agents Brereton and Lowe would be unimpressed with becoming millionaires in the course of duty, the main point of their suit seems to be to serve notice that nobody better fool around with them on the job.

This isn't exactly new. Some few policemen who shouldn't be in law enforcement do a similar thing with a billy club, and they generally cover their actions by also charging the persons they beat with resisting arrest.

Wt's new in the FBI agents' suit is the large vista it could open for the future if some dyspeptic judge takes them seriously. The limited law we have on entrapment could make a gold mine out of this novel area of civil rights. — The Hickory Daily Record.

Today is Sunday, Aug. 13, the 225th day of 1978. There are 140 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On this date in 1937, Japanese invaders of China attacked the nation's largest city, Shanghai.

On this date:

In 1688, King William's War began when Indians attacked North Yarmouth, Maine.

Kennedy And Ford Leading Field In Opinion Poll

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts holds a wide 44 to 20 percent lead over President Jimmy Carter as the top choice of the nation's Democratic voters for the 1980 presidential nomination.

Next on the latest list submitted to a cross-section of the nation's Democrats is Gov. Edmund (Jerry) Brown of California with 11 percent of the vote. He is followed by Vice President Walter Mondale with 5 percent, Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington with 4 percent, Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota, also with 4 percent. Sen. Patrick Moynihan of New York, Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona and Sen. Frank Church of Idaho each receive less than 4 percent.

Kennedy leads Carter in the president's native South by as wide a margin as he does outside the South.

In an earlier survey (late March-early April), Kennedy and Carter were in closer contention, 36 to 29 percent nationwide, but the earlier survey results are not directly comparable because the list did not include the names of McGovern, Moynihan and Church. The latest results, however, would certainly seem to indicate a decisive gain for Kennedy over Carter.

Ford Leads Reagan

On the Republican side, former President Gerald Ford leads former California Gov. Ronald Reagan by the score of 37 to 31 percent, closely matching findings from an earlier survey conducted in late March and early April.

Receiving the third greatest number of votes from Republicans is Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee with 9 percent of the vote. He is followed by John Connally with 5 percent, Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas with 4 percent, Elliot Richardson with 3 percent, Gov. James Thompson of Illinois with 2 percent, and George Bush with less than 1 percent.

In assessing the relative strength of both Republicans and Democrats tested, it is important to bear in mind that name recognition is a key factor. For example, Richardson, Bush and Thompson are each known by less than half of Republicans nationwide.

Following is the question asked to determine current choices of Democrats surveyed:

"Here is a list of people who have been mentioned as possible presidential candidates for the Democratic party in 1980. (Respondents were handed a card with nine names listed). Which ONE would you like to see nominated as the Democratic candidate for President in 1980?"

'Soul-Magic Of Great Music' An Experience

MOUNTAIN HOME, Tenn. — The scars of war can be terrible. One need only visit any veteran hospital and let perceptive eye and ear respond. I was compassionately depressed when I first came to Mountain Home, Tennessee, July 7, 1970. It seemed, for all the beautiful landscaping, that I was in the Garden of the Forlorn, in the Valley of Searching Souls. My own retreat was due to schizophrenic shattering and withdrawal, but the visible wounds and disabilities around me were no hallucination. I describe one man in particular. I owe this gentle soul so much, if only I could tell him.

One morning at breakfast a veteran seated himself directly opposite me. I looked up from my plate. Suddenly I was terrified, and all senses seemed to merge into kaleidoscopic and miasmic motion. Movie technicians have concocted many phantom disguises, designed to shock indeed, but I could remember nothing so monstrous as the face now in front of me. Here was no fiction. Here was a living man, yet a creature, distored and misshapen. Had some disastrous bomb on foreign ground caused such disfigurement?

I can say but that I was profoundly disturbed: What supposedly benevolent God could allow such mutilation? I wanted to curse. I wanted to cry. Oddly, I wanted to laugh — in irony at so many sons of war I had so recently seen.

Mother whose heart hung humble as a button - On the bright splended shroud of your son, - Do not weep. - War is kind. I remembered bitterly Stephen Crane's poem.

I did not see again the particular character of my story for several months. Mountain Home is large, and the schedules vary. There are numerous activities — card and bingo games, bowling, shuffleboard, miniature golf, country-western bands, the pool, the library. But one day I read the program for the weekend and was mildly astonished. The Johnson City Symphony Orchestry was to play at the Station Theater, a lovely old "opera house" constructed in 1903. I was thrilled with anticipation. The program was to include Handel, Corelli, Puccini and Bartok. Corelli's "Christmas Concerto" with the impeccable flute passages, especially appealed to me.

It was raining the night of the concert, January 11, 1971, and I shall never forget. I was lonely, homesick, soul-bereft. It was one of those depressive times when I felt I had lost everything — career, home, friends. I started to forget the concert, to remain in my domicile with my sorrows. My own dilemma had been pronounced in remission — hopefully to return to teaching, or any job I could get. But who would hire one with a "mental record", a "nervous breakdown?" Fully realizing the stigma, I was most self-piteous. Yet an inner voice (and God forbid hallucinatory voices!) kept prompting me. I buttoned my raincoat, put on my hat and made my way through a sad winter rain to the symphony concert, and the most significant concert I ever expect to attend.

In spite of the rain, there was a large crowd — townspeople, and many appreciative veterans. I had assumed from the popularity of the country-western bands that a symphony would hardly be an attraction. I was wet, not dressed to match the fashions of the townspeople, so I found my way to the balcony — third row from the front, down the green-carpeted balcony stairs. A hush fell; toe conductor took his place on the podium. In only a few moments I was transported — exquisite Handel. The musicians were superb. Corelli — the marvelous "fluting of Orpheus". If music be the food of the soul, play on! but it would be difficult returning from the Elysian Fields to the reality of hospital life.

The applause was long. I do believe the conductor and members of the orchestra realized tbe sincerity and appreciation of the veterans. Perfect for a rainy night in bleak January, and "None But the Lonely Heart", to remember Tchaikovsky. I left my third row balcony seat, made my way in a daze up the stairs. Lo! Who should be still sitting in his seat — very last row of the balcony, alone — and smiling with his twisted, grotesque mouth? It was my early morning moster! Alas, it was the man who had disturbed my dreams, the very personification in my mind of all the scars of war. But do you know something? I saw only his eyes. And those eyes were filled with the soul-magic that great music can bring. My grotesque veteran dwarf was grotesque no longer — I was seeing the beauty of his soul.

"And folk, whose earthstained looks I hate, - Why may I not divine - Your souls that must be passionate, — Shining and swift as mine?" — Fannie Stearns Davis.

Something To Be Said Of A Good Depression

Everything sounds better when it comes in threes. Three little pigs, three billy goats gruff, three coins in a fountain, you name it . . . there just seems to be some natural rhythmic inclination to group things in threes. That's why I wonder whether Tom Jefferson really and truly thought the "pursuit of happiness" was an inalienable right, or if he just needed something after "life" and "liberty" to give his sentiment the necessary pizazz.

Whatever his reasons, that one little phrase has done irreparable damage to our society. Everyone's running around like mad pursuing happiness. But what happens if you occasionally prefer to pursue unhappiness?

Then you're labelled crazy.

Or worse. If you are caught in a dull-eyed stare of more than ten minutes duration or if you run screaming through the house and lock yourself in a closet, your are labelled neurotic. Or manic-depressive. Or self-destructive. Or anti-social.

It never occurs to anyone to think that a woman who can smile after she burns an $11.00 roast might be slightly unbalanced. Or that you've got a right to kick a hole in the wall when the motor in your vacuum cleaner burns out one day after the warranty expires. Or that you liked your kitchen the way it was . . . BEFORE your kid painted it with Crisco.

Worst of all, you begin to believe the labels.

But not me. As far as I'm concerned, there is nothing more comforting in a nerve-racking situation than to abandon myself shamelessly to a good old-fashioned funk. To wallow in self-pity. To refuse to speak to anyone. To bury my head in a pillow and to cry myself into a dry heave.

Now, Phillip cannot understand this. So the minute I lapse into one of these periodic depressions, he tries to talk me out of it.

"It's not so bad," he said the other day after picking the lock to our bedroom. "We'll get all settled soon, and you'll love it here in Durham."

"No, I won't!" I sobbed. "I'll never make any friends here."

He smiled comfortingly. "You give up too easily, honey. Once we meet someone who speaks English, you'll be okay."

"No, I won't," I gurgled. "By that time I'll have grown out of all my clothes because all I do is sit around and eat vanilla wafers. And who wants to make friends with a naked fat lady whose second language is Peanut French?"

"I wish you didn't have such a negative attitude. You WORRY me."

"I worry YOU?!" I gasped. "Do you realize that in the month we've been here, we have not been able to find a nursery school for our daughter or a house for ourselves, or my potato peeler? And that you walk around this apartment all the time with a grin that would make Rosalyn Carter blanch?"

"I am making the best of our situation."

"That's what you think. You know what I think?"

"What?"

"You're sick."

Mother Looks Out For Presidents Of The U.S.

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Lyndon Johnson, the profane Texas wheeler-dealer? John F. Kennedy, the PT boat hero? Roughriding Teddy Roosevelt? All of them Mama's Boys?

Yup, says Doris Faber, in "The President's Mothers," a combination of feminism, Freud and Erich Fromm published by St. Martin's Press. She writes:

"Almost without exception, in the cases where sufficient evidence survives to permit any verdict at all, the presidents of the United States have been, in the forthright parlance of the playground, Mama's boys."

We've never had a woman president, but there were 38 presidential mothers, from Mary Ball Washington to Lillian Gordy Carter. That these particular 38 women mothered presidents is not, says Ms. Faber, a coincidence.

All, she says, were strongwilled, even overpowering, women. They were the principal influence in their sons' early lives. Sometimes they were the only influence. All of them, directly or subtly, instilled in their sons a desire for success, in some instances, success as preachers — a calling not far removed from politics.

And many presidential mothers, Ms. Faber writes, were married to men who preferred to stay in the background.

"Excepting Theodore Roosevelt Sr., whose commanding presence cannot be overlooked," she writes, "most presidential fathers appear to have made no very strong impression during their sons' formative years, and some never did. The incidence of early death among these men is much higher than among their wives, as is the incidence of chronic failure in the worldly sense."

So here is Rebekah Baines Johnson seeing in the infant Lyndon "the deep purpose and true nobility" of her own father and "consecrating herself to the creation of a god in a man's image."

And here is Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, daughter of "Honey Fitz," one of Boston's most skillful politicians, subtly imparting to her sons wisdom that later served them so well in politics. "Despite all the propaganda picturing Joe Kennedy as an insatiable Svengali of a father," writes Ms. Faber, "...the plain truth is that during his children's formative years, he was away from them much more than he was home."

And here is Mitty Bulloch Roosevelt, a Scarlett O'Hara figure growing up on an antebellum Georgia plantation, anticipating her son's charge up San Juan Hill. "She was a magnificent horsewoman — she would throw a cape over her shoulders and gallop over the sandy hills like a creature escaped from the pages of the Arabian Nights."

Not to mention Lillian Carter and Hannah Milhous Nixon, Ida Stover Eisenhower, and Sara Delano Roosevelt, a dominating figure even during her son Franklin's White House years. And the feisty Martha Young Truman, who could give 'em hell just like her son Harry.

Soon after Harry became president, Mrs. Truman flew from Missouri to a White House Mother's Day ceremony. When hordes of photographers tried to take her picture, she snapped:

"Oh, fiddlesticks! If I'd have known there was going to be all this fuss, I wouldn't have come."

To the present first mother, Lillian Gordy Carter, goes credit for son Jimmy's racial moderation. Miss Lillian's father was a populist, and she inherited a fervor for people and views on race several decades ahead of her time in that region.

Furthermore, Ms. Faber says, Jimmy Carter's mother gave him a different view that literally instilled in him a desire to join the Navy and see the world.

"She saw to it that personal messages from a world infinitely more varied than the

Agents Might Be Laughing

By LEE MITGANG
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Smile. Your insurance agent may be laughing at you.

Yes, in those backrooms where your claims have been collecting dust, the good-hands people are howling over some of the weird fixes that sometimes send Americans to their insurance companies.

What can you say, for instance, about an Arkansas woman who claims damages after being knocked down and sat on by a feisty donkey? Or to the insurance adjuster who arrived on the scene, was knocked down by the same donkey and then had his wristwatch eaten by the animal?

Out of a sense of fair play, perversity, or whatever, several insurance companies have now agreed to let the rest of us in on the laughter. In answer to a request, Kemper, Nationwide, Aetna, United Services Automobile Association and State Farm have provided this selection from the current hit parade of zany insurance claims:

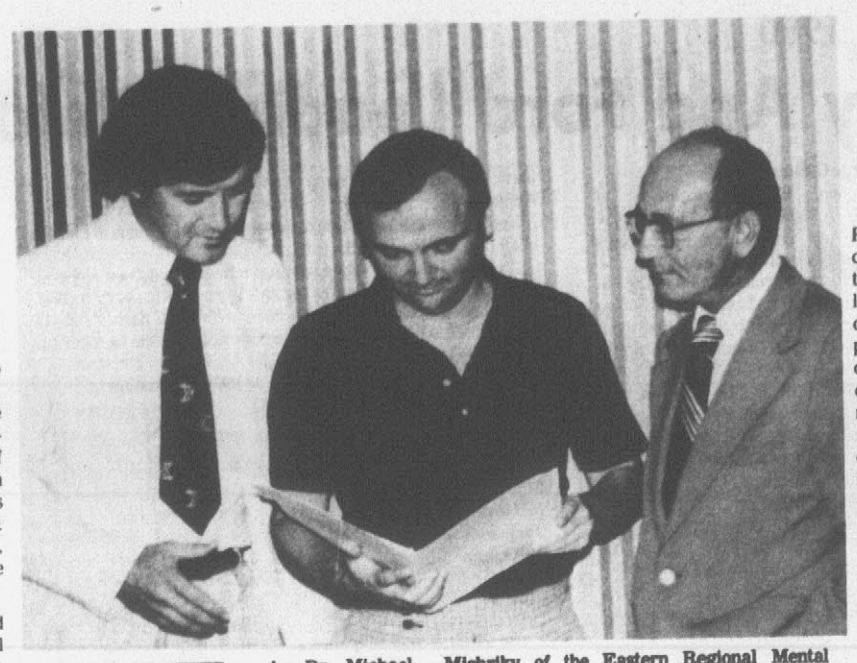

—A New England woman sitting in her new portable whirlpool bath one day decided to try it without the drain cover. The resulting suction caused her rear-end to stick fast to the bottom of the pool. A team of strong-armed men, including the insurance adjuster, had to yank her out. But her subsequent suit against the manufacturer was doomed the minute she tinkered with the drain.

—In Michigan, a man happened to be driving along at 1 a.m. and crashed hood-first into a startled couple's kitchen sink. Wishing them good morning, he pulled out and left. What apparently outraged the woman of the house was that the collision knocked her birth control pills into a waiting garbage disposal. Insurance came to the rescue, paying for both kitchen damage and pills.

—An Illinois woman, tired after a day's shopping in a local department store, decided to take a load off her feet — astride an "up" escalator. Arriving at the top, her dress was torn off, and what lay just beneath it suffered minor abrasions. No insurance money for that stunt, although the store was said to have given her a few dollars just to shop elsewhere in the future.

—Two lovers were finally reunited in Nebraska after a long separation. The man gave his true love a bearhug and two cracked ribs. He later found out that his homeowner accident policy did not cover damage to the woman's ribcage.

—After a recent accident, a Nashville, Tenn., woman was asked by the insurance adjuster why she was driving with her left wheels on the center line of the highway. "I always do that," she said. "It makes my tires last longer."

STUDY REVIEWED. . .by Dr. Michael Prewett, who conducted it, Dr. Stephen Creech, area mental health director, and Raafat Mishriky of the Eastern Regional Mental Health office. The paper was presented Tuesday.

Research Results Are Presented Committee

The Eastern Region Research and Evaluation Committee met Tuesday at the Pitt County Mental Health Center.

Seven research projects, including a study being conducted at the Pitt Mental Health Center, were presented. Dr. Michael Prewett told of a project he is conducting titled "Attribution of Causality by Children of Alcoholic Parents." His assistants are Manoli Chaknis and Robert Spence.

Dr. Prewett's research is concerned with "locus of control, internal versus external causality factors, as related to children eight to 12 years old." Dr. Prewett says, "The concept of free will is actually affected by status environmental conditions, making for capricious consequences in the behavior of children." The study, he believes, will offer data concerning lower socio-economic groups and minorities, as well as information about causality factors in children of alcoholic parents.

Others who presented papers and projects were Betty Alley of Wayne Mental Health Center; Bruce Dorval of Halifax; Joel Glassman of Caswell Center; Gerald Merwin Jr. of Caswell Center; and Jim Lang of Roanoke-Chowan Mental Health Service.

Dr. Stephen Creech, area director of the Pitt Center, conducted the meeting. Among other participants were Raafat Mishriky of the Eastern Regional Office; Dr. Rao Jonnalagadda of Cherry Hospital; Charles Pettus of Research Section in Raleigh; and Ken Walker of the Walter B. Jones Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center here.

enough on the issues." Similarly, a 48-year-old office secretary, a self-styled conservative, calls Mr. Carter "a disaster," and backs the Tisch amendment as "the only way to accomplish anything. If we don't, they'll put the small businessman out of business." But she backs Wolpe, explaining: "I just have not been too impressed with Garry Brown."

Oddly, both these tax revolters prefer Wolpe's tax position to Brown's. Furthermore, despite Brown's support of Kemp-Roth, voters here generally perceive no difference between them on taxation. Whereas only 3 out of the 13 voters opposing the Tisch amendment support Brown, many of its backers are for Wolpe. Actually, neither congressional candidate supports the Tisch amendment, and Brown has so far not made a campaign issue of federal tax relief.

Garry Brown, second-ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee, joins the bipartisan political establishment — including Howard Wolpe — in approaching the tax revolt with extreme care (as shown in non-support for the Tisch amendment and failure to make Kemp-Roth a focus of his campaign).

regularly reached Jimmy," Ms. Faber writes.

"Postcard vistas addressed to Jimmy from every quarter of the globe arrived whenever his mother's youngest brother, a seaman in the U.S. Navy, touched in at another port. Before Jimmy was promoted to high school he was already aiming at Annapolis."

The title for the section on Hannah Milhous Nixon is a question raised by son Richard's farewell address. "Was she a saint?" No, Ms. Faber answers, only a very strongwilled Quaker woman who in the atmosphere of her husband's business failures somehow provided her son a burning desire for success. In the way she instilled that drive, Ms. Faber says, she was like almost all the others.

And that affection was returned by almost all the potential presidents. One of the most tangible bits of evidence of that tie involves young Richard Nixon.

"...the degree to which this son was tied to his mother emotionally can be measured by an amazing letter that he wrote her when he was 11 years old," Ms. Faber writes.

"'My dear master' it began, and proceeded to complain about how badly two other boys had behaved while she had been away for the day. It was signed, 'Your good dog Richard.'"

No Increase Expected In Drunken Driving

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — J. Phil Carlton, state secretary of crime control, says he does not think liquor by the drink will lead to more cases of drunken driving, but he says he has proposed stringent regulations on the sale of mixed drinks in communities that approve the measure.

State law allows voters in counties and municipalities that have state liquor stores to decide whether to allow the sale of mixed drinks in restaurants and clubs. Seven communities have scheduled votes on the issue in September.

"I used to argue stringently that it (mixed-drink sales) had to increase driving under the influence," Carlton said Friday. "But the statistics (in other states) just don't show it."

Carlton said he proposed strict rules governing the sale of mixed-drinks last month in a memo to Gov. Jim Hunt, former Gov. James E. Holshouser Jr. and Marvin L. Speight Jr.

Holshouser is head of the committee that will propose mixed-drink regulations to the state Board of Alcoholic Control, of which Speight is chairman.

Carlton recommended that restaurants be allowed to serve mixed drinks only at tables where food is served, and that "social clubs" which would be allowed to serve mixed drinks be required to charge each member an initiation fee of at least $400 and monthly dues of at least $25 to be eligible for a mixed-drink permit.

"I recognize it has some discrimination against a lower income person," Carlton said. "That part bothered me a great deal. I racked my brain, but I know of no other way to keep just about any little dance club from creating these $3 and $4 memberships. Pretty soon just about any place could qualify as a club."

Carlton also proposed that bartenders should be at least 21, and that the minimum age of waiters and waitresses who serve mixed drinks should be 18.

campers, mobile homes and other recreational vehicles. Some like to spend some time in the desert, away from the glittering casinos.

Many of the tourists come from other parts of the country, where on a hot day the temperature may climb to 90 degrees, along with high humidity. They don't understand the desert, with its searing heat but extremely low humidity that makes it seem cooler than it actually is.

They become careless — and some die.

About May, temperatures begin to climb in southern Nevada and the rest of the desert southwest. Readings of 120 degrees are not uncommon and from late June to early September the mercury rarely dips below 100 degrees during the day.

During those times only a few minutes in direct sunlight can lead to heat exhaustion, Mayne said, and it takes common sense to avoid problems.

"Common sense and simple logic ought to tell you that this is the time of year to seek shade, to have water with you, not to get exposed for long periods of time to intense sunlight," he said.

Sgt. Robert Berman of the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Special Operations Bureau — the department's search and rescue unit — says there are a number of rules to follow if you venture out to the desert.

"Always let somebody know where you're going and when you're coming back," he said. "In case your car breaks down or your plane goes down, always stay with your vehicle. It's easy to find the vehicle, but then you find the people have wandered off, and it's hard to find them."

Another important rule, he said, is to wear the proper clothing for the desert.

"You'd be surprised at the people who go out in thongs or their house-slippers or tennis shoes," Berman said.

Visitors should always carry food and water in case their vehicle breaks down or they are injured.

"If you ever get hurt, don't panic," Berman said. "Being panicky is one of the worst things to do. Stay calm."

Mayne says the first symptoms of heat exhaustion include nausea, cramps and blurred vision. The treatment is to gradually reduce the person's body temperature, and to take liquids and salt.

"Salt pills are just about a necessity in this country," he said. "You've got to replace those elements of your system that you have secreted."

West Europe's Butter Mountains Growing Higher

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

BEEZ, Belgium (AP) — With West Europe's stockpiles of surplus milk and butter climbing ever higher, farmers like Henri Mauroy are hard at work these days — producing still more milk and still more butter.

The European Common Market countries' warehouses are bulging this summer with 811,000 tons of surplus milk powder — enough to powder over all of Manhattan two inches deep — and 420,000 tons of butter, an all-time record. There are 273,000 tons too much beef, and excess sugar may add up to 1.5 million tons by autumn.

But like many farmers, Mauroy dismisses claims that something is drastically wrong with European agriculture — that the Common Market's agricultural system is wasting money on a price-support system that encourages overproduction and small-farm inefficiency.

In mud-spattered work boots and chomping a cigar, with a beret covering is stubby gray hair, the 54-year-old Mauroy stirs his farm's own cream into a cup of coffee and declares:

"A farmer is a citizen, too, and has a right to live. If you don't have a support policy for agriculture, farming will fall apart and it will just swell the numbers of unemployed."

The Common Market nations — Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Ireland, Denmark, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg — have long lived with their "butter mountains" and "beef mountains," the surplus produce of the nine nations' joint agricultural policy.

But now, there may finally be enough pressure for substantial change in the way the agricultural system works — largely brought on by Britain and West Germany, which believe the Common Market can no longer afford agricultural extravagance.

Is it just extravagance? More than 9 million people in Common Market countries earn their living from agriculture, and have always made up a powerful voting bloc. The "common agricultural policy" is part of the bedrock of the Common Market and has two related purposes: to shield the nine countries from imports of cheaper foreign food, and to support the prices European farmers get from their production.

As in the United States, this is a time when the survival of small farms is threatened by rising costs and other economic pressures.

With the supports, the Common Market is able to produce 91 per cent of all grains it consumes, 100 percent of the potatoes, 95 percent of the sugar, 79 percent of the fruit, more than enough milk products, 97 percent of the meat. And agricultural exports totalled $11.8 billion in 1976, compared with total farm production of $106 billion.

Meanwhile, price supports cost the Common Market some $12 billion a year, and and in Brussels, good-quality steak costs $4.37 a pound, butter $2.27 a pound, milk 53 cents a quart. In New York, the prices would be $2.50 for the steak, $1.49 for the butter, 49 cents for the milk.

European consumer groups have complained about both the prices and the surpluses while other people in the world starve.

But supporters of the policy, led by Common Market Agriculture Commissioner Finn Gundelach, say support payments are less than four-tenths of one percent of the nine countries' total economic output, that much of the money goes to improve farms, rural villages and living standards, and that some food is distributed to needy nations.

Farmers insist they need the support. Raw materials costs shot up 10 percent last year. "And I don't think the stocks are really as big as they seem," adds Mauroy, whose 123-acre farm 40 miles south of Brussels is large by Belgian standards.

"If there was a war or crisis of some sort, we'd need them."

Mauroy, who has about 30 cows, himself takes no support money in butter or milk, because he sells that part of his production to neighbors. But he also grows about 25 acres of wheat, which he sells to a cooperative at a support price fixed by the Common Market.

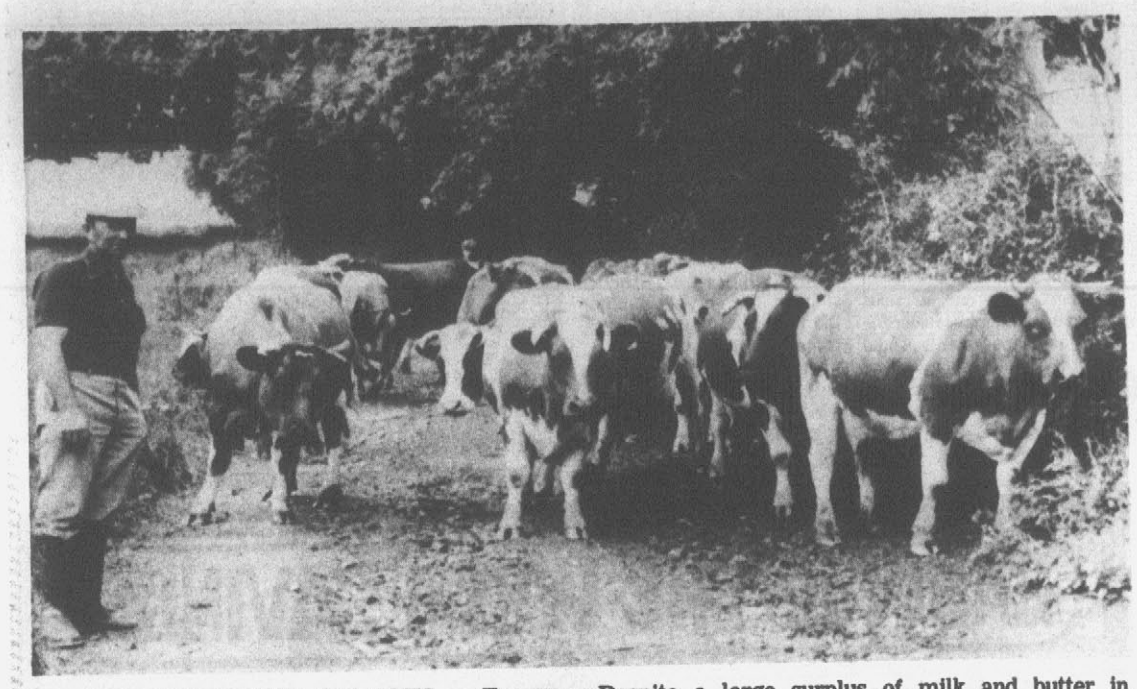

Opposition to the farm policy is now growing from Britain, Italy and West Germany, but for different reasons. Italy claims more support should go for crops grown in southern Europe. Britain and West Germany — the country which produces most of the surplus butter — are more industrialized than such nations as France, Ireland and Denmark and thus more willing to take some heat from farmers. They are interested mostly in controlling how much money the policy costs.

Common Market officials say they will probably re-examine the policy this fall, an important step with Spain, Portugal and Greece, all big farm producers, joining the Common Market in the next few years.

Already, the Common Market is taking some steps to cut stockpiles. Dairy herds are being transformed into beef herds, milk powder is feeding pigs and poultry, schools get bargain milk for lunches and consumers get cut-rate "Christmas butter" at year's end. Supports may be cut several months a year to discourage production.

But because of heavy farm lobby pressure, stockpiles and high food prices may always be part of European agriculture. Mauroy, who himself belongs to a farm union's governing council, says that even with all the advantages Common Market farmers receive, "we have to keep working harder and harder just to stay in the same place."

Then, Henri Mauroy heads up a hill to meet his cows being herded back from pasture, connects his electric milking machine and starts producing still more milk for Europe.

Mystic Is Advocate Of Dehypnosis Meditation

By DOUG ANDERSON

NEW YORK (UPI) — Roy Masters advocates a form of meditation that he describes as "dehypnosis" — a means of "awakening people to their own understanding of things."

Masters, who describes himself as "a Jewish hypnotist turned Christian mystic," says that what he is trying to do is "to awaken people to their own understanding of things."

The purpose is to "create a rapport, a relationship, between ... your mind and your body, to energize your body from within so what you know is right will become what you will eventually do without taking thought, without effort."

"Transcendental meditation tends to be hypnotic. It keeps people more and more immersed in imagination," Masters says. "The meditation I teach is the reverse of that.

"I'm saying that I don't want to take peopie's guilt away. I want to introduce them back to guilt."

Masters was once jailed for 30 days for practicing medicine without a license. He says he has encountered opposition from church groups. But he insists he is not presenting himself as a healer, and certainly not as a Messiah.

The Masters technique has also been praised by such diverse people as Randy Berkman, a Ph.D. who is a clinical psychologist in San Diego, and Allan A.C. Griffith Jr., a U.S. probation officer in Washington, D.C.

"The meditation itself is easy to describe ..." Berkman wrote in an article published by Alternatives magazine. "It should be practiced alone in a quiet room at least twice daily for 20 minutes per session ...

"It has two attention or awareness areas, the hands and middle forehead. The meditator sits comfortably in a straightbacked chair giving attention to the hands as if 'looking' through the middle of the forehead with eyes closed and relaxed, becoming conscious of the mind, the head, the 'I' inside oneself ...

"Awareness is allowed to oscillate back and forth between forehead and hands, over and over again. Thinking and daydreaming are not suppressed; one simply notices these mental processes and returns to focusing on the oscillation of attention between forehead and hands, over and over again."

Berkman says this "unique, little-known meditation ...has revolutionized my understanding of the mind's healing capacity."

Griffith says more simply that Masters' "common-sense approach to stress situations ...(has) been of great assistance to me in the field of probation and parole counseling."

Masters operates the Foundation of Human Understanding with headquarters in Los Angeles where he says he he has no organization, apart from an office staff. He says the foundation has no members and solicits no dues.

Sourdough Fears Extinction From EPA Measure

By G. MICHAEL HARMON
Associated Press Writer

STAMPEDE CREEK, Alaska (AP) — The people who've lived their lives in Alaska wonder why Congress can't leave room for the Earl Pilgrims. Up on the antimony claim he's been mining here for 40 odd years, Pilgrim wonders the same thing.

"I made my first trip across this country in 1923 with a pack horse and a young wife," says Pilgrim, an 86-year-old mirror of Alaska's history and heart. "The pack horse and the wife are gone, but I'm still here. I plan on staying until I decide to retire."

Tough talk comes easy for an authentic sourdough like Pilgrim who got his first look at Alaska in 1915 from the bottom of a gold mine. But even the toughest talkers — and there are a lot in Alaska these days — acknowledge that Pilgrim's way of life is in danger of losing its only remaining outpost in North America.

His claim is two miles over a ridge and a river from the northern border of McKinley National Park, a 1.9-millionacre mass of mountain and tundra. The U.S House of Representatives voted this past spring to expand the park's boundaries by 3.7 million acres, including Pilgrim's 20-acre Stampede Mine.

Known as the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, the bill would protect 120 million acres of federally owned land — an area larger than California — as parks, wildlife refuges, wild and scenic rivers, forests and wilderness areas.

Opposition to the bill has been intense in Alaska. Sen. Mike Gravel has threatened a filibuster in the Senate, and other Alaskans are circulating petitions to secede from the union.

A poll commissioned by Gov. Jay Hammond showed 67 percent of Alaskans oppose the bill. A poll commissioned by the Legislature found 61 percent of Alaskans favored expanding national parks and wildlife refuges, but not at the expense of continued access and development. And the Legislature has approved overwhelmingly a resolution opposing the bill as it is now written.

Most Alaskans also question the bill's premise — that regardless of past uses and potential oil and mineral riches, vast areas should be set aside for the sake of beauty and wildlife.

Old-timers and newcomers alike recoil at unfettered growth and development as typified by the urban sprawl of Anchorage and Fairbanks. But though they dislike much of what has happened since oil was discovered on the North Slope, the prospect of sweeping government restrictions on land use is even more repugnant.

And up on Stampede Creek, Pilgrim typifies the conflict.

The House bill, sponsored Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., recognizes "valid existing rights" and won't automatically throw miners like Pilgrim off their claims. But it would subject them to complex rules which opponents say would have the same effect.

Pilgrim's claim would be among more than 64 million acres designated as wilderness areas where mining and activities like hunting and trapping would be "subject to such restrictions as the secretary deems necessary to preserve the wilderness character of the area."

In winter, miners like Pilgrim transport their ore on sleds drawn by bulldozers. Under the bill, any movement would require permits approved by both the secretary and Congress. And nowhere does the bill say anything about protecting people who just want to live off the land.

Pilgrim's nearest neighbor is George Davies, a 41-year-old Los Angeles real estate executive who spends his summers panning gold from Crooked Creek, about six miles to the northwest.

Davies met Pilgrim three years ago on his first trip into the country when he staggered up Stampede Creek half starved after failing to make contact with a bush pilot flying in supplies.

"I was a real mess," Davies recalls. "But Earl didn't even blink a eye. He invited me into his cabin and fed me for several days until we got a plane in."

Aware that his annual adventure will come to a halt if the lands bill passes, Davies stopped by Pilgrim's claim on the Fourth of July weekend to try to buy a homesite.

"Look, Earl," Davies pleaded, "I've heard you say a hundred times about how a man ought to have a piece of land of his own. My friends down in LA think I'm crazy to come up here every year, but I love this place.

"I don't want any part of your claim. I really don't care about mining. I just want you to sell me a lot. Just a little lot where I can build a cabin."

Davies could get no more than a promise from Pilgrim to "think about it." But the appeal became the centerpiece in a two-day discussion of Pilgrim's life with the land, the creatures that live on it and treasures beneath it.

Chinese Look To Birth Control As Population Hits One Billion

By P.Y. CHEN

HONG KONG (UPI) — China, the world's most populous nation with more than 1 billion people, belatedly is turning to birth control, a measure once held unthinkable by Chairman Mao.

A newly formed national family planning group met in Peking in June and mapped an ambitious plan to bring population growth rate below 1 percent in three years, reports the official New China News Agency in a recent dispatch.

Vice Premier Li Hsien-Nien told the 32-member group there will be no compulsory measure. But a propaganda campaign several times a year will drive home the message to every individual, it said.

China's "Long March" toward near-zero population growth is still far from its destination. But gone are the days when the communist leaders proclaimed that a great mass of people was the country's biggest asset.

The late Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung wrote in 1949, "It is a very good thing that we have a large population ... We are perfectly prepared to cope with several times the present opulation."

To underscore his belief in sheer numbers, Mao a year later threw nearly a million troops into the Korean War. The "human wave" tactic helped North Korea turn the tide, if only temporarily, in the war against United Nations forces.

Despite resistence both from some top leaders and at the grassroots level, China's national family planning program hesitantly got under way in the mid-1950s.

Gradually free pills and birth control pamphlets were distributed by medical organizations, mobile units and by army and commune clinics.

Peking set an "ideal" marriage age at 26 for women and 28 for men in metropolitan areas. In rural areas, where some 80 percent of the population lives, recommended ages for matrimony are 23 for women and 26 for men.

Recent immigrants to Hong Kong say abortions are performed free of charge on the demand of the mother alone, although doctors prefer to have family consent.

Estimates of birth and death rates in China are speculative at best. The last known census was taken in 1953 when Peking needed the data for its first five-year economic plan.

Dr. John Aird, the U.S. Census Bureau's foreign population expert, said in June that, even though the Chinese government gives a smaller figure, the country's population must have passed the 1 billion mark on May 1.

Aird said the Chinese population has been growing by 2 percent a year — a figure widely accepted by Western observers.

Chinese figures, which are hard to come by, were contained in the late Premier Chou En-lai's address to the 4th National People's Congress in 1975. He said since the nation's founding, China's grain output had increased 140 percent while the pulation had grown 60 percent.

Chou's figures, received with skepticism by Western economists, translate into annual growth rates of 3.56 percent for grain output and 1.9 percent for population.

In his latest book, "China's Economy," Dr. Christopher Howe of the University of London put the long-run growth of grain output in the ange of 2 to 2.46 percent annually. That would show China's annual increase in grain output barely ahead of, or sufficient for, the population increase.

China's average per capita consumption of grains — all rationed and including rice, wheat, corn, barley, sorghum and millet — remains at about 0.55 kilogram a day, a level unchanged for two decades, says Howe. In recent years Peking has maintained that level only with grain imports.

The Chinese peasant's obsession with sons — as successors and income earners — has been the birth control program'smost obstinate obstacle.

In 1970 when Mao met the late Sinlogist Edgar Snow for the last time, the communist leader no longer thought it was "a very good thing" China had so many people.

Speaking about the birth control program in general, Mao said: "I had been taken in ... In the countryside if a woman's first child is a girl, she wants to have a boy. If the second is a girl, she wants a boy ... Soon there are nine of them, all are girls."

Travelers report that in rural China it is not uncommon to meet farmers who embarrassingly admit they have five, six or more children. Invariably, the travelers say, the elder children are daughters whom the farmers regard as "borrowed workhands" until they marry.

India Can't Get Ahead

The population reached a staggering 625.8 million at the end of 1977, according to figures released by the Registrar of India in June, and is increasing by about 2 percent annually.

If the trend continues, the country second only to China as the world's most populous will break the 1 billion mark by the turn of the century.

To feed that many, India would by then have to produce more than 200 million tons of grain a year.

Despite steady improvements in the grain production — from 50 million tons in 1947 to an estimated 125 million tons this year — 200 tons is a tall order for farmers whose harvests depend on the varying mood of the monsoon.

Population expansion has plagued India's planners since the country became independent in 1947. Not even forced sterilization under former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has proved effective in stemming the tide; there will be 13 million more Indians this year alone.

India's deeply ingrained adulation of children as "gifts of god" and the regarding childrens form of social security are roots of the problem, experts say.

Bitter memories of forced sterilization during Mrs. Gandhi's 21-month emergency rule still are fresh in many minds — and a problem for theruling Janata government.

"The soft attitude of the (Janata) government is only going to spell disaster for the country," says Chandra Dutta, a professor involved in a number of social programs in central India.

"Remember, the downfall of Mrs. Gandi's Congress government was partly due to forcing birth control upon people. The Janata government could also face a downfall, sooner or later, if they fail to check the boom in births."

A Hindi novelist who writes on social problems says sarcastically: "The only sector of the Indian economy which has shown steady growth so far is the population."

Time Given Own Exhibit

A PHILADELPHIA EXHIBIT traces clocks from Stonehenge to today's digital wristwatch and beyond. It's called "It's About Time" and will be at the Franklin Institute through June, 1979. Here, a youngster uses his arms to tell the time. (UPI Photo)

By ELLEN L. SLOTT

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — If you've got the time, a new exhibit here traces clocks from Stonehenge (3,000 B.C.) to today's digital wristwatch and beyond.

It's called "It's About Time" and will be on display at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia through next June. Stonehenge, according to one popular theory about the mysterious stone slabs, determined the time of year, sundials the time of day and the water clock measured lengths of time, project director Jay Newlin said, pointing to various replicas on display.

"The waterclock (called the clepsydras) was used in Roman law courts to determine lengths of orations," Newlin said. "If someone took too long, you told him to take a sip of his clepsydras."

The exhibit then focuses on the seventh century when Pope Sabinianus decreed that the bells of the monastery be rung seven times day. When it became necessary to keep track of these intervals, mechanical clocks were introduced.

"About the same time, clocks were made not to tell time but to imitate the movement of the heavens," Newlin said. "Time wasn't very important then. There was no need to tell tme to the minute."

The next major step in clocks was the application of the pendulum about 1660. Visitors to the exhibit experiment with pendulums and examine 15 working models of ingenious 16th and 17th century escapements, an early orrery and a selection of small mechanical clocks.

The so-called "Age of Clockmakers," Newlin pointed out, came with industrialization when machines forced people to change from task orientation to time orientation. Among the exhibit artifacts in this area are tall case clocks and the famous Josephine Clock, a sophisticated, ornate automaton clock made for Empress Josephine around 1805 at the request of Napoleon.

The elaborate clock is cut out of a large urn-shaped base made of wood, marble, gold plate and brass. Every three hours, scooped-out portions of the urn become animated with vigorous movement; a little bird comes out and sings at the top, a figurine of Pluto dances, Charon carries some people on his boat and a blacksmith hammers out armor at the base.

By the 1900's, clocks and wristwatches were being pieced together on assembly lines.

"Now everyone could afford a watch," Newlin said. "Of course the quality of products were not the same. They weren't as involved with their work."

To illustrate the mass production of timepieces, the exhibit includes an audio-visual assembly line in which visitors can stand and put together a facimile of a watch.

With all its artifacts, including the original Mickey Mouse watches and a digital wristwatch billed as the world's largest, the exhibit also attempts to teach its visitors a lesson about time's captive powers. It presents a film and an imaginative puppet show by Philadelphia puppeteer Bob Lenton which tells the story of time and its impact on life.

"He explains it in a less preaching way," Newlin said, adding "you start to judge people by time. Someone with time to spare isn't as important as a person with no time."

The last part of the exhibit categorizes people in two groups: those with rigid work weeks and strictly planned liesure time; and those with flexible hours.

A Very Special Dancer

This Ballerina Doesn't Need Her Own Manager

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — Auburn-haired Martine van Hamel of American Ballet Theater is a very special sort of dancer.

No matter who else is on stage — even Mikhail Baryshnikov before he left ABT for the New York City Ballet — your eyes keep returning to her.

It's not just her supple five-foot-seven, or the way she moves, or technique, or projection, or personality.

It is all these, plus an integrity and intensity which make you feel that while she is dancing nothing else is real to her.

As she explained in a recent interview, "When I'm dancing, that's all I think about. I forget all the problems."

What problems can she have: a principal dancer for one of the world's major ballet companies, the darling of the critics?

During the April 17-June 10 spring ABT season at the Metropolitan Opera House she had more problems than usual.

Van Hamel normally is almost indestructible, escaping the injuries and sprains that beset dancers during a long season. It often is she who is called on to substitute for injured dancers toward the end of the season, so that she sometimes is dancing every night. But in Washington she had slipped on a floor sheet during a performance and her ankles were weakened. I didn't dance for five weeks. I was really quite amazed that doctors could not figure out what was wrong right away. I haven't had much to do with doctors and it was a bit of a shock to find incompetency where you don't expect it."

There was a rumor — maybe started by a wishful-thinking dancer with an eye on some of her roles — that one doctor had warned her she might never dance again. This she denied; but she did go to a chiropractor, who helped. Even when she returned to dancing she had to delay her New York debut in Baryshnikov's "Don Quixote," though she managed to dance her other new role, "Sphinx," to considerable critical acclaim.

The enforced lay-off gave her more time than she needed to ponder on other problems, professional ones. The ballet world is beset with internal politicking and intrigue and jockeying for new roles — the film "The Turning Point" gave only a hint of the problem.

"Because I wasn't dancing so much I found it much harder to deal with the disappointments and the problems," she said. "When I'm dancing that's all I think about, and I forget all the problems. Not dancing, it was more difficult to deal with the politics and the intrigue."

Van Hamel is almost unique among ballerinas in that she doesn't have a manager, or even a "ballet mother," to fight her battles for roles or money with management.

"I tried to have an agent and I'd love to have someone look after me inside ABT, but it hasn't worked out. I do it all myself, not always successfully," she said.

ABT has so many fine dancers, to say nothing of its guest artists, that competition for plum roles is terrific.

"There are too many dancers to go round for me to do 'Coppelia' and 'Giselle' at all regularly," she said. "I've danced 'Giselle' once and 'Coppelia' twice. To do more I'd have to fight, and even then I'd maybe dance them only once a year. They have a lot of Giselles in this company and there's a lot of negative stuff I'd have to break through. In 'Swan Lake' they've accepted me, so I don't have any trouble there."

If van Hamel weren't more interested in dancing than in her image, she could waste a lot of time and nervous energy fighting for the headline roles.

As it is, she dances wherever and whenever she can; often five nights a week, maybe more if other dancers can't make it.

If she can't dance Giselle, she is always in demand as possibly the finest interpreter of Myrtha, Queen of the Wilis, in the same ballet. She isn't the type to demand nothing but star roles, and is just as happy dancing a supporting role.

Her range and repertoire is enormous: "Raymonda," "Don Quixote," "The Sleeping Beauty," "La Sylphide," "Le Sacre du Printemps," "Gemini," "Theme and Variations," "Push Comes to Shove," "The River," "Brahms Quintet," "The Two of Us," "La Bayadere," "Jardin aux Lilas," "Etudes," "Tales of Hoffmann."

She has a wider range of roles than many other principal dancers, and if she doesn't yet draw the crowds like Natalia Makarova or Gelsey Kirkland or Cynthia Gregory, she is dependable and always pleases both the audience and the critics.

Van Hamel was born in Brussels when her father, a Dutch diplomat, was stationed there. She studied ballet in Denmark, Holland, Venezuela (where she stuffed her bodice to dance "Aurora's Wedding" at age 11) and Canada.

In 1966, at the age of 20, she won the junior gold medal at the Varna International Ballet Competition — the same year Baryshnikov won the men's division. She already was a principal dancer with the National Ballet of Canada and when ABT offered her a job in the corps de ballet she was too indignant to accept. She instead went to the Joffrey Ballet for six months, but in 1970 she swallowed her pride and joined ABT as a member of the corps. A year later she was promoted to soloist, and in 1973 to principal dancer, the highest standing you can get with ABT.

She has danced with other companies as a guest star, and she probably could do more guesting if she did have a manager. And she might make a greater reputation for herself if she were with another company with fewer name dancers. But basically she likes the roles she dances at ABT.

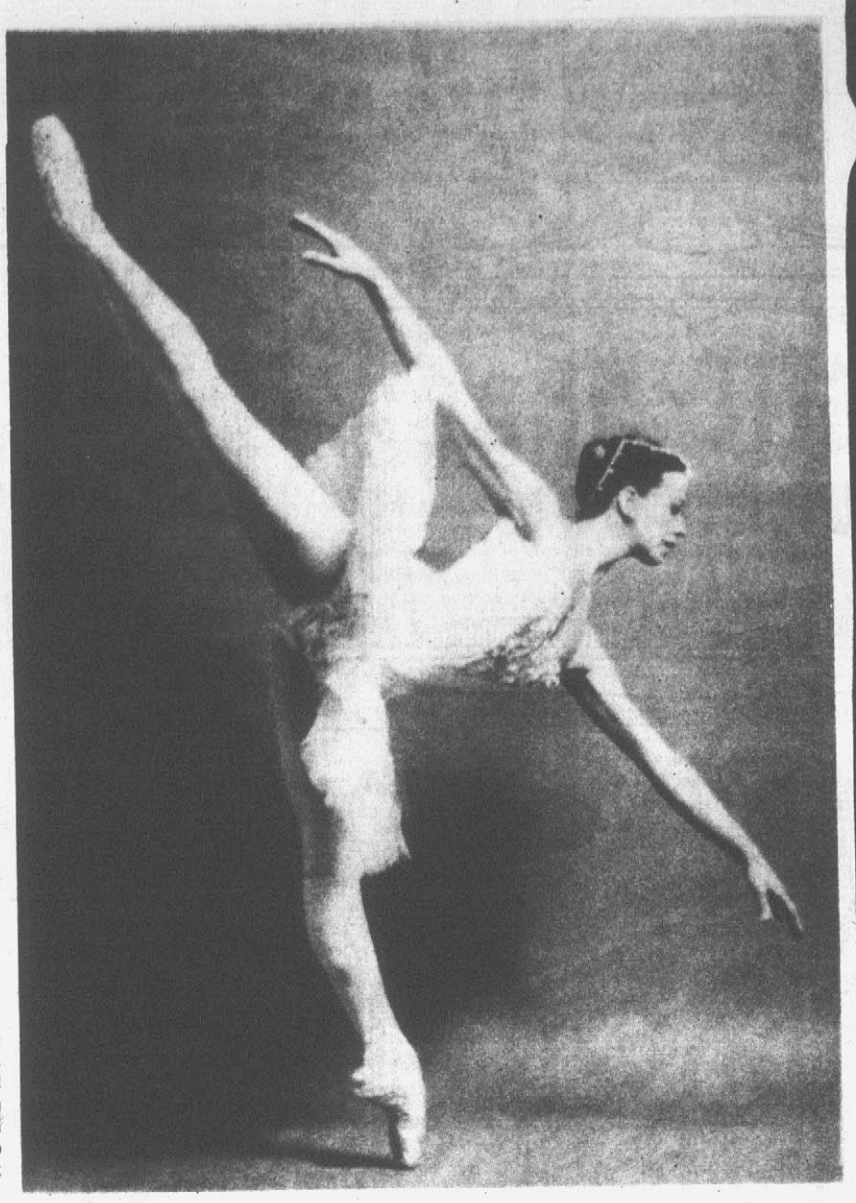

Acting as her own manager has its drawbacks. "I hadn't realized we were going to have so long a rest after the spring season here — two months — and it was too late to arrange guest appearances elsewhere," she admitted. "So I've been choreographing a pas de deux for Jacob's Pillow, and we'll see if it's worth doing again. This is the third little thing I've done. They were all torture, but it's necessary to remain creative. There's always trouble finding someone else to choreograph for you and you get so frustrated you decide to try it yourself."

She added, "Choreographers — dancers, too — are fragile. The ones who survive are the ones who can take the knocks."

She evidently is one who can take the knocks. She has been married and divorced and is in no hurry to wed again, though she does have a steady boyfriend.

One reason she hasn't had the urge to leave ABT is the opportunity it gives her to dance the classics.

"I do get tired doing contemporary works over and over again. Sometimes there is more substance in the contemporary work, but once you've figured out the movemments you want to go on to something else.

WHEN I'M DANCING . . . Martine van Hamel of the American Ballet Theater said in a recent interview, "When I'm dancing, that's all I think about. I forget all the problems. (UPI Photo)

Arts Flourish On Television

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Like Shakespeare, Mozart and Martha Graham, Jac Venza is due a share of credit for the "great" in public television's "Great Performances" series.

"We have attracted the greatest artists in the whole world," says Venza, the series' executive producer, "and I think that is the reason for the success we've had."

Success, for Venza, translates several ways — in performance, in critical acclaim, in public response.

He has arranged a fall schedule that includes a new fivepart TV adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's "Mourning Becomes Electra," a New York City Opera production of Rossini's "The Turk in Italy" with Beverly Sills, and a Royal Ballet performance of Sir Frederick Ashton's "A Month in the Country."

The series, approaching its sixth season on the Public Broadcasting Service network, has won the praise of both artists and critics. Edward Villella, principal dancer with the New York City Ballet, said recently that public TV's emphasis on the arts had opened the way for performers to more freely exercise their creativity. The New York Times' John J. O'Connor called "Great Peformances" a series that lives up to its name.

And, says Venza, "one impact of the series I'm most proud of is the fact that a little over half of our funding comes from the stations. That means we're delivering things they need, things that their audiences want."

The series is offered yearround every Wednesday evening. The Exxon Corp. is a major underwriter of "Great Performances," which also gets financial help from the PBS stations, the National Endowment for the Arts and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Linda M. Stancill

The United States Government, politicians and corruption in politics are all combined to make interesting reading in the new books now available at the library.

In WHEELING AND DEALING: CONFESSIONS OF A CAPITAL HILL OPERATOR, Bobby Baker provides a candid and intimate view of the fascinating ways of power in the Congress of the United States. Baker had a sure sense of political clout and he always knew which senator wanted what done whether it was a pitcher of water or a cover story, while the senator worked his pleasure or nursed a hangover in one of the many secret rooms on Capital Hill. The first instrument of Baker's rise was Senator Kerr, one of the richest, most powerful and venal public figures in American history. If Kerr wanted to pass a bill but lacked the votes, Baker was available to carry the cash-filled envelope to the senator whose vote would carry the day. Baker prospered at the top and found a new and even more powerful sponsor in Lyndon Johnson. He rose with Johnson until no doors were closed to him and as Johnson prospered both in power and money, so did Baker. Baker tells of Clark Clifford, Abe Fortas, Senators Joe McCarthy, Eugene McCarthy, Smathers, Humphrey and Dirksen and of the three presidents he knew well-Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson. In exposing powerful men in Washington, Baker shows how power in a democratic but corruptible government is accumulated and used by those who understand it. WHEELING AND DEALING is official Washington, a city peopled with the wise and the foolish, the profane, the womanizers, drinkers, the honest workers, thieves, and dedicated public servants-all those who make up our government.

The inside story of American intelligence and espionage is revealed by William Colby in HONORABLE MEN: MY LIFE IN THE CIA. Colby's career spanned thirty years, from the dramatic Second World War era of General "Wild Bill" Donovan when Colby was parachuted behind enemy lines in German-occupied Franch and Norway to the great public debate over the CIA's role and activities in which Colby, as the embattled Director, answered the questions of House and Senate committees and of the press on the whole generation of CIA policies, secrets, operations and achievements. Colby describes the innermost workings and procedures of the CIA-how it is organized, how it is managed and led, how its agents operate and hide, how intelligence is acquired, analyzed, checked and disseminated to the CIA's "customers." He reveals extraordinary behind-the-scenes dramas and decisions and presents intimate portraits of such world figures as Henry Kissinger, Lyndon Johnson, the Diem brothers, Madame Nhu, Richard Nixon, President Thieu, Ambassador Clare Booth Luce, Gerald Ford and the Kennedys. Colby describes his reorganization and streamlining of the Agency, his appearance before the Rockefeller Commission, his dealings with the Ford White House, and his firing at the hands of President Ford in the "Halloween Massacre" in his amazing and revealing story.

In MY EIGHT PRESIDENTS, Sarah McClendon, White House Correspondent, tells the inside story of her life and times and triumphs and tears, from her speech-making at the dinner table in Tyler, Texas to disturbing the peace in the White House. Known for the penetrating questions that she has asked of presidents at press conferences going back to the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt, she has operated her own news bureau in Washington since 1946. She withstands abuse, ridicule and threats but she never lets go, now when she is scooping her competitors on the Billie Sol Estes grain scandal, or on the Bobby Baker scandal during the Lyndon Johnson days, or on incompetence in the Veterans Administration under President Nixon, or on any of the other investigations of her colorful career. "I believe presidents are people," Sarah McClendon says. "They work for the taxpayers and ought now and then to be reminded of that."

European Opera Booming

By ROBERT MUSEL

LONDON (UPI) — Queen Victoria loved opera but always came late which meant the singers had to stop in full flight while the orchestra played "God Save the Queen." Faced with the choice of arriving on time or disrupting a performance, Her Majesty took the easy way out — she gave the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden a dispensation against having to play the national anthem when she appeared.

While she was at it the queen complained that the extras sent on to fill up the stage as pilgrims, prisoners or whatever in Beethoven's Fidelio and other crowd scene operas were so slovenly they ought to be replaced by, say, her own welldrilled soldiery. Ever since then soldiers of the London barracks have been drafted for whatever human background the opera libretto required.

No one thinks this odd, possibly because it would take a lot to bemuse devotees of an art form which demands $20 a seat — and suspension of belief — to hear a statue sing a stirring aria by Mozart.

If the music is glorious enough, and in grand opera it often is, anything seems possible except, of course, making a profit.

An opera house that can balance the ledgers is so rare, tears spring to the eyes of impresarios when they talk of the 1877 season in Covent Garden which wound up in the black.

In these artistically enlightened days no one really expects the great national opera theaters to cover their enormous costs, even with seats at the highest average prices in show business. They can provide the greatest singers, support symphony-sized orchestras and corps de ballet, and maintain the lush palaces which are their homes only with the aid of subsidies running into the millions of dollars.

In Russia, Germany, France and Austria these sums are provided gladly. Vienna has a permanent staff of 1,000 people and blithely winds up the season some $25 million in the red. But its performances are the glory and the pride of the nation — as well as a chance for Viennese society to preen in public.

Britain, which maintains two national opera houses — Covent Garden for opera in its original language, where possible, and the English National Opera at the Coliseum for performances in English — is a bit more grudging. But commercial firms have stepped in where government feared to tread to help with sponsorship of individual operas and ballets.

On Nov. 13, for example, Prince Charles, the Heir to the Throne and Patron of the Royal Opera, will attend the first revival of Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine" since 1888 — courtesy of the Imperial Tobacco Company.

Sainsbury, a grocery chain, is sponsoring a tour by one of the royal ballet companies. The Commercial Union Assurance Company has underwritten a new production of "Parsifal." IBM is the money behind the three-act ballet "Mayerling."

Britain is deepest into commercial sponsorship because so much of the allocation from the Arts Council and other official bodies is needed for renovation of the artistic slum backstage which the audience in the beautiful amphitheater never sees.

Film's Famous Grow Old Together

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

WOODLAND HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The freeway flashes by only a hundred yards away, but it is unnoticed in the tranquil cloisters of this precious 41 acres with their red geraniums, purple jacaranda, gracious trees and flowing gardens.

This is the Motion Picture Country Home, for the retired of the industry, from cartoonists to hairdressers, from accountants to stagehands, from wranglers to writers, and an occasional star.

It is hard to think of the people who make movies as residents of old folks' homes. They would seem to be insulated from the ravages of age by wealth or fame or make-believe. But some need to live here, and some want to.

Mary Astor is here, she who starred opposite such leading men as Van Heflin and Humphrey Bogart, who is still remembered for her seductively treacherous role in "The Maltese Falcon," and who made her first film in 1930. She's 72 now.

Parrish: A Part Of Him Maybe Never Grew Up

By D'VERA COHN

PLAINFIELD, N.H. (UPI) — Maxfield Parrish left thumbprints on his paintings and his name firmly imbedded in art history. But he was more than an artist.

His most famous work, "Daybreak," sold more than a million copies in the 1930s and some claim it is the most reproduced work in the history of art.

But he also was a tinkerer who built elaborate locks, laced his home with secret passages and imbedded empty brandy bottles in the masonry around it.

"I'm strictly a mechanic who paints," Parrish once said of the intricate touches he applied to his home, The Oaks, which he built on 50 acres of wildflower-sprinkled Plainfield countryside in 1898.

The late afternoon sky outside the rambling house is a deep, sharp blue. The artist captured the electric tone and it became so popular it was named after him: Parrish blue.

His fairy tale paintings and brooding, romantic portraits hang in the best art museums. But they also decorated millions of calendars, candy boxes and magazine covers.

Parrish lived at The Oaks until his death in 1966 at 96. The house takes its name from the huge, centuries-old oak trees that shade it. It is now a restaurant and country inn. It costs a visitor $54 to stay a night in Parrish's master bedroom, which provides an open 20-mile mountain view.

His studio opened this summer as the nation's first museum of his work.

"We're trying to create the atmosphere as it was when Mr. Parrish was alive," said Alma Gilbert, who runs The Oaks with her husband, Maurice, and is one of the nation's largest dealers in Parrish paintings.

Parrish was born to money and made more. He was used to the trappings of wealth and included Woodrow Wilson, William Jennings Bryan and Justice Learned Hand among his summer colony neighbors.

Parrish gained his first notices with fairy tale illustrations and eerily lit portraits of young women outdoors. He switched to landscapes in the 1930s. "I'm done with girls on the rocks," he said.

"Daybreak" was painted just before he switched to landscapes. It sold more than a million copies in three years and is the most reproduced paintin in the history of art, Mrs. Gilbert said.

The painting vanished from sight for 50 years, but reappeared several years ago when it was sold by the estate of Kitty Owen, Bryan's granddaughter and one of the models for the picture. Bryan had bought it and hid it from public view.

"Daybreak" now hangs in the museum on loan, as do dozens of other Parrish works, including his well known "Garden of Allah."

Parrish's paintings reveal unusual technique. Mrs. Gilbert said he made several delicate thumbprints in each of his paintings to add a final detail.

"I'm leaving a piece of me in them," he would say.

"A part of him maybe never grew up," Mrs. Gilbert said. "He just liked to play tricks."

The impish nature may have been the reason he built a secret room from which he could peer unseen into a living room. He built an "underground railway" in the studio basement to ferry logs from the woodpile to his chainsaw. He constructed elaborate locks and keys, ornate birdhouses and embedded in the masonry of the gate to his property several empty bottles that once contained fine brandy.

"That's part of the life of the bon vivant and I'm going to use them," he is quoted by Mrs. Gilbert as saying.

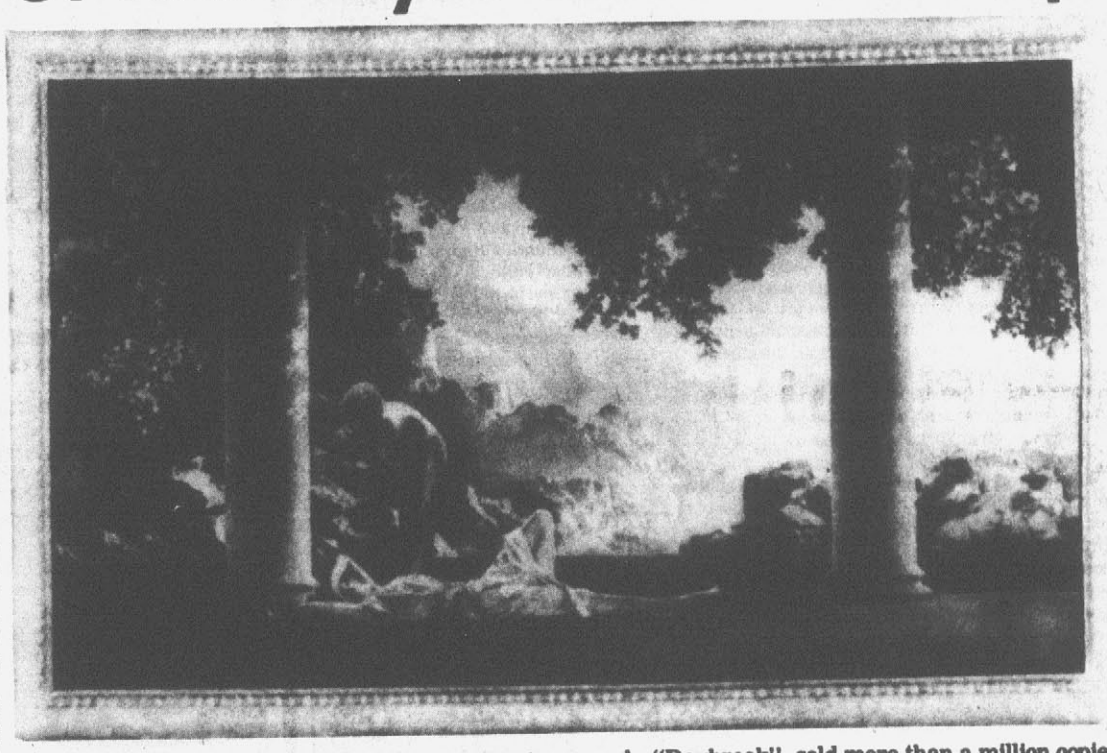

The house is dotted with secret passageways, including one from his living room to the bedroom of Sue Lllewelyn, who came to The Oaks to keep house when she was 16 and stayed 50 years.

"She was his housekeeper, model and — some say — his mistress," Mrs. Gilbert said.

After he became popular, Parrish joked that he had worn a groove in the side of one of his fireplaces because photographers asked him to pose there so often. His popularity dipped in the 1950s and 1960s, but is on the upswing again, Mrs. Gilbert said.

Today, his paintings sell for at least $10,000, and have doubled or tripled in value in the last decade, Mrs. Gilbert said. The best-known ones could command a quarter million dollars — if they were for sale.

Always a realist, he despaired of abstract art. "It's 99 percent imagination and one percent work," he said wen a modern art museum put on an exhibit of his work. "I try for my work to be the opposite."

Porn King Is A Wanted Man

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — During the "Sexy '60s" — boom times for sexually explicit writing and photography — Michael G. Thevis built a nationwide pornography empire.

He saw himself, in a 1971 interview, as "a businessman in an unusual business."

That unusual business was Thevis' ticket to riches, fame, a racketeering indictment alleging that he founded his fortune on murder and extortion, and to life on the run as one of the FBI's most wanted criminals.

The Reader's Digest dubbed him "The Sultan of Smut." In federal court in Dallas, Texas, an attorney for one of his codefendants described Thevis as "the most notorious fugitive from federal justice today save only Robert Vesco."

Serving eight and a half years on convictions for transportation of obscene materials in Atlanta, New Orleans and Jacksonville, Fla., and for arson conspiracy involving a warehouse fire in Louisville, Ky., Thevis likely would have been paroled this fall. But on April 28, he ambled out an unlocked side door of the county jail in New Albany, Ind.

At the time of his escape a four-year investigation into Thevis' unusual business was nearly complete. On June 10, a federal grand jury in Atlanta indicted Thevis under the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organization statute.

The indictment alleges that Thevis, an associate, two corporations and seven unindicted co-conspirators plotted to gain nationwide control of the pornography business, eliminating competition by murder, arson and extortion.

Specifically, the grand jurors said Thevis shot competitor Kenneth "Jap" Hanna to death in Atlanta in 1970 and ordered the murder of James Mayes, a Thevis bodyguard turned competitor. Dynamite sticks attached to Mayes' van exploded when Mayes turned the ignition switch on Sept 13, 1973.

The indictment alleges extortions in Fayetteville, N.C.; Nashville, Tenn.; New Orleans, Louisville, and Houston, and several attempts to murder a former Thevis aide cooperating with the government.

A separate count accuses Thevis, several attorneys and a doctor of attempting to fix a reduction of sentence hearing in New Orleans by bribery and by perjured testimony about Thevis' health. Among those indicted is James H. Morrison, a former U.S. Representative from Louisiana.

The 14-count, 28-page indictment, describes Thevis' enterprise as ruthless and thorough.

The 27th of 63 overt acts enumerated in count one of the indictment is the allegation that Thevis dispatched a man named Robert Mitchum to Houston in May 1971 to assault Joseph Anthony to persuade him to grant to the Thevis operation the right to distribute adult literature in the Houston area.

The 28th overt act listed says "Michael G. Thevis caused Roger Dean Underhill to obtain a Houston Police Department report on the assault of Joseph Anthony to confirm for Michael G. Thevis that Robert Mitchum had performed as directed."

Besides a lengthy prison term for Thevis, the government is hoping to cash in the pornography kingdom's assets, including property in downtown Atlanta, 350 acres of undeveloped land adjacent to Disney World in Orange County, Fla., and Thevis' $3 million mansion in north Atlanta.

The indictment also lays claim, under forfeiture provisions of the racketeering act, to the proceeds of a contract Thevis signed on April 28, 1978 — the day he escaped — selling all his adult businesses to his former secretary, Laverne Bowden, for $10.7 million.

The sales contract provides for payments of $12,000 per month into a trust fund for Thevis' five children and another $18,000 per month into an alimony trust fund. Thevis' divorce from his wife of 27 years was complete on May 3, a week after his escape.

Thevis' prison term was eventful, spiced by allegations that he contributed $400,000 to Jimmy Carter's presidential campaign hoping for favors from the administration. He and the Carter camp denied the reports.

U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young wrote two letters, one before and one after he resigned his Georgia congressional seat, supporting Thevis' request for a transfer within the prison system. Young described his intervention as a routine constituent service.

Thevis was kept in the New Albany jail while he testified in the trial of a civil suit in Louisville, Ky. Newspaper reports said Thevis, after payments to jail officials, was allowed unlimited telephone calls and visits and at least one unsupervised trip outside the jail. A grand jury report said he was given opportunities for sexual relations with his girlfriend, Patricia McLean.

Details of Thevis' unconventional confinement, which has been studied by two grand juries in Indiana, may enter the public record when Miss McLean, 29, is tried on charges of helping Thevis escape. The trial is scheduled to begin Monday in Atlanta.

Interviewed outside a federal courtroom recently, Miss McLean proposed that the government arranged Thevis' escape and killed him.

"I feel that the government wanted him out of the way so badly," she said. "If Mike is still with us and he is apprehended, I can almost make book with you that they will not bring him back alive."

Thevis, 56, was raised in Raleigh, N.C. by Greek immigrant grandparents after his parents divorced.

"I don't particularly remember any of my childhood friends and I doubt if they remember me," he said in the 1971 interview. "My grandparents were the greatest two people in the world but they had difficulty with the English language and this presented problems."

Thevis was 17 when he hitched a ride to Atlanta and 19 when he opened his first bookstore.

"I sensed that something was happening with reader demands in the early 1960s. Books that dealt with sex don't stay on the shelves very long," he said.

"So don't come at me with the business that I created the demand for sex books or sex magazines. The public, certain portions of it at least, created the demand. I set out to fill the vacuum."

Thevis made occasional attempts to rehabilitate his image, once offering to donate his opulent home for a school and to underwrite the restoration of a historic Atlanta theater.

Thevis also supported Little League baseball, symphony and opera performances and Atlanta's High Museum of Art, according to newspaper reports.

"I'll admit I'm very much concerned about what others in the community think about me," he said. "I would like very much to be well thought of. Everybody likes to make his mark and leave something behind.

"I'm no different in that respect from other men," he said. "But unfortunately it hasn't worked out exactly that way and I'm man enough to live with that, too."

Hayes Holds Lead With Birdie At 18

BY DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Mark Hayes reacted to pressure with a closing birdie to take a one-stroke lead over John Mahaffey and Gil Morgan after 54 holes Saturday in the $225,000 Pleasant Valley Golf Classic.

Starting two strokes up on the field, Hayes was caught first by Mahaffey and then by Morgan, but regained sole possession of the lead with a 12foot birdie putt on the 18th green.

A clutch putt gave him a third-round 69, 2-under-par and a 54-hole total of 202 — 11 under regulation equaling the PGA course record for the distance.

Mahaffey, the newly crownd PGA champion, started the day three strokes back, but picked up ground with a 4-under-par 67, which included birdies on his first four holes.

Morgan, the traveling optometrist cheered on by fellow employees of the sponsoring American Optical Co., moved into contention with a sizzling 5-under-par 66 despite bogeys on his first two holes.

Morgan moved into a share of the lead with a birdie on the 54th hole and a three-round score of 203. However, Hayes, trailing in the next threesome, finished his round with the birdie putt to regain the lead.

Australia's Graham Marsh shot a third-round 68 for a 204 score, just two strokes back heading into the windup of the 72-hole fight Sunday for first prize money of $45,000.

Defending champion Ray Floyd dropped to fourth place despite his 12th consecutive sub-par round at Pleasant Valley's 7,119-yard course since his first visit in 1965. Floyd had a 70 for a 54-hole total of 205.

Don Bies had a 67 for 206 while Miller Barber was another stroke back at 207, after shooting a 70 on a rain-soaked layout.

"I didn't putt very well today," said Hayes, the 1977 Tournament Players Association champion seeking his first victory on the tour this year.

"I hit the ball well from tee to green, but I didn't feel comfortable putting. I didn't make any long putts."

Hayes' round included two birdies and one bogey, on the 51st hole when Mahaffey pulled into a temporary tie for the lead.

Mahaffey, who broke a long slump by rallying from seven strokes behind and then winning the PGA championship last Sunday, quickly moved into a first-place tie while playing with Hayes in the third round. He sank putts from 10, 15, 15 and 20 feet for birdies on the first four holes, before taking a bogey on the sixth green.

"The way I started out, I felt I could shoot in the 50s," Mahaffey said. "Then I made the bogey and there was a little loss of concentration. Tomorrow, I'd like to hit it as well as I did today."

"I felt good but I ran into a couple of snags early with bogeys on the first two holes," Morgan said. "However, I salvaged a little after that with four birdies on the front nine. It's the best day I've putted.

"It would be kind of ironic if I could win this tournament. Of course, I'd like to win any oournament but this would be a plus because of the sponsor and my employer."

East Carolina Opens Drills Monday

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's football team began arriving on campus Friday, and will begin drills Monday morning as the Bucs open three weeks of pre-season practice.

The Pirates are scheduled to open the season, and their newly expanded Ficklen Stadium, on Saturday, September 2, when they entertain Western Carolina.

Coach Pat Dye, who enters the 1978 season as the tenth winningest coach in the country, will be going for a fifth straight winning year. Dye's four-year record at East Carolina is 32-12-0, giving him a .727 percentage. Dye, however, is not listed among the NCAA's top coaches since he has not completed five years as a head coach.

To keep that record intact, however, the Pirate coach and his staff have some work cut out for themselves. Dye feels that the Pirates could have their best team ever, but that the difficult schedule might take its toll.

Right away, the Pirates face the problem of replacing two potential starters lost from the defensive line. Wayne Poole was injured in spring practice and has not come around, and will sit out the season. Woodrow Stevenson has been lost due to academic reasons.

But all is not dark in these spots. D.T. Joyner, who had planned to concentrate on wrestling this year and return to football next fall, will take his senior season this year instead.

"Our first priority is to see what kind of physical condition the players reported back in," Dye said. "I'm real anxious to see those who have improved over the summer. There are always some surprises. These are the ones to whom football means a lot. Unfortunately, there are always the exceptions that go the other way." Physicals were to be held on Saturday.

"We're also going to take a good hard look at the freshmen as to their capabilities and where we can get help. We're going to try and do this in the first week and make decisions on who to get ready to play against Western Carolina."

Dye said the first week and a half would be used to get ready for the whole 11-game series, and the final week for direct preparation for Western Carolina.

"We've got a lot of offense to get worked into our game, and it's going to take quite a bit of time to get it all in," he said.

Actually, the Pirates are no longer a "pure" wishbone football team. "We never have been actually," Dye said. "But our opponents have to get ready to stop the wishbone, since this is our bread and butter."

Dye is also anxious to see what the quarterback situation is. "We need to find one or two people who can run the offense behind Leander Green. Steve Greer and Henry Trevathan will have the first shots at this. Then, we're also going to take a good look at the freshmen to see if they can help us here. We'll also be looking for freshmen to add depth at running back and nose guard.

"There are some other areas that we'll look closely at, but these are the principal ones," Dye added.

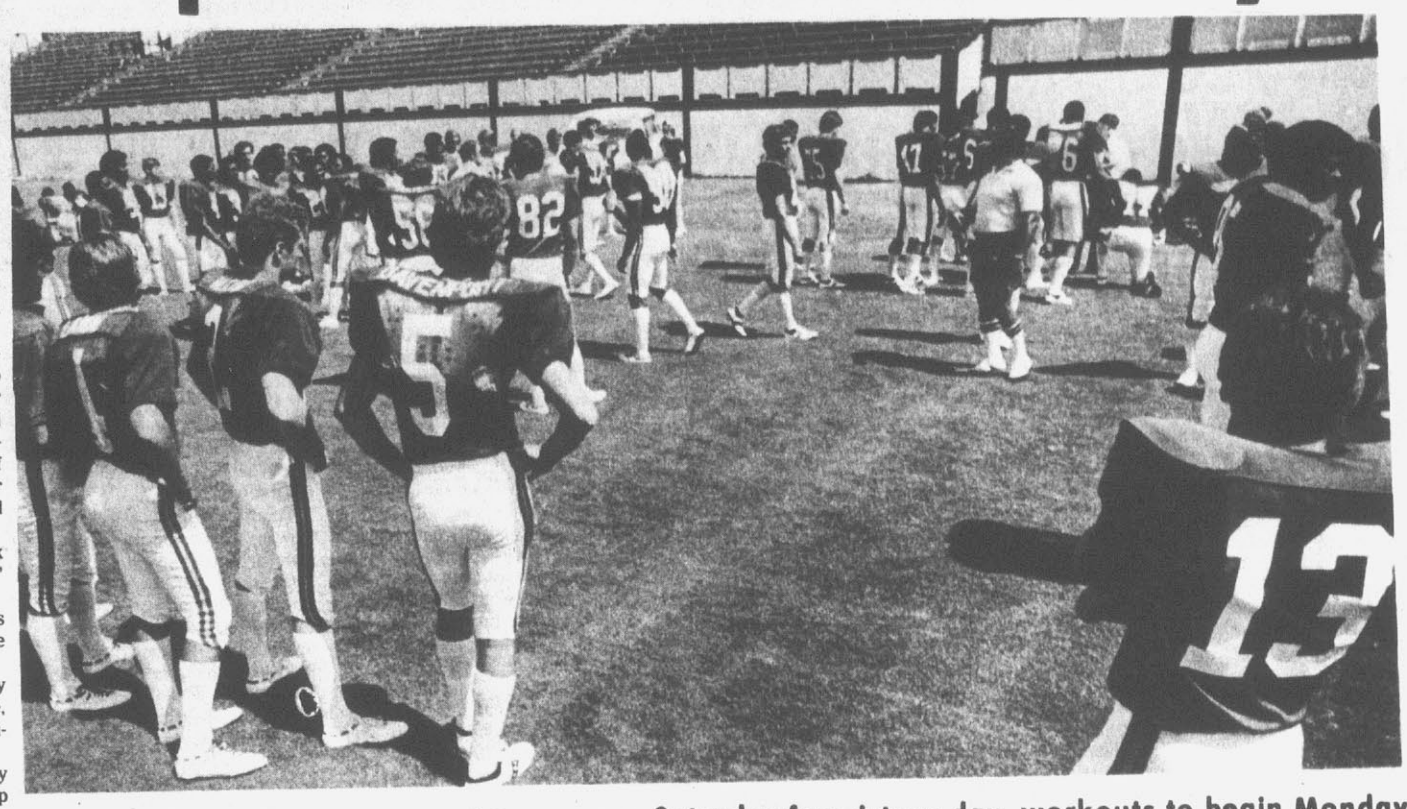

"We'll also be taking a look at our kickers right away to see if any of the newcomers are going to enter into the picture."

The Pirates will move through three-a-day drills for the first three days of practice. These, under NCAA rules, are without pads, for conditioning and learning.

After that, the Pirates will go to two-a-day drills until around August 24. "When we stop two-a-days will depend on our progress," he said.

Hitting won't be as heavy as in the spring, although the freshmen and newcomers will get some heavy work. "We won't hit any more than we have to," Dye said.

Following the home opener against Western Carolina, the Pirates go on the road for three straight tough games: N.C. State, the University of North Carolina, and Southwestern Louisiana.

Rankin Holds Stroke Lead In LPGA Event

MANHASSET, N.Y. (AP) — Judy Rankin, battling to playthe kind of golf that made her the leading money-winner in 1976 and 1977, shot a 3-underpar 70 Saturday afternoon for a 9-under 210 to retain first place in the $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament at the North Hills Country Club.

Debbie Massey, Rookie of the Year in 1977, moved from a tie for ninth place after two rounds to the runner-up spot by shooting a 67 on the par-73, 6,143yard course to put her at 212, seven under par.

Sally Little of South Africa, who was one stroke behind Rankin at tho midway point, dropped to third with a 5-under 214 by shooting a 73. Jane Blalock and Pam Higgins are tied for fifth at 215. Blalock matched par after two consecutive rounds of 71 while Higgins registered a 72.

Nancy Lopez, the current sensation of the tour with eight victories and a one-year earnings record of $153,097, had the seond best round on Saturday, a 69. However, she is 2-over at 221 because of a disasterous 79 on Thursday. "The only thing I can salvage the rest of ohis year is a couple of wins," smiled Rankin, winless after scoring five victories in 19778

"I realized this a few weeks ago," she added. "I've been in a slump because of a bad back that caused me to change to a different swing. Today is as good as I've felt all year.

"I've felt like this a couple of times, but I've never been in contention. I've only three-putted once in the three rounds. That was on the 17th today."

Now that she has put three good rounds together, does Rankin feel she has the tourney won.

'What happens if Debbie (Massey) shoots another 67?" shot back the 16-year veteran of the tour. "I feel that I need another sub-par round.

"The course has played wellh When I woke up this morning it was raining buckets and I didn't think we'd be able to play at all. Suddenly the rain stopped, the sun came out and everything is fine. It's nice being the leader instead of having to chase someone."

Foyt On Fair Pole

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Veteran driver A.J. Foyt ran just one qualifying lap instead of the regulation two Saturday but won the pole position for Sunday's Fair Week 200-mile U.S. Auto Club stock car race.

The 43-year-old Foyt, from Houston, set a track record as he guided his 1978 Chevrolet Camaro around the one-mile paved oval at the Wisconsin State Fair in suburban West Allis in 32.59 seconds, for a speed of 110.463 miles per hour.

The time was one hundredth of a second faster than the mark that had been held by Dave Watson of Milton, Wis., who was the second fastest qualifier Saturday.

Watson won the pole for the previous four USAC stock car events here. Driving a Buick Skylark, he turned in a time of 32.88 seconds and speed of 109.489 mph to share the front row of the 32-car field with Foyt. Ramo Stott of Keokuk, Iowa, qualified third in a Plymouth Volare.

The race, first of three USAC races during the 11-day Wisconsin State Fair, is scheduled to start at 1:30 p.m. Sunday.

Bowa Leads Philadelphia Past Shell-Shocked Pittsburgh, 10-1

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Larry Bowa had just helped Philadelphia batter the Pittsburgh Pirates 10-1 on national television and Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner was impressed by the Phillies shortstop.

Bowa doubled, tripled, drove in one run, scored twice and played well defensively despite his first error in 39 games and only his fifth of the season.

"There is nobody in the National League having a better year than Bowa," said Tanner of the little infielder who has hit in 22 of the last 27 games — 41-for-106, an average of .387.

"He's giving them (the Phillies) the clutch RBI and plays defense better then any shortstop in baseball," Tanner added, "and he's a team leader.

"If he doesn't make MVP, it's a mistake. If they want to have a banquet I'll present him with a trophy. As they say, he's hell-bent for election," said Tanner. "It's what inside his belly that makes him great."

The 32-year old Bowa, who was the central figure in an argument with a baseball writer early in the week, played Saturday with a bruised right rib cage. He was injured in a collision with Willie Stargell Friday.

Bowa wore some tape holding an ice packet on the damaged area for three innings, then tore the contraption off and went three more innings before leaving with the Phillies ahead by nine runs.

The 160-pound Bowa, who is hitting .308, still is angry at the press and refused to talk with Philadelphia writers although he went on the Phillies' postgame radio show.

Bowa got a standing ovation from the crowd of 30,110 after his sixth inning triple.

In addition to Bowa's offensive contribution, Greg Luzinski and Bob Boone each hit two-run homers in the sixth, the 28th for Luzjnski and a career-high 11 for Boone.

The benefactor of this offense was Randy Lerch, 7-7, who allowed three hits in eight innings. Warren Brusstar pitched the ninth.

The Phillies erased a 1-0 Pittsburgh lead accomplished on Bill Robinson's third-inning homer with two in the third on just one hit.

Rampants Young, Inexperienced, But Have Numbers, Enthusiasm

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rose High School's football practice wound up its second week of drills Friday evening, and will start two-a-day work in pads on Monday.

Coach Dave Bumgarner is quite pleased with the number of players out for the team this year, and notes that a generous portion of the group, although young, will play a leading role in this year's Rampant roster.

"This is the largest group of people we've ever had out," Bumgarner said. "We have a lot of juniors and sophomores, but not too many seniors. Having this number out is very pleasing, and some of these newcomers are going to see a lot of action."

While Bumgarner emphasized that none of the positions are set, he expects potential starters to start making themselves known in the coming days.

"We have only 12 lettermen back, and just seven of those were starters," he said.

So this is a rebuilding year? No, not quite, according to the coach.

"It's about half-and-half rebuilding. We have some junior varsity players from last year that we know can step right up to the varsity and do the job. They will play an important role for us.

"But at the same time, we have a lot of newcomers who are inexperienced and we're having to do a lot of teaching," Bumgarner said. "That's the biggest thing we are doing now—teaching."

The coach said there have been no big surprises so far in practice. "We knew that these JV people could do the job, and we've been pleased with a lot of the sophomores. We also have some people out who are playing for the first time at this level. Derwin Clemons has come out (junior) and he's going to play a lot. Dennis Ross (senior) is out for the first time and has looked good at wide receiver and could play a lot."

Bumgarner said that it was probably that several players would be going both ways, one of whom, junior Ron Butler returned at a solid 230 pounds. "He's not got an ounce of flab on him, either," Bumgarner said.

"Our kicking game should be improved, especially the punting. Ted King has worked hard in the off-season and is kicking the ball good. We also have Garrett Young and Mike Williams punting, so we've got a good group."

If there was a disappointment so far, however, it was the absence of place kicker Yousef Barakat, who moved to Texas during the summer. "King is expected to be an adequate replacement here too.

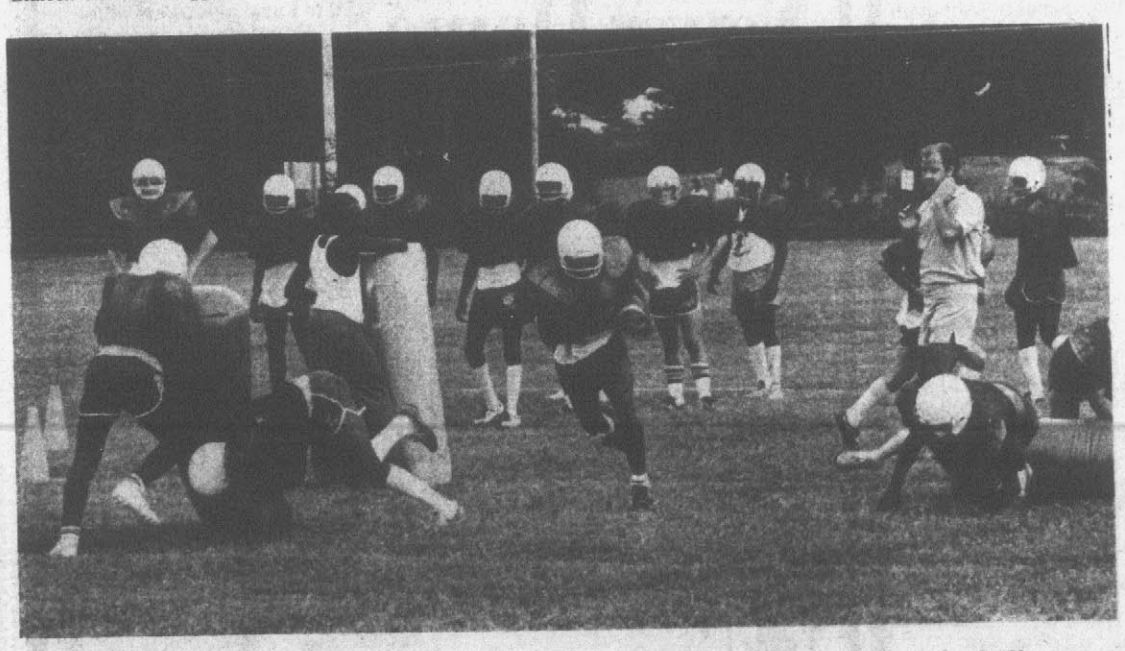

"Nearly everyone back is in pretty good shape, too," Bumgarner added.

Following this week's first sessions of hitting, Bumgarner expectes to hold an intra-squad scrimmage on Saturday.

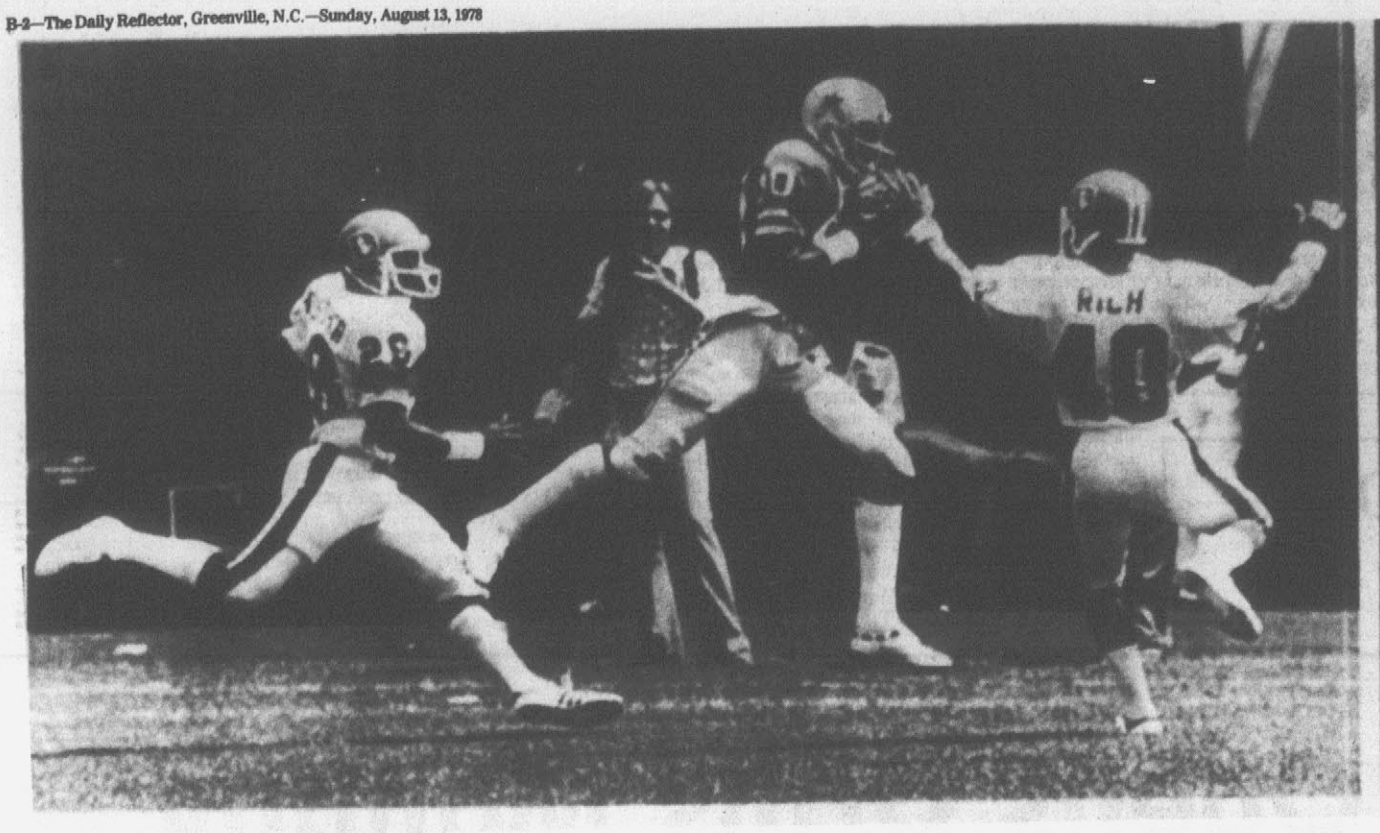

Then, on August 24, the Rampants will travel to Williamston High School for their scrimmage game.

"We expect to keep about 50 of the players on the varsity, with the other 40 on the junior varsity," the coach said. "There will be several juniors on the jv unit. We have about 30 juniors out, the largest group ever, and we expect about eight or nine of them to grab starting positions on offense. A lot of them may also be playing on the defensive unit."

Last year's junior varsity squad had one of its best records, going 6-2. The loses were by 14-7 to Goldsboro and 14-12 to Rocky Mount.

Touchdown For Dallas

Off-Season For NBA? It's As Wacky As Ever

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

There's been nothing "off" about The National Basketball Association off-season.

There have been more qacky developments since the last dunk was slammed and the last rebound cleared than there were in the eight months it took to crown the Washington Bullets as NBA champions for 1977-78.

Bill Walton's stunning announcement that he's had enough of life as a Portland Trail Blaser because he doesn't like the club's medical practices is the latest in a series of unusual events that have made it easy for basketball fans to survive the summer.

In case you've been lolling on the sand somewhere, in communicado with the basket-ball world, here's just a part of what you've missed:

The Philadelphia 76ers, stopped short of the title once again despite their dazzling, starstudded lineup, decided to swap Gaorge McGinnis to Denver in a package deal that would bring them the Nuggets' Bobby Jones.

The clubs agreed on the trade, but they did not get the consent of the players — a crucial mistake in this day and age, where the inmates run the auqlum.

Since both McGinnis and Jones have complex contracts that include restrictions on trades, that deal is in limbo, where it hss remained for the past two months. Neither player is signing any long-term apartment leases.

John Y. Brown, tired of emp ty seats in Buffalo, decided to look around for a new home. He barnstormed through Louisville, Birmingham, Miami, Min neapolis, Dallas and points in between, deciding they were all nice places to visit but he wouldn't want to put a franchise there.

To the rescue came Boston Celtics owner Irv Levin, the same gentleman who was booed so lustily by the local folks the day John Havlicek hung up his uniform. It seems the fans in Beantown lay much of the blame for the Celtics'-decline on Levin, a California businessman who commuted 3,000 miles to run his basketball team.

Levin made Brown an offer he couldn't refuse: his ownership of the Celtics for Brown's Buffalo team, which Levin promptly transferred to San Diego so he could be close to home.

There was some squawking from folks who had trouble pic turing the colorful Brown, head maverick from the ABA, in control of the tradition-steeped Celtics. But eventually the franchise swap was approved; after all, would you rather take a midwinter road trip to Buffalo or San Diego?

That posed a problem for Red Auerbach, for so many years the essence of the Celtics. Could he work with a dominating owner like Brown0

The obvious answer was no, and Auerbach knew it. He shopped around for a new job and almost became president of the arch-rival New York Knicks before being talked out of the move by Celtics players, former players and fans, including one of the pilots on the Eastern Airlines shuttle from New york to Boston.

It was a case of reverse skyjacking — the pilot telling the passenger where to go.

Remember Rick Barry, the original basketball gypsy who was switching teams and leagues in the 1960s, long before it became fashionable?

Well, Barry did it again, jumping the Golden State Warriors for the second time and landing with the Houston Rockets, who fueled his engines with a two-year, $1 million contract.

"Basketball is a business, just like everything else," said Barry, the most businesslike of players.

In other free agent moves, Dan Roundfield went from Indiana to Atlanta, Alex English from Milwaukee to Indiana, Kevin Kunnert from Houston to San Diego via Boston, Kevin Stacom from Boston to Indiana and Joe Pace from Washington to Boston.

All of which drew considerable yawns around the league, since of those five only Roundfield was a regular past season.

Marvin Webster, another free agent, spent the summer deciding whether he wanted to stay in Seattle or move to New York.

Seattle Mayor Charles Royer threatened to declare the 7-foot Webster a high-rise and have him re-zoned us a natural resource, making it illegal for him to leave town.

The situation is still up in the air, if you'll pardon the expression.

While other players bask in the sun, Kent Benson has been playing in the Southern California Summer League in an effort to prove that the guy who played for the Milwaukee Bucks last winter was an imposter.

He's leading that league in scoring under the tutelage of Bucks assistant coach John Killelea. Apparently he has changed his attitude as well, vowing to approach the coming season more aggressively. That could be all young Bucks need to climb to the top of the Midwest Division.

The Governors also decided to experiment with the ABA's three-point goal in preseason, making Louie Dampier of the San Antonio Spurs a very happy man. If adopted, the "homerun shot" could add years to the career of the 33-year-old Dampier, whose 794 career three-pointers topped the ABA.

Warren Jabali, Chico Vaughn, Stew Johnson and Billy Keller were last seen heading to the playgrounds to limber up the old rifles, just in case.

Finally, the New Jersey Nets made a key mistake last week — they forgot to pay their lawyers. You can juggle your other creditors ad infinitum, but when you don't pay your lawyers, you're headed for trouble.

The Nets' lawyers got a court order impounding the team's uniforms and equipment, some 118 items ranging from a videotape deck to sweat socks. Unless the lawyers get paid, all will be sold at auction.

Racquetball Rapidly Spreading Across U.S.

By CHRISTY BARBEE
AP Sports Writer

Racquetball is something like snapping a towel, even though it looks a lot harder.

It doesn't take as long to learn as tennis does, women can compete at the same level as men, and some people estimate that it uses five times the number of calories that tennis does.

pooh-poohed by some purists as barely a sport, little more than another venture to cash in on the ready American sports dollar, racquetball is nonetheless spreading at about the sume velocity as a rubber ball flying off a wall.

A survey by the National Sporting Goods Manufacturing Association indicates 5.5 million are playing now, hulf of them having started in the last year. About 30 percent of all players are women. The figures are based on equipment sules, so doesn't necessarily reflect how many people stay with it.

But on the basis of a Nielson survey of a broad cross section of players and nonppayers, manufacturers predict that racquetball madness will have gripped 10 million by the end of 1979.

Why?

If you like racket sports, even if you're not particularly good at tennis or squash, even if you're not very patient, you've got a chance of learning and liking racquetball.

"It's what we call an immediate success sport. You can reach the enjoyment level in 10 minutes," says Joy Koppel, a teaching pro from Huntington Beach, Calif., who is the racquetball promotion manager and women's sports adviser to AMF Inc.

Two, three or four can play at a time. The first person or team to win 21 points wins; you needn't have a 2-point victory margin. A match is best two of three games — so a match usually takes less than an hour. If the first two sets are split, the tiebreaker is the third game, and it goes only to 11 points.

Played in an enclosed court so that every dimension is a playing surface (40 feet long, 20 feet wide and 20 feet high), racquetball is a very noisy game, not to mention hectic.

The object is to hit the ball so your opponent can't return it to the front wall. It must be returned without bouncing on the floor. After the serve, balls can be hit on the fly or on the rebound from any of the walls.

The service area is bound by two lines in the front court, five feet wide and stretching all the way across the court (There is no net). You stand in the box, bounce the ball and hit it into the front wall for the serve. It can rebound off of one other wall after striking the front. The serve is good when it bounces on the floor behind the short line (rear line of the service box).

As in tennis, there are faults and double faults.

Your opponent, standing at least five feet behind the service area until service is complete, gets a crack at it then, and can play it against any surface so long as one of them is fro wall.

Be prepared. The angles are confusing at first — duck and cover! is not an uncommon instinct. The novice's solace is that the soft, rubber ball doesn't sting for very long.

It's each player's responsibility to get out of the way of his opponent. If the ball hits a player or any object other than floor or walls, a "hinder" is called and the point replayed.

The wrist action in the stroke is entirely different from the stiff-wrist stroke of tennis. With the thong at the end of the short racket wrapped around your wrist, you bring you arm down from a raised position, cocking the wrist as you go, so that you're actually making a dual sweeping motion, arm and wrist. Think of swatting at something with a towel.

Racquetball has another set of advantages. Court time and the equipment — racket, ball and optional eye guard — are generally less expensive than in tennis.

Hill, Hegman Help Cowboys

By JOHN MOSSMAN
AP Sports Writer

DENVER (AP) — Tony Hill and Mike Hegman, battling for starting jobs with the Dallas Cowboys, saw their stock soar Saturday in a rematch of last January's Super Bowl teams.

Hill, who along with Hegman played insignificant roles in Super Bowl XII, caught touchdown passes of 16 and 29 yards in the Cowboy's 21-14 National Football League preseason victory over the Denver Broncos.

"Look, I'm trying to get a job, I've got to catch the ball," said Hill, a second-year pro from Stanford who caught only two passes all last season. "I want to play. I think I deserve the opportunity."

Hegman, who returned an interception 66 yards for the Cowboys' other score, was asked if he thought his performance might enable him to break into the starting line-up.

"I just hope I can make the team," he said.

Hegman said he "set up" Denver quarterback Norris Weese on the interception.

"I think he (Weese) thought I was beat. He waited too long, so I trailed the tight end a couple of yards. I read it all the way. Really, it was too easy, but I did kind of bobble it a little."

Dallas Coach Tom Landry said there was no comparison between this game and the Super Bowl.

"Our guys aren't ready yet," Landry said. "We've got a ways to go. Our guys have been in training camp and they're tired."

Denver Coach Red Miller said a major difference from the Super Bowl was that "our offensive line handled their defensive line better than last time."

"Up until that interception, we were with them all the way," added Miller. "Given more time, I think we could have caught them."

The triumph boosted the Cowboys' exhibition record to 2-0 and dropped Denver to 1-1.

Hegman's interception, the Cowboy's second such theft for a score in as many games, produced a 21-7 lead early in the fourth quarter. The third-year pro from Tennessee State darted in front of a Denver receiver, grabbed Norris Weese's aerial and ran untouched down the left sideline.

But the Broncos refused to quit. Weese hit Haven Moses on passes of 23, 13 and 18 yards, helping set up rookie Dave Preston's 8-yard scoring run around the left side with 3:32 left.

Hill snared a 16-yard scoring pass from Roger Staubach in the second quarter, and added a 29-yard reception from Danny White in the third quarter.

We Think You Should Know Why You May Not Get To See A Carolina Football Game This Year

Just a few seasons ago, it was easy to get seats to a Tar Heel Football game at the last minute. Sell-outs were rare and some games were played in Kenan Stadium with more than a third of the stands empty.

During those years, the easy availability of tickets was a convenience for fans and never caused a serious financial problem to the Carolina Athletic Department. Then, almost overnight, the cummulative effect of inflation and a greatly expanded women's athletic program changed all that. Then it did become a problem—a serious one.

That's when you began seeing the sizzling letters spelling "Carolina Fever" on billboards, mailing pieces, TV commercials and newspaper ads beckoning fans to Kenan Stadium. And as they always do, Carolina fans came through in record numbers, filling Kenan to the brim and greatly strengthening the total Carolina Athletic program in the process.

This year, the "Fever" is epidemic as Tar Heel fans everywhere await the dawn of a new football era under highly regarded Coach Dick Crum. Ticket sales have been incredible. We even had to eliminate Band Day to accommodate some of the demand. Although seats were still available at this writing, we now expect that none will be left for ANY Carolina game by the time the season begins.

If there are still tickets remaining by the time you read this, you may want to get them now, while the getting is good, at the main branch of NCNB in your city. If they're gone by the time you get there, we apologize for the inconvenience and hope you will understand.

And to our Carolina fans everywhere who have supported Tar Heel Football so magnificently of late, we would like to take this opportunity to extend our deepest appreciation.

CAROLINA FEVER

Minnesota Homers Carry Twins Past Oakland, 6-3

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Butch Wynegar's two-run homer and a solo blast by Roy Smalley lifted Minnesota Twins to a 6-3 victory over the Oakland A's Saturday.

The Twins staked Perzanowski to a 2-0 lead in the fourth when Wynegar delivered his two-run homer over the right-field fence. Mike Cubbage had singled in front of Wynegar's fourth homer of the year.

The Twins added two runs in the fifth off A's starter Steve Renko, 6-7. Rod Carew singled with one out, then Dan Ford singled to right. Carew, running on the pitch, scored from first when right fielder Dell Alston let Ford's ball get by him. Ford, who took second on the play, later scored on Jose Morales' bloop single off reliever Bob Lacey.

Oakland scored in the sixth when Mike Edwards walked and scored on Alston's double. They added a pair of runs in the ninth on Willie Horton's RBI single.

Rangers Win, 6-1

CLEVELAND (AP) — Doyle Alexander and Len Barker combined for a 10-hitter and Kurt Bevacqua unloaded a three-run homer to lead the Texas Rangers to a 6-1 victory over Cleveland Saturday afternoon.

Alexander, 7-8, allowed seven singles in his seven innings. He fanned four and allowed no walks.

The Rangers took the lead for good with a run in the first inning off loser David Clyde, 5-7.

In the fourth inning, Oliver singled and went to second on a groundout by Bobby Bonds. Clyde then intentionally walked Richie Zisk and Bevacqua followed with a home run, his third of the season.

The Rangers added two more runs in the fifth inning to knock Clyde out of the game.

Denny Tosses One-Hitter At Mets As Cardinals Take Win

NEW YORK (AP) — John Denny pitched no-hit baseball for six innings before John Stearns beat out an infield single to second base for the Mets' only hit as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated the New York Mets 5-1 Saturday.

Roy Thomas pitched the last two innings for St. Louis.

Stearns' ground ball bounced slowly toward second with Cardinals second baseman Mike Tyson charging it, fielding it barehanded and throwing offbalance on the run. First base umpire Paul Pryor signalled safe and seemingly pointed to first baseman Roger Freed's foot, indicating it was off the base. The official scorer immediately ruled it a base hit.

The only run scored off Denny, 9-8, was unearned and resulted from a throwing error by St. Louis shortstop Garry Templeton in the fourth inning. With one out, Denny walked Lee Mazzilli, who advanced to second on a forceout. Stearns then grounded to Templeton, who overthrew first base, allowing Mazzilli to score all the way from second.

The Cardinals opened the scoring in the first inning off Mets starter Kevin Kobel, 2-3. Templeton doubled to left, went to third on a long fly and scored on George Hendrick's sacrifice fly to center.

In the second, singles by Jerry Morales and Steve Swisher, a walk to Tyson and a double by Templeton netted three runs.

St. Louis Manager Ken Boyer sent Jerry Mumphrey up to hit for Denny in the top of the eighth after the Cardinals had scored their fifth run. Denny pitched seven innings, allowed one hit, one unearned run, walked three and struck out four.

Sox Top Brewers

BOSTON (AP) — Carlton Fisk had two hits, including a homer, and Butch Hobson had a pair of hits to support the sixhit pitching of Jim Wright as the Boston Red Sox downed Milwaukee 3-1 Saturday in the first game of a day-night doubleheader.

Bob Stanley, 8-1, was scheduled to pitch the nightcap for Boston against Mike Caldwell, 14-6.

Wright, 7-2, allowed just three hits over the first six innings and was reached for a run in the seventh when Gorman Thomas doubled home Dick Davis, who had singled.

Second baseman Jerry Remy doubled off loser Bill Travers, 7-7, in the first to extend his hitting streak to 15 games. He scored when Fisk singled with two out.

With two out and two on via walks in the second, Burleson drove home a run with a single through Travers' legs, extending his personal hitting streak to 16 games.

Twardzik, Gross Deny Pain-Killer Pressure

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Two Portland Trail Blazer players who say they took numerous pain-killing injections, say they never felt pressured to take them. The team's medical practices have been sharply criticized by center Bill Walton, who has asked to be traded by the the 1977 National Basketball Association champion team.

The Blazers have refused t comment.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Walton said he may have a second meeting with Scotty Sterling, general manager of the Golden State Warriors. A Tuesday meeting was scheduled with Irv Levin, owner of the new San Diego franchise.

Guards Dave Twardzik forward Bob Gross said they have nothing but respect for the team and its doctor, Robert Cook. Gross, who sat out the last part of the season with injuries, said he felt Cook was being criticized unjustly.

"For my money, Dr. Cook is the best sports medicine man around," Twardzik said. "There is no way that they can force you to take an injection. Any injection taken is left up to the player.

"If you don't feel you can play, all you have to do is come in and say, 'Hey, my ankle is too sore. I don't think I can go.'"

Twardzik said he had injections "in my ankle, my hip, my tailbone and my wrist."

"Before you take an injection, Dr. Cook lays it on the line. He tells you if it could lead to something more damaging."

Walton, his left foot back in a cast since Friday, is spending the weekend mulling over efforts by four teams to acquire him.

Attorney John Bassett said the cast would not slow negotiations and that Walton is available to undergo the physical examination a bidding team would require.

"There was still some pain in the foot and the doctor felt that it was in Bill's best interest to have the cast put back on," Bassett said.

The Blazers announced Aug. 4 that they would try to trade Walton at his request. Since then, Walton and his agents have met with officials of the New York Knicks, Golden State Warriors, Philadelphia 76ers and the San Diego Clippers.

Trevino Captures Win In English Playoff

YORK, England (AP) — American Lee Trevino won on the fourth hole in a tense playoff Saturday to take the $19,000 top prize in an international golf tournament at Fulford.

Trevino, victim of two sudden-death defeats this year, beat Britain's Neil Coles and Australian Noel Ratcliffe after all three had finished with 10under-par four-round totals of 274.

Trevino won the play-off after Coles cut his drive into the trees. Ratcliffe had 3-putted on the first, leaving the more experienced pair to battle it out.

The first three play-off holes were halved, but Coles could not recover from his bad drive at the fourth and missed a 10yard putt for a half.

Success was sweet for Trevino. He lost a sudden death confrontation with Andy Bean in June, and a marathon eight hole play-off with Lee Elder in Milwaukee.

When the event started Saturday in cold, damp weather, Trevino — who suffers from a bad back — appeared to be in trouble. But he stayed in contention with a remarkable display of chipping and putting.

He had a brilliant round of 66 — 5-under-par — and played the shot of the tournament at the fourth hole, when from 200 yards he holed a 1-iron for an eagle-2.

Ratcliffe also grabbbed an eagle, at the ninth, but lost his way after the turn, while defending champion Severiano Ballesteros and local favorite Nick Faldo — the third round leaders — both fell narrowly short.

Both failed to get the needed birdie at the last hole to join the play-off.

Ballesteros had earlier dealt his chances a bad blow when he took a triple-bogey 7 at the fourth. With typical dash he charged back into contention with birdies at the 11th and 12th, followed by an eagle at the next, where he chipped in from 25 yards. His chances finally evaporated on the 15th where he 3-putted.

Magazine Seeks To Print Issue

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Publishers of a magazine about Muhammad Ali will appeal a court judgement preventing them from selling the magazine until a month after Ali fights Leon Spinks here Sept. 15.

"We know it is freedom of the press and we're not infringing on anybody's right," said Drew Brown III, 23-yearold guiding force behind the publication and son of one of Ali's long-time trainers.

He said an appeal would be filed Monday with the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on behalf of himself, editor Richard Tonn and SRA Associates Inc. of Dallas, of which Brown is sports director.

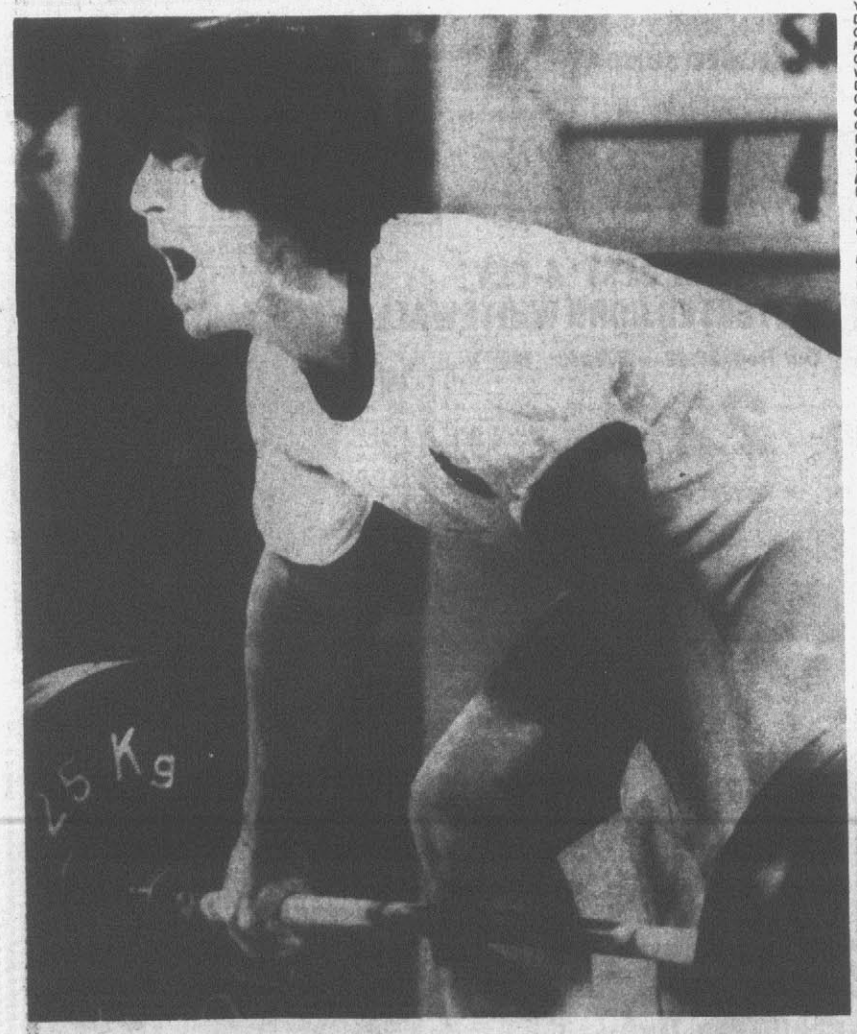

Meanwhile, 20,000 copies of "Muhammad Ali ...The Third Comeback" are soaking up moisture in storage here following the court injunction Friday.

U.S. District Judge Adrian G. Duplantier ruled that the 74page magazine violated a clause in the $3 million contract that gave the New Orleans promoters of the heavyweight title bout exclusive rights to souvenirs.

But Duplantier ordered the promoters, Louisiana Sports Inc., to put up a $25,000 cash bond in case an appeals court decides later that the magazine does not constitute a souvenir.

"My book is not a souvenir. It's about Ali and his family," said Brown, son of Drew Bundini Brown Jr., who has been among Ali's trainers since 1963, before which he worked with Sugar Ray Robinson.

Los Angeles Moves Into First Place; Giants Tumble To Third

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Cinderella took a fall Friday night in the National League West and was replaced by some familiar faces.

The storybook tale of the San Francisco Giants, who have led the NL West for most of the season, took a turn for the worse when the defending NL champion Dodgers beat them 4-3 and took over first place in the division. The Giants dropped behind Cincinnati into third place as the Reds blanked San Diego 2-0.

Giants reliever Randy Moffitt walked Bill North with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth to force in the winning run as the Dodgers won their fourth straight against San Francisco and their seventh game in a row.

Joe Ferguson pinch-hit a oneout single in the ninth and Lee Lacy singled with two out. Moffitt took over for loser Gary Lavelle, 9-9, walked Dave Lopes and then faced North.

Ron Cey, who homered to put Los Angeles ahead 3-2 in the sixth, only to see Mike Ivie's pinch-hit RBI single tie it in the ninth, warned against anyone expecting overconfidence in the Dodgers.

Elsewhere in the NL, Montreal blanked the Cubs 1-0, Atlanta did the same to Houston, Philadelphia pummeled Pittsburgh 15-4 and St. Louis outlasted the Mets 4-1 in 12 innings.

Reds 2, Padres 0

George Foster doubled home Dave Concepcion from first base in the ninth, then the Reds added an insurance run when Johnny Bench and Ken Henderson walked to load the bases and relief pitcher Doug Bair singled home Foster.

Bair, who relieved Bill Bonham and got his fifth victory in nine decisions, combined with the Cincinnati starter for a seven-hitter.

Expos 1, Cubs 0

Ross Grimsley beat the Cubs for the third time this season with a two-hitter. The lefthander, 14-8, was reached for singles by Manny Trillo in the second and Bill Buckner in the seventh.

Dennis Lamp, who lost his 12th game in 17 decisions, has been pitching well all year despite his poor record. The only run scored off the rookie, who gave up just four hits, came in the sixth. Dave Cash reached on an error by Trillo leading off, moved to third on Andre Dawson's double and scored on Tony Perez' sacrifice fly to deep center.

Braves 1, Astros 0

Larry McWilliams and Gene Garber combined on a three-hitter and Dale Murphy drove in the only run with a sixth-inning single as the Braves edged Houston.

McWilliams, 5-0 since being promoted to the majors, defeated the Astros for the second time in a week and Garber registered his 19th save of the season. A one-out single by Jeff Burroughs and a walk to Joe Nolan preceded Murphy's game-winning hit.

Phillies 15, Pirates 4

The Phillies erupted for nine runs in the third inning and five more in the sixth to blast the Pirates. They had seven hits and sent up 13 batters in the third.

Steve Carlton, breezing to his 11th victory, had two hits and three RBI. Greg Luzinski belted his 27th homer and Bake McBride had his fourth for the Phillies.

Cardinals 4, Mets 1, 12 innings

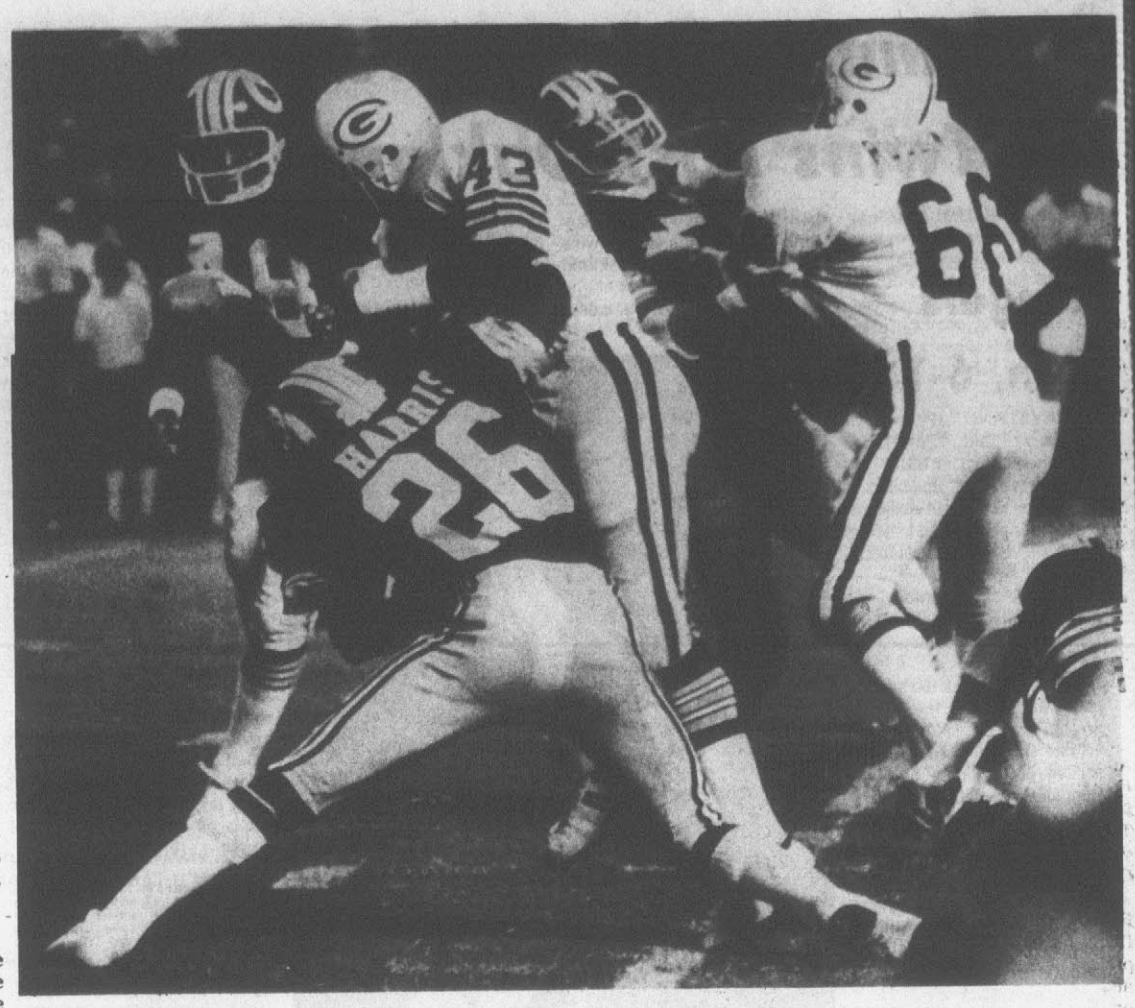

Garry Templeton's two-run double in the 12th broke a 1-1 tie and gave St. Louis its victory.

Starters Silvio Martinez for the Cards and Jerry Koosmn for the Mets matched scoreless innings until Tony Scott homered for St. Louis in the eighth. The Mets tied it in the bottom of the inning on a bases-loaded walk to John Stearns.

Nancy Lopez, who has won eight Ladies Professional Golf Association tournaments this year, walks off the 18th green Friday after a par 73 second round at the North Hills Country Club's $100,000 tournament in Manhasset, N.Y. Billingham Claims Seventh In Row For Streaking Tiger Nine

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Bet you can't you name the eight major league pitchers who posted at least 10 victories in each of the past eight seasons. There's Tom Seaver, Steve Carlton, Phil Niekro, Gaylord Perry, Bert Blyleven, Don Sutton, Ferguson Jenkins and...er, uh...

Would you believe Jack Billingham?

The 35-year-old right-hander, acquired from Cincinnati last spring, won his seventh game in a row with a six-hitter and boosted his record to 12-5 Friday night as the streaking Detroit Tigers downed the Chicago White Sox.

It was the sixth complete game in the last 10 starts for Billingham, who finished what he began only 62 times in 252 National League starts with Los Angeles, Houston and Cincinnati.

The victory was the 16th in the last 20 games for the fourth-place Tigers, who trail first-place Boston by 8½ games in the tightening American League East. The Red Sox' lead over New York was sliced to 6½ games when they lost to Milwaukee — the third-place Brewers are eight games out — while the Yankees edged the Baltimore Orioles 2-1 in a game halted by rain after 5½ innings.

Elsewhere, the Kansas City Royals outlasted the Toronto Blue Jays 9-8 in 10 innings, the California Angels downed the Seattle Mariners 3-1, the Texas Rangers trimmed the Cleveland Indians 8-2 and the Oakland A's blanked the Minnesota Twins 20 before losing the doubleheader nightcap 3-2.

Lou Whitaker drove in three runs with a double and a sacrifice fly, Rusty Staub delivered a two-run single and Mickey Stanley rapped out two hits in Detroit's six-run third inning.

Brewers 10, Red Sox 5

Gorman Thomas blasted a two-run homer and Ben Oglivie drove in three runs and collected a double and three singles as the Brewers pounded out 19 hits and snapped a five-game losing streak. Milwaukee's assault on Luis Tiant and two relievers included five doubles while Sal Bando had three hits.

Thomas' 26th homer of the season came in a three-run second inning and the Brewers chased Tiant in a two-run fifth.

Yankees 2, Orioles 1

Baltimore shortstop Kiko Garcia's wild throw on an attempted inning-ending double play relay allowed New York's two runs to score. Catfish Hunter, whose string of 17 consecutive scoreless innings was snapped by Ken Singleton's first-inning homer, allowed four hits before the umpires stopped the game in the bottom of the sixth. It was called after a wait of 2 hours and 27 minutes.

Royals 9, Blue Jays 8

Clint Hurdle, who tied the game with a two-run homer in the eighth inning, singled home the winning run in the 10th after Fred Patek drew a two-out walk from Victor Cruz and stole second. The Royals tied the score when Patek beat out an infield hit with two out in the eighth and Hurdle hit his fifth homer. Amos Otis also homered for Kansas City while Alan Ashby, Rico Carty and John Mayberry connected for Toronto.

Angels 3, Mariners 1

Joe Rudi hit his ninth home run and Nolan Ryan hurled a two-hitter as California remained 1½ games behind Kansas City in the AL West. Ryan struck out 10 and had a one-hitter until Dan Meyer delivered a run-scoring single with two out in the ninth inning following a pair of walks.

Rangers 8, Indians 2

Bobby Bonds and Juan Beniquez rapped two-run homers and Jon Matlack scattered 12 hits for his first road victory of the season. Bonds' 22nd homer of the season followed a leadoff single by Al Oliver in the third inning and broke a 1-1 tie.

A's 2-2, Twins 0-3

Glenn Borgmann singled home the decisive run in the seventh inning of the nightcap after Hosken Powell doubled. In the opener, Oakland's Rick Langford won his fifth straight decision with a three-hitter. The A's got a runner to third with one out in the ninth inning of the second game but Mike Edwards flied to center and pinch runner Glenn Burke was thrown out at the plate by Dan Ford to end the game.

Chattanooga, VMI Chosen As Favorites For Southern Race

By BILL WELCH
Associated Press Writer

What's new in Southern Conference football this season is that, for the first time in a couple of years, there aren't any new teams competing for the league title.

But there will still be plenty of new faces around the fivestate conference, and with the departure of last year's player of the year, the nation's leading pass receiver and a pair of 1,200-yard-plus running backs, there are some big holes to fill.

Yet the conference returns with some stability. Tennesse-Chattanooga and Virginia Military, defending conference co-champions, are figured to finish first and second by most preseason prognosticators.

Western Carolina, Appalachian State, The Citadel and Furman each have replacements to find, but one or two could prove to be contenders. Marshall, a newcomer last year, is still looking for its first Southern win.

Davidson again will remain in the league but will not play a conference schedule, and East Tennessee State won't join the alignment until next year.

The Southern returns from a year of strong individual performances and a top 9-1-1 record by UT-Chattanooga, but nobody earned a bowl trip, and only three teams had winning records.

No Alabamas or Notre Dames here, but the conference survived the NCAA's divisional split, remaining I-A with the nation's top powers, and will again put on a competitive football show.

UT-Chattanooga

Conference coach-of-the-year Joe Morrison had the element of surprise on his side last season as the league newcomer, but won't slip up on anyone this time.

"I think we'll be every bit as good if not better," he says. "But we play seven games on the road and that environment is a definite detriment to winning."

Chattanooga returns an experienced team, losing only four starters on offense and one on defense. Chief among the returnees are veer quarterback Tony Merendino and a sophomore running back tandem of Mike Smith and Gwain Durden who each gained more than 1,000 yards as freshmen.

The returning defense was second in the conference last year, but the Moccasins need a field goal kicker and must build an offensive line, the only spot where graduation was really felt.

VMI

Coach Bob Thalman suffered some severe graduation losses from last year's 7-4 Keydet squad, but is confident of incoming talent.

"We've got some gaps to fill but I feel like we had a good spring," he said. "Regardless of how they pick them every year, I figure we're the favorite. That's the way I have to think."

Helping ease Thalman's mind is the return of running quarterback Robby Clark, but exactly who will accompany Clark in the backfield is still in doubt. Junior Jeff Washington is the leading candidate at tailback, but there are three possibilities for fullback.

On defense, the secondary returns intact, but three of five line spots are yet to be filled. VMI plays just three Southern opponents, and games with William & Mary and Richmond will count in conference standings.

Western Carolina

When you lose the two top players in the conference off a 6-4-1 team, you know you have a job ahead. And that's just what

Catamount Coach Bob Waters faces.

Waters' small but speedy players brought national attention to Cullowhee last year. Wayne Tolleson was the NCAA's leading pass receiver and conference player-of-the-year Darrell Lipford rushed for more than 4,000 career yards, ranking second in the nation in scoring.

Both graduated but all-conference quarterback Mike Posey, who threw for 2,000-yards and 13 touchdowns, is returning as are 10 defensive starters who turned the team around at mid-season last year.

Waters likes to pick one running back and use him exclusively, and senior Mitchell Ray has several freshmen to compete with for Lipford's assignment. Senior Fred Meadows, a tested receiver, may get the nod for Tolleson's job.

"We're going to get blown out some on account of our size, but we hope our quickness will help," Waters says bluntly. "But this is the smallest we've ever been, and we may be getting too small."

Appalachian State

Appalachian was the suprise of the Southern last year. Predicted to finish as champions, the Mountaineers went 2-9 and won only one conference game. This year, Coach Jim Brakefield promises, will be different.

"Last year was the worst year I ever had as a coach. We were real disappointed and went to work on it right away," Brakefield said. "We felt like we had the best spring we've ever had."

The Mountaineers have a brand new field house this season, and are at work on a major stadium expansion that won't be completed this year. They'll also have a new quarterback, as yet not selected from one of four sophomores, none of whom was playing at the time.

ASU has a stable full of running backs to fill the shoes of Emmitt Hamilton, the school's leading career rusher. The defense gave up 410 yards a game last year and is likely to see a number of changes, giving the Mountaineers a younger look.

Furman

Dick Sheridan is the league's new coach, moving up after five years as assistant under Art Baker at Furman and keeping nearly all of Baker's staff.

On offense, the Paladins moved quarterback Jimmy Kiser to flanker at mid-season last year, where he'll stay this season. David Henderson, who started the last five games, and Tim Sorrells will be the signalcallers.

Senior fullback Kent Woerner is the mainstay in the backfield, leading the Paladins last year with 708 yards. Also back is Brette Simmons, an all-conference tight end with 18 receptions. But tailback, key to a balanced running attack in Sheridan's option-oriented I formation, may be a weakness.

Furman lost just three starters on offense, but the defense will have to be overhauled. It's possible that six sophomores, none with game experience, could start on defense.

Though finishing 4-5-2, the Paladins were in contention for the league title until a late loss to VMI, and were the only team to beat Chattanooga.

Citadel

Art Baker came to The Citadel in February after five seasons at Furman, and he's hardly had a chance to see his players, except from across the field last year. "I'm going into the fall knowing less about my team than even my first year at Furman," Baker says.

Baker has been around long enough to single out Kenny Caldwell, a senior, as a premier linebacker. But there are holes on the defensive front to fill with five starters gone, and Baker plans to stick with the wide tackle six scheme.

At quarterback, Baker says senior Matt Crosby, a two-year starter who ranked second in the conference in passing and fourth in total offense last year, may not start. Baker plans to discard the I for the veer, and says junior Tim Russell, who completed just 12 passes last year, is more his style.

Marshall

"The strength of our team is that we have everybody back," says Marshall Coach Frank Ellwood. That may or may not be an advantage, however, on a team that was 2-9 last year.

But Ellwood thinks there have been enough changes made. They include installing the veer offense and some competition at quarterback that may give sophomore Danny Wright the job over three-year starter Bud Nelson, who is recovering from knee surgery.

Back this year is senior running back C.W. Geiger, who became the school's first 1,000-yard rusher last year.

"Offense has to be our strong suit," Ellwood says. "But the thing that will dictate our success is our defense, and how much imporvement we can make in it."

Marshall trailed the league in defense last year, and Ellwood is concerned about depth.

Tanzanian Shows Way In Commonwealth Run

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Move over, Henry Rono, Filbert Bayi and Mike Boit.

One of your fellow Africans, Tanzanian Gidemas Shahanga, has joined you as a distance runner of world class.

The 21-year-old student, in only his second try at the marathon, pulled the upset of the Commonwealth Games track and field competition.

Shahanga's performance of 2 minutes, 15:39.7 seconds stunned favored Canadian Jerome Drayton. It stunned a Canadian crowd of 40,000 — ready to cheer a fellow countryman to yet another gold medal.

And it stunned Shahanga most of all.

"When I was starting the competition," he said, "I was going to fight for any medal.

"When I turned (at the midway point of the 26 miles, 385 yards), I thought I could make it. The leaders were drawing near me."

To his more experienced, much older competitors, that must rank as the understatement of this international meet.

"He went by me like a train," said silver medalist Drayton, losing the lead to the newcomer with one mile to go. Shahanga breezed around the Commonwealth Stadium, his margin a comfortable 250 yards.

Ironically, Shahanga comes from Arusha, the same town in northern Tanzania as Bayi, an easy qualifier in the 1,500 meters Friday night.

He's the oldest of 12 children of a peasant and did not take up serious running until two years ago. He was robbed of his first big goal—a medal in the Montreal Olympics — by the Africans' boycott two years ago.

His first attempt at marathon running two weeks ago resulted in a seventh in the African Games. He did 22:41, running the last stages of the race in his bare feet.

"His shoes were pinching him," said his coach, Elias Sulus.

The overall team glory in these Games finishing Saturday belongs to the host country.

The Canadians had piled up 44 gold medals, an all-time record for the competition that began in 1930. Australia had the previous record of 38 golds in 1962.

Canada already had clinched the team championship, collecting 28 silver and 30 bronze. Next came Australia with 23-3125, England at 21-27-31, Kenya 6-6-5, New Zealand 5-6-8 and India 5-4-6.

FISHERMEN'S GLOOMY REPORTS of declining largemouth bass fishing on Lake Norman are currently being investigated by fishery biologists from the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission in an effort to determine if the reports are accurate and, if so, what can be done to correct the situation.

"Basically, we're sampling the bass population in Lake Norman to determine the fishes' size, growth rates and length-weight relationships," according to Wayne Chapman, a Commission fishery biologist from Albemarle. "With this information, we can determine the reproductive success of bass in the lake and determine if their forage supply is adequate. We are also going to evaluate the ratio of predator fish to prey fish in the lake."

Lake Norman was a popular largemouth bass fishing area, especially during the first 10 years after it was impounded. More recently, fishermen have indicated that largemouth bass fishing success has declined and that most bass caught are barely over the 12-inch limit.

"Many fishermen have asked that largemouth bass stocking be undertaken to boost the population," said Chapman. "And some have also expressed concern that largemouth bass are in competition with striped bass for food."

Chapman said data submitted by bass fishermen participating in the N. C. Bass Catch Survey revealed Lake Norman was one of the best fishing reservoirs in North Carolina in 1976 and 1977. A total of one legal-sized largemouth was caught for every three hours of effort on Lake Norman by survey participants. This made Lake Norman third in 1976 and second in 1977 among the state's reservoirs in terms of bass fishing success.

Chapman and other biologists are using shocking rigs to catch largemouth bass from various points around the lake. An electrical current is generated into the water from a boat moving along the shoreline. This current stuns the fish momentarily, allowing biologists to scoop them up and place them in holding tanks. Later, their length and weights are recorded, scale samples are taken and the fish are released, unharmed.

"When we have finished our sampling and analyzed the information we collected, we should have a much better understanding of the exact status of the largemouth bass population in the lake," said Chapman. "With that information at hand, we'll have a much better handle on which direction we should shift our largemouth bass management program to improve fishing in the lake."

Officials Clinic Set

The annual football rules clinics conducted by the North Carolina Athletic Officials Association will be held in this area during the week.

Officials and coaches are encouraged to attend these clinics at which rule changes and 1978 points of emphasis, play situations, and mechanics of football officiating will be reviewed.

ECU 'Well Ahead' In Helping Their Handicapped

Text By Francelne Perry, Photos By Marianne Baines, Both ECU News Bureau

Building renovation at East Carolina University during the past three years has included numerous structural changes which the average student hardly notices — doorways have been widened, water fountains have been lowered, and ramps have been placed at curbs and at entrances to buildings.

But these changes mean a great deal to some ECU students— those with physical handicaps who must walk with crutches or are confined to wheelchairs.

ECU has been "well ahead" of government deadlines to make its programs and activities accessible to handicapped students, says David B. Stevens, director of the ECU office of Equal Opportunity Programs.

Deadline 1980

ECU and other campuses across the nation must make structural modifications and other changes to provide the physically impaired "reasonable access" to educational opportunities, according to Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. Deadline for structural changes is June 3, 1980.

However, temporary arrangements for accessibility to all programs and activities had to be accomplished with the commencement of the 1977 fall semester.

"East Carolina has been ahead of other campuses in the state in its progress toward accessibility for the handicapped," said Dr. Stevens.

"Extensive remodeling of existing facilities, such as addition of ramps, structural changes in doorways and restrooms, and low wall placement of water fountains and telephones, was going on here well before the legislation became final."

Credits Sheldon Downs

He credited much of ECU's achievement in becoming relatively "barrier free" for the handicapped to recommendations by Sheldon Downes, director of ECU's graduate program in rehabilitation counseling.

Dr. Downes and his students made detailed studies of the campus, from the point of view of handicapped persons, and indicated where changes should be made.

Now, about 40 of ECU's campus buildings are at least partly accessible to the handicapped, with wide doors which wheelchairs can easily pass through and ramps and elevators to take handicapped students to upper levels.

These architectural modifications supplement other facilities and services to the handicapped: Braille and sound-recorded materials for blind students and sign language interpreting services for the deaf.

CIACHS Coordination

Many of the services ECU offers its handicapped students are coordinated through its Central Information and Assistance Center for Handicapped Students (CIACHS).

CIACHS is located on the first floor of Cotten Hall, near the middle of the main campus, and is designed to meet special needs of handicapped individuals.

Volunteers are available to accompany disabled students through registration processes, and when a physically-impaired student wishes to use the services of the Financial Aid Office, the Counseling Center, the Career Planning and Placement Office, or any other campus agency located in an inaccessible building, arrangements are made for the student to meet a representative of that agency at the CIACHS headquarters.

"ECU cannot use physical impairment as a factor in determining whether a student should be admitted, so we do not identify all our handicapped students before they enroll," said C. C. Rowe, Coordinator of CIACHS and Services for Handicapped Students.

"However, we try to let them know we are here as a resource if they need our help in any way." The ECU student handbook includes a CIACHS accessibility survey of the campus, and describes each of its operations.

Task Force

In their attempts to assist handicapped students at ECU, Stevens and Rowe have relied heavily upon a large task force composed of persons from most of ECU's administrative units.

"Because of campus-wide cooperation in this effort, ECU had no trouble meeting last year's Phase I and Phase II requirement deadlines for Section 504 — to make all programs accessible and to identify architectural changes to be made," noted Stevens.

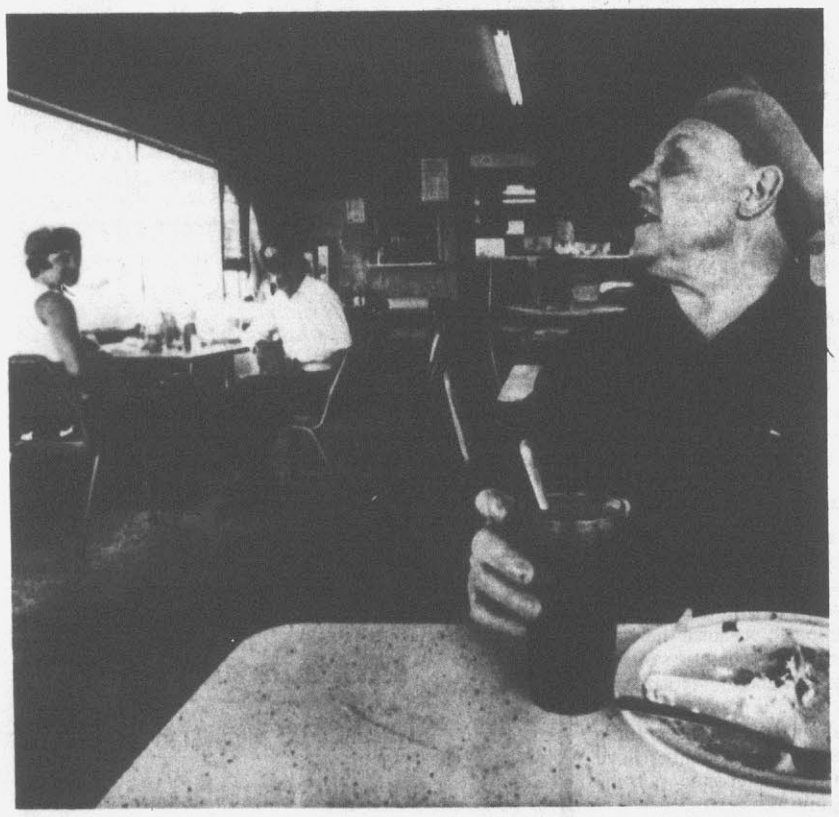

This month, ECU and other public institutions of higher learning must complete a detailed self-evaluation of campus accomplishment in this area, as the third preliminary phase. And by 1980, all structural changes mentioned in the Phase II plan must be finished.

Modifying Role

"Section 504 does not state that every building on campus has to be fully accessible, but a reasonable number of them must be," explained Stevens. "The regulations provide that if a handicapped student is enrolled in a class which meets in an inaccessible area, efforts should be made to relocate the class so that the student can attend.

"Our role in carrying out Section 504 regulations is to modify our campus so that a handicapped student can move about with as high a degree of normalcy as possible, into the mainstream of campus life."

Blindness Is 'Just Another Characteristic' To Active 56-Year Old Alabama Farmer

GERALDINE, ALA. (AP) — Running a farm, raising three children and coaching a Little League team would wear out any father. But not Euclid Rains, who has been blind since childhood.

"Blindness is just another human characteristic like shortness or baldness," said Rains, who has been blind for 50 of his 56 years.

"Blindness is not a thing that makes all that difference," he said. "Oh, I've pitied myself a lot of times. But I didn't let it become a disease or destroy me. I have complete control over my life."

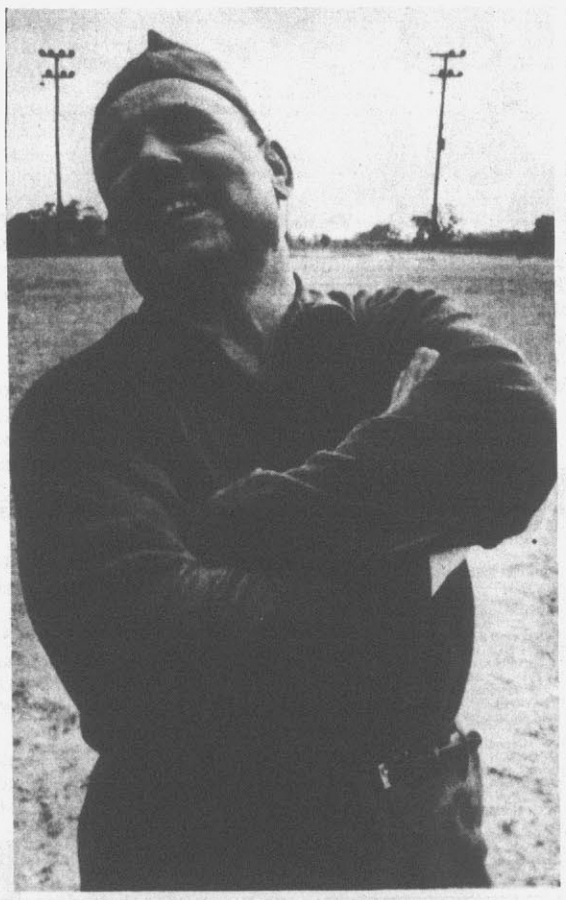

Rains took care of his three children, teaching them to read with combination Braille and sighted books and taking them for childhood excursions while their mother taught school.

"Euclid raised those kids," said his wife, Nell. "I didn't ever question him. He'd take them out for a ride on the ponies or fishing and I never worried."

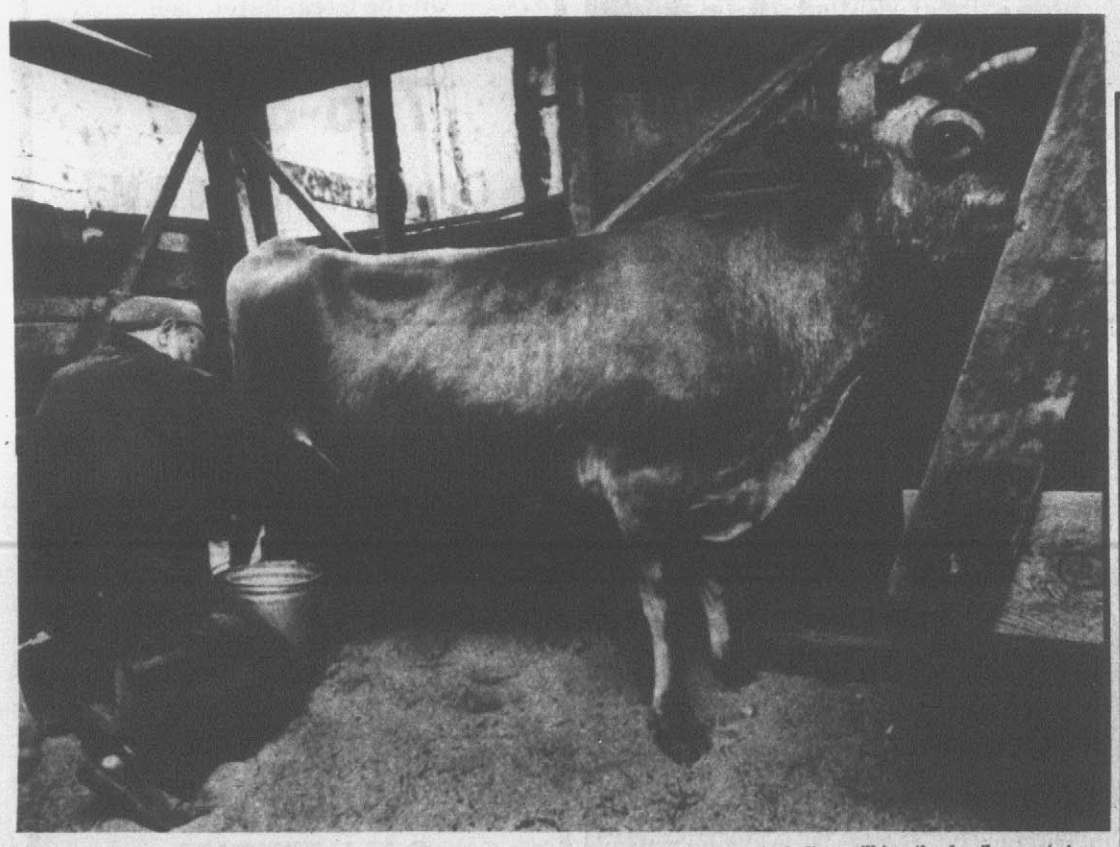

Today Rain's life is filled with tending his 120-acre farm and working with the blind of Alabama.

His only disappointment in life isn't his blindness but the fact that he wasn't allowed to serve in World War II.

"I would have liked to have been in the service," he said. "I could have contributed."

In the last half of this century, Americans have become more aware of the needs of their less fortunate citizens---the lower wage earners, the physically handicapped, and older people. The three articles on this page illustrate various facets of concern and positive action being taken to make life easier for disadvantaged persons. One article deals with measures at East Carolina Universtiy designed to give assistance to handicapped students. Another article outlines several community programs to assist older citizens. Of a different order is the third article, one that reveals the personal tragedy of being blind.

Centers Offer Advantages To Older People

CHICAGO (AP) — Retired Chicago businessman Morris Gilford, 75, beats the high cost of living by doing his weekly grocery shopping at his local community senior center.

Gilford directs one of three food co-ops in the city run entirely by seniors under the auspices of the Jewish Community Centers of Chicago.

Now in its fourth year, the food co-op represents a chance for the elderly to beat inflated supermarket prices because staff members buy fresh produce and grocery staples at bargain-basement wholesale prices, according to Gilford.

"Everything here is fresh and clean and wholesome," he says as he unloads bags of apples. "As you get older and you're all alone, you can't easily use the large packages from the supermarket. Here, you can buy one piece of fruit or one vegetable."

The JCC's food co-op is just one way some 5,000 senior centers across the country help people cope with being older and alone, says DeWayne Oberlander, associate with the National Institute of Senior Centers of the National Council on the Aging.

These multipurpose senior centers offer a host of services: social events, arts and crafts, education, health maintenance and nutrition programs, travel, legal assistance and income supplements like the food co-op, Oberlander explains.

"About half of the people who participate in centers live alone," says Oberlander. "National figures show that only one-third of the total aging population lives alone, which means the centers are serving a lot of people who might otherwise be isolated."

According to Nelson Cruikshank, counselor to President Carter on the aging, not all senior centers encourage their members to remain active and alert.

"Some centers emphasize continuing citizen roles for their members — the seniors participate actively in planning and running the programs," says Cruikshank. "But others drain off the drive for citizen participation.

Madison Ave. Has Its Selling Points

NEW YORK (UPI) — Now! New! At Last! Introducing!

Some things never change. You can be cute. You can be sexy. Far out, far down. Factual or farcical. Doubledome or dunce.

BUT DOES IT SELL?

Empires may teeter, skylabs falter, hemlines hesitate and snail darters triumph, but the sell stands firm: Look at me! Here I am!

And the ad moves the merchandise.

Madison Avenue is a juggernaut that starts at 23rd St. in Manhattan, in U.S.A. East, and runs right up Kalakaua Avenue in Honolulu smack into Diamond Head, U.S.A. West. It runs through burg and farm, through Parkersburg, W. Va. (one agency), Mobile, Ala. (two agencies), Fort Smith, Ark. (one agency).

There's $42.5 billion in advertising billings hanging out there this year, ripe and pickable. That tastes good, like a good buck should.

But Mad Ave. does not ingest the total plum. Not ever. Only about 40 percent of the business is placed through advertising agencies. They billed about $15.2 billion out of the total take of $37.9 billion in 1977.

What is Madison Avenue today? The storied street of jingle and blurb and audacious creativity and studied salesmanship is looking at itself. Giving itself the long study. This is not so much narcissism as pragmatism. And it's good.

Consider the good done by a great compendium of medical knowledge that shall not here be nameless, the Reader's Digest. In the 1940s when many publishers were imitating its style and heft, an incipient imitator went to the Digest's founder and asked how it was done.

"We try to publish the kind of magazine," explained the great man, "that makes people want to get undressed in front of a full-length mirror and look at themselves."

Self-appraisal by the ad biggies in New York and Chicago doesn't ping into Hutchinson, Kan., at all. The head of Lane & Leslie Advertising Agency, David Lane ("I bought this one-man agency in 1962 at the ripe old age of 22") doesn't encounter Madison Avenue words like "overview" in Hutchinson (Pop. 37,000).

He does have worries: how to keep the swarming grasshoppers out of the house. About the ad business: "We don't do pretesting of commercials. But there has been a greater demand out here on the prairie for creativity."

Lane now has 18 employees and did $2.5 million billing in 1977.

His mention of creativity echoes a mini-dialogue that has been going on among agency executives in Manhattan. Has Madison Avenue been caught with its pince-nez down and has big advertising's creativity potential appreciably pooped?

An overview of advertising has been undertaken historically by phrase-makers, including the noble notion of Norman Douglas in 1918: "You can tell the ideals of a nation by its advertisements."

Fresher air is in advice by the genius adman David Ogilvy: "The consumer is not a moron. She is your wife." Ogilvy gave us the eyepatch shirt ad, Commander Whitehead and his tonic, and the classic: "At 60 miles an hour the loudest noise in this new Rolls-Royce comes from the electric clock."

Ogilvy recalls that when he presented that headline to the senior Rolls-Royce executive here, that austere British engineer said: "We really must do something to improve our clock."

Thomas Jefferson in 1819 said: "Advertisements contain the only truths to be relied on in a newspaper." But it would be wise to note he said it shortly after his tenure as U.S. president.

Moreto the point at hand is a definition offered by Bill Hesse, the affable and personable president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, known as the 4A's throughout the business: "Creativity — that which appears in a way that has not been heard before."

On the question of big advertising losing its creative touch, James J. Jordan Jr. ("rather fight than switch," "ring around the collar," "one beer to have when you're having more than one" are his) says flatly: "There has been a decline, erosion, diminution in creativity."

Jordan, 47, a wiry and intense creative man, left the presidency of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, the nation's fourth largest, in January and has founded his own agency.

"This anonymous, look-alike advertising that we have today — what good does it do you if you do not arrest the public's attention and register yourself by strong creativity?" Jordan asks. "You turn on the television and it's wall-to-wall faceless advertising. It looks and sounds exactly like other commercials for another kind

SIX UNIT DESIGN SHOWS VERSATILITY

With one and two bedroom units shown on one or two levels, the Townsend, a six unit complex, creates a design with the flexibility to fill every need. Tenant or buyer will appreciate the choice offered in this plan which offers such options as country kitchen, laundry niche, and two and one half baths in the larger units.

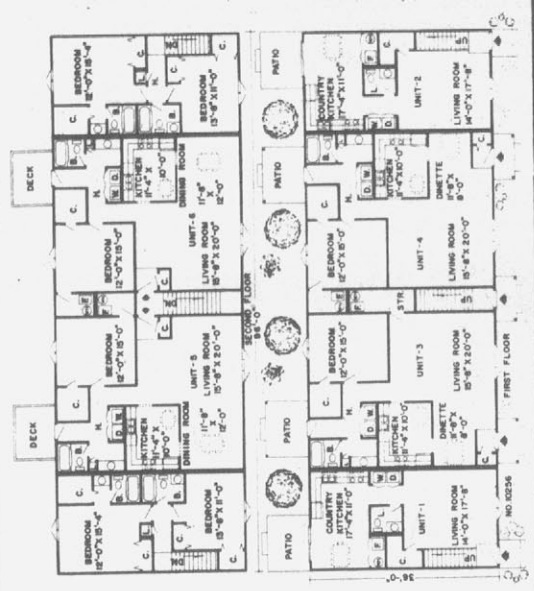

Mansard roof and shake shingles dominate the facade and fashion an exterior that blends well into any community or countryside. Basically, units 1 and 2 are two bedroom offerings with a total of 1296 sq. ft. each, while units 3, 4, 5, 6 are one bedroom plans with 1080 sq. ft. of living space in each. All show a lavish but efficient use of that space.

In units 1 and 2, the entry is off the living room, which extends over 17 ft. and shows an exceptionally large coat and storage closet. Bordering the living room is a convenient first floor powder room and, opposite that, a laundry niche.

Perhaps the focus of this level, however, is the generous country kitchen with large dining area and sliding glass doors to the patio. Upstairs, both bedrooms are bordered by a full bath and furnished with two closets. Units 3, 4, 5, and 6 are desirable one bedroom models. They are equipped with an entry lined with coat closet off the living room.

In the one bedroom units, much attention has been given to space. The living room extends 20 ft. and merges with a dining area, while the large kitchen contains additional dining space. The bedroom measures a comfortable 12 x 15, and contains a walk-in closet. Each of the units has access to either patio or deck.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Lacquer is not the most popular of finishing materials with do-it-yourselfers, even though a large percentage of the furniture sold these days has several coats of it.

That's mainly because the lacquer used by professionals is put on with spraying equipment, whereas most of that used at home is applied with a brush.

It is difficult to brush on lacquer formulated for spraying, so the first warning to the potential user of lacquer is to be certain he has bought the proper kind.

Unfortunately, many containers of lacquer do not specify which is which. When making a purchase, therefore, ask the dealer whether the product is for spraying or brushing. If he doesn't know, be wary.

Professionals are inclined to scoff at the possibility of getting good results with brushing lacquer, but if certain precautions are observed, beautiful finishes can be obtained. Lacquer must be brushed on with a flowing stroke, covering small areas at a time and working swiftly. Do not rebrush; that is, don't go over any brushed portion a second time. This is probably the most common cause of a poor result. Quickly brush a small section, dip the bristles into the lacquer and start another section, blending the second covering into the wet edges of the first. If the edges of the first section are allowed to dry a bit — and it takes only a few seconds — then the new lacquer will disturb the smooth surface of what has already been applied.

You are not likely to get the knack of this "work fast, don't rebrush" method the first or second time you use lacquer. Therefore, practice on scrap wood before you attempt to use the finishing material on a project.

Regular lacquer, as distinguished from some lacquertype products, requires thinning before use. For the beginner, the best combination is 50 percent lacquer, 50 percent lacquer thinner, although if the container gives specific instructions on the mixture percentages, follow them.

Like nearly all finishing materials which provide hard, clear surfaces, several thin coats are better than one thick coat. Sand very lightly between coats, a procedure some persons skip if the preceding coat is without imperfections. If you do sand, be sure to wipe off all grit before the next coat is applied.

The perfectionist may want to rub down the final coat with pumice powder and oil, followed by a similar operation with rottenstone powder and oil. It depends on how the final coat looks and how fussy you are. Most times, these steps are not necessary, but if you aren't satisfied with the result, they may turn a fair job into an excellent one.

After brass and other bright metals are cleaned thoroughly, lacquer will prevent them from corroding.

(The techniques of applying lacquer, varnish, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 35 cents and a long, STAMPED, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N. Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

Q. What can I do for worms eating my stored Irish potatoes? (C. E., Lumberton)

A. The worms in your potatoes are potato tuberworms. Little can be don at this time. Next year clean storage area. Do not reuse infested containers. Do not leave exposed potatoes outside overnight. Examine stored potatoes frequently and discard those that are diseased. Once potatoes are in storage and infested with tuberworms, no chemical can be applied legally. However, you might place some Vapona strips in the storage room. (K.A. Sorensen, extension entomologist)

Q. My cantaloupe plants were doing quite well — I thought. They were full of nice foliage and beautiful flowers, but they did not set fruit. Why? (J. H., New Bern)

A. The flowers were not pollinated. The bees may not have found your cantaloupe patch. Also, you will find that bees are quite lazy during hot, dry weather. (George Hughes, extension horticulturist)

Q. What are "topset" onions? (Mrs. L.C., Marshville)

A. Topset or Egyptian onions produce little onion sets on top of the plants. They can be removed and set out almost anytime one desires. Early fall — September — is the best time to plant them, however. Topset onions are very hardy and can be grown throughout the year. (George Hughes, extension horticulturist)

Sandpaper Can Signal Warning

By ELAINE Q. BARROW
AP Newsfeatures

A home medicine cabinet has been known to hold many curious items — but sandpaper?

Yes. Its unexpected grittiness to the touch can be used to signal CAUTION when a strip is wrapped around a bottle of potentially dangerous medication. The offbeat labeling is suggested by Myron G. Wels, an author, who explains:

"Quite often a person takes a sleeping pill or a tranquilizer and an hour or so later, groggy, he forgets he has taken it and swallows another, and later, still others.

"This is an overdose in the making. Touching the rough sandpaper would alert him."

A recently published book by Wels is devoted to how a medicine cabinet should be stocked to provide the most benefit. Although the book does not prescribe medicines for specific ailments, considerable information is offered on both prescription and over-the-counter preparations.

If your medicine cabinet, as in many homes, is packed with toothpaste, deodorants, creams and other cosmetics, Wels suggests setting up a separate cabinet solely for medicines (those not requiring refrigeration). Part of a well-lighted linen closet could serve the purpose.

Before beginning a general overhaul, run an inventory of your existing bottles and tubes. Get rid of those that are old, including prescription items no longer used regularly.

The rule should be: When in doubt, throw it out.

How do you detect deterioration? Creams and ointments become hard and brittle. Don't try to squeeze the tube to eliminate the bad part and use what's left.

Such false economy applies also to a substance in a jar which has formed a surface skin. Don't hope that the portion beneath the surface is still good. Probably, principal ingredients of the preparation have separated, rendering it useless.

If a liquid product was originally an emulsion and has separated, it is not a good idea to shake the bottle and use the liquid again. Dispose of it, too, especially if it has become discolored or has developed a strange odor.

Capsules which have become broken or partially melted also should go. Tablets can be tested by crumbling one between your fingers. if it has become soft or has grown furry from moisture, out!

Mindful of the "aging" factor, one should make sure all medications are labeled with the date of purchase.

Also on hand should be a hot water bottle, an ice bag, and an eyedropper.

Individual lifestyles raise individual needs.

"A bachelor living alone may need primarily anti-acids and asprins," Wels says wryly. "While a family man will need anti-acids and aspirins, too — make no mistake — he also will have to have spray antiseptics and lots of Band-Aids.

"Kids are always getting bumped and scraped and bruised and they don't feel cured until a Band-Aid is applied."

Wels says "the big message" of the book is: read the label and the printed package inserts of "stuffers."

Such reading points out, for example, that it could be hazardous to take a medication at the same time another medication is being used — a revelation that prompted Wels to write this book after he "got the scare of my life."

Wels recounts that he was on daily medication for high blood pressure when, to relieve a cold, he began taking a decongestant.

Rebuking him, his physician said the combination could eventually have resulted in a stroke.

Wels wrote the book with William Weinstein, a practicing pharmacist and a teacher of pharmacology. Wels said he also consulted many physicians during his yearlong research.

In addition, he said, he wrote 400 letters seeking information from drug manufacturers. All he received in return, he said, was a complimentary bottle of Tums.

Stain Removal Made Easier

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fruit stains on your summer clothing? Here's how to remove them, says the Soap and Detergent Association: use an enzyme presoak on washables before laundering them. Or soak in warm or cold water as soon as possible, then wash as usual. Treat any stain remaining this way: cover the stained area with an oxygen bleach, moisten with hot water to make a paste, add a few drops of ammonia, wait 15-30 minutes, then wash again.——

Fringe Benefit From Harvest

BOSTON (UPI) — August's garden harvests leave a big fringe benefit — bare stalks, old leaves and discarded tops, the stuff of which good compost is made, says Jim Crockett, Public Television's Victory Gardener.

Crockett says compost is made from layers, like a Napoleon pastry. But unlike the pastry, the sequence and the proportions of the layers are not strict.

He says a cross-section of a compost bin should have 5 to 10 inches of leaves, grass and other organic material on the bottom, topped by 10-10-10 fertilizer or horse manure, 5-10 inches of organic material, a dusting of ground limestone and 1-2 inches of soil. It should be concave in the center to prevent water run-off when you hose it down after adding a new layer. It should also be watered every few days during dry seasons. —

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Can the outside of our house be washed? Or will it warp the siding, which is made up of vertical strips? If it can be washed, is there any special way to do it that will make it easy? Our house is 11 years old.

A. — Yes, it can be washed, the assumption being that you have decided it needs a washing rather than a painting. If it has withstood 11 years of rain without trouble, it isn't likely to be damaged by washing. The job simply cannot be made easy, but it can be made a little less tiring if you use a long-handled brush. As with any type of wall, wash from the bottom up. A bit of mild detergent will help remove the grime.

Q. — I read an article recently about a design by a famous architect. In it, mention was made of "man-made masonry." Just what is that?

A. — It's a term used loosely to describe simulated brick and stone panels. One particular brand, for instance, puts out panels molded of crushed stone reinforced with fiber glass. The two are bonded together under heat and pressure, with polyester and acrylic resins plus natural earth pigments.

Q. — Are the modern synthetic varnishes better than the old varnishes?

A. — Definitely, yes, although some old-line varnish users may give you an argument about that. From personal experience, I find that modern varnishes are easier to apply and produce tough finishes.

Q. — Is it better to try to sell a house with or without a real estate broker?

A. — Good times or bad, high or low interest (remember?) mortgages, no question is asked more. If you sell it yourself, you will save money because you won't have to pay a commission. But you have to balance that possible result against the many frustrations that selling entails, including having your house invaded by many persons who really have no intention of buying your house or any house. The broker becomes the screening agent for you, bringing around only serious prospective purchasers.

Q. — Our kitchen cabinets are in need of painting. Their only previous finish was varnish. Can we paint right over the varnish or must it be removed?

A. — If the old finish is in good condition, you can paint over it after removing all old wax and grime.

Madison Ave. Has Its Selling Points....

JERRY DELLE FEMINA smiles over copy of his best-selling advertising-theme book of 1970, "From Those Wonderful Folks Who Gave You Pearl Harbor". He says Madison Ave. has changed so much he had to write another, "They're Killing Us With Slower Bullets". (UPI Photo) of product.

"A guy will walk into your office and say, 'I saw the most interesting ad last night; let me tell you about it.' So he does and you tell him: 'Say, that's nice. What kind of car was it?' And he'll say: 'Oh, I dunno. One of the cars.' The big, big risk is anonymity. You try to pin the customers down as to who is saying it, and they don't know."

———

O. Milton Gossett, chairman of Compton Advertising: "One change I regret is the absence of exiting break-the-mold advertising of the 1960s. I'm not as stimulated as I once was. Is it because too many creative people are talking like account people?

"Too much emphasis on business tends to sluff off on the creative department, and can be downright inhibiting. The creative department had better stay creative — or we're all in trouble."

In opposition to this line is Al Hampel, who in 1973 wrote the advice that has become the credo of Benton & Bowles, where he is executive vice president and creative director: "It's not creative unless it sells."

Hampel says a sober and business-like atmosphere crept in during the "downer" years of 1970-75, but "there is now an opening of the purse strings, a freedom feeling that times are good again ... There's a return to creativity — a desire to be creative again. I'm seeing some heartening signs of bright advertising.

"We're being more daring. Some clients are saying, 'Can we be different from the rest?' Now there's a resurgence in creative advertising — but with a purpose. You don't have to sacrifice creativity, or humor, to get selling. But to be truly creative, it must sell. This is the major change that has taken place in our business."

During the 1960s, the decade that brought what is universally now called "the creative revolution," there tended to be some crazies and, as Bill Hesse says, "It got a little nutty."

Jim Jordan says, "There was unbridled creativity for the sake of creativity; guys were writing for each other, for awards, not the customer; they were in effect standing on the rooftops hollering to each other."

That doesn't apply to the man who was the phenomenon of the creative revolution. Bill Bernbach, now 66, white-haired and plumpish, known as "Chairman Bill" to associates, co-founded Doyle Dane Bernbach in 1949.

A short, handsome, composed, soft-spoken man, he believed the rules should be broken and that it was not what you said but how you said it. He knew that the average American was exposed to 650 ads a day but that studies showed 85 percent of advertising didn't get looked at.

He fixed that. One day New Yorkersaw a man carrying•is wife across a newspaper page. The ad didn't say that Ohrbach's, a department store, had fashions for low money. It said: "Bring us your wife and just a few dollars and we'll give you a new woman."

In the 1950s he branched into a three-state area with ads that showed, in succession, an American Indian, a Chinese, and so on, each with a happy smile. The headline was the only wordage on the ad: "You don't have to be Jewish to love Levy's real Jewish rye."

Then he went national, and the revolution of the 1960s was on. There was a car in the middle of the page, a bug-like thing. Underneath were big capitals: "LEMON." It didn't say Volkswagen had the greatest factory inspection system in the world. It explained that the car was a lemon only to the inspector. But it took courage for the maker to run the ad.

There was the classic "Think small" with a tiny car picture and underneath it copy about small price, small gas and repair bills. And for television there was a car going along in a tremendous snowstorm and a voice saying: "Have you ever wondered how the man who drives a snowplow gets to the snowplow? This one drives a Volkswagen."

And in a printed ad the big type said: "We're only No. 2 in rental cars, so why go with us?" In small body type was included an answer, "We try harder." "It worked like hell," says Bernbach. "We had a hell of a readership in the body copy."

By 1966 the Britannica yearbook said of Chairman Bill: "His agency is the most sought after in advertising and he himself is the industry's chief fashion setter." By this time he had "the noisiest potato chips in the world" and had the Dreyfus Fund lion prowling Wall Street.

"My basic feeling," Bernbach says today, "is that you've got to get looked at. If you don't, why the ad? If you say something logically true or factually accurate — that's not enough. If somebody says to me, how will advertising be in 10 years or how does today differ from 10 years ago, I would say no difference. What the hell, it takes a talent. Absolutely. The man with talent will create good ads and the man without talent won't."

Madison Avenue has tundras of talent. A lot of it in the 1960s was put to work copying the Bernbach school.

Some major changes on, and facts about, Madison Avenue today:

—Television: More than 50 percent of the business of all big agencies now is television. But its prices are out of sight, up 40 percent in two years. Ed Ney, chairman of mammoth Young & Rubicam, which had $1.1 billion worldwide billings last year, says: "If we can't track a steady bead on 'constant viewers' on TV, maybe we'll settle for more potshots at the 'constant reader.'" But five-sixths of the newspaper ad run is local, not national.

— Discovery: Print! Al Hampel of Benton & Bowles says: "In the last three years, there's been a rediscovery of the print media. You can get an ad into a newspaper quicker than anything else." Newspapers have always led the field in advertising volume. The 1977 figures in billions: Newspapers, $11.07; television, $7.63; direct mail, $5.34; radio $2.59; magazines, $2.16.

—The three-martini lunch: Forget it, Jimmy; not to worry; the martini for admen is drifting into doldrums; white wine and plain Perrier are big.

—Mrs. Burke of Cincinnati: A lady held in awe. Now retired, Alberta Burke founded the Burke Marketing Research Co. 47 years ago, and the Burke system of 24-hour-recall by TV watchers of advertisements is a pre-testing device that got such a big hype in the 1960s that hardly any ad goes on the air today that isn't pre-tested.

Burke is part of ad language. "How does it Burke?" Also, she uttered the immortal: "Get the package into the first 10 seconds." Burke's research toolshed, and others, are a major change.

— Language: If anybody today talked like "Let's run it up the flagpole and see if anyone salutes," he'd be fired.

"Hype" and "address" are big words. "Let's address the problem." Account executives are "the suits." They have to wear suits seeing the clients. The artists and writers often wear jeans and tennis shoes.

—Partnership: The client now wants the agency to know his business almost as well as he does. "You practically move in with him."

—The new soberness (serious and businesslike): A big, big change. The bottom line.

—Creative people: Now they always present their own work. The clients demand to talk to the people who did it. A major change in the last 10 years.

—Teams: A major change in the last 15 years. A two-man team sits together, writer and art director, in almost all creative work. A change from the old departmental-jealousy splits.

Advertising toilers are remarkable. But there are only about 78,000 of them in the country.

A more remarkable figure is that there are 6,751 advertising agencies of more than one person recorded in the last U. S. census (1972) — but only 1.3 per cent of them (91 agencies) represent 62.6 per cent of the billings. So you can begin to see what goes on.

Madison Avenue, thorugh the 4A's, is maintaing a public presence in Washington, where the growth of regulatory bodies is a constant harassment. Starting in September, three executives from ad agencies will work with Congress and federal agencies.

The 4A's, as part of a longtime public service program, has also set up a committee to try to help correct functional illiteracy.

Madison Avenue is worried about its public image, and Ed Ney has warned that "we should bear down on more honesty in the daily specifics of the advertising we make."

Advertising is a child of its times. Times do change, and fast. Jerry Della Femina, one of the bright and funny agency heads, wrote an advertising theme book in 1970 titled "From Those Wonderful Folks Who Brought You Pearl Harbor." It was a best-seller. He says Madison Avenue has changed so much that he has to write another, "They're Killing Us With Slower Bullets." About slow-minded clients.

"Consumers have everything to look forward to because advertising is becoming more honest," says Della Femina. "People in the business are a lot straighter. They don't sit back and let a client tell them a product is good. They personally try it and test it.

"We're treating the consumer as though he's a hell of a lot brighter than generations of ad men before me did. Young writers back then were told to write for the 12-year-old mind.

"Ad people are no longer saying 'the consumer can't understand, so I'm going to invent something called halitosis' ('Your best friend won't tell you') — that ad came out in 1923. You don't find words like halitosis anymore in advertising — fake words.

"Today, there's humor also, and it's quite good.

"Now Madison Avenue is like a giant magnifying glass that's looking at the consumer and studying every pore. We're in a period of wonderful, clean honesty. Testing is to just not take any chances and waste people's money."

NEW WAREHOUSE FACILITY — Regional Storage and Transport, Inc. is currently building a 96,000 square foot full service commercial warehouse and distribution center on Industrial Boulevard in the Greenville Industrial Park. The facility is designed for high capacity rail and truck traffic and will provide commercial and industrial customers complete storage and distribution service. RST president W. L. Locally owned, RST is a wholly owned subsidiary of SPUNWIND, Inc. and has a household goods/office and institutional moving and storage division — AAction Moving and Storage Co. — local agents for United Van Lines.

New Low-Tar Smokes Offered

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Three new contestants in the battle for the low-tar cigarette market have been entered by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

The company announced the introduction of longer versions of Lark, Decade and Eve at the same time it was noting the five places its cigarettes landed in a study by the National Institutes of Health on brands that can be smoked in varying quantities "without apparent risk."

The list included Liggett's L&M Flavor Lights, Decade, Decade Menthol, L&M Long Lights and Lark II.

The company said Lark Lights, rated at 8 milligrams tar, is being launched regionally in both king-size and 100-millimeter versions in New England, New York, New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania.

Liggett began test marketing of Decade 100s, rated at 5 milligrams of tar, in June. It is keeping the same Decade packaging to be consistent with promotion of other Decade cigarettes.

Test marketing began in July for Eve Lights, rated at 9 milligrams tar. Cope Robinson, vice president of marketing, said he expects Eve Lights to outperform the original successful Eve introduction in Phoenix, Ariz., in 1971.

"Our research has indicated that most women smokers prefer low-tar brands," Robinson said. "Eve Lights, having been especially designed for women, should achieve excellent acceptance."

All of the Liggett & Myers brands except Chesterfield now have a low tar counterpart. Robinson said the new brands indicate the company's determination to build its low-tar impact and share of the total market.

For some time the tobacco industry has watched total cigarette sales move toward a no-growth stage. But low-tar brands grew by 46 percent in 1976 alone.

At the end of 1977, low-tar cigarettes represented 26 percent of all cigarette sales in the United States, and Liggett was recording 10 percent of its business in low-tar brands. "At the end of the first quarter of 1978, we had increased that to 12 percent and had increased our share of the total low-tar market as well," Robinson said.

Liggett & Myers officials said any real growth in the industry from now on will be restricted to the low-tar market.

"The low-tar revolution represents a golden opportunity for us," said K.V.R. Dey, L&M president. "We intend to establish ourselves solidly in that market. Our entire research, manufacturing and advertising plans are being directed toward that goal."

Market Drops

By The Associated Press

North Carolina's three flue-cured tobacco markets declined during the past week as prices were down slightly in sales and quality lower in some areas, according to the Federal-State Market News Service.

Grade prices on the South Carolina and Border North Carolina Belt were down but quality of offerings improved during the week. Average prices were lower for all grades, and most losses ranged from $2 to $7 per hundred pounds. Largest decreases centered on lower quality primings and lugs.

Lower grade prices and quality were recorded on the Old and Middle Belt this week. Gross sales for the week totaled 5,317,493 pounds and averaged $113.78 per hundred, a decline of $7.99 from the previous week. Price losses occurred for all grades this week, with declines ranging from $1 to $9 per hundred pounds in most cases.

Demand on the Eastern Belt was not as strong this week. Most grade averages declined from $2 to $6 per hundred pounds. Gross sales for the week totaled 29,037,732 pounds and averaged $121.22 per hundred.

Glaucoma Doesn't Cause Cataracts

Both my mother and father have had surgery for cataracts of the eyes. Now, at the age of 42, it has been found that I have glaucoma. My concern is that this will eventually lead to cataracts. — Mr. A.H.B., Minn.

Dear Mr. B.:

I am certain that the doctor who was astute enough to recognize the presence of glaucoma must have assured you that there is no relationship between that and the formation of cataracts.

It's too bad that so many people live in the shadow of fear when a forthright discussion with their doctor can so readily eliminate it.

Glaucoma is a condition in which the fluid within the eyeball increases. This complex chemical fluid is constantly being manufactured by special cells. The fluid then circulates inside the eyes and empties through a tiny tube.

Normally, the pressure inside the eyeball remains at a constant level. When there is an unusual increase in the production of the fluid or when there is some interference with the withdrawal of it, the pressure begins to build up. This is early glaucoma.

When unrecognized and untreated, the fluid pressure within the eyeball compresses the arteries and the veins and it can lead to impaired vision. Glaucoma is almost always controllable. In most cases, drugs are effective. In some special instances, a simple and safe operation is necessary.

Early detection is the answer. Consequently, every eye examination must include the tonometer test for glaucoma.

The presence of glaucoma does not mean that cataracts will form. A cataract is a clouding of the lens and is in no way related to glaucoma. There is no reason why you should live in a state of unnecessary anxiety about a condition that may never occur.

Can vitamin pills help to increase weight? I'm 14 years old and would like to be a little heavier than I am now. — Andrew K., Conn.

Dear Andrew:

Vitamins do not contain significant calories and cannot in themselves be used to gain weight. Only a nourishing diet, high in calories, will help do this.

In most instances, a good diet free from tempting junk foods will not require a vitamin supplement.

Are you skipping breakfast in your hurry to get to school? If you are, you must remember that you are depriving yourself of many additional calories that would add to your weight. Also, you should concentrate on those foods that are nutritious as well as high in calories.

Good luck with your campaign to gain, Andrew. Many people would be happy to have your problem!

Must Bride Pay For Her Mistake?

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is getting married next week. Several months ago she ordered dresses for her four attendants. The girls are close friends and agreed to pay for their own gowns, which were rather expensive.

The dresses came in two weeks ago, and three of the four didn't fit because my daughter advised her friends to order a size smaller than they usually wore. She said she heard those dresses always ran large.

The dresses were special orders and couldn't be returned, so my daughter found three other girls who could wear them, and they agreed to be her bridesmaids.

My question: Who should pay for the dresses? The girls who originally ordered the dresses but can't wear them? Or the girls who agreed to be in the wedding as a favor to my daughter?

Or should the bride pay for them?

MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Since you daughter bad-guessed the dress sizes for her original attendants, I think she's stuck for the second team.

DEAR ABBY: Very interesting, your explanation of what makes boys and what makes girls.

You said, "When a child is conceived, the male's sperm, which contains either a 'Y' chromosome or an 'X' chromosome for sex determination, fertilizes the female's egg, which contains only the 'X' sex chromosome. Each partner contributes one sex chromosome, but the female's is always an 'X.' Therefore, if the father's 'Y' chromosome fertilizes the egg, the baby will be a boy, but if the father's 'X' chromosome connects, the baby will be a girl."

I wonder what the hierarchy of the Roman Catholic Church thinks about this? For if we believe in the Immaculate Conception, then Jesus should have been a girl!

MRS. G. C., MILLERTON, N.Y.

DEAR MRS. C.: The genetic rules that apply to us mortal beings did not apply to the Christ child, who according to the Bible was the Son of God.

But may I point out a common misconception—(no pun intended)—that the Immaculate Conception is the same as the Virgin Birth. Not so!

Mary* —not Jesus) was the Immaculate Conception! The Bible tells us that Mary was born without original sin on her soul because she was destined to be the Mother of Christ.

The couple knelt for the benediction on a white profile prie-dieu. The honor pews were marked with baby's breath and greenery.

Miss Pam Dickens of Durham, sister of the bride, served as maid of honor. She wore a long gown of mint green polyester interlock featuring spaghetti straps and a gathered bodice covered with a sleeveless empire bolero in printed chiffon. She carried a bouquet of daisies and wore baby's breath in her hair.

Bridesmaids were Lori Dickens of Greenville, sister of the bride, Debra Ladd of Yadkinville, cousin of the bride, Melanie Foushee of Charlotte and Paula Dickens of Seaford, Del., cousin of the bride. Their dresses were styled like the honor attendant's in summer gold. They carried bouquets of daisies and wore baby's breath in their hair.

Miss Michelle Weathers of Raleigh served as flower girl. She wore a mint green eyelet gown trimmed with white eyelet ruffling. She wore baby's breath in her hair and carried a white basket filled with yellow and white daisies.

Mrs. Treva Fidler and Miss Amy Moore played a piano-clarinet duet for the prenuptial music. Mrs. Helen Dail served as organist and Mrs. Fidler played the piano. Miss Melanie Foushee sang "Evergreen" and Ernie Ladd, cousin of the bride, sang "Annie's Song" and "The Wedding Prayer."

The father of the bridegroom served as best man. Ushers included Ronny Rogers, brother of the bridegroom, and Caswell Ellis Wheeler Jr., both of Raleigh, Steven Bryan of Garner and Alan Dickens of Greenville, brother of the bride. Rodney Alston of Greenville served as ring bearer.

The mother of the bride wore an azure blue polyester gown with scoop neck, empire bodice and a chiffon poncho. The bridegroom's mother chose a pink polyester gown featuring a scoop neck, diamond gusset at the waist and a detachable rhinestone-studded pink chiffon poncho. Both mothers wore wrist corsages of white roses.

Lake Ellsworth Clubhouse was the scene of the reception. Hurricane lamps with white satin bows lined the entrance, with burning torches flanking the poolside. The bride's table was covered with a white linen cloth and centered with an epergne of mixed summer flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Zack Ladd of Yadkinville, aunt and uncle of the bride, greeted guests. Mrs. C. S. Warren Jr. of Littleton, aunt of the bride, cut and served wedding cake. Mrs. James Kastleburg of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. W. P. Dickens of Seaford, Del., aunts of the bride, served punch. At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Did you ever notice how in reporting sports no one eyer "wins" a game?

They crush, stomp, triumph, trounce, bomb, out-score, outclass, overthrow, run over, edge out, hammer and victimize; but they never use the word "win."

The other night after a sportscast where there were three assaults, four upsets, one humiliation, a squeaker, and a rout, I said to my husband, "These guys must be fed intravenously by a thesaurus each night to come up with all those words that mean "win."

"They have to," he said, "you'd get bored hearing who 'won' all the time."

"But that's not the way people talk," I complained. "Can't you just see some 230-pound guard being interviewed at halftime saying, 'We came to beat Pittsburgh. At this moment, we're not overwhelming by as much as we had hoped, but sooner or later we hope to vanquish. After all, as Vince Lombardi said, "subduing is everything."

"You should talk;" he said. "How come a woman on the society page never 'gets married.'"

"What are you talking about?"

"I've read those stories before. They 'exchange vows', 'say nuptials', or 'pledge I do's', but they never get married!"

That's different."

"Why different? We're talking about saying what we mean. When we got engaged I suppose you called up your best friend and said, 'Hey, Dottie, guess what, I'm going to plight my troth in August.'"

"I think plighting a troth is rather poetic. It's certainly not like the Dodgers 'smothering' their opponents or the Red Sox 'clobbering theirs,'"

"Hey," he grinned, "it might be fun if society pages showed as much imagination as they do on the sports pages. Can't you just imagine reading where Betty Schmidlapp cruised by four ugly bridesmaids Saturday to overpower her opponent and cap a victory in the Bridegroom Open in the upset of the year?"

"This is a stupid argument," I said. "And I don't want to continue it. Just say I won and we'll forget it."

He sat there thinking.

"See," I continued. "You haven't heard the word win in so long you can't even remember how it goes."

"Let's see," he said, "let's just say in the sports vernacular you 'persuaded your opponent it was in his best interest to lose.'"

Sisters Selected As Best Shepherds

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

PICKENS, W.Va. (AP) — Helen Sneberger lives way up on Turkey Bone Mountain, a rugged, remote region of central West Virginia where Euarctos americanus still roams at will.

Euarctos americanus?

To the layman, Euarctos americanus is more commonly known as "black bear." And in this part of Randolph County, the big, burly fellows abound on the steep, heavily forested hills.

Which is no problem, for the most part. At least it's no problem until they start carrying off Helen Sneberger's sheep.

"A bear carried off one of our sheep last month," said the friendly, sunburned woman, shading her eyes and looking toward a distant field where the flock was browsing.

"You aren't allowed to shoot them, you know," she added. "They're protected by law. So, we called a state trapper. He came the next day and caught the bear. It was a big male — weighed about 350 pounds. That was the second sheep we lost to a bear; the first one was in 1970, or thereabouts."

Helen Sneberger and her sister, Rosie Ketterman, don't lose many sheep, however. Known locally as "the Sneberger girls," they've been acclaimed as the best shepherds in West Virginia.

"They won the master shepherd award more than once for having the best flock in the state," says Voras Haines, the Randolph County agricultural agent. "Those two women really take care of their sheep. They'll stay out in the field all night saving a weak lamb that another shepherd might just knock on the head and throw over the fence."

Miss Snebrger says, "We check on them every day but we don't tend them with a dog like they did in the old days.

"I just call 'Sheepie, Sheepie' and they'll come. You know how sheep are: if one starts, the rest will follow.

More Hearing Disabilities

NEW YORK (UPI) — Excess noise has made hearing loss the United States's number one disability, says Joseph J. Rizzo of the Better Hearing Institute.

More than five million Americans under the age of 18 are among those with permanent hearing disorders, and the number is increasing.

A survey at the University of Tennessee Noise Study Lab found hearing impairment in 60 percent of the more than 4,000 freshmen studied.

The institute says warning signs of hearing disability are: consistant failure to catch words or phrases, inability to follow group conversations, improved comprehension when facing a speaker, ear discharge, pain or irritation and dizziness, loss of balance or head noises.

Gossett Has Work Habit

By JOHN F. SIMS

NEW YORK (UPI) — Milt Gossett is not likely to join the jogging set.

The triple-titled boss of Compton Advertising — he is chairman, president and chief executive officer — has a cheerful disdain for anything as nonproductive as just running.

Oscar Milton Gosfett, 52, said in an interview: "I hate to exercise but I love to work. I hate to expend energy without achieving anything."

So when he's not tending the $400 million business he heads, Gossett will likely be found encouraging the growth of Swiss chard and kale or tending a 20-year-old horseradish plant.

Those three vegetables are among the many he grows on his 39-acre "farm" in Westchester County. Other crops include potatoes, pumpkins and asparagus.

Gossett turned aside a natural public relations angle and denied he is a farmer who happens to head an advertising agency.

"I just take what time I can to look after my land," he said.

Gossett's father came from North Carolina, where he was one of 19 children who grew up on a tobacco farm.

Gossett went back to school after Navy service in World War II — "my only distinction was a share in accidentally shooting down a U.S. plane" — but very quickly gave up and found himself driving a tractortrailer for a dairy farm in New Jersey.

His entry into advertising was almost incidental. His wife, Anna, provided the spur.

Gossett and his wife were brought up in the same area around Westchester's North Salem and educated in oneroom schoolhouses on opposite sides of the same hill. But he only met her, through his sister, after he had been through an engagement that had him commuting weekends to Atlanta, Ga., to court a girl of Irish gypsy ancestry.

Anna Gossett was already working in advertising, as an art director, and Gossett decided to try the same field.

One attempt, starting in the mailroom of an advertising agency, ended after he had progressed to the shipping room and got himself fired.

He joined Compton in 1949 as an assistant in print traffic and two years later moved into the creative department. He moved up, working on nearly every account the agency had, and in 1963 became a vice president and associate creative director.

Gossett became a senior vice president in 1966 and cocreative director the following year. He moved up to the presidency in 1968 and in 1975 became chief executive officer. He currently holds thoe two titles plus being chairman of the board — "But that's not going to last for long."

Gossett has had a creative hand in almost all the accounts Compton has handled since he joined it. But he has difficulty choosing a particular line he's proud of — "perhaps something I did on a brand of tires."

As for management style, Gossett said he is big on people to people relationships. He stressed his own ability to relax "to keep my sanity."

Compton has overall billings in excess of $400 million and expects to reach half a billion next year through what Gossett calls "controlled growth."

"If we get too large everything gets watered down," he said.

When he's not steering Compton or tending his crops, Gossett likes to fish — "all kinds, from fly fishing to tarpon down off Florida" — and he shoots skeet. One unproductive vice he allows himself is an occasional poker game.

He also makes time to teach Sunday school at the local Methodist church.

One of his grandmothers was a Cherokee Indian and he has always been fascinated by his ancestry.

"When I read the history books I felt a great outrage at what had happened to the Cherokees and the other Indian nations," he said.

Gossett himself has five children, three boys and two girls, with occupations ranging from gas station attendant to doctor of psychology.

"They're all happy," Gossett said, and that's the important thing.

A Briefing For Parents

By ANDREW J. NEFF
Associated Press Writer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — When freshmen arrive at the University of Rochester, it's at least three days before they can feel safely out of the nest. During that time, their parents are on the other side of the campus, getting their own orientation to college life.

The school was one of the first to offer an orientation course for parents while the students were adapting to campus. It began evolving about 10 years ago.

Around 600 parents signed up for the two sessions this July, along with about 800 students out of the entering class of 1,080.

The parents stay in separate dorms from the students, eat in dining halls at different times and are not supposed to see their children after they drop them off Sunday morning until they leave on Tuesday.

The idea, said Iris Iler, a 1975 UR grad who directs the orientation programs, "is to tell (the parents) what it's like to have a child leave home and go to college."

Also, she said, "We want to let them become familiar with where their child is going to spend the next four years."

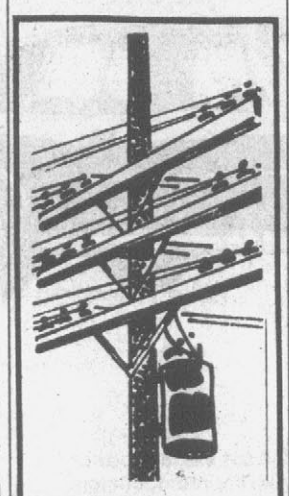

While the children suffer through math, reading and other tests, get ID pictures taken, fill out forms and meet with advisors, the parents sit through lectures on academics, social life, services and financial aid given by deans, professors, administrators, staff and students.

Kenneth Clark, dean of the college of Arts and Sciences, said parent concerns had changed markedly in recent years, and now focused on high tuition costs, rather than college social life.

BUYERS BEWARE

DON'T READ THIS AD UNLESS YOU WANT TO BECOME INFORMED

When buying a home, ask your broker to get from the seller a ONE YEAR WRITTEN WARRANTY on the heating and central air condition systems, all sheet metal duct-work, total electrical and plumbing systems, all built-in appliances, hot water heat and plumbing fixtures.
When the seller says he can't, what then?

Can you afford $1500 to $2000 to replace the furnace? If the home were guaranteed by ERA's (BBP) Buyers Protection Plan, it would provide the solution to unexpected breakdowns in home equipment covered. ERA's BBP says to you Mr. Buyer, don't worry! We've got you covered! One toll free telephone call will start a local repair specialist on his way to repair or replace the breakdown. The most you ever pay is a modest deductible charge. And that is Buyer RELIEF.

GOOD NEWS FOR SELLERS

ERA'S HOME SELLERS PROTECTION PLAN

When you list your home with Overton & Powers and request a BPP for the buyer of your home, you get the SPP coverage free until the home is sold. How do you get it?

An Earth-Covered Home Offers Modern Cave Life

COVER-UP — Earth-moving equipment works during completion of an experimental home in Longmont, Colo. One foot of earth covers roof of this "Sun Earth Home," supported by steel bar joists and concrete deck. The earth slopes gently to the ground around most of the building. Several skylights and glazed windows provide light to the rooms.

By LEA FLANDERS
Daily Times-Call

LONGMONT, Colo. (AP) — Some contemporary-minded family, who would like to be part of an experiment in the latest in solar energy heating for homes, will have a lot of fun in a new and unusual house introduced to northern Colorado viewers in July.

The kids will have a great time running up and down the roof, which is mostly landscaped earth; and if someone has ever thought it would be fun to live like his long-ago ancestors did, in a cave, this house may be for him.

The "Sun Earth House," three miles east of Highway 287 in Longmont, on Highway 66 at Elmore Drive, is an earth-covered, passive solar-heated and cooled home. It is an experimental house on one acre of land, designed and engineered by Paul Shippee of Colorado Sunworks in Boulder.

A grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development paid for much of the solar energy collection and measuring devices, a cost factor which will not be passed along to the buyer.

The 1,800-square-foot home, with an attached two-car garage, features massive waterfilled walls, Beadwall for additional insulation, 1-foot-thick earth cover and a passive tank water heater.

The abstract includes a full five-year performance documentation by the National Bureau of Standards. Data will be monitored from 90 sensors placed all around the house and fed into computer and cassette tape. The information will be dumped every night into a computer information bank in Huntsville, Ala.

"This part of the house, as information gatherer for future solar energy heating knowledge, has been paid for with tax dollars. That is what makes this house of public interest," Shippee said, on a tour of his endeavor.

The concrete house has three bedrooms, two baths, a large living-dining-kitchen space, all flowing together. It features a fireplace, with glass doors and heat-driven heatilator, "the most efficient one I could find, designed so there is zero heat lost to the outdoors," Shippee said.

An atrium with greenery is a delightful feature. Inside walls are painted white. Skylights wash the north wall with sunlight and serve as mini-solar collectors, placed so the sun will shine in only in winter.

The feeling inside the home is pleasant, very comfortable, open and airy. Even though it is mostly earth-covered, sloping gently to the ground around most of the building, it is light and cheery inside. Large windows to the north, west, and east provide outdoor views and are double or triple glazed.

"This house is a fairly radical approach to energy conservation and solar heating," Shippee said. "People say I've taken a lot of risk, especially in a house that has to be sold on the market place; but I think there will be people who will jump at the chance to be part of the experiment."

It will be listed for sale at $93,500, complete with its acre of land, wide open spaces all around, custom-built cabinetry, dishwasher, either electric or gas range according to the purchaser's desire, and its lower utility bills. The house is designed to be 90 percent solar heated.

The Sun Earth Home, according to its designer, has four major features, which have proved workable in part in other areas. This may be the first time they have all been put together, Shippee believes.

The four are the earth cover, one basic energy conservation feature that produced a large result; a massive water wall on the south facade with an attempt to use one single element as solar collector, heat storage and distributor to the house; a Beadwall in front of the water wall, and superb insulation.

The 1-foot earth cover with vegetation (owners could grow a garden on their roof) is supported by steel bar joists and a concrete deck. The water wall is made up of 54 55-gallon drums supported horizontally in racks and filled with water, serving as solar absorber, thermal storage and heat distributor.

The Beadwall incorporates a 5-inch air space between window glass which automatically fills with polystryene beads for insulation when the sun cannot deliver energy to the blackened drum wall behind it.

Core Banks Said 7,000 Years Old

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Two geologists say new research shows that the Core Banks, a major segment of North Carolina's barrier island chain, is 7,000 years old.

Dr. Duncan Heron of Duke University and Thomas F. Moslow of the University of South Carolina drilled 46 holes along Core Banks from Cape Lookout to New Drum Inlet to obtain sand and organic matter samples for their study.

The study was ordered by the National Park Service.

Heron said that Core Banks has moved about for miles toward the mainland in the past 7,000 years.

Old West Lives In Old Castle

KARLSRUHE, West Germany (UPI) — The Old Wild West lives again here at Thurn Castle. There's a western town and an American Indian village and horses and ponies are available for riding parties.

Egypt's Belly-Dancers In Fast-Stepping Life

By SHERIF BOREI

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — The belly-dancer snakes over to the table of Arab tourists in from the Gulf, sweat pouring down her cleavage as she wriggles and writhes.

Suddenly, an Arab sheik darts up to the dancer and slaps a 20-pound note ($30 U.S.) to her damp body as his friends cheer.

The dancer rushes backstage, gives a quick wipe with a towel, dives into a taxicab and rides 200 yards to the next nightclub, where the scene is re-enacted.

Business is frantic but booming for Egypt's belly-dancers, regarded as the best and highest paid in the Middle East. Some appear in as many as five cabarets a night, and top stars earn $150,000 a year, far more than any other Arab women and more than 15 times what President Anwar Sadat makes.

The road from Cairo to the Great Pyramids is dotted with nightclubs, all showcasing at least one belly-dancer a night. These nightspots are the main lure, attracting Arab tourists in droves and with them about $300 million a year in foreign exchange.

Egypt draws many Arabs from oil-rich Gulf states who escape to Cairo from their closed, desert societies. They are the best customers the Cairo nightspots have, and, along with the basic belly-dancers, Saudi and Gulf songs are always offered.

"A novice will have to give it everything she's got for $15 a night. But for a select handful of top names, just one appearance is worth $150," says Wagih Dawoud, a nightclub manager. In Egypt, the average working man brings home no more than $250 a year.

However, a belly-dancer nas to be her own business manager. She must scour Cairo for a good back-up band, and hire assistants to keep track of her hundreds of costumes and help her with split-second changes.

The working schedule is a six- or seven-nights-a-week marathon. A good dancer gives two half-hour stints at each nightclub, and dashes from the first one at midnight to as many as five more before the sun comes up. There are occasional television appearances, too. To fit the modest TV code standards, however, everything between the bra and ankles must be covered including, ironically, the belly.

No Egyptian wedding is ever complete without a belly-dancer, and good dancers are usually booked for at least a couple every weekend.

It is a common boast here that every Egyptian woman can wiggle her body well, a pride that can be traced to the days of the pharaohs and their god of dancing, Bes.

"It's in our blood, "says Zizi Mustafa, a leading Cairo dancer. It is usually enough to drum some oriental tunes to have an Egyptian woman start shaking.

Unfortunately, however, Egyptians say their expertise cannot be shared with foreigners.

"Find me one good dancer who says someone taught her, and I'll call her a liar," says Zizi. Her belief is shared by most of her colleagues.

"I can't teach, it's impossible," says the nubile dancer Hanan. "I can't just stop and tell someone what to do and then move to the next step," she explained.

Despite its profits, belly-dancing can be a hazardous business. Dancing one night at the posh Meridian Hotel, Hanan was just getting warmed up. She danced up to a table where a dozen foreign businessmen sat, and was bending her whole body backwards over the table when her hair suddenly caught fire from a candle. Hanan ignored it till one gentleman put the fire out for her, and she gracefully finished her dance.

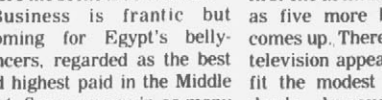

Blanche Them If Freezer-Bound

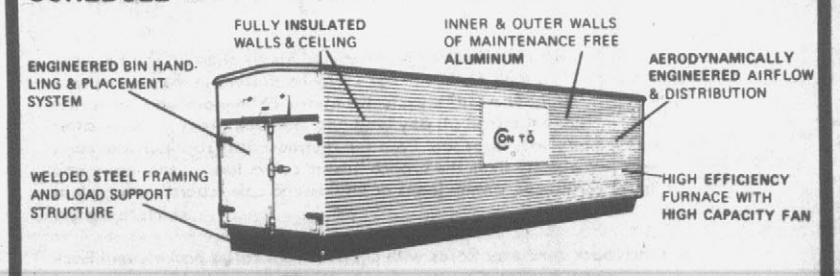

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — Fresh vegetables destined for the home freezer should first be blanched — dipped in boiling water — according to the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Extension.

The extension's food and nutrition specialist, Teresa Shaffer, says blanching is essential for vegetables being stored longer than four weeks. "But I advise most people to blanch every vegetable they put in the freezer because it's very difficult to know whether the food will be used within the four-week limit." Vegetables stored longer without blanching are likely to develop off-flavors, odors and colors and lose vitamins and other nutrients, she says.

NLRB Chairman Has Served Under 5 Presidents

By JAMES V. HEALION

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — John H. Fanning was told he wouldn't amount to much because he was a standoffish New Englander when he went to Washington 36 years ago. He has since served five presidents.

JOHN FANNING was told he wouldn't amount to much when he went to Washington 36 years ago. He has since served five presidents. (UPI Photo)

Fanning, 62, is chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, a quasi-judicial body which supervises an agency with 2,700 employes in 32 field offices.

He was raised in Connecticut where his late father, John J. Fanning, a Democrat, was a member of the House of Representatives from Sprague, a rural town of less than 3,000 on the Shetucket River north of Norwich.

Arthur Goldberg, then a Supreme Court justice and later secretary of labor, once told Fanning his New England background would hurt him more than help him in Washington's rarefied aeries.

"Well, Arthur, I'm a New Englander, and I am what I am. I can't change," said Fanning, who happens to believe that the extremes of New England weather help produce some "very mentally and physically tough people."

And he can recall waiting for street cars at 25 below zero.

Fanning was appointed to the NLRB by President Eisenhower, reappointed by Presidents Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon, and named chairman by President Carter.

He has acted in 20,000 cases and has dissented about 1,500 times.

As a boy, he worked in a woolen mill run by his father. "It was very easy working summers and Christmas to develop an appreciation for people and problems," he said.

Fanning attended Norwich Free Academy and after he graduated from Providence College with a political science degree, he was offered $100 a month to teach, coach track, and monitor the student newspaper at the academy.

He declined, attended Catholic University Law School in Washington, became a lawyer, and went to work for the Labor Department in 1942. He says the status of labor-management relations in the United States has changed markedly since 1935 when the National Labor Relations Act was enacted.

"Then there were 3,700 strikes just involving questions of representation, questions of whether an employer will recognize a union. We very rarely have that kind of a strike anymore," he said.

"Eighty percent of our elections today are on what we call a consent basis. In other words, the union files a petition that it will be representing the majority of employes and an election is held.

"That is certainly a much better attitude than existed in 1935. Now we have a lot more cases than we had 20 years ago. But we have a lot more people. We have over 80 million workers. Most strikes today involve economic issues.

"I think industry has accepted the principle, which it didn't 35 years ago, that unions are here to stay, and that unions serve a very useful purpose in the disciplining and running of a plant."

Critics sometimes say Fanning has a pro-labor bias, probably because he lays it on the line.

"I tell management people somewhere in your past you have been too greedy, or you did something to your employes and they decided they needed a union. But if you had been fair with them and given them the going wage and you had listened to their grievances they would not have gone out and hired a union.

"You don't go to a doctor unless you're sick," he said.

Rome's Subway Construction Is A Slow Process

By MICHAEL J. DUFFY

ROME (AP) — A new subway line will be 20 years old by the time it opens in this capital city, unless unresolved problems push back the opening date even more.

The line, the first truly practical subway in Rome, was authorized by law in 1959 and has been under construction since 1964. After innumerable delays caused by archeological finds, cave-ins, underground lakes, environmentalist protests, labor problems and bureaucratic inefficiency, officials say the 9mile subway line should begin test runs in September and be open to the public by next summer.

The city is supposed to furnish drivers for the test runs, but parliament recently imposed a freeze on the hiring of new public employees. The maintenance yard is not large enough to hold all the trains on order, and the cars are piling up in the construction plants while the city negotiates the right-of-way to enlarge the depot.

The end of the line to the east was supposed to connect with a huge parking lot to accommodate commuters from the surrounding hill towns, but it is now in the middle of an empty field. The city has been unable to get bidders on the parking lot.

An already existing line of 7 miles has been in operation since 1955, running from the main train station to the modern and upper class EUR section south of Rome. But Lamberto Girardelli, city coordinator for the new subway project, said the old subway "was planned for an event that never happened — Mussolini's World Fair — and so does not provide the service the new line will provide."

The new line will run through 22 stations from an area close to the Vatican, across the Tiber River, through the heart of historic Rome, intersect with the old line at the train station and then continue to the eastern edge of the city just past Cinecitta, the site of Rome's movie studios.

It will serve residential areas on both ends, and tourists will find subway stations at Piazza Barberini, the Bernini-adorned square at the foot of Via Veneto, and at the Piazza di Spagna, site of the impressive Spanish Steps and entrance to Rome's most exclusive highfashion shopping area.

From the top of Via Veneto, there is a pedestrian gallery and a moving sidewalk to Piazza di Spagna and its subway station.

The original cost estimate of the entire project was 52 billion lire — $57 million — but the actual cost has been about that much per mile, or a total of about $478 million.

The new subway line will have many security features against natural catastrophes and accidents, but designers worked at a time when they did not have to consider the current wave of terrorism in Italy, the reality of subway terror shown in the 1977 Moscow explosions or the fictional account of the hijacking of a New York subway in "The Taking of Pelham 1-2-3."

The 152 cars provided for the new line will run at intervals of every two minutes at peak hours with a capacity of as many as 60,000 passengers per hour.

A central control station is a maze of computers, television screens, telephones, lighted maps and control buttons which provide a high degree of safety. There is a triple fire-prevention system in the tunnels and a triple brake on the trains.

To build the subway, a pair of "moles" or 18-foot-diameter drills from the United States and West Germany dug the paired tunnels running deep beneath the historic center. The two ends oea, ine were constructed as a single tunnel of double tracks with digging from the surface, and the trains pass over the Tiber river — on Rome's 26th bridge — rather than under it.

Girl Bullfighter Once Dreamed Of Becoming Nun

By ARTHUR HERMAN

MADRID (UPI) — Diminutive blue-eyed Maribel Atienzar once dreamed of being a nun. Now she collects dolls and kills 1,000-pound bulls with a sword.

The 18-year-old girl bullfighter has, in fact, generated the biggest excitement in an otherwise ho-hum season of corridas, even though she only stands 5 feet and weighs 90 pounds.

"Of course there is a lot of blood," the tiny brunette said. "But just as the bull ends up in the butcher shop, the matador can wind up in the hospital. Personally I have been hit and knocked down but not gored."

Although almost exclusivly a man's domain, Spanish bullfighting has seen women shaking red capes at "toros" over several centuries. At some times in the past, however, authorities have banned women from the ring.

For example, in 1908 the interior minister officially banned women from the ring. The action triggered a scandal because one of the most popular "matadoras," Maria Salome, turned out to be a transvestite and continued fighting as a man under his real name — Agustin Rodriguez.

The dictatorship of Generalissimo Francisco Franco had the best success in keeping the fair sex out of the bullring, enforcing a ban from 1939 to 1974.

However, the Franco government finally bowed to a feminist campaign led by 27year-old blond Angela Hernandez, and lifted the restriction.

So female bullfighters are no longer a novelty. And Maribel has emerged as the best of the lot — and a big drawing card for bullring impresarios who are looking to fill their arenas at a time when superstar matadors are sorely lacking.

Maribel's success won her the great distinction of being the first woman in 40 years to fight in the Madrid arena, the Superbowl of bullfighting. And then the public liked the gutsy girl so much, the promoters brought her back for an unprecedented second Sunday in a row.

After the fight, she received visitors in her room at the traditional Madrid hotel of tauromachy, the Wellington. The long-haired teen-ager was wearing a white terrycloth robe, lying in bed "unwinding" from her performance.

Also on the bed was a black baby doll with a pacifier in its mouth. Said Maribel "One of my backup team men gave me this doll on the day of a fight in which I won three ears. So I carry it with me for good luck. But in all I have a collection of more than 100 dolls."

Maribel said that although she has to kill bulls, she actually likes animals a lot. "I hope eventually to have a little ranch with cows, horses, dogs and cats," she explained.

She refused to talk about how much money she makes, saying only, "We bullfighters are not as rich as people think."

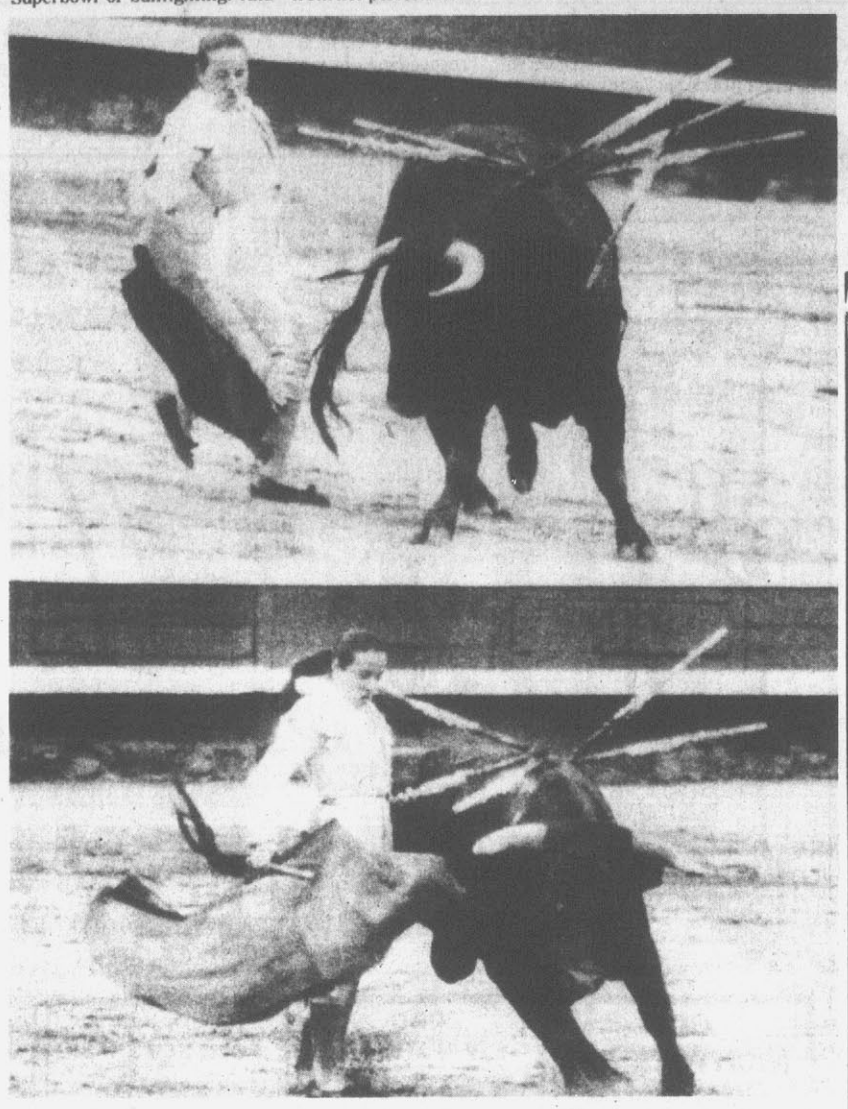

The Spanish press has estimated her best purses at $3,750 per fight, a sum from which she must deduct expenses such as travel, hotels, upkeep of her equipment and fees to her team of banderilleros and picadors.

Maribel does have her critics. They argue that her bullfights are not honest or fair because she works alongside aging or mediocre men matadors and fights smaller bulls.

The critic of the newspaper ABC, Vicente Zabala, said that while Maribel has good qualities "her show is out of place in a real bullfight."

At age 10, Maribel's first ambition was to be a nun. "But then I started getting interested in swimming and other sports and soon I no longer felt the calling," she said.

Three years ago she jumped into a country bullring on a dare and has been in the business ever since. With 100 fights behind her, Maribel has no intention of quitting...until she gets married. "Of course the day that I get married it is natural that I take care of my husband, my house and my children," she said. "But until the documents are signed and the blessings said, I am not going to leave the bulls."

MARIBEL ATIENZAR, who once dreamed of being a nun, is the first woman bullfighter in 40 years to perform in the Madrid arena. The public liked her so much, she was brought back for an unprecedented second Sunday in a row. (UPI Photo)

Even The Los Angeles Dogcatcher Has Public Relations Officeholder

By JACK V. FOX

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Did you know that the dogcatcher of Los Angeles has a "senior public relations representative?"

That the "public affairs director" for the city's Department of Water and Power has an annual salary of $43,000?

That the county sheriff's office has a "Community Services Bureau" requiring 18 uniformed officers plus a number of secretaries?

That each of the county's five elected supervisors has a public relations adviser on the public payroll?

That the city's Municipal Arts Commission has two public relations people whose efforts in the past have included trying — unsuccessfully — to choose an official song for Los Angeles?

That the welfare and unemployment offices have press officers? That there are seven people handling information about smog conditions? That the U.S. Post Office publicity post in Los Angeles pays $26,800 annually?

In the county of Los Angeles alone, there are more than 100 city, county, state and federal agencies with their own separate posts bearing such titles as public relations, public information, public affairs, community relations — all boiling down primarily to the job of presenting the department in the best public light and image.

A survey of 50 of those agencies shows that the average salary of the public relations supervisor is $27,710. The city Department of Airports has an annual budget for community relations of $600,000.

Counting the total personnel, the postage, paper, rents and other overhead, the cost to taxpayers for supporting these offices of public information in Los Angeles county runs an estimated $20 million a year.

The majority of the jobs are protected by civil service. For example, when county assessor Phillip Watson resigned recently his successor, Alexander Pope, brought in a new public relations aide. A job was found for Watson's assistant in another county department.

Some public information officers, such as those serving elected officials like Mayor Tom Bradley and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., function similarly to Jody Powell, the President Carter's spokesman, getting the boss' message across to the press.

Others deal with questions from public callers, in-house publications, brochures on services available, talks at schools and community meetings.

Many of the agencies can make a good case for their existence. As one public relations assistant put it: "There is too little communication with the public about what their government is doing, not too much. There is too little information before the fact and perhaps too much afterwards."

There are also occasions when public information offices are of great value in getting out fast and accurate information.

That applies in particular to disasters such as the recent floods, forest fires, airplane disasters. Law enforcement agencies need such offices to handle the deluge of news media inquiries in such cases, for example, as the Robert Kennedy assassination, the Sharon Tate murders and the current "Hillside Strangler" investigation.

But there are others whose main function is self aggrandizement, particularly of elective officials. One of the best known reporters in Los Angeles worked for a time as a press officer for a county department but he resigned and went back into newspapering.

He says he was always aware of his built-in responsibility not only to make the boss look good but also to act as a buffer against bad publicity and he couldn't square it with his training as an objective journalist.

The city of Los Angeles has by far the most publicity offices.

Somewhat surprisingly, Mayor Tom Bradley has only one press secretary, Tom Sullivan, a deputy and two secretaries. Bradley's political style has always been to keep a low profile and his public information staff is smaller than that of his predecessor, Sam Yorty, although the overall personnel in the mayor's office has increased.

The largest public relations offices are in the three city departments that operate in a semi-autonomous fashion — the Department of Airports, the Port of Los Angeles and the Department of Water and Power.

All three are profit-making operations and they contend that publicity is as essential to their function as it is to General Motors, United States Steel or IBM.

Quinn Cummings: Star Of ABC's 'Family' Is Natural For Screen

Sada Thompson, Quinn Cummings and James Broderick (l to r) star in ABC-TV's hit contemporary dramatic series, "Family," which returns to the Network this fall for its third full season on the air. "Family" moves to Thursdays (10-11 p.m.) Ms. Thompson stars as Kate Lawrence, and Broderick stars as Doug Lawrence. Cummings joins the cast this season as Annie Cooper Lawrence, an orphan adopted by the Lawrence family.

When a neighbor first got to know Quinn Cummings some three years ago, he told her parents, "She's a natural for the screen."

Obviously, he was right, for in just that short period of time, the 11-year-old youngster has gone from TV commercials to an Academy Award nomination to her second regular TV role as an adopted child on ABC's "Family."

An exceptionally bright child, her mother, Mrs. Jan Cummings, explains that her only offspring began walking and talking well before she was a year old, accomplishments she attributes to the fact that "there were a lot of things she wanted to see and say."

That curiosity is what Quinn herself credits for her acting ability.

"I didn't have any more interest in acting than any other kid does, but it sounded like fun and it still is fun, especially since I've never had to take an acting lesson in my life. But it's fun because I can use my instinct and my imagination. You've got to think about what's happening in the part even though you may not have experienced it. Suppose I played someone who has been beaten, a battered child. Well, my mother's never beaten me, but I just use my imagination of what it would be like to have that happen."

Drama Was Family Affair

Robert Hooks and Madge Sinclair star as a couple looking for a more peaceful and meaningful life when they uproot their family and leave Detroit for a small town in the South, in "Down Home," airing Wednesday, August 16, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV.

The drama, written by composer-author-director Melvin Van Peebles, was based upon the acclaimed "GE Theater" presentation of Peebles' "Just an Old Sweet Song," which was presented on the Network last year.

Priscilla and Nate Simmons, played by Miss Sinclair and Hooks, take their three children, played by Tia Rance and Hooks's real-life sons, Kevin and Eric, down South looking for a different life style. An elderly blind woman, Aunt Velvet (Beah Richards), moves in with the Simmons, providing them with the insights and understanding that their urban-bred sensibilities miss. But while the Simmons expected a more peaceful life, their small town is rocked when a mentally distrubed man flies into a rage and kills Nate's business partner.

Hooks appeared pleased with his sons' performance as he observed them during the shooting of key scenes for "Down Home." How does it feel watching his offspring perform? "It's extremely difficult to put into words," he said.

"I'm proud of both boys as actors and, more importantly, as they are growing as people. That's what really makes an actor worth his salt. If they should ever become stars, they will be true stars, because I believe that 'stars' should be humble people — serious about their craft and keenly aware that, without that audience, there is no such thing as acting. The actor is only a part of it. The audience completes the performance.

Robert Hooks stars as a Detroit man who uproots his family and moves to a small town in the South seeking a better life, in "Down Home," hour-long drama to be presented Wednesday, Aug. 16 (8-9 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Lavish Production Is Scheduled

Shirley Jones and Glenn Ford head an all-star cast in "Evening in Byzantium," a spectacular television adaptation of Irwin Shaw's best-selling novel that captures all the dazzle, decadence and power play of Cannes, which will air Sunday and Monday, Aug. 13 and 14 at 9 p.m., on Channel 11. Eddie Albert, Vince Edwards, Erin Gray, Patrick Macnee, Michael Cole and Gloria De Haven also star in key roles.

Going back in history...Byzantium was an ancient Greek City which later became Constantinople. We now know it as Istanbul. The city of Byzantium was synonymous with culture, dazzlement — and sin.

"Evening in Byzantium" is the story of the time spent at the glittering and romantic Cannes Film Festival by a once-great movie producer, Jesse Craig, protrayed by Ford.

After not having made a film for ten years, Craig surfaces at the Cannes Festival with a very provocative script and suddenly he is a very hot commodity. Gail McKinnon (Ms. Gray), a beautiful young writer, tracks him with dogged determination to get an interview, and eventually falls in love with him.

Linden Meets Rabbits

Hal Linden meets some fascinating rabbits in art, literature, legend and mythology on ABC News' magazine series for young people, "Animals Animals Animals," airing Sunday, August 13, 11:30 to 11:55 a.m.

"The Rabbit, the Hippopotamus and the Elephant" is an animated fable in which a rabbit pulls the wool over the eyes of a rude hippo. Our friend the rabbit manages to rope the hippo and an elephant into a good old-fashioned tug-of-war, and certainly poves that you don't need a lot of pull to pull the wool over somebody's eyes.

A rabbit is not a hare, and a hare is not a rabbit, though they're related, and a film tribute titled "Rabbits, Hares and More" is entertaining journey through the land of both species as well as their friends and foes.

On San Juan Island, off the coast of northern Washington, the rabbit population runs into the millions and farmers have not run out of ideas on how to get rid of them. Fred Stevens has made a study of the problem for his Master's thesis in which he concludes that a strange balance has now been reached and the rabbit population will grow no more. But farmers on the island are still digging for ways to cut down the number of rabbits, which are thriving on vine-fresh vegetables.

Daytime On Location?

Most television stars enjoy going out to do on-location filming. There's an aura of excitement, the opportunity to meet their fans, etc. But Lloyd Battista, who brings Roy Slater to life each week in CBS-TV's "Love of Life," is one actor who's happy to be confined most of the time to the daytime series' studio in New York City.

"I think that in a way, if they opened up the budgets and we did a lot of location shooting — we'd end up looking a lot like nighttime television," Lloyd explains. "There would be lots of car chases, lots of shootings, lots of jumping off buildings."

Should this happen, Lloyd believes that the series would be "moving away" from the entire concept of daytime drama.

"We deal with everyday life — always with a romantic element in evidence. These things — chases, shootings— really don't happen, and we'd lose that realistic quality."

Again, unlike many other actors, Lloyd has high praise for the many advantages of daytime TV vs. nighttime shows.

"We're given our scripts ahead of time, and then we go through rehearsals over and over again before we ever go on-camera. In the nighttime shows, there is such a time factor involved that the only actors who have the adequate time to prepare are the one or two stars. The rest — those with small roles or 'walk-ons' — are seldom given the chance to rehearse before the time comes to shoot the scene they're in."

This is Lloyd's first 'soap,' and he joined the "Love of Life" ranks almost three years ago.

THE "OFFICE RUT"

Some folks practically "live" in their offices. They often succumb to what I would call the "office rut." They just seem to drag along. Day after day. Everything is dull. Work never seems to get finished. Spirits drag lower and lower.

Well, here's some advice. Get happy. Come alive. Put life into your office with good looking, soothing, comfortable carpet. Help yourself to a better day—Carpet your office, Mister!

"Quality for Less." That's Eastern Carpets motto. Call 756-1944, or visit our showroom at 602 Greenville Blvd., Greenville, N.C.

Peppard Stars In Drama

When an honest cop who can't be bullied or bought by the mob is disgraced by a frameup, he invents his own rules to go after revenge in "Newman's Law," a crime drama making its television premiere as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," August 13, 9 to 11 p.m., on ABC-TV.

George Peppard stars as Vince Newman, the tough detective who sees police work as a personal crusade, and Abe Vigoda is John Dellanzia, a racket boss who launches a vendetta against Newman.

The murder of a smalltime hashish dealer sets off vibrations that lead all the way to a narcotics kingpin in Naples, and Newman is given free rein by the District Attorney and his police lieutenant to follow up on the case.

Newman's case seems to be growing tighter when the exiled gang leader returns to the U.S., but suddenly the detective becomes the accused when a hood he has captured arrives dead at the police hospital, a supply of drugs is found in Newman's apartment and his father's nursing home expenses are mysteriously paid in full.

The ambitious District Attorney and Newman's by-the-book superior take him off the case and suspend him from duty, but nothing can stop the furious detective from proceeding by his own rules, operating outside the law to clear his name and find his tormentors.

Pursued by crooks and cops alike, leading to a wild shootout in a supermarket where Newman's only friend is shot down by his side, the detective finally faces all his enemies in a solo raid on gangland headquarters.

The pursuit of international dope-dealers can be as dirty as the narcotics trade itself when George Peppard plays an honest cop caught between warring gangland factions and big city politics in "Newman's Law," a television premiere airing on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," August 13 (9-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Gets Award

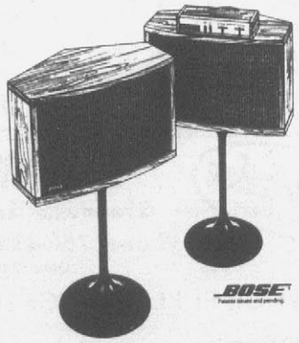

Bill Monroe, executive producer and moderator-panelist of NBC News' "Meet the Press," has been named recipient of the Paul White Memorial Award of the Radio Television News Directors Association (RTNDA). He will accept the award when he addresses the final banquet of RTNDA's 33rd international conference in Atlanta, Friday, Sept. 22.

In making the announcement, the RTNDA noted that Monroe has "long been recognized as one of the preeminent advocates of radio and television parity with print journalists under the First Amendment. He has lectured widely and written many articles on the issues of freedom for electronic editors, producers and reporters, and has been a witness before Congressional hearings on the Fairness Doctrine and other restrictions imposed on radio-television news programming."

Escape Yarn To Air

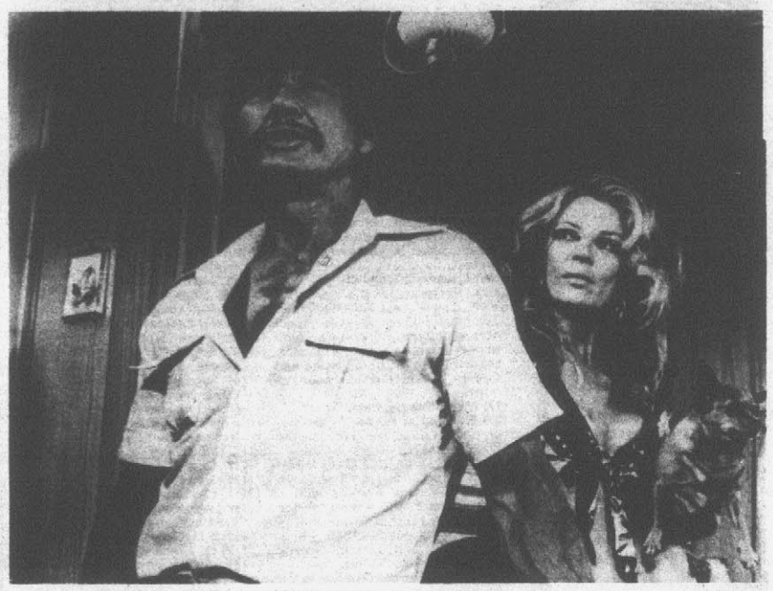

Charles Bronson's star status is further solidified by his excellent performance in "Breakout," an entertaining escape yarn airing on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" August 14, 9 to 11 p.m., on NBC-TV. Although the action is mapped out on a more modest scale than might be expected, the plot has a direct, assertive appeal that grabs viewers' attention and stirs up a rooting interest in the outcome.

Bronson is cast as Nick Colton, a adventuresome pilot, who is impressed by the determination of Ann Wagner (Jill Ireland) to free her husband, Jay (Robert Duvall), from jail. Even after several attempts have proven unsuccessful, Ann continues to seek help in reaching her goal.

Despite the doubts of his partner, Hawk (Randy Quaid), Colton agrees to land his small plane on a road where a work crew is gathered. Forced to take off under heavy gunfire, Colton begins to suspect that this attempt and all the others have failed because the authorities have been tipped off.

Colton convinces an acquaintance to teach him to fly a helicopter and then borrows the flying machine for an unorthodox rescue attempt that will net him $250,000 if he succeeds.

As expected, Bronson brings off the stunt with characterisitc aplomb. Less expected is the actor's ingratiatingly comic performance.

MASTERMINDS ESCAPE PLAN–Charles Bronson stars as a pilot who attempts to convince a friend (Sheree North) to aid him in attempting the airborne rescue of a prisoner in a Mexican jail, in "Breakout," on "Monday Night at the Movies," Aug. 14 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Snake In The Grass

The men in charge of recording the sound on movie and television stages get nervous when visitors come on the set. They're always afraid they'll speak or cough or bump into something and ruin a very important scene.

But Frank Meadows, soundman on NBC-TV's "Little House on the Prairie," thought he could control his own 4-year-old son Billy, so he brought him along to spend the day — and he'll always be glad he did.

The 'Little House' company, shooting scenes for the new season, was working in the high-grass area of Southern California mountains, and the little boy behaved himself pretty well most of the day. But then he blew it.

The cameras were rolling, on a long and complicated scene with star Michael Landon, when suddenly little Billy said, in a very loud voice, "Hey, Daddy."

Landon, who knew the shot had been ruined by the lad's high voice, smiled at Meadows, who was staring at his son as though he had just been betrayed.

She's Not Really 'Hot Lips'

Loretta Swit is not necessarily thrilled by the success she's attained in portraying Hot Lips in TV's "M*A*S*H," seen Mondays on CBS.

"It changes everything," Miss Swit candidly explains. "It's amazing and it's rather awesome. You can't go anywhere alone, generally you have to have some type of protection, it's sometimes simply cumbersome, and I don't think I'll ever get used to it.

"I'm still shocked when people know me, and handling that bothers me sometimes because I don't think I handle it well. I don't want to be rude, because I'm grateful for what the show has done for my career. However, there are disadvantages.

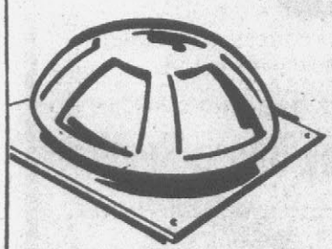

"Sometimes it bothers me a lot. The character I play has sort of a builtin notoriety that I am not, and I'm expected, in certain circles, to be that way or to live up to that. And it can be very difficult. I sometimes have the great need to just say, 'Give me the script, let me just do what I want to do, act, and forget all those other things.'

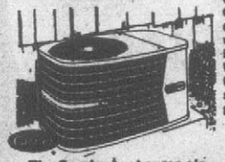

"I've always been better on stage than I am at intermission," she says with a chuckle. "A script I can hide behind, I can do things in the name of the character more easily than I can myself. I've never had confidence in any other area than what I can do, which is work. That's one kind of security that I've had all my life, so it's a lot easier to just work.

Drama Stars James Caan

British minature submarines go after a fleet of Nazi warhsips during the height of World War II, in "Submarine X-1," an action drama starring James Caan, to be broadcast for the first time on television on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," August 15, 9 to 11 p.m., on CBS-TV.

In his first motion picture starring role, Caan portrays Lt. Cmdr. John Bolton. After losing his submarine in a battle with the German warship Lindendorf, Bolton is put in charge of a top secret training project at a remote castle in Scotland.

Among the men being trained is Lt. Davies (David Summer), another survivor of the ill-fated battle, a man who blames the loss on Bolton's incompetence.

At first, the purpose of the secret training is a mystery even to Bolton. After fighting off an enemy force, the men realize that they are being prepared to man a new class of minature submarines, the last ace in the hole for use against a fleet of Nazi warships gathering in the Norwegian fjords to launch an invasion of Britain.

To all involved it means danger, but to Bolton and Davies it also means another crack at the Lindendorf.

James Caan stars as the leader of a secret force of submariners out to attack the Nazi fleet, in "Submarine X-1," a World War II drama to be broadcast for the first time on television on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movie," Aug. 15 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

'Deadly Trap' Airs

Frank Langella and Faye Dunaway star in "The Deadly Trap," a suspenseful tale of industrial espionage, to be seen for the first time on television on "The CBS Wednesday Night Movies" August 16, 9 to 11 p.m., on CBS-TV. Also starring is Barbara Parkins.

As the film opens, Philip (Langella) meets an unidentified member of an organization involved in industrial espionage, an activity in which he was once engaged. The man has tracked Philip to Paris from America, where he had fled and abandoned his once promising career as a mathematician.

A First For PBS

Ronney Zamora, 15, was convicted last year in the "television intoxication" murder of his 82-year-old neighbor. The Miami trial was the first in the country to be videotaped and broadcast without approval of the participants.

PBS presents a two-hour special, "TV on Trial," which focuses on the high lights of the murder trial. Political commentator Richard Reeves provides an overview of the proceedings.

"TV on Trial" will provide most viewers with an opportunity to witness an actual murder trial for the first time. For those whose knowledge of circuit courts has been shaped by Perry Mason et al., the show is an eye-opening experience. It airs Tuesday, August 15, at 9 p.m.

The program is the result of the state of Florida's one-year pilot program allowing cameras in courtrooms. This historic experiment permits coverage without consent of trial participants or even the judge.

Debbie Reynolds Loved Mothering

The Singing Nun has become a Softhearted Spider.

Debbie Reynolds, who has chirped and twinkle-toed her way through some of the best musicals of the last two decades, has what must rate as the most unusual role of her career, in "Charlotte's Web," the animated musical version of E. B. White's classic story, currently airing on "CBS Family Film Classics," on Tuesday, Aug. 15, 8 to 9 p.m.

After all, how many chances does an actress get to play a beautiful arachnid with 514 children?

"I'm always looking for offbeat roles," says Miss Reynolds. "This is easily the most charming part I've had since Molly Brown. Charlotte the life-saving spider is totally warm and loving. She gives so much. She puts the needs of others above her own."

Doing voices for an animated musical is a complex, intricate job that requires elaborate technical preparation. The dialogue and songs are done first and then the characters' movements are precisely matched to the sound track.

"An actor's voice can affect the whole look of the film," Miss Reynolds explains. "At the recording sessions we listened to the replays again and again to polish every syllable and nuance. When you've got the feeling, you've got it all. The technique takes care of itself."

"But you've got to keep in mind that you're not there on the screen," she says. "The audience won't see you, so you can't sell it on the face. And you've got to remember what the animal you are playing — that is, doing the voice for — is going to be doing, which of course will be done after you've done the voicing for it. Now that I've clarified that...," she added with a laugh.

"Charlotte's Web" was a project that Miss Reynolds had wanted to do for some years. She used to read White's moving story about the miracles of life and death to her children, and all her fees for the film were donated to charity.

'My Name Is Nobody'

Henry Fonda stars as an aging gunfighter, who, having survived more than his share of tense encounters, hopes to retire into anonymity, but is thwarted by a cocky drifter with other plans in "My Name Is Nobody," a western satire to be rebroadcast as NBC-TV's "The Big Event" Tuesday, August 15, 9 to 11 p.m. Terence Hill co-stars.

Fonda portrays Jack Beauregard, a legendary quick-draw artist with an established reputation for taking on all challengers during the height of lawlessness in the old West. Would-be opponents seek him out, even as he relaxes in a barber's chair. For years Beauregard has lived as a constant target and he is tired of it.

Determined to live out his days in peace, Beauregard sets out on a trip to the East, intending to establish a new identity far removed from his past. Then, he meets an obnoxious young drifter who identifies himself as "Nobody."

The young man, also an accomplished gunman, explains that he has been a fan of Beauregard for years and would like nothing less than to see his idol conclude his career in a blaze of glory.

'Nobody' arranges a confrontation between Beauregard and "the wild bunch" and when the desired results are not achieved, the young man decides to challenge Beauregard himself in a shoot-out on the docks of New Orleans.

Godfrey Cambridge Stars

Two Harlem police detectives are faced with a baffling mystery, a rash of murders bearing the trademark of a gangster gunned down over 40 years ago, in "Come Back Charleston Blue," a comedy-mystery starring Godfrey Cambridge and Raymond St. Jacques, to be broadcast on "The CBS Saturday Night Movies," Saturday, August 19, 9 to 11 p.m., on CBS-TV.

Cambridge and St. Jacques reprise the roles of Gravedigger Jones and Coffin Ed Johnson that they created in "Cotton comes to Harlem."

Highlights On CBS-TV

CBS Sports will present third-round play of the $300,000 Westchester Classic Saturday, August 19, at 4 p.m. Among this year's star-studded field is defending Champion Andy North, winner of this year's prestigious U.S. Open.

It wasn't until last year's Westchester Classic that Andy North scored a PGA Tour Victory. He had been in contention several times in his first four years on the Tour, however it wasn't until Westchester that he won.

Andy got in position with 66-70-65 at Westchester and closed with a 71 to defeat George Archer by two strokes.

The $60,000 check accounted for more than half of his total official earnings for 1977.

An unusual ailment helped lead Andy North to golf when he was in the seventh grade in Madison, Wisconsin. A bone in his knee had stopped growing and started disintegrating. While on crutches for 18 months, he was told to give up his pursuit of basketball and football. Golf was the sport for him if he rode in a cart.

Since Andy's father was a low-handicap golfer, the game was no stranger to the family and he progressed quickly. With renewed strength he returned to basketball and was chosen all-state as a high school senior, but by then golf was his dominant sport.

He won the Wisconsin high school championship in 1966 and 1967, the State Amateur in 1969 and placed second in the Wisconsin Open in 1968 and 1969. After entering the University of Florida, he was chosen All-American for three years and won the 1971 Western Amateur.

It wasn't until this year's U.S. Open Andy North really arrived. He had won only one tournament as a professional— the Westchester Classic. Yet, he won the prestigious U.S. Open with a historic bogey. On the toughest hole, the 18th, he drove into the upper right rough. Hitting a wonderful bunker shot, he needed a four-foot putt to win the Open. Then, in front of 25,000 spectators and a television audience, he rammed the ball into the cup.

WESTERN SATIRE--Terence Hill stars as a young man who attempts to fulfill his ultimate fantasy when he meets an aging legendary gunfighter, in "My Name is Nobody," a western satire on NBC-TV's "The Big Event," Tuesday, Aug. 15 (9-11 p.m.).

Animals Cause Terror

Fear and panic grip thousands of people when a huge tanker truck crashes through a fence at a wildlife park, freeing dozens of dangerous animals, in "The Beasts are in the Streets," airing as the "NBC Movie of the Week," Wednesday, August 16, 8 to 10 p.m., on NBC-TV. Carol Lynley and Dale Robinette star.

Dr. Claire MacCauley (Lynley), a veterinarian at the park, and Kevin Johnson (Robinette), the head ranger, desperately try to organize the roundup of the panicked beasts— lions, panthers, tigers, elephants, rhinos, camels, bears.

A lion and a bear engage in a deadly struggle at a large amusement park, sending hundreds of patrons fleeing. Two teen-agers in a hot rod barely escape as a half dozen rhinos destroy their car, and two lions prowl the countryside as terrified residents are reluctant to leave their homes.

Ms. Lynley, a New York-bred actress whose previous encounters with wild animals was at a Bronx Zoo worked with all sorts of beasts while filming the drama.

"The trainers we worked with impressed on me the fact that any wild animal is potentially dangerous," she said. "I learned to approach the camels with caution — or maybe with fear — because they can be very nasty — kicking and biting.

"And very quickly I got very respectufull of the big cats with sharp teeth."

"Stay on the side of him opposite where his feet are," the trainer said. "That way he's got to get up to get you."

"I can't tell you what a comfort that was to know," she said, retreating slightly.

"The Beasts are in the Streets" was filmed on location in Grand Prairie, Texas.

TALE OF TERROR--Carol Lynley is called upon to utilize her expertise as a veternarian when dangerous animals run loose in a small town following a truck accident, in "The Beasts Are in the Streets," on "NBC Movie of the Week" Wednesday, Aug. 16 (8-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Hopkins Protrays Actor

A horrowing portrait of self-destruction and despair encores as "Great Performances" features "The Arcata Promise." Anthony Hopkins stars as a successful actor who brings about his own decline in this tragic drama, which airs Wednesday, August 16, 9 p.m., on PBS.

Hopkins portrays the character of Theo Gunge, in what he has called "a part any actor might dream about." Gunge is a rich arrogant and successful actor who promises a beautiful girl that he "will love her, look after her, never hurt or oppress her in any way." He breaks that promise, and does abuse her until she leaves him. He then continues on a collision course with disaster which results in a shattering and unexpected conclusion. Kate Nelligan and John Fraser also star in this devastating drama bout an actor's self-destruction.

Hopkin's role as Gunge received universal acclaim from the British press for his portrayal. The Daily Telegraph of London raved, "Anthony Hopkins gives the finest television portrayal I have ever seen from him." Hopkins, who starred in "Equus" on Broadway, is currently appearing in Richard Attenborough's "A Bridge Too Far" and is starring in MGM's "International Velvet" along with Tatum O'Neal.

Beah Richards- Actress, Writer

Beah Richards, who was nominated for an Oscar for her role as the mother in the film "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner," and who has a long list of theater and other films credits, is also a writer.

"I write poetry and essays," she said, during a break in filming "Down Home," a one-hour drama to be presented Wednesday, August 16, at 8 p.m., on CBS-TV.

"I have an evening of poetry readings called 'A Black Woman Speaks,' which I have toured all over Los Angeles. It ran for seven months in the Inner City Cultural Center and I won a local Emmy when it was presented on KCET-TV," she noted.

A woman of intense, colorful speech, she combines the sensitivity of a poet with the sensibilities of an actress.

Award Documentary Acquired By ABC-TV

ABC News, in a move unprecedented for a network news division, has acquired the critically acclaimed Peabody, DuPont and Emmy Award-winning documentary, "The Police Tapes," from independent producers Alan and Susan Raymond.

The documentary, which originally aired as a 90-minute film on WNET-TV, the public television station in New York, will air in hour-long form on ABC-TV Thursday, August 17, 10 to 11 p.m., as part of the award-winning "ABC News Closeup" series, under the direction of Executive Producer Pamela Hill.

Roone Arledge, ABC News President, said that the acquisition was made to complement the network's recently aired documentary on juvenile crime, "Youth Terror: The View From Behind the Gun," which drew wide praise from critics throughout the nation.

"In 'Youth Terror,' we showed the deprivation and fears of city youths who take to the streets. Their frustrations were graphically illustrated in their own words and actions, without benefit of narration," Arledge said.

Viola Featured On 'Visa' Series

The color, flavor and pulse of a society in flux are recorded by video artist Bill Viola in "Memories of the Ancestors: The Solomon Islands," the fourth episode of the five-part "Visa" series to be broadcast at 7 p.m. Thursday, August 17, on UNC-TV.

"During the past two decades, 2,000 years of Solomon Islands' cultural heritage has been all but obliterated by the constant bombardment of Western ideas and influences," Viola said. "I tried to create an audio-visual statement about my experiences and impressions of the Islands. The program is a form of visual anthropology," he said, "and it may also be the only view we ever get of the Solomon Islands' heritage before it is lost forever." The former British protectorate became independent on July 7, 1978.

Viola visited the Solomon Islands several times before independence, and, on one of his first trips, met Moro, a cult and spiritual leader of the village, who was responsible for many of the events shown in the program. According to Islanders, twenty-five years ago, Moro died while on a fishing trip. He was dead for more than 24 hours, and was being prepared for burial, when he suddenly arose before the eyes of his startled friends and relatives and began speaking "in tongues" of the vision he had while dead.

Moro told the villagers his vision led him to create a House of Memories for the Islands, which would act for young people as a bridge between their ancestoral heritage and their contemporary life situation.

He gathered the young islanders together to teach them about their fading cultural heritage and enlisted their aid in building the House of Memories and preparing for the festival of ancient music and dance filmed by Viola.

Believing that the people and the events of the Solomon Islands music and dance festival should speak for themselves, Viola varied from the traditional documentary format, and did not include an on going narration. Instead, he incorporated short, almost subliminal bursts of images juxtaposing modern elements of island life with the re-created events of the past.

Pike's Peek

By Charlie Pike, TV Showtime staff writer.

HOLLYWOOD — A believe it or not. Robert Wagner and Eddie Albert have not yet been officially notified that "Switch" has been axed by CBS. The network's option for the actors has expired, however, but with the show placing fifth in the latest Neilsen ratings there are those who are urging Bob to call the network brass to see if "Switch" couldn't come back at mid-season. Bob's thinking about it.

Certainly enjoyed meeting and visiting with Lexington's (N.C.) Caskey Swain, and this pillar has to tell his family and friends in the North Carolina community that their native son is learning about city life very well. He got away with this reporter's Bic.

Jack Lord called it one of the most memorable days of his life when he was honored by the Variety Club of Hawaii with its highest honor. Don Ho served as MC, while on hand to share in the festivities with Lord and his wife were "Hawaii Five-O" co-star, James MacArthur, Honolulu Mayor Frank Fasi, Gov. George Ariyoshi and Chief Barker Kane Fernandez of the Variety Club. Proceeds will benefit the children with learning disabilities at the Variety Club School on the Islands. The youngsters designed and made each of the center pieces at the affair.

Raymond Buktenica will very likely become Julie Kavner's TV husband during the upcoming season of "Rhoda." An early script in the series has the couple becoming engaged, and no doubt a wedding will soon follow. Ironically for Raymond, he originally got the role as Julie's love interest for just one segment two years ago, and now it's evolved into a fulltime job.

Tom Jones turns actor with a special guest role in the two-hour TV movie, "Pleasure Cove," and the handsome singer says he hopes it's just the beginning of a brand new endeavor in his career. He doesn't sing a note in the film, but he does dance the jitter bug to the music of Les Brown and his Band of Renown.

Kristy McNichol and Quinn Cummings haven't had much of a summer vacation. With school rapidly approaching, many of their scenes in upcoming segments of "Family" are being filmed back-to-back so when they begin school again on the set with a tutor, production won't be disrupted as it might be otherwise.

Corps Competition

The top twelve drum and bugle corps finalists from the United States and Canada will compete for the title of champion at the 7th annual "Drum Corps International Championship." The 1978 Championship finals will be seen live from the majestic Mile High Stadium in Denver, Colorado, Friday, August 18, on PBS.

DCI colorman, drill designer and marching and maneuvering instructor Peter Emmons will co-host the finals and provide background on the competition, and the structure of the drum corps.

Corps members, ranging from 12 to 21 years of age, turn the competition into a four-hour spectacle of color and rhythm. Their performance is judged on marching and split-second maneuvering, drumming and bugling, and overall general effect. The music ranges from oldies and Broadway show tunes to modern, jazz and classical numbers.

Tradition, bearing and discipline have become synonymous with the corps. For many it's a musical sport. But for the thousands of drum corps members, this competition is the culmination of total dedication — hundreds of hours of arduous practice, thousands of miles of travel and a lot of sacrifice. They're kids who fight hard for first place.

Western Stars Janssen

David Janssen plays an escaped prisoner who is out to even up some scores but finds himself up against a woman bent on getting revenge, in the western adventure drama, "Macho Callahan," to be rebroadcast as "The CBS Late Movie" Friday, August 18, at 11:30 p.m., on CBS-TV. Also starring in the film are Jean Seberg and Lee J. Cobb, with David Carradine and Diane Ladd is supporting roles.

Callahan escapes from his solitary confinement in a squalid Confederate prison with one thought in his mind.

Dolphins Are Looking Good

The once-awesome Miami Dolphins were crippled in 1975 by the World Football League's raids on their talent; as a result, in 1976 the Dolphins fielded an injury-riddled, trouble-plagued ballclub that struggled to a 6-8 record.

Last season, Don Shula's coaching mastery was most evident as the Dolphins were resurrected to within an official's whistle of a playoff berth. Their stunning performance clearly elevates the speedy Dolphins to contender status in the AFC East.

On Friday, August 18, the Miami Dolphins will host the Minnesota Vikings and ABC-TV televises the action, beginning at 9 p.m. The Dolphins will be anxious to experiment and gain depth as Shula continues to mesh young new collegians with his seasoned veterans. Six starters have been culled from the last three college drafts, while the remaining five on his defensive unit are wearing Super Bowl rings. This combination of spirit and savvy enabled the Dolphins to rank second in AFC scoring defense in 1977.

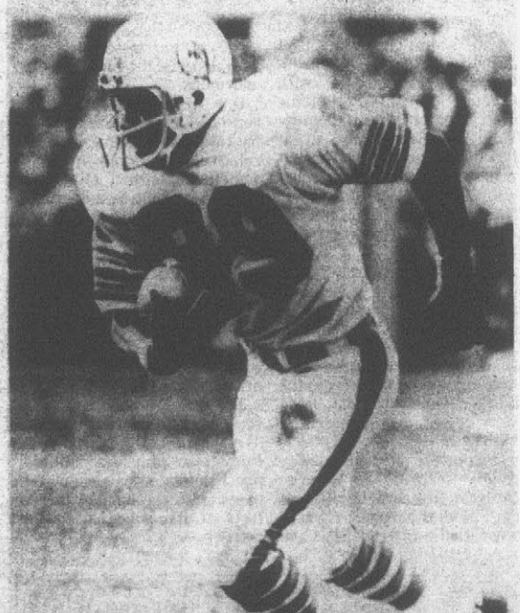

Offensively the Dolphins are led by consensus All-Pro quarterback, Bob Griese. He will command a well-greased offense that is as powerful as Andy in the NFL. A 12-year veteran, Griese led the NFL with 22 touchdown strikes, for a 58.6 completion percentage and 2,252 yards.

On the other end of Griese's aerials are some of the best receivers in the NFL. Nat Moore led the NFL with 12 TDs and was fourth in receptions with 52. Duriel Harris and tight end Andre Tillman are the rest of the best.

The Dolphins have an abundant supply of running backs. Norm Bulaich, Don Nottingham and Bennie Malone are joined by Gary Davis and Leroy Harris. Davis gained 533 yards as a sophomore, and Harris rushed for 417 as a rookie in tandem the final five games last season. As if the stable were bare, the Dolphins acquired speedster Delvin Williams from the San Francisco 49ers this past April. Williams set a 49er record in the NFL in 1976 behind only Walter Payton and O.J. Simpson.

The real strength of any offense is up front where the battle is really won or lost. The Dolphins have 46 years of combined experience in their five-man front. That includes three All-Pros: Jim Langer at center, flanked by guards Larry Little and Bob Kuechenberg, form the strongest interior in the league.

On the verge of All Pro recognition, Nat Moore gave the Miami Dolphins 52 catches for 765 yards and 12 TDs. Nat Moore and the Dolphins prepare for their regular season against the Minnesota Vikings on Friday, Aug. 18 at 9 p.m. on ABC-TV.

HEPBURN TO STAR IN TV MOVIE

"The Corn is Green," the story of an English-woman's gallant struggle to educate youthful Welsh coal miners, is adapted from the play by Emlyn Williams. It is scheduled to be broadcast during the 1978-79 season on CBS-TV.

Ancient Amulet Does The Trick

One minute she is an attractive high school teacher named Andrea Thomas. Then' when the occasion arises, Andrea touches an ancient Egyptian amulet and invokes the magic words, "Oh, mighty Isis." In a flash Andrea is transformed into Isis. Her street clothes magically become those of an Egyptian goddess, and she instantly has the power to control the elements, to stop or reverse time, and she can ride the "zephyr winds" to simulate flight.

JoAnna Cameron is the star of "The Secrets of Isis," a live-action series for children, telecast Saturdays at 11:30 a.m. on CBS-TV.

You'll find no violence in the series, and the stories on "The Secrets of Isis" usually focus upon some youth with a very real problem, such as cheating on an exam or being jealous of a rival.

After the youth gets himself into a predicament from which only Isis can save him, the super-heroine appears in an epilogue to explain the episode's moral.

JoAnna, who says she was born on "a mountainside north of Denver, Colorado," drifted into acting in an effortless manner while attending Stanford University. With only one television commercial to her credit, she was selected to play Bob Hope's daughter in the motion picture "How to Commit a Marriage." Hope knew JoAnna because she went to school with his daughter, Linda.

Commercials and other miscellaneous acting jobs have financed JoAnna's first love — travel and the study of art, architecture and people in various lands. To date, she has managed to live in the South of France, Paris, London and Florence, and to take a photo safari to Africa.

An outdoors woman, JoAnna excels in both water and snow skiing. She is a certified scuba diver, a sailor, and a horse woman, and plays what she terms a "fair" game of tennis.

JoAnna's other theatrical credits include appearances in "Marcus Welby, M.D.," "Petrocelli," "Switch" and "It Couldn't Happen to a Nicer Guy," one of several movies for television in which she has been cast.

Race Viewed Again

"You've got to be lucky and you've got to be good to win at Talladega," says former Winston 500 winner Darrell Waltrip, "but I'd rather be lucky."

Waltrip was the youthful sensation of the NASCAR Winston Cup circuit last year when he won the Winston 500 as well as 5 other races and $276,312.

Sunday, August 6, the popular Tennessee driver returned to the scene of his greatest triumph and hoped to become the 10th different driver to win the Talladega 500 on its 10th anniversary. CBS Sports Spectacular will present highlights of the race Saturday, August 19, at 5 p.m.

Series Relates To Today's Society

There was a time when the word "runaway," used in reference to children, meant something adventurous, amusing— even normal. But that isn't the case in the 1970's. The days of Huckleberry Finn or Tom Sawyer are long gone and today's teen-age runaways flee in desperation rather than for adventure.

It is largely the story of today's young runaways which is being dealt with in the new NBC-TV series, "The Runaways." The age groups vary in each of the segments, of course, and adults of both sexes who choose to run away are featured, but mostly the cameras are focusing on youngsters.

The flight from unpleasant, painful or frightening circumstances is a fact of life. Even a toddler will run from a person or situation which frightens him. Therefore it isn't surprising to learn that in today's society people with serious, personal problems often attempt to solve them by fleeing. Unfortunately, what they flee to can be as bad as that from which they are running. Often it is too late to go back. The youngster has run too far, too fast and with the wrong people.

The statistics since 1975 are incomplete, but it is believed that there is a runaway every 15 seconds in the United States. Unlike the Depression years, when most runaways were in their middle or late teens, the average runaway today is 14 years of age, and 60 percent of them are girls.

The reasons for running away usually seem to be serious. Parental pressure because of bad marks in school, a clash of generations, differing goals are some of the lesser problems with parents, the conflict seems enormous.

One of the most tragic of reasons involves sexual exploitation of a youngster by a relative or a family friend — sometimes even a father. No matter what the teen-ager runs toward, to him the situation has to be an improvement over life at home. Violent, abusive, alcoholic or drug-addicted parents are another painful reality. Once more, the teen-ager says to himself: "However bad it is out there, it couldn't be worse than it is here." But they are not always right.

The series' producers hope to show a balanced picture of kids — and adults — on the run. Alan Feinstein plays a clinical psychologist who is employed by parents to augment the efforts of the police in finding runaways.

Clark Hosts Special

Dick Clark, who produced the highly successful "Dick Clark's Good Ol' Days" last season, will salute the rock stars of 1955-1966 and Philadelphia, the city that was home to many of those stars, in "Dick Clark's Good Ol' Days Part II," a special to be colorcast on NBC during the upcoming season.

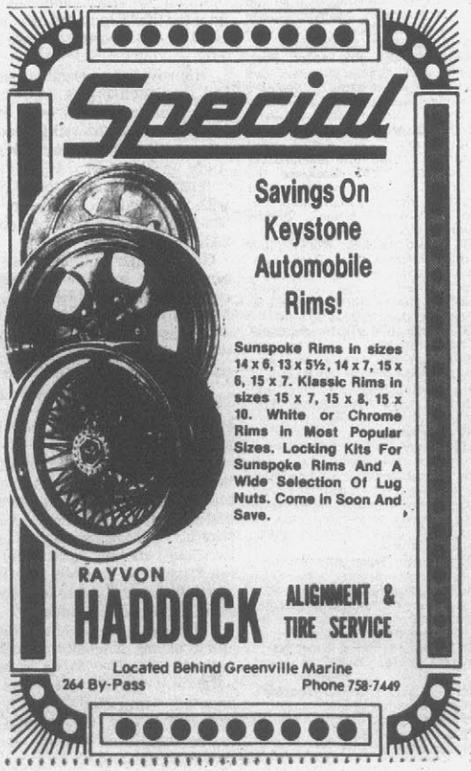

Last year's special, telecast October 11, 1977, scored an impressive 23.9 rating and 36 share — opposite the opening game of the World Series — according to the Nielsen Television Index.

The setting for Part II will be a Hollywood party, with many of the musical stars of 1955-66 in attendance. Clark will be host; Frankie Avalon and Annette, co-hosts. Some of the action will take place on the beach at Malibu, and Clark will visit Pop Singer's Drugstore in Philadelphia, hangout for many of the Bandstand regulars during the formative years of rock and roll.

Performing on the show will be the stars who hit the upper echelons of the pop charts between 1955-66, including Bobby Vee ("Take Good Care of My Baby"), the Four Tops ("I Can't Help Myself"), Brenda Lee ("I'm Sorry"), Chubby Checker ("The Twist"), Jerry Lee Lewis ("Great Balls of Fire"), Bobby Rydell ("Wild One"), Paul Revere and the Raiders ("Kicks"), Teresa Brewer ("Music, Music, Music") and Patti Page ("(The Tennesse Waltz").

Other guest stars on the show will include Suzanne Somers of the hit TV series "Three's Company"; Ed McMahon of "The Tonight Show"; television producer James Komack ("Welcome Back, Kotter"), who had a co-starring role in the series "The Courtship of Eddie's Father"; comedian Shelley Berman; and Roger Price, whose "Droodles" became popular in the 1950s.

Vikings Coach Knew All Along

With a club record of 136 victories, 94 losses and 8 ties in 17 seasons, the Minnesota Vikings return in a pre-season National Football League contest with the Miami Dolphins Friday, August 18, at 9 p.m. on ABC-TV.

Head coach Bud Grant recognized All-Pro caliber in Chuck Foreman when he and the Viking scouting staff claimed him on the first round in the 1973 draft.

A product of the University of Miami (Fla.), Chuck played wide receiver and running back his last two years there. He caught 56 passes for 732 yards and rushed for 1,631. As a running back, he was offensive MVP in both the Senior Bowl and the North-South game.

In 1975, Coach Grant commented: "Chuck's talents just fit into professional football. He is the complete player. He had no big adjustments to make except learning to block — which he has done." Grant's feelings about hia multi-talented running back haven't changed — they have only intensified. He recently said: "There may be some others who are more effective outside or inside. There may be better blockers. But there is no one else around who can do all three things in combination better than Chuck Foreman."

Since coming into the league in 1973, Foreman has averaged over 51 pass receptions a year. A Vikings' club spokesman explained his modest 36 pass receptions last season as such: "Chuck has gotten more attention. As a result, the wide receivers (Sammy White and Ahmad Rashad) have had more opportunities to catch the ball."

An extremely versatile runner, Foreman can burst through the line and break tackles with a slashing style that is strictly his. He has gained over 1,000 yards rushing each of the last three seasons and now has an average of 983 yards per season in his pro career.

Veteran Fran Tarkenton, who has seen plenty of the best in his long career, opines: "I don't know a better pass receiving running back. He has sure hands, runs his patterns well and has a feel for adjusting that I can anticipate."

Chuck Foreman starts his 6th year in a Viking uniform when the Minnesota Vikings challenge the Miami Dolphins in a pre-season National Football League contest Friday, Aug. 18 at 9 p.m. on ABC-TV.

Speaking out on their own individual triumphs and disappointments of 1978 as well as on such topics as the burgeoning number of outstanding players on the tour will be 1978 British Open winner Jack Nicklaus, regarded by many as the greatest golfer ever to play the game; Tom Watson, winner of three 1978 PGA Tour events; gallery favorite Lee Trevino, who in 1978 left no doubts that he had successfully recovered from the back problems that jeopardized his career; and Gary Player, whose three straight tourney wins (The Masters, Tournament of Champions and Houston Open) captured the attention of the entire golfing world.

In looking back over the year, the show will also feature footage of the most exciting moment in golf — a hole in one — as shot by tour pros John Mahaffey and Tom Purtzer during 1978 tour played Mahaffey's ace came during the Tournament Players Championship while Purtzer went from tee to cup in the Canadian Open.

Martin Cast As Rogue

Dean Martin plays a sardonic rogue who encounters a series of unexpected complications when he attempts a daring robbery that he feels will make him rich for life, in "Something Big," a western drama on "NBC Saturday Night at the Movies" August 19, 9 to 11 p.m., on NBC-TV. Brian Keith and Honor Blackman also star.

Martin portrays Joe Baker, who, in 1879, leads a band of renegades in a plan to plunder the hideout of another bandit, Emilio Estevez (Jose Angel Espinosa), rumored to hold the richest cache of stolen treasures on the continent.

Baker hopes to establish himself as a wealthy man and return East where his fiancee has long awaited their planned marriage. But in staging an attack on the well-fortified stronghold of Estevez, Baker realizes he will need a high-powered gatling gun — that's where his problems begin.

When he kidnaps Mary Anna Morgan (Blackman), the wife of a cavalary colonel (Keith), hoping to trade her for a gun, he becomes the object of an intense Army manhunt.

'Le Disco' Airs

"Le Disco," a 90-minute special originating from New York's hottest disco, Studio 54, and the NBC Studios in Burbank Calif., will be telecast Saturday, August 19, 11:30 p.m. to 1 a.m., on NBC-TV.

The special will pre-empt "NBC's Saturday Night Live."

Musical guest stars in the special are The Spinners, whose string of hit records includes "I'll be Around," "The Rubberband Man" and "It's a Shame"; and the Village People, who are climbing the record charts this week with their hit single, "Macho Man." Also featured in the show are magician Lee Edwards and trapeze performer Jann Ricca.

Dick Clark will host a segment from New York's Studio 54, showing viewers what goes on inside what is perhaps the country's best-known discotheque.

Studio 4 at NBC in Burbank will be converted into a discotheque, where 80 couples will compete to be judged the best disco dancers. A celebrity panel, headed by "Saturday Night Fever" choreographer Lester Wilson, will judge the disco dance contest.

Rock Singers Write

Michael Tucci and Darrell Fetty co-star as Teddy Serrano and Scott Rollins, respectively, a once-popular team of rock singers who decides to forsake the "road" and become staff songwriters for a slick Hollywood record company. The half-hour comedy program will be broadcast Saturday, August 19, 8:30 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV.

The president of the record company is a young Hollywood whiz kid whose office is always filled with aspiring performers. Into this world comes Teddy and Scott. Teddy, a chubby and loveable bachelor, sometimes misses the glamour of performing and looks for ways to get himself and his partner back on stage. Scott, however, likes songwriting because it gives him more time to spend at home with his loving wife and son. The conflicting goals lead the pair into numerous situations.

SINGER MAKES ACTING DEBUT

NUTRIENT LABELING ... TO HELP CONSUMERS

At Kroger Sav-On we believe that consumers should be given information which will help them shop more wisely.

One of the most important informational aids you'll find in your supermarket is nutrient labeling. Kroger Sav-On customers now find this new shopping aid on the labels of approximately 600 of our own brand products, as well as many national and regional brands. Canned fruits and vegetables, soups, salad dressing, bread, milk, cheese, cereals...and many other foods. There will be more.

First, use nutrient labeling to compare brands. The lower-priced product (such as Kroger Sav-On brands) which provides the same nutrients represents a better buy. Compare nutrition as well as price, and you'll benefit twice.

Second, look at the nutritional information provided. Calorie count, grams of protein, carbohydrates and fat, as well as the amount of protein and seven essential vitamins and minerals contained in a serving. Become just as aware of the nutrients you are buying as you are of the flavor and the cost. Use this information to plan the meals you serve your family.

Nutrient labeling is designed to help you-our shoppers. Use it. Read the label...and set a better table.

That's what you'll find at Kroger Sav-On. Most of our fresh fruits and vegetables are in bulk displays as opposed to pre-packaged, as many stores have. You can choose one green pepper or 5, one lemon or a dozen, and YOU pick and choose the one you want. Then take your choice to the "Gardener" forweighing and pricing. Your Kroger Sav-On "Gardeners" will be pleased to answer your questions about any of the hundreds of fresh fruits and vegetables we have here for you.

Save 25¢ on new Agree Shampoo

It helps stop the greasies between shampoos.

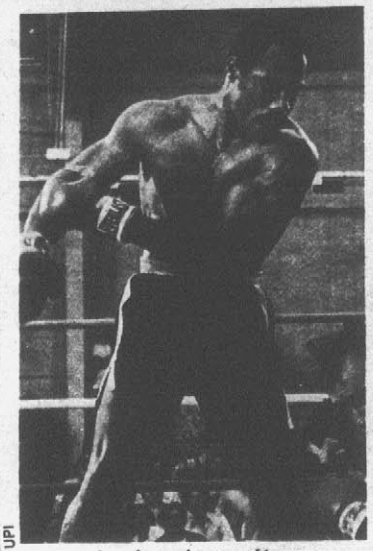

New Agree Shampoo works two ways to help stop the greasies for cleaner hair longer. First it cleans your hair, and then it gently cleans your scalp, where the greasies can start. So your hair stays cleaner longer and looks terrific longer.

The Agree Shampoo formula was tested extensively throughout the United States. The results were impressive. When compared to all other leading shampoos, Agree was unsurpassed in overall performance. In fact, Agree was preferred over the leading [illegible] shampoo, the leading pH shampoo, the leading balsam and protein shampoo, and the original herbal shampoo. We believe Agree is the finest shampoo ever available in either salons or drug stores. Save 25¢ on new Agree Shampoo and find out for yourself.

FOR KEN NORTON, boxer

Do fighters remember rounds from different fights the way baseball players recall games? —S.G.S, Albany, N.Y.

● Boxing is much different from baseball. For us, it's the intensity of concentration that's so different as we train mentally and physically for months to bring ourselves to an emotional and physical peak. There are times that I'll remember a particular round — like stopping Duane Bobick in Madison Square Garden in just 58 seconds of the first round. In a fight like that, there's not too much else to remember. But I usually have to ask my trainer, Bill Slayton, what round it is because they start to run into each other and I can't tell which is which. Actually, the only voice I can ever hear in the ring is Bill's. The crowd noise blurs into the background, and there's just you and your opponent and your trainer's encouraging words.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

I saw an old movie with Mae West, and it reminded me that she was supposed to be making a comeback. What's the real story? —F.A., Monterey, Calif.

● Sextette, Mae's twelfth film, which she adapted for the screen from a play she wrote in 1961, was released a few months ago on a limited basis and was withdrawn because of disappointing box-office returns. Mae will be 86 this coming Thursday. When she was filming Sextette, she did so with the aid of a transmitter under her wig, into which the director called instructions. The system broke down, though, and she once continued walking, bumping into scenery because she didn't hear the order to stop. The one-liners she has tossed out over the years are endless; here are two of her most famous: "It's not the men in my life, it's the life in my men;" "When I'm good, I'm very very good, but when I'm bad, I'm better."

Bettman Archive

FOR JULIET MILLS, actress

I know you have a teen-aged son and an infant daughter. Do you find you have less patience with the baby than you did the first time around? —W.P., Clarksville, Tenn.

● It's not true that one's tolerance fades as one gets older. I have three times more patience with Melissa (5 months) than I did with Sean. And I feel much stronger now, with far more energy than I had 14 years ago. As far as I'm concerned, toddlers subtract from one's age rather than add to it.

FOR DANNY THOMAS, comedian

You must have heard some incredible stories. Which is your favorite? —K.B., Easton, Pa.

● My pet yarn concerns Greta Garbo. The studio did not approve of the man she wanted to date, so she pleaded with the makeup man to disguise her beyond recognition. The makeup man agreed, and later that night no one in the world would have spotted her as she dined with her actor-date — she had been transformed into a plain-looking Chinese girl.

FOR HAROLD BROWN, Secretary of Defense

Should war be declared, how long would it take us to mobilize our armed forces? —Mrs. M. Schwartz, Nassau, N.Y.

● Our active duty armed forces are in a constant state of readiness, whether in the U.S., Europe or the Pacific. As a case in point, should the Warsaw Pact countries initiate an attack against NATO, the initial defense would be provided by U.S. and Allied Forces in Europe. Additional American reinforcements would start moving within 24 hours.

FOR MELISSA SUE ANDERSON, star of TV's "Little House on the Prairie"

Does working in an adult world make you feel older than your years, and what do you like most about working with grownups? —T.R., Little Rock, Ark.

● I don't feel older than I am because the cast and crew are like a real family, and the children are treated according to our ages. What I like best about the people in the show is that they think of me as a pro, not a silly kid actress.

FOR AMY WALLACE, co-author of The Two

I just read your book and would like to know if those famous, original Siamese twins (Chang and Eng Bunker) had been born today, would they have caused such a sensation? —H.M., Racine, Wis.

● No. Nowadays there'd be nothing like the curiosity which my co-author (my Dad) and I have described in our study of their lives (life?). Today's surgical techniques could easily have separated them.

FOR DR. JOYCE BROTHERS, psychologist

No matter how much sleep I have, I always find it hard to get out of bed in the morning. Is my "problem" emotional? —O.C., Morgantown, W.Va.

● No way. You're suffering from a love of your bed and a desire to postpone the start of your day. Next time you decorate your bedroom, try this tip: paint your room in bright colors. It has a stimulating effect, rather than a soothing one. If, on the other hand, you couldn't fall asleep at night, I'd suggest you redo your room in cool, pastel shades.

PRO AND CON

Should Antitheft Devices In Cars Be Mandatory?

PRO Joan Claybrook, administrator, National Highway Traffic Safety Administration

Motor-vehicle theft in this country is extremely costly to the consumer and also represents a serious safety problem. Vehicle theft adversely affects the American public in two ways. First, stolen vehicles are involved in approximately one out of every 350 accidents and account for an estimated 5,000 disabling injuries and 130 fatalities annually. Second, the actual cost of stolen vehicles is extremely high. The Federal Government estimates the cost between $2.6 and $3.6 billion annually when police investigations, prosecutions, court costs and other factors are included. Motor-vehicle theft also is a substantial burden on both the public and the criminal-justice system.

Illustration by Hal Just

CON David E. Martin, director, Auto Safety Engineering, General Motors

There is no such thing as a "theft-proof" car. Our automobiles are equipped now with extensive antitheft devices. What we must do is keep innovating to stay a step ahead of the car thief's know-how in defeating existing systems. Mandating specific antitheft devices into law would tend to "freeze" designs. Not only could this make it easier for thieves but it would reduce our ability to develop even better deterrents than we have now. At General Motors, for example, we are exploring a system that could eliminate car keys entirely. But the currently proposed Federal regulations would prohibit us from adopting such a system. Let's cut auto thefts now by locking the car and pocketing the key.

WITH THE CARTER FAMILY ABOARD THE FLYING WHITE HOUSE

By Jim Gerstenzang

On Air Force One you may see Amy juggling, Mrs. Carter hemming up her daughter's skirt and the President taking care of the affairs of state

Question: What has a sitting room, den, guest room, two kitchens, electric typewriters, telephones, work space for about 50 people and can move along at 600 miles per hour?

Answer: Air Force One, a gleaming silver, white and blue jet that serves as President Carter's flying White House and has carried him to all four corners of the continental United States and to Africa, South America, India and Europe as well. It's the Chief Executive's office and his White House staff's quarters tightly squeezed into the fuselage of a $10 million four-engine airplane.

But this Air Force jetliner — with the marking "27000" painted in blue just below the stars and stripes on its white tail — is also the the Carter family's home - away-from-home while they fly down to Panama or across the Atlantic Ocean at an average cruising speed of 600 miles per hour and at a cost of more than $2,200 for every 60 minutes aloft. So it is not unusual to find 10-year-old Amy Carter, blonde hair streaming, scooting up and down the aisle from cabin to cabin, from the communications center right behind the cockpit to the press quarters and galley in the rear.

Air Force One's twin, marked "26000," is the plane in which President John F. Kennedy flew to Dallas Texas, on November 22, 1963, and in which Kennedy's body was carried back to Washington after his assassination. It is now used as a backup jet, following Air Force One by about 30 minutes on overseas trips.

What makes 27000 so special? Let's take a look inside.

Behind pilot Lester C. McClelland's instrument-filled cockpit there is a communications center that can put the President, or others on board, in instant touch with the White House, no matter where the airplane is flying.

A few feet behind the communications center we find a doorway to the Carters' compartment — sitting room for the President and a den used by Mrs. Carter as an office. In his cabin, Carter may read, sit at a desk and draft a speech, relax on a couch, chat with aides and guests or stretch out and nap.

The den includes a built-in desk that Mrs. Carter uses when her husband is resting. Except on the Carters' spring trip to Venezuela, Brazil, Nigeria and Liberia, when Amy's life-sized cloth doll sat on that desk.

A guest cabin, used on most overseas jaunts by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, Jody Powell, Press Secretary to the President and Zbigniew Brzezinski, Assistant to the President for national security affairs, is situated behind the Carters' quarters.

Next comes the main staff cabin, about 15-feet long and stretching the width of the plane. Behind it is a 10-foot space reserved for more staff members and Secret Service agents. About a dozen agents accompany the President on the aircraft, bringing their pistols aboard in carry-on bags and then stowing the weapons under their seats.

The rear cabin is reserved for a group of 10 reporters, photographers and technicians selected from the more than 100 media representatives who often cover a Presidential trip. The others, not so lucky, travel separately on one or two chartered airliners.

On each flight, passengers find a bowl of fresh fruit, cheese, crackers and candy awaiting them, along with matchbooks decorated with the Presidential Seal, place cards and Air Force One notepaper. Free cigarettes have been eliminated in an economy move.

Medical supplies for treating anything from a jellyfish sting to a heart attack are stored on board. As a precaution, Rear Admiral William M. Lukash, the President's personal physician, always travels on the airplane with Carter.

On the outbound flights at the start of a trip, there is always work to be done. On the flights back, there is more time for rest and relaxation.

And when Amy Carter is on board, it seems someone always finds time to join her for a bit of play.

On the 10-hour flight back from Liberia to Andrews Air Force Base near Washington, for example, Amy grabbed a couple of oranges from a press table and, with Brzezinski and Air Force Captain Bob Peterson, one of Carter's two military aides, she began to perform a juggling act approximately 31,000 feet over the Atlantic Ocean.

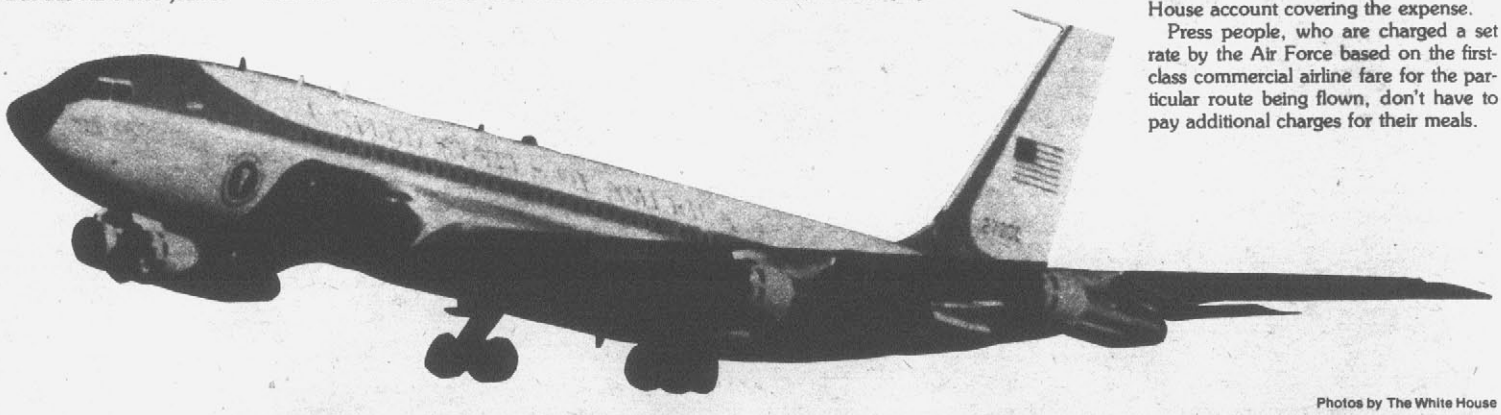

That was just a little while after she tried on two African dresses, known as "bubas," presented as gifts in Monrovia, the Liberian capital. They were too big, so her mother, minutes after the flight began, took needle and thread from a sewing kit and hemmed the dresses.

When about 50 passengers are aboard, people, furniture and work equipment are so crowded together that the only place where staff members can lie down and nap, if they can find the time, is on a padded bench seat that runs along the left side of the aircraft near the front, just outside the Carters' cabin. On a long flight home, the bench "is very often covered with sleeping bodies under blankets," said Mrs. Carter's press secretary, Mary Finch Hoyt.

Perhaps the biggest surprise for most persons flying for the first time on Air Force One is the quality of the food. Usually, routine military fare — meat and potatoes — is dished out to everyone, from the President up front to the cameramen sitting in the last row. A break in menu monotony almost invariably occurs with the superb dinner that's served on a flight home to Washington — steak or roast beef done to perfection, a crisp salad, domestic wine and a tasty dessert, place settings featuring sparkling silverware and glasses decorated with the Presidential Seal.

Does the President pay for his meals? You bet, and so do the staff members, said Powell, Carter's spokesman. The Air Force is reimbursed for the price of Carter's food from his White House meal allowance. Staff members must sign chits for their meals — the cost comes out of their per diem travel allowance. Carter's guests, such as members of Congress, are given a free lunch (or breakfast or dinner), with the President's White House account covering the expense.

Press people, who are charged a set rate by the Air Force based on the first-class commercial airline fare for the particular route being flown, don't have to pay additional charges for their meals.

Photos by The White House

The main activity aboard Air Force One is work, however, for wherever the President goes, the duties of the executive office go with him. On a typical flight, as reconstructed by Jody Powell, this is what might be happening:

- A speechwriter, working from Carter's notes, is polishing the final draft of an address to be given the next day in, say, Springfield, Ill., while the President himself is putting the finishing touches on comments he will make at a stopover in Chicago in a few hours. When each text is finished, a secretary will type it, using one of the two electric typewriters on board.
- In the guest cabin, several Senators and members of the House of Representatives are chatting with Carter's Congressional liaison staff.
- Phil Wise, the President's appointments secretary, is in the staff cabin speaking by telephone to White House aides at the next airport where 27000 is scheduled to touch down, getting a final report on which VIP's will be in the receiving line there. Before the plane lands, he will give a list of these names to the Chief Executive so that Carter will know exactly what to expect during the few minutes before he climbs into his limousine and speeds away to his meeting.
- Stuart Eizenstat, Carter's domestic policy assistant, is on the telephone to his staff in Washington discussing late-break-

Jim Gerstenzang has logged 37,075 miles on 27 Air Force One flights while covering the White House for a major wire service during the past year and a half.

ing news reports involving the city that the President is about to visit.

• Susan Clough, the President's secretary, is typing notes to people Carter met at the previous stop, thanking them for their hospitality. Before the end of the flight, the President will sign these letters with a black felt-tip pen.

• Powell is in the back of the airplane, chatting with the reporters. On rare occasions, the President wanders through to talk with the press group or invites them into his cabin.

• In the Secret Service compartments, agents are reviewing logistics and security assignments for the coming stop.

Of course, the President is concerned with many other matters besides the speeches he will make and the hands he will shake at the stops ahead. While he may be flying to South America on a foreign-policy mission, Carter will be working on a number of problems and projects unrelated to the journey. On his way from Venezuela to Brazil, no one was surprised that the President spent time on the telephone talking to his special counselor on inflation, Robert Strauss, about Administration efforts to hold down steel prices.

On the final leg of a trip, it is a bit calmer. Carter relaxes, sips a drink — he prefers Scotch — and meanders along the aisle to chat with guests and staffers. He talks about the trip, a book, a movie, about a speech he gave, about politics.

But these moments of relaxation are rare. For as Powell says candidly, "On a working flight, more often than not, Air Force One can be an absolute madhouse."

Does Jimmy Carter like the airplane? If his first reaction was any indication, he certainly does. Accepting an offer from Gerald R. Ford, he used it for a short flight over Georgia just before he became President. At the time, he was compared to an excited youngster who had just received a very fancy birthday present.

And Senator Frank Church of Idaho remarked with considerable understatement as he accompanied Carter back home from Panama on 27000 this past June: "I find it reasonably comfortable." FW

PLEA BARGAINING: IT CAN BE ELIMINATED

Here's how Ed Turnbach, a New Jersey prosecutor, not only refuses to accept this "necessary evil" but also has reduced his backlog of cases by 40 percent.

The Turnbachs with children: Thomas, 5, Nancy, 7, Terrance, 2, and Ed, 11.

By Gary Deckelnick

No one likes plea bargaining — except the defendants who get off easily. Even the district attorneys throughout the nation who rely on it for some 90 percent of their cases hate it. But they say plea bargaining is a necessary evil. Without it, the theory goes, most defendants would insist on trials, the courts would be hopelessly backlogged and justice would grind to a standstill, leaving persons suspected of the most violent crimes on the streets for years while they await trial.

Before going further, it's essential to explain what plea bargaining is. It's a generic term referring to one of two events. What most persons refer to as plea bargaining is really sentence bargaining, in which the defendant agrees to plead guilty in return for a specified sentence.

Plea bargaining also is a term used to refer to what is more properly called charge bargaining. A prosecutor agrees to dismiss several charges in return for a suspect's guilty plea to one or two counts. Provided the charges involved are all equal — five burglaries, for instance — there is no harm in this. The judge has enough latitude with the one guilty plea to impose the same kind of sentence he was likely to impose if the suspect had been convicted on all counts.

But in one area of the country, something new is happening. For the past 24 months plea bargaining has been banned in Ocean County, N.J. It has been banned despite having the state's most rapidly increasing crime rate. It has been banned because the prosecutor, Edward J. Turnbach, doesn't like it. And it has stayed banned because Turnbach has been quietly proving the conventional wisdom to be, if not wrong, at least not universal.

When Turnbach took office two years ago, he found the customary backlog of cases that exists in almost every criminal court in the United States. In most courts, however, that backlog continues to rise. Somehow, in this short time, Turnbach has managed to reduce the backlog in Ocean County court by 40 percent.

His ratio of guilty pleas to indictments has not dropped one iota from that of his plea-bargaining predecessors, and he has yet to enter into his first true plea bargain.

Turnbach will permit charge bargaining, but he has absolutely forbidden sentence bargaining, the arrangement most sought by criminals and most frowned on by the general public because it carries the guarantee of judicial leniency.

Ironically, Turnbach, a 41-year-old father of four, spent most of his law career as a defense lawyer before he became a prosecutor. During his earlier years he plea-bargained often — and became convinced plea bargaining was unnecessary.

"The one thing I learned is that the defendant will take the best deal he can get," commented Turnbach. "If he can plea bargain for a reduced sentence, fine, that's what he'll do. But if the best deal he can get means just pleading guilty without standing trial, he'll certainly grab that, too.

"When you plead guilty to a violent crime, say rape, you're just a name to a judge," explains Turnbach. "But when you have been through a trial, you're a lot more than a name. The judge has heard all the details. He has watched those who have suffered recount the crime. He's going to remember you very well when it comes time for sentencing."

It's a theory that skeptics might assault as unworkable, but Turnbach's figures are there for all to see. When he took over his office in June 1976, there were some 1,300 cases awaiting action. Since then, he has reduced the backlog by more than 850 cases, and his office currently is disposing of new indictments twice as fast as they are returned.

"We are more ready to try cases now than we were before," said Douglas King, an assistant prosecutor who served before Turnbach took office but who has been retained by Turnbach. "Before, if we were expecting a plea, something could happen that could make it go away and then we might need an adjournment to get ready for trial. Now, we prepare every case as though it were going to trial."

But Turnbach only reluctantly discusses his methods. He knows what he wants to do, but he doesn't feel he should try to influence others around the country to follow his lead.

"I can't say this will work throughout the United States," asserts Turnbach. "I can't even say it will work in the other counties in New Jersey. I only know Ocean County. The other counties may have problems of which I am unaware. I am sure the prosecutors in those counties are the best ones to judge whether plea bargaining is needed."

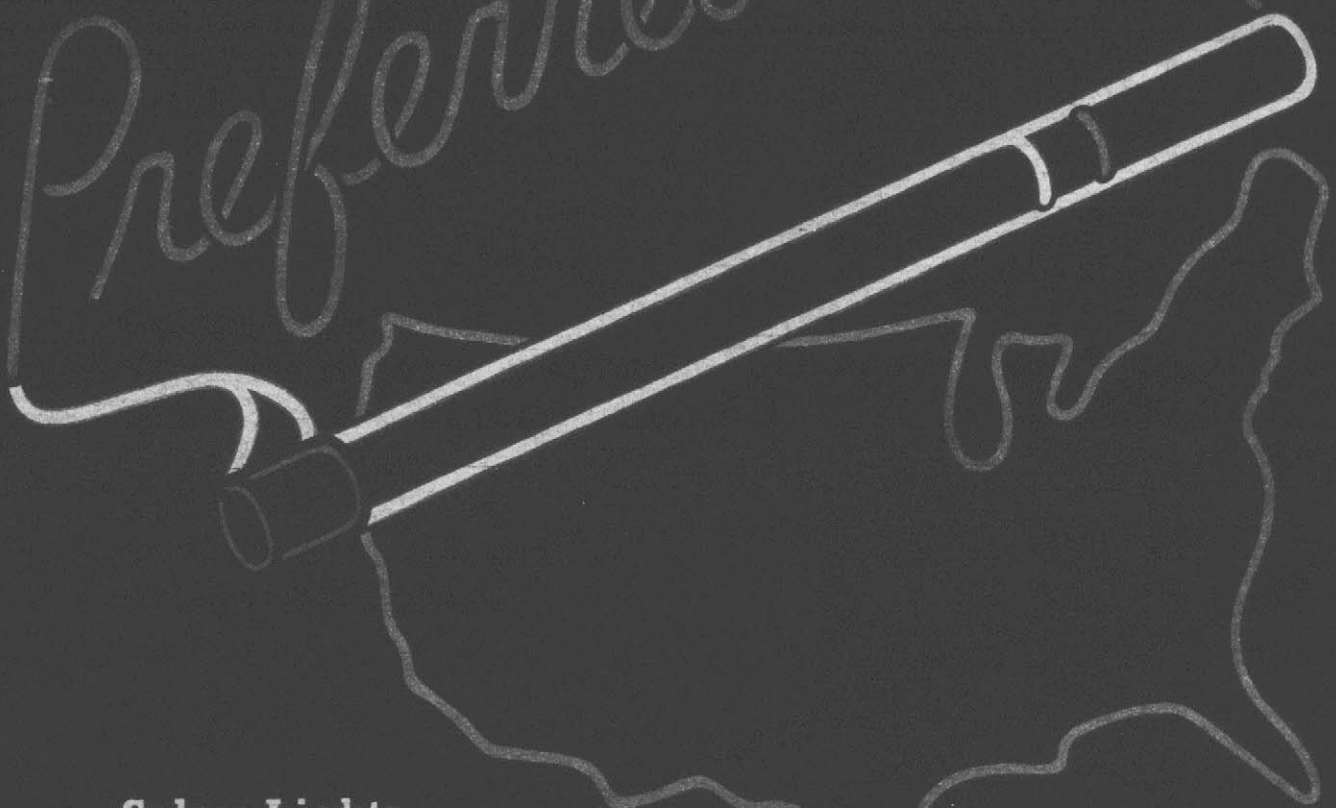

He pauses to sip from the ever full cup of coffee on his desk and then continues.

"If the courts are overcrowded, whose problem is that to solve? Should a prosecutor have to bargain away lenient sentences he feels are unjustified or undeserved? That's not his job. The answer to overcrowded courts might be more courtrooms and more judges.

"But that's a judgment society must make. I cannot. If other prosecutors feel they need plea bargaining they should do it. I just don't feel I would be doing my job properly, and I have to satisfy myself." FW

HOW TO SURVIVE A FIRE

By David Lampe

Many people who lost their lives wouldn't have if they had known — and followed — this advice.

Michelle Horwitz

What is the greatest cause of death in a fire? The answer might surprise you — it's carbon monoxide.

These and other answers about the causes of the 7,500 fire deaths each year are now coming from a Federally funded Fire Problems Program team set up at Johns Hopkins University's Applied Physics Laboratory.

Incredibly, it's still the only such special long-term investigation unit in the country. Its mission: to try to learn why each year so many Americans die in fires — often needlessly.

In one recent case, for example, of a fire where one man had survived, and one hadn't, two investigators from the unit, a systems analyst named Byron Halpin and a chemist, interviewed firemen, survivors, witnesses — even the physician who performed the autopsy on the victim — all to try to find out why that man had died.

Here, as at the scene of most fire deaths, Halpin wanted to know in what order things had happened. And at what time intervals. He discovered that the man who'd escaped unhurt had rushed to safety the instant he was awake. But his roommate, unaware of the extreme danger, had wasted precious seconds tugging on a pair of pants. And so on the second floor he'd been overcome — not by flames and possibly not even by the smoke, but by carbon monoxide.

Halpin's files contain photos of carbon monoxide victims taken where they died, often in rooms untouched by flames, sometimes where smoke barely discolored the walls. Halpin says that about 70 percent of the victims died long before the heat or the flames reached them. "People don't realize how deadly carbon monoxide can be. You might survive a low concentrate of it for hours, but a heavy one can kill you in minutes. The trouble is, there's no possible way that you can judge for yourself just how great the concentration is inside a burning building." His photos show some fire victims, their faces uncontorted and serene, seated upright on sofas only feet from exits to safety, where they stopped to rest before escaping.

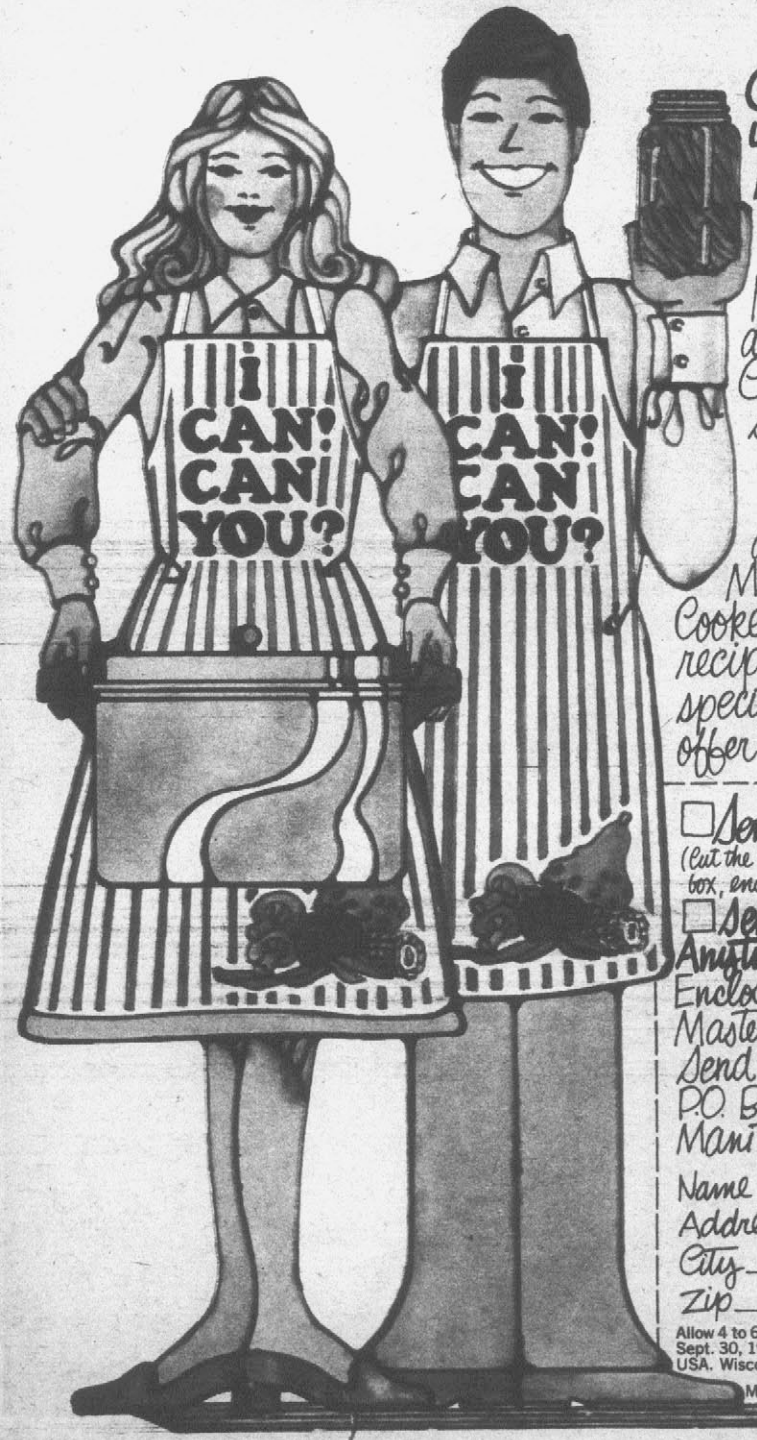

Deadliest carbon monoxide build-ups occur, Halpin says, in burning buildings where oxygen is restricted. "Sometimes it helps to open a window or to hack through a wall or a roof to vent the fire and let in life-saving oxygen. But, of course, this venting may also fan a blaze. So in the end there's only one hard-and-fast rule for surviving fires: the instant you realize that the building you're in is burning, get out. Don't waste time getting dressed. Don't waste time trying to put the fire out. Don't waste time gathering up your most precious possessions."

Then he adds: "Knowing that you should get out right away isn't in itself enough. You must know how you're going to get out. Our investigations suggest that most people think of the room they're in as having just one exit — the way they came into it in the first place. Whenever you go into any room — in your own home or anywhere else — you should think instinctively, if there's a fire, which way will I go to get out of here? Consider all the exits — the doors through which you didn't enter, and the windows, too.

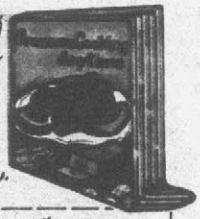

"If people always thought of the risk of fire if they trained themselves to anticipate fires, a lot of deaths wouldn't happen."

Yukky. Yummy.

Fruit-Fresh. You need it for canning, freezing, and fresh fruit.

If you want all the fruit you serve to look and taste its freshest, what you really need is Fruit-Fresh. Because Fruit-Fresh contains a special ingredient that locks in the natural, "just-picked" color and flavor. Which means no more brown, mushy-looking peaches.

Fruit-Fresh is economical, too. A 5-oz. can will preserve up to 75 lbs. of peaches. Here's how: For Canning: simply add Fruit-Fresh to the regular syrup. For Freezing: add Fruit-Fresh to the syrup or dry sugar. For Fresh Fruit: sprinkle Fruit-Fresh on your just-sliced fruit before refrigerating. Sound good? It tastes delicious.

Keeps fruit looking and tasting fresher.

NEIGHBOR'S RECIPE EXCHANGE

From Clinton, Ill., comes a recipe for "Chicken Casserole." Mrs. Charles Gentry writes, "Since garden time is here and the yard work, I like easy meals. I prepare this recipe before I go out, and it takes only a short time to bake. I get the tossed salad made and coffee or iced tea. For dessert, I serve peaches and homemade cookies."

CHICKEN CASSEROLE

In bowl, combine 2 cups cooked rice, 1½ cups diced celery, 2 cups cooked diced chicken, 1 cup rich chicken broth, 1 can (3½ ozs.) sliced or button mushrooms with liquid, ½ cup chopped green onions, 1 teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper. Turn mixture into 2-qt. casserole. Sprinkle with mixture of ½ cup fine dry bread crumbs and 2 tablespoons melted margarine, plus ½ cup chopped pecans. Bake in preheated 350°F. oven for 45 minutes until heated throughout.

Makes 6 servings

Mrs. Gentry says her "hobby is baking, cooking, collecting recipes and cookbooks. I keep all the recipes from FAMILY WEEKLY and use several recipes from them at holiday time." The Gentrys read FAMILY WEEKLY in the Pantagraph, Bloomington, Ill., and the Herald Review, Decatur, Ill. They take both papers.

Marie Barr of Hollywood, Fla., sends us this recipe for Jellied Applesauce Cottage Cheese Salad. It would be just right to serve with a cold cuts and greens salad supper.

JELLIED APPLESAUCE COTTAGE CHEESE SALAD

In medium saucepan, mix 2-cups applesauce and ¾ cup water, heat to boiling, stirring. Add 1 pkg. (3 ozs.) lime gelatin and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Refrigerate until slightly thickened, about 1 hour. Stir in 1½ cups cottage cheese, ⅓ cup finely chopped celery and ¼ cup mayonnaise or salad dressing. Pour into an 8- × 8- × 2-inch pan. Refrigerate until firm. Cut into squares or serve with spoon over crisp salad greens.

Makes 6 to 8 servings

Marie reads FAMILY WEEKLY in the Sun-Tattler, Hollywood, Fla.

From Anne Bugzavich of Warren, Ohio, comes two recipes for pie that you "don't have to turn on the oven for."

AVOCADO PIE

In small saucepan, soften ½ envelope unflavored gelatin in ¼ cup lemon juice. Add 6 tablespoons lemon juice and heat, stirring until gelatin dissolves. Cool.

Put gelatin-lemon juice mixture, 1 large ripe, peeled and sliced avocado, 1 can (14 ozs.) condensed milk and vanilla into electric blender container. Cover and blend until smooth and thick. Pour into prepared 9-inch graham cracker crust pie shell. Top with ½ cup heavy cream, whipped. Refrigerate for 2 hours or until set. Cut into wedges to serve.

Makes 8 servings

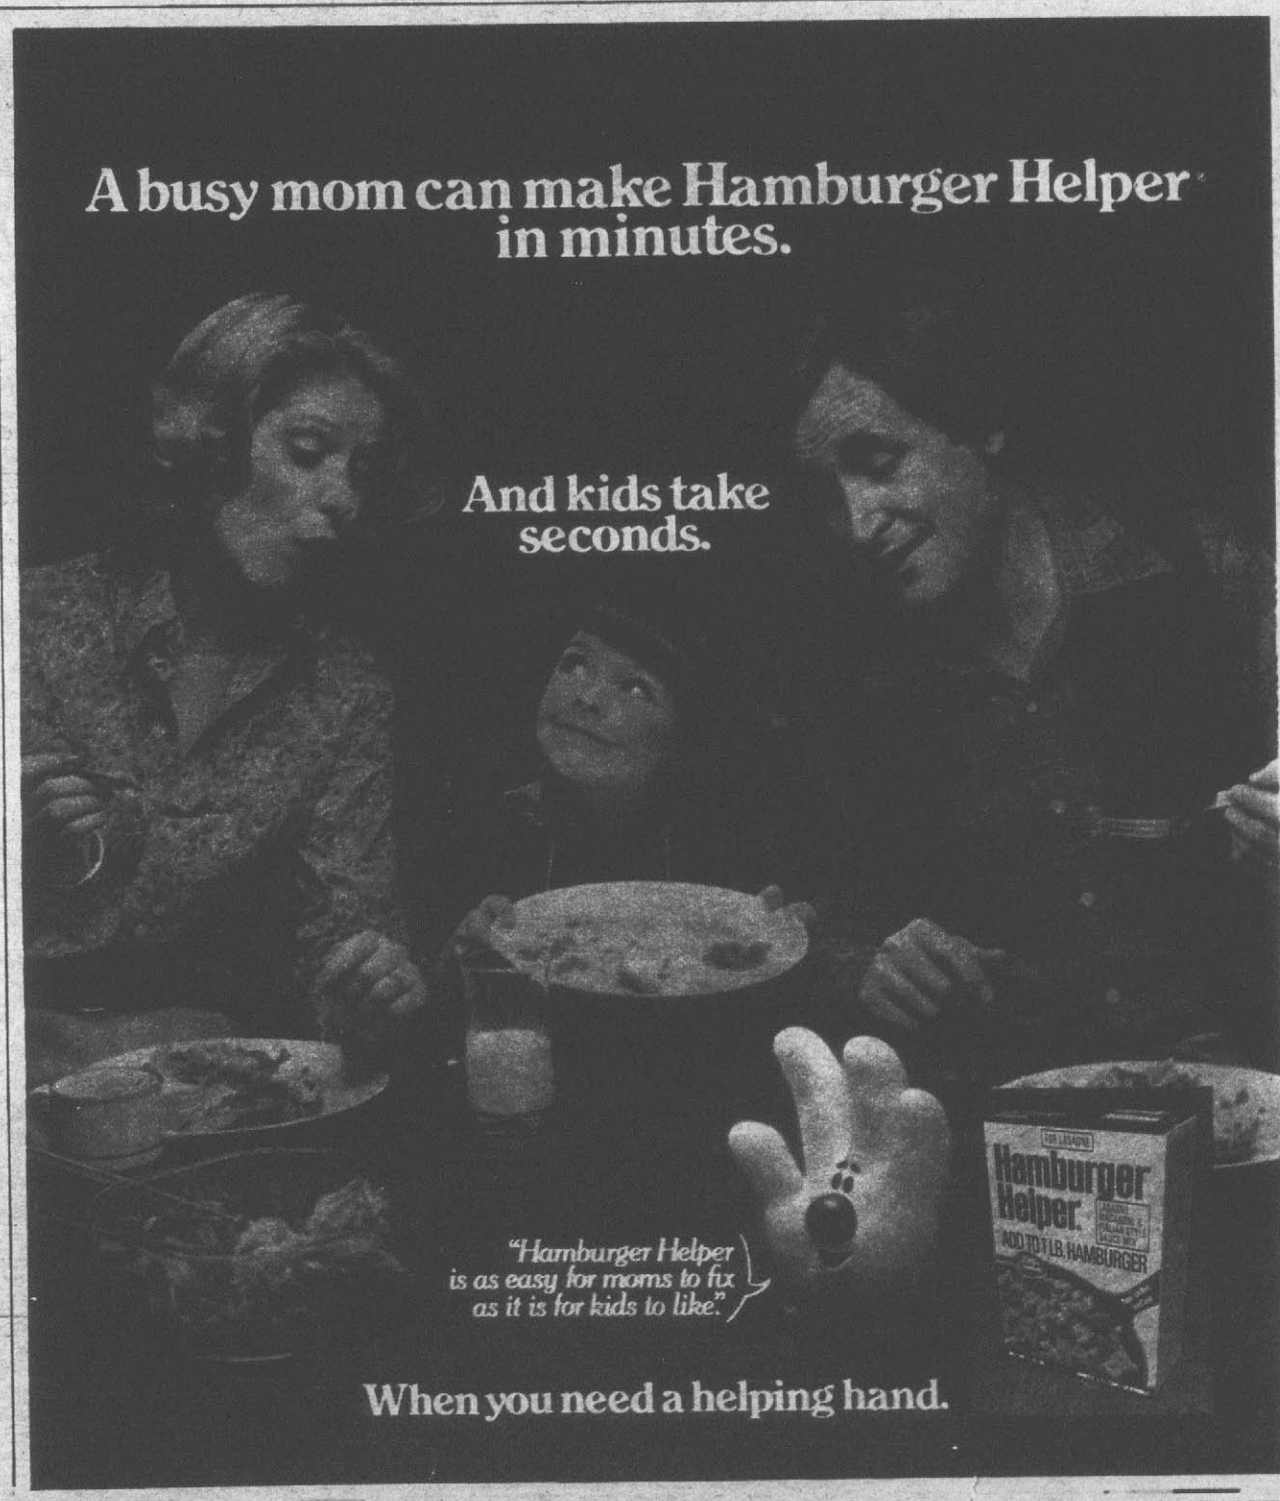

QUICK PINEAPPLE CHEESE PIE

With electric mixer or in food processor with chopping blade, blend 1 pkg. (8 ozs.) cream cheese at room temperature and ¼ cup sugar. Fold in 1 cup heavy cream, whipped, and 1½ cups (1 can, 1 lb., 4 ozs.) drained, crushed pineapple. Spoon filling into prepared 9-inch graham cracker crust pie shell. Chill thoroughly, at least 2 hours or until filling is set.

Makes 8 servings

INTERLUDE WITH HELEN HAYES

When you combine elements of art, food, drink and people, something special happens.

By Marilyn Hansen

There are moments in life that have a special quality because different parts come together like a well-cut jewel.

Such was a recent sunlit afternoon at the Sindin Gallery in New York City where a champagne reception was held to benefit the Theater Collection of the Museum of the City of New York.

Your FAMILY WEEKLY food editor, Marilyn Hansen, attended and had the opportunity to meet and visit with the noted American actress, Helen Hayes.

Miss Hayes, looking charming in a black lace dress, her face framed with shimmering silver hair, was eager to talk about her interest in the Museum.

As we talked, she also reminisced about two very happy occasions: the christening of her first grandchild, Charles MacArthur, son of James and Joyce MacArthur, when French champagne was the toast, and the time she opened at the Sarah Bernhardt Theater in Paris in the play, The Skin of Our Teeth, and everyone went to Maxim's, that beautiful art nouveau restaurant, to celebrate, and champagne was once again poured. She said that champagne brings back memories of her youth and "all that is glamorous of Paris."

Talking further, Helen described a recipe for ham baked with champagne and a menu that she would choose to accompany it. The menu and several recipes follow:

HELEN HAYES MENU

Ham A La Champagne
Sautéed Zucchini
Hot Compote Kadota Figs
Bibb Lettuce Salad
Baked Flan with Fresh Strawberries
Champagne Demitasse

HAM A LA CHAMPAGNE

2 to 3 lbs. ham steak, cut 1½ inches thick
1 split bottle (2 cups) champagne
1½ tablespoons sugar
⅓ cup olive or salad oil
2 cups sliced celery
2 lbs. (6 medium) potatoes, peeled and sliced ½ inch thick
¼ teaspoon salt
Several twists freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

1. Place ham in shallow baking dish; pour champagne over ham. Cover and refrigerate at least 6 hours or overnight, turning ham once or twice.

2. Pour off ½ cup champagne from ham; reserve for potatoes. Bake ham, covered, in shallow baking dish in a preheated 375°F. oven for 35 minutes.

3. Uncover ham, turn ham and sprinkle surface with sugar. Bake 10 minutes longer.

4. Meanwhile, in large skillet, heat oil. Add celery and sauté 5 minutes. With slotted spoon, remove celery. Add potatoes and sauté 10 minutes, stirring frequently.

5. Add ½ cup reserved champagne and celery to skillet with potatoes and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt, pepper and parsley.

6. Place ham steak under broiler 4 inches from source of heat and broil 2 minutes to glaze.

7. To serve, place ham in center of serving platter. Surround ham with vegetables.

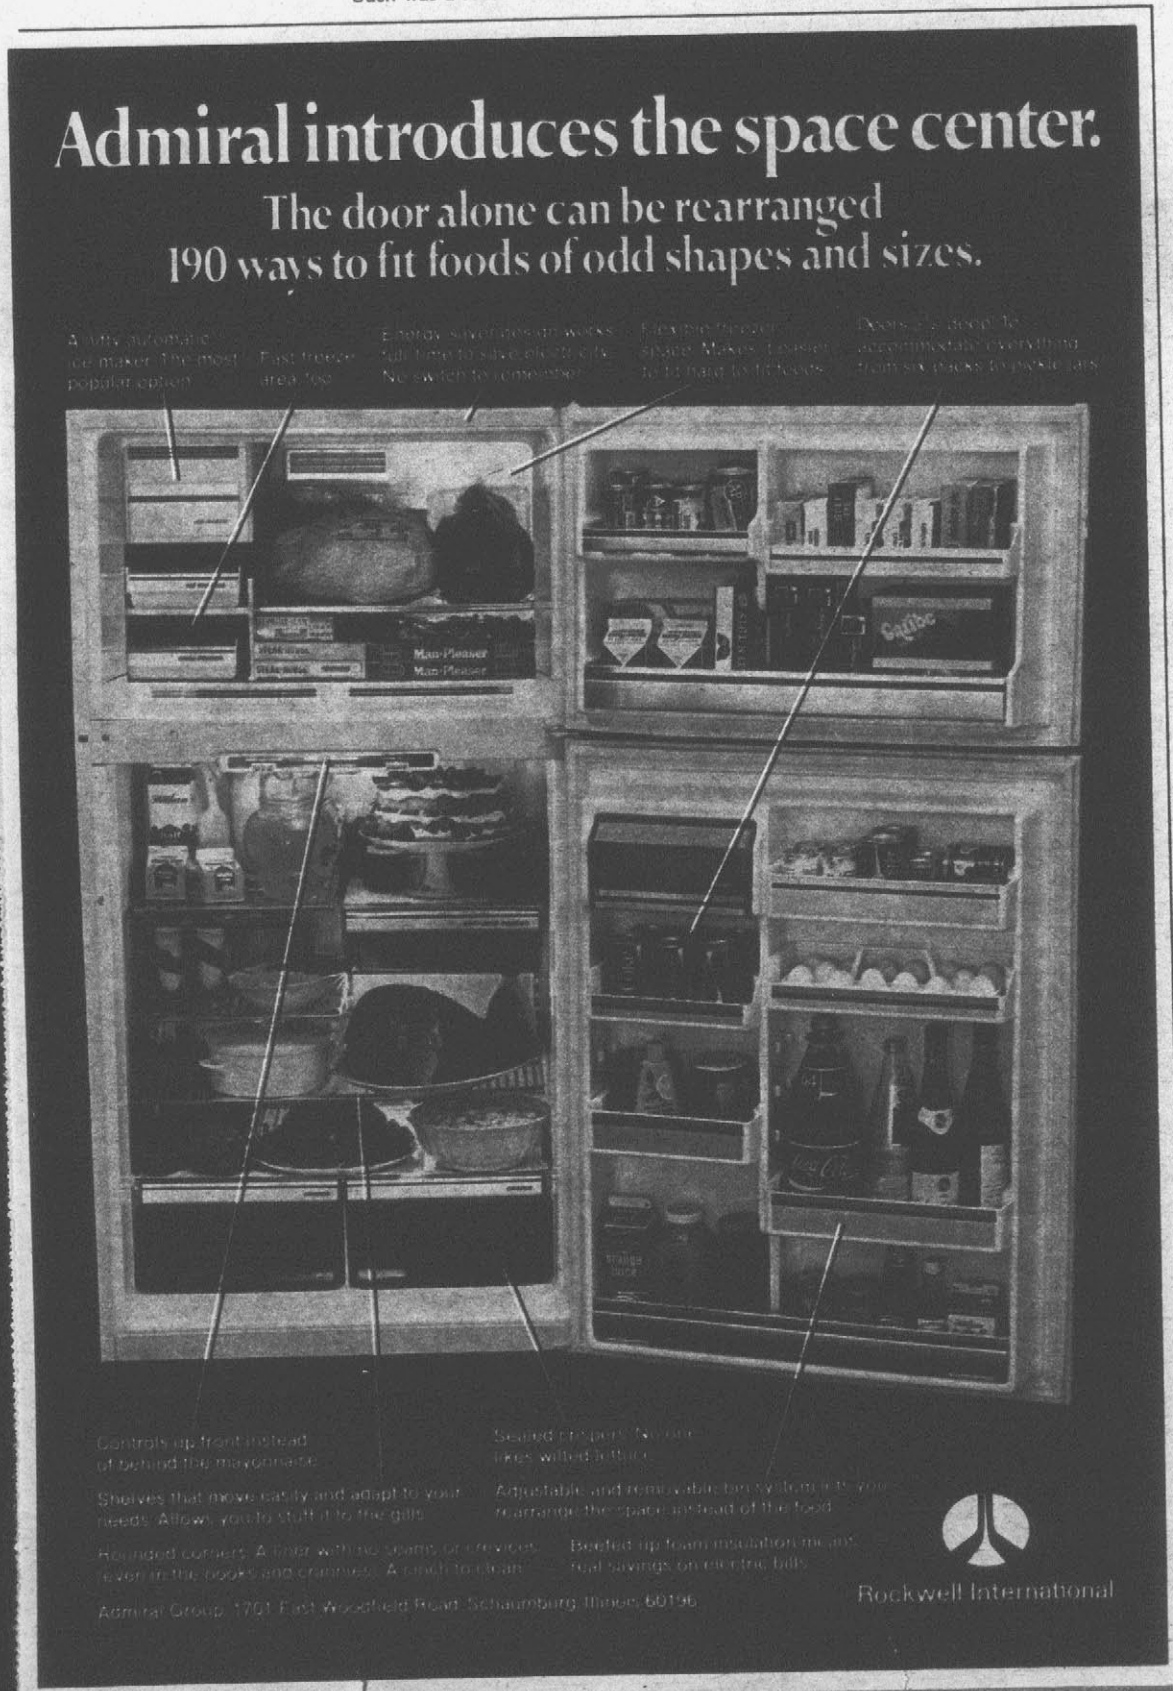

8. Heat remaining champagne baking juices separately to boiling; serve in sauce dish.

Makes 6 to 8 servings

HOT COMPOTE KADOTA FIGS

2 cans (17-oz. size) whole kadota figs
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon

1. Drain fig syrup into saucepan, add butter and cinnamon. Heat to boiling, stirring until butter melts and cinnamon is blended in.

Marilyn Hansen and Helen Hayes at recent party talk about food, menus and memories.

2. Add figs; return to boiling, reduce heat and simmer slowly, uncovered, for 30 minutes until syrupy. Serve hot as an accompaniment to roast meats or poultry. Makes 6 to 8 servings

CARAMEL FLAN WITH STRAWBERRIES

6 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cans (13-oz. size) evaporated milk, undiluted
1 pint fresh whole strawberries

1. Preheat oven to 350°F.
2. In heavy saucepan, cook 1 cup sugar over medium heat, stirring until sugar dissolves. Continue cooking and stirring until liquid sugar turns a golden-amber color.
3. Pour syrup immediately into a 1½-quart shallow baking dish, flan mold or quiche pan. Turn pan to completely coat sides.
4. In medium bowl, beat eggs with remaining ½ cup sugar, vanilla extract and evaporated milk. Pour into coated pan.
5. Set mold in a large baking pan. Place in oven; pour boiling water into larger pan to 2-inch depth.
6. Bake for about 1 hour or until the tip of a knife inserted 1 inch from edge of custard comes out clean.
7. Refrigerate immediately until completely chilled, about 3 hours.
8. At serving time, loosen custard around edge of pan with a knife. Cover firmly with a deep serving plate and invert. Let stand a minute or two to let syrup run out of pan on to custard.
9. Surround flan with whole strawberries. Makes 8 servings

IN MARILYN'S KITCHEN

This month we take popular chicken and combine it with plain white vinegar in a subtly seasoned poaching liquid. The result is a tangy combination of flavors that seems just right in the summertime. For an even sharper vinegar flavor, marinate the chicken pieces in the vinegar-broth liquid several hours in the refrigerator before cooking.

FRIED VINEGAR CHICKEN

1 cup white vinegar
1 cup chicken broth
1 teaspoon garlic salt
1 teaspoon whole peppercorns
½ teaspoon tarragon leaves, crushed
1 bay leaf
½ cup vegetable oil
1 teaspoon salt
Several twists freshly ground black pepper

1. In large saucepan, combine vinegar, chicken broth, garlic salt, peppercorns, tarragon and bay leaf.
2. Add chicken pieces, placing dark meat on the bottom and white meat on top. Heat to boiling, reduce heat, cover and simmer 30 minutes.
3. Drain chicken on rack, pat with paper towels.
4. In large skillet, heat oil over high heat. Add simmered chicken, browning well on all sides.
5. Drain on rack when thoroughly browned. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.
6. Serve immediately as a hot dish or refrigerate and serve cold. Makes 4 servings

Give your tough stains Shout's "Inside/Out" test.

1. Spray one side of a tough stain with Shout.

watch how Shout begins to saturate and penetrate the stain.

3. Turn garment over and see how Shout's special formula came right through the stained fabric. It's almost like spraying both sides of the stain, inside and out! Shout's solvent helps dissolve the greasy parts of a stain that ordinary detergents can't. And Shout's powerful detergent wets the fabric fibers, and helps lift the stain right off the fabric.

Shout it out!

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

HOW TO COMMUNICATE BETTER IN MARRIAGE

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. There is a telltale clue that indicates how happy any marriage is likely to be, how well the couple relates to each other and how sensitive they are to each other's needs.

2. In most marriages the husband earns the money and the wife has chief say in how it shall be spent.

3. Women get more out of marriage than men do.

4. Most successful men resolve their problems in their office — and don't bring them home with them.

5. There are certain signals that should alert marriage partners to the fact there are problem areas in their marriage that need to be identified and mutually resolved.

ANSWERS

1. True. This was proven in a novel study of marital adjustment prediction conducted by a team of Iowa State University behavior specialists. The subjects were 75 husbands and 75 wives of various ages and walks of life, and "each spouse was asked to indicate a color preference for several individual items (car, telephone, etc.), and then to predict which color the spouse would choose."

The investigators point out that it was assumed for this study that the accuracy of each spouse's perception of the other's color preference would indicate sensitivity and attention to the other's wishes — in short, communication. It's further noted in this connection that studies show that perceptions are more important than actual behavior.

And this was borne out by the results of the tests, which showed perception of a mate's color preference to be a significant indicator of marital adjustment.

2. False. For example, in a University of Michigan study designed to measure and evaluate husband-and-wife influence in the decision process for the purchase of a house, it was found that the decision was a shared one, with the husband having final say in some things and the wife's wishes carrying the most weight in others.

3. True. A University of Texas study of data from three recent U.S. national surveys shows that married persons — including those whose marriages leave something to be desired — report greater personal happiness than those who are single. The report also demonstrated that there is a stronger relationship of marital happiness to overall happiness for the wives.

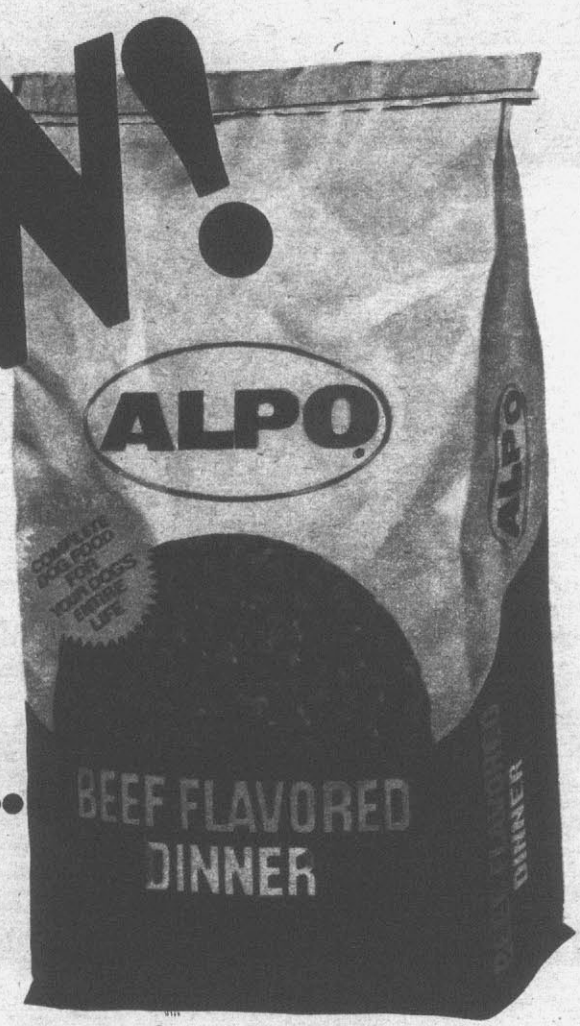

It's noted that "this finding can be reconciled with previous data showing an unusual prevalence of symptoms of psychological stress among married women, by the hypothesis that women, as a whole, exceed men in both the stress and the satisfaction they derive from marriage."

4. False. A York University (Toronto) study of the husband-wife relationship showed that "the greater the husbands' job pressure the more likely they were to disclose their problems and tensions to their wives. . . ."

5. True. The American Institute of Family Relations cites a study that pinpoints some of the chief symptoms of marital problems that should never be ignored or swept under the carpet but need to be conscientiously explored by both partners and resolved. These warning signals include: (1) the bottling up of feelings and resentments by either party; (2) lack of agreement about family decisions — such as who spends how much for what, what to do on weekends, where to spend vacations, etc.; (3) problems relating to physical relations; (4) signs of depression or withdrawal by one partner.

ARMOUR'S ARMOURY

MORE LIKE RAIN

One kind of shower's good for plants,
The other's not so good for aunts
And uncles and for every friend
Who must some sort of present send.
These showers come in steady sequence
And with, it seems, increasing frequence,
When there's engagement, anniversary,
Or baby added to the nursery.
Those who are honored by a shower
Would like to have one every hour,
And that's how often, never stopping,
They seem to come to those out shopping.

"And who are you?" demanded the tramp haughtily.

"I'm secretary of the club," replied the official curtly.

DON'T LET HOUSEHOLD HELP BECOME A FINANCIAL BURDEN

If you have someone working for you at home and aren't paying into Social Security, you could be headed for serious trouble.

By Julian Block

The Internal Revenue Service can play rough when it tracks down people who hire household help and fail to fork over Social Security taxes on their wages. Despite what you may have heard, warns the IRS, you are not off the hook for withholding just because a hard-to-hire housecleaner is unwilling to work unless you agree to forget about Social Security taxes.

While it may take years for the IRS to uncover what you have left undone, the delayed day of reckoning can come when your helper retires and applies for Social Security benefits based on earnings that should have been reported in earlier years. Worse yet, your tax tab can turn out to be very expensive.

The IRS can hit you with a bill for all back taxes (not just your share, but also the employee's share that you were supposed to withhold) as well as interest, plus a slew of penalties for late payment and late filing.

This was made expensively clear a number of years ago to a woman who employed two domestics for several years and opted to "let a sleeping dog lie" when it came to Social Security taxes. She wound up paying over $3,700 in taxes, interest and penalties.

You are liable for Social Security taxes if you pay cash wages of $50 or more in a three-month calendar quarter to a household employee. This includes baby sitters, whether adult or teenage, cooks, maids and companions for convalescents or the elderly.

While all cash payments count, even if part is paid to cover the cost of board, room or bus fare, you do not have to count the value of room and board, clothing or other noncash items. Nor are any taxes due on what you pay to your spouse or to a son or daughter under 21 for household chores or to someone who works for you as an independent contractor — for instance, a painter or plumber.

When Social Security taxes fall due, you must file Form 942. For 1978, the return must be accompanied by your check for the 6.05 percent tax on the employee and the 6.05 percent tax on the employer's matching share, a total tax of 12.10 percent on the first $17,700 of earnings, plus any income taxes that your employee authorized you to withhold. You are responsible for paying the entire 12.10 percent whether or not you subtracted the domestic's share from her or his wages.

The filing deadline is the last day of the month following the end of the calendar quarter. For instance, the deadline is January 31 for the quarter ending December 31.

To monitor Social Security compliance, the IRS can check information forms filed by employers. For instance, the form filed by persons who claim child-care credits for payments to baby sitters asks whether Social Security taxes were paid. Moreover, employers must show total wages and taxes paid on W-2 forms and give copies to both the employee and the IRS. The IRS can slap penalties on employers who fail to do so. FW

LOSE as much as a FULL SIZE THE FIRST 5 DAYS ALONE . . .

BEST OF ALL — YOU STAY SLIM FOR GOOD! BECAUSE AT LONG LAST, YOU HAVE IN YOUR HANDS A LIFETIME WEAPON TO DEFEND YOURSELF AGAINST FAT BUILD-UP! Yes, when you arm yourself with this thrilling ANTI-CALORIE CRASH-BURN PROGRAM and doctor's capsule . . . you actually fortify yourself with the only thing you'll ever need for LIFETIME PROTECTION against excessive fat build-up. That's because medical science now offers you a proven way to neutralize all the calories in the food you eat — gently step up your metabolism . . . stimulate and "target" your body's "fat-burner" chemicals to attack clinging pockets of fat, so you burn away excess flab meal to meal these 3 medically proven ways:

ONE — BECAUSE YOU CONSTANTLY NEUTRALIZE THE EFFECT OF THE CALORIES IN THE FOOD YOU EAT, YOU BURN AWAY STORED-UP FAT AND CONTINUE TO GROW SLIMMER AND SLIMMER FROM MEAL TO MEAL! Yes, when you launch yourself on this doctor's calorie-deficit crash-burn program you gently step up your inner furnace! So when food enters your body, instead of being stored as fat, it is AUTOMATICALLY converted to burned-away energy.

TWO — YOU GRADUALLY ACCELERATE YOUR FAT-BURNING METABOLISM by greater caloric burn-off than intake. Meaning: your body, without you even feeling it, unleashes a steady surge of fat-burner chemicals directly into your system to attack stored-up fat . . . automatically breaks down . . . converts it into fluid . . . that drains right out of your body!

Just like a furnace grows hotter and hotter the more you stoke it . . . so your own body burns away fat faster and faster the more you step up your fat-burning metabolism.

THREE — YOU COMPLETELY DEFEAT THE GREATEST SINGLE CAUSE OF FAT BUILD-UP, runaway appetite and overeating. Because the moment you take this doctor's CAPSULE, ravenous hunger disappears. Gnawing appetite is switched off . . . you lose your craving for food for hours at a time.

More significant . . . when you do eat on this Doctor's CRASH-LOSS diet and Lifetime Slim maintenance program, since your body completely NEUTRALIZES THE FAT-BUILDING EFFECT OF ALL THE CALORIES IN THE FOOD YOU EAT, excess fat simply cannot form . . . stored-up body fat burned off and melted away by the hour — and you continue to grow slimmer instead of fatter after each meal you eat!

DOCTOR ADVISES: USE THIS CRASH-BURN PROGRAM ONLY WHILE YOU'RE OVERWEIGHT . . . OTHERWISE YOU MIGHT GROW TOO THIN! Of course, there is one thing you must keep in mind. You cannot use this new CAPSULE CRASH-BURN PROGRAM indefinitely . . . otherwise, you might become overly thin.

Also, as long as you are on this ANTI-CALORIE Program you cannot stuff and gorge yourself silly on over-rich, high-fat foods. There is a reasonable limit on just how fast medical science can help you safely burn away fat. BUT — and here's the very heart of this wondrous new development: Because this thrilling ANTI-CALORIE concept not only helps you neutralize the effect of the calories in all the food you eat . . . but ALSO puts gnawing appetite to sleep . . . you simply lose that driving urge, that maddening craze to make fattening food the very center of your existence . . . thanks to this medically proven formula that contains the most powerful reducing aid ever approved for release to the public by the United States Government!

Now just think what this great ANTI-FAT weapon means to you, if all your life you've had to fight off excess pounds, battle away inches?

WHY "KILL" YOURSELF WITH BRUTAL DIET OR TORTUROUS EXERCISE? NOW — YOU CAN ENJOY A LIFETIME OF SLIMNESS WITHOUT RAVENOUS HUNGER! It means that from this day on . . . you simply start the ALL-OUT ASSAULT ON FAT by taking these medically proven CAPSULES . . . called "Thera-Thin", before eating . . . as part of this incredible "CRASH-BURN" PROGRAM . . . to help you NEUTRALIZE ALL THE CALORIES IN THE FOOD YOU EAT! You gently raise the level of your fat-burning metabolism . . . How To Avoid Marital Slumps

Every marriage has its ups and downs, but you can prevent many of the causes of serious marital slumps says Dr. Edward L. Vogelsong, an asst. professor of human development at Penn State Univ.

Vogelsong says a couple should try to do things for one another to show their concern. "This doesn't mean spending a lot of money," he says. "It could mean having a late dinner after the kids are in bed, setting aside some time for a talk or going for a leisurely walk together. Doing special things can mean so much to a relationship."

Another way of preventing slumps is for the couple to work on improving their communications skills. "They must learn to say things that don't arouse defensiveness in their partners," he says.

Setting goals is also important says Vogelsong because it "gives a couple something to work on." He says: "The couple can see themselves working toward doing some things that will give both of them more pleasure."

Putting Seniors In Touch

In a program begun last year, police installed 23-channel citizen's band radios in the homes of 100 selected senior citizens. When any of the program participants sees or hears of an emergency situation, he or she calls the police on the emergency channel nine.

And the second program? This month an additional 200 senior citizens were given small 2-way radio transceivers as part of the Personal Alarm Security System (PASS). When the PASS-wearer pushes a beeper on the device, he is put in instant communication with the police dispatcher who can immediately tell who is calling because of a coded tone. In case of medical emergencies, the police can pinpoint the call within three blocks.

Seeing The Light

You can reduce your electric bill — and save energy — with more efficient use of the lighting in your home. Here are a few tips to help light your home most effectively:

•Think fluorescent when remodeling or redecorating. A fluorescent bulb, which gives off 2 to 3 times more light than an incandescent bulb of the same wattage, costs twice as much — but lasts 20 times longer. Popular spots for fluorescents include the kitchen, bathroom and workshop.

•Use 3-way bulbs for areas, such as the living room, which are used for a variety of purposes. When reading you can use the highest level of light, then switch to the lowest wattage for watching TV.

•Consider using a dimmer control switch in multipurpose rooms like the dining room. Or try an adjustable fixture that may reduce the amount of wattage because the light source can be brought closer to the work area.

Debra Patsel / S.F. State University

Clowning Around

Debra Patsel is a student who enjoys clowning around — with her school's blessing. That's because Debra doesn't clown around in the traditional sense of wasting time; she clowns professionally. And Debra's act has something special going for it — she's incorporated her proficiency in sign language to create a show for handicapped youngsters.

Debra, who's just graduated from San Francisco State Univ., says that her clowning career began with an 8-week intensified clown-training program at a clown college. She recalls the day she auditioned for the course — along with 3,100 other applicants, 50 of whom were selected. "I did an acrobatics act and fell flat on my face," she says. "So I pretended that was part of the show."

Debra's special show resulted from her years of experience as a counselor at camps for the deaf and handicapped. Debra says communicating with the kids is no problem: the only difficulty she has is that it's hard for her to concentrate on her act while signing to the audience.

College After 30

What's it like going to college when you're at least a decade older than most of your classmates? Mary Pat Gannon knows: she's coordinator of the Midlife Career Program at San Diego State Univ., where almost ¼ of the student body is over 30.

Gannon says the major problem the older students have is that many work full time and find it difficult to juggle their course load. Another problem is that "90% of the women are back because of a divorce. They have to be the support of the family but are confused about why they're here."

How are the older students doing? Gannon says. "They generally come back highly motivated and are very competitive. Many people say they are doing better than when they first went to school."

If you're an adult considering college, Gannon advises taking advantage of the school's counseling services. "Try to discuss your program with the counselor to see if it's suitable," she says.

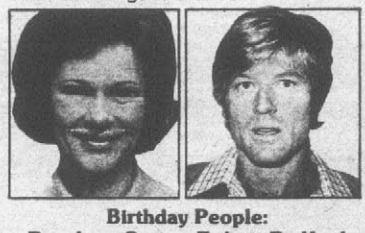

Quick Takes

A cure for baldness has been claimed by West German scientists. According to a report in the British journal Lancet, West German doctors using an industrial chemical DNCB (which doctors use in testing patients during physical examinations) said they were able to cure all but 8 of 43 bald patients. When the chemical is applied to the head it produces a mild contact irritation, which they said was usually followed withing 3 months by renewed hair growth. The report says the therapeutic effect depends on the severity and duration of the baldness, with patients with moderate hair loss experiencing the most regrowth.

Americans are losing their sweet tooth according to the latest statistics on candy consumption from the Commerce Department. The department reports that last year the average American munched his way through 15.4 pounds of candy — the lowest amount since 1938. Previous low point had been during the Depression, when per capita consumption was 15 pounds.

Young Americans are moving to the left — the left hand, that is. A survey in Today's Education reports that almost twice as many of the 20-29-year-olds surveyed were left-handed as those 30-39 years old. The increase may be due to the fact that on psychologists' advice schools are less likely to try to change a youngster's preference for the left hand than they used to be.

Prince Valiant

by HAL FOSTER

Our Story: TILLICUM TELLS PRINCE VALIANT AND HIS FAMILY OF THE CAPTURE OF THEIR OLD FRIEND BOLTAR BY THE MAD EARL OF LOLLAND.

AND THE MAD EARL DEMANDS AN IMPOSSIBLE RANSOM FOR BOLTAR. TO EMPHASIZE HIS DEMANDS HE HAD SENT BOLTAR'S SEVERED LITTLE FINGER.

THE VERY NEXT DAY VAL COMES ABOARD THE DRAGONSHIP WITH HORSES AND A SELECTED TROOP OF WARRIORS.

THE WINTER STORMS ARE ALREADY BEGINNING TO MAKE THE CROSSING OF THE NORTH SEA PERILOUS... MUCH TO THE DELIGHT OF THE VIKING CREW, WHO LAUGH AT VAL'S MEN WHO HAVE ALL SUCCUMBED TO SEASICKNESS.

THEY REACH DANELAND AND SLOWLY THREAD THEIR WAY AMONG THE MANY REEFS AND ISLANDS. THEY STAND BY THEIR WEAPONS AT ALL TIMES, FOR THE DANES HAVE COPIED THE VIKINGS AND BECOME FIERCE SEA ROVERS.

THE MAD EARL'S CASTLE RESTS ON A ROCKY REEF, A SWAMP BEHIND. TOWERS GUARD THE FOUR CORNERS; THERE ARE NO WINDOWS. IT WOULD BE HARD TO IMAGINE A MORE SINISTER PLACE. ON THE SEAWARD SIDE A HUGE ARCHED OPENING ALLOWS SMALL VESSELS AN ENTRY INTO THE CASTLE.

© King Features Syndicate, Inc., 1978. World rights reserved.
