Greenville Rescue Squad Takes Top Honors At International Meet

Champions Again

For the third time, and for the second consecutive year, A Greenville Rescue Squad team captured the world championship in the heavy duty rescue category of the 31st Annual Conference of the International Rescue and First Aid Association.

The competition this year was held on Thursday and Friday, August 31 and September 1 in Houston, Texas, with the Houston Fire Department hosting the event.

The Greenville squad also captured sixth place in the first aid division of the competition.

Besides the 1977 heavy duty rescue championship earned by Greenville at St. Louis early last September, the squad in 1962 became the first U.S. team ever to win first place in this division.

At the Houston conference, 37 teams from the U.S., Canada and other foreign countries competed for trophies awarded for rescue and first aid skills.

In the heavy duty rescue category, a team sponsored by Exxon Corp. of Venetia, California took second place. Third place winner was the Hoffman-La Roche team of Nutley, N. J., and fourth place went to the Bayway, N. J. team. Fifth place winner was the Trevose, Pa. Fire Department team; and a team from the island of Aruba, Netherlands Antilles captured sixth place.

In first aid, top honor was awarded to the Windsor Provincial First Aid Team, of Windsor, Ontario, Canada, with the Community Rescue Service of Hagerstown, Md. taking second place.

The team of the Charlottetown Fire Department of Prince Edward Island, Canada, placed third, and the Roche Rescue Team of Nutley, N.J. won fourth place honors.

Another North Carolina squad, the Goldsboro Rescue Squad, edged the Greenville team by 35 points to take fifth place.

The top all-female team in the first aid division was The Flushing Quacks, of Flushing, N. Y.

Personnel representing Greenville in rescue competition at the annual conference were: Tony Brannon, captain; Stuart Savage, co-captain; and Michael Branch, Bill Beavans, Joe Burris, Wayne Ross, Robert O'Neal, Ervin Hardee, and Brent Stockes.

First aid team members included Branch (captain) Savage (co-captain), Burris, Beavans, and Stocks.

The Greenville team flew to Houston and returned to Greenville on a plane provided by the North Carolina Division of Forest Resources. N. C. Insurance Commissioner John Ingram arranged for the team's transportation on the forestry plane.

The champion team arrived back in Greenville late Saturday afternoon.

Tight Security For Pope's Investiture

By JACK R. PAYTON

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope John Paul I met privately with his family Saturday on the eve of his investiture as spiritual leader of the world's 700 million Roman Catholics in the humblest but most heavily guarded papal inauguration in 1,200 years.

The pontiff spent 21 minutes with his brother, sister and 38 other relatives from the northern Italian mountains and was planning to serve communion to naturalized American relatives at the outdoor mass in St. Peter's Square Sunday.

John Paul, 65, also prayed briefly with eight Anglican church priests and recited the Lord's Prayer along with them in English.

Around the tiny papal state and throughout surrounding Rome, an army of 10,000 policemen, anti-terrorist agents and Vatican security men were mobilized to protect more than 100 delegations arriving to attend the investiture.

The four sovereigns, five heads of state, 50 heads of government or foreign ministers and other guests included Vice President Walter Mondale, King Juan Carlos of Spain, Prince Rainier and Princess Grace of Monaco and Argentine President Jorge Videla.

Police were particularly concerned about Videla's security following threats by Italian leftists to demonstrate against his regime Sunday near St. Peter's Square, and guards surrounded the posh downtown hotel where he was staying.

John Paul, who dispensed with much church pomp and ceremony during his nine years as patriarch of Venice, decided after his election Aug. 25 that his investiture would be simple and humble.

The former Cardinal Albino Luciani first decided that he would not be crowned with the type of elaborate gold and silver tiara used by popes since 795 A.D.

He also will walk to the main altar in front of St. Peter's Basilica instead of being carried in the papal gestatorial chair.

The ceremony itself will be brief, with senior cardinal deacon Pericle Felici placing the pallium on John Paul's shoulders before a pontifical Mass.

The Vatican announced the pope had decided "with great regret" not to attend the Third Latin American Bishops Conference in Mexico next month because of a busy schedule.

By late Saturday, workmen had completed setting up the chair the new pope will use on an eight-step podium in front of St. Peter's 15th century bronze central door.

Also in place were gray plastic chairs and wooden benches for 20,000 of the 250,000 people expected to attend the ceremony.

American Cousin Attending

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Among those attending Pope John Paul I's investiture Mass in St. Peter's Square Sunday will be his naturalized American first cousin Silvio Luciani, 79.

Luciani, born in the same mountainous region of northern Italy as the pope, emmigrated to the United States in 1923 and now lives in a mobile home at Marysville, Mich.

The pope's American cousin is a retired inspector for an electronics firm.

Luciani saw his cousin for the first time in many years on a visit to Italy in 1965, when John Paul was bishop of Vittorio Veneto. He saw him again when then Cardinal Albino Luciani was patriarch of Venice.

Ella Begins To Move

CAPE HATTERAS, N.C. (UPI) — Hurricane Ella, slightly weakened while stalled off the North Carolina coast, was on the move again Saturday night on a track away from land — and from an estimated 65,000 vacationers on the state's Outer Banks.

Forecasters said the threat to the mainland was diminishing as Ella, still packing 90-mph winds, was moving in a northnortheasterly direction at about 6 mph. Since steering currents were expected to maintain that movement at a faster speed, they said, the hurricane watch along the Outer Banks from Cape Lookout to the Viginia border would be discontinued at midnight EDT.

But the weather spokesmen said heavy swells from Ella could still produce dangerous conditions along the Outer Banks, and residents and tourists were cautioned to monitor the storm closely and small craft were advised to remain in port.

At 9 p.m. EDT Ella's center was estimated to be near latitude 32.1 north, longitude 72.9 west, or about 275 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, North Carolina.

One resort hotel on the banks had set up a large hurricane plotting map in the lobby and the latest advisories were being broadcast over the hotel's public address system. Tape for the building's large glass windows and extra water were also on hand.

Earlier Saturday, tourists returned to the Outer Banks following news that the storm had stalled a little less than 300 miles offshore.

"The sun's shining right now. People are on the beaches. The surf's up a bit, but that's about it," said Tony McGowan, who lives on the banks and is executive vice president of the Dare County Chamber of Commerce.

"I think people are being cautious and that's what we want to see," said Ed Greene of the National Park Service in Buxton. "We're depending on the weather service and keeping one eye on the ocean."

Assistant Dare County Civil Preparedness Director John Spence, who estimated that about 65,000 Labor Day vacationers have crowded onto the resort islands that line the North Carolina coast, said it would take 6 to 12 hours to evacuate them all should the hurricane turn shoreward.

Campgrounds on the islands of Ocracoke and Cape Lookout had been evacuated because those areas are served only by ferry boats. In other camgrounds along the thin 100-mile ribbon of barrier islands, National Park Service officials said the situation was near normal.

At the Oregon Inlet Fishing Center Marina, manager Dean Harrelson said fishing excursions to other than the sounds and inlets had been cancelled and that people were moving their boats inland as a precautionary measure.

Residents Evacuated

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Residents were evacuated from a rural area near Acme Saturday night when a tank car sprung a leak following the derailment of 20 cars of a westbound Seaboard Coastline train Satursday.

Witnesses said evacuees were being taken to a Veterans of Foreign Wars post and the Acme Delco High School after a tank car containing 8,000 gallons of liquor amonnia began leaking.

The 53-car train left Wilmington at 5:25 p.m. headed for Hamlet, and the derailment occurred about 30 minutes later about three miles east of of Acme. The engine and the first 20 cars of the train remained on the track, the next 20 cars, including some tank cars, were derailed, and the last 13 cars and caboose remained on the track.

The railroad reported that a derrick car had been dispatched from Rocky Mount to get the derailed cars back on the track.

Tougher Anti-Inflation Program Being Prepared

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Faced with a stubborn inflation rate that threatens to worsen, the Carter administration is preparing to toughen its anti-inflation program, possibly with specific wage and price guidelines.

"We are looking at a whole range of measures short of wage and price controls," said Lyle E. Gramley, a member of President Carter's Council of Economic Advisers. "There is a need to strengthen the antiinflation program."

During an interview, however, Gramley declined to say what specific measures are being considered, repeating only that mandatory wage and price controls are not among them.

But he indicated the program is being studied with a sense of urgency because "it's clear there is a very, very serious inflation problem we are dealing with, and it's not getting very much better."

Last week the government reported that overall consumer prices increased just 0.5 percent in July. However, consumer prices had risen 0.9 percent in each of the three previous months. The annual rate of inflation during the months of April, May and June was 10.7 percent.

To combat inflation, the administration has been relying on a program aimed at keeping both wage and price increases in 1978 at levels below the average rises of the two previous years. The Council on Wage and Price Stability has said, for example, that in most cases, prices of construction materials are increasing more than the two-year average.

It is now considered likely

Hurricane Hunters Study Ella

By MARTIN MERZER
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD NOAA-42 (AP) — The serene, bright blue sky was behind us now and we were engulfed by a huge, arc-shaped band of light gray clouds. Suddenly, the airplane dipped sharply and our torsos strained against the heavy-duty seat belts.

Pilot David Turner and his crew of hurricane hunters had found Ella.

For more than six hours, Turner manuevered the four-engine, instrument-laden aircraft through Hurricane Ella as a dozen scientists — much like a team of surgeons — probed and poked at this most powerful of nature's storms.

One of the group's primary missions was to measure Ella's force and gauge its size, speed and direction to help calculate where it might strike a U.S. coastline experts say is woefully unprepared for such a blow.

They estimate that more than 60 percent of the people on the East Coast have never experienced and deeply underestimate the full ferocity of a storm Ella's size. That makes the most-accurate possible forecasts even more important.

"Satellites give a photographic image of what a hurricane looks like," Constantine "Gus" Emmanuel, director of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Research Facilities Center, said Friday before the flight.

"But you can't really measure the destructive forces associated with the path of the hurricane's eye. For that, you have to keep sending up planes."

In addition, the flights gather information for later, more theoretical studies of hurricanes.

Emmanuel's crews flew four sorties into Ella Friday as the storm threatened the Outer Banks of North Carolina. The U.S. Air Force also sent several flights into the storm.

About two hours after takeoff from Miami, Turner's plane encountered Ella's fringes. Radar showed several "rain bands," arcs of rain-laden clouds swirling around the storm's eye.

Within minutes, we encountered moderate turbulence as our visibility was reduced to near zero. Technicians dropped the first of eight "dropwindesondes," parachute-equipped brass cannisters which contain sensitive instruments.

"As they float, they act like oversize, electronic raindrops," said Steve Datzman, a computer scientist who specializes in launching the devices. "They move through the storm measuring wind speeds and direction, humidity, pressure and air temperature."

The plane moved between rain bands and the turbulence ended as quickly as it began. But scientists continued gauging the storm, sending much of the data via satellite to the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

Turner, meanwhile, kept the Confidence Gap Grows

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Education Editor

A growing confidence gap is developing across the nation between schools and parents and taxpayers, the tenth annual Gallup Poll of the Public's Attitudes Toward Public Schools showed Saturday.

The report funded by the Kettering Foundation in Dayton, Ohio, came as no surprise to observers of the education scene.

It is fed by declining Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores and concern over the many high school graduates who cannot read and write at a level needed to survive in today's world.

In urban areas, up to 42 percent of high school graduates fit this illiteracy standard. In other areas, up to 17 percent.

A majority of more than two-to-one in the poll favor promoting children only if they can pass exams showing they have mastered a level of learning.

Remedial work was recommended for those who fail such tests. Then the first-time failers should be given another test, providing a second chance.

Students who flunk again after the catch-up work should be held over in the same grade the next year, half the survey respondents said.

This practice would cut into the "social promotion" — pushing kids ahead just because they spent a year in a grade. Critics of education maintain social promotion has been pulling education downhill.

Escapee Convict Nabbed Faces Multiple Charges

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Norris Carlton Taylor, who faces murder, rape and robbery charges in North Carolina and Virginia, was ordered held without bond in the Cumberland County jail Saturday during a hearing before a magistrate.

Magistrate J.B. Darden also scheduled a first appearance hearing in District Court for Taylor, 34, on Tuesday.

Taylor was returned to Fayetteville by city police Saturday morning from the Northampton County town of Woodland, where he was arrested Friday following an alleged murder and robbery spree in North Carolina and Virginia.

His appearance before Darden Saturday involved only a murder charge stemming from the fatal shooting of Mildred D. Murchison in downtown Fayetteville Friday morning. Mrs. Murchison, 30, who was five months pregnant, was shot as she was going from a parking lot to the Social Security office where she was worked.

A Virginia native, Taylor, escaped July 10 from the Johnston County jail at Smithfield while awaiting trial for the murder of a New York model in Selma.

Authorities thought he was in southeast Virginia until Monday, when a Fayetteville woman was kidnapped and raped. Officers said he drove to Virginia Monday night, abducted a college student at Newport News and forced her to drive him back to North Carolina, where she managed to flee.

Taylor was reported to have abducted a 17-year-old Woodland girl, Patty Bazemore, on Wednesday morning. She was released Friday shortly before Taylor was captured by Woodland Police Chief Chris Sandlin.

Edgecombe County Sheriff Phil Ellis said Saturday that the SBI and detectives from his office wanted to question Miss Bazemore about statements made by Malcolm R. Biles, who was found shot in the face on North Carolina 97 east of Rocky Mount. Biles, who was transferred Saturday from Edgecombe General Hospital to Womack Army Hospital at Fort Bragg, told officers Miss Bazemore held a gun on him after he had been picked up by Taylor.

Secrecy For Summit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter has decided that his Mideast summit talks at Camp David would go better if conducted in secrecy, and so a lid has been placed on substantive news briefings, an administration official said Saturday.

A battalion of correspondents will converge on the tiny town of Thurmont, Md., six miles from Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Catoctin Mountains, for Wednesday's meeting with Carter, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

White House press secretary Jody Powell has been designated spokesman for the summit and Israel and Egypt have concurred.

The meeting could go as long as 10 days, and Powell will give a daily briefing each afternoon, but an administration official warned reporters that it is unlikely he will deal with substantive questions or details of the discussions.

The official said:

"The president feels very strongly — and I think this is shared to a great extent by the other principals — that the chances for success will be greatly enhanced if these three men can sit down and talk in privacy without afterwards having to worry about who looks better in the press, either in the United States or back home; without having to worry about the gamesmanship which sometimes becomes involved in these discussions as we all give our varied accounts of what goes on inside the meeting.

"The president feels very strongly that the atmosphere of privacy, of informality, of the relaxed nature of Camp David will contribute to the success of the conference. We are going to do everything we can to maintain that."

Powell and his counterparts will stay at the hideaway, part of their large delegations. Many reporters will be housed in the Thurmont area, but others will be bussed in daily from the White House. A press center has been established at the American Legion hall.

Would Consider Joining

WASHINGTON (UPI) — King Hussein says he would consider joining Egypt in peace talks with Israel if the Camp David summit results in a clear-cut statement of principles for a solution to the Middle East conflict.

Hussein predicted a definite statement of principles would lead other Arab nations as well as the Palestinians to reconsider their opposition to the Israeli-Egyptian peace talks.

"If it is clear enough we would take another look at our position," the king said. "I am sure that other Arabs would do the same, including the Palestinians."

He made his remarks during an interview with ABC News correspondent Barbara Walters to be broadcast on Sunday's "Issues and Answers" televison program.

Hussein did not expand on what he meant by a clear statement, but he was apparently demanding a definite promise of Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territories captured in the 1967 Middle East War.

The monarch said he doubts President Carter will be able to arrange such an accord between Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat at Camp David.

"I really hope that it will succeed but as a realist I am not all that optimistic," he said.

Celebrated Anniversary

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Vietnam celebrated the 33rd anniversary of its independence Saturday with mass meetings and parades throughout the country and a warning that the struggle was not over, official Radio Hanoi said.

The celebrations mark the date in 1945 shortly after Japan's surrender to the allies when President Ho Chi Minh founded the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and declared independence from France.

Vietnam, with the word Socialist replacing Democratic in its reunited form, celebrated the anniversary in stark socialist style.

In Hanoi, 100,000 people gathered to hear speeches and there were mass meetings and military and civilian parades in 10 other major cities throughout the country, the radio said.

Postal Workers Now Average $15,877 Annually

Mum About Wage Increases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Postal unions are mum about the size of wage increases they are seeking in the latest round of contract negotiations, but it clearly is more than the average $19,200 a year by 1981 that their members already have rejected.

Postal workers now receive an average of $15,877 annually, according to Postal Service figures. A tentative contract, voted down by members of three unions, would have increased this by an annual average of 6.5 percent for three years.

Leaders of the two largest postal unions are instructed by their rank and file to gain "substantial improvement" in the rejected package or call a strike at the end of the 15 days of new negotiations on Sept. 16.

The unions have not publicly defined "substantial improvement."

Early in the bargaining that produced the rejected pact, the three unions asked for pay increases of about 14 percent in the first year of a new contract, in addition to continued cost-of-living increases.

This was far higher than President Carter's anti-inflation program would have allowed. He has asked unions to settle for lower increases than they received in the past.

Fringe benefits have not been a key issue during the postal dispute. Postal workers already receive a liberal package of benefits equal to an annual average of $2,212 per worker, according to the Postal Service.

This package includes annual leave of between 10 and 26 work days per year. The maximum amount of leave time, which corresponds to vacation time in private industry, is achieved after 15 years of service.

Other fringe benefits are nine paid holidays per year, a retirement system to which both employer and employee contribute 7 percent of the worker's salary, life insurance with premiums paid by the Postal Service, and health insurance to which management contributes 75 percent of the premiums for a high-option plan.

Two Killed

ROBBINSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Rescuers Saturday removed two bodies from the wreckage of a helicopter that crashed Friday while flying from Robbinsville to a construction site in Graham County.

The two victims were identified as Dennis Earl McCracken, 28, of Chamblee, Ga., the pilot, and Billy James Tincher, 50, of Robbinsville, Rt. 3, a passenger. The crash site was reported to be on Santeetlah Creek in the Nantahala National Forest.

Preparing Response

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The State Department said Saturday it is preparing an "appropriate response" to a West German request for information about an allegation the Bonn government was considering withdrawal from NATO.

The request was made by Egon Bahr, secretary general of Germany's Social Democratic Party, following press reports that a Romanian defector gave the CIA confidential documents from Bahr showing West Germany would leave NATO.

The American author Gertrude Stein died in 1946.

To Buy U.S. Uranium

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Japan has agreed to buy $1 billion in enriched uranium from the United States, paying now but waiting a year for delivery in a move to help the faltering dollar, it was announced Saturday.

The Treasury Department said Japanese Ambassador Fumihiko Togo exchanged letters with State Department officials Friday to conclude the sale — an outgrowth of the recent Bonn economic summit.

"The specific, detailed agreements are being made by various Japanese utility companies with the U.S. Department of Energy and Treasury whereby they will pay $1 billion to the U.S. government," the Japanese Embassy said.

An embassy spokesman said the utility companies will use the uranium to generate electrical power. He said the uranium is low-grade, not weaponsgrade.

Officials said the sale, which involves about 2 percent of an estimated $40 billion of volatile dollars in foreign banks, will help reduce pressure on the American currency.

The dollar has slid sharply in relation to the yen in the face of a current $11 billion annual deficit in U.S.-Japanese trade.

Hiromu Fukada, the embassy's economic minister, said the utility companies will pay in advance for the uranium in keeping with Japan's promise at the July economic summit that Carter may announce a so-called second phase to his voluntary anti-inflation program in advance of the annual meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Washington the week of Sept. 24. Rumors that an announcement was imminent were denied Thursday by the White House, however.

The sense of urgency was heightened following release of the Labor Department's latest consumer price index last week which showed that prices were up a total of 5.4 percent during the first seven months of the year.

At first glance, the report was encouraging to consumers because it was the 0.5 percent increase in July was the smallest of the year and because grocery prices dropped for the first time in 12 months.

But government economists said the more important number in the July index was the 0.7 percent increase in prices of goods other than food — the same as in June and an annual rate of increase of 8.5 percent.

Carter's special inflation adviser, Robert S. Strauss, said inflation probably will be 8 percent this year, worse even than the administration's own pessimistic forecast of 7.2 percent.

Henry Wallich, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, said in speech last week that he thinks inflation could be even worse in 1979, unless the administration takes bold new steps to control it.

Chancellor Charts A Course

ECU's new chancellor Thomas B. Brewer outlined some actions he plans for the institution in a talk before the faculty convocation at the opening of school.

To be applauded is his plan to upgrade research activity with an additional $88,000 from ECU Foundation and other university funds. It was reported that this is almost five times the amount of money provided for research in the previous year. Since an excellent university is founded on research the effects of this move can't help but be beneficial.

The chancellor also announced a $20,000 awards program for projects to improve teaching. Some $10,000 will be allocated for attendance at seminars and workshops.

The chancellor indicated that all the university's energies would be concentrated towards excellence.

The aims are noble and Dr. Brewer seems to have backed them up with new finances.

On the other hand, the chancellor questioned politics as a part of building a university. "In universities it is destructive and leads to ill-feeling and barriers to trust."

But at the same time he noted the lagging salaries of East Carolina faculty members. "While I cannot promise success in this area, I assure you it will be kept before the system administration and the Legislature."

The word politics means different things to different people. Raw use of political power can rent any institution. Still the new chancellor enters a situation where his greatest asset may well be the good will of rank and file North Carolinians who have supported the university through so many fights. That good will can be translated into effective support only through the political process in its purest sense, and Dr. Brewer should draw on it.

The chancellor also referred to "discussion proposals" for changes in the university's administrative structure. A new chancellor can certainly be expected to make changes but sweeping administrative changes should be made only after careful study of their effect on ECU internally and in relation to other state institutions.

Dr. Brewer cited the academic process as the university's foundation. "Our central purpose must remain inviolate. We are an academic institution, and I pledge to you that we shall continue to be one."

East Carolina University could have no better creed.

Avoid Jogging Hurts

By MICHAEL J. CONLON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The jogging boom is leaving behind it a predictable trail of foot and leg injuries, something which doctors feel could be avoided by most runners.

The biggest problem, according to one podiatrist we talked to, is not the shoe — which runners are quick to blame — but the lack of conditioning exercises which should precede and accompany jogging.

In other words, it's not enough just to jog.

Running tightens muscles in the back of the leg but weakens those in the front of the leg. Without proper stretching exercises, various knee, leg and feet problems can develop.

"Exercise is really mandatory beforehand," the doctor said, "and it cannot be rushed. Do them before and after jogging, and on a daily basis."

Shoes are not totally blameless, however. The podiatrist said he recently has encountered an outbreak of heel pain, tendonitis and knee problems among persons using jogging shoes with flared heels — pontoon-type heels which are wider than the rest of the shoe.

That type of shoe, he said, is intended for running on rough terrain and is fine for that purpose, but the average street, sidewalk and city park runner should avoid that style.

The American Podiataric Association is offering a free four-page pamphlet on the subject of shoes, exercise and conditioning. Called "Jogging Advice From Your Podiatrist," it can be obtained by writing to the association at 20 Chevy Chase Circle, Washington, D.C. 20015. Enclose a self-addressed, stamped, return envelope.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission tells us they receive an occasional inquiry on the subject of safe and unsafe jogging shoes but have no plans to study, evaluate or regulate the shoes.

One group which is looking at the subject, however, is the American Society for Testing and Materials.

That organization, which helps write voluntary standards for industry, has a committee which is trying to devise rules which would apply to jogging shoes — specifying, for example, how they should be made to best provide protection and absorb shock.

Podiatrists who appeared at a meeting of the panel earlier this year reportedthat the weight of the shoe is not important; too much flair in the shoe causes knee shock; stiff shoes and low heels can cause tendonitis; and shoe design should consider the natural bend of the foot.

The American Footwear Industries Association said that Americans bought 64 million pair of sports shoes in 1977, compared with 44.8 million the year before, 24.7 million in 1975 and a mere 15.9 million in 1973.

While the sales are not broken down by type of shoe, the association said that a large number are undoubtedly jogging shoes, and the popularity of running accounts for a good chunk of the sales increases.

Of the 64 million pairs sold in 1977, more than 51 million were imports. Some of those imports, the trade group said, are very good; but others sold in discount stores and other nonspecialty shops may not be.

Competency Test Backer

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — "I happen to be a pro-competency test person", says Marion D. Thorpe openly. He is chancellor at Elizabeth City State University, a mostly black college with a record of very low student scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Tests.

Struggling with those low scores among his students while trying to build a quality program, Thorpe is developing an academic skills center and a thorough remedial program.

Basic education courses make up a major part of the effort to upgrade all students who need this work.

Meanwhile, some 200 students go into a concentrated program at the skills center where work experience and counselors determine whether the individual indeed has potential but merely can't do well on tests.

For those students who can handle the work, intensive remedial training will bring them up to standard.

"And if they are not able to raise their competency, then we shall counsel them in other courses of action: job training, technical schools, and such," Thorpe explains.

Tests, then, pinpoint the problem. The response must be geared up to correct that problem.

"I happen to be a pro-competency test person ... but along with that we must provide the proper response to do something about the results", Thorpe concludes. It is obvious that all of the response does not reside in the high schools, but also in the university system.

More Tests

Barbara Sykes, a resident of Virginia and a reader of the Roanoke Rapids Herald, also has some strong feelings about the high school competency tests. In a recent column we raised the question of whether black spokesmen who opposed the tests weren't ultimately hurting black children by standing against demands for excellence.

BILL NOBLITT

The real problem, writes Miss Sykes, is that testing should have begun years ago and at earlier ages ... in fact, "they should have begun with the teachers ... as to what the youngsters were being taught."

The frustration comes from black children who "suddenly find themselves faced with these tests; unlearned in the text these tests involve."

Miss Sykes feels, "we are not threatening ugly things to keep our children from aspiring to higher levels. We only want the aspirations to start while their minds are young and impressionable, and not ... when they are high school students confronted with these competency tests and finding themselves incompetent."

Teach them, she demands, while they're young. That will end threats of legal actions, boycotting, etc.

Hold The Line

County commissioners across North Carolina are, for the most part, trying to keep the lid on rising governmental costs. A survey by the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners shows that 51 counties held countywide tax rates at the 1977-78 level for the new fiscal year, and that 20 counties actually lowered the rates. Higher tax rates were approved in 21 counties.

The biggest increase was in Forsyth County where the rate climbed from .62 to .815 per $100 valuation — a 19 and one-half cent hike.

Highest rate is in Green County which gets $1.34 per $100 valuation. The lowest is 39 cents levied in Alleghany, Iredell, and Randolph Counties.

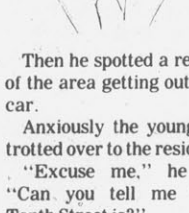
Sunday Morning Notes

It was late at night — in fact the first hour after midnight last Tuesday.

The young man stood under a street light at the intersection of Willow and Oak Streets in Tar River Estates.

He was sratching his head and appeared to be searching for an address.



Then he spotted a resident of the area getting out of his car.

Anxiously the young man trotted over to the resident.

"Excuse me," he said. "Can you tell me where Tenth Street is?"

"Where is your car parked?" the resident asked.

"I don't have a car," the young man replied.

Then, sheepishly, he explained his problem.

"I'm a freshman at East Carolina," he said. "This is my first night here and I went downtown. I started walking back to my dorm and I got lost."

He continued with a pained look. "If I ever get back there, I might never leave again."

The resident laughed and said, "Well if you had kept going you would have been in the river."

He showed the young man Elm Street and directed him

Ultimate Put-On?

(The Raleigh Times)

We don't know how many shared our reaction to the story about the five young people who've had plastic surgery to make them look like pop singers now dead. It made us sick.

Not so much over the misplaced values that hold Elvis or Janis in higher regard than, say Harry Truman or Hubert Humphrey.

We're only too used to that in a complex and media-mad world where it's infinitely easier to go along with what's "in" with the mass market than to agree on the difficult questions of what's right or great or lasting.

That's why more space was given the deaths this week of actors Charles Boyer and Robert Shaw than of historian Bruce Catton, whose Civil War books may still stand out when even the best of Boyer's ineffably romantic continental elegance is drying to dust in the film can and when Shaw's authoritative rendering of shark-hunter and Henry VIII are forgotten.

Personally, if we can't write like Catton, we'd rather look like Boyer — who embodied a generation's contradictory dream by being a hand-kissing charmer who stayed with one wife for 44 years and then died rather than face life without her — than like Elvis. Boyer had character running deep behind the charm. Elvis' charm outran his character.

But the self-appointed look-alikes trouble us for deeper reasons than their particular choice of models. What kind of views of themselves permit these people that being Elvis-ized or anyone-else-ized would be an improvement over staying with the faces nature gave them?

We're no shrinks, but somehow that reeks of insecurity. It's pathetic. Great actors use talent and makeup to become those they portray on stage — but when they wipe off the greasepaint, they're content with, even proud of, their own faces. These five apparently think their faces weren't worth keeping even for their most private moments.

No matter how much money their surgical transformations make for them, they'll remain pitiable figures, as far as we're concerned. Most people are more than their faces, whether pretty or ugly. These people seem to be less.

THE INSIDE REPORT

That Kemp Phenomenon

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A new escalation for Rep. Jack Kemp was reached here Aug. 24 just before the Buffalo, N.Y., congressman's speech to a fund-raising dinner when he talked to fabulously rich South Carolina textile magnate Roger Milliken.

Kemp and Milliken conferred in whispered tones at a cocktail party for big contributors before the dinner. Kemp revealed to Milliken what he had not made public: he is about to create a PAC (political action committee) authorized under law to collect contributions. Milliken quickly volunteered that he wanted to be among the first to contribute.

No bridges were burned on either side. By setting up a PAC, Kemp does not commit himself to running for president or any other office. By contributing to Kemp's PAC, Milliken does not commit himself to a Kemp presidential campaign. Nevertheless, there are the seeds of commitment from each of them.

Kemp's PAC (to be run by broadcasting executive Frank Shakespeare) presumably will bring order to the congressman's coast-to-coast meanderings — without speechwriter, advance man, research aide or even coatholder. Although the PAC's ostensible purpose is to boost Kemp's tax reduction crusade, it is the essential first step toward seeking the Republican presidential nomination in 1980.

Milliken, long a quiet but bountiful contributor to conservative campaigns, was a major giver to Ronald Reagan in 1976. But he privately questions whether Reagan ought to run in 1980 at age 69. So Milliken is looking closely at Kemp, some 25 years Reagan's junior, as the alternative.

This was the pattern of two hectic days' campaigning by Kemp Aug. 24 and 25, while Reagan and Rep. Philip Crane (the first announced presidential hopeful) were vacationing. Despite Kemp's shortcomings in both technique and substance, there were twin surprises of volunteered presidential support for Kemp and lack of enthusiasm for Reagan. It is significant because Kemp, after starting the swing in Cincinnati, moved into Reagan country: South Carolina and Mississippi.

This is the Kemp phenomenon. While senior Republican colleagues in the House consider the former football quarterback as much too pushy, Kemp is the instant hero on the Republican banquet circuit by virtue of his tax cut gospel. He need not, as Jimmy Carter was still doing in 1975, explain who he is; no stop was free from spontaneous urgings for a Kemp presidential campaign.

Kemp's charisma coexists with confusion. Without an aide to push him along, Kemp missed commercial flight connections from South Carolina to Mississippi. He flew into each stop oblivious of local situations and many local leaders.

A potentially more serious problem is obsessive stress on tax reduction as the philosopher's stone to save Western civilization. During two days, Kemp carried on a non-stop economic seminar on tax reduction — in speeches, press conferences, meetings with politicians, and in just plain bull sessions. Sooner or later, he must broaden his message.

Yet Kemp's monomania enables him to skirt social issues so pleasurable to hard-core Republicans but of dubious political value — busing, abortion, crime, homosexuality, drugs. Furthermore, Kemp rejects demands by Republicans that his tax reduction to restore incentive be balanced by deep spending cuts.

"I believe we ultimately will need to spend more money," he told a Cincinnati press conference, for national defense and "to clean up air and water." In Columbia, S.C., while shocked Republicans gaped over breakfast, he committed heresy: declaring that "the cause of inflation is not

Strength For Today

RESERVOIRS OF POWER

What do we accomplish in prayer? At the outset we can be sure of one thing we do not accomplish — we do not change God's will.

But we do make it possible for God to change our wills, and the process of prayer releases certain spiritual powers that can transform our lives.

Some people stress only the first of these results. But if we look on prayer as little more than an exercise in changing the direction and content of our wills, its significance is psychological rather than religious.

The most important aspect of prayer is that it enables us to lift up mountains and cast them into the sea. It rolls away the stone from the door of the tomb in which our despairing spirits have been confined. It literally raises us from the dead — from the death of hopelessness and from the death which comes from the power of sin over our lives which we cannot control.

'Respectability' In Borrowing

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Rapid inflation in the past few years has helped make the idea of borrowing money a much more respectable option than it used to be for many Americans.

Warnings of the dangers of debt abound in such prominent places as the Bible, Shakespeare's plays and the works of Ralph Waldo Emerson. Thomas Jefferson advised simply: "Never spend your money before you have it."

Such admonitions seem to carry little weight in this country today. In June of this year consumer credit outstanding reached $233 billion — or more than $1,000 per person.

The total debt expanded by $8 billion in the fourth quarter of 1977, $9 billion in the first quarter of this year, and $11 billion in the second quarter.

Demand for mortgages has remained strong even though the cost of those home-buying loans is averaging a record 9.5 percent-plus.

At the New York Stock Exchange, margin debt — the amount of money investors have borrowed from their brokers using stock holdings as collateral — stood at a record $11.19 billion as of July.

Analysts have said that margin debt totals have been swollen by so-called "non-purpose" borrowing — loans taken out for non-investment uses such as car purchases.

Experts differ sharply on whether such figures are cause for any great concern. But just about everybody agrees they reflect an acute public awareness that inflation favors the borrower.

If Person A borrows $100 from person B at 8 percent interest, A will owe B $108 a year from now. But if the cost of living rises at 8 percent over that time, then $108 next year will have theoretically the same buying power as $100 does now.

Thus A gets the use of the money for a year without giving up any buying power. And the government tips the scales further in his favor by allowing him a tax deduction on whatever interest he pays.

The lender, by contrast, must pay tax on the interest he receives, although it brings him no net gain in purchasing power.

All this casts in a new light the old precept that one should borrow only when absolutely necessary, and only as much as absolutely necessary. Borrowing still means taking on risk, but now there are inflation risks in pursuing a save-anddon't-borrow policy as well.

Of course, unrestrained debt is still a potential source of big financial trouble, either for an individual or an entire economy. If an economy ever experiences deflation — falling prices for goods and services — as the United States did in the Depression, debtors are among the first to feel the squeeze.

Interest rates are supposed to control borrowing by rising to whatever level is necessary to discourage those who really shouldn't be borrowing from seeking loans.

But current interest rates, high as they may appear, haven't shown much sign of exerting that kind of influence. Instead, inflationary expectations seem to be running so high that 9 percent or 10 percent money looks, to some people at least, like a bargain.

Public Forum

Letters submitted for Public Forum must be limited to 300 words.

To the editor:

Councilwoman Judy Greene asked me when I called her in July to let her know what came of my complaint about the truck traffic on Jarvis Street between Fourth and Fifth Streets.

Absolutely nothing.

I did call the city engineer's office, as she suggested, and I talked with someone who promised to forward my complaint, name and number to the head of the traffic commission. I haven't heard a thing from anyone since.

Meanwhile, the 18 wheeler from John's Florist (deliveries to) continues to roar down the street as though Jarvis were Cotanche. And the produce trucks and the soft drink trucks and the other delivery vehicles for Overton's Grocery continue to ignore the access of Third via Cotanche; they choose instead to hurry down our street. None of these people drive the speed limit.

Of course, all this causes a great deal of congestion, especially since our street is also part of one GREAT route, and a major artery for the University and the food stamp office on Johnston Street and just about everyone else. Not to mention that the University's personnel office generates more traffic than the bank on the first of the month.

Given the fact that Jarvis is an extremely narrow residential street, the congestion increases daily. It is not at timid driver stops to let the GREAT bus by, or while the 18-wheeler negotiates the turn from Jarvis to Fifth. And the number of fender-benders at the corner of Jarvis and Fourth is a matter of police record.

I suppose my neighbors and I are being overly optimistic to think that property owners, voters and taxpayers (which all but three of the houses on this street house) can get some attention from City Hall?

I thank Mrs. Greene for her help anyway.

Sally Brett

To the editor:

I returned to Greenville to live two months ago after a 12-year absence. I first came here in September, 1960 as an East Carolina College student. Following graduation, I have been a frequent visitor to Greenville, business and pleasure. I am very pleased to be here permanently.

During the past 18 years I have been privileged to observe the remarkable growth of the area. For the most part I have found that growth to have been well conceived, planned and carried out. The strides made by East Carolina University are well known and admired here and afar. The civic and industrial growth of the area could well serve as a model for others to emulate.

Probably my single most heartfelt complaint is your newspaper. I do not believe you have kept strides with your readership in hardly any area. I believe that you have had a clear responsibility to keep pace in quality with the community you serve and you have not done so. I travel five states regularly and read all manner of newspapers in my travels. I have a mental list of over a dozen newspapers with which I think I can fairly compare The Daily Reflector. I allow for population, geography, competition and readership. You come in dead last.

To be a little more specific let me discuss your editorials. By and large they appear high schoolish. They seem to be totally lacking in depth as if by design. I ask you does this reflect the writer or the writer's impression of the readers mentality?

A Sunday Morning edition that does not carry Saturday night east coast baseball scores in pure laziness.

To sum this letter up let me say that I do not believe you live up to your name. The Daily Reflector does not nearly reflect what I see as Greenville and Pitt County.

All over town there were moving vans, trailers, station wagons piled high with personal belongings and bicycles.

Middle aged parents made their way around a strange city trying to settle their offspring into a new environment.

No doubt some older muscles ached from the strain of carrying heavy boxes up dorm steps and into the waiting rooms.

In a couple of days every thing was back to normal in Greenville, however.

A sure sign of that was an auto moving slowly down a local street, a pert young lady perched comfortably on the hood.

The first day of school and also the first football game of the season was no doubt the signal for beginning of street improvements.

The signs promptly went up on 14th Street through the college campus.

A few days earlier the asphalt came up on Ninth Street and some other streets in that area.

unions"; praising John F. Kennedy's tax cuts and criticizing Herbert Hoover's tax increases; attacking the "meatax" $100 billion federal spending cut of Howard Jarvis and preferring something "more humane, more compassionate, more positive."

At that South Carolina breakfast, Kemp was preaching specifically to Gov. James Edwards, trying to convince him a balanced budget is not the first priority. Edwards is definitely interested. A Reagan stalwart in 1976, he still feels a strong pull to follow him. Yet, like Milliken, Edwards wonders whether a last hurrah is in the best interests of either Ronald Reagan or the Republican party.

But why don't Edwards and Milliken opt for the more conventionally conservative Phil Crane instead of Kemp? That goes to the heart of the Kemp phenomenon. "He leaves the audiences with hope, not anger," explained one party leader after listening to Kemp. That is so unusual a feat for a Republican that it explains why he has surmounted inexperience, confusion and a narrow-based idea to become, for now at least, a welcome excitement in an habitually drab political party.

Energy: How We Got To Where We Are Today

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — Mr. Carter came back to town on Wednesday, cutting his vacation short in order to fire up his troops to fight for his energy program. He might better have stayed in bed. The program he submitted in April of last year remains in a comatose state and cannot be revived.

The president is down to two options. He can plead for enactment of three of the original five parts of his plan; or he can see the whole works scrapped and start fresh next year. While he thinks it over, perhaps Mr. Carter will reflect upon his mistakes of the past 18 months and find some profit in the disheartening experience.

The president's first mistake came with his public promise to put together an energy package within 90 days after taking office. He fulfilled the promise, but at terrible cost. Instead of taking his time, consulting with congressional leaders and with coal and oil interests, he relied upon a small group of non-political technicians. His task force brought him a non-political mishmash.

On April 18 of last year, Mr. Carter appeared on television with what White House aides later termed the "sky is falling" speech. The alternative to solving the energy crisis, he said, "may be a national catastrophe." The national effort "will be the moral equivalent of war." On April 20, he took a toned-down version of that speech to a joint session of the Congress. He released a fact sheet detailing his specific proposals.

We tend to forget, 18 months later, how complex — and yet how vague — the president's recommendations were. He had two broad purposes in mind: To conserve, and to produce. Toward those ends, he proposed a stunning program of tax incentives and tax penalties. With these he proposed an ill-defined scheme of tax rebates.

If the president had first prayed over these proposals with Al Ullman in the House and Russell Long in the Senate, he never would have sent his package to the Hill. One such proposal embraced a contingent tax of 5 cents a gallon on gasoline, to be imposed annually if certain conservation quotas were not met. An incredulous Frank Cormier, dean of the White House press, asked on April 22 if this were only a bargaining chip.

"I am deeply committed to the standby gasoline tax," Mr. Carter avowed. "I will fight for it until the last vote in Congress."

Mr. Carter didn't fight for it until the first vote in Congress. The contingent tax on gasoline went down the drain at the first session of Mr. Ullman's Ways and Means Committee. Before it passed a single, comprehensive energy bill on August 5 of last year, the House made scores of other changes in the Carter program, but owing to the Trojan efforts of Speaker O'Neill, most of the plan survived.

It was a different story in the Senate. There the whole package was carved into five parts: general conservation' coal conversion, utility regulation, natural gas, and energy taxes. By the time the Senate completed its work on Oct. 31, great portions of the original plan had been rewritten. In the process, Mr. Carter had mortally offended Senate liberals and failed to woo Senate tories.

There matters have remained for ten months. At one time, the president might have salvaged most of the elements in three areas — general conservation, coal conversion, and utility regulation. It might still be possible to find accommodation in a half-a-loaf settlement. But the administration has insisted on all or nothing at all, and with the latest flap over natural gas regulation, it is likely to be nothing at all. In this particular blunder, Mr. Carter left an impression that he was trying to buy the vote of Sen. James A. McClure with a little breeder reactor money for Idaho. He thus alienated Sen. Howard Baker, the minority leader, who wants breeder reactor money for Tennessee. These are the games men play.

Trouble is, this isn't a game. The United States may not be facing an energy "crisis" or an impending "catastrophe", but the president is exactly right in his general premises. We are wastefully consuming far more energy than prudence decrees; we are not increasing production of new energy sources. It is bound to be possible, given effective leadership, for responsible members of Congress to find agreement on a workable program.

But the original Carter plan, conceived in haste and launched with strident fanfares, never embodied a truly workable program. By authoritative count, it amounted to 113 bills wrapped into one. If the president, in January, would elevate his sights a little lower, he might yet win a war that all of us want to see won.

Valerian Smith Finds It Hard To Be Unhappy

By GAIL MICHAELS

BATON ROUGE, La. — It's almost impossible, Valerian Smith will tell you, for him to be unhappy. Son of a dentist only two generations removed from slavery, Smith counts himself fortunate to have avoided most of the pitfalls that go hand in hand with growing up black in America.

Because his father was a professional and because his family was very musically inclined (his mother whas choir director for a Baptist church) Smith quite naturally found it easy to fall into a lifestyle that now has him playing two very different — and seemingly antithetical — roles, as both a successful dentist and as a composer whose music will shortly be heard on Broadway.

Born in West Virginia and educated at Howard University (where he made friends with, among others, U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young), he moved to Baton Rouge nearly 20 years ago and, after marrying a local girl, intended to settle down into a nice, quiet practice.

But here, just like everywhere else, Jim Crow was still the boss. "Man, blacks were still riding in the back of the bus back then," Smith recalls. "But I really saw a wealth of talent here and that's why I got started in the arts, because there wasn't anything here culturally for blacks."

So instead of becoming a political activist, he became a cultural activist. With the help of the Southern and LSU drama departments and some surprising support from the Parks and Recreation Department, he helped start the Baton Rouge Community Playhouse and Chorus, both of which gave the community an alternative forum for creative expression.

The Baton Rouge Community Theatre didn't last long, but the Chorus is still around, both as an entity in itself and as a frequent part of Smith's own projects — including, but by no means limited to, Valerian's Voices, which caught a few thousand ears at the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival on April 27. Besides working with the Chorus, he's written the score to a couple of ethnic musicals, one of which should hit Broadway sometime this fall.

The day starts for Valerian Smith sometimes as early as four or five a.m., whenever, he says, "my mind wakes me up. And it usually wakes me up with a creative thought." From there, it's straight to the piano, either to flesh out the idea or to work it into a piece he's already half-written.

After a few hours of composing or playing back earlier tapes, he gulps down a little fruit juice and heads out to his tennis court to whack a few before jumping into his pool for a few laps.

It's that regimen — and granted, it sounds a big corny to repeat it hear — that may well be responsible for his amazing vitality. But what is it that makes Smith look 35 when he's actually going on 52? "I try to stay away from old people who are old, if you know what I mean."

Still later, just after noon, he heads to his dental office downtown, to play out his other role, composing a different kind of music in scores of timorous mouths.

Why dentistry and composing? "When I went to college I knew that the entertainment business was very shaky — for blacks at that time it was nearly impossible. I knew that I needed a steady source of income to support my family."

But, he says, dentistry is creative, too. "I enjoy it, enjoy working with my hands, doing the bridgework and casting the inlays. And it's a nice way of dealing with people."

And dealing with people is the bottom line for Smith. "I get angry and when I see injustices I try to do something about them. But my philosophy is simple. It's so easy to be nice, to smile a friendly gesture. It's so easy to do. Each day is a gift that is given and you ought to treat it as such that is given and you ought to treat it as such — especially if you're fortunate, and I'm very fortunate." Which all leads up to one of Smith's favorite sayings, expressed in one of his songs, "You Get What You Give."

You get what you give some day, some way
maybe not the same day
maybe not the same way
But you get what you give.

And that in turn reminds him of another of his songs, "Intangible Things"

The things in life we
are the things in life that are free
Those intangible things are the tangible things
Life's greatest gifts are free.

Logic Is Lost When A 2-Year-Old Is Stubborn

From all my attempts to discover the secret of effective discipline, I have learned one thing. If a psychologist says that one should discipline a two-year-old by reasoning with her, it's a sure bet that he's celibate.

Personally, I can't think of anything more impossible than this form of discipline. Reasoning with a two-year-old is like trying to play "Classical Gas" on a ukelele with one string. A two-year-old just does not possess anything close to adult logic.

If she or he does possess any semblance of logic, it's strictly personal. As in my very small cousin's comment to the lady standing in front of him in the supermarket check-out line. She had just told her daughter that the candy she wanted was not good for her. "Well, it may not be good for her," Jeffrey grinned. "But it sure is good for me!"

Now, Meg has this same kind of logic. And what makes it so confusing is her inclination in any given argument to transform our attempts to reason with her to suit her own purposes.

For instance, several weeks ago at supper she and Phillip, who still retains some faith in reasoning, were having one of their discussions about clean plates.

"I'm finished," she announced, pushing away a plate with green beans and squash very much in evidence.

"Eat the beans and squash all gone, and then you'll be finished," Phillip said.

Meg closed her eyes. "They're all gone," she said. "Now can I get down?"

"They are not all gone," Phillip said. "Finish them."

"But I NEED to get down."

"You need to eat your vegetables," he countered. "If you don't, you might get sick, and you'll have to go to the doctor's."

"And to the hospital?"

Phillip is no dummy. He knew a sidetrack when he saw one. "We'll finish our discussion of medicine some other time," he said firmly. "Right now, finish your beans."

Meg's lower lip began to tremble. "I'm not going to put up with this all night," she whimpered.

"Neither am I, young lady. Finish your beans!"

She glared at him. "I don't like that tone of voice."

Phillip was beginning to get exasperated. She was using all his lines. "I don't care what you like! You eat those beans! Right now!"

"Nice people don't shout in the house," she pointed out.

Somehow Phillip managed to calm himself and grasp at one last straw of reason. "You're right," he said. "But you're not getting down until you finish your supper."

"You're not fond of me!" she wailed.

The battle was lost. "If you don't hush, I'm going to spank you!" he snapped.

Meg gulped down a mouthful of beans, then said, "I'm sorry you got angry with me, Daddy."

"I'm sorry I had to," he said still glowering.

"But Daddy?" she said.

"What?"

"Now I need a smile."

U.S. Public Would Not Permit A Postal Strike

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — The U.S. public, by a vote of 58 to 37 percent, believes that strikes by postal workers should not be permitted, Among members of labor union families, the vote is evenly divided, with 50 percent in favor of the right of postal workers to strike and 49 percent opposed.

The nation in recent months has been gripped by strikes by municipal workers across the nation. The threat of a postal strike was narrowly averted last week after an agreement was made by the U.S. Postal Service to reopen negotiations with unions representing more than half a million postal workers.

The U.S. public — plagued by inflation and confronting a growing militancy on the part of public employees — is taking an increasingly "hard line" on strikes by workers in this category.

The percentage who say policemen should not be permitted to strike has grown from 52 percent in 1975 to 61 percent in February to 64 percent in the latest survey. The same three surveys show opposition to strikes by firemen having grown from 55 percent to 62 percent to 66 percent today.

Those who believe sanitation workers should not be permitted to strike have increased from 46 percent in 1975 to 53 percent in the latest survey.

In terms of attitudes toward strikes by teachers, 48 percent in 1975 said teachers should not be allowed to strike, compared to 51 percent in both the February and latest surveys.

As might be expected, persons in labor union households are more sympathetic to strikes by public employees. Yet while leaning in favor of the right of teachers and sanitation workers to strike — and evenly divided in the case of postal workers — they side with non-union people when it comes to strikes by policemen and firemen.

PUBLIC SUPPORTS RIGHT TO JOIN UNIONS

While the American people have traditionally supported the right of public employees to join unions and organize for collective bargaining, they have just as consistently voted against their right to strike. The feeling has been that public employees should relinquish this right when they perform vital health and life-related roles in society.

Following are the questions asked in the survey, the national results and the findings by members of union families:

"Should postal workers be permitted to strike, or not?"

	Should	Should Not	No Opinion
NATIONAL	37%	58%	5%
Labor union families	50	49	1

"Should policemen be permitted to strike, or not?"

	Should	Should Not	No Opinion
NATIONAL	30%	64%	6%
Labor union families	43	50	7

"Should firemen be permitted to strike, or not?"

	Should	Should Not	No Opinion
NATIONAL	29%	66%	5%
Labor union families	43	51	6

"Should sanitation workers be permitted to strike, or not?"

	Should	Should Not	No Opinion
NATIONAL	40%	53%	7%
Labor union families	55	41	4

"Should teachers be permitted to strike, or not?"

	Should	Should Not	No Opinion
NATIONAL	44%	51%	5%
Labor union families	52	44	4

The latest results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,505 adults, 18 and older, taken in more than 300 scientifically selected localities across the nation Aug. 4-7.

Aussies Hope Nixon Stays Home

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Several newspapers gave front-page coverage today to former President Nixon's apparent decision to visit Australia even though Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser won't see him. One compared him to a conniving cartoon character and said it would be better if he stayed home.

"Invited Or Not, Nixon Is Coming," headlined the Sydney Morning Herald.

"I'll Still Visit You, Says Nixon," said the Melbourne Herald.

The Australian government turned down Nixon's request to meet with Fraser in late September or October because of other commitments but the former president's chief aide, Col. Jack Brennan, said Nixon was coming anyway on a private visit.

Outbreaks In Iranian Cities

TEHRAN, IRAN (AP) — Moslem youths battled police in 15 Iranian cities overnight in a new outbreak of anti-government protests that left 11 persons dead, authorities said today.

Police in some cities reportedly sprayed gunfire and lobbed tear gas into crowds of stick-wielding, rock-throwing demonstrators, protesting government reforms of strict Islamic laws. Authorities said 116 persons were arrested.

Firefighters Back On Duty

ANDERSON, Ind. (AP) — Firefighters went back on duty Saturday pending the final settlement of contract terms with officials of Indiana's eighth largest city.

City representatives and firemen said terms of the agreement would be completed in further talks that have not yet been scheduled. Both sides reached tentative agreement Thursday night and the 135 striking firefighters returned to their jobs early Friday.

Policemen in this city of 71,000 people ratified a new contract on Friday, accepting an agreement providing for an 8.5 percent salary increase, ending a work slowdown. The policemen had sought a 12 percent increase.

Pinch Hit In Cleaning Zoo

CINCINNATI (AP) — Public relations specialists, secretaries and supervisors are manning the brooms and buckets at the nation's second oldest zoo because of a strike by 47 keepers and gardeners.

"This isn't something I planned to do when I was in journalism school," Janet Ross of the public relations office said Friday at the Cincinnati zoo.

She said after a day of cleaning bird exhibits and feeding fish and the seals that she turned down a seafood dinner.

"Nobody who is not familiar with animals is going to be allowed near them," said public relations directer Pepper Wilson. He said many citizens had volunteered to help during the strike.

Asks Mondale To Run Government

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, who will go into seclusion at the crucial Middle East summit, is asking Vice President Walter Mondale to run the government next week and fight the administration's key legislative battles.

Carter "wishes for the vice president in essence to assume responsibility for virtually all of the other activities of government," White House press secretary Jody Powell said on Friday.

He said Carter wants to concentrate on the summit meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat. Officials say the talks, which begin Tuesday at the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., could last 10 days or longer.

Helms In Satisfactory Condition

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A spokesman at Rex Hospital here said Sen. Jesse Helms, R.N.C., was in satisfactory condition early today and resting comfortably after undergoing surgery Friday for a back ailment.

The spokesman said Helms would probably be released in a week.

Surgeons said the senator came through surgery to repair a ruptured disc in his spinal column successfully. The operation took about an hour and "went fine," they said.

Helms' physician, Dr. LeRoy Allen, said Friday he should be back in Washington in two or three weeks. After a week's stay in the hospital, he will probably require another two weeks of rest.

May Seek $100,000 Bail

MAYVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — North Carolina authorities will probably ask that bail of $100,000 each be set for three New York men charged in connection with the dumping of PCBs in North Carolina.

And if the men do not waive extradition, North Carolina Gov. Jim Hunt has said he will sign extradition papers immediately.

The three, Robert J. Burns, 49, president of Transformer Sales Co. of Allegany and his sons, Randall J. Burns, 20, and Timothy P. Burns, 23, were arrested Thursday on warrants drawn from three separate indictments handed down Wednesday in Halifax County, N.C.

They were charged with dumping the PCB oil along several miles of roadside in Halifax County. PCB spills have been found along 270 miles of roadway in the state.

New Show At The Art Center

Like its predecessor joint show at the Greenville Art Center, the current exhibit by Craig Wallace and Terri Holtzclaw possesses some highly interesting contrasts.

In the case of the recent Fred and Annette Brooks show, the basic contrasts were in ornate and simple treatments of related type materials.

In the Wallace-Holtzclaw show (which opened Friday and will remain on view through Sept. 13), there is a pleasing interplay between Holtzclaw's bright, lightweight textiles and Wallace's weightier textures and more somber colors in his thesis show of Raku style ceramics and stoneware.

A couple of Holtzclaw's large textile pieces, sumptously patterned in repeated designs, seem ready to float from their anchorage points. One-of-kind "wearables" — robes, blouses, shirts, are as brilliantly colored as the wings of a tropical butterfly. Some are quilted and meticously stitched, others are unlined. One wall hanging is patterned in playful splashes of color reminiscent of a Klee painting.

For her textiles, Holtzclaw uses several techniques: silk screening, discharge, and direct applications. For some pieces she has used a single technique, in others, a combination.

The nearly two dozen sculpted ceramics shown by Wallace include a few utilitarian pieces, mostly vases. Most are stand alone sculptures — masculine in their sturdiness of design, yet graceful. Many of the pieces call to mind Oriental architecture — pagodas, tombstones, stone lanterns.

Wallace employs both glazed and unglazed areas in the same piece, which enhances the impression that these pieces could have been dually created by nature and man. Earth tans and browns, smokey grays and blacks are the dominant colors in unfired "areas; with deep blues and turquoises in the glazed areas.

Wallace says he likes the spontaneity possible in the Raku pieces, and that they represent a form of modular sculpture.

Ms. Holtzclaw, daughter of a professional military man, was born in the Panama Canal Zone. She has earned the B.F.A. degree in painting from E.C.U., and is majoring in textiles for her M.F.A. degree.

Wallace is a North Carolina native from Asheboro, a major in ceramics for his B.F.A. and M.F.A. degrees.

Both artists have exhibited previously in group shows at the Greenville Art Center and on campus, and each has also shown in various North Carolina shows. They are graduate students of the School of Art, E.C.U.

This is a fine show, ideally suited to the proportions of the South Gallery at the center where it is displayed.

Reynolds Industries Announces N.C. Photographic Competition

WINSTON-SALEM — R. J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., has announced plans to sponsor a state photography competition to be held in October.

The North Carolina Photography Competition is an outgrowth of the North Carolina Artists Competition, which the corporation held last year, to purchase paintings, drawings, sculpture and other works of art.

Photographers (amateur and professional alike) may submit a maximum of three works to one of five museums or galleries designated to receive entries for the competition. The five and dates submissions will be taken at each are:

— The Asheville Art Museum, Oct. 4-16.

— The Greenville Art Center, Oct. 802 Evans Street, Oct. 16-23. Hours are 9 to 5 daily Monday-Friday, and 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturday. Tel. 758-1946.

— The Mint Museum, Charlotte, Oct. 10-18.

— Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art (SECCA), Winston-Salem, Oct. 9-16; and — The William Hayes Ackland Memorial Art Center, Chapel Hill, Oct. 2-16.

Photographers must currently reside in North Carolina in order to enter the competition. An individual can turn in entries at any one of the above five collecting points — but cannot submit entries at more than one point.

Specifications applicable to entries are:

— Still photographs only, color or black and white. Entries can be in the form of a single photograph, or can be collages of photographs, photo sculpture, or any combination so long as the photographic factor is the predominant one.

— All entries must be rigidly backed and matted. No frames will be accepted.

— No slides or transparencies will be accepted.

— All works are to be priced by the participant for sale.

— All entries must be packaged in or accompanied by a sturdy, reusable, protective container. If entries are submitted by mail, they shall be accompanied by sufficient return postage to cover return mailing costs. Return addresses must be clearly marked on the back of all entries.

— R. J. Reynolds Industries shall have the exclusive rights to use any or all the works selected for purchase in the competition — in public exhibitions, in company publications, and in promoting RJR or the collection.

— Participant agrees that such use by RJR will not conflict with any rights of the participant or third parties regarding the entry. (In the event of an entry or entries depicting a recognizable person, the person submitting the entry will need to have a signed release from the person depicted authorizing the use of the photograph in the competition and under the terms of the specifications).

— There is no entry fee.

— Submission of work shall constitute agreement to comply ith all conditions states. Three entry cards are required for each piece of work submitted.

Entry cards will be available at the Greenville Art Center and additional copies can be had by writing to: Ms. L. D. Triplette, Art Program Coordinator, R. J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., Winston-Salem, N. C., 27102.

Three jurors, all well-known figures in photography, have been named to select works for purchase and to award prizes. They are: James Alinder, Executive Director, Friends of Photography, Carmel, California; Robert Doherty, Director, Eastman International Museum of Photography, Rochester, New York; and John Szarkowsky, Director of Photography, Museum of Modern Art, New York City.

After all purchases have been completed for the competition at the price stated by the photographer, the jury will select three works to receive first, second and third place prizes of $1,500, $1,000, and $500, respectively.

This competition is the second step in a decision by R. J. Reynolds to form a broad collection of art from North Carolina. The decision, officials feel, is appropriate for three reasons — the company has a long history and tradition in the state — the visual arts in North Carolina are of such high quality that the company can be assured of acquiring superior works of art within the state — and R. J. Reynolds sees a collection of art (including photographs) as a good vehicle to use in promoting North Carolina's cultural resources.

Second Production Of Eason Directed Play

"KAT," Todd Sullivan's play which David Eason directed for a Washington, N.C. production in early August, is now scheduled to be presented by Eason under the auspices of the Theater Guild of Galax, Virginia.

David Eason

"KAT" will play in Galax on two dates, Wednesday and Thursday, September 6 and 7.

Constance Laynne Hilliard, who starred in the one-woman, one-act play in Washington, will again be on stage in the Galax production. She is a graduate of the high-school program of the N.C. School of the Arts.

Eason, who graduated earlier this year from East Carolina University with a B.F.A. in drama, has previously directed scenes from "Hamlet," a three-act melodrama, "Night Must Fall," and a play in the style of Commedia D'el Arts, "The Dentist." As an actor, he has had roles in several plays, including "The Tragedy of King Richard II," "Salvation," and "Skin of our Teeth."

Persons interested in tickets for one of the two Galax performances can call 758-6193.

A Question Of Finances

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Actress Elizabeth Taylor wants to sell the 69.42-carat diamond that her fifth husband, actor Richard Burton, once gave her, but not if it heightens speculation that she and her latest partner, John Warner, are in financial difficulty.

That view comes from Anthony Seymour of Charles Anthony Diamond Investments of Salt Lake City, who was commissioned earlier this year to find a buyer for the diamond, valued at more than $4 million.

"The stone was withdrawn from the market when speculation began that they were in financial trouble," Seymour said of Miss Taylor and Warner, a former Navy secretary who is seeking a U.S. Senate seat from Virginia. "Nothing could be further from the truth. She just couldn't foresee a time when she'd be wearing the diamond again."

ECU Faculty Pianist To Compete Sept. 11

NEW YORK — When newly assigned East Carolina University School of Music faculty member and pianist Donna Coleman goes to Washington on Monday, September 11, she will be competing against 11 other aspirants in the Kennedy Center/Rockefeller Foundation International Competition.

The 12 semi-finalists, selected earlier for this first international competition, will be performing — some on Monday, others on Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 13 and 14.

Musicians and composers from four countries will be on hand to judge performances. The judges are: pianists William Masselos, Beveridge Webster, Robert Black and composer Ulysses Kay, all from the United States; pianist John Ogdon, Great Britain; composer/pianist Rodion Shchedrin, USSR; and Toru Takemitsu, a composer from Japan.

From the 12, three will be selected on Sept. 14 for the finals. Each of these three will be give a one and one-half hour recital in the Concert Hall on Sept. 16 and 17.

On Sept. 17, three winners will be announced. The first place winner will receive $10,000; second place, $5,000; and third place, $3,000. Contestants not among the finalists will each receive an award of $1,500.

Ms. Coleman is one of only two female pianists selected as one of the dozen semi-finalists for the competition. The other is Christina Petrowska.

The ten male pianists to be competing are: Stephen Drury, Alan Feinberg, Adam Fellegi, Bradford Gowen, Aleck Karis, Henry Martin, Peter Lawson, Robert Weirich, Robert Taub, and Jack Winerock.

Inventor Hampered By Secrecy Order

BY EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Carl Nicolai of Seattle listened to his citizens band radio one day, he wondered if he could develop an inexpensive way to keep others from eavesdropping on CB transmissions and maybe even on telephone conversations.

With the help of three friends, Nicolai did develop such a device. But now the four inventors are squared off against the most secret government intelligence agency over whether the device poses a threat to national security.

The U.S. Patent Office has issued a secrecy order against Nicolai and the others, which means they can't talk about the invention in any detail whatever without risking a jail term.

The four are fighting the order.

In the meantime, they are caught in a financial squeeze, because until the legal questions are answered, no one can manufacture the device they spent thousands of hours and thousands of dollars to develop.

"They're ruining us," Nicolai said.

The secrecy order, issued at the request of the supersecret National Security Agency, is of the type usually used to protect inventions developed under government contract or by government personnel from foreign intelligence agencies.

But that is not the case for this invention.

"I feel very strange about the law. It is extremely strange for it to be a crime for inventing something...this is totally privately funded — that means you lose your freedom of speech," said Nicolai in a telephone interview.

As is its practice, the NSA, the little-known agency charged with codes, code-breaking and eavesdropping on foreign governments, had no comment.

The sketchy information available suggests the device apparently uses a new technique to scramble or encode voice communications, so that an eavesdropper would hear nothing but garble. The intended recipient of the message, however, would have one of the devices which would make the voice intelligible.

The device would cost less than $100 and would work easily with currently available radios. And it could be adapted to work with telephone conversations, the inventors say.

Voice scramblers now available are quite expensive and have not been adapted for uses such as CB radio.

Last March, six months after their patent application was filed, the four inventors received the secrecy order. "Your application ... has been found to contain subject matter, the unauthorized disclosure of which might be detrimental to national security," the Patent Office wrote.

The inventors disagree with the NSA finding. "I cannot imagine any legitimate threat to national security from our devices," said one of them, William Raike of Monterey, Calif., in a telephone interview. "In fact, it was designed so as to not threaten national security."

Raike and Nicolai, Carl Quale and David Miller, all of the Seattle area, "specifically invented this for non-military, non-government applications...it's for individuals, for private use," Nicolai said.

The reasons for the NSA's action are not known, but Nicolai has an idea.

"It appears a part of a general plan by the NSA to limit the privacy of the American people. They've been bugging people's telephones for years and now someone comes along with a device that makes this a little harder to do, and they oppose it under the guise of national security."

The Art Of Look-Alikes

By CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Plastic surgery meant togetherness and mutual understanding for young lovers Erin Rhyne and Jesse Bolt.

Ms. Rhyne was getting tired of the way the girls would shower attention on her man Jesse, who was touring as an Elvis Presley imitator. He said she didn't understand.

But now they're in it together. Both their faces were reshaped to be likenesses of the late King of Rock 'n' Roll himself.

Along with three fellow performers who also faced the scalpel to heighten resemblances to dead rock stars, Bolt and Ms. Rhyne revealed their new looks Friday to a national television audience.

Later Friday, the five played the first concert in what promoter Danny O'Day hopes will be a profitable tour of the United States and Europe. But the concert was delayed about an hour because of technical problems and because only a handful of fans had arrived by showtime.

O'Day paid for the surgery — he refuses to say how much — and says he has sunk nearly $1 million into the project so far.

Duke O'Connell, 30, has been recast as Jim Morrison, lead singer of The Doors, who died in 1971. A couple of stitches below the lip were was all that needed for Marc Hazebrouck, 28, who said he had often been told he looked like Jim Croce, a singer who died in 1973.

The most ambitious surgical project was transforming Mona Caywood Moore, 27, into Janis Joplin, the throaty songstress who died in 1970. More work is planned on her nose and cheekbones, but it seems likely she will have to rely on her dress and voice.

"She was so close vocally I couldn't refuse her," O'Day said. "I'll give you a copy of the before picture. She looked just like David Bowie."

In makeup, Bolt already resembled Presley. All he needed was a stitch above the upper lip to give him a permanent Presley sneer.

O'Day recalled overhearing recurrent quarrels between Bolt and Ms. Rhyne about the response to the role he played. "He said, 'I wish you could stand in my shoes.' She said, 'I wish I could, too.' I said, "Excuse me ...has anybody got a scalpel?'"

The Lady Elvis is the least polished performer and the least enthusiastic about the new look.

"It's all right," she said. "I miss my hair."

Her once-flowing tresses have been clipped, blackened and greased to go along with a black leather outfit. She thinks her show will make Presley's brand of musical sexuality attractive to men as well as women.

"I'm really trying to give the men in the audience what Elvis gave the women, gave everyone really," she said. "I think it's something if Elvis were alive, he'd just have to come see."

Hurricane Hunters..

plane pointed at Ella's eye. Soon, another band of heavy weather approached.

"Hey Eddie," Turner called through the intercom to a technician preparing another dropwindesonde. "They say reload the system, but if that means you're gonna get up and wander around — don't do it.

Almost immediately, the plane was whipped around again and pelted by rain and ice. Moments later, we dipped sharply, were brought back up again and then entered the deceptive calmn of the eye.

Mountains of ferocious clouds reaching 40,000 feet above sea level surrounded us. But the air was calm. And we could see the

The sunshine, reflected in every direction by white clouds, was almost blinding. Even the otherwise totally disciplined crew members whistled softly at the scene, then pulled out their personal cameras.

But two minutes later, we were back in the "eyewall," the area around the eye and the portion of a hurricane that usually is the most destructive. Ten minutes more, and the plane was out of the storm.

"Not a very big-across glob of weather it is?" asked Turner.

"No, it's a very small storm," responded Dr. Robert Sheets, the flight's commanding scientist from the National Hurricane Center. "But that eye is mighty tight."

Small, well-formed eyes often are associated with unusually ferocious eyewalls. Later, Sheets would call Ella "a classic hurricane — small, but vicious."

The rest of the mission was spent repeating the tests from different angles and points of attack. Each time we penetrated the eye, we paid the price with turbulence from the eyewall. But overall, the flight wasn't exceedingly rough. Turner said that was due to the relatively high altitude of the flight — 20,000 feet.

Sheets and his technicians were particularly interested in rainfall and wind speed, since the storm was approaching populated areas.

"It's a small, concentrated storm, with the most destructive winds appearing about 50 miles on all sides of the center," he said. "We measured winds of about 115 miles an hour at our altitude, which means they're probably about 130 m.p.h. on the surface. Rainfall appears moderate."

That information was crucial as forecasters decided which — if any — areas to include in a hurricane warning.

"We need to know whether to warn people in a 300-mile area, 200-mile area or what," Sheets said. "The cost associated with the average 300-mile warning and evacuation is about $25 million."

When the plane finally landed, after nine hours in the air, Emmanuel — who had put in a 19-hour day — was still on duty.

Another crew was inside the hurricane, and NOAA-42 was due to return in seven hours.

Higher Failure Predicted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new school year may hold some unpleasant surprises for both students and their parents.

The National Education Association said Friday that teachers are probably going to fail more students this year. And the extra cost of remedial education could mean an additional drain on parents' pocketbooks.

"I know we've had more failures during the past year," said Robert Hicks, head of the Fairfax, Va. teachers' association. "I'm certain you'll see an even sharper rise this year."

"Teachers are very sensitive to the charge that they have been too easy," said Richard E. Maxwell, of Dennis, Mass., president of the Massachusetts Education Association.

He said that teachers don't enjoy promoting children who fail exams, but "often society, through school boards and administrators, has demanded it."

"It was argued that if we held children back, we might impair them emotionally. I just hope the public is ready for the consequences when a large number of pupils fail," he said.

While predicting increased failures, the NEA questioned whether the public is ready to shoulder the increased cost of special tutoring of students who fail.

Misplaced Dynamite

By VIVIAN VEGA
Associated Press Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A search that started when police mistakenly placed two sticks of dynamite in an car during a bomb training exercise ended when a 77-year-old man saw his parking ticket number flashed on television.

Richard L. McCartney of Maplewood, a retired telephone company worker, said he was watching a 10 p.m. television newscast when he learned he was the owner of the dynamiteladen car mistakenly released from a St. Louis airport parking lot.

The dynamite was recovered Friday night without incident.

"I had the ticket from the parking lot and they flashed it on the news tonight," McCartney said in an telephone interview. "I called the police, and three detectives came over from the airport.

"It scared the hell out of me. I still feel shook up about it." He added it would be "a couple of days, I guess," before he recovered from the shock.

Police attached the dynamite to McCartney's parked car during a training session with dogs which sniff out explosives. Officers had not expected a parking lot attendant to return the car to its owner with the explosives still attached, airport director Leonard L. Griggs Jr. said.

Records Not Public

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — Arrests made by state troopers in Craven, Pamlico and Carteret counties are not public record, according to a highway patrol sergeant who heads the patrol's operations in the area.

But the attorney for the North Carolina Press Association disagrees.

Sgt. J.L. Brinkley has refused to allow the news media or public to view records of arrests made by state troopers in the area. He also said he will not allow public view of logs kept of tests made on breathalyzer machines. He said names of defendants who take the tests to determine alcoholic content of the blood and the outcome of the tests are closed to the public.

William Lassiter, counsel for the North Carolina Press Association, said it is his opinion that the breathalyzer logs are public record under North Carolina law and should be available to the news media.

An assistant state attorney general assigned to the Highway agrees with Brinkley. Ike Avery said the agency considers breathalyzer records to be confidential and not subject to public view.

Arrest reports are also confidential, but the patrol will make available the names of persons arrested and the offenses involved, Avery said, if there is personnel in a district office to do that job.

Brinkley said neither he nor his staff had the time to prepare a list of defendants arrested by the patrol in his district.

Piano Workshop

James W. Bastien, composer and teacher, will head the Sunday, Sept. 10 workshop of piano teachers to be held in the School of Music, East Carolina University, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m.

Currently a member of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, Bastien was most recently an Associate Professor of Music at Loyola University, New Orleans, where he taught advanced university students as well as piano minors.

He has also been a member of the faculty of Notre Dame University, Tulane University, and was one of the youngest artists to ever serve on the faculty at Tanglewood.

In addition to his work in teaching, lecturing and composing, Bastien has performed as accompanist for Metropolitan singers John Alexander, Rosalind Elias and Richard Tucker. He has also performed professionally in solo recitals and in duo-piano concerts with his wife, Jane Smisor Bastien.

He and his wife are the authors of a 26-volume course for beginning piano students, "Bastien Piano Library:" and a six-volume course for adults who begin piano lessons, "Older Beginner Piano Library." He has also written a piano teaching textbook.

There is no registration fee for the workshop, and all piano teachers are invited to attend. The meeting is sponsored by the Greenville Piano Teachers Association in cooperation with the School of Music, East Carolina University.

Piano Group Formed

An organization representing local piano teachers in the Greenville area has been formed recently.

E. Gregory Nagode, an Assistant Professor of Piano at East Carolina University and spokesman for the newly formed group, states that the principal purposes for forming the group are: (1) sharing ideas and current trends in piano teaching; (2) promoting professional standards in piano teaching at the pre-college level; and (3) elevating the status of the private piano teacher in the community.

Activities initially planned by the group will include monthly meetings, workshop presentations, and recitals and festivals for local piano students.

The first workshop scheduled is for Sunday, Sept. 10 at ECU, with James Bastien conducting the workshop.

Any teachers in the local or surrounding areas interested in joining the teachers group or attending the workshop should contact Nagode at 758-5672.

Pirates Squeak Past Cats In Opener

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

What should have been a laugher in East Carolina's opening football game of the season turned into a nail-biter as the Pirates slipped past Western Carolina, 14-6, last night.

The game was the initial contest for the newly-expanded Ficklen Stadium, and attracted a record 31,251 crowd.

The Pirates frittered away six scoring chances in the first half, scoring only once and taking a 7-0 lead into the dressing room. The score came in the second quarter when Eddie Hicks went over from the four and Bill Lamm added the PAT kick.

Western came back in the second half after a fumble recovery to get its lone touchdown. That came on Mitchell Ray's one yard plunge. The snap on the PAT attempt was bad, and a pass attempt that followed failed, leaving the Pirates in a 7-6 lead.

They converted early in the final period as Leander Green hit Billy Ray Washington on a 60-yard touchdown pass that sewed it up for the Pirates. Lamm again added the extra point.

The Pirate defense did just about everything right, turning the ball over for the offense on eight occasions, recovering four fumbles and intercepting four passes. They held Western to just 47 yards rushing and 131 passing. Fifty-eight yards of that came on one play. Without that, Western would have had only 73 yards passing.

But while the defense did its job, the offense sputtered along like an old tin lizzie, coughing and wheezing. It coughed up the ball four times on fumbles, and gave Western several chances to score.

"We just weren't a polished football team tonight," Pat Dye moaned afterwards. "It was really frustrating. It looked like we were going to run it right out of the end zone but we didn't have the killer instinct."

Dye promised more hard work come Monday to try and get the Pirates going.

"We played like we didn't know each other. That's how the whole game went. It was a poor coaching job."

Dye did have praise for the defensive unit. "I've got to be proud of the way they played. We mixed defenses well, and they were never able to establish their passing game," Dye added.

From the opening moment, it looked like the Pirates were going to have a cake-walk. While the defense held Western deep in its own territory throughout the first half, the offense tried and tried to get the ball into the end zone.

Western didn't cross midfield until their second series of the second half, and got past their own 35 only once in the first half.

Tony Collins started things off with a 58-yard kickoff return that put the ball on the Western 42. But a delay of game penalty on third and one at the 21 cost the Bucs and they turned the ball over on downs.

The Pirates next series was the only one they ran that failed to offer a threat. After that, they moved from their own 38 inside the Western 45 before kicking away.

Then, Nate Wigfall recovered a Western fumble at the Catamount 24, setting up the first Pirate touchdown.

Collins picked up 11 yards on first down, then added four more to the nine. Green kept it around the right side of the line for four to the four, and on third down, Hicks smacked through the middle of the line for the score with 2:31 left in the period. Lamm added the PAT for a 7-0 lead.

Vern Davenport recovered a second Western fumble on the kickoff, giving the Pirates the ball on the Catamount 16. But after reaching the one, the Pirates were thrown for a loss on fourth and goal and turned it over.

Connors Edges Dupre

NEW YORK (AP) — Jimmy Connors survived his first real challenge in the U.S. Open tennis championships Saturday, as he struggled hard to get by little-known American Pat Dupre 7-5, 4-6, 6-3.

The rough match wasn't much of a birthday present for Connors, who turned 26 Saturday.

The third-round match was a close battle from the start, with Connors failing to break service until the final game. Then, for the first time in the tournament, Connors himself was broken in the third game of the second set.

Dupre did it again for 2-5, allowing the second seed just one point in the game. Connors broke back in the next game at 30, and held in the next. He warded off two set points in the 10th game but hit a backhand service return long to give Dupre the set.

They battled evenly through the seventh game of the final set, although Connors was obviously tiring and taking longer to serve. Dupre had a good chance of eliminating the man who has been in every Open final since 1974.

But Connors won the next game by just two points for the critical break. He then refused again to talk to newsmen.

He served out for the match, as Dupre, who hurt his left ankle during the third set, sent a forehand long.

It was a truly impressive performance by Dupre, a 23-year-old American who was once pegged a promising junior prospect before he gradually slipped from the picture. He began to rise again this year, reaching the final of a spring tournament in Tulsa, Okla., where he bowed to Eddie Dibbs.

Earlier, Guillermo Vilas and Vitas Gerulaitis survived their third dangerously close matches. Vlas, the defending champion, outlasted former champion Stan Smith 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 and Gerulaitis barely pulled out a 6-4, 3-6, 7-5 squeaker over Rhodesian Andy Pattison.

In night matches, the Wimbledon champions were to play. Top seed Bjorn Borg was to meet Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland, and No. 1 Martina Navratilova was to play Marie Pinterova of Egypt.

"For sure I was not glad to be there," a strained-looking Vilas said of the third set, made necessary by Smith's aggressiveness in the second. "He was hitting very good approaches. He was risking a lot, but he did it at the right points.

"I tried to overpower him, but he was all over the net."

Smith, who won the American championship in 1969 and 1971, as well as Wimbledon in 1972, had a friendly warning for the 26-year-old Vilas.

"He's going to have to play better to win the tournament," Smith said. "You can't stay back and expect to win on this court unless you are playing great."

Gerulaitis admitted there was a point when he thought he was a goner.

At 4-4 (in the final set, with Pattison breaking for the lead), it looked bleak. "I wasn't counting on a victory party at that point," the 24-year-old New Yorker said.

He had battled to deuce five times but couldn't save that game as he tried desperately to slow the Rhodesian's lightning advances to the net. Gerulaitis broke back in the next game, though, as Pattison, apparently riled by a foot fault call, overhit a forehand cross-court.

Gerulaitis took 6-5 at love, improving his shots down the lines. He broke in the final game by the slimmest margin as Pattison volleyed a forehand into the net.

Tom Kite plans approach from trees

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Tom Kite shot a 6-under par 65 over the En-Joie Golf Club course Saturday that put him three strokes ahead of his nearest challenger, Rod Curl, going into Sunday's third round of the $225,000 B.C. Open.

"I'm playing awfully well, but this tournament is far from a runaway. With two rounds to go, there is a lot of ground," said Kite after his Saturday performance left him 11 under par for the first 36 holes of the tournament.

"I'm not planning on losing. It's definitely going to be charging all the way," said Kite, a 28-year-old former NCAA champion from Texas.

Kite's honesty cost him a shot at the championship of last week's Hall of Fame Classic. He assessed a one-stroke penalty on himself for an infraction no one else saw. He lost the tournament by that one stroke.

Tom Purtzer had shared the first round lead with Kite. But Purtzer shot a 2-over-par 73 Saturday to fall eight strokes behind the leader.

Curl was threatening to make it a two-man tournament after he overcame a poor start of two bogies with two eagles and finished the day with a 7-under 64.

"If I make my putts tomorrow, I'd like to make this a two-man race between me and Kite," Curl said. "Three strokes is nothing in two days."

Curl managed to finish the second round 7 under par in spite of being 2 over after the first five holes. He said he was bothered by the willow trees along the 6,915-yard, par-71 course.

"I sure hate those willow trees. You might just as well put a billboard there. You can't go over, under or around them," the Californian said.

Curl had entered the second round trailing Kite by four strokes.

Danny Edwards of Edmond, Okla., was four strokes behind Kite in the competition for the $45,000 winner's share. Artie McNickle and Rex Caldwell were five strokes back.

Error Aids Cubs' Win

CHICAGO (AP) — Bob Watson and Dennis Walling each singled twice and drove in a run in a seven-run ninth-inning explosion that carried the the Houston Astros past the Chicago Cubs 8-5 Saturday.

A two-run triple by Bill Buckner and a sacrifice fly by Manny Trillo in the bottom of the eighth had given the Cubs a 5-1 lead.

But Houston erupted for seven hits off four pitchers, scored one run on a wild pitch and two on an error by Ivan DeJesus in the wild ninth inning.

Singles by Watson and Walling to open the inning chased Rick Reuschel and brought in Bruce Sutter. One run scored on a force play at second and pinch-hitter Jesus Alou singled to put runners at first and third with one out. Pinch-runner Jimmy Sexton stole second before Sutter's wild pitch made the score 5-3.

Rafael Landestoy then flied out. But Keith Drumright singled home Sexton and Terry Puhl's single brought in Willie Hernandez to pitch to Jose Cruz, who walked.

Lynn McGlothen replaced Hernandez and Enos Cabell lined a hard smash that eluded DeJesus and gave Houston a 65 lead. Watson and Walling then followed with their runscoring singles before Wilbur Howard grounded into a force play for the third out.

Joaquin Andujar, 5-4, was the winner in relief of Houston starter Murk Lemongello, who left after Buckner's eighth-inning triple. Joe Sambito pitched the ninth for his 10th save of the season. Sutter, 7-5, took the loss.

Raiders, Broncos Battle In NFL Headliner

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports writer

The NFL schedule-maker, obviously not one to build suspense, is sending the Oakland Raiders into Denver for a rematch of last season's AFC championship game, which the Broncos won 20-17. Craig Morton threw two touchdown passes to Haven Moses in the game while Ken Stabler connected with Dave Casper for a pile of Raider scores.

The difference was that Denver's other six points came on a Jon Keyworth TD plunge while the Raiders' other three came on a field goal by Errol Mann.

The Raiders, who had won Super Bowl XI, watched as Denver lost Super Bowl XII to Dallas, ending the AFC's five-year domination of the NFL title game.

The Cowboys host Baltimore on Monday night, with the Colts sending untested Mike Kirkland against Dallas' doomsday Defense in place of injured quarterback Bert Jones.

Sunday's other games are Miami at the New York Jets, Kansas City at Cincinnati, Green Bay at Detroit, Houston at Atlanta, San Francisco at Cleveland, Los Angeles at Philadelphia, Pittsburgh at Buffalo, Minnesota at New Orleans, Washington at New England, St.Louis at Chicago and San Diego at Seattle.

Tampa Bay opened the season Saturday night against the visiting New York Giants.

"Oakland's coming in here looking for what they've always had — that's the AFC championship," Broncos wide receiver Rick Upchurch said of Sunday's game in Denver's Mile High Stadium. "We've got it now — but we're going to have to fight like dogs to keep it.

"It's going to be a tough, hard-hitting, close game. The team that gets the big break or the big play will win it. Both teams are big-play teams and their momentum goes from there."

Kirkland of the Colts is only one reserve quarterback pressed into action by injuries or other developments. He's actually No.3 in Baltimore but both Jones and Mike Troup are hurting.

Don Strock will lead the Dolphins against the Jets in place of Bob Griese, who suffered a knee injury in Miami's exhibition victory over Tampa Bay. The last time Griese suffered a serious injury, in 1972, Earl Morrall took over and the Dolphins wound up winning all 17 of their games that year, including the Super Bowl.

Cincinnati will be starting John Reaves, a seven-year journeyman, in place of Ken Anderson, who broke a finger in his right hand last weekend. Green Bay, which had hoped to have Lynn Dickey back in action but had to settle for David Whitehurst in the exhibitions, may have to settle for Neil Graff now since Whitehurst has a mild shoulder separation.

The other youngsters are getting starts because of poor showings by veterans. June Jones III, a free-agent rookie from Portland State last year, replaces disappointing Steve Bartkowski for Atlanta. In 1977 Jones attempted one pass and completed it — for minus one yard.

Bartkowski was only demoted to No. 2, a fate a lot less severe than that which befell Jim Plunkett in San Francisco. He managed to complete just one pass in the entire exhibition season and was cut by the 49ers. So unknown Steve DeBerg, acquired as a free agent last year after being drafted and then cut by the Cowboys, gets the call. DeBerg was impressive in the pre-season and was elevated from third-string to starter.

The league has 10 new head coaches — Chuck Knox at Buffulo, Marv Levy at Kansas City and Sam Rutigliano in the AFC and O'Neill Armstrong at Chicago, Monte Clark at Detroit, Ray Malavasi at Los Angeles, Pete McCulley at San Francisco, Dick Nolan at New Ocleans, Jack Pardee at Washington and Bud Wipkinson at St. Louis in the NFC.

Knox was head coach at Los Angeles for five years, guiding the Rams to the NFC West title each time but never getting them into the Super Bowl. Clark was a one-year wonder in San Francisco, making the 49ers winners in 1976 before falling victim to Joe Thomas' housecleaning.

Nolan was head coach at San Francisco for eight years, three of them ending in divisional titles. Pardee coached the Bears into the playoffs last season before leaving to replace George Allen, his former head coach with the Redskins. Allen was hired by the Rams after the 1977 season, then was fired after two lacklustre pre-season games.

Among the changes which the NFL has undergone since last season is the expansion of the regular season from 14 to 16 games, the addition of two more wild-card playoff teams and another round of playoffs, the addition of a side judge, a seventh official on the field (to cut down on the mayhem perpetrated on tight ends and other receivers who wander into what used to be a blind spot in the short secondary), a loosening up of restrictions against offensive linemen trying to protect their quarterback, and a tightening up of the rules regarding downfield bumping by defenders against potential receivers, the last two tactics designed to open up the offense a bit more.

Henderson's Homer Provides Reds' Win

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Ken Henderson smacked a three-run pinch homer with two out in the top of the 12th inning to give Cincinnati a 6-3 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday, extending the Reds' winning streak to three games.

Henderson's homer, his third of the year, came off Cards' right-hander Mark Littell, 1-8, the fourth St. Louis hurler. Only two innings earlier, Littell had stymied a bases-loaded threat with none out.

Pedro Borbon, 7-2, the fourth of five Reds' pitchers, picked up the triumph with Doug Bair recording his 23rd save.

With one out in the 12th, Pete Rose walked and swiped second. After Rick Auerbach struck out, Ken Griffey was walked intentionally. Henderson followed by sending Littell's next delivery over the 386-foot mark in right-center field.

Before faltering, Littell had gotten Griffey to ground into a force out and fanned George Foster and Dan Driessen to preserve a 3-3 deadlock in the 10th.

Cincinnati grabbed a 3-0 lead in the third after Reds' starter Fred Norman drew a two-out walk from right-hander Pete Vuckovich. Rose followed with a double, scoring Norman when St. Louis' Jerry Morales bobbled the drive in right field. Joe Morgan followed with his 11th homer of the year.

The Cards scored twice in the sixth before right-hander Tom Hume bailed Norman out of a jam to preserve the 3-2 Reds' edge. Jerry Mumphery's pinch triple and a sacrifice fly by Mike Phillips produced the 3-3 stalemate in the eighth.

Twins Clip Indians As Goltz Hurls Win

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Dave Goltz and Mike Marshall combined to stop Cleveland on seven hits Saturday as Minnesota clipped the Indians 2-1.

Goltz, 11-9, went 7 2-3 innings and lost his bid for a shutout in the seventh on a sacrifice fly by pinch-hitter Larvell Blanks.

Marshall came on with two out in the top of the eighth after Goltz had walked Buddy Bell and allowed a single by Andre Thornton. Marshall got Bernie Carbo on a groundout and then retired the side in the ninth to earn his 18th save.

Minnesota took a 2-0 lead in the fourth after two were out. Rod Carew got an infield hit and stole second. After Cleveland starter Paul Reuschel walked Roy Smalley, Glenn Adams delivered a run-scoring single, scoring Carew and sending Smalley to third.

Smalley then scored when Reuschel, 2-2, balked.

Tanana Gets 14th

TORONTO (AP) — Frank Tanana tossed a four-hitter for his 17th victory and made a pair of first-inning runs stand up as the California Angels defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 2-0 Saturday.

Tanana, 17-9, retired the first seven Blue Jays before issuing a walk to Al Woods, the only left-hander in the Toronto order. The first hit off the Angels' southpaw came with one out in the fifth when Dave McKay lined a 2-0 pitch inside the bag at third.

Rick Cerone followed by lining the next pich to right for a single. However Woods and Luis Gomez both flied to center to end the inning. Tanana retired the next five batters before McKay singled up the middle with two out in the seventh.

Bucs Nip Braves

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Dave Parker's single to center scored Phil Garner from third base and lifted the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-3, 12-inning victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday.

The victory was the 18th in the past 21 games for the Pirates and their sixth straight triumph.

All the scoring prior to the 12th came on home runs. Willie Stargell opened the scoring for Pittsburgh in the first inning with a three-run blast, his 22nd of the season and 423rd of his career. In the fourth inning, Cito Gaston hit his first homer of the season, scoring Bob Horner, who had doubled, to cut the Pirates lead to 3-2.

In the seventh, Rowland Office, pinch hitting for Bruce Benedict, hit the first pitch over the right-field fence to tie the score 3-3.

Four times following that blast, Atlanta choked off Pittsburgh rallies with double plays, getting a total of six in the game to tie a National League record for twin killings by one team in an extra-inning game.

John Cundelaria started for Pittsburgh, but Grant Jackson, 7-3, the fourth pitcher to take the mound, was the winner.

All-ACC Picks Repeat On Poll Of Grid Writers

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — All the 13 players returning from last season's All-Atlantic Coast Conference football team have won places on this year's pre-season selection made by newsmen who recently toured the training camps.

Members of the Operation Football group picked seven Clemson stalwarts while choosing four each from Maryland, North Carolina and N.C. State, three each from Virginia and Wake Forest and one from Duke.

The 21 voters made five unanimous selections. They are guard Joe Bostic of Clemson and running backs Ted Brown of N.C. and Amos Lawrence of North Carolina on the offensive squad and lineman Jonathan Brooks of Clemson on the defense. Punter Russ Henderson of Virginia was the other unanimous choice.

The two squads are made up of 14 seniors, 10 juniors and two sophomores. The sophs are Lawrence and defensive lineman Bubba Green of N.C. State.

In addition to the five unanimous selections, all of whom earned All-Conference honors at the close of the 1977 campaign, the other all-league returnees named to the pre-season team are receiver Jerry Butler of Clemson, guard Mike Sazano of North Carolina, quarterback Steve Fuller of Clemson and running back James McDougald of Wake Forest on offense. On the defensive squad are lineman Ken Sheets of North Carolina, linebackers Randy Scott of Clemson and Buddy Curry of North Carolina and back Steve Ryan of Clemson.

Fuller, the 1977 ACC player of the year, got 16 votes for the quarterback post with Mike Dunn of Duke getting the remaining five. A year ago, Dunn earned the pre-season berth with 11 of 21 votes while Fuller got none.

Only one other running back, Steve Atkins of Maryland, received consideration for this year's team, receiving five votes. Bostic and Salzano had 41 of the 42 ballots for the offensive guard slots with another Maryland player, Glenn Chamberlain, getting the other vote.

Other pre-season choices are:

O's Hit Four Homers

BALTIMORE (AP) — Andres Mora hit a pair of home runs and Ken Singleton and Carlos Lopez hit one each to lead the Baltimore Orioles to a 9-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox Saturday in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader.

Mora blasted his seventh and eighth homers of the season into the left-field bleachers off Chicago starter Ken Kravec, 10-13. He hit a two-run blast in the second inning to tie the score 2-2 and then cracked a solo shot in the fourth.

Singleton's 19th homer of the season into the Orioles bullpen behind the left field fence also came off Kravec and gave the Orioles a 3-2 lead in the third inning. Lopez hit his fourth homer of the campaign, a tworun shot in the sixth, chasing Kravec.

A run-scoring single by Eddie Murray and a two-run double by Doug DeCinces, both off reliever Jim Willoughby, highlighted a five-run sixth inning.

Thad Bosley had given Chicago a 2-0 lead in the second inning with a two-run homer off Orioles starter Dennis Martinez, 12-10. Eric Soderholm hit his 17th home run of the season, a two-run blast to left, for the other two Chicago runs in the seventh inning.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Light-hitting catcher Barry Foote, who entered the game in the eighth, smashed a two-run homer in the 10th inning to lift the Philadelphia Phillies to a 3-1 victory over the San Francisco Giants Saturday.

Foote, batting .178, belted his first homer of the season following Mike Schmidt's leadoff double off losing reliever Gary Lavelle, 11-10.

Phils right-hander Larry Christenson, 11-12, went the distance to raise his career record to 5-1 against San Francisco with a six-hitter.

The Giants, on the verge of being shut out by Christenson, tied the game in the ninth on Larry Herndon's one-out bunt single and rookie John Tamargo's two-out triple off the right-field screen.

Philadelphia cracked a scoreless tie with a run in the fourth off Vida Blue.

Chicago Nips Houston...

produced the Cubs' first two runs. Houston closed the gap to 2-1 in the fourth on a single by Watson, a double by Walling and a wild pitch by Reuschel.

Rader's sacrifice fly followed a single by Bobby Murcer, who stole second and went to third on catcher Bruce Bochy's wild throw. Gross drove in Reuschel, who had doubled to lead off the third. Gross was later cut down trying to score on Buckner's fly to left field.

In the eighth, Gross doubled and was safe at third when pitcher Mark Lemongello tried to throw him out on Rodney Scott's sacrifice bunt. Buckner then tripled for his fifth hit and sixth RBI in two days before scoring on Trillo's fly.

The Astros blew several good scoring chances before their big inning, leaving runners at third base in the third, fourth, and fifth innings.

Garvey Breaks Tie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Garvey's sixth-inning sacrifice fly borke a 2-2 tie and gave Los Angeles a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets in the first game of a double-header Saturday.

Burt Hooton, 16-8, scattered six hits for his fifth straight victory and 11th in his last 13 decisions, pitching Los Angeles to its fifth win in a row. The Dodgers lead second-place San Francisco by three games in the National League West race.

Goldsboro Rally Nips Rose By 14-8

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

GOLDSBORO — Two fatal mistakes in the final two minutes of play allowed Goldsboro to come from behind and take a 14-8 victory over Rose High School Friday night as the two teams opened the 1978 football season.

The game was constantly marred with mistakes, and the penalty flags flew like yellow butterflies over a field of clover all night along. On the first seven plays of the game alone, four major penalties were called.

Rose, counting just the penalties against the Rampants, ended up with minus net yardage. Rose rushed for 70 yards, passed for 50 more for 120 upfield. They were pushed back 128, however, in penalty yardage.

Goldsboro fared only slightly better, rushing for 53 yards, but passing for 124. They incurred 127 yards in penalties.

Most of Goldsboro's passing yardage came from two completions, both for touchdowns, and it was those two plays that made the difference.

Both times, on long pass patterns, the Cougar receivers got behind the Rose defense, and pulled in the ball as they passed the goal line.

The first score, in the second period, came when quarterback Michael Whisenhunt, son of Cougar coach Gerald Whisenhunt, hit Garry Gardner on a 28-yard bomb.

The other, and deciding one came on a 42-yard pass from Whisenhunt to Joe Strouse. The final score came with just 1:06 left in the game.

Rose had taken the lead in the third period when Todd Tyson scored from the three, and then had pushed in on the two-point conversion for an 8-7 lead.

"We just can't play and opening ball game and make this many mistakes and expect to win," a highly disgusted Rose coach Dave Bumgarner said. "We were the better team out on this field tonight. But we made the mistakes that killed us. We just can't play like this and expect to win."

Rose seemingly had the game in hand as the clock neared the two minute mark in the final period when Maurice Dixon snapped off a Mark Shank pass at the Cougar 20 and return.ed it to the Goldsboro 43. Then, after Rose had backed the Cougars up to second and 24 at the 29, a screen pass netted 19 yards and enabled them to pick up a fateful first down with 1:24 left in the game. On the next play, from the 42, Whisenhunt connected on his fateful pass to Strouse.

Rose, bothered by poor blocking in the first half, couldn't get any drives off, crossing midfield only twice. The first time came when a penalty gave them a first down at the 45 of Goldsboro early in the game, but another penalty, this one on Rose, pushed them back across midfield and stalled the drive.drive.

Goldsboro, on its first series, pushed to the Rose 46 before a holding penalty pushed them back and stalled their drive.

But the Cougars got the ball back late in the period and started their first scoring drive. It started from their own 43 after a Rose punt. After two rushing plays got nine yards, Rose was hit for face-masking, giving Goldsboro a first down at the Rampant 33. William Davis was tossed for a six-yard loss on the first play, but Whisenhunt hit Strouse for ten yards on the final play of the quarter.

He then passed to John Kornegay for an apparent touchdown, but a clip at the 13 moved the ball back to the 28, and from there, Whisenhunt caught Gardner behind the Rose secondary in the corner of the end zone for the first score. Eddie Sauls added the PAT for a 7-0 lead with 11:45 left in the half.

Neither team offered another threat until late in the half, when Rose, taking over on its own 22, drove the ball quickly to the Cougar 32 before a holding penalty pushed them back to midfield, and a fumble three plays later turned it over.

Rose got the ball back at the Cougar 35 on a fumble with just one second left, but their pass play fell short of the goal line.

Goldsboro got Rose into a hole early the second half, forcing a punt from the Rampant nine. But an offensive pass interference call helped Rose push Goldsboro back from the Rose 40 to theCougar 46 where Walter Krentz went back to punt.

Mike Coleman smashed through on the play to block the punt, and Rose recovered on the Cougar 14, setting up its own scoring drive.

After two plays lost a yard, Shank optioned to Reggie Selby for seven yards. Then, on fourth and four at the eight, Shank kept it right straight up the middle for a first down on the three. Tyson powered over right tackle on the next play for the score. Tyson then went the opposite way on the PAT for an 8-7 lead with 1:58 left in the third period.

Momentum seemed to swing to Rose with the score. Goldsboro failed to get anything going during the next 12 minutes, and Rose constantly stayed in Cougar territory, moving to the 40 on its first series, to the 14 on the second, where a Ted King field goal attempt of 32 yards was just wide, and then to the 23 with the clock running out.

But after a loss and a delay penalty, Rose went for a pass on second and 18 with just over two minutes to go, and Dixon snatched it off, returning it to the Cougar 43.

David Holley powered through to drop Davis for a nine-yard loss on first down, and Goldsboro was hit for a procedure penalty on the next play, giving them second Peterson put the ball back on the 48, and on fourth and three, Whisenhunt went to Gardner for eight yards and a first down at the Rose 42.

Then next play was the scoring one, and it was all over for the Rampants.

The victory was the 100th coaching victory for Whisenhunt at Goldsboro High School, and his sixth win in eight years over Rose. It also kept his streak of winning season openers alive.

Rose now opens its home season on Friday, playing host to New Bern High School.

Pirates Take Season Opener

Ruffin McNeill got it back on the first of four interceptions at the Cat 26. East Carolina drove to the nine this time before attempting a field goal, but it was blocked by Willie Wells, who darted in untouched on the right side.

Late in the half, Gerald Hall recovered a Western fumble on the 20, but again, the Pirates failed to move the ball and another Lamm field goal was blocked—again by Wells who came in untouched.

But one play later, Wayne Perry picked off another pass at the 12, and the Pirates had another chance. But two straight losses pushed the ball back to the 32, and a clip moved it back still further, forcing a punt with only seconds left in the half.

Western got its first threat early in the third quarter, moving from its own 22 on a 58-yard pass from Mike Pusey to Fred Meadows. On third and five from the 15, Pusey hit Gerald Harp for a first down at the seven, but two plays later John Morris fell on another Western fumble at the four.

Near the end of the quarter, East Carolina coughed up the ball at its own two when Collins, starting from the 18 was hit and the line of scrimmage and the ball squirted backwards to be recovered by Sid Cunningham at the two.

After a yard gain by Jeff Norman, Ray went around left end for the score. But the poor snap ended the Western conversion hopes and the Pirates held a 7-6 lead with 4:35 left in the third period.

The Bucs then drove down to the Western 36 before fumbling it away. After a Western kick, they got it back, and moved from their own 23 to a first down at the Pirate 45. A five yard loss set it back to the 40 and on the second play of the final quarter, Green found Washington on a post pattern beyond the Western secondary, and it was 60 yards to paydirt and the clincher. Lamm's kick made it 14-6 with 14:13 left.

Western got it back at the Pirate 41 on a fumble, and then after being forced to punt, another fumble gave it to the Cats on the Pirate 12. But Pusey was intercepted by Hall to end the final threat of the game.

Collins led the Pirate rushing with 84 yards, while Hicks finished with 59. Theodore Sutton, who didn't start the game, but came on after Collins suffered a sprained ankle, rushed for 41 yards on just six carries.

Green hit only six of 15 pass attempts, and got only nine net yards rushing.

A bright spot was the punting of Rodney Allen, who hit eight for a 42.7 yard average.

The Pirates start a three-game road trip next Saturday. They travel to Raleigh to meet N.C. State University, following that up on successive Saturdays by facing the University of North Carolina and Southwestern Louisiana before returning to Ficklen to face Texas-Arlington on September 30.

Eagles Get Win

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Defensive end James Hale scooped up a blocked punt and raced 10 yards for a touchdown and Randy Boyette booted a 41yard field goal as Southern Mississippi's Golden Eagles edged Richmond's Spiders 10-7 in a college football opener Saturday.

Stoney Parker, sniffing out a quick kick which Richmond earlier had pulled off successfully to pin the Golden Eagles deep in their own territory, raced in from his left tackle position to smother the punt with 5 minutes left in the third period.

Hale picked up the ball at the Richmond 10 and went in untouched. The Spiders had attempted the quick kick at their own 37.

Boyette had kicked his field goal with 10 seconds remaining in the first half to cut Southern Mississippi's deficit at intermission to 7-3.

Payton Signs

CHICAGO (AP) — Running back Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears, who had wanted to be the highest paid player in the National Football League, came to contract terms Saturday on the eve of the Bears' NFL opener.

A club spokesman said General Manager Jim Finks and Payton's Mississippi attorney, Bud Holmes, agreed by long distance telephone to a series of three, one-year contracts with no option year.

Terms were not disclosed.

A source said only that the agreed-upon salary fell somewhere between the estimated $390,000 the Bears initially offered for one year and the league high $733,000 which O.J. Simpson of San Francisco makes.

The club spokesman said it may be early next week before the agreement is formally signed.

Payton, who came to the Bears out of Jackson State in 1975, led the NFL in rushing last year. Last Nov. 20, he broke Simpson's single game rushing mark of 273 yards, by rambling for 275 yards against the Minnesota Vikings.

Roanoke Holds Off Ayden-Grifton

Airborne Charger

Ayden-Grifton lineman Tim Odham (90) takes to the air Friday night to avoid making a late hit after teammate Bernard Colley (70) sacks Roanoke quarterback Glenn Cargile (11). The Redskins manhandled the Chargers in the first half of the game to claim an 18-14 victory. (Reflector photo)

Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — Roanoke High School, with a game's experience, surprised a jittery Ayden-Grifton team in the first half Friday night and was able to hold off the Chargers after intermission for an 18-14 victory.

The game was the opening contest of the season for Ayden-Grifton, while Roanoke began its season last Friday night. The Chargers clearly showed their inexperience, especially in the first half when they fumbled the ball away four times, the final time setting up a Roanoke touchdown.

The Redskins, led by quarterback Glenn Cargile, who passed and optioned to perfection from the wishbone, moved the ball well in the first half, putting all 18 of their points on the scoreboard before halftime. The team rested in the third quarter and allowed Ayden-Grifton to make a game of it with two touchdowns, but came back strong in the final period to force a couple of key turnovers and put the game away.

"We did a hell of a good job," an overjoyed Nolan Respess said after the game. The Roanoke head coach was not pleased with his team's third-quarter lapse, however.

"They sat back and thought the defense was going to do the work," he commented. "I'm just thrilled to death to win over here.' This is a big morale-booster for us."

Ayden-Grifton coach Dixon Sauls said his team's turnovers were a big factor in the game and cited Roanoke's first-half play. "They had the momentum in the first half. They had played a ballgame and they took it to us.

"We had a chance to win the ballgame, despite ourselves, but mistakes and turnovers led to our downfall."

Turnovers came early in the game for both teams as both coughed up the ball on a fumble on initial possessions.

Roanoke's first touchdown came late in the first quarter after a short Ayden-Grifton punt gave the Redskins the ball near midfield. Cargile made a good run across the 50-yard line and then pitched at the last minute to Leondus Worsley, who carried for 14 yards to the Charger 25.

Worsley got the ball again on a pitch to the left side and picked up some good blocking for a 27-yard gain down to the eight. He finally carried the ball in from the five with 2:12 on the clock. A PAT kick attempt by Clay Roberson was blocked, leaving the 'Skins with a 6-0 lead.

Roanoke got the ball following a punt early in the second quarter and on the second play from scrimmage Carqile found a biq hole over center and took the ball 43 yards for another TD. He was through the line before the Charger linebackers could react and outmaneuvered a defensive back for the score. A conversion run failed.

Cargile intercepted a Charger pass after the kickoff and the Redskins moved to the Ayden-Grifton 11 before their drive stalled. A field goal attempt by Roberson was way off the mark, but the Chargers fumbled the ball away after taking over possession, giving the Redskins a first down at the Ayden-Grifton 35.

Three running plays moved the ball to the 20 and Cargile lobbed a pass to Anthony Latham on a post pattern for the score with 1:05 left in the half for an 18-0 Roanoke lead.

It was a Roanoke fumble that set up the Chargers' first touchdown midway through the third quarter. The Chargers had blocked a punt and recovered on the Redskin 31 and appeared to be moving in for the score, when they fumbled at the four.

Two plays later, Roanoke gave up the ball and Calvin Ellison took it in from the two. Sheldon McCarter kicked the conversion.

Hosea Coley intercepted a Cargile pass at the Charger 37 to set up the game's final touchdown. A 28-yard jaunt by Donnie Jackson moved the ball to the Roanoke 21 and Smith kept up the middle to the six. He capped the drive with two straight sneaks for the score. McCarter again kicked the PAT to make it 18-14.

The Chargers had the ball in Roanoke territory twice in the fourth quarter, but turned it over. The first time was on a fumble at the 16 and the second was on an interception at the 34.

Roanoke was able to run out the clock after the interception with the help of a 35-yard run on a fake kick by Latham.

Next week, Ayden-Grifton hosts Tarboro, while Roanoke entertains Belhaven.

North Pitt Rolls To Win

ENFIELD — North Pitt High School rolled to a 22-0 opening game victory over Enfield High School Friday night, setting two school marks in the process.

It was the first time North Pitt had recorded a shutout victory and it also marked the first time the Panthers have ever won their opening game.

And they did it all with apparent ease.

North Pitt churned out 191 yards in total offense, while holding Enfield to just 61 yards. Both teams were bothered by fumbles in their first game, however. North Pitt lost four of five miscues, while Enfield gave up five of seven loose balls.

North Pitt got its first touchdown in the opening period of the game. William Knight went over from five yards out, and the Panthers had a 6-0 lead.

They held that for the next two periods, not scoring again until the final quarter, when two more Panthers crossed the goal line.

Terry Moore scored to open the fourth quarter, going in from 17 yards out. He then ran over the two-point conversion. Tony Pittman added another score from a yard away, and Jerry Pitt got the two-pointer for the final 22-0 decision.

Enfield had a couple of threats in the game, moving inside the five yard line once only to be halted by the Panther Defense.

The Panthers travel to Southwest Edgecombe on Friday for their second game.

Patriots Nip Conley, 21-14

MOREHEAD CITY — Tony Hester scored on a 19-yard run with just over five minutes left in the ballgame Friday night to give West Carteret a 21-14 victory over D. H. Conley.

The loss was the second against no victories for the Vikings, who will host Washington next week.

Conley scored first in the game when Curtis Joyner, who put all of the Vikes' points on the scoreboard, broke loose on an 89-yard TD run. A PAT kick failed.

West Carteret took the lead with two touchdowns in the second period. Tony Hester and Tim Lee both capped scoring drives with one-yard plunges. Benny Davenport added the conversion kicks for a 14-6 Patriot lead.

The Vikings tied the score before halftime on a Joyner run for three yards. Joyner also ran in the extra points.

But in the final quarter, Hester again found the end zone to provide the Patriot victory.

Jamesville Tops Columbia

JAMESVILLE — Jamesville High School spotted Columbia an early touchdown, then came back to take a 12-6 victory Friday night.

The win was the first in two starts for the Bullets, who were tied in their initial outing last week. Columbia fell to 0-2.

The meeting for the two was the first Tobacco Belt Conference game for them. Jamesville is 1-0 and Columbia 0-2.

Columbia's only touchdown came in the opening period of the game. Lee Bowser scored on a 30-yard run. A PAT kick attempt failed, however, giving the visitors a 6-0 lead.

Jamesville came back before the quarter was over, however, to tie it up. Frankie Hardison scored on a 31-yard pass from Trent Ange, and when the PAT kick was missed, the two teams were tied at 6-6.

Ange broke away in the second quarter for a 30-yard touchdown run that ended the night's scoring. It gave the Bullets the 12-6 lead that they held the rest of the way.

Jamesville, now 1-0-1, travels to Chocowinity Friday night.

Washington Captures 22-0 Win Over Greene

SNOW HILL — Greene Central's football team, with only one starter back from last year's team, suffered a shutout loss in its opening game of the year Friday night, bowing to strong Washington, 22-0.

The Rams managed only 71 yards in total offense, as compared to 266 yards for the Pam Pack, rated as one of the favorites in the Northeastern Conference this year.

The Rams, however, got off a threat that nearly carried them into an early lead, as they drove down to the Pam Pack two yard line in the second period when the game was scoreless.

But one of four Ram fumbles ended that threat.

Washington then pushed over its first score, and moved to the victory. The first Washington score came on a 14 yard run by Jimmy Moore and allowed the Pack to take a 6-0 lead into intermission.

Washington came back with another touchdown in the third period. That came on a nine-yard pass from Lentz Stowe to Joe Ferguson. Carl Sayce kicked the PAT to run the score to 13-0.

Sayce came back with a 26-yard field goal in the fourth period of the game, running the lead to 16-0.

The final score was a six-yard touchdown run by William Boyd.

The Pam Pack had a couple of other scoring threats that fell by the wayside.

Greene Central, now 0-1, returns to action next Friday, playing host to Wilson Beddingfield.

Rudd Makes Up For Failure

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Ricky Rudd, the 21-year-old NASCAR Grand National Rookie of the Year, failed to qualify Thursday for the 29th annual Southern 500, but on Friday he more than made up for the previous day's failure.

The Chesapeake, Va., driver posted a speed of 152.896 mph Friday to lead the second day of qualifying for Darlington Raceway event.

"I guess being the fastest on the second day is some consolation," he remarked "At least we know we're fast enough to run with the leaders Monday."

Rudd's speed Friday was fourth best among the 24 drivers who already have won starting positions in Monday's $225,000 event.

"We were running the same speed Thursday but a wedge bolt broke just before we made our qualifying run and we couldn't find the problem," Rudd said.

Dale Earnhardt of Kannapolis, N.C., was second fastest Friday with a speed of 151.301 mph in his Ford. Earnhardt, the son of former driver Ralph Earnhardt, will take the 14th starting slot Monday.

Meanwhile, Cale Yarborough, of Timmonsville, S.C., announced Friday that he and his car owner, Junior Johnson, have entered a long-term sponsorship agreement with Busch Beer beginning next year.

Jaguars Claw Williamston

WILLIAMSTON — Farmville Central's defense got a strangle-hold on Williamston Friday night, holding the Tigers to just seven yards in the game for an 18-0 victory.

The Jaguars were never threatened in the shutout and quarterback Donald Freeman led the offensive attack with two TD passes to James Tyson. Farmville threw the ball for 155 yards.

Donald Reid got the first Jaguar touchdown, the only score of the first half, when he ran the ball in from nine yards out. The PAT kick failed.

Farmville didn't score again until the third quarter when Freeman found Tyson with a 75-yard bomb. A pass attempt for the PAT failed.

Tyson was the receipient of a three-yard Freeman scoring toss in the fourth quarter for the game's final touchdown.

The game was the first of the season for both teams. Next week, the Jaguars host Eastern Wayne, while Williamston will entertain Bertie.

Clark's Homer Keeps Giants Up Near Top

Jack Clark believes he can get San Francisco into the playoffs, but he also feels that "if the Giants want a guy to hit 30 or 40 homers for them, they'd better trade for him."

Clark, who has been providing much of the Giants' longball clout this season, cracked his 22nd homer of the season Friday night to give San Francisco a 4-3 victory over Philadelphia.

The victory kept the Giants within two games of the Los Angeles Dodgers, who lead the National League West, while the loss dropped the NL Eastleading Phillies to within 3½ games of second place Pittsburgh. The Dodgers beat the New York Mets 4-3 in 12 innings, and the Pirates swept a pair from Atlanta Friday night.

Gary Lavelle, 11-9, got the victory with two innings of scoreless relief in place of Giants starter Jim Barr. Lavelle has given up only one earned run in his last 10 appearances.

Elsewhere in the NL, Pittsburgh swept the Braves 8-3 and 3-0, Chicago outlasted Houston 14-11, Cincinnati downed St. Louis 5-2 and Montreal edged San Diego 3-2 in 12 innings.

Dodgers 4, Mets 3

Dusty Baker singled home Steve Garvey with the winning run with two out in the bottom of the 12th, making a winner of Los Angeles reliever Terry Forster, 5-4. The Dodgers had to come back from a 3-0 deficit to win the game. Koosman pitched 11 innings for the Mets, but the loss went to reliever Kevin Kobel, 2-5.

Pirates 8-3, Braves 3-0

The Pirates won the opener as Dave Parker, Willie Stargell and Ed Ott each drove in two runs. One of Stargell's RBI came on a first-inning homer, his 21st, off Braves starter Phil Niekro, 16-15. Pittsburgh starter Don Robinson, 11-5, picked up the victory.

Dale Berra smacked a tworun homer, his third of the season, and Bruce Kison, 5-5, and reliever Kent Tekulve combined for a three-hitter to complete the sweep

Cubs 14, Astros 11

Bill Buckner drove in four runs with his third home run of the season, a two-run shot that broke a 9-9 tie in the sixth, and two doubles as Chicago hung on to defeat Houston. The Cubs scored a run in each of the eight innings they played.

The victory moved the Cubs within 4½ games of the Phils.

Reds 5, Cards 2

Ken Griffey drove in a pair of runs and Joe Morgan scored twice, once on a disputed call that resulted in a protest, as Cincinnati bested St. Louis. Paul Moskau, 4-4, got the win with relief help from Doug Bair, who got his 22nd save. Cards starter John Denny, 11-9, was the loser.

Expos 3, Padres 2

Sam Mejias drove in the winning run with a single in the top of the 12th inning as Montreal snapped a five-game losing streak. Mejias' hit made a loser of Randy Jones, 11-13, who went the distance for San Diego. Expos pitcher Mike Garman, 3-5, got the win in relief of Ross Grimsley.

Warriors Get Choice

NEW YORK (AP) — You need players, not money, to compete in the National Basketball Association.

"You can't play money," Scotty Stirling, assistant to Golden State owner Franklin Mieuli, said in explaining why the Warriors will probably accept guard John Lucas and $100,000 from the Houston Rockets as compensation for the loss of high-scoring forward Rick Barry.

"Compensation is supposed to make a team whole, and we don't think draft choices and cash can make a team whole," Stirling said.

The Warriors have until 3 p.m., EDT, Tuesday to decide whether to accept Lucas and $100,000 or $350,000 and Houston's No. 1 draft choice in 1979.

The compensation was determined by NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien when the Warriors and Rockets failed to come to terms after Houston signed Barry. The 34-year-old Barry played out his option with Golden State last season and signed with the Rockets as a free agent June 17.

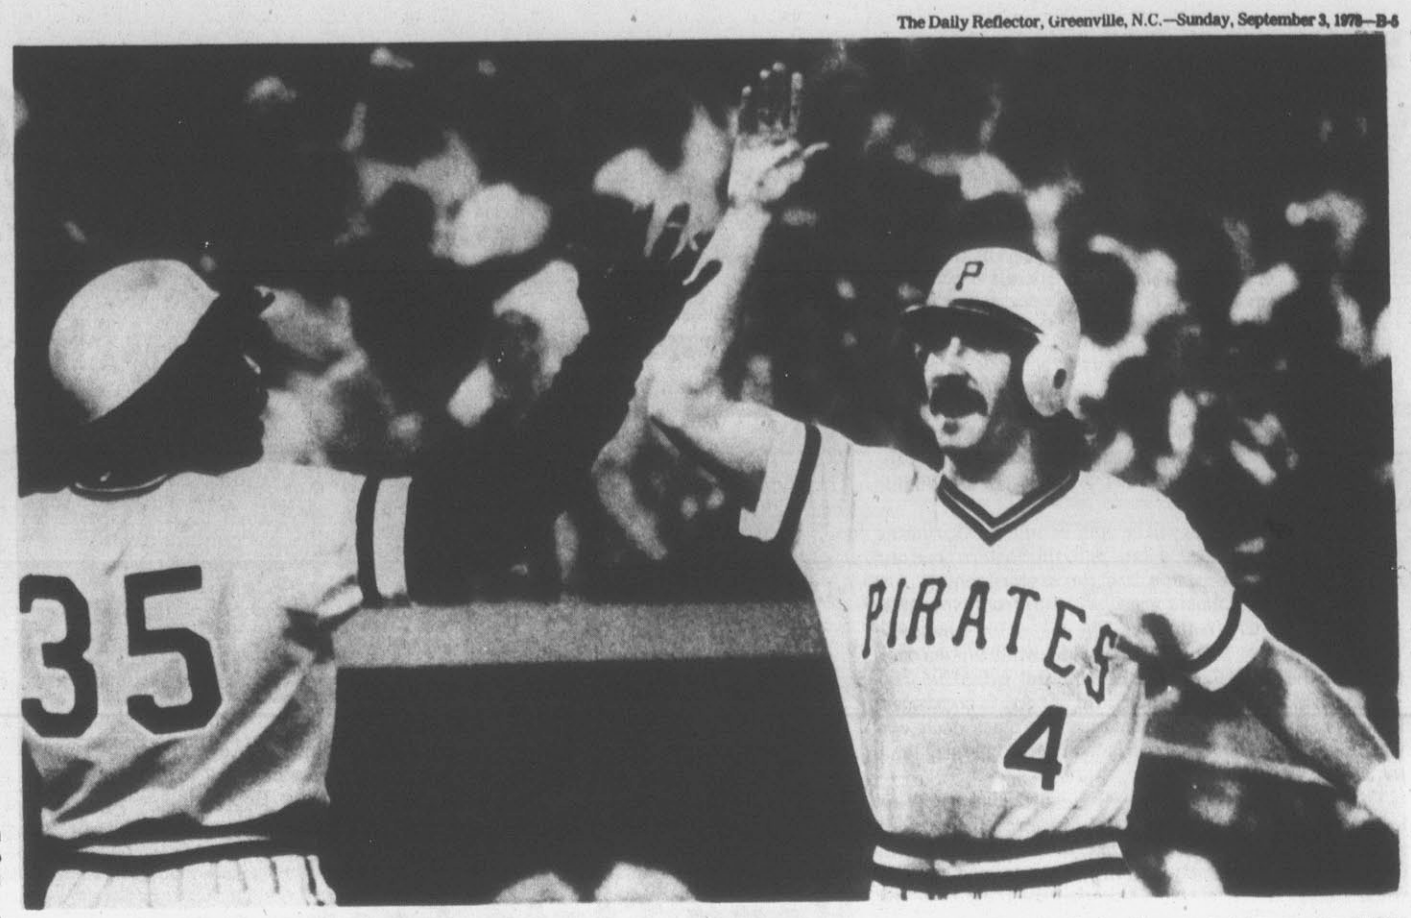
O'Brien said he felt that the compensation should consist of a veteran forward who could fill Barry's spot. But the commissioner noted that Rudy Tomjanovich, who would have been a likely candidate to be awarded to Golden State, "suffered such severe injuries this past season that it is impossible to predict with confidence the level of his future performance."

Tomjanovich was struck by Kermit Washington during a Dec. 9 game against the Los Angeles Lakers and sat out the remainder of the season after undergoing surgery.

"In my judgment, Lucas is the one player on the Houston roster who would be suitable as a significant part of the award," O'Brien said.

"Lucas is likely to be able to make an immediate and substantial contribution and, in contrast to Barry, Lucas, at age 24, can be expected to play for several more seasons."

O'Brien said he gave the Warriors a choice because Lucas is a 6-foot-3 guard and would not specifically fill the same role as Barry, a 6-7 forward.



Just Like His Daddy

Pirate third baseman Dale Berra, right, gets a handshake from teammate Manny Sanguillen as Berra crosses the plate with his third home run of the year and for his career. Berra, son of former Yankee great Yogi Berra, got the homer in the sixth inning of Friday night's game with the Atlanta Braves. Sanguillen scored from second. The Pirates beat the Braves twice, 8-3 and 3-0, to move within 3½ games of division leading Philadelphia. (AP Laserphoto)

Tar Heel Native Stewart Snaps Record For Consecutive Strikeouts With Seven

On September 22, 1954, lefthander Karl Spooner of the Brooklyn Dodgers — starting his first major league baseball game — struck out six consecutive batters.

That was some five weeks before Sammy Lee Stewart was born in Asheville, N.C., and just less than 24 years before the Baltimore Orioles righthander broke the record Spooner shared with Pete Richert of the 1962 Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I wouldn't know how to rate it, but it feels good," said Stewart, who forced his name into the record book with seven consecutive strikeouts Friday night on the way to a 9-3 victory over the Chicago White Sox in the second game of a twinighter.

"The most amazing thing was the velocity on his fastball, his poise, and the fact he threw strikes," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver after the youngster upstaged an opening-game 3-0 victory by Cy Young Award winner Jim Palmer.

Palmer, 17-12, pitched into the eighth inning of the opener before Don Stanhouse came on to record his 19th save of the season. But the ace righthander's evening wasn't over yet.

Palmer left the game with a stiff neck, then went into the clubhouse to go over the White Sox hitters with Stewart.

The prompting paid off. After some nervous mistakes in the first — an error and a wild pitch — Stewart struck out seven straight until Mike Squires flied out for the second out of the fourth.

Stewart, called up mere days ago from the International League, lasted 51-3 innings — racking up nine strikeouts and cruising to victory on home runs by Lee May and Eddie Murray.

In the other American League games, the Oakland A's topped the Boston Red Sox 5-1, the Seattle Mariners blanked the New York Yankees 3-0, the California Angels trimmed the Toronto Blue Jays 6-4, the Detroit Tigers tripped the Kansas City Royals 6-2, the Texas Rangers edged the Milwaukee Brewers 5-4 and the Cleveland Indians bested the Minnesota Twins 4-1.

They may also have a future star, even if Stewart couldn't match Spooner's debut. Spooner had 15 strikeouts in his first game, started just one other that season, and fanned 12 in that contest.

Both starts were complete-game shutout victories as Spooner spaced seven hits over his first 18 big-league innings.

A's 5, Red Sox 1

Rico Carty celebrated his 39th birthday with his 26th home run of the year and two singles, helping Oakland snap a nine-game losing streak with its victory over Boston.

In the sixth, Carty got lucky for the 26th time this season, snapping a 1-1 tie and helping the A's to only their second victory in 18 games. Oakland's Matt Keough, 8-11, and two relievers combined on a six-hitter.

Mariners 3, Yankees 0

Seattle's Paul Mitchell held New York to four hits and kept the second-place Yankees 6½ games behind the AL Eastleading Red Sox.

"I have always been a Yankee fan," admitted Mitchell. "I took a peek at the scoreboard and was sort of glad the Yankees won't lose ground because the Red Sox also lost. Mickey Mantle was my idol."

The loss snapped a sevengame New York winning streak and a six-game winning streak for Catfish Hunter, 9-5.

Angels 6, Blue Jays 4

Brian Downing's two-run single to right capped a threerun California eighth inning and helped pull the Angels within a game of the AL Westleading Royals.

A solo homer by Lyman Bostock and a two-run shot by Ron Jackson had pulled California even at 3-3 in the fourth. Toronto pulled ahead. Then Carney Lansford and Bostock singled to open the eighth-inning burst and Jackson's single tied it before Downing's hit.

Tigers 6, Royals 2

Steve Kemp blasted a threerun homer and Jack Billingham, 16-5, scattered nine hits to carry Detroit past Kansas City and Dennis Leonard, 15-16. Rusty Staub added a two-run double for the Tigers.

Rangers 5, Brewers 4

Mike Hargrove and Al Oliver had RBI doubles in the four-run third that helped Texas survive two home runs by Don Money. Toby Harrah added a ninth-inning homer for the Rangers, who needed it when Milwaukee staged a one-run rally in the bottom of the inning.

Faces Under New Helmets

Welcome to "New Faces of 1978," National Football League-style.

Actually the faces are, for the most part, old. They're just peering out from under new helmets.

Lydell Mitchell, for example, wore horseshoes on the sides of his head for six years, before a contract dispute turned ugly and the Baltimore Colts traded him to San Diego. So he'll have lightning bolts over each ear when the Chargers open their season in Seattle on Sunday.

Harold Jackson, who wore Rams horns for six years and Eagles' wings for four, wound up in New England this year when the Patriots' star wide receiver, Darryl Stingley, was seriously injured in an exhibition-game collision. Jackson is being counted on to keep the Pats' air game going Sunday against the visiting Washington Redskins.

O.J. Simpson, who had defenses buffaloed for nine years, will be displaying his talents for San Francisco when the 49ers open in Cleveland.

In Sunday's other games it's Green Bay at Detroit, Houston at Atlanta, Kansas City at Cincinnati, Los Angeles at Philadelphia, Miami at the New York Jets, Pittsburgh at Buffalo, Minnesota at New Orleans, St.Louis at Chicago and Oakland at Denver. On Monday night it's Baltimore at Dallas.

The New York Giants and Tampa Bay Buccaneers open the season tonight in Tampa Bay.

There are a lot of other new faces to focus on — rookie faces.

There's Earl Campbell, the Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Texas whom the Oilers drafted in hopes of finding another Tony Dorsett.

And there's Terry Miller, Simpson's successor as the brunt of the Bills' ground game; and Art Still, the defensive end Kansas City hopes will do something about all those yards and all those points the Chiefs gave up last year, and Ken MacAfee, the tight end who figures to open up the holes for Simpson and perhaps open up the 49ers' passing game as well.

And not all the rookies will be wearing helmets. Some of them will be wearing headphones and carrying clipboards.

There are six men making their NFL head coaching debuts — Marv Levy in Kansas City, Sam Rutigliano in Cleveland, Pete McCulley in San Francisco, Neill Armstrong in Chicago, Bud Wilkinson in St. Louis and Ray Malavasi in Los Angeles. In addition, four former head coaches start doing it all over again with new teams — Jack Pardee in Washington, Chuck Knox in Buffalo, Monte Clark in Detroit and Dick Nolan in New Orleans.

They'll be easy to spot. They'll be the guys asking themselves:

—It can't really be this easy, can it?

OR

—What have I done to deserve this?

Gulledge Is Champ

AYDEN — Glenn Gulledge has captured the Ayden Golf and Country Club's championship tournament for the second straight year.

Gulledge shot rounds of 73 and 70 for a 143 score to edge out Dallas Jackson. Jackson had rounds of 69-76 for 145.

Blanie Moye and Ralph Dudley tied for the championship of the third flight with 161 scores. Bobby Jones took the fourth flight with a 164, while Tom Allen was second at 172. Bob Bolonde won the fifth flight at 183, while Mac Harkrader, J.R. Pridgen and Dean Morris tied at 188 for second place.

The Ayden Golf and Country Club has scheduled a Super-Superball Tournament With One Lady for September 10.

Randy Taylor recently carded an eagle on the sixth hole, hitting a seven-iron shot into the cup.

NORTH CAROLINA WILL have two separate waterfowl zones, with U.S. Highway 1 as the dividing line, under the waterfowl season for 1978 set by the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

The waterfowl season will be split in both zones, runring from Nov. 22-25 and Dec. 6-Jan. 20 in the eastern zone and from Oct. 4-7 and Dec. 6-Jan. 20 in the western zone.

The season for Canada geese will run from Nov. 22-25 and Dec. 6-Jan. 20 in both zones. The season for snow geese will run from Nov. 13-Jan. 20 statewide, while the sea duck season in the eastern zone will be from Oct. 6-Jan. 20.

There will be a five-duck bag limit per day in both zones. However, this bag may include only one black duck, two wood ducs and one hooded merganser. The daily bag limit for sea ducks is seven.

There will be an exception: five wood ducks may be taken per day during the Oct. 4-7 season in the western zones. This allows hunters to take birds raised in North Carolina during the early part of the season and protects wood ducks which arrive from the north later in the season.

Hunters will also be able to take two scaup per day in addition to their regular bag limit of five birds in coastal waters designated as commercial fishing waters east of U. S. Highway 17. This bonus will not apply to Core Sound between Drum Inlet and Harkers Island, in the Pamlico River upstream and west of a line between Pungo River and Goose Creek, and in Currituck Sound north of U. S. Highway 158.

A bonus of two blue-winged teal per day in addition to the regular bag limit will also be allowed in the early seasons in both zones.

There will be no open season on canvasbacks, redheads or brant.

There will be a bag limit of two snow geese and two Canada geese per day.

License Fee Increase Proposed

The Wildlife Resources Commission has asked that a license fee increase proposal be brought before the next session of the state legislature to help alleviate some of the financial difficulties reported recently in this column.

"We regret having to recommend license fee increases, but if we're to maintain our present level of services, we've to have additional sources of revenue," according to Bob Gordon, Commission chairman.

The increases will have to be approved by the legislature before they can be put into effect.

DU Chapter For Martin County

A Ducks Unlimited chapter has been formed in Martin County and the organization held its first meeting recently.

At that meeting, Ike Southerland was elected chairman, Bruce Roebuck treasurer, Lacy Blanton and Joe Elkins publicity managers, William Lilley, Thomas Revels and Carroll Jones ticket managers, Jim Hardison and Warren Goff auction and prize managers, and Jim Critcher arrangement manager.

The first DU membership banquet will be held Thursday, Oct. 12 at Moratoc Park in Williamston. Tickets are $30, which includes a steak dinner and $20 tax-decuctible membership fee. Door prizes, a raffle and an auction will be included, plus an extra door prize drawing for those who sign up before Sept. 15.

Persons interested in becoming a charter member of the Martin County DU chapter should contact Ike Southerland at 792-7001 or 792-1521.

Penn State Escapes With 10-7 Victory

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Penn State coach Joe Paterno has learned that bringing a football team to this town is likely to be full of surprises.

State was rated a cinch to crush Coach Wayne Hardin and his Temple Owls in 1975 and 1976. But each time the Lions escaped with a one point triumph. And when State came back a third time Friday night, it took a 23-yard field goal with 10 seconds left to gain a 10-7 triumph.

"That was the best coaching job anybody has ever done against us," said Paterno. "Temple played a great football game."

As for Hardin, the Temple coach said, "I'm very proud of our kids, offensively, defensively and the kicking game. I thought our kids gave one helluva effort."

Hardin added, "I told Joe after the game that his kids are too good. I'm afraid we're just a little short (on talent)."

Hardin's Owls were a four touchdown underdog, with Penn State ranked third nationally in the pre-season poll.

But that apparently had no effect on Temple, whose players performed like equals before a crowd of 43,103 at Veterans Stadium.

It was 0-0 for a half, with a missed Temple field goal the only scoring threat. Penn State never got out of its own territory.

Temple's biggest offensive threat was a 170 pound junior punter, Casey Murphy, who averaged 48.2 yards on 11 kicks, burying Penn State inside their 20 most of the night.

Murphy was Hardin's strategy. Kick, kick, kick and hope the Lions would make a mistake that would allow Temple to score.

It worked until the late minutes of the third period. Murphy got off one of his few short punts of the night, a 36 yarder that gave Penn State the ball at its 43. Five plays later the Lions scored on sophomore Booker Moore's 26 yard slash off tackle. Matt Bahr kicked the point and it was 7-0 with 56 seconds left in the period.

The Owls came back to tie 77 in the final period on a 21-yard pass from quarterback Brian Broomell to running back Zach Dixon. They moved 52 yards on seven plays against State's heralded defense.

Then there was 10:48 left, and Temple reached the Penn State 30 when Mark McCants intercepted a pass and returned 13 yards.

Broomell was sacked for 14 yards with 5:44 to play, then Anthony Anderson fumbled and State's Lance Mehl recovered at the Penn State 42 with 4:49 to go.

Quarterback Chuck Fusina led a drive that picked up four first downs, the last at the Temple 11. Three running plays netted five yards. It was fourth and five and 12 seconds on the clock.

Paterno rushed in Bahr, the pro soccer star with one year of college football eligibility remaining, and the kicker calmly put a 23-yarder right between the uprights.

"We were lucky," said Paterno. "Temple defensed us well."

Sylvester Monroe rushed for 70 yards and two touchdowns on 14 carries Friday night to lead Dayton to a 35-0 victory over Liberty Baptist of Virginia. Fullback Brian Dorenkott added two other six-pointers as the Flyers recovered five Liberty Baptist fumbles and intercepted three passes.

Greenville Golf Notes

Two personal bests were among the highlights at Greenville Golf and Country Club last week. Graham Jefferson had a 77 for his best 18, while Mary White Taylor had a 36 on nine holes.

In upcoming events, 2 men's Turkey Event Captain's Choice will be held on Sept. 7. The 18-hole affair will begin at 4:30. On Sept. 10, a men's and women's Captain's Choice will be held with a shotgun start at 1 p.m. The men's Club Championship will be held on Oct. 28-29.

States Fight For New Industry, But 'Do It Nicely'

No Bloodshed, Though Hard Feelings Remain

By EDWARD CRAIG
UPI Business Writer

Another war is going on between the states these days but this one doesn't mean bloodshed — only hard feelings.

The spoils: Millions of dollars in business and thousands of jobs.

The battleground can be anywhere — a state governor's office, a corporate boardroom, a foreign city. The participants are the states themselves as they muscle one another in attempts to entice an industry to pull up stakes and move all or part of its operation elsewhere.

Asked point blank whether "dirty tricks" are a weapon in winning the battle, most state officials say no. But the glazed look, the facial expressions tell a different story.

That injury is inflicted is clear. Note the derisive tags given to some states' representatives: the "raiders" of Ohio and UTTH, THE "cavalry" of Kansas.

Almost to a man, state officials refuse to pinpoint others by name as slanderers — mudslinging is a two-edged sword.

Robert Goodman, Nevada State Economic Development Director, probably is as outspoken as any. He says he is "constantly" defending Nevada's image as a gambling state or answering "slurs" related to the fact prostitution is legal in some rural counties.

Others say "terrible bad things" about the Sagebrush State, he says. He leaves it at that.

There are subtle ways of "socking it" to another state.

Illinois is one of the few states that use helicopters to whisk company executives around the state in searching for relocation sites.

If Iowa is next on the list for visitors, Illinois gladly drops the executives off there — where state cars take over, a sharp contrast to helicopter travel.

Simple "one-upsmanship" is the way Dean Whittaker, a spokesman for the Illinois Department of Business and Economic Development, describes it.

Still, Frank Mangin, economic development program manager in Arizona, maintains that in the two decades he has been pleading his state's virtues, he has never run into "unfair competition" from another state. Arizona, he says, "is not attempting to pirate industry away from other states." It justs praises its "strategic position" in the southwest.

Most of the inquiries in response to Arizona's advertising of its virtues come from California.

"There is a perception, rightly or wrongly, that California is relatively inhospitable and that its regulative processes are complicated," Mangin says. "We benefit being the closest state to California."

Late in 1976 Dow Chemical Co. abandoned plans to build a $500 million petrochemical plant in northern California, citing "red tape" and bureaucratic bungling as reasons for its decision. Subsequently, California created an Office of Business Development, which was replaced earlier this year by a Department of Business and Economic Development.

Business received a big lift with approval by voters in June of Proposition 13, which is expected to cut taxes on commercial and residential property by nearly 60 percent.

Tax incentives are a major talking point but some states — such as Michigan — are powerless in the face of this approach.

John Haniewski, a spokesman for the Michigan Office of Economic Expansion, concedes the state was "disappointed" when Volkswagen decided on a plant in Pennsylvania rather than Michigan, location of the country's auto capital at Detroit and countless auto supply firms.

He notes that part of the Pennsylvania package included lending of state money to a private firm "and that is something which the Michigan constitution prohibits." Still, Michigan drew some measure of satisfaction from the Volkswagen experience when the German firm decided to locate its U.S. engineering and administrative headquarters in Michigan.

One of Illinois' biggest disappointments was losing a Ford Motor Co. transmission plant to Ohio because, according to a spokesman for the Illinois' Department of Business and Economic Development, his state did not have a tax incentive plan.

As a result, Illinois lawmakers passed such a program this year which exempts manufacturers' new machinery from the state's 4 percent sales tax after a six-year phase-in period.

Ross Fordyce, chairman of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission, says "tax gimmicks" are common tools used by states to attract industry.

"From an initial standpoint, it looks good," he says. "But after that moratorium, corporate taxes sometimes are higher."

James J. Dahmen, an executive with the Minnesota Department of Economic Development, points out that his state has a state loan program providing up to 20 percent of funding requirements for new and expanding industry at reasonable rates.

New York has found that its fairly high personal income tax rate has cost it business, particularly to adjoining states. Connecticut has no personal income tax. New Jersey has a low tax rate. As a result, the state legislature this year shaved the maximum state tax on personal income from 15 to 12 percent.

In Georgia, 18 cities and counties have passed a "free port referendum" exempting corporations from paying taxes on inventory to be distributed outside the state. CBS Records is building a $50 million plant at Carrollton which will employ 3,000. The "free port" consideration is believed to be the factor that influenced CBS' decision.

To encourage new business development in Wisconsin, machinery and equipment have been exempt from local property taxation since 1973.

Colorado has been offering tax credit for capital investments and in the 1960's it started a phasedown of the business inventory tax from 30 percent to 5 percent. State legislators recently approved a measure providing for corporate income tax credits based on new jobs for old and new companies.

Goals of the states vary where industrial expansion is concerned. Such states as Ohio and Texas, are vigorous in luring firms from other states. Others, such as Oklahoma and Alaska, are less interested in "raiding" than in offering themselves as eminently suitable for expansion.

Ohio Gov. James A. Rhodes has made "jobs and progress" the main theme of his three administrations. He is emphasizing it again as he seeks a fourth term. His chief aide and long-time associate is James A. Duerk, director of the state's Department of Economic and Community Development.

A major thrust of their approach is teams of state and business executives, known as "Rhodes Raiders," who descend on a city or country to "make contacts" for the state.

Rhodes himself is ready to drop everything on short notice and be off on a jaunt for the benefit of Ohio.

Duerk tells of once showing Rhodes a newspaper clipping about Japanese auto manufacturers considering expanding into the United States. We ought to go to Japan soon, Duerk told Rhodes.

"We'll go tomorrow," Rhodes said. They went.

The Rhodes group was away for 4½ days. They called on all major Japanese auto makers, including the Honda Motor Co. Eighteen months later — last Oct. 11 — Rhodes announced that Honda had agreed to create an assembly plant at Marysville for production of 60,000 cycles a year. The facility provided for 500 jobs immediately, with the promise of more later if Honda decided to make automobiles there.

Since 1976, Ohio has attracted a General Motors transmissions plant to Batavia, a Montgomery Ward distribution center to Sharonville, a Church and Dwight plant to Tiffin. In addition, Ford Motor Co. has made a $100-million expansion of its Brook Park plant near Cleveland. These projects meant thousands of jobs for Ohioans.

Gary Gleason, an official of the Texas Industrial Commission, says his state "always had an aggressive national media campaign (and) we plan to get more aggressive next year by running a television campaign." This past June alone, he says, the state attracted 13 new major companies, the best month it had has in almost a decade.

However, Jack Dressen, director of Oklahoma's Industrial Development Department, says his state prefers to get companies to expand in Oklahoma rather than relocate to it.

Pam Knode, of Alaska's Department of Commerce and Economic Development, says the 49th state's "primary goal right now is ... not so much in trying to get companies to move here but to develop entirely new industries."

And Jay Cayle, of the Maryland Department of Economic and Community Development, says 70 to 80 percent of the state's new jobs come from expansion of existing plants.

In Maine, "we just go out and tell industry and business our story," says Hadley P. Atlass, director of the Maine Development Office. "And our story is that we have a tremendously capable, work-ethic labor force...we have the land, water and power and a great way of life. We sell Maine as a place."

"Businesses aren't going to bother with you if you brag or try to be a hot shot promoter," Atlass says. "You must win their respect and trust...give them the information they need, not a lot of promotional junk, and you've got to maintain their confidence by not leaking a lot of things."

Similarly, in Iowa, Gary Owens, director of his state's industrial development division, says he tries to be "realistic and straightforward and honest... Gimmicks just don't last."

"If we do not level with our prospects," says William Kundrat Jr., secretary of New Mexico's Commerce and Industry Department, "we are going to lose our credibility."

Roger Eiss, deputy director of Oregon's Department of Economic Development, said his state uses "the rifle instead of the shotgun approach.

"We're looking for businesses most compatible with our environment and not necessarily anything that comes along."

New Hampshire "appeals to the pocketbook first," says Paul Guilderson, an executive with the Department of Resources and Economic Development. The state's basic appeal is that it has no income or sales tax, is the only New England state with a AAA-bond rating by Moody's, and has a flat 8 percent business profits tax that replaced a complicated levy seven years ago.

Tom Benson, commissioner of economic and community development in Tennessee, said his state concentrates a lot on foreign companies. One success has been the Toshiba television company, which will employ up to 800 and produce about 240,000 color tv sets a year when the plant is in full swing.

Earl R. Roberts, advertising director for the Pennsylvania Commerce Department, says his state once lost a plastics plant to an unidentified Southern state because an executive with the firm was an avid fox hunter "and we believe he fell in love with that other state's fox hunting area."

Roberts also says good golf courses and the location of the country club are just as important as a major highway or the availability of skilled employees in planning locations of a plant or relocation.

Officials in Nevada recall that a computer company from the San Francisco Bay area once was all set to move to a community about 90 miles from Reno. But when wives of company executives found the community was out in the sticks with no "cultural and night life advantages," the plans were shelved.

Dick Brock, head of Florida's trade development office, recalls that one firm moved to Fort Lauderdale because the company president liked the fishing. The firm subsequently folded. The president got fired.

The hard sell is a hallmark of the approach of some states, and the result is what rival states labeled "Rhodes' Raiders" (Ohio), "Rampton's Raiders" (Utah) and the "Kansas Cavalry," all groups of businessmen who help lure business into the state.

The Utah group was created under former Gov. Calvin Rampton. Teams of the state's businessmen used to be sent to a city to call on firms whose names were unearthed by research groups specializing in relocations. Under present Gov. Scott Matheson, Utah's effort is centered more on advertising, attending trade shows, and making direct mail approaches to industries the state is looking for, such as technical, non-polluting firms.

The "Kansas Cavalry" consists of about 300 businessmen representing a cross-section of the state's business and industry who travel at their own expense promoting the state's economic development. The state's Department of Economic Development provides preliminary work and staff support and possible targets elsewhere before the "cavalry" goes on the move.

Most states — to a lesser degree — have variations of these "raiding" parties, sending out individuals to discuss

Cooperated To Woo 'Wagen'

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — The way Pennsylvania induced Volkswagen Manufacturing Corp. to locate its first U. S. assembly plant within the state is an example of how government and private enterprise can cooperate to woo industry.

Initially in the Keystone State's favor was an auto assembly plant on more than 1,400 acres near New Stanton. Chrsyler Corp. had started construction there but failed to complete it. The area's attractions included good rail transportation and an abundant water supply.

Also a major plus for the state was Gov. Milton Shapp.

A successful former businessman himself, Shapp visited the West German auto maker to plead the case for his state to company officials. In September, 1976, Volkswagen and Pennsylvania signed what has been described as the single largest, most complex economic development agreement involving state and local governments and a private firm in this country.

Major points of the agreement:

—Volkswagen to invest $50 million in company funds at New Stanton;

—The Pennsylvania Industrial Development Authority to provide a $40 million loan for purchase and completion of the plant there;

—The loan is for a 30-year period, with interest of 1.75 percent payable over the first 20 years, and equal installments of principal payable over the last 10 years, with interest at 8.5 percent.

—Security for the loan is a first lien on the facility; Volkswagen and a group of banks guarantee the loan.

The Greater Greensburgh Industrial Development Corp., acquired the plant and property for $28 million. Of this Chrysler received $8 million in cash and a $20 million, 20-year note, with interest at 6 percent. A subsidiary of Volkswagen then purchased the note from Chrysler.

The plant and property were transferred to the Westmoreland County Industrial Development Authority. Under the 30year lease signed by Volkswagen, the West German firm agreed to pay off dbt service on the Chrysler loan while the PIDA loan contained an option for outright purchase of the property at any time.

The New Stanton area involved governments of one county, two townships and two school districts, all of which agreed to waive 95 percent of the property taxes for the first two years, 50 percent for the next three.

In addition, the State Transportation Department awarded $28 million in contracts for road and rail improvements in the area. For manpower requirements, the federal and state government joined CP to provide training and recruitment of workers for the plant.

Complicated — but successful.

Industry-Hunters Have Some Tales To Relate

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Much as traveling salesmen, the official industry hunters of many states tell tales, sometimes humorous, of their successes and failures.

Lt. Gov. Robert D. Orr of Indiana, who heads the state's Department of Commerce, likes to tell of the time he wrote to a Jackson, Mich., firm he was given to understand was a prospect for relocating. The firm turned out to be the corporation at a state prison which manufactured Michigan's auto license plates.

Dr. Don Rose, an official with Maryland's Department of Economic and Community Development, remembers when a European industrialist visited the state and was taken on a tour of a thoroughbred horse farm. During the tour, someone gave him a cowboy hat. The next day when he visited acting Gov. Blair Lee III he sported the cowboy hat proudly. De Rose says the hat could well be what tipped the visitor's eventual choice in Maryland's favor.

Jack Dreesen, director of Oklahoma's Industrial Development Department, recalls one time perserverance paid off. He was with a state group in Georgia trying to sell a suitable location for a carpet firm. Tired and exhausted, they were headed for an airport to go home when they decided to stop at one more carpet firm office along the way.

It just so happened that most of the management people had gathered there because a top executive had died. The upshot of the conversations that ensued — a carpet mill built in Oklahoma within a year.

While making a visitor feel at home is part of the program, keeping the feeling alive is equally important. A number of German firms are located at Spartanburg, S.C., and a highlight of the social life there is an Octoberfest and other German events as conducted back home.

Washington state likes to accommodate movie makers. Sometimes, however, requests from the producers are difficult to fill. Once a producer wanted a block of downtown stores to be blown up for a scene.

"We found him some but he decided it wasn't enough," says Ted Hemphill, assistant director for industrial development.

Another time a movie producer sought 30 elephants. Hemphill threw up his hands at that one.

And a fortune teller played a part in deciding a Michigan producer of foam rubber to start a plant in Illinois.

As told by Rich Funderburk, a field representative for the Illinois Department of Business and Economic Development, the vice president of the firm asked whether any of the unoccupied buildings to be inspected where blue. The man, who was to be the manager of the new plant, explained that his girl friend had gone to a fortune teller who predicted the man would be promoted and relocated in a gold or blue building.

As it turned out one of the buildings Funderburk and the executive inspected was blue; moreover, a portion of it had been gold at one time. The company moved in.

"Since they arrived business has doubled," Funderburk said.

Slogans For Everybody

By United Press International

A catchphrase is always helpful to a state's visibility.

Ohio proclaims: "Profit is not a dirty word."

New York says: "We're not giving business the business any more. We're giving it a break."

New Jersey: "If it's higher profit you're after, New Jersey's got it."

The Texas Industrial Commission says: "When the old corporate tax bite eats away profits, cut out for Texas."

Arkansas: "What a site to see."

Tulsa says it is "a city that works" while Dallas-Fort Worth says it has "the right attitude."

Last February the New York Times printed an ad of the New York Commerce Department which said: "Once you know all the facts, we think you'll see that the grass isn't greener in Greenwich and the Sun Belt isn't so hot either."

A month later it rejected an ad from the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce picturing the Statue of Liberty hitchhiking south and the words: "Everyone's leaving New York for the big city."

"We made it clear to them that they were perfectly free to say positive things about Jacksonville, but not at the expense of New York City," explained Sydney Gruson, Times executive vice president.

More About States And Their Industry Fight

tax incentives, market access, labor costs and other attractins. Of course, when these "traveling" tub thumpers are as pretty as Judy Southard, it's a major plus.

Judy, young, blonde, with a degree in political science, is in Missouri's Division of Commerce and Industrial Development. Her "beat" is the industrial northeast.

She spends two months a year traveling, the rest of the time talking with community business leaders to determine what inducements they can offer a business which wants to relocate.

Judy says she sometimes has "to fight" her way in-to see a businessman because he's being besieged by representatives from other states. Then it's a matter of holding the prospect's attention "to make a convincing presentation."

All those she has met have been "perfect gentlemen," she insists. As to how she spends her nights: "There's never any problem. By the end of the day I'm run ragged, and usually have enough to do just getting prepared and rested for the next day."

The money budgeted for pleading a state's case to industry varies widely, from the $21 million a year for Pennsylvania's development agency to $169,000 by Wyoming. All but eight states have economic or industrial development agencies.

The budgets of 24 development groups top $1 million a year. Moreover, 23 states maintain sales and marketing offices in Western Europe.

Virginia was the first state to open an industrial development office in Europe, according to J. Frank Alspaugh, director of the Division of Industrial Development. Since 1969, when the office opened, "we've brought in some 17,000 manufacturing jobs from outside the country," he says.

Some states have an image problem.

Robert Goodman, head of Nevada's Economic Development Agency, said one impression he finds difficult to combat is that the state's gambling casinos oppose industry.

"I've had to meet with every hotel owner in Las Vegas to get the rumor wiped out that we don't want industry, but still people use it as salt in our wounds."

One of Florida's main obstacles in pleading its case with industry is that it is "a tourist state," Dick Breck, Florida's chief of trade development, says.

Having a governor prepared to pack his traveling bags on instant notice also is of immeasurable help. In addition to Ohio's Rhodes, there is Gov. John N. Dalton of Virginia.

Since he took office at the start of the year Dalton has visited New York City three times in a search for industry willing to relocate in the Old Dominion. He recently returned from a 12-day trip to Europe which he says meant at least $50 million in foreign investment for the state. J. Frank Alspaugh, head of Virginia's Division of Industrial Development, estimates that the state attracts an average of 1,000 jobs a year from other states and countries.

The J. C. Penney chain plans to open a Western distribution center at Reno, Nev., in January, thanks partly to the efforts of Gov. Mike O'Callaghan, who flew to New York twice to convince the Penney directors of the suitability of Reno.

In some states the governor is available to visiting industrial firemen. Such a one is Gov. Pierre S. du Pont IV of Delaware.

"Any time we have a prospect who comes to the state and represents a substantial capital expenditure and investment, we can get him in to see the governor at a very short notice," boasts Willliam J. McDermott, the state's industrial development coordinator. Du Pont also attends many plant openings and ground breakings, as do most governors.

Gov. Meldrim Thompson of New Hampshire says he's "as busy cutting ribbons as many politicians are kissing babies."

In Idaho, says Lloyd Howe, director of the state's Division of Tourism and Industrial Development, "Anyone can get in to see the governor, even Republicans, and it always is impressive, especially to people from large states who can never see the governor."

Even ex-governors play a role.

Former South Carolina Gov. John West is U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia and G. L. Daniel of the South Carolina Development Board concedes his presence there helps the Palmetto State.

"The people over there get to know him, they get to know South Carolina," he says. West often entertains visiting Arab dignitaries at his Hilton Head home.

And we must not forget the governor's dog.

Chinese Junk Is A Way Of Life

By C.C. MINICLIER
Associated Press Writer

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — Contrary to popular opinion abroad, private enterprise is permitted in the People's Republic of China, within limits, and is a key to transportation today.

Hsia Chang-fa has raised his three children beneath the single mast of his century-old sailing junk. Hsia carries no charts and has no need for a compass, having learned every subtlety of the Huangpu River from his father and grandfather.

During an impromptu interview in midstream, as huge ocean liners steamed into this bustling seaport which handled some 60 million tons of cargo last year, Hsia spoke of the quiet beauty of river life.

His wife said that she would be happy if their 15-year-old daughter eventually married a riverman. She knows they are good people. Her own parents, who now live ashore in their own home, raised her on their sailing junk.

Thousands of families still live on river boats in eastern China, but few are seen any more in Shanghai. They have been replaced by motorized junks and cement-hulled barges which still carry a fifth of all freight.

The 105,000 miles of inland waterways provide the cheapest means of transporting everything from rocks and bricks to ore, salt, chemical fertilizer, cloth and farm machinery between rural communes and urban factories.

Hsia has spent his life within the confines of a 110-mile stretch of the Huangpu River, bringing bricks to Shanghai and transporting machine tools and consumer goods upriver aboard his 13-ton vessel. He hopes that his son, now 18 and part of his crew, will eventually become master of a tugboat.

Hsia, his wife and eldest son make the round trip once a week. If the current and winds are right he can cover the downstream distance in 17 to 18 hours. If the wind dies they use long oars and poles to propel the vessel.

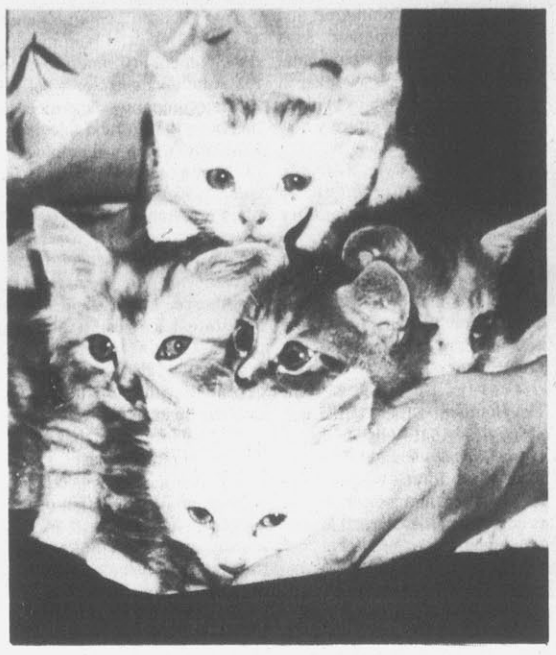
In the summer, when school is out, their daughter and 10year-old son leave their maternal grandparents' home and join the family on the open deck, sheltered from burning sun and heavy rains by a woven reed cover over the living quarters.

The boatman says there is no time to fish and his wife notes that shopping is difficult, because a good current or breeze means passing up a village market where she might buy fresh fruits or vegetables.

Hsia earns about 120 yuan, roughly $72, a month, which is paid by the factory that receives the bricks and by villages that receive the finished goods he transports upstream.

The income represents the work of Hsia, his wife and eldest son and has permitted them to build a home ashore in Chitung County.

Adopt-A-Pet



The Pitt County Humane Society has need of homes for 12 kittens at the present time.

Also needing homes are eight collie-shepherd puppies; a white poodle with papers; two German Shepherds, one male, one female; and some part husky puppies.

Anyone wishing to adopt any of these pets or to place pets for adoption is invited to call the Humane Society answering service at Helen's Grooming World, 758-PETS. The public is advised not to confuse the Humane Society with the Greenville and Pitt County Animal Shelters. The Greenville Shelter may be reached through the main city switchboard, 752-4137; the County Shelter through the Health Department, 752-4141.

The Humane Society is joining the owner, Furlin Coggins, in putting up a $50 reward for the return of Willie, a German Shepherd frisbee-catching whiz. Willie had served as a Humane Society mascot, performing at various benefits and had been scheduled to perform soon at the Ayden Collard Festival and an East Carolina University football game halftime. He was taken from his owner's home Saturday, Aug. 26. Anyone who would like to contribute to the reward fund is asked to call the Humane Society.

Veblen's Fame Is Shortlived

NERSTRAND, Minn. (AP) — He grew up on the family farm near Nerstrand in southeastern Minnesota and went on to coin the term "conspicuous consumption" and write "The Theory of the Leisure Class," which shook establishments of the Western world.

And, yet, remembering Thorstein Veblen, one of the century's sharpest satirists of the human race, is not easy for many people in the Nerstrand area.

That became clear when a move began to churn up enthusiasm in the area to restore and preserve the Veblen farmhouse near Nerstrand as a tourist attraction and monument to the economist-philosopher who died in 1929.

"The trouble with Thorstein," says Ruthmary Penick, archivist at Carleton College in nearby Northfield, Minn., "is that nobody around here remembers him as a human being ... he's certainly not a household word." Veblen graduated from Carleton College in 1880.

And, said a Nerstrand area farmer: "The trouble with this kind of writing and these ideas is that none of us around here can relate to that easily. I think I know what he meant and he's probably right. I hear the same message in church every Sunday. But it doesn't grab you."

Nevertheless, the Veblen Preservation Project, a nonprofit corporation, recently signed an agreement to buy the late 19thcentury farmhouse, some outbuildings and 10 acres. The sellers are Howard and Conrand Musehl, present owners of the property, which has been vacant about three years.

Ms. Penick says, "We need in the area of $100,000 to both complete the sale and restore the house."

She says the Heritage, Conservation and Recreation Service of the U.S. Interior Department is expected to match half the $37,500 Veblen house purchase price. The rest of the money must be raised from funds, gifts, contributions and special grants.

Enthusiasm is easier to come by from the intellectual community. In 1976, economist-author John Kenneth Galbraith came to Minnesota to address the annual meeting of the Minnesota State Historical Society. Galbraith insisted the Veblen farm home should not be allowed to decay and crumble and he backed up his talk with money from his honorarium plus royalties from his recent book on Veblen.

Gambling Machines Stock Heavy, Volatile

By WILLIAM GLASGALL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Four years ago, Resorts International was known for its hotels and a gambling casino in the Bahamas. Its class A common stock could be bought for $1.75. Today, Resorts International also operates the first casino in Atlantic City, N.J., and its class A shares are selling for around $110.

Bally Manufacturing — which holds an estimated 80 percent of the market for slot machines — sold for $15 a share back in the fall of 1974. Today it sells for about $57.

Trading in many of the gambling issues is consistently heavy and often volatile. Ramada Inns, which owns 7 percent of Nevada casino operator Del E. Webb and which has said it may enter the gaming business itself, led the New York Stock Exchange most-active list in four of the last five sessions.

Bally jumped by almost $10 Wednesday after jukebox maker Wurlitzer denied reports it might manufacture slot machines. A day later, Bally rose nearly $5 before it plummeted and closed the day off more than $6.

After the 4 p.m. market close Friday, in an attempt to curb the price swings, the New York and American stock exchanges raised from 50 to 75 percent the required down payment for credit purchases of many gaming stocks. Bally, Del E. Webb and Resorts International class A were among the group. Rumors of the move earlier in the day sparked a sharp end-of-week decline in the group."

In a broader look at Wall Street, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 16.20 points in the past week to 879.33, its lowest point since Aug. 1. The NYSE's composite index closed at 58.54, down .68, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up 2.81 at 170.70. Big Board volume averaged 34.42 million shares a day against 34.67 million a week before.

Gambling has drawn the attention of prospective casino operators, speculators, Wall Street analysts and, perhaps, the Securities and Exchange Commission. While the SEC "can't comment if it's conducting an investigation" of the gaming industry, said spokesman Chiles Larson, "you can readily assume that the commission is keeping an eye" on the situation.

The gaming furor on Wall Street may be "speculative froth," as Hildegarde Zagorski of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields calls it. Birr, Wilson's Eldon A. Grimm has stronger words, calling gambling stocks "one of the top fads of all stock market history."

Even though he feels the recent price gains have been "in many cases, excessive," Harold Vogel of Merrill Lynch, Pierce Fenner & Smith believes the gambling industry "has the potential to be one of the high growth segments of the economy during the next five years."

Casino gambling is allowed in Nevada, where it's burgeoned since the late 1940s, and in Atlantic City, where eager bettors are losing more than $600,000 a day at the Resorts International complex that opened in May. The next casino state may be Floria, which votes on a gambling referendum in November. New York, Massachusetts, California and Washington are among other states where casino gambling is at least being considered.

According to Vogel, Nevada's casinos took in — or gamblers lost — $1.5 billion in 1977. Revenues have grown at a steady 15 percent a year, with Vogel estimating $3 billion in gamblers' losses five years from now.

Looking at Metro-Goldwyn Mayer, Vogel noted its Las Vegas Grand Hotel opened in 1973 at a cost of $111 million. The hotel-caino generates more than $11 million in operating income per quarter, and "in any business, such numbers would be regarded as substantial return on investment," said Vogel.

Initial figures suggest New Jersey and other states could match or exceed Nevada's tally, Vogel contended. MGM's Las Vegas operation leads the field with its $83.5 million annual winnings. But Resorts International reports it could record more than $200 million a year in winnings, in a casino that's smaller than the Las Vegas leader.

Nevada has been a gambling center for more than a century. Gamblers also have been trying to beat the house in the Bahamas, the Caribbean and Monte Carlo for years. But the prospect of legalized casino gambling in many states may mean a boom for the industry because of gaming's sudden convenience, Vogel said in an interview.

Things aren't all bright, however. There's the ever-present possibility of thefts from gaming tables and slot machines. Organized crime figures frequently have been linked to the gambling industry, and a "major scandal or impropriety" in Atlantic City "would set back the legalization movement by several years," Vogel said.

An additional problem is that of raising capital. Del E. Webb, for instance, is attempting to borrow $135 million for expansion and to pay old debts. According to Vogel, a new and potentially profitable hotel-casino could cost at least $80 million, and "we believe that only the largest companies in this field with ready access to capital and with experienced managements will be able to take advantage" of future opportunities.

"Ease of entry in this business is deceptively simple," Vogel said. "Helter-skelter investment in just any company because it has a casino or is planning to open a casino, is risky and is inadvisable."

Mexico Possible Site Of Huge Oil Reserves

By GORDON D. MOTT
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico would replace Saudi Arabia as the country with the world's largest known oil reserves if estimates given by President Jose Lopez Portillo prove correct.

In an annual state of the union address Friday, Lopez Portillo said Mexico has a potential oil reserve of 200 billion barrels and that it has trillions of cubic feet of natural gas as well.

Up to now Saudi Arabia has been considered the world leader in oil reserves with 170 billion barrels.

The Changing Faces Of Greenville

Reflector Photo

OLD STATE BANK BUILDING. . . photograph also shows the stoplight that stood in the middle of Five Points.

This is a love letter to Greenville, not meant to be historically accurate, since it is based on memories. Do you remember her before she had her face lifted? The new face is definitely beautiful, but every wrinkle of the old one was well-beloved.

The State Bank Building, for instance, and Five Points. Not so long ago, one could go down to Five Points to meet one's friends and watch the world go by. The State Bank Building and the traffic light in the center of Five Points added to the uniqueness of the location. In fact, the entire downtown area has undergone such drastic changes, that if one had left here as late as 1960 and returned today he wouldn't recognize the place.

Before the proliferation of fast-food restaurants, there were several small restaurants at which one could buy anythin from a hamburger and french fries to a boiled dinner. Among them were: Jim's Quick Lunch, and the Olde Towne Inn on East Fifth, the Mary Ann Soda Shop, and Beddingfield's at Five Points, and Kares, Bissette's, Warren's, and Biggs Drug Stores on down Evans Street toward the river. Jim's, the Mary Ann Soda Shop, Kares, and Warren's have all gone out of existence, as have several other landmark businesses in the downtown area. Does anyone remember the stable at the corner of Cotanche and Fifth? Several small clothing shops occupy the area now, but in the sixties one could still meet people on horseback on the streets of Greenville. How about the old Flanagan Buggy Company, a block away at Fourth and Cotanche? The Flanagans began by making buggies and ended by selling Ford Motor Cars. It's a parking lot now. All the other automobile franchises have passed into other hands. Stafford Oldsmobile (which once occupied the parking lot between the University Book Exchange and Belk's), White Chevrolet, and Folger Buick are all gone now.

Across Cotanche Street from Stafford's was Happy's Pool Room, a haven for men that served some of the best barbecue in eastern North Carolina. Beside Happy's was the Nehi Bottling Plant, built in 1914, occupied in it's last years by the office of veterinarian Dr. Alex Viola and by Stafford's Body Shop. Georgetown Shoppes occupies the site now.

Up the hill, skyscraping dormitories rise from what was once a wooded hillside. Elsewhere on the ECU campus, a very modern classroom building graces the site where old Austin stood.

Of course, no catalog of Greenville's past landmarks would be complete without mentioning Respess Brothers Barbecue in North Greenville (which once catered a State Dinner at the White House), or the Carolina and Proctor Hotels, or the Busy Bee Cafe (where one could get hotdogs 24 hours a day), or the State and Colony Theatres, or the C. Heber Forbes house, or...the list could go on forever.

Before we pass on in our survey, let's take moment to reflect on the tragic end of the old Sycamore Hill Baptist Church building, which for many years stood beside the entrance to the Greene Street Bridge. She died by fire, a victim of the controversies of the sixties, and we are all the poorer for her loss.

Some changes have been for much better, and beloved institutions live on in new quarters. Among these are Immanuel Baptist Church, Eighth Street Christian Church, and First Presbyterian, all of which have moved to new locations. Jarvis Memorial has remained in downtown Greenville, where renovation of the area has had the effect of allowing one to stand away from the church and see its beauty in one sweep of the eye. A great example of an institution moving to other quarters is the hospital. Thirty years ago, Pitt General Hospital attended the lives and deaths of our citizens in what is now the Social Services Building on Johnston Street. Next stop was the Pitt Memorial Hospital building on Farmville Highway, now in its turn being remodeled to accomodate county offices, while the hospital is housed in an impressive new building on the Statonsburg Road.

The slums down by the river are gone. In their place, carefully planned office buildings amid broad expanses of grass and shrubbery. In fact, the entire downtown area has changed from a warren of one-way streets to broad avenues and open spaces—like a flower opening to the sun. Yes, Greenville has a new face, and while the old one was beloved, the new one is quite comfortable and stirs one's emotions—could it be love?

Miss Baggett, Mr. Tripp Exchange Wedding Vows

The Oakmont Baptist Church was the setting of the Saturday wedding of Miss Frances Denise Baggett and James Edward Tripp Jr. The Rev. Gordon Conklin officiated at the 7:30 p.m. double ring candlelight ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O'Neal Baggett of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Edward Tripp Sr. of Greenville.

The church was decorated with two seven branch ivy entwined candelabra on each side of the steps leading to the altar and a 15 branch candelabra flanked the profile kneeling bench. The unity candelabra was lighted by the couple symbolizing their marriage.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of white satin crepe over peau de soie and re-embroidered alencon lace. The gown was fashioned with a high V-neckline adorned with lace, stems of pearls and bridal buttons continuing to the empire waistline. The leg-o-mutton sleeves were appliqued with lace motifs and lace trimmed the cuffs. The flowing skirt extended into a chapel length train.

She selected a fingertip veil of silk illusion which was attached to a Juliet cap covered with re-embroidered alencon lace and seed pearls. She carried a cascade bouquet of white daisies, yellow roses and baby's breath.

MRS. JAMES EDWARD TRIPP JR.

Mrs. Lisa Freeman of Winston-Salem was the honor attendant and wore a formal length gown of pastel green qiana featuring a slip style bodice. A matching lace shawl was worn around the shoulders and tied in front. She carried three long-stemmed yellow roses accented with greenery and streamers and wore a yellow daisy in her hair.

Bridesmaids included Brenda and Tonya Baggett, sisters of the bride, Jerri Tripp, sister of the bridegroom, and Susan Whitehurst, cousin of the bride. Their gowns were identical to that of the honor attendant and they carried a long-stemmed yellow rose accented with greenery and streamers and wore a yellow daisy in their hair.

Missy Baggett, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid. She wore a pastel green qiana gown with puffed sleeves and empire bodice. She carried a white wicker basket of yellow and white daisies and cushion poms and wore a yellow daisy in her hair. Angie Conger, cousin of the bride, was flower girl. Her gown and basket were identical to that of the junior bridemaid. She wore yellow baby's breath in her hair.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and ushers included Milton James, cousin of the bridegroom, Gary Butts and Jackie James, all of Greenville. Chip Fleming and Lee Stocks, cousins of the bridegroom, were pages and lighted the candles prior to the ceremony.

The mother of the bride wore a formal length tiered gown of yellow qiana. The mother of the bridegroom selected a jade green knit gown with a chiffon overcape. Both wore wristlet corsages of cushion poms.

The bride wore a formal length gown of white silk crepe over white peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled with floral Venise lace beaded with pearls. The bodice was enhanced by a sheer insert of English net embroidered in a cameo motif outlined with a profusion of floral appliques each centered with pearl clusters. The full bishop sleeves repeated the beaded appliques at the cuffs. The full circular skirt and attached chapel length train were edged at the hemline with the floral Venise lace.

She wore a walking length veil of imported illusion trimmed in scalloped layers of silk Venise lace and held in place by a Camelot cap overlayed in beaded Venise lace. MRS. DANIEL BRYAN GREGORY

The honor attendant wore a rust knit formal length gown fashioned with an open neckline featuring miniature shoulder straps. The gathered empire bodice was accentuated by an inset motif of silk embroidery centered with a rose design from which flowed the full circular skirt. The sleeveless gown was complemented by a sheer rust chiffon drape. She carried a natural cluster bouquet of wheat and white poms tied with matching ribbon. Her headpiece consisted of silk flowers in shades of rust and beige.

The flower girl wore a formal length white organza gown over white taffeta designed with a high collar edged in val lace. The pleated bodice, with bishop sleeves was styled with a bib effect of chantilly lace and centered in front with pearl buttons. The full skirt was enhanced by a ruffled flounce at the hemline trimmed with chantilly lace. She carried a wicker basket of white poms, wheat and satin streamers. She wore a headpiece of white poms with streamers.

The mother of the bride was dressed in a baby blue blouson styled street length dress and wore white carnations.

After traditional vows were spoken, the couple lighted a unity candle and members of the congregation lighted candles one from the other. A passage on marriage from Gibran's "The Prophet" was read and a Moravian Love Feast was held. Red roses were presented to the mothers of the couple.

The couple will live in Greenville after a trip to the Virgin Islands.

The bride is a graduate of Rose High School and ECU with a degree in interior design. The bridegroom graduated from James A. Gray High School and Guilford College with a major in business administration. He is employed as manager of NCNB Mortgage.

A reception was held in the ladies parlor. The serving table was covered with an antique lace cloth and centered with an arrangement of fall flowers and candles.

She Wanted To Live With American Family

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Woman's Editor

In addition to having a vacation in the United States, Francoise Thouet of France wanted to live as an American family did, practice speaking and learning English as a language and learning some American expressions.

For the past two months, she has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Don Casey in Grifton. However, she has spent little time there due to traveling in Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Washington, D. C. and Tennessee. She also visited friends in Florida, who met her family on a trip to France six years ago. Some of the time was spent at the summer home of the Casey's in Myrtle Beach where their daughters, Karen and Donna, were working.

When asked what she thought of the United States, Francoise replied, "That's a difficult question to answer. I appreciated the way people greeted me here as compared to England. At first, the English people I met were more distant than Americans. I also appreciated hamburgers and hush puppies. I drank lots of grapefruit juice and didn't like carbonated drinks or tea.

"I was surprised at the towns and cities — they are a lot different than at home. In France, to buy such items as cigarettes, you go to a tobacco shop and for bread to a bakery, whereas here, you can buy most things in a supermarket."

"In the way of clothes, teenagers look the same. Teenage boys in North Carolina seen to dress more when going out than in France," she added.

Francoise enjoys country music from the United States including songs sung by Johnny Cash and Pete Seeger and jazz from New Orleans. She likes Louis Armstrong and French singers, too.

She took about 160 pictures and kept a travel journal while here. "I regret that I didn't go to more movies," she said.

University Professor Enjoys Life

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Woman's Editor

"I'm single, I don't want to get married — soon I will be an old maid according to society — I live alone and enjoy it," said Francine Bensusan of Paris, France.

"However, we have a French saying, 'Don't ever say, fountain I will not drink your water,' meaning I will never do this or that in my life," she added.

A faculty member at the University of Paris No. 13, she teaches American minorities, politics, American literature and science fiction.

This is Francine's third trip to the United States. "The first time, I wanted to see New York City because I had heard so much about it, but I was also scared. During my first trip, for the first three days, I was sightseeing. Everything was full of wonders — not only the buildings, the people too. When you get into the rhythm of things, people look just the same. They might not have the same manners but basically they are the same as anybody living in a big city.

"New York City is unique. Downtown is so crowded — it's a street life. Even though I'am from Paris, which is a very big city — somehow it seems smaller. New York City is gigantic, fantastic, amazing and wonderful, but it's a very hard city and inhuman city. That's the way I see it. The reason I say it's a hard city is because it's an aggressive city — you are aggressed by the dirt, dust, noise, heat and you feel crushed most of the time by the height of the buildings," she said.

Her second trip of six weeks was spent in California and Mexico. This time, she spent four weeks in Manhattan, living in an apartment. "I had the usual schedule of a working person while doing research work at the American Jewish Committee Library. Most of the information I need for my dissertation is in New York City and I really had to go there to work," she continued.

In explaining why she wanted to be a university professor, she said, "The more interested I became in the English language, the more I felt I had so much more to learn and still do. When I received my B.A. at age 20, I realized I didn't want to teach on the high school level. Although I did so later (for two years) as a temporary thing and I enjoyed parts of it. I was also teaching in college at the same time." She has been teaching on the university level since she was 21.

Francine, who visited Tom and Marianne Baines in Greenville, met Marianne and her sister-in-law, Faye Rouse of Durham, in Paris in the spring. "They were lost in the middle of a street when I spotted them. I knew they were Americans and gave them directions. We had dinner and they came to see me at my apartment and invited me to North Carolina for a visit when I came to the United States for the summer," she related.

Francine has visited friends in Washington, D. C., and will be traveling west in September before returning home Oct. 13.

Francine's parents have retired in the south of France. She has a sister, who is a French journalist and a younger brother, Pierre, a musician, who plays mostly folk and traditional music. Two of his record albums have been released and the third one will be out in October. His first "Pres de Paris" was awarded the best folk record at the Montreux Festival in Switzerland in 1975. "He's coming to the U. S. next spring and hopes to perform here," she continued.

Francine likes music and cooking. "The first thing I do in the morning is put on my glasses and turn the stereo on. Cooking for me is a feast of friends, a social thing. I enjoy it because I don't have to do it everyday.

"I want to come to the states to live and work and am looking into the possibilities," she said.

Good-byes were said by parents of the bridal couple.

The mothers wore formal length green gowns for the wedding and wore cymbidium orchids.

Woman Moving In As Prestigious Campus Head

By DAVID SMOTHERS
UPI Senior Editor

CHICAGO (UPI) — Hanna Holborn Gray stood in the middle of the University of Chicago quadrangles and stared ruefully at a spiky piece of sculpture planted there.

It consisted of a large piece of pipe, about 12 feet long, from which sprouted sticks of what looked like driftwood.

"What is it?" she was asked.

"It's a pine cone," she replied, rather defensively. "The students made it during a festival of the arts and put it here. Now nobody can figure how to get it out."

The pine cone is probably the least of Mrs. Gray's problems.

She is moving in as president of the U of C, one of the most proud and prestigious institutions of higher learning in the country. She is the boss of a unique faculty, which includes her husband, and entrusted with the education of some of the brightest students in college today.

She has problems. Specifically, the same kind of problem most people have. Money. Private universities are finding it hard to come by.

"We have to do more with less," she said. "It's the challenge of the next decade, really, in higher education.

"We have to do two things. The first is not to equate innovation with simple accumulation: If there's new things that we want to do and haven't been doing ... there's a kind of internal reallocation that we will have to take, in part by doing less of what we do less well.

"And secondly I think we have to learn to gauge our priorities properly to what is centrally educational, perhaps at the expense of some of the activities that are awfully nice to have at a university but may not be as central. I don't know what those are yet."

At 47, Mrs. Gray is the first woman president of a major private university (Lorene Rogers has been president of the University of Texas at Austin since 1974).

She is a large-boned, Germanic-looking sort of woman (she was born of German parents in Heidelberg) possessed of great presence of mind and an explosive laugh when something strikes her as funny.

She likes to watch old movies on television. Her favorite book is the "Essays of Montaigne" (Michel Montaigne, 16th centruty French savant credited with inventing the essay form). Her favorite movie is "Beat The Devil," a spoof of international thrillers directed by John Huston and starring Humphrey Bogart, Jennifer Jones, Gina Lollobridgida, Robert Morley and Peter Lorre.

She can recite them all. "It had the whole gang," she said.

She is a professor of Reformation and Rennaisance history, a subject she taught from 1961 to 1972 at Chicago and plans to teach again next year. In 1972 she started a career as a whiz at academic adminnistraton by becoming the first woman dean of arts and sciences at Northwestern University.

The next step up was in 1974, when she was appointed provost of Yale University. When Yale President Kingman Brewster was named ambassador to England in 1976, Mrs. Gray became Yale's acting president and saw the university through some trying times — notably an 80-day strike by university blue collar workers.

Many thought she should have got the Yale presidency on a permanent basis. But it was given to her colleague, Yale historian Bartlett Giamatti, and Chicago, with President John T. Wilson retiring, snapped her up.

In her new job she takes on a university which has managed to wash out a $6 million deficit but fell far short in a $205 million fund drive; which may be hard put to maintain its stringent academic requirements and its lavish faculty (one member to eight of its 8,000 students); which hopes to lure the top cream of the student pool to a campus (known as the Quadrangles at Chicago) sunk deep in the South Side where it forms a leafy, Gothic and slightly snobbish enclave in one of the toughest, most dangerous neighborhoods in the nation.

Mrs. Gray, in an interview, appeared unfazed by the task before her.

She apologized for the austere, almost stark appearance of her new office. There were no pictures on the wall, no flowers on the table, hardly any books. All business.

"You can see I haven't got all my furniture in yet," she said.

She believes she is running a unique institution.

"I think the one thing that stands out for me is that they (Chicago and Yale) are universities whose different parts seem to interrelate much more than is the case at some other much larger universities — schools that are more like a series of federal schools.

"The sense that all parts of the university ought to contribute to one another is stronger, I think, here at Chicago.

"I think the uniqueness consists in the particular mix that the university represents — the fairly broad conception of a liberal arts education that still carries with it the notion of a common core, that there ought to be some common framework that people have a universal discourse, an educated, interesting one.

"And I think it finally comes out of the fact that there is a kind of special tradition of feisty independence that gives the whole thing its flavor that together are for me the University of Chicago.

"And when people call it THE university (as Chicago graduates do), I think they mean kind of the idea about a university which it is aiming to represent."

U of C has been unique since it was founded in 1891, largely through the benefice of John D. Rockefeller, who hoped it would become a bastion of Baptist teaching in the Middle West.

That is hardly the way it turned out. But, in terms of academic accomplishment, Rockefeller got his money's worth.

Of the nation's college presidents, 140 were students or teachers at Chicago (Mrs. Gray got her doctorate at Harvard). Almost 40 percent of the 90,000 who have graduated from Chicago are engaged in academic work at the higher education level. Forty-two of its students and faculty have won Nobel prizes.

One block from Mrs. Gray's fifth floor office, university phisicists led by Enrico Fermi achieved the first sustained nuclear chain reaction, opening the way to the nuclear age and, more immediately, the atomic bomb.

That super-secret World War II project was sanctioned by Robert Maynard Hutchins, the Chicago president who put the university on a new track and, along the way, decided it no longer needed football.Chicago had been the terror of the Big Ten, the original "monsters of the Midway." Under legendary coach Amos Alonzo Stagg, the university regularly fielded some of the best teams in the country.

But Hutchins looked at the values of a private university in big time football and declared Chicago out. There are many old time Maroons around the country who have never forgiven Hutchins for that.

Instead, Hutchins turned the Chicago curriculum on its head and shook up American education as well.

He declared that Chicago students could start college at 16 and graduate at 20, with students enrolling at the traditional age of 18 still getting their bachelor's degrees in two years.

For the undergraduates, picking and choosing of what they would learn was practically wiped out. The university told them what to learn, prescribing broad survey courses in the major scholastic disciplines, with heavy emphasis on the classics and philosophy.

After that, students were free to pursue their special interests. Two thirds of those attending Chicago are graduate students. The university's schools of medicine, law and business are recognized as among the best in the country.

Nor were Chicago students taught by second raters. No teaching assistants — graduate students putting in extra time to make a little money — are foisted upon freshmen. Rather, undergraduates were challenged by top members of the faculty, men and women who demanded excellence.

But the radical Hutchins program has been eroded. The two-year bachelor's program has been abolished, the stringent, survey programs relaxed.

Mortimer J. Adler, a philosopher who was Hutchins' principal collaborator during the heady 1940s and 50s, said recently the university has retrograded since those days. Mrs. Gray demurred.

"The place has changed," she said. "I don't think that change and retrogression are necessarily the same. What we have to look at is whether the purposes and values and priorities that he identifies with the place are still the purposes and the values and priorities of the place, even if the place has changed somewhat.

"My feeling is the latter is probably true."

It was suggested that one of the principal functions of the president of a private university is to raise money and that a woman might find this difficult. Mrs. Gray would not buy that.

"It's not the main function but it's an important function," she said. "And it's going to go on being one because higher education requires it. We're all in financial straits.

"But you don't raise money unless there's something worth raising money for. The university (of Chicago) does have that.

"I don't believe it's harder for a woman, because I think the quality of the university and of the various things that might be supported is the really important thing.

"I think a woman can articulate those qualities."

HANNA HOLBORN GRAY, born of German parents in Heidelberg, pauses on the campus of the University of Chicago where she moved in as president. (UPI Photo)

Best Plan A Year Ahead

NEW YORK (UPI) — A year ahead isn't too early to start planning for financial aid from government and private sources to send your son or daughter to college, says the College Scholarship Service of The College Board.

The board is a non-profit educational institution whose service provides consumer information for students, parents and counselors. It also helps colleges, states and other scholarship agencies distribute financial aid funds equitably.

The service recommends this schedule for those who hope to enter college in September 1979:

This September, pick up a free copy of "Meeting College Costs" from your high school counselor and start finding out application deadlines, eligibility requirements, how the aid process works and where funds are available.

This November, pick up a 1979-80 Financial Aid Form from the counselor.

As soon as possible after Jan. 1, 1979, send the completed aid form to the College Scholarship Service. About four weeks later, the service will notify you that the form has been processed and sent to the colleges and scholarship agencies you specified. Later, you'll be told about financial aid awards from colleges, Basic Grants, states and private sources.

Counselor Here Fridays

Hazel Taylor, counselor for youths 16-21 years old who might have interest in job training at residential Job Corps Center, will be at the Pitt County Social Services Department Fridays, Sept. 8 and 22.

She will be at the Martin County Social Services Department Thursday, Sept. 28.

Machinists' Prexy Does Own Thing

By JULIE FREDERIKSE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When William P. Winpisinger became president of the nation's sixth largest union a year and a half ago, few who were familiar with his ways expected him to settle into the conventional mold of the big-time labor chief.

And Wimply, as the head of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers is widely known, did not surprise them.

He's taken on the defense establishment and George Meany, both high on the list of labor's untouchables. And he's entered a race car in the Indianapolis 500 as part of his effort, in public relations and otherwise, to improve a labor image he thinks has become tarnished.

But if the 53-year-old Winpisinger isn't always in step with his labor leader colleagues, he's at one with them in his reaction to the failure of the Labor Law Reform Act in the U.S. Senate. And his reaction is characteristically unrestrained. He vows revenge on the senators who refused to vote to end the filibuster that killed the bill and the business community he says egged them on.

The Machinists union had been a prime mover in labor's effort to liberalize laws governing union organizing procedures. Now Winpisinger plans to marshal the union whose motto is "One Million Strong" in a drive for retribution, beginning with the fall elections.

"I suppose you could call it a political hit list," he says. "We'll do everything we can to defeat the minority who thwarted the democratic process.

"But those senators wouldn't have gone against us without the pressure they got from business," he says. "They spurned us, so it seems to me that turnabout is fair play. They'll not get the benefit of labor's clout when they need it."

Winpisinger sits on the AFLCIO's 35-member executive council, but that hasn't prevented him from speaking out against George Meany. Winpisinger feels the 84-year-old labor leader is partly responsible for a perception of labor as monolithic and unresponsive.

The Machinist union claims to have the most varied membership of any union. In addition to 120,000 auto mechanics, it has hundreds of thousands of members in electronics, airline and railroad industries. But although a third of the union's members work in the aerospace industry, Winpisinger has raised a bold challenge to the defense spending long considered his union's bread and butter.

"I would hate to think that the members of our union who are now engaged in the many facets of military production would have to depend forever on world terror in order to survive as an economic unit," he says.

Winpisinger supports the "conversion" thesis, which holds that the arms race is inflationary and is not the job producer claimed by the Defense Department and large defense contractors. He calls the scuttled B-1 bomber "the biggest boondoggle that could have happened to this country."

"Put simply, sometimes selfinterest has to take a back seat to what's right, especially if the choice is between a layoff and a death," Winpisinger says.

He has used organizing skills honed during his field representative days to pull together 60 labor, consumer, community and environmental groups into a National Energy Coalition last spring. Its purpose is to lobby Congress for a jobs-oriented energy bill.

But his pet project is enhancing the blue collar worker's image.

"Take our race car," he says, of the union-sponsored car owned by a Burlingame, Calif., mechanic. The "Machinist Union Special," as it's called, qualified this year for four major races, including the Indianapolis 500.

"Always the driver gets the honors, so we decided maybe it's time we recognized the mechanic — the guy who really makes or breaks a race," Winpisinger says.

ILL FROM ALE?

LONDON (AP) — A young woman who complained to her doctor of a pain in her chest was told the trouble was muscular. He traced it to the increase in muscular activity of the shoulder due to her job as a barmaid.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am heartsick about my daughter. She is 33, attractive, popular and well educated, but to get to the point, I am ashamed of the fact that she is living with a man.

Whenever I ask her if she plans to marry him, she insists that marriage is not important to her and she is very happy with things as they are. (Abby, how can she be happy?)

She has a good position and so has he, and I imagine that they share expenses. I can't understand why they don't get married.

Abby, I am just a normal mother who wants to see her daughter happily married with a family.

I want to die when my friends ask me about her. And I'm a wreck trying to keep it from the relatives. She was raised in a good Christian home, went to Sunday school and church regularly, and had good examples to follow. I don't know where she got these loose, immoral ideas.

How do parents cope with a situation like this?

SICK AT HEART

DEAR SICK: Parents are not responsible for the actions of their grown children. Please get over the notion that you owe friends and relatives an explanation for your daughter's lifestyle. You don't.

DEAR ABBY: I have a new daughter-in-law whom I adore, but I wish she wouldn't work so hard to put on a fancy dinner for Dad and me!

I think it's commendable that she wants everything to be perfect, but she tries so hard to impress us with the most complicated gourmet meals that I feel guilty knowing how much trouble she has gone to.

I wouldn't hurt her feelings by offering to "help" her, but believe me, she could use some help.

The first 30 minutes after our arrival, she's in the kitchen struggling with about six different kinds of hot hors d'oeuvres. And all during dinner she is either in the kitchen or serving us.

I wish I could tell her that if she's just throw some hamburgers on the grill, slice a few tomatoes, and open up a quart of ice cream for dessert, we would love it!

But how can I tell that dear young thing we'd rather have her company and simple food than a gourmet's delight?

RIVERSIDE

DEAR RIVERSIDE: You can't. And oddly enough, even some older, more experienced cooks need to learn that guests want a host or hostess—not a ghost or ghostess!

Plain food served in a relaxed atmosphere is far more enjoyable than the most elegant gourmet feast presented by a worn out, fretful, nervous wreck, who has obviously slaved for hours.

DEAR ABBY: I am a reasonably attractive, well-balanced young lady of 24, and I'm sure I could make some nice young man a good wife, as well as a good mother to the children I'd love to have. My problem is this: Given a choice between two men with whom to fall in love—a nice, respectable, steadily employed man, or a good-for-nothing bum—I invariably choose the bum.

Can you tell me why! Is it because, deep down, I have an unconscious liking for abuse? (The bums take my money and treat me badly.) Or could it be that I deliberately avoid the good prospects because I really don't want to get married yet?

I am asking you because I can't afford to go to a psychiatrist.

ATTRACTED TO BUMS

DEAR ATTRACTED: I wouldn't presume to tell you why you invariably pick the bums over the respectable men, but if you are interested in finding out, try your local mental health clinic.

You say you can't afford to go to a psychiatrist. I say you can't afford to go on picking the bums over the nice guys. You may become disgusted, convince yourself that you don't deserve anything better, and marry one.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

This is the prayer of a woman who is returning to school as a student after an absence of 15 years.

"Please God, let there be a parking space for a car with only an E AREA sticker. (Issued only to 37-year-old, first-semester freshman, with no major varicose veins, whose car is low on gas.)

"If You do not see fit to guide me to such a paradise, please help me to look like a VISITOR.

"Tell me the computer made a mistake and Home Management and Child Care on my schedule does not mean what I think it means.

"Deliver me from coming face-to-face with the registrar, who is bound to remember that on my enrollment card under SEX, I filled in 'occassionally.'

"Let me not be the only woman on campus in a pair of pantyhose and a bra.

"When it is lunchtime, give me a sign other than my stomach growling at 82 decibels. Watch over me especially when you seem me methodically cutting up the meat of younger students and telling them to sit up straight.

"Protect me from 'operators' who try to sell me secondhand books outside the bookstore that are no longer being used this year.

"Grant me the serenity to accept what cannot be changed, courage to change what should be changed, and the wisdom to keep my mouth shut when I don't know the difference. (I read that off an old tea towel.)

"Keep me from despair when someone jots down phone messages on my freshly-typed Philosophy notes.

"Help me to refrain from punching out friends who laughingly warn me a campus is no place to make an estrogen connection.

"Give me patience when I come home from a hard day in the library to discover no one has cleared off the kitchen table and the milk is still on the front porch.

"And if I'm not being too pushy, Lord., could You please see fit to send me a friend — one who had heard of Robert Benchley, Edward R. Murrow, String of Pearls, saddle shoes, and who knew hand computers when they were called fingers.

"And one last request . . . if there can't be comfort, encouragement and pride from my family for what I'm doing, please let there be a pot of coffee in the kitchen every morning."

On The Young Side

By Sharon Connolly

The halls of Rose High School were filled once again with crowds and noise as the 1978-79 school year began Monday for Greenville City Schools. Not unlike previous years, the reopening of school was met with mixed emotions.

For many sophomores, the first week was a period of adjustment as they became accustomed to Rose and met new people. The junior class was excited about no longer being the youngest class while the majority of the seniors realized this will be the last and hopefully best year of high school.

The Anchor Club, a service club sponsored by the Greenville Pilot Club, started a new year of activities Monday night as members attended a reception held at the Ramada Inn. This reception, given in honor of Billie Bollinger, lieutenant governor of N.C. Pilot Club, gave the Anchor Club members a chance to meet and to get to know members of the mother club.

Anchors who attending the reception were Beth Bailey, Virginia Baker, Sharon Connolly, Bonnie Correll, Becky Dixon, Sandy Evans, Karen Gordon, Dede Hayek, Eden Hooks, Carol Levey, Hannah Taft and Susan Tucker.

On Wednesday night, many of these same members met for a more serious reason, to elect a new president. Carol Levey recently announced that she would be unable to fulfill her duties as president due to the fact that she will be attending Winston-Salem School of the Arts this fall.

The results of the election named Dede Hayek, a senior and two year member of the Anchor Club, as the new president.

While most clubs and organizations begin activities in the middle of September, there are two groups of girls at Rose High who began preparing for the new year in the beginning of August. These groups are the Varsity and Junior Varsity cheerleaders.

During the week of Aug. 6-9, the JV cheerleaders attended an International Cheerleading Foundation camp held at UNC-CH. In addition to learning new cheers, jumps, chants and stunts, the squad participated in daily evaluations and was awarded ribbons in the areas of mounts and stunts, entrance and exit, cheer execution, and overall excellence. In the grand competition held on the last day, the squad was awarded a second place ribbon in the JV Division.

Junior Varsity cheerleaders attending camp were Teresa Brown, head, Debbie Cannon, Sheila Collie, co-head, Marjorie Crane, Lori Jo Edwards, Rhonda Holland, Elizabeth Ito, Angela Peterson, Babetta Pignani, Sylvia Taylor, secretary-treasurer, Veronica Ward, and Kerri Warner.

The Varsity cheerleaders attended a National Varsity Cheerleaders Assocation camp on the campus of UNC-Charlotte. Four day were spent learning cheers, chants dance routines and stunts. Resulting from four nights of evaluation, the squad earned one ribbon for an excellent performance and three for superior performances. On the fifth and final day, Rose cheerleaders were awarded a plaque for being the most improved squad.

Jeri Bullock, Jill Cargile, Sharon Connolly, head, Jennifer Davis, Jane Edgerley, Coleen Lemnah, Lisa Murad, Carla Tadlock, and Barbara Wheeler are the cheerleaders who attended camp.

Congratulations to both the Varsity and Junior Varsity squads for outstanding performances and awards.

Two Changed Their Lives For Hare Krishna Sect

By Jill Lawrence

MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va. (UPI) — Eight years ago, Arthur Villa and Linda Ridall were engaged and lived together in Pittsburgh.

Linda, daughter of a wealthy lawyer, studied painting. Arthur attended the University of Pittsburgh on a math scholarship.

Today, Arthur is known as Kuladri. He is president of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness, New Vrinadan, a 1,000-acre farm where some 200 Hare Krishna devotees — including about 60 children — are building a selfsustaining community and eight elaborate palaces.

Linda, or Kutila, as she now is called, has given up painting to raise Pritha, 4, and Vrinda, 1½, look after 15 other little girls, and perform such traditionally feminine tasks as cooking and sewing.

Kuladri, 29, and Kutila, 26, do not live together anymore. Their paths cross at mealtime, at religious classes and sometimes during the course of the work day. They took vows of celibacy when they married, and do not have sex except to have children.

Both insist their relationship is close, their lives simple and satisfying, despite hostile neighbors and marginally adjusted parents. But the transition to their new life was initially painful — at least for Kutila, a sunburned blonde draped in a long, flowing blue skirt and shawl.

"In the beginning, she wasn't as attracted as I was," said Kuladri, a swarthy, sensitive looking man. "Then I became very serious about it."

As Kutila tells it, she and Arthur were living together when "all of a sudden, he called me on the phone and told me to come to the temple. He was all shaved up. I didn't even recognize him.

"Everything was all mixed up," she recalled during a recent interview in the community's furnished guest room, as her daughter Vrinda tugged at her skirt.

"I had never seen anything like this. I'm from a middle class background. I was used to country clubs."

In an attempt to forget about Arthur and the Krishnas, she took off for Mexico for eight months. She lived in "ideal circumstances" next to a waterfall and spent the time painting.

"But it stayed with me," Kutila said. "Every time I ate meat or had sex, I heard a voice saying it was wrong. I drove for four straight days and ended up back here."

The farm to which Kutila returned is on what is commonly called McReary's Ridge, 10 miles outside of Moundsville, the Marshall County seat and site of the West Virginia Penitentiary. A large blue sign now looms on the hilltop, its white block letters spelling out "Hare Krishna Ridge." The sign is partially blackened, the result of a cross burning on the Fourth of July.

The 10-year-old New Vrindaban, named after Krishna's birthplace in India, is the largest Krishna community in the nation in terms of acreage. With 200 members, it also is the largest rural community of devotees. Los Angeles, with 400 members, is the largest urban community.

On a recent summer midday, men with shaved heads, clad in pants and work boots, hoed and weeded rows of vegetables in the community garden. Women in graceful saris scurried from one building to another, followed by little girls in long skirts and sneakers. They looked far less jarring in the West Virginia hills than on city street corners where they are often found.

Accompanied by his daughter Pritha, a stunning child in peasant blouse, long skirt and Adidas sneakers, Kuladri strolled through the garden to a nearby pond. He described the community's orchard, vineyard and cows, and its plans for formal gardens, fountains and wrought ironwork.

At present, New Vrindaban is a muddy, motley collection of buildings, residences and temples that includes shops for casting, printing, marble, woodworking and art. It looks industrious but not yet aesthetic.

Kuladri, dressed in white pants and a white T-shirt with a Krishna illustration on it, talked about the Krishna life.

Children, at age five or six, go to a gurukula school where they are taught Sanskrit, reading, writing and math. "There is much less anxiety and they mature faster," he said, adding the school promotes independence and camaraderie. Later he acknowledged he was talking only about boys.

Girls attend a separate day school and remain at home where they are taught to cook, sew and look after other children.

Kutila said instructional materials used at the boys' school are all published by the Krishna movement. No books outside the culture are used.

Kuladri said women can teach or do secretarial and construction work. "But generally we find they're very adapted to taking care of children, so why not let them do it?" He called it a matter of efficiency rather than exploitation.

"It's not a woman's position to manage men," he said.

Separation of the sexes is one of the first things a visitor, particularly a female, notices on visiting the farm. The men, most of whom are celibate and live in a separate building on the next ridge, barely speak to the women and avert their eyes when women pass. Proponents of sexual equality will find no support here.

But modern society — particularly its violence — encroaches on all sides of the farm in this Appalachian enclave. Kuladri, who has been at New Vrindaban for more than eight years, estimates an incident of some kind — shooting, harassment, vandalism or the like — occurs at least once a week. A devotee was shot in the arms several years ago but a local grand jury let off the attackers — to the chagrin of local police.

"Most people, because I wear a robe and have my head shaved, would like to cut my throat," Kuladri said.

He characterized most of the neighboring farmers and homeowners as "envious, abusive and belligerent," but seemed resigned to their distaste and violent expressions of it.

"We're determined to stay here," he said. "We take it as Krishna's mercy. Our business is to set a good example."

At least one neighbor, a state police officer, has been friendly, Kuladri said. "Of course, we did buy his farm for an exhorbitant price. I don't know if that motivated him." He said the officer has served as a middleman in several controversies.

One involves sewage. The community invested $30,000 in a lagoon system after it was okayed by the state, only to have the approval withdrawn when neighbors protested its size and location and threatened to sue the state.

"People may criticize us for not having a nice sewer system, but we're dying to put one in," Kuladri said. "We are caught in the middle of a political situation. We may sue the state ourselves for the $30,000 we have lost."

The community received another dose of negative publicity three years ago when a visiting professor contracted hepatitis and subsequently died. Kuladri said the community receives 25 to 40 visitors a day, 100 on weekends, and the professor is the only person who ever became ill.

"We did have hepatitis, but that's very common, for instance in colleges. And it was not from health conditions on the farm." He said a devotee caught hepatitis on a trip to India, then returned and was assigned to cook before his disease was discovered.

Once their temples are built and construction programs have progressed further, the Krishnas expect the community to look cleaner and win greater acceptance from its neighbors.

Until then, armed guards patrol the first palace, an elaborate marble concoction of Eastern and Western architecture that devotees have been building for four years. It is scheduled for completion next spring.

"We want to make it a national monument to compete with Mount Rushmore," said Kuladri, only half-joking.

The palace, intended for religious services and classes, is a baroque marvel of pillars, turrets and marble imported from Italy, Germany, Turkey, Greece and Pakistan. Supposedly it is the plainest of the eight temples planned for New Vrindaban. Even so, its splendor contrasts sharply with the ideals of simplicity that govern other aspects of daily life.

Noting that he shares a 9-by12 cabin with another devotee, Kuladri said, "We should all live simply. But when it comes to glorifying God, we should do it in a splendid way."

The simple lives their children have chosen do not settle easily with the parents of Kuladri and Kutila.

Kuladri said his father died in a plane crash and his mother has not fully accepted his lifestyle, "but she likes the children and they sometimes visit her."

"My father said he was humiliated. He couldn't even look at the shaved heads. But now, especially since I have the children, my mother sees how happy I am. I've never been better situated."

Kutila's initial reaction to the Krishnas was hardly different from that of her parents. "I thought they were a bunch of weirdos," she remembered. "I used to walk on the other side of the street so they wouldn't ask me for money."

Now, fully accustomed to Krishna clothing, food and philosophy, she insists she's never been happier.

"The biggest thing is that it's so simple. We're so regulated. It's not boring. It actually gives you more time to think spiritually. Once you make your commitment, the instructions are there and it's just a matter of following them."

Kutila seems to expect her daughters will leave the Krishna fold when they grow older and more curious about the outside world, but she accepts that philosophically.

"They'll go but you'll feel good about it," she said. "At least you've given them a base, a God-centered life. I was given nothing. I didn't know who I was."

Not Much Sleep By 'Sleep King'

By CAROLE FELDMAN
Associated Press Writer

EAST ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — When Norman Dine is awake, he's putting people to sleep.

"The inability to sleep well is universal," says the self-proclaimed "Sleep King."

Insomnia, Dine says, does not discriminate between the rich and the poor or the famous and the infamous. Anyone who has trouble releasing tension has trouble sleeping, he adds.

Dine, who was able to solve his own insomnia problem, for 35 years has made helping people sleep well his business.

The 70-year-old Dine moved his customized beds and sleeping aids to his sleep center here from New York 10 years ago. And with Beth Shapiro, his "Lullabye Lady" and main salesperson, he continually devises ways to establish sleep-inducing conditions.

The late President Dwight D. Eisenhower and thousands of other tired souls sought Dine's advice on sleep.

Eisenhower, he confided, slept very little, making up for the lack of sleep with short catnaps. Dine said he provided the late general and former president with an inclined cot.

Sleeping with the head down and legs up facilitates circulation and improves the rest, he said.

For a veteran who hurt his back, Dine developed his ocean bed, essentially a tub filled with water kept at 98.6 degrees, body temperature. About 25 pounds of salt added to the water keep the sleep buoyant.

Dine, who sleeps only 5½ hours a day, studied mental hygiene at Columbia Teachers' College, specializing in the problems of sleep. He also attended sessions at sleep research centers in Chicago and Pittsburgh.

Christian Book Industry Aided

By K.C. MASON

DENVER (UPI) — Publishers in the $600 million-a-year Christian bookselling industry admit they were given a boost by such controversial "born again" figures as Anita Bryant, Larry Flynt and Chuck Colson.

The phenomenal growth of the industry was evident to the 7,500 persons who attended this year's Christian Booksellers Association trade show in Denver.

The variety of wares shown by nearly 400 exhibitors ranged from Billy Graham's book, "Born Again", to soul singer Andre Crouch's gospel music and frisbees and dog T-shirts bearing eye-catching evangelical slogans.

"I would estimate $60 million in wholesale orders were written up," said Gary Foster, the CBA's publications director, after the four-day convention closed. He de-emphasized the so-called "gospel gimmicks", saying they represented only about 5 percent of the products on display.

CBA executive vice-president John Bass, who estimated retail sales would run well over $600 million this year, predicted continuing growth for the next decade.

"The main CBA markets, married women aged 26-40 and youths aged 16-22, both show long-term growth due to interest patterns," he said. "We're predicting a decade of growth if we just reach those we are presently reaching."

Bass said today's Christian books and music appeal more to the general public.

"Until 1955, denominational (publishing) houses accounted for about 90 percent of Christian literature sales and the material was written by theologians and ministers who were rather ethereal," he said. "Today's books are addressing such family and social issues as divorce, homosexuality and depression."

Bass and William Barbour, president of New York-based Fleming H. Revell Publishing Co., agreed the well-publicized "conversions" of Flynt, publisher of Hustler magazine, and Watergate conspirators Colson and Jeb Stuart Magruder helped increase sales.

They said, however, the public's attention was caught earlier by revelations of Dale Evans Rogers, Roger Staubach, Johnny Cash and Norma Zimmer.

"These people have written deeply personal books that revealed their true selves," said Bass. "People relate to the heartaches and struggles of others, and when these people stepped forward to share their lives and their belief in Christ, people listened."

"It's understandable that people would think of jumping on the bandwagon," said Barbour. "Part of the Lord's plan is that we look to our heroes who are willing to stand up and be counted for Christ."

Barbour, a fervent believer that his business is a devineinspired ministry, said he wasn't worried about secular publishers getting into the Christian book peddling business.

"What difference does it make where it's coming from as long as it is getting into the hands of non-Christians," he said. "The evangelical publishers have less peaks and valleys because we're not in it totally for the business.

"You can be in this business and not be a Christian," said Barbour. "But then it would just be ux business and not a ministry."

Barbour also credited growth of the industry to modern language translations of the Bible and the charismatic movement, in which Christians proclaim spiritual gifts of phophesy, healing or speaking in tongues.

"The charismatic movement is getting a great reception in olly frigid areas of Roman Catholicism and High Episcopalianism," he said.

"Fifteen years ago the word of God could not be read by the average man on the street. Then Tyndale (Tyndale House Publishers) came out with the 'Living Bible' and 20 million copies have been sold."

Barbour denied the majority of Christian book authors were "in it for the money."

"Helen Steiner Rice, who is in her 70s, couldn't care less about her income," he said. "She believes the Lord is keeping her alive so she can write her inspirational poems. Corrie ten Boom receives only a small salary from a trust set up through her royalties and the rest goes to prison ministries."

Word Inc., which derives 65 percent of its sales from records and tapes, imported gospel music superstars Evie Tournquist, Andre Crouch, and B.J. Thomas to sign autographs for the Christian bookstore operators and their families.

"Four years ago we made a commitment to get into the contemporary music area," said San Moser, Word's vice president of marketing. "Before that the business was gospel oriented toward adults but the younger people have 40 percent of the purchasing power."

Moser, who estimated record sales tripled from 1974 to 1978, also said his business was a ministry.

"Nothing ministers like music," he said. "It's a way in which a lot of people reach a spiritual decision. We also have found that the performers with the highest level of commitment to Christ are those who reach the top."

Prepared For Operating Without Mail

Carolina Telephone president J. C. Cluen said that the company is prepared to carry on business in the event of a postal strike.

Cluen pointed out, "Although we depend very heavily on the U.S. mail, we have developed a contingency plan for operation without using the U.S. mail if necessary."

The official explained that the plan includes arrangements for getting bills to customers, for receiving payments from customers, for getting payments to vendors and suppliers, for transporting customer records, long distance billing information, notification to customers about service changes, and other areas.

Carolina Telephone serves approximately 440,000 customers in eastern North Carolina.

Guide Gives New Outlook Of Boroughs

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Edith Wharton, William Dean Howells and Henry James had two things in common.

Well-known: All were writers. Not so well-known: At various times they all lived and worked in the same house in New York City's Greenwich Village.

The same — almost — for Thomas Wolfe, Dylan Thomas and Brendan Behan. At one time or another, they all sheltered in the city's near 100year-old Chelsea Hotel and presumably did some of their writing in its rooms. Aside: Edgar Lee Masters wrote a poem about the Chelsea.

These and any number of other off-beat bits regularly enliven the pages of a book with the not very lively title of "AIA (American Institute of Architects) Guide to New York City."

The guide, written by architects Norval White and Elliot Willensky, tells of the architectural treasures — and nontreasures — that dot New York's five boroughs. Provided are easy-to-follow maps of walking tours through the areas described.

But for those who prefer to let their eyes rather than their feet do the walking, the guide is also thick with snippets of interesting information for the armchair tourist to read.

Those interested in writers might like to store up some cocktail party chit-chat by learning that poet Edna St. Vincent Millay was given her middle name after St. Vincent's Hospital in Greenwich Village. "It seems the hospital had saved the life of a relative." Or that Edgar Allan Poe was treated at the Northern Dispensary "for a head cold in 1837 — without charge, as are all who can't afford the fee." Or that Herman Melville worked "on what was then the Gansevoort Dock as an outdoor customs inspector for 19 years. It was sometime during these years that he completed 'Moby Dick.'"

Off the literary trail:

—The Statue of Liberty, a world famous symbol, is "Perhaps three times the height of the Colossus of Rhodes, which was one of the 'Seven Wonders of the World.'"

—Wall Street, another ubiquitous symbol. How did it get its name? According to the guide: "The Dutch wall of 1653 (a palisade of wood palings) was built as protection against attack from English colonies to the north. The English took it down, but the name remains."

—Railroad flat? It comes from the Lower East Side tenements that housed residents in "rooms strung end to end like railroad cars."

—Cleopatra's Needle. This obelisk, located behind the Metropolitan Museum, was "a gift of the Khedive of Egypt in 1880. It was rolled over tortuous topography from the Hudson River on cannonballs to the 'worst place within the city for getting an obelisk to.'"

Notes about presidents:

George Washington: For 10 days in 1783, Fraunces Tavern "was the last residence of Washington as a general...He returned six years later and five blocks away to take office as president at old City Hall..."

Chester A. Arthur: Presidential inaugurations normally take place in Washington. "But on Sept. 20, 1881, Arthur was sworn in as president" at his New York home, following the assassination of James A. Garfield.

Statue studiers might find that of Franz Sigel, a Union Army officer during the Civil War, of interest since "in the iconography of equestrian sculpture the steed's four legs touching terra firma mean the hero died a peaceful death."

There are several statues in Madison Square but the most curious is probably that of Lincoln's Secretary of State William H. Seward.

"Here," notes the guide, "owing to unsuccessful fund-raising, the sculpted body is one that (sculptor Randolph) Rogers modeled of Lincoln. With Seward's head attached, it holds the emancipation proclamation."

THEY'RE GAME

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Game farming could become a major industry in South Africa, officials say. A report in the Pretoria News said game matured younger and lived longer than livestock and that males were fertile longer and carry more meat.

Greenville Trio Backpacked In Israel And Great Britain

Text by George Williams Photographs by Michael Crane

Editor's Note: This summer, three young Greenville men—George Williams, Michael Crane, and Larry Bordeaux, took a backpacking trip to Israel and England, with quick jaunts into Scotland and Ireland. Williams is Assistant Scout Master for Greenville's Troop 30. All three are Eagle Scouts.

On our arrival at Tel Aviv's Ben Gourien Airport, two Israeli Boy Scouts took us by bus to Yarqon River Youth Hostel for our first night.

Israel, a tiny nation, is at one point only ten miles wide, and in quick succession we saw and explored ancient and modern places of interest — Caesarea, King Herod's city; Haifa, the largest seaport; Acre, the ancient Crusader city, captured by the Crusaders in 1104.

The next day we visited Nazareth, passing through areas populated largely by Arabs. The "Good Fence" at Metulla allows sick or wounded Lebanese Christians to get medical aid from Israelis.

In the Golan Heights area, ruins from the battles of 1967 are evident in gutted buildings and vehicles.

In Jerusalem, the three of us spent considerable time visiting ancient, holy sites — the Church of the Nativity, where priests burned incense, the Via Dolorosa, Golgotha, the Holy Sepulchre, Dome of the Rock, and the Mount of Olives.

Following our days in the holy city, we turned south, passing through the Negev region and the city of Beersheba on our way to the northern tip of the Gulf of Aquaba. Here, two sister port cities are located — the Israeli city of Eilat and Jordan's port, Aquaba.

Aquaba interested me personally, as it is the city taken from behind by the fabled Lawrence of Arabia and his Bedouins when Turkish forces held it in 1917.

On our return trip north, we visited Massada, the ancient Jewish fortress where Jewish defenders committed suicide en masse rather than surrender to the Romans; and sat (you can't swim) in the salty waters of the Dead Sea.

Our final sightseeing jaunts were in the West Bank, the Dead Sea Scroll site of Qumran and the city of Jericho.

In England

London impressed us most in two ways — the density of the population, and the massiveness of buildings.

Once settled in, we soon discovered that the shops, theaters, restaurants, winding streets, and museums make London a fine place for entertainment and excitement.

Going southward, we rode to Salisbury, then camped on the Old Sarnum Campground. We found the ancient stones at Stonehenge and the vastness of the Salisbury Plains both impressive.

At Gilwell Park, headquarters of scouting in England, we camped, saw the Scout Museum and met Scouts from many nations.

Our southern tour completed, we headed north for Edinburgh, home of a large medical center and home town of Robert Louis Stevenson, Robert Browning, and Sir Walter Scott.

North of Edinburgh, we spent an afternoon at the Scottish Boy Scout Jamboree at Blair Atholl, and from there went to Inverness.

Liverpool, home of the Beatles and spawning ground for Punk Rock, was fun with its punk-mania and strange poetry— which we took with a grain of salt.

With time growing short, we made a few more rounds of interesting sights, took in three plays — "A Chorus Line," "Annie," and "Oliver," then reported in to "Lakerville."

"Lakerville" was the temporary shanty-town set up on streets near Victoria Station — where thousands of American students waited for stand-by flights. The London press termed it the "slickest evacuaion since Dunkirk."

Eventually, our turn came to be evacuated, and tired and happy, we headed back home to Greenville.

Beauty Of El Camino Real Marred Beyond Reason

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

ALONG EL CAMINO REAL, Calif. (AP) — Two hundred years before man landed on the moon, a graying and trailweary padre planted a cross on a shallow hill in San Diego, claiming the land for God in his heaven and the king in Spain.

That act, played out before a few Indians and Spanish soldiers, signaled the opening of California to the white man.

That cross essentially became the southern foot of a trail that became a road that became a highway called El Camino Real, The Royal Road, the nub of California's extraordinary growth.

In the last five decades, California's golden coast has gone money crazy. Some old-timers, whose families have been in the state less than 100 years, curse the newcomers and grumble that the Statue of Liberty is in the wrong place. The nation's most beautiful shoreline is suffocating under the weight of humanity.

Now the same state that startled the nation with Proposition 13, a clenched taxpayers fist under the nose of government, is fighting back against the very forces that made it rich — people and money pressure from all over the world.

It is a battle fraught with ironies, and of most importance to those 10 million Americans, now living elsewhere, who will knock on California's door before the year 2000 and hope to be let in.

California is saying, "Stop."

If California can't stop them, the sheer cost will. Money from all over the world is seeking a safe haven in California's real estate, especially the 1,074-mile stretch of magnificent coastal mountains and sandy beaches.

Nowhere is the pressure more visible, more acute than along El Camino Real, once a 650-mile trail linking the 21 Spanish missions from San Diego to Sonoma, begun by Father Junipero Serra with the cross planting on July 16, 1769.

The good father from Mallorca came to bring religion and civilization to the heathen Indians, and by that process protect Spanish interests in Alta California from the Russians already moving south a ship's stride at a time.

The Russian menace passed. But a greater one was waiting to the east. American eyes focused on the treasures of California. Less than a century after Serra, the new nation claimed the territory. Every decade found new wealth — fertile soil, gold, oil, a beautifully mountained coast, and a sunny climate where the living was easy and movie cameras could grind away all day.

El Camino Real, the name given in 1942 to Highway 101, stretches from San Diego to north of San Francisco, a concrete belt harboring some of the most expensive, desired and wondrous real estate in America. Its southern reaches are almost constant city from San Diego to Los Angeles where half of California's 21 million people live.

Today, where Serra's heart leapt to see two Spanish ships in San Diego Bay, the vista is now eave-to-eave shimmering white rooftops in the California sun. Instead of masts, two scaffolds rise above the asbestos sea, proclaiming "Kamchatka Vodka," and "Lloyd's Pest Control."

They stand between the graceful old mission and the sea.

Farther up the coastal highway, the pretty little mission at San Luis Rey is bordered by an auto salvage yard and a mobile home park.

Still farther north, in La Jolla, where houses march down the mountains to the sea, a typical home that sold for $127,000 last year sells for $185,000 now, an increase of almost 46 percent.

Everywhere along this gilded coast, the people pressure is almost tangible. Considering everything sold — mansion to slum — the median price of a California home in 1977 was more than $60,000, and probably twice that near the coast.

Against this pressure, bastions are being raised in some coastal towns between Los Angeles and San Francisco. "No growth" laws preceded the taxpayer rebellion called Prop 13. "They are raising the drawbridge," a real estate man in Santa Cruz says with regret.

California has also passed a coastal zone law with commissions empowered to ban development as far as five miles inland from the high tide mark.

While they preserve the shoreline, these measures also sharply increase the value of homes already built. In Santa Cruz home values have doubled in a year.

Sixty-three percent of all Californians live in the 15 counties that line the coast, and many of them will have real estate worth more than they ever hoped to accumulate.

Even the swallows, bound by w eternal pattern to return to the red-tiled roofs of the mission at San Juan Capistrano, are confused. Instinct only goes so far. It leads them to the pretty town, but it doesn't give them the address. Now, with building after building imitating the Spanish motif, the swallows have a larger choice, and some are found nesting in the red tile roofs of Taco Bells.

For those who own homes anywhere near the coast, it is as if there were a taxi meter where the doorbell used to be. It rings up the price by the minute. One home owner in Palos Verdes Estates, who can see Santa Catalina Island over a neighbor's roof on a clear day, paid $60,000 for his home in 1968. Today it is worth more than $200,000. He estimates the price rises $1,200 a month.

That, of course, contributed to the homeowners' rebellion. Property taxes were based on the market value of their homes. A man who could afford the taxes and the mortgage of a $60,000 house suddenly found himself paying the taxes on a $220,000 house. Enter Prop 13.

Next door to Monterey, a 2,000-square-foot home in Pebble Beach, near the polo field, one large bedroom and two baths, sold for $130,000 in 1976, and $235,000 this year.

To old-timers, what has happened up and down the coast is dismaying. Before World War II, Monterey, like Santa Cruz to the north and Carmel to the south, was a sleepy town with one old resort hotel, an Army post with two squadrons of cavalry and a battalion of horsedrawn 75s. It also had a sardine industry that John Steinbeck used as backdrop to his "Cannery Row."

Today, Montrey abounds in hotels; Fort Ord is a vast military complex; there is a naval station nearby. But there are no sardines. The fish disappeared and the 16 canneries closed one by one.

That's when the tourists appeared.

"They replaced the sardines and then some," an old resident complains. "I used to ride horseback one block away," another says wistfully. Today, horse and rider would suffocate in the traffic.

The town and the county have succeeded in staving off the worst of industry, helped by an accidental smog spill from a neighboring valley that raised an outcry. Industry, it was decided, was not worth the taxes it would pay.

Still, some feel they are only fighting a delaying action, and some feel the battle is already lost.

Still, the northern communities on the road to San Francisco are doing more than either of the metropolitan giants to limit growth. The state is helping, buying beaches, keeping open access to the shore.

There are still vistas of great natural beauty, tucked in here and there. South from Monterey and Carmel is Point Lobos, much of it state park land where Robert Louis Stevenson in a gentler time borrowed the landscape for "Treasure Island."

Big Sur with its climactic mountains and forests rolls its mighty course down the coast, its precipitous cliffs harboring unseen homes, hidden by the vast greenery, looking out on the Pacific.

Nowhere along the Royal Road has change been more swift and unimpeded than in the south.

San Clemente, a beautiful stretch of beach abutting Camp Pendleton has attracted the wealthy for decades. Former President Richard Nixon settled there.

In 1927, San Clemente could not claim a single house. By 1931, it was as big as San Diego or Monterey at the time.

The building explosion began in the '20s, converting the century-old farms and orchards into three bedroom sanctuaries, butt to butt.

Now money from the Mideast, Canada and Mexico seeks haven in the storied hills of Southern California, raising prices and changing the scenery. The Shah of Iran's sister, for instance, bought one estate of 168 acres, plans a $3 million, 50,000-square-foot home and will subdivide the rest.

PLANE ECLIPSE — This photo of a DC-10 passing the moon was taken by John Wakeman of Orchard Park, N.Y. from the Alfred Univ. Astronomical Observatory in upstate New York. Photo was taken as the moon was being automatically tracked and photographed on July 17, 1978 at 9:45 p.m. The telescope was a 14-inch F-6 Olson reflector. It was shot at 1/250 second on SO 115, a high resolution monochromatic, red sensitive film. Visible behind the plane are heat vapor trails. (AP Laserphoto)

Policing Yellowstone Park Guests

By JOHN KUGLIN
Associated Press Writer

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — They come and throw — coins, cans and flip tops, hairpins, gum wrappers, shoes, bottles, sticks and stones the size of footballs.

Flinging junk into Yellowstone National Park's geysers and hot pools is something approaching a national pastime. Once a shiny, red snowmobile escaped its owner and buzzed into a hot pool.

It's enough to disgust even the most placid of rangers.

"Anything that can be thrown, rolled, kicked or driven into thermal features will be," says Rick Hutchinson, geologist in the nation's oldest, largest and only steam-heated national park.

Yellowstone sprawls over 3,400 square miles in northwestern Wyoming, edging into Montana and Idaho. You could put Rhode Island and Delaware inside its boundaries, with room to spare.

Hutchinson spends his fall, winter and spring taking water samples and charting eruptions and other activity in the accessible major geyser basins. One task is monitoring the temperature of the 10,000 thermal features — geysers, hot springs, mud pots and steam holes.

And when he is not answering questions from tourists, Hutchinson is helping maintenance crews recover debris from hot pools and geysers.

They fish out the coins — if they can get them before they corrode. The record haul was $7 in change from a 3-foot-by-4-foot hot pool.

Some geysers — like Minute Geyser in the Norris Basin — have been destroyed when the mineral-rich water forms crust around foreign objects, sealing the escape vents.

Hot-potting, the illegal Yellowstone Park version of skinny-dipping, has claimed several lives and sent other people to burn treatment centers.

Some of Yellowstone's animals seem smarter than people. Bear, moose, bison, elk and deer usually keep their distance from the thin mineralized overhangs and crusts around thermal areas.

"A herd of elk may be running and one will get crowded into a hot pool, but this is very, very rare," Hutchinson says

Meditation Appears To Reduce Violence In Prison

By JOHN LEIGHTY

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Pat Corum was walking around San Quentin Prison smiling the other day when a fellow inmate stopped him and snarled, "Man, are you loaded?"

"No," Corum, a convicted murderer, replied cheerfully. "I meditate."

Corum, in fact, quit violence and drugs three years ago at hardline Folsom Prison, where he was once mixed up with gangs and the trafficking of narcotics.

He was then among the first 300 Folsom "tough men" to be taught Transcendental Meditation.

"Since June of 1975 the violence rate has been reduced 70 percent at Folsom," Corum said in an interview. "The men aren't having to deal with as much stress and tension within the walls."

TM has been approved as a self-help course at several of California's overcrowded penal institutions and statistics show the recividism rate — the percentage of returnees among furloughed prisoners — amazingly low, according to the state Department of Corrections.

Corum admits to the execution-murder of two persons and says he used to "lash out" in a violent manner until he began to meditate for 20 minutes twice daily, the TM ritual.

"In the last three years I haven't put a hand on a person in anger. I can now reach out and communicate with them, man. I'm relaxed. I'm cool. I meditate twice a day and get the garbage out of my life."

George Ellis, a TM instructor who began the prison program, said San Quentin is now getting off to a good start with a long waiting list of inmates wanting to learn the technique.

Both at Folsom and now at San Quentin, about 15 percent of the prison staff has also taken to meditation as taught by instructors of the Institute for Social Rehabilitation, founded by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, Ellis said.

Ellis said the first large-scale study of prisoner undergoing TM took place at Folsom and that positive behavioral and physical changes in the men were noted. Tests included making EEG charts and checking skin resistence, circulatory and blood pressure changes, anxiety levels and tension.

"Let the scientific results speak for success or failure," said Ellis, adding taat of 55 TM cons released from Folsom in the past two years, only three were returned, two for parole violations. At the Tracy Deuel Vocational Institute, where younger offenders are housed, of 15 TM users paroled, none returned.

"TM can help 80 percent of the people in prison," said Ellis, a mental health worker and former teacher at Sacramento City College.

Department of Corrections figures show that over a fiveyear period, approximately 80 percent of the inmates housed at Folsom, the state's toughest prison, end up back behind bars at a cost to the taxpayer of $125 a day to house each inmate.

In an evaluation of the Folsom program, prison correctional counselor H.A. Rippetoe said an interview of 40 participants indicated strong interest in additional TM instruction.

"It is a positive inmate activity and a review of the files of various inmates involved in this program reflects it does relieve emotional problems and helps to promote good conduct," he said.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. last year announced support for $42,500 funding for the TM prison program as recommended by the state Parole Board. So far, the money hasn't been allocated and private donations have been paying for the meditation instruction.

Allan Abrams, a researcher for San Francisco's Far West Laboratory, said data so far obtained from the testing of Folsom inmates taking TM has been "looking very good."

"The study is not definitive but the findings are very encouraging," he said.

He said there weren't significant changes in the circulatory patterns of the men, nor on their level of being extroverted or introverted. But he said there were "significant reductions in hostility levels," as shown by a medically approved hostility inventory test.

"We think that for a significant number of the inmates, not all of them, their lifestyle has changed, they feel better about themselves, their capacity for a productive living has been improved."

According to Corum and the TM instructors, several killings and assaults have been averted because of meditation practices. In one case, Corum said, a $104 narcotics debt was paid for another inmate by a TM practicioner because a "contract" had been placed on the man.

"Normally, he'd have minded his own business," Corum said of the incident. "But he could no longer stand by and see a life snuffed out."

Marc Halberstadt, a film student at San Francisco State University, interviewed a crosssection of Folsom meditators for an as yet unreleased documentary on TM and the Criminal Justice System. Hardened criminals willingly spoke out on their experiences.

David Robinson, 39, an armed robber, said he went through most of the group therapy and counseling sessions the state offered and they "didn't seem to do me any good."

But after meditating, he said, "I noticed I was a lot looser, easier, it seemed to calm me down. So, I think I'll just keep it up and hopefully it will be the answer to my problems."

Inmate Frank Billingsley said he always felt inferior and didn't know how to show people that he felt kindly toward them. Kindness at Folsom, he said, would result in being taken advantage of or getting "a knife in the back."

"With TM it helped me in that I was able to communicate with people anyway, despite my apprehensions, and I don't know, it was like a phenomenon you can't explain. The next thing I knew I wasn't just one of the masses in the institution but I rose above the rest of them, you can't explain it..."

In a recent misdemeanor trial in Alameda County, Municipal Judge Roderick Duncan "sentenced" a defendant to study TM in lieu of a stint in the county jail.

Duncan said several similar cases are being watched to determine TM's effectiveness as an alternative to jail, fine or probation. He said Oakland has 5 courtrooms, each of which handles 100 people a day accused of crimes such as misdemeanor assault and petty theft.

"A great number of them are here because they have serious problems involving unhappy relationships with another person, with poverty, with abuse of drugs, alcohol and a awful lot of them involve really stressful situations.

"Now, no matter what happens, we're not going to put these people in jail for very long. We're dealing with a misdemeanor, which in most cases is a maximum punishment of six months in jail and that's not a practical solution for avoiding further problems with that person.

"We have to find some way of keeping them out of involvement with the criminal justice system and jail has proven pretty bankrupt in that particular aspect."

He said that jail is important as a punishment in some cases, but that it doesn't solve the long-term problems

"If Transcendental Meditation can make the kind of difference that we're hoping that it can, and that it seems to be making in a number of cases, and if the success it is having in the prison programs in the cases of much more serious offenders continues to prove out, I think it could have a really revolutionary effect on the way the criminal justice system treats the defendant who has been convicted of a crime."

At San Quentin, approximately 300 persons are on a waiting list to learn TM and at least 2,000 inmates in the California correctional system have applied for the program, according to Ellis.

The program began at Quentin July 24 with four staff members and 30 inmates taking part. Pre-testing was done as part of an advanced study on how effective the TM technique is, with funds coming from contributors around the country.

"So far it's very successful at San Quentin and there is enthusiasm throughout the whole institution," said Ellis.

Pat Corum, the convicted murderer serving a double life sentence, helped set up the TM program at the prison and was even allowed a two hour furlough by Warden George Sumner recently to host a news conference in Berkeley on the success of TM with prisoners. He made sure he got back within the time limit.

"Right now, everything I'm involved in is beneficial for me and the people around me," said Corum, who helps with 11 other prison rehabilitation programs and credits TM for the energy he has to maintain the activities.

DESIGN OFFERS ALTERNATE FIRST LEVEL

By Jerry Bishop

Adaptable to the needs of the individual family, the Tenango, a two level traditional, provides a basic floor plan with attached apartment and an alternate first level plan for one-family living.

The basic plan divides the first floor into a family living area with living room, family room, kitchen, dining nook, and half bath, and a self-sufficient apartment with kitchen, living room, bedroom, full bath, and outside entry.

In the alternate design, the family living area is enlarged, with dining room and den added, and the apartment eliminated.

A softly stated exterior is fashioned from brick, wrought iron, and arched windows. Inside, the aim is contemporary livability.

Entry to the basic plan is through double doors to a foyer with living room at left and door to apartment at right. The 21-ft. living room joins the 19-ft. family room for an immense party area that boasts wood-burning fireplace and sliding glass doors to the ground level terrace.

Bordering the living areas, the kitchen complex combines dining nook and laundry niche with corridor kitchen and adds sliding glass doors to the terrace. The apartment, which fills the right wing of the home, calls for a kitchen with pantry, and a 15-ft. living room. The alternate plan offers a formal dining room and handy den-office off the foyer.

Upstairs, the two plans are identical and feature the expansive master bedroom, lavished with closet space, a private bath, dressing room, and sliding glass doors to its own deck. Two smaller bedrooms share another full bath.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

The story goes — and there is at least one written account of it — that many years ago, professional wood finishers in some factories had to take off all their clothes before applying varnish to furniture.

Why? Because the dust and lint from their clothes would have settled on the wet surfaces and ruined the work. It doesn't matter much whether the tale has been exaggerated, because the premise behind it is as true then as now.

Whether old-line natural-resin varnishes or the newer and better synthetic varnishes, their enemy continues to be dust.

All newly finished surfaces must be kept free of dust, but the battle need not be as intense against such quick-drying materials as lacquer and shellac.

When varnish is being used, it is important the project be carried out in a room which no one is likely to enter while you are at work and preferably for several hours. The room should be as dust-free as possible, which in some cases means using a vacuum cleaner before starting, working very carefully, since the procedure itself sometimes stirs up dust.

After the surface has been sanded, it must be wiped thoroughly with turpentine or mineral spirits to get rid of the grit caused by the sanding. Pros use a tack rag, which is moistened with turpentine and a bit of varnish. You can buy one at almost any hardware or paint store.

If you wish to make one, sprinkle a clean cloth with turpentine and then add a little varnish. Ring out the cloth until nearly dry, then wipe the surface with it. After you have finished with it, put it in an airtight metal container and it can be used over and over again. (The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 35 cents and a long, STAMPED, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743.)

Another professional trick calls for the use of a picking stick. Here again you can buy one, although only in certain stores. But you can accomplish the same purpose — removing dust specks — with an ordinary wooden toothpick. Lightly touch the end of the toothpick to the bit of dust and it will come up. The wet varnish will then close in around the spot and smooth it out. This works only when the varnish is still very wet.

Varnish is applied with flowing brush strokes. Do not brush it back and forth. Work against the grain of the wood in a small area, then do the same thing with the grain. Stroke the brush across the can or something similar to remove excess varnish, then draw the bristles lightly across the work surface with the grain. This last operation, in which only the tips of the bristles touch the surface, is called tipping and is an important smoothing-out step.

Some varnishes require only a single coat, but this depends on a number of factors, including the kind of surface to which the varnish is applied. Since different manufacturers' brands call for different treatments, read the label carefully. If you apply more than one coat, each should be sanded lightly after it is completely dry.

Four Of Ten Shopping Daily

NEW YORK (UPI) — On an average weekday, four out of 10 adults go to food stores and one in four shop for other merchandise, according to a National Advertising Bureau survey. Forty-four percent of those questioned said they looked forward to seeing daily newspaper ads, but only about one in 10 felt the same about radio and television commercials. Less than three in 10 said they looked forward to magazine ads.

See Hot Year For Fireplaces

CHICAGO (AP) — Major manufacturers of factory-built fireplaces have increased their production to meet what is predicted will be another year of heavy demand for wood-burning appliances, reports the Fireplace Institute.

Producers of woodburning stoves also expect to set new sales records this winter, as an increasing number of Americans turn to wood for home heating.

Work Longer And Harder

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women not only work harder than businessmen, they also work longer, according to the American Council of Life Insurance.

The council — citing a study made by the University of Michigan — says men also spend more time "goofing off."

It says Professor Greg Duncan, senior study director of the university's survey research center, offered the following explanations:

—Women end up in jobs where they are more likely to be supervised than men, and in that position would tend to stay busier.

—Unlike men, a large proportion of women don't hold paying jobs. But those women who do "may be more motivated."

Rubbings Popular Hangings

By ELAINE Q. BARROW
AP Newsfeatures

Brass rubbing, a traditional English craft of tracing medieval plaques onto paper, is stirring new enthusiasm in America. The reproductions make highly distinctive wall hangings.

The brass plaques, themselves, were set in the pavement of English churches and over tombs, particularly during the 1300s to the 1600s, to commemorate celebrities in ecclesiastical, civil, or other realms.

One of the most famous brasses is at the church at Stratford-on-Avon, England, where many travelers have read the Elizabethan legend:

"Good frend for iesus sake forbeare,

To digg the dust encloased heare;

Blese be ye man yt spares thes stones,

And curst be he yt moves my bones."

The plaque was set above the tomb of William Shakespeare.

Rubbing began long ago when history buffs and persons researching ancestral roots obtained permission to make copies of the plaques. They placed specially prepared parchment-like paper onto the brass and rubbed it with wax crayons, much like placing paper on a coin and tracing its image with a pencil, except that the intricacies and exquisite detail of the commemorative plaques yielded works of art.

Now the London Brass Rubbing Centre has exported the craft to America.

The British group has rendered reproductions of 4,000 original plaques — exact replicas from which paper copies can be rubbed.

Copies of knights, ladies, merchants, lords, priests, and other medieval personnages were brought recently to the Washington Cathedral, Washington, D.C.; the Old North Church in Boston; Christ's Church in Philadelphia, and New York City's 112-year-old Church of the Resurrection, Episcopal.

"Brass rubbing is not only rewarding, it's therapeutic and less expensive than needlepoint," says Ruth Wiltshire, British-born secretary of the Church of the Resurrection where 40 replicas are exhibited.

"We've had people from Colorado and Texas and all over the United States. They're here on holiday (vacation) and some get so fascinated they spend two or three days a week just sitting here and rubbing."

The process, itself, is simple. First is the choice of the subject. One of the earliest in the collection is Sir William Fitzralph of Pebmarsh, Essex, circa 1327.

Perhaps the most popular likeness is called the Lace Lady: Lady Margaret Peyton of Isleham, Cambridgeshire, 1484, depicted in an intricate lace gown and flowing headdress. The panel is 2 feet long and 15 inches wide.

Next is the choice of color of the stubby beeswax crayon — copper, gold, silver or black. Then the rubbing paper, black or white?

Smoothing the paper across the brass surface, one rubs with the crayon lightly at first to get the design, and then more heavily to intensify the color. It takes less than an hour to produce a portrait that can be framed or used as a wall hanging, or even reproduced as a Christmas card.

"The final effect is what you have chosen," says Miss Wiltshire. "That is what makes it so personal and such a good gift. And, for people who don't have the time for rubbing, we also have finished products for sale at a nominal charge."

Miss Wiltshire explained that royalties go to the English churches possessing the original plaques, and that the revenue is helping many poor churches there.

But U.S. churches benefit, too. She said that there is no admission charge to see the exhibits here.

Here's the Answer

Q. — On one side of our house, there are two window wells under the two basement windows. These have worked very well over the years, but lately one of them fills up quickly whenever there is a heavy rain. The water overflows and seeps through the basement window even though it appears to be tightly closed. Why is this happening and is there any way to fix it?

A. — The fact that the wells worked for so long and that only one of them now is affected is an almost certain sign that something has gone wrong with the drainage system at that point along the outside of the house. When a window well is dug, the bottom of it is lined with gravel to facilitate drainage or — and this is a better method — drain tile is placed there to permit the water to flow away from the house. You will have to remove some of the dirt from the bottom of the well and see what you can find. If there is drainage tile, see whether it has become clogged with dirt that has hardened. If not, loosen up the soil as much as you can, then lay about 4 inches of gravel. Or you can put down drainage tile to take the water away from the foundation, a method that is best but entails a considerable amount of digging.

Q. — We are planning to make a lot of use of our fireplace during the cold weather, but we also want to save energy and money. Is there some way we can recover some of the heat that goes up the chimney? I remember reading one time about something that can be used in the fireplace opening to save this heat. We don't want a whole new fireplace unit, just something we can add to the present setup.

A. — There are many such devices on the market and each manufacturer thinks his is the best. Go to a dealer who sells fireplace equipment and see what the choices are. A local store usually has someone who can give you advice on the advantages and disadvantages of each type. Also, see if any neighbor or relative has one. He can give you the best advice of all.

Q. — Some years ago, we put insulation batts between the beams of our attic floor. We now would like to add several inches of the same kind of material to the same area. As I recall it, at the time, we used batts with a vapor barrier, which we laid between the beams face down. When we buy more, is another vapor barrier needed?

A. — It not only isn't needed, it would cost more. Buy the type which does not have a vapor barrier.

Q. My lawn has suffered from brown patch for the past two summers. Please give me some advice for controlling this disease. (J.H., Walkertown)

A. Brown patch is a serious problem on cool season grasses such as tall fescue and bluegrass during hot, wet weather. The fungus that causes the disease is present in all turf throughout the year, but causes leaves to die only when the proper environment conditions occur during the summer. Brown patch often kills young grass, but established grass will usually survive if the lawn is properly managed. Maintain the soil pH for fescue and bluegrass at 6.5 to 7.00. Avoid applying nitrogen during the summer. Cool season grasses should be fertilized only in the fall and spring. Mow frequently. Avoid frequent, light irrigations. If you do irrigate during dry weather, make sure you wet the soil to a depth of six inches. Several fungicides, such as Daconil 2787, Fore, Tersan 1991, Tersan LSR and Dyrene, can be used to control brown patch if they are applied when the disease is developing rapidly. Grass killed by the disease should be reseeded in early fall to maintain a uniform lawn. (Leon Lucas, extension plant pathologist)

Q. Does Sevin hurt bees and therefore interfere with pollination? (C.W., Salisbury)

A. Yes. Sevin is one of the most toxic insecticides against honeybees. On the other hand, it is one of the most effective and widely used insecticides in the home garden. Therefore, the home gardener must decide if the benefits of controlling pests with Sevin outweigh the danger to honeybees. Honeybees are essential pollinators of apples, blueberries, strawberries, cucumbers and watermelons. They are also helpful on other fruits and vegetables. To reduce the loss of polinators, apply all insecticides late in the afternoon when honeybee activity is at its lowest. Avoid direct applications of insecticides on colonies of honeybees. Beekeepers can also cover their colonies when spraying is taking place. (Kenneth Sorensen, extension entomologist)

Q. My four-year-old fig tree had about 200 small figs but only two developed. The others turned yellow and dried up. Why? (C.B., LaGrange)

A. Many fig bushes planted in North Carolina never produce. Pollination appears to be a problem, probably due to the fig bariety not being adapted to this area. Most successful fig plants are those that have been rooted from a cutting taken from a nearby bush that produces good fruit. Nematodes also are a problem. Be sure to plant roots that are free of nematode knots. (Mel Kolbe, extension horticulturist)

Alaskans Debate, But Congress Will Decide Issue

By ROBERT C. MILLER

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (UPI) — The environmentalists and the Alaska sourdoughs are locked in battle again, this time over a bill in Congress known from Cape Barrow to Ketchikan as D-2.

To the sourdoughs the proposed "Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act" is a rematch of the Alyeska pipeline controversy, and once more their battle cry is: "Alaska against the world."

At the weigh-in the two glaring combatants were evenly matched.

In one corner are probably the most independent-minded taxpayers in civilized society, the long-time Alaska residents who react with polar bear ferocity to anything they consider a threat to their Constitution-guaranteed liberties.

In the opposite corner are the equally fanatical environmentalists who believe that only government — and preferably the federal government — can save man from his own greed and prevent him from destroying in Alaska the grandeur and magnificence bestowed by nature. They are positive this beauty is doomed by bulldozers, drilling bits and dynamite.

In their corner are President Carter and the powerful environmentalist lobby, while at ringside they have a rooting section whose vocal chords have been among the strongest in Washington.

The stakes in this political stud poker game are 101.4 million acres of Alaska land which would be placed off limits to any potential exploitation and administered by an Interior Department trusteeship at an estimated cost of between $373 million to $439 million a year.

The environmentalists called the 277-31 House vote approving the bill May 18 "the conservation vote of the century."

Democratic Senator Mike Gravel described it as a "disaster for Alaska and a tragedy that was based on misrepresentation."

Gravel has promised to do everything possible in the Senate to kill the bill, HR39, including a two-man filibuster with Alaska's other senator, Republican Ted Stevens, during which former President Gerald Ford's two-volume biography would be read aloud to the Senate.

Gravel accused the House members of "attempting to win points with the environmental lobby by trading away the future of a distant state — Alaska."

Under Section 17 d(-2) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, Congress has until Dec. 31, 1978, to decide which of the public lands in Alaska's 375 million acres should be reserved in the national interest.

Of the 375 million acres, the Statehood Act gave Alaska authorization to select 104 million for itself. Seven years ago another 44 million acres were given the Native Corporations and their stockholders — the Alaska Indians and Eskimos — under the Native Claims Settlement Act. This still left the deed to a Texas-sized hunk of Alaskan real estate in Washington's strong box.

HR39 would create more than 40 million acres of new national parks and park preserves, 55 million acres of new national wildlife refuges, 2.7 million acres of new national wild and scenic rivers and add 2.7 million acres in national forest.

Although a Dittman Research Associates poll showed 67 percent of the people in Alaska opposed HR39, many of the original settlers favor D-2.

Arthur Upicksoun, who boasts of being a "100 percent pure, unadulterated Eskimo," said he hopes D-2 will pass the Senate.

"The depressed and forgotten people of the north, the Eskimos, need protection," Upicksoun said. "D-2 would create buffer zones which would keep out the 'hippies,' the unwanted, from penetrating into native land, especially in the Arctic Slope region."

He maintained that the Eskimos were not against progress, but he felt they needed the protection of HR39 "to protect our lifestyle, as that was what we were raised on."

All of Alaska's gubernatorial candidates have, in varying degrees, criticized HR39. The loudest criticism has come from former governor and Nixon-fired interior secretary Walter Hickel.

"If we had had a D-2 mentality 15 years ago there never would have been a Prudhoe Bay," Hickel said. "The environmentalists are saying these millions of acres have but one single value: wilderness. Can anyone honestly say that any one single acre in the Arctic has but a single value? Wilderness is something you enjoy; nobody is going to Prudhoe just to enjoy it. They are misleading the American people."

Comeback By Player Piano

By JERRY GRAY
Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The player piano, which shared its heyday with raccoon coats and Model-T Fords, is back in the parlor again, holding its own against the modern stereo.

"Nostalgia definitely has a big part to do with it," Robert Hoyman, vice president of sales for Aeolian Corp., one of three companies making the machines, said in a recent interview.

"Television has become pretty commonplace and people are very selective about what they watch. The player piano is another item of entertainment," he said.

Aeolian competes with the Wurlitzer and Kimball companies for the country's player piano trade. Nine hundred employees at the company's Memphis plant make the pianos from scratch.

Sales statistics are not public, but Hoyman says the player piano industry as a whole ships 10,000-12,000 instruments a year.

Aeolian's involvement with the player piano trade began in the early 1900s.

"A lot of companies made player pianos in the '20s and then the Depression came along and the radio and moving pictures and a lot of things," Hoyman said. "In 1926 there were a couple of hundred thousand player pianos manufactured. Eight years later there were only 414 made. Then there was a period of 20 years there, where no players were being built."

About 1956, Aeolian decided to get back into the player business.

"The people in the industry said, 'You people are crazy, who's gonna buy a player piano in this day of high fidelity and movies and radios?' But the public proved the industry wrong because we have shipped more and more players every month," Hoyman said.

Who's buying player pianos?

"That's a question that we're asked all the time and I don't know the answer," Hoyman says. "We do know when we first started making players, the rolls that people bought were what we call the old chestnuts — with tunes like 'Bill Bailey,' 'The Piano Roll Blues,' and the 'Beer Barrel Polka.'

"Recently, there have been more and more rolls that are like show tunes — 'Camelot,' 'The Sound of Music.' That indicates that maybe a little younger generation is buying the player."

Hoyman said the player piano is related to the 15th-century music box. But it wasn't until 1865, in France, that the first player was built.

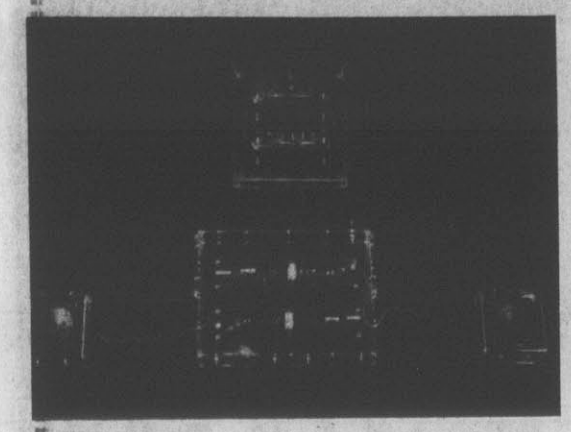
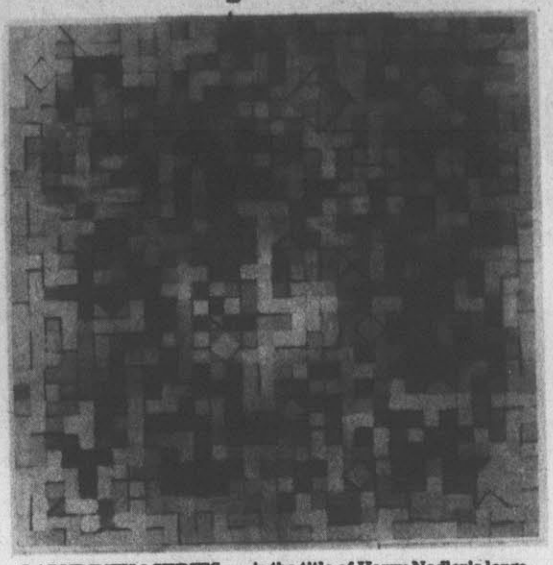
Three Artists In 'Systems' Show At ECU's Gray Gallery



N-SOUND SERIES . . . of 1977 is an example of Alan Erdann's visual-sound art now on view at the Gray Gallery on mpus.



LABYRINTH 2 SERIES . . . is the title of Harry Nadler's large oil on canvas painting included in "Systems," a show by three artists now at the Gray Gallery.

"Systems" is the title given to the exhibition of art by Alan Erdmann, Harry Nadler, and Johannes Lacher, currently on view at the Wellington B. Gray Gallery in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on campus at East Carolina University.

The show, according to gallery director Aaron Karp, will be on view through September 22. Gallery hours are Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Erdman, whose art incorporates the element of sound, has exhibited widely — Wisconsin, Ohio, Florida, New York, Michigan; and overseas in Columbia, West Geramny, Germany, Switzerland, and Canada.

Educated in Wisconsin, he is the recipient of three major grants and has won awards in two Wisconsin annual exhibitions. Erdman is affiliated with galleries in Wisconsin, New York, Canada, Illinois and Kansas.

German born Johannes Lacher, currently an Assistant Professor in painting at USC, Los Angeles, was educated in Marburg and Munich, Germany and holds the M.F.A. degree from the University of Georgia.

Among his awards are a Carnegie Grant, a Ford Foundation Travel Grant, and a research grant from Kansas State University. He is also the recipient of the first prize in an All Media Exhibiton held in Houston, Texas.

Numerous exhibitions of his art have included ones in Florida, New Mexico Illinois, California and Texas.

The third artist of the trio, Harry Nadler, has also had extensive showings of his work — at the Louvre, in Paris; the Los Angeles County Museum, Los Angeles, and at the Berther Schaeffer Gallery in New York City, among other places.

In 1960 Nadler received the first Fulbright Painting grant ever awarded an artist for study in Spain.

Collections in which his work is owned are the Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.; the University of California, Los Angeles, and the Cincinnati Art Museum.

Nadler is an Associate Professor of Art at the University of New Mexico.

Two of the artists — Erdmann and Lacher, are scheduled to speak at ECU Lacher will be here from 3 to 5 p.m. on Sept. 12 and Erdman from 3 to 5 p.m. on Sept. 19.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Julie Hicks

Agatha Christie thrilled and baffled millions of mystery lovers for fifty years, but the biggest mystery is the one concerning Dame Christie herself. Gwen Robyns has written an excellent biography called THE MYSTERY OF AGATHA CHRISTIE which probes the life of a woman who by remaining reclusive and aloof managed to build a wall of secrecy about herself. Robyn's research involved interviews with those closet to the famous author thereby revealing the intriguing personality of a woman who went to great lengths to protect her privacy. The biographer also uncovered the interesting writing habits of a woman who created fascinating murder mysteries with a passion. Indeed the shy, but proper, shrewd, and witty "Duchess of Death" would probably have enjoyed this one herself.

Dorothy B. Hughes has written ERLE STANLEY GARDNER: THE CASE OF THE REAL PERRY MASON, which spans the life of a man of many interests and hobbies. We learn how Gardner's background in law enables him to create the famous character, Perry Mason. With this major breakthrough in his struggling career as a writer, Gardner goes on to become amazingly prolific (147 books, 1000 stories and articles). Gardner's interaction in the professional world is covered quite thoroughly, but Ms. Hughes fails to delve into some of the particulars of the man's personal life; for instance, his thirty-two year separation from a wife of whom he claims to be very fond. However "skimpy" the biography seems to be in this area, it is well worth reading as a portrait of a talented twentieth century writer.

In MERMAN—AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY, Ethel Merman candidly describes the ups and downs of her professional as well as personal life. Along with her co-author George Eells, she traces her rise to fame in those unforgettable musicals like Anything Goes, Annie Get Your Gun, and Gypsy singing such Gershwin, Berlin, and Porter songs as "I've Got Rhythm," "You're the Top," and "There's no Business Like Show Business." Ethel speaks from the heart when she discusses, in dept, her beloved parents, her four husbands, her children, and her closest friends. The writing style of MERMAN is unabashed and even crass at times; yet, it is honest and touching, just like the lady herself.

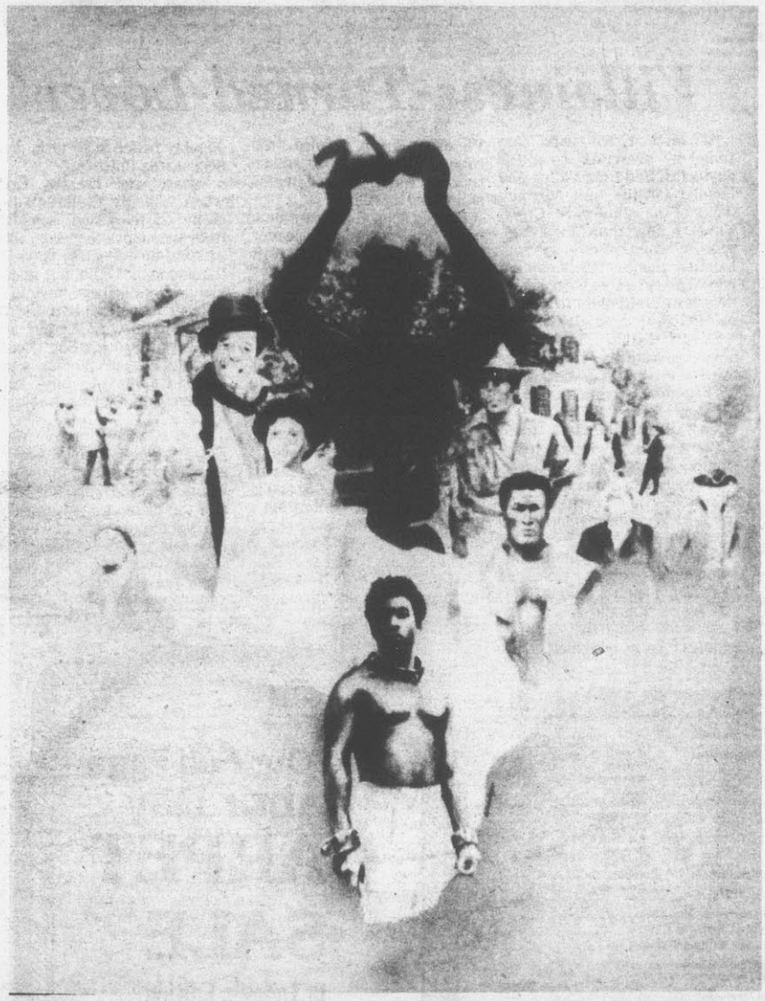
'Roots' Uproots Burton's Lifestyle: Encore Performance Airs This Week



The chains that bound a whole race of people in America snap open triumphantly when ABC-TV presents an encore showing of "Roots," the 12-hour drama of one family's liberation which includes Edward Asner (l) and LeVar Burton among its stars, beginning Tuesday, Sept. 5.

On Jan. 23, 1977, a majority of the nation's television viewers gazed at their sets, fascinated, excited and enlightened by the first episode of "Roots." In Sacramento, California, a 19-year-old college sophomore was also part of that viewing audience in a group including his mother and a few family friends. And, starting that night, his life would be changed forever.

The changes had begun for LeVar Burton, when as a drama major at the University of Southern California, he was chosen for one of the most coveted roles of that year — that of Kunta Kinte, the African youth kidnapped into slavery in "Roots." A year and a half later, Burton recalled his initial feelings, prior to the encore performance of the most popular program in television history, "Roots" is encoring this week on ABC.

"'Roots' was an incredible experience for all of us who were in it, but I was totally new to the business and for me it hit like a tornado," he said. "In the days and weeks immediately afterwards my life was in a whirl with parties, TV appearances, personal appearances and constant, constant attention. I thought I never would come down."

But he did come down. After the euphoria had settled, he realized that he had to make some hard choices about his career. Under the careful guidance of his manager, Dolores Robinson, he began to weigh the various offers that he was receiving.

A Reason To Smile

A few television season ago, there was a series titled "The Good Life." It could have been referring to Bert Parks.

The genial and perenially popular Parks is certainly leading the good life, both professionally and in his personal life.

Professionally, he again will emcee the annual Miss America Pageant, when it airs on NBC-TV live from Atlantic City, N.J., Saturday, Sept. 9, (10 p.m. to midnight). This will be Bert's 24th consecutive hosting assignment and will mark the Miss America's Pageant's 25th consecutive live telecast, both notable TV achievements.

It is also remarkable considering that Bert has never signed a long-term contract to do the Pageant. "I've never had more than a one-year contract," he says smiling.

Teaming up with Parks for the hosting endeavor will be two former Miss Americas, Phyllis George, Miss America of 1971, and Lee Meriwether, Miss America of 1955, who was the first Miss America crowned on television (1954) and the only TV selection judged without Bert on stage in Atlantic City's Convention Hall.

Despite his long association with Miss America or possibly because of it, Parks continues his enthusiasm and fervent espousal of the Pageant. He says admiringly: "When you think of pageants, there's no denying that only the Miss America Pageant is the championship event."

Throughout his career, Parks has been associated with winners. He was host of several popular radio and TV programs including "Break the Bank," "Stop the Music," "Double or Nothing," "Giant Step" and "Circus."

ONE MORE TIME–That's the theme of this year's Miss America Pageant, the 25th consecutive live telecast, with co-hosts Phyllis George (l) and Bert Parks presiding over the celebration and Susan Perkins, Miss America of 1978 who crowns her successor, Saturday, Sept. 9 (10 p.m. to 12 midnight) on NBC-TV.

NBC Offers Sneak Previews

Attending a 'sneak preview' usually means a trip to the movie theatre, the purchase of a ticket, pop corn and a drink, then the search for a seat. But not this time.

NBC-TV is offering viewers a cost-free 'sneak preview' — if, of course, you own a television set — and it's going to last three weeks. Throughout this period the network will present previews of 13 series, plus a sparkling array of specials, a new mini-series and popular theatrical films.

Airing September 5-10, "Sneak Preview Week," will be a World Premiere Movie, "Little Mo," and a peak at five new series; "The Waverly Wonders," "The Eddie Capra Mysteries," "Grandpa Goes to Washington," "Lifeline" and "Dick Clark's Live Wednesday."

Wednesday night there'll be "Dick Clark and a 'Cast of Thousands' (9 to 11 p.m.), when Clark will welcome many well-known names from the entertainment medium, as well as introduce viewers to the feature that will be a regular part of his new weekly series.

Thursday, September 7, might as well be dubbed 'NBC Night,' because three more series will be previewed

First, there's "NBC Welcomes Jo Namath and 'The Waverly Wonders'" (8 to 9 p.m.).

Focus Is On Cranes

Hal Linden, star of ABC-TV's young people's magazine series, "Animals Animals Animals," looks at the crane in art, history, legend and mythology, in the program airing Sunday, Setpember 3, 11:30 to 11:55 a.m.

In Baraboo, Wisconsin, 'Animals' visits the International Crane Foundation, a nonprofit organization dedicated to preserving the cranes of the world. George Archibald explains, "Of the 15 species, 14 are maintained at I.C.F. Eventually, we hope to have 15 pairs of the endangered species. This will serve as a species bank to begin new populations in areas from which their species have been wiped out.

"It's just during the past 100 years," Archibald continues, "that many species have been brought to the brink of extinction. The problem is that they require great expanses of wetland for breeding, and man has drained those wetlands for his own use."

The program includes a look at the beautiful migration of the sand hill cranes across the Platte River in Nebraska. There is a brilliantly animated poem about a crane, a duck, a goose and two "beautiful things," and a fable about how the crowned crane happened to get his crown. The crowned crane and the sand crane, the wattled crane, the hooded crane, and several others, some of which are seen by Hal Linden at the Busch Bird Sanctuary in Van Nuys, California.

Villainess-Turned-Lover

At last! Erica and Tom somehow overcame countless obstacles, fled Pine Valley and headed for the lush surroundings of the island of St. Croix. Viewers may share their happiness when their shot-on-location scenes air, beginning with the September 6 episode of "All My Children" (1 to 2 p.m., on ABC-TV).

Susan Lucci and Dick Shoberg, who play the starry-eyed lovers, spent a week in the Caribbean filming the segments.

Viewers who expect their favorite soap opera personalities to be much the same off-camera as the television characters they portray would be terribly disappointed in Susan Lucci.

Susan, in fact, is almost the complete opposite of Erica. She has been happily married for six years — to "a marvelous Austrian" — and they have a beautiful baby daughter, Liza Victoria. Susan is also well-rounded in her interests and activities, which include tennis, skiing and travelling.

In high school, Susan was an honor student and cheerleader, worked on the newspaper staff, appeared in numerous plays, and still found time to do hospital volunteer work. At Marymount College Susan won a special award for campus involvement and leadership. That doesn't sound much like the spoiled, self-centered character she portrays as Erica, does it?

If there is one thing that Susan and Erica do have in common, it is their earnestness in pursuing a career — Susan as an actress and Erica as a model. But while Susan's efforts have been successful, Erica's efforts have been somewhat thwarted. Which only goes to prove that, contrary to popular belief, nice girls don't necessarily finish last.

Susan, who created Erica when "All My Children" first came on television, says she likes the character very much, in spite of her nasty ways. "I thought in the beginning, and all along as well, there have to be reasons indentifiable to the audience as to why the girl acts the way she does. She doesn't mean to hurt people, she's just very impatient and self-centered and wants what she wants now."

A few months ago, when Erica's affections for Nick cooled, she set her sights for Tom. As usual, Erica got her man, and the loving couple are now sharing their bliss.

What's next for Erica? Who knows. But chances are strong that she'll return to her villainess ways before too long.

New Maverick Welcomed

First there was Bret: James Garner.

Second came Bart: Jack Kelly.

Then came Beau: Roger Moore.

And now here is Ben: Charles Frank.

Simply put, "Maverick" is back with that familiar theme music and those dramatic but always fun stories as Charles Frank stars in a two-hour pilot movie on ABC that airs Sunday, Sept. 3 (9 p.m. on ABC-TV).

And yes, Bret and Bart will be there too, to welcome cousin Ben to the old west as he tries to survive in the same conning way that made James Garner and Jack Kelly household names almost two decades ago.

"The basic premise or concept is pretty much the same," Frank, who is well-remembered from daytime television, explains. "Ben is a gambler, but a sophisticated person who hates the idea of violence, doesn't want to get involved unless he's pushed to the limit. But it's much more than the original show because it was filmed on location.

"As for Ben," Frank continued, "he went to Harvard but got kicked out for running a card game. He decides to go find his roots, and heads west where he gets conned right and left, then meets this girl, Nell."

Ironically, that role is portrayed by Susan Blanchard, who also just happens to be Frank's real-life wife.

"Ben and Nell team up, and in the process they con Bret and Bart. But Nell ends up with all the money, and the three Mavericks end up with nothing.

"Still, there's that Maverick charm," he says proudly. "There are the three of us, that friendly smile, kinc of laid-back. The expert con artists."

Not surprisingly, one of the most enjoyable aspects of the film for Charles was appearing on screen with Garner and Kelly, the originators of two of TV's more legendary figures.

"Jim is such a nice person," he says with genuine admiration. "We had so much fun, and I think this film is the best work Jim's ever done. And Jack's terrific."

"There is a scene where Bret is supposedly burying Bart, but it's part of the con. He flashes back to his earlier years with Bart and you see shots of Garner and Kelly from 20 years ago. You just fall apart because it's so nostalgic."

Should the film evolve into a series, it would be good timing for Garner, whose "Rockford Files" is in its last season. As Frank says, "There's an open-end to this film, which means Jim could come back from time-to-time.

The Maverick family legend grows once again with Charles Frank (l) as Cousin Ben, rides into the West to join James Garner (c) and Jack Kelly in their quick-witted and light-fingered exploits in "The New Maverick," a world premiere on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," Sept 3 (9-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Young Is Profiled

Andrew J. Young is, some say, one of the most controversial figures of our time, a man who has been in the public eye for over a decade, as a colleague of Dr. Martin Luther King, as a Georgia Congressman, and as the United States Ambassador to the United Nations.

But, seen through the eyes of family, friends and colleagues, Young is a man whose life is built on "a ground of faith." A CBS News Religious Special, "A Ground of Faith," which will look beyond the controversies and headlines to examine what motivates the Rev. Andrew Young, will be broadcast Sunday, September 3, 10 to 11 a.m.

The special will feature interviews with Young's family (his wife, parents and brother); Dr. Philip Potter, pastor of Young's church in Atlanta; Dorothy Cotton, now the Southeast Regional Director of ACTION, who succeeded Young as Director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Joseph Lowery, President of the SCLC and pastor of Atlanta's Christian United Methodist Church; and various friends from Young's childhood. The broadcast was filmed on location in New Orleans, Atlanta, Thomasville Ga., and New York City, and includes film clips from his civil rights activities and from his association with CBS News religious broadcast.

"I know," Young says, "that anything I am today started in the church of Jesus Christ." The broadcast examines Young's religious roots, his childhood days in New Orleans, his courtship and marriage to Jean Young, his earliest perceptions of poverty, race and racism, and his affect on the people with whom he worked.

Young talks of his early days in the ministry, his work with the National Council of Churches, his association with the network's "Lamp Unto My Feet" and "Look Up and Live" (since the 1960's), and his deep commitment to the civil rights struggle in the South, including his work with the SCLC and its Voter Education Project.

Dr. Potter of the World Council of Churches describes Young's "Christian shrewdness," his refusal "to believe that there isn't liberation somewhere."

John Denver Featured

The grandeur of America's 19th state will be explored with one of the world's greatest entertainers as the guide when ABC Sports presents John Denver in "Alaska: The American Child," a two-hour special wilderness adventure film airing Sunday, September 3, 7 to 9 p.m.

The film is an account of John Denver's personal adventure across America's last great wilderness frontier. It contains some of the most breathtaking and startling film ever shot in "the land of the midnight sun."

Three original songs were composed especially for this film by Denver and Joe Henry — "To the Wild Country"; "Whalebones and Crosses," inspired by a visit Denver made to a whale graveyard; and "American Child," an ode to Alaska. In addition, John also performs his hit song, "Thank God I'm a Country Boy."

Denver and his companions watch along the banks of the McNeil River as brown bears converge from every direction to fish for and feast on the salmon struggling upstream to spawn. A short while later, Denver comes face to face with three of the brown bears while walking along a deserted road back to camp.

Denver then visits the small town of Barrow, on Alaska's remote northern tip, where pRogress, not necessarily beneficial, has altered the traditional lifestyle of the Eskimos forever — a "tragedy," as Denver observes.

John moves on to a more traditional Eskimo village, Point Hope, where he treats the townspeople to an impromptu concert. This is followed by the most exciting sequence in the film, a whale hunt. The Eskimos of Point Hope, in their small sealskin boats, hunt for bowhead whale among the ice floes between Alaska and Siberia in the same way their ancestors did for generations.

Those Texas Beauties

The Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders, who have electrified football fans all over the nation, will star in their very own musical comedy special, aptly titled "The 36 Most Beautiful Girls in Texas," with host Hal Linden and guest stars Joey Travolta, Charles Nelson Reilly, Billy Crystal and Melinda Naud, airing Monday, September 4, 8 to 9 p.m. on ABC-TV.

Football fans will no longer have to wait for a break in the NFL actions to catch a glimpse of the stunning young ladies who have become a national institution. Viewers will watch them sharpening up their routines in practice sessons, frolicking in the Fort Worth Water Gardens, having fun at Six Flags Over Texas amusement park, and finally, burning up the astroturf in front of thousands of cheering fans just before the World Champion Dallas Cowboys meet the Baltimore Colts in the season premiere of "ABC's Monday Night Football" (9 p.m.). The last five minutes of the special will air live from Texas Stadium.

Emmy nominee Hal Linden, star of "Barney Miller," will guide viewers on a behind-the-scenes tour of Texas Stadium just before the Dallas-Baltimore confrontation gets under way. Linden introduces the audience to the cheerleaders' dedicated, dynamic coach and mentor, Charles Nelson Reilly ("It's an ugly job but someone has to do it"). Joey Travolta portrays a groundskeeper who is swept away by the girl's beauty, Billy Crystal is a diminuitive hot dog vender and Melinda Naud plays a beautiful but lonely technician who tries to control the stadium's hugh electronic scoreboard which seems to have a mind of its own.

Travolta sings "I'd Rather Leave While I'm in Love," and "The Magic Is You" from his new album, Hal Linden performs "September Song" and "Just the Way You Are," and Melinda Naud of "Operation Petticoat" sings "Star." Crystal, who plays Jodie Dallas on "Soap," picks up a cigar, dons a gold blazer and delivers a concise, controlled commentary, a la Howard Cosell, about two ancient gridiron stars, David and Goliath.

On LABOR DAY (Monday, Sept. 4, 8-9 p.m.) ABC-TV will present "The 36 Most Beautiful Girls in Texas," featuring the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders in their very own musical comedy special and starring Hal Linden, Joey Travolta, Billy Crystal, Charles Nelson Reilly and Melinda Naud.

Bernstein Conducts Bernstein

Leonard Bernstein conducts the London Symphonic Wind Band in a television version of his short, satirical opera, "Trouble in Tahiti" on PBS's "Opera Theatre." This special event is slated to air Monday, September 4, at 9 p.m.

"Trouble in Tahiti," an opera in seven scenes with lyrics by the composer, is one of Bernstein's "popular" works like "Fancy Free" and "West Side Story." Written in 1952, the opera is a light-hearted but pointed satire of 1950's suburban sophistication and marital discontent.

Changes For The Romanos

When you take things "One Day at a Time," it's hard to believe how time flies. Norman Lear's fast-paced comedy is already beginning its fourth season, but as changes are taking place in Ann Romano's family, the series makes a change as well — to Mondays, from 9:30 to 10 p.m.

During the upcoming season, the "One Day at a Time" family until will remain intact, although each life will undergo change. Bonnie Franklin stars as Ann Romano, a divorced mother of two daughters. She's become adjusted to being head of a household and has hurdled all her early professional problems at the public relations firm that employs her.

But, besides facing the continuing crisis of raising two lively teen-aged daughters, Ann's own personal life is becoming fuller as well. This year Ann will have a serious romance, possibly with some one she has met in a previous episode. She may also get involved with a married man.

The girls are definately growing up. Julie (Mackenzie Phillips) has spent the year since her high school graduation trying to establish career goals and understand her new adulthood. This year she will give up fashion designing and plunge into a totally new career. She will also become seriously involved with a man. Barbara (Valerie Bertinelli) still has a bit more growing up to do, as she enters her last year of high school.

The wise but wacky superintendent, Dwayne Schneider (Pat Harrington), remains a constant in the life of his favorite tenants. He will have to deal with impotency during one episode and, at another time, makes an important decision about his newly-hired assistant, who is mentally retarded.

Perhaps the story line which will have the most impact during the season revolves around Ed Cooper (Joe Campanella), Ann's former husband. In a two-part premiere episode, Ed has suffered a financial reversal and has asked to be excused from child support. His previously amicable relationship with Ann turns into bitter feuding, as he is seen by his daughers lavishing expensive luxuries on his new wife, and becoming uncontrollably drunk in a public restaurant.

Glynnis O'Connor Stars

Glynnis O'Connor stars as the late tennis great Maureen Connolly, who became the world's best female player at 17, in "Little Mo," an NBC World Premiere movie to be presented Tuesday, September 5, 8 to 11 p.m., on "The Big Event."

Despite little encouragement from her mother, Jess (Anne Baxter), and outright opposition from her stepfather, Gus (Claude Akins), Maureen decides at 9 to take up tennis seriously and become a champion.

Aided by tennis coach Wilbur Folsom (Martin Milner), she soon begins winning junior tournaments in San Diego, her hometown. So Folsom decides she's ready for the big time and sends her to "Teach" tennant (Michael Learned), a top teacher of championship-caliber players.

A San Diego sportswriter, Nelson Fisher (Leslie Nielsen), takes an interest in Maureen and dubs her "Little Mo," because she reminds him of a hard-hitting smaller version of the battleship Missouri, then known as "Big Mo."

Connolly, who dies of cancer in 1969 at age 34, was the youngest player to win at Forest Hills (16) and Wimbledon (17), and was the first woman to win the Grand Slam of tennis (the American, English, French and Australian titles).

Glynnis O'Connor had played tennis just twice before accepting the role to portray Maureen, but she took a crash course in the sport from Nancy Chaffee Kiner. She worked so hard the first few days that her hand was raw and blistered from gripping the racket.

Hour after hour for weeks Kiner pounded away at her until she began stroking like a veteran player. Now a tennis convert, she plays when she has time at her home in New Rochelle, N.Y.

Glynnis, the daughter of NBC News producer Dan O'Connor and actress Lenka Peterson, began acting as an amateur in the third grade. She turned 'pro' as a teen-ager when she began doing commercials.

A WINNING STUDENT—Glynnis O'Connor stars as Maureen Connolly, who became a tennis champion at the age of 16, and Michael Learned portrays her instructor in "Little Mo," a fact-based World Premiere drama on "The Big Event," Tuesday, Sept. 5 (8-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Spider-Man Finds Friend

This season, Spider-Man, or at least his alter ego, Peter Parker, has acquired a girlfriend, Julie Mason, played by pretty newcomer Ellen Bry.

Miss Bry makes her first appearance in the role in a special new episode of "The Amazing Spider-Man," Tuesday, September 5, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV.

"Julie is a photographer on a competing newspaper," Miss Bry says of her role. "She and Peter have more of an affectionate friendship than a romance. There is a definite attraction between them, but they are also rivals. It's a dynamic relationship, with lots of push and pull, and one-upmanship, but with affection."

Miss Bry is quite dynamic herself. Thus far in her career as a stage and television actress, she also has moonlighted as a stunt woman. Not on "Spider-Man," however.

"They won't let me," she says, with a smile. "Stunt work was fun, but it's not something I want to continue. I'd rather be known as an actress."

The petite brunette, who was born in New York City and raised in Connecticut, almost didn't enter the acting profession, despite a strong desire that dates back as far as she can remember. "I was always torn between doing what I though I should be doing and what I wanted to be doing " she explains.

"When I was in second grade, I went on a local children's television show. At one point, the host asked me what I wanted to be when I grew up. I remember thinking immediately that I wanted to be an actress, and then feeling that I wasn't supposed to say that. A little girl was supposed to want to be someone who helps other people. I told him I wanted to be a nurse."

She studied drama in college, but lost her nerve when she got back to New York and wound up with a job doing paralegal work for the Department of Consumer Affairs.

"I was intimidated by New York," she admits. "Finally, I decided that I didn't want to turn around when I was 50 and see any 'what if's' in my life. I went into acting seriously, to see how far I could go professionally. I started studying in earnest. I did showcases and pounded at agents' doors. I did lots of commercials and day-player roles on daytime series."

A featured role which included a fight scene on "Kojak" led her into her side light. "I did the scene myself," she recalls, "and I ended up doing a lot of stunt work for the series."

At the age of 28, Antonia Brico became the first woman to conduct the great Berlin Philharmonic. By the 1930s, she had established a reputation as a talented orchestra conductor. However, the fact that she was a woman barred her from fulfilling her career expectations.

"Antonia: A Portrait of the Woman" is an affectionate profile of Brico's successes and disappointments, her love of music, and the frustrations and discriminations which plagued her throughout her life.

New Stars Are Featured

"Happily Ever After," a new motion picture-for-television starring Suzanne Somers and Bruce Boxleitner, with special guest stars John Rubinstein and Eric Braedon, will be broadcast in its world premiere on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," September 5, 9 to 11 p.m., on CBS-TV.

Mattie (Miss Somers) is an aspiring singer torn between making the most of her one chance at fame in Las Vegas with her fiance-singing partner, Richy (Rubinstein), and dealing with the persistent courtship of an uninhibited, love-stuck mountain man, Jack (Boxleitner).

While Mattie and Richy work at building their careers, their every move is being manipulated by Ross Ford (Braedon), a cynical and ruthless casino operator whose only motive is the possession of Mattie's physical charms.

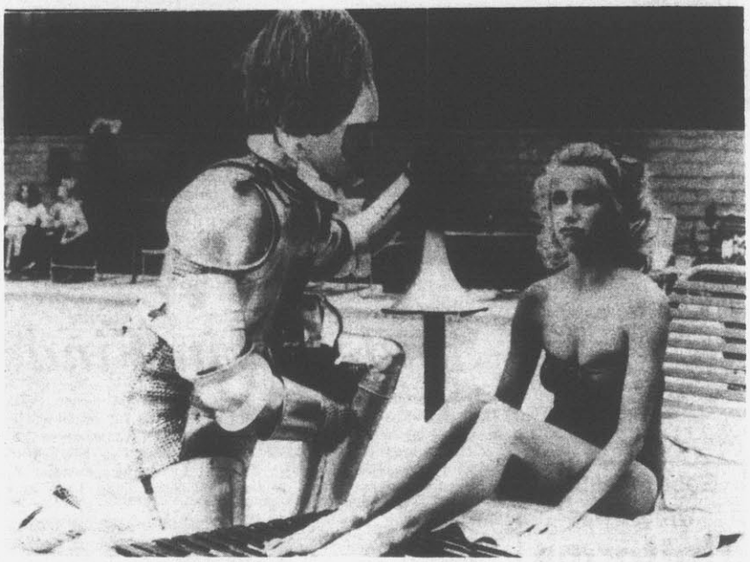
Ford scarely bothers to cover his true intent. Richy is humiliated but is willing to sacrifice Mattie's love for his own success. In the meantime, Jack, who has come out of the hills with his shaggy dog, Moose, in search of love, truth and beauty, seeks to rescue his lady fair from the wicked world of casinos and nightclubs.

Somers, star of the hit comedy series "Three's Company," first attracted attention as the girl in the white Thunderbird in the movie "American Graffiti."

Boxleitner stars as Luke Macahan in "How the West Was Won" and has appeared on many other series.

Braedon starred in the series "The Rat Patrol," and appeared in the movies "The Forbin Project," "Escape From the Planet of the Apes," "A Hundred Rifles," and "Morituri."

John Rubinstein, son of famed pianist Artur Rubinstein, is not only a well respected actor but a composer-musician as well. He is probably best known for his recurring role in the series "Family." He created the title role of "Pippin" on Broadway and has starred in the movies "Getting Straight" and just completed "Boys From Brazil." He composed the theme for "Family" and has scored several motion pictures.



Bruce Boxleitner, as a nightclub singer, appears in ancient armor in an attempt to win the heart of his partner, played by Suzanne Somers, in "Happily Ever After," a motion picture-for-television to be broadcast on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movie," Sept. 5 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Ford Was Almost Gower

If legendary Columbia Pictures studio boss Harry Cohan had his way back in 1942, it would be John Gower — not Glenn Ford — starring in "No Margin for Error," a "Police Story" segment to be rebroadcast as "The Big Event" Sunday, September 3, 9 to 11 p.m. on NBC-TV.

It's not that the late film mogul had any grudge against Ford. On the contrary, Cohan had the then young actor's welfare — and box-office appeal — in mind.

"My real name is Gwyllyn, which means William," said Ford, recalling his Welsh ancestry. "I was put under contract to Columbia, and Harry Cohan wanted to change my name from Gwyllyn to John Gower, since the studios were located on Gower Street in Hollywood. John just happened to be a favorite first name with him.

"I finally took the name of Glenn from my father's birthplace — Glenford, Quebec."

A veteran of over 200 films and two television series, Ford's career has spanned what many cinema aficionados refer to as the "Golden Age" of moviedom to the present "New Hollywood." But he refuses to enshrine the past and sees little difference between the two eras.

In 'No Margin,' Ford portrays a resolute deputy police chief who defends his department and the integrity of three officers (including co-star James Farentino) after separate shootouts leave two bystanders dead and cause a public outcry.

Clark Hosts Special

A galaxy of stars who have been part of Dick Clark's show business career will join him in a look back at the best moment of the 50s, 60s and 70s, and introduce many of the fascinating features which will be a part of his new weekly series, in a two-hour special, "Dick Clark...and a 'Cast of Thousands,'" to be presented during NBC-TV's "sneak preview" week, Wednesday, September 6, 9 to 11 p.m.

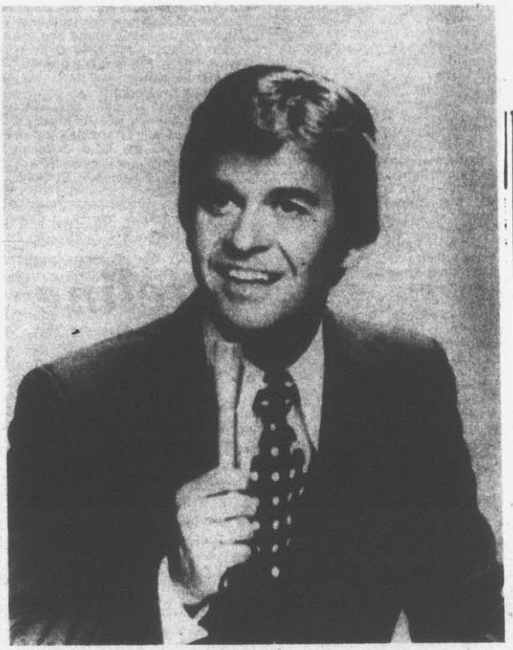
Among the many stars who will reminisce with Dick will be Penny Marshall, co-star of "Laverne and Shirley"; singers Paul Anka, David Soul, Lou Rawls and Marilyn McCoo and Billy Davis Jr.; comedians Jack Carter and Robert Klein; writer-singer Paul Williams; game show host Bill Cullen; impressionist Will Jordan; Doc Severinsen (of 'The Tonight Show'); guitarists Jose Feliciano and Les Paul; and actress Caren Kaye (co-star of the new series, "Who's Watching the Kids").

Film clips from many of the shows Clark has been associated with, including "American Bandstand" and "The $20,000 Pyramid," will be shown, and the new features that will be a part of "Dick Clark's Live Wednesday" will be introduced

Dick will preview the "I'd Like to See" feature, which will have the world's top stunt experts performing feats of daring. A stuntman tumbling down an Arizona cliff will demonstrate what it takes to properly perform a stunt.

Lou O'Neill Jr., a columnist for The New York Post, will preview his current events segment by reporting on the latest news from the whole world of entertainment. Feliciano and Paul will play "Together Again for the First Time," previewing the feature that will team top artists who have never performed together before.

Dick will also preview the "One More Time" feature by showing a clip of the musical "supergroup" which performed on the 25th anniversary of "American Bandstand" in 1975. Many of the same players — including Chuck Berry, Bo Diddley, Johnny Rivers and Billy Preston — will appear on the season premiere of "Dick Clark's Live Wednesday," September 20.



DICK CLARK AT THE HELM—Veteran TV personality Dick Clark will be joined by a galaxy of stars as he introduces many of the features that will be a part of his new fall series in "Dick Clark and a Cast of Thousands," Wednesday, Sept. 6 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Gossett Wanted To Reconnect Roots

For the first time since his Broadway debut as a teenager in 1963, actor Lou Gossett was billed under his full name — Louis Gossett, Jr. — when he starred as Fiddler in "Roots," now encoring on ABC-TV.

Gossett had a reason for the temporary change: "I wanted to reconnect my own roots by using my full name, and the chance to do it — and to do it for this project — really made me feel kind of wonderful.

"I was born and grew up in Brooklyn, Coney Island, really, and my family was fairly poor. My parents each worked two jobs, sometimes seven days a week, and in the summers my cousins and I were all shipped down to my great-grandmother, and she would take care of us herself.

"According to the family Bible she was 117 when she died, but she may have been even older, she wasn't sure. And she actually remembered being a slave as a little girl. She was only three or four, too young to work, but she remembered the day they were liberated from the plantation in Watkinsville, Georgia."

Lou also remembers his great-grandfather, a Cherokee Indian who was the source of a turquoise bracelet the actor wears proudly to this day.

Drama Based On Comics

A young psychiatrist is initiated into the timeless mysteries of the universe and robed with other worldly powers to fight the force of evil in its many manifestations, in "Dr. Strange," a special dramatic presentation to be broadcast Wednesday, September 6, 8 to 10 p.m., on CBS-TV.

Peter Hooten stars as Dr. Stephen Strange, with guest stars Jessica Walter, Eddie Benton, Clyde Kusatsu, and Academy Award-winner John Mills as Lindmer.

"Dr. Strange" was written by Philip DeGuere, based on the Marvel Comics Group characters created by Stan Lee.

An urban and world-weary sorcerer, Lindmer, foresees the return to earth of Morgan Le Fay (Miss Walter), his ancient adversary, who has been granted dominion over men's souls by The Nameless One. To counter her evil magic, Lindmer must pass the Guardianship of the Light on to an initiate, Stephen Strange, a young resident in psychiatry who has no inkling of his destiny.

'Magazine' Airs—CBS

Topics under discussion on "September Magazine" (Thursday, September 7, 10 to 11 a.m., on CBS-TV) are: 1. How San Jose, Calif., deals more effectively and more humanely with rape crimes; 2. One family's encounter with a medical catastrophe; 3. Robin Smith's account of what it's like to be a M.I.A.'s daughter.

'Magazine' editor Sharron Lovejoy reports on how San Jose has taken steps to help rape victims receive sensitive treatment from the police, the hospitals, and the community around them.

Rape victim Jacky Read is shown working with a police officer in advising school students how to deal with an incident of rape and how not to be inhibited about it.

Lovejoy and her camera crew accompany policewomen who work as decoys on San Jose's streets at night — a method that has resulted in four arrests for rape this year.

The results of the community-wide effort: twice as many women in San Jose report rape crimes than women do nationally. And there has been an 88 percent increase in arrests for rape in the city.

According to the government, any illness that costs a family more than 15 percent of its annual income is classified as a medical catastrophe. But David and Marie Dayhoff of Virginia Beach, Va., measured their medical catastrophe not only in dollars and cents, but also in ounces gained and days survived for their baby, Donny.

Donny was born 12 weeks premature and, because of serious lung problems, he was given only a 15 percent chance to live. For four months, Donny was cared for in an intensive care unit, costing the Dayhoffs — who earned $9,000 a year— $80,000 in hospital bills. Although insurance covered 80 percent, they still owed $16,000 that they did not have.

In her undergradute days, Robin Smith felt torn between her love for her father, missing in Vietnam, and the antiwar sentiments of her student friends. Now a graduate student at Boston University, Robin produced a short documentary as a Master's degree project about the pain and gradual growth her family has experienced since her Marine-officer father was official declared an M.I.A.

Excerpts of the film are interwoven with Lovejoy's interview with Robin on the segment.

'Lifeline' Series

"Lifeline," the non-fiction series about the professional and private lives of real doctors, will preview on NBC-TV Thursday, September 7, 10 to 11 p.m., with a program devoted to Dr. Judson Randolph, Surgeon-in-Chief, Children's Hospital, National Medical Center, Washington, D.C.

An infant in immediate need of sophisticated surgery, a 15-year-old boy with severe abdominal pain and a 9-year-old girl thought to have a growth in a lung are the major cases involving Dr. Randolph during the telecast. Included are scenes showing Dr. Randolph caring for two young burn victims.

Hand-held cameras follow Dr. Randolph at Children's Hospital as he performs surgery, comforts patients, talks to their parents and consults with doctors on his staff.

He is also shown away from his hospital duties, spending time with his family, enjoying a card game with friends and attending a high school football game in which one of his sons is a participant.

The first major case covered by the cameras involves the infant, Fredericko Vargas, of Woodbridge, Va. He is choking on aspirated saliva five hours after birth because he was born with a swallowing tube which did not connect with his stomach. The decision to operate is made.

Pike's Peek

By Charlie Pike, TV Showtime staff writer.

HOLLYWOOD — Bonnie Franklin, though a native Californian, considers New York her home, having spent so many years appearing in stage plays and finding work from there in summer stock and repertory theatre before landing her starring role in "One Day at a Time." However, she has apparently decided that L.A. is going to be home for awhile. She just bought her first home.

Speaking of buying homes, there's now a 'for sale' sign in front of the Beverly Hills mansion occupied by Edie Adams. It's the same residence she shared with her late husband, Ernie Kovacs.

Hollywood karate instructor Ed Parker, who was a close friend as well as a personal karate instructor to the late Elvis Presley, has pinned a book on the King of rock 'n' roll, and he's being urged to put some of his personal keepsakes on display for Elvis' many fans. Because of having the same initials, Ed has such personal items as sun glasses, rings and even a pistol with 'E.P.' enscribed on all of them. He's also the owner of a cape and a belt that Elvis wore on his Hawaii TV special.

It's said that James Caan is having thoughts about remarrying ex-wife Sheila Ryan, which is certainly not uncommon in tensiltown these days. Elliott Gould is remarrying ex-wife Jenny Bogart, and of course Robert Wagner and Natalie Wood have found that it is indeed better the secound time around.

Isn't it true that a lot of folk associated with "Three's Company" are a bit put out by Suzanne Somers' public conversation about her tainted past? Specifically, isn't it agreed that the fact she posed semi-nude and in brief attire should not be dignified by a lot of candid conversation by the actress? That's the scuttlebutt.

The rumor mill has it that Robert Urich and Hearther Menzies will soon have a newcomer in their household to further brighten the debut of Bob's new series, "Vega$." Reportedly, they'll become parents of an adopted child any day now.

Cheryl Ladd is burning the candle at both ends with her work on "Charlie's Angels" and her non-stop promotional appearances on behalf of her first album for Capitol Records. Somehow, she's holding up fine, and it's no secret that her visits to radio stations and the like are helping the air-play of the album a lot.

Capra Solves Case

Blackmail, bitterness and undying loyalty are three of the elements in the puzzle that Eddie Capra works to unravel in "Nightmare at Pendragon's Castle," the special two-hour sneak preview presentation of "The Eddie Capra Mysteries," Friday, September 8 (9 to 11 p.m.), on NBC-TV. Vincent Baggetta stars in the title role.

Robert Vaughn, George Hamilton, Gerald O'Loughlin, Stella Stevens, Lois Nettleton, Robert Walker, Robert Hogan, Janet Margolin and John Considine are the guest stars.

Charles Pendragon, a powerful publishing magnate who enjoys inflicting pain on his employees when their loyalty shows signs of wavering, is slain. Daniella Steffens, an aspiring actress, who — under duress — spent the night with Pendragon, is accused of the crime. Capra uncovers a slew of motives by talking to the other suspects. The most puzzling questions for Capra — and for all mystery buffs — are: how was the crime committed when the weapon was a sword that only the victim could have removed from the stone in which it was embedded; and who could have capitalized on Pendragon's most vulnerable moment?

Vaughn plays Charles Pendragon, and Janet Margolin is cast as Daniella Steffens.

Eddie Capra is a lawyer with a unique attitude toward the law — he isn't sure it works. At least not all the time.

But when you're dealing with murder and the stakes are life in prison or worse, something had better work, especially if the client is innocent. Hence, the Capra approach to his client's case.

Rather than trusting the outcome of the vagaries of the judicial system, the glibness of a D.A. or the caprice of a jury, Eddie would much rather unmask the real killer before his client ever comes to trial.

Usually, he is successful because he is very good at what he does. Eddie is a maverick, a near-genius at puzzle solving and putting the pieces together. He can be found shrieking "Eureka" when the rest of the world is still benumbed, bumbling and bewildered.

Each week, Eddie will find himself confronted with an intriguing mystery, and the audience, hopefully, will find itself playing right along, becoming involved and trying (if you can) to get to the solution before our hero does.

Sometimes you will. Usually you won't. But so what? Isn't the fun really in the playing?

SIX CBS PROGRAMS HONORED

American Women in Radio and Television has honored six CBS programs for enhancing the image of women.

Honored were "See How She Runs," a TV film starring Joanne Woodward, and "A Death In Canaan," starring Stafanie Powers.

Also cited were the "Edith's 50th Birthday" segment of "All in the Family," and the "Housewarming" episode of "Lou Grant."

"Magazine," a program about women was also honored, along with "What's Happening," a daily women's series on CBS Radio.

Jeff's Still Hockey Fan

Canadian actor Jess Lynas was 11 years old when he journeyed to Hollywood to play the title role in the award-winning drama "Something for Joey." The two-hour special, telling the story of Heisman Trophy winner John Cappelletti and the brotherly love and devotion he felt for his younger brother, suffering from leukemia, will be rebroadcast Friday, September 8, 9 to 11 p.m., on CBS-TV.

Unlike many 11-year-olds living in America, Jeff was not a devotee of football, or of baseball. A self-proclaimed hockey fanatic, whose loyalties lie squarely with the Toronto and Montreal teams, Lynas had to do a bit of homework to quality as the younger brother of a star football players. In the special Joey plays on a Little League baseball team, so Jeff had to study up on that, too. And baseball, Jeff points out, "isn't cricket."

Luckily, in the weeks it took to film "Something for Joey," the football season was in full swing. Jeff was able to watch a lot of games and a lot of different teams and discuss the strategies and points of the game with his co-star Marc Singer, who plays John Cappelletti. Jeff became an avid devotee of the game which motivated his screen family. John Cappelletti was selected by the nation's sportswriters as best college football player of the year in 1973 and awarded the Heisman Trophy. And as much as Jeff learned to enjoy football, he made a hockey fan out of Marc.

The task of learning a new game, complete with its own rules and regulations, was not a difficult job for Jeff, who has, according to his mother, an extraordinary memory. Jeff made his acting debut in a motion picture, "Lies My Father Told Me." He was only six at the time and he couldn't read well enough to study the script. Each morning, the director would read Jeff the lines that he was responsible for during that day.

Jeff, who will soon be seen in an upcoming TV special, "Lovey: A Circle of Children, Part II," still claims that memorizing is a breeze. He memorizes the night before only what he will need for the next day.

Now back in Canada again, a year later, Jeff is in school with his old friends, and has resumed his street hockey games. He's still devoted to the Toronto Maple Leafs and the Montreal Canadiens, and football is now relegated to the sports pages of the newspaper — the only part of the paper he reads.

Marc Singer (l) stars as Heisman Trophy-winner John Cappelletti and Jeff Lynas plays his younger brother, Joey, stricken with leukemia, in the award-winning drama "Something for Joey," to be rebroadcast Friday, Sept. 8 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Butterfly Stars As Godmother

Butterfly McQueen — who appeared as Prissy in "Gone with the Wind" — stars as a fairy godmother who pops up on a television screen to grant secret wishes to a girl in Harlem in "The Seven Wishes of Joanna Peabody." This magical tale of wishes that sometimes come too true will be the season premiere presentation of the "ABC Weekend Specials" series, airing Saturday, September 9, 12-noon to 12:30 p.m.

Joanna Peabody, at age 12, feels that she has more than her share of problems: an older sister who nags her, a baby brother who babbles constantly, seemingly endless household chores and a wardrobe restricted to hand-me-down clothes — all the hardships that make life a trial at 12.

Then, one magic morning, "Aunt Thelma" suddenly appears on Joanna's TV screen to say: "I'm your official Special Spirit, come from the Special Spirit place to watch over you and give you something nice."

The "something nice" Aunt Thelma has to offer is seven wishes, three of which Joanna wastes without realizing what she is doing.

Now a little more careful, Joanna makes a practical request for "a ton of clothes," but since Aunt Thelma has sworn her to secrecy she can't explain where they came from, so she is carried off to the police station for shoplifting.

Joanna stays out of jail — the clothes were not, after all, stolen from anywhere. However, she is now much more wary about the danger of getting what you thoughtlessly wish for. With a little wise counsel from her Special Spirit, she learns an important lesson about herself, life, and the love of others. And who could wish for anything more?

Star-Shemah co-stars as Joanna, and Garrett Morris, of "NBC's Saturday Night Live," is cast as Frank.

Butterfly McQueen became a part of film history when she said "Lawdy, Miss Scarlett, I don't know nothin' 'bout birthin' babies." in "Gone With the Wind," and her magic hasn't dimmed in the 40 years since. Miss McQueen knows everything about young girls when she stars as a fairy godmother granting some very special wishes in "The Seven Wishes of Joanna Peabody," the season's premiere of the "ABC Weekend Specials," series Saturday, Sept. 9 (12-12:30 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

The Teen Scene

The success of "The Buddy Holly Story" has definitely effected Gary Busey's life. For his next film, his agent is demanding a salary of $250,000 plus a percentage of the box office.

Speaking of money, Merchandising Corporation of America has filed suit to claim money from four different companies who have made a fortune selling Shaun Cassidy keepsakes but have not paid MCA or Shaun their part of the take. The suit says that almost $160,000 is owed.

Leif Garrett is safely back home after a whirlwind two-week promotional tour of Japan and Hong Kong that included visits to Tokyo, Kyoto and Osaka. Lief covered 12,000 miles in just 14 days, but still had time to pick up an ample amount of new camera equipment. Photography is becoming Leif's newest hobby.

Donny and Marie's show will have an entire new look this season, including emphasis on disco with an internally lit and pulsing dance floor, a dozen disco dancers that replace the ice skaters and an audience seating arrangement that will find the brother and sister surrounded on three sides. By the way, Marie's 19th birthday is approaching very rapidly.

Something not seen on Kristy and Jimmy McNichol's TV special was an impromptu musical jam session with them and the Osmonds and guest stars John Travolta, Donny Most and Maurice Gibb. Unfortunately, the cameras were not rolling.

Huskies Are Set On Revenge

The Bruins of UCLA and the defending Pacific-8 champions, the Huskies of Washington, will tee up the 1978 season Saturday, September. 9, at 6 p.m. on ABC-TV.

The contest will be of major significance in determining the first championship of the expanded Pacific-10 conference.

Last January, as the conference representative, Washington went on to win the Rose Bowl by upsetting heavily-favored Michigan 27-20. Runner-up UCLA is expected to be one of the prime contenders with serious aspirations to unseat the Huskies from their lofty throne this year.

Washington fields a veteran club with the most significant vacancy having been created by quarterback Warren Moon. There has been a three-way battle for starting honors between senior Duane Akina, sophomore, red-shirt Tom Flick, and JUCO transfer Tom Porras.

Whoever ends up calling the signals will have a stubborn group of receivers to select from. Senior split-end Spider Gaines is the most notable as a world-class hurler, with 30 receptions in 1977 for 660 yards during the regular season. Junior Gary Briggs hauled in 21 from his flanker spot, while senior tight-end Scott Greenwood accounted for 22.

The Huskies will operate from an 'I'-formation with the quarterback doing a bit of running, but not a lot.

UCLA, on the other hand, favors the 'Veer.' Rick Bashore returns as the signal caller. His outstanding ability to run with the ball, to get outside quickly on the option play, as they run so often, is the key to the UCLA offense. The reason his outside ability is so paramount is that it sets up the other Bruin runners and makes them difficult to key on.

UCLA's major strength this year is their runners, led by Olympic hurdler James Owens and the School's seventh greatest all-time rusher, Theotis Brown.

'Rollers' Host 'Krofft Hour'

The "Krofft Superstar Hour," starring the internationally famous rock group, the Bay City Rollers," premieres Saturday, September 9, 11 a.m. to 12-noon, as part of NBC-TV's new Saturday morning line-up of programs for young viewers. The program will feature contemporary music, comedy and adventure vignettes with the Krofft characters — Whitchiepoo, Hoodoo, H.R. Pufnstuf, Dr. Deathray, Barbie and Weenie.

The Rollers provide the musical, top-40s feel of the show and introduce the comedy and adventure vignettes, "Lost Island" and "Horror Hotel."

The musical highlights of the fast-paced enterainment include the Rollers in concert singing "Rock and Roll Honeymoon," "Too Young to Rock 'n' Roll" and "Rock 'n' Roll Love Letter." Also featured are Kapt. Kool and the Kongs— a multi-talented musical-comedy group — with a number entitled "Crazy Girl."

In the "Phantom of the Rock Opera" segment of "Horror Hotel," Hoodoo talks Witchiepoo into allowing him and organist Igor Strange to be the hotel's entertainers. Strange proves to be so terrible that Witchiepoo replaces their act with the Bay City Rollers. This action proves to be bad news for the Rollers.

"The Sleestak Empire" segment of "Lost Island" finds Pufnstuf ill with a virus. Barbie and Weenie travel to the City of the Doomed, home of the Sleestack creatures, to get herbs for a cure. The evil Dr. Deathray, Pufnstuf's adversary, follows them and attempts to steal a rare jewel, "the life stone," and that gets them all in trouble.

The Rollers, who range in age from 20 to 26, have received five gold albums and much critical praise.

Tourney To Air

ABC Sports will present exclusive, same-day coverage of one of the world's most prestigious and important amateur golf tournaments — The United States Men's Amateur Golf Championship — from the Plainfield Country Club in Plainfield, New Jersey, Sunday, September 3, 5 to 6:30 p.m.

This match-play tournament, dating back to 1895, has been won by some of the greatest names in golf down through the decades, starting with Francis Ouimet and Bobby Jones, a five-time winner between 1924 and 1930. Since then, winners have included Gene Littler, Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Deane Beman, Lanny Wadkins and Jerry Pate.

A field of 200 is eligible for this year's championship at Plainfield, with most qualifying through sectional playoffs. Exemptions from qualifying go to winners of the last five Amateur Championships, the current British Amateur champion, last year's quarter-finalists, low amateur in this year's U.S. Open, plus the current Junior Amateur, Amateur Public Links and Senior Amateur champions.

Redskins And Patriots Square Off

The Washington Redskins, under the guidance of their new coach, Jack Pardee, are hoping for a win when they play the New England Patriots Sunday, Sept. 3. CBS will televise the game beginning at 1 p.m.

The arrival of Pardee in the nation's capitol to assume the football ambassadorship is perhaps the single most significant morale booster for the area's citizenry in many years.

George Allen managed to make the Redskins competitive, and yes - even winners. In fact, he is the most successful coach in Redskin history; but, what a price he paid!

Allen ran a football team like a kid in a toy shop with a credit card. He traded draft picks for seasoned veterans, all the time selling the Redskin fans on "The future is now." These fans were so elated to leave the stadium with a smile for a change, that they endorsed his tactics - praised his genius, and went on merrily down the road to eventual demise.

Allen's tactics are satisfactory in the short run of things, but at some point in time, you're saddled with older players and no remaining young draft picks to replace them with.

It was generally expected that when that point in time came, George Allen would take his winning record and move on to another team and start the process again. The end result is obvious, and many are snowed into thinking Allen is a winner, while only the loyal fans of the team who are left behind can really appreciate the mess that remains. So it came to pass that 1978 was that particular point in time when George Allen left Washington.

Fortunately, the Redskin fans were able to see through Allen, and it didn't take long to realize those rookies who weren't good enough for Washington were doing fine in places like Dallas, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Oakland and even Denver. Furthermore, it became obvious that George Allen was a defensive genius, but his talents stopped there. He could not pluck successfully from the college draft, nor could he mold young talent with seasoned veterans into a cohesive unit.

Washington running back Mike Thomas (No.22) is hoping for another 1,000 yard rushing season this year. The Redskins tackle the New England Patriots Sunday, Sept. 3, 1 p.m. on CBS-TV.

'Bad Guys' Are 'Good Guys' Too

"From the beginning we wanted to dominate professional football," says Oakland's main force, Al Davis. "We wanted to be the most respected...no, that's not quite right. We wanted to be the most feared team in the game. We wanted teams to come into that dark gray coliseum on those cold, damp days, see the black shirts on the other side, and feel something frightening."

There is little doubt that Oakland has succeeded. The guys in the black shirts are not only the winners of the best won-lost record since 1967, but they are also the NFL's Bad Guys. The label sticks to every member as does their pirate emblem to every helmet.

"We're not dirty," insists linebacker Phil Villapiano. "We play hard, but not dirty. But adults, kids, everyone always asks about the Raiders being the dirtiest team in pro football."

It is a legacy Al Davis has given each member of the Oakland squad, and it is an indelible image.

While collectively, the Oakland Raiders cannot change their image as the Bad Guys, off the field they are very definately Good Guys.

Villapiano and Otis Sistrunk are involved in trying to curtail youthful vandalism on Oakland's mass transit bus system, and Gene Upshaw has been appointed by Governor Jerry Brown to the board that runs California's 104 community colleges.

Oakland guard George Buehler works with handicapped athletes who compete in the Special Olympics, while Upshaw, Willie Brown, Mark van Eeghen and Dave Casper are into oil painting. Ray Guy makes rugs and Dave Rowe collects stamps. Villapiano does his thing too...he's hooked on growing roses.

Huseman Recreates Role

John Huseman re-creates his Academy Award-winning role of the fearsome professor of law who petrifies yet captivates his students, in "The Paper Chase," a compelling one-hour drama based on the 1973 motion picture, to be broadcast as a special preview presentation, Saturday, September 9, 8 to 9 p.m., on CBS-TV. ("The Paper Chase" will be presented as a regular series this fall, starting Tuesday, Sept. 19, on CBS.)

Co-starring as first-year students taking Professor Charles W. Kingsfield's course in contract law, who form a study group to combat the stiff competition for law school grades, are James Stephens as James T. Hart, Tom Fitzsimmons as Ford, Katharine Dunfee Clarke as Linda O'Connor, Robert Ginty as Anderson, James Keane as Willis Bell, and Jonathan Segal as Jonathan Brooks. Also co-starring is Deka Beaudine, playing Asheley Brooks, Jonathan's wife.

Stephens, as the unsophisticated Hart, makes the mistake of coming unprepared for class discussion on the first day of contract law, a cardinal sin to the ritualistic Professor Kingsfield. As a result, Hart is informed by Kingsfield that he has been "shrouded," the professor's way of dismissing Hart from further discussions for the entire school year.

Despite the stigma of being shrouded, Hart is accepted into a study group being formed by the brilliant student, Ford, who has a "hunch" about Hart's latent law capabilities.

From that point on, Hart's dedication is directed to regaining Kingsfield's approval, and he comes up with a most ingenious method to attain that end.

Houseman, who earned early success as a producer and director on the stage, won an Oscar for his performance as Professor Kingsfield in the motion picture "Paper Chase."

He was co-founder of the Mercury Theatre on Broadway, with Orson Welles, and has directed such Broadway plays as "King Lear" and "Coriolanus."

He has produced numerous motion pictures and his trademark has made a bold imprint on television with many distinguished production credits.

On the academic side, he was an associate professor of English drama at Vassar College, and is currently a professor and producer of drama at the University of Southern California.

'Pallisers' Return

Three-time Emmy Award-winning Susan Hampshire returns to American television as the strong-willed and lovely Lady Glencora Palliser, Duchess of Omnium, in the lavish 22-part spectacle "The Pallisers," beginning in September on PBS. This special encore will be broadcast six nights a week until the series concludes.

Based on six 19th century novels by Anthony Trollope, "The Pallisers" dramatizes the political and social fortunes of three generations of Pallisers, a nobel English family at the height of Queen Victoria's reign. The series begins with the marriage of Lady Glencora M'Cluskie and the honorable and rather stodgy Plantagenet Palliser amid twirling parasols and lifted top hats. As were so many marriages at that time, this union is forced by titled elders, the Duke of Omnium and Glencora's harridan aunts.

It is a loveless match, for Glencora still pines for her old suitor, Burgo Fitzgerald. In order to appease her, Plantagenet invites Alice Vavasar, his wife's cousin and friend, to their family estate at Matching Priory. Burgo will not let the Pallisers' marriage stand in the way of his love for Glencora and he begs her to be with him.

As the Pallisers rise politically and socially, they develop numerous friends and enemies. Their saga is filled with mystery and adventure, politics and love. It is a fascinating and beautiful perspective on the great age of Victoria.

Miss America: not sweet, not sour.

FOR PHYLLIS GEORGE, TV sports personality, Miss America in 1971 and cohost of current pageant

Can you honestly say you would be where you are today without your title. And — the truth now — are the contestants as saccharin-sweet backstage as they are on TV? —P.E., Bangor, Maine

● It's hard to project what would have happened to me had I not won. Although I was, and still am, very competitive, I did lead a sheltered life and was protected by conservative parents. Without my crown I could not have met fascinating and famous people — from the President down. As to the girls, they don't have time to be sweet, but they aren't sour, either. They're too busy with what's ahead of them. It's hard to keep your figure streamlined and perfect your talent in the midst of mounting tension. The toughest part is fighting off fears and insecurities.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Why did Esther Rolle walk out on Good Times at the height of its popularity, and what brought her back? —S.R., Trenton, N.J.

● More than a year ago, Esther had a disagreement with the producers over the direction the show was taking. She said: "My main objection was that the series was not typical of ghetto life; the characters did not deal with their problems the way ghetto people would. Therefore Good Times became unrealistic, unlike the way it was when it was first aired. I wanted to take all those ghetto problems and treat them comically. The producers said no. That's what brought about the dispute." A couple of months ago, she was asked to do some guest shots on Good Times and she found out that the barriers had dissolved. That means the upcoming series will have a stronger family base and that Esther will have a chance to contribute story ideas.

Better times for Good Times.

FOR RAY MARSHALL, Secy. of Labor

Is it true that only the first 4 percent of our unemployed are unemployable? —Henry George, Wenatchee, Wash.

● No. Very few people who want to work are unemployable, though some may be able to perform only limited jobs. Almost everyone can be trained to be employable. This is evident from past experience: the basic problem underlying unemployment is lack of sufficient job opportunities, not inability of our work force to work.

FOR BONNIE FRANKLIN, star of CBS-TV's One Day at a Time

Since you're a divorcée in real life and also on the show, what's the first thing a newly divorced woman should do? —W.P., Gary, Ind.

● Go out and get a job. That's the first priority. If the woman has no skills, it doesn't matter. She should do anything from selling cosmetics door-to-door to office temporary work. Biggest problem is learning to stand on one's own two feet after having a man around.

FOR ELIZABETH L. POST, etiquette authority

Is it all right to wear a pants-suit in church? —B.G., Jackson, Mich.

● I'm thumbs-down on women wearing trousers in a house of worship, no matter how well-tailored or expensive they are. Conservative clothes are and always will be the correct garb. But if it's a question of going to church in pants or not going at all, I'd say the act of churchgoing is all-important, not what one wears. I wouldn't expect them to buy an outfit just for religious purposes.

FOR JERRY DOGGETT, commentator for Los Angeles Dodgers

I heard you started as a player. When did you become a commentator? —M.M.D., Casper, Wyo.

● I was never a player. Although I had an intense desire to become one, it was aborted by my slowness afoot and inability to hit a curve ball. So I turned to radio work and took a job at a small station in Texas, concentrating on sports. Mutual friends in the field recommended me to the Dodgers in 1956; and I've been with them ever since.

FOR CHARLIE RICH, country singer

What are you doing with a chain of hamburger restaurants? —F.S., Monterey, Calif.

● You mean, what was I doing. Over three years ago, my managers felt I should start investing my money, so I became co-owner of a restaurant chain in the Nashville area. I chose the fast-food business because I like hamburgers. I sold out because it took up too much of my time, and I didn't have enough left for my recording and film work. I got $4 million for my share.

FOR IVAN HUBER, Assoc. Prof. of Entomology at Fairleigh Dickinson University

I read of your technique for grinding and freeze-drying insects for use as a food supplement to an animal diet. Will this ever be fed to humans? —R.S., Clearwater, Fla.

● Our aim was to demonstrate that this kind of food resource could increase the available food supply for domestic animals. I don't think their direct use in human nutrition is likely in the immediate future.

PRO AND CON

Should FBI Agents Be Punished For Infractions In The Line Of Duty?

PRO Aryeh Neier, executive director, American Civil Liberties Union

We now know that FBI agents committed burglaries, and worse, against political dissidents. Forgiving FBI agents for their crimes is worse than the crimes themselves because it legitimizes the suppression of dissent and implies approval of government lawlessness. While it is the responsibility of every citizen to obey the law, that duty falls heaviest on public officials who enforce the law. If they are exempt from punishment, the rule of law is demeaned. Those most deserving of punishment are the top officials of the FBI who knew what was going on and encouraged it, either overtly or by their silence.

Illustration by Hal Just

CON Frank Carrington, exec. director, Americans for Effective Law Enforcement, Inc.

No, not unless they willfully and knowingly violate the law. Law enforcement is a difficult, demanding, often dangerous job. Distinctions between the duty to protect and "illegal acts" are not easily made. When agents act in reasonable good faith to prevent threats to our society they should not be "second guessed" because the political climate has changed. Bombers, kidnappers and other terrorists present a real threat. They don't have to play by the rules; law-enforcement officers do. But it's a serious business. Let's not condemn those who try to keep our society free.

A PASSION TO SCULPT A MOUNTAIN

For 30 years this man with a mission and his family have been blasting a gigantic memorial to a forgotten American.

Korczak Ziolkowski and his wife Ruth review their schedules close by their mountain-moving venture.

Two models of Crazy Horse: a sculpture of the Chief's head and a casting of the mounted warrior.

By Robert Woessner

Korczak Ziolkowski (pronounced Corz-chock Jewel-cuff-ski) is a mountain carver. This 70-year-old man, with a long beard, massive shoulders and work-scarred hands, is blasting a 641-foot-long by 513-foot-high statue out of a mountain in the vicinity of Custer, S.D. — a monument to a North American Indian, Crazy Horse, the Sioux chief who defeated General George Armstrong Custer in the historic battle of the Little Bighorn in 1876.

Many of the approximately one million tourists who flock to the statue-in-progress site each summer to watch what Korczak and his sons are doing (they pay $4 a carload for the privilege) question the sculptor's motives and methods. The more typical observations heard go something like this:

"If he must build a statue of Crazy Horse, does he have to do it almost in the shadow of the town named after the General? That's rubbing it in."

"The mountain was beautiful — and he's defaced it."

"He's got to be crazy to spend so much time and energy doing that."

"Custer's Last Stand was heroic, so instead of creating a monument to the General, Korczak is honoring the man who defeated him."

"It's one thing to carve a figure out of rock — that's art. It's something else to blast a form out of a mountain with explosives — that's mechanical desecration, not human creation."

"He must be making a mint of money from this."

Korczak shrugs off these comments when he hears them, but usually he's too busy to pay attention to anything but the work he is doing. Besides, his whole life provides the answer to why a man would dream of reshaping a mountain — and have the audacity to go through with it.

It all began in Boston when Korczak, while working in a shipyard as a teenager, discovered that he had a talent for carving. His skill attracted attention; he found a patron, and he created a statue of Noah Webster in West Hartford, Conn. The statue was highly controversial, but Korczak kept on doing what he had to do in the way he had to do it.

In time, Korczak's remarkable talent came to the attention of Gutzon Borglum, who had been commissioned to carve huge busts of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt on the side of Mt. Rushmore in South Dakota. Korczak became Borglum's assistant.

"I loved that man," Korczak says. And from him he learned to respect the integrity of huge masses of compact rock and earth that dwarf their surroundings and jut up towards the heavens. "You can put too much strain on a mountain," he explains. "You blast too hard and you crack it."

Korczak learned from Borglum — and with him — and then he felt it was time to carve a mountain of his own. He found his inspiration in the words of a letter he received from Henry Standing Bear, a Sioux chief and nephew of Crazy Horse, who asked him before the start of World War II to erect a great memorial, "so that the white man will know that Indians had their heroes, too."

"I didn't know any Indians," Korczak recalls. "I'd never heard of Crazy Horse. But after the war, Standing Bear and I walked these hills and looked for a place for the memorial."

As the sculptor learned more and more about the history of the great Sioux nation — its growth, its flowering, its withering, its decay — his vision of the size and the scope of the statue he would create of Crazy Horse increased. He knew that no words were inscribed on the tablets that adorned the busts of the American Presidents at Mt. Rushmore. But he discovered other forgotten words — words contained in United States Government treaties that gave the Indians sovereignty over the Black Hills "for as long as the water ran and the grass grew," promises that had been broken. And he was determined that Americans should be familiar with a major strain of their precious heritage.

So in 1948 he bought land in South Dakota adjacent to a national park and then traded it for title to Thunderhead Mountain. He married — but he warned his wife Ruth what the priorities of their lives would have to be. He recalls, "I told her the mountain came first, then the children and then her."

Even as he and his wife were running sawmills and a dairy, selling sculpture, adding rooms to their home and having children, Korczak prepared for the creation of his masterpiece atop the 4,800-foot peak. He collected tools. He carried lumber on his back to build a 740-step stairway. He lugged hammer and chisel, drill and dynamite. He bought heavy equipment — compressors, bulldozers, trucks, more sophisticated drilling rigs. A road was hacked out of the mountain's back. As the work slowly progressed, a scaffold, built on tracks, was constructed on the Indian's arm. Drilling can be done from there; then the rig can be pulled back for blasting.

After almost 30 years of drilling and blasting, there's still a tremendous effort ahead before the finished statue of Crazy Horse emerges in all its grandeur. Korczak and his family have endured debt (fees from visiting tourists now enable the project to pay its own way), political interference ("I turned down $10 million from the Government twice," Korczak says. "This can't be an official project") and personal abuse (those who claim the sculptor is only working for personal gain are unaware that in 1950 the Crazy Horse Foundation was formed, deeding the property to the Indians).

And the sculptor has survived serious injury. Korczak is reshaping his mountain, but in return it is misshaping him. It has broken his arms, his back, a leg, ribs. It has given him two heart attacks and a limp. It has taken away most of his hearing. His pickup has a roof dented at the spot where he rests his head when he leans back to look at his work. He was waiting for the debris of a blast to settle when he leaned forward for a moment and a rock smashed the truck.

"Those things make me think that someone wants me to finish," he says.

Robert Woessner is a staff writer for the Green Bay (Wis.) Press-Gazette.

Will he complete it?

Korczak answers carefully. He reminds you, first, that Borglum and his crew needed 14 years to do what they did at Rushmore. Crazy Horse is a much bigger undertaking, and it has been mainly a one-man project.

"I'm 70," he says, "but I've left books of drawings. Any competent engineer could finish it. And, fortunately, my children are interested.

"What I want to complete is the horse's head. That's going to be majestic. No one knew what Crazy Horse looked like. There are no pictures of him, no drawings; so he will be symbolic.

"But the horse . . . to see that head coming out of that mountain, the veins, the muscle, the life. . ."

For a moment Korczak is silent as he gazes at Thunderhead and sees the huge statue of Crazy Horse (as he's envisioned it for well over a quarter of a century) as it faces the east from which the invaders came more than 100 years ago, and he intones the words that will be carved there, visible a mile away — "To you I give this granite epic, for your descendants to always know: 'My lands are where my dead lie buried.'" FW

TAX WITHHOLDING: HOW MUCH IS RIGHT FOR YOU?

Paycheck deductions can be severely taxing—especially when you file your IRS return.

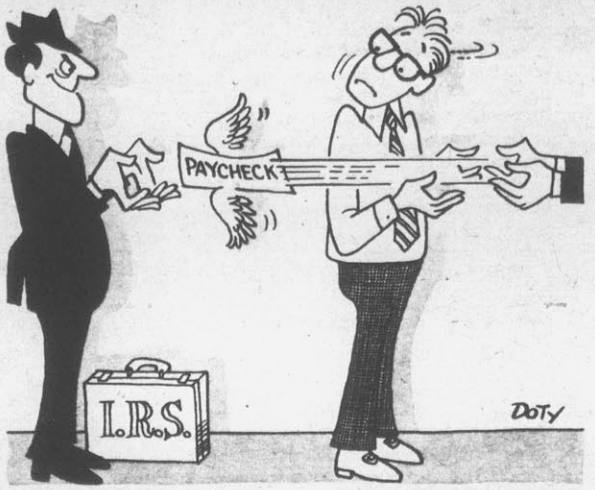
By Julian Block

Take a close look at how much withholding tax is being deducted from your paycheck, especially if you discovered that you were entitled to receive a hefty refund or obliged to pay a sizable sum when you settled with the Internal Revenue Service last April. The hitch could be that your withholding is out of whack and that your employer took out too much or too little from your paychecks for 1977 — and is still doing so.

The same situation will occur with the IRS next April unless you act soon to revise upward or downward the amount subtracted from your pay to make sure that it will be in rough balance with your tax tab.

Overwithholding means that the IRS gets the interest-free use of your money until you receive a refund. You can, of course, stay overwithheld each payday if you prefer that as a way of forcing yourself to save. Underwithholding means you have to fork over the balance due all at once and may be hit with a nondeductible 6-percent penalty because not enough was taken out.

Here are some points to keep in mind if you think that perhaps you should file with your employer a new Form W-4 ("Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificate") on which you indicate the number of withholding "allowances" (your exemptions) that you want to take.



To reduce overwithholding, you can claim extra exemptions. Each one cuts the salary subject to withholding by $750. For starters, the W-4 now allows additional exemptions based on your estimates of credits for child care, care for the elderly (formerly the retirement credit) and for earned income, as well as deductions for alimony payments (which now are subtracted from gross income to arrive at adjusted gross income in the same way that business expenses are). Remember, though, that even if you qualify for these new exemptions, you need not revise your W-4 unless you want to boost your take-home pay.

You can also increase the amount of money in your paycheck if you qualify for any of the following withholding exemptions over and above those you ordinarily claim for yourself and your spouse, children and other dependents. You get a "special withholding allowance" if you work for only one employer and are single — or are married and your spouse does not work. There are also "additional withholding allowances" that cut the amount set aside for the IRS if you are to submit an itemized tax form because you expect to have sizable outlays for charitable contributions, medical expenses, interest, local taxes and the like. Just how many of these allowances you can claim is spelled out in a table on the back of the form.

Note, however, that the IRS has a special rule for persons who work for more than one employer. Say you are entitled to five exemptions. You can't claim five exemptions in filling out W-4's for each employer for a total of 10. You have to claim all the exemptions on one form and none on the other or allocate them in some other combination that adds up to five. This restriction also applies to working couples. You and your spouse must split those five exemptions between forms filed with each employer.

Remember, too, that you must file a new W-4 within 10 days if the number of exemptions you previously claimed decreases because, for example, you get divorced or stop supporting a dependent.

Now suppose that you have to cope with the reverse problem — too little is taken out. It's just as easy to change your W-4 to claim fewer exemptions than you are allowed, thereby increasing the amount that's withheld from each of your paychecks.

Assume, for example, that you are entitled to five withholding exemptions. Simply claim fewer exemptions or none at all on Line 1 of the form. If you want to go even further, ask your employer to withhold an additional amount. Line 2 is where you show that.

The marital-status section of the W-4 has a box labeled "Married, but withhold at higher Single rate." To increase the amount of tax withheld, this box can be checked by married couples when both spouses work or by a married person with more than one employer.

You also can use extra withholding to avoid the need to make quarterly payments of estimated taxes otherwise due on income from sources not covered by withholding — for instance, earnings from self-employment, alimony or profits from the sale of investments.

For detailed information on the withholding rules, contact your local IRS office for a free copy of "Tax Withholding and Declaration of Estimated Tax" (Publication 505). FW

AWARD WINNER BOB MACKIE GIVES FASHION TIPS FOR FALL

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Look terrific—without spending a lot of time and money.

Designer Bob Mackie, three-time Emmy Award winner, who has draped the figures of such glamorous luminaries as Cher, Marie Osmond, Mitzi Gaynor, Ann-Margret, Diana Ross and Raquel Welch, is a man who doesn't take fashion very seriously—and doesn't think any woman should.

"There's a terrible preoccupation with dressing that's unnecessary," says Mackie.

His down-to-earth advice is to shop for clothes with a plan and do it before the season starts. Here is some of the designer's fashion philosophy. (There's more in his new book, "Bob Mackie's Dressing for Glamour.")

Shopping for Clothes

The first step before you go out to buy is to take an inventory of what you have to determine what you need and can afford. The trick is to shop around now, before the cold sets in.

It's hard to think of buying woolens in late summer, but if you can cultivate the habit of preseason shopping, you'll be way ahead of the game. That's when you'll have organized fashion into your life and then can forget about it.

Building a Wardrobe

Don't jump on the latest style bandwagon. You ought to have a clear idea of what looks good on you and what doesn't. Buy basics that you can add to your existing wardrobe. When selecting the important parts of any wardrobe, such as a jacket or coat, avoid the urge to choose a plaid or print, which isn't likely to work very successfully with most of your outfits.

Buy clothes that build around several neutral colors, with accessories providing the accent. You know instinctively what basics look best on your figure. Why have a frilly blouse in your wardrobe if you look better in classic shirts?

If you're following this non-fad-buying philosophy, yet there are clothes hanging in your closet you haven't worn in a while, don't get rid of them. Let them rest. You'll find an inexpensive accessory might give that dress new life.

Fashion Mistakes

Many women shop too rigidly by size instead of responding to how an outfit looks on the figure—and often end up in clothes a size too small. Fit, not the size should be the only buying criterion.

A word about evening clothes: a lot of women succumb to impulse-buying just before an important event and either invest too much money in a garment they never have an occasion to wear again or they don't spend enough on an evening dress—and it looks it. A good solution might be to buy separates for evening (a dressy top and long skirt), then enjoy the flexibility of dressing up or down.

Bob Mackie, only 34, who describes his look as "neat and clean" gives the same down-to-earth philosophy to his glamorous clients that he gives us: analyze yourself and your life-style in dressing. It'll save you money, time and disappointment. FW

The fall look Bob Mackie likes for day is a blazer, a silk wrap blouse, a tweed skirt. At night he favors a slimmed-down fashion in a black-silk crepe dinner dress.

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

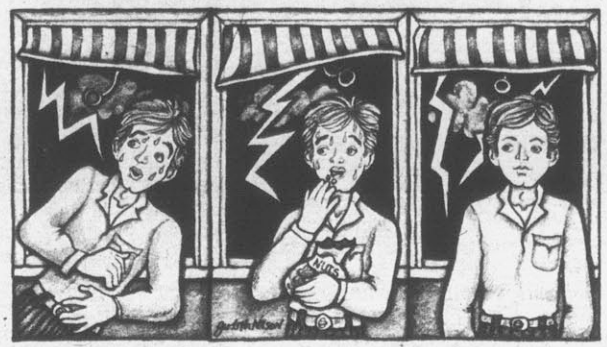
NEW THOUGHTS ON OLD FEARS



TRUE OR FALSE?

1. It's easy to tell when a person is anxious and fearful — even though he tries to hide the fact.
2. Women have more fears than men.
3. You can use your favorite food to banish a fear or phobia permanently.
4. Many people have trouble getting to sleep at night because they are afraid of themselves.
5. The kind of fears and phobias a person is most likely to be subject to depends on how old he is.

ANSWERS

1. True. Even if a person doesn't say a word, results of research at York University (Ontario, Canada) show that his hands, his eyes, his mouth and his torso give him away. The hands, it was found, telegraph fear and anxiety in a number of ways: "Fingers twitching, clinging hands, hands wet and clammy, hands visibly nervous in smoking, hands grabbing chair, hands braced unnaturally." Eyes reveal fear "by darting back and forth, by lots of blinking." The mouth was found to reveal fear by "unconsciously biting or licking the lips, mouth closed tightly." The torso revealed fear by "a stiff and rigid appearance."

2. True. University of Florida investigators studied thousands of men and women and administered tests "designed to tap fear and phobic fear and phobic behavior and thought patterns in the general population." Women averaged consistently higher fear scores than men. And studies at Stockton College (N.J.) show also that women have a higher fear of death than do men. But when it comes to fears about the opposite sex, women have more social poise.

3. True. This was demonstrated by a team of behavior therapists at Nova University (Fla.). One example, among many, is the case of a wife whose fear consisted of a phobic anxiety about being romantically approached by her husband. When it was learned that her favorite food was macadamia nuts, she was instructed by the therapists to keep a supply of these conveniently at hand and to feel free to partake of them to her heart's content whenever her husband's behavior activated her phobia. She was to treat herself to this favorite food at the first sign of the phobia asserting itself — but was forbidden to indulge herself on any other occasion. After a brief period, the phobia responded to this treatment, her relationship with her husband became a pleasant one, and the macadamia nuts were no longer necessary. The favorite-food method also has been tested at Virginia Commonwealth University.

4. True. Researchers at the University of Tennessee studied the personality profiles of people who, even though tired when they go to bed, don't fall asleep for what seems to them an interminable period. ("I just lie there and toss"; "My brain keeps turning over, thinking of all sorts of things — it won't relax and let go.") The study showed that "these excessive ruminations, found especially at bedtime, were mechanisms used to ward off sleep and prevent the loss of ego control inherent in sleep (when the unconscious takes over controls and may give free rein to deep-seated emotions and feelings which are repressed or crowded out by thoughts and activities during the waking hours)."

5. True. As psychiatrist Isaac M. Marks of Britain's Institute of Psychiatry observes in his definitive treatise on Fears and Phobias: sudden loud noises trigger our earliest fears and are likely to frighten us more than anything else when we are very young infants. As we become somewhat older, fear of strangers becomes the number-one bogy. Fear of animals usually begins in preschool-children, while fears of open spaces and social situations usually lie in wait for us until we're more mature and mostly strikes between adolescence and middle age. Studies also showed that the only fears likely to increase with older age groups are fears of making the obituary column prematurely, due to accident or illness. FW

Observations

Take a break. It's called "Labor Day"—but it's a day when most people don't work. It happens every year on the first Monday in September, to honor members of the nation's work force. And it will be celebrated tomorrow by more employed Americans than any other time in the holiday's long history. Labor Day, which became a legal holiday by an act of Congress in 1894, has provided an end-of-summer respite since 1882. In that year, the first observance was held in New York under the aegis of the New York Central Labor Union.

Healthy progress. Organizers of that first Labor Day parade would be justifiably proud of the great strides our labor force has made during the intervening century. In 1880, there were just 14.7 million workers in the country. Today, the nation's labor force is over the 100 million mark; nearly 60 percent of all Americans age 16 or older are now gainfully employed.

"I love Labor Day. It means the kids will be back in school in no time."

People power. During the 1960s, it was popular in certain academic quarters to envision a future in which the human factor in America's work force would yield its role to computers and machines. But the specter of machines idling millions proved to be a myth—like so many other predictions of gloom and doom. The nation's business and industry have added 16 million workers to their payrolls since 1970, and in April of this year alone, 535,000 Americans found work. The index of help-wanted advertisements—a traditional measure of the nation's economic well-being—is the highest since tabulations began 27 years ago. Unemployment is still a cause for serious national concern. But there are parts of the country with significant labor shortages in certain professional, technical and skilled trades areas.

Sharing the load. The growth and prosperity of the nation's industries have made it possible for today's work force to reach its present size and strength. The Mobil organization, for example, currently provides employment in this country for some 150,000 people—more than three-quarters of its worldwide total. (Worldwide, the Mobil companies' bill for wages and benefits last year amounted to nearly $3 billion.)

A quote we like. "...despite the clamor which we hear, and the conflicts which occasionally occur, there is a constant trend toward agreement between the laborers and capitalists, employed and employer, for the uninterrupted production and distribution of wealth..." Samuel Gompers.

STUFF AND NONSENSE

Our living room's stuffy, I know,
And it isn't from lack of fresh air.
It's stuffy from stuff,
Much more than enough,
That fills it from here clear to there.

We've things we've brought back from our trips,
And bric-a-brac we have inherited.
We've scads from garage sales,
From church and from lodge sales,
Which we, like sly foxes, have ferreted.

Each time we have guests we explain
In detail how we got every item.
And this may be why
Away from us shy
These guests when again we invite 'em.

—Richard Armour

The economy is sound. I know it's sound. Everytime I go into a store I hear people yelling. —Robert Orben

Two women were talking about long hair on men. "Personally," said one, "I think long hair makes a man look intelligent."

"Oh, I don't know," said the other woman. "I picked a long hair off my husband's coat, and he looked mighty foolish to me."

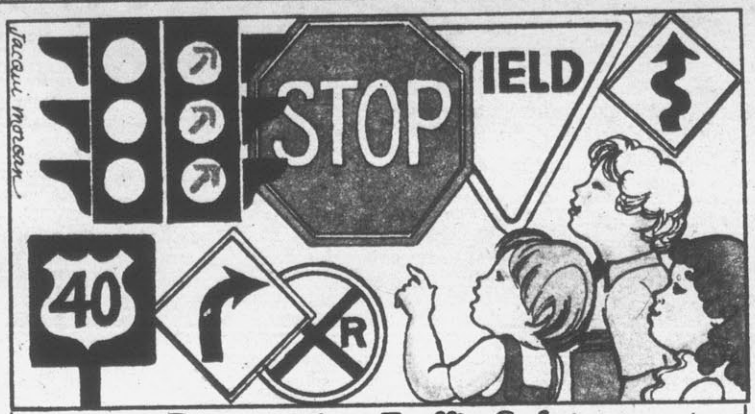
Football For Women

It's the start of the football season at the Univ. of Alabama — for women. That's right, at Joe Namath's alma mater football is currently the fastest-growing female intramural sport, and there are now almost as many women as men playing intramural football.

But don't get the idea that female football is a powder-puff game. "The girls really surprised us," says Cheryl Sokoll, director of Intramural and Recreational Sports. "They played much rougher than we ever expected — as rough, maybe even rougher than the men — so we had to modify the rules." To prevent injuries, the 600 women participating now play flag football with no tackling allowed. Sokoll adds that some of the male collegians are surprised at the women's play: "The men say, "Hey, they're really playing football."



Jacqui Morgan

Discovering Traffic Safety

This fall youngsters across the country will be learning how to become better pedestrians through an innovative, child-oriented program. "Discovering Traffic Safety," a comprehensive classroom curriculum including a program guide, teacher's manuals and films, differs from traditional safety programs because it operates from a child's point of view. The 7-minute films are shot entirely from a child's eye perspective to help the youngsters recognize the traffic situations depicted, and, interestingly enough, the films feature only children's voices.

Instead of giving a list of do's and don't's, teachers are encouraged to have students discuss the filmed action and "discover" for themselves how to walk, ride and drive safely in traffic.

Developed by the Automotive Safety Foundation, the films and curriculum materials have already been purchased by depts. of ed. in several states. For more information, write: Automotive Safety Foundation, 1776 Massachusetts Ave. NW, Washington, D.C. 20036.

Adult "Children" Of Divorce

Divorce may be more devastating to adult sons and daughters than to young children says a Univ. of Alabama professor. Dr. Roland Ficken, chairman of the school's Dept. of Behavioral Sciences, suggests that young adults who consider themselves broad-minded when it comes to marriage can fall apart when their parents divorce.

One of the problems adult "children" of divorce may have, says Ficken, is that parents may encourage them to take sides. "Often a daughter will take her father's side, until Dad starts dating a woman her age or younger," Ficken points out. "This can be a crushing experience."

Dating and possible remarriage by the divorced parents are difficult for many adult children to handle, according to Ficken. He believes it's hard for adults to accept their parents as individuals with their own social lives rather than the familiar, comfortable "Mom and Dad" they've grown up with.

Ficken advises adults with parents who are divorcing to keep the lines of communication open. "Remember" he says, "it takes two people for a breakup to occur."

Pet Therapy

Many senior citizens are a lot less lonely this year thanks to a program that places pets in the nursing homes where they live. Cosponsored by the Mass. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the American Humane Education Society and the Junior League of Boston, the "pet therapy" project has a dual purpose — providing companionship for the elderly and giving a good home to unwanted animals.

"Many of the people in the nursing homes have ceased to function as caring individuals, which is detrimental to their psychological health," says Judith Star, director of the American Humane Education Society. "With the pets, the residents have the responsibility of an animal who is dependent on them for care."

Quick Takes

Fresh-popped popcorn is popping up in movie theaters across the country as theater operators discover that the aroma helps boost sales of snacks — which account for at least ½ the profits in large movie houses. Owners have also discovered that sales fluctuate with the feature shown: thrillers, horror stories and comedies sell the most corn.

Using a fluoride mouth rinse once a week is an effective and inexpensive way to reduce tooth decay reports a study sponsored by the National Institute of Dental Research. Students in 17 communities used the mouth rinses at their schools over a 2-year period. Cavities were reduced significantly in participating children — in one community an average of 46%. Researchers say the younger children begin to use the rinse, the greater the benefit.

The number of airline passengers is soaring this year, due in part to discount fares. During the first ½ year, U.S. airlines carried 16.3% more travelers than in the same period last year. And 2 of every 5 passengers flew on low-cost tickets according to the Air Transport Association.

You should see a copy of your eyeglass prescription if you get an eye test according to a new Federal Trade Commission rule. The rule requires that all persons undergoing eye tests receive copies of their prescription.
