

Dollar Rebounds; Wholesale Price Index Shows New Jump

WASHINGTON (AP) - The dollar continued to rebound strongly on world markets today in response to President Carter's crash program to stem its rapid loss of value overseas.

Wholesale prices - a harbinger of future retail costs - leaped by 0.9 percent in October for the second consecutive month, the Labor Department reported.

With inflation running at an annual rate of nearly 10 percent, the administration had been counting on price gains to ease by the end of 1978.

prices last month were 8.6 percent higher than the same month in 1977.

In New York, the stock exchange continued its upsurge in today's early trading after it reacted to the pro-dollar moves with the largest single-day gain in history Wednesday. That day, the Dow Jones industrial average rose 35.34 points to close at 827.78.

In Tokyo, meanwhile, the dollar soared by more than 4 percent over the Japanese yen. The dollar had closed at 178.80 yen Wednesday, soared to 188 at the opening of the foreign exchange market, then slipped to close at 186.025 on the first day of trading there since Carter's announcement.

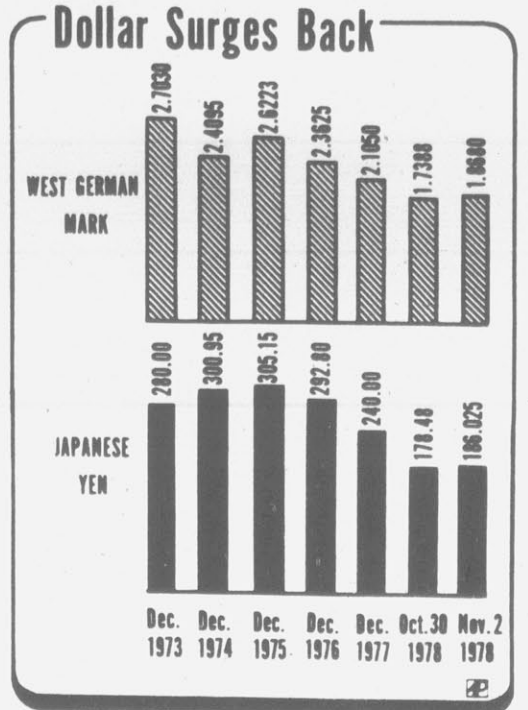

The president's dollar rescue plan includes higher interest rates, the borrowing of $30 billion in foreign currencies and an increase in U.S. gold sales.

The Federal Reserve Board's interest rate for loans it makes to member banks was boosted by a nearly unprecedented one percentage point, to a record 9.5 percent, meaning that higher interest rates are in store throughout the economy.

The actions ultimately could make it harder to buy a house. Savings institutions will find it harder to attract deposits because other investments will pay more interest. That means less money available for mortgages and higher rates for those that are available.

The government moves also should make it easier to travel overseas because, as the value of the dollar increases, your money buys more in foreign countries.

DOLLAR RECOVERS - The dollar gained dramatically today in heavy trading following President Carter's plan to bail it out...

Political Concessions By Iranian Govm't Promised

By PHILLIP DOPOULOUS Associated Press Writer TEHRAN, Iran (AP) - The Iranian government, bruised hard by riots and strikes by oil refinery workers and others, says it will free all political prisoners Dec. 10 and abolish special military tribunals shortly.

Najafi, who announced the concessions Wednesday, said Dec. 10 was chosen to free the prisoners because the United Nations has set aside that day to pay tribute to the protection of human rights.

He did not say how many will be freed but it is believed they will include all those jailed for inciting religious and political rioting that has killed more than 1,000 persons this year. Those held for terrorism are expected to remain in prison.

At least 23 anti-government protesters died and 56 were injured in clashes with troops or government supporters Wednesday in the western cities of Sanandaj and Azarshahr. The demonstrators demanded release of persons jailed for opposition to Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

County School Juniors Conclude Competency Test Program Today

By REBECCA BUFFALOEE Reflector Staff Writer

Eleventh grade students will wrap up a two-day session of testing Thursday afternoon in the four county high schools in conjunction with the statewide competency tests.

Thomas L. Craft Jr., associate superintendent, Pitt County School System, felt that the testing had been successful.

From indications from the principals and one in particular, things seem to be moving smoothly," Craft said Thursday morning.

Pitt County School Superintendent Ott Alford was unavailable for comment, since he is attending the North Carolina School Board Association meeting in Winston-Salem.

John McKnight, Pitt County Testing and Research Director, was busy Thursday as he traveled around the four high schools, making sure that testing was moving along smoothly.

Joshua Potter, principal at North Pitt, said that his students had entered the testing with "a positive attitude."

"Approximately 209 students are participating in the testing," said Potter. "Attendance has been really good. They took the math part yesterday and the reading today."

Farmville Central principal Russ Cotton commended the school body and staff for their cooperation in aiding the approximately 200 juniors in taking the tests.

"The students not taking the tests are being quiet," Cotton stated. "They sense that the testing is something special for the juniors."

Cotton explained that the teaching staff had been working with the students since the beginning of the school, preparing them for the testing.

"The results will tell us who will need more special attention," said Cotton. He stated that the testing results should be in by the first week in December.

James Carraway, principal of D. H. Conley, said that he had not heard too many comments from the eleventh graders, but felt that things were going smoothly.

"I don't believe that the students feel that the testing is very hard," said Carraway. "To them, it's a normal testing day."

According to Carraway, about 242 students have participated in the testing, with very little absenteeism.

"We're reserving Friday, Monday and maybe Tuesday for the students to make up whatever part they have not taken," said Carraway.

Ayden-Grifton principal Bill Wiggins called the testing operation as going "as smooth as silk."

"Things are going great, I've been in the classrooms checking out the situation," said Wiggins. "We only had four juniors absent Wednesday and five today."

Wiggins said that he was extremely pleased with the students and their acceptance and attitude toward the tests. He also commended the teaching staff and proctors for keeping the classrooms quiet during the tests.

According to Wiggins, 169 Ayden-Grifton juniors were involved in the tests.

Students who fail the tests this week will have three more chances to pass the test. As of next year, high school seniors must pass both parts of the test to receive a diploma.

'Affirmative' Attitude On Competency Tests By Greenville Juniors

By JERRY RAYNOR Reflector Staff Writer

About 450 Greenville high school juniors took the new North Carolina Competency Test on two days, Monday and Tuesday, October 30 and 31.

Statewide, the tests were scheduled to be administered on Nov. 1 and 2, but the State Department of Public Instruction granted permission for early testing in Greenville due to the previously scheduled two day student holiday and teacher workday today and tomorrow.

Rose High principal Howard Hurt expressed pleasure over student attitudes about the test. "Our students showed great interest as indicated by the fact that only four students were absent the first day of testing and six absent the second day. This is a much higher attendance rate than usual for a school day."

"Now that the tests have been taken, we are awaiting the results with a hope that the students did well on them."

Kay Whitehurst, Director of Secondary Education in the city schools, spoke about the orderly manner in which both days went.

"The youngsters were apprehensive, which is understandable," Mrs. Whitehurst said. "But many expressed a feeling the tests were easier than they had expected them to be."

Noting there has been no visible resistance or protest from students or the community on taking the tests, Mrs. Whitehurst attributes this to "a masterful job done by our teachers here as well as people from the regional office in Williamston."

"Teachers and others involved in the testing have been aware that the tests are important, and they have all along been responsive to the needs of students and the concerns of parents.

"Because they recognized this, they organized efforts early to help individual students and took steps to relieve anxiety that did exist with students and parents."

Among action taken in advance of testing were last school year's training center at Rose, workshops for the public to explain the aims and methods to be used in competency testing, and early bird sessions to help individual students in areas in which they felt they needed special, additional help in a particular area.

"All our efforts, I feel," Mrs. Whitehurst added, "have been responsible for the affirmative attitude of students taking the test, and I think these beforehand actions have also been instrumental in there not being a public reaction such as has been noted in some areas. Naturally, the students are relieved that it is over, and now we are all awaiting the results."

Ingram Charges Rival Voted Against Seniors

OPERATION GRAY POWER ... Mrs. Katherine Meroney, Alan Murrell, and Dr. Elizabeth Welch and Democratic Senatorial candidate John Ingram, at session with senior citizens at Pitt-Greenville airport yesterday.

By STUART SAVAGE Reflector Staff Writer

Concluding a flying six-stop tour of the state yesterday, Democratic Senate candidate John Ingram accused Republican Sen. Jesse Helms of voting against North Carolina's 800,000 senior citizens.

Accompanied on the flight - which stopped in Winston-Salem, Asheville, Charlotte, Raleigh, and Wilmington, as well as in Greenville - by several senior citizens, Ingram let the older adults do most of the talking.

"We call this 'Operation Gray Power' Dr. Elizabeth Welch of Winston-Salem said.

"Sen. Helms is a no-no" the president of the Fifth Congressional District Senior Democratic Club said. "Our purpose today as members of the older generation is to report to others of our generation how the Senior N.C. Senator has voted on issues which affect the survival of many of us, and self respect and dignity of all of us."

Helm's votes, she continued, "are a matter of public record," and, "a 'no' vote by an elected official is a 'no' vote to an older Republican as well as to an older Democrat. Sen. Helms has voted 'no' to older Americans of every party on major vital issues."

According to Dr. Welch, Helms voted against raising the cost of living increase for Social Security recipients.

"In my case," she noted, "if he had not been outvoted by others who cared, my Social Security income would be approximately half of what it is, and, for me this would mean catastrophe."

Helms, she said, also voted against extending and expanding the Older Americans Act, which provides programs for the aged, for the older Americans Volunteer Program, and for the Foster Grandparent Program.

"As a teacher of 46 years experience, I know how essential the education of our people is to the continuation of our system of government. I am constantly

New Addition

AN 18TH CENTURY — North Carolina-made corner cupboard has been purchased for the N. C. Museum of History collection. The cupboard is currently on display in the museum lobby and will remain there until a craftsman is selected to restore it. "The cupboard may then be loaned to the state historic site at Halifax, near where it originated," said W. Osborne Lee, pictured, of Lumberton, acquisitions chairman for the N. C. Museum of History Associates, which is a statewide volunteer and financial support group for the Museum of History, Raleigh. The cupboard is one of four known examples of rare "barrel back" type from Halifax County. "The use of mahogany is unusual and the cupboard retains the original blue paint on the interior," said Michael O. Smith, furnishings curator.

SPOON BREAD

One of the best cooks we know has an easy way of making this marvelous old-time dish.

- 1/2 cup yellow coneal
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 2 cups milk
- 1/2 cup butter
- 4 large eggs

In a medium saucepan stir together the cornmeal, sugar and salt. Gradually stir in the milk, keeping smooth. Cook over moderate heat, stirring constantly, until as thick as mush — mixture will hold its shape for a short while when dropped from a spoon. Off heat, stir in the butter. Beat the egg yolks slightly; gradually stir them into the hot cornmeal mixture. With the clean beater, beat the egg whites until stiff; fold into the cornmeal mixture. Turn into an oiled 1 1/2-quart ceramic soufflé dish (7 1/2 by 2 1/2 inches) or a similar casserole. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until puffed and browned — about 35 minutes. Serve at once, using a large spoon, with lots of butter. Makes 6 servings.

Nobody Calls This Plumber, They Whistle

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Right out of high school I started working for my father. He's a plumber and owns his own company. I decided that because my brother and I would probably inherit our father's business one day, I should go to school and learn all I could about the business. I went to school nights and worked days for my father, and I just got my diploma. Now I'm familiar with blueprints and estimating and everything a competent plumber should know. I happen to be a girl, and that's the problem. People seem to think that girls who perform this kind of work have to be fat and ugly. I'm far from ugly. (I placed sixth in the Miss Minnesota beauty contest.) Men on my jobs try to pick me up. When I walk into a warehouse, I get whistled at and looked over like a piece of raw meat. But worst of all, people keep asking me why I am doing a man's job. This is not a man's job. It belongs to anybody who can do it right. I take pride in my work, and just once I wish people would notice my work instead of my behind!

PLUMBING A WAY IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR PLUMBING: Don't complain. You're ahead of the game. A good plumber with a nice behind is hard to find.

DEAR, DEAR ABBY: Problem: Our neighbors all have huge shade trees. The ones on the south don't shade their lot as much as they do ours.

Trying to raise a garden is difficult in all the shade. We love trees, but with the loads of leaves soon to come, do we ask the friends on three sides to trim the trees, remove them, or help us clean up our yard? Perhaps they will pay more attention to Dear Abby than to us. It may be possible that others have this same problem now that leaves are coming down.

One cartoon showed a guy with a pile of leaves in his yard with no trees of his own.

FIRST TIME WRITER

DEAR FIRST TIME: You can't love trees without loving their leaves. You can't have it both ways; so get out the rake, and count your blessings.

DEAR ABBY: Several years ago you gave me a recipe for Southern pecan pie. Every year I bake it for my family around Thanksgiving and Christmas and it's always the hit of the dinner.

Recently I made it for my bridge club and every woman there wanted the recipe. I didn't think it would be right to pass it out without your permission. If you say no, I will guard it with my life.

PECAN PIE LOVER

DEAR LOVER: I hope your life is worth more than one cup of white corn syrup, one cup of dark brown sugar, one-third cup of melted butter, one heaping cup of shelled pecans, three whole eggs, a dash of vanilla and a pinch of salt.

Mix above ingredients well, pour into an unbaked 9-inch pastry pie shell and bake in 350-degree oven for 45 to 50 minutes. Cool and top it with whipped cream or ice cream. But served plain, nothing tops this! (P.S. I can't understand why anyone would refuse to share a recipe. Sharing enhances the enjoyment.)

DEAR ABBY: Someone signed CLUTTERED MAILBOX IN L.A. wrote to complain because he had been finding a lot of leaflets, advertisements, political propaganda, etc., in his mailbox.

You said there was a law against using a mailbox for anything except mail for which postage had been paid to the U. S. Postal Service.

Well, I own my own mailbox—the U. S. Postal Service does not! And if I want to store chopped liver in it I would like to see anybody stop me!

Plays And Peanut Butter On Menu At Kids Theater

COVINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The Peanut Butter Theater is no ordinary dinner theater. The patrons usually sit on the floor and there's no dinner — only lunch. And don't try to get steak or roast beef. The establishment serves only peanut butter sandwiches. The PBT — as it's known by its creators, the American Repertory Theater of Cincinnati — is for children. From ages 3 to 12, they come on weekends and holidays for productions of such plays as "The Emperor's New Clothes" and "Tales of the Brothers Grimm." After paying the $2.50 admission charge, they get a lunch bag with a peanut butter sandwich and cookies. The only choice in the meal is whether they want white or chocolate milk. About 90 percent of the audience sits on the floor to watch the play, and parents and grandparents are invited to attend when the curtain goes up. "We wanted to do something very wholesome and something with a twist and this thing kind of evolved," said Fred Coleman, executive producer of the company. The group will often alternate performances at a location here with another in Middletown, Ohio. About 200 persons usually attend a performance, Coleman said. Those who do attend the plays get more than sticky fingers for their efforts. They often get literally caught up in the play and the children can be as much of a show as the production. In "Rumpelstiltskin," one of four Grimm tales presented, a furious Rumpelstiltskin asks several youngsters, "Did you tell the queen my name?" "No," each answers. "Well, then, who did?" he asks. "She did!" shout the children, pointing accusing fingers at the queen's messenger. Peanut Butter Theater actors and actresses are part of the repertory theater's 10-member company of performers. All are full-time professional actors. The repertory company also conducts a touring program which takes drama and musical productions to schools, day-care centers and senior citizens' groups, and it also produces Shakespeare festivals during the year.

Lions To Push The Tissue Bank

Members of the Greenville Host Lions Club will be at three locations in Greenville Saturday, Nov. 4, to provide information concerning the North Carolina Eye and Human Tissue Bank.

The Lions will be at Pitt Plaza, Greenville Square and Clark's Department Store from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., with explanations on how one can become an eye or tissue donor. Lions will also have Uniform Donor Cards for interested persons to sign and return to the state headquarters in Winston-Salem.

The North Carolina Eye and Human Tissue Bank, Inc. is a statewide, non-profit organization for the purpose of obtaining, preserving and transporting eyes and making them available to eye surgeons to perform corneal transplant operations.

The Eye and Tissue Bank also serves as a depository for the forms for those who wish to go beyond the gift of eyes to include the body or any of its parts.

When signing the Uniform Donor Pledge, two persons, not family members, must witness and sign the form. One copy should be sent to the headquarters in Winston-Salem and the other given to the next of kin. The Eye and Tissue Bank will send a pocket card as a reminder.

One of the major problems of the Eye and Tissue Bank is the failure of the immediate family to remember that eyes or tissues were to be donated. Donors are asked to advise their families, clergy, doctors and hospitals (upon entering one) of the donation.

The donation form is a codicil to a present will. If a new will is made, an attorney must make a proper provision in the will for the donation or be careful not to revoke the donation in the new will. Donors should carry their cards at all times to insure prompt action to carry out the donation.

Fuels Factor

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Virginia Electric and Power Co. announced today that the monthly fuel factor for its North Carolina customers will be reduced from the November factor of .185 cent to .032 cent per kilowatt hour as a result of the company's increased use of nuclear power.

C. M. Jarvis, vice president, said Vepco's three nuclear units produced 44 percent of the company's electric generation during September.

"Vepco has been a leader in the construction of nuclear generating plants since the 1950s because of their ability to produce electricity cheaper than coal or oil. The December fuel factor decrease — 83 percent — clearly shows this," Jarvis said.

Vepco serves the northeastern section of North Carolina.

Tackle Other Negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Times and Daily News will not return to the newsstands until publishers settle with truck drivers and three other striking unions, despite resolution of the contract dispute with striking pressmen.

Both morning newspapers, idled for nearly three months, were preparing to resume publication by Sunday as talks continued with the truck drivers.

The drivers want the publishers to replenish a depleted health and welfare benefits fund. The newspapers refused to contribute to the company-supported fund during the strike because drivers were honoring the picket lines.

Pressmen and the publishers initiated a new contract Wednesday. But pressmen's union president William J. Kennedy said he would not submit the pact to a vote until the drivers had a new contract.

The newspapers must also reach agreements with unions representing paperhandlers, machinists and mechanics.

The pressmen struck the Times, the News and the New York Post Aug. 9, and some 10,000 employees in 11 unions honored picket lines. Four other unions eventually went on strike. The Post resumed publication Oct. 5 after reaching agreement with its other striking unions and promising to match whatever pressmen's contract was agreed to by the Times and the News.

The six-year pressmen's contract guarantees the jobs of all 1,508 pressmen at the three newspapers. In return, the publishers won the right to reduce pressroom staffs by attrition, and are allowed to offer pressmen incentives to retire.

The pressmen's base pay would be increased by $68 to $400 a week by 1980 under the agreement.

Poison Trial Delay Seen

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — The arsenic poisoning trial of a former nurse's aide accused of murder in the death of a Saint Paul's farmer she had planned to marry may not begin until next year, authorities say.

District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt said the Scotland County Superior Court convenes Nov. 27, but the trial of Velma Margie Barfield, 45, might be postponed until after the first of the year.

"We haven't made any firm decision, and won't until that last week of November," Britt said this week.

Mrs. Barfield was arrested last March and charged in the Feb. 3 death of Stewart Taylor, her 53-year-old boyfriend. An autopsy showed large amounts of arsenic in Taylor's body. Detectives learned that Mrs. Barfield had allegedly purchased lethal rat poison shortly before Taylor's death.

Within two weeks of Mrs. Barfield's arrest, the bodies of her mother, Mrs. Lily Bullard, and two former patients, John Henry Lee and Mrs. Dollie T. Edwards, were exhumed in Robeson and Cumberland counties and sent to the state Medical Examiner's Office for autopsies, presumably to check for signs of arsenic poisoning.

Several weeks later, the bodies of Jennings Barfield and William Thomas Burke, two of Mrs. Barfield's former husbands, were also exhumed and examined.

The results of the autopsies have not been released, and Mrs. Barfield has not been charged with any other crimes.

She pleaded innocent and innocent by reason of insanity to the original murder charge. Mrs. Barfield was working as a nurse's aide at a Lumberton nursing home when Taylor died. Following her arrest, she was taken to Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh where doctors found her competent to stand trial on the murder charge.

Nursing Their Boat To Shore

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Their sailboat Intrigue stripped of its sails by Hurricane Kendra 150 miles out at sea, six Virginia men were hoping to nurse the vessel to shore early today.

A freighter found the 44-foot Intrigue drifting 150 miles east of Wilmington, N. C., Tuesday, and the Coast Guard Cutter Paw Paw reached the vessel Wednesday morning.

The six crewmen, including Virginia Beach Circuit Court Judge Henry L. Lam and the Intrigue's owner, former Virginia Beach Planning Director Mason Gamage, were reported safe by a spokesman for Coast Guard headquarters in Miami.

They had rigged a makeshift sail and were creeping under its power toward Charleston, S. C., the nearest port.

The Paw Paw reported the Intrigue turned down a tow. It was traveling about five knots and was not expected to make port until early today, the Coast Guard spokesman said.

The vessel battled nine-foot seas Tuesday, he said, but swells had subsided to about five feet Wednesday.

Lam's wife said Wednesday she had not heard from her husband since last week and had been concerned about his safety.

Mrs. Lam said her husband and Gamage had talked about making the pleasure cruise to Bermuda for some time.

"This time they just decided to go ahead and do it," she said. Accompanying them are Gamage's son, Mason Gamage Jr., and friends Bobby Holland, John Maragon and Carlton Macon.

Mrs. Lam said her husband is an experienced sailor, although "he really hasn't done any ocean sailing."

Gamage, his son and Holland set sail from Virginia Beach last Thursday, Mrs. Lam said, and picked up her husband and the two other men at Ocracoke, N. C., on the trip south.

Acting To Support The Dollar

The Carter administration, recognizing the seriousness of the dollar drop in value on foreign currency markets, has acted decisively to halt that decline.

Moving without warning, the administration Wednesday announced a plan for combatting the dollar drop which includes buying up dollars with foreign currency, increasing the Federal Reserve Board's key bank lending rate and increased sales of U. S. gold reserves.

These are strong moves which are not without risks to the American economy since they can act as brakes on the economy raising the specter of recession.

Nevertheless bold moves were called for, since continued decline of the dollar and continued inflation at home could lead to an economic situation even worse than recession.

We believe, like President Carter said in announcing his moves, that the decline of the dollar has been excessive.

We also believe as Treasury Sec. W. Michael Blumenthal said that, "The continuing decline in the exchange value of the dollar is clearly not warranted by the fundamental economic situation."

In theory the world currency market is a free one in which the dollar value rises and falls according to its soundness.

There is, however, also the element of greed which drives speculators to attempt to break the dollar in hopes of reaping huge gains.

We agree with Treasury Undersecretary Anthony Solomon, who said of the situation that "there's been a speculative attack against the dollar."

We think the United States government is big enough in world economics to break the speculators and if this is done, it will be some time before another brazen run on the dollar is made.

Energy Program Should Be Helpful

The City of Greenville is sharing in a $4 million model community energy management program.

It is one of 17 cities chosen to participate in the program by the U. S. Department of Energy and will receive a $130,000 federal grant.

The program will involve an energy audit of the community, and hopefully ways will eventually be found to make more efficient use of energy.

The program should be helpful to our city.

Who Play Growth Czar?

By BILL NOBLITT

Sticking Point

There is the sticking point in current debate about how to formalize and implement the Balanced Growth Policy developed after months of citizen surveys, public hearings, arguments and study.

That crucial point became the undoing of efforts by the previous governor of North Carolina, Republican James E. Holshouser, to see a balanced growth program in place. The in-house argument raged within his administration: can you take governmental action to control economic growth; should you; would it work even if you did?

Holshouser finally folded the documents into a neat pile and pushed them into a corner of his desk drawer. They remained out of sight until Gov. Jim Hunt took the reins of state government.

Balanced growth as a concept was renewed. Some of the principal actors in the previous drama were on board in positions of influence in the Hunt administration: Administration Secretary Joe Grimsley, for one; professional planner Arnold Zogry, for another.

As Hunt's growth plan emerged, the same nettlesome questions remained. Grimsley and his planners continued to press for a strong state commitment to control of governmental action and placement of the most crucial question of all in the hands of the governor: where will growth occur?

He announced creation of an "interim Balanced Growth Board" comprised of the State Goals and Policy Board housed in the Department of Administration which Grimsley heads and where the planning office is located, and the Local Government Advocacy Council which contains representatives from county and municipal governments and has its base in the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Sitting together, the two groups will set up the rules which will then be reviewed by state agencies and approved by Hunt.

Then, local governments will be asked to apply for official designation as growth centers, and to help devise regional growth plans.

Left vaguely unanswered is who will finally designate the actual growth centers. But the government waxed philosophical: "...we must work and live as one people and one state, not a state of competing geographical sections... Sound economic growth... that's good for one place... is good for the whole state because no part of North Carolina is an island... (and) is no better than all the communities that make it up."

VOTER ROUNDUP

Carter On 6-State Tour

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is beginning a tour of six states today to get out the vote for Democrats in Tuesday's elections. A rally on Wall Street was the first stop on the swing, which ends late Friday.

Carter also planned to attend a luncheon for supporters of Gov. Hugh L. Carey. But the main event was the Wall Street rally.

In addition to New York, the president scheduled brief appearances for Democratic candidates in Michigan, Illinois, California, Oregon and Minnesota.

The Democratic Party is paying for the trip.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell, noting the steady decrease in voter turnout since the early 1960s, told reporters Wednesday a high turnout "would be helpful to the Democratic Party."

Each of the states on the agenda has a race for governor and it would be helpful to Carter, if he runs again in 1980, to have a Democrat occupying the state capital.

By Friday, Carter will have visited 13 states over a 17-day period.

At a stop in Flint, Mich., later today the president was to be greeted at the airport by Sen. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., who is trying to cast a bipartisan hue on the president's appearance.

Bill Hart, a press aide to Griffin, said the senator planned to crash the event because his Democratic opponent, Carl Levin, Detroit city council president, has said he would not invite Carter to campaign in the state because of his low popularity.

Griffin, who is seeking re-election, has run television ads saying he, unlike Levin, welcomes Carter to the state so that the president can see firsthand the effects of inflation.

Gather To Set Action

By GEORGE A. KRIMSKY
Associated Press Writer

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Arab leaders meet in Baghdad today to map new strategy to deal with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's peace drive with Israel.

Iraq, the host, Syria and others are pressing for a stringent boycott of Egypt and the formation of a joint military command to enforce it.

The hardliners believe a separate peace treaty between Israel and Egypt seriously weakens the overall Arab effort to regain territory lost to Israel in four wars over the past 30 years.

They say such a treaty will neutralize the strongest confrontation state, Egypt, and that despite Sadat's attempt to win concessions on Palestinian rights, the Palestinian cause is being sold out by the Egyptian initiative.

While at least 19 of the 21 participating Arab League states disapprove to some degree of the American-backed peace moves, the Arab leaders face a difficult task in agreeing on the following:

—Whether to accept Iraq's proposal to set up a $9 billion annual fund to support the frontline states and the PLO against Israel and lure Egypt away from its economic-political dependence on the West.

—Whether to form a unified military command, including Jordan, and commit troops to bolster the confrontation with Israel.

—Whether to take a stand holding out hope for a peaceful settlement or to commit the Arab world to a military solution if Egypt and Israel sign a peace treaty.

They also will consider possible increased dependence on the Soviet Union to counter increased American influence in the Mideast. While the conservative gulf states remain firmly opposed to any relations with Moscow, the Soviets are the only superpower the leftists can turn to to support the anti-Sadat front.

Iraq recently had a falling out with the Kremlin, primarily over bilateral issues, but observers here will be watching closely for a rapprochement with the leftist bloc's major arms supplier.

Field Good Candidates

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

The conventional wisdom says the Republican Party is in for another dismal licking next Tuesday, but I have a notion the conventional wisdom is wide of the mark. Republican candidates will do better, on the whole, than the forecasts have indicated, but except in one critical area, it won't make much difference anyhow.

By this I mean to suggest that party labels count for less and less all the time. What matters is the relative conservatism or liberalism of the candidates. It is only in the state legislatures that the old two-party partisanship still figures heavily in our political life.

The conventional wisdom says the Republicans' greatest problem lies the scarcity of attractive GOP candidates for the House and Senate. That charge can be sustained, to be sure in a number of districts where the Republicans are mounting either feeble campaigns nor none at all. But voters in many states will find some good Republican timber standing tall on the political horizon.

In New Jersey, for one example, Republican Jeffrey Bell may yet overtake Democrat Bill Bradley in the senatorial race. Considering the state's lopsided Democratic registration, and also considering Bradley's name recognition as a former basketball star, a Bell victory would have to be classed as an astounding upset. But Jeff Bell is a superlative candidate—keenly intelligent, articulate, gifted young conservative who was waged an excellent campaign.

Across the continent, in Colorado, the Republicans have fielded another bright star in Representative Bill Armstrong. He is fighting for the Senate seat now held by Floyd Haskell, and the race offers one of the most dramatic contests in the nation in terms of the liberal-conservative split. Haskell is a down-the-line liberal, Armstrong a down-the-line conservative.

Looking to the South, one finds two more first-rate Republican senatorial prospects in Alabama and Mississippi. Granted, it may seem unlikely that either state would send a Republican to the Senate, but The War has been over for 13 years and the times, they are a'changing. Former Representative Jim Martin may very well win the unexpired term of the late Senator Jim Allen in Alabama, and a three-way split of victory in Mississippi for Representative Thad Cochran. In Virginia, Republican John Warner looks very good.

The conventional wisdom says that four incumbent Republican senators are in trouble and could be dumped. My guess is that Strom Thurmond in South Carolina and Jesse Helms in North Carolina will win easily if their supporters don't get overconfident. John Tower in Texas still looks good to me, and Bob Griffin is closing fast in Michigan. The Republicans cannot afford to lose any of the four.

On the House side, plenty of attractive GOP candidates are on the scene. On Maryland's Eastern Shore, Representative Bob Bauman needs only this victory to cement his place in the House for years to come. In Arkansas, Ed Bethune offers a most attractive choice in the Second District. In upstate New York, Jerry Solomon looks good in the Troy-Saratoga area.

To return to the main point, party labels in themselves count for little. In Maine, the Democratic and Republican candidates for the Senate are both middle-roads. In Oklahoma, they're both conservatives. It is only in the state legislatures that partisanship counts heavily this year, and here the Republicans are hurting.

According to the Yearbook of the States, Republicans now hold both houses of a state legislature only in Colorado, Idaho, South Dakota, and shakily in New Hampshire.

To the editor:

With 1361 units of blood collected thus far in 1978-1979 our quota of 3245, the program is moving on schedule. The next visit is scheduled for Friday, November 3, at Staton House Fire Department. We need a good turnout between the hours of 1-5 p.m. in order to keep a supply of blood available when needed. Please include a visit on the 3rd to Staton House — every unit counts.

Permit me to make note of the fabulous job done by Col. Tadlock and the ROTC members on October 3-4 when 776 pints were donated by ECU students and staff, representing the greatest 2-day visit ever. Joe Calder, Director of Campus Security, and Service League volunteers played a tremendous role in assisting in this effort.

If you are accustomed to participating in the Pitt County Blood Program, thank you. If you are not, please seriously consider becoming involved. We need the help and support of everyone.

Strength For Today

NOT ACCORDING TO OUR WORTH

Christianity can be differentiated from other religions in that it represents God's search for men, whereas other religions represent man's search for God. Our salvation is not something which we can gain by our own striving alone; it is a divine gift freely given. Even the disposition to repent is a factor in life which only the grace of God makes available.

Christianity is the divine proclamation that God is always seeking after man. In other religions, men are constantly reaching up and imploring an indifferent God to help them. Christian faith on the other hand, assures us that God's love for us is not conditioned on our worth. God loves us because we have needs, and the more we need, the more does He love us.

No one really deserves God's blessing. We should always remember that it was while we were yet sinners that Christ died for us, not after we had attained any higher standard of grace.

Proud Of His Role In Spending

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

DALLAS (AP) — Robert H. McKinney is proud of having helped cause a torrent of money to flood into the vaults of home lenders, even if some say that availability has contributed to inflation.

"My primary obligation is to housing and to homebuyers," said McKinney, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. "In the past, housing has taken it on the chin. This is the first time it hasn't happened."

He is correct. Despite rising interest rates—"the prime interest rate will move to 10½ percent soon," he says—savings and loan associations, the biggest housing lenders, have plenty of cash to lend.

That money, lent out to homebuyers, has helped them to purchase $75,000 homes, 1970 style, for $150,000 or more, 1978 style. That's inflation, and McKinney doesn't deny it.

"Our actions are inflationary," he concedes, but in the same sentence he adds, "and counter-inflationary — primarily counter-inflationary." Later: "I don't believe in recession to cure inflation."

You might think that McKinney is soft on inflation. He says he isn't. The real medicine for inflation, he said in an interview, is to cut the budget deficit, and for the dollar, to correct the foreign payments imbalance.

"I just don't think we should pick on housing," he says. Inflation, he points out, is "an across the board" thing. You cannot single out homebuyers as culprits, he says. "When you tip housing you tip the economy."

McKinney, 53 this week, an attorney, former chairman of an Indianapolis savings and loan association, and former head of a construction-insurance-manufacturing concern, is one of housing's biggest defenders.

He takes pride in seeing to it that the savings and loan associations he regulates have funds to lend, and he has taken on the Federal Reserve and commercial banks in order to bring it about.

In the past, rising interest rates meant the S&Ls would lose deposits because they were strictly limited in the amount of interest they could offer on savings. Commercial banks were less severely limited.

One of the chief remedies for this situation was McKinney's decision to permit S&Ls to offer six-month savings certificates at an effective rate of 9.4 percent. It stemmed the outflow.

McKinney has done much more too to improve the liquidity of home lenders, and he is justifiably proud of it. His job, he says, is to provide money for housing. It's a phrase he lives by.

40 Years Ago Today

November 2, 1938

Announcement was made today that J. G. and P. G. Lautares, owners and operators of The Candy Palace for the past 26 years, had sold the establishment to Chris and James Kares who come from Wilmington.

The Lautares brothers will devote their entire time to the credit jewelry store bearing their name, which was established several months ago.

In retiring from The Candy Palace, the Lautares expressed their appreciation for the patronage they had been accorded here and urged that the same courtesy be extended to the new owners of The Candy Palace.

A press aide to Levin acknowledged that the candidate previously said he would not invite Carter to Michigan, but he added Levin now feels the president's visit "will help him very much."

Polls show Levin with a five-to seven-point lead over Griffin. Gov. William G. Milliken, a Republican trying to win an unprecedented third term, is involved in a close race against Democrat William Fitzgerald, a Michigan Senate leader.

From Michigan, Carter flies to Chicago for a $500-a-plate fundraiser and a rally for 3,000 supporters of Rep. Abner Mikva, a liberal Democrat in a tight race against John Edward Porter, a former Republican state legislator.

The president planned to spend the night at the residence of Chicago Mayor Michael Bilandic.

On Friday, Carter is attending a rally in Portland, Ore., for Gov. Robert W. Straub, whose race against state Sen. Victor Atiyeh, a Republican, is also considered close.

After a rally for Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. and other statewide candidates in Sacramento, Calif., the president stops in Duluth, Minn., to help Gov. Rudy Perpich and Senate candidate Robert Short.

The president returns to Washington late Friday night.

Cosmonauts Set 140-Day Orbit Record

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Soviet cosmonauts returned to Earth today after a record 140 days in space, Tass said.

The Soviet news agency said a preliminary medical checkup showed Commander Vladimir Kovalenok and Flight Engineer Alexander Ivanchenkov had withstood the long orbital flight well.

On Wednesday, the cosmonauts described their space adventure "a difficult, long and interesting flight."

Kovalenok and Ivanchenkov made the remark on the evening TV news in their final broadcast from space to Russian viewers.

Tass said the cosmonauts finished packing the Soyuz 31 capsule that would take them home and started to deactivate the systems in the orbiting Salyut 6 space station Wednesday.

Their flight broke the space endurance record set on June 17 by two other Russian cosmonauts — in the same craft — on a previous flight that ended earlier this year.

The U.S. record is 84 days, set four years ago by astronauts Gerald Carr, Edward Gibson and William Pogue aboard Skylab 4. America has not launched a manned space flight since 1975.

Kovalenok and Ivanchenkov set another record on Aug. 2, logging enough time to put the Soviet Union ahead of an American record of 937.6 total mandays in space.

The two were launched June 16 aboard the Soyuz 29 spacecraft, which linked up the next day with the orbiting station. Western diplomatic sources say the Russians are pursuing extended space flights to get full use out of their orbiting space station and to record the effects of prolonged weightlessness on the human body.

WEATHER FORECAST — Sunny skies are expected for most of the country for the forecast period until Friday morning. Cool weather is due from the Pacific coast to the East. Most of the East is forecast to be mild. (AP Laserphoto Map)

NEW YORK (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin meets Secretary of State Cyrus Vance today, but President Carter, campaigning in New York, will not join the pair as they tackle issues holding up an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty.

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, who flew here from Washington on Wednesday, said talks with State Department officials produced "relatively good progress" toward a peace treaty, but stressed the importance of the Vance-Begin session.

"Many points we do not have a mandate to agree upon or even to discuss will come up between" the two, he said.

The session, to be held in Begin's Regency Hotel suite on Park Avenue, also will deal with U.S. aid to Israel.

State Department press officer George Sherman said Wednesday that U.S. aid is not "a condition to concluding the treaty," except for a U.S. commitment to finance two new airfields in Israel to replace Sinai facilities given up in the proposed peace pact.

Begin will receive the New York City Council of Churches' "Family of Man" award tonight. His trip will also take him to Los Angeles for a speaking engagement and a weeklong visit to Canada.

He joined the White House on Wednesday in downplaying reported hard feelings between him and Carter.

"We've had very cordial exchanges in the last few days," he said.

A White House spokesman said Carter is not seeing the prime minister because

"Mr. Begin has not requested a meeting."

Carter, beginning his final round of campaigning for local candidates in next week's election, is visiting New York today to attend "Get-Out-The-Vote" rallies.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell disputed reports that Carter refused to meet Begin or is snubbing him because he is angry over Israel's plans to expand its West Bank settlements.

The West Bank issue is said to be among the principal items holding up an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, and a State Department spokesman said Wednesday that the matter "might come up" during the Vance-Begin talks today.

Besides the thorny West Bank issue, Egypt and Israel reportedly have yet to decide whether to exchange ambassadors or lower-level ministers once the treaty is signed.

Begin said he hoped all disputed issues could be resolved and a pact signed before he and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat travel to Norway in December to accept their joint Nobel Peace Prize.

Despite this optimism, which has been echoed by Egyptian leaders, U.S. officials no longer are predicting, as Vance did Oct. 13, that the treaty will be completed by Nov. 19, the first anniversary of Sadat's historic peace mission to Jerusalem.

Unimpressed By Survey

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Springfield's mayor isn't too impressed by a nationwide survey that shows his city of 130,000 is the cheapest place to live in the country.

"It's interesting, but not too meaningful," said Mayor Paul Redfearn, referring to a Chamber of Commerce survey of living costs in 208 U.S. cities.

The survey rates communities by checking average costs for food, housing, utilities, transportation, health care and miscellaneous services.

But Redfearn said that because personal income does not figure into the statistics, it's hard to draw conclusions from them.

Springfield is an agricultural center for southwest Missouri, and has diversified industries producing dairy, paper, electronics and rubber products.

Curtis Strube, the researcher for the Springfield Area Chamber of Commerce who compiled the figures for the survey, said low utility costs figured prominently in the city's low rating.

Generally fair weather is in prospect for North Carolina on through the weekend. Nights will be chilly but daytime temperatures will be a little warmer than usual.

Today's forecast called for mostly sunny with temperatures reaching the 60s and low 70s. Wednesday's highs included 76 at Hickory and 75 at Charlotte and Raleigh. Asheville had a high of 71.

Higher elevations in the mountains got no warmer than the 50s, and by the same token, lows in the mountains this morning dipped to the 30s. Lows east of the mountains were mostly in the 40s and 50s.

If Approved

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's natural gas worries will be over for the foreseeable future, if the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approves changes proposed for the federal gas allocation system by the state's only gas pipeline company.

Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp. is proposing that the amount of gas North Carolina gets this winter be increased by 30 percent over last year's levels.

That increase, coupled with improvements in Transco's own supply picture, would mean that even gas-using industries could continue operating this winter in North Carolina.

"I think that if it goes through, the crisis, so far as North Carolina is concerned, will be over for as many years in the future as we can see," said Frank Barragan, president of North Carolina Natural Gas Co.

Robert Koger, chairman of the state Utilities Commission, and Raymond J. Nery, director of the gas division of the commission's public staff, agreed. The changes could also mean a small drop in the retail price of natural gas, they added.

Transco's proposed changes are in response to a U.S. Court of Appeals order last summer, which found that the FERCA's allocation formula favored other states over North Carolina.

Traffic Safety Course For Youngsters Urged

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — The child who trusts that the driver is watching out for his safety in traffic puts his life on the line every time he crosses a street, warns Ruth S. Hughes, a child traffic-safety expert.

"It is trust that gets them in the most trouble," said Ms. Hughes, Program Development Specialist in the Driver Education Department of Aetna Life & Casualty here. "The child will look the driver right in the eye and expect that will be enough for the driver to stop. And, likewise, the driver assumes the child knows the car is coming through."

Children between the ages of 5 and 9 make up approximately 9 percent of the nation's population, yet they are involved in about 20 percent of the reported pedestrian accidents, according to federal government sources.

So traffic safety should be an important part of the young student's curriculum, says Ms. Hughes, who has developed a safety course geared to students from kindergarten through the ninth grade.

actual demonstration of different traffic-pedestrian situations, whether they are acted out in the classroom or on some street corner.

The idea is to make such an impression on the youngster that when he is chasing a ball into a street, for example, there will be an urge to first check traffic.

"Anyone who has raised children knows how engrossed they can get in play," she says. "The child is usually concerned with just one thing, and that is what is going on at the moment. The goal is to enter the safety material into their awareness."

Students, through repetition and response, both as pedestrians and bicyclists, gain experiences that prepare them to interact more successfully with other highway users, Ms. Hughes said. They learn to avoid faulty assumptions about right-of-way and about the intentions of others.

Another example of children's relying heavily on the adult driver cited by Ms. Hughes is when the youngster rides his bicycle along a busy street. Because they are attuned to walking against traffic, there is a desire to ride a bike in the same direction, she explained.

Children, because their perceptual abilities have not matured, can misjudge the speed of oncoming vehicles, and often find themselves in a hazardous situation.

Again, the child is counting on the adult driver, in his fast-moving car, to make way for him. Bicyclists of any age should travel with the flow of vehicles, the safety expert advised.

The program designed by Ms. Hughes teaches the child to identify himself as a pedestrian with a special place in the traffic scene. Vehicle sounds, peripheral vision, judging speed of cars, and the time needed to cross a street safely are also emphasized.

Help make college affordable to the youngest in a family of six.

Vote for Pitt Community College and lower the cost of higher education.

Everyone deserves a chance to continue their education. But, with the rising costs of tuition, fees and general living expenses, money becomes an important factor. And, when one family has several people to send through college, the cost can prevent many students with potential from continuing their educations. That's why you should support Pitt Community College on election day. Attending a college transfer program at Pitt will cost the student approximately $137 per year in tuition and required fees. Compare that to the average cost of $540 for tuition and required fees per year at a public senior institution. Four students can attend Pitt Community College for less than the cost of one student at a senior institution.

The State and the student will both save.

Funding for technical and vocational programs, and college parallel programs are completely separate; thus, our technical programs will not be affected. College parallel programs at community colleges cost the state much less per student than those at senior institutions. For example, the average state cost per student at community colleges last year was $1,062. At four-year schools, the average cost was $2,444. So, students will save money at Pitt Community College. And the state will save too.

Supporting Pitt Community College is not merely a financial decision. It's important to offer total educational opportunities for our citizens. Please give Pitt Community College your vote, on election day.

Shocked World In 1968, Faces Ouster From U.S.

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent
NEW YORK (AP) — Ten years ago South Vietnamese Gen. Nguyen Ngoc Loan drew his snub-nosed revolver and executed a Viet Cong soldier in a picture that shocked the world. Today, Loan — a restaurant manager in Virginia — may be ejected from the United States because of his act. Leaders of the Vietnamese exile community in the United States are labelling the government's attempt to remove Loan's American residency, and eventually deport him, as unfair and ridiculous. The Immigration and Naturalization Service, arguing that the then-Vietnamese national police chief should have been tried in Vietnam for a possible war crime for the killing on a Saigon street during the 1968 Tet offensive, has advised Loan that his residency permit will be rescinded on grounds of "moral turpitude." "He should not have been given a green card (permanent residency certificate) in the first place," spokesman Vern Jerbis told The Associated Press. "Loan's case was amongst those that qualified under a law passed by Congress authorizing special handling for Indochina refugees, similar to that given previously to Cubans and Hungarians. Loan just slipped through our bureaucracy," Jerbis said. The 48-year-old Loan, who lost his leg when seriously wounded in May 1968, has avoided reporters for years and declined to comment on the immigration service's move. But his former colleagues in combat have rallied to his defense. "All the Vietnamese exiles are furious about this," declared former South Vietnamese Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky, who now runs a liquor store in Los Angeles. "We recognize Loan as one of the most staunch anti-communists that our country produced. Everything he did was for his country, and there were war crimes on both sides." The Saigon government spokesman at the time, Nguyen Ngoc Linh, who runs several restaurants in Houston, said:

"This is unfair to a man who spent his whole life in this war." The American military commander during Loan's time, Gen. William C. Westmoreland, told the AP that the street execution "was an imprudent act, but an act performed under stress. This matter has legal implications that I can't pass judgment on. But there was great stress in Saigon at that time and great anger at the acts of the communist terrorists."

Robert Ackerman, said he will argue that the Vietnamese general was acting within his rights when he greeted down the suspect in the street. "Vietnam was under martial law at the time, civilian rule had broken down, the law of the military commander prevailed," said Ackerman, a former U.S. Marine. "Loan will argue that he was directly ordered to summarily execute any civilian found with a gun. Warnings of this punishment were broadcast over Saigon radio."

He argued that the incident did not require a trial under Vietnamese law "because it was a combat death, not a murder." Ky said he will back Ackerman. "During the Tet offensive, guerrillas were all over the city, at the U.S. Embassy, at the presidential palace," Ky said. "We made it clear to all at the time that armed civilians would be executed. If it is thought necessary to persecute Loan, why not also persecute his superiors? I was one of his superiors."

The Vietnamese government made no attempt to discipline the police chief, and there was no inquiry. "It was just part of the bloody continuing war," Ky said, adding that "I was mad that the picture was taken at the time. It was bad publicity for us."

At war's end, he fled to the United States and established the modest "Le Trois Continents" restaurant in Burke, Va., on the outskirts of Washington. His wife cooked, and some of his five daughters helped tend tables. One daughter is in medical school.

Contacted at his restaurant Wednesday night, Loan declined to comment. "I don't want to jeopardize my case," he said. Ackerman said that Loan "can't quite understand what this is all about, or why he should be treated this way."

University To Pay For Acquiring PhDs

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina system has embarked on a program designed to improve its faculty and its racial balance at the same time. Seventeen faculty members have been chosen to work full time on the doctoral degrees at full salaries. Of the 17, all but two are black, and the two white faculty members teach at predominantly black institutions. They were chosen from about 60 nominees for the first UNC Board of Governors' Faculty Doctoral Study Assignments. Extra money will allow the schools to hire temporary replacements for the doctoral students, whose average salary is $18,500, according to Dr. Vincent Hackley, assistant vice president for academic affairs and administrator of the program.

The teachers chosen and their areas of study are: Frank Porter, from UNC-Charlotte to the University of North Carolina (physics education). Cecilia Davidson, from N.C. Central to Catholic University (music). Marye Jeffries, from Fayetteville State to UNC (education). Charles Evans, from N.C. Agricultural and Technical State University to Syracuse University (management and marketing). Barbara Wyche, from Elizabeth City State to Boston University (sociology). Barbara Nixon, from N.C. Central to N.C. State University (school psychology). Japhet Nkongwe, from N.C. A&T to UNC (marketing). Bishop Patterson, from Elizabeth City State to N.C. State (industrial arts education). ## N.C. Court Of Appeals Race Will See 'Firsts'

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The winner of the only contested race for a seat on the North Carolina Court of Appeals will be the first of his kind, whoever he is.

If it is Democratic incumbent and interim appointee Judge Richard Erwin of Winston-Salem, he will become the first black person ever to win a statewide election in North Carolina. If it is Republican attorney Joe Cagle of Hickory, he will become the first GOP candidate ever elected to an appellate-level court in the state. And should he win, Cagle would be the first candidate ever to defeat a sitting judge on the Appeals Court.

Between the two minorities — blacks and Republicans — Cagle says he thinks it will be tougher for the Republican to win. "The odds are against me," he acknowledged in a recent interview. "If the Democrats ran a monkey or a horse or a dead person, they're going to get several hundred thousand votes anyhow."

"There's never been a black person elected to a statewide position," Erwin said in a separate interview. "And of course I want to win the election for that reason, to show that there is growth in democracy in North Carolina and that one can be considered on his merits, his integrity and his honesty, without regard to race."

Erwin, 55, was appointed to the bench last December by Gov. Jim Hunt, to fill one of three new seats. He resigned a seat in the state House after two terms, and like the two other judges must now face election.

He is a graduate of Johnson C. Smith University and has a law degree from Howard University. Born in Marion, he has been a lawyer in Winston-Salem since 1951 and is a former member of the state Board of Education.

Cagle, 39, is making his first run for public office. He has been a lawyer in Hickory since 1965, after serving as a research assistant to former state Supreme Court Justice Clifton Moore for a year. He has degrees from Olivet College, the University of New York and Goddard College, and graduated from law school at Wake Forest.

In other judicial races, Walter Brock is unopposed for a seat on the state Supreme Court, and Justice David M. Britt, appointed earlier this year, has no Republican opponent but faces Libertarian Party candidate Michael E. Read of Durham.

In the other Appeals Court races, judges Burley Mitchell Jr. and John Webb, both appointed with Erwin, face no opposition. Judicial races seldom attract much attention, and ethics standards of the state bar force candidates to limit their campaigning to writing letters, speaking where invited and quietly soliciting votes in person.

Cagle calls himself "a Jesse Helms conservative." He is a former Democrat who changed his registration, he said, during Goldwater's 1964 presidential campaign. His main reason for running, Cagle said, is to challenge the tradition in North Carolina that judges are appointed by the governor, then re-elected for as long as they want the job. Cagle said he favors a merit selection system for appointing judges.

Erwin said he does not think race has been made an issue in the campaign, but noted that he was the only judge who faced primary opposition too. "I can only look at the circumstances," he said.

Other Topics Share Classes On Death

FOREST GROVE, Ore. (AP) — Students who take classes on death and dying and related topics tend to be non-smokers. This is one startling fact that has surfaced during the past several years from "death" classes taught at Pacific University by Dr. George Evans of the English Faculty.

Since he started teaching classes on the topic of death in 1971, Evans has had more than 200 students. Only 1 percent of these students smoked. In his regular English classes, Evans finds that some 50 percent of the students smoke.

"I can only surmise that the non-smokers are more aware of how fragile life is," says Evans. "They are concerned about their own mortality and care for their health. Their avoidance of tobacco is one example of this."

Evans believes he was one of the first professors in the nation some seven years ago to start teaching about death. He usually teaches such a course once a year and last summer he offered "The Theme of Death in Literature." His classes are generally limited to 20 students, and they fill up quickly. "Taboos are appealing," he says. "And, the American public has made death a taboo subject. People today are busy pursuing happiness and avoiding discussing pain and death. The scientific nature of our culture has led people to suppress the topic of death. It's a mystery that we don't like, and it frightens us."

Evans says more women than men enroll in his death classes, and he thinks women are more open in dealing with death. "Women seem to be more interested in life and death; women represent the source of life," Evans explains. "Men see death as an adversary, and they always lose."

"Today's young people are not confronted by death as were their counterparts at the turn of the century. It's a youth culture and people live longer. Also," Evans adds, "people seldom die at home any more, and the family no longer buries the deceased person itself any more, either."

The injured bird was rescued by a sympathetic school teacher and taken to a veterinarian who referred the patient to Mrs. Judith Touns, Christine's mother, an authority on birds. Mrs. Touns said the owl did not appear to be seriously injured after having rocks hurled at it by school children. She plans to release the small creature on Belle Fountain Beach in Jackson County — an area more suited to its preying habits. Not native to the Coast, Mrs. Touns said the owl just "probably got blown off its course." (AP Laserphoto)

Hunt Rebuffs Doubt Of His Supporting Ingram

By DAVID TOMLIN
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt delivered a sharply worded statement Wednesday, designed to erase lingering doubts that he wholeheartedly supports Democrat John Ingram's bid to unseat Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

"I enthusiastically support John Ingram, and I do not support any Republican," Hunt snapped at a hastily convened news conference. Hunt's support for Ingram has been seen as lukewarm in some circles since the populist-oriented Ingram defeated moderate Luther Hodges Jr. in the May primary runoff. Helms has often portrayed himself as closer to mainstream Democratic political thinking in the state than Ingram.

But events Tuesday and Wednesday apparently persuaded the governor to make a forceful display of Democratic solidarity.

It all began Tuesday, when the governor's office announced that Hunt, Sen. Robert Morgan, D-N.C., and Helms would all appear at a joint news conference to announce a major new state-federal rural aid program.

Helms was asked whether the unusual bipartisan appearance with Hunt just a week before the election had any political implications.

"I think he'd be delighted to support me," Helms said of the governor. "We've had a good working relationship. He's been a very effective governor." The senator indicated that if he were a Democrat he would have Hunt's backing.

Helms arrived late for the news conference Wednesday. When he was introduced, he moved to the podium and delivered a brief talk, to the dismay of Hunt staffers who noted that Helms wasn't on the program. Hunt scheduled his separate news conference shortly afterward.

"I regret that Senator Helms used this morning's significant and historic announcement to try to misrepresent my position in this election," Hunt said. "He is totally wrong in suggesting that I support him in any way."

"I do not believe Sen. Helms' record in the Senate is consistent with the needs of the people of North Carolina, and I will continue working as hard as I can to put another Democrat in the Senate," Hunt added.

The uproar over Helms' statement eclipsed the original purpose of the Hunt-Helms-Morgan news conference, which was to announce a new program under which North Carolina will help decide where Farmers Home Administration loans and grants are placed.

Last year the agency loaned or gave more than $600 million to North Carolina. Hunt said the state would help the FHA decide which rural towns were most in need of help with housing, health care, unemployment or poverty.

The governor said he and Morgan had both been involved in developing the new program. Helms, he noted, had not only not been involved but had actually voted against the Agricultural Appropriations Act, which included money for the program. Hunt said Helms had been invited at the request of the federal agency as a courtesy and was not supposed to speak.

Conducted 2 Workshops

ECU News Bureau

Dr. Charles Coble of the East Carolina University Department of Science Education conducted workshops at two recent professional gatherings.

He directed a study session on research and science teacher education for the Mid-Atlantic Association for the Education of Teachers of Science at Lake Buckhorn State Park, Hazard, Kentucky.

Coble's presentation, "Interactive Variables in Science Teacher Education: Some Research Possibilities," focused on needed research into the teaching-learning process in elementary and secondary science. He also presented a summary of the major findings in this area over the past decade.

"Creative Sciencing for Young Children" was the topic of a workshop Dr. Coble directed at the 25th study conference of the N.C. Association for the Education of Young Children.

Dr. Coble will represent ECU in the NC-AEYC during the coming year, as a member of the association's planning committee.

Counter-Goofer Dust

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Somebody conjured up a spell on Cumberland County District Court Judge Sol Cherry this week, but the judge just conjured it right back.

Cherry found goofer dust sprinkled on his judge's bench Tuesday morning, Halloween. Goofer dust, supposed to be ground up bones removed from a graveyard at midnight, was also sprinkled on the District Attorney's table.

The stuff reputedly casts an evil spell over its victims, and it apparently worked against Cherry.

When court went overtime until 6:15 p.m., Cherry found himself locked in the courthouse. And his paycheck never arrived from the Administrative Office of the Courts.

Then Cherry remembered his Aunt Mae Wynie.

"I have my own spell, taught to me by my Aunt Mae Wynie, and I cast it right back," Cherry said.

"The person who did it will become very ill within three days and will not be able to work, will not even be able to get out of bed."

As a boy in Hertford County, Cherry said, he frequently sneaked away to drink homemade plum wine with his Aunt Mae Wynie, who lived in a tenant house on an old plantation.

"She said, 'Sol, you cast this spell and I be with you always.' So now I've got Aunt Mae Wynie floating around in my courtroom," Cherry said. "If the person who did it comes in and confesses and wants absolution, I've also got a spell to undo it," he added.

District Court Judge Joseph Dupree said Cherry should have saved his spell. Dupree said he has been a victim many times of goofer dust while holding court in his hometown of Raeford.

According to Dupree, a victim can neutralize the evil effects of goofer dust by covering it with salt, talcum powder or ground chalk.

But Cherry may have the ultimate remedy after all. "I have more black magic than anybody," Cherry said. "When I find out who it is, they're gonna get 30 days."

Thirty days is the usual sentence for being found in contempt of court.

Liggett Group Ponders Move

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The Liggett Group is studying a possible move of its corporate staff to the New York City area to enhance communications with Liggett's far-flung holdings, company officials said Wednesday.

Liggett President Raymond J. Mulligan said the firm has signed a lease on an office building in Montvale, N.J., but no definite decision has been made on the move.

Mulligan said the lease covers a 10-year rental agreement on a building not yet completed and has an option to renew for an additional 10 years. It also includes a sublet provision, and Mulligan said if the corporate staff is not moved, Liggett will sublet the facility.

He said the company's staff could not be moved before the middle of 1979, and the move would not affect the company's domestic cigarette operations.

The company has 11 diversified subsidiaries with 30 operating locations. Liggett's operating divisions include two tobacco companies headquartered in Durham and Owensboro, Ky.; three beverage, alcohol and wine companies in New York City; a pet food company headquartered in Allentown, Pa.; a physical fitness and sporting goods operation in Opelika, Ala.; two soft drink bottlers in California; a cereal and popcorn company in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; a home cleaning products company in Indianapolis and a fashion accessories company in Providence, R.I.

Liggett moved its corporate headquarters to Durham in 1970. Officials said at that time the move was made to bring the staff closer to the company's tobacco operations.

Rumors of the possible move have circulated through the Durham business community for several days, and city officials are not happy at the prospect.

"If they decide to move from Durham, it will be a tragic and sad day for the community," said George Herbert, president of the Durham Chamber of Commerce and the Research Triangle Institute.

"We'll obviously do anything else we possibly can to convince them to stay," said Bob Booth, executive director of the chamber. "We're hoping against hope their study will show it's to their economic benefit to stay here. If the study says go, they'll go."

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Alice counsels rape victims, but she says there's also a demand for her services from an unexpected source — the rapists themselves.

Alice (not her real name) got interested in rape and its causes when she was 14 and a friend of her brother raped her. Three years later another man tried to rape her, but that time she fought, stabbing him 23 times with a rattail comb.

The incidents sparked an interest that led to 13 years of psychological study at three universities. She now works for Rape Line in Winston-Salem, handling some of the more than 660 calls that come in each year.

Alice spends most of her time counseling rape victims on the phone or in hospital emergency rooms. But dozens of men also call asking for advice, and at least one has admitted several rapes to Alice.

Tom, for instance, He would pick up a woman at a party and go with her to his or her apartment. "He might be necking on a couch with a woman and (when he made further advances) she'd pull away. That's when he'd get mad and force her to have intercourse."

"When a woman made herself vulnerable, he had this macho concept that he ought to perform," she said. "But he hated women for pushing him to violence."

Or Bill. "Bill had this mystique about a woman's body since childhood," Alice said. "He first asked me for some books with kinky sex because that's what he thought he was into. I thought he needed a little more information ... and I had him read some other books. He's doing a lot better. He's planning to get married."

Alice feels that American society, like Bill, is sexually undereducated. She would like to see schools provide basic sex counseling because families often don't.

"So many men have been brought up thinking of women as wives or lovers, but not friends," Alice said. "Sometimes (counseling men) is like teaching them how to be friends."

With some of the men who call her, that may be asking too much, but Alice believes she's able to do some good.

"I get calls from men who rape, asking me why they feel so hostile," she said. "I have a verbal agreement with a couple of them. They promise to call me when they feel themselves drifting into trouble. They know when it's coming. Maybe they start to drink or have more elaborate fantasies."

Denies Sale Of Story By 'Test Tube Doctor'

NEW YORK (AP) — An associate of Dr. Patrick C. Steptoe, the British "test-tube baby" doctor, denies published reports that he and Steptoe sold their story to the National Enquirer.

"Neither Mr. Steptoe or myself have given or sold any rights whatsoever to the National Enquirer nor to any other newspapers or periodicals in England, in the United States or anywhere else in the world," Dr. Robert Edwards said Wednesday.

Edwards was Steptoe's partner during 12 years of research that culminated in the birth of the so-called "test-tube" baby in England. The doctors said the baby was conceived outside the womb.

"I wished to make it clear that both Mr. Steptoe and myself fully intended to give the fullest information to the medical and scientific press," said Edwards in a statement released here. But Edwards said a scientific paper would be "premature."

The report that the story had been sold to the Enquirer surfaced when the Chicago-based Barren Foundation canceled plans to honor Steptoe, saying he had failed to document his work.

Dr. Richard Blandau of the University of Washington, vice president of the Barren Foundation's medical advisory board, told a Chicago SunTimes newspaper columnist: "There is great concern in the medical world about Dr. Steptoe's test-tube baby. He has failed to publish a scientific report to explain fully what he did. He violated medical ethics by selling his story to the Enquirer, supposedly for $650,000, instead of publishing his story in a scientific journal."

Meanwhile, the New York Fertility Research Foundation said Wednesday it will go ahead with its plans to honor Steptoe. Dr. Wayne Decker said Steptoe's work in infertility and reproduction has "earned him wide recognition beyond the presently publicized birth...."

Bit Of Home In Wisconsin

STOUGHTON, Wis. (AP) — Margot Skotte discovered a little of her native Norway in this community of 7,500 tucked between the rolling hills of rich, Wisconsin farmland.

"In every shop in Stoughton there is someone who speaks Norwegian!" she exclaimed. Browsing through a bookstore, she found a book about Norway that she said contained a picture of her farm.

Mrs. Skotte is one of 98 Norwegian tourists visiting this area of the Midwest settled by Norwegians more than 100 years ago.

"Do you celebrate May 17 here?" she asked.

"Do you mean Syttende Mai?" an American accompanying the group replied. He told her Syttende Mai — Norway's Independence Day — is the biggest celebration of the year in Stoughton.

The 98 Norwegians are on a three-week tour of the United States that began Sunday in New York. From Wisconsin they will go to Sacramento, Calif., and San Francisco. The tour was arranged by a Norwegian agricultural association.

Cites Restraint By Ex-President

MEDIA, Pa. (AP) — Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who served under two Republican presidents, was asked at a news conference whether he thought former President Gerald R. Ford has been overly critical recently of the Carter administration.

"No," Kissinger replied Wednesday. "Every administration has come in and said, 'We're going to change the world.' This one came in and said, 'We created the world.' In view of that, I think Ford has shown great restraint."

Better Grades, Better Prices

FARMVILLE — According to Louis N. Williams, sales supervisor, Farmville Tobacco Board of Trade, quality of tobacco Wednesday was some better than Tuesday, with better grades helping to boost the average.

Grade for grade, prices remained steady for the past two sale days, Williams commented. Top price paid by a company was $1.71 a pound. Stabilization receipts accounted for 4.95 percent of gross sales.

The Farmville market sold 735,422 pounds Wednesday for $944,358, an average of $1.28.41 per 100 pounds. To date, the Farmville market has sold 33,934,747 pounds for $46,836,965, an average of $1.38.02 per 100 pounds.

Those favoring the proposed Community College say this won't cost anything.

Those favoring the proposed Community College say the present PTI technical and vocational programs won't be affected.

Those favoring the proposed Community College claim a major educational need is not being met.

NOT SO! It will increase our county and state taxes. The only other choice is to use money earmarked for the public schools. That is, take money away from the schools to support the Community College. New programs and duplication are not free!

NOT SO! The proposed Community College will clearly use space and divert teaching and staff resources—and money—from other programs.

Again, NOT SO! We are privileged to have a major public university in Pitt County. E.C.U. is an ongoing $100 million investment in a wide range of educational programs available to all of the people. It offers special programs which the proposed Community College would only duplicate. These special E.C.U. programs have the same entrance requirements as those proposed for a community college.

Solomon's Plans Were Sidetracked By Scandal

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Jay Solomon came to Washington hoping to beautify government buildings with art and landscaping. Instead, he is dealing with what may be the biggest U.S. government money scandal ever.

Tenn., who would rather talk about modern art than bid rigging and kickbacks, became head of the General Services Administration just as it was being discovered as the most corruption-riddled agency in government.

He describes himself as a private man and acknowledges he is uncomfortable being in charge of cleaning up the sleepy agency, where an estimated $100 million annually may have been lost to corruption in recent years.

"I'm a builder. I'm a creator," he said in an interview. "My character would be the other way — of building rather than destroying — and I'm in a destructive position by the very nature of what you have to do."

As a builder, the 58-year-old Solomon became a multi-millionaire. In 1961 he turned one of a chain of drive-in theaters owned by his father in Chattanooga into a shopping center. Today, the firm — Solomon has divested himself of company stock — owns or manages 184 such centers and is the country's largest shopping center developer.

Solomon's background has little in it to show him as a chaser of crooks, but he has been praised by investigators and members of Congress for his determination to rid the agency of corruption.

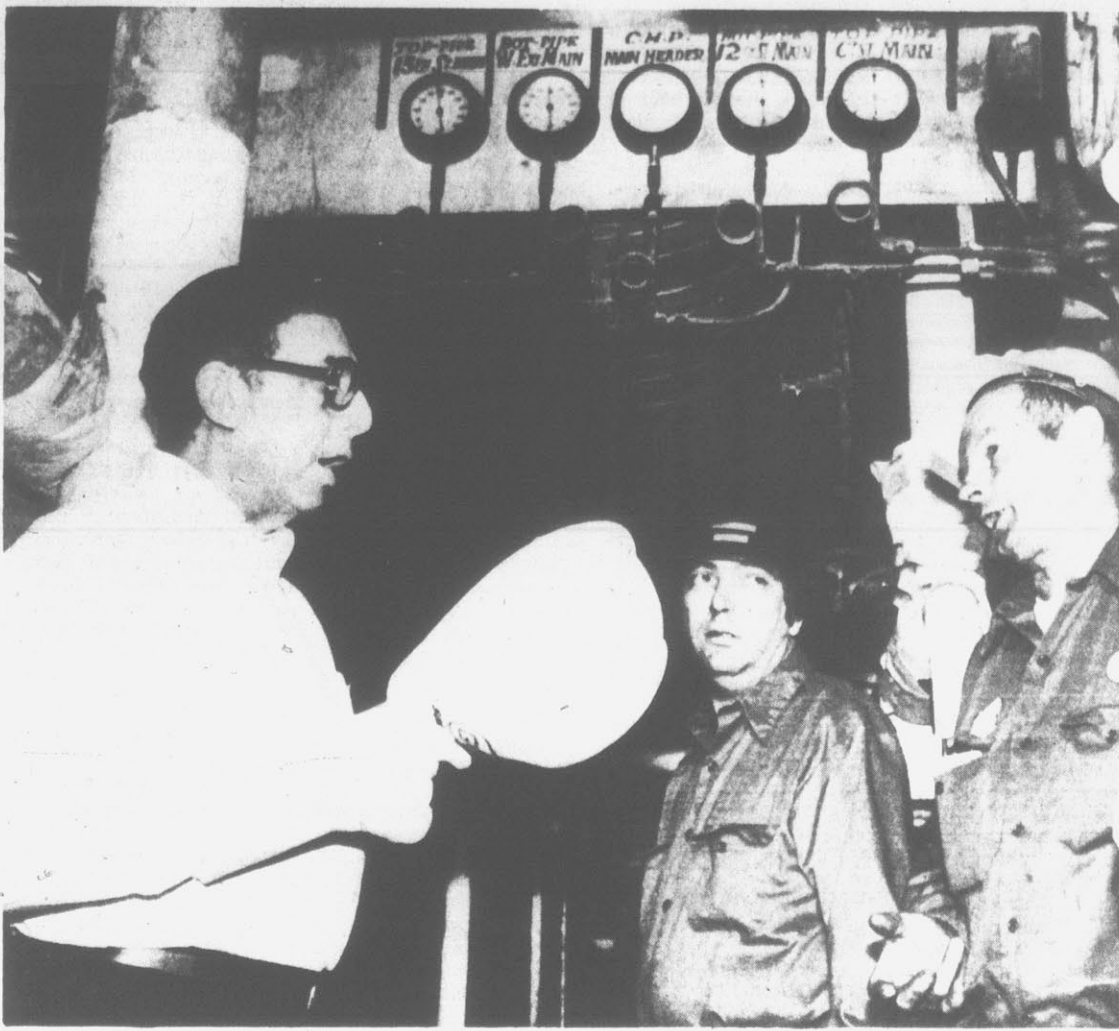

"One thing about him is that he has hung in there. He could have said, 'I'm leaving. I don't want anything to do with this cesspool.' But he didn't," says an investigator.

Solomon admits that he often has thought of quitting. "I sometimes wake up in the morning and say I've had enough ... I want to get back to Tennessee. I want to go home," he told reporters recently.

But each time, he says, he decided he didn't want to leave "such a mess" to President Carter, whom he and his family supported when few gave the Georgian a chance of becoming president.

Vincent Alto, the lawyer Solomon hired to head the GSA investigation, doubts that Solomon will remain into a second Carter term. The frustration of trying to change the bureaucracy is exhausting, Alto says.

Despite Solomon's view of himself as a private person, associates say he enjoys the limelight. When asked to head the GSA, the government's landlord and supply agency, Solomon had two desires: to bring modern business techniques to government and to "give a lot of emphasis to art and architecture" in federal buildings.

Reflecting his love of art, Solomon's office is filled with artists' models of sculptures that adorn federal buildings and the hallway has paintings by avant-garde artist Peter Max. All were discovered in storage at GSA headquarters until Solomon directed them displayed.

"I didn't come to Washington to be an investigator," Solomon says, adding that neither he nor Carter had an inkling of the corruption in the GSA over two decades that has brought dozens of indictments.

Since arriving at GSA, Solomon has made changes that rocked the agency, including replacing dozens of middle-echelon workers. But his biggest move was to fire Deputy Administrator Robert Griffin, a close friend of House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill. Solomon said that with Griffin as his top assistant, there was a question about who was boss.

Close associates of Solomon say the agency remains bitterly divided between backers of Solomon and those of the previous regime or of Griffin. And Solomon says he still is unsure that some corruption does not yet go on among the overruled the directive, saying wrongdoing had yet to be proved.

"When he was in business and he dealt with a contractor that did not perform, he would never have anything to do with him again," says Jean Allen, one of his top assistants and a friend of 20 years. "It's very hard for him to understand that he can't do that here."

Sitting next to the fireplace in his spacious 6th floor office at GSA headquarters — adjacent to an anteroom where, it's said, the Teapot Dome scandal was brewed a halfcentury ago — Solomon says he regrets the current scandal has occupied so much of his time.

He adds, however: "My administration of the GSA, if it weren't for the scandal, would probably just be another passing fancy."

Old Coin Is A Treasure

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — A unique Roman coin that would have been a throwaway in its own time may be worth thousands of dollars to Duke University.

The coin was minted in Istanbul between the years 335 and 337, during the reign of the Roman king Haniballianus, a nephew of the first Christian emperor, Constantine.

It was discovered by Charles Karukstis as he catalogued a coin collection given the university's art museum by Dr. Kenneth W. Clark, professor emeritus of New Testament at Duke.

Karukstis said Haniballianus ruled a territory that is now Armenia, and, like other Roman kings, issued his own coins stamped with his face and name.

"They did this for propagandist reasons, to establish themselves and create an image, as much as for monetary purposes," Karukstis said.

The coin in the Clark collection is rare on two counts. First, Haniballianus was assassinated after only two years and issued relatively few coins.

But Karukstis said the coin is "exceptionally" rare, because the propagandist who made it misspelled the king's name. He left off the "H".

The coin, about the size of a dime and in excellent condition, has been appraised by experts at "several thousand dollars," according to museum director W.K. Stars, but it is by no means the oldest in the collection.

The earliest in the group come from Athens and date from the 6th century B.C.

Rose Closes Year At Northeastern

By WOODY PEELE Reflector Sports Editor Rose High School's Rampants close out their season Friday night, traveling to meet the Eagles of Northeastern High School.

The windup will mean whether the Rampants will finish the year with a winning record, and a third place finish in Division I.

Both the Rampants and Eagles have been eliminated from either of the two post-season playoff berths, as Rocky Mount and Bertie have those wrapped up. Rose, in actuality, could end up tied with Bertie for second place, should the Falcons bow to Northern Nash, and Rose win this weekend, but Bertie's win over Rose assured them of the victory.

Northeastern comes into the game after three straight Division I losses. The Eagles entered the year as the pre-season favorite.

But after beating Northern Nash, 20-6, in the league opener, the Eagles dropped a 21-19 decision to Rocky Mount. James Tyler, Northeastern's top pass receiver, was injured in that game, and has not played since then, and the Eagles have had trouble getting their offense going without him.

That Rocky Mount loss was followed by defeats at the hands of Fike, 14-0, and Bertie, 13-7.

Rose comes in with a two-game winning streak, and Coach Dave Bumgarner feels that is important for the Rampants to end up on a winning note. "That will give us three in a row to start next season. And ending with a 'up' situation is a whole lot better than with a loss."

Following last week's 9-0 win over Wilson Fike, Bumgarner expressed disappointment in the Rampants inability to score more. "Penalties hurt us a lot in the game," he said. Rose had over 100 yards in penalties.

"They took us out of several opportunities to move the ball and score. We just weren't as sharp as we should have been."

Bumgarner did feel that the Rampants did the best job blocking they had done this season. "We didn't throw the ball well, but as it turned out, we didn't have to. It would have helped us to have completed a couple of passes however."

The defense was again the key to the win, as the Rampants held Fike to less than 100 yards in total offense.

"You know, only one team has rushed for more than 100 yards against us: Kinston. And when you think that (Ron) Butler didn't play (against Fike), you can see that the defense did a great job. Not having him available gave us a chance to look at some other players we might not have seen otherwise, and they did real well, too."

Butler has returned to practice this week, but it is unsure whether he will be able to play Friday night. In addition, Doug Selby will miss the final game. He suffered a knee injury against Northern Nash and was out of action against Fike, also.

"Northeastern has been able to move the ball pretty well," Bumgarner said. Prior to last week's game, the Eagles had rushed for 1,592 yards and passed for 959 more. That compares with 1,184 rushing and 223 passing for Rose.

Tyler was their main stay, catching 28 passes for 473 yards and nine touchdowns. "I don't know whether he'll be back or not," Bumgarner said. "If he is back, it certainly will make a big difference in the game."

But even without him, the Eagles have a good game, as Dudley White leads the rushing with 1,050 yards, tops in the conference. Quarterback Eric McDaniels has hit on 58 of 117 passes for 949 yards and 14 touchdowns (again, not counting the Bertie game), giving Northeastern a well-balanced attack.

"Playing up there will make a lot of difference, too," Bumgarner said. "They are hard to beat on their own home field."

The game, the season-closer for both teams, will get underway at 8 p. m. on the Eagle field.

O'Connor Nixes Nays

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — When Fred O'Connor talked about what he would do in his new job as the San Francisco 49ers' head coach, it called to mind the lyrics of an old popular song that went:

"You gotta accentuate the positive. Eliminate the negative. Latch on to the affirmative. And don't mess with Mr. In-between."

After he took over the 1-8 National Football League club Tuesday from Pete McCulley, O'Connor put it this way:

"We've got seven weeks to improve the football team... We've got to stop doing negative things and beating ourselves. If we emphasize reducing negative plays, we should have more positive results."

The negative has included 35 turnovers in nine games on fumbles and interceptions.

Getting more specific, the 39-year-old former offensive coordinator under McCulley, said he wanted the team to be "more physical" and "make sure we all accept the responsibility to get inspirational" about the game.

Later, he said that in coordination with his offensive line and receiver coaches, he would call the plays for second-year quarterback Steve DeBerg starting Sunday at Atlanta, a game he described as a real challenge, in view of the Falcons' upset victory Monday over Los Angeles. Atlanta beat the 49ers 20-17 here two weeks ago.

Under McCulley, DeBerg was given a general game plan but called his own plays.

Dye Made Mistake On ASU Quarterback

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
Pat Dye made a mistake two years ago. And he's hoping that it doesn't come back to haunt him Saturday night. Steve Brown, the quarterback for Appalachian State University, ranks 11th in the country in total offense, collecting 200.9

yards a game through eight contests. He's rushed for 291 and passes for 1,316, a total of 1,607 so far. Brown, just a sophomore, is from Goldsboro. "He's another great quarterback out of Goldsboro that we made a mistake on," Dye admitted. "We should have recruited him. Instead we went after two other players, and signed them. "One of them quit and the other transferred," Dye added while talking to the press at his weekly press luncheon yesterday. "You know he doesn't want to beat East Carolina bad since he's from Goldsboro and we didn't offer him a scholarship," Dye added.

"We like to take a lot of pride in Eastern North Carolina kids and I would guess that Brown probably wanted to come here. It's been said that I refused to offer him a scholarship because he was too slow. Well, I didn't ever say he was too slow. I just said he didn't run the ball much at Goldsboro."

"As it turns out, we probably would have been better off to sign him than the other two we did sign. He sure can throw the ball. He has a very quick release, and has really made the Appalachian offense go." Dye looked back to the Oyster

Bowl victory over the University of Richmond and noted that if you overlooked the 11 fumbles and the four turnovers, the offense had an outstanding day. "I don't think Richmond ever really stopped us," he said. "We stopped ourselves with our mistakes. Outside of that, it was probably the best offensive game we've had all year."

"Right now we are close to getting the offense where we want it. Our line blocked better than it had all year against Richmond, and I think it has gotten ever better during the off-week.

"(Leander) Green has his best day against Richmond. While I wasn't happy with his fumbles, he did take it in twice when we needed it."

"Dye wasn't quite as pleased with the defense, however. "The last two weeks (against Southern Mississippi and Richmond) we haven't played as well as we can. We made a few more mistakes in both games than we normally do. I have no explanation for the Southern Mississippi game, but I don't think we did a good job of getting mentally prepared for Richmond."

Dye said that he hoped that the defense would return to its old style against Appalachian State.

"We've enjoyed this time off. I'm pleased with the team's attitude. I think we've gotten better offensively and defensively. I know not playing Saturday gave us a chance to rest both our minds and bodies. Not having to 'get up' for a game helped us a lot mentally."

Dye added that the team is looking forward to returning to Ficklen Stadium. It will be the first time in a month that the Pirates have been on their home field, and only the third time this year.

"We've had a rough schedule, playing one at home, then three on the road, one more at home, then three more on the road," he said. "So it's kinda gonna be good to get home again."

Dye said he hasn't given up on the idea that this year's team is his best ever at East Carolina. "I'm just disappointed that they haven't arrived there. I haven't seen our best day yet. I've seen spurts of greatness, but we haven't put it all together and been consistent. I want to see this before this year is over, both on offense and defense."

"I can say one thing. Right now, we are not a football team that is just trying to finish the season. There is enthusiasm out there on the practice field. We're looking forward to these last three games."

The Pirates play host to Appalachian Saturday night at 7 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium.

Maryland, Navy Bids Will End

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
Unbeaten, untied and unabashed over disparaging remarks about Eastern football, Penn State and Maryland come to grips Saturday in the college "Game of the Week."

Navy — undefeated and unappreciated — also sticks its periscope out of the water in a match against defending national champion Notre Dame. Some rumblings in the Top Twenty, but powerhouses Oklahoma, Alabama, Nebraska and Southern California carry on.

Penn State 27, Maryland 18: The No.2 Nittany Lions move quicker and hit harder than the No.5 Terrapins. Notre Dame 21, Navy 7: A salute to Coach George Welsh and his gritty Midshipmen, but the Irish get there "fastest with the mostest."

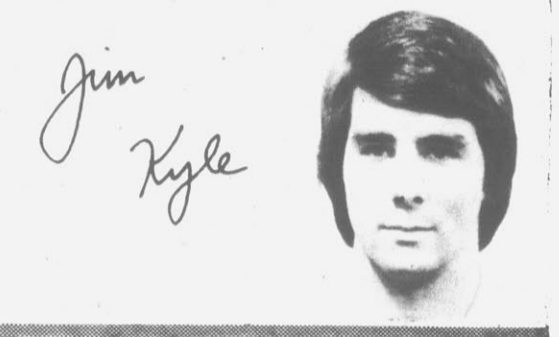

Oklahoma 38, Colorado 20: The Sooners' Billy Sims finds little wind resistance in the mile-high Rockies. Alabama 35, Mississippi State 14: The Bulldogs have shown they can explode, but it's hard to explode in a Bear-trap.

Nebraska 42, Kansas 19: The Cornhuskers' offensive line, led by Kelvin Clark, is strong enough to move a house. Southern Cal 27, Stanford 10: How come the Trojans consistently come up with top running backs? Charlie White is another O.J.

Michigan 48, Iowa 6: With ratings at stake, the gates of mercy close slowly among the big powers. UCLA 32, Oregon 9: UCLA is pushing linebacker Jerry Robinson for the Heisman Trophy. A good man but an impossible task.

Houston 30, TCU 6: The Cougars were "Southwest Conference co-champs in 1976. They were crippled in 1977. Now they're all well again. So? Louisiana State 19, Mississippi 7: The Tigers have christened Charles Alexander, their top rusher. "Alexander the Great."

Georgia 34, VMI 7: If the Bulldogs don't win this one, President Carter should call for a federal probe. Purdue 31, Northwestern 6: The Boilermakers have jelled under Jim Young and loom as prime Rose Bowl material.

ONE OF THE MORE respected of the multitude of sports tabloids published around the country, "Basketball Weekly", had made its annual pre-season predictions for the college season. According to BW, UCLA's Bruins will come out on top in the NCAA tournament next March.

What? How can that be, you say. How can anyone not rank Duke's Blue Devils number one when they finished second last year and have all five starters returning? Mind you, nearly every publication around IS picking Duke as the team to beat, but BW is counting on history to repeat itself and no team has ever come back to win an NCAA championship after finishing second the year before.

Not only that, but Duke was able to attain the success it enjoyed last season largely because of the fact that the Blue Devils were a surprise team. They snuck up on a lot of folks. This year will be different. Everyone will be gunning to knock off the favorites. For instance, at Western Kentucky, where the Blue Devils open, "Beat Duke" T-shirts have been selling well throughout the fall.

The pressure to stay on top is infinitely greater than the pressure on teams trying to get there. Just ask the players on last season's Kentucky team. The fun almost completely went out of the game for the Wildcats as they strove to meet their pre-season expectations. Coach Joe Hall said after his team won the NCAA title the team could not have considered its season successful without the championship trophy.

THIS SEASON, AS last, however, Duke coach Bill Foster plans to stress the fun aspect of the game. "Having fun has always been a goal with us," he is quoted as saying. "It just got brought to light more last year because of all the exposure we got. People got a look at the kind of players we have and saw how much we enjoyed playing. I got a lot of letters from people telling me how much they enjoyed our team and saying this is what college athletics is supposed to be all about."

The talented Duke lineup won the hearts of many NCAA finals viewers as they played with smiles on their faces instead of grim, business-like expressions.

Every player on that runner up team except one, a seldom-used backcourt man, returns for Duke this season. Plus, the Blue Devils acquired a highly-recruited freshman, 6-5 Vince Taylor.

The court leader is guard Jim Spanarkel, a senior finally (it seems he's been around for six or seven years). John Harrell, a transfer from N. C. Central who was a big surprise last year, and Bob Bender, a transfer from Indiana, also return in the backcourt, along with the new man, Taylor, expected to see action early on.

Center Mike Gminski, 6-11, is the solid post around which the Blue Devil attack is built, and the middle is one spot where the team has little depth. Gminski's moves on offense and his rebounding and shot blocking skills on defense are counted on heavily. An injury to him would be a devastating blow to the Duke hopes for this season. "No question: depth is a concern," according to Foster.

Also in the frontcourt are two sophomores, Kenny Denard and Gene Banks, who were solid performers as freshmen and can be expected to be improved this season. Backups include 6-11 Scott Goetsch and Jim Suddath.

With such a lineup, the biggest problems for Duke are: 1. Winning without being able to sneak up on the opposition, and 2. Overcoming the jinx of finishing second last year.

Toughest Job Yet

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Gavitt's role as United States basketball coach in the 1980 Olympics has the allegorical touch of David meeting Goliath.

"It will probably be our toughest assignment yet," says the distinguished Providence coach who will try to uphold U.S. basketball honor at the Games in Moscow.

It's an assignment that Gavitt is well prepared for, though. Reminiscent of a foreign intrigue plot, he has compiled a virtual dossier on the Russians, among others, and knows just what he has to do to win on enemy soil.

Gavitt's plan of attack will closely parallel the philosophy of his friend, Dean Smith, the brainy North Carolina coach who led the Americans to victory at the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

Dazzle 'em with footwork, Gavitt says in so many words. "We can't be too preoccupied with THEIR strengths," Gavitt noted Wednesday night at a special reception here honoring his appointment. "We have to do what we do best — which is go with our quickness. That's what won for us in 1976."

In addition to quickness, Gavitt will also look for special emotional qualities in his players, such as "enthusiasm and attitude." He figures that the psychological aspect will be a significant factor in tearing down Iron Curtain teams.

The Miami Dolphins acquired Earl Morrall for the waiver price of $100 in 1972 and his quarterback play helped them to a record of 17 straight victories, including a Super Bowl title.

Fans Miss Another Thriller

By The Associated Press
The Philadelphia 76ers haven't been getting as much backing from their fans as they'd like this year. But they're proving it's what's up front that counts — like forward

Julius Erving. "Empty seats are something that are consistent around the league, I guess," Erving said Wednesday night after the 76ers fashioned a 116-115 National Basketball Association victory over the San Antonio Spurs. The no-shows — there were 6,000 empty seats at the Spectrum — missed another thriller typical of the 76ers' season so far. Cliff-hangers have become a way of life for Philadelphia, currently on a five-game winning streak. Elsewhere in the NBA, the Boston Celtics beat the Chicago Bulls 118-112; the Golden State Warriors defeated the Houston Rockets 112-105; the Washington Bullets whipped the Indiana Pacers 124-113; the New Jersey Nets walloped the Milwaukee Bucks 131-110 and the Kansas City Kings stopped the Cleveland Cavaliers 122-107. Two free throws by Bobby Jones with 1:22 left to play led Philadelphia's comeback victory. The 76ers, in first place in the Atlantic Division with a 6-1 record, twice trailed by 11 points in the fourth quarter.

Celtics 118, Bulls 112
Nate Archibald scored 25 points to lead Boston over Chicago. Trailing 71-69 late in the third quarter, the Celtics appeared to be in trouble when center Dave Cowens shoved referee Jack Madden and was ejected from the game. But Boston, led by Archibald and Don Chaney, opened up a 95-85 lead with eight minutes left. Chicago never threatened Boston again, failing to come within seven points the rest of the game.

Warriors 112, Rockets 105
John Lucas scored 26 points and passed out 15 assists against his former teammates as Golden State defeated Houston. Lucas, who went to the Warriors from Houston as a partial compensation when the Rockets signed former Golden State star Rick Barry, had eight assists in the first quarter alone as Golden State edged ahead 28-26 at the end of the period.

Bullets 124, Pacers 113
Kevin Grevey scored 24 points to help Washington snap a five-game losing streak by defeating Indiana. The Bullets took a 38-26 first-period lead and never trailed. Washington, the defending NBA champion, had seven men in double figures. Hayes had 23 points and Mitch Kupchak and Tom Henderson had 17 apiece.

Nets 131, Bucks 110
Bernard King scored 29 points and the backcourt tandem of Eric Money and John Williamson combined for 42 more to lead streaking New Jersey over Milwaukee. The victory, the fifth in a row for the Nets, improved their record to 7-4, the best start in their three-year NBA history.

Kings 122, Cavaliers 107
Bill Robinson scored 23 points and led a third-quarter surge to lead Kansas City over Cleveland. Robinson had 11 points in the third quarter when Kansas City outscored Cleveland 38-24.

Jim Brewer's basket gave Cleveland a 50-49 lead to open the second half, but Kansas City scored the next 10 points.

Pro Football Ratings Down So Far This Year

By HOWARD SMITH
AP Sports Writer

If the early returns mean anything, television has not

Tigers Top ACC

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Clemson continued to hold the lead this week in scoring of offense and scoring defense in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The Tigers, who would like nothing better than to unseat powerful Maryland for the league title, are averaging 31.1 points per game, which puts them eighth nationally.

They also have the nation's fourth best defense, allowing only 7.7 points per game.

Maryland is scoring at the rate of 27.1 points per game and has held opponents so far to 7.9 points per game.

In other categories, Clemson leads in rushing offense and total offense. Maryland is tops in rushing defense and total defense.

The only other team to break the Tiger-Terrapin stranglehold on the conference statistics is Wake Forest, which leads in passing at 161 yards per game.

If the Deacons can maintain their lead through the season, they'll be the first Wake Forest team in 18 years to win in this department.

been getting its money's worth out of its new contract with the National Football League.

Pro football ratings are down slightly on NBC, down more than slightly on CBS and barely up on ABC.

Is this the end of the TV sports explosion? Has over-exposure finally caught up with the NFL? Is there panic in high places?

Hardly, according to Val Pinchbeck, the NFL's director of broadcasting.

"We don't feel this is the time for deep concern about over-exposure or anything else," says Pinchbeck. "We don't feel this is the right time to make a definitive assessment. We've still got a lot of games to go and this is the time of year when hardcore interest in football takes hold."

Through the first half of this expanded pro football season, CBS has been averaging a 13.2 rating, meaning 13.2 percent of TV homes are watching the network's pro games. That's down 10 percent from last season at this time.

NBC is averaging an 11.3 rating, down three percent, for the same time period. ABC's Monday night football, the only prime time offering of the three, is averaging 21.1. That is up just one percent over last season, but ABC is quick to point out that last season was a record for the series.

These numbers, in the first year of the NFL's astounding four-year contract with the networks for an estimated $656 million, are not exactly disastrous, but any time there is slippage in pro football — the flagship of TV sports — it is worth noting. There could be a trend developing here. Then again, football interest generally goes up as the season moves toward the playoffs.

Pinchbeck points out that the NFL began two weeks earlier than usual this season and ran into a couple of hot baseball races and some mild late-summer-weather that lured fans outside and away from their TV sets. Things will get better, he says, and no one at the NFL is worried.

With a contract like the one the NFL is enjoying, why worry?

NBC executives are pleased with ratings on the World Series but would have been even more delighted if there had been a seventh game which, they feel, would have sent the ratings through the roof.

As it was, last month's New York Yankees-Los Angeles Dodgers matchup was the top-rated Series in history, averaging a 32.8 rating and an estimated 24.4 million homes.

The previous record was a 30.7 average for the New York Mets-Oakland A's Series in 1973, also on NBC. ABC's telecast of last year's Series, again the Yankees and Dodgers, is third on the all-time list with a 29.8 average.

Yepremian Sees Self In New Role For Miami

MIAMI (AP) — Besides establishing himself as one of the National Football League's all-time leading placekickers, Garo Yepremian will long be remembered for his panicky pass after a blocked field goal that was turned into Washington's only touchdown in the 1973 Super Bowl.

The Miami Dolphins veteran says quarterback Don Strock blew a chance for him to further display his versatility.

Late in the first half of Sunday's victory over Baltimore, Strock, Yepremian's holder, grabbed the snap and threw a 7-yard touchdown pass to Vern Den Herder.

Yepremian pointed out that Baltimore defenders didn't bother to cover him as he rammed into the end zone.

"I was wide open. It was my chance to demonstrate that my receiving is as good as my passing," Yepremian moaned.

The 5-foot-8, 175-pound kicker said his assignment on the faked field goal was to block anybody coming toward Strock.

"Nobody came around, so I decided to go around left and into the end zone. I wasn't the primary receiver. I was wide open because who would expect him to throw it to me?" Yepremian said.

Strock simply smiled when asked about Yepremian's availability on the play.

"He wasn't my primary receiver," he said. Yepremian, whose 1973 misfire has been shown countless times on television, said, "If it happens again, I'll pick up the ball and if the situation is there, I might surprise some people."

Mercifully perhaps, blocked field goals have been rare during Yepremian's tenure with the Dolphins. But in the last two seasons, missed field goals by Yepremian have been less rare than in the past.

In the 1975 and '76 seasons, Yepremian hit nearly 75 percent of his field goals. But last season, he fell under 50 percent, and he has hit five of nine this season. The problem, he said, has been leg injuries.

"Last year I pulled the hamstring in my right leg in the first game. I couldn't plant my foot, so I didn't have as much zip on the ball. And last year, I was eager to get back and I came back on it too soon."

The leg was never fully healthy last season. During the off-season, he did some weightlifting and a lot of running.

This season, he overextended his kicking leg two days before the season opener. With last season in mind, he reduced his kicking during the week and Coach Don Shula further aided by turning over kickoff duties to punter George Roberts.

"Coach Shula has really helped because he understands what's going on. He didn't make me practice too hard, he gave me some time," Yepremian said.

Yepremian kicked off again Sunday and also drilled home a 32-yard field goal. "I feel pretty good now," he said.

The Hot Shots and Aztecs took Soccer League victories yesterday.

The Hot Shots beat the Rowdies, 3-0.

Brian Gee scored in the second period on an assist from Bobby Erham for the first Hot Shot goal. Darren Hettuno scored on a breakthrough in the third period and added another goal in the final period.

Kimber Smith and Steve Horne paced the Rowdie defense, while Camille Cox, Scott Kendrick and Marty Measner led the Hot Shots.

The Aztecs got a 1-0 win over the Strikers.

Mike Uhlman scored an unassisted goal early in the game, dribbling through three defenders for the score. Tony Concha and Michael Penland led the Aztec defense, and Kelly Barnhill paced the Strikers.

No Piece Of The Action For Mexican-Americans Soon, The Largest Minority

By PETE HERRERA
United Press International
In a 16-month period, 16 Mexican-Americans die while in the custody of Texas policemen.

In New Mexico, a Chicano graduate of the Harvard Law School repeatedly fails the State Bar Examination. And in a conservative south Texas town, a dead Anglo wins an election over a living Mexican-American opponent.

Such are some of the barriers that confront America's 11.2 million brown-skinned Americans in their quest for a piece of the pie in a country where they are destined to become the largest minority within the next decade.

The Mexican-American, proud of his machismo, protective of his culture and ambitious in his dreams, is a conglomerate of many faces. He is united in a common language and religion — Roman Catholicism — yet at times divided by an inborn identity crisis.

He is just starting to realize the enormity of his potential in the American political system while trying not to become so Americanized that he loses a history that dates back to the Spanish Conquistadores' march through the Southwest 450 years ago.

But whether he is called Mexican-American, Spanish-American, Indo-Hispanic or Chicano (a colloquial form of Mexicano that is favored by the young but considered degrading by the old and middle and upper middle class) his problems all carry familiar names.

From the barrios of Texas, Rio Grande Valley to the migrant fields in California, Arizona and Colorado, Mexican-Americans face a daily confrontation with unemployment, police brutality, poverty and discrimination.

A recent economic report from the federal Census Bureau confirms what Mexican-Americans have known for decades. One out of every five families has an income below the poverty level. For families not of Spanish origin, the average is one in 10.

The median income for the Spanish-speaking male is $7,797 a year, compared with an average of $10,251 for white males. Unemployment for Mexican-Americans hovers around 11 percent, well above the national average.

In education, where the Mexican-American has made some of his most significant gains, the picture is still overshadowed by too many dropouts and an alarming illiteracy rate of 19 percent among persons over the age of 25.

But it is also in education that a change in trends is most noticeable. In states like Colorado, New Mexico and Texas, Mexican-Americans comprise less than 5 percent of the members in the medical, legal, engineering and technical fields, but up to 25 percent of the educators.

"Many Chicanos are teachers because they have more experience with educators than with doctors, bankers or lawyers," said Dr. Antonio Esquivel, assistant chancellor of the Colorado University Medical School.

"Things are changing because there are new role models, but traditionally, the first degree for Mexican-Americans has been in education. It is the first step to the middle class."

The Mexican-American's progress in other fields has been more negligible.

During the 1960s and in the 1970s, law schools nationwide have carried on extensive recruiting campaigns among minorities. But law school admittance has proven to be a long way from courtroom practice.

In New Mexico, 60 to 70 percent of the Mexican-American law school graduates consistently fail the State Bar Examination. The latest in a series of suits challenging the validity of the examination that is administered and graded by practicing attorneys — predominantly Anglos — is now pending before a state district court.

Jose Angel Gutierrez, who nine years ago founded La Raza Unida Party in Crystal City, Texas, and employed the phrase, "kill the Gringo," reflects on the progress of the Mexican-American in the last 10 years.

"You can count the number of Ph. D.'s, you can count the number of M.D.'s and you can count the number of (Mexican-American) people in banking and corporate board rooms, the news media and television," said Gutierrez, who holds a doctorate. "That's the tokens that we've gotten conceded."

"But if you count the people on the bottom, without the homes, in poor health, without jobs, without the dollar that won't buy as much as in 1968... the illiteracy, the bad housing, streets and sewers, the distance between the haves and have nots has gotten greater."

Politically, Mexican-Americans have traditionally voted Democratic. But, it is apparent no other President in recent history has alienated himself more from so many of the Spanish-speaking than has Jimmy Carter.

This despite the fact that 112 of 1,200 presidentially assigned jobs are held by Spanish-speaking individuals.

"Let's face it, Mr. Carter is not one of our most popular Presidents," says Houston attorney Frumencio Reyes. "The Hispanic community has been one of his closest allies, but he's working extremely hard to antagonize us."

Lack of action by the administration in a series of what Mexican-Americans see as police brutality cases in the Southwest that has created the rift between the barrio and the White House. The Santos Rodriguez and Joe Torres cases in Texas illustrate the point.

Rodriguez was a 12-year-old killed in 1973 by Dallas policeman Darrell Cain while being questioned in the back seat of the officer's car.

Cain was tried by the state and handed a five-year prison term. But Mexican American leaders petitioned the Justice Department and President Carter to file civil rights charges against the officer. Just before the federal statute of limitation ran out on the case this summer, the Justice Department announced it would not pursue the case.

Torres, a 23-year-old Vietnam veteran, died in May 1977 while in the custody of six Houston policemen. Attorneys for the Torres family, who have filed a $2.5 million civil suit against the officers and the city, allege Torres was handcuffed, beaten and then dumped in a bayou on May 5, 1977.

Two of the officers received slap-on-the-wrist sentences of one year's probation and a $1,000 fine. Under pressure from the Mexican-American community, a federal judge imposed a one-year prison sentence on Denson and two of the other officers.

Still, violence broke out and an angry crowd rioted at a park in East Houston this summer. Gutierrez, now a judge in Zavala County, summed up the feelings of most Mexican-Americans in Texas this summer.

"The official police murders and the inaction of the Carter Administration as well as the state agencies in the different states tell us they've still got a license to kill Mexicans," Gutierrez said.

As the nation's fastest growing minority, the Mexican-American's political power is drawing the attention of more and more office seekers. However, a recent nationwide survey showed of the 7 million Spanish-speaking persons eligible to vote, less than 38 percent are registered.

The small percentage of registered voters may account for the scarcity of Mexican-Americans in Congress. There are currently five Mexican-Americans in the House of Representatives but, since the defeat of the late New Mexico Sen. Joseph M. Montoya, D.N.M., in 1976, there is none in the Senate.

New Mexico Attorney General Toney Anaya, who along with Gov. Jerry Apodaca, led a field of Mexican-American candidates who won statewide offices in 1974, is challenging Republican Sen. Pete Domenici for one of the state's two seats.

More significant gains have come at the local level, as in San Antonio, where five Mexican-Americans and one black control the 11-member city council.

Gutierrez and Ruben Bonilla, a Corpus Christi attorney and director of the Texas League of United Latin American Citizens, say it is from this level that the political power base must be built.

Gutierrez, who says La Raza Unida has been unable to break the Democratic Party's hold on Mexican-Americans during the nine-year history of his party, notes La Raza Unida has yet to elect one state senator in Texas.

"We're continuing to run statewide campaigns when we should be running local campaigns and taking over courthouses and city halls," Gutierrez said. "Now in 1985, when we're not only a majority, (in Texas), but a voting majority, then we can run candidates statewide."

Census projections show Mexican-Americans will form the largest minority in this country by 1990, somewhere in the area of 30 million. That does not include undocumented or illegal aliens.

"Ours is a growing population," says Bonilla. "It is the Hispanic wave of the future. We have a higher fertility rate, a lower median age (44 percent of all Mexican-Americans are under 18), all of which contributes to a faster population growth than either the blacks or Anglos."

The desire for political power, says Bonilla, grows daily.

"Two years ago, you would find just a handful of people who could be considered leaders in the Hispanic community," Bonilla said. "Now, we have many talented young men, a great wealth of talent under 40 very actively pursuing leadership roles."

"But," adds Bonilla, "in the midst of this, we are experiencing a backlash against minorities which is perhaps one of our greatest threats and jeopardizes the gains we've made."

He singles out the Bakke decision and even Proposition 13 as examples.

Because of the Bakke decision, Mexican-Americans fear their accessibility to higher education will diminish. And proposals such as Proposition 13 would ultimately end up hurting the poor.

"When you reduce government services, the first people to be fired are Hispanics because they're the last ones hired," said Bonilla. "The first educational programs to be dropped because of shortage of funds are going to be bilingual education funds. The proposition 13 mentality widens the gap between the haves and have nots..."

But Gutierrez and Bonilla also agree that interaction between whites and browns is on the increase, due in large part to the Mexican-American's culture, his food and music.

"The social distance has diminished," says Gutierrez, "particularly in urban centers. There's more of a cosmopolitan atmosphere in certain cities... where people appreciate the trappings of Mexicaness such as food, culture, music, architecture and furniture. With those things, they've accepted our Mexicaness. I think it's been a two way effort, our militancy and their accommodation."

The Anglos' attraction to the spicy Mexican-American dishes, his art and culture in general, has provided an economic bonanza for many Chicanos.

Tony Hernandez, whose family started with $1,200 and a small corn meal milling operation in 1930, heads La Mexicana Tortilla Factory, one of the fastest growing wholesale and retail Mexican food outlets in New Mexico.

Borrowing a page from the Americanized fast-food hamburger chains, La Mexicana and similar businesses throughout the Southwest specialize in quick service, reasonable prices and repeat customers.

"We've got a great mixture of customers, both Anglos and Mexicans," says

Hernandez, whose business grossed $200,000 last year. Mexican-style fiestas events are highlights of local social activities in many Texas communities, although they are run by Anglos in some places with very little contribution from the Mexican-American community.

Often, the Mexican-American's success is born of a desire to serve his own. Sosimo Padilla, a combination newspaper delivery man, banker and land development corporation executive, personifies that type of success.

A mailer by trade for 25 years, Padilla four years ago was the driving force in the establishment of a minority status bank in Albuquerque. He became the first Spanish-surnamed person in Albuquerque to serve on a bank's board of directors and now is chairman of the board.

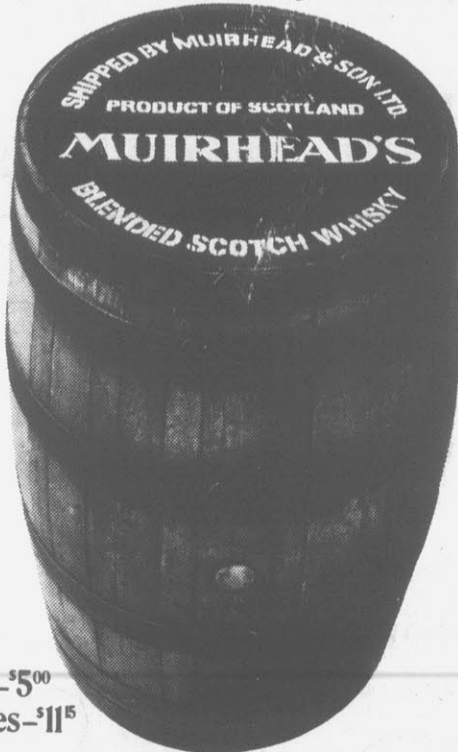

Between his banker's hours, Padilla still finds time to work an eight-hour shift as a newspaper handler and delivery man and puts in several hours as vice president of a land development corporation

Competency Testing The Second Day

By The Associated Press

Most of the state's 86,000 high school juniors prepared today to take the second half of their competency tests, but Christian academies made good on their threats to boycott the test and about 30 students at one school demonstrated against it.

Among students who took first half of the test Wednesday was Bobby Nathaniel Green, a black junior at Rocky Mount Senior High School, who is named as the plaintiff in a class action suit against the controversial test.

The suit was filed in U.S. District Court in New Bern on Tuesday. A hearing on an injunction to stop the tests until the suit could be heard was expected Wednesday but was not scheduled.

"We're not rushing this thing," said John Harmon of New Bern, attorney for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. "Even if we had a hearing, it wouldn't have stopped the tests. We don't mind that the tests are given. We're interested in what way the results will be used."

The SCLC and other civil rights groups contend the test discriminates against poor and minority students, depriving them of high school diplomas after the public school system has failed to meet their educational needs. They say the test should be given earlier, when it might do some good.

The 30 students who demonstrated against the test at Dudley High School in Greensboro Wednesday had similar objections. They said the test was designed to create a cheap labor pool of poor workers without high school diplomas.

Three of the demonstrators were juniors and refused to take the test Wednesday. One of the three, Lisa Potts, 16, was arrested for disturbing the peace after she used a bullhorn to chant, "Stop the test." She was released under a $100 bond.

The Christian schools' objections to the test are different, stemming mainly from the schools' contention that competency testing, like other forms of state regulation, interferes with their religious freedom.

"We feel the test is a farce. It's a fraud," said Robert Nordlander, principal of South Park Baptist Church in Winston-Salem. Nordlander said the test was so easy that sixth graders in his school scored 90 percent correct in the English section and 70 percent correct on the math. Juniors took the math test Wednesday. Today's segment is English and reading. They will have three more chances to pass the test before graduation in 1980 if they failed this time.

As Expected, Students Say Test 'Simple'

By SHARON BOND

Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The students are saying it was a piece of cake, a pushover. And the chairman of the state Competency Test Commission says he's not surprised. After all, it was supposed to be a test of minimum skills.

The consensus among the high school juniors interviewed after taking the math portion of the competency test — reputedly the toughest part — was that it was easy. Some said it was too easy. Some said it was a joke.

Dr. James Gallagher, chairman of the state Competency Test Commission, said he expected that reaction from many students.

"I expected it would be easy for lots of students in North Carolina," he said, adding that the test was supposed to measure minimum skills.

The state's 80,000 juniors took the test for the first time Wednesday. Today they go back for the reading portion. The scores they make on the tests will determine whether they receive high school diplomas next year or certificates of attendance.

State officials have predicted that as many as 41 percent of the juniors could fail the test. Those who do will have three more shots at it before their high school careers end.

The juniors who were interviewed after the first round Wednesday at Broughton High School in Raleigh were not worried about their scores. Broughton officials say the school is a middle-to-upper-middle class institution with a large percentage of students bound for college.

Students who said the test was easy had grade averages ranging from straight As to Cs.

"It was too easy," said Denise Rogers, 16, who described herself as an A-B average student.

Seventeen-year-old Brian Hanson, who has a B average, agreed. "I mean, it was like putting down two and two. If it is going to be that easy, I don't see much use for it. If it was more complicated, maybe it would be worth something."

Most students agreed that if a student couldn't answer most of the questions, he shouldn't be allowed to graduate.

"If you can't pass the test, you don't deserve to live in society," said Bill Andrade, 17, an A student. "You should be able to figure out things like water bills. Most people know about things like that."

The juniors spent the morning Wednesday figuring out tax forms, balancing checkbooks, reading road maps and solving other mathematical. Today they will be dealing with questions involving classified ads, dictionary pages, application forms, recipes and telephone directories.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Nose Blockage Due to Adenoids?

A relative of mine, 64, is having a lot of trouble breathing through his nose. A doctor diagnosed his inability for nasal breathing to be the result of extremely enlarged adenoids. He suggested an operation to remove the adenoids. We have many reservations about doing such an operation at his age. Wouldn't this be dangerous? — Ms. L.R., Conn.

Dear Ms. R.: Relaying information to me from a doctor to a patient, and then through another person, is always fraught with confusion and misunderstanding.

Blockage of the nose and the nasal passages because of adenoids never, but never, occurs in an adult of your relative's age. In a child yes, but in an adult, no.

The adenoids are part of a very important lymphatic structure which, in childhood, plays an important role as a protective mechanism against infection. In the early years, the adenoids and the tonsils, closely related, may also be a factor in the development of immune protective antibodies. When the adenoids themselves become infected and enlarged they can be responsible for blockage of the nose, nasality of speech, impairment of breathing and may be the cause of repeated ear infections. It is then that, in childhood, removal of the adenoids becomes necessary.

As the child grows older and approaches the pre-puberty phase, in most instances the adenoids atrophy, become small and then, almost invariably, disappear. By the time adulthood is reached, adenoids are never seen.

I would suggest, therefore, that your relative be thoroughly examined by an ear, nose and throat specialist. Blockage of the nose may be due to a severe allergy, nasal polyps or even one of a variety of tumors that occasionally occur in the nose or naso-pharynx (space behind the back of the nose).

Will rubbing alcohol toughen the skin? Or, do you know of another method to toughen it? — Mrs. E.A.H., Neb.

Dear Mrs. H.:

Why would anyone want to "toughen skin"? If a dermatological (skin) problem exists, your first need is to get the opinion of a skin specialist, or dermatologist. If it doesn't exist, you may be wasting your time if you use rubbing alcohol or other solutions trying to attain an objective which seems absolutely pointless to me.

Sometimes food becomes stuck when I'm eating. I feel that it becomes blocked in my chest. Can anything be done to correct this condition? — Mrs. L.J., Maine.

Dear Mrs. J.: Before anything can be done to "correct" this condition it is absolutely essential to find out what is causing it. X-ray studies of the esophagus are very simple to do. The presence of a pouch, or "diverticulum," is only one of the possibilities that must be excluded by these and other diagnostic studies.

Reporter Learned 'Turf' Serving As Congressman

By MIKE FEINSILBER
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Max McCarthy starts each day with a swim in the pool in the House gym. As a former congressman, that's his privilege.

Then he dresses, lights a cigar and gets to work as a newspaper reporter — sometimes covering the activities of his swimmers, or the diplomatic world where he once worked, or the White House, where he once worked.

McCarthy, 51, served three terms as a Democratic congressman from Buffalo, N.Y., before settling into his present job as chief of the two-man Washington bureau of the Buffalo Evening News.

It is not unusual for a newspaperman to become a congressman — McCarthy went that route himself — but it is for a congressman to become a newspaperman. This is a man-bites-dog story.

McCarthy says he is having the time of his life and never intends to give it up. He says his experience inside government gave him a fix on "how things really work."

"There's always a tendency to tell the press just so much," he says, and he's able to sense when the truth stops and the dissembling begins.

"This is a much better life," McCarthy says in an interview in his office, sitting before a picture of Walter Lippman. "I'd have no hesitancy to choose it."

"I'm much more independent. I'm not constrained by constituent pressures, diplomatic pressures, presidential pressures, financial pressures. All I'm expected to do is get the facts, and write the truth."

"The worst thing in politics is raising money," he says. "My God, there must be 20 people in Congress — some of them are my friends, otherwise decent, honorable men — who are in jail or in trouble because of the way they went about raising dough. The whole system is a corrupting influence."

McCarthy was elected to Congress in 1964 after stints as an Evening News reporter and a public relations man. His paper didn't endorse him until he ran for his third term.

In Congress, he crusaded for environmental controls and railed against chemical and biological warfare, issues which still excite him. He wrote a book on "war by pestilence, asphyxiation and defoliation."

Brandeis University gave him an honorary degree as a "legislative warrior who would reclaim our planet."

In 1970, he was defeated in a Senate primary. The race consumed so much money that he took two years off to go to Harvard's Institute of Politics and write a book, "Elections for Sale."

He worked in Buffalo city hall for a while, then went to Iran as press aide in the U.S. embassy.

When Jimmy Carter was elected, he worked in the White House for six months in the failing effort to push through a bill to create a consumer protection agency.

McCarthy's beat is generally "downtown" — the executive department of government.

But occasionally he covers the activities of former congressional colleagues, including Republican presidential possibility Jack Kemp, who holds the House seat McCarthy once filled.

David Lynch, who covers Washington for the competing Buffalo Courier-Express, says when McCarthy arrived "on at least one occasion" he entered the House chamber — a right afforded ex-members but denied all others — to get a story.

"I thought that was taking unfair advantage," Lynch says, but adds: "I covered Max back in 1970. He's a nice guy, very personable. I thought he was a good congressman. I haven't seen enough of his stuff to judge him as a journalist — but it's not my job to judge him as a journalist."

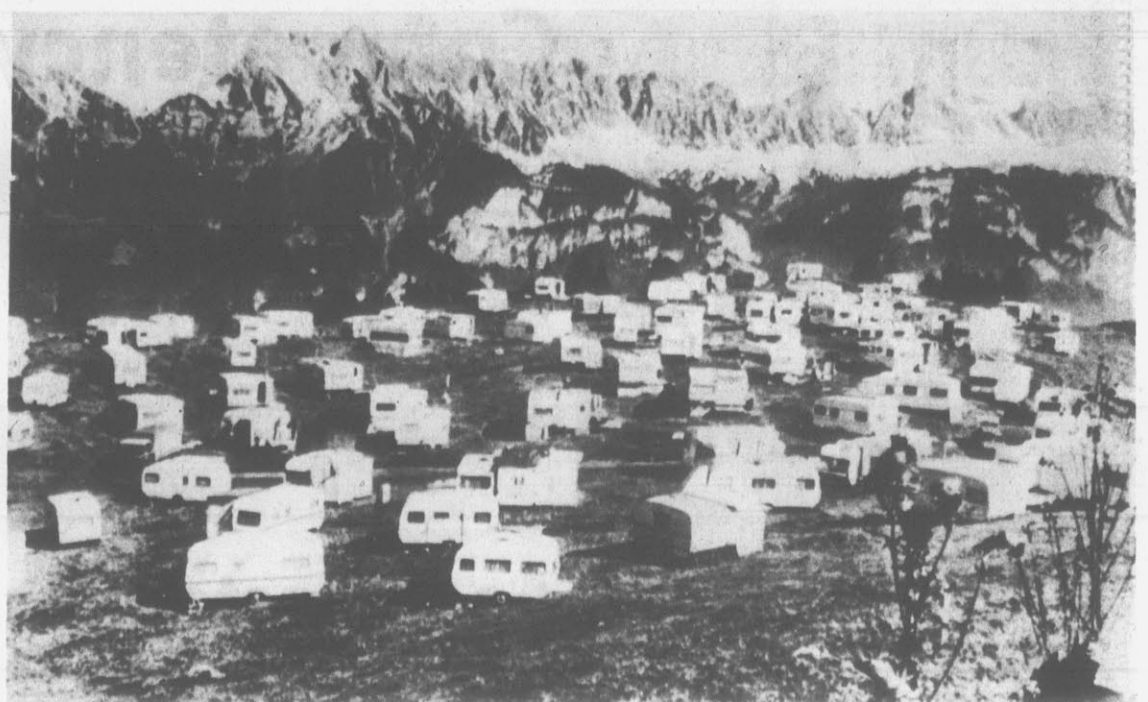

McCarthy says he tries to avoid taking advantage of his special status.

During those early morning swims in the House pool, he says, "I see many old friends and once in a while I'm told something that can develop into a story. But I don't go there for that purpose. After all, a club has certain rules, written or unwritten."

He says he has no trouble maintaining objectivity — that's just a question of professionalism — and he is under no delusion that he exercises anything like the influence of a congressman, who casts a direct, meaningful vote.

He quotes an editor in Buffalo who tells job applicants that if it is influence they are after, they ought to look elsewhere for work.

As for the financial end of things, he says, "I'm better off." Congressmen earn more than he does, he says, but one year he had to pay for 47 round trips to Buffalo from his earnings, and he doesn't know how many funeral wreaths, lunches and dinners.

Unique Orientation On Campus For Freshmen

MARY ELLEN HASKETT
TOWSON, Md. (UPI) — College freshmen often feel lost or unable to cope with their first time away from home.

So Towson State University teaches them how to live alone by turning them loose in the wilderness.

Director Craig Dobkin said the program currently involves 36 students. They spend one week in the mountains of Western Maryland and on the Towson State campus.

The program is designed to teach them what life alone means: coping with problems, making decisions, planning a day or preparing a meal.

"We try to get the students to learn a little bit about themselves, learn some lifetime skills and how to transfer those skills from the wilderness into their own life," Dobkin said.

For instance, when they learn rock climbing, they are taught it is analogous to life since "life is a climb," he said.

Dobkin said many situations in life relate to rock climbing — such as the need for cooperation. It is demonstrated by one climber being roped to another.

"They learn about leadership and they learn about each other," said Dobkin.

Divided into groups of 12, the students spend their session in the mountains backpacking, climbing and talking.

On the first day, they are taught rope activities, including a jump from a 200-foot tower similar to descending a mountain. They also learn to follow maps, use a compass and buy food for five days in the mountains for no more than $12.50 per person for that period.

Dobkin said they learn that buying wisely will keep them from going hungry, because junk food supplies tend to get lean toward the end of the five days. "Then sometimes vegetarians and meat-eaters have to learn how to live together," he said.

Before mountain climbing begins, the students make a long run, then jump into the icy mountain streams.

Dobkin said the running and submerging into water, as well as the hot-cold difference, is likened to the ups and downs the students will face at the university.

Finally they head up the mountain. They take night hikes and learn to make successful Tyrolean traverses, the techniques involved in search and rescue, and how to stay warm.

Dobkin said the freshmen and their two instructors also talk about academic issues they will face at Towson State.

"It's a time when they can think without interruption," he said.

The students are separated from one another on their last night on the mountain. They spend the last hours in the course writing in journals and analyzing what they have learned about themselves and about handling situations without their parents nearby to help.

The program recently completed its second year. It costs $25 plus an extra $28 for an optional one credit in physical education.

Ann Graves, 18, of Baltimore, who took the course in July, said:

"It was helpful for getting ready for school and made friends that will carry through the school year."

Miss Graves said a scavenger hunt around the campus on the first day of the class helped her become independent in finding her way around the school.

"We had to find vending machines in Linthicum Hall or fire extinguishers in Burdock Hall, so we became familiar with our way around campus," she said.

"I felt it helped in developing leadership so I don't feel like just a dumb freshman."

Science Program Articles Published

ECU News Bureau

An article by Drs. Carolyn and Carol Hampton of the East Carolina University Department of Science Education appears in the current issue of "Science and Children."

The article, "Planaria," describes how to collect, culture and maintain the flatworm "Dugesia tigrina," commonly known as the brown planarian. It is the first in a series of feature articles on the care and maintenance of living organisms for use in elementary and junior high science programs.

Subsequent articles will concentrate on Elodea, snails, freshwater aquarium life and terrestrial isopods. The articles are illustrated with drawings by ECU art student Michael Montonara and photographs from Carolina Biological Supply Co. of Burlington.

"In recent years the National Science Foundation has supported elementary science curriculum programs which significantly increase the use of living organisms in the classroom," said Carolyn Hampton, who directs ECU's Life Science Culture Center.

ECU elementary education students in life science courses have cultured specific organisms, researched and experimented with various techniques of the maintenance of these life forms and reported their results, she noted.

Successful student cultures were made available without charge to science classrooms of nearby schools, she said.

The student's work was also reported in a booklet, "Living Organisms for the Elementary Classroom" which has been made available to all North Carolina schools by the state Dept. of Public Instruction.

The Hamptons have received inquiries from science educators throughout the nation requesting information about the ECU center and its work, and several school systems have established centers patterned after the ECU model.

Reach Surfeit Of Cadavers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — At one time the University of Minnesota almost had to beg for cadavers for use in its medical and dental schools, but no more.

"We're approaching our maximum," said Dr. David Hamilton, chairman of anatomy.

The university announced in April that it would accept bodies only from seven counties of metropolitan Minneapolis-St. Paul: It had 180 of its 188 spaces filled last week, Hamilton said Tuesday. Revision of the state's Uniform Anatomical Gift Act in 1969 to make it easier to donate a body to science spurred donations, he said.

This woman is taking your money.

Just as though she were reaching in your pocket. Because she's a shoplifter. Every shopping day, thousands of shoplifters like her cost stores literally millions of dollars in merchandise. Then, in order to stay in business, stores are forced to raise their prices. And you wind up paying more money. Because of shoplifters.

Of course, this is unfair to honest shoppers. So, the stores are getting tougher on shoplifters. And now, with the most modern electronic equipment, and additional security personnel, more and more shoplifters are getting caught.

If you know a shoplifter, pass the word. That shoplifters pay fines. That shoplifters go to jail. And most important—that shoplifters are really stealing from you.

Farm Exports Are Bright Spot In Trade Picture

Ingram...

 alarmed at Sen. Helms' negative attitude toward education and his votes against it," Dr. Welch commented.
 "I hope you will get this to the Senior Citizens. Operation Gray Power is a survival issue," she concluded.
 Mary Anna Howard, also of Winston-Salem, voiced concern, "that our Republican Senator voted against an amendment to require utilities to provide older citizens a subsistence amount of electricity at the lowest rate given any consumer class served by that utility," and against a bill providing federal assistance to programs helping the poor deal with the energy crisis, "including the fuel stamp program."
 She added, "I feel North Carolina needs and deserves better representation in the Senate."

Katherine Meroney, also traveling with Ingram, voiced her "alarm" at Helms' "votes against health programs."

She mentioned Helms' vote against the bill providing Health Maintenance Organizations, which she said, "would provide health assurance," and his vote against establishing a National Institute of Health Care Delivery, "which would prevent duplication in services and costs."

According to Mrs. Meroney, Helms also voted against aid for the Comprehensive Emergency Systems and extending and amending various nutrition programs. "This affected the school breakfast program, the summer food program, the supplemental program for low-income pregnant women and their children," she noted.

Helms, Mrs. Meroney said, also voted against the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, and other bills, including, "employment, job opportunities, and emergency housing."

Mrs. J. B. Spilman and Alan Murrell — named co-chairmen of the Pitt County Senior Citizens for John Ingram — were both on hand for the session at the airport.
 Mrs. Spilman said, "most of the good things we enjoy have come from Democratic administrations," and urged the people to vote for Ingram.

Murrell, said his main concern was Helms' stand on the cost of living increase for Social Security recipients and on hospital cost containment programs.

Murrell is immediate past president of the Pitt County Council on the Aging and is currently serving as treasurer of the group, while Mrs. Spilman is a former member of the Governor's Council on the Aging.

Ingram, saying, "I need your help to help keep that fight going for you," noted that senior citizens "represent a vast resource of wealth in terms of experience, education, ability, wisdom and potential for human achievement. I am committed to work just as hard for our senior citizens as I have worked as State Insurance Commissioner."

The candidate said, "I will fight for health insurance through the free enterprise system that will guarantee all people health care coverage from the insurance companies of their choice without fear of cancellations," and, "adequate Social Security benefits without continuous tax increases."

Ingram said he would fight for a Social Security system, "that guarantees that the people who are paying today will receive benefits when

WASHINGTON (UPI) — At a recent appearance on Capitol Hill, Agriculture Department official Thomas Hughes bemoaned a lack of mention of agricultural exports in recent news about the dismal U.S. trade picture.

Hughes, administrator of the Foreign Agricultural Service, was an observer at a conference between U.S. and Canadian senators who advocate an agreement among exporting nations to raise the price of wheat.

The administration was cool toward the conference, Hughes, stretching for something positive to say, said the gathering was worthwhile because it focused the public's attention on agricultural exports.

The phenomenal growth of U.S. farm exports, which offset part of the U.S. trade deficit, is largely unheralded.

Farmers are keenly aware of exports, because one of three acres harvested goes abroad, but a city commuter driving his car to work fueled by imported oil seldom is aware that farm products are helping pay the bill.

Since the beginning of the decade, the dollar value of agricultural exports has more than tripled. The Agriculture Department estimates the United States exported a record $266 billion in food and fiber products during the fiscal year which ended Sept. 30.

With agricultural imports estimated at $13.7 billion, the agricultural trade surplus was $12.9 billion.

By contrast, total U.S. exports in the first eight months of the calendar year were $90.6 billion and imports $111.6 billion for a deficit of nearly $21 billion dollars.

Agriculture Department officials are upbeat about prospects for farm exports of the future. Dawson Ahalt, acting chairman of the World Food and Agricultural Outlook and Situation Board, is also optimistic, but has issued some warnings about future competition from other nations.

Brazil has the greatest potential of any nation in the world to grab away American farm export markets, Ahalt said.

It contains the largest amount of idle, arable land in the world. With improved grain varieties used in the United States and more fertilizer, Brazil could increase crop yields.

Already Brazil has shifted from being a two-crop exporter of coffee and sugar to a major soybean exporter, second only to the United States.

Japan, which was worried about reliability of supplies, helped Brazil expand its soybean output 12-fold from 1970 to 1977 after the United States imposed an embargo on soybean exports in 1973.

Ahalt said it is possible that Brazilian competition is not as threatening to U.S. farmers as it appears because of a rapidly rising world demand for protein they need them."

Ingram also expressed support for Social Security cost of living increases, for a tax reform, "which will assure that the super rich must pay their share," and said he would support legislation, "that will help find meaningful, fulfilling jobs for our senior citizens without displacing the younger workers who must support growing families."

According to Ingram, "As your United States Senator, I will support legislation that will help offset inflationary prices of the necessities for older adults, such as drugs, utilities and eyeglasses."

"As your United States Senator, I pledge to work for our Senior Citizens as hard as I have worked as Insurance Commissioner."

"We are going to win. We're right on target. We are going to win for North Carolina," Ingram emphasized.

meal to feed livestock.
 "Some people think the demand for this meal is so great that if Brazil weren't a producer, that we would not be able to meet the demand," he said.

Brazil also exports corn and cotton and is striving toward growing enough wheat to be self-sufficient. The nation still faces a lack of transportation to move agricultural products to ports.

Exports of U.S. soybean oil, a product of the soybean meal manufacturing process, face stiff competition from Malaysian and Indonesian palm oil.

Argentina is also exporting soybeans and sunflower seed oil, another competitor of U.S. soybean oil. Argentina also could expand its acreage of other crops.

Further competition to U.S. supremacy in world agricultural trade comes from Pakistani cotton and Thailand's exports of corn. The latter also was spurred by the Japanese.

Thailand, which has captured part of the Japanese and Common Market feed grain market, led the world in rice exports last year.
 "The potential in many areas of the world lies in yield increases," Ahalt said. "The Department potential is enormous."

Most nations produce crops with yields far smaller than the United States. Presently, hybrid seeds, favorable weather, fertilizer, pesticides and technology enable the United States to produce corn yields triple its competitors.

Further into the future lies potential competition from the Nile Valley in the Sudan. The Sudan has lacked capital to exploit its potential but Arab nations are investing in irrigation there to make it a breadbasket for the Middle East in a decade or so, Ahalt said.

Ahalt, whose job involves predicting short-term world agricultural outlooks, said it is extremely difficult to predict long-term prospects for U.S. agricultural trade.

He declined to predict if or when competitors could threaten U.S. dominance.

"I'm not so sure you can pinpoint some of these things," he said.

He also cautioned that a decade ago, projections for agricultural trade were far short of what has occurred and, even in 1975 and 1976 "people were saying we weren't going to be able to maintain the volume of trade."

Many agricultural experts worry that other nations will spend large amounts of capital to increase farm exports as a means to pay for their oil imports, just as the United States does.

To that concern, Ahalt said, "That is what many people fear and I think that can happen in many areas. But I don't think we should throw up our hands in despair."

Ahalt ventured that "we've been too pessimistic on our outlook because we haven't given sufficient attention to the growth of rising income levels" in foreign nations, including developing and communist nations.

Many governments have sought to improve the diets of their citizens with more eggs, poultry and meat. More livestock means more need for soybeans and feed grains, often imported from the United States.

Increased livestock production is very much a factor in imports by the Soviet Union and Eastern European nations.

American farmers have been especially worried that U.S. and international aid efforts to spur agricultural production in developing nations will cut off U.S. food markets and even build some nations into competitors.

India, once a large custom of U.S. wheat, has become an exporter.

As to the validity of those concerns, Ahalt responded,

"We don't know enough about the development process."

An argument used to refute that, he said, is that South Korea and Taiwan prospered so well under U.S. aid that they have become major cash customers for U.S. farm exports.

American production of corn, barley, sorghum, rye and oats is probably most secure from foreign competition, Ahalt said.

"I don't think there's another area in the world that can produce coarse grains as well as we do," he said. The Corn Belt is the most productive agricultural area in the world.

The competition for wheat markets is likely to be keener, he predicted.

Wheat can be produced on land of marginal quality and if the price were high enough, a great deal more land could be planted with wheat around the world.

The United States faces what is sometimes a disadvantage because its major grain competitors of Canada, Australia, Argentina and South Africa trade through national marketing boards as opposed to the U.S. system in which private traders notify the government after a trade has been made.

In times of large supplies those marketing boards can undersell U.S. exporters in world markets.

Ahalt noted that last year world grain supplies in foreign nations were sold off and dropped by 15 percent at the same time U.S. stocks rose by 20 percent. Some buyers turned to the United States only after less expensive grain was exhausted.

A breakdown of the current U.S. agricultural trade picture indicates that a steadily larger share of U.S. exports are going to developing and communist nations. The Soviet Union and China are important markets, but they fluctuate rapidly.

The Soviets imported little in the 1960s.

Left Law Practice Behind, He Now Writes Comedy

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Until recently, Ron Morgove, 36, was a lawyer in Portland, Ore. Now he's a rookie comedy writer at 20th Century-Fox Television and says he's giving up law for laughs.

He and nine others beat some 4,000 hopefuls who dispatched sample scripts to a national humorsmith hunt the studio held last July. It sought to bring fresh, new comedy scribes to TV.

The only restriction: wouldbe Woody Allens couldn't have sold a script or story to TV or movies before. The winners got $1,000 each, in-studio training and a contract with options to stay on.

“Frankly, I was just about to chuck the whole thing if it didn't come true,” Morgove said. His thing was a lifelong dream to write comedy instead of wherefores, whereases and whomsoevers.

He's the only out-of-towner who won, although Lynn Roth, 20th's comedy development director, says Los Angeles winners — most of whom weren't raised here — had no edge just because they live here.

“No, in fact we never looked at names or addresses until after we read the material,” adds Ms. Roth, who only now is recovered from helping read samples that arrived by the July 19 deadline.

Most of the local winners — seven men and two women — had some experience in showbiz life, whether guiding Universal tours, acting in little theaters or making radio and TV commercials.

Ron, a Gary, Ind., native and graduate of the University of Indiana law school, says his college roommate, a comedy writer here named John Rappaport, helped him get things going.

He showed Morgove's humor goods to people who showed it to Joan Rivers. The barrister said this led to occasional sales of gags to the comedian and work helping her compose a humor column.

He kept practicing law, as he has a wife, Susan, and two little Morgoves to support. But he also kept writing situation comedy scripts even though producers kept writing him rejection slips.

He hit paydirt when Rappaport called to say he'd read in a Hollywood trade magazine that 20th was holding a TV comedy contest.

“I was just about to give up when the contest came,” he said. “I submitted scripts that previously had been rejected and luckily they liked them. It gave me my first major opportunity.”

Ms. Roth says the lucky 10, now working in two-writer teams on five comedy pilots, are midway through an eightweek contract. It has an option to make them salaried 20th staffers afterwards.

A big break, but there's no guarantee it'll happen. And at 36, Ron is shifting to a risky trade fairly late in life.

Right now, he said, his wife and kids are staying in Portland while he learns and writes TV comedy. They visit him when possible, but eventually will move here.

Win, lose or starve, he added.

his law practice is “pretty much” behind him and his comedy writing very much ahead of him.

Open House On Sunday

The Adult Developmental Activity Program (ADAP) of the Pitt County Mental Health Center will have an Open House Sunday from 2-5 p.m., 1600 Greenville Blvd.

According to Margo Sherman, staff member, there will be displays of program areas with video and slides. Refreshments will be served and staff members will be available for questions.

Carl Rothrock, director of ADAP and Respite Care Services, says that ADAP provides the mentally retarded with a pattern of daily living and helps them to make a transition into adult life.

By working closely with parents and guardians, the facility offers an alternative to institutional living and helps prepare clients who have potential in necessary skills and adjustment for more advanced programs, such as workshops and vocational training centers.

The public is invited to attend the open house.

How Tar Heel Representatives, Senators Voted

By Roll Call Report
 WASHINGTON — Here's how area Members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes in the final days of the 95th Congress.

HOUSE
SMALL CLAIMS COURT — Failed, 224 for and 166 against, to get the two-thirds majority needed to pass a bill to upgrade small claims courts in the states. A two-thirds majority was required by the short-cut parliamentary procedure under which the bill (S 957) was debated. This vote killed the bill in the 95th Congress.

The bill sought to establish a program of Justice Department grants to help states and localities better handle comparatively minor and inexpensive civil claims that now clog dockets. It had a price tag of about $95 million over five years.

Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., a supporter, said: "The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, Ralph Nader's Congress Watch, the American Bar Association, Ford Motor Co. Consumer's Union, and the National Association of Automobile Dealers are just a few of the organizations who support this bill."

Rep. Carlos Moorhead, R-Calif., an opponent, said the bill "has been rushed through in the final days of the session" and that such far-reaching legislation should be subjected to normal rather than short-cut debating rules.

Members voting "yea" favored passage of the bill.

Reps. Walter Jones, D-1, L. H. Fountain, D-2, Charles Whitley, D-3, Ike Andrews, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Richardson Preyer, D-6, Charles Rose, D-7, W. G. Hefner, D-8, James Broyhill, R-10, and Lamar Gudger, D-11, voted "yea."

Rep. James Martin, R-9, voted "nay."

TRIS CLAIMS—Passed, 304 for and 90 against, a bill (S 1503) to allow the U.S. Treasury to compensate sleepwear manufacturers for damages incurred when the government last year banned the chemical Tris from the market place. The bill, which faces a possible pocket veto by President Carter, permits the U.S. Court of Claims to adjudicate Tris claims. The flame-retardant had been used by garment-makers to comply with federal flammability standards. But it was banned when found to be a possible cause of cancer. An estimated 51 million in claims could be paid under this bill.

Rep. Richardson Preyer, D-N.C., a supporter, said sleepwear manufacturers deserve "relief or losses incurred as a direct result of government-imposed standards and through no fault of their own."

Rep. Robert Drinan, D, Mass., an opponent, called the bill a precedent that will "put every industry subject to any kind of federal regulation on notice that they can be reimbursed by the taxpayers for the costs of compliance."

Members voting "yea" favored allowing reimbursement.

Jones, Fountain, Whitley, Andrews, Neal, Preyer, Rose, Hefner, Martin, Broyhill and Gudger voted "yea."

QUOTAS — Rejected, 187 for and 200 against, a motion that the House stand by its previously-voted opposition to quotas in higher education. The House position, which was abandoned by this vote, prohibited the use of appropriated funds to implement admission policies based on quotas of race or sex. That language was deleted during a House-senate conference on the Department of Health, Education and Welfare appropriations bill for fiscal 1979 (HR 12929), later signed into law.

There was no pro-and-con debate preceding this vote. Members voting "yea" opposed the used of federal money to implement race and sex quotas in higher education.

Jones, Fountain, Andrews, Neal, Preyer, Martin and Gudger voted "yea."

Rose voted "nay." Whitley, Hefner and Broyhill did not vote.

SENATE
1ST CLASS OR COACH? — Voted, 70 for and against, to allow businessmen to continue to receive tax deductions for first-class air travel and entertainment expenses such as the cost of sporting-event and theatre tickets. This vote tabled an amendment proposed to the tax bill (HR 13511) later sent to President Carter for his signature.

No senator spoke in favor of tabling and thus killing the amendment.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., the sponsor, said the tax deduction for coach fare is legitimate but that "the additional cost of first-class air travel is primarily a luxury item and should not be deductible."

Senators voting "yea" favored keeping the business tax deduction for first-class air travel and entertainment costs. Sens. Robert Morgan, D, and Jesse Helms, R, voted "yea" CORPORATE TAXES — Adopted, 60 for and 30 against, an amendment to gradually cut corporate income taxes from the present 48 per cent rate to 44 per cent beginning in 1981. The amendment was attached to the tax bill (see above vote). House-Senate conferees later disregarded this vote and agreed on a corporate tax rate of 46 per cent effective in 1979. The rate applies to net profits over $100,000. Lesser profits are to be taxed at rates ranging from 17 to 40 per cent.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., a supporter, said that by leaving more profit in the hands of corporations the amendment would help to "redress the problem we are having in this country with respect to capital formation and productivity..."

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., an opponent of the 44 per cent rate said that other tax benefits for corporations already written in to the bill make it "a far sweeter bill than the President recommended in terms of dollars."

Senators voting "yea" favored a 44 per cent corporate tax rate.

Helms voted "yea." Morgan voted "nay."

Rural Politics Is Different

By MIKE HENDRICKS
 Associated Press Writer
 LEDYARD, N.Y. (AP) — It's a low-key race for town justice here — no debates, no posters, no doorbell ringing and no big party labels. Just the Pine Tree against the Rural Neighbor.

"If there are any issues, I certainly haven't picked up on them," says Donald Irving, who, at the request of a friend, is running as the Pine Tree Party candidate.

"I think this Democrat and Republican thing is for the birds anyway," says Diane Rafferty, the Rural Neighborhood Party candidate challenging Irving, her former ninthgrade math teacher.

There are no major party candidates in the town justice race. The position is part time and deals mainly with traffic violations, minor crimes and civil cases involving $3,000 or less. No incumbent is seeking re-election.

Ms. Rafferty says she decided to run under the Rural Neighborhood Party banner because "I wanted a party of my own. I thought of the name myself."

"Hopefully, it represents the rural people. Half the fun is doing it yourself."

Irving says his candidacy was handled by a friend who asked him to run. "I told him I would run, but I wouldn't campaign," he said. "I don't know why I'm running as a Pine Tree candidate. My personal feeling is there must be some hassle in getting on the ballot with the major parties."

Both candidates say they are known to the 1,058 registered voters in the Cayuga County town about 35 miles southwest of Syracuse.

"I know everybody one way or another. It's not like I just blew into town," said Ms. Rafferty, a 28-year-old mother of three sons.

Said Irving: "I guess most people know me. How popular I am, I won't venture to say. I guess I'll find out."

Proved Blessing Orchard Freeze

WENATCHEE, Wash. (AP) — Agricultural experts say a 1968 freeze that killed 1 million apple trees in Washington state proved a blessing to the industry. The state's orchards, planted with changing consumer tastes in mind, are younger than others in the United States and have been adapted to new orchard technology, they say.

It cost up to $30 million to repair the damage from two nights when temperatures fell below minus 25 degrees, Washington State University agricultural economist A. Desmond O'Rourke says. Today, production is up 42 percent, compared with 3.5 percent nationally. Washington's share of the U.S. market is up from 23 percent in 1968 to 30 percent today.

WOULDN'T LET HIM JUMP — Mike Dayton, who planned to jump from the Golden Gate Bridge as publicity for his strongman act, looks out from a California Highway Patrol car after officers nabbed him when he stepped out of his car near the south tower of the bridge, background. Dayton was not arrested, but not before making a promise to police that he wouldn't jump. (AP Laserphoto)
