OPEC 'Aftershock' Sees Dollar Reeling

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer
ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — The decision by OPEC to jack up oil prices by 14.5 percent next year sent the U.S. dollar into a nose dive on currency markets today. But the head of the oil cartel defended the increase as a move designed to help the world economy.

Some specialists estimate the price boost, coming in four stages, will mean a rise of 3 cents a gallon in American gasoline prices by late 1979.

"The oil price hike is part of the measures to correct the world's economic situation," said Rene Ortiz of Ecuador, secretary-general of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Ortiz did not spell out in detail how the price boost would benefit the world, except to say OPEC countries "have got responsibilities and tasks toward the coming generations and toward development of their countries and finding alternative sources of energy than oil when it is exhausted."

After the OPEC oil ministers announced the price increase at the end of a two-day meeting Sunday, President Carter issued a statement saying it would hurt efforts to reduce inflation and urging OPEC to reconsider. His chief inflation-fighter, Alfred Kahn, called it "terribly injurious."

The United States gets 37 percent of the oil from OPEC nations.

The effect on the U.S. currency was swift. The value of the dollar fell against all major currencies this morning, including a 2 percent drop against the West German mark, to 1.868 per dollar.

The 13 ministers decided to put the increase. OPEC's biggest since early 1974, into effect in stages: 5 percent on Jan. 1, raising the present base price of $12.70 per barrel to $13.33; 3.8 percent on April 1, increasing the price to $13.84; 2.3 percent on July 1, raising the price to $14.16, and 2.7 percent on

Oct. 1, pushing the price to $14.54.

Informed sources said two days of maneuvering and intervention by Abu Dhabi's ruler cleared the way for the OPEC decision.

They said the host to the OPEC winter meeting, Sheik

Zayed bin Sultan, and his oil minister, Mana Said Otaiba, were the leading mediators between Saudi Arabia, which wanted to continue the oil-price freeze, and Libya and Iraq, which called publicly for increases of up to 25 percent.

Replica Couldn't Match The Wrights' Flight

KITTY HAWK, N.C. (AP) — Ken Kellett of Boulder, Colo., spent a year building a replica of the plane the Wright Brothers flew in man's first powered flight. He took it to the same spot on North Carolina's Outer Banks where the Wrights made that historic flight 75 years ago. And he even dressed like Orville Wright did when he harnessed himself onto the fragile powered glider and took off. But for all his pains, the 25-year-old engineer from Boulder, Colo., didn't quite make it in his attempt to re-enact man's first powered flight at Kitty Hawk during ceremonies there Sunday marking the 75th anniversary of the Wrights' aviation feat. Kellett's replica of the Wright Brothers Flyer thrust its nose skyward about 3 feet, but the tail never left the ground. In 1903, Orville flew for 12 seconds about 10 feet off the ground and covered about 120 feet in the historic flight that cold, windy Dec. 17.

However, Kellett, his family and friends were jubilant Sunday about the third try of the day which saw the Flyer's nose lift off about 40 feet down the wooden track looking for a few seconds as if the plane was airborne.

"We came here to fly, and we succeeded in doing it," Kellett said afterwards. But he agreed after seeing a video replay that the plane's tail never left the ground. When asked if he had actually flown, Kellett said, "Oh, yes. I guess we made it 60 or 70 feet."

About 5,000 people were on hand to witness Kellett's attempt to recreate the flight. He set up the wooden track that would guide the plane's takeoff several hundred feet south of the spot where the bicycle makers from Dayton, Ohio put their Flyer in the air.

Dressed in a black turn-of-the-century suit, complete with high starched collar, Kellett harnessed himself to the lower wing of the fragile glider he spent nearly a year and about $8,000 building. He duplicated the Wright Flyer almost exactly except for some shifts in weight.

Determined to make his attempt at the very minute the Wright Brothers did 75 years before, Kellett and his crew pushed the plane down the track at 10:35 a.m. Sunday.

But rather than a successful liftoff, the plane rolled about five miles an hour to the end of the wooden track and stopped.

HOTLINE

Hotline gets things done for you. Call 752-1336 and tell your problem or your sound-off or mail it to Hotline, The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Because of the large numbers received, Hotline can answer and publish only those items considered most pertinent to our readers. Names must be given, but only initials will be used. Transcribing is done once a day.

DISHWASHER PROBLEM

I don't know what the problem is, but I'm having to throw away glassware because of a terrible buildup that occurs in my dishwasher. I've tried soaking in vinegar, soaking in bleach — everything I think of with no results. Does anyone else have this problem or a solution for it? N. H.

Hotline consulted the Home Extension Office, which suggested that your problem is probably the result of too hard water or too soft water. Too soft water can cause etching of glass, which is not removable, of course. Too hard water can cause a mineral buildup.

It was suggested that you ask the Pitt County Health Department to take a water sample at your house and send it to Raleigh for mineral content testing. The Environmental Health Division of the Health Department confirmed that this is one of its services.

For dishwasher problems lesser than yours, the Extension Agent, Evelyn Spangler, suggested that one should be sure that water is between 140 and 160 degrees so all detergent is being dissolved. Amount of detergent used should be adjusted if some is not being dissolved in water hotter than 140, she indicated.

Detergent should not be placed in the machine until just before it is run so no caking can occur, she added.

Almost always a rinse agent must be used, also, she added, for unspotted dishes.

Broke, Happy

KITTY HAWK, N.C. (AP) — Now that it is all over, Ken Kellett is broke and without a job or definite plans for the future. But despite that and the fact that his success in Sunday's re-enactment of the Wright Brothers historic flight 75 years ago was somewhat qualified, he's a happy man.

"I'm tickled silly with what happened here," Kellett told the 5,000 people who gathered at Kill Devil Hills Sunday to watch him attempt to fly the replica he built of the Wright Brothers Flyer. The re-enactment was part of the ceremonies marking the 75th anniversary of Wilbur and Orville's successful airplane flight.

Kellett tried three times to get his replica off the ground and on the third try with the help of his crew and the blustery winds at Kitty Hawk, he managed to get the nose about three feet in the air. He called it a successful flight. But after it was all over, he wasn't too sure what was going to happen to him or the plane.

The 25-year-old former city engineer from Boulder, Colo., said Sunday his first problem was trying to figure out how he and his family and the plane were going to get home. He spent the last year and about $8,000 of his family's money in his re-enactment attempt. And parents, three brothers and fiancée, Nancy Dawson, were all there to watch him Sunday.

But now he doesn't even have a place back in Boulder to store the plane. It will be sold if there's a buyer. Sunday there was talk of the N.C. Division of Archives and History purchasing it.

Kellett said he probably won't fly it again because he doesn't have the money. He'd just like to get home, back to Colorado where he can do some skiing.

Iranians Staying Off Job

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Thousands of Iranians stayed away from their jobs today, observing a day of mourning for those killed in 11 months of political violence, but many others ignored the strike and production in the oil fields increased again.

There were no reports of violence overnight in Iran. Troops kept out of sight in the capital but were reported on the alert should rioting follow mourning processions for those killed in clashes with security forces.

The government estimates about 1,300 have died in anti-government violence this year, but leaders of the opposition to Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi claim the death toll is far higher.

The call for a day of mourning came from Ayatollah Khomeini, the exiled religious leader of Iran's 32 million Shiite Moslems. Khomeini, who lives in Paris, is leading the religious and political forces demanding the shah's abdication.

East Carolina University's returning Independence Bowl champions were given a rousing welcome by several hundred cold but excited fans Sunday afternoon on the Town Common.

The welcome, organized by the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce, included a parade of the players and coaching staff, from Evans and Reade Circle to the Commons, where officials greeted the team.

The Pirates, playing in their first bowl game since 1965, defeated hosting Louisiana Tech, 35-13, in the game Saturday afternoon.

Charles Vincent, mayor pro-tem of Greenville, offered the city's congratulations to the team. "I'm really surprised that the game was ever finished," Vincent said. "The way the Pirates were hitting, I didn't know if the other team would have enough players to finish the game."

"East Carolina is the city's pride," he added.

Bruce Strickland spoke for the county commissioners, calling it a great day for Pitt County. "We love you folks. Thank you for what you did for us (in the game). You weren't rough, you just did a great job of playing football."

U.S. Intends Maintain Assistance To Taiwan

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, through establishment of a private corporation, fully intends to maintain all existing agreements with Taiwan except for defense Pacts, government officials say.

A crash program is underway to provide for the least disruption in relations with Taiwan after the United States extends formal diplomatic recognition to mainland China on Jan. 1. State Department officials said.

Herbert J. Harfissell, the department's chief legal officer, said Sunday that the Carter administration intends "that all existing agreements with Taiwan, commercial, cultural and others will continue in effect except for termination of the defense treaty."

The key mechanism to accomplish this, said one official who asked not to be named, will be a private corporation empowered by Congress to conduct business on Taiwan. One name being considered is the Asian-American Services Corp.

The new corporation would be patterned after the association Japan set up on Taiwan after breaking off formal relations with the government there in 1972.

President Carter announced Friday that the United States would sever diplomatic relations with the Nationalist Chinese on Taiwan and establish relations with Peking instead.

Communist Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping will meet with Carter in Washington in January and the two nations will exchange ambassadors March 1. Additionally, Carter said the U.S. government would terminate the defense treaty with Taiwan at the end of 1979.

However, U.S. officials said the private corporation would be used as a way to keep some 50 other agreements, including a lucrative trade arrangement, in force.

Couple Weds Sunday

BETHEL — Miss Wanda Kay Whichard and George Douglas Warren were united in marriage Sunday at 4:00 p.m. in the Bethel Baptist Church. The Rev. Willis, uncle of the bridegroom, and the Rev. Norman Joyner, performed the double ring ceremony.

A program of organ music was presented by Michael Edmondson. Mrs. Belinda Bryant sang "The Wedding Song," "The Wedding Prayer" and "You Light Up My Life."

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hardy Whichard of Bethel. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Garland Edward Warren Sr. of Robersonville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal white gown of sata peau over peau de soie. The modified V-neckline was outlined with re-embroidered alencon lace. Matching lace accented the empire waistline and appliques adorned the skirt front. The long fitted sleeves were fashioned with a sheer applique and ended with the sheer lace and closed with bridal buttons. The gown, which featured a chapel length train in re-embroidered alencon lace, also closed with buttons.

The bride chose a fingertip mantilla of silk illusion bordered with re-embroidered alencon lace matching her gown. The mantilla was attached to a Juliet cap of re-embroidered alencon lace and featured a blusher with lace appliques. She carried a cascade bouquet of miniature white carnations, pom poms, baby's breath and pink sweetheart roses.

The mother of the bride wore a formal length gown of mint green chiffon. The sleeveless gown was complemented with a sheer chiffon cape and scoop neckline. She wore a corsage of white carnations.

The mother of the bridegroom wore a formal length gown of dusty rose designed with a high inset collar of self-fabric. The sleeveless gown was enhanced by a shoulder attached drape that extended to fingertip length. She wore a wrist corsage of white carnations.

Mrs. Dessie Warren, grandmother of the bridegroom, was remembered with a corsage of white carnations.

The bride's sister, Shirley Rose Whichard, was maid of honor. Mrs. Julian Wayne Johnson, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. They wore formal length gowns of cranberry knit designed with a halter neckline, gathered empire bodice and full circular skirt. The sleeveless gowns were complemented by caplets styled with high fitted collars and with the cape edged in cranberry maribou. They carried cranberry satin ribbon roses tied with cranberry satin ribbon.

Bridesmaids were Mrs. Garland Edward Warren Jr., Miss Bonita Lynn Manning of Robersonville, Miss Kathi Lynn Manning of Bethel, and Miss Nancy Taylor Gray of Kinston. Their gowns and flowers were styled like those of the honor attendants.

Miss Helen Banzet, cousin of the bridegroom, was flower girl. She wore a formal gown of cranberry knit designed with a square neckline, gathered empire bodice and full circular skirt. The long sleeved dress was accented with white lace. She carried a basket of pink and white mixed flowers.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Groomsmen included Garland Edward and Jeffery Lee Warren, brothers of the bridegroom, Matthew Mayo Wilson and Larry Jackson, all of Robersonville, and Julian Wayne Johnson of Conetoe.

Jay Hoggard of Windsor served as ringbearer.

Mrs. Mary Jenkins of Bethel directed the wedding.

Following the ceremony, the parents of the bride entertained at a reception in the church fellowship hall.

The refreshment table was covered with a white lace cloth and held silver candelabras with epergnes of snapdragons and pink and white carnations and the five-tiered wedding cake. The bride is a senior at East Carolina University and the bridegroom is a graduate student at ECU.

Following a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will reside in Greenville.

On Saturday evening, the bridal party was entertained at an after-rehearsal dinner at the Reedy Branch Church parlor in Winterville. The dinner was given by the bridegroom's family. After the dinner, a party was given in honor of the couple at the Bethel Rotary Clubhouse. The party was given by friends and relatives.

Learning Is Continuing Thing

It has been speculated that man has learned more about the creation of the universe since the beginning of the space age than in all the previous year's of our existence.

The space age is continually opening new secrets of our solar system and constantly revising our understanding of the universe.

Even now scientists are marveling over the information which the Venus probes are sending back. They say that theories concerning the origin of the universe have been unsettled by the information received.

Until rockets were devised which would take instruments to solar system planets astronomers were limited to gazing at the heavens through telescopes.

Now actual samples have been brought back from the moon and rocket borne laboratories are telling us of the composition of neighboring planets.

The information gathered is gradually showing us a picture of how the universe, our galaxy our solar system and ultimately our own Earth were created. It could well be knowledge that mankind will eventually need to survive.

Flight Feat That Changed The World

It was a cold and windy day at Kill Devil Hills on December 17, 75 years ago.

An event was about to take place that would change the course of Mankind, but there were none of the trappings that should accompany such an occurrence.

Indeed, if a photographer had not documented the event an important part of our history might have been lost.

What occurred was the first powered flight of man with Orville and Wilber Wright putting their craft in the air.

A Single Juvenile Agency?

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — A proposed Office of Juvenile Justice operating in North Carolina's court system and answering directly to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is the keystone to Juvenile Code recommendations being readied for the General Assembly in 1979.

The single agency would draw into one administrative unit the various activities affecting juvenile delinquents which currently operate in several different state departments: the juvenile training schools in Human Resources; the social services workers dealing with juvenile crime in Human Resources; the court intake counselors and probation-parole system already in the courts; and local community treatment alternatives variously operated and sponsored.

Wake County District Court Judge George Bason, who headed the Juvenile Code Revision Committee whose lengthy set of recommendations will soon be submitted to Gov. Jim Hunt and the General Assembly, said the single juvenile justice agency is "our most important proposal... one upon which all others hinge. And, it will require the most work to accomplish."

A Fight

Bason is quick to note that the committee is not recommending a new agency of departmental stature with a cabinet level head. Such a move runs afoul of governmental reorganization efforts to trim numbers of agencies, and creates tensions as well as infighting involving affected bureaucracies.

Nonetheless, says Bason, there was a need to "insulate this single juvenile justice agency from political pressures and interference... the court seems the place in which that can be accomplished."

At the same time, achieving agency status in the court system where no competing bureaucracies would exist would bring public attention to the needs and requirements of the system. Especially the legislative battle of the budget could be carried out openly and without having to submit juvenile justice needs to higher departmental priorities.

BILL NOBLITT

At present, Bason says his committee determined, there is a break in the action in dealing with juveniles. There is no continuity. There is disorganization. There is bureaucratic turf-fighting and claim jumping.

"We can end that by putting all these child-serving divisions in a single agency."

Among other controversial portions of that report from the Juvenile Code Revision Committee will be one which demands that no child be locked up in the county jails of North Carolina after July 1, 1981.

No Jail

The present law authorizes judges to use jails if "in the best interest of the state or the law... that is an open invitation to abuse," says Bason.

Use of other community facilities or special detention homes would be required for holding juvenile offenders. In counties with fewer people, a regional detention facility might be called for.

"This is certain to be controversial because it has a large dollar mark on it," Bason said.

The recommendations include proposals for intake counseling of all juvenile offenders to divert from courtroom action when possible; encouragement for use of alternative sentences such as community service jobs; and endorsement of the present state efforts to keep non-criminal status offenders (truants, runaways) out of the training schools.

Superman's In Trouble

WASHINGTON — I went to see the movie "Superman" the other night at Kennedy Center. It was a benefit for the Special Olympics for the Handicapped.

I think I would have had a good time watching the film except that I sat next to a government bureaucrat who kept whispering to me all during the film.

Clark Kent, as you know, works on the Daily Planet, though he comes from another world. He has the ability to fly and also the strength to do anything, including pumping iron like nobody on earth.

There are many outstanding scenes in the picture, but apparently the people who made the movie did not realize that most of them violate government regulations.

My friend from the government kept pointing them out to me. "Superman is not supposed to fly that low over a city," he said, as we watched the hero save Lois Lane from falling off a building. "He also has to file a flight plan, which he didn't do when he went off into the night to save Air Force One from crashing."

"Perhaps he didn't know about the regulations," I suggested, "since he's from another planet."

"Ignorance is no excuse," my friend said. "Look what he's doing to the ozone."

"He's just flying through it to save California from falling into the sea."

Other Editors Say Oil & Courage

(Greensboro Daily News)

President Carter is in that unenviable position — between a rock and hard place. He wants to raise the price of gasoline, but he doesn't want to trigger more inflation.

A man more fearful of the public wrath than Carter might well choose to allow oil to remain at its controlled price, several dollars cheaper by the barrel than the global price set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. After all, oil is plentiful, so why not wait until the world picture darkens sufficiently to precipitate a gas price hike here no matter what the President might do?

President Carter has wisely chosen to do otherwise. Acknowledging the OPEC will probably raise the price of oil again in the near future, and acknowledging that the situation in Iran could produce a shutdown of that country's oil fields — fields which produce one-tenth of the world's needs — the President has decided to go ahead and let the price of oil climb by increments until it reaches the world level. By 1980, government officials think that a gallon of gas will cost at least $1.

But Carter believes that it will be better for the economy if the price of gas rises slowly. Getting Congress to go along with any decontrol scheme may prove difficult, however.

In his last attempt at gas hike, the President lost. But then the gas price increase was part of the energy bill, great chunks of which got tossed aside in the frenzy of what might politely be called the compromise to produce an energy bill, any energy bill. Moreover, the plan was less than a model of simplicity and needed work. By making the price-control bill a single issue and by refining some of its problems before the bill goes to Capitol Hill, the President may have more success.

Needless to say, Carter's projected prices may well exceed his anti-inflation guidelines, hardly a desirable outcome. And there is nothing to say that even a gradual increase may not cause inflation to get out of hand. Sound though it may be, the Carter plan to lift price controls could not come at a worse time.

But doing nothing, in the long run, could be worse. Inflation is here and hurting us, but our dependence on foreign oil, which we have allowed to increase by a third in the past five years, is widely believed to be equally debilitating in the long run.

U.S. and Western Europe will soon reach the thousands.

Simultaneously, Peking University and other Chinese colleges are experiencing their own transformation. Closed down for five years by the Cultural Revolution and then restricted intellectually for another five years by Maoist radicals, the universities have been reborn.

Their students are now selected by nationwide competition, and the Cultural Revolution's requirement that middle school graduates must work in the countryside before continuing their education has been quietly dropped. Peking University students are prominent among the young people who gained the world's attention with their demonstrations for free speech.

The university's English reading room offers uncensored U.S. newspapers and magazines. One foreign ministry interpreter accompanying us was reading that old anti-communist

Human Story In China

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

TACHING, China — Tension between a generation of state-imposed conformity and the new stirring toward personal freedom in China helps explain the response of a 17-year-old girl to controlled but significant changes here.

We were taken to visit the immaculate cramped quarters of a six-member family living and working with a half-million other Chinese at the Taching oil fields. The head of the family was a smiling, archetypal "model worker" who as a driller helped open these fields in the late 1950s but now does the lighter work of watch repairing. After some perfunctory slogging from this worker, we asked his eldest child, 17, about her plans after finishing middle school.

"Whatever the state wants me to do," she replied automatically. We persisted; surely, you must have some desire of your own. She giggled. Then after brief hesitation, she said: "My father repairs watches, and I would like to work making watches."

That may seem a modest statement of independence, but it could not have happened mere weeks ago. In the presence of important cadres from the oil fields, this simple girl was revealing something important: she has ambitions and desires of her own and is not a mere pawn of the state.

The brave Chinese who put up wall posters in Peking calling on Jimmy Carter to investigate human rights in China (and pasted them up again after they were torn down) are the tip of the iceberg. Beneath them are untold millions whose personal lives were disrupted more than the outer world imagines by China's last decade of political tumult and now are cautiously seeking a less fettered existence.

Apart from dramatic wall posters and the regime's headlong rush toward industrial modernization, the human story of China is the quiet, gradual removal of the Maoist straitjacket. While Western diplomats fear this may be followed by iron repression, the needs of Teng Hsiao-ping's government are geared to liberalization. Teng is committed to ties with the West and a shakeup of the immense bureaucracy — goals that run counter to Red Guard dictatorship.

Nothing better illustrates this than the regime's decision, unprecedented for a communist country, to send young people to Western universities. Students in the

Strength For Today

UNDER A BATON

The concert is about to begin. A hundred musicians are gathering on the stage. Some are tuning their instruments and others are quietly playing over certain difficult parts of the program which they feel they have to practice.

The result of this, of course, is indescribable discord and confusion.

But here comes the conductor. Now each musician begins to play his part under the conductor's baton with the most scrupulous regard for the performance of every other member of the orchestra. What was discord a few minutes ago now becomes a harmony of great beauty as all parts are blended together under the direction of the conductor.

There is discord everywhere in the world when each person insists on playing his own part without regard for anyone else. But when we all play in harmony under the baton of the Great Conductor, then discord turns into something satisfying and fulfilling for all of us.

Are You Headed For The Top?

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Do you really think you have a chance to win the top job at your company? Are you on the right track? Do you need to make adjustments in your line of pursuit or, sadly, even in your goal?

Here is an opportunity to check yourself. But first, a word from our sponsor, Prof. Eugene Jennings, who has spent his adult years studying the corporation and its people, and advising them as well.

Thousands of managers, he observes, come to the end of each year asking themselves if they have a chance. Some do; most don't. Some, he says, are driven by "false hopes and tyrannical delusions."

Most of the eligibles in the 25-to-40-year age group already have a leg up on the competition, says Jennings, who three decades ago began diagramming the routes to executive success, an endeavor that has produced many books.

Income remains one of the first tests for a young manager in the "career time" period between ages 25 and 40. Only a few numbers have changed, an inevitable consequence of a decade of inflation.

In the 1960s, says Jennings, a manager qualified for the term "early arrival" if his basic salary in thousands of dollars equaled his age. At age 35, a candidate for the top job would have been earning $35,000.

In the 1970s, the formula for the upwardly mobile manager consists of a $30,000 base, plus $2,000 for each of the manager's years beyond age 30. A 32-year-old manager should be earning $34,000.

A person headed to the top cannot stagnate at any point in his or her career. Such a person has 15 years to build a launching platform for the top job, that is, to achieve the rank of divisional manager.

If you, as a young manager, remain in one job for six years, when the average is three, your mobility has been arrested. The chances are high, though not conclusive, that you are out of the running.

There is one qualification to the rule: If you are chosen to head a special project, in addition to your regular managerial job, you may still be in the running. It means the company has confidence in you.

Along the route, he continues, young managers will be offered various types of positions. The good moves, he has found, are what he calls functional, developmental — and sometimes filler.

In the developmental move, you are chosen because your known skills are directly useful in the new job. In the developmental move, you have the opportunity to acquire a new skill. In each case you remain mobile.

The filler-type move can go either way. In one instance you are chosen simply to plug a hole in the organizational chart, and not a great deal is expected from you. Your mobility ceases; you are out of the running.

There is, however, the filler job that is given in order to keep a good manager happy, to entice him or her to relieve frustrations. It is temporary. It is a holding pattern until a superior job opens up.

Paint Grim Picture Of Living Behind The Bars

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Department of Corrections officials and superintendents of North Carolina prisons paint a grim picture of life behind the bars.

"If a man comes in without psychological problems, he may have them soon enough," Director of Prisons Ralph D. Edwards said.

Officials describe extensive racketeering, petty theft and violence in the prisons, saying the situation is especially damaging to younger, more impressionable inmates.

Edwards believes there's a critical need for single cells when a new inmate is first admitted. That's the time when the inmate is being assessed by his peers, who can quickly determine whether he's an easy mark or a man not to be crossed.

Officials say the inmates often find they need a weapon or protection money in the state's 80 penal facilities, as they did on the outside.

Guards have confiscated all types of weapons — sharpened paint chips and toenails, elongated paper clips and toothbrush handles honed to a point, socks with cakes of soap in them and ball-point pens.

"This place is just like a city," said Central Prison Warden Samuel P. Garrison. "I've got the same problems the city of Raleigh has — crime, violence, sex, poverty and race. Only in here, it's magnified, it's more intense."

dreary as if there were no Virginias."

—The old New York Sun's answer, in 1897, to 8-year-old Virginia O'Hanlon, who asked the editors "Is there a Santa Claus?"

"Christmas, it seems to me, is a necessary festival; we require a season when we can regret all the flaws in our human relationships. It is the feast of failure, sad but consoling." — Graham Greene, "Travels with My Aunt."

Most inmates are housed in field unit dormitories where tiers of bunks keep guards from having a clear view of inside activities.

Inmates live in fear of other inmates. And extortion and stabbings can take place among groups of inmates in prison yards or in dormitory settings. The crowded rooms, narrow, darkened cellblock walkways and labyrinth-like corridors are frequent trouble spots at Central.

get the same amount of flight time as Superman."

"But Lois Lane can't fly by herself," I protested.

"That's because she's never been given the chance. And another thing — when it came to saving a railroad train by lying along the track, Superman was given the assignment. Lois Lane didn't even have an opportunity for a crack at it."

"Everyone knows women can't save railroad trains," I shouted. "They get on the tracks, lose their nerve and they have to be saved by a man."

"Under the new federal Amtrack rules, Miss Lane must be permitted to take the place of a railroad track when part of one is missing."

"But suppose she gets hurt?"

"Then she'll be entitled to Workman's Compensation through the Department of Labor."

"You're taking this movie too seriously," I said. "It's only a sendup to fulfill our fantasies. After all, every man has dreamed of being 'Superman.' If the government gets into it, you're going to ruin it for us all."

"You mean you've always dreamed of flitting around in blue pantyhose?" he asked.

"Is there a regulation against that?" I wanted to know.

"Not really, as long as Anita Bryant doesn't find out about it."

periodical, the Reader's Digest. Another interpreter was deep into the final (and overtly anti-communist) volume of Winston Churchill's memoirs. At the Hsi Tan wall of posters, young Chinese told us how much they enjoy the Voice of America in "special English" (limited vocabulary, slow delivery).

Western classical music and ancient Chinese opera, banned from China for over a decade, are back. When we attended the opera, the theater was packed with men and women in Communist China's "blue ants" costume but there were exceptions — such as one woman with a fur coat, brightly colored scarf and curly hairdo.

Dresses are to be seen in China, especially in Shanghai and such non-conformity may spread to men. "Our clothing is much too stereotyped," one young party cadre told us, adding he thought traditional Chinese dress should be reintroduced for certain occasions.

Creeping individualism can spread from dress to political thought. Liu Shaoh-chi, the former chief of state purged by Mao Tse-tung (and now believed dead), is still exoriated as a "revisionist" in one briefing at Taching. But at the Hsi Tan wall in Peking, posters demand his rehabilitation.

What is a self-respecting cadre to do? He gets no guidance from Teng himself, who in his interview with us side-stepped a question about rehabilitating Liu. "So many things have been said about Liu that it's hard to know what to believe," a lower-level foreign ministry official told us. After a pause, he added: "Things are complicated."

The idea that life is "complicated" without explanation by official dogma is in itself new to Communist China. Although this country's tradition of centralized authoritarianism will certainly not give way to democracy, the rush toward modernization is changing the way Chinese think and live — and faster than anybody deemed possible.

D.C. Amendment Strongly Opposed By Tar Heels

WALL POSTER PROTEST — Wall posters protesting the start of diplomatic relations between the United States and the People's Republic of China early next month are read by passers-by in Taipei, Taiwan, Sunday. President Carter announced Friday

(Saturday in Taiwan) that the United States and Peking are normalizing their relations and that the U.S. will be severing relations with Taiwan. (AP Laserphoto)

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Members of the upcoming General Assembly are heavily opposed to ratification of the constitutional amendment that would extend congressional representation to the District of Columbia, a survey of legislators has found.

The survey, conducted by The Associated Press among legislators elected to the upcoming session, found two-to-one opposition in both the Senate and House to the proposed amendment.

The amendment to the U.S. Constitution was approved by Congress earlier this year and is now before the states for ratification. It would give Washington, D.C. residents two U.S. Senators as well as representation in the U.S. House.

The finding is based on responses from 107 of 120 state representatives and 40 of 50 state senators in the session convening Jan. 10.

In the House, 59 representatives — two votes shy of a legislative majority — said they were opposed or leaning against ratification.

Two representatives said they supported the amendment, and 21 said they were undecided.

In the Senate, 18 members responded that they were opposed to the amendment. Seven said they favored it, and 15 were undecided.

The survey found that, while the D.C. Amendment has its primary support from a group of liberal, black and urban legislators, liberals were by no means unanimous in their support and in some cases said they opposed it strongly.

Little connection was found between support for the D.C. amendment and support for the other constitutional amendment before North Carolina legislators, the Equal Rights Amendment, on which the legislature has been sharply divided in the past. In fact, some of ERA's leading advocates responded that they were against or leaning against the D.C. amendment.

"I'm not persuaded on that one yet," said Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, ERA's sponsor in 1977.

A number of legislators told The AP they favored congressional representation in principle, but opposed the amendment as drafted.

"I think it's kind of unfair for them not to be represented, but there are other alternatives," said Rep. John Church, D-Henderson. "I'd like to see them included with the state of Maryland (for voting and representation)."

"I would support giving D.C. representation in the House, but not the Senate," said Rep. Joe Johnson, D-Wake. "They're not enough of a state to be in the Senate."

Sen. Bill Creech, D-Wake, a liberal in the House last year, said he opposed the amendment and preferred district residents voting with Maryland. "I don't propose to make the District of Columbia the 51st state for heaven's sake," he said.

Among the legislative leadership there was strong opposition also. "I'm very much opposed to it," said Rep. Horton Rountree, D-Pitt. House speaker pro tem. "I think it's constitutionally unsound."

Ironically, Republicans are credited with providing support the amendment needed to pass in Congress. But in the North Carolina legislature, none of the GOP's five senators and 15 representatives said they favored the amendment. Five Republicans were uncommitted and three did not respond.

"D.C.'s not a state — there's no state government," said Sen. Donald Kincaid, R-Caldwell, Senate minority leader. "How in the world could you give them two senators when they're an instrument of the federal government?"

The survey was conducted in late November and early December, by mail and by telephone.

Was There Another Powered Flight In 1901? No Camera

WASHINGTON (UPI) — History records Orville and Wilbur Wright as the fathers of aviation, the first to achieve powered flight, but some evidence suggests an obscure Bavarian immigrant named Gustave Whitehead may have beat them by more than two years.

Whitehead, according to a Federal Aviation Administration publication, may have lost his place in aviation history on two separate occasions simply for want of a photographer.

That the Wrights flew their biplane at Kitty Hawk, N.C., Dec. 17, 1903, is beyond dispute. Although there were only five witnesses, one of them took the famous photograph showing Orville climbing aloft on his momentous first flight with Wilbur running alongside.

Whitehead had witnesses as well for at least some of the four flights he claimed to have made in 1901 along the beaches of Fairfield, Conn., including one flight which he said covered a mile and a half.

One of those witnesses was Richard Howell, a reporter. Howell's full-page story in the Aug. 19, 1901, issue of the Bridgeport Sunday Herald described a flight of one-half mile duration in which Whitehead's craft rose to an altitude of 50 feet — much more than the 852-foot maximum distance and the 15-foot maximum altitude of the initial Wright flights.

Another witness, Junius Harworth, wrote that Whitehead's plane "was constructed entirely by Whitehead, with my assistance." He described the craft, called "No. 21," as a monoplane with a single motor, two propellers and a body made of spruce, pine, bamboo and Japanese silk.

But neither Howell, Harworth nor anyone else, so far as historians can find, snapped a picture.

Whitehead's second flight claim came on Jan. 17, 1902, still a year before the Wright brothers' feat, in another craft — an amphibian — called "No. 22."

The pilot-builder described that flight in some detail in a letter to the publication "The American Inventor":

"It was intended to fly only short distances, but the machine behaved so well that at the first trial it covered nearly two miles over the water of Long Island Sound and settled in the water without mishap.

"On the second trial ... with myself on board it sailed across Long Island Sound. The machine kept on (course) steadily in crossing the wind (sic) at a height of about 200 feet, when it came into my mind to try steering around in a circle. As soon as I turned the rudder and drove one propeller faster than the other, the machine turned round a bend and flew with the wind at a frightful speed, but turned steadily around until I saw the starting place in the distance.

"I continued to turn but when near the land again, I slowed up the propellers and sank gently down on an even keel into the water, she readily floated like a boat ... The length of the flight on the first was about two miles, and on the second about seven miles ... I consider the trip quite a success ... To my knowledge it is the first of its kind."

Again, there was no photographer.

Reports of aeronautical triumphs — most of them false or founded on rumor — abounded in those pioneering days. In the absence of irrefutable scientific proof, such claims generally were forgotten within a few days.

Historians have tried without success to verify the claims of Whitehead, a lifelong aviation enthusiast who lived a largely itinerant life and appears to have built 50 distinct aircraft in all — including one helicopter with 60 rotor blades — and 30 aircraft engines.

"As to the agonizing question — Did Whitehead actually fly a powered aircraft in 1901 or 1902? — it will probably remain forever unanswered," said an analysis in the FAA's General Aviation News.

"The case against (Whitehead's) claims rests primarily on the absence of any photographic evidence of flight."

Mixed Drink Report Twelve Died In N.C. Weekend Traffic

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Restaurant managers say now that the novelty of buying mixed-drinks in North Carolina is wearing off, the amount of sales is also decreasing.

"The first 30 days is quite a distorted picture," said T. Jerry Williams, executive vice president of the N.C. Restaurant Association. He said restaurant managers initially made large liquor orders from local ABC stores to meet an initial heavy demand.

"We expect some dryforces will try to distort that into how much consumption increased," Williams said.

Restaurant managers admit they've sold quite a bit of booze, but they are quick to add that they're still in the restaurant business and that's where more than 51 percent of their income is coming from.

Included in mixed-drink regulations is a stipulation that food-sales at restaurants with mixed-drink licenses be at least 51 percent of total sales.

In a spot check of Chapel Hill restaurants, food sales ranged from just above the 51 percent mark to 80 percent.

Spiro Gekas, manager of the Open Kitchen restaurant in Charlotte, said drink sales had prompted "bigger lunches, bigger nights — everything's bigger."

That includes sales, Williams said. He estimates that restaurants that serve liquor can expect sales to run on the average 23 percent above pre-liquor days. He said a restaurant typically earns a 38 percent profit on drink sales, compared to 12 percent on food. Restaurants won't have to

The North Carolina Highway Patrol says 12 persons died in traffic accidents this weekend. That brought the toll for the year to 1399, 10 more than during the comparable period last year.

John Clayton Ward, 16, of Banner Elk, ran off U.S. 321 nine miles west of Boone in Watauga County Sunday and hit a bridge abutment.

William Henry Jenne, 68 and Wilma Jacobs Jenne, 66, of Honea Path, S.C. were killed Sunday when the car driven by Mrs. Jenne ran off Interstate 85 four miles west of Concord in Cabarrus County and struck a parked car.

Delmar Lynn Sawyer, 19, of Lenoir was killed Sunday when he lost control of his car on a rural road one mile south of Hudson in Caldwell County and his vehicle overturned. The patrol said Sawyer was towing another car which broke loose, causing him to lose control.

The Board of Alcoholic Control has issued 136 licenses for mixed-drinks in Mecklenburg County, Orange County, Sanford and Southern Pines, according to Marvin L. Speight, chairman of the state ABC. Louisburg voters approved a local-option mixed-drink referendum, but no applications for licenses have been made there, Speight said.

James Randolph Cox, 56, of Baltimore, Md., was killed Saturday when his car was heading south in the northbound lane of Interstate 95 and struck another. The accident occurred in Cumberland County 10 1/2 miles north of Fayetteville.

James Robert Fountain, 31, of High Point, was killed Saturday when another car crossed the median of Interstate 85 1 1/2 miles south of High Point in Randolph County and struck his vehicle.

The patrol said Herschel Alonzo Haynes, 56, of Jacksonville died Saturday when his car ran off U.S. 264 five miles west of Swan Quarter in Hyde County and struck a tree.

William Louis Grathwol II, 20, of Wilmington, was killed Friday night when his car collided with a freight train about five miles north of Wilmington on U.S. 421. Grathwol was a student at North Carolina State University in Raleigh, and was on his way home for Christmas vacation.

Donna Kay Cross, 17, of Lexington was killed Friday when the car in which she was a passenger ran off a rural road three-tenths of a mile north of Denton in Davidson County and overturned.

William Theodore Weir, 77, of Kings Mountain was killed

Friday when his car was struck by another as he was trying to make a left-hand turn on N.C. 216 three-tenths of a mile south of Kings Mountain in Cleveland County.

Joseph Elmer Leggett, 33, of Greenville was killed Friday when he was struck by a car while standing in a rural road one mile east of Greenville in Pitt County.

Give Yourself For Christmas

By Abigail Van Buren
© 1978 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: I'm having a hard time deciding what to do for Christmas. I live about 40 miles from my parents' home, but I don't want to go home for Christmas because it is a depressing time for me. My parents go to church regularly, but they don't act like good Christians. All Christmas means to them is a pretty tree, lots of presents and good food. But it means so much more to me.

I don't want to stay where I live because the people I live with have the same attitude about Christmas. It's all presents and food. Most of my friends are expecting a gift from me and I can't afford any.

I was thinking of leaving town for the day, but I can't afford a hotel room.

Can you give me some advice on what to do? I hate this time of year. It's so depressing.

YOUNG AND UNHAPPY

DEAR YOUNG: Get in touch with a nursing home, a veterans' hospital or a children's institution, and offer to visit those who have no one to visit them. You don't need to bring presents. Just bring a cheerful attitude, a happy face and a willingness to listen and chat awhile.

Offer to write letters, read, make a phone call or run an errand.

When you do something for someone else it's impossible to feel depressed. Try it; it really works. Then write to me and tell me what kind of Christmas you had. I care.

DEAR ABBY: Last year I was criticized for handing out my Christmas cards instead of mailing them to the people I work with.

Abby, with postage as high as it is these days, I didn't see anything wrong with trying to save a few pennies.

Do you think I was cheap for handing out my cards? That's what I was called.

ELLIE

DEAR ELLIE: How a greeting card is delivered is immaterial as long as it gets there.

DEAR ABBY: I don't have a problem but I do have a statement I would like to make.

You said that the sex drive in a person is very strong, and is second only to the desire to survive.

Well, I don't believe I can go along with that, Abby. There are a lot of people in the world who manage to live without sex. For example, monks, nuns and priests. And also some very fine unmarried people.

JEROME IN PINE BLUFF

DEAR JEROME: And some very nice MARRIED people, too!

"Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple do-your-own-thing ceremony, get Abby's new booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Fear States Left Holding Bag

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press WRITER
WASHINGTON (AP) — With President Carter planning cuts in federal spending, state officials are increasingly fearful they may be left holding a bag of programs they can't abandon and yet can't pay for.

Kentucky Gov. Julian M. Carroll, chairman of The National Governors

Association, says the concern is that federal belt tightening may end up being only a shift of costs from Washington to state capitals with the states then forced to go to the voters for new taxes.

absorbing extra costs is for them to be given more flexibility in administering the programs — that is, reduce the federal strings attached to them.

Governors and state legislative leaders say administration budget advisers have told them domestic spending in the 1980 fiscal year — which begins Oct. 1, 1979 — probably will be slashed by about $13 billion to meet Carter's goal of pruning the federal deficit below $30 billion.

The administration is still preparing the budget recommendations, which will be announced in late January, and has not given details of the cuts proposed.

But state officials say they believe most of the cuts will come in the nearly $85 billion now funneled to the states to pay for everything from highway beautification to caring for the elderly.

These programs often are administered by the states but carry strict federal restrictions and guidelines which would keep many of them from being arbitrarily discontinued without separate federal action, say staff members of the governors association.

Although the governors support Carter's push to reduce the federal deficit, Carroll said the only way states can avoid

However, any loosening of federal strings on the federal programs would reverse a decade-old trend of increased federal control and is expected to meet stiff opposition from Congress in those areas where changes require congressional approval.

W. Bowman Cutter, associate director of the Bureau of the Budget, told complaining state legislators recently that the administration favors many of the changes they propose, but cautioned that a shift "frequently runs contrary to policy decisions imbedded in law."

There are nearly 500 programs run by the states with federal money and strict federal guidelines and they accounted for about 75 percent of the $85 billion distributed to the states, says the governor's association. The rest of the money is in the form of block grants, which have fewer federal controls, and federal revenue sharing.

"Now we know how Dr. Frankenstein felt. He created a monster, and he couldn't control it," said Tennessee Rep. John Bragg, vice chairman of the National Conference of State Legislatures.

School Acquires Lung Specialist

ECU News Bureau
Dr. Yash P. Kataria, a specialist in lung diseases, has been appointed associate professor in the Department of Medicine at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

In addition to teaching responsibilities, Kataria will assist in further development of a lung function test lab and pulmonary immunology lab in the Medical School Teaching Addition at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The laboratories will be used for research on the diagnosis and treatment of lung diseases.

Kataria has done extensive studies in sarcoidosis, a lung disease produced by white blood cells which also may attack other parts of the body, such as the eyes, skin or liver.

The results of his investigations have been widely published in professional journals and presented at international conferences.

DR. Y.P. KATARIA

Kataria formerly was assistant professor of medicine and director of Pulmonary Laboratories at the Ohio State University College of Medicine. He has been a consultant and visiting physician at Veterans Administration Hospital, Dayton, Ohio, and Wright Patterson Air Force Base Hospital, Fairborn, Ohio.

A native of India, Kataria received his MD from Glancy Medical College, Amritsar, Punjab, India. He did postgraduate training at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine, England, and the Welsh National School of Medicine, University of Wales, where he also had an academic appointment in the Department of Tuberculosis and Chest Diseases.

Afraid Degree To Lose Value

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Nancy R. Moore is one of a number of North Carolina residents who are worried about the effect of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors' decision to deny Nova University a license to operate in the state.

Mrs. Moore, dean of students at Piedmont Community College, graduated from the school and now she is afraid her degree won't be recognized.

"The action by the Board of Governors will have a tremendous impact upon the future recognition and acceptance of my degree and therefore upon my professional progress in North Carolina," Mrs. Moore wrote UNC officials.

But Nova President Abraham S. Fischer is sending letters to Nova graduates and students in the state assuring them that UNC's action will not affect their degrees and that classes will continue. The school's lawyers have filed lawsuits in federal and state courts charging that the UNC decision was unconstitutional.

Nova is based in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Classes in other states are held in rented rooms, professors are flown in for monthly lectures and student reports are shipped to Florida for grading. Part of the attraction of the courses is that educators receive an automatic pay raise if they earn a doctorate.

But a team of college administrators hired by UNC concluded last year that the programs lacked depth, had inadequate libraries and didn't offer enough student-teacher involvement.

"It certainly is suspect in my opinion," said Robert A. Pattillo, associate professor of education at Duke University.

Defenders, including Superintendent of the state Department of Public Instruction A. Craig Phillips, maintain the school is an innovative approach to higher education.

"I think a quality program is being offered here and if I didn't think so, I wouldn't be scrapping for it," Phillips said.

Cite Gains In Economy

ATLANTA (AP) — The Southern economy appears to be gaining strength after suffering late-summer doldrums, the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta says.

Such economic indicators as jobs, residential construction and consumer spending increased through November in the Sixth Federal Reserve District, the bank said Sunday.

But the growth was accompanied by robust inflation, especially in housing costs, the report said.

The Sixth Federal Reserve District includes Alabama, Florida, Georgia and parts of Louisiana, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The number of service, construction and trade jobs continued to grow, but employment in the textile, apparel and chemical industries fell.

Retail sales rebounded in September after dipping in August, but automobile sales were held below potential because of slow deliveries of new cars, the bank said.

Despite a decrease in automobile loans and a prime rate of 11 1/2 percent at the larger banks in early December, bank lending was up, the report said. Mortgage interest rates climbed.

Farm prices showed no predictable pattern, the bank reported. Corn, wheat, eggs and calf prices increased in November, but prices of broilers, hogs, grapefruit and soybeans fell.

Attorney Is Censured

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A disciplinary committee of the North Carolina State Bar has censured a New Bern attorney for accepting money from clients and then failing to complete the clients' appeals from Superior Court decisions.

The committee said last week that Reginald L. Frazier's conduct "adversely reflects on his fitness to practice law." It said he had violated state bar rules and "engaged in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice."

Frazier could not be reached for comment.

A letter describing Frazier's conduct will be sent to the Third Judicial District, where Frazier practices, and the state Supreme Court. Letters will also be sent to the federal district courts in the state and the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va.

Attorneys for the state bar did not recommend any punishment for Frazier. But attorney M. Bays Shoaf told the disciplinary committee that Frazier should be required to improve his record keeping if he is to continue practicing law.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecast for the period until early Tuesday predicts snow and flurries for much of the western half of the nation. Flurries are also forecast for Maine and New Hampshire. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
If you're hoping for a white Christmas this year, the weatherman says you will probably be disappointed.

According to the National Weather Service's extended outlook for Dec. 23 through Dec. 27, temperatures will be above normal for December. And the warmer weather, which will be moving into the state today, may even bring some showers to the Tar Heel state.

A high pressure system centered over Alabama has been controlling weather in North Carolina for the past few days, but cloudiness is beginning to spread into the state ahead of a developing system over the Rocky Mountain states. The weather service says clouds will begin to spread from the west today.

Sunday was sunny and chilly, with strong northwest winds. High temperatures were mostly in the low and mid 50s with 40s in the mountains. Some cloudiness moved into the state overnight. Lows were mostly in the upper 20s and low 30s with slightly cooler readings in the mountains.

Today's highs are expected to be in the low to mid 50s with some 40s in the western part of the state. Lows tonight will be in the low to mid 30s with 20s in the mountains.

Tuesday will be mostly cloudy, with temperatures climbing into the high 50s over most of the state and low 60s along the coast.

Cleveland Awaiting Layoffs

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
Associated Press Writer
CLEVELAND (AP) — Union leaders representing Cleveland's 10,000 civil servants braced themselves for today's showdown over layoffs with Mayor Dennis Kucinich while local bankers considered suing the city for defaulting. Kucinich was to meet with the representatives of 17 public-employee locals to outline a schedule for layoffs of 35 percent of the city's workers. He said the brunt of the program would fall on the police and fire departments, sanitation and street repairs. Two unions representing Cleveland's 1,875 police officers have promised to fight the layoffs in court.

"The city is going to be one hell of a jungle if he (Kucinich) lays off half the police and firemen," said DaVid Isaacs, a pharmacist at an all-night drugstore here.

At six local banks, which hold $15.5 million in overdue city notes, executives scheduled meetings to consider how to collect on the debt.

"Sooner or later we will have to file a suit against the city," said Roger Hipsley, a Central National Bank spokesman. "But we don't want our action to be construed by the public as the banks starting to shut down the city. We are not pulling the rug out from under the city, we are not going to tag property (for seizing)."

On Friday, Cleveland became the first city to default since the Depression when Kucinich and the council failed to agree on the mayor's plan to raise taxes, or the council's suggestion to sell the city-owned light company. The council views the 46,000-customer Muny Light as a drain on the treasury. It has not generated its own electricity since the spring of 1977. A sign on the plant, "Power to the People. Muny Light. Dennis J. Kucinich, Mayor," is illuminated at night with electricity purchased from the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co.

City Council President George Forbes said he would meet with business leaders to try to persuade them to make early payments of $12 million to $15 million in real and personal property taxes.

The plan would not solve the city's long-term financial crisis, but Forbes said it would help pay salaries of workers Kucinich threatened to lay off and could carry the city through February or March.

Pressure plays throughout the city are in evidence. Bankers claim legal action should pressure the mayor and city council to mend political fences and work together.

The threatened layoffs are also viewed by some as a pressure tactic to force the council to approve the mayor's tax program. Kucinich has said the layoffs will continue until his plan is approved.

Retired, His Work Is Free

EAST BERLIN, Pa. (AP) — When Lewis Smith retired 18 years ago, he said he didn't want to just sit down and die, so the 83-year-old handyman still visits his old plant almost every day and works for free when he's needed.

Doing odd jobs at the Penn Wood Products Co. here is his way of showing his appreciation for the "wonderful way they treated me" during the 15 years he was employed by the firm.

"They treated me good all the time I worked for them," said Smith. "Some places, the bosses are always pushing you. That wasn't the case here."

Smith, a widower since 1965, said the voluntary work also helps him keep going in his old age and he recommends similar activities for other retirees.

"You get more tired from sitting in a chair than you do from working," he said. "A lot of people who retire just sit down until they die. I didn't feel that I would want to do that." Smith, who lives on the outskirts of this south-central Pennsylvania town, said he took a job with what was then Penn Wood Heel Co. in 1945 after selling his plumbing business.

Since retirement, Smith's visits to the plant range from a couple of hours to half a day. "If there's anything to be fixed, I fix it for them," he said.

Hazel Hoffmann, Penn Wood's office manager and a 35-year employee of the firm, described him as a master craftsman. "There isn't anything he can't make," she said. "He's a master with wood. He's a master with metal."

Co-owner Jere Coxon added: "He's been with us many years and I guess the best thing to say is that we feel that he is a part of the Coxon family. Of course he's slowed down, but he's still able to take on just about any task."

Rhodes Scholarship To First U.S. Black Coed

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Karen L. Stevenson, a senior at the University of North Carolina, Sunday became the first black woman in the United States to win a Rhodes Scholarship to England's Oxford University.

Ms. Stevenson, of Washington, D.C., is a Morehead scholar and a track star at UNC. She was one of 32

American students named Sunday as winners of one of the world's most prestigious academic honors.

William Barber, American secretary of the Rhodes scholarship trust, said Sunday night that the Rhodes committees do not want to publicize or emphasize Ms. Stevenson's uniqueness as a black American woman Rhodes scholar.

Barber said the selection committees take pains to "be color blind" and said "we're indifferent" about racial firsts. He stressed that Rhodes scholarships are not limited by any racial, sexual or religious barriers and said there were "a great many black men" who won before eligibility was opened to women.

Ms. Stevenson could not be reached Sunday, but her roommate, senior Stacy Hollenberg, said jokingly that "she is the kind of student who makes you sick."

Ms. Stevenson, an American history major, speaks French and Russian fluently and plans to take a course in Italian, her roommate said. She plans to attend law school at the University of Michigan, the University of Chicago or Yale following her two-year Oxford program. She will visit the Soviet Union next summer on a Morehead scholarship program.

She has lettered in track for three years and is team captain this year. She qualified for the women's national track championships last year.

Pat M. Bakins Jr. of Midland, Texas, who received an undergraduate degree from Davidson College in 1977, also won a Rhodes scholarship. He is now a student at Yale University.

The Rhodes scholarship was established by British millionaire industrialist Cecil Rhodes. The scholarship's worth is placed at 4,000 British pounds a year. Scholarship winners may take any course of study available at Oxford.

The Rhodes selection committees consider four criteria — intellectual attainment, character, leadership potential and physical vigor.

3 Attended Course At UNC

Three Greenville citizens attended an in-depth study of real estate techniques and current practices recently at courses held on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Attending the Realtors' Institute were Steve J. Evans, Alan M. Harris and William Ritter. They were among 68 students from 31 North Carolina communities participating in the schooling co-sponsored by the N. C. Real Estate Educational Foundation and the UNC-Chapel Hill School of Business.

Convicted 'Big Family Man'

KENT, Wash. (AP) — The federal government has caught up with Carl Poschwatta, who claimed 99 dependents on his 1975 tax return.

But Poschwatta, a 41-year-old airline pilot from Kent, says he will appeal his conviction on a charge of filing a false and fraudulent tax statement.

"I'm a constitutionalist who is against unlawful government," Poschwatta said after the conviction Thursday. "I don't mind paying taxes, but I'm against a tax code that violates the right to privacy and the right not to bear witness upon myself."

Assistant U.S. attorney Richard Jones, who prosecuted the case, said Poschwatta could receive a maximum sentence of a year in prison and a $500 fine. Sentencing is set for Jan. 17.

Gun Wound Accidental

BELVOIR — A Belvoir area man was reported accidentally shot in the jaw by a nine-millimeter Mauser Saturday night when he was attempting to remove guns from his truck following a hunting trip.

Leroy Carraway, 40, underwent emergency surgery at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and was reported yesterday to be "out of danger."

The Pitt County Sheriff Department relayed a call from the Carraway home, located two and a half miles north of Belvoir, at 10:47 p.m. Saturday to the Greenville Rescue Squad, which transported him to the hospital. The Falkland Life Support Squad also rendered assistance.

It was reported that Carraway had been home from hunting for a while and had been inside the house, but went back to his truck to get his guns. He was at home alone at the time and was without assistance until his son, Tony, got home and found him.

Picketing Idle Schools

ELIZABETHTON, Tenn. (AP) — Carter County teachers, represented by the American Federation of Teachers, began picketing 18 empty schools today in their efforts to gain salary increases.

Anticipating the move, the county school board voted Friday to begin Christmas vacation early to avoid a confrontation, so no students are affected. The holidays had been scheduled to start at the end of this week and lasts through Jan. 2.

A spokesman for Carter County school system, who asked not to be identified, said teachers were picketing all 18 county schools. "And they're also outside the administration building here," she said.

Roy Blackwell, president of the county's AFT chapter, said the group's executive council approved the action after teachers voted, 297-54, in favor of a strike on Thursday. The county employs about 380 teachers.

County teaches voted to strike after the Carter County Commission refused to approve a recommended school budget of $1.7 million. The proposed budget included $350,000 earmarked for teacher pay raises.

County Commissioner Jack Garrison said the teacher pay increase would require higher property taxes.

"P.S. Dear Helpers: A merry Chrissmss and a happy new year, Woopy!"

ECU Librarians Show Handcrafted Products

ECU News Bureau

A variety of handcrafted items done by East Carolina University librarians are on display through December 20 in the lobby of the main campus library.

Included in the exhibition are crocheted afghans and table mats, a decorated egg, a macrame wallhanging, a hooked rug, a handmade basket, a footstool covered in counted cross-stitch embroidery, a needlework picture and an oil seascape painting.

Most of the items were completed during work breaks and lunch hours, when many support staff and faculty librarians gather for relaxation and creative handwork.

Janice Smith, whose two crocheted scarves are featured in the display, said some newer members of the library staff have become interested in acquiring a craft skill after seeing the others busily at work day after day.

Newcomers to the library staff are told, "If you can't embroider, crochet or macrame, you'll just have to learn; we'll teach you," she said.

Handwork became an integral part of the librarians' leisure moments four years ago, when several staff members collaborated on a crocheted afghan for a student assistant who was recovering from a serious automobile accident. Each participant crocheted individual squares which were then joined together and personalized with the student's initials.

None of the items in the current display is for sale, although some exhibitors expressed a willingness to duplicate them by special arrangement.

Stunt Fatal To Motorcyclist

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. (AP) — A motorcyclist died Sunday when he lost control of his bicycle during a stunt, according to his father-in-law.

Robert W. King said he witnessed his 23-year-old son-in-law, Larry Dowell of Mount Airy, jump his bike off a seven-foot bank. King said Dowell lost control and hit a parked car.

King said the young man never recovered consciousness and was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital.

Dowell had made several successful jumps before the one that killed him, King said.

Julian Bond Has Political Goals

ATLANTA (AP) — Julian Bond, who once declined a vice presidential nomination because he was too young, hasn't abandoned all of his political ambitions.

Bond, 39, plans to remain in the Georgia state senate for at least two more years. He also intends to run for another term as president of the Atlanta National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

He also wants to be a U.S. senator, but believes the chances of a black being elected to the Senate from Georgia are slim.

Just A Little Bit Less Oil

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward Koch was working the crowd on Fifth Avenue, having a good time with his constituents, when someone asked him what measures the city might take to cope with the increase in oil prices announced by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"I'm going to try to use less oil in my salad," the mayor said Sunday.

Peanut Growers Retain Program

The peanut growers of North Carolina went to the polls Dec. 14 and voted to continue their self-help assessment program at the rate of $1 per ton on peanuts sold in a six-year period, according to Joe S. Sugg, executive secretary of the North Carolina Peanut Growers Association.

Sugg stated that the total voter turn out of individual farmers was lower than expected due to extremely favorable soybean harvesting conditions.

A favorable vote percentage of 96.8 carried the referendum. With 98 percent of the counties reporting, 2,015 growers voted for the assessment and 67 voted against it.

T. N. Dixon, president of the North Carolina Peanut Growers Association, said, "I am extremely gratified at the high percentage favorable vote and the large percentages of acreages represented."

"This, to me, is a vote of confidence for the officers and Board of Directors of the association in their administering the funds contributed by the growers in bringing about such successful results in the areas of research, education, and legislation designed to increase the use of peanuts and the profit to North Carolina growers," said Dixon.

Contributed To The Santa Fund

The Pitt County Young Democrats have contributed $66 to the Pitt County Department of Social Services Foster Children's Santa Claus Fund.

According to the president, Danny McNally, the money was raised by giving a party. Ms. Henri Johnson was in charge of the project, he indicated.

Celebration...

Dr. Thomas Brewer, chancellor of the university, praised the Pirates as "as fine a group of players and coaches as have ever been at East Carolina. They belong, not only to the university, but to the county, the east, the whole state of North Carolina."

Athletic Director Bill Cain noted that the Pirates received special praise from the people of Shreveport, La., site of the game, for their performance, both on and off the field.

"Our staff did a great job," Coach Pat Dye praised, "in bringing the players along to this day. It all ended up (Saturday) and you know what happened."

Dye added that he had said last summer that this East Carolina team had the promise of being something special. "It has become that," he proclaimed. "In Shreveport, the thing that impressed me the most was the way they conducted themselves from the moment they got off the plane right on through the game. They did East Carolina proud."

The coach also referred to the hard hitting in the game, saying, "I've been around a lot of football, but I never saw hitting like I saw Saturday. We've worked for five years for this opportunity, and I'm glad we gave a good account of ourselves. For a lot of people, going to a bowl game is like a big party, but it takes a lot of the fun out of it if you don't win. Someone has to lose, but there are no losers here today."

Dye brought forward fullback Theodore Sutton, who was named the Outstanding Offensive Player of the game. "You know," he told the crowd, "Theodore was a walk-on at East Carolina. But it didn't take us long to realize that we'd made a mistake, and we gave him one. He had a truly great game, and is a class individual."

Sutton offered the victory as a tribute to the fan support enjoyed by the Pirate team. "We showed a lot of people we could play football."

That brought a cry of "Go to hell, Carolina," from the crowd.

Dye concluded by saying that the whole purpose of it was to have fun. "If we have fun (playing football), then you (the fans) have fun watching us. We look forward to getting bigger and better down the road. There are going to be days when things don't go our way. But as long as we have the kind of support we get from our loyal fans, we'll know that there is a great future ahead of us."

Sutton and Dye

Fullback Sutton Named Bowl MVP

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — It was vindication for Theodore Sutton, who enrolled at East Carolina without a scholarship, spent his freshman year on the sidelines, then led his team to a 35-13 victory over Louisiana Tech in the Independence Bowl.

"Now I've shown them," Sutton said after his 143 rushing yards —including a 45-yard touchdown sprint—earned him recognition as the bowl game's most valuable player Sunday.

At 5-foot-9 and 209 pounds, Sutton was considered too short to play college football when he finished his senior season in high school.

"Nobody in the country wanted me," the junior fullback said. "I lived 35 miles from Greenville, so I just went up there and walked on."

He was not an instant success. He spent his freshman year watching and running plays with the scout squad.

"I thought about quitting a lot of times," he said. "But this afternoon felt pretty good. I guess this makes it all worth it."

Sutton's 45-yard touchdown burst came in the third quarter, after Louisiana Tech had narrowed a three-touchdown deficit to 21-13.

"The middle was wide open," Sutton said. "The blocking was superb, and all I had to do was run."

Said Tech Coach Maxie Lambright: "That did it."

East Carolina took advantage of three first-half turnovers to jump out to a 21-0 lead on a 3-yard sprint by Anthony Collins, a 1-yard sneak by quarterback Leander Green and a 1-yard plunge by Collins.

Tech made it 21-10 before intermission on a 32-yard touchdown pass play from Keith Thibodeaux to Scooter Spruiell and a 36-yard field goal by Keith Swilley. Swilley got another 36-yarder in the third quarter, and momentum seemed to have shifted to the home team.

Then came Sutton's scoring dash, and Eddie Hicks added a fourth-quarter insurance score on a 2-yard plunge.

East Carolina Coach Pat Dye said he expected both defenses to play well, but he was surprised by the offensive output.

"I was shocked at the amount of points scored," he said.

"But our defense did play well. They forced a lot of turnovers—seven—and that made the big difference."

East Carolina's defense ranked right behind that of Penn State—the nation's leader—going into the game. Louisiana Tech was able to gain only 12 yards rushing against that defense and had to rely strictly on passing to move the ball.

Ziegler Cops Win

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Larry Ziegler's decision to stay on the PGA tour another year has finally paid off.

Ziegler came from behind Sunday to win the $20,000 first prize in the Central and South American Open golf tournament, played on the wind-swept Cariari International Country Club course.

"I was pretty close to quitting the tour because I couldn't get out of my own way since winning the New Orleans Open in 1976," said Ziegler, who shot a final-round 69 Sunday to finish with a 2-over-par 286 and a two stroke victory. "Everything has been downhill ever since."

"The win here convinced me that I still have some pretty good shots left, and I am definitely going to be back on the tour next year."

In taking the title, the 39-year-old pro from St. Louis edged Joe Inman of Clover, S.C. and Wren Lum of Theodore, Ala., who finished in a tie for second at 288.

Fierce Battles For Recruits

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

The scene was Winford Boynes' living room in Oklahoma City. Two members of academia were giving the young high school star a lesson in college basketball recruiting.

"Larry Gillman wanted me to stay in the living room. Denny Crum was pulling on me to go on the back porch so we could talk alone. It was a tugging war and they almost came to blows. My mother finally called a truce and threw everyone out of the house."

"Crum was supposed to come back at 9 the next morning, but showed up at 7:30. The San Francisco people were at a hamburger joint across the street—it was like a stake-out—and when they saw Crum come to my house, they rushed right over.

"This kind of stuff was going on for three months. At first I enjoyed it, but then got tired of it."

"It was an unreal situation. Grown men fighting over an 18-year-old. It was like two kids fighting over a lollipop."

Boys will be boys, especially in college basketball where the lollipops stand 6-foot-8, can stuff a basket full of goodies and have the potential to turn a financial situation from sour to sweet.

Boynes, who chose Gillman and San Francisco over Crum and Louisville and is now a rookie with the New Jersey Nets, was recruited by some 360 schools, and it wasn't because of his college board scores. College basketball today is less college and more basketball. The coaches will tell you there's more pressure to win and, consequently, more cheating—i.e., buying of high school talent.

It's all big business now and the successful teams make the most points and the most money.

Kentucky, last season's national champion, grossed $1.66 million, $250,000 of which came from making the Final Four of the NCAA Tournament. The basketball program showed profits of nearly $700,000.

Basketball appeals to many athletic departments because it is much easier to turn a basketball program around than a football program. All that is often needed is one standout big man.

Little Iona College, a basketball nobody located north of New York City, hired an aggressive head coach, Jim Valvano, three years ago after a 4-19 season. Last year Valvano lured super trosh Jeff Ruland away from Kentucky and Indiana, and the Gaels went 17-10. This year, their sights are on the NCAA Tournament.

Ruland, the nation's leading freshman scorer and rebounder, brought Iona instant respectability. That's what the new freshman-eligible rule can do for a program.

But coaches are almost universal in their dislike for the freshman-eligible rule. They say freshmen need a year away from the microscope to adjust to college and basketball.

"Freshmen transfer so much they need a revolving door," said Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps.

The freshmen-eligible rule and the NCAA's recent limit of 15 basketball scholarships for any 4-year period have all but ended the chance for another UCLA dynasty. The Bruins won 10 out of 12 NCAA championships during 1964-75.

Phelps knows if he doesn't chase down the freshmen who can play Division I basketball right away, someone else will. And Phelps and many other coaches interviewed by The Associated Press say that lots of those chases end with the player receiving illegal inducements of cars, apartments and money.

"It's a cancer right now that's terminal," said Phelps. "There's more cheating out there. Plane rides, tickets, clothes, money. Anything somebody wants, somebody will give it to him."

How did cheating in college basketball become a cancer? Money, television and greater national interest are the best answers.

"You don't hear about many track and tennis coaches being fired," said Coach Dean Smith of North Carolina. "There's just not that much interest. When there's interest, there's pressure."

In the minor sports there's no pressure to fill the big fieldhouses, like Kentucky's 23,000-seat Rupp Arena. After the scandals of the early 1950s and early 1960s, basketball programs turned away from the big-city arenas and the fixers and tried to insulate their programs in newly constructed campus courts.

And only winning teams fill those arenas and are seen on television.

Penn State, for example, sold only seven season tickets for basketball last season, then fired its longtime coach, John Bach. Dick Harter was brought in, and season ticket sales are over 1,000.

In the past three seasons, only 20 teams were seen on the 35 national TV games, not including the NCAA Tournament games. Notre Dame and UCLA topped the charts with eight appearances. Marquette had seven, Michigan and Maryland five and Kentucky four.

This year, the same elite basketball schools dominate NBC's national schedule. There will be, however, seven newcomers on the screen, including four schools which had last year's freshmen sensations—Johnson and Michigan State, Duke and Eugene Banks, Kansas and Darnell Valentine and Southern Cal and Cliff Robinson.

The pressure to get these blue-chip high school seniors is felt in many areas. The major fallout is the Division I coach himself.

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Dolphins finally found motivation to go all out for tonight's game against the New England Patriots. A victory would put Miami's first-round playoff game against the Houston Oilers in the Orange Bowl before a packed audience of hometown fans.

Ironically, it was the Oilers who gave the Dolphins something to shoot for in the 9 p.m. EST nationally televised game (ABC-TV).

The Oilers needed to beat San Diego in its final regular-season game Sunday to force the Dolphins to go to Houston for the playoff game on Christmas Eve.

But Houston, despite playing at home, lost to the Chargers 45-24, leaving it up to the Dolphins to decide whether Houston fans will see their first pro football playoff game ever to be played in the Astrodome.

Miami Coach Don Shula must decide whether to go with his power players, including quarterback Bob Griese and running back Delvin Williams, against New England or save them for the playoffs.

Williams was still "probable" Sunday night.

The relatively easy conquest of Louisiana Tech in the Independence Bowl Saturday again brings to light the fact that the Pirates probably deserved better than they got in the bowl situation.

Still, a bowl game is a bowl game, despite the fact that few national television broadcasts Saturday even mentioned it.

The win, in convincing style, coupled with the fact that East Carolina was willing to assume the financial responsibilities that went with it, should be noted by other bowl committees for future thought.

There has been some comment about the Pirates "buying" their bowl bid, but then, what school does not. A few years back, we recall Alabama going to a bowl game with only a 7-4 record. Did they go on their merit, or because they could sell tickets?

Naturally, the bowl people want teams that can sell tickets. They are not so much interested in how, but that they do. Consider the Gator Bowl this year, in inviting Clemson for a return visit. Last year's ticket sales were one of the primary reasons for the Gator folks liking Clemson. True, the Tigers did have an outstanding year on the field, too, but had they not won the ACC, they still probably would have gotten that bid.

The East Carolina football team can be proud of the way they played. They have deserved a bowl game for nearly every year since 1972, when the Pirates went 9-2 under Sonny Randle. Only once since then have the Pirates failed to have an outstanding season.

This year's team, 9-3 now, could easily have finished the year with an 11-1 record with a break here and there. The Pirates outplayed North Carolina and should have won that game. They played well enough to win against Southern Mississippi, and only a dropped interception cost them the opportunity to sew up victory there.

It took the Pirates until the latter half of the season to really get moving, however, but when they reached their potential, they were an outstanding team.

The future of bowl bids now will probably lie in how well the Pirates of 1979 perform. There will be a number of losses through graduation. It will be up to the players and staff to fill those gaps.

The season in 1979 is also a difficult one, probably the most difficult ever faced by an ECU team. The Bucs must play all four members of the "Big Four"—and it definitely is the "Big Five" now, unless you drop off someone other than the Pirates. All four of those games are on the road, too.

Then, there are a number of traditional rivals, along with at least one newcomer, North Texas State, a strong independent.

An outstanding record next year, against the likes of the teams on the ECU schedule will certainly deserve another bowl trip—hopefully to one more accessible to ECU fans, too.

Pirate Cagers To Well

East Carolina's basketball team, while in a losing effort, played better ball than it had played in its last three games against the University of Maryland Saturday night.

The Pirate game play was to stick with a slower tempo game, and they were able to do it. Maryland, which definitely has outstanding talent, was able to break loose against it from time to time, but generally, the Terps played with the Pirates, letting ECU set the tempo.

The Bucs fell back by 15-20 points on several occasions, but fought back each time to around ten points. Only Maryland's bruising board strength, and a poor shooting first half made the difference.

Still the upcoming schedule makes few easy games ahead for the Pirates.

The Empty Seat In The Stands

We note with sadness the passing of Marvin Aldridge last week.

Mr. Aldridge was a fixture at many sporting events, and nearly every baseball game that was played in the Greenville area for years. For many years, he and his friend, "Captain Jack" Kilgo, sat side by side at game after game. They would go from Little League, to high school to college games, one right after the other.

"Captain Jack" passed away a few years back, but Mr. Aldridge kept it up.

One relative, a granddaughter, told us Thursday night after Mr. Aldridge died at 89, that he had said that he wanted to go one of two ways: either in his sleep or while watching a ball game. He died in his sleep.

And her only regret from his long life was that he didn't live through Saturday. He had really been looking forward to watching the Pirates win.

But perhaps he had the best seat in the house.

Foster Recovers

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson basketball coach Bill Foster has recovered from a gastrointestinal attack that forced him to leave the playing area during the Tigers game against Western Carolina Saturday night.

"He's already been out running today," Bob Bradley, sports information director at Clemson, said Sunday.

An assistant coach, Dwight Rainey, had to take over for Foster with eight minutes left in the Western Carolina game. Clemson won 71-56.

Bradley said Clemson would not play again until Dec. 28 when they go to El Paso, Texas to take part in the Sun Bowl Basketball Classic there.

Eagles Make Playoffs

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Sports Writer

The Philadelphia Eagles and Coach Dick Vermeil have made believers of their skeptics...and gained a National Football League playoff berth for the first time since 1966.

"Our goal when we came to training camp last July was to win nine games," Vermeil said Sunday. "People said, 'Hey, nine games? You're just not going to get it done.'"

The Eagles finished the 1978 season with exactly nine victories (and seven losses) Sunday, beating the New York Giants 20-3.

Their record was good enough to qualify for one of two wild card playoff berths in the National Football Conference. The Eagles will open the playoffs Dec. 24 against the NFC's other wild card team, the Atlanta Falcons, also 9-7, at Atlanta.

The Miami Dolphins and the Houston Oilers, the wild card teams from the American Football Conference, also will meet Dec. 24.

The playoffs continue Dec. 30, with Miami or Denver, the AFC West champion, at Pittsburgh, the AFC Central winner, and Atlanta or Minnesota, the NFC Central champion, at Dallas, the NFC East winner.

The second round will be completed Dec. 31, with Houston or Denver at New England, the AFC East champion, and Philadelphia or Minnesota, at Los Angeles, the NFC West winner. The reason the second-round games are not locked in is because of an NFL rule that no division champion may play a wild card team from its division in the second round of playoffs.

The conference championship games will be played Jan. 7 and Super Bowl XIII Jan. 21 at Miami.

Minnesota and Atlanta backed into their playoff berths over the weekend. The Vikings became the NFC Central champions for the sixth year in a row despite a 27-20 loss to Oakland, while the Falcons reached the playoffs for the first time despite a 42-21 loss to St. Louis.

Minnesota and Green Bay, a 31-14 loser to Los Angeles, both finished with 8-7-1 records, but the Vikings were division champions because they were 1-0-1 against the Packers. Atlanta was assured a playoff spot Saturday when Chicago defeated Washington 14-10.

Other NFL weekend scores included: Pittsburgh 21, Denver 17; Dallas 30, New York Jets 7; San Diego 45, Houston 24; Cincinnati 48, Cleveland 16; New Orleans 17, Tampa Bay 10; Detroit 33, San Francisco 14; Buffalo 21, Baltimore 14; Seattle 23, Kansas City 19.

In tonight's nationally televised contest, Miami, 10-5, entertains New England, 11-4.

Raiders 27, Vikings 20
Oakland, 9-7, built a 21-0 advantage with the help of touchdowns 17 seconds apart by Charles Phillips and Fred Biletnikoff, then withstood Fran Tarkenton's passing barrage which produced threetouchdowns.

Cards 42, Falcons 21
St. Louis quarterback Jim Hart completed 20 of 40 passes for three touchdowns and scored twice, his first TDs in three years, as the Cardinals wound up 6-10 after an 0-8 start.

Rams 31, Packers 14
The play of Los Angeles quarterback Pat Haden and running back Cullen Bryant did in the Packers. The oft-maligned Haden passed for one TD and scrambled 24 yards to set up another, while Bryant rushed for 121 yards and two TDs.

Bears 14, Redskins 10
Steve Schubert's 73-yard TD run with a punt return and Walter Payton's 44-yard yard scoring scamper won it for Chicago, 7-9.

Steelers 21, Broncos 17
Pittsburgh escaped with a victory by stopping the Broncos on the 1-yard line on the final play of the game.

The Steelers, who finished 142 for the league's best record, built a 21-0 halftime lead as Terry Bradshaw passed for two TDs and set up a third score with his aeriels before the Broncos, 10-6, rallied behind reserve quarterback Norris Weese.

Cowboys 30, Jets 7
"This is the time of the season to get momentum," said Dallas running back Tony Dorsett after the Cowboys, 12-4, tuned up for the playoffs by trouncing the Jets, 8-8, for their sixth straight victory.

Chargers 45, Oilers 24
The Oilers obviously weren't prepared for Dan Fouts' passing. Fouts hit 21 of 40 passes for 369 yards and four TDs as San Diego finished 9-7, including 8-4 under Don Coryell. Houston was 10-6.

Bengals 48, Browns 16
The Bengals, 4-12, won their third straight game as Ken Anderson passed for two touchdowns and ran for another. Pete Johnson set a Bengals' record with 160 yards rushing.

Saints 17, Bucs 10
New Orleans quarterback Archie Manning enjoyed himself against injury riddled Tampa Bay, 5-11, completing 25 of 36 passes for 250 yards and the game-winning TD, a 1-yard flip to Henry Childs.

Lions 33, 49ers 14
Detroit Coach Monte Clark savored the game ball after the Lions, 7-9, riddled crippled San Francisco, the NFL's worst team, with a 2-14 record. "This is the ball I really wanted," said Clark, who was fired as San Francisco's coach after the 1976 season.

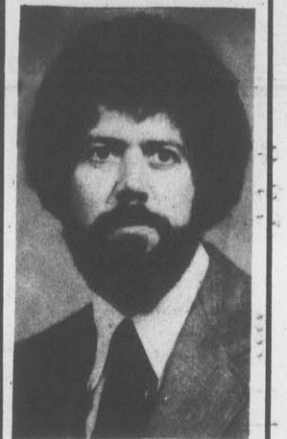

Dexter Bussey ran for two touchdowns and Benny Ricardo kicked four field goals for Detroit.

Bills 21, Colts 14
The Bills' Terry Miller ran 60 yards for a touchdown and became the 10th rookie in NFL history to rush for more than 1,000 yards. Miller gained 123 yards, for a season's total of 1,060.

Seahawks 23, Chiefs 19
Seattle, 9-7, became the first third-year NFL team to win nine games, defeating Kansas City, 4-12. Al Hunter scored his first two touchdowns as a pro—on runs of 1 and 55 yards—and rushed for 133 yards.

McAdoo Returns

By The Associated Press

They say you can get Bob McAdoo out of bed and he'll hit a jump shot for you.

Get him out of sick bay, and he might hit several. Which is what happened Sunday.

On the missing list from for 12 games because of a bruised toe, the New York Knicks' sharpshooter came back with a vengeance, scoring 41 points to lead his team to a 111-105 National Basketball Association victory over the Atlanta Hawks.

Trail Blazers 123, Nuggets 110

Tom Owens scored a career-high 35 points including 15 of 15 from the foul line, to pace Portland over Denver.

76ers 103, Lakers 96

Henry Bibby scored six points in the last 74 seconds to lead Philadelphia past Los Angeles.

Cavs 101, Sonics 91

Campy Russell scored 23 points and Austin Carr added 19 as Cleveland beat Seattle.

Bucks 117, Bulls 101

Reserve Junior Bridgeman scored 22 points to lead Milwaukee past Chicago.

Clippers 116, Suns 110

Lloyd Free scored 30 points and Randy Smith added 28 and triggered a fourth-quarter spurt that carried San Diego over Phoenix.

Greene Central Shooting Poorly

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

SNOW HILL — Last year's Greene Central girls basketball team turned in its best season, and Coach Jim Fulghum, with several experienced players returning, looked for a good year in 1978-79.

But so far, things have not gone well for the Lady Rams, who have posted a 2-5 record so far. They are 1-3 in Eastern Carolina Conference competition.

"We just haven't been able to score," Fulghum said. "We've only shot about 22 per cent from the floor in our first five games."

"We have played good defense, and we've done a pretty good job of rebounding and ball-handling. We just can't hit the basket."

Fulghum doesn't blame it on the lack of experience. "It's just an inability to hit. A couple of girls are not hitting like I thought they would. But I do think that we'll get better. The problem is that one girl might have a good game one time, and another the next, but they can't get consistent together."

Three starters departed from last year's team, but two return, Melody Ham and Iris Pridgen. Joining them are Cindy Creech and Sara Taylor, both of whom saw some starting roles at times last year, and gained plenty of experience.

"But our fifth position is the one that has really caused us problems with. We've experimented with three different girls, and we may experiment some more." So far, Paula Brown, Lori Brann and Tammy Edwards have all started at the fifth spot, the guard position. "We may end up having to move a forward back there," Fulghum said.

Sharon Suggs, a freshman has come on strong, and Sharon Bright, a junior, has played well up front, along with Brenda Carraway, a backup center.

Vickie Dupree, a freshman, rounds out the 11-girl squad. "We'll be playing ten people most of the time," Fulghum said.

While the team has done a very good job in defense, it has been the lack of offense that has hampered them. "I think we can play anyone in the league and good game," Fulghum said. "It's just a question of not being able to score."

Currently, Fulghum feels that Ayden-Gritton and Southwest Edgemont may be the teams to beat in the league.

"One of the girls we think can score for us has been ineligible during first semester. We hope that she will rejoin us in January, and that could help us out a lot, especially if the other girls come around and start hitting like we think they can," Fulghum said.

Aviation's Diamond Jubilee: The Dream Lives On

By EDWARD K. DeLONG
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defying experts of their time, overcoming despair so deep they felt at times man would not fly "within a thousand years," they joined the birds soaring over Kitty Hawk 75 years ago and realized man's oldest dream.

Orville and Wilbur Wright succeeded where others had failed, ushering in the era of powered flight, because they alone combined three essential ingredients — lift, control and propulsion.

To this day, from the supersonic Concorde and the space shuttle to the smallest private plane and the new pedal-powered Gossamer Albatross, those same elements dictate the success or failure of every attempt at flight.

It was Dec. 17, 1903, when the unknown bicycle makers from Dayton, Ohio, piloted their fragile, cloth-covered biplane four times into the stiff, chill north wind that swept the sandy dunes of North Carolina's outer banks.

Wilbur was 36; Orville, 32. Orville, winner of a coin toss, took the controls first and flew 120 feet. His undulating flight lasted about 12 seconds, but the exact duration was lost to history because in all the excitement no one remembered to halt the stopwatch.

The Wright Flyer's single, 12-horsepower engine with its twin, chain-driven pusher propellers sounded like a wheat-threshing machine.

John Daniels, one of only five spectators, snapped a picture with the Wrights' camera. He later recalled the brothers clasped hands before that momentous flight "like two folks who weren't sure they'd ever see each other again," and then Wilbur asked the onlookers to "not look sad, but to laugh and holla and clap our hands to cheer Orville up when he started."

Orville, who reached a maximum altitude of about 10 feet, came down so hard he cracked one of the 600-pound Flyer's sleigh-like landing skids. It was quickly spliced with cord.

Wilbur then took off, covering 170 feet in 13 seconds of shaky flight.

A third flight, again by Orville, smoother than his first, traveled 200 feet in 15 seconds.

Then came a final triumph by Wilbur, spanning 852 feet in 59 seconds, beyond question a true flight and not just a "hop." It, too, went smoothly after a shaky start, but the skids dug into the sand on landing and the front-mounted elevator was broken. Minutes later a gust of wind overturned and shattered the untended Flyer, putting an end to further flights that winter.

The Wrights, crudely but surely, had set the stage for everything that was to follow.

It took just nine years for the brothers to progress from Wilbur's first dreams of flying, prompted by reports in McClure's Magazine of the glider exploits of German Engineer Otto Lillenthal, to powered flight at Kitty Hawk.

Within five more years they had perfected a passenger-carrying airplane, sold it to the governments of the United States and France and — in a preview of the grim side of aviation — suffered the first fatal crash, a crackup at Fort Myer, Va., Sept. 17, 1908, that killed Army Lt. Thomas Selfridge and injured Orville.

They also had become the first to feel the thrill of breaking the bonds of Earth and riding the wind, a feeling every pilot since has come to know.

"When you know, after the first few minutes, that the whole mechanism is working perfectly, the sensation is so keenly delightful as to be almost beyond description," Wilbur told a New York Herald reporter in 1906.

"More than anything else, the sensation is one of perfect peace, mingled with excitement that strains every nerve to the utmost, if you can conceive such a combination."

Orville wrote in the brothers' first official description of powered flight:

"The ground under you is at first a perfect blur, but as you rise the objects become clearer. At a height of one hundred feet you feel hardly any motion at all, except for the wind which strikes your face. If you did not take the precaution to fasten your hat before starting, you probably have lost it by this time."

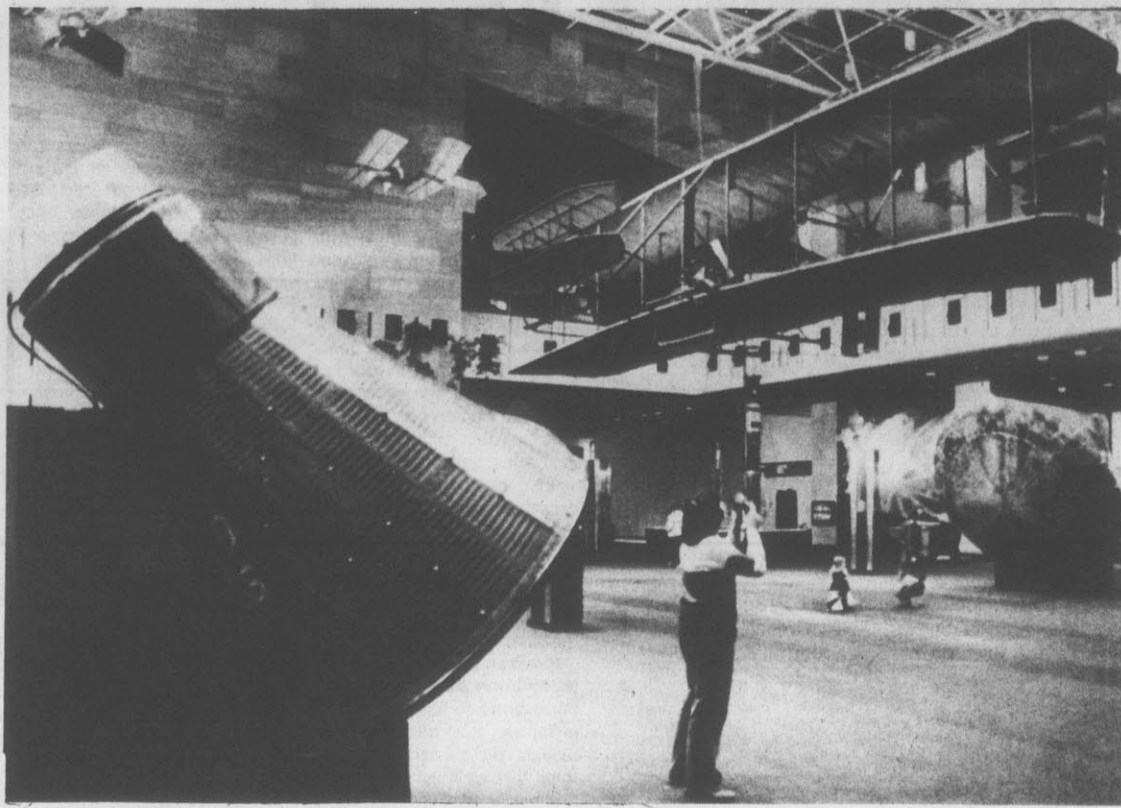

Yet the Wrights maintained such secrecy, barring all but a few witnesses and refusing to release photographs, that the world doubted their mastery of flight and gave its applause to the less-polished exploits of others until Wilbur staged a stunning public demonstration at Le Mans, France, Aug. 8, 1908.

Their achievement — not just on the sandy dunes of Kitty Hawk, but in mapping the course of aviation development worldwide — is all the more impressive for the short time in which the Wrights played an active role.

Wilbur made his final major flight Oct. 4, 1909, just six years after the initial triumph at Kitty Hawk, and died of typhoid fever in 1912.

Orville virtually dropped out of the tumultuous new world of flight after his brother died, selling the Wright airplane company to a syndicate of eastern businessmen, and remained a near-recluse until his own death in 1948.

Success came to the Wright brothers as a result of dogged trial-and-error testing, a willingness to take calculated risks and a large measure of good luck.

They tested gliders at Kitty Hawk in 1900, 1901 and 1902 — launching repeated short flights with a catapult; often crashing into the soft sand, but without serious injury; returning each year to Dayton to build a better craft — before they mastered the secrets of flight.

Consider their breakthrough achievements.

—Control in flight, the key to piloting.

At a time when others shaped glider wings like the wings of birds or bats, Wilbur figured out by watching pigeons and then buzzards that "warping" one wingtip up and the other down was the way to keep a flying machine's wings level.

The secret of transforming that idea into mechanical reality with wires and pulleys came as Wilbur twisted a flimsy cardboard box from which he had just taken an innertube patch. One side went up when the other went down, just as biplane wings later were to do.

Wing-warping was one of the Wrights' most closely guarded discoveries, freezing the design of aircraft for years after they got a patent. Today's ailerons are a direct descendent of that concept.

The brothers also developed a front-mounted elevator to force their craft's nose up and down, achieving horizontal stability.

Yet wing-warping and an elevator were not enough. On the train back to Dayton at the end of the 1901 tests, a discouraged Wilbur told his brother if man ever did fly "it would not be within our lifetime ... not within a thousand years!"

Back home, however, after months of thought, Wilbur realized a moveable, rear-mounted rudder must work in tandem with wing and elevator adjustments to achieve coordinated, banked turns.

It was a revolutionary concept. Other experts of the time, ignoring the fact that birds banked their wings in turns, believed the rudder should simply swing the tail of the plane around in a clumsy flat turn.

—Lift, the secret of carrying a payload.

The wings of the Wright gliders in 1900 and 1901 were shaped according to air pressure tables worked out by Lillenthal and accepted the world over. Wilbur and Orville discovered they not only failed to achieve the lift theoretically possible, but at some angles of flight the wings seemed to lose all lift.

The brothers agonized over the problem for months. Wilbur built a rough wind tunnel in the fall of 1901 and tested some 150 tiny hand-made wings, carefully recording the behavior of each at various angles of flight.

Wilbur found Lillenthal's tables, based on averages taken from a few shapes and flight angles, were full of errors. The Wrights, on the other hand, tested every major wing shape that was to be used until the era of jets ushered in a need for new calculations.

On Oct. 10, 1902, in perhaps 30 glider flights incorporating their wing shape discoveries and rudder, Wilbur and Orville finally conquered the air — smoothly banking left and right, making quarter-turns and half-turns, even landing across the wind rather than facing into it.

All that remained was to give their glider a power plant.

—Propulsion, the way to stay aloft.

Perfecting propellers to link to the engine proved even more difficult. They first planned to base their air propeller on the theory of marine propeller design. But they found marine propellers were haphazard screws made without any scientific theory because high efficiency was not required for ships.

They then applied the formulas they had worked out for wings, reasoning that a propeller in effect would be a spinning vertical wing. The result, carved from wood, was a basic propeller shape that was to endure for years.

The value of their painstaking work was dramatically demonstrated in a sudden, tense race for the honor of making the first flight.

While the Wrights were at Kitty Hawk, solving last-minute problems with their Flyer, Professor Samuel Langley tried twice to launch his own flying machine from atop a houseboat on the Potomac River in Washington. Both times Langley's craft failed, the victim of inadequate lift and propulsion.

Eight days after Langley's second failure, the Wrights met their historic success.

Even though the ingredients were all there on Dec. 17, 1903, it was a giant step from those first four flights at Kitty Hawk to the reality of flight we know today.

First, the Wrights had to give themselves the world's first piloting lessons.

"It is possible to fly without motors, but not without knowledge and skill," Wilbur later said. "A thousand glides is equivalent to about four hours of steady practice, far too little to give anyone a complete mastery of the art of flying."

As with their earlier work, the brothers chose to perfect their flying in secret. They flew and flew at Huffman's Pasture outside Dayton, trying to stay below treetop level and landing whenever a trolley was due on a nearby track.

Reporters were kept away by the simple dodge of staging a few initial flights that were deliberate duds, causing interest to wane rapidly. Only a few carefully chosen witnesses, sworn to silence, were allowed. Cameras, save for the Wrights' own, were barred.

Those years of work started with an improved version of the Flyer that still was good for little besides short, straight-line flights. They ended with a larger, more refined craft able to remain aloft for more than half an hour at a time, banking and turning, flying in figure-eights, copying the birds — the first practical airplane.

The pilot still lay on his stomach on the lower wing. But relatively minor changes let the pilot sit upright on the wing with a passenger beside him.

There were many crashes, some serious. But Wilbur's philosophy of aviation safety, perhaps the first in the world, prevailed.

"I do not intend to take dangerous chances, both because I have no wish to get hurt and because a fall would stop my experimenting, which I would not like at all," he said.

But he also said: "If you are looking for perfect safety, you will do well to sit on a fence and watch the birds. But if you really wish to learn, you must mount a machine and become acquainted with its tricks by actual trial."

Once Wilbur began demonstrating the improved Flyer in France, with Orville showing it off simultaneously in the United States, aviation developed with a gusto.

Flight at first belonged to daredevils, the handful of "Early Birdmen" who went up before 1916. They showed their skills at gala airshows and in individual feats — French pilot Louis Bleriot's crossing of the English Channel July 25, 1909, and Wilbur's 20-mile flight over warships and pleasure boats in the Hudson River at New York Oct. 4, 1909.

World War I took the airplane into combat, though the little Fokkers, Sopwiths and Jennys with their fabric skins did little to change the course of battle. But they did produce some heroes and produced many new aviators.

Peacetime saw the birth of the first airlines, the first transatlantic flight by a Navy flight boat in 1919 and Charles Lindbergh's historic, non-stop solo across the Atlantic in 1927. The biplane gave way to craft with a single pair of wings. Helicopters and even the first rudimentary jet were designed.

With World War II came routine use of metal aircraft skins and decisive use of military air power. The aircraft industry learned mass production and gave birth to what became perhaps the world's most durable airliner, the DC-3.

The return of peace saw airlines shrink the globe — triple-tailed Lockheed Constellations, then subsonic jetliners, finally the Concorde SST.

Reaching higher, men flew around the moon just 65 years after the Wright triumph at Kitty Hawk and landed there a year later. Now, in the space shuttle, the first space-going airplane is being readied for its maiden voyage next year.

Yet the continuing dream of flight is not solely one of high technology.

It was only last year, that designer Paul MacCready and pilot Bryan Allen gave the world its first man-powered airplane — the plastic-covered, pedal-powered Gossamer Condor that stayed aloft 7 1/2 minutes. Next year they will try to cross the English Channel with an improved craft christened the Gossamer Albatross.

Through each of those craft, the spirit of Wilbur and Orville Wright remains alive.

"All modern flight control comes directly from the Wrights, and this was their greatest contribution to aviation," said Wright historian Charles Gibbs-Smith of the Smithsonian's Air and Space Museum and the Science Museum of London.

Holiday Flying: Traumatic Now, Will Get Worse

By DAVID SMOTHERS
UPI Senior Editor
CHICAGO (UPI) — The end of August was terrible. Thanksgiving weekend was an atrocity, Christmas and New Year's could be worse.

Air travel, particularly at peak periods such as these, is becoming a traumatic experience for many U.S. travelers.

"We've got a landslide of travelers — it's going to get worse," Chicago Commissioner of Aviation J.P. Dunne said. He runs O'Hare International Airport, the world's busiest air depot, and he should know.

"We've had 5 million more people coming through this year. Once off the ground you're OK. In the airport it's stand in line, stand in line, wait. Even in the coffee shop. That day of gracious flying is gone. We've got a different breed of passengers."

It would be hard to blame the airlines. All they are doing is offering the public a bargain — discount fares that cut the regular cost as much as 70 percent. Trans World Airlines, through February and March, will even allow children to fly for free.

The public is buying it. Consequently, major airports are jammed, lines at ticket counters, check-in points and baggage pickups stretch to the point of distraction, passengers despair of making connecting flights, and many of those who finally struggle aboard a plane find themselves packed into an area comparable to the old steerage class of ocean liners.

Christmas is the second busiest time of the year for airlines. The first is the end of August, when students hurry back to school and their fathers hurry back from vacation to their jobs.

The Air Transport Association, an aviation trade organization, said this Christmas season — Dec. 22 to Jan. 2 — will be a crusher. Airlines are geared to carry 9 million passengers, a million more than last year for the same period.

In between times, things are likely to be almost as bad. Planes will be late. Getting to and from the airport may be a torture on inadequate expressways.

Stewardesses, who used to pamper you, may be harassed and even surly because they have a full house, more passengers than they can handle.

Airport officials will protest they are already handling tens of thousands more people than their plants were designed for. Airline spokesmen will apologize, while their companies enjoy one of the greatest surges of passengers in their history.

A lot more people will fly and some may get mad. The men and women who regularly travel the airlines will get the maddest.

A much traveled and quite disgruntled Chicago executive said, "It's the amateurs who cause the trouble — the people who used to ride Greyhound but can afford to fly now."

"They don't know how to fly. They don't know how to get from gate to gate. There's lines at the ticket counter, lines just to get through the X-ray, lines at the check-in counter where people stand asking idiotic questions while people with tickets in their hands stand in a line and wait."

"I think the Greyhound bus people could do something if they ran buses that catered to executives, served you drinks and food and charged you for it. For a three-hour trip, it would be a lot better."

To such sentiment, Daniel Mahoney, director of reservations and passenger services for United Airlines, responded, "We have to expect it. With the discount rates, the passenger rate is above all the industry forecasts. We didn't have that great a crystal ball."

"Any time there is bigness and growth, quality may suffer. But this is the greatest bargain in the country today ... if you have a little faith in the free enterprise system."

Free enterprise, it seems, is largely to blame for crowding the airways and stacking up trouble for anyone planning to fly back home this holiday season.

It used to be that the Civil Aeronautics Board told airlines just where they could fly and how much they could, or could not, charge their passengers.

Now, under a deliberate policy of the Carter administration, the CAB is backing off, withdrawing from rigid regulation as much as it can. So the airlines, in the true spirit of free enterprise, are offering any bargain they can think up to break even while they get people into the flying habit.

Alan Pollock, a CAB spokesman in Washington, said, "The Congress and the government have given the airlines a vast new amount of flexibility with which managements are just beginning to make decisions. So in the end you've got more flexibility for the management of the air carriers and more flexibility for the customer. The consumer now has more of a choice as to how he wants to fly."

All of which means, right now, you can fly considerably cheaper and get somewhat less, particularly over the holidays.

The meals may be cold and more tasteless than ever. The drinks, for those who want them, may come late. Arm space in the economy section, where the bargain hunters ride, may be so restricted as to invite a rapid distaste for the person sitting next to you — and vice versa.

In Atlanta, the nation's second busiest airport and possibly its most difficult, travelers complain service is down and baggage handling so sluggish they just carry it on themselves.

"We're running out of room here," said airport spokesman John Braden. "We're approaching an era in which we're going to have to make a choice of who can land here."

Ray Silvius of Western Airlines in Los Angeles leveled about travel prospects for the next two weeks and longer.

"We're going to be moving back into another period of density for the industry during the holiday season," he said, "and it will be as bad or worse than the peak August traffic. As we bring the prices lower, some of the services will have to give."

Joe Daley, a Continental vice president in Los Angeles, said, "There's a lot of people who have never flown before who don't know what to expect and they complain. We're moving more people but I think we're coping very well."

At New York's Kennedy International Airport at the height of the Thanksgiving rush, few economy fare passengers complained, although some businessmen who traveled full fare did. So did customers who had to wait 50 minutes or more on the telephone to get a reservation.

George Minichiello, CAB New York field representative, recalled a businessman who wanted to take his wife along to Los Angeles and back. She got an economy fare, buying her ticket 30 days in advance as required. He could not because his company would not buy a ticket that far ahead.

So, she sat in one compartment and he in another. The husband, who had tried to get her ticket upgraded, called it "a stigma against persons trying to fly at the most economical rate."

There are many other cities weathering the travel glut without undue discomfort. One is Des Moines, Iowa, where Bob Ellison, acting director of the airport, said everything was running "fairly smooth."

The airport could use more space, he said, and the lines at the ticket counters were a little longer. But it looks like the airport will be able to handle things at least through 1985, he said.

PASSENGER LINE-UP — The end of August was terrible. Thanksgiving weekend was an atrocity. Christmas and New Year's could be worse. "We've got a landslide of passengers — it's going to get worse", said the Chicago Commissioner of Aviation. He runs O'Hare International Airport where travelers are shown lining up at the ticket counters. (UPI Photo)

Speaking of Your Health...

Don't Hesitate to Question Doctor

My husband was taken to the hospital with a heart attack. The electrocardiogram did not show it, but the doctor said that "the enzymes were positive." I didn't understand it. I'm therefore asking you. — Mrs. W.W.J., Maine.

Dear Mrs. J.:

My immediate reaction to your letter is to comment on the inadequacy of a doctor-patient relationship that doesn't answer thoroughly all questions about the patient. Bear in mind that before a question is answered, it must be asked. Families at a high level of anxiety frequently do not follow this simple rule. And even if they do, that same state of anxiety sometimes makes it impossible for them to understand what the doctor is saying.

Doctors have only one guide as to whether their message and instructions are completely understood by the patient and his family. If patients do not ask questions, the doctor has a right to assume that no confusion exists.

Now, about the enzymes. These are special substances that are normally produced in the body. When there is the impact of a heart attack or other disorders, the enzyme levels increase and are used as a significant diagnostic tool.

Very often, a heart attack may show no electrocardiogram changes for the first 24 hours. Long before these changes are apparent, the enzyme levels rise to a point where the diagnosis can be made, even in the absence of electrocardiogram changes.

A number of these enzymes are known as SGOT, LDH and CPK. These letters represent the complex names of enzymes that are used for diagnostic purposes. Many new enzymes are constantly being discovered. These, when carefully evaluated, add helpful information for the diagnosis and early treatment of heart disease and other disorders.

I have an almost constant cold. My nose is always blocked solid. This goes on for months at a time. Is there any way of breaking up this unpleasant cycle? — Miss B.Z., Ill.

Dear Miss Z.:

It is difficult to believe that a cold can last for such a long time without progressing into a severe problem or disappearing entirely.

A bacterial infection does not behave in this way. The likelihood is that you are suffering from some form of allergy. A special type of nasal smear may show the presence of certain cells, "eosinophiles," which are characteristic of allergy.

In some instances, people with an underlying allergy may be more prone to bacterial infection. The study of the blood can clearly show if such an infection exists. X-rays of the sinuses may be of diagnostic significance. Smears and cultures of the nose and throat may also reveal persistent infection.

NEW YORK (AP) — The tradition of the poinsettia as a plant symbolic of the Christmas season in the United States stems from a Mexican legend which tells of the custom in a certain village of placing gifts before the church's creche on Christmas Eve.

According to the legend, a small boy, with nothing to give, knelt to pray in the snow outside. In the spot where he knelt, a beautiful plant with scarlet leaves grew immediately; and he presented it as his gift to the infant Jesus.

The Mexicans called the plant Flor de la Noche Buena (Flower of the Holy Night). It was introduced to the United States in 1828 by Dr. Joel Roberts Poinsett, first U.S. minister to Mexico.

The story of how the poinsettia got its name, along with the history of the Christmas tree, the Yule log and the holly bush, is one of the seven holiday aspects covered by the "Story of Christmas" exhibit at the Kodak Gallery in mid-Manhattan through Jan. 7.

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K8 ♥K10763 ♦Q85 ♣732
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♠ Dble. Pass 1 ♥
 Pass 2 ♥ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—By first doubling and then raising your suit when you have promised nothing, partner shows a good hand, the equivalent of at least 16 points. In hearts, your hand is worth 10 points—you must add a point for the fifth heart. Since that should be enough for game, don't put any strain on partner. Raise to four hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠6 ♥AQ84 ♦AKJ872 ♣95
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
 A.—Double. Your hand is just too good for an overall of two diamonds, which also runs the risk of losing the heart suit. A double leaves you well placed—it partner bids hearts, you can raise; if he bids clubs, you can correct to diamonds at the same level. Either way, you will have described your hand quite accurately.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ94 ♥AQ107 ♦95 ♣K62
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♦ Dble. Pass 2 ♣
 Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Pass. There is no reason to presume that you can make game or that you have any better contract than two clubs. Partner had the chance to show a major suit in response to your takeout double, but he did not. Therefore, it's reasonably safe to assume that he does not have a major, which makes it more likely that he holds five clubs.

Q.4—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K62 ♥AKJ93 ♦AJ5 ♣95
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♠ Dble. Pass 1 ♥
 Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Partner's response comes as a pleasant surprise, but that does not mean that you have to resort to dramatic action. A quiet raise to two hearts is all your hand is worth—the reply to question No. 1 tells you why.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠72 ♥Q98643 ♦82 ♣1072
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 3 ♠ 4 ♣ Pass 5 ♥
 Pass 5 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—It sounds as if partner has a mammoth minor two-suiter, and is asking you to choose between diamonds and clubs. Since you have a clear preference, bid six clubs. If partner's cue-bid was based on heart support, he will correct.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠84 ♥J9842 ♦AK72 ♣72
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South
 1 ♥ 5 ♣ ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Despite the fact that you have five-card support for partner's suit, there is no valid reason to think that he can take eleven tricks at a heart contract. You rate to have two certain tricks on defense, and even if your side doesn't score a single heart trick, partner should be able to contribute at least one other defensive trick, if no more. Double and be content with a small profit.

Q.7—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A76 ♥Q8 ♦K1062 ♣A1054
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with three hearts. What action do you take?
 A.—Pass. Don't assume that someone is trying to pick your pocket just because he preempts. You have only 13 points in high cards, and 2 of those—the queen of hearts—rate to be useless. Even though opener is weak, his partner may have a fair hand, and you don't have enough to force your side to enter the auction at this high level.

Q.8—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠Q6 ♥K83 ♦AQJ72 ♣QJ5
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East

1 ♦ 1 ♥ 1 ♠ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—This is a close decision between rebidding your diamonds or showing your trump. Since your hand is essentially balanced (it contains no singleton and only one doubleton), we think the one no trump rebid is more descriptive.

Shakespeare Festival Is Designed For Fun

By PETER J. BOYER
 AP Television Writer
 LOS ANGELES (AP) — National Public Radio's Shakespeare Festival — is a fun way to spend an evening. Unless, of course, you've got some clean socks that need to be rolled.

With all that good TV silliness available to sedate the work-weary mind, radio Shakespeare seems a bit rigorous. I mean, why listen to forsooth noise when you can see Laverne and Shirley?

But Zounds! The good folk at NPR promise light entertainment, even fun and some chuckles, with their two-hour, four-part "Shakespeare — a Portrait in Sound." It's now in production and scheduled for airing on NPR stations early next year.

Of course, "Shakespeare can be fun" is a phrase not to be completely trusted. It's often uttered by craggy-faced literature professors just before they assign the tragedies and "Troilus and Cressida" for next Tuesday.

But there is reason to trust Robert Montigel, executive producer for the "Portrait in Sound" project, when he says, "We want to be light entertainment with this project, not just get some academic to give a lecture on William Shakespeare."

For one thing, the portraits are not Shakespearean readings but little radio dramas that surmise what Shakespeare's life must have been like from childhood to the easy life of retired poet.

Modern American Man, played by Arthur Hill, is taken on a time-journey to Olde England in search of the true William Shakespeare. Hill goes first to Stratford, where Shakespeare spent his youth, then to London and the Court of Queen Elizabeth, where Shakespeare quickly learned to be a political creature.

"It's the life and times of William Shakespeare," Montigel says, "and what we don't know about him, we conjecture. It's fleshing him out in a colorful way."

ches for women's slipper or 7 inches for man's slipper. End with the completion of row 2 of the pattern.

Then for the toe section, work as follows for two inches. Row 1: Purl 10 (12), knit 9 (11), purl 10 (12). Row 2: Knit all stitches. Repeat these two rows for the two inches, ending with the completion of row 1 of pattern.

Now decrease by working one row as follows: Knit 7 (9), slip 1 stitch, knit 1, pass the slipped stitch over the knit stitch, knit 2 together, knit 7 (9), knit 2 together, slip 1, knit 1, passed the slipped stitch over, knit 7 (9). On the next row, purl 9 (11), knit 7 (9), purl 9 (11).

For the final row, knit 6 (8), slip 1, knit 1, pass slipped stitch over, knit 2 together, knit 5 (7), knit 2 together, slip 1, knit 1, pass slipped stitch over, knit 6 (8). Bind off, leaving an eight or nine inch length of yarn.

Thread a tapestry needle with this length of yarn. Fold the piece in half lengthwise and gather tightly the stitches of the toe end (the end which was just bound off.) Then sew together the two inches of the toe section to form the instep.

Sew together the folded cast-on edge for the heel section. After this is done, you may want to single crochet around the top of the sock. Add another row of double crochet or make a scalloped edge by crocheting a shell stitch row. Top each sock off with a fat pompon if you wish.

If you want to use up leftover yarns, you can use contrasting colors for the two strands of yarn or make the toe sections in one color and the heel sections in another. I figure that it takes about two ounces of yarn for one pair of slippers. — HELEN W., ARVADA, COLORADO.

Fiedler Grouses Song Is Off-Key

BOSTON (AP) — Arthur Fiedler was celebrating his 84th birthday in a hospital bed, but he wasn't about to relax his critical ear.

"You're all flat," groused Fiedler Sunday as his wife and friends — led by assistant Boston Pops conductor Harry Ellis Dickson — sang a chorus of "Happy Birthday."

Fiedler is recuperating from brain surgery at Tufts New England Medical Center. The maestro, dressed in a bright Japanese kimono, sat up in bed and sampled smoked fish, beer, caviar, champagne and fresh strawberries.

Fiedler underwent surgery Monday to relieve an accumulation of fluid on the brain, a condition that impaired his walking. A hospital spokesman said Fiedler was steadily improving but it was not known how soon he would be released.

Pre-Christmas Service Friday

Elder Charlie Wilson will speak at Little Creek F. W. B. Church Friday, Dec. 22, 7:30 p.m.

'Play Market' For Zoo Needs

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ed Maruska plays the stock market, the livestock market, that is. And when the new president of the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums talks about the value of gorillas, bongos and lions, people listen.

The animal market, like the stock market, operates in a state of flux. Animals become more expensive or less expensive because of their availability or the cost of transporting them from another country.

"Pygmy hippos used to be hard to find. Now it's hard to give them away," said Maruska, director of the Cincinnati Zoo.

The difference is that they have adjusted so well to breeding in zoos that the law of supply and demand has lowered the price.

The same thing has happened to black rhinos. It used to cost $12,000 to get one. Now, it's down to $6,000.

Each month, Maruska's association puts out an animal exchange list where zoos offer animals for sale and say what they want in exchange.

In the most recent list, the Los Angeles Zoo is offering a black rhino for $3,500. That's a bargain compared to the Oklahoma City Zoo which is also offering a black rhino for sale for $7,500.

Zoo directors often shop around for the best buy in gazelle or ibex, and sometimes they use the list to see just what the market is for a certain animal.

The New York Zoological Society is offering white-quilled black bustards for $100 each, while the Oklahoma City Zoo is offering an Asiatic elephant for $25,000.

Maruska says that pandas, because of the fact that they have not yet been bred in the United States, are one of the most desired animals for domestic zoos. Animals such as bongos — a variety of large African antelope — also demand a high price.

Bongos can sell for up to $40,000 apiece, said Maruska, or many zoo directors — if they don't need the money, would rather barter for another animal.

"I could get four giraffes and a pair of antelope for a bongo," Maruska said.

Some zoos specialize in breeding certain types of animals and may be in a better position on the animal market.

"Zoos have become producers as well as consumers of animals," Maruska said. "Zoos are like a bank. They are a repository to protect animals against natural disaster."

Belgium annexed the Independent State of the Congo in 1908.

'Vantage. I just won't compromise on taste.'

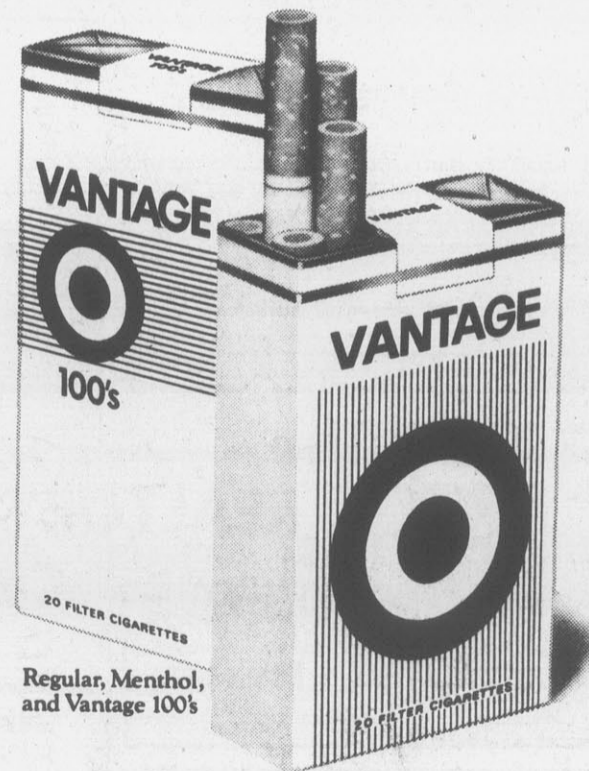

"I'm willing to make some concessions, but taste isn't one of them. Even though I've heard the tar stories, I still want a cigarette with good taste.

"That's why I'm glad I switched to Vantage.

"With Vantage, I get the taste I smoked for in the first place. And that wasn't easy to find in a low tar.

"For me, Vantage is the best tasting low tar cigarette there is."
