Snowstorm Hits Midwest

By United Press International

A howling snowstorm barrelled out of the Plains and into the Midwest Saturday, burying portions of Missouri and Kansas in deep snowdrifts, clogging Chicago with more than a half foot of snow and halting air and land travel.

The storm buried parts of Kansas and Missouri under nearly a foot of snow and wind gusts of up to 40 mph piled drifts three feet high, blocking many roads.

Snow fell in blinding clouds in Chicago, virtually shuting down O'Hare International Airport — the world's busiest—by midday.

Eight inches of snow had fallen by midmorning. Forecasters said the snowfall total was expected to reach a foot or more.

All airlines suspended operations at O'Hare. Airport officials said no flights were landing or taking off. Ground crews kept one of the airport's seven runways open but airport officials said: "If it's not used regularly we'll have to close that one, too."

Winds up to 25 mph stacked up drifts across much of northern Illinois, making travel hazardous.

Rockford, Ill., police said drifting snow slowed traffic. Authorities said eight to 10 inches of snow had fallen by midmorning and that another 10 inches was expected before the storm moves out of the area.

Snow piled atop a layer of ice made roads especially dangerous in central Illinois, where the snowstorm followed freezing rain.

The storm swept across Iowa early Saturday, leaving four inches of snow in central sections of the state and shutting down the Des Moines airport for part of the morning. Strong, gusty winds produced near blizzard conditions in some areas.

The Kansas Highway Patrol reported blizzard conditions in much of the state and said nearly all main highways were closed at some point in the state.

"All travel in Kansas is discouraged," a spokesman said.

The Missouri Highway Patrol urged motorists to stay off Interstate 44 from St. Louis to Joplin and said roads in northwest Missouri were extremely hazardous.

Scattered power outages were reported in Columbia, Mo.

Agree On Council, Pave Way For Shah To Leave

By RAYMOND WILKINSON

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — The shah and Premier Shahpour Bakhtiar Saturday reportedly agreed on a nine-member Regency Council to replace the shah and pave the way for his imminent departure from Iran.

The state-run Iranian radio named Bakhtiar, the armed forces chief of staff and seven others who would make up the council. It said an official announcement "is expected within the next few hours."

The leaders of the two houses of parliament, the shah's court minister and four "elderly personalities" will make up the seven other members of the council, it said.

In Tehran, several hundred thousand anti-government demonstrators marched peacefully through the capital chanting "victory is near" and "death to the shah." There were no reports of violence and many banks, shops and businesses opened for the first time in weeks.

Streets in the capital, which had been empty and deserted for days, were again suddenly clogged with bumper-to-bumper traffic.

In Paris, the shah's No. 1 enemy, Shiite Moslem leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, said he would likely return to Iran as soon as the shah leaves and said he would "direct and supervise" the new government.

Premier Shahpour Bakhtiar made a fresh attempt to save his beleaguered government as the demonstrators called for his and the Shah's downfall — urging Iran's senate to back his program of wide-ranging liberal reforms designed to end the current chaos.

Elsewhere in the country, however, industrial chaos continued. Two huge copper and steel plants were paralyzed through lack of fuel. Telex facilities were severed. Striking customs officials warned they would boycott all goods bound for American, British and Israeli nationals and their embassies because those countries supported the shah.

The afternoon newspapers in Tehran reported the regency council which would replace the shah had at last been formed, apparently after talks between the shah and his premier.

The news reports, which were not officially confirmed, said the regency council would include Bakhtiar, the chief justice, the army chief of staff, the leaders of the two houses of parliament and other notables.

Constitutionally the council would advise Bakhtiar's government but was expected to have little real power after the shah's departure.

Establishment of the council was a necessary constitutional step before the 59-year-old shah could leave Iran for an already announced "vacation."

The shah's departure, which many observers predicted could be permanent and effectively bring to an end Iran's Peacock throne, was expected within the next few days.

After several days of comparative calm, anti-government and anti-shah demonstrators jammed Tehran's downtown university and later marched through the streets of the capital. Iran radio said some 400,000 persons took part in the demonstration.

UNC Board Advised

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina Board of Governors has been advised that the results of the competency tests taken by some 80,000 high school juniors in November may have negative as well as positive effects.

Dr. James Gallagher, professor of education at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and chairman of the Competency Test Commission, said the failure rate — one out of six — could cause over-emphasis on basics at the expense of other important areas of study.

Gallagher, who had a significant part in framing the two sections of the test — reading and mathematics — said Friday there is a danger, for example, that local school systems might decide to substitute a remedial reading teacher for an art teacher.

Gallagher maintained that this would not necessarily be wise, and he expressed the hope that, in time, educators would recognize and achieve the proper balance.

He said the direct implications for the 16-campus university system include a review of the education prospective teachers are getting as well as intensified research in this area.

Noting that one student out of six failed, with more failing in mathematics than in reading, Gallagher acknowledged that the tests were comparatively simple and uncomplicated.

He pointed to the "shocking" failure rate in the test given last spring to 11th graders — this year's seniors. In that test, 19 percent scored below 70 on the reading section and 54 percent on the mathematics section.

He said results of the revised test given the seniors last fall showed a major improvement, which he credited to remedial instruction.

Brewery Taking Land Options

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — The Adolph Coors Co. says it is taking options on land in both Virginia and North Carolina as possible sites for what would be its first brewery outside of Colorado.

Lowell C. Sund, a Coors senior vice president, said Friday his firm did not want to unnecessarily raise the hopes of persons in those states since no final decision had been made to build a second brewery.

"State and local officials in both states have been encouraging to us, but it may be years before we make a decision," Sund cautioned.

Rolls-Royce Looking At Carolinas

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Rolls-Royce Inc. is considering building a manufacturing plant in North Carolina or South Carolina, according to published reports.

"We are looking in the Southeast, but at the moment, no decision has been made on a site or the size it might be," said Michael Jolley, director of public relations for the firm once known for its luxury automobiles and currently an aircraft engine manufacturer.

Rolls-Royce Inc. is the American marketing and support arm of Rolls-Royce Ltd., which manufactures a broad line of gasoline engines, including several types of aircraft engines and parts.

The Charlotte News said Rolls-Royce has narrowed its sites to a few locations in the two states, with Charlotte among possible sites.

North Carolina Weather

By United Press International

Rising temperatures Saturday began removing a coating of ice left by an ice storm that caused at least five traffic deaths in North Carolina, but another weather system moved over the coast, battering the Outer Banks with over five inches of rain and flooding some roads.

Gale warnings were posted for offshore waters.

The National Weather Service reported water was covering sections of N.C. Highway 12 between Oregon Inlet and the town of Hatteras on Hatteras Island but the Dare County Sheriff's Department was unable to confirm the report.

On adjoining Ocracoke Island, a dispatcher for the Ocracoke Fire and Rescue Service said N.C. 12 was under water.

"There's a lot of water on the road, right before you get into the village (of Ocracoke, a foot or two," he said. "It's not the tide, it's just the rainwater."

The spokesman said the highway was "like a gutter" filling up with water from rains that began Friday.

Over Half Of Advisory Committee Resigns After Carter Fired Abzug

By GAIL GREGG

WASHINGTON (UPI) — More than half of President Carter's women's advisory committee resigned Saturday to protest the president's firing of co-chairwoman Bella Abzug, charging that Carter thinks "women should be seen but not heard."

Ms. Abzug called her abrupt dismissal "quite crude" and "totally shocking" and said, "I can't believe he thought this through."

The outspoken committee leader was summoned to presidential aide Hamilton Jordon's office Friday after the 40-member National Advisory Committee for Women had just met for the first time with Carter.

She was praising the session with Carter when Jordan asked her to resign.

Ms. Abzug was joined at Saturday's hastily called news conference by a dozen of the 20 committee members who quit "in solidarity" with her.

A committee official said she believed another eight members would resign, which would raise the protest defections to 28 of the 40 members.

The White House had no immediate comment on the mass resignations.

"We are deeply shocked at the president's unwarranted dismissal of our co-chair, Bella Abzug, who has acted at the direction and interests of the full committee," the resigning members said in a statement typed on the letterhead stationery of the committee.

"We regret the necessity to resign, but we see no alternative. We believe that all women and men of like mind will refuse to participate in an advisory committee in which disagreement with the president and legitimate criticism are not acceptable."

Carter appointed the panel six months ago to continue the work of the 1977 government-sponsored National Women's Conference in Houston, Texas.

It came quickly into conflict with Carter, canceling its first scheduled meeting with him last November in a huff because he had allotted the group only 15 minutes of his time.

The meeting that preceded Abzug's firing — during which Carter reportedly told the women confrontations would hurt their mutual efforts — ran about an hour.

One by one Saturday, leaders of some of nation's most powerful women's groups ticked off their reasons for leaving the committee.

—"To be effective, an advisory committee must be outspoken and bold," said Arlie Scott, vice president of the National Organization for Women. "Obviously the president believes women must be seen and not heard."

—"Our position at the back burner of the administration's priorities has been most disturbing," said League of Women Voters Vice President Nancy Neuman.

—"There was no choice but to recognize that the effectiveness of the committee had been destroyed," said National Association of Business and Professional Women President Piilani Desha.

—"The principles and purposes of this committee have been violated," charged National Women's Political Causus President Mildren M. Jeffrey.

The charges were accompanied by warnings.

Ms. Magazine editor Gloria Steinem, the only non-committee member to speak at the session, said, "Now he is going to have to do something for us to get us to vote for him ... in order to make up for this extraordinary breach."

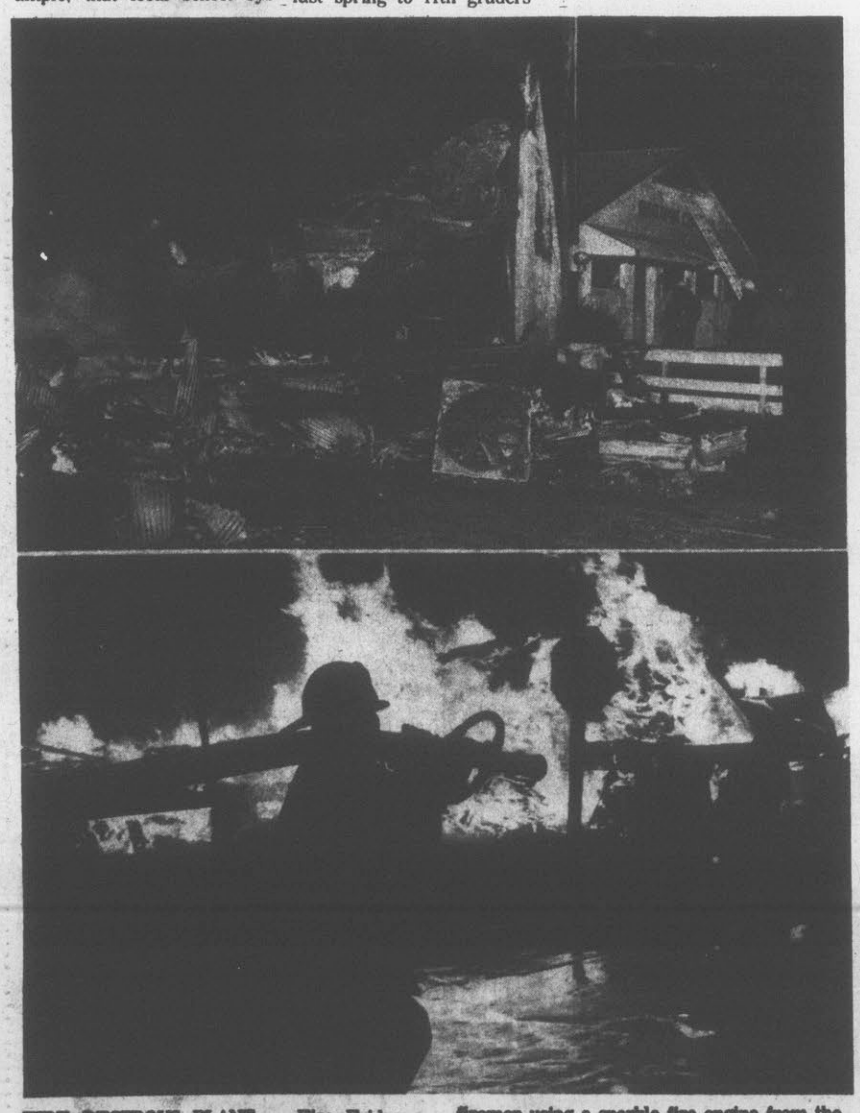

"We're going to increase our demands," Ms. Abzug warned. "We're not going to accept lip service anymore."

The White House was upset over a critical new release the committee prepared 24 hours in advance of the Friday meeting and over the "public flap" caused by the November meeting cancellation.

The news release said the administration's anti-inflation program would impose "additional burdens" on women by increasing unemployment and causing cutbacks in social programs.

FIRE DESTROYS PLANT — Fire Friday night destroyed the Edgecombe Casket Company in Pinetops. According to firemen on the scene, the alarm was sounded about 11 p.m. Firemen first arriving said the building was completely engulfed in flames and fell to the ground in about 30 minutes. An adjacent building, the Best Oil Co., was protected by firemen using a snorkle fire engine from the Tarboro Fire Dept. Nine fire departments fought the blaze in a driving rain and thick smoke. There is no estimate of damage available, and no report of injury. The manufacturing facility employed about 70 persons. (Reflector Photos by Tommy Forrest)

Angered

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP) — A judge has drawn the ire of feminists in dismissing a rape-related charge with purported remarks that women may encourage rape.

Allen Circuit Judge Hermann F. Busse dismissed a charge of attempted rape this week, reportedly saying that "if women want the protection of the law, they should quit trolling taverns."

He found Stephen J. Hanic Jr., 36, of Fort Wayne guilty of a lesser charge of battery against Melody Lehman, 27, also of Fort Wayne, in a non-jury trial.

Joan Uebelhoer, coordinator of a group called Fort Wayne Feminists, said Friday the organization will consider today whether to seek Busse's removal from the bench.

Under the Indiana Constitution, only the state Supreme Court has the authority to remove a circuit judge from office.

"His comments show why women are afraid to pursue rape cases," said Ms. Uebelhoer of 67-year-old Busse.

Melissa Ritchie, of the city's Rape Crisis Center said women have worked for years to dispel myths about rape, and "this man in one fell swoop has just undone all that work."

Mrs. Lehman charged Hanic tried to rape her when they stopped at his residence after she accepted his offer of a ride home from a bar.

In issuing his verdict Wednesday, Busse reportedly compared women visiting bars to meet men with "trolling, trying to get a fish on the end of a hook."

"It's like baiting a hook and trying to walk away from it," he was quoted as saying.

Fatal Error

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Two drivers who apparently mistook a boat ramp for a road in a heavy rainstorm drove their cars into Sarasota Bay, and four people drowned, police said today.

"We think one car was following the other one, and that the rain was so heavy they couldn't see where they were going," Lt. George Bell said.

The names of the four were withheld until relatives could be notified.

The boat ramp leads out of a parking lot near downtown Sarasota, with no barriers that would have kept the cars from the slope.

The cars were found in the bay — one completely submerged and the other with its roof above water — when a fishing party went to launch a boat before dawn, police said.

To End Border War, Negotiate Treaty

By ALAN DAWSON

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Vietnam and the new Cambodian regime installed by Vietnam's 20-day blitzkrieg announced Saturday their two leaders would meet "soon" in Phnom Penh to end officially their border war and negotiate a friendship treaty.

The Vietnamese-led juggernaut captured the last two major Cambodian cities still held by Khmer Rouge forces of the fallen Pol Pot regime, including the temples of Angor Wat.

UPI correspondent Paul Wedel, reporting from the Thai village of Klong Luek, just across from the Camodian border town of Poipet, said the sounds of artilley and gunfire could still be heard at the frontier.

Wedel said that neither Vietnamese nor Cambodian forces had yet reached the border and that it appeared the Vietnamese troops had stopped within earshot of the border in order to avoid fighting that could spread into Thailand.

Wedel also reported a mysterious, four-hour meeting that lasted into early Saturday in the Cambodian town of Poipet. A curtained limousine was sent to and from Poipet from Thailand, he said.

The meeting touched off speculation that more members of the fallen Khmer Rouge regime wished to flee Cambodia via Thailand, but there was no confirmation.

Former Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister Ieng Sary, No. 2 man in the defeated Khmer Rouge Cambodian administration, fled to China from Poipet last week through the Bangkok Airport.

Sary, who flew first to Hong Kong then drove to Canton and later flew to Peking, was expected to become a spokesman for the fallen regime of Pol Pot from exile in China.

In Peking, the New China News Agency reported that Sary held talks with Chinese leader, Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping, and that afterwards Teng hosted a banquet in Sary's honor.

The Chinese agency said Sary described how the Cambodian people "were fighting valiantly against the Vietnamese aggressors in all parts of the country."

However, the new official news agency of the pro-Vietnam Cambodian regime reported that both Battambang, Cambodia's No. 2 city, and Siem Reap had been "liberated."

The two cities were the last major holdouts to the Vietnamese-led invasion to overthrow the Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot.

Of the awe-inspiring, 12th Century sandstone temples of Angkor Wat, the new agency said authorities "immediately sent cadres into the Angkor area where they discussed steps to safeguard the historical reminders of the ancient culture of Cambodia."

There was no independent confirmation of the breakdown of defense forces at Siem Reap, three milles south of Angkor Wat, or at Battambang. Intelligence sources said there was fighting at both cities Friday.

The new regime's news agency, SPK, said Vietnamese and Cambodian leaders would meet in Phnom Penh "soon" in a summit meeting "to strengthen the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries, resolve the border war ... and to assist each other in national construction and defense."

Before the Vietnamese invasion which began Christmas Day, the two Southeast Asian neighbors had fought a series of border battles, blaming one another.

At a meeting in Hanoi Saturday, Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong and Cambodian official Ros Samay praised each other's country.

Radio Hanoi said both men pledged cooperation and added Vietnam and Cambodia wished peace in Southeast Asia.

U.S. Condemns Invasion

By MICHAEL ROSS

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The United States went before the United Nations Security Council Saturday to denounce Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia and demand the immediate withdrawal of Hanoi's troops.

U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young threw his support behind a long list of Western and nonaligned speakers who during three days of debate left no doubt that the majority favored a resolution condemning the Vietnamese invasion.

Speaking to reporters afterwards, Young went further, saying he thought there was a chance that the debate could put enough pressure on the Vietnamese to withdraw their forces from Cambodia.

"The next few days will tell, but I don't rule out their withdrawal," he said.

Young followed the tone set by other speakers, including Cambodia's Prince Norodom Sihanouk who came to the U.N. to defend the Khmer Rouge regime that kept him a virtual prisoner inside Cambodia for three years until its downfall last week.

Young said there was no doubt that the deposed Pol Pot regime had committed "some of the worst violations of human rights in history."

But the "essential fact was that the troops of one country are now occupying the territory of another. Vietnam must immediately withdraw its forces," he said.

Young said, that regardless of the claim by Cambodia's new government that it rules with the support of the people, "the facts are that it now rules thanks to Vietnamese bayonets."

The debate was recessed until Monday when the Council will have to decide whether to condemn the Vietnamese invasion and demand withdrawal of its troops as proposed in a Chinese resolution.

Can Flee

By RUTH YOUNGBLOOD

HONG KONG (UPI) — Vietnam Saturday called nationwide elections for the first time in two years and announced a "humane policy" that would allow Vietnamese "fooled by imperialists and reactionaries" to flee the country at their will.

Foreign Minister Nguyen Duy Trinh said many of the nearly 500,000 Vietnamese who have left the country since the Communist takeover in 1975 were "instigated and fooled by the imperialists and international reactionaries" — Hanoi's terms for the United States and China respectively.

He blamed the exodus on the "aggressive war and the neocolonialism regime which wrought havoc on South Vietnam" and said Hanoi's decision to let its citizens leave reflected a "humane state policy ... in accordance with Vietnam's laws."

For those staying behind, Hanoi announced voting on May 31 to elect officials for 2-year terms to the People's Councils — the first nationwide elections in two years. The councils, similar to local legislatures, serve city precincts, provincial capitals, districts and villages in all provinces and cities.

Trinh's announcement on refugees was viewed by many diplomatic observers as a turnabout in Vietnam's policy. They said it may open the country to a massive, orderly exodus in contrast to the helter-skelter escapes which have characterized the recent flight of refugees.

The country's present population is estimated between 40 to 50 million people and it was expected that at least 500,000 will depart under the new policy.

The outpouring of Vietnamese refugees since the Communists claimed victory in 1975 over the U.S. backed regime in Saigon has been recently marked by the tragic wandering of "boat people" — home-seeking Vietnamese traveling on cargo ships which have not been allowed to land in Malaysia, Hong Kong and the Phillipines.

New Attack By Pope

By ERNEST SAKLER

VATICAN CITY (UPI) — Pope John Paul II Saturday issued a new attack on abortion and divorce, calling for laws to protect the "rights" of unborn children.

The Polish pope, whose condemnation of Italian abortion and divorce laws has stirred protest among many Italians, raised the subject again in an address to the European Journalists' Committee for Children's Rights which asked him to speak at the beginning of International Children's Year.

"The Holy See thinks that one can speak of the child's rights since its conception, and chiefly of its right to life," the pope said. "Experience shows increasingly that children would have need for special protection, in fact and in law, since before birth."

In an indirect but clear condemnation of divorce, the pope added: "One could also insist on the child's right to be born into a true family, because it is of capital importance that he benefit since the beginning from the joint effort of the father and mother, united in an indissoluble marriage."

Retaining Penalties

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Despite the objection of the N.C. Consumers Council, the state Savings and Loan Commission decided on Friday to retain a rule allowing savings and loans associations to charge penalties for late mortgage payments by homeowners.

The consumers council and the attorney general's office had contended the rule was illegal.

S&Ls are allowed under the rule to charge up to $5 each time a consumer is late in making a monthly mortgage payment on a home loan.

Delays Forcing Competency Tests

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state has agreed not to force the issue of administering competency tests in Christian schools after a federal judge said he would set an early date for trial of the case.

After hearing arguments Friday, U.S. District Court Judge Franklin T. Dupree Jr. asked the state if it would agree to delay its attempted implementation of the tests if an early trial date was scheduled.

Dupree then postponed a ruling on the request by 63 Christian schools that are seeking to block the state from forcing the schools to administer the tests.

Andrew Vanore, senior deputy attorney general, said after the hearing that he was pleased that hearings will be held soon on the merits of the case. Both sides have 60 days in which to complete preliminary work on the case.

Four Counties Vote Approval

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Voters in the North Carolina counties of Wake, Durham, New Hanover and Onslow braved wintery weather to approve mixed drink sales Friday, eclipsing predictions of a low voter turnout.

Supporters in each of the areas said the approval would mean a boom to the local economies by encouraging hotel, motel and restaurant development.

Opponents took their lumps gracefully. The Rev. David Kime of Jacksonville said, "We can't win every one. There'll be another day."

Freezing rain and some ice in Wake and Durham counties, and chilly rain in Onslow and New Hanover counties appeared not to be a big factor in deterring voters. But one anti-liquor official said the weather kept voters home in rural areas, which are traditionally strongholds of the drys.

Wants Policies Beefed Up

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — The Coastal Resources Commission has been urged by a representative of the National Resources Defense Counil to beef up environmental protection language in three policies under consideration.

The representative, John Curry of Chapel Hill, was one of three speakers during a public hearing held Friday by the commission, which is considering proposals on ways to provide money for shoreline erosion projects, what access the public should have to beaches along the coast and how environmental considerations should be made for energy facilities.

The resources council is a national conservation group with about 35,000 members.

'Able To Work Together'

WASHINGTON (AP) — AFLCIO President George Meany says he and President Carter "will be able to work together much better" as the result of their latest face-to-face meeting.

The president and the nation's leading union official met for 90 minutes Friday — three times longer than scheduled — and Meany said the talks "cleared the air."

Meany has bitterly criticized Carter, at one point calling him the most conservative president since Calvin Coolidge. Friday's meeting was an attempt to soothe differences between the two.

"I think we will be able to work together much better after this meeting," said Meany, responding to reporters' questions after the White House visit.

Will Get Back Pay, Pension

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Gov. Marvin Mandel will get back pay and a full pension because an appeals court overturned a criminal conviction, but it's not likely his financial troubles will be resolved.

Mandel was suspended from office — without pay and other benefits — on Oct. 7, 1977, when he received a four-year sentence for a federal mail fraud and racketeering conviction.

But the benefits, including about $31,000 in back pay, were restored when his conviction was overturned Thursday by the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, state officials said.

Appointments Listed For Bundy, Roundtree

North Carolina House Speaker Carl J. Stewart, Jr., announced the appointments of Representatives Samuel D. Bundy of Farmville and H. Horton Roundtree of Greenville this week.

Bundy has been apponted to serve during the 1979 General Assembly as vice-chairman of the Committee on Education and State Personnel and as a member of the House Committees on Aging, Election Laws, Finance and Public Libraries.

Roundtree has been appointed to serve as a member of the House Committees on Banks and Thrift Institutions, Base Budget on Education, Commercial Fishing, Courts and Judicial Districts, Finance, Higher Education, Judiciary II, Public Utilities and Rules.

Roundtree was also re-elected for a second two-year term as N. C. House of Representatives Speaker Pro-tem.

GACC Annual Meeting Set

Buff Chalk, chairman of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce annual meeting committee, announced that final reservations should be made this week for the Chamber's Annual meeting to be held Tuesday, Jan. 23, 7 p.m., at the Greenville Country Club.

Harry Cowan, manager of the Southeastern Region of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, will be the guest speaker for the dinner meeting and will present the Chamber's Accreditation Award.

The Chamber will also honor the 1978 officers, retiring board of directors and committee chairmen.

1978 President Charles Burnette will present a slide presentation, "The Chamber's 1978 Annual Report." The presentation will include slides of many chamber leaders working together on chamber projects during 1978.

Other highlights will include entertainment by the Barbara Berry Singers and a message to the membership by 1979 Chairman of the Board Jerry Powell.

Tickets for the meeting are $12 per person, with a deadline for reservations by Jan. 19. All chamber members and spouses, as well as interested citizens, are invited.

Not A Lot Of New Material

The U. S. Surgeon General's office is out with a "new" report on the health effects of cigarette smoking.

The bulky report was unveiled by Department of Health, Education and Welfare Sec. Joseph A. Califano with great fanfare.

The report covered a lot of old ground, citing cigarette smoking involvement in lung cancer and heart disease.

The report swings a little wild, in our opinion, in citing cigarette smoking as "the single most important environmental factor" in contributing to premature death.

Does that rule out auto exhaust emissions, for instance? The careful scientists still recognizes that various air pollutants might well be contributing to lung cancer as much, or more so, as cigarette smoke. If that is so, then figures cited in the report, like smoking accounts for an estimate $5 to $8 billion in health care expenses, are meaningless.

There simply was not much new in the latest U. S. Surgeon General's report on cigarette smoking. The result is the rehashing of old information, on which further scientific investigation is still needed, to give Sec. Califano a grandstanding opportunity.

Perhaps the report might be more believable to the public if the secretary had taken a more statesmanlike stance on the subject in the past.

Instead he arrived in his post as HEW secretary swinging the axe at the tobacco industry. Any subsequent reports obviously would have to find the industry guilty. That clearly is not the way to develop public confidence in a report offered as based on unemotionally gathered scientific evidence.

Dry Year Boosted Ponds

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Usually, North Carolina's Healthy average rainfall of 48 inches a year keeps the state's farmers happy.

But dry years do come along, and 1978 was such a time. The need to irrigate tobacco, vegetables or other high income crops in such a dry spell keeps Tar Heel farmers in the lead in farm ponds.

This state now has 68,000. You've seen them everywhere across the landscape as you drive. They're used for swimming, fishing, boating as well as watering livestock and irrigating.

The past year saw a heavy demand for ponds says Jesse L. Hicks of Raleigh, head of the Soil Conservation Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Farmers asked SCS for technical assistance in increasing numbers, Hicks said.

Besides their immediate recreational and water supply value, the ponds serve another purpose: catching sediment from fields and preventing silt from washing into nearby streams. Many also provide a steady fresh water supply for farm families, or for fire protection.

Some 60 percent of the ponds in this state are fed by a stream or natural spring which has been dammed.

The remainder are excavated ponds which are usually smaller but also provide good water. The average pond is about an acre.

All across the state, soil conservationists estimate, the ponds are holding more than four billion gallons of water.

Let Us Do It

County commissioners across North Carolina have spelled out for members of the General Assembly a basic philosophy of government which reaches to the heart of the growing citizen dependence on governmental programs to solve all problems, and of expanding state and federal bureaucracies in response to that dependence.

Here is how the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners feel: "Leave to private initiative all the functions that citizens can perform privately;

"Use the level of government closest to the community for all public functions it can handle;

BILL NOBLITT

"Utilize cooperative intergovernmental agreements where appropriate to attain economical performance and popular approval;

"Reserve national action for residual participation where state and local governments are not fully adequate and for the continuing responsibilities that only the national government can undertake."

And in a clear signal to legislators that counties expect to begin expanding their authority and power to handle those local problems at home, the association's legislative goals call attention to the fact that, "Counties have a special responsibility as the only general purpose unit of local government that reaches all the people."

Open Meetings

Public officials in Raleigh and across the state are coming out strongly in favor of stronger open meetings laws requiring that all governmental business be done in public except rare cases where closed sessions would protect the public's interest.

But almost without exception, local municipal, county, and school board officials, along with a number of legislators, oppose an effort to attach strong penalties for violation.

Under present law, the only recourse is a court injunction after the fact. Proposals include criminal fines against offenders, or removal from the books of any action taken during an illegal closed session.

Either alternative is too harsh, say most elected officials.

Sunday Morning Notes

Your columnist sat at a local lunch counter Sunday morning a week ago.

A couple came in and sat nearby.

The man eyed the paper we had with us.

"Can I borrow your sports section?" he asked.

Then he explained, "I want to read about Wake Forest beating Maryland. They never won when I was up there."

In that case, be our guest.

Who knows? Maybe some Wake Forest players were nearby listening to the conversation.

At any rate, just to prove that it wasn't a fluke the Deacons went out on Wednesday night and knocked off the fourth ranked Tar Heels.

No doubt there was a run on newspapers by Wake Forest fans after that one.

The East Carolina Pirates were doing their bit to confound the experts that same night. They defeated Frank McGuire's South Carolina Gamecocks at Minges Coliseum.

The ECU-SC game was televised, at 7:30 with the UNC-Wake game coming on another station at 9 p.m.

Woody Crumpler and Malcolm Green carried a portable set to the game to monitor the telecast.

"We thought if this game was slow toward the end we would switch over and watch the UNC Wake game," said Green. But, he chuckled, the televison televison never got switched until the ECU-SC thriller was concluded.

With them was an obviously sick little girl.

"She's got a sore throat and a temperature," the father told the druggist, "and we've got 150 miles to go. Can you recommend anything?"

The sympathetic druggist, who had traveled with sick children himself, got up some non-prescription remedies for the youngster.

An orange-aid from the soda fountain was an obvious brightener for the child and the family was on its way.

Lives there a parent who somewhere along the way hasn't been faced with a similar situation?

55 Is Fading Dream

By MINDY YOCHELSON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Five years since the passage of the 55 mph national speed limit, highway speeds are increasing, despite well-publicized statistics that show 55 saves lives and fuel.

After World War II, highway deaths rose by an average 1,044 deaths a year, reaching a peak of 54,639 in 1973.

The National Highway Transportation Safety Administrtion reports that in 1974 — the first year the 55 mph speed limit went into effect — fatalities dropped by 9,353 or 16.8 percent.

But "the speeds are going back up and with it, the fatalities," said Lt. Gen. Benjamin O. Davis, Transportation Secretary Brock Adams' chief spokesman for 55.

For the first nine months of 1978, traffic fatalities were 36,548, compared to 35,015 for the same period in 1977 — up 4.4 percent.

"If this trend continues, we'll have 50,000 or more fatalities for the first time since 1973. It doesn't look good," said Robert Beasly, a spokesman for Adams.

The Federal Highway Administration said the average speed on 55 mph highways in 1974 was 57.5; 1975, 57.6; 1976, 58; 1977, 58.5; and for the first nine months of 1978, 58.8.

Gas consumption also is up — 8 percent over last year.

Despite the average highway speed increase, "the high speeds (over 65 mph) are pretty much gone," and the traffic flow has been more uniform, Davis said.

"When you have less cars darting in and out at varying speeds ... that's where your reduction in fatalities takes place," he said.

Department of Transportation experts blame the higher average speeds on new interstate highway systems, which make it easier and more tempting to drive fast, and on the fading memory of the oil

THE INSIDE REPORT

The Big SALT Gamble

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — A major concession to the Soviet Union that permits the results of test flights of Soviet strategic missiles to be partly concealed from the U.S. has raised a potent threat to President Carter's hopes for Senate approval of a new strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT II).

Still shrouded in official secrecy, the concession was agreed to by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance during his latest SALT talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Geneva three weeks ago. What makes it so serious is its effect on verification — the process by which the U.S. tries to prove or verify that the Russians are not cheating.

Thus, at stake is an extremely grave issue for Carter and his country: whether Moscow can get away with secret missile tests that could violate the treaty and endanger U.S. and Western safety, something neither Vance nor any other responsible official could conceivably wish to happen.

Verification will be the paramount issue in the Senate when the new SALT agreement is submitted for approval. If President Carter can make a strong case that SALT II is verifiable, Senate approval will still be difficult but perhaps attainable; if Carter cannot make a strong case, SALT II will go the way of the Versailles Treaty.

The concession made by the U.S. at Geneva permits the Russians to continue "encrypting" in secret code information routinely radioed to ground stations from a missile during its test flight. This information, known as telemetry, is radioed back to earth on 40 to 60 separate radio channels, one channel for each component of the missile, so that Soviet weapons experts can learn the test results.

By far the most important source of U.S. information on Soviet missilry is the test-flight telemetry picked up by U.S. satellites and other monitors as it is radioed back to earth. There was consternation three years ago when the Russians started encrypting test data from the medium-range SS-20 mobile missile — but that missile is not covered by SALT.

Last summer, however, the Soviets are known to have encrypted at least one test of their giant SS-18 intercontinental missile with 10 independently-targeted warheads. When the U.S. realized that SS-18 test data was being concealed, Central Intelligence Director Stansfield Turner went to Carter and, on the basis of highest national security, urged him to demand a halt. He produced prima facie evidence that the Russians had encrypted most of the 40 to 60 channels of test data radioed back to earth. Indeed, only four channels of this vital information could be "read" by U.S. monitors.

Carter ordered a formal complaint made to Moscow, but the Kremlin came back with an air of injured innocence: there is nothing in SALT I that prohibits encryption, they said.

Now, instead of demanding a complete halt to encrypting, the U.S. agreed at Geneva to ambiguous language allowing encryption except where the information put into secret code has a direct bearing on verification. That theoretically makes the Soviet Union its own policeman. Only the Soviets would know what secret performance data they are concealing, and they could conceal it by claiming it did not deal with specific weapons limitations imposed by the new treaty.

In the closed society of the Soviet Union, nothing is publicly revealed about weapons development. Thus, when the American theory of anti-cheating verification was first developed in 1972, it meant the right of the U.S., through electronic eavesdropping and any other monitoring devices, to establish the truth of Soviet claims about its own nuclear missiles.

But today, following the reign of Paul Warnke as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA), verification has been qualifed by the word "adequate." All that is now required is to assure that the U.S. will discover Soviet cheating before it has "significantly affected" the U.S.-Soviet strategic balance of power.

Vance's concession on encryption shows how far the word "adequate" allows the Soviets to go in concealing perhaps vital parts of their test programs. Even worse, SALT II does nothing to block two other ways in which the Soviets could thwart verifica-

Other Editors Say Pay-Off Counts

(The Charlotte Observer)

This is the season when politicians go globe-trotting.

State officials have been among this year's travelers. Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green spent two weeks on a trade mission to the Mideast, no doubt trying to talk Arabs into investing more oil money in North Carolina or buying N.C. goods. House Speaker Carl Stewart is just back from a tour of Moscow and other Russian cities (at his own expense). Howard Lee, state secretary of natural resources and community development, recently completed a 10-day trip to Nigeria.

Such travels can be useless junkets. Remember the Washington scandal a decade ago when House and Senate clerks refused to let reporters see expense vouchers of traveling congressmen?

But some of these travels may return dividends. A recent news story reported that North Carolina was 13th in the nation and No. 1 in the South in the export of manufactured goods. Last year, foreign countries bought $2.2 billion worth of products made here.

Cigarettes made up a good chunk of that, but the volume was so large it had to include a variety of other things. It's a potential market North Carolina might expand to considerable advantage.

After visiting Nigeria, for instance, Howard Lee came back vowing that with a little effort North Carolina could develop new markets for its seafood by establishing trade relations with that country. Last year North Carolina fishermen took 245 million tons of seafood from the state's coastal waters but exported none of it. Nigeria imports nearly 150 million tos of seafood, most of it from Great Britain. It also buys plenty of corn, soybeans and peanuts that North Carolina might sell.

40 Years Ago Today

January 14, 1939

The worst storm of the new year spread over the nation today with snow and sub-freezing temperatures from the Atlantic to the Rocky Mountains.

Strength For Today

THE MAKING OF A CHRISTIAN

The little tax collector, Zacchaeus, described by the evangelist Luke, is one of the most interesting figures in the Bible. Small in stature, disliked by everyone, he had great wealth, but it gave him no satisfaction.

But Jesus saw in this unhappy little publican the possibility of real manhood. When Jesus passed through Jericho, Zacchaeus, because he was small in stature, climbed a tree so that he could see the great man. Zacchaeus is a symbol of that person who, despite handicaps, will be great effort rise above the crowd in order to see his Lord.

Saints are sinners who keep trying. Jesus took an interest in Zacchaeus, and the little man responded. At the end of that eventful day he became a figure of such great unselfishness, mastered by such deep love, that Jesus spoke of him in terms of enthusiasm and praise.

Effective Insurance Technique

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — When the undertaker, the taxmen, the courts, the attorneys, and the creditors are through with the estate there might be little left for the heirs, said the insurance man.

Using an electronic computer, and the executive's current net worth, he showed that if the man were to die that day, "closing costs" would consume 38.2 percent of his $665,662 estate.

The result: Another million dollar whole life insurance policy was sold, almost guaranteeing that the executive's estate would pass intact to his family, and actually grow in the process.

The executive, age 50, or in some instances his company, would be charged about $30,000 a year in premiums, but dividends, averaging $9,000 a year over 20 years, would greatly ease the payment burden.

The insurance agent would be well paid — about $16,000 in the first year and $1,500 a year for the following nine years. Thereafter he might receiveh$500 a year for servicing the policy.

Happiest of all might be the life insurance company, which has found a growing market in big policies. In this case it was Massachusetts Mutual, but almost all other big insurers are sharing in the trend.

Whatever company is involved, the technique is similar, with the agent relying heavily on hypothetical, computer-produced probate of the individual's estate, using actual inventories of assets.

"After he catches his breath," says Dave Birkhaeuser, director of estate planning for Mass Mutual, "the client realizes how important estate planning is." The sale often follows immediately.

So effective is the technique, especially in times of inflation and high taxes, that the once illustrious Million Dollar Roundtable has lost its polish. A more exclusive club has been formed, The Top of The Table, made up of those who sell $5 million of insurance in a year. Mass Mutual alone sold more than 800 of the million dollarplus policies last year. While some covered the lives of housewives and children, the vast majority were on executive lives.

A growing number of these policy sales are for the sole purpose of providing estate liquidity, or to leave an estate intact for the deceased's heirs — 261 in 1977, and 310 or so last year.

Birkhaeuser is convinced the trend will continue, especially since many insurers have recently lowered prices and raised dividends, a result of lower than expected mortality, and business efficiencies.

Life insurance, Birkhaeuser says, may be a unique vehicle for preserving estates since it isn't subject to taxable gains taxes if the beneficiary is other than the deceased's estate.

To accomplish this, the policy owner must be other than the executive (otherwise a million dollar policy on a million dollar estate would make it a $2 million estate). Frequently, a wife or a business or an irrevocable trust is named both owner and beneficiary.

Set up this way, the heirs are immediately in a position to pay off creditors, federal and state taxes and professional fees without being forced to liquidate real assets, such as a business.

To the editor:

Since the Jonestown tragedy of which Jim Jones was the central focus, many thoughts have been expressed concerning the value of religion.

Cults, like the People's Temple, have abounded in this nation in recent years. People seek a purpose, a direction and the manner in which this direction may be achieved in their lives. Organized religion, the worship of a higher source — God, Allah, or whatever name — that each of us in order that we may improve individually and help others collectively, has this goal as its objective. When the formal structure of religion does not assist people in finding solutions to their problems, cults provide an alternative.

Another reason for which many people turn to cults is "preacher religion." Unlike Jim Jones, cases can be documented in which ministers brainwash congregations in providing monies and luxuries for them. Thousands, desirous of a more direct worship with their higher source, opt for cults where the religious practice, in their view, is uplifting, consistent, fair and honest.

The value of religion is as essential today as it was centuries ago. Our present culture desires meaning to and substance in this life. Cults will diminish when this quote from psychoanalyst Carl Jung is practiced: "Where love rules, there is no will to power!"

To the editor:

The General Board of the Baptist State Convention meets in Raleigh Jan. 30-32. The most important topic will be Wake Forest University. Since the Convention voted in November to let a committee continue studying the Wake Forest trustee selection issue, Wake Forest trustees voted recently to change their charter to permit them to select their own trustees.

Baptist leadership has reacted strongly on the surface. The president of our convention has called for a cutoff of funds to Wake Forest. The editor of our official Baptist newspaper has called for a special state convention. The committee instructed by the convention to study the overall relationship between our higher learning institutions and the convention recently voted to recommend to the General Board to place convention funds to Wake Forest in escrow until the large and far-reaching questions involved can be looked at long and carefully.

As a concerned Baptist who supports my state convention through the cooperative program, I trust the General Board will not be rushed into any premature action.

The General Board is the convention from one year to the next and I feel that, by calling the Baptists of this state together in special session to vote on such an emotional and misunderstood issue would be counter productive.

As I see it, we Baptists are faced with a much greater question than what to do with Wake Forest. We are going to have to face whether we are supporting our schools of higher learning enough to justify the convention's present arrangement of selecting each and every trustee and requiring them to be North Carolina Baptists.

Can our Baptist State Convention support these seven schools on our present meager level and really expect to completely control and dominate the selection of every trustee? Convention support generally is less than 10 percent of each school's budget. I do not feel we should.

To the editor:

In your Jan. 9 issue appeared a letter from a B. W. Tharp expressing concern over the Cubans and Vietnamese about to take "advantage of this Country?" As a Cuban-born tax-paying citizen of this country, I'd like to reassure him and answer some of his questions.

Cubans and Vietnamese are not putting themselves in extreme situations to come here. The U. S., by violating agreements and treaties with these and other countries without one thought to human rights or suffering, creates these "extreme situations."

These foreigners are coming to live on the same land Mr. Tharp's ancestors borrowed from the Indians, the only real Americans.

Cubans, who are asking for a county (not a country) to be bilingual, have in the last few years turned a small resort town into a booming city, creating thousands of jobs for Americans, as well as Cubans. This is quite an accomplishment, considering most came here with a suitcase, $5 and a language barrier. They also came with pride, determination and, most of all, faith in God.

Foreigners admire, appreciate and love this country. Many born here take it for granted, abuse it and will eventually exhaust its resources.

I love my native country and always will, but I'm an American citizen. When I salute the American Flag, a lump forms in my throat. When I hear the American anthem, sometimes tears come.

During the 13 years it's been my privilege to reside in Greenville, I have been a volunteer worker with the Cub Scouts, the Girl Scouts, and the St. Raphael School PTA. Through the Service League, I have given over 300 hours to the hospital and the art center. I was chairman of the fund-raising 1969 Charity Ball. Not bad contributions, I hope, for a "Cuban misfit." I have earned my citizenship and so have thousands of other "misfit emigrants."

Those persons put down in Mr. Tharp's letter are innocent victims of a few figureheads trying to rule the world. I pray you will never have to walk away from this country for the same reason.

To the editor:

By using the analogy that a book does not make wisdom, neither does training make an E. M. T. an M. D., a "firefighter, or a policeman, or, for that matter, any professional.

First, it takes dedication, because there are many revolting situations that must be overcome. The dedicated well-trained E. M. T. is able to disassociate himself from revulsion and expediently assess as well as implement care.

This brings us to two more very important qualities, that of previous training and repetitious practice. Without these two qualities, and most especially acomplishment with enthusiasm, these men are little more than stretcher bearers. The E. M. T. of today, and further the paramedic, is to be the greatest force in reducing acute mortality and morbidity outside the medical setting.

With all of the above as accepted and trainable modalities, the E. M. T. and paramedic must utilize all the common sense necessary to provide dispatch to an emergent situation.

The people of Greenville and surrounding Pitt County are indeed fortunate to have such people manning our rescue squads.

Perhaps the citizens of Greenville will be fortunate to have their Rescue Squad an independent department of the city and can allocate their time accordingly.

Indeed, it would seem to me that separation of the Greenville Rescue Squad from the Fire Department would enhance the efficiency of the champions we all know them to be.

The 55 mph speed limit began with the Arab oil embargo of 1973.

In January 1974, a new federal law restricted cars, trucks and other vehicles to a "median energy efficiency speed" of 55 mph.

The federal government, in November, 1973, asked motorists to voluntarily lower their speeds to 50 mph.

When that failed to slow most drivers, the Emergency Highway Energy Conservation Act, which made 55 the top motorist speed, was enacted temporarily. It became permanent one year later in 1975.

Stripping Society Of Ability To Defend Self

BY JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — Through a nice ironical conjunction of events, the same holiday week that saw the release of a report from the Assassinations Committee saw release of a report from a Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security. We never learn our lessons. We just keep repeating them.

This was a farewell address from the Senate subcommittee. The new chairman of Senate Judiciary, Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, is disbanding the staff and disposing of the files that once provided some insight into domestic terrorism and espionage. The outgoing chairman, James Eastland of Mississippi, delivered a valedictory:

"It should be cause for reflection," said Eastland, "that virtually no one in the media, no one in the Congress, and no one in the administration realizes just how far we have gone in stripping society of the ability to defend itself and defend its citizens, in consequence of the exaggerated and undiluted emphasis on privacy."

Eastland provided some disturbing examples. Because of laws preventing employers from inquiring into the criminal records of job applicants, a Chicago nursing home unknowingly hired an arsonist. The United States Army, seeking to hire computer security specialists for highly sensitive, secret work, was told that Civil Service regulations prohibited a background check for top secret clearance.

In recent years, owing to an obsessive solicitude for privacy and for civil rights, virtually every mechanism for investigating domestic subversion has been systematically destroyed. The old House Committee on Un-American Activities vanished long ago. The Senate counterpart goes out as Kennedy comes in. State and local governments, Eastland said, have permitted or even encouraged "a massive erosion" of law enforcement intelligence. The Texas Public Safety Division destroyed its files four years ago. Washington, Los Angeles, New York, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and other major cities similarly have locked up or burned their records on violent activists of the Left and Right.

Eastland reports flatly that "informants are rapidly becoming an extinct species." The Freedom of Information Act has been abused so often that an informant's identity no longer can be protected from compelled disclosure. Electronic surveillance has been drastically restricted. Federal, state and local law enforcement agencies no longer can exchange information on suspected terrorists.

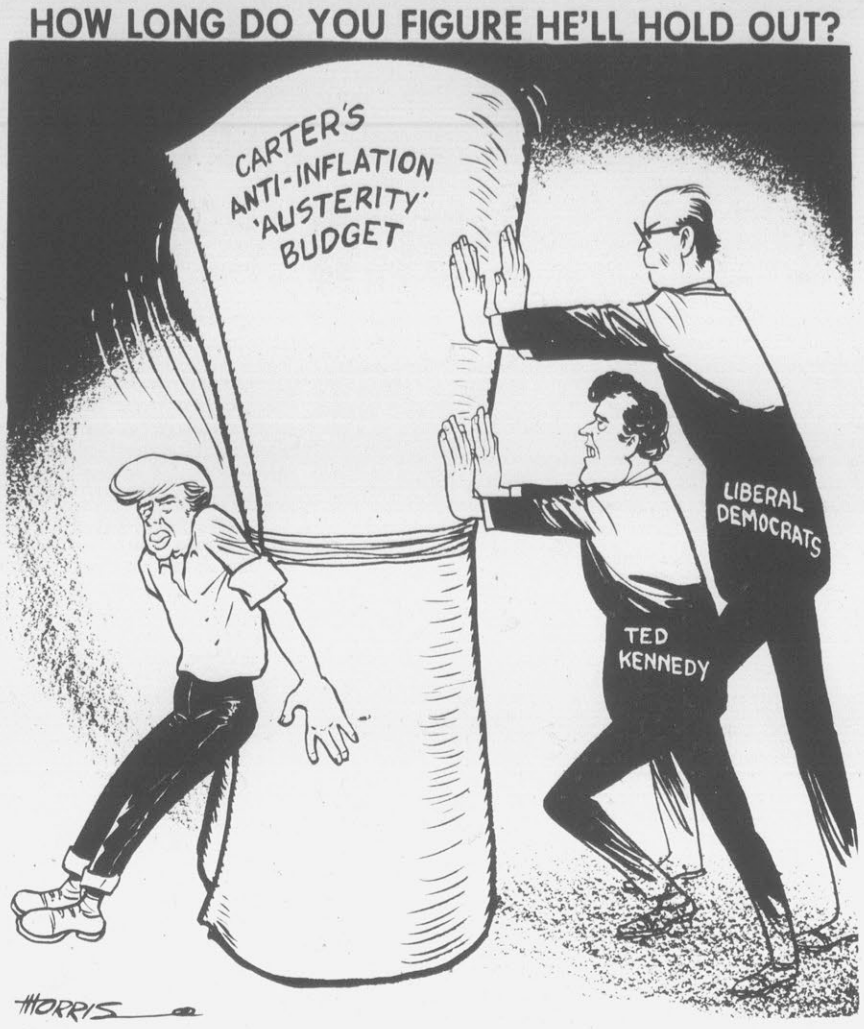

Everything in this area is drying up. The head of the Secret Service told Eastland's subcommittee that the Service is getting only 25 percent of the information it used to receive. It wounds the tender sensibilities of Nazis, Klansmen, Communists and anarchists even to inquire into their activities and associations. It is as if a farmer, out of a bizarre respect for the rights of horse thieves, had decided to leave his barn doors unlocked every night.

How has this shocking situation come about? It has resulted partly from past abuses by law enforcement agencies, notably the FBI. But it also has resulted from the policies, attitudes and the naivete of the liberal community — from the overreaction of the kind of liberals who dominated the House Select Committee on Assassinations.

One sighs, therefore, to read the recommendations of the House members. Having had a hand, directly or indirectly, in dismantling our mechanisms for internal security, what do they ask? They ask that the mechanisms be put back together. They urge new legislation to protect us from conspiracies, kidnapping and assassination. They want a fresh look at restrictions on the use of informants and electronic surveillance devices. They want to coordinate "the gathering, sharing and analysis of intelligence information."

What is required is a sensible balance between civil rights and common sense. John Gacy, suspected of 32 murders in Illinois, may have rights of privacy; but these rights ought not to be construed, metaphorically speaking, in order to protect him in seeking a job as counselor in a home for orphan boys.

Champion Of Autoharp Plays From The Heart

GALAX, Va. — It was at a fiddlers' convention in Brown's Warehouse in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, that John Kilby Snow won his first autoharp championship. He was five years old.

"They put me up to play," he remembers, "but I was awful bashful and only did half a tune before I tried to run off. They pulled me back and commenced to pitching nickels and dimes at me.

"Now, I always did have an eye for a dime, so I played for half an hour. A pretty little girl picked up the money for me and put it in a three-pound lard bucket. I wound up with about $24 as well as the $20 gold piece for winning."

Later, Snow was to become the North Carolina autoharp playing champ by beating out his new brother-in-law, Hubert Ashburn.

"He'd said if I ever beat him, he'd lay down his autoharp and never play another note," Kilby says. "And he did."

In 1908 when Kilby was three years old, he'd never seen the instrument. Then Ashburn brought an autoharp to the house when he came to court Kilby's sister, and the little boy knew he wanted one more than anything else in the world.

His father, a carpenter and preacher, traded an ice cream freezer for an old autoharp to satisfy the boy.

"I stretched out on the floor with that thing," Kilby Snow relates, "and commenced to studying how to play it. I figured out some chords and sounds and have been attached to it ever since."

Although he learned to play "anything that came along," Kilby says he stuck with the autoharp because he could make any sound he wanted on those 37 strings. He plays left-handed with his homemade brass picks.

"I've changed my playing style three times since I started," he says. "First it was old-style, then the 'Carter Family' style, but now I do it my own way. I play the blues and get minor notes on two strings. I've got some secrets others have tried to imitate, but they can't get them. I'm going to take them with me to the grave."

The country music he plays comes from back in the mountains, he says. "People back there 50 to 75 years have never been out anywhere. It's all folk music, you know. The difference between country and bluegrass music is only the speed. Some of these folks on the banjo got these quick notes. They had to play fast to get it to sound good. The same tune played slow is country."

He has no use for rock music, saying, "I wouldn't furnish the juice it takes to pull a record to hear it!"

Snow thinks the revival of interest in country and folk music is good for everyone. It has encouraged him to remember the old songs and to record some of them for future generations.

"Before my memory started to go, I knew about 560 tunes. Learned 'em by ear and played 'em by heart," Kilby explains. "A lot of it is religious music, too. I used to be able to hear a tune just one time at a convention and then go back home and pick up my autoharp and play it."

He can be found at many fiddlers' conventions and mountain music festivals anywhere from Delaware on south. He often demonstrates his considerable talents during the summer at park programs and other outdoor shows.

"I like it," he says, "and they give me a little money for gas bills and one thing and another."

Decades of labor in tobacco fields and saw mills made his large hands as gnarled as the top of the dark wooden cane he uses, but Kilby Snow's fingers are as nimble as ever when they fly across the strings, and he plays from the heart.

tion: by sending its flight-test telemetry back to ground by low-powered transmitters, which the U.S could not monitor; or by not transmitting at all, but encasing the test data in a little black box and retrieving the box after the test.

Given the vivid evidence of Soviet willingness to thwart verification, SALT skeptics and critics are asking why the new treaty ignores these two other tactics which could deny the U.S. information that could be vital to the future of the U.S.

Encryption, with Carter's inadequate answer to it, is by no means the only or even the principal target for anti-SALT senators, but it may become the most important because of its intimate association with verification. The treaty will likely rise or fall on how senators feel about legal rights given the U.S. to detect Soviet cheating.

For the Soviets, few missile secrets cannot be discovered in the open U.S. society. For the U.S., verification is the name of the game to hold Moscow to the letter and spirit of SALT II.

Trip On The Interstate Can Fulfill A Prophecy

Remember the prophet who said, "And the wife shall turn against her husband, and the father against his son, and the mother against her daughter?" Well, he was talking about a trip on the Interstate.

The eight hour drive to my parents is the closest I ever came to murder. Seven and a half hours of whining is enough to tax the patience of a tree, and it's certainly more than I can handle. I've tried trip boxes, candy, threats, and earplugs. In fact, I've tried everything short of drugging Meg. Nothing works. Two hours after we left on the last trip, I was taking my sixth Excedrin and was trying to choose between stuffing Meg's mouth with gum wrapper or jumping out at the next intersection.

"I want to go home," she said.

"And I wish you were there," I said. "But there's nothing either one of us can do about it, so hush."

"But I don't have anything to do," she whined.

"Meg, in that box beside you are 13 books, 3 puzzles, scissors, paper, tape, pencils, a record player, and two dolls complete with accessories. Don't tell me you don't have anything to do!"

She quieted down for 15 minutes, or until she had cut an entire pack of construction paper into confetti.

"I don't have anything to do," she moaned. "I'm tired."

"Then why don't you go to sleep?"

It was Phillip's turn to chime in. "Where? She's wedged between the trip box, a humidifier, a teddy bear, two shopping bags full of Christmas presents, three coats, and a tricycle. Just where is she going to sleep?"

"Well, you packed the car."

"I only packed what you told me to. Why is it that when we spend a week at your parents, you pack as if we were spending a year at Ice Station Zebra?"

"Because if I leave something at home, that's the one thing I need. Remember the time I only took one outfit for each day, and Meg spit up on five before we ever crossed the North Carolina state line?"

"An isolated incident."

"It was not. Remember the time she got bronchitis, and the doctor prescribed a humidifier? The closest we could come to one was a teapot on a hot plate."

"That doesn't explain the trike."

"She has to have something to play with while she's there. Not that you'd understand the need to occupy her. Every time you go to my parents, you disappear into the basement, and we don't see you again for five days."

"That's not fair."

"It is, too. Why do you hate my parents?"

It was up to Meg to stop the argument. "I need to go to the potty," she said, clutching her pants and becoming increasingly wild-eyed.

Phillip would rather jump headfirst into a flaming building than stop the car at a restroom. He shut his mouth and looked straight ahead.

By the time we got to my parent's house, Meg was in her third change of clothes, and Phillip and I were not speaking.

My mother rushed out to greet us. "Did you have a nice trip?" she asked.

Public Favors Ties With Both China, Taiwan,

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — A majority of Americans, on balance, approve of the decision to establish diplomatic relations between the U.S. and the People's Republic of China, but many at the same time feel that it is wrong to end relations with Taiwan in order to do so.

As determined by a full-scale, in-person survey completed Monday, 58 percent of persons aware of the decision say that they approve while 24 percent disapprove.

The same survey, however, shows 47 percent holding the view that it was wrong to end relations with Taiwan, while 35 percent said the goal justified such a breakoff in relations.

Normal diplomatic relations between the U.S. and Mainland China were established on Jan. 1. Under the agreement, the U.S. terminates formal diplomatic relations with Taiwan, cancels the 1954 mutual defense treaty which committed the U.S. to guaranteeing Taiwan's military security and withdraws 700 U.S. troops now on Taiwan.

This question was asked first:

"Have you heard or read about the decision to establish diplomatic relations between the U.S. and the People's Republic of China' that is Mainland China?"

Nine in 10 (90 percent) replied in the affirmative. These persons were then asked:

"All things considered, do you approve or disapprove of this decision?"

Approve	58%
Disapprove	24
No opinion	18

This question was also asked:

"Some people feel that establishing relations with the People's Republic of China was an important enough reason to break off diplomatic relations with Taiwan. Other people feel that it was wrong to end relations with Taiwan in order to establish relations with the People's Republic of China. Which position comes closest to your own view?"

Wrong	47%
Important enough	35
No opinion	18

Among those who feel that the step was necessary, the vote is 10 to 1 in favor. Even among those who feel it was wrong to end relations with Taiwan, opinion leans 48 to 39 percent in favor of the decision to establish diplomatic relations with Mainland China.

Favor relations with Mainland China	Oppose	No opinion
Important enough to end relations with Taiwan ... 81%	8%	11%
Wrong ... 48	39	13

The establishment of normal diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China has bipartisan support, with about one-half of Republicans and a like proportion of Democrats voting in favor.

Opposition Stronger Among More Informed

Three questions were included in the survey to test knowledge about the recent decision to normalize relations between the U.S. and Mainland China. Following are the questions and the national findings, based on the aware group:

"As far as you know, will the U.S. be able to maintain diplomatic relations with the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan, or not?"

Yes, will	34%
No, will not (correct)	47
No opinion	9

"Will the U.S. be able to protect and defend the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan, or not?"

Yes, will	32%
No, will not (correct)	46
No opinion	22

"Will the U.S. be able to continue to trade with Taiwan, or not?"

Yes, will (correct)	68%
No, will not	18
No opinion	14

When the views of persons who are correct on all three questions are taken into consideration (16 percent of the sample), support for the establishment of diplomatic relations with Mainland China outweighs opposition by more than a 2-to-1 margin, 64 to 30 percent.

Genral Assembly Finishes First Week

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The first full week of the General Assembly came to a close Friday with House bills in the works that could limit the sessions of future legislatures and cut the pay of current lawmakers.

And in the Senate, Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green said in an interview that he had not changed his mind about the Equal Rights Amendment.

Rep. W. Casper, D-Wake, said Friday he introduced a bill to limit the sessions of the legislature in an effort to get a more varied membership.

Holroyd's bill calls for an amendment to the state constitution limiting the main session every two years to four months and the sessions in even-numbered years to two months.

If the bill is approved by the legislature, North Carolinians must vote on the measure because it is a constitutional amendment.

Holroyd said he thinks the indefinite length of the main session keeps many people from running for the legislature and thus limits the types of people who become lawmakers.

"If a person could tell his business or employer that he will be gone four months or two months, then more professional people might run," he said.

Holroyd said he isn't dissatisfied with the makeup of the 1979 General Assembly. But he said he believes it will become more and more difficult in the future to persuade people to run.

ERA

Green told reporters that despite his attendance at an ERA legislation session and his introduction of ERA booster-columnist Erma Bombeck at that function, his position on the amendment hasn't changed.

"My position is the same as it's always been. The lieutenant governor will not decide ERA; 50 senators will," he said.

Green has avoided saying publicly what his personal view on ERA is. But he said Friday, "I'm not sure this simple phrase they're talking about putting in would guarantee equal rights, are you?"

Pay Raise

The House Appropriations Committee has been handed the bill that would repeal the legislative pay raises approved by the last General Assembly. It was introduced by Rep. Howard Coble, D-Guilford, who says he's received a lot of complaints about the bill — some good natured and some serious.

Blue Lights

A bill that would prohibit the possession and use of blue lights in an automobile was filed by Sen. Russell Walker, D-Randolph. He said he introduced it because of a rape last fall in Randolph County and two other attempts in which a blue light was used by the attacker to stop a woman driver.

Jaycee Jelly

A House bill calling for the exemption from state sales taxes of items sold by civic groups was entered by several representatives. Exempted would be items like the Jaycee Jelly, which is sold to make money for the burn center at N.C. Memorial Hospital.

Energy

Sen. Helen Marvin filed a package of bills that would allow tax credits to encourage energy conservation. Included is one that would extend the tax credit for installing home insulation.

N.C. At Bottom

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Average North Carolina factory workers earned more than twice as much last year as they did 10 years before that — but the state still finished last in the nation in average hourly earnings.

During the past decade, manufacturing companies have invested or announced they plan to invest more than $10 billion in new and expanded plants in North Carolina. Gov. Jim Hunt said this week that 1978 was North Carolina's first $2 billion year in industrial expansion.

In 1978, North Carolina's average hourly factory wage — $2.19 per hour — was 27.2 percent below the national average. Last November, it was $4.61 per hour — 27.6 percent below.

Political leaders, economists and businessmen point to a variety of reasons they say cause North Carolina to rank at the bottom in factory wages year after year.

North Carolina's work force is less skilled and well educated than the national average, they say, and the state traditionally has attracted low-paying industries, particularly textiles, apparel and furniture.

The cost of living in North Carolina is relatively low, they say. Industries generally must pay higher wages to get employees to work in cities with pollution, higher crime rates, higher transportation costs and other disadvantages.

Hijackers Released All 83 Hostages

By MICHEL DEURE

TUNIS, Tunisia (UPI) — Three Tunisian hijackers Saturday released all 83 hostages unharmed from an Air Tunis jetliner in Tripoli, Libya, and surrendered to authorities, ending a 16-hour ordeal in which they threatened to blow up the crew.

The air pirates seized the Boeing 727 on a flight from Frankfurt to the Tunisian resort island of Djerba and demanded freedom for two Tunisian politicians detained by the regime of President Habib Bourguiba.

They released the 75 passengers, including at least 23 West Germans on their way from the chilly European winter to the sunny Mediterranean vacation spot, midway through the drama.

But they held on to the eight-member crew and threatened to blow them up unless their demands were met. Negotiations dragged on for eight more hours and they finally freed their captives and gave themselves up, Tunisian aviation authorities said.

The hostages were all in good condition, the official Libyan news agency reported.

Tunisian authorities said they had asked for the extradition of the three attackers. It was not known whether Libya had arrested the men.

But the Friday night hijacking took place on the fifth anniversary of the short-lived union of Libya and Tunisia, a cause that Libya says must be pushed with revolutionary zeal.

The agreement was signed Jan. 12, 1974, by Mohammed Masmoudi, then Tunisia's foreign minister and now one of the men whose release was demanded along with that of imprisoned labor leader Habib Achour.

Although Tunisia disowned the unity project four days later, the Libyans have never dropped the idea. Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy said Sept. 1 that since he had been unable to win over Tunisia's leaders, "We are compelled to find another method, that of popular revolution."

The hijacked airliner was refused permission to land in Malta but was given clearance to stop in Tripoli to refuel and take on food. Two elderly Tunisian women were released at that point.

The airliner took off again for Malta but when permission to land was again refused it returned to Tripoli where the passengers and finally the crew were released.

Another plane with two crews on board was sent to Tripoli. Those passengers who wished to go to Tunis boarded one aircraft and the others went to Djerba in the other.

'No Control' Over Billy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter said Saturday he hopes the people of the United States realize he has "no control" over his brother Billy, whose involvement with a group of visiting Libyans officials and businessmen has become an open embarrassment.

The president, in an interview with NBC News, said he and Billy "are two very independent people" and it would be "counterproductive" for him to tell Billy to keep quiet in public.

Billy caused a major stir by hosting a 60-member Libyan delegation and then explaining himself with some apparent anti-Semitic remarks. The president's brother was quoted as saying, "There's a hell of a lot more Arabians than there is Jews" and then blamed the "Jewish media" for negative views on Arab countries.

"You know, family matters and my brother Billy are fairly sensitive with me," Carter said in response to a question from NBC's John Chancellor.

"Billy is an extremely independent person. Any criticism that I might make publicly of Billy would cause, I think, him to react very strongly and to re-exert his independence," the president said.

"Billy and I have very strong differences of opinion on many issues," Carter said. "He expresses those differences much more frequently than do I.

"And I don't look on Billy's actions as a basis for success in future political activities, and I hope the people of the United States realize that I have no control over Billy. He has no control over me."

"We are two very independent people," Carter said, ruling out any suggestions he pressure his brother into more subdued actions.

The Chinese Scramble

By JAMES HILDRETH

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Curious — and profit-conscious — American businessmen have almost buried U.S. government offices under an avalanche of inquiries on establishing trade ties with China, officials said Saturday.

The United States and the People's Republic of China resumed formal diplomatic relations Jan. 1.

In the two weeks since, "business interest in establishing trading ties and contacts with China has been extraordinary," said Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps.

"We have been deluged with telephone calls and correspondence from American business firms," she said, noting that calls are coming in at the rate of 250 a day.

American officials have said that during the next seven years, China plans to spend between $85 billion and $100 billion to modernize its economy. They have noted that U.S. firms are highly qualified to supply many of the items on the Chinese shopping list.

As one example of how much money is involved, U.S. Steel Corp. signed an agreement Jan. 5 in Peking to build a $1 billion iron ore processing complex. The plant, to be constructed in northern China, would be ready for operation by 1983.

The Chinese recently have negotiated a $50 million hotel deal with a subsidiary of Pan American Airways and contracts for construction of an $800 million cooper processing plant by the Fluor Corp.

The U.S. government is extremely anxious for American business to establish relationships with China, a development that would help shrink the huge U.S. trade deficit.

King's Widow Is Building A 'Living Memorial'

By GREG MacARTHUR
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Through enormous personal prestige and willingness to engage in a little old-fashioned political horse-trading, Coretta Scott King is building a $15 million "living memorial" to her slain husband.

In 10 years since the civil rights leader's death, Mrs. King, 49, has embraced a number of national and international causes, personally lobbied for full employment legislation and raised money for a five-block complex known as the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change.

She also has attracted a collection of powerful corporate, political and institutional allies — something many of her late husband's colleagues have been either unable or unwilling to do.

The proposed $10 million Freedom Hall, the centerpiece of the King complex along Atlanta's Auburn Avenue, is being sponsored personally by Henry Ford II, developed with the help of Ford Motor Co. architects and fund riasers, and backed by $1 million in company money.

It is an indication of Mrs. King's broad appeal that another $600,000 has been pledged to the project by the United Auto Workers. An additional $250,000 is being contributed by the Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

The Center also has the backing of the 1.8 million-member National Education Association, the country's largest and most powerful teachers' lobby.

According to King Center Communications Director George Clements, who is on loan from IBM, Mrs. King attracts a wide range of support because "she is not simply a black leader, not simply a women's leader, but more of a leader for the entire liberal movement in this country.

She has achieved her standing, in part, by distancing herself from the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which her husband founded in 1957.

The separation is a touchy subject.

Neither Mrs. King nor SCLC President Dr. Joseph Lowery is anxious for a public confrontation and both sides say reports of a rift have been greatly exaggerated.

Nevertheless, Mrs. King declined repeated invitations that she take an active part in SCLC after her husband's death. Instead, she launched the center, and in the process took some of SCLC's national leaders with her.

She also took the power of the King name, and her use of that name has been the source of some disagreement.

On Sunday afternoon, for example, the center will award President Jimmy Carter the Martin Luther King Non-Violent Peace Prize. At the same time, a coalition including SCLC, the Atlanta chapter of NAACP and other black groups plan to march in protest of anticipated cuts in federal social welfare programs.

In announcing the march, Lowery emphasized that the SCLC was "taking no position whatsoever related to the award," which will be presented in conjunction with the center's week-long celebration of King's 50th birthday.

Other blacks are less reticent.

"Had I been consulted, I would have opposed the presentation," State Sen. Julian Bond said. Bond, head of the Atlanta chapter of the NAACP, described himself as "a relatively inactive member of the board" of the King Center.

Mrs. King sees the presentation to Carter as an extension of the political realism she and Martin Luther King Jr. shared.

"President Carter is an ally," Mrs. King said in an interview. "But he can't legislate, he can only propose, and some people are making the mistake of focusing only on him when they should be applying pressure equally on the Congress.

"President Carter hasn't achieved everything he wants to achieve, but neither had Martin when he received the Nobel Peace Prize. That was 1964. But they (the Nobel Committee) recognized the noble efforts that had begun," she said.

Mrs. King's emphasis on what is possible and her willingness to "work within the process" are reflected in her vision of the center.

Originally proposed as an archives for the documents of the civil rights movement, the center now includes plans for educational programs, a day care center, a black "think tank," and a training facility for community organizers committed to non-violent social change.

"I think it's a misconception that the mood of the country is toward conservatism," Mrs. King said. "Those people who want a more liberal government and a more liberal Democratic Party have not really mobilized themselves enough.

"I see us (the center) as being part of that mobilization, a kind of neutral ground where coalitions, like the one we put together for the passage of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill, can meet."

Mrs. King co-chaired the coalition which lobbied for that full employment bill, and she bristles at the suggestion that the final version was "watered down" to the point of symbolism.

"Of course, we didn't get everything we wanted," she said. "You work as hard as you can to reach the ideal, but you may have to settle for what you can get. Then it's time to keep working.

"Martin was a dreamer, but he was also a realist," she said. "He understood that people need hope. He knew that you can only lead people as long as they see that you are effective — effective in the system.

"The problem comes in with some of these self-styled disciples who believe they have a monopoly on Martin's truth. Just standing on a street corner and hollering isn't going to do anything," she said.

Mrs. King acknowledges that the center's emphasis on "creative, positive and non-violent change" may make it "less threatening than some other organizations." But she insists that the center "be on the cutting edge of society."

She says her alliances with big business and labor pose no threat because they exert no control over policy.

When causes coincide, however, Mrs. King can lend her influence to national health care, a concern shared by the UAW, and sponsor conferences on violence in the schools while NEA uses its lobbying arm to support full employment legislation.

"She can call people that not many other people can call," said Sam Ethridge, an NEA official and King center board member. "I don't know of many others who can sit down with Henry Ford."

It was Mrs. King's personal appeal that convinced the president of the nation's No. 2 automaker to back the center, according to Ford Co. spokesman Bill Selover.

"Mr. Ford believes its very important to have this kind of institution exploring ideas for the social changes that are inevitable. And its important that they be peaceful changes," Selover said. "It's good for business. It's good for labor."

There has been some grumbling that Mrs. King is diverting funds from more activist black groups. Her 1978 operating budget was about $580,000. Lowery says SCLC spent about $250,000 last year.

But there seems to be general agreement that the center is tapping funds that are unavailable to groups such as SCLC.

Dr. Randolph T. Blackwell, director of the federal Office of Minority Business Enterprise, who served as the SCLC's program director in 1966-68, says the center and SCLC are complementary.

"They both have full agendas," he said. "It's not like one is taking away programs from another. There are some things that the King Center can do that SCLC can't and the other way around."

Could SCLC attract the same corporate support as the center? "I doubt it seriously," Blackwell said.

According to Bond, Mrs. King "has institutionalized the movement."

"The center will include a training center which will teach people not only how and what King did, but how they can do it themselves. We've never had that," he said.

"One of the failures of the whole 60s movement is that it was largely a reactive movement. It never planned anything more than six months ahead. The center is a long-range effort," Bond said.

Where is Your Heat Going?

A model house specially built to contain construction defects, such as missing insulation and cold air infiltration problems which can't be seen.

A Thermogram, or "heat loss picture" of the model house clearly shows the defects. The whiter, or lighter-colored areas show where heat--and energy dollars--are being wasted.

Is it escaping into your attic through leaks you don't know about?

Are there "short circuits" in your insulation robbing you of expensive heating dollars?

The problem is, there are lots and lots of places in your home that may be letting in the cold and letting out that nice warm air you've paid near and dear to heat. Worst of all, many of these places are "hidden" and can't be detected, no matter how hard you look.

There is a way to find the leaks, fortunately. Special heat-sensing equipment, called infrared scanners, can detect the source of wasteful heat leaks that may be costing you extra money. A black-and-white picture called a Thermogram (such as the one shown above) can spot the heat loss problems--which can exist even in new homes. The whiter the area, the more heat that is being lost to the great outdoors.

Greenville Utilities has made arrangements with an experienced private firm to provide infrared scans of homes and businesses in our service area. For approximately ten dollars, you will get a one- or two-picture scan (depending on the size of your home or business), and a detailed written interpretation of what the picture actually shows. At your request, a private consultation with a representative from our Energy Conservation Office will be arranged to answer your questions about the Thermogram taken of your home.

To indicate your interest in having an infrared scan performed this winter, mail in the form below, or contact the Energy Conservation Office at 752-7166, Ext 234.

While you're at it, find out about other services available from Greenville Utilities to help you S-T-R-E-T-C-H the value of your energy dollar!

Firemen Discover $250,000 Hoard

MEDFORD, Mass. (UPI) — A treasure of old silver coins and securities worth an estimated $250,000 was discovered in the home of a retired patent lawyer when firemen began cleaning up after fire gutted a portion of his house.

In an undamaged garage adjoining the home of Harold R. Savage, 86, firefighters stumbled upon a 1934 Ford automobile, whose antique value was estimated at $50,000 dollars. The car had sat unused for years, fire officials said, because a tree had grown blocking the garage door.

"It's nobody's business," Savage said from his bed in Lawrence Memorial Hospital when asked about his hoard. He was being treated for minor burns and smoke inhalation and was in satisfactory condition.

"I figure the worth of the cache is $250,000 right now," said Medford Deputy Fire Chief Edward Moon. "And that doesn't include the uncounted currency that is locked up in two safes and a chest."

Until Thursday's fire, Savage, had lived alone in the two-story wooden and brick home in West Medford for 40 years, apparently amassing his collection of "solid" currency, police said.

"The firemen couldn't lift one wooden chest from a bedroom," Moon said, "when we opened it we found it was half full of rolls of coins."

Coins tumbled from opened drawers, spilled from closets, and overflowed from dozens of boxes, Moon said. On the attic stairs firefighters found $6,000 worth of silver dimes, alone.

Officials contacted Savage's nephew Godfrey Savage, of Durham, N.H. when firemen discovered the coins and stacks of silver certificates stashed throughout the modest house.

An engineering professor at the University of New Hampshire and executor of his uncle's estate, the younger Savage hired an armored truck to transfer the money to a Boston bank.

He said he had not calculated the total value of his uncle's silver fortune. "I won't have the final count for weeks," he said.

The hidden treasure was a testimony to his uncle's frugality and keen economic sense, the younger Savage said.

"He believed that the solid dollar was the best investment any one could get," he said. "And I guess the way things have turned out economically he was right.

"In a sense, he was very wise. He owns hard currency when everything else is going to pot. This just wasn't the best way to go about it."

AP Contract

NEW YORK (AP) — A new two-year contract with the Associated Press apparently has been ratified by members of the Wire Service Guild, Guild administrator Richard J. Olive says.

With 76 percent of the ballots counted, Olive said 339 Guild members voted to approve the contract and 218 voted against the pact, worked out during more than a month of negotiations.

The contract provides for average annual wage increases of slightly less than 5 percent, Olive said.

In the first year, top-scale pay for reporters, photographers, artists, cartoonists and retouchers will rise from $410 weekly to $430.50. In the second year, pay in that category will increase to $450.00 weekly — within President Carter's voluntary wage guidelines.

The previous contract expired at midnight New Year's Eve, and was extended to give Guild members time to vote on the proposed pact, which was endorsed by Guild negotiators.

The AP is to increase its contributions to some fringe benefits, including health and medical insurance and pensions.

Big Mistake

NEWARK, N.Y. (AP) — It seemed like a great idea for show-and-tell: bring in dad's handcuffs and test them before the class at Perkins Elementary School.

But much to his discomfort, 7-year-old Jonathan Sirkin neglected to bring along the keys and had to be pried free by police officers Thursday.

If it was embarrassing for Jonathan, think about his father, Stephen, who's the Wayne County district attorney and a former FBI agent.

Music Awards Presented

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Disco queen Donna Summer was hostess and most-honored guest at the sixth annual American Music Awards ceremonies, taking home three of five awards in the newly created disco category.

Miss Summer, who emceed the nationally televised two-hour award show along with Helen Reddy and Glen Campbell, won the favorite female vocalist award as well as awards for favorite single for her "Last Dance" and for favorite album for "Live and More."

Friday night's awards were based on a poll conducted among 30,000 record buyers nationwide. Five awards were presented in each of four categories — pop-rock, country, soul and disco.

Kenny Rogers took home two prizes in the country music category, favorite male vocalist and favorite album, "Ten Years of Gold." Linda Ronstadt was also a dual winner — for favorite pop female vocalist and favorite country single, "Blue Bayou."

Singer-composer Barry Manilow claimed the favorite male vocalist award for the second consecutive year.

The Bee Gees, who have been nominated for six Grammy Awards, were named favorite pop group and also collected a pyramid-shaped award when the soundtrack of "Saturday Night Fever" won favorite soul album.

Three nominees for each of the 20 awards were selected on the basis of year-end sales charts in music industry publications.

Half Of $20 Worth More Than Just $10

DANVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A nightclub owner has discovered that half of $20 is worth far, far more than $10.

Clyde West Jr., owner of the Pow Wow Club, received a $20 bill that appeared perfectly normal — on one surface. Its other side was blank.

"My first thought was that it was counterfeit," said West. "I didn't get my hopes too high until I talked to that Secret Service guy."

A government agent examined the bill and determined it was no phony, but a very rare Treasury note.

"He said it was about a one-in-a-million chance that I'd get a bill like that," West said Friday.

Currency dealers estimated the bill's value from $150 to $500, but say amateur collectors might pay much more.

A dealer, Harry Jones of Cleveland, Ohio, explained currency is printed on sheets containing 32 bills. Sometimes two sheets go through the press together so only one side is printed, he said.

"When you have one, you can rest assured that there are 31 others," said Jones.

West obtained the bill from a bank Jan. 5.

"I was offered $2,000 for it before the day was over," he said.

Thanks To The Hustle, Social Dancing Hangs On

By IVAN ZVERINA

NEW YORK (UPI) — The hustle, once considered a dance fad, is five years old and appears to be on its way to becoming a standard dance step.

It's the social dance with definite foot movement that survives, and the hustle fills this requirement. Free-style dancing, a craze among youth for a generation, does not. Now, after a long lapse, social dancing is back.

Free-style dancing prohibits holding — even touching — your partner. Well known dancemaster Don de Natale calls it just body shaking by those too lazy to take lessons. Now, he says, we are back to definite form. The hustle you have to learn.

And de Natale says the hustle will stay with us just like the foxtrot, rhumba, lindy and waltz.

"It's getting back to social dancing," de Natale said. "It's not easy. It takes real practice, and you have to do it together. But that's what social dancing is."

At 38, de Natale is lanky, dark and handsome. He was 18 when he won the U.S. Dancing Championship at fabled Roseland. More recently, he escorted such partners as Geraldine Chaplin and Raquel Welch before cameras for the movies "Roseland" and "Wild Party."

"I hated the twist, the monkey and all those 60s dances," he said. "It was a lot of gyration to cover up lack of technique, and it was pure ego trip. Two people really danced alone. I call it epileptic dancing.

"But the hustle has the same elements that the classic social dances do. It is two people responding to each other and to the music at the same time. It's the first new dance in 10 years that does that."

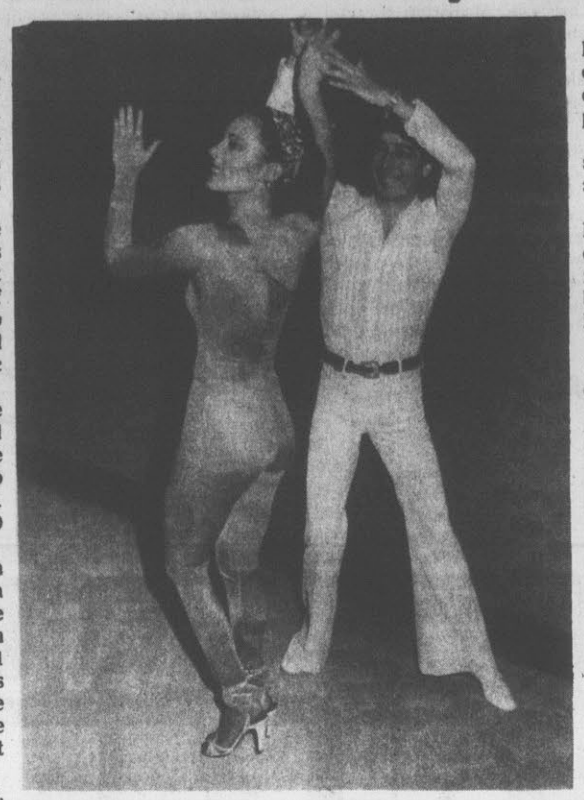

Actually, the hustle started in 1973. "No one person invents a dance, they come from the street," said de Natale. "When the twist came in 1961 (remember Chubby Checker's 'Let's Do the Twist'?) everyone thought that would be the biggest thing, and it is all but forgotten now.

"The most important dance, one that created the most excitement since the waltz and later the foxtrot, was the rhumba. The hustle may reach that level."

It is the music, he said. "Some genius at the piano beats up a tune and it becomes a hit. The kids in the street pick it up. The dance educators (as Natale styles himself, among other things), the dance studios, go down and try to figure out what the kids in the street are doing. If we can put it into a phrase and create a format, we've got a dance — a social dance.

"A dance has to have a basic format for which one can create a pattern, a dance figure, to fit that format."

De Natale contends the hustle is liked by everyone — the beat, the rhythm. It has a bit of swing or lindy to it, and a bit of mambo — the American, or single, hustle with the six-count pattern — 1 and 2, 3 and 4, 5, 6 — then the Latin hustle, which came in 1974, 1,2,3 and 4,5,6, with the kick on "and 4," and now down to the "and 1,2,3" three-count hustle.

When you looked at the studios before the hustle, he said, there were 15 to 20 people in the classes. Then after the hustle, maybe 50 or 60, and when John Travolta's "Saturday Night Fever" came out, it was 100 and more per class — all ages, all walks of life.

"The only time that happened was after World War II with the rhumba," he said.

"The hustle saved the dance studios."

De Natale was born in Brooklyn and, as he puts it, grew up in Roseland.

"We never had to force ourselves to appreciate music," he said. "The Roseland bar was always empty. The dancers were not drinkers. Now kids must have something to stimulate them to respond to the beat."

That was in the days of the ballroom, days of rhumba and the lindy, plus the surviving waltz and foxtrot.

Then came the '60s with the twist, the monkey, watusi, frug, swim, stroll — the "epilepsy," as Natale calls it. Or, he says, the punky — just add a different head movement to the frug and you have a new dance. No basic foot steps, just exercise the head, neck, shoulders, rib cage, waist, the pelvis.

"No wonder they died," he says, noting that the dance studios almost died too.

"Then absolutely nothing. Heavy rock. Most nightclubs could not pay the groups, so from 1968 to 1971 they rented ballparks where thousands of kids smoked pot...

"Then came the hustle and the discos came into their own."

De Natale recalled that when he won the dancing championship in the mid-fifties, Britain, Japan and West Germany were the three countries that "impressed me most with their level of social dancing.

"They all were heavy on ballroom dancing — it was considered by them almost like a sport in the Olympics, like an art form. They were trying to be as graceful as possible."

And he ranks John Travolta now with Irene and Vernon Castle, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers and Rudolph Valentino as those who have had both the most influence on social dancing and the life style of their period.

"They created interest in dancing, getting people to come out and dance," de Natale said.

"For a dance to be really popular, it's got to engulf everyone. You can't just have 13-year-olds doing the frug. The hustle is all over the world. It will endure."

Now there is "disco freak." De Natale doesn't take it seriously; says it is for those too lazy to learn the hustle steps properly.

"It will last maybe a couple months."

De Natale has his own "Disco Revue" at Manhattan's Entrance club, with U.S. disco champions Floyd Chisholm and Nellie Cotto. He is working on two books. One is a "how-to" on hustle and disco dancing. The other he calls a "Complete Don de Natale's Roseland," really an autobiography but also all about social dancing. In the spring he will start making his third movie, a dramatic role in "Winnie the Cat Siciliano."

"Dancing is the best form of exercise for the human body," he said. "You can have a full meal and get up and dance and not have stomach cramps. It is exercise and pleasure. Jogging is tedious and lonely."

Now Roseland, which has been around since 1919, has gone disco three nights a week and they are getting up to 2,000 people a night. Roseland founder Louis Brecker would never allow the twist, de Natale said, but before he died he realized the hustle was different.

Clarify Health Insurance Gaps

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Confused by the sales pitches for many different health insurance companies? The Consumer Information Center of the General Services Administration has a booklet to help clarify the situation.

A health insurance policy should pay for most costs of illness or injury, the agency says. If your particular group coverage has serious gaps, supplement it with a low-cost personal policy, the booklet says.

Before you buy any policy, find out how many hospital days it covers. Most plans limit the number of days the insured person can collect benefits.

Hospice Role Discussed At Mental Health Meet

"Pain is not inevitable. Nursing care for the terminally ill can be specialized. Hospices can provide a total care system for patients and families of the terminally ill. Families need less professionalism and more information. These needs can be spun into a pattern without too much expense."

These were the central ideas of talks given by Ms. Mary Ann Rose and Dr. Walter J. Pories during the annual dinner meeting of the Mental Health Association in Pitt County Thursday evening.

Dr. Pories began a hospice in Cleveland, Ohio by declaring six beds in the hospital hospice beds. Resistance to the idea turned to joy in a few months in seeing terminally ill patients served uniquely and well. The hospice grew as professionals and volunteers were challenged to meet the specific needs of these special patients and their families.

Ms. Rose and Dr. Pories used slides of their study of hospices in England.

Officers of the MHA in Pitt County were recognized by Cecil Merritt, president of the MHA in North Carolina. These officers will continue to serve in 1979: Dr. Charles Mitchell, president; Janice Buck, vice president; Evelyn Spangler, secretary; Pam Kachmer, treasurer; Dr. Frank Fuller, assistant treasurer; and Carl Blackwood, member-at-large.

New Board of Directors members were recognized. They are Mrs. Ted L. Albritton, Mrs. Pat Carman, Clifton W. Everett Jr., the Rev. John Gray, the Rev. William Hadden, Mrs. Douglas Moore, Mrs. W. P. Shelton, Dr. Kenneth Taylor, Mrs. Frances Young, Mrs. Thelma Lanier, Alton Warren, and Mrs. Lucille Sledge.

Pres. Mitchell reported on the Association's activities for 1978 and pledged additional focus in 1979 on the prevention of mental illness.

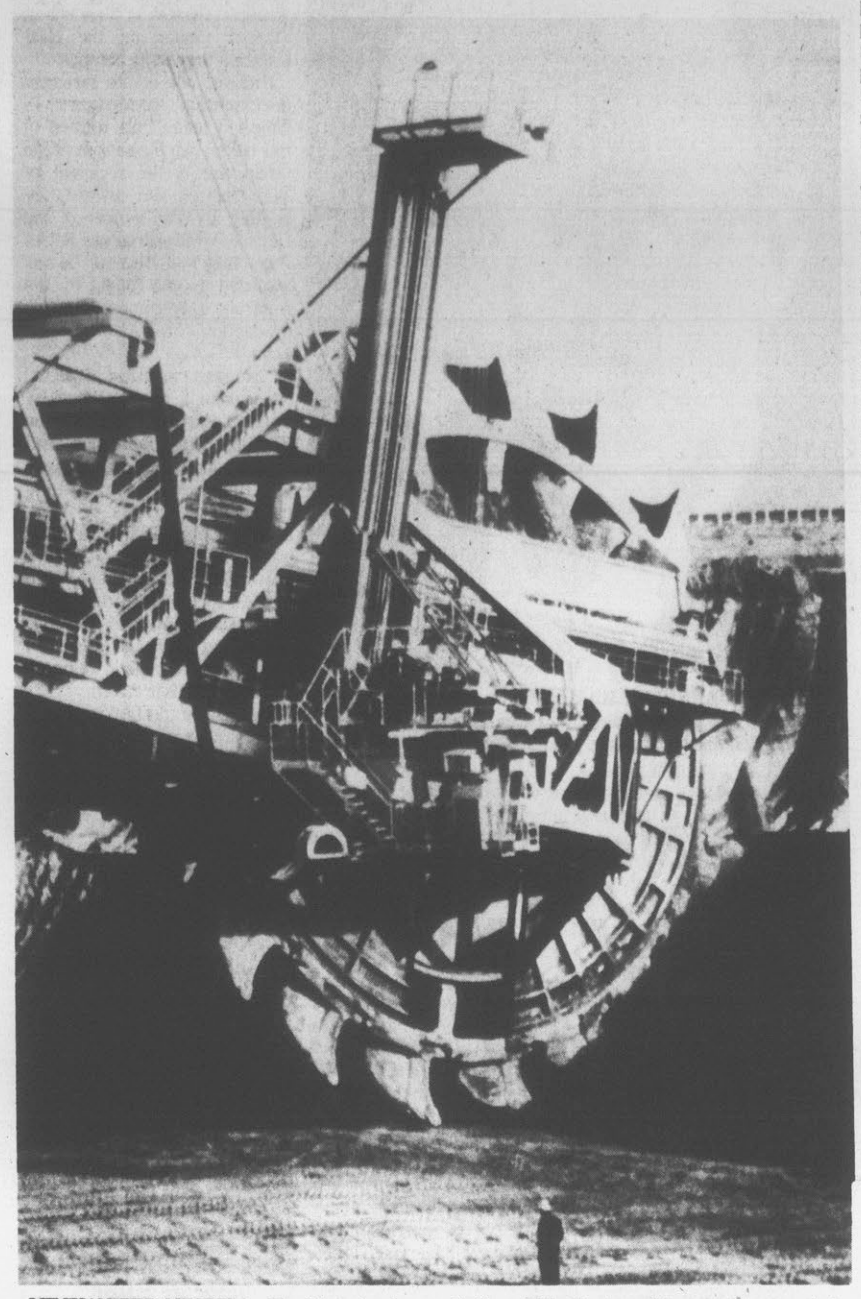

Donald H. Hayes, director of ARC, read a letter from Ben W. Aiken, director of the N. C. Division of Mental Health Services expressing appreciation of the Association's activities and advocacy for mental health concerns.

Rev. Hadden recognized Operation Santa Claus chairmen and extended his congratulations for an outstanding endeavor.

Dan Kelly presented an award to Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Jacobson of Radio Station WOOW for their cooperation with the Association in public education concerning mental health.

Dr. Mitchell presented the annual David W. Hardee Scholarship Award to Bruce Purvis, a graduate student in psychology at East Carolina University.

Dr. Mitchell also recognized Mrs. Ray Evans as chairman of the annual meeting committee and expressed his appreciation to the 80 members and guests present.

MECHANIZED MINING — The biggest mining system in the world has gone into operation near the community of Neiderzier at the Hambach opencast soft coal mine between Aachen and Bonn in West Germany. It is comprised of a bucket wheel excavator and a stacker with a daily capacity of 240,000 cubit meters, five caterpillar tracks, six drive and eight reversal stations. This giant machine can be operated by only five men and can do as much work in a day as 45,000 men using picks and shovels, a quantity which would fill a freight train of 20 ton capacity cars and 255 kilometers long. The giant excavator was planned and built by Krupp Industrial and Steel Construction in Duisburg-Rheinhausen. (AP Laserphoto)

Two Edward Albee plays, directed by the noted playwright, will be performed in Mendenhall Student Center on January 24, under the sponsorship of The Student Union Theater Arts Committee.

At 8 p.m. on that date, Albee's "The Zoo Story" and "The American Dream" will be presented in Mendenhall. Ticket prices are $4.00 ($3.00 for groups of 20 or more). Tickets are now available at the Central Ticket Office, or by phone, 757-6611, extension 266.

Widely acclaimed as one of America's foremost dramatist writing today, Albee is a two time Pulitzer Prize winner as well as the recipient of other scolarly and theatrical awards.

The "Albee Directs Albee" idea was put into concrete form a year ago. Many people, students and theater patrons, had said that though there were many productions of Albee's plays, none seemed to speak clearly of his intentions. Heeding these expressions, Albee conceived the idea of directing his own plays. What began as a planned 16-weeks tour has mushroomed into a 40-weeks project.

Commenting on his own work, Albee claims "I take substance from wherever I can get it. Chekov, Beckett, Noel Coward. I'm involved in a life and death struggle with myself."

Travel Film Coming Soon

"England, Scotland, Wales" is the name and topic of filmmaker Kenneth Richter's documentary travel film which he will show Monday, Jan 22, at 8 p.m. in the Hendrix Theater in Mendenhall Student Center on the East Carolina University campus.

Richter, one of the foremost documentary filmmakers in America today, has worked in more than half the nations of the world. He is the recipient of many prizes and awards, including six-time winner of the Detroit World Adventure Series Popularity Poll. Recently he was awarded a Gold Medal by the Austrian Government for his production "To Austria With Love."

"England, Scotland, Wales," opens with a trip to Dover by Channel Ferry. From there the film depicts life in London, then takes a look back into history with flights over the pre-historic circles and barrows of Kent. Stonehenge, Hadrian's Wall and other famed British sites are shown. In Wales the great Welsh castles, including Harkech Castle at sunset precede vistas of the Isle of Skye and scenes of northwest Scotland in autumn, when heather is in bloom.

Tickets for the film are $1.50 and may be purchased in advance from the Central Ticket Office or at the door prior to the showing.

Richter's film is being shown under the auspices of Mendenhall Student Center.

N.C. Black Music Now On Record

RALEIGH — A record of traditional Black music in North Carolina, called "Eight-Hand Sets and Holy Steps," is now available from the State Museum of History in Raleigh.

One side is original recordings of dance and other secular music; the other side is religious.

Glenn Hinson produced the record for the Museum, a section of the N. C. Dept. of Cultural Resources . The record's appearance at this time coincides with the Museum's year long exhibition, "The Black Presence in North Carolina."

Fifty years ago and more in North Carolina, dances were called "frolics" of "eight-hand sets" in North Carolina's Black communities.

The reels were called dance tunes, and it is said that to learn to play reels on a box — a banjo or guitar — a person had to go to a crossroads at the break of day for nine Sundays in a row to wait for a challenge from the devil. If you made it to the ninth Sunday, Satan himself would confront you, take your box, tune it, and hand it back. From then on you could play any reel you wanted.

A number of individual and group players have contributed to the music recorded on the record.

"Eight-Hand Sets and Holy Steps" is available from the N. C. Museum of History, 109 Jones Street, Raleigh, N. C., 27611 at $4.50 plus 50 cents for postage and handling.

Hospitality House

WASHINGTON — Underwater adventure is the principal topic being shown on Kay Currie's "Hospitality House" over WITN-TV, Channel 7 from noon to 12:45 p.m. today.

Carter Leary of Washington, a diver and sunken ship historian, shows both slides and live footages of two underwater explorations. One of the sites is that of a Spanish treasure galleon off the coast of the Dominican Republic; the other is the U-352 German submarine on the ocean floor off the coast of North Carolina at Cape Lookout.

Leary, well known in underwater exploration, is a charter team-member of a group formed to explore treasure ships in the Caribbean area.

Also a guest on the show is Mrs. Helen Ainslie of Washington, a gourmet cook since 1947. She will demonstrate the making of a working man's meat loaf from Provence, France, using lamb and various vegetables.

The show's butcher will talk about the use of lamb products in cooking, and how that meat could be used more widely in the South than it is at this time.

Visiting Artist Enjoys Playing For Children

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

"I enjoy playing for any audience, but performing for young children is what I most prefer," Walter Wilder observed in talking about his role as Visiting Artist assigned to Pitt Technical Institute.

Basically a lutenist, Wilder also plays other instruments and in appearances at public and private schools, he said "I begin with a familiar instrument, the guitar, then introduce the children to the lute.

"Young children are attentive and ask lots of questions," Wilder said. "Usually they chuckle when they first see the lute because it is different in shape. Invariably, they ask why it has so many strings, what kind of wood is it made of, and how much it costs."

Wilder's is a 14-string lute, a modern development of ancient lutes with a lesser number of strings.

"I begin with a few basic chords, talk about the different kinds of music that can be played on a guitar and a lute. Mostly, I'll perform a short classical piece on the guitar, but I spend most of my time with the children explaining and playing the lute.

"One of their favorites," he continued, "is an anonymous composition, 'Kemps Jig,' an old English tune written for a court jester. I correlate this piece with something most children are familiar with by telling them the tune was popular in the time of Robin Hood. I also explain that a court jester traditionally danced his way from one town to another."

Another attraction Wilder has recently added, one that he says fascinates children, is the ocarina. The ocarina Wilder has is a small four-hole instrument about two inches long, in the shape of a fish. "Its earliest known use was in China about 3,000 B.C.," Wilder noted. "But it also has a long history in Africa and in Mexico. Mine is a Mexican ocarina."

Since coming to Greenville as Visiting Artist last September, Wilder has given performances in many of the schools in Greenville and Pitt County. He has also performed for Kiwanis Clubs, at civic clubs and churches, at East Carolina University, and for women's club.

"Any school, or church or other public group that would like to make arrangements for me to perform can call Pitt Tech and get in touch with me," Wilder said. There is no cost involved for his appearances.

Green Grass Cloggers Danced In Ten Pitt County Schools

by REBECCA BUFFALOE
Reflector Staff Writer

By Monday afternoon, the Green Grass Cloggers of Greenville will have danced their way into the hearts of students at ten Pitt County schools, thanks to a grant from the Grass Roots Program of the North Carolina Arts Council, a state agency.

According to Rodney Sutton, director of the group, response has been overwhelming from the school children, as well as their teachers and supervisors.

"This has been one of the first chances we've had to work with people in our area," said Sutton. "Not only have we given performances for the schools, but we've tried to get into as many classes as possible for ten to 15 minutes apiece to teach children and their teachers some basic steps."

Sutton noted that at the first of the program, which began last Monday, the Cloggers were first going into the classrooms, then giving performances for the schools. However, the group switched the routine around so that children might have a chance to ask questions on the Cloggers' performance.

According to Miriam Harris, Pitt County Schools' Director of Cultural Arts, the Cloggers will have ultimately have visited Grifton, Chicod, G. R. Whitfield, Pactolus, Falkland, Belvoir, Bethel, Wellcome Middle, A. G. Cox and Ayden Middle Schools by Monday, with a workshop for teachers at the Ayden Community Building, Wednesday, at 4 p.m.

Sutton is enthusiastic in his approval of the teachers' workshop.

"After teaching high school for four years, I know how some teachers might perhaps feel that they can't be involved in this sort of thing," said Sutton. "We want to show them that we are involved with the kids on a one-to-one basis, so if we give them this follow-up workshop, they'll be able to brush up on their steps and keep the kids interested in what we've taught them."

Ms. Harris noted that the county school's Community Schools Program is looking into the possibility of starting some clogging classes for interested persons.

The children in grades K-8 were "almost all receptive" to the Cloggers, with many of them able to complete basic steps after a little tutoring, said Sutton.

"If only one-half of them are able to perform the basic steps, then we, as well as they, feel rewarded," Sutton noted.

The Green Grass Cloggers wrote the grant with intentions of performing only in the county schools, but hope to apply for more funds so that they might be able to visit the Greenville City Schools.

"We'd love to do it," said Sutton in reference to visiting the Greenville schools. "We figured that many of the city schools benefit from programs at East Carolina University, so we wanted to do something for the schools in the county who don't usually benefit from those programs."

Sutton noted that the Grass Roots program allows North Carolina artists to perform, with matching funds set up by different agencies, as were the funds from the Pitt County schools.

According to Ms. Harris, the money was well spent, for she has received many letters and telephone calls in appreciation of the Cloggers' services.

"It's been one of the most rewarding things we've ever done," said Sutton of his ten-member dance team. "It's turned out better than we ever expected.

Who Will Be The Greatest?

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER
United Press International

When the history of popular music in the 20th century is written in the year 2000, who will emerge as its greatest entertainer?

There is no easy answer. For many years Al Jolson laid claim to the title and nobody bothered to dispute him. Now Jolson is almost forgotten, although he did leave a legacy on Decca records.

Then there was a fellow named Bing Crosby who almost revolutionized pop music in the 1930s — a man with a pleasant, relaxing voice, a good sense of humor and a tendency to mispronounce polysyllabic words. Lots of fans think he was the greatest.

The same goes for Frank Sinatra, whose great phrasing made him the envy of many opera singers. Perhaps he will be No. 1.

And don't forget Elvis. He had class. And he made an impact that has lost none of its force since his death.

RCA recently released Volume 3 of "Elvis, A Legendary Performer." (RCA CPL 1-3078). There is the limited edition picture disc which contains photographs of Elvis on the record grooves. This is not a new technique, as it was used in the late 1940s to push children's discs, but it is neatly done.

The album is noteworthy because it contains eight previously unavailable performances and an exclusive interview with Presley and Colonel Parker. One of the newly released tunes is "Let It Be Me," which Presley recorded in Las Vegas early in 1970.

Other now-released numbers are "Danny," "Fame and Fortune," "Frankfort Special," "Britches," "Guadalajara," "It Hurts Me" and "Let Yourself Go."

Two of Presley's best hits, "Hound Dog" and "In the Ghetto" are also in this collection.

And what about the women?

Male chauvinists will have to admit that the greatest entertainer of the century may have been a lass instead of a lad.

There's Ethel Merman, and Ella Fitzgerald, and Kate Smith, and Mary Martin, and Lena Horne, and Judy Garland, and Barbra Streisand, just to mention a few.

Helen Reddy has built up a following in this fading decade and she may be remembered by the musicologists.

This thrush thrilled an audience in London with a magnificent recital recently. This music has been preserved on "Helen Reddy, Live in London" (Capitol SKBO-11873), a two-LP album.

Miss Reddy wouldn't have dared to omit her biggest hits, "I Am Woman" and "Ain't No Way to Treat a Lady." There are 13 full-blown tunes, and on the final side there is a medley of a dozen more songs.

Also recommended — "Banjo Bandits" by Roy Clark and Buck Trent (ABC AY 1084) is a natural for those who long for the old tunes, such as "Down Yonder," "Bugle Call Rag," "Beer Barrel Polka" and "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise."

Jazz Gem — Listen to "Chick Corea — Secret Agent" (Polydor PD-1-6176), which includes a bagatelle by Bela Bartok. The rest of the music in this fine session was composed and arranged by Corea. While Corea is a standout on the keyboards, he received excellent backing from other instrumentalists.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Joe R. Stines

Young readers will discover several interesting and colorful picturebooks among recent additions to the children's collection at Sheppard Memorial Library. WRIGGLES; THE LITTLE WISHING PIG by Pauline Watson (Seabury Press, 1978) contains an action-filled text and lively, humorous illustrations by Paul Galdone. Wriggles saw an alligator stick his head out of a pond. Oh, how he wished for a mouth as large as that of the alligator. Wriggles wished for lots of other things: legs like a crane, wings like a pelican, a tail like a kite. Old Uncle Oinkie knew how to make wishes come true, but he warned Wriggles to be careful.

Wriggles went ahead anyway, and what fun he had after he got all his wishes. His mama thought he was a gator-monster, and he scared his brothers and sisters, too, and even Uncle Oinkie. But it wasn't so much fun when he wanted to go home for supper and no one recognized their little wishing Wriggles. This delightful picture book should hold the attention of the very youngest.

Marjorie Sharnat has a new picture book entitled THORNTON THE WORRIER (Holiday House, 1978). While all the other animals in the neighborhood are busy learning new card tricks, sewing and writing an opera, Thornton Rabbit worries. Thornton worries about toothaches, bad weather, his house falling down, mosquito bites, hunger and enemies, among other assorted disasters. He even worries because there are so many things to worry about. Thornton knew nothing but worry until he met an old man who did not worry at all. The old man's house hung on the edge of a cliff, half on land and half on air. Not worrying had given the old man many years of happiness in the house. Thornton began to think! The more he thought; the less he worried. Kay Chorao's line illustrations give expression and emotion to this attractive story for young children.

Finally for the junior genealogist, Paul Showers explains just what a family tree is and how you inherit certain traits from your ancestors in his new book, ME AND MY FAMILY TREE (Crowell, 1978). The author also describes the famous pea-plant experiments conducted by the monk Gregor Mendel and how Mendel's discoveries contributed to our understanding of the traits we humans pass down.

This clearly written introduction to the process of heredity is made even more useful by Don Madden's zestful drawings. Showers points out that every living thing has heredity. A dog, an elephant, a goldfish — each one gets traits from its ancestors. Even plants have heredity.

This work which is part of the Let's-read-and-find-out series will be most useful to students in kindergarten through fourth grade.

In Manhattan in 1683, the British colonists feared an attack by the French. They dumped dirt into the harbor to extend the shoreline so a platform could be built for a battery of guns. And that is how the Battery got it's name.

PBS Specials

The "State of the State" address; blues music; the story of ancient Pompeii; and the history of modern Palestine are subjects of programs to be aired over PBS, UNC-Television Channel 25, Greenville, in the coming week. A short resume of the programs follow:

— Monday, Jan. 15 — Governor James B. Hunt, Jr. will deliver his "State of the State" address to a joint session of the General Assembly. Time of broadcast is 8 p.m. (Note: The governor's address pre-empts the scheduled broadcast of "The Other School System." The pre-empted portion of this series will be broadcast at a later date to be announced).

— Tuesday, Jan. 16, 9 p.m. — A 60-minute special, "Good Mornin' Blues," looks at blues music from its earliest origins around the turn of the century until World War II. Filmed at various locations in Mississippi and featuring many authentic blues singers.

— Wednesday, Jan. 17, 8 p.m. — "The Talking Walls of Pompeii" focuses on wall writings to help tell the story of the Italian city tragically destroyed by Mount Vesuvius' eruption on August 24, 79 A.D. Ironically, one of the graffitis uncovered reads — "I wonder, oh wall, that you do not collapse under the weight of all the idiocies with which these imbeciles cover you."

— Thursday, Jan. 18, 9 to 10:30 p.m. — Part one of a three-part special on "Palestine." The NBC-made film in Part one is entitled "Promises," and deals with Britain's support for a Jewish homeland in Palestine. Part two (9 to 10:30 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 25) is "Rebellion," and traces the history of Palestine from 1937 as well as the impact of World War II on Jewish nationalism. Part three, (Thursday, Feb. 1, 9 to 10:30 p.m.), "Abdication," recounts factors that led to Israel's declaration of independence in 1948.

Danny Kottak hit a three-point play with 1:47 left in overtime to give Virginia Commonwealth a three-point lead over East Carolina University last night and the Pirates were unable to catch up as VCU stopped their winning streak, 85-83.

The loss moved the Pirates back below the .500 mark with a 6-7 record, while VCU climbed to 11-3.

East Carolina, down by as much as eight points in the second half, rallied to take the lead late in the half, but were never able to gain the ball and the lead. Each time, VCU, which burned the nets throughout the game, came back to score a basket and tie it up or regain the lead.

East Carolina had the chance to win it, however, but a George Maynor shot with one second left failed to connect, and the game went into overtime.

In the extra period, the Pirates controlled the tip, but after running nearly a minute off the clock, Maynor was called for charging, and the ball was turned over. Kenny Stancell hit from underneath with 3:57 left for the lead, and seconds later, Frank Hobson was called for a charge, turning it over again.

Nevertheless, the Pirates twice came back to tie it at 73-73 and 75-75, but never had the chance to take the lead again.

"Our kids played a good game, and it was a very hard one for us to lose," Coach Larry Gillman said.

"We were intense, and played well enough to win. I've got to give credit to VCU, but we kept coming back on them. All our strategy worked. We did everything we wanted to but get the win."

Gillman paid special tribute to Hobson, who played under immense emotional pressure. His father died on Friday, "and he showed a lot of class and guts to play like he did tonight," Gillman said. "And the rest of the kids played hard for him."

The coach also praised the Pirate defense on Lorenza Watson, the top scorer for VCU, who got only three points in the game. "(Greg) Cornelius and (Al) Tyson did a great job on him. But (Monty) Knight and Stancell did a great job for them."

Knight sparked a pull away at the start of the second half, hitting seven straight shots without missing.

Overall, VCU's shooting was outstanding. The Rams hit on 17 of 23 in the second half and overtime, an amazing 73.9 percent, and for 66 per cent of their shots in the game. The Pirates shot well enough to win otherwise, hitting 55.9 per cent for the contest.

Rebounding was almost even, as were turnovers.

One key play came right at the end of the half, and might have been the difference in the game. With one second left, VCU had the ball out-of-bounds under its own basket and got the ball into Ed Sherrod for a 20-foot jumper that was good and gave the Rams a 35-34 halftime lead.

"We were trying to protect them from lobbing the ball into Watson, and doubled up on him. We just didn't get back out to Sherrod in time," Gillman said about the play.

Gillman was also fussy about the two charging calls early in the overtime. "They also called Walter (Moseley) for a deliberate foul at midcourt when he was diving for a loose ball. That was terrible. Then, when they grabbed Mack when he went in for a shot, it was only a one-and-one."

The officials also were given a round of boos when Mack was called for a technical for grabbing the rim. Mack had driven in for a dunk, but was blocked. To avoid being flipped by Knight on the play, he grabbed the rim in self defense.

"I guess they just felt that a rule was a rule and there are no mitigating circumstances," Gillman said. "Actually they should have ejected Knight for undercutting Mack like he did."

After early scrimmages, VCU pulled away from a 17-17 tie to a 23-17 lead, their biggest of the first half. But the Bucs came back to regain the lead at 28-27 on a four point play that came when the VCU coach was called for a technical after Watson was called on a charge and his basket disallowed. Herb Krusen made both foul shots, then Maynor scored following the in-bounds.

But ECU couldn't hold the lead, and VCU came back after four more lead changes to hit at the horn and hold the 35-34 edge.

Knight hit the first eight points of the second half as VCU ran its lead out to seven at 45-38. But the Pirates hung in there and struggled back, finally tieing it up on two Hobson free throws with 5:39 left at 61-61.

Hobson hit from the lane after that to give the Pirates a 63-62 lead, but they could never get the ball ahead, as Kottak got a three-pointer to take a 65-63 lead.

ECU went back ahead one last time at 67-66, with 3:47 to go.

VCU tied it up three times after that, the last time coming when Kottak hit with 20 seconds left. The Pirates had their chance but missed at the horn, and it went into overtime.

Kottak and Knight led the Ram scoring with 22 points each, while Stancell had 20 and Sherod had 14.

East Carolina was paced by Mack with 26, while Maynor had 19, Hobson had 14 and Cornelius had 10.

Doughton Sparks UNC Past Duke, 74-68

By Naomi Kaufman
Associated Press Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Jed Doughton substituted for Dave Colescott early in the first half and set up an offense that led North Carolina to a 74-68 college basketball victory over Duke Saturday.

"Doughton played a remarkable game in Colescott's place," Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith said after the game. "And Dudley Bradley's defensive effort, even when we went to the zone, was instrumental."

Colescott caught an elbow from Duke center Mike Gminski and was taken to N.C. Memorial Hospital for examination. Smith said Colescott didn't appear to have any bone fractures, but said doctors found blood in Colescott's eye. Colescott will remain in the hospital, Smith said.

Smith praised the Blue Devils who led at the half by one and who kept up with the Tar Heels most of the second half. "I still think Duke is a team that can win the national championship," Smith said.

Gminski was the game high-scorer with 22 points and kept Duke alive when the other players' shooting ran cold late in the second half. Mike O'Koren played a key role for North Carolina on the free throw line, hitting 11 of 15 shots, seven of them in the second half.

Duke Coach Bill Foster said, "We played inconsistently and that's about all I have to say. We're on a roller coaster offensively."

Foster was also critical of Duke's turnovers. The Blue Devils shot 51 percent from the field, compared to the Tar Heels 49 percent, but were unable to keep control of the ball and made 13 fouls in the second half.

North Carolina increased its record to 11-2 overall, and 3-1 in the ACC. Duke stands at 10-3 overall and 1-1 in the conference.

Duke took a one-point lead into the dressing room at the half, but the Tar Heels outscored the Blue Devils 12-4 in the first five minutes of second half play.

Duke pulled back within one after Mike Gminski — who scored a game-high 22 points — made two quick baskets and three successful free throws. But the Tar Heels kept ahead and led by nine points, 59-50, with 7:51 left.

Bradley and O'Koren kept on scoring in the last five minutes of the game after the Tar Heels briefly went into four corners offense.

Duke forward Gene Banks, who lead the scoring in the first half with 16, got his fourth foul with a little more than nine minutes left and sat out the next five minutes.

Bradley forced several turnovers when Duke had possession of the ball and the Tar Heels were able to maintain a comfortable lead. Carolina got a second nine-point lead after a shot by Bradley with 2:47 left.

Duke pulled back within four after Bob Bender converted a goal tending call on the Tar Heel's Jed Doughton and made both free throws with 1:06 left.

Vince Taylor shot a 15-foot field goal with 43 seconds left, putting Duke three points behind, 69-66. But the Tar Heels took over the scoring in the last 30 seconds with Jimmy Black making three crucial free throw shots. Wood scored the last basket with six seconds left.

Pack Loses

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — All-America Cindy Brogden scored 30 points to pace 4th-ranked Tennessee to a 79-66 win over 8th-ranked North Carolina State in women's college basketball Saturday.

Mahaffey's Birdie Holds Lead

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — John Mahaffey had to drop a 10-foot birdie putt on the final hole to retain a 1-stroke lead over on-rushing Lee Trevino in Saturday's fourth round of the $275,000 Bob Hope Desert Golf Classic.

Mahaffey, the comeback kid who won the PGA and World Cup individual titles last season, shot his 71 in relative anonymonity at Bermuda Dunes.

Meanwhile, most of the huge gallery of some 22,000 flocked to Indian Wells, where Hope, former President Gerald Ford, celebrity amateurs and most of the leading players were competing.

It was there, in warm, sunny, 72-degree temperatures, that Trevino cut out a solid, 2-under-par 70 that could have been a little better.

Mahaffey had a 274 total, 14 shots under par, after one round on each of the four desert courses used for the first four rounds of this unique event: Indian Wells, Bermuda Dunes, La Quinta and Tamarisk.

Trevino, seeking his first victory ever in California, was at 275.

Sunday's final round will be played at Indian Wells.

"I played reasonably well, but I made a few mistakes," Trevino said, then considered the situation. "But, you know, I'm almost glad I made those mistakes today. If I make them tomorrow, it could have a different effect on the tournament."

One of those mistakes came on the 18th hole, a par 5. "I used the wrong club," he said of his second shot into the green, which came to rest well above the hole on a steeply sloping green.

He had an eagle putt, but little chance to make it. "I just didn't know what to do with that putt," he said. He missed from long distance and ran it some 12 feet by the hole. And he missed coming back, turning a potential eagle — which would have given him the lead alone — into a 3-putt par that left him one back.

"Everybody is a little surprised in the first tournament of the year if they do well," Trevino said. "You just don't feel like you're ready. But I'm not as surprised as most. I've been out here quite a while getting ready. I've hit a lot of balls, played a lot of golf."

Alan Tapie, Wally Armstrong and Grier Jones were tied for third going into the final round. They were at 278, three shots back of Trevino and four behind Mahaffey, who now has held the lead for three days in this unique, five-day, 90-hole event. Jones had a 69 at Bermuda Dunes, Tapie 68 at Tamarisk and Armstrong 68 at Indian Wells.

Tied at 279 were Leonard Thompson and Keith Fergus. Fergus — who once shared the lead before a double bogey-bogey-bogey string — shot a 75 at Tamarisk. Thompson had the same score at Indian Wells.

Jack Nicklaus, who hit a shot out of bounds and made double bogey-7 on the eighth hole at Indian Wells, appeared to have shot himself out of title contention. His 72 left him with a 281 total, seven strokes off the pace.

Trevino had matched three birdies with as many bogeys through the first 13 holes, then made his move with a 2-putt birdie-4 on the 14th. He got a share of the lead with a 15-footer for birdie on the next hole, then had a chance to take sole control of the top spot when he reached the par-5 18th in two, only to follow with a 3-putt.

Mahaffey had a string of 17 consecutive pars before he coaxed in the 10-footer on the final hole for the birdie that left him alone in the lead.

"I was hitting the ball well, but I was leaving everything short on the green," he said. "I felt like I should have been using a sledge hammer instead of a putter."

Elder Is Ejected

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Lee Elder was disqualified from the Bob Hope Desert Golf Classic Saturday after playing a ball under the wrong rule.

Elder, winner of two tournaments last year, hit a shot into a palm tree on the second hole at Indian Wells. The ball stuck in the tree.

Elder played his next shot under the unplayable lie rule without identifying the ball. Under the rules of golf, he should have played it as a lost ball which calls for a penalty of stroke and distance.

He finished the round with a score of 73 and a 285 total, which would have qualified him to play in Sunday's final round. The infraction of the rule was reported, however, and Elder was disqualified.

Clemson Nips Wake Forest

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Guards Billy Williams and Derrick Johnson scored four points each in the second overtime period as Clemson defeated Wake Forest 71-66 Saturday night for its first Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory of the season.

Clemson broke a three-game losing streak and improved its record to 10-3 overall and 1-2 in the ACC.

The Tigers, down by four points with 1:26 left in regulation, sent the game into overtime when freshman Horace Wyatt tipped in a missed shot and Larry Nance hit a 15-foot jumper.

Wake Forest had two chances to win the game in the final 1:10 but Alvis Rogers missed the front end of a one-and-one and Guy Morgan missed a shot from the floor. The Deacons, coming off upsets of ACC foes Maryland and North Carolina, slipped to 2-2 in the conference and 8-6 overall.

Each team scored only two points in the first overtime.

Williams scored to put Clemson ahead by two points early in the second overtime, and the Tigers didn't relinquish the lead again. Wilbert Singleton's two baskets were the Deacons' only points in the final five minutes.

Wake Forest took a 26-25 lead with 3:04 left in the first half, and did not trail again until overtime.

Rogers of Wake Forest was the game's high scorer with 20 points. Nance led Clemson with 13 points, followed by Williams' 12 points.

Hull Captures First In Bethel Marathon

BETHEL — Bill Hull captured first place in the North Carolina marathon, held Saturday in Bethel.

Hull finished the race in a time of 2:26.14, while Charlie Markman was second with a time of 2:29.54.

Bryan Lesley was third in 2:30.10, with Finn Pincus fourth in 2:32.16, and Dave Smith fifth in 2:33.41.

A total of 200 runners finished the course, of the approximately 230 who started. Entries in the race were expected to total around 800, but the cold, rainy weather was blamed for many no-shows.

In the minimarathon, a 13.1 mile event, David Reintjes won in a time of 1:09.24, followed by Jim Dill in 1:11.17. Randy Cook was third in 1:11.47 and Jeff Hutchinson next in 1:15.02. Stephen McCracken rounded out the top five in 1:15.02.

Among women finishers in the marathon, Henley Roughpon was first in 3:08.97, followed by Erika Wiemann in 3:08.27, Stephanie Flynn in 3:11.22; Karen George in 3:17.04 and Carolyn Smith in 3:32.33.

Pirates Hold Off Maine In Swim Meet

East Carolina dominated the freestyle events to stop Maine, 63-50, in a college swimming meet.

John Tudor was a triple individual winner, capturing the 50 and 100-yard freestyles and the 200-yard individual medley to pace the Pirates, who captured every freestyle race.

Tudor won swimming's fastest event in 21.51 seconds, the 100 free in 46.90 seconds, and the IM in 1:56.69.

Ted Nieman won the 200 free in 1:40.47, setting a pool record, and came back later in the meet to also take the 500 free in 4:40.63.

"As soon as I saw that Maine had shaved I changed my lineup," said Pirate coach Ray Scharf. "I knew we would have to concentrate on the freestyle events to win, and even then it went down to the final event."

Maine was within sight of the upset going into the final race, but Bill Fehling and Joe Kushy posted a slim lead for the Pirates in the freestyle relay before Jack Clowar and Ted Nieman lengthened the margin to a comfortable edge in a winning time of 3:11.60.

The next competition for the Pirate men will be at home on Jan. 20 at 1 p.m. against Richmond.

South Pastes Fumbling North

By KENDAL WEAVER
Associated Press Writer

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Arkansas' Vaughn Lusby returned a kickoff 82 yards to break an early tie, and Alabama's Jeff Rutledge directed a potent South attack Saturday as the South defeated the fumble-ridden North 41-21 in the Senior Bowl football game.

Willie Jones, a defensive tackle from Florida State, was a one-man wrecking crew in spoiling the North offense. He was named most valuable player in this 30th annual contest between top college seniors. Jones had six solo sacks.

Rutledge was at the helm of the South as it blitzed to a 24-7 first-quarter lead. For the game, he ran for one touchdown, threw for another and had a hand in scoring drives that accounted for 31 points.

Lusby opened the door for the South's first-quarter blitz when he picked up a fumbled kickoff and, stumbling through heavy traffic, burst into the clear for an 82-yard run that broke a 7-7 tie.

After that, with the help of North fumbles, Rutledge guided the South to 10 more first-quarter points and 14 in the third quarter.

Jones won a new automobile for his most valuable player award.

Winning $1,000 for other individual performances were South lineman Marty Lyons of Alabama and South back Don Bessillieu of Georgia Tech. Top honors for the North went to Mark Gastineau, a defensive lineman from East Central Oklahoma, and receiver Kirk Gibson of Michigan State, who highlighted the North attack with seven catches.

Lamp Lights Way To Cav Win Over State

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Sophomore Jeff Lamp scored 25 points, including four free throws in the last 32 seconds, as Virginia's Cavaliers rallied for a 67-62 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball upset Saturday over North Carolina State's eighth-ranked Wolfpack.

The Cavaliers, 8-4 overall and 2-1 in the conference, never were ahead until Lee Raker, who had 17 points, hit a jumper from the right corner with 5:50 left to make it 50-48.

Virginia built its lead to 55-47 on a tap-in by Terry Gates with 3:04 remaining, but the Wolfpack narrowed the gap to 59-58 with 1:03 left on a 17-footer by Hawkeye Whitney and a free throw by Whitney, who finished with 19 points.

But the Wolfpack, now 11-4 overall and 0-3 in the ACC, never got closer as Jeff Jones hit two free throws and Lamp hit four in a row to offset field goals by the Wolfpack's Kenny Matthews and Whitney.

Virginia hit 15 straight free throws in the second half, Lamp accounting for 13, and hit 9 of 13 floor shots for 69.2 percent after State had shot 62 percent in building a 38-34 lead at intermission.

State came out in a semi-stall to open the second half of the regionally televised game, and just four points were scored in the first 4:21.

"It was no big deal," said State Coach Norman Sloan. "We were ahead and we wanted to make Virginia pay the price on defense. After a while, we'd go for the good shot. We had foul troubles and we wanted to protect our players in the game."

Sloan said the Wolfpack "wanted to run it down and play an 8-, 10-or 14-minute game."

Coach Terry Holland of Virginia said, "It was a very good win for us, a very gutty performance. I thought our kids played good, good basketball. Everybody came up with the play when they needed to."

Jeff Jones, a 6-foot-3 freshman, directed the Virginia offense in the second half and "did a super job," said Holland. "We went with him because of his height. He can see over the zone. He's a very heady freshman."

Although Holland said the Cavaliers have "put some good games back to back," he added that "we're still not anywhere as good as we can be. We're more of a full-court team than last year."

Holland said he went with a short lineup at the end because "the game wasn't played under the boards, but on the perimeter."

"Virginia shot extremely well," said Sloan. "We used a couple of defenses. We got caught between a rock and a hard place. Against our zone, they hit the jumpers. Against the man-to-man, we got into foul trouble."

Sloan said, "We're disappointed starting the league 0-3, but not disheartened. I think we can pull ourselves out of it. There's nothing wrong. We're just not winning."

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Herb Williams scored 29 points and Jim Smith hit a crucial free throw in overtime to give Ohio State a 69-66 victory Saturday over previously unbeaten and fourth-ranked Illinois in a Big Ten game.

Ohio State took over first place in the conference while the defeat snapped Illinois' 15-game winning streak. The Illini had beaten top-ranked Michigan State Thursday night.

Ohio State guard Carter Scott scored a field goal with 42 seconds remaining in regulation time, tying the score 60-60. Buckeye guard Todd Penn then won a jump ball from Illinois' Rob Judson with 19 seconds to go. Ohio State missed a shot and with five seconds left in regulation time, Judson fired a 25-footer but it missed, sending the game into overtime.

Ohio State's Kelvin Ramsey hit a field goal at 4:21 of the overtime period to put Ohio State ahead to stay, 62-60. Illinois did not score in the overtime period until 27 seconds were left to play.

Williams picked off an Illinois pass and Ramsey scored at 9:20 of the second period to put Ohio State ahead 52-51 for the first time since midway through the first half.

However, he and Williams missed four free throws in a row, and Mark Smith put the Illini back in front 55-54 with 5:57 to go in regulation time.

Smith was Illinois' leading scoring with 24 points.

The victory gave Ohio State an overall season record of 9-4, and the Buckeyes are 4-0 in the Big Ten.

Countdown Begun For Super Bowl Thirteen

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI (AP) — The sun and fun capital of the country becomes the football capital as well this week when the Dallas Cowboys and Pittsburgh Steelers arrive in town to begin preparations for Super Bowl XIII.

The National Football League's World Championship game is scheduled for next Sunday in the Orange Bowl and it marks the first time since the series began in 1967 that there has been a rematch. Pittsburgh defeated Dallas 21-17 in the 1976 game, also played in the Orange Bowl.

The two teams advanced by winning their conference championships last week. Dallas exploded for four second half touchdowns to rout Los Angeles 28-0 for the National Conference title while Pittsburgh bunched 17 points in 48 seconds en route to a 34-5 romp over Houston for the American Conference crown.

Both teams will be seeking an unprecedented third Super Bowl championship. Pittsburgh won the title in 1975 against Minnesota and repeated the following year against Dallas. The Cowboys, who are making a record fifth Super Bowl appearance, split their first four title games, losing in 1971 to Baltimore, winning in 1972 against Miami, losing in 1976 to Pittsburgh and winning last year against Denver.

The matchup may be the best in Super Bowl history. Both teams are considered the class of their conferences and they seem to reaching the game at the peak of their efficiency.

After a 6-4 start, the defending champion Cowboys won the last six games of the regular season in a row and then eliminated Atlanta and Los Angeles in the playoffs. Pittsburgh won its first seven regular season games and finished with five straight victories and a 14-2 record, the best mark in the NFL. The Steelers eliminated defending AFC champion Denver and Houston in the first two playoff games.

The Steelers have been installed as three-point favorites for the game.

Both teams are expected to arrive in Miami Monday and will begin workouts on Tuesday. The Cowboys will stay in Fort Lauderdale and practice at Yankee Stadium, spring training base of baseball's world champions. The Steelers will be quartered near Miami International airport and will practice at Biscayne College, the regular training site of the Miami Dolphins.

The airport, incidentally, will be the site of one of the social highlights of Super Bowl week — a Friday night party hosted by the league. This intimate gathering of about 6,000 people has previously been held in such places as the Houston Astrodome, Hialeah Race Track and the Queen Mary.

A capacity crowd of more the 75,000 fans will jam the Orange Bowl for the game and with a sellout assured, ticket scalpers and counterfeiters have moved into the market. Tickets with a face value of $30 are already bringing up to $200 for the scalpers and the league warns customers to be on the outlook for bogus ones.

As for the game itself, it matches two of the NFL's very best quarterbacks, Roger Staubach of the Cowboys and Terry Bradshaw of the Steelers.

Staubach set Dallas passing records with 231 completions in 413 attempts for 3,190 yards and 25 touchdowns. His 84.9 percent rating was the best in the NFL.

Bradshaw, the first Steeler ever to win a conference passing title, completed 207 of 368 attempts for 2,915 yards and 28 touchdowns.

Cards Top Terrapins

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Darrell Griffith scored 14 of his season-high 30 points during a six-minute period spanning the halftime intermission and led 12th-ranked Louisville to a 99-84 victory over Maryland Saturday night.

The Cardinals, 12-3, took a 49-40 halftime lead with a 9-2 spurt in the final 1:35, and then opened up a 20-point lead after just four and a half minutes of the second half.

Griffith scored eight points in the final four and a half minutes of the first half after Maryland had taken a 34-31 lead. He then sank his first three shots after intermission as the Cardinals took a 59-42 advantage.

Bobby Turner scored 20 points for Louisville, which has won its last four in a row. Larry Gibson scored 25 for Maryland, now 11-4.

The Terps rallied to within 80-69 with seven minutes remaining before Griffith scored six points and Derek Smith, five to rebuild Louisville's lead to 91-71.

Petty To Go As Far As Can

By JERRY GARRETT
AP Motorsports Writer

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Richard Petty, still recovering from major stomach surgery last month, said Saturday he would attempt to go the distance in Sunday's $160,000 Winston Western 500 Grand National stock car race.

"We'll give it a whirl," said Petty, who is still quite a bit under his program weight of 195 pounds. "My stamina isn't built back up to what it should be yet. I feel great though. Practice hasn't been as tough on me as I thought it was going to be, so we decided to give the race a try."

Petty added he is encouraged by a favorable weather forecast—cool temperatures and little or no wind—for the 2 p.m. EST start of the 1979 Winston Cup campaign opener.

The 40-year-old Petty, winless in his last 44 Grand National starts, seemed more concerned that his son Kyle, who begins his own racing career next month at Daytona Beach, Fla., might not be here Sunday. The younger Petty was reported stuck in Minneapolis waiting out a snowstorm that closed airports throughout the Midwest.

"If Richard had had this problem a couple months from now instead of now, Kyle would have been the relief driver," said a team member.

Privately, Petty team members said they expected veteran Hershel McGriff to be standing by to relieve Petty whenever the six-time national champion calls for help.

Knoetze Gains Knockout Win

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Kallie Knoetze, an ex-South African cop who was the target of civil rights groups and the U.S. government in a bid to stop his fighting here, knocked out Bill Sharkey in the fourth round of a scheduled 10-round national televisiion fight that had been surrounded by controversy for days.

In fact, there was doubt the fight would take place as late as 1 p.m. Saturday, just four hours before it was scheduled to begin. Civil rights advocates got the Miami Beach Boxing Commissioners to call a meeting to try and convince the commission to revoke Knoetze's boxing license.

The commission voted 4-0 with one abstention to allow the fight to go on, and once it began, Knoetze was in command from the start. Sharkey simply could not handle the ponderous strength of the ex-policeman, who drew the outrage of civil rights leaders because he shot a 15-year-old black in both legs while serving as a police officer in 1977.

In the hours leading up to the fight, about 140 pickets staged an orderly march near the front entrance of the Convention Center.

The protestors carried signs that read, "Knockout South Africa," and "Knoetze Doesn't Kill Children But His Government Does," "CBS — Evil Eye." They also chanted "CBS Blood Money."

However, just before fight time, counter demonstrators showed up, carrying signs saying, "NAACP is Racist" and "What About Kallie's Human Rights?"

CBS televised the fight nationally, despite efforts of such civil rights leaders as the Rev. Jesse Jackson to get the network to pull out of the fight.

Kevin O'Malley, vice president of communications for CBS, said, "We had a signed contract to televise the fight if it was legal. The interpretation we got of the ruling after a federal court order was that the order covered the question of his work visa.

"Based on that fact, we made a judgment that the fight was taking place legally."

CBS reportedly paid $100,000 for the rights to televise the fight, which was to have been co-promoted by Madison Square Garden and Chris Dundee of Miami Beach.

However, the Garden pulled put of the fight last Tuesday when the State Department revoked Knoetze's visitor's visa.

Rampant Rally Carries Past Eagles

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rose High School's Rampants gave up 47 points to Northeastern High School of Elizabeth City Friday night in the first half, then held the Eagles to just 18 in the second half, rallying to win 69-65.

The win was the second in Division I competition for Rose in four games, and gave the Rampants a 4-8 overall mark. Northeastern fell to 3-2 in the league and 7-3 overall.

The first half was a free-wheeling affair as the Eagles constantly raced down the court to outdistance the Rose defense. But in the second, the Rampants regained their composure and forced Northeastern into mistakes.

Earlier in the evening, the Rose High School girls had won their first conference game in four starts, downing Northeastern by a 42-30 score. The Northeastern junior varsity won its game, 85-76.

"Our kids played hard," Rampant coach Jim Brewington said. "It's the best they've played all year. (Derwin) Clemons was off his usual game, but the rest played real well.

"I think our defense brought us back in the second half. This is the kind of game I've been looking for. We're still in the conference race."

Brewington had special praise for the play of Donald House and Cliff Kilpatrick. "I think we rebounded well against them too, even though they had more height. It was their (House and Kilpatrick) rebounding that did it.

"If we keep playing like this, we'll be in the race right down to the wire," Brewington added.

While the Rampants never led until the final quarter, they were able to stay close, despite the race-horse tactics of the Eagles. Northeastern shot well in the first half, hitting 20 of 36 shots from the floor. But in the second half, the Eagle touch was lost, and they made just nine of 23.

Rose, down 22-21 in rebounding at the half, came back to hold an overall 42-37 margin in that department.

And another key factor was that the Rampants solved Northeastern's backcourt press after the first half, and in the final period when the Rampants moved ahead, didn't have one turnover. At the same time, they forced four by the Eagles.

Dudley White led the Eagles in the early minutes when they went out to a 4-0 lead and extended it to 8-2, and then 12-4 before Rose got going.

The Rampants rallied to tie it up at 12-12 and again at 14-14 before the Eagles pulled away again, moving out by six before falling back to a 23-19 margin at the end of the period.

Rose cut the lead back to two or three points a couple of times, but each time never got the chance to tie it up, as the Eagles came back and scored each time. Northeastern pulled back to an eight point lead once more, 38-30, and held on for a seven point margin at the half, 47-40.

In the third period, however, things started to turn around. After the Eagles hit the first two baskets to go out by 11, 51-40, the Rampants began their rally. Over the next six minutes, they outhit the Eagles, 14-6, with House leading the way with six points. That cut the margin back to 57-54 at the end of the period.

After some early jitters at the start of the period that saw the Eagles move back out by five, 61-56, Rose came back on four points by House and a driving layup by Calvin Whichard to take the lead, 62-61 with 5:01 left.

After that, Rose got the ball back and went into a delay offense, forcing fouls, and making five of nine over the final 4:23, as the Rampants built up as much as a six-point lead before it was over.

House led the scoring with 22, while Kilpatrick had 14, Whichard had 12 and Wallace Brown added 11.

White led the Eagles with 15, with Warren Armstrong and Mike Nixon each hitting 12.

In the girls' game, Rose shook off the Eaglettes in the second period, scoring the final eight points of the frame to move ahead for good.

The two swapped the lead in the first period, which ended with Rose up, 5-4, but Northeastern came back to score the first five of the second frame and take a 10-5 lead.

Rose tied it at 10-10, and then at 12-12 before taking the lead for good on two free throws by Margaret McGlohon. Rose pulled away, making just two field goals and nine free throws in the period, to take an 18-12 lead at intermission.

Rose continued to lead throughout the third period, by as much as eight and by as little as three, but they were never caught and held a 29-24 margin at the horn. During the final period, the Rampettes pulled away again, going out by as much as 14 points before the end.

Kathy Streeter led Rose with 16 points, while McGlohon added 10. Barbara Johnson had 16 to lead Northeastern.

"We spent the last two days working on defense," Coach Robert Carraway said, "and it payed off. I think we played our best defense of the year, whether we were in a man-to-man or a zone. We were real slow offensively, but we wanted to slow it down on them. We did a good job with the spread offense late in the game. When we have Kathy and Margaret in there, we can do it well against most teams.

"Mary Gay came in and did a good job for us too, after Donna Cullipher got into foul trouble."

Texas Halts Arkansas Winning Streak With 66-63 Upset Victory

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Texas spoiled two winning streaks for 10th-ranked Arkansas Friday night, as Ron Baxter's inside play helped the unranked Longhorns beat the Razorbacks at home 66-63.

The game was the only one Friday night that involved a team ranked in The Associated Press' Top 20.

Jim Krivacs and John Moore fueled the Texas offense, with Krivacs pouring in 21 points and Moore adding 17.

The Longhorns stopped Arkansas' unbeaten string at 10 and shattered a 35-game home court winning streak dating back to January 1976, when Arkansas lost to Southern Methodist University by one point.

Last year, Texas spoiled a 13-game winning streak for Arkansas by beating the Razorbacks in Austin, Texas, 75-69.

In the first half, Baxter, who sprained his ankle against Houston Monday night, limped onto the floor after 10 minutes of play and fired in 11 points and grabbed 11 rebounds. Baxter's play helped Texas roll to a 38-32 halftime lead.

Arkansas' Sidney Moncrief, who had 22 points, got 18 of them in the first half.

Arkansas took three quick baskets at the outset of the second half to erase the Longhorns' six-point margin.

After that, the alert play of Texas' defense began to tell. Baxter pumped in two baskets after the Longhorn defenders picked up a couple of loose balls.

That helped Texas break out to a 62-53 lead with 4:09 left in the game that quickly disappeared in a flurry of Arkansas baskets. Trailing by one point with 38 seconds on the clock, Moncrief lost the ball on a turnover when he tried to shoot from the middle of three Texas players.

Arkansas missed its last opportunity seconds later when freshman guard Mike Young threw a hurried pass into the hands of a Texas player.

Elsewhere:

North Lenoir Nips Vikings

WHEAT SWAMP — North Lenoir rallied in the fourth quarter to take a 63-60 come-from-behind victory over D. H. Conley in an Eastern Carolina Conference basketball game Friday night.

The Vikings led 18-14 at the end of the first quarter, but the Hawks carried a 35-31 lead into the locker room at halftime. Conley came back out and went ahead of the Hawks in the third quarter' but North Lenoir rallied in the final period.

Amos Pearcill paced North Lenoir with 25 points, while teammate Johnny Wiggins added 12. The Conley attack was led by Shawn Little with 21 and Darryl Thompson with 11.

North Lenoir also won the girls' game as the Lady Hawks downed the Valkyries 47-46.

Like the boys' game, it took a North Lenoir rally in the final period to provide the win. Conley led 35-32 going into the fourth quarter.

Mary Rhodes led North Lenoir with 15 points, while Cynthia Sherrod scored 10. Glenda Green hit 17 points for Conley, while Cassandra Tyson added 16.

North Pitt Breezes Past Falcons

By JIM KYLE
Reflector Sports Writer

BETHEL — North Pitt's shorter Panthers knew it would take a superior effort for them to be able to rebound against C. B. Aycock's tall front line Friday night.

Before the game, Panther coach Cobby Deans stressed the fact that a good showing on the boards would be needed for his team to defeat the Falcons.

Led by skywalking Reginald Knight and Henry Knight, North Pitt hit the boards hard in the game, and when it was over, the rebounding statistics were dead even and North Pitt had defeated Aycock 73-63.

Rebounding wasn't the only factor that led to the Panther victory, but it was a major one. In addition to the board work, the North Pitt five ran a patient, unselfish offense and played a stingy defensive game against the talented Falcons.

"We just had a good effort, it was probably the best offensive night we've had," Deans said. "We had good team play and the defense was better than it has been being. Mickey Hines played a good defensive game."

But rebounding was the key. "One of the things we talked about we had to do was rebound. Henry Knight and Reginald Knight did the job we had to do on the boards to beat them."

The game was a see-saw battle through the first quarter with the lead changing hands six times. North Pitt led 16-15 at the end of the period and then hit the first four buckets of the second quarter to go up by nine, 24-15.

The Falcons chopped the lead to three when James Whitley canned a jumper from the foul line with 1:28 left in the first half, but North Pitt took a 36-31 margin into the locker room at intermission.

William and Reginald Knight hit early in the third quarter to move the Panthers back up by nine and they sustained that lead on Hines' turnaround from the right side at the buzzer to go up 52-43 going into the final period.

Whitley connected on five long-range bombs in the first half of the fourth quarter, but the Panthers beat the Falcon man-to-man press for numerous easy buckets to stretch the final margin of the hard-fought contest to 10.

"This was the first team offense we've had," Deans noted. "We penetrated, ran the offense and made the good pass. We hit the teammate, which was good to me—that's what I like."

The Panthers were generous with their passes, and for their unselfishness they were rewarded with their fourth Eastern Carolina Conference victory in eight games.

North Pitt was patient in its offensive attack and it paid off as the hosts seldom had to settle for a bad shot. Only 12 of the Panthers' 34 field goals was taken from beyond 10 feet. The team hit 54.8 per cent of its shots.

"It was a good offensive pattern game. That gives you the good shot if they're pressing," Deans explained.

The Panthers were led by Reginald Knight's 26 points. The strong forward got nearly all of his points close in, including a pair of dunks. But that was only part of his worth.

The Falcons concentrated on Knight defensively and that took a lot of the defensive pressure off the other Panthers, Deans said, allowing Knight to dish the ball off for easy buckets. "He had right many assists," Deans said.

Henry Knight scored 18 points for the Panthers, while Mickey Hines added 11. Whitley had 22 for Aycock and teammate Barry Uzzell added 19.

In the girls' game, North Pitt rallied from a 12-6 first-quarter deficit to make it 16-15 at halftime, but Aycock pulled away in the third quarter and went on to take a 43-30 victory.

The Lady Falcons held the Pant-HERS to just two points in the third period, while they scored eight. Then, they prevented North Pitt from rallying by hitting foul shots in the final quarter.

Aycock scored 11 of its 19 fourth-quarter points from the free throw line.

Both teams had balanced attacks, with no girl getting into double figures. Renee Hales and Debra Proctor both had nine for Aycock, while Carolyn Best and Annie Roberson led North Pitt with six each.

Thompson Tops Two Divisions

East Carolina's Rosie Thompson continues to lead the state's Division I women's basketball player in both scoring and rebounding in the current statistics released by the North Carolina Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women.

Thompson's pace-setting scoring average is 25.1 points through games of January 6. She is the only double-figure rebounder at 11.9 per game. Teammate Marcia Girven is second in rebounding with a 9.7 average, followed by Genia Beasley of N.C. State at 9.5.

Jayne Alledge of Western Carolina is the only other player over the 20-point barrier, holding a 22.7 mean. Jane Jackson of Wake Forst is third at 19.0, while Beasley is at 18.9.

N.C. State, atop the standings with a 4-0 league record is the top scoring team with a 92.7 average, while East Carolina is second at 83.4. The Wolfpack also leads the state in field goal accuracy with 53.4 per cent, free throw accuracy at 71.8 per cent, scoring margin at 26.2, and rebounding with 46.0 per game.

The Pirates, alone in second in the standings at 3-1, rank right behind the defending state champions in field goal shooting at 46.5 per cent, free throw accuracy at 67.5 per cent, and scoring margin at 15.2. The Pirates average of 42.5 rebounds per game is fourth in the state, while its defensive average of 68.2 points allowed per game is third.

Carol Almond of Appalachian State tops the state in assists with 6.2 per game, while 6-5 reserve center June Doby of N.C. State is the top shooter from the floor, making 61.1 per cent, and Cindy Wilmelmy of UNC-Greensboro is the free throw leader at 80.0 per cent.

Thompson is second among the free throw shooters at 78.5 per cent, while Girven is third in field goal accuracy at 57.9.

In all, 26 players at the eight scholls are averaging in double figures, including Gale Kerbaugh, 14.5; Lydia Rountree, 13.0; and Girven, 10.1, of the Pirates.

The Pirates' next outing will be against North Carolina on Wednesday at 7 p.m. at Minges Coliseum.

Williamston Takes Pair From Roanoke

WILLIAMSTON — Williamston High School took advantage of the foul line and topped Roanoke, 52-46, and pulled into a tie with the Redskins for second place in the Northeastern Conference.

Meanwhile, the Williamston girls downed Roanoke, 34-30, to move into sole possession of first place, handing Roanoke its first league defeat.

Roanoke won the junior varsity game, 58-43.

In the girls' game, Roanoke slipped into a 7-6 lead after one period, but Williamston took control in the second period, 12-4, and pushed out to an 18-11 halftime lead.

Roanoke outscored Williamston in each of re remaining periods, but couldn't overcome that second quarter. The Squaws trailed, 26-21, at the end of the third frame.

Williamston is now 7-0 in the league and 12-1 overall, while Roanoke slipped to 6-1 in the conference and 10-3 in all games.

In the boys' contest, both Williamston and Roanoke pushed through 16 points in the first period. The action slowed in the second, with Williamston holding a 9-6 edge and gaining a 25-22 halftime margin.

The Tigers continued to pull away in the third quarter, building their lead to 39-28. Roanoke rallied in the final quarter, 18-13, but it was not enough.

Jimmy Barnes led Williamston with 14, while James Woolard had 12. Ronnie Highsmith had 11 and Jasper Martin had 10 for the Redskins.

Williamston and Roanoke are both 5-2 in the league, while Roanoke is 10-3 overall and the Tigers are 9-4.

The Bath girls scored in the final seconds to pull out a 38-36 victory over the Jamesville girls.

The two teams played even in the first period, with each scoring ten points. Jamesville then matched that output in the second frame, while Bath fell off to only six. That gave the Lady Bullets a 20-16 lead at the half.

But the third period reversed that of the second, with Bath hitting ten and Jamesville, six, for a 26-26 tie. It stayed nip-and-tuck right to the wire, with Rhonda Bozeman hitting with 11 seconds left to provide the winning basket for Bath.

Hard To Follow Legend's Steps

By GEORGE STRODE
AP Sports Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Earle Bruce, Ohio State's new football coach, concedes it may be difficult following a legend.

The 47-year-old Bruce knows he will be compared with Woody Hayes, fired for slugging a Clemson player in the Gator Bowl.

Hayes, the second-winningest active coach to Alabama's Bear Bryant, accomplished two national titles, 13 Big Ten Conference championships or co-championships and 11 bowl teams in his 28 seasons with the Buckeyes.

"I think that might be a problem," said Bruce of the Hayes comparison. "I hope to overcome it. That's what coaches are for."

Bruce said he talked to his old boss and Hayes said he "would support me in any way."

However, Bruce said he felt no immediate pressure Friday when introduced at a news conference, a 30-minute session marred by a black protest.

"When I walk into the stadium for that first game with Syracuse, I'll feel it. But there's self-inflicted pressure every where you go. The most pressure I ever had was at Massillon (Ohio) High School," said the 1953 Ohio State graduate, who left as Iowa State coach for the Buckeyes.

EBA Girls Lose Third

Washington Junior High School's girls gained a 43-28 victory over E.B. Aycock Friday evening.

Washington was led by Kim Guilford with 23 points, while Frances Barnhill paced Aycock with seven.

The Aycock girls are now 0-3 on the year.

Results of the boys' game were not made available.

The N.C. Marathon Championship At Bethel

Big Day For Runners

For many people the misty, 40-degree temperature prevailing Saturday morning in Pitt County was the kind of winter weather conducive to extra sleep or lazy indoor activities. But for some 200 dedicated runners from many parts of North Carolina as well as from several other states, the weather did not dampen their enthusiasm as they congregated in Bethel for the North Carolina Marathon championship. Their goal — to successfully complete the 26.1 mile course between Bethel and Oak City and return. The Saturday race was the qualifying one for the famed national Boston Marathon to be held in April. For those who qualified, and for those who did not, it was a happy event marked by a sense of achievement and a feeling of comradeship.

OAK CITY BOUND . . . Several runners were photographed outside Bethel as they run north toward Oak City under generally murky skies that prevailed during the time of the marathon.

Say it ain't so, JoJo.

But JoJo White said Friday night it was indeed so, that he had been or was about to be traded from the Boston Celtics to the Golden State Warriors.

Then he went out and gave Boston fans something to remember, scoring 28 points as the Celtics snapped a five-game National Basketball Association losing streak with a 128-125 triumph over the Portland Trail Blazers.

White told pregame visitors to the dressing room of the impending trade, which was promptly denied by Red Auerbach, the Celtics' general manager. However, Coach Dave Cowens said he had told White there was a possibility of a trade.

In other NBA action, George McGinnis scored a career-high 41 points to lead the Denver Nuggets over the New York Knicks 126-119, the New Orleans Jazz surprised the Philadelphia 76ers 100-89, the Los Angeles Lakers edged the New Jersey Nets 117-116, the Milwaukee Bucks beat Golden State 101-94, the Atlanta Hawks defeated the Chicago Bulls 100-93 and the Houston Rockets turned back the Cleveland Cavaliers 107-96.

Nuggets 126, Knicks 119

McGinnis not only scored 41 points but also sparked a Denver comeback. After the Nuggets scored the game's first four points, the Knicks surged to to a 17-5 lead, only to see Denver rally for a 29-29 first-quarter tie. New York's Bob McAdoo, who scored 37 points, and Ray Williams sparked the Knicks to an 11-point lead in the second period but Denver trailed by only 63-61 at halftime and went ahead 98-85 after three periods.

Jazz 100, 76ers 89

Rich Kelley scored 24 points and grabbed 16 rebounds to lead New Orleans, which played without Pete Maravich, laid up with a sore knee, and Leonard "Truck" Robinson, traded to Phoenix earlier in the day. The Jazz took the lead six minutes into the second period and held off repeated Philadelphia rallies.

Lakers 117, Nets 116

Adrian Dantley sank one of two free throws with 11 seconds remaining to break a 116-116 tie. Dantley was awarded two free throws when a loose-ball foul was called on the Nets' Phil Jackson with New Jersey in possession and about to shoot.

Bucks 101, Warriors 94

Brian Winters scored 23 points and Marques Johnson added 22 as the Bucks recorded the 500th victory in their 10½-year history.

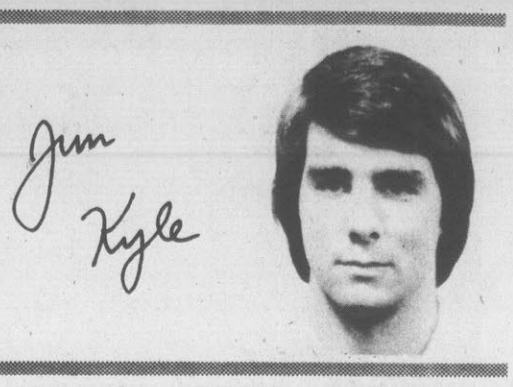

Rockets 107, Cavaliers 96

Moses Malone led a third-quarter Houston rally and finished with 27 points and 27 rebounds.

Graceful Exit

David Pearson steps from his car after qualifying Friday for the pole position in today's Winston Western 500 Grand National stock car race at Riverside International Raceway. ALLIGATORS, BROWN PELICANS, red-cockaded woodpeckers and Neuse River waterdogs are some of the species which will be the focus of the N. C. Wildlife Resources Commission's endangered species program in 1979.

"We will receive $555,318 from the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service for our endangered species program this year," according to Frank Barick, chief of the Commission's Interagency Coordination Section, which oversees the program. "We have five studies scheduled on endangered species in North Carolina being done by various agencies as part of our program."

The first study is on the American alligator. Researchers are distributing forms to wildlife enforcement officers and biologists throughout eastern North Carolina to determine where the animals are found and what their range is. Another part of the study is being done on Lake Ellis Simon, where biologists from N. C. State University are studying the alligator's life habits. Alligators are captured, measured, weighed and their stomachs are pumped to find out what they have been eating. Then the animals are released unharmed.

The red-cockaded woodpecker is also being studied. Researches from the N. C. State Agricultural Experiment Station are examining the distribution of the birds in the state and are trying to find out if existing colonies are expanding or declining. Red-cockaded woodpeckers are found primarily in open pine forests of the Sandhills region or other longleaf and pond pine sites. One major threat to the species is short rotation timber cuttings in pine. The birds need mature trees for nesting sites.

THE BROWN PELICAN is also being studied by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. These birds are found breeding on two small islands off the North Carolina coast, and researchers are examining the bird's population and breeding biology. Brown pelicans declined drastically during the 1950's and early 1960's due to pesticide buildups in fish, their primary food. The birds will be banded, and records will be kept of their reproductive rate.

The Neuse River waterdog will also be the subject of an investigation designed to determine its distribution habits. Radioactive cobalt tags are inserted and movements are tracked by electronic devices similar to Geiger counters. These animals are nocturnal and very hard to observe. Their breeding and life habits will be studied in the field and in laboratories.

A study on the population status of the bobcat and otter is also underway. These animals are not endangered, but the federal government has placed limits on the exportation of their pelts because they feel the growing foreign market for furs could easily deplete the U. S. population.

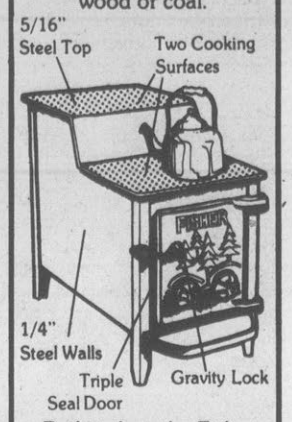

In addition, a tagging program is also underway for bobcat and otter. Trappers will tag furs to certify that the animal was taken in North Carolina and to show when the animal was trapped. Carcasses of some animals will be checked to determine age, growth rate, diet, longevity and other factors.

Track counts will also be taken at scent stations in 12 Tar Heel counties to attempt to determine population trends of the animals. Some animals will be equipped with radio telemetry devices so biologists can study their movements and determine the home range of the two species. Aerial photos taken from satellites will also be analyzed to determine the amount of prime bobcat and otter habitat statewide.

Community Medical Program

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

MARSHFIELD, Wis. (AP) — National health insurance? Who needs it, say the people here. Not as long as the Greater Marshfield Community Health Plan is in business.

The plan is a health maintenance organization — an HMO — a prepaid care program whose members pay a set monthly premium, then receive medical service at no additional cost.

Doctors, patients and administrators here agree the 8-year-old program brings the best health care for the best price to a four-county rural area of north central Wisconsin.

Its 46,000 enrollees represent about half the eligible residents. It's privately run on a non-profit basis, with no government involvement except for grants to help low-income persons enroll. And every sixth month anyone living in the area, regardless of health care needs, may join at regular rates.

The program is an experiment that may be significant for the future of national health care. The area's stable rural population is reasonably typical of the national population, and since no private physicians have had offices in Marshfield for years, residents must go to the clinic for care.

"We think we have the largest rural HMO in the cbuntry," says Dr. Gerald Porter, a pediatrician and president of the clinic, whose staff of 171 doctors makes it the fifth-largest in the world.

The clinic began the program, in cooperation with the adjacent 500-bed St. Joseph's Hospital, at the urging of Blue Cross-Surgical Care Blue Shield.

Marketing, advertising, billing and collections are handled by Blue Cross-Blue Shield. "It lets doctors practice medicine and lets someone else take care of the rest," says David Gruel, the HMO's administrative director.

Greater Marshfield's monthly enrollment rates are $46.10 for an individual and $101.41 for a family, whether two or 20.

Annual rates were recently hiked 5.8 percent, but officials point out that medical costs increased about 10 percent nationally last year and say Greater Marshfield's rates are among the cheapest in the nation considering the services offered.

Three-fourths of the enrollees have all or part of their monthly payments made by a local employer. e

The patients seem to think it's a bargain, since the enrollment rate approaching 50 percent is extraordinarily high for a community HMO.

"It's expensive, all right, especially for younger people," says Corinne Friedrichsen, 44, who runs a real estate business with her husband. "But I like the fact that it covers everything."

Everything includes hospital care and room, surgery, consultation, anesthesia, radiation and other hospital services. All clinic services are provided, including office visits; specialist care and consultation; X-rays and tests, physicals, immunizations, physical therapy, medications, and vision, dental and maternity care.

Alcohol and drug abuse tretment, emergencies here or out of town, and menta or nervous disorders are also covered. About the only things not covered are outpatient drugs, nonskilled custodial nursing care and elective cosmetic surgery.

Dr. Lewis Russell, the medical director, says there have been few cases of patients abusing the carte blanche privileges. The HMO is legally barred from expelling members for seeking unnecessary care.

A 20-member community board of enrollees advises the clinic on how to run the plan but has little to do with policy or rate-making.

That's largely because of the HMOS structure. Doctors are paid a flat annual fee out of the revenue from premiums, but they absorb the loss if there are more services or fewer premiums than expected.

The first year of the HMO, for instance, the clinic's doctors went uncompensated for an estimated $200,000 worth of medical services.

But when payments exceed the value of services, Wenzel says, the profit is plowed back into the clinic, so more services — podiatry was recently added — are available.

And this in spite of the two months a year when anyone, no matter how much their care will cost, may join. "If they have cancer when they come in, we take care of the cancer from the day they start in the program," Porter says.

Peter Mick, Blue Cross liaison, says open enrollment would bankrupt an HMO in an urban area because membership rolls would be jammed with people who need extensive, costly care, forcing premiums too high,

But officials here say Greater Marshfield proves such a program can work if enrollees represent a legitimate cross section of the population.

Skylit Family Room Focus Of Plan

By Jerry Bishop

Airy and accessible, the 19-ft. family room with light-catching skylight promises a focal point for family living in the Andrake, a sleek single level contemporary.

Informal living is stressed, and this three bedroom home combines kitchen and dining nook and includes a patio and double garage for convenience.

On the exterior, the Andrake's clean and simple lines account for its appeal. Inside, windows are well-placed to assure privacy in some rooms and sunlight in others.

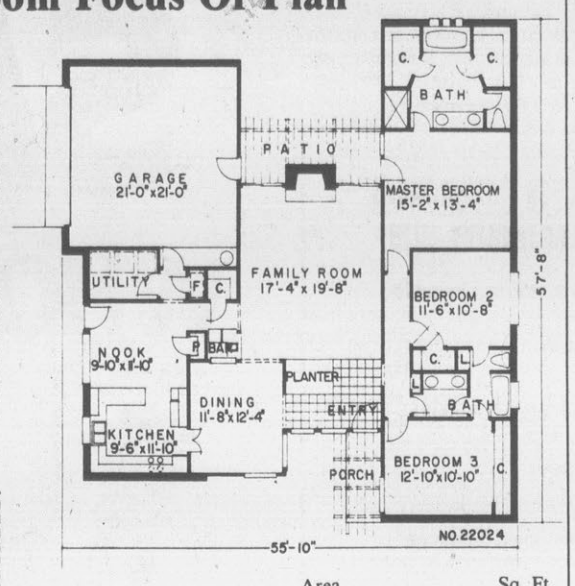

An entry porch leads to the bright foyer, where a planter is provided for an indoor garden effect. Directly at front, the family room welcomes guests and family alike and is edged by a walk-in closet and wet bar, both handy for entertaining. Two pairs of sliding glass doors join family room to patio and allow guests to mingle outdoors.

Also favored with patio access, the master bedroom at right offers a luxurious haven for parents. Comfortably large, the room borders an impressive private bath complex with double walk-in closets and dressing area.

The second and third bedrooms sandwich another bath, this time compartmented, and reached directly from either bedroom.

To the left of the foyer is the guest-oriented dining room, separated by doors from the kitchen. Besides the 11-ft. dining nook, the kitchen also boasts abundant counter space and a built-in pantry.

A utility room separates the kitchen area from the double garage and provides space for laundry equipment and storage. The garage offers direct access to the patio.

Today's Parties Follow The Pharaoh's Course

By ELAINE Q. BARROW
AP Newsfeatures

Young King Tutankhamun, if he hadn't been mummified for 3,000 years, might be mesmerized by the merchandising of his name.

King Tut has become a prestige label for jewelry, T-Shirts, tote bags, stationery, jigsaw puzzles, bikinis, books, sculpture, needlepoint sets, linens and lingerie.

There are posters, porcelain, calendars, collectors' plates, scarves and even a whiskey decanter shaped like the Egyptian monarch's golden death mask. Parties with a King Tut theme are among the latest fads.

Tutmania is peaking in New York City, the sixth United States stop for a traveling exhibition of 55 priceless articles from the boy king's tomb.

The show recently began a four-month stay at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Previously it had been seen in Washington, D. C., Los Angeles, Seattle, Chicago and New Orleans. San Francisco and Toronto are the next stops scheduled.

In New York, an innovation — typically New York — was injected: jewelry and fashion items with hieroglyphs translating into, "I Love New York."

These come in a cartouche collection developed by six major fashion and jewelry design houses. Part of the proceeds will go to the nonprofit Citizens for New York City, Inc., for citywide improvement programs.

For a different set, hairdresser Roget Resca has created a "King Tut Cut," featuring long hair and bangs which resemble those identified with a different Egyptian — Cleopatra. However, unisex hair styles may have been "in" even back in 1358 B.C. As a gesture of regal extravagance, Mrs. Resca recommends flicking a bit of gold dust ito your hair.

A King Tut napkin, created by print designer Vera for a diplomatic dinner given by the Egyptian government before the New York exhibition opened, is another spinoff. The design embodies a traditional Egyptian symbol, the crook and flail, executed in black and gold on a natural fabric. The napkins are made of ramie, an ancient textile, presumably the kind used to wrap mummies.

Among apparel items are turtleneck sweaters with the falcon symbol, sleepwear with Egyptian brick and gold motif, and necklaces and earrings with similar reproductions.

Women's gowns have the look, column-shaped and sheer, in fluid fabrics that emphasize the body in the way associated with Cleopatra. The Tut exhibit has created a resurgence of interest in anything Egyptian-related.

There are also the inevitable T-shirts printed with "Love My Mummy" and "Struttin' With Tut" and other slogans (after all, the king himself was a teenager when he died).

And, of course, collectibles abound. Two highlights are a 24-karat gold sculptured bust of the young pharaoh, being promoted by a credit card firm, and a zodiac plate by Wedgwood for $1,000.

However, without spending a lot of money — even for scalpers' tickets to the sold-out exhibit — a person can join the fun by simply giving a King Tut party.

Even if the weather is brisk, you can conjure up a Nile-like balminess indoors with some exotic decorating.

Place throughout the room huge straw baskets holding tall, willowy reed plants. On the walls hang stylized murals of pyramid scenes.

Low, simple furniture such as white parsons tables help to further the mood and go well with oversized pillows scattered on the floor.

An intimate atmosphere can be achieved by hanging brass lanterns with glowing candles. And Ms. Stacey suggests a sound effect — the tinkle of brass wind chimes fanned into motion by the ordinary movements of people in the room.

Trays of food could be marched in by a procession of servers wearing togas, gold sandals, necklaces and clanging metal bracelets. The servers could load a buffet table with the feast — lamb shish kebabs served on a mountain of rice, traditional vegetable dishes, and mounds of figs, mangoes and melons.

Pita bread could be served from wicker trays. Tall clays jars would hold wine and beer, and a selection of cheese would be displayed.

Such a gala event could go a long way toward dispelling any misgivings over a phantom curse aroused by the invasion of an ancient pharaoh's tomb.

Wood Stove In A Used Room

NEW YORK (UPI) — The best location for a woodburning stove at home is in an often used room and at a spot where it interferes least with furniture.

Experts at House Beautiful magazine say wood-burners come in three types: closed radiant stoves that radiate warmth into a room; circulating stoves that have very small fans blowing heat into the room; and Franklin stoves whose strong point is attractive appearance and, with doors open, 100 percent visibility of the fire.-

2. If a man keeps several houseplants and likes antiques, it is an indication that he is: (a) politically conservative; (b) not especially fond of sports; (c) concerned with environmental issues.

3. A person who likes bright colors, such as red or orange, for walls and carpets may be: (a) highly emotional; (b) very successful in his or her profession; (c) not highly motivated toward achievement.

4. A person who picks a warm yellow or orange for kitchen decor: (a) has little knowledge of contemporary trends in decorating; (b) gives little thought to the problems of cleaning and maintenance; (c) has some insight into the influence of color on human moods.

5. Anyone who would put a Victorian table next to a contempoary chair is: (a) probably ignorant of the significance of furniture styles; (b) possibly following one of the latest trends in decorating; (c) probably trying to achieve continuity in his life by preserving a reminder of an earlier age.

6. A brightly lighted living room may indicate that: (a) the family is expecting company; (b) the members of the family are energetic and hard-working; (c) the family members are unusually formal with each other and outsiders.

7. A person who displays kitchen utensils, a stamp collection, woodworking tools or family snapshots on open shelves may be: (a) a sloppy housekeeper; (b) following a current decorating trend; (c) a warm person who is easy to get to know; (d) two of the above.

ANSWERS: 1. (d) A cluttered house may be a sign that the person who lives there is preoccupied with matters considered more important than housekeeping. But it might also mean that the person is depressed — especially if the house is excessively dark as well as messy. Clutter and creativity may also go together. A neat house may indicate an orderly, organized person who is not outstandingly creative.

2. (c) A study at Purdue contrasted environmental activists with other people who care little about environmental issues. Among the characteristics that set environmentalists apart are their fondness for antiques and houseplants.

3. (c) Persons who favor bright colors often rate lower in achievement motivation than do others. Persons who get high scores on measures of achievement motivation generally prefer subdued colors such as blue.

4. (c) A warm yellow or orange decor may be an excellent choice for a kitchen. Bright, cheerful colors may be just the right setting for an upbeat start to the day.

5. (b) Scrambling furniture of various periods and styles is a characteristic of the very "in" style of decorating known as eclectic.

6. (b) Light levels are believed to be associated with work levels. A kitchen is a brightly lighted room and lots of work gets done there. Subdued lighting suggests greater formality.

7. (d) A new trend in decorating is open storage that lets the homemaker show off utensils by hanging them on hooks, and display herbs and other ingredients in glass jars. Hobbyists show their crafts and collections on open shelves. This trend is displacing the behind-closed-doors storage of the past. Some authorities believe that the person who prefers out-in-the-open storage is an out-in-the-open individual who makes friends easily.

SCORING: 5-7 right: you should be asking the questions. 3-4 right: you're just an average house-talker. 0-2 correct: listen carefully, your house may be trying to tell you something.

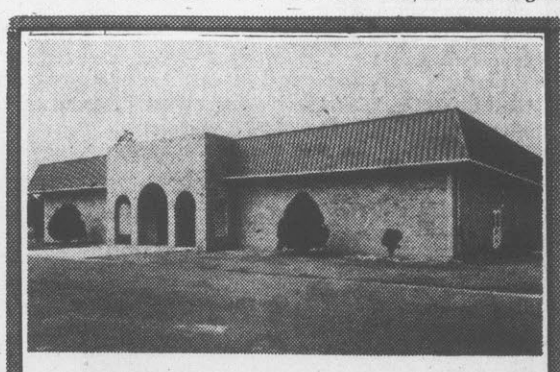

(The house-talk quiz was prepared by Andy Lang in cooperation with Purdue University Professor D. Perry Anchor, building construction; Professor Richard Borden, psychological sciences; Professor Frederick B. Morse, mechanical engineering; and Professor Victoria Willis, art and design.)

...When you're thinking of buying a new home.

New homes built to Greenville Utilities' E-300 STANDARDS of energy efficiency can cut energy consumption by as much as 40 percent when compared to a house built to comply with state minimum building code standards only. That kind of savings can put hundreds of extra dollars into your pocket that would otherwise be wasted on expensive "energy leaks."

Homes which qualify for GUC's Energy Efficient Home Award have been carefully inspected by one of our representatives during construction. Each energy-conserving feature of the home is evaluated and assigned Energy Efficiency Value Points. To qualify for the Award and to be certified by GUC as an energy efficient "E-300" Home, a minimum of 300 EEV Points must be earned.

If you're buying or building, consider the many benefits of an Energy Efficient Home: Economical—lower heating and cooling bills, Quiet, Clean, Comfortable, and many, many more.

To find out more about the E-300 Home, contact the Energy Conservation Office at Greenville Utilities, 752-7166, Extension 234.

Look for the E-300 Sign of Savings. It identifies a home that is specially constructed to save energy and save you money.

Learn Radiation May Solve Transplant Problems

EDITOR'S NOTE — It's not in the category of breakthrough yet, but Stanford Medical Center scientists are encouraged by experiments indicating radiation might solve the major problem with heart transplants — rejection by the body.

By ROBERT LOCKE
AP Science Writer

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Stanford University scientists believe they may be able to use radiation to coax the the body into accepting a transplanted heart.

Dr. Charles Bieber of Stanford Medical Center says the radiation seems to confuse the body's biological army that ordinarily will attack the transplant as a foreign invader and eventually reject it.

"We suppress the immune system and sort of form a window, during which we develop a tolerance for anything that's introduced," Bieber says.

Bieber and his colleagues hope the radiation treatment can someday replace transplant patients' indefinite dependence on drugs that leave them almost defenseless against infection.

The transplant is slipped in while the body's defense system is blinded by the radiation. When the defenses are reactivated and search-and-destroy cells again roam the body, they shouldn't recognize the new heart as a stranger. The process would apply to other transplanted organs as well.

The body's defense system, led by white blood cells called lymphocytes that are produced in bone marrow, makes no distinction between friend and foe. All invaders, whether deadly virus or life-saving transplant, are attacked. Only a heart exchanged between identical twins would be spared rejection.

The complex system, still not fully understood, has bedeviled heart transplants since they first sparked worldwide excitement in 1967. Many American hospitals found that although the surgery went smoothly, about three-fourths of their transplant patients were dead within a year. The killer usually was rejection.

The problem was so severe that most centers have stopped performing the operation.

Now only Stanford still transplants hearts on a regular basis. The campaign against rejection now allows nearly three of four Stanford patients live at least a year with new hearts. About 40 percent of 151 transplant patients have survived more than five years.

And Bieber notes that those were doomed patients who faced imminent death in hospital beds. Now most return home to enjoy their bonus years. At least one has fathered a child.

But while laboratory tests are encouraging, Bieber says major problems must still be solved before total lymphoidal radiation is available for human patients.

Rejection is currently controlled — not cured — at Stanford with a drug called ATG, which closes the body's immune system so the heart can survive. Most patients take the drug for the rest of their lives.

But ATG also leaves the patient much more susceptible to infections the immune system would normally attack. Even a cold can threaten life, so careful surveillance and frequent use of antibiotics are a constant necessity.

The radiation research was announced with considerable optimism last September by Israeli researchers Shimon Slavin and Zvi Fuks, who had worked at Stanford with Drs. Henry Kaplan, Samuel Strober and Mike Gottlieb. The experiments, they said, "have been 100 percent effective in mice."

The group coupled radiation with bone marrow transplants before putting new hearts in rodents, and "they got indefinite graft survival," Bieber says. Heart and marrow came from the same donor.

"All that was very exciting," he said. "But then we took it to larger animals and we've had a lot of problems. We have yet to get a heart to stick in a higher animal.

"We think we can get around this problem and make it work. But we want to do it before we talk about it."

The radiation is focused mostly on the chest and abdomen, where most lymphocytes are stored. These are killed or disabled. The long bones of the arms and legs are protected, leaving enough undamaged bone marrow to replace the dead defensive cells in a fea months. Similar radiation has been used for decades to treat certain diseases.

Bieber says the role of transplanted bone marrow is not fully understood, though it seems to produce its own lymphocytes that intercept the body's native killer cells before they reach the heart.

Marrow transplants require close genetic matches between donor and recipient. A major goal of the research is to make such transplants available to treat marrow diseases like aplastic anemia.

Bieber, trying to sidestep such problems, tried radiation alone before animal heart transplants and the grafts survived 60 days without drugs.

The rejection-free period stretched to 100 days when radiation treatments were combined with small doses of ATG. But then, between 100 and 200 days, the grafts all failed.

"There's no question in our minds that with radiation and ATG we can pretty much cut out early rejection," Bieber says. "But that would be of no benefit if they drop dead eight months out of the hospital."

So, still searching for the right combination, Bieber's team added larger doses of ATG to the x-rays and transplanted a heart in a monkey. After more than 100 days, he said, biopsies of the new heart revealed absolutely no sign of rejection and "that's very uncommon. You just don't see zero evidence of rejection."

Those results must now be tested with more animals for a longer time.

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. How often should the soil in a home garden be treated for lime and fertilizer needs? (H.S., Elkin) . A. At least once every three years. Every other year would be even better. (Jack Baird, extension soils specialist)

Q. Give me some example of evergreen shrubs that grow well in dense shade. (A.B., Cary)

A. Mahonia (holly grape) enjoys shade and grows to four or five feet. Acuba also demands a shady location, and grows to about the same height as mahonia. There are also dwarf varieties of each of these shrubs. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. What is the best temperature for my indoor pot plants? (P.H., High Point)

A. Most indoor plants like a cool room where the minimum temperature is 55 degrees and the maximum temperature is 70 degrees. Very few house plants will grow in a dry atmosphere with temperatures above 70 degrees. Keeping your plants cool has a fringe benefit. It helps you conserve energy. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. I have heard of three types of cypress trees: baldhead cypress, Leyland cypress and Arizona cypress. Which of these trees are best for a home landscape? (S.L., Jacksonville)

A. Baldcypress is a member of the redwood family, has deciduous, soft-needled foliage and may grow to a height of 100 to 125 feet. It is a native of the swamplands but grows well in other environments. Leyland and Arizona cypress are members of the cypress family, have everygreen, overlapping, scale-like foliage and may grow to a height of 60 feet. Both are native to other areas and are subject to local insect and disease problems. For landscaping, usually Leyland and Arizona cypress are planted for windbreaks or screening purposes. Baldcypress is usually planted for summer shade or as a focal plant. All three species grow quite rapidly the first five years. (Bill Stanton, extension forestry specialist)

Paget's Disease Group Started

TENAFLY, N.J. (AP) — The Paget's Disease Foundation, Inc., a national, non-profit organization dedicated to improving health care for people suffering from the chronic, crippling disease, has been organized, with headquarters here.

The group has three main goals, according to John Bouvier Johnson, president: To inform patients who are unaware of the availability of treatment about progress in the treatment of the disease; to raise doctors' interest level in the study and treatment, and to support education and research for the advancement of therapy for Paget's disease of bone.

Mondays To Be Childfind Days

Governor James B. Hunt has proclaimed the first Monday of each month as Child Find Day throughout the current school year.

Child Find is a statewide effort to locate all handicapped and gifted children, ages birth through 21, who are not currently receiving appropriate educational services.

Its purpose is to insure that these children receive educational services when they reach the age of five and also to inform parents of screening, intervention, and other services available to special needs to children from birth.

The Child Find Census is one of the requirements of major state and federal laws dealing with exceptional children. The census will be coordinated by the Department of Public Instruction's Division of Exceptional Children.

According to Ted Drain, director of the division, "This effort will involve all public school systems and other state-operated educational programs in the state. The campaign will be aimed at locating children who are mentally retarded, epileptic, learning disabled, cerebral palsied, emotionally disturbed, orthopedically impaired, autistic, multiple handicapped, pregnant, hearing impaired, speech impaired, blind or visually impaired, genetically impaired, or other health impaired, or gifted and talented."

A concentrated awareness campaign will be launched through the news media with the target days of each first Monday for the remainder of the current school year.

Citizens who wish to report a child with a special need should call Pat James at the Pitt County Schools' Central Office, 752-6106, or Ann Harrison at Greenville City Schools, 752-4192.

Also, calls may be directed to the Division of Exceptional Children, (919) 733-3921, or the toll-free CARELINE, 1-800-662-7030.

Pitt NAACP Meets Tonight

The Pitt County Branch of the NAACP will meet tonight at 7:45 p.m. at Wynn Chapel Baptist Church, located on County Road 1514, off Highway 30, five miles north of Stokes.

Best New Year For Stock Market In Three Years

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The surprising and spirited rally in stock prices since New Year's has sent the market off to its best January start in three years.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.55 to 836.28 in the past week, extending its gain so far in 1979 to 32.97 points.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index posted a weekly gain of .50 to 55.91, and the American Stock Exchange market value index jumped 2.67 to 160.33.

The Dow's showing to date contrasts vividly with a 55-point drop in the first two weeks of last year and a 32-point decline at the start of 1977.

The market's direction in the early days of the year gets special attention from many analysts and investors because of the recent popularity of the so-called January barometer.

As summarized by one of its leading advocates, investment adviser Yale Hirsch of Old Tappan, N.J., this market maxim holds that, "As January goes, so goes the year."

In 1975 and 1976 — both good years for the market — there were sharp rallies in January. The declines at the outset of both 1977 and 1978 preceded years in which the Dow Jones industrial average recorded declines, although last year's aggregate loss was only a token 3.1 percent.

But a number of observers, including Hirsch, have cautioned lately against blind reliance on the January barometer, even with its impressive past record.

For one thing, Wall Streeters point out, such a doctrine tends to be valid only until it gains widespread acceptance. Once that point is reached, investors tend to alter their buy-and-sell decisions accordingly and thus set up a whole new set of circumstances.

This kind of reasoning is the basis for a time-honored Wall Street principle known as "contrary opinion." As a prominent money manager put it a decade ago, "The market always does what it has to do to make the majority wrong."

So far in 1979, in fact, analysts suggest that one of the key factors working in the market's favor has been that so many investors apparently expected it to decline.

In a commentary written as the year began, Robert J. Farrell at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith observed:

"The best case we can make against a big decline (such as 1974) outside the overworked 'stocks are cheap' argument is the preparation that so many are making for such an event.

—"Pension funds go into 1979 with a 50-50 stock to bond asset ratio, the lowest in 15 years.

—"Pension funds which are accumulating new financial assets at the rate of $20 billion per year are completing the first year since World War II that less than 10 percent of such new money went into equities.

—"Mutual funds go into 1979 with a cash to net asset ratio very close to the record levels of late 1974 and March 1978.

—"Money market funds increased to more than $10 billion as 1978 drew to a close, more than doubling the amount accumulated in 1974.

—"And preliminary indications from our institutional cash survey show a new record 45.9 percent indicating they have large cash reserves of 15 percent or more.

"This high preference for liquidity and other investments is not a guarantee against a decline in 1979, but it does suggest a lot of selling has already been done and that investors are looking down, not up.

"It also suggests that the potential buying power is available to fuel a significant rise at some point in the future, whether it be 1979 or 1980."

Doubling 1979 Order For New Pintos

By DONALD WOUTAT
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) — David Trower, sales manager at a suburban Detroit Ford dealership, says sales of the 1979 Ford Pinto are so good that he is doubling his order of Pintos for February.

Pintos? The cars with a reputation — based on past models — for bursting into flames in rear-end collisions?

The name's the same, but the Pinto has had corrective surgery and a facelift. And Ford Motor Co. is cautiously optimistic that its new Pintos, with redesigned fuel systems, are overcoming the adverse publicity on earlier models.

The latest chapter in the Pinto saga shows a modest revival of sales as negative publicity subsided and Ford spared the car from major price boosts over the past several months.

The subcompact Pinto enjoyed a 2 percent sales increase in December over October, bucking the seasonal trend that saw subcompacts as a class drop 12 percent and total car volume fall 23 percent.

Sales of the low-cost Pinto grew from 1.2 percent of all cars sold in October to 1.3 percent in November and 1.6 percent last month.

"We sold 42 cars in December, and eight of them were Pintos," says Trower. "That's an extremely high percentage. I'm down to a 30 days' supply of Pintos."

Trower uses a traditional salesman's defense in dealing with the Pinto's past reputation. He says he jokes with customers by offering to throw in an asbestos suit and a fire insurance policy as part of the deal.

Ford has gritted its teeth over the past 18 months as pre-1977 Pinto sedans were subjected to a massive recall and television cameras recorded fiery crashes of the allegedly unsafe car.

The company has even been indicted on homicide charges by an Indiana grand jury, which said Ford recklessly designed the earlier Pinto fuel tank system and made it especially susceptible to fire in rear-end crashes.

The headlines rubbed off on the current Pintos, though the fuel system was improved as of the 1977 model year. Sales plummeted last June after the recall of 1.5 million earlier Pintos and ended 1978 nearly 25 percent short of 1977's total of 220,775.

Ford needs the Pinto — its 22 miles per gallon in city driving helps the company meet federal fuel economy standards — and for 1979 gave the car its biggest restyling job since it first appeared in 1971.

The company also held the line on prices. Ford said a policy listing some items optional last year as standard on this model has made the new Pinto up to $150 cheaper than the 1978 model. At the same time, importers have repeatedly jacked up prices as the dollar declined overseas. The current Pinto starts at $3,233.

Margaret Thatcher's Political Chance Is Coming

EDITOR'S NOTE — Sometime between now and October, Prime Minister James Callaghan must call an election — and perhaps that will be the moment for Great Britain's Conservative lady in waiting, Margaret Thatcher. Her political wits are finely honed, thanks to a lietime of preparation.

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Margaret Thatcher is a political bridesmaid who could become England's and Europe's first woman prime minister.

Admirers and critics have dubbed her the "Tory Glamour Girl," the "Warrior Queen," and in the words of the Soviet press, the "Iron Maiden."

Perhaps that is because the 53-year-old leader of the British Conservative Party always seems to be more than the sum of her parts.

After four years, she's waiting in the wings for the next election which Labor Prime Minister James Callaghan must call by October.

Columnists, commentators and ordinary Englishmen seldom note Callaghan's haircut or clothing. But Margaret Thatcher must endure being endlessly described as "ash blonde," "mother of twins," "perfectly (or imperfectly) coifed," and having "a peaches and cream complexion," "baby blue eyes" and "goodlegs'."

All of which is true, but somehow irrelevant.

Besides the Fleet Street superlatives, she's also the object of her party's public relations machine, and the object of tag lines tossed by opposition backbenchers in the male-dominated House of Commons.

She's been ridiculed by opponents because she admits to a good cry once in a while. Her menopause, and its possible emotional effect on crucial decisions, have been analyzed in print.

"That doesn't bother me in the slightest," she said in a recent interview with The Sunday Times magazine. "That's all absurd. I feel full of the zest of spring. There's no reason why a woman shouldn't go straight through this age just like a man. Anyway, they can be just as tetchy as we can. Problems are much worse if you have time to brood."

Contrary to her public face, she says she's "a very emotional person.

"There are times when I get home at night and everything has got on top of me, when I shed a few tears, silently, alone. We all have sensitivities."

On the stump, and the floor of the Commons, she cultivates a different image. Strong, aggressive, almost strident in her oratory, Margaret Thatcher, the softy, is transformed into a shrewd politician preaching traditional Tory gospel.

She promises, if elected, to increase defense spending, cut taxes to increase incentives, slash government spending, end immigration and promote private enterprise. The pledges stem from beliefs passed from father to daughter during her formative years, when she was instilled with respect for what she calls the "basic English virtues," hard work, thrift and rugged independenc.

Margaret Hilda Roberts Thatcher was born Oct. 13, 1925, to a grocer and his wife in Grantham, a small Lincolnshire market town 100 miles north of London.

"My father was a wonderful man," she once said. "He made me read widely, and for that I owe him everything. He had a passion for education. I always got the books I wanted. But no pleasures. I never went out to a dance until I got to the university."

Her mother, she said, "I loved dearly, but after I was 15 we had nothing more to say to each other. It wasn't her fault. She was weighed down by the home, always being in the home."

Margaret escaped that fate. But she craves the image of superwife, supermum, the ultimate homemaker. On the hustings her main pitch is to housewives. She can positively prattle about how to make perfect hamburger. Her husband claims she twitches if she finds a dirty footprint on the living room carpet. Last fall, on her first day off in seven weeks, she relaxed by wallpapering the bathroom.

She was top of the class in all but one of her 10 years at the local Kesteven and Grantham Girls School. She entered Somerville College, Oxford, on a scholarship and got her first taste of politics as president of the University Conservative Association. A friend suggested she might run for office.

"I stopped dead. Suddenly it was crystalized for me. I knew."

She graduated with an honors degree in research chemistry and set her sights on Parliament. She lost in 1950 and 1951 when she ran as a Conservative in a predominantly Labor district of southeast London.

After the second defeat, romance detoured her from politics. She married Denis Thatcher, managing director of his father's canning factory. In 1953, only three months before she passed her grueling bar examinations, she became the mother of twins Carol and Mark.

In 1959 she was elected to Parliament for the Finchley district of north London. She was a backbencher for two years, then moved up — to the ministry of pensions, party spokesman in Commons for transport, treasury affairs and housing, and finally, Education Minister.

Nearly everyone but her closest companions underestimated the lady with the nice hats and an accent that sounded a bit as though she had a plum pit stuck in her throat. She did her homework, worked 16 hours a day, built up a core of loyal followers, and on Feb. 4, 1975, toppled Edward Heath from the Conservative leadership.

Ebullient at victory, Mrs. Thatcher said: "I shall take on the work with humility and dedication. To me it is like a dream that the next name on the list after Sir Winston Churchill, Harold Macmillan, Sir Alec Douglas-Home and Edward Heath is Margaret Thatcher."

Four years later, Margaret Thatcher still lives in a rowhouse in fashionable Chelsea and Jim Callaghan still takes his morning tea at No. 10 Downing St.

Weekdays she cooks breakfast for her husband, now a retired Burmah Oil Co. executive, and son Mark, who is a certified public accountant.

A cleaning lady takes over from there.

If she makes it to No. 10 Downing St., this successful politician who still buys the Sunday roast on her way home from work will not give up her apricot-walled haven on Flood Street.

"I'd never like to be without the feeling that I've got my own little house, waiting."

Less Gasoline Used Via Conversion Kit

SUAMICO, Wis. (AP) — Carroll Lucia says he's found a way to trim the gas guzzling of some of those big V-8 autos.

Try running them on four cylinders.

Lucia plans to start selling kits early in 1979 for a do-it-yourself conversion from eight-cylinder to four-cylinder operation.

While it's not for every V-8 engine and it cuts acceleration capability considerably, Lucia expects the convrsion to produce a gain of several miles per gallon.

"Above 35 miles per hour the car just sails along and you can't detect any appreciable change in noise or vibration," he said. But, "it's a dog getting across an intersection. You don't have that punch. It's like driving a loaded pickup truck.

"But we have 18,000 miles on the first car we converted," he added. "I never found one instance when I had to have more power."

The conversaion is accomplished by removing standard rocker arms and push rods from two cylinders on each bank of the engine. Replacement parts hold exhaust valves open so that compression pressure is relieved in each unused cylinder. A replacement carburetor stops the fuel supply to the extra four cylinders.

Lucia, 65, an automotive engineer for much of his life and a former Packard company worker, has operated Delta Dynamics at Suamico for 17 years. He plans to begin the mail-order marketing soon of about a dozen do-it-yourself conversion kits for some of the larger-engine models, at a cost of $250 each.

He said the conversion was not economical for smaller V-8 engines, and other factors affecting any mileage savings include front wheel alignment, weight, exterior design and engine wear.

"One thing I have to tell people all the time is you can't make a good V-4 from a poor V-8," he said.

In his research, he determined that the conversion idea was nothing new.

"We made a patent search and one of the V-4 conversions had a date of 1918," Lucia said. But most experimentation with the process was aimed at the factory level.

"What we're talking about is do-it-yourself," he said, adding that other possible mechanical refinements to boost mileage "would take it out of the hands of the do-it-yourselfer."

Infant Disorder Test Is Required

PITT COUNTY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL. . .newborn nursery head nurse Hilda Norris performs a PKU test on Justin Carroll Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Clark of Ayden. The baby was born Jan. 4.

It looks like a credit card voucher — a long skinny piece of white paper with other sheets attached to it, book-like, with a thin binder. The biggest difference in its appearance when used is that the binder has four symmetrical blood stains inside round circles. The blood stains come from a heel or toe prick performed routinely on all newborns across the state.

The purpose of the procedure is to save the mental lives of newborns. The blood samples collected on the sheet of paper are used to determine whether or not a newborn infant has PKU (Phenylketonuria), and testing for hypothyroidism was added the first of the month.

PKU is a result of an inborn error of metabolism and is a heredity defect controlled by a simple autosomal gene. The gene abnormality results in the inability to convert phenylalanine to tyrosine, which in turn permits the accumulation in the blood and tissues excretion of excessive quantities in the urine of a variety of unusual metabolites, said Mrs. Hilda Norris, head nurse in the newborn nursery at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Both disorders cause severe and irreversible mental retardation. Both, if diagnosed early enough, can be controlled — PKU through diet, hypothyroidism through adequate replacement of thyroid hormones.

Symptoms of PKU, according to Mrs. Norris, are vomiting, irritability in infancy, eczema, convulsions, musty odor of urine and mental retardation.

PKU tests have been run for 13 years. PKU occurs in about one in every 18,000 births. Hypothyroidism occurs in about one in every 6,000 births, but an effective testing method for hypothyroidism has only recently become available according to Elizabeth Moore, Genetic Health Care Program manager, Division of Health Services, North Carolina Department of Human Resources.

"Because of the purchase of a new computerized instrument which performs several tests in a very brief period of time, the state will be able to begin routine testing for hypothyroidism as soon as state laboratory personnel become familiar with the new equipment," said Maxine S. Matheson, head of the Biochemistry Section, State Laboratory.

Mrs. Norris said, "Testing for hypothyroidism isn't a routine test at Pitt County Memorial Hpsital unless the pediatrician deems it necessary or upon parent request."

"The tests check the blood samples for levels of amino acids and hormones," Ms. Matheson said. "Both of these are necessary for proper growth and development. Should the levels be outside of a normal range, the infant is retested for whichever condition is causing the imbalance."

"Should PKU be found, the child is put on a special diet which monitors and limits the level of protein he takes in. This diet, which is provided through state assistance, is maintained until the child is at least five or six," Ms. Moore said.

"Should hypothyroidism be discovered, the child is put on thyroid supplements which then become a part of his life in much the same way that insulin becomes part of the life of a diabetic.

"If either condition is left undetected, the child will suffer irreversible brain damage before it is two months old," continued Ms. Moore.

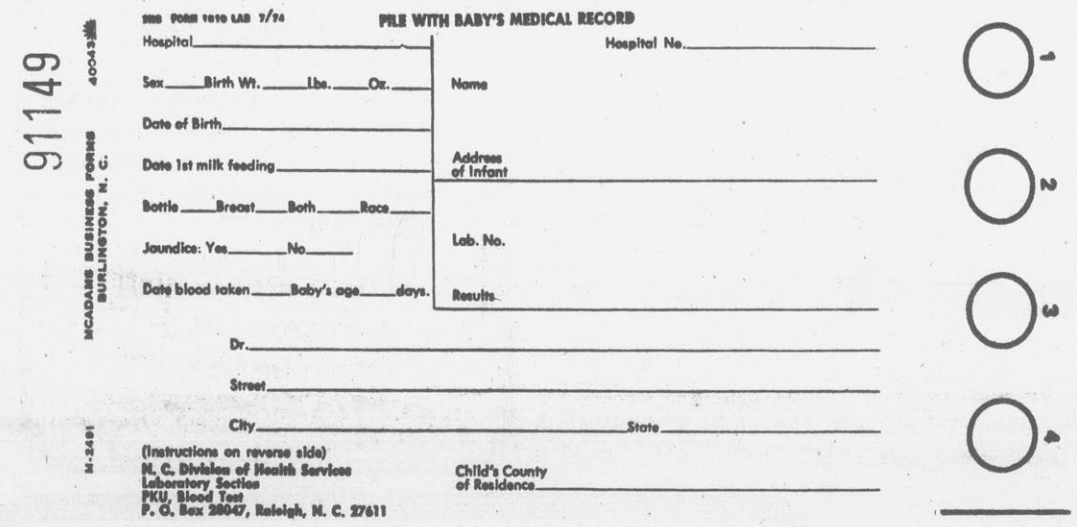

Were the tests not performed and the some 20 children born yearly with either condition allowed to go untreated, the children would become so mentally impaired that institutionalization would be required. Ms. Moore estimates the cost of caring for these children in institutions over their lifetime would run approximately $400,000 per child.

The heel or toe prick has now become one of the greatest weapons in the fight against mental retardation. There are currently 17 states which either test for both disorders or are planning a test program for hypothyroidism using this method, Ms. Matheson added

"Any infant born in Pitt County Memorial Hospital will have a PKU done before being discharged from the hospital. If the infant leaves early and does not receive a PKU, the Pitt County Health Department is notified and they send a notice to the parents to bring the infant for the test. The private patient can obtain the test in the pediatrician's office if desired. No infant is ever missed whether its done in the hospital, office or health department. The health department doesn't charge for the testing," concluded Mrs. Norris.

ACCURATE RECORDS. . .and information are kept by Mrs. Norris for the files at the hospital, pediatrician's office and health department.

Infants More Than Little Bundles Of Joy

By Steve Gilliam
UNC-G News Bureau

GREENSBORO — Do newborn babies really recognize their mothers' voices?

The question is one that has been around for years, lodged in the old wives' tales that surround the sweet mystery of mother and child looking upon each other for the first time.

Fresh from the womb and new to the world, infants have long been thought to lack the capacity to exist as anything more than little bundles of joy who function on reflexes and instincts and who have limited, if any, active mental processes.

Not so, according to data being compiled by a developmental psychologist at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Among the things he has documented is the fact that newborns both recognize and prefer their own mothers' voices to those of other women within three days after birth.

Even more surprising, infants appear to be able to learn and perform a simple task in order to hear tape recordings of their mothers reading stories and they also show indications of having functional memories — all within three days of birth.

"Until recently, researchers didn't give newborn babies credit for much at all in terms of coming into the world as competent little beings," said Dr. Anthony J. DeCasper, an assistant professor in UNC-G's Department of Psychology. "They give the impression of being totally helpless.

"To look at them, most people would believe that — they can't talk and their motor activity is such that they can't do anything besides lie there. But the things they can do, they do very well; they're quite competent little characters."

One of the things that babies do best in their earliest days is nurse, DeCasper said, noting that "the sucking reflex is something that all newborns have intact when they come into the world."

That reflex, DeCasper decided, would be the easiest mechanism to harness in order to ask the newborns some "questions" about their capabilities and what they perceived in their environments.

The "questions" centered on whether the baby would recognize and prefer the mother's voice, whether it would learn to nurse a "blind nipple" in a certain manner in order to hear that voice and whether it could remember the nursing pattern from one day to the next.

DeCasper's work on infants' perception has been going on for three years at the Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital in Greensboro. All of the subjects — between 150 and 200 of them — have been healthy, normal babies weighing between six-and-a-half pounds and eight-and-a-half pounds who experienced normal births and who had demonstrated no physical problems.

The infants were placed in hospital bassinets and small headsets were positioned loosely around their ears. In order to hear a tape recording of their mothers reading the Dr. Seuss book, "To Think That I Saw It On Mulberry Street," they had to maintain their sucking speed either at fast or slow levels. If they did not keep to the prescribed level, they heard another woman's voice reading the story.

As the tiny infants nursed, their sucking patterns were monitored by a computer that controlled which voice would come through the headphones. The patterns also were recorded on a graph for further study.

"The great majority of the infants — at least 85 percent — not only preferred their mother's voices, but they were able to retain the sucking pattern (during interval testing) for an entire day," said DeCasper.

"Right now we know that newborn babies appear to recognize their mothers' voices but we really don't know why or how. Our future work is being directed toward the source of that recognition."

Among the implications that can be drawn from the research, DeCasper says, are that:

Newborn babies have the ability to make distinctions between voices and speech patterns to decide which they prefer. In the vast majority of cases, the preferred voice is the mothers' which indicates recognition.

Although their physical capabilities are vary limited, the infants are able to control their sucking reflex (either fast or slow) in order to hear the voice they prefer. This activity indicates that they are able to learn a task, even at the age of only 24 to 36 hours.

Newborns appear to be able to remember the speed at which they must suck on the nipple, an indication that memory is in operation, although limited. The memory appears to last at least a day, since most babies are tested twice for the three day's they're in the hospital.

But why should an infant be able to distinguish between his mother's voice and that of another woman since most babies, under normal hospital conditions, generally don't spend a lot of time in their mothers' rooms?

The answer, DeCasper believes, lies in two hypotheses, both of which he is currently exploring in research with William P. Fifer' a doctoral student in psychology at UNC-G from North Hampton, N.H.

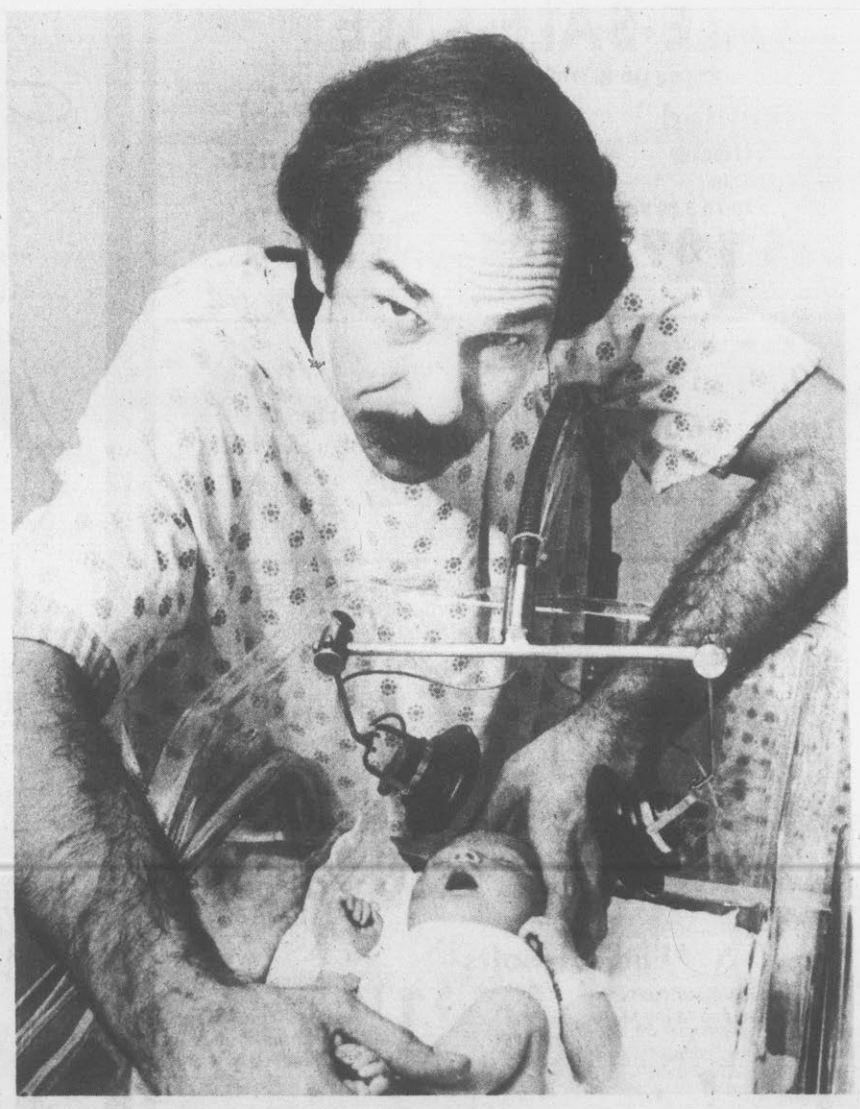

One is that newborn babies have well-developed perceptual and auditory capabilities intact at birth that allow them to distinguish between voices and sound patterns. Such abilities, however, would have to allow infants to learn about their mothers very quickly — within three days after birth.

The other, and perhaps the most appealing, is that babies learn the sound of their mothers' voices while still in the womb. Since the human ear is well-developed and functional around the seventh month of gestation, DeCasper says it's possible that the developing fetus "listens' to the mother's voice as it reverberates through the amniotic fluid.

"It's possible that it's a combination of both of these ways but we really haven't gotten into it far enough to be able to tell anything," he said.

Although scientists can't tell if an infant really knows what he is hearing, DeCasper believes that the technique he has developed for his research might be useful in developing procedures to test for congenital hearing problems, which occur in approximately three births out of 1,000 in the United States.

"Right now there is no completely satisfactory way to assess the hearing capabilities of newborn babies," said DeCasper. "This procedure might be useful in determining whether infants are capable of using the sounds they hear, something that other tests don't do right now."

On The Local Scene

by Rosalie Trotman

It's not hard to create a family heirloom that will be revered by future generations according to Georgia Bonesteel, hostess of a new quilting series on UNC-TV.

"Lap Quilting With Georgia Bonesteel," which premiered last Sunday, can be seen each Sunday at 4 p.m. on UNC-TV, Channel 25, through Feb. 11. The series will be repeated each Wednesday at 2:30 p.m. through Feb. 14.

Georgia has updated the ancient folk craft to fit into today's more modern life style. She has eliminated the need for the cumbersome quilting frame and introduced the sewing machine into the process. In lap quilting, quilt blocks are constructed complete with batting and backing sewn on. The individual blocks are then joined together to create the final product. She uses a sewing machine to stitch together the blocks.

In the series, Georgia demonstrates some of more than 700 quilting patterns including "drunkards path," "rail fence," "king's X" and "shoe fly." She also shows how to use quilted blocks to make wall hangings, shoulder bags, place mats and other items.

Bo Thorpe and Generation II, a highly acclaimed big band orchestra, will be the featured attraction at the 1979 Beaux Arts Ball, sponsored by the North Carolina Art Society.

The ball will be held the evening of Feb. 17 at the Country Club of North Carolina in Pinehurst. This years, as last, the ball will benefit the campaign fund for the new N. C. Museum of Art in Raleigh.

For information on advance tickets and reservations, contact Mr. and Mrs. Mark C. Liddell, Drawer 1099, Southern Pines, 28387.

DAR Chapter To Meet Thursday

The Susanna Coutanch Evans Chapter DAR will meet Thursday, Jan. 18, at 7:30 p.m. at the home of Mrs. Larry Whitlow.

The full shepherdess sleeves repeated the lace panels at the shoulder and cuffs. The modified A-line skirt, styled in redincote design, was enhanced with an insert panel of knife pleated organza outlined in scalloped chantilly lace.

She wore a chapel length veil of imported illusion edged in chantilly lace to complement her gown and held in place by a Camelot cap overlaid in lace and beaded with pearls. She carried a bouquet of daisies and miniature carnations.

The honor attendant wore a formal length gown of mint green polyester with long sleeves, high neckline and V-neckline. Her bouquet was of white carnations and daisies. The bridesmaids carried identical bouquets and their gowns were identical in yellow.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I don't know how a car knows when you're ready to sell it . . . but it knows.

We bought a four-wheel drive about seven years ago and there is nothing you can say to me that will convince me that car didn't understand every word we said.

A lot of marriages between new cars and owners are made in heaven. Maybe that's why we couldn't get parts. The honeymoon lasted exactly three hours. Then the light knob fell off in our hand, the rear window went down automatically and stayed there, and the floor burnt our feet up.

We didn't talk trade-in in front of the car for almost a year. Then one day my husband said, "Maybe we should trade in this clinker while it is still running."

We climbed in the car and the motor refused to turn over.

After we bought the new battery, we figured we might as well use up our investment. So we hung in there until seven months later when my husband said, "As long as we've got the original tires, we might as well turn it in." At that precise moment, the left rear tire expired.

With four new tires, the car had bought itself another year of residency. It was not ready to let us go. The least little thing could set it off. One day I just got out of my side of the car in a parking lot and remarked what a good-looking compact was parked next to us. Our car would not go into reverse and we had to have it towed to a garage where they duly recorded on our bill, "Stubbornness: $65."

We never knew why the transmission went out suddenly the way it did. We had been very discriminate in placing the ad for the car in the paper, being very careful never to mention it within hearing distance. But by the time the first caller inquired as to when they could see the car and we told them they could view it from a rack at Ed's garage, they backed off.

When we decided to trade the car in, we pretended we were going to the grocery. Then, at the last minute, we turned into the car lot. The salesman said he had never seen a car with the motor off and the emergency brake on, roll uphill to smash into a guard rail before.

I cannot believe he was that naive.

Bridges-Cannon Vows Spoken

WINTERVILLE — Mrs. Helen Cannon of Winterville and John Bridges of Greenville were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m. at the Good Hope Free Will Baptist Church. Bishop W. H. Mitchell officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Johnny Bryant of Winterville. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Rena Grimes of Greenville.

The church chancel was decorated with candelabra, greenery and white flowers. In the center was a 15 semi-circle candelabra flanked by tiered candelabra with bouquets of mums, pom pons and gladioli with standards of greenery. Pews were marked with white satin bows and greenery.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, chose an ivory gown of qiana and Venise lace fashioned with a Queen Ann neckline and empire bodice overlaid with Venise lace. The long fitted sleeves were accentuated with matching lace as were the modified A-line skirt and attached chapel length train.

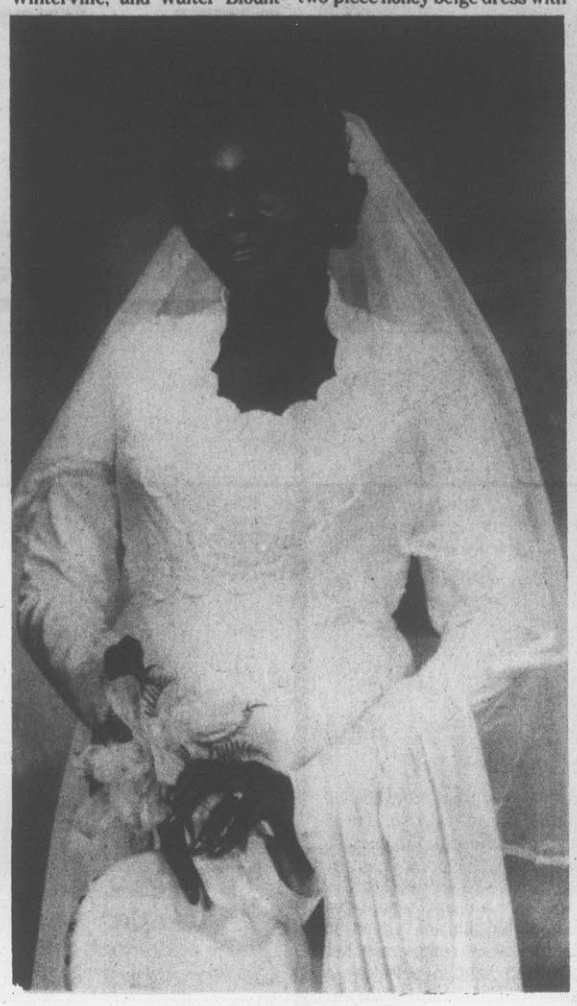

Ms. Luverna Dixon of Winterville was maid of honor. She wore a yellow formal length gown of moire crepe with a ruffled neckline, empire waist and long sleeves. She carried a nosegay of yellow, white, a touch of orchid, gold daisies and miniature carnations tied with a yellow and green velvet bow.

Bridesmaids included Katrina Blount, niece of the bride, of Greenville, LaForest Hammond, niece of the bride, Barbara Peterson, Eurydice Worthington and Fannie Mae Cannon, all of Winterville. They wore gowns identical to that of the honor attendant in gold and green and each carried a bouquet fashioned like that of the honor attendant with yellow velvet bows.

Ms. Kenyetta Blount of Greenville was flower girl. She wore a white formal length gown of moire crepe with an empire waist and carried a white basket filled with mixed flowers.

Richard Joyner, brother of the bridegroom, of Camden, N. J., was best man and ushers included Oscar Bryant, brother of the bride, Frank Peterson, Harvey Hammond, Lester Cox, all of Winterville, and Walter Blount of Greenville. Dwight Shepard, grandson of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

The sister of the bride wore a two-piece honey beige dress with white carnations. The mother of the bridegroom wore a pink polyester knit dress with a white carnation.

MRS. JOHN BRIDGES

A program of music was presented by Roger Ingram of Greenville, organist, and Mrs. Evelyn Hagans of Wilson, soloist, who sang "O Promise Me" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Ms. Evangeline Worthington directed the wedding and Mrs. Camilla King and Mrs. Icerlean Hill presided at the guest register.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Guests were welcomed by Mrs. Barbara Mitchell, Mrs. Delores Williams and Ms. Valley Cox.

Mrs. Louise Dawson served wedding cake and Ms. Hilda Carmon poured punch. Goodbyes were said by Ms. Shirley Daniels and Mrs. Mary Daniels.

The couple was honored with an after-rehearsal party given by Mrs. Rhuarma Knox, sister of the bride, and Mrs. Mable Hooks.

For a wedding trip to unannounced points, the bride changed into a three-piece blue knit suit.

The couple will live in Winterville.

He's Planning Misguided Tour

By Abigail Van Buren

1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My husband just told me he has a chance to drive two middle-aged widows to the mountains next June. He is to be their guide and chauffeur. I am not allowed to go along. He says they know he is married and it doesn't matter to them.

If he drives these widows to the mountains, he will be gone for two weeks.

He met these ladies in a beer joint. I asked him how much they were paying him for his services and he was very evasive and acted as though the money wasn't very important. (It is. We can barely make ends meet.) I get madder and madder as time goes on. Does this sound like a legitimate business deal or not?

STEAMED IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR STEAMED: Is your husband a professional guide and chauffeur, or did he agree to be one to accommodate these ladies? It's not a legitimate business deal unless he has some kind of contract or agreement with them. If he hasn't, it sounds to me like a lot of hot air that came out of a lot of cold beers.

DEAR ABBY: My dentist of long standing retired recently. (I'll call him Dr. A.) In his place there is a very likable, capable, young man. (I'll call him Dr. B) Dr. B. is an excellent dentist, but he has—of all things for a dentist—bad breath!

I like him and his work very much, but I don't know if I can subject myself to this unpleasant, almost nauseating situation.

I considered telling Dr. A. to tell Dr. B about his offensive breath, but Dr. A. is such a gentle soul I don't think he could bring himself to do it.

I'll be grateful for your suggestion.

NO NAME IN ARIZONA

DEAR NO NAME: It would be a tremendous kindness to let Dr. B. know that his breath is offensive. Do tell Dr. A. to wise up the young dentist. And if he doesn't do it—you tell him.

DEAR ABBY: My mother is a widow in her 70s who has been "dying" for the past 20 years. She keeps praying to die, and says she "knows" she will not live much longer. The doctors tell her there is nothing wrong with her.

It is very depressing to be around her. I want to be a loyal daughter, but I am so tired of hearing her say that she is praying to die, when there are so many people who are praying to stay alive.

The biggest problem is that she demands so much of my time. I am married and have my own family, Abby, and I just can't run over there and spend every day with her. I feel a responsibility to my mother, but she makes me feel guilty if I don't see her every single day. I have two sisters and one brother who give her very little time, and it doesn't seem to bother them. Please advise.

STUCK IN CHAMPAIGN, ILL.

DEAR STUCK: If you've heard her "praying to die" story for 20 years, you should be used to it by now. You should also realize that she probably doesn't mean it, and she could be a little sick. Handle her as you would a demanding child. Be compassionate and patient, but firm. Give her what time you can, and don't feel guilty about the rest. Your problem is not your mother. It's your inability to accept a situation which you can't change.

DEAR ABBY: I need to know something about hypnosis. Is it on the up-and-up, or is it just another gimmick to separate a fool from his money?

If it is on the up-and-up, how do I go about finding a legitimate hypnotist? Thank you.

NEEDS TO KNOW

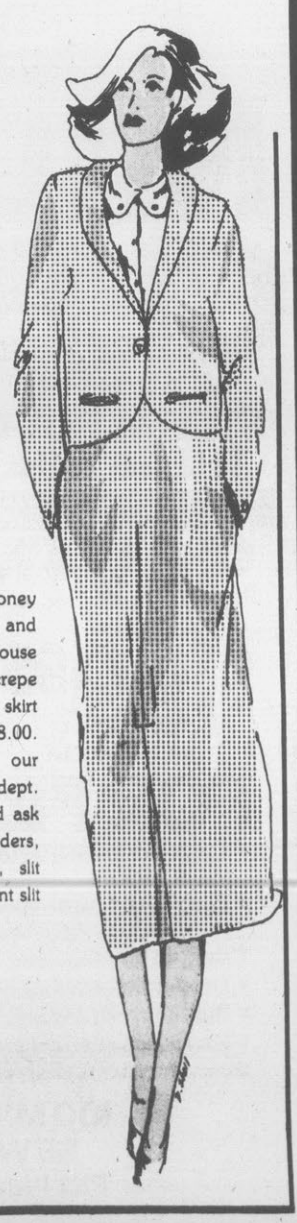

DEAR NEEDS: Where there is a dollar to be made, you'll find as many phonies as legitimate operators, and hypnosis is no exception.

Hypnosis has been effectively used instead of drugs to eliminate pain in childbirth, surgery and dental work. Under hypnosis people have overcome phobias and bad habits such as nail-biting, smoking and compulsive overeating. However, I must state here that not everyone is an ideal subject for hypnotism.

For information on qualified hypnotists in any area, write to the Association to Advance Ethical Hypnosis, 60 Vose Ave., South Orange, N.J. 07079. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a brief statement of the problem for which you seek hypnotic help.

Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple do-your-own-thing ceremony, get Abby's new booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

On The Young Side

Now that the Christmas holidays are over, the students of Rose High School are getting back into the swing of things as club activities continue.

On Wednesday night, members of the newly formed Girls' Wildlife Club met and listened to Dave Bumgardner as he spoke on the safety and usage of guns. In the near future, Bumgardner plans to take the girls skeet shooting. Another future project being planned is a hiking trip to New Bern Jan. 21.

Officers of the Girls' Wildlife Club include Jennifer Wooles, president; Kim O'Brien, vice president; and Sandy Evans, secretary-treasurer. The advisor of this group is Mrs. Judy Stokes, a senior English teacher at Rose.

During an Anchor Club board meeting Thursday morning, it was suggested that the club again have a Valentine's Dance for members and their dates. Plans for the dance to be held on Feb. 17 are now in progress. Also occuring in the next month will be a joint meeting of the Pilot and Anchor Clubs.

In order to decide on a fund raising project, members of the National Honor Society met Friday morning. The club wishes to raise money to help meet expenses of the next community ambassador.

The Health Horizon club members plan to be very active in the near future. On Jan. 29, Dr. Jon Tingelstad will speak to the group about the Heart Fund.

Throughout the entire month of February, members will be stationed at Pitt Plaza each Saturday to help with the Heart Fund drive. A recent project of this club included making posters for Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Members of the Monogram Club began selling jackets last week. The jackets, costing $18, are lined and green with blue lettering. All proceeds will go to the Athletic Department.

On Friday, two Rose High students representing Pitt County in the Morehead Scholarship competition went to Williamston to compete on the district level. These two candidates, Til Jolly and Susan Tucker, were interviewed by a panel of five persons. Good luck is extended to both of these outstanding students.

Foreigners Move Deeper Into Buying Up America

By ROZ LISTON
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Foreigners bought America in 1978: its industries, stocks and real estate.

The French are acquiring a stake in American Motors Corp., a Latin American purchased a farm in Virginia's hunt country for almost $2 million, and a West German bank wants to buy the World Trade Center's twin towers in New York.

The British own Gimbels and Saks department stores and the French are in the process of taking over E.J. Korvettes discount chain. The smaller foreign investor is putting money into U.S. farm land, restaurants, and orange groves.

In the first nine months of 1978, the net inflow of foreign direct investment into the United States totaled $2.9 billion — far ahead of the $1.8 billion plunked down by foreigners for U.S. interests in the full year 1977, according to the U.S. Department of Commerce.

The Dutch made the biggest dollar investment in the United States in 1977, followed by the Japanese, the British, West Germans, Belgians and Luxembourgers, and the French, Commerce figures show.

The tally is not yet in for 1978, but the line-up of foreign investors should be much the same.

New York's Citibank has formed a new banking department to help foreign firms invest in the United States, and state and local governments are waging aggressive campaigns to attract overseas industry.

Foreign stockholdings in U.S. companies jumped from just under $26 billion at yearend 1974 to approximately $53.54 billion by the close of 1978, according to Treasury Department estimates.

Although U.S. investment abroad still is on the uptick, International Telephone & Telegraph has gotten out of the telephone business in France, Firestone is leaving Switzerland, and Chrysler has abandoned Europe altogether.

The weakness of the U.S. dollar and the United States' relatively low inflation rate in comparison to heated price spirals elsewhere in the world are obvious lures for foreign capital.

But there are subtler factors behind the discovery of America as one of the best havens for foreign funds.

"What brings most foreign investment to the United States is the relative political stability, the lack of fear that assets will be expropriated, big markets in which to sell products, the skilled labor pool, and our vast natural resources," said William Gaede, national director of client services and development for Touche Ross & Co.

Gaede dismisses the uneasiness expressed by some Americans that the United States is falling into foreign hands.

"We're far from approaching the point where we're owned by other countries," he said.

"It's a lot better to import capital than to import goods," Gaede observed. "Foreign investment in the U.S. economy creates and sustains jobs that keep Americans employed."

Despite the splashy publicity surrounding several Arab purchases of U.S. real estate, the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries account for less than 1 percent of the foreign direct investment in the United States, according to Commerce data.

"The Arabs are interested in equity participation in small American industries such as electronics and farm products, but most Arab money that has come to the United States is in bank deposits, common stocks and government securities," said David Mizrahi, editor of the MidEast Report.

Arabs, who traditionally have shunned checks and done business on a cash only basis, are beginning to take mortgages on U.S. commercial property, such as office buildings and shopping malls.

Nevertheless, the Arabs have a higher percentage of funds invested in Great Britain, which ruled over much of the Arab world for more than a century.

"Most Arab investments go to the country in which the investor studied," Mizrahi said, "and many Arabs still are being educated in England."

But there are signs oil dollars may begin flowing to the United States in more significant numbers.

"The Arabs now trust the dollar more than the British pound, strangely enough, and they believe the United States has the strongest economy next to Japan."

Saudi Arabians — who became familiar with the United States decades ago through the American-owned Aramco oil concern — tend to put more money into U.S. ventures than their Arab neighbors, Mizrahi said.

One Saudi, Ghaith R. Pharaon acquired the Atlanta bank of former White House budget director Bert Lance and has an eye on the Hyatt hotel chain.

Australian publisher Rupert Murdoch has extended his publishing empire to the United States, Korean minister Sun Myung Moon owns diversified U.S. interests, and Anglo-French tycoon Sir James Goldsmith controls the Grand Union supermarket chain.

The biggest individual overseas investor in the United States probably is a 51-year-old West German by the name of Friedrich Karl Flick.

He heads the Flick Group, a $4 billion industrial organization that has invested more than half a billion in the United States since 1976. Flick recently raised his stake in W.R. Grace & Co. to 31 percent and holds 34.5 percent of U.S. Filter Corp.

The tide of foreign capital in the United States also has flowed into real estate.

Sotheby Parke Bernet International Realty, the New York-based division of the British-owned art auctioneering firm, said foreign buyers have been an important factor in the nation's booming real estate market.

"Nearly half our sales have been to foreign purchases who for economic, political or personal reasons are looking to buy property in America," said Charles H. Seilheimer, Jr., president of the Sotheby realty division. Sotheby doubled its real estate sales last season and 25 percent of its properties went for more than a million dollars.

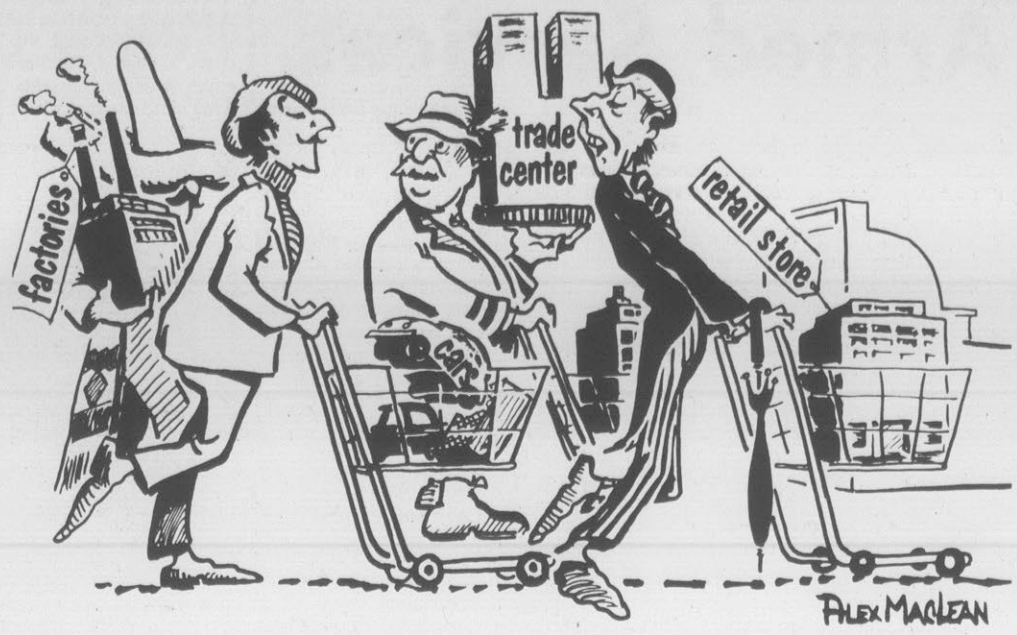

Latin Americans and Canadians are flocking to Florida to buy real estate, foreigners from around the globe are opting for luxury apartments and townhouses in Manhattan, and Arabs are drawn to sun-soaked Texas and southern California.

Sotheby recently sold a 225-acre farm in Warrenton, Va., to Fritz Schroer, a German businessman, who then chartered a 747 jet to airlift his Olympic champion horses to U.S. turf.

"Many Europeans are attracted to Virginia since they find its rolling hills and gracious lifestyle similar to what they have in their own countries," said Seilheimer.

But the real estate rush is rooted in one basic economic fact: the price is right.

"Where farmland might cost $5,000 an acre in Europe," Seilheimer said, "the equivalent is available for $1,500 an acre in Virginia."

Paris A Status Symbol For American Models

By JENNIFER SMALL

PARIS (UPI) — If a Paris label is a status symbol on a piece of clothing, modeling the garment can be the same for the girls who do it.

"When you leave America and come here it's very prestigious," said Carol Columbus, of Port Arthur, Tex.

"Paris is supposed to be the center of fashion. To say you've worked in Paris makes a big impression on modeling agencies back in the states."

"A lot of the girls they use here are from the states," she said.

Miss Columbus, who worked for Mic Mac, a French fashion house specializing in sportswear, said she believes American mannequins have a more professional attitude than their French colleagues — and employers appreciate girls who report on time with makeup on and don't take two hours for lunch. American girls also are said to have longer legs.

"American models tend to be more efficient about their work," said Karin Orlander, who holds dual nationality in Sweden and France and has modeled in Paris for three years. "But that is characteristic of Americans; to take their work seriously.

"A French girl will come on like a little butterfly or a little flower and that is reflected in her work."

Even though the American mannequin is "in," getting a job here is no cinch.

"Paris is the hardest place because the fashion houses use the same girls they did the year before," Miss Columbus said. "They use very few new ones."

She said her agency told her there were 4,000 girls in Paris last fall trying to land half that many jobs in about 100 shows for press and buyers.

The fashion houses hire about 20 to 30 mannequins for ready-to-wear shows. Many model for more than one fashion house.

Miss Orlander said she thinks the American country and western look is in demand now.

But some of the most renowned fashion houses, such as Yves Saint Laurent, like black and Asian mannequins for the exotic look, Miss Orlander said. Many of those exotic mannequins also are American.

Miss Columbus said a portfolio of photographs is the most important part of an interview, even if a mannequin is seeking runway, or live, work. There is no sharp distinction in France between models who are photographed and those who show clothes at fashion shows. Many do both.

"The fashion houses want to make sure you can photograph well and they want to see whose garments you're wearing," she said. "It's all very political."

As in other cities, however, getting a modeling job "can have a lot to do with whom you sleep with," said Colleen Sheppard of Oklahoma City, Okla.

"There are many, many sleeping offers," Miss Orlander agreed.

"I say, 'no.' I don't want to be a slave of the system, because it is a system. It can be very dangerous for young girls who want success."

The mannequins agreed the uncertainty of their work requires having a level, as well as lovely, head.

"Models, the most beautiful people, are the most insecure people," Miss Columbus said. "They're always afraid they'll be dropped for someone else."

Hotline Help For Troubled Writers

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Are you suffering from a dangling participle? Tripping over five-syllable words? Don't know where to put your comma?

In an age when many people would rather pick up the telephone than a book, Daniel Littlefield's English Department at the University of Arkansas at Little Rock may have the answer: 501-569-3162 a writers' hotline.

The 25 English teachers at UALR seem to welcome the queries they receive daily from stumped writers, lawyers and businessmen nationwide.

"It's like creating Frankenstein. But we always have the perfect way out of this. We could always have our telephone taken out," Littlefield says. As far as he knows, UALR is the only college in the nation operating a writers' hotline.

Actually, he and his colleagues are pleased that about 30 callers consult them each week about the finer points of punctuation, spelling and grammar.

The hotline became a fixture at the English Department in February at the suggestion of Stuart Peterfreund, then an assistant English professor. Peterfreund now teaches English at Northeastern University in Boston.

It began as a service to Little Rock area residents, and soon attracted national attention. Nowadays, you can call the English Department between 9 a.m. and noon on weekdays and get answers to questions about tenses, attribution and apostrophes. The calls are fielded by a secretary and transferred to a faculty member.

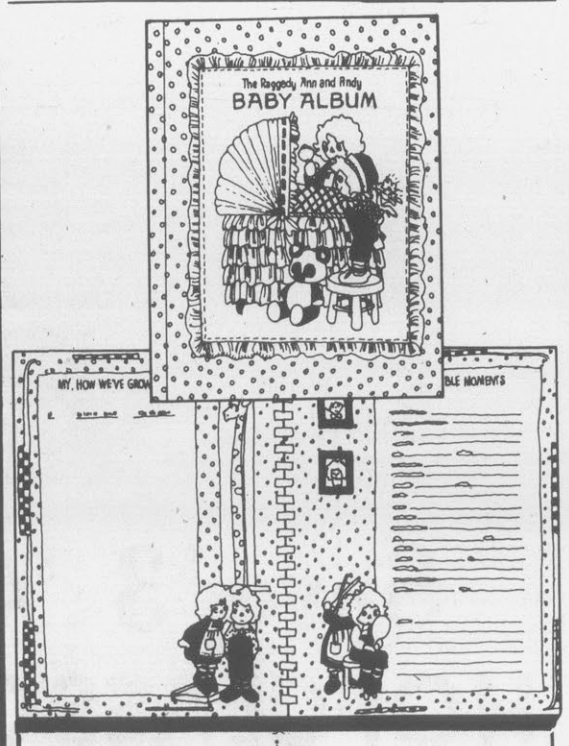

"It's amazing. We get calls from New Jersey, New York and we had one last week from Bellingham, Wash. We had another one from Itell Corp. in San Francisco," Littlefield said.

Ghana Raising Bunny Money

ACCRA, Ghana (AP) — When you tune in your radio in this capital city of Ghana on the west coast of Africa these days, you are likely to hear a series of catchy jingles beginning, "Get the rabbit habit!" or "Make the bunny money!"

Similar advice is blazoned across billboards along the highways and in the public squares of towns and villages.

The publicity is part of a nationwide campaign backing Ghana's national rabbit project, which is promoting backyard rabbit breeding as a means of increasing meat supplies, at low cost, and with a minimum of extra effort.

Although Ghana now produces all of its own rice and enough maize to meet the requirements of its more than 9.5 million people, there is still a chronic shortage of meat, and when meat products do reach the market they are priced far beyond the means of the majority of the population.

The rabbit, which is of African origin, has several characteristics that make it ideal as a source of meat in developing countries. The gestation period for bunnies is only 31 days and a healthy female can produce three or four litters, averaging six to eight offspring, every year. Starting with a buck and a doe, a backyard breeder can obtain a quantity of meat over the course of a year equal to the weight of an average cow.

Food for rabbits is readily available in Ghana. The animals will eat almost anything, including table scraps, leftovers from sugar-cane harvests, various kinds of grass, groundnut and sweet potato vines. Brewers mash, left as a residue from the locally produced millet beer and formerly discarded as useless, furnishes an excellent source of protein.

Although rabbits require clean, quiet quarters, their upkeep is not difficult and requires no great amount of time. People who work during the day can easily tend them mornings and evenings.

Ghana's National Rabbit Project got under way in 1972 and has attracted international interest and support. Since the wild local rabbit is a small animal weighing only about 2 pounds, the development of hybrids yielding more meat but hardy enough to do well under Ghana's varying climatic conditions became a first priority. The government of Switzerland provided a gift of 120 rabbits to get the project started. Other breeds have come from the United States, New Zealand, Australia, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Realizing that it had to "sell" the idea of rabbit breeding to families all across the country, the government of Ghana in 1974 requested the United Nations Development Program and the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization to assist in establishing an information unit in the Ministry of Agriculture. The U.N. sent Joseph Ascroft, a national of Malawi, who is a professor in the School of Journalism at the University of Iowa.

LARRY'S CARPETLAND AND LEES CARPETS REVEALS SOME SURPRISING FACTS TO HELP INTELLIGENT CONSUMERS CHOOSE WISELY.

How do you know what to buy?
It must be difficult for a consumer to decide what and where to buy and how much to spend for a carpet. Certainly during the last week you have seen and heard dozens and dozens of carpet ads, many of them promoting carpet at very low prices and very large savings. You can't shop all the ads. So how do you know what to buy.

Consider this fact:
Lees, America's number one manufacturer makes a wide variety of carpets, some selling for as little as $8.95 per square yard plus padding and installation. Yet the best selling carpets in the entire Lees line sell for about $16.95 per square yard plus padding and installation. This is true not just here, but throughout the entire country.

Why are so many people willing to pay so much for a carpet?
There are a number of reasons. The carpets are beautiful, thick heavy. The kind of carpet texture that most people seem to want these days. These carpets are made in solid colors and subtle tone-on-tone patterns. The colors available are magnificent. But the beauty of these carpets is only part of the reason for their popularity.

The face yarns in these carpets are made of 100% Antron® nylon by Du Pont. The development of Antron® has been one of the significant happenings in the history of the carpet industry.

Antron® is special

Big Dealer In Seashells

By JOHN VIRTUE

MAZATLAN, Mexico (UPI) — The biggest seashell dealer in Mexico is a 400-pound former lumberjack from Seattle, Wash., who got into the business by accident.

"I ran out of wood," says 47-year-old Robert Quinn.

Back in 1954 when he was selling off his logging equipment, Quinn chanced upon a man who made ornamental fish nets. Quinn went into business with him, and his search for seashells to decorate the nets brought him to Mexico 20 years ago.

"If you run out of timber, you have to look for something else," Quinn said in an interview. "I didn't look for the shell business. I just fell into it."

Quinn opened his first shop at Flagler Beach, Fla., but sold it when he started his "South of the Border" store at this Pacific coast resort early last year. Even while he had the shop in the United States, he was shipping shells around the world from Mexico.

Quinn has shells for the ordinary tourist and for the serious collector who might order a Gloria Maris shell for $3,000. Besides shells, he stocks everything from shark jaws to intricate coral necklaces.

"I would say that Mazatlan is the best shell area in the world," he said.

Other good areas, he added, are the Great Barrier Reef in Australia and the Philippines.

Quinn has a staff of 12, including two divers who go down as deep as 150 feet off the Pacific coast of Mexico looking for shells. Smaller dealers provide him with shells and other items from Mexico's Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico coasts.

Quinn runs the business — and a larger, new shop to be opened soon in Mazatlan — with his 34-year-old Mexican wife.

Quinn has tons of shells in his shop but does not think of himself as a collector.

"I consider my wife to be a collector," he said. "I sell anything I can get my hands on."

Tire Traction Needs Vary

CHICAGO (UPI) — Special traction equipment for cars makes winter driving safer but no one type is good for every situation.

For example, a test project by the National Safety Council's Committee on Winter Driving Hazards found conventional snow tires without studs slightly inferior to regular tires in stopping on ice.

But on rear wheels, the test showed studded snow tires reduce braking distance on ice by 19 percent and reinforced tire chains, by 50 percent. The comparison in both instances was made with regular tires.

The project also showed radial tires had no advantage over regular tires in driving on ice. Their traction performance in snow depends on tread configuration. A snow tread will perform as a snow tire and a regular tread as a regular tire.

Conventional snow tires without studs improve pulling ability 28 percent on glare ice and 51 percent on loosely packed snow, the tests showed.

Safety Trim On Joggers' Garb

ST. LOUIS (UPI) — Optometrists say darkness makes joggers dangerously invisible to drivers. Even at slow speeds, a motorist may not see a jogger in time to prevent an accident, especially if the jogger is wearing dark clothing.

The American Optometric Association suggests applying retro-reflective material to the sides, front and back of jogging clothes and shoes for high-visibility.

The association says such materials make the wearer safely visible to drivers even at such high speeds as 70 mph.

According to optometric studies at Indiana University, nothing — not even white clothing — can top retro-reflective material for visibility at night.

TOURIST QUOTAS

TOKYO (AP) — China will admit 150,000 tourists in 1979, including 5,000 from the United States and 50,000 Japanese, Masakazu Tsuyama of the Japanese Travel Bureau says.

We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

Eyes on the Soviet guns.

FOR HAROLD BROWN, Secretary of Defense

In what areas of defense are we lacking and most vulnerable? — E.N. Danville, Ill.

● I don't believe our defenses are "lacking" in any important respect. Still, we must work hard to keep from becoming vulnerable in the future. In the Soviet Union we have a strong adversary whose forces are greater than those needed for defense alone. There is no sign the Soviets are reducing their heavy investment in the nuclear and conventional forces that threaten us and our allies. We must improve our defenses to meet the risks posed by the steadily improving Soviet forces. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries, which include the U.S., have begun a long-term program for improving its forces, a program that will affect almost every aspect of our European defenses and enable us to strengthen ourselves.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Is there anything in those rumors that Kathryn Crosby is going to remarry? If so, who is the man? — B.G., Bangor, Maine

● Those reports are all false alarms. "Not in the foreseeable future," was Kathy's answer to our question as to whether she planned to rewed. She doesn't get annoyed by the gossip, not even when it surfaced less than a respectable period after Bing's death last October. "I see it not as an invasion of privacy but as a show of interest," said Kathy. "It means people are interested in me and care enough to wonder what I'm doing. It means they know everyone in this world needs love and care." Kathy said her personal life is more or less taking a back seat. She's putting every ounce of energy and effort into her stage career. Also, she's still busy plowing through the thousands of tributes that poured in after Bing died.

Robin Platzer

Dear Bingle — still remembered.

FOR DIANA CANOVA, star of ABC-TV's Soap

I know you're religious, so how can you appear in such trash? — J.V., Boise, Idaho

● Firstly, it's a job, and I need it. Secondly, if I, with my strict Catholic upbringing, see no reason to condemn Soap, why should anyone else? It's not meant to be taken seriously, just tongue-in-cheek entertainment. What makes me furious is the attitude of some schools. They had schoolchildren write to the show's sponsors, saying, "I will not buy your products because you sponsor that disgusting show."

FOR O.J. SIMPSON, football star and a lead in the movie, Firepower

Your record for most yardage gained in one season (2,000 yards) is a great one. Do you think it will be broken soon, and by whom? — R.J., Albany, N.Y.

● I think it will. For one thing, the season now consists of 16 games instead of 14. When there are more games, the odds increase. During the next few years, watch Walter Payton from Chicago, my first choice. Next, keep an eye on Delvin Williams, who was recently traded to Miami.

FOR PAUL HARVEY, newscaster

Do you have any faults that you'd like to correct, and why do you always say "after page 2" in your broadcasts? — Mrs. Elmer Skoog, Lyford, Texas

● I fervently wish I could give more in-depth research to each subject; there is never enough time when I must do 11 broadcasts, five telecasts and three newspaper columns every week. And many say I talk too fast. As for page 2, it's a necessary separation between news and commercials. I don't like to say, "Here is a message from our sponsor."

FOR ETHEL MERMAN, musical comedy star whose 70th birthday is on Jan. 16

I've heard it said you're the easiest person to write songs for. Why? — P.L., Little Rock, Ark.

● I suppose it's because I belt them out so loud and clear. But it's also been said that if anyone writes a song for me, and it's bad, everyone can hear what's wrong. The only place where my pipes don't always work is in nightclubs. There's always someone at the back complaining he can't hear — while you hear every word he's complaining.

FOR ELLA GRASSO, Governor of Connecticut

I just saw Henry Fonda in First Monday in October, about the first woman Supreme Court Justice. The other Justices are uncomfortable with her. Has this happened to you as a woman governor? — G.S., Danbury, Ct.

● My colleagues have been as courteous to me as they are to any other governor. My opponents have used the term "governess." The people of our state did not appreciate that, and my opponents quickly abandoned it.

FOR ALVIN AILEY, choreographer-dancer

Does it bother you that, although your company is well known, your face is not? — E.G., Canton, Ohio

● Sometimes, especially when something like this happens: a few weeks ago, I had left a TV studio after being interviewed with dancer Judith Jamison and two young secretaries. One of the crew rushed up to us, stared hard, then gushed, "Which one of you is Alvin Ailey? I've been your fan for 25 years."

PRO AND CON

Should Congressmen Be Covered By The Social Security System?

PRO Sen. Mark. O. Hatfield (R.-Ore.)

The original intent of the Social Security system was to provide a supplement to individuals who might not have laid aside enough of a "nest egg" for retirement. Because members of Congress have sufficient retirement benefits from various other pension plans, they have been excluded from the system. The result, however, has been to establish an inequity that is understandably upsetting to the public. I believe that members of Congress should right this wrong by acting to include themselves in Social Security. I have, therefore, introduced legislation with Senator Robert Morgan requiring the inclusion of the legislative branch. My hope is that congressmen will soon share the responsibilities of contributing to the system.

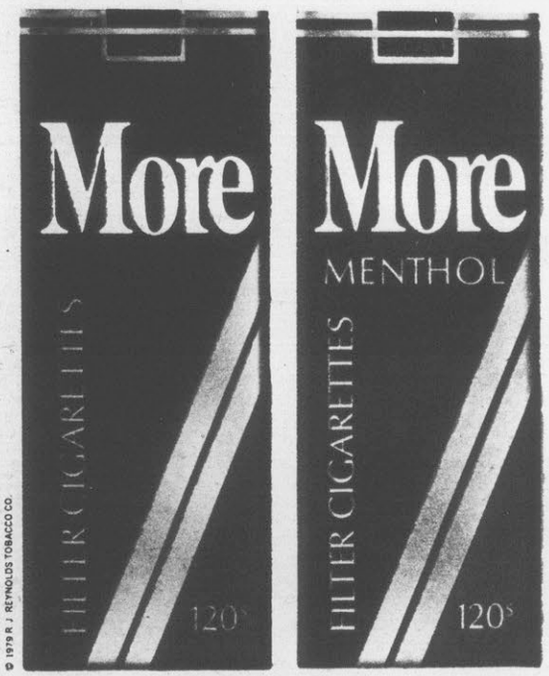

CON Kenneth T. Blaylock, National President, AFL-CIO, American Federation of Government Employees

No. Most members of Congress earn Social Security credit through military service or self-employment. Also, Congress has a special retirement plan that accommodates the whimsical nature of political jobs. Congressional coverage might be a first step toward mandatory coverage for all federal employees, a step which we would oppose. Social Security cannot be a substitute for the adequate (although not generous) Civil Service retirement program. Few realize that most federal workers pay 7 percent of base salary for retirement privileges, which are fully taxed. Coverage of federal employees, including Congressmen, might initially add funds, but over the long run it would also mean another 2½ million beneficiaries.

Jodie Foster

The Off-Camera Lives of Child Actresses

By Isobel Silden

Almost every new mother would like her son to be President. If the baby is a girl, most secretly hope that she'll be another Shirley Temple.

It hasn't happened yet. However, for the first time since Shirley "sparkled," as her mother said, there is a handful of talented young actresses currently working in motion pictures and television who just may become living legends.

Alphabetically, they are 11-year-old Quinn Cummings of the Family TV series, and the movie, The Goodbye Girl; 17-year-old Jodie Foster, with dozens of movie credits; 16-year-old Kristy McNichol also on Family and TV specials; Tatum O'Neal, now 15, who has been shocking her public since she appeared in Paper Moon; and Brooke Shields, 13, famed since infancy as a model. Most recently she was in Pretty Baby and King of the Gypsies and has completed Tilt and Wanda Nevada.

Judy Garland is evocative of the worst fates. There have been others: adorable Anissa Jones, who was Buffy on Family Affair, died of a drug overdose. Cute Lauren Chapin, the youngest child on Father Knows Best, is now 34. She has had drug and alcohol problems and three unsuccessful marriages. Of her six-year-old son she says, "He sings and dances, but I won't let him get into the business until he's old enough to decide for himself. I missed a lot without a normal childhood. I didn't realize how much bitterness and hate I had in me until my mother died." Her parents divorced when she was very young.

Elinor Donahue, who played her older sister, has aged more gracefully. She is happily married, has four sons and still works regularly on TV shows and in commercials.

The all-time ideal American family, Ozzie and Harriet Nelson, permitted us to watch David and Ricky grow up before our eyes. Today David is a not-too-successful producer. Ricky is a not-too-successful musician.

David I. Gottlieb, M.D., is an associate professor of clinical psychiatry at UCLA, has a private psychiatric practice and is the author of The Gay Tapes. He feels that "Working children often are not given other outlets and the ability to build up friendships. They have a peculiar view of life. They're taught to act, rather than to be sincere."

He concurs with a colleague who states: "All children are subject to pressure to excel in school, in sports, in societal roles in general. Child actors get more pressure because the stakes are greater: money — and the rejection is much worse. I would say his chance for a happy adulthood is totally dependent upon the security and love that is in the home, starting at infancy."

In this more enlightened society, however, it would appear that even child actors have a fighting chance at normalcy, after talking with two and their mothers. In addition to being actresses, all the girls have other common denominators: they have unusual and asexual first names. And they are being raised by one parent.

Only Quinn Cummings' father is deceased. Ironically, he died of a heart attack in April, 1977, in their Los Angeles home on the final day she was filming The Goodbye Girl in New York City.

Jodie, Kristy and Brooke are raised by their mothers. Tatum, as the newspaper-and-magazine-reading public is all too aware, makes her home with her father, actor Ryan O'Neal.

Quinn Cummings and her mother, Jan, say up front that Quinn wants a father and Jan wants a husband for all the reasons lone women do. The attractive redhead says, "When Quinn goes to bed, there are just so many books I can read, and so much TV I can watch. It's very lonely. It's almost impossible to find an available man in Los Angeles. I'm tired of going places alone or staying home because I don't have an escort. I don't see any advantage to being a one-parent family, except for the fact that we're closer because we're all we have.

"If Quinn had a stepfather, it would take pressure off me both financially and emotionally."

She works as a free-lance accountant, banks or invests Quinn's earnings, stating firmly, "I do not live off my daughter."

Quinn, a gregarious, friendly-as-a-puppy youngster, wants her mother to remarry. Her ideal stepfather must come with a 13-year-old daughter.

"I'd want her to be a slob like me. I wouldn't want a neat-nick because then we'd be compared, and I'd always be nagged to clean up my room."

She would also like the companionship of an older sister, she adds more seriously.

Jodie Foster, Kristy McNichol and Tatum O'Neal all have the companionship of brothers.

Brooke Shields' mother, Teri, divorced her husband when Brooke was five months old, but she has had the advantage of a man around the house, Bob Karsian, geologist and oil-well owner, who has been asking Teri to marry him for ten years.

"I tried it once. That's enough. He's a close family friend and he loves us."

Unlike Quinn, Brooke doesn't feel the need of a stepfather, since she sees her natural father, his wife and their children regularly.

Teri says she has no problems raising her daughter alone. "If she talks back, she gets punished by not being allowed to watch TV or visit her horse. She'd rather visit the horse than go to a movie or get a new necklace."

The two-year-old chestnut was a gift from costar Peter Fonda at the conclusion of filming Wanda Nevada.

Every six months, Teri says she and Brooke discuss the direction her young career is going, and if she wants to continue working. So far, she does. She will confide that "I don't know what I want to be when I grow up. I'm only 13 years old. I know I want to marry and have children, and right now I think I'd like to keep on acting, if my husband and children understood. If they didn't, I'd give it up." She projects only that far into her future.

Meanwhile, her not-inconsiderable earnings go into a trust fund which cannot be touched until she is 21. Because Teri travels with her from their New York home, she receives a per diem allowance. However, she plans to draw a salary for tax purposes.

Accused of being a stage mother and worse, Teri denies printed facts, stating most of the people writing about her have never interviewed her.

"If I fight about anything, it's to have her studio tutor teach Brooke French, so she can stay up in it." Brooke, now in the 9th grade, maintains an A to B-plus average.

Teri's advice to women raising a child alone is simple: "Be honest with your child and establish a friendship. Don't hold anything back. I keep Brooke disciplined because I don't see anything wrong with discipline, and we go to [Catholic] church every Sunday. Most of all, we love each other very much."

Mary Hirschfeld, J.D.M.A., is a divorce counsellor who works with psychiatrists while helping her clients obtain divorces with minimum pain. She has observed countless one-parent situations.

"With a child actress in the family, the focus is on the child, and if decisions are made based on the child, she must grow up with skewed values. To overcome that situation, the parent must make it very clear that it's a job, it's work. Sometimes it may become necessary to withdraw the child from her audience and put all the focus on giving love in the home. You can really get pulled off-center by reading your own press reviews," she points out.

The bottom line is still how the children themselves feel about working. Quinn Cummings sums it up succinctly:

"No matter what, I would have been in show business, as a director or a writer, because I love working with the camera so much. Acting is just the easiest way to get to it."

And her happy smile is really convincing. FW

AN INTERVIEW WITH FRENCH CHEF JACQUES PEPIN

By Marilyn Hansen

It was recently my pleasure to meet Jacques Pépin, the talented French chef who now lives in the United States.

Jacques' parents were proprietors of a Lyons, France, restaurant, Le Pelican, and he frequently helped out in the kitchen and ran errands for them after school. Jacques was 13 years old when he was apprenticed to the head chef of the Grand Hotel de l'Europe and found that he loved the kitchen and the voluminous hot range that kept his cheeks as rosy as ripe red apples.

The excitement of travel, boats and faraway places has always had a strong appeal for this vibrant man. Jacques revealed that "America attracted me; I wanted to come and see it myself. And so I came and found that I loved the freedom and space of America, and I didn't want to return to France to live." In New York he perfected his cooking skills.

One surmises, however, that he wasn't always researching recipes, as Jacques had an active outdoor job, teaching skiing. One day a bubbly young woman came along and enrolled for a private lesson and then promptly signed up for another. It finally dawned on Jacques that this persistent woman was more interested in him than in learning to ski! And the persistent ski bunny did make her mark — the former Gloria Augier of New York is now Mrs. Jacques Pépin.

Currently, Jacques is a food consultant and writes a monthly column for a magazine and frequently contributes to newspapers.

However, it was his teaching appearances around the country that led to his writing the new cookbook, La Technique.

Leon Perer

Jacques Pépin, renowned French chef, sharpens the number-one tool of his trade: the French knife.

Jacques says in his introduction: "I have often noted when teaching a cooking class that the greatest drawback to a good performance in the kitchen is an inadequate knowledge of basic techniques."

One technique is knowing how to cut up a chicken. As you may be aware, whole chickens are sold more cheaply per pound than those cut up in the supermarket. So, in this as in other techniques, you can save yourself money by learning how to do it yourself. And, once you have your chicken cut up, try Jacques' recipe for Poulet Vinaigre (Chicken in Vinegar).

POULET VINAIGRE
Chicken In Vinegar

3 lb. broiler-fryer, cut up
1½ teaspoons salt
¾ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 tablespoon plus one teaspoon butter
⅓ cup red wine vinegar
⅓ cup water
2 or 3 cloves garlic, chopped
⅓ cup red wine vinegar
3 or 4 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon tomato paste
Salt
Few twists freshly ground black pepper
1 tablespoon mixed chopped fresh herbs: parsley, tarragon and chives

1. Sprinkle chicken pieces with salt and pepper.
2. Heat one tablespoon butter in large, heavy skillet.
3. Brown chicken in hot butter, placing pieces skin side down first. Do not crowd chicken and allow 8 to 10 minutes for browning.
4. When chicken is browned, add ⅓ cup red wine vinegar and ⅓ cup water to skillet. Cover skillet and cook over medium heat 18 to 20 minutes.
5. Remove chicken to 160°F. oven to keep warm. Don't cover.
6. Pour off pan liquids from skillet and set aside.
7. Gently sauté garlic in 1 teaspoon butter for ½ minute.
8. Return pan liquids to skillet along with ⅓ cup red wine vinegar and 3 to 4 tablespoons water. Heat to boiling, permiting sauce to reduce, 1 to 2 minutes, scraping all solidified juices from bottom of pan.
9. Add tomato paste; stir or whisk in smoothly. The tomato paste will thicken the sauce.
10. Taste, add salt and few twists freshly ground black pepper as desired.
11. Place chicken in serving dish; pour sauce over and sprinkle with herbs.

HOW TO GET SET FOR SKIING

Steamboat Ski Resort

By Pam Lambert

Contrary to popular belief, everyone you see in a cast this winter hasn't necessarily been injured skiing. "New developments in equipment, like shorter skis and release bindings, have reduced injuries considerably," says Billy Kidd, Olympic silver medalist and director of skiing at Steamboat, Colo. Kidd and other experts agree, as well, that there are many injuries that could be avoided with a little advance thought and preparation by the skier.

Conditioning

The most important thing any skier can do to prevent injury, conditioning, should start well before he heads for the slopes. "Proper conditioning plays a large part in avoiding injuries by making fatigue less likely and by improving the ability of the skier to meet inevitable spills," cautions Dr. Hans Kraus, a New York specialist in rehabilitative orthopedics, who has worked with hundreds of skiers.

A conditioning program for skiing should develop three things, strength, cardiovascular capacity and flexibility, says professional racer Otto Tschudi, who competed in two Olympics on the Norwegian team. Tschudi, who is director of skiing at Winter Park, Colo., recommends exercises such as tennis and racquetball for developing cardiovascular capacity and reflexes, and bicycling and jogging to increase strength in the legs as well as cardiovascular capacity.

Long-distance running can help increase endurance and prevent fatigue says Dr. Robert Israel, an orthopedic surgeon who is Director of the Sports Medicine Service at New York's Hospital for Joint Diseases and Medical Center. Dr. Allan Ryan, editor-in-chief of The Physician and Sportsmedicine magazine, advises that more advanced skiers increase the strength in their upper torsos through weight-training, and Billy Kidd recommmends jumping rope as a good conditioner. Kidd also says that jogging is a more valuable conditioner for skiing if done on irregular terrain.

Equipment

If you're buying new equipment, make sure the skis are the right length for your level of ability. Skis should be equipped with straps or, preferably, brakes so that they won't slide down the hill ahead of you (and injure another skier) if your bindings release.

Properly adjusted bindings are crucial for safety. Don't economize here by buying an inferior brand. To make sure that your bindings are adjusted properly, Tschudi advises going to a shop with a certified binding mechanic. Also, Tschudi says, check bindings and boots whenever you come off the slopes to make sure that they're clean; if not, they may not release properly.

Check all equipment you already own to make sure everything fits well and is in good repair. Skis stored in a garage may need the rust removed from metal edges and sharpening.

Lessons

Don't underestimate the safety value of ski lessons, even if you're not a beginner. "Some people who will spend as much as $300 to $400 to outfit themselves are reluctant to spend $10 to $15 for a lesson that could help prevent their being laid-up for days," says Dr. Ryan. He believes lessons are particularly useful for the beginning recreational skier who is skilled in other sports and "thinks his athletic ability will carry him through. Many people don't realize that some of the ways of handling the body in skiing are contrary to what you learn in other sports."

Slope Sense

Much of ski safety is just common sense. Ski on a trail matched to your ability. Be wary of overrating your skill. Dr. Ryan points to one study in which skiers were asked to rate themselves and then were evaluated by ski instructors; most had rated themselves one grade too high. At the beginning of the season, start on an easier trail than you would have taken at the end of the previous year.

Keep the trail clear. If you're stopping for any reason, especially on a curved trail where you won't be visible from above, stay to the side. Don't drink before you ski; you won't have complete control of your body.

Learn to listen to your body. "Pay attention to what your body is telling you about fatigue," Kidd warns, "and if you've had a bad day, start on an easier trail to help your confidence."

Don't overdo it. Or, in the words of Otto Tschudi, "If you're tired, retire." FW

Can your child read these words?

napkin	fuzzy	liquid	punch	camel
misty	chicken	velvet	whisper	zigzag

Your child will learn how to read these and more than 300 other words after working with the very first record of The Sound Way to Easy Reading.

Try out this Phonics Course FREE FOR TWO WEEKS with your child in your own home — without risking a penny. Mail the coupon below.

If your child is a poor reader, if he has not been able to keep up with his class in school—here is a way that you can help him. Many parents have seen their poor readers gain up to a full year's grade in reading skill in just six weeks with the Sound Way to Easy Reading.

As soon as your child starts playing the records and using the charts of The Sound Way to Easy Reading you will know why it works so well. It takes the mystery out of learning to read because it teaches your child by the phonics method (the method by which most parents learned to read years ago).

Teaches with records

With this course your child discovers that letters have sounds. When he starts sounding out the letters he hears himself saying the word. He's reading!

The records drill him in the sounds of the 26 letters of the alphabet and their blends. By the time he completes the first record (about two weeks for the average child) he can read 300 words. After finishing all four records he has been taught 123 basic phonics sounds.

Once he knows these sounds he can read up to 85% of the words in the English language. It works for children of all ages—in the earliest grades and even in high school. Its records tell your child exactly what to do, so he can teach himself without any help from you.

Tested and Proved

In a pilot study by university psychologists, children gained up to a full year's grade in oral reading skill after only 30 lessons with The Sound Way to Easy Reading.

A semester-long study involving 214 pupils in four Chicago schools proved that the classes given The Sound Way to Easy Reading showed marked improvement in reading and spelling over the control groups.

Don't think it's all your child's fault if he hasn't learned to read. Many of our brightest children are not able to grasp some of the current methods taught in most schools today. Many educators insist that at least 40% of our children must have formal training in phonics—that they will never master reading without it!

These unbreakable records and self-quizzing cards can help your child gain a full year's grade in reading in just a few weeks.

Help Your Child Now

So don't wait for your poor reader to reach high school before coming to his aid. By starting your child on The Sound Way to Easy Reading now, you can change his entire attitude toward school—turn his sense of failure into the joy of success. Try it free for two weeks. You send no money—just mail coupon.

Handling Family Arguments

Bill and Marianne don't understand how their frequent arguments begin. One minute life is peaceful, then some small thing goes wrong and they're having a roaring set-to. Clinical psychologist Dr. Robert Kornhaber, a specialist in communication techniques, explains that, without realizing it, Bill and Marianne may be using aggressive phrases that inevitably infuriate each other. For example, statements such as "It's all your fault," or "Why are you making everybody so miserable?", make clear the speaker is completely innocent, and it's the other person who's the wicked culprit. If, instead, the speaker said, "I don't think this is a good way to handle the situation," or "Let's see what we can change," nobody has been blamed, and there's now a good chance of achieving some desired improvements. Words such as "never" and "always" act like dynamite. "You're always late." "You never want to go anywhere." Here you're mixing blame with the powerful comment about the other person "always" being guilty. Other arguments flare, says Dr. Kornhaber, because people verbally attack and complain about saying what is wrong and what needs altering. Perhaps one parent has just punished a child and the other parent says, "You're going to ruin that child. You just don't handle her right." "Ruin that child" is a very serious attack, and "just don't handle her right" is vague and guaranteed to start a shouting match. Far better to mention exactly what the problem is and suggest something constructive. "I don't think sending her to bed without supper is an appropriate punishment. Let's figure out something more appropriate for the future." If, during any discussion, the other person starts to name-call — "You're stupid or impossible or crazy," etc. — control your urge to answer in kind. Neutralize the situation by replying, "I'm not going to get into a name-calling act. Let's discuss the problem or forget it for now." Dr. Kornhaber points out that name-calling can lead to a searing family battle, one which everyone loses and no one wins. By exercising self-control and giving a constructive answer, he suggests you avoid the argument and thereby both of you "win."

Solving Children's Mealtime Hassles

Marilyn and Tom and their three children finished their Tuesday-evening dinner. As they stood up, Marilyn sighed, "After dinner, I always feel as though we'd been through a war." Tom nodded. "It's the truth." Millions of American parents would agree with Marilyn and Tom. Instead of the "gracious interlude" often described in family magazines, mealtime in many homes is friction time. But there are solutions says the famed clinical psychologist Dr. Albert Ellis. A good portion of the problem is caused by the parents, not the children. Because dinner is often the only period the whole family is together, families use the occasion to discuss all the day's problems. Parents check on children's play behavior, their schoolwork, homework, test marks, chore responsibilities, music lessons, etc. The children, in turn, quickly learn that this is a good chance to bring up their grievances against their brothers and sisters. If the children are young enough, recalling these grievances can quickly turn into physical fights at the table. Parents also invent meal trouble for themselves by setting difficult and unrealistic standards of table manners or eating habits. Too rigid a parental attitude creates hassles. Similarly, food should not be wasted, but when Mom and Dad insist the child "taste everything" or "finish everything on your plate," they are inviting commotion. Use utensils, table settings and chairs suited to the children's ages so that it's not necessary to keep up a barrage of "be careful" nagging. "Be sure you don't make any kind of fetish out of eating," says Dr. Ellis. "Don't talk endlessly about food or be a victim of peculiar food faddism yourself. Set the child a good example of meals as a pleasant occasion."

Dr. Ellis offers solutions to other child-raising problems in his book, How to Raise an Emotionally Healthy, Happy Child, paperback $3.00, Wilshire Book Company.

JOBMANSHIP

Businessmen vs. Businesswomen: Any Differences?

Except for one thing, women business owners "are not much different" from men who set up their own businesses, according to a Center for Venture Management study. But both men and women entrepreneurs are different from the average jobholder — they most often come from a family in which a parent had an independent business or professional career. Say the investigators. "What is happening is that entrepreneurs beget entrepreneurs." Unlike most jobholders, they're moderate-to-high risk-takers. Hard drivers who love to work, they have a tendency to marry themselves to their businesses and to neglect their spouses. You may hear them talking about retiring, but so total is their dedication that they rarely do. Even if they sell their business, they almost always start another. As employees, before beginning their ownership careers, they're restless, with a tendency to have a number of jobs. The one difference between the men and women? The woman business owner enjoyed her years of schooling, but the men frequently did not. Male entrepreneurs often have a school-expulsion or drop-out episode buried under their well-earned business success.

THE Rh SCANDAL: WHY THOUSANDS OF BABIES DIE NEEDLESSLY

H. Armstrong Roberts

By Robert Claiborne

This year, more than 2,000 American babies will die shortly before or just after birth — unnecessarily. Hundreds more may suffer severe brain damage, producing permanent retardation or cerebral palsy. Tragic enough in their own right, these cases are doubly tragic because they don't have to happen. The babies in question will be victims of "Rh disease" — a condition that is 98-percent preventable if the proper measures are taken in time.

These measures have been known for over 10 years; they are simple, inexpensive and safe. Where they have been used systematically, Rh disease has been virtually wiped out. Yet the preventive treatment is currently being used in only about 80 percent of the cases where it is medically indicated; in some areas, the percentage is considerably lower. So long as this situation continues, we will continue to lose several thousand babies a year needlessly.

What exactly is Rh disease and how do doctors go about preventing it? Its fundamental cause is what is called the Rh factor — a substance found on the surface of most people's red blood cells. About 85 percent of the U.S. population has this factor and is classified as "Rh-positive;" the 15 percent who lack the factor are "Rh-negative."

In itself, this lack means nothing; so far as is known, being Rh-negative or Rh-positive has no more effect on personal health than being blue-eyed or brown-eyed. The only time it can become a problem is when an Rh-negative woman conceives a child by an Rh-positive man — meaning that the baby will usually be Rh-positive, and thus incompatible with its mother. In most cases this still produces no difficulties. Sometimes, however, while the baby is being born (or occasionally under other circumstances) a small quantity of its blood cells gets into the mother's bloodstream.

From the standpoint of the Rh-negative mother's body, these Rh-positive cells are foreign substances, and the body reacts as it does to other foreign substances, such as bacteria: it begins making antibodies which attack and destroy the "invaders." The antibodies do no harm to the mother — or, of course, to the baby that has just been born. The real trouble starts if the mother conceives a second Rh-positive fetus. Now she already possesses antibodies against Rh-positive blood cells, and when these pass into the fetal bloodstream they do what they are designed to do: destroy red blood cells. This can damage the fetus in two ways. First, since it is the red cells that carry oxygen to the tissues, the loss of too many of them will starve those tissues for oxygen. Second, the breakdown product of the cells, if present in sufficient quantity, is toxic. If the process goes far enough, the fetus will die, and even if it doesn't, its brain may still be irreparably damaged.

In most second pregnancies of Rh-positive babies, fortunately, this doesn't happen. The mother, for one or another reason, was not "sensitized" to Rh-positive cells the first time or wasn't sensitized enough — that is, she doesn't produce enough antibodies to damage the new fetus. As one might expect, however, her chances of becoming sensitized increase with each Rh-positive pregnancy: perhaps one in a 100 after the first, one in 10 after the second, one in five after the third and one in three after the fourth. And once she is sensitized, it's for life. There currently is no safe way of stopping her from making antibodies or of removing them from her blood, thus an Rh-positive baby she conceives thereafter will very definitely be in danger.

There are ways of averting that danger — sometimes. Through the procedure called amniocentesis, which samples the fluid that surrounds the fetus within the womb, doctors can determine quite accurately whether enough of its blood cells have been destroyed to endanger its life. If the danger exists and the pregnancy is far enough along, the baby can usually be saved by being delivered prematurely and given an "exchange transfusion" in which its contaminated blood is entirely replaced. Even if it is too young to survive premature delivery, it can still sometimes be saved by transfusing blood into it while it is still within its mother. But these procedures require skills not available at all hospitals; moreover, even when they work they carry certain risks to both mother and baby. And they are costly, averaging close to $5,000 per baby, and for some, over $20,000.

Obviously it would make a lot more sense to prevent Rh disease rather than be forced into the risks and expense of trying to treat it.

Nearly 20 years ago, a group at New York's Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center, headed by Dr. Vincent Freda, began wondering whether it might not be possible to prevent Rh disease — not by treating the baby but by treating the mother before she became sensitized. They reasoned that if the mother, immediately after the birth of her first Rh-positive baby, were given an injection of Rh-antibodies, these would neutralize the Rh factor on any of the infant's blood cells that had gotten into her bloodstream. As a result, her body would have no "incentive" to start manufacturing antibodies of its own; she would not be sensitized. At about the same time, a group in Liverpool, England, headed by Dr. R. Finn, arrived at the same conclusion by following a somewhat different line of reasoning. Both groups, operating separately, set about testing their theory.

The first step was to obtain antibodies to the Rh factor. After considerable experimentation, the researchers found a way of extracting this in relatively pure form from the blood of women who had already been sensitized — of which there were, unfortunately, plenty. The next step was to try the preparation on men, for whom there would be no risk to any future baby if the technique didn't work. Rh-negative male volunteers were injected with the antibody preparation, then given small injections of Rh-positive blood. As the theory had predicted, they produced no antibodies of their own. The final step was to try the injections under actual clinical conditions on Rh-negative women who had just delivered Rh-positive babies. Again sensitization was prevented. By 1968, the researchers were ready to move ahead full steam: they began giving the injections routinely to every Rh-negative woman who was "at risk" of sensitization. Soon the procedure spread to other large hospitals, both here and abroad.

Rh SCANDAL

It works like this. Early in pregnancy, the woman's blood is tested. If she is Rh-positive, no problem; if she is Rh-negative, further tests are made to see if she has been previously sensitized by an earlier pregnancy (or occasionally in some other way). If she is sensitized, there is a problem, but not one that the injections can help; instead, the doctors check her over regularly to determine whether the fetus is in danger and, if it is, try to save it. If, however, she is not already sensitized, then immediately after delivery the baby's blood is also typed. If it turns out Rh-positive, as it usually does, the mother is immediately given the protective shot of antibody (called RhoGAM). The entire procedure costs $50 to $60 per patient.

The effectiveness of the procedure is shown by figures compiled at Columbia-Presbyterian (they can be paralleled in many other places). In 1964, when the Columbia doctors first began giving the injections experimentally, some 14 percent of all pregnant, Rh-negative women examined were already sensitized. Ten years later, the figure had dropped to less than 1 percent. The drop took that long because of the backlog of already sensitized women who RhoGAM could not help. As this group began moving beyond childbearing age, the value of the protective shots for younger, not-yet-sensitized women became clear: in the population served by Columbia-Presbyterian, Rh disease almost disappeared.

The preventive technique became even more efficient through the discovery — puzzling at first — that some sensitized women had never borne a child. But they had, as it turned out, undergone abortions — which it now appears can occasionally sensitize an Rh-negative woman, though much less often than a normal delivery. Accordingly, the Columbia group began giving mini-injections — called MicRhoGAM — after abortions, and the number of sensitizations dropped even further.

In describing the success of the RhoGAM treatment, Freda and his associates emphasize that there is not a single case in which it has done even minor harm to the mother — and only a handful of cases in which it has failed to work. They therefore operate on the principle: "When in doubt, give it. It may do some good, and will certainly do no harm."

The treatment is just as effective in saving money as in saving lives. Recently, some Canadian economists did a computer study on the cost of treating one case of Rh disease compared with the overall cost of preventing it: the figures worked out at $25 in treatment costs for every dollar spent in prevention! The RhoGAM "stitch in time" saves a lot more than nine — a thought worth bearing in mind as our national bill for medical care continues to climb. Freda estimates, in fact, that the present 80-percent use of RhoGAM is saving us at least $100,000,000 a year. By simple arithmetic, raising that 80 percent to 100 percent would save us an additional $25,000,000.

But to save that money — and those lives — the stitch must be given in time; once the mother has been sensitized, it's too late. Yet, one out of five women who who should be getting it — over 100,000 women a year — aren't getting it in time, or any other time. In most cases, the reason is not that doctors and hospitals don't know about RhoGAM but simply that they haven't gone to the trouble of making sure that every woman who needs it, gets it. The main culprits, according to recent surveys, are small hospitals in rural areas and some clinics specializing in abortions that don't bother to have the mother's blood typed.

The longer these hospitals and clinics are allowed to continue their slipshod ways, the longer it will be before Rh disease is wiped out. At best, it will take more than 10 years because of the backlog of women who should have gotten the treatment but didn't, and are already sensitized. Further delay could come if women are legally prohibited from getting abortions: experience shows that tens of thousands of them will go to illegal abortionists — and few of the illegal abortionists would be likely to worry about blood-typing or protective injections.

American medicine has the tools to wipe out Rh disease almost totally. Failure to use those tools, not just most of the time but all the time, will be what Dr. Freda flatly calls it: "A discredit to our profession." FW

JUST LOST A SPOUSE?

There's a volunteer support system for you.

By Constance Walker

"That first time Diane called was like a bolt from the blue. She told me she was a Widowed Persons' aide volunteer and that she knew I had just lost my husband. And then she explained that there was a program available for widowed people — to help them through some of the problems. We had a real nice chat, and then I went to a tea they gave. They were all warm — a friendly group — and when I went home, I cried buckets. I hadn't been able to cry since my husband died."

Eleanor Depenbrock had never heard of the Widowed Persons Service Program until Diane Wayman called her. Mrs. Depenbrock has a great many caring relatives in the Washington, D.C., area, where she lives, who helped her through the trying time when her husband, Thomas, died, but it wasn't until she met other women facing the same problem that she was able to deal with its reality.

She remembers the women sitting in a group, telling how they coped with living alone and about the variety of emotions experienced. "It helps when you hear it from other people, how they have the same problem, how you are no longer number one in someone else's life."

The Widowed Persons Service Program is an outreach organization in 55 cities across the United States. The program is cosponsored by the National Retired Teachers Association, the American Association of Retired Persons and various groups within a community.

The Service is free to all people of all ages. It exists solely to help the widow and widower through the grief process. WPS project specialist Ruth Loewinsohn says every survivor goes through the same three stages of grief: shock — the immediate reaction to a death; recoil — a phase which can last up to two years and consists of experiences of anger, abandonment, crying, a feeling of losing your mind, self-destructive behavior or any one of a number of physical or emotional reactions; and recovery — when the widowed person begins to think of things other than the tragedy and starts to build a new life for himself or herself.

The Widowed Persons Service begins almost immediately to help the surviving spouse. Names are sent to the local chapters from clergy, friends, relatives or are taken from the obituary columns of local papers.

Diane Wayman is a widowed aide at Iona House in Washington, D.C. Her husband, a former Life photographer, died of a heart attack five years ago when Mrs. Wayman was 28 years old. Since then, she has been raising their three children with the help of her grandfather.

Mrs. Wayman has been successful in reaching widows through the obituary columns. She writes to women who have young children and who are in a lower-age category because she says she's able to relate to them more easily. The widows also are able to respond to her because their comparable youth and young children seem to be a meeting point for them to begin discussing widowhood.

"You worry about children," Mrs. Wayman says, in summing up the young widow's fear. "You think about not having a man in the house for your young sons to identify with. And you worry about going to work, day-care problems, the children's schoolwork, Social Security or veteran's benefits. Mainly, you worry what to do about the children.

"I tell them that I understand what they're going through — that I've been through some of the kinds of problems they're having at this time and that I'd like to talk to them." Mrs. Wayman is very careful, though, not to give any false encouragement — that she is not the "salvation of your life."

Intuition plays a certain amount of importance during that first telephone call, she points out. She will usually let the person talk but at some point in the conversation will break in and ask whether there are children in the family.

"I tell them about mine and how hard it was for me to get all the paperwork done, standing in veterans' benefits lines and all. Then they start opening up, and most of the time they begin crying."

That's the point when Mrs. Wayman suggests that they would like her to come over for a cup of coffee or tea and some talk. "It's quite brave of them to let you see them during this time because they're in real grief."

Mrs. Wayman says that although almost everybody has someone, a friend, relative or family member who is supportive during the initial phase of widowhood, people slowly become tired of hearing the same thing. They don't want to discuss the grief anymore, and they can't understand why the widow doesn't "get herself together" and start coming out of it.

At that first meeting, Mrs. Wayman listens. That's what she considers to be her main function — listening. Usually the widowed person will relate the minute details of the day of the spouse's death since memory for that day is most acute.

Sometimes the widow thinks she is becoming emotionally unstable because she's not able to pick up the pieces of her life. Again, Mrs. Wayman reassures the survivor by telling her of her own experiences — how she used to think her heart was pounding or how she was unable to make decisions or concentrate.

After the initial meeting, the widowed aides call and invite their contacts to a monthly tea. Usually there are 10 to 15 people there, and there's a certain format to the teas. The people just talk to each other, and then they introduce themselves to a group, giving their names and telling how long they've been widowed.

Sometimes they say nothing. Sometimes they stumble on the word "widow" because it's the first time they've said the word in connection with themselves.

At the teas, the women exchange thoughts and help. When Mrs. Wayman was a new widow, someone told her to sit in her husband's place at the dining table — that way she wouldn't have to face the empty chair and be reminded constantly of the loss.

Other aides tell about rearranging furniture or sleeping in the guest room for the first few weeks. Some widows tell of their fear of being alone, so a security system may be suggested.

Most of the aides continue to telephone, and sometimes they call in the evening because they say 9:30 to 10:00 is an especially bad time for the new widow. It's the time most people don't call, and the time of night that's the most lonesome. Also, the aides try to call on weekends when, in happier days, the couple would have been doing a number of things together.

If the grief is too prolonged or the WPS aide sees that there is general disorientation — maybe the bed is always unmade, the house in disarray, dishes in the sink for too long a time — the aides suggest professional counseling.

Because of the highly sensitive nature of the program all volunteer aides must be widows or widowers for at least two years, and they must have had nine hours of training in order to understand the entire grief process and the ways people work through it.

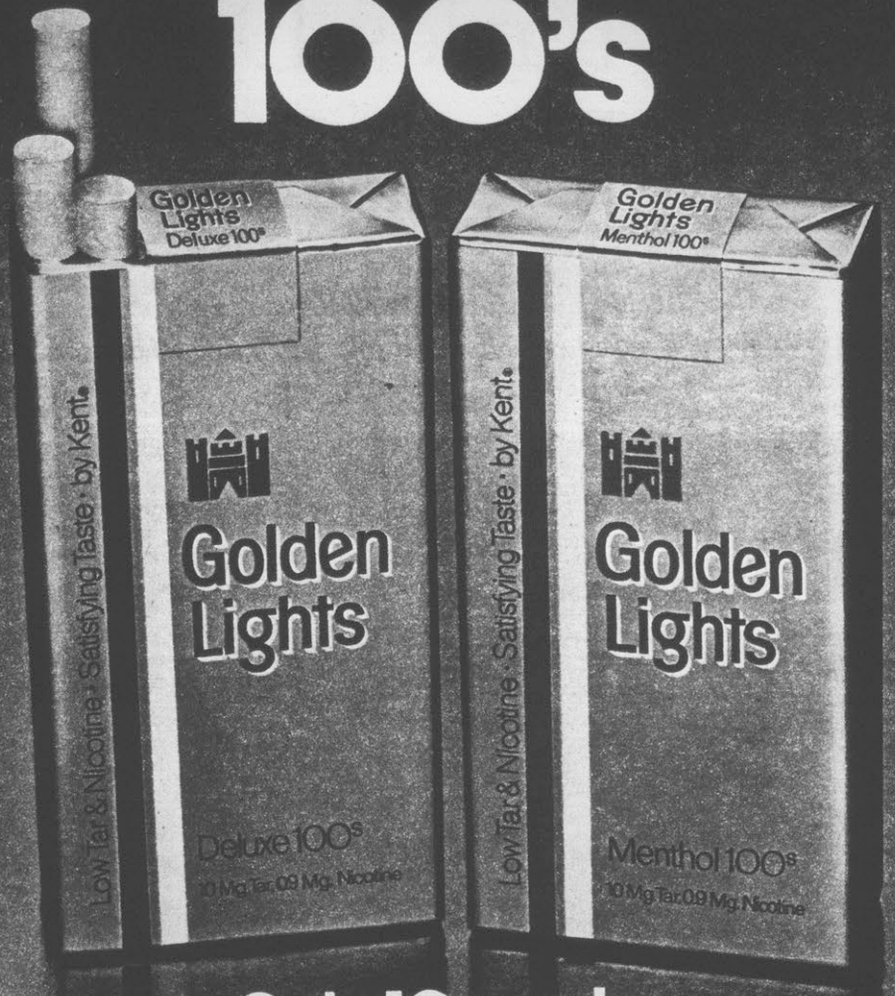

"The program's not a cut-and-dried situation," Mrs. Wayman cautions. "As a WPS aide, you do get involved — your commitment to the program is all your own emotions and insides. When you first meet a survivor, you think, have I done right by this person? How presumptuous I am to intrude.

"At the end, when you see the positive signs, when they're taking charge of their own lives, gardening, taking care of their house again, finding new interests, well, that's when I feel better about myself." FW

And Mr. Pickwick, Little Nell, Uriah Heep, Bob Cratchit, Mr. Micawber . . . In all, twelve colorful Dickensian characters—brought to life anew in this fascinating art medium.

Created by a sculptor of exceptional talent and inspiration

Each of these imaginative Toby Jugs has been sculptured by the outstanding British artist Peter Jackson, who is also a noted historian and authority on English society. Mr. Jackson is renowned for the meticulous historical accuracy of his work.

In designing these original Toby Jugs, Peter Jackson has captured in each case not only the appearance of the Dickens character portrayed—but his or her personality as well. Each design has a touch of the whimsical, the humorous, the wry—of which Dickens was a supreme master. Thus, each of the Toby Jugs is much more than a portrayal. It is a creative three-dimensional portrait in a medium especially appropriate to the interpretation of these Dickens characters.

Franklin Porcelain is pleased to have obtained the services of Wood and Sons Ltd., Burslem, Stoke-on-Trent, to craft these unique Toby Jugs. This is the same firm which created the very first Toby Jugs two centuries ago. From its founding by Ralph Wood in 1750 until today, Wood and Sons Ltd. has handed down the secrets of its craft to each succeeding generation of the family.

Each of the Toby Jugs will be carefully crafted in English earthenware, to the exacting standards of Wood and Sons Ltd. and those of the sculptor, Peter Jackson.

Moreover, each Dickens Toby Jug will be individually hand-painted by artists who are especially skilled in this demanding work. Brilliant colors and tones will be used, so that each Toby Jug will glow with life. When placed on a table, or in a curio cabinet, these hand-painted jugs will provide a distinctive note of interest to any room.

An edition to be made available for a limited time only

The Charles Dickens Toby Jug Collection will be issued in a single edition to be limited in the following strict manner: a set will be placed on display at The Dickens House Museum in London; one set will be reserved for the archives of Franklin Porcelain; and one set will be crafted expressly for each person who enters a valid subscription for the series during the limited subscription period ending January 31, 1979.

The total edition of The Charles Dickens Toby Jug Collection will be permanently limited to the exact number of valid subscriptions postmarked by January 31, 1979. Then, when all the Dickens Toby Jugs have been sent, the molds used to create them will be destroyed so that this collection can never be produced again.

Those who subscribe will receive their Toby Jugs at the rate of one every other month, and the issue price of just $45 for each will be billed in two equal amounts of $22.50 per month. Thus, the collection may be acquired conveniently and systematically.

The Charles Dickens Toby Jug Collection is certain to become a prized family possession—one that will provide enjoyment and satisfaction for years to come. To enter your subscription, mail the application below to Franklin Porcelain, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania, by January 31, 1979.

HAVE FUN AND TRY "TRANSFER ART"

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Inexpensive tiles will make a handsome pair of decorative plaques by applying greeting-card illustrations.

Making transfer pictures is a fascinating way to decorate a multitude of items. And no artistic ability is required. Someone else supplies the art, then you give it a new dimension.

Transfer pictures are those that you literally transfer from the paper they are printed on to another surface. Almost anything that has been printed on paper can be transferred, such as paintings, photographs or words.

The great fun of making transfer pictures is the almost limitless supply of subject matter available. In addition to magazine pages, pictures or words can be lifted from calendars, matchbook covers and even bubble-gum trading cards. Some wallpaper designs can be lifted, as can pictures from some postcards, newspapers and greeting cards.

An ordinary stone can be turned into a decorative paperweight. A rock can become a handsome bookend or a door stop. Inexpensive plastic tiles or a piece of lumber from a scrap pile can be transformed into unique wall plaques, and personalized planters or pencil holders can be made from cast-off coffee cups. A magazine picture transferred to canvas can resemble a painting.

You can even transfer your own art work or the children's drawings. Ballpoint pen ink, but not the felt-tip kind, will transfer, as will crayons.

TRAUMA TO TRIUMPH: THE COMPLEX ART OF PARENTING

By Gloria Hochman

In a new book, Ourselves and Our Children (Random House), written by 10 women who comprise the Boston Women's Health Book Collective, the unexpected problems and frustrations of parenthood are honestly discussed. The Collective's first book, Our Bodies, Ourselves, was a bold effort to help women gain mastery over their bodies; it has sold more than two million copies and has been published in six languages.

The goal of this new volume, with each chapter researched and written by a different author, is to break down some of the myths about parent/child relations and to help people cope with the demanding job of parenthood. "Most books about parenting focus on children," says Peggy Wegman, one of the writers. "This one focuses on parents."

The more than 200 mothers and fathers interviewed talk freely about parenting — from the decision to have a baby, through what it is like to be the parents of an infant, an adolescent and a grown-up.

"What we found was that everyone shared the same feelings but was ashamed of them," says Joan Sheingold Ditzion, another of the authors. "There were big differences between what they thought it would be like to be a parent and what it really is like."

What it really is like is "a mixed bag emotionally," says Ms. Ditzion. "We all know that we have felt both love and rage for our child at the same time. Yet, it is almost sacrilegious to say anything bad about him."

Verbalizing feelings and sharing them with other mothers kept Ms. Wegman from sinking into paralyzing depression after the birth of her first child. "I was so hungry to hear someone say she was experiencing the same thing I was," remembers Ms. Wegman. "The women's group I belonged to gave me — gave all of us — a sense of joy because we understood each other's feelings."

The authors of Ourselves and Our Children, who have 23 youngsters among them, believe that parenting can be a joyful experience, but to make it so, there will have to be dramatic changes in parental roles and the development of cultural attitudes and practices.

"There must be changes in the old pattern in which a woman gives all of herself to her husband and children, only to be left empty and depressed at mid-life when her children leave home. There must also be changes in the role of fathers," says Wendy Coppedge Sanford, the book's editor.

"Until recently, child care has been seen as not masculine, not appropriate for men," explains Ms. Wegman. "But this is rapidly changing, and the fathers we talked to tell us their lives have been enriched because they have taken an active role in raising their children. It forces them to confront emotions that had been closed to them."

"I never thought of myself as a traditional father, whatever that is," says new-styled dad Peter, adding that he did as much holding, diapering and rocking of his child as his wife and that he feels lucky that his wife did not feel threatened by his involvement with his son.

Ms. Wegman says that women who do feel threatened must learn to "let go" and resist the temptation to intervene when their spouses are caring for the children.

But it will take more than cooperative husbands and liberated wives to turn child care from trauma to triumph. It will require the development of a pro-parent society that is sensitive to and offers realistic social supports for parents. This might begin with education about parenting at school.

"Parenting is a skill that many of us know very little about," says Miriam Chew, a California mother of six. "We license taxi drivers, hairdressers and pilots. But mothers and fathers, no matter what their background, their age, their competence, their degree of maturity or training for the job might be, are expected to be, capable, loving, nurturing parents. Well, it isn't possible. Courses about family life and child development should be mandatory from first grade on."

"Society can become more pro-parent by changing countless details of daily living," insists Ms. Wegman. "Have you ever, for example, tried to find a place to change a baby's diaper if you're out shopping? Or taken your child to the bathroom in a supermarket?"

Supermarkets and stores do little to improve conditions for parents, accuses Paula Brown Doress, a mother of two and another of the book's contributors. She says, "Instead of gumball machines or mechanical horses, stores could provide a play space and child-care workers, as food co-ops frequently manage to do."

Wendy Sanford

Peggy Wegman

Paula Doress

The authors' other suggestions for creating a pro-parent society include:

- More flexible work hours that would leave more time for family life.
- Increased sick leave that would cover time missed for children's illnesses.
- Maternity and paternity leaves for new parents (Sweden permits parents seven-months-leave while receiving 95 percent of their pay after the birth of a first child)
- On-site day care at work.
- Day care for all children who need it.

Meanwhile, parents can help themselves by helping each other, the writers suggest. Take care of each other's children. Form a parent-action group and work to make changes in institutions that affect parenting.

Perhaps, most importantly, "Remember that part of parenting is balancing your needs with those of your children," says Ms. Ditzion. "Parents need to nurture themselves first because, if they are frenzied and irritable, they have nothing to give to their children." FW

SINK SONG

I think that I shall never see
A sink as lovely as a tree.
A sink is never changed at all
By shifting seasons — summer, fall.
A sink for other things was made
Than lending man its cooling shade
Or giving birds a place to nest
Or limb on which to perch and rest.
A sink, unlike a tree, won't grow,
Its status is the status quo.
A sink has not a tree's achievings.
Instead of leaves, though, it has leavings.

People Quiz / By John E. Gibson

Does a long-lasting case of depression affect our general behavior? Is age a factor in depression?

CAUSES AND CURES OF THE CHRONIC "BLUES"

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Some people get the blues more frequently than others simply because they have what psychologists term "a depressive life-style."

2. It is accepted as normal to get a touch of the blues now and then for most people, but a feeling of depression of a more lasting nature affects our total behavior.

3. Lasting depression often results from a malfunction of mental faculties.

4. It's a folly to let yourself feel depressed because you're no longer young.

5. How subject you are to the blues is likely to depend on whether or not you believe that what happens to you in life is largely determined by luck or chance.

6. There are several simple remedies that many people have found highly effective in giving a case of the everyday, garden-variety blues the go-by.

ANSWERS

1. True. As indicated by a United States International University study, which compared the behavior of subjects who tended to be chronically depressed with a control group of people who were infrequently depressed, there were significant differences between the two groups in their behavior patterns and in their general life-styles related to "the inability to express feelings, blocked expression of hostility, dependency and mental rigidity." It is further noted that these behavior patterns are found to be significant in people who had self-depreciating experiences in childhood. The study suggests that it's difficult to resolve the blues unless marked changes are made in a comprehensive approach to life.

2. True. In a University of Michigan study of the role of long-term depression in the general population, it was found that it is associated with a reduced capacity for enjoyment and a marked decline in satisfaction and functioning, particularly in the areas of social life, job satisfaction and the marital relationship.

3. True. According to the results of a New York University study, it is concluded that, while the majority of people learn to cope with the vicissitudes and disappointments of life, adapting to changes which affect their fortunes, there are those who do not. For them, the study showed, life becomes an overwhelmingly disturbing experience... stressful events are magnified to catastrophic proportions by their distorted sense of reality. Instead of searching for new opportunities they mourn previous setbacks and become even more depressed. It is pointed out that "it is only human to feel depressed for a while, for the loss of a love object, a meaningful opportunity or a significant thing. Yet, the above mentioned category of people continue to be depressed regardless of other opportunities. The process of social functioning comes to a halt for them. A sense of inadequacy, helplessness, futility permeates their whole existence." It is concluded that the reason they react this way to life's events, which are overcome successfully by others, appears to result largely from faulty reasoning, developed over the formative years, which distorts their view of reality, their limitations and expectations.

4. True. The odds are better than even that you didn't feel as good when you were younger as you do now. There is much evidence to indicate that people spend more time feeling blue and down in the dumps when they are young than they do at any other age. In Veterans' Administration studies, a questionnaire concerning their depressive thoughts and feelings was administered to a sampling of university students. Over 40 percent had felt so depressed and discouraged and unhappy that they had seriously questioned if life was really worthwhile. And, in answering the question, "Have you ever wished you had never been born?", 38 percent circled yes. Other studies have yielded similar findings on the feelings of depression and disenchantment in youth about facing life which affects an appreciable percentage of young people, particularly during their late adolescence and early twenties. So if you sometimes find yourself feeling depressed because of your "lost youth," you should feel grateful that you don't have to go through it again.

5. True. Studies conducted by investigators from United States International University and the University of Maine cite findings showing that for men — though not for women — there is a significant relationship between "the belief that behavioral outcomes are determined by luck, chance or fate and feelings of depression or hopelessness!"

6. True. In a study conducted at Britain's University College (London), men, women and children from various walks of life, ranging in age from nine to 68, were asked what they found worked best to rid themselves of that down-in-the-dumps feeling. Remedies found most effective by most subjects: talk to someone about it; see people; get it off your chest to a friend; sit down and figure out the reason why you feel that way — and then try to rectify the situation causing it. Other remedies accorded top rating include: go for a long, brisk walk — or do "something physical"; sleep — if it's daytime, take a nap, and when you wake up refreshed, there's a good chance you'll feel completely different; listen to music or records. Since the study shows these methods work for many people, the odds are that one of them will help you get rid of that dark-blue feeling. FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

What Makes A Successful Family?

The family that works together stays together says a Drexel Univ. behaviorist. After studying some of the families judged outstanding 20 years ago in a national competition, marriage counselor Dr. Sara B. Taubin says that the recipe for successful family life includes: hard work, strong family ties, a concern for others and deep religious convictions.

"Almost all of the successful families are hard-working. They've thrived in a work-oriented society," Taubin says. "These are people working together for the family good."

A surprising number of the women were working wives in the 1950s, according to Taubin, a time when "society's perception of a woman's role was much different than it is today."

"Many of these women have continued to work throughout their lifetime," Taubin observes. "In their feelings about women and work, these families had a nontraditional approach to marriage, even back then."

Pooch Palace

Most people wouldn't mind being in the doghouse if it was anything like the one enjoyed by the lucky dog above — it's solar-heated.

Even Snoopy would be envious of Tasha, the Old English Sheepdog who lives in the world's first solar-heated doghouse. The house captures heat during the day when the sun shines through its plastic roof onto a copper-clad wall extending a foot below the ground into a bed of rocks. Heat is transferred to the rocks and slowly given off at night. To prevent overheating during the summer, a cover is placed over the collector.

The brainstorm for this posh pooch pad came naturally to Lee Cohen, owner of a Virginia Beach solar energy company, one cold winter's night. The first solar-heated doghouse the company produced was given as a present to Tasha's owner, a Virginia state senator.

For a mere $495, your pooch can have his or her very own solar-heated home. And if you think the price is a little steep, even to keep your favorite canine friend toasty warm, well, it beats buying him a mink coat.

Cold Comfort

Having a cold may not do much for your body, but it can do wonders for your mental health says a W. Va. Univ. physician. "If we did away with it — if we cured the common cold — we might well have to face an increase in hypertension, depression and related problems," says Dr. Robert H. Waldman, chairman of the department of medicine at the WVU School of Medicine.

Colds probably serve as a psychological safety valve for most of us, speculates Waldman, who says, "For the vast majority of people colds are a very mild illness. But they can provide people with an excuse for things they need to do — to be lazy, babied or even be grouchy. Most people believe these are unacceptable behavior, but if they have a cold they can say, "It's O.K. because I'm sick.'"

The severity of the cold's symptoms may also be influenced by our state of mind, Waldman says. "If you're in a psychologically good state you may have a little runny nose and scratchy throat but function well. If you're not in good shape, you'll have the same cold but probably more severe symptoms."

Hip Women

The heftier the hips, the smarter the student, according to a somewhat scientific study of Depauw Univ. coeds. According to the study, which related students' measurements to their grade-point averages, hip size turned out to be the vital statistic in predicting good grades.

"The larger the hip, the larger the average," commented James George, a computer instructor for whose class the study was compiled. He said that the next-strongest finding was that taller students tended to have higher averages.

While other students in the computer class worked with more mundane figures, such as matching corn production to use of fertilizers, a clever coed (who wished to remain anonymous) measured housemates in her sorority.

Although we don't know the researcher's name, from the ingenuity of her study we bet she has big hips.

Aim Low For Happiness

Happy is the woman with modest job aspirations — if she's a partner in a dual-career marriage. At least that's the conclusion of 2 Univ. of Texas researchers.

Psychologists Carole Holahan and Lucia Gilbert asked spouses to rate the amount of conflict they felt between major roles such as professional and parent. Both men and women seemed to experience the least amount of conflict when their spouses were supportive, among other things, and had also a high career commitment.

And the researchers also discovered that high commitment to a job doesn't necessarily mean a thirst to climb the corporate ladder — at least for women.

Jobs. Although most of them are underpaid for their efforts, American housewives do $11,000 worth of work a year says financial columnist Sylvia Porter. Porter calculates that the typical housewife spends 12-14 hours a day — or almost 100 hours a week — on the job. Multiply that by the minimum wage of $2.65 an hour, and you get an annual wage of nearly $11,000. And that price tag is a bargain, Porter says, when you consider that in the course of her working day the average wife may perform as many as 12 different occupations!

People. Sometimes you find a real surprise in your family tree — as Johnny Carson discovered. After guest Alex Haley suggested that Carson look up his own genealogy, à la Roots, the popular talk-show host discovered that he and former President Richard Nixon are fifth cousins. And if that wasn't enough, Nixon is also a distant relative to Gerald Ford.

Television. Scarlett and Rhett steam up the screen again when Gone With The Wind comes to television as a CBS special. Catch this classic Sunday, Feb. 11 (8:00-11:00 PM, EST) and Monday, Feb. 12 (8:00-10:00 PM, EST).

Business. What makes a home for today's buyers? According to Housing magazine, they almost all want fireplaces. And if they can afford an amenity, chances are it will be a swimming pool.

IMPORTANT

HERE'S HOW YOU CAN TELL YOUR GEMFIRE COUNTERFEIT DIAMONDS ARE NOT CHEAP COSTUME JEWELRY.

A. Count the facets. Gemfire stones all have 58 facets — just like expensive diamonds prepared by diamond cutters.

B. Examine your stone in a dimly lighted room. It should sparkle like in daylight. Gemfire stones sparkle even in the moonlight.

C. Study your ring under a powerful magnifying glass to look for flaws. Gemfire stones have clarity — are flawlessly perfect. No specks! No blemishes! No cracks!

D. Gemfire stones are so hard you can actually scratch your initial in glass with them! Prove it to yourself.

Words And Pictures

Words and pictures don't begin to show the beauty, brilliance, and fire of these magnificent rings. That's why we want you to wear them and judge them on their own merits — not on what we tell you. See if your friends and family can tell them from an expensive "natural" diamond worth 100 times as much. In all probability you can fool them if you want to. Not many people can tell these brilliant counterfeits from the expensive real ones. Yet now you can own these beautiful rings at amazingly low prices.

Low Price Doesn't

Mean Low Quality. These counterfeit diamonds are not cheap fakes. In fact, they are carefully cut and polished by skilled craftsmen in the same manner as natural diamonds. They have 58 facets — just like natural diamonds. They are hand set in heavy 18Kt-HGE (heavy gold electroplate), or solid sterling silver by master jewelry craftsmen. They shine like a $1,000 diamond — but cost you less than $25.00.

An Exciting Gift For Someone Special

These exquisite rings make a much appreciated gift for a special someone in your life. They will last a lifetime. Give for birthdays, anniversaries or just as a wonderful surprise. And even if you choose to tell your loved one will be amazed and proud that you were clever enough to find such an expensive-looking ring at these remarkably low prices. The difference between it and a natural diamond could make a down payment on a new car, or home, or even a wonderful vacation for just you two!

Even Millionaires

Wear Counterfeit Diamonds. Today many wealthy people, TV and movie stars feel unsafe making public appearances wearing expensive jewelry. Oftentimes they keep their diamonds in a safe deposit box and wear counterfeits. Now you too can wear these master-crafted counterfeit diamonds and impress your friends!

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

CARAT (CT)—a measure of weight for a diamond—however, Gemfires and Diamonites are given approximate carat values based on size (not weight). A 1-carat Gemfire or Diamonite is approximately the same size as a 1-carat diamond.

HEAVY GOLD ELECTROPLATE (HGE)—this mounting uses karat gold (either white or yellow) that is electrically bonded to the mounting after it is formed and the gold, by government standard, is 14 times thicker than the designated "gold electroplate."

STERLING SILVER (SS)—the mounting is 92.5% pure silver, 7.5% other metals for strength, and to eliminate tarnishing is lightly plated with precious rhodium.

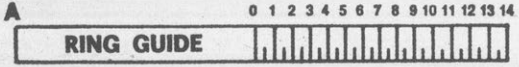

How to Find Your Ring Size

1. Cut a strip of paper 3 inches long and 1/4 inch wide.

2. Wrap the strip around the finger that is to wear the ring. Then place a dot, on the strip where it meets the end.

3. Place the dot on the strip of paper at "A" on the ring guide. The number at the end of the strip is your ring size.

With Our Guarantee You Take No Risks.

If at the end of 30 days you are not completely satisfied, return by INSURED MAIL for purchase price refund. At any time, or for any reason, and in any condition you may return your Jewelry by INSURED MAIL for FREE replacement.

11 Episodes On Old West

"How the West Was Won," a drama portraying the excitement, romance and adventure of America's post-Civil War migration into the unexplored, danger-filled western horizons, returns to ABC-TV Monday, Jan. 15 (9 to 11 p.m.). The mini-series features 11 episodes, with each segment two hours in length.

Through the experience of one family, the Macahans, "How the West Was Won" became the story of mountain men exploring beyond the next bend of the river, of hunters decimating the buffalo herds, of miners searching for El Dorado, of cattlemen building personal empires, of humble people fleeing from persecution.

It is also the story of the American Indian, brave, courageous but hopelessly outnumbered, who became the ultimate loser to the winners of the West.

Continuing in his role as Zeb Macahan, the two-fisted mountain man who will not be intimidated by anyone — including the United States Army, who he feels violates his own personal code of justice — is James Arness, TV's legendary super-star, who heads an impressive cast of five co-stars and 28 guest stars.

Tim's Show

"The Tim Conway Show, a one-hour comedy special starring multi-Emmy Award-winner Tim Conway, with guest stars Carol Burnett, Don Knotts, actor Craig Richard Nelson and the recording group, Village People, will be presented Monday, Jan. 15 (8 to 9 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Conway, who won his third Emmy Award last year as supporting player on "The Carol Burnett Show," gets an opportunity to show off his rare brand of humor on the program. Among the comedy sketches, Conway appears as a wealthy playboy preparing an intimate dinner for two in his penthouse, while Miss Burnett, playing his cleaning lady, looks on.

Conway and Knotts team up again as a pair of moving men who wreak havoc on the house of an unsuspecting owner, and Conway portrays a 19th century postal clerk in a 20th century post office.

As "Inspector Tudball," Conway attempts to solve a murder that took place in a small bookshop, owned by Knotts, while at the same time trying to break in a new assistant, played by Nelson. Miss Burnett, as Mrs. Wiggins, acts as the confused witness to complicates the investigation.

In a musical highlight, Village People, just named the top new pop album artists of the year by Billboard magazine, perform their latest hit, "Y.M.C.A.," and Miss Burnett gets a chance to show off her singing and dancing talents as she sings "Growing Up Is Hard to Do," backed by 16 young tap dancers.

Conway is one of the great put-on people in Hollywood.

TIM CONWAY stars in an hour-long entertainment special featuring his unique style of comedy, Monday, Jan. 15 (8-9 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Authenticity By Dialect Doctor

Any professional actor suffering from such common maladies as sluggish syntax, erratic accents or disappearing dialects need only seek one sure fire cure: take one Robert Easton and see him in the morning.

As Hollywood's premiere "dialect doctor" — ask any of his thespian clients and watch them gush with superlatives — Easton has personally tutored the likes of Laurence Olivier, Mary Tyler Moore, Ann-Margret, Robert Conrad and Richard Chamberlain.

His latest project was to lend more authenticity as dialect coach for NBC-TV's romantic, post-Civil War epic "Charleston," airing Monday (9 to 11 p.m.).

"Nobody else does exactly what I do with such a multiplicity of dialects," said the massive, red-haired Easton, a professional actor himself, who also appears briefly in "Charleston" as Rev. Allen. "I'm known as the 'Henry Higgins of Hollywood.' I'm so busy that I can't even handle all of the business I have now."

Easton, who taught a dialect course at USC for six years, also does lucrative voiceovers for cartoons and commercials, and has appeared several times on 'The Tonight Show' to discuss his unique skills.

He takes a scientific approach to his work, talking with people of various nationalities, breaking down and synthesizing fragmentary information, and finally deducing certain rules of how a dialect works.

Rooney Is Back

Mickey Rooney pulled his derby hat down over his eyes, "I want to wear it this way. Didn't Paul Newman wear it like this in 'Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid'? Well, I'm the Sunset Kid."

A fifty-year vetaran of stage and screen, Rooney stars in "Donovan's Kid" on "The Wonderful World of Disney" Sunday, Jan. 14 (7 p.m.), on NBC-TV. He plays Old Bailey, the lovable conman and confidant to co-star Darren McGavin's Tim Donovan.

Rooney, the legendary actor who starred as Andy Hardy in a series of family films and made musicals with co-star Judy Garland, may now sport a halo of white hair, but he has the enthusiasm and energy of a 20-year-old.

"Andy Hardy will never die. No one stops being a kid," says Rooney.

Off the set as well as on, Mickey Rooney always seems to be the center of attention, helping the cameraman with new angles or discussing his latest business ventures.

"He is a totally involved individual," said longtime friend and personal manager Jack Craig. "Nothing is halfway or lukewarm with Mickey. If something or someone interests him, he becomes completely dedicated. It's hard to keep up with him."

Rooney has several projects going. Currently, he is discussing food products like Mickey Rooney Macaroni, a chain of barb-que stands called Mickey Rooney Star-B-Que ("With ribs as big as I am.") and schools throughout the country for children and adults to receive lessons in every form of entertainment called "The World Entertainment Guild." Recently the 5-feet, 3-inch human dynamo finished touring the country with his stage play "Three Goats in a Blanket."Asked if he prefers stage to films, Rooney said, "You play it with enthusiasm whether it's a live audience, a television or film audience. It's all under the same tent."

CON MAN — Rousing action and adventure take over when con man Old Bailey (Mickey Rooney) takes on turn-of-the-century San Francisco in "Donovan's Kid" airing on "The Wonderful World of Disney", Sunday, Jan. 14 (7-8 p.m.) on NBC-TV

Joplin Story Is Told

Billy Dee Williams, who played the lover of Billie Holliday (Diana Ross) in the movie "Lady Sings the Blues," stars in the title role of "Scott Joplin: King of Ragtime," the "NBC Late Night Movie" airing Sunday, Jan. 12 (11:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.).

The movie details Joplin's unsuccessful efforts to get recognition during a richly creative but frustrating lifetime.

Oscar winner Art Carney (Best Actor, "Harry and Tonto," 1974) co-stars as John Stark, the music publisher who believed in Joplin's music and brought such works as "The Maple Leaf Rag" and "The Entertainer" — which became enduring hits — before the public.

The musical drama traces Joplin's life: from childhood prodigy to honky-tonk piano player to serious composer. As a black composer at the turn of the century, he finds that the white musical establishment does not readily accept him or his strange new music.

Joplin's music was arranged and performed for the film by Richard Hyman. An original song, "Hang Over Blues," was written by Harold Johnson.

Alpert Into TV Scores

Herb Alpert, co-founder of A&M Records, who first popularized himself as an artist with the Tijuana Brass, has penned the music for his first-ever TV production, NBC's "Super Stunts II," slated to air later this year.

"I'm looking forward to doing a lot of other television work as well as film music writing, too," said Alpert.

"I've always felt," he continued, "that my music has been visual . . . that it would work for TV and films. It's a lot different from recording and writing an album, however. The rules are much more varied for TV and film work than for recording." He added that some of the music from "Super Stunts II," a two-hour special, may be released on record.

'Peanuts' Videocassettes

Producers Lee Mendelson and Bill Melendez are starting development of a series of videocassettes starring the animated characters from "Peanuts."

Plans call for 25 five-minute stories starring Charlie Brown, Snoopy, Linus, Lucy and the rest of the "Peanuts" gang.

The stories will be based on the "best of Peanuts" comic strips during the past 29 years.

An Hour Of Mork & Mindy

Irresistibly funny Mork from planet Ork lands on Earth where he is befriended by lovely Mindy and gets lessons in love from the Fonz who gets him a date with Laverne in a special one-hour presentation of the hit comedy series, "Mork & Mindy," Monday, Jan. 15 (8 to 9 p.m.), on ABC-TV.

In the "Mork & Mindy Hour Special," with Henry Winkler and Penny Marshall as the special guest stars, Mork, a misfit on his own planet because of his sense of humor, has been sent on a mission to observe Earth's more primitive society and report back telepathically to his leader, Orson. He arrives in Boulder, Colorado, and meets Mindy McConnell, who has just been stranded by a boyfriend. They walk to Mindy's apartment where Mork soon convinces her that he is an alien from outer space. He's also so disarmingly innocent that Mindy feels protective and lets him spend the night. Mindy's father, Fredrick (Conrad Janis), jumps to the wrong conclusion when Mork announces he is staying with Mindy. Frederick asks a cop friend to get rid of him.

Meanwhile, Mork decides he needs advice in the art of dating and goes to confer with the Fonz, the greatest expert in the universe on the dating ritual peculiar to humans. In a flashback sequence, Mork arrives at Richie Cunningham's home where Fonzie is house-sitting. The Fonz arranges a blind date for Mork and Laverne with hilarious results. Meanwhile, in Boulder, Fredrick's friend, Officer Tilwick (Geoffrey Lewis), has taken steps that eventually lead to a sanity hearing for Mork.

Dick Yarmy guest stars as Dr. Litney and Michael Prince as the judge. Jeff Harlan co-stars as Bill, Woody Eney as the prosecuting attorney and Hank Jones as the defense attorney. Leslie Vallen plays the court reporter.

KEEPS UP APPEARANCES — Delta Burke portrays Stella Farrell, an iron-willed Southern belle who struggles to eke out a dignified existence in the post-Civil War South, in "Charleston", a World Premiere drama on "Monday Night at the Movies", Jan. 15 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV

Romance Of Old South

In the romantic spirit reminiscent of "Gone With the Wind," three proud and beautiful Southern women struggle for survival against rogues and rascals in turbulent post-Civil War Charleston, S.C., in "Charleston," a World Premiere drama on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies" Jan. 15 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Martha Scott (director of the ballet company in "The Turning Point") and Lynne Moody (daughter-in-law of Chicken George in "Roots") co-star with television newcomerrs Delta Burke, Patricia Pearcy, Jordan Clark and Richard Lawson.

Stella Farrell (Burke), a young, iron-willed Southern belle, is determined not to relinquish her aristocratic family's decaying mansion in Charleston because of high taxes levied by grasping Yankee carpetbaggers at the war's end in 1865. Unused to the new, topsy-turvy social order and harassed by lecherous Union soldiers and other scalawags, Stella, her cousin Valerie (Pearcy) and their former slave and childhood friend, Minerva (Moody), try to eke out a dignified existence.

While Valerie awaits the return of her husband from a Federal war prison, Stella is shocked to learn that her brother, also imprisoned, was Minerva's lover - and that she plans to marry him when he returns.

Desperate for money to pay the taxes, Stella reluctantly agrees to marry an ugly but wealthy merchant, despite a growiing love-hate infatuation with dashing Greg Morgan (Clarke).

Glider Rescue In Kidnapping

James Coburn, Robert Culp, Susannah York and Charles Aznavour star in a thrilling drama of kidnapping and rescue, "Sky Riders," to be presented on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," Jan. 9 (9 to 11 p.m.).

The drama is the story of a desperate gang of terrorists who kidnap the family of a wealthy businessman, Bracken (Culp), and the attempts to safely recover Bracken's wife (Miss York) and children.

The terrorists demand $25 million worth of munitions and armaments — enough weapons to start a small war. The local police chief, Nikolidis (Aznavour), is out to catch the terrorists, as are Bracken and a third "interested party," McCabe (Coburn). With the aid of an archeologist and a smuggling expert, the men deduce that the Bracken family is being held at an ancient, remote and fortress-like monastery.

But McCabe is not about to be outwitted by the terrorists. He hires his own private army of daredevil hang gliders who sail out of the darkness at the same time that Nikolidis' men are approaching the monastery from below.

Luscious urban and rural locations in Greece make for a setting that is particularly pleasing on the eyes without ever becoming self-conscious. The reliably strong players perform their paces with convincing authority. Culp is properly nerves-on-end over the safety of his family, and York, in a relatively small role, lends some vivid touches to her performance.

Murder, Music In Big Event

Sonny Bono and Lee Purcell star as a music composer and a fashion model who spend their honeymoon as amateur private detectives, in "Murder in Music City," a provocative World Premiere drama and program developement project to be colorcast on NBC-TV's "The Big Event" Tuesday, Jan. 16 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Claude Akins, Belinda Montgomery, Morgan Fairchild, Michael MacRae and Harry Bellaver guest-star in the adventure drama, which was filmed on location in Nashville and New York City. Noted country music performers Charlie Daniels, Larry Gatlin, Barbara Mandrell, Ronnie Milsap, Boots Randolph, Ray Stevens and Mel Tillis make special guest appearances as themselves.

Bono stars as Sonny Hunt, a successful composer who discovers a slain private detective in his apartment. The sole clue appears to be a ticket to a country music concert at New York's Lincoln Center.

Hunt takes a special interest in the case since Feegan (Bellaver), the slain detective, was his employee.

Michener 'Pleased'

"I'm nowhere near the popcorn machine," says James A. Michener using the show biz story to illustrate his pleasure with the early episodes of NBC-TV's monumental adaptation of his best-selling novel, "Centennial." He continues:

"They say that when an author sees a really bad film made from one of his books 'he hides behind the popcorn machine as the patrons file out.' Again, I say, I'm nowhere near the popcorn machine."

Michener made the comments during his second visit to the Colorado location site of "Centennial," which continues Sunday, Jan. 14 (8 to 10 p.m.), on "The Big Event."

"I tried to say certain things in 'Centennial,'" Michener noted, "and the series catches all of them so far. I'm sorry the geological scenes couldn't have been depicted, but it's hard to get a volcano to perform on schedule."

Michener declared the series so far was "excellent. Good story line. Excellent acting and superb color photography." He added: "A stately presentation of one of the best parts of American history. I'm proud to have been associated with it..."

Michener, who prior to visiting the 'Centennial' sets has never been on hand for any of his other movies, was asked how he feels about seeing his novel on television. He responded:

"Obviously, I write novels because that form of expression suits me. I like to take long detours, to discourse on pet ideas, to develop minor characters who fascinate me, and especially to deal with geographical and economic factors.

"I'd be crazy if I didn't regret when television has to by-pass some of my best material, but I understand why this is necessary. Story telling becomes a radically different job whenever you change from one medium to another...I'm very fond of television when it's good, and so far this series has been good."

Michener said he did "my damndest" to make the book accurate, not only to fact but to spirit. "I'm proud various educational institutions (National Educations Association among them) recommended this series to their students.

HAS PROBLEMS — Adrienne La Russa portrays a halfbreed who meets a barrier of problems when she returns to Centennial in "The Storm", Chapter 8 of "Centennial" on "The Big Event", Sunday, Jan. 14 (8-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Focuses On Girls

The 36 dazzling Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders are featured in a hard-hitting world premiere movie about an attempted expose of the shapely All-American girls in "The Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders," airing as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," Jan. 14 (9 to 11 p.m.).

With his job hanging by a thread, magazine editor Lyman Mitchell concocts the "perfect" story to make front-page news and reestablish his stature within the industry. Because articles and publicity surrounding the cheerleaders focus on the young and athletic girls, never mentioning behind-the-scenes operations, Mitchell 'plants' a reporter named Laura on the squad. Her assignment is to uncover the truth about the group's auditioning process.

A Double Feature

Two unusual films — one about a lost island without contact with the civilized world, and the other focusing on unexplained mysteries of the supernatural — air back-to-back Wednesday, Jan. 17, on NBC-TV.

Patrick Wayne and Doug McClure star in "The People That Time Forgot" (8-9:50 p.m.), an adventure drama based on an Edgar Rice Burroughs novel.

Wayne stars as Ben McBride, an adventurer who learns of a message-filled cannister discovered three years after his close friend disappeared a sea. The cannister contains information from the friend, Bowen Tyler (McClure), who claims to be marooned on a lost island with a primitive civilization, prehistoric animals and exotic plant life.

Intrigued, McBride decides to search for Tylerand organizes an expeditionary force, which includes an attractive newspaper photographer, a biologist and a skilled, war-seasoned aviator.

When they arrive on the island of Caprona, they learn that Tyler has been taken captive by a savage tribe and is to be sacrificed to one of their gods.

Televise An Old Rivalry

With nine of North Carolina State's first ten players returning from last season's team — which finished second in the National Invitational Tournament, after being selected to finish last in the ACC — the Wolfpack has entered the 1978-79 season with a solid foundation.

State employs a "motion" offense and has adopted the philosophy of having most of the players on the team involved in plenty of action. This concept was introduced at N.C. State last season and requires a club to have size, depth, experience and shooting ability — all of which the Wolfpack has.

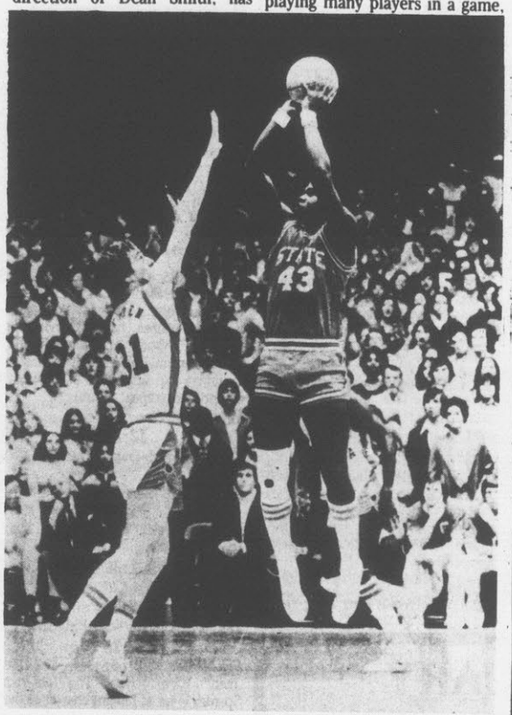

North Carolina, under the direction of Dean Smith, has developed a solid basketball program that has been playing many players for a number of years. For UNC, the concept has not only proven successful during the regular season, but also in post-season play where it has diminished the impact of injuries. It has also been a 'plus' factor in reducing the effects of foul trouble and fatigue. Perhaps the biggest benefit of the system is realized in the recruiting wars where quality players realize they will be joining other top-flight athletes and playing a lot of basketball early in their careers.

In view of the tremendous success that North Carolina has enjoyed in recent years by playing many players in a game, it is not surprising to see other teams across the country adopt the philosophy.

When North Carolina State meets their intra-state rival North Carolina on Wednesday, Jan. 17 (9 p.m. on Channels 3,5,6,9), you can be assured of a typical ACC 'Wing Ding.'

Included among N.C. State's nine returning players are their starting five from last season as well as the team's top eight scorers.

Hawkeye Whitney, who was the squad's leading scorer with a 15.3 average and third rebounder with 5.4, leads the list as one of college basketball's most exciting players.

STATE vs. UNC — Charles "Hawkeye" Whitney (No. 43), will try to lead N.C. State to an upset over North Carolina when the rival schools meet Jan. 17 at 9 p.m. on Channels 5,6,9.

Pike's Peek

BY CHARLIE PIKE
PFA Writer

HOLLYWOOD — SUZANNE SOMERS follows FARRAH FAWCETT-MAJORS' example by appearing on the cover of Playboy Magazine's May issue, and is also featured in an eight-page layout inside the famous men's magazine. Additionally, like Farrah, Suzanne is fully clothed in each and every picture.

JOHN WAYNE was admittedly very candid when he told friends that he was afraid he had cancer after he was suddenly troubled by stomach pains, but fortunately lab tests showed he was suffering from a simple acid stomach.

SALLY STRUTHERS is gleaming with happiness as she tells all that she and her hubby, DR. BILL RADAR, are expecting their first heir.

The growing popularity of "DALLAS" finds the producer and CBS discussing the possibility of packaging the series into a theatrical movie.

Now that CINDY WILLIAMS has signed an exclusive pact with Universal Studios for two movies this year, one of which Cindy will share ownership, the actress will return for another season of "LAVERNE AND SHIRLEY." There had been scuttlebutt that Cindy would depart the series because of her long-established preference for doing films.

No sooner was it revealed that DEBBY BOONE is moving out of the Boone family nest than it was also announced that she makes her first solo Las Vegas appearance beginning Jan. 25. Debby will appear on the bill with KENNY ROGERS at the Riviera Hotel.

Those who know are admitting that while KATE JACKSON, JACLYN SMITH and CHERYL LADD are not the most cordial hostesses to guest stars of "CHARLIE'S ANGELS," it's actually DAVID DOYLE who is currently giving cast and crew the biggest headaches in attitude and cooperativeness.

Most eyes are now turned toward FRED SILVERMAN and NBC, now that the second-half of the TV season is underway. The man responsible for CBS and ABC's success is now in charge of slotting NBC's shows for the first time since he joined the network, so his success or failure will now begin to reflect in that network's ratings. The first half of the season was already set when he became NBC's president.

JEAN STAPLETON says her remark about leaving "ALL IN THE FAMILY" referred not her to own wishes particularly, but to the fact that the show's contract with CBS expires this year.

New Horizon

"I'm trying very hard to get away from screeching tires," said Fred Baum, producer of CBS-TV's "Hawaii Five-O." "We are in the fortunate position of being able to move in a most dramatic direction, any milieu we want; the premise is very elastic — Lord is head of a police organization and is responsible only to the governor."

What effect has this diversity in style had on the series' ratings? Only moderate. But, perhaps, not so bad for an 11-year-old show.

Baum has not had an easy time in getting his message across that the show is moving in a broader direction. "Almost no one in show business watches our show," he said. "I guess longevity is the reason. Those in the business feel they've seen it. There's tendency for them and the critics to dial right by us."

In bringing about the change in dramatic approach, Baum has also revamped the production staff, cutting it down to its most essential parts. "People find safety in numbers — I find just the opposite," he continued. "I am extremely particular about writers, and the bulk of the work is done by those who don't ordinarily work in episodic TV, drawn here by the obvious rerun potential."

Baum is "not much for gratuitous violence," and there is no episode without a motivated villain. "We do all closed stories — where the audience doesn't know who did it until the end," Baum explained.

To The Rescue

Steve Rogers, an athletic young ex-Marine, becomes crime-fighter Captain America — as his father had, years earlier — and, augmented by a secret super-steriod, pursues and arch-criminal who plans to decimate Phoenix with a neutron bomb, on "Captain America," a special starring Reb Brown, to be broadcast Friday, Jan. 19 (8 to 10 p.m), on CBS-TV.

Also starring are Len Birman and Heather Menzies. Guest stars as Lance LeGault, Frank Marth, Robin Mattson and Joseph Ruskin, with special guest star Steve Forrest.

Rogers, enyoying his freedom from military routine, is preparing for a leisurely cross-country sketching trip when he is approached by Dr. Simon Mills (Birman), a Federal investigator, and his assistant, Dr. Wendy Day (Menzies). They warn Steve that he is a marked man: certain underworld figures have a 'contract' out to kill him, as they had his father.

During World War II, Steve's father, then the Government's top crimefighter, who was dubbed "Captain America" by the underworld, developed a super-steriod called FLAG ("full latent ability gain"), which greatly increased one's physical and mental powers. Now, according to Simon, those criminals wanted to nail Steve in his tracks before he could follow in his father's footsteps.

Steve is reluctant. But later, as he lies unconscious after a nearly fatal attempt on his life, Simon and Wendy inject him with the FLAG serum rather than let him die. He recuperates quickly and soon exhibits the expected super strength, vision, hearing and agility. Finally realizing that he owes his life to the FLAG, Steve vows to become the new Captain America, to attempt to right the wrongs the law can't touch, and to fight to uphold justice and The American Ideal.

Roast Namath

Colorful and controversial actor-athlete Joe Namath will be raked over the coals as Man of the Hour on NBC-TV's "Dean Martin Celebrity Roast," Friday, Jan. 19 (10 to 11 p.m.), just two days prior to the Super Bowl in which he brilliantly starred 10 years ago.

Outstanding personalities are joined by a trio of former athletic standouts — George Blanda, Dick Butkus and Bruce Jenner — as host Dean Martin leads the parade of good natured barbs.

Here is a sampling of the 'tributes':

Orson Welles: "Joe's family was so poor and hungry, when his mother would throw the dog a bone, the dog had to signal for a fair catch!"

George Blanda: "All proceeds of my book go to the Joe Namath Half Way House — it's for quarterbacks who can only throw the ball half way to the receivers."

Dean Martin: "He was so ashamed of his passes, he used to call time out to wipe his fingerprints off the football."

Bruce Jenner: "For 12 years I trained for an athletic career in the Olympics that lasted less than a week. Joe trained for less than a week for an athletic career that lasted 12 years."

Milton Berle: "Here we are to honor this Hungarian Humperdinck, this sex symbol of the walking wounded."

Dick Butkus: "I don't begrudge Joe all his fame and fortune because as a quarterback he's suffered lots of pain — and I was one of the guys giving it to him."

Other Way Around

There is a different twist to the acting career of Gregory Harrison, who grew up on Catalina Island, just off the shores of Long Beach, Calif.

"I never went to Hollywood, they came to me," Greg recalls, adding a note on how the acting bug bit. "I was awe-struck when a movie company starring Marlon Brando and Yul Brynner came to Catalina to film. I watched them work from a tree and became fascinated immediately."

Michele Will Tell

Q: I would like some information about the actor who played Steve Kaslo on "Search For Tomorrow." L. WHITESIDE, LAUNDRUM, S.C.

A: Michael Nouri ended his long run on 'Search' last August when he decided to pursue other career goals. Born in Washington, D.C., and raised in New Jersey, Nouri is interested in meditation, via the Divine Light Mission led by Guru Maharaj Ji. Incidentally, he composed many of the songs he sang on the daytime series, and hopes to have a record out soon.

A: Barbara Walters divorced theatrical producer Lee Guber several years ago and professes to no serious "interests" at this time. She lives quietly in her Manhattan home with her young daughter, Jecqueline.

Q: Was there any truth to "The Beverly Hillbillies"? Where are the cast members now? E. ANDRES, BURGAW, N.C.

A: "The Beverly Hillbillies," one of TV's most popular rural comedies (1962-72, and still in syndication), was the product of Paul Henning, who followed this series with another hit, "Petticoat Junction." 'BH' starred Buddy Ebsen, Irene Ryan, Max Baer, Jr., and Donna Douglas. Ebsen stars in "Barnaby Jones." Ms. Ryan passed away in 1973, Baer has become a successful movie producer, and Ms. Douglas — after a successful stint in real estate — is now making a 'comeback' try.

Q: My favorite actress is Lindsay Wagner. When will she be on TV? S. HARDISON, FAYETEVILLE, N.C.

A: Lindsay is trying hard to overcome the 'Bionic Woman' image and was most recently seen in a TV movie, "The Incredible Journey of Dr. Meg Laurel." "I certainly don't want to be known only as 'The Bionic Woman,'" she said in a recent interview.

Q: When was the movie "Semi-Tough" released? J. LASSITER, HENDERSON, N.C.

A: United Artists released the film in December, 1977.

Q: When "Dr. Strange" aired on TV this summer, everyone loved it and thought it was going to be a regular series. What happened to it? J.M., RED SPRING, N.C.

A: The film aired during the 'Premiere' weeks last September, which was probably the reason for the confusion. "Dr. Strange" is based on a Marvel Comics character, however, which leaves the door open to a possible series — or sequel — at a later date.

Donnie Branches Out

Donny Most expanded his singing and acting talents in a number of guest performances while vacationing from "Happy Days." Among his dramatic ventures included the filming of an "ABC Weekend Specials" presentation, "The $1,000 Bill," airing Saturday, Jan. 20 (12-noon to 12:30 p.m.).

In the feature, Donny plays a young man who begins to feel very independent after finding a $1,000 bill. His new-found independence enables him to tell his boss (played by Richard Deacon) what he really thinks of him, then quit his job.

Donny entered the entertainment field at the age of 15, singing and dancing with a specialty revue featuring youngsters on the Catskill's circuit in New York. There he was discovered by a New York agent, who saw his potential as an actor. He then began to study drama in New York and was soon appearing in commercials.

After moving to Los Angeles in 1973, Donny played his first television roles in episodes of "Room 222" and "Emergency!"

Donny's other credits include the motion picture, "American Dream," in which he co-starred with Cloris Leachman. He also portrayed Tom Sawyer in the TV special, "Huckleberry Finn," in which "Happy Days" star Ron Howard played the title role.

He made his television singing debut on "The Merv Griffin Show" and guest starred on "Dinah!" His first vocal single, "All Roads," was recorded during the past year.

Many Of Top Track Athletes Competing

Many of the world's top track and field athletes will be on display when the 1978-79 indoor season gets into full swing with the 11th edition of the Vitslis-U.S. Olympic Invitational, to be telecast via tape delay on NBC Saturday, Jan. 20 (11:30 p.m.), from Madison Square Garden in New York.

The first major meet of the indoor season in the New York area, the Olympic Invitational will help commemorate the 100th anniversary of Madison Square Garden, one of the most storied buildings in indoor track and field annals.

Leading the array of top American stars scheduled to compete are Dick Buerkle, world record holder in the indoor mile; former world indoor high jump record holder Franklin Jacobs; Renaldo Nehemiah, last year's NCAA indoor and AAU outdoor high hurdles champ,and half-miler Mark Belger, the meet record holder in the 800 meters.

Buerkle, who last year emerged as America's top indoor miler, will be the runner to watch in the 1500 meters. The diminuitive, bald, 31-year-old from Rochester, N.Y., was the major surprise of the 1978 indoor season, recording a stunning victory over previous world record holder Filbert Bayi in the Wanamaker Mile at the Millrose Games in Madison Square Garden.

The Teen Scene

They've made it official. DEBBY BOONE and longtime boyfriend GABE FERRER will tie the marital knot in June, probably. The couple made the announcement of their plans publicly after telling their families during the Christmas holidays when Gabe reportedly gifted Debby with an engagement ring.

"STAYIN' ALIVE" by THE BEE GEES has been chosen the single of the year by a majority of the music critics in Hollywood.

Despite the fact they recently dined together in Hollywood, RICHARD HATCH and LAURETTE SPANG of "BATTLESTAR GALACTICA" insist there's not a romance blossoming between them. It was simply an evening when both wanted to go out for an enjoyable dinner and didn't have anyone else to go with at the time.

ROBIN WILLIAMS has said no to many, many, many invitations to make television guest appearances, but when BOB HOPE approached him about appearing on one of Hope's specials. Robin and his representatives swallowed hard and said they'd do their best to work out the details in Robin's busy schedule so he'll be available.

WILLIE AAMES and his rock band, PARADISE, have completed work on their demos and are now waiting anxiously to see if any major record label is interested in releasing their effort. Meanwhile, in anticipation of getting their first professional contract, Willie and his friends are planning a celebration party so they'll be able to share their joy.

'Superstars' Return

"The Superstars," featuring world-renowned athletes in a medley of sports events testing their all-round skills, returns to ABC in January, 1979, for the seventh consecutive year with a series of 11 Sunday programs — a six-part men's individual competition; "The Women Superstars," "The World Superstars," and the three-part "The Superteams."

MONEY PLAYER — Jim Sparnakel, who led the Duke Blue Devils in scoring and assists last season, is the team's money player. He comes through in the big games. Duke meets Wake Forest Thursday, Jan. 18 at 9 p.m. on Channels 5,6,9.

The season premiere will air Sunday, Jan. 14 (2 to 3:15 p.m.), with the first of four men's qualifying rounds. Fifty or more topflight athletes will compete in the series, hosted by Frank Gifford. Among the expert commentators in the series will be Bill Russell, former star of the Boston Celtics; Don Drysdale, former pitching ace for the Los Angeles Dodgers, and Bob Uecker, former major league catcher and a popular talk-show personality.

Wayne Brimditch, a world champion water skier who beat out a stong field in 1978, including runners-up Greg Pruitt of the Cleveland Browns and world-class high jump star Dwight Stones, will be back to defend his title. New Zealand's John Walker, holder of the world record in the mile run, will be in the field, along with such headliners in team sports as baseball's Ron LeFlore, George Brett and Larry Bowa; football's Russ Francis and Delvin Williams; soccer's Giorgio Chinaglia; basketball's Maurice Lucas and Doug Collins and hockey's Yvan Cournoyer and Bryan Trottier.

Prize money overall — the Men's Women's World and Team competitions — is more than three quarters of a million dollars. The total purse for the men's individual competition of "The Superstars" is $288,000. For the Men's Finals, it's $122,000, matching the purse for "The Women Superstars."

The basic rules remain fundamentally the same for the men's and women's divisions. No athlete may participate in his or her specialty. Three years of competition is the limit on eligibility. Each athlete must take part in seven of the ten specified events. In the men's competition, the events are: Tennis, Bowling, Rowing, Swimming, Weightlifting, 100-Yard Dash, Obstacle Course, Bicycle Race and Golf-Closest to the Pin.

Challenge Of The Sexes

Professional golfers Nancy Lopez, rookie sensation of the Ladies Professional Golf Association, and Andy North, 1978 U.S. Open champion, along with tennis greats Martina Navratilova and Roscoe Tanner, headline CBS Sports' "Challenge of the Sexes" when the series premieres for a fourth season, Sunday, Jan. 14 (1 to 1:45 p.m.).

Vin Scully, who is joined this year by actress Cathy Lee Crosby, covers the variety package of competitive events, which will include basketball, bowling, billiards, drag racing, swimming, motorcycle jumping, gymnastics, rodeo and show jumping, and track, and features outstanding men and women athletes, both amateur and professional, in head-to-head competition.

In some events, handicaps are assigned in order to equalize the competition, just as in previous years. For example, male golfers hit from the championship tees, while the women use the shorter tees. In other sports, such as basketball and bowling, no handicap system is needed.

'W.W.' Labors To Help 'Dancekings'

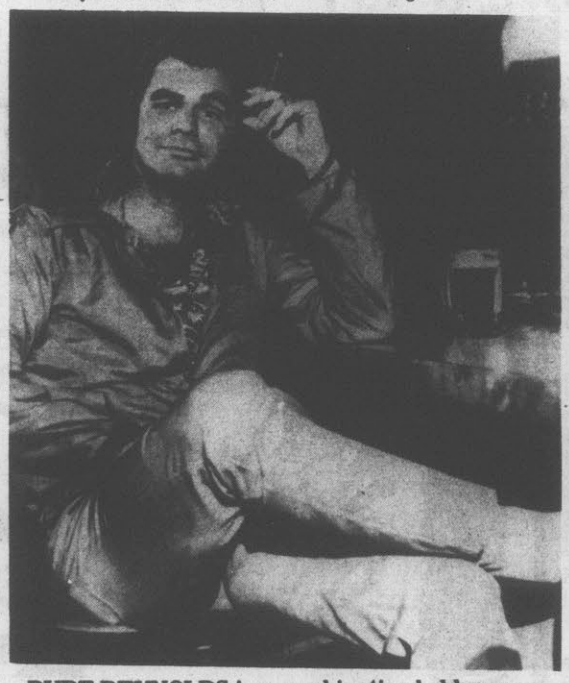

Burt Reynolds is a smooth-talkin' country boy who loves the country music, robbing gas stations and a girl named Dixie — three hobbies that keep him in heavy trouble — in "W.W. and the Dixie Dancekings," rebroadcast as "The CBS Saturday Night Movie," Jan. 20 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Art Carney, Conny Van Dyke, Jerry Reed and Ned Beatty are co-starred.

W.W. Bright (Reynolds) is a good ole boy with a fondness for his fellow man — he always shares the take with the bewildered attendent when he robs a filling station — and a yen for a fetching woman called Dixie (Van Dyke). Dixie is a country singer, backed by a band called the Dancekings, and W.W. meets her on stage when he pretends to be a part of the group to avoid a highway patrolman who suspects — quite rightly — that W.W. is the robber of a local gas station.

After meeting the Dixie Dancekings, W.W. adds another goal to his list of ambitions and announces that he will make them all stars by calling his powerful friends in the Nashville music business. (What his new friends don't know is that W.W. knows not one soul in the Nashville music business. Needless to say, W.W. frequently veers from the truth.)

To finance the superstar future that lies just around the crooked corner for the Dixie Dancekings, W.W. knocks over — literally — another filling station.

BURT REYNOLDS is a combination holdup man and patron of the country music arts, starring in "W.W. and the Dixie DanceKings" airing as "The Saturday Night Movie", Jan. 20 (9-11 p.m.) on CBSTV.

Our Story: KING HROTHGAR'S WRATH EXPLODES: "WHAT! LET MY LITTLE DAUGHTER, SIGRID, BE BETROTHED TO THAT DECREPIT OLD FOOL, KING AGUAR? NEVER! IT IS AN INSULT!"

ARN, THE PROPOSAL DELIVERED, BEGINS THE RETURN JOURNEY, BUT INSTEAD CLIMBS TO HIS SECRET PLACE IN THE MOUNTAINS AND THERE GRACE FINDS HIM. "HROTHGAR HAS SENT MESSENGERS POSTHASTE AROUND HIS KINGDOM. HE SEEMS TO BE PREPARING FOR ONE OF HIS RAIDS."

THREE DAYS PASS. THEN AT EVENING THREE LONGSHIPS, CROWDED WITH WARRIORS BEARING ON THEIR SHIELDS THE RAVEN CREST OF HROTHGAR, GLIDE QUIETLY UP THE FJORD.

NOW ARN CLIMBS TO THE VERY TOP OF THE MOUNTAIN AND ON THE SIDE FACING THULE LIGHTS A PREPARED SIGNAL FIRE AND, ONE BY ONE, FIRES APPEAR ON MOUNTAINTOPS ALL THE WAY TO VIKINGSHOLM.

KING AGUAR CALLS FOR HIS ARMS AND ARMOR WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN USED FOR YEARS. "THEY ARE A TIGHT FIT," COMPLAINS THE KING, "WHO WOULD THINK CHAIN MAIL WOULD SHRINK!"

ARN'S SIGNALS HAD TOLD AGUAR THE SIZE OF HROTHGAR'S RAIDING FORCE AND WHEN THEY HAD SAILED. SO A WELL-ARMED COMMITTEE AWAITS THEM.
