Leaves A Trail Of Death, Destruction In The Caribbean

Hurricane David Headed For Florida

By DERELLE SMITH III

MIAMI (UPI) — Hurricane David, half of its power spent on a merciless beating of the Dominican Republic, drifted along the north coast of Cuba, toward Florida Saturday and a hurricane watch was posted from Palm Beach to the defenseless Keys.

Florida Gov. Bob Graham urged tourists to stay away, put the National Guard on alert and sent extra state troopers to the Florida Keys, a 130-mile-long island chain linked to the mainland by a series of bridges.

David was the worst storm the Caribbean had seen in 88 years, killing at least 67 people in its passage through the Windward Islands to the Dominican Republic, until its 150-mile-an-hour winds fell to 75 mph, barely hurricane force, Saturday.

David, entangled in the mountains of eastern Cuba, was taking a "slow and erratic" westward course

Saturday night, the National Hurricane Center said.

But it was only 475 miles from Miami and forecasters said if it returns to the warm Atlantic it could rebuild — although it was unlikely to regain all its strength.

At 6 p.m. Saturday the Hurricane Center announced a hurricane watch from Palm Beach through the Florida Keys to Dry Tortuga, and said "hurricane warnings could be required this morning."

Alvin Samet, a spokesman for the center, said there had been no dramatic shift in the hurricane's progress but said Dr. Neil Frank, director of the center, "likes to give a 24-hour watch notice" and "if we have to put up a warning today to give 12 hours of daylight warning, the watch had to go up now."

But preparations had begun long before the watch was ordered. Local officials in South Florida had begun sandbagging operations around public buildings Friday. Water levels in canals had already been reduced.

Floridians had begun stocking up on hurricane supplies — flashlights, candles, batteries, canned goods, bottled water and beer and liquor — well before the watch began. Windows were being taped and shuttered. Gas stations reported a run and one South Miami hardware store experienced such a crush it had to organize a line and let customers inside a few at a time.

"I urge all citizens of these areas to begin to make preparations in case evacuation is required," Graham said in a statement Saturday. "If the winds should intensify during the next 12 hours, evacuation time would be greatly shortened."

Graham also urged tourists and "persons without necessary business" to stay away from South Florida until the threat had passed.

David reduced much of Santo Domingo, the capital of the Dominican Republic, to rubble when it slammed into the south coast Friday. Haiti, which shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic, apparently escaped major damage.

At least 30 people were dead in the Dominican Republic, most of them along flooded rivers outside Santo Domingo. Two were reported dead in Haiti and Puerto Rico, struck a glancing blow, counted eight fatalities. At least 27 were killed when David ravaged the Windward island of Dominica earlier this week.

Authorities in Santo Domingo called for volunteers to clear the streets of uprooted trees and other debris while they tried to deal with the homeless, believed to number in the tens of thousands. Most rivers in the central part of the country were flooding.

The National Bank Building on Miami's Biscayne Boulevard, a frequent victim of high water, erected a dam against David's torrential rains. Charter and fishing boats in the Keys scuttled up the Shark River to seek shelter, and the Navy began moving some of its interceptor jets out of its Boca Chica air station.

One suburban Miami grocery did little business Saturday — it sold out of staples and canned goods Friday night. "I've never seen anything like it," said manager George Velez. "This must have been a $200,000 day."

Frederic Upgraded To Hurricane Status

By United Press International

Hurricane Frederic headed for the Lesser Antilles Saturday, following much the same track as David did five days ago, and Tropical Storm Elena dissipated into a depression over Texas.

Frederic was upgraded to a hurricane Saturday, the third of the season, and blasted toward the Lesser Antilles that David devastated last week. The hurricane was rushing along at 20 miles an hour.

At 6 p.m. the center of Frederic was located near latitude 14.1 north and longitude 54.0 west or about 500 miles east of the Lesser Antilles.

Hurricane forecasters said Frederic can strike the islands sometime today, but added the conditions have turned against the intensification of Frederic Saturday.

The National Hurricane Center in Miami said it would not issue further advisories for Elena which had a broad and diffuse center located southwest of Houston.

The hurricane center said rainfall will be prolonged and continued heavy in southeast Texas and southwest Louisiana and localized flooding was possible.

New Offensive

By SAJID RIZVI

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Deputy Premier Mostafa Chamran, directing military operations in Kurdistan, Saturday said Iran's air and ground forces have gone into action to crush rebel Kurdish tribesmen all across the province in northwest Iran.

The report came as Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan offered to resign and urged Iranians to ask Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to assume control of the government.

The 71-year-old premier went on state television around midnight Friday and, in a state of visible agitation, told Iranians:

"I'm not holding on to the premier's chair with my two hands. If we leave this office it would be like a second wedding."

The offensive in Kurdistan, a province of about 3½ million people, was the second in less than three weeks against insurgent forces fighting for autonomy.

Iranian air force F-4

Phantom jets, helicopter gunships and artillery were reported to have beaten back attacks against government bases in Saqqez, Bastam and the mountainous territory skirting Baneh.

Baneh, near the Iraq border, is the suspected hideout of Kurdish leaders Sheikh Ezzeddin Hosseini and Abdor Rahman Qassemloo, who left Mahabad as government forces and revolutionary guards closed in.

Reports from the area said Kurdish guerrillas stormed Bastam when they heard Chamran was inside. The siege was broken early Saturday after the jet planes attacked, according to the state radio.

Chamran later declared in a message to the nation the Iranian air force and army would "crush the counter revolutionaries' positions." He gave no details of the combined operation except to say it was underway throughout the province.

In Mahabad, the largest city in rebel hands, the outlawed Kurdish Democratic Party told residents to build bomb shelters because of the air force attacks. Shops closed in the city and guerrillas began digging trenches.

Three armored columns, including more than 100 tanks, were outside Mahabad, though the Kurds disputed radio reports the units were only 3 miles away.

Bazargan's outburst appeared to stem from Khomeini's threat two weeks ago to return to Tehran from Qom and direct the government, which he said was not revolutionary enough. Khomeini's remarks were followed by a barrage of criticism aimed at Bazargan by clergymen.

Iranian newspapers played down the premier's television speech, which was overshadowed by hard-line warnings to the rebellious Kurds by Khomeini and Tehran leader Ayatollah Mahmoud Taleghani.

Disaster Team Sent

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (UPI) — Two C-130 Hercules transport planes left Pope Air Force Base Saturday to pick up members of a Marine Corps disaster area survey team and transport them to Dominica, which has been hit by hurricane David.

Lt. Brian Hoey said the team, which was comprised of personnel from New River Marine Air Station near Jacksonville and MacDill Air Force Base at Tampa, Fla., would assess the hurricane damage on the island. After returning to the United States, Hoey said, recommendations would be made for further relief needed on the island located about 300 miles southeast of Puerto Rico.

Three additional C-130s were on standby Saturday at Pope Air Force Base

Special Visit By Bloodmobile Set

A special Bloodmobile visit aimed at helping to meet the heavy blood needs of the Labor Day holiday will be held Wednesday, Sept. 5 at the American Legion Building.

Mrs. Ruth Taylor of the Red Cross here said that the blood drive, which is an unscheduled visit, will be held from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Mrs. Taylor pointed out that the Blood Center in Greenville is in need of additional blood for this time of year and she noted that a check with the center indicated that it has only two-thirds the amount of blood that is needed to meet the holiday period demands.

The blood supply figure provided by the Blood Center was as of Friday, she said, adding that due to the holiday on Monday no more blood will be received through donations until Tuesday.

Mrs. Taylor reported that the Blood Center has an "extreme need" for Type O blood, both negative and positive and she urged area donors with Type O blood to respond to the current need.

Mentioning that the long Labor Day weekend annually results in increased blood needs, the spokesman said that Bloodmobile officials are hoping to receive at least 200 pints of blood at Wednesday's drive.

All blood donors in the county have received letters regarding the blood situation, she said, and are urged to come out on Wednesday.

September '33 Hurricane Remembered

BY PATRICIA MOORE

ORIENTAL — The 126 residents of Lukens didn't know a hurricane was bearing down on them. No one in the community had a radio.

The first indication of trouble was the telltale roar like that of a tornado. Jack Mason and his three friends, playing cards in the afternoon of September 15, 1933, looked up and saw a green house, its floor and the vines that once grew inside it, swirling upwards.

Only A Preview That was only a preview of what the early morning hours of September 16 would bring to the now non-existent fishing village of Lukens, then located on the eastern side of South River, about seven miles from Oriental.

The four youths, assuming they were in for a nor'easter, took the precaution of moving their boats and haul nets up Mulberry Creek, carefully tying the vessels from one side of the bank to the other for safekeeping. Then they resumed their card game in the cabin of one of the boats.

Mason, now a retired commercial fisherman living in Oriental, was 20 years old at the time.

"Something told me before night came that I ought to go home," Mason said. When he stepped outside the boat cabin, water was up to his armpits in the creek that usually was about four feet deep. Winds were gusting in an intermittent, but insistent pattern. He half ran, half waded through a woods invaded by water. Normally, the place was dry.

By the time he reached his house, the tide was above the previous high-water mark left by the storm of September 3, 1913.

His mother, busy with housekeeping chores, was unaware of the intensity of the storm outside until her son came home. Then, after discussing the worsening weather conditions, Mason and his mother decided that both Aunt Liney Pittman and Aunt Jane Pittman and their families should come to the Mason house, which was on higher ground.

It was nearing dusk when Mason went after Aunt Liney, her daughter and two sons.

A short while later, he made his way through a thicket of tall pine trees, now surrounded by water, to fetch Aunt Jane. But her family refused to leave.

Mason returned home. Then, watching the tide continue to rise, he and his mother decided he should make another effort to get Aunt Jane. Again, Mason went through the deepening water in the thicket. A second time, the family would not leave.

Third Attempt

Midnight was approaching and the water was still rising. A third time, Mason proceeded through the pine thicket, where the water was now waist deep. Usually he, like everyone else, depended on kerosene lanterns for light at night, but the wind wouldn't let one stay lit. Mason didn't own a flashlight.

This time, he was accompanied by his 12-year-old cousin, Milton Pittman. They could hear each flap of wind coming.

"I could hear trees and limbs falling all around," Mason says. "I told Milton that every time we heard a tree or limb coming, to duck down in the water and maybe one of us would make it."

The cousins moved by instinct. "We weren't used to lights. I knew just how to get through here," Mason recalls.

They stopped briefly on the way at Uncle Wes' house. "He was busy trying to get his hogs and cattle upstairs in the house. Water was on the first floor," Mason remembers.

When they finally got to Aunt Jane's, "They were all four sitting on top of the dining room table. We broke out the window and they crawled across the table to get out. We couldn't use the front door because the wind was blowing too hard to open it," he says.

Prince Albert Can

On the way out, Aunt Jane picked up an old wash tub. Mason noticed but didn't have time to ask what she thought she was doing. As she passed her chicken pen, Aunt Jane reached in and plucked six chickens from the waters and floated the tub beside her all the way to Mason's house.

Uncle Henry, her 75-year-old husband, who weighed about 250 pounds, was clutching a Prince Albert tobacco can.

It took the family group an hour to reach Mason's house. "Every time one of those hard gusts would come, we'd have to stop," Mason recalls.

Once inside Mason's home, the ten relatives felt they were in a boat. Angry tides, pushed to a fury by winds of approximately 100 miles per hour, swirled beneath the foundations of the house and literally made it rock.

Finally, to help stop the rocking, Mason took parts of an old ice box and beat holes in the floor to let trapped air and water escape so that the house could settle back down on its foundation.

By then, the water had risen above the windows.

"The wind and water were beating on the front door," Mason says. "We got seven or eight of us trying to hold the door."

"There came a big sea that knocked the door down and it washed us to the end of the house."

Animals Pass Through

A goat passed through the blown down door. The old ice box was floating around. "A hog was passing through the house. It was washed in from the hog pen," Mason continued. "I grabbed him and threw him the ice box." It turned out this was their only hog to survive.

By that time, Mason had learned that Uncle Henry's tobacco can contained gold. "We had a safe. I thought if the house washed away, that safe would stay there. I wanted to put Uncle Henry's money in it," Mason says, "that way, somebody would get some use from it if we didn't make it."

"Uncle Henry said I wasn't going to get my hands on that money — after all three times I went to get them," Mason recalls with a smile.

Then the front porch blew off, and the wind began to howl through a large crack.

"About 2:30 in the morning, the wind had come around to the northwest," Mason remembers. "When you'd hear the wind, you'd have to turn around to get your breath."

Faced with continually rising water and piercing wind, with relatives clinging to whatever they could for stability, Mason turned and said, "Mama, I've done all I can. We've got some dry clothes in the attic."

That was then the family began to cry and pray.

Reflector Sponsoring Program With Schools

For students in 15 area schools, the daily newspaper will take on added importance in their lives and schoolwork due to a Newspaper in Education program being sponsored by THE DAILY REFLECTOR.

The Greenville City Schools participating in the program include Greenville Middle School, E. B. Aycock Junior High and Agnes Fullilove Community School. Pitt County Schools receiving the program are D. H. Conley

High School, Ayden-Gritton High School, North Pitt High School, Farmville Central High School, A. G. Cox, Ayden Middle, Bethel Elementary, Chicod Elementary, Farmville Middle, Gritton Elementary, G. R. Whitfield and Wellcome Middle.

The program is being offered free-of-charge to these schools by THE DAILY REFLECTOR in the Visual Education Consultants (VEC) News Program. This program is currently being used by more than one-and-a-half million students in over 12,000 schools in the United States and Canada each week during the school year.

The VEC News Program is designed to encourage students to read the newspaper and provides them with the opportunity to follow history as it happens.

Each week, a VEC News Program filmstrip will arrive at each of the participating schools. The 23-frame filmstrip contains news photos of events that happened as late as Friday evening of the preceding week. Maps, graphs and editorial cartoons supplement the photos. The filmstrips contain coverage of national and international news events, as well as the arts, sciences, sports and news personalities.

In a survey conducted by VEC, 95 percent of the teachers using the program said their students are showing more interest in current events. Ninety-three percent felt students were reading the newspaper more regularly with the VEC News Program.

In addition to the weekly filmstrips, the schools will receive a News-In-Depth study package each month during the school year. These packages contain a full-length captioned filmstrip on a subject of special interest. Recent News-In-Depth studies have included the following topics: "Press Freedom Yesterday and Today", "Job Outlook for Youth", "An Adventure in

TRAIN STRIKES TRUCK — A Seaboard Coastline train engine and a small compact truck collided Friday afternoon north of Greenville. According to Trooper A. G. Wright, a truck driven by Jesse Dupree, of Greenville, was traveling west on rural paved road 1521 when he came to the railroad crossing and tried to stop. The train carried the truck 260 feet along the tracks. Dupree sustained injuries in the 4:25 p.m. accident and was transported to Pitt Memorial Hospital by members of the Bethel Rescue Squad. The engineer of the train was identified as Randall Keith Turner of Rocky Mount. Investigation into the accident is continuing. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Dupree Asked To Block HUD Action

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In a document filed in U.S. District Court in Raleigh Friday, state officials again asked Judge Franklin T. Dupree Jr. to block attempts by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development or any other federal agency to cut or delay funding to the University of North Carolina system.

"The demonstrated recklessness of the federal agencies aligned against the university underscores the necessity for greater control," the N.C. Department of Justice said in the document.

The 16-campus UNC system receives an estimated $89 million a year in federal funds. Because of a failure to settle the dispute over further desegregation of the 16-campus system, the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare attempted to begin proceedings to cut off some of that federal money earlier this year. That attempt was blocked until HEW administrative hearings in January.

UNC officials were informed on July 19 that HUD intended to join HEW in administrative efforts to determine whether UNC violated civil rights laws. HUD never formally consolidated its complaint with those lodged by HEW, however.

Wednesday, HUD announced it would not cut or defer any funds to UNC.

And HUD rescinded its earlier decision to delay a $1.5 million loan to UNC-Charlotte, according to documents filed in federal court. The money was to be used for dormitory construction.

But the state still wants Dupree to give the N.C. Justice Department permission to take depositions from HUD and HEW officials involved in the case to decide whether the two departments acted together in deferring the UNC-Charlotte loan.

The U.S. Department of Jus-ice has denied that HEW and HUD officials acted together.

If Dupree grants the state's latest request, HUD and all federal agencies would be bound by the order he issued on June 8, prohibiting HEW or any other federal agency from delaying federal funds earmarked for UNC until the HEW administrative hearing. That hearing will be held to determine whether the UNC system has violated federal civil rights laws.

Pioneer 11 Makes It Through Saturn's 3 Rings

THE SECOND WORLD WAR BEGINS — This is a file photo from September 1939 showing the German Army advancing "somewhere in Poland." 40 years ago people awoke on the first day of September to the news that Germany had invaded Poland and the sickening knowledge that the world was at war again. (AP Laserphoto)

By ROBERT STRAND
MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (UPI) — Pioneer 11 dove under the three main rings of Saturn and swept past the planet Saturday in the most distant space exploration yet accomplished by a man-made spacecraft.

Pioneer journeyed for six and a half years and 2 billion miles — and then faced threatened failure in the final moments — to accomplish the feat.

Saturn, the sixth planet out from the sun, is a yellowish globe of gas 1 billion miles from the sun. The planet is 815 times larger than earth, but so light it could float in water.

The three main rings of Saturn, distinct discs often pictured in science textbooks, extend out 48,000 miles from the planet's surface. They are believed to be composed of flying chunks of ice, some as big as the Pentagon.

Pioneer flew under the main rings to make its closest approach, 13,300 miles from Saturn's cloud tops, at a speed of 70,900 miles per hour. Then it flew away, headed for a look Sunday at Titan, one of Saturn's 10 moons. The trajectory eventually will take Pioneer out of the solar system.

Near Titan the spacecraft will seek data testing the possibility of primitive life on the satellite. Titan is the only place left in the solar system away from earth where scientists think conditions for life might exist.

Both incoming and outgoing, Pioneer was endangered when its course passed through a newly discovered ring of Saturn called Ring E.

Ring E contains flying objects believed to be ice, and a collision even with a small object would be fatal to the spacecraft.

Cheers went up in Pioneer mission control at NASA's Ames Research Center when Pioneer successfully slipped in a fraction of a second through Ring E.

As data kept flowing from the spacecraft, Charles Hall, Pioneer Project manager, said he was relieved and "everything looks just great."

Pioneer's instruments discovered that Ring E probably is composed of objects with a diameter of one-fiftieth of a centimeter and dispersed five yards apart. The 565-pound spacecraft is nine feet wide.

Its mission was to gather information that will help scientists understand how Saturn and the rest of the solar system were created. Current theory is that Saturn was formed by the collapse of a huge gas nebula.

The planet is still so hot that it radiates twice as much energy as it receives from the sun, 1 billion miles away.

Ugandan Nightmare

By RAYMOND WILKINSON

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Four months after the overthrow of Idi Amin's repressive dictatorship, a new nightmare haunts Uganda.

Law and order has all but collapsed. Roaming gangs known simply as the "unknown people" kill as many as a dozen people each day in the capital alone and plunder at will.

The United States, Britain and other nations which rushed in when Amin fled are now threatening to withdraw and end their aid programs unless the security situation is radically improved.

All the embassies recently demanded increased military protection and an all-night curfew.

The Tanzanian Liberation Army, welcomed as a liberator when it marched into Kampala in April to help topple Amin and which now holds the country together, is widely regarded as having become an occupation army.

The economy is in a shambles, food is difficult to obtain and the Uganda shilling is virtually worthless.

Worse, the government is deeply divided among Marxists, monarchists and capitalists, some with their own private armies and seemingly vying for personal power and wealth.

Underground, anti-government cells are being spawned almost daily and ever watching in the wings is the shadow of Amin himself, currently in lonely and frustrating exile in Libya.

"The security situation," intoned Sam Nguba, chairman of the Uganda Law Society, "is worse than under Idi Amin."

Stable Condition

By MARY ELLEN HASKETT

BALTIMORE (UPI) — The surgeon who performed the world's first successful lower spine replacement said Saturday the 16-hour operation on the semi-paralyzed woman was the patient's "only option" for survival.

Jessie Thomas, 33, was in stable condition in the intensive care unit at the University of Maryland Hospital.

"Jessie was awake and communicating in a rational way as she left the operating room," said Dr. Charles C. Edwards, chief of orthopedic surgery at the hospital. "But the risk of the patient not surviving is still considerable."

He said the mother of two children would be put in a cast and be able to use a wheelchair within weeks.

"It is unlikely that any important feeling or movement will return (to her legs) and I don't expect her to walk again," said Edwards. "There is only a remote chance that she could gain enough function to go beyond a wheelchair."

hurricanes said, "People have gone nuts. I tried to buy batteries at three different places. Everyone was out and I gave up."

At Sloppy Joe's, the Key West bar once frequented by Ernest Hemingway, barmaid Edna Michael said "it's like a ghost town for a Labor Day weekend. It's dead. It's unbelievable."

A desk clerk at a Holiday Inn in Key West told one of the few travelers checking in,

"You know, sir, that if the hurricane hits, you're on your own — no food, no water, no nothing."

Preparations were under way to move the animals out of Crandon park zoo on Key Biscayne, and Jack Gibson, manager of a South Miami liquor store, said "people who normally buy a quart are now buying three or four quarts, and those who normally buy three or four quarts are buying a case. This is not for Labor Day picnics. This is hurricane stuff."

Would Not Tolerate Blackmail

By MAUREEN SANTINI

Associated Press Writer

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — President Carter says he would not tolerate blackmail from Arab nations, but refuses to say whether he would go to war over Mideast oil.

"I would not let an Arab country blackmail our nation. We don't have to take that," Carter said in an interview with newspaper editors in Florida.

During the interview with editors Thursday, Carter was asked whether the United States would go to war if the Arab nations cut off the U.S. oil supply. He said the question was too hypothetical to answer directly, adding:

"I would do everything I could to avoid a war, but at the same time my number one responsibility is to protect the security of the nation."

During the 1974 Arab oil embargo, the president said, "Our nation did not have to go to war because we got oil from other sources."

Carter said he would take any actions necessary to defend U.S. security "but I would have to make a judgment if an interruption of the oil supplies from some of the Mideast countries was endangering the security of my country."

He also strongly denied that the United States was blackmailed into agreeing to sell a million barrels of kerosene recently.

"We have not been blackmailed," Carter insisted. "There was no threat whatsoever issued to me or implied through the Iranians or any other intermediary."

He said the decision to sell the kerosene was, in effect, a goodwill gesture because Iran supplies the United States with so much oil and needed the kerosene when its own refinery was sabotaged.

The president was not asked about, and did not address, reports that Iran no longer needs the kerosene and may sell it at a profit.

What costs 86% less today than it did 52 years ago? Long Distance.

It's true. In 1927 a 3-minute daytime call to the West Coast cost $9.00.

The same call today, using direct distance dialing costs only $1.30.

And when you consider that it now takes about $34.00 to buy what $9.00 bought in 1927, the low cost of Long Distance today is that much more remarkable.

But you can save even more when you dial direct during discount rate periods (after 5 p.m. on weekdays and all day Saturday and Sunday). Long Distance...one of today's best values. Low cost Long Distance...it's for you.

First Reaction: To Postpone

The ominous word is out from Raleigh that a decline of $15 to $30 million is expected in the Highway Fund for 1979-80.

The decline is hardly surprising given the gas shortage and some conservation on the part of motorists.

Gasoline prices have soared, as every vehicle operator knows, but the Highway Fund's take taken from every gallon sold has remained constant.

That situation obviously leads to declining gas tax revenues. This comes, however, at a time when the costs of building highways is escalating, due in some part to the rapidly increasing cost of fuel. Thus the state finds itself with fewer resources to build the highways the public obviously wants.

There are only two solutions to the dilemma. Some highway projects can be postponed or cancelled, or ways will have to be found to increase revenues in the Highway fund.

The immediate reaction by the State Transportation Board will be to postpone any new construction. Changes in the tax structure will have to await consideration by the Legislature.

Isn't it about time we considered a percentage tax on gasoline? Sales and income taxes are figured that way. It would, of course, increase the tax we pay on a gallon of gas as the price rises, but is there any alternative if we want the roads to ride on?

Reflecting The Effort And Support

Dr. William Laupus reported last week that the ECU School of Medicine has been rated "strongest of the new and developing medical schools, established since 1970.

Funding seems to be the greatest difficulty for other schools.

The good record reflects the efforts of administrators on the local campus, the full support the school has received from the UNC administration and the foresight of state legislators in making adequate funding available.

Raising Property Taxes

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Nearly half of North Carolina's 100 counties will have higher property tax rates this fiscal year compared to last.

That is a sharp reversal of the pattern last fiscal year when the boards of county commissioners for the most part held the line on increases.

According to figures compiled by the N.C. Association of County Commissioners, 48 counties have raised the general countywide tax rate for the current fiscal year; 20 counties lowered their rates; and 31 retained the same rate.

Of the 20 counties which have adopted lower rates, 15 were working with revalued property figures. Typically, real estate values have increased sharply during the past eight years, allowing commissioners to raise more money with lower rates since the tax is levied against fair market appraisals. The taxpayer, in such circumstances, pays about the same or more in actual taxes.

For fiscal 1978-79 just ended, 51 counties held the line with no increase; 20 lowered the rates (seven using revaluation as the means to accomplish that); and 29 counties adopted increases.

Rural, sparsely settled Greene County retained the distinction of having the state's highest tax rate of $1.39, up a nickel from last year. Macon County lost its lowest rate ranking by increasing the rate from 25.5 cents to 35 cents at the same time that Graham County (enjoying the fruits of revaluation) cut its rate from 74 cents to 34.5 cents to become the lowest in the state.

Haywood County took the biggest one-time jump in recent years in North Carolina as the rate went from 80 cents to $1.14. Northampton took a 30-cent hike to $1.10.

Small Towns

While the argument rages over Balanced Growth for North Carolina, the state is moving ahead with industrial recruitment advertisements which make a strong pitch for rural North Carolina.

One magazine ad is headlined, "Send Your Plant Location Executive To One of Our Small Towns, and He May Never Come Home Again."

BILL

Featured is a fantastic picture of a county courthouse atop a wooded knoll. Long steps interrupted by a Civil War statue lead up the hill.

The location isn't identified, but just a glance at that magnificent setting, the soaring columns, the dome with a clock topped by Blind Justice ... and those long steps ... tells you it can be only one Tar Heel town: Sylva, county seat of Jackson County on the Georgia, South Carolina border.

"People prefer to live where there's actually room to live. And so do the companies they work for Which illustrates why small towns in North Carolina are big in American industry," the ad relates.

The narrative goes on to discuss labor force and work ethic and work stoppage rates and other advantages.

Of the building pictured in the advertisement, specialists with the School of Design at N.C. State University who compiled "100 Courthouses; a Report on North Carolina Judicial Facilities", have this to say: "The Jackson County Courthouse is among the most dramatically sited buildings in the State."

The main street of Sylva runs into the steep steps which rise through a steep lawn with occasional landings. A circular pool at the foot of the hill reflects the setting, and from the ridge, visitors can see the countryside for miles around.

Sunday Morning Notes

East Carolina University Pirates began their football year in Ficklen Stadium Saturday night with Western Carolina University.

The stadium is a major facility now with 35,000 seats, a superior lighting system and press facilities equal to anybody's.

It wasn't always that way for the ECU football team, however. Back in the 1930s, when the sport was begun, the school played its games on the athletic field in the area, behind McGinnis Auditorium. There was little in the way of roaring crowds and very little seating.

Following World War II the revived Pirates played their games in Guy Smith Stadium — until President John D. Messick launched a drive to build College stadium on Tenth Street.

The steel-and wood bleachers reached a capacity of around 4,000 eventually, but there weren't that many seats there on opening night.

The little stadium was filled to overflowing and some students had taken some of the reserved seats which had been paid for by patrons.

Dr. Messick saved the night by asking the students to leave the reserved seats. He told them that he personally would stand for the game. The students obliged and what could have been a bad start was averted.

It was becoming clear that College Stadium was no longer serving the needs of East Carolina in the 1960s, and also that the space was needed for new classroom buildings on the growing campus.

Perhaps the first to note the need was then Coach Jack Boone, who proposed to the Jaycees that they take on a fund raising campaign for a new stadium. His thought was to build the stadium across Tenth in the area now occupied by dorms.

The drive didn't really get underway until Dr. Leo Jenkins became president and a group of local businessmen spearheaded a campaign to construct the first unit of Ficklen Stadium.

The property across 14th had been acquired by that time and that is where the stadium stands today.

Interestingly Wake Forest was the dedication game. The Pirates won, and it was to be 1979 before Wake Forest and East Carolina were to meet again, this time in Winston-Salem.

Ficklen has been expanded several times and is now one of the major outdoor stadiums of the Southeast — but it had humble beginnings.

Other Editors Say 27,000 Reasons

(Elizabeth City Daily Advance)

Few topics can stir up more debate among parents than sex education in the classroom, and the Elizabeth City — Pasquotank County school system has more than once faced its share of parents and petitions concerned over the matter.

Back in November, nearly a dozen parents asked the school board to halt its sex education courses until all materials and instructional films had been reviewed by a group of parents. Letters were written and school board meetings were dominated by the subject. The classroom instruction continued, over their objections.

But nine months later, the school system now finds itself unable to muster enough people interested in reviewing the materials.

Last week teachers readied a screening of two sex education films used in the Elizabeth City Junior High School for its ninth-grade students. Instructors were prepared to explain their course outlines, and administrative staff members stood by to answer questions.

Frankly, they had little to do. During the first day of screening only five parents bothered to make their way to the school to view the movies. And they had few questions.

The school board has now met its promise made in January when they said all films would be available for parental review before the school year. And parents have had their chance to discuss the course material.

So the school system should now be left to teach human reproduction and contraceptive measures with no further attempts to block the instruction.

If nothing else, knowing that 27,000 teenage girls in North Carolina became pregnant in 1977 should be enough to merit keeping the classroom instruction.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Carter War Chest Empty

By ROWLAND EVANS

and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Fund-raising for Jimmy Carter's reelection has gone bone dry the last two months, an experience unprecedented in the modern presidency that could rule out an effective 1980 Carter campaign.

President Carter's money appeals are rejected by sources on which he had depended: the Jewish community, elements of the oil industry, businessmen particularly dependent on government decisions. Washington lobbyists have stopped tapping clients' bank accounts. Selling tickets to Carter fund-raisers is hard labor.

This reflects not only the president's deteriorating political condition but practical campaign problems. His present cash-on-hand is reported at $947,350, but the easy money has been raised. Nobody can imagine how to raise the additional $4 million that ought to be there by January for Carter to collect enough federal matching funds to run the kind of pre-convention campaign he needs.

Heavy early funding is necessary because of the prospect Carter will lose early primaries, whether or not Sen. Edward M. Kennedy opposes him. That means Carter's only chance will be logging it out in every primary, which indeed is his plan. For that reason, knowledgeable supporters and even some administration officials privately talk about the possibility of his empty war chest forcing him out of the race.

None of this seemed imminent as summer began with $1.5 million raised for Carter. The first chill came when ticket sellers encountered massive sales resistance for Carter's $1,000-a-plate kick-off dinner at the Washington Hilton Hotel June 25. Although the $174,214.45 net profit was close to the original target, it was reached only after prodigious effort.

The chill became a freeze in July. Much of the Jewish community (often estimated at 70 percent of Democratic presidential fund-raising) was alienated by Carter's Mideast policy. More generally, clients began telling their lobbyists that they simply did not care to help Carter, whatever effect that might have on closing Washington's doors to them.

The temperature went frigid with Carter's ill-conceived Cabinet shakeup. Apart from generally numbing his support, it had one unintended result: shutting off substantial commitments from the oil industry. Dr. James Schlesinger had grown steadily more popular within the industry, particularly among larger independent producers. When Schlesinger fell as secretary of energy, the president lost that oil money.

By mid-July, even the fund-raisers were bailing out. It was no accident when one lobbyist, a veteran of Democratic wars who had been plucking his clients for Carter, missed an August meeting of the president's business supporters. He had decided he could no longer press his clients to a lost cause. If he tries to extract money in the future, it will be for Kennedy.

Few other businessmen or lobbyists are switching to Kennedy. Even so, Teddy Kennedy does not arouse the

WE'D BETTER WANT TO

"Tell Harry he can cut the grass today if he wants to," says the father to the mother as he leaves the house in the morning for work. And when the father reaches his car he calls back good-naturedly to the mother, "And tell Harry he'd better want to."

In some ways this little incident illustrates the attitude of our heavenly father toward his children. We are never compelled from on high to do anything. Everything is left to our choice. God says in substance, "Here is the pathway of right; you can walk in it if you wish to." And then through the mouth of the prophet and seer He adds solemnly, "But you'd better want to."

If we fail to heed this divine injunction it does not mean that calamity will immediately befall us. But it does indicate plainly that if we close the door on good and choose evil instead, the day is hastening onward in which we must face the consequences of that choice.

Changing Mortgage Market

By CHET CURRIER

AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The housing industry has a longstanding reputation as one of the most volatile sectors of the U.S. economy.

Its cycle has traditionally run from boom, in times of easy credit, to bust whenever money gets tight.

But dramatic changes in the mortgage markets — the mechanism that supplies the industry with its lifeblood — may be changing all that.

In the 1980s, predicts Jonathan Golfarb, building industry analyst at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, "the housing cycle, while still in evidence, will be significantly less volatile than it has been during the last 15 years."

In the past, the ups and downs of home-building have been influenced not only by fluctuations in demand for houses, but also by what happens in the money markets.

In bad times for the economy, demand for houses was reduced by normal economic forces. On top of that, many potential buyers were shut out of the market because savings institutions didn't have the mortgage money to lend them.

The lofty interest rates of the 1970s compounded this problem, attracting deposits out of savings accounts into other, higher-yielding investments, in a process known as disintermediation.

But several things have happened in recent years to alleviate that threat, Goldfarb noted in a recent report.

First of all, the rules have been changed to allow the savings and loans and savings banks to combat disintermediation with a number of "new products" that are more competitive than the standard passbook account. These include the six-month money market certificates, or MMCs, which pay rates equal to those offered by six-month Treasury bills.

"MMCs have been successful in maintaining deposit flows during the last year and have provided critical support to housing," Goldfarb said.

At the same time, he added, "Elimination or reduction of usury ceilings on mortgage rates in some states have also helped to make it possible for lending institutions to earn portfolio returns sufficient to permit higher-rate accounts, and increased use of variable-rate mortgages should have the same effect."

Perhaps the most important change of all, however, has been the rapid growth of a secondary market for mortgages, in which they can be bought and sold much like stocks on Wall Street.

An institution such as the Government National Mortgage Association or a private bank bundles individual mortgages into a single package, and then sells pieces of the package to investors.

Letters submitted for Public Forum should be limited to 300 words. The editor reserves the right to edit longer letters.

To the editor:

Thursday, August 23 I attended a meeting of the Project Review Committee of Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency VI. The project reviewed was an application for a federal grant of approximately $1.3 million over a five-year period for "provision of services to pregnant adolescents" and to conduct "a research project with the goal of pregnancy prevention through family planning and education." The project was approved.

Information in your newspaper about the meeting was minimal. The public was not properly informed of the scope of the subject and was denied the opportunity to request a prior public hearing.

It is doubtful that anyone would question improvement in services to pregnant teenagers unless such services included help in getting abortions. Since abortion is classified as a health service (medical procedure) and "backup for contraceptive failure" by government agencies and affiliates like Planned Parenthood, the exclusion of abortion under the grant is questionable.

My reason for this letter is to share information about the expansion of contraceptive availability and education by the establishment of evening hours at six Pitt County satellite clinics for "pill pick-up and counseling." The information I offer is derived from my involvement with Birthright, an organization of trained volunteers to help pregnant teens.

Rosemary Diamond, director of Chicago Birthright, says, "The complex motivation for unwed pregnancy goes far beyond simple contraceptive ignorance." She explains some motivations for sexual activity, including: (1) peer pressure and approval, (2) rebellion because the adolescent has never learned to relate to any authority figure, (3) depression leading to acting out without fear of consequences, (4) hostility aimed at hurting parents with rigid moral standards, (5) escape from miserable homes. She says, "Pregnancies are intended, either consciously or subconsciously, in the majority of cases. Sexual activity is the symptom, not the disease."

In view of the above, one can perceive why countries with mandatory sex education and freely available contraceptives have not decreased adolescent pregnancies and have increased abortion and venereal disease.

Mildred Murphy

To the editor:

From time to time, I'm sure all of us wish we had acted differently in a given situation involving another person. Could we have been more understanding? Could we have been a bit more patient? Could a good deed have been done if we had only stopped to think a minute before speaking rashly? Events in my life over the past year have caused me to examine such thoughts more closely. I recently read an article which expresses feelings we all may have had.

Have you ever wakened in the night and thought about someone you wished you had been kinder to when you had the chance? Probably you have. You may not have been as considerate of your parents as you might have been, or as understanding of your children when they were younger, or as concerned about the welfare of certain friends or relatives when they certainly could have used a little help from you.

Almost everyone, sooner or later, experiences such remorse. You wish you could turn the clock back. You can't, but you can determine to live more unselfishly from now on. You can't relive the past, but you can live more thoroughly in the future — and thus make up a little for some of the opportunities to be kind you have neglected along the way.

Perhaps it would help if you recalled William Penn's famous lines: "I expect to pass through life but once. If, therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow-being, let me do it now, and not defer or neglect it. I shall not pass this way again."

longer fit in the clothes and shoes they wore last year, but they seem to be malfunctioning in several critical areas.

The one has lost the ability to tie, zip, button and speak in any tone below a roar; the other has mislaid all the information he had about the multiplication tables, not to mention the capitals of the 50 states and the spelling of tricky vowel combinations; and the third not only disclaims any knowledge of square roots and decimals but also insists that he's forgotten his locker combination, his homeroom number and the way to school.

It seems to me that these models should be expected to function efficiently for at least 90 days or 12,000 miles, whichever comes first.

Certainly, they have accumulated precious little mileage all summer long, unless you count round trips from the television set to the refrigerator.

One regularly breaks down midway through mowing the front lawn; the other manages to get the waste baskets to the trash cans only under extreme duress; and the third staggers and moans under the weight of dirty dishes carried to the sink.

It is difficult to believe that a year's training in school would go down the tube in so short a time. But the truth is they seem to have developed serious functional deficiencies, such as collective hearing problems that have left them deaf to any sound save the stereo at full blast and the ice cream truck four blocks away.

I have no idea how you were able to reach them when my own voice, at full shriek inches from their ears, does not penetrate.

I am at a loss to understand what the problem is. Certainly, it has not had anything to do with nourishment.

pervasive fear of Robert F. Kennedy that helped keep money pouring into President Lyndon B. Johnson's war chest until the moment of his withdrawal.

One reason is that conservative Democratic businessmen who showered money on LBJ in 1968 — and presumably would prefer Carter over Kennedy this time — are intent on securing the Republican nomination for ex-Democrat John B. Connally. Like many of their Republican brethren, they consider Connally certain to be the next president (when, in fact, he remains a longshot).

Evan Dobbelle, Carter's chief fund-raiser, told us ingeniously that the president encounters no greater difficulty than any other candidate coping with post-Watergate restrictions. Indeed, there is evidence the Carter political team does not recognize the president's plight.

She became a community worker at a Neighborhood Service Center, then got a job as a teacher's aide. She went back to school and got her high school diploma, and then began working as a student assistant at Hillsborough Community College while getting her degree.

"I knew I had to get an education," she says. "I couldn't help my children with their homework, I couldn't even talk to them intelligently Honey, I was ignorant."

This year, she has 26 people — all women and all but two black — enrolled as H.C.C. students, and so far only three have dropped out. (The normal drop-out rate is very high.)

"I expect even those three to be back this spring quarter," Ms. Hill says, beaming like a farmer who's got a likely-looking crop coming along. "I don't know why I can't get any men to come ... but I'm working on it."

"We'll have several new ones this spring," she says. "One of them has ten children....a baby every year and livin' off welfare. Now what kind of life is that? But I keep talking ... I keep tellin' them they don't have to keep on like that. They can go to school. They can change!"

Charles Davis, her former boss at the Neighborhood Service Center, assigned a community worker to her and, together, they keep after the people they get enrolled in H.C.C. They give encouragement and help with problems — and there are plenty of those.

"We're working with people who have nothing," Ms. Hill says. "They got to have clothes, and jobs so they can stay in school, and day care for their children. They need transportation, books. The grant money doesn't come in until after classes start, so we got to find somebody to advance the money for books."

Ironically, the Mature Students Program is one that Ms. Hill could have taken advantage of herself — if only she'd known about it. She learned about it almost by accident when she was a student assistant in the H.C.C. counseling department.

While sending out notices to applicants as part of that job, she noticed that almost no minority students were applying.

"Somehow the word wasn't getting out about it to black people. That's when I went to Charles Davis and we came up with the plan we call 'Inform and Educate.'"

She got a story in the local black newspaper, she went on radio and television, she put up posters in stores, she went to the churches in the black community. She got fifty people together at the Neighborhood Service Center and gave a seminar on the program. Mainly, as she says, she did a lot of talking.

"Welfare helps with immediate problems but gives people nothing that helps them help themselves. I tell them, 'Look, I lived in the projects and I didn't have nothing, but I changed my life, and you can, too!'" — BARBARA DEANE, free lance, Tampa, Fla.

As I Recall It

The Great Polio Epidemic In North Carolina

By NOEL YANCEY

(Noel Yancey retired last year after covering North Carolina news for the Associated Press for 39 years. In this column he retells some of the big stories he recalls.)

Back in the summer of 1948 it was against the law for hotels or private citizens of Savannah Beach, Ga., to receive visitors from North Carolina. Violators were subject to a $100 fine. Health authorities of Georgia, Virginia and South Carolina advised their residents against travel in certain parts of North Carolina.

It was the year of North Carolina's biggest epidemic of infantile paralysis, the worst outbreak of polio in the nation that year. In all, 2,516 persons in the state were stricken with the dread disease. Of these, 143 died and hundreds of others were left paralyzed for life. Some had to live in iron lungs that enabled them to breathe.

The 1948 epidemic preceded the development of polio vaccine by only seven years — Salk Vaccine was licensed in 1955. During the next few years literally millions of persons were immunized against polio. In 1959 the legislature required that all children be vaccinated against polio before entering school. As a result, there hasn't been a case of polio reported in North Carolina since 1968. Health authorities say that as long as the population is kept immunized, polio is no longer a threat.

But in June, July and August of 1948 things were grim. As many as 50 new cases a day were reported to the State Board of Health. As the outbreak increased in severity, people became frightened. Many of the state's cities and counties imposed bans on the public assembly of children under 16. Movie theaters, public swimming pools, even Sunday schools and churches were closed to them. All that hot summer children were kept at home and played in their own yards. People resented it when neighbors entertained children from other parts of town.

At first, the outbreak developed slowly. By early June, 102 cases of polio had been reported in the state for the entire year, and health authorities were described as concerned; but they said it was too early to tell whether the state was confronted with a major epidemic. By mid June, 23 cases had been reported in Burke County alone. Dr. C.P. Stevick of the state Board of Health said the outbreak had reached an "acute state" in Burke, but for the rest of the state there was "no reason for general alarm."

At the end of June, the state's case total had reached 309 — nine more than the entire year of 1947. Health authorities designated Guilford, Moore and Cumberland counties, as well as Burke, as "isolated epidemic areas". Stevick said the outbreak had not reached the proportions of a statewide epidemic.

About this time, health authorities in Georgia, Virginia and South Carolina advised their residents against travel in North Carolina's epidemic areas — a harsh blow to the state's travel industry. Dr. Roy Norton, state health officer, described the admonition as "plain foolishness."

But 10 days later, the case total had reached 485, and Dr. Norton noted "a definite upward trend in the attack rate". At this point Charlotte and Mecklenburg County imposed a ban

Sharing Dream Life Is Really Not That Easy

It hasn't been easy, but I have managed through the years to insure myself to the fact that I'll never be another Jane Pauley, Eleanor Roosevelt, or Helena Rubinstein.

I now can admit without flinching that I will never be able to translate Julia Child's cookbooks, discover the cure for coffee addiction or hear the front doorbell ring without drop-kicking the toys and newspaper on the living room floor into the coat closet.

But there always has been one thing that I thought I could do well, and that was sleep. I can fall asleep during a lecture on sex, in line at the supermarket, and during my own recounting of the day's events.

I can sleep on sofas, shaker chairs, straw mattresses, and the backseats of Toyotas.

But now I find that even my sleep life is deficient. If the recent rash of articles on dreams is any indication, the richer the dream life, the more complex the person.

Unfortunately, my dream life falls somewhere between that of snails and infant rodents in interest. The most exciting dream I've ever had was a nightmare in which I was drowning in a vat of Coke. As I came up for the third time, Bill Cosby was standing over me saying, "I caught you...yes, I did...you smiled."

One of the latest dream articles suggests that dreams can become more creative experiences if they are shared with one's spouse. This sharing is supposed to bring a couple closer together, to prevent them from intellectualizing their problems

So I tried it. The morning after I read the article I shook Phillip and I said, "I just dreamed that I was sitting in some basketball bleachers with Andy Griffith eating popcorn."

"So?"

"That's it. I just wanted to share my dreams with you."

Phillip yawned. "I hate to say this, Gail, but your dreams are boring."

It's not easy to accept a statement like that. "Not all of them," I sniffed. "Some of them are filled with action-packed adventure."

"For example?"

"Well, a couple of nights ago, I had one about Farrah Fawcett-Majors."

"I like it already. Go on."

"We were stranded on a desert island. We were arguing over a bottle of shampoo."

"And?"

"What do you think?" She won."

"That's it?"

"What were you expecting?"

He threw up his hands. "I don't know! Maybe two handsome strangers peeking out from behind a coconut tree."

"No, I read somewhere that women dream about people they know. Men are the ones who dream about strangers."

"That sounds right. Most of the women in my dreams are ..."

"You always said that I was the girl of your dreams!"

"Uh, sure, but ..."

"Oh, it's all right," I sighed. "It's just that I'm jealous."

"That's crazy. You shouldn't envy a bunch of voluptuous, scantily-clad bodies."

I didn't like the smile that was playing on his lips. "I meant I was jealous of the dreams in general, Romeo, not of the details!"

I wish he had left it at that, but instead he tried to comfort me. "Just remember, I love you for your mind."

Robert Redford, where are you when I need you?

Laverne Hill Talks To Get People Motivated

TAMPA, Fla. — "I talk and I talk to people," Lavern Hill says. "I got to get them motivated. I got to get them thinking that they can change. I got to reach in there and pull them out."

For the past two years, Ms. Hill, a middle-aged widow and mother of two, has been spreading the word about education in her community. Anyone over 21, with or without a high school diploma, can enroll in the local community college's mature student program. They can get financial aid to go to school. This is what she keeps telling people — endlessly. She's done it as a volunteer, after work at the college where she's a clerk in the counseling department. Her superiors at the school don't discourage her, but they don't give her any help, either.

When Ms. Hill was widowed in 1959 she had no education. She moved back to Tampa, her home town, where she began living on welfare in a public housing project.

She had just one thing going for her: "I was determined not to raise my children in that project."

She became a community worker at a Neighborhood Service Center, then got a job as a teacher's aide. She went back to school and got her high school diploma, and then began working as a student assistant at Hillsborough Community College while getting her degree.

"I knew I had to get an education," she says. "I couldn't help my children with their homework, I couldn't even talk to them intelligently Honey, I was ignorant."

This year, she has 26 people — all women and all but two black — enrolled as H.C.C. students, and so far only three have dropped out. (The normal drop-out rate is very high.)

"I expect even those three to be back this spring quarter," Ms. Hill says, beaming like a farmer who's got a likely-looking crop coming along. "I don't know why I can't get any men to come ... but I'm working on it."

"We'll have several new ones this spring," she says. "One of them has ten children....a baby every year and livin' off welfare. Now what kind of life is that? But I keep talking ... I keep tellin' them they don't have to keep on like that. They can go to school. They can change!"

Charles Davis, her former boss at the Neighborhood Service Center, assigned a community worker to her and, together, they keep after the people they get enrolled in H.C.C. They give encouragement and help with problems — and there are plenty of those.

"We're working with people who have nothing," Ms. Hill says. "They got to have clothes, and jobs so they can stay in school, and day care for their children. They need transportation, books. The grant money doesn't come in until after classes start, so we

Ironically, the Mature Students Program is one that Ms. Hill could have taken advantage of herself — if only she'd known about it. She learned about it almost by accident when she was a student assistant in the H.C.C. counseling department.

While sending out notices to applicants as part of that job, she noticed that almost no minority students were applying.

"Somehow the word wasn't getting out about it to black people. That's when I went to Charles Davis and we came up with the plan we call 'Inform and Educate.'"

She got a story in the local black newspaper, she went on radio and television, she put up posters in stores, she went to the churches in the black community. She got fifty people together at the Neighborhood Service Center and gave a seminar on the program. Mainly, as she says, she did a lot of talking.

"There are so many people who just don't care," she sighs. "And so many people who didn't even know that this place (waving her hand toward the campus) existed."

"Welfare helps with immediate problems but gives people nothing that helps them help themselves. I tell them, 'Look, I lived in the projects and I didn't have nothing, but I changed my life, and you can, too!'" — BARBARA DEANE, free lance, Tampa, Fla.

Things Are Looking Up For The Gifted Child

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — For some years, most of the news about education in America has been bad news — news of teacher strikes, declining test scores, racial tensions, costly vandalism. In a recent publication, the Council for Basic Education provides a bit of good news; Things are looking better for the gifted child.

Not much better, to be sure, but almost any constructive development for talented children represents significant gain. It is a curious and regrettable thing. In a nation that puts a high premium on excellence, and rewards achievement through all the mechanisms of a free society, we have rigged our public school systems to keep excellence down.

Doubtless it is right, reasonable and just for our schools to spend more on the slow learners and the physically handicapped whose needs are greatest. But something is grossly askew when a state spends $740 per pupil on 220,000 handicapped pupils and $40 per pupil on 70,000 gifted.

Without identifying the state, James J. Gallagher and Patricia Weiss make that point in their monograph, "The Education of Gifted and Talented Students." The authors are attached to the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Center at the University of North Carolina. Their review of the situation offers some encouragement, but it also prompts dismay at the indifference the schools have exhibited toward the 2 or 3 percent of children whose minds contain the seeds of brilliance.

"To ignore the education of gifted and talented individuals is to cheat both them and the larger society," the authors remark. Nevertheless, this has been the familiar pattern. Here and there a school system may grant early admission to a demonstrably intelligent child. In such systems a gifted pupil may skip a grade. Historically, only a handful of public schools have grouped the talented ones together. The general notion has been that the gifted didn't need any special attention — they could make it on their own.

Why this attitude? The authors explain it in terms of a love-hate relationship between society and its most talented members. We may love excellence, but we hate elitism. The national obsession with equality of opportunity has been vindictively satisfied in the public schools by concentrating on the disadvantaged and ignoring the gifted.

In recent years the problem has been complicated by court decrees having to do with desegregation. Here in Washington, for example, a federal judge put a summary end to a track system intended to provide different course offerings for the slow, the average and the fast learners. The court thought it a transparent device to discriminate against blacks.

The hopeful prospect is that maybe the future will be better. Cleveland and San Diego are experimenting with special classes "conducted by teachers who have been trained to use a challenging and sophisticated curriculum planned for gifted students." Communities in California and Florida are using the "mentor approach." Gifted students spend time with experts in such different fields as politics, computers, art and music, and work part time as interns receiving academic credits.

In Oakland, N. J., the Gifted Child Society has organized Saturday workshops. These provide stimulating classes in both science and the humanities for 500 children who would rather spend a Saturday morning learning about bones and muscles than watching Roadrunner on the boob tube.

North Carolina has maintained "Governor's Schools" for 400 bright high-school juniors every summer since 1963. Georgia, Louisiana, Alabama and Pennsylvania have similar six- to eight-week summer sessions.

In other areas, educators are experimenting with accelerated programs that may put bright youngsters in college at 14 to 16. One such program is the Study of Mathematically Precocious Youth. Students who demonstrate a capacity for advanced mathematics may be enrolled at 12 or 13 in the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

There are risks, of course, in overstimulating the brilliant child. Some things can't be hurried, and genuine maturity is one of them. But on the record, the problem is not that our schools have pushed too hard, but that they rarely have pushed hard enough to bring out the best in our brightest minds. It's a condition that cries out for attention.

Hank Jr. Concert September 6

HANK WILLIAMS, JR. ... will be in concert Thursday, Sept. 6 at the Carolina Opry House. Tickets are priced at $6 in advance, and $7 at the door. He is scheduled to go on stage at about 10:30 p.m.

Hank Williams, Jr., also known as Bocephus, is scheduled to be in concert Thursday, September 6 at Carolina Opry House. Son of a famous singing star and a well-known performer on his own achievements, Williams is expected to be on stage at about 10:30.

The first attraction Thursday evening will be that of Bill Lyerly and his band from Kinston — regulars at the Opry House.

Tickets are priced at $6 in advance and $7 at the door. These can be purchased at the Opry House or from Apple Records or Western Pleasure.

Hank Jr. is first album, "Hank Williams Junior and Friends," included Toy Caldwell of Marshall Tucker's group; Chuck Leavell of the Allman Brothers; and Charlie Daniels from CBD.

Soon after the success of this venture, Williams was seriously injured in a fall while climbing in the Montana Rockies. The accident delayed his career, but he has endured a long struggle and has made a comeback.

Earlier in his life, Williams was a child star on the Grand Ole Opry, and at 14 played to a capacity crowd at Detroit's Cobo Hall.

In 1965 he did the soundtrack for the movie — "Your Cheatin' Heart," based on his father's life.

In his recent music, Williams has looked beyond the confines of traditional country music to new approaches in performances.

Free Art Lessons For Area Students

As a public service to children in the Greenville area, the School of Art, East Carolina University, is once more offering free art classes to children in grades four through nine.

The classes will be conducted by faculty members of the Department of Art Education, assisted by junior and senior students majoring in art education.

Most of the material required will be provided by the university at no cost to students.

A summer-long search for boys to perform lead roles in a new CBS television pilot entitled, "Kings of the Hills," will focus on the Carolinas and Tennessee as Reuben Cannon, casting director, sends a talent scout back to this area Monday, September 3.

Parents of boys, ages 8-12, who are not over 54 inches tall and who have higher than average school grades, are invited to bring their sons to a meeting at television station WBTV, 1 Julian Place, Charlotte, 7 p.m. Monday. Each boy should bring a snapshot or other photo with name, address, telephone and birthdate noted on the back.

Cannon said that boys who were interviewed during the initial search last June need not attend the Monday meeting.

A similar meeting will be held in Raleigh, Wednesday, September 5, with place and time to be announced.

The new mini-series will center on a small southern town. A nine-year old white boy named David and a nine-year old black boy named Booker will be the principal characters.

Alex Haley will co-produce the pilot and series with Norman Lear of "All in the Family" fame.

Either Way, A Public Tragedy

By NAOMI KAUFMAN
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald's friends call him "Rock."

He is steadfast, they say, firm of will and determined. The former Green Beret will need all those traits. He might spend the rest of his life in prison.

Last week, a federal judge sentenced MacDonald to three consecutive life terms for the 1970 stabbing and bludgeoning deaths of his wife and two daughters.

The MacDonald story starts with a Princeton graduate who goes to Northwestern Medical School, graduates 12th in his class of 132, completes a prestigious surgical internship at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital in New York City and enlists in the Army rather than face the draft while a resident in orthopedic surgery at Yale.

It becomes a story of death and delay for the 35-year-old Huntington Beach, Calif., emergency-room physician.

MacDonald decides it would be more exciting to volunteer to be a Green Beret doctor than do anything else during his Army tour. He goes through rigorous training, including parachute training, and is sent to Fort Bragg in the fall of 1969.

His family — Colette, 26, Kimberly, 5, and Kristen, 2 — joins him. Late in 1969, Colette learns she is expecting a third child. He buys his children a Shetland pony for Christmas. His parents, from his home town of Patchogue, N.Y., visit for New Year's Eve.

Six weeks later, on Feb. 17, 1970, military police answer a call for help and find the bodies of MacDonald's family. "At first I thought it was a murder-suicide," says one MP, Kenneth Mica.

But MacDonald is alive. He tells a story of shock, horror and confusion — of waking to the screams of his wife and Kimberly, being attacked by three men while a candle-carrying woman chanted, "Acid is groovy. Kill the pigs," and regaining consciousness to find the bodies of his family.

Last week, as prosecutors asked a federal jury to convict MacDonald of murder, they also told of MacDonald's shock, horror and confusion.

The shock: finding he had killed his wife and Kimberly in a moment of rage, "a tragic brief moment." The horror: "At that point his future is at stake," and he knows he must kill Kristen, too, as a part of his coverup. The confusion: "who created so much of that confusion?" MacDonald, they said, sending authorities chasing to find four drug-crazed murderers.

The jury took 6½ hours and four ballots to deliver its verdict: guilty on all counts. The jurors returned a first-degree murder verdict for Kristen's murder, saying later they thought prosecutors proved premeditation. The other two were second-degree murder.

Less than two days before, MacDonald told reporters he might write a book. Its title: "Twice Not Guilty," he said.

When asked whether he ever considered that he might be found guilty, he replied, "Who me? Guilty?"

Throughout the 33-day trial, his attorneys sought to portray Army and FBI investigators as bungling Keystone Kops, their own witnesses as distinguished scholars. Chief defense attorney Bernard Segal belittled the testimony of some prosecution witnesses and made fun of others with his detailed questions and his sometimes mocking tone.

He called prosecution experiments on a key piece of evidence "sheer fakery." The evidence was MacDonald's own hole-riddled pajama top; it was the first thing the jury asked to see when it started deliberations Wednesday. Prosecutors said the holes in it matched icepick wounds on Mrs. MacDonald's chest, showing MacDonald had stabbed his wife through it. MacDonald said he was wearing the top when attacked and later placed it over his wife.

Segal started working for MacDonald in 1970, representing him at an Army hearing. The Army dropped its charges after a lengthy investigative hearing.

MacDonald moved to California, he says to get his grief-stricken in-laws "off my back." He started to rebuild his life. "I work hard and I play hard," he said.

His freedom lasted until Jan. 24, 1975, when a federal grand jury indicted him. He was freed on $100,000 bond. Legal appeals lasted until this March.

For the trial, Segal geared up a defense team — more like a regiment — that scurried to his commands. He engaged a respected Raleigh lawyer, Wade Smith, to act as local counsel. Smith's Southern Gentleman manner was a sharp contrast to Segal's strident Yankee style.

The defense worked hundreds of hours tracking down potential witnesses. The key one was Helena Stoeckley, a former heroin addict, who had been considered a suspect off and on in the early 1970s.

The defense tracked her to South Carolina, and she testified after being arrested on a bench warrant. Miss Stoeckley had told several people she thought she was involved.

However, U.S. District Judge Franklin Dupree Jr. strictly limited testimony about her statements. Miss Stoeckley testified she took mescaline the night of the killings and didn't know where she was. Prosecutors successfully argued that her statements to six others about her possible involvement were the product of a drug-addled mind.

The defense produced a surprise witness, one of MacDonald's Fort Bragg neighbors. James Milne Jr., now of Roanoke, Va., testified he saw three robbed and candle-carrying figures near the MacDonald house. However, his account put the time at least two hours before the killings.

MacDonald estimated the trial cost him $300,000. Legal Ecology", "The Big Buy-Teenage Consumerism", and "The World Food Crisis".

All materials received by the schools become their property, providing a valuable resource tool for years to come.

And you don't have to be a student in one of the participating schools to enjoy two other features of The Daily Reflector-VEC News Program.

During the week, a FOCUS column will appear each day in THE DAILY REFLECTOR. This column features events, personalities and places currently in the headlines. FOCUS provides an insight into the news not commonly found in front page reports.

On Sundays, THE QUIZ will be presented as a special weekly feature throughout the year. THE QUIZ is a challenging family project, allowing students and parents to test their knowledge of current events.

The reason behind THE DAILY REFLECTOR's sponsorship of the VEC News Program is twofold. One, the newspaper and the schools are partners in education, both having the responsibility to help educate future voters and leaders. Also, students are a part of a newspaper's future audience. Concerned newspeople have long recognized the need to stimulate young people to become regular newspaper readers.

Editor's Note: Today's Quiz for the Focus column is carried on Page C-5 of today's edition.

New Chairman For Red Cross

Col. Ed Tadlock was installed this past week as the new chairman of the Pitt County Red Cross, succeeding Andy Warren.

Tadlock, who is associated with the AFROTC program at East Carolina University, has served on the board of directors of the Red Cross here.

During the quarterly board meeting, held at the Tar River Blood Center, Sandy Koonz from the Red Cross division headquarters in Charlotte spoke to the group on Red Cross procedures and programs.

In addition, various reports, involving service to military families, first aid and water safety, were given by the committee chairmen.

Mrs. Catherine Smith, a Red Cross volunteer from Kinston, handled the officer installation.

Completes Golf Course Study

The Golf Course Task Force of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce has completed its study of the feasibility of the need for a public golf course in Pitt County, according to Alan Pittman, chairman of the task force.

"We have issued a survey throughout the community and our preliminary findings are very encouraging," he said.

The Golf Task Force will present its recommendations to the Chamber's Board of Directors in September. The recommendations are based on a comprehensive questionnaire developed by task force members, all of which share a common knowledge of golf courses and USGA regulations.

The task force will include in its recommendations several possible sites for location of an adequate, accessible public golf course in Pitt County.

Tragedy...

work over the previous nine years cost another $200,000, he said. He had to mortgage his waterfront condominium and his boat, "Recovery Room."

Prosecutors say they don't know how much their case cost. "Whatever it was, it's worth it," said Brian Murtagh, a Justice Department attorney who has been on the case since 1971. "How can you put a price tag on three lives?"

"This case is a tragedy for both sides, no matter what happens," Murtagh told the jury during final arguments Tuesday. "Society loses either way."

If they convicted MacDonald, he said, "society loses an excellent doctor." If they acquitted him, "society loses because someone we believe committed atrocious crimes goes free."

Assistant U.S. Attorney James Blackburn referred back to MacDonald's testimony and the contradictions between his statement and the physical evidence. "Think about his answers. Don't you think if you could explain it, you would? ... Don't you know if he could have he most certainly would have?"

MacDonald has spent the days since his conviction at a federal prison unit at Butner. He has exchanged his conservative, meticulously worn suits for the light-blue coveralls worn by the other prisoners. He is seeing no one but family, lawyers and a few close friends.

Attorneys worked last week to try to get MacDonald free on bond pending appeal. Smith said Friday he was trying to line up people willing to put up their homes as bond, should Dupree or the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals grant it.

Numerous legal appeals are expected. Segal said the case was a "legal tragedy." He cited delay in the indictment — from 1970 to 1975 — and double jeopardy. The Supreme Court has already ruled against MacDonald in pre-trial appeals on both those grounds.

He also said he thought Dupree made legal errors by failing to allow testimony about Miss Stockley's statements and by not allowing psychiatric testimony.

The appeals could take several years.

If he is denied bail, MacDonald will spend the time at Terminal Island, a prison on the water off Long Beach, Calif., the city where MacDonald has worked since 1971. He was director of emergency services at St. Mary Medical Center; the hospital fired him immediately after the verdict was announced. A spokesman said MacDonald had been informed before the trial started that he would be fired if found guilty.

Terminal Island has a single fence around it and no barred cells. But the verdict means MacDonald has had his career taken from him: he won't be able to be a prison doctor or work in the hospital at all.

"We don't let inmates pursue their professions while in prison," said Michael Ann, spokesman for the federal Bureau of Prisons.

Meanwhile, at least one person will be able to go back to work with a clearer mind than he's had in 9½ years. Alfred Kassab, a Cranbury, N.J., dried-egg salesman and MacDonald's former father-in-law, fought to bring MacDonald to trial.

However, he said the verdict brought no special pleasure to him or his wife, Mildred. "We feel vindicated. We do not feel happy," he said.

One spectator told Kassab to keep the transcripts of the trial, a reference to the expected appeals. "I will," he answered. "I surely will."

Epidemic...

on the public assembly of children 16 and under, and ordered a county-wide DDT spray of insect breeding areas.

On July 13, the case total had reached 544, and Norton announced that plans were being made to line up 1,000 beds for convalescent polio patients at World War II military installations — 360 beds at Camp Sutton near Monroe, and 700 beds at Camp Butner near Durham. The hospital at Camp Sutton actually was opened. At Greensboro, crews were put to work night and day building the 136-bed Central Carolina Convalescent Hospital.

Around the end of July, when the case total had reached 998, the City Council in the resort city of Asheville decreed the closing of churches and movie theaters and discontinuance of athletic contests and civic club meetings. Many conventions were canceled or postponed, a number of short-term summer encampments were called off and long-term camps were forbidden to have visitors from epidemic areas. Dr. Marjery Lord, the Asheville health officer, said that weddings would be permitted but decreed they be private affairs with the number of attendants limited.

Herbert D. Miles, president of the George Vanderbilt Hotel Corp. at Asheville, charged that the City Council there had displayed "more panic than logic" in its ban on public assemblies and complained it was more severe at Greensboro where the polio outbreak was more serious. Asheville hotel managers complained that cancellations were running up to 50 percent and restaurant owners reported business was cut in half.

At Newton-Conover, Kermit Kiser, 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. A.L. Kiser, died of polio only six days after the death of his twin brother, Keith. In Wilmington, Mrs. W.H. Thornton, 25, entered James Walker Memorial Hospital as a suspected polio case the day after the admission of her three-year-old son, Billy.

By Aug. 10 when 32 new cases brought the total to 1,348 and the number of deaths to 67, Norton expressed the opinion that the epidemic had passed its peak and would continue to abate.

Hurricane '33

Dryer Place

It wasn't that they didn't want to get to a dryer place. It wasn't that they didn't want dry clothes. "That was the end of it when we went up there," Mason says. "There wasn't anyplace else to go."

Upstairs, the group changed to dry clothes and waited out the rest of the night.

"About sunrise, we came back downstairs. The tide had gone down. It was just about on the ground then," Mason recalls. The wind shifted to the southwest and blew the rest of the water away.

The familiar pine thicket had heretofore hidden Aunt Jane's and Aunt Liney's houses from the Masons' view. But the morning light revealed none of the pine trees was left standing.

Out of 26 homes in the community, 13 were left. Miraculously, no human lives were lost at Lukens. "It seemed that the Lord arranged it so that everybody got to the houses that did not wash down," Mason says.

Livestock Lost

The livestock did not fare as well. "You couldn't put a hand down anywhere without touching something dead," Mason said. "We couldn't bury it all."

The cattle that survived had saved themselves by going to high ground.

Aunt Jane lost all her chickens except for the six she took with her in the wash tub.

The Masons lost most of their 200 herd of cattle; all the 50 to 75 hogs except the one Mason tossed into the ice box; about 100 chickens and his mother's turkeys, more than 300 of them.

They had one pan of light bread left, only because it was placed on top of a pie safe. The morning after the storm, Mason gathered wood and built a fire, and the ten family members shared the bread.

Widespread Damage

Three days later, a Coast Guard boat arrived with food and water. The Red Cross also came.

The hurricane had washed away parts of the school, damaged the post office and the church.

At nearby Merrimon, only four out of 30 houses were left standing. At Oriental, Vandemere, Bayboro and Arapahoe, hardly a building was left intact.

The storm destroyed about three-fourths of the mile-long Neuse River bridge at New Bern, where water was reported six feet deep in the business district. News releases quoted E. H. Dixon, manager of Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Company, as saying that "trees were blown down on nearly every street and telephone wires were tangled everywhere."

Winds reached 100 miles per hour at Morehead City. At Cedar Island, only 14 of 84 houses were left standing. Close to 1,000 persons were left homeless.

Ocracoke was reported covered by four feet of water at the height of the storm.

The hurricane is not listed in record books as one of the great storms of the Atlantic, like Hurricane Hazel, and it came before tropical depressions were given proper names. It is known simply as "the '33 storm," but people like Jack Mason say the name with respect.

Erosion Claim

It is the storm that lowland residents claim began the modern day erosion of shorelines. Mason's homesite in Lukens, once some 300 yards from the river, is now at the water line.

Ironically, it was not the hurricane that killed the community of Lukens. It was the closing of the public school. For awhile, after all the residents had moved themselves and taken their rebuilt houses with them to new locations, a huge oak tree that measured seven and one-half feet in diameter presided over the barren foundations. Then the tree began to rot.

"Seems like after you leave a place, the trees leave, too," Mason says.

"Hurricanes are bad," he states with finality. "About storms, all I can tell you is that you've got to do all you're gonna do before a storm hits. Now you know if they're going to hit. Then, we didn't even have a flashlight."

IF IT'LL MAKE YOU HAPPY, WE WANT YOU TO HAVE IT.

Preserving or restoring the handsome old houses in our area is just as important as building new ones. And because we have mortgage money available to meet the credit needs of our community, First Federal doesn't play favorites.

AMERICAN LEGION BLDG.
St. Andrews Drive
Greenville, North Carolina

Our speaker this month is Earl Williams, an independent business man and president of Hy Speed Products Co., a manufacturing maintenance supply firm.

Earl says: "For thirty years I traveled throughout the United States representing the ways of the world and enjoying the best that Satan could offer. Then at the age of thirty, I was born again by the Grace of God. In January 1975 I was baptized in the Holy Spirit; and since that time, I have traveled the same territory enjoying the best that Jesus can offer."

Earl is married, and he and his wife, Lynda have three children. For the past two years he has served as President of the Wilmington Chapter of the FGBMFI and is presently serving as a Field Representative for the FGBMFI.

The Lord Jesus has prospered Earl Williams spiritually, physically and materially. Earl says that Jesus will do the same for anyone who will believe.

Earl is really excited and enthusiastic about what Jesus is doing today. Invite a friend and come and hear his testimony about what Jesus is doing in his life.

The precious, sweet spirit of Jesus lives in this man—just as He can and will live in any and all of us who will let Him into our lives. Come join us and let's all lift Jesus higher that others may be drawn to Him. (John 12:32)

Pirates Sting Catamounts, 31-6

Pirates Scratch Out Cats

East Carolina running back Anthony Collins (33) runs through the middle of the Western Carolina Catamounts defensive line for part of his 95 yards

Reflector Sports Editor

Last year, when the Pirates of East Carolina opened their season against Western Carolina, the 14-7 victory left the question somewhat in doubt.

Last night, as the two teams faced each other in another season opener, the Pirates left no doubt in anybody's mind in Ficklen Stadium, trouncing the Catamounts, 31-6.

The Pirates held Western Carolina scoreless until late in the contest, when a long pass, followed by a pass interference call against the Bucs helped set up the lone Catamount score.

Theodore Sutton scored twice for the Pirates and was their rushing leader. He collected touchdowns on runs of one and 15 yards, and picked up 112 yards in 12 carries.

Leander Green paced a good passing attack, and raced 25 yards for one of the other scores. He hit on six of 14 passes for 132 yards through the air, and moved past Billy Wightman as the school's tenth all-time man in total offense. He now has a total of 2,034. Wightman had 1,927.

Sam Harrell added the other touchdown on a one-yard plunge, while Bill Lamm kicked four extra points and added a 24-yard field goal.

The lone Western score was a one-yard sweep by tailback Lenoard Williams. A two-point try was stopped well short.

If there was anything in the game that annoyed Pirate coach Pat Dye, it was the penalties that the Pirate eleven ran up. They were hit 11 times for 110 yards. Several times, penalties killed drives, and one set up the Western score.

"We didn't make the mistakes offensively that we did last year," he said. "When we got the opportunity to score, we took advantage of it."

"I don't mean to say that it was easy, because it wasn't. I'm proud of our offense because we didn't have a turnover. But I'm very, very disappointed in the number of penalties. The penalties took us out of some situations that could have become scoring situations."

Dye added that it was hard for him to evaluate the defense. "We would be doing fine and then they would complete one or the quarterback would scramble free."

Actually, Western didn't do all that well. They picked up only eight yards against the strong Pirate defense against the rush. They passed for 180, giving them just 188 yards in total offense.

They compared favorably with the Pirate totals. East Carolina rushed for 368 yards, passed for another 146 for a total of 514 in their initial effort of the season.

"All I can say about this team is that it has a chance. I feel a lot better about this team than that one after the opener last year. "But we can play as hard as we can and it still might not be enough against State next Saturday. They have some big, big, big, big people," Dye said.

Western's Bob Waters had a lot of praise for the Pirate defense. "They just overpowered us all over the field. They jumped on us early and we could never get in the game. East Carolina is a very good football team. This is the best of defensive team we have played against. They are going to whip a lot of good football teams."

Waters pulled out his highly regarded quarterback Mike Pusey after the first half, and went exclusively with reserve Kent Briggs in the second half. Pusey rushed for just one yard, while Briggs was thrown for 39. Pusey hit on five of ten passes with one interception for 64 yards, while Briggs had seven of 14 completed for 116 yards, one of them to lightning fast wide receiver Dwayne Norman, who broke loose for 47 yards, and nearly got away for a touchdown. Freshman Freddie Jones chased him down however.

East Carolina went on the board just minutes into the game, driving 60 yards on the first series. After an aborted kickoff on the slick Ficklen turf left the ball only on the ECU 40, Green hit Vern Davenport for 11 yards. He added another 21-yard pass to Davenport to the 29, and then Sutton went up the middle for four more.

Green then kept the ball around the right side, got a good block and took it in from 25 yards out. Lamm's extra point was good for a 7-0 lead after just 2:23 had passed.

Late in the quarter, the Pirates offered another threat, moving from their own five to the Western 38 thanks to a 53-yard scamper around the left side by Sutton. But Green was sacked on the next play, losing 15 yards, and a penalty for holding was tacked onto that, putting the Pirates all the way back to their 31, and they got another 15 yarder after that, and were finally forced to kick on fourth and 56 from their own 16.

They got the ball back as the quarter ended at their own 17. Anthony Collins, who had 95 yards in 16 carries, broke loose for runs of 14 and 13 to midfield on the first two plays of the quarter. Marvin Cobb ran twice for 15, and Mike Hawkins got away for 19 more to the 16. A penalty later moved it back to the 24, but Green hit Davenport for 17 yards to the seven. Harrell gained four, Sutton got two, and Harrell went the final yard with 9:30 left in the half and Lamm's kick made it 14-0.

Late in the half, the Pirates took over on their 25. On the first play, Green hit Washington on the fly and he was finally pushed down at the five. Three plays later, Sutton went over the top from the one, and Lamm made it 21-0 with 2:01 left to go in the half.

Western then had its only threat of the half, moving from its own 25 to the Pirate 28 before Mike Brewington picked off a Pusey pass.

The first Pirate threat in the second half broke down when Collins was stacked up at the 34 of the Catamounts, trying for a first down on a fourth down play.

But after four plays, the Pirates had it back and drove for their final touchdown of the game. From the 28, the Pirates got a first down on a 12-yard Collins sprint, and later Green raced to the Western 42 before committing an illegal lateral, moving it back to the 47. Sutton broke away for 17 and Collins took a quick pitch around the right side for 15 more to the 15. Sutton then broke through the middle of the Catamount line for the final 15 and Lamm again converted for a 28-0 lead with 3:52 showing.

The final drive started in the third period's closing minutes, carrying from the Pirate 31 to the eight before the Pirates again stopped by a penalty, elected to go for Lamm's 24-yard field goal. With 12:08 left, that made it 31-0.

Western came back with its only touchdown on the next series. From the 24, Briggs hit Norman for 47 yards to the Pirate 29. He then hit Jeff Dean for 15 more to the 14.

A pass interference call moved the ball to the one, and on second down, Williams took a quick pitch around the right side for the score. A two-point try by Williams failed, leaving it at 31-6 with 9:06 left.

East Carolina went with its third unit after that, giving a lot of the newcomers a chance to get into the action.

In addition to the rushing of Sutton and Collins, Cobb added 51 in 10 carries to be third for the Pirates, while Harrell had 47 in five plays.

East Carolina, riding a six-game winning streak, hits the road for the first time next Saturday, traveling to Raleigh to meet pre-season Atlantic Coast Conference favorite N.C. State in a 7 p.m. game that promises to be another sell-out between the two teams.

3-Way Tie In LPGA

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Sylvia Bertolaccini fired a six-under par 66 Saturday to move into a three-way tie with Cathy Thompson and Jane Blalock after the second round of the $100,000 LPGA Rail Charity Golf Classic.

Bertolaccini's round of 66, lowest so far in the tournament, over the 6,300-yard, par-72 Rail Golf Course layout moved her into the tie with a 36-hole total of 136. She needed only 24 putts in the bogey-free round.

"I feel good about the course, and good about my game," the Dallas native said. "I'll continue to go for the pin. I'm hitting my irons too well not to."

Thompson, a former Missouri state women's amateur champion from Springfield, Mo., who is 70th on the LPGA money-winners list, shot her second successive 68 to keep her share of the lead. An eagle on the par-5 sixth hole, sparked her round. "This is all really new to me, and I'm trying not to think about it," she said. "Yesterday's round gave me a lot of confidence."

Blalock, of Island Beach, Fla., took a brief lead at nine-under with a birdie on the par-5 17th hole, but bogeyed the 18th hole to fall back into a three-way tie.

At the 18th, Blalock left a 55-foot putt eight feet short and then missed again. Afterwards, she said, "I'm rolling the ball so well, I don't even mind the three putt."

Tied at 138, two strokes off the pace, were defending champion Pat Bradley, of Westford, Mass.; Shelly Hamlin, of Fresno Calif.; Carole Jo Skala, of Fair Oaks, Calif.; and Betsy King, of Limekiln, Pa.

Trevino Shares Lead

WOODBRIDGE, Ontario (AP) — Lee Trevino of the United States and Peter Townsend of England shared the lead after 54 holes of the Canadian PGA championship Saturday with 215 totals, two over par on the demanding 6,975-yard National Golf Club course.

Trevino, who led the first round with a 67 then slipped to a 76 in the second round, shot a one-over 72 in the third round in hot humid weather.

Townsend, the second-round leader with a 140 score, soared to a 75. At 216, one stroke behind the leaders, was defending champion Lanny Wadkins of the U.S. Wadkins, who won last year with a 270 total, fired a 72 in the third round.

Dan Halldorson, a Canadian on the PGA tour, fired a 3-under-par 68 — the only golfer to break par in the third round — and moved 4 strokes behind Trevino and Townsend with a 219 total. He is in fifth place.

Halldorson's round included four birdies and an eagle-two on the 441-yard 18th hole.

He became only the sixth player in three days to break part at the National.

"If you make a bogey here it doesn't upset you because a lot of people are doing the same thing," said Trevino, three-time winner of the Canadian Open.

Borg Marches Toward Title

NEW YORK (AP) — Top-seeded Bjorn Borg and second-seeded Martina Navratilova won quickly, while No.4 Vitas Gerulaitis and No.6 Guillermo Vilas struggled for their victories Saturday in the third round of the U.S. Open Tennis Championships.

No.4 Virginia Wade and No.9 Billie Jean King also won their third rounders.

Later Victor Pecci of Paraguay, the eighth seed, fell to South African Johan Kriek 6-3, 6-2, 6-0. Pecci became the highest-ranked man to be ousted, joining No. 12 Wojtek Fibak of Poland, No.15 Adriano Panatta of Italy and No. 16 John Alexander of Australia on the sidelines.

Kriek, 21, made it to the quarterfinals here last year, where he lost to Gerulaitis. He is in the same quarter of the draw as Gerulaitis this year, too.

Borg, the four-time Wimbledon champion continued his powerful drive to a first U.S. title by rolling past Chile's Jaime Fillol 6-0, 6-3, 6-1.

Navratilova, who's won Wimbledon the last two years but never won here, took less than an hour to eliminate American Caroline Stoll 6-3, 6-0.

She was bothered at first by Stoll's unusual topspin style, but quickly adjusted her own flat serve-and-volley game to accommodate Stoll's efforts to push her back.

Navratilova said she also had to cope with a headache. "I think I'll have a beer and maybe it'll go away," she said later.

Vilas, the 1977 Open champion, took three hours and 40 minutes, growing steadily more aggressive and beat American Erik Van Dillen 2-6, 7-5, 6-7, 6-2, 6-1.

Gerulaitis, who hopes to meet Borg in the semifinals, had a tougher time against former U.S. Open champ Stan Smith. In one of the finest matches of the tournament, Gerulaitis won 7-6, 7-6, 6-3. Gerulaitis won the first-set tiebreaker 7-4, but had to go to 9-7 to win the second.

Smith said he lost some steam in the tiebreakers, and Gerulaitis went up 4-0, before Smith broke back in the fifth game. But his early run in the set was all Gerulaitis needed. He served the final game of the match at love.

Wade, the Briton who won Wimbledon in 1977, turned back 21-year-old American Diane Morrison 6-1, 7-6.

King, the American who made her tennis debut in the U.S. championships 20 years ago, beat Stacy Margolin 6-3, 6-3.

Seventh-seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia was upset by American Kathy May Teacher, 7-5, 6-2. No. 12 Regina Marsikova of Czechoslovakia got by American Barbara Jordan 4-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Borg was scarcely tested against Fillol, the gentlemanly president of the Association of Tennis Professionals, which is the male players union. Fillol, whose world ranking dropped from 20 to 144 in the last year, continually made unforced errors.

"I've never seen Jaime play as badly as he did today," Borg said.

Borg has lost only 11 games in his matches here.

"I've had three very easy matches, so it's very difficult to say how well I'm playing. But I'm feelings very comfortable," said Borg, who has been stymied by injuries in this tournament the past three years.

Dick Stockton, a former top 10 player, beat Keith Richardson 7-6, 6-3, 6-3, so will meet Borg in the fourth round.

Vilas, who is in the other half, with Jimmy Connors and John McEnroe, appeared to be in big trouble against Van Dillen's serve-and-volley assault. After dropping the first set, he was 2-5 down in the next before winning five games in a row. In the 11th game, he broke at love by passing Van Dillen four times.

Van Dillen toughed it out in the third set. He took the tiebreaker 7-4, winning the last four points.

But Vilas, known for his heavy topspin game and love of the baseline — a style more suited to clay than the hard, fast courts here, became unusually aggressive.

He took a 3-0 lead in the fourth set before Van Dillen came alive again and held serve. Each broke at love in the sixth and seventh games, but Vilas took the next game and set, breaking at 30 with a forehand volley down the line.

Winning Style

Seattle Nips Toronto, 3-2

TORONTO (AP) — Willie Horton doubled home the winning run in the 10th inning and Rick Honeycutt scattered nine hits to give the Seattle Mariners a 3-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays Saturday. Seattle had tied the game in the ninth on Horton's solo home run, his 26th of the year, and Tom Paciorek's RBI double. Julio Cruz singled with one out in the Seattle 10th and moved to second on a ground-out. Bruce Bochte then drew an intentional walk, bringing up Horton, who doubled off the left-field fence. Tom Buskey, 6-6, took the loss in relief of Toronto starter Phil Huffman. Huffman had held the Mariners scoreless until the ninth, striking out two and walking none. Honeycutt, 10-9, registered his sixth complete game, striking out two and walking two.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Kansas City Royals spotted New York five runs in the first inning and then stormed back to beat the Yankees 9-8 Saturday as George Brett and Al Cowens hit two-run homers and Hal McRae drove in three runs with a pair of singles.

Winner Al Hrabosky, 8-4, took over for starter Rich Gale with the bases loaded and none out in the first inning, and the Yankees scored five times on a pair of grounders, Graig Nettles' RBI single and Jim Spencer's two-run homer.

Williamston Tops Ayden-Grifton, 20-0

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer
LITTLEFIELD — Led by an overwhelming defense which limited Ayden-Grifton to 71 yards total offense, the Williamston Tigers defeated a younger and more inexperienced Charger squad, 20-0, Friday night.

The Tigers, who won their first opening season game in three years, moved erratically in scoring touchdowns in the second, third and fourth quarters. Despite the victory, Williamston Coach Harold Robinson was not pleased. "I don't feel our offense moved the ball very well at all, especially in the first half," Robinson said afterward. "We just couldn't get anything generated in the first half."

"I hope it was just first game jitters. At least now we know what to work on in practice," he said, adding he did feel his defense played well, especially in the second half. Charger Coach Dixon Sauls, although disappointed with the opening game loss, was encouraged by his team's play. "I thought our players didn't give up tonight. We just had some unlucky breaks — we fumbled; we had our troubles with the kicking game and we had penalties that hurt us," Sauls said.

"I think Williamston's size and experience, though, really tells the story of the game," he added. After a lackluster first quarter in which neither team moved the ball, the Tigers recovered a Charger fumble early in the second quarter on the Ayden-Grifton 11-yard line. Three plays later, Tiger halfback Harry Beachum scored the first of two touchdowns, this one on a six-yard run. Allen Peaks added the extra point.

Early in the second half, following an Ayden-Grifton punt of only 27 yards, the Tigers moved from the Chargers' 40 in eight plays for their second score. Beachum again got the touchdown, this time on a nineyard run. Peaks added the point after.

Following the Tigers' kickoff, Ayden-Grifton mounted its lone threat of the night, moving from its own 36 to the Williamston 6 before losing the ball on a fumble. The drive of 12 plays was aided by three 15-yard penalties against the Tigers.

Down on the six, the Chargers sent fullback Billy Holland and halfback Calvin Ellison into the middle three consecutive times. The Williamston defense turned the Chargers away, pushing them back to the 18. On the third running play Holland, who gained 61 yards rushing, fumbled, and the Tigers recovered to the end the threat. "I'm not sure we could of come on if we had scored then," Sauls said. "Sure, it would have pumped our kids up some, but Williamston's size and experience was a little too much for us. But I might have been wrong, you can't tell."

Late in the fourth quarter, with Williamston safely ahead, 14-0, the Tigers sent in reserve quarterback Jim Lilley. Lilley, replacing starter Keith Clark, began to throw the ball, "to loosen the defense up," according to Robinson. With less than four minutes to go, Lilley completed a 15-yard pass to Vincent Peele on the Chargers' three-yard line. After refusing a pass interference call on the play, the Tigers scored on the next snap, with reserve halfback Vance Allen running it over. The extra point try failed. "We were trying to loosen them up. They had been jumping around from a 6-2, stacking the line, so we decided to pass," Robinson said. "They were jamming the middle on us."

Rose, DHC Postponed

Heavy late afternoon rains Friday forced the postponement of two area high school football games. Rose High School's opening game in Ficklen Stadium against Kinston was washed out, as was D.H. Conley's home opener against West Craven. Both games were rescheduled for Monday night. Rose will face Kinston in a 7:30 p.m. game at Ficklen Stadium, while Conley entertains West Craven with an 8 p.m. kickoff set.

Roanoke Rolls Past Belhaven

BELHAVEN — Anthony Latham caught just three passes in Roanoke High School's first football game of the season Friday night, but all three went for touchdowns as he led the Redskins to a 34-8 shellacking of Belhaven. Latham finished up the scoring in the final quarter, running in from eight yards out. Belhaven's only touchdown came late in the game when Jeffrey Spencer scored on a four-yard run. The Redskins open their home slate next Friday, playing host to Ayden-Grifton.

Gumberry Wins 1st Game Ever, 22-0

GUMBERRY, N.C. (AP) — Gumberry High School broke its 59-game losing streak Friday night, winning its first game since the school began playing football in 1972. The Gumberry Lions rolled to a 22-0 victory over the Eastman High School Kodiaks in their season opener. "These players really showed a lot of spirit and a lot of self respect," said Gumberry coach Harold Grizzard. "They've taken a lot of ridicule in the past and I was glad to see that they could bounce back like they did."

Gumberry, a small school located in rural Northhampton County near the Virginia boarder, won the game before an unusually large crowd of 200 spectators. The Lions dominated the first quarter but failed to score, then got on the board with a pair of scoring runs by Gerald Jeffries. With a 16-0 halftime lead, anticipation of the historic event grew on the sidelines. Eastman coach Bruce Harris credited Grizzard, who returned as Gumberry coach after a six-year absence, with "doing a hell of a job."

Greene Central Rips S. Lenoir

SNOW HILL — Greene Central's Rams opened up their 1979 football season with a 20-7 victory over South Lenoir High School Friday night. Twice, the Rams scored on big plays to put the game away, scoring once on a long interception return, and then late in the game on a long run from scrimmage. Jeff Scott put the Rams on the scoreboard in the first period with the interception. He hauled it in, and raced 64 yards to the end zone. Donald Shaw added an extra point kick and the Rams held a 7-0 lead. Greene Central picked up its other first half score in the mid-portion of the second quarter. Greg Holmes pulled in a 13-yard pass from David Braswell for the touchdown, and Shaw again obliged with the PAT kick and a 14-0 lead.

South Lenoir broke its scoring drought with a touchdown late in the half. Gerald Houston took the ball over from the six and Mark Kennedy kicked the extra point, making it 14-7 at the half. After a scoreless third period, Greene Central got the only score of the second half, as Chris Daniels broke loose for a 64-yard scoring romp. This time, the PAT try failed, leaving it at 20-7. Melvin Bynum paced the Ram offense with 95 yards in 22 carries. Nose guard Shaw, end Ollie Dancy, linebacker Scott and tackle Glenn Rowe paced the defensive attack. The Blue Devils got off another late scoring drive, but it was blunted by a pass interception, the last of four picked off by the Ram defense, this one inside the 20.

Full Team Fielded For University Games

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States has sent a full team of about 330 student-athletes to the multinational X World University Games that officially begin a 12-day run in nine sports along with opening ceremonies Sunday. The competition actually began last week. Due to the enormous number of teams involved, it was necessary to open the eight-group soccer tournament early. The Americans were tied by Lesotho and lost to Romania in their first two starts and were on the verge of elimination. U.S. prospects in other sports were uncertain, though a spokesman for the American delegation said, "We expect to do pretty well." "It's awfully hard to say just how strong our teams may be," he said. "In many cases, they are individuals who have been brought together to serve as a team. We really don't know how well they'll function together."

Among the standouts are sprinter Harvey Glange, a gold medal winner in the Pan Am Games, and hurdler James Walker. The women's team has Julie Brown, winner of three silver medals in the Pan Am Games; sprinter Pat Jackson and Jan Merrill, the Pan Am 3,000-meter winner. The men's basketball team is built around center Kevin McHale of Minnesota, starter on the gold medal Pan Am team.

Elizabeth City St. Loses

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Sophomore running back Larry Kelly scored on a 1-yard run with 5:35 left in the first half and ran for a two-point conversion to give Central State an 8-0 victory over Elizabeth City State Saturday afternoon in the third annual Ohio Shrine Classic at Dayton's Welcome Stadium. The score completed a six-play, 52-yard drive which was the only sustained offensive by either team on the wet turf.

Kelly's touchdown came immediately after junior quarterback Jeff Postell and junior split end Tyrone Coverson connected on a 32-yard pass play which put the ball a yard away from pay dirt. The game was the first of the season for both teams.

Gymnastic Classes

The Children's Gymnastics Instruction Program at East Carolina University will hold registration for the fall session of classes this week. Registration will be held on Wednesday and Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m. in the gymnastics gym of Christenberry Memorial Gymnasium. Wednesday night, 6 to 10-year-olds will register, and Thursday, 11 to 16-year-olds will register. Classes begin on Monday, September 10 at 6:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. and will be held nightly Monday through Thursday for 12 weeks. Children may attend one class per week, and the cost for the 12-week session is $35 per child. Jon Rose, the new East Carolina gymnastics coach, will be in overall charge of the program, assisted by Louise Anderson, a graduate student with six years of teaching and coaching experience. The majority of the staff will consist of physical education majors from the Skills and Methods of Gymnastics class at the university.

Coach Killed By Lightning

ONEONTA, Ala. (AP) — A 27-year-old assistant football coach at nearby Cleveland High School was struck and killed by lightning at football practice. Six players were injured, none seriously. A Blount County Sheriff's Department spokesman said a moderate thunderstorm was over the area Friday afternoon when the lightning struck, killing assistant coach Michael Dixon of Cleveland. "I was right there next to him," said Coach Joe Hazelrig. "We were on the practice field working on extra points and field goals."

Angels Bounce Back, Reclaim First

By HERSCHEL NISSENSEN
AP Sports Writer

Reports of the California Angels' demise are greatly exaggerated.

Not only aren't the Angels dead, but they're back in first place in the American League West after surrendering the top spot for one day to the Kansas City Royals.

The Angels, who had dropped five games in a row, had to overcome a 4-0 deficit and then blew an 8-4 lead before edging the Cleveland Indians 9-8 on Brian Downing's RBI single in the ninth inning.

That vaulted them back atop the West Division by a half-game over the Royals, who lost to the New York Yankees 7-3. Elsewhere, the Minnesota Twins beat the Baltimore Orioles 3-1, the Chicago White Sox trimmed the Milwaukee Brewers 6-1, the Boston Red Sox outslugged the Texas Rangers 9-6, the Oakland A's downed the Detroit Tigers 5-3 and the Toronto Blue Jays nipped the Seattle Mariners 5-4 in 11 innings.

With two out in the Angels' ninth, Don Baylor singled off Paul Reuschel, Sid Monge walked Willie Aikens and Downing delivered his third hit of the game to score Baylor.

After falling behind 4-0, the Angels scored twice in the sixth inning, once in the seventh and then erupted for five in the eighth as Aikens and Bobby Grich slugged two-run homers and Jim Anderson added a solo shot.

"We're an explosive club," said Manager Jim Fregosi. "When you're four runs down in the sixth and come back, it shows you're never out of a ballgame. The clutch performances tonight — that's what a pennant race is all about."

Yankees 7, Royals 3
Tommy John won his 18th game of the season with eighth-inning help from Rich Gossage, and Reggie Jackson drove in four runs with his 22nd homer.

and a single. Jackson's two-run homer capped a three-run first inning and his two-run single capped a three-run fifth.
Twins 3, Orioles 1
Minnesota scored two runs on wild pitches by Baltimore's Dennis Martinez and Ken Landreaux hit a tie-breaking home run in the sixth inning as Minnesota ended the Orioles' four-game winning streak. After Landreaux hit his home run to give Minnesota a 2-1 lead, Dave Edwards walked, took third on a single by Mike Cabbage and scored when Martinez uncorked the second of his three wild pitches.

White Sox 6, Brewers 1
Chet Lemon hit a pair of homers and drove in four runs and Jim Morrison hit a home run and a sacrifice fly to back the five-hit pitching of rookie Steve Trout. The loss was only the fifth in the last 20 games for the Brewers but kept them eight games behind Baltimore in the AL East.

Red Sox 9, Rangers 6
Tom Poquette belted a three-run homer and Carl Yastrzemski moved closer to the 3,000-hit mark with a two-run shot as Boston won for only the third time in 11 games. Poquette capped a four-run second inning with his second homer of the season and Yastrzemski hiked the lead to 6-0 in the fourth with his 21st.

A's 5, Tigers 3
Dave Revering collected three hits and drove in a pair of runs and rookie Brian Kingman posted his second victory over Detroit in 10 days as Oakland ended the Tigers' six-game winning streak. The A's snapped a 3-3 deadlock in the sixth inning when Rickey Henderson bounced into a double play with the bases loaded. Revering doubled home Oakland's first run in the first inning and delivered an RBI single in the third.

Blue Jays 5, Mariners 4
Craig Kusick, who entered the game as a defensive replacement in the ninth inning, hit his fifth home run with one out in the bottom of the 11th to give Toronto its victory. The Blue Jays trailed 3-0 and 4-3 but John Mayberry brought them from behind both times with a three-run homer in the fourth inning and an RBI single in the eighth.

Insolo Captures Western Race

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Jimmy Insolo of Mission Hills, Calif., made up a deficit of one-half lap after a pit stop for new tires to capture a 100-lap NASCAR West stock car race Friday night, edging hometown driver Kirk Rogers at the finish.

Insolo, driving a Pontiac, is defending champion in the Winston West Grand National series.

Western point leader Tim Williamson of Seaside, Calif., spun out on the first lap, and finished seventh more than a full lap behind. He has 50 points.

Insolo moved into a tie for second at 549 points with Bill Schmitt of Redding, Calif., who also was more than a lap behind Insolo while finishing sixth Friday night.

When Insolo stopped for new tires during a yellow flag of the 78th lap, Rick O'Dell of Courtney Island, B.C., took the lead briefly. But O'Dell finished after he also had to make a tire change.

Jackie Kuper of Roy, Wash., was fourth and Roy Smith of Victoria, B.C., wound up fifth.

Unhappy Philadelphia Bounce Back To Win With New Manager

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

The Philadelphia Phillies are not happy winners.

Before Friday, they had lost five straight games. The, before the game, Dann Ozark, Phillies' manager since 1973, was replaced by Dallas Green.

"I hated to see it happen," said Philadelphia slugger Mike Schmidt. "The team realizes we're at fault, not the manager. It's a sad situation."

Green, named interim manager, is a former pitcher, coach and manager in the Phillies organization. Before he replaced Ozark on Friday, he was director of minor leagues and scouting.

"I feel my job is to get the team to rededicate themselves to good hard-nosed baseball, to show Philadelphia fans we're not bad," Green said. "Tonight's news hit them (the players) hard. They like Danny, but they're pros and they'll come out of it."

In other NL games Friday, St. Louis needed 15 innings to edge San Diego 7-6, Montreal slipped by Cincinnati 8-7 in 10 innings, Houston blanked the New York Mets 2-0, Los Angeles stopped the Chicago Cubs 6-4 and Pittsburgh downed San Francisco 6-4.

It was the Atlanta Braves who took the brunt of the Phils' wrath. Reliever Doug Bird, getting a rare starting opportunity, threw a five-hitter and Schmidt slammed his 41st homer of the season as the Phillies grabbed a rain-shortened 6-2 victory over the Braves. The game was called after 5½ innings.

Cardinals 8, Padres 7, 15 innings
Jerry Mumphy singled and scored on a double by Keith Hernandez in the 15th inning to give St. Louis its victory. It was Hernandez' third hit of the night.

Dan O'Brien, 1-0, the Cards' seventh pitcher of the night, worked the final two innings to earn his first major league victory.

Expos 8, Reds 7, 10 innings
Pinch-hitter Rodney Scott delivered a run-scoring single in the bottom of the 10th inning to boost Montreal over Cincinnati. "I just got lucky, I guess," said Scott, who hit for winning pitcher Woody Fryman, 3-5, with Larry Parrish on second after a leadoff double. "I've seen (loser Tom) Hume in the minor leagues. He's going to be around the plate. You just have to go up there and swing."

Astros 2, Mets 0
Ken Forsch, pitching for the first time since Aug. 7, allowed only one hit and retired 14 straight batters over the first five innings to lead Houston over New York.

Forsch, 9-6, who had been sidelined with a sore shoulder, gave up a single to Frank Taveras in the first inning and retired the next 14 Mets before leaving for a pinch-hitter in the fifth.

Dodgers 6, Cubs 4
Derrel Thomas slammed two home runs and Dave Lopes and Steve Garvey added one each as Los Angeles downed Chicago to snap a three-game losing streak.

Pirates 6, Giants 4
Relief pitcher Enrique Romo snuffed out a San Francisco rally in the sixth inning by retiring pinch-hitter Willie McCovey with two runners on base, saving the victory for starter Don Robinson as Pittsburgh beat the Giants.

Robinson, 7-6, had a 5-0 lead until Mike Ivie led off the sixth with a homer. Darrell Evans walked, Terry Whitfield singled and Roger Metzger tripled.

Blue Devils Scrimmage

DURHAM, N.C. (UPI) — Duke University's offensive and defensive teams both showed they can come up with the big play during a full scrimmage Saturday.

The defense dominated the first half, holding the first and second team offenses to one field goal. Freshman safety Darrell Deaton had an interception and sophomore cornerback Dennis Tabron blocked a field goal.

In the second half, the Blue Devils offense broke loose. Senior halfback Greg Rhett scampered 57 yards after taking a pitchout from freshman quarterback Brent Clinkscale and split end Marvin Brown crossed the goal line on a 65-yard pass from quarterback Craig Browning. Rookie running back Greg Boone also broke free for several long runs.

Pacers To Sign Lady?

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indiana Pacers will announce the signing of the National Basketball Association's first woman player on Wednesday. The Indianapolis News reported Saturday.

Ann Meyers, a four-time All-American guard at UCLA and the sister of Milwaukee Bucks forward Dave Meyers, was named by the newspaper as the player the Pacers will sign.

Bob Leonard, Indiana's coach-general manager, would not confirm the signing but the News reports he said, "There's talk of it."

Meyers, 24, was a member of the U.S. Olympic team that won a silver medal at Montreal in 1976. She was the first woman ever given a basketball scholarship at UCLA.

Favored Pack Won't Be Easy Winner

By DICK BRINSTER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — While North Carolina State is the overwhelming choice to capture the Atlantic Coast Conference football crown, few believe the Wolfpack will win without being severely tested. The consensus among writers and coaches has been that the conference is better balanced as it enters its 27th season than it was one year ago. In 1978, Clemson beat Maryland to win the title in what essentially was a two-team race. Each had disposed of N.C. State at mid-season.

The others were not a factor, although North Carolina extended both Clemson and Maryland before losing close games. N.C. State, soundly beaten by the leaders, easily defeated UNC. That was 1978, a season in which Clemson won every conference game while Virginia, which finished last, did not win any. There was not a single reversal. Each team defeated those below it in the standings and lost to those above it. With judgment day nearly three months away, one thing is clear: N.C. State will be forced to defeat its primary challengers — Clemson, Maryland and UNC — on three consecutive Saturdays in October to give itself a commanding lead. No fewer than five of the league's eight teams received first-place votes in a preseason poll of the media. N.C. State received 39 of 70 votes with Maryland (17), UNC (7), Clemson (6) and Virginia (1) also being named. In a separate poll, five of the league's head coaches tabbed N.C. State while two named UNC. And Jerry Claiborne, whose Maryland Terrapins finished second in the writers' poll and third in the coaches' poll, believes the defending champion Clemson Tigers should not be written off despite depletion through graduation. While Clemson must pass its share of tests to stamp itself a solid contender, Coach Danny Ford's Tigers do own a distinct schedule advantage. Clemson's games against Maryland, N.C. State and UNC are spread throughout the season and preceded by games against opponents the Tigers should be able to handle.

Maryland must play Kentucky and Penn State in succession before it meets N.C. State. UNC plays N.C. State, non-conference foe East Carolina, Maryland and Clemson in a block of four weeks. But N.C. State has the most difficult assignment of all. Prior to three weeks of fury against the other contenders, Bo Rein's Wolfpack plays no lesser an opponent than Auburn on the road. Should the Pack still be in search of a crown, the final stumbling block would be Duke at Durham on Nov. 17. Sandwiched between the Oct. 27 showdown at Clemson and the Duke game are tough South Carolina and Penn State. N.C. State is in no position to back into a title. It will earn whatever it wins.

Perhaps the keys to the kingdom are held by running back Billy Ray Vickers and quarterback Scott Smith. Vickers, who rushed for an even 600 yards last season, must take up a portion of the slack left by the graduation of All-America back Ted Brown. Smith accounted for 1,045 yards in total offense last season, the most of any returning ACC player. He was intercepted 11 times in just 101 passing attempts and failed to throw a touchdown pass all season, however.

Moving the ball on the ground is the Pack's forte. Its offense line is anchored by All-America center Jim Ritcher with plenty of help from linemen Chuck Stone and Chris Dieterich. The receiving corps is in good hands with tight end Lin Dawson and wide receiver Mike Quick. Kicker Nathan Ritter will salvage points when the offense comes up short. He converted on 17 of 19 field goal attempts last season.

Defensively, N.C. State is strongest in the secondary thanks to the play of Woodrow Wilson, Donnie LeGrande, Mike Nall and Ronnie Lee. Joe Hanna is the top linebacker while Simon Gumpston leads the charge of the front wall. North Carolina, a disappointment last season under new coach Dick Crum, hopes to rebound on the strength of its running game. Amos Lawrence, who gained 1,043 yards, surpassing the 1,000-yard mark for the second straight year, is the Tar Heels' meal ticket. Quarterback Matt Kupec, who completed 59 percent of his passes in 1978, and fullback Doug Paschal, a fine runner, blocker and receiver, ably supported Lawrence.

Tackle Steve Junkman leads the offense line. Buddy Curry and Darrell Nicholson are two of the better linebackers in the ACC, and defensive back Ricky Barden heads up the secondary. Maryland has had more than its share of problems this pre-season. The most noteworthy was the leg injury that may put All-ACC defensive back Lloyd Burruss on the shelf for the season.

The Terps lost through graduation a fine pair of running backs in Steve Atkins and Alvin Maddox and a productive quarterback in Tim O'Hare. Those areas remain unsettled after running back George Scott flunked out of school and quarterback Mike Tice developed a sore arm. If Claiborne finds someone to throw the ball, the Terps could be very productive through the air, thanks to the talents of tight end Eric Sievers and wingback Jan Carinci. Linemen Jimmy Schaffer and Martin Van Horn should steady the defense.

Clemson may have lost quarterback Steve Fuller and receiver Jerry Butler, but the cupboard is not bare. No fewer than six Tigers were named to the pre-season All-ACC team. Clemson is not ailing in the running back category. Lester Brown gained 1,006 yards last season and Marvin Sims 651. Billy Lott was the early choice as Fuller's replacement, and therein could lie the story of success or failure for Clemson.

Jim Ritcher

Guard Jeff Bostic is a solid performer on the offensive line. Nigerian kicker Obed Ariri made good on 13 of 24 field goal attempts last season.

Tackle Jim Stuckey, line-backer Bubba Brown and deep back Rox Varn stabilize the Tiger defense.

Wake Forest coach John Mackovic is described by Duke counterpart Red Wilson as a man who would "throw the ball all over the place." Mackovic's affection for the air game is no secret, but the Demon Deacons may show a balanced and potentially explosive offense.

Tailback James McDougald, limited to 629 yards rushing last season, still is one of the ACC's best runners. Quarterback David Webber threw for 1,069 yards, more than any returning conference quarterback, but the job belongs to Jay Venuto.

The Deacons have a pair of fine blockers in Syd Kitson and Bill Ard, and the defense is spearheaded by quick nose-guard James Parker.

The dissension that marked Duke's 1978 season has disappeared with the replacement of Mike McGee by Wilson, the successful former Elon coach. Wilson has busied himself with the mental aspects of the game, saying the Blue Devil players must believe in themselves to be successful. Duke will operate with an untested quarterback in Craig Browning with the option to switch to Stanley Driskell. The offense shows limited experience at some positions although guard Bob Riordan is clearly one of the ACC's best linemen.

The defense may be questionable in some areas, but the Blue Devils are exceptionally strong in the secondary with Craig Hoskins, Dennis Tabron, Ed Brown and George Gawdun providing quality and depth. Dick Bestwick will try to get Virginia out of the cellar as he starts his fourth year at the helm of the Cavaliers. Two quality players, defensive lineman Steve Potter, and running back Tommy Vigorito, who gained 800 yards in 1978, will lead the effort.

Sophomore quarterback Todd Kirtley has been given command of the offense, working behind impressive center Brian Musselman. Kirtley will throw to tight end Mike Newhall, among others.

Virginia has dropped Army in favor of James Madison and because of scheduling problems will not meet Wake Forest this season. Richmond replaces the Deacons, and while these changes will have no bearing on the conference race, they could give the Cavs a couple of much-needed victories.

ACC writers have affixed N.C. State alone at the top with North Carolina, Clemson and Maryland at the second plateau and Duke, Virginia and Wake Forest in a three-way battle to avoid last place.

Georgia Tech, the conference's newest member, plays only one conference game and is not eligible to compete. Pepper Rodgers' club is led by sophomore quarterback Mike Kelley.

The predicted order of finish: N.C. State, North Carolina, Clemson, Maryland, Wake Forest, Duke, Virginia.

North Pitt Becoming Factor In Loop

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer
BETHEL — Until last season, the North Pitt Panthers just "couldn't get no respect." Teams were always wanting the Panthers on their schedule, figuring playing North Pitt was an easy win.

The Panthers, coming off their first winning season in the school's nine-year history, are fast erasing such past disrespect and, according to Coach Pat Smith, are rapidly becoming a factor in the Eastern Carolina Conference.

"Used to, teams would look forward to playing us, thinking it would be an easy win," Smith said. "Now, not many teams are going to leave here without a fight."

"Our football program is continuing to get better and better every year. We are beginning to be a factor in the conference. We're getting to the point where although we can't yet compete for the title we're having a say-so in who does win it," he said. Although the Panthers, 6-4 a year ago, 3-4 in the conference, have made tremendous strides in the last few years, Smith believes a conference crown is still a few years away.

"For us to challenge...well, I just can't see us challenging this year," Smith said. "We would need to get an awful lot of breaks to be up there."

"Physically, I just don't think we're capable of competing for the lead this year. I might be wrong though," he said.

The Panthers, who return 13 players from last year's squad, appear to have the nucleus of a fine defensive team, led by all-conference linebacker Victor Evans (5'10", 150), all-area defensive back Carl Knight (5'10", 140) and defensive guards Burnice Jones and Melvin Simmons.

"Victor is the hardest hitter I've ever seen for his size," Smith said. Burnice is a man. He's the strong man on the team, benching 320 pounds."

Both Jones and Simmons will also start at offensive guard. Knight may also see action at split end this season.

Other defensive starters for the Panthers include ends Donald Andrews (5'8", 155), Gordon Dunn (6'1", 170), linebacker Ronnie House (5'9", 150) and deep backs Gentriss Bryant and Derrick Smith.

Top reserves include Jerry Raymond at defensive tackle and Randy Brummel at defensive end.

Offensively, the Panthers, who will run out of a split backfield, will be led by running backs Terry Moore and Tony Pittman.

"Terry is the workhorse of our team," Smith said. "He's the best back we have."

Moore, who runs the 40-yard dash in 4.8 seconds rushed for over 570 yards last season and scored four touchdowns.

"Tony is the hustlingest player we have on the team," Smith said. "He gives a 100 percent all the time."

Handing off to Moore and Pittman will be senior quarterback Greg Langley. Langley (6'3", 160) was given the starting nod following an injury to junior quarterback Bob Hemingway, who had been expected to start this season. Hemingway is expected back in two weeks.

"We don't feel any weaker at quarterback with Greg," Smith said. "In fact, he's a much better passer than Bob."

Up front for the Panthers will be center Mitchell Leggett (5'9", 155), guards Simmons and Jones and tackles Eric Thomas (5'11, 190) and Mike Brown (5'10", 178).

Dunn will start at tight end for the Panthers while Knight, Bryant and Keith Murphy will play split end.

"We're not going to be physically strong enough up front to overpower anyone," Smith said. "We're going to have to finesse people. We're going to have to make very few mistakes and take advantage of other people's mistakes."

The Panthers open the season Friday night at home against Enfield.

High Speed Laps Run

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Qualifying speeds, led by Bobby Allison's record 154.881 mph, have thus far averaged 151.946 mph for Monday's Labor Day Southern 500.

Twenty-four positions were filled in the first two days of qualifying. The 40-car field was to be completed today with 16 additional qualifiers at Darlington International Speedway's 1 3/8-mile track.

Benny Parsons, in a Chevrolet, led the 12 qualifiers Friday at 153.011 mph to take the 13th starting position.

Bobby Allison and brother Donnie, both of Juyetown, Ala., nailed down the 1-2 positions Thursday, both setting new qualifying records for the Southern 500.

Bobby, driving a Ford Thunderbird, won the pole with 154.881 mph. Donnie, in a Chevrolet, was next with 154.506 mph.

Qualifying Friday in addition to Parsons were:

Full NFL Slate Set Today

By The Associated Press

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers with a winning record — the best record in the National Football League? Aw, c'mon now!

It's not so farfetched, considering they're starting their season before anyone else in the NFL, except for the crippled Detroit Lions.

The Bucs, who set a record for futility in their first season three years ago by losing all 14 games, inched up to a ghastly 2-12 the next year, then became competitive last year with a 5-11 mark, get underway at home last night as slender favorites.

The Lions, who looked so impressive in the latter stages of the 1978 season and had been picked by many to win the National Conference's Central Division title in 1979, were dealt a severe blow eight nights ago when starting quarterback Gary Danielson underwent surgery to repair a knee damaged in an exhibition loss to Baltimore.

Ironically, a year ago it was the Colts' quarterback, Bert Jones, who was injured in a preseason game, against the Lions. The Colts' season went downhill from then on. Detroit hopes this year will be different. The Lions are expected to start Joe Reed with rookie Jeff Komlo and late acquisition Scott Hunter in reserve.

Today's games are San Francisco at Minnesota, Cincinnati at Denver, Oakland at Los Angeles, Houston at Washington, Miami at Buffalo, the New York Giants at Philadelphia, Atlanta at New Orleans, Dallas at St. Louis, Green Bay at Chicago, Cleveland at the New York Jets, Baltimore at Kansas City and San Diego at Seattle. Monday night it's Pittsburgh at New England.

Phillies Don't Blame Troubles On Ozark

By TOM SALADINO
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Star first baseman Pete Rose, for one, was not willing to blame the Philadelphia Phillies' troubles on Danny Ozark after Ozark was fired Friday as the club's manager.

"I don't give a damn if Sparky Anderson, Miller Huggins, Danny Ozark or Billy Martin were managing this team. We'd still be struggling in fifth place the way we've played," Rose said.

The end for Ozark, who guided the Phillies to three consecutive East Division titles during his seven years at the helm, came as Philadelphia fell 12 1/2 games off the pace of the Pittsburgh Pirates after dropping five straight and eight of nine games.

Dallas Green, a former Phillies pitcher and currently director of minor leagues and scouting for the club, was named interim manager for the final month of the season.

Paul Owens, the director of player personnel, made the announcement at a news conference just prior to the Phillies 6-2 victory Friday night over the Atlanta Braves.

"There's no way it was his fault," said Rose of the 35-year-old Ozark, who was called a "players' manager" by many of the Phillies.

"The gentleman tried everything in his power," said Rose. "He had been very successful during the past seven years, winning three titles which was something no other National League manager had ever done. I have all the respect in the world for him. He tried to get us out of the rut but everything didn't work out."

Owens said he and owner Ruly Carpenter decided to make the change "after two or three days of deliberation. We were disappointed in the way the club has performed the past few weeks and felt that something had to be done."

Green, 45, who had a 20-22 major league record with the Phillies, New York Mets and Washington Senators in the 1960s, said "They asked me to do the job the rest of the year and I agreed to go down on the field and make every effort to get the athletes to believe in themselves and give the Philadelphia baseball fans the kid of effort they deserve."

Ozark said he did not know what his immediate plans would be but Owens indicated the Phillies would welcome him in the organization if he wished to remain.

"I feel disappointed in the way the players performed for me this year. I think I could have gotten more out of them but I couldn't find the answer. That's probably why they made the move," said Ozark, who ranked as senior manager in the league before his ouster.

"It was a shock of course but I can't fault the organization for the way we played. I hope for the best for the ball club. My interest will still be with the players," he said.

Regains Golf Title

AYDEN — After a two-year drought, Dallas Jackson has regained the Ayden Golf and Country Club's golf championship.

Jackson, who won the title in 1975 and 1976, fired a three-round total of 218 to take the title. He and runner-up Glenn Gullede went into the final round tied, and Jackson held only a one-stroke lead coming to the 18th hole.

Gullede, the defending champion from both 1977 and 1978, finished with a bogey and ended up with a 220 total.

In the first flight, Ed Murphy took first place with a 233, while Alan Daughtry was second at 240.

Tom Heath paled the first extra hole in a sudden death to win the second flight. Both Heath and Shelton Everett had 54-hole totals of 242.

Lloyd Foley won the third flight with a 252, beating out Randy Warren, who had a 253. Fred Twitty won the fourth flight, carding a 263, with Willard Moye second at 272.

California 500 Front Has Familiar Look

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP) — The front line in Sunday's $300,000 California 500 Indy-type car race should look most familiar to fans and the man in the middle could do something that hasn't been done.

Al Unser will be seeking his third straight victory in the same race, having won at the Ontario Motor Speedway in both 1977 and 1978.

Others have won the 500 races more times, but not in succession.

A year ago, the veteran from Albuquerque, N.M., won 500s at Indianapolis, Pocono, Pa., and Ontario to become the first to take the Triple Crown of the sport. And he's been the Indy king on three occasions — 1970, 1971 and 1978.

Unser is just learning intricacies of Jim Hall's new Chaparral-Cosworth machine but still only current Indy champion Rick Mears drove a faster time in the qualifying.

Five Dead In N.C. Accidents

YADKINVILLE, N.C. (UPI) — Four members of a Thomasville family and a Kernersville truck driver were killed in a car-truck head-on collision, the highway patrol said Saturday.

The victims were identified as Charles Kenneth Parrish, 46; his wife Mary Lou Lytton Parrish, 39; a daughter, Wendy Lynn Lytton, 7; and Eric Scott Lytton, 10. Katie Lee Lytton, 5, was listed in critical condition Saturday in the intensive care unit at Forsyth Memorial Hospital in Winston-Salem. Authorities identified the truck driver as James Kenneth Freeman, 27.

The accident occurred about 10:30 p.m. Friday on U.S. 421 two miles east of the Yadkinville city limits when a car carrying the Thomasville family crossed the centerline of the road and hit Freeman's tractor trailer truck head on.

Parrish, his wife Mary, Wendy Lytton and Freeman were killed instantly. Eric Lytton died en route to a Winston-Salem hospital.

The highway patrol said it has not yet determined what caused the car to cross the centerline or who was driving.

It took rescue workers seven hours to free the bodies from the wreckage.

In another Labor Day weekend fatality, Christine Greene, 22, of Forest City was killed early Saturday when the car in which she was riding hit four parked cars in Rutherford County.

News Briefs

Second Default For Cleveland

CLEVELAND (AP) — Battered Cleveland has defaulted again — the second time in less than a year — but the latest financial setback caused no widespread commotion or loss of services in the Lake Erie port city of 600,000.

It did make political waves, however.

Candidates hoping to unseat Mayor Dennis J. Kucinich said that if they had been in office, the city would not have had to default, as it did, at midnight Friday on $3.3 million borrowed from the city's waterworks contingency fund.

Kucinich, seeking a second term this fall, blamed his political opponents for trying to embarrass him by leaving the city without the money to pay its bills.

Technically, the latest default means only that the city owes itself funds it does not have. And in contrast to the earlier default, there were no frantic meetings Friday night, payrolls are being met, and municipal services are continuing without interruption.

Over 1,000 Recruiters Suspected

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — More than 1,000 recruiters from all the armed services are suspected of illegally coaching enlistees on their military entrance examinations, the Charlotte News reported today.

The News, in a copyright story, said the number of recruiters suspected was given in an Aug. 14 report by the Defense Department's military enlistment processing command, which screens all enlistments. The figure represents about 8 percent of recruiters for the four branches of the military.

The report indicates a widening of the scandal in which Army recruiters allegedly acted improperly in their recruitment practices. Officials have said disciplinary action may be meted out in most of the Army's 57 recruiting districts across the nation.

Need Funds To Check Crime

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A state analyst told the Governor's Crime Control Commission it will take more than increased funds to check North Carolina's rising crime rate.

"The influence of adding more law enforcement officers is rather marginal, assuming they are engaging in traditional enforcement activities," said David E. Jones, a criminal justice planner with the crime control division of the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

"Arresting people and locking them up will not reduce crime as much as concentrating on certain socio-economic factors," Jones told the commission, which met in Raleigh Friday.

Jones listed those factors as proportion of the population between the ages of 15 and 24, degree of urbanization, per capita income and the unemployment rate.

Protestors Rounded Up

PEKING (AP) — The government today rounded up 30 of the 50 ragged demonstrators who have been staging an on-again-off-again sit-in outside China's government headquarters since Tuesday.

The demonstrators, who are seeking jobs, food and redress of old wrongs, were driven away in two buses.

Twenty others remained behind to continue their vigil at the gates of the Chungnanhai government offices in hopes of meeting with Premier Hua Guofeng (Hua Kuo-feng) and Senior Deputy Premier Deng Xiaoping (Teng Hsiao-ping).

Police angrily ordered reporters away from the area today and tried to block picture-taking.

Tax Returns Public, By Error

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State revenue officials released corporate income tax returns of 85 businesses to Northampton County officials in an apparent accidental violation of the state Secrecy Act.

County Tax Supervisor Nicholas E. Lassiter said Friday he had requested and received the returns in four groups during January and February to compare county property tax listings with property information the businesses supplied the state.

The release of information from tax returns concerning a company's depreciable assets, land and inventory is permitted by state law. But release of information concerning corporate income or the amount of income tax paid is prohibited by the Secrecy Act.

At 26, Buys Radio Station

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Mutter D. Evans believes in working her way up from the bottom.

Five years ago, she started parttime work as a news reporter for Winston-Salem radio station WAAA while she was a student at Wake Forest University.

Friday, Ms. Evans, 26, announced that she had bought the station from Media Broadcasting Corp. for $1.04 million. That makes Ms. Evans the first black woman in the United States to own a radio station, according to Robert E. Brown, president of Media Broadcasting.

She is also general manager of WAAA and is an executive vice president of Media Broadcasting.

"I knew pretty early in life what I wanted to go into," she said. "I was always eager to learn and as opportunities presented themselves, I took them."

After college, Ms. Evans became a full-time member of the WAAA staff, working as news and public affairs director, sales manager, program manager and operations manager.

Those experiences prepared her for her present duties. She and Brown made an agreement that "I would have the right to exercise an option to purchase the station at some time."

"I had no way of knowing that I would be exercising that option so soon," she said.

She arranged for financing through loans from the Greensboro National Bank and Forsyth Bank and Trust Co., with help from the U.S. Small Business Administration.

She filed an application to transfer ownership of the broadcast license Friday with the Federal Communications Commission in Washington.

The 1,000-watt station has been on the air 29 years and has always geared itself to the black community.

Hobby Co. Cited

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A company headed by state AFL-CIO president Wilbur Hobby has made possible questionable expenditures of CETA funds, according to a statement issued Friday by the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

The statement said the department had uncovered the questionable spending and "some poor bookkeeping procedures" by Precision Graphics Inc. of Raleigh.

The state AFL-CIO, Precision Graphics and a second firm headed by Hobby have contracts for more than $1 million in job training awarded by NRCD, which is headed by Secretary Howard Lee, and the Department of Labor.

Questions about the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act contract with Hobby's companies were raised in a preliminary review by the Independent Monitoring Unit, an arm of the NRCD.

The report charges that Precision "does not have a satisfactory bookkeeping system to support receipts and disbursements under this contract." The report is signed by the monitoring unit's head, Benjamin Carraway.

The contract is for $129,429 to train 40 keypunch operators. Precision Graphics officials blame the lack of documentation on the NRCD's denial of a request for a full-time bookkeeper under the contract, the department said.

A Brief History Of Killer Hurricanes

By DERELLE SMITH III
MIAMI (UPI) — Black Sunday began 51 years ago with ebony clouds, slick with rain, scudding in from the east over Lake Okeechobee — pushed by an awesome, unheralded monster of a hurricane. In just one hour, 1,838 lakeshore residents died.

The storm surge, which rose at one inch per minute, bowled over an earthen dam at the lake and swept across the sugar cane fields and loam-rich farm lands of South Florida. Winds were estimated at 150 miles an hour — the gauges registered 96 mph before blowing away. Damage was only $26 million — not very much in the hierarchy of the tropical maulers — but the high death toll made the 1928 hurricane rank in the 10 worst of the last 100 years.

Florida lies right along "hurricane alley" and takes much of the punishment from the hurricanes that spring up in the tropics and the Gulf. So does Texas, where the worst hurricane in American history hit just after the turn of the century.

A wall of water driven by the Sept. 8, 1900, hurricane crushed Galveston, a city of 20,000. The tide rose more than 15 feet and swept away half the houses, and 6,000 persons.

"My residence went down with about fifty persons who had sought it for safety," said Galveston Weather Bureau chief Dr. I.M. Cline, "and all but eighteen were hurled into eternity ... we drifted for three hours, landing 300 yards from where we started."

"There were two hours that we did not see a house nor any person, and from the swell we inferred that we were drifting to sea. While we were drifting we had to protect ourselves from the flying timbers by holding planks between us and the wind."

In the awesome Miami hurricane of 1926 — the last major storm to hit Miami — the eye moved over Miami Beach. Its 138 mile-an-hour winds and flood tides did $112 million in damages and left 243 killed, and triggered the Great Depression in Florida, three years before the Wall Street crash.

The most violent hurricane in Florida history left a path of destruction only 40 miles wide across the Florida Keys. The Sept. 2, 1935, hurricane — which came to be known as the "Labor Day Hurricane" — may have had swirling winds of 200 miles an hour or more, qualifying it as one of the most intense this century.

It fell in a class by itself for barometric readings with a well-authenticated minimum pressure reading of 26.35 — more than 1.26 inches of mercury lower than the 1926 Miami reading.

When the winds were stilled, 408 lay dead in the Keys and there was $46 million in damages.

Its rival, Camille — the only other hurricane this century rated as a Class 5 on the 1-to-5 intensity scale — smacked headon into Mississippi and Louisiana. Camille's 200 mile-an-hour winds pushed a storm surge of 24.2 feet ahead of it.

The total death toll from Camille was more than 300 and the damage climbed to a startling $1.4 billion.

Winds of 200 mph were recorded at Savannah Beach, Ga., in 1893 when 3,000 persons died and $18 million in damages were reported. In 1909 a hurricane bearing 145 mile-an-hour winds ripped through Mississippi and Louisiana and killed 350.

The hurricane that swept Key West with 126 mph winds Sept. 9, 1919, killed 300, then soared across the Gulf to Texas, killing 500 at Corpus Christi and wreaking $22.7 million in damages.

On the Atlantic coast, a hurricane, which came to be called the "Long Island Express" because of its sudden movement up the New England coast with forward speeds of up to 70 miles an hour, struck on Sept. 21, 1938. Sustained winds of 136 miles an hour shot out from the center and gusts of 183 mph were recorded.

Rhode Island was hardest hit with 380 deaths and $125 million in damages reported. When it was all over the total Connecticut-to-Maine toll was about 600 people killed and about $400 million in damages.

David nearly became the century's third Class 5 hurricane Thursday as it spun near Puerto Rico in the steamy Caribbean — it had only to drop a fraction of an inch of mercury to qualify. Its future path will determine whether Hurricane David will replace one of these 10 as the worst during the past 100 years.

Cherokees Want Dog Races

CHEROKEE, N.C. (AP) — A proposal by the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians to build a dog-racing track may draw fire from the state attorney general's office.

The Cherokees plan to use profits from the track to bolster their tribal treasury, but gambling on dog racing is illegal in North Carolina.

The Cherokees passed a resolution call for a study on building the track in early July at the request of the Cherokee Indian Rescue Squad.

Tribal attorney Ben Bridgers is conducting legal research on the issue for a report to the tribal council in two weeks.

The dog track would be sponsored by the rescue squad, which would use most of the profits for its operation. Excess profits would go into the tribal fund.

"We're at a look-see stage right now," Bridgers said. "We want to keep a low profile until we see what's going on."

He said the idea may draw a negative response from the state, but he said it may be approved by federal authorities.

Jeff Muskrat, superintendent of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, said the proposal "has a lot of hurdles to cross, that's for sure."

He said local residents are behind the plan because Cherokee's economy is dominated by tourist dollars.

Muskrat said there are cases in which Indian tribes on federal trust lands can cite their sovereignty and exempt themselves from state law.

For example, he said, North Carolina cannot impose the state sales tax within the Cherokee reservation.

"There is no way to guess whether this (dog track) could be legal," said U.S. Chief Deputy Marshall Bill Ward of Asheville. "They'd have to fight it out in the courts."

"It looks like they (the Cherokees) are moving as fast as possible toward a sovereign nation within a nation."

Jo Anne Sanford, state assistant attorney general, said she couldn't speculate on what the decision would be.

"Just about everything that happens up there raises interesting jurisdictional questions that have never been settled by the courts," said Ms. Sanford. "I think there are more unsettled gray areas in Indian law than any other areas of law. I know this is something I've got to look into."

He Wished He'd Had a Fisher

If our inventor friend here could have known about the Fisher Stove, he probably wouldn't have bothered with his. The FISHER'S air-tight, thick steel, brick-lined fire box with its unique two-step design is no old fashioned "space" heater, but a scientifically designed radiant heater that can heat your entire house for just the cost of wood or coal!

And because the Fisher is independent of any public utility, you'll be able to heat your house no matter what. Our friend would have liked that idea — independence. We think you will too. Different sizes and models to choose from: Baby Bear, Mama Bear, Papa Bear (heater models); Grandma Bear and Grandpa Bear (combination heater and fireplace models).

According to Wachovia, the daily limit on withdrawals through Teller II is being raised from $100 to $200 and the machines are being changed to dispense money in $5 and $10 denominations only, eliminating the $1 bills.

Visitor Keen On Observing People

IN GREENVILLE. . . for a short time as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Heymann, Christine Alex is visiting the United States on a Rotary Club tour. A political science student, she finds the American people "very kind and helpful."

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor
A revelation, a disappointment, and a confirmation of a pre-conceived image of America have been expressed by Mademoiselle Christine Alex, a 19-year old French student visiting Greenville on a Rotary exchange student tour.

"It has surprised me to find that all of America is on the run. I mean jogging," Mlle. Alex smiled. "Everywhere, I see people jogging. I am a jogger, and in Paris we have some who also jog, but not like here."

The disappointment was not seeing a hippie population, especially in California. "I thought I would see many hippies when I visited San Francisco," Mlle. Alex commented. "But they are not there anymore. Everywhere I find young people clean, nicely dressed, even the ones with beards."

"I did meet," she added, "a few boat people in Sausalito across from San Francisco. Not the refugee people, but American people who have rejected society and try to live without work and money."

The student's interest in lifestyles comes naturally. She is a student in political science and a world traveler keen on observing the ways of people as well as the geography of places visited.

"And here, in Greenville and nearby, I have been impressed that the South is much as I imagined. I went to a tobacco auction, which I found exciting, and visited New Bern to see the old homes which are as lovely as I had expected."

Beyond these regional impressions, Mlle. Alex emphasized a broader discovery about people on her first visit to America.

"American people are friendly. They are so kind, so ready to stop and help, even in big cities. I think here in Greenville the hot weather maybe adds to the leisurely way people live. They seem not to be in a hurry."

She added that in Paris, her life as a student keeps her on the run. "It's always running, to catch a bus, to be someplace, to get to class, whatever."

Mlle. Alex, of Lyon, has lived in Paris for the past year where she is a student at the Institute of Political Science.

"I was fortunate to be chosen for a student, I had to pass a difficult exam to be accepted. At the Institute, we have some regular teachers, but most lectures are given by persons prominent in some field, in economics, law, English, or history. Much of my study is research. We have at the institute one of the finest libraries anywhere on political science."

The first segment of her Rotary student tour was spent in San Francisco. "My brother, Gilles, is also a Rotary student, and he is now in Mt. Olive with a family. My parents came with my brother and myself in July, but they have returned to France." Her father, Robert Alex, is a medical doctor in Lyon.

"Let me say that about San Francisco, I think it is the most beautiful city I have seen in America, and one of the most beautiful anywhere. I especially like the hills, the cable cars and the water."

Traveling is dear to her heart, and Mlle. Alex has been fortunate in her opportunities — with trips to Yugoslavia, Poland, Turkey, Cyprus, Italy, Ireland, Germany, Spain, "and one of the most exciting, a trip to the island country of Ceylon."

"Next I hope to visit India and China. These are two countries I want very much to see."

A lover of classical music — "and I also like some of the American popular music," Mlle. noted that "the production of 'Swan Lake' I saw at the Metropolitan in New York was the best I have ever seen. It was danced by the National Ballet of Cuba. The dancing, and the orchestra performance were superb."

"In American music, I enjoy very much the group Supertramps. They are popular in France. Just now" she added, "we have few good French singers in popular music. We hear most the singers from America and England."

An avid advocate of physical fitness, Mlle. Alex plays squash and tennis, and mentioned she is the champion woman javelin thrower in France. "I also like skiing and swimming, and play volleyball on the team at the institute."

On September 10 she will leave Greenville, and her American family here, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Heymann. "They have been so kind to me, so helpful in making plans for me to see Greenville and nearby."

Asked about future plans, Mlle. Alex laughed. "No plans for marriage yet, but I do plan to return to America next year to study for one year at Stanford University in California. It is a fine school. Also I like California. And I like North Carolina and the people of America," she said.

Child's Room Can Be Formative Influence During Early Years

By Selby Bateman
UNC-G NEWS BUREAU

GREENSBORO — Take a good look at your child's room.

Is it just a convenient place to stick the kids when you want some peace and quiet? Or is the room a colorful, creative environment designed to bring many happy hours to your child?

While many parents may not be aware of it, child development authorities have long known that a child's room can be a major formative influence during the early years.

That's one reason an increased emphasis is being placed today on the kinds of color, forms and functions that go into the creation of such rooms, said Dr. Nancy White, a child development specialist at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

"During the formative years of a child's life, stimulation is vitally important," said Dr. White, an associate professor of child development in the School of Home Economics. "In fact, many studies have concluded that actual damage can be done when a young child is isolated from sensory stimulation."

"It's through stimulation from the environment that a child learns to question, to ponder and to solve questions," she added.

Although visual stimulation is important in the learning process of children, comparatively little research has been done in this area of child development. But Dr. White said that the subject is gaining more importance, not only among child development researchers but among parents and even home furnishing and decorating companies.

"Children like things they can recognize, visual cues. Children appreciate things from their experience with which they can identify," said Dr. White.

Dr. White offers some special pointers on planning a child's room:

- Children need a place to play and to keep their playthings because play is vital to their development.

- Privacy is important. Private and attractive rooms help develop an ability to concentrate and also encourage an appreciation of beauty.

- A child's room should provide a corner for play that is compact and well-organized for toy storage. A total of 35 square feet is adequate for one child; 50 square feet is needed for two or more.

- Toys should be of three types; some for physical activity, some to stimulate creativity and some for imaginative play.

- Open shelf units are better for toy storage than large boxes or chests. Plan shelf heights in relation to the child's age and size. For example, a good top height for a three-year-old is 38 inches. For a six-year-old, the height should be 51 inches.

- Include a bulletin board to display children's art and other personal treasures.

Dr. White also noted that children need some sense of control and a chance to interact with their environment.

"For instance, we might have movable furniture, some of which the child can move," said Dr. White. "Throw pillows might be another idea; and a flexible drawing place; for example, a roll of butcher paper hung on the wall so the child can pull down a fresh drawing surface."

The child development specialist also suggested putting away some of the children's toys on a selective basis. When they are later brought back out, the toys will have a fresh and different perspective for the children.

"One of the best ways to encourage imaginative play is through the use of puppets," the associate professor pointed out. "Many children who are non-verbal otherwise will speak eloquently and freely as they use a puppet. In some way it's not the same to them as their own voice. It's the voice of the puppet."

"Puppets not only increase imagination, but also are excellent sources of language development and social interaction," she said.

But parents can sometimes stifle children's creativity by trying to offer them toys that give no leeway in imagination.

"Very often we choose toys that don't encourage creativity," said Dr. White. "For instance, a boat that looks just like a boat can't be used for anything else."

"But some commercial toys are very simple in design with no features. For example, one piece of

Images '79: A Look At Fashions

TUNIC DRESS . . . of 1920 is one of the fashions of the past to be seen in "Images '79," the fashion show coming to Wright Auditorium on September 14 as a benefit affair for the Greenville Art Center.

Friday, September 14 is the date that "Images '79," a retrospective look at fashion and its history, told in costumes, special lighting and commentary, will be coming to Greenville as a benefit affair for the East Carolina Art Society, the governing society for the Greenville Art Center.

Sponsored by Belk Tyler, the Marty Bronson and Associates spectacle will showcase fashions by world-renown designers such as Coco Chanel, Cristobal Balenciaga, Gilbert Adrian, Christian Dior, Norman Norell and Claire McCardell.

The show is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. at Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus. Tickets are priced at $7.00 per person and are now available from the Greenville Art Center, 802 Evans Street Monday-Friday between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Lighting — an important part in the fashion show which is an entertainment as well as a show of fashions — is being directed by Marilyn Rennagel of New York City. Ms. Rennagel recently designed the lighting for Broadway's Peter Allen for "Up In One." She has also created lighting for rock stars Rod Stewart, Billy Preston and Linda Ronstadt, as well as for performers Diana Ross, Roberta Flack, The Fifth Dimension and Bernadette Peters.

has professional stagecraft roots in North Carolina. It was in 1956 that he began work with the Flat Rock Playhouse as technical assistant and a member of the Vagabond Players. Over the years he has returned to Flat Rock as consultant and guest director. Other credits in directing include "The Crocodile Smile" and "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail."

Bronson is visual merchandising consultant to Phillip Morris International and for 12 years has been responsible for campaigns promoting cigarettes in Europe and South America.

Exhibit designs by Martin Bronson and Associates have included the work of such fashion designers as Paul Poiret and James Glands, as well as textile designer Jack Lenor Larsen.

The associates have been commissioned to present an exhibition at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City called "American Living — Turn of the Century."

Bronson is also currently involved in preparing a fashion presentation for a Las Vegas benefit — "Let's Turn Snow Into Gold," sponsored by a sportswear company to raise money for the U.S. ski teams going to Lake Placid in 1980.

"Images '79" includes stage sets, lighting, choreography and music in a production that in effect is a total theater experience for audiences.

Jeans: All Things To All People

NEW YORK (AP) — Little did Levi Strauss know back in 1853 that the jeans he made for California gold miners would one day dictate international fashion. Indeed, in this country, jeans reign virtually supreme as the American national costume for both men and women, fashion authorities agree.

To learn why, a major nationwide retailer of casual wear and jeans polled a group of psychologists and fashion authorities on the jeans message. They came up with these points about jeans as a psychological statement:

—A preference for jeans may indicate that a person is relaxed in his attitude toward himself.

"I never get out of jeans. I work in them," says psychologist Mildred S. Lerner, past president of the National Psychological Association of Psychiatry. "In fact, it goes beyond that because I use jeans to make other people feel at ease. I can almost use the way a person dresses as an indicator of how to work with him. The more uptight a person is, the more into high fashion they can get."

—The jeans wearer is often seeking a sort of "uniform" which nevertheless allows for a certain amount of individuality.

"Jeans serve a purpose as a uniform, providing a sense of belonging when needed," says psychotherapist and image consultant Mara Gleckel. "Today, there is a striving for individuality with styles like French jeans and the status jeans, although the risk of looking very different isn't tremendous to the wearer no matter what kind of jeans he or she wears."

New York psychoanalyst Stephen Adler has a similar opinion. "Different segments of society use jeans for uniformity — to express a need to belong or a need to feel they're doing the right thing. That's OK if they're already sure of themselves," he commented. Adler added, "The fact that a person wears jeans does say a lot about a person. But, even with jeans, there are different looks. You can tell if a person projects an 'alive' message or a static message — the latter being a controlled look that is made to appear 'right.'"

According to George Arvan, general merchandise manager of The Gap, the firm that conducted the survey, jeans symbolize the youthful nature of America.

"Most people go to Europe to get ideas and forget that many important ideas in young-looking fashion usually come from the United States and are part of the American lifestyle," he says. "The youthful free-spirited jeans image has had a profound impact on all casual wear in this country and abroad."

—Jeans represent a pride in and an affirmation of America. On a deeper level, the fashion expresses a need to identify with the "frontier" spirit.

"After Watergate, the 1976 Bicentennial was a show of faith in America which demonstrated that there was belief in the country, if not in the government," says Gladys Toulis, an expert on the social significance of dressing and head of the fashion department at Pratt Institute, New York. "Jeans are an example of fashions that come from the streets as a statement of belief in what we are."

In fact, notes Dr. Adler, "The whole Western look in jeans and other clothing is very important. Psychologically, it goes back to our earliest history when durability was important. There is no more physical frontier now. Here we are going to outer space and human development is left behind."

—Jeans indicate an active, busy lifestyle that requires a person to be appropriately dressed at all times.

"Jeans don't cost a lot, you can buy them quickly and they don't require a lot of care," says Donna Lawson, author of "Superjeans."

"They also pack easily, clean easily and wear a long time. Aside from fitting well and being comfortable, they are non-seasonal fashion-wise, which is good for an inflationary time."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I used to be a nice person. Ask anyone. I was giving, loving and sharing.

Then the children came along and I realized a woman who was giving, loving, and sharing could end up with a drawer full of dirty pantyhose, a broken stereo and a wet toothbrush every morning.

Also, a camera with sand in it, a blouse that died from acute perspiration, a library book with a bent back, a sleeping bag with a broken zipper, a tennis racket with a cracked frame, and a transistor that "just went dead when it hit the pavement."

For awhile, I had a closet that enjoyed more traffic than a discount house on Mother's Day. One day, I wandered in to see three kids picking and choosing. "May I help you?" I asked stiffly.

"No, I'm just browsing," said my son. "Where's the luggage?" "We've moved it to the annex," I snapped. "Will you get out of here?"

"Mom!" said my daughter, "you've got to learn to share." "Share! You saw what happened to my car when I shared."

"What did I do to your car?" asked my son. "I'll tell you what you did to it. You left the radio up so loud that when I got in and turned on the motor, the noise struck me sterile. I still have swelling in my teeth. Not only that, the car smells like a gym before showers."

"You told me to bring my gym clothes home."

"I didn't tell you to keep the car windows rolled up when you did."

"Mom," asked my daughter, "can I borrow this sweater? You can borrow any of mine you like."

"Then why don't you wear your own?" I asked.

"They're all dirty."

"Why would I borrow a dirty sweater?"

"You never go anywhere to wear a clean one."

"Hold it," I said to my son. "What did you do with the binoculars you borrowed for the game last week?"

"They're in my room."

"Why don't you put them back where you got them?"

"Why?" he shrugged. "Why would you want to hang on to a pair of broken binoculars?"

"They weren't broken when you borrowed them."

"You buy cheap, Mom, and you pay for it in the long run."

As I slumped down in the closet, I heard my daughter say, "Mom's so selfish. It's hard to believe she wasn't an only child!"

Today's Kids Want To Dress Like Teenagers

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor

A few years ago back-to-school clothing for the elementary school set meant crisply tailored little dresses or pant outfits for girls and collared, placket shirts or striped polo shirts with boxer type pants for little boys.

"These things still exist, but kids today want to dress like high school students," says fashion editor Patricia Van Olinda.

They want team uniform shirts to wear with jogging shorts or jeans, preferably signature or designer jeans, Ms. Van Olinda said in an interview. They also want the sparkly disco and roller disco look.

Leotards for girls are part of the disco look, she said, in shinier, lighter fabrics, to be worn with a wrap skirt to gymnastics and dance classes.

She predicted a long life for bodywear as functional dressing. "It fits the way we live."

Ms. Van Olinda is with Earnshaw's Review, a trade publication for the children's clothing market.

Designer jeans have back pockets with such famous signatures as Charlotte Ford, Geoffrey Beene and Gloria Vanderbilt for Murjani.

"About 10 years ago you had playwear. I don't think anyone had heard of jogging shorts. It was an unstylish, limited market, strictly utilitarian."

The active sportswear that has replaced playwear is "very colorful and attractive," Ms. Van Olinda said.

"The jogging shorts look is really a year-round thing (not just for school). In the spring you see regular shorts as playwear," she added.

Numerals shirts for the team uniform look are especially popular for boys.

Jeans have been popular for at least a decade, but the prewashed, raggedly look of the early 1970s has peaked, Ms. Van Olinda said. It has been replaced by the signature look that can be done by anyone, not just famous designers.

"Prime time TV has an enormous impact (on children's wear) but it has to have a hook, a gimmick," she said.

Disney and Peanuts characters have almost become classics. Mork from Ork sweatshirts and T-shirts are being made by Allison Manufacturing Co. of New York City with designs based on the popular TV show. Several children's wear manufacturers have also been licensed to use Muppets characters.

About 10 years ago, there was only a little licensing of cartoon characters - and superheroes. Now it's all over, Ms. Van Olinda said, including spin-offs from macho comic book characters such as Spiderman, Batman and Superman.

These styles are popular with boys up to about 10 years old, she said;

"As one manufacturer put it, before boys become interested in girls."

Textures are important, she said, for both boys and girls: brushed knits, chenilles, velours, fleeces or a loopy look.

Ms. Van Olinda estimated only 25 percent or less of children's clothing is sold by department stores and about 10 percent by specialty shops and the remainder by discount stores and catalog chains that also operate retail stores.

She said there's more fashion in children's wear now than there was in the '40s and '50s.

"Girls wore dresses, pink, blue or maize solids, a print or two, or a little white blouse with a little tweed suit. Boys wore polo shirts and corduroy pants."

While sportswear is a very strong trend, children today are also interested in dressing up.

"In the pre-wash-and-wear period you couldn't sell a suit," she said. "Now vested three-piece polyester suits for boys sell small but steadily."

The dressy look for girls this fall will include lots of shirtwaist styles and some period, old-fashioned floral designs.

Children are very sure of what clothing they want at earlier and earlier ages, Ms. Van Olinda said, and "determined not to wear what they don't want."

"It becomes a problem by 7 or 8 for parents to make the choices."

For purely practical reasons, Ms. Van Olinda said, "It's no good going to a store without the child." All too often the clothes will have to be returned because they don't fit.

She acknowledged shopping with children can be a "scene fraught with difficulty, if the child wants a more sophisticated look than the parent."

Twenty-eight antique dealers will be represented at the fifth annual Antiques Show and Sale sponsored by the Chapel Hill Preservation Society.

The show will be held at the Carolina Inn and the Wesley Foundation Sept. 13-15, announced Mrs. James Caldwell, chairman. Items will include primitives, period furniture, Oriental porcelain and rugs, jewelry, silver, rare books, prints, fine china, toys and architectural objects.

An exhibit of folk art will open at the Horace Williams House Sept. 9 and an identification clinic will be held at the Chapel Hill Public Library on the afternoon of Sept. 9.

Lectures on three of the traditional folk arts, stencilling, quilting and basket weaving will be presented at the Wesley Foundation Friday, Sept. 14, and Saturday, Sept. 15.

The lectures will be held in the Wesley Foundation according to the following schedule: Friday at 10 a.m., stencilling, and basket weaving at 2 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m., quilting. A ticket to the antiques show will also admit the bearer to the lectures.

Combining their expertise to discuss stencilling will be Jan Reist, chairman of the lecture series, and Tom Wescott, a Chapel Hill cabinetmaker.

Stencilling developed just after the American Revolution as a rural New England phenomenon. The lecture will cover traditional stencils and how they were used in the early American period as well as how they are used today with the revival of interest in stencilling. The three sources of stencils have been stencil books, designs people made for themselves and itinerant stencilers.

Madeline Flagler of Chapel Hill, who does basket weaving, will discuss her craft. She uses mainly local materials and natural dyes in her work. Quilting will be the topic of the lecture by Judy Goldstein, who blends fabric, design and color to create modern interpretations of traditional designs.

Hours of the show, besides 7:30-9:30 p.m. Sept. 13, are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

Business Meet Is Announced

American Legion Auxiliary Unit No. 39 will have a business meeting and covered-dish dinner Thursday at 7 p.m. at the American Legion Building.

Reports will be given by the Girls State and Boys State delegates. Husbands of auxiliary members and parents of the delegates will be invited.

Mrs. Frances Strawn, membership chairman, reported the Go-Getters are collecting current dues.

equipment could be a truck today, a boat tomorrow, or a fire truck the next day. If a toy looks just like a fire truck, then it can't be a milk truck or a farm wagon.

"But without too many designs and specifics, a child is forced to use his or her own creative abilities," she said.

On The Young Side

By Elizabeth Ito

Last Monday was opening day and orientation for J. H. Rose students. The school sent out letters informing students of homerooms and teachers distributed schedules and gave general information about the school year.

Students also elected one of their classmates to represent their respective homeroom for all Student Government Association meetings during the coming year.

Principal Howard Hurt held an assembly and introduced class and SGA officers, who were elected at the end of the past school year.

For the sophomore class, officers are Julie Budaz, president, Cathy Price, vice president, and Martha Anne Ferrell, secretary-treasurer. The president of the junior class is Sarah Houston, Lisa Shepherd, vice president, and Karen Wheeler is serving as secretary-treasurer.

The senior class president is Dan Mayo, while Cheryl Anderson is vice president and secretary-treasurer is Carla Tadlock. SGA officers include Jeffrey Atkinson, president, Mary Beth Ferrell, vice president, Jackie Brown, recording secretary, Lisa Distefano, corresponding secretary, and Jennifer Davis, treasurer.

Hurt then explained rules of conduct, class change procedures, parking spaces and the newly adopted attendance and examination policies. Assistant Principal Dave Dumgarner informed the assembly of the sale of athletic season tickets.

Following assembly, students went through their schedules spending five minutes in each of their classes. Teachers explained what areas would be studied this year.

The Junior Varsity and Varsity cheerleaders have been busy preparing for the coming season. In addition to daily practices after school, they have been working since July at cheerleading camps. The Varsity girls, led by Jennifer Davis, spent five days at Roanoke College, Salem, Va. They were awarded four blue ribbons in daily evaluations. A final competition was held the last day of camp in which they won second place in the varsity division.

Officers of the Keyettes and Key Clubs, two community service clubs at Rose, met Wednesday morning with their mother club, the Kiwanis, whose officers shared their program of activities planned for the year. They requested the clubs to aid them with their annual pancake dinner.

Officers and board members of the Key Club met the following morning to plan upcoming projects. They will again sponsor a homecoming dance and are planning to sell green derbies to raise money.

What's Your Jewelry IQ?

NEW YORK (AP) — This simple test reveals your Jewelry IQ, says the Jewelry Industry Council, which offers fashion tips in the answers. Count 10 points for each correct answer. If you score 90 to 100, you know your jewelry magic; if you score 70 to 80, you should learn a few new tricks; if you score 60 or below, you're not getting the most out of your jewelry box, says the Council.

TRUE OR FALSE?
—1. If you have large features, wear small pieces of jewelry to create the illusion of smallness.

—2. You can "contour" your face with earrings.

—3. Never wear rings if your hands are unattractive.

—4. You can use your watch as one of your accessories.

—5. Wear the minimum of jewelry during hot weather to keep cool.

—6. Never mix different types of jewelry.

—7. Pins worn with chains can create dramatic effects.

—8. Stick pins focus attention.

—9. Rings can make your fingers look longer.

—10. Pins can be used to stretch your jewelry wardrobe.

ANSWERS
—1. FALSE. Wear jewelry scaled to your size. If you are tiny, wearing large jewelry only emphasizes smallness. If you have large hands or features, choose bold rings and earrings — you can get away with it!

—2. TRUE. A heavy chin can be minimized by upswept earrings accented with color, or by dangle earrings that are long and full. For a too-round face, lengthen it with drop earrings, or countoured earrings that go up the ear. A too-prominent nose can be remedied with large earrings that do not outline the earlobe.

—3. FALSE. Buy carefully selected rings that flatter your hands, and you'll find yourself spending more time on your manicure and making your hands look attractive.

—4. TRUE. Today's watches are meant to be accessories. The handsome gold bands set off status bracelets on your other wrist. Lapis or opal watch faces pair off handsomely with matching pins.

—5. FALSE. The trick is to create the illusion of coolness. Do this with lightweight beads or shells in light cool colors.

—6. FALSE. Some of the most appealing looks are achieved by mixing jewelry. Chain-link necklaces are excellent backups with pearl or bead necklaces. You get the big neckline effect this way.

—7. TRUE. Create your own hatelaine by pinning a chain to one side of your neckline, or use the pin as a pendant on a chain.

—8. TRUE. Pin the stickpin on a fabric purse, a hair ribbon, a sleeve, lapel or shoe to direct the eye to whatever part of your apparel you want to highlight.

—9. TRUE. A ring design that leads the eye along the finger rather than across it lengthens a short hand with broad fingers.

—10. TRUE. Several small pins can be used in a variety of ways. Cluster them on a lapel, march them along a sleeve, use one on your purse, its mate at the elbow. Fasten one to your chain as a pendant.

Program On Parliamentary Procedure Given

Greenville Credit Women-International held its meeting and covered-dish dinner Tuesday at First Federal. Doris Price was hostess.

Mrs. Carol Hardee, past state president and now state parliamentarian spoke on "Parliamentary Procedures and Pointers in CW-I." She stated the Roberts Rules of Order Newly Revised is the parliamentary authority for CW-I. Parliamentary law is nothing more than common sense codified. When in doubt, use good common sense, keeping in mind the four underlying principles on which all rules are based: courtesy and justice to all; the rights of the minority to be heard; the will of the majority; and one thing at a time.

She also gave a report on the fall meeting to be held here at the Ramada Inn Nov. 10-11 and gave a report on the slate of officers to be voted on at the next meeting. It was announced by Linda Wingate, annual Bosses' Night will be held Oct. 16 at the Greenville Golf and Country Club.

President Martha Mills said Sept. 25 is the deadline for nominations for Credit Woman of the Year and Boss of the Year. The rules for the state president's project were read by the president. She announced State President Angelene Venters appeared on "Carolina Today" and will be riding in the Ayden Colard Festival parade Sept. 8.

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University Answers

Timely Gardening Questions

Q. Can yews be grown successfully in the Raleigh area? (Mrs. S.W., Raleigh)

A. Yes. Yews (taxus) can be grown in the Raleigh area, but I would suggest Japanese yews (taxus cuspidata) for the Piedmont and Coastal Plain. Yews grow in a variety of soils, and will tolerate many adverse conditions. Plant in shade or partial shade. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. Small branches on many oak trees around my home have died this summer. I haven't seen this happen before. S.W. Dobson)

A. Blame the die back on the periodical cicada or seventeen year locust. The female cicada split the bark on the branches of many hardwoods and then laid their eggs in the splits. When the eggs hatch, the nymphs will fall and enter the ground. After 17 years they will mature, emerge and begin a new cycle. (Bill Stanton, extension forestry resources specialist)

Q. Masses of gum and wood particles can be found around the base of my peach trees. Is an insect causing this damage? (G.C., Huntersville)

A. Yes. Your trees are infested with peach tree borers, the most destructive insects of peach trees in North Carolina. Spray your trees about Sept. 1 with Thiodan or Lorsban. Follow label directions on rates. Cover the trunk and scaffold limbs thoroughly. You can also hand worm infested trees. Remove soil from around the trunk to the depth of six inches. Locate larvae burrows and then kill the borers by running a wire in the burrows. (K.A. Sorensen, extension entomologist)

Q. During dry weather I often wonder if I should try to water the shade trees in my yard. Do you recommend it? (S.W., Spring Lake)

A. Watering a medium or large shade tree is almost impossible. Most medium size shade trees have a root system that covers one-tenth of an acre.

At least two inches of water would be needed to penetrate the root zone. To put two inches of water on a tenth of an acre would require 5,431 gallons of water.

Besides the cost, if you buy the water, such quantities of water are often not available during prolonged dry periods. (Bill Stanton, extension forest resources specialist)

U.S. Shopping Habits Studied

NEW YORK (UPI) — American grocery shoppers are a meat, potatoes and cheese group.

Good produce, dairy and meat departments often influence the rest of a consumer's purchases, according to the 1979 update of a survey inaugurated six years ago.

The Progressive Grocer-Home Testing Institute study also showed shoppers are nettled by out-of-stock shelves and missing prices that require a clerk or a store manager's help in correcting.

A report on the study in the August issue of Progressive Grocer magazine ranked 37 factors that influence consumers. The first five were, in this order: cleanliness, low prices, clear labeling of prices, a good produce department and freshness-dating on products. Good dairy and meat departments were 10th and 11th.

Protest From Greek Orthodox

ATLANTA (AP) — Southern Baptist leaders say they have received protests from the Greek Orthodox Church at the appointment of two Greek-speaking Southern Baptist missionaries to work among Greek-speaking people in the Boston area.

A letter from Archdeacon Methodios G. Tournas of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America branded the appointments "blatantly unChristian, nothing short of proselytism."

The Rev. Adrian Rogers, Southern Baptist president, and William G. Tanner, head of the denomination's home missions board, replied that the appointment of the missionaries was not to proselytize but to reach persons who have not been reached with the gospel of Christ.

Tanner says field studies indicated that a "spiritual vacuum exists among a segment of Greek Americans." He says Greek Americans in the Boston area had requested the appointments and "we simply responded to a request from the local area."

INDIAN APPOINTED

NEW YORK (AP) — Episcopal Presiding Bishop John M. Allin has named a Choctaw Indian, Steve Charleston, 30, of Oklahoma City, to be the denomination's chief staff officer for Indian ministries.

Preaches Gospel Through Art

GREENCASTLE, Ind. (AP) — An Indiana minister is going on the road to tell the gospel story through art.

The Rev. Howard W. Ellis, known for his gift of "preaching with pictures," is taking early retirement from the pastorate to resume his unconventional ministry with easel, chalks and paper.

The artist-preacher, a protégé of the late Chicago artist Warner Sallman, says his aim is to provide "an occasion of worship through art" at the churches where he appears.

Perennial Student Has Finally Acquired Degree

By JACK KEEVER
 Associated Press Writer
 AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — With champagne fizzing in the summer air, friends of Pedro "Pete" Chapa Jr. toasted his college graduation at a recent backyard celebration.

In acquiring a bachelor's degree from the University of Texas, Chapa had brought to its climax an educational career that possibly should be mentioned in the Guinness Book of World Records.

It is noted in the record book that George Goulty of Guildford, Surrey, England, was a student for 23 years before submitting his thesis for a doctorate, which was Goulty's ninth degree.

Chapa enrolled in the university in January 1961 and, with the exception of a 1½-year lay-off, was an undergraduate student in search of a single degree until January 1979 — 18 years.

His graduation almost coincided with his 40th birthday.

Hundreds of professors and thousands of students over the past two decades have known Chapa, the bachelor son of a weekly newspaper publisher in Hebbronville in South Texas.

His friends cannot imagine the campus without him.

One student was so impressed with the Chapa story that he made a film hailing him as the "spirit of Austin." In the film, Chapa did what he does best — talk about life.

Chapa, a bilingual Mexican-American, tried four scholastic majors — journalism, English, Spanish, and radio-television-film — before graduating in American Studies, an academic program started by his good friend, William Goetzmann, a Pulitzer Prize winner in history.

His academic career began as a 21-year-old freshman, after he had served during the Berlin crisis and been discharged as a Spec. 4 from the Army. He was smart enough to get credit for 14 hours of Spanish as a result of pre-enrollment testing, but partied so much he flunked out of school his second semester with all F's.

Parties, in fact, are a large part of the Chapa legend.

He attends an average of eight parties a week, often addressing every person by name, and invitations to his own "galas" are so highly sought that some students crash them.

A 1978 party commemorating the sale of the century-old stone house Chapa had lived in for 14 years attracted 600 persons. With bread-and-fish miracles, Chapa served food and drink until dawn.

He had no phone and was often gone, but there was an over-sized bobby pin on the front screen of the "Chapatorium" to hold messages.

Although bedrock financing is his "best-kept secret," Chapa has worked as a truck driver, bartender, house painter, electrician, mailboy, messenger, clerk, academic researcher, bricklayer, librarian and landscaper.

In pursuit of the "good life," Chapa has also borrowed money, using his furniture as collateral, to vacation in Europe.

It is his academic career, however, that has most fascinated people. They could never understand why he remained an undergraduate for so long.

"I really didn't think I was qualified to do anything else," he said.

He delayed taking physics, a freshman course, until the last semester but made an A.

"I could walk from a course either really knowing a lot or knowing a lot about a professor and feeling he didn't know anything," said Chapa. "I always developed a rapport (with professors). What I really did mostly was question them and challenge them."

Chapa's friends — envious of his lifestyle of seemingly few worries — have kidded him for years about "getting a degree and going to work."

"I'm thinking," he said, the laughter building to a roar, "of going to graduate school..."

Exchange Visits Help Understand Lifestyles

By PAMELA J. HUEY FORREST, Ill. (UPI) — The freedom, the open air, meeting new people and exchanging experiences. Those are the things Connie and Bob Ratzel say they enjoyed most about their visit to the David and Linda Miller farm north of Forrest.

The Ratzels, both social workers from Chicago, and their three small children met the Millers and their three small children as part of a family-to-family visit program to promote better understanding between rural and urban families.

"The kids really like it. We mention we're going to a farm and they say 'Oh, boy!'" said Connie Ratzel. "I love the freedom of not having to worry about trucks and motorcycles when the children are playing."

It was the third consecutive year the Ratzels have participated in the program but only the first time for the Millers. Both families said they planned to participate next year and were looking forward to the Millers' return visit to the Ratzel home in Chicago.

"The biggest advantage of this program is the return visit," said David Miller, who grew up on a farm and now raises 750 acres of corn and soybeans. "A large number of urban people have rural roots, but very few rural people have urban roots."

"It's not a one-sided program. A lot of farmers think that city people are going to get smart when they spend a weekend on the farm. They don't realize it can work both ways."

Linda Miller agreed, saying the reciprocal visit by the farmers to the cities would help dispel the stereotyped opinions many rural people have about city folk.

The program, now in its fifth year, is sponsored by the Illinois Farm Bureau and radio stations WGN in Chicago and KMOX in St. Louis.

The Ratzel children — Maria, 4, Jonathan, 3, and Kristen, 2 — hit it off immediately with the Miller children — Libby, 6, Amanda, 5, and Seth, 18 months — their parents said. However, the children's only reaction to questions about how they enjoyed the weekend was a lot of head nodding.

Farm life was not a completely new experience for either Bob or Connie Ratzel. Both have rural backgrounds, but they said visiting the Millers gave them an opportunity to re-experience a pleasant part of their past.

For the Millers, the exchange program was an opportunity to meet new people and make new friends — something that is sometimes difficult for farmers and small town residents, they said.

"It gets lonesome out here," said David Miller.

"One thing about small towns, there aren't that many people around," echoed Linda Miller, who grew up in a western Chicago suburb. "We like to meet new people."

the children went swimming in a nearby lake.

In between times, when it was raining, there was a lot of talking.

"We talked more than anything else about their lifestyle," said Bob Ratzel. "Now we're anxious for them to see how we spend our days and what the people in our neighborhood are like."

In all, about 80 city families from Chicago and St. Louis were hosted by Illinois farm families. Farm and city families were matched according to age of children, family interests and travel convenience.

Devoured Purse Not Peanuts

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Jerry Sandack was trying to feed peanuts to the elephants at Hogle Zoo. But Kali, an Indian pachyderm, thumbed its trunk at the nuts and ate Mrs. Sandack's purse instead.

"We were terrified. The elephant put the whole purse in her mouth and crunch — just like in a trash compactor," she said.

Mrs. Sandack, who was with her 4½-year-old daughter and her mother at the time, said the thick-skinned purse snatcher spit out some of the contents and began sorting through them, nudging her wallet and car keys outside the rail.

"The rest was just a shredded mess," she said.

Hogle Zoo said it has insurance against elephants eating purses.

WOMEN'S CAREER PROGRAM SLATED

NEW YORK (AP) — A program aimed at giving women the skills and experience they need to succeed in areas from which they have largely been excluded will be offered this fall by New York University's School of Continuing Education.

Known as "Women Advancing Through Career Help" (WATCH), the program provides counseling, course work and unpaid internships. It is supported by a number of corporations and is open to women who wish to change fields, enter or re-enter the job market or advance in their present career.

Hornbill Chick Is New For U.S.

NEW YORK (AP) — A concave-casqued hornbill chick recently emerged from its nest at the Bronx Zoo.

The zoo says this is the first time this has happened in the United States, adding, "As far as is known, Singapore is the only other zoo in the world to have reared a chick of this species."

It adds, "Concave-casqued hornbills are native to the forests of India, Malaysia and Sumatra. They exist in mature forests where they breed and raise their young among the hollows and cavities of large trees... The plumage of these birds is black, white and yellow. They have enormous bills which are pale orange in color."

One Meaning To 'Marathon'

NEW YORK (AP) — If you ever run or talk about a marathon, it can mean only one thing, a foot race covering 26 miles, 385 yards, notes Fred Lebow, president of the New York Road Runners.

"People incorrectly use the term 'marathon' to mean any long distance run," adds Lebow. "Any other distance is not a marathon although it may seem like one to you."

Lebow is credited with originating the term "mini marathon" seven years ago to denote a run of 6.2 miles — 10,000 meters. He said that the L'eggs Mini Marathon in Central Park this year had 4,500 women starting. The first mini he staged in 1972 had only 78 women entrants. "We begged women to run," he recalled.

Deep Melancholy In Chrysler Town

By JAN CARROLL
Associated Press Writer
NEW CASTLE, Ind. (AP) — Bill Vaught aimlessly wipes the counter of his bar, wishing for the afternoon crowd of Chrysler workers that usually fills his modest tavern.

The patrons will not be there in force today. Feeling the pinch that has hit the financially troubled automaker, the Chrysler parts plant across the street from Bill's Bar and Lunch shut down Monday for two weeks.

"It's been real slow," said Vaught, who worked for Chrysler for 10 years before opening his bar in 1956.

"I've seen it slow before," he said. "I was laid off a year and two months one time, nine months another. When they were down for a strike, everybody figured they'd be back pretty soon. Now, they're running scared and I can't say as I blame them."

At the end of the bar, Jerry Davis nurses a beer. He is among the 2,500 Chrysler workers in this eastern Indiana community of 22,000 who are affected by the production shut-downs.

"If it goes, I'm going," the 30-year-old Davis said of the plant. "I got 13 years in there. You hate to give it up."

Working for the automaker has been a family tradition for Davis. His father worked there, and so do his two brothers-in-law. He graduated from Chrysler High here. But if the plant closes, he vows to take his wife and two children and move elsewhere.

"There goes part of the problem right now," Davis said, nodding toward the street where a city-owned vehicle, a Chevrolet, stopped at an intersection. "City government in this town won't support Chrysler. They go out of town to buy their cars. They don't have no support around here like they used to."

"A lot of the uptown businessmen say if Chrysler folds, this town wouldn't be hurt any," said Davis. "I don't know what they're thinking, but I think they're crazier than hell. It's a Chrysler town, that's what it is."

William Clements, executive director of the Chamber of Commerce, disputes claims like Davis' that New Castle is a company town in the classic sense of the term.

"I lived in the Pittsburgh area and I know what a company town is. It's where the houses are owned by the company and the stores are owned by the company," he said. "We are not a company town."

But with the automaker representing 10 percent of the work force of Henry County "for me to say that Chrysler is not important is a darned ridiculous statement."

Chrysler, which has lost more than $460 million in the last 18 months, is asking the federal government for $1 billion in aid until 1981, when it says it should be profitable again.

Some 25,000 employees, more than one-fourth of its U.S. hourly work force, have been laid off as of last week.

Unemployment in this city, about 50 miles east of Indianapolis, is about 7.8 percent, but when Chrysler shuts down the figure jumps to 17.8 percent.

Pointing to the diversification in New Castle industry, Clements is optimistic about the town's economic health in the face of Chrysler's difficulties.

"There's lots of gloom and doom talk, but really there's been no announcement that Chrysler is going to close," he said. "They're in trouble, sure. Everybody knows that. But even though Chrysler shuts down part of its operation, it's got to have a parts plant."

Chrysler has been an institution in this town since 1926, when it bought the New Castle plant from the Maxwell automobile company. And ever since, it seems, Chrysler has been dogged by rumors of financial distress.

"I've been over there 34 years and they've been closing up since they've been there," quipped one old-timer at the bar.

Across town at the Castle Liquor Store, manager Stan Ciempola considers the old notion that in times of trouble, people look for solace in drink.

"If they're drinking, they're probably drinking in the bars. It's slowed down completely in here," he said. "We stocked up for the Labor Day holiday and we hope sales get better."

In one respect, Ciempola says, business has been booming.

"We've been cashing a lot of unemployment checks," he said.

Privacy For Recovering

By ROGER GILLOTT
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The neighborhood kids call it "The Mummy House" because they frequently catch glimpses of people with their faces swathed in bandages.

But to the folks inside, it's a place they can go to be secluded and pampered while they recover from plastic surgery.

A growing number of such halfway houses — from the spartan to the deluxe — have sprung up to cater to the whims and needs of plastic-surgery patients who don't want to burden their family and friends, as well as those who simply don't want to be seen.

"I can understand why patients like it," says Mel Grussing, a health-facilities investigator. "It's anonymous. They're cared for. Everybody thinks it's great until a patient runs into trouble and dies. With any type of surgery you run that risk."

Health officials are less than pleased with this new industry that is growing up virtually unregulated. The homes are not licensed, the attendants frequently have little or no medical training.

At the least, the homes provide patients with ice packs to reduce swelling, watch for infections and chauffeur patients to the doctor's office. At the most, the homes try to ease the pain of recuperation by offering such creature comforts as luxurious rooms, crystal bud vases on meal trays and fine linens.

Patients turn to the halfway houses for a variety of reasons. Some housewives and businessmen, the operators say, are as secretive as movie stars about revealing their encounters with the beauty knife and prefer not to be seen stitched, swollen or fitted with drainage tubes. Others wouldn't think of subjecting a friend or relative to 24 to 48 hours — or more — of continuous care to watch for post-operative complications.

Cancer Patient Writes On How To Live With It

JORY GRAHAM writes about subjects she knows only too well — death, dying and cancer. (UPI Photo)

By ED LION
CHICAGO (UPI) — Jory Graham writes about subjects she knows only too well — death, dying and cancer. She has written from a hospital bed several times. Occasionally she must forsake the typewriter for a dictaphone or plain pen and paper because of fatigue.

Despite the ravages of cancer, she has produced 100 weekly columns in the past two years.

"If somebody would have asked, 'Do you think you'll live till your 100th column?' I probably would have thought that I wouldn't make it," she said in an interview. "But I never really thought about it."

The column, carried in 45 newspapers, has been made required reading for medical students at Northwestern University. It has evoked thousands of letters from cancer victims, their families, doctors, victims of other diseases and healthy people alike.

"It deals with something that touches everyone's life," Ms. Graham said. "Death and dying and the problems of the ill. I think it's also about courage."

Cancer first touched Ms. Graham's life in 1975. She noticed a discolored lump on her left breast. It was cancerous. A few days later she had her breast removed.

"I was terrified. I think everybody has the same reaction inside."

Seven and a half months later she lost her other breast to cancer. A year later she felt pain in her back — the cancer had spread to her spine.

"I was thinking that maybe I had five or six months left. I thought about what I could do with the remainder of my life. Then I read an article about Mother Teresa, who had dedicated her life to helping others in Calcutta. That was the genesis of the column."

The cancer in her spine was treated with radiation. She began writing her column for the Chicago Daily News. With the demise of the paper, her column — called "A Time to Live" — was picked up by Universal Press Syndicate. "With the column I feel like I've opened a whole new door," she said. "I got hundreds of letters, people verbalizing their feelings for the first time. Some were pathetic — women undressing in closets after mastectomies. I began to see dimensions of the whole problem that doctors never see. Sometimes I read the mail and cry — some people are in such trouble."

Ms. Graham, who still is up and about although the illness is spreading, said her column is about living with cancer, not dying from it.

"Cancer is a chronic disease. It's not an all or nothing thing. It happens I'm living with it for four years now. Every day is another day of grace. I want to use it to help others and break down the isolation that people with cancer feel. It's such a lonely thing."

Her topics are drawn from her mail, cancer issues and her own experiences. One column tried to open a dialogue with doctors to help bridge the patient-doctor gap. Another offered recipes for high protein snacks for patients having difficulty keeping their weight up. Many dealt with the emotional aspects of living "under the shadow of death."

She has a staff of three part-time assistants and nine volunteers, who assist her with research and help answer the 200 to 300 letters she receives each week. "All the volunteers have somehow been touched by death," she said.

The most common questions and complaints she gets in the mail are "I can't get enough information from the doctor" and "How do I talk to someone with cancer?"

The biggest fears expressed in letters from victims are those of dying in intractable pain — even though she says 60 percent of cancer patients don't die in agony — and of dying alone.

In some of her columns, Ms. Graham sought to explain her feelings and experiences.

On coping with the realization of her own mortality after learning of her illness, Ms. Graham wrote that by accepting the fact that she will die she is not surrendering all hope but merely being realistic.

"To accept the limitations of the life cycle should never be interpreted as giving up. I live despite my finiteness."

In one of her earlier columns, Ms. Graham grappled with fundamental questions asked by many victims of serious illness: "Why me?" and "What do I do?"

"The tragedies that befall us are a matter of luck," she wrote. "Luck is random. This just happened to catch me."

And her course of conduct: "One extraordinary decision is to see that no hour alone or with those one loves is wasted in self-pity, guilt. There is simply no time for any of that. Time now is for reaching out, giving, building your own legacy of courage and concern for others. That is how to find strength, and a sense of a life that mattered."

Another Rating Plan Offered

NEW YORK (UPI) — Automobile insurance premiums soon may depend more on how much damage your vehicle is liable to incur in an accident.

A new rating plan being introduced by a national insurance advisory, rating and statistical organization affects that part of auto insurance premiums that pay for collision and comprehensive coverages. The Insurance Services Office's new plan is being submitted to state insurance departments nationwide.

Current rates assigned to autos are based on their cost when new.

The Insurance Information Institute, a trade group, says the new plan would adjust rates either up or down, based upon the loss experience of individual makes and models of cars. It would be applied to 1980 and later vehicles.

Urge Pipeline Security Steps

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department should be required to develop and apply standards to make sure major oil pipelines are secure from sabotage, says the General Accounting Office.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, said in a new report that major U.S. oil pipelines are exposed to sabotage, but that neither the government nor the pipeline companies are doing much about it.

National PTA — Activist Helpmate Of Education

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
UPI Education Editor

The National PTA, public education's activist helpmate, intends to take all the bulls by the horns during the new school year.

That's the impression given by Virginia Sparling, the PTA's new president from Bellevue, Wash. Mrs. Sparling, wife of a doctor and mother of two college sons, describes the PTA as "a human network" united by a mutual commitment to children.

At the start of her two-year term, Mrs. Sparling talked about the PTA being needed "now as never before."

"There is an urgency in the need to find solutions to compelling problems," she said.

She described the No. 1 priority as "moving forward to preserve, maintain and strengthen the public education system."

"Our system of public education is unique," she said. "It educates more people to a higher degree than any other nation in the world."

"Our democracy demands an educated citizenry. The National PTA believes that public schools serving all children are the best providers of a quality education for every child."

The PTA depends on 6.1 million dues-paying members in the human network Mrs. Sparling talked about. In the year ahead that network will continue to focus on problems straight from Pandora's box, including:

—School discipline: "The Gallup Poll has reported that discipline is the No. 1 problem of our schools as perceived by the public. We will initiate a national dialogue on the issue of discipline, both the public perception of discipline as a problem, and the constructive and destructive approaches to discipline that can be taken by the schools."

—The campaign for quality television programming: "Our successes have been heartwarming, but we cannot rest on our laurels when there are still challenges to be met. We can meet those challenges...and we already are, with the ongoing development of a television-viewing skills curriculum for the public schools. Designed to cover 10 subject areas, this effort could create a generation of children who would be selective television viewers."

(Mrs. Sparling, when a PTA first vice president, was chairman of the National PTA's TV Project aimed at reducing violence.)

—Problems of poor nutrition, alcohol use and abuse, human sexuality: The PTA in 1979-80 will run regional conferences focused on these issues. Students will help. "They should be involved in decision-making that directly affects their lives and welfare," said Mrs. Sparling, once a medical technologist. Some funding of this program will come from HEW's Bureau of Health Education and the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

—Improving nutritional quality of school food: "Our organization has joined forces with the U.S. Department of Agriculture and launched a major campaign to improve and expand child nutrition programs in public schools. Twenty state PTAs and PTSAs in September will be selected for planning grant awards." (The S in PTSA, by the way, for students — not all PTAs include them as a matter of course but more are.)

—Problems of urban education: Through six nationwide hearings held during last academic year, the PTA's Urban Education Project identified these tough problems in urban education: Inadequate financing, lack of parental or broad-based community participation in schools, low academic achievement and poor student performance, inability of schools to meet diverse needs of students, general unemployment and youth unemployment.

Mrs. Sparling said the problems of urban education are, in essence, not much different from the problems of suburban education — also suffering from a shortage of dollars in this era of double-digit inflation and out-of-sight fuel prices.

The "suburbans" also are feeling the effects of not enough parental involvement, violence in the schools, discipline dilemmas, the testing maze, diverse needs of students, academic achievement.

Mrs. Sparling in her travels sees a need in all schools for increased PTA-parental involvement in such priority areas as building greater community support for public education; initiating a national dialogue on the issue of school discipline and the use of corporal punishment; and examining standardized testing and its effect on children.

The National PTA also is an aggressive guardian of public education's funding — running around $1.638 per pupil per year, according to the National Center for Education Statistics.

As such the PTA — which does not include parents of non-public school children — sometimes comes into collision with supporters of non-public schools.

For example, the subject of proposed tuition tax credits for parents of non-public school children and the proposal of a "voucher" system.

PTA officials argue that the estimated $66 billion school funds for more than 45 million students in public schools would be drained somewhat if either system were approved by federal or state governments.

They claim making tuition tax credits legal might encourage parents of tens of thousands of children now in private schools.

And they see that as a bad thing which, of course, is where they part company with supporters of non-public schools.

The supporters of non-public schools argue this is simply making possible freedom of choice. The PTA argues it would weaken public education because, since public schools get so much in tax funds for each pupil, a lowering of enrollments would mean a lowering in what's in the cash box.

(Under a voucher system, each child, regardless of enrolling in a private or public school, would be given a voucher for so much money to be paid by the state or local or national treasury. The student could spend this money at a school of his choice: public or private.)

The National PTA marched to a coalition's drum and successfully, for the PTA beat down a tuition tax credit plan before Congress in recent months.

The same coalition, according to Mrs. Sparling, will battle a voucher system campaign emerging in two states — Michigan and California.

Both the tuition tax credit and voucher system proposals reach into higher education, not just secondary or elementary. At the higher education level, the public universities and colleges also tend to resist any changes that might take students from their ranks and put them into private colleges.

Ramparts on the other side of the battlefield are manned by the private school associations, including the National Catholic Education Association and the National Association of Private Colleges and Universities.

The schools they represent also are in stormy waters due to inflation and rising costs of everything. The survival of some are threatened.

The tug of war for the student — if the student comes complete with tax dollars attached — promises to be intense. And the National PTA knows it. Its allies in this battle against tuition tax credits and voucher systems come from the public sector and include the powerful National Education Association — the biggest teacher's union with 1.8 million members and a budget of $67 million.

Mrs. Sparling was asked to say a few words to the main characters in the nation's public school systems as the new school year opens. To students, parents, teachers, schoolboards. Here are her words:

—Teachers: "We parents appreciate teachers who are sensitive to our children's feelings and appreciative of those teachers who are aware that children vary in their understanding of what a teacher is trying to achieve."

—Students: "You are on an exciting adventure because learning is discovery. I would hope you will enjoy this adventure. Try to be partners with your teachers."

—Parents: "Join the PTA and keep up with what's happening in your school. And don't forget — you are your child's first teacher."

—Schoolboards: "We are in a partnership. Our children's education depends on us working together."

Objections To Advertisement

MILWAUKEE (AP) — An ad appearing in newspapers in 30 cities seeking to get Roman Catholics to work for change in their church's position against contraception has drawn a protest from the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights.

Michael Schwartz, executive director of the league, told the Providence, R. I., diocesan newspaper, the Providence Visitor, that the ad seeks to "divide the Catholic community and interfere with an internal affair."

Werner Fornos, director of the Washington-based Population Action Council which placed the ad, maintains it seeks only to bring the issue into wider discussion since many Catholics "obviously disagree" with the birth control ban.

The ad invites Catholics to join in working for change in the church teaching, as was recommended by a majority of a special commission set up on the subject by the late Pope Paul VI, who rejected its advice and reaffirmed the ban in 1968.

BOOKS DONATED
TORONTO (AP) — The Canadian National Institute for the Blind plans to donate 40,000 taped "talking books" and about 5,000 tape-playback machines to blind people in developing countries.

The more than 3,000 Canadian, American and French titles are part of CNIB's national lending collections of talking books. They are being phased out by a conversion to a system of four-track cassette.

4-Year-Old Tyrannizes Family

Our 4-year-old daughter tyrannizes the whole family. I'm sure it's because my husband lets her get away with murder because she is so darling to look at. I know we're heading for trouble, but I don't know how to handle it. — Mrs. J.H.D., Ohio.

Dear Mrs. D.:

When one recognizes the existence of a problem, the first major step is taken for its solution. You did not mention whether or not you, too, have fallen into the same trap as your husband in overindulging your daughter. At the age of 4, I should venture a guess that you and your husband are already more than three years overdo in establishing the proper approach to your child's behavior.

If there is any discrepancy in your attitudes, beware. For young children, even toddlers, have a built-in radar system which quickly picks up parental differences. Many of them have a charming, but diabolical, brilliance in recognizing when they have obtained the upper hand with one parent. That's when the tyranny starts.

Not long ago, there was an active intellectual and psychological battle between the defenders of permissiveness and those who believed in establishing firm limits. Adherents of permissiveness had their day, with results that were not too gratifying. More and more, the accepted attitude has shifted to set firmer rules of behavior for children.

It is undeniable that a child's security stems as much from the rules that are set down for him as it does from the parental love that he needs so much. It takes considerable effort and parental cooperation to realign a child's behavior when once the tyrannical dominance in the family has started. You might do well, even at your child's young age, to get proper psychological guidance to help you in your endeavors. You owe this to yourself and to your child.

I notice that I get hoarse at the beginning of my menstrual period. Everybody tells me I'm nuts. Do you think so? — Miss B.T., Minn.

Dear Miss T.:
No, indeed, I do not believe you are "nuts." In fact, you have made an observation that is well recognized by throat specialists. Sometimes the vocal cords become temporarily swollen during the menstrual period. The explanation might be that there is a general retention of fluids in some women during this phase.

It has also been suggested that a temporary hormone imbalance may be responsible for this transient hoarseness. The only treatment usually needed is vocal rest and perhaps the use of steam inhalation.

Do you smoke? That, too, might be a factor.

For The Farsighted: Your Coffin, Your Furniture

By DEBORAH FRAZIER

DENVER (UPI) — Some people want to be buried in their favorite outfit. Others want the company of cherished possessions in the grave. Al Birkedahl's customers have the option of being laid to rest in a bookcase, wine rack or coat closet.

As co-founder and co-owner of the Denver Casket Furniture Co., Birkedahl makes and markets plain pine boxes which are stained and outfitted to serve a wide range of earthly purposes prior to assuming their conventional function. The costs incurred in burying a relative started Birkedahl thinking about plain pine boxes. He decided, with his brother-in-law Wayne Hinrichs, to offer mortuaries an economical alternative.

"It is crazy to throw millions and millions of dollars into the ground," he said.

"The mortuaries do have wooden coffins," he said, "but they show you a plain, unstained model, lined with cheap grey cloth to look like death itself."

His sales pitch for handsomely finished pine boxes ran into a dead end. Mortuaries were not interested in nicely stained pine boxes, he said because they have long standing contracts with coffin manufacturers.

Birkedahl decided to bypass the mortuary and go directly to the potential occupant with the idea of using a wooden casket prior to its eventual and ultimate purpose.

For $89, unstained, the truly farsighted and unquiescent can buy a pine box, six feet long, in several variations of the known shape, complete with hinged lid, rope handles.

For $109, internal fittings are included for hanging clothes, stacking wine, shelving books or a host of other purposes. And for $139, the fittings and the stain of your choice are available.

Birkedahl said pecan is the most popular finish.

The concept of a close association with one's coffin prior to death dates back at least to the Egyptians, where kings built tombs and dictated elaborate decorations for their caskets, he said.

The contemporary attitude about death, by and large, leaves planning for the funeral until late in life if at all, Birkedahl said. Yet, he is hopeful the public's aversion to accepting or planning for death will change.

"We may be 20 years ahead of our time," he said. Wooden coffins can be viewed as a logical extension of the "natural" trend.

"It is a way to get away from the high cost of conventional caskets, which also slow the natural process of returning to the earth," he said. "You deteriorate in a $1,500 casket just as you would in a pine box."

Birkedahl went into business last November but ads for casket furniture brought few orders in competition with Christmas merchandising, he said. He and Hinrichs still have other jobs because demand still has not picked up much.

But what he lacks in volume, Birkedahl makes up for in variety of customers.

A priest bought three for use as bookcases to help parishioners accept death.

A woman installed a wine rack in her coffin, and has instructed her family to drink the wine at her demise and bury her in the casket.

A college instructor who teaches a class on death and dying has the bookcase model in her classroom.

A man had one lined with cedar, uses it for linen storage and plans to make the scented wood box his final resting place.

"There are people who got them as a prank, but that's part of growing too," said Birkedahl.

"Others are serious about being buried in them, but in the meantime they are being used."

Birkedahl, who admits his wife has refused to comply with his wish to be buried in a pine coffin, is open to suggestions on how to interest buyers.

Suing For Interest On Escrow

By GEORGE W. WILBUR
Associated Press Writer
RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Millions of homeowners across the nation have a stake in a court suit here challenging the right of lending institutions to collect escrow funds without paying interest.

If the eastern Virginia homeowners who filed the suit win it and survive subsequent appeals, a strong legal precedent could be established as it would be the first major decision in a federal court. It also would involve hundreds of millions of dollars.

Most lenders, in a practice that began in the 1930s, require monthly payments for taxes and insurance from people who take out mortgage loans, besides payments to reduce the principal of the loan.

Seldom is the borrower given the option of paying the tax and insurance bills on his own. Instead, the lender holds the money in escrow, invests it and earns interest between tax payments.

Lenders insist they have a right to protect the security of their loans. Without such payments, they say, many borrowers would default on their taxes — and a tax lien would be slapped on the property.

But while the banks and savings and loan associations earn investment income from escrow funds, they rarely pay interest to the borrower. And some say the income barely covers the costs of administering the funds.

Since 1972, however, at least 10 states have responded to court pressure by requiring lending institutions to pay interest or make other concessions on escrow funds.

Most federal cases involving escrow funds have been settled out of court, usually with the homeowner gaining the right to earn minimal interest or to pay their own taxes and insurance.

The Virginia case, filed almost two years ago by 14 mortgage holders in the Norfolk-Virginia Beach area, names 38 lending institutions as defendants.

As described by one lawyer, it has become "a paper war" with thousands of pages of motions, counter-motions, depositions and interrogatories.

A motion by the defendants to dismiss the case awaits a ruling by U.S. District Court Judge D. Dortch Warriner.

The homeowners charge a violation of numerous federal laws through a conspiracy by the defendants to make escrow payments a condition of a loan.

They maintain also that the failure to pay interest on this money actually inflates the stated rate of interest on the loan.

One lawyer said Warriner has a wide range of alternatives if he decides in favor of the plaintiffs.

He could order the lending institutions to stop making escrow payments a condition of a loan, or to pay interest on escrow funds voluntarily paid, or both.

Lawyers and the plaintiffs were reluctant to comment on the case while it is still before the court.

But others familiar with the case were less restrained.

Taylor Cousins of Richmond, a real estate man and member of the board of the Consumer Congress of Virginia, said that while his group has no official position he personally feels borrowers should be given an option.

"It is obvious these lending institutions are getting free use of people's money. If they can give away dishes or luggage to attract business, why can't they use escrow interest as a competitive tool?"

Robert Miller, a Richmond homeowner, said his escrow payments total over $1,000 a year.

"I'm perfectly capable of paying my own taxes and insurance and I would have more money to do it with if I could earn interest on what the bank takes from me every month," he said.

But lenders say they should receive the payments for protection, and that not many homeowners feel the way Miller does.

"Most borrowers like the idea of taking care of their loan, taxes and insurance all in one payment," said Edward Brooks of Richmond, president of Security-Federal and vice president of the U.S. League of Savings Associations.

John B. Cutter, president of Citizens Savings & Loan, said the escrow practice saves the customer from having to pay a whopping tax and insurance bill at the end of the year.

"We really haven't had that much negative feedback on it," he said.

Also, Cutter said, it is a great help to the taxing authorities to be able to send one bill to a lending institution instead of hundreds or perhaps thousands of bills to separate homeowners.

Brooks insisted the investment income from escrow funds barely covers expenses.

"To administer these funds is very costly," he said.

If lending institutions were forced to pay interest on these funds, Cutter said, "it would be just another cost of business that would have to be passed on to the customer."

All indications are that the Virginia suit is a long way from coming to trial. Like others before it, it could end without a clear-cut legal victory for either side.

The second work Carvajal will choreograph for the N. C. Dance Theater is "Green," set to the music of Japanese composer Toru Takamitsu.

Watercraft Festival Scheduled

BEAUFORT — The largest gathering of small craft in the Southeast will be held again in Beaufort during the last weekend in September in the Fifth Annual Heritage Watercraft Exhibit, sponsored by Hampton Mariners Museum.

The two day event, on Saturday and Sunday, September 29 and 30, is expected to draw 40 to 50 wooden boats ranging in size from eight to 40 feet.

Of special interest this year will be the products of the Heritage Boat Shop, a project of the Friends of the Museum, who along with the Museum seek to preserve the art of fashioning wood into boats.

Boatbuilder Geoffrey Scofield of Southend, England, is the artist-builder retained to provide the experience and skill needed to carry out this program.

Other events being firmed up will provide information and entertainment to more than 2,000 persons expected to attend. These will include slides of previous shows, and informative series on traditional small craft, boatbuilding, and sailing subjects to be held periodically during the weekend.

Any wooden boat of either amateur or professional construction is eligible for the show — whether designed for sailing, rowing, paddling or powered. An opportunity will be provided for all boats to be demonstrated in the water. A regatta for wooden sailing craft is the traditional cap-off for the two day affair.

The exhibit will be held on the newly renovated waterfront in Beaufort. Special guest speaker will be Lance Lee, Director of the Apprenticeship of the Bath Marine Museum, Bath, Maine.

Prospective exhibitors and regatta participants are asked to check with Hampton Mariners Museum at least a week prior to the show to reserve dock or exhibit space. For more information or registration forms write: Hampton Mariners Museum, 120 Turner St., Beaufort, N.C., 28516 or phone 728-7317.

Callahan will be shown. Gallery C, until September 19, will have 70 works by 11 photographers from central and western North Carolina. After September 28, the Callahan show will be followed by a show from exhibiting members of Winston-Salem's "Gallery 25."

All galleries are open to the public weekdays from 9 to 5, and Sundays from 2 to 5.

Photographs On View

HIGH POINT — Photographs are being featured in current exhibits at the High Point Art Council, Inc. at the High Point Theater and Exhibition Center, 220 East Commerce Street.

The nucleus of the show, in Gallery B, will be the Kodak International Newspaper Snapshot Awards Exhibit (KINSA). In the Main Gallery an exhibit of 60 urban photographs by Harry

Callahan will be shown. Gallery C, until September 19, will have 70 works by 11 photographers from central and western North Carolina. After September 28, the Callahan show will be followed by a show from exhibiting members of Winston-Salem's "Gallery 25."

All galleries are open to the public weekdays from 9 to 5, and Sundays from 2 to 5.

Arsenal Show

FAYETTEVILLE — A show of original needlework goes on display today at the Arsenal House, 822 Arsenal Ave., Fayetteville. An opening reception is being held from 2 to 4 p.m. with the public invited. The show will remain on view through September.

SECC Show To Open

WINSTON-SALEM — The 47th Competition for Painting and Sculpture, a juried show at the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Art, 750 Marguerite Drive, Winston-Salem, opens Saturday, September 8 and will be on view through October 18.

The competition attracted 1,269 entries from 272 artists in the eleven state southeastern region applicable to the competition.

Dianne Vanderlip, Curator of Contemporary Art at the Denver Art Museum selected 77 works by 44 artists for the exhibition. Included in the show are works designated by Ms. Vanderlip and R. J. Reynolds Industries as Purchase Award Winners.

Among artists whose work were chosen are two from Greenville — Clarence E. Morgan with three works and Jan Welborn with two works. Another artist, Aaron Karp, until this summer director of the Gray Gallery on the ECU campus, is also represented in the show.

Also on view at SECCA at this time (in Gallery A) is an exhibition titled "Paper Making and Paper Using," which represents 15 southeastern artists who either make paper or utilize paper in unusual ways. After its SECCA showing, the exhibition will travel to four other southeastern museums under the auspices of the Southern Arts Federation.

SECCA hours are 10-5 Tuesday through Saturday, and 2-5 on Sunday, and the shows are open to the public without charge.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By June Parker

Sheppard Memorial Library has recently obtained several new books which examine some of the social forces that have been active at various periods in United States history. DECIDING WHAT'S NEWS: A STUDY OF CBS EVENING NEWS, NBC NIGHTLY NEWS, NEWSWEEK AND TIME by Herbert Gans is a view of journalism from the cultural sociologist's standpoint. Gans concentrates on the roles and subconscious assumptions of the news creators as well as the mores of the journalists' world. This book is not a critique of TV news or the news magazines but an analysis of how the news media shape the news as well as being shaped by it.

THE WHITE ALBUM is by Joan Didion who has earned a reputation as one of the finest writers in America as a gifted observer and interpreter of American doubts, feelings, and realities. Through her eyes, one can perceive more vividly the truth about this time and generation; where America has been and where it is going. In THE WHITE ALBUM, she examines the feelings and fears that began in the late sixties as she remembers and interprets the national mood as demonstrated by the Manson Family, motorcycle cults, the women's movement, the Black Panthers, Berkeley, the story of the California governors' mansions, and shopping malls in this picture puzzle of people, events, and things in the sixties and seventies.

BEEN IN THE STORM SO LONG: THE AFTERMATH OF SLAVERY by Leon F. Litwack is based on interviews with ex-slaves and diaries and accounts written by former slave holders. It is study of black life in the South from the Civil War to the turn of the century. Litwack explores the many sides of slavery's collapse. Throughout the war and the years after, the two races in the South interacted in ways which dramatized not only a mutual dependency but the frighten tensions and ambiguities that had existed in the institution of slavery. The principal actors in this drama are the four million black men and women for whom slavery made up their entire memory, not the political machinations, government edicts, or the military occupations of this time. Here in this carefully researched record of the era, the experiences of the newly freed slaves come to life.

Lone Ranger Loses His Mask

LONE RANGER GOES TO COURT... Actor Clayton Moore, who for years portrayed the role of "The Lone Ranger" on TV, appeared in court Thursday to fight for the right to continue the role in public appearances. He lost, when Superior Court Judge Vernon Foster ruled in favor of a TV company which bought all rights to the Lone Ranger character for $3 million in 1954. (AP Laserphoto)

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — What no black-hatted cowboy villain could accomplish in more than 200 episodes of "The Lone Ranger," a Superior Court judge has ordered actor Clayton Moore to do — take off his mask.

Moore, who played television's "masked rider of the plains" from 1949 to 1957, had tears in his eyes when he heard of the decision by Judge Vernon Foster. Moore waited outside the courtroom Thursday because he refused to take off his white cowboy hat.

"I have been the Lone Ranger for 30 years, and I will not give up the fight," said Moore, who left with his black mask still in place.

Foster granted a preliminary injunction sought by Lone Ranger Television Inc., a subsidiary of the Wrather Corp., which bought all rights to the Lone Ranger character for $3 million in 1954.

He ruled Wrather Corp. has a property right in the character, and upheld Wrather's claim that Moore had signed away for a handsome price all rights to portray himself as the hero of the Old West.

The injunction forbids Moore to wear in public "the Lone Ranger mask or any mask substantially similar in appearance."

Moore's lawyer, Robert Michaels, argued the judge would destroy a treasured mystique if he forced Moore to show his face in public.

"The Lone Ranger has never been unmasked," said Michaels, "and I don't think it's proper that this court unmask him."

Wrather attorney Joel Boxer said the company is launching a film with a new Lone Ranger and wants Moore unmasked to avoid confusion.

Wrather has said the 64-year-old Moore is too old to represent the masked man who rode the West on a white horse and fired trademark silver bullets. When Moore was summoned into court to show the judge his trim physique and youthful appearance, he was still wearing the black mask.

Edgecombe County... a Brief History. By Alan D. Watson. Raleigh, N.C., N. C. Dept. of Cultural Resources, Div. of Archives and History. Paper. 109 pages, illustrated. $1.50. (Plus 50 cents postage).

Rocky Mount native Dr. Alan D. Watson, currently on the faculty at UNC-Wilmington, is an accomplished hand at writing about historical subjects.

This compact history of one of Pitt's neighboring counties packs in an amazing amount of interesting information on Edgecombe County in a little more than 100 pages.

Watson has divided his material into three parts — "1732-1789," "1790-1865," and "1865 to the present."

In many respects the history of Edgecombe County, especially in earlier days, parallels social, cultural, religious, political and economic developments of all eastern North Carolina. Thus, although Watson has only referred to events outside his home ground when essential to the context of his material, the book can be enjoyed both for its central subject and as a general overview of Tar Heel life over a long span of years.

In fact, the only major fault I have is that the author did not take the opportunity to expand his material to give it a broader, more leisurely feel. It all ends too soon.

Time and again, Dr. Watson pens nuggets of information that intrigue — brief statements of the kind that will surely prod many readers to seek out more detailed information to satisfy their curiosity. For example:

— (In pre-revolutionary years) — "The justices of the peace, who nominated sheriffly candidates, appointed numerous county officials, and generally exercised a stranglehold on county affairs."

— (Internal strife and torn loyalties in 1781) — "Although the redcoats quickly moved on, a civil war between patriots and loyalists ensued in the county for another eighteen months, resulting in the loss of life and property and the eventual departure of many who had supported the British crown."

— (Population figures in the late 1700's) — "Government officials were concerned only with 'taxables,' defined as white males sixteen years of age and older and black males and females twelve years of age and older, because they served as the basis for the levying of poll taxes."

— (Insight into the wealth of a tradesman) — "At his death, Constant Devotion, a hatter, not only left 28 beaver skins and 33 beaver hats but 155 raccoon skins, 4 otter skins, and 5 muskrat skins."

— (Cultural affairs) — "... horse racing, cockfighting, cards, and dice evidently occupied an excessive amount of the men's time, judging from the legal restrictions imposed upon those activities..." and "Edgecombes... imbibed alcoholic beverages on a grand scale... Drinking at William Maund's funeral so exceeded expectations that a man had to be sent to Tarboro twice to purchase more rum."

— (Use of tax money in the late 1700's) — "In some years more than 70 percent of the tax revenues were devoted to that purpose" (to financing bridge constructions across streams, primarily Tar River).

The rough and ready quality of politics is amply revealed in Watson's account of politics and politicians in the 75 year period between the adoption of the U.S. Constitution and the end of the Civil War. The turbulence of the era in which Americans were finding themselves as an expanding nation is reflected within the confines of Edgecombe County.

Other major issues — the role of education, the place assigned to blacks, the relegation of females to secondary roles, are given due coverage; and men and units active in Civil War are sketched in.

The age old specter of inflation existed — "In March, 1838, shad were so scarce that they sold for as much as 30 cents each."

A medical horror story deals with a mistake made by Dr. James Smith, who through error sent live smallpox crusts rather than vaccine fluid to Dr. John Ward in Edgecombe, with the result that "Ward shortly found that his inoculations in the Tarboro area had inaugurated an epidemic which eventually took the lives of fifty to sixty persons."

Ups and downs of agriculture, the coming of railroads, attempts to establish a viable steamship service on the Tar River, household furnishings, clothing, home distilleries, home medicinal remedies, town ordinances (including a prohibition in Tarboro of keeping cows in the streets at night), the post Civil War exodus of Negroes to the north, and the growth of manufacturing in the 20th century are all subjects encompassed in this admirable local history.

This is the seventh publication by the N. C. Division of Archives and History of histories of North Carolina counties.

Dr. Watson's history of Edgecombe County is not only informative and impressive for the ground it covers, it is also good reading.

Eyes Of Schoolchildren Go Back To Work, Too

As children return to the classroom, more than new shoes and notebooks will be involved.

Claims Marathon Dance Record

NEW YORK (UPI) — J.C. Stare of York, Pa., is claiming a world record for marathon dancing, modern style, of 332 hours (13 days, 20 hours).

Stare performed the feat recently at a New York hotel in a fundraising promotion for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, which sponsors the annual TV Jerry Lewis Labor Day telethon. The record Stare broke, according to the Guinness Book of Records, was 329½ hours by Keith Leriche, Port au Basque, Newfoundland, in April.

Children's eyes go back to work, too — scanning blackboards, skimming page after page of textbooks, and cramming the written word onto lined paper.

The North Carolina Society of Ophthalmology reminds parents that periodic eye exams are important beginning in nursery school. Dr. Ernest W. Larkin, Jr., president of the Society, cautioned that "A child should have his eyes examined for the first time by an ophthalmologist at the age of three. If an eye problem is found this early, it is usually easy to correct.

Dr. Larkin pointed out that the most frequent cause of poor vision in the young child is amblyopia, commonly known as "lazy eye." With this condition, the child can not see as well with one eye as he can with the other.

It is particularly important that "lazy eye" be diagnosed before the age of four since it responds to treatment more readily at this age. Crossed eyes are the second most common childhood eye problem.

In recent years, dyslexia and learning disability have become phrases haunting parents of school-age children.

"Parents can catch eye problems early by being sensitive to a child's complaints, appearance and behavior. If a child complains of blurred vision, letters that run together or eyes that burn, his eyes should be checked."

Headaches, dizziness, tiredness, even nausea after close eye work are further hints that should not be ignored. Frowning, squinting, stumbling over small objects, inflamed or watery eyes may also indicate a vision problem.

"It is not safe to assume that just because a child's vision has been rated perfect, it will remain so," said Dr. Larkin. "A child's eyes grow along with the child, and his vision should be checked just like his shoe size."

Swift Current Can Feasibly Be Harnessed

Mountain Streams May Be Source Of Electricity

By Tom Corbitt, Director, Appalachian State University News Bureau

BOONE — The scenic rushing streams around this mountain area may also be a valuable source of electrical power — and a source which can be used without destroying the streams' natural beauty.

Dr. Harvard Ayers, an associate professor of anthropology at Appalachian State University and the conservation chairman of the local Sierra Club chapter, believes that large amounts of electricity can be generated from the many small streams in the mountains using small hydro turbine engine systems already available.

Measured Two Streams

Ayers and his colleagues already have measured two streams here and calculated that one — which has a large waterfall — could produce enough electricity for ten homes, while a second could produce enough electricity for 50 homes.

The anthropologist hopes to install a demonstration hydro generating system along the stream which can produce electricity for 50 homes and he has submitted a $21,345.12 grant proposal to the U.S. Department of Energy for the demonstration system and a survey of 17 streams in Watauga and Caldwell counties.

The proposal has been backed by Blue Ridge Electric Membership Cooperative — the local electric company which is now operating the large windmill atop Howard's Knob to produce energy for up to 500 homes.

Nothing New, Novel

"There's nothing new or novel about hydro power in general, but this type of production is quite rare in the Eastern United States," says Ayers.

"Here in the mountains we have many streams with a small volume of water which drop rapidly over a short distance. In many cases, the force of the water along this steep drop could be used to produce as much power as a much larger stream without having to change the course or dam up the stream," Ayers commented.

Further, Ayers contends, the small hydro turbine-generators already on the market could be bought and installed at a cost which already is competitive with that of producing a kilowatt of electricity via construction of a nuclear plant.

And, he adds, the cost of small hydro generating systems could be greatly decreased with mass production.

Dutch Creek An Example

Ayers uses as an example Dutch Creek in the Valle Crucis area of Watauga County. He and his colleagues recently measured the amount of water coming down Dutch Creek Falls.

According to their calculations, by using only one-fourth the water that typically flows down the 90-foot-high falls, enough electricity for the needs of ten average homes could be generated via a small hydro turbine. The normal flow of the falls is some 400 cubic feet of water per minute.

Even better, Ayers points out, is Craborchard Creek also in the Valle Crucis area which has a vertical drop of some 700 feet along a one-mile stretch near the Valle Crucis Mission School and the ASU Earth Studies Center.

"That creek is just one little waterfall after another," Ayers says. "Given that amount of flow and drop, we estimate conservatively, that we could generate enough electricity for 50 homes."

Craborchard Set Up

It is along Craborchard Creek that Ayers proposes to set up an 11 kilowatt hydro turbine. The system would include a 1,200-foot-long piece of eight-inch plastic pipe which would drop some 220 vertical feet along its course. The water could be fed into an 11 kilowatt hydro turbine and generator.

A step-up transformer also would be required to integrate the power generated into the Blue Ridge Electric power system, and revision of N.C. Utility Commission regulations would be required for the power produced to be fed to Blue Ridge Electric, Ayers says.

The demonstration equipment would cost approximately $13,110, and Ayers has requested a total of $15,731.23 for the demonstration project.

His request to the Department of Energy includes another $4,956 to be used to survey 17 streams in the area believed to be suitable for producing electricity. The survey would involve an estimated 1,320 miles of travel and the work would be done by Ayers, selected faculty from ASU, and members of the local Sierra Club.

Survey Goal

The goal of the survey would be to come up with an estimate of how much electricity could be produced from streams in the area.

After the project, persons who worked on the project would join with Blue Ridge Electric to offer to the public low cost or free appraisal of streams on their property as a potential source to generate electricity.

Ayers estimates that the cost of producing electricity with small hydro turbines will be about $1,000 to $1,200 per kilowatt. By comparison, the cost of nuclear power plants now under construction average $1,000 to $1,500 per kilowatt hour, according to Ayers.

"We feel that the streams in Watauga County can be used to produce a significant proportion of the electrical needs of the county, and use of these streams is an energy source that is environmentally non-damaging. The streams are renewable and the water essentially is free," Ayers says.

"Our project," he remarks, "could lead to an appraisal of the potential of small hydroelectric generation in the entire mountain area throughout the Eastern United States. We believe it has the potential to make many homes or groups of homes self-sufficient in electricity."

ONE LITTLE WATERFALL AFTER ANOTHER . . . Dr. Harvard Ayers, an anthropologist at Appalachian State University, surveys a section of Craborchard Creek in Watauga County. The mountainous creek has a vertical drop of 700 feet along a one-mile stretch. Ayers plans to install a small turbine generating system along the creek as the demonstration part of a project to survey mountain streams as a source of electrical energy.

Stone Carver For The Washington Cathedral

Palumbo's A Dying Art?

By Jules Loh, AP Correspondent

UPPER MARLBORO, Md. (AP) — Vincenzo Palumbo works slowly, patiently at what must be the most unhurried project in America, yet there is a note of urgency in his voice.

"I am the last stone carver working on the last monument to a classic art and architecture, the last great masterpiece."

"But I have no apprentices to train, no young person who wants to learn my craft. If there were more work, there would be more stone carvers. Is mine a dying art?"

Palumbo toils four days a week at the Washington Cathedral.

The statue of Erasmus on the north side of the great edifice, that is Palumbo's work. The keystone on the main vault depicting the Nativity is his work also. The archangels on the south entrance are not his work. They are the work of his father.

So if Vincenzo Palumbo's is a dying art, it would be a personal as well as an artistic tragedy. He represents the fifth generation of stone carvers in his family.

"The cathedral is part of my life," he said. "I am proud that my hand is in it, and my father's hand. I don't believe there will ever be another building like it; so it is the last chance for a stone carver to be a part of a great work."

He might be right. The soaring Gothic cathedral has been a-building, carving by carving, stone by stone since 1907 and the last stone is still nowhere in sight.

Because art is seldom cost-efficient, financing has been a problem from the start. Work speeds up as money trickles in. Of a current goal to raise $15 million, a third has been collected. Progress right now is slow.

"When I began working there in 1961 we had 12 or 13 carvers. We had to work on Saturdays to keep up with the stone masons. Now I am the only carver and I work four days a week. At one time I was down to 2½ days."

"When I don't work there I work here, at home, in my shop. I pick up work where I can. Right now I am repairing the broken ear of a stone lion for the University of Pennsylvania."

"If I didn't have the work at the cathedral I would have to work here and there, like a gypsy. That is the life of most stone carvers. That is why there are so few."

Vincenzo Palumbo looks like what a stone carver ought to look like. He has solid shoulders, hard hands, piercing brown eyes and a thick brown mustache. He is 43. His speech is rich with the lyrical accents of his native tongue.

He was born in Molfetta, Italy, an ancient village along the Appian Way, a road fashioned by stonemasons for the Roman Empire two millennia ago.

"The sad thing is that there is work at the cathedral for stone carvers for 30, 40, 50 more years. There are hundreds more carvings to do but they don't have the money."

"Will there be anyone to do those carvings?"

"I am the president of the stone carvers' union. It is a proud union. They tell me it is the oldest union in America."

"We have five members. No apprentices."

Cathedral, a project which began in 1907 and which is still years from completion. (AP Laserphoto)

John Heaton's Avocation, A Census Of Cemeteries

By Jerry Williamson, News Bureau, Appalachian State University

BOONE — John Heaton hangs around graveyards a lot. For the past four years he has been taking a complete census of all the burials in Watauga County, and he has discovered many interesting things.

When Heaton isn't out in some remote Watauga County burying ground filling in index cards or legal pads with the names and dates and other data that are still legible on headstones, he is an acquisitions librarian at Appalachian State University.

Since he began his project, Heaton has recorded some 4,000 burials in 135 different cemeteries, and he believes that he has not yet visited even half of Watauga County's public and private burial grounds.

Many of those 135 cemeteries are tiny family plots scattered all over this mountainous county and dating back to the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Many of them originally served large families or small community groups who found travel to the county-seat difficult and sometimes impossible.

Heaton began his census-taking project innocently enough, with no intention of letting it get so out of hand. Back a few years ago he took an Appalachian Studies course at ASU, and for his class project he decided to conduct a census of the few cemeteries within Boone's city limits.

The result of that effort was so interesting and satisfactory that it was taken and placed in the special Appalachian materials collection in the ASU library. Heaton hopes that his census-taking is of particular usefulness to genealogical researchers and historians.

In his enumeration of the city burials in Boone, Heaton found many grave sites of considerable historical interest. Like the headstone for Ransom Hayes (died 1862) in the small Hayes family cemetery; "He gave Watauga County 25 Acres of Land, One Half of Original County Cite Where Boone Is Now Located."

One of the oldest burials that Heaton has found was located near the Blowing Rock golf course. The old fieldstone marker had only a date — 1740 — and a single initial G still legible. One local legend has it that this particular grave contains a slave buried in a hollow log, but Heaton has found nothing to substantiate that story.

Not many marked burials dating from the 1700's still survive in Watauga County, although there are many still extant from the early 19th century. According to Heaton, some of the earliest graves are in the western (Meat Camp) area of the county, but he has so far devoted himself to a census of the eastern portion of the county and to Boone.

He is eager to move his project to the older, western end of the county.

Cemeteries are naturally melancholy places, but Heaton's research has led him to even sadder spectacles — like the little family cemetery he discovered off the Blue Ridge Parkway. It lies in a cow pasture, and most of the headstones have been knocked over and trampled by grazing cows. Presumably, that family has all died out or moved away, and there is no one left to keep up the plot.

"But some of the prettiest, best kept up and well groomed cemeteries I've seen are just little family cemeteries," Heaton commented.

Over the years, Heaton has developed his own methodology for taking the census of a burying ground. He had found, for example, that burials have been invariably made facing the east.

The best time to visit the burying ground, Heaton says, is after the first frost or after the snow melts in late spring. Stones that were previously hidden will suddenly appear, and slight depressions in the ground — the sign of an unmarked grave — will be clearer. "There's also not so much danger of snakes at those times, either," he points out.

Heaton has been working his way through Watauga County's cemeteries with the help of an excellent map published by the Stout Map Company in Greensboro. The map was drawn from topographical charts from the United States Geological Survey and shows many of the existing cemeteries. "But many aren't marked," Heaton says.

For the obscure and the forgotten burying grounds, Heaton relies on local informants, old histories and other books, and tips from interested friends. He is also busy going through microfilmed copies of the earliest newspapers in the county, recording all the available genealogical information that was printed in them, including both deaths and births.

RECORDING THE PAST — Librarian John Heaton of Appalachian State University is recording the history of mountain families in Watauga County via a census of graveyards. Heaton is

Lives Changed By Exchange Student Experiences

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer
QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — They come for a year to experience America, practice their English, learn to love hamburgers and the freedom of being a teen-ager in a nation that worships youth.

Then they go back home to their own country, carting with them boxes of scrapbooks and trendy clothes, radical ideas that shock their parents and an image of the United States that will last a lifetime.

The foreign exchange student, awkward on the first day of classes, unsure of the system, a minor celebrity singled out by the principal and fussed over by the teachers. They were shy and embarrassed by the attention, but bursting with pride at being chosen to go to the promised land.

Whatever happened to the kids with strange names and averages whose faces stare out of our high school yearbooks?

Remigio Izquierdo, Class of '73, Hubbard High School, Hubbard, Ohio, is an electronics whiz kid who tracks satellites for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and dreams of working for NASA in the United States.

Leticia Altamirano, Class of '74, Northeast High School, Kansas City, Mo., is in her final year of law school, one of only three women in the class, and wants to buck a centuries-old legal system that favors the rich and discriminates against peasants.

Both are Ecuadorians, live in this capital city, and are casual acquaintances. Besides being alumni of the international student exchange program AFS, formerly American Field Service, they have many more things in common.

They come from upper-middle class homes, had educated parents and studied English in their private Ecuadorian high schools.

In the past 30 years, 972 Ecuadorians have gone to the United States for a year under the auspices of the AFS, while 406 Americans have come south to sample Ecuadorian life. Today there are AFS veterans scattered throughout the fabric of this beautiful Andean nation's life. They are becoming leaders of business, finance, government, medicine, the judiciary, and the arts.

"We have placed Ecuadorian kids in every state except Alaska," said Juan Rodriguez, the country's AFS director. "Every year we have about 250 applicants whose parents are willing to pay $1,500 to send them to the States for a year."

The list is narrowed to 80, "and if there's enough money, about 50 kids fly north in July."

Host communities must pay $925 to sponsor a student. Families and their young visitors are matched by mutual interests. Today a computer and personal interviews determine compatibility.

Remigio Izquierdo has no doubts about wanting to go back to the United States to live. The strapping, athletic, and handsome young electronics expert is already earning $2,000 a month as a shift supervisor at the NASA tracking station clustered atop a mountain 40 miles south of Quito, supervising 40 employees.

He spent the 1971-72 school year living with John and Theresa Carano in Hubbard, a suburb of Youngstown, and got hooked on America.

He was pushed into going by his father, now presiding judge of the Superior Court in Rio-bamba, because he wanted to get married. He was only 17.

"I had studied English for seven years, made good grades in math and calculus, and was a bit of a charmer," he said, a wide grin spreading across his face. "When I went to Hubbard, I was in classes with girls for the first time. I loved it. Soon I wanted to get married again, but it didn't work out. I made the basketball team, then got kicked off for smoking and drinking. So I joined the Kiwanis Club."

Another grin.

In one year, Remigio Izquierdo became the "All-American Boy." Carano taught him how to play golf, introduced him to hardware stores, took him fishing and camping, and welcomed him as a part-time employee in his dry cleaning business.

"For the first time, I had a best friend — Chuck Rosile, he's still in Hubbard," said Izquierdo, now 24. "The best thing I found in America was friendship. I was one of the guys."

Back home in Quito, he accepted a scholarship to study electronics. The sponsoring company, Engineering Services (ESCO), employed American instructors "and you had to know a lot of English to make the grade. My year in the States gave me that opportunity. Without it, I wouldn't be where I am now."

He's worked for ESCO, and therefore NASA, for the past five years.

Leticia Altamirano had already spent a year in the United States when she went to Kansas City in 1973. Her father, an agricultural photographer, studied at the University of Wisconsin in Madison in 1966. Her English was excellent, and she said it gave her a real boost in adjusting to her senior year at Northeast High.

Her AFS parents were William and Donna James. Their daughter Mitzi, now 21, became her best friend, and has visited her in Quito.

"I think they really love me," she said, twisting the high school class ring given to her by the James family.

"They were the first people who made me believe that anything I wanted to be, I could be, anything I wanted to do, I could do," said the 22-year-old.

James was an auto mechanic, a handyman around the house who taught Leticia how to use a hammer and screwdriver, how to depend on herself to fix things instead of waiting for a gardener or maid to do it.

At Northeast she made friends with black students, and was shocked at white adult disapproval.

"I hated the discrimination, and the criticism made me think about it long and hard for the first time. I realized that here we have discrimination too ... I made up my mind I wanted to be a lawyer and work for poor people. My father is appalled. He said I wasn't tough enough, that it isn't a job for a woman in Ecuador."

"But when I went to the United States, I got courage. And I'm going to do my own thing."

Shirley Jones Enjoys Series

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Shirley Jones says the things that drive other actors away from series television are what appeal to her the most.

To prove her point, she's signed up with NBC for a new comedy-drama called "Shirley."

"It's an hour long so I don't know what I'm getting into. But I like series. A lot of actors don't agree. They say it's stifling and very hard," says Shirley, who starred in "The Partridge Family" series 10 years ago.

"I've had to travel around so much in this business, never knowing where I'd be. I like the routine, and if the stories are good it can be stimulating."

"Shirley" is a pioneering effort in one sense. It's the first prime-time show to be developed by an advertising agency since NBC president Fred Silverman called nearly a year ago for the agencies to become active again in program development.

In the 1950s it was the agencies, not the networks, who created the shows and owned them. Eventually, rising costs and maneuvers by the networks to gain control put an end to the practice. The only holdover is "The Hallmark Hall of Fame," plus some daytime shows.

"Shirley" was developed by Grey Advertising for Procter and Gamble — TV's biggest advertiser — in association with Universal Television. The whole advertising industry has its eye on "Shirley" and is awaiting its fate. If it succeeds, you can expect to see more advertiser involvement. If it fails, it will be business as usual.

Shirley admits she has concern that the show is on NBC, where many new series in the past year have quickly disappeared.

"I don't think you can be alive and not worry about that," she says. "But if there ever was a network to climb up the ladder again, it's NBC. That's a plus."

"Shirley," which premieres Oct. 26, is about a recently widowed woman who packs up her four children — three of her own and one stepchild — and moves from New York to Lake Tahoe. There she takes a job as a substitute teacher.

Shirley says, "My own life parallels the character somewhat, and I think the public knows that."

Shirley is the mother of three sons, Patrick, Ryan and Shaun Cassidy, and stepmother of David Cassidy. Their father and Shirley's former husband, Jack Cassidy, died in a fire. David and Shaun are singing stars and actors, and Shirley says she expects Patrick to soon follow in their footsteps.

Carter Shares Same Problem Confronting FDR

By DON McLEOD

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In those days, nearly 40 years ago, when people spotted a gasoline tanker truck wending its ways through city streets, motorists would form a line, sometimes a mile long, and follow it to its destination.

That was World War II. Today we have what President Carter calls the moral equivalent of war. He and the late Franklin D. Roosevelt faced the same problem — how to mobilize an energy-dependent people to solve an energy crisis.

In World War II, if you didn't have a war job, or a medical degree or some other exemption, you got two gallons of gas a week, maybe. If you parked outside a theater, you could be turned in for joyriding and your ration books were forfeit.

But President Carter shares one of President Roosevelt's biggest problems — breaking up the romance between the American and his car. There are other parallels — the same doubt and suspicion, business reluctance, Congressional wariness, costs, taxes, bureaucracy. In World War II, for the first time, Americans were told they would have to change their lifestyle, make do with less. Just about everything went to war — mom's nylons, dad's garden hose. Energy was just part of it. There were other shortages: tobacco, sugar, ice cream, meat, all foodstuffs. Eventually, 40 percent of the country's vegetables were produced in backyard Victory Gardens.

Travel? Impossible. You couldn't drive, needed a priority for a plane ticket. No express buses. You stood in line for hours for a train ticket and, likely, all the way to Florida or wherever.

But even in wartime many citizens took the restrictions and regulations grudgingly. Everyone had a bagful of excuses for more gas, more meat and a private phone.

World War II was the best thing to happen to hijackers since Prohibition, and the black market boomed. Counterfeiting ration stamps was such a prosperous operation that the mobs took it over.

In 1943, when the war was entering a critical stage, the government banned all pleasure driving to conserve fuel. But the public uproar was so great, it was revoked before the year was out — at the very moment the Allies were stocking up for the Normandy invasion.

When gas rationing began on the East Coast in 1942 because of tanker losses to German submarines, no less than 200 Congressmen demanded and got "X" priorities, allowing themselves unlimited gasoline.

Although rationing was necessary for the whole country to conserve fuel and rubber, Roosevelt delayed imposing it until after the 1942 elections, almost a year after Pearl Harbor.

Roosevelt got practically nothing out of Congress in the way of preparedness before Pearl Harbor. Even after the attack it took a full year to get the first war finance tax bill passed. Small wonder Carter is having trouble getting standby rationing authority and a windfall profits tax out of a peace-time Congress.

Carter has proposed three new agencies to manage his war. Roosevelt created more than the alphabet could bear.

The War Production Board was the big one. The WPB had to force a reluctant civilian economy, still recovering from the Great Depression, into a mighty war machine.

For the automobile industry 1941 was the first boom year since the crash of '29. The same was true for other businessmen. Just when people were starting to buy, Uncle Sam was asking them to stop.

It was Henry L. Stimson, Roosevelt's Republican secretary of war, who finally hit on the secret formula for cooperation.

"If you are going to try to go to war, or prepare for war, in a capitalist country," Stimson said, "you've got to let business make money out of the process or business won't work."

It's the same argument today. Let oilmen make money and they will provide the energy we need. Carter has started a phased decontrol of domestic petroleum prices which the oil industry says will encourage exploration and production.

Carter also has called for an Energy Mobilization Board, which he says, "like the War Production Board in World War II, will have the responsibility and authority to cut through the red tape, the delays and the endless roadblocks to completing key energy projects."

The three-member board would have the authority to set deadlines for federal, state and local action on energy proposals and could waive procedural steps if it feels speed is in the national interest. Other than that, it would rely on jawboning, moral persuasion, or public embarrassment to get the job done.

The WPB — with 15,000 employees and hundreds of sub-agencies and committees — was virtually all powerful. It could close plants, build them, set priorities, ration and distribute raw materials, manage labor supply, set production quotas for war goods and limit manufacture of civilian items.

Carter has called for an Energy Security Corporation, with authority to issue up to $5 billion in bonds, to start a similar crash program to produce synthetic fuels. Four decades after Roosevelt, he is running into the same objections.

Rationing became a critical part of the fuel solution. Roosevelt also set the national speed limit at 35 miles per hour, while today's drivers scoff at 55.

While Carter has ordered thermostat adjustments in public buildings to the howls of an air-conditioned generation, Roosevelt cut back home heating fuel.

An elaborate formula cut the average home's supply by one-third while aiming to keep temperatures at 65 degrees. As now, hardest hit were the coastal areas heavily dependent on shipborne oil, but coal and even firewood also were rationed.

Unlike Carter, however, Roosevelt had the advantage of abundant oil reserves. And with government encouragement, the industry increased production by 25 percent between 1940 and 1944.

But all of this cost money, and lots of it. In the first year of the war the Treasury was pumping out $300 million a day. A good estimate is that World War II cost more than $300 billion.

President Carter's energy program is priced at $142 billion over 10 years, less than a fourth of the wartime spending rate, not even allowing for inflation since then.

Financing the war took massive taxation. The excess profits tax slapped on industry reached 90 percent, compared to the 50 percent Carter asked for the energy war.

The income tax became virtually universal for the first time, and withholding was invented. On top of that there was a graduated surtax ranging as high as 82 percent, and an across-the-board "Victory Tax" of 5 per cent.

Still, taxes paid for only about 40 percent of the war costs. For the most part it was fought with massive deficit spending. The national debt shot from $43 billion to $269 billion.

At the same time personal income soared. Wages rose about 47 percent during the war, and kept ahead of prices. Unemployment was wiped out.

Carter must organize his war in the midst of a "taxpayers' revolt," raging inflation and re-surging unemployment. He has pledged not to invoke wage-price freezes, and political pressures probably will hold him to his word.

The recent gas lines showed the American motorist as unwilling as ever to relinquish his right to drive, while the country is on the verge of becoming as dependent on foreign petroleum as it was for rubber in 1941.

Many of Roosevelt's weapons are, therefore, denied Carter, in addition to the inevitable partisan and special interest conflicts which plagued FDR. Even with bombs falling Roosevelt had a hard time pulling the country together. Can Carter do it without a Pearl Harbor?

Woman Trainer Assists Athletes Reach Olympics

TREADMILL TEST—Jenny Stone, coordinator of the U.S. Olympic Training Center's sports medicine facility in Colorado Springs, Colo., measures Bob Mathias' oxygen intake as he uses the treadmill.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A broken foot may have ended Jenny Stone's sports competition, but it did not curb her desire to be involved in the sports world.

Today, she coordinates the U.S. Olympic Training Center's sports medicine facility in Colorado Springs, helping other athletes aiming for the prestigious international sports competition.

Ms. Stone, 25, never considered athletic training as a career until the injury forced the health and physical education major to give up active sports participation in her sophomore year at Gettysburg College in Pennsylvania.

To remain near competitive sports, she began working in the college training room. As a junior she was the varsity football team's student trainer and by her senior year she had added the junior varsity football and men's lacrosse teams to her responsibilities.

Ms. Stone received a master's degree in physical education with a specialty in athletic training from the University of Arizona in May 1977. By July she had joined the Olympic Training Center in Squaw Valley, Calif.

"My first opportunity with the Olympics came," she remembers, "when Marcia King, the head trainer at the University of Arizona, was asked to be a volunteer trainer at Squaw Valley. She couldn't go, so she recommended me for the position. I was glad to accept."

In March 1978 she was transferred to Colorado Springs as a paid, full-time head trainer and coordinator of the sports-medicine center.

Her responsibilities at the facility vary with the season.

"During the summer I serve in an administrative capacity, directing five volunteer trainers and one volunteer physician," she explained. "Trainers and physicians work for two-week shifts. All trainers are certified by the National Athletic Trainers Association."

But for the other months Ms. Stone works as both trainer and administrator. As a trainer, she relies on physical therapy, taping skills and hot and cold treatments to aid injured athletes. More important, though, she tries to prevent injuries from occurring.

"By determining an athlete's workout level, according to cardiovascular and muscular condition, we can prevent injuries," Ms. Stone said. "With the machines at the center we can test an athlete's strength and percentage of body fat. We can also measure how efficiently an athlete uses oxygen."

Other facilities in the center include muscle stimulators and machines used for heat treatments, pain relief and muscle spasms.

Ms. Stone reports that a mobile physiology lab is almost complete. Plans call for equipping the van with machines that duplicate those now housed in the center. Two physiologists will travel in the van to athletic camps and sporting events throughout the country to teach athletes and coaches sports-medicine techniques.

Coaches, trainers and doctors from all over the United States participate in sports-medicine seminars at the center to learn how to improve performances and prevent injuries. Areas covered in these seminars include nutrition, exercise physiology, sports psychology, injury treatment and biomechanics, the study of human movement. More than 50 seminars have been held.

The Colorado Springs and Squaw Valley centers, both sponsored by Burger King, can each feed and provide training facilities for 500 athletes at a time.

Ms. Stone and her staff prefer the athletes and coaches to use the sports medicine facilities on a steady basis.

"Sports medicine is still fairly new," she says. "We have a hard time educating athletes and trainers about our facilities and capabilities. We try to send a trainer with every team as it trains, but it's not always possible. The trainer's role is to show the athletes how we can help them, in addition to caring for injuries."

A high point for Ms. Stone came in April 1979.

"I was selected to travel with the U.S. volleyball team as their trainer when they went to Cuba for the Olympic qualifying tournament," she says. "It was the first time the team had taken a trainer in their 12-year existence."

Historic Fort Lures Tourists

CAP HAITIEN, Haiti (AP) — Few visitors who venture by horseback up a 3,000-foot-high mountain slope to view the world-famous Citadelle are aware that King Henry Christophe, who built the awesome fortress, fought in the American Revolution 200 years ago.

According to Albert Mangones, supervising architect and director of a $2.5 million Citadelle restoration project, Christophe served in a contingent of 800 Haitian troops, fighting alongside American revolutionary and French militia against the British.

During the Battle of Savannah on Oct. 9, 1779 — one of the critical engagements in the Revolutionary War — the French West Indies soldiers suffered severe casualties.

Christophe survived, however, to return eventually to his homeland where he would one day proclaim himself king and build, during his reign, the Citadelle.

Today the Citadelle — and nearby Sans Souci Palace, once the official residence of King Henry and his family — are undergoing extensive restoration. A team of Haitian architects and engineers, with U.S. technical assistance, is restoring some of the facilities of the two monuments and is preserving both historical structures.

The original construction of the Citadelle involved far more participants than the entire siege of Savannah, Mangones points out.

A force of 200,000 was utilized over the years in the herculean task of moving massive stone building blocks and an incredible number of iron cannon and ammunition up steep, winding mountain trails to the construction site.

Christophe built the fortress because he feared that the French might try to retake the island — a former French colony — and imprison him. But despite all this preparation for battle, the fortress was never attacked.

The Citadelle was not the only legacy left by the monarch of Haiti, Mangones notes.

"In 1807, when Cap Haitien was the commercial center and a capital of sophistication of the Caribbean, and gilded carriages swept majestically through its broad streets," he relates, "Christophe ordered the construction of another monument to ambition and power — the beautiful palace of Sans Souci which rivaled Versailles in grandeur, as Henry Christophe intended."

Anniversary For Glass Industry

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The glass industry is celebrating the 75th anniversary of an invention that helped revolutionize glass-making and, with it, the marketing of foods.

It was on Aug. 2, 1904 that Michael J. Owens of Toledo, Ohio, obtained a patent for an automatic glass-shaping machine described by IPO Inc., a public educational group for preserving the patent system, as the first major improvement in glass-making in 2,000 years.

Hell's Canyon Is Deepest Chasm

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Hell's Canyon in Idaho, not the Grand Canyon, is the deepest chasm in North America, according to the National Geographic Society.

Hell's Canyon, former where the Snake River cuts through the mountains along the border with Oregon, is 7,900 feet deep — so deep that if a rock were dropped from a helicopter over the center of the chasm it would take more than half-a-minute to hit the river below.

Executives Trained To Meet Press

By ROB WOOD
Associated Press Writer
HOUSTON (AP) — A major chemical-company official fidgeted nervously under the hot lights of humming television cameras, fielding questions from a group of newsmen lurking in the shadows behind the equipment.

For 90 minutes he was grilled about profits, dividends, environmental dangers and minority hiring practices.

When it was over, the sweating, shaking executive was taken into the private office of Dan Ammerman.

There he was told, in no uncertain terms, how he had messed it up; how he had lost his cool; how he had failed to answer honestly some queries; how he had tried to step into subject areas of which he had no knowledge.

The next day, Ammerman had a politician undergoing the barrage of questions. Then came a hospital administrator and an individual scheduled to testify the next week before a Texas legislative committee.

Ammerman, a former Houston television-news anchorman, was attempting to school these people in how to handle newsmen; how to conduct an interview; how to act at a news conference; how to give the information wanted without lying and without the all-too-frequent "no comment."

The unique operation of Ammerman Enterprises Inc. is to teach these executives and politicians who will face newsmen someday to show no fear of cameras or microphones or tape recorders.

In the past three years, Ammerman and his staff of consultants, who include television, radio and newspaper writers, have worked with clients throughout the nation.

The seminars, never with more than eight persons at a time, last only two days, long, 12-hour days. But Ammerman, an articulate, well-dressed, graying man, said, "When they leave here they have learned techniques, learned how to control an interview, learned how to stay out of the quicksand and hot water, how to keep the interview on the subject you wish to discuss."

The seminars have proved so successful that Ammerman is booked for months in advance.

The seminars include the news-conference session, private interviews, and even another little trick. Ammerman will answer a ringing telephone and inform his client the call is for him. The person, rather surprised anyone knows he is at Ammerman's large, luxurious suite on the southwest outskirts of the city, takes the phone and is greeted by one of the staff members claiming to be a newsmen and asking for a statement immediately for live broadcast.

"During Ammerman's interviews with the clients, there are no holds barred. 'In five minutes,' he said, 'I can destroy them, not with tricks, but with solid questions and their own answers. I try to compromise them, chew them up and spit them out.'"

In his suite, Ammerman has built a small television studio, usable for news conference, talk shows, committee hearings, what have you.

He also has closed-circuit television so each client can view his performance and several conference rooms for group or private discussions.

Ammerman began the project after he had filmed a series in 1972 on a possible energy shortage, something that became a reality one year later.

"I talked with oil-company executives and got straight answers, but the minute I turned on the tape recorder or the minute the cameras showed up they had to be Clark Gables. They were acting, every single one of them, and I never got a straight answer. They all wanted to come off as somebody else, maybe Burt Reynolds."

Ammerman then began giving seminars on a part-time basis while continuing his television work.

Then he went into it full time. "I had some clients," he remembered, "but I didn't draw a paycheck for seven months. I lived on my savings. My office was the bedroom of my home. It grew from there to here," as his arm swept outward, including the suite and its thousands of dollars of equipment.

PLAN YOUR HOME

The Trentholm

By Jerry Bishop
Walls of glass admit natural light and add to the airy atmosphere of the family room, an important element in the floor plan of the Trentholm, a three bedroom contemporary.

Likewise, glass is used liberally throughout the plan in sliding glass doors, often opening to a patio, and the overall effect is one of limitless space.

Entry is through double doors into a gracious foyer, totally open to the sunken family room at left. With its wood-burning fireplace, patio access, and location that prevents cross-traffic, the family room is as adaptable to entertaining as it is to everyday use. A formal dining room adjoins.

At rear, the country kitchen is equipped with pantry and ample counter space and opens to the rear patio via sliding glass doors. Neighboring utility room connects garage and kitchen.

Bedrooms fill the right half of the floor plan and include an impressive 17-ft. master bedroom with private bath and dressing area. Situating the master closet off the bath frees bedroom wall space for furniture. A compartmented bath serves the second and third bedrooms, with both bedrooms having walk-in closets. Storage space is shown in the double garage.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the home owner:

Jay Janis, undersecretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, says the rising costs of housing can be attributed to the cost of regulation at all government levels; the cost of cycles in which the building industry is used as a fiscal yo-yo to boost or slow the economy; and the cost of indifference in which nobody gives a dam or takes a stand to halt the spiral. As quoted in the Professional Builder, Janis thinks more stress must be placed on multi-family rental housing as well as smaller, more economical units than in the past.

The writer of the "Opinion" column of the Long Island Builder believes that attacking over-regulation of construction by government is a gross oversimplification of a complex issue. He says some developers candidly state that amenity-hungry home buyers are a big reason for the soaring cost of housing.

Cheap Heat For Town In Their Hot Springs

By BOB LEERIGHT
Associated Press Writer

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — The Glens of Boise have thumbed their noses at rising energy bills for years. They pay about $10 a month to heat their two-story Tudor-style home with natural steam and hot water.

Now, with a new $5 million federal grant, city officials want to heat the whole downtown area the way the Glens heat their home — by tapping the heat produced by hot springs that run under the town.

"Those poor people who suffer with oil and gas," Marcia Glenn quotes her husband as saying each time he pays their heating bill.

Along Warm Springs Street and nearby streets in this city of 100,000, more than 200 houses have been heated by hot water for decades.

Mrs. Glenn says she's lived in geothermally heated homes for 42 years. The Glens have no need for a hot water heater. And several neighbors use the naturally warm water to heat large swimming pools for about $75 a year.

The city is planning to take a heating system started in 1892 and run natural hot water pipes to buildings in the downtown area. The city must find about $10 million to complete the project.

Phil Hanson, manager of the Boise Geothermal project, estimates possible savings of the equivalent of 25,000 barrels of oil a day in Boise when the downtown area is geothermally heated.

He said an average family saves from one-half to two-thirds of its heating bill by using natural steam and hot water. As many as 2,000 additional homes could be heated by the natural energy source from four planned wells, Hanson said.

Robert Chappell of the Department of Energy's Idaho Falls office said the agency's $4.9 million contract with Boise is the largest of 22 projects in Western states to gather scientific data on the potential for geothermal energy. Such energy already is widely used to heat homes in Iceland.

Some state office buildings here already are partially heated by a geothermal well. A recently-constructed city building and a proposed county building are designed for conversion to hot water heat.

John Griffith, chief of research engineering for Idaho Falls office, said the techniques used by Boise Geothermal "may well set the trend for future geothermal progress in the United States."

Geothermal water long has been used in Boise for limited in Charlotte Harbor midway between Punta Gorda and Fort Myers and will eventually provide slips for more than 700 boats, about 110 of which already are in use. As with most condominium complexes these days, the setup will include a golf course, tennis courts and a pool.

With the high prices of houses and the soaring interest rates, you might think that mortgage loan delinquencies are at an all-time high. Just the opposite. Such delinquencies are generally lower than they have ever been. A loan is considered delinquent if payment has not been made within 60 days of the date stipulated on the mortgage contract.

A study by the United States League of Savings Associations shows that four out of five first-time home buyers who made less than 20 percent down payments would not have been able to purchase those homes if 20 percent down payments had been required.

Among the trends noted by Architectural Record is a growing skepticism with electronic gadgetry and expensive detail in homes. Delight with "labor saving" devices has given way to a more modest outfitting of houses, while an earlier generation's interest in luxury has been replaced by a growing need for the simple and the spare.

"The challenge for today's architect's," is the conclusion, "is to design homes that are not only less costly to build and maintain but also attractive and comfortable to live in."

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable material in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

Store Indoors During Winter

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most outdoor furniture should be cleaned and stored before cold weather sets in — and treated to prevent rust, if necessary.

The soap and detergent manufacturers trade association recommends these steps:

— Wash wrought iron with suds and water, dry completely and apply a coat of rust-inhibiting paint.

— Wipe wooden furniture clean and repair loose and broken parts.

— Wash plastic chairs and chaises and removable vinyl cushions, then rinse and dry. Wipe the metal parts with a cloth dampened with mineral oil.

Hanson said the method is inefficient, but innovative engineering has devised modern technology involving central systems using heat exchangers. This would allow geothermal energy to heat through modified air or water circulating systems now in use.

Several major office buildings are considering switching to geothermal heating, Hanson said, but no firm contracts have been signed.

Selecting Furniture For Children Catalogued

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I have been given an unusual gift. It is one of those round Chinese-style lighting fixtures that is hung from a ceiling. It is made of metal with openings in it for the light to shine through. Although I haven't weighed it, I guess it is about 20 pounds. If I put a toggle bolt into the ceiling, will it hold the weight of the fixture? The ceiling is made of plasterboard.

A. — It is not the strength of the toggle bolt that should concern you as much as the amount of weight the ceiling material will support. The type you mention usually is not meant to support more than about 12 pounds. Use a large screw hook of some kind, being certain that it is attached to a joist rather than to the ceiling material.

Q. — Some time within the next six months, my husband expects to be transferred to another city and we will have to move. Is it better to sell our house now or buy another one in the new place first?

A. — First, don't put your house on the market until your husband has been officially notified when he is to be transferred. Too many families have been put into embarrassing situations because they sold their houses and the rumored transfers did not occur. The best plan probably is to place the house on the market at least within a few months before the transfer, assuming your husband gets that much notice, as many employees do. If you happen to sell the house before the move, try to get the new owners to rent it back to you until you move. Many are willing to do that. If not, you'll simply have to rent a place while you keep your furniture in storage. Granted, the latter is not always a good solution, but it's better than moving to the city before you sell your house and then being forced to make monthly mortgage payments on two houses. And it's also better than being forced to sell your house at an unsatisfactory price because you had to get rid of it in a hurry. Another alternative is to check into the kind of deal you can get from a real-estate organization that will guarantee you a certain sales price under certain conditions. Whatever you decide, the important thing is not to put your house on the market until you are as certain as possible that your husband actually is being transferred.

Geri Brin and Linda Foa started out to write a book about well-designed furniture and equipment for children more than three years ago.

There was only one problem, said Geri Brin recently. "We talked to retailers and they told us the kind of products we were looking for didn't exist."

But the two women, both mothers of young children, persevered. The resulting book, "Kids' Stuff," is a kind of annotated catalogue of interesting furniture, playthings and equipment for children.

To find the sturdy, simple-looking products they were seeking, the two women searched in out-of-the-way industrial catalogues and among firms serving schools and other institutions.

"I personally never had much taste for industrial objects. But in the process of writing the book, I have come to appreciate how much more practical and sturdy they are than the usual products," said Ms. Brin.

Lockers, exercise equipment, bookcases in a glossy white paint, but have been told that the knots will bleed through in a few months. Can this be prevented?

A. — There are a number of knot sealers on the market or you can use ordinary shellac, diluted about 50 percent with denatured alcohol. Although the shellac dries quickly, wait at least several hours before applying the finish coat.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 35 cents PLUS a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

To stimulate the child's development, provide a mirror with which it can look at itself, a picture or other art work over the changing table and another over the crib. "And I would change the art work periodically to give it something new to look at," concluded the writer.

("Kids' Stuff: Guide to the Best in Children's Furnishings" is published by Pantheon.)

Behind their selection of these products and the illustration of chic children's rooms executed by New York decorators is a belief that children will develop better in an environment geared to teach them things and to withstand the hard use that is natural for children to make of their toys and furniture.

Among the lessons the two women learned in interviews with child-development experts is that "if you give children tasks they can master, it will help them to graduate to the next stage," said Ms. Brin.

Furniture a child can reach and open storage for toys help children take responsibility for themselves. Children need to feel at home in their surroundings. Chairs, chests of drawers and tables they cannot reach make it much harder for them to exercise a natural bent toward manipulation and mastery of their surroundings.

Advice to new parents planning an infant's room? "First of all, I would have a very convenient place to change the baby, not a conventional changing table since by and large they don't hold up. I use a large Parson's table with a foam pad for my 5-month-old," said Ms. Brin.

"I prefer open storage for the baby's clothes. And since children grow so quickly, I wouldn't buy a new crib if I could get a good used one," she added.

Florida Set Death Sentence Pattern

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer
TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — At 8:09 a.m., July 17, Gov. Bob Graham signed the papers that empowered the state of Florida to end the life of Howard Virgil Lee Douglas.

At 8:11 a.m., the governor informed David Brierion, superintendent of Florida State Prison, a maximum security institution in north Florida that houses a 55-year-old electric chair and the 135 men the courts of Florida have said must die for their crimes.

At 8:29 a.m., Brierion went to "Q Wing," Death Row. He spent about a half-hour with Douglas, who had nine days to live if the courts did not intervene.

"I was expecting it," Douglas told the superintendent. Brierion said later: "He didn't seem too upset. It was a very low-key event. It was more of a legal business transaction than with any of the others."

There have been four "others" in the first state to pass an acceptable capital punishment law after the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the old laws as unconstitutional. Three won stays. One was executed.

Douglas waited exactly one week to find out on which side of the ledger his name would go. Two days before he was to die, a federal judge granted the 43-year-old murderer a stay.

Florida got the jump on states returning to capital punishment when a hooded executioner put John Arthur Spenkelink to death May 25. It was the first time in 12 years that a criminal was executed in the United States against his will. One, Gary Gilmore, went before a firing squad in Utah two years ago at his request.

Lawyers for Spenkelink fought in every conceivable court to spare his life. The U.S. Supreme Court was petitioned five separate times to consider the case of a drifter nobody in Florida knew, a man who killed another drifter in a Tallahassee motel room in 1973.

So far, 35 states have followed Florida in passing new penalty statutes since the Supreme Court ruled the old ones unconstitutional.

Spenkelink's execution set off controversy, protests and vigils. But it has not stopped Florida in its grim business: two more men on Death Row could have had their warrants signed at any time. The cases of nine more are under review.

The sudden association with the macabre contrasts oddly with the ordinary perceptions of Florida: The Sunshine State, the land of palm trees and prepackaged vacations for Northeasterners, the tourist haven from the $1.50 roadside alligator wrestling pits to the spectacles of the newest Disney playland.

Why is this inviting state of retirees, this land of orange groves and cattle ranches, the first to return to capital punishment?

Former Gov. LeRoy Collins answers with one man's name: "Bob Shevin. The credit or the blame, depending upon your point of view, belongs to Shevin." Bob Shevin, former attorney general and gubernatorial candidate: "Florida is generally a conservative state. It has a high crime rate. People are just fed up with crime."

Jacksonville criminal lawyer Bill Sheppard: "Florida is a redneck state. We've just got smarter rednecks here. Why, in Georgia there are 158 counties and there aren't but five of them where they can sit a jury without stepping on someone's rights."

Tobias Simon, ACLU lawyer who defended Spenkelink: "Lack of leadership. The leadership in Florida is pandering to the lowest form of emotions. It is pandering to the rising demand for blood and vengeance, yielding to the pressures of the Roman mob."

Ed Cohen, aide to State Sen. Jack Gordon: "There's a frothier attitude down here, a let's-kill-back attitude. People here are hostile to gun control; they're handy with knives and guns."

State Rep. Andy Johnson: "It would be logical that one of the Southern states would start it."

And Florida, despite its diversity, is one other thing. It's very Southern, once U.S. 1 passes the Gold Coast. Johnson and other opponents of the death penalty point out that the South has historically been the readiest to impose capital punishment. A map of executions from 1882 to 1930 and a current map of men on death row, published in Southern Exposure magazine, are strikingly similar.

Florida has more men on Death Row than any other state.

A local disc jockey who calls himself "The Greaseman" greets his listeners with "Welcome to the Redneck Capital of the World." "The Greaseman" blankets four states on the 50,000-watt WAPE and often addresses himself to the inmates on death row.

"Good morning, you maggots," he will say. "Are you up yet? You'd better enjoy the sunrise. There aren't many more left for you."

He chortles as he tells how he played a sound track of bacon frying just prior to Spenkelink's execution. "I told him to get used to that sound," says the Greaseman.

The day after the execution he told listeners the prisoners were having "spenke-links" for breakfast.

"The Greaseman's" identity is kept secret.

"The people here are for the death penalty. For the first time in many years, the politicians are following through. One wimp councilman complained, but that was about it."

The "wimp councilman" is Rep. Andy Johnson, a native of Jacksonville who may have committed political suicide when he witnessed the execution and then told the public he had seen a "cruel and unusual" thing.

Johnson, the youngest member of the legislature at 26, says he has been called a hippie, a Communist and an atheist since he took his unpopular stand. He says he's had calls in the middle of the night asking him if he would keep his position if somebody killed his wife and child.

"I feel confident I'll be re-elected. Any politician who wants the luxury of maintaining unpopular positions must just work harder. That's 10 more chicken dinners."

The politicians against the death penalty are few. The activists against capital punishment, coordinated by the Florida Clearing House on Criminal Justice, can tick off their names easily.

One is Collins, now 70, governor from 1955-1960. He signed the papers for 29 executions while in office — eight for rape. That has since been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

"I sit here with the agonizing thought now and then that they are down in that cemetery at Raiford. It was just as much unconstitutional then as it is now," Collins says.

While governor, Collins asked the legislature to abolish the death penalty. When it didn't, he says, he felt he had no right to put himself above the law and refuse to sign the warrants.

Like others, Collins considers Bob Shevin the chief architect of Florida's revised death penalty statute.

All nine Supreme Court justices, Collins notes, wrote separate opinions in the complex death penalty ruling and "as attorney general, Shevin studied all nine and wrote the new law. It gave a legal craftsman the opportunity to put together a strong law."

It was passed in a landslide at a special session of the Florida Legislature and withstood a challenge before the Supreme Court.

In a speech in Pensacola, Gov. Graham said he would support the death penalty for rape.

"It's been said that Shevin kept looking for Graham over his left shoulder and he passed him on the right," says State Rep. Bill Sadowski, a Miami Democrat opposed to the death penalty.

Shevin also ran strongly against Graham in the Florida Democratic primary last year, campaigning on a tough law-and-order platform. Both candidates favored the death penalty, and some politicians think Shevin's stand pushed Graham into making his even more emphatic.

Shevin now is an attorney in private practice in Miami. While a sophomore in college, he walked into his father's clothing store one day and found him in a pool of blood, victim of a robbery. The elder Shevin died a few years later of complications from his injuries.

Says Shevin: "That probably piqued my interest in crime, but it did not influence my position on capital punishment. As a member of the legislature I sponsored a bill that would have made the jury take an extra step to recommend capital punishment."

"I would say my views on capital punishment came about in 1973 when I was attorney general. I saw so many brutal cases coming across my desk."

And had Shevin become governor?

"I would have signed more warrants than the governor has signed," says Shevin. "I'm not saying there would have been more executions, but by now I would have signed more warrants. It's one thing to have a death penalty on the books, it's another to use it. It's not a deterrent if you use it every four or five years."

Some elected officials feel even more strongly than Shevin. Dr. David Lehman, a physician and state representative from Hollywood, says it's high time the state really got started.

Patch Job For Pyramid

By CATHERINE ZELLER
CAIRO, Egypt (UPI) — The Great Pyramid at Giza will get a massive facelift this fall to help stem a natural chemical reaction that for centuries has eroded the soft stone of the ancient tomb.

Egyptian archaeologists, fearing the 5,000-year-old pyramid will weaken and eventually collapse, were beginning work on the restoration this month.

The monumental tomb of the Pharaoh Cheops is constructed of three million blocks of porous limestone. Rainwater is easily absorbed and retained in the huge blocks, which average two and a half tons each. The intense heat of the surrounding desert reacts as a catalyst on the wet limestone, causing a simple yet powerful chemical erosion.

As a result, exposed blocks disintegrate into a fine powder and are blown across the Giza plain where they were quarried 50 centuries ago.

Archaeologist Nassef Hassan, director of the Giza pyramids and supervisor of the restoration team, said preservation efforts will begin on the southern face of the Great Pyramid.

"Our project is to repair the eroded blocks by filling the gaps with identical but new limestone," Hassan said. "We will chemically treat the new stones first, so they will resist erosion."

Like their ancient predecessors, the restorers will haul newly cut limestone up the steps of the pyramid using muscle and rope. Five thousand years of technology has yet to produce a crane that can cope

"If Graham wanted to he could have signed every damn warrant the next day. I'm sure the 70 percent of the people in this state who are for the death penalty are going to start getting rough with their elected officials if they don't start pulling the switches."

"I think we ought to have a public hanging. It would make a great impression on criminals."

Foes of capital punishment in efficiently with the pyramid shape.

The archaeologists hope to finish the restoration by December 1980, but the date depends on the availability of funds.

After the Great Pyramid is restored, the antiquities department must direct its attention to the nearby pyramids of Cephren and Mycerinus which also suffer from erosion.

Florida believe — or hope — there will be public revulsion if executions become routine.

Today, nationwide polls show that 66 percent to 73 percent of Americans favor the death penalty. Only 38 percent supported it in 1965.

Johnson, the death penalty foe, says Florida's particular brand of religion is a factor. "Religion here is law and order, Americanism and Jesus all rolled into one. The Baptists have a tremendously strong influence on all the religions. And the Baptists are the only major denomination that has not denounced capital punishment."

State Rep. Tom Bush of Fort Lauderdale says, "It's a religious argument. Don't let anybody kid you."

Bush, a youthful redhead, says he's a "born-again Christian," with a slight grin over that oft-used phrase. He is in favor of capital punishment.

"I would wrestle with the death penalty if I didn't think it was God-ordained. It's God's temporal sword in the hand of government."

Entirely New Schooling Format In Early Future

By BARBARA RIEGELHAUPT
Associated Press Writer

America's youngsters heading back to school this month for the last semester of the 1970s will get a hint of the reshaping in store for them in the 1980s. But they'll have to cope with lingering problems of the closing decade, like crowded classrooms and school violence.

The years ahead, say parents and educators, will bring a continued emphasis on teaching basic skills, a growing concern for the needs of the individual pupil, a close examination of how schools are financed — and possibly a complete revision of the public school structure.

Dr. Ernest Boyer, who left the post of U.S. Commissioner of Education this summer, predicts an entirely new school system will emerge as a result of changes in the next few years.

"I think it's time to reshape the structure to meet the greater diversity of students," says Boyer, who said the last thorough scrutiny of the schools came in the post-Sputnik 1950s.

His proposed format for the '80s involves three-steps: a basic school, in which youngsters learn fundamental skills; a middle school, in which junior high students focus on "general knowledge" that will probably involve mixing contemporary issues with traditional disciplines; and finally, a "transition school" in which students specialize and develop talents in the arts, science, health care or business.

"The first move has already been made," says Boyer, president-elect of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. "The emphasis on language and basic skills in the early grades is now well established as a national trend."

The federal government, in fact, plans to increase money this year for local programs aimed at improving basic skills, says Dr. Peter Relic, deputy assistant secretary for education.

"Educators and citizens overwhelmingly have said this is one area where we must improve," said Relic.

With attention already fixed on the basics, the next objective should be the high school, or transition stage, according to Boyer.

"Reforms here are urgently needed," he says. "The continued dropout rate of 25 percent is unacceptable... The mood in many schools is one of hostility. Students, I think, sense a great gap between their own goals and the goals of the institution."

Their hostility often spills over into classroom violence and discipline problems. The National Education Association reported 110,000 teachers were assaulted in the nation's schools last year.

In an effort to meet the needs of some of the disgruntled students, school districts in many cities already are experimenting with programs that fit Boyer's "transition" model for high schools. Specialized "magnet schools" are being offered as incentives in integration programs to draw students from their neighborhood schools.

However pressing curriculum reform may be, both Boyer and Relic stress that school financing overshadows all else.

"Everybody agrees curriculum development is a high priority," Relic said. "But the question is, how do you heat your schools?"

The coming decade, says Boyer, will see a dramatic change in the way schools are paid for. What will replace the current dependence on local support is still unclear and that subject will be at the core of a congressionally mandated study.

Some of the school issues worth watching for in 1979-80 include:

—Strikes. Bob Chanin, executive vice president of the NEA, predicts many teacher groups will continue to call illegal strikes to achieve their goals, although educators' growing acceptance of binding arbitration is helping to limit the walkouts. The 1978-79 school year saw 160 teacher strikes.

—Standardized testing. In a decision that could affect other states, a federal judge ruled in July the Florida school system cannot make it functional illiteracy test a requirement for a high school diploma until all remnants of school segregation are gone. Such tests have long been criticized as culturally and economically biased.

—Learning without schools. A small but growing movement is taking root among parents who believe children don't need a special place to learn — i.e. a school. John Holt, an ex-teacher and author of "Why Children Fail" and other books on educational theory, estimates that between 1,000 and 10,000 families are teaching their children at home.

Parents giving up on schools are motivated by various reasons, says Holt, including fundamentalist ideals that hold schools to be immoral or, in some cases, the desire to avoid mandatory busing.

—Vouchers. The word causes most public school administrators to shudder. Although there is no single voucher formula, the term generally describes a program in which families are given public funds to be used as tuition at a school of their choice — public, private, or parochial.

Proponents say vouchers will encourage public schools to improve the quality of their teaching in order to compete against private schools. Opponents say removing funds from public school budgets for the vouchers will signal the death of public education as we know it.

—Department of Education. The prospect of a separate Cabinet-level department is encouraging to many educators hoping for new federal attention to their needs. Opponents, however, contend removing education from HEW will simply add layers of bureaucracy.

—Education for the handicapped. The federal law which guarantees every handicapped child a suitable education goes into full operation this fall. One provision, calling for individualized plans setting out the handicapped child's educational goals, has sparked the interest of parents who hope the detailed planning eventually will be used with every child, not just the disabled.

Wine Enhances Absorbing Food

BERKELEY, Calif. (UPI) — The non-alcohol constituents of wine enhance the body's absorption of five nutrients from food when the wine is drunk with meals, according to research at the Human Nutrition Laboratory of the University of California at Berkeley.

The nutrients are calcium, phosphorus, magnesium, zinc and iron.

The study, reported in American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, monitored six healthy men. Each drank one liter of California zinfandel (a red table wine) or dealcoholized zinfandel or an ethanol solution in deionized water or plain deionized water with their meals daily for 75 days. The wine was consumed throughout each day, not in single sittings.

The researchers did not determine why the increased absorption occurs, but theorized that the natural acidity of wine makes some nutritional elements more soluble and more readily absorbed.

The average pH of table wine is 3.5, close to that of gastric juice; pH symbolizes the degree of acidity or alkalinity of a solution.

SHOWTIME

A Milestone For Parks

LOUIS GOSSETT, JR. (l) and Ronald Hunter star in "The Lazarus Syndrome," new hour drama set against the background of a metropolitan medical center, premiering with a 90 minute special presentation, Tuesday, September 4 (9:30-11 p.m.) on ABC.

Sports To Drama

Louis Gossett, Jr. stars as Dr. MacArthur St. Clair in ABC-TV's new dramatic series, "The Lazarus Syndrome," which premieres with a 90-minute special presentation Tuesday, September 4 (9:30 to 11 p.m.). The series will subsequently be seen every Tuesday (10 p.m.).

The series is set in a privately owned hospital and Gossett stars as chief of staff Dr. MacArthur St. Clair. It deals less with the technical, day-to-day machinations of hospital operation than it does with the human frailties and concerns of the doctors, administrators and staff.

Louis first got the urge to perform in front of an audience when he was only eight years old. Gossett was given the lead solo for the church procession one Sunday and sang "Leanin' on Jesus." His solo was flawless, but both Gossett and the choir became a bit too enraptured by the music.

"We got a little loose and some of the old Sisters slapped us on the leg and told us 'don't bop around the aisle — this is a church!'" Gossett recalls.

Although Gossett knew he liked to sing, he didn't realize he could act. In high school, he was more preoccupied with carrying out his duties as student body president, studying hard for college and playing basketball.

Fortunately, Gustav Blum, a former Broadway director who taught English at the Brooklyn school, convinced Gossett to try out for a class play.

"I was a basketball player and I only did that play because I got hurt," Louis says. "The play was a lot more fun, but as soon as I got well I went back to basketball."

A few months later, a production company posted notices at his school seeking a young boy to play the lead in a Broadway show entitled "Take a Giant Step."

Who won the Miss America crown 25 years ago? Ask Bert Parks and he will reply without missing a beat. "Her name was Sharon K. Ritchie. She was Miss Colorado. And Lee Meriwether was the outgoing Miss America."

Parks has good reason to remember that night a quarter of a century ago. It was his debut as host of the exciting event. And he marks his 25th anniversary as host of the Miss America Pageant when he returns to the stage of Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N.J., for the 1979 Pageant. The event will be presented live Saturday, September 8 (10 p.m. to midnight), by NBC-TV.

He will be sharing the stage with the present Miss America, Kylene Barker, who will perform as well as crown her successor in the climactic finale. There will also be three former Miss Americas on stage with Parks; co-host Mary Ann Mobley (1959) plus featured principals Dorothy Benham (1977) and Susan Perkins (1978).

Parks is the only person who has been emcee of a national event of this kind on network TV for 25 consecutive years. What was it like hosting the Miss America Pageant 25 years ago? Said Parks: "You've got to remember that we were the originators of the whole idea of putting a major pageant of this sort on live television. So we learned as we went along. Ideas that the Miss America Pageant devised in those early years are now being used all over the place. But I think it's important to remember that the Miss America Pageant was the performer."

There is a common denominator which ties together all the years of hosting the Pageant for Parks. "I enjoy this. It's that simple. It was fun when it all began for me back in 1955 and it's still a lot of fun. These are great people here — Al Marks, the executive producer, and George Cavalier, producer-director of the stage production, and all the others who have been here for so long. I've worked with these same people year in and year out. There is something to be said for stability. We're like a family."

"We work very well together smoothing out the rough spots as we go along. We sort of anticipate what's going to happen. This makes for an easier time during Pageant week... it makes it easier for the girls, too, because we keep confusion down to a minimum."

BERT PARKS marks his record-setting 25th anniversary as host of the prestigious Miss America Pageant when he emcees this year's gala event, to be presented live, Saturday, September 8 (10 p.m. to midnight) on NBC.

He Looks For Magic

"There's no pattern in finding bright new talent but you know it when you see it. I look for magic!"

This is what producer George Schlatter says when asked about finding new talent. And he's considered an expert in the field after launching the careers of Goldie Hawn, Lily Tomlin, Judy Carne, Ruth Buzzi, Henry Gibson, Arte Johnson, Jo Anne Worley, to name a few, as creator and producer of the fabled "Laugh-In" series.

Now he is involved with "Real People," which begins its first full season on NBC-TV Wednesday, September 5 (8 to 9 p.m.).

"Basically," Schlatter continues, "I look for three things — intelligence, honesty and someone who has secrets. By the last, I mean someone who seems to have something you'd like to know more about."

"They should be communicating something other than beauty. Like when the elephant did the watch test and the watch broke, that was honesty. Take Goldie (Hawn) for example. I saw her when she danced on an Andy Griffith TV show. She looked vulnerable, honest and like someone who had secrets. You knew right away she was special."

Schlatter feels it's the intangibles that count.

"I used Albert Brooks and Carol Wayne long before the general public was aware of them," says George. "Flip Wilson did more than one-half of my first 'Laugh-In' shows. I used Cher for the first time without Sonny, and Lola Falana was a regular on the Bill Cosby show before she hit the big time."

"Sometimes the people are a little off-center, like Lily Tomlin. I saw some film of her and knew I'd sign her even before we met."

"Something inside says, 'That's it,' and I always go with my inner feelings. If I'm wrong, so be it, but when I'm right, we've got a star on the way!"

U.S. Open On CBS

CBS Sports will present coverage of the United States Open Tennis Championships at Flushing Meadow Park in Corona, N.Y. Saturday, Sept. 1 (1 to 6 p.m.), Sunday, Sept. 2 (4 to 7 p.m.), and Monday, Sept. 3 (1 to 6 p.m.). Semi-finals action is slated for Saturday, Sept. 8 (12-noon to 7 p.m.), and Sunday, Sept. 9 (4 to 9 p.m.).

There will also be highlights of tournament play on "U.S. Open Update," to be broadcast Wednesday, Aug. 29 through Friday, Sept. 7 (11:30 to 11:45 p.m.).

Bjorn Borg, the first player to win the singles title at Wimbledon four years in a row since Anthony F. Wilding of New Zealand did so in 1910-1913, is expected to be one of the top seeded players. Borg, the "Tennis Iceman," with the unerring topspin ground game and thunderous serve, has never won the U.S. Open title. Should he capture the crown this year, and subsequently the Australian championship, he will complete the Grand Slam (the French Open, Wimbledon, U.S. Open, and Australian Open), a feat last accomplished by Rod Laver in 1969.

The 23-year-old phenomenon from Sweden has won more major international titles than anyone else in the sport at his age, including the French Open four times (1974, 1975, 1978, 1979).

However, Borg will not be the only story at Flushing Meadow. The tempestuous Jimmy Connors, the U.S. Open defending champion and a finalist in this event the last five years (winning in 1974, 1976, 1978), looms as a major threat to stop Borg's Grand Slam quest, just as he did last year. Then, Connors overwhelmed Borg, who played with an injured thumb, 6-4, 6-2, 6-2.

Besides Borg, Connors, and John McEnroe (who last year went down to defeat at the hands of Connors in the Open semi-finals), Guillermo Vilas (who has shown his best form on clay), Vitas Gerulaitis, Spain's Manuel Orantes (U.S. Open champion in 1975) and Roscoe Tanner (a finalist at Wimbledon this year) are some of the other top players expected to compete.

The women's international field is expected to draw defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd, who will be attempting to garner an unprecedented fifth straight U.S. Open title; Martina Navratilova, the 1978 and 1979 Wimbledon champion; Pam Shriver, last year's U.S. Open runner-up; and Wendy Turnbull, Evonne Goolagong Cawley, Virginia Wade, Billie Jean King, Betty Stove and Tracy Austin, the 16-year-old sensation.

The Genius Of Einstein

"Directions" presents an intimate look at Albert Einstein — his scientific genius and his personal life — through the eyes of a friend and professional colleague, Dr. Banesh Hoffmann, on Sunday, September 2 (12:30 to 1 p.m.).

Dr. Hoffmann, a theoretical physicist and professor emeritus at Queens College, New York City, reminisces during the tape program about his first meeting with Einstein at Princeton University's Institute for Advanced Study. "I knocked on the door. Einstein said, 'Come' . . . I went in still trembling . . . He (Einstein) was smoking a pipe and he had papers on his lap. Obviously he had been calculating. He gave me a nice smile. 'Please put your equations on the board,' he said. 'Please go slowly. I don't understand things quickly.'"

Sixth Sense Is Key

Pat O'Brien believes in the sixth sense. The actor isn't referring to ESP. "It's a sense of humor," says the good-natured actor who attributes it and 49 years of marriage to the same woman to his success and long life.

O'Brien, who stars in "The Sky's the Limit," a two part feature concluding on "The Wonderful World of Disney" Sunday, September 2 (7 to 8 p.m.), has made the entertainment business his whole life. Also starring are Lloyd Nolan, Jeanette Nolan and Ike Eisenmann, along with Ben Blue, Alan Hale, Richard Arlen and Robert Sampson.

"I always wanted to be an actor, and having a sense of humor about the tough times as well as the good times is one of the main reasons I'm still here."

The other is his wife, Eloise Taylor. Twenty-one years ago, when most men his age were embarking into retirement, he persuaded Eloise, a former actress, to rejoin the ranks and tour with him across the country in a series of stage plays. The husband and wife team performed in 14 different comedy stage classics, including such hits as "Come, Blow Your Horn," "Father of the Bride," "Daddy, Dear Daddy," "Holiday for Lovers" and "It's Never Too Late."

John Wayne In 'Oscar' Role

John Wayne, in the characterization that earned him an Academy Award, stars in "True Grit," the film presentation of Charles Portis' best-selling novel, now encoring as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie" September 2 (9 to 11:30 p.m.).

Glen Campbell and Kim Darby are also starred in this Western drama of a girl determined to avenge her father's death.

The year is 1880, the state is Arkansas, and Mattie Ross (Miss Darby) is a tough little girl who takes no nonsense from anyone. When her father is brutally murdered by his hired hand, Tom Chaney (Jeff Corey), Mattie puts her affairs in order and sets out for instant revenge.

Since she isn't too particular about the company she keeps while accomplishing her goal, Mattie hires the sloppiest, drinkiest, meanest one-eyed rascal around—the never-beloved Rooster Cogburn (Wayne). Texas Ranger La Boeuf (Campbell), looking for a large reward being offered for the fugitive, joins them, over Cogburn's objections.

As the three ride deeper into Indian territory, with the drunken Rooster and the arrogant "La Bee" trading monumental insults, Mattie draws first blood herself. She sights and shoots Chaney. But he manages to take her captive and forces her companions to ride away without her.

JOHN WAYNE LEFT a heritage of classic Western characters behind him, none greater or more colorful than his characterization of Rooster Cogburn, who rides out with a stubborn orphan (Kim Darby) in "True Grit," which will have an encore showing on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie" September 2 (9-11:30 p.m.).

They don't ride far. Revolvers in hands and reins in his teeth, Rooster returns, plunging headlong into the outlaw band. La Boeuf gives his life to rescue Mattie from Chaney—only to see her knocked into a nest of rattlesnakes.

With little time to deliver Mattie to a doctor after the rattlesnake strikes, Rooster shows more grit than anyone would have expected, pushing himself, his horse, and his luck beyond human limits to get the stricken girl across the prairie.

Merv's Guest

Alan Alda guests on "The Merv Griffin Show" Wednesday (4:30 p.m., on Channel 11), and talks about his first screen plays, "The Seduction of Joe Tynan," a film in which he also stars. Alan and Merv are joined by singers Cindy and Ray and political columnist Richard Cohen.

Alan discusses the success of "M*A*S*H" and how the TV series has opened other doors for him. He talks about his family and says he never neglects them. There must be a balance between work and family, he continues. Asked about living in New Jersey, he says he used his flying time to write. He also says it is not that he doesn't like California, but "New Jersey is where we live."

After a clip of "Tynan" is shown, Richard Cohen tells how he became involved with Alan on the movie. He then talks about senators and says they come in all sizes and shapes, good and bad, competent, stupid, lazy, ambitious, tee-totalers, drunks, and arrogant. But, he says, by and large they are good and get a lot of work done.

If The Sofa Could Talk!

The sets for NBC-TV's daytime drama "Another World" are filled with elegant period furnishings and objects d'art. But, as far as actress Beverlee McKinsey is concerned, there's only one that counts — the sofa in the living room of the penthouse where her character, arch villainess Iris Bancroft, lives.

"You simply cannot imagine all of the things that had happened to poor Iris on that sofa!" exclaims Beverlee, who gets a kick out of playing a nasty character.

"I've had a nervous breakdown on that sofa, and I also attempted suicide on the sofa. That's not easy to do, either!"

"Now, you'd think that if someone is going to do away with herself, she'd want to lie down. But this is actually a love-seat, and there was no way I could gracefully lie down. Most people would do this in a bedroom, but I had to try to end my life on that sofa! So it all happened in the living room, and you never even SAW me walking into the hallway."

"Why, I even had a two-year relationship with Dr. Russ Matthews, and we NEVER left the sofa!"

If you've followed Iris closely through the years, you will recall that when she did have her nervous breakdown, she had an unbelievable quick recovery.

"I'm known as a 'talker' by the writers because Iris is always talking. Also, I memorize my lines faster than anybody else in the cast and, because of these reasons, I'm never written out for several weeks."

Memorable Quotes

CHRISTOPHER REEVE: "Playing Superman is 90 percent costume and 10 percent sense of humor."

JOHNNY CARSON: "We celebrities, we want to play tennis as good as we do what we do, but we can't; the ego gets in the way."

JAMES MASON: "I think directing would be more exciting than acting. You're making something, an exercise in creativity."

JOHNNY CARSON: "I've been around TV most of my professional life and I would rather be on the performing end of TV, not directing."

JAMES MASON: "There are about three films on my destruction list, ones I'm not proud of. 'Forever Darling' with Lucille Ball, 'The Lady Possessed' and 'Kill.' They weren't too good."

JOHNNY CARSON: "I have nicophobia — it's the fear I'll wake up someday and everyone in the world will be named Al!"

JOHNNY CARSON: "There are certain foods I don't like. I don't like to eat anything that looks up at me, or clings to a rock!"

DR. CARL SAGAN: "I believe our only hope is our intelligence and our curiosity."

BEVERLEE MCKINSEY stars as Iris Bancroft on "Another World" seen Monday-Friday (2:30-4 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

"When Iris had that 'nervous breakdown, I was simply ecstatic! I just knew I was going to have a nice, long vacation while she recovered. But, what happened? They couldn't do without the 'talker' and I recovered COMPLETELY the very next day. I'm sure that Iris is the only person in the world to make such a fast recovery after such a dreadful breakdown!"

Because of new writers who began scripting "Another World" a few months ago, Beverlee thinks there will be noticeable changes in Iris very soon. "Iris is really like a cat, you know," says Beverlee, "because she will adore anyone who's kind to her. And she's never 'slept around' like the other bad girls in soaps. But I believe she's going to change a bit now, and there may be some sympathy in her future."

And with a little luck, Iris just might find a little action someplace other than the sofa!

ERIK ESTRADA has vowed to personally answer every greeting he received during his hospital stay, and part of his response may very well include his own warning about motorcycle safety. Erik has always expressed concern about the number of fatal accidents involving young people on bikes.

It's no longer THE BAY CITY ROLLERS. Rather, it's simply THE ROLLERS, which is the name found on the group's new Arista Records LP, "ELEVATOR," just recently released. The album marks the lead-singing debut of newest member, DUNCAN FAURE.

SHAUN CASSIDY'S first TV special has been filmed capturing Shaun on stage in Anaheim, Calif. and off-stage throughout the country. NBC decided that Shaun didn't need to have a list of guest stars, so, for the most part, it's simply Shaun the singer and Shaun the individual.

A lot of VILLAGE PEOPLE fans are curious why VICTOR WILLIS departed the group just when filming was to begin on the group's first motion picture, "DISCOLAND... WHERE THE MUSIC NEVER ENDS." Simply, had Vic stayed with the group until filming was completed it would have obligated him, for another full year, and he was anxious to initiate his solo career. Former backup singer RAY SIMPSON replaces Vic.

It's understood that as soon as DEBBY BOONE becomes MRS. GABE FERRER, she'll be returning to the recording studio to cut her own, and first, disco album. She and Gabe are collaborating in selecting the material she'll record.

MIKHAEL BARYSHNIKOV joins the New York City Ballet to dance the classic George Balanchine ballet, "Prodigal Son," on GREAT PERFORMANCES' "Dance In America," Thursday, September 6 (9:30 to 10:30 p.m. on PBS.)

USSR Balanchine And Baryshnikov

In a recent interview, ballet "Prodigal Son" debuted in 1929, star Mikhael Baryshnikov reflected upon the most difficult decision he's ever had to make: whether or not to leave his native Russia. It was, he says, the "politics of dance" that finally tipped the scales in favor of leaving his homeland. Quite simply, Baryshnikov knew that staying in the USSR meant he would never have the opportunity to work with his idol — and fellow Russian emigre — George Balanchine. And working with this famed choreographer was the young Russian dancer's dream.

Audiences will be treated to the historic rebroadcast of the very first time the two balletic geniuses shared their work with television cameras on Great Performances' "Dance In America," airing Thursday, September 6 (9:30 — 10:30 p.m.) on PBS. "Choreography by Balanchine, Part 3" is made possible by grants from EXXON, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. Great Performances is presented for public television by WNCT/THIRTEEN, New York.

Baryshnikov dances the lead role in the classic Balanchine ballet, "Prodigal Son." This television production marked the first time Baryshnikov joined the New York City Ballet in a performance of this landmark work. The ballet, with a lush score by Prokofiev, also features principal ballerina Karin von Aroldingen as "The Siren."

Another of Balanchine's masterworks, "Chaconne," is also featured in the telecast. Whereas

Q: What happened to ABC-TV's "Delta House"? Will it be back this season? K. BURGESS, WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. A: It won't be back, and it's too bad, because it was a good show. Unfortunately, "Delta House" came along at the same time several other college-oriented series did, and none of them survived. There is a series on CBS-TV's lineup that is similar — "The Last Resort." Try it — maybe you'll like it!

Q: What happened to Deanna Durbin, one of my favorite actresses? I never see or hear anything about her. B. BRACHELL, SPARTANBURG, S.C. Q: How old was Jayne Kennedy when she started acting? Where do I write to her? D. HODGES, HOPE MILLS, N.C. A: Jayne was 18 when she began her career in the entertainment business following her appearance as Miss Ohio in the 1970 Miss USA beauty pageant. Her TV credits include appearances in "Starsky & Hutch," "Sanford & Son," "The Six Million Dollar Man" and "Kojak." Now she's beginning her second year as co-host of "The NFL Today." Jayne is married to Leon Isaac Kenney, a producer, writer, actor, and the couple lives in Pasadena, Calif. Write to her c/o CBS Sports, 524 W. 57 St., New York, N.Y. 10019.

Q: How long does Victoria Principal plan to remain a cast member of "Dallas"? Please tell me something about her. B. GLOVER, ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. A: Victoria is delighted to be with the series and has voiced no plans to leave. What's more, I'm sure she's happy with those lucrative weekly pay checks. Victoria was once a daredevil stock car racer, but has now given up the raceway for the tennis courts.

ORDEAL AT SEA — Angie Dickinson and Cliff Robertson play a married couple whose vacation turns to tragedy in "Overboard," on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies," September 3 (9-11 p.m.).

'Overboard' Encores

Cliff Robertson and Angie Dickinson star in "Overboard," a heart-wrenching drama about a man's frantic search for his wife after she accidentally fell off their yacht far out in the South Seas. The featured, adapted by Hank Searles from his best seller of the same title, will encore on "NBC Monday Night at the Movies," September 3 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Robertson portrays Mitch Garrison, an attorney who gives up his practice to realize his 20-year dream of sailing around the world. Dickinson plays his reluctant wife, Lindy, who joins her husband in the fulfillment of his dream, which turns to tragedy when she falls overboard and is lost at sea.

During the frustrating hours spent searching for his wife, the attorney relives the moments which led to the accident, and tries to understand his jealousy of the handsome Frenchman who had paid special attention to his wife during a stay in Tahiti.

"Overboard," one of last season's most outstanding television films, is a poignant love story: the characters played by Robertson and Dickinson convey a sense of passion that is entwined with the tension that threatens to pull their marriage apart.

The feature was mainly filmed in Tahiti and the South Seas. The sea scenes showing the sloping terrain of Tahiti or mountainous Moorea looming in the background are magnificent. The capital of Papeete is a vibrant little city, the crossroads of the Pacific, and its waterfront, French market, the quaint Hotel Stuart, and bustling streets are effectively used.

The Factor-Newland Production company, headed by Alan Factor and John Newland, have another superior film to their credit: "A Sensitive, Passionate Man," which also starred Angie Dickinson.

Both of their films have what Factor describes as "honest endings."

He admits someone at another network told him that, had they done "Overboard," they would have changed the ending. "Had this been done, the honesty of our ending would have been lost."

Program Airs On Foreign Policy

"No More Vietnams, But . . . An NBC White Paper on Oil and American Power" is the title of the NBC News program on foreign policy to be telecast Tuesday, September 4 (9 to 11 p.m.). The special will focus on the strategic importance of the Middle East and its oil reserves against the background of America's prolonged competition with the Soviet Union, and will examine the changes in this country's foreign policy in that part of the world, and how those changes will affect the United States and other world powers. A large part of the telecast will be the first extensive on-location report by an American television network permitted by Saudi Arabia in seven years, and will include rare footage of the area and scenes along the Persian Gulf never before shown on American television. Edwin Newman will anchor the program and other correspondents participating are Garrick Utley and Richard Hunt. Expressing their opinions on the program will be members of the Cabinet and other government officials — past and present — who have figured importantly in shaping or implementing the American foreign policy posture — or have been critical of it — and other world leaders, United Nations officials and foreign policy experts. Among them are former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger; National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski; Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance; Ambassador William Sullivan (in his first television interview since his return from Iran); Ahmad Zaki Yamini, Minister of Petroleum for Saudi Arabia; Foreign Minister Prince Saud al-Faisal of Saudi Arabia; President Abdul Fattah Ismail of South Yemen; Chaim Herzog, former Israeli Ambassador to the United Nations; former CIA agent Kermit Roosevelt, who helped plot the coup which returned the Shah of Iran to power in 1953; and others.

'Speedtrap'

A private investigator and a policewoman team up to investigate a rash of mysterious car thefts in "Speedtrap," an action drama to be broadcast for the first time on television on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," September 4 (9 to 11 p.m.). Phoenix is beset with a rash of car thefts committed by an ingenious thief who uses a mysterious contraption to open car doors, start engines and scramble radio frequencies. When a group of victimized insurance companies hires an easy-going, irreverent, but thorough private investigator, Pete Novick (Joe Don Baker), to work on the case, the reluctant police captain is forced to cooperate. He assigns a perky young policewoman, 'Nifty' Nolan (Tyne Daly), to work with her old friend, Novick.

New Entry

One of ABC-TV's entries in the battle for supremacy on the small screen is "The Lazarus Syndrome," premiering Tuesday, September 4 (9:30 to 11 p.m.). Starring in the medical series are Louis Gossett, Jr. as Dr. Mac Arthur St. Clair, Ronald Hunter as Joe Hamill and Sheila Frazier as Gloria St. Clair. The character portrayed by Gossett is far from being one of those sanctimonious physicians who cures all ills and lives a flawless life. Dr. St. Clair, devoted to medicine, is married and a father, but his career has threatened his family relationships. He's striving to make the marriage work, even to the point of seeking counseling. Dedicated to his patients, St. Clair is hardly one to be locked to a desk, and he constantly seeks involvement in all areas of his hospital and medicine.

'High And The Mighty' Airs

One of John Wayne's first attempts to combine the roles of producer and star was with a 1954 film, "The High and the Mighty," which will be televised by CBS Wednesday, September 5 (8 to 11 p.m.).

Among the other stars appearing in the movie are Claire Trevor, Laraine Day, Robert Stack, Jan Sterling and Phil Harris.

Wayne's role was originally written with Spencer Tracy in mind, but the actor belatedly declined to play it. When this happened, Wayne came up with the one obvious solution to such a casting setback and substituted himself.

The role was of quite modest dimensions but suited the Wayne image. He played the veteran flyer Dan Roman whose career ranged back to pioneering days, daredevil and endurance flying, and bombing raids in the Second World War. In the movie, he had been reduced to acting as co-pilot of a commercial aircraft, never having gotten over a plane crash from which he was the only survivor with his wife and child among the victims.

The action takes place during a flight from Hawaii to California, and Roman quietly begins to take note of disturbing tremors that presage later major difficulties in the flight. When the crisis fully develops, Roman becomes a tower of strength, levelling with the passengers in a direct, encouraging fashion about the near certainty of a crash landing at sea, and making the necessary preparations, including carefully enclosing his picture of his wife and child in a waterproof wrapping. When calculations reveal that the plane has a chance of reaching San Francisco, Roman exerts his greater experience and calm nerve to insist that they make the attempt to go all the way and takes over from the chief pilot, Sullivan (Stack), who has lost his composure.

JOHN WAYNE STARS as the co-pilot of a crippled plane trying to make it safely from Honolulu to San Francisco, in "The High and the Mighty," classic suspense drama to be broadcast as a special movie presentation, Wednesday, September 5 (8-11 p.m.) on CBS.

A Look At Other Side

The TV drama treatment of divorce is usually one sided, as TV film buffs will surely attest. Stories are told from the woman's point-of-view. Since Hollywood has deemed her to be the most vulnerable in a divorce or separation, her story is most likely to be the most interesting, the most poignant, the saddest, the most empathetic. But what about the man?

Many psychologists agree that in a marital dissolution, the man is apt to feel just as much agony, trauma, depression, pain and stress as the woman — a point-of-view that has rarely been seen, if ever, in a television drama.

Inspired by real-life people and real-life incidents in real-life situations, writer James Henderson has taken over three dozen hours of tape recordings and condensed them into the four-hour script of "Breaking Up Is Hard To Do." The drama, airing Wednesday and Friday, September 5 and 7 (9 to 11 p.m. both nights) on ABC-TV, is the story of six men who have undergone divorce or separation. It is the story of what they feel, what they need, where they go after the break-up.

Starring as these men are Ted Bessell, Jeff Conaway, Robert Conrad, Billy Crystal, Tony Musante and David Ogden Stiers.

Between May of 1974 and 1975, six old friends who lived in Los Angeles separated from their wives. These six men spent the following summer together at a beach house in Malibu on the Southern California coast. They boozed, they raised hell, they reveled in their freedom and wallowed in their guilt. They also took a hard look at their friendship, at their expectations and their needs, at their lost wives and new found girl friends, at their fantasies and their dreams. They comforted and consoled each other.

A Computerized All-Time Mythical Bout

The computerized all-time heavyweight championship bout of the world, "The Super Fight," starring Rocky Marciano and Muhammad Ali, will be rebroadcast as "The CBS Late Movie," Friday, September 7 (11:30 p.m.).

The "Brockton Blockbuster," Rocky Marciano, met Muhammad Ali in this 1969 mock battle for the mythical heavyweight championship. Both men trained extensively for the fight. They went 70 rounds and threw over two million punches, but it was a computer that called the fight, predicted each round, and dictated the 15 rounds that made up the fight. Three years worth of research were fed into a computer and the analysis of that information resulted in this film.

Ali, 6'3" and 220 lbs., who has been called by some "the greatest fighting machine ever to wear a pair of trunks," was the undefeated world heavyweight champion at the time this film was made. Marciano, 5'10" and 200 lbs., was the only heavyweight champion ever to retire undefeated.

Marciano, who died tragically just a few weeks after the film was completed, called Ali "the fastest man on wheels." Marciano defended his title six times, attaining victory five times by knockouts, and he said prior to the fight, "If I could corner Ali, perhaps I could knock him out."

Ali, in his familiar and flamboyant style, said prior to the match, "I'm gonna punish him."

Both men have their advantages and their disadvantages. Marciano was perhaps one of the strongest men ever to hold the world title and Ali had a well-founded reputation for speed and agility. Marciano's reach was considerably shorter than Ali's — 14 inches, to be exact. But, only the computer knew how the fight would turn out when both men faced each other in the ring.

Castaways Face A Sea Peril

Robert Logan stars as an adventurer who becomes shipwrecked on an uninhabited island after setting out on a round-the-world cruise with a photo-journalist and three children, in "The Sea Gypsies," an exciting drama to be collocated on NBC-TV's "The Big Event" Sunday, September 2 (8 to 10 p.m.). Mikki Jamison-Olsen also stars.

Logan portrays Travis, a widower who — along with his daughters, Courtney and Samantha, a photo-journalist named Kelly and a 12-year-old stowaway, Jesse — encounters a fierce storm and is forced to seek refuge on a small island in the Alaskan wilderness.

They attempt to set up housekeeping and are ultimately successful in finding food when they hear a broadcast over their transistor radio that search efforts for them have been abandoned.

In time, the castaways discover the wreckage of a small plane and encounter a ferocious Kodiak bear. They later find a cabin guarded by a dog, still attempting to protect a young aviator who has long since perished.

Top Model Will Star

Cover girl Kim Basinger, one of the most photographed model/actresses, will star in the title role of "Katie: Portrait of a Centerfold," a World Premiere drama encoring as the "NBC Movie of the Week," Wednesday, September 5 (9 to 11 p.m.).

The 5'7" honey blonde left the University of Georgia at age 17 to become an Eileen Ford model in New York City. Within a very short time, she was one of the highest paid and most sought after models. Her picture has appeared on the covers of such publications as Modern Bride and Cosmopolitan (twice on the latter). She has also frequently appeared in Vogue, Glamour and in television commercials.

Katie Evers was a Texas beauty queen whose naive dreams of stardom were shattered when she arrived in Hollywood and encountered an unethical modeling school and a series of sleazy characters in the entertainment industry.

When hunger forces her to accept a job as centerfold model in a girlie magazine, Katie finds herself frozen out of legitimate modeling assignments. An attempt to return home also proves disastrous. Then, her only friend in Hollywood discovers a compromise solution that may save the rest of Katie's life.

The movie also stars Vivian Blaine, Fabian, Tab Hunter, Don Johnson (of the new TV series "From Here to Eternity"), Vir-

McLeod To Star

Gavin McLeod, a regular on "The Love Boat" series, has been signed to portray a studio executive in "Scruples," a six-hour miniseries based on the best selling novel by Judith Kranz.

It's Very Incredible!

"The night I read the script, I said to my wife, 'I don't believe they're going to go through with this. It's incredible!'"

That was Tony Musante's first reaction to "Breaking Up Is Hard To Do," a drama airing on ABC-TV Wednesday and Friday, September 5 and 7 (9 to 11 p.m. both nights).

"Of course," he continued, "the story is true, which really doesn't make it a hit. You can take a true incident and make a bad film, just like you take a piece of fiction and turn out something worthwhile."

"But this is true, it's hard-hitting. It's extremely sensitive and a beautifully told story."

"Three of the six men are actually friends of mine in real life — two I've known for a long time, and the other I've known for about six months."

"There seems to be this feeling of guilt that everybody going through a divorce feels intensely," Tony continued, "and the film goes into that aspect thoroughly."

"Most beautiful, I think, about the story, is that these six men open their hearts and feelings to one another. They relate to each other, and from this relating, they are helped."

The show has a cast of 32, an almost over-whelming number.

"This bothered me at first," Tony admitted, "but after a few days, I knew we would all work together beautifully. And we did."

"Golly, most television films just take a couple of weeks. But this one took a little over eight weeks. It was a fantastic experience, and everybody in the cast benefitted from working with such a production."

Musante, who left episodic television a few years ago when his series, "Toma," was high in the ratings, says he would like another try at a series. "But it would have to be a limited-run type of show. This thing of going on year after year in the same show is too much for me."

"When I was doing 'Toma,' there was no such thing as a limited-run. This is what I wanted, but the network wasn't doing anything like this then."

Dramatic Look At Sight

"The Body Human: The Magic Sense," a dramatic informational special exploring the mystery and the beauty of our windows on the world, those architectural wonders that give us the ability to see, will be presented Thursday, September 6 (8 to 9 p.m.), on CBS-TV. Also on the special are the dramatic stories of three people faced with different threats to their sight.

Man has always lived in fear of losing his sight. Now, with the aid of revolutionary medical and surgical techniques, doctors are able to solve many of the problems that were insoluble before, preventing the onset of blindness in some people and actually restoring sight in others.

electronic messages interpreted by the brain into the images we see.

In the case of 30-year-old Tom Pamp, diabetes has left him blind. For this husband and father who has never seen his infant son, the surgical procedure to restore his sight was worth the risk of losing an eye — the consequence if the surgery failed. An opaque cataract has formed over Pamp's lens and tiny hemorrhages have clouded the fluid. No light can enter the eye and without light there can be no vision. Dr. Stephen Ryan must shatter the cataract so that he can remove the pieces, and this retrieval must be done without injuring the delicate retina.

Thirteen-month-old Liam Roth was born with two normal eyes. But the spastic muscles that position the eyeball kept the baby's eyes off-center, not allowing them to work together.

Firemen 'Fathers'

Debralee Scott, the vivacious young comedienne who stars as Marie Falco in ABC-TV's "Angie" series, probably is the only actress in the history of Hollywood to have been adopted by a group of firemen.

"When I first moved to San Francisco," recalls Debralee, "I rented an apartment next door to one of the fire stations. Unfortunately, when the movers arrived at my new home with all my belongings and discovered that they had to carry everything up 45 stairs to my front door, they got very upset and just left my furniture sitting on the sidewalk. Naturally, it started to rain and I started to cry. When I finally decided that tears weren't going to help, I went next door to the fire station and asked for help. After that, the firemen became very protective. Not only did they feed me dinner almost every night, but if I was running a little short on money, they would let me borrow a little to get by. It was like having a company of fathers. None of them wanted me to be an actress and they kept urging me to get married and settle down. When I did get my first job, however, they all chipped in and sent me two bottles of champagne!"

Since that first job, Debralee has acquired an impressive list of motion picture and television credits. Some of the films she has had parts in are "Our Time," "Crazy World of Julius Vrooder," "The Reincarnation of Peter Proud" and "Just Tell Me You Love Me." Her television film credits include "Summer Without Boys," "Senior Year" and "Earthquake," in addition to her regular series roles in "Sons and Daughters" (a spin-off from "Senior Year"), "Welcome Back Kotter," "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" and "Forever Fernwood."

Debralee now lives in Sherman Oaks, Calif., and hopes to work in musical comedies and perform as a stand-up comedienne.

SPOTLIGHT

From That Moment On

When Catherine Bach was a teen-ager in Southern California, she attended a stage performance in which her uncle, Tony Verdugo, starred. From that moment on, she wanted to be an actress.

"I decided right away to get this goal out of 'dreamland' and all those movie magazines. I started studying drama, then got a list of all the agents in Hollywood. I just started at the top of the list, going to see everyone of them, until I found one who would accept me as a client."

Today, that dream has come true for Catherine Bach, who is co-starring as Daisy in CBS-TV's hilarious series, "The Dukes of Hazzard."

Has the success of the series changed her life in any way?

"I'm more relaxed now than I was," she says. "I'm enjoying life and being with David (her husband) more, too."

"As for the public's reaction, I don't know. Because of my busy filming schedule, I'm not out and about too much. Once filming is over for the season and I do get out, maybe I'll see a difference then."

Catherine says that never having lived in the South has not been a hindrance in playing her character, Daisy.

"Before we moved to California, we lived in Faith, South Dakota, a town with a population of about 2,000, and I still remember that little town. That has helped. And my stand-in, Sarah, is a southern girl who has given me a lot of pointers. Also, David has bought a couple of books about rural southern girls for me to read."

Catherine, a pleasant, easy-going person, says she has occasionally had to take a firm stand about the clothes she's been asked to wear in the series.

"Sometimes, if I don't like an outfit I'm given — if it's too tight or not at all becoming to me — I say 'No,' and I really mean it. I don't want to degrade my character or myself."

CATHERINE BACH

Catherine's first movie role was in "The Widow," starring Leslie Caron. Her other film credits include "The Midnight Man," which starred Burt Lancaster, "Thunderbolt and Lightfoot," starring Clint Eastwood, and "Hustle," with Burt Reynolds. She also has appeared on such television series as "Police Woman," "Matt Helm," "Strange New World" and "Police Story."

Ritter Joins Troupe

John Ritter of "Three's Company" joins the highly acclaimed Off the Wall comedy troupe in "Completely Off the Wall," a totally improvised, late-night special airing Friday, September 7 (11:30 p.m. to 12-midnight), on ABC-TV.

Ritter and Off the Wall cast members Wendy Cutler, Tony DeLia, Susan Elliot, Rod Gist, Andy Goldberg, Dee Marcus, Nancy Steen and Paul Wilson are inspired by suggestions received from their studio audience as they take an innovative and uniquely entertaining step into the hilarious realm of improvisational comedy.

Highlights of the special, which are spontaneously accompanied by the original music of Carol Weiss & the Weiss Guys, include John Ritter as a driving instructor opposite Dee Marcus as a hysterical motorist; Paul Wilson and Wendy Cutler as an argumentative Shakespearean couple; and backstage at "The Gong Show" with Susan Elliot as an inept mime, Tony DeLia as an impressionist specializing in an Italian Humphrey Bogart and a Latin-speaking Popeye, and Ron Gist and Andy Goldberg as a peculiar ventriloquist/dummy act.

No Contract

ABC-TV President, Elton H. Rule, flatly denies increasingly wide-spread reports that he has signed Johnny Carson to a contract with the network.

At the same time, however, he let it be known that ABC-TV is interested in Carson, who is negotiating with NBC-TV on his contract after stating that he was weary of doing his 'Tonight' show.

'MY LADY' IS A stray dog who brings love and faithfulness out of the swamp and into the life of a boy on the brink of young manhood in "Weep No More, My Lady," on "ABC Weekend Specials" series Saturday, September 8 (12-12:30 p.m.).

Dog Brings Joy

Skeeter, a 13-year-old who leads a Huck Finn life in the bayou country, takes in a stray dog that brings him joy and a poignant lesson about the requirements to become a man, on "Weep No More, My Lady," an animated presentation airing on the "ABC Weekend Specials" series Saturday, September 8 (12-noon to 12:30 p.m.).

In the program, Skeeter adopts a strange looking dog that he finds in the swamp and names My Lady. Boy and dog quickly become inseparable. Exciting adventures lie ahead, including a challenge from the notorious Alligator Ike, a bird-hunting contest against Ike's dog, Tiger, and being kidnapped. But for Skeeter, the greatest threat occurs when the dog's owner comes looking for her.

"Weep No More, My Lady" is based on a story by James Street, one of the South's most distinguished writers. It has a fascinating setting, characters you care about, suspenseful adventure, and with all this, something important to say about values.

Heroes Acquire A Star Status

A revised NBC-TV 1979-80 Saturday morning children's schedule, which moves four animated-comedy series' heroes to star status, will begin Saturday, September 8.

"Casper and the Space Angels," "The Super Globetrotters," "The New Schmoos" and "Godzilla" will star in their own half-hour series. Also, the prehistoric cutups of Bedrock, Fred Flintstone and Barney Rubble, will be joined by The Thing in a new one-hour series, "Fred and Barney Meet The Thing."

In addition, for six Saturdays, "Johnny Quest," and "The Jetsons" will be telecast preceding the premiere of the network's new one-hour entertainment/information series — created by Bruce and Carole Hart — which takes place October 20.

"Ask NBC News" and "Time Out," six alternating one-minute news and sports segments, will also be premiering this fall.

The revised schedule follows:

"The Daffy Duck Show," 8 to 8:30 a.m.

"Casper and the Space Angels," 8:30 to 9 a.m.

"Fred and Barney Meet The Thing," 9 to 10 a.m.

"The Super Globetrotters," 10 to 10:30 a.m.

"The New Schmoos," 10:30 to 11 a.m.

"The New Adventures of Flash Gordon," 11 to 11:30 a.m.

"Godzilla," 11:30 a.m. to 12-noon

"Johnny Quest," (Sept. 8 — Oct. 13) 12-noon to 12:30 p.m.

"The Jetsons," (Sept. 8 — Oct. 13) 12:30 to 1 p.m.

Pike's Peek

BY CHARLIE PIKE

HOLLYWOOD — JACKIE ZEMAN and husband MURRAY KAUFMAN stunned their family and friends from coast-to-coast in announcing that they have separated and will get a divorce. Jackie, who plays Bobby Spencer on ABC's "GENERAL HOSPITAL," moved out of the couple's rented Beverly Hills home and has rented a home of her own. The couple was married two years ago after living together for more than seven years.

SUSAN RICHARDSON of "EIGHT IS ENOUGH" no sooner confirmed that she and hubby MICHAEL are expecting their first baby than word comes that WILLIE AAMES, who plays Tommy on the show, is planning to get married. In recent weeks, Willie has been looking for a house to buy in the Beverly Hills area, and most of the homes he's been looking at are above the $250,000 price level.

Production on "MORK & MINDY" is being rushed to a neck-breaking pace in an attempt to free ROBIN WILLIAMS early this fall for his starring role in the motion picture "POPEYE." As a result, there are those close to the show now expressing concern about the quality of the series since there is little time for the luxury of improving each segment.

Although ERIK ESTRADA will be seen in each segment of "CHiPs," a tight schedule is going to have to be met in order to accomplish such a task. When Erik was dismissed from the UCLA Medical Center, his doctor warned the actor that it'll still be the first of October before he'll be able to spend any time at MGM Studios working. Erik's initial scenes will be filmed and spliced into the already completed shows.

It now appears that DAVID HASSELHOFF will be departing his role as Snapper on "THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS" before year's end. There's been growing speculation about David's possible departure, but now it's all but been confirmed that he'll leave when his contract expires.

KATE JACKSON joins ELLIOTT GOULD in the motion picture, "DIRTY TRICKS," now filming on location in Canada. Impersonator RICH LITTLE makes his movie debut in the film, which will be released sometime next year.

Veteran actor RORY CALHOUN, best remembered for his numerous western movie roles, is resting comfortably after undergoing two major operations within a month. The nature of his illness has not been disclosed other than the confirmation by a spokesman who said that it's not cancer.

Watch Out, Udo!

For the past years, East Germany's crack shot putter Udo Beyer has complained that there is no one to challenge him in the Olympics. But, if Mike Carter of Dallas, Texas, continues to improve, Beyer may soon have someone breathing down his neck.

Coach Calls Plays

Coach Jerry Rhome is calling the plays for the Seattle Seahawks, and it doesn't seem to bother quarterback Jim Zorn.

"I don't think it's any big deal not to call my own plays. I probably feel I can call my own game now, but I don't see a need to."

The Marlboro Cup Airs On NBC-TV

The $300,000 Marlboro Cup Invitational Handicap, with such expected entries as 1978 Triple Crown winner Affirmed and 1979 Kentucky Derby and Preakness winner Spectacular Bid, is shaping up as the race to determine the 1979 Horse of the Year in thoroughbred racing. It will be colorcast live for the first time on NBC's "SportsWorld" Saturday, September 8 (5 to 6 p.m.). This will be the seventh running of the Marlboro Cup for three-year-olds and up run over a distance of nine furlongs (1 1/8 miles) at Belmont Park in New York.

This will be the second Marlboro Cup appearance for Affirmed, last year's second-place finisher behind 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew. Second-place finishes have been few for the Las Berrara-trained horse. The winner of 19 out of 26 starts, Affirmed has never failed to finish in the money. By winning the Hollywood Gold Cup on June 24, the 1978 Horse of the Year became the first horse in history to earn $2,000,000. Affirmed's jockey will be Laffit Pincay, the year's leading jockey in North America with over $4,500,000 in purses through July 29.

Another outstanding horse expected to go against Affirmed is Spectacular Bid, winner of the 1979 Kentucky Derby and Preakness, returning to action for the first time since his loss in the Belmont Stakes. This winner of 7 of 8 starts in 1979 will be ridden for the first time by the legendary jockey Bill Shoemaker, the man who has bootied home more winners (over 7,700) than any other jockey in racing history. Also expected in the Marlboro Cup field is Coastal, the 1979 Belmont Stakes winner and victor in all five of his 1979 starts. As of August 4, he is the only Horse of the Year contender still undefeated in 1979.

Other scheduled entrants are Star de Naskra and Cox's Ridge, two outstanding horses that duelled in the Whitney Stakes on August 4. Star de Naskra, ridden by Jeffrey Fell, established himself as one of the nation's top handicap horses by winning his seventh straight race (a string marred by a disqualification), edging second-place Cox's Ridge by 3/4 of a length. It was the sixth win of the year for the four-year-old that also took the measure of The Liberal Member and State Dinner, two other anticipated Marlboro Cup entries.

There is also the possibility that Davona Dale, a certain choice as three-year-old filly of the year, will run in this race. In her ten 1979 races, Davona Dale has totaled nearly $520,000 in purses, with eight first-place finishes and one second.

Agreement Is Reached

CBS Sports has entered into a three-year agreement with the New York Racing Association for the rights to broadcast four major Thoroughbred races annually on the network, including the Belmont Stakes, the third and concluding leg of the Triple Crown for 3-year-olds.

In addition to the Belmont, which CBS Sports has broadcast every year since 1952, it will also broadcast, beginning in 1980, the Travers Stakes, The Marlboro Cup and the Woodward Stakes annually. All are scheduled to be one-hour presentations.

Commenting on the agreement, CBS Sports' Frank Smith said: "I am extremely pleased that CBS and NYRA will be continuing this fine association. It is also a great pleasure to know that we will be broadcasting the Belmont Stakes into a fourth decade."

The Travers is another event for 3-year-olds, and stands as the oldest stakes race in America.

HARD-PRESSED Craig Morton, who many think may lose his starting position at quarterback, has still done a superb job leading the Denver Broncos to AFC Western Division titles the last two seasons. The Broncos kick off their NFL regular season when they entertain the Cincinnati Bengals Sunday, September 2 beginning at 4 p.m. on NBC.

Eyes On Morton

Will the critics ever get off of Craig Morton's back?

It doesn't look very likely, not until he guides the Denver Broncos to a Super Bowl crown.

Nor does it look like 'getting there' is going to be enough, either. Morton, who recently turned 36, has led two different teams — the Dallas Cowboys and the Broncos — into the Super Bowl, only to be thwarted in the crucial game.

But a lot of the blame doesn't rest on Morton. The Cowboys made enough mistakes to last through a season, and the Bronco offensive line couldn't control the likes of Harvey Martin and Ed "Too Tall" Jones in Super Bowl XII.

Morton and the Broncos have a golden chance to start a little redemption this season when they play the Cincinnati Bengals in their 1979 NFL season opener Sunday, September 2 (4 p.m. on NBC-TV).

Cincinnati has a few things to prove themselves, and they hope to rebound from a miserable 1978 season, during which their once-proud offense sputtered.

Morton has long been one of the NFL's chief whipping boys. Some critics say he's practically immobile, while others indicate that he chokes in the big tilts. But even his harshest critics must admit that Morton has done a superb job for the Broncos the past two seasons. Denver captured the AFC West crown both seasons, and the 15-year veteran quarterback was one of the main reasons.

Take, for instance, Morton's performance at the end of last season, when the Broncos bounced back from a slow start to knock Oakland out of first place. In a game against Kansas City, he proved he still has a lot of zing in the old arm, completing 19 or 22 passes that included 16 straight completions.

NCAA Season Begins

Alabama, who shared last year's national championship with USC after posting an 11-1 record including a 14-7 triumph over Penn State in the Sugar Bowl, will battle Georgia Tech on Saturday, September 8 (4:30 to 8 p.m.), on ABC-TV. The game will be the first one of the 1979 NCAA season to be broadcast by the network.

Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant, who is now in his 22nd year at Tuscaloosa, will be looking for his 194th Alabama victory when he leads the Crimson Tide into their first game against Georgia Tech since 1964 (Alabama won, 24-7).

Senior quarterback Steadman Shealy will direct the Tide's offensive attack, which will be bolstered with a crop of explosive runners headed by Major Ogilvie.

Ogilvie, one of Alabama's budding stars, was brought out of the stable to replace top halfback Tony Nelson.

Countering for Georgia Tech, which won seven straight games last year after dropping its first three, will be sophomore signal caller Mike Kelley, who earned his starting role in the third outing of 1978, and tailback Rodney Lee, a fullback last year, whom Coach Pepper Rodgers has called upon to fill in for the graduated All-America, Eddie Lee Ivery.

Rodgers, a Tech alumnus who returns to the helm for his sixth season, has lured former Atlanta Falcon and Minnesota Viking coach Norm Van Brocklin to his staff, along with Steve Spurrier, the 1966 Heisman Trophy winner from Florida and a ten-year veteran of the NFL.

Besides being the first stepping stone for Alabama in its quest to return to the top of the nation's polls, it offers a highly interesting look at football philosophies. It will show just how important material is in determining what style of football a team will play.

When Rodgers started using the Wishbone, a triple option style, it worked as long as he had a quarterback and runners who could make things happen in the style he wanted. This began to fizzle, however, and last year Rodgers put a pro-style I into

MAJOR OGILVIE is one of Alabama's explosive runners who will see action when the Crimson Tide plays Georgia Tech Saturday, September 8 (4:30 to 8 p.m., on ABC-TV).

ELVIN BETHEA, elder statesman on the young Houston Oilers team, anchors an underpublicized but talented unit that helped the Texas team secure a berth in last year's AFC title game. The Oilers meet the Washington Redskins in Washington Sunday, September 2 starting at 1 p.m. on NBC.

Veterans Praised

Amidst the Earl Campbells and the Dan Pastorinis, there is little notice of the Curly Culps and the Elvin Betheas.

The former, of course, were the main offensive catalysts for the Houston Oilers last season. The Oilers were the surprise team in the entire NFL last season, grabbing an AFC playoff berth, then eliminating powerhouses Miami and New England from the playoff picture.

A crushing loss to eventual Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh ended the Oilers' Cinderella season, but not before the extremely young team captured the support of fans across the country.

Now it's a new season, and the Oilers get things moving when they play the revamped Washington Redskins Sunday, September 2 (1 p.m. on NBC-TV).

Most of the praise for Houston's success went to their unparalleled running back, Earl Campbell, who copped nearly every league rushing mark enroute to being named both AFC Player of the Year and Rookie of the Year.

Add to that Pastorini's best season ever — 199 completions, 2,473 yards and 16 touchdowns — and it's easy to see why the offense got most of the press notice.

But the stout defense was at least responsible for the amazing finish of the Oilers. Bulwarks in the unit included nose guard Culp, linebacker Robert Brazile and the elder statesman on the squad, Elvin Bethea.

service. It coincided with the arrival of Mike Kelley, who isn't runner enough to make the triple option work but is certainly a passer. He'll be a good opening test for the Crimson Tide, especially if Lee proves to be an effective replacement for Ivery.

Powerful Alabama rates the favorite's role in this game, but a strong showing on defense and a good day passing by Kelley will keep it interesting for Tech, which is becoming comfortable with its new style.

O.J.'s Last Year?

"As of right now, my plans are that this is my last season," says O.J. Simpson of the San Francisco 49ers. "This is the last season on my contract. For the last three years I've been committed in my mind that this would be it for me."

"But I don't want to say definitely this is my last year. If I can run in excess of 1,000 yards and fit into the passing game we've installed, then we can win a few. And who knows? That's why I won't commit myself now."

Merely A Job

David Doyle, who stars with the three beauties of "Charlie's Angels," maintains his good humor no matter how often he's asked his reaction to being surrounded by the attractive trio. Doyle simply replies that acting is work whether it's with three pretty girls or three dirty old men.

"Oh, I appreciate their femininity all right," he explains. "I'm as aware of their charms as any healthy male would be. I wake up every morning delighted by the prospect of going to work but I go home every night to another wonderful pair, my wife Anne and my daughter Leah. The fact that I'm involved professionally every day with three charming and beautiful women doesn't make that much difference in my personal attitude toward work. They are fellow performers, just as a group of men would be."

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question, on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

FOR SENATOR EDMUND S. MUSKIE (D.-Maine)

Why do you oppose a Constitutional amendment requiring Congress to pass a balanced budget? —Elmer Whitaker, Berkley, Mass.

● It would deprive us of the flexibility to meet changing national needs generated by unanticipated circumstances, national security requirements and economic down-turns. The Congress five years ago set up an independent budget process of its own and is using it to bring the budget into balance. Using this process, we set our sights on a balanced budget and will reach it in 1981, if the economy cooperates.

Balance in 1981 is not just a goal — we have already approved a specific plan for achieving it. The budget process gives the Congress the tools to put a lid on spending each year and to chart a course for spending in future years. The process allows us to determine both our resources and our spending priorities.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Is it true that Trish Van Devere keeps urging her husband George C. Scott to quit the movies? —Sally Jonson, Flint, Mich.

● No. Truth is Trish doesn't say a word to influence George in either direction. She's not the one to issue threats that each current George C. Scott film is his last — those regular statements come from George himself. And, just like the public, Trish receives all those announcements with a pinch of salt. Mind you, if George did decide to throw in the sponge, Trish would not be sorry. For a long time now she has been wanting him to take time off — for traveling, indulging himself in his favorite pastimes (heading that list is cooking — he turns out a fine loaf of bread). In recent years, Trish gave George a birthday gift of a holiday trip to Africa. She got her money back because the only way her husband would go would be on location, not on vacation.

Scott and Trish. He hates vacations.

FOR PAM DAWBER, star of ABC-TV's Mork and Mindy

Why do you think your show is so popular? —M.J., Woodbury, N.J.

● I've tried to analyze its success, too, and can only assume it has caught on because it's geared to all sorts of audiences. There are many episodes that are poignant. Some are slap-happy. There's a message for all ages. Another reason is the artistry of Robin Williams. One thing I do know for sure, that I had nothing to do with it becoming a hit. Credit must go to the scriptwriters, producers and Robin.

FOR HAL LINDEN, star of TV's Barney Miller

Does playing a cop on TV pay off when it comes to dealing with police in real life? —I.R., Redondo, Calif.

● Once I was late for a rehearsal and indulged a bit of yawning to make time. Before I knew it, a cop collared me and gave me a lecture about the dangerous and illegal act. I was resigned and ready to receive a ticket, when he said (up until now, he gave no indication that he recognized me) "I'll let you go this time. But you, of all people should know not to break the law."

FOR BOBBY RIGGS, former tennis champion

Was it your fault that your first two marriages failed? —R.D., Green Bay, Wis.

● It's hard to say. Each wife thought that I should spend equal, if not more, time with her than I did in the locker room. And I couldn't see what all the fuss was about, since the locker room was my office. That was my work. But on the other hand, they must have sensed that was where I was happiest. I guess they didn't enjoy playing second fiddle to a racquet. As I look back, I guess I was to blame.

FOR JENNIFER WARNES, recording star

Does constant traveling have a good or bad effect on your social life? —M.R., Council Bluffs, Iowa

● It's wonderful for meeting people and casual dating but terrible for lasting attachments. If I meet someone in New Jersey whom I'd like to see again, it's almost impossible because the next day I'm off to the West Coast. Many performers who are on the road all the time somehow do manage to form permanent relationships. But so far, that hasn't happened to me.

FOR JULIA CHILD, cook-gourmet-author

What do you consider the basic cooking utensils? —E.M., Albany, Ga.

● One good fry pan, medium-sized and heavy. (I like heavy-duty aluminum with Teflon lining. I stress "heavy," so the contents spread evenly and the heat is held.) Stainless steel saucepans with aluminum bases are essential. Never waste money on cheap pans; get something good and solid that will last for years and years. A "must" is good knives that will sharpen, also a sharpener.

FOR RICHARD E. HALLGREN, Director, National Weather Service

Why have you started using men's names for hurricanes, and who chooses them? —C.D., Little Rock, Ark.

● Beginning last year, we started using both women's and men's names which many people felt was more appropriate. The names are selected by an intergovernmental committee. Short, easy-to-pronounce names are preferred. We also use Spanish names, since the hurricanes that affect the U.S. also could affect the Spanish-speaking countries in the Caribbean.

PRO Senator Wendell H. Ford (D.-Ky.)

The economy has suffered in terms of growth and productivity. Domestic production has fallen far short of our national needs and — waste and inefficiency notwithstanding — the single-most responsible factor is excessive government regulation, which has stifled maximum utilization of our domestic resources. We're at a point where the choice we make will require compromises, if America's economy is to remain strong. Environmental standards need not be sacrificed. A balance can be achieved. We should leave a clean and safe environment for future generations, but that obligation also applies to economic stability and opportunity.

PRO AND CON

Are Environmental Protection Standards Impeding National Development?

CON Douglas M. Costle, Administrator, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency

I believe that pollution clean-up benefits, whether we can compute them or not, exceed the costs and, most important, that the public wants those benefits and is willing to pay for them. Nevertheless, we have to recognize that our programs are costly. There are no quick fixes or magic solutions, and we have to make sure that we are accomplishing our goals in the most efficient manner possible. We will attempt to find the most cost-effective, legally permissible way of meeting environmental goals and to regulate only when we are confident that the benefits exceed the costs. Our national economic problems make this approach more important than ever.

Donna Pescow: A Real-Life Cinderella!

By Isobel Silden

Did Cinderella really look like a pixie, with short tan hair and eyes that changed from green to brown, depending on the air temperature?

French author Charles Perrault did not convey that impression when he created his fairy-tale princess back in the 17th century. And Walt Disney's artists drew her blonde and beautifully languid, when she stopped scrubbing those floors.

Yet here is Donna Pescow, a real-life Cinderella of the almost-1980's, who is not a striking beauty, but somehow much more interesting. She is neither sad nor weebegone like Cinderella.

To the unfamiliar, Donna Pescow plays the title role in ABC's new series Angie, the story of a South Philadelphia Italian waitress who marries Brad (Robert Hays), a rich Main Line pediatrician.

She's playing a funny lady: the characterization comes naturally to her. Donna was brought up, almost literally, in the projection room and backstage of a theater. She explains:

"For over 50 years, my grandfather operated the stage lights at the RKO Albee theater in Brooklyn. He'd tell me all about the names who played there. He told me all their jokes: Henny Youngman's, Milton Berle's, Burns' and Allen's. When it became a movie theater, Poppy stayed on, and he'd take me down on Saturdays. I'd stay in the booth with him or play backstage. When I first saw Burns and Allen on TV, I knew what they were gonna say before they said it." She makes it sound very matter-of-fact. Don't all Brooklyn kids grow up this sophisticated and knowledgeable about show business?

The background has served Donna well. What serious Cinderella could joust with the master comic maker of them all, Garry Marshall, who created her show? He is also responsible for Happy Days, Laverne and Shirley and Mork and Mindy. The man knows what makes Americans laugh. He selects his stars with care.

Donna's "screen test" for Angie was not exactly high comedy. She played the lovelorn teen, Annette, rejected by John Travolta, who loses her virginity in a desperately shocking scene in Saturday Night Fever.

"My big break in show business came from a movie, but I'll always consider my roots in the theater." That's understandable: she is a graduate of the prestigious American Academy of Dramatic Arts. Prior to Fever, she toured in Ah! Wilderness with Richard Kiley and Barbara Bel Geddes and appeared in several Off-Broadway shows.

Then her career took off: "I was signed to a contract for a soap opera, One Life to Live. I played a hat-check girl. One day I'd say, 'Hat.' The next day, I'd say, 'Coat.' The next day, I'd get to say, 'Ticket.' They had me on hold for another part, so they kept me busy doing one-liners. I did work as a hat-check girl once, for one night, at some place. They hired me to work after the opening of a big Broadway show. It was a hot night, and nobody wore coats. They were so mobbed, they even took my chair. I had to stand up the entire evening. The waiters felt so sorry for me, they gave me tips. And I got a free dinner," she remembers.

Donna remembers meals very well. She has a weight problem, but emphatically denies that she weighed 155 in Fever. "Only 135, and that was a lot." She agrees that she looked like a meatball with arms. She weighs considerably less these days as Angie.

"There are a lot of similarities in Angie's life and mine. We're both going through changes, success, some money for the first time in our lives. I can buy things without worrying. Except what my business manager will say, or if he'll give me permission to spend the money," she amends. "In character and humor, Angie and I are a lot alike. She may be a bit more impulsive than I am. I've learned to think before making a decision. But then, Angie knows how it's going to turn out: she has the script," Donna teases. "Actually, I've never made a major decision impulsively. I'm thoughtful in my career."

Frank Edwards/Fotos International

Home is now an apartment in the San Fernando Valley. It was not an easily determined decision.

"I came out here after Fever for four weeks to meet with people about other scripts. There were more jobs here, so I stayed. I went back and forth to New York for six months. I kept chickening out about moving here. Then Garry Marshall called me in. He felt I was right for the Angie concept. 'I need an actress,' he told me.

"When we first talked, I was afraid of a series contract, of staying here. I hadn't heard any ideas that I wanted to do. And I wasn't available to accept anything because I had a film deal pending with someone else.

Tony Costa/People Weekly

In real life Donna is much like Angie. She's warm, bubbly and funny. And she's taking the world by the tail.

Donna's big break was her role with John Travolta in Fever. But that big break didn't happen overnight.

"Six months later, the whole project came back, and I considered it an omen. I could really enjoy playing this character. I'm a fatalist in an optimistic way. I believe there is a reason for the why's and the wherefore's, and if I feel it's right, I go with it."

Angie obviously felt right, and Donna's with it for at least two more seasons. There is no restive pull to stray this early into her success.

"I always believed in that Cinderella story, and I saw the correlation with her and Angie right away, except Angie doesn't have the three wicked stepsisters, and the pumpkin's on stage 32 at Paramount."

Donna is reasonably certain that she could handle a fairy-tale marriage like Angie's.

"I'll get married at some point. I don't know if he'll be trying shoes on me, but I'd handle the situation. I know how to live with having a bit of an income all of a sudden. But I don't look at the men I go out with, thinking about how much money they have, unless all of a sudden one would start taking me to the fast-food places all the time."

She likes the financial security she now enjoys, and she also likes the recognition she gets from the public.

"When the show first went on the air, people would call out 'Angie,' and I'd keep on walking. I didn't know it was me they were hailing. Now I stop, and I have the nicest encounters with people. My character is human and warm; she is not removed. In New York, lots of people gave me opinions of the show." That is how she knew she'd "arrived."

Although Donna Pescow is not yet a household name, in time it well may be. It rhymes with cow. Why had she never thought of changing it to something more glamorous?

"Oh, I did. I was going to be Donna Marshall. But when I was training at the Academy, I met this girl whose name was Donna Marshall. 'Please don't take my name,' she asked, so of course I couldn't. My first agent used to get calls for Donna Somebody, and I did consider changing it. But I never got around to it, and those days are more or less over now," she says.

So are the days of singing in Gil Hodges' Bowling Alley Lounge in Brooklyn, singing love songs to guys arguing about spares, strikes and frames. That was another of her glamorous jobs en route to the big time.

Now there is little time for anything except work. Dates? A few, some with actor Mark Harmon, with whom she denies any romantic attachment. "His family and I are all friends. We went to a party together, the photographers shot me with Mark, and everybody started talking. It's nothing." She also sees co-star Robert Hays socially. They go to dinner, work on scripts together, attend network functions as a pair. They're good friends, too.

Donna is more concerned with getting to know Angie than her social life.

"I want to work on her wardrobe, bring her back to where she's been, rather than where she is going. Sometimes I don't want her to look right. She doesn't fit into Brad's world, and she doesn't want to. She has a very specific background." Donna enjoys exploring all facets of the character. She is also enjoying what success is doing to her life.

Specifically? "I am now able to make a contribution by doing benefits and telethons, rather than sending a dollar. In our business, there are a lot of luxuries, aside from the tangible ones. You can make someone laugh, and that's wonderful."

"Don't misunderstand: I have no desire to be a Donna Do-Good. If I can do something for someone, and if it's worthwhile, I will. But I don't want to shape an image of a halo for myself."

For the moment, the Fairy Godmother's magic wand will do very nicely, thank you. FW

Isobel Silden frequently reports on the celebrity scene for Family Weekly.

Success of The Senior Marriage

Contrary to what most people think, men and women who marry (or remarry) in their senior years adjust to marriage as well as younger persons do. That's the message from Dr. James Peterson, a family counselor and professor emeritus at the Andrus Gerontological Center, University of Southern California. More than 45,000 persons over the age of 65 get married every year. The key to their successful adjustment to each other, says Peterson, is "talk, talk and more talk. The couple must be bathed in talk. It is the only way we really share a relationship."

But in addition to communication, Peterson suggests several other guidelines for successful senior marriages. They include:

- A couple should know each other well before they decide to marry.

- It is important that children and friends approve. Middle-aged children often object to a parent remarrying, says Peterson, partly because they fear losing a potential inheritance.

- A couple should not live in the same home where either one lived before. The ghosts of former spouses may put too great a strain on the new relationship.

- An older widow or widower should not remarry before she or he has completed the grieving process for the former partner. "There must be a growing distance from the spouse who died," Peterson observes.

Older couples marry for the same reasons younger ones do: companionship, shared interests, affection, sex. Moreover, both male and female senior citizens tend to live longer, be healthier and experience fewer emotional problems if they are married rather than alone. Some older women are wary of remarriage because they do not want to risk losing their independence, Peterson says. "Perhaps that's just as well," he remarks, "since of the 12 million unmarried people over the age of 60, 10 million are women and only two million are men." Fw

Teach Your Child Early

By Samuel J. Gulino

The most decisive period in a young child's life is the span between eight months and 18 months," Dr. Burton White observes. As a psychologist and director of Harvard's Pre-School Education Project, Dr. White has concluded that a child's aptitude for learning and future intelligence are largely determined before the age of three years. This theory, supported by recent research, emphasizes that parents are more important than teachers in the education of children.

White's concern centers on the role of the mother (or the father) — how she (or he) interacts with the child — between eight months and 18 months of age. During this time, a child begins to acquire a grasp of language, begins to move about the house independently, sometimes getting into trouble, and it is a time of considerable stress for the mother. But White believes that a parent's reactions during this time influence the child's ability more than anything done in the future.

Alert parents can exploit their children's natural curiosity. They should talk to their children, listen to them, provide educational games, read to them, help them develop social relationships.

Dr. White is convinced that if parents would begin the education of their babies almost immediately following birth many of the so-called learning disabilities would be eliminated.

To be more specific, here is a list of child-care do's and don'ts from the Harvard Pre-School Project:

Do's

1. Provide a variety of materials and objects for the child to explore. Pots, pans, plastic jars with covers and canned goods are all appropriate for a child between eight and 18 months of age.
2. Be available to the child for approximately half of his or her waking hours. Provide input, augment the child's curiosity, give instruction in language and encourage social skills.
3. When your child takes the initiative to solicit your help or participation from age nine months on, respond promptly and favorably. Try to understand what the child is trying to do and set appropriate limits. Offer encouragement and assistance enthusiastically.
4. When your child seems bored, try to provide something interesting for him or her to do.
5. When your child misbehaves, firm and consistent discipline, coupled with love and respect, is the best remedy.
6. When a child attempts an activity that would be unsafe without supervision, give him or her the chance to try the activity with your supervision.

Don'ts

1. Don't rely on regular use of restrictive devices such as playpens or high chairs. Research done by the Harvard Pre-School Project found that regular confinement was consistently associated with poor development.
2. Don't put up with tantrums.
3. Don't worry that your child won't love you because you find it necessary to say no occasionally.
4. Don't try to win every fight with your child, especially from age two years on when babies tend to become negative.
5. Don't stop your baby from cluttering the house — it's constructive curiosity.
6. Don't be overprotective — babies are more careful than you realize.
7. Don't dominate your child.
8. Don't worry about when the baby learns the alphabet, learns to read, count numbers or is slow to begin speaking, providing he or she seems to understand more and more language while growing.
9. Don't force toilet-training. When the child reaches two or two-and-a-half years, it should happen quite easily.
10. Don't allow the baby to become convinced that the whole world was made just for him or her.

As the child explores his small world, he will, at times, get excited, frustrated or hurt. And when he comes to you seeking attention, you should grasp the opportunity to teach.

Are Older Parents Better Parents?

At left, President Carter with daughter Amy. Carter was 43 when she was born and has written that her birth "made me feel young again."

Actress Paula Prentiss and her husband, actor Richard Benjamin, waited 13 years to have a child. Paula was 36. "You can mess around when you're in your 20's, but in your 30's you start questioning what you have accomplished," she says. Now the parents of two, the Benjamins assert, "We decided we wanted children, and we bloomed."

All across the country, women are discovering that the rewards of motherhood are sweeter with age. American women are marrying later, working longer and delaying childbirth until their middle or late 30's. And many of them — and their husbands — are blooming. When Jimmy Carter's daughter, Amy, was born, he was in his 40's. He wrote: "She made me feel young again."

Older parents are a growing social phenomenon. According to the National Center for Health Statistics, the rate of first births to women over 30 was 7.3 per 1,000 in 1970. By 1976, it was 9.0 and steadily rising.

Older couples recite a persuasive litany of reasons to wait: time to save money, time to nurture a strong and secure marriage and time for something particularly important for the child's mother — the chance to learn and grow as an individual. Women who bear children too soon have much less chance to develop an independent identity and to find other outlets for their talents. A young woman who limits her world to the nursery, experts say, deals a blow to her emotional and intellectual growth.

Arthur Campbell, deputy director of the National Institute of Child Health and Development, says, "A girl pregnant at the age of 16 has 90 percent of her life script written for her. By delaying parenthood, women have more chances to develop options about the way they lead their lives. One could say, 'A woman bearing her first child at age 36 writes 90 percent of her life script herself.'"

Couples who see the divorce rate climbing also see that having children introduces extra responsibilities and pressures into married life. The birth of a baby transforms a husband and wife into a mother and father.

Dr. Lee Salk, a renowned authority on childbearing, emphasizes the value of a woman's embarking on motherhood only after building a stable marriage: "She will have a far better chance of finding the right love and nurturing it to maturity," he says. "And if she and her husband chose poorly in selecting each other, they will have ample time either to discover their problems and work them out or to end the relationship without the guilt of depriving children of a normal home life."

Does everything fall on the plus side for the older parent? Unfortunately, deciding to wait to have a child involves other compelling issues — medical, psychological and social — and postponing pregnancy has its real risks.

Fertility, the capacity to conceive and bear children, declines in women after they reach 30. Complications such as toxemia, high blood pressure and kidney disorders are more prevalent in older pregnant women, and there is an increasing risk to the fetus.

The most frequent genetic defect associated with aging parents — and perhaps emphasis on early and thorough prenatal care, have made the problematic medical questions about the safety of a late pregnancy much easier to handle. But the book is by no means closed when a healthy baby arrives. In fact, many authorities now believe the greatest challenge to older parents is raised immediately after delivery, not before: the seemingly simple matter of adjusting to the presence of a child in their home.

Older couples are catapulted into a new life when they become parents, a life for which they may be largely unprepared. The magic and excitement of having their long-awaited and intensely desired baby does not evaporate, but happiness is often only part of the picture. Older parents, who lack the stamina of 20-year-olds and who may be set in their routines, often find themselves panicky, overscheduled and constantly exhausted when faced with the daily demands of a child.

Jane Fonda, who had her first child at 33, says: "Children do change your life, no question about it. You're used to years of freedom, and then you find a day in your life doesn't give you enough time. You have x number of hours to do this or that, and you've got to try to fit so much in. I was extremely lucky because my husband is very, very good at changing diapers and feeding kids."

If older parents can count on their maturity, their serenity, their good sense and their humor to carry them through the adjustment process into a settled state of mind and a settled way of life, then the picture for them and their children should be very bright. One of the greatest fears that haunt older men and women — the possibility that they may die when their children are still young — is, in the opinion of the experts, a personal anxiety that is not of unusually great concern to their children. Most of them accept the inevitability of their parents' death.

Nor do these children seem to feel particularly uncomfortable that their parents are older than those of their friends. According to Dr. Salk: "Most children could not care less how old their parents are. But if you feel ashamed of being past 40, or feel old, this will reflect itself in your children's attitude. Other children might tease yours about having older parents, but such taunts are relatively unimportant to them, especially if your relationship is solid and loving."

And who is most capable of sustaining that kind of solid and loving relationship between parent and child? For those who still cling to the common prejudice that the best candidates for parenthood are young, it should be added here that no less an authority than Dr. Benjamin Spock thinks "late is great": "A younger mother," he believes, "is emotionally less apt to be tolerant of the behavior of a child, less apt to enjoy it, just because she is too close to childhood... The older parent, secure in her maturity, can enjoy those special charms of children that are expressions of the child's immaturity — their ingenuousness, their wonderment, their spontaneity and enthusiasm."

What Young Americans Are Worried About

By Shirley Sloan Fader

Marilyn Harris is single, 25, and doing very well at her job. Lately, though, she's had trouble sleeping and suffers from an occasional upset stomach. "It's just nervousness," says her doctor.

Bill Lenke is 28, happily married and has no children. Together he and his wife earn $23,000. They live well, keep within their income and seem to have no problems. Yet Bill suffers from frequent headaches. His doctor can find no physical cause and finally asks, "Are you a worrier?"

Eric Caughlin and Eleanor Demski don't know each other. But they are suffering from similar anxieties. They feel their personal lives are so disorganized and unhappy they wonder how much longer they can cope. In fact, they suspect they're headed toward nervous breakdowns.

All these are symptoms typical of today's anxious young people, according to a study at the Institute for Social Research (ISR) of the University of Michigan. Compared to their parents who were young in 1957 when the ISR organized a similar study, young adults today worry about more things and spend more time worrying.

"It's the loss of guidelines for working out the problems of young adulthood," says Dr. Joseph Veroff, professor of psychology and faculty associate of ISR, who, with Dr. Elizabeth Douvan and Dr. Richard Kulka, conducted the new study. "We used to have general rules that everybody understood about what you should aim for in life. And there was no question that you certainly should get married, certainly should have children." He notes that now people like Marilyn and the others are left totally on their own to make decisions which will shape their entire lives. It's not surprising that so many young adults feel so anxious.

In the 1957 study, Americans in their 20's often mentioned their marriages and their roles as parents as the center of their happiness. As social pressures to marry and raise a family have eased, however, young Americans often find they have no substitute to offer. Their relationships with others often seem instead transitory, confusing and a source of great distress.

Paradoxically, some of the problems facing young people today may be the result of their basic good fortune. Because they are part of the best educated, most prosperous generation in American history, they expect an enormous amount from life and from themselves.

One of the current generation's top goals — personal independence — may be a major cause of its anxiety. "This fear of being dependent has developed," says Dr. Veroff. "People say, 'He or she is so dependent' as if that's the most terrible thing in the world. People make themselves miserable and twist their lives out of shape by resisting their natural dependence on their mate, their parents and those around them."

The workable solution seems to be to combine our goals with a reasonable awareness of the expectations and needs of those around us. You don't live completely according to outside rules and pressures but choose those people you wish to relate to and take their expectations and needs into consideration. Selection is your key to independence.

Despite, or perhaps because of, their anxieties, young adults develop their own values and styles and they become aware of their abilities. They notice their own feelings, reactions and thinking patterns.

With this knowledge comes a strong sense of self.

There's nothing wrong in worrying about what your life should be like. As Dr. Veroff concludes: "It seems to be a two-way process. The price of self-development seems to be anxiety. And the anxiety in turn produces a rise in self-knowledge, self-confidence and self-development." FW

Do Women Fear Men - Or Vice Versa?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. The idea that American men are afraid of women is a myth — it's the other way around. Basically men are wolves and women are afraid of them.
2. A woman who habitually dresses provocatively usually does so because it provides an expression for her feelings of vivaciousness, self-confidence and a general sense of well-being.
3. There are interesting differences between women who want to have children and those who do not.
4. During peak experiences in the love-and-romance department, men's thoughts and ideas take a decidedly different turn than those of women.
5. Women spend more time worrying about their weight than men do — regardless of what the scales tell them — and for an interesting reason.
6. Women of distinction possess special personality characteristics.

ANSWERS

1. False. University of Southern California's clinical professor of psychiatry, Dr. Martin Grotjahn, concludes from his studies of man-woman relationships both in Europe and the U.S. that not only are American men afraid of women but that most men are. Other investigations bear this out. For example, Oregon State University studies of the self-concepts of men and women showed "females to have a far more positive feeling about their identity than males." Other studies show that in social situations a woman is far quicker than a man to sense another person's thoughts and feelings, much more acutely aware of the nuances of manner and the tone of voice which reveal another's under-the-surface feelings. As Rutgers University studies have shown, in interpersonal relations, women are more keenly sensitive to what is going on, more astute than men in telling the difference between what people say and what they mean. Men realize that this gives women an advantage in relationships — and this cannot help but have an intimidating effect. Grotjahn concludes from his clinical observations that "the romantically aggressive woman, the 'with it' housewife, the intellectual, the successful career girl are the particular dread of many men, who can only stand up against them in their dreams and feel inadequate toward them in reality."
2. False. Studies by Vanderbilt University behavioral scientists suggest that more often than not a woman who habitually dresses provocatively does so because she feels insecure and anxious. She may also "literally spend hours applying her makeup... as though she believed that if she could look attractive enough, she would evoke a response from others that might give her some sense of security." Similar examples of exhibitionistic behavior prompted by feelings of insecurity are cited, viz: a 29-year old woman who had a constant need for people to pay attention to her. And "although her husband called her an 'exhibitionist' for wearing extremely provocative clothes, she could not change because she felt worthless unless men noticed her."

3. True. In an Ohio State University study of women who choose to have children and those who do not, a major difference between them was found to be "the way women view and relate to their mothers. Women not intending to have children report that they are less close to their mothers and see their mothers as less fulfilled and satisfied by mothering and homemaking roles than do women who intend to have children. In addition, they rate their relationships with their fathers as less close and their parents' marriages as less happy than women who want children."

4. True. A Bryn Mawr College study, in which men and women subjects were interviewed in confidential questionnaires, found that, during this time, males are thinking more about past experiences as well as current behavior, while females are thinking more of imaginary romantic experiences (fantasizing about how things might be and conjuring up other romantic situations).

5. True. Fordham University studies of men and women undergraduates show that "females tend to perceive themselves as appearing heavier than they really are." Men, on the other hand — regardless of their avoirdupois — tend to perceive themselves as appearing lighter than they really are. To put it another way, the weight of all flesh — so far as one's body image is concerned — depends on whether that flesh belongs to a man or a woman.

6. True. In a University of California study of more than 800 women psychologists, scientists, artists, writers and politicians, it was found that each group was distinguished by specific personality characteristics. Politicians were "more sociable, conscientious, self-controlled and group-dependent; artists and writers were more affected by their feelings, were more spontaneous and natural and more inclined to follow their own urges; scientists were the more reserved, serious and tough-minded; and psychologists were more flexible, liberal and accepting." When contrasted with women of the general population, these four groups of career women were described as more assertive and adventurous and less conservative. FW

My Feet Were Killing Me ...Until I Discovered the Miracle in Germany!

It was the European trip I had always dreamed about. I had the time and money to go where I wanted—see what I wanted. But I soon learned that money and time don't mean much when your feet hurt too much to walk. After a few days of sight-seeing my feet were killing me.

Oh, I tried to keep going. In Paris I limped through Notre Dame and along the Champs-Élysées. And I went up in the Eiffel Tower although I can't honestly say I remember the view. My feet were so tired and sore my whole body ached. While everybody else was having a great time, I was in my hotel room. I didn't even feel like sitting in a sidewalk cafe.

The whole trip was like that until I got to Hamburg, Germany. There, by accident, I happened to hear about an exciting breakthrough for anyone who suffers from sore, aching feet and legs.

This wonderful invention was a custom-made foot support called Flexible Featherspring. When I got a pair and slipped them into my shoes my pain disappeared almost instantly. The flexible shock absorbing support they gave my feet was like cradling them on a cushion of air. I could walk, stand, even run. The relief was truly a miracle.

And just one pair was all I needed. I learned that women also can wear them—even with sandals and open backed shoes. They're completely invisible.

Imagine how dumbfounded I was to discover that these miraculous devices were sold only in Europe. Right then I determined that I would share the miracle I discovered in Germany with my own countrymen.

Today thousands of Americans including those who have retired—many with foot problems far more severe than mine—have experienced this blessed relief for themselves.

Here's why Feathersprings work for them and why they can work for you. These supports are like nothing you've ever seen before. They are custom fitted and made for your feet alone! Unlike conventional devices, they actually imitate the youthful elastic support that Nature originally intended your feet to have.

An Amazing Diet Breakthrough!

HOW TO BURN OFF BODY FAT, HOUR-BY-HOUR!

MEDICAL DOCTOR'S NEW DISCOVERY BURNS AWAY MORE FAT THAN IF YOU RAN 98 MILES PER WEEK!

DATeline SAN DIEGO — An amazing diet breakthrough has been developed by a southern California M.D.

This breakthrough literally allows you to burn off body fat faster than someone who runs almost 100 miles per week.

This may very well be the most amazing weight loss discovery of the century. In fact, it may be the fastest way to lose weight permanently that has ever been developed.

Testing so far is incomplete but there is a very strong suspicion that this discovery makes it possible for an overweight person to lose as much as 2 pounds of fat and fluid everyday for the first week. Actually, it may produce a 6 pound weight loss in just the first 48 hours! After the first week, this discovery could conceivably allow a continuing weight loss of as much as 9 pounds every two weeks thereafter. If needed, it should be possible to use this method to lose 50, 60, 70 or even 100 pounds and more.

When you begin to use this program, you can expect to be able to measure the difference in your waistline in just 24 to 48 hours. You will probably lose more inches each week than even if you faithfully did hundreds of situps everyday. You may very well lose as much as 3 to 5 inches off your waistline in the first month. If you are a woman, you can lose as much as a full dress size in only 7 days.

The doctor who developed this formula is more than an ordinary M.D. He is also a psychiatrist who specializes in alcohol and drug addictions. In addition to his other patients, he has treated more than 2500 drug addicts. But strangely enough, his practice has taught him that overeating is as difficult to deal with as any hard-core drug addiction. He came to realize that what was needed was an anti-fat weapon that was both safe and very powerful. After a lot of research, he has developed just such a weapon. Apparently, what happens is that his crash-burn system turns up your body's "inner furnace" and breaks down your excess body fat and automatically flushes it out of your body forever.

The amazing thing, of course, is the speed at which this program works. It is rather remarkable to throw off as much as 6 pounds of fat and fluid in the very first weekend.

Another nice thing about this discovery is that it does not require fasting, exercise or will power. Now at last, it is possible to lose weight without fasting or discomfort.

This weight loss concept is now being tested nationwide. So far, the preliminary results are nothing short of amazing. The first informal reports indicate astonishing weight losses of as much as 12 pounds in the first 7 days. There are early indications that some people are losing weight 3 times faster than ever before (including significant losses of as much as 50 pounds.)

Of course, something like this cannot be kept secret. Rumors of this doctor-developed breakthrough are spreading like wildfire. The rush is on. It is easy to imagine that professional actors, actresses and other celebrities will be going out of their way to get their hands on this wonderful anti-fat weapon.

You can't blame them. Imagine how it must feel to drop up to 2 pounds a day and shrink your waistline up to 3 inches the first week.

"... Imagine how it must feel to drop up to 2 pounds a day and shrink your waistline up to 3 inches the first week ..."

The first concern of the doctor who developed this program is safety. Therefore, his anti-fat formula contains absolutely no drugs. It is made up entirely of 100% natural ingredients. He first tested it on himself and he now uses it religiously every day. This program can even help people who have been hopelessly overweight all their lives including those who need to lose 20 to 30 or 70 pounds or more.

The doctor recommends, however, that you consult your personal physician before you begin this or any other diet program.

This is a totally new concept in the war against fat. There simply has never been an anti-fat weapon quite like this. It almost seems to evaporate fat and inches from the very first day. It automatically converts body fat to body fuel.

Remember — this amazing reducing aid is a doctor-developed formula. It starts to work as soon as it enters your system. It instantly begins to shrink your fat cells and also starts

"... The amazing thing, of course, is the speed at which this program works. It is rather remarkable to throw off as much as 6 pounds of fluid and fat in the very first weekend ..."

Then, during the rest of the day, you eat a wide selection of tasty foods which is scientifically programmed to maintain a high level of fat burn-off.

That's all there is to it. This may be the most effective fat-burning method ever developed. It is not a drug. It is not a gimmick. As you have read before, this is a formula and a program developed by a medical doctor who uses it himself.

It works. More fantastic test results are pouring in everyday. Here's how you can prove all this to yourself without any financial risk at all.

Go ahead and order a supply of this crash-loss discovery by mail. Order as much or as little as you need. Then, as soon as the mailman delivers this fantastic weight-loss miracle to your door — start the program. If you have not lost up to 6 pounds in the first 48 hours and up to 12 pounds in the first week, if you are not 100% satisfied — then send back the empty product container and the company will return your entire payment to you quietly and without question.

If you are extra skeptical you can post-date your check or money order by 30 days. If you do this, the company promises and guarantees not to deposit it for at least that amount of time. Then, if you decide to return the product container, the company will send back your uncashed check or money order with no questions asked. You can't lose money — you can only lose weight.

The price is just $8.45 for a full 10-day supply with complete instructions. A 15-day supply is $11.70. A 20-day supply is $13.95. And finally, a 30-day supply is only $18.95. (This is a 25% discount.)

To order, write your name and address and the words "crash-loss program" on a piece of paper and send it with your payment to:

Millburn Products

P.O. Box 219
Maplewood, New Jersey 07040

to safely stimulate your fat-burning metabolism.

If you want to lose weight and carve inches off your body, here are the results that are possible.

- 6 inches off waistline
- 4 inches off stomach
- 4 inches off buttocks
- 3 inches off thighs
- 5 inches off hips

Remember — you don't have to wait weeks for this diet secret to work. It starts instantly! You can actually see the results in just a few days.

The way you use this formula is simple. All you do is mix it with a glass of your favorite beverage and drink it everyday the first thing in the morning.

As soon as you do this, you will have automatically stepped up your fat burning metabolism. This will continue for the next 24 hours.

DINNER BELLE

Returning home from the office.
I say what my wife likes to hear:
"Surprise! I'm taking you out To dinner tonight, my dear."

My wife, you would think, would be pleased.
But reacts with a wistful sigh.
And much as I may dislike to
I'll tell you the reason why.

I noticed, you see, on arriving,
My gaze being sharp and steady,
What caused me to make my suggestion:
My wife had our dinner all ready.

THROUGH A CHILD'S EYES

My three-year-old granddaughter was sitting by her father who was watching a baseball game on TV. An outfielder ran to catch a ball and hit the fence. He immediately fell backward and was obviously hurt. A replay of the incident was shown, which my granddaughter watched with interest, then turned to her father and said, "See, Daddy, he did it to himself again."

REMEMBER LAST WINTER?

It's 10° outside... Even getting colder. So you bundle up in layers and layers of heavy clothes. First with long underwear... then bulky, restrictive thermalwear on top.

Oh, you were warm all right. Like in a Turkish bath. Because you began to perspire from all your activity. And perspiring in that mountain of clothes is like perspiring in a plastic bag! The perspiration is locked in. So there you are. Wet and miserable.

But now, at last, Damart has solved the problem. Because Damart invented underwear that keeps you warm, dry and comfortable no matter how cold it is or how long you stay out. Underwear that's soft and light so you can move easily. Underwear that lets the perspiration evaporate through so you can always stay warm and dry next to your skin.

Damart does this with a new miracle fabric—Thermolactyl. It not only retains and reflects your natural body warmth, it's knitted to let perspiration out! No other underwear does this!

Damart will be supplying The 1980 U.S. Winter Olympic Team with Thermolactyl underwear! Damart is so comfortable that the Mt. Everest climbing expedition wears it. So does the Mt. McKinley Bicentennial Expedition and the U.S. Bobsled Team, the Chicago Bears Football Club, New England Patriots and Philadelphia Eagles.

Our free color catalog tells the full Damart Thermolactyl story and displays the whole Damart line for men and women, including tall sizes. Send for your FREE copy now!

WHAT ^{IN} THE WORLD

One: The Loneliest Number?

Life after a divorce is apparently harder for men than it is for women. In a study of people who had been divorced an average of three years, Dr. Erwin Jackson, a doctoral candidate in counseling at Florida State University, found that the majority of men questioned showed anxiety toward meeting women, a desire to continue the past relationship and difficulty concentrating on their jobs. Dr. Jackson also found that women were more content with the time they spent alone and they almost unanimously agreed that their divorces resulted in personal growth and understanding.

Dr. Jackson feels that part of men's troubles may be that "it is less acceptable for men to show emotion, so that when a divorce occurs men have few emotional outlets. And," stresses Jackson, "the women's movement probably has a lot to do with the way divorce hits men. Women have learned that they can turn to other women for help during a time of crisis. Men have never formed close friendships with other men, so men tend to internalize emotional traumas like divorce."

Different Kinds Of Knowledge

What constitutes a good education? Joseph Gauld, the founder of Hyde School in Bath, Maine, feels that "the emphasis should not be on academics alone. Development of character, learning about your own uniqueness and potential and learning to cooperate with others are all just as important."

At Hyde, students are expected to "pass both character and academic requirements. We work on the premise that individuals can and must participate in governing themselves," says Gauld, "so we make sure that every student plays a leadership role. Athletics, the performing arts and working in the community are as emphasized as math and English, and

Labor Day Celebration

Labor Day was officially declared by Congress in 1894, and since then, the first Monday in September has been a holiday in celebration of this country's working people. Labor has a long history of music and art that depicts the life of workers, but few people are well acquainted with it. Now, District 1199 of the National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees has begun a unique attempt to bring those arts and humanities directly to rank-and-file workers.

Bread and Roses, as the program is called, is the brainchild of Moe Foner, executive secretary of District 1199, and the name comes from a poem written by the American poet James Oppenheim in the early 1900's. His exact words were "Hearts starve as well as bodies, give us bread, but give us roses." And that's what Foner is trying to do. "Cultural activities are definitely a part of the labor movement," stresses Foner, "and we're anxious to bring events directly to workers in their work place. We are trying to serve as a model, and while we're located primarily in the Northeast, we're hoping that other labor organizations will join us."

Bread and Roses programs include lunchtime performances of choral and theater groups in hospitals, evening concerts and an art exhibit that will tour museums around the country under the auspices of the Smithsonian. Most Bread and Roses functions are open to the public.

students are expected to continually evaluate themselves in all these areas. Students are also expected to take an active role in their own discipline, in the evaluation of the faculty and in planning changes in the school's programs."

Gauld feels that the Hyde philosophy is worth spreading to schools across the country. "At Hyde, we are putting into practice the American belief that the individual is accountable and his actions important. Preparing people to take an active role in their society is, we feel, the greatest responsibility of education."

Ordering By Mail

It's not really too early to be thinking about winter, particularly if you're considering mail-ordering clothes or gifts. After all, didn't you promise yourself that you wouldn't let Christmas leap out suddenly at you again this year?

"Armchair" or mail-order shopping is an easy, painless, usually hassle-free way of buying. From the more than 8,000 catalog houses in this country, consumers can order everything from thread to insurance to vitamins. Occasionally, however, problems may arise; but never fear, there are remedies. Bess Myerson, New York City's former Commissioner of Consumer Affairs, has gathered together all sorts of information on ordering by mail and put it into a 12-page booklet titled "Bess Myerson's Consumer Guidelines to Shopping by Mail." The booklet is available by sending a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to B.M. Consumer Guidelines, Direct Mail/Marketing Assoc., Dept. 36, 6 East 43rd St., N.Y., N.Y. 10017.

H. Armstrong Roberts

Lifestyles

Nutrition. Teen-agers have enough problems without having their diets criticized, but the Professional Nutritionist reports that many adolescents do not get enough iron and calcium in their diets. The article stresses four reasons why adolescence is the time when well-balanced diets are especially important. The body is still forming; emotional stress affects nutritional use; teen-age pregnancies greatly alter nutritional needs; and good nutritional practices developed at this time will be carried into adulthood.

Marijuana. Nine percent of all high-school seniors use marijuana daily, says a report recently released by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. In the peak age group for users, 18 to 25, three out of five people have tried marijuana at least once, and one out of four uses it currently. However, only 7 percent of people over 35 have tried marijuana.

Contraception. About 40 percent of married couples of child-bearing age use sterilization as a birth-control method within five years after the birth of their last child. Family Planning Perspectives reports that most couples turn to sterilization when the woman is in her late 20's or early 30's, after they've been married between five and 14 years and after they've had two or three children.

BEETLE BAILEY

TIGER

by BUD BLAKE

Our Story: IT IS GALAN'S DAY OFF AND HE AWAKES TO A GLITTERING WORLD OF NEW-FALLEN SNOW. HE TAKES HIS BOW AND QUIVER OF ARROWS AND HEADS FOR THE FAIRYLAND THAT ONLY YESTERDAY WAS A BARREN FOREST.

HE SPENDS AN ARROW TRYING TO BAG A HARE, BUT HIS QUARRY IS AS WHITE AS THE SNOW AND ALL HE COULD SEE WAS THE BLACK TIPS OF ITS EARS.

THEN THE SILENCE OF THE FOREST IS BROKEN BY A SQUEAL OF LAUGHTER. BENEATH A TANGLE OF STRAW-COLORED HAIR, GALAN SEES THE GRINNING FACE OF A VILLAGE CHILD.

"YOU DON'T USE A YEW BOW AND FINE ARROWS ON SUCH LOWLY GAME AS HARES. A SLING IS GOOD ENOUGH."

AS THEY SPEAK, A GROUSE FLUSHES FROM ITS WARM SHELTER UNDER A SNOW-COVERED TUSsock OF GRASS AND FLIES WITH A CLATTER OF WINGS TO A NEARBY BRANCH. THE PEASANT GIRL PUSHES GALAN ASIDE AND PUTS A ROUNDED STONE IN HER SLING.

A CLOUD OF FEATHERS GIVES EVIDENCE THAT THE MISSILE HAD FOUND ITS MARK. "MEAT ON THE TABLE!" SQUEALS THE PEASANT GIRL AS SHE GOES TO PICK UP HER KILL.

© 1979 King Features Syndicate, Inc. World rights reserved

BUT TWO RAGGED SERFS STEP FROM THEIR HIDING PLACE AND CLAIM THE GROUSE. GALAN PLACES AN ARROW TO HIS BOW. "DROP THAT! IT IS OURS BY RIGHT!" THEY DEMAND.
