SALT II Approval Still Faces Struggle In Senate

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even if President Carter succeeds in severing SALT II from the furor over Soviet troops in Cuba, the treaty still faces an uphill struggle in the Senate.

The timing and outcome of the chamber's debate are clouded by procedural delays, parliamentary maneuvering, filibusters and stormy debate over issues ranging from whether Soviet compliance with the treaty terms can be verified to demands for sharp increases in defense spending.

The Senate's Democratic leaders want to begin floor debate this year to avoid entangling the treaty in the presidential and congressional contests of 1980.

But majority leader Robert C. Byrd says that timing would hold only if the pact clearly has the 67 votes needed for ratification.

On Tuesday, Byrd's Republican counterpart, minority leader Howard H. Baker of Tennessee, said that as of now there are probably fewer than 60 senators prepared to vote for the treaty.

And there are conflicting predictions as to when the treaty will reach the floor.

Baker said it might be as early as late October, with debate limited to a month or less. But Sen. John Tower of Texas, chairman of the Senate Republican conference, said debate might be put off until March or April.

The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said he is prepared to end hearings on the pact and to proceed with the committee's consideration of proposed changes.

But Church also says he believes there is no chance the Senate will ratify SALT II as long as the Soviet brigade is in Cuba.

Senate aides say Church is considering a strategy to permit SALT II's ratification with a reservation stating that the treaty would not take effect until the president certifies the brigade has been withdrawn or dismantled.

Baker, however, said this approach is a "cop-out" that dodges the issue and one he won't accept.

He said it would be far more preferable for the Senate to delay debate until the combat character of the brigade is altered. Baker said that, despite administration pleas, he cannot separate the Soviet presence and increasing Russian "adventurism" around the world from consideration of the pact.

8 Violations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Ethics Committee saw today its 14-month investigation of Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D-Ga., uncovered evidence of eight possible violations of federal law.

"Should the Department of Justice find evidence leading to the indictment or conviction of any member, officer or employee of the Senate, the committee will take such additional action as is appropriate," the panel said.

In sending its final report to the Senate, the committee reaffirmed its earlier recommendation that Talmadge be "denounced" for "reprehensible" financial conduct.

Talmadge, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, now must decide whether to accept the committee's judgment or fight its conclusions on the Senate floor.

Gordon Roberts, a spokesman for Talmadge, said there would be no immediate comment on the committee's report. Talmadge has previously said the panel's decision to "denounce" instead of "censure" him was a "personal victory."

Although the term "censure" carries no automatic loss of privileges, the Senate has traditionally considered it the severest punishment it can mete out to a member.

There was no indication when Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd might bring the Talmadge issue to the Senate floor.

Among the possible criminal violations listed by the committee were perjury, making false claims against the government, conspiracy to defraud the government, income tax evasion and accepting campaign contributions in a federal building.

The committee agreed Tuesday on the contents of the final 30-page report, and sent its finding to Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti for possible criminal prosecution.

Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III, the committee chairman, said the report identified various unnamed persons who may have violated federal law.

Pontiff Joins In Prayer And Song

By GEORGE CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Pope John Paul II joined in prayer with religious professionals and in song with school children today, clapping along with the youngsters in time to the music and responding to their cheers with some of his own. He told both the adults and the youngsters that in Christ they can find love.

The pope started his third day in the United States with an early morning prayer service, then went to Madison Square Garden for a songfest with 19,000 students from Roman Catholic schools.

"Your Holiness. We welcome you to our city in your pursuit of human dignity," read the Garden message board that normally flashes sports scores.

The youngsters presented the pope with gifts

— a T-shirt and jeans, representing the dress of today's youth, and a guitar and a tape-recording of popular music.

John Paul clapped along as the youngsters sang, "Day by Day," then responded to their repeated cheers with several of his own, lasting for nearly 10 minutes: "Woo, woo, woo," "Woo-hoo" and "Mmm's" of appreciation.

Finally, prompted by Cardinal Terence Cooke, he began his speech, noting that if he continued his cheers, "We shall destroy the program."

Earlier, he told more than 2,500 nuns, priests and church workers who packed St. Patrick's Cathedral for a morning prayer service of about 40 minutes that they should embrace the world in "love, in service, in healing and in reconciliation."

Nov. 13 Trial Set For Embezzling

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Judge Henry L. Stevens this morning allowed a motion to continue the trial of Dr. Andrew Best, charged with conspiracy and embezzlement, until November 13.

Best, scheduled for trial in Superior Court here next week, was arrested in June, along with three other defendants, in connection with the alleged embezzlement of almost $100,000 from the Eastern Tar River Credit Union.

Best, a member of the Board of Trustees of East Carolina University, served on the credit union's board of directors. He is charged with embezzlement and conspiracy in four cases and conspiracy in another, involving some $24,000.

Another of the defendants in the case, Mary Ruth Staton, a Rose High School teacher and former credit union clerk, pled guilty to four counts of embezzlement in Superior Court last month. She is expected to testify in the Best case.

Judge Stevens denied a motion by Best's attorney, D. D. Pollock of Kinston, for a change of venue for the trial.

Late this morning, Judge Stevens called for motions in connection with charges against 11 defendants arrested in July, in connection with the seizure of 8,500 pounds of marijuana here by Greenville police officers and State Bureau of Investigation agents.

The defendants include Greenville Police Department Sgt. Douglas Ross and his wife Marga Ross, Mrs. Ross's sister Louise Johnston Whitehurst, and Mrs. June Miller Edwards of Greenville, and seven out-of-state defendants.

Judge Stevens told the court that he would consider having an interpreter present when told by Robert Moore, a Miami attorney representing Armond Modesto Abreu of Miami, that his client and at least two other defendants were not fluent in the English language.

Four Taken In Custody After School Bus Was A Target In Shootings

CHOCOWINITY, N.C. (AP) — Three men and one woman have been taken into custody in connection with the firing of shots into a school bus Tuesday just moments after its last passenger had been dropped off.

Only the driver was in the bus at the time of the shooting. Ronnie Chandler was not injured.

The state Highway Patrol said late Tuesday that the four, all jailed on $20,000 bond each, were identified as Cynthia Jean Dixon of New Bern, Marvin Lonny Odom of Merritts Island, Fla., Dale Christopher Smith of Chicago and Steven Ray Rogers of Cherry Point.

Ages of the four suspects were not immediately released.

Chandler told authorities that he had just dropped off his last passenger at approximately 4 p.m. when he said he heard shots. One shot shattered the left bottom windshield and the others hit the top of the bus.

Witnesses to the incident said as many as six shots were fired at the bus. Nearly 50 students had been in the bus prior to the shooting.

The four suspects fled into Craven County, authorities said, and their car was stopped by the Highway Patrol there. They were then brought back to Beaufort County and placed in the county's jail.

A spokesman for the patrol said four handguns, rifles, shotguns and ammunition were found in the car the suspects used.

The Beaufort County Sheriff's Department and the State Bureau of Investigation said Tuesday night they would continue investigation of the incident.

Community Development Work In Farmville Largely Approved

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

"Come see about me," turned out to be the theme of the public hearing on Community Development held during the Farmville Commissioners' meeting last night.

Community Development Program Coordinator John Schofield and Town Administrator Patrick Thomas talked about the current CD housing rehabilitation project and asked for comments.

Gray Hopkins, Eva Burney, Mrs. Rose Day Evans, Clarence Artis, and Mrs. Annie Armstrong were just a few who talked about how pleased they are with the current project which includes either rehabilitating or tearing down most of the substantial house in a three-block area bounded by Wallace, Walnut, George and Moore Streets. Some of the speakers live in the area and some

Forum At Gym

The forum for candidates in the Greenville municipal elections to express their views and answer questions will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Elm Street Gymnasium.

The League of Women Voters sponsors this forum shortly before the election every two years.

Citizen attendance is urged.

Martin Board Moves Nearer Industrial Park

WILLIAMSTON — Two resolutions approved by the Martin County Board of Commissioners on Monday will bring a little closer to reality the development of an industrial park in the county.

A general resolution approved agrees that the county will consider extending water and sewer lines into the county areas for industrial locations.

A more specific resolution agrees that the county will pay costs above funds received from state and federal grants.

County Attorney William R. Peel noted that the first, general resolution merely indicates a moral obligation to aid in developing industrial sites and was not a direct financial obligation.

He expressed an opinion that the second resolution is an agreement on the part of the county to aid in funding but only after state and federal monies are received and when the project is in a further planning or development stage.

Board members also agreed to apply for assistance from the N. C. Clean Water Act. A report presented by Ed Flies of Sanford on an Industrial Park Feasibility Study which he had worked on for the last one and one-half years, indicated the study has been approved by the Economic Development Association. The proposed site for the industrial park is located on the north side of U.S. 64 about three miles outside Williamston, with six sites comprising about 70 acres.

The estimated cost of the park development is about $725,200. It was also noted that an industrial site development would benefit county people in that it would provide additional water and sewer service and fire protection as well as carrying the possibility of new jobs available for local residents.

In another action, Ted Shaw of the MidEast Commission informed commissioners that work on a transportation study in the area was beginning to get underway. The survey will involve Martin and Beaufort Counties.

County Finance Officer Donnie Pittman reported that several pieces of excess equipment had been sold at auction with a total of $9,301 realized at the public sale.

R. B. Nelson of Roberstonville requested consideration be given to paving four tenths of a mile of the Staton Legget Road in Hamilton Township. Commissioners approved a motion to recommend to the Department of Transportation that the work be done.

HANDICAPPED PARKING STICKERS

Where can handicapped persons obtain stickers which would enable them to park in spaces set aside for the handicapped?

Stickers may be obtained at the Easter Seal Office, 114 E. Third St., Greenville, telephone 758-3230.

A combination senior citizen-handicapped courtesy parking sticker usable only in the two-hour free parking spaces for all day free parking are available from Mrs. Della Stubbs at City Hall, downtown Greenville. Made available by the Downtown Greenville Association, 400 of the combination stickers have been issued to date and became effective July, 1978.

According to Greenville Chief of Police Glenn Cannon, Mrs. Anna Garris, motor vehicles license agent, at Home Auto Supply, has forms which can be filled out, verified by a doctor, and sent to Raleigh which would enable the handicapped to park in officially designated spaces without being issued a citation for parking in a handicapped space.

NO WARNING

There is a street in Ayden, Venters Street, that has a hole in it about a yard wide. I drove my car into it the other Saturday night coming from church — no flare, no warning. H. M.

Hotline talked with Ayden Town Clerk Ralph Ford, who said the Ayden Police Department should be contacted at any time someone notices such work unmarked. A flare will be promptly put in place, he indicated.

Couple Unites In Marriage

CARY — Miss Virginia Gwenn Hailey and James Kenneth Reynolds II of Raleigh were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at two o'clock at Ephesus Baptist Church here. The Rev. L. M. Woolweaver and the Rev. Leslie Giles officiated at the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Creel Hailey and the bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. James Kenneth Reynolds, all of Raleigh.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Lu Ann Strickland, organist, and Miss Barbara Dorsey, vocalist, who sang "Evergreen" and "The Wedding Prayer," as the benediction. Mrs. Woolweaver directed the wedding and Mrs. Janet Evans presided at the register.

The bride, escorted by her father and given in marriage by her parents, wore a formal gown of white satin and alencon lace designed on the empire silhouette. The empire bodice featured a lace yoke and stand-up lace neckline. The A-line skirt extended into a chapel train which was outlined and bordered by alencon lace. The lace was highlighted with seed pearls and sequins. She wore a full length veil attached to a matching lace and beaded Juliet cap. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses and stephanotis.

The chancel of the church was centered with three candelabra entwined with palms with baskets of pink carnations, scarlet mums and red roses on each side. At the altar was a white prie-dieu where the couple knelt for the wedding prayer and benediction. Pews were marked with roses and carnations.

Marsha Hailey Blevins of Winston-Salem, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and wore a formal gown of tea rose giana and carried a bouquet of silk roses and lilies.

Bridesmaids were Cindy Mills, cousin of the bride, and Katherine Reynolds, sister of the bridegroom, both of Raleigh, Cindy Rook of Greenville, and Mrs. Susan Price of Wilmington. Their gowns and bouquets were identical to that of the honor attendant.

The bridegroom's father was best man and ushers included Tom and Bob Reynolds of Raleigh, brothers of the bridegroom, Terry Maulsby of Cary, brother-in-law of the bride, and Larry Ball of Raleigh. Karla McLawhorn of Winterville and Gennie Lee Griffin of Raleigh, cousins of the bride, carried baskets of rice.

The mother of the bride chose a formal dress of blue knit and the mother of the bridegroom chose a formal gown of mauve knit. Both mothers wore Rubin Lilly corsages.

Mrs. A. C. Hailey Sr., grandmother of the bride, wore a rose dress and a sepiumorchid cymbidium orchid.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was given by the bride's parents, Mrs. Audrey Lynn, New Bern, Mrs. Delma Mills, Raleigh, Mrs. Hazel McLawhorn, Winterville, and Mrs. Helen Smith, Ayden, all aunts of the bride, in the church fellowship hall.

A wedding breakfast for the bridal couple was given by Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Lynn, New Bern,

MRS. JAMES KENNETH REYNOLDS II

Saturday morning at the Sisters Garden of Eating, YWCA, Raleigh. The parents of the bridegroom entertained the wedding party at an after-rehearsal dinner Friday evening at the Carolina Country Club, Raleigh.

The bride is a graduate of Broughton High School, Peace College, and N. C. State University. The bridegroom graduated from Broughton High School and attended Campbell College. He is presently a salesman at Century Data Systems.

After a wedding trip to Charleston, S. C., the couple will live in Raleigh.

Melting Pot Grown Cold?

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: You said we should open our doors to the "boat people," because we all came from other countries and were made welcome, right?

Wrong! When our country was new, we had plenty of wide open spaces and needed help from the immigrants to build our nation.

We needed the Chinese to build our railroads, the Scandinavians to work our forests, the Finns to work in our mines, and the Germans to work in our factories. We needed the Jews to teach us business, the Italians to teach us how to make wine, and the Irish to teach us how to fight!

I hope I didn't leave out anybody.

ALIN ALBUQUERQUE

DEAR AL: How about the French who taught us to make love? And the Austrians who taught us to make strudel? And what did we learn from the Hungarians, the British, the Slavs, the Scotch, the Russians, the Spanish, the Swiss? Readers?

DEAR ABBY: This problem is mine only indirectly, but because I love the person whose problem it is, I am asking for your help.

This lovely lady has met with a terrible tragedy. She lost her dog. It wasn't just an ordinary dog, Abby, it was a Shih-tzu, and a more lovable and intelligent dog I've never seen. He was almost human, and my friend couldn't have loved her own baby more.

She placed ads in all the local newspapers, and begged the TV broadcasters to mention it, offering a large reward for its return. (They refused.) She even called a service in San Francisco whose business it is to find lost pets. Nothing has worked.

My friend hasn't been able to sleep or eat since she lost her dog, and I am afraid of what might happen to her. Can you help?

CONCERNED FOR CAROL

DEAR CONCERNED: Only one who has lost a loving pet can know how Carol feels. But she must accept the fact that she may never see her precious dog again, and learn to deal with her grief. I suggest she quit looking for the dog and find a therapist instead.

DEAR ABBY: Please print this for CONSIDERING IT—the 64-year-old woman who is considering surgery to enlarge her breasts.

I am 24, and have always had a very small bosom. For years I was ashamed of my terrible "handicap" and wouldn't be caught dead without my padded bra.

Last year I fell in love with a wonderful man and agonized over the fact that one day he would learn the truth about my bosom.

Well, that day came, and never in my entire life have I been so embarrassed! But this sweet and loving man just smiled kindly, and told me that he had suspected it for a long time, but it didn't make a particle of difference to him!

SAFE BROWN BAG LUNCHES

Have you ever wondered about the sack lunches you send off in the morning with your family? Will they be safe to eat by the time lunch time arrives? Only 2-4 hours at room temperature can make food unsafe! You can prevent the "lunch bag" from striking by following a few Do's and Don'ts.

DO.....

—Put the lunch in a refrigerator if one is available. With refrigeration you will not limit the food items you pack in a lunch.

—Be particularly careful when preparing the food. You might put bacteria in the food by careless food preparation. Always have clean hands, utensils and work area. Food can be cross contaminated if you don't wash hands, utensils, and cutting surfaces after they've been used with raw meats, fish and poultry then other foods. Sanitize your cutting board by scrubbing with chlorine containing cleanser or a solution of 2 tablespoons chlorine in 1 gallon of water.

—Keep hot foods in thermos containers.

—Keep cold food cold by putting in the lunch a frozen drink, reusable ice pack, or ice frozen in a plastic container.

—Select foods with care. Those that will stay safe without refrigeration: Peanut butter and jam or jelly, nuts, hard cheeses, crackers, canned foods in the can), fresh fruits and vegetables, dried foods, bread, cookies, cakes, fruit pies, hard cooked eggs in the shell, and marinated vegetable salads.

—It's best to take only non-perishable sandwiches if no refrigeration is available. BUT if you must make sandwiches with meat, poultry, fish, eggs or dairy foods be extremely careful!

—Freeze a sandwich or use frozen bread to keep it cold longer.

—Add acid ingredients to prevent bacteria from growing. Catsup, pickles, relishes, olives, mustard, vinegar, lemon juice, mayonnaise salad dressing are all acid. Yes, mayonnaise and salad dressing are very acid and may be left at room temperature. Keep the sandwich as cold as possible by using the methods listed above.

—Pack the lunch in a metal lunch box instead of a bag. It keeps the lunch insulated better. Or better yet, get an insulated lunch box. Some have a special plastic container that may be filled with water and frozen.

DON'T.....

—Leave the lunch in a hot-spot; the sun, on a radiator, or next to the heating duct.

—Pack perishable items without taking the special precautions listed above.

—Save a lunch with perishable ingredients from one day to the next.

—Fall into the habit of careless food preparation techniques.

If you're ill don't prepare food. Wash your hands before food preparation and after handling meat, fish, or poultry. A clean utensil is better than your hands for mixing.

REMEMBER—

Sneezing, coughing, infected cuts or sores, pets, mouth, hair, pimples, all contain bacteria.

Try this in your lunch box next week:

CORNED BEEF SPREAD
1 can corned beef
1/4 cup catsup
1 Tablespoon mayonnaise
3 Tablespoons chopped sweet pickles or pickle relish
Separate and mash corned beef with a fork. Add all other ingredients and mix well. Serve on sandwiches, crackers, or with raw vegetables. Call our office 758-1196 for additional Brown Bag Lunch ideas.

Activities Planned By VFW Auxiliary

Forthcoming activities were discussed at the Thursday meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars. President Alice Moseley headed the meeting.

Plans were announced for the sale of Buddy Poppies Oct. 12-13. All proceeds from the sale of memorial flowers will be used for veterans and their families.

A fish fry will be held Wednesday, Oct. 3 at the Post Home with funds to go toward the Cancer Aid and Research Fund.

Americanism chairman Margaret Brown gave a program on the care of the flag, inside and out. O'Berry chairman Verna Whitehurst reported that a Halloween treat will be taken to the center this year. A cash donation was made for Christmas gifts to the children last year.

Donations were sent to the Fayetteville Veterans Administration Hospital for Christmas gifts for the patients. Donations were also sent to the V. F. W. National Home for widows and orphans, as well as to the Otis N. Brown Scholarship Fund and the Erlene Mayberry Scholarship Fund.

Mrs. Glynn Keeler was welcomed as a new member. President Moseley announced the district meeting will be held in Goldsboro Oct. 28. Mrs. Lou Sigmon, state president, will be the representative.

Following the closing ceremonies, hostesses Myrtle Meeks, Frances Carrico, Kathryn Evans and Hazel Baker served refreshments.

Bridge Benefit Set For Oct. 12

The Arts Department of the Greenville Woman's Club will sponsor a bridge party at the club house Friday, Oct. 12, at 2 p.m.

Proceeds will be used for expenses of the Fine Arts Festivals (local, district and state) sponsored yearly by the department. The admission will be a donation of $2.00 each. For reservations call Mrs. George Clapp, 756-2516, or Mrs. Dink James, 752-2753.

Create Salad Masterpiece

With a little inspiration and inventiveness, one can create a salad masterpiece.

Salads allow one to try unfamiliar and exciting ingredients in new ways, say NCSU agricultural extension specialists. Add fruit to tossed green or vegetable salads, citrus sections to spinach salad or pineapple chunks to cole slaw.

Consider changing the shape of a salad, too. Shape a potato salad into a ring mold or arrange a tossed salad in layers.

He let me know then, and has every day since, that he loves me just the way God made me—small bosom and all. With his love and reassurance, I have thrown away all my padded bras (after 12 years) and I am no longer the least bit ashamed of being flat-chested.

"Look at this, Janie. I was in here the other day and fell in love with it. It's a music box, see? Wind it up and it plays and the little mouse dances around on the stage."

"I declare! That's darling! That little mouse dancing around—don't you think of Maudie? The way she dances around that man?"

"Maudie's my cousin, you know."

"Oh. I forgot. I'm sorry, Alice."

"Never mind. Now this one's a penguin that dances. And over there beside those crystal candlesticks..."

"Aren't those candlesticks exquisite?"

"Aren't they, though? Now the music has stopped, you see, and the mouse has stopped dancing. The music has stopped. Poor my cousin! Poor little Maudie!"

Papal Visit Is All Positive

Pope John Paul II is rapidly becoming one of the most beloved popes and his visit to the United States brought out perhaps two million people.

It was a festive time in Boston as the spiritual leader of the world's Catholics first stepped on to American soil.

The papal visit to the United States is all positive. Pope John Paul II is one who seems to enjoy moving among the people.

From Boston he went on to New York to address the United Nations General Assembly. Then there will be trips to Philadelphia, Des Moines, Chicago and Washington.

No American politician could undertake a more ambitious travel schedule than the pope has done. It will be exhausting, but those who understand Pope John Paul II say that is the way he wishes it to be.

His travels represent a vast change from the historical role of the pope, which was to stay close to the Vatican and serve as the guiding hand of Catholicism.

In these times of rapid air travel, there is no real reason for a cloistered pope. He can travel to all parts of the Christian world. Such travels, we think, will be positive in bringing about a better understanding of Christian principles among all the peoples of the world.

School Merger Has Positive Support

Representatives of a school merger committee showed up at a County Commissioners meeting asking for assurances that the commissioners would support financially any merger of the Pitt and Greenville schools systems.

They got it.

Now that that exercise is complete we hope the merger committee will move on with the job that has been given to it.

Plan Energy Expo Role

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — The ground-work has been done for North Carolina to take part in Expo '82, an international energy exposition to be held in Knoxville, Tennessee.

Modeled after the Seattle Expo '74 which had as its central theme The Environment, the Knoxville displays will center around various types of energy and research into new areas.

Only four states participated in the Seattle show, but the Knoxville exhibition hopes to attract many more than that number. Typically, at such expositions, foreign nations and the federal government and its various agencies directly involved with the theme participate more heavily than do the states.

While details are sketchy at this early date, North Carolina is expected to build an exhibit around the theme of energy innovations and the natural physical attractions of the state. Water will likely play a key part in the exhibit.

Big Event
Expo '82 has been approved by President Jimmy Carter and registered with the Bureau of International Expositions in Paris. Projections call for more than 12 million visitors during the event from May 1 through October 31, 1982.

A number of permanent buildings will be put up for the fair and later the site near downtown Knoxville will be converted into a renewal park and residential area, research center, and exhibition site.

Location of the site in Knoxville, headquarters of the Tennessee Valley Authority, near Oak Ridge where atomic research is being done, and site of the University of Tennessee will boost the event particularly in view of the urgency now surrounding energy issues, fair officials believe.

A huge amusement park, international exhibits, and numerous places selling products and foods from countries around the world are expected to be a tremendous boost to tourism.

North Carolina's location adjoining Tennessee is a prime reason state officials want to join the event. Many travelers to and from the exhibition will pass through the state.

Gov. Jim Hunt has talked with members of a legislative study commission which has already visited the Knoxville site to study the layout.

The legislators urged the governor to appoint a special committee under his direction to "insure that the highest calibre exhibit at the lowest possible cost be obtained", and Hunt approved on condition that cost be kept under control.

Cost?

The state can rent space in an exhibition building, or construct its own facility; but indications are that rental space would be used. Cost estimates to design, build, and staff such an exhibit run between $300,000 and $500,000.

Plans call for the proposal to be submitted to the next session of the General Assembly with funds budgeted for the next fiscal year to fully cover the project.

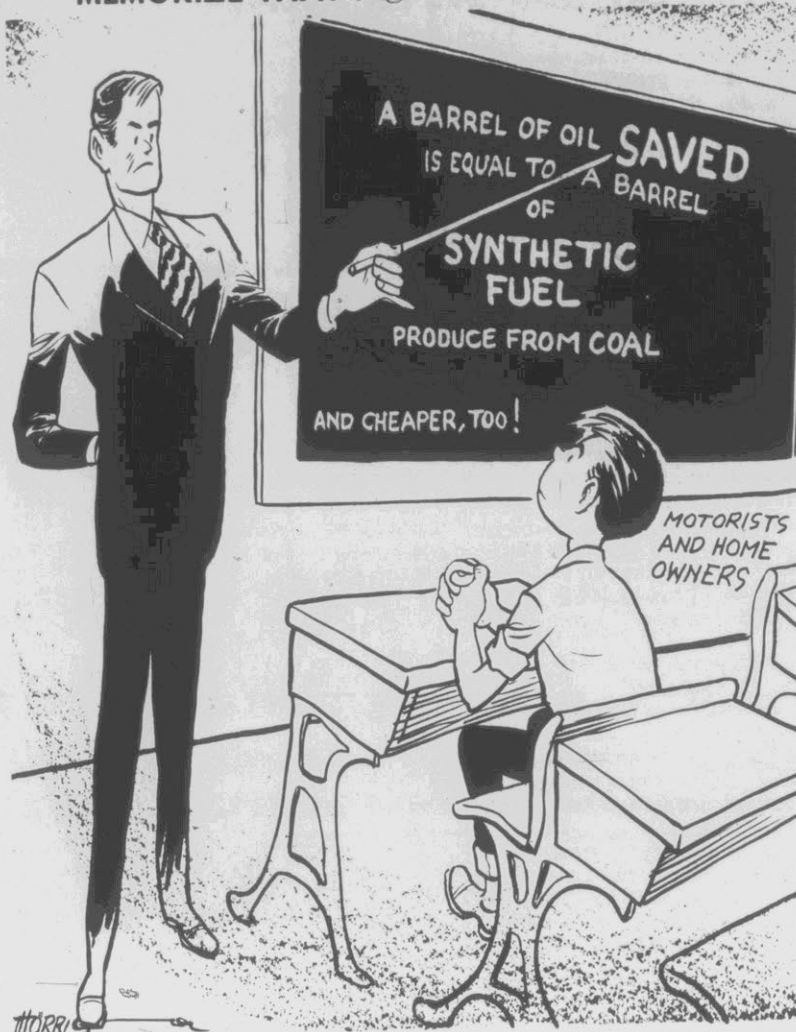

BILL NOBLITT

Legislators on the study committee are Rep. John Gamble, D-Lincoln, Rep. Marie Watters Colton, D-Buncombe, and Senators R.B. Jordan III, D-Montgomery, and Beverly Lake, D-Wake.

The legislators determined that the governor's office, calling on concerned agencies of government, private industry and educational resources "is the appropriate location for planning and administrative functions to follow through on the recommendation"

MEMORIZE THAT FOR YOUR HOMEWORK!

No Meddling By Vance

WASHINGTON — Poor Secretary of State Cy Vance. He doesn't have anything to do any more since everyone else seems to be handling our foreign policy.

He was in his office last week and asked his administrative assistant, "How are the Middle East negotiations going these days?"

"We have no idea. They are being handled out of Atlanta by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. They promised to call us if there was a break with Arafat."

"Any news on a cease-fire in Lebanon?"

"We're waiting for Rev. Jesse Jackson to get back from his fact-finding tour of the area. There is no sense in us getting into it if he doesn't approve of the terms."

"What about the Soviet troops in Cuba?"

"Sen. Church of Idaho and Sen. Stone of Florida have taken over that one. They're dealing directly with the President. I called the White House this morning and they put me on hold."

"Okay, brief me on what's happening in Vietnam."

"As you know that's Jane Fonda's area. She wants to recognize Vietnam now, but Joan Baez doesn't want to until some effort is made to solve the plight of the boat people. We can't seem to get the two of them to agree on what our policy should be."

"Have we taken a position on this?"

"We're tilting toward Joan Baez, but I don't think we should go public with it as there is no reason to get Jane Fonda upset. It will just harden her attitude and make it more difficult to come to an accommodation with her."

ART BUCHWALD

"Who is watching the Rhodesia situation?"

"Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina. He sent his aides over to London for the talks which our people, incidentally, couldn't get into. Helms wants the United States to lift our embargo on Rhodesia immediately. Andy Young disagrees, unless the insurgents have a voice in the new government."

"I'm sorry to hear that. I was hoping to have some input in the Rhodesia problem as it will certainly affect what eventually happens in South Africa."

"I see your point, sir. But as you know the U.S. Secretary of State shouldn't involve himself in foreign affairs unless invited to do so. Helms and Young don't want us meddling there."

"I'm sure there must be some place where the State Department could be helpful."

"We did have China until Nixon went over last week."

"What did he find out?"

"He wouldn't tell us. He said he's saving it for his next book."

"It looks like a long day ahead for me. Is there anything I can do about SALT II?"

Canton Stars Chefs

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

CANTON, CHINA (AP) — It wouldn't take the chief prognosticator in a fortune cookie factory to predict that Canton, the gourmet capital of the Orient, would have some spectacular restaurants.

But nothing in the guide books or the imagination prepared the greedy gourmet for the total Chinese experience that overwhelms him at the Restaurant Pan Hsi, which may be the largest Chinese restaurant anywhere in the world.

Picture, if you can, 8,000 chopsticks clicking away at such delectable delicacies as quail eggs marinated in shrimp roe, webbed feet of duck dappled with tiny prawns and rice birds stuffed with liver sausage in a lovely setting of rambling tea houses tucked into bamboo groves around a placid lake.

There is even a floating dining room for those who insist that their golden carp be freshly plucked from the water, although real aficionados of Cantonese cooking are said to prefer fish billed from the sea by trained cormorants.

Not only can the 400 chefs at Pan Hsi whip up 4,000 meals at a time, but on any given day they can and often do serve 10,000 people in the 40 dining rooms.

This is all the more remarkable when you consider that the restaurant is only open for dinner, from 5 to 9 p.m., and has no takeout service.

Despite the serving statistics, it is wise to call ahead for a reservation, especially in early April and October when 28,000 traveling salesmen overrun Canton for the twice annual trade fair.

If tipping were allowed in the People's Republic — a decadent Western custom that disappeared after the revolution — the head waiter here would make like a warlord.

At Pan Hsi, which means "by the lake," guests are scattered

INSIDE REPORT

No Quarter From Ham

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — Well-heeled contributors to the Democratic party have received firsthand confirmation from Hamilton Jordan of news reports that President Carter's reelection campaign considers a bloody party rupture inevitable if Sen. Edward M. Kennedy challenges for the Democratic nomination.

Members of the Democratic Finance Council from around the country, in town to attend a fund-raising dinner, were invited to the White House for a Sept. 26 closed-door briefing by Jordan. One veteran money man asked whether it was not possible to conduct a Carter vs. Kennedy fight on a gentlemanly level without bloodshed.

Jordan, the president's top strategist, was quick to answer: No, we have to make this fight, and it is inevitable that blood will be spilled. Nor did he show any remorse over it.

A footnote: Jordan also signaled that nearly three years in the capital has not changed the Carter team's anti-Washington approach. He welcomed the fat cats by saying he was glad to see them here to provide a greater breadth of views in what he called the "very one-dimensional town" of Washington — suggesting an anti-Carter bias here. Actually, several of the finance council members are covert Kennedy backers.

'Shepherd One'

Pope John Paul II, whose designation is "Shepherd One" for U.S. Secret Service and affiliated security agents, demanded — and won — assurances that he would not be hit with any legal summons or embarrassing court orders during his visit here in the coming week.

Papal advisers had worried about bad publicity if anti-Catholic critics obtained court orders against him on grounds, however specious, that some tax monies would be used in welcoming ceremonies to guarantee his safety and for other aspects of his visit.

A footnote: Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin will play the most prominent role in a diplomatic reception given for his holiness by the apostolic delegate here. Dobrynin's special role is automatic as senior diplomat in the U.S., but it is steeped in irony. The Polish pontiff has never concealed his strong sense of Polish nationalism and strong dislike for Soviet communism.

Another Carter Bloop

When President Carter announced the appointment as secretary of the navy of Edward Hidalgo, an Hispanic American, at the annual Hispanic Caucus here Sept. 13, he did so without knowing that Hidalgo is deeply feared and distrusted in Puerto Rico.

Hidalgo, now an assistant secretary of the Navy, infuriated politicians of all stripes in Puerto Rico by insisting the Navy would not stop using the small populated island of Culebra for its major target practice in the Caribbean. Finally, Hidalgo was forced to back down.

Without checking his own White House Hispanic aides or the Puerto Rican delegate in Congress, Carter made his announcement expecting cheers and congratulations — a political error familiar in the Carter White House. The result: Hidalgo will get tough questions during his confirmation hearing, particularly from Sen. Henry M. Jackson who is close to the island's democratic leadership.

Strength For Today

COST OF GROWTH

It is significant that the word liberty is derived ultimately from a Sanscrit word meaning "to grow". Liberty therefore is the chance to use the powers we all have in order to grow. Without this opportunity we might be good, religious, rich, or powerful, but we would have no liberty.

Liberty also means making mistakes as part of the process of growing. Moreover, for us humans it entails falling into sin. Freedom always brings some pain and sorrow.

One of the greatest evils perpetrated by dictators and their totalitarian regimes is that they deny people the right to grow. Many dictators try to substitute material benefits for this basic opportunity, and the dictators are often surprised when people do not accept this substitution with gratitude.

God set us on this earth and gave us the opportunity to grow up as His sons and daughters. This is the most important freedom we could possibly have.

Rise To The Top By Instincts

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — In a world of business uncertainty, where blunders are hard to avoid and difficult to recover from, corporate executives who know instinctively what not to do are rising to the top.

"There's a new game in town," says Prof. Eugene Jennings. The person who intuitively avoids blunders, who knows what to avoid doing in the crisis, is increasingly finding himself chosen to lead.

The professor explained that we live in a blunder-sensitive society, one in which we expect things to go wrong. And for good reason: the risks, or at least the perception of them, seem to have grown.

For corporations this may be especially true. "They are visible, they are exposed," he said. And they are involved as never before.

Therefore, "If you find an executive who is apt to minimize things going wrong you might get a winner," a person good at doing the right things and also "adroit at not doing the wrong things."

That person doesn't forsake logic or research, he said, but doesn't contradict his feelings either. He has, said Jennings, the art of quickly drawing "sufficient conclusions from insufficient facts."

Jennings is experienced in the subject. A psychologist, executive adviser, author, and professor of management at Michigan State, he has also helped selections committees choose top executives.

"There is always more than one right way, so what an executive does is open to judgment. But what not to do is inexorably determined by the facts of a situation and cannot be ignored," he explained.

Still, executives today are often called upon to make hasty decisions. "Take time to think," said Jennings, "and somebody might think you have a speech impediment." Act in confusion and the affect is worse.

Blunders, mistakes or errors, might result. Errors involve a lack of taste. Mistakes involve poor judgment, a lack of mental clarity.

But a blunder, said Jennings, is a gross, inexcusable mistake, one due to a lack of instinct or feeling. "Rational minds cannot forgive it. It is without common sense." And it can be ruinous to the company.

Going into the 1970s, said Jennings, we were not so blunder-sensitive. Corporations weren't as externally oriented, meaning they didn't have so many outside problems with politics, environment and the like.

Now, he continued, they have become more responsive to and responsible for the world beyond their corporations. And they find fewer chances to achieve positive results that might nullify blunders.

The biggest blunders, he finds, are with media, bureaucrats and politicians, stockholders, and institutions such as investment houses and banks. Right decisions, he suggests, aren't always obvious.

stitutional amendment.

When asked about abortion, he now declares: "I'm against abortion. I'm opposed to federal subsidization of abortion." He next says he would not actively fight any anti-abortion constitutional amendment but adds he is not for it either. Then comes the clincher on the "right to life" amendment: "I don't think it ought to be in the Constitution."

That is enough to make sure evangelical Christian elements in the "new right" coalition suffocate any support for Connally. Previously, Connally had contemplated a position neither for nor against the amendment on grounds that the president is not involved in the process of changing the Constitution.

Moon Speaks

The change in climate at the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) was shown by the new secretary, Moon Landrieu, when he privately addressed a group of Democratic businessmen less than 48 hours after being sworn in.

Considering the frightful inflationary surge, Landrieu was asked, why not impose rent controls? Landrieu, who became a developer after stepping down as mayor of New Orleans in 1978, pulled no punches: It's a terrible idea. Such controls would ultimately hurt the poor as well as everybody else, he said, by putting the housing industry in a straitjacket.

Such a blunt espousal of the market system could scarcely have been expected from Landrieu's predecessor, Patricia Roberts Harris, new secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Landrieu's clear articulation also stands out among President Carter's often tongue-tied Cabinet members.

Merger Study

Another meeting of the Joint Pitt County-Greenville Boards of Education Merger Study Committee will be held this week.

The meeting, at 8 p.m. Wednesday, October 3, will be in the Board Room of the Pitt County Board of Education in the courthouse.

Two merger items are listed for discussion—clerical services for the committee and a listing of potential consultants.

Annual Session By Association

The Old Eastern Missionary Baptist Association will hold its 114th annual session Oct. 4-7 at the White Rock Baptist Church of New Bern with the moderator, Dr. J. R. Person, presiding.

The session will open with the Women's Department in charge Thursday, 10 a.m. Special speakers at the meeting will include Mrs. E. B. Turner, president of the Women's Department, North Carolina State Convention; Dr. Sommerville representing the Foreign Mission and Dr. C. R. Mosely, who will give the inspirational sermon Saturday, 12 noon. The public is invited to attend.

FOCUS

The Chief Justice

Earlier this week, the Supreme Court began its 11th term under Chief Justice Warren Burger. In 1969, President Nixon appointed Burger the 14th Chief Justice. Since then, Burger has devoted much of his energy to making the court work more efficiently. When the Supreme Court ordered Nixon to turn over the White House tape recordings in 1974, Burger wrote the court's unanimous opinion. The decision eventually led to Nixon's resignation. Burger, who turned 72 last month, has no immediate plans to retire. "I've been working since I was 10 years old," the chief justice has said. "I wouldn't know how to stop now."

about the 30 separate buildings according to how much they want to eat and how much they want to spend. This may seem an odd way for a classless society to treat the famished masses, but the Pan Hsi has been in business for over 100 years.

We were escorted to a private room behind hand carved teak screens and seated at a lacquered table exquisitely set with authentic willowware and cooled by an enormous ceiling fan.

Following the Cantonese custom, our host had called ahead from the hotel on the morning of our visit and asked the chef to prepare a nine-course spread of traditional delicacies ranging from pigeon, sea slugs and "jade tree" — artistically presented green vegetables — to the unforgettable winter melon soup cooked right inside the melon.

Since Cantonese-style cooking is built around the flavor, fragrance and visual beauty of what is being served, the two dim sung courses of bite-sized delicacies arranged in the shape of exotic birds and a rising phoenix were the show stoppers in our three-and-a-half hour prime time spectacular. Dim sung means "touch the heart" and, despite dumplings and spices that abound on the snack tray, seldom translates to heart burn.

Our table of eight was presided over by a charming female captain who served up the various dishes with the passion and aplomb of Leonard Bernstein conducting the Peking Philharmonic with silver chopsticks.

The meal was interrupted at intervals so the diners could toast each other's health and livers with endless rounds of Cantonese beer — China's best — glutinous rice wine, which faintly resembles tawny port and the scalp-shrinking Mau-tai, the local white lightning.

International friendships can get out of hand on these emotional occasions, but with 4,000 other bibbers seated about the premises this is not the place to boldly stand up and buy the house a drink.

Since our insensitive Western palates were not yet adjusted to the subtleties of Cantonese cuisine, our host eschewed the more exotic dishes like sweet and sour bear paws, clear broth of boa constrictor with a chrysanthemum petal, "fragrant meat," which is the chef's name for roast dog and "dragon and tiger," a delicate mating of snake and civet cat.

But even among our Chinese friends at table it was outspokenly obvious that Cantonese cuisine was not everyone's cup of oolong.

"Cantonese people very brutal," said a Foreign Office man from Peking. "They eat dogs, cats rats, baby seals, shark fins, anything." No place to ask for a doggie bag, unless you like the real thing.

But the piece de resistance which most people manage to resist is snake bile delivered fresh at your table by the snake handler. He arrives with a basket and a long thin knife ready to de-bile snake you choose. Although the faint-hearted might not agree, snake bile is said to be good for the heart and the liver. The man with the knife and wicker basket will also skin a snake at your table and prepare a sort of serpent glambé before your very eyes.

Pontiff Teaches Share The Wealth, Live In Peace

By GEORGE CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Pope John Paul II, on a whirlwind first day in America's greatest metropolis, met and prayed and sang with New York's poorest and proudest. Again and again he pleaded: Share the wealth with those in need.

"You must never be content to leave them just the crumbs from the feast," he declared Tuesday night to more than 75,000 worshippers packed into Yankee Stadium for a pontifical Mass.

It capped an almost 16-hour papal day that took in the variety of New York — its soaring cathedral and its worst slums, its pinstriped diplomats and politicians, its humblest ghetto-dwellers.

Everywhere in a city that has seen everything the crowds roared.

Today, New York gives the pontiff its traditional hero's baptism — a ticker-tape parade along lower Broadway. First, he was to join in a songfest with 19,000 high school students at Madison Square Garden, then ride by motorcade via Broadway to Battery Park, at Manhattan's southern tip, for a major address to the city and nation.

Later, he flies to Philadelphia, third city on his seven-day U.S. tour.

At the stadium, the 59-year-old pontiff was a gentle — and weary-looking — teacher in tall, glittering miter and golden cloak.

"We cannot stand idly by, enjoying our own riches and freedom, if in any place the Lazarus of the 20th century stands at our door," he told the throng surrounding him in the stands and on the field.

In his richly accented English, he spoke of the biblical parable of the feasting rich man condemned for spurning the begging of Lazarus for table scraps, saying of the story:

"It must form our consciences...Christ demands openness to our brothers and sisters in need...openness from the rich...openness to the poor."

On the second day of his six-city U.S. pilgrimage, there were not the millions some had predicted, but on every street there were crowds — thousands upon thousands of people waving, shouting, crying, singing, chanting and clapping with joy. People waited for hours for a glimpse of the gray head, the white skullcap of the pontiff.

His day included calls on some of those most in need — visits to Harlem, symbol of black American poverty, and the ravaged, largely Hispanic South Bronx.

"Hallelujah is our song," the pope told an excited gathering outside St. Charles Borromeo Church in Harlem as he arrived to rhythmic handclapping and gospel singing.

The supreme pastor of the world's 700 million Roman Catholics, standing in a bright spotlight on a darkened street, lauded Harlem as the nurturing ground of black American culture and said the parishioners there were the "messengers of hope."

Later, amid the crumbling tenements of the South Bronx, he said in Spanish: "Brothers and sisters and friends, do not give in to despair, but work together. Take the steps possible for you in the task of increasing your dignity."

Earlier at St. Patrick's Cathedral, its majestic twin spires rising above a crowd estimated at 10,000 on posh Fifth Avenue, the pope also focused on the deprived, saying:

"In a special way, my heart is with the poor, with those who suffer, with those who are alone and abandoned in the midst of this teeming metropolis."

His longest speech of the grueling day was at the United Nations, where he pleaded to representatives of the world for an end to the arms race before it brings about the "common extermination" of mankind.

He also called for increased efforts to settle the conflicts of the Middle East, saying a true peace there must include "just settlement of the Palestinian question."

Blue-uniformed police by the hundreds swarmed over the city in advance of the papal party. Security forces were put on edge by a letter received by the FBI saying the pope would be shot.

As a result of the tip, police raided an apartment in Elizabeth, N.J., and found a submachine gun and ammunition. An alert was issued for its resident, a Spanish-speaking man who New York police said might be connected with Puerto Rican extremists.

At the two-hour Mass at Yankee Stadium a service punctuated by choirs, processions, prayers, scripture readings, psalms and chants, the pope spoke from a red-carpeted altar in centerfield.

"We must find a simple way of living," he said, adding that it is wrong for rich countries to drain off resources meant "serve the whole of humanity."

But he said the "frenzy of consumerism, exhausting and joyless," goes on, with genuine progress prevented "when everything conspires to give full rein to the instincts of self-interest, sex and power."

After the Mass, he went by motorcade to Cardinal Terence Cooke's Manhattan residence for the night — ending a long day that began in Boston. Although he had managed a hurried lunch, his only real respite came when he sat down alone for dinner in the principal's office of a Bronx Catholic high school.

To Maneuvers At Guantanamo

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Marine and Navy units from Camp Lejeune, Cherry Point and New River will participate in an amphibious exercise at Guantanamo Base, Cuba, Marine officials said Tuesday.

Military officials announced the exercise following President Carter's Monday night speech in which he pledged to expand and conduct military maneuvers in the Caribbean on a regular basis.

The exercise will begin in mid-October and last four weeks, according to Sgt. David McGinty from Camp Lejeune.

The exercise was not previously scheduled, McGinty said, but was "prompted by the Cuban deliberations."

The October maneuvers will consist of amphibious and helicopter landings of Marines, followed by a small unit maneuvers ashore and artillery and tank firing exercises.

Three Navy ships are involved, including one that carries from 22 to 24 Marine helicopters. The 38th Marine Amphibious Unit of about 1,600 to 1,800 men will be in the landing force. The 38th consists of a battalion landing team, a heavy Marine helicopter squadron and a Marine amphibious-unit service-support group.

The battalion landing team and the support group are from Camp Lejeune. The heavy Marine helicopter squadron is from the Marine Corp Air Station at New River.

Also included in the exercise is a fixed-wing squadron and a Marine attack squadron from Cherry Point.

Camp Lejeune spokesman Capt. John Schmidt said Tuesday that much of the exercise seems to be based on the need to retake the base. Schmidt said that premise was used to make it "a realistic training exercise."

EXTENDED DUTY — Adm. Hyman Rickover's record 57-year tour of active duty has been extended another two years. At 79, Rickover is already 16 years beyond the maximum legal age for military service, but his extension to 1982 was no surprise. Rickover, a pioneer in nuclear-powered ships, has had strong support in Congress for many years. (AP Laserphoto)

Short Selling Season Seen

FARMVILLE — This is the 11th week the Farmville Tobacco Market has been operation, and it is estimated that approximately 85 percent of the crop has been sold.

Volume of this year's crop is much less than last year and the season will be the shortest on record.

Volume of sales was mostly leaf grades, and a lack of ripeness continued to affect overall desirability this season.

The market Tuesday sold 640,337 pounds for $910,606 for an average of $142.21 per 100 pounds. To date the Farmville market has sold 24,125,010 pounds for a total of $34,431,688 at a season average of $142.72 per 100 pounds.

EXTENDED WEATHER OUTLOOK FOR N.C.

How Tall Will Their Child Grow?

My husband and I are short. We are both 5 feet 3. Is there any reliable way to predict how tall our 10-year-old son will grow to be? He seems to be shorter than most boys his age. — Mrs. E.E.R., Wis.

Dear Mrs. R.: There are tables of prediction by which endocrinologists (gland specialists) can speculate about the eventual size of a child. In order to use these tables accurately, a complete endocrine survey is first made. There is probably no more complex or difficult study than that of the hormone content and the hormone balance in the blood and urine. In addition, X-rays are made of the "growing part" of the long bones of the body.

When there is a known deficiency in the hormone balance, treatment can begin and the rate of progress is used as an indication of what growth can be expected.

In normally growing children, it is said that a boy 9 years of age and a girl of 7 have reached about three-quarters of their expected adult height.

The family pattern of height is a fair indication of the height a child will attain under ordinary health conditions and with good nutrition. Parents of small children often reflect their own anxiety when their child is one of the smaller ones in the class. It is important that your son be made secure and happy despite his temporary height deficiency. Unless this is done, he may grow to be six feet tall and be left with psychological feelings of inadequacy.

Your son is now at the perfect age for you to seek the help and guidance of an endocrinologist.

What can cause a distinctly bad, unpleasant odor in the mouth of a child of 4? — Mrs. G.C., Vt.

The nature of a child's diet is immediately suspect. Rarely, however, is this the cause. One of the reasons for bad breath is an infection of the gums and the teeth. This, of course, can be readily evaluated by the dentist. Infections of the sinuses rarely occur in children of this age. Allergies play no role in producing such an odor.

Infections of the tonsils and, particularly, of the adenoids, are probably the prime reasons for such an odor. Very frequently, a collection of debris and pus can occur in the folds of the adenoids. This is known as a "Tornwaldt abscess." The bacteria that accumulate in such pockets of the adenoids can create a very unpleasant odor.

Even in a young child, this area can be inspected with tiny mirrors. If infection is present, if the child snores a great deal and if there is marked nasality to speech, removal of the adenoids would seem advisable.

John Paul II Makes Impact

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — In just a year as pontiff, Pope John Paul II seems to have established himself as a major piece on the chessboard of international politics.

His address to the United Nations Tuesday lashing out at the arms race between the two superpowers, pleading for human rights around the world and offering the church's services in solving international conflicts brought near-unanimous endorsement from the 152-member General Assembly despite the diverse ideologies represented here.

But beyond such diplomatic plaudits and the growing attention he is gaining around the world, John Paul is already making an impact on the shape of world politics:

—He has successfully defused a territorial dispute between Chile and Argentina and swayed them away from the battlefield to a negotiating table at the Vatican. Before leaving on his current tour, he personally got the two delegations to meet with him to review progress.

—For the first time, he took the papacy's appeals for peace in Ireland straight to Irish soil. His dramatic pleas last weekend before hundreds of thousands of devout Irish caught the IRA guerrilla movement off balance and seemed to strengthen the hopes and desires of Irish moderates for peace.

—John Paul's trip to Poland, where he staunchly defended religious freedom, likewise boxed in anti-religious communists. With the world spotlight on them, there is little likelihood of any major new restrictions on religion in the Soviet bloc in the near future. He pressed his offensive in his U.N. speech, charging that religious restrictions create "second- or third-class citizens."

—He also made afiret cautious foray into volatile Middle East politics in his U.N. address, suggesting that a comprehensive solution must include "just settlement of the Palestinian question."

Local Scout Collected Jamboree Memories

JOSEPH H. GOODSON, JR.

A Greenville Scout, 17-year-old Joseph H. Goodson, Jr. attended the World Scout Jamboree in Koropavo, Sweden this past summer from July 4 to 24.

Goodson attended the jamboree (in Swedish dalajamb) as a member of Troop 203 representing North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

"Over 4,000 scouts from all over the world, including Sweden and most of the European countries were represented," Goodson said.

"We spent the first five days in London. While living in dormitories there, we visited Buckingham Palace, the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, the Parliament Building, and other sights."

Goodson explained that under a home hospitality program, he and other scouts stayed with a Swedish family in Gothenburg for six days following their visit to London. Goodson's family was the Hansen family, Brite and Hening, and their two sons, Claus and Bossie.

In Gothenburg, "we toured the city by boat and visited the old part of the city that was built during the time of the Vikings.

Claus and I went swimming in one of the 300,000 lakes of Sweden." Goodson said being with the Swedish family was the "highlight of my trip. It was a whole new experience."

From Gothenburg the scouts rode to the camp site and set up camp. "The jamboree officially opened with a big campfire with troops from all over the world. Some of the countries represented were Canada, Great Britain, Switzerland, Poland, Norway and Taiwan as well as the U.S.," Goodson said.

Activities at camp included "such things as an overnight hike, and going over an obstacle course made with cut trees and rope. We also visited the oldest copper mine in the world.

"One of the highlights of the jamboree," Goodson said, "was the visit of King Carl Gustaf of Sweden. A special event was the jamboree Country Fair where nations had displays representing their country. We had toys of the pioneers.

Church Plans A Homecoming

WINTERVILLE — The Winterville F. W. B. Church announces its homecoming Sunday, Oct. 14. The morning worship service will include a special service by "The Gospel Chargers" to dedicate their new record album, "Looking For Jesus."

Lunch will be served on the church grounds following the service, or at the Winterville Fire Station if it rains. The afternoon service will feature a memorial tree service whereby deceased loved ones may be remembered with gifts to the building fund in their memory. A gospel sing with local talent will follow. The Rev. Bobby Putrell, pastor, invites the public to attend.

"When we left," Goodson said, "we gave our American flag to one of the Swedish troops as a good will gesture."

Goodson noted that though it rained every day of the jamboree they cooked their own meals and never missed one. "As for taking baths and washing clothes, we used a lake nearby."

Another thing that appealed to Goodson was that "trading was very popular and you could trade for most anything you wanted."

The American Scouts departed on July 23 for the trip back home.

Freedom Tower On 'Register

MIAMI (AP) — The 54-year-old Freedom Tower, once the home of the Miami News and later the first U.S. stop for Cuban refugees in the 1960s, has been selected by the National Register of Historic Places.

The tower, modeled after an 800-year-old bell tower in Seville, Spain, was used to process about 650,000 refugees from Fidel Castro's regime in Cuba during a five-year period beginning in 1962.

Army Relieved 137 Recruiters

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Army investigation into alleged malpractices by recruiters has resulted in 137 recruiters being suspended from their duties, officials say.

The Army said Tuesday the actions were taken in 11 of 57 recruiting districts. Most of the recruiters were suspected of helping volunteers cheat on entrance exams.

Public Hearing By Day Care Commission

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state Child Care Licensing Commission will hold a public hearing on building codes for day-care facilities. All day-care centers must meet structural standards set by the North Carolina Building Codes Council and the Child Day Care Licensing Commission. The Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements also apply to the centers.

The Commission met Tuesday and decided to set a public hearing date before it took any action on the codes. No date was announced for the hearing.

In 1978, the Department of Human Resources requested and received a waiver of stringent staff-child ratios required by the FIDCR. State authorities said the requirements have limited publicly-funded child care to 10 percent of the state's eligible children.

The Social Services Commission later adopted less stringent staff-child ratios, but since the ratios were a key in determining building specifications, the Day Care Licensing Commission searched for a way for centers that had to adhere to the new rules to adjust more gradually.

Approximately 85 centers in the state would have had to make major changes to adhere to FIDCR rules. Those affected include facilities licensed for more than 15 children, those providing care for children under age three and those that did not exist before April 1, 1972.

Such centers must install an approved automatic sprinkler system or automatic fire detection system, keep the building to one story in height and construct fire-retardant walls and ceilings.

Instead of the building improvements, the centers can opt to build a direct exit to the outside from every room in which children under three are kept or meet the FIDCR's staff-child ratio.

The FIDCR requires one staff member per four children under 3 years of age; one for each five children 3 years old; one for each seven children 4 and 5 years old and one for each 10 children 6 to 14 years old.

The Social Services Commission amended that to one staff member per five children under 1 year old, one for each six 1 year old, one for each seven 2 years old, one for each 10 children 3 years old, one for each 12 children 4 years old, one for each 15 children 5 years old and one for each 20 children 6 years and older.

The Commission must now decide whether to accept the amendment. If it chooses not to, it must return the issue back to the Building Codes Council.

Arrest 6 In Police Chase

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A high-speed chase through downtown Fayetteville Monday night resulted in two wrecked city police cars and a Highway Patrol vehicle.

Video Tape Recorders Upheld

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Video tape recorders legally may be used to record movies and other commercial television programs at home, a federal judge has ruled, in a decision likely to encourage development of the burgeoning new entertainment industry.

The ruling Tuesday by U.S. District Judge Warren J. Ferguson was hailed by an executive of defendant Sony Corp., as a significant boost for the multi-million dollar home-recording industry that already has altered the TV viewing habits of thousands of Americans.

In his 102-page decision, Ferguson said home use of the table-top video cassette recorders to tape programs broadcast by commercial television does not violate copyright laws.

Universal City Studios and Walt Disney Productions had filed suit in an attempt to stop the manufacture, sale and use of Sony's Betamax video cassette recorder.

They argued in a five-week trial that such use lessened the value of their films and could mean the loss of revenue from future sales to television.

In the long run, they argued, the entire television industry could be hurt because recorders would cut into revenues from profitable reruns and confuse the television rating system.

Ferguson said television production by Disney and Universal is more profitable than it has ever been, and during the trial "there was no concrete evidence to suggest that the Betamax will change the studios' financial picture."

The judge noted that his decision does not apply to recording from pay television, duplicating tapes or using them outside the home.

Other defendants were Sony's advertising agency and Los Angeles distributor, three department store chains, and an individual owner.

Stephen Kroft, an attorney for Universal and Disney, said the ruling would be appealed.

"Both sides knew going into this case that ultimately it would have to be decided by the Supreme Court," said Sidney Sheinberg, president of MCA Corp., Universal's parent company.

MCA also sells video discs for use on video disc players. The company was instrumental in the development of the player, but does not make or sell them. The disc player shows movies on a television set, but cannot record off the air.

Kenji Tamiya, executive vice president of Sony, said from New York that the decision was "in the public interest." He said it would encourage the development of new video technology.

More than a million video recorders made by Sony and other electronic manufacturers are being used in American homes to record movies and sporting events for viewing later, to record one program while watching another or, by using a timer, to record a program while away from home.

New developments in video cassette recorders, which sell for about $1,200, have increased playing time to four hours. Some machines can be programmed up to a week in advance.

Poster Rules

Greenville Police Chief Glenn Cannon reminded this morning that placing posters on city-owned property or road right-of-ways is a violation of the city code.

The chief said several complaints have been received about campaign posters for candidates in the coming municipal election being placed on utility poles and other property owned by the city.

Cannon emphasized that the law is not limited to campaign posters, but includes any type of poster placed on street right-of-ways.

Persons placing posters in violation of the city code, he noted, can be charged with the violation.

Bus Service Decline Seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — A spokesman for the bus industry says intercity bus service in North Carolina could continue a steady decline in the next decade without some federal assistance.

Arthur D. Lewis, president of the American Bus Association, said intercity service has declined by 15 percent in the last decade, and reduced passenger loads and consistently higher operating costs are to blame.

The bus industry has asked Congress to subsidize some scheduled service to preserve routes and to grant tax incentives that would encourage purchases of new equipment.

In North Carolina, Lewis said, the number of communities with scheduled bus service has dipped from 575 to 490 within the last 10 years.

He said Virginia was the biggest loser with a drop of 20 percent of service during the same period. South Carolina lost 8 per cent, Lewis said.

Herbicide Tour For Foresters

Area foresters will meet at Whitley's Bar-B-Que outside Murfreesboro Friday, Oct. 5, to view herbicide test plots installed by the Agricultural Extension Service in cooperation with the state Forest Service and the T. E. Brown estate.

Areas to be examined include a pine release timing study and several site preparation plots using different herbicides. Representatives from Dupont will be present to discuss products.

All interested persons are invited to attend, says Jim Kea, assistant area extension forestry agent.

Solicitation Request OK'd

City Manager Ed Wyatt announced the approval of a request by the Pitt County Association for Retarded Citizens for permission to conduct a door-to-door solicitation from Oct. 1 to Nov. 9.

Wyatt said the request was submitted by Ms. Sandra Hall of Greenville.

Cant't Agree On Meeting

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Representatives of Teamsters Local 391 and Hanes Dye and Finishing Co., embroiled in a dispute over union representation, have been unable to agree on a meeting to discuss equipment at the plant.

The Teamsters said they would attend the meeting, proposed to discuss equipment failure at the company plant, only if recognized as the bargaining agent for the employees.

Hanes has appealed the results of an Aug. 20 representation election to the National Labor Relations Board. Workers voted 204-161 to affiliate with the union. The company has charged that union officials threatened physical force to influence voters.

Jimmie C. Hines, vice president of Hanes Dye and Finishing, said the company is not making any charges against the union in connection with the equipment failure. "We had a problem, and we are trying to solicit some help," he said.

In a letter dated Sept. 26, Hines asked R.W. Brown, a Teamsters organizer, to meet because of "serious circumstances at the plant."

He said in the letter that solvents, not oil as required, was being added to felt cups on frames used in the finishing process. Some machines had to be shut down for repairs and some production time was lost, he said.

Teamsters officials denied any involvement in the trouble.

Hines said in his letter that if the Teamsters would not meet, "we will be forced to evaluate the situation independently and take whatever action we deem necessary."

Given Time To Reduce Errors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under proposed regulations, states would have three years to lower their welfare and Medicaid error rate to 4 percent or risk the loss of some federal funds.

The regulations — aimed at the Aid to Families with Dependent Children and Medicaid programs — were suggested by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in response to a directive from Congress. States that fail to reduce their errors would lose the federal share of overpayments exceeding the proposed ceiling. The regulations, open for comment for 60 days, will take effect Sept. 30, 1980.

Controversial American Head-Count Next Year

By ARNOLD B. SAWISLAK
WASHINGTON (UPI) — The first census in the United States took two years to complete and even before the results were in, the president said: "One thing is certain: our real numbers will exceed, greatly, the official returns."

History does not record the reaction of the man in charge of the 1790 census, Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson, to President Washington's vote of no confidence. Right or wrong, that first national nose count went into the books showing a population of 3,933,635.

Six months from now, the nation officially will begin counting its population for the 20th decennial census since 1790. By March 28, 1980, more than 86 million questionnaires will have mailed to households in 275,000 census districts.

Ninety percent are to be filled out and mailed back by April 1; the remainder, mostly in sparsely settled areas, will be picked up by census takers.

The labor of more than a quarter of a million people and about $1 billion will be committed to the 1980 census under the leadership of bureau director Vincent Barabba. (Jefferson used about 700 people and spent $44,000 to make the first national head-count.)

Census Day is neither the start nor finish of the big job. Officials have been at work for nearly five years preparing the 1980 census and it will take nearly that much time into the next decade before the last of the mountain of data collected next year is organized and published.

But the big number — the total population of the United States — must be ready before the end of the year. That figure, which probably will be announced before the Jan. 1, 1981, deadline, is expected to show a population of about 222 million, an increase of nearly 20 million since the last national census in 1970.

The census plays a vital role in the function of representative government in the United States. The "enumeration," as it is called in Article I of the Constitution, was decreed by the Founding Fathers to provide an equitable standard for dividing seats in the House of Representatives among the states.

The first census was used to allocate 106 House seats among 16 states; the 1980 count will divide 435 seats among 50 states for the decade beginning with the 1982 elections.

The first congressional districts contained about 30,000 people; the post-1980 districts may cross the half million mark.

If the experts' projections are borne out by the actual count, six eastern and northern states — New York, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Michigan and South Dakota — will lose 11 seats; eight southern and western states — Florida, Texas, California, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Tennessee and Utah will gain. There was a similar shift 10 years ago.

Today, the census is used for far more than slicing the congressional pie. It is the basis for distribution of more than $50 billion in federal funds to the states and localities and their citizens. It provides private business and industry accurate information about markets and consumers that will be the basis of decisions involving many more billions of dollars.

With all that at stake, the census has great potential for controversy. Carping about the census might rank with complaining about taxes as a national pastime, except that it has come along only once every 10 years.

But even that is changing. Starting in 1985, the government plans to conduct regular mid-decade censuses. These counts in the years ending with 5 will not be used for congressional reapportionment but they will be the basis for updating such multi-billion dollar payoffs as revenue sharing. So there probably will be plenty of complaints when the results are announced.

In past years, it usually was the content of the census that caused conflict. Questions about personal income, marital status and even household plumbing facilities provoked criticism from citizens objecting to invasion of privacy. Census officials treasure a letter received some years ago in which a woman upbraided them for asking questions about information "that can be found in any almanac."

In 1970, the big flap was about the people who were missed by the census. The bureau's own experts estimated an undercount of 2.5 percent — about 5.3 million — but the official count was not changed.

Instead, the Census Bureau says it has been able to encourage cooperation by emphasizing another law which forbids disclosure of individual census information to any other government agency or private interest.

The bureau says this prohibition is so tight that it refused to give the Secret Service personal information about the residents of an outlying Washington neighborhood that was under consideration for quartering President Truman while the White House was being renovated. (Truman eventually moved across the street to Blair House.)

The bureau does publish masses of data about the population as a whole and in segments, but the only release of individual information is to the people who supplied it when they need documentation to establish age or residence.

When census takers have accounted for all the households on their lists, the completed questionnaires will be sent to bureau centers in Indiana,

Louisiana and California to be "read" by specially designed machines that can translate the answers on the forms to computer tape.

The final work will be done by a battery of computers at the Census Bureau headquarters at Suitland, Md., outside Washington.

From about July on, various preliminary totals will be released in localities and states, but the national population figure probably will be announced by the president at the White House sometime before New Year's Day, 1981.

Then the Census Bureau goes back to work producing final state figures for use in the reapportionment of legislative districts as well as local totals needed for various governmental purposes. The detailed information that businessmen need for marketing and production planning will be ground out all during 1981 and 1982.

By March, 1983, the final reports of the 20th decennial census will be issued. And by that time the Census Bureau will be deep in planning for another big job — the mid-decade census of 1985.

Teenaged Girls Spend For Food

NEW YORK (UPI) — Teen-aged girls prepare an average of 13 meals a week for themselves and their families and spend over $13 billion a year on food. That's one out of three family food dollars.

The annual magazine survey that produced those figures also indicated half of all teen-aged girls buy brand name products. Nine out of 10 are aware of nutritional labeling.

Three types of convenience foods rank high on their shopping lists: 82 percent said they used canned soups, more than 75 percent, cold cuts, and more than 73 percent, pizza.

More than 95 percent said they baked cakes at least twice monthly, with almost 9 out of 10 using cake mixes.

The study was done by Seventeen magazine.

The Timetable

WASHINGTON (UPI) —

The 1980 census timetable:
January, 1980 — 400 temporary census field offices open for business.

March 28 — Census questionnaires delivered by mail to 86 million households.

April 1 — Census Day. 90 percent of households to return questionnaires by mail; census takers begin canvassing remainder.

July — Field offices send questionnaires to processing centers in Indiana, Louisiana and California and close down.

July 15-Nov. 15 — Preliminary population and housing reports released.

Jan. 1, 1981 — Deadline for delivery of national population totals to president.

April 1 — Deadline for delivery of state legislative redistricting population figures to governors.

Farmville...

have relatives and friends who do. There were nothing but positive comments. Luetta Tyson summed it up with the better without more of it."

"More of housing rehabilitation, plus possible inclusion of such needs as drainage, recreation facilities, sidewalks, and street lighting were said to be needed by the 30 or more speakers who commented on whether Farmville needs to apply for more CD money. Housing rehab and damage seemed primary Sadie Whitfield Gray talked about the need for senior citizens to understand that their property ownership will not be endangered or encumbered by being included in a housing rehab project.

Dr. Dan Heizer, Melvin Chestnut and Tommy Willis were three who requested that the Farmville Community Arts Council building, the old movie theater building built in 1919 be included to encourage cultural development in the community. Chestnut said he believes the federal government (HUD) will look with favor on something to benefit every element of society being included in the project and that "culture give a person pride in himself and gives him something that nobody can ever take away from him."

Willis pointed out that industrial site seekers look at the cultural, as well as other aspects of a community, so he feels inclusion of the theater project would, in a real but indirect way, possibly provide more jobs for the people of the town and area.

Linwood Mercer, chairman of the Farmville Economic Council, asked that industrial site development be included "as a satellite project."

Favor seemed to be expressed for a multi-(three) year comprehensive grant application.

Thomas pointed out that people can continue to express themselves about specific needs, as many did in the hearing with their "come see about me" or "come see about my elderly friend down the street" statements. He asked that they call the town office or speak to some member of the Town Commission or the Community Development Committee. Specific needs need to be voiced, he emphasized. There is mighty competition for these grants it was pointed out.

Immediately following the hour-and-a-half-long CD hearing, there was a brief hearing on reassessment of improvement work done to Crestwood Drive in 1974. There are changes, Town Administrator Patrick Thomas pointed out, because some property on the street has been found to belong to the railroad. He said engineers are currently drafting a map that will show the frontage of each property owner. Then, he said, another hearing will be held for property owners to let it be known if they feel any of the frontages are not correct. Assessments will be determined once it is definite what the correct frontages are, he indicated.

Commissioner Jack Farrior reported on a meeting between the Public Safety Committee and the officers of the fire department and on a visit to the Insurance Services Office (fire insurance rating bureau) in Raleigh. He said Farmville currently has a strong seven rating on a scale of 10 to one, one being the highest. He said some improvements in fire safety control and communication and the fire department itself could change the rating to 6 by 1980 or 81 and thus decrease insurance premiums for the town's property owners. He recommended that the town begin to think seriously about acquisition of property for a new fire station south of the railroad tracks and also about specifications for a pumper for this station.

An ordinance "to protect and encourage appropriate planting of street trees" was adopted. In it the duties of the recently appointed Tree Board are set forth.

The town administrator was given the go-ahead to use in rem tax foreclosure as a way to more quickly collect delinquent taxes. Under this procedure, which is provided for under the General Statutes of North Carolina, a judgment can be obtained in as little as eight months after taxes are due.

Edgcombe Bank and Trust Company was awarded the low bid for banking services for the town. The board went on record as expressing appreciation to First Union National Bank for its "excellent service" during the previous two years.

Approval was given for the following purchases: distribution transformers at a total actual cost of $11,799.90 from Rigby Electric Supply; energy monitoring equipment from Westinghouse Electric Supply; a tandem dump truck for $9,500 from Herring International in Wilson; and a night vision scope for the Police Department for about $5,400, including lenses.

The Utilities Committee was asked to meet with the Farmville Housing Authority to work out procedures for the provision of water, sewer and electric service to the 35 additional housing units the Authority hopes to apply for soon.

Philadelphia Prepares For John-Paul's Visit

PHILADELPHIA 1(p) — The City of Brotherly Love is holding up a flashing American flag, formed by placards held aloft by 3,000 Catholic schoolchildren, as a greeting today for Pope John Paul II.

The placards were to blink the message, "Philadelphia Welcomes Pope John Paul II With Love" — in English and then in Polish — when the pope steps off his "Shepherd One" charter jetliner at the airport.

Workmen toiled late

Tuesday, sprucing up the city to look better than its Sunday best for the pope's third stop on his tour of six American cities. He has already visited Boston and New York, and will also stop in Des Moines, Chicago and Washington, D.C.

Early today, hundreds of eager onlookers were already milling around Logan Circle, scene of the highlight of the pope's 21-hour Philadelphia visit — a High Mass outside the Cathedral of Saints Peter and Paul. They were the first trickle of a throng expected to swell to one million.

"This is the chance of a lifetime," said 71-year-old John Beatty, watching three pieces of an imitation marble altar being installed on a $75,000 crystalline white platform built over the fountain in the center of the circle.

Eight weeks of planning have been devoted to the papal welcome, and the city's 1.3 million Catholics are eager to display their reverence and joy to the Vicar of Rome, who visited twice, when he was Cardinal Karol Wojtyla of Poland.

The route of the pope's bubble-topped limousine passed through the heart of heavily Italian south Philadelphia. Residents there adorned homes and shops with color portraits of John Paul and hung flags of yellow and white, the Vatican colors, from the streetlights.

But the heart of the celebration is Logan Circle, where the pope was to celebrate Mass between the 115-year-old brownstone cathedral and the majestic Philadelphia Art Museum.

Afterward, the pope will dine at the residence of Cardinal John Krol, archbishop of Philadelphia as well as John Paul's friend, confidant and fellow Pole.

Biggest Telescope Complex Is Located In Hawaii

By ROBERT C. MILLER
MAUNA KEA, Hawaii (UPI) — Appeased with prayers and roast pork, the Hawaiian gods have apparently approved man's attempts to penetrate the outer edge of the universe with the most powerful infrared telescopes ever assembled.

"Everything is going real smooth now," said Lancelot Elarionoff, chief electrician at the Mauna Kea Observatory complex. "But there was plenty pilikea (trouble) before we had the blessing and the luau (feast)."

"The generators kept breaking down, the heads were cracking, we were baffled by the high temperatures and burned-out bearings. Even new generators kept breaking down. But now we don't even have to keep a man up on the mountain at night, and I haven't been called out on an emergency in months."

The generators serve the six telescopes now operating, or being built, atop this 13,796-foot peak on the island of Hawaii which astronomers agree is one of the most ideal sites in the world for astronomical viewing, particularly with infrared telescopes.

Nearly $70 million worth of astronomical equipment is housed in the six button mushroom-shaped observatories that dot the summit of this ancient volcano which has been dead for the past 4,000 years. Included are the two largest infrared telescopes in the world, the 144-inch Canada-France-Hawaii telescope dedicated Sept. 28, and the United Kingdom's infrared unit with its 150-inch mirror scheduled for use later this year.

Already in use is the NASA infrared telescope with its 120-inch mirror which was used so successfully in the Jupiter project. In addition, the University of Hawaii has three telescopes atop Mauna Kea, two 24-inch telescopes and an 88-inch glass.

Australian-born John Jefferies, director of the university's Institute for Astronomy, said Mauna Kea has now been recognized as an ideal site for celestial observations because of the unusual atmospheric conditions atop the mountain along with its geographical position.

"The higher elevation places the summit of Mauna Kea above 40 percent of the earth's atmosphere," the Cambridge University graduate said. "Ever since 1965 when the University of Hawaii placed its first glass up here, we have been extolling the virtues of this site. First we impressed the National Space Agency, and now our fame is international."

Jefferies said the atmospheric conditions are some of the best in the world because the air is dry and clear, causing little or no distortion to blur the astronomical sightings. Located at about 20 degrees north latitude, the mountain lies in a position which enables astronomers to work both the northern and southern hemispheres with equal ease.

"It is nearly always clear of cloud cover up here, and there is an almost complete absence of background light. This gives us a deeper darkness of the night sky which is so important, particularly when using infrared telescopes," Jefferies said.

He pointed out that although the coastal areas receive tremendous amounts of rain, the top of Mauna Kea is a desert as the cloud formations form well below the summit of this world's highest island mountain. Mauna Kea rises 32,000 feet from the floor of the ocean.

Only in Chile are similar conditions available for infrared astronomy. The National Weather Service said 60 percent of all nights are completely free of clouds, and an additional 12 to 15 percent are usable for spectroscopic observations which do not require such stable conditions.

Thomas Krieger, general manager of the Mauna Kea Observatory support service, said the Mauna Kea complex is now "the world's biggest astronomical observatory complex in terms of light-gathering footage of all the telescope mirrors."

"And," continued Krieger, "we understand the University of California wants to put a 33-foot mirror up here. That would be just about twice as big as the largest telescope now operating in the United States."

was done at the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory in Victoria, B.C.

Hawaii furnished the land for the observatory and the support facilities — including housing — for the scientists at the mid-level facilities half way up the mountain.

The UK observatory now under construction will be operated by the Edinburgh Royal Observatory under the direction of Dr. Vincent Reddish. Its 150-inch mirror will be the largest of its kind ever built.

Reddish said the British telescope will be used to "probe the mysterious sources of energy in the central core of galaxies which sometimes destroy themselves in cataclysmic explosions."

All the operations atop Mauna Kea are dependent upon the diesel generators as there is no power line to the summit. And without electricity, all the operations come to a screeching halt, for there is no way to scan the heavens without power.

"And it looked like we weren't going to have any power the way things were going," explained Elarionoff, who is of Russian-Hawaiian heritage. "We even brought two new units up the mountain, and they failed to solve the problem. That's when I decided we needed a Kahuna (Hawaiian priest) to bless the place and spread the word around to the night spirits that we meant no harm and were peaceful folks."

Besides it was a good excuse for a luau (feast)."

Elarionoff said the Rev. Lion Ua, an off-duty policeman and assistant pastor of Kilohana Church, offered the required prayers, blessed the ground and helped in the luau which included pork, poi and all the traditional Hawaiian delicacies.

"Maybe it was just coincidence," Elarionoff continued. "I'm not one to say. I just know that we've never had any problems since that luau nearly three years ago."

ANCIENT VOLCANO IS ACTIVE — Six telescopes now operating or being built dot the summit of Mauna Kea, an ancient volcano which has been dead for the past 4000 years. Astronomers say the site is one of the most ideal in the world, particularly with infrared telescopes. (UPI Photo)

Sexes Differ In Some Fields Of Reasoning

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Eighth-grade girls tend to have trouble with reasoning because their spatial ability is not as well developed as that of boys the same age, Janet Sawyers says research toward her doctorate in home economics at Oklahoma State University here showed.

"It appears that spatial ability is more important than verbal ability in solving higher-level problems," said Miss Sawyers, who defined spatial ability as ability to manipulate objects in space mentally — similar to solving problems in geometry.

In her developmental study of sex differences in verbal, spatial and logical reasoning, she looked at fourth-graders, eighth-graders and college students.

She also found differences in reasoning ability among college students, with males more able than females to solve problems involving ability to reason, to integrate parts and to see the whole picture.

After group testing about 230 students, Miss Sawyers selected equal numbers of males and females with varying spatial and verbal ability for a follow-up study.

She found the difference in spatial ability showed up strongly around adolescence. "The reason it doesn't show up before may be the type of reasoning children do doesn't draw on that kind of ability," she explained.

"When children reach adolescence, reasoning greatly develops but females don't seem to develop this ability as fast as males," she notes. "Channeled along verbal lines because they talk earlier, better and faster, females tend to take a more verbal approach to things when it is not always advantageous to do so."

As to why males have greater spatial ability than females, she said, "We encourage males to be more active — to manipulate toys, build with blocks and have physical contact with things."

"When males reach adolescence and need to manipulate objects mentally, they have already developed an ability they can draw on to help them reason and solve problems logically."

Miss Sawyers believes her research has practical implications for curriculum in early childhood education. "Parents and society often push traditional paper and pencil activities on children at young ages," she says.

"Many times we have to defend having learning centers and active participation in our schools. The curriculum is almost entirely verbal and passive with almost no regard for developing spatial ability."

She thinks males catch up with females in verbal ability because it is stressed at school and in the home. "You have to pick up spatial ability incidentally or on your own," she said.

Court Martial Decision Expected On Thursday

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Lt. G. Steven Suits, a physician who refused to board a ship because he said his medical training was inadequate to take care of those aboard it, may find out Thursday if the Navy will court-martial him.

Suits has been under house arrest since Sept. 14 after he refused to leave on a ship to which he had been assigned.

Navy officials contend Suits is a competent medical officer and that his refusal to obey orders is a violation of military regulations.

The hearing will be similar to a grand jury proceeding in a civilian court. Navy prosecutors and defense attorneys will present evidence in the case and a decision will be made on dropping the charges or going on with the court-martial.

If convicted, Suits would face a maximum penalty of one year in prison.

The 26-year-old Suits, a native of Spartanburg, S.C., said in a recent interview that he sees the case as a test of the Navy's medical training requirements, which he called inadequate. He added that he is caught between military obligations and professional ethics.

Suits first challenged Navy authorities 10 months ago after a patient lapsed into a diabetic coma as a result of medication he had administered.

The patient eventually recovered but Suits balked at other assignments, challenging his training. At first, the Navy at first agreed to allow Suits to decline cases he did not think he could handle.

Suits finished one year of a five-year surgical residency under a Navy scholarship program but then was called to active duty, where he has been assigned as a general practitioner. His active duty assignment began in July 1978.

"One year's training isn't enough and they're going to have to deal with it," Suits said. "If I win this thing you're going to see a lot of people on my side."

Multiple Sclerosis Campaign To Begin

Neighborhood volunteers will begin their door-to-door campaign this week to seek support for the Triangle Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. The triangle Chapter includes Greenville in its area.

The Chapter serves some 36 eastern North Carolina counties. Bill Foster, head basketball coach at Duke University, is serving as the 1979 residential campaign chairman for the drive.

"We need every volunteer we can get, we can't let the MS patients down," said Foster. "Our task would be much easier and we would go out of business much sooner if the public, so generous to good causes, would have a better understanding of the physical and emotional impact MS imposes on patients, and the many burdens especially financial, it places on their families."

Multiple Sclerosis is a chronic, crippling disease of the central nervous system which affects vision, motion, hearing, speech and balance. As of yet, researchers have been unable to determine the cause or find a cure for MS.

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C.—Wednesday, October 3, 1979—17

Sixty percent of funds raised will remain in the Chapter area to provide patient services for local MS patients and families. The remaining percentage goes to the Society's National Headquarters to help provide funds for research.

Lab Evaluates Fireplace, Wood Stove Efficiency

By BOB LOWRY

AUBURN, Ala. (UPI) — In a futuristic looking room lined with sheets of shiny aluminum, Auburn University engineers are working out the energy efficiency of wood-burning fireplaces and stoves for the first time ever.

The experiments are expected to provide valuable data for consumers interested in wood for home heating as prices of heating oil and natural gas continue to climb.

The laboratory on the outskirts of the sprawling campus opened June 1 this year in cooperation with the Fireplace Institute, a trade association representing manufacturers of wood-burning stoves, fireplaces and accessories.

About 20 units were tested during the laboratory's 90-day break-in test period, says Barry Ferner, executive secretary of the Chicago-based association.

But consumers looking for EER-labeled units will find few this fall and winter, Ferner said in a telephone interview. He speculated it would be November or December before even one or two models appeared in stores.

"We hope consumers will see wider distribution (of EER-labeled units) by the fall of 1980," he added.

Manufacturers need not belong to the association to have their products tested by the lab, he said.

"There is a tremendous interest in going back to wood," said David Dyer, a mechanical engineering professor at Auburn who helped design the lab. "With heating oil going to 80 cents or a dollar a gallon this winter, you'll see more interest because people just can't afford it."

Dyer estimated some homeowners in the northeast can expect to pay up to $3,000 for heating fuel this winter.

"People who are running on natural gas right now are going to be in the same situation as people with heating oil (because of gas price deregulation)," said Dyer. "But people have access to wood and really it's the only way out."

"I think the most important thing about this lab is that it's the first time we've gotten real data on how stoves and fireplaces work," he says. "People have been using wood for centuries, but nobody knew much about it."

The lab's 16-by-20 foot calorimeter room has a fireplace and stacks of Douglas fir in selected sizes to insure a constant fuel source. The room has double thick walls, ceiling and flooring. Twelve-inch-thick fiberglass makes it airtight, prevents heat loss through the walls and allows accurate measurement of energy output. Three large air conditioners maintain temperatures at a constant level so the exact heat output can be measured.

The data is fed into a computer that gives the unit's BTU per hour rate and efficiency percentage.

A second test, performed solely on stoves, measures the amount of heat lost up the flue. The data from this test is also analyzed by computer.

Dyer, who advocates wood as a primary fuel, installed a heat return insert in a fireplace in his home and used the fan from his electric heat pump last winter to blow the warm air through his 3,600-square-foot house.

"It (the fireplace) heated the whole house because its BTU output was about equal to my heat pump," he said.

A colleague, Glenn Maples, spent about $30 last winter to heat his home. Most of the money was for gasoline to run a chainsaw when he cut his own firewood. A cord of wood costs about $25 in the Auburn area.

But before buying a wood-burning fireplace or stove, he suggests consumers be sure of what they're getting.

A standard masonry fireplace loses about 90 to 95 percent of its heat up the chimney. Dyer recommends a heat return insert because the device, which costs about $500, can save up to 25 percent of the heat.

Stoves' efficiency ratings usually range from 30 percent for the old pot-belly or Franklin type to 50 or 60 percent for radiant heat models.

Dyer said the lab's ratings can be a big help to consumers by giving them an idea of what to expect from an appliance in heat input and wood needs.

Since the lab began research officially in June, it has completed tests on 13 fireplaces and 45 stoves.

When it is not testing new appliances or designs, it will conduct research for the Energy Department.

The energy efficiency of a wood-burner depends partly on the condition of your firewood.

Dry wood and a clean chimney provide the most heat and reduce fire danger, says John R. Hornick of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Forest Service.

"Living trees may be more than half water. Trying to burn fresh-cut — or green — wood can give you significant problems."

The best way to insure you have dry wood is to cut it the winter before the heating season you plan to use it, Hornick says.

Here are his directions, plus other Forest Service tips for maintaining and using wood-burners:

— Cut wood into lengths to fit your burner. Split all pieces more than 8 inches in diameter. Pile it off the ground on bricks or poles and cover it to protect it from rain and snow.

— If you are just now cutting wood for this winter, standing or fallen dead trees that have lost their bark make better fuel than living trees.

— To dry green wood faster, stack it in a sunny spot and cover it with clear plastic. Burning wet wood uses much of the fire's heat to dry the wood out. Wet wood also produces slow, cool fires and deposits sooty, black creosote in the chimney. Creosote is flammable and can cause chimney fires.

— Clean and examine chimneys and stovepipes at least once a year. Use a high-powered vacuum, especially on the joints, bends and horizontal runs. For the long straight section of a masonry chimney, fill a heavy cloth bag with straw and weight it with a rock. Tie a rope to the end of the bag and lower it down the chimney to scrape the creosote off the sides.

— To clean old stone and masonry chimneys, either rent more sophisticated equipment from a local stove dealer or — preferably — hire a commercial chimney sweep.

— Before the heating season starts, check chimney construction and improve it if needed.

— Keep the chimney and the stovepipe connecting a stove and chimney short and with as few bends as possible. Three 90-degree bends should be the maximum. No bends is best.

— Pipe joints should be tight enough so you can't see light through them. There should be no cracks or holes in the pipe or chimney. Corroded pipe should be cleaned or replaced. Assemble the pipe so the uppermost sections fit into the lower sections. This lets liquid creosote drip back into the firebox where it can be burned.

— Use only one pipe section for horizontal runs. Be sure it does not sag.

— Where the stovepipe goes through a wall, floor or roof, it should pass through a thimble and collar to prevent fires. Check with local building code agencies for approved installation procedures.

— Keep as much of the chimney as possible inside the house. You pick up extra heat this way and reduce the possibility of creosote condensation caused by a cold chimney.

— Install a chimney cap to keep rain and snow out.

Wood is sold by the cord or fraction thereof, so it pays to know the difference between standard cords, face cords, short cords, long cords, solid cords and maybe others.

— Specify standard cord when you order. Make sure what you get is a pile of wood 4 feet high, 8 feet wide and 4 feet long.

— A face cord is 4 feet high by 8 feet wide but the pieces may be any length. For instance, a face cord of stove-length (16-inch) wood would be only one-third of a standard cord.

— Short cord is another name for face cord.

— Measure the woodpile to be sure it is tightly stacked and all the pieces lie in the same direction. Otherwise you will pay for air space instead of wood.

Even piled carefully, a cord contains only 80 cubic feet of solid wood, although its dimensions total 128 cubic feet.

— Size and straightness of wood in a pile help determine how much wood you get. Crooked pieces add to air space but large pieces add up to more wood, even though the spaces may look larger.

— Pound for pound, most species of dry wood produce about the same amount of heat. But some species of wood are lighter than others. A cord of aspen weighs about half as much as a cord of dry white oak and has about half the heat value.

— Buying wood by weight is risky because it always contains moisture. Up to half the weight of "green" wood, fresh-cut from living trees, can be water. At today's wood prices, that's expensive.

— To help determine wood's dryness, ask the seller how long it was air dried and if it was cut to length and split before drying. If the answers are "at least 9 months" and "yes" respectively, you can assume you'll get fair heat value for the weight.

'Explaining' Kentucky Is Not Simple

By HERBERT SPARROW
Associated Press Writer
FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Extolling the charms and advantages of Kentucky to the Chinese for possible trade contracts can run into snags because of language and cultural differences.

But officials of Kentucky's Departments of Commerce and Public Information have confronted that problem with a color slide presentation that has been translated into the main Chinese dialect.

The multimedia division of the Public Information Department developed the slide presentation — complete with background music and multi-screen photographs — two years ago to help the state attract industrial prospects.

While it has been translated into several European languages, its adaptation to Chinese presented other difficulties.

"Some of the things did present problems," said Richard Stringer, a Commerce Department employee who translated the script into Mandarin Chinese.

Stringer said he had had problems with such things as burley tobacco, horse racing and even coal technology. He said the problem with coal technology had been with the language, but cultural differences had hampered the explanation of burley tobacco and horse racing.

"There were problems with explaining Kentuckians' love for the horse industry to people who aren't that geared to thinking about horses in a sporting capacity," Stringer said.

"Burley, as I found out, is distinct in that it is air-cured, while most tobacco is fire-cured," he said. "Instead of just saying burley tobacco, like we could in some European languages, we had to explain that it is air-cured and distinct to Kentucky."

There were also some difficulties in translating Kentucky's state song, "My Old Kentucky Home," into Chinese. One part of the song mentions "children rolling on the cabin floor."

"There is no real concept of log cabin in China; it just doesn't exist and hasn't been known to exist," Stringer said. "One can't translate into Chinese the feeling behind the log cabin, what it means to American culture and Kentucky history. So you lose in the translation when you have to explain it only as my old Kentucky home."

"But if it was translated as cabin, it wouldn't make any sense."

Stringer learned Chinese while studying and teaching for two years in Taiwan.

University of Kentucky engineering professor David Koa, a native of China, read the script, while Stringer helped members of the multimedia division place Chinese characters in the proper place on the slides.

Center Is Given Renovation Aid

PARIS (AP) — The American Center for Students and Artists received a $375,000 grant from the Rockefeller Foundation to renovate its building and to continue its artist-in-residence program for the next three years.

The center is a non-profit institution founded in 1931. This year it plans to sponsor lectures and workshops conducted by more than 75 American creative artists. More than 4,500 students attend the center.

The funds will pay travel costs and fees for the American artists, school officials said.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India's 635 million people include about 3.2 million lepers, the Health Ministry announced. It said it hopes to have more than 80 per cent of them under treatment next year.

PLUGGING DAM LEAKS
KINGS MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — Workers are trying to plug leaks, temporarily, found in an earthen dam that holds back an 11-billion gallon reservoir, the John Henry Moss Lake. Authorities say the leaks pose no "imminent danger" if corrected soon.

Vote Extending Of Sewer Lines

WILLIAMSTON — Actions taken by the Williamston Town Board of Commissioners at the October meeting on Monday include an agreement to extend sewer lines at a pair of locations in town and approval of a lease agreement with Wachovia Bank and Trust Company for a vacant area.

The extended sewer lines will go to a building site on the north side of the bypass near Park Street and extension of the line at Pine Street to the existing outfall.

The lease agreement with Wachovia is for the downtown site of the former Collins Department store, which was destroyed by fire earlier this year.

November 5 was set as the date for public hearings on two actions recommended by the Williamston Planning Board. One action will cover an amendment of the zoning ordinance so that mobile homes or offices would not be allowed for office use unless a special use permit was approved by the planning/ board of adjustment. The second action to be heard at the public hearing is that of amending the zoning map by expanding the present office and institutional zone located on Sycamore/West Main Street to include the area south to Tank Street and west to the railroad track.

The continuing problem of backup in the Skewarkee Gut outfall line area was again brought to the board, with Dr. G. G. Himmelwright asking town commissioners to take steps for immediate relief. He noted this has been a continuing problem that has not been solved and that conditions constitute a health hazard.

Bond Issue Drive

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state Board of Education has started a campaign to encourage the legislature and the public to approve a $500 million or more bond issue for school construction.

State education officials say the money is needed to replace hundreds of deteriorating and obsolete school buildings across the state. Earlier this year, the Department of Public Instruction concluded the state needs to spend $1.6 billion during the next 10 years to keep up with school needs. In the past, state government has paid about one-third of school construction costs. That means the state would pay at least $500 million during the next 10 years.

Department officials said the biggest need is $737 million for replacement of obsolete facilities. Other projected needs include $119 million for replacing temporary facilities such as mobile homes used for classrooms, $264 million for renovating old buildings, $95 million for renovations to conserve energy, $55 million for building facilities for exceptional children and $41 million for constructing access facilities for handicapped students.

A research commission was appointed by the 1979 legislature to consider whether the state should submit a construction bond issue to the voters. The commission is expected to report to the General Assembly in March.

The Board of Education has traditionally declared its support for school bond issues only after the legislature has authorized a public referendum.

Picnic Held For Pitt Patients

The Mental Health Association in Pitt County's annual picnic for Pitt County patients of Cherry Hospital was held yesterday afternoon.

Partial hospitalization clients of the Mental Health Center also were guests.

Volunteers who contributed were Alton Warren, who catered the barbecue lunch; Dr. Otto Dykstra, accordionist; Lester Brown and Ms. Pauline Brown, vocalists; the Roxy Trio, musicians; Ms. Terry Salmon and Ms. Kit Roark, magicians; and the Rev. Bill Hadden, master of ceremonies.

The newly formed Pitt Community College chapter of the Mental Health Association served as hosts and hostesses under the direction of Cheryl Moyer, student intern of the Association. Ms. Terry Shank welcomed clients and guests.

Skirmishing In ECC Continues This Week

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Skirmishing continues Friday night in the Eastern Carolina Conference, following a week in which Farmville Central and Southern Nash solidified their hold on first place in the league. Farmville Central, continuing to play like the champions they have been for the past three years in the ECC, walloped North Pitt, 61-6. The Jaguars, who have won 26 consecutive ECC games, are 3-0 in the conference and 4-0 overall.

Southern Nash, appearing now to be Farmville's chief rival for the conference crown, routed D.H. Conley, 34-12. The Firebirds, 3-0 in the league, have the best overall mark in the ECC, at 5-0.

Greene Central, reeling after three consecutive losses, took advantage of Ayden-Grifton errors and handed the Chargers their first conference loss of the season, 27-9. The Chargers are 2-1 in the league and 3-2 overall. The Rams are 1-3 and 2-3.

In other games last week, C.B. Aycock knocked off Southwest Edgecombe, 24-6, while West Craven beat North Lenoir, 18-0, and on Monday night, Ahoskie handled Roanoke, 40-8, while Williamston beat Roanoke Rapids, 42-8. Jamesville topped Bath, 6-0, Friday.

DHC's Curtis Joyner

The schedule this week is highlighted by Ayden-Grifton at North Pitt, Farmville Central at D.H. Conley and North Lenoir at Southern Nash.

Also this week, Greene Central travels to C.B. Aycock, Williamston takes on the Pam Pack in Washington and Roanoke travels to Plymouth, and Jamesville visits Aurora.

D.H. Conley
The concern was evident in Coach Jimbo Walker's voice.

Following last week's 34-12 loss to powerful Southern Nash, Walker's Vikings were facing the unenviable task of taking on the ECC's biggest biggie, Farmville Central.

"Against Southern Nash, we didn't play well," Walker said. Even his defense, which Walker had been raving about the last two weeks, did not perform to his liking.

"No. The defense did not play well either. I don't know what was the matter," he said.

Walker, who seemed more than unusually reticent about his team this week, had nothing but praise for the Jaguars, who travel to D.H. Conley Friday night.

"They're an awfully good football team. They play football the way it's supposed to be played. We'll just go out and try," Walker said.

When asked if the Vikings would do anything different against Farmville, Walker said, "I think we're gonna line up against them and see what happens. We'll wait and see what happens from there. We'll see what we can do, if anything."

Farmville Central
Even with a 61-6 win over North Pitt last week, Farmville Central Coach Gene Brewer saw things he didn't like.

"Offensively, we played up and down. We played real well for a time and then hit a real low point when we didn't play well at all," Brewer said, adding he added that he felt his defense played well throughout the game.

This week, Farmville travels to D.H. Conley to battle the Vikings, a team Brewer said he did not know that much about.

"It's hard to tell (exactly what they'll do). With a new coach and everything, you just don't know," Brewer said. "I do know they've got some good running backs and up until last week their defense had been playing well."

Brewer said his squad would not be taking the Vikings for granted, despite their loss last week to Southern Nash.

"We're all in this together."

FV's Wesley Locust

This is a Pitt County game and I don't think it'll be too hard for our kids to get up for it," Brewer said.

North Pitt

Panther Coach Pat Smith did not like what he saw last Friday night against Farmville Central. Never mind the 61-6 score against his Panthers.

What upset Smith more than anything was the lack of effort his team gave, even if it was in a losing cause.

"We got beat by a much better football team," Smith said. "Still, some of our guys were just going through the motions. In other words, they did not really think we had a chance to win."

"It looked like they didn't even know their assignments," he said.

Two weeks ago, Smith suspended 11 players for breaking training rules. Last week, under the terms of the suspension, eight of those 11 were allowed to return. Reportedly, none returned.

Smith recognizes there is a problem, part of which he attributes to his team's lack of effort and part of it simply to his team's unwillingness to practice.

"You can't win a football game when you have only 14 players at practice on Monday, or have only 11 at practice on Wednesday, as we did last week," Smith said.

But Smith thinks he has a solution.

"Some of our players are going to do a better job or they're going to be replaced. We're going to do better," he said.

"Whether we have new players or whether the old players have a new attitude, you're going to see a different team this week against Ayden-Grifton."

NP's Ronnie House

Smith said he believes the Chargers will try to run over the smaller Panthers.

"They're strong defensively, but they also have two powerful running backs and I feel they'll just try to overpower us," he said.

"Right now, our defense isn't playing all that bad. It's our offense that has to come up with a way to move the ball. We have to do a better job at that."

"We've still got six games left and it can still be a successful season."

Ayden-Grifton
Last year, Ayden-Grifton was 1-3 going into its game with North Pitt. The Panthers, on the other hand, were 4-0 at the time.

The Chargers, however, thoroughly dominated the game, crushing North Pitt, 46-6.

Coach Dixon Sauls remembers the game well, if not the final score.

"Last year, we played extremely well against them. I can't remember the score, but I know we played one of our best games of the year," he said.

This year, the Panthers go into Friday night's game with a 1-3 mark overall and 0-3 record in the conference. They have had their problems, mainly disciplinary ones.

"It's going to be difficult to get ready for them because we really don't know who is going to play or what they'll try to do," Sauls said.

"We have a lot of respect for Coach (Pat) Smith and what he's trying to do over there," Sauls added.

The Chargers, 3-2 overall and 2-1 in the conference, may be without star fullback Billy Holland this week.

Holland injured an ankle two weeks ago and played only briefly in the Chargers' 27-9 loss to Greene Central. Sauls said he would not be able to tell until later in the week whether Holland would play Friday.

"I think Greg Jackson did a good job replacing Billy, though," Sauls said. Jackson rushed for 50 yards last week against the Rams and scored one touchdown.

ECU Lady Pirates Begin Practice

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's women's basketball team officially open practice this afternoon, and second year coach Cathy Andruzzi will find more newcomers than veterans on the floor.

Only four players from last year's 18-11 team return this winter, Lydia Rountree, Lillian Barnes, Marcia Girven, and all-America candidate Rosie Thompson, who led the state in scoring for the past two years.

The team actually has been working since school began back in late August, since the AIAW has no restrictions on practice. "The girls have been involved in a weight program, and have been holding pre-season drills," Andruzzi said. "But our official practice starts Wednesday."

The Pirates have only slightly more than a month to prepare for their opener, set November 17 against William & Mary.

"We moved things up this year so that we could get our State tournament out of the way before the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament was played. We're going to hold it at the Raleigh Civic Center, and we hope that it will stay there for a long time."

In addition to the four returning players, there will be eight new ones, four incoming freshmen, three transfers, and one walk on. But the returning players won't be able to say they have a starting position nailed down.

"Right now, I can say only that Rosie and Marcia are probable starters," Andruzzi said. "The other three are up for grabs. At point guard, Lydia is going to get plenty of challenge from Laurie Sikes (transfer from Peace). She is an excellent passer, and more of a natural point guard than Lydia."

The other two spots could end up going to Kathy Riley, a transfer from East Tennessee State, who is strong and aggressive, and a good perimeter shooter, and Heidi Owen, a good defensive player, and outside shooter.

"We don't have a lot of height," Andruzzi said, "so we are going to have to depend a lot on speed and defense. We've really joined the midlevel league (tallest are two six-footers), but we are fast. So I think we can compensate by playing real good defense. We are going to have to use our outside shooting and not depend on looking inside for Marcia and Rosie."

"We do have good quickness, and I was used to be very sound fundamentally. I want us to be rats out there and just keep them out of their offense. We'll be playing a lot of man-to-man defense, and try to take advantage of every situation."

Andruzzi said that the starting lineup may end up as no set thing. "We are going to have to be flexible. Who we start may depend on who we play, and who is working the hardest. It's going to be a series of challenges."

Andruzzi feels she has more depth this year, despite the newcomers. "Last year, we were afraid that we'd give up ten points right away. But this year, we don't feel that way."

As far as the season is concerned, Andruzzi feels that the Pirates will be fortunate to win 15 games. "We are playing a very strong schedule. But I think this helps us in recruiting. People know when they play for us, they'll be going up against the best in the country."

"If we stay healthy, I think we will be respectable. We may get beaten, but we won't be blown away."

If there is any disappointment for Andruzzi, it is that one eligible returning player, Lynn Emerson, a 6-0 veteran, decided to pass up the sport this year. "It came as somewhat of a shock, since we didn't find out until just a day or two ago," Andruzzi said.

Angels Face Favored Orioles Tonight

BALTIMORE (AP) — The California Angels, with their pitching staff strengthened and armed with a scouting report that even describes the Baltimore crowds, face the favored Orioles with renewed confidence in the opener of the American League playoffs tonight.

"We just got our pitching back to where it was when we left spring training," California Manager Jim Fregosi said prior to the start of the best-of-5 series that shifts to the West Coast Friday for the third game and any more that are necessary.

Fregosi said Nolan Ryan, Dave Frost and Frank Tanana, who will start the first three games in that order, missed close to 60 starts during the regular season for the Western Division champs, who are making their first appearance in postseason play.

"We lost about 30 games when we scored five runs or more,"

Fregosi said, "and six when we scored at least 10 runs. We scored more than 100 more runs than the Orioles, but they kept their pitching intact all year."

Baltimore had trouble for ailing starters, too, with Scott McGregor out for a month and Jim Palmer, the first game starter, missing about 14 starts because of various elbow, shoulder and back ailments.

The Orioles held a commanding 9-3 edge over the Angels in the season series, but Fregosi said: "I don't think they can take three of those and win the playoffs. We're going in 0-0."

California's potent attack is led by Don Baylor, a former Oriole who drove in 139 runs while hitting 36 home runs. Bobby Grich, another former Oriole, and Dan Ford each had 101 RBI.

"When we traded Frank Robinson in 1972 to make room for Baylor," said Weaver, "we knew he would be a star and had the ingredients to become the Most Valuable Player in the league."

Baylor was traded to Oakland in 1976, in a deal for Reggie Jackson, and joined the Angels the following year in the re-entry draft.

In an effort to stop the Angels, Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver bypassed 23-game winner Mike Flanagan and opted for Palmer, the three-time Cy Young Award winner who posted a 10-6 record in 1979.

Fregosi nominated Ryan, 16-14, who has lost his last six decisions to Baltimore and has a 5-13 lifetime mark against the Orioles.

At practice Tuesday, Fregosi revealed that his scouting report on the Orioles included a section on the record crowds that many observers thought played a major role in helping them to their first division title in five years.

"The crowd probably will be the wildest of the year," the report said. "A guy with a full beard and a white hat will have 52,000 people spelling out 'Orioles' the whole game. It will be a wild and enthusiastic crowd, so be ready."

Homers, Candelaria Lead Pirates To Opening Win

Stargell Homers
Pirates' captain Willie Stargell (8), who blasted a three-run home run in the 11th inning in Cincinnati

CINCINNATI (AP) — John Candelaria may have surprised some people with his performance in the opening game of the National League playoffs, but not his teammates.

"He's played all year not feeling 100 percent, and all he does is get smarter and better," said shortstop Tim Foli after Candelaria, who had not started since Sept. 15 because of an injury to his left side, pitched seven innings of Tuesday night's game.

A quartet of Pirate relief pitchers then held the Cincinnati Reds scoreless until Willie Stargell homered to give Pittsburgh a 5-2, 11-inning victory.

"He's a money pitcher,"

Tanner said of Candelaria, who allowed two runs and five hits. He held the Reds without a hit through the fifth, sixth and seventh innings. "If it's a big game, he'll get it for you."

Pirates catcher Ed Ott said Candelaria was feeling his aches and pains.

"He was grunting and groaning out there on the mound from the first inning," Ott said.

The Pirates were equally rhapsodic about their bullpen, which shut down Reds' threats in the eighth and 11th innings.

"That's the kind of pitchers we have," Foli said. "When the going gets tough, they all want the ball."

The victory was sweet revenge for the Pirates, who lost to the Reds in playoff competition in 1970, 1972 and 1975.

"It's like a bully who is constantly beating up on you and you say, 'Hey, I belong here, too,'" Stargell said.

Stargell and several other players said they were upset by an article in a local newspaper which compared the two teams.

The article, which Stargell felt was not flattering enough to his club, was placed on the Pirates' bulletin board before the game.

For the Reds, and particularly third baseman Ray Knight, it was an unhappy night.

Knight, who so successfully replaced Pete Rose at third base, went 0-for-5 at the plate and struck out with the bases loaded in the last inning. He also hit into two double plays.

"Tonight I consider myself the goat, but tomorrow I might be the hero," Knight said. "It wasn't a good night for me, but I guess I've had to have had a lot of good nights to be where I am."

Knight admitted he was thinking of being a hero when he came up in the bottom of the 11th inning.

"I guess you fantasize this situation all your life. I wasn't nervous. I felt really good and wanted to be in that situation."

"We were 10 games back and came on to win the division," said Reds outfielder Dave Collins. "Now, we're one game back and I'm sure we can come back again."

"Well, it's down to a four-game season for us now," Manager John McNamara said. "It's definitely not over."

Cincinnati starter Tom Seaver allowed just two more singles before leaving the game for a pinch hitter.

"Tom felt he could go on, but it was the last half of the eighth inning and we needed one run," said Cincinnati Manager John McNamara. "We had Tom Hume, who has done the job for us all year."

McNamara said losing the opening game of the series merely meant that "it's down to a four-game series for us."

"It's definitely not over. One team has to win three games," McNamara said.

John Candelaria started for Pittsburgh but left after seven innings because his side started bothering him. Tanner used five pitchers altogether, with reliever Grant Jackson getting the victory and Don Robinson the save. Tanner was prepared to use more hurlers if he needed them.

"We had everybody warming up," Tannner said. "We would have used (Bert) Blyleven if we had to win the ballgame."

McNamara said the Reds have the character to come back from the loss and beat Pittsburgh in its home park.

"This ballclub has got to show somebody something, coming from 10 games behind on July 4 to win the Western Division," McNamara said. "They tried to do it in the 11th inning. They didn't throw in the towel even with two outs."

Concepcion started a last-gasp rally with two out in the 11th, singling to right field. Foster followed with a walk and Robinson came in to pitch to Johnny Bench.

Bench walked to load the bases, but then Robinson struck out Ray Knight to end the game.

"When I was in the on-deck circle, I was thinking how great it would be if John got on and I came up with the bases loaded," Knight said.

"I guess you fantasize this situation all your life. I wasn't nervous. I felt really good and I wanted to be in that situation."

Knight and his teammates had one more chance to even things at home today before moving on to Pittsburgh for the remainder of the series.

Reids Hope To Lead Jaguars To Title

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer
FARMVILLE — During the preseason, Farmville Central Coach Gene Brewer was asked to explain his team's penchant for winning.

"I think it's a combination of things," Brewer said. "But I'd rather not go into them."

Unlike their coach, Donald and Ronald Reid, who have had a lot to do with Farmville's success the past three years, are more than willing to talk about the Jaguar's winning tradition.

"We're just a bunch of guys who want to win," Ronald Reid said. "During practice, we play just like it was a game. We hit each other hard."

Farmville wins, brother Donald said, "cause of the good coaching and because we have a lot of fine athletes."

The Reids should know about fine athletes, 'cause they're two of the finest in the state.

"They're the heart of our football team," Brewer said. "We have a lot of good athletes, but, because of the positions they play they're the heart."

"Most of the time, we go as they play."

If the Reids' play parallels Farmville's, as Brewer said, then they must be playing awfully well.

The Jaguars, 4-0 overall and 3-0 in the conference, opened the season with a solid 19-0 win over Clinton, then beat C.B. Aycock, 35-0, followed by a 40-7 triumph over Greene Central. Last week, the Jaguars extended their unbeaten string in the ECC to 26, with a devastating 61-6 win over North Pitt.

This week, Farmville travels to D.H. Conley and two weeks from now they battle North Lenior. If the Jaguars get by both of those conference encounters, as is expected, they will journey to Stanhope to take

"I know there are a lot of questions being asked about (Virginia recruit) Ralph Sampson. We know he's a great talent and will be a find player. But I'm really glad that he's said he's committed to go pro in two years. I don't think he'll be as good a player in college because of that, however."

Tacy said that N.C. State has the talent and depth to be a threat for the title, and Clemson proved last year that it is capable of beating anyone. "Maryland always has the potential, and they've got the best rebounder in the conference in Buck Williams."

"Georgia Tech will give people trouble simply because of their deliberate style of play."

Of his own team, Tacy said that he feels the Deacons will be improved. "I'm worried about the status of Frank Johnson (out with a broken foot for six to eight weeks). Alvis Rodgers is a great athlete, and we expect better things from him this year."

The speaker for the next meeting of the club, set for October 16, will be former North Carolina running back Mike Voight.

Rose Racers Win Meet

Rose High School's cross-country team slipped past Wilson Fike, 27-28, in a three-way meet here yesterday. D.H. Conley finished a distant third with 82 points.

Harry Williams of Rose continued his winning streak, finishing first in 14:34. Teammate Kenny Smith was again second in 14:55.

Tony Batts of Fike led a group of four Golden Deamons over the finish line in 14:59. He was followed by Ricky Hills in 16:13, Perry Morrison in 16:20, and Tony Hills in 16:22.

Rose's Vincent Murphy was seventh in 16:34, and Chip Little was eighth in 16:35. Rose's Teddy Gartman passed two Fike runners in the last 100 yards to finish ninth in 16:36, and give Rose the win. Mike McGee of Fike was tenth in 16:40.

Other Rose finishers included Blair Smith, 13th in 17:17; Larry Talbert, 14th in 17:24; Chris Jones, 16th in 17:56; Skip Hill, 19th in 18:04; Robert Stancill, 21st in 18:17; and Dan Scharf, 22nd in 18:18.

Conley runners included: Stony Speller, 12th in 17:15; Chris Branch, 24th in 19:12; Mike Joyner, 25th in 19:34; Ogden Wiggins, 27th in 20:47; and Lawrence Green, 29th in 23:34.

Rose, now 9-2, travels to Rocky Mount on Thursday.

Parents Take Bus

The Rose High School Booster Club is sponsoring a Parents Bus to the Rocky Mount football game on Friday.

The bus will leave the parking lot adjacent to the practice field at 6 p.m. Friday for Rocky Mount. Cost per ticket is $4. This does not include any food, nor does it include the price of the game admission.

"Anyone wishing food should bring their own," Bill Cobb, in charge of the project said.

Persons interested in riding on the bus should contact Cob at 758-0170 prior to 6 p.m. Thursday.

ORIOLE MORALE
BALTIMORE (AP) — Outfielder Pat Kelly, a solid pinch-hitter and part-time flychaser, says morale on the 1979 Baltimore Orioles is the best he has ever seen in his lengthy big league career.

"We have little dissension and almost no animosity. There are no cliques in the clubhouse. There is a winning attitude in Baltimore. Manager Earl Weaver sees to that."

Spikers Split

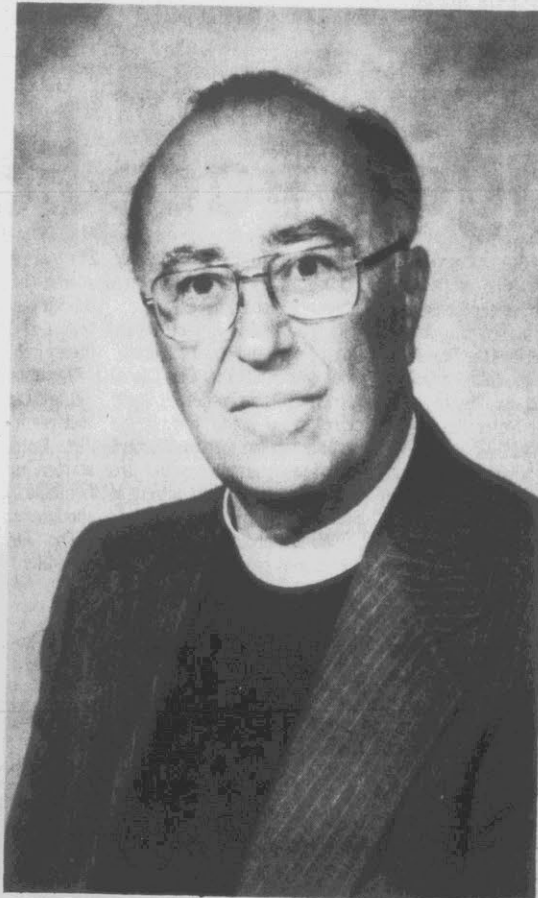

CHAPEL HILL — The University of North Carolina defeated East Carolina yesterday in volleyball, while the Pirates came back to upend Appalachian State University.

The Pirates lost to the Tar Heels 15-4, 15-2, but came back to defeat the Mountainers, with the Pirates taking the first game, 16-14, Appalachian taking the second, 15-2, and ECU, behind junior college transfer Sharon Perry, taking the third, 15-11.

"The team was pretty inconsistent and it's something we're going to have to work on," Coach Alitta Dillon said.

ECU travels to Columbia, S.C., this weekend to play in the South Carolina Invitational.

Herzog's Firing To Foster Rumors

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — By refusing to say why he fired Whitey Herzog, the most successful and popular manager in the 11-year history of the Kansas City Royals, Joe Burke does two things, both bad.

He invites speculation and wild rumor. How dark and hideous could Herzog's sins have been? Surely, no manager who wins 410 games and three division championships in 4½ years while building immense popularity among players, fans and media could be released on a whim.

Or could he? That's bad thing

No. 2. For Joe Burke's sake, the Royals better not waste any time regaining the American League West title they just yielded by three games to California.

If they don't win next year, it will be commonly accepted that Herzog was fired because owner Ewing Kauffman just didn't like him. Attendance plummets and Burke comes off as a bungling milquetoast.

Herzog, in the meantime, will no doubt be holding down a good job with a good organization somewhere. His record as a manager and as a front-office executive with the New York Mets is excellent.

"I accept full responsibility for the decision," Burke said Tuesday.

Moments before, a pale, shaken Herzog had emerged from Burke's office to tell waiting newsmen, "They're not going to renew my contract."

"Only time will tell whether I was right or wrong," said Burke. "I know the fans will disagree because they don't know the reasons why I did it. And the reasons, I will not discuss."

primarily because Kauffman seemed to want it that way. Several times the past two years the self-made millionaire has upbraided Herzog in the presence of others. And one of Kauffman's chief gripes is supposed to be the manager's tendency to criticize players publicly.

Burke is one of the most courteous, genteel men in baseball. But this hasn't quelled constant criticism from media and fans for failure to land the two or three key players the team's needed to reach the top.

"It's easy for people to criticize who don't know the facts," said Burke. "I know that by not saying why I did it, I'm opening myself wide open for a ton of criticism. But, I'm not going to do anything to hurt Whitey Herzog, the players or the organization. I'll take the brunt of the attack."

Burke insisted there "was no forced pressure from ownership." But few players even believe this. The strained relationship between the two has become common knowledge,

Jags, 'Dogs Tied In Prep Poll

By The Associated Press
Burlington Williams and Farmville Central, both season-long challengers for the top spot in The Associated Press high school football poll, are tied this week, and a defending state playoff champion has gained the lead in another class.

The Burlington and Farmville squads, each 4-0 and close competitors for the number one spot in Class 3-A, are tied with 101 points apiece this week. Williams, No. 1 last week, received five first-place votes to Farmville's four, though Farmville had equal overall strength in balloting by a statewide panel of sports writers.

Defending North Carolina 2-A playoff champion Maiden has overtaken Jordan-Matthews and move into the poll lead. Maiden had four first-place votes and 102 points, with Jordan-Matthews receiving six top votes and 100 points. Maiden was second last week.

In Class 4-A, Scotland County maintained its No. 1 status, with Hickory remaining second, Northern Durham third and Kannapolis fourth.

One new team cracked the Top Ten this week. Wilmington New Hanover moved into 10th place after beating Goldsboro 25-6 last week. Goldsboro, fifth last week, fell from the Top Ten.

Two new members are listed among the Class 3-A leaders.

East Henderson moved into eighth and Western Guilford took ninth. They replace Canton Pisgah and Waynesville Tuscola, a pair of western North Carolina schools that lost over the weekend.

In Class 2A-1A, Jamesville and Central Davidson are ninth and 10th, among the leaders for the first time. They replace Cherokee and Randleman, each a loser over the weekend.

Volleyball Results

SW Edgecombe 2

Ayden-Grifton 0

PINETOPS — Southwest Edgecombe swept the first match and took two of three in the second to defeat Ayden-Grifton in volleyball yesterday.

The Cougars beat the Chargers 15-13 and 15-0 in the opening match.

In the second match, Ayden-Grifton won the first, 16-14, but Southwest Edgecombe came back to win the next two, 15-11 and 15-9.

The Chargers, now 2-2, play host to Southern Nash Thursday.

Farmville 2

North Pitt 0

BETHEL — Farmville Central swept the first match and then took two of three in the second to defeat North Pitt yesterday in volleyball.

Farmville won the opening match, 15-4, 15-6, behind Gail Harris, who had 12 points, and Peggy Dwyer, who added 10. North Pitt was led by Tammy Purvis with six.

In the second match, the Jaguars won the first game, 15-4. North Pitt took the second, 11-9, while the Jaguars came back to win the final game, 14-12. Farmville was led in scoring by Gladys Ellis with 14. The Panthers were led by Debbie Briley with six.

North Pitt, now 0-6, plays again Thursday at D.H. Conley.

D.H. Conley 2

G. Central 0

SNOW HILL — Defending champion D.H. Conley swept two matches from Greene Central yesterday, remaining unbeaten in Eastern Carolina Conference play.

In the first match, Conley won the first game, 15-1, then came back for a 15-6 win in the second game. The second match saw Conley take consecutive wins, 15-6 and 15-10.

The win left the Valkyries with a 6-0 overall mark and a 4-0 league record. Greene Central is 4-2 both in league and overall play.

"Conley was just too strong," Coach Tim Corbett said. "They were completely dominate in the match."

Nationally ranked North Carolina defeated East Carolina in women's field hockey yesterday by a score 7-1.

Ann Donio scored four of North Carolina's goals as the Tar Heels rolled to an easy victory over undermanned East Carolina. Sue Jones scored the lone Pirate goal.

"We were outthrust today by a fine team, in fact, North Carolina is the best team we've played so far," Pirate coach Laurie Arrants said. "We'll have to work on our basics before we take on Catawba this Saturday."

The game will be played at 11 a.m. on Bunting field, adjacent to the baseball field.

Summary
North Carolina 4 3-7
East Carolina 0 1-1
North Carolina scoring: Goals, Ann Donio 4, Kim Knickerbocker 1, Libby Mathiason 1, Mary Stewart 1.
East Carolina scoring: Goals, Sue Jones, 1.
Records: ECU 0-2.

Knights In Soccer Loss

Friendship Christian spotted Greenville Christian a 1-0 lead yesterday and then roared back to defeat the Knights, 10-1, in a soccer match.

George Griner scored Greenville Christian's lone goal, coming early in the first half. But Friendship came roaring back, scoring five goals in both the first and second halves.

Rodney Perry and Eric Daniel scored two goals in the opening half while Kyle Daniel added another. Perry and Eric Daniel added two more goals in the second half while Kyle Daniel chipped in the final goal.

Greenville Christian, now 0-2, travels to Rocky Mount Friday to take on Falls Road Christian School.

Taxes Help The Special Interests

By DONALD LAMBRO
WASHINGTON (UPI) — The government pours hundreds of millions of tax dollars into thousands of lobbying organizations, "public interest" law firms, associations and other special interest groups across the country.

Little is known about how these organizations and associations spend the money. They are rarely, if ever, examined by Congress even though the funds often are used to influence legislation and policy ranging from food stamps to the Equal Rights Amendment.

Many of these organizations are establishing tax-exempt spin-off groups — so-called educational and research foundations through which the funds are spent.

United Press International conducted a five-week investigation into this federally financed world of private groups and organizations.

UPI discovered:

—Grants and contracts for low-priority or dubious projects and studies going to rich and influential organizations with multi-million dollar budgets.

—Political organizations such as the Americans for Democratic Action are recipients of federal funds.

—Law firms are among the biggest beneficiaries of these funds, in some cases spending the funds in behalf of the actual recipient group.

—The federally-paid staffs of tax exempt research groups often provide advice, data, and other support to the lobbying arms of the parent groups.

The extent to which this federal funding is supporting lobbying is not clear, but the evidence suggests that tax dollars often are indirectly supporting the lobbying programs of many special interest groups.

Federal law states that it is illegal for federal funds to be used "directly or indirectly" to influence a member of Congress in his legislative duties.

Among the biggest recipients of federal funding are the U.S. Conference of Mayors, which has a total budget of nearly $3 million; the National Governors Association (NGA), whose total budget is over $3.5 million; and the National League of Cities which receives over $2.7 million annually in government grants and contracts.

The Mayors got more than $1.6 million in federal funds during fiscal 1978; the NGA will get close to $2 million this year.

The Mayors' well-appointed suites cover five floors of a modern office building near the White House. They employ 95 persons requiring a yearly payroll of $938,490 in addition to $738,000 in overhead costs.

Spokesman Eugene Russell says federal contracts are performed by the tax exempt and federally supported Research and Education Foundation. Lobbying is handled by a separate staff paid out of dues from some 600 cities.

But executive director John Gunther says the organization's lobbyists — who have pushed legislation from ERA to more federal aid for the cities — frequently make use of the research staff.

"We do get a lot of information out of it which we use in our lobbying efforts," Gunther, the group's chief lobbyist, said. "It enlarges the capacity of the information we have at our disposal. Sometimes, he added, "The lobbying staff meets with the foundation experts" in the preparation of congressional testimony."

Here is a sampling of the contracts these organizations receive:

—$75,000 to the National League of Cities for a film on urban conservation.

—$90,000 to the Mayors to hold seminars on local financial management and other HUD-related topics.

'Big Apple' Is Further In Debt

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City sunk $183 million further in debt during the fiscal year ending July 1, according to a report by special state deputy comptroller Sidney Schwartz.

The city's net debt was $11.3 billion — $6.2 billion in city obligations and $5.1 billion by the Municipal Assistance Corp., the agency created by the state to borrow money for New York when investors would not buy city bonds during the 1975 financial crunch.

Farm Goods Sold Direct To City Folk

By SANDRA MICHIOKU
SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI) — Farmers are cashing in on bargain-seeking "city folk" who are flocking to California farms, looking for a chance to fight inflation and taste freshly picked fruits and vegetables. "It's really good business," said Betty Dietz, 33, an executive secretary of 10 years who, with her husband, decided to farm 30 acres off the Garden Highway in Sacramento. "Many of the people who come to the farm to pick their own fruits and vegetables have lived on farms before and want to get back into the act."

The Dietz farm is among several hundred listed in a farmer-to-consumer booklet distributed by the California Food and Agriculture Department. The guide has proven so popular that 30,000 copies were distributed in less than three months and 800 out of a second press run of 15,000 were spoken for before the printing.

Since the program began three years ago, 24 certified farmers' markets have been established from Eureka to Los Angeles with more than 560 growers involved. There also are an estimated 400 "you pick" operations out of 40,000 farmers in the state where people go into the fields to harvest their own produce.

"Savings at the farmers' markets are about 30-40 percent," said Jeff Jacobs of the Food and Agriculture Department. Corn may sell at 11 or more ears for $1, strawberries for 30 cents a pound and ripe, red tomatoes for 35 cents a pound.

Regulations for the $180,000-a-year state program were changed recently to allow local governments to help operate farmers' markets which usually are weekend operations.

Modesto city officials helped to launch a farmers' market which now has as many as 35 growers bringing their produce to town every Saturday. In Stockton, a market near the Crosstown freeway opened with 18 growers but has burgeoned to 41 growers and 6,000 customers during weekends.

"We're behind eastern states where they've had this direct marketing longer and in greater quantity," Jacobs said. "In California we're more commercially oriented and distribution systems are geared towards commercial markets. But this is slowly changing."

He said Californians also are more likely to see bargains at the markets and fields.

"You'll find easterners going to the farms to look for fresh produce, generally not at the bargain prices we find here. But easterners don't seem to mind since the produce they see on their supermarket shelves has usually travelled 3,000 miles — from California — and might not look as good as we're used to seeing."

Under regulations of the direct marketing program, farmers must be certified to sell fruits, nuts and vegetables. Limitations include sale only by the farmer, family members or salaried employees and produce must be more than 90 percent free of mold, decay and damage. Violations are misdemeanors.

Jacobs believes, one reason more farmers are turning to direct marketing is competition with agribusiness.

"There might be a few farmers with under 20 acres of pears, which is too small for a major producer to buy from. I don't mean to put canneries in a bad light because it makes economic sense to deal with large growers. So direct marketing is a good outlet for small farmers."

Charge Slavery On Brazil Farm

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Five plantation workers charged on nationwide television they and other laborers were kept in slavery and beaten on remote farms in southeast Brazil.

The workers exposed their backs to the cameras Monday during a news program to show scars and bruises they said came from frequent whippings "for trying to escape."

News reports said police rescued 17 adults and nine children early Saturday after a woman escaped from a plantation and made her way to the state capital 75 miles away to file a complaint. The workers said more than 30 persons are still virtual slaves on other farms in the area.

People Generally Are Eating Less, But Still Grow Fatter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eat less and grow slim? Not necessarily so, scientists warn.

As a matter of fact, Americans as a group are eating less and growing fatter at the same time, concludes an Agriculture Department study released Tuesday.

The catch seems to be that while we are consuming fewer calories, we also are getting less exercise.

The findings are based on a survey of information compiled from 1965 to 1977.

"If further analysis of distributions within groups does not explain what is going on, then we probably have to conclude that there have been rather large decreases in physical activity — shifts to more sedentary work — that the national jogging kick has not balanced," said D. Mark Hegstead, administrator of the Agriculture Department's Human Nutrition Center.

Hegstead told a conference on nutrition and the American food system that the decline in calorie consumption is making it more difficult for some segments of the population to consume the "recommended daily allowances" of nutrients.

"Indeed, a 'well-balanced' diet by most definitions will not meet the recommended daily allowance for several nutrients," he said.

He said researchers are beginning "to see some response" to advice to reduce consumption of fat, sugar and salt and to increase consumption of fruits, vegetables and grain products.

But he said the increase in obesity and higher levels of sweeteners and alcohol were discouraging.

In another dietary development, scientists raised the possibility Tuesday that the nation's eating habits could be linked to cancer.

That warning came during a hearing by the Senate Agriculture subcommittee on nutrition. Dr. Arthur C. Upton, head of the National Cancer Institute, told senators the agency will begin studying that possibility, and said some cancer-causing substances already have been found in smoked and grilled meat.

Upton suggested that one way to help avoid cancer would be to keep weight down while eating fruits and vegetables and low fat, high fiber foods.

The subcommittee's chairman, Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., said the government has put too much emphasis on finding cures to cancer rather than ways to prevent the disease.

Dr. Stanley J. Dudrick, chairman of the surgery department at the University of Texas medical school, testified that "the inadequate attention to nutrition must rank as one of the most shameful shortcomings of American medicine today."

Say Secrecy Was Upheld

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Wake District Attorney Randolph Riley said Tuesday the state Department of Revenue did not violate state law when it released the corporate tax returns of 87 Northampton County businesses to county officials this year.

Riley said that although complete tax returns were released by the state, the state Secrecy Act was not violated since only authorized county officials and the taxpayers themselves had access to the returns.

The Wake District Attorney's office often handles cases involving state agencies based in Raleigh.

A group of county businessmen, the Northampton

County Committee for Good Government, charged that when the county had requested property tax information, the Revenue Department sent complete tax returns. Those returns listed revenue, profits, salaries and amount of tax paid. State officials said the release was accidental.

Riley said he based his conclusion on preliminary results of a State Bureau of Investigation inquiry into the charges against revenue officials. State law allows release of information from tax returns to county tax officials concerning a business' assets and inventory for property tax purposes.

Counselor Advises Sex Education Begin Early

By MARY ELLEN HASKETT
BALTIMORE (UPI) — Susie is 13 years old and pregnant. She knows little about contraception and believed she was too young to become pregnant. No one at home or school told her differently.

"No matter what happens to that girl, she won't get approved sex education until she is 17 or 18," says Grace Sparks, a Planned Parenthood counselor. "The average age of menarche (beginning of menstruation) is 12½ — that is fifth or sixth grade. No school I'm aware of has sex education classes that early."

A study at the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health suggests contraceptive information given pre-teens might help reduce the number of illegitimate teen-age pregnancies. There are more than 1 million such pregnancies a year in the United States.

"Our findings clearly point to the need to reach young girls with birth control information and services not only before the first pregnancy, but before first intercourse," said the physician-researcher, Dr. Laurie Zabin.

Her study found 22 percent of all adolescent first pregnancies occurred before the girl had experienced a month of sexual intercourse. For girls who begin sexual relations in their teens, the probability of a first pregnancy within two years is about 35 percent.

If the girls never use contraceptives, the probability they will become pregnant is 66 percent — lowering to 20 percent if they use contraceptives occasionally and 10 percent if they always use contraceptives.

Ms. Zabin also found girls who begin having sex before age 15 have the highest risk of getting pregnant early, apparently because they are least likely to use contraceptives.

She said sex education should precede first sexual intercourse so it should be taught when children reach puberty, about ages 11-13.

"We're barking up the wrong tree if we continue to think of value-laden sex education (lectures about morals)," she said in an interview. "The risk is so early, we have to get the basic human physiology to them at the same time they learn about chickens."

She said her study found young girls who got pregnant because they used no contraceptives often believed they were too young to become pregnant or they believed it was the wrong time of month to conceive.

A Gallup youth survey has concluded only 3 of 10 adolescents aged 13 to 18 have had any instruction on birth control in school. It also found 60 percent of the teen-agers and their parents believe the youths should have access to contraceptive services and information.

"Whatever you do (in providing sex education), you have to do it young," Ms. Zabin said. "Don't let this serious problem be hampered by the moral baggage" of parents who oppose the teaching of sex education at an early age.

She also said teen-age women who conceive soon after beginning sexual activity are likely to become pregnant again while still in their teens.

Teen-agers seldom seek contraceptive help until they have been sexually active for a year. The younger they are when they begin to have sex, the longer the delay in seeking contraceptives, her study showed.

The study questioned 544 girls, ages 18-19, nationwide. They were asked when they began sexual activities, when they began using contraception and whether they became pregnant.

About 60 percent said they began sexual intercourse in their teens.

"Knowing how high a risk of pregnancy young girls experience early in their sexual careers does not make it easy to solve the problem," Ms. Zabin said. "Some 11-and 12-year-olds may seem young for information on birth control and access to contraceptive services, but some of them need it."

She said the information is basic human physiology and should not be labeled sex education.

"Why is it sex education to learn about our own body?" Ms. Zabin asked. "By labeling,

A Freshman Senator Is Making Bid

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — After eight months as a U.S. senator, with no measurable legislative record and no other particular accomplishments on the national level, Larry Pressler believes he is about ready to be president.

With little money and less organization, the 37-year-old South Dakotan has decided he is the new face the Republicans need to beat Jimmy Carter or Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

His principal qualifications appear to be an impressive academic record, an attractive appearance and two political upset victories in rural, sparsely populated South Dakota.

Pressler, a convivial and handsome bachelor who is a regular on Washington's social circuit, has made no significant mark with his legislative record, and is identified with no particular issue before the Congress.

Yet his mere presence in the Senate has given his ambitions visibility in a year of wide-open Republican presidential politics.

Pressler's candidacy provides a further clue that the Watergate scandals which drove Richard M. Nixon from the presidency may have a direct impact on American politics for a long time.

Pressler was first elected to Congress as a House member in 1974. Nixon had resigned a few months before and a "throw the rascals out" mentality cost many incumbents, including Pressler's opponent, their jobs.

He ran against the advice of many GOP professionals in South Dakota who said he was too young and inexperienced.

Pressler ignored the advice then and again in 1978 when he went after the Senate seat vacated by Democrat James Abourezk. Again, he successfully defied the conventional political wisdom.

Now, Pressler is hearing the same sentiments from skeptics of his presidential run. His reaction: "We'll let the chips fall where they may."

A second Watergate legacy is the likelihood that Pressler's run for the White House will be financed partially by taxpayer funds.

In reaction to campaign abuses — mainly in Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign — Congress established in 1974 a system of matching federal funds for presidential campaigns.

If Pressler, a former Rhodes scholar and a Harvard Law School graduate, can raise $5,000 in campaign contributions in each of 20 states, the government will match that dollar for dollar.

Pressler said he hopes to raise the $100,000 necessary to qualify for matching funds by January.

Some political observers say Pressler's candidacy may indicate it has become too easy to run for president. It remains to be seen whether Americans will take his candidacy seriously.

you created a climate in which it is objected to." She said school is the right place to provide the information young people need to know about reproduction and contraception. "Both boys and girls need this basic education," she said. "It's not a matter of girls alone, but they are the ones who will suffer."

Reputation Of Lloyd's Due Quake

LONDON (UPI) — Lloyd's of London made its American reputation by prompt payment of millions of dollars of claims from the 1906 San Francisco earthquake.

It is used to big losses. Dropping $25 million on a sunken supertanker here or $50 million on colliding jumbo jets there is taken in stride.

Recent computer leasing losses are on a more mammoth scale but no one doubts Lloyd's will survive as it has done for 291 years.

Lloyd's is not a company, not a corporation, but an association of independent men. It says of itself: "Individually we are underwriters, collectively we are Lloyd's."

Insurance policies with the famous Lloyd's brand — policies on ships, buildings, against delay in opening a world's fair, on an actress's bosom, on anything and almost everything — are not issued collectively by Lloyd's but individually by "members."

Each of the 17,300 members must show instantly available assets of $225,000 and contribute $22,500 to a central fund.

Each one backs his insurance policies with every penny he owns.

Unlimited liability is too risky even for rich men. So members take shares in 400 "syndicates," whose professionals decide what risks to accept at what premium and split profits and losses among syndicate members.

Most members are silent partners. Syndicates do all the work. When one syndicate acts, others clamor to share the fun and the premium profits.

Lloyd's policies generate premium revenues estimated at $4 billion a year from which losses have to be paid. The estimated loss of $225 million on the computer leases will wipe out profits for a year.

Using the computer lease coverage as a case in point, Lloyd's maintains risks have to be taken if insurance innovation is going to happen.

Since computer leasing was a brand new class of business it was impossible to be precise about the outcome, and the underwriters went more on their judgment of the professional competence and integrity of the leasing companies than on any knowledge of computers or the leasing business, Lloyd's says.

Lloyd's final accounts are drawn up only after a three-year delay, to allow for delayed claims and complex paperwork. Thus most computer leasing losses, charged to 1977, will not be tallied fully until 1980.

Meanwhile, fierce debate has broken out within Lloyd's over whether computer leasing policies broke Lloyd's own rules.

Some experts maintain these policies were, in effect, direct financial guarantees — and Lloyd's has had strict rules against such risks since 1936.

This is one question being investigated by a seven-man group peering for the first time into every nook and cranny of Lloyd's.

This committee — three outsiders and four Lloyd's men — is making what one report called "the first major in-house attempt in 290 years to shed light on Lloyd's mysteries."

It is taking a hard look at Lloyd's methods of self-policing and self-regulation, which have been a matter for much pride in the past. It is studying the way disputes between members are settled, how Lloyd's committees are composed, the way the 16-member governing committee is elected.

In the computer leasing debacle it wants to know why no one raised the "financial guarantees" question earlier, why Lloyd's vaunted safeguards and review procedures raised no warning flags.

Ask Early OK On Executions

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Gov. Bob Graham has been asked to sign death warrants 30 to 45 days ahead of a scheduled execution to avoid unnecessary delays from federal courts.

Attorney General Jim Smith made the request in a letter Monday, saying judges now issue stays to study claims brought by inmates' attorneys because the warrants come only a few days before an execution is scheduled.

Graham has signed five death warrants since May. Four convicted killers won federal court stays. John Spenkink died in the electric chair May 25.

American In Paris Today Is Fading

By ROBERT KAYLOR
PARIS (UPI) — Americans in Paris are going home.

"Gay Paree" attracted so many American expatriates for such long-term stays that their community included pillars of the literary and art world, their own schools, hospital and even an American Legion post. Now they are becoming an endangered species in France.

The weakened dollar, inflation, taxes, tougher French policies on students and job seekers and a changed cultural environment have all taken their toll.

Last year the number of U. S. residents registered with the French government dropped more than 7 percent to about 26,000.

Some see signs that this was the first step in a major exodus of Americans.

"What is clear is that the American community has changed," says one long-time resident. "It's not what it used to be. Do you see the Hemingways coming here any more to get started under the eye of a Gertrude Stein or Ezra Pound? You don't."

For years, until well after World War II, Paris meant the good life at relatively low cost.

"Now there's been inflation of 10 percent or more for the last 10 years," says American lawyer John Fredenberger. "It's gotten terribly expensive."

Living costs are 50 percent higher than many U.S. cities. There was a considerable boost last year in American income tax rates for citizens overseas. That plus the lack of Medicare benefits abroad decided a significant number of retired Americans in France to pack up and go home.

Now a new law that makes investment income in the United States liable to French taxation has added to uncertainty and jitters in the American community, which has had a special place in France ever since Benjamin Franklin was the first U.S. ambassador.

Americans in Paris built two churches of their own, a school and a college, clubs and civic organizations. There is even an American chapter of Alcoholics Anonymous.

But as the base of long-established residents — and American-staffed corporate donors — on whom they depend shrinks, they are finding it tough to survive.

The hospital has had financial difficulty. The American school's U.S. student population has dropped below 50 percent. Two thirds of the American cathedral's members are non-Americans.

The American Aid Society is faced with a 25 percent increase in the number of indigent young Americans seeking financial aid to go home, while the donations on which it runs have dropped about one-third.

American companies have replaced large expatriate staffs with locals, partly because it's good business in today's dynamic Europe but also because they were paying American employees large living allowances made necessary by the sagging dollar and ever-growing tax equalization benefits on these allowances.

"We had 40 Americans here nine years ago," says an American executive of a big U.S. corporation. "Today I'm the only one."

In the literary and artistic world, rich and established names still live in France — Mary McCarthy and James Baldwin among them — but the community that once surrounded such figures is largely gone.

It's partly because struggling beginners can't afford Paris, partly the perception that the city is not as intellectually challenging as it was 20 years ago.

The Left Bank cafe where Ernest Hemingway spent rainy afternoons writing over an inexpensive glass of wine is still open, but a meal for two people there will now run around $80.

The dollar that bought Hemingway 12 French francs in the 1920s and his post-World War II followers around 8 francs now gets around 4. La Rotonde, a cafe once popular with students and less affluent literary and artistic hangers on, now has a clientele that is French and unmistakably middle class.

Henry Pillsbury, an actor who runs the American Students and Artists Center, has watched Americans in its membership drop from 25 percent-plus to less than 5 percent.

A Juvenile Crackdown?

NEW YORK (AP) — Until the mid-1850s, 12-year-olds were sentenced to death in England. In America, anyone older than 14 was tried as an adult. Before that, the Puritans labeled as criminals children who were rude or disobedient to their parents.

But the Western world moved into the 20th century with new concepts of children's culpability. Laws were passed to mete out justice "in the best interests" of a miscreant child. They were sent to reformatories and other remedial programs.

Now the pendulum is swinging back with a series of violent and well-publicized crimes by teen-agers — a 13-year-old sitting on a Harlem stoop casually guns down a 16-year-old passerby; a 15-year-old murders a policeman during a Maryland robbery; two teenage inmates are murdered in a California Youth Authority reformatory. More and more teen-agers are committing heinous and senseless crimes.

So New York, once considered the nation's most liberal state, has a new law allowing 13-year-olds to be tried as adults. Traditionally liberal Massachusetts is about to enact a law requiring juvenile repeaters to be tried as adults, and Illinois is cracking down on multiple offenders. California has increased the prison term for youthful murderers and gives prosecutors more leeway in prosecuting juveniles. Even relatively crime-free Iowa has a new criminal code with mandatory sentences for violent criminals that can be applied also to juveniles.

The irony is that juvenile crime appears to be decreasing after rising for nearly two decades. According to FBI crime statistics, arrests nationwide of children under 18 increased 283 percent between 1960 and 1975 — from less than 600,000 to almost 1.7 million. In 1977, the last year for which there are final reports, arrests were down to 1.24 million.

Criminologists attribute the drop to fewer teen-agers — children born during the post-war baby boom have reached adulthood. But they're at a loss to explain the upsurge in teen-age violence. The most recent FBI figures show 48 percent of those arrested for violent crimes — murder, rape, assault — were under 18.

Some experts think the crack-down stems as much from the publicity as from the crimes themselves.

Nonetheless, experts from the liberal to the hard-line have agreed for years that changes were needed in juvenile justice laws still operating from a base in early 20th-century reform morality. Some kids were literally getting away with murder, while others were jailed for offenses that wouldn't be crimes if committed by an adult.

The old system was based on the premise that juveniles were reformable. It was a revolving door — arrested youngsters followed a cycle of warnings, probation, foster homes, community care and reformatories.

A majority of those arrested — 80 percent by some estimates — are what the system calls "status offenders." A kid is caught scrawling graffiti on a subway train; another's a petty thief, a truant, a runaway, a schoolhouse brawler, a beer drinker or a pot smoker.

The new approach draws a sharp distinction between petty offenders and kids guilty of serious crimes.

"What's happening is that people are saying 'there are good kids and bad kids,'" says Paul Strasburg, head of New York City's new Juvenile Justice Agency. "They say 'what we're going to do is take the good kids out of the system altogether, and then we're going to take the bad kids and lock them up.'"

Variations in juvenile justice nationwide remain striking. In New York City, a 17-year-old arrested for mugging and killing an 81-year-old woman is released on $500 bail. (He fled, was caught in North Carolina and was eventually convicted of second-degree murder.)

In New Jersey, a youth without prior record is sentenced to a year in prison for possession of marijuana. Locked up with adult convicts, he becomes schizophrenic, is transferred to a mental institution. The state Supreme Court overturns his conviction, two years too late.

In Los Angeles, two youths 14 and 16, are arrested for shooting and killing a teen-ager at a party. At their arraignment, they joke about the killing. The worst they faced was three years in a reformatory (since lengthened to five). In upstate New York, a 16-year-old gets 30 days in jail for stealing half a dozen apples from an orchard. It's his first offense.

New York's old law required that anyone under 16 be tried in Family Court. Now 14- and 15-year-olds must be tried as adults for serious felonies — robbery, assault, homicide — and 13-year-olds can be tried as adults for murder.

"Nobody's entirely happy, but this is better than we had before," says District Attorney Mario Merola of the Bronx. "Thirteen individuals covered by this law have committed 15 homicides in the Bronx since September. I'm not talking about dreamland, I'm talking about urban problems."

California has extended its three-year maximum murder sentence for juveniles to five. Most youths under 18 are still tried in Juvenile Court, where sentences are lighter, but a new law gives district attorneys discretion to transfer 16- and 17-year-olds to adult court.

Washington State revised its juvenile code in 1977, taking offenders whose crimes are uniquely juvenile, like underage drinking, from the criminal-justice system altogether. They are referred to psychological counseling or community-service programs. The age limit for juveniles was left at 18, but those committing harsher crimes are treated more like adults. The law gives judges less leeway in sentencing, now based on a point system that considers the seriousness of the crime and the youth's prior record.

In Massachusetts, where the juvenile age remains 17, the legislature has approved a bill allowing second offenders to be treated as adults. The law can be applied to first offenders in violent cases.

Iowa's new juvenile code, the result of a six-year study, removes status offenders from contact with adult offenders and gives judges more leeway in dealing with petty offenders. But, a judge may still order a youth to be tried as an adult, subjecting the offender to a new criminal code with mandatory sentences for crimes involving a deadly weapon.

Under Pennsylvania's new law, where the age limit is 16, status offenders are removed from the criminal justice system and county jails must be emptied of all juveniles by Dec. 31.

Washington, D.C., has maintained its 18-year-old limit, with a prosecutors' option to try 16-year-olds as adults for heinous crimes. Last year, a board was set up to track the careers of juvenile repeaters. Like Washington state, the district has a point system used primarily to keep track of the most serious offenders.

Despite reforms and experiments here and there, most criminologists believe there's a long way to go before a reasonably uniform and successful system of juvenile justice emerges nationally.

A study by the VERA Institute of Justice compared juvenile crime in New York's borough of Manhattan with suburban Westchester County and with Mercer County, N.J., which includes Trenton. It found fewer repeaters in Mercer and concluded the reason was consistency — one juvenile judge has been there for 17 years.

In one of Los Angeles' highest crime areas, a central Juvenile Justice Center processes all arrests. In a city where justice is often of the assembly-line variety, it's more like a small town court. "Certain systems ... preclude people from being human," says Judge David V. Kenyon. "This one doesn't."

Six counties in Florida use arbitrators rather than judges to handle less serious cases. "If you go through the court system, you're labeled a delinquent," says Gene Minietta, an arbitrator in Orlando. "So you start feeling like a delinquent and you start acting like a delinquent. That's not what we want."

Both juvenile and adult authorities agree on another deterrent: the certainty of punishment. That's behind many of the mandatory sentence laws and the apparent success of a Chicago program called UDIS — Unified Delinquency Intervention Service.

UDIS involves third- and fourth-time repeaters. It takes them through the next step of the revolving door — community placement and foster homes. But it adds a simple message: "You can't do this any more."

Diamond Dozen

WIN

Here Are Lowe's 12 Best Values. Pick The Number 1 Value & You Could Win A $2,500 Diamond Ring From Tiffany's of New York

Here's What You Could Win

Grand Prize: Beautiful & brilliant! A lady's Diamond Ring from one of the most renowned jewelers in the world: Tiffany's of New York. Worth over $2,500.00 in total retail value! And it's being given away by one of the world's most renowned building supply stores: Lowe's. Local Prize: Each local winner will receive a Casio Electronic Calculator/Alarm Clock valued at $19.97 retail, and will be eligible for the Grand Prize Drawing to determine the winner of the lady's Diamond Ring from Tiffany's.

Stop by, enter the contest and take advantage of these terrific values. It's an exciting time at Lowe's — in more ways than one!

Here's How It Works

Pick the product on this page that you think is the #1 Value at Lowe's. Entry blanks are at every Lowe's store. Enter each time you visit. On 10/20/79, each store will hold a drawing. The first entry drawn in each store that correctly names the #1 Value (as determined by our marketing staff) will win a Casio Electronic Calculator/Alarm Clock. Each local winner's entry blank will then be sent to Lowe's Headquarters, where the Grand Prize Drawing will be held on 10/23/79. No purchase necessary. You do not have to be present to win. Winners will be notified. You must be 18 or older. Void if prohibited by law. Deadline for entry is 10/20/79.

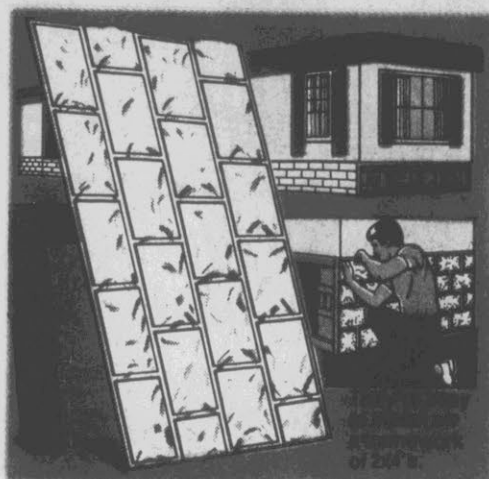

Contest Ends October 20th, 1979

Executive Also Runs Own Farm

By MARK D. FRANK
NAPLES, N.Y. (UPI) — Nine years ago, advertising executive John McMath "couldn't cope" with the pressures of the ad agency grind. He "became sick all the time," developing an addiction to sugar and alcohol, particularly martinis.

Determined to get away from it all, the New York City native decided to move from Rochester to an abandoned farm just southwest of Naples in the state's Finger Lakes, grape-growing region.

"A friend said I'd feel better if I changed my diet," the 50-year-old McMath said. "So I started a garden and completely altered my eating habits."

"I thought I'd be just helping myself by having a little garden, but I decided to educate the public so that they could see they have alternatives in their diet," McMath said.

So in 1972, McMath founded the Wild Winds Organic Farm as a not-for-profit learning and research center. Incorporated five years ago, Wild Winds is one of the country's only organic demonstration farms.

Nestled in a valley on 500 acres, Wild Winds is "like a little village," according to McMath, who still maintains an apartment in Rochester, where he is employed by an advertising agency.

McMath's "village" includes gardens, farms, forest, nature trails, streams and ponds, a large wildlife population, crafts buildings, fruit stands and food shops. Fruit experimentation is done in conjunction with the New York state Experiment Station in Geneva.

To get a first-hand education, visitors to Wild Winds can discover natural food delicacies at the farm's gourmet eatery, the Soup Kettle Restaurant.

Cold gazpacho soup, salads, crepes and omelets are specialties, but also on the menu are entrees such as veal madeira, beef and burgundy, and filet mignon with bearnaise sauce.

"When you promote natural food, people think of it as bland, plain-looking and unexciting. It was a financial disaster at first, but we've changed our approach," he said. "If we merchandise with a beautiful platter it excites people who normally aren't into nutrition."

"We try to appeal to all sorts of people and teach them that food without chemicals can be delicious and very attractive, too."

For a quick bite, the barbecue pavilion, a fast food restaurant, offers Wild Winds brand chemically-free hot dogs and hamburgers. For desert, there are banana splits served with honey ice cream and sundaes served with fresh fruit toppings.

Wild Wind Hots, developed several years ago by McMath, are nitrite-free. The hamburgers, made of choice grade beef, are extended with oatmeal and egg and served on buns baked from whole wheat flour and sweetened with honey.

Wild Wind Hots, which look like old-fashioned country sausage, are 100 percent meat, preservative-free and flavored with honey and spices.

The Hots and recently-developed nitrite-free bacon are sold in supermarkets and some health food stores throughout New York, New England, Delaware and Pennsylvania. Stores in several Rocky Mountain and western states are expected to begin carrying the products later this summer.

Finding Wild Winds bacon and hot dogs is an education for the consumer, too. Since the products are perishable, they are kept in the store's freezer, rather than in the refrigerated section.

"The meat industry says it can't be done (without chemicals)," McMath said. "I say you can if you treat them as perishables."

The hot dogs have been served in 12 school systems in the Rochester area, after McMath suggested that school officials use a bit of psychology with the youngsters.

"I told them not to push the hot dogs as nutrition or else the kids wouldn't eat them," he said. "After they eat them, we tell them, 'By the way, these are good for you.'"

More than 100 varieties of vegetables and fruit are grown at Wild Winds and McMath said everything at his "little village" is done with "the environment and energy in mind."

"We're trying to show that it's economically feasible to develop land along natural or ecological lines," McMath said.
