Six Plead Guilty To Pot Counts

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Six defendants charged in connection with a July 23 raid on a mobile home here where 8,500 pounds of marijuana were found, entered guilty pleas in Pitt County Superior Court yesterday, following two days of conferences leading to the negotiated pleas.

The hearing of motions in connection with charges against four other defendants in the case was scheduled to get underway late this morning, before Judge Henry L. Stevens.

The six defendants who entered pleas yesterday were charged with possession of marijuana and/or conspiracy to possess marijuana with intent to sell and deliver, after Greenville Police, agents of the State Bureau of Investigation, and federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents raided a house trailer owned by a Greenville Police Department sergeant.

The men who pled guilty yesterday and the charge to which they pled include: Ernesto Reyes, conspiracy; Eddie Perez, conspiracy; James Robert Bohanon, possession; Daniel Lee Guinand, conspiracy; Armond Modesto Abreu, conspiracy; and Manuel Antonio Baerga Garcia, conspiracy. Reyes is a resident of Las Vegas, Nev., while the other five defendants are Florida residents.

Under the plea bargaining arrangement, Bohanon would receive a five-year split sentence, with four months active and the remainder on probation, as well as a $5,000 fine for possession. He could have received a maximum of five years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

The conspiracy charge to which the other defendants pled carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison.

Under the negotiated plea, Garcia was to receive an 18-month jail term and fined $10,000; Reyes would receive one year in jail and a $10,000 fine; Perez and Abreu would receive two-year prison terms and $10,000 fines; while Guinand would be fined $5,000 and given a five-year split sentence, include three months active and the remaining time on probation.

Under the agreement, all other charges, if any, against the six are dismissed.

In addition to the jail terms and fines, each of the defendants agreed to forfeit any interest in the $114,307.25 seized by officers when they were arrested.

The money, ordered by Judge Stevens to be turned over to the SBI for use in drug investigations and prosecutions, included $99,800 found in a suitcase in one of the cars used by the defendants, as well as $14,507.25 taken from the defendants individually.

Utilities Commission Agrees To Modifying Of Employee Benefits

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Members of the Greenville Utilities Commission, at a workshop session yesterday, gave tentative agreement to changes in the commission's employee benefit plans which would make the GUC benefit package and the benefits offered by the City of Greenville to its employees, equal.

Formal action is expected at the November commission meeting.

Under the proposal, the commission would pay a maximum of 4.5 per cent for longevity where it is now paying a maximum of 7.5 per cent to employees with over 20 years service.

However, under the proposed plan, commission employees, just as city employees, would suffer no loss in pay. The plan calls for a pay adjustment, which would add what an employee would lose in longevity pay, to their regular check. The commission plan would be effective with the longevity payment on December 1, 1980, with salary adjustment for "no-loss" to begin on December 5, 1979.

The city plan will begin with the December, 1979 longevity payment. Two checks will be issued to each eligible employee... one a reduced longevity check, and the second a "no-loss" check, with salaries being adjusted after that date to provide no loss in pay.

"Taking it out of longevity and putting it into base salary is what you're doing, GUC director Charles Horne told board members.

"You're transferring it from longevity to base pay... it will cost the same amount of dollars," City Manager Ed Wyatt noted, "...putting it out front," where it ought to be.

Commission members also gave tentative approval to paying the full cost of life insurance for commission employees to bring the plan in line with city policy.

City employees have the total cost of their life insurance policy paid by the city.

Cost of the change for the commission would amount to about $7,000 per year. At present, the commission pays only one-half the cost of life insurance.

Another policy change given tentative approval yesterday was a proposal to adopt a $25 deductible hospitalization policy for commission employees, and increase the commission's share of family coverage premiums to equate city and commission employee benefits.

At the present time, the city has a $25 deductible policy and city employees pay about $22 per month for family coverage because of good group loss experience.

Commission employees now have a $50 deductible policy and pay about $42 per month for family coverage because of poor group experience.

Third Quarter Rebound By U.S. Economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy rebounded from a second-quarter slump to grow at an annual rate of 2.4 percent from July through September, the government reported today.

The figure from the Commerce Department was stronger than expected and added new fuel to the controversy about whether the nation's seventh recession since World War II was under way.

Much of the growth was attributed to a surge in sales, which had suffered from April through June because gasoline lines inhibited shopping and a shortage of crude oil depressed trade, said a Commerce analyst who asked not to be identified.

The third-quarter growth, which some analysts say could be a temporary plateau before the nation's output again turns down, followed a second-quarter decline of 2.3 percent at an annual rate.

Had the third-quarter figure also shown a drop, the statistics would have lined up well with the traditional definition of a recession: two consecutive quarters of declining output.

The third-quarter growth figure was the strongest so far this year, though still weaker than the 3.5 percent expansion in the third quarter of 1978.

And it occurred, in good part, because Americans saved a mere 4.1 percent of their earnings — the lowest savings rate in more than 25 years, Commerce analyst Adren Cooper said.

Is the economy in recession?

"We don't know from this," Cooper said. "If you look at the figures, gross national product is back almost to the level of the first quarter."

Inflation adjusted gross national product stood at $1.43 trillion, about $2 million higher than the first quarter level, the report showed.

Consumer purchases from July through September rose 1.1 percent to $324.8 billion, more than recovering from the 0.7 percent decline of the previous quarter, the report indicated.

Trade surged 47 percent to $19.4 billion, again more than making up for the 22 percent drop in the second quarter.

Although the report indicates that inflation slowed from an annual rate of 9.3 percent in the first two quarters of the year to 8.4 percent in the third quarter, the income of Americans suffered.

Income adjusted for both inflation and taxes was down 0.3 percent in the third quarter to $990.3 billion. It had fallen 0.4 percent in the preceding quarter.

"Real income is down, yet there's a strong recovery in consumer spending," Cooper noted. "Consumers didn't save. They just spent most of their money."

Before adjustment for inflation, the value of the nation's goods and services stood at an annual $2.39 trillion in the third quarter, up at an 11 percent annual rate from the second quarter.

The statistics are likely to be heightened, rather than depressed, debate over whether there is a recession.

Many experts, including Treasury Secretary G. William Miller, argue that the July-September data is a "false signal" and that the economy remains in "a recessionary mode."

Others, including Walter E. Hoadley, chief economist of the nation's largest bank, the Bank of America, say the real decline may still be ahead.

Hoadley told a gathering Thursday that, "If the third quarter is positive, we're not in it (a recession) and haven't been in it but we have been doing a lot of worrying about it."

But pinpointing the start of a recession is an academic nicety.

There is little debate among analysts that the nation is in for its seventh recession since World War II.

Whether it started in March or in October, analysts in and out of government say that by the end of the year business activity will have slowed dramatically.

The Carter administration forecasts that nearly 1 million Americans will lose their jobs by the end of next year.

Data Resources Inc., of Lexington, Mass., the nation's largest private forecasting firm, believes the downturn will take an even worse employment toll.

Gerald Ford All But Out

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Gerald R. Ford today took himself, all but irrevocably, out of the race for the 1980 Republican presidential nomination.

During a visit to the Capitol, Ford read a statement to reporters in which he said he has "made a firm decision not to become an active candidate."

While the statement was along the same lines as disclaimers Ford has made repeatedly over the past year, the emphasis was much stronger and appeared designed to discourage further attempts to draft him for the nomination.

Questioned by reporters, Ford described his statement as "definitive."

Ford has been under some pressure from Republicans actively seeking the nomination to take a position on whether or not he would become a candidate.

Previously, when saying that he was not a candidate and didn't intend to become one, Ford always added, with emphasis: "I never say never."

"I do not plan to participate, or to encourage others to participate on my behalf in the delegate selection process," he said today. "I have no intention of entering or permitting anyone else to enter my name in any of the upcoming primaries, nor will I be a personal contestant in any state convention."

The former president, who was defeated by Jimmy Carter in 1976, said he would reconsider his position "only if my party felt it was essential for me to do so, or if unforeseen circumstances developed."

Ford said he regarded the possibility of a deadlocked Republican convention next July as "very remote and I do not expect that to happen."

Pressed to elaborate on the circumstances that might prompt him to enter the race, Ford replied: "It's unforeseen. You define it. I can't."

He said the decision was "totally done by myself" and was not forced upon him by other Republican leaders.

Asked if his wife, Betty, had influenced his decision, Ford said: "Betty and I always have had a working relationship."

Mrs. Ford is known to oppose his entering the race.

Downtown Los Angeles Is Shaken Again Today

EL CENTRO, Calif. (AP) — Four earthquakes jolted the San Bernardino area 50 miles west of downtown Los Angeles this morning while Gov. Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. was seeking federal assistance for quake victims in the Imperial Valley.

The shakers prompted several calls to police, but there were no reports of injuries or damage.

The main quake, measuring 4.1 on the Richter scale, hit at 5:22 a.m. It was followed by a 3.1 quake at 5:28 a.m., a 3.3 shock at 5:31 and a 2.7 tremor at 5:35, said Dennis Meredith, a spokesman for the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

The biggest quake "shook the whole building," said Lt. John Powers from the Ontario police station.

Police in Montclair and Chino also radioed that they could feel the shock, Powers said.

It was the third series of quakes in five days in Southern California. On Monday, a quake measuring 6.5 on the Richter scale caused millions of dollars worth of damage and dozens of minor injuries in the Imperial Valley, 200 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

On Tuesday, two quakes several hours apart were centered in Santa Monica Bay, west of downtown Los Angeles, but there was no damage.

In El Centro, the largest community in the Imperial Valley, two dozen buildings — most in the downtown business district — have been condemned. Damage to 18 others was described as "moderate that could become severe" by city building inspector William Jones.

"We're estimating damage (in the city) at about $6 million now and that's a very conservative figure. We've only looked at 10 percent of the city, if that much," Jones said.

"We haven't even gotten out to the mobile home parks that were devastated," Jones said.

Jones said the $6 million estimate almost certainly will double before safety inspections are completed, probably next week.

Federal Judge Refuses Override UNC Ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge in Washington has refused to override a fellow federal judge in North Carolina and deny federal money to North Carolina's traditionally white public universities, pending resolution of a desegregation dispute.

To grant the request of civil rights activists would unnecessarily play "havoc" with the university system, U.S. District Judge John H. Pratt said in his ruling Thursday.

At stake is more than $80 million a year.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare is pressing North Carolina to take steps to remove what it calls the vestiges of segregation in the system. Five of North Carolina's public colleges are predominantly black.

In North Carolina, U.S. District Judge F.T. DuPree has ruled that HEW could go ahead with an administrative procedure that could lead to a cutoff of funds. But he blocked any partial withholding of money in the interim.

The civil rights activists wanted Pratt to order all federal funds for the 11 mostly white universities held in escrow until the case is resolved.

It was Pratt in Washington who originally ordered HEW to obtain an acceptable desegregation plan from North Carolina and he retains supervision over the case.

Pratt, in a four-page opinion, said:

"In this case, only part of North Carolina's desegregation plan is holding up approval by HEW of North Carolina's entire plan. In such a posture, we do not believe that the Constitution compels the total suspension of funding with the consequent havoc that would far exceed the irreparable injury that Judge DuPree found would result from even a limited deferral of funding."

He added that sanctioning "a limited deferral would be to give our blessing" to an attack on DuPree's order.

WATER IN GAS

Recently my husband and I were traveling from Greensboro back home to Greenville. We stopped in Raleigh and bought gasoline. About 20 miles down the road this way, we discovered something was wrong with our car. We limped into Wilson and had to have it towed and stored and get another way home. It was confirmed that there was water in the gas. We're having to have about $200 work done on the car now. Isn't there something we can do to hold the station responsible and also to prevent this from happening to as many other customers of this station as possible? S.S.

Hotline contacted the Consumer Standards Division of the N. C. Department of Revenue in Raleigh. According to Duane Scott, supervisor of the Gasoline and Oil Inspection Laboratory within the division, you should call the lab at 733-3246 and give the name and location of the station.

"We have 12 chemists stationed at various locations throughout the state," Scott said. "If we receive a complaint and we investigate it and find that there is a mixture of water and gasoline being dispensed at a station, we will help the complainant obtain help with the problem in regard to his vehicle. This is part of our public service. Anything that is within reason, including going to court, we'll try to do."

Scott pointed out that water contamination of gasoline is usually something that is not intentional on the part of the station operator. It's usually caused by old, faulty equipment, he said.

Edison Left the Light On

The next time somebody reminds you that you left the light on, it might be worth remembering that the light bulb's inventor, Thomas Edison, did the same thing. One hundred years ago today, Edison first demonstrated his electric light. Edison's bulb contained a wire, or filament, made of carbonized thread, ordinary sewing thread that had been burned to ashes. When electricity passed through the filament, its temperature increased, so that it glowed and gave off light. Edison let the bulb burn all night and all the next day. It finally burned out when he increased the voltage early in the afternoon of October 21.

DO YOU KNOW — What metal is used as a filament in today's electric light bulbs?

THURSDAY'S ANSWER — South Africa's system of racial separation is known as apartheid.

Investigation Reopened

NEW YORK (AP) — Authorities have reopened investigations of the "Son of Sam" killings to learn whether confessed murderer David Berkowitz had an accomplice during his year-long killing spree.

Officials in North Dakota already are investigating the connection between Berkowitz and a man who apparently killed himself there. Those same officials said they have been in frequent contact with New York City investigators.

New York City sources who asked not to be identified said Thursday that Queens District Attorney John J. Santucci has ordered the case reopened. They said he assigned two assistants to check information that the North Dakota suicide victim may have been a Berkowitz accomplice in one or more of the six so-called .44-caliber killings.

Santucci's office refused official comment.

The man believed to have committed suicide was John Carr, 31, of Yonkers, son of Sam Carr, a neighbor of Berkowitz. Berkowitz claimed demons transmitted orders for him to kill through Sam Carr's dog and signed letters to police and newspapers "Son of Sam."

John Carr died Feb. 16, 1978, at Minot Air Force Base, N.D.

Brezhnev Apparently Forced To Bed, But Moscow Denies Death

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — "With rumors like that, he should live for 100 years," says a Communist Party official who denied a new torrent of Western reports that Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev had died.

Moscow's morning newscasts today made no mention of the foreign rumors or the denial, made to The Associated Press Thursday by a party official, who declined to be identified.

The broadcasts headlined an account of the visit to Budapest, Hungary of Andrei P. Kirilenko, a close Brezhnev aide, and reports of a Syrian-Soviet communique following President Hafez Assad's visit to Moscow.

Western diplomats noted that it was unlikely Kirilenko would have left Moscow if a crisis was imminent.

Earlier this week, the Kremlin acknowledged that Brezhnev, who turns 73 on Dec. 19, has been forced to bed by an unspecified illness. Word of the ailment surfaced when Brezhnev failed to meet with Assad, the Soviet Union's closest Arab ally, during the Syrian's fourday arms-shopping spree that ended Thursday. Arab diplomats said Kremlin officials told them Brezhnev was ill and had not intended to slight the Arab leader.

Brezhnev was last seen in public Oct. 8 when he returned from a visit to East Berlin.

Unconfirmed reports of his death or serious illness began turning up Thursday in New York, Washington, Rome and Helsinki. They were the latest in a long series of such reports that have recurred with growing frequency over the past five years.

"We have heard the rumor," spokesman Hodding Carter told reporters. "We have checked with Moscow and we have no information to substantiate it."

The latest question about Brezhnev's health appeared to be linked in part to a report from Baltimore that three eye specialists from Johns Hopkins hospital had gone to Moscow for "possible treatment" of an unidentified Russian patient. Moscow sources said the patient was a top Soviet leader who underwent surgery last Sunday.

The sources would not name the patient, but said he was a member of the 13-man ruling Politburo. There has been no firm word that Brezhnev might be suffering an eye ailment.

Brezhnev, a barrel-chested 200 pounder, appeared palid and pasty-faced during his visit to Berlin, marking the 30th anniversary of East German's Communist regime.

Automatic Shutdown

SOUTHPORT, N.C. (AP) — Inspectors from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said today they have found no indication of radioactivity in the area of the Carolina Power & Light Co. Brunswick nuclear plant following an automatic shutdown early this morning.

A spokesman for the NRC said personnel from its Atlanta office were dispatched to the site at 12:51 a.m. after the unit 1 reactor shutdown due to increased levels of radioactivity inside the main steam line.

James P. O'Reilly, director of the Atlanta office, said the NRC resident inspector at the site reported that all safety systems operated as designed during the shutdown.

O'Reilly said low levels of airborne radioactivity in the reactor building resulted in a precautionary evacuation of that structure but that CP&L plant did not deem it necessary to initiate a site emergency.

"The NRC concurs in this action," said O'Reilly. "There was no indication of any increase in radioactivity off the plant site."

The NRC said unit 1 will remain shut down until the cause of the problem is established and corrective action is taken. Unit 2 is continuing to operate, the spokesman said.

Nuclear Power Forces Delivering A Message

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Women from Charlotte gathered at various meetings Thursday to hear the message that nuclear power is safe and advantageous and the fuel of the future.

The meetings were among about 2,000 events scheduled across the country as part of Nuclear Energy Education Day, the pro-nuclear brainchild of Nuclear Energy Women (NEW).

Eighteen women met for coffee at the home of Jan Lee, wife of Duke Power President Bill Lee. The invited guests were representatives from the community, local government and the media who came to hear Durham nuclear chemist, Dr. Connie Kalmbach, talk about the positives of nuclear power.

NEW, an organization primarily of professional women in the nuclear industry, has about 2,000 members nationally. A Charlotte chapter, formed two years ago, has about 50 members. Other Carolinas chapters are in Raleigh, Columbia, Clemson, S.C. and Barnwell, S.C.

Charlotte City Council member Pat Locke spoke strongly in favor of nuclear power after the meeting. "I'm a pro-nuclear advocate," she said. "I just don't think there's any other alternative at this point in time."

Toni Griffin, a neighbor of the Lees at their Lake Norman home, was enthusiastic about the coffee idea.

"I think if we had more meetings like this - of women like this, to educate them - then that would be a real help," she said.

"Fear, that's the big problem. But education of the public is what we really need," (Dr. Kalmbach) said. "I think that's true. 'Cause most people are just afraid, but they don't know what they're afraid of."

Carrying her message of the safety and need for nuclear power occupied Dr. Kalmbach, 35, for the rest of the day.

After the coffee, she was on WBTV's Top o' the Day program with Mike McKay.

In the afternoon, she met at Queens College with six of the more than 70 members of the Charlotte Area Clergy Association.

Fossil fuels, Dr. Kalmbach told the ministers, need to be freed for use by the developing countries. Solar is too far down the road.

"If we try to change society and cut our energy consumption by 10 or 20 percent, I think the economic hardship is going to be like nothing ever seen, except maybe during the Depression," she said.

But several clergy members said they didn't agree with the assumptions behind Dr. Kalmbach's talk.

"The mind set and value style is that technology can cure our ills," observed the Rev. Harold Wright, pastor of the Dilworth United Methodist Church.

"The assumption is that the main thing we're concerned about is maintaining our lifestyle," objected the Rev. A.G. "Pete" Peery Jr., associate minister of Myers Park Presbyterian Church.

"I'm not really sure we can avoid nuclear power. I'm just afraid of rushing at it."

OUR DOCTRINAL STANDARDS—Our first and final rule for all doctrine, faith and practice is God's Holy Word, the Bible. We believe the Bible is the written Word of God, without error in the original manuscripts, and of infallible and divine authority in all matters of faith and practice. Therefore, all of our teaching and preaching is from the Bible.

OUR CHURCH'S VISION—All of our teaching and preaching is centered in the Bible. We believe God's Word provides the answers to today's situation, just as it did 2000 years ago. Just as man breaking God's laws disrupts the ecological balance, so man breaking God's spiritual laws upsets man's relationship with other men and God. Submission to God's Word, the Bible, is the key to resolving these problems.

Fla. Setback For Kennedy

MIAMI (AP) — Backers of a move to draft Sen. Edward Kennedy as a presidential candidate have suffered a 3-1 loss in the Democratic caucuses in Dade County, once considered a Kennedy stronghold.

Results released early today gave President Carter a 147-41 victory over the Massachusetts Democrat Edward Kennedy in balloting for delegates to the Florida Democratic Convention in November.

Kennedy forces disputed several delegates, but not enough to change the dimensions of the Carter win.

Carter will have a 525-275 edge over Kennedy if Broward County results turn out in the expected 115-1 split for Carter. It was uncertain when tabulation of Broward's ballots would be completed.

Statewide, AFL-CIO slates took 51 delegates and 27 were uncommitted.

"A month ago, we were being urged to write off Dade County and not even campaign here," said Jay Hakes, Carter's campaign coordinator. "I think that what this shows is that when we start competing for the real delegates, that we've got a lot of strength in a big state that's going to be crucial."

Delegates chosen in the county caucuses will be joined at the convention in Petersburg on Nov. 16-18 by 839 other delegates who are picked by party leaders and elected officials and are expected to favor Carter.

Miss Boone, Mr. Rogers Wed In Candlelight Vows

AYDEN — Anita Diane Boone and Barry Gardner Rogers, both of Ayden, were married Tuesday at 7 p.m. by the Rev. Bruce Jones assisted by the Rev. Raymond Gaskins. The candlelight ceremony took place in the Liberty Free Will Baptist Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Boone of Ayden. The bridegroom is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Rogers.

A program of nuptial music was presented by Larry Jones, who played and sang "O Perfect Love," "The Wedding Love Song" and "Wedding Prayer."

The chancel was illuminated by a central brass candelabra of 15 candles with flanking seven branch floral candelabras adorned with white chrysanthemums, white pom poms and greenery. The couple knelt on a brass prie-dieu decorated with white satin bows like those decorating family pews.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of white organza over white peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in scalloped chantilly lace beaded with pearls. The empire bodice was overlaid with French chantilly with appliques beaded with pearls at the waistline. The full sheer bishop sleeves of French chantilly were trimmed with the scalloped lace at the cuffs. The modified A-line skirt and attached chapel length train were accentuated with cascading tiers of organza edged in the scalloped lace. She wore a chapel length mantilla edged in chantilly lace to complement her gown and carried a colonial fan shaped bouquet of white and yellow chrysanthemums enhanced by satin bows and German statice with satin ribbon.

Mrs. Kay Cahoon of Ayden was honor attendant and wore a formal length gown of fall green polyester double knit in a sundress styling with matching bolero jacket. She wore a matching wide brimmed hat in fall green. Bridesmaids were Miss Judy Carol Sutton and Mrs. Jenny Sutton of Ayden. Their formal gowns of seafoam green polyester knit were styled similar to that of the honor attendant as were their hats. They carried long-stemmed yellow chrysanthemums with white satin streamers.

Miss Malinda Buck, cousin of the bride, was flower girl. She wore a white formal gown styled similar to that of the bride and wore a matching white wide brimmed hat with yellow and white flowers attached. She carried a miniature bouquet identical to the bride's.

Joe Rogers of Ayden served his brother as best man. Ushers were Jeff Jones and James Hayward Buck, cousin of the bride, both of Ayden.

The mother of the bride wore a paprika formal gown of polyester double knit trimmed in white scalloped lace. She wore a corsage of white miniature carnations with white satin ribbon. Mrs. Herman Stocks, aunt of the bridegroom, was presented a corsage of white miniature carnations.

Mrs. Elmer Faulkner, grandmother of the bride, and Mrs. Leflie Dail, great grandmother of the bride, were remembered with whiter white carnation cor-

Her Kisses Tell On Him

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'm a man, over 70. My wife died suddenly several months ago, and I found out that I just couldn't get along without female companionship.

As a young man I suppose I had the usual number of girlfriends, but I haven't courted for 50 years, and am rather rusty.

I recently asked a woman in my age group to accompany me to a variety of social engagements. She was most agreeable. She turned out to be a warm, lively, affectionate companion, and I must admit that I am crazy about her!

The problem: Her kisses. Abby, this woman's kisses shake me from top to toe. I don't know why. I hate to call it "technique" or suggest that she has developed her kissing purposely, but she must be conscious of the effect her kissing has on males. (She is a widow.) I can't learn from her because I don't know what she is doing. I only know that this woman's kisses drive me crazy. All the kisses I have had before are just not in the same league. She is gentle. She is loving, but I am glad that not all women kiss the way she does. There must be a happy medium.

OVERWHELMED
DEAR OVER: Are you complaining? While kissing is basically natural, techniques are developed. This woman is giving you a message. She's probably crazy about you, too, so don't dismiss it as a routine "tongue-in-cheek" matter.

DEAR ABBY: ASKING IN ALASKA says, "Kids who live together before marriage don't deserve wedding presents, so they shouldn't be sent any." And you replied, "It won't work. Most parents (and relatives) are so glad that the kids finally made it legal, they send gifts anyway."

Well, here's how I handle it: Out of respect to the parents, I send a gift. I buy the first low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk I see, have it gift-wrapped and sent. (If there's a shower, I do the same.)

I figure the gift is as appropriate as the wedding. And if Mr. and Mrs. Sleazy Morals have any perception at all, they will get the message that their wedding is no more meaningful to me than it is to them.

REALISTIC IN MASS.
DEAR REALISTIC: Since you send a gift "out of respect of the parents," how much "respect" do you think a "low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk" will convey? You'd be ahead to save your time, money and "respect," and send nothing.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter about the man marrying a girl who was six months pregnant with another man's child: that's my son you are talking about, and I am so very proud of him.

He was engaged to this girl, and her brother-in-law took advantage of her. My son went ahead and married her, advancing the wedding date so he could take care of her.

He's claiming the child as his own, and as far as I'm concerned, that child will be treated exactly like all my other grandchildren!

PROUD GRANDPA
DEAR GRANDPA: Congratulations—for more reasons than one.

Incumbent Has An Advantage

North Carolina is entering an entirely new era when the incumbent governor can seek a second term.

In the past a governor could not run for a second consecutive term of office. That had the disadvantage that the governor could not complete some of the long range projects which he instituted. Often some of the projects dearest to a past governor were quickly dismantled by his successor.

Gov. Hunt will be the first governor who will be eligible to run for re-election under a state constitutional amendment. He, of course, has not announced that he will; that would be premature.

But there is hardly a person who is knowledgeable about North Carolina politics who has any doubt that the governor will seek re-election.

It is now also virtually a certainty that former governor Robert Scott will challenge Hunt. Both have loyal followings in North Carolina and such a race will be a titan struggle.

If observation of the situation in other states where governors have been free to seek re-election tells us anything, it is that a governor in office has a tremendous advantage in such a race. Since this will be a new political situation for our state, the governor's race in 1980 will be closely watched.

Underdeveloped To Be Hurt Worse

The chairman of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries says the "price of oil has to go up."

Since OPEC is meeting in mid-December, the world quakes at the words.

Further increases in oil prices will hurt the United States and the industrialized nations. . . but they will hurt worse the underdeveloped nations.

THIS AFTERNOON

Don't Turn Back: Hunt

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Aides of Gov. Jim Hunt are happily whistling the tune of a vogue disco piece in which the lyrics echo repeatedly "Sharks to the Left; Sharks to the Right!"

Those helping Hunt gear up for a historic bid to win a second term in the governor's office say they fully expect opposition to be well financed, well run and effective.

"Which makes it all the more interesting", confides one who concedes that running government on a daily basis is actually quite boring; that only the adrenalin-pumping excitement of a campaign keeps lots of Hunt's people in harness.

How will the governor respond to a coalition of party-switching Beverly Lake supporter, the Republican machinery, the Congressional Club, cross-party finances and machinery of U.S. Senator Jesse Helms, and the Fundamental Christian reformists headed by The Rev. Daniel Carr and his statewide Association of Christian Schools.

Strategy is much discussed of how to meet that right-wing conservative bloc already seeking to paint Hunt as an ultra-liberal puppet of the National Democratic Party.

Slogans

Hunt's people figure the conflict lends itself to ready-made campaign slogans: Don't Turn Back; Don't Deny Progress; On The Move, among them.

The attack from the right will swirl around complaints of state and federal governmental programs which, funded by massive amounts of tax dollars, are wasteful, brimming with political patronage, encourage welfare loafing while destroying individual initiative and merit, but most importantly, rip at the fabric of the home and the family; foundations of our society.

The conservative buzzwords will be abortion, sex education, humanism in the public schools, welfare, and North Carolina's New Generation program.

Gov. Hunt, his critics charge has allowed federal-directed programs into existence which will take children from the home and raise them on different paths. Public health, day care, the schools, and other programs are seen as part of this conspiracy.

Hunt's answer will prove brief and direct: the goal is to get kids early and fix their problems so they can grow into happy, self-reliant citizens. Besides, New Generation programs aren't designed for children with successful parents and happy homes, but for the thousands who don't get food, love, direction, health care, stimulation at home.

BILL NOBLITT

How serious is the challenge from the right? Gov. Hunt is taking it quite seriously. He recognizes that the fine political hand of Jesse Helms is at work, and that hand has directed campaigns which twice have put Helms into the Senate where his prominence as a spokesman of conservatives increases regularly.

Helms

Helms' against-the-odds wins result largely from Tar Heel working people who cross party lines in the election booth; registered Democrats . . . they vote for Helms, a Republican.

Will They do that for Lake? Will Fundamental Christians follow the lead into a conservative reformations? Can Hunt be tagged an ultra-liberal? Will Kennedy edge out Carter for the nomination? How strong is the Conservative Revolution sweeping this state and nation?

Those and dozens of other questions lurk beneath the just-rippling surface of the upcoming race for governor. The waters will bubble as the weeks go by.

Meanwhile, Hunt leans on his own dirt-farm, Freewill Baptist roots in rural Wilson County; his rapport with and efforts for the less fortunate; and Democratic solidarity to go into the campaign expecting to win.

Loan Sharks In Trouble

NEW YORK — One of the results of the new 14 1/2 percent prime rate is that it is now cheaper to borrow money from the Mafia than it is from the Chase Manhattan Bank.

For years the Mafia prided itself on charging the highest interest in town. But thanks to the Federal Reserve actions of the past few months, the loan shark rates have become a bargain.

"Arnold the Adjuster," one of the major loan sharks in New York City, has mixed feelings about this turn of events.

"We naturally are delighted to be able to compete with Bank of America on their terms," he told me, "but the Cosa Nostra always prided itself on charging more vigorish (interest) than anybody else. People came to us when the legitimate banks turned them down. Now they're coming to us before they go to the banks. If we refuse to loan them the money then they have no choice but to throw themselves on the mercy of the Irving Trust Co."

"I should think you'd be delighted with this state of affairs," I told him.

"We would, except that in the past our loan department has dealt with individuals and if they couldn't pay we had sure-fire methods of collecting from them. Now the large corporations have heard our rates are cheaper and are coming to us for funds. How do you break the legs of the telephone company if they fail to pay you back?"

"I see the problem," I told him. "It must be difficult to go to IBM and say 'If we don't get the money by Thursday, you'll never see your grandmother again.'"

ART BUCHWALD

"There are other difficulties," Arnold said. "Our main source of loan money came from Mafia families who didn't know what to do with their hidden cash flow. Now they can buy legitimate treasury notes for higher interest than we are permitted to charge. So they've been withdrawing their deposits to buy bonds, thus drying up our money supply. At the same time they get very angry when the loan shark division doesn't show a profit."

"It must be killing you," I said.

"Loan sharking isn't what it used to be," he told me. "Our costs are going up every day. Our enforcers are demanding more money, the price of baseball bats has gone sky-high, and you have no idea what a bag of cement costs now. We've had to make big cutbacks. Before, if you borrowed more than $5,000 in a week, we gave you a free stolen toaster or TV set. But now you get the money without the gifts, and a lot of people are mad."

"At the same time," I said, "it must make you proud to know that you can undercut the Citibank on what they charge for a loan."

Carter Is Not Silent

By BROOKS JACKSON

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter claims that he is the most open president in history, despite his decision to cut back sharply on news conferences.

Although Carter has a habit of exaggerating his boasts, there is at least a grain of truth in this one. Scarcely a week passes in which the president is not questioned publicly on current issues.

It irks a good many Washington-based reporters that the questioning is being done increasingly not by them, but by non-Washington journalists and broadcasters or ordinary citizens.

Nevertheless, it is hard to imagine a newsworthy subject on which Carter has not recently been questioned in public by someone.

It is true Carter sometimes evades questions put to him by non-journalists. But Carter easily glides by pointed questions from Washington-based reporters, too. No matter how persistent the cross-examination, Carter seldom if ever allows himself to be nailed down when he doesn't want to be.

Non-journalists occasionally ask questions that are at least as tough as those posed by the Washington press corps. A questioner on a radio broadcast reminded Carter of his campaign pledge to cut military spending and asked why he was proposing spending for an MX mobile missile system. "Why don't you try to stop inflation by stopping this unnecessary military spending to put that money to work in the economy?" he asked.

It was last July, after his mountaintop "domestic summit," that Carter formally reneged on his old promise to hold two news conferences per month.

"I have nothing against the White House press corps nor the Washington press," he said (Continued on page 7)

Public Forum

Letters submitted for Public Forum should be limited to 300 words. The editor reserves the right to edit longer letters.

To the editor:

I am full of frustration as I write this letter because an economic crisis is just above the horizon and there is nothing we can do at this point to stop it. I, being poor, stand to lose the most during any inflationary or recessionary period. One question that needs to be addressed is, can the poor handle a collapse of the economy? The answer is NO, because the poor have no capital. The next question is can the poor prepare now to weather the storm on through to better times? The answer to this question is yes. The last question is why are the poor not trying now to become prepared? The answer to that question is that they are not aware of the very hard times ahead.

I get frustrated when I see the poor being told by their religious and civic leaders that things will get better by and by. When by and by gets here, the civic and religious leaders will be the only ones to whom things have gotten better.

Remember the fable of the ant and the grasshopper. I am just a little ant going about my business preparing for a harsh and long economic winter that is as sure to come as is nightfall when the sun goes down. Most of the rest of us are as the grasshopper wasting away our resources, even when the signs of hard times to come are all over the place.

I am a realist. I react to present circumstances anticipating future conditions. However, I feel that my well-being depends upon the well-being of the poor. This is why I write this letter, because I know that a people hungry is a people hostile, and I would want you to have your own than to try to take mine.

If I seem like Noah calling upon others to build their Ark, I am. Consider the fact that if suddenly tomorrow there were no inflation, no recession, and no unemployment, what have you lost by being prepared? NOTHING. But, if the economy were to collapse tonight and you were not prepared? Well, need I say more?

The 2 Great Steps Backward

By GAIL MICHAELS

The two greatest steps backwards in the history of civilization have been the invention of the car and the invention of the telephone. Although these two technological marvels have undoubtedly facilitated the growth of transportation and long-distance communication, they have also encouraged people to view each other as faceless objects. The result is what historians may justifiably label "The Era of Rude."

Of course, the most obvious solution for those of us who are bothered by impoliteness is to quit phoning and driving. But because we have grown much too dependent on these conveniences, most of us vent our hostility by making mental lists of those bores who deserve to be herded onto a one-way space shuttle to Uranus.

Heading my highway list is the road deity. This kind does you a favor by accepting your offer to let him into traffic. He cannot be bothered to smile or raise a hand in thanks.

Then there are the lane switchers. These sweethearts will risk life and limb (yours, not theirs) to get two car-lengths ahead at a traffic light.

No list would be complete without the tail-gater. Have you ever noticed how many tail-gaters have the rear-ends of their cars jacked up? This is symbolic of where their highest level of functioning lies.

But my biggest gripe is the trucker who thinks he's Richard Petty. It is always reassuring to drive down a busy highway at 55 miles per hour in a Toyota, then accelerate to 65 as one of these fellows bears down on me, horn blaring, at 80 miles per hour. I am warned by the knowledge that if, by a miracle, Meg and I survive the accident, I can sue his company.

As much as I detest driving bores, I find telephoning bores more bothersome. I don't know why, but I have never enjoyed jumping out of a bathtub and racing to the phone to hear, "Who is this?"

I am equally annoyed when I answer, "To whom do you wish to speak?" and the caller hangs up with a bang.

But the biggest problem with rudeness is that it's contagious. People who shrug off even minor irritations of modern living want to strike back at bores.

Now I do not shrug off even minor irritations. So I had a few choice words to say when the phone rang while I was trying to repair my Christmas wreath. Needless to say, I wasn't ecstatic when I finally picked up the phone and heard, "I wanna speak to Ethel."

"I'm sorry," I said patiently. "You have the wrong number."

Bang went the receiver. I had barely got back to my linoleum paste and pine cones when the phone rang again.

"I wanna speak to Ethel."

"I'm sorry," I said in a controlled voice. "You have the wrong number. Again."

There was a pause, then the caller said, "Okay. Let me speak to Alice."

"Alice doesn't live here any more."

Bang.

I was waiting when the phone rang a third time. I grabbed the receiver and said, "Look, I am not Ethel, and I'm not Alice, and I suggest that before you call again, you go back to school and learn your numbers!"

"Gail, is that you?"

It was my mother.

WASHINGTON DATELINE

Resurgent Islam's Power

By RONALD WARING

Starting in the 7th Century, the armies of Islam marched to the conquest of the known world. The whole of North Africa and the Iberian Peninsula were soon occupied; Moslem armies fought in Italy and in France. Later the great Empire of Byzantium fell, and Turkish horsemen were hammering on the gates of Vienna.

Now, many centuries later, the world of Islam is immense. With the exception of Israel, it comprises the whole of the Middle East, all of North Africa, much of Africa below the Sahara and East Africa, Afghanistan, Pakistan, the Islamic minorities in India, Indonesia, about one-quarter of all Soviet citizens in the USSR, Turkey, Islamic communities in Bulgaria and Albania, and the millions of followers if Islam who are foreign workers in Germany, France, Spain and Britain. It is claimed that Islam is the fastest growing faith on earth.

Islam is not only a religious faith, but a complete way of life with complex laws governing social, moral, sexual, commercial and other aspects of human behavior, ideology and ethics.

For centuries, Islam has remained dormant. The Islam armies of the crescent were driven from Southern and Eastern Europe long ago. The battle of Lepanto was probably one of the most decisive naval battles of history, and thereafter Islam withdrew into its heartland. This heartland was poor, consisting of countries made up of mountains and deserts and mainly without water. Bypassed by the Industrial Revolution, they had nothing to sell to Europe and no money with which to buy from Europe.

The First World War disturbed the sleeping giant; the Second World War roused him, and it was the sound of oil drilling rigs which did it. The enormously increased demand for oil and petroleum products resulted in the exploration for, and the exploitation of, thousands upon thousands of oil wells, most of which were found in the lands of Islam.

At first, the new-found wealth came slowly and vanished into the poverty of the Islamic lands as water into a parched desert. The Arab nations, together with Iran, were unwilling to risk any sort of confrontation with the Western consumers by raising the oil prices, and a myth arose that if the oil-producing nations greatly increased prices, the oil-consuming nations would not pay them and the producers would be left with no income and large stocks of oil which nobody would buy. In the West it was sincerely believed that the producer nations never would greatly increase the price of oil, and any sort of oil embargo imposed by the producers was utterly unthinkable.

However, encouraged by the Soviets whose ceaseless efforts for Marxist revolution had borne fruit in Algeria, Libya, Iraq and elsewhere amongst the oil producers, the unthinkable happened in 1973. The price of oil rose enormously and with it came recession, unemployment and social disorders in the West — just as the Soviets had foreseen.

But it was not until 1979 as a result of the Iranian Revolution that real disaster came. This result was a serious cut in oil supplies to the West, leading to huge price increases and catastrophic loss of confidence in the United States as a reliable ally.

Strength For Today

DROWNED BY GOLD

A story is told about some immigrants coming to the United States on a sailing ship in the early nineteenth century. One member of the group managed to steal a quantity of gold which — the members had collected in order to get a start in the new world. The thief carefully secreted the gold on his person.

Suddenly a storm came up and the ship began to sink. All of the immigrants except the thief were able to swim to lifeboats and find safety. But the thief drowned, dragged down by his gold.

In all ages, gold has sunk men spiritually and morally. Yet money itself need not be evil. When used for good purposes, it can be beneficial. Money is a good servant, but a bad master.

That is the danger against which Jesus warned in the gospel — not the mere possession of money, but the soul-enervating love of it.

The Pious Puzzlement In The Habits Of Nuns

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

AP Special Correspondent

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) —

After my travels with John Paul II in Mexico, Poland, Ireland and the United States, the subject of nuns and their habits troubles the mind, as it must the Holy Father's.

'Tis a pious puzzlement.

In officially anti-clerical Mexico, where the constitution forbids the wearing of religious garb in public, a few nuns turned out in the habit of their orders on the day the pope arrived. They were probably from the United States or Canada and didn't know the law of the land.

But the next day, emboldened by the presence of their pontiff, hundreds of Mexican sisters ventured outside their convents in the proud uniform of their lifelong vows, some for the first time ever.

By the time the pope got to Guadalajara, there were thousands of priests, brothers and sisters joyously flaunting their religious robes in silent defiance of the government, which wasn't going to do anything anyway to embarrass so distinguished a visitor and, in fact was shutting a benign eye at such unconstitutional behavior.

In Ireland and Poland, both strongholds of traditional Catholicism after centuries of persecution, nuns in their flowing skirts and starched bibs were everywhere, flocking across the squares and parks like pigeons to catch a pontifical blessing or swell a papal procession.

Then came the Immaculate Conception Shrine in Washington, D.C. and the press section view of Sister Theresa Kane standing there at the lectern in a brown tailored business suit earnestly and respectfully lecturing the pope on women's rights in the church.

Although Pope John Paul II has several times implored nuns everywhere to retain a distinctive religious mode of dress, nearly one-third of the 4,000 American sisters who thronged the church to hear the address were in civilians clothes.

Some 50 nuns, although only a handful at first, stood up in silent, sedate protest when he said again, as he had in Philadelphia a few days before, that women were not called by Christ to his priesthood and that Mary had not asked for a place at the Last Supper.

Most nuns, I suppose, want to trade in their crisp white uniforms for a surgeon's green smock. Air stewardesses, no doubt, would prefer the pay that goes with pilot's stripes. Role changing there involves swapping uniforms.

But I wonder if the nuns who want to be priests will disdain the collar for the bright ties and three piece double knots of the mod Jesuits. 'Tis a puzzlement.

WE PLOW THE FIELDS

This beautiful harvest hymn by the German poet, Matthias Claudius, is still sung today by millions:

"We plough the fields and scatter

The good seed on the land,

But it is fed and watered

By God's almighty hand."

How simply the words remind us of the partnership between man and God which sustains and enriches life on this earth. That partnership can extend to every need and challenge we face. In all things there are tasks we can fulfill by human effort, and undertakings which cannot succeed without the help of God.

This harvest season join the millions in churches across the land who will be thanking God for our part — and His — in all earthly achievement.

Progress In London Conference

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas, buoyed by assurances they will not have to foot the bill for white-owned land they expropriate, dropped their objections to a proposed constitution for Zimbabwe Rhodesia and opened the way for negotiations on a transition government.

Patriotic Front guerrilla leaders Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo said Thursday "there will not be need to revert to discussion of the constitution," provided transition arrangements are agreed to.

They said British and U.S. assurances of contributions to a fund to compensate white farmers for land nationalized by a new Zimbabwe Rhodesian government in which they will participate went a "long way" to allay their concerns.

The guerrillas sent their message to Lord Carrington, the British foreign secretary and chairman of the six-week-old talks, and British sources said he welcomed the Front's "unambiguous" announcement and was "happy and content" to begin discussions of the transition.

Mugabe and Nkomo had been eclipsed from the talks since Monday for refusing to accept Britain's stipulation in the draft constitution that any new Zimbabwe Rhodesian government compensate white settlers for expropriated land.

The guerrillas, who have been battling for control of Rhodesia for seven years, took the position that there should be no compensation from them because the white minority in the rich African nation originally seized the land from the black majority.

As a result, both Britain and the United States gave clear signs they would contribute to an international fund to compensate the white settlers in the breakaway British colony.

But Britain is still sticking to its proposal that a British governor take over and supervise new elections in Zimbabwe Rhodesia, and that the vote be supervised by the currently white-led army.

The guerrillas are certain to balk at this, however, because the Front's stance is that "an effective transfer of power" means their fighters should form the core of a new army before independence.

"The real crunch is on the transition," said a spokesman for Zimbabwe Rhodesia's current prime minister, Abel Muzorewa, whose biracial delegation accepted the British draft constitution two weeks ago.

The Muzorewa team agreed to the draft in hopes Britain would recognize a new regime in Zimbabwe Rhodesia and put an end to trade embargoes begun 14 years ago when Ian Smith, the white prime minister at the time, refused to take steps toward black majority rule and declared independence from London.

"We hope the Patriotic Front will now expedite its negotiating techniques," Muzorewa's foreign minister, David Muzome, said. "We already complained at the immense cost in lives and money of the conference delays."

Urging Participation In Decoration Contest

Businesses in the Pitt County area are encouraged to participate in the Tobacco Festival Decoration Contest in an effort to dress up the area with the theme of its most important crop, tobacco.

Decorations for the contest must include a tobacco theme. A panel of judges will visit each participating business Nov. 7-9. Prizes and awards will be presented Nov. 9.

According to C. J. Harris, chairman of the Tobacco Festival Decorating Contest, businesses are encouraged to participate and use "their creative talents to provide an original display to honor the tobacco industry which is so important to the economy of Pitt County."

Last year's decoration contest entrants used farm equipment, costumes, farm products and agricultural art work to dress up their windows and interiors.

Winners last year in the contest were as follows: Division I: D. G. Nichols Agency, first place, and NCNB East End Branch, second place, Greenville Collection Service, third place; Division II: J. C. Penney, first place, Belk-Tyler, second place, and Sears, third place; Division III, Holiday Inn, first place and Tom's Restaurant, second place.

For more information about the contest, contact C. J. Harris, Edgecombe Bank and Trust Co., Farmville, or the Southern Flue-Cured Tobacco Festival office, 752-4101.

No Festival For Buzzard

MIAMI (AP) — In Hinckley, Ohio, the return of the buzzard in March is cause for fanfare — it's the town's claim to fame.

But when red-headed, coal-black turkey vultures arrive here for the winter, no one celebrates.

"To my knowledge, no one ever gave a whoop about them," said Sam Griffith, former building superintendent for the Dade County Courthouse. The courthouse's silver dome has served as winter home for dozens of buzzards since its completion in 1926.

The first six arrived this week. They are called turkey vultures, because their wrinkled red heads resemble those of turkeys.

"They're an awful rotten-looking piece of equipment when you view them up close," Griffith said.

Griffith, who maintains the South Dade Government Center, doesn't have to worry about the buzzards any more.

His successor, Red Jones, does.

"They roost around on the roof" and shed feathers that clog rain drains, which county workers must check and clean weekly, he said.

He said thermal updrafts from the courthouse apparently attract the buzzards, which spend the night at a nearby sewage treatment plant.

In Hinckley, where high stone ridges and cliffs provide them with ideal roosts, the buzzards are honored on "Buzzard Day" the third Sunday of March. The fowl festival attracted 30,000 buzzard fans last year.

"It does and it doesn't. The Fed has screwed the money market all up. We don't know where we are from one day to the next. The legitimate banks never worried about loan sharks, because they always knew we charged three points more than they did. Now that our rates are lower, they're complaining to the FBI that we're hurting their business. The heat's on because Household Finance just can't stand the competition."

"Why don't you raise your vigorish above that of the banks? Then they won't have anything to gripe about."

"We don't want to drive the country into a recession. Our bookmaking and white slavery divisions depend on a healthy economy."

"So what are you going to do?"

"We're sending our people down to see the members of the Federal Reserve Board and explain what their tight money policies are doing to the 'under the counter' loan business."

"Do you think they'll listen to reason?" I asked.

"They have to. They have grandmothers too."

Blount Named To New Board

Marvin Blount Jr., a Greenville attorney, is one of 35 persons from North Carolina and neighboring states named to a newly established Duke University Hospital Advisory Board.

Dr. Roscoe R. Robinson, chief executive officer of the hospital and associate vice president for health affairs, explained, "The most important function of the advisory board will be to provide the hospital with a useful source of outside perceptions on health-care related issues."

The first meeting of the new board will be on Oct. 26 and 27. In addition to a tour of Duke Hospital North, a 616-bed facility nearing completion, there will be a series of orientation sessions and social events.

A Pitt County native, Blount attended the University of North Carolina and the University of Georgia, earning a degree in English in 1963. He received his J.D. degree in 1966 from Wake Forest University Law School and was admitted to the North Carolina Bar in August of 1966.

at a news conference July 25. "I will continue to have interviews with the White House press corps, as we are doing tonight, but not twice a month. ... My decision is to go to different places around the country."

This has produced muttered accusations by some of the forsaken Washington reporters, who feel the president is "hiding out" or "drawing the wagons in a circle" or otherwise behaving like the reclusive Richard Nixon.

And in fact the president has held only one news conference, on Oct. 9, in the 12 weeks or so since then.

But Carter has been far from reclusive.

He held five "town hall meetings" to answer questions from citizens in Burlington, Iowa; Tampa, Fla.; Steubenville, Ohio; Queens, New York, and Dolton, Ill.

Each was roughly twice as long as the standard half-hour Washington news conference.

The effect of this on the world of Islam is interesting. The Saudis noted that billions of dollars of U.S. arms together with a huge program for training of the Armed Forces was not able to keep the Shah of Iran on his throne. He was ousted by a geriatric, religious fanatic living in Paris, and supported by street mobs. They also noted that the only support the Shah received from the United States were homilies on Human Rights. American officials told his now-executed officers that they would get no backing from America if they fired on the rioting mobs.

The Saudis, as the main oil-producing nation, found themselves in something of a dilemma — and they were not alone. Kuwait, Bahrain, and the Gulf States suddenly felt extremely uncomfortable. The British had long since gone and Socialist defense policies had reduced Britain's forces to a bare handful anyway. As a result of this feeling of abandonment, it is said that the Saudis believed that sooner or later they would have to make some sort of an agreement with the Soviets.

In fact, it is vital for the Soviets to infiltrate and subvert Islam, and to use it to their own ends. Not only is it an enormously powerful weapon in their fight for the conquest of the world, but to fail to do so, and at the same time to have a third of their population in their own country devout Moslems, would constitute an enormous danger, especially at a time of religious revival and Islamic resurgence.

While the West is asleep, the Soviets continue to plot the downfall of the Free World — trying to use the new giant Islam which is growing more powerful every day. Oil has left Islam holding a trump card. How and when it is played will make the earth quake. — R. Waring is a European correspondent based in London, England.

Your home is making you richer everyday... and that should worry you a lot

A quick glance through the real estate section of your local paper will confirm the happy fact: your home is worth a lot more than you paid for it.

So what's the problem? The problem, in a word, is inflation, and the fact that a sudden disaster right now could cost you dearly if your insurance has not kept up with the rapid increase in the value of your home. Getting richer every day is great, except for one thing: the more you gain, the more you have to lose.

But cheer up! We can help. Just ask us about Aetna's three "Inflation fighters": The Aetna Aestimator, Inflation Guard and Automatic Upgrading. We've got it all to help you protect what you've gained.

Family's Farming Operation

By TOM WEAVER
The Sampson Independent
SPIVEY'S CORNER, N.C.
(AP) — "Somebody said there are too many farmers," said James Wright Jackson, "but they're wrong — there are too many people farming." And Jackson ought to know a farmer when he sees one.

Farming is a family tradition with the Jacksons. At least three generations have worked the home place where his mother, Florrie Jackson, still lives and his brother, B.M. "Bobby" farms.

James Wright and his three sons maintain a complete "far-row to finish" hog operation on 250 acres in Mingo Township in northern Sampson County, formerly part of the property of the family of his wife, Elsie Baggett Jackson.

The farm is a family corporation, Triple J Farms — named before the youngest son, Brent, joined the operation. The father is president; Glenn Wright, the oldest son, is vice president; Don is secretary and Brent is treasurer.

Every bit of work is done by the four men; there are no other employees.

More than 5,000 hogs a year are bred, fed and finally delivered to Lundy Packing Co. in Clinton, buyer of the entire output.

Nine buildings, parlors, farrowing houses and others, represent an investment of about $300,000, but the replacement cost would be thousands of dollars higher. The largest building cost $85,000.

"When I started in 1950," Jackson recalled, "the average investment was just about $100 a sow, for all facilities. Now it's about $2,000."

All hogs are raised in total confinement and carefully fed from completely automated tanks.

The day begins at 5 a.m. for the Jacksons, and everybody does his share of work. Grain is the only product other than hogs, with about 10 percent produced and the rest purchased elsewhere. It is used entirely for feed.

But like all meat producers, Jackson has a stake in the fortunes of grain farmers. "They have to get close to 100 percent of parity for their grain," he said, "or they'll just stop growing it, and we would be without feed."

Like all farmers, the Jackson operation must rely heavily, at times, on borrowed money. "Interest rates are so high it's hard to make any kind of profit," James Wright said.

For eight years before starting the present operation in 1968, James Wright spent eight years in management, about the same work except that he was responsible for somebody else's property and money.

No stranger to pork men statewide and nationally, he is a past president of the 15,000-member N.C. Pork Producers Association and now a director and served six years as a director of the National Pork Producers Council.

Does he think more or less government action would benefit the farmers?

"What is needed is the right kind of action," he said. "For example, why import meat when we have an oversupply? When the supply exceeds the demand and prices are down, we try to adjust. I think when production is up, imports ought to go down."

He also thinks there should be some way the United States could bargain for food exports. "The only thing the country has to sell is food," he said. "Now I understand why we can't, as some people think we should, trade a bushel of grain for a barrel of oil. The buyers of our grain aren't the ones who sell us oil, but there ought to be some way grain prices could more nearly keep up with oil prices."

A major influence in the early lives of Jackson, his sons, his wife, his four brothers and his sister was 4-H activity, and his mother has received just about every honor available to an adult 4-H leader. For years her Mingo Club was to 4-H what the old-time New York Yankees were to baseball, with multiple winners in every category.

"Ma" Jackson's 4-H'ers have enjoyed success in farming and farm-related occupations, but even those who entered other fields or professions got a better start because of her.

In spite of his busy schedule, James Wright Jackson remains active in his church, is a Mason, a Shriner and director of the Sampson County Farm Bureau.

Congress Racing Cold On Fuel Aid For Poor

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Suddenly, members of Congress sound like they can't move fast enough to spend more than $1 billion helping the poor pay their heating bills this winter.

"The important thing is to get the dough out before people freeze to death," said Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., sponsor of a $1.2 billion emergency fuel assistance provision that received final Senate approval Wednesday.

His sense of urgency was seconded by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, who made an unprecedented appearance before a House panel to make a pitch for $1.35 billion in aid.

"The first session of the 96th Congress faces no higher priority than providing low-income fuel assistance to meet this winter's needs," he said. "I do not believe we can afford to adjourn without addressing this problem."

O'Neill, who emphasized he was speaking "as the elected constitutional head of the House of Representatives," said disagreements about details of the program should not delay its approval. "Prompt action is a national imperative," he concluded.

"This matter will be handled in an expedited manner," promised Rep. William Natcher, D-Ky., chairman of the appropriations subcommittee that listened to the speaker.

Natcher did not indicate immediately when he would reconvene the panel for a vote. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., suggested the House meet in special session Saturday to approve the money, but O'Neill didn't respond.

Meanwhile, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee arranged to meet today to debate precisely how to distribute the money senators have agreed to spend. An aide to Sen. Harrison A. Williams, D-N.J., the committee chairman, said it was possible the panel could complete work on the measure by the end of the day.

What is prompting the swift action in Congress is sharply higher prices for home heating fuels. In the case of heating oil, prices have risen by more than 50 percent since the end of last winter and now stand at over 80 cents a gallon in some parts of the country.

The Carter administration has asked Congress to spend a total of $1.6 billion for emergency fuel assistance this winter, including $400 million in an existing program that can make cash grants or provide space heaters or other goods in emergency situation. The other $1.2 billion is a new program that would supplement checks received by people living below or slightly above the poverty line.

Until Wednesday, the administration had insisted that the program was "contingent" on passage of the "windfall profits" tax the president has asked Congress to approve.

Investigate 2 Accidents

An estimated $2,325 property damage resulted from two traffic mishaps investigated here yesterday by Greenville Police.

Officers reported heaviest damage resulted from a 9:15 a.m. collision on Martinsborough Road, a half-mile West of the Greenville Boulevard intersection.

Police said a car driven by Jimmy Arthur Saad of 406 Martinsborough Rd. collided with a brick wall, mailbox, and yard light pole at 112 Martinsborough Rd., causing an estimated $1,400 damage to the car and $125 damage to the wall, mailbox and post.

Roscoe Cephus of Greenville was charged with driving under the influence following investigation of a 10:26 a.m. mishap at the intersection of Fifth and Nash Streets.

Investigators reported the Cephus car collided with a truck driven by William Earl Flood of 310B Paris Ave., resulting in an estimated $200 damage to the truck and $600 damage to the Cephus car.

Bolster Hopes Of Peat Plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal legislation has raised the hopes of the N.C. Electric Membership Corp. that it may get to build four 150-megawatt peat-fired generators in eastern North Carolina.

The House of Representatives passed an amendment Thursday that would fund a peat-fired power plant somewhere in the United States.

Rep. Steve Neal, D-N.C., introduced the measure in response to the N.C. Electric Membership Corp.'s hopes. It authorizes $3.1 million in first-year funding for a peat-fired pilot project.

There is no such generator now in the United States, although peat is used in several European countries to fuel electric generating plants.

It has been estimated that North Carolina has enough peat deposits to meet all the state's electricity needs for 23 years. Most of the peat deposits are located in the eastern part of the state.

N.C. Electric hopes to build the nation's first generator in partnership with the federal government to develop the technology for use in other peat-rich areas of the nation. The cost of the total project is estimated at $185 million.

Neal said he believes the corporation "has the best shot at getting a grant, considering how far along it is with research into peat harvesting and combustion."

The corporation supplies power to 28 rural electric cooperatives in the state, but has no generating facility. It buys power from public utilities and distributes it over its own lines.

Neal had introduced a bill earlier that would have authorized appropriations of $81.7 million over a seven-year period for development of a peat-fired power plant.

"It was not possible to get that bill passed this year, but we were able to get the first-year funds authorized," Neal said. "I will continue working for the full amount, and today's action ought to make it easier."

Casts Doubt Oswald Body Is In Grave

DALLAS (AP) — Enough doubt has been cast on the identity of the body buried in assassin Lee Harvey Oswald's grave that the remains should be dug up to see if President John F. Kennedy was killed by an impostor, say Dallas County medical officials.

The Dallas County officials point to discrepancies found by their own check of records and to others alleged by a British author who says Oswald may have been impersonated by a Soviet agent.

But officials in adjacent Tarrant County, where Oswald's grave is located in Rose Hill Cemetery, have resisted the proposed exhumation. They say they will do so only if ordered by a court.

Oswald, named as Kennedy's lone assassin by the Warren Commission, was shot to death while in police custody two days after Kennedy's assassination in 1963.

Earlier this year, the House Assassinations Committee said there was a possibility the Warren Commission was wrong in concluding that Oswald acted alone, but said it had no solid evidence.

The assassination spawned many theories, including some that Oswald was part of a conspiracy, that Cuban President Fidel Castro or organized crime played a role in the murder or that Oswald himself was a Soviet agent.

"Somebody has raised the question as to who is in that grave. The easiest way to find out is to...run some tests," Dallas County Medical Examiner Charles S. Petty said Thursday.

"We said to Tarrant County, if you exume him we'll test him. We have more capability along that line than they do," Petty said. "If there's a question and a reasonable question that science can resolve, then that's our business."

Petty's office was approached in August by an attorney representing British author Michael Eddowes, whose book "The Oswald File" suggests a Soviet agent took Oswald's place while Oswald was in Russia, came to the United States, killed Kennedy and is buried in Oswald's grave.

Eddowes says he has evidence indicating that Lee Harvey Oswald, who defected to the Soviet Union in 1959, was not the man who returned to the United States in 1962 with a Soviet wife and represented himself as Oswald.

Eddowes said the 1963 autopsy records fail to record a scar behind the body's left ear from a mastoidectomy Oswald underwent. Records also indicate Oswald's dental X-rays were not compared with the corpse's teeth, he adds.

Petty's office decided to compare its autopsy records with records from Oswald's Marine Corps service, which it obtained from the Navy Reference Department in St. Louis under a court of inquest order, according to Assistant Medical Examiner Dr. Linda Norton.

Lie Detector Test In Court

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Teamsters Local 391 has gone to court in an attempt to keep Hanes Dye and Finishing Co. from requiring its employees to take lie detector tests or lose their jobs.

Judge Peter A. Hairston of Advance signed an order for the company to appear before him in Forsyth Superior Court Monday to show cause why a temporary restraining order should not be issued to stop the tests. The union filed the suit Thursday.

The company gave employees notice Wednesday that it was contemplating lie-detector tests for employees to find out who is responsible for "sabotage and vandalism" of plant equipment.

"Due to the serious nature of this problem, employees who decline to take the tests shall be considered to have voluntarily quit," the notice concluded. It was signed by company president Joel A. Weston.

The union charged in its complaint that though the "stated reason" for the tests is to discover the identity of the individuals who have allegedly injured manufacturing machinery, the "true purpose is to demoralize" the employees.

The company said the tests would be used to discover who added solvents to felt oil cups that are on frames used in the company's finishing process.

A company employee who says he is in charge of the maintenance of the machines involved filed an affidavit with the Teamsters' suit, saying he was on sick leave when the machines were damaged.

Ned Lynch says the damage was probably caused not by sabotage but by faulty maintenance. He says there has been no damage to the machines since he returned to work.

The union contends that the company is attempting to invade the private thoughts of the employees to discover information about their "emotions, character, values, beliefs and thought processes."

Administration of the test would interfere with employees' constitutional rights to "think, speak and associate together freely" and would amount to "invasion of their rights to privacy," the union claimed in its suit.

The suit was filed by Local 391 and two dozen or more employees for whom the local acts as a bargaining agent. Plant employees voted 204-161 to join the union in August.

Hanes has appealed the results of the election to the National Labor Relations Board.

Phone Cable Sabotaged

TARBORO, N.C. (AP) — More than 41,000 customers were without long-distance service for several hours Wednesday night after someone deliberately cut phone cables near Wilson, according to Carolina Telephone officials.

They said long-distance and extended-area-service cables with 840 circuits were cut in three places north and south of Wilson between 11:25 p.m. and midnight Wednesday. Most of the service was restored by 6:45 a.m. Thursday morning.

H.D. Terry, public relations supervisor for the company, said the company has no suspects and is offering a reward of up to $1,000 for information resulting in the arrest and conviction of whoever is responsible.

"It (the cutting of cables) is a very serious thing," Terry said, "when almost 41,500 people and all of the emergency health, fire and police agencies in 12 towns cannot place or receive a long-distance call. These cables were deliberately cut; it was no accident."

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE PUBLIC: WHAT GOOD IS A 25 GALLON TANK IF YOU CAN'T FILL IT UP?

A big gas tank is supposed to give you a lot of what they call "range." But, the fact of the matter is, gas is expensive and you need more miles per gallon not more miles per tank. Think about it. A 25 gallon tank will get you 350 miles in a big car that gets 14 miles per gallon. Only 11.9 gallons in a Toyota Tercel will take you 393 miles because it gets 33 m.p.g. based on E.P.A. city driving estimates.

With gas at a dollar a gallon, that means you can go 43 miles further for $13 less per tankful in a Toyota Tercel. But, it is also E.P.A. highway rated at 43 m.p.g. You go further and your hard-earned dollars go a lot further. So, all this talk about "range" is just an attempt to make gas guzzlers look fuel efficient when they're really not.

We've been taking the availability of gas at a low price for granted for years. But now, we're in the same boat as the rest of the world with expensive gas that's not always easily available. That's why Toyota is the best selling economy car in the world. It is designed and built in a country where high fuel prices and scarcity have been a way of life for decades. And Toyotas are being bought all over the world because they are fuel efficient and extremely durable.

WHAT'S SO ECONOMICAL ABOUT A $8,000 ECONOMY CAR?

No car is inexpensive today. So, you should be able to get a car that will perform well and last a long time for your money. And you will when you invest in a Toyota car or truck, because a Toyota has quality and durability built in from the beginning. There is no planned obsolescence in a Toyota because it is designed and built to last a great deal longer than your payments. It is assembled by workers who care about what they are doing. They even wear white gloves on the assembly line and each person can stop that line, at any time, if he sees a problem. The quality control during the assembly of your Toyota is controlled by each individual responsible for his part in the building of your car.

They say, "you can't get quality no matter what you pay." But you can in a Toyota. And that Toyota quality is what makes it a wise and economical buy. Your Toyota will last. It will be economical to drive. And it will be a source of pride and pleasure for as long as you care to own it. In the long run, a quality product is always the most economical.

WHAT GOOD IS A CAR IF YOU CAN'T DRIVE IT?

Your Toyota Dealer will keep your Toyota in your hands not a mechanic's. At best, it's inconvenient to take your car in for service. But with a Toyota that inconvenience is kept to an absolute minimum. For 1980, Toyota has extended the first scheduled maintenance on nearly all of its passenger cars to 10,000 miles or eight months. After a quick oil and filter change, you are back on the road until the 15,000 mile mark. And when you do take a Toyota in for service to your dealer, his certified technicians know your Toyota best. They will fix your car fast, for less cost and, most importantly, do it right the first time.

And you won't have to wait for parts. Each of the 155 Toyota Dealers in the Southeast is part of the most sophisticated, computerized parts inventory system in the industry. Even the competition has visited our parts warehouse and computer center to see how we do it, to see how we keep the parts you will need constantly in stock at your dealer, or at least, no less than 24 hours away from your car. We don't think a part should be on a truck when it should be in your car.

In today's economy, you need a quality car, one that will be economical to drive and easy to take care of. You have a right to expect, for your good money, a car that will last and give you your money's worth. You can expect that and a great deal more when you buy a Toyota car or truck.

Sincerely,

Jim Moran

ROME, Ga. (AP) — Michael Thevis' fate rested with the jury today as his racketeering trial drew to an end with a federal prosecutor calling the millionaire Atlanta pornographer "guilty, guilty, guilty."

Attorneys for both sides accused their opponents of vicious attacks during closing arguments Thursday near the end of the nine-week-old trial.

U.S. District Judge Harold Murphy said the jury, which has been sequestered for the weekend, would begin deliberating the complex case this morning. Murphy's instructions to them lasted three hours.

Thevis is charged with three counts in the federal indictment: racketeering, conspiracy to racketeer and murder conspiracy in the death of his former associate, Roger Dean Underhill.

One of Thevis' pornography businesses, Global Industries Inc., is also charged in the two racketeering indictments. Thevis' long-time friend Jeanette Evans of Marietta, Ga., and her cousin, Bart Hood of Summerville, S.C., also are charged in the murder conspiracy count.

According to federal law, racketeering is committed when a person or group commits a series of related crimes with the common purpose of furthering a particular enterprise.

In this case, Thevis and Global Industries are charged with engaging "in a pattern of racketeering activity" that allegedly included four murders and two arsons in a bid to seize nationwide control of the lucrative pornography industry.

A key factor in the case was whether the jury would convict Thevis, Miss Evans and Hood of conspiring to kill Underhill. His testimony as an informant was a cornerstone in the government's case, and Murphy said Underhill's statements would become inadmissible if the jury acquitted the three of the conspiracy.

Defense sources who asked not to be named predicted the government's racketeering case would collapse without the Underhill testimony.

Underhill and Atlanta grocer Isaac Galanti were shot to death from ambush last Oct. 25 as they toured the north Atlanta property Underhill meant to sell.

"Mike Thevis is guilty, guilty, guilty," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Craig Gillen. "Roger Dean Underhill, speaking to you from his grave, is telling you the truth."

Considered For Aluminum Plant

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A tract of land along the northeast Cape Fear River in Pender County is under consideration as the site of a proposed aluminum processing plant. The plant could represent a $400 to $500 million investment.

State and local officials said Thursday that while no final decision has been made, Coastal Aluminum Corp. of Washington, D.C. is seriously considering locating on the site.

The size of the investment has not been released by the company, but local officials said it would likely be in the $400 million to $500 million range.

If the investment is that large, it would represent one of perhaps the 10 largest single industrial investments ever in the state, according to Steve Meehan, spokesman for the state Commerce Dept.

Defense attorney Bobby Lee Cook, however, said the government's case against Thevis "stinks," and attorney Ed Garland said the government "targeted" Thevis for prosecution.

"Before you can find someone guilty beyond a reasonable doubt ... it's like a jigsaw puzzle, you have got to put it all together," Cook said. "Ladies and gentlemen, it doesn't fit."

Garland said, "This is a built case. It has been built as it relates to everything but count 10 (murder conspiracy) of the indictment. 'The architect of that building is Roger Dean Underhill.'"

"The defense is an attack, it is a smear, a projection of Thevis' hatred of the FBI," Gillen retorted. "We have not fabricated a case, we have not insinuated a case, we have not improvised a case, we have presented a case."

Young Stuhley Went Downhill

By WAYNE SLATER
Associated Press Writer
KEWANEE, Ill. (AP) — The night Young Stuhley died — crushed by a highballing freight — he was drunk, rock-horse drunk, so drunk the coroner said "in his condition he neither heard nor saw the train."

There is talk that Young Stuhley committed suicide. But nobody here believes it. They refuse to believe it. To them, he was "the uncrowned middleweight champion of the world."

In the 1930s, there wasn't a dandy from here to Hollywood who could match young Hayden Nicholas Stuhlsatz, the glittering fighter "with the Clark Gable profile."

In those days, he was fighting — and beating — the best middleweight boxers in the world.

But that was a long time ago, and everybody knew Young Stuhley was a sad creature the night last week — four days after he turned 68 — when he stepped out in front of three Burlington & Northern engines in the Kewanee rail yards.

Everybody knew he was a has-been wandering around with his wrinkled raincoat flapping in the wind and old fight pictures under his arm.

Everybody knew that his manager had bungled his career and taken his money. "I was sold down the river," Stuhley said, contending until the day he died that his manager had urged him to throw fights for quick money and promised title chances that never came.

"He was one of the best," Yit Anderson said sadly as heads nodded up and down the bar at the Pioneer Club on Whiskey Row. "But he was an unhappy person. He lived in the past."

Nobody here believes Stuhley just ended it all by taking a dive in front of a train. He was their champion.

"There was no tank dive here," said Julian "Pal" Wilamowski, a retired judge who quit boxing as an amateur while his friend Stuhley went on to become a professional.

Pal and Stuhley grew up together and boxed together at the Grand Theater and the Dreamland Dance Hall in Kewanee, a roaring fight town in the 1920s. Jack Stuhlsatz, a German immigrant baker, dreamed that his sons, Hayden and Paul, would become champions in the ring.

"When the Stuhlsatz boys fought, people would throw money in the yard to show their appreciation for a good match," said George Lilly. "Young Stuhley was the fastest thing you ever saw."

Stuhley lost only two amateur fights before turning pro in 1929, then rang up a string of 51 straight wins before losing to Kid Leonard in Iowa. In a rematch, he beat the Kid in 10 rounds.

In his 12 years as a professional, Stuhley won 102 of 121 fights, but none was a title bout.

The highlight of his career came in 1934 when he beat Vince Dundee, the reigning middleweight champ, in a bruising 10-round affair in Chicago.

How they cheered him that night! Mills Stadium was lit up like a bonfire and the crowd screamed itself hoarse at the sight of glamorous young Stuhley and his electrifying left jab.

The light of the universe shone on him that night and afterwards.

He had a movie star's face, with a fineboned nose, a Roman chin, hair slicked back like Valentino and great black sad eyes. A Los Angeles sportswriter called him "the gent with the Clark Gable profile."

He sported $200 suits and big white Panama hats, surrounded himself with a flashy entourage and attended Hollywood parties. He made a couple of film shorts with J. Carrol Naish.

"In the 1930s, at the height of his career, he was a star, a hero, a person who had the idolatry that attends big shots," said Wilamowski. "He was always impeccably dressed, always wore a red carnation in his lapel, and when he walked down the street with his beautiful body, kids would flock to him."

Stuhley said later he probably squandered a million dollars, no small part of it in the string of bars known as Whiskey Row, where drinks for "Stuhley's friends" were always on Stuhley.

One day he walked into a greasy spoon restaurant by accident and announced, as always, "Drinks are on Stuhley!" "This ain't no bar, Stuhley," the owner said. "This is a hamburger joint."

Stuhley paused only briefly, then threw out his arms as if to embrace the room. "Hamburgers for everybody!" he cried.

He would stride down Tremont Street, his pockets filled with silver dollars that he would give to children.

"He'd say, 'Here kid, remember Stuhley. Remember Stuhley,'" said Teddy Canellos, who used to shine shoes on the street. "He looked like downtown Chicago right here in Kewanee."

When a friend expressed doubt that Stuhley was really invited to a Hollywood party at George Raft's house, he phoned Raft so the friend could hear it straight from the actor. He always carried a picture signed by Bing Crosby, who came to the dressing room after a fight and followed Stuhley's career for a time.

But the money ran out and fame dimmed. He was drafted in 1941. When he returned to Kewanee a few years later, few remembered him. He could not deal with it.

He drank heavily and developed a reputation as a brawler. Few bars escaped his rampages.

On Oct. 9, the bartender said he'd had enough. Stuhley shuffled away, past the welding shop and the redbrick firehouse, toward the railroad tracks and home.

Those who saw him say he had boxing, not death, on his mind. Ringing in his brain, they believe, was the night he beat Dundee.

They say he must have heard cheering, the thunder of the crowd all around him, screaming itself hoarse, screaming his name.

Mills Stadium was ablaze again and the street lamps glimmered and a cueball moon rolled in the sky. The neon on Whiskey Row blazed like the headlights of the roaring freight, blazing like the light of the universe.

A few minutes before midnight, Stuhley stepped onto the tracks.

Fuel Explosion During Typhoon

TOKYO (AP) — A fuel tank exploded and burned at a U.S. Marine Corps camp at the height of typhoon today, killing one person and injuring 60, 10 of them critically, a Marine spokesman said.

Japanese news reports said the typhoon, packing 55 mph winds toppled the tank, which then ruptured and exploded.

Master Gunnery Sgt. Bob Green, the Marine spokesman, said he did not know the cause of the explosion and that no information was available immediately on the identity of the victims or whether they were Americans or Japanese.

The most seriously injured were burn cases, Green said. Plans were being made to evacuate them to U.S. military hospitals.

Japanese news agencies said the blast occurred when a fuel tank at the Marines' Camp Fuji, 90 miles southwest of Tokyo, was blown over by high winds and ruptured, exploding and setting fire to several buildings. Ten buildings were burned, Kyodo news service reported.

Green said he could not confirm that. "The fuel tank leaked, flowed and then ignited, that's all I know," he said.

Communications between

Tokyo and the camp were disrupted by Typhoon Tip, which moved through Japan today, leaving at least four Japanese dead in the north.

It hit the Shizuoka area, where the camp is located, shortly before reaching Tokyo. The fuel fire occurred about 1:30 p.m., when the storm was at its peak in the area.

About 12,000 Marines are stationed at Camp Fuji.

Green said helicopters were standing by to take the injured to a U.S. Navy hospital at Yokosuka, headquarters of the 7th Fleet, or a hospital at Yokota, a U.S. air base.

Homecoming

Report Bacteria Photographed

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Researchers at the University of North Carolina say they have taken photographs which show for the first time how bacteria of a common type of pneumonia attack the body's defense system.

Drs. Johnny L. Carson, Albert Collier and Wallace A. Clyde Jr. of the UNC School of Medicine reported the results of their research on the bacterium Mycoplasma pneumoniae in Thursday's edition of Science magazine. The bacterium causes the most common type of pneumonia in young adults and children over 6.

The doctors' research showed that the bacterium attacks the cilia, tiny hairlike structures that line the airways leading to the lungs. Millions of cilia in the windpipe and bronchial tubes beat together in waves to sweep germs and dead cells out of the airways.

Ribbon-Cutting Held At New Winterville Plant

By REBECCA BUFFALOE
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE — A ribbon cutting, plant tour and pig picking were held Thursday afternoon at the Winterville facility of Ajax Magnathermic Corporation.

Some 100 city and county dignitaries were on hand to hear comments by guest speaker Larry Cohick, executive director, Economic Development Divisions, N. C. Department of Commerce.

Cohick pointed out that small communities such as Winterville have been key attractions for corporations interested in North Carolina. He noted that North Carolina's industrial diversification was also a significant factor in drawing industries to the Tar Heel state.

"The excellent business climate of Pitt County was a major consideration for Ajax Magnathermic," said Cohick, who thanked Reese Hart of the Pitt County Development Commission and Bob Clark of the North Carolina Department of Commerce for their aid in the plant's location. "Jobs from this plant will help Winterville, Pitt County and North Carolina," said Cohick.

Ed Stanley, Winterville plant manager, introduced John Logan, president of Ajax Magnathermic, who stated that a three-person team "had scoured the Sun Belt" looking for a suitable plant location before selecting the Winterville site. Logan introduced Jim McLaughlin, vice president of Ajax Magnathermic, who aided in opening the Winterville plant.

Also on hand for the ribbon cutting were Winterville Mayor Walter Dail and Jim Maher, Ajax Magnathermic vice president in charge of manufacturing.

Ajax Magnathermic Corporation is a Warren, Ohio-based company, primarily concerned with the design and manufacture of electric induction heating, heat-treating and melting equipment.

According to Greg Richardson, Winterville personnel manager, approximately 60 persons are employed at the present time, with hopefully 100-140 to be employed by Christmas. Most employees at the Winterville plant have some experience as mechanics, welders and machinists, Richardson indicated.

Baby Leopards Saved By Box

DENVER (AP) — A false-bottomed box has saved the lives of three baby leopards who were snatched from their mother immediately after birth, zoo officials say.

The triplets, born July 9, were raised in the zoo nursery, which is off limits to the public. They owe their lives to zookeepers who resorted to a magician's trick in devising a scheme to save offspring of Duchess, a high-strung African spotted leopard who was born in captivity. She had killed every cub in her previous dozen litters, zoo officials said.

Assistant zoo director Paul Linger said a nesting box with a false bottom was placed in the cage. When the cubs were born, they dropped through the bottom of the box into a drawer, where Duchess couldn't reach them.

Will Celebrate 2nd Anniversary

The second anniversary of the ministry of the Rev. Wilbert "Bunk" Edwards will be celebrated Sunday at 2:30 p.m. at Fleming Chapel Church.

The program planned for tonight at Fleming Chapel has been postponed because of a death in the congregation.

Science Approaching Mononucleosis Vaccine

By KEVIN MCKEAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — An important step towards making a vaccine to fight infectious mononucleosis — the so-called "kissing disease" among teenagers — has been reported by a Harvard Medical School researcher.

Scientists are anxious for such a vaccine because the virus which causes mononucleosis may also be the cause of two types of cancer.

Dr. David Thorley-Lawson of the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute said Thursday he has purified a vaccine-like substance that makes rabbits produce antibodies against the virus that causes the disease, a lingering illness of teenagers and young adults.

Thorley-Lawson, a biochemist, said the rabbit antibodies neutralize the virus when it is grown in human cells in a test tube.

If further tests succeed, the substance would become a strong candidate for a human vaccine for the widespread ailment.

Mononucleosis is caused by a germ called the Epstein-Barr virus, named for the two British scientists who isolated it in 1964.

Besides causing mononucleosis, it is also believed to help cause two kinds of cancer which are widespread in underdeveloped countries.

One of these is Burkitt's lymphoma, the most common childhood cancer in central Africa. The other is nasopharyngeal carcinoma, a nose cancer common in southern China that kills 65 percent of its victims within five years.

Scientists believe almost every member of the human race — including those in developed countries like the United States — becomes infected with Epstein-Barr virus at some time in life.

Children who get it usually don't show any symptoms. But teenagers and young adults get a fever, sore throat and general malaise that hangs on for weeks.

Once a person gets Epstein-Barr virus, he carries small but measurable amounts of it in his body for the rest of his life. But he is protected against further flareups by his own immune system.

The hope is that a vaccine would stimulate the immune system to make antibodies in advance of infection.

Periodontal Disease Is At An Epidemic Level

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The problem of tooth decay in children is being solved, but periodontal disease among adults is at an epidemic level in North Carolina.

These are the major findings of a three-year study conducted by the North Carolina Dental Society with the assistance of the Health Services Research Center at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The Dental Manpower Study for North Carolina concludes that fluoridated water and aggressive efforts by dentists have clearly reduced tooth decay. The study shows children who drank fluoridated water during their first eight years have, as adults, fewer decayed, filled and missing teeth.

"Tooth decay will be a decreasing problem in the years to come," says Dr. Charles W. Horton of High Point, chairman of the dental society's Dental Manpower Concerns Committee.

"But," he says, "just as dentists were pioneers in the state's preventive dentistry program for children, they must now aggressively increase their efforts to prevent and treat periodontal disease."

The disease involves the breakdown of tissues supporting the teeth and in its more severe forms results in loss of teeth. Often the disease is not recognized until it's too late to save the teeth.

The report describes the disease as "a massive public health problem in North Carolina" and says it is on the increase, particularly among the non-white population.

Although most of the disease in North Carolina is of a milder variety that could be managed by good personal oral hygiene, the report says there is "a large volume of untreated, serious periodontal disease which will require professional care if unnecessary tooth loss is to be prevented."

The report recommends a major public education program involving the dental profession, government agencies and citizens of the state. It calls for aggressive efforts by dentists to bring the problem under control. This effort could involve revising the dental school curriculum and continuing education programs for dentists and hygienists.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market posted a broad loss today amid fears that the Federal Reserve would clamp down still harder on credit.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 4.44 at 825.68.

Losers outnumbered gainers by close to a 5-1 margin in the mid-day tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Late Thursday the Federal Reserve reported an unexpectedly large $2.8 billion jump in the basic measure of the money supply for the week ended Oct. 10.

Midway through that week, the Fed announced that it would seek to restrain inflation by direct measures to curb the expansion of the money supply.

Even though it was too early to expect to see results from the Fed's new strategy, the statistics released Thursday came as a disappointment to many observers who had been hoping for some sign of a slowing in monetary growth.

The Fed immediately moved to drain reserves from the banking system, and short-term interest rates rose to new highs.

Masco led the active list, off 3/4 at 24 1/4. A 291,000-share block traded at that price.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index lost .37 to 58.43. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 1.07 at 208.72.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 15.79 million shares by noon.

El Salvador Planning Relations With Cuba

By EDUARDO VAZQUEZ-BECKER

Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — El Salvador's new military-civilian junta announced it will establish diplomatic relations with Cuba and appealed to all citizens to refrain from violence and "accept the rules of the game."

But guerrillas and other leftists still planned a protest march Saturday, claiming the new regime was just a continuation of the old one and responsible for the deaths of at least 20 protesters since coming to power.

Civilian junta member Guillermo Manuel Ungo announced the plans to establish ties with communist Cuba and told reporters Thursday it was part of an effort by "El Salvador to improve its international position, fundamentally with Latin America."

Ungo and the other junta members, including the two colonels who ousted Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero's right-wing regime in a coup Monday, also announced a relaxation of the martial law and security measures imposed earlier in the week to stamp out sporadic attacks by leftist guerrilla groups.

They said demonstrations will be permitted so long as they remain peaceful, and reduced by two hours a nightly curfew imposed Tuesday. A martial law decree had banned meetings of more than three people and imposed a 10 p.m.-to-5 a.m. curfew. The new curfew begins at midnight.

"Within three days we have started to recover the confidence of the people," Col. Arnaldo Adolfo Majano, one of the two colonels said in announcing the reduction in curfew hours.

He said the situation under Romero's fiercely anti-communist regime "had turned intolerable" and repeated earlier junta promises to carry out social and economic reforms, redistribute the country's wealth and eventually hold elections.

El Salvador's biggest leftist groups have rejected a junta invitation for talks on ways to solve the country's problems, however, claiming the new regime has no intention of ending 47 years of military rule and returning the country to democracy.

"We have a new government that has broken with the past and respects human life," Ungo said. "We must make these radical groups understand they are fighting a government that is not their enemy and hope that sooner than later they adopt a positive attitude — even one of criticism."

Several other witnesses testified that they had seen Leggett strike Hall or saw Leggett's flashlight extended in Hall's direction. Eight ALE agents claimed Leggett did not strike Hall.

Hall, who works for the New Bern Sun-Journal, testified during the two-day trial that Leggett told him during a Sept. 2 rock concert, "Don't take any god damn pictures," and struck him twice on the head with a flashlight.

Ross owned the trailer, located 200 feet from his home on U.S. 264 a mile west of Greenville, where the 169 bales of marijuana, valued at $3.18 million, were found. He was suspended from the department immediately following his arrest.

Police Department detective C. E. Weatherington told the court yesterday that the police-SBI-DEA surveillance of the out-of-state defendants began on July 20 and ended when they were arrested on July 23.

He described how the defendants were seen at local motels, going to and from the location of the trailer, and driving the truck loaded with marijuana to the mobile home where it was unloaded.

Dye Sees Second Off-Week As An Aid

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

For the second time in three weeks, the East Carolina Pirates have the week off, but it wasn't causing coach Pat Dye any problems.

In fact, he was grinning widely as he looked over the statistical charts.

"You know," he commented, "we're pretty close to being a pretty good offensive football team." Dye pointed to the Pirates number one ranking among the 13 Southern Independent schools in total offense, rushing offense and scoring offense. "We're moving the ball about as well as we could ask for," he said.

The Pirates are coming off a 49-7 victory over The Citadel, and will rest a week prior to playing the University of North Carolina.

Dye feels that the week off can't help but be a plus for the Pirates. "For one thing, we should have Joe Godette back for the game, at least I hope we do," he said. Godette, a starting offensive tackle, has been out since the N.C. State game with a leg injury.

"Of course, we could go backwards during these two weeks, if we don't approach it intelligently," Dye added. "But I don't think we'll do that."

"It really gives us four more days to prepare for North Carolina in all phases of the game. It also means that we have an extra week to allow our freshmen to improve. I think that's good because we are using so many freshmen."

Dye pointed out that two freshmen are starting on defense, safety Freddie Jones, and nose guard Doug Smith, along with two alternating at Godette's position, Gary Gambrell and Oscar Tyson.

"We are basically a senior-freshman team, although we do have a few juniors starting."

Against The Citadel, the Pirates had a chance to see a lot of people. Dye noted that 87 different people got into the game. "At least, that's what I believe. There may have been a few that I missed on top of that."

Dye admitted that he was surprised by the outcome of the game. He didn't expect the Pirates to have such an easy time of it.

"We thought their two defensive tackles would control the line of scrimmage, but (Wayne) Inman and (Mitchell) Johnson handled them so well that it killed any chance they had with their defensive scheme."

Dye mentioned that The Citadel had several injured starters that never played. "I think some of them would have played had they not gotten so far behind early, but I don't think that it would have made any difference in the outcome," he said.

Dye was happiest about the improvement in the defensive unit. But, he added, it still isn't where he would like for it to be. "We're getting closer to what I want. We did some good things in the ball game. Our end play was improved, and having John Morris back helped that a lot. Then, too, we've had two weeks to work with our young defensive ends and bring them around more."

The coach added that he wants to see continued improvement on the defensive unit in every ball game. "I'll be satisfied when they reach their goal of holding the opponents to less than 150 yards rushing and less than 100 passing. We're closer to that, but we have North Carolina and Appalachian State both coming up and both of them are offensive minded football teams."

Should the Pirates put emphasis on any phase of the game during these two weeks, it will probably be the specialty teams. "Our kicking is great, but our coverage still isn't where we want it to be. We had a couple of breakdowns on the kickoffs and punts last week that gave them good runbacks, and we've got to cut these out."

Dye also feels that the Pirates must cut down on their mistakes that bring on penalties. "We're just getting too many," he said.

Under-Rated Paschal Is Tar Heel Leader

CHAPEL HILL — Dick Crum calls him "our best all-purpose back."

Amos Lawrence says, "He's a leader and a great competitor." Opponents call him things that can't be printed.

That's Doug Paschal, the University of North Carolina's senior fullback from Greenville and perhaps the most underrated player in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The 6-2, 212-pound Paschal has the size, speed and determination to be a great I-formation tailback. He's a player in the same mold as former Tar Heel stars Don McCauley and Mike Voight, both of whom were twice selected the ACC Player of the Year.

However, Paschal, the picture-perfect tailback, is not playing that position. The reason is the presence of Lawrence, the dazzling speedster from Norfolk who ranks as one of the great runners in college football. Lawrence, capable of scoring anytime he touches the football, lines up at tailback in Carolina's I-formation with Paschal at fullback.

Amos gets the headlines and Paschal mainly gets a lot of bumps and bruises. Some players might resent that role. But, Paschal is not the typical player.

"Doug never complains about anything," says Crum, the Tar Heel coach. "He's the perfect team player. He'll do whatever he can to help us win."

"We're fortunate to have a player like him. He's so versatile. He's an excellent runner and his competitiveness makes him even tougher in short-yardage situations. He's a line blocker and he catches like a wide receiver. He's just a perfect complement to Amos in our backfield."

Still, it's unfortunate in a way that Paschal and Lawrence are on the same team. If the Tar Heels did not have Lawrence, Paschal would be the big star. As a freshman, Doug played in the shadow of Voight. For the past two years, Amos has been the main attraction. None of that bothers Paschal.

"I'm a team man," he says simply. "I'm not here for headlines and pictures in the newspapers. When I see the Carolina score in front, that's the only thing that makes any difference."

Carolina's score had been in front most of the time this year, and a lot of credit will have to go to Paschal. At fullback, he's the lead blocker for Lawrence.

"My role is the one of most fullbacks—a grind-it-out type player," he says. "But, that's an important part of the game. Anybody who knows football knows it isn't just the flashy runner and the great quarterback who win games. You win by blocking and tackling. I don't need to see my name in the papers to know I've helped."

While the fullback's job at Carolina is mainly that of a blocker, Paschal is changing that somewhat. He is such an outstanding runner that the Tar Heels will probably run more fullback plays this year than in the past.

"If people think they can stop Amos and stop us this year, they're going to be surprised," says Crum. "Paschal will hurt them with his running if they just concentrate on Amos."

Paschal did just that in the Tar Heel opener against South Carolina. He carried 11 times for 59 yards and also caught five passes for 31 more. His blocking was also excellent and the Tar Heels won, 28-0.

Amazingly, 52 of Paschal's 90 all-purpose yards came after he had first been hit by a defensive player.

"That's a very important statistic to us," says backfield Coach Randy Walker. "That's a good measure of determination and second effort. Those are things Doug always excels in."

Actually, Paschal excels in just about everything. Off the field, he is a very good student in business administration. He also has fine leadership qualities.

Kratzert May Like Change

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Bill Kratzert says an injury forced him to change his style of playing golf, but after his opening-round 8-under-par 64 in the $200,000 Pensacola Open, he says he may not change back.

Kratzert and Morris Hataalsky blistered the 7,133-yard Perdido Bay Country Club layout Thursday, grabbing equal shares of the first-day lead with rounds that tied the course record.

"I've had tendinitis in both wrists since the beginning of the year and it's forced me to change my style," Kratzert said. "All year I've had to lay off hitting the ball long. I've had to bunt the ball down the fairway and that's not my style."

"But I'm sort of afraid to change back now."

Kratzert, teeing off early before the wind kicked up, went on a birdie tear on the back nine, nailing a 10-foot birdie putt on the 10th hole and then chipping to within one foot of the flag for a tap-in birdie on the 11th.

He's been battling to stay in the top 60 PGA money winners for the year — one reason he hasn't taken time off to rest his ailing wrists.

"I really had to keep playing," Kratzert said. "I've been battling to finish in the top 60 and I really wasn't sure of it until the Buick Open."

His fifth-place finish there put him in the group that gets an automatic exemption for PGA tour events next year. He is now 44th on the list.

Hataalsky overcame a mental problem with his putting to post his half of the opening-round lead.

He sunk birdie putts of two, four, 10 and 15 feet before capping the fine round with a 12-foot eagle putt on the par-5 15th hole.

WINDSOR — Rose High School's junior varsity scored on two big plays and coasted to a 16-6 victory over Bertie yesterday.

The Rampants got all they needed in the first period, scoring on a 94-yard pass from Barry Smith to Marty Tyson. Mike Thurber kicked the extra point for a 7-0 lead that held the rest of the half.

Bertie's score came on a one-yard plunge in the third period, but their try for a two-point conversion to take the lead was stopped short.

Rose came back in the fourth period with a 55-yard run by Robert Brown for the clincher. Thurber again kicked the PAT.

After failing on four attempts from fourth and goal at the one, Rose turned the ball over late in the game to Bertie, then got a safety on the first play when Thurber cracked through to tackle the ball carrier in the end zone.

The win brought the Rampant Cub record to 6-1 on the year. They play host to Wilson Fike on Thursday.

The gap between poll leader Rick Scoppe and the second place duo of Tom Baines and this writer narrowed a little more last weekend, and the possibilities of more changes are in store this week.

Scoppe continues to lead the pack with a 52-18 record, while Baines and this writer are tied for second again with 49-21 marks. Joe Jenkins is in third place two games back with a 47-23 record, followed by our guests and Etha Allen, both at 46-24.

Last week's guest, former staffer Jim Kyle came through with a 9-3 week, as good as any other posted during the week.

This week, we've invited the "Voice of the Pirates," WNCT-TV sports director Jim Woods to be our guest. Fresh from a trip to England, Woods promised a "jolly good show" with his picks.

So, talley-ho, and off we go.

Last week's high school picks saw several upsets and left us with only a 3-4 week, dropping our record to 30-13 on the year.

This week, a number of key games are scheduled as C.B. Aycock is at North Pitt, Farmville Central goes to Southern Nash, Ayden-Grifton travels to North Lenoir, Conley entertains Southwest Edgecombe, Roanoke is at Roanoke Rapids, Jamesville at Manteo, and Ahoskie at is Williamston.

Aycock's Falcons are having a tough year, but no worse than that being suffered by North Pitt's Panthers. This offers the Panthers another chance to pull out of last place in the league, but we're going to have to pick Aycock in this one.

Ayden-Grifton goes to North Lenoir, seeking to get back on the winning tack. The Hawks are having a tough time, and we see no reason why the Chargers can't pull this one out.

Conley is host to Southwest Edgecombe, and the Vikings are making stirrings of coming to life and posting their first winning season. A victory this week would leave them one win short of clinching that, and we think they'll win.

The Southern Nash-Farmville clash is being billed as the championship game in the league. Probably, it will be since no one seems close to these two. It should be quite a battle, but Farmville remains our choice.

Elsewhere, it'll be Roanoke over Roanoke Rapids, Manteo over Jamesville, and Ahoskie over Williamston.

In the other high school game, Rose High School's Rampants play a very key game with Bertie. The Rampants must win to keep their chances for a playoff berth alive. Bertie has to come up with a win to keep its hopes for a title alive, so both teams will be highly motivated. Our panel's consensus is split down the middle with three votes each way—a toss-up.

Our other consensus picks have Auburn over Georgia Tech; N.C. State over North Carolina; UCLA and California, a toss-up; Michigan State over Purdue; Rutgers over William & Mary; Clemson over Duke; Wake Forest over Maryland; Navy and Virginia, a toss-up; Southern Cal and Notre Dame, a toss-up; Appalachian State over Furman; and VMI over The Citadel.

Irish Hold Edge Over Trojans, But Not In Series' Recent Years

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It was just a handshake, but it had a pretty strong grip at that.

When Knute Rockne and Howard Jones shook on a gentlemen's agreement in the 1920s, the seed was planted for the great Southern Cal-Notre Dame football series.

The handshake took place in the 1920s after Rockne's Notre Dame team had been beaten by Jones' Iowa Hawkeyes. Rockne asked for a return match — and he got it after Jones had moved to Southern Cal.

Notre Dame and Southern Cal have blossomed since, of course, and Saturday they'll have the 51st renewal of their often-spectacular rivalry. The Fighting Irish hold a 27-19-4 lead in the series, although they have won only three of the games in the last 13 years.

Although the No. 4 Trojans are coming off an ego-puncturing 21-21 tie with Stanford, they still rate as six-point favorites over No. 9 Notre Dame before an expected sellout crowd at South Bend.

Southern Cal Coach John Robinson doesn't feel like the upperdog in the nationally televised game, though.

"It looks like a very even game to me," says Robinson. "Notre Dame is a great football team, as always. Vagas Ferguson looks improved over last year, and they do with him what we do with Charles White — give him the football a lot."

Ferguson needs only 21 yards to surpass the Notre Dame career rushing record of 2,682 yards set by Jerome Heavens last season. White, another in a long line of great tailbacks at Southern Cal, is the nation's leading rusher with a 148-yard-per-game average.

Meanwhile, Alabama puts its recently acquired No. 1 ranking on the line against No. 18 Tennessee at Birmingham. The Crimson Tide was elevated to the top spot this past week after Southern Cal was tied by the Cardinals.

Elsewhere, it's No. 2 Texas against No. 10 Arkansas at Little Rock; No. 3 Nebraska at Oklahoma State; SMU at No. 5 Houston; Wisconsin at No. 6

Ohio State; No. 8 Oklahoma at Kansas State; No. 11 Michigan at Illinois; No. 17 Pitt at No. 12 Washington; No. 13 BYU at Wyoming; No. 14 Auburn at Georgia Tech; No. 19 North Carolina at No. 15 North Carolina State; No. 16 Purdue at Michigan State and Virginia at No. 20 Navy.

The Alabama-Tennessee game is another of college football's storied rivalries, dating back to 1901. The Crimson Tide holds a 31-23 edge in the series with seven ties.

"You must have poise, emotion, ability and a few breaks to play with a team like Alabama," says Tennessee Coach Johnny Majors, who was brought back to coach at his alma mater in 1977 to — among other things — stem Alabama's recent domination of the series. "This is probably the best team we have faced in the three years I have been at Tennessee."

Lee, Joe Niekro Pace National All-Star Pitching Staff Picks

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Lee, an injury-plagued American Leaguer for the past few seasons, was among those named today to The Associated Press' National League All-Star baseball team for 1979.

Lee, selected as the left-handed pitcher on the AP's NL team, reversed his field this year by winning 16 games for the Montreal Expos and compiling a 3.04 earned run average in 222 innings.

The victory total was the most that Lee had compiled since winning 17 games for the Boston Red Sox in 1975. In the three subsequent seasons for Boston, Lee had amassed a total of just 24 triumphs while suffering through an assortment of hurts that included a bad pitching arm.

Lee polled 95 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters to win the berth over Philadelphia's Steve Carlton, who had 76. Joe Niekro, a 21-game winner with the Houston Astros, was the choice as the right-handed pitcher over teammate J.R. Richard. The voting margin there was 120-83.

Bruce Sutter, who posted a league-leading 37 saves for the Chicago Cubs, was the runaway choice as the NL's All-Star relief pitcher, collecting 196 votes.

San Diego's Dave Winfield, with 34 homers, 118 RBI and a .308 batting average, was the leading vote-getter with 216 for one of the outfield berths. The rest of the NL's All-Star outfield included Dave Kingman of the Chicago Cubs with 199 votes and Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates with 152, both easy winners over their nearest competitor, Cincinnati's George Foster.

Kingman led the NL in homers with 48 and drove in 118 runs. Parker had a .310 batting average, 25 homers and 94 RBI.

The remainder of the team included three players from the St. Louis Cardinals — first baseman Keith Hernandez (176 votes), shortstop Garry Templeton (129) and catcher Ted Simmons (114) — along with second baseman Dave Lopes of the Los Angeles Dodgers (158) and third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Philadelphia Phillies (109).

All were relatively easy winners at their positions. Hernandez's season included a league-leading .344 batting average and 105 RBI. Templeton hit .314 and Simmons .283 with 26 homers and 87 RBI.

Lopes hit 28 homers and drove in 73 runs. Schmidt was the NL runnerup in homers with 45 and produced 114 RBI.

The American League All-Star team, announced earlier, featured four members of the California Angels: Don Baylor as designated hitter, Rod Carew at first base, Bobby Grich at second and Brian Downing behind the plate.

The rest of the team included Boston's Fred Lynn and Jim Rice and Baltimore's Ken Singleton in the outfield, Minnesota's Roy Smalley at shortstop, Kansas City's George Brett at third, Boston's Dennis Eckersley as the right-handed pitcher, Baltimore's Mike Flanagan as the left-handed pitcher and Texas' Jim Kern the relief pitcher.

Green Retained As Phil Chief

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dallas Green stepped into the driver's seat of the Philadelphia Phillies with a one-year managerial contract and a guarantee against getting fired. But the self-described "rough-and-gruff" dugout boss said his main concern is winning a championship for the Phillies with basically the same team that finished fourth in the National League East this season.

Green, who took over as interim manager when Danny Ozark was fired Aug. 31, was named manager at a press conference Thursday.

"I think Paul (Owens, director of player personnel) and I are prepared to do what we have to make a winner. We don't want to break up the nucleus of the team, but we'll do what we have to," said Green, the Phillies' director of farm teams since 1972.

Green said he would institute an off-season conditioning program, although many of the players already work out during the winter months. Green also said pitchers would run, which some did not do under Ozark.

Coaches Bobby Wine, Billy DeMars and Herm Starrette will be retained while Bob Tiefenauer will return to the Phillies' minor league system as a pitching instructor.

Cavs Outshoot Spurs, 141-134

By The Associated Press — "Run and gun" was a way of life in the old American Basketball Association.

Now Stan Albeck is making it the livelihood of the Cleveland Cavaliers in the National Basketball Association.

"Isn't that an entertaining kind of basketball?" Albeck asked Thursday night after his Cavaliers outran and outgunned the San Antonio Spurs 141-134.

Albeck, who was an assistant coach for several ABA teams, has changed the style of the Cavs, who used to run a slower, patterned offense.

San Antonio guard George Gervin, who got his pro start when the Spurs were in the ABA, put on a real ABA-style show, scoring 47 points. But that was more than offset by a Cleveland quartet with a total of 103 points: Campy Russell's 33 points, Austin Carr's 28, Mike Mitchell's 22 and Randy Smith's 20.

In other NBA action, San Diego defeated Chicago 111-107, Portland whipped Utah 107-92, Detroit stopped New York 129-115 and Atlanta beat Indiana 115-85.

Clippers 111, Bulls 107
Lloyd Free scored 32 points, including a pair of free throws to snap a 105-105 tie with 35 seconds remaining, as he led San Diego over Chicago.

Chicago's Ricky Sobers scored a basket with 20 seconds left to cut the Clippers' lead to 108-107. But Brian Taylor — who had 22 points for the night — sank three free throws in the final 14 seconds and put the game away for San Diego.

Blazers 107, Jazz 92
Tom Owens and Ron X needed attack with 21 points apiece as Portland defeated Utah. Owens and Brewer keyed a 24-10 scoring spurt to help the Blazers take a 55-35 lead at the half.

Brewer's eight third-quarter points sparked the Trailblazers to their biggest lead of the game, at 64-37.

Utah rookie Paul Dawkins scored 30 points in 24 minutes.

Pistons 129, Knicks 115
Hot shooting by guard James McElroy in the second and fourth periods lifted Detroit over New York. McElroy, who finished with 31 points, scored 10 in the second period when the Pistons broke away from a 32-32 first-quarter tie to outscore the Knicks 37-22 and grab a 69-54 halftime lead. McElroy also helped the Pistons keep the Pistons comfortably in front with three quick baskets when the Knicks threatened in the last period.

Hawks 115, Pacers 85
Jack Givens' 20 points led nine Atlanta players in double figures as the Hawks beat Indiana. The Hawks dominated throughout, outscoring the Pacers 10-2 in one first-period span to take a 16-9 lead, then spent the rest of the game padding it.

Center Wayne "Tree" Rollins blocked nine shots and led an Atlanta defense that forced 36 turnovers.

Sore Wrist Not Stopping Tate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — "Nothing, I guess, will stop John Tate," says Ace Miller, the manager of the man who will fight Gerrie Coetzee for the World Boxing Association heavyweight title Saturday night.

Maybe not. But for a time it appeared a sore left wrist might.

Tate complained of pain in the wrist in the past and about three weeks ago he told Miller it was hurting again. Miller said the fighter began to favor the wrist.

So Miller took Tate to some local physicians who told the press and the fight was reported in jeopardy.

Miller said X-rays of the wrist proved negative but that he was still worried, not only about the wrist but about Tate's frame of mind.

"He don't like pain anyway," Miller said of the 6-foot-4, 235-pound Tate. "But I told him, 'You gotta live with pain, man.'"

So Dr. Robert Whittle of Knoxville, Tenn., Tate's physician, was summoned. Whittle said the problem was a muscle problem involving lack of lubrication in the wrist, but while it was painful it was not serious.

But Miller was still concerned — a fighter favoring a hand in a tough fight is a fighter in trouble.

"Are you going to favor it?" asked Miller.

"No," replied Tate. "We've come too far. I've paid too big a price."

That price could return enormous dividends Saturday night in Pretoria's Loftus Versfeld rugby stadium.

Tate is getting $400,000 for the fight, but a victory would put him in the million-dollar bracket for his next fight and also would put him in line for a big-money showdown with World Boxing Council champ Larry Holmes, possibly late next year.

But Coetzee, 24 and unbeaten like Tate, doesn't figure to be as easy an opponent as Coetzee's fellow South African, Kallie Knoetze. Tate stopped Knoetze in eight rounds last June 2 to earn the right to fight Coetzee for the title made vacant by Muhammad Ali.

Coetzee scored a 10-round decision over Knoetze in 1976. He earned his title shot with a one-round knockout last June 24 of Leon Spinks.

Colts Bow To Hawks

LITTLEFIELD — North Lenior erupted for 12 points in the second and third quarters and went on to defeat Ayden-Gritton Thursday night, 40-6, in a junior varsity football game.

North Lenior, now 7-0, opened the scoring in the first period on an 11-yard run. The Chargers came back to narrow the gap to 8-6 on a 41-yard pass from Jesse Stewart to Tyron Gay.

In the second period, the Hawks scored on a 60-yard run and a 21-yard pass to go up 20-6 at the half.

The Hawks scored twice more in the third quarter, on two- and 60-yard runs. North Lenior's final tally came in the final period on a 64-yard pass.

Ayden-Gritton, now 2-3-1, takes on Southern Nash Thursday.

By The Associated Press — Probably the hardest game to call this season in Atlantic Coast Conference football will be when North Carolina meets North Carolina State Saturday at Raleigh's Carter-Finley Stadium.

So far, almost everyone is calling it a draw. If 15th-ranked N.C. State beats back the 19th-ranked Tar Heels in the regionally-televised game, the Wolfpack will have a chance to take a firm grip on the top spot in the conference standings.

But the renewal of the N.C.

State-North Carolina rivalry won't be the only game this weekend that's critical in the championship race.

Wake Forest, in the No. 2 spot behind the Wolfpack in the standings with a 2-1 league record and 5-1 overall, wants a victory over Maryland, 1-1, 3-3 to keep its team rolling on the road to victory.

Clemson, 1-1, 4-1, will be trying to stay in the race with a win at Duke.

In nonconference games, Auburn (4-1) visits Georgia Tech (1-3) and Virginia (4-2) plays

Navy (5-0) at Annapolis.

North Carolina will be counting on quarterback Matt Kuepec and teammate Amos Lawrence in attempting to hand the Wolfpack its first conference loss of the year. Lawrence will be trying to get back to his old form after getting only 34 yards in last week's loss to Wake Forest.

But the North Carolina defense may have trouble with a Wolfpack attack that racked up 121 points in its first four games.

Wake Forest is off to its best start since 1951, but Coach John Mackovic doesn't think the team can afford to relax.

"Maryland's been hurt by injury part of this season but don't forget this is the same Maryland team that is always in the thick of the ACC race every year," he said.

So far this season, the Terps have had trouble getting their offense rolling. They managed only two touchdowns in consecutive losses to Kentucky, Penn State and N.C. State.

Clemson, which allowed only two touchdowns in wins over Georgia, Virginia and Virginia Tech, is the easy favorite in its matchup with Duke. The Tigers lead the ACC in both scoring and total defense. The Blue Devils, coming off a 34-7 victory over Richmond, are directed by quarterback Stanley Driskell, who passed for 216 yards against the Tigers.

Georgia Tech must deal with Auburn, which handed N.C. State its only loss of the season and ranks 14th in the nation.

Tiger running back Joe Cribbs has already rolled up 580 yards rushing this year and the team is averaging more than 320 yards per game on the ground. The Yellow Jacket attack has been sporadic.

Virginia has managed to beat Navy only three times in their 26 meetings. But Virginia defensive back Pat Chester says their clash may be the pivotal game of the season for the improved Cavaliers, determining how the rest of the season will go.

Despite Anderson's Efforts, Cardinals Haven't Blossomed

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

It's been a long time since Ottis Anderson exploded onto the National Football League scene with a 193-yard rushing performance ... a very, very long time for the St. Louis Cardinals.

Anderson, the Cardinals' No.1 draft choice out of Miami, has done just about everything expected of him. He's third in the National Conference in rushing with 663 yards and has added 21 receptions for 150 additional yards.

Kush Gets His Chance

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — City and campus police guarded Arizona State University officials and football players today as ousted Coach Frank Kush prepared to defend himself in federal court against charges of intimidating witnesses to an alleged assault on a former punter.

"We've had several," said ASU police chief George Bays when asked about reports of threats to athletic director Fred Miller and John Schwada, university president. "We do have security assigned to all the principals, even during practice."

None of the threats has been carried out, but several were being investigated, Bays said.

Bob Owens, named by Miller to replace Kush last Saturday, ordered the practices closed until after next Saturday's Pac-10 game with Washington State. "We have had far too many distractions," Owens said.

Miller charged that Kush punched Kevin Rutledge, and then pressured assistant coaches and players into lying to cover up the incident. Kush continued to deny the charges, despite a dozen sworn statements from players and coaches obtained by Miller on Tuesday night and revealed Wednesday.

The 13,000-member Sun Angel Foundation, a booster club that has provided about $6 million in scholarship and stadium funding to ASU, met Thursday to discuss a report that its executive director, Gene Felker, witnessed the alleged assault and had been asked to give a deposition.

But despite his performance, starting with that near-record yardage against Dallas — the Cowboys won the game 22-21 on a late field goal — St. Louis has failed to become the NFC East contenders that so many fans figured they'd be. They're 2-5, rattling around the division basement along with the New York Giants, four games behind co-leaders Dallas and Philadelphia — and they play the Cowboys in Dallas this Sunday.

Sunday's other games are Philadelphia at Washington, the Giants at Kansas City, Atlanta at San Francisco, Baltimore at Buffalo, Cincinnati at Cleveland, Green Bay at Tampa Bay, Oakland at the New York Jets, Miami at New England, Chicago at Minnesota, Detroit at New Orleans, Houston at Seattle and San Diego at Los Angeles. On Monday night it's Denver at Pittsburgh.

After being chewed up so royally by Anderson, who came within one yard of Alan Ameche's first pro game record, the Cowboys began re-establishing their Doomsday Defense, to the point that it is now the conference's best against the rush.

They take a 6-1 record into the game and are rated roughly 10-point favorites to beat the Cardinals — but Cowboys Coach Tom Landry, never one to take matters lightly, observes: "O.J. is still running well. It's not going to be an easy day." Anderson gained 73 yards in St. Louis' 24-20 loss to Philadelphia last Sunday.

As if facing Dallas' defense wasn't enough, the Cards must also try to prep their own defense (second in the NFC against the rush but ninth against the pass) for an onslaught by Roger Staubach.

The Cowboys' quarterback is No.1 among conference passers and has thrown 11 touchdowns while being intercepted only three times. Last Sunday night against Los Angeles he completed 13 of 18 passes for 176 yards and three TDs. He now owns the Cowboys' TD passing record of 137, having passed Don Meredith's 135 during the 30-6 victory over the Rams.

Considering all of that, St. Louis Coach Bud Wilkinson was asked what the Cardinals would have to do to defeat Dallas.

"Be very lucky," he said.

The Eagles are riding a five-game winning streak, their longest since starting the 1961 season 7-1, thanks to Wilbert Montgomery's thundering hootbeats. He's second in the NFC in rushing with 696 yards (30 behind Chicago's Walter Payton), and leads the conference's non-kickers in scoring with 48 points on eight touchdowns, five rushing and three receiving.

The Redskins, 5-2, will have to contain him if they are to stay in the East Division race. They didn't do it very well in Philadelphia two weeks ago, when Montgomery scored all four touchdowns in the Eagles' 28-17 triumph.

The Giants, who have won their last two games with rookie Phil Simms as the starting quarterback, head into Kansas City, where Chiefs Coach Marv Levy has reinstated veteran Mike Livingston at quarterback in place of rookie Tave Fuller.

With Cincinnati having beaten Pittsburgh last Sunday, compliments of the Steelers' nine turnovers, San Francisco remains the NFL's only winless team. The 49ers will be trying to pick up that elusive first victory against the Falcons, out to rebound from their 50-19 shellacking by Oakland.

Last Decade In Service

By DR. H.G. JONES
For The Associated Press
CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) —

William Winford Wales was nearly 75 years old when he gave up his business and home in Minnesota and became a Quaker missionary to the mountain people of the South. It had been more than a half century since he left Iredell County, and during that time he had been postmaster and mayor of St. Anthony, Minn., a member of the territorial legislature and a prominent business man in the Minneapolis area.

Now, in 1892, still vigorous and adventurous, Wales chose the mountainous section along the border between Surry County and Patrick County, Va., as his first mission field.

Just over the border in Virginia, he followed in the footsteps of David E. Sampson, an English Quaker, who had established a small mission under the care of the North Carolina Friends Yearly Meeting. Three teachers were in charge of more than a hundred mountain children.

Wales added a non-denominational Bible school and began visiting homes in the pioneer areas of two states.

His descriptions of the settlers provide a graphic account of the backwardness of the area. Some of the settlements were virtually inaccessible except on foot or on horseback, and only 20 percent of the people were said to be able to read and write.

The people, Wales wrote, lived in "little log huts, some of them have but one opening, except the openings between the logs, through the clapboard roofs and through the puncheon floors, through all of which the wind blows unhindered."

They still cooked over the fireplace, wove their own cloth on a loom and picked cotton seeds with their fingers. Some of the citizens, Wales wrote, had never seen a window glass or a carpet.

But, he added, the mountaineers were remarkably kind and their hospitality almost incredulous.

By 1895 Wales had moved his center of activity to White Sulphur Springs, four miles north of Mt. Airy. There he established another non-denominational Bible school with free tuition to all that would come. Students studied four days a week, worked two days and rested the seventh day.

Homes in the community provided room and board for $80 a year and sponsors of students were sought in the North. A "missionary tent" was sent by Minnesota friends and a number of volunteers came southward to help Wales, including three women — Marion Russell, Inga Hough and Lorinda Swenson.

By circular letter Wales appealed to Northerners for aid, including used clothing which could be issued to the needy in return for vegetables, fruit, meats or labor.

By 1897 Wales had lived in five different homes in Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee. Forty northern volunteers had joined him for varying lengths of time, and a number of natives had become "efficient workers." In that year Wales listed his address as Wallace's Switch, Washington County, Va.

As he passed his 80th birthday, William W. Wales was still traveling the narrow trails of the isolated hollows and mountainsides of two states. He had set up "out stations" in several areas, and he wrote, "At each removal we have been entirely satisfied that we carried out the Master's will."

Wales continued his evangelistic and educational work at a pace that would have taxed a younger man. Finally, worn out by arduous work among the mountain people, William Wales died in Asheville in 1902, at the age of 84. He had dedicated the last decade of his life to his native peoples.

$160,000 Grant To Boost Scholarships

WINSTON-SALEM — R. J. Reynolds Industries, Inc., has presented a grant of $160,000 to North Carolina A & T State University to support a new scholarship program for students pursuing careers in business and engineering.

Established as the R. J. Reynolds Industries, Inc. Scholarship Fund, the grant is the largest ever received by the Greensboro-based university from a North Carolina corporation.

"We believe that the Scholarship Fund is an investment in the future of this university," said Marshall Bass, RJR's corporate director of personal development.

"We believe that it is also an investment in the lives of many black Americans, and we believe too that this program is a sound investment for our company," Bass added.

Dr. Lewis C. Dowdy, chancellor of A & T, said, "This grant will greatly enhance our position with respect to attracting high-quality students for these two highly visible and highly competitive academic programs at our university. We are grateful to R. J. Reynolds Industries for establishing this scholarship program."

Dr. Dowdy said recipients of the scholarships will be designated R. J. Reynolds scholars.

Hopeful News in Medicine

Cholesterol and triglycerides are well-established causes for narrowing of arteries. The condition, known as atherosclerosis, is due to calcium plaques that are deposited on the walls of the arteries that lead to the heart and to the brain.

A fascinating study has been released that indicates the possibility of keeping arteries free of these obstructing plaques. Dr. M. Rene Malinow and his colleagues at the Oregon Regional Primate Center, have found that experimental monkeys, when fed on a high cholesterol and fat diet, developed the plaques so common in humans.

Yet, when these animals were fed alfalfa meal in addition to their diet, the plaques did not occur as readily. In fact, it was found that even if plaques had already developed, alfalfa meal tended to reduce the size of these life-threatening lesions in the arteries.

Dr. Malinow speculates that the alfalfa may attach itself to the cholesterol and prevent its absorption into the bloodstream.

This brilliantly conceived experimental study is being watched with great interest in the hope that some of the findings may be translated to use in humans.

Hormone studies of women are said to yield a special urine test that may be of value in the early detection of breast cancers.

Dr. Jack Fishman and his co-workers, at the Montefiore Hospital in New York and at the Creighton University in Omaha, have found that women with a family history of cancer excrete the hormone, estrone, in the urine about the time of ovulation.

Ovulation is the time of the month when the ovaries produce their eggs.

This interesting finding has led the research team to further investigate the real relationship between this hormone and the development of breast cancer.

This is a new avenue of approach. It may have long-reaching possibilities for the earliest recognition of cancer of the breast. Perhaps, even before such tumors become evident, doctors and their patients may be on guard. For early detection is the basis for early treatment. And this accounts for the remarkable success that now occurs in this massive problem.

The problem of collecting and storing blood for transfusions has always been a complex affair. Most of the difficulty arises with the inadequate supply of blood donors. After years of research, a synthetic blood has been created and used successfully in Japan. An emulsion of fluoro-carbons was created by Dr. Ryoichi Naito, in Osaka. This experimental substance is being thoroughly studied as a possible replacement when real blood is not available.

Feldman's Mark On Religious Comedy

By VERNON SCOTT
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Religion is not a popular subject for movie comedies for obvious reason — namely offending millions of movigoers in the Bible belt and elsewhere.

But English writer-director-comedian Marty Feldman fearlessly has produced "In God We Trust," subtitled "Gimme That Prime Time Religion," a zany expose of the TV Bible thumpers who appear on Sunday morning video across the country.

Feldman, who wrote the script, directed himself in the role of Brother Ambrose, a devout supporter of God's word in a silent religious order.

When the monastery goes broke, Ambrose heads for Los Angeles in search of Armageddon T. Thunderbird (Andy Kaufman), a reputed holy man and star of the traveling religious circuit.

Ambrose carries with him a letter of appeal for funds, $50, two pesetas and a ticket to the Seattle World's Fair of 1932.

A celibate monk who leaves the monastery a total innocent at age 45, Brother Ambrose has never seen a woman before encountering Louise Lasser ("Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman") who plays a hooker. She brings the monk up to date in a hurry — and provides Feldman with his first love scene on screen.

Lasser makes the first move by diving beneath Brother Ambrose's robes in search of religious sanctuary when the cops raid her beat.

Brother Ambrose remonstrates with the hooker, saying, "I've never met a woman before, let alone had one on the premises."

Feldman, wearing green overalls and a blue baseball cap with silver wings (not unlike Mercury's) sprouting from the sides, skipped into a Hollywood restaurant after a day of editing "In God We Trust."

Feldman's presence is unsettling. Due to an automobile accident, he says, his eyes focus in different and apparently uncoordinated directions. While he studies a menu with one eye, the other is likely to be obsessed with a clock on the wall 180 degrees from the bill of fare.

When he observes you directly, his eyes tend to alternate focus, leaving the observee with a unique experience, not unlike watching a table tennis match at close range.

A sweetly gentle man, prone to calling men and women alike "darling," "luv" and "dear" in a semi-Cockney accent, Feldman takes his comedy almost seriously.

"You must understand that 'In God We Trust' is not a spoof or satire," he said, his eyes riveted on a shapely waitress to his left and a glass of water to his right.

"The film's a slapstick fable. Part of it is the story of monk meets hooker, which is not the same thing at all as boy meets girl."

"The story is really about big-time religion in this country. I've researched the whole manifestation of commercialized religion from Billy Sunday and Aimee Semple McPherson to Oral Roberts, Marjoe and Billy Graham.

"I found nothing I invested in the script was as outrageous as already exists among television's evangelists."

"This evangelistic phenomenon doesn't exist in Europe because the TV jackpot is much bigger in this country. English TV is not interested. They can't advertise beer and cigars which are considered sinful by religious pitchmen.

"Most of these religious characters spring from California which is as far west as they can go without going east."

"Los Angeles is a hotbed for revivalists, evangelists, occultists, phrenologists, fringe gurus and all the rest. What can you expect of a town that has Disneyland at one end and Forest Lawn at the other? You can imagine what lies between."

"Mind you, I'm not attacking religion. But I do attempt to take on the ripoff fundraising involved in religion. Perhaps Graham and Roberts will be offended."

"I'm not certain I'll outrage a lot of people. If I offend Anita Bryant, my work will be wasted. I've not set out to offend most people, just to people who offend me. The picture's anti organized religion. But it's mostly fun."

"The theme comes out of my own anger at the exploitation peoples' personal religion belief. I have flirted with Catholicism myself in the past but I never thoroughly succumbed."

ALICE FOR ERA — Linda Lavin, the television actress who portrays the character "Alice" said in an interview in Washington that she is a closet backer of the Equal Rights Amendment and bases her support on economic grounds. Lavin says that "Alice" is all for ERA. (AP Laserphoto)

Insurers Agree Reopen Herbicide Negotiations

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Insurers for the Smith-Douglass company have agreed to reopen negotiations with farmers who are not satisfied with payments they received after their crops were damaged by a herbicide, the state Insurance Department said Thursday.

The farmers' crops were damaged when they came into contact with fertilizer contaminated by the herbicide picloram.

Lloyds of London, secondary insurer for the fertilizer company, has agreed to renegotiate the disputed settlements and settle for damage to crops other than tobacco, according to a statement by Deputy Commissioner Kenn Brown.

Smith-Douglass' prime insurer, Affiliated Factory Mutual Insurance Co., has already exhausted its $10 million liability in attempting to settle claims in North and South Carolina for tobacco crops damaged by the herbicide.

Lloyds of London and its group of insurers hold a policy covering damages in excess of $10 million but limited to $40 million.

The state insurance commissioner's staff has requested that Commissioner John Ingram revoke Affiliated Factory Mutual's license to do business in North Carolina. The staff has accused the company of delaying settlements, making partial settlements and failing to notify Ingram that out-of-state adjusters would be used in the negotiating process.

More than 1,200 claims, possibly representing up to $16 million in damages, have been filed for tobacco alone, according to spokesmen for the state and the insurers. Damages to other crops, such as soybeans and vegetables, must still be added up.

The picloram was found in fertilizer manufactured by Smith-Douglass at its plants in Kinston and Wilmington. The fertilizer was intended for tobacco but was used on the other crops as well.

Brown said Thursday that letters will be sent to all farmers affected by the picloram damage explaining the steps Lloyds is willing to take for a settlement, including an assurance that "any release they may sign will in no way eliminate their right to future negotiations."

The agreement with Lloyds to reexamine the claims already settled, Brown said, is "completely separate from any consideration of the revocation of Affiliated Factory Mutual's license to do business in North Carolina, nor does it in any way release Affiliated Factory Mutual from its obligations as the primary insurer."

Visited U.S. With Respirator

By JOE DePRIEST
Shelby Daily Star
SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — For Mrs. Dorothy Stone of Gosport, England, crossing the street from her home was a difficult task. An iron lung was her entire world. But last week, that limited world was expanded.

Mrs. Stone made a trans-Atlantic flight to America and a first visit with her cousin, Mrs. Doris Hovis of Shelby.

Polio struck Mrs. Stone when she was 19. Doctors told her she would be confined to a wheelchair and, by age 21, she would be dead.

Bitterness filled her, but she would not give up the fight.

"We don't give up. We have people who just won't let you give up," said Mrs. Stone, seated in a wheelchair at her cousin's home.

"I'm 51 and I do walk a little.

I can write and make a cup of tea and type. There's so much I can do."

Mrs. Stone can go 12 hours before using the respirator. At night, it breathes for her after she's fitted into a dome-like cuirass shell with a hose.

"Last January, I took it into my head I'd like to go to America. Ellen (Mrs. Ellen Russell, her friend and attendant) said, 'Right! Let's go!'"

Mrs. Stone had traveled around England on day-long outings, but nothing this ambitious.

There were some major problems, starting with getting insurance. Next came the equipment — nine pieces, including three portable respirators, about $20,000 worth. Fragile lifelines, Mrs. Stone calls them, all necessary for her to breathe. Her doctor, Geoffrey Spencer of St. Thomas Hospital (the Florence Nightingale hospital) in London, gave the go-ahead, making the trip possible.

Speaker At Homecoming

REV. ROBERT K. SMITH

BETHEL — The Rev. Robert Kinsey Smith, associate minister of First United Methodist Church, Henderson, will be the guest minister for homecoming at Bethel United Methodist Church Sunday, Oct. 21.

The Rev. Smith, a Bethel native, is the son of Mrs. W. Jasper Smith. He is a graduate of Duke University, where he was a William Neal Reynolds Scholar, and the Law School of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Smith practiced law in Nashville and Rocky Mount before returning to Duke, where he graduated from the Divinity School. Smith is now serving his second year as associate minister in Henderson.

Homecoming services will begin at 9:45 a.m. with church school, followed by the morning worship at 11 a.m. Dinner will be served on the grounds after the service.

All members, former members and friends of the Bethel United Methodist Church are invited to attend.

For three years, she lived in an iron lung — "a tube" — never knowing when or if she would leave it. Nine long years in hospital beds.

Then came a dreamlike day when she boarded a jet and flew across the ocean on "the very first trip of my life."

Mrs. Stone and Mrs. Hovis, who have the same grandfather, were kept in contact throughout the years, although they had never met until last week.

"We kept in touch as best we could through the mails" and exchanged tape recorded messages, Mrs. Stone said.

Mrs. Hovis' parents came from Dorman's Land, Surrey, England, to New York where she was born. (Mrs. Hovis' mother, Minnie Ingledew, is 95 and lives with her daughter.)

In 1970, Mrs. Hovis and her husband David retired from government jobs in Washington. He was a security analyst with the White House and she worked for the Central Intelligence Agency. They moved to Fort Myers, Fla., and three years ago, came to Shelby because Mr. Hovis' brother and sister lived here and they liked being near the mountains.

Mrs. Hovis says she always planned to visit her relatives in England. Likewise, Mrs. Stone wanted very much to see her cousin and Mrs. Ingledew, "my sole remaining aunt."

At 14, Mrs. Stone went to work at a Woolworth's store and kept the job during World War II. "We were on the flight path of German aircraft," she said, recalling that the area was often bombed.

"I was bombed out twice and machine-gunned once," she said.

The war ended, her career advanced. By 1947, she was a senior supervisor. That year was also the year of the great polio epidemic in England. Some 9,000 persons came down with the disease. Mrs. Stone saw photos of victims in magazines. One theatre near her put an iron lung in the lobby as a collection point for polio donations.

She herself made a donation, not knowing that she would soon fall victim to the epidemic.

"I was the first person in that iron lung," she said. Months passed, and a curtain of gloom closed her in. "I was bitter and angry. I denied there was a God and everything."

Mrs. Stone said facing the realities of life was difficult. "A lot of toil, sweat and tears. I give God the glory. Through Him and prayer this has been made possible."

Ten years after she was stricken, she married a man she'd known since school days. Mrs. Stone was aware that her husband had a kidney disease and didn't have long to live.

Her only child died at birth, and eight years after the marriage, her husband died. Mrs. Stone then spent the next six years in a hospital.

"I wanted to live in a home. The Lord answered my prayers."

For 3½ years Mrs. Stone lived with a couple she described as "lifelong friends." They eventually moved, and Mrs. Stone found another friend, Mrs. Russell. Both women are active in the Church of England.

"I've been picking up the threads again, visiting people who need help."

In Shelby, Mrs. Stone and her cousin have spent their time searching the family's history. They have visited the mountains, gone to church together, and sampled grits and hamburgers. A trip to Asheville and visits with other relatives are also on the agenda.

Italy captured the 1979 European Bridge Championships, and the Bols brilliancy prize for the best-played hand went to the young Italian star, Dano de Falco for this hand from his country's match against Israel.

North's jump to four clubs was a splinter bid. It showed the values for a raise to four hearts and either a singleton or void in clubs. With a minimum opening bid, De Falco was not interested in anything more than game.

West led a low club and East's queen lost to the ace. At trick two, declarer led the jack of clubs, and when West failed to cover that card, declarer assigned the king of clubs to East and ruffed in dummy. Trumps were drawn in two rounds, ending in the closed hand, and a diamond was led to the jack and king. East returned the ten of diamonds, West won the ace and persevered with diamonds, declarer winning the queen in dummy.

By inference and the early play, declarer had established that East had started with the king of diamonds and king-queen of clubs. Since East was a passed hand, he could not have the ace of spades as well—that would have given him a full opening bid. Yet if West held the ace of spades, it seemed that there was no way declarer would avoid losing two spade tricks.

However, De Falco knew that this information was not available to the defenders. If East held the queen of spades and not the ten, there was still hope. So declarer led the jack of spades from dummy. East had counted declarer's distribution, and he hoped that South was on a spade guess for his contract. So he played low—as did declarer! The "Chinese finesse" forced West to win the ace, and the contract rolled home.

Pupils Sharing Read-In Week

GRIMESLAND — Students at G. R. Whitfield School have been participating in a read-in week, with the theme "Reading Jogs Your Mind."

Friday, students were challenged during an assembly, with Mrs. Mary Jo MacKenzie, media coordinator, previewing the week's events. Mrs. Ann Sullivan, media coordinator at Stokes Elementary, told stories to the group, while eighth grade students, under the direction of Mrs. Jo Caton, presented a special disco dance to the theme song, "Reading Jogs Your Mind."

A book fair is being held in the media center for the students and their parents, offering paperback books, games and puzzles for sale. All language arts classes are involved in special projects to be displayed in the media center. These projects include making bulletin boards, posters, diaramas, filmstrips, and the choosing of a "Miss Read-In."

Special guests during the week have included Ott Alford, Pitt County Schools Superintendent, and G. R. Whitfield parents, who have shared favorite stories with the students. During the week, all students are reading for pleasure from 1-1:30 p.m.
