Ten More Hostages Are Freed By Iran

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Ten more Americans freed after being held hostage for 16 days in the U.S. Embassy in Tehran were flown to Europe today to join three others released Monday.

An Iran Air jetliner carrying the 10 landed at Orly Airport in Paris. They then were flown to Frankfurt, West Germany, in a U.S. Air Force hospital plane and taken by car to an Air Force hospital in nearby Wiesbaden for medical examinations and questioning by U.S. officials. There was no word on whether they would be home in time for Thanksgiving.

According to French security agents at the airport, the Iranian jetliner arrived with one engine smoking.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur A. Hartman said the six men and four women "looked in good shape, considering what they have been through." Hartman went on the bus that carried the released hostages to the Air Force plane.

Also on the bus was Ann McKeown, a former secretary to the U.S. ambassador in Tehran, who left shortly before the siege began. Ms. McKeown, fighting back tears, saw old friends among the released hostages and said they looked remarkably well.

Before leaving Tehran one of the freed captives, Joan Walsh of Ogden, Utah, told reporters at Mehrabad Airport that the remaining 53 hostages were in "greater danger than we were."

The U.S. government said two women were among the 49 Americans still held in the embassy by students demanding that the United States hand over deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary regime for trial. One black man also was believed among them.

The Carter administration renewed its demand for the release of all the hostages and said if Khomeini carried out his threat to put some of them on trial as spies, it would be a "further flagrant violation" of international law as well as a violation of "elementary human rights."

Foreign Press Director Abolghassan Sadegh told The Associated Press it had not been decided whether any of the hostages would be tried. But "if there is going to be a trial," he continued, "it will be carried out by the country's legal courts, either the special revolutionary tribunals (which have sentenced more than 600 persons to death by firing squad) or the ordinary courts. There will be no trial by the students in the embassy compound.

"Even if some of the Americans are tried and found guilty and sentenced to death for spying," he added, "the imam (Khomeini) is empowered under Islamic law to pardon them."

Iranian Foreign Minister Abolhassan Bani Sadr in a CBS interview Monday said the remaining hostages could not be released for two months — until after a new Iranian government is installed — unless the United States surrendered the ailing shah to stand trial for the death of at least 60,000 political opponents Khomeini's supporters claim were killed during his 37-year reign.

The four women members of the embassy staff and six blacks were freed today in compliance with Khomeini's order last weekend to release female and black Americans found not guilty of spying.

Another woman and two black Marine sergeants were freed Monday and flown to Wiesbaden. They were reported in good mental and physical condition.

The three released Monday reported there had been seven women and 10 blacks among the captives in the embassy, two women and one black more than were freed. The State Department confirmed that two women and a black man were still held and identified them as Elizabeth Ann Swift, a political officer, Katherine Koob and Charles Jones, both communications officers.

The State Department said the four women freed today were Elizabeth Montagne, Calumet City, Ill.; Terri Tedford, South San Francisco, Calif.; Miss Walsh, and Lillian Johnson, Elmont, N.Y. It said the six blacks were David Walker, Waller, Texas; Lloyd Rollins, Alexandria, Va.; Wesley Williams, Albany, N.Y.; Neal Robinson, Houston, Texas; James Hughes, Langley AFB, Va., and Joseph Vincent, New Orleans.

Like the trio freed Monday, they were put on display by their captors at a news conference at the embassy Monday night. Miss Johnson said they "were not harmed at all" but she underwent "a lot of interrogation, believe me — at rude hours of the evening."

City School Food Service Reported Suffering Deficit

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

A status report of the School Food Service of Greenville City Schools reveals that despite an increase in meal prices and an improved use of cafeterias by students, the service continues to operate on a deficit.

A financial report presented by Linda Tingle, manager of the School Food Service, to members of the school board at its action meeting Monday night, shows that for the period July 1 through October 31, revenues totaled $203,963.63, expenditures totaled $205,243.04, giving a deficit for that period of $1,279.41.

Both Ms. Tingle and Superintendent Glenn Cox noted that it is difficult to project an overall pattern as to whether or not the system will continue to operate all during the year in a deficit status, for several reasons. For one thing, reimbursements from the U.S. Department of Agriculture are received on a delayed basis; i.e., the reimbursement for September has just been received.

Also, the system began this school year with an outstanding debt of $30,000 borrowed from the Greenville City School budget. The expenditures of the July-October period this school year includes payments of $13,000 on that loan — leaving the School Food System indebted to the school budget for $17,000.

One factor that will help is that of planned cutback on cafeteria employment. Based on student population, the State Dept. of Public Instruction recommends a total of 355 employment hours per month for the ten schools in the system. The number of employment hours for October was 375. Cut down by attrition in employment will, according to Ms. Tingle, help cut the operating deficit.

An increased use of cafeterias by students would be the single biggest boost to overcoming the present deficit.

Figures compiled in the report shows that for October the percentage of students eating lunches in cafeterias ranged from 68 per cent at Aycock to 86 per cent at Third Street.

The percentage at Rose High is 50 percent, but at Rose seniors, who constitute about 30 per cent of the school population, are permitted to leave school to eat lunch off campus.

Ms. Tingle noted that means of increasing student use of cafeterias were being considered, and that the take what you want method which has been successful at Middle School may soon be used at Aycock.

Two budget amendments were approved at Monday night's meeting. Amendment No. 1 for an increase in federal grants allocations adds $69,161.28 to the current expense budget. Budget Amendment No. 2 is an increase of $12,513 representing an allocation for the ESEA VI-B program.

Together, the two amendments add $81,674.28 to the current operating budget, bringing the total received in federal grants of all types to $910,268.58.

A report on "Developing Coping and Cognitive Skills Through Science" in the curriculum for mentally handicapped students in grades five through eight was presented by Mrs. Wende Allen of the Greenville City School system and Dr. Floyd Mattheis of East Carolina University.

The ESEA IV-C funded project is designed to be implemented in stages. At this time, curriculum materials are being developed by Dr. Mattheis and Dr. John T. Richards, both of ECU.

Also at this time, teachers who are working with handicapped students will receive training in the use of these materials. Plans are for regular classroom teachers to get training with these materials, as well as in intervention strategies during the coming school year, and following that, handicapped students will be included in regular classrooms settings.

Ms. Allen noted that to the best of her knowledge this program is the first of its kind in the nation.

On other agenda items, the school board:

U.S. Incomes Still Lose Ground To Rising Prices

By GLENN RITT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — American incomes continued to lose ground to rising prices last month, while homebuilding began what may be a long, steep slide due to rising interest rates.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that personal, pre-tax income rose 0.8 percent in October to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $1.975 trillion. That means that every American received, at an annual rate, an average of $7,495. The figure includes all income, ranging from wages to welfare to dividends.

But the increase in income was less than the rate of consumer price inflation, which has been rising at about 1 percent a month, or more than 13 percent a year.

Despite double-digit inflation, Americans in October saved much more of their new income than in recent months, the Commerce Department said.

Consumer spending increased only $2.7 billion during the month, compared to a $26.1 billion increase in September, the department reported. Meanwhile, savings rose $7.5 billion last month, compared with a $20.3 billion decline in September.

"The cautious consumer spent less and saved more in October, a typical characteristic of a recession," said Jack Carlson, chief economist of the National Association of Realtors.

Commerce Department economist William Cox said the drop in spending reflected steep declines in auto sales.

Car sales in October plunged 17 percent and industry analysts believe volume may fall even more this month, with the financially ailing Chrysler Corp. feeling the tightest pinch.

A continued savings surge would certainly hurt U.S. automakers, but could temper inflation, which is caused partly by heavy spending and credit use.

On Oct. 6, the Federal Reserve Board took sweeping anti-inflation action, largely to tighten credit.

But the move boosted interest rates to nearly 16 percent for the very best bank customers. And mortgage rates have exceeded 13 percent in those states where banks are still making home loans.

The impact of these record-high interest rates shows up clearly in October's housing starts report, Cox said, and homebuilding activity will slow more precipitously in the coming months, housing experts say.

The Commerce Department said housing starts in October totaled 1.76 million units at a seasonally-adjusted annual rate — down from September's 1.91 million annual rate.

The number of building permits issued for future home construction fell even more steeply — 13 percent, the Commerce Department said.

Michael Sumichrast, chief economist of the National Association of Home Builders, said the decline in homebuilding last month is only a hint of things to come. The "real scary numbers — 20 percent to 25 percent drops per month" — will show up by January, he said.

His association predicts that housing starts next year could plummet to 1.1 million, nearly a million units less than in 1978. Other economists put next year's rate of starts at 1.3 million to 1.5 million.

Business Up At N.C. Ports

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — The state's decision to move a large container-freight crane from the Morehead City port to Wilmington has led to increased business at both state ports, Gov. Jim Hunt said today.

Hunt, speaking to the State Ports Authority, offered a defense of his administration's controversial decision to move the crane — a move bitterly opposed by Morehead City port partisans. He said moving the crane, "is a decision already borne out by experience."

"The crane is already making money for the state in Wilmington, and business is growing in Morehead City," Hunt said.

The governor also said the gantry cranes remaining at the Morehead City port are adequate for current cargo needs, including the limited amount of container freight handled at that port.

The moving of the container crane to Wilmington, leaving that port with two such cranes and Morehead City with none, has not damaged the Morehead City port as some had feared, Hunt said.

Instead, the governor said, revenues are up 17 percent in the first four months of the current fiscal year at Morehead City, while losses have been cut in half. Tonnage is up 20 percent, he said.

"Somewhere in the crane controversy, the reason for the move to Wilmington has gotten lost. There were no political pressures in Wilmington to move crane there," he said. "There were no political pressures to move the crane out of Morehead City. There were no pressures — other than business pressures."

Hunt said he would be willing to ask the General Assembly for money to buy another container crane for Morehead City when the State Ports Authority is convinced it is needed.

Increase Guard On Shah

NEW YORK (AP) — Police armed with automatic weapons have been added to the private security force guarding the deposed Shah of Iran on the 17th floor of New York Hospital.

A police spokesman said Monday the assignment of members of the Emergency Service Unit by Commissioner Robert J. McGuire "was not prompted by any specific incident."

Although officials would not elaborate on the decision, sources in the department said the hostage crisis in Iran, and the continuing escalation of threats against the shah's life, led to the move.

"If something were to happen to the shah, it could be just as serious an international incident as our not returning him," one police source said.

Although city police have kept close watch on the hospital grounds and have handled the various nearby anti-shah demonstrations, the last level of security has been handled by the shah's own well-armed security staff.

Hotline gets things done for you. Call 752-1336 and tell your problem or your sound-off or mail it to Hotline, The Daily Reflector, Box 1967, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Because of the large numbers received, Hotline can answer and publish only those items considered most pertinent to our readers. Names must be given, but only initials will be used.

RABID SKUNKS?

The Pitt County Health Department has asked Hotline to appeal to the owners of four skunks purchased at the South Seas Pet Shop here in May, 1979, to contact the health department.

Information provided by the supplier of these skunks indicate that rabies was detected in some of the stock from which these skunks were obtained. Since rabies in skunks may not become apparent for up to six months after exposure and since skunks can be carriers of the rabies virus and not contract the disease, these pets may have the potential for danger without showing any strange behavior or illness, Health Director Dr. Robert F. Ehinger said. He also asked that anyone knowing of someone who has one of these skunks to contact the health department. It is urgent that the owners be contacted, he emphasized.

Dr. Ehinger stressed that if any wild animal that has been domesticated becomes ill or acts in a peculiar manner, he should be isolated from humans and other pets and should be examined by a veterinarian.

EXCEPTION

Hotline does not usually publish "Lost and Found" items, but is making an exception, because the owner of a lost briefcase is from out of town and will be here only a short time longer and because there is no identification in the case to give the finder a local address for the owner. This "Century 21" briefcase was lost in the vicinity of the intersection of Charles Street and Southview Drive. It has the words, Harris-Hanby, Wilmington, Del. on it. Among other things valuable only to her, the owner's glasses are inside. Anyone having the briefcase or knowing of its whereabouts is asked to contact Mrs. Calvin J. Staton Gets Five Years; Witness Role Rapped

Ruth Marie Staton, who testified last week in Pitt County Superior Court against Dr. Andrew A. Best in connection with the Eastern Tar River Credit Union embezzlement case, was sentenced to five years in prison yesterday by Judge Henry L. Stevens.

Ms. Staton, the former credit union and the chief prosecution witness in the Best trial, had pled guilty to five counts of embezzlement in a plea barganing agreement which also called for her to testify truthfully in other cases.

Best was found not guilty on three counts of conspiracy and two counts of embezzlement were dismissed by State prosecutors yesterday.

Assistant Attorney General Don Stephens said the State had, "no greater evidence, no better evidence," than that presented to the court last week.

Chief Assistant District Attorney Tom Haigwood said had been, "a terrible witness," and, "played a major part in the fact that Andrew A. Best walked out of this courtroom."

He said Ms. Staton failed to live up to her agreement by not giving sufficient details about her dealings with Best and hedging on answers asked her during the trial.

Ms. Staton had testified — which he denied any part in — and made false entries in credit union records.

Judge Stevens recommended that Ms. Staton be admitted to a work-release program, and delayed her committemt to jail until January 7.

In addition to dismissing the other charges against Best, [illegible] dismissed Willie Taft and Marvin Stevenson.

Ms. Staton, Best, Taft and Stevenson were indicted in connection with the credit union case in June, after examiners for the Credit Union Division of the N.C. Department of Commerce, and State Bureau of Investigation agents found a shortage of Terence Reese and Jeremy Flint have been in the forefront of international bridge competition for many years. They are two of the greatest players of the modern age, so you would expect their new book "Trick 13" (Weidenfeld & Nicolson, hardback, 172 pages), to be full of useful advice.

But this is an unusual work, for it contains only one bridge hand! Featured, instead, are the creator of a bridge system, bridge pros, a cheating scandal, drugs and sex—and a murder with a motive only a bridge player could understand. Here's the hand.

East's opening bid was a request for specific aces, and West denied holding any. When East settled in six hearts, South decided that defensive prospects were bleak. Since East seemed to think he could make slam in hearts, South boldly sacrificed at six spades. Do you blame West for doubling?

West's failure to start a heart led declarer to believe that the actual club lead was, in all probability, a singleton. And the presence of three aces between the two hands enabled South to deduce that East, to contract for slam, had to be void in two suits. The hand was now an open book.

Declarer won the ace of clubs, and led the two of spades, intending to finesse dummy's six if West played low. West, however, inserted the nine and the ace won. Declarer crossed to his hand with a heart ruff, played a diamond to the seven and ruffed another heart. There followed a finesse of the nine of diamonds and a ruff of dummy's last heart.

After finessing the jack of diamonds, declarer discarded his two losing clubs on the ace and king of diamonds. Now both declarer and West were down to nothing but three trumps each. Declarer simply led a trump to his eight. West won the jack, but he was forced to lead away from his Q-5 of trumps into declarer's K-10 tenace, and the slam rolled home.

You'll have to read the book to find out about the murder!

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Fishing Dispute

The captains of 11 U.S. fishing vessels are scheduled to go on trial in Canada today. They are charged with fishing illegally in Canadian waters. Like most other countries, Canada and the United States claim exclusive fishing rights within 200 miles of their shores. But the United States believes the 200-mile rule should not apply to species such as tuna, that migrate from one area to another. The American boats were fishing for tuna within Canada's 200-mile limit when Canadian patrol boats seized them. Besides the tuna fishing dispute, the two nations must resolve several other difficult questions, involving fishing rights on the east and west coasts.

One Scientist Says Burden Of Proof On Shroud Has Shifted

WOONSOCKET, R.I. (AP) — The scientist who led the team that investigated the Shroud of Turin last year says evidence so far indicates the linen did in fact wrap the crucified body of Jesus Christ.

"We all thought that we'd find it was a forgery and would be packing up our bags in a half hour," said Thomas D'Muhala, president of Nuclear Technologies Corp. of Amston, Conn.

"Instead, all of us who were there, at least all those I talked to, are convinced that the burden of proof has shifted. The burden is now on the skeptic."

D'Muhala said mounting circumstantial evidence suggests the three-dimensional image on the cloth is that of Jesus and was "projected" on the surface, perhaps by a burst of some kind of radiation emanating from all parts of the body in a two-thousandths-of-a-second flash.

Forty scientists went to Italy on Oct. 8, 1978, for six days of tests on the 14-by-3-foot shroud, which is locked in a silver casket by three different keys and stored in a crypt behind the main altar of the Turin cathedral.

The Roman Catholic Church, which has never taken an official stand on the origin of the relic, agreed to the tests providing they were not harmful to the linen.

D'Muhala said the scientists determined the man depicted on the cloth had been crucified, suffered a very deep and bloody wound on his side, endured 120 lashes and numerous deep wounds around the head. Those wounds would correspond to the Biblical account of the torture endured by Christ, he noted.

D'Muhala, who spoke Saturday at the Woonsocket chapter of the Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship, said scientists who conducted the tests were guaranteed the right to be the first to release the results of their own experiments in scientific journals.

So until those results are published, he said, project members are bound to confidentiality. He said some of the project's major and most startling finds are yet to be made public.

D'Muhala said none of the experiments shows evidence that the image was "painted" onto the cloth, as some persons trying to explain the shroud have suggested.

"Every one of the scientists I have talked to believe the cloth is authentic," he said. "Some say maybe this is a love letter, a tool He left behind for the analytical mind."

U.S. Said Getting Good Saudi Support

By ROBERT B. CULLEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is getting strong support from Saudi Arabia in its confrontation with Iran.

"We appreciate the wisdom of the way the United States is dealing with the situation," Saudi Ambassador Faisal Alhegelan said Monday as he left the State Department after a meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

The Carter administration is going to great lengths to gain the understanding and support of the Saudis, who wield both religious and monetary influence in the Islamic world. Treasury Secretary G. William Miller will visit Riyadh next week.

[illegible] ting on the Saudis to head off any adverse reaction among oil producers to President Carter's decision to freeze Iranian assets in response to the Nov. 4 taking of hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. Some of the smaller producers have voiced fears that their oil revenues might not be safe in U.S. banks.

But Alhegelan said the Saudis have accepted U.S. assurances that the Iranian situation is unique and does not affect their assets. "We don't feel it will have any effect on Saudi Arabia in the future," he said.

Officials say they also are hopeful the Saudis will maintain their current oil production rate of 9.5 million barrels per day, which is 1 million barrels more than the Saudis say they would like to sell.

Without the high Saudi production, the current balance in oil supply and demand might be disrupted, particularly in view of the uncertainty of Iranian supplies. That could lead to a major price increase at the December meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Push Union Concession

WASHINGTON (AP) — After voting by a 71 percent majority to approve contract concessions to the Chrysler Corp., United Auto Workers members who work for Chrysler are being told they may be asked for more.

"Why, when the workers are faced with losing their jobs, shouldn't they be asked for a more substantial sacrifice?" Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, asked Monday.

Several members of the committee, which was continuing hearings today on a proposal to assist the financially ailing automaker, echoed Proxmire's view.

"I do think there is going to have to be a different dimension in the contract," said Sen. Paul Tsongas, D-Mass.

Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, the ranking Republican on the committee, said, "It may be that the workers are going to have to be asked for additional sacrifice or this is simply not going to be approved."

UAW President Donald Fraser said any change in the Chrysler contract would have to be ratified by the union's members.

Proxmire suggested that additional financial concessions might take the form of a wage freeze or an agreement to accept Chrysler stock in place of a pay increase.

The contract contains what the union estimates as $403 million in help for the company. This includes $200 million in a delayed payment to the pension fund and $203 million that Chrysler workers will lose because their wage and fringe benefit increases will go into effect later than those of General Motors and Ford employees.

Surgery Depends on Symptoms of Fibroids

I have fibroid tumors. The doctor has been watching them for 10 years. He hasn't said anything about an operation. I'm curious to know how a doctor decides when surgery is necessary in these cases. I'm 42. — Mrs. G.P., Ill.

Dear Mrs. P.:

Fibroid tumors of the uterus, or womb, may occur singly or there may be a group of them, some small, others large. Their size and position in the uterus and the symptoms they produce are what determine the need for or the kind of surgery that is necessary.

Fibroid tumors are benign, non-cancerous growths. Some are attached to the outside of the womb. Others originate in the muscle wall itself. The fibroids can also occur on the inner lining of the uterus.

Many women are known to have fibroids for many years without any symptoms related to them. When fibroids become large, they may be responsible for unusual or prolonged bleeding during the menstrual period or between menstrual cycles.

In some instances, fibroid tumors may become large and press on the urinary bladder, which lies directly in front of the uterus. Pressure on the bladder may cause frequency of urination and other annoying urinary symptoms. Similarly, a large fibroid may press on the rectum, which lies behind the uterus. Here, too, by pressure, intestinal symptoms may be produced.

Doctors follow their patients who have fibroids. It is when unusual symptoms present themselves that surgery is suggested. It is only in rare instances that a benign, non-cancerous fibroid tumor becomes cancerous. Seeing one's gynecologist or surgeon at regular intervals is the best way to discover any problem that might indicate the need for surgical removal.

* * *

I am bowlegged and I'm embarrassed about it. With a long skirt it's not so noticeable, but with bathing suits or with short skirts it's just awful. Can this be corrected by an operation? I'm 17. I want to hear what you say before I mention it to my parents. — Miss. B.D., S.C.

Dear Miss D.:

Orthopedic surgeons have, for a long time, directed their surgical skill to this problem. Numerous operations have been tried to correct marked bowing of the legs. Each case must, of course, be individually studied before any opinion can be passed on the advantages or disadvantages of surgery.

After discussing this with your parents, it would be wise to get the opinion of an orthopedic surgeon and find out if such a procedure would be helpful to you at your age.

On Probation

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Two former officers in the International Longshoremen Association received five years' probation Monday after one pleaded guilty and the other pleaded no contest to charges of embezzling union funds.

Rutherford Leonard, 67, pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to two felony embezzlement charges. Leonard served as president of ILA Local 1526 for almost 20 years. Judge John D. Larkins Jr. sentenced Leonard to five-years' probation.

Willie Sutton, 61, pleaded no contest to two felony embezzlement charges. He received the same sentence. Sutton is the former business agent for Local 1526. He was charged with receiving union disability payments while he was still active.

Under a plea bargain, five other felony embezzlement charges and one misdemeanor charge against Leonard were dismissed.

Both men were ordered to repay money taken from the union.

The two were among 10 persons from the Wilmington area indicted a year ago as the result of a federal investigation into corruption in ports along the East Coast.

A spokesman for the U.S. Attorney's Office in Raleigh said most of the other cases will be scheduled for trial in 1980.

Pat's Pointers

By Pat Trexler

Lightweight and lighthearted, this crocheted wraparound bolero will find a place in your wardrobe at any time of the year. Wear it now over a frilly blouse or a sleek, uncluttered pullover, and in warmer times wear it solo. At any time of the year, the enchanting embroidered roses will put a touch of springtime in your heart. Directions are for small (8-10), medium (12-14) and large (16).

To obtain directions for making the crocheted bolero, send your request for Leaflet No. P-59 with $1.00 and a long, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler, "The Daily Reflector," P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582.

Or you may order Kit No. K-59 from Pat Trexler at the same address. Each kit contains Red Heart Wintuk sport yarn in eggshell and embroidery yarn in pink, rose and green along with the instruction leaflet. Send check or money order for $8.50 for small or medium sizes; $9.70 for large size. Price includes shipping charges.

Last week, I started giving instructions on how to design a seamless crocheted sweater, working in one piece from the neck down. I left off after the completion of the front neck shaping.

At this point, you would now have a total of 94 stitches divided as follows: 12 in each front section, 19 in each sleeve section, 28 in the back section and four marked seam stitches.

If you are planning a pullover sweater, you would now chain four at the end of the next row and then join to the other front section with a slip stitch. You would now have the same number of stitches for front and back. This is the first of several places where you can make adjustments to have a custom fit.

Perhaps you would like to have more fullness in the front than in the back. If you would like an extra inch, chain eight instead of four before joining. As you will remember, your gauge is four stitches per inch, so that each time you add four stitches you are adding one inch.

If you are making a cardigan, you can either add extra front stitches at this time by making a chain of extra stitches at each front edge or you can add the extra width later when you make a front band of stitches on each side.

Whatever choices you make, you next start working down the yoke, continuing to increase by making three stitches in each marked seam stitch on every row. You will realize by now that you can try on the garment at any time to see how it is fitting you.

I will be referring to the seam lines, where the increases are made, as the "raglan slants." If you have a 34-inch bust measurement, work until the raglan slant measures 10 inches; with a 35-inch bust measurement, work until the raglan slant measures 10¼ inches; or with a 36-inch bust, work until the slant measures 10½ inches. As you can see, the raglan-slant measurement increases by one-quarter of an inch for each inch of the bustline.

For most figure types, when the above raglan-slant measurements are reached, you will be ready to divide the three separate sections — body and two sleeves. Do try on the garment at this point, however, and make any adjustment needed.

If it doesn't seem quite large enough, work another row or two, increasing as before. If it seems too large, rip back a row or two. There is one other fact to be taken into consideration at this point, though. You will be adding a few extra stitches at each underarm for proper shaping, which will, of course, give you a little extra fullness.

To be a bit more exact, measure across the back section from one marked seam stitch to the other. Let's assume that you have a bust measurement of 36 inches and that the back section of your garment measures 18 inches.

This would mean a very snug fit, but you can add the extra fullness you need for a good fit at the underarms. In this case, I would choose to add an additional four inches so that my garment will have a finished measurement of 40 inches at the bustline.

To achieve this, I would now work across one front section to the first marker, chain eight stitches and join to the marked stitch of the back. I would then work across the back section to the next marked stitch, chain eight and join to the marked stitch of the other front, thus adding two inches at each underarm.

Working on the body stitches only, I can now work down until the jacket or sweater is the exact length I desire, trying it on as I go. If I want it fitted at the waist, I can decrease a few stitches before and after the waistline. On the other hand, if I want it to flare out at the hipline, I can increase as I approach that point.

At anytime, you can go back and start working down on the sleeves. Start at the center of the underarm and take one stitch in each chain made when you separated the sleeves from the body, and in each stitch around the sleeve.

Unless you want a very wide sleeve cuff, you will gradually decrease as you work down. By now you shouldn't need any mathematical formula. Just decrease one stitch every inch or inch and a half, trying it on as you go.

As you work the first sleeve, do tie on a contrast yarn marker in each decrease made so that you can make them at the same places on the other sleeve.

Use your imagination when you crochet by this method, adding stripes of a contrast color, of a different texture of yarn or of pattern stitches. You can even use up a lot of leftovers this way, working first with one color and then another as the mood strikes you.

Because of the large volume of mail she receives, Pat is unable to answer your letters personally. However, she welcomes all questions and hints and will use those of general interest in the column whenever possible.

WRAPAROUND BOLERO. . .can be worn solo in warm weather or over a pullover in cooler temperatures.

Christmas Tours Announced

REIDSVILLE — Plans are being made for special Christmas tours at Chinqua-Penn Plantation House, a scenic old mansion located near here.

At Chinqua-Penn the yuletide tours provide a link with past Christmases which go back to 1925, the first year that the late Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Penn spent their first yuletide in the newly constructed house.

Visits by the public may be planned again this year beginning Wednesday, Nov. 28, and continuing during regular visiting hours through Sunday, Dec. 16. The house will be open to the public Wednesdays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sundays from 1-4:30 p.m. During last December, 7,848 people visited there during the Christmas season, reported George W. Hamer, executive director.

Chinqua-Penn was trimmed for the holiday season 12 years ago for the first time as a tourist attraction after the plantation was given to the University of North Carolina in 1959.

Greenery will be used as trimming around the front of the house and approximately 500 poinsettias, grown in the green house there, will be on display inside. Additional floral displays inside the house will include snapdragons, chrysanthemums and reiger begonias. Also featured in the decorations will be two large Christmas wreaths on the main gates leading to the house. Two additional wreaths will be placed on the doors at the front entrance of the house along with other seasonal trimmings. A large holiday tree will be used inside the house.

Special Christmas music will be piped throughout the house during the guided tours. Inside the mansion will be a figurine of the Holy Family along with several madonnas.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Everyone talks about the "baby" of the family, but no one ever does anything about him.

Is he the "favorite" of his mother? The last hurrah of his father? The indulged brat? The babysitter for Mom and Dad? It all depends on who you talk to.

I've gotten together a profile of "the baby" of the family as seen through the eyes of its members.

According to his older brothers and sisters, the "baby" is spoiled, indulged, and raised without rules. He got the digital watch when he was four, a car when he was 12, an allowance usually reserved for heirs to the British throne, and got to sit in the white living room before he was 16.

He has never known curfews, what it means to share a bedroom, handprints on his backside, chores, hand-me-downs, or heard the expression, "Clean up your plate." By the time he was born the family had a full set of encyclopedias, a riding mower, two TV sets, big bucks to send him to a college someone had heard of, and he was encouraged not to work as it interfered with his grades.

Father views the "baby" of the family as his last shot at being a father . . . a pal to take fishing, go to football games with, and even violate the siding on the garage by mounting a basketball hoop on it.

When this one is launched it's goodbye tuition, hello St. Thomas . . . goodbye car insurance premiums, hello sailboat. He's at the end of the line and somehow it doesn't seem very important that the kid borrowed his gasoline charge card when he was a sophomore and hasn't returned it since.

A mother's view of the "baby" is she's losing ground on what she does best. Mothering. That is why when the "baby" is 56, has a stomach that hangs over his belt, and a hairline shaped like the map of the Florida Keys, he will still be her "baby." What she used to hit, smack and put the others in their room for she now laughs at, ignores, or says, "You're such a tease."

Whether from guilt or the luxury of more time she wants to rap about how he feels about life. She's more relaxed, has fewer pressures and figures, "What the heck, when this one is gone, I'll clean the house."

The "baby" has an entirely different approach to his status. He regards his position as a bummer. Abandoned by the good times, he is stuck with older parents in a quiet house and a refrigerator that holds only low fat milk, yogurt and honey wheat bread without calories or preservatives. He has the pressures of an only child, but the pain of an empty baby book.

The "baby" will be with us forever, but look at it this way. It's a dirty job, and someone has to do it.

Battered Wife Wins Photo Finish

By Abigail Van Buren

1979 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is a successful, prominent professional man who frequently works under severe pressure. Once or twice a year he would erupt into a violent rage, and it seemed therapeutic (for him) to "punch me out."

For years I suffered in silence, hiding and making up excuses for not appearing in public until my cuts and bruises healed. I was too ashamed to let anyone know the truth, so I kept quiet.

I felt that I must have done something terribly wrong to deserve this kind of treatment. Meanwhile, by my silence I was protecting my husband, whom I continued to love in spite of his occasional animal behavior.

I began to ask myself why I took so much abuse and let him get away with it. Then, suddenly, a solution came to mind!

That evening I calmly told my husband that if he ever beat me again, I would hire a professional photographer to photograph me after the battle. Then I would place these 8 by 10 photos in strategic places all over town—identifying myself in living color as his beloved battered wife!

My husband was shocked at this idea; he knew I really meant it.

Needless to say, it worked. It's been four years since he has laid less than a loving hand on me, and our marriage is more solid than ever.

Share this with your readers, Abby.

PEARL THE PINUP

DEAR PEARL: Thanks for a helpful letter. It's been said, "One picture is worth 10,000 words." A picture of this kind should be worth at least $10,000.

DEAR ABBY: I've read your column for years, and was very disappointed to learn that you are so closed-minded about snakes.

Obviously, your fear stems from prejudice and ignorance. If you ever got to know snakes, you would learn to love them. Most people would kill a snake on sight just because it is a snake! How cruel. Snakes are gentle and harmless by nature, and avoid confrontation. They strike only when threatened, and don't deserve to be run over by cars, or decapitated and hacked to pieces by garden tools.

Snakes perform a valuable service by eating rodents and pests that threaten crops and the ecology.

Snakes make wonderful pets for retired people and apartment dwellers. They're odorless, clean and quiet, and don't need to be groomed or walked.

C.J.

DEAR C.J.: Another plus: You don't have to worry about anybody stealing them.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I recently bought a home from a nice, middle-aged couple with two children.

They very generously left several pieces of their old furniture for us since they knew we were very low on furnishings.

After moving in, we came across some snapshots they inadvertently left behind in a drawer. Among the photos are several shots of the woman—in the buff—taken while she was eight or nine months pregnant.

Should we destroy the photos, or return them? The couple still reside in town and we have their address.

If you think we should return these pictures, have you any suggestions as to the least embarrassing way to do so?

BLUSHING IN N.Y.

DEAR BLUSHING: Mail the photos to them—without comment.

No Surprise In Scott's Move

There was absolutely no secret about it — Robert Scott announcing as a candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination during the weekend.

The former governor had made it clear that he intended to seek the nomination and Saturday's announcement was simply a matter of making formal what he had already said.

He will, almost certainly, be opposing the incumbent governor Jim Hunt, who, although his announcement hasn't been formalized, has made it pretty clear that he will seek a second term.

Scott reached into his family heritage, all the way back to his father's election to emphasize that he didn't expect his support to be found "among the traditional political power structure."

Rather, he said, his supporters "come from all walks of life and you don't see their names in the papers. They're just plain folks."

There are, of course, not many Tar Heel politicians who don't claim the support of the plain folks, nor fewer still who win without the support of some powerful people.

Nevertheless former governor Scott clearly enjoys widespread popularity throughout the state ...but then so does Gov. Hunt.

What it means is a really hot race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination . . . one which even leaves open the possibility of a dark horse slipping in. Still the party will be offered the choice between two highly capable candidates. While that makes choosing difficult, in the long run it is good for a democracy.

Vice Presidential Campaign Underway

North Carolina Sen. Jesse Helms for vice president?

The campaign is already underway — and it includes such backers as Richard Petty, Gaylord Perry and Jim "Catfish" Hunter, according to news reports.

Sen. Helms' brand of conservatism has attracted for him a national following, one which his backers feel will make him a viable candidate for the GOP vice-presidential nomination.

The nomination will, of course, hinge on who is chosen as the Republican presidential nominee. There are ten candidates, more or less, in that race now and certainly the nominee will have much to say about who his running mate is to be.

Radical Arabs Press

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — The Arab League opens its 10th summit meeting today amid talk of a "decisive new spurt" in the struggle against Israel. But the conservative majority was considered virtually certain to block demands from the radicals for economic warfare against the United States, Israel's chief ally.

Libya, South Yemen and Iraq were urging a joint commitment to an all-out economic campaign against Egypt, the United States and Israel.

"We favor the use of the oil weapon and support the withdrawal of Arab funds deposited in the banks of American imperialism and other imperialist countries which support Israel and supply it with arms," said South Yemeni President Abdelfattah Ismail, whose impoverished desert country has neither oil nor sizable foreign bank accounts.

The conservative, Western-oriented majority led by Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd was expected to block any substantive move against the United States. And Chedli Klibi, the league's Tunisian secretary general, told The Associated Press he doubted the militants

THIS AFTERNOON

Monument To Big Change

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Construction is underway on a new $8.5 million state government building in Raleigh.

Without the usual political hoopla and fanfare, workmen started on the six-story building across Lane Street from the State Legislative Building.

It wasn't the rain and mud which kept those politicians who are usually willing to turn a spade of dirt or snip a ribbon at the drop of a bond issue far from this project.

Absence of an occasion marking the event has more to do with this being an election season than anything else, and members of the General Assembly would as soon not be closely identified with what is already becoming a symbol of governmental excess.

Stung once by a public outcry when the General Assembly sneakily appropriated funds for a half-million-dollar tunnel connecting the Legislative Building with the new office structure, that small part of the overall scheme has been scratched—at least for now.

More, More

Legislators no longer even maintain the charade that the new building will be a general state office building, with some space on the first and second floors being used by the General Assembly and the remainder for other purposes. That was the original cover story fed the public. Now it is clear that eventually, if not at the outset, the General Assembly will use the white granite building for legislative offices, hearing rooms, committee meeting space, staff offices, a library, and so on.

It is also certain in the minds of those savvy to the wily ways of the veteran legislator that sooner or later there will be some way for people to get from one building to the other without having to confront weather or [illegible].

Completion of the new State Legislative Office Building in the summer of 1981 will serve as a visible reminder of the out-of-control growth of the General Assembly itself. Even as the politician-lawmkers run for office at home by railing against skyrocketing costs of the ever-expanding governmental bureaucracy, their own private bureaucracy is streaking along a parallel track upward.

As one particularly knowledgable insider who is a member of the legislative staff and a student of the system puts it: "The end of North Carolina's citizen assembly is at hand. We are committed to a fulltime, professional legislative body. This is the most dramatic and politically significant event we have seen in a generation in this state."

BILL NOBLITT

Upward

The state budget started doubling every seven years; reached $5 billion. State programs and employees multiplied. The General Assembly started meeting every year. Study committees meet year around. Reams of paperwork, thousands of laws, computers, complexities, perquisites. Now, says a legislator worried over the trend: "Legislators have gotten so concerned over winning their offics term after term that they are afraid to say No to powerful and rich people .... they are fulltime politicians."

It has long been a popular fantasy that North Carolina has a "citizens assembly" who sacrifice to serve. The legislative budget just two years ago was $3.8 million. In 1981 it will be $8.5 million. For 170 lawmakers there are 466 clerks and secretaries, 62 administrative aides, 43 researchers, 39 building maintenance people, 29 food service employees, and six bill drafters writing the proposed laws and changes in law which the legislators will ponder.

That Hard Row To Hoe

WASHINGTON — How pleasant the prospect must have seemed, a couple of months ago! Edward Moore Kennedy was then 30 points ahead of President Carter in the public opinion polls. He had dealt firmly with Chappaquiddick on the event's 10th anniversary in July. He was trailed by blissful groupies exhaling adulation. Kennedy committees were bursting out all over.

Now the snows of November are falling, and so are the gentleman's fortunes. Ted Kennedy, who once looked unbeatable for the Democratic nomination, is beginning to look very beatable indeed.

What could account for this sudden deceleration? It is partly the difference between looking at the menu and looking at the dish. So long as Mr. Kennedy were only a possible, or probable, or unannounced candidate, he enjoyed a certain immunity from searching inquiry. The tantalizing question was, would he or won't he? Now the honeymoon is over. Larger questions emerge. The senator's character and the senator's record are spread before us for examination, and somehow the prospects seem not as appetizing as they were.

Another factor, the factor of time passing, also is affecting the situation. What Mr. Kennedy has going for him is just that: He is Mr. Kennedy, the last surviving son of old Joe Kennedy. Take that away, and little remains. In terms of legislative accomplishments, the gentleman's 17-year record in the Senate is utterly undistinguished. Half a dozen fellow Democrats — Muskie, for example, or Jackson, or Bayh, or Long, or Magnuson —have left much heavier imprints on the record.

And the trouble is that a generation has grown up that knew not Joseph. Jack Kennedy died in 1963, brother Robert in 1968. Camelot was a long time ago. A new breed of journalists has emerged, harder and hungrier than the reporters who once functioned as troubadours at court. "Senator Kennedy," said

40 Years Ago Today

November 20, 1939

Washington— President Roosevelt worked today to clear his desk of a mass of business before transferring the center of governmental activity to the southland for the next two weeks.

He will leave late tomorrow for Warm Springs, Ga., where between swims in the health resort's outdoor pool, he is expected to hold conference on the new legislative program. There is a possibility, too, that Ambassador Hugh Wilson will go there when he returns from Berlin to give Mr. Roosevelt a first hand account of the happenings in Germany.

In spite of threatening skies, Homecoming Day at East Carolina Teachers College brought former E.C.T.C. students back to the campus this morning to join in the annual celebration.

INSIDE REPORT

'Reprogramming' Reagan

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

BOSTON — Ronald Reagan's reconsidered turnabout on oil profits during his first 24 hours as an announced presidential candidate followed an intense backstage power struggle over just what the front-running Republican ought to say to the voters.

In his taped television speech to the nation Tuesday night, Reagan appeared to say "maybe" on the oil profits tax in Congress. That reflected high strategy by campaign manager John Sears. But Wednesday afternoon at a labor union hall in Boston's Dorchester section, he was attacking "what is called the windfall profits tax." That reflected persistent urgings from his newly unveiled chief campaign spokesman: Rep. Jack Kemp of New York.

This back-and-forth was part of maneuvering, negotiating and bickering behind the scenes for weeks before Reagan's announcement. It helps explain why Reagan, for 15 years a master of the political campaign platform, seemed off his form in a shakey start.

The fact that the Nov. 13 announcement was so late fits Sears' overall strategic premises: With Reagan likely to clinch the Republican nomination quickly, he should lie low as long as possible and, when he does announce, aim at winning over non-Republicans. That means convincing them that Reagan is for the common man.

For more than four years, Sears has tried to cool the enduring love affair between Reagan and corporate business. He never quite succeeded in 1976, but this time was determined to make his point in the announcement statement, whose drafting began back in July.

Sears also had another project: to enlist Kemp, perhaps the Republican party's most dynamic young figure. While Kemp's closest advisers were urging him to mobilize his business world following for his own presidential run, Sears courted him to jump aboard the Reagan bandwagon. Kemp finally agreed in principle when Reagan endorsed Kemp's supply-side economics as exemplified by the Kemp-Roth tax reduction bill to restore incentive.

But agreement in principle was not the same as agreement in fact. The announcement statement was negotiated, paragraph by paragraph, over two months by Reagan and Kemp agents. What nearly prevented agreement was an ambivalent paragraph on oil profits. Kemp has assailed President Carter's tax as a menace equivalent to the depression-making Smoot-Hawley tariff. But Sears and other Reagan advisers worried that their man would become a front man for Exxon.

A bargain was struck in the final hours before the announcement. Reagan would

Other Editors Say Advertising Works

(Jacksonville Daily News)

The American Medical Association reacted with predictable consternation recently to the ruling by the Federal Trade Commission that physicians cannot be prohibited from advertising their fees and services. Experience will demonstrate that the AMA's fears are unfounded.

Two years ago, the American Bar Association expressed similar concern over the U.S. Supreme Court decision permitting lawyers to advertise.

ABA officials worried aloud that commercial advertising would benefit unscrupulous lawyers at the expense of their more principled colleagues. The advertising of fees in particular, said the ABA, might lead to a deterioration in the quality of legal services.

There is, as yet, no evidence that anything of the sort has happened. What does seem apparent is that a growing volume of legal advertising has served the public by enhancing competition in the marketplace.

Fees for standard legal services in most cities are now subject to healthy competitive pressures.

And there seems to be no shortage of lawyers willing to offer co etent counsel and competitive rates. Consumers also benefit from advertising that identifies a lawyer's area of specialization.

Why should advertising work any differently in the medical profession? The practice of medicine is a service for which the benefits are related to the costs. The more consumers know about both, the better.

The likelihood then is that advertising in the medical profession will yield results similar to those it has produced in other fields: greater consumer knowledge and a corresponding competitive pressure to produce the best possible product or service at lower costs.

Public tax notices were mailed in Pitt County at the end of August and due by Dec. 31, 1979. An early payment discount was not offered. Why then were approximately 38,000 second notices mailed again this week at a cost of approximately $5,700 postage when taxes were not delinquent? To make this mailing even more wasteful of taxpayers' money, the notices were not presorted by zip code; this would have saved over $700 in postage. How could this cost in postage, not to mention manhours, possibly be justified when there is no monetary inducement to pay taxes early. Does Pitt County need a tax revolt similar to the one in California to discourage such mismanagement of taxpayers' money!

Strength For Today

BETTER VISION

The great French physicist, Andre Ampere, whose name is reflected in the word "amperes" occurring in electrical terminology, was very nearsighted but was never aware of the fact. One day, looking through the eyeglasses of a friend, he suddenly discovered the beauties of the world around him to which he had been blind for much of his life. He is said to have burst into tears when he realized how great his deprivation had been.

Life is full of regrets for all of us because of lost opportunities for advancement, happiness, or for sacrifice in behalf of a loved one. But the most important things we miss because of spiritual blindness are religious truths. Others about us who cherish religious faith get much support from it, but many of us continue to live a shortsighted worldly existence, never finding happiness.

Then suddenly we see that through the years we have been missing the real values of life, as Ampere had been missing the privilege of normal vision.

New Living Space Concepts

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Within 10 years the price of office space in the United States might double, said the real estate executive. The size of reception areas will decline. Executive offices will shrink.

The change will be pervasive, he said. "The idea of 250 or 300 square feet of space per person will disappear. There'll be an open, 'garden' approach to design. Decorators will be challenged to make less more."

This view, by John White, a real estate consultant, is challenged by some people. In fact, by many. One contrary opinion, for example, has real estate and other prices, falling sharply by next spring.

Whatever the outlook, a series of factors — interest rates, building costs and, above all, energy prices — has brought analysts together in agreement that we have to change our concept of living space.

That we must use less space is generally agreed upon.

Some housing designers are cutting the fourth bedroom, sometimes the family room and maybe the extra bath, from their single-family home designs, a direct reversal of a trend to bigger homes in the 1970s.

Apartment house builders have almost ceased activity in once active big-city areas, and when they begin again many of them say they will have to reduce the size of units even though rents continue to rise.

Some construction industry analysts also believe the use of exterior, geographical, space is bound to change too, with many insisting that transportation costs will force people to cling together in cities.

Typical of the confusion, however, is the belief of other seers that expenses will prevent the re-emergence of the city as the prime living and working area. Cities, they say, have outpriced themselves.

White, who heads Landauer Associates, a real estate consulting firm that advises many blue chip corporations, argues that the cities will remain or become even more attractive, despite high prices.

"Where New York (business office) space now averages $20 to $25 a square foot," he says, "it could be $50 a square foot within 10 years." Current costs, he maintains, are relatively inexpensive.

"In London and Paris, for instance, it is far more expensive. Rents will become more internationally competitive, and the United States still has to catch up with the world."

Perhaps nowhere is the appearance of a decline in living standards more obvious than in comparing the home available to many young couples with the home in which their parents raised them.

Cluster housing, in which many homes share a common green space, has established itself in many suburbs. An larger and commodious older homes are being broken into apartments.

More and more forecasters, especially on Wall Street, now say that housing and maybe office space prices will have to fall. They listen to the arguments by White and others but insist the deflation must come.

Albert Sindlinger, whose Sindlinger & Co. monitors household finances, states without reservation that a general deflation by next spring will bring down housing and other prices by 35 percent.

Tainted Fertilizer Is Again On Sale In N.C.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A contaminated Smith-Douglass Inc. fertilizer that damaged thousands of acres of tobacco crops in North Carolina and South Carolina is now being sold again — with state approval.

The company is disposing of the tainted fertilizer by selling it to half a dozen North Carolina farmers for use on other crops. The sales have the approval of the N.C. Department of Agriculture.

In June the department stopped sales of the fertilizer, which was accidentally contaminated with the herbicide picloram, after determining it was responsible for damaging 8,000 acres of tobacco in Eastern North Carolina alone.

Company officials said Monday Smith-Douglass had contracted with about six North Carolina farmers for sales of about 40 percent of the estimated 3,500 tons of contaminated fertilizers the company had on hand in the state.

Approval of the sales was based on a memorandum from the dean of the school of agriculture and life sciences at N.C. State to Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham.

J.E. Legates wrote Graham on Oct. 9 that fertilizer contaminated with picloram and 2,4-D herbicides could be used "with minimal risks" on organic soils at concentrations not greater than 500 pounds per acre.

"Low levels of picloram and 2,4-D in organic soils would not adversely affect the production of wheat, barley, oats and corn," Legates said in the memo.

"However, adverse effects may be anticipated in the year of application if the contaminated fertilizer is used on broadleaf crops (such as soybeans)."

Graham notified Smith-Douglass that sales of the tainted fertilizer would be allowed if a special purchase agreement were followed and if the agriculture department were allowed to supervise the transportation.

The buyer, under the purchase agreement, acknowledges purchase of a contaminated product, promises not to resell it and assumes all risks involved in its use. And he agrees to follow the restrictions recommended by Legates on its use.

Officials say the total amount of damages done to tobacco and other crops in North Carolina and South Carolina by the contaminataed fertilizer could reach as high as $20 million.

Graham has scheduled a Dec. 10 hearing to consider revocation of the Virginia-based company's license to manufacutre fertilizers in North Carolina because of the crop damage.

Illinois Money 'Saves' Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Gov. James R. Thompson has come to the rescue of the cash-strapped Chicago public schools by advancing the district $37 million in state money it wasn't due until next month.

Thompson's action late Monday night averted a payless payday for some 50,000 employees, which had been approved unanimously earlier in the evening by the Chicago Board of Education.

Despite the bailout, School Superintendent Joseph Hannon told the board he plans to cut expenses by firing 1,000 employees, reducing the work year of employees and slashing programs. He said he also would urge the city to approve a property tax increase for schools and ask the city to back the school district's notes.

Hannon did not say when the layoffs and other budget-cutting measures would be imposed.

The board had decided not to pay its 26,000 teachers and other employees as scheduled on Wednesday because it didn't have the cash to meet current bills and an estimated $41.5 million payroll.

Before the state advance was approved, Hannon had told the board he must pay $89 million in notes due Nov. 26, and couldn't do that and pay employees. He said he would try to pay the employees next week.

But Thompson approved the transfer of $120 million from the general revenue fund to the common school fund, allowing the district to withdraw $37 million — its share of the December state school aid.

James Skilbeck, a spokesman for the governor, said Thompson's action was intended "to make ends meet" for the immediate future, with negotiations planned between Thompson's office and the school board to find a long-term solution.

Tom Jarriel of ABC, beginning a recent interview, "you cheated in college, you panicked at Chappaquiddick. Do you have what it takes to be president of the United States?"

Hard lines. And they will get harder as the campaign moves along and the scrutiny of character and record continue. The inferences to be drawn from Chappaquiddick will not diminish. I have yet to meet a reasonably unbiased person, familiar with the undisputed facts, who believes Mr. Kennedy has told the truth about the incident. On the contrary, the conviction is virtually universal that the senator lied about it then and that he lies about it now. And it is part of the legacy of Watergate that material falsehoods at the presidential level are not to be condoned.

The contrasting characters of Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Carter (and for that matter, of Gov. Jerry Brown also) are bound to figure in the coming campaign. For all our vaunted freedoms and changing life-styles, Americans remain a people at least publicly professing a conventional morality. Mr. Carter, it will be recalled, once confessed that he had occasionally lusted for a woman in his heart. Mr. Kennedy's lusts lie a bit farther south. It will be astonishing if some of these titillating stories do not rise to the surface.

What of the record? In liberal eyes, the Kennedy record is superb. The senator has voted for every significant liberal measure that ever has come his way. He has been making some conservative noises lately, but they lack conviction. Is the country truly ready to embrace a curly-haired McGovern? It seems a doubtful proposition.

Mr. Kennedy has taken another bumpy road, and he must find it disconcerting. Over the years he has fathered the same liberal causes that are beloved of The New York Times and the Washington Post. But the Times greeted his announcement by wondering if there may hang over his campaign "not just a cloud of tragedy but also one of corruption." The Post found his most recent explication of Chappaquiddick "inadequate." How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is, to have a thankless child!

The senator can charm a crowd; he will surely benefit among older Democrats from the inheritance of the Kennedy mythology. But unless we wind up at war, or the bottom drops out of the economy or Mr. Carter blunders disastrously, hang on to your Carter buttons. Mr. Kennedy doesn't have what it takes.

keep this statement so obnoxious to the Kemp circle: "I don't believe we've been given all the information we need to make a judgment about this (oil profits). We should have that information. Government exists to protect us from each other." To Kemp's colleagues, Reagan was joining the demagogic oil-baiting of Carter, Kennedy and Howard Baker.

To accept that statement, Kemp exacted a heavy price: the decisive policy role in Reagan's campaign. He will dominate Reagan's economic policy speech. What's more, Reagan almost immediately began retreating from Tuesday night's muted oil-baiting.

Arriving in working class Dorchester here the next afternoon (though precious few local residents were present), Reagan attacked the windfall profits tax as something that would eventually cost the consumer ("You're going to pay it."). Responding to our question, he said he would have voted against the tax approved by the Senate Finance Committee and supported by Senate Republicans.

Kemp's dominance in Reagan policymaking is widely interpreted as provoking the unexpected return to the Stanford University faculty of Dr. Martin Anderson, Reagan's research chief. Anderson does not go nearly so far as the Kemp circle toward supply-side economics and, though he will still support Reagan, would not be comfortable as a full-time staffer any longer.

The economic debate is not the only point of friction. The initiative for a "North American accord" between the U.S., Canada and Mexico fits Sears' quest for a more moderate image. But one key adviser argued until the end against it, contending that the American public wants the old Reagan demanding of Iran: "The embassy hostages alive, or the ayatollah dead."

Under thhese conditions, Reagan's third and most carefully prepared presidential campaign began with him off balance. His taped television speech was uncharacteristically bland. His Dorchester speech was more vintage Reagan but in its rousing moments dredged up outdated material from 1976 and earlier. Both John Sears and Jack Kemp might well heed warnings that Ronald Reagan is not easily reprogramm would even succeed in imposing more harmful economic sanctions against Egypt.

"We are not against the United States," said Klibi. "We are against Zionism....What we want in the first place is to make the American people understand the Arab problem."

The meeting, opening on the first day of Islam's 15th century, was the first Arab summit since the 1978 Baghdad meeting that expelled Egypt from the League because of President Anwar Sadat's peace treaty with Israel. Like all other Arab meetings, it was plagued by feuds among the members.

Communists Name Ticket

NEW YORK (AP) — The Communist Party USA has chosen Gus Hall as its presidential candidate for 1980 and black activist Angela Davis as his vice presidential running mate.

The nominations, decided at a party convention here and announced Monday, mark the third presidential bid for Hall, who is 68 and in his 20th year as the party's general secretary.

Now hospitalized with a spinal problem, Hall hopes to begin campaigning soon. He drew some 25,000 votes in 13 states in 1972 and nearly 60,000 in 19 states in 1976.

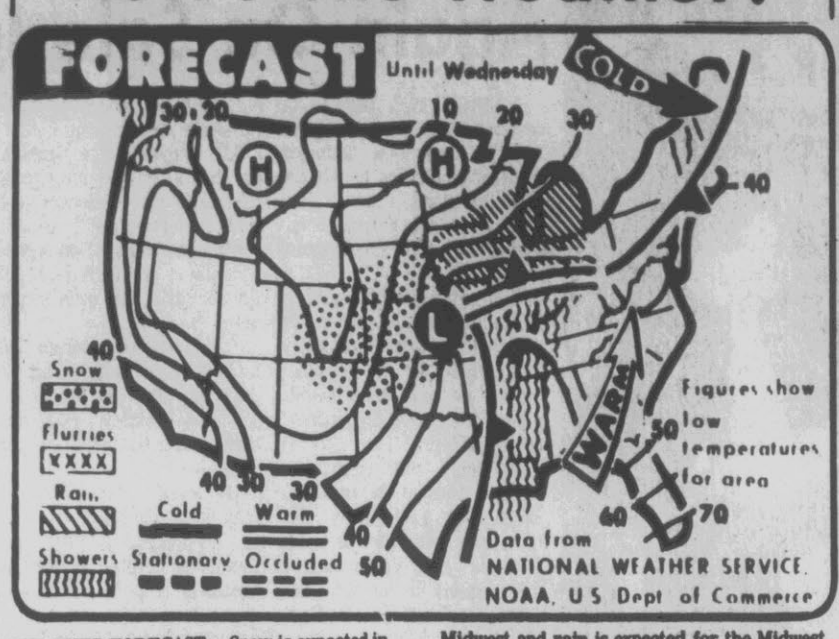
Miss Davis, 35, is making her first run for public office. She is the former University of California philosophy teacher who was acquitted of murder, kidnapping and criminal conspiracy in connection with an unsuccessful Los Angeles courtroom escape attempt by three black convicts in 1970.

Four persons, including a judge and two of the convicts, died in the attempt.

Hall, who once served eight years in prison on charges of conspiring to teach and advocate forcible overthrow of the government, has recently called for resisting plans to send some 550 new U.S. missiles to Europe. He favors approval of SALT II by the Senate.

Another leftist group, the Workers World, announced Monday it will run party editor Deirdre Griswold for president and black activist Larry Holmes for vice president. It is the party's first bid for national office.

How's The Weather?



WEATHER FORECAST — Snow is expected in the forecast period until Wednesday morning, for the central and southern Plains. Showers are forecast from the central Gulf to the lower Midwest and rain is expected for the Midwest and Great Lakes. Clear skies are forecast for the West. Sunny and unseasonably mild weather should continue over North Carolina on Wednesday, but Thanksgiving may be a good day to stay inside and eat turkey.

A developing storm over the southern Plains states will break down the high pressure pattern that has kept fair weather over the Tar Heel state for the past few days. A cold front will move into the state on Thursday, bringing cloudiness, some showers and cooler temperatures.

Cloudiness will begin to increase over the mountain sections of the state tonight and Wednesday, with temperatures falling due to the afternoon cloudiness. Lows tonight should be in the 40s and in the 30s in the mountains.

Yesterday, afternoon temperatures climbed into the 70s over most areas in the state with a few 60s. Asheville again set a new record for the date with a reading of 71 degrees. The highest temperature in the state was reported at Rocky Mount and Cherry Point with 76 degrees while atop Grandfather Mountain the afternoon high was 55 degrees.

Testing Required On Waste Disposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most of the technology needed to dispose of nuclear wastes is available, but extensive testing is needed before the United States commits itself to one method of underground storage, says a panel of experts.

Speaking Monday night at a National Academy of Sciences forum on nuclear waste, panelists from several fields agreed that the first 1,000 years of storage are the most critical because radioactive waste is most dangerous then.

But some disagreed on what level of radiation from disposal pits would be acceptable and how soon the nation should start burying high-level wastes thousands of feet below ground.

"I'm not certain we know precisely when a nuclear storage facility would be safe enough," said Dr. Terry R. Lash, staff scientist of the Natural Resources Defense Council, an environmental law organization.

While agreeing that high level waste, such as spent fuel from nuclear power plants, is most toxic in the first 1,000 years, Lash said he still saw problems further in the future.

Rep. Mike McCormack, D-Wash., disagreed about there being great future problems, saying wastes could be sealed in glass, buried and "essentially stored forever."

Urges Doubling Of U.S. Farm Exports

First District Congressman Walter B. Jones said in Washington that the United States can and should seek to achieve the goal of double farm exports by 1985.

Jones, ranking member of the House Agriculture Committee, said that double farm exports could help erase the balance of payments deficit and restore international confidence in the dollar.

He made the comment after assessing a report developed by the Agriculture Council of America and presented at a Capital Hill news briefing by leaders representing the major farm export commodities.

"We have got to begin thinking—and working—for a national export goal," Jones said. "Farm exports should contribute in the range of $65 to $70 billion by 1985. This is the real way to fight inflation through a stronger dollar. Exporting at this level will be a big factor in eliminating the persistent balance of payments deficit."

The congressman said that in fiscal year 1979, U.S. agricultural exports reached a record level of $32 billion, exceeding the value of agricultural imports by some $16 billion.

He said that U.S. farm exports could top $107 billion by 1990, or triple the current level.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA) — The North Carolina f.o.b. dock broiler market was steady. Supply moderate to light. Demand good. Weights desirable. The North Carolina dock weighted average price this week is 42.16 cents per pound for small purchases of plant-grade broilers picked up at processing plants. Estimated slaughter today was 1,361,000.

Hens

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) (NCDA)—The North Carolina hen market was lower. Supply fully adequate. Demand light. Prices paid per pound for hens over seven pounds, at farm, Monday and Tuesday slaughter, 20 cents.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market edged upward today, adding to Monday's scattered gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials posted a .09 advance to 815.36 in the first half hour.

Gainers slightly outnumbered losers in the early tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said it was difficult to read much of significance into the market's narrow fluctuations in recent days.

But they said traders appeared to have taken some encouragement from accumulating evidence that the economy slowed in October after a surprisingly strong third quarter.

Data released Monday, for example, showed a seasonally adjusted 8 percent decline in housing starts last month.

A slackening in business activity is widely regarded on Wall Street as a necessary precursor to any decline in inflation and interest rates.

Today's early prices included U.S. Steel, down ⅛ at 18; Echlin Manufacturing, off ⅜ at 15½, and Texaco, up ¼ at 30⅝.

On Monday the Dow Jones industrial average slipped .43 to 815.27.

But advances outnumbered declines by a 5-4 margin on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 33.09 million shares, against 30.06 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index rose .25 to 59.36.

Garden Club Has Project At School

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Mrs. Sally Klingenschmitt, acknowledging she is one of 25 "very active senior citizens" of the 34 member Greenville Garden Club — "we have nine who are younger than others," — outlined plans that members of the club have for a new landscaping/beautification project at Aycock Junior High.

Since 1976, the Greenville Garden Club has had an ongoing project at Aycock, a garden therapy program with the members working hand-in-hand with handicapped students there.

"This work has brought us great satisfaction and joy, working with the children," Mrs. Klingenschmitt remarked. "It is wonderful, the enthusiasm these children have shown, and the best part is that this experience can lead into job activities where they can earn a living."

The landscaping project of the enclosed courtyard which could be viewed from the classroom where the handicapped students attended classes won for the Greenville Garden Club the state award in garden therapy.

"Now we want to landscape the larger courtyard that is entered from the school cafeteria," Mrs. Klingenschmitt explained. "That is why I'm here tonight, to get your approval and to see if you can help."

She outlined landscape plans which call for planting ivy, azaleas, dogwood and other shrubs, as well as placing the tables now in the courtyard into concrete. (Superintendent Glenn Cox informed school board members that money for materials could be worked into next year's budget.)

Mrs. Klingenschmitt said that with this approval, the club would apply for a national annual Sears award, hopeful that "we might get one of the five $1,000 first place awards, or perhaps one of the five $500 awards to help us with the project.

"And it is not only for the handicapped that we want to make this courtyard beautiful," she remarked. We want to involve the whole student body, so that they will enjoy it and help us in keeping it clean."

Havelock Board Says No To Curfew Action

HAVELOCK, N.C. (AP) — The Havelock Board of Commissioners unanimously rejected a proposed curfew ordinance Monday that would have forbidden those under 18 to be on city streets after 10:30 p.m. on most days without special permission.

A standing-room-only crowd came for the public hearing and vote. Speaker after speaker voiced opposition to the curfew while only three spoke in favor of it.

A fourth speaker — Havelock High School student Ginny Sermons, a daughter of Commissioner Eva Sermons — presented the commissioners a petition asking the age limit on the curfew be lowered to 16. There were 274 signatures on the petition.

The curfew was proposed by Havelock resident Tom Moore to reduce the juvenile crime.

Most speakers objected to the ordinance because they said it would penalize all teenagers for the sins of a few. Others said the ordinance would violate teenagers' rights.

"Most serious crimes are committed by adults," said student Richard Corcoran. "Yet there is no curfew being proposed for the adults."

Phil Scearce, Havelock High School senior class president, promised that if the curfew passed, he would be "out at 11 o'clock at night walking up and down the streets in protest."

Moore defended the curfew saying "we weren't subjected to the things children are subjected to today."

While the Havelock police were repeatedly praised during the meeting for their handling of the city's juvenile problems, one resident warned the curfew might be misused by some police in the future. Pete Freeman said the ordinance would be like "opening Pandora's box."

Commissioner Don Haley moved the board reject the curfew, but said it was good for the board to have considered the ordinance. "Any citizen has the right to bring something before this board and we have an obligation to study it," he said.

After the vote, Police Chief Don Richards said the curfew would have been "a good tool to work with. Just the fact that the ordinance was being considered has reduced the late-hours activity recently," he said.

Simpson Holds Town Meeting

SIMPSON — A special town meeting was held in the Fellowship Hall of Philippi Baptist Church here Monday night, with Mayor J. T. McDonald presiding. Council members Thompson and Telfair helped chair the session.

Street paving, housing improvement and recreation improvement were discussed. Guests from the N. C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development were present, including Linwood Long, Special Assistant to Secretary Howard Lee, Robert Chandler, Department Assistant; and State Planner John Crew. Each commended area residents for a good job in working together and on their many achievements. Mayor McDonald presented John Crew a plaque and certificate for his dedication, loyalty and assistance to the village council and residents.

Other guests present were Tom Ritcher, Mayor of Washington Park, and planner for the City of Washington, N. C. and Milan Musnich, coordinator for community programs in Washington. Each commented on the village's progress.

Mrs. Mary Outerbridge and Mrs. Kay Carlton were on hand from Pitt Community College to give residents information about the Adult Basic Education Program offered at PCC.

The Rev. David Hammond, pastor of Philippi Church, thanked the residents, council and state staff workers for their interest, work and cooperation during the past two years. He also recognized attorney, Frank Wooten of Greenville, for his assistance and advice during the period.

Secretary Lee visited Simpson, along with some N. R. C. D. staff members, Thursday of last week it was reported. They toured the impact areas.

Choir members of Salem United Methodist Church and member of Philippi Church sang hymns during a refreshment time following the meeting. Mrs. McDonald sang a solo and choir No. 2 of Philippi did special selections.

Mayor McDonald said that this was the best town meeting ever. He encouraged residents to continue to work together for progress.

Risks Lowered At Love Canal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency says the additional risk of residents in the chemical-contaminated Love Canal area of New York getting cancer is about one in 100.

That prediction, released Monday, is sharply lower than the previous EPA risk estimate of one in 10. The agency said the lower risk estimate assumes a lifelong exposure to the toxic chemicals contaminating the Niagara Falls neighborhood. The earlier prediction "was taken from a preliminary draft document which had not undergone final review," said the EPA. Long-buried chemicals in the Love Canal area are leaching to the surface, forcing some residents to leave their homes.

— Approved the resignation of Ms. Doris Flanagan effective December 31. Ms. Flanagan, a teacher at Eastern Elementary, has completed 30 years service and plans to retire.

— Approved a fund-raising drive at Sadie Saulter to get money for a portrait of Albert C. Hill, provided funds are raised by the staff and the school's PTA without solicitation of school children.

— Approved use of a waiver in lieu of school insurance for participants in certain sports. The waiver forms are to be signed by parents, and a student will not be permitted to play unless he has the required school insurance or a properly validated waiver.

Cox presented a compilation of the number of times school buses make crossings at railroads each day. The report shows that with 28 buses making two trips daily, both morning and afternoon, the daily number of actual crossings is slightly more than 400.

Dr. Jon Tingelstad asked, and was granted permission, to present this report to the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce. He noted the chamber is making a study of the ways in which railroads affect the daily lives of Greenville residents.

Justices To Get Checks

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Paychecks will resume for California's Supreme Court justices, but a lower court still hasn't decided whether they're taking too long to decide cases — and thus should have their pay withheld again.

Acting with unusual speed on an issue argued only last Friday, the 3rd District Court of Appeal ruled Monday that the justices are to be paid while their case is on appeal.

The court, however, did not address the issue of whether the Supreme Court had violated a 100-year-old state provision in the constitution requiring cases to be decided 90 days after they are submitted.

But the court said the law prohibits pretrial orders of the kind issued by Sacramento County Superior Court Judge Joseph Babich from remaining in effect while an appeal is pending.

John Jervis, spokesman for state Controller Ken Cory, said the justices will get their regular paychecks Nov. 29, and will be paid retroactively, probably in early December, for September and October, the two months they missed because of the court order.

But the salaries could be cut off again if the lower court's order is affirmed on appeal or during the actual trial of the lawsuit by the Law and Order Campaign Committee, which campaigned unsuccessfully against Chief Justice Rose Bird in last year's election. The trial is tentatively scheduled for mid-March.

Ms. Bird makes more than $73,000 a year, and the other six justices each get more than $69,000.

New Standards Are Weighed

WASHINGTON (AP) — More insulation and tighter-fitting windows and doors may be more common in future buildings, if energy efficiency standards proposed by the Energy Department are adopted.

The standards were drawn up in an effort to limit the energy used by buildings designed and built in the future, department officials said Monday. Maxine Savitz, one of the officials, said it was estimated that the proposals could cut energy use by as much as 50 percent in new buildings. Among the design techniques that would meet the guidelines are more insulation, tighter-fitting windows and doors, and reduced window areas, the officials said. Public hearings will be held on the proposals.

Prompt Action By A Junior Fireman

GRIMESLAND — A junior fireman here possibly prevented major damage to the Grimesland Youth Mission center Saturday morning, when he discovered smoke inside the building and notified local firemen.

Teenager Ricky Harrison, son of Mr. and Mrs. V. L. Harrison, was passing the center about 7:55 a.m. when he noticed sweaty windows, a smell of smoke, and the appearance of smoke inside the building.

Rushing to a residence behind the center, Harrison obtained the key to the building, opened the door, and confirmed that there was smoke inside.

Firemen said the smoke resulted from a fire confined to the heating plant, located outside the building, and brought inside by the duct system. Only smoke damage resulted to the Youth Mission building.

Hostages...

"I guess they were just convinced that I wasn't a spy," she added.

The three released Monday were Katherine Gross, 22, of Cambridge Springs, Pa., Sgt. William E. Quarles of Washington, D.C., 23, and Sgt. Ladell Maples, 23, of Earle, Ark.

Khomeini has called the embassy a "spy nest" but White House press secretary Jody Powell said whether there were actually spies among the hostages "is not a legitimate issue." Other officials said the embassy staff destroyed all security documents before the students broke in on Nov. 4.

The students occupying the embassy claim they have seized numerous documents which they say prove the embassy was being used as a spy center.

Sadegh said today, however, that the revolutionary courts' chief prosecutor, Ayatollah Ali Ghoddoshi, "has not yet received any documents from the students to consider whether there is going to be a trial or not."

Local newspapers gave prominence today to remarks attributed to Miss Johnson about counterfeit money having been brought to the embassy. In a confused account during the news conference at the embassy Monday night, she said samples of the money had been brought to the embassy earlier this year. However, local newspapers quoted her as saying: "The objective was that the monetary system in Iran should be paralyzed."

NRC Considers Added Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is considering staff proposals for new regulations that could empower the agency to close nuclear plants if state and local emergency plans do not meet commission standards.

The proposals presented to the commission Monday could be in effect by early next year. Among other things, the emergency plans would contain estimates of the time required to evacuate people up to 10 miles from the plant; procedures for notifying local, state and government agencies; protective measures, and emergency first aid.

Arrest Trio In Slaying

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Three men were arrested Monday in connection with the slaying of an Onslow County woman.

The men were held without bond on a charge of murder in the death of Susan Elizabeth Sipos Kwiecien, 28, who died of a shotgun blast in the lower abdomen. Her body was found Sunday.

The Onslow County Sheriff's Department identified the men as Timothy Lee Conner, 21; Chris Keithline, 20, and Robert Probeck, 19. All were reported to be Marines based at the New River Air Station.

Conner and Keithline were also charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill and inflicting serious bodily injury in a Nov. 18 shooting.

In that incident, Michael Dahl told deputies he was shot while he was sleeping and that he didn't see his assailants.

PREDICT HOLIDAY TOLL

Rams Top Falcons, In Lead Tie

On To Score

Atlanta Falcon wide receiver Wallace Francis (89) keeps his eyes set for the goal he reached Monday night in action against the Los Angeles Rams. Francis hauled in a 33-yard pass from Falcon quarterback June Jones for the final Atlanta score of the night in the 20-14 Ram victory. (AP Laserphoto)

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The six-time division champion Los Angeles Rams are 6-6 and tied for the National Football Conference West lead with New Orleans, but Rams' Coach Ray Malavasi is still counting his blessings.

'With all the injuries we've had, I just feel fortunate to be in the position we are in right now," Malavasi said after Monday night's 20-14 Ram victory over NFC West foe Atlanta. "I feel we can win the division, just like I felt at the beginning of the season."

The loss dropped the Falcons to 4-8, putting them two games off the lead with just four contests remaining. However, in what is the NFL's weakest division this season, there are no foregone conclusions.

Atlanta Coach Leeman Bennett refused to concede anything, saying, "As far as the race is concerned, we're still not out of it."

One of many Los Angeles' reserves pressed into a starting role, quarterback Vince Ferragamo, guided the Rams to the important victory over the Falcons. Making his first NFL start, the third-year pro out of Nebraska passed for two first-half touchdowns and set up the clinching score — an 11-yard run by Cullen Bryant — in the final quarter.

"I hope to do better next week," said Ferragamo, the apparent Rams' starter the rest of the season since Pat Haden is out with a broken finger.

Ferragamo himself had been sidelined for the past month, recuperating from a broken hand suffered in a game against Dallas.

"I thought I played well at times," he said after completing nine of 22 passes for 171 yards against the Falcons.

Ferragamo hit Preston Dennard with a 29-yard touchdown pass early in the first quarter, connected with Billy Waddy on a 40-yard scoring play in the waning. moments of the first half, then set up Bryant's tally with a 18-yard toss to tight end Terry Nelson midway through the final period.

As it turned out, the Rams needed all three scores. Atlanta quarterback June Jones III, starting in place of the injured Steve Bartkowski, put the Falcons back in the game with two second-half touchdown passes.

Jones, hitting on just two of nine throws and suffering two interceptions in the opening half, found Wallace Francis with a 15-yard scoring pass late in the third period to cut the Rams' lead to 14-7. He connected with Francis again on a 33-yard touchdown play with 4:11 left in the contest to bring the Falcons within striking distance at 20-14.

Butler, Donald Reid Picked For Shrine

Two area football players, one each from Rose and Farmville Central, have been selected to play in the 1979 Shrine Bowl game in Charlotte.

The game will be played on December 8, between the top players from North Carolina and South Carolina for the benefit of the Greenville (S.C.) unit of the Shriners Hospital for Crippled Children.

Ron Butler, a 6-3, 232-pound end from Rose was named to the team, along with 6-1, 200-pound fullback and linebacker Donald Reid of Farmville Central.

Farmville Central, ranked number one throughout the regular season in the 3-A ranks, was upset in the first round of the state playoffs last Friday, bowing to Ahoskie, 17-14.

Rose, co-champion of Division I, defeated Raleigh's Millbrook High School, 32-13, in the first round of the 4-A playoffs, and will face Fayetteville's Terry Sanford High School this weekend.

Should Rose advance to the final game, to be played the same weekend, it would preclude Butler's appearance in the Shrine game.

Chance For Bowl Is Still There For ECU

With the bowl picture slowly coming together, East Carolina University's Pirates still appear to have a shot at one of two games.

Much, however, will depend on what happens this coming weekend.

It appears that only two bowl berths remain to be filled, the Garden State, the Hall of Fame and the Fiesta. However, two of those have issued conditional bids to teams, including N.C. State.

The Wolfpack, winners of the Atlantic Coast Conference, have reportedly been extended a bid to play against Temple in the Garden State Bowl on December 15. However, the school's fall exams are scheduled for the same time period, and it will be up to the school's chancellor, Joab L. Thomas to decide whether the 'Pack will accept the bid and move its exams.

Meanwhile, it was announced by the Hall of Fame Bowl that Kentucky, 5-5, has been given a conditional bid to play South Carolina on December 29. Kentucky, to get the bid would have to beat Tennessee, already going to the Bluebonnett Bowl, on Saturday.

If Kentucky fails to win, other teams being considered by the bowl include East Carolina (6-3-1, playing William & Mary), Brigham Young (10-0, playing San Diego State and seen as a likely entrant into either the Holiday Bowl against Indiana or the Fiesta, against Pittsburgh, should they lose); Maryland or Virginia (both 6-4, playing each other); Missouri (5-5, playing Kansas); Navy (6-4, playing Army); Southern Methodist (5-5, playing Arkansas); and UCLA (5-5, playing Southern California).

The Independence Bowl, where East Carolina played last year, has Syracuse facing McNeese State; the Liberty has Penn State against Tulane; the Tangerine has Wake Forest against Louisiana State; the Gator has Michigan against North Carolina; the Peach has Clemson against Baylor; while the others are awaiting the outcome of the Southeastern, Southwestern, and Pacific-Ten results to fill their ranks.

It would seem certain, however, that Alabama will go to the Sugar Bowl, while Texas, Houston and Arkansas will all receive bids, and Washington and Southern Cal will also make bowl trips.

Florida State, in the Orange and Ohio State in the Rose, round out the picture.

Seahawks Throwing Rules Out

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

"...there is no new thing under the sun."

..Ecclesiastes,
..Chapter I; Verse 9

...but you haven't looked under the roof of the Kingdome lately, have you?

That's where Jim Zorn and his band of merry madmen, under the direction of Jack Patera, are running haywire, much to the consternation of the rest of the National Football League.

The Seattle Seahawks have this thing about pulling plays out of left field (to mix a metaphor).

Passing on fourth down when you're losing and desperate is one thing — but when you're winning...and in your own territory?

Onside kicking when you're losing...

Passing to your place-kicker...

You get the idea. Although their record (6-6 after a disastrous, turnover-filled 1-4 start this year) isn't the most impressive, the Seahawks are winning these days by throwing out the rulebook which says you play conservatively and wait for the other guy to make the big mistake.

Anything and everything is Seattle's motto — and perhaps they've only scratched the surface.

"To tell you the truth, we have stuff nobody's ever seen. You wouldn't believe some of the stuff we have," says Zorn, their high-spirited quarterback who unloads passes that often defy description.

And he's not the only one who unloads them.

Consider Sunday's victory over New Orleans. With less than five minutes to play and Seattle leading the Saints by just one touchdown, the Seahawks found themselves in a fourth-and-15 situation on their own 35-yard line.

Out came punter Herman Weaver, back came the ball...and up it went — a perfect 25-yard pass to Steve Raible, Weaver's third completion in three attempts this year. A few minutes later, Seattle scored the final touchdown in the 38-24 victory.

And how, you might wonder, did the Seahawks get into that fourth-and-15 situation? Simple. After they'd gone ahead 31-24 with 6:16 to play, Efren Herrera pulled off his third straight successful onside kick of the season, a bouncer up the middle that Michael Jackson recovered. In three plays Seattle marched backwards five yards before Weaver set things straight.

Herrera. He's another star member of Seattle's frantic cast.

This 5-foot-9, 190-pound sidewinder, a native of Guadalajara, Mexico, is attracting all sorts of attention in the most unusual places, namely downfield.

Three Monday nights ago (they also play next Monday night), in an apparent field goal situation, Herrera scurried past Zorn, the placement-holder, zipped through a gigantic gap in the middle of the Atlanta defense and caught a perfect pitch for a first down.

On Sunday against the Saints, in another fourth-down situation, he went one better, shifting out of field goal formation to a wide receiver spot. This time, though, while Herrera charged into the end zone, Zorn kept the ball — and ran for a first down.

"Double-covered," Herrera said when someone asked why Zorn hadn't thrown to him.

And in yet another fourth-and-1, this time on the Seahawks' 32 with Seattle up 24-17, Dan Doornink made the first-down yardage.

Fourth-and-something seems to be a favorite position for the Seahawks. Considering the fact that a 50 percent success rate in third-down situations is exceptional, Seattle's 62 percent rate (13 of 21 attempts) is astounding.

Cowboys Prove They're Human

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

To most people, the Dallas Cowboys conjure up visions of a whirring machine — cold steel, nuts and bolts, flashing lights, operating with the unerring precision of a computer.

"Don't believe it," said the Cowboys' star quarterback Roger Staubach. "We're flesh and bones like everybody else. We make mistakes. We pay for it and we hurt.

"Right now, we're in trouble. We can't look back on what we've done in the past. We've got to get it together. No computer is going to save us. We have to do it physically."

After a 7-1 start in the National Football League, the Cowboys have fallen into a late season slump. They have lost three of their last four games — and thwarted a fourth by a last gasp miracle finish against the New York Giants. Now they face the disquieting specter of possibly failing to make the playoffs for the first time in 13 years.

Five times they have made it to the Super Bowl, winning twice. The Pittsburgh Steelers beat them in Super Bowl XIII.

Once believed headed for a runaway victory in the NFC Eastern Division, the Cowboys now find themselves tied with Philadelphia and Washington at 8-4, their confidence shaken and a rocky road ahead.

"We have come to realize that success most times is based on the final moments of the season," Staubach said, prior to starting workouts for Thursday's game against Houston. "We are not satisfied. Our fans are not satisfied. They expect us to go to the Super Bowl and win it.

"Maybe we still can."

The Cowboys are a team renowned for their superb organization — from President Tex Schramm and the chief of player development, Gil Brandt, down to the only coach the team has ever had, the impeccable and professorial Tom Landry.

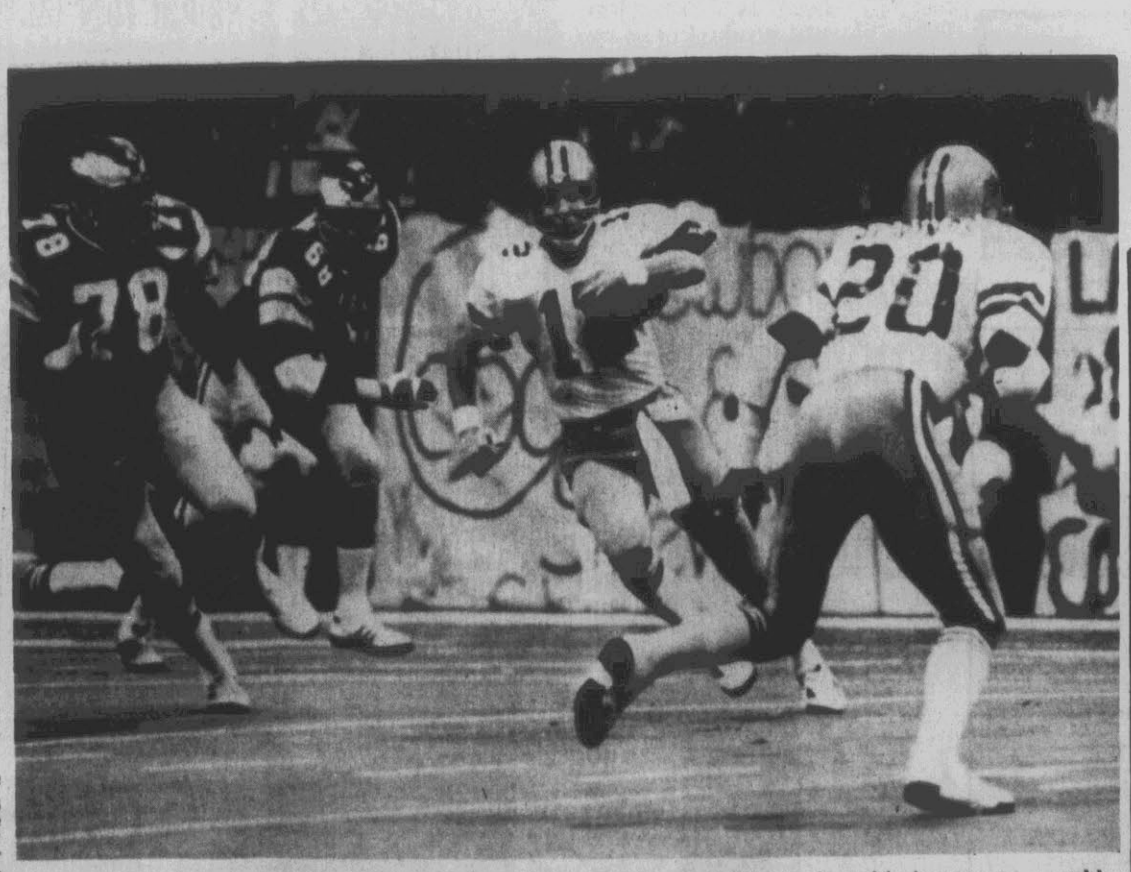
"Tom doesn't feed us a lot of fire and brimstone, I know most people think of him as a cold, methodical disciplinarian," the veteran quarterback said. "He is one of the fiercest competitors I have ever known. It just doesn't show."

Normally the Cowboys are not an emotional, demonstrative team, Staubach said, but it would be folly to interpret that as lack of fire and spirit.

Statistics show the Cowboys have lost 17 fumbles while recovering only seven from the opposition, thrown 10 interceptions while picking off 11. It's untypical of the two-time Super Bowl champs.

This is Staubach's 11th year in the NFL after a brilliant college career at Navy and five years in the service. At 37, he is not even flirting with retirement.

"I don't feel old," he said. "I plan to play as long as my arm and legs hold out. I have a thigh bruise now — not serious. Sometimes after I've been bumped and banged around a lot, I wake up and start questioning myself. By Tuesday, I'm raring to go again."



Getting It Together

Dallas Cowboy quarterback Roger Staubach (12) scrambles for yardage as Philadelphia Eagle Carl Haiston (78) is in hot pursuit during their November 12 game. To some people, the Cowboys conjure up visions of a whirring machine, cold steel, nuts and bolts and the precision of a computer. "Don't believe it," says Staubach. "We're flesh and bones like everybody else. We make mistakes. We pay for it and we hurt." (AP Laserphoto)

Contest Winners

Nancy Thomason of 202 N. Eastern St., is the winner of the final "Daily Reflector" Football Contest. She correctly picked the winners in 30 of the 32 games listed in this past week's contest listings.

Second place went to Steve Camp of 104 College Court Dr., who had 29 correct picks. He took the prize on the basis of his point total guess, with a pick of 91. That was closest to the actual total of 89 scored in Furman's 45-44 win over The Citadel.

Three other people had 29 right, but were further off in the point total guess.

"The Daily Reflector" wishes to thank those who have participated in this year's contests, and offers congratulations to those who have been winners during the season.

The contest will return next fall.

Buckeyes Closing In On 'Bama's Lead

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Ohio State, which completed a perfect regular season by defeating Michigan 18-15 on Saturday, continued to chip away at No.1-ranked Alabama's lead today in The Associated Press college football poll.

The Rose Bowl-bound Buckeyes received 18 of 65 first-place votes and 1,214 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters to move within 24 points of Alabama.

The Crimson Tide, 30-0 winners over Miami, Fla., received 32 first-place votes and 1,238 points. Last week, Alabama led Ohio State 34-14 in first-place votes and 1,262-1,218 in points.

The top six teams — Alabama, Ohio State, Nebraska, Southern California, Florida State and Texas — held onto their positions but Arkansas slipped past Oklahoma into the seventh spot while the Sooners dropped to eighth, a reversal of last week's ratings.

Nebraska, which defeated Iowa State 34-3, received four first-place votes and 1,157 points to nose out Southern Cal, idle last weekend. The Trojans had 10 ballots for No.1 but only 1,151 points.

It was a good weekend for Florida State, which accepted a bid to the Orange Bowl and then walloped Memphis State 66-17. The Seminoles received 1,019 points.

The remaining first-place ballot was split among Texas, Arkansas and No.9 Houston. Texas whipped Texas Christian 35-10 and received 959 points, Arkansas earned 865 points for a 22-10 triumph over Texas A&M and Houston, which wasn't scheduled, polled 811 points. The Cougars are 37 points behind Oklahoma, which polled 848 following a 24-22 decision over Missouri.

Unbeaten Brigham Young held onto 10th place with 705 points for a 27-0 victory over Utah.

The Second Ten consists of Pittsburgh, Purdue, Clemson, Washington and Auburn, tied for 14th, Michigan, Baylor, Tulane, South Carolina and Penn State.

Last week, it was Pitt, Purdue, Michigan, Clemson, Auburn, Washington, Wake Forest, Temple and Tennessee, with Baylor and Tulane tied for 20th.

South Carolina and Penn State returned to the Top Twenty by defeating, respectively, Wake Forest 35-14 and Temple 22-7. The losers fell out, as did Tennessee, which lost to Mississippi 44-20.

Foster Believes Duke Learned Good Lessons

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Bill Foster knows better than anyone the disappointment of last basketball season, but the Duke University coach believes his team learned some valuable lessons along the way.

Now he can only hope the Blue Devils, ranked third nationally in the Associated Press poll, and a victor in the opener against second-ranked Kentucky, will put that to good use. A year ago they were ranked second but fell on hard times and wound up with a disappointing 22-8 record.

"A year ago we had dry spells where we'd go four to four and a half minutes without a field goal," said Foster, who saw his team suffer through two agonizing setbacks at the end of the season.

First, after being tied by North Carolina for the regular-season title in the Atlantic Coast Conference, they lost to the Tar Heels in the ACC Tournament. Then they were upset by St. John's in the opening round of the NCAA tournament.

The problem was not limited field goals, however.

"We fell off percentagewise in free throws," said Foster. "Two years ago we led the nation, but last season we only made 69 percent. We've got to do better than that."

Foster felt the Blue Devils held up well in some areas, however.

"Frankly, I felt we played better defensively than we did the year before."

Whether Duke can maintain that status in view of the graduation of all-around star Jim Spanarkel remains to be seen, but the Blue Devils have the nucleus of a strong team. ACC writers picked them to finish second to North Carolina and the vote was strong enough to indicate they believe Duke is the only team in a position to seriously challenge Dean Smith's Tar Heels.

Senior Mike Gminski, who finished second in the ACC in both scoring and rebounding, returns as the dominant force on the team. The 6-foot-11 center must repeat his accomplishments of last season for Duke to maintain its national ranking and ACC hopes.

Gminski, who averaged 18.3 points per game, and 6-7 junior power forward Eugene Banks, who added 14.3 last season, should supply the bulk of Duke's firepower. Senior Bob Bender, a 6-2 point guard, also is expected to play an important role for the Blue Devils.

Other key personnel are 6-5 sophomore guard Vince Taylor, 6-8 junior forward Kenny Dennard and 6-6 junior forward Jim Suddath.

Winners Pass

Dave Cowens, left, and Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics sit together on the bench recently during an NBA game. "I've never seen a selfish team that passed the basketball," says Bill Fitch. "And I've never seen a unselfish team that didn't win." Utilizing that philosophy, Fitch has created order out of chaos in Boston and catapulted the Celtics to the top of the NBA standings. Unselfishness Is Winning Note For Newly-Inspired Celtic Five

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

"I've never seen a selfish team that passed the basketball," says Bill Fitch. "And I've never seen an unselfish team that didn't win."

Utilizing that philosophy, Fitch has created order out of chaos in Boston and catapulted the Celtics to the top of the National Basketball Association standings.

Fitch, who spent nine seasons in Cleveland before becoming coach of Boston this summer, has instilled a college-type spirit on the Celtics. Players on the bench cheer those on the court, and those on the court pick up bruises and floor burns diving for loose balls with totally unprofessional disregard for life and limb.

And they pass the ball — oh, how these Celtics pass the ball! Four, five, six times the ball changes hands until finally, inevitably, someone is free for a layup or a jumper. The result is balanced scoring, and a happy team.

"We have guys who like to pass," said Fitch, ticking off names like Dave Cowens, Nate "Tiny" Archibald, Chris Ford and, of course, the superrookie, Larry Bird. "You can talk all the philosophy you want, but unless you have guys who like to pass it's not going to work."

No one sees that more clearly than Cowens, who is again playing like the aggressive young dervish of the early 1970s now that he is no longer burdened with the duties of player-coach.

"We have players who aren't concerned with egos and are willing to pass the ball," he said. "That's the difference this year. We have players who are willing to make the sacrifices necessary to win."

The results have been dramatic. The Celtics were 4-12 at this time a year ago; now they are 12-4, the best record in the entire NBA.

"That's what I call turning it around," said Archibald.

"My parents didn't raise an idiot — winning is more fun than losing," said Fitch.

And the fans in Boston are getting in on the fun. Tradition-steeped Boston Garden has been filled to the rafters for five of the Celtics' seven home games thus far, compared to just one sellout all of last season. "It's like the last two years never happened," said Ford, referring to Boston's dismal records of 32-50 and 29-53, the club's worst marks ever.

The speed of the Celtics' turnaround has been stunning, since it is a maxim of pro sports that stability is one of the keys to winning. And the Celtics were anything but stable last season, when they went through 18 players, two coaches and two owners.

But Harry Mangurian bought out partner John Y. Brown last spring and turned the reins of the club back to Red Auerbach, restoring order to the front office. Auerbach, recognizing that an established coach was needed to straighten things out, went outside the Celtic family to hire Fitch, who was widely respecting for the coaching job he had done in Cleveland.

Then came a wholesale housecleaning. Bird, the brilliant All-American from Indiana State, was signed for $3.25 million over five years and taken under wing by Cowens. Free agent M.L. Carr was signed and Bob McAdoo was shipped out as compensation.

Just as important as the roster changes were the new attitudes of those who were kept.

Take Archibald, for example. He had been plagued by injuries the past three seasons, and at the end of the 1978-79 campaign he was sure he would never wear Celtic Green again.

But Fitch, knowing how rare it is to fine point guards of Archibald's proven ability, wiped the slate clean, gave Archibald the ball and told him to run the club. At the age of 31, Archibald has shaken off the cobwebs and is playing like he did a half-dozen years ago, leading the league in assists.

Cedric Maxwell and Rick Robey are other key players up front, while Ford and Jeff Judkins share the backcourt with Archibald. Eric Fernsten, Don Chaney and Gerald Henderson fill out the roster, and each has a clearly defined role — Fernsten to hit the boards, Chaney to play defense, Henderson to spell Archibald.

Wilson Not Playing Dead

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — While all indications point toward an easy victory for North Carolina in the traditional football finale Saturday, Duke Coach Red Wilson is not ready to throw in the towel. And why should he?

The fact that North Carolina has lost to Duke's Blue Devils only once in the 1970s does not impress Wilson. He is after all a man who can read the record book, and the record book tells him the winner never has it easy.

As an example, Dick Crum's Tar Heels won 16-15 last season. Under Bill Dooley they won 14-13 in 1974, and 39-38 in 1976. In 1975 the teams played to a 17-17 tie.

On paper there isn't much to suggest that the game will be much of a contest.

"But games are never won and lost on paper," said Wilson.

North Carolina's dominance of the 70s notwithstanding, Duke trails by just two games in the series, 31-29-4. There is a great difference in the talent of the teams, however.

The Tar Heels (6-3-1) have accepted a bid to play in the Gator Bowl opposite Michigan Dec. 28. The Blue Devils are playing for pride and nothing more.

They have lost four straight games, are winless in the Atlantic Coast Conference and 2-7-1 overall.

"We really don't have all the things that Carolina has," said Wilson. "But we're not discounting the Carolina game. We're going to work harder than we have for any game this season."

But Wilson does not believe the status of either should have a bearing on the outcome of the game.

"I think they will be able to relax with no bowl worries," Wilson said of North Carolina. "And I think it's a case of our team saying 'Hey, what can we do about this bowl situation,' and figuring it would be great to beat them."

Last season under Mike McGee Duke blew a 15-3 lead to lose in the closing minutes. But Wilson doubts that many of the players will be particularly sore about the outcome of that game.

"We don't have that many seniors and juniors who had all that much to do with it," he said. "So many our kids are young and really shouldn't feel that much."

Rono Wins 3rd Title

BETHLEHEM, Pa. (AP) — Henry Rono of Washington State has become the third person ever to win three NCAA cross country titles, joining Steve Prefontaine and Gerry Lindgren.

Rono was the individual winner Monday in the 41st annual NCAA cross country championships at Lehigh University.

The race, on Lehigh's 10,000-meter course, was run under ideal weather conditions, with Rono finishing in 28 minutes, 19.4 seconds.

State Awaits Chancellor's OK

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Bible tells us that Joab was the commander of David's army, so it is only fitting that a modern-day namesake, Joab L. Thomas, will decide if North Carolina State's football team is to go to war again this season.

The Wolfpack, The Associated Press has learned, has been offered a bid to play in the Garden State Bowl Dec. 15, but has run into a conflict — mid-term examinations. And Thomas, the university chancellor, is the only man with the authority to allow rescheduling of those tests.

But Thomas, according to a spokesman at N.C. State, was enroute to Alabama following the death of his mother. So the waiting game continues.

"I don't know what decision he'd make," said Ed Seaman, N.C. State's sports information director. "But he and only he can make it."

The statement, Seaman emphasized, was operative only in the event that an actual bid was extended by the New Jersey-based bowl game. Despite reports that such a bid had been extended, N.C. State authorities insist that nothing concrete has been offered.

There is a precedent for rescheduling of examinations at N.C. State. It happened in 1973 when the Wolfpack went to the Liberty Bowl and beat Kansas, 31-18.

But, as Seaman pointed out, Thomas was not the chancellor at that time. Should he follow that precedent, the Atlantic Coast Conference champions would put their 7-4 record on the line against Temple (8-2), which already has been selected by the Garden State Bowl.

N.C. State completed its regular season by beating Duke, 28-7, Saturday, to win its first ACC crown since 1973.

None of the bowl committees aside from the Garden State had a representative at the Duke game, however.

Three ACC teams, North Carolina, Wake Forest and Clemson, were given bowl bids. North Carolina will play Michigan in the Gator, Wake Forest meets LSU in the Tangerine and Clemson takes on Baylor in the Peach.

It is believed that the Wolfpack remains in contention for a bid to either the Sun or Fiesta bowls, but other teams still uninvited appear to have the inside track.

DUNKEL COLLEGE FOOTBALL INDEX

EXPLANATION - The Dunkel system provides a continuous index to the relative strength of all teams. It reflects average scoring margin combined with average opposition rating, weighted in favor of recent performance. Example: a 50.0 team has been 10 scoring points stronger, per game, than a 40.0 team against opposition of identical strength. Originated in 1929 by Dick Dunkel.

Richard, Ryan, Niekro Make Some Rotation

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros Manager Bill Virdon already is tinkering with the idea, grinning goulishly at the possibilities of pitching J.R. Richard, Nolan Ryan and Joe Niekro on successive days.

Should he dazzle the opposition by pitching strikeout artists Ryan and Richard in successive games or put Niekro and his unpreditable knuckleball between them in the rotation?

Will catcher Alan Ashby be able to stand the heat of two of baseball's hardest throwing pitchers and then master the feathery pitches of Niekro?

All these questions and more became topics of discussion when the Astros announced Monday they had signed Ryan to a four-year contract for a reported $4 million, making Ryan the highest paid free agent in the history of baseball.

"I'm deliberating whether I should put Niekro in the middle of them," Virdon said. "Or we might go with Ryan and Richard and then come back with Niekro. We've got plenty of time to roll it around."

Ryan, who led the American League in strikeouts with 233 last season, will join Richard, the major league leader at 313, and Niekro, the National League's winningest pitcher at 21-11, in forming one of the strongest starting threesomes in the major leagues next season.

Ryan said his contract did not include deferred payments and is guaranteed for three years. The Astros have the option to renew the contract for the fourth year.

Ryan, 16-14 with the California Angels last season, decided to test the free agent market and quickly settled on Houston as his choice, if the price was right.

"We talked to a number of clubs and asked them not to make a bid," said Dick Moss, Ryan's agent. "Our first priority was for Nolan to decide where he wanted to play. From that point, we felt we could reach suitable contract terms."

Ryan said signing with the Astros was a belated dream come true.

"I've thought of this moment for many years and dreamed about it growing up in (nearby) Alvin," said Ryan, a native Texan. "I always wanted to plays for the Astros and live at home. It's hard for Ruth (his wife) and I to realize that we've finally come home."

Ryan comes to the Astros with a 167-159 career record and numerous major league records. He is tied with Sandy Koufax with four career no hitters and holds the records for most strikeouts in a season, 383 and most 300 strikeout seasons, five. He has 2,909 career strikeouts.

It was the fourth big contract signing for the Astros this year. Outfielder Cesar Cedeno has signed a 10-year $3.5 million pact; Richard recently signed on for four years at $3.2 million and outfielder Jose Cruz signed a five-year contract for an estimated $1.8 million.

Hollywood Cut Loose By Dallas

He mugged for the national televison cameras once too often — on a day the Dallas Cowboys were fighting for their lives.

His sideline antics coupled with a lack of enthusiasm on the field during Washington's 34-20 rout of the Cowboys Sunday was too much for some teammates, and definitely irked the Dallas coaching staff.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry called strongside linebacker Henderson into his office Monday and told him he was being placed on waivers. Henderson said he would just retire from professional football. Landry said clean out your locker.

"Thomas had no intensity...and his sideline escapades didn't help," said mild-mannered linebacker coach Jerry Tubbs, who was watching when Henderson held up a forefinger to say the Cowboys were No.l , then pointed to a bandana tucked in his belt.

"I saw it on the television monitor and I mentioned it to him," said Tubbs. "He (Henderson) wasn't too happy about it.

"He didn't hustle," said Tubbs. "I think it was the way he played that was the straw that broke his back as far as Coach Landry was concerned. He wasn't performing...then he went on TV."

Henderson said he was ill with the flu and had a pulled hamstring.

Landry refused to give the details of what amounted to Henderson's firing.

However, Landry said he was aware of Henderson's mugging the camera. He also said Henderson had a bad game.

"This is just an accumulation of things...he would try hard...then he would slip back, then he would start again," said Landry. "Maybe Sunday was the last straw. It was not a good performing day for him."

Henderson has three years left on a contract with Dallas but could play for another team tomorrow if he wants. Landry said he would help Henderson go anywhere he wanted to go.

Henderson said, "I love the Dallas fans and I love the Cowboys. I don't want to play for a lower echelon team."

Asked if the retirement was irrevocable, Henderson said,"No, but I don't want to be passed around the league."

Henderson said he was put under a number of restrictions by Landry this year after his spectacular outbursts during the 1978 season, climaxed by the Super Bowl in which he held the center stage for the press.

Ask Suit Dismissal

PHOENIX (AP) — A judge has been asked to dismiss former Arizona State punter Kevin Rutledge's lawsuit against the school, the state Board of Regents and his former coach, Frank Kush.

There was no immediate indication of when U.S. District Court Judge William Copple would rule on the motion filed Monday by lawyers for Kush, the regents and ASU Athletic Director Dr. Fred Miller.

It asks Copple to dismiss the suit on grounds that a resident of one state cannot sue agencies of another in federal court. Rutledge now resides in Nevada, where he attends the state university at Las Vegas.

The complaint asks for $1.1 million in damages, claiming that Kush punched Rutledge after a poor kick during ASU's Oct. 28, 1978 loss to Washington in Seattle, and forced him to quit the team.

Art Carney In Quiet, Thoughtful Show

By JOAN HANAUER
UPI Television Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Thanksgiving is the season for turkey, cranberry sauce and at least one heartwarming television show.

This year CBS gets the Golden Sweet Potato Award for heartwarming — and incidentally for assembling one of the best casts seen on a television show in a long time.

The program is titled "Letters from Frank," it goes on the air Nov. 22, 9-11 p.m., Eastern time, and it stars Art Carney as Frank, Maureen Stapleton as his wife, Margaret Hamilton as his mother, Lew Ayres as his brother and Mike Farrell as his son.

It's a quiet, thoughtful kind of program, in which Art Carney plays a newspaper payroll master who is forced into retirement by a computer.

Carney and Miss Stapleton leave the apartment in which they have lived some 30 years and, with tart-tongued nonagenarian Miss Hamilton in the back seat, drive off to a retirement home near where Ayres and his simpering wife are vegetating away their final years.

The core of the show concerns Carney's inability to come to terms with the feeling of uselessness that retirement brings him — unlike his brother, who enjoys sitting in a rocker, sipping beer and doing nothing at all.

After a brief and disappointing return to his old newspaper, Carney and Stapleton take off to see their grandson, their son's boy by his first marriage.

From there it's on to see the son, Farrell, in a role nothing like his upbeat character on "M-A-S-H." In "Letters from Frank" Farrell performs convincingly and movingly as a failed artist who has to defend even his lack of success from his father's overpowering dreams.

Since this drama will be broadcast on Thanksgiving, rest assured all ends well. The story raises a few interesting points, and the performances are a delight. Art Carney can make something special even out of the act of sitting in a rocking chair and not liking it. For heavier emotions, you feel and empathize with his frustration, cheer on even his stubborn will.

Miss Stapleton's performance as the ever-loyal wife who looks forward to her husband's retirement much more than he does combines love and compassion with a tinge of her own desperation.

The show was filmed in Vancouver, B.C., opening it up to outdoor snow scenes and a bigger feeling than the studio-shot, indoor productions that are television's staple.

"We shot the whole thing on location," Miss Stapleton said in an interview. "They say it's cheaper to shoot on location, although I don't understand how that can be, because they have to put up everybody and feed them, put together sets — usually somebody's house — then take it apart again and paint over the damage they've done."

She said it is customary for everyone to stay at the same hotel or motel, to make transportation to the set easy, and "Letters From Frank" was no exception. The atmosphere gets increasingly "family," she said, "but we all know it's going to break up at the end." Sometimes odd things happen.

"One of the first nights there, Art went downstairs," Miss Stapleton recalled. "Right off the bar was a lounge with a piano. Art sat down at the piano — he knows how to play eight songs by heart. There was a jar on the piano and people started dropping money in.

"One man put $100 in the cup. Art asked somebody to go get that man and give him back his money.

"But the man said no, the money was for all the years of enjoyment he'd gotten from Art. He thought Art was really on his uppers and making a living playing piano in a bar in Vancouver.".

Miss Stapleton, well remembered for her stage roles, and on television particularly for "Queen of the Stardust Ballroom," is getting a lot of play in heartwarming shows. She previously played Ed Asner's wife in "The Gathering" on ABC, and this year plays his widow in "The Gathering II," to be broadcast on NBC, Dec. 17, 9-11 p.m., Eastern time.

In the odd way of television scheduling, "Letters From Frank" was shot last January, while "Gathering II" was completed last month.

Although she is one of the best actresses in America, she isn't deluged with scripts — not at her age, she says.

"Somebody sent me the script for 'Letters from Frank' and it seemed nice," she said. "On television, if a script doesn't make me throw up, it's good. And I knew Art was going to be in it."

She prefers making movies to appearing on stage — "You do 'em and go home — that's it."

She also happens to be a big movie fan — she has seen "Gone With The Wind" 27 times and mementos of the film decorate her Manhattan apartment. She yearns for the old films of Jean Arthur and Claudette Colbert, while today's rape and war epics turn her off — particularly because they are too long.

Her biggest problem in movie-making for theater or television centers around the long waits between scenes for lights, other actor's scenes, retakes, whatever.

"I can't read because it takes me too far away from the character," she said. "Some actors can sleep, but I can't. I like to play games — poker, if anyone will play, otherwise alphabet games. We played a lot of alphabet games on 'Letters From Frank.'"

New Port Wine From California

ST. HELENA, Calif. (UPI) — A leading California winemaker has come up with a new port named for the variety of grapes from which it is made. The Napa Valley Cabernet Sauvignon ruby port is a blend of grapes from the 1976 and 1977 vintages. It's going to be scarce. Only 2,858 cases were made, and the vintner recommends storing it a while for bottle aging.

Tonight, A TV Special That Is Really Special

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — This is the time of year for "Special Holiday Treats" on television, when ordinariness is gift-wrapped and called special. But tonight there is something rare on television: a special that is special.

It is called "Thanksgiving," a holiday episode of ABC's "Family" series. Joanne Woodward directs guest star Henry Fonda and the regular "Family" cast in a drama of rare poignance and sensitivity.

Fonda plays James Lawrence, the grandfather of the "Family" clan, who comes to town for a Thanksgiving visit. Grandpa Lawrence is lovable, brilliant, charming ... and growing senile. He knows this, and hates the fact of it; but he accepts it and endeavors to live with it by making arrangements with a nursing home.

But Doug Lawrence (James Broderick), 54 and still clinging to his childhood image of his father, refuses to acknowledge the problem. He sees his father as "the strongest man I ever knew," the man who represents a living buffer between himself and mortality.

Eventually, the entire family realizes that Grandpa is slowly eroding, but still, Doug refuses to face it. He storms out of the room when his wife (Sada Thompson) tells him that "Inside each of us there is a five-year-old child who refuses to believe in breakable parents." He rationalizes his father's periodic confusion by saying it happens to everybody.

It is a stirring moment when father and son finally confront reality. "Why didn't you tell me?" asks Doug.

"What was I supposed to do," his father responds, "slip it in at dinner? 'Son, I'm geting senile, pass the salt?'"

This is a lovely story superbly executed. A special, you might say.

Less special is a three-hour Western called "The Last Ride of the Dalton Gang." Unfortunately, you also get the first ride of the Dalton Gang, and all the rides in between.

This movie was cut to three hours from four, and still it is too long. About two hours and 51 minutes too long. The best part of the movie is the beginning title sequence, loaded with color covers of dime westerns and comic books.

And there is promise at the beginning, which opens with Emmett Dalton as an old man, running into one of his former gangmates on a Hollywood street in 1934. The incident is based on a true story. Emmett Dalton survived the famous shootout at Coffeyville, did time in prison, and moved to California where he did time as a real estate agent.

Now, that's a good yarn. Unfortunately, this movie quickly drops that opportunity, and spends 2½ hours trying to prove that the Daltons were really heroes and that robbing banks and trains were acts of social kindness.

Donation By Seniors Club

Some 110 members and guests attended the Thursday Thanksgiving Luncheon of the Town and Country Senior Citizens Club held at the St. Paul Episcopal Church Fellowship Hall. Job Seekers 'Conned' By Bogus Businessmen

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Police say two bogus businessmen set up shop in a city motel room Monday as prospective employers and may have fleeced as many as 100 job seekers out of $25 each for job application deposits.

The two, posing as Virginia businessmen, fled with money their victims had given them as a "security bond deposit" when their scheme was discovered by one of the applicants and the motel desk clerk, police said.

Police said the con artists made a clean, quick getaway. There were no suspects Monday night.

"They knew the jig was up," said one officer, "and they covered their tracks pretty well."

The number of job seekers taken in the scheme was uncertain Monday night. Officers said at least seven people confirmed that they lost $25 in the scheme, but estimates of the total believed to have been fleeced ran over 100.

"It's awful hard to say because a lot of people left not knowing they were ripped off," said policeman K.M. Sumner Jr. "They were told they'd hear something by Dec. 1 and then they'd start work and get their deposit refunded. Some of them won't know until Dec. 1 that they've been had."

As many as 200 people tried to apply for the jobs before the cover came off the ruse, Sumner said, and more than half that number may have paid the $25.

The men had advertised in the city's two newspapers for applicants for inventory workers' jobs paying $5.25 per hour. They said they were from Southern Inventory Co. of Roanoke, Va.

One of the would-be applicants answering the newspaper ad was Elbert Franklin, 23, of Climax. He said the men took groups of 20 would-be applicants inside the motel room, had them fill out forms, collected their money and ushered them out. Franklin said they were urged to rush through the paperwork.

A woman applicant demanded information about their company and told the men she had called the business bureau. She demanded and received her money back, Franklin said.

"Everyone started thinking, I think," said Franklin.

The motel desk asked the men the same questions about the same time and demanded identification.

Franklin said then there was "an uproar" among job applicants as the men abruptly grabbed their briefcases and fled.

Neither the Greensboro nor the Roanoke business bureaus had ever heard of the company. The address was listed for a street that does not exist.

By the time the police were notified and arrived, the men had gotten away.

N.C. Opens 4 Centers

Gov. Jim Hunt's office announced the opening of four Career Development Centers for Displaced Homemakers in North Carolina.

Located in Greenville, Oxford, Shelby and Roxboro, the centers will address the needs of homemakers who have lost their traditional means of support and are unprepared to enter the work world, the governor's office reported.

The centers, funded by the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA), expect to serve about 240 women during the next year, providing services such as vocational counseling, confidence-building and job readiness training. They are sponsored by the N.C. Council on the Status of Women, Department of Administration.

The Greenville center will officially open on Nov. 28, according to the governor's office.

Inch Too Much Of Fence Post

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — One post being used by Laura Evans to repair a boundary fence was an inch thicker than the others, so an 80-year-old widow took her to court, charging property encroachment.

The widow, Phyllis Clegg, also accused Mrs. Evans' son-in-law of hitting her over the head with the post in the ensuing row.

Both charges were dismissed.

Clinic Met A Case Of 'Unwanted'

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Dr. Peter English of Duke University has been researching the treatment of unwanted children in the past, but recently he became involved with a modern-day case.

A mother in her mid-twenties brought her two childen, ages 5 and 8, to a university clinic.

She requested physical examinations for them, telling the doctors she planned to take them to an orphanage the next week.

She said her life had changed, and she thought her children would be better off in an orphanage.

The doctors at the clinic said they were upset.

"There was an unsettling feeling among the group that we should have done something to prevent this act, perhaps with counseling," English said.

He recently discussed unwanted children at a symposium marking Duke's Medical Alumni Weekend.

"Maybe the Department of Social Services needed to investigate. Perhaps all that was required to keep the family together were measures of support that we recommend regularly — after school care, employment for the parents, a homemaker, temporary foster care or supplemental economic support."

But by then the woman and children were gone.

The incident reminded English that society has not solved the age-old problem of the abandoned child and what to do about him.

According to his research, orphanages began to be established in this country in the 1850s. However, since the turn of the century most states have been trying to support children in their own homes when possible or in foster care.

He said studies by psychoanalyst Rene Spitz "demonstrated that children reared with their mothers, even in prisons, fared better physically, mentally and emotionally than children raised in the best-run foundling homes."

In the past 20 years, other problems have arisen, English said. Youngsters are often shuffled from one foster home to another and many don't receive medical and other kinds of care the state is paying for, he said.

As a result, society knows more about what doesn't work with abandoned children than it knows about what does work, English said.

"As for the woman and two children who prompted this discussion, she indeed left them at the orphanage later that week," English said.

"They are reported to be doing well. We have been unable to locate the mother."

10-Year -Old Lost Chance For U.S. Monopoly Title

YOUNG FINALIST — Ten-year-old Angelo Repole of Staten Island, the east coast Monopoly Champion, reacts to pressures of competition against the 1977 national champion. (AP Laserphoto)

NEW YORK (AP) — When Angelo Repole realized he couldn't come up with $1,300 to pay the rent on Park Place, he got up from the table and ran sobbing to the men's room.

Angelo wasn't only bankrupt, he had just missed out on a chance to become the United States Monopoly champion.

The 10-year-old Staten Island youth wheeled and dealed for nearly two hours with the four men in the competition before losing his bid to unseat defending champion Dana Terman, 23, of Wheaton, Md.

Angelo's mother, Marti, remained nearby throughout the competition to help with such problems as she could — like removing the green bubble gum that burst on her son's face.

Angelo blew bubbles throughout the match, staged in the plush Palace Restaurant. All the contestants wore tuxedoes, prompting bystanders to comment that the scene reminded them of a high-stakes baccarat game in a Las Vegas casino.

By the end of the match, all the utilities were out of order, only one railroad was running, and Angelo controlled St. Charles Place to remain Terman's only real competition.

It was a roll of the dice — the spinning of fortunes — that finally sent the wolves to Angelo's door.

Angelo, the New York regional champion, landed on Terman's Park Place property and couldn't raise the $1,300 rent.

He paid out all his money, conceded defeat and then, head lowered, let his hard-earned tears flow.

"Angelo can't stand losing," his mother confided. She said he is a straight-A student at P.S. 20.

But even in defeat, Angelo was the darling of the tournament. After 10 minutes, the unsmiling runnerup emerged from the men's room, composure regained, to congratulate Terman, a car salesman.

"Angelo is an excellent player, and I hope I'll see him again at the next tournament in 1981," the champion said.

Terman said he has been playing the Parker Brothers game since he was 8, and professes to be a "games fanatic." He said he is also a master duplicate bridge player, a chess and backgammon expert, and plays a "fair" hand of poker.

The other regional challengers were David Ulmer, a 22-year-old Los Angeles banker who said he prepared by playing the game against a computer at the University of California; Steve McCue, a 31-year-old psychotherapist from Kansas City, and Rick Sayler, 23, an auto parts salesman from Fort Wayne, Ind.

Terman will represent the United States at the World Monopoly Championship next April in Bermuda. At the last world championship in Monte Carlo, he placed sixth in a field of 19 national champions.

The prize for the world champion is a free trip for two anywhere in the world.

Two-Barrelled Cannon A Flop

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — A Confederate secret weapon — a double-barreled cannon that killed a cow but never worked well enough to be fired at the Yankees — was enshrined in a park on Monday.

"The idea was that if you fired two cannon balls connected by a chain ... they would sweep acroes the battlefield knocking down a great number of soldiers," James Reap, president of the Athens Clarke Heritage Foundation, said Monday night.

The cannon, with its two four-foot barrels, was designed by John Gilleland, a contractor and private in an elite home-guard unit for businessmen not eligible for service in the Confederate Army.

The cannon was a failure because its designers could not get both barrels to fire simultaneously even though they had a common breech, Reap said.

"In some of their experiments, according to oral history, when one barrel fired before the other the hain broke," Reap said. "Pieces of chain went flying off, and it was downright dangerous to the people who were firing it."

According to one contemporary report, the cannon was fired at a target of poles and the twin shot flew off in "kind of a circular motion, plowed up an acre of ground, tore up a cornfield, mowed down saplings, and then the chain broke. One ball killed a cow in a distant field, while the other knocked down the chimney of a log cabin."

The cannon, with two four-foot barrels angled three degrees apart, fired six-pound balls connected by an eight-foot chain. Thirty-six local citizens raised the $350 it cost to cast the weapon at an Athens foundry.

The cannon, on its wood field carriage with large, spoked wheels, had been "outside city hall chained to a tree for a long time," Reap said. Now it has been moved a few yards to a concrete pad in a landscaped park. The cannon has been loaded with blanks and fired occasionally, "to celebrate political victories."
