New Scandal Revealed In Corruption Probe

By GREGORY GORDON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In what is being described as the biggest public corruption probe since Watergate, FBI undercover agents posing as bribe-paying Arab businessmen have for two years been investigating a U.S. senator, six congressmen and 13 state officials, officials said Saturday.

Sources said the FBI used hidden cameras to film most of the meetings at which undercover agents handed high public officials a total of nearly $1 million in cash.

In return, the public officials allegedly promised to help a supposed wealthy Arab businessman in his business dealings and in winning more permanent immigration status for himself and his friends.

Federal grand juries are expected to be asked soon to bring indictments against a number of the public officials, sources said.

Among those investigated, sources said, were: Sen. Harrison Williams Jr., D-phy, D-N.Y., Frank Thompson Jr., D-N.J., Michael Myers and Raymond Lederer, D-Pa., and John Jenrette Jr., D-S.C. Sources said at least one other congressman also was a subject of the inquiry.

Official sources said the FBI had yet to decide whether to arrest those involved, or to wait until grand jury subpoenas are issued. Agents were fanning out, however, to inform them they were under investigation.

Jenrette's office in South Carolina said FBI agents visited him for two hours Saturday afternoon in Washington.

Newsday, a Long Island newspaper, reported that the investigation first began as an organized crime probe of counterfeit securities and certificates of deposit. The newspaper said a convicted felon then pointed FBI agents toward municipal contract fraud in New York, Philadelphia and New Jersey.

Later, allegations arose that members of Congress were accepting payoffs for their influence in assisting private businessmen and foreigners wishing to stay in the United States.

FBI agents in five cities then posed as Arab businessmen, consultants and advisers, meeting with public officials over the next 24 months in a fourstory office building on Long Island, in a New Jersey condominium, on a yacht off the Florida coast, in a townhouse in Washington's exclusive Georgetown section and elsewhere.

One source said the operation — code-named "Abscam" for "Arab scam" — was "the biggest investigation since Watergate" and the weight of evidence against the officials involved was "amazing" because it was on videotape and tape recorded. Another source called the case the most sweeping probe undertaken by the FBI in more than two decades.

Philip Heymann, assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division, refused to comment on the investigation and said Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti was ordering all department officials to withhold comment.

The FBI agents allegedly created an Arab sheik named Kambir Abdul Rahman, whom they depicted as being a 40-year-old Lebanese businessman involved in shipping oil to the United States and interested in broadening his dealings.

Betty Speir Chairman

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Betty Spier of Bethel was elected chairman of the state Democratic Party Saturday to succeed Sen. Russell Walker, who resigned because he faces a primary opponent in his bid for re-election to the General Assembly.

Walker, an Asheboro businessman, was required to give up the party post because he has to run against another Democrat in an election. Party rules prohibit such a race for the state chairman.

David Price, executive director of the state party, said Gov. Jim Hunt recommended Mrs. Spier's election in a message Friday.

Inmates Take Over New Mexico Prison

By JOHN GILLIS

SANTA FE, N.M. (UPI) — Inmates armed with pipes and homemade knives took "absolute control" of the New Mexico State Penitentiary Saturday and the governor said at least 10 prisoners were killed in the uprising.

The inmates — demanding to negotiate prison conditions with Gov. Bruce King and state corrections officials — held 13 guards hostage, but assured authorities they were not harmed or being mistreated.

"There are probably 10 or more prisoners who are dead," King said at the scene.

The governor said the inmates possibly died from inhaling smoke from fires set by the rampaging prisoners in mattresses and other materials.

The rebellious prisoners later agreed to negotiate their demands with prison officials, while 65 National Guard troops stood by on alert near the prison grounds and another 130 Guardsmen from Albuquerque were stationed at the Santa Fe Armory.

More than 1,000 inmates, subduing guards with pipes and homemade knives, seized the multi-winged prison at 2 a.m. and set fires that sent heavy smoke billowing from several wings. But the fires were later extinguished.

"The inmates have absolute control of the institution," Warden Jerry Griffin said.

The governor said there was information a supervising lieutenant was seriously injured, but King and spokesmen for the inmates denied any guard had been killed.

King said prison officials were trying to keep the situation as calm as possible "so we don't harm the lives of the ones who are still alive."

The rebellious inmates at first took 15 guards hostage, but they allowed two guards to be hospitalized for undisclosed injuries.

The inmates initially demanded to see the governor, who was at the prison Saturday but did not directly participate in negotiations.

Participants included two corrections officials, two reporters and an undisclosed number of inmates. Talks were conducted at a table set up outdoors in sunny, cool weather on a sidewalk between the main gate to the institution and the entrance to the administration building.

Beyond the negotiators and ringing the institution were about 40 National Guard troops and 80 policemen armed with clubs or rifles.

The state negotiating team was comprised of former penitentiary Warden Felix Rodriguez, now a state Department of Corrections official, deputy warden Bob Montoya, Ernie Mills, a state capitol radio columnist and John Andrews, an Albuquerque television reporter.

Inmates communicated to officials outside the prison by walkie-talkie and telephone. The inmates apparently moved into the administrative offices of the prison, including an area where inmate files are kept. Griffin said it was believed some files were destroyed by inmates.

King said "Chopper One," whom he spoke with from state police headquarters, told him inmates were upset because they were being "treated like kids."

"He just told me they wanted to be treated like men," King said.

The same inmate apparently called a Santa Fe radio station earlier and presented similar grievances to station owner Dale Wood.

"He was very calm and collected," Wood said. "The three things he complained about were overcrowding, tension in the institution and harassment by the guards."

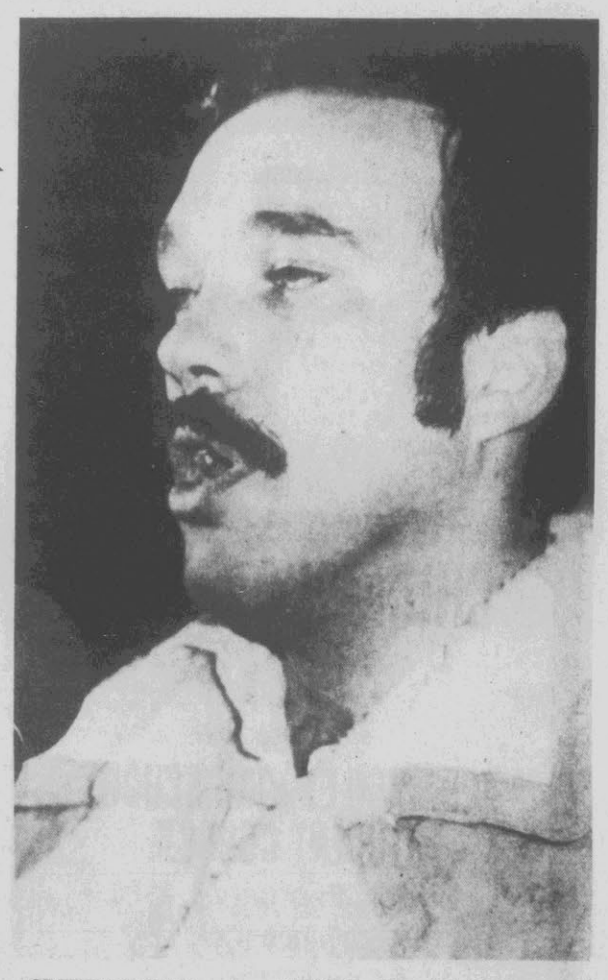

About 1,140 inmates are housed in the institution — originally designed for about 1,000 inmates, then later reduced in bed capacity.

At least 85 inmates in a separate cellblock who apparently did not wish to participate in the takeover surrendered when the disruption began. State Police Sgt. Bob Carroll said the inmates, some wearing only underwear, were told to go to the recreation yard where food and blankets would be dropped by air.

Authorities were not certain if any inmates involved in the December escape were involved in the takeover. Ten of the eleven fugitives were recaptured.

The prison, built in 1954, was the scene of a similar prisoner uprising in 1971. That takeover was sparked by dissatisfaction over conditions in the prison and was quelled by guards using clubs and tear gas.

Donovan Phillips Recalls Sit-In Experiences

DONOVAN PHILLIPS . . . Born in Kinston, Phillips moved to Greenville as an infant. In 1960, he was in on the ground floor of sit-ins by blacks in eating places in Durham. Next week will mark the 20th anniversary of that movement.

By JERRY. RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

Two decades have passed since the February day in 1960 that Donovan Phillips first took part in sit-ins in eating places in Durham. "Ours was a few days after the Greensboro sit-ins," Phillips said.

"It was just about Valentine Day. I was 18, a student at what was then called N.C. College, in Durham. The early sit-ins basically involved lunch counters in five and ten cent stores. Later, it evolved into a total economic boycott of downtown Durham."

For Phillips, this teen-age beginning marked a life-long crusade for civil rights causes. "I felt then, and I think events have proved that we had a moral cause. Our feeling was that if we stuck to it, we'd whip it, which we did. There were legal things to prove, too, and we were able to do that."

Two of the 1960 leaders in Durham, Phillips noted, "were attorney Floyd B. McKissick and Gordon Carey. Carey represented the Congress on Racial Equality — CORE.

As the initial sit-ins gained momentum, it developed into a movement with about 1,000 to 1,200 participating in that first year. There was a council made up of 14 student leaders, of which I was one. Another Greenville man active in the sit-ins was Lacey Streeter, who now lives in Washington, D.C.

"Before the sit-ins ended, our group developed into a coalition, the Durham Friends Committee, with students from Duke, N.C. Central College, Hillside High School and even junior high schools in the Durham area." Phillips noted that four of the 14 leaders were white, "three of them from Duke."

He acknowledged that for him and for the others too, it was a serious cause. "In the beginning it had more of a religious fervor, not as political as today. Dr. Martin Luther King spoke to us on three occasions. At that time he was getting involved politically but then as later he always stressed the non-violent viewpoint."

Feelings of fear, Phillips admitted, "were certainly part of our daily lives. How can you not fear when you are almost hit by a city transit bus, or as on one occasion, one night on Federal Street, I got shot at?

"We were assaulted often, in stores and on sidewalks, mostly by young white males, usually the unemployed type with nothing better to do. Some middle age males harrassed us to. I once was spat on while trying to get service at Woolsworths."

Phillips can see the humor of the situation too. "Do you know what it's like to try eating a hamburger, to make it last 45 minutes until the police could come to arrest you for trespassing? I did that once in a place called Tanner's, in downtown Durham."

There was a regular cycle — "you went in someplace to order, then got arrested, taken to jail and booked, had bond posted, was released and started all over again."

Bondsman for the group was a black insurance agency, the Southern Fidelity Insurance Company.

Phillips feels all of it was worthwhile. "I think the sit-ins were largely responsible for gains in civil rights. It opened doors to restaurants, to motels, it eliminated the black-white bathrooms custom and blacks having to ride in buses.

"For me it resulted in many personal rewards, meeting people like Julian Bond, Andrew Young, Roy Wilkins, Maynard Jackson, and Dr. King, people I would not have met otherwise."

When Phillips' involvement in Durham ended, he returned to Greenville at the end of 1961. "I helped organize sit-ins in Greenville. It was a scattered affair, but I feel it was instrumental in introducing integration in Greenville. I started attending national

Cautious Hope For Break In Hostage Impasse

By United Press International

U.N. diplomats said Saturday a meeting in the next few days between Iranian President-elect Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and the ailing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini may hold the key to whether 50 American hostages are freed soon.

Well-informed diplomatic sources expressed hope a breakthrough may come in three or four weeks from U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim's painstaking effort to work out a plan to obtain the release of the hostages and answer Iran's grievances.

But they cautioned against over-optimism.

"Nothing is certain yet," a source said. "The break may come even sooner than expected or it may be delayed as it has in the past."

Waldheim's proposal included establishment of an international investigating commission to look into alleged crimes of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi in exchange for the Americans, who spent their 91st day in captivity Saturday.

Waldheim met Thursday with Iranian Ambassador Mansur Farhang, and Iranian authorities have accepted that proposal as a basis for negotiations.

Diplomatic sources said U.N. attention is focused on a meeting in the next few days between Bani-Sadr and Khomeini, who has been hospitalized with a heart ailment. The future of Waldheim's negotiations, they said, will depend on the outcome of that meeting.

If all goes well, they said, freedom for the hostages could follow Iran's parliamentary elections and Bani-Sadr's formal installation as president in 3-4 weeks.

Another unresolved question was whether the militants who seized the embassy Nov. 4 would comply with any agreement to free the captives that does not include the extradition of the deposed shah, now in exile in Panama.

Friction between Bani-Sadr and the militants has been evident since Bani-Sadr won a landslide election victory a week ago and warned the students they could not defy government authority.

Throughout the three-month crisis, militants have rebuffed attempts by officials to soften their demands, saying they would only take orders from Khomeini.

In a possible effort to rally popular support, the militants called for a march on the U.S. Embassy Monday on the birthday of the prophet Mohammed, founder of the Moslem religion, Tehran Radio said in a broadcast monitored by the BBC in London.

The appeal asked people to march toward the U.S. "den of espionage" chanting slogans honoring the prophet and denouncing America.

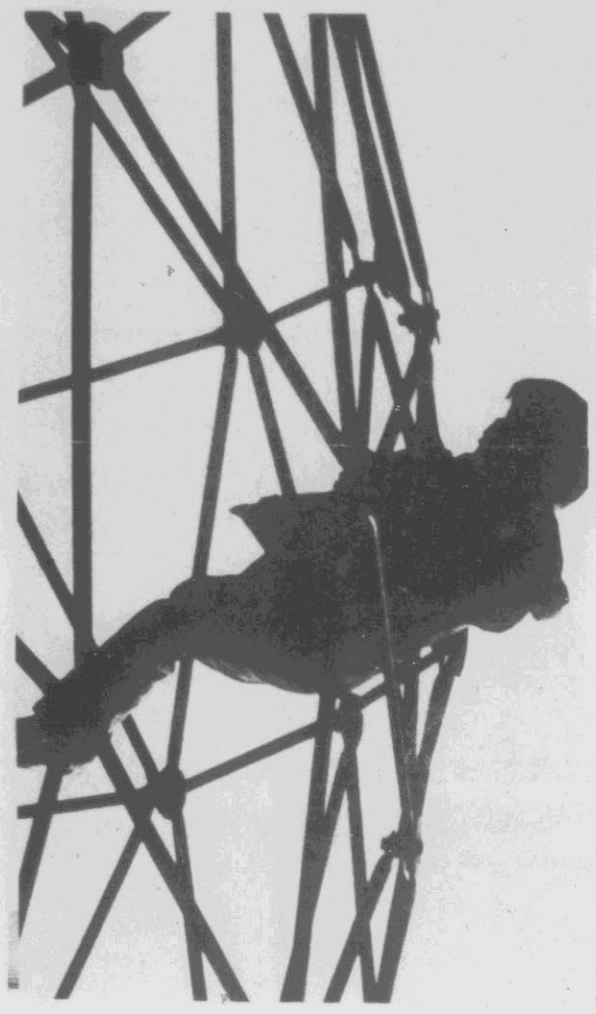

U.N. diplomats believe chances of the release of the hostages vastly improved after Bani-Sadr's election victory for two reasons:

—Bani-Sadr expressed a clear position that the hostages should be freed under a negotiated settlement even after his ouster as foreign minister in November when he was about to fly to New York to discuss the matter before the U.N. Security Council.

Western press reports from Tehran said the Iranian government has ordered a hunt for U.S. news reporters who are still sending out news reports despite a ban on American media."

The order was in response to a complaint from the Ministry of Guidance that "a number of correspondents for American news agencies and television networks still work here under varying cover."

Republicans Split On Amendment Plan

By CLAY F. RICHARDS
UPI Political Writer

EASTON, Md. (UPI) — Republican leaders split sharply Saturday over proposing a constitutional amendment requiring federal spending and tax limits.

At the third annual Tidewater Leadership Conference, they came near to rejecting a constitutional amendment plan they overwhelmingly approved last year.

The vote was 34-30 for the resolutions by the senators, congressmen, governors and other party officials at the GOP conference.

The three-day meeting was to begin with discussion of the draft, but that plan was scrubbed by a coalition that included some members who wanted to avoid the controversial subject altogether and others who wanted to debate the economy first.

Also on the agenda were resolutions dealing with nuclear power, women's rights and Soviet aggression in Afghanistan.

There was relatively little presidential politicking — mainly because the GOP candidates were on the campaign trail in New Hampshire and Arkansas.

March Ends With No Violence

MARCHING AGAINST THE KLAN — Thousands of the Feb. 2 Mobilization Committee's supporters march down a Greensboro street Saturday afternoon during an anti-Ku Klux Klan and civil rights march. (AP Laserphoto)

By FRED McNEESE

GREENSBORO, N.C. (UPI) — An estimated 4,500 anti-Ku Klux Klan demonstrators staged a peaceful march through Greensboro Saturday, three months after five people were killed when a gunbattle erupted between klansmen, Nazis and Communists at a similar demonstration.

A limited state of emergency was in effect Saturday, and hundreds of helmeted city police officers and highway patrolmen were stationed along the 3½-mile parade route. Some 300 National Guardsmen were on standby in another part of the city, but no incidents were reported.

"I simply have to give credit to the marchers, they were very organized and orderly," said Capt. James Hilliard of the Greensboro police department. "Everything went very well."

Two arrests were made, both for possession of weapons, but police said only one of the suspects was a marcher. Officers arrested a juvenile shortly after the march began for possession of a knife and possession of a controlled substance.

In near-freezing temperatures, the demonstrators, carrying anti-klan banners and signs espousing causes from gay rights to socialism, marched from the War Memorial Stadium to the Greensboro Coliseum where a rally was held.

Few spectators appeared as the five-block-long column weaved through residential, business and downtown areas of the city. A National Guard helicopter hovered overhead, as the demonstrators chanted "the klan has to to go, we can't take it no more."

The march was organized after five members of the Communists Workers Party were shot to death in a gunbattle with klansmen and Nazis at a Greensboro housing project on Nov. 3, 1979. The gunbattle erupted after the communists taunted their assailants, who drove by the small rally in cars.

Police assigned to the November rally were blocks away when the shooting occurred, and at the Coliseum Saturday, Fred Shuttlesworth of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference blamed them for the deaths.

"If the police department in November had done its job effectively, we would not have to come back here again," he said.

The audience reserved its biggest applause for Wilmington 10 leader Ben Chavis, who had the crowd standing and pounding the floors when he called for it to send a message on the draft to President Carter.

"There ain't going to be no institution of the draft," he said to the resounding cheers of the few thousand left in the Coliseum. "We're not going to fight no more wars for capitalism, we aint' gonna fight no more wars for imperialism... We are gonna march, we are gonna march, we are gonna tear this system down."

Signs carried by the marchers Saturday said,"Fight the Klan, Not Iran," "No Threats, No Klan, Nothing Will Stop Us Foward, Foward Ever," and "Lesbians United to Fight the Klan."

The March was sponsored by numerous civil rights groups, and the marchers appeared to be a mixture of Socialists, Communists and civil rights and gay activists.

Before the march began, C.T. Vivian, former executive secretary of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, told the marchers it is time for the nation to be told that racism can no longer be accepted.

"We have seen people whipped, white and black, because they stood for justice," he said.

"We have seen klan terror everywhere and the conscious of the nation was not moved."

Vivian also called on marchers to turn in their weapons if they were armed.

March organizers and the Communist Workers Party split over the issue of carrying firearms at the march, and the Communists were subsequently ousted from the planning of the rally.

Earlier in the day as some 60 buses arrived with demonstrators, the assembly area took on the look of marketplace, with street venders hawking T-shirts, books, and souvenirs.

"Buy a button. Remember the day you stopped the KKK," said one vendor.

Acquitted

PLAINVIEW, Texas (AP) — Self-professed witch Loy Dean Stone has been acquitted of the 1977 Halloween shotgun slaying of a 15-year-old girl.

Stone, 50, a high priest in the Church of Wicca, was tearful as he hugged his wife and two daughters after the acquittal Friday. But Raul Casas, the dead girl's father, was shaken and angry.

Prices May Be Near Peak

By THOMAS L. FRIEDMAN

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — With world attention focused on Iran and Afghanistan, most OPEC producers in the past week quietly raised crude oil prices to a point analyists believe cannot go much higher.

With Saudi Arabia leading the way, Kuwait, Iraq, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Iran, Venezuela and Nigeria increased their rates by $2 and $4 per barrel, a move expected to cost motorists another two cents a gallon.

Nigeria, the United States' second biggest supplier oil, announced a $4-a-barrel increase Saturday.

The price boosts surprised oil industry analysts, not only because these same countries had just raised their prices in December but also because demand is expected to slacken sharply by mid-1980.

Particularly unexpected was the decision by Saudi Arabia to raise the price of its Arabian light crude — the traditional benchmark for all OPEC prices — from $24 to $26 a barrel. Only five weeks earlier Saudi Oil Minister Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani said:

"We in Saudi Arabia think that $24 is a good price ...(we will maintain it) as long as possible."

What changed?

"The Saudis got fed up with having their oil under-priced," said Robert Mabro, Oxford University's oil economist.

"With market pressure as it was," said the analyst, "the Saudis had to get their prices in line with the other producers. They just could not keep giving it away to the oil companies."

Since the meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Caracas in December, the Saudis have been charging $24 per barrel for the same quality oil the Iranians were getting $28.50 and more.

More Winter, Phil Says

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil, the groundhog, peeked from his heated burrow Saturday and predicted six weeks of snow, sleet and freezing rain for the nation.

Members of the Punxsutawney Ground Hog Club dragged Phil from his hole on Gobbler's Knob at 7:29 a.m. to make the "prediction" for a crowd of about 1,000 of the freezing faithful.

Club President Charles Erhard raised his earmuff next to Phil's furry nose, listened, and then told the crowd the groundhog had seen his shadow conventions of the NAACP, for example in Minneapolis and in Philadelphia. At these conventions there came about the birth of a new factor, a vanguard of youth, youth chapters rallying under the banner of NAACP."

It was after his return to Greenville that Phillips attended a Funeral Director School in New York. "After I was trained, the business (Phillips Brothers Mortuary) was not large enough to take me in. So I got a job as Deputy Director with the Pitt County Neighborhood Youth Corps. When my father died in 1969, I went into the funeral business."

In recent years, Phillips has been active in civil rights issues from time to time. "One of these was a movement in New Rochelle, New York to get the history of blacks into history books. That was really a rewarding experience."

Now 38 and a successful businessman and a member of the Greenville City Board of Education, Phillips says "I've learned to control whatever bitterness I feel. The early sit-ins and other involvements I've had with civil rights have been dramatic experiences. And I still firmly believe in nonviolence as the way for any people to settle their differences."

"Brick is better."

Ask the experts.

It saves maintenance.
Wood rots, burns, splits and warps. And it needs repainting or staining about every 2 years. That means wood continues to cost you money. Forever. Sanford brick doesn't.

And energy.
Wood siding is a very poor insulator. Brick is a good insulator. That's why, when you build with Sanford brick, you not only save substantially on the cost of fuel and electricity but you can also temperature control your home with a smaller heating and cooling unit. And, if you build with insulated brick cavity walls, you can reduce your heating bill by 28% and your cooling bill up to 9%.

And pest damage.
Wood invites termites, pine borers, woodpeckers, carpenter ants, etc. Sanford brick is pest-proof. A lot of wood home owners wish they had thought of that.

Here's the beauty part.
Sanford Handcraft brick styles give you all the savings plus a truly beautiful home. They come in a wide range of colors and textures that recreate the mellow warmth and dignity of old landmarks. You'll find one just right for your building project.

And the final payoff.
Brick homes always maintain a higher resale value than wood homes of comparable size. And their values appreciate faster.

If you're thinking of building with wood siding, you should get all the facts first. For more information, call or write your nearest brick expert:

Practical Side More Difficult

The new City Council has developed a "statement of philosophy" by which it hopes to be guided in the two years ahead.

The statement calls for planned and orderly growth, optimum utilization of personnel and facilities; being responsive to community needs and citizen participation in government.

The city believes:

"In the opportunity for city employees to have professional growth and development; in a quality of life that will be safe, healthful, productive, aesthetically and culturally pleasing; that the level of services government can provide is directly related to the citizens' willingness to support these services and that these services can only be provided within available resources."

The statement also called for protection of natural beauties and assets and cooperation with other government bodies.

We have no quarrel with the general aims which the city government has put forth. They are beautifully outlined.

As always, though, we now get to the practical side of running city goverment. Garbage has to be collected, life and property protected, fires fought, streets repaired.

There have to be practical programs of expansion of city services for a growing city . . . street planning and construction, for instance. An atmosphere has to be created to develop new jobs for our citizens. In all the dealings city government has with people, citizens have to be treated fairly, and administrators must get the best there is out of our city employees.

The practical decisions to implement the aims set out in this philospohy statement will be difficult. If our council members are people of vision they will make the decisions which keep improving our community.

Practical Way Of Learning Real Life

Rose High School students took over the roles of city council members and city officials Wednesday as a part of Optimist Club "Youth Appreciation Week" activities.

The students learned something about city government by participating in the processes of government.

It is a positive activity and we hope that all area young people will take advantage of the opportunities to attend public governmental meetings. It would be a practical way to learn about government.

More Changes In Politics

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The strong shift of housing patterns in North Carolina away from traditional single-family homes to apartments, condominiums, and mobile homes will mean that traditional ways of approaching and solving community problems through local politics are in for some jarring changes as well.

The most significant factor at work is the demonstration over a period of time that homeowners take a more active part in community affairs; their investment gives them an incentive to protect and defend their homes against any action considered threatening to that investment or their lifestyles.

With little variation, it is the single family dweller who pushes government for improved services — from garbage collection to police protection to recreation to education — and who organizes to do battle with government over zoning changes, undesirable road construction, tax increases, etc.

Recent information from the North Carolina Department of Labor shows that Tar Heels are being pushed by skyrocketing building costs to delay, and often abandon, that dream of owning their own home.

The Figures

Multi-family dwelling construction permits during the first 10 months of 1979 were up 28.1 percent over the same period in 1978. Single family dwelling permits dropped 7.5 percent during that time.

Typically, singles and young families must take the option of mobile home or apartment dwelling, while the older, better educated, higher income people compose the single-family home population.

A team of sociologists at N. C. State University took a close look at mobile home occupants with a view to nailing down differences between that group and those who own their own homes. The findings can to a considerable degree be extended to those who live in multi-family homes as well.

There is, generally speaking, less involvement in community, civic and church activities; a strong sense that political and community leaders pay them less attention; a lower level of expectations from community or government; and a feeling of not belonging, researchers discovered.

As the average family finds itself priced out of private dwellings, political experts are grappling with methods to make contact with the multi-family and mobile home dwellers to involve them more in community and political processes.

Complexities

North Carolina has a wealth of firewood which a lot of poor people could use to keep warm. There is state land where scrub growth needs to be cleared; state forests where culling is good for forest growth; and clearing of highway rights-of-way and future lake bottoms.

There are volunteers anxious to get on with getting that wood to the people who need it, and projects have been carried out in numerous communities. The state desired to aid in that, and Gov. Jim Hunt pushed for a plan to accomplish the task.

Simple? Not quite. Involved are hundreds of people from local volunteers to officials of the state departments of Correction, Transportation, Human Resources, Natural Resources and Community Development, the Governor's Office of Citizens Affairs, the Division of Economic Opportunity and local Community Action Agencies, and the Division of Forest Resources. Not to mention the federal Community Services Administration which put up $100,000 to get the ball rolling in 16 of the state's 100 counties.

BILL NOBLITT

Howard Lee, secretary of the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, summed up the situation: he wanted to move faster by letting the state provide chainsaws for volunteers to cut and haul the wood, or even for people to fetch their own.

But... the state would be liable for mangled hands or legs; the needy might not get the wood; trees might be cut instead of scrub growth and culls. Everything gets complicated.

Sunday Morning Notes

John Humber, now on the faculty at Chapel Hill, was in Greenville recently handling some affairs at the family home, Fifth and Washington Streets.

That particular edition was saved because it carried an account of the marriage of Lena C. Davis and Robert L. Humber, John Humber's grandparents.

As was fashionable at the time the account referred to Miss Davis as a "young lady possessing highest accomplishments and a general favorite among a large circle of friends."

Humber was described as a very popular young man of Greenville. The ceremony was performed in the Baptist church of Beaufort by the Rev. J. D. Moore.

"They came by way of Goldsboro, Rocky Mount and Hobgood, and at the latter place were tendered a dinner and reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. White, the latter a sister of Mr. Humber.

"They arrived in Greenville on the evening train and supper was served to the party and some friends at the home of the groom.

At the time wedding write-ups included the list of gifts which the couple received.

Some listed included:

— Silver cream pitcher, Mrs. W. P. Bell.

— Handpainted sachet, Miss Maggie Garvis.

— Lamp, Miss Emily Duncan.

— Silver sugar bowl, Mrs. Ida Eaton.

— Rocking chair, Mrs. S. A. Charlotte.

— Fascinator, Miss Etta Manson.

— Celluloid album, Miss Carrie Ireland.

The Humbers raised a family in the old house at Fifth and Washington. A master mechanic, Humber's shop was located next door and remained intact until recently demolished. His son returned to Greenville at the outbreak of World War II and lived in the house until his death.

Other Editors Say A Tax Dilemma

(Rocky Mount Telegram)

State governments are suffering from the same effects of inflation as individuals.

It is not surprising, therefore, that Gov. Hunt in officially announcing his candidacy for reelection, would not promise that there would be no increase in the state's tax on gasoline.

While that is not good news, one must commend the governor for being forthright. He recognizes the state has a problem in financing highway construction and repairs.

He said some changes may be needed in the tax on gasoline because of dwindling money available for road work. He has appointed a study committee to come up with suggestions for increasing the highway fund.

An increase in the gasoline tax would certainly be one of the ways to do this, and it will be considered.

In this, North Carolina is not alone. At least 26 other state legislatures meeting this year are expected to consider bills to raise their motor fuel taxes with either a single-step boost of a flat cents-per-gallon tax or a shift to some other method of motor fuel taxation.

At least 11 of these states are expected to consider bills proposing a flat cents-per-gallon tax increase. North Carolina is one of these states.

Some state legislatures are expected to consider legislation that proposes other methods of fuel taxation. Among them, a percentage motor fuel tax assessed as a fixed percent of the fuel price; and a variable cents-per-gallon tax whereby the tax rate slides up or down periodically, with high and low limits set by law.

In recent years a growing number of states have considered fuel tax increases in an effort to keep up with the rapidly escalating highway costs of maintenance, repair and construction. North Carolina has this problem.

In 1979, amid the "Proposition 13" fever, motor fuel taxes rose in 10 states, although fuel tax increases were considered by 26 state legislatures.

This year, 35 of 44 state legislatures are expected to consider some type of highway financing legislation. Generally, taxpayers in most states can anticipate increases in gasoline taxes.

It is an unpleasant thought, but we all face a dilemma: if our roads are to be maintained safely, the money must come from some source.

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — "To err is human," wrote the ineffable Alexander Pope, one pope who was not infallable.

To pounce with an "Aha, you jerk" letter to the editor upon discovering mortal frailty in the daily newspaper is even more human. Or inhuman, when the error is charged up to near and dear ones, like myself.

Lately I have been the target of opportunity, as they used to say in Vietnam, for several such salvoes.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Bush In Southern States

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

NEW ORLEANS — Contradictions that give Republican presidential fortunes in the southland their exotic quality were on lurid display when applause roared out for John B. Connally's luncheon speech here Saturday during the party's southern regional conference, far outthundering Ronald Reagan's reception the previous day.

Listening to the roar of the crowd (only partially due to table-packing by Connally agents), one Republican leader murmured: "Magnificent, really magnificent, but Big John can't take it out of the room with him."

Only the most ardent Connally supporter would dispute that truism about Connally's failing campaign, even here in his own backyard where the tough-guy Texan has pinned his hopes. With Reagan's southern base displaying cracks from the Jan. 21 Iowa tremor induced by George Bush, Connally must show that he, not nice-guy George, will inherit any Reaganites who decide Reagan cannot make it after all. Just how large an order that is proving to be for the dynamic Texan is now becoming clear in South Carolina, a "must" state for Connally and the state that dramatizes the fascinating contradictions of the Republican presidential race.

Weeks ago Connally nailed down the backing of Sen. Strom Thurmond, the party's southern eminence, and former Republican Gov. James B. Edwards for the March 8 South Carolina primary. He then abandoned federal matching funds to give him unlimited spending latitude in a state that never before has had the luxury of a Republican presidential primary election. It seemed just possible that he might catch up to Reagan's strong grass roots support in South Carolina.

But if so, the prospect dimmed on Monday when Harry Dent, Thurmond's long-time political adviser, led a Republican platoon from one end of the state to the other trumpeting for George Bush. Not only is Dent one of the most formidable southern Republican power brokers (who with Thurmond saved the south for Richard Nixon in 1968). He also is advertising his new allegiance to Bush with a seductive line. "I tried to be for John Connally," says Dent, "but by now everybody knows that he just can't win." Dent thinks Bush will steal votes from Connally and assure an anemic tally for Sen. Howard Baker in the Maltby Babcock, a minister whose writings influenced the generation living at the turn of the twentieth century, once said "What a friend necessity is. It ends our looking at our watches and wondering about aimless things; it moves the previous question; it says, "This is one thing you must do."

USES OF NECESSITY

But when the spur of necessity is dug into our flesh it is hard to look upon it as a friend. And yet, necessity does exactly what Babcock said it does. It channels our energies and motivates us toward creative achievement.

In this connection Goethe spoke of "the dear must". Emerson said that a man's task is a man's life preserver. To the prosecutor Saul of Tarsus, lying prostrate on the ground, the voice came out of heaven saying, "It is hard for thee to kick against the goad." Necessity releases within us energies and capabilities we never knew we had. Paul was receiving divine confirmation of a universal human experience.

Sawdust As Substitute Fuel

By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

HADDAM, Conn. (AP) — Sawdust, once a bothersome byproduct of the sawmill, soon will be used by a lumber producer in this Connecticut river town as a substitute for precious fuel oil.

And in Saco, Maine, Gwido Swistun has built a furnace in his home that burns sawdust from a local mill. He hopes to begin marketing sawdust furnaces soon.

In Connecticut, Rossi Corp. plans to start burning its mountains of sawdust and wood chips next month in a new burner that produces steam to heat the company's new wooddrying kilns, says President Ted Rossi. The corporation might save as much as $400,000 per year if the plan works out well.

And while Rossi's sawdustburning unit is the first of its kind in Connecticut, there are an estimated 30 similar systems at lumber companies in the nation.

Rossi said "Sawdust power" will provide the company with hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of heat per year to kiln-dry the 12 million board feet of lumber it produces annually.

Until recently the company has transported freshly cut lumber from its five mills to other companies to be dried and sold.

About a year ago Rossi began thinking about using sawdust as an alternate source of energy to dry the company's lumber without relying on other firms.

Six kilns and a $300,000 combination oil-sawdust burner to heat them have been installed at the plant. So far, the Pennsylvania-made burner has been operated only on oil — except for test runs.

But in Maine, Swistun's home has been heated this winter by sawdust. He packs the sawdust in a chamber around lengths of pipe, then removes the pipes. The sawdust burns along the channels left when the pipes are taken out.

Swistun figures his sawdust furnace will heat his house for $98 this winter, compared to the $780 that the equivalent of fuel oil would cost.

Rossi said that during cold weather, his heating system burns about 6,000 gallons of oil per week. With the wholesale price at more than 80 cents, that costs more than $4,800 per week.

His lumber operations produce about 200 tons of sawdust and wood chips per week. A ton of sawdust will produce as much heat as 50 gallons of fuel oil, Rossi said. Therefore, 200 tons of sawdust can replace 10,000 gallons of oil, more than the firm's weekly oil demand.

Assuming all the sawdust and chips are used, it could mean an annual saving of more than $416,000 per year.

Favor Curb Handguns

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. — With much of the current debate over gun legislation focusing on the handgun, public opinion in America shapes up as follows:

1. The public is overwhelmingly of the opinion that laws covering the sale of handguns should be made stricter than they are at present. As early as 1938, Americans favored more stringent controls on handguns.

2. Not only do Americans favor stricter gun controls in general, but the specific provisions of a law in the Massachusetts statutes also win public approval. In April 1975, the Bartley-Fox Act was put on the books in Massachusetts. The law provides that a person who carries a gun outside his home must have a license to do so, and anyone who is convicted of carrying a gun without a license is given a mandatory sentence of one year in jail.

3. The desire for stricter curbs, however, falls short of support for an outright ban, with 65 percent of the public voting against a law which would forbid the possession of handguns except by the police and other authorized persons.

Factors Helping To Shape Public Opinion

Among the factors helping shape public opinion on handguns is widespread concern over the number of deaths caused by handguns (it is estimated that nearly half of the 20,000 murders in America in 1978 were committed with pistols or revolvers) and a growing fear of crime. The latest Gallup audit on the incidence of crime shows that one U.S. household in five has been hit by crime at least once in the last 12 months, with either property stolen or a member of the household the victim of a physical assault.

Want Stricter Laws On Sale

Six in 10 survey respondents (59 percent) believe the laws covering the sale of handguns should be made more strict, while six percent say less and 29 percent favor keeping the laws as they now are.

Most in favor of stricter laws are Easterners and persons living in the nation's largest cities.

The question and findings:

"In general, do you feel that the laws covering the sale of handguns should be made more strict, less strict or kept as they are now?"

As I Recall It

An Ava Gardner Museum Idea; How It Grew

By NOEL YANCEY

Just a few weeks after the Japanese struck the American fleet with such devastating effect at Pearl Harbor an event occurred in California that aroused nearly as much interest in North Carolina: Mickey Rooney, the No. 1 box office draw at the nation's movie theaters, was married to Ava Gardner, a hauntingly beautiful starlet from North Carolina.

About three weeks after the wedding in the village of Ballard, Calif., on Jan. 10, 1942, Rooney and Ava came to Raleigh so he could meet her mother and other members of her family.

On the inside was a picture of Rooney and Mrs. Gardner hamming it up as she presented him a platter of fried chicken for the benefit of the photographer.

The Gardner family blowout honoring their new son-in-law climaxed a three-day visit the young couple made to her home state. While Rooney was entertaining soldiers at Fort Bragg, Ava was enjoying a reunion with her family. With her mother and her older sister, Beatrice, who had been with her in Hollywood, she visited the family home at Rock Ridge, slipping in and out with only a few persons aware they were there.

When Rooney arrived in Raleigh, he and Ava headed for Rex Hospital where he met and hefted momentarily his six-day-old namesake, John Michael Grimes, son of Mr. and Mrs. J.A. Grimes, Ava's sister and brother-in-law, who then lived at 2725 Fairview Road in Raleigh.

On the day of Rooney's introduction to the family and southern fried chicken, he and Ava boarded the train for Washington for an appearance at the President's Ball — which meant more crowds, more autographs and more explosions of the famous Rooney grin.

But the marriage didn't last long. Rooney went on for a host of weddings while Miss Gardner added band leader Artie Shaw and singer Frank Sinatra to her list of husbands. Now living in London, Miss Gardner is 56 years old. She has starred in 54 films, including "Showboat," "On the Beach," "A Touch of Venus," "The Barefoot Contessa," "Night of the Iguana" and "City on Fire" which was completed last year.

Although she fled overseas years ago to escape the gossip and controversy that surrounded her in Hollywood, she still returns periodically to Smithfield, which claims her as a native daughter, to visit her brother Jack and two of her sisters.

On her last visit, in May of 1978, she called Doris Cannon, a reporter-columnist for the Smithfield Herald who is heading a movement to establish an Ava Gardner museum in the star's hometown. She asked Mrs. Cannon to come over to her brother Jack's house for a drink.

"I almost fainted," recalled Mrs. Cannon who had touched off the museum movement by a column she had written a few weeks earlier wondering why Smithfield had taken so little note of its best known offspring.

"I'm saying it is way past time for Smithfield to stand up and say, 'Hey, everybody. Ava Gardner grew up here!'" she wrote.

On her arrival, Mrs. Cannon found Miss Gardner out picking roses. "She was barefooted and had on slacks rolled up to midcalf. She had no makeup but was absolutely beautiful.

"She was very warm but at the same time a little bit shy," Mrs. Cannon related. "But she was very gracious, charming and witty." And she told the reporter how much she had appreciated the column.

That column drew a letter from Tom Banks, a Wilson native now living in Pompano Beach, Fla., who first met Ava back in the 1930's when she was a student at Atlantic Christian College.

"It seems that he had this incredi-

The Old Neighborhood Keeps Neighborly Aura

By GAIL MICHAELS

GREENVILLE, N.C. Huge old trees stand in straight lines between the street and sidewalk. Gnarled limbs make a canopy of deep summertime shade against a blue sky floating puffy whipped cream clouds. Children play on the sidewalks and in the yards, while grownups sit on porch swings, trading drawled comments back and forth about the day's happenings. Sometimes everyone meets for a covered dish supper: chicken pastry, sweet potatoes, collards, banana pudding.

These are not memories from a senior citizen's past but present-day scenes in a rejuvenating neighborhood — the Higgs neighborhood in Greenville.

Approximately 100 years old, the 50 block area of Higgs was originally considered a "good" part of town — until the early 1950s when East Carolina University entered a boom period of growth on the other side of the city, triggering a pattern of development towards the east, and away from Higgs.

But Higgs has been luckier than most decaying neighborhoods. The decision made in the early 1970s to locate a new medical complex nearby renewed interest in the neighborhood. A few energetic people began working together then to salvage the area — people like Donna Whitley and her artist husband, Kasem Sebti. The couple bought one of the old houses and rented a house around the corner to live in while they renovated. They have been working on the house for about three years now — doing all the work themselves. They helped to form the Higgs Neighborhood Association which, among other things, represents the area before the city council. The Association has lobbied successfully for new street lights, paved streets, new water lines and a $10,000 grant for a new park.

Now there are about 300 families living in Higgs — a mixture of ages, races and incomes. About 30 percent are homeowners, and many of these have taken advantage of FHA loans and other government funds either to build new houses in the area or to renovate older ones.

People buying the older houses have discovered treasures of workmanship and materials which would be nearly impossible to afford in a new home today — features like thick oak plank floors, large rooms, heavy sills and rafters and deep front porches with room enough for flowers and swings.

Like a small village, the area is a pleasant mixture of businesses and homes. The businesses include restaurants — gourmet dining in an elegantly restored Victorian home, and a small family-owned deli serving home style meals — a dentist, a craftsman's cooperative, small grocery stores and a coalition of local artists and musicians.

Donna Whitley points out that the neighborhood is also within easy walking distance of East Carolina University, two libraries, an elementary school, the new hospital and several churches.

One of the most exciting enterprises in Higgs now is the renewal of the Roxy Theatre, which began life in the days of segregation as the black movie theatre. It was closed during the bitter first days of the civil rights struggles, but has re-opened recently as an "arts" theatre, presenting original plays, stage shows, concerts, poetry readings and arts and crafts shows.

But Higgs' rebirth is not nearly complete. There are still many vacant houses waiting to be bought, for prices ranging from $10,000 to $50,000. And there is growing interest in establishing a new community center.

"Moving into a neighborhood such as Higgs is more than choosing a roof," says Donna Whitley. "It is an investment in the past and the future, a dream with a price tag and a way of life that blends all kinds of people and ages in the traditional manner of our grandparents."

I recently wrote that I went down to the library to do research into why Willa Cather was buried in Jaffrey, N.H., but body snatchers in the computer bank transported the remains to Jaffrey, N.Y. which doesn't exist, as many readers with varying degrees of civility have let me know.

In British journalism, gaffes in print or spoken over the mike are known as clangers. On this side of the ocean, they are called goofs or bloopers.

I recall once discussing editorial misdemeanors and linotype bugs, the precursors of computer lice, with Mick Rooney, the witty, erudite and now retired chief of subeditors on the Irish Independent, Dublin's largest newspaper.

He remembered with pain and lingering sorrow that when Vatican Council II convened, he ran a picture of the Bishop of Tuam bidding farewell to his six canons on the steps of the cathedral before departing for Rome.

"Unfortunately," Rooney told the tale, "the cattle show opened in Dublin on the same day and we ran a picture of some of the stock on exhibit over the caption 'SEVEN OF THE BIGGEST JACKASSES EVER SHOWN AT THE COLLINSTOWN FAIR.' Of course the two pictures appeared on the same page, each with the other's caption. Only we're supposed to be the Catholic paper, His Grace would have attempted to prove malice in addition to public ridicule."

Malice was suspected but never proved, Rooney also related, when another Dublin paper reported the death of a prominent Protestant divine and wrote that "he leaves behind a sister and two brothels."

South Carolina election.

Contradictions abound in the alliances that have formed in support of Reagan, Connally and Bush, a fact that tends to obliterate minor ideological distinctions. On Reagan's one-day campaign swing through South Carolina on his way here last weekend, for example, Reagan operatives truthfully bragged that many of Reagan's presidential campaign aides cut their political teeth for Thurmond or Edwards but, like Harry Dent, declined to follow them to the Connally standard.

Likewise, freshman Rep. Carroll Campbell is Reagan's statewide campaign chairman while Richard Greer, who ran Campbell's 1978 congressional campaign, has signed up with Bush — and Dent — as political director of the Bush campaign. This crazy-quilt pattern that cuts across old loyalties to fashion new alliances shows the fluid nature of 1980 Republican presidential politics, southern-style. It hints that if the vulnerability Reagan showed in Iowa continues, nothing will prevent Reaganites from moving into the camp of a perceived winner: George Bush.

What is questionable is whether Reagan remains vulnerable for the Feb. 26 New Hampshire primary or recovers his old appeal. Reagan told us on his swing through here last week that his Iowa defeat resulted from "complacency" that has now been rooted out.

But his campaign performance has raised other questions among the practical Republicans who flocked to this regional conference. One complained about his appearance on television ("terrible," he told us); another criticized his "imperialistic" attitudes. These vulnerabilities may be cured in New Hampshire if, as Reagan implies, the real problem in Iowa was in fact only "complacency," not some chronic or incurable political malaise.

If the latter, Bush is Reagan's legatee. As a longtime Alabama party leader in Alabama told us here, "Bush is basically already eating up Connally's lunch." If Reagan stumbles in New England as he did in Iowa, Bush will dip into Reagan's lunch, too.

Males Never Intended To Be The Quiet Types

By GAIL MICHAELS

Stories about burglars who can slip in and out of houses without waking the occupants always amaze me. Unless all these these thieves are women, I don't see how such a feat is possible. As any wife knows, no man has ever been capable of being that quiet.

Not that they don't try. One of my clearest memories is of waking up very early in the morning as my father tiptoed around in the kitchen. The reason I remember so clearly is that when my father tiptoes, he sounds like a herd of moose.

Why a woman can clean an entire house and change the sheets around a sleeping husband when a man can't even put on a pair of bedroom slippers without making a racket will forever remain a mystery. But every time Phillip has an early morning appointment, I do wonder how many husbands have had their skulls fractured by alarm clocks.

Never in his life has Phillip turned off an alarm clock when it first went off. The other morning he let it ring until my head felt like a slot machine.

I jabbed him in the ribs with my elbow. "If you don't turn that thing off soon, I'm going to spit quarters at you."

"That doesn't make sense," he yawned.

"It wasn't supposed to. At 5 a.m. I deserve to be incoherent."

"Well, go back to sleep, then. There's nothing keeping you up."

That was what he said before he went into the kitchen and played Reveille with the cabinet doors. The rattling of silverware sounded like sniper fire. He even chose a loud cereal.

Ten minutes later he let the bowl drop from five feet into a pot in the sink, slammed the bathroom door, and started the shower.

I could stand the sound of running water. And I could stand the snatches of "Raindrops Keep Falling on my Head." But I began to get upset at the medicine cabinet's rusty squeal and the clanking of shaving instruments on the porcelain sink.

By the time he threw his pajamas onto the bed with hurricane force and bounced down after them, I doubted that we could ever be friends again. "If I had wanted motion sickness, I would have gone on a cruise."

"Light sleeper! I wouldn't be surprised if you woke up Beethoven this morning."

"Well, what do you want me to do? Dress in the carport?"

"It's a thought."

"Don't be ugly. I'm going to get my overcoat from Meg's closet, and then I'll leave you in peace."

He marched straight into Meg's room and tripped over a xylophone.

Before he could get his coat off the hanger, Meg was in bed with me. "I'm hungry!" she wailed. "I want my breakfast."

"So was Three Mile Island."

"I don't see why you're so angry. I was being as quiet as I could."

That, unfortunately, is the whole trouble.

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — In the Golden Age of Rome, Gibbon tells us, the successful emperors had a winning formula: They preserved the peace by constantly preparing for war. Jimmy Carter has belatedly joined the camp of the Antonines.

By calling upon Congress to provide funds for a national registration of young people, the president took a sensible, prudent, wholly justifiable action in the national interest. Mr. Carter left the details unclear, but the wise course would be to register both men and women in the 18-26 age bracket. If we are to prepare for reasonably foreseeable possibilities, we ought to do a thorough job of it.

The White House has taken pains in the past few days to emphasize that the president has not proposed a resumption of the draft. The situation does not demand so drastic an imposition upon personal freedom. All that is now proposed is simple, straightforward registration. This is no imposition upon anyone's freedom.

It is all the more disappointing, therefore, to witness the shrill and pusillanimous reaction of a few student leaders. Here in Washington, reporters found a small school of jellyfish ready to don buttons reading, "Hell no, We won't go." One boy wept that it was "so unfair" to talk of a future draft that "would kill our dreams before they ever started."

Such voices apparently constitute a minority. Most of the young people interviewed in the Washington area saw no objection to registration. My guess, for whatever it may be worth, is that national reaction will follow this same pattern. It is irrelevant to the larger issues, but Mr. Carter will gain politically from this action just as he gained politically, even in Iowa, from his embargo on grain to the Soviet Union. Among our people, young eagles outnumber young cowbirds.

The key word is preparedness, but the word has meaning only in conjunction with a threshold question: Preparing for what? If the prospect is for a nuclear Armageddon, we can forget about a draft in any conventional sense. Such a war is of course conceivable — Hiroshima and Nagasaki offer proof positive that nuclear war is conceivable — but we have to proceed on assumptions less cataclysmic.

The answer one gets from experienced military planners is that the nation ought prudently to prepare for the deployment of our armed forces in more or less conventional ways — for example, in support of Pakistan's own troops on land, and in the enforcement of a blockade at sea.

Are we now prepared for such assignments in Mr. Carter's "region of the Persian Gulf"? The answer I get, much simplified, is "yes and no." Yes, in the sense that we do indeed have fully trained and equipped battalions that could be plunged promptly into combat. No, in the sense that we could long sustain such a deployment.

The concept of an all-volunteer force, instituted in 1973, has worked — but only to a point. The system has provided manpower sufficient to maintain total armed services at about 2,056,000 persons. The Defense Department says this is 99 percent of the current target. But the current target is 20 percent under the 2.5 million level recommended by the president's commission on an all-volunteer force in its report 10 years ago. This serious shortfall is made more serious by the failure of the Army Reserve and National Guard to meet their quotas, and the situation is compounded by some sobering facts of demography: The pool of men 18 to 24 will diminish over the next 15 years.

Given these circumstances, national registration obviously makes sense. Time and money and leadership will be required to conduct an efficient program, presumably through the Postal Service. If Congress were to act tomorrow, it would take four to six months to get the job done. It is a task that urgently needs doing. We ought to get on with it now.

Greater Hope For Hostages

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

Canadian Prime Minister Joe Clark said "there now is greater hope than in the past" for the release of the 50 American hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, and a U.N. diplomat predicted the captives would be freed within two months under a plan devised by U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim.

However, the militants holding the embassy pledged Friday in a statement addressed to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to "remain faithful to your revolutionary path and ...fight against compromise." The statement was broadcast by Tehran Radio and monitored in London.

Clark said Iranian PresidentElect Abolhassan Bani Sadr appears more open to a negotiated solution to the 91-day-old hostage standoff than Iranian authorities have been previously. However, the Iranian militants have shown no sign they would obey Bani Sadr's orders or moderate their demand that the deposed shah return to Iran in exchange for the hostages.

Clark told a news conference in Ottawa Friday that "there have been discussions involving at least Iranian and American officials that are more promising of positive results." U.S. officials expressed similar guarded optimism earlier in the week.

Canada and the United States worked closely last week to coordinate the escape from Iran of six American diplomats who fled undetected from the U.S. Embassy when it was seized by Iranian militants Nov. 4. The six hid in the Canadian Embassy before flying from Iran last weekend with false Canadian passports and forged Iranian visas.

At another news conference in Ottawa Friday, Kenneth Taylor, the Canadian ambassador to Iran, said an anonymous telephone call forced final preparations for the flight from Iran of Canadian diplomats and their six American refugees.

Taylor said his wife received a phone call about Jan. 19 from someone who insisted on speaking to two of the Americans hiding in the Canadians' quarters.

Combineed with information that several news organizations were aware that the six Americans were in the embassy staff quarters, the phone call led to the decision to activate an escape plan, close the embassy and leave.

Meanwhile, West Germany's U.N. ambassador, Rudiger von Wechmar, predicted in a broadcast interview in New York that the 50 American hostages would be freed in four to eight weeks under Waldheim's plan.

He said the proposal involves sending an international commission to Iran to hear Iranian grievances and possibly moving the hostages from the custody of the militants to "a staging camp." The International Red Cross might take over care of the hostages while the commission discusses "the modalities of the release" with Iranian authorities, von Wechmar added.

Iranian U.N. Ambassador Mansour Farhang, who met with Waldheim late Thursday for what a U.N. spokesman called "an exchange of views on the situation," flew from New York to Geneva, Switzerland on Friday to confer with officials of the U.N. Human Rights Commission.

Scott Hits Mining Agreement

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gubernatorial candidate Bob Scott has termed an agreement between the state and a mining company to allow underground mining at a state park "at the very least, an abuse of the environment."

Scott, in a prepared statement released Thursday, said the agreement between the state and the North Carolina Molybdenum Corp. should not have been approved and set a dangerous precedent in the process.

Carter Letter Pledges U.S. Aid To Pakistan

Associated Press Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski today delivered a personal letter from President Carter to Pakistan's president, pledging that the United States will take necessary steps to defend Pakistan from Soviet troops in Afghanistan, highly placed sources said.

Brzezinski was said to have handed the letter to Gen. Muhammed Zia ul-Haq, the Pakistani president, before the start of negotiations designed to reach a new arms agreement between the two countries.

One senior Pakistani official said the talks began on a note of "considerable optimism and resolve."

The United States negotiating team, which also includes Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Defense Department officials, was reportedly prepared to offer Pakistan assurances of long-term military aid. A few weeks ago, Zia called the Carter administration's reported offer of a two-year, $400 million aid package "peanuts."

Brzezinski said today his mission was intended to "seek concrete ways to enhance peace and stability in this region."

Pakistan shares a 1,200-mile border with Afghanistan, and Zia has expressed concern that his nation is vulnerable to an attack by the estimated 100,000 Soviet troops in that country.

Arms negotiations between the United States and Pakistan have prompted expressions of concern in India, which has fought three wars with Pakistan in the past 33 years. But sources in New Delhi said the Indian government nonetheless has been slow to respond to a standing U.S. offer to sell India new sophisticated military equipment, including missile guidance equipment.

Meanwhile, the Soviet army newspaper Red Star said today in a dispatch carried by the official Soviet news agency Tass that "Pakistan has turned into a springboard for an armed interference in the internal affairs of ... Afghanistan. This unsavory and risky role was assigned to it by Washington."

But suggesting a more conciliatory approach, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda said in its editions today that the Soviet Union has no designs on Mideast oil and no intention of pushing through to warm-water ports on the Indian Ocean. Getting there would mean going through Pakistan or Iran.

Report Says U.S. Unable To Stop Soviet Invasion

NEW YORK (AP) — A Defense Department report says the United States would be unable to stop a Soviet invasion of northern Iran and should therefore consider using "tactical" nuclear weapons in any conflict there, the New York Times reported today.

The Times quoted the report as saying the United States would be able to muster only one-fifth as many troops for a northern Iran conflict as the Soviet Union over a 30-day period.

The 70-page Pentagon report, called "Capabilities in the Persian Gulf," was commissioned two years ago by Secretary of Defense Harold Brown after an interagency study concluded that the Persian Gulf would be the mostly likely area for a confrontation between the Soviet Union and the United States.

It was completed after the fall of Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, the shah of Iran, but before the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in December.

The report said the United States could possibly handle a Soviet threat to tankers carrying oil for American use, and might be able to match any effort by Moscow to move forces into Saudi Arabia.

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman Thomas Ross refused to comment on the Times' story or to say whether Brown had commissioned such a report as that described by the Times.

However, Pentagon officials who said they were familiar with the existence of the report but not its exact details, described the study as one of a number of such staff reports and studies.

RALEIGH, N. C. (AP) — University of North Carolina Athletic Director William Cobey filed Friday as a Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, saying he offers the state "a chance for hew leadership."

Cobey, making his first bid for statewide office, paid the $414 filing fee to state Elections Board of Director Alex Brock. He becomes the first GOP candidate for lieutenant governor.

Hunt Supports Pay Raises

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt appealed to organized teachers for their support Friday night, saying he would support a "double-digit" pay raise for state employees and teachers this year.

Hunt, speaking to PACE, the political action committee of the N.C. Association of Educators, said he supports nearly every major item in that group's legislative program.

Administration sources said Hunt was aiming for a 10 percent pay raise for teachers and state employees for the fiscal year starting July 1, unless state revenues drop significantly in coming months.

Says No Political Purposes

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Officials of the State Ports Authority have said Gov. Jim Hunt has not used the state's shipping business for political purposes, and have added that no politics have been exercised within the ports' business.

The extent of Hunt's control of the state's bureaucracy has developed into an issue in the gubernatorial campaign by former Gov. Bob Scott, who is challenging the governor in the May Democratic primary.

Both challenger Scott and Republican candidate I. Beverly Lake Jr. have charged Hunt has constructed a large political machine in gearing up for his re-election bid.

Claims Voted Against Consumers

The Consumer Federation of America, in its annual assessment of congressional votes, said Friday that, "Statistics do not adequately capture the hypocritical nature of the 96th Congress.

"It is not only the anticonsumer impact of their votes that is appalling, but their political gall in touting their actions as evidence of their courageous defense of consumers and 'the little guy' — knowing full well that the opposite is true," the federation said.

Manslaughter Charge For Policeman

MIAMI (AP) — A manslaughter charge against a Dade County policeman has been upgraded to second-degree murder in the alleged beating death of a black businessman, an act one of six officers involved in the ongoing inquiry called the "equivalent of a police riot."

Prosecutors say Arthur McDuffie was battered the night of Dec. 17 by police using fists, clubs and flashlights. They contend officers made it look as if McDuffie was injured when his motorcycle crashed and faked accident reports.

Five other officers face charges ranging from manslaughter to faking accident reports as an investigation of the death widens. Two officers were granted immunity Friday in return for their testimony.

Billy To Campaign For Jimmy

GAINESVILLE, Ga. (AP) — Billy Carter says he will campaign full time this year for his brother's presidential re-election bid, handling coordination of fund-raising efforts by country-and-western entertainers.

But while he's behind President Carter's re-election campaign, Billy said Friday he doesn't agree with his brother on every issue.

He said he opposes most forms of gun control, a proposed national holiday on the birthday of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. and the Equal Rights Amendment.

Bugging Center Unmasked

LONDON (AP) — An innocent-looking post office in London's Chelsea district has been unmasked as the nerve center of a massive government telephone-bugging operation, codenamed: "Tinkerbell." Angry foes of the program are demanding that "Big Brother" stop listening.

Published reports say the eavesdropping was carried on in secret for 20 years by British intelligence services, and may have been used to spy on domestic political targets, including British union leaders.

The liberal weekly New Statesman blew the whistle in an article this week by telecommunications expert Duncan Campbell, 27.

"Phone tapping is a gray area of the law, and police and security are exploiting it," Campbell wrote.

Now members of Parliament are calling for a major review of government-ordered electronic bugging, and the House of Commons is speeding up plans to impose new controls over phone taps.

Pope Expects To Visit Africa

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, who already has made four overseas tours since his election 16 months ago, announced Saturday he expects to visit Africa this year.

The pope did not say when he would go or what countries he would visit, but Vatican sources said the trip was expected in the first half of this year and would include stops in Uganda and Zaire. It would be the second papal visit to Africa in modern times. Pope Paul VI visited Uganda in August 1969.

"I can tell you that I am thinking of undertaking the journey (to Africa) this very year," the 59-year-old pontiff told a noon audience for 900 African residents of Rome, representing 31 African countries.

Will Remain On Job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary G. William Miller says he will remain on the job, even though he admits the Textron Corp. made "questionable and improper payments" to foreign officials while he headed the conglomerate.

Miller told a Friday news conference, "I do not intend to resign. There has been no communication from the president suggesting such a thing."

Miller said he knew nothing of the payments.

The Securities and Exchange Commission said in a complaint against Textron Thursday that the company made $5.4 million in payments to foreign government officials to help secure contracts to sell military equipment, much of it while Miller was chairman.

To Act Against Reporter

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — The company that operates the Three Mile Island nuclear plant plans to inspect its crippled reactor and take legal action against a reporter who allegedly used false credentials to get work as a watchman, a spokesman says.

Robert Kapler, a reporter for "The Guide," a Harrisburg area weekly newspaper, worked at the plant as an unarmed security guard between Jan. 2 and Jan. 19, said Metropolitan Edison spokesman Sandy Polon. He emphasized that Kapler did not have access to the highly radioactive reactor containment building.

"But we have established a special task force to investigate Unit 2 (the disabled reactor)," Polon said.

Scott Advocates pay Raise

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Former Gov. Robert Scott, campaigning for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, told a state teacher group Saturday he supports a 13.3 percent pay increase for teachers next year.

Speaking at the state Political Action Committee for Education convention, Scott said he supports an across the board pay raise equal to the amount of inflation, which he said ran 13.3 percent for the previous year.

"If our teachers are to provide quality instruction, we need to pay them what they deserve," Scott said. "For too long we have underpaid those in the education profession and it's high time we corrected this."

Scott said he doesn't support changes in the law to allow collective bargaining with state employees, but he added, "I believe it is coming no matter what we do."

Baker Wins First Delegates

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — Sen. Howard Baker Saturday won the first delegates selected for next summer's Republican national convention where the GOP presidential candidate will be nominated.

Baker won two delegates and all three alternates in secret balloting among 29 GOP officials at the 2nd District caucus in North Little Rock. The third delegate was uncommitted, but also known to be a Baker supporter.

Baker, who represents neighboring Tennessee, was not expected to fare as well in the other three Arkansas congressional district caucuses that were picking a total of nine more delegates Saturday.

Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan, former Ambassador George Bush and former Texas Gov. John Connally were expected to gather most of the delegates in the other caucuses at Fort Smith, Jonesboro and Arkadelphia.

Fate In General's Hands

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (UPI) — The legal battle over the fate of accused turncoat Marine Pfc. Robert R. Garwood has shifted from a small military courtroom to the office of Camp Lejeune's commanding officer.

Brig. Gen. David B. Barker must decide whether to accept or reject recommendations from a military judge that Garwood, 33, face a courtmartial and a possible death sentence on charges of desertion and collaboration with the enemy during the Vietnam War.

Although the judge recommended Friday that Garwood stand trial on the two charges and two other counts, Barker has broad power to modify the recommendations.

That power includes the authority to order a trial but rule out the death penalty in advance; to convene a courtmartial with limited punishment powers; or to drop some or all of the charges.

Minister Shot By Mistake

PARIS (UPI) — Former French Cabinet Minister Joseph Fontanet died Saturday of a bullet wound in his chest and a terrorist organization said he was shot by mistake during a bungled kidnap attempt.

Fontanet, 59, was shot once in front of his home in Paris Friday. There were no witnesses to the attack and police were unable to question him before his death.

Their only clues were words Fontanet murmured while being rushed to the hospital. He said the shot was fired from a car.

Egypt And Israel Have Reached Agreement

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt and Israel have reached agreement on a package of 19 responsibilities that would be given an autonymous Palestinian council under the home-rule plan being negotiated for the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, the authoritative Cairo newspaper Al Ahram reported Saturday.

The newspaper credited "American ideas" for helping to arrange the partial breakthrough during the eighth round of Egyptian-Israeli autonomy negotiations that ended Friday in the Tel Aviv suburb of Herzliya. U.S. Mideast envoy Sol Linowitz sat in on the talks between Israeli Interior Minister Yosef Burg and Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil.

The paper did not disclose the 19 points it said were agreed upon, but they were believed to include administrative duties such as tax collection. It said differences remained on such key issues as control of foreign affairs, security and defense.

There was no immediate comment on the Al Ahram report from Israel or from Linowitz, who has gone to Riyadh to brief Saudi leaders on the latest developments.

Khalil, in an interview with the Cairo daily newspaper Al Gomhurriya, was quoted as saying he would meet with Burg and Linowitz in Paris on Feb. 26 to try to work out the remaining points of disagreement.

"There has been progress in several fields but we have agreed not to divulge anything," Khalil was quoted as saying.

Police Kill Two In Funeral March

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) — Police Saturday fatally shot two persons in a funeral march staged by about 3,000 demonstrators bearing the coffins of victims who died in a police raid on the Spanish Embassy, a Red Cross spokesman said.

The spokesman said shooting erupted as the funeral marchers — mostly members of the leftist University Student Association — neared the government palace in downtown Guatemala City, carrying 33 coffins of victims of the embassy raid Thursday.

"They tried to march past the palace but police reinforcements would not let them through and shooting broke out at around 4 p.m. (5 p.m. EST)," he said. The spokesman said the dead marchers were not yet identified.

One witness said "thousands and thousands" of Indian peasants wearing colorful native dress were among the funeral marchers, estimated at 3,000 people.

Spain broke relations with Guatemala to protest the embassy attack in which 39 people, including eight Spaniards, died. A fire broke out when police stormed the embassy to free 10 hostages held by Indian militants.

Guatemala first blamed a "suicide commando of armed terrorists" for the incident and denied reports the militants were unarmed Quiche Indians demanding an audience with officials to denounce army brutality.

New Scandal Revealed....

Sources said aides to Rahman told public officials he wanted a casino gambling license in Atlantic City, N.J., and help in getting congressional help to remain in the United States. He also wanted legislation introduced to allow his friends, whose visas had expired, to remain in the country.

The New York Times reported the FBI first created an Arab sheik after an informer tipped the bureau to the whereabouts of two valuable paintings, missing for 13 years after they were taken from the loading platform of the United Nations Plaza Apartments.

During negotiations leading to recovery of the paintings, the Times said, an undercover FBI agent posed as a sheik who wanted to buy them.

It said the bureau then moved into a probe of political corruption, and began created more Arab business agents.

Besides the members of Congress, the Times identified others under investigation as: Angelo Errichetti, Democratic mayor of Camden, N.J., and also a state senator; Kenneth MacDonald of Haddonfield, N.J., a Republican named to the New Jersey Casino Control Commission, and New Jersey state Sen. Joseph Maressa of Blackwood, N.J.

The Times said the undercover agents, feigning to seek land for a gambling casino, engaged in dealings with some local New Jersey officials. It said while investigating Errichetti and MacDonald, the agents were introduced to Senator Williams. The Times said the agents met Williams in Florida last March and discussed giving the senator a share of a titanium mine if he would use his influence to obtain government contracts for the venture.

Until this week, the investigation was kept secret — despite the involvement of top FBI officials in New York and Washington and officials of U.S. attorneys offices in several cities.

One source told UPI that after it was learned Newsday and the New York Times planned to print stories in their Sunday editions, agents were sent to New York to trace the leaks. An FBI source said, however, the investigation was virtually wrapped up and the Times' plans to publish only "rushed things a little."

Impact Aid Is Budget Problem

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Education Shirley Hufstedler faces an obstacle that has bested six presidents: trying to scale back federal aid to local school systems which educate the children of federal employees.

The federal government will dispurse $772 million this year to 4,000 school districts — one of every four in the nation — to help pay for teaching 2.3 million children whose parents either are in the military or work or live on federal property. That includes people who live in public housing.

The program is called "impact aid."

Every president since Dwight D. Eisenhower has tried to slash impact aid, which began in 1951 as a $30 million effort to help cushion the impact on communities with military bases and other federal property exempt from local property taxes.

The new Department of Education, which proposes spending a total of $13.5 billion in 1981, wants Congress to cut $333 million from the popular impact aid program.

Impact aid helps Highland Falls, N.Y., a neighbor of West Point, and it helps Navy towns like San Diego. But it also sends millions of dollars each year to Washington's affluent suburbs.

"It is by no means necessarily the seriously disadvantaged communities that receive that funding," says Mrs. Hufstedler.

Federal spending for education in the proposed budget would rise just $98 million next year, the first full year of operation of the new Department of Education.

By cutting $333 million in impact aid and $207 million from the $5 billion college student aid programs, Mrs. Hufstedler has an extra $500 million to spread around other programs, primarily those for the poor.

The Title I program, which funds compensatory education for 6 million low-income students, would go up 10 percent to $3.7 billion. Aid for educating 3.9 million handicapped students would rise by $53 million, to $1.1 billion.

Indian education and bilingual education each would jump $25 million, to $98 million and $192 million respectively.

The attempt to slash impact aid while raising Title I funds by a similar amount exemplifies what Mrs. Hufstedler sees as the proper approach toward federal aid to schools.

The bulk of the $5 billion in grants, loans and other aid to college students is funneled to the students themselves, not institutions.

Most of the rest is in the form of categorical grants to states or local school districts to carry out specific mandates, such as remedial teaching, bilingual education or rehabilitation.

The impact aid is the closest thing to general revenue sharing that schools can get.

"That's one of the virtues local school districts see in it. They can spend it as they see fit," explained William Stormer, director of the federal program.

Chicago Firemen Poised For Strike

CHICAGO (UPI) — Chicago firemen were poised Saturday to strike at a moment's notice to back their demands that Mayor Jane Byrne make good on a nearly year-old promise to give them a contract.

Gov. James R. Thompson said he will call out the National Guard to handle security and medical emergencies in the event of a strike, but that the guard will not be used to fight fires.

While the city raced to arrange for contingency fire protection, teachers prepared for a strike vote.

The teachers, off the job for a week demanding overdue pay from the financially troubled school board, got their money. But their union called a meeting Sunday to decide whether to strike over the school board's budget cut plan that will eliminate jobs of hundreds of teachers.

An emergency plan offered by the firefighters' union under which the union would provide fire protection during any strike was rejected by Mrs. Byrne.

The Executive Committee of the Chicago Fire Fighters Union voted 11-1 Friday in favor of a strike and set a secret date and time for the walkout, with union leaders admittedly hoping to catch the city by surprise.

Canada Will Retaliate

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada will retaliate against the Soviet Union for expelling its senior military attache in Moscow, a Foreign Office spokesman said.

Soviet authorities ordered Col. Harold Gold's expulsion just 10 days after three Soviet military officers were accused of spying and ordered out of Canada by Foreign Minister Flora MacDonald.

She had promised to retaliate if the Russians responded to the expulsion by ordering Canadian diplomats to leave the Soviet Union.

Canadian diplomats are not engaged in spying, Miss MacDonald said.

Strongest Since 1906

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Seismologists now say the earthquake that struck Northern California a week ago was stonger than earlier believed and the third-largest quake in the San Francisco Bay area since 1906.

University of California seismologists had said last Saturday's quake, the second in three days, measured 5.6 on the Richter scale. They revised their figures to 5.8 because of new information collected by special earth-monitoring instruments that were rushed into the Livermore area after the first quake.

Sentenced To Die

Joint Winter Concert

FISHER TULL . . . chairman of the Dept. of Music at Sam Houston State University, Huntsville, Texas and composer of over 45 published compositions, will conduct the student Symphonic Band in a performance to be given on Saturday, February 9 as part of the annual ECU Band Clinic.

The Symphonic Wind Ensemble and the University Jazz Ensemble, both of East Carolina University, will be in a joint concert to begin at 8:15 p.m. Friday, February 8 at Wright Auditorium.

The concert, the winter one for both groups, is a special feature for the approximately 170 student musicians from eastern North Carolina high schools attending the annual ECU Band Clinic.

The Wind Ensemble will be conducted by Herbert L. Carter. For the ensemble's part of the program, compositions to be performed are Fisher Tull's "Cryptic Essay;" Jean Michel Defay's "Deux Dances," which features trombone soloist George Broussard; a folk tune, "Clarinet Polka" featuring the clarinet section; and Persichetti's "Symphony No. 6 for Band."

Broussard will conduct the Jazz Ensemble. Tunes to be played by the jazz group are: "Groove Blues" by Don Menza; Dee Barton's "Lonely Boy;" "Kids Are Pretty People" by Thad Jones; Bob Carleton's "Ja-Da;" and "Tribute to the Duke." The latter two are arranged by Sammy Nestico.

The public is invited to attend this concert and there is no admission charged.

Students To Attend ECU's Band Clinic

Approximately 170 student musicians from 30 eastern North Carolina high schools will attend the annual East Carolina University Band Clinic being held February 8 and 9.

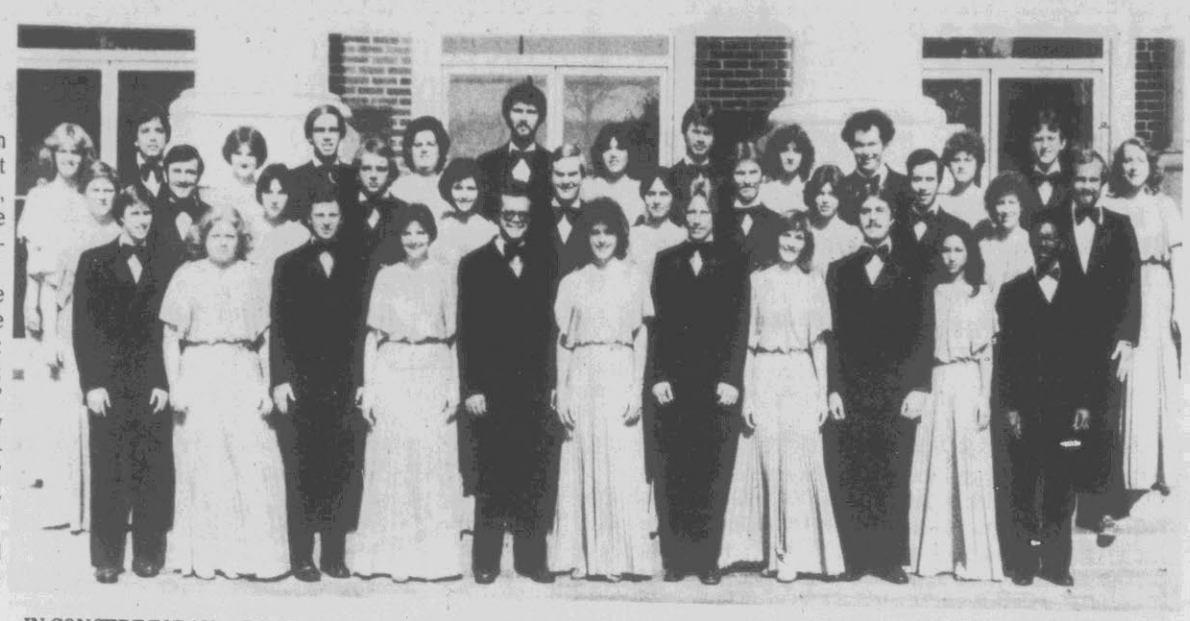

Each of the young musicians was selected by audition in January to perform in either of two bands — the Symphonic Band, to be conducted by Fisher Tull, band composer and faculty member at Sam Houston State University; and the Concert Band, to be conducted by William Adcock from UNC-Wilmington. Adcock is an alumnus of ECU.

Co-directors are Herbert Carter, ECU's Director of Bands, and Michael Stephens of Williamston, chairman of the Eastern N. C. Band Directors.

Highlights of the clinic will be concerts on Friday and Saturday evening. The Friday concert at 8:15 p.m. will feature the ECU Symphonic Winds Ensemble, conducted by Carter, and the University Jazz Ensemble, conducted by George Broussard. Broussard, professor of trombone at ECU, will also be guest soloist with the Wind Ensemble.

The Saturday evening concert will have performances by the two high school clinic bands, and will begin at 7:30 p.m. Both concerts are free and open to the public.

The ECU clinic is the eastern division meeting of the High School All-State Band Clinic and is sponsored by the N. C. Music Educators Conference and the ECU School of Music.

IN CONCERT TODAY — The Campbell University Choir will present a concert of sacred music at Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church at 4 p.m. today. The free concert will feature a 60-minute program of sacred music of five centuries. Singers are drawn from five choral groups at Campbell. About one-half of the singers are studying to be public school music teachers, ministers of music, or professional musicians. Dr. Paul M. Yoder is the conductor, and the group will give about 20 concerts along the eastern seaboard from Maryland to Florida.

Brian Movie A Pointless Dud

"Life of Brain," which opened Friday at the Buccaneer, deserves a special award — as the most tasteless cinematic dud of the 1970's. Fans who remember the innovative flair of Monty Python's "Holy Grail" of a few years back need not expect to find anything of the appeal of that film in "Life of Brian."

From the crude opening scene, where the three Wise Men retrieve their gifts and push aside the grasping mother after having discovered they had made a mistake in bringing their gifts to a lad named Brian, a contemporary of Christ, until the fade-out where a circle of crucified Jews are carrying on like Rockettes in a chorus line, the film is a deadly round of unrelieved noise and bedlam.

The dialogue, or what can be understood of it, is a one-tone (high pitched) screeching in a Cockney dialect which will surely be indecipherable to most viewers. I found assigning the role of Brian's mother to a male effecting a strained falsetto voice perhaps the most distasteful of many unpleasant proceedings.

Jews and Romans alike will undoubtedly feel insulted posturing and giggling.

What passes for action in this film is a Three Stooges type of antics (without the wit of those three), in which scene after scene is given over to Romans chasing Brian through the same familiar dirty, unimaginatively designed alleys.

It must be noted there is one scene that recalls the old Monty Python touch — a brief one where a merchant is astonished that Brian does not wish to bargain for a purchase. In exasperation, he attempts to instruct Brian in the fine points of this expectation.

I feel that the prime reason audiences may waste hard-earned inflation money to see "Life of Brian" will be due to the considerable publicity that has been generated by the controversy over this inane "comic" treatment of mistaken identity. My suggestion is that if curiosity is your motive in seeing "Life of Brian," don't bother — the Buccaneer and other movie houses have much better offerings for your movie money.

Dr. Nenno Will Give Answers

Dr. Robert P. Nenno, psychiatrist at the Pitt County Mental Health Center, will answer questions about raising children on weekly radio segments during February.

"What's On Your Mind" is aired each Monday at 12:55 p. m. on WOOW radio as a community awareness service.

Dr. Nenno will address questions concerning love, discipline and family relations in parenting. The fact that love should be constant and unconditional and that discipline should be constructive will be discussed. Some qualities of constructive discipline he will talk about including being consistent, being clear, administering it in private, being reasonable, being understanding, being flexible, discouraging continued dependency, as well as kinds of punishment. Mutual respect and active listening will be discussed.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Meredith Foltz

In late 1973, Herbert S. Terrace began an elaborate experiment to teach a chimpanzee to use sign language in meaningful conversation with humans. As described in Terrace's book NIM, sixty teachers managed the education of little Nim Chimpsky in a totally human environment. Since chimpanzees do not possess the anatomy necessary for man-like speech, Nim was schooled in Ameslan, a sign language used by deaf Americans. After four years, Nim had mastered about 125 signs and could combine two or more signs in thousands of ways, using his feet as well as his hands! Does this achievement mean that chimpanzees have a language capacity similar to that of human children? Terrace presents his own conclusions in this informal and readable report sparkling with Nim's monkeyshines.

ANIMAL AND PLANT MIMICRY, by Dorothy Hinshaw Patent, is a slim volume introducing a young science. The mimicry Patent examines is a resemblance so close between two living things that one creature is mistaken for the other. Mimicking animals and plants do not, of course, copy others with conscious purpose. Deceptive markings, sounds, or smells have come about through evolution and have proved beneficial in preserving a species by attracting its food or by discouraging would-be attackers. Viceroy butterflies, for example, are protected to some degree from hungry birds because viceroys resemble monarch butterflies. The diet of monarch butterflies makes them poisonous enough to sicken birds and therefore birds often avoid eating both monarchs and their mimics, the viceroys. From the current knowledge and the unsolved riddles of mimicry Patent has crafted a stimulating lesson in natural science.

North Carolinians interested in our native Venus's-Flytraps will want to explore other PLANTS THAT EAT ANIMALS. Author J. H. Prince has organized carnivorous plants according to five main types of traps: pitfalls, flypaper, snap, suction, and adhesive. For a number of species, Prince describes and illustrates the plant structures which lure, snare, and digest not only insects but occasionally animals as large as lizards and birds. A chapter on growing some of these plants at home is included for the reader who would like to observe the carnivorous processes firsthand.

Mountain Hikes Listed In Excellent Guide

Walks in the Great Smokies. By Rodney and Priscilla Albright. Charlotte, N. C. East Woods Press Books, Fast & McMillan Publishers, Inc. Paper, pocket-size format, illustraed with maps and photographs. 290 pages, $6.95.

Anyone planning to visit the Greak Smokies in the 1980s and who enjoys hikes — short and easy, or long and vigorous, will need a copy of Rodney and Priscilla Albright's detailed, informative book. It's a guide that merits the oft-misued term "complete."

Eight separate areas of the Smokies are covered, mostly within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. These are: Townsend-Wear Cove; Gatlinburg; Cosby; Fontana Lake; Clingsman Dome; Bryson City; Cherokee; and Balsams.

A total of 42 major walking trails and paths are comprehensively described and clearly chartted on easy to read maps of gray, white and black.

The format and clarity of "Walks in the Great Smokies" more than meet the basic requirement applicable to any type of travel guide — that of being practical and simple to use. Preceding textual information on each trail, four basic condensed categories of information are given— Distance — the total mileage of the trail either in and out or up and down — Difficulty — whether the trail is considered easy, moderate or difficult — Elevation — In feet above sea level with degree of climb and rise in feet from starting to ending points indicated — and How to get there — the exact point where the trail begins, and key points to look for along the way.

This information alone would be useful material for hikers. What really makes this a lovely and provocative book is the obvious affection the authors feel and express in notes on the richness of nature in the Smokies and the charm of rustic sites along the way.

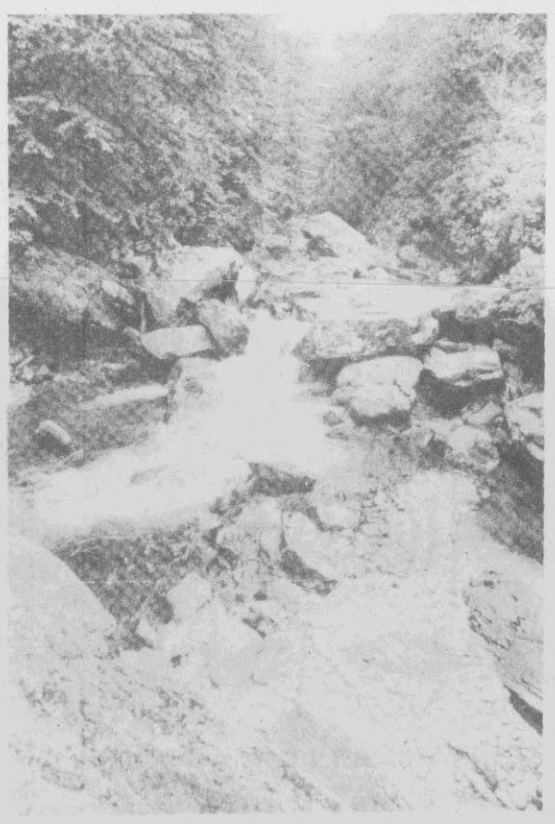

Here's their observations on "Kephart Prong" in the Cherokee area: "The prong is an irrepressible surge of water which empties into the Oconaluftee River near its source. It bubbles its way in, out and around huge boulders, pours over rills and skips around the rocky edges . . . We were pleased to find the puttyroot, an orchid with brown flowers. Its root, when pounded, makes a mucilaginous substance that pioneer women used to mend pottery . . . The trail . . . then comes to an abandoned camp which during the thirties was a Civilian Conservation Corps Camp. You will see traces of it — a signpost, a rock chimney and the kind of planting seen in inhabited areas . . ."

A careful reading of "Walks in the Great Smokies" in advance will provide those planning a mountain hike with ideas of what they can expect to see and encounter — the best place to stop for a secluded picnic, what month to go to see certain wild flowers or the perfect time to catch the full glory of autumn foliage.

The photographs illustrating the volume, though small, are of a beauty that will tempt anyone to want to take a camera along.

Chances are this little book is not stocked extensively in book stores in this area. But it can be ordered directly from: East Woods Press Books, Fast & McMillan Publishers, Inc., 820 East Boulevard, Charlotte, N. C., 28203. (Remit $7.50 to include cost of postage).

Romantic Love, The Gravity Of The Universe

Scott Spencer's third novel, "Endless Days," is the kind of book you close for the night and gaze down at as you say to yourself: "So, I wasn't crazy after all to feel those things and act in those ways. I was only a swimmer like everybody else, caught for a while in the deep end of the pool."

Spencer begins the book in the voice of David Axelrod, his narrator: "When I was seventeen and in full obedience to my heart's most urgent commands, I stepped far from the pathway of normal life and in a moment's time ruined everything I loved . . ." What Spencer gives us in language consistently as rapturous, is the story of David's ruination.

In 1966, in Chicago, at the age of sixteen David Axelrod falls in love with Jade Butterfield, fourteen, the only daughter of Hugh and Ann Butterfield, informal foster parents of as many youthful refugees from more traditional homes as knock at their door. David, whose parents are hard-working communists — the real thing in terms of radicalism, is an attractive character to the Butterfield household. And the Butterfield household is attractive to David because he is fed up with his folks' concern for the proletariat, and he likes rapping and getting stoned with all the gentle Butterfields, and wants to spend every waking and sleeping second with Jade. He soon insinuates himself into the Butterfield tapestry and moves into Jade's room. They make love as happily and as frequently as lemmings, and live at such a high burn that Jade begins to pale from lack of sleep. The Butterfields hold a family council and decide that a double bed is the answer. The intensity of the love grows, however. Jade continues to unravel, and Hugh decides that David will have to go for a month so Jade can at least get a good night's sleep. David can stand to be separated neither from Jade nor from her family. So, on the night of August 12, 1967, "so the Butterfields would have to leave their house and confront me," David sets fire to some newspapers on the porch.

As Fate would have it (Fate picks us up on its scanner when we step "far from the pathway of normal life"), David has chosen a bad night to get the Butterfields' attention. The whole family is stoned right down to the roots of their hair. David barely gets them out of their burning home alive. His parents pay for the finest counsel they can afford, and David winds up in a psychiatric hospital instead of the state penitentiary for arson.

The Butterfields leave Chicago. As a condition of the plea bargaining David is not allowed to write to or hear from any of the Butterfields, so he loses track of them. He does, however, write Jade letters which he does not send, many of which we get to read. This is how Spencer shows us the fire of that first love, and how he lets us see that it still burns in David. David gets out of the hospital, rents a room, and begins to look for Butterfields in phone books. He finds the right ones eventually.

"Endless Love" spans ten years. If we look at the book as a universe complete, created in Scott Spencer's wisdom (which is awesome for a 34-year old), we see that romantic love is the gravity that holds the universe together. The characters revolve in their daily lives and orbit in relation to each other at speeds controlled by the varying intensity of David's and Jade's love. No one and nothing escapes the pull of their erotic gravity — not the planets, not the smaller astral bodies, not the Manhattan florist truck driver oblivious on his way to lunch. When this pull becomes too strong for too long, the equilibrium of the universe goes, and the whole mess implodes into that concept we hear so much about these days: a black hole. In this analogy the black hole is David Axelrod's life.

It's easy, when you try to share literature of the highest order, to get wrapped up in the ideas the literature embodies and to forget the events and descriptions that illustrate the ideas. Writing of this degree of skill and care creates a reality so true that it invades us, and makes us measure ourselves against the physics of the universe it creates.

Here is an example of the care Spencer takes with his prose, of his success in creating full lives for minor characters: on page 119 David's father, whom he calls Arthur, reveals to David that he has fallen in love with a woman named Barbara after twenty years of marriage to David's mother Rose. Spencer writes in David's voice: "His gaze passed over me, as if I was just one member of an enormous jury. 'You were my inspiration,' Arthur said. 'Seeing you in love reminded me.'

" 'Of what?'

" 'Of how I once felt about Rose and how she never felt about me, until I didn't feel that way about her either. But you reminded me of how it feels. A lot of people never have it, that feeling, not even once. You know that don't you? But you had it -'

" 'With Jade.'

" 'And you reminded me that I once had it and that I never felt so large and important as I did when being in love was "everything." I saw you walking a foot above the earth and I remembered that was where "I" used to walk . . . You made me remember and then Barbara showed me I hand't missed my chance. It was like waking up twenty years younger' "

Then, much later, on page 29: David is thinking of his father, and he realizes how much the older man gave him and how much he was able, though unconscious of his ability, to give his father in return: "he quarantined me from his deepest self as if from a contagion, convincing himself that somehow he was a rooster who'd been given the responsibility of teaching a hawk how to fly.

"He wanted to pass the torch — the torch of romance and heedlessness, the torch that could never ignite in his own hands. And when it was ablaze he shyly stole it back from me."

Three types of readers will buy "Endless Love" and read it till it disintegrates. Writers and lovers of literature will read the book and admire and relish the imaginative conception of the story and the meticulous care Spencer takes in unifying it. Readers on the look for a flat-out good read will let their coffees go cold as they push through to see what happens to David and Jade and to their folks and all the other characters touched by their love.

And lovers will read "Endless Love" and not be able to speak for a while after they put the book down that final time. When I say "lovers" I mean those among us who feel an intense and indivisible affection and eroticism for another person. Like a pull towards the sun. A real lover wants to be his or her beloved. David Axelrod says if here of Jade: "I thought of her blood and in a dizzy leap of hunger and exhaustion I longed to "be" her blood, to be the stuff that made the constant circuit through every inch of her."

Permit Granted To Picket Local Movie

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

A picket protesting the showing of the Monty Python film, "Life of Brian" at the local Buccaneer Theater is scheduled to take place at the theater site between 2:30 and 4 p.m. this afternoon.

Rev. Van Dale Hudson, pastor of Trinity Free Will Baptist Church is chairman for the local Committee of Concerned Citizens that made the decision to picket.

"Last fall when the Buccaneer Theaters were owned by the Cape Fear Theater group, we were able to stop plans for showing the film by appealing to the owners," Hudson commented.

"Since that time," Hudson continued, "ownership of the theater has passed into the hands of a consolidated chain operating out of Charlotte. We appealed to the new owners to withdraw showing of the film, and went through deliberations at some length' but without success."

Hudson said the decision to picket was to "show the disapproval of the Christian community of Greenville with the film." He said he had not seen nor did not plan to see the film. "But I have heard extracts from the sound track and have read extensive reviews, and my conscience demanded that disapproval be expressed."

The film, labeled a satire, is based on a character, Brian, a fictional contemporary of Christ, who is mistaken by the wise men as being Christ. Hudson said the film, x-rated, has "obscene language, one scene where Bryan is naked, and a Christian crucifixion where 50 others are hanged along with Christ, and Christ is portrayed as a comic Christ," Hudson added.

He noted that throughout the nation, Protestant, Jewish and Catholic groups had protested showing of the film, sometimes successfully, sometimes not. "It has been withdrawn in a lot of cities, Norfolk, for example."

The picketing permit issued by Chief of Police Glenn Cannon authorizes a group not to exceed 300 people to gather before the Buccaneer Theater between the stipulated hours. Of this number, a stipulation is that minors will be allowed as part of the protestors, but those below 18 taking part are not to exceed 50 in number.

Alarming Increase In Amount Of Heroin Available

By GREGORY GORDON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The turmoil in Iran and Afghanistan appears to be creating a crisis on the streets of America — an upsurge in the availability of smuggled heroin.

Peter Bensinger, the chief U.S. drug enforcement officer, says the heroin flow to the United States from the "Golden Crescent" of Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan has increased "alarmingly" in recent months.

The three countries are said to grow more opium than any other area of the world — enough, according to estimates, to produce more than 55,000 tons of heroin a year.

"The instability in the area has been a very negative and a very dangerous element in the U.S. drug scene," Bensinger, administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, said in an interview.

He said the Golden Crescent heroin flow to America rose from about 0.6 to 0.8 metric tons in 1978 to "well over a ton and perhaps as much as a ton and a half" in 1979. Another sharp rise is expected in 1980, he said.

Afghan refugees are reported to be carrying large caches of heroin and hashish to camps in Pakistan, West Germany and elsewhere. And U.S. intelligence reports indicate Afghan rebels may be trying to barter opium crops for guns.

Golden Crescent heroin — virtually none of which reached the United States in 1976 — is now estimated to make up 25 to 30 percent of the narcotics on U.S. streets, Bensinger said.

He said officials have traditionally had trouble stopping the drug flow from the region because the three countries have "a type of border and nomadic tribal system that provide a traditional transportation system for drugs."

But with Iran in chaos and Afghanistan at war, the two nations have all but abandoned even the modest enforcement actions taken in the past.

"Heroin seizures in Europe and even in the United States have increased alarmingly in the last several months," he said.

The new Golden Crescent pipeline to the West developed while drug enforcement officials were cheering success in campaigns to eradicate poppy fields in Turkey and Mexico.

So far, most of the pipeline's heroin has ended up in West Germany, which reported almost twice as many drug overdose deaths as the United States last year — with only one-fourth the population.

In Frankfurt last week, Muhammed Amanyar said many of his fellow Afghan refugees are carrying drugs because "these people have to survive, and have with them whatever of value they can carry."

Eric Szentgrothy, a Frankfurt drug counselor, said political unrest in the drug-growing countries is sure to aggravate the enforcement problem in West Germany.

"The more unstable the conditions are in a Middle East country, the more drugs come in," he said. "Under the shah, who was very hard against drugs, there was almost no Iranian drug traffic. What we are seeing now is a sudden upsurge of more and more junk from Iran."

Reynolds Sues Iranian Gov't

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (UPI) — A subsidiary of R.J. Reynolds Industries Inc. has filed at least three lawsuits against the Iranian government in an attempt to recover about $40 million in unpaid debts, the Winston-Salem Journal said Saturday.

The federal court suits, all of them sealed from public inspection, were filed by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco International and seek to attach Iranian assets in the United States that have been frozen by President Carter, the newspaper said.

Two of the suits were filed in U.S Middle District Court in North Carolina. The newspaper quoted sources who said a third suit was filed in U.S. Southern District Court in New York under the name John Doe.

A lawyer in Washington who represents the Iranian government confirmed the two North Carolina suits to the newspaper.

"There are two cases pending in the Middle District of North Carolina with R.J. Reynolds vs. the Iranian government," said Thomas Shack, a partner in the law firm of Abourezk, Shack and Mendenhall. "But I can't comment on them other than to confirm their existence."

Shack also said he knew of two John Doe suits in New York against Iran but did not know the identity of the plaintiffs.

"To our knowledge, there are only two under the R.J. Reynolds name," he said.

"That's one of those things that we just can't comment on," said Ronald Sustana, RJR Industries' vice president for corporate communications.

The newspaper said listings, docket sheets and filed for the two North Carolina federal court suits were not on file in the U.S. District Court clerk's office in Greensboro, and the case numbers assigned to the suits were missing from court files.

An order to seal a suit must be made by a federal judge at the request of one of the parties involved, the newspaper said, and quoted a legal source who said Reynolds requested the action.

The newspaper said the suits were apparently filed to collect payment for Winston cigarettes shipped to Iran.

Iran stopped paying for the cigarettes last year and has canceled the contract, the newspaper said, but the total debt was believed to be about $40 million.

Betty McCain Identified As Instigator Of Memos

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Betty McCain, identified by the Hunt administration Friday as the person who requested political information be gathered on sheriffs, can keep her job as co-chairwoman of the governor's re-election campaign, Gov. Jim Hunt said Friday.

Hunt said he spoke with Mrs. McCain, a longtime Hunt supporter from his hometown of Wilson, and told her it was improper to receive the memos from a state law-enforcement agent assessing sheriffs' loyalties to the governor.

"I called Betty and let her know it was wrong. She didn't mean anything by it," Hunt said. "You know Betty...She wants everybody to tell everybody else something about politics."

The growing controversy over the political profiles of county sheriffs focused on Mrs. McCain — and on former Crime Control and Public Safety Secretary Herbert Hyde — after the current Secretary, Burley Mitchell, reported his findings on Friday.

After being asked by Hunt to find out how the politically sensitive memos originated, Mitchell told reporters he had been told by the agent, Mather Slaughter, that it was Mrs. McCain who asked him to pass on the information.

Mitchell said Slaughter believed he was following the wishes of Hyde, secretary of the department at the time, when he filed the memos in early 1979.

The request followed an early 1979 meeting between Hyde and Mrs. McCain, but Hyde apparently did not ever himself order Slaughter directly to include the political information in his memos, Mitchell said.

Late Titan Surge Tops East Carolina

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

DETROIT' Mich. — The night belonged to East Carolina's George Maynor, but the game and the win belonged to the University of Detroit.

The Rayford senior hit 14 of 18 field goals for 28 points, but it was not enough as the Titans, with six free throws in the last minute, came from behind to nip the Pirates, 69-65, Saturday night before a crowd of 4,095 in Detroit's Calihan Hall.

Ahead 63-60 with 4:30 left, the Pirates went into a semi-stall, and iced the ball for nearly two minutes. With Detroit spread out, ECU's Herb Gray tried to split the seam down the middle but had the ball stripped from him. Moments later, Detroit's Joe Kopicki muscled inside for two, bringing the Titans within one, 63-62.

"For the first two minutes there (in the stall) we played with as much poise as we have all year," ECU Coach Dave Odom said. "But the first time—the first time!—we put the ball on the floor, we got it stolen.

"Had he (Gray) gotten through he would have slammed it and that would have been the game. We would have been up by five points. We would have had it won."

Seconds later, Kopicki stripped the ball from ECU's Herb Krusen, who went over 1,000 points for his career in scoring ten points for the Pirates Saturday, and went in for a dunk, giving the Titans the lead, 64-63.

Three free throws sandwiched around a miss by Maynor moved Detroit ahead, 67-63, before Michael Gibson hit a short jumper to pull ECU back within two, 67-65.

Dave Niles, who led the Titans with 18 points, then sealed the win with two free throws with 14 seconds left.

"We had the win," said an obviously disappointed Maynor. "We had it. I was ready tonight. We wanted this one. I tried to get everybody up during warm-ups.

"I think we learned something from the two other road trips we've been on," said Maynor, referring to the Pirates' two losses at the Wolf Pack Classic in Reno and a narrow loss to Oral Roberts last month.

"The key to the game was two-fold," said Odom, whose Pirates fall to 11-8. "One, Detroit picked up their defensive effectiveness in the second half and we didn't handle it well. Second, our offensive effectiveness was something less than desired.

"I'm sure we caught Detroit napping. How could they be up for a little team from the South?" Odom continued. "We played well in the first half, probably as well as we could have played."

Indeed. Led by Maynor, who hit eight-of-eight in the first half, and almost single-handedly detrailed the Titan Express in the first 20 minutes, the Bucs jumped out to a 22-16 advantage.

With Maynor on the bench, Detroit, now 9-9, quickly narrowed the gap to 26-24 before ECU regrouped behind two sparkling plays by Gray, who ended the night with 14 points and a game-high 11 rebounds.

Taking a pass from Tony Byles on the fast break, Gray went in for a lay-up. Seconds later, Gray stole the ball at midcourt and went in for a crushing dunk, giving the Bucs a 30-24 lead. ECU led at halftime, 34-28.

"Gray was just super," Odom said. "I think he did a super job on (Earl) Cureton in the first half, who I consider to be one of the best big men in the nation.

"In the second half, Cureton came on and showed what kind of player he is," Odom said. Cureton, a 6-9 senior, who was drafted in the third round by the Philadelphia 76ers, was held to four points in the first half but came on to score eight in the second half.

"I felt our defense, though, played well all through the game," Odom continued. "But I did think we could have run more in the second half, but we didn't get the good outlet pass like we have had."

Detroit came out in the second half as if it was ready to give the game to ECU. The Titans made three turnovers in the first minute and a half as the Pirates pulled ahead, 38-28.

Following a Titan time-out, Detroit hit eight straight points to pull within two, 38-36. Gray then fought inside for two, before the Titans tied the score with two buckets, 40-40.

Detroit took the lead—its first since the 16:38 mark of the first half—with a bucket by Cureton, 44-42, but could not take command of the game.

ECU kept it close, led by Maynor's six buckets and took the lead, 60-56 with nearly six minutes to play.

After a time-out by Detriot, Gibson hit the front end of a one-and-one and following a four-point burst by the Titans, Byles hit two free throws to push ECU ahead, 63-60.

From there Detroit hit seven straight points to grab the lead for good.

"There were two or three crucial things in the second half that hurt us," Odom said. "They got in the one-and-one quickly and we didn't get into it until the last three minutes. Because of that their defense could be more aggressive.

"Second, we quit getting back

East Carolina Women Bomb Panthers, 92-72

East Carolina's women took advantage of a six-minute cold spell by High Point in the first half to jump out to an 18-point lead and then cruised to a 92-72 victory Saturday night at Minges Coliseum.

The Pirates followed the hot outside shooting of forward Kathy Riley and guard Lydia Rountree to a 46-30 halftime edge. Riley pumped in 14 opening half points, with Rountree adding 12.

East Carolina picked up in the second half where it left off, building to its biggest lead of the contest, 62-39 with 12:05 remaining on 11 points from senior Rosie Thompson.

High Point's Andreia Blanchard turned out to be the big scorer of the evening, netting 32 while grabbing 18 rebounds.

Rountree led all Pirate scorers with 24, followed by Riley with 14, Mary Denkler with 13 in 13 minutes, and Thompson and Sikes with 12 each. Thompson and Rountree each grabbed seven rebounds. Sikes dished off nine assists in East Carolina's 16th win against seven losses.

"I was very, very concerned coming into this game," admitted ECU coach Cathy Andruzzi. "Not just because we lost to them last year, but because they have a very good team.

"We were pleased with the momentum both offensively and defensively. We caused a great deal of turnovers by slapping the ball away when they tried to get it inside to Blanchard."

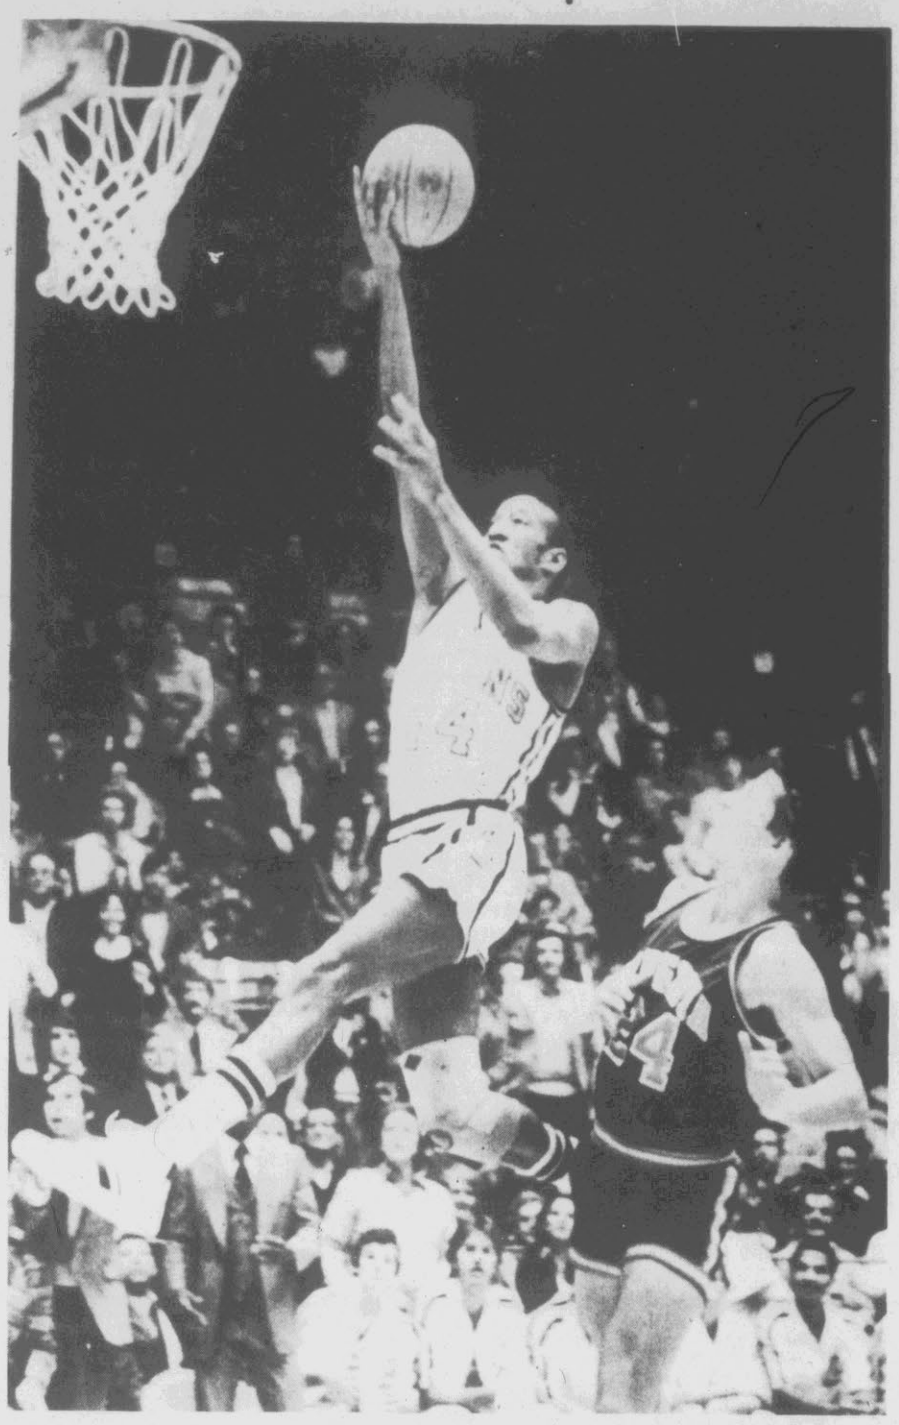

Andruzzi felt that the Pirates did well with the different combinations they played. "I thought we played a good ball team tonight," she added.

"I was really pleased to see us shooting so much better from the line," said Andruzzi. "We needed that game and we were not sure we could get it and certainly not by such a margin."

The Pirates travel to UNC-Chapel Hill Tuesday to close out their 1979-80 NCAIAW Division I slate. East Carolina currently stands 1-2 in conference play.

Rogers Hits At Horn As Wake Nips Virginia

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — If Wake Forest's Carl Tacy could have written the script for his team's 79-77 victory Saturday over 13th-ranked Virginia, he would have made it a close game with his Demon Deacons coming out on top.

But even Tacy, who saw Alvis Rogers' jump shot at the buzzer fall through the basket for the victory, wasn't quite ready to draw such a fine line.

"We thought it would be a close game, but we did not think it would finish like this," said Tacy. "We're just very happy with the effort."

Virginia's Terry Holland, whose team was all but eliminated from the Atlantic Coast Conference race, put Wake Forest's clutch shooting in its proper perspective.

"They just made the baskets," he said. "I think we played as well as we could play and as hard as we could play."

Although Tacy's plan for the final few seconds didn't materialize, he was in no mood to question the fates.

"The play we had set up at the end was for Alvis Rogers, but not quite in that manner," he said. "We wanted to get him posted low and get the ball inside to him."

Rogers got the ball, but only after guard Mike Helms had been forced to shoot with five seconds remaining. Helms' shot was partially blocked and slid off the rim to Rogers with three seconds left.

The sophomore forward took the ball toward the corner, looked to his right and then realized he had no time to make a pass. He jumped, arched the ball high into the air and the buzzer sounded an instant before it fell cleanly through the net.

"I though Mike Helms did a smart thing in putting up the shot when we couldn't get it inside," Tacy explained.

Wake Forest now is 10-9 overall and 3-6 in the ACC. Virginia fell to 16-6 and 5-4 in the conference.

Helms sparked Wake Forest both defensively and offensively in the second half, denying Jeff Lamp the ball on defense and consistently hitting jump shots on offense. He finished with 19 points.

Wake Forest guard Benny McKaig, who did not start for the first time in several months, scored 12 points and handed out six assists. Guy Morgan led the Deacons in scoring with 21 points. Rogers had 16 for the game and added 11 rebounds.

Lamp led Virginia with 24 points and Lee Raker added 22. Freshman Ralph Sampson saw limited first-half action, played most of the second half, but finished with only four points.

Maryland Races By Blue Devils To Strenghten Hold On Lead

By GORDON BEARD
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — "I've been coaching for 25 years," said Maryland's Lefty Driesell after the 12th-ranked Terps walloped fifth-ranked Duke 101-82 Saturday, "and this was one of the best games a team of mine has ever played."

"They were just awesome hitting the open man and running the offense," Driesell said after the Atlantic Coast Conference game. "We shot 63 percent and the reason we did was because we passed the ball so superbly."

Greg Manning, who defeated the Blue Devils at Maryland last year on a last-second shot, scored a career high 26 points which caused Driesell to say: "Manning was unconscious, but he took good shots."

"This one was nicer," Manning said, comparing the runaway with last season's squeaker. "When the team plays so well, the individuals start playing well also. You know you're going to get 10-to-15 foot open shots."

Coach Bill Foster of Duke said: "I think Greg Manning may be the most underrated player in the ACC. He can kill you if you leave him alone. They are playing very confidently and smartly right now. They are tough to beat right now."

It was disclosed in the Duke locker room after the game that center Mike Gminski injured his back during the warmups and it affected his play.

"It hurt when I turned a certain way," Gminski said. "But I don't want to use it as an excuse."

Maryland solidified its hold on first place in the ACC, but Driesell said, "We can't celebrate. We have to play North Carolina on Thursday."

The Terps, now 8-1 and leading the ACC by two games over North Carolina, got their fast break game rolling in the second half after taking a 36-28 lead at halftime despite having Albert King and Earnest Graham in foul trouble.

King and Graham, Maryland's leading scorers who combined for a 39-point average, totaled only six points at intermission. But King finished with 16 and Graham 12 as the Terps increased their record to 16-3.

Maryland center Buck Williams scored 18 points, one more than Duke center Mike Gminski, the leading scorer and rebounder in the conference. Each finished with 12 rebounds.

Maryland led 64-46 midway through the second half, before Gminski scored a three-point play to launch a nine-point Duke streak over a 72 second span, slicing Maryland's advantage to 64-55.

Manning stopped the comeback with a field goal, and an 8-0 string later increased Maryland's margin to 76-59.

Duke, now 5-4 in the ACC and tied for third with Virginia and Clemson, was led by Gene Banks with 21 points. He fouled out with 2:57 remaining.

The Blue Devils are now 17-4.

The Terps were able to score numerous layups and dunk shots after their crisp passing, which sometimes bordered on the sensational. Graham had nine assists from his forward position and King had five.

Maryland, not known for its patience in previous seasons, was able to play a deliberate game when necessary in the first half. The Terps outscored Duke 16-6 in the final seven minutes of the opening half, starting the spurt after King went to the sidelines with his third foul and with 8:50 remaining.

Six different players participated in the scoring over that stretch, with Manning and Williams credited with four apiece.

Another 12-4 string, six by Manning, gave Maryland a 64-46 lead with 9:57 left to play. But after Gminski's three-pointer, Chip Engelland and Vince Taylor scored for Duke following steals and Taylor added another basket after a Maryland turnover to make it 64-55.

That was the last chance for the Blue Devils, who had won five of their last six games. Maryland, which held a 39-27 edge in rebounds, has won six of its last seven.

Beddingfield's Overtime Victory Knocks Rose Out Of First Spot

By LARRY SULLIVAN
Reflector Sports Writer

WILSON— Some got to win, some got to lose, and some, according to Rose High basketball coach Jim Brewington, get "ripped off."

Those are the words Brewington used to describe the game winning tap-in by Wilson Beddingfield's Edward Farmer that gave the host Bruins a hard-fought 77-75 Division I overtime victory Saturday night.

Earlier, in the first game, the Rampettes danced through a different kind of "Saturday Night Fever" as Coach Dennis Gibson's visitors fell to the Lady Bruins, 66-36.

"What can I say," a drained Brewington said outside his squad's quiet locker room after the game. "We were ripped off. There was indeed offensive interference on that shot but what can I say now? Our kids played their hearts out. They played too hard to lose, but it's there in the loss column," he said.

Host Beddingfield built a comfortable five-point lead early in the first period and maintained it throughout the initial frame as Rose could get no closer than three points. The frame ended with the Bruins holding the familiar spread, 19-14.

Early in the second quarter, Beddingfield began to add to its lead, going up by seven at 23-15 with under a minute played in the period. Twice the visitors cut the lead to four points before the Bruins put together six straight points to take a 10-point 35-25 lead with 2:25 left in the half. During that time, however, Rose put together an 8-0 spurt, closing the gap to a pair of points at the half, 35-33.

After intermission, Beddingfield scored the first bucket before Rose added four to tie the score at 37 with 7:13 to go in the third period. The Rampants actually took the lead two minutes later, at 43-41, and the game see-sawed back and forth until the Bruins tallied a three-point play that gave them a 50-47 cushion. The host unit remained on top for the rest of the stanza, gathering a two-point advantage at the end of the period.

Coach Al Warrick's home squad scored the first four points of the fourth period before the Rampants battled back to tie the score at 65 with five and a half minutes left in regulation. A minute and a half later, with both teams playing from a four-corner type offense, Rose broke out on top by a pair, 67-65. The visitors protected their two-point lead until late in the frame. With 12 ticks left in regulation, the Bruins gained control of the ball, and six seconds later, Anthony Yelverton sank a 10-footer to send the game into overtime.

In that period, it was a showdown between Rose's Wallace Brown and Beddingfield's Farmer. Brown scored all four of the Rampants' extra-period points while Farmer, who finished with a game-high 34 points, put in all six of the Bruins', including the controversial game-winner.

Joining Farmer in double figures for the Bruins was Vernon Williams, who chipped in 17. Donald House poured in 26 points for the visitors and was followed by Calvin Whichard, with 14, and Tyrone Tucker, with 10.

In the first game, the Rampettes hung close throughout the first half before completely floundering in the second as the Beddingfield five outscored the visitors 46-18 in that 16 minute span.

For Gibson, it was "one of those nights," as he tried to explain just what happened to his troops. "It's a Saturday night jinx," he concluded. "Every time we play on a Saturday, we get beat soundly. Tonight, there was just no team effort. Nothing went right for us and we just couldn't get going," he said as he shook his head. "Things just wouldn't fall."

The two squads battled even in the first stanza, with each unit getting off to a slow 8-8 start. The second frame was

Poll Shows American People Backing Boycott Of Olympics

NEW YORK (AP) — Public support for a U.S. withdrawal from the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow has jumped dramatically in the past two weeks, an Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

The continuing Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan has hardened American attitudes and intensified the sentiment for withdrawing from the games in retaliation for the Soviet move.

Seventy-three percent of those who know of the Afghanistan situation said the U.S. team should not go to the Games if they are held in Moscow, because of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. That is 24 percentage points higher than the support for withdrawal found in the AP-NBC News poll taken Jan. 17-18.

Nineteen percent now are opposed to withdrawal, and 8 percent of those interviewed Tuesday and Wednesday were not sure.

The previous poll found sentiment only narrowly in favor of withdrawal, with 49 percent favoring a boycott and 41 percent opposed. Ten percent were undecided.

This shift in public opinion has cut across every major group. Backing for U.S. withdrawal is strong among liberals and conservatives, young and old, wealthy and poor, Democrats and Republicans.

Right after the previous survey, President Carter announced he had asked the U.S. Olympic Committee to get the Summer Games moved out of Moscow, postponed or canceled. Failing any such action, Carter said he would back a U.S. boycott of the Summer Games if the Soviet troops remained in Afghanistan after Feb. 20.

Also since the previous poll, both the U.S. House and the Senate have voted for a boycott of the Moscow Games.

American sentiment for the lesser step of moving the Games out of Moscow also has risen, the latest survey found.

Eighty-two percent now think the Games should be moved if possible, while 13 percent opposed a shift. Five percent of the 1,600 adults interviewed nationwide by telephone were not sure.

In the AP-NBC News poll taken Jan. 17-18, 66 percent favored moving the Games, 26 were opposed and 8 percent were not sure.

Neither Carter nor any federal agency has the power to stop the U.S. Olympic team from participating in Games. That is decision for the U.S. Olympic Committee, the private organization that oversees Olympic-related matters in this country.

Overall, the public is split on who should decide about a U.S. boycott of the Games. Thirty percent said the government should decide and another 30 percent said it should be the U.S. Olympic Committee. Twenty-five percent said it should be the U.S. athletes involved. Eight percent said all should make the decision and 2 percent said none of them should. Five percent were not sure.

Public awareness of the Afghanistan situation has remained stable. Nine percent say they have not heard or read of it, the same as the previous poll two weeks ago.

Fifty-three percent said they approved of Carter's handling of the situation, up a bit from 49 percent in the previous poll. Twenty-seven percent disapproved, down from 30 percent. Eleven percent were not sure, about the same as the 12 percent from the last survey.

As with every sample survey, the results of the AP-NBC News poll can vary from the opinions of all those with telephones across the country because of chance variations in the sample.

For polls with 1,600 interviews, the results should vary no more than 3 percentage points either way simply because of sample error. That is, if one could talk to all adults in the country, there is only one chance out of 20 that the results would vary from the findings of this poll by more than 3 percentage points.

Of course, these results can differ from other polls for a number yhtt er reasons. Differences in the exact wording of the questions, the exact dates the interviews were conducted and whether the interviews were conducted by telephone or in respondents' homes could also cause variations.

East Carolina Wrestlers Win, Draw, Lose In Three Matches

BLACKSBURG, Va. — East Carolina's wrestlers, participating in a quad-meet at Virginia Tech Saturday afternoon, did a little of everything.

They won, they lost and they tied.

The Pirates opened the day with a 21-21 deadlock with William & Mary, followed that up with a 28-12 win over Appalachian State, and then bowed to hosting Virginia Tech, 22-19.

"We could have won all three of them," Coach Ed Steers said afterwards, "but I can't fault our guys. They're banged up and when you wrestle you tend to get banged up even more."

The match against William & Mary was an odd one for Steers, who came to East Carolina during the summer after a long and successful career at the Virginia school.

"It was a heck of a match to be in," Steers said. "I don't know that I've ever had a feeling like that before, having to go up against the kids that I grew to love when I was at William & Mary."

Individually, Steers had praise for Frank Schaede, who won all three of his matches, Butch Revils, who upped his record to 30-1 during the day with three wins; and Curtis Sendek, who worked at the 158 class, despite being a 142-pounder. "He's just coming back after a broken arm," Steers added.

Heavyweight D.T. Joyner also added three victories.

Greek Official Asks Olympics To Make Country Permanent Site

By PHILIP DOPOULOS
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) Amid controversy over the Moscow Olympics, Premier Constantine Caramanlis has formally renewed his call for the Olympic games to be permanently based in Greece. He stressed that his proposal was not dictated by nationalist or profit-seeking motives.

In a letter to Lord Killanin, president of the International Olympic Committee, made public Saturday, the premier proposed ancient Olympia, where the games originated, as the permanent home for the Olympics.

He said that his proposal "is aimed at protecting the Olympic ideal which is linked to Greek tradition and to the Greek spirit and towards which it is natural for the Greek people to feel particularly sensitive."

The premier's Jan. 28 letter was sent after the United States suggested a boycott of the Moscow Olympics this summer if Soviet troops are not removed from Afghanistan.

Greece has announced that it will sent its athletes to Moscow, saying that it does not want to mix politics with sports.

Caramanlis's letter referred to his original proposal sent to to the IOC during the Montreal olympics four years ago stating that Greece is the most suitable site to be the permanent site for the games.

"Political, racial and ideological conflicts are rekindled every time the choice of a site for the games arises, as at present, with the games planned for Moscow," Caramanlis said, adding: "The Olympic idea...has become a means of political rivalry and economic aspirations."

He said disputes provoked by recent international developments "are transforming the olympic games from a factor for detente into a factor of world tension."

Starting in 776 B.C., the games at ancient Olympia was held every four years. The games temporarily brought a halt to all hostilities between warring Greek city states. The last known Olympic games of antiquity were held in 393 A.D. They were revived in 1896 and held in Athens at the initiative of Pierre de Courbetin of France.

However, the city, located 200 miles southwest of Athens, has virtually no sports facilities now.

Nor are there any facilities to house the thousands of athletes and visitors who attend the prestigious events every four years. The only permanent installation presently at Olympia is the International Olympic Academy which holds summer seminars for athletes and trainers.

Austin Leads State Victory

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Clyde Austin scored 14 points to lead defensive-minded North Carolina State, which caused 17 turnovers, to a 57-35 victory over The Citadel Saturday night in the first half of the North-South basketball doubleheader.

Norm Sloan's Wolfpack, improving its record to 14-5, scored 14 unanswered points after Citadel scored the first two points of the game. N.C. State increased its lead to 29-15 in the last six minutes of the first half.

Les Robinson's Bulldogs, who fell to 10-9, turned the ball over nine times in the first half and fell farther behind when the Wolfpack, led by Austin's 10 first-half points, shot 55 percent over the first 30 minutes. The Bulldogs, who have lost six straight games, hit on just 40 percent of their shots in the first half.

N. C. State, which did not turn the ball over in the first half, committed three in the first seven minutes of the second half. The turnovers and poor shooting by the Wolfpack over that stretch kept the outmanned Bulldogs within 12 points.

But the Wolfpack hit on six straight shots to open the lead to 18 points, and eventually canned nine of 10 shots in one stretch to open their largest lead, a 51-27 margin, with 2:11 remaining.

Hawkeye Whitney was the only other Wolfpack player in double figures with 10 points. Mark Cartwright had 11 points for Citadel.

Wood Paces Carolina Win

By JERRY MITCHELL

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — Al Wood scored 20 points as 11th-ranked North Carolina opened a wide lead and downed Furman 75-63 and Clyde Austin scored 14 points to lead North Carolina State to an easy 57-35 win over the Citadel Saturday in the North-South doubleheader.

North Carolina took an early nine-point lead, but Furman pulled to within six at the half, at 36-30, and knotted the score at 38-all three minutes into the second half.

But North Carolina coach Dean Smith called a timeout, and his Tar Heels, forcing Furman out of its zone defense, outscored the Paladins 18-6 over the next eight minutes to take a 56-44 lead. The Tar Heels were never in trouble the rest of the way.

Wood scored 10 points in the first half and 10 in the second period, even though he picked up his fourth foul with 12 minutes to play.

Senior John Virgil scored 12 points while Mike O'Koren and substitute Mike Pepper added 11 points for North Carolina, now 15-4 on the season. O'Koren grabbed nine rebounds and North Carolina took a 42-30 rebounding edge in the game.

Jonathan Moore paced Furman with 19 points. He scored 16 in the first half but failed to score in the first 18 minutes of the second half. Mel Daniel had 14 for the Paladins and Rick McKinney scored eight and had eight rebounds.

The loss dropped Furman to 16-6 overall, but the Paladins lead the Southern Conference with an 11-1 mark and can wrap up the regular season championship with another conference victory.

North Carolina guard Dave Colescott scored four points in the first half, but bruised an already-injured knee and sat out the second half.

Virgil scored six of his points in the second half spurt, in which the Paladins picked up only two points in a four-minute spread on a basket by Dale Crowe.

North Carolina, leading 60-48, went into its four-corner, slow down offense with six minutes to play and opened an 18-point lead, at 70-52, mostly on free throws.

Edwards Holds Crosby

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — David Edwards scrambled and struggled to a par 72 that gave him the third-round lead in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am golf tournament, but comeback-minded Jack Nicklaus moved into contention with a sparkling exhibition of old-time form.

Edwards, a 24-year-old former national collegiate champion now in his second year of PGA Tour activity, sports a 54-hole total of 208, eight shots under par for one trip over each of three Monterey Peninsula courses. He seeks his first tour victory.

But it was Nicklaus, generally regarded as the greatest player the ancient game ever has known, who generated the excitement with the huge galleries along the cliffs and crags overlooking Carmel Bay.

Starting the warm, sunny day nine shots back, Nicklaus, determined to rebound from the worst season he's ever endured, subdued Pebble Beach with a no-bogey, 6-under-par 66 that put him within three strokes of the lead at 211.

"I played Pebble Beach. It's a place I love," was Jack's explanation. "I felt that if I had a round in the 60's today, another good round tomorrow could win."

And, despite a horrendous 76 in Friday's second round, he's in position. Only three men — the youthful Edwards, Larry Nelson and Gil Morgan — lead him going into Sunday's final round.

Nelson and Morgan were tied for second at 210, two off the pace. Nelson, a two-time winner last year, shot a 70 and Morgan had a 71. They played in relative solitude — Nelson at Spyglass Hill and Morgan at Cypress Point — while Nicklaus and Edwards, former President Gerald Ford and an host of show business celebrities were before the national television cameras at Pebble Beach.

The cameras, however, didn't catch the former President when his fourth shot on the second hole flew the green, struck a male spectator and sent him looking for medical aid with a bloody cut on his head.

Ford served as the amateur partner of Arnold Palmer, who had a 77. The former President helped the team score by three strokes, but they won't make the cut for the last round Sunday.

The unique format for this old tournament calls for the two-man teams of one pro and one amateur to play a round over each of three courses before the final round at Pebble Beach.

Tom Kite, who had shared the lead through the first two rounds, blew to a fat 77 at Pebble and fell back to 213, five strokes back.

Tom Watson, the outstanding player in the game for the past three seasons and a winner last week in San Diego, shot 73 at Pebble Beach and was seven strokes off the pace at 215.

Edwards, who once caddied on the Tour for his older brother Danny, birdied three of his first four holes and appeared on the way to a rout. But he double-bogeyed the fifth, hitting a bunker and eventually three-putting, and made the turn one under par for the day.

On the back, he missed six of the nine greens but saved par on all but the last one, taking a bogey-6 there.

Nicklaus, now 40 and attempting to rebound from the only non-winning season of his unmatched career, played with the authority that helped him amass a record 15 major professional titles.

"I played well. I made very few mistakes," said Nicklaus, who has won five times at Pebble Beach. He missed only two greens and didn't have a bogey.

He birdied three of the four par-5 holes, missing on the high side on the 18th.

"I know that putt doesn't break, but I can't make myself believe it," he said.

He birdied the second from 12 feet and hit a sand wedge to two feet on the next. He scored from 20 feet on the seventh and from 15 on the 12th. He chipped to 18 inches on the par-5 14th, then got his sixth birdie of the day with a 9-iron to eight feet on the 16th.

Lady Pirates Top Radford

East Carolina University, led by Elizabeth Jackson and Cindy Rogers, captured a close gymnastics victory over Radford College Saturday in Minges Coliseum.

The Lady Pirates completed the afternoon's work with a 115.2 score, while Radford was two points back at 113.2.

"It is really nice to win over a team like Radford. We'll have to face them again in the regionals. They didn't do a real good job against us, however, and we know that they are a really good team," Coach Jon Rose said.

"We're getting it together now, but I still think that we're capable of being over 118 points if we start hitting it like we should," he added.

Jackson tied for first in the floor exercises and placed in three other events. That helped her to finish second in the all-around competition.

Jackson tied with Radford's Britta White for first place in the floor exercises, scoring 8.05. Rogers placed second in the event with a 7.95 score, while Annie Loeschke was fifth at 7.7 for the Pirates.

Rogers took first place in the balance beam, scoring 7.45, while Jackson was second at 7.25. Rogers also finished second in the uneven bars at 7.05, with Jackson third at 7.0. Radford's Cindy Shockley was first with 7.65.

In the vaulting, White won for Radford, scoring 7.9. Kim Lowe placed fourth for the Pirates with 7.35, while Jackson was sixth at 7.25.

Shockley was the all-around winner for Radford with a score of 30.85, while Jackson finished second with 29.6. Susan McKnight was fourth for the Pirates with 27.85.

Now 4-5, the Pirates travel to North Carolina on Wednesday.

Jaguars Take ECC Mat Title

HOLLYWOOD — Farmville Central's wrestlers trailed throughout the afternoon until the final match of the day, then pulled out a 39-34 victory over D.H. Conley to win the Eastern Carolina Conference championship. The victory closed out the regular season for the Vikings, giving them their first unbeaten season, 13-0. Conley, the defending champion, finished with a 10-5 overall record.

Conley took the lead in the match with a pin in the first weight class, and steadily pulled away until the middle weights were reached. Then, after Farmville's second win of the day, three forfeits over the next five weight classes, coupled with splits in the other two, brought Farmville on as they closed to within one point going into the heavyweight class. In that, Ronnie Locust captured a quick pin to give the match, and the title to the Jaguars.

Both teams enter sectional tournament competition next week.

Duke Captures Swim Meet Over Pirates

"Ted Nieman and Bill Fehling were double winners for us," Coach Ray Scharf of the Pirates said. "They swam well, but the rest of the team didn't put the effort into it they should have. After Duke took the opening relay, it was a struggle. A few did well in closing the gap, but they'll have to get their stuff together for the Carolina meet (Monday at 7 p.m. in Minges Natatorium)."

The women were down from the start and couldn't work against the stronger Blue Devil women.

"Another thing that hurts us is having to give up so many points in the diving," Scharf said. "We just don't have any divers any more."

The East Carolina women, despite being beaten lopsidedly, did meet one AIAW qualifying time, swimming home in the 400 medley relay in 4:16.69.

FARMVILLE— Why do you think they call them Jaguars anyway?

Because those rascals love to run. And run they did Friday night as the host Farmville Central unit chased the century mark while the visiting no-place-to-hide Hawks of North Lenoir could only watch as Coach Mike Terrell's home team clipped the Hawks, 97-67.

In the first game of the Eastern Carolina Conference doubleheader, the Lady Jaguars suffered through a dismal shooting night as the Lady Hawks of North Lenoir fought to take a come-from-behind 57-54 win, knocking Farmville Central out of a tie for third place.

Terrell, who saw his team average more than three points a minute during the contest, was pleased, to say the least, about his squad's performance. "This was our best game this season," he remarked. "We're an unselfish team and tonight we hit the open man for easy layups. We simply beat them (North Lenoir) up and down the court. This was a heck of a game," he concluded.

Of course, if you're going to have a good game, it's helpful to have a commendable shooting night, which is just what the Jaguars had. They connected on 42 of 86 field goals for a 49 percent average while sinking 81 percent of their free throws, 13 of 16.

The first frame should have served as an omen for the visitors when Farmville jumped out to 14-0 lead as North Lenoir started the game with three regulars on the bench. The Hawks pulled to within eight, at 21-13, at the end of the initial quarter.

North Lenoir closed the gap to 21-15, after trailing 21-5, before the Jaguars oiled their express and turned on a 9-2 spurt that built their lead back to 13 at 30-17. The half ended with the home team taking a 39-23 dressing room advantage.

Farmville continued to pull away from the cold-shooting Hawks in the third frame as the Jaguars built a 20-point lead, at 58-38, with 3:05 remaining in the stanza. North Lenoir found the hoop nine times in 22 attempts during the third quarter as the FC unit grabbed a 23-point, 68-45 lead heading into the final frame.

A second straight 29-point quarter saw the Jaguars come to within three points of the 100-point game. Farmville Central outscored the Hawks 11-1, early in the fourth period to take a 79-46 cushion and began to smell the century mark as the Jaguars increased that margin to 37, at 87-50. During the final three minutes of the game, the visitors went into a delay game, in an effort to prevent the Jags from scoring 100. It worked, but Farmville felt quite satisfied with the final 30-point victory, 97-67.

Farmville placed four players in double figures for the game, with a pair of those finishing in the 20's. Mike Tyson paced the high-scoring squad with 26 points and was followed closely by Mike Horne, who poured in 23. Dennis Pitt netted 19 and Donald Reid contributed 17 as the quartet combined for 79 points. North Lenoir's offensive attack was centered around Mike White and Isaac Heath, who garnered 16 and 15 points, respectively. Eugene Connor answered with 13 while Kevin Battle totaled 11 for the Hawks.

In the girls game, the Lady Jaguars fumbled an early 10-2 first period lead as the Lady Hawks grabbed a 19-18 lead in the second frame and were never headed.

For Coach Hilda Worthington, it was the same story for the third straight game. " For the last three games, we haven't been shooting well," she said. "I think tonight the reason was evident. We just didn't get ready. Plus, we got into bad foul trouble early in the game," she explained.

That foul problem came back later in the game to haunt the Lady Jaguars as they lost three of their starters in the fourth period.

The host unit fired in the first six points of the contest, and went on to take a 10-2 lead in that quarter, before North Lenoir fought back to close the gap at one, 18-17, as the first frame came to an end.

The Lady Hawks, able to work the ball inside with ease, scored the first bucket of the second quarter and took a lead they would never relinquish. The half ended with North Lenoir holding its biggest lead of the first-half, five, at 30-25.

In the third frame, North Lenoir began to open up the lead, taking a nine-point advantage at 38-29, and then moved up by 12, at 41-29, with 3:54 remaining in the period. Farmville Central then put together a 6-2 spree to end the quarter behind by seven, 42-35.

The Lady Jaguars began to apply the pressure to the leaders in the final period, making the Lady Hawks sink free throws to stay on top. North Lenoir went to the charity stripe 17 times in the final stanza, making nine of the free throws, while connecting on only three field goals. Farmville, meanwhile, was making a run at the visitors, coming within three, two and one point, but were unable to take the lead.

Sharp-shooting North Lenoir point guard Sharon Gillette led all scorers in the contest with 18 points, and was joined in double digits by teammate Gwen Norville, who contibuted 14. Three players finished in double figures for FC, with Pam Moye leading the pack with 13. Diana Gordon, with 12, and Etta Gorham, with 10, rounded out the Lady Jaguar scoring.

NBA Leaders Okay New Pact

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Basketball Association's Board of Governors reached agreement with the executive committee of the Players Association on a new three-year contract Saturday.

The Board also voted to accept the expansion committee's recommendation to place a franchise in Dallas, but under significantly different terms.

The new working agreement, which will be voted on by the Players Association on Monday, will extend through the 1981-82 season.

Commissioner Larry O'Brien said the new contract would resolve the dispute concerning cable television revenues; provide for increases in minimum salary, per diem expenses and playoff money; limit the extent of deferred compensations which may be included in contracts, and in the final year raise the size of rosters from 11 men to 12 and prohibit no-trade clauses in contracts.

Both O'Brien and Larry Fleisher, executive director of the Players Association, declined to give details on the contract until Monday's players meeting. But both left no doubt as to how they felt.

"This is the product of prolonged good-faith bargaining," said O'Brien. "I am proud that there was never any rancor expressed by either side."

"I will certainly recommend acceptance," said Fleisher. "This proposal is the product of hard negotiations, and we think it's a major step forward."

The proposal to place the NBA's 23rd franchise in Dallas was accepted by an 18-3-1 vote following lengthy debate that produced some new conditions for the prospective owners.

While the proposed purchase price remains $12 million, the Dallas group headed by Norm Sonju, former president of the NBA Buffalo Braves, has been asked to come up with a down payment of $6 million, instead of $3.5 million.

The remaining money would be paid over five years, with interest, instead of six years, as originally proposed.

The other change involves the expansion draft to stock the Dallas team. The 22 existing clubs would be permitted to protect eight players each, instead of seven, and Dallas would pick one player from each.

The Dallas group has been given 30 days to respond as to whether these terms are satisfactory.

Sonju said that while he was disappointed at the new terms, he was optimistic they would be met."

"The bottom line," said Sonju, "is that Dallas has been approved and there's no further vote needed. That's a big step for us. But from a financial standpoint, we'll now have to think it over. I have 24 partners all over the world. We'll have to consider the economics for each person."

Several NBA governors, including Jerry Buss of Los Angeles, Harry Mangurian of Boston, Mike Burke of New York and Bill Wirtz of Chicago, were opposed to admitting Dallas because of the low down payment in the original proposal. They were among eight club executives who met Saturday night in Buss' hotel suite to discuss their opposition.

"The $12 million is a joke," said Mangurian. "It's a fictitious price, and we all know it."

"It makes no economic sense to participate in expansion," said Buss, who analyzed the figures and said the original proposal would net each of the 22 existing NBA teams only $26,000 per year.

Raising the up-front money to $6 million apparently was enough to overcome those objections.

A three-quarters majority, or 17 yes votes, was needed for approval. Sources say New York, Chicago and Seattle voted against the move and Cleveland, which is in the process of being sold, abstained.

The Dallas group has until March 3 to notify the NBA if it finds the new terms acceptable.

The NBA's agreement with the Players Association expired last summer, and the players have been competing this season without a contract.

Three players had filed suit through the Players Association seeking to obtain shares of the rapidly increasing revenues from cable TV. The league had been adamant about refusing to give up this money.

The NBA had also made a major pitch to obtain standardized language in future player contracts, and to limit the extent of long-term financial commitments that contracts could contain.

To obtain these points, the league made financial concessions in terms of salary, per diem and playoff money, and also agreed to go to 12-man rosters in the 1981-82 season.

On the other hand, the Players Association agreed to drop no-trade clauses from future contracts. Currently, 10 players have such clauses, Fleisher said.

On another labor front, Richie Phillips, legal counsel to the National Association of Basketball Referees, called on the league to reinstate the three-man officiating system for this spring's playoffs. The NBA used three officials on an experimental basis last year but went back to two men this season because of financial considerations.

The NBA's contract with the referees' union expires following this season, and Phillips said a return to three officials would be a major demand in the next negotiations. "We will not sign a contract for the 1980-81 season and beyond without the three-referee system being brought back," he said.

In another action, the NBA formalized its working arrangement with the minor league Continental Basketball Association. The NBA will pay the CBA $3,000 each time one of its clubs signs a player from the minor league.

It was during the third quarter that the dam broke for Rose. Five Lady Bruins scratched in the third period as the Rampettes could only watch as Beddingfield tallied 24 points, compared to Rose's eight, giving Tommy Hawkins' hosts a 44-26 third stanza lead.

The fourth quarter served as an appropriate coup de grace for Rose as Beddingfield basketed 22 points while the Rampettes were struggling to hit 10, enabling the Lady Bruins to take the final 30-point margin of victory, 66-36.

Bruin Gloria Burks led all scorers in the contest with 26 points and was joined in double digits by her teammate Sylvia Hill, who contributed 14. Rose's Sharon Williams was the only visitor to hit in double figures, responding with 14 points.

Neinas Takes CFA Position

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Charles M. Neinas, as expected, announced Saturday he is resigning as commissioner of the Big Eight Conference to become the first executive director of the College Football Association.

"Some people have told me this is a professional gamble," Neinas told a news conference at Big Eight headquarters. "I look at it as a professional challenge."

Neinas and Father Edmund P. Joyce of Notre Dame, a CFA board member, emphasized the three-year-old organization does not expect to bolt the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

"That would be the furthest thing from my mind," said the Rev. Joyce, executive vice president of Notre Dame. "We should not be viewed as an organization on the verge of revolt."

Neinas, who more than anyone else was instrumental in setting up the CFA and keeping it going, becomes the organization's first full time employee. He said his resignation from the Big Eight will be effective April 1.

"I will set up a CFA headquarters in Kansas City," he said. "As far as a staff, you're looking at him. For the time being it will just be me and a secretary."

Organized three years ago, the CFA is composed of every major football conference and independent except the Big 10 and Pac-10, about 60 members. Essentially, CFA schools banded together as a result of the NCAA's failure to restructure its Division I voting membership.

Presently there are 139 football-playing members in Division I-A, the top division, giving the smaller programs a decided voting majority.

Two other games were to have been played Saturday night: Rose at Beddingfield and Aurora at Jamesville.

Getting There Is None Of Fun

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — Let's assume you are the proud possessor of one or more of the 550,000 tickets available for the Winter Olympics.

Your ticket will gain you entrance to Lake Placid itself, but how are you going to get there?

If you intend to drive, forget it.

Only three highways — all two-lane roads — lead into the tiny Adirondack village. They will be open only to official vehicles and residents with special permits, about 6,000 vehicles in all.

The closest you can get to Lake Placid is 10 miles, where you could park your car in a designated lot and take a shuttle bus into the village or to the venue sites. Vehicle checkpoints will be set up on the roads at the edge of the primary area and only authorized vehicles will be let through.

The Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee has arranged for 200 buses to shuttle spectators from the outlying parking lots to the events and back.

The lots, including the main one at the Keene airport, are for one-day only parking and cars will be towed away overnight. If you have a friend in Lake Placid and were able to get a special off-street guest parking ticket, you can only enter the village between midnight and 6 a.m.

More than 15 travelers aid emergency shelters will be in operation 24 hours a day in the Adirondack area.

"Our major concern will be the people who, for unexpected reasons, are stranded out in sub-zero weather," said program coordinator Jeffrey Kelly. "The danger of being exposed to severe cold and the problems that can result are all too real."

If you go by train, an Albany-Montreal Amtrack line has two access points to Lake Placid, at Westport and Plattsburgh, about an hour away. From there you take a bus to complete the journey.

Getting there by air isn't easy. The Lake Placid airport will be closed. The nearest air strip is 18 miles away at the Adirondack Airport north of Saranac Lake, where, again, you take a bus into town.

If you purchased your ticket through a travel agency, you probably signed up for a tour package. The names and numbers of the tour operators are available through the Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee (518-653-4261) or any travel agent.

The packages range from the simple one-day forays to multiple-night deals involving not only bus transportation and tickets but meals and accommodations as well.

For example, Leprechaun Lines of Newburgh, N.Y., offers a one-day plan from $100 to $130. It includes tickets to one indoor and one outdoor event, refreshments and transportation. Buses leave from the mid-state town 6½ hours before the morning event (between 3 and 5 a.m), and return between 9 p.m. and 2 a.m.

Cape Tours of Dennisport, Mass., offers three and four night packages. They include hotel accommodations in Lake George (two hours from Lake Placid); tickets to two events a day; three meals per day, and transportation to the events. Based on double occupancy, the prices range from $635 for a three-day package to $825 for a four-day deal.

If money is no object, the Official Executive Transportation Company of the Olympics, Fugazy International, has lots of limousines with special permits and chauffeurs available — for $2,500 to $3,000 a week.

Albemarle Academy Rolls Past Martin

Albemarle's girls used the foul line to take a 45-35 win over the Lady Pioneers.

In the boys' game, Albemarle grabbed an early lead and sped out to a 14-8 lead in the first quarter. They extended that to 29-16 by the end of the first period and had all they would need.

Albemarle upped its lead to 39-20 in the third frame and outscored the Pioneers, 16-8, in the final quarter.

Smithson led the Albemarle scoring with 16, while Saunderlin and Abernathy each had 10. No one hit double figures for Martin.

The Martin and Albemarle girls played it even in the first period, each scoring six points. Albemarle inched into a 17-16 lead at the half. Albemarle then cut another point off that in the third frame, leading 28-26. Albemarle then outraced Martin in the final quarter, 17-9.

Kitty Cartwright led the Albemarle scoring with 20 points, while Tammy Lane added 12 and Angie Godfrey had 11.

McGinnis Returns To His First Pro Club

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — George McGinnis' long and controversial odyssey through professional basketball has come full circle, back to his hometown and the team he left for greater glory five years ago.

McGinnis, 29, returned to the Indiana Pacers on Friday in a trade with the Denver Nuggets. He is expected to play on Tuesday against the Philadelphia 76ers, the team with which he signed in 1975.

"I'm feeling great," said the 6-foot-8 forward Friday night as he prepared to leave Denver. "I'm glad to get out of here and be coming home. Without question, that's the best place for me.

"My problem has been that I haven't had a 100 percent effort behind me in the organization," he said of his 4½-year career in the National Basketball Association. "It's never been the case since I left Indiana before, especially not here (in Denver)."

The Pacers reacquired McGinnis in exchange for reserve forward Alex English and a first-round pick in the 1980 NBA draft. The draft pick is the one Indiana acquired from Boston in an earlier trade for Earl Tatum, making it one of the later picks on the first round.

McGinnis starred for Indiana in the old American Basketball Association, averaging 24.8 points per game for four seasons. He moved to Philadelphia of the NBA in 1975 and spent three years with the 76ers before being traded to Denver in exchange for Bobby Jones and Ralph Simpson in 1978. He averaged 22.6 points per game last year, but this season slumped to a 15.6 average.

"Everything has been predicated on my scoring 30 points and getting 30 rebounds," McGinnis said. "Well, I just can't do that every night. The one thing I've learned since I left Indiana was that there are other parts of the game that are just as important.

"Once I get there, once I get involved, once those guys get an opportunity to play with me, I'll show them I'm out to help them win ball games. All I'm asking is that people give me time. I'll play, I'll prove my point."

Tait Taking Post At Virginia Tech

The announcement was made by Bill Dooley, Tech's director of athletics and a close friend of Tait, who said Tait will assume his new position this month.

Quick Look At U.S. Teams

By FRED McMANE
UPI Sports Writer

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — When the world's largest winter carnival — the XIII Winter Olympics — is held here next month the U.S. is expected to field its strongest squad in the 56-year history of the event.

With more than 1,400 athletes from 38 countries scheduled to participate in nine sports Feb. 12-24, the U.S. will enter the largest contingent of any country — 124 — and is hopeful of bettering its previous best total of 12 medals won at the 1932 Olympics.

Unlike the Summer Games scheduled for Moscow in July, there is no political turmoil threatening the first Winter Olympics held in the United States since 1960. But there could be a problem of a different nature — a lack of snow.

It usually snows like the dickens during January and February, but as of the middle of January the snowfall for the entire Adirondack region was virtually non-existent. Oddly, the last time the Olympics was held in Lake Placid in 1932 it didn't snow either and muddy conditions presented a real headache.

"In order for us to be awarded the Games this time, we had to prove to the International Olympic Committee that we had sufficient snow and ice making equipment to avoid what happened in 1932," said a spokesman for the Lake Placid Olympic Committee.

"We have the most modern snow and ice making equipment on all the skiing sites with the exception of the cross-country and biathlon courses, but we've been making snow for those, trucking it in and laying it at about the rate of one-half mile a day.

"They have had to move the training for the cross-country and biathlon to Canada, but we will be able to hold all the events here even if it doesn't snow. There are no provisions in IOC rules to move any events elsewhere. I'm confident it will snow. I sure hope so. It looks better than the artificial kind."

Although the U.S. is not known for its prowess in winter sports other than figure skating, American athletes have trained diligently for the Games and are prepared to offer stiff competition in virtually all the events.

Here's a capsule look at the U.S. chances in each sport and the countries which will offer the stiffest competiton for the gold medal.

Figure Skating — Naturally, the best U.S. showing is expected to come in this event. The U.S. squad is loaded with talent and, for the first time since 1960, could win as many as two gold medals. Linda Fratianne, 19, has won the women's world crown two of the last three years and Charles Tickner took the men's championship in 1978. Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner also are candidates for the gold medal in the pairs competition, but they will be hard-pressed by the Soviet Union — dominant in this event over the years.

Hockey — The Soviet Union, which has won the world and Olympic championships 16 times since 1964, and Czechoslovakia, a three-time world titlist, are the teams to beat for the gold medal. The U.S. squad, coached by Minnesota's Herb Brooks, doesn't appear to be strong enough to win a gold medal but a silver or a bronze is a strong possibility.

"For us, I think we'll have to be more lucky than good," says Brooks. "We'll have to get the goalkeeping and we'll have to be injury-free at the time. Then, we have to get a few bounces. But, we're having a good year and we're a good hockey team. Some people say this is the best Olympic team since 1960 when we won the gold medal.

"That was 20 years ago. The Europeans have made phenomenal improvement in their game. The Americans have improved, but we haven't improved even close to what the Europeans have. So, it's a different ball game. A bronze this year would be like a gold medal in 1960. And a gold this year would be like a double gold."

Speedskating — All in the Family. That might be the subtitle for the speedskating event. The U.S. brother-sister act of Eric and Beth Heiden are the favorites for the gold medals and the U.S. husband-wife team of Peter and Leah Mueller should also win medals. Eric and Beth are so good they could win nine gold medals between them.

"I think that if there are people out there who still haven't heard of the Heidens come Olympics time, they'll be shocked at just how good they are," says speed skating coach Dianne Holum. "To be blunt about it — there's no one better."

Alpine Skiing — The U.S. is expected to field its strongest alpine team in many years, but it's doubtful it can beat out the powerful Austrians for the gold medal. Austria's Peter Wirnsberger and Annemarie Moser-Proell are the class of their field. The U.S. is pinning its hopes for a medal on Phil Mahre in the men's event and Cindy Nelson, a bronze medalist in 1976, in the women's competition.

Bobsledding — American bobsledders haven't won a medal since 1956, and, alas, their hopes for a medal are dim this time, too. However, the U.S. team is hopeful of finishing among the top 10. Switzerland and East Germany are the favorites in the two-man and four-man runs.

Luge — This is perhaps the most dangerous sport in the Winter Olympics and one which is practically foreign to U.S. athletes. A luge is a one-man sled in which the rider has to be on his or her back, feet forward, with one hand holding onto a steering strap. The rider then races down an icy, twisting 1,000-meter path — known as a bahn — without the aid of a seat belt or breaks.

"These people must have their heads on straight — or else," says U.S. luge manager Jim Murray. "Or else, I'm afraid to say they won't have any heads at all."

Since there are fewer than 200 lugers in the U.S., our chances of getting a medal in this event are slim. East Germany rates as the favorite for the gold medal.

Ski Jumping — The U.S. is counting on Jim Denney, the oldest of three jumping brothers, to produce America's first medal ever in this event. Denney, perhaps the best jumper ever produced by the U.S., established himself as a medal threat by winning the 70-meter competition in the Drug Testing Computerized

By JENNY KELLNER
UPI Sports Writer

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — A sophisticated and computerized system capable of detecting drugs taken by athletes in amounts as low as one-trillionth of a gram will be used at the Lake Pacid Winter Olympics in February.

The National Institute for Scientific Research of Montreal will direct the gas chromatographs and other analytical systems used to detect any of the five different classes of substances that have been declared illegal by the International Olympic Committee.

"The doping control programming as it is now set up is probably the most elaborate in the history of the Olympic Games," said Dr. Robert Dugal of the Institute. "A gas chromatograph allows for the separation of natural constituents from drugs which may be present and for their detection as they emerge from the instrument by computer printouts.

"Human error is for all intents and purposes eliminated by the use of computerized automatic introduction of samples into the instrument."

Testing for drugs for the Olympics will take place randomly during preliminary training and thereafter during the Games from Feb. 13-24. The gold, silver bronze and fourth-place finishers in each individual event will be tested, along with as many as two others randomly selected directly after the event.

In team sports, such as ice hockey, the IOC will select two players, possibly more, from each team for testing.

"Of course, if a rookie scores six goals against the Russians, he would immediately come under suspicion and be tested," said William Shuler of the LPOOC.

Shuler explained that those selected for testing would be handed a green card directing them to report to the collecting station immediately after their event, where they will be searched and then asked to give a sample of urine.

"The reason for search is that in Mexico in 1968, there was an athlete who had a false bladder taped under his arm," said Shuler.

Feeding All Difficult Task

By FRED McMANE and JENNY KELLNER
UPI Sports Writers

During the two-week period of the Winter Olympics, the Automatic Retailers of America (ARA) will shop for, cook for and feed 7,000 people daily, including athletes, sports officials, members of the press and Olympic support personnel.

"We're talking about feeding 7,000 people three times a day, that's 21,000 meals a day," said John Scanlan, Olympic project manager for ARA.

And while it doesn't seem likely that the expected 40,000 a day visitors will starve, the emphasis in the 43 other restaurants, will be on quantity, not quality.

While there also will be concession stands at each of the venue sites selling hot dogs, sandwiches, soft drinks, cocoa and coffee, for more substantial fare the tourist will have to be prepared for long lines and short orders.

To feed the Olympic community alone, ARA has hired 700 employees.

The biggest layout will be at the the Olympic Village where 1,400 athletes from 38 nations will be housed. Then there is the press center, the broadcast center, the security center (where two cooking facilities will be set up) and the box lunch center.

At Olympic Village, in two dining rooms, each served by two cafeteria lines, dinner will be served both at noon and in the evening. Each day there will be five diversified entrees.

"Any country that asks for something specific can get it," says Scanlan, "but our past experience has shown a high acceptability of American foods among other countries."

"One day's food for the box lunches alone will weigh 14 tons," said Scanlan.

As for the visitors, some restaurants in the area, such as Jimmy's and Frederick's, will close their doors to the public, having been contracted by private groups. Others such as the Alpine Cellar and Maxwell's will operate on a first-come, first-serve basis and serve a limited menu with food that can be prepared quickly.

"We have no idea what to expect," said Michael Lamitie of Maxwell's. "We're preparing to serve anywhere from 3,000 to 7,000 meals a day. We normally serve 1,500 meals. The cost? We're at least doubling our prices..."

Another restaurant, the Woodshed, which seats about 100 people, has established a reservation-only policy with a $5 deposit for a $30 prix-fixe dinner.

"We acknowledge the reservations by mail and we're requiring people to be here 15 minutes before seating time," said the owner, Bob Gerwillager. "We'll have five seatings for lunch and four seatings for dinner."

"After 11 p.m., until closing time, which is 4 a.m., we'll have a late-night sandwich menu. You don't need a reservation for that — if we have room, you can eat. If we don't, you can't."

Lake Placid Police Face Tough Period

By FRED McMANE
UPI Sports Writer

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — "I don't know where they're all going to go," said H.D. Pratt, putting his hands over his face, shaking his head slowly.

He is the chief of Lake Placid's 14-man police force, responsible mainly for traffic control when up to 40,000 people descend on this small village for the Winter Olympics.

Only certain cars will be allowed in the village in daytime. From 6 p.m. until midnight the main street will be used exclusively as a pedestrian mall. Delivery trucks will be allowed in the village only after midnight.

About 900 officers have been recruited from all over the state for the two-week period. Giangualano's department has worked closely with 12 federal agencies, including the FBI and the CIA, and 15 state agencies to formulate an intricate security system.

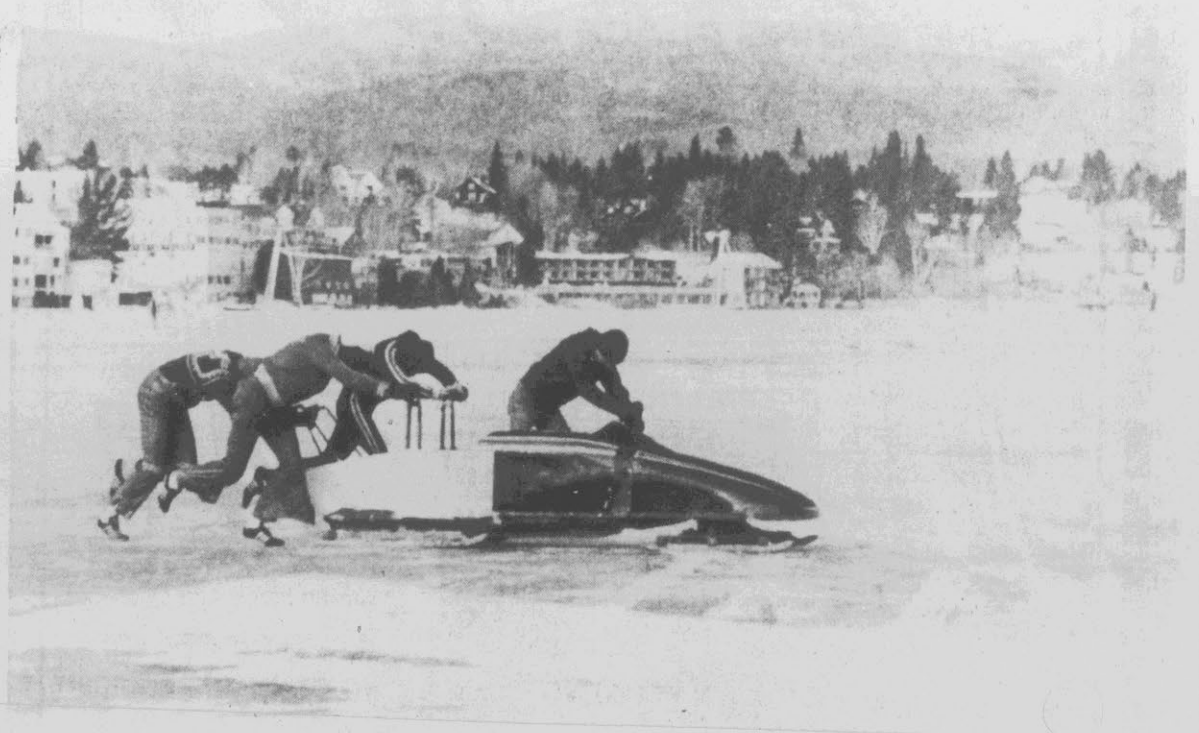

Because so many heads-of-state, including President Carter, plan to attend a special "VIP Control" detachment has been formulated.

Security will be especially tight at the Olympic Village.

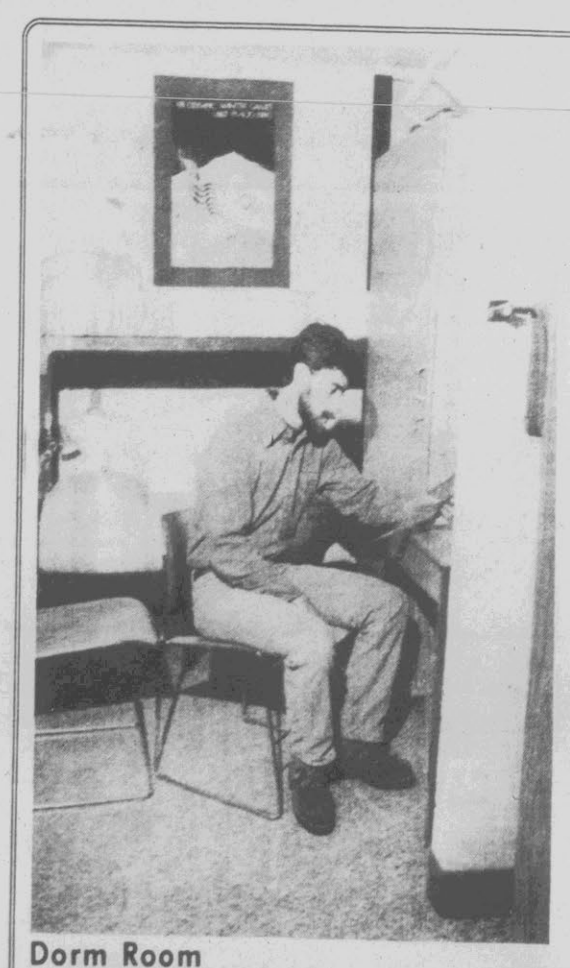

"All journalists or other people entering the Village will wear name tags and there will be only one entrance," said Giangualano.

"There will be a dual lock gate. Once a car goes through the first gate it will close and the car and the driver and any passengers will be searched. Only after they're checked out will the second gate open and allow them to enter the Village area."

Dorm Space At Premium

UPI Sports Writer

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — Officials of the Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee enthusiastically compare it to a college dormitory. But a few residents formed a group named S.T.O.P. (Stop the Olympic Prison).

To complicate things further, several Mohawk Indians now claim the land it is built on belongs to them.

The athletes' village for the 1980 Winter Olympics is about seven miles from Lake Placid. Set on 36 acres, it contains 11 permanent buildings, including five housing units. After the Games, the $27 million facility will be turned into a medium-security prison.

Outside, the five housing units resemble dorms. They are built of cream painted cinder blocks. The sleeping quarters in each building rim a colorful central lounge and recreation area which will have a color television and a complete stereo system.

The more than 540 rooms each measure 13 feet by 9 feet. With only two dressers, a washstand and bunk bed in each, space already is at a premium. Add two athletes complete with arctic gear and athletic equipment.

Because the Olympics will draw more than 1,400 athletes, additional housing is being provided in mobile homes. The overall facility, with 1,230 bedrooms, can provide sleeping quarters for up to 2,100 people.

The Village provides the athletes with a disco, a library, live theater, a movie theater, a bank, a post office, two dining rooms, a game room (with an oil artist who will do portraits in 20 minutes), a weight room, religious services, an international snack bar — and 15 mobile vans containing 165 clothes dryers to insure dry clothing.

Michele Wynn, in charge of social programs, has booked such performers as Dionne Warwicke, the Spinners, Harry Chapin and Doctor Hook for the live theater.

Dash Down Bobsled Run 'Super;' But Writer Passes Up 2nd Trip

By MARK D. FRANK

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPI) — The advice from our driver was: "Hold on to the ropes — those things with the knobs at the end of them — and lean with the sled. Don't fight the sled and enjoy the ride.

"And if you let go of the ropes," he warned, "don't try to retrieve them. Just lean forward and you'll be okay."

Easy for Al Mason to say — he's been driving bobsleds for New York State's Conservation Department for more than 20 years.

But this was the Mt. Van Hoevenberg refrigerated bobsled run, site of next month's Winter Olympics competition; site of more than 40 accidents this winter.

Mason turned around. "You don't have to hold on THAT hard," he told me.

We would travel down the half-mile portion of the mile-long course at "only between 40 and 45 miles-per-hour," about 30-miles-an-hour slower than the athletes, he said.

I sat in the second position of the four-man rickety red sled used in the 1932 Lake Placid Games, an orange crash helmet on my head. I couldn't stop thinking about those 40 accidents, which sent more than 20 world-class bobsledders to Lake Placid hospitals.

"What are we waiting for?" I asked.

I gulped. We were on our way.

We sped along the narrow straightaway. We were out of the "Little S" curve quickly. That wasn't so bad. Curve 12 was completed without even batting at eyelash.

Then, "Get ready for Zig Zag!"

Zig is a 60-degree left run, 165 feet long, followed immediately by Zag, a 60-degree right turn, 170 feet long. Through the curve, the course drops 35 feet. This is where most of the accidents have occurred. It's been called the only one like it in the world.

We whipped and jerked around Zig Zag at more than 50 miles-per-hour. I thought my head would scrape the track.

Then it was over. We crossed the finish line — a 50-second thrill ride no amusement park could offer.

"Super ride," I shouted.

"You wanna try it again?" Mason asked.

Heels, Pack In Wins

In Friday night's Atlantic Coast Conference action, Dean Smith recorded hs 400th career coaching win as 11th-ranked North Carolina downed a stubborn bunch from The Citadel, 51-40. In the first game of the North-South Doubleheaders, North Carolina State blasted Furman, 76-56. The teams swith led opponents for Saturday night's games.

Furman was supposed to give the Wolfpack a run for its money Friday night, especially since they were hoping to gain two wins in the North-South to lay claim to a spot in the top 20. The Citadel, on the other hand, was to be easy prey for the Tar Heels, a sure bet for Smith's 400th win.

Nothing went as planned.

The Paladins were as cold as the 20-degree temperature outside the Charlotte Coliseum. They shot only 32 percent for the game on 20 of 62 shots. N.C. State raced to a 39-17 halftime advantage and never looked back for Furman to catch up.

Hawkeye Whitney scored 19 for the Wolfpack, now 13-5. Rich McKinney led Furman with 15. The Paladins are now 16-5.

Citadel's Bulldogs played a deliberate style of ball with the Tar Heels, and actually led by a 19-17 margin at intermission. But just when the game looked as though it would develop into a photo-finish, Al Wood slam-dunked North Carolina into a permanent lead at 43-37.

"I'm happy that this is our 14th win of the season," Smith said. "The other doesn't matter to me. That just means I'm old and we've played more games than a lot of people."

Then Smith took some pride in the fact that he's accomplished a feat that a coaching legend in another sport hadn't quite reached.

"Hey, I've won more games than (Alabama head football coach) Bear Bryant, but we've played a few more than he has," he said.

Plymouth Tops Tigers, 66-56

PLYMOUTH — Plymouth and Williamston battled Friday night to knock each other out of a share of first place in the Northeastern Conference, and it was the Vikings who came away with the victory, 66-56.

The defeat dropped the Williamston boys to 8-4 in league play, while Plymouth climbed to 9-3. Williamston's girls are now 9-3, while Plymouth is 5-7.

Plymouth jumped off to an early lead and built up a 14-9 edge over the Tigers in the first quarter. They continued to hold sway during the second quarter, rolling out to a 27-21 halftime lead.

The third period saw the Vikings put the Tigers away, outscoring them, 21-8, for a 48-29 margin. Williamston tried to rally, outhitting the Vikes, 27-18, but couldn't catch up.

Terry Bell led Plymouth with 23 points, while Larry Spencer had 13 and Danny James had 12. James Woolard paced Williamston with 20, while Edward Williams had 15.

In the girls' contest, Williamston doubled the score on Plymouth in the first period, 12-6, and went on to hold a 28-16 halftime lead. The Valkyries cut that back to 35-25 in the third frame, but Williamston outraced them to the wire, 17-8.

Title Bouts May Not Be Best On The Card

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Two world championship fights are on the card at Caesars Palace today, yet the best fight might well be between Thomas Hearns and Jim Richards.

Both Holmes and Gomez are considered outstanding favorites for thier bouts, which will be nationally televised by ABC in a card that starts at Caesars Palace Sports Pavilion at 12:15 p.m. PST.

Hearns might have some trouble but already looks forward to fighting Leonard, Cuevas or Roberto Duran, the former lightweight king who has now moved into the 147-pound class.

"Basically, I would like to fight anybody at the top," said Hearns, who is disappointed that his fight probably will not be nationally televised. With a 24-0 record, including 22 knockouts, he feels he's been cheated by television.

"I'm getting bad breaks and no good breaks as far as television goes," said the 6-foot-1 skinny fighter who hits like a heavyweight. He said he would rather meet Leonard or Cuevas than Duran because the latter, one of history's best lightweights, still hasn't won the welterweight title.

Only if both of the two title fights end in early rounds will Hearns be seen over television, and this bugs him.

"I wish people could see me the same way they see Leonard," he said.

Monetarily, the 21-year-old Hearns says he is doing very well but would rather be a champion than earn big money for his title shot.

"I rate the championship higher than the money. It would mean more to me. And if you have the championship, the money would come with no problem."

In the 1979 regular college-football season, Alabama permitted 11 opponents only 58 points, an average of 5.3 per game.

Hayes Leads NBA's Stars

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Twelve seasons in the pros, 12 times an all-star — it's a record of which Elvin Hayes is proud.

"Every player dreams of playing in an All-Star Game with the best players in basketball," said Hayes, the Washington Bullets forward who will be one of the reserves for the East team in today's 30th annual National Basketball Association all-star game.

"It's the stamp of approval for everyone, a real confidence builder," he added. "It shows the respect others have for your ability and indicates you're one of the best players in the league. It's not a matter of money, because players on the winning team only get $1,500. It's a matter of pride, of showing what you can do."

Although Hayes has not missed the All-Star team since entering the NBA in 1969, he still says, "Each year it's a big thrill."

But there's no time like the first time.

"It was like a dream," said Hayes, who represented the San Diego Rockets as a rookie in 1969. "The year before I was sitting in my college dorm at Houston watching the game on TV. I never had any idea I'd be playing in the game the next year."

Hayes was a starter in that all-star game, beating Hall of Famer Wilt Chamberlain for the honor. And the center he went up against was Bill Russell, another all-time great.

"It was just unbelievable," said Hayes. "The two players I had followed closer than any others when growing up were Chamberlain and Russell. Now Wilt was my teammate and I jumped center against Russell to start the game."

Actually, Hayes' confrontation with Russell began earlier.

"Bill and I had dinner the night before the game and I really had a chance to talk with him," said Hayes. "I was so awed that I still remember everything he ate. First it was clam chowder, followed by a big steak and then cheesecake for dessert. I watched everything he ordered and everything he did."

Russell was doing more than eating dinner.

"He told me, 'I'm only going to block one or two of your shots tomorrow," said Hayes. "He was already beginning his psyche job on me. I kept thinking, 'Is this going to be the one?' He really threw my game off."

Hayes, who scored 11 points in a losing effort in that first appearance, is especially excited about today's game. "It's a great thrill for me to be able to play before my hometown fans," he said.

Only three players have played more All-Star Games than Hayes — Chamberlain, John Havlicek and Bob Cousy, who were in 13 each. Though he's 34 years old, Hayes hopes to join that group next season.

Three rookies will be taking part of today's game — Los Angeles guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson for the West and Boston forward Larry Bird and New York center Bill Cartwright for the East. Johnson will be a starter, the first rookie to achieve that honor since Hayes.

Redmen Survive Scare By Rhode Island Club

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

You win some basketball games, you lose some...and some just drop in your lap.

St. John's 64-63 triumph over Rhode Island Friday night fell into the latter category, according to Redmen Coach Lou Carnesecca.

"We were very, very fortunate to come out with a win tonight," said Carnesecca, whose rolling, ninth-ranked Redmen won their 17th straight game and improved their record to a stately 19-1. "In all respects, this was a game that should have gone the other way.

"We didn't play particularly well. We didn't box out. And Rhode Island's a heck of a team. They have some great athletes."

The Rams led the Redmen by as many as six points in the late stages before St. John's rallied. Rhode Island had a chance to tie near the end, but Marc Upshaw missed the second of two foul shots with six seconds remaining.

"They did take us out of our offense early," said Rhode Island Coach Jack Kraft, "and we were taking some unnatural-type shots, Holy Ghosters, some long shots. But once we settled down we started to attack things pretty well. We were getting much better shots."

Reggie Carter scored 17 points and Wayne McKoy contributed 16 for the Redmen. Nicky Johnson led Rhode Island with 14 points.

North Carolina ranked No. 11, was the only other Top Twenty basketball team in action Friday night. The Tar Heels defeated The Citadel 51-40 in the annual North-South doubleheader at Charlotte.

Al Wood scored 14 points and contributed an inspirational dunk shot with 6:20 left to lead the Tar Heels' victory over a stalling Citadel team for Dean Smith's 400th career coaching victory.

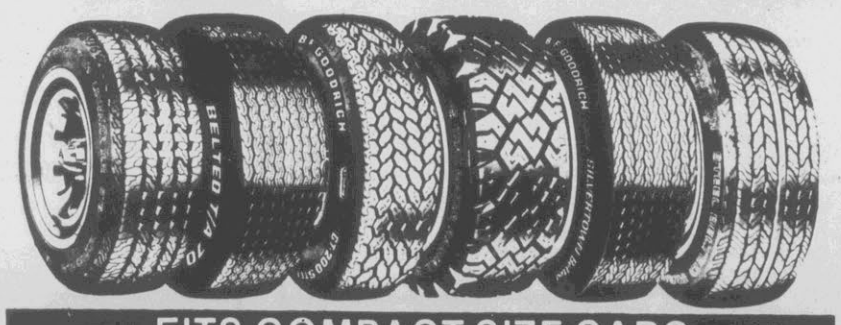

"We are happy to have won against a Citadel team that did a marvelous job of controlling the tempo, holding the ball and making us press," said Smith. "It's difficult for us to play when they play that way and that well."

Salpausselka Games at Lahti, Finland, toward the end of the 1978-79 season. Norway, East Germany and the Soviet Union still rank as the medal favorites, however.

Cross Country Skiing — Bill Koch of Guilford, Vt., a silver medalist in the 30-kilometer race at Innsbruck in 1976, is back and looms as a gold medal threat in his event. The women also boast a potential medal winner in Alison Owen-Spencer of Alaska. Over the years, though, it's been a sport dominated by the Soviet Union, Norway and Sweden and this year should be no exception.

Biathlon — Like the luge, this sport is not very popular in the U.S. and a placing in the top 10 would be considered a major accomplishment.

"Let's face it," says Jerry Haymaker, a representative of the U.S. Biathlon Association. "It has never been the most natural thing in the world for an American to ski and shoot at the same time. You don't see much of that on your average ski slope."

Best bets in this event are Norway, East Germany and the Soviet Union.

In addition to developing good will between countries — the true ideal behind every Olympic Games — the organizers are counting on it to spur the economic development of the Adirondack region.

The immediate impact should be great. More than 40,000 people daily will converge on the village and the outlying region, many of them spending money lavishly in the carnival-like atmosphere.

More importantly to the community, however, is what happens after the Olympics is over?

Millions of dollars have been poured into building new and refurbishing old facilities and it is hoped that when the Games have ended the facilities will be used both for public enjoyment and as a training center for future Olympians.

"I see sports as the ultimate salvation of the community," says Rev. J. Bernard Fell, president of the Lake Placid Organizing Committee. "Our goal is to stage the finest Winter Games possible. If the community the size of Lake Placid can carry out that objective then we will have realized our goal. Other small mountain communities will be able to follow our example in the future and stage Olympic Winter Games instead of relegating them to large cities where athletes fade into the city commerce."

up positive, the athlete would be contacted through his federation. The athlete could either admit the use of an illegal drug or challenge it, in which case a control sample would be tested in the presence of his federation. Should it come up positive again, the matter would be turned over the the IOC. If there was any doubt, the matter would be dropped.

"Fifteen years ago there could only be a moral ban on drugs," said Dugal. "Now immense progress has been made and we are able to use drug testing as a deterrent, like radar."

Relocating Cemeteries For Highways A Delicate Undertaking

By STEVE SWIFT
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — D.J. Skeans says he has been threatened with hellfire and damnation because of the work he does.

Skeans works for the West Virginia Department of Highways, but his specific task — the one that so offends some people — is to relocate graves, usually whole cemeteries, that lie in the paths of state highway projects.

In 10 years as cemetery relocation coordinator for the highway department, Skeans estimates he's supervised the digging up and reburial of 100 cemeteries and 5,000 bodies. The work is done by contractors under state supervision.

"There's not anything that the state of West Virginia tackles that is a more delicate task," said Skeans, a soft-spoken, heavyset man. "It has to be done in a reverent and dignified manner."

Obviously, it is not a job for the squeamish.

"Graves with water are not nice graves," Skeans said. "The wood boxes have usually decayed, but the entire corpse generally has not decomposed.... Some workers quit after the first day."

Gravemoving is done mostly by hand with the help of shovels, Skeans said. Machinery is used only to lift and lower remains that have been buried in heavy concrete vaults.

In exhuming remains from old graves, workers sometimes dig just five feet deep when they "notice a sudden discoloration in the dirt," Skeans said. "The black dirt has been packed together ... about an inch or so thick. There might even be parts of rusted nails and pieces of wood. That's all that's left," he said.

Well preserved metal and concrete vaults are not opened, but in other cases the body is placed in a new coffin, usually a plain pine box, he explained.

In the spring, Skeans will supervise the $189,000 relocation of the Old Baptist Church Cemetery, which lies in the path of Appalachian Corridor H near Buckhannon. The cemetery opened in the late 1700s, and Skeans said many of the graves could be those of slaves.

The cemetery has 647 known graves, but Skeans said as many as 400 unmarked graves may be found before the job is completed.

"We really pull at every straw we can to find some relative of the deceased," Skeans said. "But we most always find that there are more graves than have been located. Unfortunately, we have to move quite a few unknowns."

"The deceased still has rights," he said. "Anything that was buried at the original interment will be placed in the new box. If your mother was buried with a brooch, a family heirloom, and you stood by as we removed her remains, you could not take the brooch unless you had a court order."

Skeans said it's hard to be surprised any more by what he finds buried.

SAVED FROM PROGRESS — The temples of Isis, that nestled on the island of Philae for nearly 2,000 years, rise now on an entirely new island about 530 yards away, after a nine-year $30 million effort to save the temples from rising waters of the River Nile. The last bastion of ancient Egyptian culture and religion, the temples were endangered by construction of the new Aswan high dam that backed up river waters. (AP Laserphoto)

Family Rivalry To End Soon

By MIKE HENDRICKS
Associated Press Writer

ROME, N.Y. (AP) — The drugstore business in upstate New York has been a family rivalry with the success of the competing Fay's and Carl's drugstore chains, whoich are both operated by different branches of the Panasci family.

That family rivalry will end this year with the retirement of Carl Panasci, whose sale of his 34-store chain to the Pneumo Corp. of Boston is effective next month.

Carl Panasci will continue as chief executive of the drugstore chain for a year under the new ownership before ending a career he started nearly 60 years ago as a clerk in a Buffalo drugstore. He went into business for himself, opening his first drugstore in Rome 43 years ago.

That single store with six employees has grown into a multi-million dollar business with 700 employees and sales that exceeded $57 million last year.

Carl's main competition comes from the Fay's Drugstores, formed in the late 1950s by Carl's brother and nephew, Henry Panasci Sr. and Henry Panasci Jr.

The two drugstore chains butt heads mainly in Central New York communities, like Syracuse where there are 11 Fay's stores to nine Carl's.

Although Fay's is a much younger operation, it had surpassed Carl's in size and territory. With Henry Panasci Jr. running the company, Fay's has recently acquired drugstore chains in the Carolinas and plans to open new stores in New York, where it already operates 75 stores. By the end of the year Fay's is expected to be operating 140 stores in four states and sales are expected to exceed $250 million, according to company reports.

Fay's has promoted what it calls its "super drugstores", large stores where customers can buy lawnmowers, autoparts and eyeglasses as well as the usual drugstore fare of prescriptions and toothpaste. Henry Jr. has been pleased with the success of his drugstores

At his stores, customers will not find as many large items priced over $50 as they will at Fay's, says Carl, but his product line doesn't look like what was on his store shelves back in 1937.

'When you talk about a drugstore today, you're not talking just about headache pills and Alka-Seltzer. You're talking about a modern day mix of products that is just about anything that will sell," said Carl.

When he first started, his store stocked about 3,000 items and he personally waited on each customer. Now, his stores carry 20,000 items each and a computer is used to inventory it all.

The Fur Flies

BEATRICE, Neb. (AP) — The fur's beginning to fly in Beatrice as cat owners increasingly believe their missing tabbies are ending up warming the heads and hands of some chic Canadians.

A Beatrice man spoke fondly during a recent interview of a black cat he owned for more than a year. He figured that with shots and various trips to the veterinarian, he had invested $100 in the cat.

But not long ago, it disappeared. "It wasn't the kind of cat to wander away," said the man, who asked that his name not be used.

He believes he found his pet — at least its hide — stretched and drying on the board of a local fur buyer. And he thinks someone stole the animal for the price of its fur.

A Beatrice hide house buys dead cats for $1 to $1.50 each, then processes the fur and sells it for up to $3 to a firm in Canada.

Willard Bitting, owner of Bitting Fur Co., said he purchases only wild cats from trappers and hunters. He says he bought about 300 last year, half the number of the year before.

The whole idea of buying cats for fur, legal in Nebraska, upsets the man who lost his black cat. And he's not alone.

A woman who fears one of her cats was stolen for its fur said, "I think people — animal lovers — should get together and get Gov. Charles Thone to pass a law that they can't kill cats."

No state license is needed for dealing in cat furs. In fact, fur buyers can deal in any kind of animal, including dogs.

Beatrice City Attorney Charles Kandt recalls having heard two complaints from citizens who thought their cats had been stolen. He said neither case was proven.

While city ordinances prohibit dogs and farm animals from running loose within city limits, Kandt said no ordinance governs cats. "I don't know how cats have gotten along so long," Kandt said.

Bitting, who believes trappers don't intentionally catch cats, said wild cats run into traps set up for other animals. Some trappers will throw away the cats, some sell them and others use them as bait to catch other animals, Bitting said.

"Really, there are hundreds to thousands of these cats — they get a lot of quail and pheasants," Bitting said.

Bernie Vicars, owner of Vicars Fur Co., said he doesn't purchase cats. Neither does his brother, Dennis, who works for the Indian Creek Fur Co.

"It's not too good for public relations," Dennis said. "This is stuff we're trying to keep under control so it doesn't look like hunters and trappers are blood-thirsty."

Meanwhile, the man and woman who lost their cats say they don't want to be identified because they plan to get new cats and don't want them stolen as well.

"I think there is a very good possibility that someone is out picking up cats," the man said. "Absolutely."

The Big Airship - Workhorse Of The Future?

By LOUISE BETTS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A whale-shaped airship nearly a third of a mile long rises vertically, quietly. Carrying a load of natural gas from the Middle East, it heads slowly back to the United States.

Elsewhere, an airship hovers over strategic waters, monitoring submarine movements below. From another huge craft, a winch lowers workers, supplies and equipment into a dense jungle.

Such scenes are speculative. But the return of the dirigible is not only possible, but practical as well. That's the opinion of Dr. Kurt Stehling, senior science and technology adviser at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

A dirigible, literally, a "directable," is the generic term for a steerable airship, with a rigid or non-rigid fuselage, unlike hot air or helium balloons.

Stehling takes care to explain this. Younger people are unfamiliar with the big craft. But during the dirigible's heyday, in the 1920s and '30s, such airships provided luxury and transoceanic service. They traveled thousands of miles without accident.

To many, however, the dirigible calls to mind the tragedy of the German passenger airship, Hindenburg. The Hindenburg exploded, killing 36 of the 90 on board, while landing at Lakehurst, N.J., in 1937.

That accident, capping several similar incidents involving American rigid dirigibles, dampened the growing interest in early lighter-than-air craft. The onset of World War II put an end to use of the rigid airship. The world turned to speedier aircraft.

Often associated with the hard-shell dirigible is its deflatable cousin, the blimp, which was still used in World War II to patrol coasts and monitor submarines. Until recently, it has only been used for business promotions such as flights over football games.

Although there are no current plans to build and use dirigibles, the spiraling cost of jet fuel and a current plan for the revival of blimps as workhorses has drawn renewed attention to such lighter-than-air craft.

The Navy, in conjunction with the U.S. Forest Service, is developing a blimp, to be completed in 1982. The ship will prove whether or not airborne logging, particularly in inaccessible regions, is feasible.

By mating the last remaining blimp bag with four surplus, 40-foot-wide helicopter blades, the $10 million craft will have a 25-ton capacity (nine tons more than current commercial blimps) and the hovering ability of a helicopter.

Norm Mayer, a NASA dirigible expert, said lift for today's blimps is provided by non-flammable helium gas, not the highly-inflammable hydrogen used by the Hindenburg. Because the helium gives the ship a free lift, he said the craft requires about one-quarter the fuel needed to propel jet aircraft.

Helium could be used in dirigibles of the future.

Using dirigibles as cargo carriers could eliminate the usual 12 to 15 steps it now takes to transport goods from one place to another, Mayer said. Though the ships would only travel at 100 to 150 mph, they could cruise non-stop to a destination.

In an emergency, Stehling said a dirigible might take longer than an airplane, but once there, could serve quite efficiently:

"The ship could bring in food, medics and supplies to a stricken area and lower down people and cargo by helicopters or winches," he said. Powerful flood lights could illuminate the area at night.

Nor are fancy airports necessary with the ship's vertical lift. "An open, grassy field would be fine," Stehling said. If a field were not available, he said, they could moor on anything from a ship to a city bank building.

By incorporating modern technology, Stehling said a dirigible could be as safe or safer than an airplane.

Weather could be monitored by computer and radar. In the "extremely unlikely case" of engine failure, Stehling said, the dirigible "would come down slowly like a big balloon, whereas in an aircraft, you're finished."

Stehling, writing in an NOAA journal, envisioned future dirigibles. He said they would be about 1,000 feet long, 300 feet wide, with a 25 million-cubic-foot volume, dwarfing the roughly 800-foot, 7 million-cubic-foot volume of such early dirigibles as the Hindenburg and the Navy's Akron and Macon.

This projected size — roughly three football fields long and as roomy as almost two United Nations buildings — increases the airship's efficiency, Stehling said.

NASA's Mayer cites the high cost of constructing such a craft as a major reason "no one has seen fit to take the (financial) risk" for its development.

Stehling said the first modern rigid airship would probably cost between $200 million and $400 million, depending on its mission and equipment. Production costs would nonetheless decrease to about $30 million, the price of a Boeing 747.

The day of the luxury, passenger dirigible, "with a glass-covered ballroom beneath the stars," is far off, experts say. But it is a possibility.

Remains As Dangerous

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chain saws, sometimes listed among the most dangerous consumer products, remain just as hazardous after an 18-month, $500,000 federal effort to work with manufacturers to make them safer.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission suspended the effort Friday after safety experts on its staff said they were disappointed with a plan submitted by the Chain Saw Manufacturers Association.

Nkomo, Mugabe May Team Up

By JOHN EDLIN
Associated Press Writer

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Joshua Nkomo is prepared to team up with Robert Mugabe to form a new government if neither of the guerrilla leaders captures a majority in national elections next month, the vice president of Nkomo's faction of the Patriotic Front alliance said today.

"Our natural allies are ZANU (Mugabe's party) and if we have to team up, we will team with ZANU," said Josiah Chinamano.

Upon his return to Rhodesia last month, Nkomo said he hoped the two parties — his Zimbabwe African People's Union and Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union — would unite for the election campaign.

But Mugabe refused, and he is currently regarded as the frontrunner in the race.

Nkomo and Mugabe were aligned as leaders of the Patriotic Front during the seven-year war to win black majority rule in the country that is 97 percent black. But Mugabe is regarded as being to the political left of Nkomo.

The other major candidate is Bishop Abel Muzorewa, who last April was elected the country's first black prime minister in elections boycotted by the two guerrilla leaders. He resigned as part of the agreement leading to the current ceasefire and is thought to be trailing Nkomo and Mugabe.

Chinamano did not rule out the possibility that Nkomo's party might also align with other parties in a broad-based government.

"We can't rule that out," he said in an interview with the South African Press Association.

"Politics is the game of the possible, anything can happen. But ZANU and ZAPU agreed that whatever happens at the end of the road, after the elections, the only legitimate partners to form a government are ZANU and ZAPU."

In its first communique in two days, the Rhodesian military command said today that four persons — two guerrillas, a Patriotic Front "collaborator" and a black civilian were killed in fighting between government troops and guerrillas ignoring the cease-fire.

British sources said Lord Soames, the British governor running the country in the transition to elections and independence, is "determined to take appropriate action to ensure the situation does not deteriorate" but has "no intention" of postponing the elections.

Dockworkers May Appeal Order To Load Soviet Ship

NEW ORLEANS (AP) – Dockworkers are loading corn into a Soviet-bound ship under court order, but lawyers for the International Longshoremen's Association say they may appeal the injunction.

U.S. District Judge Veronica Wicker on Friday forbad five ILA locals to order, encourage or induce longshoremen to refuse to service Russian grain cargo as long as President Carter's embargo policy lasts.

"There is no doubt that the sympathy of the country is with the longshoremen," she said, but added the union boycott violated a no-strike clause in the ILA contract with the New Orleans Steamship Association.

"There is no other way for the union to express the abhorence that ILA members feel toward the Russian's blatant attack on Afghanistan," said union lawyer Victor Hess.

"I will have to confer with union officials and contact the international headquarters before deciding whether we will appeal," he said.

In Jacksonville, Fla., longshoremen also boycotting Russian-bound ships were ordered by a federal judge to load cargoes on three ships.

After the New Orleans injunction was issued, longshoremen began loading corn aboard the Eastgate, a Russian-built ship that sails under the flag of Singapore.

One Russian ship had sailed away empty, and a Greek ship was re-chartered for France as a result of the longshoremen's boycott at East and Gulf coast ports protesting the Soviet Union's military action in Afghanistan.

In response to that intervention, President Carter embargoed new grain sales to Russia and blocked some technical materials.

Judge Wicker said the grain for the Eastgate was part of the three million tons remaining out of eight million contracted for by the Soviet Union in 1975 and exempt from the embargo.

A Crazy Chase

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Four men were in Wayne County Jail on Saturday after leading officers on a chase with comic overtures.

Police said the story began on Friday when four men allegedly held up the Pikeville Oil Co.

Sheriff Bill Adams said two armed men entered the Pikeville Oil Co. office on Friday, handcuffed a worker at the company, Mrs. Alice Crawford, her father-in-law and a customer, and herded them and the customer's two small children into a storage room.

Mrs. Crawford said the men left in the customer' car, which was found abandoned a short distance away.

A highway patrolman driving out of Goldsboro saw the Boogie Van at a self-service gasoline pump near Princeton. As the patrolman headed for the van it sped off, leaving one of the suspects holding the gasoline nozzle.

He was arrested.

Officers said the Boogie Van cracked up and the chase began through wooded country, with police officers on foot, in automobiles and one policeman churning along on a commandeered farm tractor.

One of those sought swam the Little River, despite temperatures in the low 20s. He was arrested at a farmhouse, police said, after he held up the owner of the farmhouse for some dry clothing.

The other two men were picked up subsequently.

Police said 21 charges were filed against the quartet, including armed robbery, kidnapping and auto theft.

The four were identified as Stanley Jones, 33; Stanley Ray Faith, 32; Andre Horn, 16; and Rickey Carver, no age given. Officers said all four gave addresses at a trailer park in the Rosewood Community west of Goldsboro.

---Bad Little Boy---

LONDON (UPI) — For 25 years, Harold Hare was the easygoing star of Jack and Jill magazine. Then he made his comment about Dicky Dormouse's cousin.

Now, the Equal Opportunities Commission is after him and his buddy, Tiger Tim.

The carefree days ended last year when Harold visited Dicky Dormouse and watched his friend's girl cousin bring him tea and his slippers.

"That's what girls are for," Harold said, wishing he had a girl cousin, too.

But the mother of one of Harold's 90,000 young readers disagreed — and disagreed strongly. She called the EOC, which investigated and sent a complaint to Harold's publishers, IPC Magazines.

"(I) was astonished to receive correspondence from (the EOC) setting out publisher's guidelines on sex discrimination," said John Sanders, publishing director for IPC's youth magazines.

"The guidelines said you can't use the word 'housewife' and you must not refer to grown-up women as girls. They draw attention to other things in the magazine.

"According to their reckoning," Sanders said, "Tiger Tim would have to start making tea for Mrs. Bruin instead of the other way around.

"If the commission had its way, we would have to call the comic Jack and Jill one month and Jill and Jack the next."

Seeking Man With 35 Pounds Of Gold

SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO, Calif. (UPI) — FBI agents said Saturday they are seeking a former employee of a precious metal refinery who they believe made off to Mexico with gold dust that has doubled in value to $372,000.

The missing gold was in pure granulated form, totaling 545 ounces or about 35 pounds, which would almost fill a quart jar.

Police and FBI agents sought Theodore McCoy Schmidt, 38, who was a maintenance superintendent at Wildberg Brothers, a refiner, for only two months before the theft was discovered Dec. 10.

Schmidt, his wife, Susan, and their two children, disappeared at the time from their apartment, leaving most of their belongings behind. Detective Gary Hopper theorized they went to Mexico where they have friends.

The gold was stored in five trays in a safe in the plant's shipping department. During working hours, the outer door of the safe is left open and the alarm is not working.

The inner door is opened with a key, and Schmidt was among six employees with a key. Normally, the room with the safe is manned by two employees, but Hopper said Schmidt was alone in the room the day of the theft.

Although the plant is protected with fences and elaborate secuurity against intruders, Hopper said guards do not usually check outgoing employees.

Since the theft, the erratically changing price of gold has doubled, Hopper said. Schmidt is sought on a grand theft warrant and on a federal warrant charging unlawful flight to avoid prosecution.

The Wiscasset

Vacation Home Treats Family Guests

By Jerry Bishop

With a lower level that promises relaxed leisure living and an upper level that sports separate guest quarters, the Wiscasset, a trim vacation plan, is an excellent home for living and entertaining.

Natural wood siding, decks, and shake shingles reinforce the rustic simplicity of the exterior. Inside, the floor plan successfully meets the needs of the vacationing family and their friends.

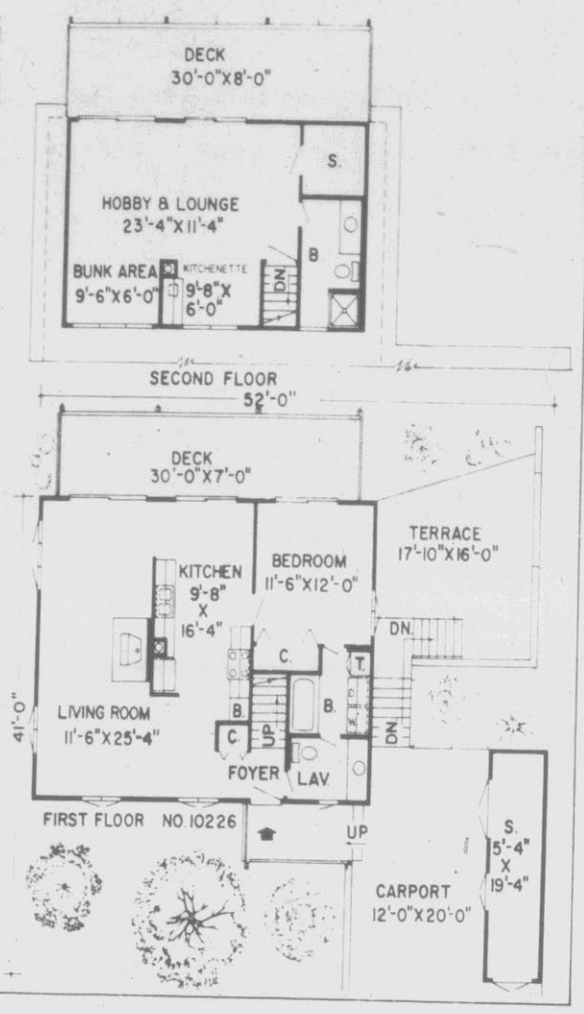

Each level of the plan merits its own attached outdoor living space, and the design is, to a large extent, built around these areas. Long decks, edged by sliding glass doors, grace the first and second floor, while the basement level opens to a terrace.

Entry is into a foyer, carefully detailed to include a coat closet, access to the upper level, and full bath at right. To the left, the 25-ft. living room is L-shaped and climaxed by the 30-ft. deck for additional living and party space. The adjacent corridor kitchen takes in a dining area and also enjoys extension via the deck.

The basement level, reached by way of the terrace, shows an abundance of storage space and could be finished as a walk-out family or recreation room.

Houseware Makers Refine Their Products; Now More Practical

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The uncertain national economy has American housewares manufacturers playing it safe. At the recent national winter housewares exposition in Chicago, they concentrated on refining existing products to make them more practical, instead of introducing many new items.

Wholesale price rises on a wide variety of products mean that consumers can expect to be paying slightly more for the same products by spring. Most of the new and improved products shown to retailers in Chicago will be on sale in stores early this spring.

Despite a diminished number of new items, there were some clear product category favorites. Consumers can expect to see: more serious cookware for serious cooks; an increasing number of personal health and beauty machines, such as whirlpool baths and facial cleaners; more energy-saving products, such as convection ovens, quartz clocks and fans, and storage systems designed to get more storage capacity out of existing space.

Products for food preparation, as usual, dominated the housewares show. There was a notable interest among both manufacturers and their retailer customers in high-quality items. One company, Wear-Ever, for example, for the first time showed some of its 200 commercial-weight pots, pans and utensils. The company has set up a separate division to sell the professional pots and pans to retailers because "stores carrying this type of merchandise report manufacturers are hard-pressed to meet the demand" for such products, according to the distributor.

In the belief that the food processor is moving from novelty to kitchen basic, several manufacturers brought out new models and refinements. Moulinex, for example, introduced a one-bowl processor to go with its first chute model, which is used primarily for cutting and slicing operations. Cuisinart introduced a new feeder-tube lid that makes it possible to get larger, whole fruits and vegetables into the machine without trimming them. The replacement lid will be available for all earlier models, a representative said.

A new market for expensive, heavy-duty gadgets is stimulating manufacturers to offer such items as a self-cleaning garlic press that will retail for $8. Rhodes Messick, a sales representative for gourmet gadgets in upstate New York, noted that "the upstate market is usually about two years behind New York City, and I and my cohorts in the hinterlands are seeing more gourmet shops all the time. In these stores, there is a market for useful gadgets in the $5, $10 and higher category."

Expensive products that enhance health or beauty are apparently marketable. The Gillette Co. brought out a battery-operated, rechargeable whirlpool aerator and jet device designed for use in a home tub. It sells for about $145. The whirlpool bath joins the company's facial steam machine which was introduced earlier. Both are in stores now.

Pollenex showed a computer-operated track machine with controls that allow the indoor jogger-in-place to set a specific goal in terms of time or paces and keep track of them. The item sells for about $200 in chain stores, catalog showrooms and sporting goods stores.

Improved electronics controls for plug-in products and quartz chips for battery-operated products are making it possible for manufacturers to offer more reliable performance with both types of power.

Beautiful, battery-operated quartz clocks, for example, were shown by at least three manufacturers. The quartz cell has an almost endless life, according to one manufacturer, and a battery can last from one to two years.

In plug-in clocks, especially alarm clocks, solid-state electronics has made mechanical digital clocks out-of-date, according to Andrew Neckowitz, sales executive with Spartus Corp. Solid-state technology means that there are no moving parts, which results in a more silent, longer lasting and more accurate clock, he said.

Electronic controls were substituted by several producers of expensive, heavy-duty mixers to provide for cooler motors and better control in adding ingredients. American-made Kitchenaid mixers and Kenwood, an English brand, both feature digital controls.

Saving energy was the motivating force behind the introduction of new, tabletop convection ovens. Food cooks at lower temperatures for a shorter time in convection ovens.

Observers at the market noted that the number of well-designed products sporting the industrial, form-follows-function look was much greater than in the past. Martin Roberts, a product and package designer, said that "three years ago at the housewares show, I saw gadgets poorly designed and poorly packaged. Now products and packages are better designed."

Does all this mean the American love of a really way-out gadget has died? Not on your life. Creativity was given free rein at many a booth.

Let's Talk Real Estate

by Connally Branch

Anyone living in a major suburb has most surely seen real estate prices escalate steeply to levels that are often double or triple those of the early 1960's. The prices in some wealthy suburbs have gone even higher. What's more, there is no sign of anything more than an interruption in these trends in the years directly ahead. The best place to shop for real estate with the greatest profit potential is still in the suburbs according to most experts. Although prices may seem inflated, reasonable buys still do exist. With more than 70 percent of our population continuing to congregate in the suburbs, the likelihood is for sustained prices advances.

Property value is everyone's concern here at CLARK-BRANCH REALTORS INC., 1902 S. Charles, 756-6336. Whether you are thinking of buying or selling our professional staff wants to assist you in concluding an equitable deal, where both buyer and seller get their dollar's worth. INDUSTRIAL RESIDENTIAL COMMERCIAL

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — About a year ago, you advised someone about how to correct a sweating toilet tank. I didn't pay much attention to it because I had no such problem then. Now, for some reason, the tank sweats considerably. Could you repeat the advice?

A. — Since quite a few other persons have asked about the same problem, this is a reply to all of them.

A toilet tank sweats because it is cold and warm, moist air has settled on it. This results in condensation or sweating. To prevent the condition, you have to find a way to keep the tank from getting cold or to get some of the moisture out of the air.

One way to do this is to have a plumber provide a mixing valve that will allow some warm water into the tank. Then, when the warm, moist air settles on the warm tank, condensation will not occur.

Another way is to line the inside of the tank with a special material made especially for that purpose. Most hardware stores, lumber yards, building-supply dealers and similar establishments carry this material. To install it, the inside of the tank must be drained, sponged and kept dry until the adhesive has hardened.

A third method is to cover the outside of the tank with fabric. Any place that sells bathroom materials sells this type of cover. Some provision must also be made to cover other parts of the toilet equipment that tend to get cold to the touch. While this fabric provides a decorative appearance, it sometimes interferes with easy operation of the seat cover.

Of course, none of these steps is necessary if the warm, moist air in the bathroom is permitted to escape via an exhaust fan or open window or is trapped in a dehumidifier.

Q. — We have some hardboard on the walls of our attic. It was there when we moved in. It does not appear to have been painted because it has the original dark brown color of hardboard. We wonder if we can bleach out that color so the boards are lighter?

A. — Not very likely. Even if you could, it would be a messy job. The only way to change the color of the hardboard is to paint it.

Q. — There is a kind of rumbling noise that takes place only when the hot water is turned on. What causes this?

A. — This may call for the changing of the pipe hookup near the hot-water heater, a draining of the tank to remove sediment or simply a lowering of the temperature of the water. This last act will also cut down on energy costs.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

From time to time, an architect's house design calls for covering one or more sides of the structure with earth.

This technique, known as berming, is an energy-saving measure, since the soil provides excellent extra insulation to cut down on heating and cooling costs. In most types of berming, the house is built at or close to grade level.

When the entire building is below the original grade, this process is called chambering. A chambered house, therefore, is what is loosely referred to as an underground house, although there are several varieties of subsurface dwellings.

Underground houses are as old as time, often fashioned in response to a hostile environment. People are not breaking down doors to negotiate with builders for underground housing, but there is a very definite new interest in subterranean residences. All sorts of books on the subject are reaching the market every month. And columns such as this are getting increasing queries about this type of home.

Jaki and Robert Rey built a habitation of this sort in the Adirondack Mountains and live in it. He discusses it at length in his book, "Underground Houses," (Sterling Publishing) pointing out that the three main considerations in the construction were strength, waterproofness and livability.

Strength because of the extra heavy roof load, waterproofness for obvious reasons, and livability as enough light and ventilation to guarantee a non-claustrophobic atmosphere.

Some of the data is too detailed and technical for casual reading, but likely to be of great value to those who want to take part in the actual construction. For the latter, it must be mentioned that building an underground house is tough, tedious and likely to occupy more time than expected.

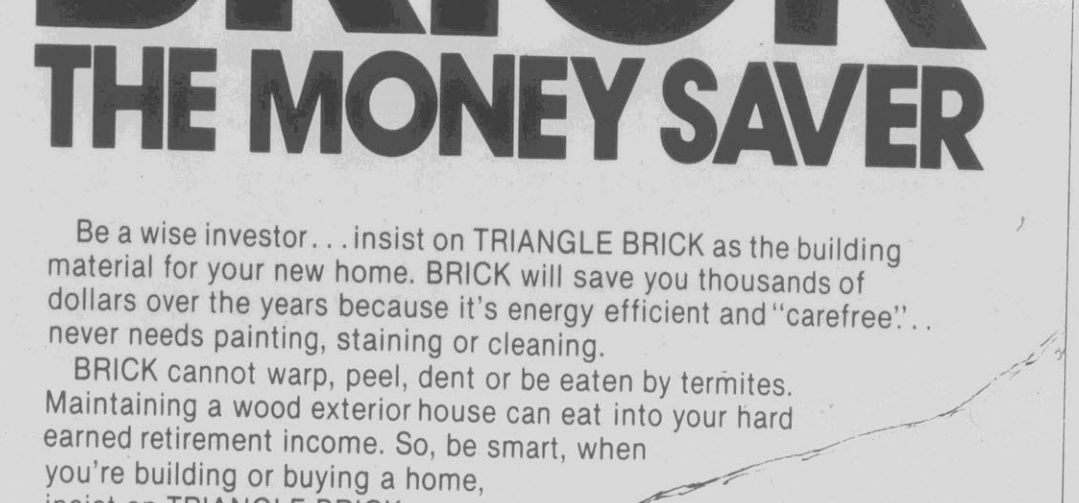

The 910-square-foot, energy-efficient house cost the Roys $7,410.57, a very small amount in these days of modest-sized $100,000 dwellings. But consider also that it took 1,800 hours of work, including about 450 hours of outside help, some of it paid and some volunteered.

Bureaucrat Maze Hits Brazil, Too

By RICHARD W. FOSTER

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — Helio Marcos Penna Beltrao, a 62-year-old ex-business consultant and corporation president, works out of three cramped rooms in the Planalto Presidential Palace here and has only two full-time employees.

In Brazil in order to purchase a house valued at more than $10,000, the federal housing bank and other institutions require more than 40 documents. A driver's license takes 45 days and at least a dozen documents, one of which until recently was a statement by police, with two witnesses, that the applicant lives at his present address.

Brazilian bureaucracy, begun under Portuguese kings, has grown like Topsy over the past four centuries, suffocating the everyday lives of millions of citizens, and threatening to strangle the economic life of the country.

"In a way our problem is not so bad as yours," Beltrao told The Associated Press in an interview here. "I hear bureaucracy is getting worse in the United States. In Brazil, on the other hand, it can't get any worse than it already is."

Beltrao began his career 40 years ago as an attorney in a now-defunct government department dealing wih retirement pensions. Since then efficiency and rationality in government and industry have become his passion.

He spends at least three days a week traveling on a lecture circuit in which he preaches that the evils of bureaucracy can be overcome with new attitudes and a few appropriate changes in the law.

"Bureaucracy is basically a cultural problem," he says. "In Brazil the presumption is that everyone is dishonest until proven otherwise. It is this attitude which must be changed."

Through changes in administrative law, Beltrao has already eliminated federal government requirements for affidavits that a citizen is alive, that he lives at his present address, that he has no criminal record, and that he is without means of support.

These "atestados" do not necessarily prove what they are intended to prove but they nonetheless had become routine, time-consuming formalities.

The newspapers here recently ran a story about an 80-year-old man who appealed to the federal government for help in proving he was alive, and eligible for retirement benefits. When he registered his wife's death 10 years ago, a clerk mistakenly entered his name. In the eyes of the state social security department where the man lived, he could not be alive because they had on file a death certificate with his name on it.

Beltrao, because of the good sense of his mission and the zeal with which he pursues it, has become a popular figure in the land of samba. He and a musician, in fact, have written a samba in honor of the de-bureaucratization campaign. Several municipal and state governments have told Beltrao they will set up similar departments.

New targets on Beltrao's debureaucratization list are exit visas, (in Brazil a passport is not enough to leave the country; an exit visa requiring a dozen documents also is needed), fingerprint requirements for all professional ID cards, and special permissions from juvenile courts for minors to travel unaccompanied by their fathers.

Yes, that's right. In Brazil through a combination of machismo and bureaucracy, a mother may not travel with an underage son or daughter without the father's permission in writing and stamped by a juvenile-court judge.

$11.2 Billion Profits For Big Five In Oil

By WILLIAM GLASGALL
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The oil industry's profit reports for 1979 sounded like a replay of 1974: earnings jumping higher as world oil prices soared.

In 1979, as prices charged by Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries members nearly doubled, the five largest oil companies in the United States had profits that totaled $11.2 billion, up 69 percent from 1978's $6.6 billion.

Exxon Corp. alone accounted for $4.3 billion of the total as the world's largest oil company logged a 55 percent profit gain and became the first industrial corporation to earn more than $4 billion in one year.

"All in all, 1979 was a good year," said Exxon Chairman Clifton C. Garvin Jr. But Garvin noted the company's energy exploration and development expenditures rose by 29 percent in 1979 to $6.9 billion and will increase to $7.5 billion in 1980.

Among other major oil companies: earnings at No. 2-ranked Mobil Corp. were up 78 percent form 1978 at $2.01 billion; No. 3-ranked Texaco Inc., up 106 percent at $1.76 billion; fourth-ranked Standard Oil Company of California, ahead by 64 percent at $1.79 billion; and fifth-ranked Gulf Oil Corp., up 68 percent at $1.32 billion.

Percentage earnings gains at some oil companies were far larger. Fourteenth-ranked Standard Oil Co. (Ohio), for instance, tallied a gain of 163 percent to $1.2 billion as Alaskan crude oil production and prices both rose sharply.

Another major contributor to earnings was an increase in overseas profitability as both profit margins and prices climbed.

But Analyst Constantine G. Fliakos of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. noted new price rises by OPEC and others may "squeeze profit margins" of major oil companies whose inventories are unusually high just as an economic slowdown is expected to trim oil consumption.

The 1979 profit jumps came after four years of generally slow earnings growth. Last year in general was the most profitable year since the explosion of 1973 and 1974 sparked by the quadrupling of OPEC oil prices and the Arab oil embargo against the United States.

For the five largest oil companies, earnings fell from a total $7.8 billion in 1974 to $5.6 billion in 1975, came to about $6.1 billion in 1976 and again in 1977, and rose to $6.6 billion in 1978 before jumping to $11.2 billion last year.

During that time, inflation cut the purchasing power of the dollar by about 64 percent, the U.S. government says.

FIRE AND ICE — An ice-encrusted New York fire truck stands in the midst of an eerie cityscape in Brooklyn Heights Friday. The scene is the result of attempts to extinguish a five alarm fire at a ten-story hotel being renovated in the waterfront section of the borough. Water sprayed on the fire was whipped by 30-mile-an-hour winds and frozen in place by temperatures in the low teens to cover everything on the street in a ghostly cloud of ice. (AP Laserphoto)

Local Builders Were Honored

Three local builders were honored during the week at the E-300 annual awards activities conducted during the Energy and Residential Building Seminar, sponsored by the energy conservation office of the Greenville Utilities Commission.

The awards are presented annually to builders and other building-related professionals who demonstrated outstanding achievement in energy efficient residential construction.

The 1980 recipients are: Louis Cherry, president of Building Enterprises Inc., recipient of the E-300 award for energy innovation; Conrad Sharpe, general manager of Carolina Development Associates, recipient of the award for maximum energy efficiency; and Tommie Little, president of Tommie Little Builders, recipient of the award for community contribution.

In addition to the top three awards, 18 builders were awarded the E-300 Certificate for building excellence.

Tipton, in addressing the audience of over 100, explained the Passive Solar Program, which the NCHBA has initiated in cooperation with the North Carolina Energy Institute. He said that cash awards of up to $5,000 will be given to builders for the design and construction of houses incorporating passive solar concepts.

Approves Contract

DETROIT (AP) — The United Auto Workers union says its Chrysler Corp. members have approved overwhelmingly a new contract designed to give a financial boost to the ailing automaker.

Seventy-nine percent of those voting agreed to give up $243 million worth of contract provisions, a margin 10 percent higher than the plurality in favor of the original contract last fall, the union said Friday.

The three-year agreement reached in October called for $203 million in concessions, but Congress required $462.5 million from all of Chrysler's unions as part of the $1.5 billion in loan guarantees it approved in December. The UAW share was $446 million.

Most of the October concessions were in the form of delayed wage increases and most of the new ones are the yielding of scheduled paid days off.

Arabs Invest In U.S. Mine

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — A group of Middle East investors has exercised its option to buy 500,000 additional shares of Sunshine Mining Co. stock, bringing its holdings to 26 percent of the United States' most productive silver mine.

The group, Arab Investors S.A., bought 19 percent of the mining company on Dec. 10, for $21.24 a common share, or $21.8 million for 1.02 million shares. An option was written into that sales agreement allowing the investors to purchase another 500,000 shares at the same price if bought before Thursday, said David Wagnon, Sunshine executive vice president.

The investors agreed to exercise the $10.6 million option, bringing their total holdings to more than 1.5 million shares.

May Be In Trouble

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Apparently, not only was Duke Power Co.'s decision to cut its construction budget an indication of its lack of faith in the economy, but a sign that the utility could be in some sort of trouble.

"This business is not as risk-free as it was in the 50s and 60s," said Duke board chairman Carl Horn Jr. "Obviously, if you have to cut back as much as we are all is not well with you."

Duke announced Tuesday that it planned to postpone for three years construction of the Cherokee Nuclear Power Station in South Carolina. The move will cause 1,000 workers to be laid off.

An Increase And A Refund

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Residential natural gas customers in North Carolina will face a 14 percent price increase next month, but they will also benefit from a one-time refund ordered by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The wholesale rate increase of 14.1 percent will mean an average increase of $53 a year for North Carolina customers.

Logging Workshop

WILLIAMSTON — A workshop on "Logging Cost and Production analysis" will be held for logging contractors in Williamston. It will consist of six evening sessions held on Tuesdays, beginning Feb. 12. Each session will begin at 7:30 p.m. and last approximately two hours.

The objective is to give logging contractors additional tools for analyzing the production and financial aspects of their business. Subjects to be covered will be calculating the cost of wood production, balancing production on the job, determining limiting factors of production, analyzing investment opportunities, etc.

An effort has been made to limit lecturing and to involve the class in solving real world problems. If interested, contact Earl Deal (Raleigh — 919-737-3386) or Jim Kea, Area Forestry Agent, Agricultural Extension Service (Williamston — 919-792-1621). Enrollment is limited.

CELEBRATE ONE YEAR OF KHOMEINI — Moslem mullahs lead Iranians in prayer Friday outside a Tehran hospital where Ayatollah Khomeini is recuperating from a heart ailment. Thousands joined in prayer and wept while marching through the streets of the Iranian capital to celebrate the first anniversary of Khomeini's return from exile.

Need 23,000 More Signatures

Chairman of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce Utilities Committee announced Friday that about 23,000 more signatures are needed from the Pitt County area for the Operation Overcharge petitions.

Schwidde said that a current tally of the petitions returned to the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce showed only 2,823 signatures have been complied. The committee's goal is to get 25,000 signatures in the Greenville-Pitt County area.

The petitions call for the people's support in encouraging the stockholders of Virginia Electric Power Company to create a situation forcing the utilities company to leave North Carolina, eliminating the disparity of electric rates in the state.

Schwidde said, "People should be aware of the extremely high electric rates here in Pitt County, particularly with Greenville Utilities Director Charles Horne's Thursday announcement that Vepco is calling for a $17 per 1,000 kwh fuel charge in February. This is about a 50 percent increase over December's fuel charge."

Anyone who is interested in signing a petition may find one in most Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce members' businesses or the Chamber Office at 1209 W. Fourteenth St. Persons interested in circulating petitions in their neighborhoods should call the Chamber office at 752-4101.

County Schools Library Nominated For Award

The Pitt County Schools Library/Media Program has been nominated for the School Library/Media 1980 Program of the Year Award. The only other school system in North Carolina receiving this honor is the Charlotte/Mecklenburg system.

The Program of the Year award spotlights one or more school systems for its outstanding acheivements in providing exemplary library and media programs in its elementary schools. The award is sponsored annually by the Encyclopedia Britannica Companies and the American Association of School Libraries. A $5000 award will be given to the school library/media system designated as Program of the Year. This money will be used to make further improvements in an effort to make library/media programs more beneficial to the teachers and students in each school.

Mrs. Jean Averette, Pitt County Library/Media Supervisor, commented "The Pitt County Schools Library/Media Program has made great strides in the past five years. The school library program has grown from the concept of the library being just a storehouse for books, to an effective program with certified librarians, and the library/media centers becoming the hub of the schools by providing many resources to teachers and students."

The 1980 awards will be presented during National Library Week, April 13-19.

He will talk during the radio interview about his role as chairman of the Personnel and Finance Subcommittee of the Pitt County Area Mental Health Center.

Climbs Backyard Icicle

WENATCHEE, Wash. (AP) — When Glen Frese runs out of summer mountains to climb, he scales the icicle in his backyard.

"I had such a fun and enjoyable summer rock climbing that I didn't want to sit home all winter," the 31-year-old Frese said in a recent interview. "There is not much climbing to do at this time of the year" because his favorite areas are somewhat inaccessable.

So Frese built a 30-foot icicle in his backyard. First, he erected three power-line poles around a water pipe, which sprays water up through them. Wenatchee's sub-freezing temperatures do the rest, layering the towering tripod with ice.

Frese dresses warmly, grabs an ice ax, slaps on a helmet and heads up through the slippery bumps and crannies. In about 15 minutes, he has reached the top.

He estimates he will get another month of good climbing before his giant icicle melts.

Runaway Slaves Reenactment

OBERLIN, Ohio (AP) — Singing spirituals and trekking through the snow in heavy ragtag clothing, a small band of students has completed a month-long re-enactment of an escape from slavery on the Underground Railroad.

Nine black Oberlin College students Friday ended their 420-mile journey as "runaway slaves."

"I gained a new appreciation for the beauty and strength of my ancestors," said Gale Ellison, a junior from Illinois majoring in English and government.

The venture, funded mainly by a $9,378 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, was a project of Oberlin College's four-week winter term.

Sewing Ability Had 'National' Results

Lorelei Aldridge managed to save as much as $425 on clothing during just one year in high school by making her clothes.

Lorelei has been sewing with the 4-H clubs since 1969. She has taught classes and has worked in a sewing factory to sharpen her skills.

"I first started (sewing) when I was six or seven, making dolls' clothes," she said. "It was play work. When I was eight I bought a pattern for doll clothes and made a skirt." Since then, Lorelei joined the Earlybirds 4-H Club and has merited an award for sewing every year.

In addition to 4-H honors Lorelei was a regional winner in "Co-ed Magazine's" home economics student competition. She received a sewing machine as a prize when was a second place winner in "Teen Magazine's" 1976 sewing contest.

"Participants in the 4-H dress revue vary each year," she explains. Contestants are judged on appearance as they model the outfit, garment construction and the record book.

"I enjoy tailoring," she said. "I like to do that." She soon hopes to try her hand at tailoring men's suits.

Although Lorelei enjoys tailoring, she chooses a simple style dress whenever she will be judged on how she appears in the garment. With a simple design, she will select a difficult material in order to make her talent more visible.

Currently, Lorelei is attending East Carolina University. Clothing and textiles is her major with a business minor.

She combines a full-time course load with a job at a Greenville fabric shop. With Lorelei's sewing experience and 4-H record, she had no problem finding a job.

In her current position, she is required to make a model garment every six weeks. Employees of the shop are given material and a pattern. They make an outfit which is displayed on a store manikin for a month.

Her ambition is to obtain a master's degree and to teach in college.

"I've taught so long. I've taught little 4-Hers. They are my pride and joy."

Attending the National 4-H Congress in November was her last 4-H activity. She was named one of six national winners in the fashion revue program there and received a $1,000 scholarsip during the 58th congress.

Selected by the Cooperative Extension Service, the six winners were presented their awards by Simplicity Pattern Co. Inc. She was one of some 50 congress delegates, who-as state winners, modeled their outfits in the National 4-H Fashion Revue.

Her other major 4-H projects were in communications and personal appearance.

Looking back, she believes she learned a great deal through 4-H because of her active participation. "I had no problem getting a job." After learning of Lorelei's 4-H record, "they don't turn you down."

Included in Lorelei's future is marriage. She is engaged to Durwood O'Quinn Jr. of Kinston, who is an electrician. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Carl Aldridge of Rt. 5, Kinston.

Southern Menus Change

By BOB CAVIN
UNC-G News Bureau

GREENSBORO — Not so awfully long ago, Southern families began each day with a large breakfast of grits, homemade buscuits, country ham or sausage, red eye gravy, eggs, hot coffee, milk and juice.

It was a Southern tradition.

Now reserved for Christmas time and other such special occasions during the year, the traditional Southern breakfast is all but a thing of the past, according to nutritional anthropologist Dr. Thomas K. Fitzgerald.

"People in the South still talk nostalgically about the 'typical Southern breakfast,' especially grits and biscuits," Dr. Fitzgerald pointed out. "But these items do not appear on Southern tables on a day-to-day basis or even frequently anymore.

"The traditional Southern breakfast for blacks and whites is largely a thing of the past," he added. "Although still somewhat ceremonially practiced at Christmas and other special occasions, the traditional Southern eating habits are fast in danger of extinction."

Not only is the Soutern menu of bygone eras fading away, but also quickly disappearing is the traditional family gatherings at mealtimes with the exception of holidays, said Dr. Fitzgerald.

A professor of anthropology at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Dr. Fitzgerald became aware of the passing of the traditional Southern eating habits during a two-year study of food behavior among middle-class blacks and whites.

Although his survey of 100 residents in a typical small Southern community in North Carolina suggested that there is no real difference in the foods eaten by blacks and whites, he found that neither blacks or whites today eat in the old, traditional manner.

Ironically, a return to a modified Southern diet is maintained by quite a few Northerners who move to the South and wish to eat as Southerners are thought to eat as a way of adjusting to their new locale, Fitzgerald said.

Traditionally, the Southern menu has contained such items as grits, sweet potatoes, mixed greens, country ham, sausage, fried fish, homemade biscuits and breads including hoecakes and cornpone, chitterlings, wild game and assorted vegetables from garden plots, among other staples such as potatoes, fried chicken, et cetera.

Fitzgerald pointed out that the traditioinal Southern menu evolved around the period of the Civil War and was used for a long while after the turn of the century until the Southern lifestyle began changing from almost totally rural to suburban.

"Except for some regional variations, Southerners tend to eat pretty much like the rest of Middle America," Dr. Fitzgerald said. "Today, breakfast normally includes cold cereal and milk, coffee, toast and sometimes juice. For many, eggs and bacon or sausage are used only occasionally, usually on weekends, to break the monotony."

The anthropologist explained that the passing of the traditional Southern menu is due to the change in work patterns.

"When the traditional eating habits were established, Southerners did heavier work and needed the high carbohydrate breakfast," he commented. "If we ate like that today, obesity would be a bigger problem than it is. It's probably good that we have changed our eating habits."

Fading almost as quickly as the traditional menu is the notion that Southern families still sit down together for three meals a day.

Fitzgerald said that during his research interviews it was not uncommon to hear residents describe their homes as a "kind of cafe" when it came to feeding the family.

"During a typical one-hour interview session, I often witnessed no less than three separate feedings," he stated. "Although, a majority of those families interviewed share family dinners, less than half ate both dinner and breakfast together.

"Our eating habits today are more attuned to our work habits and as more and more families work split shifts and travel farther and farther away from home for work, the less they tend to eat together as a family," he said.

Another Southern tradition — the ceremonial exchanging of food — is also waning, according to the survey taken by Fitzgerald.

"Sharing or exchanging food is still quite natural among most blacks and elderly whites in the community," he commented. "But not among the middle-aged and young people.

"The eating habits of the elderly as a group tended to be more traditional and structured than those of the younger families," Fitzgerald observed. "Older people tended to have gardens more often than middle-aged people and they generally had better diets than the youth and middle-aged."

Fitzgerald, who came to UNC-G in 1970, is one of the pioneers of the discipline of nutritional anthropology which explores the relationship between anthropology and nutrition.

A native of Lexington, Fitzgerald has edited two books including "Nutrition and Anthropology in Action," which he believed to be the first book to be published in the field of nutritional anthropology.

He received both his undergraduate degree and Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and his master's degree from Stanford University.

People on diets are not the same sweethearts people remember when they are pigging out.

Jolliness turns to irritability, shortness of temper, and a general falling apart. Little things get on their nerves, like discovering the answers to the crossword puzzle are printed upside down, the dog belching without so much as an "Excuse me," and someone putting new toilet tissue on the spindle with the paper unrolling from UNDER the roll.

If there's anything that ticks me off on a diet, it's recipes for diet foods with clever names. I'm an adult, for crying out loud. I can take it. Don't promise me a bowl of "popcorn" before I go to bed each night if the "popcorn" is nothing more than a bowl full of carrots, celery and radishes. I'm not stupid. I'm bound to find out and I'll hate you for it.

Do you know what all that cuteness does to dieters? It makes them suspicious and it makes them mean. I don't trust any food anymore with quotation marks around it. "Chocolate" Eclairs for the dieter (Oh, yeah!) . . . Beef "Gravy" (Sure!) . . . Grow Thin "Pizza" (Uh-huh!) . . . "Hollandaise Surprise Sauce" (Ha ha!).

Don't give me your "Adam and Eve on a Raft." Tell me it's an imitation egg dropped in a dietary piece of bread with a hole in the middle resting in a skillet that has been sprayed by a substitute oil and has the appeal of lunch at the eye bank.

Spare me your "almost" lasagna. Give it to me straight. Dare to reveal that you've put a lasagna pattern over peeled cucumbers and cut out something that resembles pasta, buried them with a sauce substitute, topped by a skim cheese with less calories than your fingernails.

You're looking at a woman who has gone down the road before that has been paved with promises and a lot of "Prune Dandy," "Pretend Pate," Creative Ice Cream," "Virtuous Shortcake," "Confetti Consomme," and "Party Liver." I'm a pro. All I have to do is look at the bottom of the recipe and see those nine little letters UNLIMITED and I know I've been had.

A friend of mine who is also a disciple in the church of latter-day dieters scanned the menu in a restaurant the other night and against her judgment ordered, "Waistline Chocolate Kabobs." She had an entire kabob in her mouth before she realized it was liver.

Upbeat Look Fashions Shown In Paris

By SUZY PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

PARIS (AP) — French fashions will be entering the 80s with a upbeat look, featuring short skirts, and sophisticated, feminine styling. That's the prediction from Paris as French designers prepare to show their haute couture collections for next spring and summer in a whirl of parties and shows began this past Sunday.

No sackcloth and ashes for the couture to match the dreary world headlines about political crises and energy problems. The designers are determined to make happier headlines of their own, turning out more bright luxury models than ever.

The opulent outfits shown next week will retail for $4,000 and up and are aimed at a clientele of some 3,000 of the world's wealthiest women. But the prototype clothes will set the tone for the multi-billion-dollar fashion industry.

Twenty-five top couturiers will show at least 80 high fashion outfits each in a hectic week, beginning with a Nina Ricci buffet and fashion show last Sunday night. Among the other events on this week's fashion agenda are a dance at Regine's, an informal dinner given by Pierre Cardin and Princesse Ghislaine de Polignac and a breakfast-show by Guy Laroche at Paris' newest chic nightclub, the Club 78.

The collections will be focusing on hemlines, with the accent on short, knee-length skirts. Fashion-watchers like to contrast the new hemlines with those of 1970, when Yves Saint Laurent, widely acknowledged now as France's most influential designer, brought out a nearly floor-length maxi-skirt, in reaction to the mini boom of the 60s.

Since then, skirts have zoomed up and down, with most hovering below the knee. There have been lots of floppy clothes and swirling voluminous skirts. And then the shaped look made a come-back only last year.

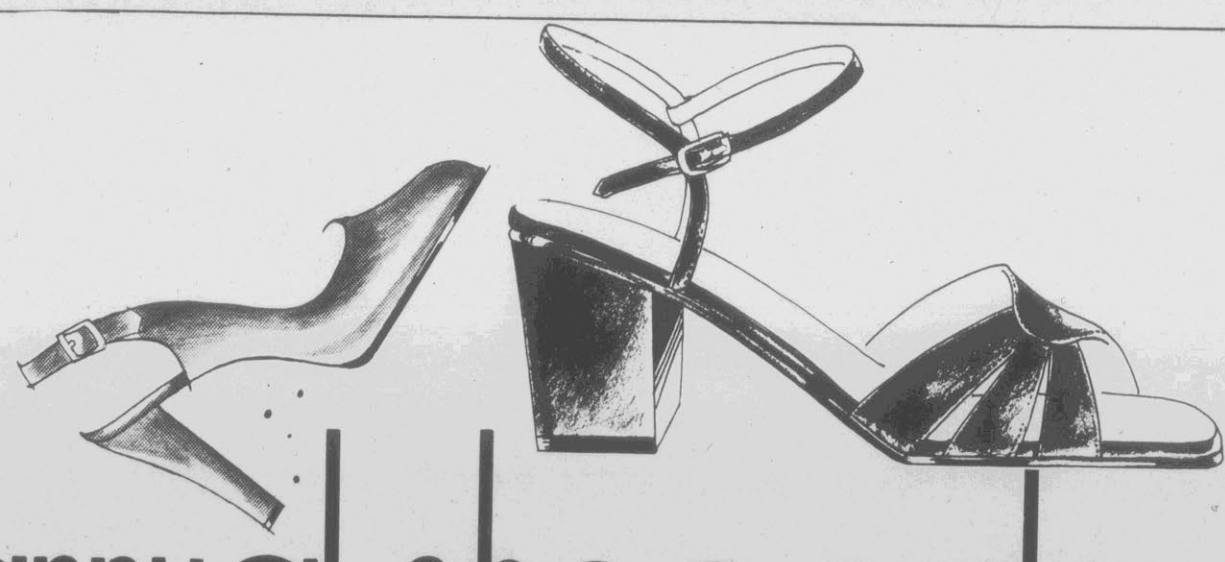

Next spring's silhouette will cling close to the body, with little short Spencer jackets emphasizing the waist. You'll see hip-hugging or even rounded-hip skirts, straight or flaring out at the hem, with pleated skirts to make life easy for people who walk.

Elderly Need New Image

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Elderly people are not treated fairly on prime-time television, says a Syracuse University specialist on aging who feels the networks have a long way to go in picturing the aged in a more realistic and positive light.

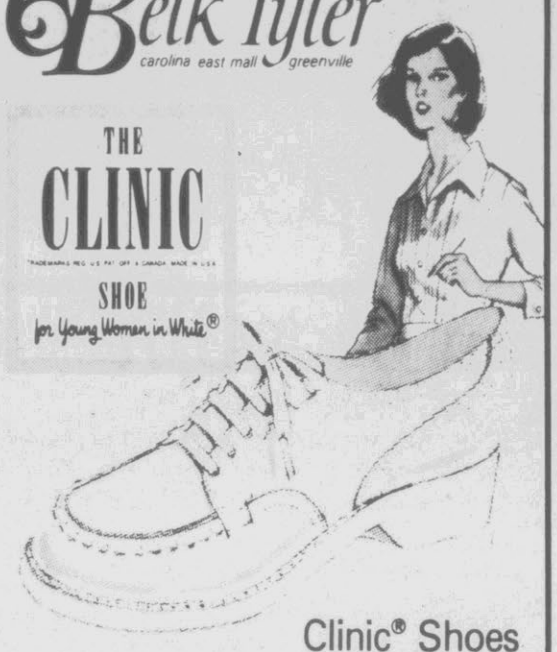

Neal Bellos, associate professor in the All-University Gerontology Center, says that, in spite of some changes, the elderly are still not accorded the treatment they deserve on television.

"I think I'd like to see the elderly portrayed as they are, not as one segment of the population that is ill or senile or beset by problems," he says. "The elderly are a group of varying individuals, some of whom are quite vigorous and active and making a contribution to society. Some do have problems, but they are coping with them and many are doing it quite successfully."

The National Council on Aging is working with the networks to bring more realistic portrayals of the elderly to television. The results, says Bellos, are encouraging and indicate that executives are beginning to realize older people are an increasingly important part of the mainstream of American life.

Being Present Can Be A Gift

1980 by Chicago Tribune N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I will be married 40 years soon and plan to give a dinner party to celebrate this joyous occasion.

Our family and most of our friends are aware that this will be our 40th wedding anniversary, but we positively do not want any gifts!

You once stated in your column that it was improper to indicate, "No gifts, please," on an invitation. Later you not only reversed yourself but offered some excellent alternatives. What were they?

KANSAS CITY INQUIRY

DEAR K.C.: I have stated many times that any mention whatsoever of gifts was improper on an invitation. This includes the forthright "No gifts, please," as well as the tasteless (in my view) suggestion that cash is preferred to any other type of gift.

Many sent sample invitations in which gifts were mentioned. Below are two that changed my mind:

"Mary and John Jones invite you to dine with us on the evening of June 1 at our home at 7:30 p.m.

"It is in celebration of our 20th wedding anniversary. Your friendship is a cherished gift. We respectfully request no other."

"The children of Alice and Donald Brown invite you to celebrate with them the 50th wedding anniversary of their parents. A reception will be held May 20, 5 p.m. at Hillcrest Country Club.

"We request your help in compiling a book which recalls memories from our parents' first 50 years of marriage. On the enclosed sheet, we ask that you write one memory or event that you have shared with them, and return it to us by April 25. We believe that loving memories they have shared with you, their friends, would be the most treasured gift they could receive; therefore, we request that no other gift be sent."

DEAR ABBY: Years ago, when married people were invited to weddings, the invitations were addressed to "Mr. and Mrs."

Have times changed? Recently my physician husband received two wedding invitations addressed to him only. One was from a nurse, the other from a patient. He said both knew he was married.

He attended both weddings by himself because he is dedicated to his profession; but I feel my not being invited, and his accepting without me, was rude.

Can you update me on the present customs?

INVISIBLE PARTNER

DEAR PARTNER: Forget customs, etiquette and all the rest. Kindness and common sense outranks propriety and tradition in my book.

The invitations should have included you. But since they did not, your husband should have either requested permission to bring you—or stayed home himself.

Do you plan to get rid of all those outside commitments and divide your time among family, friends and daytime television?

Before you answer, you might want to hear what a Duke University Medical Center sociologist found in a 20-year study of "successful aging."

Dr. Erdman Palmore, professor of medical sociology, says people who remain physically active and continue to participate in outside organizations are far more likely to age successfully than those who don't.

His study, which analyzed information gathered on older people between 1955 and 1976, defined successful aging as a combination of longevity, health and happiness.

"In the past, studies of successful aging have looked either at health and longevity or at happiness, but it's possible to be healthy without being happy and it's possible to be happy in later life without being particularly healthy," Palmore said in an interview.

"As far as I know, this is the first time those two ideas have been put together."

He said information from 155 of the 270 volunteers who participated in the first Duke longitudinal study of aging was analyzed to learn what factors could predict successful aging. At the beginning of the study, all participants were younger than 75.

The 155 volunteers, chosen so that their ages, sex, racial and socio-economic characteristics would reflect those in the community as much as possible, included 70 persons who were considered to have aged successfully when the project was completed.

That meant they had lived to at least age 75, had less than 20 percent disability and considered themselves either generally or always happy.

"One of the interesting things we found is that it's not how many friends you have or how you interact with your family that contributes to successful aging, but whether you maintain your activity outside this immediate circle," he said

"One way to explain this is that most older people have family and friends, and so there is nothing unusual about that. The average person, however, goes outside the home and continues his or her involvement with clubs, churches, educational institutions, civic groups, unions, etc."

It may be, the sociologist suggested, that the stimulation of trying to solve challenging organizational problems and the prestige of being associated with a group contribute in some concrete but unexplained way to both health and happiness.

Continued physical activity was the second most important predictor of successful aging in both men and women, Palmore said, with work satisfaction also being important for men.

Perhaps surprisingly, age, sex, marital status, education, intelligence, and activities with family and friends had no significant correlation with successful aging.

"There is a question as to whether physical activity itself is what contributes to good health or whether it's an ongoing lifetime pattern of taking care of yourself in general that allows and encourages more physical activity," Palmore said. "Still, among those who are healthy, the ones who are likely to remain healthy and happy in later life are the ones who are more physically active."

The finding, he said, reinforces the old cliche, "If you don't use it, you lose it."

Why physical activity may contribute to earlier death and less happiness is still under debate by scientists, the Duke professor said.

One strong theory is that inactivity may contribute to obesity which at high levels can put a tremendous strain on the heart and circulatory system. Another is that poor skeletal and heart muscle tone takes away the body's reserves in dealing with circulatory accidents like small blood clots that cause heart attacks or strokes.

"Many people who get out and exercise vigorously on a regular basis report experiencing a feeling of euphoria," Palmore said. "It may be that just sitting around contributes to depression either directly or indirectly through a feeling of lethargy."

The sociologist said there is no proof yet that increasing physical activity in secondary groups (churches, organizations, etc.) after retirement will increase successful aging. Still, he added, it probably would not hurt to try if an older person feels dissatisfied.

"The important thing we found is that it's important to maintain previous levels as long as possible," he said

Palmore said researchers are finding that as a group, older people are living longer, are more healthy than in the past and are more satisfied with their lives.

Employes Theft Is Out Of The Closet

By GALE TOLLIN
Associated Press Writer

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — "Everyday, garden-variety theft, the kind thieves think of as a fringe benefit," has serious impact on the business community, the work force and consumers, says a researcher who headed a study of employee larceny.

"Employee theft has come out of the closet," adds Dr. John Clark, the sociologist who headed the 18-month University of Minnesota study.

The report describes the recently completed project as the first large-scale, systematic study of employee theft ever conducted. It not only looks at theft and how it can be reduced but also examines such "counterproductive" behavior as overlong coffee breaks, sloppy workmanship and sick leave cheating.

Heretofore, Clark says, there was little systematic data regarding employee theft although the U.S. Department of Commerce had placed the category atop a "crimes against business" list.

In 1975, the American Management Association estimated at $40 billion the annual loss from all crimes against business — including embezzlement, arson, vandalism and theft. The total included about $10 billion in employee theft.

The university's study, aided by the American Management Association and funded by a grant from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, looked chiefly at one aspect of the 1975 report: employee theft.

Three sectors were studied. In retail stores, the commonly reported theft activity was unauthorized use of employee discount privileges. In electronic manufacturing firms, employees frequently reported the taking of raw materials or components. In hospitals, employees admitted taking such supplies as bandages, linen, thermometers and even toilet paper.

To acquire study data, the team sent questionnaires to the homes of more than 9,000 employees. Names and addresses had been furnished by cooperating employers, all in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area. There were responses from 1,497 workers in manufacturing, 1,408 in retail stores and 2,080 in hospitals.

The identities of all companies and employees were kept confidential.

The employees surveyed represented all levels of the 35 corporations — nine retail stores, 10 electronic manufacturing firms and 16 hospitals.

In retail companies, 57 percent of the respondents admitted using discount privileges to buy merchandise for relatives and friends. Twelve percent revealed they had taken merchandise and 2 percent said they had taken money. Buyers and managers padded expense accounts.

Employees most likely to steal from retail stores were those who worked part-time and came from families with a yearly income of more than $20,000.

Of the hospital employees responding, 37 percent admitted they had filched supplies and 10 percent said they had taken medicine.

The hospital employees most likely to steal were nurses and others dissatisfied with their finances and career opportunities.

In the manufacturing sector, 21 percent of the respondents had stolen raw materials — sometimes such controlled precious metals as platinum, silver and gold, used to make circuit boards. Seventeen percent had taken tools or equipment.

Richard Hollinger, the study's research director, says categories overrepresented among the manufacturing company thieves were, first, engineers who were considering job changes, and second, computer specialists and technical workers at professional and administrative levels.

In all three sectors, the most theft involvement was reported by younger, unmarried employees. Lacking seniority and dependents, they were less threatened by the possibility of dismissal, the report suggests.

A large number of thefts were by dissatisfied employees and those who perceived management as unethical. Thefts were likely to occur when supervisory personnel were viewed as unhelpful or incompetent or where the company's integrity and fairness were questioned.

"If top managers use company cars for personal trips and pad their expense accounts, lower-level people feel they can take tools home to use for a while, too," Dr. Hollinger said.

Counterproductive behavior was a secondary focus of the study. More than two-thirds of all the respondents reported taking excessively long lunch and coffee breaks, 15 to 19 percent indicated purposely slow or sloppy workmanship, and between 25 and 50 percent had taken sick leave when they weren't ill.

The researchers found that employees who reported above-average theft levels were quite likely to also indicate counterproductive behavior.

Hollinger says study data suggests that theft may have its roots in the less serious and more prevalent forms of "workplace deviance." Employees who see no negative reaction to the more innocuous forms of behavior may conclude, he says, that theft also will be ignored or tolerated.

In all three industry sectors, higher levels of theft were reported by employees who socialized with co-workers after work. Frequently they were younger employees and "talk shop" on dates, in school or while sharing rides. Hollinger said the workers don't gather to "talk about theft" but negative feelings come out if there are problems in the workplace. When an employee tells about an unfair employer or cheating supervisor, the shared knowledge tends to permeate the organization at all levels.

Management modeling, the "setting of good examples," can be far more effective than security departments in reducing theft. The study showed most security departments give scant priority to employee theft.

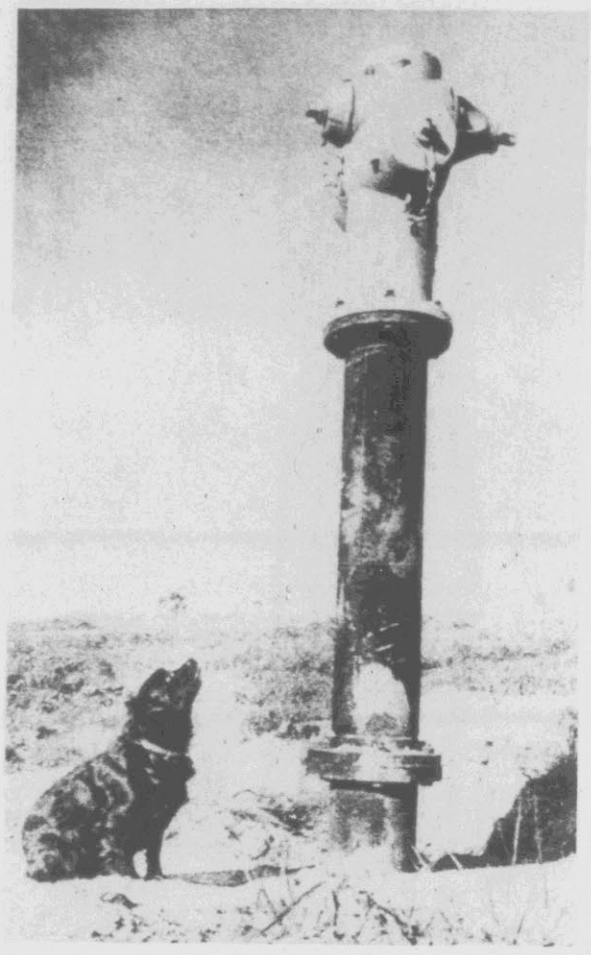

The researchers said an organization can hope to have a significant effect on employee behavior only if it exhibits a conspicuous and consistent climate of concern about controlling theft. Study data suggests improvement can be achieved if organizations repeatedly announce that employee theft is not permitted.

The most consistent predictor of theft involvement was the employee's perceived chance of being caught. There was less theft by employees who feared their thievery would be discovered.

Evidence also was found that companies with a clearly defined anti-theft policy had lower theft levels. The report said management "must clearly convey via word and deed that theft will not be tolerated."

There also was reduced thievery in organizations where theft control was a goal of the inventory control operations.

Data suggests that thievery can be reduced when stock-option, profit sharing or similar plans build a feeling among employees that they have a vested interest in the organization's success. "One does not steal from one's self," says Hollinger.

Great Danger In Quack Cures

Freese says nearly $1 billion a year is wasted by sufferers who will try anything to relieve their pain.

In addition to the needless expense, he says, quack cures can cause victims to delay getting proper medical treatment or even lead to physical damage.

Sheikhly Follies: Keeping Up With The Joneses

By ELIAS ANTAR
Associated Press Writer

RAS EL KHAIMAH, United Arab Emirates (AP) — The road winds 17 miles inland from the sea through a desolate landscape of reddish sand and stunted scrub. An occasional car goes by. Camels nibble at the odd bush.

Suddenly through the haze looms a white elephant — the 18-million-dollar Ras El Khaimah international airport, visited by 11 planes a week. It is perhaps the most absurd but not the only example of money spent to bolster the individual prestige of the rulers of the United Arab Emirates, who are plagued by endemic rivalries.

The sheikhly follies throughout this oil country are not just airports — of which it has six for a population of about 890,000 people — but also extend to the unnecessary proliferation of hotels, radio stations, electric power plants, satellite-communications facilities, even oxygen-manufacturing plants.

Since the UAE was created in 1971 by the departing British out of seven fractious emirates, formerly known as the Trucial States, central planning has been a nightmare. Each ruler went his own way, determined to keep up with his neighbors.

After the price of oil zoomed in 1973, the rulers let their imaginations run wild, and found the western architects, planners and bankers to make their dreams come true. Emirs without their own oil money borrowed from those more fortunate, mostly Abu Dhabi, which is the biggest and by far the richest member.

Ras El Khaimah is a former pirates' lair at the northern end of the UAE. Its ruler, Sheikh Saqr Mohammed El Qassimi, delayed joining the federation for several months in order to wrest more concessions from the others.

The sheikhdom has no oil of its own and lives mostly on aid money from Sheikh Zayed Bin Sultan Al Nahyan, ruler of Abu Dhabi and president of the UAE. Ras El Khaimah has just 30,000 people.

But an international airport was deemed necessary. "After all, Dubai had one, and Sharjah too..," said one longtime western official here, referring to two other emirates.The airport here can handle jumbo jets and has a 12,540 foot runway — only 260 feet shorter than the main runway at London airport.

But on a recent visit there was not a single plane to be seen. The modern terminal, completed two years ago, was empty save for a few policemen lounging on guard. Two officials stared glumly at blank television monitors.

Sheikh Saqr, residents here said, expected to strike oil a few years ago and spent accordingly. With aid money from Abu Dhabi, it is whispered here, he bought the Dorchester hotel in London. He installed a satellite ground station and a cable-television system that services just 4,000 customers.

He even allowed a gambling casino to be built, the only such establishment in all of the Arabian peninsula. It was doing well, but was closed two years ago under pressure from ultra-conservative Saudi Arabia next door.

Dubai, 90 minutes away by car, was a thriving concern years before oil was found thanks to the entrepreneurial spirit of its citizens. Its own international airport is so busy that it is being expanded.

But Sharjah, a 20-minute drive across the sand flats from Dubai, decided it needed its own airport. Up it went, even though it is quicker to drive from Sharjah to Dubai airport than to its own.

The airport was part of a scheme to make Sharjah a banking and commercial hub to rival Dubai. It is run by the same company that operates Frankfurt airport and is built to handle 2.5 million passengers yearly. But according to airport statistics, only some 120,000 passengers are expected in 1979, although it boasts that a traveler can collect luggage in three minutes. Total cost: $88 million.

Abu Dhabi, as the richest and largest emirate, has two airports in existence and a third under construction, supervised by the Paris airport authority.

The ruler of Sharjah, Sheikh Sultan Bin Mohammed El Qasimi, built hotels and office buildings by the score, even though his emirate produces a puny 17,000 barrels of oil daily. Other emirates have traffic circles in their streets, but Sharjah has flyovers with cloverleafs and grassy banks.

"The ruler was so smart he got nine flyovers for the price of seven," said one source who declined to be identified. But with the construction boom over, Sharjah owes about one billion dollars to Western banks and construction companies.

The rulers speak with separate voices, and in more ways than one. Abu Dhabi, as the federal capital, has one television channel, one Arabic radio station and one broadcasting in foreign languages. Ras el Khaimah, Sharjah and Umm el Quwein — little more than a fishing town and the poorest by far — each have their own radio stations.

Dubai, second to none, has three television channels, one Arabic radio station and another broadcasting in stereo FM. For good measure, Dubai ruler Sheikh Rashid bin Said al Maktoum built the tallest building in the emirates, a 39-story trade tower for which he paid $220 million in cash. It is half empty.

When the emirates were building themselves up in the mid 1970s, Western businessmen scuffled for the right to sleep on the floors of hotel lobbies. Up went scores of hotels. Now there are 27,000 hotel rooms in the UAE, with an occupancy rate of about 20 per cent on a good day.

There are also 20,000 empty apartments, the result, Western economists say, of helter-skelter construction with an eye on the next emirate instead of the profit sheet.

Soviet Bloc Chiefs Are An Aging Group

By STEPHEN H. MILLER

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Communist Eastern Europe faces prospects that all of its leaders will be replaced in the new decade by politics, old age or death.

There are few signs of who the new leaders will be or what brand of communism they will practice.

Poland's Edward Gierek and Czechoslovakia's Gustav Husak are both 66, East Germany's Erich Honecker and Hungary's Janos Kadar 67, and Bulgaria's Todor Zhivkov 68.

The most elderly leader of all is Yugoslavia's Josip Broz Tito, who will be 88 this coming May. He has been trying to prepare his country for his demise — without allowing any one figure to emerge as a likely successor.

There seems little chance that Eastern Europe's next leaders, except for any successors to Tito and Hoxha, would be much younger than the men now in power.

One recent Western study showed that in the past decade Soviet bloc Politburos in Eastern Europe had all grown older except for Bulgaria, where the average age fell from 61.2 to 59.7 years.

East Germany's Politburo, younger than Bulgaria's in 1969 at 60.9 years, had grown to be the oldest at 61.7 by 1979.

Czechoslovakia, which threw out an estimated 80 percent of its party leaders after the 1968 Soviet invasion, now has the youngest Politburo at an average age of 56.6 years, according to the Radio Free Europe survey.

Jammed Town Of Pericles Plans Own Salvation

By KERIN HOPE

ATHENS, Greece (UPI) — Athens goes into the 1980s with a brave new plan designed to save the city of Pericles from disastrous overcrowding and pollution.

About 3.7 million Greeks, close to 40 percent of the country's population, live in the capital. Every day some 50 families arrive from the provinces or islands, usually to join relatives already established in the metropolis.

"Our goal is to stem the growth of Athens and stabilize its population at 4.5 million by the end of the century," said Undersecretary of Public Works Stephanos Manos, who commissioned the scheme.

"We have to decentralize by making other cities attractive and by creating sub-centers within the greater Athens area. At the moment all services are in the middle of the city and the traffic problem is horrendous."

Three-quarters of Greece's industry is concentrated around Athens along with all government offices, 70 percent of doctors and half of the country's privately-owned cars.

Trees, parks and playgrounds make up only 3 percent of the Athens area, compared with around 10 percent in other European capitals. Tall apartment blocks tower above narrow streets choked with traffic. A recent survey showed the city is one of the world's noisiest, threatening the psychological health of Athenians.

Under the new plan, vehicles are barred from certain districts, notably the Plaka, the old quarter beneath the Acropolis, and hundreds of newly-planted trees line the sidewalks. In the spring, giant neon signs will come off buildings along a central boulevard so that passers-by can enjoy the splendor of neo-classical architecture.

"These are good things, but the plan has to provide more than cosmetic changes, and parts of it are just Utopian," said Costas Gartzos, an architect and one of 30 Greek city planners who have joined forces to work on the new scheme.

"We have to consider people's basic social needs in housing, recreation and waste disposal, and we have to make sure the government understands."

Pollution control may play a decisive role in the future of Athens, Gartzos said. There now is so much sulphur dioxide from central heating systems and vehicle exhausts in the air that the marble surface of the Acropolis temples has begun to crumble. Last fall the Caryatids, 2,400-years-old stone maidens from the Erectheum temple, had to be moved into a museum for protection from the atmosphere.

"The smog contains a nasty mix of nitrogen dioxide, hydrocarbons and organic particles, a distinct health hazard, especially for people with bronchial troubles," said Panayotis Christodoulakis, an environmental scientist.

About two-thirds of the city's sewage flows untreated into the sea, along with its industrial waste, some of it containing cadmium, lead and carcinogenic oils, he said.

"The fish have moved out of the Saronic Gulf because there is no oxygen left to breathe. And swimming in polluted water gives fair-skinned northern tourists skin diseases."

The new plan calls for a British-designed sewage treatment plant and strict zoning laws to curb new industry around Athens. A new subway, costing nearly $1 billion, and roads costing $2 billion will handle the traffic problem, the government hopes, although transportation improvements in Athens usually run into trouble from archaeologists.

Athenians themselves will help defray the cost of rescuing the city through new taxes on real estate, services and licenses for shops and businesses, now under study.

But cynics recall that the only city plans ever carried out were Pericles' rebuilding after the 480 B.C Persian invasion, the Roman Emperor Hadrian's enlargment of the city he admired, and King Otto of Bavaria's scheme for the capital of newly-independent Greece in the 1830s.

"It's up to the Athenians in the end," Gartzos said. "They have to react and demand specific improvments in the quality of their lives if the city is to remain inhabitable."

Research Cancer Risks In Coal

By MATT YANCEY
Associated Press Writer

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (AP) — A lab established to study the effect of atomic bomb radiation on cattle is turning its focus to the cancer risks associated with a new commitment to coal as an energy resource.

"We know more about radiation in terms of human health hazards than we do almost any other toxic agent," says Dr. H.E. Walburg, director of the Department of Energy's Comparative Animal Research Laboratory here.

"But we're so ignorant of other toxic materials and there are a lot of environmentally caused cancers around," he said. "Smoking aside, most of them are from a chemical presence compared with a relatively few from radiation."

The University of Tennessee and the Atomic Energy Commission set up the lab in 1948 to investigate the lifetime effect of radiation on cattle accidentally exposed to the first atomic bomb test in New Mexico.

The lab was mainly an agriculture venture aimed at determining how and where radioactive nuclides settled in the food chain and at what levels they posed a health threat.

But in 1973, it turned its efforts toward extrapolating data from animals to estimate the effects of relatively low levels of radiation on humans.

Despite demands — particularly after the Three-Mile Island nuclear-plant accident last March — for more research on low-level radiation, Walburg said most of the needed work had been done.

"It's a societal paranoia about nuclear power, not a scientific problem," he said. "We have materials in the environment that we don't know even if they're toxic or not, much less how toxic.

"It's much more important for us in research to define those things rather than further refine radiation effects, so we're kind of getting back into the agriculture end now with coal."

The impetus for developing coal has intensified efforts to determine how carcinogenic are its byproducts. Funding for Walburg's lab will rise from $1.9 million in 1979 to $2.5 million in 1980.

"There are a lot of chemicals, most of them organic, in the coal energy cycle which can cause cancers," he said. "We're trying to establish at what level the contaminating materials in the food product become dangerous."

Using pigs, the lab has already started research on determining if and how cadmium and benzopyrene, two carcinogenic substances found in coal, affect the metabolism of swine.

Pigs are ideal for the research because they are part of the food chain but also have close to the same surface area, body weight, cardiovascular and gastrointestinal systems as humans, Walburg said.

"What we're trying to do is find out what effect these chemicals ultimately will have on people's nutrition," he said. "But it's the kind of thing that takes five years of research before we can say an X amount is dangerous to your health."

Views Of A Testy Tester On Intelligence Testing

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Arthur Jensen has this little box with red buttons and green lights which he says can indicate intelligence quotients by measuring one's reaction time, the quickness of the brain.

He notices that he scores higher in the morning than in the evening. He also says that two cans of Ranier Ale put him in "a different category."

One New Year's Eve party he and his wife tested guests when they arrived and when they were about to leave. The guests lost some 15 points of IQ between hello and auld lang syne.

These things would be only matters of idle curiosity if Arthur Jensen had not published a report a decade ago that shocked the academic and psychological worlds. He found that blacks rated well below whites in IQ tests, and suggested that the reason could well be genetic.

It came at a time when the effort to expand black opportunities academically and economically was moving into high gear. It was preceded and succeeded by pseudo-scientific notions that black and white were unequal. It drew angry and predictable fire.

Now Prof. Jensen, a tall, mild-mannered University of California psychologist, has published a new book, "Bias in Mental Testing," surveying in 774 pages the validity of intelligence testing and opening up Pandora's Box again.

Opponents of Jensen argued that standard intelligence tests have a built-in "cultural bias" that precludes many blacks and other deprived minorities from doing as well as whites.

In his new book, Jensen marshals data and evidence that show, he contends, that such cultural bias in tests fails to account for the difference.

That first time Jensen offered his notions connecting IQ and race, he suffered much personal abuse — abuse which would have given others pause about bringing it up again.

Police rescued him from lectures. He was mobbed and shouted down by demonstrators. He was quietly assigned bodyguards by campus police. The worst of it came in Australia where demonstrations forced several universities to cancel his appearances. Once, a learned colleague in London stood up to defend Jensen's work and was beaten up and had to be taken to a hospital.

"I had some pretty hair-raising experiences," Jensen says without much emotion. When asked, he admits that friendships and personal relationships were and are affected to this day.

"Some people won't talk to me. Some won't even get on the same elevator with me."

At 56, Jensen does not look like the sort who would seek out a storm, much less create one. His colleagues have told him that they would have crumpled long ago in the face of the anger and opposition.

"If I were the kind of person who took things personally, I would have quit too," he says.

Whether Jensen is correct in all of his deductions about intelligence, he is respected by many for his work in analyzing the measurement processes and for his doggedness in trying to look hard at all kinds of bias in intelligence testing.

It is odd that a man so wedded to intelligence testing cannot remember the first one he had. He thinks it was sometime early in school. The first test he remembers clearly was the Graduate Record Exam he took to qualify for graduate school.

Of tests in general he remembers, "It was always a special event — testing day in school. I remember the idea was to do your best."

But today, he says, "I don't see any use for IQ tests during public school, except when a child has difficulty in learning. In that case, they are a valuable diagnostic tool. They can indicate a person lacks some ability to understand the world around them."

Jensen hopes to use more sophisticated tests to discover the nature of intelligence. Why can children under 7 handle the concept of a triangle, but not a diamond, not even if you help them draw it? Somehow their brains have not matured enough to handle a figure that is essentially two triangles joined at the base.

A pure test — one in which learned intelligence does not cloud native intelligence — is a goal. For instance, a monkey will reach outside of his cage to grab a string that will enable him to pull in a banana. This never occurs to a dog, but a dog can be trained to do it. How do you separate the monkey's innate reasoning from the dog's learned reaction?

Jensen's box with red buttons and green lights is a kind of pure test, he says. It can be used on 3-year-olds or adults. The testee keeps his finger on a central button and his eyes on an arc of eight lights, each set behind a red cutton. When a light flashes on, he must release the central button and press the button directly in front of the light. The prime measurement is how fast — in milliseconds — it takes to release the central button, how fast it takes cerebrally to react to the target light. The number of lights can be varied, increasing the test challenge.

He and other researchers say the results correlate well with standard IQ tests. Would athletes do better than others in a reaction-time test? Not necessarily, Jensen says. Someone, he says, tested boxing champion Mohammad Ali, possessed of the fastest hands in the West, and he scored in the average range.

Jensen says he is always asked how high his own IQ is, and he retorts that he doesn't really care. "I wouldn't give $5 for five more IQ points," he adds, "but for 15 — well, who knows? It could change a person's career."

SBC Prexy Is Involved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the Southern Baptist Convention has backed the 1962 and 1963 U. S. Supreme Court decisions banning officially sponsored prayer and Bible reading from public schools, the convention president is part of a new movement to reinstate such practices.

The Rev. Adrian P. Rogers of Memphis, Tenn., president of the 13.5-million-member denomination, says his involvement in the effort is as an individual, not as president of the convention.

Several other Southern Baptists and conservatives of other denominations are part of the newly formed group, the Coalition for the First Amendment, which seeks congressional action to remove school devotionals from federal court jurisdiction.

Expressing "dismay" at Rogers' involvement in the effort, the Rev. James E. Wood Jr., director of the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, says Rogers' stand "completely repudiates the official resolutions" of the convention.

Rogers says he doesn't see himself opposing convention positions since the resolutions reflected only "meetings at those times," and he adds: "I am strongly opposed to any state-supported religion, but I do not believe in separation of God and government and neither did our founding fathers."

He says the court did not ban voluntary prayer in public schools, but many of schools misinterpreted the decision to do so. "The bottom line is that we have come to an almost anti-God and humanistic approach in our school systems because of their misapplication of the Supreme Court ruling."

'Accredited' Camps Listed

NEW YORK (UPI) — When the American Camping Association issues its annual parents' guides to accredited camps, can spring be far behind?

The four regional guides are published in midwinter because that's when parents screen camps and meet with camp directors, says Alan J. Stolz, the association's public information chairman.

All listings are checked, and periodically rechecked, by ACA for basic operating standards in health, safety, advertising accuracy and staff qualifications, among other things. Listings include both private camps and those sponsored by youth-serving agencies and religious groups.

The 1980 Northeast, South, Midwest and West guides are now available for $3.95 each, including first class postage and handling, from: Publications Dept., ACA, Bradford Woods, Martinsville, Ind. 46151.

Strange 'Puppy' Was Lion Cub

POLITICAL COURSE

PURCHASE, N.Y. (AP) — A workshop analyzing the strategies of current presidential candidates is among the courses offered this spring at Manhattanville College.

He also wondered why at 4 months old it was strong enough to break a heavy leather leash. When the owner tried to put another leash on, the animal bit him.

Both animal and master were taken to a hospital where a veterinarian announced, "This is no dog, it's a lion cub."

Recently-Found Papers Shed Light On Treaties

By ERIC NEWHOUSE
Associated Press Writer

FORT THOMPSON, S.D. (AP) — "We were threatened and the commissioner said if we did not want to sign we would be moved to the Indian Territory and not receive any rations," said the elderly Sioux, Eagleman.

"But the reason I signed these papers was because I wanted a piece of blue broadcloth which the commissioner was giving out to the signers as I was a youth and wanted to be dressy and catch the eyes of the girls."

Eagleman was 67 in 1918 when he told an interpreter about the surrender of the sacred Black Hills of South Dakota to white men. His statements appear in tribal records recently rediscovered by a tribal employee on the Crow Creek Indian reservation and made available to a reporter.

On appeal by the federal government, the Supreme Court agreed to determine whether the Sioux Indians are entitled to $104 million for 7.5 acres of western South Dakota they gave up so reluctantly a century ago. That award by the U.S. Court of Claims is the largest on record.

The Sioux had been guaranteed the western half of the state forever by the Laramie Treaty of 1868, which required a vote of three-fourths of the adult, male members of the tribe to modify.

But six years later, Lt. Col. George Custer discovered gold in the hills and prospectors launched a California-style gold rush onto the Indian lands.

And a commission headed by Sen. William B. Allison of Iowa tried to persuade the Indians to relinquish their claim on the Black Hills in a special council meeting in the hills in 1875.

Standing Elk told the interpreter four decades later that Indians from Standing Rock were determined to resist.

"They selected 10 men to guard every chief," he said, "and I was one of the 10 men and they directed us to shoot the first man who signs the treaty and that is why I was there at the council and listened to every speaker. We even followed the chiefs around in the night.

"At this council, nothing was accomplished, only lots of arguments and disagreements came up," he added. "While the meeting was going on some Indians from Pine Ridge were coming towards the council shooting their guns and shouting and this caused some excitement. We were told it meant nothing, but nevertheless the meeting broke up and we all returned home."

After putting down what became known as the Sioux Wars of 1876, the federal government hardened its position and sent the commission back to visit the individual tribes with a proposed treaty to sell the territory for $17 million.

"I was like a coyote, hungry all the time, and so were the rest of the Indians as our rations were not enough," Standing Elk recalled. "They cut off our hunting grounds and besides we were not used to the new food issued to us so it was a great catastrophe among the Indians.

"We always feel angry whenever we think of the time when the soldiers stripped us of everything," he added. "This happened in 1876, it was late in the fall just when the ice was forming up along the edge of the river. They took away our ponies, saddles, ropes and guns, practically everything the Indians had, and they piled it in a pile and burned it up."

Nevertheless, Standing Elk said, most of the chiefs refused to sign the new treaty even though they were offered bribes of ponies.

On the Crow Creek Reservation, the commission used threats of starvation and bribes to force Indians to relinquish title to 7.5 million acres of land, a dozen elderly Indians said in sworn statements to the interpreter in 1918.

"The commissioners told us they would deprive us of receiving rations and clothing and also move us to the Indian Territory and we heard that the Indian Territory was not a safe place for people to live because there were all kinds of animals, insects and snakes that were very poisonous," said Bear Ghost. "And under those threats, I signed the treaty papers in 1876."

Bear Ghost, however, insisted that the agreement didn't conform to the requirements of the 1868 Laramie Treaty.

"All those 18 who touched the pen were not authorized by the different bands of this tribe," he said. "All those 18 who touched the pen each got two yards of broad cloth as pay for touching the pen.

"In conclusion," he added, "I wish to say that this what is called the Treaty of 1876 is not legal for the reason that it was not signed by three-fourths of the Indians."

Medicine Crow, Wounded Knee, Killed Dead, Not Afraid of Bear, and Eagle Shield all told the interpreter that fewer than 20 members of their tribe signed the treaty since most of the bands were out scouting for food.

In a decision earlier this year, the U.S. Court of Claims in Washington, D.C., found that only about 10 percent of the Indians had actually signed the proposed treaty.

While it did not challenge the right of Congress to take the land, it did rule that the episode violated the Fifth Amendment guarantee that citizens shall not be deprived of property without due process of law.

And it decided in a 5-2 decision that the government should pay simple interest of 5 percent on the $17 million over the past century, bringing the total to about $104 million.

Last November, the Justice Department appealed the ruling, asking the U.S. Supreme Court to review the case.

"We think the Supreme Court will affirm the Sioux position at great cost to the government," says Marvin Sonosky, attorney for the tribes in Washington, D.C.

Job Service Is For Unemployed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Out of work and don't know where to turn for help? Among the no-fee placement groups is Job Service, whose 2,500 local offices are funded by the 50 states.

Like private services, the Job Service staff interviews applicants to learn their interests, skills and experiences. They also offer aptitude tests, job counseling and references to job openings. Each office has a veterans employment representative to provide special services for job-seeking veterans.

A free booklet, "Job Service: How it Works for You," is available from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 533H, Pueblo, Colo. 81009. Among other things, the booklet provides names, addresses and telephone numbers of state agencies you can contact for additional information.

The Smithsonian Collection Of Bird Eggs

By THOMAS HARNEY
Smithsonian News Service

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Wanted: whole egg of elephant bird of Madagascar (Aepyornis), largest bird that ever lived. Bird has been extinct for about 1,000 years. Intact egg should be about the size of a football. Contact: Smithsonian Institution.

This advertisement never appeared, but Dr. George Watson, the curator of birds at the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History, admits that he would really like to acquire a real egg of the elephant bird to add to the Smithsonian's collection.

Much of the Smithsonian's collections was amassed during the 19th century, when collecting bird eggs was such a rage that thousands of people climbed trees and scaled cliffs to pluck eggs from nests — often risking life and limb in the effort.

For professional ornithologists, the quest for eggs was a scientific endeavor. But most amateur collectors were seeking eggs as trophies for the same reasons that many people collect postage stamps — for their beauty and value.

The egg-collecting mania is over now, probably forever, Watson says. "Not only is scientific collecting carefully regulated by the Government," he notes, "but today egg collecting is scorned. With the growth of the modern conservation ethic, the collector who takes eggs from a nest is looked upon as an environmental rapist."

Served Purpose

The run on eggs did serve a useful purpose, however. Collectors frequently made field observations that added to our knowledge about the breeding and natural habitats of the birds, Watson says.

Many enthusiasts, as well as such famous ornithologists as John James Audubon, donated their egg collections to the Smithsonian and to other museums and research institutions, furnishing generations to come with an important historical and scientific legacy.

The eggs, like all of the Museum of Natural History's holdings, are valuable to contemporary researchers for the biological information they supply about the past. Watson cites a recent example.

"In the late 1960's," he notes, "populations of fish-eating ospreys and brown pelicans stopped reproducing. The eggs were breaking as soon as the birds began incubating them.

"At that point, scientists came to the Smithsonian and started to compare our old eggs with the newly broken ones to see if there was any change. There was. The older osprey and pelican eggs had much thicker shells.

"We soon learned that DDT and other chlorinated hydrocarbons were interfering with the deposition of egg shell calcium and the result was that the eggshells were becoming paper-thin."

Since that time, the Smithsonian's collection has been used as a conservation tool by wildlife management experts.

Monitor Eggs

"To avoid a repeat of the osprey and pelican disaster, wildlife experts carefully monitor the thickness of the eggs of threatened and endangered birds like the California condor," Watson says. "If comparative measurements using Smithsonian eggs reveal the slightest thinning of their eggshells, action is taken to find any chemical contamination of the birds' food chain. This may make it possible to reverse the thinning trend before it reaches a crisis point."

The egg collection also provides valuable information to the scholar. "There is a lot of interest in studying eggshells, because the arrangement of the pores on eggs as seen through an electron microscope reveals detailed characters useful in bird classification that may have been previously unsuspected," Watson explains.

Egg Inventory

The egg collection is stored in cabinet drawers in compartmented, cotton-lined trays. Each compartment contains at least one clutch, or set of eggs laid by a bird. Egg clutches can number from one to almost two dozen eggs; generally each bird species lays a specific number of eggs.

Museum technician John Barber is sorting through each clutch, comparing each label against the old handwritten catalog ledger to make certain the eggs are in their proper place and properly identified. He estimates that the total number of clutches approaches 45,000; the total number of eggs is more than 125,000.

Also Checking Nests

All of the data Barber and his five helpers record is computerized, making it possible for researchers to locate egg clutches swiftly and efficiently and to print out the information associated with them.

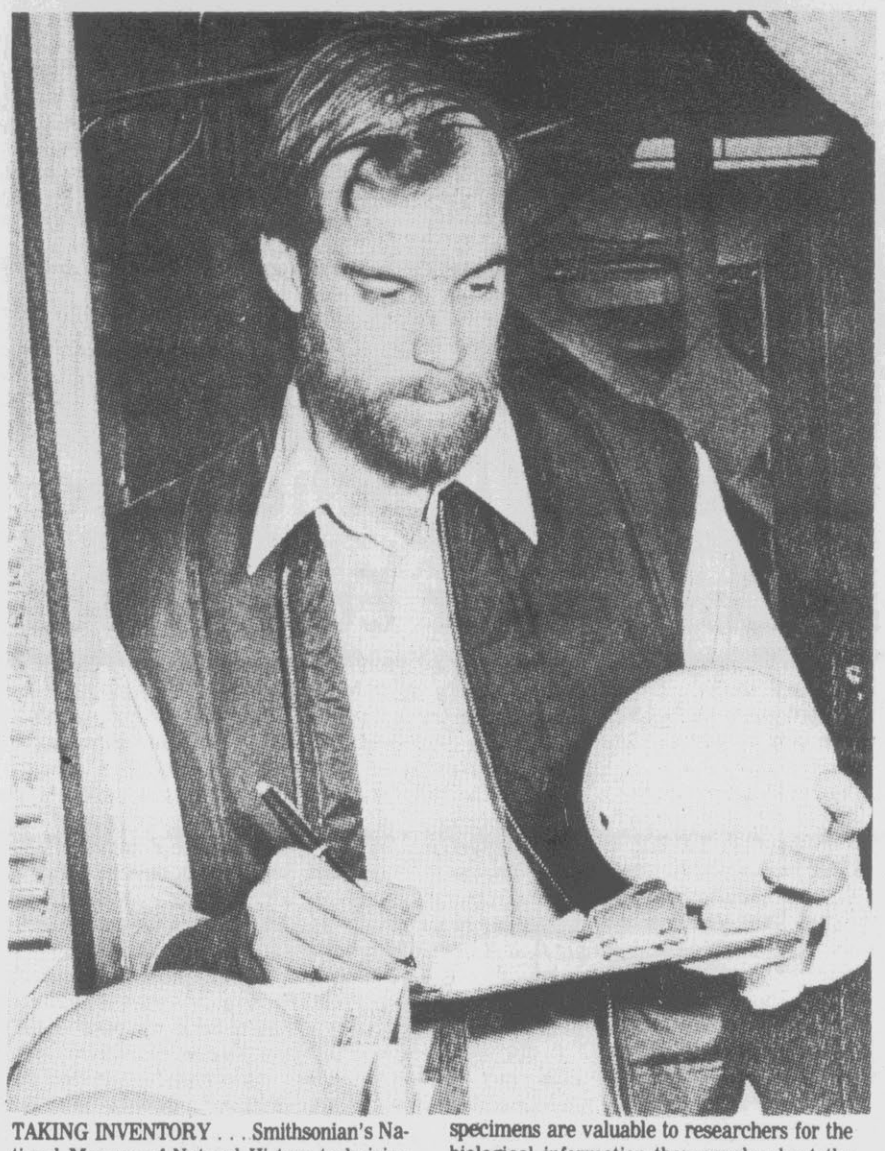

Barber simultaneously is checking out a large collection of bird nests, ranging in size from hummingbird nests no larger than a half dollar to raven nests four feet wide. One of the oddities in this collection is a human skull which had been taken over by a house wren as a shelter for its nest. It was found in the woods in the 19th century in New York and donated to the Smithsonian by a noted ornithologist.

Collection Grows

The Museum's collection of old eggs continues to grow through gifts. The collection of North American eggs is relatively complete, but study samples of many tropical species are still lacking, Watson says.

There's reason to believe, Watson notes, that the elephant bird's egg was the stimulus for the Giant Roc in the legend of Sinbad the Sailor. "There are a few intact Aepyornis eggs in private collections, and someday we hope to receive one."

Colorful Birds On New British Stamps

By Ben Hayes
British Post Office

LONDON — Birds will soon be carrying air mail between Britain and North America. They are not taking over from the more conventional transport by aircraft, however — they are featured on the latest special stamps from the British Post Office, and were issued on January 16.

The set of four stamps has among its subjects the moorhen on the 13p stamp and it is this denomination used for mail to the United States — a fitting choice, as the moorhen is a familiar sight on both sides of the Atlantic.

About 460 Species

There are about 460 recorded species of birds in the British Isles. The kingfisher (shown on the 10p stamp); the dipper (on the 11½p stamp); and the yellow wagtail (on the 15p stamp) together with the moorhen are among Britain's most popular water birds. Although protected by law they still face problems of survival because of their special habitat. Areas such as marshes and estuaries are vulnerable, with drainage and reclamation schemes and pollution all taking their toll.

The kingfisher is typically British. There is a population of only about 5,000 pairs in Britain and it is specially protected by law during the breeding season with penalties for taking eggs or disturbing its nest.

The dipper can be found throughout Europe and is an obvious choice for the 11½p stamp, which covers the basic letter rate to this area from Britain. The kingfisher is noted for its ability to hold its body under water and control its buoyancy while walking along the bottom turning over stones in search of food.

Chicks Help Out

Few people in Britain and the United States have not seen a moorhen. They breed in Britain on almost any stretch of freshwater. An interesting feature of their behavior is that the chicks help to rear the young of following broods, feeding them and helping in nest building.

Returning to Britain from its winter migration in tropical West Africa, the yellow wagtail settles in low-lying marshy fields and near gravel pits and rivers.

As well as protection by law, the survival of these species in Britain has owed much to the spread of nature reserves and bird sanctuaries across the country.

All four birds have been portrayed in vividly colorful settings by their designer Michael Warren, a professional artist who specializes in birds. This is his first venture into stamp design and he has translated the beauty of these birds into the tiny images of these postage stamps.

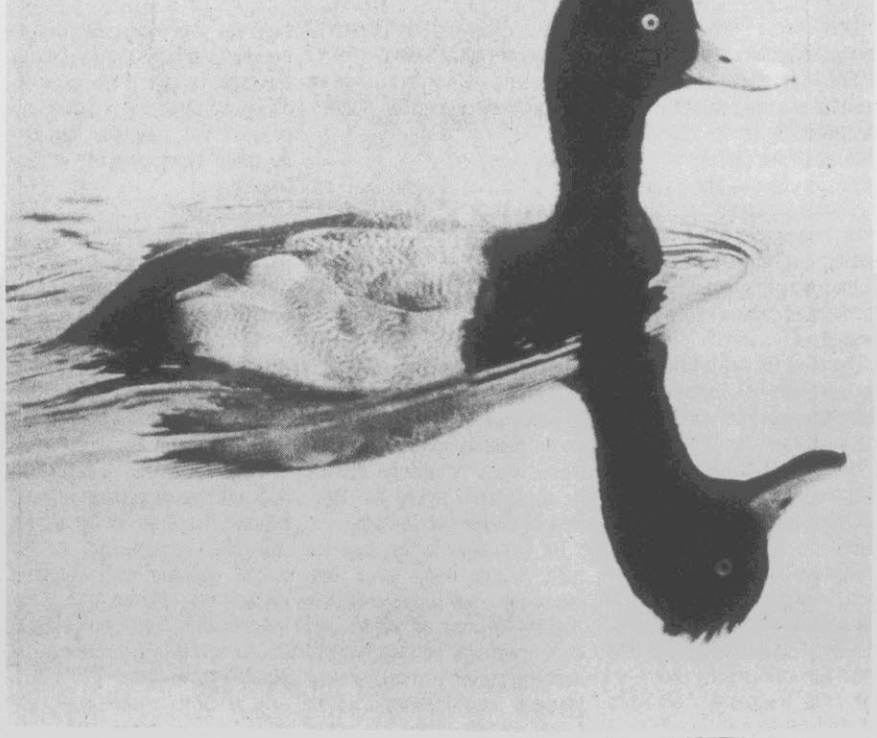

Winter Birds Of The Outer Banks

Photographs By J. Foster Scott, Dare County Travel Bureau

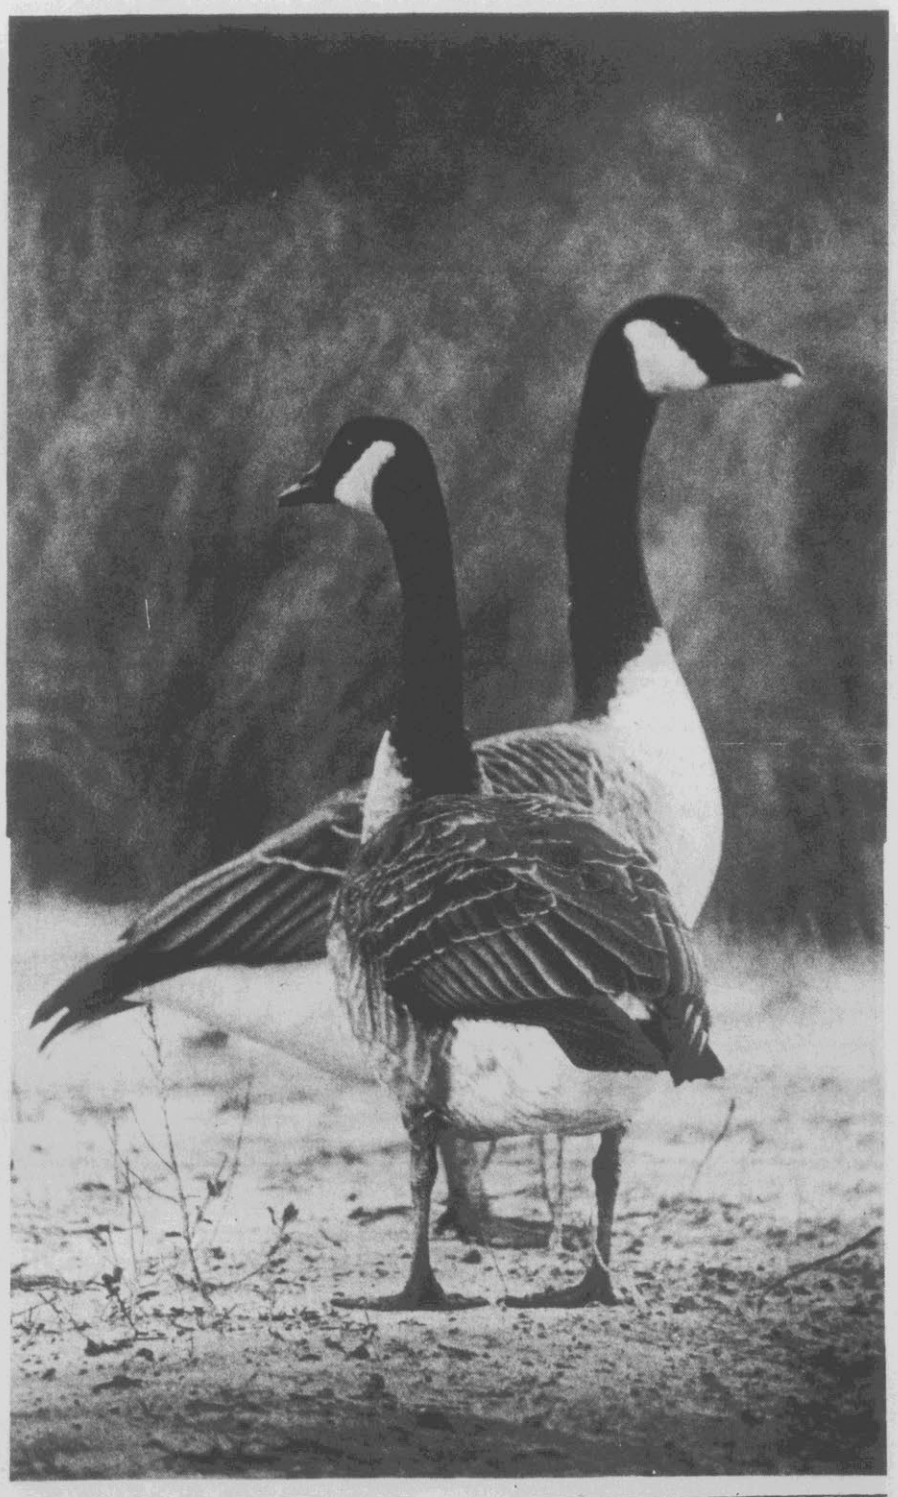

During winter months, when sun seekers are few along North Carolina's coastal and Outer Banks areas, the top attraction is the vast flocks of migrating birds that arrive.

At Lake Matamuskeet, along the sounds and ponds dotting the coastal marsh areas, many species of duck and geese wing in for winter feeding, filling the air with the singing of wings and the music of their calling out to each other.

MIRROR IMAGE? — A strange quirk of light and shadow produced this image of a blackhead duck. This duck, swimming in a quiet marsh pool on Roanoke Island, appears to have two different bills, depending on which image is observed.

A QUESTION OF LOGISTICS — A pair of plump Canada geese seem undecided about further plans on their winter itinerary. The two will probably decide to go neither north nor south, and instead join large flocks of waterfowl spending the winter near beach resorts around Nags Head.

VISITING SWANS — A formation of whistling swan provide one of the pleasant sights of winter in Dare County. The large white birds spend the winter season in the sounds and bays around the Outer Banks. Unusually large numbers of swan have been feeding this year off the eastern shore of Roanoke Island.

Safety Need For Elderly

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Accidents in the home kill more persons 65 years of age and older than any other cause, reports an Extension home-management specialist at Oklahoma State University who urges that homes be made as safe as possible for older residents and guests.

"Some home improvements to increase safety may cost money, but any accident prevented is worth the cost," says OSU's Dorothy G. Blackwell. Because people in the retirement age group are so prone to accidents, Mrs. Blackwell suggests ways to improve home safety:

—Have ample lighting in all areas of the home day and night. As people become older, they need more light than before. Also have a night light in the bathroom and in the hall.

—Arrange furniture so the pathway leading from room to room and to outside doors is uncluttered. Try to use lightweight, stable furniture and eliminate heavy pieces which are hard to move.

—Use chairs that let the feet fit firmly on the floor and let the arms rest at a comfortable position. The chair should be sturdy enough to let a person sit or rise easily.

—Select flame-retardant, stain-resistant materials for drapery and upholstery fabric.

—If small rugs are needed, fasten them securely to the floor. Use tape if necessary. Scatter rugs in halls, walkways and pathways are likely to cause falls.

Workshop Is Scheduled In Consumer Economics

ECU News Bureau

A regional workshop in consumer economics for teachers will be held at East Carolina University Friday, Feb. 15.

The program, which is scheduled for 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. in the Willis Building, is designed for 20 selected teachers of consumer education, business education, home economics and social studies.

According to Dr. Vila Rosenfeld, chairperson of home economics education at ECU, funds are available to pay for substitute teachers in order to accomodate teacher participation.

The program is supported by the N.C. Council on Economic Education, American Express, Inc. and the Joint Council on Economic Education, and sponsored by the ECU School of Home Economics.

Its objectives are:

To develop a conceptual framework for rational decision-making and to demonstrate application of this model to home economics, business education, consumer economics and social studies curricula,

To discuss key economic concepts and relevant to the decision-making process and demonstrate strategies for infusing these concepts in consumer education related courses,

To demonstrate innovative and effectuve instructional strategies such as games, simulations and audio-visual aids in consumer education,

To promote awareness of consumer rights, channels of appeal and procedure for redressing grievances in the marketplace, and

To enhance participants' levels of awareness of available and possible consumer education resource materials.

Further information about the program is available from Dr. Rosenfeld at 919-757-6903.

Spring Shad Run Plans Are Set For April 20

GRIFTON — Plans for the Spring Shad Run were finalized Monday at the Grifton Shad Festival planning meeting when the routes for the one mile, three mile and ten kilometer runs were decided. The run is scheduled for 3 p.m. April 20.

All three races will begin and end at the town lot near the water tower where the rides and hot dog and drink wagons will be located.

The town lot is also the place the speakers' platform for the Saturday morning parade and the bandstand for the Saturday evening street dance will be. The clogging and square dancing on Saturday afternoon will be there also.

Changes in parade route, and guidelines for participation in the parade were also discussed at the meeting, and the critical need for workers for hot dogs and drink wagons was recognized.

Gene Coley volunteered to find eight persons to work sometime throughout the weekend, and Tommy Wilson outlined the hours and locations where food workers are most needed. Dave Bosley distributed roster sheets to help with scheduling workers.

Persons willing to work a few hours during the April Shad Festival are urged to contact Coley, Bosley, or Shad Festival Treasurer Dallas Sasser.

Parade Chairman Jean McLawhorn asked for suggestions for overcoming the delays caused by groups stopping along the route to give performances. The committee decided that any groups that stop will be disqualified from competition for trophies.

It was decided at the same time that special performances in front of the judging stand were desirable to aid the judges and that any group wishing to perform as such would be allowed to by returning to the speakers' stand after the regular line of march.

Joe Fordham agreed to serve as entertainment coordinator and will be contacting several bands for the street dance. He will also arrange for square dance groups and clogging groups and arrange with them for providing instruction in Grifton for several weeks prior to the Shad Festival.

In addition to hot dogs and drink workers, a need still exists for persons to help with the sale of souvenir t-shirts and sweatshirts, distribute brochures and answer questions at the information booth.

The next Shad Festival planning meeting is set for February 11 at 7:30 p.m. at the Grifton Historical Museum. All interested persons are invited to attend.

Revival Begins Monday Night

Revival services will begin on Monday at Holy Trinity United Holiness Church on Douglas Avenue. The Rev. Clifton Rouse of Goldsboro will be the guest minister for the week.

The following choirs and ushers will assist during the services: Monday night, Sweet Hope Baptist Church choir and ushers; Tuesday night, Arthur Chapel Baptist Church choir and ushers; Wednesday night, Holy Temple Holiness Church choir and ushers; Thursday night, Walston Traveling Choir of Sycamore Chapel; and Friday night, Philippi Christian Church choir and ushers.

Services will begin nightly at 7:30. The Rev. Ralph Love invites the public to attend.

Fewer Priests In Near Future

NOTRE DAME, Ind. (AP) — Roman Catholic lay men and women soon will replace priests in much of what is now considered priestly work because there won't be enough priests to go around, writes the Rev. Dennis Geaney of Chicago.

He says that in the near future, priests won't have time for such tasks as administration, finance or parish and civic meetings, but will have to concentrate on the key roles of liturgist and theologian, with laity taking over the other tasks.

"Lay people are coming out of the pews and asking for a partnership in the ministry of Jesus Christ with the ordained ministers," Geaney writes in a book issued by Fides-Claretian of Notre Dame, entitled "Full Church, Empty Rectory: Training Lay Ministers for Parishes Without Pastors."

Housing Meet Slated Monday

The regular meeting of the Greenville Housing Authority will be held Monday, Feb. 4 at 7:30 p.m. at the Authority's 1103 Broad Street central offices.

Commissioners will consider routine reports concerning finance and occupancy, and status reports on the various projects in development.

Chose Real Career As Blacksmith

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

GREEN RIVER, N.Y. (AP) — Bob Wideman, a caring young man, studied to be a conservationist. Then he had second thoughts.

He decided he wanted a more forward-looking career, a life more responsive to America's real needs, a career, as the personnel brochures would describe it, with growth potential.

So he became a blacksmith. He might be on to something.

"I believe Americans are fed up with things that fall apart," he said, pounding hot steel at his anvil. "You know the phrases: 'Guarantee expires in 60 days;' 'Return in original carton.' We have come to expect that nothing will last.

"When a blacksmith makes something, though, he makes it to last forever, or at least a lifetime. Maybe lifetimes. A blacksmith makes products that are...honest. It's a good feeling to do that.

"That is why," he said, stoking his forge to a rosy hue, "there are more blacksmiths today, not fewer, than 10 years ago."

Bob Wideman is 27. He is tall, slender, with large and sinewy hands. He works in a shop beside his house lit by sunlight and heated by a wood stove. He warms his hands over the forge while waiting for the steel to glow. He wears a denim apron.

Wideman could not have picked a more apt setting to ply his picturesque craft. Green River is a rural crossroads named for the stream just back of the smithy, on the edge of the village of Austerlitz.

The village has two stores, one spired church, three mossy old graveyards, one schoolhouse that is both little and red. The skyline is the Berkshire hills. It is a setting a poet might rush to describe, as, indeed one longtime Austerlitz resident, Edna St. Vincent Millay, often did.

"For commercial reasons," Wideman said, "I couldn't ask for a better location. I'm the only blacksmith for miles. And I did get into this business for commercial reasons, not romantic ones."

Much of Wideman's work, he said, is reproducing handforged hardware for museum restorations and for working parts of pre-Revolutionary homes in this valley, where such homes abound.

He also keeps, for walk-in trade, a clutter of pokers, hinges, bolts, fire dogs, trivets, door knockers, ladles, sconces, items for sale with a feel and a heft to them that is somehow more reassuring than any fine-print warranty.

"Who knows where a revival of blacksmithing might lead?"

His hammer rang as a noonday Angelus on an anvil unchanged in form or function for ages.

"I remind you," he said, "that the first machinery for the Industrial Revolution was forged by a blacksmith. Who else? It is a trade that will last as long as an anvil will last. That's comforting."

Cost And Effect Said Unrelated

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — A recent study shows no correlation between cost and effectiveness for shampoos, says the Harvard Medical School Health Letter.

The newsletter says clinical trials were conducted with 18 well-known toilet soaps to measure their irritant effect. Researchers concluded that the irritant properties of many "bore no relationship to such characteristics as cost, transparency or the label's description of them as 'neutral,' 'superfatted' or 'for dry skin.'"

Dr. Kenneth A. Arndt, an associate professor of dermatology at Harvard Medical School, said, "Shampoos are liquid soaps."

He says clinical trials indicated the most effective shampoos for controlling dandruff were prescription products containing 2½ percent selenium sulfide, followed, in descending order, by those containing zinc pyrithione, salicylic acid and sulfur, or tar, "and finally, any non-medicated shampoos, particularly those containing surfacants (detergents) if used at least every other day."

RE/MAX REALTORS 756-7986

The real estate business in Greenville is rapidly changing and RE/MAX REALTORS is a big part of that change.

For years real estate salespeople in Greenville have operated on a 50/50 basis with their respecitve brokers. This means that when a sales transaction is finalized the real estate salesperson who closes the sale received 50% of the commission and his employer receives the other 50%.

If you're a qualified sales professional currently in real estate, or in another sales position with an interest in real estate sales, RE/MAX wants to have a talk with you!

The RE/MAX red, white and blue listing signs are beginning to pop-up throughout the Carolinas and we're convinced, it's the sign of changing times in Greenville.

We will help make your house payments

It's true. When you buy your newly constructed home from us, we will pay a portion of your monthly mortgage payment for the first year. It's very simple.

Here's why we're doing this. Many buyers seem to be hesitating, waiting for interest rates to come down. But since construction costs are rising so rapidly, tomorrow's mortgage payment is almost certain to buy less house than you can buy today.

For a limited time, when you come to us to buy your new home, using conventional financing (which we can help you arrange), we'll pay a portion of your house payment from a special trust account for the first year.
If you are in the market for a home, you owe it to yourself to talk with us about our plan. Call us today for an appointment.

There's No Substitute For Happiness

Scott Baio is a family man.

That is, the multitalented young television and film star believes in a close and loving family relationship, such as he shares with his parents and his older brother and sister, who are twins.

Baio's home life is the antithesis of the role he portrays as teen-aged Buff Saunders in "The Boy Who Drank Too Much," to be broadcast Wednesday, Feb. 6 (9 to 11 p.m.), on CBS-TV. The poignant drama is about friendship and loyalty played against the stark facts of teen-age alcoholism.

Buff is a 16-year-old high school ice-hockey student, who lives an isolated existence with his alcoholic father. Lacking a strong self-image fostered by the feelings of self-consciousness and his father's failure to provide guidance, the teen-ager finds temporary solace in alcohol. He begins to drink so heavily that his very life is threatened.

His teammate and best friend, Billy Carpenter (Kerwin), becomes aware of the boy's tragic and self-destructive habit and actively commits himself to saving his friend. But the adults in his life fail to help and voice sharp disapproval of his friendship with Buff. Then Billy puts himself on the line, endangering his own health, his grades and his social relationships.

"Buff's alcoholic father is played by Don Murray," says Scott. "They have moved around a lot, and Buff has a hard time making friends. There isn't anyone he can talk to about his problems. Alcohol is a substitute for what he's lacking."

Baio considers himself fortunate because he doesn't need substitutes.

"My family gave me a wonderful set of values and a lot of love," he said. "If I have some problems and can't work them out for myself, I talk them over with my family. Somebody is always around."

Baio is originally from New York. For a variety of reasons, including his career, the family voted on the plan, then decided to move to Los Angeles.

TOP TO BOTTOM, Lance Kerwin, Scott Baio, and Ed Lauter star in the drama special, "The Boy Who Drank Too Much," Wednesday, Feb. 6 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

THE WANDERERS have made a startling discovery, the planet Earth!, in "Galactica 1980," a two-part movie starring (l to r) Robyn Douglas, Kent McCord, Lorne Greene and Barry Van Dyke on Sunday, Feb. 3 (7-8 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

'Colonel' Barker

Phyllis George had a great time co-hosting the Pasadena Rose Bowl Parade with Bob Barker, and her hubby-governor John Y. Brown decided to do something special for the veteran entertainer. As a result, Brown's first official act for 1980 was to make Barker an honorary Kentucky Colonel.

They're Different

Pat McBride, who coaches the Major Indoor Soccer League's St. Louis Steamers, says there's a big difference between the indoor and outdoor games. "Outdoors, sometimes your favorite player may go 10 minutes without the ball. If he does that indoors, he's in the locker room."

St. John's, Louisville Clash

The St. John's Redmen, currently riding the crest of a 12-game winning streak, will play host to the Louisville Cardinals Sunday, Feb. 3. NBC will telecast this meeting of nationally ranked powers (2 to 4 p.m.).

The contest is highlighted by a possible head-to-head match-up between All-American guards — Reggie Carter of St. John's and Darrell Griffith of Louisville. Carter, the leading scorer for the Redmen (16.5 through 15 games) is the man coach Lou Carnesecca wants to have the ball in clutch situations. The 6-3 senior canned a baseline jumper at the buzzer to beat Duke in last year's NCAAs and he recently engineered another big win with a similar shot that led to a three-point play and a dramatic 71-69 win over Georgetown.

Griffith, a 6-4 senior whose offensive exploits have become legend around Louisville, his hometown, has taken on the role of team leader. One of only two seniors on coach Denny Crum's 1979-80 squad, he leads the club in scoring (22-plus ppg), assists and steals.

Six-Hour Salute To Hope

A star-spangled six-hour salute to Bob Hope's 31 incredible years of entertaining American troops will be telecast on NBC two consecutive Sundays, Feb. 3 and 10 (8 to 11 p.m. both nights).

These Hope overseas Christmas shows were a tradition which brought enjoyment to millions of persons serving in the Armed Forces and millions more Americans who saw them at home. They were consistently rated in the top 10, and three of the specials are rated in the top 15 shows of all time.

The roster of personalities to be seen on the salute reads like a who's who in show business, and includes stars who traveled with Hope as well as others who circled the globe to entertain American troops.

Hope first began entertaining the troops May 6, 1941, when he took a group of Hollywood performers to March Field near Riverside, Calif., to do his first radio show for airmen stationed there. For the next seven years, he broadcast all but two of his regular radio shows at Army, Navy and Marine bases.

Throughout World War II and the Korean conflict, Hope traveled more than a million miles and entertained 10 times that many troops, appearing at almost every military base in this country and abroad.

The overseas tours became a Christmas custom in 1948 when the entertainer went to Berlin at the request of Stuart Symington, then Secretary of the Air Force, to put on several shows for the GIs involved in the airlift.

Between 1949 and 1972, Hope traveled to many countries, including Japan, Korea, Greenland, Iceland, Morocco, Spain, Italy, Scotland, Turkey, Greece, Libya, Italy, Vietnam and Thailand.

AGELESS TROUPER — The legendary Bob Hope will look back on three decades of entertaining American service personnel in "Bob Hope Overseas Christmas Tours: Around the World with the Troops: 1941-1972" a two-part retrospective airing Sundays, Feb. 3 and Feb. 10 (8-11 p.m.) both nights on NBC-TV.

Magic Snow

In 1932, the Winter Olympics began on Feb. 4 with 17 nations and 364 athletes participating. Rain was falling and brown grass was visible everywhere. Then, almost as if by magic, snow fell on the night of Feb. 3. This left a blanket of white to greet Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the 3,000 other spectators at the opening ceremonies the next day.

Forty-eight years later, Lake Placid has the same snowless problems for the 1980 Games. However, due to modern technology, there is white on Whiteface Mountain because of the various snowmaking machines. Even the cross-country trails have been coated with manufactured snow.

When Marvin Bader, ABC Sports' Director of Special Projects, was asked if there was any forecast for snow in Lake Placid, he glibly replied, "Sure, there is a forecast for snow — in 1981!"

Amateurs Funded

The major leagues' 1980 appropriation for amateur baseball totals $435,333, representing an increase of nearly 6 percent over last year. An allocation of $233,333 was approved for eight youth programs. They are: Pony Baseball, American Legion Baseball, American Amateur Baseball Congress, Little League Baseball, Babe Ruth Baseball, National Amateur Baseball Federation, All-American Amateur Baseball and the National Federation of State High School Athletic Associations.

Okie Has Horse Sense

The lost arts of America's western range land — riding, roping and shooting — are very much alive, according to rodeo impresario Hub Hubbell, whose trick horse, Okie, has a starring role in "Rodeo Red and the Runaway." The NBC-TV Special Treat presentation is encoring Tuesday, Feb. 5 (4 to 5 p.m.).

Hubbell, a talented performer and rodeo announcer, says he's been upstaged by his 9-year-old gelding, Okie, many times. "On command, Okie can smile, say his prayers, pose as a statue, march, trot and retrieve a handkerchief. All of these tricks were performed by him in 'Rodeo Red and The Runaway,' only I wasn't his partner. He was teamed for his appearance with Marta Kober, a young girl who showed an extraordinary sensitivity towards animals."

Hubbell was pleased with Okie's performance before the TV cameras. "We had no problems with him. He responded very quickly to Marta's gentle nature, and by the end of shooting they were friends. The only incident with Okie that occurred during the filming showed us all that he had a sense of humor. He was called upon to give a performance with Marta for Geraldine Fitzgerald (who stars in 'Rodeo Red'). We used a mathematical trick that I had taught him. Marta asked him how many days of the week he worked, and he was supposed to go to a row of numbers painted on wooden cards and pick one. With the cameras rolling, Marta gave Okie the command. He walked over to the row of cards and picked up the number zero, before going into his smile and picking up the number six."

'Rodeo Red' is the story of Ella (Fitzgerald), a strong-willed prairie loner who befriends a young fugitive named Stacey (Kober) and an abandoned rodeo horse.

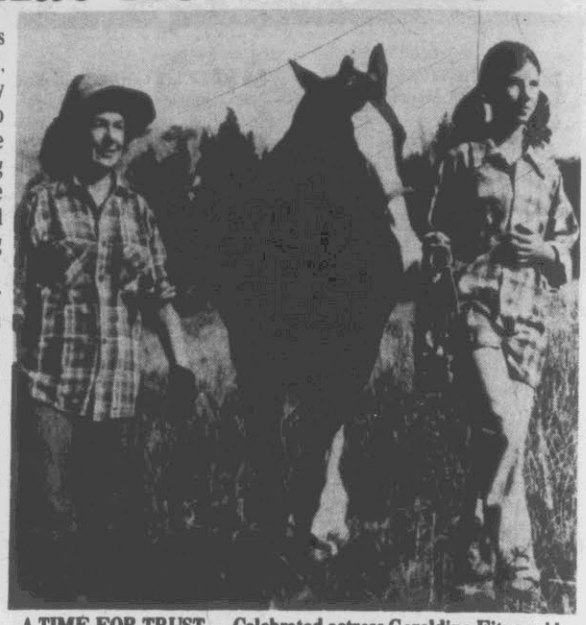

Stacey becomes disenchanted with the attention her father, Chet (Gil Rogers) is devoting to her stepmother (Marlena Lustik), and decides to run away. She sets out on an uncharted course and by evening stumbles upon a large red horse who keeps her company through the night.

In the light of the morning, Stacey awakens to find that her animal friend, Big Red, belongs to Ella. Then the rugged prairie dweller tries to discover why the young girl is traveling alone. But Stacey won't reveal the real reason.

Bowie's Right

Commissioner Bowie Kuhn has been saying for years that baseball is the biggest entertainment bargain, and it looks like he's right. The average baseball ticket for 1980 will be $4.34. A ticket to a National Football League will be $9.75, the National Hockey League $8.90, and the National Basketball Association $6.25.

A TIME FOR TRUST — Celebrated actress Geraldine Fitzgerald (l) stars as Ella, a strong-willed prairie woman who befriends Stacy, a young runaway, played by Marta Kober, and teaches her to experience love for an abandoned horse named Big Red in the NBC-TV Special Treat presentation, "Rodeo Red and the Runaway," Tuesday, Feb. 5 (4-5 p.m.).

Behind The Scenes

Jimmy Baio is the first to admit that very few things upset him.

Indeed, by reputation he's one of the most even-tempered teen-age actors in Hollywood. Even when he's had a long day on the set of "Soap" and still has to spend three hours of that same day in a classroom with a tutor, he's never bent to the pressure.

Nevertheless, young Jim does have a pet peeve. In his case, however, it has nothing to do with his work. Rather, it concerns the awkward circumstances he's sometimes found himself in while traveling from city-to-city making public appearances.

"You're kind of vulnerable when you're on the road and you're my age," Jimmy says with a slight grin. "I mean, it's not every teen-age kid who goes flying across the country, checking into hotels and ordering room service — alone!"

His experiences 'on the road' could fill a book. Once Jim was about to get behind the wheel of a car provided him as a courtesy, but it was towed away. That happened because the actual owner had a lot of unpaid parking tickets.

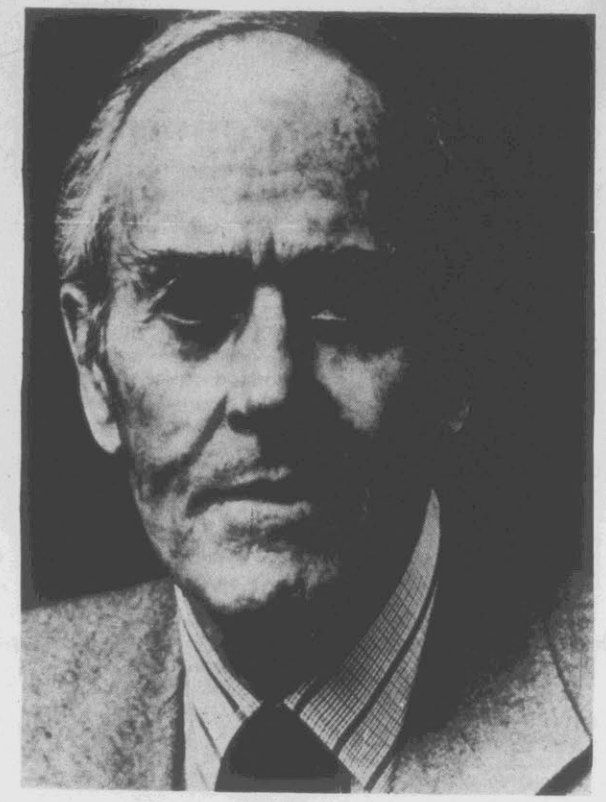

And, on other occasions, he's arrived at a hotel after a long airplane trip, only to find that he doesn't have a reservation.

Of course, the people who invited him were to have made the arrangements. But since they didn't, Jim had to get a room on his own. Then, because he's not old enough to have a credit card, he's had to pay cash when he checked out. Luckily, he's always had money with him.

On one of these occasions, he went to sign for his dinner, only to find that he couldn't — cash was required because he's still a minor. That, of course, was quickly corrected by the management.

Come to think of it — no wonder Jim's pet peeve is being on the road.

'Short Story' Returns

HENRY FONDA hosts "The American Short Story," premiering Monday, Feb. 4 at 9 p.m. on PBS. The series debuts with Ring Lardner's "The Golden Honeymoon," starring James Whitmore and Teresa Wright.

Seventeen short stories by eminent American authors will be featured on PBS when "The American Short Story" returns. Well-known actor Henry Fonda will host the series.

The series premieres with Ring Lardner's "The Golden Honeymoon," Monday, Feb. 4 (9 p.m.). The drama stars James Whitmore and Teresa Wright, who play Charley and Lucy, a married couple of 50 years who embark on a dream vacation to pre-Depression Florida. There they encounter her old suitor, who is on holiday with his wife. Lucy quickly arranges for the two couples to socialize — little realizing that soon the septuagenarian men will be locked in adolescent combat ranging from verbal put-downs and cards to check-grabbing and horseshoes.

The second drama in the series, "Paul's Case," was adapted from Willa Cather's short story. Eric Roberts stars as a young man in turn-of-the-century Pittsburgh who steals money from his employers to gain entry to a world of glamour and refinement.

He journeys to New York, where he briefly enjoys the life of which he dreams, but soon realizes that he cannot long sustain this life.

James Thurber's "The Greatest Man in the World" is the third adapted story, and stars Brad Davis ("Midnight Express"), Carol Kane and Howard daSilva. The final program in February, Nathaniel Hawthorne's fable "Rappaccini's Daughter," stars Kristoffer Tabori and Kathleen Beller.

Upcoming programs include Geraldine Fitzgerald in Katherine Anne Porter's "The Jilting of Granny Weatherall"; Olivia Cole and Cleavon Little in Ernest Gaines' "The Sky is Gray"; Robert Preston and Fred Gwynne in Mark Twain's "The Man That Corrupted Hadleyburg"; and Tommy Lee Jones and Shawn Whittington in William Faulkner's "Barn Burning."

Here's New Breed

A new breed of scientist is looking at nature through engineers' eyes and asking questions about plants and animals like "How do they work?" "What are they made from?" — and, ultimately, "Why are they made the way they are?" This new generation of biologists is called natural engineers. Their work, and some of their remarkable discoveries, are documented on "Living Machines," a segment of Nova, Feb. 5 (8 p.m.) on PBS.

In natural engineering, an engineer's usual task is reversed: the scientist already has the answer because the designs, the living creatures, already exist — what remains to be discovered is what the question was.

All organisms are the end product of millions of years of evolution. "We have to assume they are good designs," says Professor Steven Wainwright of Duke University, "because the bad designs have been literally eaten up by the good ones."

As the segment demonstrates, nature has already experimented with most of the design concepts we think of as man's inventions — including the wheel.

Also featured is an interview with Steve Vogel of Duke University. He's discovered that prairie dogs efficiently ventilate their burrows by designing openings that take advantage of wind currents — changing the air in the burrow every ten minutes.

There's also unique highspeed film of insects in flight which reveals that when tiny insects fly they use aero-dynamic principles which were previously unknown.

Jane's Very Busy

Jane Withers, who's guesting in an upcoming episode of "The Love Boat," decided to do more acting during 1980. "However," laughed the vivacious actress, "I didn't think things would start rolling so fast for me when the calendar changed to the new year." Where was Jane on Jan. 2? She was at 20th Century-Fox studios, where she filmed many movies during the start of her career.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Who plays the part of Phoebe Tyler on "All My Children"? Can you tell me some information about her, and where I can write her? E. PIERCE, WILMINGTON, N.C.

A: Old movie buffs will remember Ruth Warrick (Phoebe) from the movie classic "Citizen Kane," when she was cast as Orson Welles' wife. She was trained in New York, and is originally from St. Joseph, Mo. She was on another soap — "As The World Turns" — for five years. Write to her in care of "All My Children," c o ABC-TV, 1330 Avenue of the Americas, N.Y., N.Y., 10019.

Q: Has John Schneider of "The Dukes of Hazzard" played any other roles on or off television? Y. WRIGHT, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: He had only done small parts and a couple of commercials prior to 'Dukes'. He's had extensive experience on the stage, however, and may be remembered by audiences in the Atlanta, GA, area for some of his performances in local theatre down there.

Q: Please tell me something about Catherine Bach who plays Daisy on "The Dukes of Hazzards." I also need her address. R. ELLEN, LUMBERTON, N.C.

A: Catherine, an Ohio native, is married and lives in Malibu, CA, with her husband and their pets. She owes those shapely legs to her long involvement with ballet and jazz dancing. She loves to travel and ride horses and has been involved with acting since she was a teenager. Write to her in care of "The Dukes of Hazzard," 4000 Warner Blvd., Burbank, CA., 91522. John Schneider may also be reached at this address.

Q: If I write Mackenzie Cory on "Another World" will he send me a personal reply? V.H.J., LINDEN, N.C.

A: Stars of daytime series are usually very good about answering their fan mail. Write to him in care of the program, c/o NBC-TV, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, N.Y., N.Y., 10020.

Q: Where does Adam Rich, the star of "Eight is Enough" live? How did he get started in show business? J. SHEFFIELD, SHALLOTTE, N.C.

A: Adam got his start in television commercials, as did many of the child actors on television today. He's been working since he was five years old, and currently lives in Granada Hills, CA, with his parents and a younger brother. His birthday is in October and he loves to skateboard when "Eight is Enough" is not shooting.

ON TOP OF IT ALL

BUDDY (Kristy McNichol) must cope with family and friends when she becomes involved with one of her teachers in "Family," airing Monday, Feb. 4 (10-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Kristy Is Just A Typical Teen-ager

How many teen-agers receive a roomful of fan mail each week, can boast of a kiss from rock-star Leif Garrett and a hug from Burt Reynolds, and count two Emmy Awards among their most prized possessions? Only one: Kristy McNichol.

Her conversation may be strewn with teen-age expressions like "hot," "great," and "yukah." And in her snug-fitting jeans and tattered sneakers, she may resemble an ordinary teenager. But Kristy's string of achievements is far from ordinary.

The accomplished young actress has literally grown up through her portrayal of Buddy on ABC-TV's "Family" (Mondays, 10 to 11 p.m.), and viewers have witnessed her maturity. In this week's episode, Buddy becomes emotionally involved with one of her teachers, much to the consternation of her parents and friends.

Kristy's enthusiasm and dedication have earned her a second Emmy Award for her role in the series. She also garnered high critical acclaim for her performance as a shy Southern girl in last season's "Summer of My German Soldier," and a starring part in "Like Mom, Like Me." Her most recent role was the sensitive and spirited Jo Butler in "My Old Man."

Despite the accolades, Kristy looks forward to moving away from 'kid' roles and "can't wait to be old enough to play romantic and glamorous parts."

Talents Donated Talents

Numerous well-known entertainment personalities have donated their talents to "Because We Care," to be broadcast Tuesday, Feb. 5 (9 to 11 p.m.). The gala, for the benefit of the starving people in Cambodia, was taped last month at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion in Los Angeles.

The event was planned by Tony Adams, Blake Edwards, Robert Fryer, Marty Pasetta and Grant Tinker as "an evening of pure entertainment." All proceeds were used to purchase food and medical supplies so desperately needed by the Cambodians. Tickets for the taping were scaled from $1,000 down and were made available to the public.

Among the luminaries who performed on the special were: Alan Alda, Glen Campbell, Natalie Cole, Robert Goulet, The Jacksons, the Korean Children's Choir, Marsha Mason, Bob Newhart, Peter, Paul and Mary, Shields & Yarnell, David Steinberg, and Dennis Wilson & Christine McVie.

Damien's Back!

Damien, that son of the devil, is back. And William Holden and Lee Grant are the unlucky people who've got him. When last seen, six-year-old Damien had disposed of his foster parents and everyone else who got in his way. Now thirteen, he still doesn't realize that he is the anti-Christ, and "Damien-Omen II," is all about how he learns of his Satanic heritage and what he does about it.

The film will have its network television premiere on NBC Tuesday Night at the Movies, Feb. 5 (9 to 11 p.m.). Jonathan Scott-Taylor stars in the title role.

In this sequel to "The Omen," Damien is now an adolescent living in Chicago with an uncle, Richard Thorn (Holden), a wealthy industrialist. He's attending an exclusive military school, along with his cousin Mark (Lucas Donat).

When an elderly aunt, Marion (Sylvia Sidney), comes to Thorn with her concern that Damien may be an evil influence in the family, she is soundly rebuked by him and his wife, Ann (Grant). That night, Marion dies in her sleep.

Thorn is soon confronted unexpectedly by Joan Hart (Elizabeth Sheperd), a journalist who has been conducting research at an archeological site where workers from a Thorn-owned museum have uncovered an unusual and foreboding collection of works to be put on exhibition. She warns Thorn about impending danger and within days, she dies tragically.

Meanwhile, Damien is seemingly unaware of the origin of certain powers he possesses. But the boy begins to learn about who he really is from two men obviously aware of his true identity.

'Freebie And The Bean'

Two San Francisco cops, played by James Caan and Alan Arkin, stake out a numbers racketeer and become involved in a relentless progression of violent shootouts, chases and pile-ups in "Freebie and the Bean." The film will be rebroadcast ABC's Tuesday Movie of the Week, Feb. 5 (11:30 p.m.). Co-starring are Loretta Swit, Jack Kruschen, Mike Kellin, Alex Rocco and Valerie Harper.

Serving as the core of the slam-bang action is a storyline centering around our heroes' stakeout of a big numbers racketeer, played by Kruschen. When they sift some incriminating evidence out of his garbage (which was planted by his wife (Swit), so she could run away with a cop while her hubby went to jail), they're ready to nail him. But they can't until an eye-witness is found for the Grand Jury. Then they find out that a contract has been put on the racketeer's life and that the hit man is expected to arrive from Detroit. And the pair of plainclothesmen suddenly find themselves playing bodyguard to protect their own investment.

Predictably, their enthusiasm knows no bounds. When they spot a Cadillac with Detroit license plates, they viciously attack the owners, who turn out to be an innocent Cadillac salesman and his wife. Everytime they have to give vehicular pursuit (inevitably through thick traffic or streets filled with scores of pedestrians), the results are innumerble smashed up cars, broken bones for innocent bystanders and stray bullets.

Caan, as the hip, social climbing cop and Arkin, as his more sensitive but no less violence-prone Mexican-American partner, work well off one another. The duo spends as much time spatting between themselves as with the criminal population.

Valerie Harper is perfection as Arkin's sprightly Mexican-born wife and provides the film's funniest — and most human — moments.

'Telefon' Airs on ABC

A garage owner answers a phone call and then drives his truck into the side of an Army base building, causing a massive explosion. A helicopter pilot answers another phone call and proceeds to dive his 'copter into a naval communications center, but is shot down before he crashes.

Those are the opening sequences of "Telefon," ABC's Sunday Night Movie, Feb. 3 (9 to 11 p.m.). The film stars Charles Bronson, in one of his most demanding roles to date. Lee Remick also stars.

Bronson portrays a KGB agent dispatched to the United States to eliminate a die-hard Stalinist (Donald Pleasence) intent on sabotaging detente by detonating human time bombs with a secret code.

The action begins when a demented Stalinist escapes a purge, and flees to the U.S. The higher echelon of the KGB are concerned because the man is acquainted with an elaborate plot against the U.S. that was conceived before the Soviets adopted a policy of detente.

In drug-induced hypnotic states, 50 KGB agents were trained to impersonate Americans. They were given the identities of deceased Americans and successfully infiltrated into American life, posing as average citizens.

CHARLES BRONSON and Lee Remick star in the spy thriller "Telefon," on the "Sunday Night Movie," Feb. 3 (9-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

One More Time

Michael Douglas decided to finally shave his good luck "China Syndrome" beard for the New Year. The next day he reported to Columbia Studio for his starring role in "Perfect Couple," opposite Jill Clayburgh. The first thing director Claudia Weill said to the actor was: "Grow a beard for the role."

Teen-Age Sex Is Subject

American teen-agers have one of the highest rates of childbearing in the world. That fact of life — and other aspects of teenagers' increased sexual activity will be the focus of CBS Reports: "Boys and Girls Together," Wednesday, Feb. 6 (8 to 9 p.m.).

The program explores the growing concerns over this increased sexual activity, and the lowering ages at which such activity begins to occur, focusing on teen-age pregnancy, sex education, and the influence of adult attitudes of teen-agers.

The broadcast visits Arkansas (which leads the nation in numbers of teen-age mothers), California (where many sexual trends seem to begin) and Pennsylvania (one of only six states mandating sex education in the schools).

Birth-control devices are legally available throughout the country without parental knowledge. Yet there were one million American teen-age girls who got pregnant last year. Two-thirds of those pregnancies were unwanted.

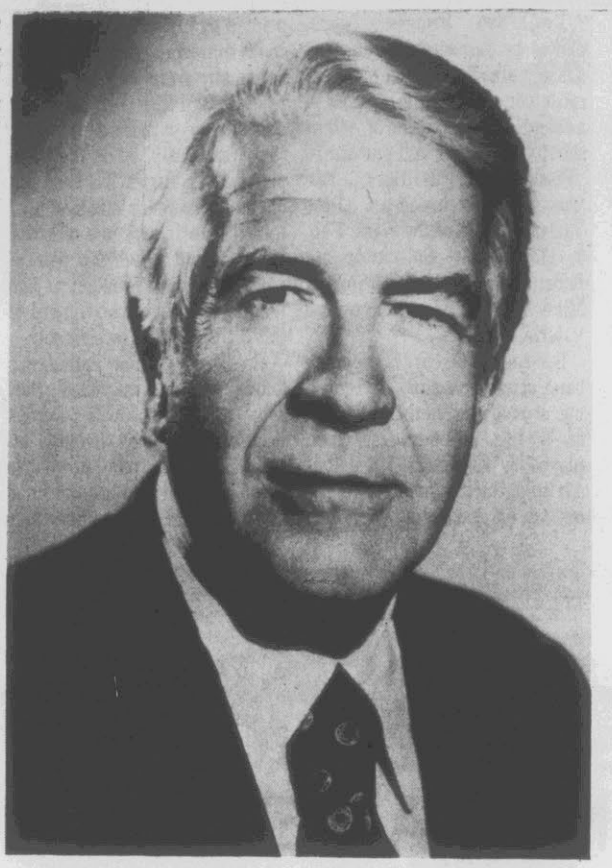

Many of these girls find themselves unprepared for pregnancy. Says one: "I think I can handle it at 15. But a better age would be 24, so I could have my pleasure."

Dr. Byron Hawkes of the Arkansas Children's Hospital, which operates a clinic for pregnant teen-agers, notes that there are special health hazards for young mothers-to-be, some as young as 11 years old, who are still growing themselves, while having to provide nutrition for a fetus. "These are little women, people call them. I call them children. And children having children are bad news."

Hawkes cites inadequate sex education in the school and lack of publicity regarding family planning as part of the reason for Arkansas' high teen-age pregnancy rate. "The whole climate these days is sexually oriented, and it's oriented to people who don't understand their own sexuality," he says. "All they understand is the fun that goes with it, not the seriousness that follows it."

The broadcast features a sex-education class in a Pennsylvania high school, where young people talk about their attitudes and experiences. It also compares the attitudes of teen-agers participating in the Miss America Pageant with those who join in a bikini contest a few miles down the road on New Jersey's south shore.

"There was always sex among teen-agers," says Harry Reasoner, who's anchoring the program. "There's more of it now, and it starts younger. But it was always there. What's changed, it seems to us, is the attitude. When the prom queen gave in to the football player the night after the big game, she thought she was giving, and he thought he was getting, something of value. It is hard to see what is valued in that bikini contest, and the values of the Miss America Pageant don't seem to have worn too well. People who don't value themselves or each other are headed for trouble."

CBS NEWS Correspondent Harry Reasoner reports on teenage sex on CBS Reports: "Boys and Girls Together," Wednesday, Feb. 6 (8-9 p.m.)

Roses For Marilu

Marilu Henner nearly fainted the other day when she arrived on the set of "Taxi" and found 12 vases of long-stemmed roses waiting for her.

The flowers had been sent by Maxine and Ken Waissman, the producers of Broadway's "Grease." It was their way of saying 'thank you' to Marilu for her idea of flying all the "Grease" alumni to New York City for a reunion.

Watch What's Eating You!

Leslie Ackerman, who plays the chubby teenaged daughter of Karl Malden and Piper Laurie on NBC-TV's "Skag," knows all to well the pain of being overweight.

"I've had a weight problem all my life," she says. "I know how it feels to be fat. People can be very cruel, and it's easy to seek comfort with food."

Ackerman, who recently lost more than 20 pounds with the help of Overeaters Anonymous, says she is "obsessed" with helping others cope with nagging weight problems.

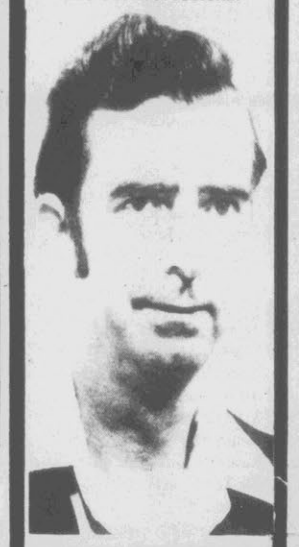

"The first thing you have to realize is that dieting is not the answer. I've been on every diet devised. The real key is understanding yourself. It's not what you're eating, it's what eating you!"

BEING FAT NO FUN — Leslie Ackerman, who says she's had a weight problem all her life, readily identifies with her role as Barbara, the overweight teenaged daughter of Pete and Jo Skagska (Karl Malden and Piper Laurie) on "Skag," Thursdays (10-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

SPOTLIGHT

Career Began Early

Vivacious Kim Richards, who celebrated her 15th birthday last September, has had 14 1/2 years acting experience. Her television career started with a diaper commercial when she was six months old. Now she stars as Ruthie Alder, daughter of radio talk show host Larry Alder, on NBC-TV's "Hello, Larry."

This is Kim's fourth series. Her first outing in episodic television was a regular role on "Nanny and the Professor," which ran for two seasons. Next came "Here We Go Again," followed a couple of years later by "James at 15/16."

"Everyone was so friendly," she recalls. "It was just like one big family working there."

She was the first young girl since Hayley Mills to be signed to a contract by Disney. Then she starred or co-starred in 10 films for the studio. Some of these were "No Deposit, No Return," "Escape to Witch Mountain," and its sequel "Return to Witch Mountain." She also appeared in "The Car" with James Brolin, and her most recent films are "Special Delivery" and "Anderson's Alamo."

KIM RICHARDS

As with most performers, Kim has her 'favorites.' "Bette Davis is my absolute favorite. I worked with her in 'Return to Witch Mountain.' She was wonderful to work with, and she gave me a beautiful white watch when we finished filming. I still stay up to watch her old movies on late-night television.

"And Clark Gable is my favorite actor. 'Gone With the Wind' is one of my all-time favorite movies. I also think David Niven is fantastic — I worked with him in 'No Deposit.' He was so nice and so much fun."

Another personal favorite is Shirley Temple. "She's great all the time, but I really like the movies she made when she was around 10 years old. And Angie Dickinson is really neat, too."

Kim also has high praise for another actor — McLean Stevenson, the star of "Hello, Larry." "He is a terrific dad. I love working with him. He not only teaches me about comedy and timing and acting, he's also a really loving person."

There's no problem for Kim when it comes to learning her lines — she has a photographic memory, and often memorizes an entire script in one quick session.

What does a world-famous glamour queen like Lucille Ball do when she suddenly finds time on her hands and no studio call to disturb her early-morning hours? Like home-based women from Seattle to Scarsdale, she cleans closets.

Lucy's been on a self-imposed hiatus for the past few years, and she's enjoyed having leisure time. "I never had time to clean house — even to think about it," she says. "Now I've cleaned out every closet, drawer, shelf, box and file in my house, in my office and at our desert place. I'm thinking of polishing the dogs and the family next."

Last June, the world-famous comedienne, a long-time CBS star, joined NBC-TV to star in specials and to bring her expertise to the network as a major comedy consultant on future projects.

Her first special, "Lucy Moves to NBC," will be presented Friday, Feb. 8 (8:30 to 10 p.m.). Joining the animated redhead — who has a unique talent for reducing the most sober situations into a hilarious shambles — is an all-star cast.

As a youth, comedian Richard Pryor liked history and hated math; an ad in a magazine helped Sally Struthers turn to acting; Donna Pescow (of "Angie") had a weight problem; Leonard Nimoy ("Star Trek") once capsuled his outlook on life in a poem he wrote.

These are some of the things brought out by interviewer Tom Cottle in talks with his celebrity guests during an edition of "Hot Hero Sandwich," to be rebroadcast Saturday, Feb. 9 (12 to 1 p.m. on NBC-TV).

When asked during the telecast what he liked to read as a young student, Pryor says: "History. The rest of it I didn't care too much for. The math . . . it was just too hard for me to interpret. Farmer Jones has five chickens and sells four of them but gets three of them from somehere else and . . . she lays eggs all the time. And you have to figure it out. I hated Farmer Jones."

Struthers tells Cottle that after graduating from high school, she realized all of her friends knew what they wanted to do. "So my mother, trying to interest me in something, found an ad in a magazine with Raymond Burr's picture — Old Ironside — and it said, 'I studied at the Pasadena Playhouse, and you too can learn acting.' Well, I had beer in a couple of plays in high school and I had been the lead actress in a 7th grade play . . . I won a plaque that I still have . . . and so, my mother said, 'You know, let's apply at this school and see if they'll take you.'" The application was made and Sally's grandparents took her to visit relatives in Norway. "By the time I came home, I had been accepted at the Pasadena Playhouse," she says.

In a segment devoted to self-image, Pescow reveals to Cottle: "I went through stages of different weights like a boxer. I was at one point very thin and then I was very fat. I think it all depended on how bored I was with what I was doing. When I say bored, I don't mean, 'Oh darling, I'm so bored.' I really wanted so much to get into acting and just sort of see what was on the other side of the subway. A lot of what I was doing seemed tentative..."

In the poem that Nimoy wrote, he says: "I may not be the fastest, I may not be the tallest or the strongest. I may not be the best or the brightest. But one thing I can do better than anyone else, and that is to be me." Says Nimoy: "Well, finally, that's all you can do, isn't it? You can do a good job of doing that . . . being yourself."

Pryor, agreeing, says, "And it took me a long time to finally say, one day, 'Hey!' Here's what I am, and this is what I'm like. And this is what I'm gonna be.'" Asked if most youngsters can take such a step, Pryor says: "You have to. You really have to go through the hell and the baptism of life . . . But it takes a long time until one day you decide, 'Here's who I am.'"

A lot of things are planned for PAT BOONE'S family this coming summer — DEBBY and her hubby, GABRIEL FERRER, are expecting a visit from the stork in July. And LAURY BOONE will marry HARRY BROWNING. The ceremony will take place at the Church on The Way in Van Nuys, Calif., where Pat's other daughters were married.

Even tho' DAVID SOUL has more offers for films than he can even read, he's developed a severe case of 'Broadway itch.' Now his agent's looking for just the 'right' play or musical. Preferably one in which David will get the chance to sing.

The talk around Hollywood about the rough draft of GARY CROSBY's memoirs, "BING'S BOY," is causing considerable concern among the late singer's friends. It's far from flattering, and Gary says he still has a lot of pages to fill.

After all these years, MICHELLE PHILLIPS has finally landed a starring role in a TV pilot. It's tentatively titled "Ladies in Blue," and is a spin-off of ABC's "VEGA$."

GRANPA JONES, a 'regular' on "HEE HAW" for 11 years, is recuperating at home in Nashville after successful open-heart surgery. He'd been ill for some time, but delayed the surgery until the show had finished taping this seasons' segments.

The welcome mat was out recently around NBC's studios. That's because of the newest member of the cast of "HELLO, LARRY." He's FRED STUTHMAN, who's appearing as Henry Alder, Larry's father.

Viewers' reaction to O.J. SIMPSON'S first movie, "GOLDIE AND THE BOXER," was so favorable that plans are now underway for a sequel.

Watch Them Closely

Eric Heiden and his younger sister, Beth, are speed skaters and both have an excellent chance of winning Olympic medals in the end of their glorious quest — the Winter Olympics.

But before that, they competed in the World Sprint Speed Skating Championship, and "CBS Sports Spectacular" will televise all the action to this important pre-Olympic test, Saturday, Feb. 9 (4:30 p.m.).

The World Speed Skating competition originated from West Allis, Wisconsin.

The odds are heavily against one family producing two world champions, but that's just what the Heidens of Wisconsin have done. Twenty-one year old Eric, a pre-med student, has captured eight world titles in eight tries in the last three years. Two of the events were juniors, three seniors, and three were sprints.

Many of those victories have come by incredibly wide margins, and some refer to the handsome star as 'The Secretariat of Speed Skating.'

Beth, who is a 20-year-old Civil Engineering student, isn't far behind. The 5-2 blonde took the last world all-around title at The Hague in West Germany, winning all four events she entered from 500 to 3,000 meters.

Although Eric is some 12 inches taller and a bit quieter than exuberant Beth, both possess similar skating skills — like tremendous lead strength and excellent breath control.

One of Beth's most ardent admirers is Leah Poulos Mueller. The former Olympic gold medalist competed wth Beth in the Women's Sprints Championship in Lake Placid last year, but managed to retain her overall U.S. title.

There is another Mueller who is worried about the other Heiden. Leah's husband Peter is having the same kind of problems with his branch of the Heiden family that his wife had with Beth.

He Overcame Hardships

George Gervin is still one of the most under-publicized, bonified superstars in the National Basketball Association. Year in and year out, he stands among — or atop — the league leaders in scoring and assists. He directs the high-charged San Antonio offense, which has been the league offensive leader for two straight seasons.

Furthermore, he may just be the best pure shooter in the entire NBA.

Gervin will change his San Antonio uniform for an NBA West jersey when the East Stars challenge those from the West in the annual All-Star Game, Sunday, Feb. 3 (1 p.m. on CBS-TV).

This season, the game originates live from the Capital Centre in Landover, Md. and Brent Musburger and 'Hot Rod' Hundley will provide the commentary.

Life has never been easy for this Detroit native, but he has always managed to survive with sheer will. When George was a child, he used to wait on the street corners in the city with his mother and five brothers and sisters for food to eat.

Smart Lockwood

Skip Lockwood, the right-handed reliever signed by the Boston Red Sox via the reentry draft, received his master's degree in business and industrial communications from Fairfield University. Now he's enrolled in a doctoral program at Columbia University.

But that doesn't bother him now. When he was a youngster, the Spur guard used to shoot baskets from after school until darkness fell 12 months a year.

That shooting practice helped Gervin develop a healthy career 50 percent shooting average, by far the highest among active players.

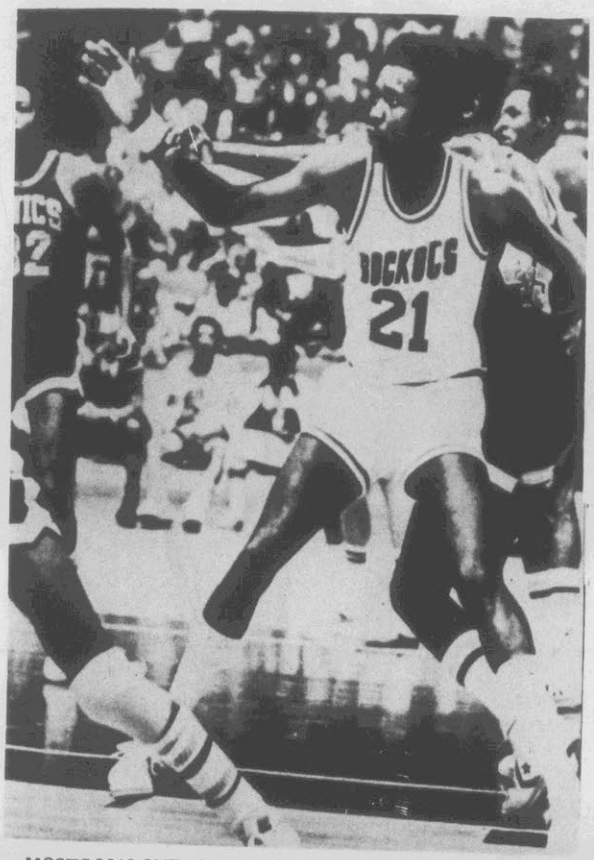

"Everybody thinks I shoot funny," he mentions. "But I'll tell you what. I think they shoot it funny. It's the only way I know how to shoot. I haven't changed a thing in my game since I was coming up. I experimented with a lot of different shots when I was developing my technique. I would shoot from behind the backboard or anywhere else."

There is no end to the wonders Gervin can work on the court. Two seasons ago, when he trailed David Thompson for the scoring championship, Gervin had to score 59 points in the final game to capture the scoring crown.

Later, Thompson signed a $4 million contract while Gervin inked a $200,000-a-year deal.

"People think I should go after more money, but I'm awfully happy with what they give me," the modest point guard says. "It's more than enough to make sure that my mother and brothers and sisters don't go hungry anymore, and that's the best thing of all."

MOSES MALONE, the basketball prodigy who headed for the pro circuit immediately following high school, will be competing in the annual All-Star Game, Sunday, Feb. 3 (1 p.m. on CBS-TV).

What's Moses Motivation?

Never before in the history of the National Basketball Assocation has one individual come so far in so short a time. After graduating from Petersburg High School in Virginia, Moses Malone pulled off the seemingly impossible.

Instead of taking the usual route of college before entering the pro ranks, this 23-year-old basketball prodigy skipped the collegiate ranks and headed straight for the pro circuit.

Now Malone will be playing in the annual All-Star Game, Sunday, Feb. 3 (1 p.m. on CBS-TV).

Moses first shuffled between Utah and the St. Louis teams in the now-defunct ABA before signing with the San Antonio Spurs. But he quickly decided that their philosophy of what a center should be didn't suit his taste, so he signed a lucrative contract with the Houston Rockets.

Numerous experts predicted that Malone would never stand out as a professional because he began too early in his career. Nor did he have the muscle to withstand the punishment dished out under NBA baskets.

But those so-called experts were dead wrong. Within a matter of four professional seasons, the Petersburg native was declared the Most Valuable Player in the entire league.

TWO SUPERSTARS of the boxing world — Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier — have hung up their gloves and are running successful amateur boxing clubs. Fighters from these respective clubs will be featured in a six-bout affair on NBC-TV's "SportsWorld," Sunday, Feb. 3 (4 p.m.).

Boxing Teams Collide

The sun was setting in the fast-paced province of Manila in the Phillipines, and two proud but angry boxers waited on each corner of the yellow-draped ring for the instruction to begin fighting.

One had been declared — by the experts and himself — as the greatest athlete alive. The other simply looked down and shuffled his feet in his incomperable style, thinking silently about how he would continually keep pressure on his old nemesis.

The "Thrilla in Manila" was about to begin.

That memorable Super fight III between Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier probably still plays through the heads of the two former champions. But both have hung up the gloves and are now running two of the finest, most successful amateur boxing clubs in the nation.

The Muhammad Ali Amateur Boxing Club will take on the Joe Frazier Club in a six-bout affair on NBC's "SportsWorld" Sunday, Feb. 3 (4 p.m.).

Also included on the program will be Sports Illustrated bathing suit fashions and motorcycle racing at the Widowmaker Hill climb.

Before Superfight III, there was I and II. All three will live in boxing memorabilia as classic bouts in the most powerful series of bouts between any two heavyweights in the history of the sport.

Where do you go for the freshest fruits and vegetables? To the farm, of course, So A&P brings The Farm to you.

Somewhere in the world, it's harvest time. And that's exactly where A&P's eagle-eye produce buyers are right now—gathering the pick of the crop and getting it rushed to The Farm in your nearby A&P store.

So come take a fresh look at The Farm at A&P and get to know the Farm Manager. He's so proud of his fine fruits and vegetables, you'd think he grew them all himself! And he'll help you find exactly what you need to be equally proud when you serve it to your family!

U.S. Army Photograph

FOR GENERAL EDWARD C. MEYER, Chief of Staff, United States Army

● Not at all. I would not associate policy changes with respect to new soldiers as "easing up," nor were the changes implemented primarily to assist recruiting. The main reason for the new policies — one we have learned from long experience in military training — was to get rid of counterproductive irritants which did nothing to improve the quality of training. Stress is necessary in training, but only so long as it challenges the individual in a mission related to the soldier's task. If an increase in recruiting is incidentally realized as a by-product of these recent changes — all the better. But certainly there is nothing quantifiable to indicate an effect on recruiting.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

● We do know that she sells some of it. Five years ago, when she closed up one of her homes in New Jersey, she called William Doyle, a New York auctioneer-appraiser, and asked him to eyeball her line. According to Doyle, Jackie, as a seller, "is very easy to please and pleasant to do business with." When he made her an offer — around $3,000 for stuff that included JFK's drum table and chair and John Jr.'s pine desk, chair and chest — she asked, 'Is that all?" When Doyle said it was, she accepted. (Kennedy's chair, by the way, was sold for $450). What Doyle remembers most about the transaction is that there was no one else around when he went to view the furniture — "No domestic help, no secretary. Just Jackie, my assistant and me."

Wide World

FOR YVETTE MIMIEUX, star of The Black Hole

Is it a fact that you had to have plastic surgery as a result of the severe injuries you sustained while filming dangerous scenes? — P.C., Council Bluffs, Iowa

● I knew that incident would get blown out of all proportion. During the storm sequence, I got hit on the eyebrow by a flying object, so I went to a plastic surgeon for a checkup. For a while after that, people were discreetly peering at my hairline. I guess they thought the "accident" was an excuse to go to the doctor for a face lift!

FOR HUGH DOWNS, host of PBS-TV's Over Easy

Is it true that although you're known primarily as a broadcaster, what you enjoy most is writing? How do you find time for it all? — G.P., Boise, Idaho

● No. My greatest satisfaction is in broadcasting. Nothing can compare with it. As for finding time for everything, a woman who had 11 children was once asked how she had time to take care of all of them, and she answered that when she had one child, it took 100 percent of her time, and 11 could not take more. I think there is an analogy in this.

FOR SONNY BONO, star of Irwin Shaw's TV mini series, The Top of the Hill

What attracted you about this series, after your absence from television? — M.B., Saginaw, Mich.

● I hope it will be a springboard for my career. I'm anxious to do more film work. And I chose a dramatic role as opposed to comedy because it was such a challenge, and I always wanted to be a movie star. Incidentally, in The Top of the Hill, I'm the only character who can't ski. But off-camera, I was the only one who could.

FOR MARGARET TRUMAN, spokesperson, Toy Manufacturers of America

● As the mother of four sons, I feel that I have been running a toy store in my home for the last 22 years, and I think toys are fun. Play is a child's work. Toys are the tools of that work which help to frame a child's future physically, emotionally and socially. But the greatest influence on a child's attitudes and goals originates with his parents and his peers.

FOR FLEURETTE ARSENAULT, three-time world champion roller skater

Why has roller-skating never become as prestigious or as popular as ice-skating? — J.C., Cocoa, Fla.

● Over the last decade, roller-skating arenas have quadrupled, and it's estimated that there are over 30 million recreational skaters in the U.S. alone. My skating partner, Dan Littel, and I recently won a gold medal at the Pan Am Games, which was covered by CBS' Sports Spectacular, and it got the highest Nielsen rating for its time slot.

FOR GIL GERARD, star of NBC-TV's Buck Rogers in the 25th Century

Did you really want to be an astronaut but were turned down? — W.P., Tyler, Texas

● No. My big dream was to be a doctor. Then I realized I did not have the energy or sufficient willpower to pay the price and stick with all the years of studying and training. Same thing with an astronaut. All the years of preparation are enough to kill any desire. Plus the fact I'd be very annoyed running around the moon with a little tank on my back.

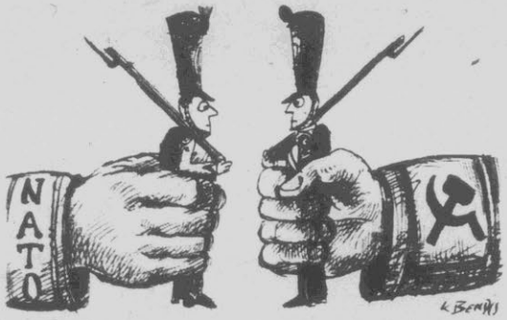

PRO AND CON

PRO Representative Bob Carr (D.-Mich.)

~~Yes.~~ We have 2,125 fighter/attack aircraft to the other side's 1,675, and ours are much better. Our Navy is also superior. Their army is somewhat larger, although our advanced technology, properly applied, can be an equalizer. For example, a single guided artillery shell — only we have such a weapon — can be as effective as several hundred unguided Soviet artillery shells. But the bottom line is that NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization) is a true alliance of free nations; the Soviets have only subjugated satellites, which, in the disorder of war, would be more inclined to fight against than for Russia. Our European allies know this; that's why they spend proportionately less on defense than we do.

CON Senator Henry M. Jackson (D.-Wash.)

No. NATO could not sustain a prolonged defense of Western Europe. NATO is outnumbered in most categories, including tanks, artillery, deployed fighter and other aircraft, and in combat divisions. In the past, NATO has relied on U.S. nuclear superiority, linked to conventional forces, to deter Soviet aggression. Today the U.S. no longer is superior in nuclear forces. Thus, the conventional imbalance in Europe is increasingly dangerous. NATO must now get serious about fielding conventional forces for collective deterrence and defense, including all-weather tactical aircraft, air-defense systems, tanks and infantry vehicles for mobility and improved command and control.

America's Olympic Hopefuls

In the 1976 Olympics, pair skaters Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner finished an encouraging fifth. Since then, they've won nearly everything in sight, and many experts believe they're now good enough to beat even the Soviets.

By Karen Jackovich

"Gold is a nice color," says Tai Babilonia, 19, the reigning World Pair Figure Skating Champion. She is referring to a collection of good-luck charms she wears during every competition. But the nicest gold of all, she admits, is Olympic gold, and that's what she and partner Randy Gardner, 21, hope to earn during the upcoming Winter Olympic competition at Lake Placid, N.Y.

Tai and Randy have skated competitively together for 10 years, and they have racked up an impressive career record, both together and individually. For eight of these years, they have been under the critical eye of coach John A.W. Nicks, a former World Pair medalist and Olympic veteran. It was he who suggested (despite some early opposition from them) that they finally give up individual competition for pairs.

His suggestion proved to be a wise one. After six seasons of world-class skating together, the two broke an unchallenged Soviet stranglehold to win the World Championships in Vienna last year. They have won four straight National Pairs titles; fifth place in the 1976 Olympic Winter Games at Innsbruck; third place in the 1978 World Championships; and the Gold Medal at the United States Olympic Committee's National Sports Festival in 1978 and 1979.

Their toughest competition at these Olympic winter games will most likely come from the Soviets. "It's a classic confrontation between East and West," explains Nicks. He sees Babilonia's and Gardner's main competition as the Soviet husband/wife team, Irina Rodinina and Aleksandr Zaitsev, who are returning to competition after a year off to have a son.

And Nicks admits the pressure will be on: "I think the attention is so great on this event because it's an opportunity for an American pair to win a gold medal for the first time ever. It's never been done before. I tell them that they will not be remembered for where they placed in the Olympics but whether they won or lost a gold medal."

The pressure, fortunately, doesn't stop Babilonia and Gardner from performing spectacularly. "It's goose-bump time," notes a rink-side observer at a recent practice session. The pair surges by with Babilonia aloft, holding an acrobatic pose.

"Tai and Randy bring a new look to pair skating," says Nicks. "They destroyed the myth that to be a successful pair skater, at world level, you had to have a six-foot-man and a five-foot-young girl or small lady. [Randy is 5-8, Tai is 5-5]. They have far better line, elegance and look about them [than the Russians]. And certainly nobody argues that they are far superior in musical interpretation and choreographic ideas and execution."

The two choreograph about 50 percent of their own material and take pride in their ability to work so well together. "Randy's a more outgoing type and I keep most of my feelings to myself," assesses Babilonia. "We complement each other because sometimes when I'm down, he can kind of perk me up, and when he's kind of high-strung, I can calm him down."

Both Tai's and Randy's skating careers began unintentionally. According to Mrs. Gardner, Randy got his start after he was left behind by older neighborhood kids: "I packed him in the car and took him to the rink myself. I paid a guy to take him around. As soon as the other kids saw that he could manage on his own, they let him tag along." Randy's father, Jack, an accountant, encouraged his son's skating by taking him on father-son outings at rinks in the Los Angeles area.

Babilonia's first encounter on skates came at age 7 on an outing with her Japanese godfather. (He is also responsible for her exotic first name, which translates "beautiful, tranquil, lovely.") Her father, a Los Angeles police detective of Philippine extraction, and mother, Cleo, are both sports-oriented, and they were eager for her to excel.

Tai and Randy first skated together as Dr. and Mrs. Doolittle at a local club show. They were spotted by coach Mabel Fairbanks, who urged them to try competitive pair skating. After just a few months of training, they made their debut in the 1971 Southwest-Pacific Regional, placing sixth among 10 novice pairs. The following year they won a second in Regionals and took third in Pacific Coast Novice Pairs. At the end of that season, Gardner's family approached Nicks, trainer of the U.S. Pair Champions and World bronze medalists JoJo Starbuck

On a busman's holiday of sorts, Tai and Randy spin around on roller skates. Away from skates, they date other people.

YOU COULD GET MORE ROOM.

1980 Malibu Classic Sedan

BUT YOU'D HAVE TO GET TWO CARS.

A Chevy Chevette, for example, would give you better mileage ratings than Malibu. A Caprice would give you more room.

NOT BIG, NOT SMALL.

In fact, Malibu is one car that sometimes seems like two. A trim and maneuverable car on the outside, a roomy and comfortable car on the inside. When you take it out on the highway, Malibu's smooth and quiet ride may suggest a full-size.

Yet the fuel economy, as you'll see, is highly respectable for a car with so much room.

FAMILY ROOM.

Chevy Malibu is made to accommodate one, two, three, four, five, even six people. Which is what makes it so right for so many families today. Families who simply wouldn't fit into a little car. Families who appreciate a generous trunk with nearly 17 cubic feet of usable space that absorbs bulky luggage.

It's also interesting to note that no other mid-size has more room than the Malibu Sedan. Check it out in the EPA 1980 Gas Mileage Guide.

20 EPA ESTIMATED MPG.

20 EPA estimated MPG.

Remember: Compare the "estimated MPG" to that of other cars. You may get different mileage, depending on how fast you drive, weather conditions, and trip length. Actual highway mileage will probably be less than the highway estimate. Estimate lower in California.

SOLID LIKE A CHEVY.

Malibu is built on a rugged full-perimeter frame. It has a tough and tightly welded Body by Fisher. The doors, hood and trunk lid are all made of double-panel steel. There's a second set of fenders up inside the fenders to guard against road salt, stones, corrosion.

IT FEELS GOOD, TOO.

Malibu's full-foam seats are a genuine pleasure to sit on. The tall side windows give you a good view out, and help keep the inside bright and cheerful.

And as we've said, Malibu is a nimble car to drive, a quiet car to ride in.

The point is simply this: Yes, Malibu is a car full of value and common sense. But it's also built to give you a whole lot of pleasure.

AN AMERICAN FAVORITE.

Malibu is truly a car in the finest tradition of baseball, hot dogs, apple pie and Chevrolet. It is also a thoroughly contemporary car.

We urge you to go see a 1980 Chevy Malibu, sit in it, take it out for a little ride.

Look it over inside and out and compare it for features, value and price with any other car you might be interested in.

Do that and you'll understand why Malibu is America's favorite mid-size 4-door sedan. Heck, you might even decide to buy or lease one for your very own. At your Chevrolet dealer's now.

Though success has come quickly for Tai and Randy, the work hasn't been easy. Their grinding schedule includes skating every day, with only Sunday off the ice. From 7:30 to 9:30 A.M., at the Ice Capades Chalet in Santa Monica, Calif., they practice triple throw salchows, inside death spirals (as treacherous as they sound with Babilonia's head whirling only inches above the ground), split double twists and throw axle combos. At 9:30, they break for 15 minutes and then are back on the ice until 11:00 A.M.

Oblivious to the gaggle of onlookers, which includes both Babilonia's and Gardner's mothers, an agent, professional sports personality scouts and future Olympic hopefuls, the duo then meets Nicks for individual coaching. From 11:30 to 2:00 P.M., Babilonia and Gardner take ballet from Theresa Rudolph (in a specially built practice room adjacent to the rink) or gymnastic training from Bob Anderson.

Wide World

Off-ice training continues when both go their separate ways from the rink. Babilonia runs in the sand at a nearby beach or around a track near her San Fernando Valley home. Gardner breaks until evening, when he weight-lifts at the Los Angeles Athletic Club with older brother Gordon, a local dentist — and nonskater.

Although both have been committed to skating together through the Olympics, neither has made plans after that. There has been some disagreement with their coach over the future: "We are not seeing eye to eye right now," admits Nicks, who, despite his job as National Skating Director for the Ice Capade Chalets and Ice Shows, wants them to continue skating competitively, rather than turning professional or going back to school, as Babilonia and Gardner say they wish to do.

"We both want an education," explains Gardner, who is a part-time drama and speech major at U.S.C. and eventually wants to become a director of ice shows or legitimate theatrical productions. Babilonia looks for a future as a model, sportscaster or skating teacher. "I had to quit junior college," she says ruefully. "It was too hard with Nationals, World and exhibitions. We regret things like giving up our social life, school proms, plays . . .," she explains. Both have to be in bed by 9:30 every night but Friday, when training curfew is 11:30, which doesn't leave much time for dating. (Both date other people.)

Though their lives have been restricted in some areas, there have been plenty of terrific opportunities. "We love traveling and meeting new people," says Gardner. "We don't lead a sheltered life." (They have met the Queen of England, dined in the Imperial Palace in Tokyo and were the first American athletes to compete in the U.S.S.R.)

What do they consider their chances to be this month? "We had our horoscope charts done," reveals Babilonia, and they may be the perfect combination. Gardner says, "Tai's a Virgo and I'm a Sagittarius. She is supposed to supply the luck of the partnership and I supply the energy. We'll need both."

You can't be turned down for this Insurance if you're 50 to 80!

PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS® ...is an individual life insurance policy. Colonial Penn guarantees to accept every man and woman between 50 and 80 who applies during the Guaranteed-Acceptance Period—regardless of any other insurance carried.

PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS is underwritten by Colonial Penn Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, specialists in serving the specific needs of America's older population. Colonial Penn, with life insurance in force of nearly $750 million, has received the highest rating—"A + " (EXCELLENT)—from the A. M. Best Company, the most highly respected and impartial insurance statistical and financial reporting organization in the nation. This is an indication of Colonial Penn's soundness, permanency and financial stability.

An Important Opportunity for Every Older Person!

PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS is a remarkable concept of life insurance, achieved as a result of the years of effort Colonial Penn has devoted to meeting the insurance needs of mature people.

Our goal has been a life insurance policy we can make available to all mature people—a policy whose cost is reasonable and whose benefits are worthwhile.

Here's How PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS Can Do This: There is a two-year limited benefit period. During the first two years that your policy is in effect, your coverage is reduced. If you should die during the first policy year, the benefit paid to your beneficiary is $100 per unit instead of the full face amount of the policy. If death occurs during the second policy year, your beneficiary receives $250 per unit instead of the full face amount of the policy. Once two years have passed, you are covered for the full face amount of the policy.

PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS enables the older person to obtain worthwhile benefits for his/her insurance dollar—and, at the same time, guarantees acceptance for all applicants.

PRIME LIFE 50 PLUS also provides increasing cash values which begin in the first or second year, depending on your age.

The cost? $6.95 A MONTH!

No matter what your age, your sex, or the condition of your health, you pay $6.95 a month. The amount of coverage you receive is based on your sex and age. However, once you are insured the amount of your insurance will never go down, and your payments will never go up!

Fear of Fillings
How to Stop Hating Your Dentist

Bettmann Archive

Is fear itself the only thing to fear? Did FDR ever need root canal?

By Elisabeth Conley

For some people the very thought of going to the dentist is enough to keep them away. In fact, an estimated six million to 10 million Americans avoid visiting the dentist because of various fears — the needle, the drill, the pain.

Even if you do get regular checkups, you may find the experience frightening. Dentists refer to this type of anxiety as the "white knuckle syndrome" — because of the way fearful patients clench the arms of the chair. According to Drs. Aaron Ganz and Edward Driscoll of the National Institute of Dental Research, this intense fear is unique to dentistry, and it creates many problems. Patients delay visits, which often results in the need for elaborate and possibly more painful treatment.

There are ways, however, to overcome your fear. First, try to recall how your fear began. According to Dr. Marvin Rubin, professor of operative dentistry at New York University for 30 years and now chairman of the Council on Education of the Dental Society of the State of New York, fear can sometimes be traced to some childhood incident: Perhaps you once had a dentist who frightened you or who did not deal effectively with your apprehension. Dr. Rubin feels that you can "shop around" for a dentist who will be sensitive to your fears. Whether you ask friends or relatives or your company medical department for recommendations, stress that you prefer a dentist who can answer your questions and who takes the time to explain the various techniques used. Once you find such a dentist, don't be afraid to express your anxiety and ask if the procedure will hurt — and if so, for how long. (If you know it will only last five seconds, it isn't so terrifying.)

If you've been putting off going to the dentist for a number of years, it may ease your fears to know that there have been modern breakthroughs in dental equipment that cut down on pain — such as the high-speed drill, which completes the work faster and with less pain than the old ones, and the extra-sharp, but less painful, disposable Novocain needles.

There are also many new techniques that dentists use to reduce the pain. Some techniques involve the use of drugs — such as nitrous-oxide analgesic ("laughing gas"), sedatives, tranquilizers and general anesthesia. The nitrous-oxide analgesic is the safest drug-related method and is used by about 35 percent of all dentists. Combined with local anesthetics, it lessens your stress and allows you to participate in the treatment: You can follow instructions, rinse your mouth and position your jaw.

Some dentists are using nondrug methods to cut down on the pain — such as meditation, self-hypnosis and biofeedback. These help a patient to relax.

There are also some techniques you can try on your own before and during your next dental visit.

- Go into the office with something specific to think about — an upcoming dinner party that needs planning, a vacation that has to be arranged. Then when the dentist is working, you can focus on your party or vacation, rather than what's going on in your mouth.
- Don't let anxiety build while you sit waiting in the dental chair. Try this relaxation exercise instead: Tighten and relax each muscle area of your body, beginning with neck and shoulders and working your way down to your calves and feet. Then take three deep breaths and repeat the word "one" for a few minutes.
- Invent some mind games to take your mind off the activity in your mouth. Try to name the states and their capitals; the succession to the English crown since William the Conqueror; the American Presidents and Vice Presidents. Concentrate on pleasant memories.
- Separate the various sensations that are in your mouth. Not all are painful. There will be tingling, warmth and pressure.

Of course, there is no better substitute for pain therapy than regular, conscientious care of your teeth and bi-annual visits to the dentist. When you take good care of your teeth, you don't need the type of work that could be painful.

O.K. now, open wide. FW

Observations

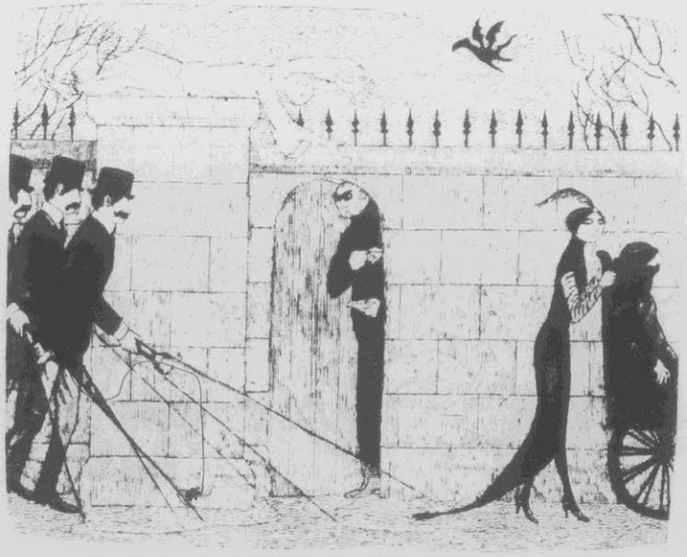

"Mystery!" Thrillers, whodunits, detective yarns, romantic suspense stories—masterpieces of mystery...just two days away. Foul murders, poisoned ponies, a sinister housekeeper, Old Bailey's barristers...all in your living room. It's a new TV series Tuesdays at 9 p.m. on the Public Broadcasting Service, starting February 5 (check local listings). It's "Mystery!"

Masterminds. This isn't another cops-and-robbers shoot-'em-up. "Mystery!" entertains and delights in the tradition of Edgar Allan Poe, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Agatha Christie, and Ellery Queen...with intricate plotting, skillfully drawn characters, and distinctive style. If you're a fan of this kind of sleuthing, you're in the company of such diverse admirers as Lincoln, Freud, even Stalin.

Five eerie pieces. The 15-week series brings together five types of programs. The premiere, She Fell Among Thieves, is a high-camp thriller set in a French castle. Next comes Rumpole of the Bailey, four contemporary courtroom dramas about an irreverent criminal lawyer and his wife, "she who must be obeyed." Then, an all-new production of Rebecca. Daphne du Maurier's legendary tale of suspense and gothic romance, now in four one-hour episodes. Next: The Racing Game, three action-packed thrillers starring a jockey turned private eye. And, back again in Victorian England, Sergeant Cribb of Scotland Yard solves three ingenious mysteries.

Crime and entertainment. Gene Shalit is host for the series, presented by WGBH, Boston, and the opening titles and posters (and the drawings in this column) are the work of artist-illustrator Edward Gorey. If all this sounds rather special, it ought to—for this is the first time since the 1971 introduction of "Masterpiece Theatre" that Mobil has underwritten what we hope will be a continuing series. Don't miss "Mystery!" So entertaining—it's criminal.

It's free: For a program guide to "Mystery!" write to Box M, Mobil Oil Corporation, 150 East 42nd Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Why Couples Really Fight

Understanding the hidden causes of your fights is the first step to preventing them.

By Norman Lobsenz

If you asked any couple to give the reason behind their marital spats, they'd probably be able to do so easily — and with one word or phrase. Couples often think their problems stem from a single specific cause — such as money troubles, interference from in-laws, sexual incompatibility, differences bringing up the children.

But most marriage counselors today believe that, except in rare instances, the specific complaint named by squabbling partners is merely a symptom of a deeper conflict between them. Unfortunately, that conflict may be difficult to recognize, and this makes some fights tough to resolve. "Unless a couple understand what they are really fighting about," says Los Angeles therapist Dr. Hendrie Weisinger, "and deal with the underlying cause, their arguments will continue."

The need to feel in control of the relationship: "I don't understand it," said Phyllis K., "Ted and I have been married five years and he has never questioned how I spend household money. Now if I'm a few dollars over our budget, he gets furious and accuses me of being wasteful. And he changed every charge account to his name so he can examine all the bills. It seems we fight over money all the time!"

In counseling sessions this couple took part in, it was revealed that Phyllis had not worked outside the home since her marriage, and Ted handled all the family finances. A few months earlier, however, Phyllis' uncle had died and left her $2,500. She opened her own checking account and used the inheritance from time to time to buy small luxuries for herself and for the family.

"It had always been important to Ted to feel that he was totally in charge of the couple's finances," the counselor says. "But once Phyllis had money of her own that she could spend as she pleased, the situation changed. Ted was no longer in control. The anxiety this caused him found its outlet in the fights he picked with Phyllis. And checking the bills was Ted's way of trying to convince himself he was still the boss."

Arguments over sex are also usually rooted in the battle for control. Many spouses use sex to try to establish dominance over each other, often without realizing what they are doing.

Differences in family backgrounds: "I'm a superb cook, but my husband argues about the meals I serve him," one woman says. "I enjoy making special sauces and unusual dishes, but he says there's never anything he can eat. He wants me to make meatloaf and potato soup. I'm sick of hearing about his mother's potato soup!"

In this instance, the husband grew up in a in a family where simple, hearty food was a symbol of loving warmth, and "fancy" dishes were for guests or strangers.

Today, as more and more men and women marry across the social, cultural and religious boundaries within which they grew up, conflicts over their different attitudes are bound to occur.

Concentrating on the negative in marriage: A good deal of marital fighting

Wash that gray

Gray hair can make you feel so old.

Okay. So you've got some gray. You notice it every time you look in a mirror.

Well, that's why we make Loving Care Color-Lotion.

Loving Care is easy.

Unlike other haircolorings, Loving Care contains absolutely no peroxide. So there's no permanent color change. In fact, if you change your mind, it wears out gradually (about six shampoos).

stems from the fact that many people focus attention on the problems in their relationship and neglect the positive factors that brought them together in the first place. One therapist helps couples with this kind of problem by forcing them to talk about the qualities they admire in each other, the pleasures they share, the goals they mutually set out to reach. "You can almost see the antagonism draining away," the therapist says. "Partners tend to take each other's virtues for granted and pounce upon the flaws."

One couple, embroiled in constant squabbling, were asked to list all the things they liked and valued about each other. "Until then," the husband said, "I didn't realize how many there were or how important they are to me."

Normal crises you encounter in the course of marriage: Some areas of conflict are to be expected at certain stages in the marital "life cycle." "A marriage in its first year experiences certain normal stresses as the young couple learn to adjust to each other's temperaments," says counselor Weisinger. "Other tensions arise when a first child is born. An older couple may find themselves arguing more frequently after the husband's retirement."

The marital life cycle is booby-trapped with a whole series of similar events: a promotion to a demanding job, a serious illness, a period of unemployment, a move to a new community. Ordinarily, in and of themselves, each of these events is loaded with the potential for change. They can and do trigger clashes, but a couple may not recognize the cause.

The inability to accept today's changing sex roles for husband and wife: Take, for instance, the middle-aged man who constantly accuses his wife — who recently returned to work as a nurse — of neglecting their children. "I'm proud of her," he says. "It's fine that she's working. But she ought to be home when the kids need her."

Another man encouraged his wife to take a job that involved a good deal of travel. "But when I'm out of town for even one night, he has a fit," the woman says. "Every time I have to go away he accuses me of not caring about him. And I really get angry when he calls my hotel several times a night to make sure I'm in my room!"

"The fact is that many men have ambivalent feelings about liberated wives," a counselor remarks. "A husband may be proud of his wife, but he may also feel resentful, neglected or threatened. Because he can't admit these feelings, he lets them out indirectly by picking things to fight about."

- Don't fall into the trap of trying to "win" an argument. In virtually every instance, one spouse's "victory" eventually turns into a loss for both partners because it reduces a marriage to an endless struggle for power.
- Learn to communicate ideas and feelings more clearly. One marriage-enrichment program teaches the art of "dialoging." A husband-wife conversation is aimed at clarifying the facts and emotions involved in a troubling argument. The purpose of dialoging is to help a couple share and accept each other's attitudes.
- Resist the popular notion that it is always healthy to vent your hostile feelings in order to "clear the emotional air." According to family sociologist Murray Straus, an expert on violence in the family, "letting it all hang out" usually serves only to increase both persons' anger and to aggravate the problem that caused it. Moreover, it seldom helps a couple come to grips intelligently with the basic reason for their quarrel.
- Instead of trying to change what's different about your spouse, try to respect and learn from those differences.
- Be alert to the underlying causes of arguments. Seek to learn the hidden motives for irritation, frustration, anger. One counselor suggests using the image of a "mental safety catch" on one's emotional trigger. "When a fight starts is the time to pause and ask yourself, why am I furious? What is really at issue here? You have a right to feel and express anger, of course. But unless you try to find out the why of it, the arguments will probably repeat themselves without any progress toward solving the problem." FW

Don't Fight That Urge to Fidget

By Lesly Berger

Bill Ronalds

You're at a party, sitting in an uncomfortable chair, trying to listen politely to your host — but you just can't sit still. You try to stifle the urge to tap your feet but start drumming your fingers, instead.

Instead of wondering how to prevent this kind of behavior, sometimes it's best to just let it happen. Fidgeting, you see, can actually be good for you. According to Dr. Laurence Morehouse, professor of kinesiology (the study of human movement) at the University of California at Los Angeles, the physical process of fidgeting benefits both the brain and the body.

Fidgeting is a natural physiological response, a message from the muscles to the brain. When you sit still for too long, your muscles contract, preventing blood from circulating efficiently. As a result, metabolic wastes build up in the bloodstream and irritate body tissue. Your body reacts to this irritation by fidgeting.

Apart from sheer physical relief, fidgeting has other beneficial effects. Experiments done on test-taking college students have shown that those students who fidgeted during their exams scored consistently higher than their less-active counterparts. There are several scientific reasons for this phenomenon.

First of all, fidgeting helps keep you alert. Movement increases blood flow to the brain, helping it to operate at maximum efficiency. Thus, fidgeting actually aids concentration, while stitting still can cause the mind to wander due to decreased blood flow. The movement generated from fidgeting also aids in releasing tension because it helps you to relax your muscles.

Dr. Morehouse believes that the benefits of fidgeting can have widespread application in everyday life — for everyone from children to adults. He suggests the following ways to make fidgeting work for you and your family:

- Be more active at times when you were previously lazy. For example, try doing certain tasks around the house standing up. If it's your habit to sit and chat on the phone, stand and talk, instead. You may find that this will help you to feel more attentive and better able to concentrate.
- At the office, keep your most essential reference materials off your desk and slightly out of reach, so that you'll have to take a little walk in order to get to them. Try to get into a routine of frequent short walks to pep you up — even if they're only to the restroom or water cooler.
- Check your chairs for proper design. A good chair should not only be attractive, it should also allow for plenty of body movement and not lock you into one fixed position. The easier it is for you to move from one position to another while seated, the more comfortable and alert you will be.
- Permit your children to fidget. Contrary to what your parents may have taught you about the rewards of sitting "like a little lady or gentleman," a child should not be made to sit unnaturally still. Of course, your children must be aware of the difference between fidgeting noiselessly and loudly kicking and banging.
- Fidgeting can even allow you to sleep better. When you awaken in the middle of the night, try tossing and turning a few times on purpose. Deliberately turning over in bed will cause your blood to "seep" from one side of your brain to the other, thus improving blood circulation. This should help you to sleep more comfortably and soundly.

Of course, fidgeting is not always the best response to a situation. There are times when sitting still and looking calm and attentive will be more effective. For instance, studies have found that job applicants were more successful during interviews when they appeared composed. So try to get your fidgeting done before, not during, a job interview. You may want to arrive for a job interview early and take a brief walk around the building where the interview will take place.

A serious, one-to-one conversation with someone who means a lot to you is also not the right moment for fidgeting. Too much physical movement might be interpreted as a gesture of disrespect or disinterest. But if you still feel a need to fidget in this sort of situation, try to do it silently and invisibly. For example, swinging your legs would be fine — if they were hidden under a table.

Remember that your body sends out messages. The next time you're feeling sluggish at work or bored at a social gathering, listen to what your body is trying to tell you. If it says, "fidget," then by all means, fidget. Just make sure the way you fidget suits the situation. FW

The Man Who Talks to Dolphins

Scientist John Lilly believes dolphins may well be smarter than people. For years he's been coaxing them to tell us what they know.

By Mathew Tekulsky

The date is July 9, 1966. The place: John Lilly's Communication Research Institute in St. Thomas, the Caribbean. Researcher Margaret Howe is talking to a dolphin named Peter, and Peter is making sounds back by opening his blowhole (which a dolphin doesn't normally do).

"Say, 'I am a good boy,'" Howe requests.

Peter repeats the phrase, syllable for syllable, matching her tone and inflection. Of course, he isn't speaking English, but the sound he makes resembles the cry of a baby. Next, Howe turns to numbers.

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven," she counts.

Today, high in the hills above Malibu, Calif., overlooking the Pacific Ocean, John Lilly continues his quest to establish true communication between man and dolphin at the Human-Dolphin Foundation, which he founded with his wife Toni. But this time there's a big difference — he's using some of the newest and most sophisticated computer equipment available in order to convert human speech into supersonic dolphin sounds and to translate the dolphin's high-frequency noises into the human hearing spectrum.

Lilly's experiment is called Project JANUS (Joint Analog Numerical Understanding System) and is named after the mythological two-faced god. The human side is for communication in the air; the dolphin side is for communication in the water. Operating under the assumption that dolphins (and other members of the Cetacea family, such as whales) have a thinking capacity equal to, if not greater than man, Lilly is actually creating a new language by developing, with the computer, a list of frequency levels of sound that the dolphin can match and, Lilly hopes, understand.

Now that the programming is complete, Lilly is planning to take his computer in a mobile lab up to a research facility in northern California, where his new language will be perfected with dolphins in captivity, after which he plans to transport the computer to the sea. There, an attempt will be made to communicate with dolphins in their natural environment. Eventually, with the low cost and small size of computers, portable units might be available to the public so that everyone can speak to the dolphins.

Wishful thinking? Or sheer madness? Neither, as far as Lilly is concerned. He believes that the earth's most valuable resources may be the dolphins and the larger whales, some of which have brains many times the size of ours. Instead of killing the dolphins and whales, he says, why not see what we can learn from these creatures who have inhabited this planet for millions of years in total harmony with their environment? Might they have a tradition or history that has been passed down from generation to generation? Might they know what the earth was like long before man appeared? Perhaps by learning the key to their survival, we may discover the key to our own.

Toni Lilly

The primary reason Lilly chose to do his research with dolphins, and the bottle-nosed dolphin in particular, is because of the similarity between its brain (1,600-1,800 grams) and the human brain (1,400 grams). (An average chimpanzee, for instance, has a brain of 300-400 grams.) In the sea, Lilly explains in his book Communication Between Man and Dolphin, "among the Cetacea there is a continuous spectrum of brain sizes ranging from the ape size all the way up to six times the human size (in the sperm whale). As the brain gets larger, he explains, the "silent associational" areas, which control the ability of the brain to think, increase. Contrary to popular belief, however, large bodies do not require large brains. Rather, large brains need large bodies for protection. If the brain is as powerful as its size, the 20-pound brain of the sperm whale, much of which is silent associational area, could be light years ahead of ours, so far in fact that we can't even relate to it.

"Cetaceans evolved brains the size of ours 30 million years ago," Lilly states. "Our brains have only been their present size for approximately 100,000 years. We, as relative newcomers, may be asking too much of ourselves to communicate meaningfully with minds as ancient as those of the whales and dolphins. This program may be far more important than we currently conceive it to be: The whales and dolphins may have more to teach us than we have to teach them."

But dolphins are not just intelligent. They also seem to have an intense desire to communicate with humans. Aristotle observed that "small boys and dolphins develop mutual, passionate attachments." More recently, aquarium shows in which humans ride on the backs of dolphins and even killer whales, provide additional evidence of the respect and affection that Cetacea have for humans.

According to Lilly, man's inability to communicate with another species has caused him to suffer from "interspecies deprivation," from which he has developed a "man-centered" view of the world. Hence, man dominates, rather than interrelates with the planet. The result of this "narcissistic" attitude, he says, is that man perceives the whales and other creatures as having little or no intelligence. This, in turn, justifies man's exploitation of these animals. But it's possible that man may be destroying a heritage in the sea that is perhaps even more advanced than his own.

And what if Lilly is able to establish communication with dolphins? "The implications of such a breakthrough reach into virtually every realm of human endeavor," says Lilly, who believes he can be successful within five years. "The sea, comprising some 71 percent of the earth's surface, is almost universally seen as an inevitably crucial factor in human development and survival in the coming years and decades. Cooperative projects between humans and the mammals of the sea can provide solutions and new perspectives in this crucial area."

For example, dolphins could aid man's commercial enterprises by teaching us new methods of culturing plants and animal sea organisms. They could help fisheries avoid net destruction and the unnecessary capturing of dolphins. Offshore oil-drilling industries could use whales to detect oil leaks and act as guides to the ocean floor. Oceanaria could establish exhibits where humans could converse directly with dolphins in tanks. And if the current experiment works, the JANUS program could be used to develop communication with other animals, such as elephants, the only animal with a larger brain than man.

(Research on two-way communication with dolphins is being done at other locations as well. Also, the U.S. Navy now has a program in which killer whales are trained to dive to the ocean floor and retrieve missiles and torpedoes that have been lost, and it has also trained dolphins to attach bombs to the hulls of ships. This has angered groups that protect animal rights.)

Perhaps the greatest contribution of human-dolphin communication would be the establishment of a new approach to the conservation of the earth's natural resources. Lilly hopes that laws will be passed to protect the dolphins and whales, that they will "no longer be considered property, nor as an industrial resource, nor as stocks of animals," and that they will "have complete freedom of the waters of the earth."

In addition, Lilly would like to see oceanaria become educational centers where humans and dolphins can interact and learn from each other, with the dolphins volunteering for "limited terms of service" during which they'll be provided with telephone communication from tank out into the human world.

Although these predictions may seem farfetched, Lilly contends that "many science-fiction writers have made projections into the future that have become realized. Without such projection, man does not change his ways." To Lilly, the possibility that his visions of the future will come to pass "seems most likely."

"Are we alone as intelligent, sentient, compassionate beings on this planet?" he asks. "I do not believe so. Thus do I make a plea to our species to look further, to look beyond the end of our very human noses. We do need some outside-the-human-species input; we do need the perspective of someone else on our activities; we do need the exercise of negotiating with others besides humans. We do need to know the ancient wisdom of the dolphins and whales." FW

For Kathy Quinlan, Everything's Coming Up Roses

Frank Edwards/Fotos International

By Peer J. Oppenheimer

Actress Kathleen Quinlan plunks herself down and rests one leg over the arm of her chair. She's just come from a yoga session, and her worn sweatsuit looks as comfortable as she seems to be. It is hard to equate this smiling, open young woman with the girl who, when filming I Never Promised You a Rose Garden two years ago, seemed uptight and noncommittal.

"I didn't like talking to people at first," Kathy candidly admits. "When I'm into a character, it's hard for me to protect myself. So when I work, I shut the door. Even to friends. But now I understand the function of publicity."

The movie she had to publicize most recently was The Runner Stumbles. In the film, Kathy, who's 24, plays a young nun who falls in love with Dick Van Dyke, the parish priest, who is eventually accused of murdering her.

For the past few years, Kathy has been trying to balance all the new facets of her life. In the early 70's, a casting director, looking for local talent at Pacific College, had picked her for a small part in American Graffiti. Until then, she'd been a hopeful trainee for the Olympics (gymnastics, swimming and diving). However, that taste of dramatics was enough to make Kathy give up the Olympics in favor of becoming an actress (though Hollywood seemed a long way from Mill Valley, Calif., where she'd grown up).

"Unfortunately, I got to L.A. when all the TV shows went on hiatus," says Kathy. "I had only $80, so I got a job at a restaurant and worked there five months to pay for acting lessons. When I got my first interview, it was for the television series, Emergency, and I got the job."

Although she had a major role in the 1976 film, Lifeguard, it was after her first featured role as the 16-year-old mental patient in I Never Promised You a Rose Garden that she jumped to stardom. But the part took its toll. After filming, Kathleen dropped out of circulation, trying to shake the depression that haunted her. "The whole world looked funny to me because I'd spent so much time looking at it from an insane point of view."

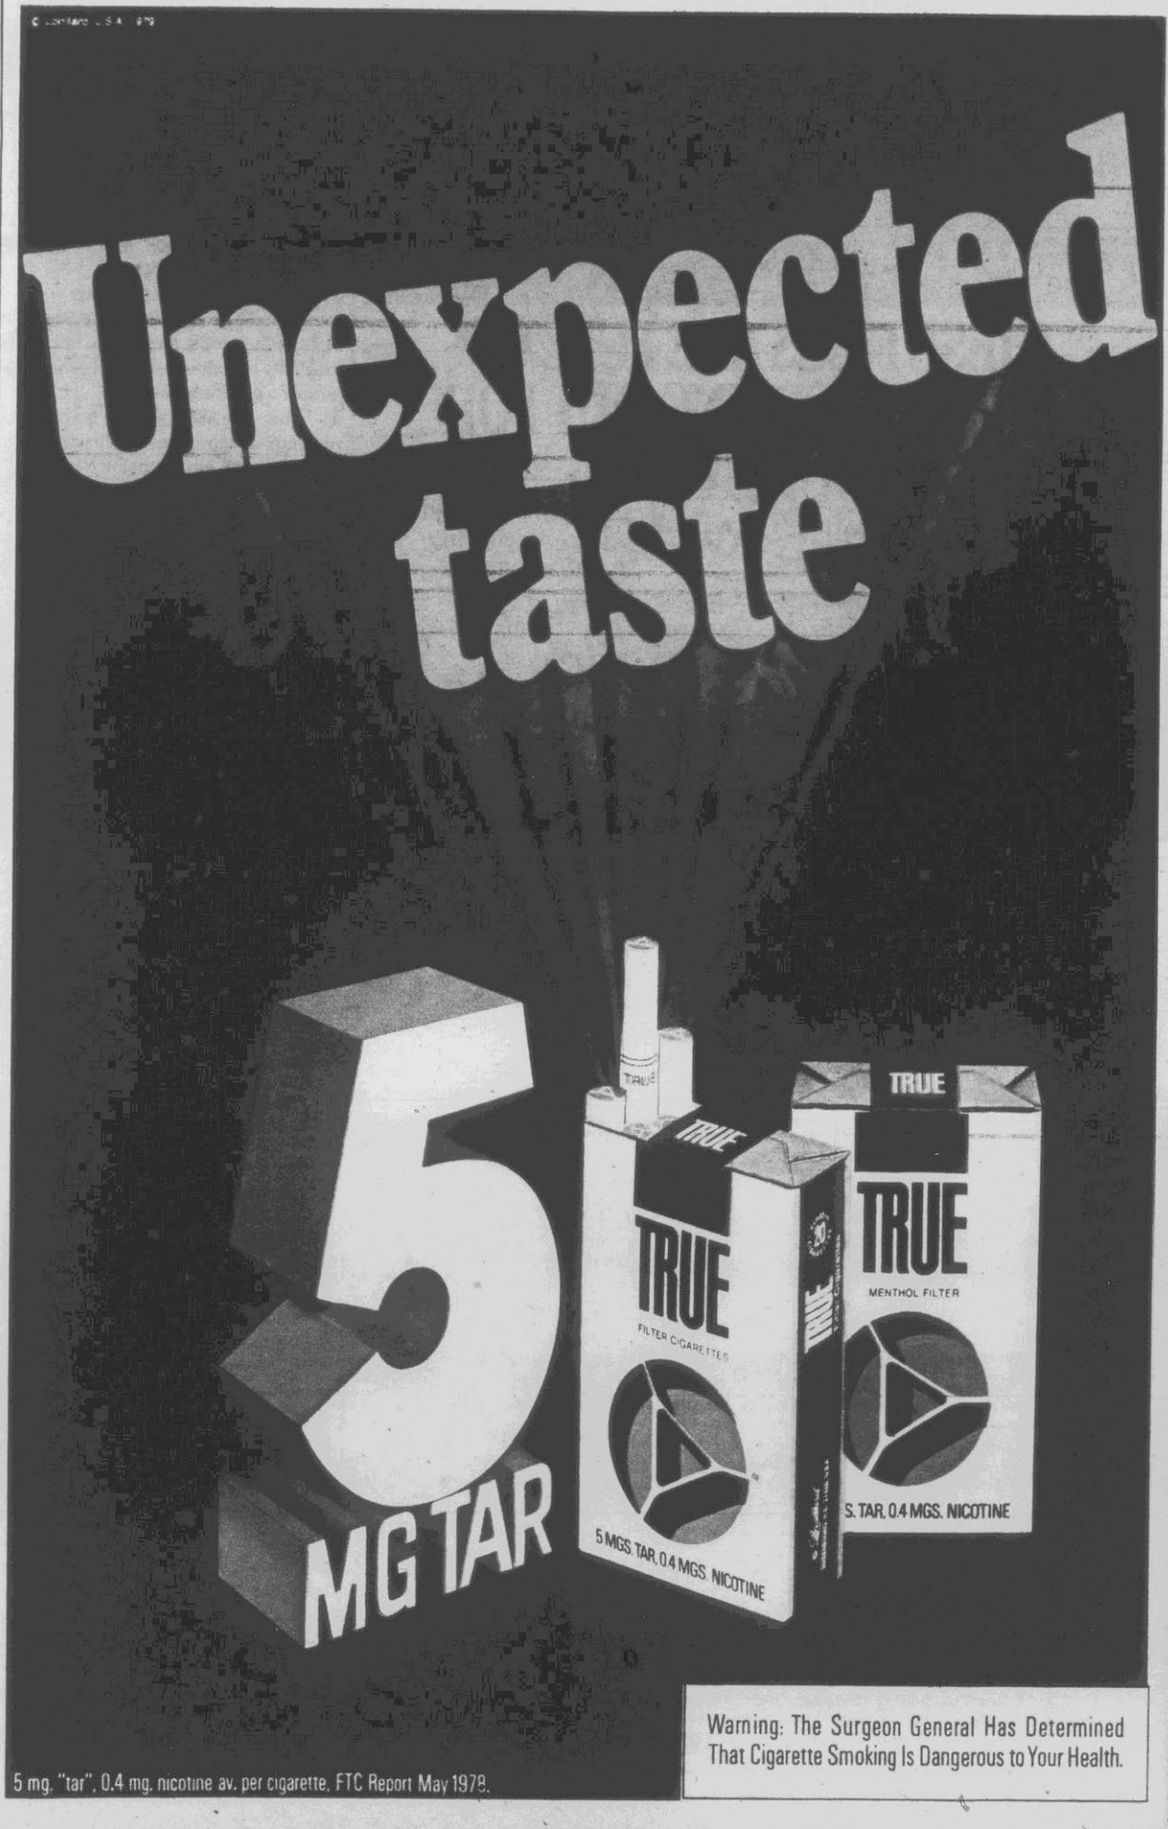

When she was ready to act again, she read and rejected many scripts until she saw The Promise. Her agent was enthusiastic about the money being offered: $100,000. However, it was not the money that intrigued Kathleen. Rather, it was the challenge.

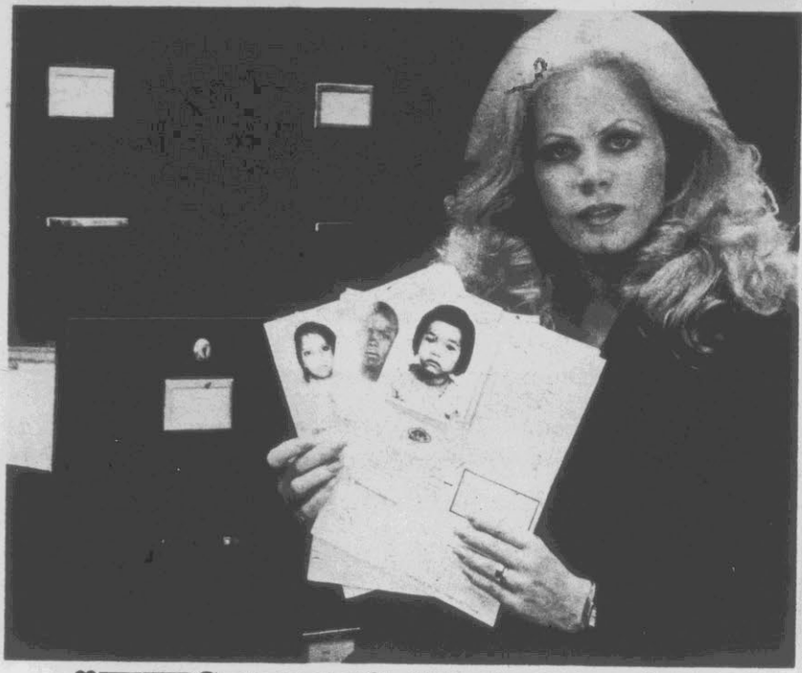

The film was unfortunately maudlin and disappointing and could have hurt Kathy's career. Instead, it made everyone aware of how strikingly beautiful she is.

Kathy has gone about turning herself into an actress with the same determination with which she trained for the Olympics. "I've had time for mistakes," she says. "You may not see all of them, but I know they are there."

She's not married, never has been, but she says she fantasizes about marriage and children. She's convinced though, that building herself into an actress of consequence takes time and wouldn't be fair to a marriage at the present time.

Kathleen is sure she can handle success: "It's a problem only if I make it a problem," she says. And with her levelheadedness, there seems to be little chance of that happening. FW

Sally Struthers

"In a room at Christian Children's Fund headquarters, there are file cabinets that look like any other file cabinets. Until you look inside. These files are full of children. Children with no one to care for them.

"Unless someone, like you, will help.

"There are children like little Angela. Her health is poor, but her family can't afford a doctor. And Rapson. He suffers from severe malnutrition. And Sri, who rarely eats anything except rice and corn.

"These poor children have known more suffering and want in their short lifetimes than you or I will ever know. But you can help change that. You can become a sponsor through Christian Children's Fund."

For $15 a month—just 50¢ a day—you can help give one of these children warm, nourishing meals, medical attention, the chance to go to school, or whatever the child needs most to live a healthy, productive life.

You needn't send any money now. First learn more about the child who needs you. Just send in the coupon. Christian Children's Fund will send you a child's photograph and tell you about the child's way of life. The child's age, interests and family background. We'll also tell you how this child can be helped, and give you details on how you can write to him and share a very special part of his life.

After you find out more about the child and Christian Children's Fund, then you can decide if you want to become a sponsor. Simply send in your first monthly check or money order for $15 within 10 days.

Please take this opportunity to open your heart to a child who needs you. And receive something very special in return.

Love.

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

Is It Really Better to Have Loved and Lost?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. When it comes to getting along with people, flattery will always get you somewhere.

2. How well you get along with another person, how much you feel in common in attitude and outlook, is affected by his or her physical attractiveness.

3. One of the biggest problems in life for most people is adjusting to, and getting along with, people they dislike — and this includes co-workers, bosses and often people we have to live with.

4. When you ask your boss for a letter of recommendation, how well you've gotten along with him — and what he really thinks of you as a person — will be revealed in the letter in a way which you may not suspect.

5. When it comes to getting along with your spouse, there are two qualities of top importance.

6. Your ability to get along with others, to relate to them, establishing meaningful relationships, is a true measure of successful living.

ANSWERS

1. False. Studies at Britain's University of Leicester on the psychodynamics of flattery show that how a person responds to it depends on his self-esteem — how he feels about himself as a human being. If he is on good terms with himself, feels capable, self-confident and "with it," he tends to accept a flattering appraisal as his just due and to be appreciative of the laudatory sentiments expressed. On the other hand, the investigations showed that people with low self-esteem, who were not on good terms with themselves — who were more given to self-doubts than self-confidence — tended to be disbelieving of flattery, inclined to view such praise as undeserved, and thus insincere, and were often inclined to look with suspicion on the flatterer's motives.

2. True. In a study of men and women undergraduates at the California School of Professional Psychology (San Diego), the relationship between perceived similarity to self and the physical attractiveness of others was explored and evaluated. Findings: "As the physical attractiveness of another increases, so will the subjects' perceptions of attitude similarity." In other words, the more we are impressed by a person's looks, the more we are inclined to feel that we "feel the same way about things." And it goes without saying that this materially affects how well we get along with each other.

3. True. A team of University of California psychologists made an interesting study on the subject of coming to like obnoxious people when we must live with them. It is pointed out that "each of our lives is filled with people to whom we may not wish to relate, but to whom we must accommodate. This process of adjustment begins with our early relationsips with parents, siblings, aunts, uncles, etc., and continues in a series of later relationships with teachers, classmates, coworkers, bosses and in-laws." And it is observed that how people adjust effectively to such no-choice relationships is obviously an important problem. The study's most encouraging finding: When a person faces a no-choice relationship with an initially disliked person and interacts with him, the emotional adjustments which the relationship necessitates usually tend to increase his liking for the other person. To put it another way: If you have to get along with someone and do your best to make it work out, it's more than likely to.

4. True. Wellesley College studies show that the length of the letter of recommendation often speaks more eloquently of the boss' feelings than the words do. For the investigation showed that "long letters of recommendation were perceived as being most favorable toward job applicants and short letters of recommendation as being the least favorable toward job applicants." Other studies match these findings and show that longer letters of recommendation are written about liked people than about disliked people. When an employer is asked for a recommendation, he is often hard-put to refuse, regardless of how he feels about the employee, but the length of the letter serves as a barometer of his true feelings.

5. True. It's more important to get along with your spouse than anyone else, so far as personal happiness is concerned. A Boston University survey of married couples showed extroversion (interest in others as opposed to self-centeredness) and agreeableness (as opposed to being unpleasant, obnoxious and offensive) to be the most often cited as the most initially attractive qualities. However, "the level of conscientiousness was found to play a more central role later on in marriage."

6. True. In their excellent monograph on human relationships, University of Massachusetts psychologists George Levinger and Harold L. Raush cite this astute observation: "A person with many achievements to his credit, but who has never achieved one real relationship-in-depth, cannot be sure that he has succeeded in life. But anyone who has achieved one relationship-in-depth, and has failed in many enterprises, can never be considered a failure." FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

Teen-Age Drinking

Alcoholism is a growing problem among those teen-agers who drink, and early this month, CBS will present a dramatic television special about a young alcoholic. The Boy Who Drank Too Much is the story of Buff Saunders, a young hockey player who lives with his alcoholic father. Despite the fact that he is a superb player, Buff can't seem to make the starting team; he is characterized as a troublemaker and a loner without a sense of team spirit. To cope with his loneliness, his academic problems and his father, Buff begins drinking.

With the help of a teammate, Buff, belligerent at first, finally realizes that he is an alcoholic, although he is only 16 years old. His coming to grips with what he finally understands is a disease, and his slow comprehension, with the help of several Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, of the reasons both he and his father drink, make this show well worth watching.

Preventing Child Abuse

For young children who have been battered or neglected by their parents, exposure to a warm, loving atmosphere is often a giant step toward insuring that their psychological and physical scars don't last forever. La Casa de los Niños (House of the Children) is just such a place. It is also a preventive crisis nursery; parents who feel they are unable to cope with their responsibilities and may vent their frustrations by abusing their children can bring their youngsters to La Casa and leave them for as long as they need to.

La Casa was started in 1973 by Sister Kathleen Clark, and since then more than 6,000 children, from birth to age 11, have found a temporary home there. "In many cases," says Sister Kathleen, "parents bring their children to us. Our main goal is prevention, but we get abused and neglected children, too. Right now, we have a 5-month-old baby with 15 fractured ribs. And most of our children aren't from poor homes; their parents are middle or upper class."

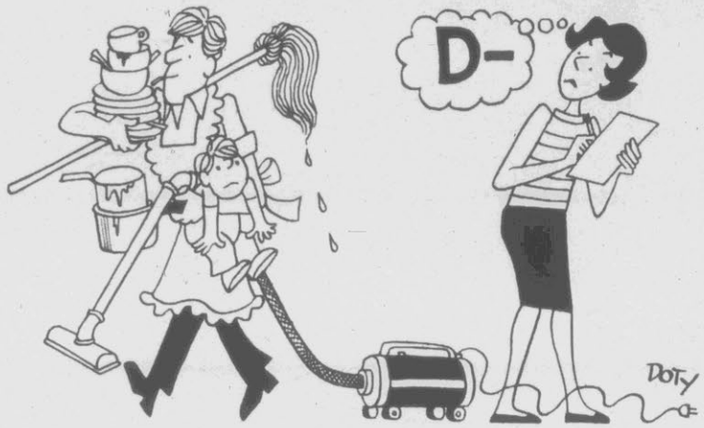

La Casa, which is financed entirely by donations, takes children on a national basis. "We even had a call from Germany," says Sister Kathleen proudly. "And since we began, we've had thousands of requests for information, and communities all over are starting nurseries like this. They answer a real need." For more information, write to La Casa de los Niños, Dept. FW., 347 E. Speedway Blvd., Tuscon, Ariz. 05705.

Domestic Help

If you don't think your husband is handling the children or the housework very well, it might surprise you to know that he probably feels the same way, reports Bruce Chadwick, a Brigham Young University sociology professor.

Chadwick was one of three professors who questioned 775 randomly selected couples on performances and satisfaction in the family. The family roles included housekeeper, income provider, emotional and moral supporter, recreation planner, sexual partner and child teacher and disciplinarian.

The researchers found that the husbands rated their wives higher in every role but income provider. The wives rated themselves higher than their husbands in all the roles but provider and recreation.

"Women seem to feel that they are doing more in teaching and disciplining the children and taking care of the home than are their husbands," reports Chadwick, "and they would like their husbands to help out more."

Tomorrow's Leaders Today

A recent survey of 23,200 top junior and senior high-school students indicates that those teen-agers are steering a fairly conservative course toward their well-defined goals. Some 70 percent of the teens polled by Educational Communications, Inc. have definite career plans; 41 percent want to be doctors or lawyers, while 21 percent say they will choose business administration. And most of those teen-agers are pursuing those careers without indulging in the pastimes associated with teens; only 8 percent said they use marijuana, and 43 percent indicated that they'd never had a beer.

What are these youngsters looking forward to in the next decade? Almost two-thirds of the students polled put stabilizing the economy and battling inflation as their number-one priority. And, while 73 percent said that energy concerns were uppermost in their minds, less than half indicated that they would be willing to pay additional taxes to support antipollution programs despite the fact that two-thirds say they will be earning more than $30,000 a year by age 32 or 33.

Lifestyles

Heart Disease. A study conducted by Dr. Charles Hennekers of Harvard Medical School indicates that retirement may increase the risk of death from coronary heart disease. The report, based on a study of the deaths of 1,300 males, found that the men who retired had an 80-percent greater chance of death from that disease than those who hadn't stopped working.

Pregnancy. Dr. Richard Naeye, a pathologist at the Hershey Medical Center in Pennsylvania, recently reported that the rate of infection of the amniotic fluid that cushions the fetus, and the subsequent death of the baby, increased when women had sexual intercourse during the last month of their pregnancy. Writing in the New England Journal of Medicine, Dr. Naeye noted that "the reasons remain to be determined, but it is possible that a greater number or variety of bacteria reach the amniotic fluid after coitus."

Television. For a portrait of how women in Russia live, watch Women of Russia, a five-part series hosted by such notables as Shirley Jones, Juliet Prowse and Kathryn Crosby. The series is the brainchild of producers Sherry Grant and Sandy Carter, who spent three years negotiating their trip and then traveled to the Soviet Union seven times to research and film the show. Panthenol SHAMPOO SOAP
More Manageable hair for men & women

Now, thanks to an amazing scientific research discovery called PANTHENOL (vitamin B5), there is something NEW and possibly revolutionary for droopy and brittle hair. Unlike many hair products that merely coat the hair to soften it, PANTHENOL actually penetrates the hair shaft, so moisture is retained inside. This helps restore body, fill in damaged areas of brittle hair and thickens the hair to make it more manageable (and more beautiful)! Men like it, women love it.

STEVE CANYON

by MILTON CANIFF

WITH THE HELP OF EVERY U.S. AGENCY EXCEPT THE GRAVES REGISTRATION BUREAU, STEVE AND SUMMER ARE FINALLY HOME SAFE — IF NOT TOO SOUND

I DIDN'T THINK A LITTLE PISTOL WHIPPING AND SUFFOCATION COULD TAKE ME DOWN SO FAR!

MEANWHILE = FAR AWAY

LEIGHTON OLSON, I WAS AFRAID FOR YOU TO SEE ME.. RECYCLED!

CONVOY, I'M STILL AMAZED THAT YOU ARE ALIVE!

WHY DID YOU BEFRIEND ME — A STRANGER?

— AND LOSE YOUR JOB — AND MAYBE YOUR STEPFATHER, STEVE CANYON?

I WAS FURIOUS BECAUSE YOU HAD BEEN TORTURED

...WHERE WOMEN ARE LESS THAN DIRT!

YES, I KNOW, BUT I'M GLAD I COULD BRING YOU TO A HOSPITAL

AND PAY FOR MY TREATMENT FROM YOUR BACK SALARY!

HOW MAY I EVER SHOW MY GRATITUDE?

YOU CAN MARRY ME!

THAT'S IN THE PAST, CONVOY— I'M IN LOVE WITH YOU

LEE OLSON, I AM A BROKEN WOMAN — BUT I CAN KISS YOU, NOW THAT I HAVE NEW TEETH

THAT IS SHE... WITH THE AMERICAN!

IT WAS GOOD OF THE YANKEE TO PAY TO MAKE HER WELL FOR WHAT SHE IS TO DO!
