Senator Angrily Declined Bribe Bid

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — One U.S. senator angrily rebuffed undercover FBI agents willing to pay bribes as part of a political corruption investigation that has implicated eight other members of Congress, a source close to the case said.

This source said the senator, Larry Pressler, R-S.D., was the only member of Congress caught up in the probe who refused to go along with the dishonest dealings discussed by undercover investigators.

Two sources said Pressler was not a subject of the FBI investigation and thus was not among the 20 public officials and 10 businessmen and lawyers visited by the FBI Saturday and Sunday. The FBI completed notifying the 30 subjects of the investigation of their rights on Sunday, one source said.

For 14 months, FBI men had posed as representatives of a wealthy Arab sheik seeking investments, a casino gambling license in Atlantic City, N.J., and legislation to allow him to stay in this country if he were forced from his homeland.

During this time, they paid almost $500,000 in cash to public officials for favors or the promise of them, a source familiar with the investigation said. But this source added that fewer than 10 of the 20 public officials took money. "Some arranged meetings or did other favors," this source said.

A source close to the investigation said Pressler stormed out of his meeting with the undercover men when it was suggested money was available to win the sheik permanent residence here. "That man didn't violate any law," this source said.

"He told them, 'I don't want anything to do with it. I don't want to touch it,'" the source reported. "He saw very clearly what it was. What he did makes the other cases stronger, because the others could have walked out too."

In addition to state and local officials in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, one source said those who became subjects of the probe were: U.S. Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr., D-N.J., and U.S. Reps. John M. Murphy, D-N.Y.; Frank Thompson, Jr., D-N.J.; Michael O. Myers, D-Pa.; Raymond F. Lederer, D-Pa.; John W. Jenrette, D-S.C.; John P. Murtha, D-Pa., and Richard Kelly, R-Fla.

"My feelings are, having read the newspapers, that I would be very wise to engage counsel, which I've done," Williams said Sunday.

By Sunday, most of the eight members of Congress had issued denials of any wrongdoing.

No charges have been filed, nor arrests made. Sources said federal officials were planning to present their evidence to one or more grand juries, perhaps as early as this week.

Meanwhile, House Ethics Committee Chairman Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., said his panel would expand an investigation already underway to include the FBI allegations.

The sources said FBI director William Webster and top Justice Department lawyers closely policed the probe to ensure the FBI was never the first to suggest bribes to public figures.

Meanwhile, House Ethics Committee Chairman Charles E. Bennett, D-Fla., said his panel would expand an investigation already underway to include the FBI allegations.

"We've already had a continuing investigation of one or more of those people going on for months," he said, declining to give details.

Bennett said his committee would meet this afternoon to take up the issue.

Bennett's Senate counterpart, Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., said today his ethics panel also will conduct "a thorough investigation of all allegations" against any senators involved in the case.

Murder, Torture In New Mexico Prison

By S.J. GUFFEY
Associated Press Writer

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Fires still burned in the New Mexico State Prison today as 1,100 prisoners huddled in tents outside the compound and stories unfolded of hellish murder, torture and mutilations that left at least 35 inmates dead, scores wounded, and 15 others missing.

State police Sgt. George Ulibarri said three more bodies were brought in today, bringing the total number of dead to 35.

Gov. Bruce King told a news conference that at least seven died of drug overdoses, others died of smoke inhalation and some were murdered. The governor said a total of 50 prisoners were unaccounted for, including the dead.

Officials said they expected to find more bodies when they were able to get inside the prison gymnasium which was still burning.

"It's one hell of a bloody mess in there," said Corrections Commission Chairman Bud Richards. "There are a hell of a lot of bodies in there."

"National Guardsmen are throwing up all over,"

State Police Capt. Frank Young said authorities were waiting until the fires are extinguished to "do a real thorough search."

"I would say we are anticipating as many as 41 total," said Ulibarri of the New Mexico State Police.

The 36 hours of carnage at the prison, recaptured by National Guard and state police Sunday afternoon, was the most serious since the 1971 Attica riot in New York state left 43 persons dead.

State officials said it may cost as much as $50 million to replace the state's only maximum-security prison which was built to house 850 and was holding 1,136 when the riot erupted early Saturday. In the meantime, Gov. Bruce King appealed today to neighboring states to take some of the prisoners, who spent the night in tents guarded by 250 National Guardsmen and about 30 policemen.

While some predicted the death toll would soar as the remaining fires were put out, particularly in the gymnasium, officials were appalled at what they saw when they entered the compound.

A headless corpse was propped up in a courtyard. One prisoner had his eyes gouged out. Another apparently had his arm chopped off before being hurled from atop a building. A blowtorch was turned on the face of another.

The rioters, who ransacked prison offices and found confidential records, turned on informers with savage revenge, officials said. Many were attacked with meat cleavers and burned.

"There was blood all over, against the wall, smeared around," said Lt. Richard Montoya, who headed the Special Weapons And Tactics team that lead the move to regain control of the prison.

A torch of some kind apparently had been applied to the face of one victim, he said, and another's eyes had been gouged out.

"From what we understand there was no racial tension involved," said state police Maj. Charlie Anaya. "It was getting all the snitchers."

Late Sunday, 32 prisoner deaths had been confirmed, said Anaya.

One guard and nine inmates were listed in critical condition from the violence that ended Sunday in surrender, with no shots fired by police or the 100 guardsmen. Seven guards and 55 inmates were admitted to hospitals, and 14 inmates were treated for drug overdoses from medical supplies passed around freely on the takeover's first day.

Officials feared the death toll would soar when the contents of the prison's charred gymnasium were known. Thick smoke still poured from the gymnasium ruins late Sunday, more than 12 hours after the blaze began.

Pitt Hospital's Beds Are Filled

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners were told this morning at their regular monthly meeting, that there are no vacancies at Pitt Memorial Hospital for patients.

Rick Gilstrap, associate director at the hospital, told the board, "we're full at the hospital."

Gilstrap said there is, "a delay in getting some of our patients in," but emphasized that efforts are being made to find beds to accommodate those needing to be admitted.

Hospital plant manager Ralph Hall told the board that work on the new bed tower is, "progressing slowly," because of the bad weather, but reported that materials are being delivered to the site.

The board instructed Fire Marshall Bobby Joyner to continue working on plans to implement the 911 emergency service telephone number in the county.

Joyner indicated that the next step would probably be to meet with the various town officials in the county to discuss the implementation of the service.

If the service is put into use, county residents would simply dial 911 to be connected to fire, police and emergency medical service aid in emergency situations.

Embassy Burned

PARIS (AP) — The French embassy in the Libyan capital of Tripoli was attacked and burned by a mob of demonstrators today, the Foreign Ministry announced. All embassy personnel escaped unharmed, a ministry spokesman said.

It was the second attack on a Western embassy in Tripoli in about two months. On Dec. 2, about 2,000 Libyans chanting support for Iran stormed and ransacked the American Embassy.

Ask City Council Reconsider Rescue Policies

Volunteer members of the Greenville Rescue Squad, who last week said they would disband the volunteer emergency medical service group if the city's present policy of integrated fire and rescue service is not changed, have requested that the policy be reconsidered at the February 14 city council meeting.

In a letter to city manager Ed Wyatt, dated February 1, volunteer rescue Capt. Brent Stocks said, "the purpose of this letter is to formally request that the consideration of city policy concerning Emergency Medical Services be placed on the agenda of the city council meeting scheduled for February 14."

"This policy involves a matter vital to the citizens of Greenville," the letter continued. "We believe it is of such magnitude that the people should have a chance to examine it in an honest, objective light."

Saying past efforts by the volunteers to discuss the policy with city officials have been unsuccessful, Stocks' letter continued, "we now take this opportunity to publicly ask for further open discussion on this subject. The public must be involved and heard regarding a question that decides such an important and basic matter as Emergency Medical Care."

The letter continued, "Whether or not the people want this matter settled only by 'economic advantages' needs to be decided by them, especially if these 'advantages' are so questionable."

"Contrary to the city management's evident belief, the people may have a strong desire for quality advanced emergency medical care."

Stocks continued, "since the announcement of our intention to terminate the Greenville Rescue Squad Volunteer organization, we have received a great response from the public. In addition to voicing support for our position in the present dispute over plans for the rescue squad, the people have strongly requested that we refrain from disbanding our group."

"In respect for this feeling," the letter noted, "we would be willing to postpone our actions to give the people a final opportunity to make their feelings known."

"A refusal to permit this public forum would not only deny the principles of democratic government, but would also leave us with no alternative except to proceed with plans to terminate our operations."

Wyatt, this morning, said the request is being, "taken under advisement."

Brzezinski Seeks Saudis As A Potential Partner

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
1980 by Chicago Tribune

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦A102 ♦AJ9632 ♦A76 ♦J
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♥ Pass 3 ♦ 3 ♣

What action do you take?
A.—Actually, East's intervention has made the bidding easier for you. You can afford to pass and let partner clarify whether his jump shift was based on a one-suited hand or whether he has heart support for you. Your pass is 100 percent forcing since partner's jump shift created a game force.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦642 ♥J10953 ♦A952 ♦8
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♦ Dble. 1 ♥ ?
What action do you take?
A.—Consider the tactics of the situation. You are vulnerable and the opponents are not. Partner has made a takeout double, showing support for the unbid suits, and your right-hand opponent has responded in your best suit. Something is surely rotten in Denmark, and the only sure way of exposing East's chicanery is to make a penalty double.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦KQ1093 ♥642 ♦852 ♦A6
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass 1 ♦ Pass Pass
1 ♣ Pass 3 ♦ Pass

What action do you take?
A.—It might seem that the bidding is inconsistent. Partner, who was not good enough to enter the auction at his first turn, now suddenly has found the strength to make a jump raise opposite your balancing overcall. Partner must have a good hand with strength in diamonds and probably short hearts. Since you have about as much as you could have for a reopening bid, we suggest you accept partner's invitation by going to four spades.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦K7 ♥Q82 ♦J93 ♦Q7643
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 NT Dble. Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—Partner's double suggests that he expects to defeat one no trump with little or no help from you. Since you hold virtually all of the strength that has not been accounted for by the first two calls, dummy should be absolutely barren. Pass — this could be bloody.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦643 ♥KJ2 ♦QJ ♦96532
The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
Pass Pass 1 ♣ 2 ♦
Pass 3 ♣ Pass 5 ♣
Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—As far as partner knows, you may have absolutely nothing. Nevertheless, he has contracted for an eleven-trick game. You have unexpected values in the side suits as well as a fifth trump. A small slam should be laydown. In fact, you might cue-bid five hearts en route to advise partner that a grand slam is possible.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦J2 ♥Q83 ♦Q753 ♦KJ52
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♣ Pass 1 NT Pass
3 ♣ Pass 3 NT Pass
4 ♥ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—Partner has shown a strong hand with six spades and only four hearts. It would be almost a criminal act to strand him in a 4-3 fit when a known 6-2 fit is available. It is your duty to correct to four spades.

Speir To Stay As Guidance Counselor

Newly elected Democratic Party Chairman Betty Speir said this morning she has agreed to take the chairmanship "until after the primary" and that she will continue to keep her guidance counselor's job in Pitt County.

Insect Lobby Makes Mark

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — The insect lobby has made its mark on this year's Missouri General Assembly. Among the more than 1,300 bills introduced in the Legislature this session is one that seeks to glorify the ladybug as the official state insect. Rep. Mark Youngdahl, D-St. Joseph, introduced the bill in response to a request from Helen Harr of St. Joseph, publisher of the Bushwacker's Annual Calendar, a compendium of Missouri facts and history. Youngdahl's measure also would designate the mule as the state's official animal.

"Most of the insects get a lot of bad press because they eat each other or sting or do other bad things," said Miss Harr, a former librarian.

The ladybug, however, eats about 50 crop-destroying aphids a day on its long menu of other bugs that are harmful to man, she said.

As for the mule, it has long been a state symbol, epitomized in the saying "stubborn as a Missouri mule." The mule once was high on the state's list of leading export products.

"I'm pleased to have been offered this position," Mrs. Speir said, "but wouldn't like to have it on a long-term basis. It can be a full-time job at busy times of the year and I don't want it on that basis. My job as guidance counselor at North Pitt High School is too meaningful to me to give up. As it is, Russell Walker has left me in really good shape and I should be able to attend to the duties of chairman by traveling to Raleigh and other places in the state on weekends and by telephone from home in the evenings."

"We have a very capable executive director, Dr. David Price, and he and others involved understand my position."

Mrs. Speir, who lives in Bethel, succeeds State Sen. Russell Walker, who had to give up the party post to run against another Democrat in the upcoming election. An Asheboro businessman, he was born in Conetoe in Edgecombe County

Charge Looting By Gold Trader

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An E.F. Hutton & Co. broker caught short in his personal gold trading has been arrested on a federal charge of looting customers' accounts of more than $270,000, the FBI said.

Michael R. Hamaoui, 40, was arrested Friday at his home. Hamaoui admitted to Hutton officials that he had been making unauthorized withdrawals from customers' accounts, FBI agent Tom Sheil said.

Meet Deficit In Rental Plan

CLEVELAND (AP) — Want to rent a zoo? The Cleveland Metroparks Zoo, battling deficits and decay, is doing some different things — including offering all or part of the zoo for rent to businesses and social groups for special events. "We rented the entire zoo grounds to the Ohio Recreational Vehicle Association to display their vehicles," Zoo administrator Michael N. Vitantonio said.

The fee for renting the whole zoo for one day is variable but could run $3,000 to $5,000, Vitantonio said.

Like the city itself, the zoo faces problems with deteriorating facilities at a time when revenues have been declining. And while attendance has dwindled, the lions and tigers and other exotic animals are growing older, and the care and feeding of keepers and animals alike are increasingly expensive.

Vitantonio, appointed last May, says the deficit has quadrupled over the last 12 years. He told the Zoological Society expenses this year will total $1.2 million while revenues are projected at only $840,000, leaving a $360,000 deficit to be made up by the Metroparks system.

The administrator said one survey done for the zoo estimated it would take $2.2 million to stop the decay, "just to fix up existing facilities, repairing plumbing, electricity, heating and so forth."

The key to paring the deficit is attracting more visitors, he says. Although 1979's attendance ran slightly ahead of the previous year's, it was still below 1977.

With backing of the park board and help of consultants, Vitantonio launched a program aimed at cutting costs and boosting attendance.

The zoo, located on Cleveland's West Side, has been thoroughly cleaned. Dozens of trees have been removed to provide a better view of the animals, and rusty metal fencing has been replaced by open-style, lower wooden fences that add to the illusion of spaciousness.

A walkway is planned to connect the upper and lower portions of the sprawling zoo, and a moated run is being built for two cheetahs being imported from South Africa at a cost of about $5,000 each.

The cheetahs, billed as the world's fastest land mammals, are a gift from a private donor, who also is giving fencing and shrubbery for the exhibit area. A restaurant is to be built next spring beside the cat building, and Vitantonio hopes this will be another source of new income.

There is also concern that the birds and beasts in the zoo are growing older, and Cleveland has only single members of many species.

For this reason, a breeding program is planned, to be implemented within three years. Vitantonio says the first emphasis will be on breeding gorillas, which he says sell currently for $60,000 a pair.

EXTENDED WEATHER OUTLOOK FOR N.C.

Continued cold with chance of precipitation each day, Wednesday through Friday. Highs in 40s, lows in 20s.

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — U.S. National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, looking for international partners in an American aid program for Pakistan, flew in to Saudi Arabia today for meetings with leaders of this wealthy and staunchly anti-communist kingdom.

The United States has offered Pakistan $400 million in military and economic assistance over two years because of the Soviet intervention in neighboring Afghanistan. In the Pakistani capital of Islamabad over the weekend, Brzezinski told officials this was "only the beginning of the United States response to the threat."

He did not indicate how much more the Pakistanis might get, but added, "We hope that other countries also will indicate what they wish to contribute."

The Saudis are one potential partner. In a weekend statement, Saudi Crown Prince Fahd urged the Moslem world to unite to give moral and financial aid to the anti-communist Moslem rebellion in Afghanistan.

After the flight from Islamabad, Brzezinski was met at Riyadh airport by the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud al-Faisal, Riyadh state radio reported.

Before leaving Islamabad, Brzezinski told reporters he had been asked by President Carter to "lay the foundations for an invigorated friendship between our two countries. We have done so."

Asked whether the United States plans to establish military bases in Pakistan, Brzezinski replied, "We are in the process generally of enhancing our ability to be of constructive help to the security of our friends in this part of the world, as well as elsewhere."

In doing so, he said, "we will be cooperating in a variety of ways with different countries in this region."

Brzezinski reaffirmed America's commitment "to safeguarding Pakistan in terms of the 1959 (mutual security) agreement against the dangers posed from the north," and said the U.S. pledge of $400 million in economic and military aid over two years was "only the beginning of the United States response to the threat."

"We hope that other countries also will indicate what they wish to contribute," he said.

Brzezinski travels today to Saudi Arabia to seek its support for a Pakistani aid alliance. In a weekend statement, Saudi Crown Prince Fahd urged the Moslem world to unite to give moral and financial aid to the anti-communist Moslem rebellion in Afghanistan.

Brzezinski, who is traveling with Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher, left a Pentagon team in Pakistan to assess the nation's military requirements.

Zia had earlier shrugged off the U.S. aid offer as "peanuts," and there was no indication whether he and Brzezinski had reached agreement on the size of an aid package. A joint statement said they had a "full exchange of views."

Zia is angling for a massive shot of U.S. aid to rebuild his armed forces, which have lost three wars to India since they got independence from Britain in 1947. Brzezinski was asked at a news conference today how America would respond if Pakistan was threatened "from quarters not controlled by the Soviet Union," an apparent reference to India.

"We expect that Pakistan's security will not be threatened but will be heightened by the efforts that Pakistan itself together with its friends and also with us is undertaking to enhance the security of the region," he replied.

"We will be cooperating in a variety of ways with different countries in this region. Precisely what form it will take, at this stage, it would be premature to say."

Brzezinski visited a Pakistani camp for Afghan refugees about 100 miles south of the Afghan-Pakistan border.

"You will prevail...because you cause is right. God is on your side," Brzezinski told the cheering refugees who responded with chants of "Allah-o-akbar" — God is great.

Pointing north to the snow-clad mountain border, Brzezinski said, "The land over there is yours and you will go back there one day. Remember you are not alone."

Several elders told Brzezinski their homes, mosques and villages had been destroyed by "the alien and atheist regime in Afghanistan," forcing them to flee. "They are bent upon destroying our religion," one of them said.

More than 500,000 refugees have sought shelter in Pakistan since the first communist regime came to power in Afghanistan 21 months ago, sparking a nationwide rebellion by anti-communist Moslem rebels. The Soviets began pouring troops into the country on Christmas Day to put down the rebellion and prop up the latest Marxist ruler, Babrak Karmal, installed in a Soviet-backed coup two days after Christmas.

Meanwhile, three British reporters reported missing in northern Afghanistan made contact with the Reuters office in Kabul, the Afghan capital, and said they were safe and sound. Reuters said in a message to its Moscow bureau the three got snowed in in Mazdar Sharif and expected to return to Kabul today.

The three left Kabul Friday on a bus to travel to northern Afghanistan. They had been due back Friday night. Weather in the region was reported bad, with snow and high winds.

The three are Marcus Eliason of The Associated Press, Richard Balmforth of Reuters and Elizabeth Thurgood of The Guardian.

Every year a half million people begin to wear contact lenses. Personal appearance seems to be the primary reason. Better vision, fewer problems in sports and freedom from eyeglasses are other reasons. Today's lenses cover the cornea, floating on a natural tear layer, and are only about the size of an aspirin. People who are near-sighted, farsighted, and those with an astigmatism can all wear lenses successfully. New materials and fitting techniques are making the number of wearers larger each year.

Eyewear today has expanded to meet a growing demand for a cosmetic and fashion approach. At CLEAR VUE OPTICIANS, 1705 6th, Physicians Quadrangle Building A, in addition to providing the quality material and professional attention to prescription requirements, we address your desire to have available a selection of fashionable shapes and designs of frames so that your eyewear compliments your character, your wardrobe and your taste. EVERY KNITTER IS PROBABLY familiar with straight needles but some have never worked with the other types. In my opinion, circular needles are the most versatile for they can be used for either tubular or straight knitting — and there is no chance of losing one of a matching pair.

When you are working on a flat piece of knitting, you simply work back and forth in rows on the circular type just as you would with a pair of straight needles, using any length circular needle you prefer. The 36-inch length is particularly good for wide pieces such as afghan strips.

If you are making a tubular piece, you will join the first and last stitches and work round and round, selecting a length sufficient to accommodate all of the stitches, but short enough not to stretch the stitches.

With circular needles, you cast on stitches in the same manner used with straight needles, but instead of turning your work and knitting or purling the last cast on stitch, you simply start by knitting the first stitch which was cast on.

This automatically joins your work and you will then knit all the stitches on every round for stockinette stitch. For a neater joining, cast on one more stitch than required. When you have done this, slip the last cast-on stitch to the other tip and knit this stitch together with the first cast-on stitch.

Before joining your work, check carefully to see that your stitches are not twisted on the needle. That is, the smooth portion of every stitch should be on top of the needles and the "bumpy" part should be on the bottom surface of the needles.

If you do not take this precaution, your work may be hopelessly twisted. Unfortunately, this won't become apparent to you until several rows are worked and the resulting twist in the knitted fabric cannot be corrected. You will just have to rip out and start over.

Sometimes you will have a tubular piece too small for even the shortest circular needles. This is when you will need to use double pointed needles. These are straight knitting needles with a point at each end, usually with four needles to a set.

When using this type of needle, one-third of the total number of stitches is cast on to each of three needles. The fourth needle is used in the same manner as the right hand needle in a pair of regular needles. Sometimes it is referred to as the "free needle" or the "working needle."

As with a circular needle, you start by knitting the first stitch cast on, making sure that the stitches are not twisted, and knitting round and round. After you knit all of the stitches off of the first needle, this then becomes your working needle, with which you knit the stitches off of the second needle. The same procedure is followed for the stitches of the third needle.

You may find that you have a vertical row of loose stitches at each point where you have changed needles. Here are a couple of tips to help overcome that problem.

Each time you finish working the stitches off one needle, make a conscious effort to hold the yarn tighter than usual when working the first stitch off the next needle.

If that doesn't work, try slipping the last stitch on each needle to the next needle. That is, knit

Ice Chewer Could Have Iron Need

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from a reader complaining about a woman who chewed ice continuously. You commented in a funny vein.

She might just be ill-mannered; on the other hand, she could very well be suffering from an iron deficiency.

"Pagophagia" is a medical term for eating ice; it is a form of "pica," which is a craving for unusual substances. It's a well-known symptom of iron deficiency.

The woman needs to be examined and a diagnosis made. She might overcome her ice-chewing habit by taking iron supplements.

PHOENIX M.D.

DEAR M.D.: Thanks for the hard, cold facts. I learned something today.

DEAR ABBY: I am a happily married woman (22) and Mike is wonderful, healthy, robust, masculine man of 25. We've been married a little over a year, and I have a problem I can't ask anyone else about. It has to do with sex. Mike has a big appetite for sex, but I am not complaining. It's his timing that bothers me. He always wants to make love on Sunday morning before mass. Abby, I know that love within marriage is not a sin, but for some silly reason I just hate to go to mass right after having had sex. Lately I have been putting my husband off. But I feel guilty about that.

Do you think I should postpone the lovemaking until after mass? Or keep telling myself I have no reason to feel guilty about it, and just try to get over that feeling. What's wrong with me?

MAGGIE IN MANHATTAN

DEAR MAGGIE: Your problem is rooted in the notion that sex is sinful. You grew up believing it, and even though you're married and there is nothing to feel guilty about, you're still programmed to equate sex with sin. Talk to a priest, or a psychiatrist. (Try the priest first. It's cheaper.)

DEAR ABBY: I have been considering donating my organs for possible transplant at the time of my death. However, I have heard that the family of the deceased is charged for transportation to the special hospital where the organs are removed, and also for the surgery to remove the organs. Is this true?

If it is, I would rather not donate my organs since I do not wish to add to the expense of my funeral. Thank you.

CONSIDERATE

DEAR CONSIDERATE: There is no charge for transportation to hospitals for the removal of organs. Time is so important in the removal of organs that a donor almost always has to be in the hospital at the time of death. (Corneas must be removed within four hours after death; kidneys within 20 minutes!)

There is no cost to the donor or the donor's family for the removal of organs.

However, when one donates his entire body to a medical school, in some states the medical school bears the cost of transportation. In other states, the estate of the donor must pay for it. Check with your local medical school.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument. Where I work, there is this woman who has silver gray hair but a young face and a good figure. She must be about 50 but looks younger. She has 12 grandchildren, but she swims with them, rides a bicycle with them and belongs to three bowling teams.

She says she never babysits with her grandchildren unless there is an emergency. Everyone says I am all wet with my ideas but I think a grandmother should act like a grandmother and should be more proud of her grandchildren than her bowling score.

A MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: This grandmother is acting like a grandmother. A modern one. Nowadays you can't tell a grandmother by looking at her, and I say more power to her!

ADJACENT TO EAST CAROLINA EYE CLINIC

DEAR ABBY: You suggested that it might be a good idea to invite someone who might be alone to spend Christmas with your family.

I am a widow, and my children and grandchildren all live far away and can't be here for the holidays. I work, so it's impossible for me to visit them. Being alone doesn't mean being lonely. Abby, I have received three invitations so far, and I would much rather spend Christmas Day alone than to accept any of the invitations.

Why? Well, with my limited income, I can't buy gifts for the whole family, or even for the hostess. Second, while the invitations are sincere and well-meant, nobody considers how I am to arrive at their home for the meal.

Third, the meal is usually set for late afternoon, and it is well into the dark of the evening before I can leave and I don't want to go home alone at night. (It's rude to eat and run.)

So I will decline all Christmas dinners, and spend Christmas resting up and eating what and when I want.

If some kind soul knows that an older single person is alone and lonely, transportation to and from the dinner should be provided.

STEADY READER

DEAR READER: Of course, its too late for Christmas 1979, but it would be well to remember your words for all of those special occasions in 1980.

Baked Rice Features Glenna's 'My Secret'

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

My friend Glenna McGinnis has a way of producing delicious meals with ease — with the help of her own pet time-savers.

She says, "I had to invent those shortcuts!"

That's because for many years she was food and equipment editor of "Woman's Day" magazine, and during the week she put in full days at work in New York City. Then over the weekends she and her husband constantly had guests at their house in Connecticut. There was plenty of cooking for Glenna to do.

Glenna retired from her magazine job some time ago, but she is still going at full speed. Except when they travel, she and her husband live in their Connecticut house and are involved in all sorts of community activities. And they still entertain. Glenna does the cooking — and uses her time-savers.

One of these is an herb butter she invented. When guests asked her exactly how she had seasoned chicken or fish, an omelet or a rice casserole, she would laugh and say, "That's my secret!"

There were so many requests for "My Secret" that she had the recipe duplicated to hand out to one and all.

When we made "My Secret" in my kitchen we used it first in Glenna's rice casserole, and it was a great success. Glenna sometimes adds frozen green peas to the casserole about 10 minutes before it has finished baking and then garnishes the dish with pimiento. If you try this recipe, you can of course follow suit.

Using Up Farm Land?

Maurice Cook, president of the N. C. Chapter of the Soil Conservation Society of America, sees North Carolina running out of farm land by the year 2323 if present trends continue.

Cook described the situation as a "frightening picture."

"Too much of our best farmland is being converted to non-farmland use, and the quality of the farmland left is deteriorating. These two trends might be called the twins for potential disaster."

Cook also cited erosion as a cause for alarm.

Picturing North Carolina without farmland is virtually impossible for us. Our heritage is simply too tied up in farming.

As with most trends, no doubt this one would be headed off before the ultimate disaster struck. Without farmland there would be no food, and therefore no need for other developments on the land.

A real immediate concern is the erosion of our top soil and the use of some of our best farm land for development. Cook says the state is losing from its base of 5.5 million acres of prime farmland at the rate of 16,000 acres per year.

Quite obviously this is a trend that cannot continue indefinitely if we are to provide the needed farm products. It may be that sometime in the future land will have to be zoned for farm use, and that will have to be the highest classification. In other words the land couldn't be diverted to other uses.

The disappearance of farm land is a disturbing trend, and it is one that our society is not going to be able to tolerate forever.

SEEMS TO BE AN UNENDING SACRIFICE!

Revelations Embarrassed

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt has been following his own advice for the past week on how to handle touchy administration problems.

But it hasn't prevented his administration and the Hunt re-election campaign from being embarrassed by the series of sensitive memoranda that popped up last week.

Only a few weeks ago a different document was leaked to the press, showing administration instructions for department secretaries to take the blame for any unpleasantness in this election year, and to let the governor take credit for the good.

And that was the way the administration played it last week, after dozens of memos were leaked showing that a state law-enforcement agent, in the course of his duties as the state's liaison with county sheriffs, included assessments of the sheriffs' loyalty to Hunt's re-election bid along with the reports of their official business.

Hunt has publicly referred to the episode as a departmental matter, one that can be fully handled by Burley Mitchell, secretary of Crime Control and Public Safety, which is the department for which the agent, Mather Slaughter, worked. The memos preceded Mitchell, and he said the department's copies were destroyed after he took office last August.

Hunt has maintained the policy of containing the problem, even after it became clear the memos extended far past the department level.

Copies, it has been acknowledged, went to the secretary prior to Mitchell; to Betty McCain, who was at the time resigning as state Democratic Party chairwoman to head Hunt's re-election campaign, and to Joe Pell, Hunt's senior aide for patronage who keeps an office close by the governor's in the Capitol.

Hunt has been personally protected from any taint, as all his aides say he never saw the memos, even a few addressed directly to him that have been obtained by reporters.

But Hunt's re-election campaign and his administration have to be embarrassed about the revelations for a number of reasons:

—His opponents immediately seized it as a possible campaign issue. Former Gov. Bob Scott, facing Hunt in the May 6 Democratic primary, called it "another abuse of power" naturally stemming from the new constitutional amendment allowing governors to seek a second, consecutive term. And state Republican chairman Jack Lee labeled the memos "evidence of a political spy network in state government."

—Mrs. McCain's credibility was severely damaged. On Monday she told reporters she received the memos "totally unsolicited." On Friday, Mitchell laid the blame at her feet, saying she asked Slaughter "to pass on to her any political information which might come to him."

Mrs. McCain gave the same story to her staff that she gave to reporters, and some re-election campaign workers appeared to be in shock Friday when the latest version came out.

—Mitchell's explanation left the implication that former secretary Herbert Hyde had given tacit approval to the political tasks being performed on state time by his allowing the memos to continue. Hyde says he did not order them compiled, but read a few.

—Pell acknowledged he received the memos for months and that he read them. Hunt said if he'd known about them, he would have judged them improper and ordered them stopped.

—It embarrassed some sheriffs, who are often politically powerful in their county. Some sheriffs were termed "weak" or "a one-term sheriff" in the memos.

But perhaps most damaging of all was that the memo episode presented another side of the Hunt administration, different from the earnest, serious-minded and above-reproach image Hunt so often seems to project.

The sum effect on Hunt's re-election chances may not be great. North Carolina governors have been found mixing politics with business before.

And no proof has been presented that the memos went beyond improper activity into illegal activity.

By laying the blame on Mrs. McCain, the ad-

No Answers Of Real Value

Sen. Edward Kennedy, currently lagging behind President Carter in his quest for the Democratic presidential nomination, made a major talk last week.

In it he advocated a six month wage and price freeze, mandatory economic controls and a United Nations commission to investigate Iran's charges against the shah. He also called for gasoline rationing and opposed renewed draft registration.

On the same day Kennedy again talked emotionally about his role in the Chappaquiddick.

In sum, Kennedy shotgunned all the problems that face the nation and face him personally. There were no practical answers to the nation's problems, nor did he give any new information on his reaction to the personal tragedy in which he was involved.

THIS AFTERNOON

A New Ballgame

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The word has gone out unofficially from Gov. Jim Hunt's office: there are no guarantees for hundreds of state employees in top policymaking jobs of state government that they will remain on the payroll next year, even if their boss wins re-election to an unprecedented second term.

Likewise, hundreds of people holding seats on various boards and commissions by Hunt's appointments face an uncertain future.

The strategy is obvious on the surface — Hunt wants to make sure that those in high state positions by his term in office remain loyal and hard-working through the developing political campaigns of 1980.

But the strategy goes far beyond that. Hunt's advisors are well aware that this campaign, and, if Hunt wins re-election, action in the 1981 General Assembly (and the remainder of a second term) on the governor's budgets and legislative proposals must be handled in a new and different manner.

New Game

"It's a brand new ballgame shaping up, and we have got to play it differently," one aide confided.

The name of the game in politics is trading, and the currency is called, in political jargon, green stamps. To sum up: you do this for me, and I'll do that for you.

In the past, an outgoing governor limited to one term found himself a lame duck at mid-term, and spent two years marking time while carrying out programs already pushed through the General Assembly. Successes in the last two years in office resulted largely from persuasion and force of personality. Hunt has not faced that problem in declining power. The simple fact that he might run for governor again under terms of the recent amendment to the State Constitution pretty well kept legislators and his own people in various state jobs in line. Defections from the governor's camp have been so serious in the past that at one point former Gov. Bob Scott had to call his top people together and tell them bluntly that he was still the governor and wouldn't hesitate to fire those who questioned that, and replace them with someone loyal.

Hunt has faced a different problem: how to get people to work hard for his re-election, and how to get legislators committed to his proposals for coming years when all the state jobs and commission appointments were already filled.

The green stamps have been, in effect, used up. "So we will get people to work hard in the election, and we'll get legislators lined up by showing what a good job Hunt is doing," a Hunt associate told us. Then, he chuckled. "And, we'll get some new green stamps."

Those new green stamps is what the notification on jobs is all about.

Trading

Governors in past years have used state jobs and seats on boards and commissions in trading for legislative support. In some cases, members of the General Assembly themselves were promised appointments after the session was over if they worked for the governor's program. In letting it be known that re-appointment is not guaranteed, Hunt has regained considerable power.

This doesn't mean that many changes will be made, although some are inevitable. It does mean that those with friends in Hunt jobs, and those in the jobs, will be inclined to give additional effort rather than being complacent.

It also means that the first rule of politics remains alive and well, regardless of changes in the system: Reward thy friends.

The second rule, likewise, is still in effect: Punish thy enemies.

The Unknown Candidate

WASHINGTON — "I'm getting into the presidential race," Crookshank said.

"Are you crazy?" I told him. "No one has even heard of you."

"That's why I'm going to run. I'm an unknown."

"But there is an unknown candidate running — John Anderson of Illinois."

"He isn't unknown any more. Everyone talks about him being the unknown candidate, and the more they talk about him, the more known he's becoming. By the time the convention rolls around, he's going to be the most known candidate of them all. You know something — Anderson peaked too early. Had he remained an unknown candidate right up until the Republican Convention, he might have made it."

"How can you say that?"

"The way things are going in this country, people would rather put their money on an unknown candidate. The less they know about him, the more they think he can do something to turn things around."

"I'm not blaming Anderson. It isn't his fault. The media just got tired of writing about the other candidates and needed a new angle. So they decided that John Anderson was Jimmy Stewart, a lonely man without organization, money or press coverage trying to make a desperate attempt at winning the presidential nomination. Everyone loves that kind of story, and now you have 20 or 30 reporters, plus television crews, following Anderson around telling everyone of his impossible battle to save the country from Ronald Reagan. He's the American 'Man of La Mancha.'"

I told Crookshank, "John Anderson's an honest man. I'm sure he never planned on using his anonymity to steal the nomination from the other Republican contenders."

"I didn't say he wasn't honest. All I said was that by July the public is going to be tired of him. They're going to say, 'As an unknown, Anderson's been overexposed.'"

"Look at the people getting on the Anderson bandwagon — liberal Republicans, Democrats and even the non-committed. The kids have also discovered him. Pretty soon the money is going to start rolling in. 'Anderson for President' stickers are starting to appear on cars. I wouldn't be surprised if one of the hot-shot political consultants is hired to run his campaign. They'll start flooding the air with TV commercials. Before you know it, Anderson will be one of the pack and the media will lose interest in him. That's when I make my move."

"How do you plan to do that?"

"By pacing myself. I'm not

Other Editors Say They're Indignant

(Greensboro Daily News)

"That's illegal! That's illegal!" cried one Iranian "student" militant at the U.S. Embassy when told that six American diplomats had escaped from Tehran after hiding six weeks in the Canadian Embassy.

The irony of such a statement about legality will not be lost on those, inside and outside Iran, who support the principle of diplomatic immunity. Just what kind of legality do the Iranians think has been going on at the American Embassy for the last three months?

Canada deserves the thanks of Americans everywhere — not only for providing sanctuary for the diplomats but for successfully spurring them out while Iranians were preoccupied with their elections last Monday. Not all the details have been revealed about how this was accomplished; but more power, we say, to those determined to oppose, by every means possible, Iran's brazen violation of international law.

A side issue has surfaced about the propriety of publicizing the escape. A Montreal newspaper first published the news. Its editor defended his position by noting that once the personnel had arrived home, the news would unquestionably spread. Of course it would. And far better, in our kind of society, that the intelligence emerge through authorized channels than be first released by the Iranians themselves.

Iran's foreign minister rumbled angrily about harsher treatment for the 50 U.S. hostages still held in Tehran. That's a risk any government must take when the lives of its citizens are at stake. Canada's defiance of the Iranians — which now includes the closing of its own embassy in Tehran — simply adds more fuel to the world-wide revulsion against abuse of diplomatic immunity.

In the new climate of fear created by Russia's aggression in Afghanistan, Iran's shaky government, we predict, Iran's will quickly turn its attention to more important matters.

Can't Admit Fear

By WALTER R. MEARS

AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Maine and New Hampshire go, so goes Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

Maybe.

The challenger for the Democratic presidential nomination now says he is in the campaign to stay, no matter what happens in the upcoming New England tests.

They come in Maine's town-meeting style Democratic caucuses Sunday, and in New Hampshire's presidential primary election Feb. 26.

The morning after his landslide loss to President Carter in the Iowa precinct caucuses, Kennedy said he had to win those two contests. The implication was that if he did not, his candidacy would be over.

But he did not say that. All he said was "Yes" when he was asked whether he had to beat Carter in the two New England contests.

In fact, he couldn't have said anything else. To have claimed that two states in his own home region were not vital would have affronted his supporters and campaign workers just when he needs them most.

Besides, nobody would have believed him.

One sure way to undo any presidential campaign is to talk about quitting it, under any circumstances. The point of no return has to be top secret, or the candidate is virtually certain to reach it.

When a candidate loses, as Kennedy did in Iowa, the pressure mounts for him to set

Every person has a God part and a man part, and neither can go hungry.

We need always to remember that we are not only human beings, but spiritual beings as well. We have a man part which makes it possible for us to adjust ourselves to the physical world; we also have the God part which makes it possible for us to keep in touch with the Creator, to learn his will for us daily, and to carry out his purposes.

If the man part of us misses a meal or has to go on a restricted diet for a day or two, we feel distinctly uncomfortable and deprived. Yet millions of people go through life and pay practically no attention to the God side of their lives. They never utter a prayer, they never read the Bible, they never go to church.

All of us have a pretty good idea of how well we are living on the man side of our nature, but how well are we living on the God side? It may be that we are suffering from spiritual malnutrition.

Some Speculators Are Burned

By JIM ABRAMS

Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — A large marine-products trading company, caught with a cache of unwanted golden eggs, has gone out of business in the seventh-largest bankruptcy in Japanese history. It's an example of what can happen to commodities speculators.

Hokusho Co. Declared bankruptcy with liabilities of $210 million after trying to make a killing on herring roe, a traditional New Year delicacy in Japan, by cornering the market and pushing prices to double the level of last year.

Consumers balked, putting their pocketbooks before tradition, and Hokusho, left with 1,200 tons of herring roe in its warehouses, was killed by its golden eggs.

Japanese newspapers, usually sympathetic to failing enterprises, called it "a major achievement for consumer resistance."

The trading firm, originally capitalized $830,000, reportedly bought 1,500 tons of the fish eggs from Canada at an average price of $24 a pound, but managed to sell less than 300 tons when retail prices shot up to $47 a pound before the New Year holidays, double the 1978 price. In 1977 the wholesale price was only $8.

A spokesman for Hokusho claimed they were not hoarding. "We were just trying to support the small fishing industries who were in trouble," he said.

However, Hokusho, which has close financial ties with the huge Mitsubishi Corp., was also trapped with too many eggs in one basket last year when it was speculating in the salmon market.

The trading firm, reportedly trying to take advantage of the spiraling price of salmon following the establishment of 200-mile fishing zones in the Pacific, last spring filled their freezers in anticipation of watching their investment grow in value.

However, as a result of a big summer catch, and a drop in sales because of high prices, the wholesale price sank from $34 a pound to $24 last fall, causing losses that were compounded by the herring roe row.

Small fish wholesalers complain that since the spread of 200-mile fishing zones, the major trading companies have zeroed in on the imported fish market, and now handle almost 50 percent of all fish sold. These trading firms have access to freezer space for 7 million tons of fish, equal to the total annual fish consumption in Japan, and thus have the leeway to manipulate market supplies to jack up prices, they say.

However, with the Japanese — the biggest fish-eaters in the industrialized world — consuming a much more varied diet and with the price of good cut tuna selling for up to $9.55 a pound, the same as steak, speculators are fishing in shallower waters.

going to start running until June. If I keep a low profile, I can fill the unknown candidate slot three weeks before the convention. By this time the press will be desperate to find somebody new to write about. I'll be a fresh face for 'Face the Nation,' 'Issues and Answers' and 'Meet the Press.' Nobody will have heard my campaign speech before. I'll accuse Anderson of selling out to the power-brokers by becoming known to the electorate and I'll promise the people that if they elect me President, I'll remain unknown for my entire term in office."

"I still say you're crazy." "They thought Carter was crazy, too. But you know what won him the Presidency? It was the day some wise-guy political pundit invented the phrase 'Jimmy Who?' My slogan is, 'If you don't know Crookshank, you can trust him.'"

"Okay," I said, "what do you want from me?"

"I want you to be the only newspaperman covering me in my hopeless quest to wrest the nomination from the other candidates who are trying to buy the Presidency with money, organization and the help of vested interests. It will be just the three of us — one campaign aide, myself and you. We'll be a great team."

"Why do you need me?" I asked him.

"I have to have someone from the press to let the rest of the media discover that I'm the only unknown candidate still left in the race."

goals, to say this state or that state is the crucial one. Kennedy already had done too much of that for the good of his own campaign. Outpooled in a pre-season straw vote in Florida, he said Iowa would be the first real test. Beaten there, he said New England victories were essential.

What really is essential is to keep the money coming. When it dries up, a campaign really is over. Kennedy has had problems in that department, but nothing a victory or two wouldn't cure.

In the competition for campaign dollars, it also is important that the candidate quash any suggestion that if he doesn't win next Tuesday, or the Tuesday after that, he'll no longer be a candidate. Set a specific contest as the make-or-break test, and the wavering donor will keep his checkbook in his pocket to await the return.

In a way, Kennedy's early misfortunes could be an asset in the coming New England primaries — if he can beat Carter. Any margin will do in New Hampshire where, a year ago, the pre-campaign pollsters said he was preferred over Carter by a 2-1 margin. Now polls give Carter the edge.

Unless Kennedy succeeds in his own territory, his problems will go from serious to critical.

Can't Afford To Quit 'Hee-Haw'

MADISONVILLE, Texas (AP) — John Henry Faulk apparently has decided television comedy is more fun and more rewarding than a job in the U.S. House of Representatives. Faulk's folksy humor has made him popular on television's "Hee Haw" program, and he said he cannot afford to quit the show for politics.

necessary.

Hunt or anyone in his well-organized, wealthy campaign could have easily discovered any of the information contained in the memos through political supporters in those counties, without requiring a state employee to do it.

Roll-Call Of Old Radicals At Greensboro's Anti-Klan Rally

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) —

A list of those who attended Saturday's anti-Ku Klux Klan protest read more like a roll-call of old radicals than a new wave entering the civil rights movement.

Not only the faces, but the tactics seemed to have changed little among those fighting for social change. One of the participants in the original lunch counter sit-in said Friday that

Falkland School Honor Listings

The following students made the Honor Roll and Principal's List for the second marking period at Falkland Elementary School:

Principal's List: Brenda Barnes; Erica Barrett; Timmy Dunn; Terry Randolph; Diane Kornegay; Wendy Peadar; Honor Roll: Dean Lawrence; Scott Strickland; Nicole Beamon; Sandra Haddock; Pam Walston; Niki Vandiford.

The principal's List for the entire first semester includes: Brenda Barnes; Timmy Dunn; Terry Randolph; Diane Kornegay; Wendy Peadar; Nicole Beamon; Sandra Haddock; Pam Walston; Niki Vandiford.

youth must develop new tactics.

"The challenge is to youth to come up with new innovations," said David Richmond at ceremonies commemorating the first sit-in. The commemoration was not connected with Saturday's demonstration.

But the coalition of more than 400 civil-rights groups and activists who organized the rally used the time-tested devices of a march and speeches. The four-mile march and rally were organized in the wake of the shooting deaths of five Communist demonstrators at a "Death to the Klan" rally last Nov. 3.

Police estimated that the demonstration Saturday attracted about 4,500 marchers.

"We are here because we must reclaim the ground that we took in the civil-rights struggles of the 1950s and 1960s," said the Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, an early organizer of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in Alabama.

For many of the demonstrators, it was like a reunion. There was talk of old struggles from the people who cut their teeth on the civil rights and anti-Vietnam War demonstrations of the 1960s. With the exception of the large group from North Carolina A&T University, there were few students to be seen.

Most of the rhetoric could have come from any time in the last 20 years. The talk was of "struggle" and anti-imperialism.

"We're not going to fight no more wars for capitalism; we're not going to fight no more wars for imperialism. We're going to be drafted into the freedom struggle ... we must blot out capitalism and imperialism once and for all," said Wilmington 10 leader the Rev. Ben Chavis. Chavis is now a national organizer for the Commission for Racial Justice.

City officials, criticized for failing to protect the anti-Klan demonstrators at the Communist Workers Party rally in November, received police backup from the Highway Patrol and the National Guard, at the city's request.

The city also declared a state of emergency, banning the carrying of weapons, and obtained a blanket search order allowing law officers to search cars within the city limits.

No violence and only two arrests were reported.

"I'm very proud of the way our own law-enforcement agencies and those with them carried it off," said Mayor Jim Melvin after the demonstration was over.

Charge Driver In Wreck

An estimated $2,100 property damage resulted from an 11:29 p.m. collision here Saturday on Greenville Boulevard, 140 feet West of the Memorial Drive intersection.

Greenville police identified the drivers involved in the mishap as David Joseph Mazingo of Farmville, and Jane Marie Combs of 2305 East 10th St.

Police, who charged Mazingo with driving under the influence and operating left of center, set damage at $600 to the Mazingo car, $1,000 to the Combs vehicle, and $500 to a pole at the Stop-N-Go at 3300 South Memorial Dr.

Sober Just One Day At A Time

MORRISTOWN, N.J. (AP) — Wilbur Mills, once one of the most powerful men in Congress, says his top goal in life is staying sober — and employers can help others do the same.

The former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who retired from Congress after a liaison with a stripper which he blamed on alcoholism, visited the Center for Addictive Illnesses at Morristown Hospital on Sunday to talk with some patients.

"Doing this helps keep me sober," Mills said. "The most important objective in my life is to be sober today."

News Word: Boycott

Swimmer Tracy Caulkins is one of many American athletes who may not be competing in the Olympics this year, because of a possible boycott of the 1980 summer games in Moscow. A boycott is a refusal to do business or have dealings with a person, company, or country. The word originated in Ireland in 1880, with a British land agent named Charles Boycott. Because he charged high rents and evicted many persons from their homes, the people in the area refused to have anything to do with Boycott or his family. President Carter recently called for a boycott of the Summer Olympics, unless the Soviet Union withdraws its troops from Afghanistan.

Hold Two In Shooting Of Raleigh Policeman

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A 10-year veteran of the Raleigh Police Department was shot to death Sunday in what department veterans say may be the first non-accidental death of an on-duty officer in the history of the department.

D.D. "Jimmy" Adams, 33, died at 1:35 a.m. Sunday at Wake Medical Center from a single shot to the back of his head. He was married and the father of two children.

Cassie Scott Johnson, 29, of Wendell, was charged with murder early Sunday. She was being held without bond at the Wake County Jail.

Police say Adams stopped a pickup truck on U.S. 70 east shortly before midnight Saturday. He took Ms. Johnson, the driver of the truck, into custody.

He put her in the left rear seat of the patrol car, then returned to the pickup truck when she asked him to get her purse, police said. When Adams returned and sat in the driver's seat, he was shot once in the back of the head with a .38-caliber snub-nosed revolver.

Police have also arrested Sherrill Tart Freeman Jr. of Smithfield and charged him with being an accessory to murder, according to Det. Lt. C.G. Diedrich. Freeman was the owner of the pickup truck Ms. Johnson was driving and was in it when Adams pulled the truck over.

Freeman was being held under $100,000 bond. Besides Ms. Johnson and Freeman, Connie Scott of Raleigh, Ms. Johnson's brother, and Linda Poole McLamb of Clayton were in the truck.

A second police officer, J.B. Debnam, arrived on the scene after Adams stopped the truck and began questioning the three passengers, according to Capt. F.C. Gregory, shift commander.

Adams gave Ms. Johnson an agility test and arrested her for driving under the influence of alcohol. Debnam was still questioning the others when he heard a pop, Gregory said.

Debnam realized a shot had been fired and saw Adams lying back in his seat, Gregory said. As Adams' patrol car began rolling backward, Debnam maneuvered his car to stop it, then arrested Ms. Johnson.

"I don't know how (Adams) missed the gun. It's just easy to do," Gregory said.

Adams was the first on-duty police officer to die in a non-accidental death in at least 25 years, veteran officers say.

Adams' funeral will be held at 3 p.m. Tuesday at the Mitchell Funeral Home chapel. Burial will follow in Montlawn Memorial Park.

He is survived by his widow, Sharon; two sons, Phillip Devon, 14, and Marcus Delma, 4; and a brother, Gale Adams of Raleigh.

Gale Adams said his brother was the third son in his family to die tragically. One brother, Dayton, choked to death in Raleigh in 1971. Another brother, Wallace Ray, died in a 1962 air crash while he was in the U.S. Air Force.

Miss Liberty Rises Again

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Students have put the final touches on this year's version of the University of Wisconsin's Statue of Liberty.

Like the original last year, the 1980 model's head and crown of chicken wire, paper mache and plastic foam appear to be poking through the ice of Lake Mendota on the Madison campus.

But the 1980 Miss Liberty is larger than last year's — about half again as large as the original in New York — and has been fireproofed.

The school's first Miss Liberty lost her head to a midnight arsonist last year after a number of students complained about student funds going for the statue.

The new model, replete with an authentic-looking musty green coloring and a crown that lights up at night, was redesigned by Dana Kenn, a senior art major who says her great-grandfather was the light-house keeper for the real Statue of Liberty after emigrating from Scotland.

Agencies At Cross-Purposes

ATLANTA (AP) — Federal agencies are working against each other with some trying to protect barrier islands while others try to develop them, according to Washington planners.

That results "in potential problems of public health and safety, loss of important public benefits provided by unspoiled barrier islands, increasing costs and wasted dollars" according to a recently-released federal study.

Development-oriented agencies have pumped almost $500 million into the nearly 300 barrier islands on the East and Gulf Coasts in the past three years.

At the same time other agencies are trying to restrict development.

Fifteen of those islands are off Georgia's coast. They range from the completely protected Cumberland Island, a national seashore, to developed islands such as Tybee and St. Simons. Of the 165,000 acres of Georgia's island land, 8,700 acres are developed, 71,000 are protected and 85,900 are undeveloped and unprotected.

A draft environmental impact statement released by the Interior Department offered three main options.

Continuation of the status quo, with both pro-and anti-development forces working against each other.

A program of strict environmental review of federally-assisted development projects on the islands. It would not stop federal aid, but would demand a closer look before dollars are spent. Most such money goes for wastewater treatment, flood insurance, disaster aid, beach renourishment and stabilization.

The draft environmental impact statement now is in a 45-day review period, with federal agencies and private groups offering comment. Then the Interior Department and the President's Council on Environmental Quality will make recommendations to President Carter on how to implement the program.

and bridges.

A restriction on all federal aid to development projects "unless they can be shown to be in the national interest." Under this proposal, development would have to be completely financed by private enterprise.

The first response would not be effective, according to Hans Neuhauser, head of the Georgia Conservancy's Savannah office.

"If we remain with the status quo, we're going to lose more and more barrier islands, and we're going to interfere in more substantial ways with this very unique and dynamic resource," he said.

How far the government goes in changing the status quo "is going to be a matter of considerable debate," he said.

"I think in the deliberations on this issue, compromises are going to have to be made," he said. "Not every island on the United States Coast is going to be protected as a national seashore or national park. While some people might find that desirable, it's not practical."

Environmentalists have been critical of the government's barrier island policy, particularly regarding flood insurance, which helps rebuild beach-front structures after storms. Often the rebuilt structures are destroyed by other storms.

The draft environmental impact statement now is in a 45-day review period, with federal agencies and private groups offering comment. Then the Interior Department and the President's Council on Environmental Quality will make recommendations to President Carter on how to implement the program.

Spy Break-In Proposal Said Being Prepared

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter is ready to propose that U.S. intelligence agents, with the permission of a secret court, be allowed to burglarize the homes and offices and open the mail of Americans suspected of spying.

Though Carter's proposal won't be unveiled before Friday, debate already has begun over whether such intrusions should be regulated strictly or loosely.

The first question is whether break-ins and mail-openings should be permitted against any American believed to be acting for a foreign power or whether those tactics should be employed only when there is specific evidence of an American's criminal conduct.

If the standard requires evidence of a crime, the next question concerns how much evidence.

Civil libertarians are prepared to argue for the most restrictive standard, allowing break-ins and mail-openings only when the secret court finds hard evidence a crime has been or will be committed. But conservatives in Congress seem likely to resist subjecting these tactics to court scrutiny, even in secret.

The controversy is developing as Carter polishes details of his proposed comprehensive charter governing intelligence-gathering by the CIA, FBI and other agencies.

Carter, in his State of the Union message, said increased U.S.-Soviet tensions require loosening some of the restrictions placed on these agencies after past abuses came to light in the 1970s.

Sen. Walter D. Huddleston, D-Ky., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee's charter subcommittee, said last week the charter would legalize some spying on Americans whenever the president ruled an investigation was "essential to the national security."

But Carter's proposal will require court warrants for mail-openings or break-ins, known as "black bag jobs," said Huddleston, a participant in months of charter negotiations with the administration.

The warrant responsibility would rest with the seven-member court created two years ago to review government requests for permission to use wiretaps or other electronic surveillance in foreign intelligence cases. Those requests, the court's hearings and even its written decisions are all classified secret.

Coin Theft

GLEN BURNIE, Md. (AP) — Police searched today for an estimated $100,000 worth of rare coins that apparently were stolen from the car of a North Carolina man who had stopped here overnight.

Anne Arundel County police said they found the Lincoln Continental belonging to George C. Murray, 66, of Wilson, N.C., near the motel where he and his wife were staying after visiting a coin auction in Lancaster, Pa.

The car's trunk was open and the coins gone, officers said. A state police crime lab unit was called to the scene.

Murray told police he had locked the coins — including $7,000 worth he purchased at the show Sunday — in the car's trunk, then gone to his room to wash for dinner. When he and his wife returned shortly after 7 p.m., the car was gone, he said.

Murray said he rare coins were kept in glass-covered, velvet-lined cases.

Held Seminar On Alcoholism

The North Carolina Alcoholism Research Authority hosted a three-day symposium entitled "Alcoholism — The Search for the Sources" in Greenville last week in conjunction with North Carolina Alcoholism Awareness Week.

Herbert Barry, III from the University of Pittsburgh presented a discussion on the psychological aspects of the search into the causes of alcoholism. Dr. Barry emphasized the importance of examining the features of childhood experience before drinking has begun in an attempt to identify certain patterns which are characteristic of people who subsequently become alcoholics.

Richard Deitrich of the University of Colorado discussed the biological aspects and examined the genetic components in individual responses to alcohol. He reported that a child of an alcoholic, whether or not he is raised with the parent, has a four times greater risk of becoming an alcoholic himself.

Also making presentations were Dora B. Goldstein from Stanford University and David J. Pittman from Washington University in St. Louis. Dr. Goldstein examined the pharmacological aspects of current research and the social aspects were presented by Dr. Pittman.

Luncheon speakers were Sarah T. Morrow, secretary of the North Carolina Department of Human Resources and T.G. Coffey, editor of a journal on alcohol research.

Area Schools On Schedule

Cold temperatures continue to plague Greenville as the thermometer reached a low of 12 degrees yesterday and a high of 35 degrees, according to Greenville Utilities.

No precipitation was reported. Willie Briley, chief operator of Greenville Utilities' River plant, said the level of the Tar River at 8 a.m. was 5.1 feet.

Both city and county schools were running back on schedule. Said Glenn Cox, superintendent of Greenville City Schools, "Everything is back to normal."

Associate Superintendent of Pitt County Schools Thomas Craft reported that the schools in the county returned to normal operating hours on Monday morning.

New Job Due Loss Of Sight

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Diabetes took away her sight in 1974, but Phoebe Chilson refused to let it get the best of her.

She returned to school for more training and today works in the medical records department at Chattanooga's Memorial Hospital.

Mrs. Chilson, 38, said she learned she had the disease when she was 18. She was working as a licensed practical nurse at Bradley County Nursing Home in Cleveland when, in December 1973, she suffered hemorrhages in the retinas of her eyes.

She said that forced her to quit her job and she was blind by the following August. She hasn't forgotten her struggle to cope.

"I think there's always an adjustment," she told an interviewer. "Once you are in a period of denial, it's hard for you to adjust."

With two teen-age children, she spent three years at her Cleveland home — 30 miles northeast of Chattanooga — learning to handle household demands.

Starting in fall 1977, she took Cleveland State Community College courses in medical transcription, typing and medical terminology.

In Columbus, Ohio, she spent a month at Pilot Dogs Inc., breaking in a guide dog, a jet-black Labrador retriever she calls Black Jack.

She moved to Chattanooga and began work in February 1979, walking the block to work with her dog daily. She and sighted colleagues type medical records by listening to tape cassette records which doctors dictate. They operate their tape machines with foot pedals.

Mrs. Chilson says the job is ideal because no adjustments must be made for a blind person. She uses an ordinary typewriter. Other persons check her work for mistakes.

WHICH IMPROVEMENTS MAKE SENSE?

How much money should you put into improving your home? As much as you can afford IF you are doing it for your own enjoyment and don't plan to move for a long time. However, if you plan to make major improvements in order to get a better price when you sell, it often is economically unwise. Seldom do such improvements bring more than fifty cents on the dollar spent to make them. And all bets are off if you overvalue your house in relation to other houses in the neighborhood. An old real estate axiom says, in effect, that few people will spend $80,000 for a house in a $60,000 neighborhood. That's virtually true regardless of how large or good a house it may be.

The addition of an extra bedroom, in-ground swimming pool or central air conditioning, will increase the value of your home. But usually at a fraction of the cost. About the only money you should spend on a house to sell it at a higher price is for repairs and decorating that are obviously needed to put your best foot forward.

If there is anything we can do to help you in the field of real estate, please phone or drop in at BLOUNT & BALL REALTY CO. 201 E. Arlington Blvd., Greenville. Phone: 756-3000. We're here to help!

Dismiss All Charges Against Smith-Douglas

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — State Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham said today he has dismissed all charges against Smith-Douglas Inc. resulting from the sale last year of fertilizer contaminated by the herbicide picloram.

Graham said he took the action on the advice of the attorney general. The contaminated fertilizer has been blamed for crop losses reportedly in excess of $20 million in North Carolina, Graham said.

"There is no evidence that Smith-Douglas acted knowingly or negligently in any way in the manufacture of the fertilizer," Graham said.

The fertilizer was sold in North Carolina and South Carolina. State spokesmen said it damaged or destroyed more than 9,000 acres of tobacco and other crops.

Graham said his department was retaining authority to renew its charges against Smith-Douglas if any new evidence should come to light.

Smith-Douglas had been under an order by Graham to show cause why its license to manufacture fertilizer in North Carolina should not be revoked.

Graham, flanked by Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, announced the action at a news conference. Each said efforts to determine the source of the contamination had failed.

"No one can come to me ... and say this is what caused it," Graham said.

Graham said study by his department and the attorney general's staff had shown the contamination "did not happen while it was in Smith-Douglas' custody, but they are still working on it."

The commissioner canceled a hearing scheduled for Friday on the move to revoke the company's license. But, he said, if any new evidence implicating the company in any wrongdoing became available, "I would not hesitate to reinstate these openings."

J.J. Pointer, who was president of Smith-Douglas when the contaminated fertilizer was distributed in 1979, said in Norfolk that his company also was still trying to determine the source of the contamination.

He expressed pleasure at Graham's action, adding, "We felt all along the investigation would prove we were not negligent."

A memo filed by Edmisten's staff in December stated that state investigation of the contamination "has failed to produce any evidence that Smith-Douglas acted knowingly or negligently."

"Although it is possible to argue that the company can be held strictly liable for manufacturing and selling a fertilizer

Teller Believes U.S. No Match

NEW YORK (AP) — The father of the hydrogen bomb, Dr. Edward Teller, says the Soviet Union could use its advanced technology to win a nuclear war that would make the United States "cease to exist."

Teller, in an interview published in Forbes magazine's Feb. 18 issue, said he believes the United States is no longer a match for the Soviet Union in technology, particularly lasers.

Teller said if President Carter does as he says he is going to do and draws a line against Soviet expansion in the Persian Gulf area, it could result in a war that the United States will lose. Teller led the team that developed the U.S. hydrogen bomb.

Big Board volume totaled 46.61 million shares, against 65.90 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index rose .47 to 66.08.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.15 at a new high of 277.57.

TAKES NEW ROLE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Calling for an effort to make government more effective, former Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox has taken over leadership of Common Cause as the 230,000-member public interest lobby begins its 10th year.

Police said Taylor went Saturday night to the low-income housing project where the Days lived and wounded the two women and killed Clifford Davis, 22, and Filbert Bridges, believed to be in his 30s.

Orville Taylor, 22, had been arrested Thursday on a warrant for aggravated assault signed by Estelle Day, charging that Taylor had been threatening her daughter, Leta.

Letter-Writing Week Planned

Mayor Don McGlohn proclaimed the week of Feb. 24 through March 1 as National Letter Writing Week here and urged "all our citizens to join in this program by writing letters to loved ones and those who are separated from us today."

McGlohn mentioned in his proclamation that the U.S. Postal Service designated the period as "National Letter Writing Week."

He noted, "The objective of this observance is to direct the attention of the general public to the power of the written word in shaping opinions, lifting spirits, bridging distances between loved ones, and preserving memories."

According to McGlohn, "public libraries, business groups, trade associations, school teachers, students and the national media will participate in this observance."

State GOP Chairman Jack Lee brought forms and filed two Republican candidates, Ed Tenney of Chapel Hill for insurance commissioner and Dave Flaherty of Lenoir for secretary of state. Flaherty was the unsuccessful GOP candidate for governor in 1976.

Democrat J.E.B. Davis of Cary filed as a candidate for state auditor. He will face Ed Renfrow and Bill Chestnut in the Democratic primary for auditor.

The St. James F.W.B. Church of Farmville will hold services Feb. 10 at 7:30 p.m. The Rev. James Brown will conduct the service.

The public is invited to attend.

NBA All-Star Game

Gervin Leads East To Victory

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — George Gervin had a good time, on and off the court.

When the 6-foot-7 guard of the San Antonio Spurs came to Washington for the 30th annual National Basketball Association All-Star Game, he compared it with being on vacation.

And, he didn't change his mind after scoring 34 points to lead the East to a 144-136 overtime victory over the West Sunday, a performance which earned him Most Valuable Player honors.

"It was a very competitive game and there was a lot of pride out there," Gervin said. "But I still had a good time."

The two squads put on an entertaining show for the sellout crowd of 19,035 in Capital Centre and a national television audience, with the usual All-Star Game moves, passes and dunks, and a general lack of defense.

"It was my kind of game," said Gervin, who is going for his third consecutive NBA scoring title as the chief gunner of the Spurs. "What did we score - 144 points? It sounds like the Spurs. . . no defense, all offense."

"This game just goes to prove a point about giving 100 percent," said East Coach Billy Cunningham, who noted that both teams bounced back from big deficits.

The West moved in front 39-28 at the start of the second period after Dennis Johnson of the Seattle SuperSonics scored eight points during a 14-0 streak.

But the East forged a 64-64 tie at halftime on the strength of a 15-6 spurt. Dan Roundfield of the Atlanta Hawks scored five points during the outburst, with Gervin and Elvin Hayes of the Washington Bullets adding four apiece.

The East, allowed much more freedom on offense by Cunningham after intermission, outscored the West 44-27 in the third quarter and Gervin poured in 11 points during a 27-7 streak which made it 96-79.

"In the first half, we tried to run three plays," said Cunningham, the coach of the Philadelphia 76ers. "It seemed to restrict the players. They weren't comfortable and they weren't fluid, so we just went to a passing game in the second half."

Just as that strategy worked, so did a move by Coach Lenny Wilkens of the West when he used centers Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles and Jack Sikma of his own Seattle team at the same time in the fourth period.

"Jack came in and gave Kareem some help on the boards," Wilkens said, "and some of our other players got out to push the ball up the floor."

Slowly, the 17-point deficit evaporated, and the West pulled even for the first time at 122 on one of the seven second half field goals by Paul Westphal of Phoenix.

Another basket by Westphal, who scored 21 points, tied the regulation game at 128-128 with 17 seconds left and it went into overtime after the East's Larry Bird missed a jumper at the buzzer.

Bird, Boston's fine rookie, had only two points until then. But he scored five in overtime and recorded his seventh assist on a spectacular slap of a rebound directly into Gervin's hands for the final field goal of the game.

"Larry played like a rookie in the first half," said Cunningham, "but certainly not down the stretch."

The veteran Gervin, meantime, made 14 of 26 shots, and was credited with 10 rebounds, three assists and three steals. Eddie Johnson of Atlanta, the East's other starting guard, had 22 points and seven assists.

Moses Malone of Houston, who scored five points in overtime and finished second to Gervin in the MVP balloting, had 20 points and 12 rebounds. Roundfield had 18 points and 13 rebounds.

Andrian Dantley of Utah scored 23 to lead the West, which now trails in the series 19-11, and Dennis Johnson finished with 19. Abdul-Jabbar had 17 points, 16 rebounds, nine assists and six blocked shots, but he also was charged with nine turnovers.

Terps Face UNC Thursday

Maryland Atop The ACC

By DICK BRINSTER
Associated Press Writer

So impressive was Maryland's 101-82 shelling of Duke Saturday that coach Lefty Driesell was asked afterward how he thought his 12th-ranked Terrapins would fare against top-ranked DePaul, the nation's only unbeaten major college basketball team.

Driesell, never one to dodge many questions concerning the game, didn't dodge this one either. While he was not about to claim the Terrapins would beat Ray Meyer's Blue Demons, neither would Driesell give DePaul the edge.

"I haven't seen DePaul play, but then I haven't seen too many teams play any better than we have," Driesell said after the Terrapins romped almost to win over the Blue Devils in the second half.

Among those in a perfect position to attest to Maryland's awesome power is Duke coach Bill Foster, whose team was itself characterized by an early-season opponent as "making a mockery of college basketball." Maryland is currently making a mockery of the Atlantic Coast Conference race.

"They are playing very confidently and very smartly right now," said Foster. "They are tough to beat right now."

He could have added that the Terrapins are this season unbeaten at Cole Field House where 14,500 of the College Park faithful witnessed the annihilation of Duke. Next on the Maryland menu is injury-riddled North Carolina, which at 6-3 is the Terrapins' only serious pursuer at this point.

"We can't celebrate," said a cautious Driesell. "We have to play North Carolina on Thursday."

A victory by the Terrapins, now 8-1 in the conference, would all but sew up their first ACC regular-season crown since 1975.

Duke's loss and the 79-77 setback Virginia absorbed at the hands of Wake Forest in the only other ACC game were the fourth in league play for each. North Carolina, a 75-63 winner over Furman, apparently is the ACC's last hope.

In other games Saturday, North Carolina State subdued The Citadel, 57-35; Clemson nipped South Carolina, 61-60, and Georgia Tech edged Seton Hall, 70-69.

"I've been coaching for 25 years and this was one of the best games a team of mine has ever played," said Driesell.

The Terrapins shot 63 percent and passed the ball with extreme efficiency. They went over the century mark at the buzzer, and the fans loudly celebrated such a rare occurrence against a Duke team.

Greg Manning led the assault with 26 points. Buck Williams played a major role in the rout with 12 rebounds and 18 points. Ernest Graham recorded nine assists and 12 points.

Manning, whose backcourt play has been instrumental in the rise of the all-underclass Maryland starting unit, said the game was a bigger thrill than his last-second shot that beat Duke last season.

"It was nicer," he said. "When the team plays so well, the individuals start playing well also."

Duke center Mike Gminski was limited to 17 points. Afterward it was revealed that he had injured his back during warmups, but Gminski would not use that as an excuse.

The Blue Devils got another excellent performance from Gene Banks, who scored 21 points.

The victory gave Maryland an overall 16-3 mark. The Blue Devils are 5-4 in the ACC and 17-4 for the season.

If Driesell is cautious about North Carolina, the Tar Heels have reason to be downright tentative. After losing star freshman forward James Worthy for the balance of the season, 11th-ranked North Carolina faces the possibility of going to College Park without the services of guard Dave Colescott.

Colescott missed the second half of the Furman game when he re-injured his bruised right knee. He may not play against Yale Monday night, and is questionable for the Maryland game.

While writers were pursuing the subject of North Carolina's solid play since Worthy's departure in the first Maryland game with a broken ankle,

German Trio Wins At Daytona

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Race drivers sometimes worry when things seem to be going too smoothly.

Rolf Stommelen, a onetime Formula One star, felt that way Sunday as the Porsche Turbo 935 he was sharing with fellow West Germans Reinhold Joest and Volkert Merl purred closer to victory in the grueling 24-hour Challenge endurance race at Daytona International Speedway.

"There seemed to be no end to the last half hour of the race," Stommelen said as he basked in the glow of his second victory in this race. "But everything going so well, I begin to think about what can go wrong."

"I never wear my watch when I am racing, but in my last turn I took it with me and, in the last half hour, I was watching my watch more than the track."

There was no need to worry as Stommelen brought in the sleek white sports car 33 laps ahead of its nearest competitor, a Porsche driven by the American trio of Preston Henn, Al Holbert and John Paul.

The victory for the Germans was not without its tense moments as they fought off the high-flying Whittington brothers. The Whittingtons — defending world endurance champion Don, Bill and Dale — led the race several times and never fell below third place before a broken distributor shaft ended their effort nearly three-quarters of the way through the race.

"This race was much harder than the other race," Stommelen said, referring to his victory here in 1978. "There were so many competitive cars and good drivers here."

"Up to 17 hours there were one or two cars in the same lap

(with the leader). That's very unusual for a 24-hour race. It's also very hard on the drivers and the car."

Third place went to another Porsche, this one driven by Danny Ongais and Ted Field, two thirds of the winning 1979 team, and Milt Minter.

The fourth-place finisher was a Camaro piloted by Canadians Maurice Carter and Murray Edwards and American Craig Carter, while a Porsche 914, with Americans Bill Koli, Jim Cook and Greg LaCava at the wheel, was fifth.

There were several accidents in the marathon race, all of them minor. No injuries were reported.

One of those accidents, late

Saturday night, took former Olympic decathlon champion Bruce Jenner and his team out of the race. Jenner, in his first endurance race, clipped a car that was spinning out of control ahead of him. His crew tried to repair the damage, but problems kept cropping up and his racing ended shortly thereafter.

The winners, making a record 715 circuits on the 3.84-mile track, averaged a record 114.303 mph, far outstripping the previous mark of 109.249 set last year.

The Germans were expected to take home about $40,000 from the total prize and contingency money of more than $140,000.

Women Face 'Heels Tuesday

East Carolina's Lady Pirates, following a lopsided 92-72 victory over High Point College Saturday night, hit the road in a key NCAA Division I contest.

Earlier in the season, the Lady Pirates beat the Tar Heels, 71-68, in Minges, but that game did not count in the league standings. This one does.

Carolina, with a 15-9 record, will be led by 6-1 Bernie McGlade, averaging 15.6 points per game, and 6-1 center Henrietta Wall, hitting 10.7 per cent.

East Carolina, 1-2 in conference play, currently holds a 16-7 record after its Saturday win. The Pirates need the victory, however, to gain a good berth for the state playoffs, set later this month.

"This is a biggie," Coach Cathy Andruzzi said of the game. "We played a great game and beat them here a couple of weeks ago."

The contest is the final NCAA Division I game of the year for the Lady Pirates.

They return home Saturday to host George Mason on "Rosie Thompson Night," when the Pirate star will be honored. The game is part of a doubleheader, as the men's team meets Illinois State in the nightcap.

For former East Carolina running back Eddie Hicks, the 1979 pro football season was a pretty good one—not quite what he hoped for or expected—but a pretty good one.

And he's got his sights set on making the 1980 season much, much better.

"As a rookie I needed to learn a lot," Hicks said. "I did and now I feel like I can go for it."

"It" is a starting job. Ahead of him is three-year veteran Billy Taylor, but Hicks believes that he has the tools to knock Taylor out of the starting lineup during practice next summer.

"I think my blocking is better, and that my open field running is better too. I need to get more aggressive in running through the line, however. But, I think the Giants will have a better outside game with me."

During his past year, Hicks played mostly on the specialty teams, working on both the kickoff and return units for returns and coverage. "I made a pretty good number of tackles on the coverage units," he said. "I graded out over 90 per cent for every game, the coaches told me."

The coaches apparently are fairly happy with Hicks' performance, both on the specialty units and in his back-up role in the offensive backfield. Although he didn't get much playing time during the regular season as a ball-carrier, he did a lot of it during the exhibition season. "They told me the things I needed to work on, and said they were looking forward to my being back next year," the big back confided. "They'll be bringing in some new rookies in the backfield, but I'll have a leg up on them since I've been there a year. There were 14 of us there last year (backs) and they only kept five. No rookie is going to beat me out this summer."

After being so much a part of the East Carolina program, Hicks finds it hard to stand on the sidelines most of the time as a Giant. "That's why I'm concentrating so much on getting a starting role," he said.

The biggest difference in college and professional ball is the ability of the players and the fact that you get few chances. "In college you can make a lot of mistakes and still be on the team. But you can't make the same mistake twice here. With everyone of such great ability, a mistake can easily get someone hurt."

As far as the Giants go, Hicks feels that they are an improving team, and can figure in the NFC's Eastern race next year. "Right now, we're just trying to hit the winning combination. We need a few more good offensive linemen and maybe another back."

Hicks has done a little paying back to his alma mater, too. On his return to classes after the season ended, he became a scholarship donor in the Pirate Club. "East Carolina gave me the opportunity to play ball, both on the college and pro levels. A lot of people leave and say the heck with ECU, but I can't feel like that. The program still needs money. Maybe I can help someone to have the chance that I had."

Burns Wins With Crenshaw's Help

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — There are nine categories in the new PGA Tour statistical service. "Assists," isn't among them.

If it were, Ben Crenshaw would get one.

"I have to give a lot of credit to my good friend Ben Crenshaw," George Burns said after scoring his first official individual victory Sunday in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am.

"Ben whetted my appetite. He showed me how to be more patient," said the oft-frustrated Burns, who had come so close so frequently before finally breaking through, shooting a final round 69 that gave him a one-stroke triumph.

A victory with Crenshaw late last fall in the National Team championship, Burns said "was a big stepping stone for me," said Burns, who has had numerous chances to win individual events before, and each time let them get away.

"I'm my own worst enemy. I get aggravated, more than most, when I'm playing bad and I let it effect me.

"In the team, Ben showed me how. I looked at his easy mannerisms out there and I learned."

Not winning previously, he said, "was a combination of things. I just wasn't ready to win."

This one came almost as a surprise.

"I looked at (Jack) Nicklaus and thought for sure it was his tournament. After that start of his, I tried not to look at the leaderboards and just concentrate on what I was doing," said Burns, who finished with a 280 total, eight shots under par on the 6,806 yard Pebble Beach Golf Links.

What Nicklaus was doing was burning up the course. The mighty man, on a comeback from the worst season of his career, had three birdies and an eagle in the first six holes, was in the lead alone and appeared on his way to a rout.

But his putting suddenly turned sour. He lost four strokes to par on the next three holes, then played the back nine in 38, finishing with a 73 and a 284 total.

When he began falling back, the gates were opened for a host of challengers. Six men led or shared the lead at one time on the bright, sunny day. Sixteen were locked within three strokes at one time.

Cardinals Fly Past St. John's

NEW YORK (AP) — The St. John's basketball fans were waiting and ready for the Louisville Cardinals — right down to the thousands of bright, red signs that said: "We are... St. John's."

The St. John's basketball team was waiting, too...but obviously not ready.

"Our quality of play was a nightmare," said St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca after watching his ninth-ranked team lose a 76-71 decision to the seventh-ranked Cardinals Sunday in a nationally televised game. "We did very little right. When we watch the films tomorrow, I know we'll be unhappy."

Carnesecca's players will no doubt kick themselves over the way they let Darrell Griffith and Wiley Brown slip through for a basketful of inside field goals.

As Griffith emphasized after scoring 23 points: "Our offense is designed to shoot layups. If we can't carry on this offense, we find ourselves sitting on the bench and holding Coach (Denny) Crum's hand."

The Cardinals accomplished all they set out to do, continually flying inside with the sky-rocketing Griffith and the bullish Brown. That forceful pair helped Crum's team build a 17-point lead late in the game, then Louisville held off a St. John's comeback try.

"It took a while for us to get loose," said Griffith. "St. John's is one of the toughest teams we've played this year. I would rank them with Ohio State (a team the Cardinals beat by 10 points earlier this season)."

The loss stopped a 17-game St. John's winning streak — the second longest in the nation next to DePaul's 20 and the longest at the New York school in 50 years.

Holmes Wants Tate

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Larry Holmes wants the world to realize he's the heavyweight boxing champion, a tough fistic public relations job since Muhammad Ali ruled the sport for so long.

"John Tate just has a piece of the title that I deserve," said the 30-year-old Holmes Sunday after stopping Italy's Lorenzo Zanon in the sixth round of their scheduled 15-round bout for the World Boxing Council heavyweight share.

Tate holds the World Boxing Association part of the title having won an elimination series following the retirement of Ali.

"Tate would be just another opponent for me," said Holmes, of Easton, Pa. "He doesn't rate to be called champion."

Zanon became the fifth challenger to fall by knockout to Holmes, who won the WBC version by outpointing Ken Norton at the Caesars Palace Sports Pavilion, where Zanon was stopped by a left-right combination, the latter doing the big damage.

On March 31, a television audience gets to see both champions in action. Holmes fights

Dallas Getting NBA Franchise?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Will pro basketball return to Dallas next fall following a seven-year hiatus?

The Dallas group seeking a National Basketball Association expansion franchise has been given 30 days to decide whether it's willing to meet new terms set forth by the league's Board of Governors Saturday at its annual midwinter meeting in conjunction with the NBA All-Star Game.

Foremost among the changes is the requirement that the 24 partners in the group headed by Norm Sonju come up with half the $12 million entry fee as a down payment, instead of just $3.5 million. The Governors also made the remainder of the payment schedule more stringent and decided to let each existing team protect eight players from the expansion draft, instead of seven.

If these terms are acceptable, the Dallas group will get the NBA's 23rd franchise and pro basketball will return to a city it left in 1973, when the Dallas Chaparrals of the old American Basketball Association moved to San Antonio.

In another major development, the NBA Governors voted to accept a new three-year working agreement with the Players Association, which had been competing this season without a contract. The pact, approved by the Association's executive committee, was scheduled to be voted on today by the 22 player representatives.

"I think this contract is a major step forward," said Paul Silas, president of the Players Association. "We are delighted that we have come to this conclusion."

Under the agreement, the players would receive an increase in the minimum salary from the present level of $30,000 to an unannounced figure, as well as raises in per diem expenses and playoff money. And in 1981-82, the final year of the contract, the league agreed to raise the roster limit from 11 players to 12.

In return, the players agreed to drop their demands for a share of the growing revenue from cable television, which had been a major point with the owners. The league also won a uniform player contract to replace the present, highly individualized pacts; a limit on deferred payment clauses of two years beyond the life of the contract, and the elimination of no-trade clauses from contracts.

coach Dean Smith put it in its proper perspective.

"We haven't been playing the contenders without Worthy," he said.

Two three-point plays by John Virgil and one each by Al Wood and Mike O'Koren broke open the game against Furman. Wood paced the Tar Heels, now 15-4 overall, with 20 points.

Virginia was put on the brink of elimination when Wake Forest's Alvis Rogers hit on an 18-foot jump shot at the buzzer.

"The play we had set up was for Alvis Rogers, but not quite in that manner," said coach Carl Tacy.

Helms shot slid off the rim to Rogers, who sent it high into the air and watched it fall cleanly through the net an instant after the horn sounded.

The Deacons, now 3-6 in the ACC and 10-9 overall, got 21 points from Guy Morgan.

Helms chipped in with 19 and Rogers canned 16.

Jeff Lamp netted 24 points for 13th-ranked Virginia, which fell to 5-4 in the ACC and 16-6 overall, and Lee Raker added 22. The Cavaliers got just four points from ailing freshman center Ralph Sampson, who played just 15 minutes.

Forcing 17 Bulldog turnovers, the Wolfpack was led by Clyde Austin with 14 points.

Bobby Conrad converted a pair of two free throws with eight seconds remaining as Clemson nipped arch-rival South Carolina to up its record to 15-5. The 16th-ranked Tigers were paced by Billy Williams with 18 points and Larry Nance with 13.

Georgia Tech won the fifth time in 19 starts when Brooke Steppe, who poured in 32 points, hit on an 18-foot jump shot with three seconds left. The Yellow Jackets got 25 points from Lenny Horton.

Ali Changing Tune On Boycott?

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP) — Muhammad Ali says maybe the Carter Administration gave him the wrong idea about the Russians, and he might call off his trip to urge Africans to boycott the Moscow Olympics.

East Africa's biggest newspaper said President Carter made a mistake in picking the former world heavyweight champion for the mission. It accused the president of bidding for the black vote in the United States.

Arriving in Dar es Salaam Sunday for the first stop on his five-nation tour, Ali was asked by local reporters why Africans should boycott the Moscow Games since the Soviets provide aid to black liberation movements and black African countries.

"They didn't tell me in America that Russia supports these countries," Ali replied as U.S. Embassy officials squirmed. "Maybe I'm being used to do something that ain't right. You all have given me some questions which are good and which are making me look at this thing different....

"To me, Russia's a bad country, but I don't know what Russia did for you. You tell me that the Russians are more your friends than the Americans. We're all brothers, and I'm closer to you than I am to white Americans or white Russians.

"They want us to stop," Ali continued as the Embassy officials tried to cut the news conference short. "But I'm learning. ... I'm no traitor to black people....I'm not here to do nothing against Africa. I'm not here to promote no role for America. If I find out I'm wrong (about the Soviets) I'm going to go back to America and cancel the whole trip."

Several reporters asked why black African countries should support President Carter's call to move the Olympics from Moscow when the United States did not support the boycott of the 1976 Olympics in Montreal which black African countries staged in protest against the presence of the New Zealand team. The Africans objected to New Zealand's sporting links with South Africa.

Ali said he personally supported the 1976 boycott, "that was good."

"All I'm saying is in this particular case we should show the Russians that we don't like what they did," he continued. "I'm here to say that Russia took over Afghanistan. If the Russians came to your country and took you all over, how would you like it? Would you want support from the world?"

Hundreds of fans joined the press at the airport news conference, but President Julius Nyerere refused to see Ali. Tanzanian officials said privately they considered Carter insulted their president by sending a boxer to confer with him.

Ali was to move on today to Kenya, but Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi has already announced that his country will boycott the Olympics unless the Games are moved from Moscow. On Saturday, he said no non-aligned nation should attend the Moscow Games while Soviet troops are in Afghanistan.

Rosettes Place One In State

GREENSBORO — Tracy Ferrington became the first Rosette to qualify for the state tournament while four other girls prepare for a meet in which they could qualify for the state meet to be held in March.

Ferrington, competing in the 15-and-older age group at this weekend's optional gymnastic meet, finished second in the all-arounds. She came in third in the vault, the balance beam and the uneven bars to qualify for the state in the class 2 bracket.

Judy Benson, in the 12-to-14 age group, took third this weekend in the balance beam.

This coming weekend the Rosettes send four girls — Christy Garrison, Nancy Johnson, Jennifer Newton and Donna Costner — to Raleigh to compete in another optional meet. All four girls will be looking to qualify for the state meet in class 3.

Answer to Saturday's puzzle.

Grain Embargo Impact Felt Now By Agriculture

BY BILL HUMPHRIES
RALEIGH — It will be some time before the full effects of President Carter's suspension of grain sales to Russia become clear.
It is already apparent, however, that the impact is being felt by virtually all segments of the population of American agriculture.
As expected, the most immediate impact was a drop in grain prices. The government, however, has taken several actions intended to maintain stability in grain markets.

Some farm organizations have raised questions about whether farmers are being asked to shoulder more than their fair share of the burden of opposing the Soviet Union's policy of military expansion.

And some farm organization officials are pessimistic and skeptical about the long-range prospects for regaining the huge Russian market for U.S. agricultural products.
The general feeling among farm leaders appears to be: "If Russia's actions pose a real threat to our national security, then all segments of our nation and not just farmers should be called upon to make sacrifices."

The embargo on grain shipments to Russia was announced Jan. 4. Prior to that, corn prices in eastern North Carolina ranged from $2.80 to $3 a bushel. By Jan. 10 they fell to $2.45 to $2.70. However, by Jan. 16 they recovered to a range of $2.70 to $2.85.
If the 17 million metric tons of grain previously committed but not delivered to the USSR is added to U.S. carryover stocks, prices "could be driven 30 to 50 cents per bushel lower," said Dr. T. Everett Nichols, Jr., extension grain marketing economist at North Carolina State University.

"However, government efforts to prop up farm prices are expected to isolate some of the grain from the market and if effective, prices could be stabilized at present levels or even slightly higher," Nichols said.
U.S. Department of Agriculture officials on Jan. 8 announced these actions intended to minimize the loss of income to farmers resulting from the grain embargo:

— The CCC loan rate per bushel on wheat was raised from $2.35 to $2.50; on corn from $2 to $2.10.
— Interest charges will be waived on the next 13 million tons of corn placed in the reserve program, and storage payments are being raised from 25 to 26.5 cents.

— To insure that corn and wheat placed in reserve will stay off the market longer, release prices per bushel are being raised from $3.29 to $3.75 for wheat and from $2.50 to $2.63 for corn.
— The call prices per bushel are being boosted from $4.10 to $4.63 for wheat and from $2.80 to $3.05 for corn. And farmers now have 90 days instead of 30 to redeem their grain.

The administration is also considering a diversion or set-aside program to hold down the size of the 1980 corn crop and thus bolster prices.

Originally no diversion program was planned because of expected heavy Soviet demand, but it may be needed to help maintain U.S. grain prices at levels expected prior to the embargo announcement, Nichols said.

The NCSU specialist advised farmers to avoid panic selling and to hold their grain until some of the uncertainty in the market subsides.
Although soybeans were down the 30-cent limit when markets reopened after the embargo announcement, prices soon recovered much of the initial loss.

"Lower feed grain prices may provide incentives to livestock and poultry producers to expand output. If so, this would add strength in the domestic market," Nichols said.
Export demand for soybeans is expected to remain strong through the winter and spring but could weaken sharply when Brazil's crop comes to market. The Brazilian crop is expected to be about 15 million metric tons, up 18 percent from last year.

"The corn-soybean price ratio still favors a shift of acreage from soybeans to corn in 1980. But with expected higher fertilizer costs and lower corn prices, some farmers have indicated they may keep planted acreage about the same as last year," Nichols said.

Agriculture Outlook Is Not As Good This Year

BY BILL HUMPHRIES
RALEIGH — The outlook for U.S. agriculture in 1980 is "not as favorable as the past two years," says an economist at North Carolina State University.
"Rising production costs are expected to more than offset any increase in receipts," said Dr. R.C. Wells, specialist-in-charge of economics and business for the state's Agricultural Extension Service.

Total cash receipts may increase modestly, although receipts for livestock may not change much from 1979 levels, he said, adding that some gains for milk and cattle and calves will be offset by expected declines from hogs and poultry.

Wells said an expected 11 percent increase in farm production costs will substantially offset increases in marketings and could result in a decline of net farm income from last year's $31 billion to $25-26 billion, a 20 percent drop. He said producers of pork and poultry likely will be squeezed throughout most of the first half of 1980.

Highlights of U.S. agriculture in 1979, the economist said, included the second largest net farm income in history, record or near-record levels of production and commodity receipts, record export sales and a rapid increase in production expenses and retail food prices.
Net farm income in 1979 was up $3 billion from the previous year. Adjusted for inflation, however, real net farm income was about $14.4 billion, same as in 1978. (This adjustment is based on the 1967 value of the dollar.)
Cash receipts for crops last year reached about $62 billion, up to 19 percent; for livestock, a record $67 billion, up 14 percent.

On the plus side, Mexico purchased more than four million metric tons of U.S. grain previously destined for Russia, and the U.S. Congress voted to grant "most favored nation" trade status to the People's Republic of China. The latter action means that China can now trade with the United States on more favorable terms.

Retail food prices in 1979 averaged nearly 11 percent higher than in 1978, and "very little relief" from rising food prices is in store in 1980, Wells said.

"Expected increases primarily in labor, transportation, processing and marketing costs will contribute to a seven to 11 percent increase in retail food prices in 1980," Wells said.

Only a small number of students transferred to Shaw and N.C. Central, Hill said. Some out-of-state students transferred to schools in their own state, he said.

St. Augustine's cannot lower admission standards so Durham College students can transfer, Robinson said. Students must have a C average and good recommendations to be admitted.

Some of the Durham College students said they could not afford the higher tuition at St. Augustine's, Robinson said. "Any student who failed to pay the difference was not enrolled," he said.

But Robinson said students who received financial aid at Durham College will continue to receive that aid at St. Augustine's.
No more Durham College students will be accepted, he said, because the school has no room to house them. St. Augustine's has an enrollment of 1,700.

According to the director of the Achievement Awards Program, Dr. Muller will be encouraging superior writing by high school students and recommending them based on achievement to colleges and universities for admission and for financial assistance. More than 6,000 students were chosen as candidates for Achievement Awards in 1979. The NCTE also honors teachers and schools that have participated in the training of these young men and women.

Wells said U.S. beef production was down substantially again in 1979 as herd rebuilding continued. With beef slaughter down 14 percent, retail beef prices roses.

The first half of 1979 was favorable for hog and poultry producers but output increased so much in the second half that prices declined sharply. For the year, pork production was up 15 percent and broiler production up 11 percent.
Continued growth in farm exports has been a major factor supporting U.S. farm income in 1979 and other recent years, Wells said.

Some Able To Transfer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — About 65 former Durham College students whose education was suddenly interrupted when the school closed last month have resumed their studies at St. Augustine's College in Raleigh.
Financial problems forced Durham College trustees to close the predominately black, two-year school on Jan. 17.

More than 100 of the schools 245 students returned to the Durham campus last week to try to arrange transfers to St. Augustine's, Shaw University in Raleigh or N.C. Central University in Durham, according to Durham College President James W. Hill.
St. Augustine's president, Prezell R. Robinson, said several Durham College students were turned down by the school because they didn't meet its admission standards. He would not say how many were turned down.

Only a small number of students transferred to Shaw and N.C. Central, Hill said. Some out-of-state students transferred to schools in their own state, he said.

Runs For Phone After Classes

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — At the end of each class, David Lipscomb College student Dennis Hendrix rushes to a pay phone like a bookie after a horse race.

He's not checking bets on nags. He's checking the stock market. It's earned the senior accounting major $75,000 this year.

During his first year of playing the market, Hendrix, 24, has turned $7,000 in loans and $1,000 in savings into assets of $400,000 in stocks and $300,000 in real estate, he said in a recent interview.

Hendrix calls his brokers at least a dozen times daily from a pay phone on the campus to trade stocks during 10-minute class breaks.

"My teachers don't understand why I may come to class a few minutes late because I may have found out something's blown up in Iran and have to figure out how it will affect a company I hold stock in," Hendrix said.

Hendrix, who credits God and his wife Jeane with his success, said he turned to the stock market out of hardship.

After working a 10 p.m. to 8 a.m. shift at Meharry Medical College during his first three years in college, Hendrix said, "I got to where I couldn't sleep, and I wasn't making good grades and I hardly had enough to pay tuition." So he dropped out of school temporarily about a year and a half ago.

In September 1978, he married Jeane, "and after a couple of months, we said, 'Let's go for it.'"

He said being out of work five months with a broken ankle and then a kidney stone operation forced him "to take chances I never would have taken otherwise" and gave him the impetus to try the market.

"We took out all the money we could on all of our credit cards, a mortgage on our house and borrowed against our two car titles," Hendrix said he invested $8,000 in McDowell Enterprises at $9 per share. About eight months later he sold the stock at $18 per share.

He said many people ask him for financial advice, and he tells them to try real estate because it is safer than the stock market right now.

With most of the borrowed money returned, Hendrix said his goal is to establish a major financial enterprise.

"But what we have to consider is that every hour when I walk to the phone, I could have lost everything I own and more," Hendrix said. "Even if we go for it and lose and it takes 10 years for us to pay it back, we've had a great ride."

LINERS LINE-UP — A workman inspects one of a line of fiber glass reinforced stack liners to be used in a 715-foot high chimney at the Hogies Energy power plant under construction at Merom, Ind. Fiber glass manufacturer PPG Industries says the liners, each about 20 feet in diameter, will combat corrosion and are virtually maintenance free as well as more economical to install than conventional liners. (AP Laserphoto)
