N.C. Coast Suffers Bone-Chilling Cold

By The Associated Press
Coastal North Carolina, smothered during the weekend by a two-foot snowfall, was hit today by record cold as the rest of the state began a clear day with forecasts that temperatures would reach into the 60s.

A low of 3 degrees above was recorded today at Havelock and Cherry Point, where 28 to 30 inches of snow fell during the weekend. The small Duplin County community of Sloan was even colder, recording a reading of one degree below zero.

Wilmington and Jacksonville each had 9-degree readings — the second coldest day on record in Wilmington and an all-time low for March.

The bitter cold came on the heels of a relatively mild afternoon that allowed some melting of weekend snow that contributed to 14 deaths across the state and caused heavy property damage, including more than $1 million in losses by the poultry industry.

The National Weather Service predicted mild temperatures throughout the state today and tonight. Forecasters warned, however, that a frontal system moving from the Central Plains would end the sunny skies for a while.

That system is bringing showers that are forecast to begin spreading across the state tonight from the west.

Lows are expected to be in the mid and upper 30s.

Two of the deaths blamed on the snowstorm occurred while the victims were clearing away snow. A city employee, 51-year-old John Murray, died in Wilson Monday morning when his motor grader was struck by a train. Joseph Fletcher Walls, 73, of Trinity died of an apparent heart attack while shoveling snow at his home.

Authorities reported several persons died while trying to shovel snow out of the way. A city employee, 51-year-old John Murray, died in Wilson on Monday morning when his motor grader was struck by a train. Joseph Fletcher Walls, 73, died apparently of a heart attack Monday while shoveling snow at his Trinity home.

Coastal residents faced damage from high waters and winds. Two cottages near the old Kitty Hawk Lifesaving Station and one at South Nags Head were lost Sunday night to the churning waters of the Atlantic.

Residents along the Pasquotank River at Elizabeth City reported seeing the high wind roll back the water, exposing the river bottom.

Businessmen were complaining Monday as few persons ventured from home.

Roadblocks From Iran's Militants

By The Associated Press

The militants holding the U.S. Embassy in Tehran imposed new conditions today for the U.N. commission to see the American hostages, virtually eclipsing chances for a visit during the panel's current stay and setting the captors on another collision course with President Abolhassan BaniSadr's regime.

Spokesmen for the militants told the Foreign Ministry the commission should first submit its findings on the ousted shah's regime to the United Nations. They said if the United Nations accepted evidence of U.S. crimes in Iran and wrongdoing by the shah, then a visit to the approximately 50 hostages, who began their fifth month in captivity today, would be reconsidered.

In the meantime, the spokesmen said, they would be prepared to arrange a meeting with the commission and some of the hostages, perhaps only a few, on condition they be heard as witnesses testifying about their role as spies for the U.S. government in Iran.

But Bani-Sadr and the ruling Revolutionary Council turned down the militants' condition for the commission to first submit its report, told the captors that they had promised the U.N. panel a meeting with all the hostages and that if their pledge did not materialize the government position would be weakened, the official Pars news agency said.

The militants already had poured cold water on a visit by announcing that three of them met for two hours Monday night with Bani-Sadr and four members of the Revolutionary Council and "exchanged views regarding a possible visit to the spy hostages by the commission of inquiry," Radio Tehran reported. "Various plans were suggested at the meeting but none were accepted," the broadcast announcement said.

1980 Snow Story Similar To That Of March, 1927

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The headline at the top of "The Daily Reflector" read, "Heaviest Snow In Quarter Century". Make that half century and it well could have been a headline used yesterday. But the date was March 2, 1927.

The snow began on March 1, and continued on March 2 (Tuesday and Wednesday), just as it did Saturday and Sunday, some 56 years later.

The accounts of the 1927 storm reported the average depth of the snow at 16 inches and the low temperature for the period at 25 degrees.

"Traffic movement was almost impossible and automobiles stuck deep in the snow, were abandoned by the drivers," the newspaper said.

The account of the 1927 storm also reported that the roofs of two tobacco warehouses collapsed, "due to the heavy snow."

Automobiles stuck... schools closed... collapsing warehouse roofs (the New Carolina at 1700 Dickinson Ave.)... a very similar story this week.

The Greenville Utilities Commission reported accumulated snow fall over the two day period Saturday and Sunday averaged 16 inches, with melted precipitation totaling 2.01 inches.

Weather forecasters say there is no formula to accurately correlate snow depth to melted precipitation, and that in the absence of accurate information, 10 inches of light fluffy snow is generally considered equivalent to 1 inch of rainfall. If the snow is very dry, the equivalent depth will be more, while if the snow is very wet, the depth will be less.

Using that rough formula, the 2.01 inches of melted precipitation recorded over the weekend would give 20.1 inches of snow. However, much of the precipitation that fell Saturday was in the form of sleet and freezing rain.

The GUC weather station, which reported Sunday's high at 23 and the low for the day at 16, said the temperature yesterday reached a high of 41 degrees, while the low for the day was 18 degrees.

At 8 a.m. yesterday, the temperature stood at 21 degrees, while the temperature at 8 o'clock this morning was 26 degrees.

Mayo Allen, director of the city's Public Works Department reported this morning that streets in Greenville were, "about as bad as yesterday," although he said downtown streets are open.

He said the city's one motorgrader has been operating around-the-clock since the snow began, adding that the city has rented another grader to aid in snow clearing operations today.

Public Works employees have been divided into groups and assigned to various sections of the town to help with snow removal.

"We're moving into residential areas now," Allen said, in an effort to get residential streets at least passable.

Allen noted that two crews, with front-end loaders and trucks, are at work hauling away, "excess snow at intersections. It's so deep, we have to dig it out and move it."

"We're trying to get all the streets we can today so traffic can move on them," Allen said, "and hopefully work on city-owned parking lots tomorrow."

Allen emphasized that city streets are, "still dangerous," and encouraged drivers to, "stay off," the roads. "Traffic hinders our operations," he explained.

Allen praised Public Works Department employees for their dedication, and said two men, "yesterday, walked six miles to get to work."

Horace Vincent, a spokesman for the N.C. Department of Transportation said today that, "all (Cont'd on Page 2)

'Prime' Up

NEW YORK (AP) — Chase Manhattan Bank today raised its prime lending rate to a record 17 1/4 percent, continuing the rapid rise in interest rates that has followed new efforts to tighten credit.

Chase Manhattan, the third largest bank in the country, said that the demand for loans was "very strong" even at a prime rate of 16 1/2 percent, which was adopted only last Friday by major banks.

Chase also cited the spiral in other interest rates, which has pushed rates on both home mortgages and money market certificates to record levels.

The prime lending rate, which banks charge on loans to their most creditworthy corporate customers, has now risen two percentage points since Feb. 15, when the Federal Reserve made its latest move to tighten credit.

Business Activity In Greenville Virtually At Standstill Due Snow

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

"You might be able to get there but then where would you park?"

That observation was offered this morning by a local businessman who addressed one of the key problems faced by area residents in view of the blanket snow coverage.

While merchant activity was virtually at a standstill on Monday, some businesses apparently made arrangements to open today. All firms shared the problem of providing cleared parking areas for customers who brave icy streets.

Still another key element of business activity involved the success of employees in getting to work. Many proprietors obviously felt the risk was too great and will wait until Wednesday to open their doors.

Ed Walker, executive vice president of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce, said today that parking was the critical element of area business operations and while the majority of local merchants heeded advice to stay off the streets yesterday, work was underway today to get ready for opening Wednesday.

"Many (merchants) are getting out and cleaning their lots today," Walker said, adding that hopefully business will begin to get back to normal on Wednesday. People who have tractors are working on their parking areas, he said.

Dave Mosier, executive director of the Downtown Greenville Association, echoed Walker's sentiments regarding parking open up this afternoon.

"We have a look and see situation," Mosier observed, pointing out that the street cleaning crews "have done a good job considering the situation." Mosier said that the excessive snow covering poses a "real challenge to any equipment."

Mosier, who said that he did not know of any downtown stores that were open early today, mentioned that a "mad scramble" exists now for tractors and lot clearing equipment.

Don Yeager, manager of the JCPenney store at Pitt Plaza, reported that his store would remain closed today and hopefully be open by noon on Wednesday. Yeager also cited the problem with parking, stating, "I can't even get out of my driveway to begin with."

The store manager said he expected that most of the businesses at Pitt Plaza would remain closed today and try to open tomorrow. He said that, "We are working on getting the parking lot opened up today."

Pam Wing of Carolina East Mall reported this morning that the new facility would remain closed through today, mainly due to parking problems and the accident potential for employees and customers utilizing icy lots. Ms. Wing said that the mall is having the parking areas cleared today and plans are being made to open on schedule on Wednesday.

A spokesman at Cozart's Auto Supply here said that the business was open today with a "part crew" and the firm still had some sizes of tire chains and repair lengths. The spokesman reported that chains for some of the larger sizes of tires were gone but "we still have a fair assortment for smaller tires. We knew how it would be today and that is one of the reasons we opened."

Many of the area super markets apparently opened today, more or less on schedule. All of the stores contacted reported that lots were being cleared in order for motoring traffic to have parking convenience.

Parker Overton of Overton's Supermarket Inc. said that his store opened at 10 a.m. today and would have opened Monday around noon but employees were not able to get to work. Overton said that the store had its parking lot cleared yesterday but people parked their cars there and left them, creating a problem today.

The spokesman said that the store received "almost 200 calls (Monday) from people wanting to know if we were going to be open." He noted that "we will have a lot of walking traffic today and hopefully will get back to normal tomorrow."

We Try, But ...

Delivery of "The Daily Reflector" was delayed by the snow storm which hit the area over the weekend.

The newspaper published early Saturday night and most of the papers were delivered.

On Monday a skeleton crew made it to work by walking, often through snow drifts up to several feet. The press run was begun on time Monday afternoon, but carrier boys and motor route carriers faced a monumental task in delivering the paper.

The management hopes that all editions will eventually reach our subscribers, and we trust that readers will understand the major problems that were faced.

PARKING LOT — WHEN?

Parking out here at the hospital continues to be a big headache. I thought I read in a couple of hospital board articles that there was to be a lot opened across the road beside Greenville Villa. Why is it so long in coming? J. S.

Hospital Director Jack Richardson said work should begin on the parking lot across the road as soon as the weather breaks. He said there was some delay getting approval from the state for a driveway into the lot, which will be graded and graveled, but not paved.

Pitt Communities Still Virtually Snowbound

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

No unmanageable problems have resulted to date in Martin and Pitt County towns following the big two-day snowfall on Saturday and Sunday, according to spokesmen in police departments.

In all localities, work crews were out in full force, concentrating on keeping main arteries of traffic open, with plans to move into work on secondary roads at the earliest possible moment. Several spokesmen mentioned that waiting for the sun to do its melting job and coping with being "snowed in" were factors in dealing with the unexpected advent of a late winter record snowfall. And walking, instead of riding, was cited as one of the things people were doing for the duration of the clearing up period.

Depths of the snow were generally conceded to be "about 18 to 20 inches" with mention of drifts of five to six feet in places.

— The Williamston spokesman said that generally road conditions "are terrible, especially on secondary roads 93 and 125." Highways U.S. 64 and 17 are passable on a basis of careful driving. No fires or accidents have been reported, and the rescue squad has been able to handle a small number of calls for help.

— In Ayden, Main and Lee Streets have been cleared, but secondary roads are described as not yet cleared and generally not passable. The Ayden spokesman also (Cont'd on Page 8)

Colombian Guerrillas Vow Demands To Stand

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The leftist guerrillas holding U.S. Ambassador Diego Asencio and some 26 other hostages in the Dominican Republic's embassy for a week vowed that they would not reduce their demands as they prepared for negotiations with the Colombian government today.

"We won't give in on anything," said the leader of the 30 guerrillas who invaded the embassy during a diplomatic reception last Wednesday. But "we have given no ultimatum," he added in a telephone interview.

One of the guerrillas was killed in the takeover, and the leftists have released 23 hostages, including 15 women. Those still held include at least 20 foreign diplomats, two protocol officers from the Colombian Foreign Ministry and at least four other persons.

The guerrillas, members of an organization called M-19, are demanding $50 million, freedom for 311 other M-19 members they claim are under arrest, worldwide publication of an anti-government manifesto and safe conduct out of Colombia.

M-19 stands for the April 19 Movement. It takes its name from the date of the 1970 presidential election, which the organization claims was rigged.

Mexican Ambassador Ricardo Galan, one of the hostages, said everything was calm inside the embassy, which is at the end of a dead-end street in a quiet residential district.

"We are waiting for the negotiations to resume," he reported by telephone.

A Foreign Ministry source said the negotiations would resume today.

Florida Citrus Industry Spared New Hard Freeze

By C.W. MIRANKER
Associated Press Writer
Florida's $2 billion citrus industry was spared another hard freeze that was expected today and officials said they don't expect the cost of a morning cup of orange juice to go up much after all.

"It doesn't look bad at all," said Earl Wells, spokesman for the Florida Citrus Mutual in Lakeland. "Temperatures forecast in the low and mid 20s just didn't develop. Throughout most of the area there were high 20s and low 30s, which is no real problem."

Elsewhere in the South, residents dug out from under record snow and hoped for warmer weather. Meanwhile, California braced for more rain and Colorado got eight inches of snow. The southern storm, roaring in from the Midwest over the weekend, dumped more than a foot of snow in Virginia and up to 30 inches in North Carolina. It was blamed for at least 36 deaths in 10 states. In Florida, blossoms of next year's orange crop turned black Monday in the record-low temperatures that hit the north and central sections of the 34-county citrus belt. But things were looking up today. While Wells said there had been some damage, but it was too early to assess the losses. "We don't anticipate there will be any material effect on the price of the juice at the consumer level," Wells said. "We're just not in that bad straits as far as the industry's concerned."

Ice coated the unharvested early and mid-winter orange crop, amounting to 15 to 20 million boxes. And rapidly maturing Valencia oranges, about 85 million 90-pound boxes ready to be harvested for frozen concentrated orange juice, froze on the trees in 20-degree temperatures Sunday and Monday. "We are in serious trouble," said Herb Riley of the Florida Fruit Inspection Service as growers and inspection teams checked millions of acres of groves from the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic and from Palm Beach County in the south to Gainesville in the north.

"Right now we're extremely concerned about next year's crop," said Don Linn, executive vice president of Seald Sweet Growers Inc. of Tampa, a marketing group for 4,500 growers.

The freeze prompted speculation about increased consumer prices and larger returns for growers because of a shorter supply. Grower Ed Mackenzie said he expected less juice from Valencias and possible increases in retail prices of orange concentrate.

"We're in supply trouble again with an inventory only about two million gallons (of concentrate) more than at the same time last year — when we had no weather problems," said Wilson McGee of the Orlando-based United Growers and Shippers Association.

About 90 percent of Florida's orange crop is processed into juice, with the rest sold as fresh fruit. The affected oranges can be processed into juice if harvested quickly.

In North Carolina, stranded motorists, buses and planes began moving through slush as the snow started melting. National Guard troops were on duty in 16 communities paralyzed by up to 30 inches of snow.

High winds and the churning waters of the Atlantic swept away two cottages near the old Kitty Hawk Lifesaving Station and one at South Nags Head. Residents along the Pasquotank River in Elizabeth City, where 25 inches of snow fell, reported seeing the river bottom as high winds pummeled the water.

In Dublin County, 40 poultry houses collapsed under the weight of snow and ice, killing thousands of chickens and turkeys.

In Virginia, sections of most major highways, blocked by drifts up to 12 feet high, reopened late Monday, and curfews were lifted in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Chesapeake. Many secondary roads remained impassable, and a traffic ban in Virginia Beach continued.

Lonely Ex-Con Created 'Family' By Abducting

By DAVE EINSTEIN
Associated Press Writer
UKIAH, Calif. (AP) — Kenneth Parnell, a lonely ex-convict who police say created a family for himself by kidnapping children, was being arraigned today as police studied the possibility that he had an accomplice in the abduction of Steven Stayner seven years ago.

Meanwhile, Stayner, 14, who lived with the quiet hotel clerk for seven years before turning up over the weekend with a second abduction victim, was getting to know his family again.

He said he was "sort of nervous" at the reunion with his parents and siblings — two brothers and two sisters. "It's the greatest thing that has ever happened," said his father, Delbert.

Kay Stayner, the youth's mother, said the family never moved from their modest Merced home, about 200 miles southeast of here, because they were "waiting for Steven to return."

Stayner told reporters he had been thinking about leaving Parnell for two years, and some officials speculated Stayner didn't return earlier because he'd grown fond of his abductor — even calling him "Dad" — and didn't want to get Parnell in trouble.

"Apparently the man was kind to him and treated him decently," said Mendocino County District Attorney Joe Allen. "At some point, he decided to stick with what he had."

Parnell, 48, has been charged with the Feb. 14 kidnapping of Timmy Lee White, 5, of Ukiah. He is being held on $7,000 bond, and was to appear today before Justice James Luther in Ukiah Justice Court.

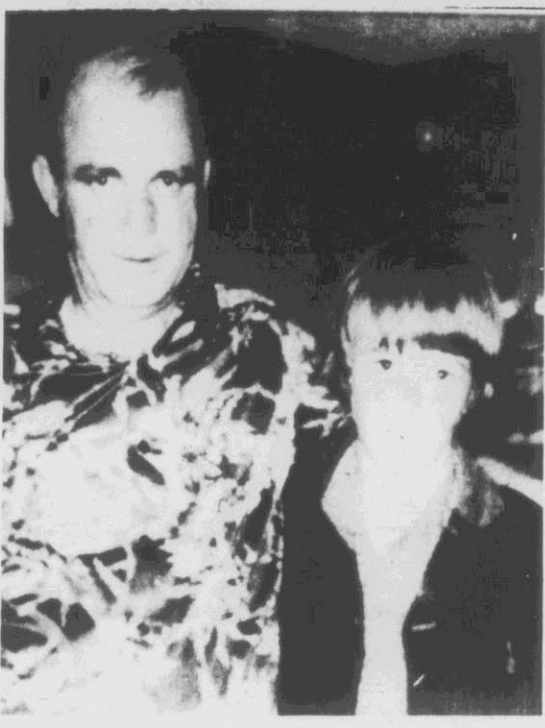

The youngster hitchhiked to freedom Saturday with Stayner, who was abducted in 1972 on his way home from school and later told he had been adopted. Stayner said he had helped free the younger child because he didn't want White to face his fate.

"He realized it was not good for Timmy to be there and arranged to get Timmy safely returned to Ukiah despite the fact that in the process he was going to destroy the only world he had ever known in seven years," said Allen.

"He knew it would mean the arrest of the man who became a foster parent, if you will." Charges are pending in the Stayner case. "We're investigating the possibility of a second individual being involved," said Merced Police Chief Harold Kulbeth.

Parnell was convicted in connection with the abduction of an 8-year-old Bakersfield boy in 1951 and served three years in San Quentin Prison.

Meanwhile, New York City police said Monday they were hoping to learn whether he might know of the case of Etan Patz, a 6-year-old who vanished from the city's Soho area of

Manhattan while on his way to school last May. Parnell was divorced from his high school sweetheart, and his mother said Monday that he had been told after the separation that he could no longer see his own daughter.

"It seemed he wanted to build a family for himself without going to the trouble of getting married," said Allen.

Ground Broken For Japanese Industry

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Groundbreaking ceremonies were held Monday in Raleigh for a $37-million plant to house Ajinomoto Co. Inc., one of Japan's largest food and specialty chemical companies.

The facility, Ajinomoto's first United States production plant, will produce a variety of amino acids for use in pharmaceutical and food products.

Bunzo Watanabe, president of Ajinomoto, said the plant is the realization of a goal established long ago. "It has been our dream for many years to bring our own production facility to America, and today we are about to realize that dream," he said.

"We are particularly proud to build the first U.S. facility with the technical capability to produce not one, but a variety of amino acids which will be utilized for the benefit of the American people." Gov. Jim Hunt said the investment by Ajinomoto also fulfills a North Carolina goal of economic development.

Watanabe said the firm will use American equipment, raw materials, employees and managers at the Raleigh plant. Ajinomoto Co. Inc. pioneered the production of monosodium glutamate and is an acknowledged leader in the research of amino acids and specialty chemicals. The firm has offices in 15 countries and manufacturing facilities in eight nations.

Sentenced For Tax Evasion

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge Eugene Gordon on Monday sentenced a Greensboro man to six months in prison and ordered him to pay a $5,000 fine for subscribing to a false federal income tax return.

J.M. Gerald Langlois, 65, former plant manager for Lorillard Inc. of Greensboro, pleaded guilty to the charge. Gordon handed Langlois a 12-month sentence and ordered him to spend six months in prison and the remaining six months on parole.

with meat, bread and milk trucks making their stops. A spokesman at Big Star Foods reported that the store opened today and deliveries were on schedule. He said that, "If we can get our parking area open we will be ok." Crews were in the process this morning of clearing the lots, he said.

Harris Super Markets opened its three food stores and cash and carry outlet this morning, according to a spokesman, who reported that food deliveries to the local stores were running about one day behind, overall. Bread and milk deliveries are being received, it was noted, although meat trucks are running late this week.

The spokesman, saying that the store hopes to be back on schedule Wednesday, reported that the firm was able to provide transportation to work for some of its employees, using four-wheel drive vehicles. Parking lots were cleared yesterday.

Kroger's Sav-On planned to operate its store "most of the day" and probably close before dark," a spokesman reported. He said that "no one is delivering today." The parking lot was being cleared in hopes of business activity returning to near normal, he added.

The A & P food store at Greenville Square was one of the few businesses to open yesterday and a spokesman said that 24-hour operations today would depend on whether employees could get to work. Deliveries were expected, although milk and meat trucks were slightly behind schedule.

Very few service stations opened Monday and one that did, Tenth and Evans Union 76, was unable to offer wrecker service, a spokesman reported. He noted that the station had "quite a few service calls yesterday but we could not get the wrecker out because it had no chains."

The spokesman said that he "sold a lot of gas yesterday" and his lot was cleared and open.

Railway Freight Service Ended

CHICAGO (AP) — Freight service along 4,600 miles of Milwaukee Road railway has ended and only trains in cleanup operations traveled Monday on the tracks.

About half the financially troubled railway's 9,500-mile system shut down Saturday under a U.S. District Court order to cut the railroad's expenses. The suspended lines are in South Dakota and North Dakota; Washington, Wisconsin, Iowa, Montana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana and Idaho.

Marxist For Rhodesians

By JOHN EDLIN
Associated Press Writer
SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Britain's interim governor in Rhodesia, Lord Soames, asks Robert Mugabe today to form the country's first internationally recognized black government following the surprise landslide win of the Marxist guerrilla leader's party in the parliamentary elections last week.

"I feel jubilant. I think we deserved it," Mugabe said of his overwhelming victory, reiterating that he would invite rival guerrilla leader Joshua Nkomo into a coalition government. Nkomo said he had not received an invitation but welcomed the idea, saying it would contribute to stability.

Whites, however, reacted with shock, anger or resignation. Some said they would join the 1,200 whites a month fleeing the country, and one pulled a revolver on Mugabe supporters in the downtown area.

MUGABE

Registrar-General Eric Pope-Simmonds announced Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union (Patriotic Front Faction) won 57 of the 80 black seats in the country's 100-member parliament, a majority of 14, and 63 percent of the 2.7 million votes cast by more than 93 percent of the eligible black voters.

Mugabe's chief political rival and ally in the guerrilla war against white rule, Joshua Nkomo and his Patriotic Front party, won 20 seats, while former Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa's United African National Council won only three. Six other black parties that put up candidates were shut out.

The other 20 seats were reserved for the 230,000 whites and were won by former Prime Minister Ian Smith's Rhodesian Front in an election two weeks ago.

Following the broadcast announcement of the election results, jubilant crowds ran through the streets, crowing and flapping their arms in emulation of the rooster that was the symbol of Mugabe's party on the ballot.

normally scheduled yesterday. He said volunteers with four-wheel drive vehicles, the National Guard, and "friends and family members," have responded with assistance in "bringing folks to us."

He said that in an effort to reduce the need to travel, many employees are working 12 hour shifts, rather than the usual eight hours.

Both the city and county schools systems, which were closed yesterday and today, will remain closed tomorrow, also.

Pitt County School Superintendent Ott Alford said county schools may stay closed for the remainder of the week, although he emphasized, "we're watching it a day at a time."

Glenn Cox, superintendent of the Greenville City School system said maintenance workers today were clearing walkways and parking lots at city school facilities.

"We need to get in," he said, indicating that a decision about school for city children on Thursday will be made tomorrow.

City of Greenville offices reopened this morning after closing yesterday, while County Manager Reginald Gray said plans call for all county offices to re-open tomorrow.

The North Carolina Highway Patrol this morning said their advice would be to keep off streets and highways in the county unless travel is necessary.

Pitt Memorial Hospital director Jack Richardson said about 75 percent of the hospital staff was at work this morning, as compared with between 100 and 150 of the usual 500 to 600 people

CARTER DIVORCE

RESCHEDULED

The meeting of the Citizens Participation Task Force Committee, scheduled for 7:30 tonight, has been postponed. The meeting has been rescheduled for Monday, March 10 at 7:30 p.m. in the first floor conference room at city hall.

Brooks Will Seek Funds

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina Labor Commissioner John Brooks faces no opposition in his bid for re-election, but he says he'll be raising campaign funds anyway. Other Council of State candidates are not pleased by that action. They say they're afraid Brooks' efforts will make it even more difficult to raise campaign funds of their own.

Brooks, in a Feb. 20 letter, asked potential contributors to send in $25 each. He said $15 dollars would go toward retiring a $20,000 debt left from his 1976 campaign and $10 would go toward his 1980 effort.

In the letter, he said, "Although there is no opposition, we are planning a limited amount of publicity, and I plan to campaign actively on behalf of the Democratic ticket."

"Even this reduced amount of campaigning will require some funds," he said.

He explained that campaign fund raising is necessary because candidates are expected to make contributions to Democratic Party functions.

One Council of State member said Brooks' action has "raised a few eyebrows."

He said the Council of State races are expensive because they are for statewide offices and raising funds for the lesser known offices is more difficult.

A campaign worker for one candidate said some candidates would have preferred Brooks have waited until after the primary to start raising funds.

Couple Marries Sunday In Louisburg Ceremony

LOUISBURG — Ginger Sue Murphy and Thomas Martin Vicars Jr. were united in a double ring ceremony Sunday at 2 p.m. at Louisburg Baptist Church with Bill Almond officiating.

A program of music was presented by Mrs. Steve Howard, organist and Star Abbott, soloist, who sang "Whither Thou Goest," "The Wedding Song" and "The Wedding Prayer."

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glenn Murphy of Louisburg, and the bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Vicars of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a full length gown of qiana knit featuring a Queen Anne neckline adorned with a Venise lace trim bodice and sheer back finished with Venise lace. The long sleeves were accented with embroidered lace that extended to the hand. The back was enhanced with a set-in panel from the yoke that flowed into a chapel train bordered with lace. The veil was a three-quarter length mantilla of bridal illusion edged with matching embroidered lace. She carried a bouquet with white sweetheart rosebuds, pom poms, straw flowers, baby's breath and ivy.

Scarlet Farmer of Asheville, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor and wore a floor length red polyester gown. The blouson bodice was fashioned with a draped neckline and long straight sleeves. She carried a nosegay of white pom poms, straw flowers and baby's breath. Bridesmaids were Lisa Murphy of Raleigh, sister of the bride, Teresa Vicars, sister-in-law of the bridegroom. They wore the same attire as honor attendant and carried nosegays also. The bride designed and made the attendants' gowns.

Honorary bridesmaids were Miss Debbie Stoner of Harrisonburg, Va., Mrs. Susie McIver of Charlotte, Mrs. Debbie Arp of Gastonia, Mrs. Donna Driver of Louisburg. They wore floor length dresses and carried a long-stemmed white mums with plumose ferns.

Leigh Ann Vicars of Greenville, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl. She wore a formal sheer dress with a three-tiered ruffled bottom, empire waist, high neckline and lace trim. It featured short puffed sleeves with lace trim. She carried a white basket with red rose petals.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

In January of this year, I made a resolution to balance my checkbook every month when the statement comes in.

In years past, I have resolved the problem by switching banks every time I don't balance. No error was too large or too small for me to close out the account and take my business down the street.

Phoenix is a big city. In the telephone directory, there are five yellow pages listing banks and three and a half pages of savings and loans. I'm down to my last two banks.

Last month when I tallied up my deposits, withdrawals, and outstanding checks I was off 19 cents . . . in the bank's favor, of course.

I would rather be off $500 than 19 cents.

When you're off $500, you can walk right into a bank with your self-respect intact, go to a teller and say, "See here, Miss Madlinger, could you possibly give me a few minutes of your time? I've clumsily misplaced $500 and was hoping your trained eye could isolate the error for me."

Try that with 19 cents and they'll laugh themselves into a hernia repair.

The only way you can find a 19-cent error is to devote the rest of your life to it, like the fella who slip-covered the Grand Canyon or rode a bicycle across the United States backwards.

It's a situation you either accept or fight. I chose to pick up the gauntlet. Every night after dinner for the last three weeks I have trudged to the dining room table, turned on the calculator, and gone over every figure from the beginning.

For all of you bookkeeping quarterbacks, I did not:

- (a) Make a seven like a nine.
- (b) Forget to deduct a bank charge.
- (c) Record a check on a breath mint and eat it.
- (d) Subtract instead of add a 19-cent deposit.
- (e) Forget I couldn't subtract nine from zero without borrowing one.
- (f) Record my checks in round numbers.
- (g) Write a check for $1.76 and record it for $1.57.

This morning, I knew what I had to do. I got in the car and drove to the last institution in Phoenix that has never had an account in my name — the God-father Savings and Loan.

It's a rather unique institution. There are no wine glass premiums. The tellers are all men and have cotton stuffed in their cheeks. The entire bank is on wheels attached to a truck.

But their brochure said, "No more balancing a checkbook! We tell you how much you've got!"

The piece of mind is worth 19 cents.

Husband's Horn Blows Her Mind

By Abigail Van Buren

1980 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd. Inc.

DEAR ABBY: My 46-year-old husband is finally fulfilling one of his childhood desires. He has started to take clarinet lessons. I am pleased that he feels secure enough to pursue this childhood dream, but when he practices, the noise is unbearable!

Abby, I think parents — not wives — should be responsible for their children's musical education. There is also the matter of footing the bills for lessons.

Would it be in bad taste to suggest that my in-laws bear some of the burden? I think they should either pay for their son's clarinet lessons, or provide a place for him to practice. What do you think?

TROUBLED CLEF IN D.C.

DEAR TROUBLED: Parents have no responsibility for a 46-year-old son who decides to take clarinet lessons. You must be kidding.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 15-year-old girl who has a girlfriend my age who confides in me. She has just told me that she wets the bed! She said she started wetting 3 1/2 years ago. She wet the bed for two years straight, then she stopped for a year, and then started in again. Now, instead of washing the sheets every day, she sleeps on a plastic garbage bag with a towel over it, so all she has to wash is the towel.

She is a very heavy sleeper, and she doesn't wake up while she's wetting.

My friend is really desperate. She's tried setting an alarm to wake her up every three hours. She's even stopped drinking liquids at least two hours before bedtime. She's even tried praying. Nothing has helped.

The poor kid can't accept invitations to slumber parties for fear she'll wet. How can I help her?

HER BEST FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Tell her to see a physician for a thorough examination. And if the doctor can't find anything physically wrong with her, to get a "Wee Alert Buzzer." (It is listed in the Sears catalogue.) That little life-saver has dried up more wettlers (of all ages) than anything I've ever heard of.

DEAR ABBY: I have worked for 10 years for the same company. I am going to be married in June and, as you know, wedding invitations are very expensive.

My fiancé and I both have large families and intend to send invitations to all our aunts, uncles, cousins, etc.

There are 500 people in my department at work, all of whom are located on six floors of the main building.

It has become a custom for each employee who gets married to place an invitation on the bulletin board of each floor. I was told that this was very tacky. Is it?

DON'T USE NAMES

DEAR DON'T: If you can't afford to send an invitation to all the people you know and want, invite them verbally. But tacking up an invitation as a general public announcement for 500 people (most of whom must be strangers) seems tacky to me.

Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How To Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $1 and a long, stamped (28 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby: 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Pat's Pointers

By Pat Trexler

If you have never done any Bargello stitchery, you will find it ever so easy to learn while you make this needlepoint Flame Pillow. Instructions for making this exciting decorator accessory are written with the beginner in mind. The stitch itself couldn't be simpler — just long straight stitches worked over several canvas threads at a time. Once you learn to follow the charts, you will be able to make any Bargello design.

To obtain directions for making the Needlepoint Flame Pillow, send your request for Leaflet No. B-817 with $1.00 and a long, self-addressed envelope to Pat Trexler (BE SURE TO USE YOUR NEWSPAPER CODE HERE), P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582.

Or you may order Kit No. K-817 by sending check or money order for $11.50 to Pat Trexler at the same address. Each kit contains sufficient canvas and yarn for making one pillow top plus the instructions and tapestry needle. The "designer's choice" color combination is pale yellow, orange, tangerine, burnt orange, lilac and amethyst. Pillow form and backing are not included.

More and more people are taking up needlepoint as a form of relaxation and as an outlet for creative urges. It's a money-saving hobby, too, particularly when you learn to work on blank canvas, rather than with painted or pre-worked designs.

If you live in an area where professional instruction is available, do take advantage of this. Learning the basics from an expert might save you a lot of trial and error. If such instruction is not available to you, however, watch this column for tips on materials and methods.

Today, let's talk about canvas — the background for all needlepoint. There are two basic categories, each available in a variety of mesh sizes. These types are penelope and mono.

Penelope canvas has double horizontal and vertical threads, while the mono canvas is composed of single threads in each direction.

The chief virtue of penelope canvas is that it allows you to work all or part of the design in petit point (very fine stitches) on a background of larger stitches. This is achieved by "splitting" the canvas or working a stitch over each of the double threads, thereby creating a smaller stitch. Also, it is quite strong, making it a good choice for items which will receive a great deal of wear. Most rug canvases, for example, are of this type.

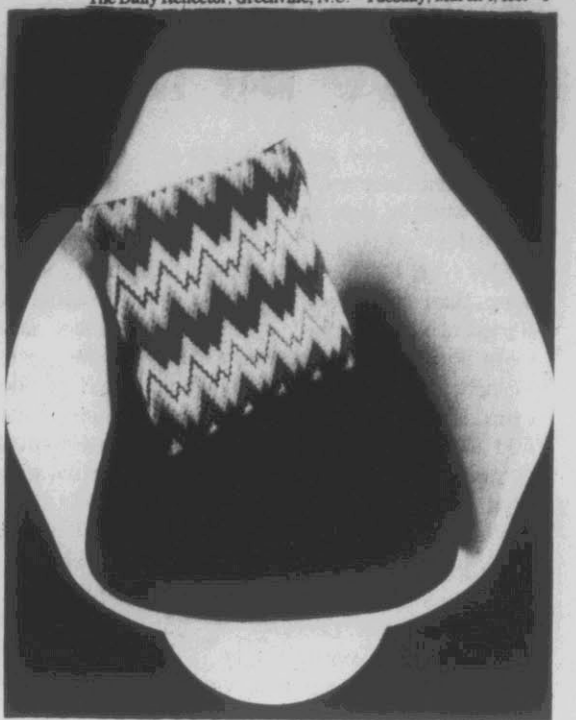

Mono canvas is available in two types — interlocking or woven. Many experts swear by woven (or regular) mono, feeling that the interlocking type is inferior. Others will use nothing but interlock.

Personally, I like woven canvas for basketweave stitches and interlocking for all pattern stitches, particularly for Bargello and other patterns which use long, straight stitches, because the woven canvas threads will slip and — for me, at least — it is more difficult to have perfectly even stitches.

Plastic canvas, which was introduced in the '70s, is more or less interchangeable with interlocking mono, but the advantages and disadvantages of this type of canvas will be discussed in a future column.

All canvases are sized by the number of threads (or mesh) to the inch. A No. 10 canvas will have ten threads per inch. (In penelope, each pair of threads is considered one mesh.) A No. 12 canvas will have twelve threads per inch.

This is the most common definition of mesh. You might FLAME PILLOW . . . which is easy-to-make, is an introduction to Bargello stitchery.

find some salespeople who feel that the term "mesh" refers to the number of holes per inch and even an occasional manufacturer will label their canvas with a hole count rather than a thread count. Actually, this makes little difference except on large-mesh rug canvas.

Bridge Winners Announced

Winners in the Wednesday morning duplicate bridge game played at Planters Bank were:

For hundreds of years, tapestries have been highly respected wall coverings. Hanging rugs on walls is still a good idea. A picture frame can make a good stretcher. Have it made a fraction of an inch smaller than the rug. Tack the rug on the stretcher with small tacks. Put double-faced masking tape around the back of the frame for an extra tight fit. If a stretcher is not preferred the rug can be tacked to a piece of wallboard, plasterboard, or plywood cut to size. A rug wall hanging can give an especially warm feeling to a room.

Day To Be Remembered

It will be known as the Big Snow of 1980 and there will be arguments about whether it is the heaviest of the century.

Whatever, the weekend snow was more than enough for residents of North Carolina.

For Pitt County there was a good 16 inches of snow, and the howling winds created drifts of up to six feet. Add to that crashing lightning and accompanying thunder and you had what was likely the most awesome winter storm ever to hit this area.

Ironically it came on the same days as the great storm of March 2, 1927. Newspaper accounts of that day showed the snowfall to be 16 inches, an amount that was equalled or exceeded this weekend.

As with most emergency situations people in our area coped pretty well. Most of us heeded warnings to stay off the roads and highways except for emergencies. Those in essential jobs made it to work in sufficient numbers to get the tasks done. As of yesterday serious fires and accidents had been minimal. Monday morning, in fact, movement in Greenville had been brought to a virtual standstill.

Hopefully warmer weather this week will quickly erase the snow, but all of us who were here can recall that we lived through the snow of 1980 which at least equalled the heaviest snow of the 20th century.

Strong Incentive To Stay

It has been reported that college professors in the south closed the gap some in compensation as compared with other areas of the nation.

Southern faculty members still earn an average of seven percent less than their national counterparts, but there has been a definite improvement over the 16 percent differential of 1974.

The gains are all to the good for our region. Hopefully it has kept some eminent professors in southern colleges and universities.

THIS AFTERNOON All For Pay Hikes

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH - To hear this year's crop of political hopefuls tell it, there is nothing North Carolina needs like a hefty pay raise for state employees and teachers.

Almost to a man, primary candidates for office of governor have gone courting in recent weeks, making pilgrimages to the meeting places where they assured employee organization leaders that a raise is the number one priority in the short session of the General Assembly coming up in June.

local contact is a way in which state employees can make their presence more prominently felt by the politicians.

Green Letter
A backstage feud continues among top office seekers over who has done the most - or the least - for state employees in recent years.

Gov. Jim Hunt tried to get the General Assembly to toe the line with an inflation-fighting pay raise of only he (Green) persuaded him to go for more.

Furthermore, Green argued, "Regardless of his help in obtaining it, you earned that payment; it was not a favor that must be repaid."

Regardless of all that, Green added, "I promise you again that granting you a fair and equitable cost-of-living increase will be my number one priority.... This is my pledge to you."

BILL NOBLITT

Not so incidentally, that legislative session comes after the primaries (May) to select nominees for the election in November.

Employees, through their associations, are pushing for a 15 percent raise, changes in the salary schedules, improved retirement benefits, and other actions which would cost a total of approximately $600 million annually.

Candidates are being publicly coy about figures even while pledging undying devotion to the employees. Most use terms such as "double-digit" or "cost of living" to describe the raises which they will favor.

Locally, Too
Meanwhile, the North Carolina State Employees Association is taking the "political education program" on the road. A series of dinners will be held across the state at which legislators will be presented the employee package.

The state has been split into 23 areas, with local leaders furnished the names and addresses of legislators within each area so they can arrange the sessions.

The employee group does not endorse candidates or contribute to campaign funds, but leaders feel the five percent in last year's legislative session, pointing to federal guidelines as the rationale.

Hunt is now trying to promise enough of a raise this year to offset that legislative action. The legislature, meanwhile, made an end run and gave employees a five percent raise plus a $200 flat amount.

House speaker Carl Stewart has sent letters to some state employees asking them to give $10 from that bonus to his campaign for lieutenant governor by way of showing their appreciation.

Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green has fired back with a letter published in an employee publication lambasting Stewart for standing firm on the five percent limit until

"See, I told you Carter couldn't whip my you-know-what!"

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK Uncle And The Bumper

WASHINGTON - Within the next few days, House and Senate conferees will decide one of the towering questions of our time. Hostages? No. Price controls? No. Nuclear power? No. Are you ready? They will decide how heavy automobile bumpers must be.

The story would be funny if it did not demonstrate with such melancholy clarity how far we have drifted toward the arms of Big Brother. Thousands of man hours and millions of dollars in tax funds already have been frittered away in this particular assault upon the principles of a free society. And the end is not in sight.

Back in 1972, you may recall, Congress fell into one of its periodic spasms of consumerism, and thus enacted the Motor Vehicle Information and Cost Savings Act. The law directed the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to make various studies, gather certain data, and then impose a mandatory bumper standard upon the automobile industry.

The law, you will perceive, has nothing whatever to do with safety. It deals entirely with costs. The idea was to protect the consumer from the burdens of the body shop. Somehow, no one paid much attention to the other side of the proposition, to wit, that heavy bumpers would add to both the weight and the price of a car, and to its gasoline consumption also.

A few members, but only a few, grasped the fundamental question: What earthly business is it of the federal government to decree what kind of bumpers we must have? Sen. Robert Griffin of Michigan called the act "mischievous meddling with the free market system."

Robert McClory of Illinois, in the House, protested that the law constituted "governmental interference in private industry the like of which... we have never had before." Anyhow, the bill became law. Without bothering to make a serious study, the highway administration simply imposed an impact protection standard of 5 miles per hour. Before long it became apparent that in terms of a cost/benefit ratio, the act was not producing a millennium after all. Recovering from its Naderite convulsions, Congress in 1978 ordered new tests over a range of possibly lower standards.

The highway administration dragged its feet. Administrator Joan Claybrook cherished the 5-mile bumper. It was her baby, and she loved it. But in February of last year, Ms. Claybrook produced a preliminary cost/benefit study. Behold! The government's own figures indicated that consumers could save between $720 and $898 million a year, including the savings of millions of gallons of gasoline, if the standard were lowered from 5 miles to 2.5 miles.

In the teeth of these findings, Ms. Claybrook would not budge. Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd badgered her. No luck. A crash test program was undertaken in Phoenix. A nosy bystander complained that the tests were rigged: The test supervisors had put bumper guards on the 5-mile Plymouth Volare bumpers but not on the 2.5 Volare bumpers. The administration's response, on March 23, was to throw the nosy bum out of the test grounds. Congressman James Scheuer of New York termed the unequal testing "offensive to basic standards of equity, as well as professionalism."

Howard Dugoff, deputy administrator, conceded that he shared Scheuer's view "as to the stupidity of it."

Subsequently other flaws in the Phoenix study became evident. Some vehicles were re-crashed without repairing them. Absurd results appeared. A Chevrolet Malibu was crashed three times. One appraiser put the damage after the second crash at $929, but after the third crash at only $846. Some test. But by using a phony figure of 73 cents a

Other Editors Say Budget Matters

(The Chapel Hill Newspaper)

The Chapel Hill Town Council and Mayor Joe Nassif appear to be living up to a Nassif campaign promise: examining and setting desired levels of town services early in the budget-making process.

One of their early decisions - to trim bureaucracy in the town Human Services Department - is one we applaud. For some time, many citizens have wondered whether it is appropriate for the town to fund a social service department to the tune of $200,000 a year. The new council has apparently decided that town employees must make a good case for some of these "human services" in order to continue the past few years' level of funding.

But another circumstance makes this a propitious time to streamline the budget in every way possible. Town Manager Gene Shipman has warned that we face a 19 percent increase in the tax rate for the upcoming year. Councilors may be finding such an increase politically unpalatable; taxpayers would certainly find it financially unpalatable.

Eliminating administrative costs by shifting some human service functions to other town departments is an excellent and obvious solution. We hope the sharp eyes that can discern luxuries among necessities will remain fixed on the budget until it is adopted in June. Each town department should have to stand up under the same scrutiny.

But regarding Human Services, perhaps other questions should be asked. Is the council convinced that town social workers do jobs that cannot be done by Orange County social workers or by Joint Orange-Chatham Community Action? Not even magnificent Chapel Hillians want to pay twice for the same service.

Does the manager have ways to judge the effectiveness of Human Services' work? If so, we taxpayers would like to hear his verdict. We can see when our garbage is picked up, when our buses are full or empty and when our fires are put out. But many of us are untouched by Human Services' work. This, of course, is appropriate; but we'd still like to know the department's achievements in more detail.

Strength For Today

REFORMING THE WORLD

We all feel that if we had a chance to reform the world we could make a pretty good job of it. As part of our efforts, perhaps many of us would throw many people out of the high positions of power they occupy.

Unfortunately, such an approach would in the end be self-defeating. Actually, the place to begin a program of reform is with ourselves. When we do that, we will begin to see that we are often, if not usually, as self-interested and shortsighted as those we criticize. If we ourselves were put into positions of power, without the special help of God, we would probably act in much the same fashion. And we would come to see how hard a job the Lord has on his hands in reforming the world by observing how hard it is for reformation to begin in us.

World reformation is not hopeless, but it is difficult. And we should not forget where it starts. Someone has expressed it in these words: "Lord, reform the world, beginning with me."

A Landslide Is Essential

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
BOSTON (AP) - Winning isn't everything for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy today. He's up against the numbers game in his home primary election, and he needs a landslide to beat it.

Anything less would do nothing to impress the politicians and potential contributors who are waiting to be shown that the Democratic challenger really can topple President Carter.

So far, they've seen Kennedy lose four times to Carter, and try to explain away defeats by claiming headway and saying that contests to come are the really significant ones.

That won't work in Massachusetts. A defeat - which neither Kennedy nor anyone else expects - would finish him as a presidential candidate, and would embolden rivals to test him in the 1982 Senate election.

A narrow victory would offer only survival, for a showdown contest with Carter in Illinois on March 18. Before they get there, the president is virtually certain to add three more states to his win column. Alabama, Florida and Carter's Georgia hold primaries next Tuesday, and Kennedy already has written them off.

the challenger hopes for a respectable showing there.

Kennedy said he is confident he will win in Massachusetts, but wouldn't talk about the margin. "A win is a win," he said.

That's not the way the Kennedy camp defined it when Carter won narrowly in Maine. Gov. Joseph Brennan said Kennedy had won there by coming close. And in New Hampshire, Kennedy said he had gained a bigger share of the vote in losing last Tuesday than Carter got in winning four years ago. Therefore, Kennedy said, smiling, he was claiming victory.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said everyone he has talked with expects a Kennedy victory by 8 to 18 percentage points.

Carter campaigners are trying the same play the Kennedy camp used in earlier contests, contending that the Massachusetts senator will be the loser if he cannot roll up a huge margin. David L. Flynn, the Carter chairman, said Kennedy would have to get 75 percent of the vote "to show the rest of the country that he's back in the race."

That's a bit heavy, but there is a record on which to measure Kennedy's home-state strength - the margins in prior contests. Carter beat Kennedy two-to-one in Iowa, won by 3.4 percentage points in Maine, and captured New Hampshire's primary by a 10 point margin.

In addition, Carter is bidding for a third New England victory in the Vermont primary today. The Kennedy camp says only that

Bruce The Bold

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent
RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) - Bruce the Bold has done it again.

The puffy faced little beggar is smiling his maloccluded smile of defiance at me from a low branch of the big maple outside my window. Those shifty black eyes are blinking at me in puckish malice. Sometimes he even does a complete turn about and wags his bushy tail at me in rather vulgar rhumba rhythms.

Bruce the Bold, an old adversary, has made another raid on my bird feeder. The no-longer-scrawny gray squirrel takes an obvious delight in his unprincipled behavior. Even if I left some food out for him, and he should live so long, he would prefer piracy to welfare.

Four or five times a day he comes darting along the telephone wires, grabs a vine like Tarzan in his prehensile paws and does a flying high wire leap right onto the top of my cedar shake bird feeder which is suspended on a wire from a dogwood branch.

There he perches, greedily stuffing his jowls with sunflower seed and other delicacies procured at great effort and expense for our feathered friends, until I devise some means of driving him off. It's getting more difficult as the winter wears on.

A sharp rap on the window pane once was enough to send Bruce scurrying off. But not for long. This unscrupulous predator soon realized that no affirmative action would follow the warning rap, so he just clung there unperturbed, grinning his toothy grin.

Next I tried yelling out the window at him, wild primeval howls out of Edgar Rice Burrows. These had no effect on Bruce the second or third time around but almost flushed two linemen for the county out of a cherry picker down the road.

I think when I started beating a huge Chinese gong and resorted to a water pistol I borrowed off a local urchin, they were on the verge of calling for the men with the butterfly nets.

The water pistol he seemed to enjoy, even on the few occasions when I zapped him with a direct hit. The sport of it seemed to appeal to his cheating heart. He delighted in playing the role of moving target, although as the weather got colder he made his getaway as soon as he heard the window being opened.

Yesterday I tried lying in wait for Bruce in the bushes, the way the neighbor's cat crouches down to ambush the birds from the pachysandra. Unfortunately the man from Connecticut Power & Light came by just then to read the meter on the outside of the house near the bird feeder.

I mumbled something about hunting for a contact lens, which I don't wear, and brushed myself off in some confusion and embarrassment. He seemed to be in a hurry to get about his business.

There was Bruce chortling from atop a fence post and stuffing his high cheek boned face with my bird feed.

Uncle Sam The Business Man

By GLENN RITT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - The federal government today is the largest electric power producer, the largest insurer, the largest lender, the largest landlord, the largest warehouse operator, the largest shipowner and the largest truckfleet operator.

"For a country which is the citadel and the world's principal exponent of private enterprise and individual initiative, this is rather an amazing list."

That statement was made in 1954 by Rowland R. Hughes, President Eisenhower's chief budget adviser.

The list has grown considerably since then, with bewildering implications for this country's small businesses, says a justreleased study prepared for the Carter administration.

That study concludes that small business could gain more than $2 billion and taxpayers could save nearly $3 billion if the federal government didn't compete so heavily against private companies.

"At a time when small business faces unprecedented problems with inflation, high interest rates, regulation and capital formation, it comes as a shock to find that one of the gravest threats to small business comes from its own government," says Dale Nelson, a Des Moines, Iowa businessman who chaired the Task Force on Government Competition.

Currently, the federal government engages in more than 21,000 commercial and industrial activities at a cost of $10 billion a year, the report says.

These ventures range from travel agencies to laboratory testing services, and from retailing to day-care centers.

The task force was particularly critical of the U.S. Postal Service, which is initiating its own express mail service. "This move would compete with small couriers nationwide and would cost $1 million in advertising alone, but only produce $250,000 in revenues during the first year," the study said.

It also blasted the U.S. military exchange systems, which conduct about $9 billion a year in business.

These exchanges were created to provide necessities to isolated posts for low-paid military personnel. But now, the exchanges are frequently patronized by retired officers and dependents and many others who might not need such subsidized benefits, the report says.

Witnesses testifying at task force hearings said virtually no consumer product is exempt from sale at these exchanges, which are situated in many areas that are anything but isolated.

The task force concluded that private local businesses are undercut by these exchanges which, under exemptions from antitrust laws, can purchase merchandise directly from manufacturers at lower costs.

The study also noted that military exchanges are exempt from charging sales tax and can establish deferred payment plans at little or no interest.

Drug Companies Gear Up For Anti-Virus Product

NEW YORK (AP) — Spurred by a potential market that may include anyone from common cold sufferers to cancer victims, drug companies are gearing up to produce interferon, a potent natural anti-virus and anti-cancer drug.

G.D. Searle & Co. of Chicago today was announcing the largest clinical test yet of "fibroblast" interferon, a type not yet extensively studied.

The test, involving 30 cancer patients at M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute in Houston, will begin in a month, Searle said.

Last week, Abbott Laboratories of Chicago said it was boosting its production of fibroblast interferon.

More than a dozen firms now are planning to make one or more of the several kinds of interferon known, according to Neilson Schneider, drug industry analyst for the investment firm E.F. Hutton.

Initial investments already may have reached $50 million to $100 million, unusual for a new, unproved drug, he said.

"If the drug works the way some people think it does, you could be talking about the fore-runner of a line of products with an impact like antibiotics, which have a $15 billion market worldwide with a lot more than a dozen companies involved," Schneider added.

Interferon, discovered in 1957, is a potent enemy of viruses like herpes, hepatitis and even the common cold. More recently, scientists found it also seems to help — but usually not cure — some cancers.

Work with the substance so far has been preliminary and experimental because it is scarce and expensive.

Leukocyte interferon, made from white blood cells from blood donors, costs about $50 per million units, and the average treatment involves hundreds of millions of units. Leukocyte interferon, the type most frequently studied, is being used by the American Cancer Society in its current test with 150 cancer patients.

breast cancer, multiple myeloma, cancer of bone marrow, or lymphoma, cancer of lymph tissue.

Azarnoff said Searle also is building a $12 million pilot plant in High Wycombe, England, to make fibroblast interferon and other biological products either from tissue cultures or from vats of bacteria altered by recombinant DNA techniques.

Although there are great similarities between a camera and a human eye's mechanism for "taking pictures", there is one striking difference called accommodation. The lens of a camera may be moved closer to or farther from the film's surface to obtain a clear focus. However, the lens of the human eye is plant, it retains its almost flat form to focus on the nearly parallel light rays of a far away object or can be contracted to change the lens' form to one more convex. The highly refractive power of the convex lens can accommodate and thereby focus highly divergent light rays of an object close to the eye.

When focusing and clarity become a visual problem, then corrective eyewear is often the result. When upon your eye exam you receive a prescription for corrective eyewear, you should then focus your attention on CLEAR VUE OPTICIANS, 1705 6th St., Physicians Quadrangle Building A, 752-1446. Our capable staff will professionally prepare the corrective eyewear in accordance with the prescription while assisting you in the selection of the frames that will compliment your fashion as well as your pocket-book.

OPTICAL TIP: Always carry your eyeglass prescription in case of loss or accident, especially on vacation.

Insisting On Vote Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican leaders say they will go to the mat with House Democrats to keep alive an investigation into the effect of vote-buying on a Louisiana congressional election.

Republicans fired the first salvo in the battle Monday when Rep. Bud Shuster, R-Pa., said ending the investigation at this time "will be yet another example of the majority party sweeping allegations of wrongdoing under the rug."

Shuster, chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, emphasized that Republicans were not accusing the winner of that election, Rep. Claude Leach, D-La., of wrongdoing but were saying that a Democratic attempt to end the House inquiry was "absolutely incredible" and should be stopped.

Leach was acquitted of any involvement in the scheme but a Justice Department investigation has so far resulted in 24 convictions of others.

The House Administration Committee, voting along party lines, has recommended the probe be dropped. The committee concluded there was evidence that 58 votes were bought but said that was not enough to reverse the election.

Leach defeated Jimmy Wilson, a Republican, by 266 votes but Wilson claimed that at least 440 votes for Leach were bought and asked the House to reverse the outcome.

Committee officials hoped to bring the question before the full House today.

Aardvarks Need Queen

WESTFIELD, N.J. (AP) — The New Jersey-based American Association of Aardvark Aficionados is searching for its second annual queen of the hill — Miss American Aardvark.

Tired of seeing the long-snouted critter relegated to crossword puzzles, the AAAA has declared March 2-8 National Aardvark Week.

Women vying for the crown will have an aardvark-calling contest Friday at the Philadelphia Zoo, AAAA president Robert Bogart said Monday.

The contestants will also write essays on why they'd want the title and will try to coax 16-year old Archie the aardvark from his cage.

Last year's queen was also the only contestant, Margaret Hoyert, a 19-year-old University of Maryland student, Bogart said.

Miss Hoyert's winning essay said she wanted the title because of a strange experience — while jogging, an aardvark wearing tennis shoes ran past her — Bogart says.

National Aardvark Week is held midway between Ground Hog Day and April Fool's Day, he says, because "that seems appropriate."

gallon for unleaded gasoline as a factor in the cost/benefit ratio, the highway administration in June produced a study to protect its 5-mile decree. The Senate, unimpressed, voted unanimously in July to have a 2.5 standard instead.

The House has not acted upon the towering question. The administration refuses to retreat. Conferees will fight it out. And perhaps at some point, some still small voice will ask: Why decree any mandatory standard at all?

Antabuse Can Help the Alcoholic

I recall that you once wrote about the drug Antabuse being able to cure alcoholism. We have just learned that my brother is an alcoholic and I wonder if this is a drug he could use. We are desperate for help. — Mrs. D.L., Tenn. Dear Mrs. L.:

Let me immediately point out that Antabuse, a trade name for disulfiram, is not a cure for alcoholism. Rather, it is a specialized additional approach to the problem. Often it is used in conjunction with other forms of treatment. Basically, Antabuse is used to control any impulse to have a drink. Long ago, an interesting observation was made in Denmark. People working in a rubber industry and exposed to disulfiram were found to develop an increased sensitivity to alcohol. Studies were then made for the potential use of disulfiram to control alcoholism.

When alcoholics are first given the drug they are warned with repeated emphasis that the combination of Antabuse and even the slightest amount of alcohol can produce the most unpleasant reactions. Within minutes after drinking alcohol, the alcoholic can develop nausea, vomiting, sweating, dizziness, difficulty in breathing and pains in the chest.

With the intake of larger amounts of alcohol, far more serious problems can result. Cardiovascular collapse, convulsions and even death are possibilities.

Unless one is psychologically prepared to completely abstain from all alcohol, Antabuse can be a real danger. By "all" alcohol I mean even the amount that is used in cough medicine or the slight amount that might be hidden in a dessert.

Disulfiram is a useful drug among people who are well motivated to control their addiction. With psychological help and with the guidance of Alcoholics Anonymous, the advantages can be great. Yet it must be used only under the direct supervision of a doctor who has carefully and completely explained to the patient its benefits and its dangers.

Is gout a form of arthritis? — Mr. F.F., Mo. Dear Mr. F.:

It definitely is. It is estimated that there are more than 100 different diseases that can affect the joints, muscles and ligaments of the body.

Arthritis is a very complicated and diffuse problem. Osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis are only two of its major sub-groupings. Gout is another form of arthritis.

The disorder of gout is associated with high levels of uric acid in the bloodstream. People with this gouty tendency can now keep it under control with diets and a variety of excellent medicines.

The control and cure of arthritis has baffled doctors for centuries. Today, the science of immunology is concentrating its efforts on the prevention and ultimate eradication of this disease.

Bank Robber's Picture Enough; Surrenders

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — It was chitchat between old acquaintances who happened to meet in an Anchorage bank. "So what are you doing for a living now?" Carl Roehle asked 22-year-old Robert L. Langsdale, who Roehle once knew in Homer, Alaska. "Robbing banks," came the reply. Sunday morning, Roehle was awakened by a friend who asked if he had seen his picture in the newspaper, over a story with a headline: "Bank robber may have had accomplice." The photo, taken by a security camera at the Spenard branch of the National Bank of Alaska, showed Roehle talking to Langsdale as they walked through the bank Friday evening. One of the man put his hand in his coat pocket, pretended to have a gun and made off with an undisclosed sum of money, authorities said. In distributing the picture to news media, the FBI said the man later identified as Langsdale had actually gone to the teller window. Neither man was identified. Agent Robert W. Carter said authorities didn't know if both were involved in the heist. But Roehle knew. Boy did he know! And, after verifying his co-starring role on Page One, he contacted authorities. While Roehle was telling agents that Langsdale was merely someone he had once known, Langsdale was calling Anchorage police. He, too, had seen the story and three-column picture and wanted to give himself up. He was arrested on federal charges of bank robbery. Roehle, a warehouseman for an airline catering company, said he "got a lot of strange looks" when he showed up for work Monday. "It was kind of comical," he said in recalling his meeting with Langsdale. "I went into the bank and saw him. We shook hands, talked for a few minutes, then went about our business and left about the same time." Roehle said that while he was not particularly happy about the FBI's reference to his possible complicity to the robbery, he was not overly worried about his newspaper exposure. "I thought it was a pretty good picture, myself," he said.

Carter Says U.S. Mistakenly Voted For Resolution In UN

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter says the United States mistakenly voted for a U.N. resolution against Israeli settlements in occupied Arab territories because of a misunderstanding about exactly what the resolution said. Specifically, Carter said the U.S. action stemmed from a faulty belief that references to Jerusalem had been deleted from the resolution before the final vote. The unusual clarification statement, issued on behalf of the president late Monday night, came amid Israeli complaints that the U.S. vote amounted to a significant policy shift. Carter denied that. "I want to make it clear that the vote ... does not represent a change in our position regarding the Israeli settlements in the occupied areas nor regarding the status of Jerusalem," his statement said. The administration has made it clear previously that it does not condone new Israeli settlements in occupied Arab territory. The U.N. resolution went further, however, and called for dismantling existing Israeli settlements. In his statement, Carter said:

"While our opposition to the establishment of the Israeli settlements is longstanding and well known, we made strenuous efforts to eliminate the language with reference to the dismantling of settlements in the resolution. This call for dismantling was neither proper nor practical. We believe that the future disposition of existing settlements must be determined during the current autonomy negotiations."

Nonetheless, reporters were told the administration was willing to accept the resolution's language on dismantling because it wanted to send Israel a strong signal of U.S. dissatisfaction with Israeli settlement policies. The same officials emphasized, however, that the United States never intended to accept any reference to Jerusalem that equated its status with that of occupied Arab territories on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip. "The United States vote in the United Nations was approved with the understanding that all references to Jerusalem would be deleted," Carter said. "The failure to communicate this clearly resulted in a vote in favor of the resolution rather than abstention."

Taxpayers Still Stung

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — State lawmakers who like to lecture on the evils of bureaucratic spending are using more than $40,000 from taxpayers for hundreds of congratulatory resolutions. So far during the 91st General Assembly, they've lauded basketball teams, football squads, softball clubs, marching bands, beauty queens, friends, relatives and themselves in 767 resolutions. Legislative Services says the honors, including pay for staffers and mailing costs, average $51.73 each. "And that's a conservative figure," one official said.

Sen. Victor Ashe, R-Knoxville, leads the proclamation parade with 75, including birthday bests to 10 senators and one representative. A resolution by Rep. Mike Murphy, D-Nashville, marked the 125th anniversary of the birth of Sherlock Holmes. Rep. Frank Buck, D-Smithville, honored a couple's 50th wedding anniversary and, Rep. Tom Wheeler, D-Clinton, praised a couple for reaching their first. Wheeler also praised the girls who captured Campbell County's titles for Little Miss Talent, Ideal Miss Talent, Miss La Petite, Ideal Miss, Our Little Miss and Miss Personality Plus for 1979. Two Republicans from Knoxville have introduced a resolution asking "House members to refrain from introducing frivolous resolutions." That proposal was referred to Rules committees.

Claim Key Evidence In Rosenberg Trial Unused

WASHINGTON (AP) — Key evidence in the controversial spy trial of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg was never submitted in court because U.S. officials did not want to reveal they had deciphered a Soviet code, according to excerpts from a new book on the CIA. The Rosenbergs were executed in 1953 — the first Americans sentenced to death for espionage by a U.S. civil court. Their trial became "one of the most disputed court cases of the century, in part because the government, hoping to protect its most secret source, never introduced one of the most damaging pieces of evidence, against them: the decoded traffic from the New York-to-Moscow channel," writes David C. Martin in "Wilderness of Mirrors," to be published later this month by Harper & Row. "If made public, the evidence contained in the intercepts would have stilled much of the controversy surrounding not only the Rosenberg trial but several other espionage cases as well," Martin writes.

The Armed Forces Security Agency broke the Soviet cipher in 1945, Martin writes, and "one of the first Soviet spies to be undone ... was the German-born physicist Klaus Fuchs." Fuchs implicated Harry Gold, a naturalized American citizen of Russian parentage. Gold's confession led ultimately to the arrest, conviction and execution of the Rosenbergs of New York. The Soviets learned the code had been broken in 1950, according to a 10,000-word excerpt from Martin's book that appears in the April issue of Playboy being distributed today. Martin is a Newsweek magazine reporter who has covered the CIA since 1974 for The Associated Press and Newsweek. Much of his information came from files obtained under the Freedom of Information Act and interviews with former agency employees, he said.

The resolution, passed 15-0 last Saturday, repeatedly refers to "Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem." A breakdown in communications between the administration in Washington and the office of U.N. Ambassador Donald McHenry in New York appeared to be at the heart of the controversy. Administration officials would make no public comments on that aspect of the matter Monday night.

Object To Jurors In Drug Ring Trial

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Defense attorneys in the trial of 16 persons charged in connection with the operation of a heroin ring have filed a motion seeking the dismissal of jurors. The attorneys said they are not pleased with the two jurors — a white man and a white woman — who were selected during a three-week process. They said government lawyers have used their peremptory challenges to keep blacks off the jury. Each side started the selection process with 96 peremptory challenges, and the state has used 39 while the defense has used 38. A prosecutor or defense attorney can eliminate a prospective juror from consideration without giving a reason when he uses a peremptory challenge. The defense wants the selection process to begin again. Superior Court Judge Donald L. Smith of Raleigh has not indicated when he will rule on the motion to dismiss the jurors, which was filed last week. The defendants are accused of taking part in a billion-dollar heroin ring that was allegedly linked to convicted heroin smuggler Leslie "Ike" Atkinson.

The defendants include Atkinson's sister, Nettie Pearl Atkinson Parks, 52, and her husband, Matthew P. Parks, 61, of New York. They are accused of being involved in a heroin conspiracy from 1969 through March 1979. Prosecutors say the drug was imported from Thailand. Jury selection for the trial stared with a panel of 600 persons from Sampson County. When court recessed on Friday, more than 150 persons had been eliminated. Court was postponed Monday because of snow.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5, 1980

YOUR DAILY Horoscope
from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: You are able to conclude arrangements with others during the early part of the day and the afternoon and evening are splendid for putting these changes into effect. Make a campaign of action suitable to your talents.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) If you comprehend the ideas and needs of associates, you can then carry through efficiently and gain their backing. Seek outside help.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) You have some good ideas for economizing. Make a campaign of action and then go ahead with it. Seek help from co-workers.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Try to please a loved one before getting involved in a heavy workload. Work at a regulated pace for best results.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Improve home conditions before you consider a social invitation. Take your time in reaching a decision. Don't be impulsive.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Don't neglect answering correspondence any longer or you invite trouble. If you make a promise be sure to keep it.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Your plans will be better if you contact the proper persons for advice. Don't put off any longer making the necessary repairs to your home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Plan early how to gain personal aims and then go after them in a positive way and gain them. Meet people who can help you in the future.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Ideal day to make plans to gain your personal aims and then put your efforts to work. Think of loved ones first.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Have those talks with others that can be helpful to you in business or personal life. Enjoy the company of good friends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) A bigwig is willing to support you in a career affair. Good friends can also be helpful. Don't neglect credit affairs.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Study new conditions you want to set up and then contact higher-ups who can give you support. Start plans for a trip you will take.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Forget the social for now and concentrate on unfinished projects. Get more information about newcomers before you deal with them.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY ... he or she will possess a strange charm that pleases everyone and the life will be easy. But upon reaching adult life, your progeny will want to accomplish a good deal, so prepare early for it. Be careful others do not spoil this child. Teach the value of money early in life.

Didn't Dance At Disco Opening

TOKYO (AP) — She didn't disco, but Margaret Trudeau, estranged wife of Canada's prime minister designate, graced the opening of the "Night Street" disco in downtown Tokyo. The owners of the disco in Roppongi, a nightclub and restaurant section, had said Mrs. Trudeau would be paid $20,000 to attend the Monday night opening. About 100 reporters and photographers jammed the club to see her disco, but Mrs. Trudeau, accompanied by her sister Janet Sinclair, stayed for a while and left without dancing.

Schedules Wednesday Trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon, who moved to Manhattan's upper East Side last month, is off for a short trip to Paris and the Ivory Coast on Wednesday. In Paris, he'll visit the European publishers of his new book, "The Real War," due out in May. He also will be interviewed by Now Magazine, which bought the British serialization rights. The story won't appear until excerpts are released.

Govm't Will Buy Grain Abscam Sees 2 Indictments

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland announced today plans to buy up to 13 million metric tons of wheat and corn, part of the grain that President Carter two months ago embargoed from delivery to the Soviet Union.

Officials said the purchases will involve up to 4.25 million metric tons of wheat and up to 9 million of corn. The purchases will be made "at prevailing market prices" from country elevators and, in some cases, farmers themselves.

No costs were announced, but at current farm prices the purchases could total as much as $1.4 billion, including about $819 million for the corn and $582 million for the wheat.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat or 39.4 bushels of corn.

Most recently, according to USDA, wheat at the farm has been selling for about $3.74 a bushel or approximately $137 a metric ton. Corn, at $2.32 a bushel, is equal to about $91 a ton at the farm.

Bergland said formal offers by the department's Commodity Credit Corp. to buy the wheat will be made on Friday, March 7.

Another official said corn offers possibly would be made next week. All offers will be handled by the agency's commodity office in Kansas City, Kan.

NEW YORK (AP) — A U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service investigator and a Long Island businessman face charges of bribery in the first indictments stemming from the FBI's Abscam investigation.

The men are charged in an alleged scheme to secure permanent resident status for an alien.

A three-count indictment returned Monday by a federal grand jury in Brooklyn, accused Alexander A. Alexandro, Jr., 30, of Commack, N.Y., an INS criminal investigator, and Alfred Carpentier, 54, of East Meadow, N.Y., a businessman, of receiving bribes, conspiracy to commit bribery. Carpentier was accused of aiding and abetting Alexandro. Alexandro was also accused with conflict of interest in violation of his official duties.

The indictment was announced by Edward R. Korman, U.S. District Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, and Thomas P. Puccio, special attorney in charge of the federally Organized Crime Strike Force in Brooklyn. Much of the Abscam investigation is being handled by Puccio's office.

Both men refused to identify the foreigner who was seeking resident status. They would not say exactly how the indictments were related to any alleged wrongdoing by members of Congress or other who have been implicated in the FBI investigation code-named Abscam.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices fell sharply today as hopes continued to ebb on Wall Street for any strong new government measures against inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 7.17 to 847.18 in the first half hour.

Losers outnumbered gainers by a 2-1 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The market rallied late last week amid speculation that the Carter administration was planning some new anti-inflation actions, such as credit controls.

But as the weekend, and then Monday, passed without any announcement of such measures, selling pressure intensified in both the stock and bond markets.

This morning, Chase Manhattan Bank of New York raised its prime lending rate from 16 1/2% to a record high of 17 1/2%. Other banks were expected to post increases soon in the basic rate on loans to blue-chip customers.

Today's early prices included Tenneco, down 1/4 at 39 1/2; American Home Products, up 1/4 at 24 1/2; and DuPont, unchanged at 37 1/2.

On Monday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 8.79 to 854.35, erasing Friday's 8.70 gain.

Declines outnumbered advances by close to a 2-1 margin on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 38.69 million shares, against 38.81 million the day before.

The NYSE's composite index lost 60 to 64.35.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 2.10 at 301.38.

mentioned that N.C. 11 north and south of Ayden — toward Greenville and Kingston — had been cleared with one lane open on each side of the highway, but that extreme care was necessary for safe travel.

The Bethel spokesman also described roads as "terrible, with people cautioned not to attempt driving unless absolutely necessary. Most people here are walking to work, very few are attempting to drive." The only cleared areas are those east and west of town on U.S. 64, and partially on N.C. 11-13 from Bethel to Greenville.

Farmville dealt with three rescue calls due to pregnancies and was able to transport the patrons to Pitt Memorial Hospital without undue problems. In Farmville, main streets were somewhat cleared, but side streets were impassable.

The only fire reported from any localities was one that occurred in Grifton late Sunday night. Several rescue calls were answered — one for a stroke victim, others for pregnancies. Queen Street was passable, with other streets still in uncleared condition.

The Winterville spokesman noted that the condition there is a repeat of other places, with main arteries usable, and side streets impassable. The spokesman noted that rescue calls were taken care of with assistance from volunteers with four-wheel drive vehicles and with assistance also from the sheriff's department.

GM Is Idling More Plants

DETROIT (AP) — Some 6,500 production workers from three car and truck assembly plants will be laid off because of slow sales, General Motors Corp. says.

Backlogs of slow-selling midsize cars and pickup trucks have forced the closing of two plants through the remainder of the model year, the automaker reported Monday.

GM's surprise announcement came only 10 days after the No. 1 automaker announced with some fanfare at the Chicago Auto Show that it would recall 15,000 workers to boost production by restoration of second shifts at two plants and assembly line speedups at two others.

A spokesman who did not want to be named said those recalls still would take place.

GM said it would close its assembly plant in South Gate, Calif., on March 21 and the one in Lakewood, Ga., on March 14, both for the remainder of the 1980 model year. The indefinite layoffs also affect a plant in Flint, Mich.

In addition, temporary layoffs will hit plants in St. Louis, Janesville, Wis., and Pontiac, Mich., GM said. The automaker had no layoff breakdown for those plants.

Ford In, Or Out In April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gerald Ford's chief aide says that by April, Ford either will be in presidential politics up to his ears or he will be out of them forever.

"By the first of April you are going to know where Jerry Ford is," said Bob Barrett. "Jerry Ford is going to be blown off the scope volitionally or Jerry Ford is going to be formidable."

Until last weekend, the former president maintained he is not interested in running but that he would accept a genuine draft from the Republican Party.

But he went a little further in an interview with the New York Times, saying Ronald Reagan cannot win because he is too conservative. Ford said he will decide by April 1 whether to jump into the race to provide a more moderate alternative.

Reagan's response was that "we'd all like to see him pack his long johns and come out here on the primary trail with us." Gov. Richard Snelling of Vermont, a supporter of Sen. Howard Baker since Ford declined a spot on today's ballot, said Monday that Ford would make the best president.

The mathematics of the situation, as well as the politics of it, dictate that Ford had better hurry with his decision.

Of the 36 states holding Republican primary contests this year, 17 already have closed their books to the entry of candidates or have held their primaries. That means 774 delegates already unavailable to Ford, except for a handful of uncommitteds.

All-Americans King Named To Team

Mark Aguirre

NEW YORK (AP) — Mark Aguirre, a stocky, power forward favorably compared with the best players in DePaul history and mountainous Joe Barry Carroll, Purdue's tower of strength at center, were among those named today to The Associated Press All-America college basketball team for 1979-80.

Joining those two gifted frontcourt players on the first team were guards Darrell Griffith of Louisville and Kentucky's Kyle Macy, along with forward Albert King of Maryland.

The 7-foot-1 Carroll was a Third Team selection last year, while the others made their first appearance among the nation's top 15.

Duke's Mike Gminski was the Second Team center for the second straight season, flanked by LaSalle's Michael Brooks and Washington State's Don Collins at the forward positions and St. John's Reggie Carter and Oregon State's Ray Blume in the backcourt.

The Third Team included Ohio State's Herb Williams at center, Mississippi's John Stroud and Drake's Lewis Lloyd at forwards and Marquette's Sam Worthen and Kansas State's Rolando Blackman at the guards.

The team was selected by a nationwide panel of AP writers. The 6-foot-7 Aguirre, the only sophomore on the First Team, was the heart of a DePaul club that rolled up a 26-game winning streak and sat atop The AP poll for most of the year.

Coach Ray Meyer describes the beefy Aguirre, who also has played some guard this year, as his "O-fensive Machine" and is quick to point out: "He may be the best all-around ballplayer to come to DePaul." That includes, of course, the great George Mikan, one of the sport's premier big men in the 1940s. Aguirre averaged 27 points, eight rebounds and three assists a game.

The 240-pound Carroll is a late-bloomer who came into his own in his junior year last season. His talents are multifaceted: he shoots as well as any big man in the college game, blocks shots with elan and rebounds with uncommon ferocity. The player they call "Rocky Mountain High" for his Denver origins, was among the Big Ten's leading scorers all season, averaging 22 points in addition to 10 rebounds a game.

The 6-4 Griffith, a senior, is the biggest operator of Louisville's so-called "Doctors of Dunk." A lot of Griffith's game is concentrated above the basket, which he virtually owns with his eye-popping dunk shots.

Louisville's all-time leading scorer averaged 23 points on 56 per cent shooting from the field, along with five rebounds and three assists a game for the Metro Conference champions.

"He's been our stabilizing force throughout the year," said Louisville Coach Denny Crum. "When things get tough, he always comes through for us."

DePaul Remains No. 1

By TOM CANAVAN Associated Press Writer DePaul, which saw its quest for an undefeated regular season stopped by Notre Dame 76-74 in double overtime last week, nevertheless maintained the No.1 ranking in the final Associated Press college basketball poll for the 1979-1980 season.

The Blue Demons, who had held the top spot the past seven weeks — six times as the unanimous choice — collected 54 of 59 first-place votes and 1,173 points out of a perfect score of 1,180 in the balloting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. DePaul closed out a 26-1 regular season with a 97-81 victory over intrastate rival Illinois State in its other game last week.

Louisville, which captured the Metro 7 Conference tournament last weekend, edged newly crowned Southeastern Conference tournament champion Louisiana State for the No.2 position. The Cardinals, ranked fourth last week, were tabbed twice for first place and received 1,030 points — 12 more than the Tigers, who picked up one first-place vote in advancing two notches in this week's poll.

Kentucky, regular season SEC champs but beaten by LSU in the SEC tournament title game, collected the final two first-place votes and 956 points in slipping from No.2 to No.4.

Oregon State, the Pacific-10 champion, moved up one place and took over the No.5 position with 872 points. Syracuse, ranked third last week when it was surprised by Georgetown, D.C., in the Big East Conference tournament title game, fell to sixth with 785 points.

Preseason favorite and Big Ten champion Indiana, unranked three weeks ago but peaking with the return of forward Mike Woodson, jumped from No.13 to No.7 with 746 points. Maryland, No.7 a week ago, was next with 722 points while Notre Dame and Ohio State rounded out the Top 10.

diana, Notre Dame, Arizona State, Weber State, Clemson, Purdue, North Carolina State and Georgetown.

Duke, ending a one-week absence from the poll, and Iona, making its first appearance this season, are the newcomers to this week's poll. They replace Clemson and North Carolina State, who both suffered defeats in last week's ACC tournament.

All 20 poll members will compete in the upcoming National Collegiate Athletic Association national championship tournament.

Table with 3 columns: Rank, Team, Points. Includes DePaul (54), Louisville (2), Louisiana St. (1), Kentucky (2), Oregon St., Syracuse, Indiana, Maryland, Notre Dame, Ohio St., Georgetown, D.C., Brigham Young, St. John's, N.Y., Duke, North Carolina, Missouri, Weber St., Arizona St., Iona, Purdue.

Unique Situation Attracts Foster

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Duke University basketball coach Bill Foster, the newly designated head basketball coach at the University of South Carolina, says he accepted the South Carolina offer because "it's a unique coaching situation."

Foster, whose appointment was officially announced at a Monday news conference, said he was attracted by South Carolina's status as an independent.

He told newsmen that he believes he will enjoy having more room in the team's schedule, as opposed to "18 or 19 games locked in" by virtue of conference membership. Duke is a member of the Atlantic Coast Conference, South Carolina has been unaffiliated since dropping out of the ACC in 1971.

But Foster said he would adapt to circumstances if the school's board of trustees follows through on its already expressed interest in joining a "comprehensive" athletic conference.

"I generally do what the university feels is right. It's my job to fit in," he said.

Foster, 49, replaces retiring Coach Frank McGuire, who gave up the Gamecock reins after university trustees agreed to buy out the four years remaining on his contract for $400,000.

McGuire did not attend the news conference. Foster said he also made the switch because "I like the area" and because of the school's reputation for booking nationally televised games with national basketball powers, such as Marquette and Notre Dame.

But Foster emphasized that for the moment, his first loyalty is to his Duke team, holder of this season's ACC title.

The Blue Devils, who nabbed the league championship one other time during Foster's six-year tenure at Duke, play Saturday in the second round game in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament.

"I don't want my players to feel I'm more involved here than with my team" at Duke, he said.

The new coach said he had told the Duke players of his move in advance because he did not want them to be distracted by rumors and news reports.

He said the response generally was that whatever he did, "they were behind me 100 percent."

Foster, faced with building a new squad with a nucleus of just four players from this season's team, said he will begin recruiting players and naming assistants this week.

Knight Backs Bliss For Duke Job

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Dave Bliss, University of Oklahoma basketball coach, said Monday he plans to talk to Southern Methodist University officials "within the week" about the school's vacant coaching job.

Bliss also said he has not been contacted by Duke University. The Durham, N.C., school is also looking for a head basketball coach to replace Bill Foster, who resigned Sunday.

A Durham newspaper has reported that Bobby Knight, coach at Indiana where Bliss was an assistant before coming to OU five seasons ago, has personally recommended Bliss to Duke athletic director Tom Butters.

"I've been approached by some of the newspapers there (in North Carolina), but other than that, I have no idea what's going on," Bliss said.

Newspaper and radio reports from the Dallas area over the weekend indicated Bliss could be hired at SMU this week. The vacancy at SMU was created by the resignation of Sonny Allen last week.

When asked if he had talked with Russ Potts, SMU athletic director, or other SMU officials, Bliss replied, "No, I'm going to talk to them within the next week.

"I'm not sure where all that stuff (Dallas media reports) came from. I saw some of the stuff, but I don't know what it's all alluding to. As far as me being down there talking, I've done none of that.

"I'm planning on doing it, but I haven't so far. I've been too busy recruiting, and my primary objective right now is recruiting for us (OU)."

Bliss said his visit to the Dallas university will be not only to discuss the coaching job but also to find out something about the school.

NIT Play Begins Tonight

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Long Beach State, happy to be included in the National Invitation Tournament but disappointed by an NCAA snub, takes on Pepperdine tonight in a first-round NIT game at the Anaheim Convention Center.

"We've beaten four teams who are going to the NCAA — Marquette, BYU, Lamar and San Jose," said Long Beach Coach Tex Winter. "UCLA (invited to the NCAA tournament) has beaten only two...it's an injustice."

Still, Winter doesn't want to take anything away from the NIT.

"We are happy to be going to a postseason tournament," he said. "I think we are very well matched with Pepperdine."

"We played early in the season and lost by one point, 95-94. The NIT provides all the teams with a real opportunity and should be quite a motivating factor for all the athletes involved."

"There are a lot of good ball clubs who will be in the NIT," Winter said, adding caustically, "some of them better than the teams who will be in the NCAA."

Winter is unhappy that only two clubs from the Pacific Coast Athletic Association — San Jose State and Utah State — were chosen for the NCAA tournament. Long Beach had finished second in both the regular PCAA season and in the league tournament.

Pepperdine is led by Ricardo Brown, one of the nation's top guards, and the Waves boast a 17-10 record.

Long Beach State, led by forwards Michael Wiley and Francois Wise, is 21-11. Wiley is averaging 20.6 points a game and Wise 16.

Play in the NIT ends with semifinals and finals in New York's Madison Square Garden on March 17 and 19.

Sixteen more teams get into action in the NIT Wednesday, with St. Peter's at Connecticut, West Texas State at Illinois State, Lafayette at Virginia, Loyola, Chicago at Illinois, Penn State against the University of Alabama in a game to be played at Birmingham, St. Joseph's, Pa. at Texas, Murray State at Jacksonville and Bowling Green at Minnesota. The latter contest was originally scheduled for Thursday.

On Thursday, it will be Alabama-Birmingham at Southwestern Louisiana, Texas-El Paso at Wichita State, Boston University at Boston College, Nebraska at Michigan, neighborhood rivals Pittsburgh and Duquesne at the Pittsburgh Civic Center, and Grambling at Mississippi.

The final first rounder pits Washington at Nevada-Las Vegas on Friday.

The second round will be held next Monday.

Ali's Return Poses ???

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

"What do you think would happen if I came back," Muhammad Ali asked an interviewer after being named The Associated Press' Athlete of the Decade for the 1970s.

Unfortunately, it looks like we're going to find out. The former champion says he'll fight again. Promoter Bob Arum is talking about Ali fighting John Tate for the World Boxing Association heavyweight champion at New Orleans in June.

The interviewer's answer to Ali's question had been: "It'd be tough, and you don't have anything to prove."

"That's right," retorted Ali. "You said the word. I have nothing else to prove."

So now, he's going to prove something.

He can make the impossible possible again, but he's already proved he is one of history's most incredible athletes. He's more likely to prove that he is no longer that greatest and prettiest heavyweight in the world, just the oldest.

Ali has always said he wouldn't end up like Joe Louis, and he won't... financially.

But Ali's announced intention of returning to the ring brought to mind a picture often seen in magazines and books about boxing. It shows a Louis, the devastating Brown Bomber who defeated the heavyweight title 25 times, lying on the ring apron after being knocked through the ropes by Rocky Marciano and Father Time.

Granted, neither John Tate nor Larry Holmes, the World Boxing Council champ, is in the class of Rocky Marciano. The point is, though, that the 38-year-old Ali now is in the same class as the 37-year-old Louis, who was knocked out by Marciano in 1951.

Ali has had four fights in 41 months — a dull decision over Alfredo Evangelista and a decision after a hard 15 rounds over Earnie Shavers in 1977; a loss to inexperienced Leon Spinks and an historic but not especially impressive win over Spinks that made him an unprecedented three-time heavyweight champion Sept. 15, 1978.

Before regaining the title from Spinks, Ali said, "It's my biggest fight because I'm older and I realize it's my last fight. I can't go on much longer even if I wanted to."

Ali's reflexes now are those of a 38-year-old who once was a great fighter, better than that of your average 38-year-old man but no longer those of a world-class fighter.

The legs won't let him float like a butterfly and the weight doesn't come off as easily as it used to. Ali certainly can get into the kind of physical condition needed to pass a fight physical — maybe not by June, however — but there could be a hidden danger there. Ali has had to shoot the knuckles of his right hand with cortisone for several years before fighting. He also reportedly has calcium deposits in his neck and there have long been whispers of potential kidney trouble. The rumors and the facts all add up to potential danger for Ali against an improving fighter like 24-year-old bull-strong John Tate.

Moe's Firing Expected

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

The firing of San Antonio Coach Doug Moe last weekend was no surprise, but the timing was.

Moe, one of the game's free spirits, has had his differences with Spurs owner Angelo Drossos for a couple of years. He saved his job by winning the Central Division the last two years, and by beating Philadelphia and taking Washington to seven games in the playoffs last spring.

But he was never really on firm footing, and his departure was only a matter of time. Moe said so himself.

"To be perfectly honest, being fired really doesn't bother me," he said. "I was leaving anyway, and I think they sensed that. After I hung up the phone Friday night when Angelo told me, Big Jane (Moe's wife) got out a bottle of champagne. We celebrated the good years and the future."

Moe is hopeful of landing another NBA job. Right now the only other post available is with the expansion Dallas team, but others will likely open up over the summer.

As a coach Moe believed in sending the players on the floor and letting them do their thing. He was blessed with three brilliant offensive performers in George Gervin, Larry Kenon and James Silas, and the result was a run-and-gun team that annually scored the most points in the league — and gave up the most.

The Spurs rarely played effective defense, but this was as much the players' fault as Moe's. He tried putting in a switching zone-type defense, but with a player like Gervin who is so weak on defensive fundamentals, this effort was futile.

Moe always was outspoken about the deficiencies of those around him. He was fined for his comments about the officiating in last year's playoffs, and recently he was brutally honest about his team's weak defense and lack of intensity.

While a coaching change was inevitable, the question remains, why do it now? The Spurs seemed a safe bet to make the playoffs, despite their lack of defense and the absence of a legitimate center, and isn't that the goal during the regular season?

"It was obvious we weren't going anywhere the way we were playing," replied Drossos. "You can't necessarily blame the coaches or the players. Doug is not the scapegoat, but a change had to be made."

Joyner, Revils Win Berths

BLACKSBURG, Va. — East Carolina University captured third place in the Regional NCAA Wrestling Tournament and qualified two members of the team for the National Tournament, in two weeks.

Both D.T. Joyner and Butch Revils gained berths in the NCAA Nationals, to be held at Oregon State University in mid-March. Both won championships in their respective weight classes.

Revils, at 177, defeated Bob Reich of Virginia Tech in the finals, winning a 5-3 decision. Joyner, a heavyweight, pinned Darrell Pfeiffer of Virginia Tech in 4:20.

Two other Pirates made it to the finals, but finished in second place. Frank Schaefer, at 150 pounds, was dethroned, 5-3, by Anthony Surage of Rutgers, while Jay Dever (190 pounds) was dethroned by Mark Miller of Virginia Tech, 18-6.

"Both Revils and Joyner wrestled extremely well," Coach Ed Steers, in his first year with the Pirates, said. "For Revils, it was even more satisfying, since he had been on crutches Tuesday after suffering an ankle injury. He had to change his style a little to protect the injury, but he did well."

Slippery Rock finished on top of the 16 teams participating in the tournament, which involved teams from all along the East Coast. The winners had 68½ points. Hosting Virginia Tech had 67½, while the Pirates were third with 58½.

SUPREME SLAM

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The Drake basketball team journeyed to Washington for a game with Georgetown and had a double success.

Drake defeated the strong Georgetown squad, 79-77, and also met President Carter at the White House. The squad was taken on a tour of the Supreme Court building, which just happens to have a basketball court.

Forward Tony Watson, a native of London, ran out on the court and slam-dunked a basketball.

"They'll never believe it back in England when I tell them I slammed one in the Supreme Court," he said later.

Yankees' Credo: Cool It

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The credo of the revamped 1980 New York Yankees: Cool it.

The low-key, don't-rock-the-boat philosophy was reflected in the feathery, tentative fashion the club handled the first irritant to surface in the new season: the late arrival of Reggie Jackson, super star, catalyst, by self description "the straw that stirs the drink."

AWOL for three days — how do you punish the main kid in the class, the richest, the most influential, the best known?

Do you lean on him hard, possibly alienating and turning him into a malcontent?

Do you let him off Scot-free with a wrist slap and the admonition: "OK, but don't let it happen again?"

Or do you seek out some compromise that will not be too harsh on the offender yet will placate the other 63 in the room who could start screaming "prima donna," "special privilege," and the like?

The Yankees' bright, new front office wrestled with the dilemma like a flock of fussy hens and then took the mild road.

When Reggie checked in Monday, three days late, after fulfilling a backlog of outside commitments, he was let off without a fine. For recompense, he could write a check to his favorite charity.

Reggie picked the Public School Athletic League, a group that has supported him in the past. The best guess is he will shell out $2,000.

And it didn't hurt a bit. There was, according to General Manager Gene Michael, no sharp directive from owner George Steinbrenner, sitting in his boat building offices in Tampa. There was no grouching in the lockerroom.

"It came out good," said the beaming Jackson. "I am happy with what happened." "Reggie should have been here on time," insisted Michael. "We were forced to take action for the sake of team morale, the feeling of the other players."

"I'm glad he's here," said the new manager, Dick Howser, successor to the fiery Billy Martin. "I wasn't worried. He always reports ready to play."

One can imagine what the scene might have been had Martin been manager. There never was any great love between Jackson and Martin, although they tolerated each other up to a point. A lot of times, they came closer to blows.

UK Olympians Favor Games

LONDON (AP) — Britain's potential Olympic athletes voted in favor of participating in the Summer Moscow Olympic Games.

Of 111 top athletes contacted by the International Athletes Club, 77 have signed a letter affirming their right to take part. A copy of the letter is to be sent to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

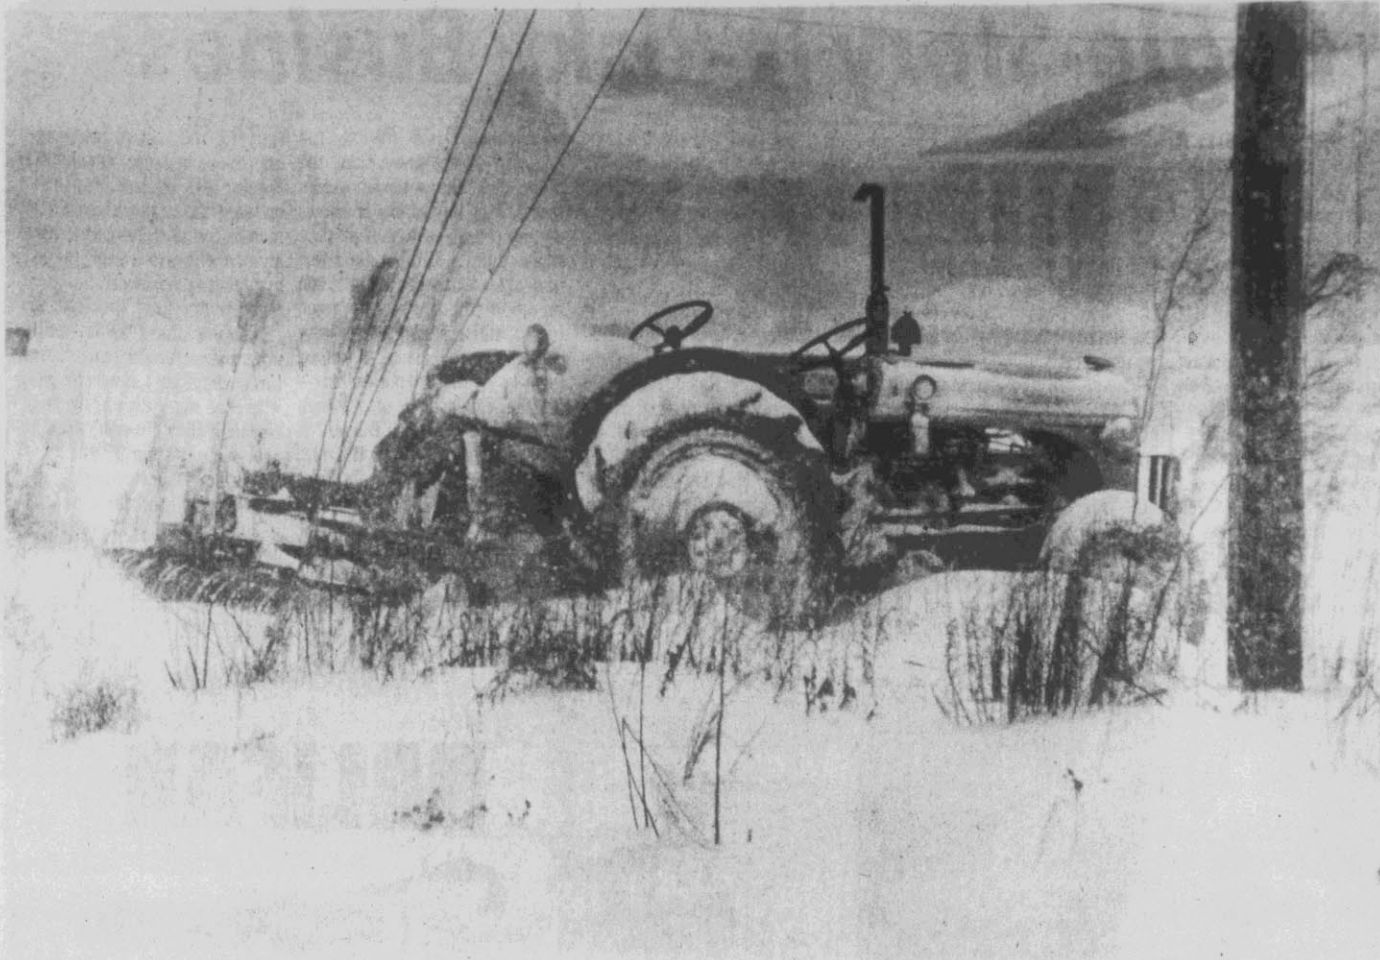

This response comes as a setback for the British government, which has been trying to persuade athletes to stay away from the Games as a protest against the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Vivian Blaine Joins 'Salute'

NEW YORK (AP) — Vivian Blaine loves Cy Feuer and Ernest Martin a bushel and a peck, so she's back in New York for a salute to the producers who made her famous. Miss Blaine played Miss Adelaide, the showgirl who finally lands Nathan Detroit after a long-term courtship in "Guys and Dolls," the gangsterland musical produced by Feuer and Martin. Feuer and Martin are being honored by a musical revue, opening next week, featuring songs from musicals they produced. "It's wonderful to be back here," she said Monday.

By PETER J. BOYER
 AP Television Writer
 LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's a courageous thing you do, CBS ... foolhardy, even.

Tonight CBS presents a TV movie-version of Humphrey Bogart's life. Think about it. That means somebody is going to try to play Humphrey Bogart for two hours.

It's just risky business. The Bogart persona is large and pervasive and very much alive, thanks to Bogie festivals at local theaters and on TV. It casts a giant shadow, and CBS' "Bogie" is smothered.

Kevin O'Connor gets the kamikaze lead role, and you'll find yourself feeling sorry for him before the thing is five minutes old. Not only is he not Bogart, but he's prevented by the material from hiding the physical differences and developing the inner Bogie.

The Bogart career is superficially traced by means of a cavalcade of movie posters that zoom by the camera and a series of silly "key encounters" that rely on an old storytelling gimmick aimed at putting the audience on the "inside."

For example, Jack Warner is shown telling Bogart he'll always be a gangster, never a leading man. We "insiders" are supposed to be saying, "Boy, was he ever wrong." Later, Warner tells Bogie he can play the lead in a new Warner Brothers movie that no one else wanted because an unknown, Walter Huston's son, John, is directing it.

"It's got some kind of bird in it," Warner says. Well, yuk-yuk, the movie turns out to be "The Maltese Falcon." Or later on, Warner informs Bogart that he's got a romantic lead for him but it's a "dog" of a film, opposite "that big Swede," Ingrid Bergman. The "dog," of course, is "Casablanca."

There are a lot of those little setups here, and they're fun enough, except they take the place of character development. This Bogart never shows us any reason why he should be more than a B-flick gangster, and this Warner couldn't run an automatic car wash, much less a major studio.

Midway, the movie is helped greatly — though not saved — by the appearance of Kathryn Harrold as Lauren Bacall. A fetching lady, Miss Harrold, who recaptures the lambent beauty of Miss Bacall in "To Have and Have Not."

With the entrance of Miss teetotaler. Harrold, the rest of the movie improves because O'Connor's Bogart gets to expand a little, growing from movie poster to man-in-conflict, torn between an alcoholic wife (nicely played by Anne Wedgeworth) and a teen-aged beauty, Miss Bacall. But the thing never really progresses far beyond caricature, which isn't nearly enough when the real thing is likely to be found just a couple of charnels over. It's hardly worthy of the many Bogartisms that are capriciously thrown in.

This "Bogie," I'm afraid, is

IN THE BAG — Actor George Hamilton, left, who played Count Dracula in the movie "Love at First Bite," takes blood from Natches (Miss.) Mayor Tony Byrne during a blood donation drive at the Natchez City Hall. Hamilton has a house in Natchez and is restoring several others in the city. (AP Laserphoto)

One hour televised special—TONIGHT

Billy Graham in HALIFAX

With Cliff Barrows; Geo. Beverly Shea and guests: Evie and Pelle Karisson; Willa Dorsey.

In tonight's program, Billy Graham speaks to all who feel lost or separated from God. We must be aware of and overcome the obstacles of pride, materialism, worldliness, and self-righteousness that prevent us from answering a personal call from Christ. The Son of Man has come to seek out and save those that are lost, for without Christ, it will be too late to defend ourselves on Judgement Day.

PIER AFIRE — Fire boats spray water on a raging fire which erupted on a large pier in Weehawken, N.J. Monday night. A U.S. Coast Guard spokesman said that reports of an explosion immediately preceding the fire were being investigated. Photo was taken from the New York Side of the Hudson River. (AP Laserphoto)

Little Town Of Lake Placid Struggles Back To Normalcy

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — There's time for a second cup of coffee here most mornings now, and folks who rented their homes out for the XIII Winter Olympics have returned.

"Everything Must Go! Leaving Town! Drastic Reductions! Make Us An Offer!" read the sign on the local store an out-of-town furrier had taken over for the two weeks when the whole world was watching.

"Olympic Merchandise 25 to 50 percent off," said the sign on Meyer's Drug Store next door.

But business was booming for Phil Kellogg's carpet cleaning firm from Lake George, 80 miles or so away.

"We came up to see the opening ceremony," Kellogg said as he surveyed what visitors had tracked in to Favor Smith's law office while it was rented to skimmers. "I saw all the mud and said I'm definitely coming back here."

A lot of spectators stayed away from the high-priced places, but that may have helped other businesses, like the Mirror Lake Liquor Store, which boasted record-breaking sales in the face of $2 beers and $3 mixed drinks at many local bars.

"We worked so long to get them, and they're over and done with before you know it," a liquor store clerk said of the Games.

The Lake Placid Olympic Organizing Committee does not go out of existence until later this year, but the bulk of its employees have already been dismissed. The state employment office in nearby Saranac Lake has three lines, one for former LPOOC employees, one for former Lake Placid Club workers and the third labeled simply "All Others."

The once-exclusive club, now a hotel, had only one guest staying in its huge, rambling main building one night last week, despite its recent glory as headquarters for the International Olympic Committee.

The hotel had hoped the Games would help bail it and the village out of the Adirondacks' permanent economic slump. But its hopes were powerless in the face of a gasless summer and a snowless winter.

They were the first whalers—and perhaps the last Eskimos depend on the bowhead whale for food and hunt them as a way of life. But conservationists say this is endangering the survival of the species! Hear both sides of this emotional controversy.

High Post For A Blind Lawyer

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A 33-year-old lawyer who was once kicked out of a school for the blind for refusing to accept his handicap has been named chief counsel for Florida's Department of Banking and Finance.

S. Craig Kiser is the first blind person to be promoted to such a statewide position in Florida. For Kiser, who struggled for years to accept his blindness, the promotion was a milestone.

In just three years, he rose from a $17,000-a-year job as a young lawyer in the department, to deputy general counsel and finally to the $32,400-a-year job as chief counsel.

"I don't want to be immodest, but I really do think, blind or not, that I've accomplished a lot," he said in an interview.

Though legally blind, Kiser can see light and shapes up close. To read law materials at work, he uses a machine that greatly magnifies words, making them as much as 3 or 4 inches high on a lighted screen.

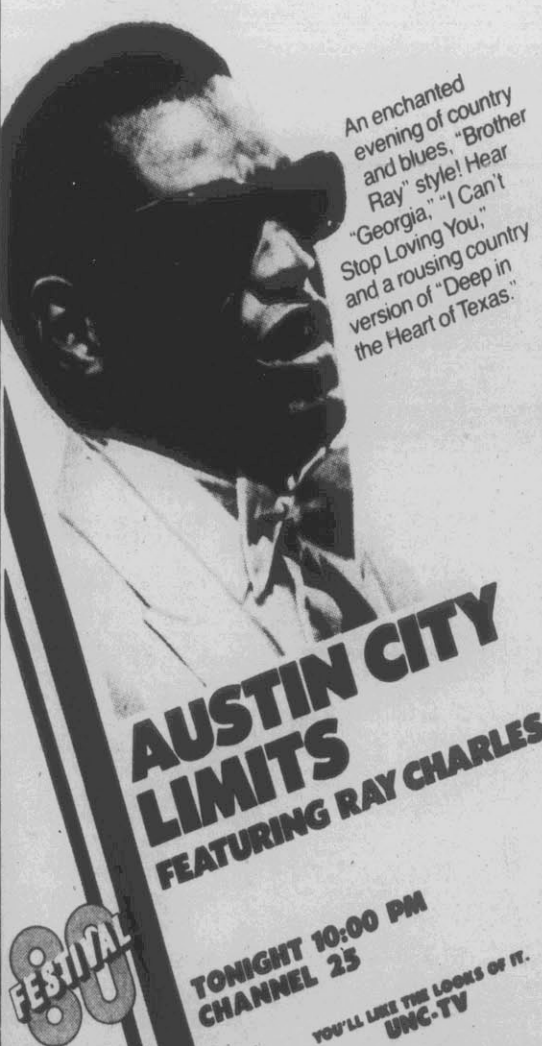

Kiser was 19 when doctors discovered he would soon lose his sight from a disease called retinitis pigmentosa — a pigment on the retina that slowly destroys the rods in the eye that govern peripheral and night vision.

Unwilling to accept his handicap, Kiser continued to drive a car while legally blind. He tried to enter the University of Iowa as a sighted person, but flunked out when he couldn't read the textbooks. He enrolled in a school for the blind, but was kicked out when he tried to lead the life of a sighted person.

After discovering he couldn't function adequately without training for the blind, Kiser returned to the school, obtained a bachelor's degree and became Florida State University's first blind law student.

"All of us always knew he would do well once he came to grips with his blindness," his brother, House Minority Leader Curtis Kiser, recalled. "We knew once he got channeled in the right direction there would be no stopping him."

An enchanted evening of country and blues. "Brother Ray" style! Hear "Georgia," "I Can't Stop Loving You," and a rousing country version of "Deep in the Heart of Texas."
