Pitt Livestock Farmers Preparing For The Growing Season

THIS ONE'S HUNGRY — Although the calving season is ending, there are still plenty of calves to be fed and raised, then prepared for breeding next year. These preparations will begin this spring. (Reflector Staff Photo by Mary Schulken)

Raising livestock is a year-round process, but the onset of spring always provides cattle, hog, sheep and poultry producers a chance to recover from the cold winter weather and begin preparations for the growing season ahead.

"This time of year you think about baby animals," said Mike Regans, Pitt County agricultural extension agent. "Although we are approaching the end of the calving season, cattle producers are preparing calves for breeding next year."

"To prepare cows for calving, they must maintain a high nutrient intake," he explained. "Many of them have a calf by their side already, so they must produce milk for lactation. They need nutrients to put them in good shape for breeding."

According to Regans, Pitt County cattle producers will be dehorning, castrating, and vaccinating their cattle during the next two months. "All of this will be done before it gets too hot. Dehorning, etc. needs to be done before the flies get too bad, while the weather is cool, and the calves are still small enough to handle," reported Regans.

"Breeders will also be worming their animals before they go from winter pastures to spring pastures," said the extension agent.

Animals are not the only items producers prepare for the coming season. "Farmers will be maintaining their pastures and getting them ready for grazing," explained Regans. "Coastal bermuda for the summer months will be sown soon and in the next month farmers will be planting their corn for grain."

"Cattle shows and sales also abound in the spring," he commented. "Stocker cattle sales are always in spring, such as the one in Rocky Mount in April. Breeders will be buying these 600-800 pound steers and heifers and finishing them out on feed lots."

Pitt County cattle producers can anticipate some special problems this time of year. According to Regans, one of these is grass tetany, a nervous disorder due to a mineral imbalance. "Cattlemen have to watch out for grass tetany when the cows are going off winter pastures onto lush, green pastures. The cattle will stagger around because grass tetany is a nervous disorder," explained Regans. Although the disease can be treated, the best treatment, says Regans, is prevention. "Cattlemen should supplement the feed with mineral mix in the spring," he said.

Pitt County still has an aflatoxin problem, according to the extension agent. "We are still fighting aflatoxin," he said. "Two 4-H steers have recently died of aflatoxin comatosis. I also get calls from hog farmers all the time.

"Every livestock producer should have their corn analyzed frequently," he continued, "and run the aeration fans once a week

Highlights Of Anti-Inflation Proposals

THE BUDGET

—A revised fiscal 1981 budget of $611 billion to $613 billion. That compares with an original $616 billion budget, which was subsequently revised to more than $625 billion because of inflation. Between spending cuts and increased revenues, the budget forecasts a surplus of $10 billion to $13 billion — the first balanced budget since 1969 and the most black ink since 1948.

—Spending cuts of $13 billion to $14 billion more than originally proposed in the fiscal 1981 budget. Cuts would affect "virtually every area of the budget" except for defense spending, which is expected to rise.

—Revenue increases of $13 billion — $10 billion from a new gasoline conservation tax and $3 billion from a new plan to withhold federal taxes on interest and dividend payments.

—An immediate freeze on federal hiring with the goal of reducing the government work force by 20,000 jobs at the end of 1980.

—Spending cuts of $2 billion and revenue increases of $3 billion in the current budget to reduce the deficit to an estimated $36 billion to $37 billion.

GASOLINE CONSERVATION TAX

—A fee of $4.62 per barrel on imported crude oil would be imposed immediately. This would have the sole effect of raising gasoline prices for consumers by 10 cents per gallon, effective May 15. The tax is estimated to add 0.5 percent to this year's inflation rate, but would reduce gasoline and diesel fuel consumption by 100,000 barrels a day in the first year and up to 250,000 barrels by the end of the third year.

CREDIT CONTROLS

—The president will authorize the Federal Reserve Board to impose selective controls on consumer credit, primarily by limiting the use of credit cards.

These controls would not apply to home mortgages, car loans or credit for other big-ticket items that last a long time, like home appliances.

Lenders can choose just how to limit credit, and administration officials believe most will either limit the issuance of new cards or require larger minimum repayments each month.

—In addition, the Federal Reserve will announce a voluntary program to limit credit growth by large lenders.

WAGE-PRICE POLICIES

—Carter reaffirmed his absolute opposition to mandatory wage and price controls. Instead, he plans to continue relying on voluntary wage and price guidelines. Under the guidelines, wages and fringe benefits would be allowed to rise by 7.5 percent to 9.5 percent this year, up from 7 percent last year.

—Carter also will request that large companies notify the government in advance of planned price increases.

—The Council on Wage and Price Stability will be expanded to boost its monitoring efforts.

Ford Will Not Be A Candidate

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (UPI) — Gerald Ford, in what he called the "toughest decision of my life," announced Saturday he will not run for president this year.

With his wife Betty at his side, the former president told a hastily called news conference outside his California home he feared he would divide the GOP and help Democrat Jimmy Carter win re-election if he sought a return to the White House.

Ford narrowly lost the 1976 presidential election to Carter — in part because of lukewarm support from Ronald Reagan, whom he defeated for the GOP nomination.

This time around, when it appears Reagan may be the nominee, Ford pledged Saturday to support the 1980 Republican standard bearer "with all the energy I have."

Ford's decision further increases the likelihood that the conservative former California governor — who Ford said earlier this month might not be electable — will get the nomination.

Reagan, campaigning Saturday in Illinois, said he was not surprised at Ford's decision. Although he was glad the former president had decided to stay out of the race, Reagan did not indicate he would have been greatly worried if Ford entered.

"Politically, he cleared the air, I know it wasn't an easy decision," said Bush, whose troubled campaign had been expected to be a major casulty if Ford had entered the race.

Candidate John Anderson, who Ford has said is too liberal for the GOP, declared in Champaign, Ill.: "I am, of course, pleased that former President Ford will not enter the race...

"If he had entered, it might have proved a complicating factor in my own campaign and you can't blame me for being pleased," Anderson said.

Ford, with his arm around his wife, made his announcement under some lemon trees outside the California home he bought after leaving the White House and told reporters he would remain in retirement there.

In the past, Ford has said he would hit the campaign trail for GOP candidates regardless of his presidential decision. He declined to answer any questions after making his statement.

The statement ended weeks of speculation on whether he would enter the race in order to deny the nomination to Reagan — of whom he has never neither politically nor personally fond.

A close adviser to the former president said Saturday Ford based his decision in large part on the assumption that he could win the nomination, but in doing so would alienate the Reagan wing of the party.

Many of Ford's advisers, at closed door sessions last week in Washington, told him it would be virtually impossible for him to enter the presidential sweepstakes at this late date in the primary season and win the nomination. They warned his candidacy would seriously divide the Republcan party.

"I have determined that I can best help that cause by not being a candidate for president which might further divide my party," Ford said Saturday.

"I am not a candidate I will not become a candidate. I will support the nominee of my party with all the energy I have," he said.

WON'T RUN — Former President Gerald Ford Saturday declared: "I am not a candidate. I will not become a candidate." Ford, who had been huddling with his political advisors, called reporters to his Rancho Mirage, Calif. home to make the declaration. (AP Laserphoto)

Carter's Lead Is Growing

By PETER A. BROWN
United Press International

President Carter, continuing his steady climb towards the Democratic nomination, Saturday crushed Sen. Edward Kennedy in Mississippi and Wyoming and appeared on his way to an easy victory in South Carolina.

Carter beat Kennedy by a landslide in Mississippi's precinct caucuses, took an early lead in South Carolina's precinct caucuses and defeated Kennedy in Wyoming's county conventions — the first test of strength between the two major Democratic candidates in the Rocky Mountain West.

In Wyoming, with 19 of 23 counties reporting in unofficial results, Carter captured 62.2 percent of the delegates to the May state convention. Kennedy had 24.2 percent and 13.4 percent were uncommitted.

In actual delegate votes won, Carter had 106.5, or just over half the total of 204. Kennedy had 41.5 and 23 were uncommitted.

Carter's margin in the South was even greater.

With 1,210 of Mississippi's the 2,168 precincts reporting, Carter had 1,623.7 delegate votes or 76.4 percent, while Kennedy had 111.2 delegate votes or 5.2 percent. Former Gov. Cliff Finch got only 0.8 percent in his home state, California Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. received 0.1 percent and another 17.5 percent was uncommitted.

With slightly over 2 percent of South Carolina's 1,649 precincts reporting, Carter collected 67 percent of the delegates to March county conventions, compared to 6 percent for Kennedy and 26 percent uncommitted.

The state NAACP had urged blacks to remain uncommitted to protest the Carter administration's position that a reapportionment of the state's all-white Senate be held off until after 1980.

Robert Strauss, Carter's national campaign chairman, said the victories would mean a "substantial" increase in Carter's delegate strength.

"The president has again shown his national strength in this campaign. We have won by wide margins in every part of the country and are, of course, delighted with our first win in the Rocky Mountain region to go along with our wins in the Northeast, South and far West," Strauss said in a statement issued in Washington.

That did not include eight

State Budget Made With Expectation Of FRS Fund Cut

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — A proposal to cut federal revenue sharing funds to state governments will require North Carolina to pickup of $57 million in lost funds, but a state official said Saturday the state budget was prepared with the cut in mind.

Marvin Dorman, the assistant state budget officer, said the budget that the General Assembly will consider when it returns in June was prepared with the expectation that the revenue sharing program would be discontinued.

The Carter administration has proposed cutting $1.7 billion in state revenue sharing funds from the federal budget that is now before Congress, but would retain revenue sharing for city and county governments.

Dorman said the state will receive $57 million in federal revenue sharing in this year's state budget, which ends June 30, but in the 1980-81 fiscal year, the state anticipates receiving only $26 million before the program ends in October.

Budget planners had anticipated an end to revenue sharing, he said, but the job of replacing that money with state funds was made easier by the fact the state will receive partial funding next fiscal year, he said.

"We're fortunate we did not have to absorb it all at one time," he said.

In this year's budget, the $57 million revenue sharing total was allocated by the General Assembly for the purchase of school textbooks, school buses and retiring bonds — mainly for schools and water systems.

Dorman said the 1980-81 budget that will receive final approval from the General Assembly in June contains state funding for those programs to offset the loss of revenue sharing funds.

Local Student Wins Duke Scholarship

DURHAM — Mark E. Grossnickle, a senior at J. H. Rose High School, is one of three students — two from North Carolina and one from Missouri, to be named recipients of the first scholarships endowed by Duke University's alumni association.

Mark Grossnickle

Grossnickle, son of Dr. and Mrs. William F. Grossnickle of Greenville, has been named the William D. Jones Scholar. The scholarship he received is named for Jones, functions manager for the Duke dining halls from 1946 to 1976.

The other winners are Elizabeth Bates Cooke of Siler City, a senior at Jordan Matthews High School; and Russell R. Tuck, III of Kirkwood, Missouri, a senior at Kirkwood High School.

The scholarships are valued at $3,000 a year and are awarded on the basis of academic merit. The three recipients were chosen by an eight-member panel composed of Duke faculty and alumni.

The alumni association scholarships were established in 1979 by the General Alumni Association with preference toward children of alumni of Duke.

'Tree City'

Ralph Wilkworth, Director of the N. C. Division of Forest Resources, will present the award to Mayor Linwood Mercer at the 2 p. m. Arbor Day activity to be held at the town transfer station site on Highway 121 north of town.

The award recognizes tree protection and planting efforts by the town in 1979. Farmville is one of six N. C. communities to receive the award this year. The Tree City U. S. A. program is administered by the National Arbor Day Foundation.

Former Rep. Allard Lowenstein Dies Of Wounds Inflicted By One-Time Ally

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Democratic Rep. Allard Lowenstein, civil rights activist and leader of the 1968 "Dump Johnson" movement, was shot to death by a former mental patient who was once a political ally, police say.

Police said Lowenstein, 51, was shot five times Friday afternoon by Dennis Sweeney of New London, Conn. They said Sweeney strode into Lowenstein's Rockefeller Center law office at 4 p.m., shook hands with the lawyer and then without warning pumped five slugs into him, hitting his heart, lungs, stomach, and left arm.

Lowenstein was rushed to St. Clare's Hospital where a team of nine surgeons operated for five hours. He died shortly after 11 p.m.

"He had massive injuries. His heart failed to continue to pump and he died," said Dr. William Mitty, St. Clare's chief surgeon.

Police said Sweeney, wearing jeans, work boots and shirt and jacket, entered Lowenstein's law office on the ninth floor of The Associated Press Building after having made an appointment earlier in the day.

Dorothy DiSinitio, Lowenstein's sister, said the two had also met recently, but would not elaborate.

A New York Telephone Co. installer, who was in the office and asked not to be identified, said the two were together for five minutes. "I heard screams and then pops, three or four."

After the shooting, police said Sweeney sat in the office reception area, placed a 9mm pistol in a secretary's "in" box, lit a cigarette and waited to be arrested.

Police said Sweeney, 37, a divorced carpenter, was charged with second-degree murder and possession of a deadly weapon.

Sweeney said Lowenstein had represented a man who sued his stepfather, Gerald Sweeney, and that the suit caused family problems that led to his stepfather's fatal heart attack Feb. 24, police said.

Both police and Mrs. DiSinito said they doubted the story. Investigators said they could find no rational motive.

Lowenstein served a term as U.S. ambassador for special political affairs at the United Nations after being appointed by President Carter in 1978. In a statement issued Friday night, Carter said Lowenstein's murder "cut short a life devoted to reason and justice. Al Lowenstein was a passionate fighter for a more humane, more democratic world."

Most recently, Lowenstein, a longtime admirer and friend of Sen. Edward Kennedy, had campaigned for Kennedy in Florida before that state's presidential primary last Tuesday, which Kennedy lost.

Kennedy, hearing of the shooting while campaigning in Chicago Friday, immediately flew to New York. He arrived about an hour after Lowenstein died.

The Massachusetts senator said Lowenstein was "a very dear friend and a friend of the members of my family." He called Lowenstein "a destinguished member of congress."

Lowenstein and Sweeny met in the early 1960s when Lowenstein was teaching at Stanford University in California and Sweeney was a student there.

Fireman Dies In Sanford Fire

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — The body of a firemen who was trapped in a department-store fire Friday night was found early today in the basement of the store by fire officials.

The victim was identifed as Billy Ray Faircloth, 29. Authorities found his body about 6 a.m. today.

Fire Chief Sam Bost said Faircloth apparently entered the building with the first wave of firefighters and became trapped in heavy smoke. Bost said Faircloth told him by walkie-talkie that he was lost.

Several other firemen were injured in the blaze, including one who was hospitalized with lung damage.

The fire broke out in the basement of Mitchell's Department store, the main occupant of a 30,000-square foot L-shaped building. Flames spread to other stores in the structure, all of which were damaged by fire or water and smoke.

The building housed the department store, a motorcycle shop, a hardware-auto supply store, a sporting goods store, a real estate agency, a restaurant and a bar.

Violence At KKK Rally

By MARTIN P. HOUSEMAN

OCEANSIDE, Calif. (UPI) — The Ku Klux Klan and counter-demonstrators clashed with police Saturday at a Klan rally honoring the birth of Andrew Jackson.

A news reporter and one counter-demonstrator were injured in the melee. A police officer shot and killed a Klan member's Doberman Pinscher dog when it attacked another officer.

No arrests were made in the riot, which apparently broke out when counter-demonstrators began taunting KKK members attending a rally in a local park. The groups then attacked each other with baseball bats, rocks and bottles.

Approximately 60 riot-equipped police officers, assisted by a helicopter, moved in when Klan members ignored an order to disperse. Police said the only shot fired in the incident was when a Klan member's dog lunged at police.

The black-uniformed Klan members had gathered for a speech commemorating Andrew Jackson's birthday by California Grand Dragon Tom Metzger, who is also a Democratic candidate for congress.

The city had denied the Klan a permit to hold the rally at the Oceanside Community Center, so the 50 Klansmen gathered in the park. About 150 counter-demonstrators also attended.

Police Capt. Smith said the counter-demonstrators, some of whom were black, were members of several Los Angeles-based groups, including the Revolutionary Socialist League and the Southern California Anti-Klan Coalition.

Both the Klan members and counter-demonstrators brought large dogs to the rally and the barking was so loud that Metzger used a loud speaker to deliver his speech.

Violence erupted when the Klansmen moved from the park and began a march to the community center.

Police said Bruce Cala, 33, a member of the Revolutionary Socialist League, began harrassing Klansmen at the end of a column marching through the park. As a shower of bottles and rocks fell into the ranks of the helmeted Klansmen, two rear guardsmen broke ranks and attacked Cala.

A man wearing a hockey goalie's mask, and an older man wearing a helmet, hit Cala repeatedly with bats and he immediately fell bleeding to the ground, police said.

states, including Wyoming, Mississippi and South Carolina, where the actual delegate breakdown has not been determined although Carter is expected to get the lion's share.

South Carolina has 37 national convention delegates, Mississippi 32 and Wyoming 11.

Dr. A.B. Britton, Mississippi state co-director for the Kennedy campaign, said he had hoped Kennedy would pick up two or three national convention delegates there. "But it doesn't look like that will happen," he said, blaming a low voter turnout.

Carter had the backing of the three states' governors — Richard Riley of South Carolina, Ed Herschler of Wyoming and William Winter of Mississippi — and many state political leaders.

City Council Approved Bids, Towing Ordinance

The City Council, meeting Thursday night, approved bids for a vehicle for the Recreation and Parks Department and also for jackets for fire and rescue personnel.

The bid of American Uniform Sales Inc. of Fayetteville, in the amount of $4,329, was approved for the fire and rescue jackets. Mervis Uniforms of Virginia Beach, Va. submitted a bid of $4,625 for the jackets.

In other business, Council members adopted an ordinance amending Chapter 31 of the City Code regarding towing motor vehicles. The amendment increases the service charge for day towing of automobiles, vans, pick-up trucks and motorcycles from $20 to a $25 maximum. In addition, the charge for night, weekend and holiday towing is increased from $25 to $30 maximum.

The Council reappointed Dr. Sam T. White II and Ms. Lois D. Worthington to new two-year terms on the Firemen's Relief Fund Committee. When it's built like a brick, it's going to last!

Buying a house today is probably the most important investment decision anyone can make in a lifetime, and the cost of a house does not end with the initial purchase price. If you choose a wood exterior house, you will have to spend thousands of dollars over the years for essential maintenance: painting, staining, termite proofing and more.

A BRICK home on the other hand, is "carefree," it will never rot, warp, dent or burn in a fire. Therefore, TRIANGLE BRICK makes good sense as a building material for your new home, not only for exterior walls, but for interior walls, floors, fireplace, foundation walls, walks, steps, chimney, and backyard patio. BRICK will save you thousands of dollars in the long run, and when it comes time to sell your home, another big bonus will come your way...BRICK homes have a much higher resale value than wood exterior houses!

Therefore, Insist on BRICK when buying or building a home, choose TRIANGLE BRICK...you know it's going to last.

Terrorists Raided Two Campaign Headquarters

By ROGER SCHATZ
United Press Internatidonal

Armed Puerto Rican terrorists Saturday staged simultaneous raids on two presidential campaign headquarters in Chicago and New York, binding and gagging workers and spray-painting "Free Puerto Rico" on the walls.

The raids took place on the eve of Puerto Rico's Sunday Democratic primary.

In Chicago, two men and a women — one of them a former Carter-Mondale campaign volunteer — stormed Carter campaign headquarters, bound and gagged seven hostages, ransacked the office and then fled.

In a similar hit-and-run attack, four men burst into George Bush's New York headquarters, tied up 10 workers and demanded voter lists with telephone numbers.

No one was injured in either attack, but a Carter spokesman said damage was "extensive" in Chicago.

Both of the groups identified themselves as members of the Puerto Rican nationalist group FALN.

The FALN, well known to the FBI and police agencies across the country, has for years been waging a campaign for Puerto Rican independence, marked by bombings in New York, Chicago and elsewhere.

The worst such attack occurred in 1975 at Manhattan's Fraunces Tavern, where four people were killed and more than 50 injured when a bomb exploded during the lunch hour.

Although the FALN is not active in Puerto Rico, other terrorist independence groups have opposed the primary elections of both mainland parties which are being held in Puerto Rico for the first time this year.

Their reasoning is that by voting in such primaries Puerto Ricans will become more involved in mainland politics and thus more willing to vote for eventual statehood status for Puerto Rico.

In Chicago, a hostage said he recognized one of the terrorists as a former Carter campaign worker and that the gunman admitted he had worked in the campaign.

The three terrorists ordered campaign workers to lie on the floor.

The two men — one with a rifle and the other with a shotgun — kept watch while the woman, brandishing a .38 caliber pistol, bound them and taped their mouths.

The three then ransacked the office, ripped out the telephones, spray-painted slogans on the walls and left, announcing they intended to take over the entire building — which also houses the campaign offices of Republican presidential contender John Anderson.

The terrorist then fled and the workers freed themselves.

In New York, Bush's campaign coordinator John Steele said the four men who burst into the office were apparently angered by Bush's stand in favor of statehood for Puerto Rico.

The men bound workers' hands with masking tape and spray painted "Statehood Means Death and "Free Puerto Rico" on the walls.

Steel said they demanded voter lists with phone numbers.

But Steele, who was not in the office during the incident, said he had been told the workers did not hand over the list.

After about 20 minutes, the men left without explanation, Steele said. He said that another worker, entering the office about 10 a.m., found the bound staff members, freed them and called police.

Predict Big Vote In Puerto Rico

By CHRISTOPHER PALA

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — Up to 60 percent of Puerto Rico's registered voters are expected to cast ballots in today's Democratic primary, but the driving issue is status, not presidents.

A telephone poll released this week showed Carter ahead with 56 percent, Kennedy with 39 percent and 5 percent undecided.

Puerto Ricans cannot vote in presidential elections and their concerns have traditionally been island-oriented.

The Democratic primary has stirred the passions of Puerto Ricans, who vote heavily — in some cases 85 percent turnout — in gubernatorial elections.

The island has been plastered with posters of Kennedy and Carter and loudspeaker-equipped vans have been criss-crossing the lush Caribbean island for weeks.

This is in striking contrast with the Republican primary Feb. 17, where all the candidates endorsed statehood and the commonwealthers did not participate. The turnout in that primary was 13 percent.

The primaries are the brainchild of Romero, who wants Puerto Ricans to acquire a taste for national politics which he thinks will lead more people to vote for statehood in a plebiscite.

Both candidates say it is up to the Puerto Ricans to decide their preferred status.

Carter adds he will fight for statehood if that is the popular will, and says he will back an improved commonwealth status with more autonomy if the people vote for commonwealth.

Aircraft Carrier USS Vinson Launched At Newport News

By R.D. Gersh
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (AP) — Bands played, speakers spoke, and a champagne bottle was broken as the nuclear aircraft carrier USS Carl Vinson was launched at Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co. here Saturday.

In a one-hour program, officials paid tribute to both Carl Vinson, 96, former chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, and the ship named after him.

The $1.3 billion vessel is the Navy's fourth nuclear aircraft carrier and the third in its class.

Numerous speakers called the ship such things as "the most powerful ship ever built," "an indispensable centerpiece of the Navy's sea force," and "the cutting edge of foreign policy."

Vinson, on hand for the ceremony, was referred to as "a man of three centuries."

Vinson served in the U.S. House of Representatives longer than any other man in history. The Georgian is known for his tough support of military preparedness, which earned him the nickname "the Admiral."

The principal speech was given by U.S. Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga. Nunn is Vinson's grandnephew.

"Behind me is the mightiest naval warship ever constructed — the USS Carl Vinson. Beside me is a mighty and powerful figure in the history of our Republic — Congressman Carl Vinson. It is fitting that this great vessel bear the name Carl Vinson — a name synonymous with American military preparedness in the 20th Century," Nunn said.

Other dignitaries who spoke were Sen. John Warner, R-Va., and a former Secretary of the Navy; Admiral Thomas Hayward, Chief of Naval Operations; and Secretary of the Navy Edward Hidalgo.

Hayward referred to the crisis in Iran and U.S. naval forces in the Indian Ocean.

"The USSR has 36 ships; the USA 19 ships. The Russians have the numbers, but the Americans have the capability," Hayward said. "Today we are here to celebrate ... this 94,000-ton flattop ...which will add to the capability of the U.S. Navy far into the future."

More than 10,000 people turned out for the ceremony, and many of them waved American flags or were wearing sailor hats emblazoned with the name of the ship.

After the speeches, Amalia Margaret Snead broke a bottle of domestic champagne on her first attempt, and the Vinson was officially launched.

It will be another two years before the Vinson is delivered to the Navy, scheduled for the spring of 1982. Final testing and outfitting — filling in the insides and making the ship functional — will be completed during that time.

Some 250 Navy personnel already are here to work with shipyard personnel in completing the vessel.

At a news conference before the launching, Navy officials said there may be a problem finding enough crewmen and aviators to staff the Vinson. But one official said, "you can't say there's any danger of not manning this ship."

Not Satisfied About Investigation Of VEPCO

By GENE WANG

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — The director of the state Utilities Commission's public staff said Saturday he was not satisfied with a federal agency's planned investigation into Virginia Electric and Power Co.

Robert Fischbach said he felt politics might have been involved in the eight-month inquiry announced Friday by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission into allegatins of mismanagement by Vepco.

The investigation will be conducted by the FERC staff and will not be the public hearings that the state requested, Fischbach said.

"We wanted an open hearing where all of us could participate, cross-examine Vepco witnesses, put on some of our own perhaps — the normal kind of courtroom adversary hearing. That's exactly what they didn't give us," he said.

The eight-month time limit set for the probe will end one week after the November elections, he said.

"In effect they put it in the corner and told the staff, 'Don't come back until after the November elections,'" Fischbach said. "A regulatory agency doesn't have any business thinking about when elections come and eight months is a peculiar time."

The FERC said in a statement late Friday that its staff will conduct an eight-month investigation centering on the allegations by Operation Overcharge, an organization representing 22 northeastern North Carolina counties served by Vepco.

The group contends that Vepco's wholesale rates for power sold to municipal utilities and rural cooperatives are higher than rates charged by other utilities serving North Carolina because of mismanagement by Vepco officials.

The company has denied the allegations and says its operating costs are higher because it uses more oil to generate electricity.

An FERC spokesman said Friday that the staff investigation will determine if the Operation Overcharge allegations have merit but will not result in an official finding.

But Fischbach, who was in Washington when the decision was announced, said the announcement left more questions unanswered than it resolved.

There are three cases pending before the FERC challenging Vepco's management decisions, he said, but the commission issued no orders on any of them and did not present a formal order for the investigation ordered Friday.

The pending cases include a complaint filed last December by Operation Overcharge, a wholesale rate case in which the mismanagement question is raised, and a complaint from the consumer advocate Public Staff that Fischbach heads.

Fischbach said the Public Staff has also filed a request to join in Operation Overcharge's complaint. Similar requests have been filed by the state Attorney General's office, the federal Bureau of Consumer Affairs and several congressmen.

In its request, the Public Staff specifically asked that open public hearings be held so expert witnesses can be presented to back its claim, Fischbach said. The request also asked specifically that no FERC staff investigation be held.

Not Only Rescue Role

Rescue policies on transporting people to the hospital have been changed after a man died following a rescue call March 2.

According to Fire-Rescue Chief Jenness Allen, the employees who handled the call followed normal procedure in handling the case.

The fire-rescuemen who answered the call were told the man had been sick with a cold, Allen said and because of the hazardous weather conditions it was decided it was best not to transport him.

Chief Allen said it had not been department policy to transport sick people . . . something that has been left to the county ambulance service. Rescue service was for emergency situations.

But, Allen said, orders have now been issued to transport those who call, whether it is sickness or a true emergency situation.

We think the new policy is wise. Unquestionably it will increase the number of calls for rescue vehicles, and consequently the cost of rescue operations to the city. Nevertheless it is best to get an ill or injured person to the hospital where a medical evaluation can be made.

Primaries Shake Out The Candidates

Primaries don't necesarily decide who will get the presidential nominations, but they do have a way of shaking out candidates.

Sen. Edward Kennedy must have a victory, or at least a good showing, over President Carter. George Bush will have to run well to rebuild his creditability as a candidate for the GOP nomination.

This may be a crucial week for candidates in both the Democratic and the Republican races.

THIS AFTERNOON

Our Aspiring Politicians

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The art of politics as practiced at the local level apparently influences some to seek higher office. At least 25 candidates for seats in the North Carolina General Assembly are now, or have been, members of their county boards of commissioners.

In the State Senate race, 13 candidates have experience as commissioners, and four of those are former presidents of the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners.

In the House of Representatives race, 12 have served as county commissioners. There are also a major, a former county and city manager, a former cabinet secretary in state government, and Soul City Developer Floyd McKissick, Jr.

Secretary of State Thad Eure keeps tabs on the elections, and reports that a total of 426 candidates are seeking election to the 170 legislative seats. Only 101 are incumbents, so regardless of outcome, new faces in the 1981 session are assured. Present lawmakers will convene for the June short session just ahead.

Of the 426 candidates in the May 6 primary, 197 are Democrats and 103 are Republicans in the race for 120 House seats. Of these, 88 are incumbent Democrats and 13 are incumbent Republicans.

On the Senate side, 39 incumbent Democrats and three incumbent Republicans seek re-election, and there are 87 Democrats and 39 Republicans on the slate for the 50 seats.

Community Colleges

Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte is far and away the biggest of the state's 58 community college and technical institute campuses.

A report by auditors shows Central Piedmont's budget is more than twice as big as the next most active school, with total spending of more than $13.6 million. Fayetteville Technical Institute is next with $6.6 million, followed by Guilford Tech at $4.9 million, and Cape Fear Tech at $4.1 million.

The total spending of state funds during the last fiscal year was more than $139.6 million.

Energy

Experts at N.C. State University have come up with an interesting report on nuclear energy compared to other energy sources. Coal is most easily available. Nuclear, once considered the "energy savior" is plagued by the "twin problems of safety and waste disposal. Optimistically, if all the (nuclear) plants currently being built or planned were completed on schedule in the early 1990s, nuclear power would still account for only seven percent of our total energy consumption," say the specialists.

The study also shows that energy costs as a percentage of operating costs for a private home have almost doubled over the past six years.

Where does the energy go? Slightly more than half (53 percent) is for space heating, 14 percent for water heating, seven percent for air conditioning, five percent for refrigeration, and 21 percent for the remainder of lights, appliances, etc.

BILL NOBLITT

The report helps face the energy situation by starting off with this reminder: "America has undergone two energy transformations in its history; first transforming the energy base of its economy from wood to coal, and second transforming from coal to a primary dependence on oil. Many believe we are now beginning our third major energy transformation, from oil to alternative energy sources."

Sunday Morning Notes

The surgery department of the ECU School of Medicine is laying in a supply of fruits and vegetables. That's what the "Winter Review" a publication of the school reports.

Grapefruit, tomatoes and celery are actually being used as an educational exercise to teach students basic surgical techniques during their eight-week clerkship in the surgery department.

"It's a teaching ideal that is a little bit different," Dr. Andre van Rij, assistant professor of surgery, says. "We think it's effective."

Students are asked to cut the letters "ECU" from a grapfruit and then sew them back in place. They also remove a grapefruit section and then close the incision.

Students suture a sliced tomato and transection two stalks of celery, pretending one is a nerve and the other a tendon.

Someone brought in an editorial which appeared in this newspaper March 26, 1967.

It commented on the requests of East Carolina College for appropriations in the upcoming biennium.

One item in the requests was for $65,000 over the two-year period for establishment of a Life Sciences and Community Health Institute.

It was pointed out the institute had been recommended by consultants. (They had been named to study ECC's request for establishment of a two-year medical school).

The institute had also been recommended by a consultant group which studied ECC's readiness for university status.

Well, as we know now, the funds were approved and the institute has become the School of Allied Health, the college has become a university and finally the School of Medicine was established and is now functioning.

That original request for funds was the basis for all the health related activities that ECU is now involved in.

Figures last week showed President Carter beat Sen. Kennedy 88 percent to 9 percent in Georgia. Carter defeated Kennedy 82 percent to 13 percent in Alabama and the president received

Other Editors Say 'Welfare Industry'

(The Wilson Times)

One of the theories put forth in promoting President Lyndon Johnson's Great Society was that if government provided sufficient income to meet the needs of the poor they would eventually become self-supporting.

Since then welfare rolls have grown and a mammoth "poverty industry" has developed, according to an article by Jenkin Lloyd Jones in the current issue of Human Events, a weekly publication.

Some five million persons are employed in jobs where their chief function is to counsel with and hand out welfare payments to about 44 million recipients, Jones writes. These welfare dispensers outnumber the 4.9 million workers in transportation and public utilities, or the 4.7 million people engaged in finance, insurance and real estate.

The natural tendency of those employed in the poverty industry is to see to it that the needy become more so, and to engage in a constant search for welfare recruits.

About 10 years ago, the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare began guaranteed-income experiments in Denver and Seattle. The result? Male family heads reduced work by 11 percent, female heads by 25 percent, and other adult male and female members by 43 and 60 percent respectively.

Jones writes, "Not without reason does the Méxican government argue that illegal Mexican immigrants generally take only those jobs which native-born Americans spurn. We seem to be raising generations to whom the only jobs of which they are capable are beneath their dignity."

A Harvard investigator found a welfare family that had legally obtained $16,000 a year, consisting of cash assistance, food stamps, education benefits, Medicaid, etc. To match this sum a taxpaying family head would have had to earn $20,000.

To offset work disincentives, a campaign is now under way to allow more and more job income with no loss of welfare assistance. Such a program simply brings welfare to the middle class.

Dr. Blanche Bernstein, former welfare director for New York City, told a Senate committee two years ago that it is possible for a mother of three to remain eligible for Aid to Families With Dependent Children payments until her earnings reach $29,000 a year.

Most Americans do not begrudge assistance for the very young, the elderly and the ill. But there is something wrong with the system when the able-bodied poor are allowed to spurn work "beneath their dignity" and enjoy a standard of living as good as, or better than, that of the taxpaying worker.

Booby Trap Wallet

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — As it apparently must happen to many men, and maybe a good many more women, Managing Editor Laurence O'Donnell of the Wall Street Journal was mugged in Manhattan on a recent evening.

O'Donnell wrote a gripping account of trying to find a concert hall down a lonely, rainswept street and encountering two young hoods who asked him for the time and relieved him of his wallet.

"Inside the hall, stunned, I started to realize what had happened to me — and what hadn't," he wrote. "Even though I hadn't been beaten, stabbed or worse, I was overwhelmed with anger. Not about the $25 or so.

"But about the cards — office credit cards, driver's license, Social Security, etc., etc. How can I function without them? ...Then I thought how impotent I was during the robbery. Two street kids see a pigeon. They pounce. In an instant, they get a night's spending money. ...Did I have an alternative? ...Given them some resistance? — I count my blessings — still mad."

O'Donnell, of course, chose the saner side of valor. But near the end of his article in which he tells how his cards were mysteriously returned, the editor does mention an intriguing alternative: "My mugging, obviously, has a happier ending than most. I now have done what many mugging victims do: carry two wallets. One with cash (for surrender). The other with the cards and identification."

Now there is the germ of an idea that some gifted inventor can develop into a handy pocket-sized crime prevention device.

What if the giveaway wallet, the one with the cash handed over at gun point or knife point or however the

THE INSIDE REPORT

Yet Another Turnaround?

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The transformation of President Carter from cold-eyed critic of the Soviet military takeover of Afghanistan will come into focus in a few days when the world learns his intention to reduce real defense spending from levels established before the rape of Afghanistan.

The fine print of the new anti-inflation budget will belie much of what Carter told the nation in his celebrated State of the Union address on Jan. 23. Instead of the 5 percent "real" defense increase he pledged then, the budget as now taking shape inside the White House will show a spending increase only about 1.5 percent higher than the rate of inflation.

"I'm determined that the United States will remain the strongest of all nations," Carter said to rousing applause on Jan. 23. Two days later, Gen. Richard Ellis' top commander of the Strategic Air Command, quietly revealed to the House Armed Services Committee that the U.S. now is on the short side of what he called an "adverse" balance of strategic strength — long-range nuclear missiles. military actions without the old worry over U.S. reactions, Carter plans to reduce the real rate of defense spending from the pre-Afghanistan level. He will blame this transformation — from matching to ignoring Soviet power — on the need for a balanced budget, Carter's front-line weapon in the battle against soaring inflation.

In fact, however, the decision to cut back defense spending as a budget-balancing aid, while Soviet military spending continues its non-stop rise in real growth at an annual rate of 4 percent, is perceived by some politicians and military analysts as more ominous than its stated target — balancing the budget.

These Carter critics believe that the president's State of the Union rhetoric rallied the nation around the flag — and Jimmy Carter — at immense political cost to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy; that it was more political than intellectual. Kennedy is Carter's only competitor in the Democratic presidential campaign.

Supporting the critics are important pieces of evidence that point strongly to this conclusion: Some powerful members of the Carter administration genuinely doubt that the U.S. can match Soviet military power, strategic or conventional, in the foreseeable future, if ever.

Indeed, as we reported in the spring of 1978, one of the key technical advisers on Zbigniew Brzezinski's National Security Council (NSC) staff, Victor Utgoff, privately questioned the wisdom of U.S. strategic superiority but went a long step further by adding, almost as an afterthought: But "we cannot afford to allow ourselves to drift into significant strategic inferiority." Some "inferiority," in other words, was quite acceptable.

Now, almost two years later in an international climate far rougher than then, another White House aide shocked a senator last week during a talk on U.S.-Soviet relations held in the senator's office. This White House staffer said that the Soviet Union is now producing military weapons on what is virtually a

HOPE

To lose hope is in reality to lose one's life. We may continue to breathe, to move about, to eat, sleep and talk, but in any meaningful sense we cease to live if we have no hope. Our motivation to act in any way is conditioned by some kind of expectation, and that expectation could not exist except for hope. The Spanish have a proverb, "Who loses money loses much; who loses friends loses more; who loses hope loses all." Everything that we value in civilization was at one time no more than a hope.

The Bible has much to say about hope. We are told in 1 Peter 1:13 to hope to the end. And St. Paul speaks about hope along with faith and love as three outstanding virtues in the Christian life. In writing to the Romans he counseled them to be of good cheer because tribulation, he said, works patience, and patience experience, and experience hope. The entire career of Paul is an example of the power of hope to sustain a person through the greatest trials.

Owners Can Spur Selling Home

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Families seeking to sell homes don't have to sit around helpless while high prices and soaring interest rates scare away buyers. And they might not have to lower their prices to do so.

Simple repairs and touching up, say experienced real estate agents, can often do the trick, and even return to the seller more than the cost of the improvements.

The Realtors National Marketing Institute asked five specialists in residential sales to recommend improvements that might help to move properties in spite of buyer financial problems and misgivings.

For the exterior, they recommended that lawns and shrubs be manicured, that shutters, storm doors, windows, gutters and downspouts be repaired or replaced, and that window boxes and awnings be considered.

They advised that interiors should be examined to eliminate nuisances that could have a negative impact. Leaky faucets should be repaired, clogged drains cleaned and worn bathtub grouting replaced, for example, because they suggest major plumbing problems might also exist.

The specialists also advised that, instead of painting, a homeseller consider wallpaper in certain rooms, or at least on one wall. Family room paneling might also be considered, they said.

They recommended that all wall and ceiling cracks be repaired, and that damp basements be waterproofed or painted with a waterproof-based paint. While such items might be minor, their impact is major.

Kitchens are important. If cabinets look old, the seller might consider replacing the hardware, and sanding and varnishing the wood. And appliances should be clean and in operating order.

The advise comes at a time when thousands of homeowners are waiting months instead of weeks to dispose of properties because would-be buyers, desperate for good housing, listen to their fears instead.

In spite of high borrowing costs and prices for resale homes — the National Association of Realtors estimates the national average is above $56,000 — an underlying demand is still believed to exist.

That latent demand, housing authorities say, is based on a least three vital factors:

1. Demographic studies that show a population bulge in the age 25 to 35-year category will continue until the middle of the decade.

2. Relatively few rental apartments, partly because high financing costs and rising maintenance expenditures have discouraged apartment-house construction.

3. An abrupt slowdown in the construction rate of new single-family homes.

What keeps the demand latent, experienced real estate people say, is more the inability to obtain financing than high prices. But many sellers have found an answer to that by offering their own financing.

Discretion Needed Now

By U.S. SEN. HARRY F. BYRD, Jr.

There was little to cheer about in the finances of the federal government last year, but there was one encouraging note from a subcommittee of the Senate.

On December 19, 1979, the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Senate Judiciary Committee approved a proposal to amend the constitution to require a three-fifths, recorded vote in both houses of Congress to approve any deficit in the federal budget.

The amendment also includes a limit on federal taxes and provides an indirect limit on spending.

A long string of federal deficits, leading to a national debt approaching a trillion dollars, with an interest cost of $80 billion, shows how necessary such an amendment has become. The inflationary impact of uncontrolled federal spending and accumulated deficits is punishing every family in America.

Fresh evidence of the need for a constitutional amendment came when President Carter, on January 28, submitted to Congress a budget for 1981 calling for yet another deficit of $16 billion.

If put into effect, this budget would violate existing law.

In 1978, I sponsored a bill in the Senate which the Congress approved, and President Carter signed into law, establishing a statutory ban of deficits. This takes effect with Fiscal year 1981, beginning on October 1, 1980. It is section 7 of Public Law 95-435, which reads: Beginning with fiscal year 1981, the total budget outlays of the Federal Government shall not exceed its receipts."

Despite this simple and clear mandate, President Carter called for a deficit in 1981. It is now the responsibility of the Congress to comply with the law and enact a balanced budget.

However, it is always possible for the Congress to alter or repeal a statute. That is why I have continued to press for a constitutional amendment requiring balance in the federal budget— and a limit on federal spending.

In 1979, senators interested in constitutional fiscal reform began meeting to hammer out a common approach. After much discussion, we decided to attempt to merge the balanced budget and spending limit approaches.

Last July, during Senate debate on another constitutional matter, I obtained a pledge from Senator Bayh of Indiana, Chairman of the Constitution Subcommittee, to act on budgetary reform before the end of 1979. That resulted in the subcommittee's action on December 19.

I have joined as a cosponsor of the subcommittee's resolution. It varies somewhat from my own proposals, and while it may be that other senators would like to see modifications, I think that we must keep our eye on the goal.

The goal, as I see it, is to get a constitutional amendment on the budget to the floor of the Senate and the House for debate and hopefully for approval and submission to the states for ratification.

While this goal is in sight, it is by no means assured. In the Senate, the next required step is approval by the full Judiciary Committee. The Chairman of that committee, Senator Kennedy, certainly will oppose any constitutional amendment, and at present we are not assured of a favorable majority on the committee as a whole.

If the proponents of each approach to constitutional reform take an "all or nothing" attitude, the forces favoring fiscal responsibility will be divided, and the big spenders will win.

So as I see it, it's essential that we who want to curb the incredible and irresponsible growth of government spending stand together. The task now is to get a constitutional amendment before the Senate and House, have a full debate, and send the best possible proposal to the states.

"mobilization or wartime footing" that is simply beyond U.S. capacity to match.

Carter's apparent willingness to hold down defense spending, on grounds that it is a major budget-balancing tool, flatly contradicts this careful statement made by Defense Secretary Harold Brown last Dec. 13. "Should our assumptions as to future inflation...later prove to have been underestimates, the administration will take appropriate action to preserve the integrity of this program."

The sudden spurt in the rate of inflation is why Carter should be making major additions to his defense budget — if he and Brown really meant what they said. Confidential estimates from the Office of Management and Budget to key congressional committees show no such additions. Just to keep the pre-Afghanistan budget intact, for example, Carter needs to ask about $7.5 billion in new money for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

This display of presidential decision-making has its counterparts. Right after the Afghan invasion, promises were made with fanfare to arm Pakistan. But the amount of money offered, military experts uniformly agree, was too paltry for Pakistan to take the chance of alienating Moscow. The whole deal dissolved into embarrassing thin air.

Likewise, a series of proven underground Soviet nuclear tests believed by the U.S. to violate the test-ban treaty, the latest on Dec. 23, have gone unchallenged by the U.S.

The most likely explanation is found in that same transformation of Jimmy Carter that has turned him from a pledged advocate of strong defense to a Pentagon budgetcutter: He truly does not perceive the Russians as dangerous enemies but as partners, with the partnership momentarily distracted by Afghanistan.

Under this theory, widely held by the president's critics, the transformation of Jimmy Carter was not his move toward military budget-cutting; it was his unaccustomed tough talk right after the Soviet move to Kabul. What is now coming into view, then, is the real Jimmy Carter following a very brief metamorphosis.

mugger went about his business, was rigged with an explosive device that 10 seconds or so later would blast the miscreant out of his socks. I don't mean maim him, but it should pack enough firepower to scare him onto the path of redemption.

The trick, of course, would be to prevent the booby trap wallet from going off at a time when the bearer is not the victim of someone's felonious little plans.

Maybe besides the cash, the dummy wallet could have sewn into its lining a James Bondish sensor device or a low-frequency radio signal, so the detectives could immediately get on the trail of the mugger.

I don't know if female mugging victims have taken to carrying alternate handbags, but the possibilities here are much greater. A mouse trap in the coin purse or a Roman candle swooshing out of a compact, like a Nike missile from its silo, could dissuade all but the most hardened malefactors from the path of future crime.

Mugging is never funny, but if something bizarre and garishly grotesque befell the perpetrator it might have more of a scare effect than an afternoon treading the boards in the police lineup or listening to another sermon in municipal court.

Those 'Virginia Dare Stones' Marked FAKE

By NOEL YANCEY

Back around 1940, many American historians were excited by a group of carved stones which had turned up during the previous three years in North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. If they were proven genuine, they would solve one of the most intriguing riddles in American history: What happened to the Lost Colony of Roanoke Island.

In October of 1940, a group of 34 scientists and historians met at Brenau College in Gainesville, Ga., and studied the 48 stones which had been found from tidewater North Carolina to Georgia. Carved on the stones were inscriptions which appeared to be messages from Eleanor Dare, mother of Virginia Dare, to her father, John White — governor of the ill-fated colony which had vanished after White left Roanoke Island in 1587 to return to England.

At the conclusion of their session in Gainesville, the scientists and historians agreed on a statement saying the "preponderance of the evidence" points to the authenticity of the stones. Those at the session included Dr. C.C. Crittenden, then director of the N.C. Department of Archives and History.

Newspapers had been titillating their readers with reports on the stones since a tourist had ostensibly discovered the first stone on the swampy bank of the Chowan River near Edenton in the fall of 1937 and turned it over to Dr. Haywood J. Pearce Jr., then professor of history at Emory University at Atlanta.

The message on the stone indicated that the 117 colonists had left Roanoke Island some time after White had sailed for England for supplies. But instead of going to Croatoan to live with the Indians, whose Chief Manteo was friendly, they had trekked on to the lower Chowan area where they were beset by "misarie and Warre" and sickness which reduced their number to 24. And finally the Indians had massacred all but seven of them. The victims included Eleanor Dare's husband Annanias and their daughter, the first English child born in the New World.

The stone indicated the names of the 17 murdered colonists had been inscribed on another stone. This brought Pearce and the California tourist who had reported finding the stone, later identified as L.F. Hammond, and others to the Edenton area to search for the second stone. Failing to find it, Pearce offered a $500 reward to its finder.

Some 17 months after Hammond's appearance, William Eberhart, an Atlanta carpenter and stonemason, brought in a carved stone he said he had found near the Saluda River, about 12 miles south of Greenville, S.C. He returned in two weeks with two other stones and a week later with a fourth. One of these said that "Heyr laeth Ananias and Va." and listed 17 names. It also said, "Father wee goe SW."

So, with this clue, Pearce asked Eberhart to search in a southwesterly direction for more stones; and more were found along the Chattahoochee River in Georgia until the total reached 48. Pearce contended that part of one stone had lain on the floor of a mill for years, its carvings considered "Indian writing". The other half of that stone had been placed in the foundation of a barn 40 years previously, Pearce said. It also was found. In a cave near the river, searchers found the inscription, "Eleanor Dare Heyr Sithence 1593," which translates "Eleanor Dare here since 1593."

Country Sunday Still Fresh In The Memories

ALTOONA, Al. – The house, the mountain, and the gold came together early in my life. The house belonged to my great-uncle Jessie and Aunt Jenny; the mountain to Uncle Jessie and my grandfather; and the gold to anyone who could find it.

Uncle Jessie lived about ten miles from Altoona, down an old dirt road that few cars had traveled. The house sat in front of the mountain and was surrounded by woods.

It was an old-fashioned white house that looked as if it should be there. A holly tree stood at the front, and a supply of coal was stacked by the left side. The area to the right of the house was cleared for a vegetable garden, and to the left, just visible through the trees, was the outhouse. They had a modern bathroom installed in the late sixties, but the outhouse was left standing for emergencies and children.

The front door was saved for special company. Being family we entered the back way, through the kitchen. When I think of that kitchen, I never see the total room. I see the big wooden table, with one of Aunt Jenny's homemade cakes sitting in the center. There was always a knife beside it as though it were waiting especially for us.

The den was next, with the large coal furnace in the center of the room. In the summer, the furnace was pretty much ignored – but in the winter it was kept fat and hot, and life in the old house centered around it.

The living room was just off the den. I don't think anyone in the family ever sat on Aunt Jenny's good furniture. It was saved for best – and nothing was ever quite good enough. Bookcases lined one wall, but they were completely glassed in and always locked. On rainy Sundays Uncle Jessie would take out his key, unlock the case and let me pick one book. It was worse than choosing candy in the five-and-dime.

I'd finally choose my book and head for the furnace. Uncle Jessie would sit next to me, sprawled on the floor, reading the paper. I'd lie on my stomach with my feet tucked under the furnace, one half of me toasting and the other half cold. When we tired of reading he'd tell me stories about the "olden" days.

When I was eight or so, he told me about the gold. My grandfather had settled the land in the early 1900s. The local Indians took a liking to him, so one day they blindfolded him and took him up the mountain to a cave. When they removed the blindfold he was standing in the cave, with gold stacked everywhere he looked. The Indians took him back to the farm house. But nobody ever found that gold.

After that my Sundays became routine. I went into the house to "make my manners", and asked permission to climb the mountain. Uncle Jessie always said yes. Then he'd have Aunt Jenny cut me a piece of cake. He told me the cake was emergency rations, in case I got lost. But we both knew that this was unlikely.

The mountain was about half a mile high with boulders scattered over it. At the top was a 15-foot rock formation.

There was a cave-like crevice on the side where bobcats were supposed to live. I never believed they were there, though.

With the cake in one hand and a walking stick in the other I headed straight for the top. When I got to the "bobcat rock", I left the cake and began looking for gold.

I never found a cave big enough for hiding gold in. I looked under rocks for nuggets and waded in streams seeking my treasure – but it was never there. When the search was exhausted for a day, I went back to the rock, climbed to the top and ate my cake. It didn't matter so much that I hadn't discovered gold, because I'd seen and found so many other things.

I go back occasionally and ask permission to climb the mountain. Uncle Jessie still says yes. Aunt Jenny has died so he doesn't offer cake anymore. I climb straight to the top and sit on the "bobcat rock" and think – about what it's like to be eight years old and believe in buried treasure.

Some Practical Advice On Kids' Diets Needed

Nutritionists are always dishing out the strangest advice. The ideal size of helpings was the latest to attract my attention. In the article I read, mothers are advised that a good rule of thumb to follow for small children is one tablespoon of a particular food for every year of age.

I couldn't get Meg to eat four tablespoons of squash if I offered her a 5-minute shopping spree at a candy counter — which, according to this article, is exactly what I should never do.

Of course, I'd be the last one to disagree with that. Meg rarely gets sweets for rewards. And as a conscientious mother, I give her cheese, fruit, or peanut butter for snacks. I save the cookies for myself.

But I do object to the weird view of kids implicit in food articles. They are considered so important that their food preferences are supposed to be considered above those of every other family member. If a child does not like a food, the mother should substitute something else of the same nutritional value.

I can see where this might work on a single-parent family with one kid — if, of course, the parent is willing to subsist on cheeseburgers, plain rice, and bananas for the next 20 years. But in a traditional family with two or more children, just cooking and washing the dishes for one meal could take up to eight hours.

Not so, say the nutritionists. A child may be all-important, but he is dumb enough so that his food preference may be manipulated by the parent. When the kid deserves a reward, just give him broccoli.

This would never work with Meg. She may have resigned herself to peanut butter crackers, but that doesn't mean she doesn't know the difference between Ritz and Sarah Lee.

Just once I'd like to see some practical advice on food geared toward kids who weren't assembled in a computer terminal. For starters, I could use a strategy for getting children to eat a meal of the mother's choosing without a parent holding their heads back and ramming it down their throats or threatening to give them intravenous injections.

These are about the only choices left to our family since I was stupid enough to try to teach table manners on the advice of a psychologist who shared the nutritionist's view of kids. For days I excused Meg from the table every time she made us sick to our stomachs. Now, when she has finished what she wants (the milk), she immediately begins to dribble, smack or gag.

The other night I gave up. "You are going to eat your food no matter how revolting you are, young lady. You can start with the potatoes."

She crossed her arms. "I can't eat those. They have a green bean in them."

"Well, take the bean out!"

She lifted it gingerly with two fingers and stuffed the entire helping of potatoes into her mouth.

"Meg!" I gasped. "Stop eating like a pig. That makes other people lose their appetites."

"Then turn your head. You don't have to watch."

I considered strangulation, but opted for a more conciliatory approach. "Meg, what is it going to take to get you to eat the right way?"

Her eyes brightened. "Why don't you offer me dessert?"

Ford vs. Reagan Could Be A GOP Bloodbath

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

ORLANDO, Fla. — It seems only yesterday that we had a dozen contenders for the Republican presidential nomination: Reagan, Bush, Baker, Connally, Crane, Dole, Anderson, and even Pressler, Weicker and Stassen. Now we're down to two, unless—.

Unless Gerald Ford comes in. In which case, the former president is asking for the biggest bump on the head he ever suffered. Will he run? Say it ain't so, Jerry, say it ain't so.

The two survivors, of course, are Ronald Reagan and George Bush, and before long it will be Reagan by himself. John Anderson, the media event from Illinois, has no more chance of winning the GOP nomination than Millard Fillmore, Bill McKinley or Little Orphan Annie. Fillmore and McKinley are dead, alas, and Annie is merely make-believe. So much for Anderson.

A Ford candidacy is the bubble stuff of pipedreams, but it is the kind of bubble that gets inflated by last weekend's Harris Survey. The pollsters found Ford would beat Carter by 54 to 44 percent, while Reagan would trail Carter by 58 to 40.

The figures have less meaning, as a practical matter, than the figures last summer that showed Edward Kennedy beating Jimmy Carter 2-to-1. That was the picture before Kennedy actually announced his candidacy, whereupon the bubble burst. Jerry Ford is inviting the same experience.

One of the things that never ceases to amaze us, out on the campaign trail, is the capacity of presumably rational men for self-delusion. Four years ago, Henry "Scoop" Jackson honestly believed he could lick both Jimmy Carter and George Wallace here in Florida. All his friends kept telling him so. He finished third. This time around, we have watched the confident dreams of John Connally, Howard Baker and Bob Dole turn to dust.

Gerald Ford, one of the truly decent men in contemporary politics, is a victim of the same syndrome. Since he left the White House three years ago, he has basked in a glow of affection as warm as the Florida sunshine. Good old Jerry! He has ruminated over the near miss of 1976: If only Ohio, if only Texas, if only Mississippi! A mere handful of votes would have changed the outcome. Wherever he has traveled, friends have urged him to try, try again.

Well, Ulysses heard the sirens' voices, but before he could yield to temptation his crew lashed Ulysses to the mast. Mr. Ford's true friends should crack out 50 feet of rope and tie him down on the 18th green. Mr. Ford has been in politics all his life. He should have learned by this time how swiftly sunshine turns to rain. Once he formally enters the race, as captain of the Stop-Reagan team, much of this famous affection will dry up like a puddle on a sidewalk. Reagan's devoted supporters — the ones who blew those horrible horns at the Kansas City convention – would turn a nice clean fight into a veritable bloodbath.

There are other considerations also. The GOP nomination doesn't depend upon Harris Surveys or Gallup Polls or popularity contests. It depends upon delegates to the Detroit convention in July. Mr. Ford doesn't have them. Without an efficient campaign organization, he has no realistic prospect of getting them. His only hope lies in a brokered convention. As in a dream, Mr. Ford hears the first ballot totals: Reagan has 884 but he needs 998. The second ballot shows little change. The convention recesses for two hours. Rooms fill with smoke. Bush releases his delegates to Ford. Anderson does the same. The delegates reconvene. The coup is complete: Ford 1,000, Reagan 994.

I can hear those horns now. At the end of any such scenario the Republican Party would be a shambles. The slaughter would extend to congressional contests and even to state and local races. Ford would not be seen as a hero, but as a spoiler. We could have 1912 all over again, with Ford cast as Taft and Reagan as the Bull Moose, and Jimmy Carter as the Wilson who went home with the marbles.

News Briefs

UNC-G Chancellor Sworn In

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The eighth chief executive in the history of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro was sworn in during ceremonies Friday.

Dr. William E. Moran, 47, succeeded James S. Ferguson as chancellor at the school. Before coming to Greensboro, Moran had been chancellor of the University of Michigan for eight years.

Moran pledged to maintain a strong undergraduate program on the Greensboro campus, which has an enrollment of 9,753 students.

Suspends Liquor License

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The state Board of Alcoholic Control has suspended the liquor license of a Charlotte nightspot that featured male dancers who allegedly performed similated sex acts with customers.

The suspension, which will will cover 180 days starting on March 31, will prohibit the Liaisons Bar Discotheque from selling beer, wine or mixed drinks. Club general manager John Daunt said Friday the suspension will be challenged.

A state undercover agent, Lenora Topp of Asheville, testified at a previous hearing that, during an investigation, she saw a dancer's pubic hair, saw another caped dancer expose his genitals, and saw dancers allow customers to place dollar bills into their G-strings.

Priority For Ferry Runs

BUIES CREEK, N.C. (AP) — The state Transportation Board voted Friday to grant priority to certain commercial vehicles on almost one-fifth of the Hatteras to Ocracoke ferry runs during this summer's peak season.

But Transportation Secretary Thomas W. Bradshaw Jr. told the board that if the June 1-to-Labor Day pilot program runs into problems, it will be immediately terminated.

Under the plan, trucks providing commercial goods and other services on the Outer Banks would receive special loading permits for four daily departures each from Hatteras and Ocracoke, about 17 percent of the daily ferry runs.

There would be 38 other daily departures — 19 each from Hatteras annd Ocracoke — for which a priority will not be in effect.

Carter: Decision Up To Kennedy

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter says he doesn't expect Sen. Edward M. Kennedy to drop out of the race for the Democratic presidential nomiation despite the fact that Carter has won most of the early competition between the two men.

Carter told a news conference Friday that he has "done very well" in competition for the nomination thus far, defeating Kennedy in a dozen primaries and state caucuses while Kennedy has won twice.

Asked if he thinks he has Kennedy whipped, Carter replied that the primaries and caucuses are piling up and "we've done very well in those contests.

"But the acknowledgment of defeat is a judgment to be made completely by my opponents and not by me," he said.

Helms On Carter Proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., has called on President Carter to take his plans for spending cutbacks further than present proposals indicate, adding that the President should not wait until next year.

In a statement released from his office Friday, Helms said he was disappointed that Carter failed to "acknowledge the deadly role that the Federal Reserve has played in manipulating the dollar."

Predicts Steady Enrollment Increase

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — University of North Carolina president William Friday told the board of governors Friday that a slow but steady increase in college enrollment, as well as a higher number of adult students and increased enrollments of blacks, women and part-time students.

Friday offered the predictions at the board of governor's meeting at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

The president's statements echoed part of his testimony in February before the Advisory Budget Commission. The commission had requested information on how the 16-member system would respond to future enrollment trends and how the system would attract non-traditional students.

CP&L Seeks 19.44 Percent Hike

COLUMBIA (AP) — Citing inflation and the need to guarantee investors a certain profit margin, Carolina Power & Light Co. has asked the state Public Service Commission to approve a 19.44 percent increase in its electric rates.

The request was made Friday. C.J. Turner, a company official said at least part of the increase would be put into effect under bond within the next 30 days.

If approved in full, the increase would generate an additional $27.5 million in annual revenues for the utility. CP&L won approval of a 10.87 percent rate increase in 1978.

Turner said inflation accounts for 41 percent of the rate hike request. Another 27 percent stems from the addition of a 720,000 kilowatt unit at the Roxboro coal-fired plant in Person County.

Explores Vatican-China Ties

PEKING (AP) — Cardnal Franz Koenig of Vienna left Peking today for Nanking after talks with Chinese religious and political leaders about religious freedom in China and about possible diplomatic ties between Peking and the Vatican.

The cardinal said Thursday that China apparently is not interested in formal diplomatic links with the Vatican at this time. But he emphasized the lines of communication are open and said he would not exclude the possibility of future relations.

China and the Vatican have no diplomatic relations at present because the Holy See recognizes Nationalist China.

Threatens Boycott Of Japanese Goods

PENANG, Malaysia (AP) — A conservation group has threatened to call for worldwide boycott of Japanese goods if Japanese fishermen continue to kill the dolphins they say are endangering their fishing grounds.

The organization, Sahabat Alam Malaysian, the Malaysian brance of the Friends of the Earth group, appealed to the Japanse government to put a stop to the killing.

Iran's Election Results Begin To Trickle In

By United Press International

Early returns from Iran's elections trickled in Saturday but allegations of cheating clouded the first round of voting for the parliament that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini has charged with deciding the fate of the 50 Americans held hostage in the U.S. Embassy for 19 weeks.

About 24 hours after the polls closed, Tehran Radio said that only 23 candidates from a field of more than 2,000 had won seats in the new 270-member assembly.

While final returns were not expected until late next week, the split in the voting indicated that more electoral contests than originally anticipated might still be at stake in the run-off elections to be held next month.

Khomeini, who alone in Iran has the authority to order the release of the hostages, has refused to do so and ruled that the new parliament would decide their fate after it convenes in mid-May.

But there was no guarantee that parliament would take up the hostage crisis as its first order of business or postpone it to a later, indefinite date. Nor was there assurance it would vote to free the Americans held hostage in their own embassy since Nov. 4.

In the meantime, the new parliament found itself in the center of a controversy even before being elected.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who toured polling stations in Tehran Friday in a personal effort to keep the elections honest, complained of coercion, fraud and other electoral cheating.

Some of the candidates and parties contesting the election echoed his complaints — mostly involving attempts to trick or force illiterate voters to cast ballots for specific candidates.

Tehran Radio said that among the candidates who won the first round of voting by clear majorities, relieving them of the need to contest the election again in April, was Iran's chief executioner Islamic judge Sadeq Khalkhal — the man who has sent hundreds of persons to their deaths for supporting the ousted shah during his reign. Khalkhal won his seat in the holy city of Qom.

In Panama, the ailing shah was back in a hospital again, this time for a decision on whether he will have to undergo surgery on an enlarged spleen.

Doctors at Panama City's Paitilla Hospital, where the shah checked into a six-suite complex at $750 per day, pronounced the 60-year-old exiled monarch in "satisfactory" condition but said more tests would be conducted before setting any operating date.

Attending the shah in Panama was famed Houston heart surgeon Dr. Michael DeBakey, who arrived Friday night with a team of American doctors.

Carter Bitter About Hope For Hostages

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bitterly disappointed President Carter says even the election of a new Iranian parliament may not produce a settlement freeing American hostages held for more than four months.

In a glum report, Carter told the nation Friday night that authorities in Iran had reneged on their commitments and appear incapable of running their own government.

"They obviously do not have the authoritiy to speak and carry out their own commitment," he said at a news conference. "Whether they will have that authority after the elections are completed I don't know. I certainly hope so."

Carter did not say what promises Iran had not kept. But his angry accusation and personal disappointment clearly related to the collapse of a United Nations mission earlier this week.

The five panel members returned to New York after Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and militants in charge of the U.S. Embassy refused to permit them to see the Americans inside.

Carter indicated he did not think the Americans would be liberated soon, even though he said, "We have constant negotiations." The elections began Friday, but it could take a month to seat a new parliament.

"We have done everything we possibly could in the last four months to honor the principles of our nation ... to try to preserve in every way the health and the lives of those hostages, and to work for their freedom," Carter said.

"I don't know when they will be released," he said.

He called the continued detention of the Americans an "abhorrent act" and described the militants as terrorists.

At the same time, he offered no specific course of U.S. action. And the only ray of hope he glimpsed was that a new parliament might strengthen President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and other Iranian leaders.

"Whether they will have that authority after the elections are completed I don't know," Carter said. "I certainly hope so."

Livestock Farmers ...

depending on climate and weather."

Another disease, lepto spirosis, is occasionally a problem in this area. "It's a bacterial disease transmitted by means of urine contaminated water supply or food supply, or by natural breeding," Regans reported. "It's also spread by wild animals."

Dairymen as well as cattlemen have their share of difficulties in the spring. "Dairymen have problems this time of year with mastitis. A wet spring can cause this, and when there's plenty of running water," said the extension agent. Mastitis, an inflammation of the udder, can be treated with antibiotics but, says Regans, "It is a very costly problem. The farmer has to dump milk from cows after they've been treated and this can cause a tremendous loss of production."

For the sheep producers in Pitt County, spring is lambing season. "There will be many lambs to hit the ground the next few months," said Regans. "Many people don't know it but there are a number of sheep here, at least a couple of flocks.

"With sheep, as with any newborn animal, producers have to be very careful about naval infection," he explained. "It should be treated with iodine to avoid infection and soreness. Farmers should also be careful to make sure newborns get the colostrum, or the mother's first milk, which is very rich in antibiotics and nutrients."

Sheep producers will be shearing at the end of April and the beginning of May. The wool pool is held in June in Washington.

According to Regans, the problems arising with sheep this time of year are internal parasites and foot rot. "When it's wet like this, with mud and moist conditions, they develop foot rot," said the extension agent.

Hog and poultry production in Pitt County are much less seasonal than cattle and sheep production, but according to Regans, hog and chicken farmers are "building new buildings and repairing old ones, things the weather didn't allow in the winter.

"During the past winter hog producers have fought pneumonia and TGE. In spring they begin to recover from these things."

"One problem all types of livestock producers in Pitt County are experiencing is the problem of wild dogs," commented Regans. "We've had many sheep and several calves killed by abandoned dogs that have turned wild. The livestock is more or less defenseless against them."

Spring, although it signifies the end of breeding for some producer such as cattlemen and the beginning for others, sheep farmers for example, brings to all livestock producers a rest from the cold of winter and a chance to rejuvenate their operations for the seasons ahead.

Dole Drops Out Of Race

By TIMOTHY SHEEHY

LAWRENCE, Kan. (UPI) — Republican Sen. Robert Dole, who hoped his wry Kansas humor and midwestern conservatism would put him in the White House, Saturday withdrew from the 1980 presidential race.

While drawing an official close to a campaign that died after the New Hampshire primary and never really got off the ground, Dole left his political future uncertain.

He refused to commit himself to a bid for a third Senate term, saying he probably will make a decision after Kansas' April 1 primary.

Dole said his bid had been "a long shot from the start, but worth the effort." He said he "harbored no illusions about the odds" when he announced his candidacy last May 14 in his hometown of Russell, Kan.

It has been "clear for quite some time that I did not have the time, money, management or organization to remain a viable candidate," he said.

"I don't think I've had more than 13 seconds on NBC, but I suppose I'll get more than that tonight."

Dole did not endorse any of the other Republican contenders, but said he will work hard to help the candidate nominated in Detroit this summer get elected in November.

His departure leaves four major Republican contenders — Ronald Reagan, George Bush and Reps. Phil Crane and John Anderson.

His withdrawal came after he garnered only about 2,000 votes out of 2 million cast in GOP primaries in Alabama, Florida and Georgia.

Dole lost his eligibility for federal campaign matching funds March 6 because of dismal primary showings in consecutive weeks in New Hampshire and Massachusetts. He had finished last in the Iowa GOP's straw poll with just under 1.5 percent of the vote.

He was the fifth casualty of the 1980 GOP presidential race. John Connally dropped out March 9 after being badly beaten by Reagan in the South Carolina primary, while Howard Baker withdrew March 5 after fourth-place finishes in the Massachusetts and Vermont. The campaigns of Sens. Lowell Weicker of Connecticut and Larry Pressler of South Dakota never really took off.

Bogota Guerrillas Toughen Conditions

By MARTIN McREYNOLDS

BOGOTA, Colombia (UPI) — Leftist guerrillas holding 20 diplomatic hostages at the Dominican Embassy for 18 days have toughened living conditions for their captives following the collapse of ransom talks with the government, a diplomatic source said Saturday.

The hostages, including U.S. Ambassador Diego Asencio, are not being allowed the same number of telephone calls to their embassises and families, and the M-19 guerrillas have refused to accept Red Cross care packages for the estimated 32 to 35 hostages, the source said.

Previously, the hostages had been permitted several phone calls each day and received packages containing everything from the Bible and Koran to their favorite pipe tobacco.

The fifth round of negotiations broke down Thursday with the guerrillas still demanding a ransom and the release of jailed leftists facing court martial for subversion. But diplomatic sources said the terrorists had reduced their demand from the original $50 million and release of 311 prisoners.

No more talks have been scheduled but the government said it would resume negotiations whenever the guerrillas askedfor a new meeting.

The Colombian government has made no comment on an offer from Cuba to grant asylum to the guerrillas. Cuban Ambassador Francisco Ravelo handed a note with the offer to President Julio Cesar Turbay at the presidential palace Friday.

The newspaper El Tiempo Saturday identified "Comandante Uno", the hooded mystery leader of the guerrillas, as Everth Bustamente, a leftist labor lawyer and restaurant owner who dropped out of sight 15 months ago.

The report quoted army intelligence sources as saying Bustamante has been wanted by security agents ever since the M-19 tunneled into an army base north of Bogota in January, 1979, and stole several thousand weapons.

When agents went to his home in the small town of Zapaquira near Bogota, he had disappeared along with his wife and two children, abandoning his law office in the capital and a restaurant called La Pinata in the city's fashionable Chapinero district.

Virginia Dare Stones...

was president, included this information in a manuscript he sent the Saturday Evening Post in December, 1940. After it had checked with Dr. S.E. Morrison of Harvard University who said, "I believe them (the stones) to be genuine", the Post bought the manuscript and commissioned Boyden Sparkes to check the material. Sparkes' findings appeared in the Post of April 26, 1941.

Sparkes said he asked the publicity man for the Lost Colony pageant at Manteo why it was ignoring the stones, and was told because "everyone in Manteo knows they are fakes". He said on checking with State Sen. Bradford Fearing of Manteo, he was told of a stranger who had appeared in Manteo and offered to sell a stone relic of Virginia Dare.

The Sparkes article pointed out that Eberhart had participated in the finding of all the 48 stones except two, and that although many persons had searched for Dare stones, "only Eberhart seemed able to find stones; and never when he was watched...."

Although Morrison had written Sparkes, "I believe them (the stones) to be okay", he said he was troubled by the use of the words "primeval, trale (trail) and reconnoiter" on the stones. Sparkes pointed out that these words either were not used in the English language in 1587, or, in the case of trale, in a different sense.

The article also quoted Charles Bennett, who farmed the land where Eberhart said he found the South Carolina stones, as saying he "never saw anything like 'em ... They just weren't there."

Finally, Sparkes applied his clincher. He said that one day he suddenly noticed an acrostic on a photograph of stone No. 15 which I.A. Turner, a friend of Eberhart, said he had found in Hall County, Ga., in March 1939. The acrostic formed the word Emory. Sparkes wrote that further examination revealed additional acrostics, including Atlanta and Pearce.

"Then I found what seems to me the final word in this matter", Sparkes wrote. "It is in fair Roman capital letters at the top of the stone. When a picture of it is held a child would be able to read, 'F A K E'."

Craven Hospital Loses Application For Funds

An $11,889,000 application for the addition of 58 beds and expansion and renovation of ancillary services at Craven County Memorial Hospital was disapproved by the Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency during a Mar. 12 meeting in Greenville.

There were 20 disapprovals, eight approvals and five abstentions. Among the reasons for disapproval of the application for a required Certificate of Need, the governing body listed: lack of demonstrated need for the hospital beds; the availability of alternative, less costly and more effective methods; questionable availability of financial and manpower resources; the project's relationship to existing services; relationship of the project to the hospital's own long-range plans; noncompliance with the State Medical Facilities Plan; and the lack of support from the Craven County Board of Commissioners. The ECHSA's recommendation for disapproval has been forwarded to the state Certificate of Need Section of the Department of Human Resources for final action.

All other health care proposals considered by the agency that evening were unanimously approved, including: National Migrant Worker Council's East Coast Migrant Health Project; Twin-County Rural Health Center Inc.'s Second-year Continuation of Rural Health Initiative; Edgecombe-Nash Mental Health Center Financial Distress Grant; Edgecombe-Nash Mental Health Center's Children's Resources Services Grant; and Wilson-Green Mental Health Center's Renewal of Operations Grant.

In other action, the governing body registered its formal approval of the 1980-85 Health Systems Plan for Eastern North Carolina (HSP) after incorporating a change that came as a result of public hearing commented. The group added the following objective within the prevention section of the HSP: "By 1985, to increase the number of school health manpower (educators, nurses, aides, etc.) working in Eastern North Carolina public and private schools. The 700-page HSP, called the blueprint for guiding change in Eastern North Carolina's health care system, provides the major documentation for the decisions and actions of the ECHSA.

The group granted the approval necessary for the agency to coordinate efforts with other N. C. health systems agencies toward providing a united front to Dr. Sarah Morrow of the Dept. of Human Resources regarding the problem of N. C. nursing homes for which construction is approved but not underway. Because of the state's restriction on numbers of nursing home beds, these "paper beds" are preventing the approval of applications for construction that could alleviate the current shortage of long-term care beds in Eastern North Carolina.

Local National Guardsmen Involved In Airlift Operations

OUT OF THE RAMP . . . A jeep is driven from the lowered ramp of a 130-B cargo carrier at the Pitt-Greenville Airport late Saturday. Two more jeeps were carried on the plane in an exercise between Pope Air Force Base and Greenville.

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Sunday Editor

The 514th Military Police Company of Greenville "is one of the units selected to have a part in this joint operation," commented Captain Hoyt G. Leggett, the unit's commanding officer.

On Saturday, and again today, National Guardsmen from units in Washington, Greenville and Kinston are carrying out a special training operations with the support of the 145th Airlift Command in Charlotte, a unit of the N.C. Air National Guard.

"The purpose of this program is for the men to experience first hand loading equipment and personnel using the 130-B aircraft," Leggett explained. The 130-B is a newer version of the versatile 130-A, long a war horse in military transport.

The pilot of the plane which made two shuttle runs from Pope Air Force Base (adjacent to Ft. Bragg) to the Greenville airport was Major Tonto Kerney. He carried with him a crew of seven, though one of the crew members noted "six is our normal crew."

Just before sunset, the bulky, four-engine propellar driven aircraft touched down smoothly on the runway at Pitt-Greenville airport. Within minutes after the plane taxied in, the rear-end loading ramp was lowered, and three jeeps were driven off the plane in quick succession. A short time later the craft was airborne for its return to Pope.

Among others involved in the exercise were Major Odell (Golden) Duke, executive officer of the 167th MP Battalion in Washington, and two Greenville based NCO's, SFC George Pleasant and 1st Sergeant Bruce Baker.

"Guardsmen are getting a more active role than ever before in practical training like this," Leggett said. "Our level of preparedness is definitely on the upswing."

He added that men of the 514th and from other units also received some practical experience in assistance they provided to hospitals and law enforcement agencies during the recent snow.

Americans May Soon Feel Effects Of Inflation Control

By DONALD H. MAY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Americans will feel the effects of President Carter's new inflation control program shortly in the form of less consumer credit and higher gasoline prices, the government's top economists said Saturday.

Tightening of consumer credit will take place very quickly and, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker told reporters, "It will be broadly felt."

"A certain amount of pain is inevitable in this process," Volcker said, noting that Americans owed $68 billion on all kinds of credit cards at the end of 1979, plus $116 billion on personal loans. More than 60 million people have credit cards and the average credit-card holder has eight.

In addition to finding credit tighter, motorists will start paying 10 cents more for a gallon of gasoline in May as the effects of the new $4.62 fee on each barrel of imported oil reaches the gasoline pumps, Charles Schultze, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said.

Schultze said the effects of the administration's plan to balance the 1981 federal budget, by trimming $13 billion to $14 billion in spending, will take longer to reach the public as program cuts gradually take effect.

Some of these cuts have been announced, including $1.7 billion in revenue sharing for states, $859 million in welfare reform and $265 million in mass transit.

But officials said they still were working on others, and a full list will not be announced until month's end.

Budget Director James McIntyre declined to say whether ending Saturday delivery of mail ultimately will be included in the package.

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller said the goal of balancing the budget will require Americans to forego tax cuts for the time being.

"We must first demonstrate discipline on the budget side before we can turn to the promise of tax reduction," Miller said. Once the budget is balanced — "not in promise but in fact" — Miller said the administration will consider tax cuts, both for business as a way of increasing productivity and for individuals to ease their tax burden.

All the officials cautioned during news conferences that Carter's steps will not reduce inflation overnight. Said Volcker: "Inflation is going to remain at an exceptionally high rate for a few months."

Volcker and Miller each noted that Carter's plan is not without risk of creating a more serious recession than the administration expects. But both said unrestrained inflation is an even worse risk.

Alfred Kahn, Carter's chief inflation adviser, expressed personal frustration at not being able to curb the inflation rate — which hit an annual rate of 18 percent in January.

The Federal Reserve's new controls on consumer credit apply to such things as credit cards, bank overdraft plans and personal loans without collateral. They do not cover housing mortgages, automobile loans, home improvement or secured purchase of appliances.

They do not set requirements directly on individuals. Instead they require the lenders — for example, those who issue credit cards — to deposit with the Federal Reserve 15 percent of any increase in outstanding loans beyond the end of February.

Volcker said that will cost lenders more if they increase loans, giving them an incentive not to increase credit.

Tar Heel Reaction

By The Associated Press

President Carter's promise of a balanced federal budget in fiscal 1980-81 drew cautious praise from North Carolina's business and political leaders Friday.

But until the proposals are translated into laws and regulations with specific goals and consequences, the impact upon Tar Heel consumers cannot be foreseen, according to more than one dozen state and business officials.

"This is an election year. It's one thing to announce the (budget) cuts and another thing to get them," said Robert Thomason, an economist with North Carolina National Bank. "The economy has grown too fast — in large part because of government policy — and now we're going to have to pay for it."

Thomason said the program "may hasten the onset of a recession; unemployment will go up, and that's where we'll pay for it."

The president's proposal to curtail new consumer credit — including credit card use — "will cool off" the economy, said G. Wesley Williams, executive director of the Raleigh Merchants Bureau. "Just how much will depend upon the degree of restriction."

Raleigh Mayor G. Smedes York said he did not know what effect Carter's proposal to cut back federal revenue-sharing and other funds would have on Raleigh.

The city budget includes about $2.6 million in federal revenue-sharing funds, according to York.

"We certainly have to do some things to balance the federal budget, which has been the primary cause of inflation," York said. "I just want to be sure Raleigh gets its fair share of what's available."

Greenville Churches Focus On Mental Retardation Programs

Today is Sabbath Sunday, a Sunday set aside by the churches in Greenville to recognize National Mental Retardation Month and to bring public attention to the programs in the area that benefit the mentally retarded.

One of these programs is the Adult Developmental Activity Program, located on Fourteenth Street in Greenville. This program assists the adult mentally retarded of the area in developing adult skills such as use of public transportation, self-care skills and other basic abilities.

Says program director Carl Rothrock, "We work on basic skills and abilities, things that help the individuals function in everyday society."

The age range for the program, according to Rothrock, is from around 21 to 51.

Several other centers around Pitt County, located in Farmville, Ayden and Grifton and help other retarded persons learn basic skills. A center for youth also operates in Greenville.

Surrender Party Planned

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — The "war" between student governments at the University of Missouri at Columbia and the University of Wisconsin at Madison has barely begun and already they're planning the surrender party.

The war between the campuses began in February as a joke and has escalated in what students say is an effort to demonstrate how ridiculous war is. About 30 other universities have joined in the fray.

"It started as a joke, just something we did for grins," said Daniel Jordon, a Missouri sophomore designated as field marshall and spokesman for the university's War Council. "Now it's an opportunity to make a mockery of war."

The War Council has held rallies and students have donned ceremonial titles.

Duke Divers In Training

DURHAM, N.C. (UPI) — Scientists at Duke University said Saturday that three men locked in a steel pressure chamber were performing normally despite being at a record pressure level equivalent to 2,133 feet underwater.

"The amazing thing is at this depth, they're so normal," said Dr. Peter B. Bennett, the director of the experiment.

The three men — all volunteers — were scheduled to begin about 12 days of decompression Saturday afternoon, 24 hours after setting a record for an experimental "dive."

The men tied the world record of 2,001 feet on Thursday and went to a pressure equaling 2,132 feet below sea level on Friday. They were Stephen Porter, a commercial diver with Oceaneering International, a Houston, Texas, diving firm, Delmar "Bud" Shelton, a physician's assistant, and William Bell, a fourth-year medical student.

Bennett said the depth was actually equivalent to 2,133 feet, "but I'll accept 2,132."

"Things are going very well," he said. "They are able to carry out a great deal of work without trouble."

Bennett, a native of Portsmouth, England, said previous attempts to reach record depths were hampered by High Pressure Nervous Syndrome, a phenomena marked by complaints of nausea, vomiting and tremors at depths below about 1,000 feet.

But the inclusion of nitrogen to the traditional helium and oxygen breathing mixtures in the chamber apparently eliminated the problem, Bennett said.

None of the three men in the chamber reported any problem with HPNS, Bennett said, although Shelton reported that he sometimes felt he could not get enough air to breathe while he was eating.

"There is no reason for it because his arterial blood gases are normal," said Bennett, who added Porter and Bell were experiencing no problems.

Atmospheric pressure at sea level is 14.7 pounds per square inch, but Bennett said the pressure in the chamber was over 900 pounds per square inch — so great that pillows the men threw at each other drifted through the special mixture of oxygen, helium and nitrogen that the men were breathing.

Although Bennett said he was pleased with the record, "The exciting thing is we have removed a very difficult barrier to deep diving. It's now difficult to say what the limits of man are in deep diving when a week ago we couldn't reach 1,500 feet."

Bennett, who began research into diving in 1953 with the British Navy, said he believed for some time that the inclusion of between 5 and 10 percent nitrogen into the breathing mixture would offset the pressure syndrome but other scientists "just felt this wouldn't work."

The record-breaking experiment began March 6 and was originally planned to go to a pressure equal to 1,500 feet underwater, but when that level was reached with no problems, the three participants agreed to go further.

Two of the three wanted to continue to higher pressures, Bennett said, but he felt the experiment should stop Saturday so members of his research team could evaluate the findings.

Earth Day Countdown

DELAND, Fla. (AP) — While stereos, popcorn poppers and hotplates were idle for more than five hours at Stetson University in a prelude to Earth Day, students ate by candlelight, held group discussions — and saved their school money.

Earth Day enthusiasts arranged the 5½-hour campus blackout on Thursday as part of their "Countdown to Earth Day." The main event is April 22.

Stetson officials said 390 stereos, 332 refrigerators, 101 popcorn poppers, 216 television sets, 194 ovens and hotplates and 624 hair dryers owned by the residents of 668 dormitory rooms were turned off during the blackout.

THE JACK DANIELS ORIGINAL . . . Silver Cornet Town Band will be in concert at Wright Auditorium at 8 p.m. Monday, March 24. The band, conducted by Dale Fulmer, will recreate music of the turn of the century. Tickets are priced at $4 and are available from the ECU Central Ticket Office.

Daniels Band To Perform Here

The sounds of small town bands at the turn of the 20th century will be recreated when Jack Daniels Original Silver Cornet Band appears in concert in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus Monday, March 24 at 8 p.m.

The concert is under the auspices of the Student Union Special Attractions Committee.

In 1892 in Lynchburg, Tenn. bourbon distiller Jack Daniels decided the town needed a band. It was customary for small rural towns in America — especially in Tennessee, to have a town band made up of people such as clerks, harness makers, blacksmiths, and bankers.

Their instruments were conical horns, nickle-plated and temperamental — nearly impossible to control and play in tune by the perspiring home grown players full of enthusiasm and energy.

The band played at funerals, saloon openings and at regular appearances in the typical gazebo bandstand in courthouse squares or similar locations. The band's repertoire ranged from raucous to reverent, from music hall to battlefield, from popular to patriotic.

Dale Fulmer, after research on town bands, has recreated a typical town band. It has appeared in several PBS specials and has toured extensively throughout the country. A recent appearance was made at Lincoln Center.

Tickets for the Wright performance are now on sale at $4. These are available from the ECU Central Ticket Office and will also be sold at the door prior to performance.

ECU String Orchestra To Perform

The East Carolina University String Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Paul Topper, will appear in concert at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday, March 19 in the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall. There is no admission charge and the public is invited.

Four compositions are to be performed on the evening's program, beginning with two Purcell overtures from the anthems — "Behold, I bring you glad tidings," and "My son shall always be of the loving kindness of the Lord." This will be followed by two Gabrieli canzoni — "Canzon prima (La Spriitata)" and "Canzon seconda;" the Woodhouse arrangement of Beethoven's "Rondo Espressivo;" and will conclude with Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D Minor."

Soloists for the Vivaldi work will be Marilyn Herrmann and Katherine Campbell, violinists; and Barbara Salter, cellist.

In addition to these three, other members of the orchestra are: Amanda Kartchner, first violin; Larry Lyles, Susan Harris and Alyssa Graber, second violin; Jeffrey Hertzberg and Lynne Willis, viola; James Hudgins, cello; and Rick Vizachero, double bass.

Louisburg Festival Scheduled

COLLISION COURSE — This scene was photographed just seconds prior to the violent end of an American Coot, shown above flying for its life above a marsh near Collington Island. Closing in for the kill from behind was a large hawk that had been cruising above the marsh just as the coot chose to break cover. For a brief period the two birds swooped and glided through the morning air, the duck's wings beating furiously as it tried to out-maneuver the hawk. It could not. The scene above shows the hawk on its final approach. Seconds later the drama was over; and then, not a sound disturbed the silence of the marsh. (Photo by J. Travel Film To Be Shown Thursday

"Northwest Adventure," a Don Cooper film that was three years in the making, is next on the Travel Film series to be shown at East Carolina University.

Cooper will appear in Hendrix Theater at 8 p.m. on Thursday, March 20 to show and comment on his film. It is based on a steamboat trip through Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. The steamboat, which he built himself, travels through a wilderness filled with wild animals, fabulous fishing areas, and white water.

Among scenes filmed are those of a bull elk battling a grizzly bear and smoke jumpers parachuting into a raging forest fire.

The film ends with a look at one of the last log drives in the U.S. with thousands of board feet of lumber rushed down the St. Joseph River in Idaho.

Tickets are priced at $2. They are on sale at the Central Ticket Office or can be purchased at the door prior to showtime.

A Review

Nudity Mars 'Canterbury Tales'

As a general rule, if there's a minimum of nudity in a film, the newspaper ads, posters and other advertisements will carry a maximum of spicy, crowd-drawing allurements that may in truth refer only to one brief exposure of flesh.

Using that premise as a guide to expectations, I was disconcerted to discover that "The Canterbury Tales," now playing at Buccaneer No. 1, is rampant with nudity — frontal, rear, side views, in single figures, couples, groups and congregations.

Thus, the ad of five fully clothed actors which would imply the film is a historical costume period one with perhaps a bare arm or a modestly plunging neckline or two, is blatantly misleading.

When costumes are used in "The Canterbury Tales," they're impressive in variety and apparent authenticity, ranging from drab work clothes to elegant suffocations of silk, satin, fur and velvet. One nice historical touch, many of the opulent floor-dragging fashion pieces look as much in need of cleaning as the rags of teen-age urchins.

More than any film I've seen in a long time, "The Canterbury Tales" provide a baffling and irritating mixture of compelling satisfying moments invariably countered by scenes of the most amateurish awkwardness. It seems too that if there was an interpretive choice between the saving grace of finesse and the flamboyant stimulation of public prurience, the option most times went to the latter choice.

Since I arrived after the credits had been shown, I can only make the conjecture that this is another in the familiar line of cinematic ventures involving a potpourri of international talents. It's a Pier Paolo Pasolini film featuring Hugh Griffith, Laura Betti, Ninetto Davoli, Franco Citti, Alan Webb, Robin Asquith, and others with English or Italian-style names. (It was a winner of the Golden Bear Award at the Berlin Film Festival, whatever that may mean in the terms of prestige). English-language dubbing at times is sadly obvious.

To what extent this film follows the story line of Chaucer's classic tales told by the English pilgrims on a trip to pay homage to the shrine of Thomas of Becket, I'll not venture to say — it has been years since I read the work. However, "The Miller's Tale" is the only one that registers in my memory as being fully told.

It strikes me that many scences are derivitive snippets selected more for their more ribald possibilities than for a balanced perspective on the vices and virtues of the populace of England in the late 14th century.

One real plus. The locales (in Italy?) are splendid. Sparsely furnished, monumental interiors of churches and castles, dingy, cramped living quarters are not only photographically handsome, but effectively establish a believable ambience of the living conditions of those days nearly 600 years ago. Rural scenes and a formal park of green beauty add much to the visual delight.

With a little bit of restraint and an added measure of intelligent adaptation, this could have been a vastly rewarding film.

As it is, if you can ignore the over-abundance of nudity, including the garish final scene at the gates of hell where bare males sprayed in shades of pink, green, and red covort, you might find the architecture, the music, courtly pageantry, and occasional flashes of wit compensation enough to endure some scenes that are to say the least, revolting.

Otherwise, mark "The Canterbury Tales" off as a misguided potboiler that does little credit to Mr. Chaucer's time-tested masterpiece.

New Adult Toy Game From The Frisbee Man

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

SAN GABRIEL, Calif. (AP) — To Ed Headrick's way of thinking, a bit of the child lurks in every adult, aching to get out. The trick is in finding a grown-up excuse for letting it.

So he sold the world the Frisbee. Then he sold the world the Superball. Now what do you suppose he's up to? Disc golf.

"The results are amazing," he said. "We discovered that children, and also adults who are children, love disc golf. They play by the rules or by their own rules. They play alone or together. They play one hole or 18. They play. That's the point.

"When we built our first disc golf course, at Oak Grove Park in Pasadena, the police told us that not only did vandalism virtually cease in the park but also in the surrounding area. Not bad."

Not bad at all, especially considering that, since that first course, built five years ago, Headrick has built more than 100 additional disc golf courses at public parks in 22 states.

When Ed Headrick gets an idea in his head, that kind of success is, well, par for the course.

Take the Frisbee. Back in 1964, toy discs with names like "Flying Saucer" and "Pluto Platter" were languishing in the Wham-O toy company warehouse waiting in vain for a juvenile demand.

At the time, Ed Headrick, 40 and restless, was running a water heater company. He knocked at Wham-O's door.

No openings. Very well, he said, he would work without pay for three months. If they wanted to keep him, he would stay.

He renamed the plastic discs Frisbees, after the Frisbie Pie Company's tin plates which students used to sail around campuses. He added the characteristic Frisbee ridges around the perimeter.

He packaged them in containers saying "Official Professional Frisbee," or "Intercollegiate Sport Model."

Next, the Superball. These, silly little balls that bounced high and erratic, also were awaiting discovery.

"I test-marketed the Superball in a liquor store, where I knew no kids would see it," Headrick recalls. "I took it there every day and played with it. Adults buy toys, not kids.

"The store was near the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. Those NASA scientists couldn't resist it. They all wanted one. Finally, NASA had to ban Superballs from the lab. Nobody was doing any work. They were all playing with Superballs."

Now Headrick's full-time passion is disc golf. All it involves is tossing Frisbees at targets resembling waste baskets over an 18-hole course.

Poetry Forum Meets Thursday

The second meeting for the month of March of the ECU Poetry Forum will be held at 8 p.m. Thursday, March 20 in Room 248, Mendenhall Student Union Building.

Forum director Phillip Arrington invites all persons interested in poetry to attend. There is no charge involved, and those bringing poems to be read and discussed are asked to bring several copies of each poem.

BOOK NEWS

Robert Ludlum is back again with another high-tension thriller full of mind-twisting suspense. In THE BOURNE IDENTITY, a man is dragged from the sea on a small island in the North Mediterranean with bullet wounds about his head. He has no memory and is given the name Jason Bourne. Unknown men recognize him and lash out in fear and fury to kill. On Zurich, a woman comes into his life — first as a hostage, then as an ally, finally as the only person who believes in him. In Paris, his origins are given substance. He is an international assassin hunted by unseen armies. Or is he really an assassin? The final journey takes Jason Bourne to a quiet, tree-lined street in Manhattan where violence erupts. Robert Ludlum has created a man in conflict with forces beyond his understanding, and a woman who is determined to find the truth about the man she loves.

Another tantalizing thriller is THE MAN WHO LOST THE WAR by W.T. Tyler. This harrowing adventure story begins in 1962 at the beginning of the Berlin crisis. In a chance meeting, David Plummer, disillusioned American intelligence officer, discusses his new business with a man known as Wuff. Years later, the assassination of a low level British traitor provokes a complex intrigue involving both Plummer — reenlisted by the CIA — and Wuff — revealed as a Soviet agent. Both men are caught in the machinery of politics that negates humanity.

From the author of DUEL IN THE SUN comes a lusty family saga set in California. Niven Busch's CONTINENT'S EDGE covers the restless period between two world wars. It opens with the discovery of oil, and for the next twenty years, the Kensales ride that monstrous force, some to triumph, some to disaster. Their vast land holdings establishes KinOil as a major world power, but also undermines the once closely knit family with jealousy, greed and ambition. Encompassing the whole climate and terrain of California is a fascinating picture of its movies, ranching, politics and high finance.

Anna Gilbert's latest novel, THE LEAVETAKING, is a tale of secrets and surprises. It is the story of two sheltered and impressionable young women, Isabel Penrose and her cousin Lydia. Their lives are changed forever when a traveling artist comes to their late-nineteenth-century English town and paints a disturbing picture of the two of them.

ILL-FATED COUPLE — Richard II (Derek Jacobi) and his Queen (Janet Maw) will be forcibly separated in Shakespeare's epic chronicle of rebellion, "Richard II," to be broadcast from 8 to 11 p.m. Wednesday, March 19 over PBS (Channel 25, Greenville). Others in the cast are Sir John Gielgud, John Finch, and Dame Wendy Hiller. "The Shakespeare Plays," a six-year series of all 37 of his works, are made possible by grants from Exxon Corp., Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. and Morgan Guaranty Trust Co.

ECU Professor Researches Energy Attitudes In Greenville

By WILLIAM SHIRES
Director, ECU News Bureau

A "Social phenomenon" study by an East Carolina University sociologist indicates that the 35,000 people of Greenville have reached a peak in their efforts to reduce current levels of energy consumption.

In the absence of more information and new energy conservation programs and policies, a majority of Greenville citizens "do not seem to know of any other way within their means to reduce energy consumption still further," the study shows.

"There appears to be a need for more energy information for all classes of citizens," says the researcher, Dr. Avtar Singh of the ECU Department of Sociology and Anthropology.

"Most citizens do not seem to believe that there really is an energy shortage," says Singh in a 67-page report of findings and implications of his six months socio-economic attitudes study.

He said this may be "an important factor in the generally negative attitudes toward energy programs and policies." He felt that increments in the "level of awareness" about energy matters may bring about a "greater corresponding change" in attitudes toward local energy programs among blacks than among whites.

Singh's study indicated that in the matter of information, blacks and lower income groups "may be served best through radio and television programs." A multiple-media approach appears to be a "more effective strategy" for middle and upper class persons, he said.

The India-born sociologistz said he found that people generally are opposed to mandatory energy policies and fuel rationing. They expect that future energy policies should include:

— stricter energy standards in the building codes.

— laws requiring landlords to improve energy efficiency in rental units.

— more tax incentives for energy conservation.

— greater efforts to develop more economical sources of energy along with steps to stabilize fuel prices.

In his research Singh sought to identify and examine major socio-economic factors tending to influence energy-related attitudes and behavior.

"The findings of this study suggest a number of implictions for energy action programs and policies," Singh said. "First, contrary to what some might believe, energy conservation behavior does not appear to be simply a function of the availability of economic resources and knowledge about the pertinent techniques alone. This analysis suggests that it is a social phenomenon."

Local energy officials believe the Singh study is unique and innovative. Federal energy officials have also commented "on the innovativeness of such an instrument in the overall community energy planning process," said Reese Helms, local manager of the Office of Energy Conservation and Management.

The study "will serve as an important instrument in the local energy planning process," Helms said. "Our full utilization of the study has only begun . . ."

Singh reported "great concern" among people at all socio-economic levels "about increased energy costs and rising utility bills."

In general, he said, people may be expected to respond favorably to energy programs "if they have the needed resources and adequate information about energy conservation techniques, providing they identify with the local community.

"Socio-economic status and community identity tend to have a greater effect on citizen attitudes . . . and on their willingness to conserve energy than the level of awareness about energy conservation methods."

Singh said that communication and adequate information are "critical to the success of community programs," and that people tend to be selective in seeking information of greatest interest and benefit and use different sources and media to obtain it.

He added that what might, at first, "seem to be a random and amorphous conglomeration of discrete energy-related activities . . . may be, in fact, highly structured, and may change in a definable direction under the influence of a variety of socio-economic and psychological factors at work in the community."

To Reenact Noted Battle

RALEIGH — A weekend celebration featuring a reenactment of the last Confederate offensive of the Civil War, a rededication of a monument to Confederate dead, and an address by N.C. Attorney General Rufus Edmisten will be highlights of the second annual "Rededication Program" at Bentonville Battleground State Historic Site on Saturday and Sunday, March 22-23.

The battle program will be given from 1 to 5 p.m. on both Saturday and Sunday afternoon. Edmisten will speak at 11 a.m. Saturday. Admission is free, except for a fee for a lunch to be served Saturday.

Bentonville Battleground, located in Johnston County a few miles north of Newton Grove (off U.S. 701), is about 75 miles from Greenville (U.S. 13 to Goldsboro, Newton Grove, then north on U.S. 701). It is one of 24 historic sites administered by the N.C. Dept. of Cultural Resources.

Penobscot Indians Vote On Maine Land Claims

OLD TOWN, Maine (UPI) — Members of the Penobscot Indian Nation flocked to their reservation's new community center Saturday to vote on a proposed $81.5 million settlement of their claim to two-thirds of the state of Maine.

The Penobscot and Passamaquoddy tribes sued the state for 12.5 million acres and a billion dollars in trespass damages in 1972, claiming their land was taken from them illegally more than 150 years ago by unscrupulous settlers.

The proposed settlement announced by state officials last week, including $54.5 million for the tribes to buy 300,000 acres of land, may bring the tribe's lawsuit to an end.

The Penobscot vote was on a referendum advising the Indians' lawyers whether to submit the proposed agreement to the state Legislature and Congress, both of which must ratify the pact.

Results of the vote were not expected immediately, since about 500 of the Penobscot Nation's 1,400 members live in other states — principally Connecticut and California — and are voting by absentee ballot.

The Passamaquoddies already voted to approve the settlement. Penobscot leaders expected their vote would be close and, even if adopted, would do little to lessen a centuries-old hostility and mistrust toward the state.

"The mistrust goes all the way back to the treaties," said Penobscot Timothy Love, deputy tribal administrator. "The state of Maine swindled us out of our land in exchange for blankets and corn.

"There is still that mistrust. Several years ago there was a tribal member murdered in Newport and the killer got off with just probation.

"Things like this show how the state hasn't come through with their end of the bargain," said Love, who is the Penobscots' non-voting member in the Maine Legislature.

Maine has had stormy relations with Indians since statehood was achieved in 1820.

Old newspaper reports at the state library give accounts of failed Indian commissions, inadequate health care on the reservations and lawsuits filed by Indians claiming violation of constitutional rights.

Buzzards Return

HINCKLEY, Ohio (UPI) — The buzzards did not let Hinckley down.

The gawky, smelly birds with wingspans of up to six feet, have been returning to Hinckley every spring since 1818 and residents say they've come back on March 15 for the last 30 years.

But by late Saturday afternoon, with nary a buzzard in sight, some local buzzard-watchers were getting fidgety. About 300 persons paced rocky Hinckley Reservation, glancing at the gray sky and waiting with "Official Buzzard Day Spotter" Lt. James French, a Cleveland Metroparks ranger.

All worry evaporated at 3:28 p.m., however, when Steve Moss, a truck driver, pointed skyward and proclaimed, "That's a buzzard."

Moss has watched for returning buzzards for the past seven years.

The crowd applauded as the bird glided by on outstretched wings. Park rangers said the bird was a pilot and the main flock of buzzards should arrive in several days.

Park officials expect more than 40,000 visitors for buzzard watching and close to 5,000 for the breakfast. Local charities will sell craft items and a metropark naturalist will give a buzzard talk with the aid of a live buzzard.

The buzzards haven't let Hinckley down since 1818. Legend says the first flocks of the buzzards came to the Hinckley area to feast on the remains of a giant hunt of deer, bear and other animals by white settlers.

Spring Football

Pirates Without 18 Starters Under New Head Coach

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

New East Carolina football coach Ed Emory opens his first spring drills at the university on Friday, and experience is going to be one of the things that he'll miss most on opening day.

There are few people back with experience. Twenty-six seniors completed their eligibity last fall when the Pirates left the field after their final game. They include 18 of the 22 starting players.

Most of those who saw duty in back-up rolls didn't get that much experience, Emory points out, so it's going to be quite a rebuilding task that he inherits from former coach Pat Dye.

"Our first objective is going to be to get our personnel into the right places," Emory said. "If they are going to be as productive as possible in the fall, we have to make sure that their placement is right. That's really the reason you have spring practice, to make sure everyone is in the right place.

"A kid who might not be productive in one spot could be a starter in another. I'll admit sometime that it's difficult to tell, however, since you're going against yourself."

There are several key areas where Emory is especially interested in building things up. They include the offensive line, tight end, quarterback, defensive tackle, and a few spots here and there in the secondary and defensive line.

"In the offensive line, we've got to make sure that these positions. We lost everyone but Wayne Inman (guard) up front, and the most critical position is center."

In the offensive line, there is little experience behind those starters. Both Oscar Tyson and Gary Gambrell had some starting experience last year when injuries sidelined Joe Godette. Mike Tyson has a little experience at guard.

Another top position up front is tight end, where Billy Ray Washington graduated. There is little backup experience there.

Vern Davenport returns at the split end position.

In the backfield, both fullback Theodore Sutton and halfbacks Anthony Collins and Mike Hawkins return. The latter saw quite a bit of action, but was not a starter.

Leander Green, the outstanding quarterback of the Pirates is gone, leaving less experienced Henry Trevathan and Carlton Nelson to battle for the spot.

"Quarterback may be the most critical position on our whole team, since we have a limitation as to who we can move in," Emory said.

Defensively, the Pirates lost five of their first six tackles. They also plan to move Doug Smith, who started some games at nose guard to tackle.

John Hallow, who shared those nose guard duties, will not participate in spring practice, having joined the Pirate baseball team for the spring.

"This hurts us more than it hurts John, since we won't have a chance to see what we're like with him. We won't know his limitations until the fall," the coach said.

Willie Holley is the only returning starter in the secondary, although James Freer and Freddie Jones saw a lot of action in that area.

The most promising aspect of the game is that both kicking specialists return, Rodney Allen, to handle the punts, and Bill Lamm, with the placements.

"We really are going to have to work hard to try and get the best 11 people we can on the field, both offensively and defensively.

"There won't be a great deal of change in our schemes, since we plan to stick with the wishbone. But we're going to be more wide-open. We'll break the 'bone more and throw more.'"

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

SUNDAY MORNING MARCH 16, 1980

Emory hopes to get the players in the right places by the time the first ten days, the first half, of practice is over.

"Then, our secondary aim is to make them the best we can, to instill our philosophy in them, and to get them ready for the fall," Emory said.

Emory is hopeful that the weight program that has been installed will help. He notes that the players have already achieved an overall 10 per cent upper body improvement, and a 30 per cent lower body change. He hopes to get to 30 for the upper body and 40-50 in the lower body before the fall.

"The kids are working well, they enjoy the program. Not having them here this last week, however, will hurt some, and for those not here during the summer, we won't be able to supervise, and we don't know how much that will affect us now."

He added that in the first month, the team averaged a 20-pound increase in the bench press.

Emory is pleased with the attitude of the players going into spring drills. "These kids are the type who'll work their butts off. They have a great attitude and that could make a big difference for us."

Despite the fact that so many starters are gone, Emory remains optimistic. "The kids are dedicated. They've done all we asked of them during the off-season conditioning program. They've worked hard on the weights, and we look for them to come back enthused and ready to go into spring practice."

As to freshman, Emory can't tell what the future holds. They'll have to be looked at in the fall. "We certainly hope that we can count on some of them for backup roles," he said.

This is one year that the recruiting limit of 30 new players has hurt the Pirates.

"We could have recruited around 50," Emory said. "That would have allowed us to bring in 15 or so junior college players and it could have made a big difference in the fall. But, that's the way it is."

UCLA Quickness Spells Defeat For Tall Tigers

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The impressive height that Clemson brought to the NCAA West Regional basketball championship against UCLA turned out to be more burden than benefit — a development Tiger Coach Bill Foster had feared entering Saturday's game.

The quicker UCLA inside trio of 6-foot-6 Mike Sanders, 6-7 James Wilkes and 6-8 Kiki Vandeweghe maneuvered around, underneath and occasionally over Clemson's three 6-10 frontliners, pacing the Bruins to an impressive 85-74 victory.

The triumph sends UCLA, 21-9, to the NCAA Final Four in Indianapolis for the first time since 1976.

Foster said he considered using a smaller lineup to offset the Bruins' exceptional quickness, but he decided to go with his regulars because "it wouldn't have been fair to the big guys who played a big part in us getting as far as we did."

Very quickly, Foster saw his plan go astray, while the strategy mapped out by UCLA Coach Larry Brown worked as diagrammed.

"We wanted to stay in a zone as long as we could because there was no way we could match up with them man-to-man," Foster said. "We had to forego the zone when we got behind. We might have been better off to stay with a short lineup all of the time."

Clemson, which was participating in the NCAA tournament for the first time in the school's history, finished its season at 23-9.

A Clemson cold spell at the start of the second half, including a five-minute period during which the Tigers went scoreless, led to the impressive victory by the Bruins. UCLA ran off an 11-2 spurt in the early seconds of the half to gain an 18-point advantage at 57-39.

Clemson never was closer than 10 points after that time.

Vandeweghe, one of two starting seniors for UCLA, hit five of six free throw attempts in the closing seconds of the game to preserve the Bruin victory.

Guard Billy Williams scored 18 points to lead Clemson.

ECU Third In NCAAs

DETROIT, Mich. — East Carolina University's mile relay team sped to a third-place finish in the NCAA National Indoor Track and Field Championships Saturday afternoon.

It marked the highest finish ever by any East Carolina individual, group or team in NCAA Division I competition, and it brought All-America honors to the four runners.

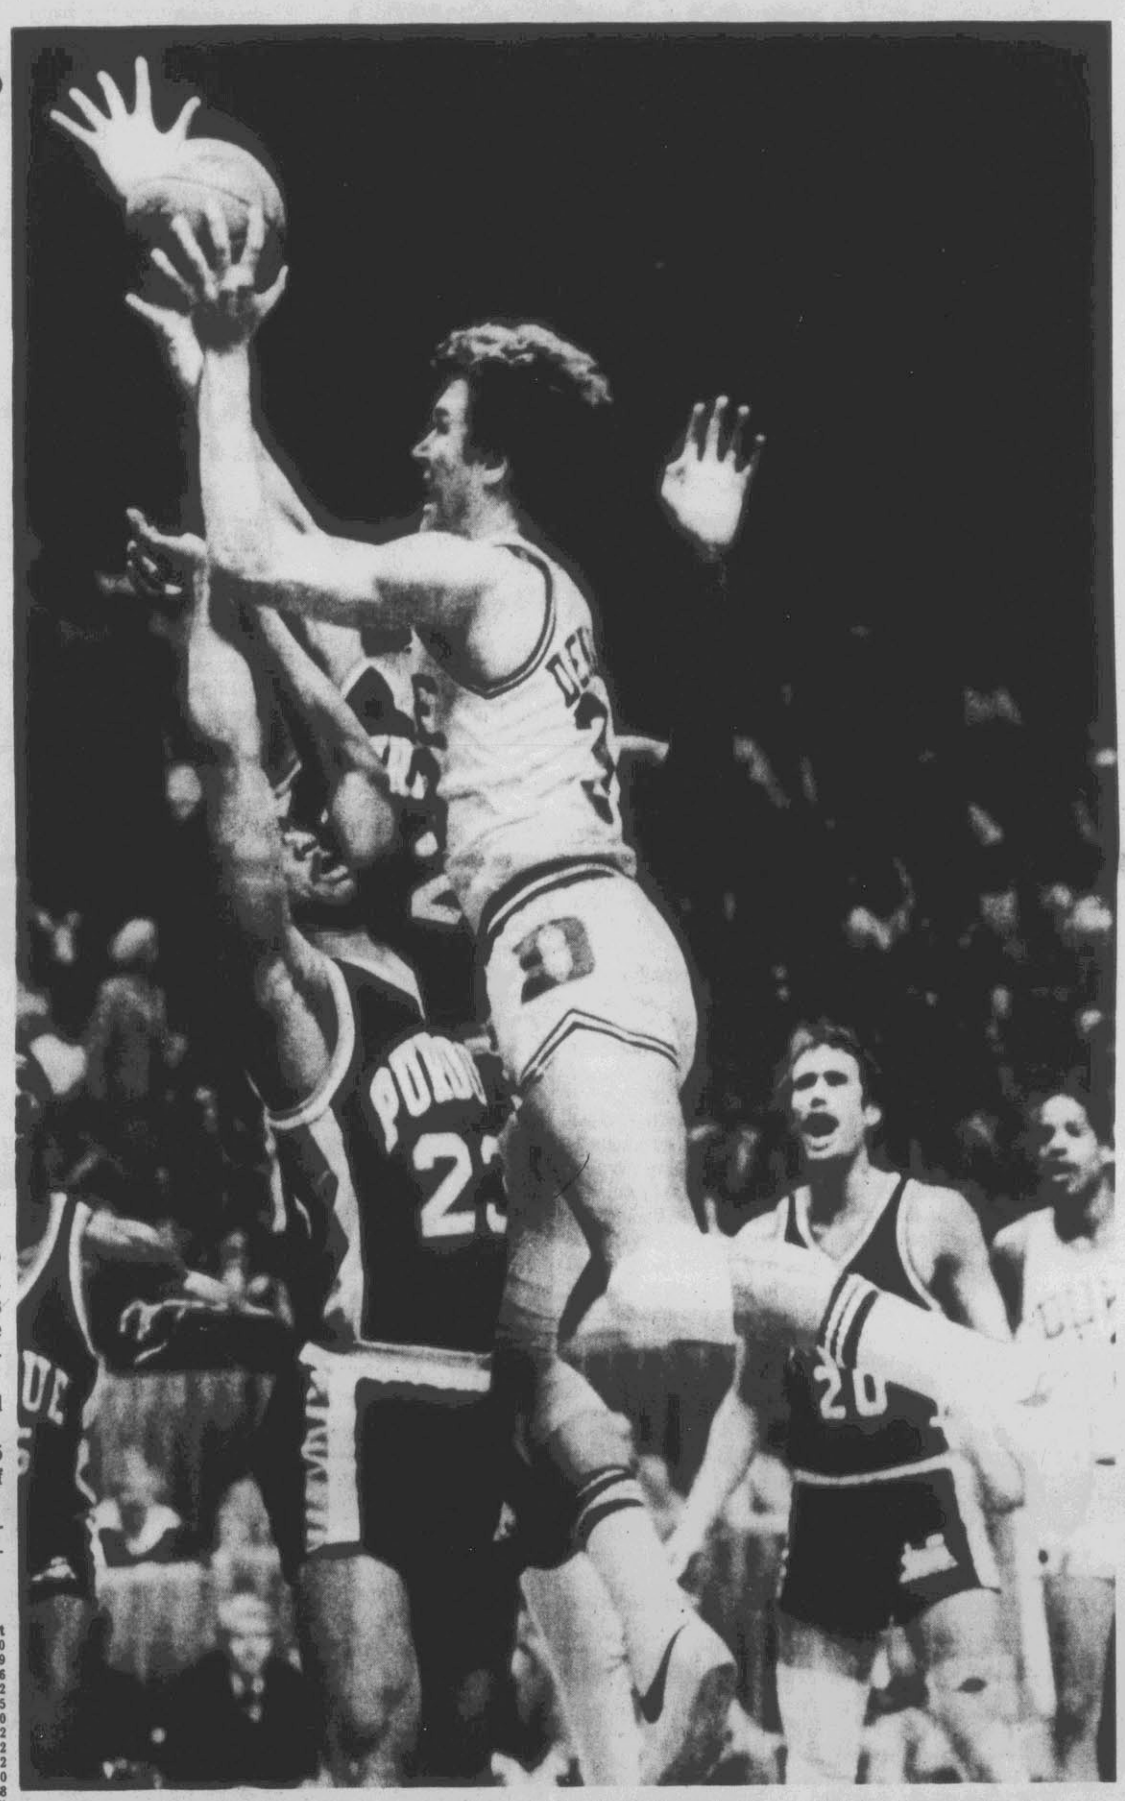
The four are Stan Curry, Carlton Bell, Otis Melvin and Shawn Laney.

Florida State won the event in 3:16.64, while Maryland was second in 3:16.75. East Carolina was clocked in at 3:17.1, while Morgan State finished fourth in 3:17.78, followed by Tennessee at 3:18.48. Washington rounded out the six finalists.

Curry was clocked at 49.3 for his split, while Bell turned in a 48.9. Melvin had a 49.5 and Laney, 49.3.

The triumph gave Melvin All-America honors for the second time. He earlier earned the accolade for his high finish in the 200-meter dash outdoors, and is the first two-sport All-American at East Carolina.

Landy's A-A ranking is the first earned by a freshman at East Carolina.



Duke's Driving Force

Morris's FTs Lead Purdue By Devils, 68-60

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — His teammates had already transferred their celebration to the locker room but Purdue's Drake Morris was reluctant to leave the basketball floor where minutes before he had been a hero.

Morris had a poor day shooting from the field, but his eight free throws down the stretch proved decisive as Purdue defeated Duke 68-60 in Saturday's championship game of the NCAA Mideast Regional.

With Morris scoring from the line, Purdue expanded a two point lead to 58-50 with but three minutes to play.

"I was very confident when I shot the free throws," Morris said. "I knew that they were going in."

Neither Morris nor Purdue Coach Lee Rose could explain why Duke continued to foul Morris in the late stages of the game.

"Beats me," Rose said in answer to the question. "He's hit them all year."

Purdue, understandably, felt the game had been well officiated, but Duke's Kenny Dennard had a very different view.

The fiery Dennard was involved in something of an altercation with official Bob Herrold shortly after the game, and took a swipe at the referee with a towel.

"I don't want to comment," Dennard said later. "Sometimes you just have to let your emotions come through. I thought both our games were poorly officiated. I thought the calls were very inconsistent."

Herrold refused comment.

The victory was Purdue's 22nd against nine defeats and earned the Boilermakers a date next Saturday with UCLA in the NCAA semifinals at Indianapolis. UCLA won the West Regional title with a 85-74 victory over Clemson.

Purdue took its first lead in the scond half, but the Boilermakers were unable to build a significant margin until Morris began earning trips to the foul line.

Morris hit six more free throws inside the last five minutes as the Boilermakers expanded a shaky three-point margin to 58-50 with 3:09 left.

Duke, which finished 24-9, made its final challenge behind baskets by Bob Bender and Gene Banks. But Purdue put the game away at 1:53 on a three-point play by Joe Barry Carroll to build the margin to 61-54.

Carroll, Purdue's 7-foot-1 All- America center, led both teams in scoring with 25 points. Keither Edmonson had 12 and Morris added 10.

Mike Gminski, Duke's 6-11 center, led the Blue Devils with 17 points, but managed only two baskets in the second half.

The game was tied seven times before Purdue got its first lead at 39-37 on a dunk by Arnette Hallman at 14:38. Edmonson put Purdue ahead to stay at 9:51 when his 15-footer gave Purdue a 45-43 lead.

Boxers' Plane Said To Have Run Out Of Gas

WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — More than half the victims of Friday's jetliner crash lay entombed beneath the ice of a century-old moat Saturday amid reports the plane ran out of fuel before it plunged to earth killing 87 people, including 14 young American boxers.

An airport source said the Polish LOT Airlines Ilyushin 62 jet used up its fuel while making a second attempt at an emergency landing. Minutes earlier, the Soviet-built jet had developed engine trouble, and the first landing approach was aborted because of the landing gear was not working properly.

Pilot Pawel Lipwchan, an experienced World War II bomber pilot with the Polish exile air force in Britain, had made one pass over Okecie International Airport and then radioed to the tower he would attempt an emergency landing on the runway of the smaller domestic airport just to the west, the source said.

Crash trucks were still laying foam along this runway when the jetliner suddenly plummeted from about 300 feet and nosedived into the 25-foot high inner earthen walls of the fortress about two miles from the airport.

The shattered plane's tail section ended up atop the walls and the largest remnant of the fuselage plunged through footthick ice into a 25-foot deep moat.

One emergency worker said the impact was so fierce that "three bodies made holes in the 10-inch-thick brick walls."

"I saw the bodies of three black men lying about 70 yards from the tail. They were lying on the ground, dressed in blue overalls," he said. "The ground was strewn with parts of human bodies. I had to walk carefully not to tread on them," he said.

Crash investigator Donald Snyder of the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration, who is based in Frankfurt, was expected in Warsaw Monday to assist a special Polish commission in the investigation of the crash.

Investigators recovered the "black box" flight recorder several hours after the Friday morning disaster and were combing through the wreckage for more information.

The victims included 14 athletes and eight officials and aides from a U.S. amateur boxing team that was scheduled to compete against the Polish national team. Six other passengers were American, bringing the total to 28.

Three Russians and three East Germans were also among the 77 passengers. The plane carried a crew of 10.

George Fournier, chief of the U.S. Embassy's consular section, was taken on a tour of the crash site by the director general of LOT Saturday afternoon.

After that tour, U.S. officials said search crews had so far recovered about 40 bodies from the crash site. of these, 15 so badly mutilated as to be almost beyond identification.

The ice froze again overnight, making the task of frogmen who tried to recover the wreckage and the bodies almost impossible. Polish authorities were considering draining the moat to aid the recovery effort.

American officials said they hoped to be able to start looking at the documents and effects recovered from the crash scene today, but that it would be Monday at the earliest before they could be given access to any of the bodies to begin making positive identifications.

The fortress, built in the 19th century by the Russians to protect Warsaw, is now used as a military installation.

One elderly woman, however, is permitted to live on one groundfloor room in the old citadel, and the rescue worker said "she had a lucky escape."

"The impact caused a sort of tidal wave in the pond and the water thrown up flooded her room and destroyed her furniture," he explained. "When rescue workers arrived, she was in water up to her knees, but she didn't want to leave the room because of the shock."

He said all she could do was stand in the middle of the room as rescue workers came in and scream, "My God, my God, why were so many people killed?"

Poland spent the weekend in an official period of mourning for the crash victims. Radio stations played somber music, television programming was changed to broadcast only serious programs and the Roman Catholic church announced a solemn memorial mass would be celebrated Monday in Warsaw's cathedral.

President Carter, Polish Pope John Paul II and Polish primate Cardinal Stefan Wysyznski sent messages of condolence.

"I beg God to give eternal peace to those who died a tragic death and console those who were stricken with pain," said Pope John Paul II in a message to Polish Cardinal Wysynzski.

Cavaliers Carrying ACC Banner In NIT

NEW YORK (AP) — There's something about tournament basketball that brings out the best in the University of Illinois.

The Fighting Illini, who meet Minnesota in the semifinals of the 43rd annual National Invitation Tournament Monday night at Madison Square Garden, are undefeated in their last 13 contests in tourney action.

This season Lou Henson's club captured its All-Illini Classic and the Rainbow Classic as well as three games thus far in the NIT.

Any particular reason for this success?

"None that I can think of," said Henson, now in his fifth year in the Big Ten school after spending nine seasons at New Mexico, where he compiled a 173-71 record.

"Frankly, I wish I knew the reason. I would try to get the team to do the same things during the regular season. I'm just hoping it can last for two more games in the NIT."

Illinois, 21-12, opposes the Gophers, 20-10, in the first half of Monday's doubleheader. Virginia, led by 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, faces Nevada-Las Vegas, 23-7, in the windup. The consolation and championship contests are scheduled Wednesday.

Illinois and Minnesota divided their two meetings during the Big Ten schedule. The Illini dropped a four-pointer in Minneapolis and then prevailed by two in overtime at home.

As might be expected, Henson is concerned about stopping Kevin McHale, the Gophers' 6-11 center who is averaging 18.4 points and 9.1 rebounds.

"There's no question that he's an All-American," Henson said of he Hibbing, Minn., resident, who was a member of last summer's Pan American Games championship squad.

"McHale will be among the top three players picked in the NBA draft. He gives Minnesota tremendous size," said Henson. "I really don't think either team will change strategy very much. It's too late for that."

As for his own club, Henson, who has lived up to his reputation as a "program builder" by posting an 83-64 record since taking over five seasons ago, lauded Reno Gray, 6-2 senior playmaker, saying, "he's an excellent ballhandler."

Henson said he also has gotten a lot of scoring from Eddie Johnson and Mark Smith.

Johnson, a 6-8 senior, is No. 1 in scoring with an 18-point average and also has grabbed nine rebounds a game.

East Carolina was unable to get things going throughout the afternoon. They were able to extend the Quakers just once in the singles, in the number four seed, and then again in the number three doubles.

MIAMI (AP) — A bogey on the final hole cost Jack Nicklaus sole control of the third round lead Saturday in the $250,000 Doral Open Golf Tournament, but the Golden Bear generally achieved what he set out to accomplish.

"If you'd asked me starting the day what I intended to accomplish in the third round, I'd say it was get in position to win the golf tournament in the fourth round. I did that," Nicklaus said after his hard-won, windblown, 1-under-par 71 on the 7,065-yard Blue Monster course at the Doral Country Club.

Generally acknowledged as the finest player in the game's history, Nicklaus had sole control of the lead until a final-hole bogey dropped him back into a tie for the top with Bruce Lietzke and Keith Fergus. They were at 210, 6 shots under par going into today's final round.

Nicklaus, at 40 working with grim determination on a comeback from the poorest season of his career, hasn't won in more than a year. He hasn't had a third round lead since the Australian Open in November 1978.

"Of course it's important to me to win," he said with a certain amount of irritation. "That's all there is to do out here, to try to win. You're trying to win every time you tee it up. That's what I'm trying to do. That's what I'm working for. If I weren't trying to win, if it weren't important, well, I've sure wasted a lot of hard work."

As to today's final round, Nicklaus said, "I'm kind of looking forward to it. It ought to be fun."

"Last week I was trying to beat Johnny Miller in his big comeback," said Lietzke. "This week I'm trying to beat Jack Nicklaus in his big comeback.

"Jack is my idol. He always has been. But I'll try my best to beat him. He wouldn't want me to do anything else."

Fergus, who has played strongly this year, had a 69 that ranked as the best round of the day on a course was raked by winds gusting above 30 mph.

Rams Rip Bruins

WILSON — Greene Central snapped an early two-game losing streak and came away with a 7-2 victory over Wilson Beddingfield yesterday.

The win boosted the Ram record to 1-2 on the year. All three games have been against 4-A competition.

The Rams scored first, getting a run in the top of the first. Greg Holmes reached on a two-base error. Robin Bowen followed with a single and Al Murray reached on a fielder's choice, scoring Holmes.

Beddingfield came back with two in the bottom of the first to move ahead, 2-1. Greg Dail singled and after two were out, Donald Williams singled Dail in. After moving up on the play, Williams scored from second on a passed ball when no one covered the plate as the catcher scrambled after the ball.

The Rams moved back ahead for good in the fourth, scoring three times. Jeff Scott doubled and Chip Hardy singled him in. Kevin Korpi doubled in Hardy, and a single by Jabo Fulghum brought in Korpi with the fourth Ram run of the day.

Greene Central picked up one more in the fifth and scored twice in the seventh.

Korpi, Fulghum, Murray and Scott each had two hits for Greene Central.

Softball Teams Hopeful For 1980

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Last year, after losing two starters off its league-winning club, D.H. Conley's softball team dropped to third in the Eastern Carolina Conference.

One year later, the Vikings are trying to regain their championship form. This past Friday they began the road back with a 5-1 win over ECC foe Southern Nash.

"One of the reasons we wound up third last year was that we lost some leadership when we lost those two girls," D.H. Conley coach Emmett Koonce said.

"This year we've got'em all back except for one and I think it's all going to come down to leadership. If we get it we'll be right up there. It just depends on who wants it more."

Back also this season are pitcher Lexanne Keeter, first baseman Pam Manning, second baseman Jeanne Franke, shortstop Tammy Streeter, third baseman Angie Rogerson and center fielder Lisa Hardy.

Battling for the right field job are Sherri Waters and Cynthia Barnes, both back from last season. Freshman Darlene Cannon will play short field.

"This is one of the first years I've been able to go into a season with some good bench strength," Koonce said. "And I'm going to need it.

"The conference this year is going to be a dog race. I don't think you can afford to lose more than two ballgames in the conference and expect to be up there."

Bear Grass

With three starters returning for their fourth season, Bear Grass's softball team may be set to challenge for the Beaufort-Hyde-Martin Conference crown — if the Bears younger players come around.

The Bears, third a year ago in the league with a 6-6 mark, will rely heavily on three returning four-year players: shortstop Joette Rogers, left fielder Linda Whitehurst and center fielder Vickie Taylor.

But just how far the Bears go may be determined by the play of the freshman and sophomores which fill the lineup.

"We've got quite a few inexperienced girls on the varsity level, but they've been playing organized ball together since the sixth grade," Bear Grass coach Norman Cherry said. "I think they'll work out all right.

"Right now my prediction is that we won't finish any lower than second. We have a pretty good nucleus coming back. I'd have to pick Aurora first, though, and then Bath and Bear Grass tied for second."

Among the sophomores Cherry will be counting on this season are pitcher Sherry Williams, right fielder Valarie Leggett and short fielder Debra Gurganus.

Cherry will also have four freshman starting this season: catcher Dana Cowin, first baseman Angie Mizell, third baseman Cindy Harrison and second baseman Mary Rawls.

Reserves include sophomore Jovita Rodgers and freshman Wanda Leggett and Windy Peele.

"I think we're going to have a good year," Cherry said. "We have some young girls, sure, but I have confidence in them."

North Pitt

A year ago the Pant-HERS, who opened the 1980 season this past Friday with an 8-1 loss to North Lenoir, finished with only one win in 16 games.

"We've got to improve," said Stanfield, whose Pant-HERS return nine starters off last year's club. "I sure hope we do.

"Right now, though, it's hard to say because of how much practice we've missed, but I think we lack a leader. Last season we had the same problem.

"It's still kind of early and maybe someone will fill that role," she said.

Stanfield will rely heavily this year on three players: first baseman Connie Dupree, shortstop Starla Singleton and short fielder Jeanette Brown. "Those are probably our best hitters," Stanfield said.

Pitching for the Pant-HERS this season is Tammy Purvis, while Mary Lewis will be catching. Joan Harrington will be at second while Carolina Best will be at third.

"I look for Conley and Ayden-Grifton to have the strongest teams in the conference," Stanfield said. "But it's hard to say. Usually, the title can go anywhere."

Firebirds Clip Conley In 7th

STANHOPE — D.H. Conley's Vikings fought back from behind to take the lead, only to lose it once more in the final inning as Southern Nash gained a 5-4 win Saturday.

Conley, trailing 3-1, rallied in the top of the seventh to take a 4-3 lead, but allowed the Firebirds to come back in their half of the frame.

Conley opened the seventh inning by getting three straight walks loading the bases. Arnell Credle, Curtis Spencer and Micah Dixon each got free trips. Then, Dixon Page singled to score Credle. Roy Lassiter reached on a fielder's choice, bringing in Spencer. Carl Arnold sacrificed the runners up, and Emory Vines bunted to score Dixon with the third run, giving the Vikes a 4-3 lead.

But in the bottom of the frame, Perry reached on a fielder's choice, erasing Grady, who had opened with a double. Richardson then walked and Stone reached on a fielder's choice, getting Richardson at second.

Joyner singled in Perry, tieing the game at 4-all, and after Hardy walked to load the bases, Wiggins grounded to short. The play to second was errored, however, allowing Stone to score the winning run.

Vines was the leading hitter for the Vikes, with two.

Now 0-1 both overall and in the conference, Conley plays host to Charles B. Aycock on Tuesday.

UCLA hit an impressive 58 percent of its floor shots in the period, and was led in the early going by 14 points from Sanders and 10 from Vandeweghe.

Clemson hit 52 percent from the field in the opening 20 minutes, with reserve forward Fred Gilliam's nine points keeping the Tigers close.

COX
CRASH 1984!

An outbreak of mayhem is evident everywhere today in the United States. Some say the bottom has fallen out! Prices on consumer products have toppled at staggering levels.

Gasoline supplies are all but exhausted and those fortunate enough to have a gas rationing ticket are paying almost $3.00 a gallon. New cars are now a communal neighborhood purchase and even considered a luxury item among the white collar worker. Transit Systems are a way of life...a true reality. They travel within a ten mile radius of the city, where the greatest concentration of population resides. Overcrowding stifles the air in this once magnificent city.

Housing! Where does it all stop? The cost of an average home today is a conservative $120,000! Interest rates are as high as twenty one percent, prime rates at an unheard of twenty five percent! Average monthly mortgage payments exceeds two thousand dollars!!

Poor quality and high prices are manifested in every pair of shoes, every stitch of clothes and every edible item on the market today. When will this madness cease?

Turn it back, turn the clock back! Not ten or twenty years ago but just five short years to a more tranquil time in 1979. Remember the uncertainties? World War Three was on the lips of everyone. Even though World War never materialized, the unity of the country was a welcome turn toward patriotism.

People balked at gas selling for more than a dollar a gallon—but at least we had it! Grocery shopping wasn't always a pleasant experience, at any rate, you could go shopping at your leisure without checking your watch to insure you didn't miss the specified departure time of the local transit system.

Quality was still a fashionable word. Merchants offered store wide sales, money off coupons, warranties on faulty goods and other dollar-stretching values to help and protect the consumer.

And even though the housing market fluctuated, at times uneasily, in the good old days, there were numerous, helpful programs initiated for people that really wanted a home. Sweat equities for those that could afford time and energy into doing some of the repair work in place of cash; FHA-245 Plan or Graduated Mortgage which gradually raised your monthly mortgage payments over a period of years.

This was a time when the public took pride in the word "Professionalism". Most real estate associates were thoroughly trained in their field. They were taught how to professionally assist their customer in every way, whether it was to market their present home, serve them in finding a new home or to comfortably locate a residence for them across the country. This was usually a service done through an efficiently ran relocation department.

Yes, times seemed bleak. All that talk of high interest rates, escalating prices on building supplies, acquiring mortgage money...such an uncertainty...could a recession be that imminent?

I suppose if everyone could have only seen five years into the future, would they have been so hesitant? How eager they all would have been, how satisfied people would have felt, not so quick to jump for the negative.

Yes, the good old days...I guess people will never know exactly how good it all was then.

(Sigh)

Hawkeyes Challenge Georgetown In East

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Iowa is patched up, physically and emotionally, and ready to shoot for the NCAA's East Regional basketball championship Sunday.

"We endured plenty of problems, and hung in tough enough to make the playoffs," said Coach Lute Olson. "Now we've got momentum."

Though once more playing the familiar role of the underdog, Olson's overachievers exuded quiet confidence on the eve of their regional championship game with Georgetown, the Big East power.

"We've been underdogs so long that it would be a shock to be in any other position at this point," Olson told a press conference Saturday. "But I never doubted that we would come out of Greensboro. We feel we belong here."

Iowa, unloved in the national polls and merely a fourth-place team in the Big Ten this year, had to fight through Virginia Commonwealth and North Carolina State in the East subregionals in Greensboro, N.C., before coming to Philadelphia for the regional semifinals. Here, the Hawkeyes upset sixth-ranked Syracuse 88-77 Friday night to make the finals.

"The North Carolina State game was a great confidence-booster," Olson said. "Beating them in what amounted to their home territory showed us that we could play with anyone in the country then."

Along with the problems to players, the team recently received another jolt when assistant coach Tony McAndrews was hurt badly in an airplane accident. That initially caused emotional problems for the Hawkeyes.

"The players over-reacted, wanted to win all the games for Tony," said Olson. "But we've adjusted to his loss now."

Georgetown, on the other hand, has no problems, physical or emotional. Especially emotional.

"We try not to appeal to the players' emotions here," said Georgetown Coach John Thompson. "We try to keep a low profile. We find that players function better that way. Our practices are all quiet — no screaming and no emotion."

That type of approach has worked just fine for the 11th-ranked Hoyas, who defeated Maryland 74-68 in Friday night's other East semifinal game for their 15th straight victory, longest streak in the country.

Stabler Traded For Pastorini

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — The Oakland Raiders Saturday officially announced what quarterback Kenny Stabler had said Friday night — that he has been traded to the Houston Oilers for quarterback Dan Pastorini.

In announcing the straight player trade, Raider executive assistant Al LoCasale said the Raiders "may be looking at a more long-run picture than would be practical with Kenny." Pastorini is 30 years old, Stabler 34.

"They are both outstanding players who have proved themselves in big games and in the post-season," said LoCasale, second in charge to Raider managing general partner Al Davis.

"We're hoping the trade will work out for both teams, and for both players," he added. "They deserve it." LoCasale was in Southern California for the National Football League meetings which ended Friday in Rancho Mirage.

Stabler, a 10-year veteran with the Raiders, told Mobile, Ala., station WKRG-TV Friday night that the deal was finalized. There had been speculation about a possible trade.

"I've known about the deal for some time and didn't know when it would take place," he said.

"I felt it was in my best interests to play somewhere else and it was also in the Raiders' best interests," said Stabler. "Going to Houston is a great chance to play on a talented team with a chance to return to the Super Bowl."

Pastorini, a nine-year veteran with Houston, was not immediately available for comment.

Stabler, a left-hander, completed his 10th year in the National Football League this season. He was the Raiders' No. 2 draft choice out of Alabama in 1968.

Stabler was the No. 2 passing leader in the American Football conference in 1979, fourth in the league, completing 304 of 498 passes for 3,615 yards and 26 touchdowns, and 22 interceptions.

Pastorini was 13th in the conference on a rushing oriented team led by running back Earl Campbell. Pastorini had 163 of 324 passes for 2,090 yards, 14 touchdowns and 18 interceptions.

Cardinals Face Tigers Today

HOUSTON (AP) — Louisville Coach Denny Crum figures his No. 2-ranked Cardinals are the underdogs going into today's NCAA Midwest Regional Championship game against No. 3-ranked Louisiana State.

The dream matchup between the top seeds in the Midwest tournament is set for a 2 p.m. tipoff with the winner advancing to the Final Four in Indianapolis next week.

"We match up rather poorly," Crum said Saturday. "We've already won more games this year than we ever thought we would win. The pressure is on LSU, not us."

Crum added, "If you had told me we would win 30 games this year with this team I would have told . . . not much of a chance. Then we lost one of top players, and I'm surprised we even won 17 games."

Louisville, which outlasted Texas A&M University 66-55 in overtime Friday night, will carry a 30-3 record into the game.

"I've never had a team win 30 games," said Crum.

"We will have to play very well to beat LSU. They are more physical than we are and have more depth."

LSU Coach Dale Brown did not particularly mind being cast in the favorite's light.

"I believe if we play our game, we can go on and win the national championship," Brown said.

The 26-5 Tigers defeated Missouri 68-63 on Friday night using a stall to slow down the hot-shooting Big Eight Conference champions.

"I thought we stunk," said Brown. "We played a horrible first half. We will not have the luxury of having a bad first half against Louisville because if we do we'll be back in Baton Rouge."

Griffith scored 6 vital points in overtime and had a game-high 24 against the Aggies.

Scales scored 17 points and Macklin added 16 as LSU downed Missouri in a showdown of Tiger teams.

"To beat LSU we've got to go to the board strong because they have a great rebounding team. Both teams are quick, but it's the rebounds that should win the game," Griffith said.

Crum said he was amazed at the overall quality of teams in the NCAA playoffs this year, particularly in the Midwest.

Maryland, Syracuse Upset In East

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

When the NCAA'S Final Four get together in Indianapolis next weekend to settle college basketball's national championship, something will be missing...namely, nine members of the regular-season Top Ten.

At least one member of the Final Four — the winner of today's UCLA-Clemson West Regional final — will be unranked, and it could be two if Iowa defeats No.11 Georgetown in today's East final.

The Top Ten almost lost its last survivors Friday night but second-ranked Louisville and third-rated Louisiana State came through with narrow victories. Louisville wore down Texas A&M 66-55 in overtime and LSU held off No.16 Missouri 68-63, but the winners will meet today in Houston for the Midwest title. The victor will go to Indianapolis, the loser will take its ranking and go home.

Wrestle For Rebound

Georgetown's Craig Shelton (33) and Mike Grazier (51) fight with Maryland's Dutch Morley (21) and Albert King (55) for a rebound during Friday night's NCAA Eastern Regional semifinal basketball game at Philadelphia. Georgetown won the game, 74-68. (AP Laserphoto)

However, two Top Ten teams were eliminated in the East Regional at Philadelphia, where unheralded, unranked Iowa whipped sixth-ranked Syracuse 88-77 while Georgetown stretched the nation's longest winning streak to 15 games with a 74-68 decision over No.8 Maryland.

"I think the pressure is starting to get to some of the teams, like Kentucky and Indiana, Syracuse and Ohio State," said LSU Coach Dale Brown.

And how about LSU? Well, Brown ordered his run-and-gun Tigers into a four-corner slowdown with 13:28 remaining and a slim 52-50 lead.

The move paid immediate dividends when Durand Macklin shook free for a three-point play to give LSU some breathing room.

"In the second half, we won the game when we found our control," Brown said. "We went into the delay as soon as we got the lead. We tried too hard at first, but we showed our second world (the delay) in the second half."

DeWayne Scales led LSU with 17 points while Mark Dressler paced Missouri with 20.

In the other Midwest semifinal, All-American Darrell Griffith missed a last-second shot that could have won the game for Louisville in regulation time but made up for it with a basket and four free throws in overtime and finished with a game-high 24 points.

"I think the Aggies got tired," said Louisville Coach Denny Crum. "They don't like to play at the pace we do. We made them play that way all the game and they were fatigued at the end. When the overtime started we wanted the first basket because we knew if they got the first bucket they would go to the four corners."

Griffith said he wasn't surprised by the Aggies' effort. "You expect 100 percent when you get into the playoffs because any team in the tournament can beat you," he said.

Texas A&M finished with a 26-8 record, best in its history.

By the time today's East and Midwest finals roll around, the Mideast and West — half of the Final Four field — will have been decided. Those finals are on tap today — No.14 Duke vs. No.20 Purdue in the Mideast at Lexington, Ky., and UCLA-Clemson in the West at Tucson, Ariz.

Iowa used a key technical foul call plus 10 free throws by Vince Brookins in the final eight minutes to turn back Syracuse. The Orangemen led 57-55 when a personal foul was called on Tony Bruin and Coach Jim Boeheim was socked with a technical for beefing about it.

Brookins made three of the four foul shots and, with Iowa also getting the ball, Steve Krafcisin canned a basket for a 60-57 Iowa lead. Syracuse never caught up.

"I was talking to Bruin," Boeheim explained. "I was standing up the whole game and the referees never warned me about it. I just told him (Bruin) not to reach in for the foul. That technical foul certainly didn't help us."

Brookins scored 21 points and Kevin Boyle added 18 for Iowa, which finished fourth in the Big Ten. Louis Orr paced Syracuse with 25.

"We feel very fortunate to have won," said Iowa Coach Lute Olson. "I think Syracuse is a great basketball team, but I think we have a pretty good team, too. We got the ball into the bottom of the net when we had to and (Steve) Waite and Brookins scored when he needed points."

In the East nightcap, Eric Floyd scored 10 of his 18 points as Georgetown broke away from a 49-all tie by outscoring Maryland 18-11. That gave the Hoyas a 67-60 advantage with six minutes left and Eric Smith kept them ahead with seven free throws in the final three minutes.

Georgetown actually won the game by holding Maryland All-American Albert King to two points in the second half. King scored 13 in the first 20 minutes, helping the Terrapins to a 39-38 halftime edge.

Bear Grass Takes 2-1 Win

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — It's okay with Buddy Baker if the other drivers on NASCAR's Grand National circuit are jealous of him.

And that's what Baker figured it was Friday when other drivers hinted that he had some kind of illegal edge after his 166.212 mph speed captured the pole position for today's Atlanta 500 stock car race by more than two miles an hour.

The defending champion broke his year-old Atlanta 500 qualifying record of 165.951 as time trials were completed after two days of rainouts at Atlanta International Raceway.

Donnie Allison was fourth with a 163.187, followed by Ricky Rudd at 162.988 and Dave Marcis and rookie Rusty Wallace, both timed at 162.795.

None of the other drivers would go into specifics about Baker's supposed edge, and the 6-foot-5 North Carolinian just shrugged it off as sour grapes.

"All I can tell you is that half the poles we (Grand National drivers) won last year were in (Chevrolet) Monte Carlos," Baker said, "I'm driving an Oldsmobile here.

Asked if this was a case of old-fashioned jeolousy, Baker replied, "I hope so. Any time somebody is complaining, it means you're whipping his tail. That's the way it was a few years ago when Cale was on top all the time and before that when Richard (Petty) was up there every week.

"If they'd pay a little more attention to their engine rooms instead of talking about my car, they'd be better off."

Baker, who won from the pole earlier this year in the prestigious Daytona 500, likes being up front. And he let it all hang out Friday.

"It was absolutely the best I could do," he said. "The car was a little loose, but it had the speed. It was fast on the straightaways and handling pretty decent in the turns. But there was one time there when I got a little loose and thought I was gonna end up somewhere in South Georgia."

Dogwood 500 Set Sunday

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Jimmy Hensley of Ridgeway, Va., and National Modified Champion Richie Evans of Rome, N.Y., will be on the pole for today's Dogwood 500 Classic double-header at Martinsville Speedway.

Hensley, whose three victories at Martinsville include the Late Model Sportsman half of the 1974 Dogwood 500, earned the No. 1 spot Friday for the LMS race with a fast lap of 89.663 mph in a Chevrolet over the .525-mile track.

Evans, whose four local triumphs include a victory in the Modified half of the 1978 Dogwood 500, was clocked at 92.749 mph Friday in a Pinto for that half of the double-header.

Because the drivers are using harder compound tires, neither broke the track record — 91.185 for the Late Model Sportsman race held by Sonny Hutchins of Richmond, Va., and 93.760 mph held by George Kent Jr. of Horseheads, N.Y., for the Modified drivers.

Both record-holders were among the 20 drivers who qualified Friday for each of the two today's races, the first of which will be the Late Model Sportsman at 12:30 p.m., EST.

Kent took the outside Modified pole opposite Evans with a speed of 91.840 mph, followed by Geoff Bodine of Pleasant Garden, N.C.; Ron Bouchard of Fitchburg, Mass.; and George Summers of Upton, Mass.

Trailing Hensley were Bodine; 20-time Martinsville winner Ray Hendrick of Richmond, Va.; Mike Porter of Princeton, W.Va.; and Tommy Ellis of Richmond, Va. Hutchins had the seventh fastest time.

Twenty more spots in each event were up for grabs today in six 25-lap qualifying races, three for each half of the twin bill.

The total purse for the two National Championship races today is $111,400 with the winner of each event earning more than $8,000. The leader of the most laps in each race will get a $1,000 bonus.

ORIGINAL COOL
Despite the appearance of newer, cheaply-built imitations, Hunter's Original Olde Tyme Ceiling Fans remain unrivaled in performance and nostalgic simplicity. In summer these reliable energy savers supplement and enhance air conditioning by keeping the air circulated, allowing thermostats to be set as much as 8 degrees higher with the same level of cooling comfort. During winter, these same fans, at slow speed, recycle heat by pushing rising warm air down to colder areas where it is needed. The savings can be astounding—especially with today's high utility bills—because a Hunter ceiling fan can operate on as little power as a 60 watt light bulb. Hunter is The Original—uncontested as the finest ceiling fan made! Shop and compare theirs to ours—and then come by or call Ed Glenn at

Gamecock Homers Down Pirates, 7-2

COLUMBIA, S.C. — East Carolina University's five-game winning streak came to an end Friday afternoon at the University of South Carolina as the Gamecocks pounded the Pirates for four home runs and a 7-2 victory.

The loss was the first in six games for the Pirates, while the Gamecocks were winning their sixth without a loss.

Both teams attacked the ball well, but the four homers, all in a row, proved the most decisive blows for the Gamecocks. East Carolina banged out 11 hits, while South Carolina had 14. Both teams left 12 baserunners hanging.

East Carolina threatened in all but the first, fifth, seventh and eighth innings, scoring both of its runs in the second.

South Carolina had men in scoring position in every inning, but were held to just their seven-run third inning.

After the Pirates failed to offer a threat in the top of the first, South Carolina had a chance when Etienne Farquharson doubled with two away in the bottom of the frame. But the Gamecocks couldn't bring him in.

The Pirates then jumped out into the lead in the top of the second. Pete Persico reached on a fielder's choice that left two men out. John Hallow followed with a single to left and Mike Sorrell singled to center. Butch Davis then beat out an infield hit that was played—too late—to second, and overthrown. Persico scored on the hit, and Hallow followed him in on the error.

It was the final scoring play for the Pirates.

Then left the bases loaded on two hits and a walk in the third, put a man on second on a hit and a wild pitch in the fourth, had two on in the sixth on two errors; and left two standing in the ninth on a hit and an error.

South Carolina left two standed in the second on errors, then went to work in the third.

It all came after two were out. Farquharson got the parade started with a homer over the 360-foot wall in center. Jim Curl added a second blow for a 2-2 tie, also to center. Mark Boatwright sailed a third-straight over the center field fence for a 3-2 lead, and Paul Hollins finished the parade with a round-tripper to right.

It also spelled the end for starting pitcher Bobby Patterson, who gave way to freshman Mike Williams.

Rod Carraway greeted Williams with an infield hit, and an error let him move to second. Greg Johnson singled to left, scoring Carraway, and was balked to second. Keith Taylor walked, and Joe McCarthy doubled in both runners for the final runs of the inning.

South Carolina put a man on second in the fourth on two walks, a man on third on a single, stolen bases and an error; two on in the sixth on hits; a men at second in the seventh on a hit and a wild pitch; loaded the bases in the eighth on a hit and two walks.

Tom Williams, Farquharson, Curl, Boatwright and Jonson each had two hits to lead the Gamecocks in that area.

PINETOPS — Ayden-Grifton evened its record at 1-1 Friday with an 11-5 baseball victory over Southwest Edgecombe.

It was the first Eastern Carolina Conference action for the Chargers.

Ayden-Grifton scored first, getting three runs in the second frame. Tyrone Gay reached on an error and Billy Holland was safe when his sacrifice bunt was misplayed. Southwest, after spotting the Chargers another run in the top of the third, scored two of their own in the bottom of the third. Both teams pushed over one in the fifth.

Ayden-Grifton then broke it open with six in the top of the fifth. Strickland reached on an error, scoring when Art Rouse also was safe on an error. Ricciarelli doubled in Rouse and Clayton McLawhorn walked. Gay struck out, but the reached when the ball got by the catcher. A balk scored Ricciarelli, and Holland singled in two more. Allen then singled in the final run.

Holland led the Charger hitting with two, while Jeff Ellis had two for Southwest.

Rose Takes 6-4 Win In Opening Game

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Rose High School's Rampants opened the baseball season with a 6-4 victory over Greene Central Friday, banging out eight hits along the way and getting good pitching from three young hurlers.

"It was a good start for us," Coach Ronald Vincent said. "We had three fine efforts from our pitchers, and we got in some pretty good hitting. Overall, I'm pretty happy with the way we did today. For a first game, it wasn't bad. We had a few misplays in the infield, but overall, our fielding was quite good."

Rose never trailed in the game, although Greene Central came up with an early 2-2 tie. After that, however, Rose regained the lead and never lost it.

The Rampants pushed over two runs in the bottom of the first after setting down the Rams in order in the top of the frame.

Mark Shank led off with a walk and stole second. He scored when Will Barrett doubled off the fence in center. Roger Williams then singled to center, scoring Barrett for a 2-0 lead.

Greene Central came back with two in the top of the second. Jeff Scott reached on a fielder's choice and Chip Hardy doubled to left. Robin Bowen's single to right scored both runners.

The Rampants came right back to push over two more in the bottom of the second, moving back out, 4-2. With two away, Jeff Wilson walked, as did Shank and Mark Douglas, loading the bases. Barrett then cracked a single to left, scoring both Wilson and Shank for the 4-2 lead.

Both teams missed out on chances in the third, leaving runners in scoring position.

Rose added two more in the fourth. Wilson opened the inning with a walk and Douglas singled to center. Barrett also singled, loading the bases and Williams got another hit, driving in both Wilson and Douglas for a 6-2 lead.

The Rams came back to score twice in the fifth thanks to two Rose errors. Both runs were unearned. Greg Holmes opened the frame with a hit to right, then stole second. With one down, Al Murray reached on an error. Walt Tyndall grounded to second, and Murray was cut down there, as Holmes scored. Wild pitches moved Tyndall to third, and after a walk to Scott, Hardy reached on an error, with Tyndall scoring on the play.

Rose threatened in the fifth and sixth, leaving the bases loaded in the latter frame, but got no more. Greene Central got only one more man on base the rest of the way.

Kenny Barnes, who opened the game, got the win, going three innings and giving up two earned runs and four hits. Todd Galloway went the middle two, allowing the two unearned runs and giving up one hit. Williams finished the last two, allowing one hit and striking out three.

Williams and Barrett led the Rose hitting, each going three for four. Holmes had two hits in four trips for the Rams.

Rose plays host to Williamston on Tuesday at 4 p.m., while Greene Central travels to Farmville Central for an Eastern Carolina Conference contest.

Counter Olympic Group To Meet Monday To Discuss Alternatives

LONDON (AP) — At least 10 governments are expected to send representatives to Monday's meeting in Geneva to discuss holding alternative games to the Moscow Olympics, Australian Home Affairs Minister Robert Ellicott said here Friday.

But reports from other Western capitals suggested that not all who attend will be enthusiastic about the plan being promoted by the United States, Britain and Australia in retaliation for the Soviet military move into Afghanistan.

Meanwhile, Olympic associations and athletes continued to resist calls for a boycott of the Moscow Games. Two of Britain's top athletes, long jumper and social services official Sue Reeves and shot putter and policeman Geoff Capes, said they would go despite the British government's withdrawal of its traditional paid leave for civil servant Olympic contenders.

Ellicott, visiting London for talks with British government officials, declined to say which countries had been invited or which had accepted.

"If governments were behind the Games, providing fares and the like, I imagine that would attract athletes from all over the world," he said.

Britain"s Foreign Office said the meeting could last until Tuesday and would probably be held at the U.S. and British missions in Geneva.

In Bonn, the West German government's chief spokesman, Klaus Boelling, signaled that Germany is reluctant to attend the Geneva meeting but left open the possibility of participation.

He told reporters he was not certain a formal invitation had been received and knew of no plans to attend.

Atlanta Hawks Claim Central Title

By The Associated Press

For years, Atlanta was known as "Losersville."

No more.

The Atlanta Hawks rode Armond Hill's clutch scoring in the closing minute to an 88-87 victory over Boston that gave them the National Basketball Association's Central Division crown, their first title since 1970.

"We have reached one of our goals," said Hawks Coach Hubie Brown. "We won the title and have a first-round bye. Our next goal is to get the most wins in the history of the Atlanta franchise."

The 1968-69 Hawks won 48 games. Friday night's triumph was Atlanta's 45th. The team has nine regular-season games remaining.

Elsewhere it was Los Angeles 132, Denver 126; Seattle 122, Chicago 101; San Antonio 113, Detroit 102; Washington 92, Houston 85; Milwaukee 120, Portland 110, and Indiana 104, Philadelphia 94.

Hill hit four successive field goals, the last a 16-foot jump shot with three seconds to play that wiped out an 87-86 lead Boston built on two free throws by Larry Bird with nine seconds left.

The lead switched hands four times in the last 26 seconds. Hill hit on two long jump shots, then sank a five-footer with 20 seconds left to give the Hawks an 86-85 lead. "I don't know what I was doing tonight, but whatever it was, it worked," said Hill, who had 14 points to back up Eddie Johnson's 20. Bird had 23.

Lakers 132, Nuggets 126

Jamaal Wilkes scored 27 points and Los Angeles, which led from the opening minute, beat the Nuggets with ease. The Lakers led by 17 points midway through the second period.

Sonics 122, Bulls 101

Seattle ran away from the Bulls in the third period, building a 75-50 lead and breezing to its 51st victory in 84 games. Dennis Johnson scored 25 points and reserve guard Freddie Brown added 18. David Greenwood had 20 points as Chicago's top scorer.

Spurs 113, Pistons 102

George Gervin's 12 points in the fourth period (he finished with 29) helped San Antonio shake off the Pistons, who had rallied from a 27-point third-period deficit to tie the game in the final quarter. The Spurs scored 11 straight points in one span to lock up the victory.

Bullets 92, Rockets 85

Elvin Hayes scored six of his 21 points in a second-period burst that gave Washington a 14-point lead as the Bullets beat Houston. Calvin Murphy scored 22 for the Rockets.

Bucks 120, Blazers 110

Bob Lanier scored five points in a row to short-circuit Portland's comeback and give Milwaukee its margin of victory. Lanier went to work after the Bucks' 26-point lead had faded to five.

Pacers 104, 76ers 94

Indiana offset Julius Erving's 33-point showing by putting together a balanced attack to turn back the 76ers. Mike Bantom had 20 points and Johnny Davis 19 as the Pacers won their third in a row.

NFL Owners End With Warning

By JACK STEVENSON
AP Sports Writer

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — National Football League owners wrapped up their five-day meeting after completing mostly household chores and issuing a warning to Al Davis to keep his Raiders in Oakland.

Davis said he expects the courts to determine the outcome of his bid to move the Oakland club to Los Angeles, replacing the Rams, who have switched to Anaheim Stadium starting with the 1980 season.

The managing general partner of the Raiders said Friday he expects the anti-trust trial to start in May and last about three weeks, though there could be appeals.

Davis has said he could go back to Oakland if ordered by the courts, but he plans to open the 1980 season in Los Angeles — despite the edict against him by others in the NFL.

Meanwhile, in Los Angeles, Coliseum Commission attorney Harry Daniels said the 9th U.S. District Court of Appeals probably will hold a hearing the first week in May to consider whether to uphold an injunction against the NFL issued by U.S. District Judge Harry Pregerson in Los Angeles.

If the circuit court agrees Pregerson was right to temporarily halt enforcement of the NFL rule requiring a two-thirds vote of owners in order for a team to move, it could allow a quick move by the Raiders while the anti-trust suit is in progress.

The Rams, meanwhile, were happy in Anaheim and General Manager Don Klosterman said training camp again will be held at Fullerton State.

The Rams were one of the abstaining teams when the league voted 22-0 against permitting Oakland to move.

"If my partners in the NFL wanted to move a team into Los Angeles, I never would have stood in the way," said Klosterman.

Dixon Aids UNCW Year

Vertha Dixon

WILMINGTON — Former Ayden-Grifton standout Vertha Dixon recently completed a very successful sophomore season as a member of the UNC-Wilmington women's basketball team.

Dixon, who was an all-conference and Most Valuable Player with the Lady Chargers her senior year, averaged 10.1 points and 9.0 rebounds a game for the She-Hawks. Although playing at a forward position, she also led the team with 75 assists.

Five times, Dixon was the leading scorer in individual games and nine times was the top rebounder, including a school-record 22-board performance in a win over Wingate College.

UNCW finished the season with a 9-15 record, but has all five starters returning next year.

High School Is No Guarantee Grad Can Find A Job

By SUSAN J. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — When David was told to stay in school, he accepted the advice. A high school diploma, people said, means something. It'll help you get a job, they said.

Now, after a stint as an oil drum filler, David is standing in an unemployment line.

"They say, stay in school. But it didn't do me no good. If it did, what would I be doing here?" he says as he waits in line.

The federal government is about to spend as much as $11 million on a study to try to answer David's question — and find out why so many like him graduate to disappointing lives.

"The question is, are we teaching subjects that improve employment prospects?" asks Joseph Cronin, Illinois state school superintendent and a supporter of the new study.

Some superintendents doubt that the federal study — called "High School and Beyond" and the largest yet on the effects of high school education — will have much practical bearing on school districts.

"Local studies are better," says Eugene Reville, superintendent of the Buffalo, N.Y., schools. "What's true in Chicago certainly doesn't always apply to Buffalo."

Researchers concede the point, but see value in amassing national data. The study is headed by James Coleman, a University of Chicago sociologist. He says the overall purpose of the project is to find out how high school policies, such as course requirements and disciplines, affect people like David and their post-school lives.

Coleman wrote what became known as "the Coleman Report," a 1966 study that suggested blacks in integrated settings did better academically than those in segregated environments. Another explored "white flight" from cities as a result of school desegregation.

In "High School and Beyond," the federal government hopes to find out which high schools are producing the unemployable Davids and then, through the power of the federal purse, institute some changes.

The study began in February when the first of about 75,000 students across the country took a quiz designed by Coleman and the National Center for Education Statistics.

The students are asked about their high school course offerings and extracurricular activities. Questions also deal with school discipline, the youngsters' observations about the quality of teaching, their personal goals and facilities at the schools. A separate test examines the students' basic academic abilities.

The government also plans followup studies of a third of the students, focusing on their later education, work and family.

Coleman says the government hopes to accumulate enough data to be useful to education officials, administrators and legislators in shaping high school programs.

At present, Coleman says, educators often go along with what he calls educational fads, and spend money on programs without knowing what the results will be.

"We get the feeling that something is wrong — for instance, that high school graduates can't read well — and we'll pass a bill to start a new program without really knowing whether it will remedy the problem or not."

"The best way is to see whether people are better off for having gone through those programs — compare them with similar students who didn't have that experience," Coleman says.

One educational trend the federal government hopes to examine through "High School and Beyond" is the requirement that students pass basic skills tests in order to graduate from high school.

During the past four or five years, 36 states have adopted these "minimum competency tests," Coleman says.

"Minimum competency testing may be valuable in encouraging achievement, or it may be horrible," he says. "It may encourage students to drop out because they fear they won't pass the tests. But no one seems to know."

He says the study will look at the results over the years to see whether schools produce better achievers or more dropouts with the tests.

The study should also be useful in documenting problems of inner-city schools and take such matters "out of the realm of conjecture," Coleman says. "Insofar as we can show that some inner city schools are doing better than others and show the conditions at those schools that do work, there's a potential for making policy."

The survey is expected to cost $2.9 million this year, says Edith Huddleston, the study's project director in Washington. Each followup study — at least four are planned — is expected to cost at least $2 million, she says.

Some educators are skeptical about practical benefits of the study to local school districts.

Ms. Huddleston says a similar, but smaller, federal study done in 1972 has been used a lot — by other researchers. The study spawned 100 research projects, she says, HEW refers to them in proposing programs, often with financial incentives attached.

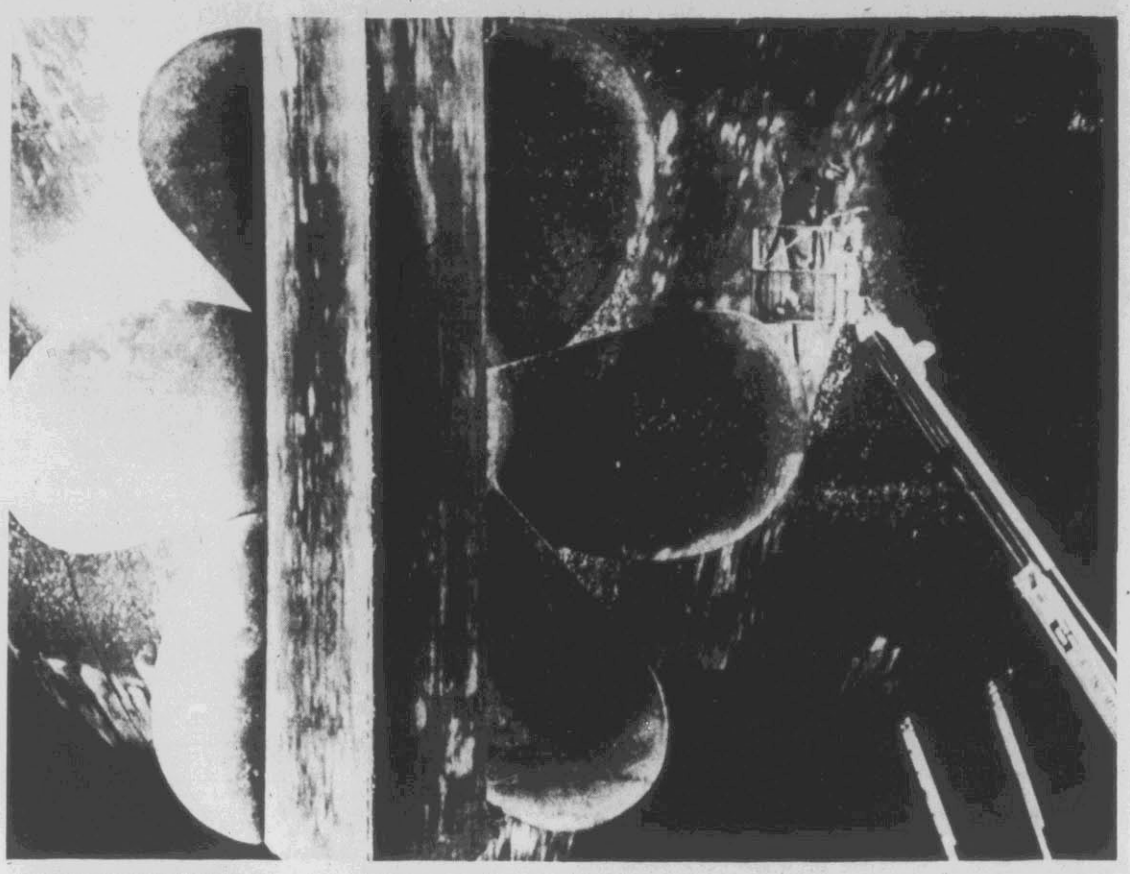
But Tom Giugni, superintendent of the Sacramento, Calif., City School District, says, "It serves no purpose to find out what the national trend is if you don't know what local demands are. We find our state tobe different and unique."

Paul Masem, superintendent of schools in Little Rock, Ark., agrees. "As a local school person I have to look at some kind of generalized U.S. finding and localize it," he says. "For example, if I live in an industrial area, the labor market is going to affect where my kids go when they graduate."

Coleman acknowledges that the critics have a point. "Their experience is exactly the experience of local school districts throughout the country," he says.

But if the survey won't say anything about, or to, individual school districts, its findings about programs now going on around the country — like minimum competency — will enable the researchers "to say things about certain kinds of programs that states and local government can use, like vocational education or the impact of a broader curriculum versus a narrower."

And the federal government will use the data in deciding what high school programs merit support, at times with financial incentives to the states. "That's basically how the federal government has operated in influencing state policy," he says.



BLASTING THE BARNACLES — Dwarfed by a gigantic propeller and rudder, workers at a Portland, Ore., drydock clean the hull of the Stuyvesant, a 1,098-foot long crude oil tanker. The ship, with its 228,274 dead weight tonnage, will sail for Valdez, Alaska when the repairs are completed. (AP Laserphoto)

Crops Provide Tractor Fuel

ALFALFA, Ore. (UPI) — A visitor to Ron Miller's spread probably would think he runs a bootleg liquor operation.

Tubs of potato mash smell and ferment in rooms throughout Miller's home. A copper still in Miller's laundry room heats the mash into a batch of very strong "white lightning."

But says he doesn't even taste his brew.

"Come on. I'll prove it to you," he said.

He dropped a gauge into a reeking jar of clear alcohol. It registered 165 proof. Then he walked through a maze of old cars until he came to his tractor. He disconnected the tractor's gas line and hooked up a syphon tube from his jar of homemade alcohol.

The tractor coughed to life. He proudly adjusted its carburetor and the engine roared. It seemed to enjoy the stuff.

"I'm not interested in gasohol," he said. "Cars can run just as well on 100 percent alcohol. The mileage is nearly as good as gasoline. You just have to adjust the carburetor. With the rising cost of gas this is the only way I'm going to be able to farm."

Miller has big dreams. He wants to say goodbye to his $3,500-and-growing annual gas bill. He wants to trade in his small still for a 300-gallon, or maybe even a 1,000-gallon version. He wants to turn enough potatoes into fuel to supply a co-op of five ranchers.

Miller, 44, applied for a $10,000 federal grant. His wife "has worn out a typewriter" filling out license forms.

After posting a $2,500 bond, he legally can make alcohol. Now, he says, government agencies have eased up on the forms and charges to encourage producing alcohol for fuel.

Agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and the Oregon Liquor Control Commission have visited Miller to make sure the brew is going into gas tanks. Miller can't drive his car on the street until he gets a special sticker that exempts him from state gas taxes.

For the past year, Miller has experimented with batches of potatoes. Last summer, he grew about four tons worth.

"I've talked to a lot of old bootleggers, but none of them had recipes for potatoes," he said. "They were making stuff good to drink. But potatoes grow well in this area. So I started experimenting on my own with the yeast and fermentation to make sure I get the right combination."

"We're going to build a solar still," he said. "That way we won't burn fuel to produce it. I'm going to convert my irrigation pumps and heater in my house to run on alcohol."

Miller said potatoes not suitable for sale are suitable for his still. The remaining mash makes excellent cattle feed.

"I'm still at the experimenting stage," he said. "I've sometimes stayed up nearly all night experimenting with batches. One blew up all over our kitchen. You have to have patience."

World Wildlife Fund Works On Every Continent

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a capital idea for the World Wildlife Fund. An auction for the benefit of the Bengal tiger, the elephant, the panda, the tropical rain forest. Not to mention the resplendent quetzel, the reticulated velvet gecko and the ever popular snail darter.

GREENPEACE DYE SEALS — According to Greenpeace, the conservation organization who released this photo, it shows a member of Greenpeace busy in the seal nurseries off the east coast of Canada, where they have been dying the seals with a vegetable dye. The dye makes the fur commercially valueless. Members of Greenpeace have eluded Canadian Government Fisheries officials, according to the group, to reach the seals — thousands of which are killed by hunters. (AP Laserphoto)

Not surprisingly, befitting the Fund's blueblood image, it was all very ... well, just very.

It was held at Christie's, a posh New York auction gallery. George Plimpton was master of ceremonies; Walter Cronkite, Jane Pauley and political offspring Jack Ford and Kerry Kennedy among the auctioneers.

Donors included Gerald Ford, Elliot Richardson, John Lindsay and Mrs. Constance Mellon; the benefit committee included W. Averell Harriman, Sen. and Mrs. Claiborne Pell, Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, and the Duke and Duchess de La Rochefoucauld, the Baroness Gabrielle Bentinck Van Schoonheten and the Prince and Princess Sadruddin Aga Khan.

A round of golf with Ford went for $2,000; a balloon trip with Malcolm Forbes for $775 and a raft trip with an assortment of Kennedys for $600. The proceeds were $64,000, not including the $50 most of the 350 bidders paid to get in. Anything spent was, of course, tax deductible.

The World Wildlife Fund is the Rolls Royce of environmental groups, repository for old money from Park Avenue and Newport and the crowned heads of Europe; from Exxon and Texaco and Citibank and IBM and Ford and Time Inc. A cause, but a refined cause, unlikely to involve one in confrontations; unlikely to require a participant to sail into the midst of a whaling fleet.

Its worldwide chairman is Sir Peter Scott, the British sailor, diver, artist and waterfowl expert. He succeeded Prince Bernhard of The Netherlands. The prince was forced to resign after allegations he took $1 million from the Lockheed Corp., but he still heads the Dutch branch. S. Dillon Ripley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, is U.S. chairman; Prince Philip heads the British branch.The Fund was started in 1961 as a fund-raising arm of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources. Its founders were upper crust, many of them hunters with the time and money to safari to the world's least developed regions.

Bankrolled by private donations — there are no members as such — it has independent chapters in 27 nations and a world headquarters in Switzerland. Former Environmental Protection Administrator Russell Train is president and chief executive officer of the U.S. branch, which parcels out $1 million a year to protect plant and animal life on every continent.

Thus, in 1966, Lindbergh personally convinced the president of Peru to stop the slaughter of blue whales off his country's coast; thus, Prince Bernhard, knowing Ethiopia had no national parks, told officials there he wanted to visit one. When he arrived, Ethiopia had a national park.

And thus, last year, the Fund reached agreement where others had failed — convincing China to join in a project to preserve animals such as the giant panda and the snow leopard and monitor the sale of pelts and other souvenirs through Hong Kong.

"The China agreement was a real breakthrough," says Lewis Regenstein of the Fund for Animals, a frequent critic of the Wildlife Fund. "They're probably the only ones who could have done it. They're a very influential and powerful group and when they try to make their views known, they're very effective."

Fund officials emphasize that their most effective projects are scientific rather than emotional. One fund, for example, bankrolled Joy Adamson's lion project in Kenya and another was set up after her death to keep it going.

There's a successful program at Cornell University, where more than 150 peregrine falcons have been nurtured and released in the eastern United States, where they were extinct. There's the Bengal tiger project begun in 1967 when the the population had dwindled from 50,000 to 2,000. The Fund worked with the governments of India and Nepal to set aside a preserve and in 12 years, the population has doubled.

There's also a continuing worldwide effort to preserve tropical rain forests. There are campaigns to save animals ranging from the elephant and the whale down to the Dakota and Ottoe Prairie Skippers, two species of western Minnesota butterflies.

The basic line is that what's good for animals and plants is good for man; that small, exotic forms of life can have untapped potential.

"Sixty percent of all prescriptions written in the United States come from exotic plants," Train says. "People sneer at things like the furbish lousewort, but we shouldn't be fooled by exotic botanical names. They can have great potential.

"One day a couple of years ago, a friend stopped me on the street and said, 'Russ, you'd better forget that snail darter. Just adopt a rule that if it's smaller than three inches long, forget about it.' I said 'Whoops! There goes penicillin.'"

There are times when nothing will work. Like in Uganda under Idi Amin, where a series of Fund projects deteriorated.

"It was like pouring money down a rathole," says Train. "You can't even send in spare parts for machinery to a situation like that. You don't know who to send them to, you don't know what they need. If you do send them in, they'd be on the black market the next day and some minister would be pocketing the profits."

The people who run the U.S. fund point out that half the $2 million annual budget of the group's U.S. chapter comes from $5 or $10 slipped into an envelope. They note that for every businessman on the board of directors, there are two or three scientists or environmentalists, people like S. Dillon Ripley and Roger Tory Peterson.

But nobody denies old school ties, friendships formed in board rooms and clubs, that keep money coming from bluebloods and big business.

"To an extent, one gets involved because of one's friendships," says Lawrence S. Huntington, president of the Fiduciary Trust Co. of New York and a member of the U.S. fund's board. "I believe the process of wiping out forests and productive land isn't something I want to stand by and watch. I suppose I chose the World Wildlife Fund rather than another group because a couple of my friends were on the board and said, 'Join us.'"

Joseph F. Cullman III, chairman of the executive committee of both the Philip Morris Corp. and the World Wildlife Fund-U.S. is a hunter and outdoorsman lured to the Fund by Ripley and Thomas Watson Jr. of IBM, U.S. ambassador to Moscow. Now Cullman is doing the recruiting — soliciting money and participation from big business.

That, of course, leads to a subdued image. One just doesn't challenge the establishment when one is the establishment.

So where members of the Fund for Animals put their bodies in front of the seal hunters, the World Wildlife Fund uses persuasion or does nothing at all. It takes no stand on seal hunting — the species isn't endangered — or on nuclear power, the B-1 bomber or Agent Orange.

Several years ago, more militant environmental groups questioned the number of hunters on the WWF board. Today, those who hunt are less ardent. Cullman, whose office is dominated by tusks from an elephant he shot a decade ago, says: "I probably wouldn't do it today."

But while critics concede the two years of Train's presidency has made the fund more activist, they say it still doesn't do enough.

Regenstein believes the Wildlife Fund does a "very, very good job" in scientific areas and in preserving habitats. "But it's very frustrating," he says, "to see a full-page ad in The New Yorker or Time or Newsweek for the World Wildlife Fund with a big picture of a sea otter that says 'Help us save the sea otter,' when many of us are out there on the front lines fighting to keep the sea otter on the endangered species list.

"They have people on their board from the oil industry and chemical companies so they can't be too activist. But they could do a lot more to try to influence the policies of the U.S. government."

Train says the corporate support doesn't influence policy — most corporations take little interest in donations after they're made. But others see a potential for conflict with oil or chemical companies who may seek to develop land the fund wants to preserve.

Thomas J. Bryan, the U.S. fund's director of corporate development, says the fund's support of the bill to set aside the Alaskan Wilderness drew a number of complaints from business contributors.

But sedate and Eastern doesn't always mean quiet. The Christie's auction, for example, followed a rather lengthy cocktail party. As Plimpton was introducing Train — "a Princeton man and a man who has seen the bongo" — he was interrupted by an increasingly loud murmur from the back of the room.

"You're all," he said, "behaving like a bunch of wildebeests back there."

An 'Ocean' For Shark Research

By WILLIAM SILBERG

DETROIT (UPI) — Dr. Walter Chavin wanted as natural an environment as possible for the sharks he uses in biomedical research. So he built his own "ocean" — in the middle of the city.

Chavin, a Wayne State University biology professor, says his artificial "ocean" is the only facility of its kind, duplicating in "almost all ways" the sharks' natural habitat.

Chavin's "ocean" is a roomfull of about 15 tanks with a total 25,000-gallon capacity and such an effective recycling-filtration system that water put into the tanks more than eight years ago still is being used.

"We wanted to keep a constant environment, close to the ocean," Chavin said. "Marine organisms cannot take substantial changes in surroundings and survive. But we've had animals in there for long periods of time." One shark has been there five years.

But the research facility also is unique because of the way in which it was designed and constructed.

Chavin, who had no plumbing, electrical or engineering experience, began the project by building pools for the sharks out of fiberglass.

The water treatment system was a product of time, materials and ingenuity contributed by members of the Wayne State and local communities, including a high school student group.

A 600-gallon prototype model proved successful and the whole system finally was completed after about five years of work and planning.

Chavin estimated the facility would have cost $1 million if built by a contractor, but the cost to the university was only $5,000 to $6,000 for materials.

In some ways, Chavin said, the facility is even better than the sharks' natural surroundings because researchers don't have to worry about pollution or changes in temperature and salinity.

Skates kept in the tanks felt so much at home they laid and hatched eggs, Chavin said. Some sharks have laid eggs, but they did not hatch.

Chavin said the shark is an ideal research tool because it is a relatively simple animal, allowing scientists to answer biological questions much more easily than more complex mammals.

Chavin works with nurse sharks, which are 3 to 4 feet long, and horn sharks, which are about 3 feet in length. There are about 18 sharks in the tanks now, but Chavin said he has had as many as 60 on hand at one time.

He said larger sharks wouldn't be very useful for his experiments.

"People are disappointed when they see sharks are that small," he said. "But when you get big sharks, it's impossible to handle them."

The sharks, flown in from California and Florida, currently are being used in research on endocrine glands, blood cells, membranes and kidneys.

Chavin said he hopes shortly to begin research on shark repellents, in conjunction with a University of Maryland scientist.

He said he and his researchers have had no major problems working with sharks, although "someone got nipped once because he didn't get his fingers out of the way."

"Sometimes they leap out of the water if your hand is over the tank," he said. "They're looking for food."

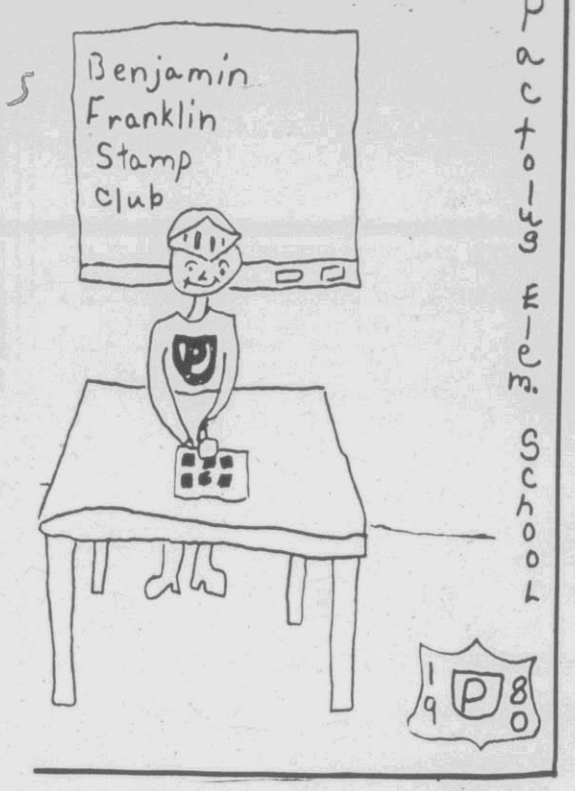
Pactolus School Held Contest For A Stamp Design



THE WINNING STAMP. . .selected to be reproduced was designed by Lana Harris. The warrior, which is the school's symbol, is depicted sitting at a library table arranging his stamps.

PACTOLUS — The Pactolus Elementary School chapter of the Ben Franklin Stamp Club has announced the winners of its "Design Our Own Stamp" contest.

Each member of the club was asked to design a stamp which best represented the Pactolus Stamp Club. There are three stamps clubs at Pactolus. In each club, six ribbons were awarded: first, second and third in originality and first, second and third in craftsmanship. The winning stamp from all three clubs will be reproduced for all members.

Selecting the winners were George Brett, a visiting artist from Pitt Community College, and Mrs. Ann Hudson, Grimesland Postmaster. Brett visited the club and demonstrated how to make a rubber stamp and shared his talents in postal arts. Mrs. Hudson visits area schools, starting stamp clubs which the U.S. Post Office sponsors.

Winners are as follows: Mrs. Barnhill's class — originality — David Salzlein, first; Lisa Pollard, second and Charles Tyson, third. — Craftsmanship — Heather Salzlein, first, Darin Briley, second; and Kay Noble, third.

Mrs. Ebron's class — originality — Lewis Singleton, first; Jerome Worsley, second; and Ann Silverthorne, third. Craftsmanship — Larry Mizell, first; Hattette Crandol, second; James Heath, third.

Mrs. Clark-Mrs. Briley's combination class — Originality — Lana Harris, first; Bruce Eckert, second; and Originality — Lana Harris, first; Bruce Eckert, second; and Cynthia Ward, third. Craftsmanship — Aretha Pope, first; Bennie Butts, second; and Rodney Sutton, third.

Activities of the club include designing and making their own stamp album, stamp swapping, research, crossword puzzles and special guests.

Mrs. Deborah Harris, the club's parent-advisor, formed the Pactolus clubs this year. She is aided by Mrs. Debrah Kornegay.

Mrs. Harris said area stamp collectors are invited to visit and share their knowledge of stamps and show their collections to the students. Contact her at 752-6865.

Named For Gen. Bradley

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — In a rare speaking appearance, the nation's only living five-star general says he likes the idea of having his name on the hospital "that's made a practice of saving my life the past 2½ years."

Seated in a wheelchair, Gen. Omar N. Bradley, 87, attended groundbreaking ceremonies Friday for an addition to the William Beaumont Medical Center that was named after him.

"I am delighted to be here today to break ground for this added facility which may well enable the extraordinary fine staff at the William Beaumont Medical Center to render even greater service to our Army community," he said.

Rev. John Price First Rector For St. Timothy

St. Timothy's Episcopal Church of Greenville has called its first rector, The Rev. John Randolph Price.

The Rev. Mr. Price came to Greenville to serve St. Paul's Episcopal Church as associate rector, and shortly after his arrival he was asked to serve as vicar of St. Timothy's, a new parochial mission formed by St. Paul's.

At the recent convention of the Diocese of East Carolina held in Greenville, St. Timothy's was approved to become an aided parish, advancing from mission status, and the church was thus enabled to call a rector.

A second-generation priest of the church, Price is the son of the Rev. William P. Price of High Point and the late Betsey Ford Price. He received his undergraduate education at Lafayette College in Easton, Pa. and his theological education at the General Theological Seminary in New York City, earning the S.T.M. degree. Before coming to Greenville, he was senior pastoral assistant at the Church of the Intercession in New York City.

Price was recently elected to the Executive Council of the Diocese of East Carolina and serves as chairman of the Committee for Youth of the Diocese. He is married to the former Verna R. Roper of Bath.

St. Timothy's plans to erect a building soon on a parcel of land owned by the church in Cherry Oaks. At the present, Price will maintain his office at St. Paul's. A service of institution for the new rector will be held within the next few weeks.

Vote Stance On Abortion

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — An American Lutheran Church task force on abortion concludes that "life is a continuous process from conception through death" but that it's difficult to specify when "personhood exists."

The statement, approved by a divided 10-4 vote, goes before the denomination's governing convention for its action next October.

Calling abortion "always a serious matter," the statement says individuals have "the responsibility to make the best possible decision they are capable of making" about it "in the light of the information available to them and their sense of accountability to God, neighbor and self."

A chief objecion by those dissenting from the statement was what they termed its "tendency ... to accept the values that society ascribes to human beings rather than the intrinsic value given by God."

At conception, the union of sperm and ovum begins a "new, unique individual life" and "life is valuable as a gift of God," the majority statement says, adding:

"However, we recognize there is a common tendency to ascribe value to a human being by steps in relation to nearness to the time of birth or to the time of death... To pinpoint a specific time when personhood exists is very difficult... The real problem occurs when our respect for potential human personhood collides with the needs and values of actual persons."

NASA Team To Investigate Windmill

By ELISSA McCRARY

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A crew from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is scheduled to arrive in the small mountain town of Boone next week to investigate complaints that a giant wind turbine is too noisy and interferes with area television reception.

Darrell Baldwin, assistant manager of NASA's Wind Energy Office at the agency's Lewisville, Ohio, center, said Friday that about 20 residents have complained about the windmill. He said a NASA official has been in Boone, a college town in western North Carolina, this week discussing the problems with the residents.

Residents have said the windmill causes their television pictures to flicker from dark to light and makes a loud thumping sound as the blades turn.

"It's not a new problem," Baldwin said. "It has been going on since the windmill began operation last July. But we intend to solve any problems the windmill may develop."

The windmill, the world's largest wind turbine, was dedicated last July 11 atop Howard's Knob in Boone. Its two blades are as long as the wingspan of a Boeing 747, and it operates at speeds of 35 revolutions per minute.

The windmill was a joint project of the U.S. Department of Energy and NASA. It is operated by the Blue Ridge Electric Membership Co. in Lenoir.

Baldwin said since the Boone windmill is the first of its kind in the country, NASA hasn't had a chance to work out any problems.

"We're trying to find different ways to deal with the problems," he said. "There has to be more than one solution here."

Baldwin said residents have complained that the windmill causes their TV pictures to blur, like an airplane is flying over. He said changing the material the blades are made of may help.

"Right now, the blades are steel. But we're having a contractor work up some fiberglass blades. That may do the trick. We were planning to test fiberglass blades on that windmill sometime within the next year anyway," he said.

Baldwin said wooden blades also may be tested.

"If we can't get rid of the problem by changing the blades, then we may have to get cable TV for the residents," he said. He said the federal government had cable TV installed for residents near Block Island, R.I., when NASA put in a small windmill there several years ago.

Baldwin said the windmill may have run at lower speeds to solve the noise problem.

"The rotor is downwind of the windmill, and that may cause the problem. Some engineers have suggested that if the rotor were upwind, there wouldn't be as much noise," he said.

He said different blade materials may solve the noise problem as well as clear up area TV reception.

"We don't feel these people are complainers," Baldwin said. "We respect the fact that they are used to living in a place that's quiet, and we intend to solve these problems to their satisfaction."

Compromise Reached On Oil Wells And Eagles

By GORDON HANSON
Associated Press Writer

GRASSY BUTTE, N.D. (AP) — The case of the oil well vs. the amorous eagles has reached a compromise of sorts. The oil rig is drilling and the eagles are courting.

But wildlife biologist Lewis Young still thinks there's too much traffic rumbling over a rutted road in the rugged Badlands of North Dakota.

Young, who works for the U.S. Forest Service, believes a pair of rare golden eagles may be discouraged from mating because of trucks and heavy equipment traveling back and forth to an isolated oil well.

"If it were up to me, and I'm not the decision-maker, they wouldn't use that road during the period the eagles are ordinarily resting there and raising their young," said Young, 31.

That period is "from approximately late February until about early July," he said.

The problem is not the well itself, located 10 miles from Grassy Butte and a good three or four miles from two of the huge nests in which the eagles might want to set up housekeeping.

The problem is that the access road to the well "runs within 100 to 300 feet of those nests on the side of a clay cliff," Young said.

"With all that unexpected vehicle activity going to the well, the birds are susceptible to disturbance during their courtship, egg-laying and incubation."

That's the period they're most likely to desert their nest. It doesn't take much harassment for them to leave, and that means they won't breed and raise their young this year."

Egg-laying is anywhere from early March to late April.

"They usually lay two eggs, quite often both hatch, and it takes nine or 10 weeks before the nestlings are ready to get out of the nest," Young said.

Under terms of a 1975 land use plan, Pennzoil Co. of Houston was granted permission to use the access road to the test well site until this April 1, said Jim Fishburn, a district ranger at Watford City.

"That date is probably later than it should be this spring in the vicinity of those nests," Fishburn said.

The compromise lies in Pennzoil's application for a new route to the well. If oil is discovered at the test site, traffic will be rerouted away from the two cliff nests.

"There are things we can work out" to accomodate the oil industry and the environment, said Fishburn. "We're holding them (Pennzoil) to the April 1 deadline.

"The birds aren't necessarily going to hold up oil production, but they're certainly going to be considered in the the overall management of the area," he said.

Wilburn Lura, drilling superintendent for Pennzoil Exploration and Production Co., said in Denver:

"If there's oil in that well, we'll get a different route and work with the Forest Service. If that comes up, we'll be ready to go."

Fishburn said the two birds are two of the 23 known golden eagles in the Badlands. "We're in the process of determining exactly how much impact this activity has on them," he said.

There were 37 nests in the Badlands six years ago, and the eagles build upon them each spring as part of their courtship, Young said. Each pair may have more than one nest, and nobody really knows which one they'll choose each year.

Although they attack lambs, calves and chickens, they also benefit ranchers by feeding primarily on rabbits, prairie dogs and ground squirrels.

They have a wingspan of 6 to 7 feet and mate for life, Young said. If one bird dies, the other usually finds another mate immediately.

Courtship is begun anew each year in the late winter or early spring. Nest-building is part of the action, with the eagles adding twigs and branches to the already existing nests in trees or along cliffs.

The nests near the access road "are probably five feet in diameter and four feet deep. They weigh hundreds of pounds," said Young.

"As long as the oil companies work with us, we can work out some of the details where sometimes we have the best of both worlds: the birds are protected, and oil exploration can continue."

CELEBRITY DIRECTORY — Michael Levine is hard at work on galley proofs for another printing of his celebrity directory called "How to reach Anyone Who's Anyone?" He says the book lists over 3,000 people who rate as "anyone." In it you can find the address from varied celebrities such as Mickey Mouse and actor John Travolta. (AP Laserphoto)

A One-Penny Bill

GASTONIA, N.C. (AP) — The computer at Gaston Memorial Hospital doesn't miss much, even if a patient owes a penny. If you don't believe it, ask Franklin D. Cato.

Cato had been hospitalized for an operation and recuperation. He was released on Dec. 13.

Cato thought his wife's insurance policy and his personal insurance would pay the full coverage. But the insurance only covered $2,069.65 of the coverage. The total charge was $2,069.66.

"I couldn't believe it," he said. "It cost them 15 cents to mail the thing to me.

"I took it to the front office where I work (TiCaro, Inc.), and told them I wanted full coverage. They just couldn't stop laughing.

A spokesman for the hospital said the small computer bills are not out of the ordinary. The hospital would send the statement to the patient even if the balance is zero. But small charges (one penny to $5) are called "administrative writeoffs" that the hospital would forget if the patient didn't pay the bill.

Spoke To Realtors

The Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors held its monthly meeting recently with the organization's president, Ann Duffus, presiding.

Guest speaker for the meeting was Ray Stevens, Realtor with Simpson & Underwood Realtors of Raleigh. Stevens is a committee member of the North Carolina Association Board of Realtors' R-PAC committee.

The speaker discussed R-PAC, which represents the Realtor Political Action Committee. The main purpose of the committee, it was noted, is to help pull political forces together with our governing bodies.

Ms. Margaret Register, supervisor of the Pitt County Board of Elections, also reminded the members to register and vote in the upcoming elections.

The local board meets each month at the Greenville Golf and Country Club.

Gas Prices To Be Hiked Ten Cents A Gallon

AFTER RELEASE — An Iranian student catches up on some reading on the ground outside the Monroe, La., jail after his release Thursday. He and 43 others had been on a hunger strike for a week after being arrested during a demonstration. The 44 were released on bond Thursday. (AP Laserphoto)

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans will be paying at least 10 cents a gallon more for their gasoline two months from now, and if President Carter has his way the price increases won't stop anytime soon.

In fact, prices could climb an additional 3 cents by the end of the year if Congress accepts Carter's plan to tie increases in the federal gas tax to the general rise of gasoline prices.

Using authority Congress has already given him, Carter acted Friday to impose a $4.62 per barrel fee on imported crude oil beginning today. At the same time, he imposed a complex set of regulations to insure that the entire brunt of the fee will be placed on gasoline prices.

Administration officials say those actions will mean a rise in gasoline prices beginning May 15 of 10 cents a gallon.

The hike — in effect a $10 billion annual tax — will be on top of the 4 cents in federal gasoline taxes motorists already pay.

Carter said he will drop the import fee if Congress agrees to boost the federal gasoline tax to 14 cents a gallon and impose a mechanism that will allow the tax to rise as the base price of gasoline increases.

Administration officials, briefing reporters on the tax, said the administration would propose replacing the present fixed tax of 4 cents per gallon with a tax of about 14 percent, applied to the cost of gasoline to the dealer.

That wholesale cost currently is approximately 99 cents a gallon, but the Energy Department is predicting it could increase to $1.24 by the end of the year. If Congress approves the 14 percent rate, that would mean the federal tax would go from 14 cents to 17 cents per gallon.

However, judging from the initial negative reaction among congressmen to Carter's independent action to impose the oil import fee, passage of his tax indexing proposal is far from certain.

The 10-cent-a-gallon increase will translate into an annual cost of $67 for the average American motorist who drives 10,000 miles a year in a car that gets 15 miles per gallon.

Administration officials say the Carter plan should cut gasoline consumption by about 100,000 barrels a day by May 1981 and by 250,000 barrels a day two years later if Congress goes along with Carter's proposal to make the tax even stiffer.

Carter also promised Friday that his administration would step up its conservation efforts with the goal of involving "every single citizen in conserving energy."

Carter did not spell out details of the new conservation effort, but one official, who asked not to be identified, said a key element would include a stepped up ride-sharing program aimed at getting 5 million to 6 million commuters to abandon their cars in favor of car pools.

The official said an estimated 50 million to 60 million Americans currently drive to work alone. He said getting one of 10 such Americans into a car pool would save 80,000 barrels of gasoline a day.

Commission On Brown Lung Reaches Tentative Agreement

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A governor's commission looking into ways of speeding up compensation to brown lung victims gave tentative agreement to a plan Friday not to attempt to provide guidelines for medical criteria for diagnosing the disease, but instead will suggest another committee to look into the matter.

The commission also reached a tentative agreement to recommend that the state Industrial Commission eliminate a dual procedure in which a worker found to have one disabling disease is later found to have a second.

Dr. Robert Byrd, commission chairman, said the suggestion could possibly be reached in one procedure. Commission member Florence Sandlin of Julian said the present dual procedure results in "delay on top of delay."

The decisions came following a hearing Friday in which the commision refused to hear a presentation by Raleigh attorney Charles Hassell whose firm is representing 150 brown lung disability award claimants. The commission voted 3-2 not to hear Hassell's presentation on the grounds that he would appear as an individual and not as a spokesman for an organization.

The decision drew the wrath of the Carolina Brown Lung Association, which one spokesman for the group said violated a promise by Gov. Jim Hunt.

Virginia Bradley of Erwin said the Hunt-appointed commission would "include input from lawyers who represent brown lung victims."

The association also criticized testimony from a Burlington Industries spokesman that indicated cigarette smoking is a worse consequence for textile employees than cotton dust. Moon W. Suh, a Burlington statistician, testified Friday that he would show "how one may get paid easily for 'brown lung disability' for smoking cigarettes."

"Why do they contend cigarette smoking causes brown lung when we have nonsmokers who have brown lung," Ms. Bradley said.

Suh recited statistics and contended that "the data provides a positive proof that the effect of smoking is unquestionably as large as and perhaps much larger than the effect of cotton dust."

Suh disagreed with the assertion of Yale University scientists Gerald Beck and Dr. Neil Schacter, who told the commission last week that, although cigarette smoking can cause lung problems in textile workers, the majority of those workers who smoke "would not be so disabled in the absence of their exposure to cotton dust."

Calls For Lee's Suspension

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Republican gubernatorial candidate I. Beverly Lake Jr. said Friday that Gov. Jim Hunt should suspend the state secretary of Natural Resources and Community Development pending the investigation of federal job funds mismanagement in Washington County.

Lake said Secretary Howard N. Lee, and Deputy Secretary Eva M. Clayton should be suspended until the state has cleared up the controversy surrounding Comprehensive Employment and Training Act funds spent by the Eastern N.C. Opportunities Center in Roper.

At a news conference in Raleigh Friday, Lake criticized Hunt for the hiring of a $300-a-day investigator, Raleigh accountant Thomas N. Brafford, to look into the situation with Hunt's legal counsel, Jack L. Cozort.

Lake maintained that State Auditor Henry L. Bridges and the State Bureau of Investigation "have proven investigative abilities and they are already on the state payroll."

"There is no reason why Gov. Hunt should see fit to bypass these officials unless he does not want the truth behind the Roper scandal to become public," Lake said.

Hunt deputy press secretary R. Brent Hackney said "I'm not even going to dignify that with a comment."

The state auditor's office uncovered more than $572,000 in irregularities in the spending of CETA funds by the Washington County center. Some of those irregularities have been justified, sources said.

The contracts were overseen by Mrs. Clayton within NCRD.

In November, four employees of the center were indicted on 22 counts of misuse of funds from the CETA contracts. One employee pleaded no contest to a forgery charge and another pleaded guilty to one count of embezzlement in Washington County Superior Court last month.

Vocational Center Recycling Here & Now

Recycling is something that's been talked about in Pitt County for at least the past 10 years: There has to be a better way than taking up land and spending money to bury by-products of home and industry that could be reused if there were only a channel back to the marketplace.

The East Carolina Vocation Center here is doing something besides talk. It's well into several programs that provide job training for handicapped persons of Pitt and Martin counties as they enable industries and individuals throughout the Eastern Region to recycle various materials, including aluminum, plastic, paper, wood and soon, it's hoped, glass.

A bailer of aluminum cans has recently been put into operation and the center is now able to buy aluminum cans at the same rate as the Reynolds Aluminum truck which visits here each Friday. The center can buy them any weekday and pay immediately. The price paid is 26 cents per pound, or a little more than a penny a can, since 23 to 24 cans usually make a pound.

How do you spot an all-aluminum can? It's the molded one, with no seam down the side, Quinn Morris, plant supervisor for aluminum recycling, said. Bi-metal ones have the seam.

The center is accepting cans directly from the public, but it's also a receiving-bailing center for collectors from throughout the east, including workshops and ADAP centers in Jacksonville, Kenansville, Washington, Rose Hill, Ahoskie, New Bern, Kinston, and Goldsboro. Jacksonville, too, is a receiving point, since it has a flattener of cans for more economical transporting of them to Greenville.

Cardboard is now being collected from virtually every industry and large handler of waste cardboard in the area, Clodfelter said. Cardboard supervisor William Jones estimated that between 500 and 600 tons a month is now being recycled through the workshop. Two local firms, Foodland and Garner-Wynne-Manning are furnished balers because of their large volume.

Boxes brought to the center should be broken down, if at all possible.

Newspaper is being collected at "recycling houses" placed at various parking lots in Greenville and Ayden. There are plans to locate more in other towns in the area. At the present time slick paper like that of magazines cannot be handled, Clodfelter said. Newspaper is not being paid for, except in large quantities.

Paper is reused to make the cost of more paper less costly, and also save wood.

Soft plastic bags are being collected from a number of industries, Clodfelter said. There are plans to begin accepting clear plastic two-liter soft drink bottles as of the publishing of this article. Every part of the bottle, including its aluminum cap and its harder plastic base can be reused, he said. About three cents per pound will be paid.

More different types of plastic hopefully can be collected in the future, Clodfelter said, as markets are found. Plastic is being reused to make more plastic products.

Fabric is being collected from a number of area sources, too, and clothing and other fabric items beyond use can be sold or donated to the center, depending on the quantities. It can be reused for cleaning rags and also to mix with other materials for making roofing material and rugs, Clodfelter said.

Glass will be collected before long, too, Clodfelter indicated. Wood scraps from pallet-building at the center is burned in wood furnaces used for heating the center.

Clodfelter and Vocational Center Director Howard Dawkins said the center hopes to serve the community more and more as a channel for recycling. Clodfelter expressed ambition to work with both the county and municipalities in ways to recycle some of the municipal waste that now goes to the one landfill in the county.

"It's feasible," he said, "for virtually every kind of waste product to be recycled. About all that would be necessary is for dry trash to be kept separate from wet (organic matter — garbage) by the householder. We can provide the labor for further separation. We'd really like to see some thinking in this direction. We feel we can be of service if the towns and counties of this area see fit.

"We're already doing a lot and can do more to help this area and the country and the world overcome energy problems. It is important that individuals and organizations participate to fight litter and conserve natural resources."

Materials are accepted at the center, located in the Greenville industrial park north of town, from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. Monday through Friday, and from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. Saturdays.

Any firm having a quantity of any recyclable material not being donated or sold to the Vocational Center at this time is invited to contact Clodfelter.

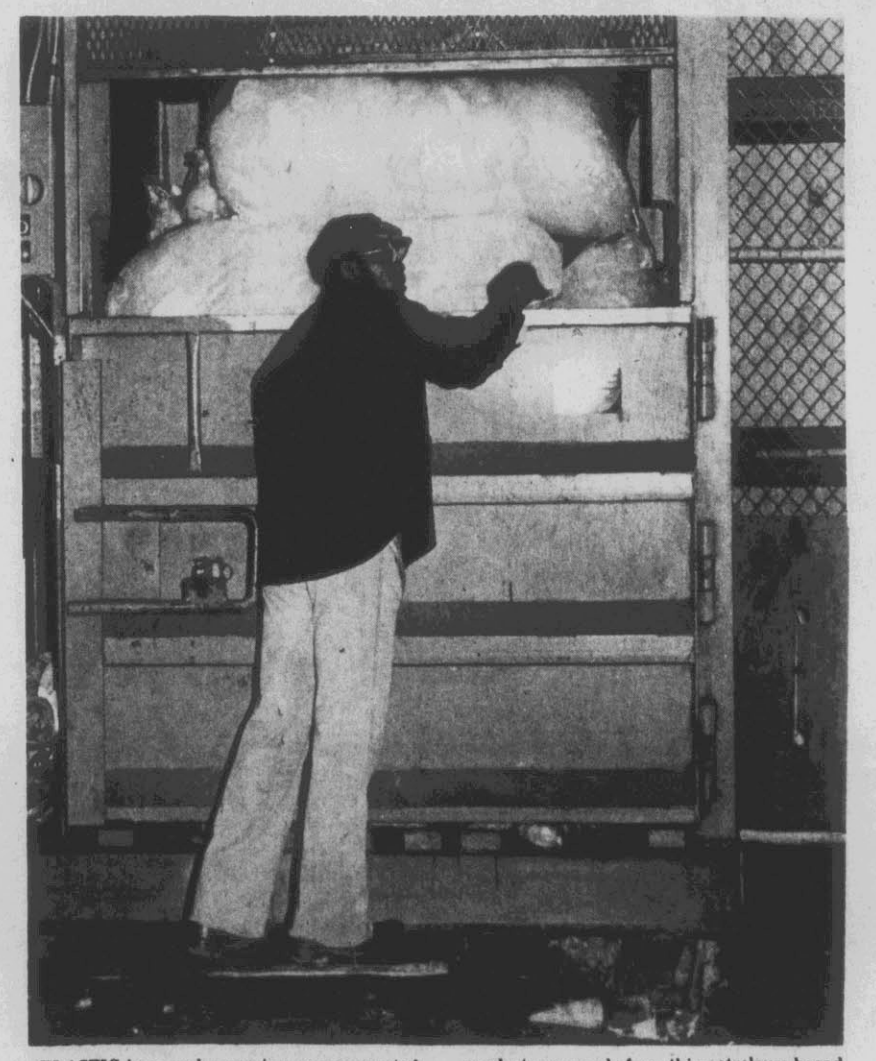
Text & Photos By Carol Tyer



PLASTIC bags and wrapping are compacted for transporting to market. The compactor is operated by Linwood Chapman. Other plastic products are made from this petroleum-based product.

At Wit's End

By ERMA BOMBECK

When the history of the Great Parental Disciplinarians is compiled, there will be an entire section devoted to the "PT Mother."

The "PT Mother" is a fun name given by children to Moms who rule by "Promises and Threats."

Promises-and-threats was never meant to be as effective as hitting and slapping, but it is one of the few non-violent ways of communication that can be used where anything physical is frowned upon. For example, it's one of the few techniques that can be used in a place of worship.

A child grabs a hymnal and begins to rip out the pages and the mother whispers, "You be a good little boy and we'll stop for ice cream after church."

The child pauses to consider the offer and rejects it by standing up on the pew and sticking his wet fingers into the mouth of the woman praying behind him and counting the number of her teeth out loud.

The mother grabs him and promises him a whole week of parties complete with magicians and dancing bears, PLUS watching the Tonight Show in its entirety.

As the child gathers four handbags and runs them to the altar, the mother grabs him and makes her last offer . . . a trip to Disneyland, Sea World and the circus in Moscow.

Somehow, you can almost sense the exact moment when the parents shift into the second phase: threats. It's no more Mr. Nice Guy. She's playing for the big marbles.

When the child starts to dance on the seats and sing, "Eighty-nine bottles of beer on the wall," the mother grabs him, holds him in her arms like a vise and says, "That's it! No more television. No more soft drinks. No more talk about getting a puppy!"

The kid figures she's bluffing and besides she's been "talking" puppy for two years. He's in over his head anyway so he plays his ace in the hole, screaming at the top of his voice, "Don't hit me, Mama! Don't hit me again! Please, Mama! I'll be good!"

There isn't a dry eye in the house as 300 pairs of eyes hand down a verdict against the mother's custody of the child. She grabs him and outside says, "I am mailing you to a post office in a ghost town in Arp, Oklahoma. You will never see Oreo cookies again as long as you live."

PT Mothers used to be pretty effective as disciplinarians, but that's before children learned how to play poker. Still, it's worth mentioning.

Dorothy Wang and Robert Bright have been selected at the 1980 Greenville Community Ambassadors. They will represent the city in a foreign country this summer.

The two were selected on the basis of a written application and interview. Wang has decided to visit France and Bright will travel to Sri Lanka.

This year marks the first time in several years that Greenville has been able to elect two students for the program. Clubs at Rose and throughout the community raise funds for the project.

Rose's Quiz Bowl team placed second in a field of seven high school in the Greenville Regional Quiz Bowl held last Saturday. Rose will now compete in the state final competition in Raleigh, April 19. Rose, who is Pitt County champion, won over Manteo High and J. A. Wilkinson High School of Belhaven before loosing to Currituck County in the final rounds of competition. Quiz Bowl is an annual event sponsored by libraries throughout the state.

The Bloodmobile visited Rose Friday, March 7, from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Students and faculty donated 183 pints of blood. This was a record number for the school, who was competing with area high schools in the amount donated by each school.

The 31st annual National Math Test was administered Tuesday. The 30-question is offered to high school students who are strong in math and scores from the test help determine those students who will represent the school in upcoming math contests. For the past two years, Rose has scored the highest of all participating schools in the state on this exam.

On March 19, the students of the school versus the faculty in volleyball and basketball will be staged at 6:45 p.m. The event is being sponsored by the Key Club and admission will be charged.

After several days of auditions, the cast and crew of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," by George M. Cohan, have been selected. The cast includes Jane Edgerly, Eric Hause, Susan Lilik, Alison Keel, Robin Jones, Karen Wheeler, Veronica Outterbridge, William Peterson, Stuart Ward, Jim Ensor, Bill Dawson, Jeff Jones and Mark Ward, stage manager. There are also several other chorus and dance parts. The musical will be perfomred in the school gym May 2-4.

Polly Bergen: Businesswoman, ERA Advocate

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
United Press International

"I'm a Southern Baptist from Bluegrass, Tenn., and the ERA makes sense to me," Polly Bergen said, making her pitch for the Equal Rights Amendment.

She's also from Los Angeles and New York and an actress, singer, businesswoman — and mother of three grown kids, daughter of two aging parents in Florida, and among the formerly married.

Polly Bergen, who recently put down roots once more in a spectacular Park Avenue apartment in New York City, was asked why she is getting into this emotional ERA battle.

"This really means something," she said.

She said it while sitting in her dining room, striking a pose for a photographer.

The backdrop was a giant painting by Lowell Nesbitt and featuring the artist's version of five-foot long ears of corn, barrel-sized peppers, and bowling-ball sized peas.

"This is not just a woman's issue but a matter of national concern," Miss Bergen said.

"The Equal Rights Amendment calls for only one thing: an end to any form of legal discrimination based solely on a citizen's sex."

On Miss Bergen's side are William M. Agee, chairman of The Bendix Corporation, and Coy G. Eklund, president, The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the U.S.

The three of them are leading the National Business Council for the ERA movement—organized by Miss Bergen with some help from the League of Women Voters.

They unrolled the blueprint for the drive a while back in the board room of Equitable in Rockefeller Center. Later, Miss Bergen elaborated in an interview in her showcase apartment that includes a bar with mirrored walls and ceiling.

At the kickoff meeting during which the group detailed its plans for top executives from 50 corporations, Miss Bergen looked her boardroom best in a black business suit.

It wasn't stage-dressing. She is on the board of The Singer Company. Her business know-how is the hands-on kind, refined and toughened when she ran her Oil of the Turtle cosmetics venture up to $6 million a year — from a kitchen start.

This day she belted out her case for the ERA in husky tones, her big blue eyes wide in amazement. The tycoons gathered for the occasion were wide-eyed, too— the way girl watchers are. But they heard what businesswoman Bergen said.

"I am pleased," Miss Bergen said, "that as a result of theis council the country will be able to see more men standing up with women for ERA."

Agee and Eklund beamed. There was applause.

There were questions. What about women registering for the draft, as requested by President Carter? What about women and combat?

Miss Bergen said she was against "dragging" the ERA into the draft question.

"Congress and the President have always had a right to ask for a draft of women."

If she were of draft age, how would she feel about it?

"Well, they'd take volunteers, wouldn't they? I'd make a great general or a terrific private," she said.

Miss Bergen said a year of compulsory service — between high school and college might not be a bad idea.

"All of us should be obligated to give a year of our life to our country sometime — and it needn't be limited to youth," she said. "They've got me anytime they want me."

"Our goal," Agee said, "is to recruit more of the nation's leading businessmen and businesswomen to push aggressively for ratification of the ERA.

"Only three more states are needed for ratification. With business adding its weight in support of the amendment, we'll make the June 1982 deadline.

Next to make his argument was Eklund. The evening before he co-hosted with Gloria Steinem, the feminist, a wine and cheese gala opening a "Decade of Women" exhibit in the lobby of Equitable's headquarters building in Rockefeller center.

Asked later by a reporter, why Equitable is getting involved in these causes, he said the company is against sexism, racism and agism — the newest "ism."

"We have long professed liberty and justice for all," Eklund said at the kick-off meeting.

"It is time ... that we acknowledge constitutionally the inherent right of every human life to the full range of options for self-expression, self-fulfillment and self-reliance."

The proposed Equal Rights Amendment says: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex." The controversial amendment has been approved by 35 states, three short of the required number, and an equally controversial extension of the deadline was made to allow more time. The extension, and whether some states may retract approval as they wish to do, is now in the courts.

Agee said business would derive benefits from ratification of ERA:

—Uniformity in regulations affecting companies operating nationwide.

—Establishment of clearly defined equality principles.

—Minimizing differences in judicial rulings that businesses must deal with, to save both time and money.

—Hiring and promotion practices based on true merit.

Miss Bergen said the ERA will abolish the inequality of earning potential between men and women.

"Women still earn less than 60 percent of men's salaries," she said. "Women with college degrees still earn less dollars than men who do not complete high school. Approximately 80 percent of all working women are in underrated, underpaid clerical sales service and craft jobs."

Miss Bergen said the National Business Council for the ERA is more than a public face, but is actually hundreds at top business levels to support the ERA. In unratified states, it asks council members to use their personal influence to help sway votes for ERA in future state campaigns.

"We want top businessmen to understand the ERA will contribute to the economy," Miss Bergen said.

She claims the ERA will strengthen the family by clarifying the economic status of women — including credit standing.

"In many states," she said, "a wife's income is discounted in whole or in part when the couple is being considered for a mortgage loan."

The group is telling businessmen that:

1. The ERA would increase the numbers of dollars coming into two-income homes by equalizing the earning potential for women — a significant consideration in the face of rising inflation and the importance of the wife's salary to a family's ability to participate in the marketplace.

2. The two-income family is contributing to the economy in big ways. In 1979 the two income families represented one-half of new home purchasers, spent 25 percent more in restaurants, took more vacations, represented one-half of new car purchasers, and bought more big ticket items (microwave ovens, for example) — and over half of the couples in these two-income families are under 35, which means they are just heading into their peak earning years.

3. ERA would increase the income of the single-woman household. Twenty-five percent of all U.S. households are run by a woman.

Miss Bergen said the executive committee of the group includes Ruth Hinerfeld, head of the League of Women Voters. She said The League will administer and coordinate activities of the council with active cooperation of the steering committee.

"I tell the women's movement groups," Miss Bergen said, "is that it has allowed itself to be splintered when it comes to the ERA. Some are fighting for the ERA and abortion, gay rights and so forth. These issues have nothing to do with the ERA and must be separated out.

"The movement for the ERA must concentrate on that issue."

Miss Bergen said the Council intends to make noise in the right places.

"We want legislators to know if they vote against the ERA they are voting against something that can benefit their state's economy."

Executives signed up on the National Business Council for the ERA team include:

—Earle K. Angstadt, president, McCall Pattern Co.; Edgar M. Bronfman, chairman, Joseph E. Seagram & Sons Inc.; Raymond K. Mason, chairman, the Charter Company, Jacksonville, Fla.; Edward Cushman, board, American Motors, Dearborn, Mich.

—Edwin G. Roberts, president, The May Company, Los Angeles, Calif; Jeff L. Belser, president, Continental Forest Industries, Greenwich, Conn.; Franklin A. Lindsay, chairman, ITEK Corp., Lexington, Mass.

—Vernon R. Alden, chairman, Massachusetts Business Development Council, Boston, Mass.; Steven J. Ross, chairman, Warner Communications Inc., New York; Thornton F. Bradshaw, president, Atlantic Richfield Company, Los Angeles, Calif.

—Barry Bingham, chairman, The Courier Journal, Louisville, Ky., David J. Mahoney, chairman, Norton Simon Inc.; Joel Goldberg, Chairman, Rich's Department Store, Atlanta, Ga.; Donald M. Kendall, Chairman of the Pepisco, Inc.; Thomas S. Carroll, President, Lever Brothers Company; Wiliam M. Dietel, president, Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

"And that," Miss Bergen said proudly, "is just the start."

Psychiatrists Say 'Leave Him Alone'

DEAR ABBY: We have a 17-year-old son who sucks his thumb. He seems so mature in all other ways that we can't understand it.

He sucks his thumb when he is alone, or thinks nobody is watching. We have a rather cool TV room. Sometimes he will cover himself with a blanket, way up around his nose, and he goes to town on that thumb!

Is this a sign of insecurity or perhaps a mental problem? He has many friends and nothing to feel insecure about.

We have tried to break him of this habit, but we never imposed any serious punishment on him. In later years we've tried not to make much of it.

Have you or any of your readers ever heard of this problem in a boy this age? And what do psychiatrists recommend?

PERPLEXED IN UTAH

DEAR PERPLEXED: Thumb sucking is a habit formed in infancy which provides the thumb sucker with a feeling of pleasure and gratification. It is harmless. The possibility of embarrassment and humiliation may motivate the thumb sucker to overcome the habit, but in some cases, being told that it's babyish will only make the thumb sucker all the more anxious, so it's not recommended.

Psychiatrists say, "Leave him alone."

DEAR ABBY: WONDERING asked what marriage would be like with a woman who kept reminding him to keep his elbows off the table, chew his food thoroughly, etc. You said, "Like being 9 years old again and married to your mother."

You were right. Nothing spoils a fine meal or any pleasurable setting as much as incessant nagging about etiquette.

I hope the unfortunate man decided to lean across the table, with his elbows firmly planted on it, and kiss the young woman goodbye. And I hope that before he did it, he rattled the spoon while stirring his coffee, slurped it loudly, wiped his mouth with his sleeve and belched!

Another of this perplexed man's complaints involved his beloved's refusal to let him talk with food in his mouth.

A romantic little tableau comes to mind in which the guy's girlfriend gently places her knife and fork on the plate, chews thoroughly, swallows completely, dabs at the corners of her mouth with a napkin and says, "Dearest, your pants are on fire."

And she'd probably object if he used his glass of water to put himself out.

PATRICK MOTT

DEAR PATRICK: Beautiful! I am informed that you write a consistantly bright column for the Register in Santa Ana, Calif., in which my column also appears. Congratulations, Patrick, you've just won another reader!

DEAR ABBY: My Dad, a widower who lives in another city, has a December-May romance going. He has informed us that he and his girlfriend will be coming to stay with us for a weekend soon. We have only one guest room, but can accommodate two guests in separate rooms if necessary by using our sofa-bed, too.

We know for a fact that they have taken trips together and registered as Mr. and Mrs., although Dad doesn't know that we know this.

Our problem: Should we just assume that Dad and his girlfriend want to share one room? Or should we just set them up in separate rooms?

Some facts you should know: Dad and I never had sex talks while I was growing up.

We thoroughly approve of his girlfriend. She has done wonders for him, and if they want to stay together we have no objections.

DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: Prepare the guest room for two. Also have the sofa-bed in readiness. When Dad and his friend arrive, ask Dad (privately) which set-up he prefers, and act accordingly.

DEAR ABBY: ABSOLUTELY ANONYMOUS, who complained about a bride's "disaster area" housekeeping, could be much like my mother was. For the first several years of my marriage, I kept house dreadfully in protest to my mother's super-cleanliness. Maybe this bride is over-reacting, too.

My mother had seven bath rugs piled one on the other, the bottom one being for "company best." In ascending order they were for lesser categories of people, ending with an old but spotless rug on top for the family to use. That's only one item in her fanatic cleanliness. Would you believe carpet from the front door across the porch, down the steps, and all the way out to the sidewalk? That was to keep the concrete clean!

So, give that bride time. In due course she'll find out it's uncomfortable to live in a pigpen and she'll shape up. Now, 40 years later, my house is always neat and clean because I like it that way.

REFORMED HOUSEWIFE: ALBION, CALIF.

DEAR REFORMED: And what if she never shapes up? The bride who elects to live in a pigpen—for whatever reason—is inflicting her pigsty lifestyle on her husband. And please don't tell me that the husband should share equally in the housework if the wife works. He should. But few do.

Older Eyes May Need The Light

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (UPI) — The American Optometric Association warns that older persons should not try to conserve energy by turning down the lights.

In fact, according to a pamphlet issued by the Association, older eyes require more light and it might be necessary to increase wattage with every birthday or two past 60. It also reports that older eyes are more confortable under incandescent rather then fluorescent bulbs.

The Associations warns that inadequate lighting frequently is a factor in falls experienced by older persons, particularly on stairs and in hallways, and makes daily chores such as preparing meals, shaving and reading prescription drug labels more difficult.

Risk In Tent Or Campers

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Carbon monoxide poisoning can tents or campers — says Rich Goodding, an extension safety specialist at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

About 1,100 deaths a year are caused by carbon monoxide, and Goodding estimates "thousands, perhaps even millions" suffer from carbon monoxide headaches.

The invisible, odorless gas is produced when carbon-containing fuels are burned, he says. Those fuels include gasoline, utility gas, charcoal and even wood. Goodding says potential threats exist with all fuel-burning furnaces, ovens, water heaters, clothes dryers, refrigerators, fireplaces and automobiles. Even a hibachi, a catalytic heater or a gas lantern can dangerously deplete the oxygen in a small, enclosed space such as a tent or a camper.

A headache is the first sign of carbon monoxide poisoning, Goodding says, followed, in ascending order, by nausea, vomiting and dim vision, severe headache, weakness, dizziness and collapse, coma and convulsions, depressed heart action and respiration — and finally, respiratory failure.

To avoid the risk while waiting in a parked car, he suggests opening the window a few inches and running the engine periodically for heat. "Never nap in a car with the engine running."

Still Remembers When Love Stopped

ON DIVORCE — Julie List, shown during an interview, was nine years old when her parents were divorced. Today, at age 23, Miss List is the author of a book called "The Day The Loving Stopped". (AP Laserphoto)

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — She was a tree-climbing, hopscotching 9-year-old when her parents were divorced. Today, at 23, Julie List believes she has at last learned to accept the simple, central fact:

Her mother and her father stopped loving each otner 14 years ago.

"I don't think most children take divorce quite as hard as I did," she says. Julie took her parents' divorce so hard that years later, as a student at Princeton University, she wrote a series of memoirs about her troubled childhood.

Drawing on childhood diaries and letters, Julie expanded her recollections into a book called "The Day the Loving Stopped." It is an account of one divorce from a child's point of view.

She writes: "Children, they say,...bounce back. I agree — children are terrific survivors." But, she adds, "Children bounce back because we know no other life than this."

Julie bounced back. She never retreated into drugs or alcohol, never sought a therapist's help.

"I don't feel I was a deprived child. I always knew my parents loved me," she says now.

But Julie was torn and troubled by the divorce; it made her doubt that love can endure, that anyone finds happiness. She says she has overcome those fears: "I'm more optimistic than I'd have thought possible."

Her father, a psychologist, and her mother, a writer, were divorced in 1966. Mrs. List and her two young daughters stayed in their suburban Connecticut house. List moved into New York. His visits with his daughters were scheduled — weekends, all of August.

"I missed my father, so I was glad to know there would be fixed times for me to see him. I couldn't have known then how disruptive this kind of life would be....From now on, seeing my father was to be a scheduled event. The spontaneity was gone."

Julie's visits with her father grew to be separate from her day-to-day life: "My father didn't know who my friends were or what I was learning at school....Our lives were linked by blood, by love, by weekends in New York. But he did not watch Abby and me grow up daily."

Julie's mother dated a few men seriously; one man grew close to Julie and her sister before he and Mrs. List parted. Meanwhile, Julie met a parade of women who passed through her father's life.

Eventually, he remarried. Four years later, he divorced again. The break was total: "One day we had a stepmother and two stepsisters. The next day we didn't." Julie hasn't seen the woman since.

For years after the divorce, Julie's mother and father could not speak without arguing. As a result, List made plans directly with his daughter.

"When you're dealing with parents who cry and parents who fight, you have to start making decisions even though you're only 9. I often had to tell my father on the phone that I'd decided not to come into the city. I negotiated holiday plans with him."

Today, Julie is a researcher at New York's public television station. She says she wrote her book in part to alert parents to a child's feelings about divorce.

"Whenever I see a divorced father, I want to say: 'Listen, call your kids every day. Don't disappear from their daily lives.' If I could go back and change anything, I'd have my father continue to be a part of my daily life," she says.

She has other advice to divorcing parents:

—"Explain to a child that the divorce isn't his fault."

—"It's very, very important for children to know it's all right to love both their mother and their father even though they don't love each other anymore."

—"Don't malign each other."

—"Don't say to a child, 'You have to make a decision. Do you want to be with your mother or your father on Christmas Day?' A child wants to be with both. It's unfair to ask him to choose. It's not his job."

—"A father should not bring a new woman into his children's lives unless he thinks she'll be fairly permanent. Neither should a mother. It's destructive because childen get attached so easily."

Despite her troubled childhood, Julie says she is not opposed to divorce:

"I think staying in an unhappy marriage is worse than divorcing. Children are not dumb. They feel the tension. I think it's harder on a child because it's a lie, it's living a lie.

"Although divorce is painful, it's an acknowledgement of the way things are. It says to children, we're trying to try to make things better and we're going to try to make things better for you, too."

Will Julie List marry one day? She writes about that:

"My parents' divorce has made me wary and frightened of the decay of love. And yet....I believe in marriage. I now believe that lifetime intimacy is a risk worth taking."

'Computerize' Smithsonian

WASHINGTON (AP) — The computer age has caught up with the world's largest museum complex. Within three years, the Smithsonian Institution's 78 million items must be recorded in its computer system.

The monumental task, imposed by Congress, requires a physical inventory of collections that then has to be matched against catalog information to ensure the existence of everything from Bell's telephone to moon rocks, from old masters to microscopic marine life.

The full inventory must be completed by June 1983.

The mammoth stocktaking has for the most part just begun, though the task of collections management using the computer started some time ago. Some of the collections, particularly the smaller art collections like that at the National Collection of Fine Arts, have already been recorded in "machine-readable" form.

The Air and Space Museum is also well on its way to computerizing its inventory. Others, like those collections in the Museum of Natural History, which alone has in excess of 60 million specimens, present a much more complex problem.

"We're trying to keep up with current collections and gradually automating these along with significant areas within collections, such as 'type' collections, that will yield most benefit to museum researchers," said Jim Crockett, deputy director of the Smithsonian's Office of Computer Services.

There are 12 Smithsonian museums — seven on the National Mall here and four others elsewhere in Washington, with another in New York — and each is being allowed to tackle its inventory in its own fashion. It's Crockett's job to see they get the systems and programming support they need.

The computer center, based on a large-scale Honeywell system, is also used by researchers from all areas of the museum to support their studies. For example, these include the environmental studies being conducted at the Chesapeake Bay Center and animal-behavior studies at the National Zoo.

Some others are anthropological and biological research in the Museum of Natural History, and analysis of historical, political and art data in the Museum of History and Technology.

The computer is tucked away in the Arts and Industries Building, the second oldest building in the Smithsonian museum complex, and is incongruous in its setting amidst "the most extensive collection of Victorian Americana ever presented."

"It's right that the heritage of the country should be properly controlled and protected, and we're heavily involved in that task," said Crockett.

Song Group's Program Tonight

The Way of North Carolina will present in concert, Take A Stand Caravan featuring Joyful Noise and special guest teacher, Rev. Vince Finnegan, tonight at 7:30 at the American Legion Building.

There is no admission charge to hear the gospel singing group and the public is invited.

Science Fair

ECU News Bureau

The annual Eastern Regional Science Fair will be held at East Carolina University's Minges Coliseum Friday, March 28.

More than 300 entries from schools throughout the eastern and Piedmont areas of the state will be displayed in the all-day event.

The public is invited to attend and view exhibits from noon until 3:30, said Dan Nicholson, fair director.

The Science Fair is sponsored by the ECU Department of Science Education and draws between two and three thousand students, teachers and other guests each year.

Students' entries, designed and built in connection with their studies in the physical, life and earth sciences, will be judged by a panel of teachers, scientists and industrial representatives.

Ask Ideas On Pitt Flower

The Keep Pitt County Clean and Beautiful Committee is interested in the continued beauty of Pitt County. At its last meeting, the Board of Directors proposed that a flower be adopted as the Pitt County Flower. To assure a flower suitable to the climate and environment, the membership of KPCCB is enlisting the suggestions and ideas of the citizens of Pitt Conuty.

Anyone having suggestions of a likely flower may send them to Pitt County Flower, P.O. Box 7124, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Send all suggestions in by March 21. A special task force will review all suggestions and the choice will be based on handiness, beauty, ease of maintenance and suitability for wildlife.

The KPCCB is investigating the possibility of formal adoption of the Pitt County flower and a campaign to promote its planting throughout the county.

Record Price By Stamp Dealer

NEW YORK (UPI) — Wealthy stamp dealer Howard O. Fraser has paid a record-breaking $11 million for a collection of old envelopes, according to Alain de Cadenet, consultant to the British Post Office. Fraser bought 3,900 19th Century United States covers from the private collection of Mark Haas that included Confederate 20-cent bisects of covers plus franked envelopes that bore signatures of Presidents George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and Abraham Lincoln.

John Silber Is Hated, But He Salvaged Boston U.

By JAMES R. DORSEY

BOSTON (UPI) — During a decade of calm on the American college campus, Boston University has stood out as a hotbed unrest.

BU, poor cousin of such wealthy educational giants as Harvard and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at the same time has pulled itself out of the red. It is in the black despite a paucity of endowments.

In a word, Silber walks on hot coals. He has defied faculty union organizers, battled striking workers, denounced angry students, accused the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts of McCarthyism, and generally told off those who disagreed with him.

Silber's critics — students, faculty and former BU board members among Boston's business and social elite — said in interviews he is capricious, arrogant, insulting, intimidating, offensive, authoritarian, totalitarian, unfair, and vindictive.

On the plus side Silber's supporters say he was the right man at the right time to carry out the difficult job of putting a faltering university back on its feet.

Silber acknowledges he may be the most hated man on campus. He sometimes seems to relish the idea.

"It may be that I'm the most hated man on campus because, how many people are hated?" Silber asked. "But they didn't ask who's the most respected ... or most loved.

"I've heard people who have denounced me publicly say privately, 'Silber, we're going to build you a statue, as soon as you leave, or at least as soon as you die,'" he said, smiling for the first and only time during a one-hour interview.

Silber has variously referred to his academic colleagues and professorial underlings as fools, coffeehouse unionists, lemmings and Judas goats; and has labeled BU students as short-pants Communists trying to overthrow society.

Silber, educated as a philosopher, was born in San Antonio, Texas. He came to BU from the University of Texas in Irvine where he was Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"One of the things you learn from reading Sophocles ... is it's amazing the way one character attributes his own worst qualities to the person that he's decided is his opponent," Silber said in an interview.

Silber has amazing staying power. When he came to BU in 1971 he told the board of trustees to review his performance after five years and re-evaluate its decision to keep him on as president of the 22,000-student university. In 1976, the board undertook its review and a committee determined Silber was, at best, overextended. The Faculty Senate conducted a review of its own and voted by more than 3-1 to request his dismissal by the board.

The board ignored the Faculty Senate's request and did little to restructure Silber's job as recommended by an executive review committee.

Since then Silber has consolidated and strengthened his power on the board. Now his critics say the board is no better than a puppet reacting to the tugs of strings pulled by Silber.

Undaunted, the renamed Faculty Assembly recently approved a renewed motion for Silber's dismissal by more than 2-1. Instead of firing him, the board is soon likely to give him an overwhelming vote of confidence and encourage his contractual prosecution of five faculty members for participating in a sympathy strike by BU clerical workers last September.

In a description directed at Silber's Texas background, journalism professor Caryl Rivers said, "He's incredibly combative. He likes to turn things into an Alamo situation."

Rivers, once a supporter of Silber, is one of the five faculty members Silber is trying to fire for refusing to cross the clerical workers' picket lines.

Under the terms of a contract signed last spring between BU and the American Association of University Professors, the AAUP union members are prohibited from participating in sympathy strikes if any other university union locals go out.

Officially, the BU Five maintained they followed their consciences by not crossing clerical workers' picket lines while fulfilling their duties by teaching classes outdoors.

"You must be aware of how many presidents have been driven from office by faculties all over the country. It numbers in the hundreds," Silber said. He listed a half dozen or so, most of them victims of the turmoil of the '60s.

"Radicalism and the determination by a small group of students and faculty to preempt the policymaking functions of the university was in the saddle when I came to Boston University."

"It wasn't the case that this tiny minority of faculty had ... the bit in the teeth. They had eaten the saddle ... the stirrups ... the bridle. Why the whole thing was gone."

Silber said his predecessor, Arland Christ-Janer, "had been run off" campus as a result of "the radicalism on campus and the mistaken notion that a university should be a people's republic that had become popular in the late '60s."

Silber said the AAUP leaders and the leaders of the BU Five are "experts on Saul Alinsky's Rules for Radicals and Rule No. 13 is 'personalize the issue.' It was a tactic that was developed to perfection by Adolph Hitler."

James Wiseman, chairman of the Classics Department and a Silber supporter, blamed much of the turmoil on a "radical element in the (AAUP) union leadership."

"I do know that he speaks with candor. He's a straight talker and he's not going to hide his feelings." He added that Silber "can be abrasive."

Silber says the board has yet to fire him after nine years because "they're beginning to realize the utter irrationality and abusiveness of the kinds of allegations that are made."

Political Science Professor Frances Fox Piven, acting chairperson of the Committee to Save Boston University, said Silber must go "because of an atmosphere of intimidation and his arrogance and capriciousness."

English professor Helen Vendler, chairperson of the Modern Language Association, also a recipient of the school's teaching excellence award, said she became "radicalized" in 1974 because she thought Silber "was destroying the university."

But Norman Lichtin, chairman of the chemistry department, described Silber as a "curmudgeon" whose pluses far outweigh his minuses but said the cases of the BU Five might have been handled with "a little more diplomacy."

Economist Paul Rosenstein-Rodan, head of the Center for Latin American Development, praises Silber's work although he says, "he's aggressive, he's abrasive, he shoots from the hip."

Robert Goldhammer, a vice president of the Kidder, Peabody investment firm and a leader of Boston's financial community, retired from the BU board last fall because he said, "The university feels that if you're not 100 percent with the central administration, then you're 100 percent against it."

Hans Estin, an official with North American Management and the chairman of the BU Board of Trustees until November 1976, said he doubted the present board would challenge Silber.

"The ones who are left like their positions. They want to stay and they know if they rock the boat they'll be off."

Helen Spaulding, head of the New England Aquarium board and wife of one of the state's most influential Republicans, Josiah Spaulding, was not reappointed after serving five years on the BU board. She says it was because "I differed with the president over the faculty union contract."

But she says Silber "has done a great deal for that university. He really and truly did bring it into the 20th Century."

In early November MIT Nobel laureate Salvador Luria gathered signatures of more than 500 faculty of BU, MIT, Harvard and several other Boston-area institutions on a petition calling for Silber's dismissal.

Then the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts released a report accusing the university of violations of civil liberties and academic freedoms.

Silber denied nearly all of the allegations. He said the CLUM's "tactics are redolent ... of the late Senator Joseph McCarthy."

Outer Banks Mapping Workshop Is Scheduled

ECU News Bureau

"Land Use and Land Cover Mapping of the Barrier Islands," a workshop program for all persons interested in development and conservation of North Carolina's outer coast, has been scheduled at East Carolina University for March 26.

The workshop is sponsored by the ECU Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources and Department of Geography in cooperation with the U.S. Geological Survey.

The program is designed to acquaint participants with the nation wide land use and land cover mapping effort of the Geological Survey's Geography Program, said Dr. Simon Baker, program coordinator.

"North Carolina has now been mapped entirely at the scale of 1,250,000, and these maps are being computerized by state agencies, thus making available much valuable information to individuals, citizens' groups, business concerns and public organizations," he said.

A secondary purpose of the workshop is to determine the needs for more detailed information about the barrier islands, so suggestions from all interested groups and individuals will be welcomed, he said.

Speakers and their topics are:

John Higgins, director of the N.C. Land Resources Information Service: "Computerized Land Use Mapping in N.C.;" and

Dr. Vincent Bellis of the ECU biology faculty: "Barrier Islands Vegetative Cover Types — Management Implications;"

An afternoon panel discussion, "Land Use and Land Cover Information Needs on the Barrier Islands," will feature speakers Anthony W. Barrett, Nags Head, town manager; Ralph Cantral, coastal land use planner with the N.C. Office of Coastal Management; and Richard Jackson, chief of environmental resources for the Wilmington District U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Further information about the program is available from the ECU Institute for Coastal and Marine Resources. While no fees will be charged for attending the program, and no pre-registration is necessary, the Institute requests that persons who will attend write if possible, in order to assist in planning.

All sessions will be held in ECU's Willis Building, beginning at 10 a.m., with a welcome address by ECU Chancellor Thomas Brewer.

Offer Tips On Moving

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (UPI) — The Phillips Petroleum Co., which transferred some 1,300 of its employes in 1979 — more than the national average of 320 for the nation's 600 largest firms, offers the following tips to employes who are moving:

1. Under no circumstances should a husband or wife purchase a house the other has never seen.
2. It is easier to make new friends in a new development than in an old, established neighborhood.
3. Plan as far ahead as possible to avoid pressure.
4. Learn as much as you can about the new location as early as you can; subscribe to the local newspaper.
5. The whole family should have medical and dental checkups before moving, thus allowing time to find new doctors and dentists.
6. Make moving arrangements as early as possible.
7. When loading the van, put the children's things in last, so they will be first to be unloaded and help the children feel at home.

Singers Will Be At Church

CONETOE — The Temple Men of Praise, a five-member ensemble of Tennessee Temple University, Chattanooga, Tenn., will be featured in a special performance Tuesday, March 18, at the New Hope Baptist Church.

The performance is slated to begin at 7:30 p.m. The church is located five miles from Belvoir.

Traveling in 13 states, the group has represented the university in some 175 churches and Christian day schools this year.

Move Big Game Animals To Colorado

By R.T. KERR
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Although Colorado has never been short of big game, wildlife experts are experimenting in attempts to add moose and desert bighorn sheep to the list.

Both species of animals are believed to have lived in the state at one time.

After two years, the moose's return is off to a romantic start with nearly twice the number of animals as introduced.

The desert bighorn sheep were released about three months ago and it's too early to tell how they are accepting their new home.

Moose were brought to Colorado during the winter of 1977-78, amid predictions of gloom and disaster by detractors who feared the large animals would destroy fences and forage for domestic animals.

"It's been a real success," said Arch Andrews, public relations chief for the Colorado Division of Wildlife. "We think we've lost one calf so far."

Andrews said the moose experiment began with 12 animals, which were released in a remote area of the Rocky Mountains near the Wyoming border. A year later 12 more animals were released in the same area.

The animals, the first 12 from Utah and second 12 from Wyoming, included five bulls, 16 cows and three calves. The moose population is estimated at 42 head today.

Andrews said the moose program has been financed through contributions from private donors.

The sheep reintroduction, however, was made possible through an exchange program with Arizona and Nevada, Andrews said.

Eleven bighorns were released last November in desert canyon country west of Grand Junction as a part of the interstate pact. This pact will swap 40 Rocky Mountain bighorn sheep from Colorado for 20 desert bighorns each from Arizona and Nevada.

McFarland said the habitat remains and this is why the reintroduction is being attempted.

A question remains as to how the bighorns will react to man's increased presence in the area. In the high country, the moose appear to be thriving after two years.

"I would say it has been much more successful than what I thought it would be," said Roy Nowlin, a Colorado State University graduate research assistant assigned to keep up with the animals.

Nowlin said the animals are seen occasionally by persons in the area but haven't caused any property damage. All but one of the released animals wear radio transmitters which aid in keeping tabs on them.

The moose have proved to be a curious lot. The transmitters indicated that one walked into Rocky Mountain National Park on one occasion and another went into Wyoming for a brief stay.

NEW COLORADO RESIDENTS — Moose have been reintroduced to Colorado, and after two years the animals are prospering. The original 24-animal herd has expanded to 42. A similar experiment has begun with desert bighorn sheep in Colorado's remote canyonlands. (AP Laserphoto)

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State Univ. Answers Timely Gardening Questions

Q. We severely pruned our ligustrum bushes this fall. Is fertilizer necessary to give them a healthy start this spring? (M.B., Reidsville)

A. Ligustrums have an amazing ability to quickly rejuvenate themselves. You might give them a light application of a complete fertilizer in early spring. But remember, you pruned them severely because they were too large. More fertilizer will simply speed up their recovery -- to get them on their way to another overgrown shrub. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. What will kill Bermudagrass and nutgrass? (J.M., Aberdeen)

A. The herbicide Roundup will kill them. But, Roundup will also kill other plants. If you decide to use the herbicide, wait until the Bermudagrass and nutgrass are actively growing. Apply according to directions on the label. Wait the prescribed period and then re-establish with the plants you wish to grow. (Carl Blake, extension agronomist)

Q. An oak tree in my yard is infested with aphids and they drop a sticky residue on everything underneath it. What treatment can be applied prior to spring growth and trees leafing in lieu of cutting down the tree? (J.B., Hickory)

A. Several insecticidal remedies are available for controlling aphids and scales, which can excrete the "honeydew" which drops from your oak. The best remedy prior to foliage development is an application of superior dormant oil. Or you can apply Ethion plus oil mixed at the rate suggested on the label. The spray must be applied after the last freezing weather and before bud break. (James McGraw, extension forestry specialist)

Q. I've heard a lot about boron being short in many soils. How do I apply it and what do I use? (H.S., Rocky Mount)

A. You are right. Boron shortage is a common problem in many North Carolina soils. But you must be careful and not apply too much boron. The easiest boron for you to get would probably be in the form of common borax. It is about 11 percent boron. Generally, about 10 pounds of borax per acre is adequate. This would be about four ounces per 100 square feet or one tablespoon per 50 feet of row. (George Hughes, extension horticulturist)

Eniwetok Atoll Habitable Again Its Owners Are Going Home

By KAY LYNCH

HONOLULU (UPI) — Eniwetok Atoll was a radioactive wasteland after the U.S. nuclear test program of the 1950s, its people enduring a forced exile on a smaller atoll to the southwest.

Today, it is again habitable, and in April, its Marshallese owners will go home.

A remarkable, three-year, $100 million project that reclaimed Eniwetok was mounted by the United States for humanitarian reasons, with prodding from the Marshallese, with no assurance that it would succeed.

"The greatest lesson is that we know, now, that it is very possible to do this kind of thing, and do it safely," says Vice Adm. Robert Monroe, who heads the coordinating Defense Nuclear Agency.

"The lessons learned and experience gained in this job will stand us in very good stead in the future. As the nuclear age continues to advance, the number of potential causes of (radioactive) contamination is increasing. It is not unlikely that, at some point, a major contamination cleanup effort will be needed. We now have the technology and the method."

The federal government admitted failure in its effort to resettle Bikini Atoll, another major site of the Pacific nuclear test program. In the fall of 1978, a 10-year resettlement project was abandoned, and 140 Bikinians who had been helping prepare Bikini Island for the return of others were tearfully evacuated.

Department of Energy officials say there are important differences between the situations at Bikini and Eniwetok:

— The cleanup of Bikini beginning in 1968 involved only debris removal and replanting, no soil removal. It was a $325,000 effort, while $100 million was spent on Eniwetok.

— The types and degrees of contamination at the two habitation sites was different. Bikini Atoll was the site of the most powerful explosion of the entire Pacific nuclear test program, "Bravo." The cloud from that test laced Bikini island's soil with high concentrations of fission products, primarily cesium and strontium. It was later discovered that these were being taken up through the food chain and were showing up in the bodies of Bikinians participating in the resettlement program.

"There has been a growth in our understanding of the mechanisms involved, because of the agricultural experiments at both Eniwetok and Bikini. We have a great deal more data now than at the time the Bikini decisions were made," said Roger Ray, director of Pacific operations for the Department of Energy.

Two of its islands were blown out of existence by nuclear devices detonated between 1947 and 1958. One was "Mike," the first hydrogen bomb, with hundreds of times the explosive power of the atom bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

The northern islands were rendered too radioactive for habitation. They and the southern islands were also littered with unexploded ordnance and other wartime debris.

The U.S. objective was to clean up three southern islands for habitation, and to decontaminate the northern islands enough to allow short visits.

Leprosy Vaccine Test Due This Year

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Sometime this year, probably in Burma or India, doctors will start giving patients the first vaccine specially developed to combat the ancient and mysterious disease of leprosy.

If the vaccine works, men will bless an unlikely benefactor discovered by United States researchers: the nine-banded armadillo, a South American native that has spread to Texas.

The living bodies of a few score of these armor-plated mammals are being used in the United States, Venezuela, Britain and Norway to grow the leprosy bacilli that will be extracted and turned against the disease in humans.

"Leprosy bacilli cannot be grown in the laboratory or in other animals normally used for raising materials on which vaccines might be based, so the production of a vaccine against the disease has been very difficult," says Dr. Philip Draper, a British specialist.

Dr. Richard Rees, who heads the leprosy department at the National Institute for Medical Research in London, says field trials will be made in Geneva by a steering committee of the leprosy program at the World Health Organization.

"It took 200 years from the first description of smallpox to developing a vaccine for WHO to eradicate it, so nobody is saying the end of leprosy is in sight," Rees says.

Leprosy lives undetected in the body for three to five years before it shows itself, raising ugly lumps and sores and deadening finger and toe nerve endings. Victims may lose these extremities because they cannot feel pain from burning or blows.

Rees says the disease is spread by mucous from the nose of the victims, but how it gets into the human body is unknown. It used to be thought it was transmitted by contact with a leper or something a leper had touched. "We now know that isn't true," he says.

Draper says leprosy rarely kills, but it breaks down the ability of the body to respond to and immunize against illness.

There are an estimated 15 million lepers in the world. The disease exists in at least 90 countries and is a public health problem in more than 70 of them, mainly in Africa and Asia but also in parts of South and Central America.

Dr. Stanley G. Browne, retired adviser on leprosy to the British government, says there are 2,000 to 3,000 notified cases in the United States and nearly 1,000 in Britain, mostly among immigrants.

"Only three million of the world's lepers are treated," he says, "and while the cost of one dose of medicine is only a few cents, the expense of reaching victims, often in remote areas, and administering the treatment regularly, is vastly greater."

Says Draper: "The number of lepers is growing because the disease has developed resistance to sulfone drugs used against it, mainly dapsone, even after treatment lasting 20 years and more. A victim who catches leprosy from one of them is in deep trouble because his strain will be drug-resistant.

"Leprosy is like walking through a bog. Everywhere you get into impossible difficulties. Eighty percent of the population develops immunity if exposed to leprosy. The others do not and we don't know why. If they can be given a vaccine that will last the rest of their lives it will be easier."

Will the vaccine work? "We don't know. We have a promising candidate which seems to protect animals in lab tests."

Rees said that because leprosy develops on the cooler parts of the human body, the armadillo was suggested as a host to produce bacilli for vaccine because it has a lower body temperature than man.

The armadillo won't breed in captivity so wild ones have to be used. After 12 to 24 months the animals are killed and the bacilli extracted from their liver and spleen. The London team's role has been to purify the extract, identify the components likely to produce immunity to the disease and eliminate harmful components.

Rees says one armadillo yields 25,000 vaccine doses.

"We've got to be cautious in the trials," he says. "We are dealing with a material that comes from an animal, not a chemical made in a factory or something neat and tidy grown in a lab. We have to be sure when we extract the bacilli from the armadillos that nothing else comes with it."

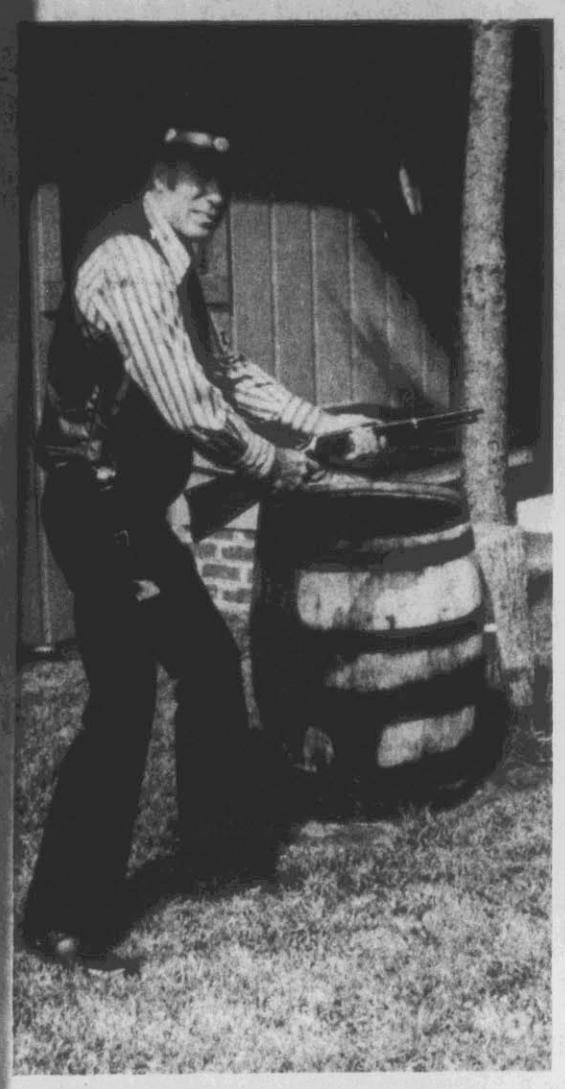
Ayden Has Its Own Old Wild West



MARSHAL DESTENS ... Bobby Newell plays the role of Marshal Destens in the Wild West Show. He's quick to defend his territory. (Photo by Bruce Jones)

Text By Joyce Evans

The Town of Ayden has its own Wild West Show — saloon, sheriff's office, jail, bank, mortuary, livery stable, cafe, and bar. It's a replica of the old western saloon, and when there's action it's wild.

Linda Newell, Wachovia Bank switchboard operator and Bobby Newell, Burroughs Wellcome supervisor have recreated that western life from the 1890's with the help of friends, townspeople and the Town Board.

How did it begin? Ayden has been putting on a Collard Festival each year. During these festivals, persons interested would get an "act" together and participate in the festival. Newell has a collection of guns and he handles them very well, according to Mrs. Newell. They organized a Wild West Show for the Collard Festival. "We had a lot of fun doing it," said Mrs. Newell. After that, Mr. and Mrs. Newell began preparation for a bigger idea — to create the setting for an old west saloon right in Ayden.

"It took a great deal of planning and we all had full-time jobs, but the interest was high," said Mrs. Newell. "A dilapidated City Hall building stood in the middle of Ayden and it wasn't being used!" she said. They went before the Town Board and explained their plan. The Board had to approve their renting the building. That took about a year for processing, although no opposition was shown toward the plans. According to Mrs. Newell, the board members were quite encouraging.

After getting approval from the Board, the old City Hall building underwent costly renovation which was the responsibility of the Newells and others in the group. They spent approximately $10,000 and about three years of labor, said Newell. It's not complete, and they hope to include a dry goods store and a western clothing store. "The mortuary, saloon, and livery stable have not been closed in — it's just a frame," Newell said.

They tore down about five tobacco barns and refurbished them. The group worked weekends and nights to get the project to its present stage.

They used wagon wheels for lighting fixtures, and the wheels dangle from the ceiling like chandeliers. Several Mason jars encircle the wheel and inside the jars are lights. Barrel tables surround the saloon's interior, and a card table sets in the right-hand corner. "A lot of action goes on at the card table," said Newell. Western style paintings hang on the walls of the saloon.

Workers repaired the staircase leading up to the courtroom and the judge's chambers. What was once the judge's chambers has been turned over to general office use. The courtroom was decorated as the Grand Saloon. Gold paint on the ornamental cement trim work covers the structure, and the arched entrance to the courthouse was painted white. The front of the Marshal's office was bricked up with old bricks, and an arched window and door were installed.

Electricity has been turned off and is pending an electrical inspection, according to Newell. If the building must be rewired, that will cost additional funds. "If it costs too much to rewire the building, we'll move out of town and start all over," he said.

When the Newells obtained the building, they agreed to uphold city laws prohibiting alcoholic beverages. During the past fall, they sponsored a series of gospel groups and country western bands on Fridays and Saturdays. "We charged admission, but it didn't go well and we stopped doing that," said Mrs. Newell. At the saloon, they served soft drinks and the whole family could come. But that didn't help business. "It's hard to get people to come when we don't offer alcoholic beverages. That has hurt us more than anything else," she said.

But when the Silver Nugget Saloon gives a show, it's a real western one with costumes of the period. The group does skits of 15 to 20 minutes in length staging a bank robbery, fights between sheep herders and the cattlemen. "We mix them up to keep it exciting," said Rev. Bruce Jones who plays the Reverend in two of the skits. The group practices these scenes so that it's not haphazard — "We know who's going to win in a shoot out," said Mrs. Newell.

Newell plays the role of Marshal Destens in the Wild West Show. At the fall Collard Festival, he outdrew the famous gunfighter, Ed Eldridge. Eldridge (Buffalo Bill) is a professional stuntman, rodeo performer and professional fast draw artist. According to reports, Buffalo Bill is a three time world champion in fast draw competition, has played in several of the Clint Eastwood movies, and was a whip man in "High Plains Drifter." Promotional advertisements for the Collard Festival read "He plays the role of Buffalo Bill and does all the things Buffalo Bill used to do." Eldridge was promoted as the fastest gun alive and he performed in the Marshal Destens Wild West Show. Of course, the Marshal claimed to be faster with a gun. Newell had been practicing his draw since childhood. As a child, he practiced with cap pistols. He later joined the Navy and bought his first gun while in service. "You could get them real cheap then," he said.

Newell demonstrated his quick draw by shooting with the tumbling style — one hand; and fanning style — two hands. He shot a cup off his left hand with one swift movement.

Several weeks before the festival, the Marshal wired a message to Eldridge telling him if he showed his face in North Carolina it would mean a gun fight. Marshal Destens received a wire that read, "Practice dying, for the fastest gun is alive and on his way. When the smoke clears, Ayden Territory will need a new Marshal." The wire was part of the promotion for the Wild West Show. "Desten's outdrew Buffalo Bill by a noticeable degree, according to Rev. Jones. "We had rehearsed the act and I beat him then too," said Newell.

What does Linda and Bobby Newell's family and friends think about the whole idea? "They think it's exciting," said Mrs. Newell. She said her husband loves it most of all. Mrs. Newell thinks it's a lot of fun too. When she looks through their picture portfolio of shows they've performed, her eyes light up instantly.

The group was larger when they began, but many have moved and one of them died. The late O. J. McLawhorn, former bank employee, was part of the show. "Julie McLawhorn Jones, who was his wife, is active in the show and is married to one of the guys (Rev. Jones)," said Mrs. Newell. Fifteen people are still active with the group, but money is the biggest problem they face. "People want you to do shows for free or for a minimum. We haven't done many shows lately because money is a problem," she said. During the past summer, the group was very active performing shows. Recently, they presented a show at a western saloon in Wilson — Ollie and Bucks Western Saloon, and another one at the Sunshine Garden Center here.

Most of the people in the show are married to someone in the group. Although they don't make much money and have to spend money or do extra work to prepare for shows, they enjoy it, according to the Newells. "It's just something we enjoy doing," said Mrs. Newell. "It's a lot of fun," said Newell.

The group was scheduled to perform in Winterville for the PTA; but because of heavy snow, the show was cancelled.

"Real People" are going to film the show at the next Collard Festival in September," said Newell.

The Newells are natives of Ayden, and most of their family and friends live nearby. They have two children, Bryan, 8, and Kyle, 12. Bryan plays a child's role in the show and he likes doing them, according to Mrs. Newell. "He might kick one of the bad guys' ankle or throw dirt on him," she said.

Bath Marks Its 275th Birthday

By LISE MAY
Dept. of Cultural Resources

BATH TOWN — On March 8, 1980, Bath Town (now Bath) marked its 275th year. The village, incorporated on March 8, 1705, in addition to being the oldest town in the state, has several other claims to fame.

Bath is the home of St. Thomas, the oldest church in the state in continuous use, and very likely the state's oldest building. Bath is also known for the first public library, the first free school and also for its most infamous citizen — the pirate Blackbeard.

Built between 1734 and 1759, St. Thomas Episcopal Church has an interior featuring hand-cut wooden pews. These rest on a floor of square bricks above graves of early settlers. The church bell, "The Queen Anne Bell," is 18 years older than the Liberty Bell.

In the late 17th century, fertile soil and opportunity brought settlers to a high bank near the Pamlico River. There, between Bath and Back Creeks, three men — John Lawson, Joel Martin and Simon Alderson — laid off the town and thereby became its founders.

Bath began with French and English families who journeyed from the Albemarle area of northeastern North Carolina, from Maryland, Virginia, and Philadelphia to the Pamlico Sound seeking the rich farmland. They found the area inhabited by only a few Pamlico Indians. Most of the tribe had died in an epidemic in 1696 and the colonists seized the opportunity to settle near the remaining unhappy natives.

Bath never became heavily populated but was important enough to serve as a meeting place for legislative sessions in the years 1744 and 1752. Earlier, in 1715, it was established as a port, the first official port of entry in the province.

The first library in North Carolina was established in Bath Town about 1700 with a collection of more than 1,000 books sent by the Rev. Thomas Bray to the St. Thomas parish in Pamlico. Among these were books on mathematics, biology, the classics, medicine and poetry. The library also boasted 870 volumes for "a layman's library."

The two dominant religious groups in the region in the early 1700s were Quakers and the Church of England. Due to their strong religious beliefs opposing oaths, Quakers were exempt from the required oath of allegiance. Problems arose when the Church of England was established as the colony's official church and the governor revoked the exemption.

Quakers, angry because they were no longer allowed to hold office, began rebelling. In 1708 their quest for religious freedom erupted into a three-year conflict known as the "Quaker War" or "Cary's Rebellion," named for the governor supporting the Quakers.

At just the time when war, lawlessness, fever and drought had the region at its lowest ebb, the Indians struck to avenge their earlier treatment. In three terrifying days, almost 150 people were slaughtered by the marauding natives.

Bath Town, somehow, was spared and became a refuge for survivors. The three-day bloodbath, called the "Tuscarora Indian War," concluded as help arrived from South Carolina. Four years later, in 1715, the Indians and colonists signed a peace treaty.

Though the wars had left the town reeling, Bath continued to prosper as a successful port and trade center. The increased trade and ship activity also increased Bath's attraction for nefarious pursuits, and pirates abounded.

Edward Teach or "Blackbeard," the most notorious of these plunderers, settled in Bath for a brief "retirement"

About mid-18th century Bath began losing its position of prominence. The fading town's chance to be the state capital was lost to New Bern, and even the county courthouse was located elsewhere.

Through the years, Bath, now a state historic site maintained by the Dept. of Cultural Resources, has retained the spirit of the early days. The well-preserved town, consisting of several 17th and early 18th century homes as well as St. Thomas Church, is both historic and attractive. Visitors can bask in the memories of pirates and colonists as they walk through the same historic streets that Blackbeard and three Proprietary governors trod.

The visitor center and restored houses in Historic Bath are open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sundays from 1 to 5. They are closed Mondays. A fee is charged for visiting the restored homes.

Women Proved They Can Fight

By PATRICIA McCORMACK
United Press International

Early American history contains some evidence women battle pretty good when the occasion demands — and they can be ruthless.

The knowledge may help females and males as they debate the propriety of registering women for a draft — as proposed by President Carter.

History also records American females can be brave and courageous without being in combat. Or sharpshooters under other than battle conditions.

Consider Annie Oakley, marksswoman. Born on a farm in Darke County, Ohio, Phoebe Ann Moses (her real name) developed an amazing proficiency with guns. Legend says as a child she hunted game with great success. Game she bagged was sold, helping the family pay off the mortgage on the farm.

They married and until 1885 played vaudeville circuits, later joining "Buffalo Bill" Cody's Wild West Show. She was billed as "Miss Annie Oakley, the Peerless Lady Wing Shot." (If this sounds familiar, her story was the basis of the hit musical "Annie Get Your Gun".)

"At 30 paces she could split a playing card held edge-on," said Bob McHenry — a history expert asked to cite some females who did well in battle or otherwise showed bavery, courage or proficiency on male turf.

"She shot cigarettes from her husband's lips. Shooting at a playing card tossed into the air, she riddled it before it touched ground.

McHenry is the editor of a book of mini-biographies of remarkable American women — "Liberty's Women" (G. and C. Merriam Co., $15).

He said few women or men either could match the continuous heroics of Ida Lewis, of Newport, R.I. Born 1842, the became keeper at Lime Rock lighthouse in the Newport harbor at the age of 15 after her dad, who first held the job, was disabled. Her feats included:

—In 1867, during a terrific gale, rescuing three shepherds who had gone into the water after a valuable sheep. She saved the sheep, too.

Her heroic feats over the years earned Miss Lewis a Carnegie Hero Fund pension and a gold medal from the American Cross of Honor Society.

As for American women in battle, McHenry said if past is prologue, some adventuresome types might be expected to do well.

Take Molly Pitcher — real name, Mary Ludwig Hays McCauley. At the battle of Monmouth, June 28, 1778, she was with her husband's regiment and toted water in a pitcher to artillerymen. That's what earned the nickname.

After the war she retired to Carlisle, Pa. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania authorized a $40 a year pension for her.

Sarah Emma Evelyn Edmonds was another female fighter. In Flint, Mich., shortly after the Civil War erupted, she enlisted under the name of Frank Thompson. Her outfit was the volunteer infantry that became Company F, 2nd Michigan Infantry.

She was in battle lines a year, fighting at Blackburn's Ford and Bull Run. And in the Peninsular campaign of May-July 1862. She also fought at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. Twice, at least, she went on spy missions behind Confederate lines — each time "disguised" as a woman!

She eventually deserted, took the name Sarah Edmonds and continued working, this time as a nurse. In 1865 she published a popular fictional account of her adventures. It was titled "Nurse and Spy in the Union Army."

Her service was recognized when Congress granted her a pension. Before she died in 1898 in Houston, she was mustered into the Grand Army of the Republic as a regular.

Deborah Sampson, disguised as a man, enlisted in 1782. McHenry said she got away with it — being tall, strong, and well-coordinated. She enlisted in Capt. George Webb's company of the 4th Massachusetts, using the name Robert Shurtleff.

Serving over a year without detection, she received a saber wound in a skirmish near Tarrytown, N.Y. A few weeks later she was hurt by a musket ball in a fight near East Chester. To avoid discovery, she dressed the second wound herself. Later she did battle in Western New York and Philadelphia.

Formally discharged in 1783, she was provided a sum of money by Gen. Henry Knox. In 1792 she was granted money by the Massachusetts General Court for her services.

McHenry said Miss Sampson is unique among women as a genuine Revolutionary War veteran and pensioner. After she died in 1827, her widower, Benjamin Gannett, was granted a survivor's pension!

Ann Baily's feats proved women can wage war, too. She took up rifle and tomahawk afer her husband was killed at the battle of Point Pleasant in 1774. She became a frontier scout, messenger, spy and Indian fighter.

Its main settlement, Fort Lee, was besieged by Indians in 1791. When the defenders' powder ran low, she rode for help, dashing from the fort through the host of attackers.

She rode a hundred miles through woods to Fort Union, present day Lewisburg. The third day she returned to the fort, toting gun powder.

Her wounds were not mortal and Mrs. Corbin was granted a lifetime soldier's half-pay pension from the Continental Congress.

She was formally mustered out of the army in 1783 and is buried at West Point.

Glimpses of combat feats by other women:

—Hannah Duston. In 1697, a week after giving birth, she, the baby, and a nurse were captured by Indians. Her husband and seven other children got away. The baby was killed and the two women marched northward for 100 miles. Near present-day Concord, Mass., they met an English boy who had been captured a year earlier. The boy was able to get hatchets for himself and the women. The three attacked their captors, killing 10. Hannah is reported to have killed nine. The three then escaped but not before Hannah scalped the dead to have proof of the ordeal. History records she lived a peaceful life after that and died at Ipswich in 1736.

—Nancy Hart, able to handle a gun, was a large, strong woman. McHenry said many exploits were attributed to her during fighting in Georgia during the Revolutionary War. At one point five or six armed Tories arrived at her cabin and demanded she cook a meal. She served them lots of whiskey and managed to slip two of their rifles through a crack in the logs to her daughter who had gone for help. When the Tories discovered her dirty work, they rushed her. She picked up a rifle and shot one dead. The rest were captured — and hanged. Mrs. Hart thought death by firing squad would be too good for them, according to McHenry.

History has even recorded a female Paul Revere. Of sorts. Her name is Sybil Ludington. On April 26, 1777, news was brought to her father's home in Fredericksburg, now Ludingtonville, N.Y., that Gov. William Tryon was attacking Danbury, Conn. That was 15 miles away and the storage place for munitions and other supplies for the militia of the entire region.

The messenger was exhausted and Sybil volunteered to bear the order for muster and rouse the countryside.

Throughout the night, the 16-year old girl rode her horse on unfamiliar roads around Putnam county, spreading the alarm.

History records also the feats of Anna Warner Baily. "Mother Baily" walked several miles to the scene of battle of Groton, Conn., in 1781. She found her uncle mortally wounded. She hurried home, gathered the family transported them to the battle site for a last meeting.

History records something elst about "Mother Baily."

"In 1813," McHenry said, "in the second war with Britain, she appeared among Groton soldiers in defense of New London.

Big Savings In Coupons

MIDLAND, Mich. (AP) — The ringing of a grocery store cash register is music to Susan Miller — it covers the sound of other shoppers groaning.

The Midland woman received $161.38 in free groceries, plus a $2.37 refund, on a recent shopping day with coupons and refund slips.

"I still can't believe it," she said. "They actually paid me to cart the groceries out of the store. Savings like that don't happen every week."

Mrs. Miller said she normally saves about 50 percent on her grocery bill, but the store where she set her record featured double coupon savings.

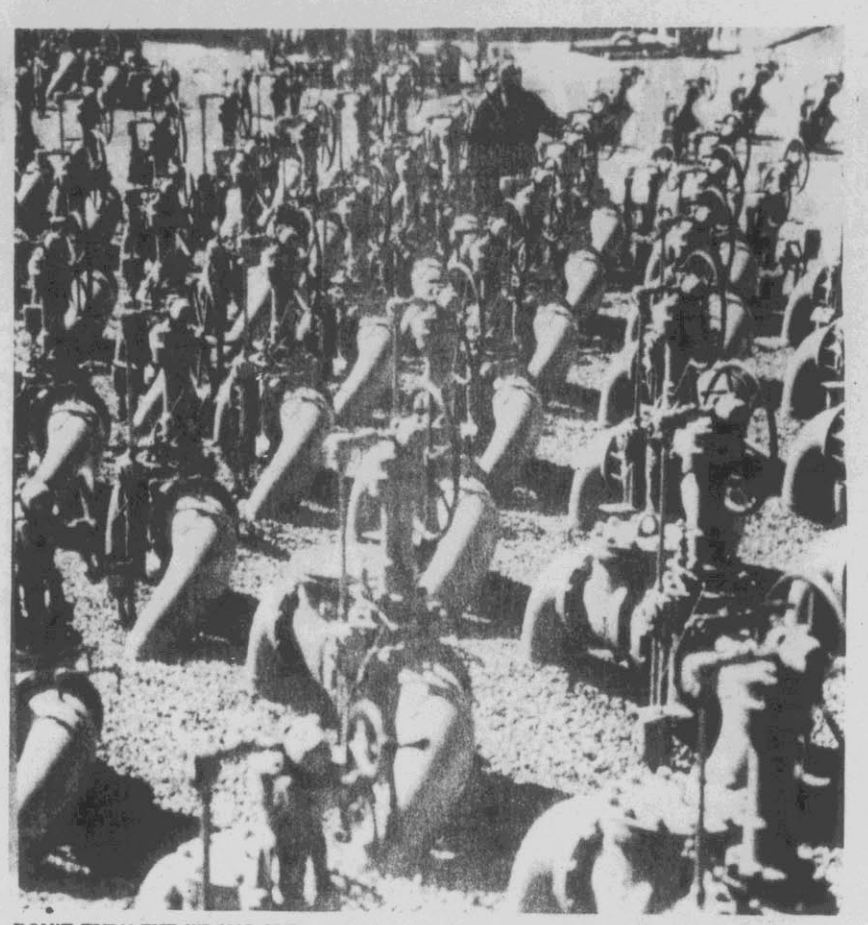
"I didn't know what to expect until the groceries were checked out ...when the final coupon was subtracted the store actually owed me money. The cashier even autographed my sales slip."

She said her husband Bruce thought she was "totally nuts" when she started clipping coupons. "Now he always asks if I want a wrapper before he throws it away."

Her next goal — a $250 freebie.

REGULATED LIGHTS

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI) — An ordinance bans blinking, flashing and moving signs in this desert resort and prohibits neon lights on business signs within the city limits, according to the Palm Springs Convention and Visitors Bureau.



DON'T TURN THE WRONG ONE — Unidentified technician examines some of the more than 100 shutoff valves grouped at a Long Beach, Calif. central gathering station. Each bank of valves represents a different petroleum product or refiner. Major oil companies send refined products through the station, where they are routed to military bases, commercial distributors and other consumers throughout southern California, Nevada and Arizona. Idaho Millionaire Made His Pile With Potatoes

EDITOR'S NOTE — In a state where potato is king, J.R. Simplot wears the crown. "Mr. Spud," as he is known, is the richest man in Idaho, a state which has a surprising number of millionaires.

By MARC WILSON
Associated Press Writer

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — J.R. "Jack" Simplot got his start in the Great Depression, shooting wild horses to feed pigs.

When World War II erupted, he made his first million feeding dried onions and potatoes to GIs. Today, fast food fans are his patrons.

So, the richest man in a state that has more millionaires per capita than any other loves to take his grandchildren to eat at the local McDonald's hamburger outlet.

It's a symbolic treat for Simplot. For about the last 20 years, the mammoth fast food chain has bought its French fries from Simplot. He served for many years on the McDonald's board, and though he can afford much fancier food, he says he likes to see his heirs eat the food that secured their fortune.

And, says Simplot, it was his 16 grandchildren who kept him working, driving, wanting and building.

In Idaho, Simplot is the "French Fry King," or "Big Jack," or Idaho's "Daddy Warbucks" — or just "J.R." The slogan on Idaho's license plates is "Famous Potatoes," and Simplot's Lincoln Continental license plates say "Mr. Spud."

He seemingly has the power and the money to do anything he wants, except vote. In 1977, Simplot and two of his companies were fined $40,000 each after they pleaded no contest to failing to report $1.3 million in income. The no contest plea mounted to a felony conviction that deprives him of his right to vote.

Simplot's massive empire, built since he dropped out of school in the eighth grade, is estimated at between $300 million and $500 million, although he says he has no idea what he's worth.

His long-time friend, news commentator Lowell Thomas, says Simplot "could be built up into quite an inspiration for the youth of America. Built like a Notre Dame fullback, he is one of the outstanding personalities of the West, head of an empire ... His knowledge is vast, his judgment is sure and his drive is tremendous.

"As he goes banging down the Sawtooth Mountains on skis, you can hear him singing and laughing a half-mile away."

Dressed in a brown suit and Hush Puppies, Simplot seems the kindly bald gentleman when he talks about his family, duck hunting, skiing, jogging and his 71st birthday.

A change occurs at the mention of the no contest plea or the fine imposed on him by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

The CFTC fined him $50,000 in 1978 on charges that he and his company tried to manipulate the prices of Idaho and Maine potatoes. He and his company were barred from futures trading for six years.

Even more disturbing to him is the loss of his Dominican Republic gold mine last October: "It was the largest gold mine in the free world, supposed to be the fifth biggest in the entire world and they (the Dominican government) just took it away."

Simplot started his working life lining irrigation ditches with rocks. With his earnings, he bought hogs for a dollar a head until he had about 700. Simplot says he then sold the operation for nearly $8,000 to enter the potato farming business.

He opened a small potato and onion dehydration plant near Caldwell in 1941 — just before World War II. The federal government then provided the financing to expand the plant, and soon Simplot was selling vast quantities to GIs overseas.

After the war, he expanded his plants throughout Idaho and into Minnesota. He hired geologists who found phosphate ore deposits in Idaho, which led him to found a fertilizer manufacturing company.

"But I'm still a farmer at heart. I've bought lots of farms and sold a few, and regretted every one I sold," he says.

But not everything Simplot touches turns to gold.

When his son-in-law, C.L. "Butch" Otter, a Simplot company vice president and state legislator, ran for governor in the 1978 Republican primary, Simplot sent a letter to his 4,500 Idaho employees endorsing Otter and bought $16,000 of television advertising time. Otter lost by 1,800 votes.

"There's a lot of jealousy toward Jack," says one long-time political observer who asked not to be identified. "He's made himself a multimillionaire and he can do pretty much what he wants. But people didn't want him buying the governor's chair. He's got a lot of money, and a lot of people who envy him for it."

Simplot gave up the day-to-day duties as chief operating officer in 1973, remaining as chairman of J.R. Simplot Co. and Simplot Industries.

Electric Chair Given Student

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Fellow students of Mark Rogers and teachers at Kenowa Hills High School felt he would enjoy the freedom to go where he wanted when he wanted, so they pitched in to buy him an electric wheelchair.

Rogers, 17, has spinal muscular atrophy, a form of muscular dystrophy. For almost a year, he was unable to maneuver a manually operated wheelchair by himself.

The student council, teachers and others raised $1,900 in less than 10 days. The remainder of the $2,400 for the chair was made up with tax money the state makes available for vocational rehabilitation.

Rogers said he hoped to study accounting and data processing at college after graduating from the high school.

Cathedral Ceilings Decks Benefit Plan

By Jerry Bishop

Generously supplied with cathedral ceilings and gable end windows, the Idlewild, a two level contemporary, chooses spacious living areas and sleeping areas that enjoy deck access.

Notable in the up-to-the minute facade the front sun deck and the sizable amounts of glass that carry light to the interior. Inside, the illusion of space is expressed by the high ceilings and profusion of windows. But space is more than an illusion, since the design provides a 23-ft. family room, a 19-ft. living room, and a 17-ft. master bedroom with walk-in closet and deck.

Entry is off the living room, where the split level arrangement allows access to the bedrooms above or to the family room a few steps below. On the mail level, the living room, formal dining room, and efficient kitchen are set to host parties, while the family room is geared to everyday activity.

Sliding glass doors link family room with patio. Other bonuses on this level include two storage closets, a powder room with closet, and a laundry center. Entry to the double garage is also a plus.

Bedrooms are grouped on the upper level, with natural zoning assuring quiet. The well-planned master bedroom offers a walk-in closet, private bath, vanity built into the room, and access to a private deck. At front, the second bedroom and sitting room also merit sliding glass doors to the deck.

Tiles Are Showing Up All Over The American Home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Not very long ago, the lion's share of the residential-tile business consisted of supplying solid-color, American-made tiles for fairly uninspired treatments in bathrooms and kitchens around the country.

But in recent years, a variety of factors including affluence, the importation of more foreign-made tiles and some improvements in American designs have combined to produce many changes in the residential tile business. A tile retailer characterized the changes in this way: "Five years ago, I sold tile for a living. Today, I'm in the design business."

Tiles, especially the patterned, decorative kind, are now being used in entryways, sunrooms and playrooms as well as in the kitchens and bathrooms of American homes. And a typical tile showroom is likely to have thousands of different samples on display.

Naturally, the amount consumers spend on fancy tiles, some of them imported from such countries as Mexico, Portugal, Italy and Spain, is considerably higher than it was once upon a time.

"A typical expenditure for tile for a bathroom is much higher and it might be up to $10,000 for the material alone," said one tile man.

Although he stands to make more money on each sale, a tile retailer selling fashion also must put more into each sale, he added. "Today, we spend many hours working with a typical customer on design."

Both smooth-textured, brightly-colored glazed tiles (often with vivid designs) and rough-textured, natural-looking unglazed tiles are popular nowadays. In some cases, the two types of tile are combined. Because of the increasing cost of decorative tile, an important trend nowadays is the use of decorative inserts within a block of solid color tiles. This achieves unusual effects at more moderate cost.

Tiles which once cost as little as $1 or $1.50 a square foot now run as high as $40 a square foot. Decorative, hand-painted tiles may sell by the tile for prices ranging up to more than $15 each.

Among major exporters of tile to the United States are Mexico, Portugal, Italy, France and, increasingly nowadays, Germany and Japan.

Knowledgeable observers have noticed that each country's tile tends to have a characteristic look. For example, Mexican tiles, among the most expensive, are prized for their highly creative, hand-painted design. Despite high price tags, they are among the more popular tiles in affluent communities.

Portuguese tiles also have the primitive look and colorful designs for which people are willing to pay top dollar.

Italian tiles tend to be more sophisticated in design. The Italian tiles frequently feature elaborate, traditional or modern, geometrical designs or patterns which can be combined to achieve intricate design effects. French tiles are especially desirable when brilliant, highly polished colors are wanted, although their high cost is limiting sales today.

German tiles, which at least one tile expert characterized as among the most durable and best quality tiles, may appear to lack something when it comes to creativity of design. Japanese decorative tiles are less expensive than the German imports and increasingly popular.

There are four basic types of tile: normal clay bisque, porcelain ceramic, terra cotta and quarry tile. Porcelain ceramic and quarry tile are both extremely durable and almost impervious to stains. Other tiles, such as terra cotta and the standard clay bisque, are softer. Terra cotta is not suitable for outdoor installations in northern climates.

However, all tile can be used for interior installation. Provided they are installed correctly, they will provide long service and durability under normal conditions, according to tile experts.

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A pocket wrench set that stores five socket sizes in its handle.

Manufacturer's claim — That the wrench set can be used to take apart about 80 percent of the bolted equipment around the house, from bicycles to broiler grills to washers and ironers ... that the sockets are seated securely in a plastic clip that slips in and out of the handle ... that the rachet itself snaps out for very close work ... that the sockets are from 3-16ths to 5-16ths, the most commonly used sizes ... that the set weighs only 6 ounces and can be carried in a pocket, purse, glove compartment, briefcase or just hung on a nail by the ring in the end of the handle ... and that the set is guaranteed forever.

THE PRODUCT — A ready-mixed tile grout.

Manufacturer's claim — That this is an acrylic latex grout for ceramic and mosaic tile ... that it can be applied with a putty knife, sponge or by hand and is good for both new work and regrouting ... that it is stain and mildew-resistant ... that it becomes waterproof in only 24 hours ... that, since it is a latex product, the tools used with it can be cleaned with water ... and that it can be tinted to match bathroom decor.

Manufacturer's claim — That this torch develops an on-target temperature of 2100 degrees Fahrenheit, whereas most brazing is done at temperatures between 1400 and 1700 degrees ... that this added concentrated heat helps to make easier the job of brazing, a method of joining two metals together using a third, a brazing rod ... that no oxygen pellets or oxygen gas cylinders are necessary ... that there are six models of such torches, three of which are equipped with automatically adjusting flame regulators ... and that the torch can be used for burning off paint, softening old putty, loosening rocked nuts and bolts, and repairing many things around the house.

Manufacturer's claim — That this mouthpiece is screwed into place in a few seconds ... that a visible light glows if anyone is listening to your conversation other than the person at the other end of the line ... that it can be used at home, in the office or in a hotel ... and that you can tell whether your phone is being tapped, whether a switchboard operator is eavesdropping or whether somebody is listening on an extension.

Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," available by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck N.J. 07666.)

Q. — We are about to finish the attic in our house. The attic area is large enough for two rooms and a bathroom. The beams there are 2-by-6. Are they large enough to handle the extra weight?

A. — Generally, when a house is built with an expansion attic, as your house appears to be, the size of the beams conforms with the local building codes. However, better check first, as there are variations on beam sizes and spans based on house styles and square footage.

Q. — My grandfather used to get a "natural" pine finish by using linseed oil. I forget how he did it, but I remember him saying it took months to get the right shade. Do you know anything about such a finish?

A. — I always hesitate to tell someone about wood finishing methods used many years ago. Some are still very good, but remember that your grandfather did not have the benefit of the wide variety of excellent finishing materials now on the market. My guess is that he probably brushed on boiled linseed oil (you buy it that way; don't try to boil it), waited about 30 minutes, wiped it off, rubbed it vigorously and then waxed it. Using this method, he then kept the wood for several months in a location where it was exposed to light. After a period of time, the wood developed a warm, golden brown color.

Q. — I am going to paint the walls of two rooms with a flat latex paint, the woodwork with a gloss enamel. Which should be painted first?

A. — The woodwork. It is easier to remove wet latex splatter and smears from a dried enamel than to remove enamel from a dried latex.

Q. — What does the tag UL mean on electric wire?

A. — It stands for Underwriters' Laboratories and means that the wire meets at least minimum standards for quality and safety.

Q. — Should wood filler be used on walnut?

A. — Some types of walnut — those exceptionally open-grained — require the use of a filler. Most regular walnut woods eventually will smooth out under successive coats of varnish, lacquer or whatever other clear finish you use.

Convention Center Funded

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A recent $10 million federal grant will not only help alleviate this city's unemployment problem, but will also generate more tax revenues and stimulate business, according to officials here.

The grant will be used to complete financing of a $42 million, 600-room deluxe downtown hotel and other Convention Center improvements totaling $75 million. Mayor Richard L. Berkley says as a result "it will generate more than 1,000 new jobs, $1 million annually in increased tax revenues, and added convention business that will pump an estimated $26 million into the coffers of local business."

Construction should begin by summer and will be completed in about two years.

Look For Leaks, Avert Damage

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — If a roof is more than 10 years old, a trip to the attic twice a year may save the inside of a house from water damage.

Roof leaks almost always start small, according to Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., a shingle manufacturer. The water may leak only on the rafters in the attic, and the homeowner won't know about it until water penetrates the ceiling.

Let's Talk Real Estate

by Connally Branch

Many people who own houses or apartments never live in them. A large percentage of those who own property in the United States rent it. This does not mean that they automatically realize large profits. There is a great deal of responsibility involved with being a landlord. For example, he is responsible for all upkeep from heating system to broken windows. He also bears responsibility for rental and/or management costs including advertising and remodeling expenses. The owner is also responsible for insurance and taxes.

Real estate, whether it be single family, multi-family, land or rental income producing can be a fruitful investment if entered into wisely. Sculptor Opines Work Is Better Than Schooling

STILL WORKING—Leading Italian sculptor Giacomo Manzu, who at age 71 continues to work every day, holds one of his works in his house on the outskirts of Rome.

By FLORENCE SICOLI

ROME (AP) — Young artists should shun art school and learn their craft by working as carpenters or cement mixers, says Giacomo Manzu, one of Italy's greatest living sculptors.

Turning 71 and still working daily, Manzu advised budding artists to join the working class.

The sculptor of the bronze Doors of Death at St. Peter's Basilica recalled in an interview that his own career started at age 10 as a carpenter, engraver, gilder, polisher and stucco worker.

"Young artists have to go to work like everybody else," said Manzu, enjoying good health at his rambling, hilltop villa in Ardea, 25 miles from Rome.

"If they want to learn how to create with stone and marble or wood, why don't they construct sidewalks or do carpentry and engraving," he said.

"I am absolutely against art schools. They cannot produce either sculptors or painters," said Manzu, who taught in art schools in Milan and Turin but never received formal art lessons himself.

"Art schools don't really know anything about the materials of art," added the sculptor, who created many busts of Pope John XXIII.

An avowed atheist, Manzu bears a striking resemblance to the gentle and unassuming Pope John with whom he shared a strong friendship, despite their differences in beliefs.

Born Dec. 22, 1908, one of 12 children of an impoverished Bergamo shoemaker, Manzu launched his sculpting career at 20, working with construction materials and discarded marble in a toolshed loaned to him by a local architect.

Despite his advancing years, Manzu says he continues to work daily "because it's my responsibility."

"Many think an artist lives a special life. Instead, I go to work every day like everyone else.

"I believe all men's activities are equally important even though my work may be more cerebral than that of a street cleaner," said the sculptor, who claims to have no interest in politics but describes himself as "a man of the left."

The fame brought on by seven decades of his art and unorthodox views has done little to change the former northern Italian peasant's down-to-earth attitude toward art.

"When I start working in my studio I don't tell myself I'm an inspired artist. I don't believe in inspiration. I work and that's it.

"I am a very arrogant man in the sense that I think always of trying to be in some way helpful to other men, of doing something that might be useful," Manzu said.

And despite his material success, he continues to praise the sense of poverty he knew well as a child.

"I love poverty of means to live and work. It creates less harmful consequences than wealth," he said, sitting in a leather armchair in his living room, surrounded with drawings by Matisse, Picasso, Morandi and Modigliani.

"I can have armchairs instead of chairs, excuse me. It's my right after so many years of working. But I content myself with few material comforts. I believe that poverty is the only wealth that a man can have."

Narrowing of the Arteries and Flashes of Dizziness

I'm 68 years old. I still run a small grocery shop and I'm pretty active for my age. My only problem is that when I reach up to the higher shelves I get a quick flash of dizziness. My doctor says it's my age, but I've got friends who are older and they don't have this. — Mr. E. I., W. Va.

Dear Mr. I.:

In your age group, changes occur in the blood vessels that could account for this unpleasant symptom. Narrowing of the blood vessels that carry blood from the heart, through the neck and to the brain, can cause a momentary lack of oxygen when there is a sudden change in the position of the head. In that moment the brain may be deprived of an adequate amount of blood and oxygen.

When this is the cause of the sensation that you describe, patients are advised to avoid sudden rapid changes of position, especially with the head extended backwards. When they sit up from a lying-down position, they are told to get up slowly and thus allow the flow of blood to the brain to gradually adjust to the new change of position.

There are now a great number of remarkable and accurate methods by which the flow of blood to the brain can be studied. Arteriograms and angiograms are special techniques for learning which of the major arteries are closed by arteriosclerosis. In far-advanced cases, many brilliant surgical methods are used to open up clogged arteries in the neck.

Transplantation of blood vessels are extremely successful in attacks of dizziness which are constant and incapacitating.

This is not to intimate that your condition is serious enough to warrant the tests and procedures I have mentioned. Yet, if you are serverely distressed, it might be worthwhile to have a vascular checkup.

That your older friends have not complained of this symptom simply means that their vascular structure is different from yours. If you compared notes, you would probably find that they have other problems that you would not trade for yours.

Do you think that karate is too dangerous a sport for a young teenager? — Mrs. G.S. Ore.

Dear Mrs. S.:

Karate and many of its variations, known as the "martial arts," are excellent forms of exercise. There are some hazards for those who are not completely supervised and competently trained.

Youngsters who become overenthusiastic have been known to suffer from, and to have inflicted, severe damage to the liver and spleen while practicing this sport.

AWAY FROM THE AUTOBAHN — French street and bridge constructors have designed and built this pedestrian and cyclist highway crossing bridge using wood for little towers and tunnels to get away from the normal concrete construction monotony seen nearly all over European highways. THE GREAT REBATE DEBATE.

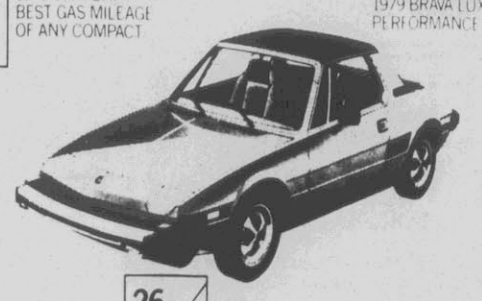
FIAT HAS THE LAST WORD WITH A $700 CASH REBATE ON 3 OF THE BEST GAS MILEAGE EUROPEAN CARS.

28 / 41 1979 STRADA BEST GAS MILEAGE OF ANY COMPACT

1979 BRAVA LUXURY PERFORMANCE SEDAN 23 / 32



26 / 39 1979 X1/9 MID ENGINE EXCITEMENT

These days, it seems the higher the rebate, the lower the gas mileage.
So you have to debate whether getting a cash rebate now makes up for spending more money for gas later.

At Fiat, we just ended the whole debate. By offering $700 rebates on 3 of the best mileage Europeans cars.
So see us for a great deal and to heck with the debate.

Remember, compare this estimate to the estimated MPG of other cars. You may get different mileage depending on speed, weather and trip length. Actual highway mileage will probably be less.

COX

CRASH 1984!

An outbreak of mayhem is evident everywhere today in the United States. Some say the bottom has fallen out! Prices on consumer products have toppled at staggering levels.

Gasoline supplies are all but exhausted and those fortunate enough to have a gas rationing ticket are paying almost $3.00 a gallon. New cars are now a communal neighborhood purchase and even considered a luxury item among the white collar worker. Transit Systems are a way of life...a true reality. They travel within a ten mile radius of the city, where the greatest concentration of population resides. Overcrowding stifles the air in this once magnificent city.

Housing! Where does it all stop? The cost of an average home today is a conservative $120,000! Interest rates are as high as twenty one percent, prime rates at an unheard of twenty five percent! Average monthly mortgage payments exceeds two thousand dollars!!

Poor quality and high prices are manifested in every pair of shoes, every stitch of clothes and every edible item on the market today. When will this madness cease?

Turn it back, turn the clock back! Not ten or twenty years ago but just five short years to a more tranquil time in 1979. Remember the uncertainties? World War Three was on the lips of everyone. Even though World War never materialized, the unity of the country was a welcome turn toward patriotism.

People balked at gas selling for more than a dollar a gallon—but at least we had it! Grocery shopping wasn't always a pleasant experience, at any rate, you could go shopping at your leisure without checking your watch to insure you didn't miss the specified departure time of the local transit system.

Quality was still a fashionable word. Merchants offered store wide sales, money off coupons, warranties on faulty goods and other dollar-stretching values to help and protect the consumer.

And even though the housing market fluctuated, at times uneasily, in the good old days, there were numerous, helpful programs initiated for people that really wanted a home. Sweat equities for those that could afford time and energy into doing some of the repair work in place of cash; FHA-245 Plan or Graduated Mortgage which gradually raised your monthly mortgage payments over a period of years.

This was a time when the public took pride in the word "Professionalism". Most real estate associates were thoroughly trained in their field. They were taught how to professionally assist their customer in every way, whether it was to market their present home, serve them in finding a new home or to comfortably locate a residence for them across the country. This was usually a service done through an efficiently ran relocation department.

Yes, times seemed bleak. All that talk of high interest rates, escalating prices on building supplies, acquiring mortgage money...such an uncertainty...could a recession be that imminent?

I suppose if everyone could have only seen five years into the future, would they have been so hesitant? How eager they all would have been, how satisfied people would have felt, not so quick to jump for the negative.

Yes, the good old days...I guess people will never know exactly how good it all was then.

(Sigh)

Jimmy Stewart Honored By Peers

The Aw Shucks kid has become one of the world's most beloved actors, and "The American Film Institute Salute to Jimmy Stewart" Sunday, March 16 (9:30 to 11 p.m.) honors the veteran performer for his many contributions to film art.

Stewart will be 72 years old in May, and even though he's no longer that shy fella who always seemed to be scratching a mild itch behind one ear, he still has that special grace you don't find in most of today's movie stars.

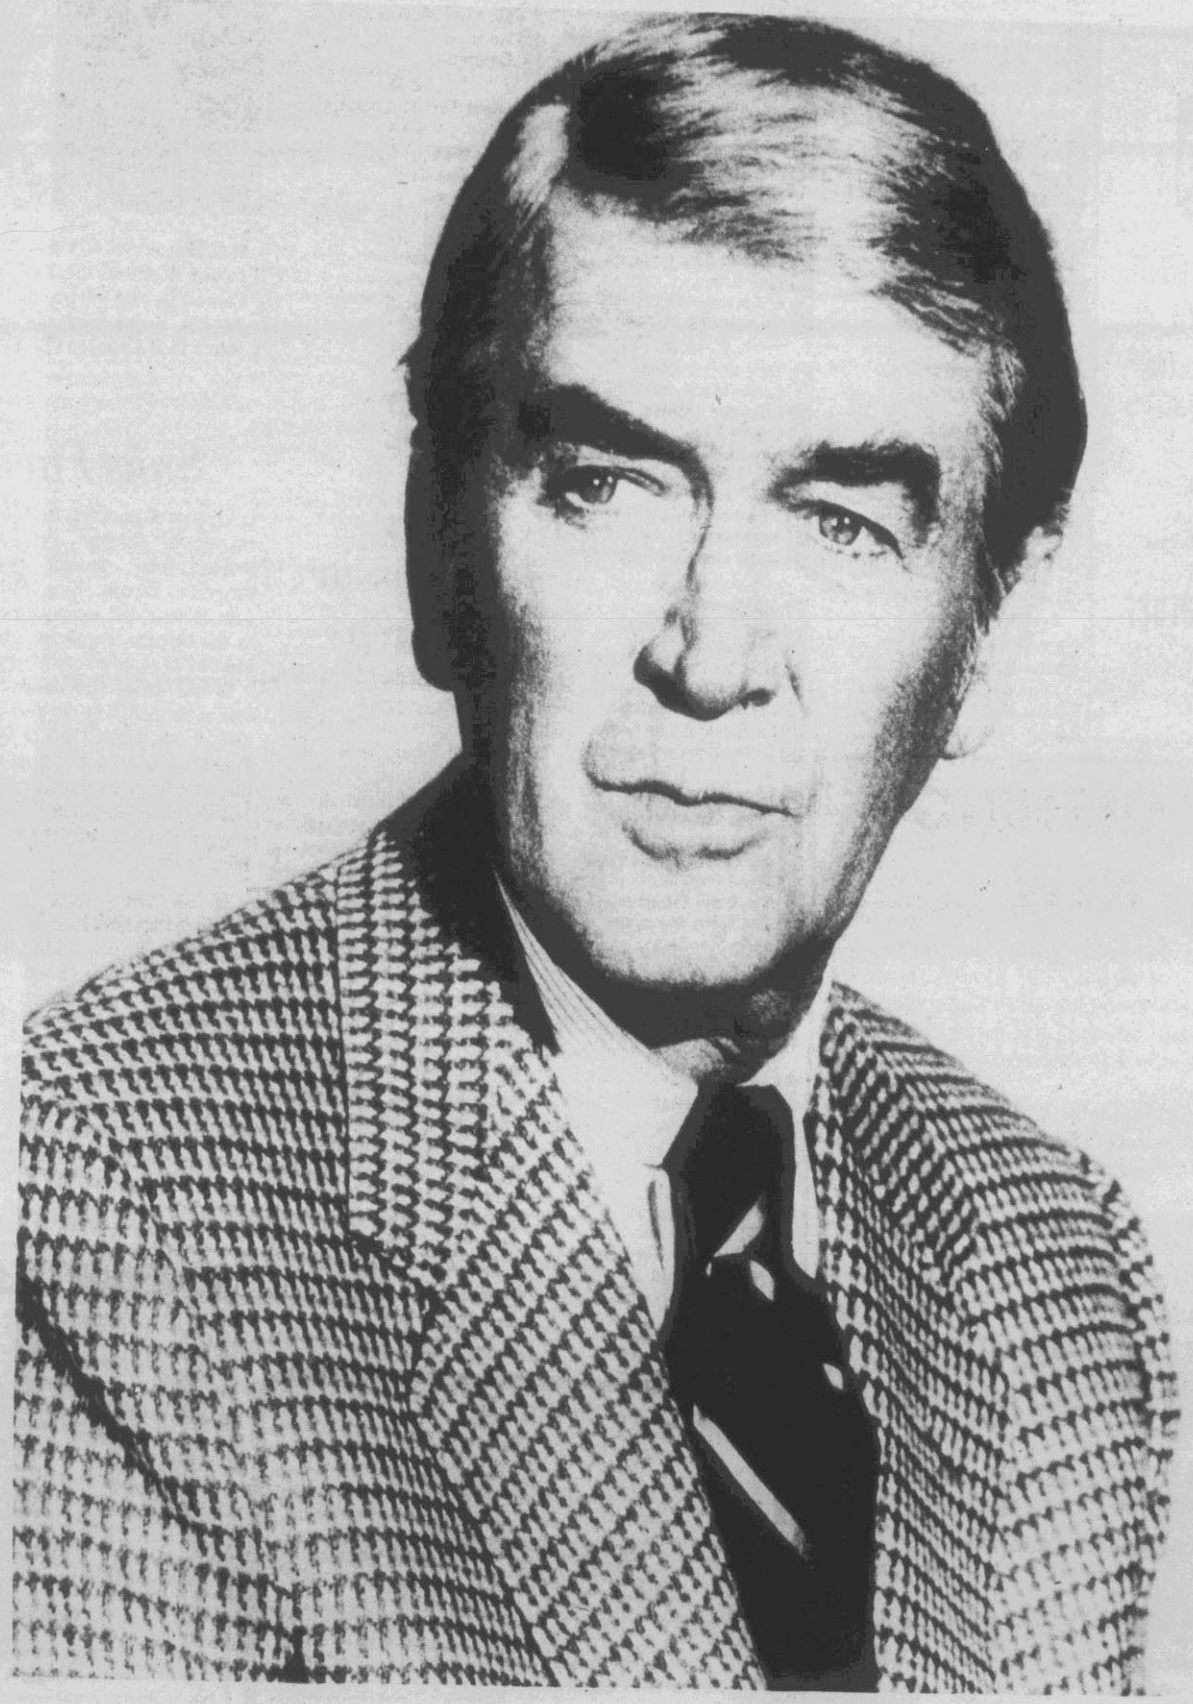
"You know, I miss the big studios," he says. "A lot of people still say they were impersonal factories, but that's just not true. That's where the glamour and magic were born," he recalls.

"The major studios nurtured you along with small parts in big pictures and big parts in small pictures. Not too bad an idea. It was a different ball game then, and actors were like baseball players," Stewart continued. "You were under contract to a studio, and you stayed there until they traded you, sold you or dropped you. MGM once traded me to Universal in exchange for the Universal back-lot. Not ownership of it, just use of it. I'm not sure I felt flattered."

"You can say what you want to about the heads of the studios — people like L.B. Mayer, Darryl Zanuck, Harry Cohn and Sam Goldwyn — but they loved the motion picture industry, and put their all into it."

The same thing can be said about James Stewart. After his childhood in Indiana, Penn., he attended some of the nation's finest schools (Mercersburg Academy and Princeton, where he received a degree in architecture). Then he went to New York, where he debuted on Broadway in 1932.

The move to Hollywood came three years later, where he flunked his screen test at 20th Century-Fox, but was promptly signed by MGM. The rest is history — an almost unbelievable succession of popular films in which he seemed to always represent what America was all about. In addition to his impressive film credits, he has a distinguished record of military service during World War II (including 20 bombing missions over Germany) and a private life completely unblemished by scandal.



"The American Film Institute Salute to Jimmy Stewart," a tribute to one of the world's most beloved actors, airs Sunday, March 16 (9:30-11 p.m.) on CBS- TV.

Professor Returns

Professor Brainard returns to create more confusion in "Son of Flubber," presented on Disney's Wonderful World, Sunday, March 16 (7 to 8 p.m.). on NBC-TV.

Ned Brainard (Fred MacMurray), an inventive professor at Medfield College, arrives in Washington to arrange government financing for his latest discovery, flubber. But the appropriations committee in Congress vetoes financing.

Returning home unhappy and empty-handed, Ned finds his wife Betsy (Nancy Olson) with two business executives. Eager to buy the flubber rights, they offer Ned a million dollars, but he declines.

In Ned's laboratory, a student, Biff Hawk (Tommy Kirk) is designing a new tackle-proof, flubbergassed football suit. Meanwhile, Ned's working on a project of his own — flubbergas — which he hopes will enable him to affect the rainfall.

WALTER DAVIS HIT the NBA scene big in 1978 when he was tapped Rookie of the Year, and he hasn't let up since. The Phoenix forward will lead the Suns into the unfriendly confines of the L.A. Forum when the Suns battle the Lakers on Sunday, March 16 at 2 p.m. on CBS-TV.

Suns Face Challenge

A couple of years ago, the NBA enjoyed a bumper crop of rookies. Some consider such players as Bernard King, Marques Johnson, and several others as the best the league has ever had.

So take special note when you look at the Rookie of the Year in 1978. It was Walter Davis of the Phoenix Suns, who still clings to the title of Chairman of the Board when they talk about players who determine the fate of their teams.

In his first season, Davis helped to transform his club from a Midwest Division cellar occupant to a legitimate playoff and championship contender. For Davis and the Suns, the sky is now the limit.

But Phoenix faces a rugged challenge when they tangle with Pacific Division powerhouse Los Angeles when the "NBA on CBS" is televised Sunday, March 16 (2 p.m.).

The game will originate from the Forum in Los Angeles, where the Lakers feature the best home record in the league with players like Kareem Jabbar, Jamaal Wilkes and Ervin "Magic" Johnson.

Davis came out of a superb career with the University of North Carolina Tarheels and now is joined in the NBA with other former Tarheels like Phil Ford, Bob MacAdoo and Bobby Jones.

ROBERT SHAW and Edward Fox (l-r) are on a mission behind German lines to destroy a bridge and expose a spy during WW II in "Force 10 From Navarone," the "ABC Sunday Night Movie," March 16 (9-11:25 p.m.).

Explosive Drama Airs

"Force 10 From Navarone," an explosive World War II adventure, makes its television premiere as The ABC Sunday Night Movie, March 16 (9 to 11:26 p.m.).

In the film, five desperate Allied soldiers and one beautiful woman — torn by divided loyalties — deal with the entire 11th German Army Corps and an unknown traitor in their midst as they plot to blow up a dam and destroy an impregnable bridge.

Robert Shaw and Edward Fox star as survivors of the famous mission that destroyed the guns of Navarone. Now they're assigned to another seemingly suicidal operation with the assistance of Harrison Ford, Franco Nero, Carl Weathers and Barbara Bach.

The year is 1943, and Major Mallory and Sergeant Miller (Shaw and Fox) are dispatched to Yugoslavia to identify and kill the German spy who betrayed them at Navarone. Their mission is deferred when their plane is shot down, killing all but five of the 'Force 10' soldiers and throwing the survivors into the hands of the Germans.

Mallory and his colleagues convince the Germans that they are thieves with a million dollors worth of penicillin hidden away. Then, with the guidance of the German Commander's mistress, they escape and create a masterful plan to destroy the all-important bridge that is supposed to carry the German force into action.

As the bridge is being blown to bits, the Allies discover the spy they sought....and he is one of them.

The movie is based on a novel by Alistair Maclean, and viewers who are fond of action fare are in for a treat. The unusual plot twists, he-man action and suspense, with several humorous exchanges interspered, should make for an exciting evening.

The cast, headed by the late Robert Shaw in his final screen role, is excellent. Ford tosses off his lines with a unique flair and Fox, as usual, walks away with a good share of the scenes. The adventure is buoyed by startling bits of combat violence, and the 'slam bang' ending is reminiscent of those usually saved for disaster films.

Girl Gains New Insight

An angry child of divorce discovers that vows of eternal friendship can be as changeable — and as fragile — as marriage in "What Are Friends For?," airing on the ABC Afterschool Specials series, Wednesday, March 19 (4:30 to 5:30 p.m.).

Amy Warner is so deeply wounded by her parents' divorce that she won't even speak to her father, whose departure from home seemed the ultimate betrayal. When the girl and her mother move to a new community after the divorce, she befriends Michelle Mudd, with whom she has much in common. They are both 12, and both have been hurt by divorce.

Michelle puts conditions on the friendship — it must be exclusive, omitting two other girls who have befriended Amy. Amy reluctantly agrees, certain that — unlike their faithless parents — they could never be disloyal. But Amy is crushed when she discovers that Michelle has used one of her cherished antique dolls for a curse. Then the hurt is compounded when Michelle attempts to involve Amy after she's caught for shoplifting.

Sadly, Amy realizes that even the best of friends may not be together always, and gains a new understanding of her parents' divorce.

Melora Hardin stars as Amy, and Dana Hill is Michelle. Susan Admas appears as Jan Warner, and Michael Currie and Sally Kemp portray Dr. and Mrs. Mudd. Others in the cast are Tasha Zemrus (Barbara Delaney) and Jill Tyler (Nora).

"Sometimes the aftereffects of divorce cause a child to see everything in terms of absolutes — loyalty or betrayal," says ABC-TV' Marilyn Olin. "But the girl in this program soon discovers that life really isn't that simple. Experiencing the flaws and eventual failure of 'perfect' friendship helps her to understand that sometimes even people with the best intentions simply cannot be true to themselves and still remain together. And this includes her parents," she concluded.

DANA HILL and Melora Hardin (1 to r), both children of divorced parents, form a friendship which may be too tight for their own good in "What Are Friends For?," a premiere presentation on the "ABC Afterschool Specials" series Wednesday, March 19 (4:30-5:30 p.m.).

Jones In 'Golden'

He Is A True Teen Idol

Almost without fanfare, daytime television star Richard Dean Anderson of ABC-TV's "General Hosptial" has become an Americanteen idol.

The handsome young bachelor's fan mail is starting to rival the likes of Shaun Cassidy and Parker Stevenson during their hey-day as "The Hardy Boys."

Likewise, Rick, as his friends call him, has caused regular bedlam each time he's showcased his vast singing talent at such tourist attractions as Disneyland, and Knott's Berry Farm.

"I don't know if 'teen idol' is appropriate or not," the soft-spoken actor offers. "But I do know that our show, like a lot of the soaps, has a growing number of young viewers."

Indeed, because of split-shift school schedules so prevalent across the country, more and more young people are spending at least part of their free afternoons watching a soap opera. And, when it comes to 'Hospital,' Rick seems to be a big favorite.

"It is true that the requests for pictures and autographs come from a lot of young people," Rick says, "so in that sense I'm aware of who is writing me. I've also been surprised to discover how many of the young people know that I sing."

Rick was actually being modest in his remarks, for in truth, young feminine admirers are now sending him personal keepsakes (some of which are not printable).

Behind The Scenes

The teenager being groomed to replace Leif Garrett and Shaun Cassidy as the Hollywood's next teen idol is blond, blue-eyed Rad Daly.

Rad, who won the hearts of young girls all over the country with his role of Josh Matthews in the series "Bad News Bears," has just signed a seven-year contract with Paramount Studios.

The youngster's sensational rise to stardom actually began about two years ago in a swimming pool near his Los Angeles home. It was there that he was spotted by a producer, who promptly had him tested for a guest stint on "Family."

"They told me I was too young," Rad recalls. "But they suggested to my mom that I test for the part of Julie Andrews' son in '10.'"

He got that part, then was signed for the starring role in Disney's recently completed film, "The Boy Who Knew Too Much."

Now Rad's first record will be released any day now, and nobody's more surprised over this than his mother. "Every member of our family can sing," she explains, "but I never realized Rad was as good as he is."

Once the record is launched, Rad will be leaving for Africa, where he's to film an adventure miniseries for television.

Rad, who's now 13 years old, is already planning how he's going to spend the money he's making. "I want to buy a truck as soon as I'm old enough to drive. And I would also like to buy a condominium on the beach for my family.

"I don't think I'm going to go crazy because of all of this," he continues. "I mean, I've seen what's happened to a lot of other guys when they become well known. And I don't intend to follow in their steps."

"A SPECIAL CELEBRATION with Steve Allen" will put a very special cap on Public Television "Festival '80," airing Sunday, March 16 at 10 p.m. on PBS.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Is the actress who plays Erica Cudahy on "All My Children" expecting a baby? Where do I write to the show's producer? M. STOLBERG, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Yes! And Susan Lucci's hoping for a boy this time. She and her hubby, Helmut Huber, already have a daughter, Lize Victoria, who's five. While Erica is spoiled and self-centered, Susan is one of the loveliest, most sincere actresses on the daytime scene. While in high school, she was an honor student and cheerleader, worked on the newspaper staff, appeared in numerous plays, yet still found time to do hospital volunteer work. At Marymount College, she even won a special award for campus involvement and leadership. Which only goes to prove that, contrary to popular belief, nice girls don't necessarily finish last! Send your letter to 'AMC's' producer, Jorn Winther, c/o the show, ABC-TV, 1330 Ave. of the American, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Q: Can you tell me something about Matt McCoy, who's on "Hot Hero Sandwich"? L.W., ST, PAULS, N.C.

A: Matt's a member of 'Hero's' repertory company. Like most of the others in the group, he lives in the New York City area and has had very little prior experience on television. The most experienced youngster on the show is Paul O'Keefe, who's appeared in several Broadway productions and movies. Q: How old is Wink Martindale, who hosts "Tic Tac Toe"? And where is he from? L. DEES, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Wink's now in his early 50's and has accumulated an impressive number of television-host credits through the years. He's also recorded about 20 single records and seven albums. One single, "Deck of Cards," sold more than a million copies, earning him a gold record award.

Q: I would like to know what has happened to Kate Jackson. Who did she marry? Where may I write to her?

A: Kate's married to actor Andrew Stephens, and the two recently formed their own production company. Their first venture was on the TV movie "Topper," that aired last fall. Write to her c/oCosmos Productions, 9255 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.

Q: Please give me some information about the guy who plays Salami on "The White Shadow." How do I write to him? J.S. MORGANTON, N.C.

A: He's Timothy Van Patten, brother of actors Dick and Joyce Van Patten. Tim's single, very athletic and stays in shape by running six miles a day. Write to him c/o the show, 7800 Beverly Blvd., Hollywood, Calif. 90036.

Steve Allen Is Now Featured

PBS' nationally-coordinated special programming and membership effort promises two weeks of extraordinary television. Probably the most exciting event during the March membership drive will be the 30-hour program finale, pulling together virtually all of the participating stations in a unified explosion of exciting, fun, vibrant entertainment.

Hosting such an event calls for a very special talent. And there's probably nobody more qualified than actor/author/composer/comedian/musician Steve Allen, who will be the ringmaster for this Marathon finish. In addition, Allen will host a three-hour comedy/variety special that should put a unique frosting on the "Festival '80" cake. "A Special Celebration With Steve Allen" will be seen in Festival '80, March 16 (10 p.m.).

Over the years, Allen has given special meaning to the label of "entertainer." His incomparable blend of humor, history, music and madness has kept audiences awake on the "Tonight" show and alert on "Meeting of Minds," the highly-acclaimed PBS staple of the last three seasons. The wide popularity of his comedy writing and performing has at times overshadowed the fact that he is also a very accomplished pianist and composer.

For "A Special Celebration," this master-of-many-medias will call on his own talents and those of a great variety of performers. Already the range of performers stretches from the beautiful sounds of The Mormon Tabernacle Choir to the expanding mind of humorist Stan Freberg and the musical mastery of George Shearing. Formats will range from quiet musical moments to the madness of some of Allen's best comedic parodies.

Careers Spotlighted

Young musical artists at the start of their professional careers take the spotlight when "Debut '80" premieres Thursday, March 20 (8:30 p.m.) on PBS.

Each 30-minute segment focuses on a single artist who performs selections from his or her repertoire and discusses the work and training that go into a career in classical music with series host Jim Welch.

"You have to be a healthy person, and you have to be emotionally stable," says 22-year-old mezzo-soprano Hillary Nicholson, "because there are a lot of disappointments before you get where you want to be. I think you have to be mature enough to take those disappointments along with the prizes."

Even at the start of their careers, Nicholson and the other artists featured on the series are no strangers to "the prizes." A graduate of the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, she is a 1979 winner of the Music Teachers National Association (MTNA) Collegiate Artist Competition. So are pianist Alan Chow, percussionist Bruce Lehman and guitarist Stephen Robinson, all in their early twenties.

The first program features violinist Kathryn Lucktenberg, a student at the Curtis Institute and a member of the Kasimir String Quartet. In the second program, Nicholson sings a varied selection of vocal music. 'Debut's' third performer is pianist Alan Chow, a graduate of the University of Maryland and a student at Juilliard.

Percussionist Bruce Lehman, a graduate of Indiana State University, plays music for marimba and mixed percussion instruments on the fourth program. He's followed by guitarist Stephen Robinson, a graduate student at Yale and winner of the Carmel Classical Guitar Competition as well as the MTNA.

2 Words Of Hope
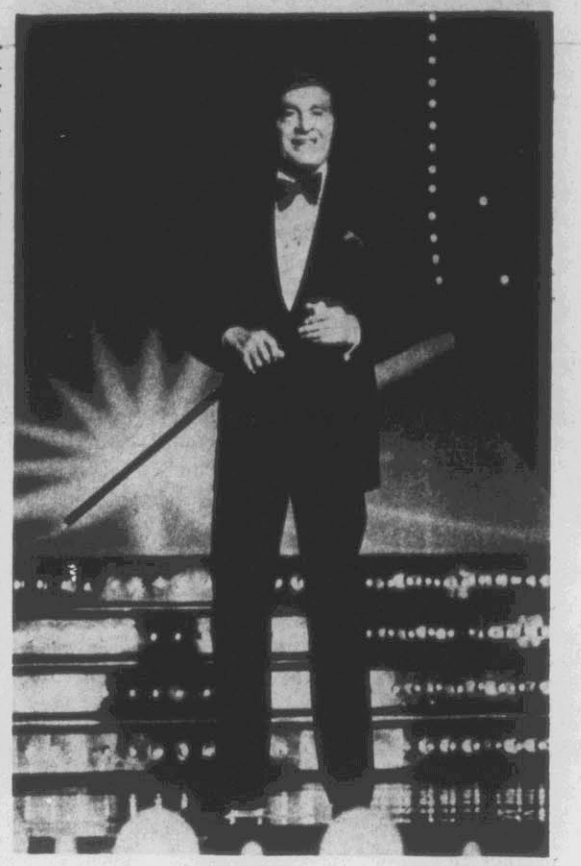
23 Pattern for Living



MASTER SHOWMAN Bob Hope, today still going strong at 76, stars with Robert Urich in "The Starmakers," Monday, March 17 (9-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

'Search' Launched

Bob Hope welcomes some of television's most popular stars — Robert Urich ("Vega$"), Robert Guillaume ("Benson"), Linda Gray ("Dallas"), Marie Osmond and comedian Gallagher — to "The Starmakers." The show, about a talent hunt to discover tomorrow's biggest star, airs Monday, March 17 (9 to 10 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

Another 'star' who'll be making a special appearance is none other than Sam the Chimp, from "BJ and the Bear."

Hope's done a number of 'book shows' in his 30 years on television, but this is his first since the successful telecast of "Joys!" in 1976. That special was a mystery/comedy about the disappearance of the world's greatest comedians during a party held at Hope's home.

In "Starmakers," Hope and Urich play partners in an agency that is going straight downhill. Their only chance to recover will be to find the star who'll be the next 'big thing' in Hollywood. An all-out search for this star of tomorrow is launched, and along the way, the two have humorous encounters with Gray, Guillaume, Osmond and Sam the Chimp.

Blakely Starring

Has Been Signed

Joanne Woodward has been signed to star in "Crisis at Central High." The three-hour motion picture for CBS focuses on the turbulent beginnings of school integration in Little Rock, Ark.

The project is based on the diary of Mrs. Elizabeth Huckaby, a vice principal at Central High School in that historic semester of September, 1957. Woodward will portray Mrs. Huckaby.

Reynolds Stars In 'W.W.'

Burt Reynolds plays a smooth-talkin' country boy who loves the country music, robbing gas stations and a girl named Dixie — three hobbies that keep him in heavy trouble — in "W.W. and the Dixie Dancekings." The comedy is encoring as The CBS Tuesday Night Movie, March 18 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Art Carney, Conny Van Dyke, Jerry Reed and Ned Beatty are co-starred.

W.W. Bright (Reynolds) is a good ole boy with a fondness for his fellow man who always shares the 'take' with the bewildered attendant when he robs a filling station. He also has a yen for a fetching woman called Dixie (Van Dyke) a country singer who's backed by a band called the Dancekings. W.W. met her on stage when he pretended to be a part of the group to avoid a highway patrolman who suspects — quite rightly — that W.W. is the robber of a local gas station.

After meeting the Dixie Dancekings, W.W. adds another goal to his list of ambitions and announces that he will make them all stars by calling his powerful friends in the Nashville music business. What his new friends don't know is that W.W. knows not one soul in the Nashville music business. (Needless to say, W.W. frequently veers from the truth.)

To finance the superstar future that lies just around the crooked corner for the Dancekings, W.W. knocks over — literally — another filling station. Since the oil company involved is not interested in supporting the arts in this manner, W.W. finds himself being tracked single-mindedly by a Fundamentalist preacher and part-time detective called Deacon John Wesley Gore (Carney). The Deacon is determined to prove that oil and W.W. don't mix — and he has two guns to back up his argument.

The simple secret behind Burt Reynolds' success is that his virility, sex appeal and easy-going, devil-may-care attitude is anything but an act. It's for real and genuine to the core.

Burt's first TV role was in "M Squad," which brought him to the attention of talent scouts, and it wasn't long before he was also playing other small roles. Then came a supporting role in the "Riverboat" series, which he left after 29 episodes. "I needed to play a variety of roles," he said at the time.

The role that changed his life as well as his career was in the 1970 feature film, "Deliverance." His sensational performance in the film, and his nude centerfold in Cosmopolitan turned him into an "overnight" superstar.

BURT REYNOLDS is the kindest, gentlest and most charming liar, cheat and thief around when he stars as a combination holdup man and patron of the country music arts in "W.W. and the Dixie Dancekings," the "CBS Tuesday Night Movie," March 18 (9-11 p.m.).

Here's The Doctor!

Most of us have seen films of a bygone era in which someone would be stricken ill in a theatre during a performance. And, inevitably, some melodramatic Samaritan would yell, "Is there a doctor in the house?"

Should this misfortune befall any cast member or guest of NBC-TV's "The Big Show" (seen Tuesdays, 9 to 10:30 p.m.), medical assistance will be available in the form of comedy ensemble regular Graham Chapman. On second thought, make that Dr. Graham Chapman.

Graham Chapman? One of the ringleaders of Britain's wacky, outrageous comedy troupe Monty Python? A man who accompanied his brother Pythons in the absurd film, "In Quest of the Holy Grail" and was almost deified as the title star of another, "The Life of Brian"? Surely a stethoscope to him would be nothing more than a stage prop in a doctor-nurse sketch.

Yes, the very same Dr. Chapman studied medicine at prestigious Cambridge University in England, followed by his internship in London's St. Bartholomew's Hosptial.

Sills Will Host Salute

In the past decade PBS has carved for itself a very special place in the history of the performing arts. And it has consistently presented a variety of programs and formats that could easily qualify it as the largest concert hall in the world.

As a salute to the many artists and performance centers who have helped popularize public television and have gained national popularity themselves, "Festival '80" will present "Gala" in its final marathon programming extravaganza, Sunday, March 16 (7:30 p.m.).

Beverly Sills, currently General Director of the New York City Opera and star of many public TV specials, will host "Gala," which was taped live before an invited audience at New York's Metropolitan Opera House. No one has contributed more to the marriage of public TV and the performing arts than Ms. Sills.

The evening's music will be provided by the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, conducted by its Music Director, James Levine.

The stars who will perform specially-selected pieces include Merrill Ashley, Placido Domingo, Cornell MacNeil, Natalia Makarova, Peter Martins, Luciano Pavarotti, Renata Scotto, Isaac Stern and Tatiana Troyanos. Other performers will be announced as they join the roster.

ABC Sues Estate

ABC-TV has filed a $500,000 suite against the estate of John Wayne, stating that the actor died before fulfilling contractual obligations to perform for the network.

ABC-TV says it payed $600,000 to Wayne shortly before his surgery in January, 1979, which revealed an inoperable cancer.

Karras Stars In Drama

Jimmy Butsicaris was 35 years old when his first and only son, Andre, came into his life. Andre Reynolds, street smart, trying to earn a living out a shoebox, was 10.

The story of the birth and development of their heartwarming father-son relationship is told in "Jimmy B. & Andre," to be presented on The CBS Wednesday Night Movies, March 19 (9 to 11 p.m.).

Alex Karras stars in the role of his old friend and business partner, Jimmy B. He saw this relationship develop from the beginning when the kid set up shop shining shoes outside Lindell A.C. — a Detroit hangout for local athletes.

The film highlights the period in the lives of Jimmy and Andre when each needed a change. Andre, fatherless, with problems at home, ventured into the streets to drum up work to help out his family. Jimmy B., a widower with three grown daughters, was in transition. He was successful, well-liked in the social world, but in need of something more in his life.

"Andre came to Lindell's with his shoeshine box, found out who the owner of the place was and got into his life," said Karras, who was also executive producer of the real-life drama. "It worked out, eventually. Jimmy's a street kid, too; and they were alike in many ways, especially in that they both had experienced some hard knocks."

ALEX KARRAS stars and Susan Clark is special guest star in "Jimmy B. & Andre," a new motion picture-for-television which airs as the CBS Wednesday Night Movie, March 19 (9-11 p.m.).

"The only difference," interjected Jimmy Butsicaris, "was that I had a mom and a pop. The kid didn't. And he's black. His mother was on drugs. His war-hero father was dead. I saw the kid heading for jail. That was his future. But I had this nagging feeling — he was different."

Andre struck a chord with Jimmy B., and there was something about the kid that reminded him of himself. "The kid just walked into Lindell's like he owned the place."

BUSY ACTRESS — Tina Andrews, who enjoys acting, writing, singing and dancing, portrays LeVar Burton's girlfriend (1) in "Billy: Portrait of a Street Kid," the second feature of the "CBS Late Movie," Wednesday, March 19 beginning at 11:30 p.m.

Acting Is Escape

Tina Andrews says she loves doing comedy. And heavy drama. She also has several writing projects in the works. But her big love is singing and dancing.

"What I am is hyper," she admits.

Tina, a petite, copper-skinned, compulsive talker who doesn't so much enter a room as bounces into it, is putting her enormous energy to good use these days.

One of her recent roles was that of LeVar Burton's girl friend in "Billy: Portrait of a Street Kid," encoring as the CBS Late Movie, Wednesday, March 19 (12:30 a.m.).

"What I like is heavy, heavy drama — a role that has nothing at all to do with what I'm like in real life. Then, if it turns out well, I really feel like I've accomplished something."

At 13, Tina dreamed of becoming a top ballerina. But after three years of training, her ankle was severely injured when a car door accidentally slammed into it and she had to forego ballet.

"So I re-channeled my energies toward acting, which came very naturally for me. Growing up, I was never particularly fond of myself, and I escaped with my dancing. It was as though I was someone else when I was dancing. I found the same escape acting."

Tina would still rather sing and dance than do anything: "I have an act that I'd love to do on talk shows or variety shows."

She also has written two half-hour comedy pilots and a television movie. "There's virtually nothing about middle-class blacks on television. So that's what I'm writing about — blacks that are neither rich nor poor."

For two years, Tina portrayed Valerie Grant on "Days of Our Lives" and followed that up with a role as a gutsy street girl in the TV movie "The Weekend Nun." Next she was cast as a tough reform school inmate in "Born Innocent."

On "Sanford Arms," she played a bright, bubbly, flippant type. "That kind of role is easy for me," she says. "I've been a comedienne all my life, joking and kidding around. So, with a part like that, I'm always basically playing myself."

But she's glad to 'get serious' where her roles are concerned. "I'm so glad to bust out of those little sister roles," she says. "I was beginning to develop terminal cuteness."

Series Renewed

One of ABC-TV's hit comedy series, "Three's Company," has been renewed for its fifth season.

The show's been a consistent winner, and is currently rated fourth in the Nielsens.

FRED KNOWS BEST? — McLean Stevenson (1) lends an ear to Fred Stuthman, his lovable odd-ball father in "Hello, Larry" (Wednesdays, 9:30-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV. In real life the 60-year-old Stuthman couldn't claim a son Stevenson's age.

Likes Old Roles

Most people bristle at being judged prematurely 'old,' but Fred Stuthman smiles at the idea. For the past decade, this 60-year-old character actor — with a face that's graced a thousand shows — built a career on senior citizen roles. And he relishes them!

"I have a ball playing oldsters, and I don't feel typecast because there are many different types of old people. Television does occasionally slip into stereotypes, and I steer clear of those," says the long (6 foot 4 inch), lean Stuthman, who protrays McLean Stevenson's spry 74-year-old dad on NBC-TV's "Hello, Larry."

"Many young actors fall into the standard trap of trying to affect age with a wobbly voice and walk, and they come off as artificial. Plenty of older people sound and move the same as anyone else."

Stuthman's TV oldsters include a crabby retiree in "One Day at a Time," a Georgia moonshiner in "Dukes of Hazzard" and a senior citizen from Dixie in "Carter Country." And he says he sympathizes, rather than identifies, with his character in "Hello, Larry" (seen Wednesdays, 9:30 to 10 p.m.). "He's different from your common, garden variety caricature of an oldster. Henry Alder has depth, wit, sensitivity and a hip view of the world," says the actor who was cast by producers unaware of his real age.

Having appeared on scores of TV shows, stage plays and films over the past decade, Stuthman has latched on to an abundance of offbeat parts which are his forte. He's been nude in the horror film, "The Sentinel," a priest in "Semi-Tough," Abe Lincoln in "American Historical Parade" and General Omar Bradley to his fellow University of California alumnus, Gergory Peck's "MacArthur."

"Thank heavens for show business!" Stuthman exclaims. "It gives one a wonderful opportunity to keep working long past the mandatory retirement age. You're not putting a younger person out of a job either," affirms the actor who in 1938 initiated his career in the community theatre of Long Beach, Calif., with his pal, Robert Mitchum. "Unfortunately, I got sidetracked pretty quick and segued into radio announcing several years later. I didn't earn my living acting full time again until 1971."

BRIAN GODFREY WILSON (front) and Jermain Hodge Johnson star as young boys growing up together in the rural South of the 1930's in the poignant dramatic series, "Palmerstown, U.S.A.," premiering with a special two-hour episode, Thursday, March 20 (8-10 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

'Palmerstown' Premieres

To some people, their childhood years were painful, a complicated time they want to forget. But for Alex Haley and producer Norman Lear, however, those formative years were some of the best days of their lives. In fact, both agree that they wouldn't mind reliving parts of their childhood.

Haley and Lear did the next best thing — they recreated their boyhood innocence and adventuresome spirit through "Palmerstown, U.S.A., a new dramatic series premiering Thursday, March 20 (8 to 10 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

The focus is on the loyal friendship between two boys — one black, the other white — and their families, tested by inevitable racial conflicts while living in the rural South in the 1930s. Starring as the youngsters, Booker T. Freeman and David Hall, are Jermain Hodge Johnson and Brian Godfrey Wilson, respectively.

It all started one evening when Lear and Haley met at a Hollywood party. "From the time we said hello, we had instant rapport," says Lear. "The rest of the evening we stood in a corner talking, and somehow our childhood adventures dominated the conversation."

The following week, Haley and Lear met for lunch and continued to tell each other of their boyhood experiences. But this time the stories told were intended to recreate those magical years for television. The men left the restaurant as co-executive producers venturing into a new project, with a new production company, Haley-T.A.T.

While "Palmerstown, U.S.A." is not biographical, the series, which is set in a small Southern town similar to Henning, Tenn. (Haley's hometown), simulates a historical and cultural experience for the 1980s. Lear, who was raised in Connecticut, feels viewers can identify with the series, no matter where they grew up. Lear's philosophy underlies the theme of the series — that two boys from distant backgrounds have many things in common.

"We tend to grow away from places and people who have produced us," says Haley, speaking of his personal delight that his background was incorporated into the show. For example, the title was taken from his middle name (Palmer), which is his grandfather's last name.

The relationship between the two boys in the new series is somewhat parallel to Haley's growing up with his best friend, also white. "Kermit and I ate together, slept together, and we even got spanked together," says Haley. Their friendship was broken, he notes, when Kermit innocently articulated society in saying, "Pretty soon, I'll be old enough and you'll have to start calling me 'Mister.'"

Lear, speaking of the friendship and love between the two boys in the series, says: "This is how life is supposed to be. I don't know how we got this world turned upside down."

Actor Harry Morgan, who plays Col. Sherman Potter in "M*A*S*H," will be featured in a role in "Roughnecks," a movie now being filmed in Texas. He's portraying Plug Champion, a driller exploring for geothermal energy.

He Loved Experience

BYRON ALLEN

If you're 18 years old and about to do your first live television show in front of millions of viewers, what thoughts run through your head?

Byron Allen, who debuted as co-host of NBC-TV's "Real People" last September, says he was very nervous. And, since it was such an exciting 'first' in his life, he decided to turn on a tape recorder and recorded his last-minute thoughts.

"I must have eaten a mile a minute," he recalls. "I consumed thousands of pounds of bread. When the phone rang I jumped. Then I'd call my friends and try to make them laugh.

"I'd done a couple of TV shows before, and I'd never been nervous. But the problem was that 'People' is LIVE...and it kinda' scared me.

"Also, I knew a lot of people were counting on me. The cast and crew, the staff, my family, and most importantly, myself. I didn't want to let anybody down, and I don't think I did," he continued.

Since that memorable night, Byron has traveled all over the country covering assignments for "Real People," and he's loved the experience.

"You read what's out there. And yet it's so strange to really go to all the different places.

"I think it's helped me a lot," he says, "and now I know who's out there and who I'm trying to entertain each week."

Byron was born in Detroit, but grew up in the Los Angeles area. He graduated from high school not quite a year ago and, in spite of his busy schedule, manages to attend a few classes at the University of Southern California.

When he was 14, he wrote material for Jimmie Walker and the late Freddie Prinze. With Walker's guidance, he has performed as a stand-up comic at such Los Angeles clubs as the Comedy Store, the Improvisation and Ye Little Club. He writes his own material, and says he keeps sharp by doing his routines at local banquets and conventions.

"Co-hosting 'Real People' is an experience I'll never forget," Allen says. "The show is great, and we've had a great season. It's a blockbuster, a smash, and I love it!"

Real Phenomenon

Two graceful, attractive, modest Japanese girls make up Pink Lady, the phenomenally successful recording act sharing the spotlight with comedian Jeff Altman in NBC-TV's new variety series, "Pink Lady and Jeff," seen Fridays (9 to 10 p.m.).

The Asian beauties, Mie and Kei (pronounced 'Me' and 'Kay'), have experienced a meteoric rise in the recording world since their August, 1976 hit Japanese record, "Pepper-Keibu" (Sergeant Pepper).

In Japan, which has a huge music market, the girls are superstars. They've had 14 consecutive top singles, among other honors, including the Japan Popular Song Award. They also made a movie — a science-fiction western adventure story — for the Japanese market and have even recorded, for American consumption, their version of "A Kiss in the Dark."

Last summer, 140,000 fans attended two outdoor concerts given by Pink Lady at Tokyo's Korakeum Stadium. Christmas of 1978 was marked by five sold-out concerts at Tokyo's 16,000-seat Budokan Hall. And their concert for UNICEF's Year of the Child benefit not quite a year ago brought 200,000 fans to Osaka, making it the largest event of its kind ever staged in Japan.

The girls, both 21 years old, attended the same junior high and high schools in Shizuoko City, Japan. Both studied at the Yamaha School of Music and began their careers by auditioning for a Japanese TV program called "Star Is Born."

'Alien' On ABC

ABC has purchased the broadcast rights to 20th Century-Fox' "Alien" for $12,000,000.

The network has also acquired "Hot Stuff," "Thank God It's Friday," "Skatetown USA," "The Fifth Musketeer" and additional runs of "The Way We Were."

These films are part of a group of 11 Columbia pictures for which ABC paid $60,000,000. Others previously announced are "Kramer vs. Kramer," "Chapter Two," "Midnight Express," "California Suite," "...And Justice for All" and "Tommy."

Keeping Track

Anne Meara, a regular on "Archie Bunker's Place," carries a dog-eared calendar notebook to keep track of her varied jobs as wife, mother, actress and businesswoman. She keeps it up-to-date on her coast-to-coast plane trips, commuting from home to Hollywood, where the series is taped.

"I catch the 'red-eye' after the show on Fridays and spend weekends in New York," she says. "Thank goodness I don't have trouble sleeping on airplanes."

Pike's Peek

CHARLIE PIKE

HOLLYWOOD — The rumors have run rampant regarding the possible replacement for SHELLEY HACK on "CHARLIE'S ANGELS," with such names as FARRAH FAWCETT and even BO DEREK being bantered about. However, it will be producers LEONARD GOLDBERG and AARON SPELLING who'll have the last say, and they've suggested to ABC that maybe it's time to bring the series to an end.

LONI ANDERSON will portray the late JAYNE MANSFIELD in the film biography. It's the third time someone has tried to sign Loni for the role. But this time she said 'yes' because, unlike the previous two times, there's no call for nudity.

Although ABC has finally moved "LAVERNE & SHIRLEY" back to its old time-slot following "HAPPY DAYS," the likelihood of the move salvaging the series is doubtful. Insiders say the move was made too late.

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES polled some 30 TV critics across the country soliciting their favorite 20 TV shows in order to compare the choices to the weekly Neilsen list. Predicatably, only M*A*S*H made the top ten of both lists. Otherwise, the critics' choices deleted such Neilsen winners as "THREE'S COMPANY," "MORK & MINDY," "HAPPY DAYS" and "THE DUKES OF HAZZARD."

When Southern California was inundated with rain and mud in mid-February DEBRALEE SCOTT OF "ANGIE" was one Hollywood celeb who discovered the real trauma of mud slides. A hillside across the street from her Sherman Oaks home oozed its way into Debralee's front yard, bringing a neighbor's automobile along with it. The car stopped three feet short of the actress' front door. Fortunately for Debralee, her Mercedes was parked in the garage and wasn't damaged.

Speaking of "ANGIE," if ABC's track record of 'removing' a show from its schedule is any indication, the series probably won't find its way back into primetime outside of maybe summer re-runs. The situation comedy apparently fell victim to the same problem that hit "RHODA" a couple of seasons ago when the star married her long-time boy friend — in the storyline, that is.

For those parents who've grown weary listening to the repetitive beat of disco music for all these many months, take note. It seems that even the likes of DONNA SUMMER is seeking material that's far removed from disco as more and more radio stations begin to shy away from the music. However, it's the 'new wave' of rock 'n' roll that appears to be the replacement.

Stars Speak Of Religion

Religion, romance, school experiences and sex education are among the topics covered in Tom Cottle's interviews with celebrities on this week's edition of NBC-TV's "Hot Hero Sandwich," Saturday, March 22 (noon to 1 p.m.).

In the segment devoted to religion, Hal Linden says that while his father did not go to the temple every week, he did provide a religious training, but he (his father) did not lecture me. And yet, somehow, I gleaned a philosophy from it."

Linden says that, while on location making a film, he tuned in to the first part of the "Holocaust" telecast and called his children to ask if they were watching. They were not.

"I don't even remember who it was that answered the phone...she said to me, 'What's a holocaust?,' and there I was dripping tears in Texas. I said, 'I don't believe it. Something went wrong somewhere.' There was no greater influence in my life than that event and what was going on with that event. Yet, somehow, I didn't get it over to the next generation. How did my father do it? How did he get me to feel what he felt without belaboring it, without lecturing? Somehow I had missed the boat in getting it over to my kids."

Terps Hope For Berth

The turnaround in this season's University of Maryland Terrapins has been called amazing and almost spectacular, and many observers pointed out several obvious reasons why.

For example, Albert King finally took his leadership role seriously and led the team in nearly every scoring and rebounding statistic. Some call him the best all-around player in the nation, but it wasn't until this season that he finally emerged from his shell.

Then there's Buck Williams, the redoubtable center who assumed the pivot position for the first time ever in the 1979-80 season. The 6-8 muscleman was in the top three of the ACC in rebounding in every game and was only outscored twice by opposing conference centers the entire season.

Of course, there's Ernest Graham learning to become more of a team player and not just a gun and Reggie Jackson's fine ball-handling abilities.

But the one that may epitomize the squad more than anyone else has probably been the one least written about: Greg Manning.

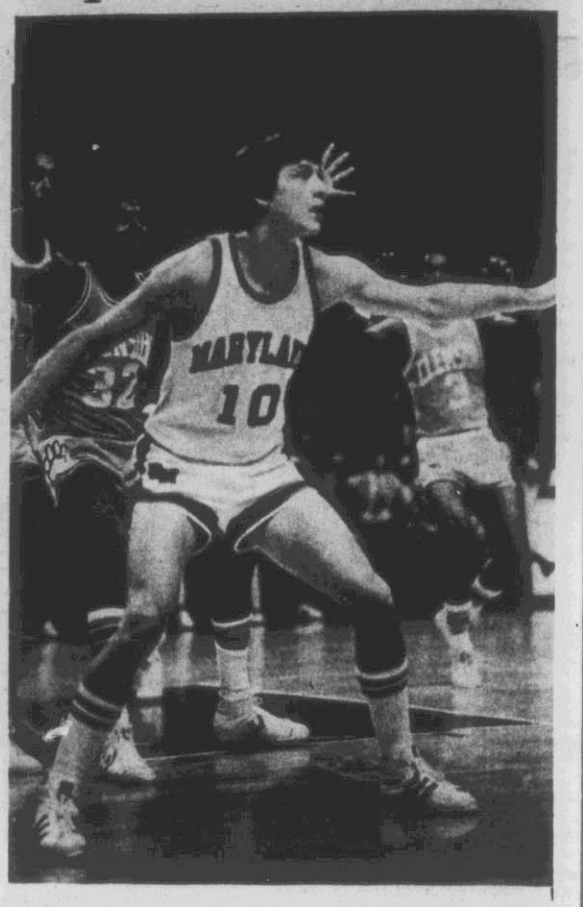
The Terps, winners of the ACC regular-season championship, hope to make it to the Eastern Regionals. NBC will telecast the finals on Sunday, March 16 (1 p.m.).

The Eastern final will originate from the Spectrum in Philadelphia. NBC will follow the telecast with the final in the Midwest, where some feel the strongest field is located.

Teams like Notre Dame, North Carolina, LSU and Louisville are in the Midwest fight, while N.C. State and Syracuse are in the East.

Manning is a classic jump shooter and is among the top percentage shooters from both the field and the foul line in the nation. He averaged better than 16 points per game and led the team in assists.

"Greg has been our starting guard for three seasons, but like a lot of our guys, he only became a standout this season," noted Lefty Dreisell. "We looked for him to have a great year with more confidence, and he didn't disappoint us."



GREG MANNING has been one of the quiet stars for the University of Maryland for three seasons, but the super guard enjoyed his best season in 1979-80 and he hopes to keep up the pace in post-season play. NBC will broadcast the Eastern Regional NCAA Basketball final Sunday, March 16 (1 p.m.) live from the Spectrum in Philadelphia. The final of the Midwest Regional will immediately follow.

CBS Televises Bout

Twenty-years-old is not a very easy age to accept defeat, especially after you have tasted the thrill of winning. But that's what happened to Wilfred Benitez last fall when the welterweight title holder lost his crown to Sugar Ray Leonard.

...ow it's back to the drawing board for the New York native who's now a resident of Puerto Rico as he tries to pick up the pieces and recapture the crown he thinks is rightfully his.

Benitez could take a step in the ...ght direction when he takes on ...rish' Johnny Turner in a special 10-round welterwieght bout on "CBS Sports Spectacular." The fight will be held Sunday, March 16 (1 p.m.).

Spring Training

Spring training for the nation's baseball teams is now underway in resorts across the Sun Belt. There's one camp in California, seven in Arizona, and 18 in Florida.

Supersonics Take On San Diego

Look among the NBA statistics and you won't find him in the leader columns. You can scan the sports pages of any leading sports or basketball magazine and you won't find a great deal about this uncelebrated player.

But Freddy Brown is practically a household name in Seattle, and that's because there are so many things he does for his championship team that doesn't even appear on a stat sheet.

The Seattle Supersonics, defending champions of the league and one of the founders of the 'new' concept in the NBA: (team ball and defense), take on San Diego when the "NBA on CBS" is broadcast Friday, March 21 (11:30 p.m.).

This special game will feature two of the hottest teams in the league. Both are in good positions to win their respective divisions.

A couple of years ago, the Supersonics were thought of as a talented and young group who still had to mature before entertaining any hopes of a championship.

But they wouldn't buy that, and neither would their only true veteran, Freddie Brown. Unknown to many fans, this invaluable sixth man has played in more games, scored more points, hit more winning shots at the buzzer and outhustled any Sonic who has ever worn the Seattle uniform.

Brown is the league's second-most accurate three-point goal shooter, hitting better than .400 from that outer limit. He passed the 10,000-point mark earlier in the season, a total achieved in nine seasons with the Sonics.

He also leads the team with 38 steals and has a club-topping 866 for his career. Need we say more?

But the task in front of the NBA champs won't be easy. First, they must beat the Los Angeles Lakers and the Portland Trail Blazers for the division title.

Then they will have to fight it out with the likes of the Boston Celtics, the Philadelphia 76ers and the Atlanta Hawks for the league title. All three teams are vastly improved and all three would love to knock off the favored Sonics for the title.

FREDDIE BROWN is one of the least publicized players on the super Seattle Supersonic championship team, but he leads the team in five career categories. Brown and the Supersonics will meet the San Diego Conquistadors when the NBA on CBS is televised Friday, March 21 (11:30 p.m.).

He's Riding High

Andy Bean has hit the PGA tour in a big way, but then that's not too difficult for a 6-4, 210-pound golfer from Georgia. Although he has only been on the tour for four seasons, Bean has already pocketed more than $600,000 and five victories.

To show how he has matured into one of the most feared chargers in the PGA, the 27-year-old had an off-season in 1979 but still managed to win in excess of $200,000.

Bean and a host of top golfers from all over the globe will be vying for first prize of $45,000 when CBS telecasts the final round of the Doral-Eastern Open Sunday, March 16 (4 p.m.).

With a total purse of $200,000, more than 50 pros will be entered. The tourney will originate from the Doral Country Club's Blue Course in Miami.

It was at Doral that Bean recorded his first tour victory back in 1976 after leading all four rounds over the famed Blue Monster course. He shot a sizzling 177 which included two 67's and turned 24 on the final day to hand himself a unique birthday present.

He went on to capture five tourneys in 1975, including the Kemper, Danny Thomas and western Opens, earning $267,241 for the year, good for third place on the money list.

"My main problem early on was my temperament," he admits. "I knew I had the game to play out here, but when I'd make a mistake I'd get hot at myself and that would make everything worse. "I wasn't able to manage my game."

But the fits of temper soon subsided and Bean's prominence in the golfing world steadily rose. He now is one of the most respected and well liked members of the PGA.

Last year was indicative of his ability. He cashed checks in 21 of 29 events he started. He finished second once, third three times and added the Atlanta Classic to his winning list, shooting an almost unheard-of 61 in the third round to take command.

NOW! EXTRA HOSPITAL PROTECTION DESIGNED TO FIT YOUR NEEDS!

EVEN IF YOU MAY HAVE A BASIC HOSPITAL PLAN, WITH TODAY'S COSTS, YOU NEED THIS ADDITIONAL COVERAGE.

Like most people, you probably realize that no hospital plan—no matter how comprehensive—covers all the bills. There are extra bills that we have to handle ourselves—some related to our treatment . . . others related to everyday costs like feeding and housing our families while we're away.

In the past, these costs have often been considered insignificant . . . something a family could easily handle. But with today's inflation, these costs are real. Real enough that they could conceivably drain your family savings if you're not prepared to pay them.

That's why it's vital that you consider this plan: Physicians Mutual provides cash protection over and above any basic hospital coverage you may now have . . . issued regardless of your current health or age. Even if you've been turned down before. Cash paid directly to you unless you tell us otherwise to help you pay bills that accumulate during hospitalization. Cash that may later mean the difference between getting through a crisis and having to look for help.

Physicians Mutual

This may very well be the most welcome news you've had in a long time ...

You have a chance right here and now to do something about the high cost of hospitalization -- a chance to protect your family and prevent financial problems. if something happens.

> How likely is it that you or someone in your family will go to the hospital? The American Hospital Association estimates that one family member out of every two families will have to go to the hospital in the next 12 months.

As a doctor, I've seen countless cases where a good supplemental hospital policy could have saved a financial crisis for a hospital patient and family.

That's why I think you will really welcome this chance to collect $900.00 a month ($30.00 a day) when you are hospitalized for a covered sickness or accident.

And it's so easy to enroll -- you'll find all of the details in this booklet. So don't hesitate ... enroll today to get the protection you need.

Sincerely,

Herbert H Davis, M.D.

Herbert H. Davis, M.D.
Chairman, Board of Directors

Board of Directors:
ROBERT A. REED, President — H. W. MC FADDEN, M.D. — DONALD J. PAVELKA, M.D. — EDMOND M. WALSH, M.D.

Now you can collect $900.00 a month— $210.00 a week—$30.00 a day for as long as you're hospitalized for a covered SICKNESS! ACCIDENT!

Pays 50% increased benefits for cancer or heart attack.

Pays you $900.00 a month ($30.00 a day) cash!
You'll collect $900.00 a month ($30.00 a day) for any covered sickness or accident beginning the very first day you are hospitalized. Protect yourself, your wife or your whole family. $30.00 a day equal benefits for all. Just pick the plan that meets your needs.

Pays you $1,350.00 a month ($45.00 a day) cash for cancer and heart attack!
Your daily benefits are increased 50% if you or any covered member of your family is hospitalized for cancer (including leukemia and Hodgkin's disease) or heart attack (acute myocardial infarction, coronary thrombosis, or coronary occlusion).

Pays you double benefits— $3,600.00 a month ($120.00 a day) cash for you and your wife!
Yes, that's a lot of money. But you'd need it. So under the Husband-Wife or All-Family Plan, you'll collect $3,600.00 a month ($120.00 a day) if you and your wife are both injured and hospitalized at the same time by the same or by different accidents.

You'll collect full cash benefits, $30.00 a day, for hospitalization due to pregnancy if your policy has been in force for 10 months. There's no added cost to you!

No waiting period for accidents or new sicknesses.
Remember, accidents and new sicknesses are covered immediately, the very day your policy is issued. You collect the first day and every day you're hospitalized for a covered sickness or accident.

Pays benefits direct to you.
Unless you tell us otherwise, cash benefits will be paid directly to you or someone named by you, and may be used for any purpose you wish. Furthermore, your benefits are not subject to state or Federal income tax.

There's no limit on the number of days for which you can collect cash benefits. You can be hospitalized as often as necessary and stay as long as you have to knowing that your $30.00 a day benefits cannot run out. Our plan will pay you benefits for as long as you're hospitalized. EVEN FOR LIFE!

Your policy is guaranteed renewable!
This is a very important point, because you want to be absolutely sure you'll have your protection when you need it. So for as long as you live and keep your policy in force, we guarantee never to cancel or refuse to renew your policy. No matter how much money you collect. No matter how often you go to the hospital.

What's more, we'll never raise your rates unless we do so for all policies like yours in your entire state. This means you can't be singled out for a rate increase.

Pays cash benefits in addition to any other insurance you have.
Remember, this is extra, supplemental protection created to help you take care of the bills your regular insurance doesn't cover. Your benefits are paid over and above any other insurance you may carry including Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Major Medical and Medicare. This policy is designed to help you make up the difference between your total hospital bill and what your other insurance will pay.

Pre-existing conditions (health problems that became evident or were medically treated before the effective date of the policy) are not covered for one year from the date the policy is issued. Half-benefits are paid for up to 4 weeks confinement due to mental disorder. Not covered: loss due to use of narcotics or intoxication; loss covered by Workmen's Compensation or Employer's Liability Laws. Confinement in nursing homes, Federal hospitals, or the self-care, extended-care or convalescent units of hospitals is not covered. Pregnancy is covered after your policy is 10 months old.

You cannot be refused this extra protection for any reason.
As soon as we receive your Application, we will issue your policy (P350/360 Series) and put it in force. We guarantee it! You cannot be denied this insurance for any reason. You're covered for new sicknesses and accidents from the minute we put your policy in force, even before you receive it in the mail. Of course, we can issue you only one policy on this guaranteed basis.

And if you're already a Physicians Mutual policyowner and would like information about the additional protection available to you, please write for details.

We sincerely believe that this coverage is one of the best values on the market today. It offers a combination of cash benefits and policy features designed to help you cope successfully with today's soaring cost of hospital care—and at a cost most Americans can afford.

After you've considered the other plans, we believe you'll agree with us: that the Physicians Hospital Cash Benefit Plan is one plan you can really depend on to help provide the additional hospital protection you need today!

Three important guarantees by Physicians Mutual

1. We guarantee to issue this insurance regardless of your age, health or family size.
2. For as long as you live and keep your policy in force, we guarantee never to cancel or refuse to renew your policy.
3. We guarantee to refund your money if, for any reason, you decide you do not want this protection, and you return your policy within 30 days.

NOTE: Your renewal rate does not increase as you move from one age group to another.

PEOPLE 65 AND OVER ARE ALSO PROTECTED . . .

When you are 65, you'll find help for hospital care in many forms. Medicare, Social Security, special agencies, and perhaps a pension plan. But because people in this age group go to the hospital more often, this extra help is frequently not enough.

In addition to Medicare, you'll be receiving cash benefits from Physicians Mutual . . . to fill the financial void created by your illness. During the first 60 days of hospitalization —when Medicare coverage is highest—you collect half benefits.

After 60 days of hospital care—when Medicare coverage reduces and you need help most—you will be paid full cash benefits. No matter how long the hospital visit!

We've found that most folks over 65 prefer this approach . . . because your monthly premiums do not increase after you turn 65.

It's also important for you to know that you will be covered for cancer, heart attack, stroke, hernia, disease or disorder of the prostate, tuberculosis, cataracts, emphysema, cirrhosis or diabetes if your hospital confinement commences more than six months after the effective date of your policy.

Now a hotline for waste haters.

FOR ELMER B. STAATS, Comptroller General of the United States

How are public funds most misused? — R. Barney, San Antonio, Texas

● When people talk about waste in government programs, they are often talking about different things. Depending on one's perspective, an entire program can be viewed as a waste of government funds or as extremely important. Even if there is general agreement that a particular program is necessary, waste may result from a number of factors: mismanagement of a well-designed program; poorly designed programs without adequate safeguards and controls; and waste from continuing programs after they have outlived their usefulness. The General Accounting Office has opened a Fraud Hotline to report allegations of misuse of Federal dollars. We have received well over 7,000 calls in the year the Hotline has been in operation. The toll-free number is (800) 424-5454.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

I hear there's an incredible story surrounding Ina Balin's adoption of Vietnamese orphans. Do you know what it is? — G.B., Wilmington, N.C.

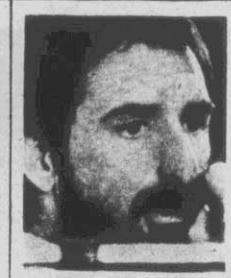
● Ina made the first of her many trips to Vietnam in 1967, when she toured military hospitals. Her desire to adopt an orphan came through her association with Betty Tisdale, an American, who spent eight years of her annual vacations working at an orphanage in Saigon. The fact that Ina was not married made adoption difficult. She was at the orphanage, working with Betty, when they got word to evacuate all children under 10 to Georgia. By the time that massive feat was accomplished, Ina had three — not one — orphans under her wing. It no longer mattered that she was single. The evacuation was a nightmare. This saga is now being filmed with Ina Balin, to be shown on TV in the fall.

Ina Balin, with orphans of the storm.

SYLVIA SIDNEY, star of MCA-TV, Universal's The Gossip Columnist

When you were a top movie star in the 1930's, were you treated kindly by the gossip columnists? —E.K., Harrisburg, Pa.

● Kindly? They roasted me so much that I always felt well done. I must say that, although I did give them a lot to write about, my antics — which caused such waves half a century ago — wouldn't even cause a ripple of excitement today. I'll never forget how they treated me.



FOR BOB GIRALDI, director of TV commercials

What problems can there possibly be in an ad that only runs for a few seconds? — E.B., Little Rock, Ark.

● When people see a single-take commercial on TV, a commercial that runs for 30 seconds, they usually assume that this type of commercial is the easiest to make. Not so. A commercial that runs for 30 seconds is, in fact, the most difficult to make. The talent involved must perform the same script repeatedly for an entire day. The director and clients criticize each take and wearily do it over and over.

FOR PRINCE CHARLES

Are you going to give up polo playing because of public pressure? — B.D., Sacramento, Calif.

● No. Although I'm not a skillful player, I intend to keep at it until I'm at least 50 — that's when my father gave it up. Or I shall go on as long as I bounce when I fall off, which I still do. Time to stop is when bouncing stops because that's when the bones get brittle and more inclined to break. I enjoy the game tremendously, even though there are times when I feel sheer terror while playing, but that adds to the excitement.

FOR PRISCILLA PRESLEY

Since you dealt with "superstars" when you ran your boutique in Beverly Hills, I'd like to know if they're any different from "ordinary" women when they go shopping. —M.M., Yuma, Ariz.

● They're not different at all. They have no idea which style suits them best and need a second opinion. Cher sticks out most in my mind because she is an impulsive shopper. She'd come in to buy one item and, more often than not, walk out with an armful of clothes.

FOR JUDITH KRANTZ, author of Scruples

Have you had any adverse reaction to all the name-dropping in your book? — M.P., Council Bluffs, Iowa

● No. In the first place, if I use the name of a real person, it's someone I know personally and I've asked them for permission to do so, or else, it's someone who's a household word and enjoys seeing his or her name in print. The responses from those I have mentioned are not nearly as amusing as the responses from those people who believe themselves to be the models for the characters in the book.

FOR JAMES GALWAY, flutist

How did you get interested in the flute? — J.M., Waco, Texas

● I've been obsessed with it since childhood. As a descendant of a long line of Irish musicians, there were always instruments lying around our house — accordions, tinwhistles, flutes. I suppose I picked on the flute because it seemed the easiest to handle. In our house, if all those instruments weren't in use, then someone in the family was singing. We always made our own entertainment.

PRO AND CON

Should Federal Judges Be Appointed for a Definite Term Instead of Life Tenure?

PRO Rep. Henry J. Hyde (R.-Ill.) member, House Judiciary Committee

Yes. Federal judges, being only human, are sometimes ineffective or incompetent. We need an effective means of removing those who don't measure up, other than the burdensome impeachment process. A 12-year-term, for example, would be long enough to insulate judges from political interference — the first criticism one hears — while at the same time assuring the public that intemperate and incompetent judicial behavior will not be tolerated indefinitely. In 1951 the 22nd Amendment limited a President to two terms, setting a precedent of sorts. A constitutional amendment limiting the tenure of Federal judges would be a clear signal that they must be held accountable for their conduct.

CON Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier (D.-Wis.) chairman, House Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts

No. The Founding Fathers, in the U.S. Constitution, expressly provided for the lifetime tenure of Federal judges. I strongly agree with the wisdom of that decision, which is of more importance today than it was 200 years ago. Basically, the promise of lifetime tenure attracts extremely qualified individuals to the judiciary. Further, once on the bench, judges are insulated from powerful political and economic pressures. It also provides them with the necessary independence to decide complex and emotional cases in an ever-changing society. Lastly, judicial tenure provides the weaker and more passive third branch with a check on the excesses of the more political legislative and executive branches.

Helping Jail-Bait Kids Go Straight

More kids are committing serious crimes than ever before. There's no easy answer to the problem. But giving these kids a look at prison life from the inside may be one way to keep them out.

By Kevin Hackett

One of the most disturbing developments in the United States during the past decade has been the phenomenal increase in juvenile delinquency. Just 15 years ago juveniles were involved in less than 20 percent of all the serious crimes in this country. Today nearly half of all serious crimes are committed by someone under the age of 18.

Law-enforcement authorities, social workers and judicial officials are constantly searching for solutions, but juvenile delinquency is a complex problem with no simple solutions. One new — and highly controversial — approach to dealing with the juvenile-delinquency problem entails exposing juveniles to life at state prisons and city and county jails. Authorities theorize that by giving youths a firsthand look at life behind bars, they are taking measures to ensure that the youths won't end up there.

Programs of this type have sprung up across the country in recent years. The most famous is the Juvenile Awareness Project conducted at Rahway State Prison in New Jersey, which won nationwide attention after it was the subject of the 1979 Oscar and Emmy award-winning documentary film, Scared Straight. The film depicts members of Rahway's Lifers Group — inmates serving long sentences for serious crimes — presenting juveniles with a frightening picture of prison life. The youngsters are subjected to a barrage of threats, challenges and obscenities from the prisoners, and by the end of the film the youths are visibly shaken by their experience. The objective is to scare the youths so badly that they'll make sure by their behavior they won't come back.

Today, however, the Rahway program is in limbo. It has drawn sharp criticism for its negative, abusive approach to the juvenile-delinquency problem. And its effectiveness also has been questioned. James O. Finckenauer, a professor of criminal justice at Rutgers University, released a study he made of a group of juveniles who went through the program and a control group of youths who didn't. The youths in both groups were comparable as to sex, race, age, criminal record and "delinquency probability." This study revealed that 41 percent of those who went through the prison program committed an offense within six months. Only 11 percent of the control group committed an offense within the same six-month period.

Some experts hold that scaring youths just isn't the best way to attack juvenile delinquency. "We are very skeptical of the benefits of these types of programs. We don't recommend them," says Harry Boggs of the National Council on Crime and Delinquency. "We believe in more positive programs such as job-training. High unemployment among teen-agers is a major cause of delinquency. We need to attack the social issues. No matter what the short-term effect is of these prison programs, the juveniles must still go back and deal with bad conditions in their own communities."

The Juvenile Awareness Project at Rahway has been suspended and is currently being reevaluated. Its future is uncertain. There are, however, juvenile programs at other prisons that have the same intent as Rahway's — to convince juvenile delinquents to change their ways — but with a considerably different approach. For instance, prisoners at California's San Quentin Prison have participated in a juvenile-offender program for 15 years. But it involves more of a big-brother approach than the use of scare tactics.

The fact that programs like these are sometimes lumped in the same category with Rahway's is distressing to both prison officials and the prisoners who participate in the programs. One of those concerned with the negative image is Chuck Anthony, director of rehabilitation at the Idaho State Penitentiary. Anthony oversees the Idaho program called JAIL (Juvenile Awareness of Institutional Life). "The JAIL program is not a Rahway type of program," Anthony emphasizes. "This program was developed using bits and pieces from other programs we studied.

"The problem with the Rahway program," Anthony continues, "is that there is a lot of role-playing. It's a put-on at times. Our approach is to present the way life is at an institution. Rahway uses shock therapy. We use reality therapy."

All of the juvenile offenders who participate in the JAIL program have been referred by juvenile-court judges. Parental permission is also required before the youths can participate. Part of the program's reality therapy is to process the youths as if they were incoming prisoners. They are met at the gates by two prison guards who let them know immediately who's in charge. Each of the youths is searched and then led single file into a building called the Reception and Diagnostic Unit (RDU).

Inside the RDU, the youths are ordered not to talk and to face a concrete wall. One by one they are led to a shower. They wash, are sprinkled with delousing powder and change into white coveralls. Next they troop into an adjoining room where they are assigned numbers and their mug shots are taken.

A tour of the medium and maximum security cell blocks follows. The inmates enjoy hazing the juveniles as they tour the area. Whistles and catcalls follow them everywhere. In medium security, the prisoners aren't locked in their cells, so many of them stop to talk to the youths while on their way to the prison mess hall or a work detail. "I'm in for robbery and I ain't proud of it," an inmate says to one of the juveniles. "I've got six more years to go. You'll be here before I get out if you keep it up." In maximum security the inmates, locked in their cells, turn away from their TV's or magazines to "greet" the youths. The juveniles stand mutely before the inmates, occasionally offering one-word answers to their questions.

After lunch in the prison mess hall comes the therapy session. The juveniles walk into a dim, green conference room. Sitting there in a circle is a melting pot of the prison population. A young black, a Chicano, an Indian, and four whites. Their ages range from early 20's to mid-50's. Four of them are convicted murderers; two are in for armed robbery; one has been convicted of rape.

The ways in which this session differs from the session depicted in Scared Straight are noticeable immediately. The film showed the Rahway prisoners sitting on a stage, the juveniles seated before them. The inmates took turns standing above the youths, lecturing loudly, obscenely and forcefully. The JAIL approach is to have the juveniles and prisoners seated alternately in a circle. They are relaxed. There is little shouting. They sip coffee and speak up when they have something to say. It isn't one-sided, either. The youths are encouraged by the prisoners into discussing their emotions and problems.

For the next three hours the inmates review the prison facts of life. You don't have the rights that you do on the outside. You have no protection. Homosexuality is a part of many prisoners' lives, whether they like it or not. It's a brutal, degrading, lonely life.

"You don't have a friend in here," says one of the prisoners. "There's no sympathy, no compassion. There's no love in this place. I've never heard anyone say, 'I love you.'"

During the session each juvenile is dealt with individually. The youths attempt weakly to explain their criminal actions. The inmates stress that it's too late for them, but not for the juveniles.

Some of the youths break down and cry during the session. When the session is done, they are all anxious to leave. "If we can only save one out of 50 of the kids who comes through here, then it's still worth it," says a prison guard. "I have a boy of my own that is about their age, and I'd hate to see him wind up here."

Has this program been successful? Of the 37 youths studied from the JAIL program, 18 have been involved in some way with the police since leaving the program; 19 have not. Though JAIL doesn't provide all the answers for some youths, it does point out which direction is the wrong one. FW

Despite Rumors of a Split, Fleetwood Mac Is Rockin' High

It may be the winter of discontent for the rock business, but with their hot, new album, Tusk, Fleetwood Mac is proving to be a group for all seasons — and all tastes.

Sam Emerson

By Mary Rourke

If ever a rock group thrived on catastrophe, that group is Fleetwood Mac. They have been through everything from romance troubles to problems with religious cults, but this kind of adversity has bound the five-member band together by more than mere music.

In keeping with their reputation, Mac finds itself again faced with a serious challenge now that they have released their latest album, Tusk. Pop music is in the midst of a revolution, and Mac's double album, closer to folk than raw-edged rock, doesn't bear much resemblance to the New Wave sound on the scene. With the coming of strong young rockers like Blondie, The Knack and The Cars, Mac's immediate future may well be rife with more trials and tribulations.

But undoubtedly the group will weather trouble as well as they've done in the past. Clearly, they have all wanted success very much. Mick Fleetwood, the group's drummer, and John McVie, the bass guitarist (for whom the group is named) struggled toward it together for 10 years. Both were members of a bluesey jazz band and broke away to form their own act. But every time they managed to pull a group together it would fall apart. The most devastating collapse came in 1970 when two guitarists, Peter Green and Jeremy Spencer, were spirited away by religious cults.

Fleetwood and McVie forged on, however, and added Christine Perfect McVie (John's wife) to the group to play keyboard, sing and write. Then McVie heard a tape of a folk duo — Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie (Stephanie) Nicks — who were working in the San Francisco area and having a hard time figuring out what to do next. McVie had a definite idea about what their next move should be: He had the two groups join forces. Thus, Buckingham became Mac's guitarist and Nicks the main singer/songwriter. Finding a musical style that they all felt comfortable with required months of searching and experimenting. Nicks recalls: "We sat in a room for weeks and weeks with nothing but our songs until we got the sound right." But it was all worthwhile.

Their sound today is something closer to folk than blues or jazz. Its beauty derives from the strong, intricate vocals and rich harmonies which are reminiscent of two top California groups from the 1960's — The Mamas and Papas and The Beach Boys. Mac's first landslide success was the 1975 album, Fleetwood Mac, followed in 1977 by the phenomenal hit, Rumours, which has sold more than 13 million copies worldwide and also won five Grammy awards.

On stage, the group's focal point is Stevie Nicks. She swoops and swirls, clad in dripping chiffon, belting her songs about witches, angels and sisters of the moon. Now that she has reached the enormous success she earlier craved, she claims to be disenchanted with it. "I'm quite tired of being a rock 'n roll star," she admits. "Being in Fleetwood Mac is like being in the army. I never have any privacy. It isn't fun the way I thought it would be. I get ill or nervous before a performance. You can call in sick to any other job, but you can't call in sick to Fleetwood Mac." (The group did tone down its concert schedule though, to protect Nicks's fragile voice.)

Part of her disenchantment may have to do with the romantic turmoil in which she and other group members have found themselves. Three years ago she and Buckingham broke off a long-time relationship. At about the same time, John and Christine, who had been married for 10 years, broke up, while Mick Fleetwood was also struggling through his own marriage separation. All of the emotional turmoil went on in the midst of recording Rumours and rather than separate their lives from their music, Fleetwood Mac decided to sing their immediate feelings for the new album. Says Lindsey Buckingham, "Rumours was our soap opera album. No wonder it sold so well."

Two of the group's members, the McVies, have made their peace. John has remarried, and Christine explains, "I had to decide, either I'll be lonely or I'll damn well adapt." She chose to adapt and has made a new life together with Beach Boy Dennis Wilson. Nicks and Buckingham, however, have yet to resolve their feelings. On Tusk, Buckingham's songs are angry and filled with undercutting lines like "You're never gonna make it, baby."

Rumors abound that Nicks will leave the band to launch a solo career. She denies it. This year, however, she will star in a movie version of her song, "Rhiannon." It tells of a Welsh witch who gives up her power to be with her earthly lover.

The threat of Nicks's departure comes at a time when critics are wary of Mac's future in general. With the emergence of the tougher, grittier New Wave sound, Mac's softer, slicker style could fall out of fashion. While most critics greeted the double disc Tusk with applause, Rolling Stone magazine (the most powerful rock-music journal) was more cautious. Reviewer Stephen Holden wrote that Tusk could symbolize "the limits of the California studio sound."

But some of the cuts on the album — the doing of Buckingham — show signs of response to the New Wave rock. "If New Wave influenced me, it is in a very positive way," says Buckingham. "It expresses things I've been feeling but haven't had the nerve to do until now."

Whatever the group's future, however, Mick Fleetwood, for one, believes that the band can hold firm. He claims that earlier traumas have only made them stronger. "If you go through sticky situations together and see them through as adults, things can only get better," he says. "I realize we have been through potential disasters. But we're still here. Like passengers on an ocean liner that's been torpedoed. We're still here." FW

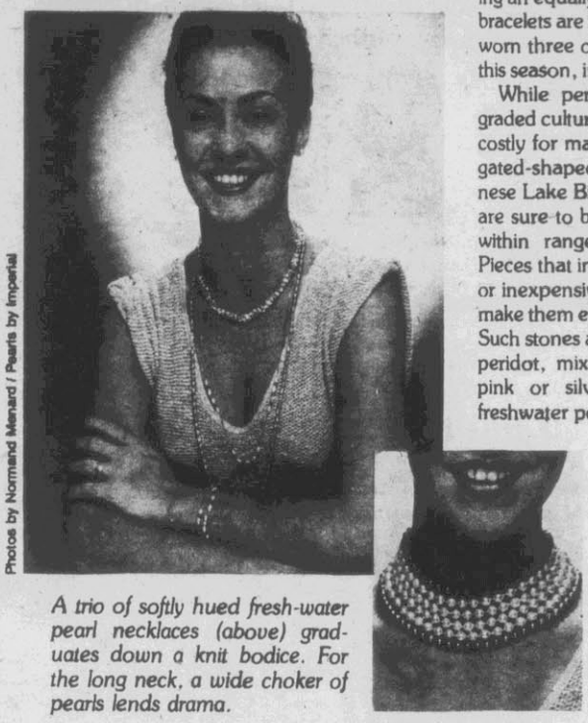
The New Jewelry You Can Afford

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Costume jewelry is getting to look more like the "real McCoy" every season. The reason: finer craftsmanship and design understatement — qualities that help achieve the aura of luxury in moderately priced gold-fashion jewelry, ranging from $20 to $100.

This season, imitation diamonds and rhinestones are used sparingly and tastefully to give the illusion of the real thing in bar pins, pendants and earrings. Pearls are back dramatically in new, less expensive cultured varieties. And the gold rush that started several seasons ago is still continuing strong. Costume jewelry copies gold karat jewelry but adds its own dimension in a host of geometric designs, zodiac symbols and initials.

"One of the most popular single items women want," according to Kae McCulloch of the Jewelry Industry Council, "is the tiny earring for pierced ears, with a small flashing stone." There are imitation diamond earrings available this season that look so real they will leave people wondering: Does she or doesn't she wear diamonds? The same rich effect is achieved with a small, brilliant stone worn as a pendant.



Photos by Normand Menard / Pearls by Imperial

A trio of softly hued fresh-water pearl necklaces (above) graduates down a knit bodice. For the long neck, a wide choker of pearls lends drama.

To work with your more casual clothes, new enamel and bead jewelry is eclipsing the usual pastel shades in favor of vivid blues, reds and greens, just slightly toned down — with black and white shades striking an equally strong note. Bangle bracelets are important, too, when worn three or four at a time, but, this season, in constrasting colors.

While perfectly matched and graded cultured pearls may be too costly for many, the odd or elongated-shaped Chinese and Japanese Lake Biwa freshwater pearls are sure to bring the new jewelry within range of most budgets. Pieces that intersperse gold beads or inexpensive stones with pearls make them even more affordable. Such stones as malachite, onyx or peridot, mixed with the delicate pink or silver-hue of Chinese freshwater pearls, make a charming contrast.

Mobes — pearls cultured against the oyster shell and cut out — lend their dome shapes to interesting rings and earrings, while many of the odd shapes of fresh-water pearls are also used to enhance the design of pins.

Still relatively new on the fashion scene are the little seed or "keshi" pearls. These are natural Oriental pearls that are by-products of oysters that have been treated to grow cultured pearls. "Keshi," in Japanese, means small flower seed, and they are about the size of a poppy seed. Since they are so tiny, they are used in multistrands — six to 20 or more.

Gone is the emphasis on perfectly round pearls, and the less expensive, irregularly shaped freshwater pearls have come into their own.

When it comes to selecting the right jewelry for yourself, keep these tips in mind: A small woman can wear the most delicate pieces. But she can make herself look taller with necklaces that are pointed at the front, with pins worn high on her shoulder, with moderate-length drop earrings. Narrow bracelets will accentuate delicate looks. A tall woman will look sensational in dramatic jewelry: bib necklaces, heavy chains, wide bracelets, long or wide earrings, large pins.

A short neck gains length with a long necklace, while a long, swanlike neck can carry high-riding choker necklaces and strands grouped together at the neckline.

Whatever your figure, remember this: You don't need a fortune to own some of the richest looking pieces of fashion jewelry to come along in many a year. FW

Family Report By Norman Lobsenz

Why Chores Are Good for Kids

Asking children to help with household tasks can be an important factor in their psychological development, says Dr. Alice Rossi, a family sociologist at the University of Massachusetts. In a recent speech Rossi said that parents who teach youngsters how to do "well and creatively" a wide range of home chores are providing them with "one of the best preparations for adulthood."

Among the things children can do, Rossi says, are cleaning pots and pans, wiping smudge marks off walls, feeding the cat or dog and helping to prepare and cook meals. Carrying out assigned chores gives children a sense of mature gratification, Rossi asserts. "To feel needed and useful is as important as to feel loved," she says.

Sleeping Well

Sleeping in separate beds may give husbands and wives more room to stretch out and more freedom to toss and turn without disturbing each other, but it may be a psychological loss, according to experts at the Sleep Disorder and Research Center at Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago. Women are lighter sleepers than men and more sensitive to noise and movement, and sharing a double bed deprives them of the important "deep sleep" phase that helps to restore energy and the sense of being well rested. But on the other hand, couples who use a double bed seem to dream more. And dreaming, as studies have shown, is very important to mental health.

Family Forecast: Less Change, More Stability

Between now and the year 2000, family life will have a chance to recover from the stresses produced by the rapid changes of the past 20 years, predicts population expert Dr. Paul C. Glick. In a preview of future trends, Glick forecasts:

- A stable birth rate. The decline in births has gone about as far as it can go; yet the birth rate will not rise significantly, even if women who have been postponing pregnancy decide to have children.
- Young adults will continue to put off marriage until they are older. Perhaps one out of every 12 persons now in their 20's may never marry.
- The number of women who work outside the home will slowly taper off. This slackening in the number of female workers will be largely due to the low birth rate of the past two decades, since there will be fewer women seeking jobs.
- With smaller families and longer life expectancies, married couples will live as a "child-free twosome" about 14 years longer than their parents did.
- Though the number of one-parent households will continue to increase, seven out of every eight persons will still be part of the "nuclear" family (father, mother, kids). Though the latest available statistics show that 19 percent of children under 18 live with only one parent, turning that figure upside down reveals the more encouraging fact that four out of five youngsters live with both parents.
- The number of young men and women living together as unmarried couples is still small, but it is increasing. Yet, "the vast majority will eventually marry and settle down," says Glick.
- The long-time upward trend in divorce is slowing down. Whereas the divorce rate doubled between 1966 and 1976, the increase in 1979 was only about 2 percent. The rate may actually decline in the 1980's as a result of the smaller number of men and women reaching traditional marrying age. Glick summarizes all these statistical trends with an optimistic conclusion: "Families, in one form or another, will go on." FW

THROUGH A CHILD'S EYES

After a service one Sunday, while my minister husband was greeting people at the back of the church, our 4-year-old daughter was busily engaged in her own personal investigation of the sanctuary. Her wanderings led her through the pews, down the aisles and eventually up into the choir loft. Later, she came running to her father, exclaiming, "Daddy! Daddy! I saw you down from up!"

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

Do Passive People Commit the Worst Crimes?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. People you'd never suspect of harboring thoughts of violence are more likely to commit murder and mayhem than people who look and act as though they were capable of such deeds.

2. Homicide is associated with close interpersonal ties.

3. In homicides committed by people who, up to the fatal moment, have always been law-abiding citizens, there are ways in which the victim often contributes to the situation, resulting in his own destruction.

4. Many a criminal would never be apprehended and brought to justice if it were not for the subtle traps set by the culprit's unconscious mind.

5. Despite the constant threat of being apprehended and sent to prison or slain while resisting capture by police, criminals are much less given to worry and anxiety than the rest of us.

6. In spite of the frequency with which homes are burglarized, most people — even in high-crime neighborhoods — don't feel burglary prevention is their responsibility and don't take even the most reasonable precautions, such as installing and using adequate locks.

ANSWERS

1. True. Studies at the California School of Professional Psychology on personality differences between men who engage in violent and nonviolent criminal behavior show that the individual you need most to look out for is the type who gives the impression of being meek, mild and inoffensive, rather than the rough, tough, loud-spoken type. For it was found that "extreme acts of violent behavior tend to be done by the more passive, submissive, introverted, ectomorphic type of offender. More dominant, aggressive, athletic men, on the other hand, tend to commit acts of less severe violent behavior."

2. True. University of Pennsylvania studies, evaluating the findings of leading researchers, show that the "data all indicate that homicidal violence is associated with close interpersonal ties (friends, relatives, neighbors of long standing)." And George Washington University studies on who kills whom indicate that "some acts of violence against people one knows intimately seem to result from long-term frustration in which one person is submissive without displaying overt hostility, while the so-called victim is actually the more brutal or sadistic partner. Eventually the victim may provoke the more passive partner into overreacting with extreme violence."

3. True. University of California experts examined the organization and development of a specimen group of 70 confrontations between individuals in the general population that ended in murder. It was concluded on the basis of this research that many homicides do not appear as a one-sided event with an unwitting victim assuming a passive, noncontributory role. Rather, such murders were found to be "the outcome of a dynamic interchange between the person who commits the act and the victim ... The offender and the victim develop lines of action shaped in part by the actions of the other and focused toward saving face and reputation and demonstrating character. The participants develop a working agreement, often explicit, that violence is a useful tool for resolving questions of face and character." Thus, as other studies cited show, "Many victims either directly precipitate their destruction by throwing the first punch or firing the first shot, or contribute to the escalation of some conflict which concludes in their demise."

4. True. Studies conducted by behavioral scientists from two universities (University of Illinois and University of Colorado) show that the unconscious mind is responsible for much otherwise unexplainable behavior and is motivated by processes that are often in conflict with our conscious desires — losing objects, making embarrassing slips of the tongue, breaking things (including our bones) seemingly by accident. Other examples include unconsciously prompted behavior patterns such as the brilliant student who fails exams, the person who is always going to get married but never gets as far as the altar, and — not infrequently — the criminal who trips himself up so neatly that he is apprehended with little or no effort by the police. A typical example of the latter is evidenced in the police report of a man who was arrested because he dropped his wallet containing his identification during a robbery.

5. True. A United States International University (Calif.) study, comparing the anxiety levels of criminal and noncriminal populations, showed that "the anxiety scores (on standard anxiety inventory tests) of convicted male felons are significantly lower than the anxiety level scores of a matched noncriminal group."

6. True. In studies conducted by investigators from Harvard University and City University of New York, it was found that "an overwhelming majority of subjects (from a variety of neighborhoods, ranging from 'high crime' to 'safe,' and including both burglarized and nonburglarized people) believed that burglary prevention was the responsibility of others — landlord, building superintendent, etc. — and as such, they did not take overt precautionary measures themselves." For example, it was found that the large majority of respondents, including those who had been burglarized, did not bother to use all their locks on doors. FW

Observations

Tale of two cities. Boston and New Orleans—both rich and exciting towns—are as different as codfish and crawfish. Boston is the most expensive city in the continental U.S. for middle-income living, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics; New Orleans is cheaper than average. Why the difference? One big reason: energy. And that matters to the whole country.

Hard times. New England relies heavily on high-cost oil (and has none of its own) for heating and for generating power, while the U.S. as a whole uses more coal and natural gas. That's a key factor in New England's high cost of living, and it helps explain why Boston's electric bills surged upward at more than twice the national rate last year. Yet energy exploration in the Georges Bank, off Massachusetts' coast, was delayed for a full year—putting off New England's chance at what federal experts guess might total 123 million barrels of oil and 870 billion cubic feet of natural gas. The major environmental fear: oil development might hurt fishing.

A novel twist. Fishing is important to Louisiana, too, but what's happened to the Gulf of Mexico after decades of oil-gas development? Better fishing, say state officials—consistently larger catches over the past 30 years. Seems the offshore rigs act like reefs, where fish like to hang out. Matter of fact, it's healthy onshore, too, thanks largely to a booming energy economy and plenty of energy investment. School children and college students benefit from state oil revenues that contribute hugely to education. New Orleans even held an "Appreciation Day" for petroleum and related industries—while in Massachusetts some government officials squabbled over whether offshore leases should be granted at all.

No Scrooges. When Georges Bank drilling rights finally were sold, Mobil was called the "big winner." But what we and others really won was the right to give $492 million to the U.S. for the right to risk millions more in exploratory drilling. We're hopeful, but farther down the Eastern Seaboard the Baltimore Canyon has claimed over $1.5 billion from the oil industry, and yielded only gas in so-far non-commercial quantities. Just one area off Florida has cost Mobil and its partners $650 million without success.

Great expectations. If we do discover something in the Georges Bank, the real winner will be New England's economy and its energy users. A find would benefit the whole nation because every domestic discovery helps whittle down America's dangerous overdependence on foreign supplies. And finding energy doesn't have to mean risking the sea, or the rest of the environment. So why, we wonder, aren't the federal and state governments doing everything possible to encourage U.S. energy development? You might ask that question of candidates for public office ... and don't settle for a fishy answer.

A Prescription for Better Medical Care

By Samuel J. Gulino

As most of us know, the cost of health-care services has risen astronomically in recent years. Because of the money involved, you're not only a patient when you go to a doctor, hospital or clinic but a consumer as well. And like any consumer, you have rights, which are protected by law.

Here are guidelines to your rights as a health-care services consumer. These were put together with the help of Dr. Hada I.L.P. de Slosser, Cornell University extension associate in the New York City Consumer Education Program.

PRIVACY

- All information about your health and the treatment you receive must be kept confidential.
- Whenever you are being examined or treated, your privacy should be considered. No one should call across the room for personal information. Tell your doctor if you do not want your case discussed with your spouse, a relative or your employer.
- Your medical records should also be kept confidential. These are the doctor's or hospital's property. But whether you have the legal right to see your record varies from state to state. For example, you may ask to see X-ray pictures, laboratory reports or letters written about you from another doctor. Though in almost all states your doctor is not required to turn your medical records directly over to you, if you move or change doctors, he or she may send them to another doctor if you request it.
- In the hospital, you may refuse to see any people you do not wish to see — unwanted guests or people not connected with the hospital.
- If you are in a semiprivate room or a ward, you may request to be transferred to another room if the other patients continually bother you by making noise or breaking regulations.
- You may request that a person of your own sex be present during an examination by someone of the opposite sex.

CHOICE AND KNOWLEDGE ABOUT SERVICES

- You should feel free to ask about any fees you will be charged, regardless of how the bill will be paid.
- Ask your doctor for an estimate of the fees you will be charged for specific services. Discuss the methods of payment before treatment begins.
- In a hospital, you have the right to emergency life-saving treatment, regardless of your ability to pay the bill. Hospitals cannot turn you away if, by doing so, they would endanger your life. In nonemergency conditions, only private proprietary (profit-making) hospitals may turn away people who cannot pay.
- If you are in a hospital, you may not always be able to get your choice of doctors, but it is worth asking.
- To make an intelligent choice of a doctor you will need to find out information about his (her) qualifications and fees. So, do not hesitate to ask questions.
- All medical doctors use the initials M.D. after their names. Initials, such as FACOG (Fellow American College of Obstetrics and Gynecology) after a doctor's M.D. (Medical Doctor) initials, indicate that the doctor has adequate training in that specialty. Also check the doctor's name in the Directory of Medical Specialists in the local library. You also may want to use recommendations of other doctors you trust or those of a friend or relative.
- If you have doubts about your doctor's diagnosis or recommended treatment, have another doctor check the diagnosis and choice of treatment.

CHOICE AND KNOWLEDGE ABOUT TREATMENT

- You're entitled to full information about your condition, treatment and chances of recovery.
- Before you consent to treatment, be sure that the doctor explains to you what is being recommended. Ask the doctor to explain all alternatives for treatment or care. Also, ask about any side effects of medicines.
- If you are legally an adult, you have the right to refuse treatment, even if your decision has harmful consequences. But this right can be limited if your illness might harm others. For example, you cannot refuse treatment if it's found you have a contagious disease.
- Before an operation, you will be asked to sign a paper giving permission for anesthesia and surgery. The purpose of this written approval is to protect the doctor and the hospital in case you later decide to start a lawsuit. By signing the paper though, you do not give up the right to sue later for malpractice. Before you sign, take the time to read the form and ask your doctor, not the nurse, questions about anything that you do not understand.
- You have the right to refuse surgery.
- If you have doubts about recommended surgery, consult another doctor for a second opinion before committing yourself in writing.
- You have the right, however, to change your mind after you have given or refused consent for surgery.
- You may approve preliminary surgery but withhold a decision on further surgery.
- If time allows, make arrangements for a member of your family to be at the hospital when you are asked to sign a consent form for surgery. Remember, once in a hospital you might be too ill to refuse to sign a form or to refuse anything. FW

Plant Now—Step Back Watch It Skyrocket Forth!

YES, actually z-o-o-m-s up to roof-high in just one year . . . and keeps on soaring into a tower of flowering beauty just like you see pictured here . . . faster than any tree of its kind on the face of the Earth! In fact, rockets forth with such breathtaking speed you can actually take a ruler and measure the difference in height from week to week . . . or to really leave your neighbors breathless, take a yardstick and measure the incredible difference from month to month. And that's only the beginning:

GROWS MORE IN ONE MONTH THAN MOST TREES GROW IN AN ENTIRE YEAR!

Because when in your life did you ever hear, see or dream of a miracle flowering shade tree that grows higher than even a full-grown Flowering Dogwood IN JUST ONE SINGLE SEASON!—grows higher than even a full-grown Star Magnolia IN JUST ONE SINGLE YEAR— Yes, thrusts itself so high, so fast, that it actually soars higher than even a Japanese Red Maple, Cherry Tree or even the most graceful silky Willow in such a ridiculously short time, your neighbors will simply refuse to believe their eyes!

A MASTERPIECE OF BEAUTY IN JUST A MATTER OF MONTHS!

And that's still only half the magic, half the wonder that awaits you when you glorify your home and garden with the most fantastic flowering shade tree ever introduced in America—the incredibly beautiful Royal Paulownia—hailed by U.S. Govt. Plant Research Stations . . . by Botanical Gardens . . . and by University Plant Scientists as the fastest growing shade tree of its kind on this planet! And no wonder!

JOBMANSHIP

What the Job Interviewers Really Want to Know:

You can have the training, the experience and the ability to do the job well. But in the end it's how you handle the job interview that usually determines whether you're offered the position. That's the conclusion of a major research project by the Bureau of National Affairs.

People waste their interview time explaining "why I want this job" when they should be concentrating on "what I can do for the company." Yet most interviewers' questions do give you the opportunity to look good if you understand what the questions really mean!

For example, a typical question is, "Which of your past jobs did you like best?" Interviewers are trying to learn if you'll be satisfied and remain with the new job if you get it. Therefore, the "right" answer involves describing a past job where duties were similar to this one.

"Describe one of your weaknesses" is another interviewer favorite that defeats many people. After all, who wants to admit a failing that may be counted against you? You solve the problem by choosing a characteristic that is needed for the job you're after and mentioning it as a "weakness." For instance, if the job consists of regularly handling money, you confess you're a stickler for wanting your records to be super-accurate. Well, for a money-handling job like the one you're applying for, your "weakness" will sound like an asset.

After the interview you should send a thank-you note to keep from being forgotten if other good candidates follow you. It should be mailed within 24 hours. In it mention the facts you learned about the job and say that the company confirmed your interest in the position. Now is your chance to use the inside information you gained during your interview. What did they tell you were some of the company's and/or department's problem areas, growth plans, needs? Use that information to briefly restate your assets in a way that shows how you can contribute to those specific company goals.

A former head of several branches of the Bernard Haldane executive search organization has found that, for white-collar positions, the thank-you note after an interview is often the final deciding factor when it comes to who gets the job.

Sick Pay While You Moonlight?

As every jobholder has noticed, inflation is shrinking the power of a paycheck. For many people, an additional job — "moonlighting" — is the only solution. What happens, however, when the working hours of the two jobs sometimes conflict? Some men and women solve the time-conflict by calling in sick to their full-time employer. But this can get you fired.

One case, reported in an American Arbitration Association publication, makes the dangers clear. Jim B., a clerical worker in a county sheriff's office, had never used sick leave allowed him by his union's contract. To solve family money pressures, Jim took a part-time job and began calling in sick when he worked the second job. Somehow the personnel department in the county office heard about Jim's part-time employment and his "sick days." They fired him. Jim fought back. "Lots of people claim they're sick when they need a day off for something special. Nothing is done about it," he said.

Though Jim's union defended him vigorously, Jim lost his case. The arbitrator agreed that dismissal without a second chance was the correct solution. The problem with Jim B. lay in his trying to mislead his regular employer.

Playing the moonlighting-sick pay game is always extremely risky. If you're found out, at the very least you will have seriously damaged your boss' attitude toward you and your future prospects.

Jennifer Houlton: Growing Up On TV

By Susan Lapinski

Outside, a tornado is raging, blowing down walls and swirling dust. Inside, a woman with a bandaged head is trying to deliver a baby in a debris-filled corner. Just across the set is another drama: a festive dinner with a table full of hospital employees who have taken refuge from the weather. Among them is young research assistant Greta Powers, who, as the winds outside howl, tries to smile bravely with her own baby on her knee.

That's the way it was one day several months ago on the set of The Doctors soap opera. Disaster and distress are daily fare on the soaps, and nobody knows it better than young actress Jennifer Houlton, who's been playing Greta Powers on the long-running NBC series since she was 8 years old.

Now a high-school senior, Jennifer has literally grown up on The Doctors. Under the television camera's relentless eye, she has grown from the small daughter of the show's two leading doctors into a romantic lead in her own right. And in keeping with the show's sudsy twists and turns, her character has gone through countless upheavals — from rebelling against her parents to falling in love with the wrong boy and giving birth to an illegitimate baby. Through it all, Jennifer has enjoyed playing Greta.

"I like her," says the dark-blonde 17-year-old actress, "even though we're pretty different. Greta lives in fantasy a lot .... She says things like, 'I want a little white house with a picket fence.' I think I'm more realistic. But just playing a teenager, there are obvious parallels, and it helps you to understand yourself."

Understanding herself seems to have come early to Jennifer. The daughter of a public-relations executive father and a book-writing mother, she claims never to have been pushed into child stardom. Her parents, who live and work in Manhattan, knew the then-script-writers of The Doctors, who surprised Jennifer by writing a little spot into the show for her. After her cameo appearance as a little girl who had broken her arm, the casting director asked her to audition for the continuing role of Greta. Jennifer accepted the invitation and promptly won the part over 20 other little blonde hopefuls.

For the first few years, Jennifer traveled back and forth to the studio with her mother, who coached her in her lines at home. Now, after nearly 10 years with the show, Jennifer is completely comfortable in front of the camera and doesn't get easily ruffled by last-minute line changes. (Jennifer does plan to go to college in the fall, and so her part will by then be written out of the show.)

What about the frequent criticism that soaps are silly and contrived? "I defend them a lot," says Jennifer quickly. She points out that today's soaps deal with real-world concerns. "Soap operas are about what's happening in the world," she says, "but in an exaggerated way: People have affairs, fall in love, get pregnant. Soap operas are not ridiculous."

Lydia Bruce, who plays Greta's mother, Dr. Maggie Powers, says that Jennifer's performances during her TV pregnancy demonstrated just how well she can act. "On the show we talked about birth control, whether she should keep the baby," Bruce points out. "It was difficult material for a girl of 15, going on 16, but Jenny's intellect came to the forefront. She's tremendously bright, has great sensitivity and a natural instinct for acting." Jennifer prepared for her on-screen pregnancy by consulting with one of the show's medical advisers and attending natural childbirth classes.

Still, there are times on the set of The Doctors when the real world does seem to collide with the soap world. Jennifer says she sometimes finds herself taking her real-life problems to her TV mother and father, Jim Pritchett and Lydia Bruce, as well as to her natural parents. "I feel like I am their daughter, in a way," Jennifer says.

Jennifer seems modestly unimpressed by her own special status. Relaxing in the actors' lounge at the end of a long workday, she looks fresh-faced and vulnerable without her TV makeup. It's easy to believe her when she says her TV work doesn't influence her friendships outside the studio because "I don't talk about it."

Into the lounge comes another young woman who would probably do anything to be in Jennifer's lucky little shoes. She's the actress who played the pregnant woman in today's tornado scene. But in the highly competitive world of television acting, she is an extra, not a regular with a meaty role like Jennifer's. "Will your role be continued on the show?" a visitor to the lounge asks the extra.

"No, there's no chance," she says with a sigh. "You see, the show is taped out of sequence. And yesterday, I died." FW

Amazoy withstands active kids and cook-outs. Gives you time to relax, since it needs little water and cuts mowing two-thirds.

FREE! UP TO 200 AMAZOY PLUGS DURING SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

By Jack T. Johnson, Agronomist

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow...until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infest it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazoy Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN

For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn "...is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in...Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds—it's just wonderful!"

And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn —nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS

Thick, rich, luxurious, established Amazoy grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long.

For Slopes, Play Areas, Bare Spots

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS—PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth, including weeds—from part shade to full sun. Goes off its green color after killing frosts. Begins regaining its green color at the time when the temperature in the spring is consistently warm. This, of course, varies with climate. Easy planting instructions with order.

Your Own Supply of Plug Transplants

DON'T BE MISLED! THERE IS ONLY ONE AMAZOY

Amazoy plugs are taken from genuine Z-52 Meyer Zoysia . . . guaranteed winter-hardened for 3 full years under the supervision of trained agronomists. Over a HALF-BILLION plugs sold! So don't take chances with inferior plugs. Accept No Substitute for Amazoy Zoysia! If it isn't Amazoy, you're not getting the plugs that made Zoysia famous.

Every Plug Guaranteed to Grow In Your Area • In Your Soil

- AMAZOY WON'T WINTER KILL—has survived temperatures 30° below zero!
- AMAZOY WON'T HEAT KILL—when other grasses burn out, Amazoy remains green and lovely!

Plug Amazoy into an entire lawn or problem areas. Plug it into poor soil, "builders soil", clay or even salty, sandy beach areas. I guarantee every plug, regardless. Any plug failing to grow in 45 days replaced FREE. Since we're hardly in business for the fun of it, you know we're 100% sure of our product!

PATENTED STEP-ON PLUGGER IS... FREE WITH ORDERS OF 600 PLUGS OR MORE

Amazoy exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes.

Cuts Your Work, Saves You Money

Your deep-rooted, established Amazoy lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement...ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by ⅔.

NO SEED, NO SOD!

There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed: like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills. Save time, work, money. Plug in Amazoy.

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass was perfected by U.S. Govt., released in cooperation with U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

Order guaranteed Amazoy now, get your bonus plugs FREE. Your order will be delivered at earliest correct time for planting in your area.

Cholesterol The Silent Killer

By Paula Dranov

For years doctors have been telling us that heart disease is linked to the amount of cholesterol found in the blood. Cut down on eggs, butter, milk, cheese and red meat, they advise us, and, statistically at least, we can cut our risk of a heart attack.

Now research indicates that heart disease may not be the only cholesterol-related danger. Evidence is accumulating that some forms of cancer are associated with the amounts of cholesterol we consume. Scientists still don't know exactly how cholesterol is related to disease, however, nor do they have any direct proof that too much cholesterol causes either heart disease or cancer or that lowering cholesterol levels will prevent either one.

Nevertheless, more and more doctors seem to think that on the basis of what we do know about cholesterol, we should change our eating habits — and the sooner the better!

Just what is cholesterol? What evidence is there that it plays a role in heart disease and cancer? And how much cholesterol is too much cholesterol?

Evidence is mounting that heart disease and some forms of cancer are related to the amount of cholesterol we eat.

Cholesterol is just one of several fats found in the blood. We get it from the foods we eat (lobster, crab and shrimp in addition to dairy products and fatty meats), but it also is produced by the liver. There's no way to eliminate cholesterol from the body because even with a cholesterol-free diet, the liver still would be manufacturing its share.

Concern about cholesterol as a factor in heart disease and cancer stems from studies showing that among any population, the higher the incidence of these diseases, the higher the average cholesterol level in the population. This doesn't mean that every individual with high cholesterol will have a heart attack or contract cancer, but the risk is much higher than with someone who has a normal or low cholesterol level.

In affluent Western countries where the diet is rich in dairy products, beef and other foods high in animal fat, the incidence of heart disease as well as breast and colon cancer is higher than it is in countries where the diet contains less animal fat.

In addition, analysis of the fatty deposits that clog the blood vessels of heart-disease victims shows them to be laden with cholesterol. As these deposits build up, the blood flows less freely to the heart. If they block a vessel completely, the blood supply is cut off and a heart attack can follow.

The trouble with evidence that is largely statistical is that there are always exceptions — many people with low or normal cholesterol have heart attacks, and most people with high cholesterol don't. But when all of the victims are compared, more of them had high cholesterol levels than had low or normal ones.

In adults, the normal range in cholesterol levels is between 120 and 250 milligrams per tenth of a liter of blood. Most doctors don't recommend a diet (or drugs) designed to lower cholesterol unless the level exceeds 250 milligrams — below that, statistics are on your side.

Recently, however, some stronger recommendations have been made about reducing our cholesterol levels. First, the American Health Foundation concluded that the ideal "average" cholesterol level should be between 150 and 160 milligrams, allowing for a range of between 100 and 200 milligrams in the population as a whole. This would mean that the average adult level should be in the vicinity of 180 to 190 milligrams. Getting our national cholesterol level down that far would mean a big change in diet.

Not long after the Health Foundation issued its recommendations, similar advice came from Dr. Arthur Upton, director of the National Cancer Institute. Although he conceded that there's not yet enough scientific evidence to warrant major changes in our national diet, he did suggest cutting down on dairy products, meat and other foods high in animal and vegetable fats.

Although the link between diet and cancer isn't as well established as that between diet and heart disease, preliminary evidence has associated fats in general — not just animal fats — with cancers of the colon and breast. Based on what they already know, researchers theorize that fat in the diet has an indirect effect on the development of cancer. In other words, while they don't think that fats cause cancer directly, they speculate that they may somehow influence metabolism so that normal cells become more susceptible to other cancer-causing agents.

All things considered, Dr. Upton suggests reducing our fat intake from the current 40 percent to 30 percent of the average American diet.

That all seems to square with what doctors have been advising all along for their patients with high cholesterol. And it's all we've got to go on until science learns just what it is about cholesterol that gets in the way of good health. FW

The Butterflies of America Thimble Collection

A Miniature Gallery of Artistic Treasures to Beautify Your Home

Advance subscription deadline:
April 30, 1980.

Butterflies . . . "winged flowers" a poet called them . . . bring a very special beauty and delight into our lives. So graceful . . . so vivid of color . . . so extravagantly lovely . . . they seem to be Nature's most perfectly fashioned symbols of joy and innocence.

And our nation's most beautiful butterflies have now inspired an exquisite collection of works of art which will capture their fragile beauty forever . . . in enchanting miniature—'The Butterflies of America Thimble Collection.' This distinctive collection will be meticulously crafted in fine bone china, in a tradition of fine miniature art that reaches back over the centuries.

Here, for the first time ever in this charming art form, are the loveliest butterflies of all fifty of our States—portrayed as in Nature, fluttering about the bright flowers of summer.

The brilliant colors of America's loveliest butterflies captured in exquisite miniature

To create the original work of art that will be depicted upon each of these thimbles, Franklin Porcelain has commissioned the outstanding wildlife artist Helen Hall. She has portrayed each butterfly . . . and each flower . . . in the most intricate detail and the most richly realistic color. The frail beauty—the airy grace—of every one of the fifty butterflies is magnificently expressed.

Among them are New York's Tawny Emperor, conspicuously elegant against a background of Sea-Pinks. The distinctive Eastern Tiger Swallowtail of Indiana, hovering among a cluster of St. John's-Wort. California's Green Comma, displaying its beauty in front of that tiny rose and yellow orchid of the marshes, the Fairy-Slipper. Altogether, fifty lovely and familiar butterflies, each delightfully portrayed along with a flower typical of the region.

The name of the butterfly and that of the State it represents will also be included in each design. And the superb finishing touch will be the addition of delicate, individually applied bands of pure 24 karat gold.

Each thimble will be a work of art of captivating beauty. Simply to take one in your hand . . . to study the luxurious coloration of each butterfly, and the color of each flower . . . is to experience a very special pleasure. And, when displayed in the handsome wall frame that accompanies each collection, these lovely thimbles will be a miniature gallery of artistic treasures that you will appreciate and enjoy throughout the years to come.

In the tradition of classic porcelain collector's pieces, these fine bone china thimbles are being issued in limited edition. They will be offered only until the end of 1980, and will then be permanently withdrawn at the close of this original issue year. They can be acquired only as a complete collection—exclusively by direct subscription from Franklin Porcelain—and there is a further limit of one collection per subscriber.

The price for each thimble is just $11.75, and you will receive your collection at the convenient rate of one thimble per month, beginning in May 1980. However, to take advantage of this opportunity, you must be sure to mail the Advance Subscription Application below by April 30, 1980, at the very latest.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

The Younger Generation

To millions of Americans he's known as "Captain Kangaroo," but Bob Keeshan plays another role as well. Five days a week, his famous voice can be heard hosting a CBS radio show called The Subject Is Young People (check local listings).

"The show is not a children's program," says Keeshan, "nor is it a how-to-parent show. We're trying to reach a broad group of adults and talk about the ways they're affected by children and how children are affected by them. Most of us as adults don't think very much about children. That's not to say we don't care, but we should be more aware of how our attitudes influence young people."

So, for Harry Reasoner's comments on how his daughters have made him more conscious of the women's movement or

Poison Prevention

Young children are explorers, and they pop things into their mouths without a thought. Consequently, kids under the age of 5 are the people most prone to accidental poisonings, and, to alert the public to the problem, March 16-23 has been declared Poison Prevention Week.

The most commonly ingested poisons are plants; soaps, detergents and cleaners; vitamin and mineral preparations; and aspirin, reports the Consumer Product Safety Commission. It recommends that all poisons be kept out of the reach of children. Whenever possible, buy products that have safety closures, and make sure that all poisons are kept in their original containers with the warning labels intact.

In the case of a poisoning, immediately call your local Poison Control Center, family doctor, hospital emergency room or rescue squad for instructions. Try to identify the poison, but don't administer aid until you are advised about procedures. And, the Commission suggests, keep all emergency telephone numbers right by the phone; after all, you never know when you might need them.

Gardens For All

Thirty-three million American families regularly plant gardens, and two million more households are expected to join their ranks this year. Those families who don't have backyards are grouping together and planting community gardens on municipal land to insure that everybody gets a chance to dig in. But for the beginning gardener, all the flurry can be confusing.

If you've always wanted to start your own garden but are convinced your thumb's not green, or if you're already a gardener and are interested in knowing more about the intricacies of mulching, composting and pest control, a membership organization called Gardens for All is a terrific source of information. The nonprofit association publishes booklets on subjects ranging from growing better tomatoes and beans to starting a community garden. For membership information and a copy of Your 1980 Independence Garden, a 32-page, basic guide to gardening, send one dollar to Gardens for All, The National Association for Gardening, Dept. FW, 180 Flynn Ave., Burlington, Vt. 05401. And pretty soon you can watch your own garden grow!

Thinking About A Diet?

The teen-age years can be pretty rocky, and being overweight certainly doesn't help make them easier. But Dr. Barbara Edelstein, author of The Woman Doctor's Diet for Teen-Age Girls, feels that teenagers are also at a point in their lives where learning how to eat properly will save them from becoming obese adults. "Most fat adults were overweight teenagers," she explains, "but by starting early, we can often keep a teen-ager from developing the bad eating habits that can lead to obesity."

Dr. Edelstein says she wrote the book "for teen-agers because their lifestyles and concerns are much different than those of an overweight adult. Teen-agers have to worry about what to eat when they're at the pizza shop and how to deal with the after-school munchies."

Lifestyles

Birth Control. A Philadelphia gynecologist has just tested a reversible sterilization method on 101 women with excellent results, reports Medical World News. The procedure involves injecting silicone into a woman's fallopian tubes, where the resulting plug prevents the egg from passing from the ovary to the uterus. The plug can be removed if the woman later wants to become pregnant. However, the method still needs some long-term testing before it can be fully evaluated.

Language. Illiteracy may be a problem in this country, but an increased interest in the English language is also evident. Style guides, dictionaries and other works relating to writing and usage are selling briskly in bookstores across the country, notes the Wall Street Journal. And the publisher of Strunk and White's Elements of Style says that the yearly sales of its 1979 edition are more than double the sales of either of the earlier editions.

Health. Researchers at Georgetown University have found that both onions and garlic contain a compound that acts as an anticoagulant and may help prevent strokes. Eating the items, cooked or raw, allows the component to enter the bloodstream where it inhibits the formation of blood clots, reports Health Insurance News.

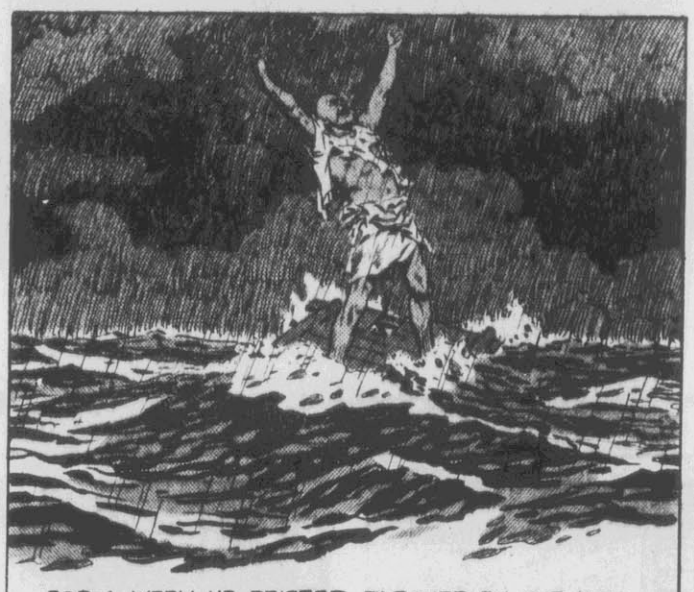
Prince Valiant

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

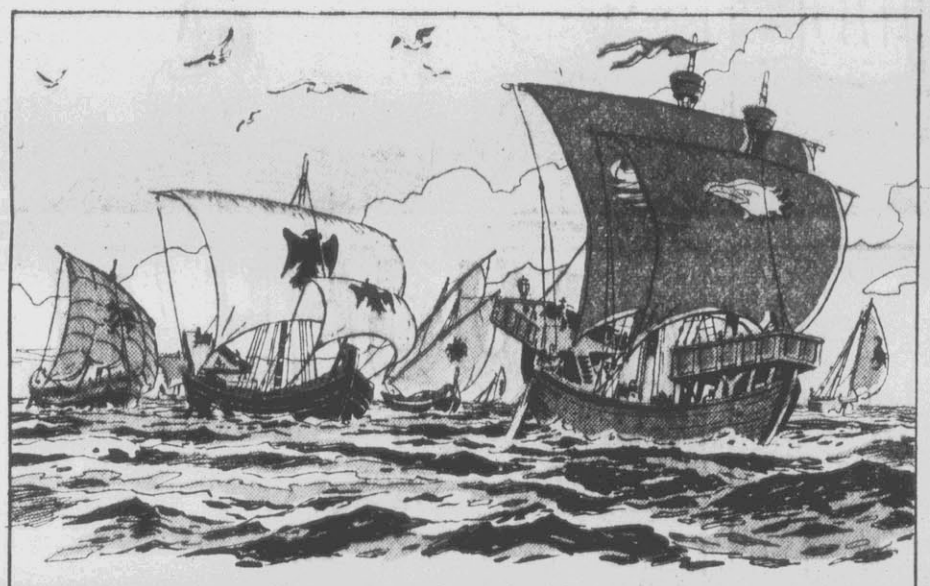
Our Story: VAL HAS BEEN SOLD INTO SLAVERY AND ARN SEEKS THE HELP OF SALAM FULDA. "A RASH MOVE COMING TO MY FORTRESS, YOUNG PRINCE," THE GREAT MAN ROARS.

ARN HAD HEARD THE STORY AT HIS FATHER'S KNEE. YEARS EARLIER, VAL HAD ROUTED ONE OF SALAM'S RAIDING PARTIES ON THE BRITISH COAST. SALAM ALONE ESCAPED, BUT HIS SHIP WAS DASHED TO PIECES BY A VIOLENT STORM IN THE NORTH SEA.



FOR A WEEK HE DRIFTED, PARCHED BY THE HOT SUN, DRENCHED BY POURING RAINS. ALL THE WHILE HE SWORE TO THE HEAVENS: NEVER AGAIN WOULD THE NORTHERN BARBARIANS GIVE HIM SUCH A SHABBY WELCOME.

WASHED ASHORE IN BRITTANY, HE MADE HIS HOME IN A RUINED ABBEY. SLOWLY HE FORGED ALLIANCES WITH NEIGHBORING PIRATE TRIBES. SOON, HIS TENTACLES REACHED FROM THE BALTIC TO THE RED SEA.



NOW HIS CORSAIR FEDERATION HAS FREEDOM OF THE SEAS; EVEN POWERFUL KING ARTHUR IS WILLING TO PAY FOR PROTECTION FROM ITS STING. ON THE FIRST DAY OF SPRING, THE YEARLY PAYMENTS FALL DUE. ALREADY SALAM TASTES HIS PROFIT.

MILTON CANIFF

AZIM OF SAHRĀ (RUDY) RESCUES OLSON FROM A TRUMPED-UP DRUG CHARGE—AND GOES INTO A SPIN OVER CONVOY...BUT THE AMERICAN DOES NOT KNOW IT....

BAYAN CONVOY, I LIED TO LEIGHTON OLSON—SO I COULD SPEAK WITH YOU ALONE!

ISN'T THAT A SKUNKY THING TO DO TO YOUR OLD PAL FROM MAUMEE UNIVERSITY ?

NO! NO! HE IS MY DEAR FRIEND—BUT HE DOES NOT KNOW...

IF YOU GO TO AMERICA WITH OLSON, YOU'LL BE FOREVER THE FOREIGN DEVIL!

REMEMBER, I ATTENDED COLLEGE IN THE UNITED STATES! I KNOW WHAT IT IS LIKE TO BE AN OUTSIDER!

MARRY ME—AND YOU'LL BE A FUTURE QUEEN—AND NO VICIOUS NEIGHBORS TO PUT UP WITH!

BUT I AM A COMMONER !

NOTHING COULD BE MORE 'COMMON' THAN MY FAMILY! GRANDPAPPY WAS A LAND-PIRATE WHO HIJACKED CAMEL TRAINS ALONG THE SILK ROUTES!

THEY STRUCK OIL IN THE HILLS WHERE THE OLD BOY STASHED THE LOOT—AND WE WERE INSTANT ARISTOCRACY!

WELL, SIRE, I AM A LAWYER—AND I SAVED MY CLINCHER FOR SUMMATION TO THE JURY...

—AND JUST FOR MEANNESS—SHE MADE CERTAIN I COULD NEVER HAVE CHILDREN!
