Kennedy Wins N.Y., Connecticut Tests

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy won a new lease on his challenge for the White House with a surprise landslide over President Carter in New York and another upset in Connecticut. But he still is campaigning against long odds.

Republican Ronald Reagan padded his hefty Republican lead, winning big in New York on Tuesday while losing to George Bush in Connecticut.

Kennedy's first primary victories outside his own Massachusetts came just as the Carter camp was gaining support for its less-than-subtle suggestions that the time had come for Kennedy to quit and help Democrats unite behind the president.

The defeat he dealt Carter in New York, 59 percent to 41 percent, virtually guaranteed that the senator from Massachusetts will be competing all the way to the Democratic National Convention.

But Carter gained nominating delegates in defeat, and his national count reached 45 percent of the majority it will take to win the Democratic nomination.

Kennedy said Tuesday night that the voters had sent a clear message to Washington and to their party: "They can no longer afford an inflation rate of 18 percent and interest rates that match..."

"And I think we're going to see that repeated in states all across this country," he said.

Carter's campaign chairman, Robert Strauss, said it won't happen. He called the twin losses "no more than a dip...in the road toward the nomination." He said the primaries in Wisconsin and Kansas next Tuesday will put the president "back on the victory road."

Kennedy seemed to be conceding as much. Aides said he did not plan to campaign personally for those contests, but would turn at once to Pennsylvania, which holds the next of the big-state Democratic primary elections on April 22.

With victory in Connecticut, his boyhood home, Republican Bush won a chance to keep going. He was at work today in Wisconsin.

But the odds are as bleak for him as for Kennedy. Reagan, like Carter, has built a commanding lead in nominating delegates, and it will take a succession of landslide defeats to stop him.

"There are a lot of primaries to go, and I'm sure there will be wins and losses, but I think we're well on the way," Reagan said.

These were Tuesday's Democratic results:

New York

Kennedy 574,566 or 59 percent, for 164 delegates.

Carter 399,862 or 41 percent, for 118 delegates.

Connecticut

Kennedy 98,571 or 47 percent, for 29 delegates.

Carter 87,108 or 41 percent, for 25 delegates.

Lyndon LaRouche 6,481 or 3 percent.

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. 5,357 or 3 percent.

Uncommitted 13,290 or 6 percent.

Brown did not campaign. He's waiting for Wisconsin. But the Kennedy revival was a blow to his strategy, which was based on the assumption that he could emerge there as the only alternative to Carter.

In the Connecticut Republican primary, the numbers read:

Bush 70,070 or 39 percent, for 15 delegates.

Reagan 61,333 or 34 percent, for 14 delegates.

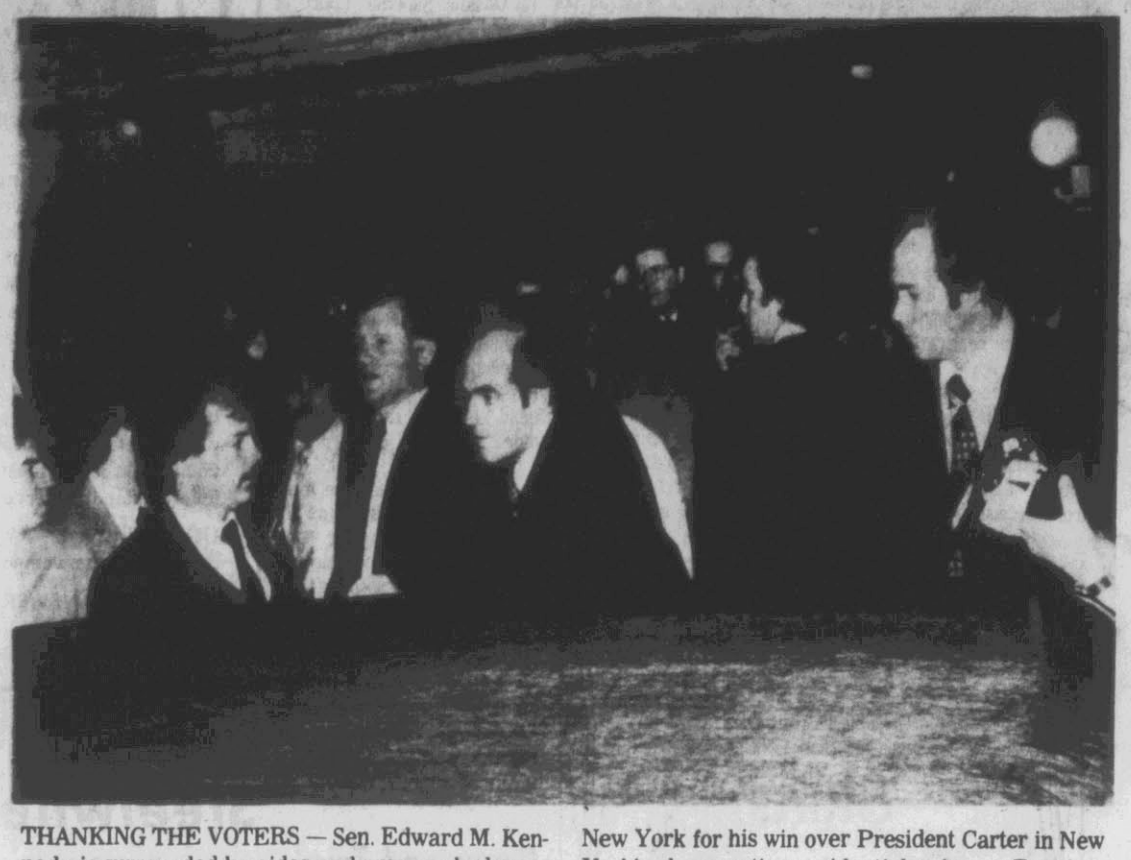

Rep. John B. Anderson of Illinois 40,481 or 22 percent, for 6 delegates.

Rep. Philip M. Crane of Illinois got 1 percent; the rest went to campaign drop-outs, a minor entry, or went uncommitted.

New York Republicans didn't vote directly for presidential candidates. They chose among candidates for convention seats, electing 73 Reagan supporters and only 6 for Bush. The other 38 were uncommitted.

The delegates gained by

Pitt School Bd. Studies Budget, OCR Proposals

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Education discussed the proposed 1980-81 budget and considered a change in the compliance plan submitted to the Office of Civil Rights in a special meeting last night.

The board reviewed the proposed capital outlay and current expense budgets and agreed they could be presented for approval at the regular meeting April 1. The capital outlay for 1980-81 is a proposed $1,560,000 and the current expense totals $6,540,000.

The capital outlay expenses call for $4,000 in non-food assistant funds; $35,000 in vehicle replacement, which includes purchase of a handicap van, an activity bus, and administrative vehicle replacement; $12,000 for renovation to W.H. Robinson classroom space; $130,000 for renovation to Belvoir Elementary; $575,000 for replacement of structures at Ayden Middle; and $300,000 for repairs to Chicod's lunchroom and classrooms.

The current expense budget calls for a 10 percent increase in all salaries and places clerical and maintenance personnel on a state salary scale. Of this $6,540,000, $4,892,802.76 comes from county appropriations.

The board also heard a request from Ike Baldree, principal of Grifton School, to allow the school to continue with its system of stratified heterogenous grouping in grades 1-3 rather than change over to the system outlined in the Office of Civil Rights Compliance Plan.

The system in the plan calls for students in grades 1-3 to be grouped according to test results and teacher evaluation in language arts and math. This would involve primary students changing classes during the day. This

Resurfacing Plans

The City Council, meeting last week, approved a resurfacing list for this year calling for five miles of streets to be resurfaced based upon the estimated cost.

Streets to be resurfaced this year, according to the city, were determined on a priority basis. Portions of 30 streets were placed on the Priority 1 list, which was established by an inspection of each street in the city.

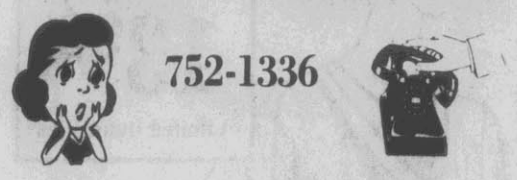

City Manager Ed Wyatt said it is anticipated that bids will be approved in May.

He noted that the total project cost is estimated at $95,000 and was expanded by $35,000 by a recent Council budget amendment.

The city manager said the Public Works Department will begin shortly to prepare the streets for resurfacing. The project will be done under the supervision of the Engineering Department.

Trustees Hike Cost Of ECU Attendance

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Action taken by the Board of Trustees of East Carolina University yesterday will add 7.6 percent to the cost of attending the school next year, assuming the General Assembly does not increase tuition at State supported universities when it meets this summer.

Trustees, on the recommendation of the finance committee which cited increases in the cost of utilities, salaries and other items, voted to increase fees paid by students attending the university.

The fee increases include: $1 for the Student Government Association general fund, $3 for Student Union programs, $6.50 for Mendenhall Student Center, $5 for intramural sports, $21 for Student Health Services, $19.50 for athletics, $66 for housing (dormitory room rent), and $2 for the SGA transit system.

The fee increases will mean that for a day student, who is now paying $520 in tuition and fees ($310 tuition and $210 in fees), the cost next year will be $578 ($310 tuition and $268 in fees). For the dorm student, now paying $1,044 ($520 tuition and fees and $524 housing), the fee increase will mean a total cost per year of $1,168 ($578 tuition and fees and $590 housing).

ECU now ranks 12th in the 15-campus University of North Carolina system as far as in-state tuition and fees are concerned, and 13th in housing costs.

Pembroke State University ranks lowest in tuition and fees, with a total of $470 per year, while the N.C. School of the Arts is highest, with an annual charge of $739. UNC at Wilmington has the highest dormitory fee, at $700 per month, while Pembroke, at $450 per month, has the lowest cost housing.

In other business yesterday, the Board approved a statement of understanding with Ronald Eugene Dowdy of Orlando, Fla., a mid-60's alumnus, to name the student supply store in Wright annex the Dowdy Student Supply Store, after a pledge of $100,000 to the school has been paid.

Budget Commission In Senate Begins Work

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee, backed by a Senate directive to end budget deficits, is drafting a 1981 federal spending plan that may allow a partial freeze on Social Security taxes.

Preparing for the start of the panel's work today, the Senate served notice Tuesday that there is a limit to how deeply it will slash spending to battle inflation, turning back a Republican plan to tie federal spending to the Gross National Product.

By a 56-41 margin Tuesday, senators approved a Democratic resolution directing the committee to balance the budget for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, chairman of the Budget Committee and sponsor of the Democratic plan, said the panel will aim for a spending limit of about $613 billion, which would require cuts of about $16 billion from the budget submitted in January by President Carter.

That also would put the panel close to Carter's revised spending plan and to the $611.8 billion figure approved by the House Budget Committee.

The resolution approved by the Senate earmarks any surplus for tax cuts, with half the money to be used to partially offset the Social Security tax increase due to take effect next Jan. 1, and the other half for business tax reductions.

Muskie's proposal was offered to dilute support for a resolution by Sen. William Roth, R-Del., that would have required an additional cut of $29 billion. But such cuts, Democrats contended, would hurt the poor or damage national defense.

Adoption of the Muskie substitute blocked a yes-no vote on the Roth plan. And to show their anger, 37 GOP senators voted against the final resolution, even though most favor a balanced budget. Only three Republicans voted with Muskie.

Roth's resolution sought to limit fiscal 1981 spending to 21 percent of the Gross National Product, the total value of the nation's goods and services. By doing that, Roth claimed, the government would send a clear signal that it plans to limit spending even beyond 1981.

Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd said the plan adopted by the Senate "is not soft on inflation — it's bitter medicine. But it does not make promises that cannot be kept."

Byrd said the GOP plan was "straight out of the school of Herbert Hoover...with its promise of a chicken in every pot."

Muskie called Roth's proposal "the stuff of which headlines are made."

"But think about the prospect of cutting that $45 billion from the budget," he said. "Think about what that would mean to elderly Americans — many of whom are already ill-fed, ill-housed and ill-clothed."

Meanwhile, the congressional black caucus announced it will fight the spending cuts proposed by the House Budget Committee last week in arriving at a balanced budget.

"We are resolved to take this disgraceful budget...to the people," said Rep. Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., who heads the group.

Hunt Plans To Propose 10-Percent Pay Hike

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A 10 percent pay increase for state employees and teachers and a new salary scale for teachers are budget changes Gov. Jim Hunt plans to propose.

The Raleigh News and Observer reported today that Hunt will propose the changes for the fiscal year beginning July 1 to the Advisory Budget Commission next week.

The commission will make suggestions to the Legislature when it meets in June for a short session.

Hunt and budget officials met to discuss the recommendations Tuesday.

The 10 percent across-the-board pay raise would carry a $234-million pricetag. State employees and teachers received a 5 percent across-the-board increase and a $200 bonus this year.

A new salary schedule, which would raise the maximum pay for experienced teachers, would cost $20.6 million.

Hunt also will propose a general increase in state operating costs, primarily as a result of inflation. Budget officials estimate that rising fuel costs and utility bills will bring the increase to $40 million.

The recommendations would be in addition to the $5.1 billion already budgeted by the Legislature for next year.

Meanwhile, state Revenue Secretary Mark Lynch reported Tuesday that the state's general tax collections have continued to grow, but at a slower rate than in January.

"I think it's a fluctuation between months. January, February and March, that doesn't mean anything," Lynch said. "I think the long predicted recession or slowdown is not very evident in these figures."

He said general tax revenues were up 11.46 percent during February over the same month last year. That amount compares to a 19.3 percent increase in January over the year before.

Gasoline tax revenues grew by 4 percent and net highway fund collections were up 22.7 percent for the month. Lynch said the increase was due to accounting practices and up only 2.75 percent for the eight months.

Sales tax collections were up more than 8 percent.

Can't Park, Goes To Jail

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The lack of parking spaces can be maddening and for Cindy East it was infuriating. Miss East, 18, ended up in jail because she could not find a parking space Tuesday.

She was scheduled to appear in Guilford County Superior Court at 9:30 a.m. to appeal a lower court conviction for running a red light. But by the time she found a parking space and made it to the courtroom, it was 9:35 a.m.

Upon identifying herself to the bailiff, she was jailed.

A startled Miss East was removed from the courtroom to a holding cell nearby, later being allowed to leave briefly to telephone her mother.

She was in the cell for about an hour before being led handcuffed through a tunnel to the county jail across the street from the courthouse.

Some four hours later she was removed from the holding cell and returned to the courtroom.

There she said an official advised her if she accepted the lower court's guilty verdict in the traffic case, there would be no record of her having been jailed for failing to appear in court on time.

Not wanting a mark on her record, Miss East said she reluctantly agreed to accept the verdict. She paid her fine and court costs and was freed.

"I never felt more humiliated in all my life," she said afterward. "I did nothing to justify this treatament."

Deputy L.E. Volle said Miss East should not feel singled out because at least four other late arrivals that morning were jailed.

"Judges usually bend over backwards to give people a break when they are a little late, but it had gotten to the point where too many people were showing up late and the court decided it had to put a halt to it," Volle said.

Gets Life In 9th Murder

JACKSONVILLE, N. C. (AP) — A Camp Lejeune Marine who was quoted as saying he wanted to kill a dozen people was sentenced to life imprisonment Tuesday after being convicted in Onslow Superior Court of second-degree murder in the shooting death of his ninth victim, a fellow Marine.

Sentence was pronounced by Judge George M. Fountain on Pfc. Mark Duane Fletcher, who originally was charged with first-degree murder in the slaying May 23, 1979, of Pfc. Jimmy Leroy Dulaney, of Weirton, W. Va.

Testimony was brought out in the trial that Fletcher had announced that he wanted to kill an even dozen persons and before shooting Daney in the head, he had said, "number nine."

Cpl. Benjamin Duval, also charged with first-degree murder, pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter and turned state's evidence. He testified that the shooting occurred while he and the other two Marines rode along in a car.

Duval will be sentenced later.

Parts of Dulaney's body were found in Onslow and Carteret counties on Aug. 1, nearly three months after the slaying.

Drafting Elsewhere

When President Carter called for a return to draft registration earlier this year, the proposal drew protests across the country. But drafting young men into the armed forces is a tradition that continues in many other countries. Most countries in Western Europe draft young men for at least a year of active duty, often followed by several years in the reserves. In Switzerland, young men spend 17 weeks in basic training, and then are called back for short training periods until the age of 50. The Soviet Union drafts its young men for at least two years. There, too, men must remain in reserve units until age 50.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the only country that currently drafts women?

DEAR ABBY: Here's the situation: Last weekend my 12-year-old son, Danny, asked if he could invite his 13-year-old friend, Steve, to sleep over. Steve had just moved into the neighborhood and Danny was the only friend he had. I said yes.

When I went to make up the beds the next morning I found that Steve had wet the bed! I was really steamed because the mattress was ruined.

I told Danny about it, and he said that Steve never told him that he had a bed-wetting problem before he slept over, but the next morning when he discovered he had had an "accident," he begged Danny not to tell me or his mother about it.

What can I do, Abby? Should I tell Steve's mother (whom I haven't met) and hope she offers to buy me a new mattress?

STEAMED DOWN SOUTH

DEAR STEAMED: I wouldn't. The poor kid probably has suffered enough humiliation as it is. But do tell Danny to tell Steve that since such an "accident" can happen, if he plans to sleep over anywhere, he should bring his own bedding, plus a rubber sheet.

DEAR ABBY: What is this world coming to? Yesterday I received a birth announcement, proudly announcing the birth of a baby girl. The mother is 21, the father is 40. He is married, but is separated from his wife of nearly 20 years! This man's wife and legitimate children live in the city and are well-known.

To top it off, the proud parents signed themselves, "Gator Guy" and "Wooly Woman" — some clan, sect or gang name. We were really stunned. My question: Is a gift in order for an illegitimate child?

TOO OLD TO COPE

DEAR T.O.T.C.: There are no "illegitimate children" — just illegitimate parents. Don't penalize an innocent child because of the circumstances of his birth.

DEAR ABBY: For quite some time I have wanted to ask your opinion regarding the practice of some people who turn their left hand backward in a so-called "friendly" handshake, rather than extend their right hand in the conventional manner.

I vaguely recall having read somewhere that this is a "token" handshake which says, "I don't care for you, but nevertheless here's my left hand to indicate to folks nearby that we know each other." (It's just a cut above a snub.)

RIGHT HAND, PLEASE

DEAR RIGHT: On occasion I've been offered a left hand to shake and I shook it; I'm sure there were times when I have offered my left hand, too. Why look for some hidden meaning? It simply could indicate that one's right hand is otherwise occupied, that the left hand is handier or the right hand is wearing a large ring which invariably cuts into the flesh when grasped too tightly. Or some reason other than a putdown.

Are there questions you can't ask your parents? Get Abby's new booklet: WHAT TEENAGERS OUGHT TO KNOW. Drugs, sex and alcohol are plainly discussed. Send $2 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Dr. Rives Gives DAR Program

Dr. Ralph H. Rives, of the English Department of ECU, spoke to members of the Susanna Coutanch Evans Chapter DAR Thursday at the home of Mrs. James W. Briley.

On the subject of American literature, Dr. Rives explained he has found seven distinct themes, which he described as "noble savage," economic, Puritan, common man, uniquely American, distinctly regional and frontier.

He also praised the lineal descent organizations explaining that a person wants to know who he is and his roots.

Eight patchwork lap robes were completed and will be delivered to the Durham Veterans Hospital by Mrs. Dennis Winstead, chairman of DAR Service for Veteran Patients. Mrs. Everett Ballengee presided and appointed a by-laws committee including Mrs. Donald McLane Jr., Mrs. Larry Whitlow and Mrs. Robert Daniel. Mrs. Ballengee will attend the Continental Congress in April as a delegate.

Dr. Mildred Southwick and Mrs. Winstead assisted the hostess.

U.N. Vote Flap Lives

The flap continues over the United States vote for the U.N. resolution which condemned Israeli settlements in occupied territory.

The vote was cast and then repudiated as a mistake by President Carter, no doubt with an eye on presidential politics in this election year.

Last week, however Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance indicated the vote might not have been a mistake, that the United States wanted to show displeasure about the settlements.

It seems we may be getting at the truth.

The United States has been a strong supporter of Israel, standing firm on its right to exist. It is questionable though, whether we should be supporting Israel in its attempts to make permanent its occupation of what was formerly Arab territory.

The problems of the occupied lands will have to be settled before there can be any real peace in the Middle East. If Israel continues to establish permanent settlements in those areas we can expect that a resolution of the problem is going to be even more difficult.

The U. S. vote condemning the occupied territory settlement might not seem consistant with our policy of support for Israel, but the halting of the settlements is in our interest.

Not That Bad For Highways

Despite the heavy snows of this winter, Department of Transportation officials say our state highway system received relatively light damage.

DOT officials had no estimate of repair costs, since it is difficult to determine what is weather related and what is not.

For Northeastern North Carolina this was the terrible winter of 1980. It wasn't all that bad from a highway maintenance perspective, however.

RALEIGH — A quiet revamping of North Carolina's job training efforts is taking place in the aftermath of last year's back-and-forth argument over the effectiveness of that system.

There are several separate but significant developments which should, this year, produce the beginnings of more attention to the recognized importance of skills training to upgrading salaries and conditions for many workers, and to attracting industries which employ highly skilled labor.

Labor is, after all, one of the most important factors in attracting new firms. Its availability, productivity, quality and facilities for training skills greatly influence location decisions by business.

Coming to a head last year were complaints and charges that even though North Carolina has the structure to train people in the community college and technical institute system, in high school vocational education programs, in apprenticeship training programs, and in a variety of related training efforts, results were spotty.

Blasted

Labor Commissioner John Brooks broadsided the Community College System, complaining that it spent too much time teaching stuff which did not lead to high-skill jobs; and State Auditor Henry Bridges followed with audits which unveiled questionable courses being offered as much to get numbers of students to qualify for funds as any other reason.

Secretary of Commerce D.M. (Lauch) Faircloth went public with a blast at the Community College System for devothing too much attention to artsy-craftsy offerings instead of hard-rock courses leading to jobs.

Gov. Jim Hunt, at first defensive, soon became convinced that major industrial prospects were taking a hard look at the job-training potential of the state, and going into 1980, a number of changes are taking place.

The Community College System is being split from the State Board of Education which runs public schools, and given a single-purpose governing body. A new president is in charge, and steps to cross the dividing line which has kept high school students out of community college courses are gradualy being taken.

Strong links have been established between the community colleges and the industry-hunting Commerce Department, and officials there read considerable significance into the fact that Dr. Larry Blake comes from a science and engineering background with work experience in industry; a background not typical of most professional educators.

BILL NOBLITT

Blake has pulled the Division of Industry Services directly under his command, and both commerce and community colleges have set up regional teams using field representatives working together.

Involved

The North Carolina Industrial Development Association has been included in skills training activities and is working with the community college system to see that training programs respond to real world needs. A new North Carolina Employment and Training Council is underway to coordinate all employment and training activities in the state; pulling together people in the Employment Security Commission, the Labor Department, and various state and federal job programs such as Concentrated Employment and Training Act, Manpower, etc.

Upgrading skills for thousands of Tar Heels to be able to land new jobs with the new industries now moving to North Carolina has become a critical part of both attracting new firms and of improving average wages in this state. Commerce Department figures show that while unemployment is low (about 180,000 are registered for work with Job Service), under-employed people make up a sizable available work force in the state. Over 1.5 million report incomes under

The Boys On The Bus

WASHINGTON — The boys on the bus is the title given to newspaper people who travel with presidential candidates. The phrase was made famous by Tim Crouse in his excellent book about the McGovern-Nixon campaign.

At the beginning of this year's presidential race, there were quite a few buses to choose from. The top political writers and TV commentators had first choice of which bus they wanted to take. Everyone wanted to get on John Connally's bus because it looked as if he had the best chance of beating Reagan for the Republican nomination. George Bush's bus was half-empty before Iowa, as was Howard Baker's. Bob Dole had a mini-bus, and if you wanted to follow John Anderson around, you could always get a ride with him in his Volkswagen.

On the Democratic side, there was a serious bus problem when Teddy Kennedy got into the race. The pundits had predicted that as soon as he challenged Carter, the nomination would be his for the asking. So all the media stars fought to get on Teddy's bus.

Before Iran, President Carter was supposed to campaign, and because he was President, as well as a candidate, TWO buses had been set aside for his press entourage. Then he decided to stay in the White House and send surrogates to campaign for him instead. Nobody fought to get on Fritz Mondale's bus so there were always plenty of seats.

Well, after Iowa, some of the newspapermen started to doubt that they were on the right bus. George Bush's win had given him "momentum." Connally didn't show any, so the big-shot scribes asked their editors for a transfer.

The second team reporters who had been assigned to Bush, because no one thought he had a chance, were angered that they were being kicked off the bus just when the Bush campaign was rolling.

But that's life, they were told, and they could either climb on Reagan's bus or get off the campaign trail.

While this was going on, Teddy stumbled in Iowa. But no one wanted to get off his bus because it was still a good story as to how badly he was doing. Besides, if they did get off, there was no other bus to get on except Jerry Brown's, and you never knew if you'd be sharing it with a rock band.

So everyone took their buses to New Hampshire. The people on Bush's bus were filled with optimism — mostly fed by George Bush. The ones who rode behind Reagan thought it was a hopeless cause.

Teddy's bus had standing room only because the big question in New Hampshire was, could a Kennedy win a primary in his own back yard?

A few more souls rode along with John Anderson, so he had to replace his Volkswagen with a van.

ART BUCHWALD

every by-line reporter piled out of Bush's bus and demanded a seat on Reagan's.

Once again the second team reporters protested, but to no avail. They were told to get on Anderson's bus. Since Anderson didn't have a bus they had to hire their own to follow him.

But after Massachusetts, John Anderson suddenly started catching on with the public. Immediately, many of the top correspondents on Teddy's bus said they wanted to get off and ride with the congressman.

Once again the second team reporters were told that the story was too big for them and they should take another bus. With bitterness some hailed Howard Baker's bus, and a few thought maybe Connally's bus might be worth a ride in South Carolina.

To the editor:

At this critical time, hopefully our nation is finally embarking on an overall fight against inflation. Attention is being focused on inflation-fighting programs. At the present there is a practice in existence that is unfair and, if eliminated, it would make for rectification of wrong-doing and, at the same time, it would help somewhat in holding the line as to inflation.

Federal annuities are tied to the Consumer Price Index and adjusted twice a year and the increases are reflected in the checks received by retired federal Civil Service employees in April and October. Last October the increase was 6.9 percent. In April the semi-annual cost of living increase will be six percent.

Since these benefits are tied to inflation, with respect to the public in general, as citizens and taxpayers, we are being treated unfairly. Taxpayers, directly or indirectly, contribute toward the retired Civil Service employees' annuities (benefits far superior to what retirees in the private sector are accorded). They are keeping up with the inflation at the expense of the tax-paying citizens: many of whom themselves cannot keep up with rising costs and are 'hurting'. This is blatantly unjust. It is incongruous that benefits received by retired federal Civil Service employees are supported by taxpayers who themselves receive no such equivalent benefits. This amounts to a privilege for a special group — democracy?

Helen Y. (Mrs. Malcolm S.) Trupp

To the editor:

I would like to draw attention to an important issue concerning the future of sex education programs in Pitt County.

The board of health is considering proposals to alter or eradicate services involving pregnancy, contraception and abortion. At the present time, any action on this matter has been deferred due to the emotional nature of the topic.

On March 20 a study group, under the Governor's Advocacy Council on Children and Youth, discussed the problem of teenage pregnancy in N. C. Their report contained some very impressive statistics:— N. C. ranked fifth in the nation in proportion of births to mothers under age 19 in 1976.

— There were 17,335 babies born to women under 20 years old in 1978, including 374 to teenagers under 15.

— About 26 percent of the teenage mothers were having their second or third child, and almost half of the mothers were unmarried.

— About one third of the 26,000 pregnancies to teenagers were terminated by abortions in 1978, including 422 abortions in girls under 15.

— One fifth of all 13- and 14-year-olds, and more than half of all 18-year-olds have had sexual intercourse.

I do not wish to advocate abortions or sex among teenagers, but the fact remains that it is occurring much more frequently than most people think.

I agree with Reverend Shumaker that parents are the natural providers of sex education for their children. However, this is not being done effectively, as is shown by the above study.

I feel that it would be a grave error to decrease or eliminate those services to the public. If we are going to solve the problem of teenage pregnancy in N. C., we must make sex education programs available to both parents and teenagers. By making these services available, we may not only be able to lessen the number of unwanted babies, but families may be enhanced by the discussion of sex at home.

Same Issues For Camden

By MARK KREUZWIESER
The Daily Advance

CAMDEN COUNTY, N.C. (AP) — The formality by which larger, more developed counties go about their governmental business is probably as commonplace to them as the laid-back manner in which the commissioners of Camden County look after the welfare of this Northeastern North Carolina community.

Likewise, many issues Camden's commissioners deal with twice a month may seem meager to other areas. The commissioners, however, view them seriously and through the often disjointed official sessions, take the necessary action.

Says 10-year veteran commissioner Macon Johnson: "We have the same interests as any larger county. The problems we face are just as important to us as the problems are important in larger counties. We have small problems and they have large problems, but they're problems just the same."

There is always the usual kidding and casual conversation at the board's meetings, but once business begins, the commissioners like to get the facts straight.

Camden's business is conducted before an audience usually consisting only of news media — and this is totally acceptable to constituents. The non-political community seems more than agreeable to leave the hassles of government to someone else.

Media representaives have complained of the difficulty of keeping accurate accounts of official actions because business is conducted informally. There is little in the way of parliamentary procedure as motions and ordinances are voted on with a casual, "Sure, I'll go along with that attitude."

"I feel like we're doing a right good job," said board chairman T.F. "Buck" Leary. "I think if you're relaxed you can run the county better."

"We like to be relaxed to make judgments," said Johnson.

"We never get radical," said commissioner Sam Shaw. "More can come out of meeting when we're all relaxed."

Camden County, nestled indiscretely between issue-torn Currituck County and comparatively prosperous Pasquotank County, rests in a docile state. Most of its 5,000 inhabitants work on farms that stretch to the horizon, commute to next-door-neighbor Elizabeth City or the bulging job market just across the state border in Norfolk.

In 1978, Camden's three-seat commissioners' board got an additional two members: farmer Sam Shaw, a black, and Kenneth Whitehurst, a retiree from the Norfolk Naval Shipyard. Paul DeBerry, retired from Ford Motor Co., also unseated incumbent Franklin Williams that year.

Shaw is the first black ever to sit on the Camden County Board of Commissioners.

Shaw, 61, said he ran for commissioner because, "I thought blacks should be concerned in the politics of Camden County."

"I think it shows that Camden County citizens aren't racist," said Leary, a 60-year-old corn, wheat and soybean farmer. "It certainly shows it when no opposition runs against him. He's done a good job so far."

When first elected to the board in 1974, Leary said his main target as a board member was to keep down county taxes.

"I wanted to run the county with least taxes as possible," he said, "but with as many benefits to the people as possible."

Is he succeeding?

"I'm hoping so."

Kenneth Whitehurst, 60, decided to run for county commissioner in 1977 "because voters needed some choice."

Whitehurst, who owns about 45 acres of farmland near his home in South Mills, said being elected county commissioner was his first dealing in politics.

"I didn't know nothing about politics, I'm just doing the best I can," he said. "I didn't have a platform."

Paul DeBerry, 55, who grew up in Richmond County, Va., is a retired mechanic who practices his old occupation now as a hobby in his backyard garage.

Also without prior political experience, DeBerry said he sought a position as county commissioner mainly out of curiosity.

"I decided to see what was going on," he said. "And no one was running against (the incumbent). I've always tried to treat people like I would want them to treat me. I feel I need to look out for the people in the county.

"If I felt like I wasn't working for the people then I would get out," he added.

Now commissioners Leary, Johnson, Shaw, Whitehurst and DeBerry wrestle with such problems as a countywide water system, a behind-schedule county real

Strength For Today

ROLE MODELS

"The apple never falls far from the tree."

This old adage means that as parents are, so will their children be. All of us are making or unmaking the lives of our children every hour of the day. We will never be so old that we will not influence our children. They are ourselves in another form. They may turn out to be far different from ourselves in ideals and tastes and accomplishments, but there will be an invisible but palpable bond which ties us to them. Like father, like son; like mother, like daughter. Or perhaps the other way about.

All of which means that a serious responsibility rests upon us. If the children turn out badly, then there has been a failure somewhere along the line. It is discouraging to realize that failure often begins in the home, but conversely, it is most gratifying to realize that success and happiness for our children also begin in the home.

Dealing With Decades Ahead

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The question is how Americans will communicate with each other for decades to come.

The issues behind the question are so complex a congressman recently observed there aren't "eight people outside the telephone industry" who understand them.

That problem has defied four years of congressional work. The latest bill drafted has, like its predecessors, become mired in controversy.

The bill seeks to broaden and place in law recent decisions by the Federal Communications Commission allowing other firms to compete with the world's largest company, American Telephone & Telegraph.

And AT&T, better known as the Bell System, actually is worried about the latest failure to produce legislation.

Why would AT&T want to support efforts to change rules that have allowed it to dominate a $50 billion-a-year industry?

"It's a matter of self-preservation," says a top FCC official, referring to a Justice Department suit aimed at breaking up the Bell System. "AT&T wants to tell the judge that everything's been taken care of by Congress."

AT&T officials deny harboring any hope a bill will help them in their court battle. One official, requesting anonymity, agrees that Bell is lobbying, but only "for something we can live with."

Bell would like to get into data processing but has been blocked by a consent decree that prohibits its entry into unregulated markets.

Congress, in the name of competition, would unshackle AT&T from the consent decree while still requiring it to offer basic telephone service at affordable rates.

On the other side, specialized firms wishing to provide longdistance service between particular cities could compete directly with AT&T. They would have guaranteed access to local Bell exchanges with a modicum of FCC regulation.

The manufacture and sale of telephone receivers and other equipment would be deregulated, and the telecommunications field would be open to much freer entry by computer companies such as IBM.

It would appear there's something for everyone. With its antitrust case scheduled for trial in September, however, the Justice Department is understandably concerned.

Bell is so large, some argue, it can use its massive revenues to unfairly subsidize areas where it's competing with other firms.

The bill would allow AT&T to retain its existing corporate structure, but to avoid crosssubsidization, it would require creation of new subsidiaries for competitive services or products.

"There's a different mood toward regulators now," notes the FCC official. "Congress is trying to tie everything down in law; regulation by legislation. Congress couldn't have done by legislation what the FCC has done to spur competition over the last 15 years, but now they're trying to draw a final blueprint for 1990."

estate tax valuation project, an improved landfill and an ongoing feud with the Albemarle Regional Planning and Development Commission.

Camden commissioners recently severed their membership with the Albemarle commission, a community-service organization consisting of representatives from 10 area counties. The commissioners said their withdrawal was because the county, according to Johnson, was "getting nothing out of it" for its yearly $3,500 dues.

Commissioners were flabbergasted last year when they found that an alarming number of county folks did not want a county water system. It would raise taxes, some said. It would do a "belly whopper" and residents would be stuck with picking up the tab, others said.

Johnson, often the most talkative of the commissioners, wishes that more Camden citizens would show interest in county affairs. Usually the commissioners conduct their meetings without the presence of any county residents, unless "there's a controversy," he said.

"I think we need more participation from the residents," Johnson said. "I'd like them to see it's not an easy job. I think everyone should come, it's open to everyone. We'd like to have some criticism, we welcome constructive criticism."

"I guess it means they think we're doing a good job," Leary optimistically explains. "We don't get any complaints. If more people would participate they'd know better what the situation was. Any how, they're welcome to come."

"You know, I think about it in two ways," Shaw said. "Sometimes I think people don't come to the meeting when maybe we're doing alright. No one complaining. But then again, you like people to come in. Even with the county being so small we can't keep up with all the problems. The people have to tell us."

Said Whitehurst, "It don't worry me too much. If the people don't like what I'm doing they can just vote me out."

"A lot of people just sit back and won't say anything until something goes wrong," DeBerry said.

"We don't pull any punches," Johnson said of the board. "If you've got the confidence of the people and you're doing the best job you can, that's what the job is all about."

But it was too late. Both Connally and Baker had run out of gas.

So now for all intents and purposes there are three buses worth buying a ticket on — Ronald Reagan's, John Anderson's, and Carter's, if he ever takes it out of the White House garage.

You may be wondering what happened to all the second team reporters who kept being shunted from bus to bus, as the primary picture evolved. They have just been ordered by their editors to come home — by train.

Found Gas Well On The Property

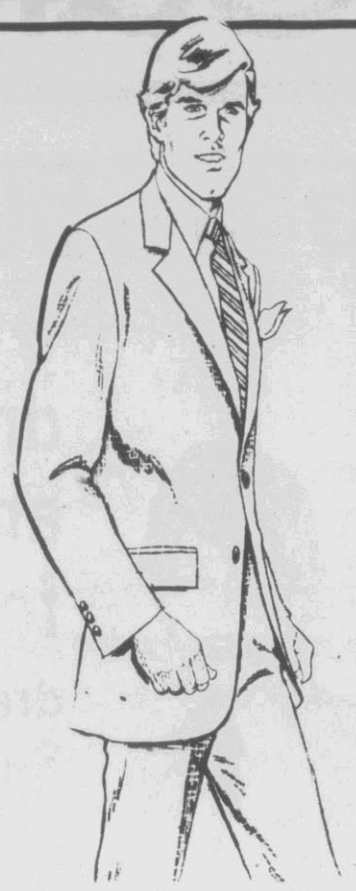

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Benedictine Sisters of Erie hope to save more than $23,000 a year with Josepha 1980, the natural gas well they discovered on their 100-acre property.

Armed with $100,000 from the sale of stocks given them several years ago, the teaching and social service order of 140 nuns hired a company to drill the well. The nuns discovered they were sitting atop enough of the natural resource to heat their convent for 20 years.

"I see this well as a kind of support and security for the future ministries of our younger sisters," said Sister Joan Chittister, prioress of Mount Saint Benedict.

Trio Attack Practices Of John Ingram

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Three Democratic candidates for state Insurance Commissioner met in Greensboro for a forum Tuesday night and leveled a sharp attack at John Ingram, the current commissioner, who was not present.

Ingram's wife, Ginny, represented him at the forum sponsored by the University of North Carolina at Greensboro School of Business and Economics.

"A few months ago, this could have been a staff conference at the insurance department," said Roy Rabon, a former chief deputy to Ingram, referring to the fact that all three candidates at the forum had worked under Ingram in the past. "He (Ingram) missed a lot of those. I think he should have been at those then and he should be here now."

Rabon said Ingram's absence at the forum was indicative of his handling of the commissioner's office. He charged Ingram with handing out simplistic answers to the public, including claims of saving millions of dollars, and said availability of insurance in the state was the real problem.

"I've often wondered why my insurance isn't free if all those millions of dollars have been saved. If you can buy steak at 50 cents a pound but none is available at the store, what does 50 cents a pound mean?"

Rabon left his job as deputy to the commissioner last June. He says he was not fired.

James Long, another candidate, said before the forum began that he was fired twice during 1976 from his post as deputy to the commissioner. Kenneth Brown, also a candidate and former chief deputy, said he was fired Feb. 4 after he filed to run for the commissioner's office.

"I was fired," Brown said, "but that is not a reason to vote for me. The office needs someone who will bring about reasonable, effective insurance regulation."

Mrs. Ingram did not answer any of the charges leveled by the candidates but talked about her husband's accomplishments during his seven years in office.

She said he has abolished the assigned-risk program and age and sex discrimination in premium costs for auto insurance.

Earlier in the day, Long charged at a news converence that Ingram was a political opportunist whose record was one of "dismal malfeasance.

"John Ingram is no more than a political opportunist who has used the citizens of North Carolina to make political hay out of your insurance problems," he said.

Child Phones At Random

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — When the information desk telephone rang at Oak Knoll Naval Hospital, corpsman Richard Janushan thought it was a prank.

"It was a little kid, and I couldn't quite understand him," the 24-year-old sailor said. "At first I thought he was speaking a foreign language, but then I realized it was definitely a very strong British accent."

The boy said he was 10 years old, that his name was Gerard Love, and that he had dialed at random from Corby, North Hamptonshire, England.

During a 10-minute chat Tuesday that would cost about $15, the youngster said he was looking for a pen pal.

"I told him I would write him, and he gave me his address," said Janushan. "Then he said, 'Can I call you again tomorrow?' I told him I would be off work then, but he said he would call me Sunday morning."

Roger Orr of the Pacific Telephone public information office said a check showed there was no telephone in Corby listed to the name of Love. But he said Isabel Purdy at the Corby police station confirmed there is a family by the name of Love in that town. They have no telephone.

FIREFIGHT

DAVAO CITY, Philippines (AP) — Government troops killed four Moslem rebels in a firefight that lasted more than 24 hours, the military said today. A rifle, grenades and uniforms of the Bangsa Moro Army were taken from the slain men's bodies in a village near this southern Philippine city.

New Rules For Credit Users Shape Up

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Your pocketful of plastic may carry less clout than it used to.

The impact of the recent credit controls announced by President Carter varies according to where you live, the type of credit you have and how much you spend.

More than a week after Carter unveiled his anti-inflation program, including moves designed to down consumer spending by making it harder to buy now and pay later, lenders are still trying to figure out exactly what to do.

"We don't see any clear cut trend," Tim Lynch, a spokesman for MasterCard (formerly Master Charge), said on Tuesday. "Most banks aren't promoting new cards ... Others are making the qualifications more stringent."

U.S. Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., chairman of the House Banking subcommittee on consumer affairs, called officials of the Federal Reserve Board to testify at a hearing on the controls today. Another hearing by another subcommittee was scheduled for next week.

Among the things faced by the millions of Americans who already have credit cards are bigger minimum monthly payments, limits on cash advances, annual fees and higher interest charges.

Different cards, however, have different strings. There is also a difference between the "travel and entertainment" cards like American Express or Diners Club, whose customers generally must pay their bills in full each month, and the bank and store cards which offer users the option of paying a little bit at a time and incurring a finance charge on the balance.

James Stetler of Diners Club was quoted by Advertising Age, a trade journal, as saying: "The new ruling is meant to restrain consumer credit and not business expenses. Diners Club members use the card primarily for business expenses."

A full-page American Express ad in The Washington Post on Tuesday, addressed to cardholders, said: "You are expected to pay your bill in full every month ... You don't get in over your head. That's why our Cardmembers can continue to use the American Express Card in the manner in which they always have ... responsibly."

Where possible, banks and other creditors are raising interest rates. In places where state usury laws put a ceiling on interest, lenders are experiementing with new fees. In Miami, for example, the Southeast Banking Corporation said it would charge MasterCard and Visa holders an $18 annual fee, beginning next month.

Citibank, the nation's second largest commercial bank and one of the most aggressive in the field of consumer credit during much of the past decade, announced new rules on Monday. Among the changes: no new MasterCard or Visa cards; minimum monthly payments of $15 for current cardholders; no installment loans to new customers.

Many of the changes began even before Carter's action. Lenders, faced with the high cost of borrowing money themselves, found it was no longer profitable to grant loans at current rates.

Sellout Crowd Was 'Mellow'

CINCINNATI (AP) — A sellout crowd of 16,000 greeted rock singer Linda Ronstadt at the Riverfront Coliseum here, but police said the crowd was "very mellow" and there was no repeat of the crush that killed 11 young fans last year.

Some 50 police officers were on duty at the coliseum Tueday, but officials reported just one arrest, for drunkenness — and 82 citations, mostly for drug use.

The tough security was a result of the Dec. 3 stampede of fans trying to get the best seats for a concert by the rock group The Who. Police arrested or cited 163 persons at Friday night's ZZ Top concert, the first major rock concert since the December incident.

None Injured In Roof-Collapse

ANTIOCH, Calif. (AP) — No one was injured but damages could total several thousand dollars following the collapse of a section of roof at the high school here, officials say.

The 40-by-60 foot section collapsed Tuesday after heavy rains. The Antioch High School auditorium was not occupied at the time, said school superintendent Francis Fry.

Officials were investigating to determine whether the 26-year-old structure supported by prestressed concrete beams may have been damaged in recent earthquakes.

Pope Announces Tour Of Africa

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II announced today he will make a six-nation tour of Africa, to pay homage to what he called that "dear continent."

The trip will last from May 2-12, and include stops in Zaire, the Congo, Kenya, Ghana, Upper Volta and the Ivory Coast.

"I am happy to make this announcement," the white-robed pontiff told some 10,000 pilgrims and tourists gathered in the Paul VI Hall for his weekly general audience, moved inside from St. Peter's Square because of rain.

The pope issued regrets for those countries in Africa whose invitations he had to turn down but said with his tour "I want to pay homage to the whole of Africa," calling it that "dear continent."

Since his election as pope in October 1978, the Polish-born pontiff has visited the Dominican Republic and Mexico, Poland, Ireland and the United States and Turkey.

Pope John Paul's trip will be the second by a Roman Catholic pontiff to Africa. Pope Paul VI paid a three-day visit to Uganda in 1969.

Agreed With Sen. Kennedy, Polled 'For' Carter

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Week after week, Democratic primary voters have agreed with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy on the issues, but voted for President Carter.

On Tuesday in New York and Connecticut, that paradox ended and Kennedy cashed in, Associated Press-NBC News polls of Democratic voters say.

In both states, voters said they agreed with Kennedy's policies, not with Carter's. And they said they trusted Kennedy enough to believe he would do what he says — and thus they voted for him.

Thus, in one sense, Kennedy finally got the test he had asked for repeatedly in the past weeks — a vote on the issues.

On the Republican side in Connecticut, George Bush won his third primary by hitting Ronald Reagan where he was not thought vulnerable. Bush split both the conservative voters and the rock-solid GOP rank and file with the former California governor.

Throughout the primary season, Democratic voters have said they agreed with Kennedy, not Carter, on key issues. Nonetheless, they provided Carter with a long string of primary victories.

Tuesday that changed and Kennedy broke the string.

In New York, Democratic voters favored wage and price controls by a 56-24 margin, the AP-NBC News poll of 2,189 Democratic voters showed. And among those who favored controls, Kennedy won votes by a 66-32 edge over Carter. Those who opposed controls split their vote.

In Connecticut, where voters backed a moratorium on nuclear power plant construction 55-32. Kennedy, who has said he favors an end to nuclear power plant construction, won the backers of a building halt by 51-40 and again split the opponents with the president, according to the AP-NBC News poll of 1,497 Democratic voters in that state.

Another key to the Kennedy victory in New York was the overwhelming backing of Jewish Democrats. Kennedy took the Jewish vote, which was 38 percent of the Democrats, by a 79 to 19 margin.

This can be traced in large part to displeasure over the Carter administration's Middle East policy, particularly its recent vote in the United Nations against Israeli settlements on the West Bank and its subsequent repudiation of the vote.

About 41 percent of the Democratic voters gave the Carter administration good marks for its Middle East policy, while 55 percent gave it low marks. The rest were undecided. Jewish voters in particular were unhappy with the policies, with 37 percent giving it high ratings and 62 percent low marks.

The reason voters pulled the lever for Kennedy was that — this time — the Massachusetts senator, not the president, was the candidate they trusted.

Space Hearing Set March 31

RALEIGH — The first in a series of five public hearings on space requirements of the North Carolina State Library, the State Archives and the North Carolina Museum of History will be held on Monday, March 31.

This meeting will be held at Tryon Palace in New Bern and will begin at 2:30 p.m. The 1979 General Assembly established an eight-member committee to study the facility needs of the agencies of the Dept. of Cultural Resources.

The present Archives and History /State Library Building, constructed in 1968/69, is no longer adequate to house the library, the archives and the museum as demand for these services has expanded, according to W. Osborne Lee, Jr., committee chairman.

At the time of the building's occupation in 1969, a State Library building was tentatively planned. That building has never been built — but a State Library building at an estimated cost of $17 million is now being proposed.

The public hearings are being held to determine the extent of needs and the public's desire for these services. Mrs. Sara W. Hodgkins, Secretary of Cultural Resources, will be attending with the committee. They hope to get ideas, opinions and comments from interested citizens on the proposed new State Library building and also on a ten-year development plan for the present Archives and History facility.

Persons wishing to be heard will be allotted about five minutes each to make statements. Other hearings will be held during April in Raleigh, Greensboro, Asheville and Charlotte.

When the five hearings have been completed, committee members will compile ideas and suggestions into a workable plan for submission to the legislature.

'Spring Happening' Planned Saturday

The Pitt Therapeutic Recreation Council will celebrate its third annual Spring Happening at Carolina East Mall Saturday.

The event, coordinated by Recreation Services at Pitt Co. Memorial Hospital, will represent 26 Pitt County organizations that provide therapeutic recreation programs for special populations. Arts, crafts and baked goods will be on sale.

Margy Trotter, coordinator of the "Happening," says a bluegrass band, a clown alley, a dance improvisation group, a mime, a gospel group and others will provide entertainment. Exhibits will be open from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.

The Spring Happening was developed to promote community involvement and awareness for the special populations of the county, Ms. Trotter said.

Benefit Dance Set In Greene

SNOW HILL — A Benefit Dance to raise funds for the Greene County Association for Retarded Citizens will be held in Walstonburg on Saturday, March 29.

The dance is being sponsored by the Greene County Association of Square Dancers and will be held at the Walstonburg School Auditorium, beginning at 7:30 p.m. and continuing until 10:30.

Adminssion is $4 per square dance couple and $1 for spectators.

Sixty percent of the proceeds realized from the dance will be used to aid in transportation of retarded citizens in Greene County to the sheltered workshop in Wilson. The remaining 40 percent will be used in various projects of the association.

Truck And Car In Collision

A truck driven by Morris Lee Foye of 2710 Memorial Dr. and a car operated by Robin Hoggard of Route 4, Williamston, collided about 9:50 a.m. yesterday on First Street, 10 feet East of the Washington Street intersection.

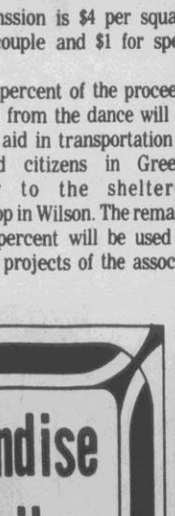

Police Department investigators estimated damage to the Hoggard car at $600. No damage resulted to the truck, officers said.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Rain is expected in the forecast period until Thursday morning from the eastern Gulf to the eastern Plains and Midwest, changing to show through Minnesota. Showers are forecast for west Texas and New Mexico. Snow flurries are forecast for the northern Rockies. Warm weather is due for both coasts but inland areas will be cold. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press

Partly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures are expected over North Carolina for the next several days and there is little chance of rain before the end of the week

Temperatures dropped during the night to the 20s in some of the higher elevations and ranged up to the upper 30s and lower 40s over other western sections and to the mid and upper 40s in the east.

Today, the prospect was for high readings in the 50s in the mountains and northeast section ranging to the low to mid 60s elsewhere. Highs are expected to be about the same Thursday.

Small craft advisories were in effect today for the sounds and coastal waters as winds increased to 15 to 25 knots from the northeast.

Tuesday was a nice spring day with partly cloudy skies. Temperatures climbed geneally to the 60s but went to the 70s over some southeastern sections.

Ask Parole For Isabel Peron

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Attorneys for former President Isabel Peron have asked judges here to order her release under a law permitting parole for prisoners who have served two-thirds of their sentences.

Mrs. Peron, imprisoned since the armed forces overthrew her in 1976, faces a maximum sentence of six years in prison in two of the four corruption cases for which she is being tried.

Defense lawyer Julio I. Arriola asked the civilian judges trying each of her four cases to order her freedom. The military government has asked for a two-year sentence in the third case against Mrs. Peron and has not yet presented evidence in the fourth. The judge trying a fifth corruption charge acquitted her last month.

Mrs. Peron was elected vice president on a ticket with her husband, President Juan Peron. She succeeded to the presidency on his death in 1974.

Crowd Watched Girl Burn Alive

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — "They could have saved her," the trucker said. "We screamed for help but they wouldn't help us."

David Bosworth, 44, says the teen-age daughter of his prospective wife was burned to death Monday when his truck, in which she was a passenger, flipped over and burst into flames. He said a crowd of curious spectators stood by on the Georgia freeway and watched as Bosworth tried to free Nell Casey, 16, before the truck exploded.

"There were truck drivers up there and I know they had fire extinguishers," Bosworth said. "The medical examiner told me she would have lived if we had got her out of the fire."

Asserts Communists Were First To Attack

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — District Attorney Mike Schlosser conceded Tuesday that the prosecution's evidence so far shows that fatal gunfire erupted at an anti-Ku Klux Klan rally after Communist Workers Party members attacked vehicles carrying sympathizers of the Ku Klux Klan and Nazis.

Schlosser also testified that the prosecution's evidence indicates the first shot came from the Klan and Nazi vehicles but not from one of the 14 defendants facing murder and felony rioting charges.

The testimony came during the second day of a hearing in Guilford Superior Court on a motion to dismiss charges against the 14 defendants.

The 14, who claim ties to the Klan or Nazi parties, are charged in connection with the deaths of five CWP members at a Nov. 3 rally in a Greensboro public housing project.

Attorneys for the defendants have claimed the 14 men were selected unfairly for prosecution because they were sympathizers with the Klan or Nazis.

Schlosser said Tuesday that indictments against other persons, including members of the CWP, will be presented to the grand jury before the first trial starts. He also said there is at least one person in the Klan and Nazi caravan of vehicles that could be charged with a felony.

"No one has been excluded. No one is out of the woods yet," Schlosser said.

The hearing was to go on today, with defense lawyers calling witnesses. Tuesday afternoon Presiding Judge James Long went into his chambers to view nearly three hours of television film of the Nov. 3 incident.

Long said Tuesday he may hold an evidentiary hearing to determine if there was an intentional failure by the district attorney's office to indict others. If such a hearing is held, additional witnesses including police and media representatives would be subpoenaed.

At one point in his testimony, Schlosser said he briefly considered and then rejected the idea of offering immunity to members of the CWP in order to gain their cooperation.

"It was discussed and then discounted," Schlosser said. "The state has no intention of granting immunity to anyone who was involved in criminal activity on November 3."

Eleven of the 14 under indictment are charged with first-degree murder and rioting. The other three are charged with engaging in a riot.

Lorne Greene Grand Marshal

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Lorne Greene will be parade grand marshal, but a Panorama City housewife will be guest of honor at the 92nd Tournament of Roses.

Marilyn Ludwig was one of seven persons who suggested the theme chosen for the New Year's Day, 1981, event — "The Great Outdoors." Her names was selected in a drawing of the seven entries, among 4,500 submitted in a month-long contest.

Greene, who starred in the long-running television series, "Bonanza" will be grand mar shalnof the parade, officials announced Tuesday. Green is a former chairman of the National Wildlife Federation and is on the board of directors for the American Horse Protection Association.

Mrs. Ludwig and her husband will be guests at the parade, a luncheon and the Rose Bowl football game.

Dog Ate His Tax Refund

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Eric Nystrom will have to go to state officials to get a new tax refund check. His reason — the dog ate it. Honest.

Nystrom, 20, son of State Sen. Jack Nystrom, returned home Monday night and found that his 7-month-old basset hound, Alice, had mangled his Iowa income tax refund check for $195.16.

Alice declined to eat the portion of the check declaring the amount due, but she did consume the rest, making it nonnegotiable.

Nystrom, R-Boone, says he and his son pondered what to do.

One idea, he said, was to see if the consumed portion of the check could be recovered...ah, that is, to see if Alice digested the paper.

They waited a while with no result.

Nystrom said he would approach state officials to get a new check. "I'm going to tell them that the first one was no good, that it didn't pass," he joked.

Get One Free

RALEIGH, N. C. (AP) — An auto dealership has come up with an expensive way to get rid of some of its gas burning luxury cars. Buy one and get a compact free.

Leith Lincoln-Mercury is giving free a 1980 Mercury Bobcat compact to the purchaser of a 1979 Collectors Series Lincoln Mark V.

At least two buyers have taken the company up since the offer was made Sunday, driving off with a $20,000 Mark V and a free $5,000 Bobcat.

"The Lincoln was not selling well because of the gas situation," said Arthur B. Sperry Jr. of the advertising agency that came up with the idea.

"That, in addition to increasing interest rates made it costly to keep a large number of expensive cars on the lot," Sperry said. "They will be losing money and that's how anxious they are to sell them," Sperry said in reference to the Mark V.

CHAIRMAN DIVORCED

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) Claiming irreconcilable differences, Tennessee Valley Authority Chairman S. David Freeman has obtained an uncontested divorce from his wife of 30 years. The couple have three grown children.

Shrinking Buying Power Reflected By Economy

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The buying power of American wage earners is shrinking at the fastest rate in at least 16 years because of the high inflation that has gripped the economy, the government reports.

The Labor Department said Tuesday that real spendable earnings in private industry fell 7.3 percent between February 1979 and last month because consumer prices have risen faster than wages.

The decline is the largest recorded by the department since it began collecting monthly information on workers' buying power in 1964. The previous record decline for a 12-month period was posted in January, when worker purchasing power fell 6.7 percent from a year earlier.

The decline in spendable earnings stems from an accelerating inflation rate for the first two months of 1980.

The government said in a separate report Tuesday that consumer prices in February jumped 1.4 percent for the second straight month — a new sign inflation may be settling in at an 18 percent annual rate.

For all of last year, consumer prices rose 13.3 percent and worker spending power declined 5.1 percent because wages did not increase enough to keep pace with the higher prices.

The government's measure of buying power — or "real spendable earnings" — reflects how much money a married worker with three dependents has to spend after deducting taxes and taking inflation into account.

According to department figures, buying power declined by 1.4 percent in February alone, after falling 1.3 percent in January. While consumer prices increased 1.4 percent in each of those months, average weekly earnings showed almost no increase.

The department estimated that average after-tax weekly earnings of a worker with three dependents stood at a seasonally adjusted figure of $201.26 last month. But that amounted to only $84.85 in terms of what a worker could buy in 1967.

One year ago, workers' average after-tax earnings stood at $190.38 a week, but that was worth $91.66 in 1967 dollars, the government said.

In the same report, the department noted that over the last 13 years, workers' average hourly earnings have stayed ahead of inflation by only a razor-thin margin. Hourly earnings before adjusting for inflation increased 142.2 percent since 1967. But with inflation taken into account, earnings have risen only 2.1 percent.

Meanwhile, R. Robert Russell, director of the inflation-monitoring Council on Wage and Price Stability, said Tuesday that consumer prices will keep rising at about February's pace for several months as hikes in interest rates and wholesale energy prices show up at the consumer level.

But Russell told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress he believed inflation had peaked and would begin declining later this year. He based his forecast on an assumption that surging increases in gasoline prices would moderate and interest rates would fall from their record levels.

Terminates 154 State Jobs Due Funding Cuts

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Anticipated federal budget cuts have prompted Sarah T. Morrow, state secretary of human resources, to terminate funding for the jobs of 154 North Carolinians hired under a federal social services program.

Ms. Morrow terminated $3.5 million in contracts her department has with state colleges and universities to train the social service workers under Title XX.

The state received $65 million in federal funds for the 1980 budget to pay for direct services to poor and handicapped clients and $2.3 million for training contracts under Title XX.

The cut eliminates continuing education programs for social workers and training for managers and workers in day care centers and group homes.

The major contractor is the University of North Carolina system, which has $2.9 million in federal contracts at 11 of its 16 campuses. UNC-Chapel Hill receives the largest amount of any contractor with $1.5 million for 57.7 positions.

Dr. Donald J. Stedman, UNC's vice president for research and public service programs, said most individuals trained with the funds are full-time professionals in social service careers.

Officials said they could not determine the exact number of persons who will lose their jobs because in some cases Title XX funds pay only portions of salaries.

Ms. Morrow said the cuts were made because the state's funds have run out and Congress has not appropriated money to continue the program.

Thomas J. Cheek, former state president of the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, said the proposed cost-of-living adjustment from twice to once a year "is particularly disastrous in view of the fact that about 70 percent of our annuitants are living at or below the poverty level."

He said the approximately 20,000 pensioned military and civilian retirees and widows in North Carolina believe Congress is "morally bound to keep up with the cost-of-living adjustments."

James Stewart, whose Labor Department office protects migrant workers in the state, said he is concerned that sufficient travel funds may not be available for enforcement of the Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act.

"I know that we'll have to curtail our meetings with employers, employer groups, people who would like to know how to voluntarily comply with the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act," he said.

Haitian Exodus Hitting Florida

MIAMI (AP) — Haitian refugees, fleeing across shark-infested waters in an exodus from poverty, are scrambling ashore in Florida in record numbers, beaching their rickety boats along the wealthy Gold Coast from Key Biscayne to Hollywood.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service said three more boats arrived Tuesday with at least 140 men, women and children, some guided in by suspected smugglers.

The new arrivals brought the total to an estimated 1,250 Haitians known to have landed here this month, said William Metcalf, assistant INS district director for investigations. The previous high was 637 in October 1979.

Authorities weren't sure what has caused the sudden influx. "It's spring," Metcalf speculated. "The waters are calm."

An estimated 12,000 Haitians are now believed to be in South Florida, brought by makeshift vessels barely able to make it across the Florida Straits.

On Monday, 98 Haitians arrived at Miami Beach, jammed elbow-to-elbow in a boat so crowded many were hanging partially overboard.

A Norwegian tanker Tuesday picked up 13 Haitians adrift in a disabled 24-foot pleasure craft about 70 miles east of Cape Canaveral, the Coast Guard said.

No one knows how many Haitians have died in the attempt to reach Florida. However, five children and a young mother drowned 450 yards off West Palm Beach last August, and several others drowned this winter off Fort Lauderdale on a trip from the Bahamas to Florida.

Trade Zone Status For Two Ports

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — The State Ports Authority on Tuesday approved an application for foreign trade zone status for the Wilmington and Morehead City ports.

The executive director of the SPA also reported that unfavorable economic conditions have held net profits at the ports below projected levels although they are still ahead of those for last year.

Commerce Secretary D.M. "Lauch" Faircloth told the SPA board of directors at its monthly meeting that trade zone status is almost a necessity in view of the competitive situation.

Officials said an application could be submitted by early May for approval by the U.S. Departments of Commerce and the Treasury and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Faircloth estimated that it would be August or early September before the state would be notified of the federal decision on the application.

North Carolina already has one of the nation's 50 approved foreign trade zones in Charlotte. The zone is a free port where goods may be stored, processed or assembled without payment of any duties or taxes except local property levies.

In other business, the board learned that for the first eight months of the current fiscal year ending June 30, the two state ports recorded net profits totaling $6,786,485. Net profits for the same period last year totaled $6,152,310.

The SPA projected the ports' net earnings for the first eight months of this fiscal year would be $7,098,232, or $311,747 above the actual net earnings.

William M.A. Greene, SPA executive director, reported that although operating expenses for the ports have been lower than expected, other factors have increased, cutting into revenues.

Such factors, Greene said, include increased labor costs as the result of a union contract and higher fuel costs that are forcing ships to be packed fuller and that are decreasing the number of visits to the ports.

Greene said that even with fewer dockings, there has been an increase in tonnage.

W.R. Williamson, who presented the revenue report, said the profit at Morehead City, traditionally the less profitable of the two ports, is encouraging. The port has operated at a deficit in the past but has reported a net profit of $2,059,115 for the first eight months of this fiscal year.

The Wilmington port reported net profits totaling $4,682,037 for the fiscal year to date and a $50,202 profit for February. For the fiscal year to date, the Wilmington port cleared $429,223.

N.C. Motorists Face Insurance Cost Hike

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina drivers face at least a $5 a year increase in personal automobile insurance premiums beginning April 15, the insurance industry announced Tuesday.

The state's insurance companies will begin collecting a 6 percent increase at that time.

The increase, the highest allowed by state law, will affect premiums on all liability, collision and comprehensive insurance policies.

A spokesman for the industry said the new rate will bring in more than $30 million in new revenue and will amount to $5 a year for drivers with the minimum required automobile liability insurance.

The announcement came as the North Carolina Reinsurance Facility sent a sixth case on appeal to state courts. Insurance Commissioner John Ingram has rejected each of the filings.

Under state law, proposed increases can be placed in effect and the higher premiums collected while the commissioner's action is on appeal. The money would be refunded if the court upholds the commissioner's ruling.

Bruce N. Fritz of Charlotte, chairman of the reinsurance facility's board of governors, said Tuesday that despite inflation of more than 13 percent, no auto insurance rate increases were put into effect last year.

Fritz added that the federal government's index for car repairs and maintenance has increased 153 percent since 1967 while per capita income in the state has risen 171 percent.

"North Carolina personal auto insurance rates have increased 49 percent in the same period," Fritz said. "I think this explains why the facility appeals every time the commissioner of insurance rejects proposed rates which are supported by statistical evidence."

State law requires the facility, which insures motorists who are unable to find insurance through normal channels, to issue polices to any motorist needing coverage. All insurance companies doing business in the state share in any losses.

The facility's governors also said Tuesday that a 5.3 percent surcharge already ordered for April through June would be continued for the next three months to offset losses suffered during the last quarter of 1979.

Pinewood Derby Held

Cub Scout Pack 205 of Memorial Baptist Church held its annual Pinewood Derby on Monday evening.

L. L. Everette finished first in the event, followed by Jason Prescott and Andy Everett.

In other competition, Jamie Bullock won the judging for the most unusual car, with Geoff Smith placing second and Alan Brock third. Howard Collins was judged to have the best looking car, with Jason Prescott and Mike Sturtevant receiving second and third awards.

Judges for the Pinewood competition were Gus Andrews and Jack Whichard.

District competition will be held on Saturday, April 12 at 1 p.m. at Carolina East Mall.

Announcements were made regarding the father-son days scheduled for June 20 and July 12 at Camp Bonner.

VEPCO 2nd-Highest In November Outages

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The U.S. Department of Energy has released figures showing that Virginia Electric and Power Co. had the second highest percentage of unscheduled power plant outages for the nation's large utilities in November.

The monthly report showed that 34.8 percent of Vepco's power plants' generating capacity were out of service due to "forced outages" during the utility's peak demand that month.

Of the 270 major electric companies, only Portland General Electric Co. in Oregon had a higher amount of forced outages at 37.7 percent.

The other utilities serving North Carolina had considerably fewer outages than Vepco. Duke Power Co. had about 1.5 percent of its generating capacity out and Carolina Power & Light Co. had about 3 percent out of use.

Lawrence J. Prete, section branch chief of power operations for the energy department, said forced outages can result from unexpected equipment problems or for regulatory reasons, such as a plant being taken out of use to avoid environmental problems.

Controversy has surrounded Vepco, which serves 22 northeastern North Carolina counties, because the utilty currently charges rates higher than Duke or CP&L.

One reason for the higher rates, company officials have said, is the utility's higher fuel costs. That cost can be multiplied when a utility is forced to purchase power from other utilities during plant outages.

In November, Vepco had a generating capacity of 9,792 megawatts, of which 3,610 megawatts were in use. Duke had 12,322 megawatts of capacity in November, with 10,327 megawatts available. CP&L had 7,668 megawatts of capacity, of which 5,842 megawatts were available.

Contractor For Cruise-Missile

SEATTLE (AP) — After eight years of development and three years of head-on competition, the Boeing Aerospace Co. has been named prime contractor for the air-launched cruise missile. The new weapon contract could be worth $2 billion for the area's economy.

"Everyone was very tense this morning," project manager Ray Utterstrom said after announcement of the award to the company that a decade ago slumped so badly a billboard asked, "Will the last one leaving Seattle please turn out the lights?"

"We've fought long and hard for this one," he said.

The Air Force announced Tuesday that Boeing had defeated General Dynamics of St. Louis in the battle for the contract.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad advance today in a technical rally after the steep drop of the past six weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 5.55 to 773.38 in the first half hour.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than a 2-1 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts noted that some support for the market began to show up on Tuesday, when prices leveled off following the market's 15 percent slide since mid-February.

Brokers said some traders appeared to be buying on hopes that a slowing economy might bring with it some relief from inflation and a drop in interest rates.

The bond market also gained ground in early trading today.

The list of actively traded stocks included Household Finance, up ⅜ at 14; International Paper, off ⅛ at 33, and Philip Morris, up ⅛ at 32.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average edged up 2.39 to 767.83.

Losers outnumbered gainers by a margin of more than 5-to-2 on the NYSE.

Kennedy Wins...

(Cont'd from Page 1)

In his double defeat, Carter gained 143 delegates. In victory, Kennedy captured 193.

That brought Carter's national delegate count to 746 of the 1,666 it will take to win the nomination. Kennedy has 385.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said Kennedy would have to win 63 percent of all the delegates yet to be chosen in order to catch Carter. That's a tall order under a system that awards delegates in proportion to the popular vote, and so rewards losers along with winners.

On the Republican side, Reagan emerged with a national total of 293 delegates. It will take 998 to win the nomination. The 87 delegates Reagan won in Connecticut and New York came in states that virtually shut him out four years ago, and the territory in which the former California governor was strongest then is still ahead of him.

Kennedy had been saying all along that he would break through in states like New York and Pennsylvania. He put Illinois in that bracket, too, until he lost it.

Inflation was his major campaign theme, and he said it had taken hold at last — on an election day that began with the government's announcement that the cost of living soared at a rate that would mean 18 percent annual inflation.

Powell said the defeats will not affect Carter's stay-at-home campaign strategy. The president has ruled out active campaigning while American hostages remain captive in Tehran, Iran. Powell said that decision "is one that will not be affected by election returns."

was the main objection to the plan voiced by Baldree and the group of concerned parents and teachers at the meeting.

"Grifton is a unique situation," pointed out Baldree. "The plan we are now using is fine and we would like to see it continue to work for us."

Baldree stated that he felt primary instruction was not designed for schedules and bells, and that in his opinion teaching time would be reduced by changing classes. "We realize also," he said, "that many of these students have an unstable home life and they need the stability of one teacher and one classroom."

Baldree and several teachers pointed out that a few years ago Grifton used a plan that required primary students to change classes, and it was reportedly a disaster.

"We had to use tags and colors to let the children know where to go," commented one teacher.

Assistant Superintendent Katheryn Lewis pointed out that the reason Pitt County was cited by OCR in the beginning was because its had no uniform plan of grouping. "I do not know whether they will accept an exception to the rule," she stated, "since the reason we were called down in the beginning was because everyone did it differently."

She added that the plan originally called for stratified heterogenous grouping but was changed to accommodate principals who thought it would present insurmountable problems.

"Whether we like it or not, we're in this thing together," she commented.

The board agreed to hear from the principals of all the schools with grades 1-3 Tuesday at their regular meeting and to decide whether to alter the plan after assessing their opinions.

"We will hear from everyone together and then make our decision," said Chairman Mark Owens.

Jury-Picking Slow Work

GOLDSBORO, N.C. (AP) — After 30 days of jury selection, only five jurors have been seated in the trial of 16 persons accused of participating in a billion-dollar heroin ring allegedly linked to convicted heroin smuggler Ike Atkinson.

Defense attorneys in the trial have accused government lawyers of excluding blacks from the jury.

Among the 16 standing trial are Atkinson's sister, Nettie Pearl Atkinson Parks, 52, and her husband, Matthew P. Parks, 61, of New York.

Defense motions accused prosecutors of using their peremptory challenges to keep blacks off the jury. Each side started the selection process with 96 peremptory challenges, and the state has used 39 while the defense has used 38.

By using a peremptory challenge, a prosecutor or defense attorney may eliminate prospective juror from consideration without giving any reason.

Jury selection began with a panel of 600 persons from Sampson County.

The defendants are accused of being involved in a heroin conspiracy from 1969 through March 1979. The substance was imported from Thailand, according to prosecutors.

Arrested 2 For Thefts

Two Rt. 4, Tarboro men were arrested Tuesday by Pitt County deputies and charged in connection with three separate larceny incidents at a Belvoir store.

According to Sheriff Ralph Tyson, deputies arrested Richard Foreman and Dennis Singleton on two counts of larceny and one count of breaking, entering and larceny stemming from thefts at the Convenient World Inc. grocery.

Sheriff Tyson said that the charges involved a Feb. 15 incident at the store when $95 was reported missing, a Feb. 16 theft when $426 was taken, and a March 21 break-in when $19 in change and a small quantity of cigarettes were taken.

A back door was kicked in on March 21, the sheriff said, as entrance was gained to the facility. Damage to the firm was estimated at $100.

Bond was set at $3,500 each, according to the sheriff, and trial dates will be scheduled in District Court here.

CP&L Rate Increase Wins OK From Commission

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The N. C. Utilities Commission granted Carolina Power & Light Co. a 7.13 percent rate hike Tuesday, an amount less than the 9.25 percent increase sought by the utility.

The increase, effective April 1, will boost CP&L revenue by $43.3 million a year, nearly $17 million more than the commission's Public Staff had recommended.

CP&L had sought a $55.9 million increase.

Under the new rate schedule, a residential electric customer using 1,000 kilowatt-hours would pay $43.98. That amount represents a 73-cent decrease because the commission reduced the fuel adjustment rate last month.

The adjustment goes into effect April 1 and will be effective for four months.

Another adjustment in the fuel factor will be set later to cover the four-month period starting in August. The charge is based on the cost of fuel to utilities and it fluctuates according to the market.

CP&L serves 700,000 customers in Piedmont and eastern North Carolina.

W.E. Graham Jr., CP&L senior vice president and general counsel, said, "We are disappointed that the commission did not grant the full amount of the increase. Unfortunately, financial conditions have changed so much since the end of 1978, the test year on which this decision was based, that we shall have to ask for a further rate increase very soon.

"We simply must have a level of earnings that will allow us to attract capital and continue the construction that is necessary to provide adequate and dependable service to our customers," Graham said.

The commission ordered CP&L to set aside $628,000 of the increase each year as its share of the cost of operating a corporation to study alternative energy sources if such a corporation is established.

The commission said in a statement that the increase would provide the utility a 10.66 percent return on the original cost of its property and a return of 13.9 percent on common shareholders' equity.

"The commission found that the 7.13 percent rate increase was the minimum that could be granted and still have CP&L to maintain good service, to continue a reasonable construction program in order to meet growth in electric power demands, and to provide the company's stockholders with a fair return on their investment," the statement said.

CP&L also was directed to implement a residential rate offering an incentive to customers who install special insulation in their homes.

The utility's last rate increase, an 11 percent hike, was in June 1977.

ECU's Odom Signs New Contract

East Carolina University basketball coach Dave Odom will apparently be staying in Greenville for a while.

ECU athletic director Bill Cain today announced that Odom, who led the Pirates to a 16-11 record in his rookie head coaching season, has had his contract extended along with a salary increase.

"We felt that Dave had a very successful season," Cain said. "Dave's performance on the job definitely earned him a raise."

Odom's new salary, along with the length of his contract was not announced.

Odom replaced Larry Gillman as head coach of the Pirates, leading the team to its first winning season in five years. Among the victories were wins over NIT-bound Illinois State, and former ACC member South Carolina.

Rose Whips Hunt

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

What started out as an apparently easy romp for Rose High School's Rampants turned into a nail-biter before it was over Tuesday and the Rose nine had turned in a 9-5 victory over Wilson Hunt.

Rose jumped out to a 6-0 lead in the first inning, increased it to 7-2 in the second, then held on while Hunt rallied to within two at 7-5 before two more insurance runs in the late innings provided a little more breathing room.

Both teams ended up with eight hits, but Rose made theirs count for more.

"It came a little too easy for us," Coach Ronald Vincent said of the early lead. "I think we got a little satisfied with ourselves and lost of the our intensity. We were a little sloppy with our fielding after the first inning, but we did hit the ball quite well."

Catcher Emmett Walsh had the hottest bat for Rose, banging out three hits in as many trips, and accounting for four runs batted in. Kenny Barnes added two hits in four appearances.

Mike Wells had two hits to pace the Hunt effort, both triples.

Rose jumped on Hunt for six big first inning runs, chasing starting hurler Melvin Johnson after eight batters.

Mark Shank led off, beating out an infield hit. After Mark Douglas walked, Will Barrett reached on an error, loading the bases.

Roger Williams grounded to short, getting Barrett at second, but allowing Shank to score. Barnes followed with a single to center, scoring Douglas, and Walsh's hit to center, brought in both courtesy runner Mitch Brann and Barnes.

Mike Campbell kept it going with a walk and J.R. Neal's single scored courtesy runner Skip Hill. After Jeff Wilson walked, Shank hit into a fielder's choice, scoring Campbell with the final run of the inning.

Hunt rallied to two in the top of the frame. Wells opened with a triple down the right field line. Mike Lewis walked and was sacrificed up. Lewis was then caught off second base, but an error on the throw down allowed him to move to third and Wells to score. Jay Jenkins then singled in Lewis.

Rose added another run in the bottom of the second. Douglas singled and stole second. When Williams flew out to center, Douglas tagged up and moved to third. An appeal play was made on Douglas at second, and as the ball was throw to the base, he scampered home. The umpires ruled him safe at second, and the relay was too late at the plate.

The Warriors came up with two more in the third. Randy Deans reached on a fielder's choice and Raymond Pittman singled him to third, then stole second. Lewis singled Deans in, and Pittman scored when a strikout passed ball let Christy Rodri reach.

The other Hunt run came in the fifth. Charles Simpson singled and stole second. He advanced to third on an infield hit and scored when Lewis grounded out.

Rose got two insurance runs in the bottom of the sixth. With one away, Barrett walked and stole second, moving to third on an error on the play. Williams walked and Brann ran for him, also stealing second. Both scored on Walsh's third hit of the afternoon.

The game opened Division I play for both teams, leaving Rose with a 1-0 league mark and a 3-1 overall record. Hunt fell to 0-1 in the league and 2-5 overall.

'Ooeyville-lay Is Umber-Nay Un-way'

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — "Ooeyville-lay is-yay Umber-Nay Un-way" is the proud boast of a guy who leaves his thumb on the dinner table.

Translated into English, the words say: "Louisville is Number One." Forward Wiley Brown, the so-called "Bionic Thumb," had earned the right to shout it from the rooftops after Louisville's 59-54 win over UCLA in the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament.

Louisville's victory provided a spectacular climax to a 33-3 season that will undoubtedly become the makings of local legend. After all, it is the first title ever for this town, and everybody says the first time is always the best.

In many ways, Wiley Brown typifies the unusual makeup of this cast of characters. A 6-foot-8 block of granite from Sylvester, Ga., the sophomore center lost part of his right thumb at age 2 in an accident with a knife.

Brown taught himself to play basketball lefthanded. This year, he was fitted with an artificial thumb that earned him the nickname "Bionic Thumb."

Brown rushed off to a team meeting Monday without the thumb. A frenzied student manager was forced to search through bags of garbage to retrieve it.

On the court, Brown communicates in pig-Latin with teammate Derek Smith. The two use the code language to set up plays without tipping their hand to the opposition.

Consider some of these other heroes in Red and Black:

—Rodney McCray, the only player signed in last year's lean recruting campaign, was forced into the breech when his older brother, Scooter, was lost for the season with a knee injury. Rodney, 6-7, responded by leading the team in rebounding.

"We wouldn't be here without him," Coach Denny Crum said.

—Tony Branch, a little-used senior guard who sprang off the bench to save Louisville in the NCAA opener. His off-balance shot beat Kansas State 67-66 in overtime. When he's not playing, which is often, he's providing music, which is always loud.

Crum tried to loosen up his troops before Saturday's 80-72 semifinal win over Iowa with his version of a disco step. The players got loose, all right. They roared.

—Poncho Wright, a 6-5 Indianapolis native, gave Louisville a slogan. The finals were played in Wright's hometown, which he calls "Naptown." Chanted Wright throughout the playoffs: 'The 'Ville to Naptown!"

—Roger Burkman, a whirling dervish native of Indianapolis who festered on the bench for three years before emerging this year as "Instant Defense." All knees, elbows and floppy blond hair, Burkman came to personify the major change in this year's team — a scratching, clawing, tenacious fullcourt defense. "We get in the other guy's shirt," explained guard Jerry Eaves.

—Darrell Griffith, All-American guard, nicknamed "Dr. Dunkenstein" for his slam dunks. This year, Griffith became the complete player. This month, he became a man possessed. He dedicated the winning of the national title to a school chum who is battling cancer.

With four seconds to go and the title in hand, Griffith leaped and waved an index finger at the roaring Louisville partisans crammed into Market Square Arena. Some 125 miles south, the ailing Jerry Stringer lay in bed smiling at the scene. His buddy Darrell had proven as good as his word.

—Crum, the master strategist, ringleader, father figure. Crum came to Louisville in 1972 after several years as assistant to the master, UCLA's legendary John Wooden. He won 20 games every year, but his teams seemed to self-destruct in tournament play. Critics blamed his laid-back California style, a bench demeanor lacking the fire and brimstone of other coaches.

Crum didn't change this year. His club was loose and happy, and he did his best to keep them that way. Even in the tightest of situations, Crum would rise off the bench and raise his palms to his beleaguered troops. "Settle down," he'd say, and they did. And they won.

Louisville won 33 games this year, more than any team, including 26 of its last 27. Starting a freshman, three sophomores and the senior Griffith, Crum drove Louisville to the first unbeaten season in Metro Conference history. He added the league's tournament title a week later. No team had accomplished that sweep before.

In Monday's finale, Crum faced his old nemesis. Three times, Crum had taken Louisville into the NCAA only to fall short of the title at the hands of the Bruins. Despite the personal pressure, Crum was his cool self. Only in the waning seconds, when Derek Smith's two free throws iced the game, did Crum's facade begin to crumble.

Pirates' Riley Among Final 25

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The U.S. Women's Olympic Basketball Selection Committee has named seven players from a field of 141 candidates in the 1980 Olympic Open Trials here.

The seven selected players announced Tuesday night were 5-foot-7 guard Pam Crawford from DeRidder, La., and Stephen F. Austin University; 5-7 guard Linnell Jones from Flint, Mich., and Kentucky State University; 5-9 Kimberly Maddox from Compton, Calif., and Cal State-Long Beach; 5-10 forward Lataunya Pollard from East Chicago, Ind., and Cal State-Long Beach; 5-9 Kathy Riley from Morehead, Ky., and East Carolina University; 6-4 center Lydia Johnson from Detroit, Mich., and the University of Detroit, and 6-2 center Mary Ostrowski from Parkersburg, W.Va., and Parkersburg Catholic High School.

They were selected after two days of open trials and will join 18 invited players for the final trials which begin Wednesday and will wind up with exhibition games here Thursday and Friday evenings.

A total of 12 players and three alternates will be selected Saturday to make up the 1980 U.S. Women's Olympic team.

Riley, contacted in Colorado Springs, said she was quite pleased with her play during the first part of the trials.

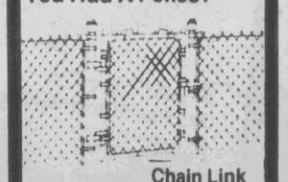

"I tried to play a very consistant game without any frills. Some of the girls tried to put a lot of frills into their games, and it cost them. They weren't looking for that."

D.H. Conley Wallops Ayden-Grifton, 21-3

By LARRY SULLIVAN
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — Both baseball head coaches will remember what happened here yesterday afternoon, but for distinctively different reasons.

For visiting D.H. Conley mentor Walter Claybrook, it was a day of triumph for his Vikings as the visitors scored in all but the final inning to completely destroy the host Chargers, 21-3.

For Ayden-Grifton Coach Al Wilson, it was a day to forget.

"It was just one of those days when everything goes right," explained Claybrook. "Ayden-Grifton is definitely a better team than the one we played today. We had a lot of guys hitting today and that gave them added confidence," the coach assured.

"We just don't have the pitching," Wilson said after the defeat. "We are just so young, it's hard. If we can keep our opponents from scoring more than five or six runs, then we are satisfied. But today, I just want to forget it."

Conley picked up three runs in the first inning and added three more in the second before crossing the plate six times in the third frame and seven more times in the fourth. The Vikings tallied single runs in the fifth and sixth innings in the lopsided win.

Ayden-Grifton threatened once in the early goings, managing to get the first two batters on base in the second inning before three consecutive outs thwarted the threat. The Chargers crossed the plate once in the sixth inning and twice in the final stanza to keep from being shut out.

DHC struck hard and quick in the grueling two-and-a-half-hour contest between the Eastern Carolina Conference foes. Leadoff batter Sammy Tucker earned a walk and was moved to second on a sacrifice bunt. Tucker scored on Micah Dixon's single and Carl Arnold followed Dixon with another single off Charger starter David Taylor. After two outs, Roy Lassiter drove Taylor from the mound with a two-run double.

In the top of the second frame, A-G reliever Clayton McLawhorn sandwiched a single around a pair of walks before he was lifted from the mound. Charger Art Rouse walked the first two men he faced to bring home a run before Dixon singled to drive home a couple more.

In the third inning, the Vikings greeted the Chargers' third pitcher, Tyrone Gay, with six runs on five hits. Arnelle Credel and Curtis Spencer both had two-run doubles in the inning. DHC sent 11 men to the plate in the third frame taking complete control of the game.

But the hot Vikings were not to quit. They jumped on A-G's fourth pitcher for four runs in the fourth before getting an out. Tucker and Credle both singled before back-to-back walks drove in the first run. Spencer followed with a third walk before Lassiter, who had four hits in the game, stroked his second two-run double of the seven-inning affair. The Vikings added three more runs in the inning as Credle, Dixon and Emory Vines each punched out a single.

Charger secondbaseman Bernard Ricciarelli then came on to pitch, curtailing the Viking scoring machine the rest of the game. He allowed only two more DHC scores in the last two innings.

Behind 20-0, the homestanding Chargers finally crossed the scoring plate with a run in the bottom of the sixth inning. Ricciarelli started off the frame by knocking a single and moved to second on an error. Gay was hit by a pitch to load the bases before Brendt Allen brought home Ricciarelli with a sacrifice fly.

Ayden-Grifton turned in its most productive offensive showing in the final frame, tallying a pair of runs on Clayton McLawhorn's two run fielder's choice.

The win was D.H. Conley's third straight, giving the Vikings a 3-1 ECC mark. Ayden-Grifton suffered its first defeat of the campaign, falling to 2-1 in the loop.

Lassiter picked up the win for the Vikings, going three innings and allowing three hits and no runs while walking one and fanning a pair. Taylor harbored the embarrassing defeat, lasting two-thirds of an inning while surrendering three runs on three hits.

Lassiter paced all hitters in the game, pounding our four hits in five at-bats. Teammates Credle, Dixon, Arnold, Spencer and Vines each collected a pair of hits in the game.

Baseball Talks Reopen, Players Are Pessimistic

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Negotiations on a basic agreement between major league baseball owners and players were to reopen here today, with owners guardedly optimistic and players' representatives flatly pessimistic about avoiding a strike at the start of the season.

Major league executives met Tuesday with their chief negotiator, Ray Grebey, who said no modifications were made in the owners' latest offer.

"No votes were taken or policy-decisions made today," Grebey said following a 90-minute meeting with the owners' negotiating committee. The committee is composed of Grebey, the presidents of the American and National leagues, and six team executives: Daniel Galbreath of Pittsburgh, Bob Howsam of Cincinnati, John McHale of Montreal, Joseph Burke of Kansas City, Ed Fitzgerald of Milwaukee and Clark Griffith II of Minnesota.

The executive director of the Players' Association, Marvin Miller, was dismayed by the news that the owners made no policy moves Tuesday.

"Since the Players Association finds that the owners' demands are unacceptable and the owners apparently are unwilling to change their position," Miller said he could see no reason for any of the optimism expressed by the owners.

"As long as we have bargaining sessions left, there's hope of avoiding a strike," Grebey said.

Negotiating talks were planned daily through Friday, and Miller is also scheduled to meet with players from seven more teams this week to discuss the negotiations and the possibility of a strike.

Players from 19 teams have already authorized a strike on or after April 1 if a new fouryear basic agreement is not hammered out by then.

"We see no reason for the strike talk," Grebey said. "Major league baseball's objective is the same as it has been — to attempt a negotiated settlement."

The success of the talks apparently hinges on several key issues left unresolved at the last session on March 18, including particularly an owners' proposal to have a player, rather than an amateur draft choice, as compensation in certain cases when a team loses a player to free agency.

Players argue that such a rule would kill the free agent system, since few teams would be willing to part with a player from their roster in order to sign a free agent.

Other important issues yet to be settled include an owners' proposal to restrict to one-year contracts any player with four years service or less, and another that would force an arbitrator to give extra weight to a player's time in service, rather than performance, when ruling on a salary dispute.

ECU Names New F'ball Assistant

Jim Bengala has been named by East Carolina head football coach Ed Emory as the newest member of the grid staff. He replaces Steve Schnall who resigned to take a position at Princeton University.

Bengala, who will coach the offensive backs, is a graduate of Miami University in Ohio, where he finished in 1971 after a four-year playing career under Bo Schembeckler and Bill Mallory.

From 1973 to 1974, he served as quarterback and receiver coach at Western Connecticut State University, moving the next year to Michigan, where he was a graduate assistant in charge of defensive backs.

For the past five years, he has been the offensive backfield coach at Western Michigan University.

Bengala and his wife Deborah, have one daughter, Beth.

Hopkins Swims Into NCAAs

BOSTON, Mass. — East Carolina University will have only one entry into this year's NCAA Swimming and Diving Championships, breaststroker Kelly Hopkins.

Hopkins will compete in the 100-yard and 200-yard breaststroke events during the event, which begins today at Harvard University.

"We had a number of other swimmers who just missed cutoff times," Coach Ray Scharf said. "Some were as close at eight-hundredths of a second."

Jaguars Win 1st Game, 14-2

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central erupted for eight runs in the third inning and then cruised to a 14-2 win over Southwest Edgecombe Tuesday afternoon in a high school baseball game.

The Jaguars, now 1-3 overall and 1-2 in the Eastern Carolina Conference, took the led when Alan Corbitt knocked in Bobby Avery and Greg Hardison with a triple.

A walk, a single and an error brought in another Jaguar run and another walk loaded the bases. Mike Tugwell brought home two Farmville runs with a single and then moments later, after another walk, Alan Corbitt singled to score two more runs. Another run scored on an error.

From there, the Jaguars coasted home with their first win of the season.

Mike James led Farmville at the plate, going three for four. Hardison and Jeff Jyner were two of three while Corbitt and Tugwell were two of four.

Farmville travels to Southern Wayne Thursday.

Knicks End Cavs Playoff Hopes

By The Associated Press

Coach Red Holzman of the New York Knicks isn't glib or loquacious or particularly quotable or the king of one-liners or given to exaggeration. He is, rather, a master of understatement.

—Item: The Knicks ended a three-game skid and snapped Cleveland's eight-game winning streak Tuesday night with an impressive 128-115 victory that boosted their playoff hopes and eliminated the Cavaliers.

Holzman: "We played well and we shot well."

—Item: Mike Glenn came off the bench and scored 19 points in 19 minutes on 8-for-8 shooting from the floor — including a three-point basket — and 2-for-2 from the line.

Holzman: "Mike Glenn had an incredible night."

Elsewhere, the San Antonio Spurs whipped the Houston Rockets 126-107, the Boston Celtics nipped the Washington Bullets 96-95, the Milwaukee Bucks ripped the Chicago Bulls 122-111, the Seattle SuperSonics tripped the Phoenix Suns 104-95, the Portland Trail Blazers clipped the Kansas City Kings 106-102 and the Utah Jazz beat the Denver Nuggets 109-91.

Ray Williams scored 27 points to pace a balanced New York attack. The Knicks broke on top early and, with Williams scoring 13 points, the Knicks held a 38-29 first-quarter lead. Williams had 24 at the half and the Knicks led 66-62.

Spurs 126, Rockets 107

George Gervin scored 24 points and Mike Gale led a key second-quarter outburst that helped San Antonio defeat Houston. It was the Spurs' seventh victory in nine games and left them 1½ games ahead of the Knicks in the race for the fourth Eastern Conference playoff spot. The score was tied at 29 after one period but Gale came off the bench to score eight points and hand off six assists as the Spurs outscored Houston 37-22 in the second quarter. They led by as many as 24 in the third period.

Celtics 96, Bullets 95

The Pistol outshot the Bullets. Pistol Pete Maravich scored all his 19 points in the final period, including a three-pointer with 51 seconds remaining, to give Boston the triumph. The Celtics' triumph put them 2½ games in front of second-place Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division with just three to play.

Bucks 122, Bulls 111

Milwaukee needed last-quarter heroics by Marques Johnson, who came off the bench after the Bucks had nearly squandered a 24-point lead and scored 10 of his 18 points. The Bucks were also helped by the steady play of Brian Winters, who had 21 points, and Quinn Buckner as they took a two-game lead over Kansas City in the Midwest Division. Junior Bridgeman led the Bucks with 22 points.

SuperSonics 104, Suns 95

Dennis Johnson scored 12 of his game-high 26 points as Seattle pulled away in the third quarter. Seattle, which plays in Phoenix tonight, leads the Suns by two games in the battle for second place in the Pacific Division. Both have three games remaining. The Sonics dominated the boards with Jack Sikma pulling down 17 rebounds.

Trail Blazers 106, Kings 102

Dave Twardzik and T.R. Dunn each made a pair of free throws in the late going to nail down the triumph for Portland. Twardzik hit one with 18 seconds left to put Portland ahead 104-102 and Dunn was fouled after rebounding a missed shot by Kansas City's Scott Wedman with four seconds to go. The Kings did not score in the final 2:38.

Calvin Natt led Portland with 24 points as the Blazers moved two games ahead of idle San Diego in the race for the final playoff berth in the Western Conference. They can clinch it by winning in San Diego Thursday night.

Jazz 109, Nuggets 91

James Hardy scored a personal season-high 22 points for Utah. He teamed with Ron Boone and Paul Dawkins to spark the Jazz, whose victory was just their 24th against 55 losses. Boone wound up with 17 points while Dawkins had 12 but contributed eight during a fourth-quarter spurt which saw Utah increase a 74-72 edge to 90-75.

Formula One Season Near

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

The sleek, powerful Formula One cars will be roaring through the streets of Long Beach, Calif., this weekend in the first of four Grand Prix world championship events scheduled this year in North America.

And, while most fans of the exotic sport will be watching what happens on the courses, insiders will be listening to the talk around the garages and pits for the latest on the political front.

Formula One racing is something of a political football, with its Paris-based sanctioning body, the Federation Internationale Sport Automobile, and the Formula One Constructors Association battling for control of its destiny.

It has also become something of a personal battleground for Jean-Marie Balestre, president of the FISA, and Bernie Ecclestone, president of FOCA. The two powerful men agree on almost nothing.

The current battles are being fought over the schedule, the use of qualifying tires and the use of articulated skirts on the cars.

The FISA has been playing musical dates, particularly with the North American Grand Prix races at Watkins Glen, N.Y., Montreal and Las Vegas, Nev.

An attempt was made to dump the Watkins Glen race, disliked by many competitors because it is located in an out-of-the-way area in central New York. A long list of complaints about facilities, safety problems and weather was brought to the FISA, prompting the organization to threaten cancellation of the race.

Olympic Boycott

British Officials Appeal To Athletes

LONDON (AP) — The British government appealed to Britain's athletes to turn their backs on their Olympic association and boycott the Moscow Olympics after the association defied Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and voted overwhelmingly to compete in the Games this summer.

The BOA announced after a meeting Tuesday night that delegates from 15 of 20 national sports federations voted to reject Mrs. Thatcher's call for a boycott, four wanted the decision deferred and only one, the hockey federation, was in favor of staying home.

It was a major setback to President Carter's campaign for an international quarantine of the Moscow Games because of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

"The government seriously regrets the decision to accept the invitation to participate in the summer Games in the Soviet Union. But this is not the end of the matter," said a statement from the Department of the Environment.

It appealed to British athletes to stay away from Moscow on their own, saying, "Neither the individual governing bodies of sport, which constitute our national Olympic committee, nor individual sportsmen and women are bound by this decision. They are still free to decide their own course of action."

However, opposition to a boycott was widespread among British athletes, and most or all of the country's major contenders were expected to compete in the Soviet capital.

The government has already withdrawn the British diplomat who was to be the liaison man with Soviet Olympic officials, barred teams from the armed forces participating in the Olympics and banned the special leaves usually given athletes in uniform or government jobs to compete. But it cannot prevent their going if they can schedule their annual leave at that time, and Mrs. Thatcher has said she would not try to withdraw athletes' passports.

The government can also withhold the financial contribution the BOA expected from it toward the $2.3 million needed to send a full British team to Russia. But Sir Denis Follows, the chairman of the association, said: "We believe that the public will wish to rally round Britain's team now and help them as much as they can."

The BOA is about $900,000 short of its goal.

Follows said the decision to accept the invitation to the Games was taken "in the interests of the competitors, who, during these past anxious weeks, have had to maintain their hard training without knowing whether Britain would be participating."

"The BOA has not come to this decision lightly," he continued. "It has given careful and, we hope, proper attention to the views expressed in Parliament, as it has noted the response of the public and the aspirations of the competitors."

Watson Out To Defend Heritage Golf Title

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — The chances of a player making a successful defense of his title in a PGA tour event are very slim. It is an infrequent occurrence. Going back to 1977, it's been done only five times.

If the player's name is Tom Watson, his chances of making a successful title defense are considerably better than average.

He's done it three of those five times.

And he's a solid favorite to do it again this week in the prestigious, $300,000 Heritage Classic, which he won be a runaway five shots last year.

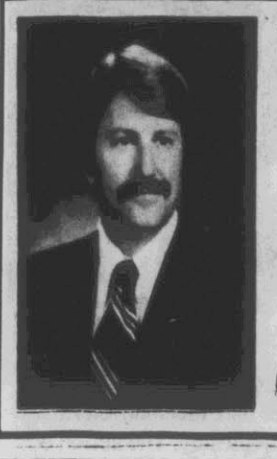

"Certain players play certain courses, certain tournaments better that others," Watson said after a practice round over the par-71 Harbour Town Golf Links, 6,804 yards of quiet, tree-lined southern beauty that is the site of the 72-hole test beginning Thursday.

"Maybe it's the course, or the atmosphere of the tournament. A lot of things go into it," Watson said. "If you know you've won on a golf course before, it gives you confidence you can do it again. It just seems to happen."

It has happened with some regularity for the man who now ranks as the outstanding player in the game. Of his 20 career victories, including two British Opens, Watson has collected 13 of them in only six events.

And he's played well here. In addition to the victory last year, he was second by a shot in 1977.

His credentials, of course, are the best in the game. He has swept Player of the Year, leading money-winner and Vardon Trophy honors for the past three seasons.

Redskins Rip Tigers

ROBERSONVILLE — Roanoke banged out five home runs — including two by Willie Keel — and Williamston's Randy Ellis knocked out two of his own, but it wasn't enough as the Redskins blasted the Tigers, 12-3, Tuesday afternoon in a high school baseball game.

Leading 1-0 after two innings, the Redskins, now 4-1, scored six runs in the third to blow the game open. Anthony Latham led the inning off with a double and scored when Steve Wallace blasted a home run.

Glenn Cargile then got on with a single and was driven in when Keel hit the first of his two home runs. Joey Ross followed Keel's blast with one of his own. Then, with two outs, Wesley Johnson scored on an error.

From there, the Redskins coasted home with the win.

Roanoke was led by Wallace, who was three for four, and Latham and Keel, both of whom were two for three. Ross was two for four.

Ellis led the Tigers, going two for three.

EC Softball Team Wins 2

East Carolina's softball team survived three seventh-inning errors to edge Pembroke State 8-7 and complete a doubleheader sweep Monday.

After winning the first game 6-2, the Lady Pirates grabbed a 7-1 lead after three innings in the nightcap. Pembroke, however, rallied to score four runs in the fourth. Mary Bryan Carlyle, winner of game one, replaced Angie Humphrey on the mound the next inning, but ECU's fielding went awry.

The Pirates commmitted a season-high seven errors to help the visitors gain a run in the fifth and another in the seventh. The game ended with the tying run at third for Pembroke.

Evonne Williams, who had two RBIs in the second game, made what turned out to be a game-saving double play in the sixth. She went to the centerfield fence to snare a long drive and then threw out a runner at the plate to end the inning.

Cynthia Sheperd had a perfect day with six hits in six official at bats. In game one, Teresa Whitley and Terry Andrews went two for three and Whitley had two RBIs.

The wins up the Pirates' record to 5-0 and dropped Pembroke to 3-3. ECU travels to Western Carolina Friday for a two-day round robin event.

With Dunks, Dribbles Gone, Eyes Turn To The Indy 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — When the dunks and dribbles have finally died in the NCAA basketball championships, what do you do in Indianapolis where it never rains in the summertime?

You grab a raincoat and go out to the "Old Brickyard" and talk to the cars, that's what.

If you think it was hectic when the college hardwood fans seized the town, wait until May 25 when the Indy 500 will be raced for the 64th time. It's sports' biggest and most incredible experience with more than 300,000 people swarming into the vast course to watch man's continuing battle with land speed.

The Speedway is slumbering now under a chill blanket of rain and sleet but it will awaken briefly for tire tests. Then another nap until May when the place comes alive with roaring engines, nostril-biting fumes and surging masses.

Unlike basketball players, cars don't talk back but they have a story of their own to tell in the multi-million-dollar rebuilt Hall of Fame and Museum.

On display are 20 of the cars that accounted for 24 victories, ranging from Ray Harroun's yellow Marmon Wasp, with tires 4½ inches in diameter, first winner in 1911, to the balloon-soled modern monsters that roar down the backstretch at speeds up to 238 miles an hour.

There are antique passenger cars, including an 1895 gas-engine coach once drawn by horses, steam and electric vehicles plus an array of classics including a 1911 T-model Ford, a luxurious 1933 Cadillac sedan, rows of Marmons, Hoods and Duesenbergs that whet the appetite of the collector.

Most of the visiting newsmen making their first tour of the museum naturally were interested in the four cars which tough A.J. Foyt drove to an unprecedented number of championships.

Only three were on hand. There was the Sheraton-Thompson Special he was in for his first victory in 1961 — the golden anniversary year; also the 1964 car, still bearing the big number "1," and the 1967 machine readied by his dad.

Novelists Tell Agonies Of Writing

By PETER COSTA
UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — If the novel is dead, then someone should notify its undertakers.

New novelists Joan Silber, Ivy Strick, Douglas Terman, Elinor Klein and Dora Landey have discounted the rumor of the novel's demise and have written their first novels with the indomitable spirit of people possessed.

While writing their books, most of them worked in jobs that are a dustjacket writer's dream: Ivy Strick waitressed and sold shoes, Joan Silber worked in a department store and a health food store, Doug Terman sailed the tropics for 13 straight years.

Most lived in small studios, lofts and country cabins. Two received advances from their publishers worth about what a good used subcompact car costs.

Interestingly, of the six first novelists interviewed recently in New York, half were involved in some way with acting. Dora Landey not only was an actress but is also married to actor Tony Lo Bianco.

All of them describe the process of writing fiction as something they are driven to do, something they must do to feel free and alive.

"I would write even if I had to pay people to read it. It's a compulsion," said Douglas Terman, author of "First Strike" (Scribners).

And for Ivy Strick, being an author has almost supernatural consequences.

"I'm God. These characters are my creatures. I move them around. That's where my message is," Strick, 28, said. She is the author of "The Home Makers," published by Taplinger.

"The Home Makers" is a forceful novel about a handyman who lives a life of quiet desperation with his grandfather. Strick writes in a direct, forthright way, without resorting to literary pyrotechnics or radioactive metaphor. For her, characters should speak for themselves in their own tongue and the omniscient author should have amnesia.

In Joan Silber's novel, "Household Words," (Viking), the writing is freer, more allegorical and more interior. The style reflects the author.

"I'm best at writing what is internal — what people are thinking rather than doing," 34-year-old Silber said.

Silber's mission as a novelist?

"I wanted to give my characters' lives full dignity — that's what literature should do," she said.

All the novelists have thought about what it means to be published (finally) and be considered a success:

"After writing my book, I felt legitimized. I felt that I would have that for life, even if the book bombed or took off or whatever. I would still be a writer," Silber said.

It wasn't always that way for her.

"My rejections were really devastating. But through it all, you have to fantasize about wonderful success, of course. But I don't want best-seller praise. I think of myself as more literary and the money angle is not so important to me. I'd love to have it but I wouldn't feel like a smuck without it," Silber said.

Elinor Klein, 45, and Dora Landey, 44, co-authors of "Dazzle," (Putnam) have what they call a "more mature" viewpoint on success:

"I don't think the book will change me. If I were 20, it would. But not now. I have my set of china, the normal number of rooms and my kid," Elinor Klein said.

Some say there are compromises one has to make in the publishing industry to succeed; it is as if there is a sequel mentality and that successful authors are asked to write the new book just like the last best-selling one.

"Yes, in some ways I guess that is true. Maybe you have to do that to get the money. Look, big bucks are great, but I want to write whatever I want to write and I think with my present publisher I'll be allowed to do that," Terman said.

Terman's novel about Soviet-U.S. intrigue falls into the spy-thriller category and is an exciting book to read. It is well paced, believable, enjoyable. Both it and "Dazzle," a book dealing with the inner workings of a public relations magnate, could be thought of as commercial, mass-market books, whereas, Strick's and Silber's reach for a slightly different audience.

Decorative Birds For The Buyer

By PETER MATTIACE
Associated Press Writer

ALLOWAY, N.J. (AP) — Stuck for an Easter gift? John Hanby will sell you a pair of mallard ducks for $15 from his private waterfowl preserve in his back yard.

But the ducks are not for your holiday table. They're for your front-yard pond.

Hanby raises ducks, geese, swans, peacocks, pheasants and, yes, even a few chickens in his 9½-acre woods and pond just outside this rural Salem County community.

"This stuff would be too expensive for restaurants," Hanby says. "People buy birds to add beauty to their property. If you had property with water on it, you'd put a couple of swans on it to bring the beauty up."

Hanby, 50, a railroad engineer at a nearby Du Pont chemical plant, began breeding waterfowl as a sideline 17 years ago "with only a few mallards — until I found out there were prettier birds."

"You've got to like birds and you've got to like nature," says Hanby, a rugged and pleasant man who loves to explain the habits of "my birds."

Business is promising in the decorative waterfowl business. Nowadays, most homeowners skip the mallards and pick up a pair of mute white swans for $300, Hanby says.

Hanby is particularly excited because he recently received two rare trumpeter swans for $1,400, an order he placed about five years ago. When the trumpeters begin to breed in three years, Hanby says he'll charge homeowners whatever the market will bear.

Several years ago, Hanby had workmen dig a fresh-water pond in his woods out back.

Now the place looks something like a cross between a fresh-water meadow and a big-city zoo with more than 20 species of waterfowl scurrying back and forth in open pens on land and water.

Hanby clips the birds' wings at an early age so they cannot fly away.

The Hanby preserve presumably is known among mallards and whistler swans in their migratory journeys up and down the Eastern seaboard. With food out for his birds, Hanby says, "I have a lot of drop-ins that feed up and go on their way."

But, like any business, there are risks.

Hanby has lost more than 65 birds in recent years to horned owls and raccoons. The large and vicious owls, especially, swoop down in the night to take away ducks and small geese.

"These owls have an appetite that's unbelievable," Hanby says.

There is danger in the water, too.

Hanby once let his young ducklings swim around the pond until he realized the big-mouth bass were pulling them down "just like popcorn." Now the ducklings swim in a basin.

One of the few birds not allowed at Hanby's preserve are familiar Canadian geese because, he says, "they're mean. They'll fight your other birds."

Hanby once raised chickens just for duty-sitting on more valuable duck eggs. Chickens, he says, will sit on almost anything — duck eggs, swan eggs, pheasant eggs, hard-boiled eggs, golf balls and door knobs. Chickens, however, are on their way out at Hanby's place because they have broken too many duck eggs.

Hanby raises many waterfowl not indigenous to the Northeast. White and black Australian swans are big sellers. Hanby says the Australian swans never get used to the seasons in the Northern hemisphere and they breed in the fall year after year.

With all the ducks and swans, life around the Hanby place is not as noisy as might be expected. With the exception of the trumpeters honking down in the pond, especially when Hanby gives some attention to the goose, there's only an occasional hiss, chirp or whistle from the other waterfowl.

"You don't hear many quacks around here," Hanby says.

BUYING WHEAT

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government so far has bought 16.4 million bushels of wheat that had been destined for the Soviet Union, slightly more than 10 percent of the amount that will be purchased, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland says.

Disco Not Really Dying, Appears To Be Changing

By FRED FERGUSON

NEW YORK (UPI) — "Disco is dying, disco is dying, disco is practically dead," goes the refrain. Or was that the theater?

At the moment, it might just as well apply to what is being said about the disco craze. Disco has become a bad word in the entertainment business.

But disco in its broadest form appears to be changing more than dying.

"Disco had its day, per Midem Stroller.

Translated it means a correspondent reported from a record industry trade show on the French Riviera that disco music — the varied forms of the hustle or tunes to that kind of beat — is declining. Record companies are pushing a variety of other styles — rock, new wave and reggae, in particular. But, Variety says, the companies are being cautious about putting too many blue chips on any single style.

At regional tryouts of the recent Grand National Disco Dance Competition, contestants appeared in many cases to be more ballroom teams than Saturday Night Fever types. They and the sponsors both conceded that dancing styles and music are changing.

To what, is the question. And what is happening to the estimated 12,000 disco clubs across the nation?

Two brash young brothers recently opened a $3 million nightspot some call a disco on Manhattan's upper East Side.

"A disco," came the reply.

"What are you trying to do, ruin the neighborhood?" the jogger asked.

"Call it a dance club, call it an entertainment center, call it anything. But don't call it a disco," said Steve, 31. "We'll have live entertainment, too. And we're geared for fashion shows. We may operate as a supper club."

Opening in the face of a depressed economy and reports of disco's death, they can be forgiven their caution about labeling.

One observer of the disco scene is Porter Bibb, author of "Disco Inferno," a novel some critics have called a thinly disguised version of the "Studio 54" story.

"Disco music is dead, the format known as disco records," said Bibb. "But disco nightlife is the nightlife of the '80s.

"This whole concept of discos as a nightlife style is here to stay. There is the economy of record music. The most expensive of the discos cost in the neighborhood of $20 a night. Compare that to a night on the town any other way.

"The music is changing to rock and fusion. Most record companies have changed their disco departments. But with all the trouble, the scandal and all the headlines, Studio 54 has never done better. Disco is a $4 billion industry."

"I don't think disco will ever be completely dead," said Richard Gordon of Casablanca, a major record label. "But the music is changing. It's getting more into balance."

With the advent of rock, reggae and new wave in the discos, he said, touch dancing appears to be declining. Now, he said, "Everybody is just jumping around."

But some discos are playing '50s music, not to mention '20s, '30s and '40s for those who want to dance.

Syd Fonte, who has six Arthur Murray Dance Studios in the Philadelphia area, has spotted one change. He said people want to learn the jitterbug because it can be done to a light rock beat.

"What's really happening," said Bob Fisher of TRG, which makes sound equipment, "is that people may change the tag. A year from now it won't be called disco. But that's irrevelant. The dance atmosphere is an ongoing reality."

"In Europe," said Bob Greenberg of Panasonic, a stereo system maker, "discos are the place to go to dance, but not just the hustle. And that's what's happening here."

That's just what the Rogers brothers believe. They made their money in a small chain of audio shops, sold out and gambled big on their "dance club."

What they've kept of the disco mode and what they've changed may indicate how the clubs will change to both broaden their appeal and still attract the young well-heeled set who frequent discos.

The place differs from most, Gary said, in that it is better geared to cater corporate, business, political and private parties early in the week and daytime affairs such as fashion shows. It is equipped to handle screenings of new films.

For guests who can take loud rock only so long, it has a glassed-in, partially sound-proof upstairs lounge. A roof garden is to be added as another escape from the noise.

"The most important thing," said Steve, "the club is still built around the dance floor. Dancing, in whatever form, is in and it's going to stay in."

Other trappings remain of more elaborate discos:

—a DJ booth with turntable batteries;

—a membership system that assures entrance for those who join and selective doormen who pick and choose among those who stand in line for the privilege.

"We absolutely guarantee admittance to members," said Steve, "not like some other clubs I could mention."

Which has been one of the problems with the more popular and exclusive discos — the refusal of admittance to members who paid annual fees in the $200 to $350 range to be sure they could get in.

The brothers said the exclusivity of the club system, with all its disadvantages, is an attraction of a place such as theirs because it attracts regulars who want to be "in" among the in crowd.

If not going out among the "ins," the more outlandish costumery in discos appears to being toned down. On special occasions, the big clubs muster up "the funky types" to add to the spectacle.

But, said Audrey Nizen, who works for Sassoon, "Our basic line is jumpsuits, jeans, velvets — not this crazy look. People are getting more sophisticated. They're finished with this showoff generation. They wear what's comfortable."

In the heyday of the Italian Blue Team, the consensus was that Pietro Forquet may have been the world's best player—solid in both the bidding and the play of the cards. But even superstars can make elementary mistakes. See if you can spot where Forquet went wrong on this hand from the 1974 World Team Championship.

North's jump was a limit raise, showing 10-12 points and four-card support. With a better than dead minimum hand, South had enough to continue to game.

Forquet led his singleton club—with first round trump control, he wanted to score a ruff, if possible. Declarer won in dummy with the ace and led a trump to his king. Forquet took the ace and opted to play his partner for the minimum needed to defeat the contract—the ace of diamonds. He shifted to the king of diamonds in an effort to take two diamonds in addition to the ace of hearts and a club ruff. Unfortunately, his plan was not a resounding success. Declarer won, drew trumps and collected all but one of the remaining tricks to score an overtrick.

Have you spotted the error? No, it was not anything as glaring as switching to a spade instead of a diamond. Forquet could not see through the backs of the cards, and a spade switch would have been wrong had declarer held the ace of spades instead of the ace of diamonds.

Forquet slipped when he won the ace of trumps. Had he held up the ace one round, East would have been able to signal by sluffing a low diamond on the second trump, and now the spade shift would have been automatic.

But wasn't it East's fault for not signaling with a high club on the first trick? No! East could not be sure that West's club was a singleton, and if it wasn't, he certainly didn't want to encourage a club continuation.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" The New Gold Rush Is By Recreational Miners

By TERRANCE W. McGARRY

The rocketing price of the precious metal has brought out a new breed that would baffle the burro-and-sourdough prospectors of the Old West.

Here comes the "recreational miner."

That's what they are called by those who are enjoying a boom of their own supplying the needs of the new prospectors. With an ounce of gold now selling for more than $650, the small amounts of fine gold dust an amateur can pan out of gravel, almost worthless in the past, are now valuable.

Residents of western states are joining the search by the thousands. Often, they are middle class families out to find enough gold in the deserts or a mountain river to pay for a vacation or weekend camping trip.

"Two years ago we had about 40,000 members," says George Massie, president of the Gold Prospectors Association of America. "Last month we had 52,000 and this month we have 65,000.

"With the price of gold going up the way it is, everybody and his brother wants to get into recreational mining."

The Association is "mostly weekend people," said Dave Troesh, 33, of Whittier, Calif., a former drugstore manager who knew nothing about prospecting when he took it up as a hobby 18 months ago. He says he now lives on the gold he pans from the Stanislaus River near Sonoma.

"I'm not making a great living," he said, "but I do well enough to get along."

He won't say how much is "well enough." The prospectors and miners are reluctant to talk about how much money they make.

"Not if you're going to put my name in the paper where the tax people can read it," said one. "You'll never get a straight answer on that one from anybody," answered another."

"Without mentioning names, I know of a guy in northern California who began working at it full time who I hear is getting about 10 ounces a day," said Jerry Keene, head of Keene Engineering of Northidge, Calif., which he says is "the largest maker and distributor of portable mining equipment in the world."

"At today's prices, that's more than $6,000 a day."

Whatever the prospectors and miners make, Keene and others in his business have found a bonanza supplying them with everything from maps and $2 gold pans to $4,000 power dredges.

The best equipped amateur gold seekers use such small power dredges to suck up river gravel for sifting. In California, they need a $5 license from the state Department of Fish and Game. The department issued 5,208 permits in 1979, an increase of 1,450 from 1978.

"Our business is primarily recreational mining and we've been running about $2 million to $3 million a year," Keene said. "Now I'm looking at $1 million a month.

"Business doubles by the month. I moved into a larger factory five years ago. Now I'm running two shifts a day, six days a week, and we'll be operating 24 hours a day later this month."

W.G. Scotti of San Francisco Mining and Lapidary said he sold about two dozen small power dredges in January and is now back ordered up to eight weeks.

"My business is five times now what it was a year ago," said Don Coe of Aurora Prospectors Supply Shop in Buena Park, Calif.

"I could stay open all night. People just don't stop coming."

A beginner can start off with about $10 worth of equipment, he said. He discourages them from buying expensive power equipment "until they learn what they're looking for, get out and do some legwork on their own.

"I heard of a guy charging people $100 to take them around the desert for a day, show them what to look for. It wouldn't take too many students to do pretty well at that rate.

"They're almost all amateurs, weekend prospectors. A couple of weeks ago this young man wanted me to look over this river area he found. I told him I was too busy.

"He came in yesterday with a nugget weighing more than half an ounce. It was worth at least $1,000. He got it out of a river right in the Los Angeles area."

Although the big money is in sizable nuggets suitable for jewelry — they command far more than the metal alone, up to $2,000 an ounce — these are difficult to find. "The old timers got most of the easy stuff," said Coe.

But gold dust can still be extracted by those who know how, said Massie, whose club charges new prospectors $15 a year for advice, including a bimonthly magazine packed with ads for mining equipment.

"In a weekend on the San Gabriel river right there in Los Angeles I can get half a coffee can full of sand that will give me half an ounce of gold. At today's prices that pays for the weekend."

"Yes, there's still gold in Los Angeles," he said, recalling that gold was found in Placerita Canyon before the strike at Sutter's Mill that set off the Gold Rush of '49.

"You can get very fine gold out of the Los Angeles river" — which is a cement-lined storm drain for most of its route through the city.

All agreed that beginners should not expect to find gold right away. "I don't want to kid you, most hobbyists take a year or two to get good enough to recover their expenses," said Massie. "There's more to it than just swishing a pan.

"But it's the experiences, the cameraderie. Working with my teen-aged boys in a canyon, we wind up talking about everything and that's worth more than gold to me."

Although he says he is getting more than $100,000 worth of gold nuggets and dust a year from what began as a hobby, like many others, he keeps most of it "in a safe deposit box, so some crook doesn't come around my house with a gun."

Some prospectors hang on to the gold because they just like to possess it, some because they are waiting for the price "to go up over $1,000 an ounce," and some to delay paying taxes until they cash in.

It's not the money, but the rewards of the search, several said — "like a fishing trip where you find money."

"You do things together and you get to know your children better," said Fred Duperin, 52, a retired Calimesa, Calif., irrigation contractor who scours rivers in the Mother Lode country with the aid of a 17-year-old son, an 18-year-old daughter and one of the biggest tools available to an amateur, a power dredge with a four-inch intake.

"More and more families are doing it. We have a Jeep and a 22 foot trailer and we see the same families in the same spots on weekends. I've found gold in the San Bernardino mountains... and in the Cajon Pass and we see other families nearby doing the same thing."

The Rev. Woody Caldwell, a retired Baptist clergyman from San Diego, said that "as a minister, I found hunting for gold was great for strengthening family bonds, and I've pushed it in sermons.

"I'm 60 years old and whenever I have a chance I climb into my station wagon and head out. My 24-year-old son goes with me and we've got a great relationship — life, liberty and the happiness of pursuit."

He has never sold any of the gold he found, the minister said. "I just like the looks of it."

The search is its own reward, said Massie, quoting Robert Service, the poet of the Yukon gold rush in the 1890s:

"I just think that dreams are best,

"Just to sit and fancy things;

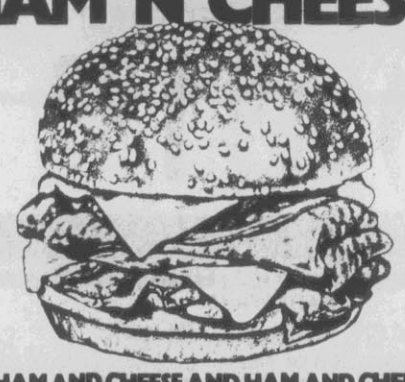

"Give your gold no acid test,

"Try not how your silver rings."

NEW Hardee's HOT HAM 'N' CHEESE™

IT'S HAM AND CHEESE AND HAM AND CHEESE!

Washed Out By Dam And Time

NORTH BONNEVILLE, Wash. (AP) — It's been two years since the ribbon-cutting at North Bonneville's new site, and the brand-new $34 million town is a washout, local officials say.

There's no bank, no restaurant, no cocktail lounge, no doctor, no dentist, no drug store, no gas station, no community center, no barbershop, no motel, no schools and nearly 200 fewer residents in the relocated community.

Some new homes line the newly paved, winding streets, a new fire station houses two new fire engines, City Hall is open for business and a new church holds services.

But the only businesses — a grocery, bait and tackle shop, beauty salon and liquor store — are in temporary quarters whose leases are up in July.

And there's no going back to the old North Bonneville because that is washed out, literally. A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers project to build a new powerhouse for the Bonneville Dam diverts the Columbia River through the old town.

As compensation for the residents, Congress in 1974 ordered the Corps to finance the relocation of North Bonneville two miles downstream. But the old town of 650 went down before the new one went up.

Mayor Ernest Skala and planner Pollard Dickson blame the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for North Bonneville's problems. They want to the Corps to complete the town it promised to build.

Skala and Dickson say the Corps took so long to turn over business sites that many merchants dropped plans to relocate, and soaring construction costs made it impossible for others to move in.

"I really personally hold the Corps of Engineers in contempt for their attitude regarding the relocation contract," Dickson said.

"The real question here is, what is the worth of the word of the United States and its contracts? I can tell you categorically that it means nothing," he said.

With $34 million already spent on the town, Corps officials say they won't spend any more. They say it's time for town officials to assume responsibility.

"This is a very perplexing situation to us," Geiger said. "Here you've got a town you've got to move to make way for a government project, and our attitude has been, 'Let's help these people all we can,' but somewhere it has gotten out of hand."

He says the Corps has yet to finishing platting the town, which is "very embarrassing to us...but we have had some problems defining ownership of some of the property."

One problem the town doesn't have is revenue. Its financial base is a business and occupation tax expected to yield about $2 million, mainly from contractors at the damsite, by the time the powerhouse is completed in 1982.

"We're solvent now, and we can continue," Skala says, "but how long can we hang on?"

Class President Sits In Cell On Murder Charge

By CHRISTOPHER CORBETT
Associated Press Writer

DUNDALK, Md. (AP) — Michael Schindler, class president, told everyone he wanted to make his final year at Patapsco Senior High School his most memorable ever. It has been.

Today, as his classmates look ahead to graduation day, Schindler sits in a jail cell and contemplates a murder trial.

He is charged with the stabbing deaths of two women during Thanksgiving weekend last year in what authorities allege was a murder-for-hire scheme. He is being held without bail because a judge decided it was too dangerous to allow him to be at large.

A formal plea of innocent by reason of insanity was entered earlier this month by his attorney, William Zinman. Schindler, 18, is to undergo a psychiatric evaluation.

At Patapsco High, Schindler's name does not come up as much now; another youth has been elected senior class president. But in interviews with teachers and advisers, it was obvious Schindler is still well thought of.

"Anything bad he's done has been so outweighed by the good," said Elva Venzke, an English teacher and adviser to the high school yearbook, "The Patriot."

"He told the kids he wanted this to be their most memorable year, something they'd never forget," said Thomas Dessecker, a history teacher and co-adviser of the senior class.

"He was such a remarkable kid. Mike was really a natural leader."

Dessecker thumbed through several letters Schindler wrote to his classmates while he was class president, urging them to take pride in the school, pay their class dues and take part in school activities.

"He ranks with the best senior class presidents I've seen," said Patapsco Principal David Driver, a secondary school principal since 1947, the last 12 years here in this working-class industrial suburb of Baltimore.

"He wanted to be helpful. Whatever he could do to make his class or his team or the yearbook shine, he'd do," Driver said.

Last year, when new helmets for the football team arrived and were the wrong color, Schindler took them home and painted them the Patapsco Patriots' school colors — red, white and blue.

"He was the kind of kid interested in preventing vandalism in the lavatory," said Dessecker. "He set a really good example for the rest of the school."

A few days before Christmas, the dark-haired, 195-pound, 5-foot-7 youth was arrested at his home, charged with two counts of first-degree murder and a number of related offenses in the deaths of Maria Zisser, 83, and her 23-year-old granddaughter, Mary Thompson.

The two women had been stabbed repeatedly and their throats were slashed, police said.

Tony Thompson, 27, the younger woman's husband, has been indicted for allegedly arranging the slayings. Schindler and a third suspect, David Robertson, also 18, were indicted on identical charges.

Attorney Zinman said Schindler's defense will focus on head injuries the youth sustained in a car accident a few weeks before the double slaying. Zinman said Schindler's injuries were bad enough that he had to quit the varsity football team.

Schindler's teachers said he had no record of violence. He was known to break up fights at school, Dessecker recalled. Classmates said he did not drink or use drugs.

"He said, 'This is my senior year and I'm going to make it the best I can,'" Hatton recalled. "It was this year that he really put his best foot forward."

Schindler sold advertising space in the yearbook, but his photo will not be among those of the 565 or so seniors graduating. His time in jail has made him miss too much class work and he will not graduate.

There also will be no reference to Schindler in "The Patriot."

Picky Thieves In Burglary

MORRISTOWN, Tenn. (AP) — It was no laughing matter, but there may have been a few snickers among the students at Meadowview Middle School.

The school was burglarized Monday night but, according to Detective Billy Joe Seal, only 10 items were taken.

Early Rush For Cut-Rate Loans

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Some people sat outside all weekend for a chance at cut-rate home loans, but when the initial rush subsided things were pretty quiet at loan offices in Polk County.

Lending institutions reported fewer than 125 people showed up to apply the first day the money was available. Under a county-sponsored bond issue, as much as $35 million is available at 10.5 percent interest, compared to commercial interest rates at near 18 percent. Mortgages are limited to $48,610.

"It was not as good a response as I thought," said Mike Pearce of Haven Federal Savings and Loan. He said applications Monday may have been slowed by a requirement that signed contracts be in hand.

Rutherford County Found Fame In 'Cherry Bounce'

By DR. H.G. JONES
For The Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — "Cherry bounce" — a concoction of three parts whiskey, one part cherry juice and one part sugar — brought fame to Rutherford County and its most illustrious citizen.

Back in 1902, Amos Owens was 81 years old and illiterate, but he had a story to tell. So he invited Melvin L. White to listen to him and his neighbors and to write his biography.

A little 55-page booklet, "A History of the Life of Amos Owens, the Noted Blockader, of Cherry Mountain, N.C." appeared the next year. Amos paid the entire cost of $80 for printing a thousand copies.

It told of a man who deeply believed that a citizen had a right to make an honest living by refining the fruits of nature into a satisfying beverage. Owens paid dearly for his "convictions."

Born in 1821 on Sandy Run in the Walls Church community of Rutherford County, Owens attended only a few days of school, then turned to odd jobs as "hewer of wood and drawer of water" until adulthood.

He rode over to Mr. Sweezy's farm and asked where Mary Ann was. "Why?" the father asked. Amos said he had come to marry her. "Marry, the devil!" snapped Sweezy. Amos shot back, "No, I just want yer daughter."

In two more years, Amos and his bride saved enough money to make a down payment on 100 acres of land on Cherry Mountain in eastern Rutherford. A few years later he added to his holdings until he — like George Vanderbilt — owned virtually a whole mountain.

The main source of his income was moonshine. Except for the cherry trees, the mountain grew little, and it was said that crows flying over the area had to carry a canteen of water and haversack of rations.

At the age of 40, Owens joined the Confederate forces, first serving in the 16th North Carolina Regiment. He was discharged for "anasarca" — a sort of dropsy.

He later joined the 56th Regiment and was captured at Dinwiddy and imprisoned at Point Lookout before being released with typhoid fever. When he recovered from that, he returned to his first love, distilling spirits. He was arrested on several occasions.

During Reconstruction, Owens became active in the Ku Klux Klan, and along with Randolph Shotwell and others, he was convicted of terrorism against a Republican and was sentenced to six years in Sing Sing and levied a fine of $5,000.

Arrested again for violating the federal revenue laws, Owens was sent back to Sing Sing where he claimed his old friends welcomed him with a torchlight parade. By the time he got back to Cherry Mountain, he was a growing legend.

At his home on the mountain, he entertained friends from miles around. He started an annual cherry blossom celebration on the second Sunday in June — a festival that lasted for days and took on the appearance of a medieval tournament with athletic contests, games and military drills. Cherry bounce was the favorite refreshment.

Owens was about 70 years old when again he was hailed before Judge Robert Dick, who had sentenced him several times before. The judge made this plea to the aging bootlegger:

"Three times you have worn the garb of a convict, and time and again have you been fined and imprisoned. You are said to be a man of noble impulses and many worthy traits of character. Your gray hairs should be a crown of glory instead of a badge of infamy.... Amos, as man speaks to man, will you cease to violate the laws of your country and be an outcast of society?"

Amos Owens may have mellowed in his old age, but he never yielded his belief that making moonshine was an honorable calling and ought not to be considered illegal.

Sponsor Demo Barbecue Dinner

"This will be an excellent opportunity for the citizens of this area to meet and talk to their local and state candidates, support their party and enjoy good barbecue," a spokesman for the group said. Tickets will be available at the door.

See Problem In Withheld Taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government withholds too much tax money from 80 percent to 90 percent of American workers and the problem is increasing, a congressional report says.

The General Accounting Office said Tuesday the problem occurs most often with salaried and low-and middle-income workers. The government returns "over-withheld" taxes through refunds after income tax returns are filed; but taxpayers receive no interest on the money held by the government.

Holiday Controversy For Tube

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It is Easter time, and there is a new made-for-TV movie about Christ. Which is to say, there is religious holiday controversy on the tube once again.

Beginning with Franco Zeffirelli's "Jesus of Nazareth," TV movies dealing with the life of Christ have endeavored to instill the filmmaker's notion of reality into the story, and have suffered accusations of irreverence (or worse) for it.

Zeffirelli's film was perhaps the most castigated of the lot, being the first. But "Jesus of Nazareth," for all the uproar it caused, was closest to the traditional telling of Christ's story, an opinion now shared in retrospect by most religious leaders.

"Mary and Joseph," a Christmastime movie on NBC, also generated its share of controversy, largely because it took upon itself the task of going beyond the biblical telling and doing some heavy-duty supposing. Mary dared to have the baby out of wedlock, the movie reckoned, so she was a strong-willed, rebellious girl.

And Joseph was an urban guerrilla who didn't buy any of that immaculate conception stuff. "Mary and Joseph" seemed to be asking for controversy, which, considering the movie's marginal merits, is somewhat understandable.

And now comes "The Day Christ Died," a CBS film that seems calculated to stir a brouhaha. To say that it departs from the traditional Easter story is to brazenly understate the matter. The movie was adapted from Jim Bishop's 1956 book of the same title, but Bishop has denounced the film.

Judas is no cheap traitor here, selling his Lord for 30 pieces of silver. Indeed, Judas Iscariot, the man whose name came to mean treachery itself, was a political activist whose ideals prompted his actions. If anything, this movie suggests, Christ betrayed Judas.

Christ, played by Chris Sarandon, is not the gentle spiritualist of traditional depiction, but a tough-talking charismatic with a death wish. He goes on and on about fulfilling prophesy, thereby playing directly into the central intrigue — which is a power play by Jewish high priests who fear that this Jesus will divide their nation. Christ is merely a political pawn here.

What will probably irritate some people the most is the movie's omitting of the resurrection.

It has its strengths, especially the strong performance by Sarandon as the anomalous Christ. What should be questioned, though, is the attempt to exploit the season with an "Easter movie" so obviously calculated to stir up controversy (read, publicity).

As it is, one can only suspect that CBS is taking advantage of the fact that there is no publicity like controversy. And there is no controversy like religious controversy.

Performers Work With Wheelchairs

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — When members of Wright State University's theater troupe appear for curtain calls at the end of a show, only about half take a bow.

That's because the rest are in wheelchairs.

"Half our members roll around instead of walk," said Bill Rickert, director of Rolling Stock Theater Co. "It's meant to be that way."

The troupe of about 40 students was formed a year ago in coordination with the National Committee of Arts for the Handicapped.

The school, one of eight model sites for the disabled in the United States, began the company as an experiment, Rickert said. At first, many students were wary when a plea was made for handicapped performers, he said.

"But we let them know we didn't want to just use them," he said. "We wanted to do legitimate theater that was entertaining."

So far, the troupe — the only theater group in the nation that Rickert knows of whose membership contains such a large percentage of handicapped persons — has presented three plays. The actors have included paraplegics, quadriplegics and others in wheelchairs.

That often proves to be an advantage, Rickert said.

"The wheelchair provides a whole different rhythm of movement," he said. "Revolving and rotating is a smooth type of movement, compared with legs. The wheelchair also can become a metaphor to suggest entrapment, or it can become other things like a car."

As a result of additional movement on stage, few props are needed, Rickert said. Instead, actors rely on pantomime or other expressive behavior, leaving much to the audience's imagination, he added.

Difficulties often arise, however, when so many handicapped persons are involved in a production, Rickert said.

"They (the disabled) have been denied acting opportunities in the past," he said. "So most haven't been in their high school play and they don't have any experience."

Disabled performers are also limited in what they can physically do on stage, Rickert said. But that doesn't interfere with their internal capabilities, he added.

Not Best Looking, But 'I Ain't The Ugliest'

By MARK SCHWED

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — A long time ago Charley Pride looked in the mirror and said, "Hey, I ain't the best looking, but I ain't the ugliest."

That's the attitude that elevated Pride from a poor Mississippi cotton picker to semi-pro baseball player and eventually led to his becoming the Jackie Robinson of country music.

He now has 37 albums, 12 of which are gold, and countless awards, including Country Music Association Entertainer of The Year, and a Grammy. He has just released an album tribute to country legend Hank Williams, "There's A Little Bit of Hank In Me."

He was the only black man in a white man's field when he left his 10 brothers and sisters and got his start as a country singer in 1964. He still is the only successful black man in country music.

Pride says he's not a "block breaker" — the kind of guy who sits on the front of the bus when everybody else is in the back.

"I'm not here to prove anything. I don't want to have no fuss," says Pride, munching on some sunnyside up eggs, toast, hash browns and chugging a quart of orange juice.

"I'm not a person to go run out and bust blocks or carry pickets. When I first moved, I was the first Negro to move in to the area. I told the real estate people, 'Now, I don't want no publicity about it.'"

That's why Pride "shook it off" when a Dallas country club refused to allow him to become a member last year. Pride filled out application forms to join the club at the request of a friend. He was accepted by 99 percent of the membership but a clause in the club's bylaws provided that if at least five members object, the application is rejected.

"Somewhere there were five members out of 600 who objected. They didn't disapprove and turn down my acceptance because my foot was too big or my finger was too curved. It's so obvious," he says.

"So, if that's what they want to live with, I don't need to be there. Why should I beat my brains out? I can buy me a country club. There are too many important things to worry about than what color I am."

Pride got his start by landing a recording session in Nashville. His first single, "Snakes Crawl At Night," got him exposure — but hid the fact that he was black.

"No pictures were released. It wasn't a big hoopla about the pigments of the color and such. It was a decision not to make any big to-do about the fact that I was unique in that situation.

"I was different, as far as being the first colored man, the first Negro. It was intentionally not used in the promotion."

Pride says the single didn't really become a hit, but it did introduce his name and voice to disc jockeys. They haven't stopped playing his records since.

He has a very simple explanation for his success.

"Charley Pride sings the music people want to hear. There are three basic ingredients in American music. There's country, gospel and blues. If you hear any one of those three, you're hearing it all. I think I am the epitome of those three.

"I'm where it's at. That's no boast. I'm just staying right where I am; where I've always been and where I'm going to stay," says Pride.

Cuts Costs Teaching By Telephone

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — An Iowa community college is using teaching by telephone to help students combat rising gasoline costs.

Kirkwood Community College is sending telephone instruction into small towns — even into a penal institution — with growing success, says Bill F. Stewart, Kirkwood president.

The Kirkwood experiment is significant in an area where population is thinly spread and rising gasoline prices have a great effect on lifestyles, he points out.

"This is country where people have thought nothing of driving one or two hundred miles on a Saturday for a college football game, or a performance by a touring symphony group," Stewart says. "It's a way of life that faces destruction from rising oil costs."

The same people often commute great distances to attend college classes. Kirkwood, for example, serves a seven-county area covering 4,292 square miles of mostly rural farm land and small towns. The college has no dormitories and no resident students.

Stewart says the school's two-year experiment with a telephone "telenetwork" has proven its effectiveness and popularity with students. He says the college now views telephone instruction as a "bridge" to more sophisticated methods, such as two-way microwave television instruction.

On the college's central campus in Cedar Rapids, a single classroom is outfitted with sending-receiving equipment for telephone communications. Instead of regular telephones, there are microphones and speakers that carry telephone signals.

Six classrooms are similarly equipped in smaller cities and towns throughout the Kirkwood service area. Students are invited to attend classes near their home, rather than driving to the central campus. The instructor can teach from any of the seven sites.

The telephone system provides for multisided discussions as well as lectures by instructors. It's not a lot different from a telephone party line. Kirkwood faculty members were given special training on how to make effective use of the medium.

One obvious question about the new system was whether it was too impersonal. To help overcome this, instructors were encouraged to teach from different telenetwork sites on alternating weeks, allowing all of their students to get to know them.

Some subjects were found to be better suited to telephone methods than others. Good results have been obtained in social science, agriculture and criminal justice, and in personal development subjects such as career decision-making and lifestyle planning courses. Subjects such as science and pure mathematics are more difficult to teach by telephone, Stewart notes.

"One of the big advantages for Kirkwood has been the ability to bring college instruction to small groups in rural areas," Stewart says. Previously, the college had difficulty organizing extension-type classes in smaller towns and cities. The telenetwork method makes it economically feasible to teach groups of two or three students at each class site.

Joan Dinerstein Remembers 'Leaving Her Body'

By CHRIS ROBERTS
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Joan Dinerstein was the no-nonsense anchorwoman who served up the evening news on the local CBS-TV affiliate — a steely professional telling it straight and down to earth.

But one story she dared not tell was decidedly not down to earth. It's about ghosts and astral travel and clairvoyance It's about her.

Wind back the clock 30 years to when Joan Dinerstein was 4. Because that's the first time she can remember leaving her body.

"My mother would put me to bed, sweetly whisper good night and go downstairs. But I didn't want to go to bed. There were toys I wanted to be with, things I wanted to do," she recalled in an interview.

"So the real me would lift out of the other me, float over the bed to the other side of the room where my doll cabinet was and I would play."

One night she almost got caught. Or did she?

"My mother came up the steps to check on me sooner than I expected. The astral part of me froze," she said. "The door opened very slowly. And I remember watching her face in the very dim light. Watching her look around the room.

"And I realized that when she looked at me, she looked past me, she didn't see me. And I followed her eyes to the bed. She saw the physical me lying there. And so did I."

Joan Dinerstein grew up with her secret on a mountain looking down on Johnstown, Pa. As a child she remembers "seeing things and people" that others didn't see.

"I don't know who they were, but I carried this feeling that it was wrong to do it," she said. "It was akin to guilt because I knew other people — grown-ups — weren't having these experiences."

She left the mountain as a teen-ager, moved here and earned a degree in communications from Temple University. In 1976, after working as a reporter, she was named co-anchor of the evening news on Channel 10.

In a wink, she had become a media star with a handsome salary. One of her competitors in the Philadelphia rating race was Jessica Savitch, now a national anchorwoman with NBC.

"It was wintertime in Philadelphia," she recalled. "And I woke up in my dream and I was on a beach. It was nighttime and I remember the marvelous feeling of the warm dampness.

"I was sitting in the sand at the edge of the water, wearing a long white dress. And I started to walk, attracted by the sounds of faint music and voices.

"There was a beach house ahead, and as I neared it a young couple walked out on the back porch. There was a party going on inside.

"There was something familar about the man. Then I realized it was my friend, Richie. His face showed he recognized me. I raised my hand to wave at him, and then, bang, I woke up."

The next morning, the phone rang.

"It was Richie, calling from Miami," she said. "He was frantic, upset. He's screaming through the phone, 'What are you doing?'

"He said last night he was at a party, with friends, at the beach. And it was smoky and noisy, and the girl he was with said, 'Let's walk out on the porch and get some air.'

"He said, 'We walk out and we see this lady in a white dress. She's walking up from the water. And she begins to look like you. And I realize it is you. And you wave, and you disappear.'

"He said, 'What are you doing? What's going on?' So I told him."

Joan Dinerstein lost her anchorwoman job last year, a victim of the ratings scramble.

Today, she is a part-time consultant with the Philadelphia School District, teaching communication skills. She is also author of a "psychic cookbook", in which she links food and drink to parapsychology.

She is working on another book in which she and a local photographer are trying to document scientifically the existence of ghosts. Some weeks ago, she and the photographer spent the night shooting film "in a haunted house."

Did she see a ghost?

"I saw something. I don't know what it was. It looked like a glob of energy," she said.

"And in one room I couldn't breathe. I became very heavy. My heart felt like it was coming right through my chest. I sat down in this chair, and I couldn't move.

"Later, the people who owned the house told me someone had died in that chair of a heart attack. That will be documented in the book."

Joan Dinerstein sat in a restaurant the other day and talked about how happy she was that now, with her newscasting responsibilities behind her, she can share her secret.

Her hazel eyes sparkled, the golden braided hair tumbling onto a pastel blue turtleneck sweater. A jade brooch with a Chinese dragon curled about the sun, at her neck. Trim and smart-looking at 34.

Who believes in ghosts? She turned serious.

"I don't know that it's a matter of believing. Did you walk up to people after reading a Buck Rogers book and say, 'Do you believe in ray guns?' Well, we have ray guns now.

"A ghost may be a leftover bit of energy that shouldn't be there. ....But if it's energy then it's real. It exists and it can be measured somehow. Maybe our instruments aren't sensitive enough to catch it. Fifty years ago our instruments were not sensitive enough to capture pulsars....When I was a kid, before I got glasses, certain parts of the classroom didn't exist for me."

Women Train For Role In Astronaut Service

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Alan Shepard. John Glenn. Frank Borman. Anna Fisher. Shannon Lucid. Sally Ride.

Anna Fisher? Shannon Lucid? Sally Ride?

Get the connection? They're astronauts.

Along with Judy Resnik, Rhea Seddon and Kathy Sullivan, they have parlayed careers in chemistry, engineering, geology, medicine and physics into the chance to pioneer a new era in the cosmos aboard the Space Transportation System — the space shuttle.

"I guess the whole idea of women in space tickles just about everybody's fancy, maybe because it conjures up images from science fiction books, old movies and television," says Miss Sullivan, a the 28-year-old marine geophysicist from Paterson, N.J.

Barring complications, the shuttle may go into earth orbit this summer on the first of more than 30 missions scheduled during the 1980s.

The reusable craft — capable of accommodating a seven-member crew — will be used to deploy and retrieve satellites, conduct a variety of experiments and gather data in the earth and life sciences.

All six women are licensed pilots. They're 28 to 37 years old. They weigh from 110 pounds to 150 pounds and are 5-foot-4 to 5-11 tall.

Two are married; one has three children. Two are physicians who practice in local hospital emergency rooms on weekends. Four have doctorate degrees. One is an accomplished classical pianist.

No crews have been assigned past the initial test flights, so it's doubtful any of the women will be airborne before 1982, almost two decades after Russian cosmonaut Valentina Tereshkova circled the globe for four days to become the first and only woman ever to venture into the outer space.

For most of them, being an astronaut was always in the back of their minds, but the chances of being accepted seemed slim.

"When I was a teen-ager, I thought it would be great to be a doctor on a space station," says Mrs. Fisher, 30, of Los Angeles, Calif. "I told a friend, but she just laughed at me, so I never mentioned it again."

As the number of space flights dwindled in the early 1970s, "I realized those space stations weren't going to be built any time soon, so I aimed my energies in another direction," says the UCLA-trained physician.

Then in 1977, for the first time in eight years, NASA chose 200 candidates from more than 8,000 applicants to undergo a week of extensive interviews and examinations.

The field was narrowed to 35 astronaut candidates — 15 pilots and 20 mission specialists — who moved to Houston for 12 months of training.

Then each was assigned to work with NASA scientists and engineers on various shuttle projects in California, Canada, Florida and Texas.

Capt. Alan Bean, a former astronaut who directs the astronauts' training program, says although no one ever questioned the women's intelligence, "there was some concern about how they would perform in the survival training phase, particularly because their upper body strength is less than a man's.

Miss Seddon concedes some skepticism was justified. "Fifty pounds of parachute to a 170-pound man is nothing. But to a 100-pound woman, that's a lot of weight to carry around."

But "we have proven we can handle any difficult situation — maybe not always in the traditional way — and still achieve the same results," she says.

Until they are assigned to a mission, all continue to assist in the backup phases of the first five test flights.

In the early days of the space program "NASA decided the most qualified for the jobs were test pilots, and the natural place to look was in the military where men with those skills were at a premium.

"But I think the situation soon will equalize as the shuttle program expands to include a broader range of the intellectual population," he says.

Offer Prizes In Poster Contest

A poster contest sponsored by the Downtown Greenville Association, with city and county schools and University students participating, will highlight a weekend of events on the Downtown Mall in Greenville.

First and second prizes will be awarded in each of six categories, plus a "best in show" grand prize and runner-up.

Prizes will be a $20 gift certificate for first place; a $15 gift certificate for second; a $60 gift certificate for grand prize; and a $30 gift certificate for grand prize runner-up. The poster theme is "Hop into Spring in Downtown Greenville."

Hanging of the posters will take place Friday afternoon Saturday morning, with the judging scheduled for 10 a. m. Saturday.

Other events on the mall will include a senior citizens' egg hunt; a senior citizens' reception at First Federal Savings' mall office; and a continuous strolling men's and women's fashion show. Saturday there will be music all afternoon and the fashion show will continue. Easter Bunny models will act as hostesses both days.

Coordinating the poster contest will be Sherrill Duncan, assisted by Donna Tabar in judging and Patty Padley, Herb Wilkerson Jr. and Cheryl Lynn McArthur, prizes. MIss McArthur is also coordinating the fashion show, while Jim Herring is overall chairman.

Reinstated 15 Years Later

CAMDEN, Ala. (AP) — Frank Smith, fired from his teaching post 15 years ago, said he was elated after he was reinstated with back pay totaling $80,000.

The Wilcox County School Board had argued that Smith, a teacher at Camden Academy, was dismissed in a cutback of teaching units. When new teachers were hired, the state Tenure Commission ruled Smith should be reinstated. The case finally reached the state Supreme Court, and Smith was rehired after a new circuit court hearing.

"I felt I had a scar on me because I had been branded as unfit," said Smith, who now teaches in Ohio.

California Bargain For Some Middle Class People

By FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press Writer

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — Connie and Rick Nieto, just married and in their 30s, wanted a baby and their own home. They figured one dream would have to wait.

"We figured we couldn't have a baby at 40, but maybe we could have a house later," Mrs. Nieto said. They had resigned themselves to raising a family in an apartment, when an innovative housing program made their second dream come true.

Just as they learned they would be parents, they also found that Palo Alto Housing Corp. had picked them, by lottery, to have a chance to buy a new condominium for $40,000.

State officials who push the "bargain home" plan call the concept "inclusionary" because it gets middle-class people into the housing market, people who might otherwise never get the chance.

In this wealthy community a short drive south of San Francisco, where the average home costs $150,000, 50 people are on the corporation's bargain list, which has replaced the lottery. About 1,000 more want to get on the list, said Sylvia Seman, director of the corporation.

Under the Palo Alto plan, begun in 1974, builders of developments larger than 20 units must sell 10 percent of the units at below market rate (BMR) prices. The BMR price covers only the builder's construction and financing expenses; it doesn't cover land costs.

To be eligible, a family's income must fall within 80 percent to 120 percent of the median community income.

Dave Williamson, supervisor of community development for the state Housing Department, says Palo Alto's plan is more effective than those tried elsewhere because it ties the price of a BMR unit to the cost of living, limiting the profit a BMR owner can make when reselling.

"That means 30 years from now, they're going to have affordable housing in Palo Alto," Williamson said.

Williamson hopes the concept will catch on: "We think it's a useful tool for communities that see the major solution to their housing problems in terms of new construction."

While the concept has been tried in Boulder, Colo., and in Maryland's Montgomery County, officials say the program is doing well only in California. Recently, the planning commission of posh Marin County north of San Francisco approved a law providing for bargain homes.

Williamson thinks the concept can succeed in California because builders "realize only a certain market can afford a $100,000-plus home." They want to build as many units as possible and know plenty of profit is still available, he said.

Oddly enough, despite the demand for BMRs, the city has a low rate for new construction and is not an ideal site for the program. In the last four years, only 50 units have been involved in the program. That rate gives BMR candidates "very little chance to be optimistic" about moving into a bargain home in the near future.

Yet BMR candidate Barbara Ellison said she's willing to wait two or three years to live where "the schools are excellent" and the city is safe and orderly.

In Orange County, building is booming and builders are eager to have their developments approved. The county plan calls for 25 percent of the units to be bargain-priced, Williamson said.

"By pulling up the price of regular housing, we are wiping out far more people than the policy will ever help," said John Kirlin, who teaches public administration at the University of Southern California.

Ms. Seman calls that a "myth."

"The market rate is established by what the buyer and seller are willing to agree on....It has to be as good as the buyer can get elsewhere."

Besides, she argued, "in this town, a builder can get such a terrific rate" that he doesn't need to add on the costs of the bargain houses.

Nicki Prentice lives in the same condominium development as the Nietos. A real estate agent, she says a three-bedroom, two-bath unit that cost $130,000 only 18 months ago could now bring its owner $230,000.

She uses those figures to discredit what Ms. Seman calls the second "myth" attached to inclusionary housing — the notion that market rate owners resent neighors who paid far less for their houses.

And she calls the $8,000 or so profit that BMR owners can obtain after, say, two years, "not exactly peanuts, either."

Nieto, an elected officer of the development's homeowner association, agreed with his neighbor's reasoning. Besides, he said, the four units of the development that were sold as BMRs don't have all the features of the 34 regularly priced units.

"These units are the smaller ones," Nieto said. "We have a one-car garage, everyone else has two-car garages. We don't have a trash compactor. We have a garbage can."

Sixty Thousand Died In Peru's 1980 Disaster

By MARC LIFSHER

YUNGAY, Peru (UPI) — It has been nearly 10 years since a mile-long, half-mile wide mass of glacial ice, mud and boulders thundered down a steep canyon at more than 200 mph, burying Yungay under 80 million cubic feet of debris.

The deluge killed 20,000 people in Yungay alone. Only four palm trees were left standing in the once picturesque pueblo's main square.

Three of the four trees are now dying. But life hums again in the nearby rebuilt "Martyr City of Yungay" a decade after the the worst natural disaster in recorded history of the Western Hemisphere.

The earthquake of May 31, 1970, centered in the Pacific Ocean 15 miles west of the Peruvian port of Chimbote and measuring 7.7 on the Richter Scale, killed outright an estimated 60,000 people. It injured another 50,000 and destroyed 186,000 dwellings.

From the desert coast to the Swiss-like, snowcapped peaks of the deep Huaylas Canyon, barely a structure remained standing.

Months after the quake a U.S. Geological Survey expert, Dr. George Ericksen, called the Huaylas damage "almost unbelievable, possibly surpassing in magnitude such catastrophic events as the Mt. Pelee eruption of 1902 on the island of Martinique and the eruption of Vesuvius in the year 79 A.D. that buried the city of Pompeii."

The earthquake's destruction centered on Yungay. Shocks loosened thousands of tons of rocks and ice from the peak of Peru's highest mountain, 22,000-foot Huascaran, sending them hurtling into two lakes. The overflow mixed with the wall of debris that crushed Yungay and the nearby, smaller town of Ranrahirca.

"I was east and just above the town pasturing my animals when everything started shaking," said Augustino Acuna, 49, standing in almost the same spot astride the same donkey as when he witnessed Yungay's destruction.

"After, there was a calm. All the buildings in the city fell down, and then I heard the rumble coming from Huascaran. It covered the whole city in less than a minute. No one could escape.

"For the next 24 hours there was so much dirt and dust in the air that I couldn't really see exactly what happened in Yungay. The next day the dust cleared and only the palm trees remained."

"I was in the field giving water to my horse when everything started to move," said farmer Grimaldo Ulloa, a mountain dweller whose land lies above the neighboring city of Caraz.

"I was scared. Our house fell down and I thought at least now it will stop. It didn't. The earth moved again and Huascaran fell. The earth rumbled for more than a half hour and then it finally stopped."

In the morning when the dust cleared Grimaldo went looking for his family, visiting in Caraz when the quake struck.

"No one died, but two of my grandchildren were seriously injured and one was missing. We found her five months later in a hospital in Lima.

"We slept outside for eight days and had little to eat until outside help came eight days later."

A decade after the catastrophe, commerce bustles in the market of a largely prefabricated new Yungay north of the rocky plain covering the old city. Everyone in Caraz, Huaraz, Carhuas and other canyon cities now lives in new, mostly unfinished adobe homes.

The canyon's mountain climate and white peaks attract thousands of mountain climbers and foreign tourists, bringing a limited new prosperity to the agricultural region.

"The earthquake all seems like a dream now," said farmer Ulloa's daughter, Mercedes, 24.

"For many years I remained frightened, but now it's best forgotten. Even small tremors don't bother me anymore.

"Still, once in a while, I wonder if it will all happen again."

Overcoming The Climate

By LINDA WEINSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The freezing temperatures outside may be doing more than nipping your nose — they may be driving people away from your community, says a new study.

The study by two economists at Wright State University in Dayton found that weather — cold temperatures to be specific — is a significant factor in determining where people decide to move.

"It is no longer conjecture, it is based on a scientifically conducted statistical test," said Stephen Renas, one of the associate professors of economics.

The researchers cautioned, however, that good climate doesn't always attract people, while cities in unfavorable climates — such as Minneapolis — can provide attractions to offset the chill.

The professors surveyed 34 major cities, taking into account factors such as the cost of living, income growth, educational levels, climate and unemployment.

"Our findings indicate that the most important determinant of migration is a climate-related variable — specifically, how cold the area gets in the winter," the professors concluded.

The winter chill was followed in importance by an area's income growth, education levels, how hot it gets in summer and the cost of living — exclusive of energy costs.

Climate, of course, affects the cost of living because of the expense of heating and cooling buildings.

In the study, climate desirability was determined by measuring how far daily summer and winter temperatures deviated from 65 degrees. The resultant degree-day measurements — the sum of all degrees above or below this comfortable level — provided a more "appropriate measure of weather discomfort" than simple winter and summer temperature averages, the researchers said.

The coldest metropolis was Minneapolis-St. Paul, with 8,310 winter degree heating days. The twin cities' climate was 32nd overall. However, this prosperous Midwest cultural center ranked 14th in in-migration with a rate of 6.7 percent.

Orlando, Fla., had the hottest summer climate with 3,226 cooling degree days. But its climate ranked eighth overall and the home of Disney World tied with Atlanta for fifth in in-migration at a rate of 19.7 percent.

Orlando and Minneapolis-St. Paul show that cities with climate extremes can overcome adverse climate — most readily if the problem is heat, the researchers say. But there is a general rule:

"People don't want to be in places where the weather will make them uncomfortable," said associate professor Rishi Kumar. "They tend to avoid living in extreme climates."

Some Sunbelt cities received middle rankings because they were considered too hot in the summer, he said.

The researchers also considered summer heat, winter wind chill and summer humidity — but found the last was not statistically significant. They based their migration percentages on 1960-1970 figures, the most reliable available.

Overall, the researchers said, the most attractive climate was found in San Diego, neither too hot in summer nor too cold in winter. Its summer cooling and winter heating needs deviated least from 65 degrees — 1,439 degree days in winter; 722 in summer.

San Diego's actual average summer temperature was 67.7, while the winter average was 56. And the city's in-migration rate of 16.4 percent was eighth best among the 34 cities rated.

Buffalo, N.Y., known for its rough winters and heavy snowfall, had the least desirable weather in the survey — an average 68 degrees in summer and 26 in winter. Net in-migration was minus 6.4 percent.

Buffalo's summers are far from hot — only 437 cooling degree days — and its winters are bitter cold — 7,062 heating degree days.

'Sundown' Is A Wanderer

BOB SUNDOWN, a wandering man, says he drops into towns like Congress to keep his hand in society. (UPI Photo)

By RICHARD H. GROWALD
UPI National Reporter

CONGRESS, Ariz. (UPI) — His four burros nosed among the sagebrush between the highway and the railroad tracks.

Bob Sundown, an American who hasn't really made it from yesterday into today, stirred a campfire under a pot of beans.

"I think I'll just sit here a while and think of women," he said.

Sundown, his burros and his four-wheel wagon — it looks like the vehicle that brought Americans west a century ago and, dangled with the pots, pans, radios and the other fallouts of civilization that he trades, it looks like a moving storage closet — roam the deserts and plains from Montana to Arizona.

"I'm not a dropout," he said. "I'm a drop in." He said he drops into towns like Congress to keep his hand in society.

"It's not that I worry about the state of civilization today. I just don't think about it very much."

Congress thinks a bit about Sundown, however. He comes this way about only once every three years. But he is a tourist and Congress savors tourists almost as much as it does the gold found occasionally up in Weaver Creek.

The Rand McNally Atlas editors occasionally have marked down Congress, 45 miles northwest of Phoenix, as a "Ghost Town." And Congress resents it. Mrs. Ella Wilson, who runs the Totem Trading Post, said, "We are not a ghost town. I am no ghost."

"Of course, I'm thinking about moving to Texas," she said.

Congress hasn't really got a grip on itself. Several generations ago the town buildings centered around the Weaver Creek gold diggings. That dried up. So the next buildings began rising on the road leading north into the hills and Prescott. But Mrs. Wilson's trading post is about the only habited building there now.

Currently the activity is a half-mile up another road, where the post office, the grocery and the cafe play where the deer and the antelope rarely set foot. "Things ain't been too lively since we had that drop in the price of gold around the turn of the century," said Chester Tucker, 75, a retired forest ranger living in a desert without trees.

"Really, the trouble is that everybody who lived about the creek diggings have about died out. Oh, I've found me some gold, all right. But the friends of yesterday are gone," the old ranger said.

"Trouble is it gets up to about 118 degrees and stays there an uncomfortable time. It was in the heat that died old Ned Perrot. And Vivian Hale. And Ed Wiseman. And Fred Frederickson. And even Mr. Upton."

He slid his leathery palms together. "Sun does unpretty things to people. I found one friend. He had gone to the spring for water and never got back.

"The sun ballooned and busted the body."

He sat in Mrs. Wilson's trading post. She put a hand on his shoulder. She used her other hand to gesture through the window, at the man with the flat 10-gallon hat, the burros and the wagon.

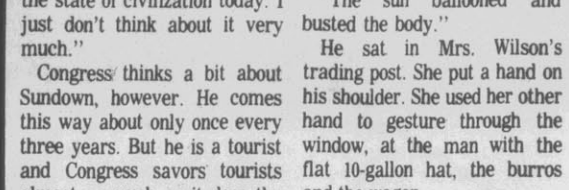

"Sun ain't busted Bob Sundown," she said.

Out under the midday sun, Sundown, his beans eaten, was moving from burro to burro, talking to them, tell them jokes. The jokes must have been familiar. The gray animals did not bray. They just shook their heads.

"Old Moose there," Sundown said, pointing at one burro, "he is 17. Barney is 17, too. George is 15 and Tilley is 13. George is the nicest. He likes everybody. Barney is more civilized; he acts like he's going to bite any stranger but, of course, he is too civilized to do so."

Barney turned his head away. George brayed.

"I was a Marine in World War II. Iwo Jima and all that," Sundown said. "It was all right, I suppose, but as soon as the war ended in 1945, I got me my wagon and my first burros and been on the trail ever since."

Family Survival Story: Twice Escaped Cambodia

By SYLVANA FOA

KHAO I DANG, Thailand (UPI) — Khau Bun Siv considers himself lucky to be alive and luckier still to have escaped Cambodia with seven members of his family, including two tiny grandchildren.

He did it twice.

Khau, 57, was the import director at the Pepsi-Cola bottling plant in Cambodia before Pol Pot's Khmer Rouge forces took power in 1975 and instituted a reign of spartan living that left an estimated 1 million people dead.

"When the Vietnamese invaded Cambodia (in January, 1979) there was suddenly nothing at all to eat," said Khau. "We set out on foot for our old home in Battambang in mid-February and arrived in the city in mid-April."

But things in Battambang, once the center of Cambodia's rice trade, were not much better. The ration established by the Vietnamese was only 200 grams of Soviet-supplied corn per person every 15 days.

"Many, many people were dying of starvation," said Khau. "I decided to get my family out."

Khau's hands trembled as he told the story and the lines of worry deepened in his face. Once a fairly wealthy businessman, he was not ashamed of his torn clothes. He is proud of his ordeal because he managed the impossible in war-ravaged Cambodia — he kept his family together.

For days, the family cut their way through the jungle forests, skirting both Vietnamese and Khmer Rouge patrols.

"We were lucky because we had a guide, my son-in-law's nephew," said Khau. "He really knew the jungle and the border region, but when he got us to the frontier he turned back — he didn't want to leave his old mother alone in Battambang."

The Khau family reached Thailand last May 18 and the first thing Khau did was write to his three brothers already living in San Jose, Calif., and New York City.

"I told them we were alive and I gave them as much news as I could of their own children and friends," Khau said. "They promised to help us come to America."

"On June 9, the Thai authorities came to our camp at Nong Chan and loaded us all into buses. We thought we were going to a processing center," said Khau.

Instead they were driven, along with 42,000 other Cambodian refugees, to the remote northeastern border and forced to scramble down a mountainside back into Cambodia near the ancient temples of Preah Vihar.

"In the first few days many people died by stepping on mines," said Khau, who lost one son, a daughter-in-law and two grandchildren to disease, hunger and execution during the Khmer Rouge reign. "Then there were days of hunger and then the Vietnamese found us."

"The Vietnamese were looking for Chinese because they were angry about the border war with China. They separated all the Chinese and took them away. We got away because we changed our names and swore we were 100 percent Cambodian — not one drop of Chinese blood."

For several months the family wandered across Siem Reap province, site of the magnificent temples of Angkor Wat, trading pieces of their clothing with villagers for food.

"We decided to make another try," said Khau's son-in-law, Sun Sampheat, 39. "The Vietnamese were in full control and we didn't want to live under those people."

Sun Sampheat, the former director of Cambodia's Agriculture Department under Lon Nol, survived the Khmer Rouge days by throwing away his glasses (which betray education), falsifying his biography to say he had been a field hand and changing the names of his whole family.

More weeks in the jungle, picking their way around mines and artillery fire of Vietnamese troops battling Khmer Rouge guerrillas, brought the Khau family "hungry but together" back into Thailand on Dec. 12.

"Now we want nothing but to go to America," said Khau. "My grandchildren Yuvin and Sumet are 7 and 5 years old now and they still don't know their ABC's. I want them to have an education to insure their future."

Khau's wife Savoeun, 55, also wants their 25-year-old son Peng Lam to continue the medical studies interrupted by the Khmer Rouge in 1975.

"When the Khmer Rouge evacuated the cities, we were sent to Kompong Thom Province," she said. "Peng Lam worked as a water buffalo herder for four years and he has a lot of catching up to do before he can become a doctor."

FAMILY ESCAPED TWICE — Khau Bun Siv (center) considers himself lucky to be alive, and luckier still to have escaped twice from Cambodia with seven members of his family. The others, (from left) are son-in-law Sun Sumpheat, daughter Vimol, the couple's daughter, Yuvin, 7, wife Savoeun, son Peter Lam who wants to be a doctor; daughter-in-law Vimean, a widow, with son Sumet, 5. Individuals Do Matter

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — If the newest members show up at meetings, the group will be a Pretty Terrific Association instead of just the Parent-Teachers Association.

At the invitation of Whitney Junior High School students who wanted to boost PTA membership, Amy Carter, Erma Bombeck, Art Linkletter, Jane Fonda, Carol Burnett, George Burns, Miss Piggy and Snoopy are now card-carrying honorary members.

Snoopy sent a pawprinted cartoon.

Amy Carter wrote, "I like the White House. I play with my dog, Grita, and my cat, Misty, and I have a treehouse that I like a lot. I'm glad you're my friend. Love, Amy Carter."

The students believe George Burns typed his note personally, because there were several strikeovers.

PTA membership chairman Florence Bear said the students "learned that an individual does matter. They can reach out to the world and their voice can be heard — even if they are just sending out a PTA card."

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Our first child was born about a year ago. We have been giving a great deal of thought to providing him with all the advantages of modern medicine. It's surprising how two young people who have given relatively little thought to longevity are now concerned about the life and growth of their child. What long-range plans can we lay out to give him the greatest advantage in life? — Mr. and Mrs. S.T.H., N.J.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. H.:

Your mature letter is of special interest to me. For there are, indeed, long-range programs of health which can affect the well-being and the life span of your child.

There is no greater testimonial to the accomplishments of modern medicine than the fact that your child will, in all probability, live at least to the age of 75, especially if he is given the advantage of all the protection that is available.

Immunization against disease is, of course, the first gift that you will give him. Sustained immunization, so commonly overlooked, is the next gift. For far too often the initial vaccination against infectious diseases is assumed to give permanent protection. It does not.

Undoubtedly, the greatest threat to adults are the problems related to hardening of the arteries that lead to the heart and to the brain. It almost seems preposterous to believe that efforts to prevent vascular disease can start early in life.

It is an axiom, however, that the "fat infant becomes the fat child, becomes the fat adolescent and, eventually, the fat adult." Herein lies one of the greatest threats to health and longevity.

Good eating habits established early in life lay the groundwork that will reflect itself in fine health during adulthood. Diets filled with fatty foods and sugars undoubtedly leave their mark on the entire vascular system. And vascular diseases account for more than 30 percent of all deaths between the ages of 40 and 65. Coronary heart disease and strokes remain the greatest offenders to continued health.

It is exciting to know that, in the past 10 years, there has been a definite decrease in the death rate from heart attacks and strokes. This has been attributed to the reduced intake of fatty foods, for high cholesterol foods are acknowledged to be one of the major causes of changes in the blood vessels.

Arteriosclerosis, a major threat to many adults, can be modified by the elimination of tobacco, by well-regulated exercise, by the early recognition of high blood pressure and diabetes, and, of course, by a nutritious diet that is low in salt and saturated fat.

Long before your child is in the adolescent phase, you must anticipate the possible threat of drugs and alcohol.

With such planning, and with constant medical supervision, new parents can lay the groundwork for a healthy, happy future for their child.

Heavily Investigated Sinatra Seeking Clear Name

By MYRAM BORDERS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Nevada means pain and joy for many who return repeatedly to try to beat the wheel of fortune. Frank Sinatra is no exception.

The entertainer has lost and won at money and romance in Nevada. His two front teeth once were knocked out in an altercation with a Sands Hotel casino boss. His son Frank Jr. was kidnapped from a Lake Tahoe resort in 1963 and later released unharmed. That same year the state forced Sinatra to surrender a gambling license because it didn't like his friends.

Sinatra, who fought his way from Hoboken, N.J., to become an entertainment legend, prevailed in most every instance. But he has never again held a Nevada gamling license.

In 1970 it appeared Sinatra was through with Las Vegas. He stormed out of town in a pistol-waving, chip-throwing incident at Caesars Palace casino. He did not appear in a Nevada night club for more than three years afterwards.

Eventually the casino boss was fired and Sinatra quietly supported the election of a new district attorney. When Sinatra returned to Caesars Palace in 1974, welcomed by a capacity audience of Hollywood and New York celebrities, he stayed. He became involved.

The University of Nevada, Las Vegas, awarded him an honorary degree several years later. He helps raise money for charity and entertains annually to raise money for UNLV athletic scholarships. The one-night show pumps more than $1 million into the college athletic program.

He has starred exclusively at Caesars Palace Hotel ever since his return to the Las Vegas "Strip." When the marquee reads "Sinatra," high-rollers and big spenders flood into the resort. Hundred dollar bills exchange hands at the showroom door as patrons vie for seats.

But Sinatra wants more than applause — he wants back in the gaming industry with state sanction. Caesars Palace hotel officials are trying to make the wish materialize.

Owners of Caesars Palace filed an application with Nevada gaming agencies in January asking that Sinatra be approved as a "key employee" of the hotel-casino. Some observers speculated Sinatra was testing the waters with the intention of eventually applying for a full blown gambling license.

Caesars Palace Executive Vice President Harry Wald told state officials Sinatra would have nothing to do with the casino as a "key employee" but rather would handle special promotions for the hotel and consult on entertainment policy. Nevada gaming agencies can force persons with a direct casino involvement or those earning over $40,000 a year to apply for "key employee" status.

Wald told the Nevada Gaming Control Board recently that Caesars Palace and Sinatra negotiated an agreement whereby the entertainer as a "key employee" would promote the hotel-casino, consult with directors on advertising on other matters and will have authority to sign for free rooms, meals and food for guests. The salary was not disclosed.

Wald said Sinatra would be a "great boon" for the hotel. In the past the singer has maintained a high profile in Caesars Palace at the gambling tables in order to attract other players to games of chance. Wald said if Sinatra were licensed by the state the practice would stop. A Nevada regulation prohibits an operator, shareholder or key employee from gambling in his own casino.

The Nevada Gaming Control Board recommended Feb. 13 that Sinatra undergo an extensive investigation to determine if he were suitable for licensing as a "key employee" in Nevada gambling. The board said an investigation would be extensive and probably would take more than the 90 days, the time alloted under Nevada law for processing such applications.

Milton Ruden, Sinatra's long-time friend and attorney, told the Nevada Gaming Control Board Sinatra would be reasonable if more time were necessary to conduct an investigation but said a blanket waiver of the 90-day rule was unacceptable. Ruden said he did not want the application pigeon-holed. Ruden told state gaming officials he would turn over to the state all prior investigations of Sinatra, including those made by the FBI.

"Mr. Sinatra has been one of the most extensively investigated men in America during the past 40 years," said Ruden.

"Mr. Sinatra wants to get his Nevada affairs in order," according to Pete Echeverria, a director of the hotel and former chairman of the powerful Nevada Gaming Commission.

"We determined at Caesars Palace this was the proper thing for us to do. Mr. Sinatra is a world famous individual and probably one of the best known men in the world."

"We came to the conclusion we would cooperate with Sinatra in his request. He had requested he be granted a position as a key employee so he could trigger a licensing application. He is an important member of the Caesars family with expertise and much to contribute," Echeverria recently told state gaming officials.

The bobby-sox crooner of the 1940s who mellowed into a show business legend is known for his fierce pride and overwhelming loyalty to friends. Perhaps it was that loyalty which got him into trouble with Nevada gaming investigators in 1963.

Giancana was listed in the so-called Nevada "Black Book." Nevada casino operators can loose their gambling license if persons in the "Black Book" are found on the premises.

Giancana, considered by state and federal investigators as a major underworld figure, was murdered at his Chicago home June 19, 1975. He was killed a few days prior to testifying before the Senate Intelligence Committee about an assassination plot against Fidel Castro. The murder was never solved.

"Mr. Sinatra wanted to file a license for a key employee application and submit himself to a fair hearing so he can get this unpopular experience he had in 1963 behind him," said Echeverria.

Rare Drugs In Storage Sites

ATLANTA (AP) — A physician may diagnose a rare disease — then not have the medication to treat it.

To prevent deaths from such diseases as African sleeping sickness, cases in which the drugs are rare as the illnesses, the medicine is stockpiled at the National Center for Disease Control for immediate shipment anywhere in the country.

Last March 13, the CDC received a call from a physician in Seattle, Wash. A patient had returned from Africa with what appeared to be just that disease.

Three and a-half hours after the call, a doctor from the CDC was flying to Seattle with the new drug suramin.

Last winter, a severe case of malaria turned up in Kentucky. The infection was multiplying so rapidly doctors feared the patient had only about 48 hours to live.

The CDC had the needed medication, but a snow storm in Kentucky had airplanes grounded. A relay of state patrol cars got the medicine to Lexington.

There were more than 3,000 similar emergencies last year, which were answered by the CDC Parasitic Drug Service.

Many of the calls involved tropical diseases, which have high mortality rate. Sleeping sickness as a mortality rate of about 50 percent.

Drugs to treat these diseases are not available in the United States because commercial drug firms have no profitable reason for stocking them, said Dr. Myron G. Schultz, director of the parasitic diseases division.

The CC can provide four special immunobiologic agents and 13 drug for parasitic diseaszs. The telephones are answered by a duty officer 24 hours a day.

Five of the drugs are available at CDC quarantine stations at airports in Boston; New York City; Houston; Seattle; Washington, D.C.; Los Angeles; San Francisco; Miami; Chicago; and New Orleans.

"One of the things we're doing is protecting our own citizens, who may come down with one of these diseases," Schultz said. "But most Americans are not aware of what is happening in the rest of the worlj.

"The problem with some diseases in the tropics is so immense that there is no hope of eradicating them or controlling them," Schultz said Friday in an interview. "Some of these diseases are out of control."

"Malaria in some parts of South America, Central America and India is rampant," he said. "The upsurge in malaria is worldwide.

"The first thing to tell a doctor is, 'I have been to the tropics,'" Schultz said.

Roles Open To Laicized Priests

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — Catholic Bishop James W. Malone has sent a letter to priests in his diocese, saying that laicized priests may be hired in diocesan and parish posts for any liturgical, teaching or other church jobs which are open to lay persons.

The diocesan Senate of Priests had recommended such a policy. In his letter, Bishop Malone said that "in accord with current church legislation, laicized priests should be given an opportunity to use their gifts and training in the service of the church."

Votes Cast In Senate And House

Roll Call Report Service

WASHINGTON — Here's how area House members were recorded on major roll call votes March 13 thru March 19. There were no Senate votes.

INDIAN CLAIMS — By a vote of 250 for and 134 against, the House agreed to extend for two years the April 1, 1980 deadline for federal government lawsuits upholding rights granted to Indian tribes under treaties and other agreements. Such suits usually involve land claims and disputes over mineral or fishing rights. The bil (S 2222) now goes to conference with the Senate.

Rep. Donald Mitchell, R-N.Y., a supporter, predicted a deluge of lawsuits unless the deadline is extended, and said "landowners will be dragged into years of burdensome and costly litigation..."

Rep. Gary Lee, R-N.Y., an opponent, said an extension of the deadline would generate even more court cases and "invite the lawyers to go on the 'law path' — not the warpath, but the 'law path.'"

Members voting "yea" favor extending the time for filing government lawsuits in behalf of Indian claims.

Rep. James Martin, R-9, did not vote.

CAYUGA INDIANS — The House failed, 187 for and 201 against, to get the two-thirds majority needed to pass a bill resolving a Cayuga Indian land claim. The bill (HR 6631) would have put into effect a negotiated court settlement agreed on by the Cayuga Nation and New York state. The settlement grants the Indians a 5,481-acre reservation and an $8 million trust fund, in return for their not filing lawsuits to obtain certain land.

The Cayugas say that without the settlement they will go into court to get possession of 64,000 acres in the Finger Lakes region. A two-thirds majority for passage was required by the short-cut parliamentary procedure by which the bill was brought to the floor.

Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., a supporter, said Congress should okay the settlement to protect 4,000 landowners against Cayuga lawsuits. "Litigation is clearly not a sane solution," he said.

Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont., an opponent, said the proposed settlement was deficient because it gave the Cayugas excessive police powers and property acquisition rights.

TAXING OIL COMPANIES — By a vote of 185 for and 227 against, the House rejected a move to exempt "independent" oil companies from the new tax on windfall profits resulting from President Carter's decontrol of oil prices. Independents, who do most of the exploring for oil, generally are not involved in oil refining or distribution. The vote preceded final House passage of the windfall profits bill (HR 3919), which now is pending in the Senate.

Rep. Bill Archer, R-Tex., a supporter, said: "The estimated $18 billion in revenues waived by this exemption is a small price to pay for "the ... additional domestic oil production."

Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., an opponent, said: "Clearly, many large independent producers are realizing windfall gains as large as the top 20 oil companies..."
