N. C. Voters Go To The Polls Tomorrow

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

County voters will have the opportunity in Tuesday's primary balloting to participate in choosing nominees in several key races, both on a national and statewide level.

In addition, non partisan voting will take place as area voters will choose members of both the Greenville and Pitt County Boards of Education.

In all, nine ballots will be distributed tomorrow, with Democrats and Republicans voting according to party affiliation. All voters will cast ballots in the non partisan elections.

In the state's presidential primary, Democratic candidates include incumbent Jimmy Carter, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, and California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. A "no preference" box is also listed on the presidential ticket.

Republican registrants will choose from a slate of seven candidates for president, including Philip Crane, Robert Dole, Ronald Reagan, John B. Connally, John B. Anderson, Howard Baker and George Bush. Only Reagan, Anderson and Bush are actively campaigning for the GOP nomination, although the remaining four qualified and officially filed for inclusion on the ballot. "No preference" is also listed.

A lengthy ballot for state offices will be distributed to Democrats and voters will be asked to make several choices, including: governor, with incumbent James B. Hunt Jr. opposed by Harry J. Welsh and former chief executive Robert W. (Bob) Scott; lieutenant governor, with incumbent James C. (Jimmy) Green opposed by Clyde Pulley and House Speaker Carl Stewart Jr.; secretary of state, with incumbent Thad Eure challenged by George W. Breece;

State auditor, involving W. S. (Bill) Chestnut, J. E. B. Davis, and Edward Renfrow; commissioner of insurance, where incumbent John Ingram is challenged by former deputy commissioners Roy Rabon Jr., Kenneth Brown, and James E. (Jim) Long; superintendent of public instruction, with longtime incumbent Craig Phillips opposed by Trosper N. Combs; and Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, where Otway Burton and J. P. (Phil) Carlton are candidates.

Republican voters will choose either C. J. (Charlie) Carstens or Beverly Lake as the party's gubernatorial nominee, while Keith S. Snyder and Harold A. Covington are seeking the GOP nomination for state attorney general. Walter B. Jones is seeking his eighth full term as a representative from the First Congressional District. Jones is opposed in his re-election bid by Edenton farmer and real estate agent Joe Hollowell.

A Democratic ballot will also be issued for several other key offices, including: state senator from the Sixth District, with Vernon E. White and Julian R. Allsbrook, incumbents, and Greenville businessman Mark Tipton seeking the two available seats; state House of Representatives, Eighth District, with incumbent Sam D. Bundy, and Ed N. Warren, David E. Bosley and Mark W. Owens seeking the two seats; District Court judgeship from the Third Judicial District, with incumbent E. Burt Aycock Jr. opposed by Lewis Evans; and the second Third Judicial District judgeship, with E. Lamar Sledge, Bryan Ippock, Moses D. Lasiter and J. E. (Jim) Martin as candidates.

Incumbent County Commissioner R. L. (Bob) Martin is opposed in his re-election bid by Eugene (Gene) James.

Republican voters will also choose two nominees for the Sixth District, State Senate seats. Candidates for the post are Herbert W. (Herb) Lee, George Alton Grayiel, and Joseph Allison Grayiel.

Seeking election to the three available seats on the City Board of Education are incumbents Lena B. Brown, S. G. (Jack) Wall, and Sue E. Zadeits, and also former board member Henry G. Dunn Jr.

Three seats on the county Board of Education will also be filled tomorrow. Benjamin W. (Bill) James and incumbent William J. (Jack) Edwards Jr. are seeking the Carolina-Pactolus Township area seat, while Walter Gaskins and E. B. (Ed) Bright are seeking to represent the Grifton Township area. James W. A. (Jim) Black is unopposed in his re-election bid for the Winterville Township area seat on the county board.

Pitt polling sites will open tomorrow at 6:30 a.m. and close at 7:30 p.m., according to Margaret Register, supervisor of the Pitt County Board of Elections.

Miss Register said that 32,087 citizens are registered to vote in the primary, including 26,325 Democrats, 4,729 Republicans, six listed as Libertarians, and 1,027 listed as "unaffiliated."

County polling officials are reminded to call "The Daily Reflector" Tuesday evening after votes are counted. The "Reflector" will tabulate returns and post unofficial election results on a board located on the parking lot side of the newspaper building.

Returning Servicemen

Iran Turns Over Eight Bodies

By The Associated Press
The bodies of the eight U.S. servicemen killed in the failed hostage rescue mission in Iran were turned over today to a Greek Catholic Archbishop who said he would take them on a flight to Switzerland on Tuesday for transfer to the United States.

Iranians said they found a "possibly American" helicopter abandoned in the desert after four helicopters violated Iranian airspace Sunday, the official Pars news agency reported today. But in Washington, Defense Department spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Gordon Peterson said there was no such violation and the helicopter was the one abandoned during the failed April 25 mission to rescue 53 Americans from Tehran.

The bodies of servicemen killed in that mission were handed over Archbishop Hilarion Capudji, who was accompanied by Swiss Ambassador Eric Lang and the papal representative in Iran, Monsignor Annibale Bugnini, the radio said.

Capudji said he will fly with the bodies Tuesday to Switzerland where he will turn the remains over to the International Red Cross for transfer to the families in the United States.

An earlier Tehran Radio broadcast said Capudji would deliver the bodies to the Vatican. There was no explanation for the change in plans. However, Capudji, who spent three years in an Israeli jail for running guns to the Palestinians, has not been authorized to act for the Vatican.

Capudji expressed gratitude to revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini for Iran's "humanitarianism" in handing over the bodies, according to a London-monitored broadcast. "The return of the bodies is a symbol of the sublime spirit of Islam devoid of the slightest political motivation," he was quoted as saying at a meeting with Khomeini today.

The Americans were killed April 25 when a helicopter and transport plane involved in the mission collided on the ground 200 miles east of Tehran.

The next day the militants holding 50 of the hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran since Nov. 4 announced they were transferring some of the captives to other cities to foil any other rescue operation that might follow.

In the following week, the militants said they had moved 5,800 cities, and they added Arak and Mahallat, about 155 miles southwest of Tehran, to the list.

However, they said some of the hostages were still held at the embassy, and the Foreign Ministry is still holding three embassy officials who were there when the militants seized the embassy.

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr met Sunday with Cuban Foreign Minister Isidor Malmierca Peoli, presumably to discuss the international conference Bani-Sadr wants to hold in Tehran May 10-12 to condemn the U.S. rescue operation.

Tehran Radio said Malmierca on his arrival Saturday said Cuban President Fidel Castro, as president of the non-aligned movement, agrees to the meeting and is confident the nonaligned countries will vote complete support for Iran. But Tehran Radio's report of his meeting with Bani-Sadr made no mention of the anti-American meeting. Instead it said they discuss the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

Cuba Freedom Toll Is Rising

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — The apparent death toll in the two-week-old "Freedom Flotilla" rose to seven as Cuban refugees streamed across the Florida Straits in record numbers, the Coast Guard reported today.

Authorities said a 67-year-old Cuban woman died of an apparent heart attack moments after stepping onto a Key West dock Sunday. Two more persons were missing and presumed drowned after their small craft went down while returning to Key West from Cuba's Mariel harbor. Four people died in a storm last weekend.

Chief Petty Officer Paul Scotti of the Miami Coast Guard station said 3,784 refugees arrived Sunday — a record number for any one day, bringing the total to 12,867 who have reached Florida since Cuban President Fidel Castro said Cubans could leave the island nation.

In the Florida Panhandle, the long, hard journey to a new home neared an end for some of the refugees as around-the-clock flights from Key West brought refugees to a tent city near Eglin Air Force Base.

ECU Alumni Center Dedicated Saturday

By MARGARET E. BUNCH
ECU News Bureau

The Taylor/Slaughter Alumni Center of ECU, a mid-century Fifth Street mansion of classical Georgian style architecture, was dedicated in ceremonies Saturday as the first permanent headquarters of the 40,000 member ECU Alumni Association.

Dedication of the center, formerly known locally as the Helen White Hawes home, took place on the lawn overlooking the ECU main campus along Fifth Street. Several hundred alumni, ECU officials and friends of the university attended.

A plaque was unveiled honoring distinguished alumni Luther M. Taylor, Jr. of North Palm Beach, Fla., and E. Marvin Slaughter of Virginia Beach, Va., whose gifts made possible acquisition of the new alumni center earlier this year. Both Taylor and Slaughter, as well as Slaughter's wife, Betty, are East Carolina graduates and both have children either presently at ECU or who will enroll in the Fall.

The dedication ceremonies highlighted ECU's annual Alumni Day program which included an open house, a luncheon, tours, class reunions and presentation of awards. At the luncheon, Chancellor Thomas B. Brewer revealed plans for future growth and development of the university.

ECU is making requests for legislative funding of a large classroom building, a cancer treatment center for the ECU School of Medicine, renovation of Flanagan building and a second phase of renovation of Wright Auditorium.

The university's "shopping list is long but the responsibilities of the university are great," Brewer said.

Brewer congratulated alumni for additional support "in dimes and dollars, in cooperation and counsel, and in prayers." "Last year I came before this group with hopes of what the alumni could do," he said. "This year we have solid evidence of support of the alumni." He said fund donors of the alumni programs increased 132 percent to 3,837 and gift dollars increased by 73.6 percent.

Brewer said East Carolina has passed through its infancy and adolescence to adulthood and is "now ready to realize its full potential as a great university."

He cited the fact that ECU already offers degrees of PhD in basic medical science disciplines and the MD.

"We are requesting the PhD in Business and Geology, and adding several new masters degree programs," the chancellor said.

The ECU Alumni Association financed 15 scholarships last year and will give 25 this year. The number is scheduled to increase by 25 each year until 100 alumni scholarships are established, Brewer said.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Hooray for Mr. Anderson who objected to the misuse of the words "exceptional" and "special" when referring to Mongoloid, or as you corrected, "Down's Syndrome" children.

Why is it that standard dictionary meanings and words seem to no longer suffice in today's society? Just what metamorphosis is supposed to occur when Negroes are called "blacks" and homosexuals are called "gays"? Neither word is very descriptive of its respective group. When schools/media now insist on calling a retarded child an "underachiever," is that supposed to suddenly make him more intelligent? Or just more content with his lot? Or are we doing it to comfort the "poor parent"?

Abby, one cannot disguise or change the truth by giving it a different label.

I'm signing my name, but if you print this, sign it...
DISGUSTED IN BEAUFORT, S.C.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Of all the letters I received in response to Mr. Anderson's (and there were hundreds), yours was the only one that said hooray for him. Read on for an especially poignant response:

DEAR ABBY: This is prompted by the asinine letter written by William G. Anderson Jr. Twenty years ago when my special child was born, a friend sent me a poem that I would like to share with other mothers of special children. I am proud to be one of those chosen few trusted to care for one of these children.

MARILYN NEWTON, TUCSON, ARIZ.

Heaven's Very Special Child

A meeting was held quite far from earth
"It's time again for another birth,"
Said the Angels to the Lord above,
"This special child will need much love."

His progress may seem very slow
Accomplishments he may not show
And he'll require extra care
From the folks he meets way down there.

He may not run or laugh or play
His thoughts may seem quite far away
In many ways he won't adapt
And he'll be known as handicapped.

So let's be careful where he's sent
We want his life to be content
Please, Lord, find the parents who Will do a special job for You.

They will not realize right away
The leading role they're asked to play
But with this child sent from above
Comes stronger faith and richer love.

And soon they'll know the privilege given
In caring for this gift from heaven
Their precious charge, so meek and mild
Is heaven's very special child.

Defer Data To After Primary

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Reports on two federal job programs have been delayed until after Tuesday's primaries, a Raleigh newspaper reported Sunday.

One report is from the State Auditor's Office audit of jobtraining contracts awarded to a printing company owned by Wilbur Hobby, president of the state AFL-CIO.

The other concerns Eastern North Carolina Opportunities Industrialization Center in Washington County.

Both received federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act funds, which are administered by the state.

The News and Observer of Raleigh reported Sunday that Gov. Jim Hunt has had a report on the Washington County center since April 7. A spokesman for Hunt, said it would take two or three weeks to edit the report.

The newspaper also reported that Hobby has held up an audit of contracts given his company by delaying an interview with the auditor's office.

Oppose New N.C. Clinics

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Medical Society doesn't want the state Department of Human Resources to develop more primary care clinics at health departments throughout the state.

The society's House of Delegates adopted a resolution to that effect Saturday after Dr. J. Benjamin Warren of New Bern, the society's outgoing president, said clinics are cutting into the development of new private medical practices.

"The people who are utilizing those services are the people who in the past created a nucleus of a new practice and they will simply not be available to new physicians who might wish to settle nearby," said Warren.

Warren also said such patients could be served at less cost by private practitioners. He said what might cost $25 to $35 at a public health clinic could be obtained in his office for $12 to $15.

"We really in good faith feel the patients are not getting good care (at such public clinics)," he said.

Primary health delivery systems now offer basic outpatient services in 21 of 22 North Carolina counties where there is only one doctor for 4,000 or more residents, according to the N.C. Division of Health Services.

Applicants On Waiting List

ECU News Bureau
It was announced today that increased enrollment demand for next fall has forced ECU to place all new freshman applications on a waiting list.

"Freshman applications processing must be suspended immediately," said Walter M. Bortz, director of admissions.

Freshman applications received prior to May 5, which total about 6,000, will be processed normally, Bortz said.

Chancellor Thomas B. Brewer said the increasing demand for admissions to ECU was "gratifying" in that it is a "certain sign that East Carolina University is continuing to grow and develop in academic stature and quality." He said the surge in freshman applications is the "result of growing statewide and regional demand for academic programs offered at ECU."

But university officials said the present volume of applications and enrollment projections indicate that ECU is full for next fall insofar as undergraduate students are concerned.

Vice chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert H. Maier said one of the reasons for the striking increase in enrollment projections is "that faculty and staff are doing an outstanding job in advising and counseling students before academic problems arise and in the presentation of important career development opportunities."

In announcing the freshman admissions hold-up, at least temporarily, Bortz said ECU will not stop accepting applications.

We are going to continue to accept applications for this fall, and we remain hopeful, he said.

Also officials emphasized that the "hold" does not apply to graduate students or those already pre-registered for the fall semester. Last fall, ECU had an on-campus enrollment of 12,600. Pre-registered this spring for next fall are 8,600 students compared to about 8,000 pre-registered a year ago.

Bortz said transfer and other students who will pursue programs other than in the School of Business will be admitted as space permits. All admissions of new students to the ECU School of Business has been suspended and probably will remain suspended through Spring, 1981.

"We are suggesting that they (would-be ECU applicants) may want to consider other alternatives because they may not get off the waiting list," Bortz said.

Other alternatives, he said, include applying to less-crowded schools, community colleges and technical institutes, other programs or waiting for possible openings for the spring semester at ECU.

Bortz said the admissions office will be available to counsel prospective students interested in attending ECU concerning "alternative courses of action that may be appropriate." The admissions office is open each weekday during normal business hours and appointments may be made by calling (919) 757-6640.

"We are looking at and attempting to balance a number of sets of figures and projections to predict our enrollment and our enrollment problems for the fall," Bortz said. National trends indicate increasing college enrollments again this year nad 1981.

The ECU housing office has determined that demand for campus and off-campus housing will exceed the available supply next fall. And the ECU financial aid office has reported a substantial increase in student aid applications.

Chisolm On Teddy's Side

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Shirley Chisolm, D-N.Y., endorsed Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., in Durham Sunday night, challenging blacks to ignore their leaders who stand by President Carter for what she called selfish reasons.

Mrs. Chisolm was the keynote speaker at a rally sponsored by the Durham Committee on the Affairs of Black People. Speakers at the rally called for black unity in Tuesday's primary.

Mrs. Chisolm criticized a slate of five white men who are running for the Durham County commission. She noted that nearly 40 percent of the city's population is black. She also questioned the lack of women on the slate.

"All white males in this day and age?" she asked.

Discussing the presidential race, the congresswoman said she likes Carter as a person but said she didn't make endorsements that way.

"He's a very decent man, he really is," she said. But she added, "He can't cope."

In endorsing Kennedy, Mrs. Chisolm called attention to the high unemployment rates for blacks, the plight of senior citizens and the soaring price of housing.

Mrs. Chisolm fought the presidency in 1972. She said she did so to open up the process.

Carter was represented at the rally by Ben Brown, Carter's black deputy campaign director, who urged voters to keep Carter to continue to reap the "dividends" from the investment they made in the 1976 election.

Couple Speaks Vows Sunday Afternoon

Kimberly Beth Kilpatrick and David Murray Bronstein were united in marriage Sunday at 3 p.m. in a ceremony performed in the Hooker Memorial Christian Church. The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. E. Linwood Kilpatrick, father of the bride.

The bride is the daughter of the Rev. and Mrs. Kilpatrick of Winterville. Mr. and Mrs. Murray E. Bronstein of Goldsboro are parents of the bridegroom.

Maids of honor were Mary Susan and Karen Kilpatrick of Winterville. Bridesmaids included Carol Barwick of Atlanta, Ga., Rhonda McLawhorn and Cindy Jamieson, both of Greenville, Davida Bronstein of Goldsboro, Marianne Faust of New Orleans, La., and Valerie Greenhouse of Washington, D. C. The flower girl was Brandy Barwick of Atlanta, Ga.

The bridegroom's father served as best man and ushers were Paul Bennett and Tom Meyers of Goldsboro, Chuck Freedman and John E. Baker III of Washington, D. C., Darryl Rudisill and Raymond Tripp of Greenville, Robert Kidney of Philadelphia, Pa., and Joey Rebo of Greensboro.

Larry Jones presented a program of organ music. Bill Byrd was soloist. Miss Elizabeth Grimes directed the wedding and Miss JoAnne Haislip presided at the register.

The bride graduated from D. H. Conley High School and attended ECU. She now manages Youth Togs, Inc., Greenville. The bridegroom graduated from Goldsboro High School and is attending ECU. He plans to enter medical school.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to Hawaii.

For the ceremony, the bride wore an ivory organza and beaded alencon lace gown with a cathedral train. The fitted alencon lace bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline and full length tapered sleeves. Clusters of seed pearls adorned the bodice and lace appliques on the sleeves. The full organza skirt had garlands of Venice lace encircling the crystal pleated flounce that bordered the hemline. She wore a waltz length mantilla bordered with beaded alencon lace motifs attached to a lace caplet etched with crystals and seed pearls. The bride carried an ivory satin Bible which her mother carried in her wedding. It was trimmed with antique lace from her great great grandmother's wedding dress and was adorned with greenery and white roses.

The attendants wore formal length gowns of sapphire trilobal designed with an open neckline with the bodice styled with a gathered overlay giving a blouson effect. A self-fabric belt encircled the elasticized waistline. The dress had a wrap designed short skirt. The sleeveless gown was complemented by a formal length separate matching skirt. Each carried a cascading arrangement of pink lilies accented with baby's breath and greenery. They wore matching flowers in their hair.

DEAR PAT: I would like to share with your readers my favorite way of making a one-row buttonhole. It is worked in six steps as outlined below:

Step one: Work desired number of stitches before starting buttonhole.

Step two: Bring yarn to front of work. Slip one stitch from left-hand needle to right-hand needle, pass yarn to back of work and drop it there. The yarn is left hanging and is not to be used during steps three and four.

Step three: Slip another stitch from left-hand needle to right-hand needle and pass the first stitch over it — one stitch bound off. Step three is repeated until the desired number of stitches for buttonhole have been bound off.

Step four: Slip the last bound-off stitch back to left-hand needle and turn work to wrong side.

Step five: Pick up the hanging yarn and pass it between needles to back. Now cast on the same number of stitches that were bound off for the buttonhole, plus one more, using the cable cast-on as described below.

To make the cable cast-on, insert right-hand needle between the first and second stitches on left-hand needle. Draw up a loop and slip this loop onto left-hand needle to serve as a new stitch. Repeat until desired number of stitches have been cast on.

Before placing the last loop on left-hand needle, bring yarn through to the front to form a dividing strand between the last stitch and the next-to-last one. Turn work back so that right side is again facing you.

Step six: Slip the first stitch from the left-hand needle to right-hand needle and pass the last stitch over it. The buttonhole is now completed and you can work to the end of the row. — EDNA F., SOUTH WINDSOR, CONN.

Thanks, Edna, for sharing your excellent method of making horizontal buttonholes. While it is similar to another one-row buttonhole I have given in the past, it is really quite an improvement as it makes a very firm, smooth buttonhole.

Horizontal buttonholes are the best choice for garter stitch bands and are fine for stockinette stitch bands. Vertically ribbed bands, however, need vertical buttonholes. I'll be giving instructions for this type in future columns.

Your Help Is Needed

Once again we come to the eve of a primary election. Tomorrow citizens throughout our state will go to the polls to choose Democratic and Republican nominees for president, governor and many other state and local offices.

Candidates have crisscrossed the state over the past months seeking votes on this upcoming primary election day. Now we, the citizens, will have the responsibility of deciding which of the candidates will represent our chosen political parties in November.

Most observers agree that this primary campaign has been different from many that have been seen in the past. Call it lack luster, or consider it to be on a high plane — either way there has not been some of the fireworks that have been seen in the past.

If we are looking for a reason, it is probably because the two-party system is a reality in North Carolina now. It is likely that a vigorous campaign is ahead for many who win their party nominations tomorrow. For that reason the individual parties can't afford the bitter primary fights that we have seen in the past.

But that is ahead. Now the important thing is to properly determine who will be the candidates in November, and that requires every eligible person's voting. Go to the polls tomorrow. Help decide who will lead our state and our nation.

No Doubt Economy Slowing

There can be little question that the economy has slowed to recession level with the increase of unemployment from 6.2 percent to 7 percent in April. It was the highest level in 2½ years.

For workers who are currently among the unemployed, recession is a clear reality, but it is a part of the economy that there will be slow periods of growth. Soon there should be some slowing of the rate of inflation, and then we will have to turn our attention to improving the job picture.

THIS AFTERNOON

Weighing Fringes

By BILL NOBLITT
 RALEIGH — As government lately has tended to lead the way in providing salaries and fringe benefits for employees which surpass those available in the private sector, a close look at benefits being pushed in this major election year is in order.

The most innovative measure is a dental insurance plan for all state employees, and judging from responses of candidates for top state offices, that step has strong support.

Said Gov. Jim Hunt, Democratic candidate: "I want to do this if revenues are adequate. I have proposed a cost-benefit study... My wife thinks it is the fringe benefit most needed. I generally give her thoughts great weight."

Former Gov. Bob Scott, Democrat, says he would "support a dental insurance plan to be funded by the General Assembly" similar to the present medical insurance program.

BILL NOBLITT

Avoiding a showdown vote in this year's political atmosphere which is hampered as well by frightening economic conditions, the dental proposal is not scheduled for consideration in the upcoming June session of the General Assembly. The push will come in the 1981 session, with implementation January 1, 1982.

Already both employee organizations, legislative fiscal research staff, and the governor's budget shop are conducting studies on the scope and cost of such a plan.

Support
 Figures will differ sharply depending upon extent of coverage; whether routine checkups are covered, or only major dental work is paid for. Dentists strongly endorse payment for checkups on the premise that preventive measures taken before the time that major repair work is needed more than pay for themselves in the long view.

At recent interview sessions with the leadership of the political action segments of employee organizations, the chief candidates for offices of governor and lieutenant governor came down in favor of a dental plan, providing funds are available and the cost is within money availability.

Republican candidate I. Beverly Lake, Jr. pledged support for "further effort and study toward the program."

James C. Green, candidate for lieutenant governor on the Democratic ticket, offers support "contingent upon a plan that will fully meet the dental needs of our employees at a cost that can be afforded...."

And Carl Stewart, Democrat for lieutenant governor, thinks the plan needs careful review and study so as not to hamper the top priority of assuring full funding of the present health insurance program.

Checkoff
 State employees and teachers also are pushing hard for voluntary withholding of membership fees in respective employee organizations from paychecks. Association leaders concede that a payroll deduction plan would make it easier to recruit and to keep members, but add that both the state and employees would receive direct benefits. The candidates support this plan.

Employees would find the dues deducted before tax is held out of their paychecks, thereby getting a boost in

Other Editors Say Alfred Hitchcock

(Greensboro Daily News)

Alfred Hitchcock hated food, yet he was fat. He made movies about instability and betrayal, yet he was married to the same woman all his life. Trained in mechanical drawing, a static discipline, he became a movie director who always remembered that movies ought to move.

Hitchcock spent his career making commercial movies—thrillers and murder mysteries and wry comedies — yet in each of these, no matter how bad, there is some art, some fine, intangible something that has the power to change our lives. That, to him, must have been the most enchanting contradiction of all. Imagine the joy a man feels when people flock to his movies because they are good entertainment, and all the while that man is busily changing the way his audiences see their world.

If you have ever seen "Psycho", you never look at a shower stall the same way again. Once a witness of "North by Northwest" and for you cornfields and crop-dusting airplanes are never just bucolic parts of the landscape. "Rear Window" introduced us to the potentially horrible incapacities of having one's leg in a cast. "Strangers on a Train" made amusement parks something less than amusing.

In other words, Hitchcock scared us with unhorrible things, and that was a neat trick. More to the point, he made us realize that horror and evil live all around us in everyday shapes and sizes, that sunlit fields have even more room for malice than the longest, darkest alley in the world.

Not surprisingly, children picked up on this fact much faster than adults. To those of us who grew up in the fifties and sixties, Hitchcock's television show was the best introduction to life itself we had. Our parents went off to see "Psycho" and came home shivering, vowing that we would never be allowed to see it. But they let us watch this drawing fat man on the television, and the lessons we learned there cost us more sleep than any of the horrors Anthony Perkins cooked up at the Bates Motel.

For it was there that we watched murder go unavenged thanks to the murderer's cleverness, and there that we saw men wrongly accused suffer direly without justice. There, too, we saw humor that we couldn't quite catch. And there, most finally, that we saw and learned forever that life's accounts do not always balance and that evil does exist in palpable and unquenchable forms.

Strength For Today

THOUGHT AND FEELING
 Many people attribute either too much importance to feelings or too little. Some tend to push all feelings aside and consider that no judgment is sound unless it is arrived at purely by an exercise of the mind. Others follow what they consider to be their instincts and attach very little importance to reasoned analysis.

Sound judgment depends on the proper mixture of thought and feeling in making decisions. The principle of balance underlies the whole of nature. Accordingly, we should make sure that in arriving at any decision, thought and feeling — intellect and emotion — are blended together in a way that will bring us to a sound and rational policy.

Too much emotion sweeps us into the quicksands of sentimentality. Too much reason leaves us indecisive, skeptical and perhaps cynical. Reason and feeling are both God-given powers and are reflected in the Bible and in the lives of the saints. But they must be sensibly used.

Happiness Has A Price

WASHINGTON — The thing which made this country great was that everyone believed money could buy happiness. But because of inflation, the price of happiness has doubled in the last 10 years, and the people who sell it have no idea what it will eventually cost.

An analyst for the American Dream Company told me, "For 25 years people have consumed happiness without a thought for tomorrow. They never realized that there is just so much happiness in the world, and at the rate they were using it, we would eventually run out." I agreed, "Happiness was so cheap we all took it for granted. But we were urged to buy happiness today and pay for it tomorrow. We can't be blamed for wasting it."

"It's not a question of blaming anyone. But we have to wake up to reality, and that is, if you want to have happiness now, you're going to have to pay for it through the nose. The day of the 5-cent pack of bubblegum is gone."

I said, "I think the problem is that Americans still believe the happiness shortage has been contrived so that the people who sell it can make windfall profits. Is it real or isn't it?"

"It's true that the happiness industry may be taking advantage of the situation, but there are many other factors at work which are driving up the price. Twenty-five years ago it took very little to make people happy. A home, a car and a TV was enough to make most people content."

"But then we were told it wasn't enough. If we really wanted to be happy, we had to have a second car, and a second home. We couldn't find happiness unless we used deodorants, and bought new clothes, and gave our children guitar lessons and stereo sets, and bought them their own car. We were warned that unless we had been to Disneyland we weren't truly happy."

"Then we were told that happiness really meant enjoying our leisure time. This means ski trips, tickets to ball games, and Europe, golf and tennis equipment, overnight camping trips and drinking Coca-Cola. It also meant eating out and paying baby-sitters, and not leaving home without an American Express Card."

"All the banks had instant happiness plans where you could borrow money for practically anything you wanted, and pay it back on the installment plan."

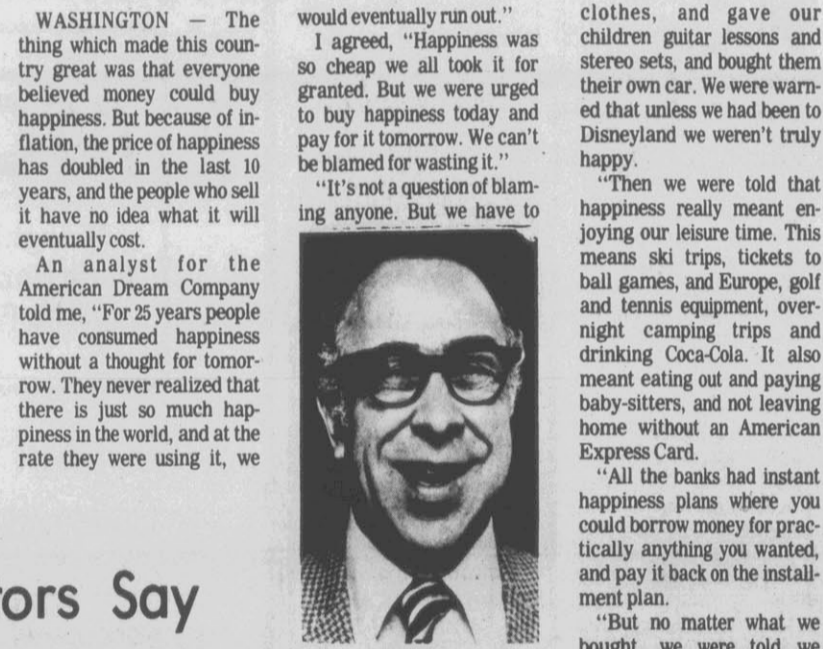

"But no matter what we bought, we were told we didn't have true happiness unless we consumed more. Just when we thought we had all the happiness that money could buy, a new product came out on the market which made our old happiness obsolete. If we didn't rush out and buy it, we were warned we would be very unhappy. It stands to reason that the price of buying happiness would go through the roof."

"What you say has merit," I said. "But if money can't buy happiness, what's left?"

"First, we're going to have to conserve the happiness we have now. People will have to face up to the fact that despite the TV commercials, they can't be happy all the time."

"Then, we're going to have to find new resources for happiness, which are cheaper and will last longer. We will have to go back to a simpler

Mondale In Healing Role

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
 WASHINGTON — Vice President Walter F. Mondale has emerged over the last month as healer in the fratricidal Democratic party and consensus choice of Democratic politicians to replace Jimmy Carter as nominee for president.

This revolt is passive, not active. It waxed a little when Cyrus Vance quit as secretary of state; it waned a little when Sen. Edmund Muskie replaced him. Mondale has absolutely no complicity in disloyalty to his chief, although his political aides know more about the ferment than they pretend. Its success, a very long shot, hinges on whether President Carter's decline can be stopped.

The private consensus within the party is that Carter probably cannot be salvaged and is, therefore, a probable loser to Republican Ronald Reagan. There is near-unanimous opinion that the one man able to heal his party, bind together its Carter and Kennedy wings and defeat Reagan is Fritz Mondale.

Mondale's role as party savior stems from his barnstorming as surrogate for Carter without engaging in shrill invective against Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, a moderation that has lowered his esteem among the Carter political team lately. While Kennedy himself resents Mondale as seller of a liberal birthright for a mess of Carter pottage, lesser Kennedyites nationwide acknowledge their man cannot make it and that the vice president is the best alternative.

This has been the pervasive subject behind the scenes. Two separate sources report hearing Mondale's top aide, Richard Moe, talk confidentially about it (though Moe denied it to us). Other politicians have heard similar talk from Al Barkan, political action chief for the AFL-CIO.

Typical was conversation during a dinner party April 25 between three Democratic senators: Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, William Bradley of New Jersey and Abraham Ribicoff of Connecticut. Talk turned to Carter's low political estate and a possible non-Kennedy alternative. All agreed there is only one: Mondale. But how to do it? They were stumped.

There would be no chance unless Carter loses more big state primaries to Kennedy June 3 and falls embarrassingly behind Reagan in the polls. He then might lose a floor fight at Madison Square Garden to unbind his pledged delegates, if the convention found a non-Kennedy alternative.

The growing legion of covert Mondale men contains recruits who would surprise the White House. One influential backroom Southern Democrat, long a Carterite, gave us his grim assessment that Carter can neither be stopped for the nomination nor elected in November. But if Carter could be stopped, would this Carterite be for Mondale? "In a minute, friend, in a minute," he replied. "So would a lot more of us."

Despite distaste toward Mondale in Kennedy's inner circle, Teddy's foot soldiers would gladly accept Fritz. Sonny Dogole, Philadelphia businessman and Democratic financial patron, backs Kennedy as the only available alternative to Carter. But Dogole, an old-time associate of Hubert Humphrey, would eagerly support Humphrey protegee Mondale.

Dogole was among many potential Mondale backers attending the April 27 banquet of the Coalition for a Democratic Majority, a defense-oriented group deeply unhappy with Carter. But Mondale is also the favorite within the detente-oriented, anti-Carter Americans for Democratic Action, the antithesis of CDM. ADA loves Mondale for his dovishness; CDM accepts him, hoping his running-mate would be Moynihan, CDM national co-

A Kiting Hobby

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
 AP Special Correspondent

PLAYA del REY, CALIF. (AP) — A local radio news show had just flashed the word that Los Angeles County officials planned to ban kite flying at over 150 feet, because of the number of helicopters flying over the area.

Graphics designer Robert Miles Rynyan was incredulous.

He felt like telling them to go fly a kite, as he does everyone else, for purely aesthetic reason.

Rynyan thinks that kite flying is one of the most beautiful, artistic, soul satisfying, "just plain dynamite" sports a person can engage in. Great for girl watching, too. "I can dance the tail of a kite inches above any bikini on the beach," he described the aerodynamic delights of a hobby that has taken around the world. "Down on the boardwalk here, you always collect a crowd. When I fly my big Waldorf kite, the surfers, the skate boarders, the bicyclists and roller skaters all stop to watch."

Rynyan, a burley examiner who has been named design consultant of the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, had just returned from Tahiti where he flew a kite with a 25-foot wing span trailing 17 feet of tail from the stern rail of a cruise ship and com-

Not So Desperate This Time

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
 Associated Press Writer
 RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Four years ago Ronald Reagan was looking to North Carolina in a desperate search for reason to continue in the Republican presidential race, and Jimmy Carter looked for affirmation that he, not George Wallace, had the support of his native region.

Both got what they wanted. And this week, as the two men more confidently seek support in North Carolina's primary, there is hardly the suspense of four years before.

Hardly anyone — not Republican challenger George Bush or Massachusetts Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy — expects Reagan and Carter not to capture a majority of the popular vote and delegates in North Carolina on Tuesday.

The contest instead is a practical race for any portion of the state's delegates. Leading North Carolina backers of President Carter and Reagan say they would be happy with 60 percent of the vote in North Carolina. In fact, the Bush and Kennedy campaigns probably would declare it a victory of sorts if they got 40 percent in North Carolina, which is considered friendly territory to Reagan and Carter on the strength of their 1976 victories in the state.

Lacking the chance for a real horse race in the North Carolina primary, the state has thus seen a low-key campaign this year compared to that of 1976. Then, the state's primary date was in March, earlier in the national primary process.

"We've not detected any movement (in support) here," Wallace Hyde, Carter's North Carolina chairman, said in an interview last week. "That's why we've run such a low-key campaign. If you've got a situation like that, you don't want to stir it up."

North Carolina's primary is one of four presidential contests being held Tuesday, with 69 Democratic nominating delegates and 40 GOP delegates at stake. Also holding primaries are Tennessee, Indiana and the District of Columbia.

The delegates, bound on the first ballot, will be apportioned by the percentage of popular vote, making it worthwhile for Bush to campaign here last weekend and Kennedy to send his stand-ins in hopes of gathering a percentage of the vote. But in the case of Kennedy, his delegate count may not exactly correspond to the percentage of his statewide vote.

Republicans award their delegates in North Carolina along a simple formula — the secondplace finisher must get at least 10 percent of the vote to qualify for a proportionate share of the delegates.

But Democrats use a complicated formula that apportions only 22 of the delegates according to the statewide percentages, with 15 percent the threshold for gaining a share of them.

The remaining Democratic delegates will be figured according to the percentage of votes cast for each candidate within each of the 11 congressional districts. Some districts get as many as five delegates and one, the 3rd District, gets only three. And even the threshold for qualifying for district delegates differs between the districts, ranging from 20 percent to 25 percent.

But, says state Democratic Party Director David Price, a complicated exception in the party rules means effectively that in a two-man race such as with Carter and Kennedy the threshold will be 15 percent in most districts.

The result of all that, Price said in an interview, is that Kennedy could score better than 15 percent statewide and get a share of the at-large delegates, but fail to win any delegates in some congressional districts.

"I would assume in some districts Carter could get more than 85 percent, and Kennedy would get wiped out," he said.

peted with the islanders in stunt kite flying. He also flaunted his stuff in the skies over Acaulco.

The county height ordinance didn't bother him so much as the thought of bureaucrats fettering the soaring, free spirits of kite flyers anywhere.

"The first thing an amateur wants to do is see how high he can fly that kite. I know the feeling," said Runyan, handing over some snapshots of his Polynesian aerial feats. "I once had a kite with 8,000 feet of line. It took an hour and a half to reel that dude in. But the real thrill is to launch 27 stunt kites at one time and watch them snap into formation at a tug of the line. They look like they're pulling 40 miles of tail."

Some of Runyan's kites, intricately ribbed and made of ripstop, an aerospace material, cost in the neighborhood of $750 and represent "300 hours of sewing."

Enthusiasm over his 208-foot long Chinese dragon model, the designer gets as excited as a schoolboy running into the wind with his first dime store kite.

"I can launch that dude from the beach without moving off my towel. Actually if you have to run to fly a kite, you don't understand what it's all about. Real kite flying is too sensitive an art for children. That 25-foot wing span kite of mine would lift a kid right off the ground. It's got 1,600-pound test line."

As design consultant, Runyan hopes to stage an international kite flying festival during the '84 Olympics: "it sure would be a pretty sight... kites from all over the world, maybe even a kite war event... you know, waxed lines with shards of glass to cut the opponent down. Dynamite."

The art deco craze is nothing new in California, where people collect everything from old movie pith helmets to Early American beer bottles, but Bob Runyan is undoubtedly the only company president (he heads his own graphics firm) to have two Depression era service station pumps rising to the skylight in his office. The globe atop one proclaims "Sinclair H.C." The other says "Phillips Unique."

As the artist Edward Hopper proved, there is beauty in old gas pumps. "I have 32 pumps in the garage in all stages of rehabilitation, including a 1925 coin-operated pump that would turn your knees to jelly it's so beautiful. Dynamite... unreal," says Runyan, whose office and studios in a converted fish factory overlooking the Pacific are eclectically decorated with vintage cash registers, penny weighing machines, African masks, bongo drums, children's toys including a tiny rollout desk, old automobile posters, salvaged gas station signs like the huge red flying horse over the file cabinets and a conference table situated under a fringed beach umbrella.

His firm specializes in annual reports for large corporations, and many a board chairman has departed these premises speaking the local dialect: "unreal." The shock of the decor is usually muted by cold applications of the best California white wines, which Runyan keeps on hand to lubricate business discussions.

Runyan admits to being a sucker for beauty in design anywhere he finds it. He'll go into hock to rescue an old fretwork bannister, a stained glass skylight, the pillars from an old bank, a staircase in a condemned building, a monstrous marble fireplace, a child's sled, fine Mexican ceramic tiles.

His present passion, which consumes him almost as much as kite flying, is his new house at Manhattan Beach, a "Western tongue-in-cheek Victorian dynamite beauty" rising from the slap dash remains of an old stucco bungalow. Almost finished now, the handsome wooden house glistens with all kinds of gingerbread frills, a widow's walk, lovely panelling, old bannisters, fine stained-glass windows and transoms, stunning marble fireplaces and other collected treasures from Runyan's trivia chest. There is a jacuzzi built for four or more, with a spectators gallery under the skylight, and a rooftop patio with built-in bar and barbecue, from which on a clear day you can see Catalina. And also launch a squadron of stunt kites.

On the roof, from flagpoles that must be 20 foot high, the United States flag and the Marine corps flag ripple in the breeze, giving the place the appearance of a 19th century court house or post office sprung full bloom from a Grant Wood painting. "Unreal," says Runyan. Except that it is real, and tourists are already beginning to congregate outside asking for a tour of the dynamite domicile.

The designer has designs to meet that situation, too: "I'll get a dozen slaving Dobermans to drive 'em off. Let them go look at the Queen Mary down at Long Beach. She's a beauty, too."

Evans-Novak

Mondale bridges this gap because, after early Teddy-baiting in Iowa, he has avoided the escalating verbal excesses of the Carter-Kennedy fight. In his speeches just before Pennsylvania's April 22 primary won by Kennedy, Mondale ignored orders to flail away against Kennedy in tune with Carter television commercials. "Fritz gave his standard Humphrey speech instead," a Carter operative grumbled.

The Carter team was also upset when Mondale insider Mike Berman, running Carter's campaign in Michigan, disregarded orders to push Sen. Donald Riegle aside as introducer of Mondale at the party dinner in Detroit April 12, two weeks before the state caucuses won by Kennedy. Riegle proceeded to shred the Carter administration's economic policy. There was no overt rebuttal from Mondale.

None of this constitutes any break between the White House and the vice president who has collaborated more congenially with his president than any predecessor in memory. It merely underlines Mondale's reluctance to tie himself into the straitjacket of the Carter problem now causing the party revolt. That is why more and more Democrats are covertly looking to him as their last best chance.

take-home pay, and the state would gain because larger and stronger employee associations mean less likelihood of labor union organizing activities directed at government.

Opposition is strong from private business, however, where association dues deduction plan endorsement by government is seen as akin to a sanction of union dues checkoff systems by which employers are required to handle collection and bookkeeping duties for employee unions.

Among other proposals in the employee package, a 15-percent salary increase remains the chief goal, and most candidates have pledged support for a "double-digit" raise.

"The energy independence of this country," Dr. Young added, "is contingent upon developing emerging technologies to utilize all of our available energy alternatives. Pitt Community College, therefore, will be investigating such alternatives as new solar applications, peat conversion, anaerobic digestion, conversion of cellulose (including tobacco) to energy, and the utilization of many current waste products such as garbage for energy. We are both excited and encouraged about the possibilities we have already examined."

Still Intend To Balance Budget

By ROBERT PARRY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders say they still intend to balance the next federal budget, even though a growing number of economists believe a recession could make that impossible.

The new doubts arose last week with the announcement that unemployment had jumped from 6.2 percent in March to 7 percent in April.

The increase suggested to many economists that the recession will be deeper than earlier predicted. And that would mean lower tax revenues, higher costs for unemployment benefits and food stamps, and very possibly a budget deficit for fiscal 1981.

One economist, who asked not to be named, noted that if unemployment hits 9 percent in 1981 — the high-water mark of the 1974-75 recession — the projected balanced budget would be driven about $40 billion into deficit.

Key members of Congress, however, said they will press ahead with plans to enact a balanced budget for the first time in 12 years while keeping one eye on the worsening economic storm.

The Senate was scheduled to begin debate today on a $612.9 billion budget for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1.

The Art of Carpeting & Decor

by Larry C. Whitlow

Carpets should be as expensive as can be afforded, especially in harder wear areas. This is true even if it means an increase in the furnishing or decorating budget. It is possible to make do on most things. However, there cannot be much compromising upon carpets which offer more value, wear, sound and heat insulation and dirt absorption than any other furnishing element. It is perhaps better to start off with a minimum coverage (paint or stain with rugs) until carpet of the right quality can be afforded. Do not install inferior quality carpeting which will cost twice as much in the long run.

Only quality carpeting and other types of flooring are carried by us at LARRY'S CARPETLAND INC., 3010 E. 10th St., 758-2300. I have close to 20 years of carpet experience and can assist you with all your needs. We are the exclusive Lee, Milliken and Georgan carpet headquarters in Greenville. Open: 9 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Mon. thru Fri., 9 a.m.-1 p.m. Sat. Have a very happy Mother's Day.

Cubs Guests At Annual Boy Scout Camporee Event

AWARENESS EVENT — Members of Troop 131 of Greenville are given handicaps and sent through an obstacle course. The judge for this event was Dave McRae.

BB RIFLE RANGE — Members of Troop 205 of Greenville receive instruction on BB guns and target practice from 213 MP Company of the North Carolina National Guard from Washington, N.C.

WASHINGTON, N.C. — The East Carolina Council/Tuscarora Council Camporee was held this weekend, May 2-4 at Camp Bonner. Over 4,000 Boy Scouts from the two councils attended the event, and on Saturday 2,000 cub scouts joined the activities.

Twenty-one events were staged at the camporee and scouts competed for points and the chance to win ribbons. Atomic pioneering, which involved patrols making a team effort to pick up simulated nuclear matter and place it in a safety container without setting it off, was one of these events. In this activity scouts had two minutes to lift the bucket containing the simulated matter from the center of a square by using four lines and transfer it to a drum.

Other events included a knot race which required scouts to tie the six basic knots, (square, tautline, bowline, clove hitch, two half hitches and sheet bend) in a maximum of two minutes. Match splitting, nature trail, operation rescue, and fire by friction were also competitive events.

In an activity called the awareness event, each member of a patrol was given a different handicap such as blindness, deafness, or having one leg tied behind him, and required to proceed through an obstacle course. Patrols earned a maximum of 100 points for successful participation in this event.

Patrol members also received instruction and target practice on their BB rifles from members of 213 MP Company of the North Carolina National Guard. Events requiring scouts to find things wrong with a scout uniform and make a quick shelter tested the boys' skills also.

At 1:30 P.M. Sunday a Marine Corps helicopter demonstration was held for the benefit of the troops.

The highest score for a patrol in the Gold Area was the Eagle Patrol of Troop 30 from Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church. Bill Fuqua is the Scoutmaster. M.H. Pridgen of Rocky Mount served as overall camporee chief this year, with Joe Goodson of Greenville as chief of the Gold Area, which includes Pitt County scouts. The camporee was dedicated to Vernon Sechrist of Rocky Mount, who is serving his fiftieth year as a scoutmaster. Sechrist served as camp judge.

Libyans Told Leave U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four Libyan diplomats have been given 72 hours to leave the United States after they were expelled by the U.S. State Department for "intimidation activities" involving Libyan dissidents in the United States.

In addition, the State Department said Sunday, the last two U.S. diplomats in Libya are being withdrawn from that nation. The pair were the last U.S. diplomats remaining in Libya after a mob burned the U.S. Embassy in Tripoli last December.

But, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said, America is not breaking relations with Libya, which supplies 10 percent of the oil that the United States imports. Other Libyan diplomats remain here, she said.

Without explaining, she said the four "have been engaging in intimidation activities toward Libyan dissidents in this country."

Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy last week warned dissidents that "they are doomed" unless their return to Libya.

His statement follows the murders of at least four of his regime's leading opponents who were living abroad. Two were killed in London and two in Rome.

West Bank City Sees Tensions Flare Again

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli troops today fired teargas at stone-throwing demonstrators at a girls' school in the West Bank city of Ramallah as Israeli-Palestinian tensions flared anew in the occupied territory.

A spokesman for Israel's West Bank military government said students blocked a road outside the school with makeshift barricades of rocks and burning tires and hurled stones at Israeli soldiers before the troops moved in with teargas to disperse them. There were no injuries or arrests, he said.

In East Jerusalem, three Arab youths were arrested after they threw stones at an Israeli bus on the road to the Neve Yaacov suburb, police said. Six others were arrested when they tried to force Arab merchants in Jerusalem's walled Old City to close their stores, a police spokesman said.

The incidents came as Israeli, American and Egyptian autonomy negotiators were meeting to discuss future security arrangements for the occupied territory under a proposed Palestinian autonomy plan.

They also coincided with the burial of four more victims of Friday's Arab terrorist attack on Jewish settlers in the West Bank city of Hebron. The ambush left six Jews dead and 16 injured. Two of the dead and five of the wounded were Americans living in Israel.

The slain Americans were identified as Zvi Glatt, 21, of New York City, and Eli (Wolf) Hazeer, who was listed as being from both Virginia and Chicago. A Canadian immigrant, Shmuel Marmelstein, 21, of Montreal, also was killed. Sources said the wounded Americans were Lisa Sherman, 20, Simha Wollman and Moshe Bozana, all of New York; Eli Zimmerman of Los Angeles, and Robert Borovsky, whose hometown was not known.

Jobless Count Low For Two

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment may be rising in the United States, but it's remaining low and steady in two other large industrial nations, according to the U.S. Labor Department.

Department figures show that the unemployment rate in Japan has dropped to 1.9 percent in Japan and 2.8 percent in West Germany, the lowest figures for the two nations in several years. Great Britain's rate is 6.1 percent while the French rate is 6.3 percent. The U.S. rate jumped to 7 percent last month.

Catchup Candidates Say Front-Runners Are Weak

Helms Prefers Senate But Door Open To VP

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., says he "would 10 times rather be in the Senate" than run as a Republican candidate for vice president. But Helms refused to rule out the possibility Sunday during an appearance at Liberty Baptist College at which he said Ronald Reagan, if he wins the GOP nomination for president, should select a conservative as his vice presidential candidate.

"It is essential that Ronald Reagan have a running mate of his own philosophy," said Helms. The former California governor is the front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination.

He doesn't believe in the traditional political tactic of seeking wider voter appeal by balancing the ticket with a vice presidential candidate with a different political philosophy, Helms said.

If people vote for Reagan because of what he stands for, "what would happen if he should die and a vice president of entirely different beliefs takes over?" Helms asked.

On the subject of the Panama Canal treaties, which he opposed, Helms held out the chance they may not last.

"There is some room for hope this thing will come apart at the seams and we'll get our canal back," he said.

Panamanian officials already have said they do not plan to implement conditions placed on the treaty by the Senate during the ratification process, Helms said.

While Helms said this may lead to a change in the treaties, he noted the canal already has been ceded to Panama.

The canal issue was "what tore it with Jimmy Carter," he said.

But Carter gave in to pressure from U.S. banking interests and pushed for the treaties giving Panama control of the canal, Helms said. He said the banking interests pushed for the treaties so they could recover loans from Panama.

Helms also challenged the enforcement provisions of the proposed Salt II treaty with the Soviet Union.

"There is no enforcement when you're dealing with a bunch of cut-throats. I guess there never is," Helms said.

He said if the Soviets won't go along with such a treaty, the United States should launch a propaganda campaign pointing to their reluctance.

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
DALLAS (AP) — George Bush and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, the catchup-candidates, are arguing parallel themes — that the front-runners are likely to prove weak this fall in the big states where White House elections are won and lost.

Carter upped his national delegate count to 1,137 of the 1,666 he needs for renomination. Kennedy has 654.

The president won easily in the Texas Democratic primary, but it didn't count. The 152 delegates are being selected in a separate caucus-convention system that began as soon as the primary election was over.

The popular vote could offer a clue to Carter's eventual strength, since a voter had to cast a Democratic ballot in the primary in order to prove party credentials to take part in the caucuses.

Robert S. Strauss, Carter's national campaign chairman, said the president would gain enough Texas delegates to be assured of nearly 80 percent of the nominating votes he needs to win.

Strauss said that will approach 90 percent after the next set of primaries, in Indiana, North Carolina, Tennessee and the District of Columbia on Saturday. Among them, those states will award 223 Democratic delegates. "Our prospects just aren't very good in those states," conceded Richard C. Drayne, a top aide to Kennedy.

In addition, Colorado Democrats hold precinct caucuses tonight to begin the process of assigning 40 nominating votes. The delegate lineup there is not likely to be known for some time.

Nor is that in Texas, but the uncertainty was made to order for rival claims from the candidates. Carter's state managers said he would wind up with three-quarters of the delegation. Kennedy's said the challenger would capture 40 or 45 delegates.

Paraguay Now Somoza Home

ASUNCION, Paraguay (AP) — Ex-dictator Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua has found a home in Paraguay. But many of his new neighbors regard him with a mixture of curiosity, suspicion and open dislike.

Leading newspapers have questioned the wisdom of President Alfredo Stroessner's granting Somoza asylum following his ouster by leftist Sandinista guerrillas in a civil war that ended nearly 50 years of Somoza family rule.

Paraguay's tiny political opposition has used Somoza's presence to attack Stroessner's 25-year-old rightist regime, accusing it of giving refuge to a "fugitive despot" and of granting the Nicaraguan privileges it permits few Paraguayans.

The Asuncion newspaper Hoy recently launched a virulent attack on Somoza, publishing daily editorials accusing him of violating Paraguayan hospitality and strongly suggesting that he go elsewhere. The editorials were halted abruptly, reportedly on orders from the Interior Ministry.

Somoza, who announced on arrival that he planned to stay for only "a few months," has shown no sign that he is ready to leave. He recently bought 19,200 acres of state land in the undeveloped Chaco area of western Paraguay and let it be known that he plans to grow cotton and raise cattle.

A Reynolds spokesman said the increase will boost the price of a pack of cigarettes to wholesalers by 1.2 cents.

The spokesman said Reynolds is the first to raise its cigarette prices.

"The increase is modest in comparison to the overall material cost increases we are experiencing," the company said in a statement.

The price of Reynolds' regular and king-size brands will increase to $17.65 per thousand, 100mm and 120mm. More brands will be $18.15 per thousand and Winchester Little Cigars will sell for $14.95 per thousand.

The familiar eye chart with the large letter "E" at the top was devised by the Dutch ophthalmologist Herman Snellen in 1862. To this day, the Snellen chart is used to test the distance acuity of the eye. The test subject stands twenty feet from the chart. If he can read all the letters in the first eight lines of the chart, then he has identified all the appropriate letters from that distance and is said to have 20/20 vision. If the test subject can read at twenty feet only the letters that a person with normal vision can read at thirty feet, then his vision is rated at 20/30. If needed, glasses can correct almost any vision deficiencies.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Rain is forecast in to early Tuesday for much of the West Coast and for northern New York, according to the National Weather Service. Showers are predicted for much of Texas as well as part of New Mexico. Showers are also indicated in the Northeast from Massachusetts through Pennsylvania. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
High pressure centered over the southern plains will bring mostly sunny skies and warm temperatures to the Tar Heel state today and Tuesday.
A cold front that extends from the northern Great Lakes into the central plains will move southeast for the next couple of days. It will reach western North Carolina late Tuesday or Wednesday night, increasing the possibility of thundershowers across the mountains

Tuesday.
Fair weather has been the rule across the state during the past 24 hours. Under sunny skies Sunday afternoon temperatures warmed into the upper 70s to mid 80s. The warmest location was Jacksonville with an 86.
Skies were mostly clear Sunday night. Temperatures cooled into the 50s across most sections of the state.
The only rain in the state during the past 24 hours was in the southern mountains where a few showers occurred early Sunday.

Except for widely scattered afternoon and evening thundershowers mostly sunny skies will prevail today. Afternoon temperatures will warm into the mid 80s across most of the state.
Exceptions will be readings in the 70s across the northern mountains and on the beaches. Except for a better chance of afternoon and evening thundershowers across the mountains, little change is expected Tuesday.

Papal Pilgrimage On To Congo

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer
BRAZZAVILLE, Congo Republic (AP) — Pope John Paul II today expressed sorrow for the nine persons trampled to death at a Mass in Zaire, then carried his pilgrimage to the Congo Republic to urge the nation's Marxist leaders not to interfere in the work of the Roman Catholic Church.

The pontiff crossed the muddy Congo River by ferry from Zaire earlier today to begin the second stop on his African tour.

In remarks prepared for a meeting with the Congolese president, the pope called the church "a spiritual institution" that "transcends national boundaries." He said it has a mission of saving souls while the state's task is to keep order in society. A realization of this difference, the pontiff said, will prevent confusion and conflict in church-state relations.

He sounded a similar note in a homily prepared for delivery at an open-air mass in Brazzaville.

"I have no doubt that the authorities will continue to give you genuine freedom of religion, as well as the possibility to work as good citizens for the development of your country," the homily said.

The pontiff arrived here to a joyous welcome from Congolese Catholics and the tolling bells of the Sacre Coeur Cathedral.

After a five-hour stop in the Congo, the pope was flying back to Zaire for an overnight stay in Kisangani, the chief city in northern Zaire.

The Congo, a former French colony now run by a military regime, has an estimated 600,000 Roman Catholics among its population of 15 million. In March 1977 the archbishop of Brazzaville, Cardinal Emile Biayenda, was murdered, apparently by relatives of President Marien Ngouabi, who was killed in a coup a few days earlier. But the Vatican says church-state relations have improved considerably since then.

In Kinshasa, Zaire's capital, the fatalities occurred Sunday when the iron gates to the plaza in front of the People's Palace were opened at dawn and the huge crowd rushed forward. Hospital officials said seven women and two children died in the crush.

"People just swept in," trampling others underfoot, said Sister Gertrude Kosecka, a Polish missionary in Zaire for 40 years who was caught in the crush and suffered chest injuries.

The pope was not told of the deaths until later and went ahead with the Mass, which he celebrated on the white concrete steps of the building. But an evening program of folk dancing and other native entertainment was canceled at his request.

The Mass lasted five hours, and during it the pope consecrated eight new bishops, including seven Africans from Zaire, Burundi and Sudan and a French-Canadian missionary living in Djibouti.

Seated on an ebony throne about 50 feet from President Mobutu Sese Seko, Zaire's authoritarian leader, John Paul urged the new bishops to speak out on the "ethical aspects of society each time that the fundamental rights and liberties of people and the common good demand it." There was no visible reaction from Mobutu.

The crowd roared in approval when the pope shifted from English and French to give greetings in four local dialects: Lingala, Swahili, Tshiluba and Kikongo.

Since his arrival in Zaire last Friday at the start of a six-nation tour, the Polish-born pope has been met with an overwhelmingly enthusiastic reception. His bodyguards have had a hard

Accepting Papal Order To Get Out Of Politics

By ARNOLD ZEITLIN
Associated Press Writer
NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Rep. Robert F. Drinan, the only priest presently in Congress, announced today that with "regret and pain" he will accept a papal order banning Roman Catholic clergy from political activity.

Drinan, an outspoken liberal who has represented Massachusetts' 4th District since 1970, had planned to seek re-election this year. But it was revealed Sunday that he had lost an appeal of a decision by Pope John Paul II ordering him and other Catholic priests not to become involved in politics.

"I am proud and honored to be a priest and a Jesuit," Drinan said in a prepared statement today. "As a person of faith, I must believe that there is work for me to do which somehow will be more important than the work I am required to leave."

"It is with regret and pain that I accept the decision of the Holy See."

Drinan's superior, the Jesuit Provincial of New England, said he received a phone call on April 27 from Rome relaying a papal directive saying priests should not participate in politics.

"Over the course of the next few days, I pursued several avenues of appeal, stressing with the Roman authorities the fact that such an order would almost certainly seem, in the eyes of many people, to be an improper intrusion by the Church into American political affairs," said Provincial Edward M. O'Flaherty.

A week later, O'Flaherty said he was told by the Vatican that "further appeal would not be accepted."

The papal order is not aimed at Drinan alone, but applies to all priests, O'Flaherty said.

"It has been stressed to me that the Vatican and Jesuit authorities in Rome wish to

Two Arrested For Virginia

Greenville Police Friday arrested Pernel Snowden, 17 and Jessie Lee Boggs, 34, both of Virginia Beach, Va., on fugitive warrants for Virginia authorities in connection with alleged robberies in that state, Chief Glenn Cannon reported this morning.

underline the point that the principle reason for the order was the present Pope's convictions about the proper role of priests." The Pope's convictions, he added, "differ somewhat in emphasis from those of his predecessors."

At the Vatican, a spokesman was quoted as saying that each bishop will decide how the order is to be applied. Vatican sources said today that the papal order is expected to affect a number of other politically active priest in other countries.

Autos Collide At Intersection

Cars driven by Viola Harris Brown of Route 4, Greenville, and Ronnie Earl Waters of Route 4, Greenville, collided about 10:15 p.m. Saturday at the intersection of Memorial and Sylvan Drives.

Police Department investigators, who charged Waters with driving under the influence, estimated damage from the collision at $2,000 to the Brown car and $1,200 to the Waters vehicle.

Dismissing Prison Officials In Drugs

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — An increasing number of correctional officers at Central Prison, the state's maximum-security prison, have been dismissed during the last nine months for drug-related matters.

One inmate, who was identified as Daniel Crisco, 35, of Lexington, died last November as a result of a drug overdose.

"It's a continuing problem," said one official. "The only way to contain it is with constant diligence and investigation."

A prison authority, who asked not to be named, said authorities have not been able to produce enough evidence to bring charges against the prison-hospital employee they believe supplied the drug to Crisco. Warden Sam Garrison declined comment on the drug problems at Central Prison.

One official blamed the problem in part on the low pay scale for prison employees, but he added that "it certainly does not justify selling drugs to prisoners."

The starting pay for a guard is $9,516 while top pay is $12,900. The pay scale is the same for prison hospital employees.

A full-time investigator at the prison obtained enough evidence to have three former employees convicted on drug-related charges.

The three include Master Sgt. Ernest Cox, who was arrested last summer on charges of possessing Quaalude, a soporific. He was given a six-month prison term.

Tito's Body Moved To Belgrade For Funeral Rites

See Differences On Advisory Budget Body

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The two gubernatorial candidates differ most on the subject of the Advisory Budget Commission, the results of a questionnaire on public policy issues shows.

The ABC, an appointed body with considerable budget-making power, was the major issue on which former Gov. Bob Scott and Gov. Jim Hunt disagreed.

Scott favored limiting the body's powers, saying, "Since the ABC is now dominated by legislative appointees, I feel they should not have budgetary authority because this violates the separation-of-powers concept."

But Hunt said he opposed making the ABC a consultative body by prohibiting it from approving matters relating to the preparation and execution of the state budget.

Education Dept. Officially Born

WASHINGTON (AP) — After dozens of consultations, hundreds of memoranda and musical chairs with thousands of desks and bureaucratic bodies, the Education Department is open for business.

Split from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the new agency was born officially at 12:01 a.m. EDT Sunday. Today, its doors opened to the public.

The 13th Cabinet agency, the Education Department begins operations one month sooner and costing $9 million less than expected.

Where Congress gave the new agency six months to get off the ground, only five were needed. And of the $10 million allotted for the transition, only about $920,000 will be spent, said department spokeswoman Colleen O'Connor.

On other subjects, the two candidates shared many of the same answers.

Both support the Equal Rights Amendment, favor certain energy-conservation measures, favor broader application of the Open Meetings Act and favor removal of the ceiling on the luxury-goods sales tax.

The results of the questionnaire were released Saturday. Common Cause, a public-interest lobbying group, conducted the survey by mailing questionnaires to candidates.

Of the gubernatorial candidates, only Hunt and Scott responded. In the race for lieutenant governor, only House Speaker Carl Stewart of Gastonia and Clyde Pulley of Goldsboro returned the questionnaire.

No Republicans answered nor did Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, who is seeking reelection.

On the open-meetings question, both Hunt and Scott said they favored opening Council of State meetings to the public, but they differed on whether ABC meetings should be open.

Hunt opposed opening the meetings during the preparation of the budget while Scott favored opening such meetings.

The two candidates also favored more disclosure of lobbying practices but were against requiring the disclosure of the occupations and employers of persons who contribute more than $50 to political campaigns.

Tent City Soon Filled

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Round-the-clock flights have filled a hastily pitched tent city here to overflowing as the arduous journey to a new home nears an end for many of the Cuban boatlift refugees.

Tears of joy mingled with hymns of praise at an outdoor Mass on Sunday as exiles from the communist nation worshipped freely for the first time in 21 years.

"I've believed in God all my life and I just wanted to get out of there," said Moises Fontanes Escalona, 63, a widower who left his grown children in Cuba.

Several hundred refugees crowded into a gymnasium at nearby Eglin Air Force Base late Sunday while crewmen labored to erect more tents at a 42-acre processing center for Cubans without relatives in South Florida.

Chartered flights had shuttled nearly 1,200 refugees from Key West, Fla., by midnight Monday with another 600 expected by 8:30 a.m. CDT. An outlaw armada of small boats has ferried 13,000 refugees to South Florida since Cuban President Fidel Castro opened the port of Mariel two weeks ago.

The boatlift claimed its fifth victim Sunday when a 67-year-old Cuban woman collapsed and died of an apparent heart attack moments after she stepped onto a Key West dock.

HEW, stripped of many of its education missions and several thousand employees, was transformed into the Department of Health and Human Services.

The Education Department, which draws together 150 separate agencies, has about 6,000 employees. Within the next 30 months, 11,000 more will be added as the Overseas Dependent Schools program, run largely for military families, is added.

Its budget for the first year is $14 billion. HHS, which keeps 144,000 employees, is seeking $226 billion in spending for the coming fiscal year.

The new education secretary is former federal judge Shirley M. Hufstader.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The body of President Josip Broz Tito, the World War II hero who forged his own brand of decentralized communism and preserved Yugoslavia's independence from the Soviet Union for more than 30 years, was being brought to Belgrade today to lie in state until funeral services Thursday.

The last surviving founder of the Third World movement of non-aligned countries, Tito died Sunday afternoon in the hospital in Ljubljana, capital of the Slovenian Republic in northwest Yugoslavia, where he had been a patient nearly four months. Born on May 7, 1892, he would have been 88 on Wednesday.

Thousands lined the streets of Ljubljana as Tito's light brown casket, draped in the Yugoslav national flag, was taken to the train station and placed aboard the Presidential "blue train." Then, at the only stop, in Zagreb, second largest city, the coffin was taken off the train so thousands more could pay their final respects.

Tito's two sons were accompanying his body on the train to Belgrade.

The government ordered seven days of national mourning and prepared for an influx of foreign leaders for the state funeral. The body was being brought to Belgrade by special train and was to lie in state in the Federal Parliament building. Burial was to be near the Museum of the Revolution in a Belgrade suburb.

Although Yugoslavs mourned the only leader many of them had ever known, his death had been expected for several months, and the two collective leadership groups he put together to succeed him as president and head of the Communist Party were already in firm control of the government and the party.

Lazar Kolisevski, the 66-year-old president of the Macedonian Republic, was sworn in as "president of the presidency," a title that will rotate annually among a nine-man collective made up of representatives of Yugoslavia's six republics, two autonomous provinces and the Communist Party.

Steven Doronjski, 61, a Serb from the autonomous province of Vojvodina, was expected to become party president. He will share his power with 23 other members of the party presidium representing the republics and the autonomous provinces.

Tito, elected president-for-life in 1974, devised the two collective leadership groups and gave a large amount of autonomy to the regional governments in an effort to keep the centuries-old rivalries and hatreds among the Serbs, Croats, Slovenes, Bosnians, Macedonians and other fiercely nationalist ethnic groups from wrecking the national unity his dominant leadership and personality created and held together.

Foreign leaders of all political faiths united in paying homage to one of World War II's last surviving heroes. President Carter termed him "a towering figure on the world stage," while the Soviet leadership hailed him as "the outstanding leader of the communists and all workers of Yugoslavia, and a leading figure of the international communist and workers' movement."

Carter also praised Tito's "resolute determination to maintain Yugoslavia's independence," a reference to his break with Stalin in 1948, while Moscow Television praised his "struggle against imperialism and colonialism."

OPEC Meeting

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' meeting in Taif, Saudi Arabia on Wednesday will not decide on immediate oil price increases, but will review the cartel's long-term strategy on prices and production, an OPEC spokesman said here today.

The spokesman, Edward Omotoso of Nigeria, said oil ministers attending the May 7 meeting were expected to discuss a report on OPEC strategy drafted by a group of policy experts in London earlier this year.

It was believed that the long-range plans provide for automatic price increases based on the value of the dollar, inflation rates and economic growth statistics in major industrialized countries.

In theory, that system could also lead to future price cuts.

However, such a program presumably would require a unified OPEC oil price and the cartel's prices currently are in disarray. The spokesman said the ministers hoped to fix a standard price at their meeting in Algiers, Algeria on June 9.

Job Candidates Hurt Chances

NEW YORK (AP) — What knocks job candidates out of contention?

According to Bill Cantor of the Cantor Concern, a New York based executive-recruitment firm, many people eliminate themselves from consideration because they fail to follow instructions when they answer an ad for a job.

"For example," says Cantor, "a candidate who fails to include salary history, a resume or other information, stands a good chance of eliminating himself from contention."

Other things that play a role in one's failure to obtain a position, according to Cantor, include: sloppy resumes, dressing improperly, being rude or overbearing, telling untruths and being found out, and pricing oneself out of the salary range.

Find Advice

NEW YORK (AP) — Scrambling eggs may be something many people do without thinking too much about it. But the New York Daily News says style is crucial and timing is all — and went seeking the advice of experts.

The responses: —"When the eggs are perfect for me, they're usually disgusting for other people," said food critic Gael Greene, who likened her eggs to slightly curdled Hollandaise sauce. "But I've found somebody who likes them the way I do and now life is wonderful."

—"To tell you the truth, I can't bear to scramble an egg when I think it could be a chicken," said New York chicken mogul Frank Perdue. But when he does make them, he says, he crumbles bacon on them and "if possible, do not eat them alone."

—"Scrambled eggs with truffles are perfectly wonderful," said gastronome James Beard, adding he rarely gets good scrambled eggs away from home. "And they're really much better in a diner than they are in a fancy restaurant because you can sit on a stool and watch the cook at the griddle and — just at the right moment — say, 'That's fine!'"

N.C. Foreign Trade Advantage

By BILL HUMPHRIES
 RALEIGH—A North Carolina State University economist says the state has advantages for foreign trade which currently are not being utilized to the fullest.

Dr. Bernard M. Olsen, assistant head of the university's department of economics and business, said the state's access to the ocean and its growing attractiveness to industrial producers is conducive to growth. "These factors augur well for continued growth of exports," he commented.

Increasingly, he said, industry is locating new production facilities in North Carolina. As populations abroad grow more rapidly than productivity, Olsen said, there will be expanding opportunities for the state's agricultural industry to market foodstuffs overseas.

"Not only are the markets for basic products such as soybeans and peanuts growing, but also the prospects for processing North Carolina grown foods are improving," the NCSU economist said.

Figures from the U.S. Department of Commerce show that North Carolina's exports in a recent year were valued at $3.16 billion. Of the total, manufactured goods accounted for $2.2 billion and agricultural products amounted to $.96 billion.

U.S. Exports in 1978 reached $142 billion, of which agricultural products accounted for $30 billion.

North Carolina has shared to a substantial degree in the volume of the nation's foreign trade, Olsen noted in an article prepared for "Tar Heel Economist," published monthly by the extension economics and business staff at NCSU.

He added that the share of agricultural products in their total foreign trade of the state has been significantly larger than for the nation. Much of this difference is accounted for by the importance of tobacco exports for the Tar Heel state.

Tobacco in all forms constitutes almost one-third of all exports from North Carolina. Three years ago, shipments were valued at $48 billion for tobacco manufactures and $55 billion for unmanufactured tobacco—a total of $1.03 billion.

Olsen said it is possible that tobacco will become less important in North Carolina's foreign trade. He cited such developments as the re-entry of Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) into world markets, rising limitations imposed by anti-smoking programs, and the difficulties encountered in maintaining the quality of this country's tobacco exports.

Similarly, the economist said, there is likely to be proportionately less reliance upon textile exports in the future.

"Even if reductions in tobacco and textile exports do occur as a result of these changes, the losses can be more than offset by the continued current expansion of other exported products," Olsen said.

Complications arise from doing business internationally and a newcomer may at first become discouraged, he said.

"Perseverance can lead to the discovery that not only are there material rewards and the satisfaction of discovering a greater breadth of experience, but that worldwide markets are the growth areas of the present and the future," Olsen commented.

Every year as the leaves begin to unfold and green color returns to the woods and low lands, an insect makes its appearance once again. Anyone who looks around a little, either in town on fruit and ornamental trees or in the country on wild plum trees can find ample evidence of the eastern tent caterpillar.

The tent caterpillar is an insect whose numbers can be alarming to anyone who has a large tree that is one of the preferred hosts species. This caterpillar constructs tents in the crotches of wild cherry, apple, peach, and plum trees primarily. Trees that are attacked more rarely are witch hazel, rose, beech, birch, barberry, oak, willow and poplar.

The tent caterpillar spends the winter as a dark brown collar-like mass of eggs attached securely to limbs and twigs of favorite host plants. The egg masses are about three-quarters of an inch long by one-half inch in diameter and contain several hundred eggs. The egg mass appears to have been varnished. The eggs hatch in early spring and the young caterpillars gather in a fork of the limbs of a tree. Once the young caterpillars have congregated, they construct a web of spun silk. The worms will amass in the tent during rainy weather and at night. During daylight, the caterpillars feed on the newly-expanded leaves.

Trees that are severely infested with tent caterpillars can be stripped of their leaves. Usually the tree will leaf back a few weeks after defoliation. In some years, birds and parasites limit the outbreaks of tent caterpillars. Baltimore orioles are particularly fond of this pest. But every 10 years or so, tent caterpillars reach very high populations. If control measures need to be taken on tent caterpillars, it is best that physical removal of the tents or nests be tried first. Burning out the tents with torches or flaming rags is not recommended because of possible damage to the wood of the tree. It is better to prune out the egg cases in late winter when they're found, or prune out branches containing nests. Often a pole can be used to destroy the nest in the tree. There are also several chemicals that may be used on tent caterpillars when young. These chemicals include bacillus thuringiensis (or dipel or thuricide), sevin, diazinon, malathion or methoxychlor. Any of these chemicals can be found in local garden stores. The label directions should be followed and the sprays should probably be made in the evening when the caterpillars have returned to the nest. Control is better when the worms are small in size.

A Farmer From The Old School

YOUNGSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Rayford Baker is from the old school of tobacco farming.

Most of the operation is done by hand, with high school students working as primers in the field and relatives hanging sheets of tobacco in the curing barn.

Like many other small farmers from the old school, Rayford Baker is being squeezed out of farming.

"I was planning on growing for two more years but I think I'll quit after this year and retire," said 60-year-old Baker, who farms 7 acres of tobacco in Franklin County.

The alternative to Baker's old-fashioned method is bulk barning, a mechanized curing operation used by most farmers growing large spreads, and harvesters.

Baker said he can't afford to go that way and, "You got to go that way or hang it up."

Statistics show that many are hanging it up. In 1960, there were 90,000 tobacco growers in the state. Today, there are 52,000.

"A young man can't go mechanized (today)," said

W.K. Collins, extension tobacco specialist at North Carolina State University.

"The system almost encourages him to go into debt (if he goes mechanized). It's like opening up a small grocery store in Raleigh against an A&P."

Collins said the initial price-tag for the latest equipment would be in the range of $40,000.

Baker's wife, Onetia, is bitter about the plight of the small farmer.

"We just aren't cut out for a big operation," she said. "We like to do our work ourselves. Our parents raised us with the old way of doing things. You had to do it right or they made you do it over."

"Progress is a wonderful thing but this bulk barning is ruining the small business," she said.

The upcoming squeeze is expected because of predictions that tobacco production costs will be 15 percent higher than in 1979 while buyers for tobacco companies do not expect prices to keep pace.

See Biggest Turkey Crop

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — If recent trends continue, North Carolina will become the top turkey-producing state in the nation by 1981, a North Carolina State poultry-marketing expert says.

"There's a very good chance that we will soon be raising more turkeys than any other state," said Dr. R. Charles Brooks.

Minnesota currently is the No. 1 turkey-producing state. In 1979, Tar Heel farmers produced 23.1 million turkeys, about 1.6 million less than Minnesota's output of 24.7 million.

Reports indicate that production in 1980 is expected to total just under 26 million in North Carolina and 26.8 million in Minnesota.

Brooks said 1979 was a good year for the state's turkey farmers. They produced an estimated 404 million pounds (live weight) that brought about $171 million, averaging 42.3 cents per pound.

"There are several reasons for the phenomenal growth of the recent years," Brooks said. "One of the most important is the aggressive stance taken by the industry in this state. They saw an opportunity for rapid growth and latched onto it faster than other areas."

Crabgrass Has Big Seed Count

MARYSVILLE, Ohio (UPI) — A single crabgrass plant may produce as many as a quarter of a million seeds, says a lawn care products manufacturer.

It's easy to prevent their spreading, company experts say. A pre-emergent crabgrass preventer spread in the spring forms an invisible barrier that keeps the crabgrass seeds from sprouting. The earlier the preventer is used, the better — before seeds start to germinate.

It can be spread on either wet or dry soil. The company recommends using a precision lawn spreader for even, economic control.

Census Official Says Delay Fault Of Postal Service

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A census official in Washington charges that problems with mail delivery in rural areas and small towns have left thousands of 1980 census forms undelivered.

Alvin Etzler, who is in charge of field operations for the U.S. Census Bureau, also told The News and Observer of Raleigh that the bureau is regretting its decision to use the postal service.

"It's hard to predict what the situation will be in 1990 (the next census year), but if we had this census to do over again tomorrow, I'd look for another method of delivering the forms," Etzler said in a telephone interview.

He said the U.S. Postal Service has been unable to deliver thousands of forms containing street addresses that were sent to post offices that have no carriers to deliver the mail door-to-door.

Others, intended for rural residents, bore incomplete addresses.

"It's no fault on their (the Postal Service's) part," Etzler said. "But based on what I know now, the post office is not able to do it as accurately as we need it done."

Joe S. Harris, census manager for the region that includes North Carolina, said he had no idea how many households had been missed because of mail delivery problems.

He said census representatives were sent door-to-door on April 11 to track down about 600,000 people in the region who had not returned a form for one reason or another.

But census officials say returns in the region — which includes North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Washington — have been about 90 percent as compared to 80-85 percent nationwide.

In the past, census forms have been delivered door-to-door by census workers.

In North Carolina, Angier Postmaster Roy C. Williams Jr. said the Census Bureau sent him 800 forms he could not deliver because they listed only street addresses.

Angier does not have door-to-door mail delivery.

Lillington Postmaster Lewis E. Bottiglier said at least 260 forms bearing incomplete addresses arrived at his office.

"It was just a mess, just panic," Bottiglier said.

Delta Team Helicopter Pilot Favored Chance

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — One of the pilots involved in the unsuccessful attempt to rescue the Americans held hostage in Tehran says he regrets the mission was cancelled, because it would have been easy to complete.

The pilot, who was stationed at the New River Marine Air Station near Jacksonville, said that despite the loss of three of eight rescue helicopters, the mission "would have been a cakewalk."

The pilot, who asked not to be identified, was one of six men from the air station who joined two other Marine pilots from a West Coast installation to man the eight helicopters.

He made the remarks in an interview published Sunday in the News and Observer of Raleigh.

Planners decided to abort the mission after the three choppers became disabled, saying that at least six helicopters were needed to rescue the Americans who have been held hostage since last November.

"My regret is that we did not complete this mission. It would have been easy," the pilot said. He added that he and several other pilots were confident the mission could have been completed with only five helicopters.

"We had come so close not to have done what we came to do...But the discussion was not long and the boss told the crew of one of the helicopters to get out of the bird and prepare to destruct."

"Our training — the mission — it was all hours and hours of fear only broken by stark, raving terror," he said.

As he waited in the dark Iranian desert to refuel his RH53D Sea Stallion chopper, the pilot said he watched in horror as another chopper crashed into a fuel-laden C-130, killing eight men.

"It resembled slow motion, like in the movies," he said. "First the wind, then the dust stirred, then a boiling sensation of fuel, fire and pieces of the chopper."

He recalled that after the crash, he gathered his crew and boarded one of the remaining C-130s.

The crew of the big plane was "throwing off motorcycles, jeeps, everything else, to give us room ... (We) were flown to an island out of the country."

The Marine said he and the others were recruited for the mission last Thanksgiving Eve. He said most of the training for the crews took place at the Yuma Proving Grounds in Arizona, with the men allowed to come home for only a few brief visits.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were mixed today as major banks cut their prime lending rates and evidence mounted that the recession may be a deep one. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 1.70 to 809.22, but it would have been up 1.39 except for dividend payments by six companies included in the average. Advances led declines by a 7-5 margin among New York Stock Exchange issues.

With the economy apparently declining rapidly, the Federal Reserve appears to have decided to let short-term interest rates slide. Six-month Treasury bills fell to 9.1 percent in money-market trading and some banks led by Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York cut their prime lending rates to 17½ percent.

Closing Visa Office In Cuba

By GEORGE GEDDA Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) — Citing what it calls an "intolerable and dangerous situation," the United States is closing its visa office in Cuba after Friday's melee.

New Home For An Old Museum

By WILLIAM STRACENER CHARLESTON, S.C. (UPI) — Like almost everything else in this historic port city, the privately run Charleston Museum can trace its roots back to the nation's founding fathers.

Conceived in 1773 by a group of young South Carolinians after they viewed the British Museum while studying in London and Edinburgh, the museum's first home and its contents were destroyed by fire five years later during the American Revolution.

Thomas Heyward Jr., who signed the Declaration of Independence, and Revolutionary War Gen. Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, later a minister to France, were among its first four curators.

It is the oldest museum in the United States and possibly the New World, but has begun a new era in its 207-year history with the opening of a $6 million two-story brick building. Modern by design in contrast to the downtown historic district a few blocks away, it encloses an open-air courtyard.

Upstairs is the largest exhibit area, the natural history hall. On the same level are the history and decorative arts room, anthropology hall and a temporary exhibit hall.

Recommend A New Reactor

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government committee has reportedly recommended that the United States needs to build a new $3 billion reactor to provide nuclear materials for military use.

The Washington Post reported today that the committee also suggested a $500 million program to upgrade facilities now used to produce nuclear bombs and missile warheads.

brought more than 12,600 Cubans to Florida from the port city of Mariel since mid-April, U.S. officials said.

In Friday's brawl, American diplomats in Havana said, busloads of security agents attacked a large group of Cubans, mostly former political prisoners, who had gathered at the U.S. Interests Section in the one-time American Embassy to seek visas.

Under U.S. guidelines for immigration from Cuba, former political prisoners are given preferential treatment. But the group that massed at the interests section Friday, which included 250 former prisoners, has complained about long delays in the processing of their visa applications.

State Department spokesman Anita Stockman reiterated Sunday the U.S. position that the Cuban government was responsible for the delays.

Granma, a Cuban government newspaper, said Saturday this allegation was a "cynical lie." It added that Friday's large gathering in front of the interests section was "evidently organized" by the United States and was therefore a "new provocation."

In explaining the U.S. decision to close the visa office in Havana, Ms. Stockman said the "present situation, with its lack of security or protection for people who have legitimate business with us is intolerable and dangerous."

"The United States cannot continue to operate these programs without the guarantees and cooperation of Cuban authorities," Diplomatic functions not related to the issuing of visas will continue, she said.

When the fighting erupted Friday, many of the visa-seeking Cubans fled the scene, but some 450 others escaped to safety inside the

Pilot Program Said Success

FARMVILLE — Farmville's third roll-out collection pilot program is an even bigger success than the two previous trial runs, reports Town Administrator Patrick Thomas.

Residents of the Williams Acres area were unanimous in their response, saying the system offers an improved quality of service and should be continued. They said the 80-gallon carts are easily handled and are animal resistant.

Charge Placed Against Man

Greenville police early Saturday, arrested Eddie Mack Dickens, 41 of 1200 Farmville Blvd. on rape charges after finding him asleep in the bed of his alleged victim, Chief Glenn Cannon said this morning.

According to Cannon, Dickens allegedly entered the rear door of a dwelling located in an area South of Tenth Street, between Pitt Street and the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad, raped the 61-year-old resident, then apparently fell asleep.

The alleged victim then left the house and called police. Dickens was jailed under $5,000 bond in connection with the incident, which occurred between 3 a.m. and 4 a.m.

Cannon noted that Dickens will also be charged with rape in connection with an April 22 incident involving the same woman.

Prime Rate Cut Again

NEW YORK (AP) — Morgan Guaranty Trust, the nation's fifth largest bank, reduced its prime lending rate a full percentage point to 17½ percent today while others lowered their rates to 18 percent.

The moves from the previous 18½ percent level reflect lower short-term interest rates in money markets, making it less expensive for banks to raise money for lending.

Costs of borrowing and demand for loans are the two major factors which banks consider in setting their lending rates. Both have been declining recently.

Chase Manhattan Bank, the nation's third largest, and No. 24 Harris Trust & Savings of Chicago, both reduced their rates to 18 percent today.

The nation's major banks only last week cut their prime rates to 18½ percent from 19 percent.

The prime rate is the rate banks charge their best corporate customers and many businesses must pay a point or two above prime for their loans. While it does not directly affect consumer loans, the prime is a widely watched indicator of general interest rate trends.

The prime rate peaked at 20 percent in early April but since then has eased as interest rates in money markets also dropped.

A spokesman for Chase Manhattan, George Jurkovich, said the bank's latest reduction in the prime rate continued to reflect declines in short term interest rates which reduced the cost of acquiring money for loans.

Chase also announced a reduction in its small business base rate to 17¼ percent from 17½ percent. That base rate applies to businesses with less than $1.5 million in assets and under $500,000 in bank borrowings.

have vowed to stay inside the building until they are assured a flight out of the country.

The United States has granted the 380 temporary refuge and Ms. Stockman said they would be housed and fed until there is a negotiated settlement. The administration does not know when an agreement will be worked out, she said.

"Our first objective is to guarantee safety," she said. "Our second is to seek Cuban government approval to allow those who can be documented for entry into the United States ... to come to the United States."

Swimmers Honored

East Carolina's swim team honored seven seniors while also naming Ted Neiman and Tammy Putnam as the most outstanding swimmers at the team's awards banquet Sunday night.

Putnam was an all-america in three events, the 100-, 200-, 400-yard individual medley (IM) and won the highest place ECU had this year in the nationals, a fourth in 100 IM. She also broke eight varsity records this season.

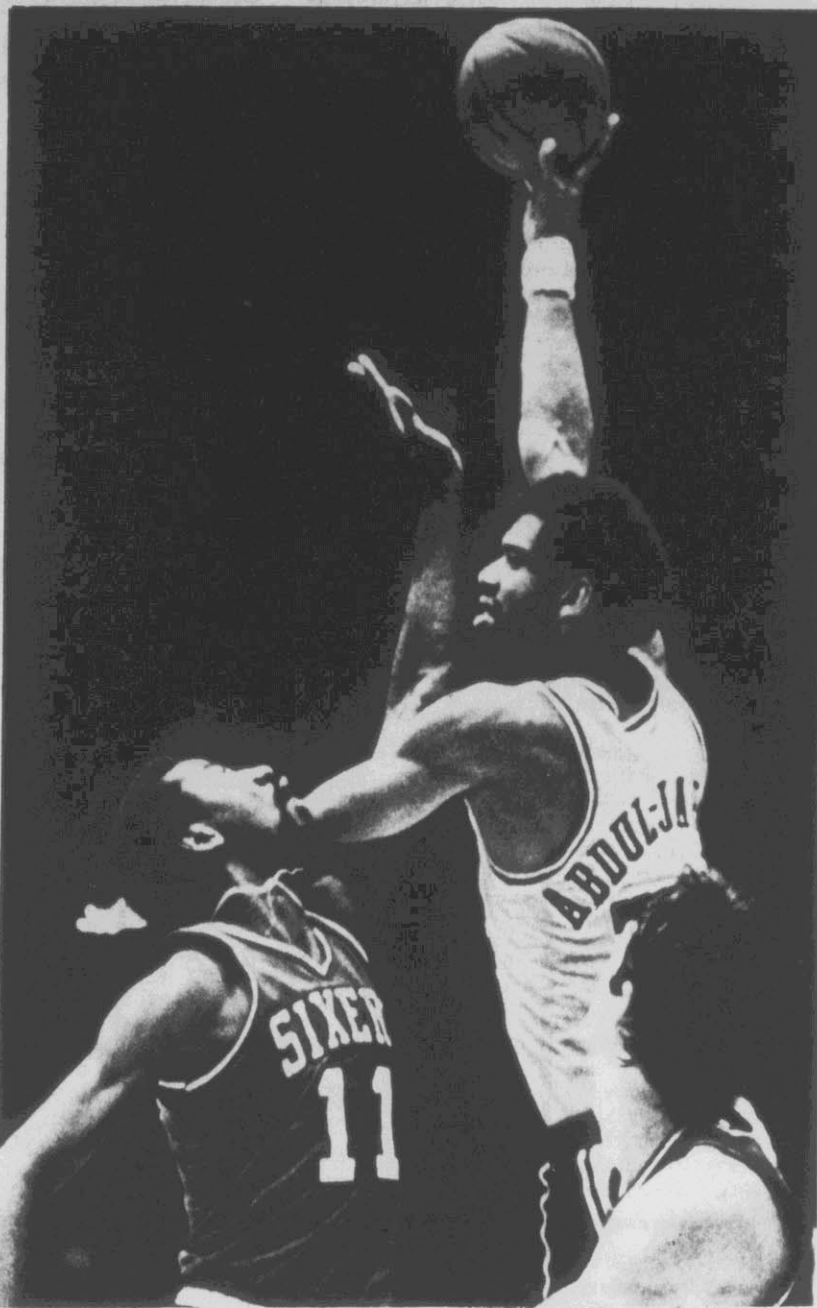

For Nieman, it was the third time winning the award. He previously won it was a freshman and a sophomore. He holds ECU three records and was the Eastern Champion in 200 free style this season.

The seven seniors recognized Sunday night for their contributions to ECU's swimming program were Neiman, Bill Fehling, Mark Lovette, Sharon Burns, Lucy Weckerling, Ellen Bond and Cindy Sailer.

In other awards, sophomores Karen Davidsen and Scott Ross were named as the most improved swimmers. Davidsen was an all-america this season in both the 400 IM and the 1,650 free style. She was sixth in nationals in both.

Scott Ross was a finalist at Eastern Championships as a free styler.

The Pirates also named next season's captains. For the women, junior Julie Malcolm and sophomore Susan Hanks, both of whom were all-america were named. Senior Jack Clowar and sophomore John Akright were named the men's captains. Clowar was the Eastern Champ in the 50 free style while Akright was a finalist in the individual medley.

Over The Top

Lakers Dominate Sixers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Doctor's housecall at the Forum was delayed until the fourth quarter. Darryl Dawkins spent most of the day on the seat of his pants. And in the third quarter, Philadelphia couldn't throw a pea in the ocean.

That's how it went for the 76ers in Game One of the National Basketball Association championship series Sunday.

The Los Angeles Lakers got their customary superb performance from Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, some outstanding defense on Julius Erving and ran the 76ers halfway to San Diego during the third period in taking a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven series with a 109-102 victory.

The teams were deadlocked 53-53 after an evenly played first half before the Lakers exploded, scoring the first 12 points of the third quarter and 31 to Philadelphia's 17 in the period.

The 76ers made 54.5 percent of their field goal attempts in the first half but were a miserable 3-of-20 in the third quarter.

Los Angeles had an 84-70 advantage entering the last 12 minutes. Erving, a virtual non-entity for the first three quarters, sparked a 14-2 Philadelphia surge that drew the 76ers to within four, 92-88, midway in the final period. That was as close as they could get.

The Lakers scored eight of the game's next nine points to make it 100-89 and the 76ers weren't closer than six after that.

Abdul-Jabbar had game-high totals of 33 points, 14 rebounds and six blocked shots. Erving, meanwhile, finished with 20 points — 11 in the final 8:39 — seven rebounds and two blocked shots.

Other major offensive contributors for Los Angeles were Norm Nixon with 23 points and six assists, Jamaal Wilkes with 20 points, seven rebounds and six assists, and rookie Earvin "Magic" Johnson with 16 points, nine rebounds and 10 assists.

Defensively, Wilkes and reserve Mike Cooper shared the bulk of the work on Erving.

The 76ers had better scoring balance than Los Angeles — six players scored in double figures — but it wasn't enough.

Dawkins, Philadelphia's 6-foot-11, 250-pound behemoth center, was limited to 18 minutes playing time because of foul problems. He had 12 points and only three rebounds.

"I felt the big key was the way we started the third period," Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said. "We went 4:21 without a point and we allowed them to start their running game. We did have some good shots, but you must credit their defense. We had the shots we were looking for."

"Kareem had a great game. We did as good a job as you can do against him."

It might have been good enough had it not been for that horrendous third period.

"Our running game got us ahead," Abdul-Jabbar said.

"When we're able to run, we can do that to a team — any team. We had them in a hole, they had to play catch-up, and they couldn't do it."

Baker, Foot To Floor, Wins

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Buddy Baker, the leading speed merchant in a speed sport, put his foot to the floor and kept it there for the last 35 laps of Sunday's Winston 500 Grand National stock car race.

Baker, known as a make-it-or-break-it driver, erased an 18-second deficit, passed front-runner Dale Earnhardt with two laps to go and held on to win the race by less than the length of a car hood.

The rangy 39-year-old driver put his grey and black Oldsmobile in victory lane for the second time this season, adding the $315,000 Talladega race to a victory earlier this year in the Daytona 500.

Baker, who won $31,950, looked like an also-ran after Earnhardt's crew took a calculated risk when the two leaders pulled into the pits together on the 153rd lap of the 188-lap race.

Earnhardt changed only the right-side tires and dashed back onto the track in 14.8 seconds. Baker's crew changed all four tires and it took him 31.2 seconds to get back into action.

Most of the crowd of about 75,000 at the Alabama International Motor Speedway — known as the world's fastest racetrack — were on their feet and screaming as Baker quickly cut huge chunks from Earnhardt's lead.

"When I came out of the pits, I thought maybe we'd messed up and taken too long because I couldn't even see Dale on the track," Baker said. "I was just trying to make up time and visualize what I would do if I caught him."

"Then, when I did catch him, I passed him so fast that I didn't have time to think."

Earnhardt, who sewed up the first leg of NASCAR's 1980 point race and won $28,700 for his second-place finish, felt he still had enough to beat Baker, even after he fell behind.

"If I had passed Baker on the backstretch, it would have been a race to the flag," the 29-year-old Earnhardt said. "Car No. 67 (Buddy Arrington) got in my way back there. But, it wasn't anything intentional, just slow traffic. He just happened to be there."

"That strategy by Jake (crew chief Jake Elder) with the tires really worked for us. But Baker just overpowered us at the end."

David Pearson, who started on the pole and finished third, was well behind the leaders at the end. Lennie Pond was fourth and Tige Scott fifth.

Many of the top contenders, including Darrell Waltrip, defending champion Bobby Allison, Richard Petty and Neil Bonnett, were eliminated during the first 100 laps of the grueling race by mechanical problems. There were no serious accidents or injuries.

Why Ed Warren belongs in the House.

We need the representative in the N.C. House that can best represent the needs of Pitt and Greene Counties in education, health care, agriculture and business. That's why we need Ed Warren.

Ed understands our education needs.

Ed Warren knows our educational system from the inside. He has been a principal in Belvoir, Falkland, Ayden and Greenville. Plus, he has worked with Pitt Community College and East Carolina University. Ed understands the needs of the total public education system.

He knows how to keep our health system healthy.

As past Chairman of the Pitt County Hospital Board of Trustees, Chairman of the Pitt County Health Board, past Chairman of the Mental Health Association, and past Chairman of the Pitt County Heart Fund, Ed knows our health system, too.

Ed's experience reflects his dedication to keeping Pitt and Greene Counties' health facilities second to none.

Ed is an active farmer.

Ed Warren has been involved with agriculture since the day he was born. In fact, he spent his early years working the land for a share of the profits. He knows what it's like to farm nowadays and he understands the farmer's problems, because he still farms.

You can be sure that Ed will see that farmers get a fair shake from state government.

Ed has business and local government experience.

Ed Warren is a small businessman. By being in tobacco farming and sales, and as a rental agent, he knows what's involved and what it takes to make a living. He views government spending with an equally conservative eye.

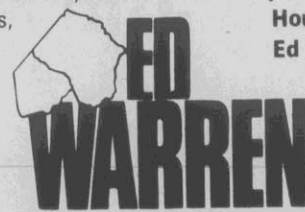

As a Pitt County Commissioner for five years, Ed knows local needs and how to budget for them. He believes in setting priorities and long range planning. He is committed to efficiency in government and in getting the maximum for the tax dollar. Ed is a strong advocate of local control of government programs.

Ed Warren will fight to make state government live within its means.

We have the opportunity to elect a great representative.

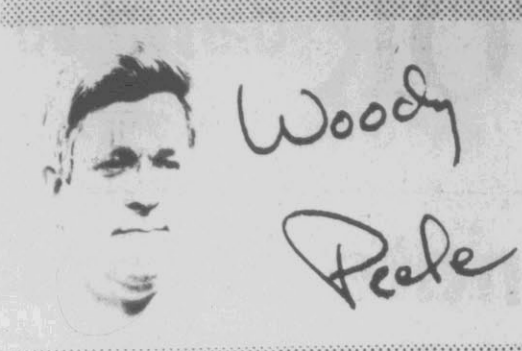

The voters of Pitt County have already shown their confidence in Ed by electing him to the Pitt County Board of Commissioners in 1975 and again in 1978. Now, Pitt and Greene Counties have the opportunity to have Ed in Raleigh to represent us. Let's take advantage of the opportunity.

Rose High School's Rampants took a bold step toward one of the two Division I post-season playoff berths Friday night in their 4-2 victory over Rocky Mount.

While the Rampants have got to have some help to catch the Gryphons, now one game ahead, the chance still exists. But, at the same time, Rose cannot afford to lose again.

Currently, the Rampants have a two-game lead over the rest of the field. Northern Nash has four losses in the league and everyone else has lost at least five times. With four games remaining, the Rampants must win three of them to assure themselves of no worse than second place, without outside help. Two of those four come on the road, against Beddingfield and Bertie, while the other two, against Bertie and Northern Nash, are at home.

Coach Ronald Vincent would like to go into that final game with no worries about whether his team will get a berth.

If the Rampants continue to play as they did Friday night, they should have little to worry about. Their play was strong defensively, and their pitching outstanding. They got enough timely hits to do the job.

And while Rose appears a good shot to make the 4-A playoff field, Greene Central is looking like a winner in the Eastern Carolina Conference, headed for post-season 3-A competition. Jamesville, of the Beaufort-Hyde-Martin Conference looks like a sure winner—for the third straight year—gaining a trip to the 1-A playoffs. The Bulets are the defending champions in 1-A state play.

There will be other teams making the playoffs in other sports, along with various individuals in track, tennis and the like. It makes for a fine spring for the Pitt-Martin-Greene area.

East Carolina's baseball team, meanwhile, awaits word on whether the Pirates will get an NCAA bid. The first bids will go out today, but most of them are expected to go to conference champions who get automatic bids. The remainder are to come on next Monday. At that time, ECU will likely know its future for this season.

Coach Hal Baird continues to try and get teams to play the Pirates for warmups, or just to add to the record, but with no success. When you win, people don't want to play you.

East Carolina, if it does get a bid, could wind up about anywhere in the country to play. More than likely, they would be sent to the South Atlantic Regionals, usually played at Columbia, S.C., or to the Southern Regionals, played last year in Miami, and likely there again. But they could also go to one of the regionals north of the area. No matter where, there should be stiff competition for the Pirates.

East Carolina's women's softball team, which will go into the Regional AIAW Tournament this weekend, can look no further than play there. Even if the Lady Bucs prove to be the best of the field, there is no further competition. AIAW, which has some national competition, does not have a national softball championship as yet, much to the sorrow of the Lady Pirates.

ECU's women will have at least one person in a spring national championship, however, as Cookie McPhatter has qualified for the AIAW nationals in the 800-meter run. She will be running this weekend in a Virginia meet to warm up for the nationals, two weeks further along.

Barber Leads Flyers, 5-3

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The clock and Philadelphia's Bill Barber conspired against the young and hungry Minnesota North Stars Sunday night.

Barber's four goals — including a shorthanded tally with 3:26 to play — powered the Flyers to a 5-3 National Hockey League victory over the Stars Sunday night and gave Philadelphia a 2-1 edge in the best-of-seven semifinal series.

But it was the inevitable winding down of the clock, the North Stars insisted, that prevented them from beating the two-time Stanley Cup champion Flyers.

"We really thought we were going to win this game," said Minnesota center Bobby Smith. "We made an about-face in effort and that's important, but it was a big emotional letdown when they scored that fifth goal."

That fifth goal, shorthanded. Devastating. But according to Barber, routine.

"I just try to do my job at both ends of the ice," said Barber, whose third goal had given the Flyers a 4-0 lead before the North Stars stormed back. "We were down, but we held our composure. We've been here before. We gave them life and then had to take it away."

The North Stars seemed all but dead when Barber scored at 6:0 of the second period. But then Minnesota erupted for three goals — two shorthanded and one on a power play — in a span of three minutes to delight the standing-room-only throng of 15,706 at the Met Center.

With teammate Curt Giles off for tripping, Tom Younghans brought the crowd to its feet by launching a 35-foot slap shot over the shoulder of Flyers' goalie Phil Myre at 14:39.

DALLAS (AP) — Jimmy Connors says he may move ahead of John McEnroe as the No. 2 tennis player in the world, but that's not the ranking he wants.

The 28-year-old Connors, playing as he did when he dominated tennis in the mid-70s, decisively whipped the 21-year-old defending champion McEnroe 2-6, 7-6, 6-1, 6-2 Sunday to earn the $100,000 first place prize in the World Championship of Tennis Finals.

"That's a big step toward my goal," said a pleased Connors, whose settled family life has given his game new life. "There is no No. 2 — only No. 1. I'm not fighting to be No. 2. I've got to forget this match."

Connors has taken dead aim at unseating Sweden's Bjorn Borg as the No. 1 player in the world.

"I'm getting close to the way I played in 1974," Connors said. "I'm working hard on it. When I was 19, 20, and 21, all I had to do was play. But I have lots more on my mind now, and I have to work harder."

Vote for INTEGRITY EXPERIENCE and LOYALTY Re-Elect

JULIAN R. ALLSBROOK

To Represent You As State Senator Sixth District

Julian Allsbrook has a proven record of service to the people who have supported him during a long and distinguished career in the North Carolina General Assembly. Last Wednesday, The N.C. Center for Public Policy Research—a Raleigh-based, non-profit public interest group—placed Julian Allsbrook in the top 50% of State Senators in rating their effectiveness. The survey conclusion was based on the response of Sen. Allsbrook's fellow lawmakers, lobbyists and news reporters. On October 19, 1979, the North Carolina Human Relations Council—a bi-partisan citizens' group—presented Senator Allsbrook an award "For Outstanding Leadership in the North Carolina General Assembly since 1935 for Citizens of Eastern North Carolina."

THE RECORD SPEAKS

Sen. Allsbrook's leadership experience began at the University of North Carolina where he was elected President of the Student Body and Permanent Vice President of his class. In the political life of his native Roanoke Rapids, he has served as City Commissioner and—in evidence of his vigorous interest in education—was a member of the Roanoke Rapids School Board for 10 years. In 1935, Sen. Allsbrook embarked upon a career of public service in the North Carolina Senate—a career interrupted by World War II when he served his nation in the U.S. Navy.

YOU BE THE JUDGE

Julian Allsbrook can point to a long record of loyalty—loyalty to his constituents, his state, his nation and his party. In the legislative halls of Raleigh, Julian Allsbrook's name is synonymous with honesty and integrity. He can be depended upon to keep his word and to deal fairly with everyone. Sen. Allsbrook has successfully introduced and guided through the General Assembly legislation aimed at improving many vital areas of public concern: education, better roads, the blind, public health, mental health and agriculture. The "Allsbrook" stamp on proposed legislation practically assures its passage.

IT'S YOUR TURN

Everyday the reception room at Sen. Allsbrook's office is filled with people who need help with their problems. NO ONE IS EVER TURNED AWAY! Now Julian Allsbrook needs YOUR help. Give him your vote and support on Tuesday.

Two DHs Have Special Day...Of Different Sorts

By The Associated Press
It was a special day for designated hitters Otto Velez and Darrell Porter. While Velez tied an American League record with four home runs in a doubleheader, Porter made some significant history of his own with a triple and a single.

Velez is happy to be playing fulltime and Porter is happy to be playing at all. After spending six weeks in a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center, Porter drove in three runs and scored a fourth in only his second appearance of the season, leading Kansas City to a 5-3 victory over Boston Sunday.

Velez did his part to make the first Sunday in May "Designated Hitter's Day" by smashing three homers, including a grand-slam and a solo game-winner in the 10th that gave Toronto a 9-8 victory over Cleveland. Then he launched the Blue Jays to a 7-2 triumph in the nightcap with a three-run homer in the first inning.

Velez became the 11th AL player to connect for four homers in a doubleheader. Graig Nettles of the New York Yankees was the last entry in this category in 1974. Stan Musial of St. Louis and Nate Colbert of San Diego hold the major league mark with five.

Porter, who rejoined the Royals April 25, received a long, warm ovation from the Kansas City crowd when he came to bat in the first inning. In his first appearance Friday night, the home fans welcomed him back with an enthusiastic two-minute standing ovation. "It's wonderful the way the people accepted me," he said.

Porter tripled in the first for his first hit of the season, driving in Hal McRae. "I thought it was gonna be an out, to tell you the truth," he said. "It carried farther than I thought it would. It's that extra five pounds I'm carrying."

In the third, Porter singled home two more runs and came around to score on a single by John Wathan.

"I'm very satisfied," he said. "I feel real good at the plate and it's amazing I'm seeing the ball so well."

In his last two at bats, Porter drove balls to the warning track that were hauled down. "Porter didn't miss the fat part of the bat all day, did he?" said Boston Manager Don Zimmer.

The meaty part of Velez's bat looked awfully big, too.

"I hit a couple of fastballs and a slider," said Velez, whose home run output went from three to seven, while his runs-batted-in total doubled from 10 to 20.

His grand slam in the opener was the first of his career. In the 10th inning, Toronto Manager Bobby Mattick flashed the hit sign on a 3-0 pitch, and Velez powered it over the right-center field fence.

"In that kind of situation you got to be sitting on a fastball and he gave me one away," Velez said. "I just wanted a base hit to win it. In that kind of situation you got to go full. I got lucky and it worked out."

Yankees 10, Twins 1

Reggie Jackson, knocked down by an apparent brushback pitch for the third game in a row, retaliated with a long home run. He then triggered a six-run fourth inning with a leadoff single.

Jackson hit the deck in the second inning off loser Jerry Koosman, 2-2. Jackson exchanged words with Koosman and catcher Butch Wynegar and then drilled a 430-foot homer to dead center, his sixth of the season and 375th of his career.

The homer put him in 23rd place, one ahead of Rocky Colavito, on the all-time list.

Tigers 4-0, A's 0-1

Detroit's Milt Wilcox beat Oakland 4-0 with a four-hitter, but Mike Norris matched that performance with a four-hit, 1-0 shutout to give the A's a split in their doubleheader with the Tigers.

Norris, 4-0, reduced his earned run average to 0.44 in outdueling Dan Schatzeder, who allowed no hits through 51-3 innings. The first hit and the only run for the A's was Jeff Newman's homer.

Brewers 11, White Sox 1

Robin Yount's grand slam homer highlighted a six-run eighth inning and Jim Slaton and three other pitchers combined for a four-hitter to lead Milwaukee past the White Sox.

The triumph was the fourth straight for the Brewers while the Sox, who have lost six of their last seven, suffered their fourth consecutive defeat.

Angels 4, Mariners 3

Carney Lansford doubled twice, driving in two runs and scoring one in California's victory.

Lansford doubled to drive in the first of three first-inning runs. Don Baylor followed with a sacrifice fly, his first RBI in 10 games, and Joe Rudi singled in another run.

Lansford's RBI double in the fifth proved to be the game-winner.

Orioles 9, Rangers 5

Ken Singleton slugged a two-run homer and Eddie Murray hit two doubles and scored twice as Baltimore took an early lead and held off Texas.

Dennis Martinez, 1-0, got the win but needed help from reliever Dave Ford, who pitched out of a bases-loaded jam in the sixth inning and picked up his first save.

Phillies Win Appeal, Lose Game

By The Associated Press
The Philadelphia Phillies won the appeal, but lost the game.

Even at that, Manager Dallas Green wasn't completely dissatisfied.

"I've been trying to build character, so I've got to be pleased to see that kind of effort," Green said. "The easiest thing to do when you're losing 9-0 is just play out the game and go home."

Despite a bizarre first inning which included a backfired appeal play that netted the Dodgers four runs, Green's never-say-die team eventually came back to wipe out a nine-run deficit Sunday.

The Phillies fell short at the end, though, losing 12-10.

Pirates 13, Braves 4

Willie Stargell and Dave Parker each drove in three runs to lead Pittsburgh over Atlanta.

Stargell had three hits, including an RBI double and a two-run homer, as the Pirates collected 15 hits against five Atlanta pitchers. Parker drove in runs with a fielder's choice, a single and a sacrifice fly.

The victory went to Jim Bibby, 4-0, who scattered eight hits.

"For about the first six innings, Bibby was struggling like a dog with rabies," said Pirates catcher Ed Ott. "After that, he started to pop the fastball and really got things together. He got himself together, and we gave him a lot of support."

Astros 4, Cardinals 2

Ken Forsch gained his fourth straight victory and contributed an RBI single in the sixth as Houston beat St. Louis. Forsch gave up both Cardinals runs before getting seventh-inning relief help from Joe Sambito.

Loser Bob Sykes yielded Rafael Landestoy's leadoff double in the Houston third, and Terry Puhl's RBI single sent the Astros on top to stay, 2-1.

Reds 3-5, Cubs 2-4

Cesar Geronimo's first homer of the season helped Cincinnati snap a five-game losing streak by beating Chicago in the first game of their doubleheader.

Junior Kennedy's initial career grand slam home run capped a five-run rally in the sixth inning of the nightcap, helping the Reds come back from a 4-0 deficit.

"The minute he hit it, I said, 'It's gone,'" Chicago Manager Preston Gomez said of Kennedy's homer. "He's underrated. He does his job in the field, and anybody with a bat in his hand is dangerous."

Padres 4-2, Mets 3-6

Joel Youngblood booted Dave Winfield's eighth-inning single to right field, allowing Gene Richards to score the winning run as San Diego defeated New York in the opener of their doubleheader.

Elliot Maddox keyed a three-run second inning with a bases-loaded single to help New York win the second game.

Giants 8-4, Expos 4-6

Jack Clark knocked in three runs and Terry Whitfield doubled home a pair as San Francisco won the opener of its twinbill from Montreal.

Andre Dawson drove home the go-ahead run in a four-run seventh inning, leading the Expos past the Giants in the nightcap. The Expos trailed 4-1 in the nightcap before their game-breaking rally.

The sudden-death playoff lasted one hole.

Trevino hit safely to the middle of the green on the par-3 and Strange didn't hesitate moment.

"I didn't want to go for the middle of the green. I wanted to go for the flag. I wanted it all," he said.

And he got it.

He put his shot some 12 feet from the cup. After Trevino missed, Strange rolled his home for the winner, making Trevino a runnerup for the second week in a row and for the 11th time in 2½ years.

"That's as good as I can play," Trevino said. "Curtis probably deserved it. He played far better than I did for three days. I played a little better the last day."

Strange had played the first 54 holes in 195, 18 under par and the best three-round total in 10 years of PGA Tour activity.

Not Everything Labeled Cancer-Causing Agent

MOTHER OF THE YEAR — Betty L. Lieder, 56, wife of a United Methodist minister in Spencer Iowa, and mother of five, was named Saturday in Phoenix, Ariz. as American Mother of the Year. Mrs. Lieder was chosen from among Mothers of the Year of 48 states and the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico. The award is given annually by the American Mothers Committee, a non-profit group devoted to strengthening moral and spiritual values of the family and home. (AP Laserphoto)

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
Caution: Everything does NOT cause cancer.

That message comes from the Public Health Service of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare — the same agency that frequently warns people about the things that DO cause cancer.

It is designed to ease some of the fears that people feel when they read and hear almost daily reports of cancer-causing agents in the food they eat, the air they breathe and the places they work.

"One of every four Americans can expect to get cancer," says the Public Health Service. "But the outlook is not hopeless..."

To get its message across, the health service has prepared a 14-page booklet, "Everything Doesn't Cause Cancer." It's available, at no charge, from Dept. 650H at the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

The booklet provides questions and answers about cancer and what causes it. Here are some highlights:

Q. What causes cancer?
A. "Most human cancers are probably caused in part by environmental factors," the health service says. Cancer-causing agents — also called carcinogens — include natural and man-made chemicals, X-rays, sunlight and certain viruses. Most chemicals, however, are not carcinogenic, according to the government experts.

Q. How long does it take for cancer to develop once someone has been exposed to a carcinogen?

A. It usually takes somewhere between 5 years and 40 years. Cancers of the liver, lung or gall bladder which are caused by exposure to vinyl chloride, asbestos or benzidine may not show up for 30 years.

Q. How do scientists decide which substances are dangerous?

A. The most common way is to test potential carcinogens on laboratory animals, mainly mice and rats. Because the rodents have a short natural lifetime, cancers show up relatively quickly.

Q. Just because something causes cancer in mice, does that mean it is bad for people?

A. Probably. There are about 30 substances known to cause cancer in humans; almost all of them cause cancer in laboratory animals as well. There are several hundred other chemicals that are under suspicion — we know that they cause cancer in animals; we are less sure about what happens to people. "Nevertheless," says the health service, "materials that cause cancer in one mammalian species are usually found to cause cancer in other species."

Q. The test animals usually are given large doses of the suspected carcinogens.

People are exposed to much smaller amounts. Doesn't that mean the tests are invalid?

A. No. Millions of people may be exposed to low doses of a possible cancer-causing agent. But scientists can't test millions of mice to see what effect a low dose of a particular substance would have. The high doses simply mean that any potential cancer-causing effects are much more likely to be detected in small groups of rodents because the cancer rate is sharply increased.

Singapore Planning To Conduct Early Census

By KENNETH L. WHITING
SINGAPORE (AP) — The national census under way in the United States will soon have a smaller counterpart here.

Counting the 2.3 million to 2.4 million people in this Chicagosome island republic will be simpler and much less costly than America's census, but just as precise and no less important to the country's future.

Washington is expected to spend more than a billion dollars. Officials here estimate that more than double the $695,652 spent in 1970 may be needed this year.

An army of 265,000 is involved in America. This country expects to make do with a total of 2,000.

Another big difference is that a population shift here won't automatically mean a change in parliamentary representation as in the United States where it determines which states gain and lose seats in the House of representatives. For one thing, this city-state is too small. For another, all seats in the 69-member parliament are held by the ruling People's Action Party.

Singapore's decennial head count begins in May, with June 24 designated census day, the reference point for counting the population.

Basic information sought includes age, sex, marital status, ethnic group, birthplace, occupation and level of education. Officials said other questions covered income, number of children, literacy, type of housing, languages spoken and means of transportation.

Transportation has become an important issue in recent years. Government policy includes financial disincentives for private car ownership to ease traffic congestion. Census results are expected to reflect commuting patterns which may influence tentative plans for a subway system.

Questions about languages, especially those spoken in the home, may show how the "Speak More Mandarin" drive is progressing. The campaign promotes that official tongue instead of various Chinese dialects among the majority. English, Tamil and Malay are the other official languages.

The census will indirectly help determine the number and location of new houses, schools, hospitals, cinemas, shops and factories, officials said.

For the purposes of the count, Singapore and its satellite islands are divided roughly according to the 215 election districts. Six to nine enumerators work each area under the guidance of at least one supervisor.

All premises, including offices, factories, hospitals and military bases, in addition to homes, will be checked. Extra visits are Mayor Rogers opened the meeting with prayer. Members helping on Poppy Days, May 23 and 24, were assigned their stations and collected their poppies.

All members planning to work on these days are asked to contact Poppy Chairman Betty Levey, 752-2912, if they have not received their poppies.

Mrs. Sarah Ashton was presented a gift by the unit in appreciation for her service as District 3 President.

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K1097652 ♥AJ9 ♦J9 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
Pass Pass 1 ♦ 2 ♥

What do you bid now?
A.—If you were not a passed hand, a bid of two spades would be adequate, since it is forcing. Now, however, partner might pass with a holding that could produce a slam! We suggest that you take the bit firmly between the teeth and jump to four spades—no invitational sequence will do your hand justice.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J10 ♥Q762 ♦K983 ♣K42
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♠ Dble. 2 ♠ ?
What action do you take?

A.—Opposite a partner who could make a vulnerable takeout double, you have a pretty good hand. Don't let the opponents shut you out of the auction. You have sufficient values for a bid of three hearts, so make it.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ10 ♥QJ532 ♦KQ9 ♣A9
What is your opening bid?
A.—While we would not fault you if you chose to open one heart, one no trump is the proper opening bid.

Possession of a five-card major suit does not bar you from opening one no trump. Consider what might happen if you open one heart. Either a one spade or a one no trump response would leave you with a difficult rebid problem. One no trump describes both the shape and strength of your hand accurately.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A985 ♥7 ♦J965 ♣AQ93
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♥ Pass 1 ♦ Pass
3 ♠ Pass ?
What do you bid now?

A.—You have a near opening bid facing a partner who not only opened, but jumped. Even though your hand is a partial misfit, you still have enough to make one move toward slam. The simplest way to test the waters without getting in over your head is to make a cue-bid of four clubs.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, with 30 on score, you hold:
♠J8 ♥95 ♦854 ♣KQJ932
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♠ Pass
2 ♥ Pass 3 ♠ Pass
3 NT Pass ?
What action do you take?

A.—Partner must have a very good hand, for you promised little when you simply rebid clubs over his change of suit. However, we would not risk passing three no trump—there's too much chance that partner does not have the ace of clubs. In that case your hand could be totally useless to him. We would bid four clubs.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q10762 ♥AK5 ♦872 ♣105
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South
1 ♠ 2 ♠ ?
What do you bid now?

A.—That fifth spade is very alluring, but don't go overboard. A simple two spades is adequate for the moment. If partner cannot act again, you are unlikely to have missed a game. However, accept with alacrity all game tries.

planned, since experience in previous head counts showed it was unlikely to catch everybody first time around.

More than 60 percent of the population lives in governmentbuilt apartment houses, a factor which is expected to ease the count. Identity cards, for which every resident must register upon reaching age 12, should also speed the census.

Ships in the world's fourth busiest port will be boarded. So will lighters and sampans in creeks and rivers. Vagrants and others found loitering in the streets will be questioned to make sure nobody is overlooked.

As in the United States, the raw data will be fed into computers.

Sasson-Sassoon Feud Resolved

NEW YORK (AP) — The man famous for hair styles figured he was being confused with the jeans maker, so he filed suit. Then the jeans maker found the hair stylist was going to market jeans, and filed a countersuit.

The case of Sassoon vs. Sasson was settled with help from a federal judge.

Vidal Sassoon, the hair stylist and hair product merchandiser, filed suit contending the jeans maker's television commercials pronounced "Sasson" as "Sassoon." The jeans company filed suit when it learned Sassoon was going to license his own name on jeans.

Only Your Paper Carrier Loses When You Do Not Pay Promptly.

'Cary'

"Hi. My name is Cary and I represent your Daily Reflector newspaper carrier. And if you have a few minutes I'd like to explain something about my job.

"All paper carriers for The Daily Reflector are independent contractors. What this means is that I pay the newspaper a wholesale rate for the papers on my route. What I charge you is the retail rate. The difference in the two rates is my profit.

"The Daily Reflector doesn't lose any money when you don't pay me on time. I lose some of my profit."

A tip from Cary to help you pay your Daily Reflector newspaper carrier on time:

Put the money, or check, for your carrier in the same convenient place each collection period. Make sure household members know where the payment is so that anyone can pay the carrier at collection time.

Can Reduce Absenteeism

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — A survey of 220 employees by Pitney Bowes found that absenteeism and tardiness can be cut substantially by the use of flextime.

Flextime is a plan that lets employees adjust their work hours to accommodate personal needs.

The survey by the business-equipment manufacturer showed that among these company employees cases of absenteeism and tardiness occurred only twice in three months after the program began. In the three months prior to the flextime plan, there were 160 cases.

"Flextime has been successful," says a spokesman, "because employees can arrange for time off when needed without having to fake illness or make excuses."

George's Teeth Not Of Wood

By JAMES J. DOYLE
LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A UCLA professor has put to rest for good the myth of George Washington's wooden false teeth.

"He had teeth of elephant ivory, walrus tusks, teeth from cows and a hippopotamus, even human teeth including one of his own," said Dr. Reidar Sognaes, Dean of Dentistry Emeritus. "But he never had teeth made of wood."

Sognaes, who founded the School of Dentistry at UCLA and established a research department, said in an interview he has duplicated some of Washington's teeth in the same way they originally were made.

Hippo teeth were popular at the time, he said, because one could be carved into several human teeth.

"It's not like elephant ivory. The outer shell is a dental enamel much whiter and denser than ivory and it doesn't stain so easily."

He said hippo teeth were used for dentures at least as far back as 1730 and were described in literature at the time.

The teeth were mounted on a base of ivory and held in place with a sticky wax.

John Greenwood, Washington's favorite dentist, made "a beautiful set with hippo teeth carved into segments and fitted into ivory with gold plate in the upper jaw, and the two parts were connected with gold springs in the back," he said.

The springs lost tensile strength over a period of time and pushed the plates forward which, Sognaes said, may have given Washington that out-thrust-jaw appearance in many of his paintings.

In a paper Sognaes presented before a recent meeting of the American Association for Dental Research, he said the myth of wooden teeth may have arisen during one of several public exhibits of Washington's dentures from the time of the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition in 1876 to the New York World Fair in 1939.

Ivory has growth rings which become darkly stained with age, especially if exposed to drinks such as coffee, tea or wine, and may have taken on the appearance of dark wood, he said.

Sognaes said Washington did not have extensive dental decay as has been supposed by some historians.

The excellent preservation of posterior teeth, which he did not lose until the beginning of his first term of office in 1789 when he was 57 years old contradicts that assumption, he said.

But there was some reduction in the carrying base of the dentures between his first and second terms of office which indicated he suffered from destructive periodontal disease involving gum infection and shrinkage of the jaw bone.

Washington's own teeth, before he lost them, were large, rectangular and white. Sognaes said, and measurements of Washington's face mask, cast in plaster of paris by Jean Houdon in 1785, also suggests a facial shape in keeping with a relatively square, rather than tapered, tooth formation.

At one time, Washington's dentures included cow teeth. "A cow has incisors on the bottom only," Sognaes said, "and it bites against hardened upper jaw tissue to tear off leaves. It wears down in about five years to the shape of a human tooth."

He said Charles Willson Peale, a painter and naturalist, made his own set of teeth and a plate for Washington, and he had painted Washington as a young man.

"He knew what his smile once was like," Sognaes said. "He fixed cow teeth on a lead base and they were very natural looking and they retained their white color because they were covered with enamel on the surface."

Washington also had a plate made of human teeth including one of his own, and at various times teeth made from walrus tusks.

DR. REIDAR SOGNAES, who Here he shows how he cut segment founded the School of Dentistry at out of hippopotamus tusk to recreate UCLA, says George Washington's "never had teeth made of wood." (UPI Photo)

Working Weekend For Muskie And President

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter returned to the White House today from a working weekend with Secretary of State-designate Edmund S. Muskie and national security advisers at Camp David, Md.

Walking into the White House, Carter replied "great" when asked how he felt about his victory Saturday in the Texas Democratic presidential primary election.

He also said he would not lead a U.S. delegation to the funeral in Belgrade of Yugoslavia's President Josip Broz Tito, who died Sunday. The delegation was expected to be announced later today.

The White House issued a statement Sunday that sought to make clear that Sen. Muskie, a Maine Democrat, will be the No. 1 foreign policy adviser in the Carter administration.

The statement said those at Camp David had a "detailed discussion of the role of Sen. Muskie as secretary of state, especially in advising the president on policy issues; in public presentation of the administration's foreign policies, and in working closely with the Congress."

Muskie was nominated for the position last week to replace Cyrus R. Vance, who resigned in disagreement with Carter's approval of an aborted attempt to rescue the 53 American hostages in Iran. The announcement of Muskie's nomination was greeted with speculation about whether he or Zbigniew Brzezinski, the president's national security adviser, would be the administration's premier foreign policy adviser. Brzezinski briefs the president daily and was involved in several policy disagreements with Vance. Carter, Muskie and Acting Secretary of State Warren Christopher arrived at the Catoctin Mountain retreat Friday afternoon.

Brzezinski and others joined them Saturday for a 4½-hour working lunch to discuss Muskie's role in the administration as well as "major policy issues," according to the statement.

Charge Sgt. In Thefts

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — An Army sergeant has been charged by military authorities in connection with the theft of field rations worth perhaps as much as $250,000.

Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Ernesty, 39, a mess sergeant with the 82nd Airborne Division, was charged with larceny, fraud and falsifying records, a post spokesman said Saturday.

If convicted, Ernesty faces a maximum penalty of 36½ years confinement, a dishonorable discharge, reduction in rank to E-1 and loss of pay and allowances, the spokesman said.

No trial date has been set. Capt. Larry Gottardi said agents of the post's Criminal Investigation Division have other soldiers under investigation in the theft.

Knowledgeable sources said estimates of the value of the rations believed stolen range from $220,000 to $250,000, or higher. The sources said the rations were lightweight freeze-dried meals.

The probe involves a number of noncommissioned officers and, apparently, isolated instances of alleged theft, one source said.

Inflation Tops N.C. Concerns

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Inflation far outdistanced other national issues as the topic of greatest concern to North Carolinians, a recent Carolina Poll shows.

The poll, conducted twice annually by the University of North Carolina Journalism School, asked 443 state residents what national issues were most important.

Of those surveyed, 28 percent said inflation, 19 percent said the Iranian situation and 13 percent replied the economy worried them most.

When asked about local issues, 37 percent gave no response. Among those who did reply, education was the main concern, followed by taxes, transportation systems and crime.

The poll also found that half of those surveyed read a newspaper each day and half said they watch a national television news show every evening.

Egypt Still Depends On Famous Camel Corps; Fights Smuggling

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer
ROMANI, Egypt (AP) — When Egypt's 3rd army was encircled by the Israelis in the Sinai desert during the 1973 Middle East war, food and supplies were smuggled through enemy lines by a corps of camels and elite trackers.

Now the unique cavalry force, which sources estimate to number more than 2,500 men, is being used to combat a growing tide of smuggling that has sprung up among desert nomads following the opening of borders between Egypt and Israel.

"There was virtually no smuggling in Sinai before we had peace because the army maintained tight control," Col. Mahmoud Singer explained to a reporter on a tour of the Romani camel corps post in the Sinai near the Mediterranean, about 100 miles northeast of Cairo.

After Egypt and Israel signed a peace treaty in March 1979, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat returned the Sinai to civilian control and thousands of front-line troops were shifted to the volatile Libyan border area.

Some of the 120,000 bedouins living in the 23,000-square mile Sinai resumed an ancient nomad tradition: smuggling.

Televisions, tape recorders, fans, sheep and cotton sold at government regulated prices in Egypt began flowing north to Israel while tea, chocolate, beer and stolen cars came south to Egypt.

Hashish, a derivative of the marijuana plant, is the prime target of the camel corps in Sinai. Sixty smugglers and 20 tons of hash have been seized since the new era of peace began — part of 87 smuggling arrests made in 1979 and 64 the year before, Egyptian officials said. More precise figures were unavailable.

Brig. Sayyed Abdel Rahman, a rugged 6-footer who once led camel patrols himself, said most of the drugs were smuggled in at night by fishing boats and rubber dinghies.

"The bedouins meet the boats along the coast in jeeps or with camels and head into the desert," he said. Western experts say the hashish originates in Lebanon, where civil strife makes policing impossible. The sources said a 600-ton crop is expected this year with much of it earmarked for Egypt's 1 million users who smoke it or chew it for the intoxicating effect.

Speed boats, helicopters and army jeeps patrol the seacoast and inland routes, but in a country that is 96 percent desert there is little chance of the corps being phased out.

"A jeep costs me $4,000 and can wear out in a year in this terrain," said Abdel Rahman. "A camel costs $400 and is good for at least seven years. Besides, you don't have to worry about maintenance or spare parts."

Camels can move swiftly and silently in waist-deep sand that is impassable for even four-wheel drive vehicles. They also get better mileage, traveling up to 30 miles a day for three days without water, he said.

The more than 40 camels at Romani are from Sudan, bred for speed and durability and given a special three-to-six-month training course. Abdel Rahman says the cream-colored male dromedaries known as Bisharis are used here because they are the "Cadillacs of camels — fast and comfortable." He scorns breeds such as the thick-legged Al Hadandawis, comparing them to breakdown-prone Russian cars.

Ironically, the corps is known in Arabic as the Hagannah, the same name adopted by Jewish underground fighters who founded the state of Israel. The corps is made up mostly of volunteers known for their keen tracking abilities. The riders are armed with Russian light machine guns and carry daggers in their belts, while each of the camels is branded with an identifying number.

The corps was the backbone of the Egyptian army after the British formed the first unit in 1882. But in modern times it has concentrated on stopping smuggling and saboteurs.

In one recent operation, military officials said a camel patrol intercepted a caravan of smugglers coming from Sudan. The troopers seized a load of spices from Chad — borne on the backs of 40 camels.

At a seacoast outpost five miles from the base camp at Romani, 33-year-old Sgt. Mohammed Ali Koraim leads a five-man patrol with orders to fire on sight anyone who enters the restricted coastal zone.

"I grew up with camels," said Koraim, a 15-year veteran who grew up on a farm near the southern Egyptian city of Aswan. "My father was in the camel corps and I just followed the tradition."

Armchair Flyers Win Plane Game Trips From Airlines

By JAMES A. WHITE
UPI Business Writer
NEW YORK (UPI) — Airline contests have turned into a boon for crafty players who are doing their flying by mail to win free rides.

The games, designed to boost airline traffic, are being run by United, American and Trans World Airlines. They have reached gigantic proportions with some 11 million entrants so far and millions more expected before the sweepstakes end May 10.

By that time there will be more than 40,000 winners of free trips to domestic destinations of their choice. "It's a big splash but the airlines really have very little to lose," said airline analyst Michael Derchin of the investment firm of Oppenheimer & Co. "Contests divert attention from the fact that air fares have gone up 40 percent in a year."

United was the first big carrier to launch a contest offering free travel as prizes. It figured it would hand out 3.25 million game cards during April, of which 10,000 would be winners. No skill is involved; just scraping off the coating on the game card reveals if it is worth a free trip. United's competition was livid with the appearance of the travel game. TWA and American tried to get state and federal regulators to block the gimmick but with no luck, and had to offer their own games through May 10, each with another 10,000 free trips. United then extended its deadline to the same date.

While intended to get people to fly the airlines for a game card handed out on board, the contests also have a loophole for non-passengers. Regulations mandate a "no purchase required" provision so the airlines had to set up a mail-in system for those seeking game cards without buying a ticket.

Through that loophole have poured millions of requests for free game cards. American, United and TWA last week said they had given out 6.2 million cards on board flights but another 4.71 million requests have come by mail, far outdistancing pre-contest predictions.

United, which thought it would get 500,000 write-ins, has attracted 3.3 million so far. In the week after it unveiled the contest, it received 300,000 requests and honored them even though they came in before the official starting date.

As a result United, the largest domestic carrier, says it will give out at least 20,000 free trips to anywhere it flies — double the original estimate. TWA and American, with their later starts, have not attracted as many entrants and haven't added up prizes yet.

The deluge has brought problems for the airlines in their first experience with contests. Write-in requests have piled up unanswered, making entrants anxious. All the carriers say now they have geared up and anyone who has entered the contests properly will get a game card.

TWA also had a foul-up when it announced that cards would be available free at its ticket counters as well as by mail. Visions of around-the-block lines waiting for cards made the carrier change its mind and it said the walk-in announcement "was in error."

But there also are a lot of happy winners already, including an 81-year-old Tulsa, Okla., man on his first flight whose American game card proved a winner. In addition, four of American's 10 "grand prizes," worth a free month of travel, have been claimed so far.

Expect Trial To Bring Radicals

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Speakers at a Communist Workers Party rally Saturday predicted that trials for six party members charged with rioting will draw radicals to Greensboro.

The charges stem from a shooting outburst last Nov. 3 at a CWP-sponsored anti-Ku Klux Klan rally that left five demonstrators dead.

Six party members or supporters have been indicted on felony rioting charges in the incident. Sixteen others, all connected with the Klan or Nazis, have been indicted, 11 on murder charges.

Subversion Fears Over Yugoslavia

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — As Josip Broz Tito lingered near death for several months, Carter administration officials concluded that the Soviet Union was unlikely to make a frontal assault on Yugoslavia after he finally died.

But they worried about subversion, and about subtle instigation of that nation's ethnic rivalries that Tito's political genius and personal charisma were able to suppress.

This judgment was carried out in the statement issued Sunday by President Carter after Tito died. The comments reflected both admiration for Tito, who defied the Soviets in 1948 and who pursued a stubborn, nonaligned course, and a note of caution that the Soviets could not mistake.

Calling Tito "a towering figure on the world stage," Carter also warned that the United States "will not tolerate terrorist acts" against Yugoslavia.

The president's statement clearly reaffirmed U.S. support for Yugoslavia, not only if the Red Army struck, but also if the Soviets, using arms shipments or other less obvious ways, tried to capitalize on the instability that is always just beneath the surface in the multinational country.

Carter pledged the United States will "do what it must to provide that support," without, of course, spelling out the strategy he might consider if the Soviets try to foment dissension.

A direct Soviet attack on Yugoslavia is not considered likely. "If they made a frontal military move, it's the one thing that would unite all nationalities," a top administration analyst said last winter after Tito fell ill.

"My guess is that they would be inclined to move politically rather than militarily."

But even immediate political turmoil is not considered inevitable. Tito arranged for his succession through trusted aides and his lingering illness gave them — and the people of Yugoslavia — time to prepare for the post-Tito era.

Offers Pay Onslow Fees

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Former Onslow County Sheriff Thomas J. Marshall said Saturday that if county officials requested him to, he would repay $6,700 in fees he was supposed to have turned over to the county.

District Attorney William H. Andrews announced Friday that he would not prosecute Marshall.

"There will be no charges brought as a result of the investigation for the reason I do not feel that there is sufficient evidence to satisfy a jury beyond a reasonable doubt of guilt," Andrews said.

A State Bureau of Investigation probe showed Marshall improperly withheld about $6,700 after 1968. Andrews said most of the funds Marshall kept were commissions for executing court judgments.

The district attorney said Marshall told the SBI he was unaware of a change in state law in 1968 that required him to turn such fees over to the county. Andrews said Marshall made no attempt to hide the fact that he kept the money and showed no criminal intent in doing so.

"I don't want anything that doesn't belong to me," Marshall said Saturday. "If the county determines that I owe them $6,700 and that's the figure, I will gladly reimburse them. I didn't spend it on myself."

Marshall retired from the sheriff's position in 1978 after serving 27 years. He is one of five candidates on Tuesday's primary ballot for the Democratic nomination to seats on the Onslow County Board of Commissioners.

Saturday's Cryptoquip — SOCIAL OBLIGATIONS BEGUIL THE CONSCIENTIOUS HOSTESS.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: S equals A

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

The Fonz Likes Future Adults

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Never let it be said The Fonz thinks young people are nerds.

"I like you because you are the future," Henry Winkler told 2,300 high school students at a Law Day Conference. "Nothing anyone can say can change that. If the adult world forgets this, you must remind them. You have the power to change the world."

Winkler, who plays the finger-snapping Fonz on ABC-TV's "Happy Days," also told the students he thought the recent aborted mission to free the hostages in Iran was "a great try," and told them he thought the draft was a "shame" —

"However, it is our responsibility to protect our country. But let there be a good reason besides oil or profits before we send our young people to die."

A spokeswoman said Winkler attracted the largest crowd in the history of the Law Day conference.

Music In New Mexico

RUIDOSO, N.M. (AP) — This vacation community, sitting at the base of Sierra Blanca mountain, will sponsor a week-long Ruidoso Summer Festival June 4-10 featuring the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra.

Conducted by John Giordano, the symphony will perform seven concerts, several featuring guest artists. There will be three subscription performances at the Ruidoso Downs Arena, a concert for children and three free outdoor performances at different sites in the surrounding parks and forests.

Giordano, during his nine years as music director and conductor, has taken the symphony to both the small towns of the Southwest and Carnegie Hall in New York. The symphony seeks to establish a summer retreat in Ruidoso, returning annually to perform for local residents and visitors.

Pianist Adds Other Good Music

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer
Vladimir Ashkenazy, widely considered the best young pianist to emerge from Russia since World War II, has taken up conducting. He also has taken up playing chamber music.

But his major career is still as a concert pianist.

He plays chamber music to break up the lonely touring of an instrumental soloist and to get to play that repertoire. In January, he played in Lincoln Center with violinist Itzhak Perlman and cellist Lynn Harrell. The New York Times said three of the world's finest virtuosos made a supertrio which, one hopes, will record.

Last year, Ashkenazy and Perlman won a Grammy for best chamber-music recording, Beethoven sonatas for piano and violin.

Conducting, which Ashkenazy started in 1977, is a challenge, he says. "Naturally it would be," he says, "because it isn't a familiar medium. It is not because of that I began to conduct. It is because there is very much good music for orchestra. That is why."

Ashkenazy records for London Records. Last year his recordings included Mozart concertos 21 and 17, which he played and conducted; Beethoven piano sonatas, Volume 9, and Rachmaninoff songs with Elisabeth Soderstrom, Volume 4. This year, so far, recordings released include Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, conducting the Philharmonia Orchestra of London; songs with Miss Soderstrom by three Russian composers, and Chopin Piano Music, Volume 5.

He already has recorded five Beethoven piano concertos with the Chicago Symphony and Sir Georg Solti and five Prokofiev piano concertos and four Rachmaninoff piano concertos with the London Symphony and Andre Previn.

During the concert season, Ashkenazy takes time off around Christmas and Easter to be with his wife and five children. When his U.S. tour ends at the end of April, he'll go to Europe for performances, then to the Far East in June. He takes his family to Greece each year in July and August.

Ashkenazy was born in 1937 in Gorki, on the banks of Russia's Volga River and began musical studies at 6. At 17, he came in second in the Chopin Competition in Warsaw. Two years later he won the Queen Elisabeth Competition in Brussels, the most prestigious of the international music contests. In 1962 he shared first prize in the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

Sol Hurok booked him in America for the first time in 1958. In 1963, on tour in London with his wife Dodi and son, he decided to stay in the West. He didn't ask for political asylum — an act which creates publicity — and perhaps because of that his parents have been allowed to leave Russia to visit him twice.

His wife had gone to Moscow to study music from her native Iceland in 1960, and they married in 1961. "I just fell in love with her," he says. "I'm still more in love with her."

He says, "I always had a vague feeling I should really live in the West but the decision was made during the 1963 tour. At some point you want to be really your own master and do as you feel is necessary for your individual development. You simply cannot do that in Russia. Travel abroad is almost impossible and even if it is possible it is restricted so much. You are very, very unfree in Russia."

Still he found the change to freedom difficult to cope with.

"I had a hard time adjusting," he says. "Without my wife, who is such a wonderful person, I don't know if I would have managed."

"It's hard to be free suddenly and be able to mold what you have into some cohesive entity and make all your own decisions. In Russia it is very comfortable. You become a sheep."

Ashkenazy is asked why he entered the Tchaikovsky Competition at the unusually advanced age for a contestant of 25 — having already won, six years before, a first prize, the Queen Elisabeth, which couldn't be topped. He says, "I was simply ordered to go. They needed a winner."

"They said if I didn't, I'll have no international career. They wouldn't let me travel out of Russia."

He says, "Before international competitions, they stage an internal competition of 10, 20 or 30 from all over the country. You play works that will be played in the competition. If you haven't been selected, you'll never go."

"My sister is a pianist. Because I left Russia, she is not allowed to participate in such competitions. She has sort of a career inside Russia, not too bad, not too much. She is prevented from certain things."

Also because he left, Ashkenazy says, "You will not find a publication in Russia that says I won first prize in the Tchaikovsky. I shared first prize with John Ogden, who is British. In Russia it looks like he won."

"It doesn't touch me at all. It is funny and I think they're so stupid, like not very intelligent children. They seem to me a spiteful lot."

Ashkenazy, now a citizen of Iceland, lived in London, then Iceland, now Switzerland. Vladimir, 18, born in Moscow, is a pianist. Daughters Sonia and Nadia, born in Reykjavik and London, play flute and piano. Dmitri and Alexandra, 5 and 1, were born in New York.

Many performers, among them Ashkenazy, are passionate about being faithful to the composer's intentions when they play music. Yet many of them sound very different from each other. So how does Ashkenazy decide what a composer wanted?

"I think about it in a continuous way," he says. "I live with it, think of it every day and every minute."

"What seems to be truthful pleases me more than I can tell you. If I could describe what brings truth, I wouldn't need to play at all. To put it into words is an impossibility for me."

"I like genuine artists and not artists that pretend. It has nothing to do with working hard enough. It's something to do with personality, I suppose. I just know when it is so or not so."

Tiny Town Site For An Energy Experiment

By LES BLUMENTHAL
Associated Press Writer
MIDWAY, Wash. (AP) — Midway isn't on any maps — it's too small. Cold in the winter, hot in the summer — it's just what Bonneville Power Administration had in mind for a series of energy conservation experiments.

"It's a ready-made laboratory. We can test the effectiveness of weatherization and solar systems in a real-life situation," said Jim Lynch, project manager for BPA.

"The National Bureau of Standards has a test house which has been weatherized and equipped with a computer that turns the lights off and on, opens the doors and keeps track of electricity usage. But no one lives there.

"That data is valuable, but it's not the same as when people live in a house," said Lynch.

There isn't much here — no store, no restaurant, no gas station, and about 70 residents. A sign in the window of one building says "Midway Union Sunday School." That's only true when a preacher can be coaxed to town for services.

Eighteen houses, a combination dormitory-grade school, and a main BPA substation — that's Midway. The substation employees rent the houses from the BPA and pay a set amount for utilities every month.

Rich Dixon, his wife, and two small children live in a house fitted with a forced-air solar-heat system. Four other houses have been fitted with solar water heaters and five with heat-pump water heaters.

In addition, 13 of the houses have been tightly insulated and seven of those have been equipped with storm windows and storm doors.

So far, BPA has invested more than $100,000 in the program, proposed more than two years ago when fears of a Northwest energy shortage were growing and the cost of electricity climbing.

Midway was built in the early 1940s, along the Columbia River in south-central Washington. Because it is so isolated, about 30 miles from Richland within sight of the Hanford nuclear reservation, BPA decided to provide housing for its employees — the only BPA substation that has housing.

For the past year, the electricity consumption in all the houses at Midway has been monitored.

Late last year, the laying of insulation, hanging of storm doors and windows and the installation of the heat pumps and solar systems was completed.

"People have said they noticed an immediate difference with the weatherization," said Lynch.

BPA contracted with private firms in the Northwest to install the solar systems and heat exchangers. "All of the systems can be bought commercially," said Art Gentemann, a BPA mechanical engineer. "We contracted with companies that could supply them."

All of the solar systems are a little different.

The one in Dixon's house uses a flat-plate solar collector to heat air. The house is also equipped with a storage system in which heat is preserved in a special salt mixture.

"Even with cloud cover it can still heat the house," said Gentemann.

One system uses vacuum-tube collectors and others have various methods of draining the collector when there is danger of a freeze.

A small computer to gather information from additional sensors and monitors in the houses has been installed in the back room of the building which serves as the Sunday school. That computer in turn feeds into BPA's main computer in the Portland, Ore., area. Researchers from Washington State University will compile the data.

Truckers In Deep Water

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — For North Carolina truckers, the recession has held revenues down, made profits disappear and forced worker layoffs.

McLean Trucking Co. of Winston-Salem, the nation's fourth-ranked carrier, is one company that's been hard hit. It has laid off 2,000 of its 14,000 workers.

And at Pilot Freight Carriers Inc. of Kernersville, the nation's biggest private trucking company, shipments are down 24 percent, according to a company official.

William Duncan, executive vice president of Pilot, said the "drastic reduction" in tonnage has resulted in 10 percent of Pilot's 3,000-member workforce in 17 states being laid off.

"We are working doubly hard in the sales area to try and increase traffic, and we are doing what we can to cut costs, including labor costs," he said.

The decline in volume began last fall at McLean and has dropped sharply in recent weeks. "It reflects the fact that we are in a recession and that people are not shipping as much," McLean spokesman Edwin Robins said.

But Carolina Freight Carriers of Cherryville has managed to increase revenues 13.2 percent for the quarter although tonnage has slipped by 12 percent, an official said.

K.E. Mayhew Jr., executive vice president, attributed the revenue increase to a rate hike and a 5 percent advance in the number of shipments.

"There has been a softening in the trucking industry for about a year and we expect it to get worse before it gets better," he said.

Speaking of Your Health... The Promise of Interferon

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Interferon has captured the imagination, the hopes and the dreams of everyone who is involved in good health. Our entire social and economic existence depends on good health. It is a commodity we all take for granted until we are deprived of it. Then we concentrate on the return to good health only to take it for granted again until we are once more deprived of it. It is fitting that all of us should be excited about interferon. For it is a remarkable substance that holds tremendous potential for the control of disease.

the breast, multiple myeloma (a bone marrow cancer), and in the treatment and control of some cases of cancer of the lymphatic glands. Based on the work that is being done in Europe and in the United States, it can be said that interferon has made inroads into finding the eventual cure for cancer.

This remarkable protein may have wide applications in the treatment of the common cold, rabies, encephalitis, and a host of other diseases of viral origin. When such an important substance has been created everyone is impatient to see the direction of its application. It is believed that the clinical trials that are now in progress should take another four or five years for complete evaluation. By that time too the regulatory agencies, such as the Food and Drug Administration, will have completed their own study of safety requirements and allow interferon to be used by physicians everywhere.

Interferon, first discovered by British researchers Dr. Alick Isaacs and Dr. Jean Lindenmann in 1956, has opened vast horizons for the control and cure of diseases that heretofore defied treatment.

remarkable way. The protein stops the reproduction and spread of the virus. It is believed that there are four or more different types of interferon. It is expected that many new forms will be forthcoming as research continues. Up to now small amounts of interferon were available for research. Now the brilliant achievements of genetic engineering make it possible to manufacture interferon on bacteria rather than by using normal human cells. This means that larger quantities will be manufactured and that it will be easier to obtain without astronomical cost.

To date interferon is being tried in the treatment of hepatitis, herpes infections, and in some areas in the treatment of some types of cancer. Active research is underway using interferon against advanced cancers of

World's Leaders Join In Tributes To Josip Tito

By The Associated Press
The world's leaders joined in homage to President Josip Broz Tito of Yugoslavia today. But President Carter included a veiled warning to the Russians, Moscow took a back-handed swipe at the West and China sniped at the Soviets.

"America will continue its long-standing policy of support for Yugoslavia and do what it must to provide that support," said Carter, responding to speculation that the Kremlin might try force Yugoslavia back into the Soviet Bloc.

Carter also referred to Tito's successful defiance of Soviet dictator Josef Stalin in 1948, saying the Yugoslav leader was "a towering figure on the world stage

(who) faced many challenges but met them with a resolute determination to maintain Yugoslavia's independence and unity and its own unique approach to domestic and foreign policies."

On the other side, Moscow Television praised Tito for his "struggle against imperialism and colonialism." The Soviet leadership called him "the outstanding leader of the communists and all workers of Yugoslavia and a leading figure of the international communist and workers' movement" and said he "came out for the broad development of Yugoslav-Soviet relations."

A condolence message from Peking's leaders also praised Tito's defiance of Soviet domination, saying he contributed to the establishment of correct relations between Communist parties by insisting on the independence and equality of all of them. It also said he defended "Yugoslavia's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity."

China said its premier and Communist Party chairman, Hua Guofeng, would lead the Chinese delegation to the funeral in Belgrade Thursday.

U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim called Tito's death Sunday at the age of 87 "an irreparable loss to his own country and to the world. He was a true hero, and with his passing, the last of the great figures of our times has disappeared."

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who will lead Britain's delegation to the funeral, said Tito "was Britain's staunch ally in war, and our countries became firm friends in peace." Queen Elizabeth II called him "a great patriot and a man of outstanding courage and tenacity."

Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira said Tito's death was "an irrevocable loss to the world as well as to his country." He praised Tito for making "a significant contribution as the leader of Yugoslavia and the movement of nonaligned countries for decades."

Indian President N. Sanjiva Reddy said Tito was "not only a world leader of pre-eminence but also a co-enunciator of the principle of non-alignment." Tito, Jawaharlal Nehru of India and Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt founded the non-aligned movement.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat proclaimed seven days of mourning and said he and his country had lost "a dear friend and a comrade on the long road toward achieving justice and peace in the world."

Deny Sacrifice Of Standards

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In answering recent criticism, several ranking state officials say they haven't sacrificed environmental standards to attract new industry, and they cite the hiring of environmental experts as proof.

Gov. Jim Hunt and Howard Lee, secretary of the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, have drawn criticism recently from the Conservation Council of North Carolina, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Bob Scott and employees of Lee's department.

The critics contend Hunt and Lee have failed to monitor pollution in North Carolina's rivers and streams as stringently as they should.

Last fall, the department dropped six of 14 technicians who run the 345 water-monitoring stations across the state.

At that time, Lee warned Hunt the change might be criticized, but he said it would not affect the program.

Last week, Hunt told editors of two Winston-Salem newspapers that Lee had not provided strong leadership in the area of environmental management. The Winston-Salem Journal reported from its Raleigh bureau Sunday that Hunt explained the problem was due to Lee's lack of experience in that area.

But Hunt told the papers that the department has been strengthened by the hiring of two environmental experts.

Dr. E. Walton Jones of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was hired last year as Lee's deputy director. Soon after, the administration hired Dr. Neil Grigg from UNC's Water Resources Institute to direct the environmental management program.

Lee was not available for comment.

May Require 'Impact Study'

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials say Carolina Power & Light Co. may have to study the impact an oil refinery would have on the utility's Brunswick Nuclear Plant.

NRC officials said they would require CP&L to study the potential impact only if the refinery is granted all necessary permits.

The Brunswick Energy Corp. plans a 150,000-barrel-a-day refinery upstream from the nuclear plant.

CP&L's operating permit from the NRC does not consider the possible impact of an oil spill on the plant's ability to cool its steam plant with water from the Cape Fear River.

A Message For Cyclists

LINTHICUM, Md. (AP) — Motorcyclists across the nation will soon be getting a safety message from one of the best known of their own — Larry Wilcox, a highway cop on the television series "CHiPs."

Gilcox has been appointed 1980 chairman of the Motorcycle Safety Foundation's Wear-Your-Helmet Campaign by Charles Hartman, foundation president.

Wilcox will "spread the word" on a multi-state tour, and will also be featured in one of a series of posters and public service announcements being released to promote helmet wearing.
