Divers Still Seek Tampa Bay Victims

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — A huge floating crane sat ready today to pry apart more of the mangled wreckage beneath the Sunshine Skyway Bridge in a grim search for additional victims buried in the murky waters of Tampa Bay.

Divers found seven trapped bodies Sunday, bringing to 25 the number recovered since a freighter rammied the bridge Friday during a blinding morning squall, collapsing a 1,400-foot midsection. A Greyhound bus and a number of vehicles were pitched into the water 15-stories below.

A high priority for divers today was to scour the shipping channel for an occupied car they had tagged underwater but couldn't find later and for any others that might have fallen into the bay.

"There might be other vehicles down there, we just don't know," said Hillsborough County sheriff's spokesman Cal Henderson.

The death toll remains uncertain. Estimates varied since the accident occurred. The Coast Guard first reported as many as 90 may have died. Officials now say 30 is a good estimate.

Smashed remains of the bus, which carried 23 people, were hoisted from the pile of steel girders and chunks of concrete as salvage operations began Sunday.

Cables were hooked to the rear axle and as the bus was slowly lifted, two bodies floated free.

Underneath, divers found a car they didn't know was tangled in the twisted rubble. Two bodies were wedged inside the submerged vehicle, which had to be cut open after it was raised to a barge.

Two more bodies were discovered in another auto, and the seventh victim was at the bottom of the channel in 50 feet of water.

Eighteen bodies were recovered within hours after the accident, but 55 hours passed before crews could reach any of the other victims. Swift currents and a 40-foot section of bridge dangling overhead hampered efforts to pry loose the bodies seen trapped in the wreckage.

"I'm making no more estimates," Henderson said. "I've said all along everything we are giving is strictly an estimate. I wasn't there when the bridge fell."

The center span of the bridge gave way after it was rammed by the Summit Venture, a 609-foot phosphate freighter heading into port in a violent thunderstorm.

The Chicago-to-Miami bus came to rest upside down atop a pile of bent steel and chunks of concrete that plummeted to the water from the 15-mile-long bridge linking St. Petersburg and Terra Ceia along Florida's central Gulf Coast.

Bahaman Gunboat Sunk By Cuban Jets

NASSAU, Bahamas (AP) — Accusing Cuba of an "illegal and unprovoked" air attack on a gunboat and a terrifying flyover of a remote island town, the Bahamas today enlisted U.S. help in the search for four seamen believed killed in the incident.

The Bahamian National Security Council said it was protesting the Cuban actions "in the strongest terms," would consult the United Nations Security Council about taking action against Cuba and is demanding reparations to be named later.

The U.S. Coast Guard and Bahamian officials were to search today for four seamen missing and presumed dead in the waters just south of Cay San Domingo.

The Bahamian government said that on Saturday night, after the 103-foot gunboat Flamingo seized two Cuban fishing boats suspected of poaching in Bahamian waters, Cuban MIG jet fighters strafed and sank the gunboat.

Cuban officials reportedly said they thought the Royal Bahamas Defense Force gunboat was a pirate ship.

On Sunday morning, the government said, Cuban jets, a transport plane and a helicopter made simulated rocket runs just above the treetops of Duncan Town for several hours. The helicopter allegedly landed briefly.

Duncan Town is on Ragged Island, about 65 miles north of the eastern Cuba coast.

In Washington, the State Department issued a statement saying the initial reports indicated Cuba was guilty of a "gross violation of international law."

The Bahamian council, after a 12-hour meeting in Nassau, demanded assurance from Cuban officials "that, in future, the territorial integrity of the Bahamas will be respected."

Prime Minister Lyndon O. Pindling was rushing home from London after hearing about the incident, according to Deputy Prime Minister Arthur D. Hanna.

Bahamian Minister for External Affairs Paul Adderley said he had received a message, "purporting to have come from the Cuban government," that claimed Cuban officials believed the Flamingo was a pirate ship attacking the fishing vessels and kidnapping the crew.

"Flamingo was of classical naval design, was painted gray naval colors, was flying the Bahamian flag and bore other marks of identification that would clearly distinguish her as a government ship," the council protested.

The government gave this account:

The two Cuban fishing boats were seized 1 1/2 miles south of Cay San Domingo, a tiny island midway between Ragged Island and Cuba. Eight Cuban fishermen were arrested, the statement said.

The security council said the vessels were "within the undisputed territorial waters

One boat was towed, and defense force sailors took over the second for the trip back to Duncan Town, some 30 miles to the north.

Two Cuban MIG jets began firing machine guns at them, but turned back after a few minutes, the government said. No one was injured at that point, but the jets returned a short time later, firing what were believed to be rockets.

The Flamingo was hit and took on water rapidly. The crew abandoned ship and swam toward one of the Cuban fishing boats as the jets continued strafing the waters.

Four crewmen did not make it to the fishing boat.

The other crewmen cut loose the empty Cuban boat and headed for Duncan Town in the other Cuban fishing boat, arriving there safely early Sunday.

At about 9 a.m. Sunday, Cuban aircraft — two jets, reconnaissance planes and a helicopter — began flying low over Duncan Town. They terrorized the settlement for several hours, but there was no shooting.

The "sustained threats and hostile maneuvering" by the Cuban aircraft Sunday delayed two Bahamian government planes from leaving Ragged Island with 15 surviving Flamingo crewmen and the eight Cubans, the government said.

A few hours later, Commodore Bill Swinley, commander of the Defense Force, and Police Commissioner Salathiel Thompson flew to the scene. They returned to Nassau with the Flamingo crewmen and the eight Cubans. At that time, the skies were quiet.

Bahamas' Premier Claims Cover-Up

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Lyndon O. Pindling of the Bahamas today said Cuba's claim that its fighter pilots had mistaken a Bahamian gunboat for a pirate ship and attacked it was "a cover-up."

But Pindling accepted an apparent apology from Cuba for the Saturday night attack on the gunboat that left four Bahamian seamen missing and presumed dead.

He said the Castro regime would have to pay reparations.

The prime minister, returning to the Bahamas today from London where he has been attending a conference, said, "We have reason to believe that the Cubans have been rather nervous of late, and it could have been a very ghastly and costly mistake."

In an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp., Pindling said Cuba's nervousness could be traced to "the previously planned American (military) activities around the area and the refugees... that have been leaving Cuban shores heading for Florida over the last week or 10 days, combined with perhaps a number of other factors of which we are not yet aware."

He was told that a Cuban broadcast said "we sincerely lament the incident" if it was a Bahamian patrol boat.

"It would just be good sense and decency to accept that as an apology," Pindling said. "That is not to say that it would rest there."

The Bahamas will "have to seek proper reparations for the damage done" and compensation to the families of the four men killed in the attack, Pindling said.

"CIRCLE OF GOLD" IS ILLEGAL

Several of my friends have become involved with a "Circle of Gold" pyramid scheme in which they each invest $100 and add names to a list being circulated. They stand me down this is legal, that it's somehow different from usual chain letter deals, but I know it couldn't be and I hate to see them get into trouble and throw their money away this way. A.T.

Attorney General Rufus Edmisten said that the "Circle of Gold" is illegal because, as you said, it is a pyramid distribution scheme and violates North Carolina criminal law.

Edmisten said the scheme is reportedly being carried out in several areas of the state. He said it offers a 14-point statement to prospective participants which Edmisten said "leads people to believe that it is legal in North Carolina... it is not."

District attorneys, he said, are empowered to prosecute offenders of the law which states that participants are guilty of a misdemeanor and subject of a fine of up to $2000 or six months in prison or both.

Edmisten specifically noted that the scheme claims not to be a chain letter because it does not go through the mail. "Apparently they know chain letters are illegal," he said. "No matter how the scheme is passed around and no matter what they call it, or don't call it, the fact remains that it is a pyramid distribution scheme."

A pyramid distribution scheme is one in which participants pay for the opportunity to receive compensation when they introduce others into the program.

Edmisten also denounced the "Circle of Gold" claim that money received by participants is a non-taxable gift. "They're paying money with the expectation of making more," he said, "therefore, it is not a gift and certainly is taxable, even though it is illegally gained."

"We're telling everyone who calls the Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's Office the same thing," he said. "These schemes are illegal, to participate is a misdemeanor and the schemes should be reported immediately to the local district attorney's office."

CANCER INFO FEEDBACK

Responding to the Hotline published lastweek in which a reader said she wanted information on cancer of the colon, Mary Ann Gray, executive director of the local chapter of the American Cancer Society, said she can help. She can offer information, she said, on any kind of cancer. "My information is written for the layman and can be quite helpful," she said.

Mrs. Gray's office phone number is 756-9510 (hours—9 a. m. to 4 p. m. weekdays). The address is American Cancer Society, P. O. Box 377, Greenville, N. C. 27834.

City To Have Public Hearing

The city is inviting citizens interested in Greenville's 1980-81 revenue sharing program to attend a proposed use hearing on the appropriation of revenue sharing funds by the city and Sheppard Memorial Library.

The hearing will be conducted by City Manager Ed Wyatt at 8 p.m. on Monday, May 19 in the council chambers at city hall.

Wyatt said the major objectives of the hearing are to provide citizens with information on the nature and purpose of revenue sharing and to give citizens an opportunity to present their suggestions on the use of the funds first hand.

General revenue sharing is a federal program, first enacted in 1972, under which federal funds are distributed to state and local governments. Revenue sharing funds may be used, obligated, or appropriated for any purpose for which a recipient government may spend its own funds.

During the current fiscal year, revenue sharing funds were used to finance the resurfacing of some five miles of city streets, and for operating expenses for the city's public library system, public transportation system, and Recreation and Parks Department.

Wyatt reported that as a participating city in the federal program, Greenville expects to receive the following revenues in the 1980-81 fiscal year: allocation payments, $539,358; fund balance, $55,000; and interest on investments, $1,000; for an overall total of $595,358.

Libyan Group Holds Embassy

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — A group of 150 Libyans, most of them university students, took over the Libyan Embassy here today and formed a "people's committee" to handle its administration, police reported.

The group, chanting slogans hailing Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, declared that the embassy will now be called a "people's bureau."

The Libyan ambassador to Turkey, Saadedin Abushweh, said he had turned over his duties to a five-man committee chosen by the Libyan nationals in Ankara. The envoy said he would return to Tripoli.

A similar incident was reported in Vienna today. A caller who identified herself as an Austrian employed at the embassy told The Associated Press that members of a people's committee from Libya had taken over the embassy and transformed it into a People's Bureau.

"Everything happened suddenly. We ourselves do not know what happened. The old embassy staff was ordered to leave and the members of the people's committee took over," she said.

The takeovers appeared to be in line with the orders Khadafy issued last fall for takeovers of Libyan diplomatic missions elsewhere in the world.

BUDGET MEETING

The regular monthly meeting of the commission will be held at 7:30 p.m.

Non-Stop Balloon Trip Across North America Is Ended Safely Today

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer

MATANE, Quebec (AP) — Maxie Anderson and his son Kris landed the "Kitty Hawk" safely in a treetop near the St. Lawrence River in eastern Canada today, ending the first nonstop balloon flight across North America.

The balloon came in at 7:25 a.m. EDT on the wooded edge of a clearing six miles east of Matane in Quebec.

Both men were uninjured. They were unshaven, reddened by wind and looked tired.

Matane is about 285 miles northeast of Bangor, Maine, and about 1,100 miles north of the planned landing site in Kitty Hawk, N.C. Unexpected winds had carried the balloon far north of the plotted flight path for the last half of the 3,000-mile journey.

The Andersons left San Francisco early Thursday.

"Trying to get into the clearing was a problem," Max Anderson said of the landing. "The helicopter pilots helped us get out of the trees."

He apparently referred to Canadian armed forces helicopters who had been stationed in the area since early this morning to await the landing.

Maxie Anderson, in a navy blue parka and a green striped turtle-neck shirt, was ferried by helicopter to the airport at Matane, where he embraced his wife Patty. His son stayed with the balloon.

Asked what his next goal was, the elder Anderson replied, "I think I'm going to go home to bed."

Anderson, who won fame two years ago with two other men by becoming the first to cross the Atlantic in a balloon, said crossing the continent was tougher.

"In the Atlantic you just get up and go," he said. "There is no altitude problem."

Matane is on the Gaspé peninsula, near where the St. Lawrence meets the Atlantic Ocean.

Because of the hilly, wooded terrain of the area, Anderson, 45, and his son, 23, apparently considered landing in the river. But after dawn they decided they could make the clearing.

The Andersons had announced their landing plan in a radio message that was monitored aboard the plane taking Mrs. Anderson to the remote area.

Safety Awards Will Be Presented Here

N.C. Labor Commissioner John C. Brooks will present the Labor Department's annual award for outstanding safety achievement to employees and management of 48 firms at a dinner program here Tuesday evening.

The awards presentation is scheduled for 7 p.m. at the American Legion Building on St. Andrews Drive.

At the program, co-sponsored for the sixth consecutive year with the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce, the commissioner will honor representatives of businesses, governmental units and service establishments from Pitt, Beaufort, Edgecombe and Pamlico Counties.

Brooks will note particularly the achievement of Union Carbide Corp., Battery Products Division here, which earned the department's annual safety award for the 15th consecutive year.

The various recipients qualified for the 1979 award by maintaining a perfect safety record during the calendar year, or by recording an occupational injury incidence rate at least 50 percent below the statewide rate for their particular industry.

The Greenville dinner is the 12th in a series of 29 labor department safety awards presentations scheduled across the state this spring.

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I am puzzled by your continuing support of the Equal Rights Amendment. It is my understanding that this amendment is not necessary because women already are very well protected under the United States Constitution.

I am confused. Will you please explain in plain language why we need the ERA?

PROTECTED ENOUGH

DEAR PROTECTED: You may not be as "protected" as you think. You don't say in which state you live, but if your husband dies or leaves you, are you sure you'll be provided for? Even if you are protected in your state, millions of American women in other states are not, and I believe that all American women should have the same protection and equality that is guaranteed to men under the highest law in our nation.

Don't be deceived; as things stand today, they do not! The Constitution — as interpreted by the Supreme Court — does not give equal rights to women. If it did, we wouldn't have needed the 19th Amendment in order to gain the right to vote.

There are too many discriminatory laws on the books to cite them individually, but when Pennsylvania adopted the ERA, 300 state laws had to be rewritten in order to give women equal rights with men.

We need ERA so that all women will be protected regardless of where they live.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to DISAPPOINTED, who felt cheated because the bride couple didn't open their wedding gifts at the reception.

Gift giving should be a private, loving act between the givers and recipients — not a show for the benefit of others.

It is a strain for the newly married couple to stand for hours opening gift after gift, trying to show equal enthusiasm for those that are nothing to write home about as compared to the more expensive and impressive presents I vote for opening wedding gifts in private. If the newlyweds want to display their gifts later, fine, but they shouldn't make a public show of it.

PRIVATE PERSON

DEAR PERSON: I agree. And consider the feelings of those who shopped for hours to find an appropriate and imaginative gift, only to watch the bride unwrap the fourth toaster, third blender and a fifth Crockpot!

DEAR ABBY: I have had epilepsy all my life, but fortunately I am able to keep it completely under control with medication. Because so many people who travel depend on daily medication these days, I have a suggestion that might be helpful: Never pack all your medication in your luggage, and never carry it all in your purse.

I pack as much medication in my luggage as I'll need for the trip, and carry the same amount in my purse. I never carry it all in my purse; neither do I pack it all. Purse can be stolen and luggage can be lost.

P.L. IN SOUTHERN CAL.

DEAR P.L.: Thanks for a helpful travel tip. Many travelers will bless you for it — not to mention the airlines.

DEAR ABBY: DUMMY IN MUSCATINE, IOWA, wrote, "My husband asked me if I wanted to go back to his hometown for his 25th high school reunion. I didn't know anybody back there, so I told him to go without me. Well, he went alone and met his old high school sweetheart — a blonde bombshell — recently divorced. They picked up where they had left off and rekindled the old flame, and guess who's without a husband now? That's right . . ."

Abby, I wonder what would have happened if when the letter about the high school reunion came, the wife had said, "Honey, if you want me to go I will, but you know how shy and uncomfortable I am around strangers. Maybe you'd have more fun if I stayed home, then you could wander around, renew old acquaintances and reminisce with your buddies without having to worry about whether I was having a good time."

Then she could have pulled out the old suitcase, polished up the scuff marks, packed his best suit fresh from the cleaners, made sure he had clean shirts, socks and underwear, and packed some notes in the folds, like, "Have a great time. I love you." And if she then had sent him off after a warm and wild night of love with a smile, a kiss and a whispered, "Have a good time, but hurry home and remember I love you," I wonder how good that divorced blonde bombshell would have looked to him?

My husband and I have been married 32 years. We've been separated a few times, but every time he had to leave home, that's the way I sent him off. I may not be the firm young girl he married, but you can be sure I ain't no "Dummy in Muscatine."

PHYLLIS

DEAR PHYLLIS: Please give that lucky guy you're married to my regards, will you?

CONFIDENTIAL TO "STILL HURTING IN VICTORIA, TEXAS": All love affairs would be pain-free if both parties quit caring at the same time. But they never do, so be a big boy and don't whine, beg or crawl. It's over.

N.C. Student Loans Go For Abortions, Births

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Students in at least two North Carolina universities have been receiving loans from student-activity funds for abortions for the past 10 years, according to officials and students at the two schools.

Students at East Carolina University have been able to get low-interest loans for abortions since the early 1970s. Pregnant students who chose to keep their babies also have been able to get loans for maternity expenses. Abortion loans also have been available for the past 10 years to students at Duke University, a private college with ties to the United Methodist Church.

Duke students voted last month in a campus-wide referendum to create a separate loan fund to help with maternity expenses for students who choose not to terminate their pregnancies.

An abortion fund did exist at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro until about 1976, when the fund was discontinued because of protests by anti-abortion groups and state legislators.

Ashley Futrell, an ECU trustee and editor-publisher of the Washington Daily News, said, "I'd rather for it (the loan fund) not to be there."

But he added, "It's not a matter that the trustees ought to regulate, since it is student money. I think the better part of wisdom is to leave well enough alone."

At ECU, students can borrow up to $150 for six months from the Confidential Loan Fund, either for an abortion or to help with maternity expenses.

The fund at Duke was established about 1970 through a onetime appropriation of 73 cents out of each student's activity fee. Until last month, the fund was exclusively for abortion loans. But protests spurred the creation of the maternity-aid loan fund.

The abortion-loan funds at ECU and Duke were set up with activity fees paid by students or their parents or guardians, usually at the beginning of each semester. Student fees pay for such items as the college yearbook, operation of student government, admission to athletic contests and low-interest loans for various purposes.

Boating Plan Is Withdrawn

The Department of Energy has withdrawn the proposed emergency recreational boating restrictions from its standby federal emergency conservation plan.

The proposed restrictions would have prohibited the use of motor boats for recreation on one or both weekend days.

Officials of North American Fiberglass Corp, makers of Sea Ox boats, and Grady-White Boats Inc., makers of G-W boats, both located in Greenville, say the withdrawal of the proposed restrictions should have a positive effect on their business.

When the proposed ban was announced in February, officials said, sales tended to drop off.

Jeff Napier, president of the National Marine Manufacturers Association, which organized opposition to the Department of Energy proposal, said the defeat of the proposed ban, "shows how boating interests can organize to solve their problems."

Napier also noted, "We have established that national energy policy will not single out boating in times of energy shortage. We have established that boaters will get their proportionate share of fuel as a matter of government energy policy."

Emergency conservation measures remaining in the conservation plan include: strict enforcement and possible lowering of speed limits; an employer program for reducing commuter use of private vehicles; a proposed compressed workweek; an energy conservation public information program; non-residential building temperature restrictions; a minimum motor fuel purchase requirement; an odd-even motor fuel purchase requirement; and a proposed vehicle sticker program to prohibit use of vehicle on one or more days per week.

Six Die In N.C. Traffic

By The Associated Press
The state Highway Patrol reports six persons were killed on North Carolina streets and highways during the previous weekend, raising the death toll for 1980 to 446, compared to 522 at the same time last year.

A Buncombe County man was killed early Sunday when the car he was driving ran off a road and struck a tree. The victim was identified as Charles Michael Wilson, 24, of Arden.

The patrol reports two persons were killed Saturday night in separate accidents. Phyllis Sarita Chandler, 23, of Stokesdale, was killed in a head-on collision in Forsyth County, and Edward Clarence Hutchins, 24, of East Bend, died when the car in which he was a passenger ran off the road and struck a tree near Elkin.

Of the three deaths which occurred Friday night, two were in a Wake County accident. The patrol said 33-year-old Benny Edward Fort of Raleigh and 22-year-old Kerry John Morris of Wake Forest were killed in a head-on collision near Raleigh. Nine others were injured in the accident.

A 17-year-old youth died Friday night when her car ran off a road in Bladen County and overturned. Authorities identified the victim as Kimberly McNeil.

Two Attend Convention

The biennial convention of the League of Women Voters of the United States was held in Washington, D. C. last weekend, with Dr. Patricia Dunn and Katherine Adler attending from Greenville.

Dunn is president of the local League and Adler is human resources chairman for the North Carolina League.

President Jimmy Carter addressed the convention and held a question-and-answer period. Health care in the U. S. was chosen as the national study item for the next two years.

Adler will go to Washington again June 5-7 to attend the White House Conference on the Family. She will be one of two delegates from the N. C. LWV.

I wonder how many of you know the trick of knitting shoulder seams together instead of binding off and sewing them?

To achieve the proper slant of the shoulder sections when doing this, you need to use a technique known as "short rows."

For example, if you are instructed to bind off six stitches at the beginning of each knit row three times, you would instead work this way: assuming there are 18 stitches, work 12 stitches as usual on a purl row; then turn your work so that the knit side faces you; slip the first stitch from the left to the right needle and knit to the end of the row.

On the next row, work six stitches; turn and work as before, slipping the first stitch and knitting to end of row. Work one more row and then transfer the stitches to a stitchholder or strand of contrasting yarn.

If you were supposed to start your bind-offs on a purl row, you would reverse this procedure by starting your short rows on the knit side.

When you are ready to finish your shoulder seams, slip the stitches for each shoulder onto a separate needle and hold the two sections together with wrong sides out.

Now, insert the tip of a third needle into the first stitch on each of the other two needles and purl these two stitches off as one. You now have one stitch on the right hand needle. Repeat the above step.

As soon as you have two stitches on the right needle, you can bind one off over the other. Continue across the row in this manner, purling two together (one from each needle) and binding off one stitch at a time. When you come to the end of the row, you have a neatly finished shoulder seam.

This same method, without the short rows, can be used to join knitted squares such as you

Optical Topics

by Beecher Kirkley

The common occurrence of "glare" is an irritation to most everyone, whether driving into a sunset, or surveying the horizon on an overcast day at the beach. In each case, the eye must cope with ten times the amount of light that is necessary to see. Reflective surfaces, such as the ocean, absorb small amounts of light and reflect a greater proportion, instead of diffusing it. Light waves which vibrate horizontally are especially subject to this light filtering process known as "polarization". A pair of sunglasses with polarizing lenses can filter out glare, by eliminating the excess horizontal light waves. Enough vertical light waves get through to the eye to make seeing a less irritating experience.

Opportunity For Quality

East Carolina University officials have announced that a waiting list for freshman applicants seeking to enter next fall has been instituted.

The action was taken because the university already has far more applications that it can handle. Some 6,000 freshman applications had been received prior to May 5.

The flood of applications is an indication that the wide variety of programs the university now offers is attractive to a broad range of young people. The situation gives the university the opportunity to select new students with a full range of backgrounds and interests. That can be an important part of developing quality programs in the university.

Assessment Left To Future

It is apparent we aren't going to get a great deal of details on the aborted rescue mission which failed in an Iranian desert.

Defense Sec. Harold B. Brown has told even Congress that it won't get the full story on the raid, which, so far as we know, was to free the hostages from the Terhan U. S. embassy.

While we would like to know what was going on, it is not surprising that the military isn't willing to give details which might jeopardize future operations.

Someday the full story will be told, certainly long after the danger of the current situation has passed. It will be left to the historians of a future day to assess the appropriateness of the mission.

THIS AFTERNOON

End 12th Grade?

RALEIGH — A pair of startling, though thoughtful, suggestions from State Treasurer Harlan Boyles have drawn little public notice despite the considerable impact they would have on North Carolina's public schools.

Boyles suggests that the 12th grade of high school is no longer needed and could be eliminated at a considerable money savings and without hampering the education of young people.

He also proposes that serious attention needs to be given to the way in which local, state, and federal money is mixed in paying for the schools.

Underlying his recent remarks to a School Board Law Conference at the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill were his concerns for rapidly escalating costs, waste, and widespread public confusion over what the schools are doing, and who is paying the bill.

Boyles, in his position as state treasurer, also serves as a member of the State Board of Education, thereby gaining a close look at public school education and finances.

Wasted

There was a time when the 12th grade was essential to educate youngsters because so many did not go on to college. Now, those going to college are growing in numbers, and the state has a 58-campus Community College System which puts higher education at the disposal of every child, Boyles observed.

He questioned the duplication which currently exists between courses offered in the high schools and those in the community colleges. "I am not at all convinced that we have already made our system as cost-effective as it might be. In fact, I am absolutely certain that we can make some major, and worthwhile improvements which will not require more tax money. There is considerable scope for saving significant amounts of money."

There have been persistent complaints from legislators and others that high school students substantially complete their graduation requirements during the 11th grade and spend their final year taking optional courses or only a required course or two. The students in many school systems are allowed to leave the campus and spend their time as they please except for the light course schedule. Boyles echoes those concerns.

The savings in eliminating the 12th grade are obvious in terms of reduced expenses for classroom space, instructional personnel, transportation, books, supplies and equipment. Closer ties between the public schools and the community colleges would also be required.

On the subject of finances in the schools, Boyles said that firm lines need to be drawn between what local governments will pay and what the state will pay. Otherwise, he warned, there could be "complete loss of local decision-making authority."

Tell The Public

Also, there needs to be accurate and honest accounting to the public of what education is costing. "To ignore the public's desire to be informed carries with it the penalties of arbitrary action."

As things now stand, state officials and local officials quite often find themselves pointing fingers of blame at one another for wasteful or duplicative programs, particularly in the hiring of supervisory or administrative personnel, providing special education programs, devoting considerable teacher time to report writing and clerical duties, etc.

Boyles suggests that the counties take full responsibility for facilities and their maintenance and operation; transportation; general administration, telephone, travel, and insurance. The state should pay all teaching and instructional expenses including school administration, textbooks, and the cost of current local teacher supplements. State and federal together should pay for any equipment and construction needed to take care of mandated special education programs such as those for han-

(High Point Enterprise)

Many people may wonder why taxpayers' money is being used to move resort homes on the Outer banks. We do, too. What's worse, it's being done in the guise of saving money. But to our way of thinking, it's nothing more than spending good money to keep from losing bad.

At stake are two imperiled things: the summer homes of wealthy people who thoughtlessly built them too close to the sea, and the disastrous National Flood Insurance Program. Said program lost money — our tax dollars — in the amount of $422 million last year. Its administrators blame the weather.

Last year was a bad one for flooding in the United States, according to Frank Reilly, assistant administrator of the Federal Insurance Administration. The program pays policy holders whose property suffers the effects of flooding. But it goes farther and covers more natural catastrophes than that.

Enter 14 Dare County vacation houses damaged during the recent blizzard. All are located perilously close to the drink where they're subject to repeated beatings by Mother Nature. Apparently fed up, the Federal Insurance Administration has decided to move them back from the sea and place them on higher pilings.

The work will cost about $200,000, but estimates are that the government would have to pay about $1.8 million over the next two years in damage claims if they weren't moved. One of the banes of the insurance program has been repeat claims. Some property owners file claims every time their homes are damaged, which in some cases is often. So now the government will consider moving any insured home vulnerable to the fits of the elements. Homes would be moved to safer ground on the same lot, or, if there is no safer ground, to a different lot. The homeowner would have to buy the lot himself.

We don't argue that a one-time expense of a few thousand dollars per home comes out cheaper than continually rebuilding sea or wind-battered houses. But we aren't comfortable with the government's playing insurance agent, especially with our money on the line.

We don't like the idea of people building resort homes with little thought to the consequences of their locations, and we don't like public dollars being spent to correct private mistakes.

Disaster relief is fine — when it helps people turned out of their homes (their only homes) by floods, hurricanes or other catastrophes. But let's let the private insurance companies protect resort homes; and let's let the owners of those homes pay the consequences, in the form of high premiums, for building in harm's way.

The Federal Insurance Administration is playing a losing game against a relentless foe. It's time to pack it in and quit.

SPURIOUS SACRIFICES

Ancient religion largely consisted of offering up proper sacrifices at appointed times. But the Greeks had crafty ways by which they avoided the cost of overly expensive sacrifices.

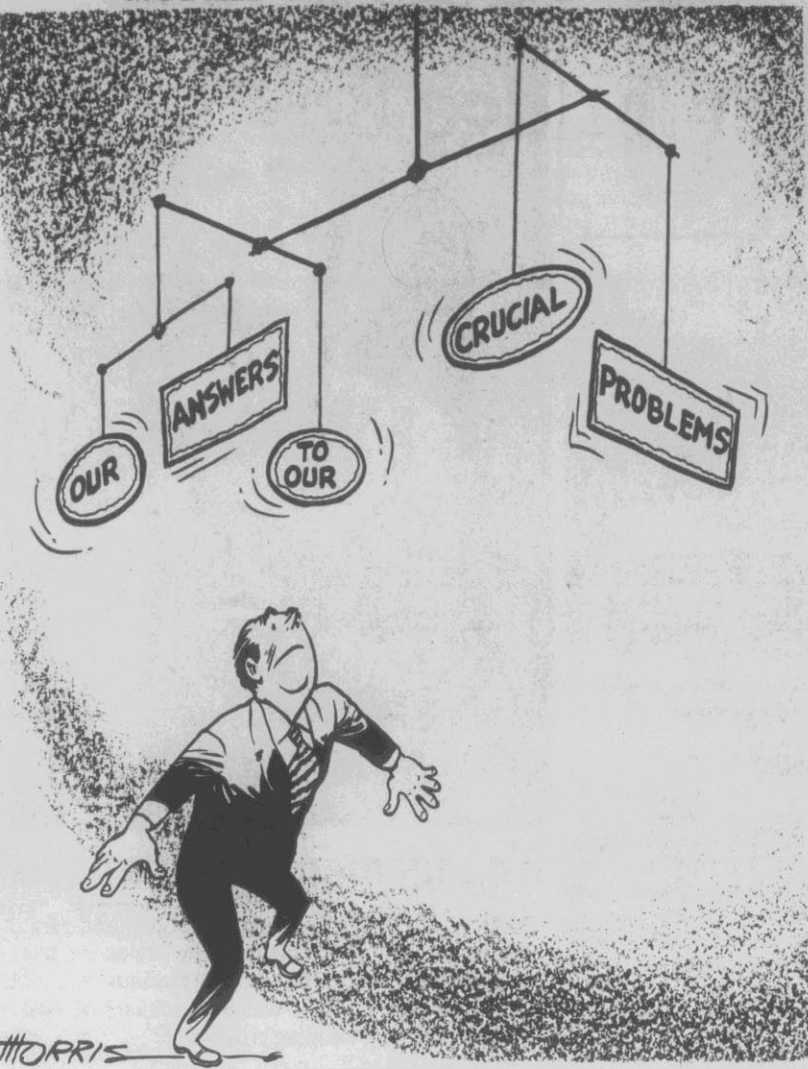

All grades of sacrificial animals could be purchased, but if one knew the right place to go, he could get a cut rate. If the animals had any defects, these could be doctored up in the temple so that the gods would not notice. For example, sacrificial animals were always supposed to be white. Cut rate animals were sometimes spotted, but these spots were easily chalked over.

Today we are amused at the strategies by which these ancient pagan Greeks tried to get away with spurious sacrifices. But actually many Christians are trying to do the same thing in their sacrifices to their own God. They may piously go to church, but they are not offering up to the Lord the kind of life which he demands. And they are much less likely to get away with it than the ancient Greeks and their spotted animals.

All But Out Of VP Slot

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — If Ronald Reagan sticks to the letter of what he is now saying, Sen. Howard Baker is eliminated as his running mate on the narrow grounds of the abortion issue alone — a decision of profound importance affecting much more than the vice presidency.

In a recent conversation aboard his campaign plane, Reagan was not at all evasive. He told us he "must pick someone who is seen as supportive" of him on key issues. That would not bar "minor disagreements." But Reagan does not consider abortion minor. And on that question, Baker's record is rated extremely good by the pro-abortion lobby and extremely bad by the anti-abortion lobby — exactly the opposite of Reagan's. If Reagan means what he says, eliminate Howard Baker.

There is no evidence so far of serious discussions about vice presidential selection between Reagan and his closest aides, whose preference for Baker is well-known though unofficial. They realize that a Reagan-Baker ticket would give Reagan instant respectability where he needs it most: the Republican National Committee, the U.S. Senate, corporate boardrooms and the Washington press corps.

Baker is the one obvious vice presidential possibility unacceptable to the right — particularly the New Right, the populist conservative movement that is linked with fundamentalist Christianity. But nobody really believes rank-and-file conservatives would desert Reagan if he selected Baker. Thus, rejecting Baker on ideological grounds not only would be viewed by many Republicans as an act of intransigent folly that portends the worst for a Reagan administration; it also might blight his chances for election.

Actually, Reagan's concern about Baker is not electoral slippage on the right but President Baker's performance as his possible successor. Whether or not this 69-year-old candidate has intimations of his own mortality, seldom has a prospective nominee insisted so often and so compellingly that his anointed successor strictly follow the course of the departed leader.

Although Baker's support of the Panama Canal treaties most outrages the right, that is the irrevocable past in Reagan's view. Contrary to published reports, Baker follows Reagan in backing Kemp-Roth tax reduction. He also shares Reagan's opposition to SALT II.

Other vice presidential possibilities are acceptable to the anti-abortion lobby — Sen. Richard Lugar and Rep. Jack Kemp definitely, George Bush marginally. It is the respected Senate minority leader alone who poses the dilemma for Reagan: Reject him for his stand on abortion, and be branded as a zealot; name him as running mate, and be condemned as a politician whose pledges can be ignored.

A Futile Option

By WALTER R. MEARS AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Changing the rules is the final, and usually futile option of the obvious loser at a national political convention.

It didn't work for Ronald Reagan in 1976; it didn't work for Hubert H. Humphrey in 1972; and it isn't likely to work in 1980, either.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's allies have talked of an attempt to change Democratic rules at the national convention so as to free all 3,331 delegates from their commitments to candidates.

Old-Fashioned Price-Cutting

By JOHN CUNNIFF AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Plenty of old-fashioned price-cutting will be showing up soon in retail markets as a result of the devastating plunge in sales over the past few months.

The falloff has been far worse than many people recognize, because most year-to-year sales figures being reported have not been adjusted for inflation. If they were, declines would be seen as much deeper.

The weakening also has been under way for longer than is generally recognized.

In real terms — with inflation removed — sales fell 2.7 percent in February and 2.4 percent in March, the steepest two-month decline in 29 years. April's figures were worse, and the trend continues in May. Buyer psychology, which through the past Christmas season was propped by the feeling that to buy immediately was to avoid even higher prices later, has now turned negative. Credit scares have depressed it more.

Interviews with retailing organizations reveal some customers were shocked by Federal Reserve credit restraints into reassessing their buying plans, while others were too confused to use their credit cards.

Sears, Roebuck felt compelled to take newspaper advertisements to remind old customers that their credit cards still could be used. A spokesman said, "People were coming to our stores and asking if their cards were canceled or whether they had been blackballed."

The company, whose credit sales amount to 57 percent of volume, said April to April sales declined 4.3 percent before being adjusted for inflation. The real decline probably reached a double-digit level.

Small businesses also are hurting badly. The National Small Business Association said its reports from members are grim. Responses to a survey included comments such as "disaster, business is dead, help is needed, I'm going out of business," said Robert Casey, a spokesman.

The inevitable outcome of the deteriorating retail markets is a spate of price-cutting in an attempt to lure back frightened, confused, and more demanding shoppers.

In fact, it has begun. Discount stores fared better than conventional outlets in April, and late reports indicate the trend continues. In some instances cash buyers are getting better deals than credit users.

Retailers hope, of course, that the downturn can be turned quickly, but that hope is fading by the day. Even Presidential aides, invariably optimistic, are hinting the downturn will be deeper than foreseen.

The challenge for many sellers thus becomes one of survival. The question they must decide is whether to maintain prices, let volume drop and hope to wait out the bad economic weather, or cut prices, take their losses and maintain volume. Either choice poses dangers.

FOCUS

Secretary of State

The recent nomination of Edmund Muskie to become secretary of state has focused attention on one of the federal government's most important jobs. The secretary of state is the highest ranking member of the president's Cabinet. He is the president's chief adviser about foreign relations. The secretary of state helps the president plan what action the United States should take in dealing with other countries. It's his responsibility to make sure those plans are carried out. Six of our country's presidents served as secretary of state before being elected to the White House. The secretary of state ranks fourth in the line of succession to the presidency.

Military Claim Control Of Uganda

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Rebel military officers led by Uganda's army chief of staff claimed control of the East African nation today but for the time being let President Godfrey Binaisa keep his title and the presidential residence where he was under the protection of Tanzanian troops. An aide claimed Binaisa was still exercising his presidential powers and was conferring with officials at his residence in Entebbe, on Lake Victoria 21 miles from Kampala, the capital.

A spokesman for the rebels led by Brig. David Oyite Ojok said the military commission of the Uganda National Liberation Front, the political coalition that named Binaisa president 11 months ago, "is in charge and in control of the security and stability of the whole nation." He said this meant Binaisa was no longer in charge of national security.

There was speculation Ojok was acting on behalf of former President Milton Obote, a close friend who has been living in exile in Tanzania since Idi Amin ousted him in 1971. Rumors have been circulating for weeks that Ojok, who is believed to command the personal loyalty of a large part of Uganda's 5,000-man army, was planning a coup to return Obote to power.

But Obote denied there was going to be a military coup or that he would accept an invitation from the army to take over.

"I'd rather go to the people," he said.

Obote said earlier he would return to Kampala from Tanzania on May 27 to run against Binaisa in the presidential election later this year.

The military commission appeared to be moving cautiously in its attempt to strip Binaisa of his powers. Some observers believed it was unsure of the reaction from the 10,000 Tanzanian troops who remain in Uganda after driving Amin out a year ago.

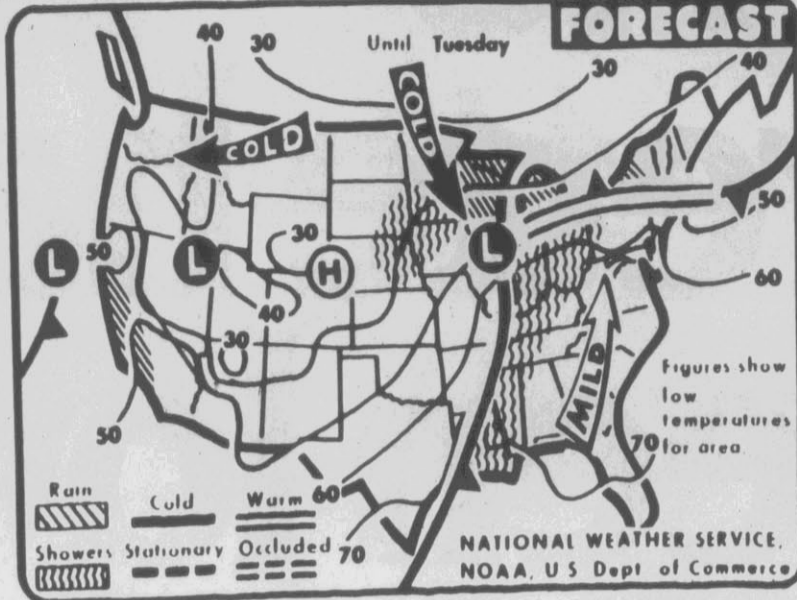

Binaisa, a lawyer who spent most of the Amin years in exile in the United States, received Tanzanian support when he succeeded Yusufo Lule, Uganda's first postwar president who was forced out in a power struggle between civilian and military factions after only two months in office. But Binaisa has failed to curb inflation, large-scale corruption and repeated waves of revenge killing and armed robbery.

Binaisa on Saturday fired Ojok as the No. 2 man in the army command, blaming him for military brutality to civilians, and named him ambassador to Algeria. But the military commission rejected the dismissal.

Binaisa's lines of communications to the people were cut on Sunday when Ojok's troops seized the government radio station in Kampala, barred the president from broadcasting and also took over the central postoffice.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Rain is forecast through early Tuesday for the Great Lakes region, changing to showers in the Great Plains and Midwest, with the precipitation running as far south as the Gulf Coast. Rain is also in store for part of California. (AP Laserphoto Map)

It will be windy and hot in the Tar Heel State today.

A slow-moving cold front over the Ohio River Valley along with a high-pressure ridge over the Southeast is producing a strong southwest flow of air over the state. This will bring gusty southwest winds and very warm temperatures to the state today.

But the cold front is expected to move closer to North Carolina tonight, bringing cloudy skies and a chance of rain by Tuesday.

Sunday was a sunny, warm day across the state. Asheville and Raleigh-Durham were the warmest spots in the state with 84 degrees. Cape Hatteras and Wilmington were the coolest with highs of 77 and 78 respectively.

Sunday night was mild, with lows mostly in the 50s in the west and 60s in the east.

With the exception of some scattered thundershowers in the mountains today, it will be hot and sunny across the state. Highs were expected to reach into the 80s in the west and 90s in the east.

unethical and crude politics.

That's about what Sen. George McGovern said when rivals tried, unsuccessfully, to rule away some of his delegate support at the Democratic convention eight years ago.

This time, Democratic delegates are more tightly bound than ever before to the commitments made in primary elections and party conventions. Eighty percent of the delegates at the New York City convention will have been delegates chosen as a result of primaries.

Robert S. Strauss, chairman of the Carter campaign, said Democrats spent 11 years working on party reforms to make certain the delegates reflect the voters, and aren't about to change the system.

With Carter closing in on a nominating majority and Kennedy far behind, a change in the rules that commit the delegates appears to be the only way to break the president's grip on renomination.

New York Gov. Hugh Carey has proposed that the candidates release all their delegates voluntarily, an idea the Carter camp called bizarre.

The convention itself would have to vote to erase delegate commitments. Strauss said it won't happen.

"The delegates are people who are worthy of trust, who believe in the president and who will stay hitched, not only on the platform but also on the rules," Strauss said. "These aren't a bunch of people I met somewhere in a beer hall."

The delegate commitments apply on the vote for a presidential nominee; they do not bind votes on issues such as rules and the platform.

So, in theory at least, a convention bound to vote for one candidate when the roll is called on nominations could vote against his interests on preliminary motions.

Some may, but it is not likely to reverse the course of a convention, particularly under rules that entitle the presidential candidates to say who they want representing them as committed delegates.

Rare Good Year For N.C. Cotton Crop Shaping Up

By WOODY UPCHURCH
NCSU
INFORMATION

ERWIN—Bobby Byrd, 45, is one of the die-hard cotton growers who have stuck with the crop through the lean years, and it's farmers like him who are in the best position to take advantage of what appears to be a good year for cotton in 1980.

"Things look a lot better going into this crop than they have for a while," said the Harnett County farmer who knows what it feels like to plant a crop that holds little promise of turning a profit.

"(Cotton) prices are holding up well," Byrd added. "If we can get an even break from the weather, this could be a pretty good year."

There have been precious few good years recently. North Carolina, one of the leading producing states through the first half of this century, has seen its cotton production industry virtually dismantled.

From a high of 1.8 million acres spread over about three-fourths of the 100 counties in the 1926 heyday of cotton, the old king of crops fell to an all-time low of 42,000 acres in 1978. Johnston County alone grew more cotton than that in 1942. The big Coastal Plain county is essentially out of cotton now. Its total acreage is less than 100.

Byrd's neighboring county of Harnett has done slightly better in holding on to a tiny part of its cotton heritage. Through families such as the Byrds, who "wouldn't feel like we were farming if we didn't have cotton," Harnett has maintained a small base which would allow it to take greater advantage of a promising year such as 1980.

"Farmers who have been out of cotton for a while are not in much of a position to get back in," pointed out Harold Lloyd, Harnett Agricultural Extension Service agent. "In most instances, they have sold off their equipment, and getting back in would require a very large investment. This isn't a good year to borrow much money."

Lloyd expects about 100 percent increase in the Harnett cotton acreage. Byrd, who grows tobacco, cotton, soybeans, corn and beef cattle with his brother Don and brother-in-law Mackie White, will plant close to 200 acres. The farm had an all time low of only 60 acres last year.

"Even with the increases, we'll still have less than 1,500 acres in the county," said Lloyd.

Alan York, extension cotton specialist at North Carolina State University, said farmer planting intentions indicate that the state will increase last year's 45,000 acres by 20 to 25 percent.

"We shouldn't give the impression that cotton is making a major comeback," York cautioned. "After all, 55,000 to 60,000 acres of cotton isn't very much when you consider what we once had. But the increase will be very important to individual farmers."

Byrd, for one, hopes so. Soybeans, the principal crop that has taken over much of the acreage that once was planted to cotton, are not looking very strong going into the crop year. Much the same is true for corn. And, tobacco, while it could earn a billion-dollar gross income, may have its net earnings severely eroded by high cost of credit, labor and production items.

"I'm glad we have stayed in a position to go with cotton when a promising year like this one comes along," said Byrd. "We've always grown cotton — as much as 300 acres one year — even when government programs offering payments for not growing it made the decision tough."

The government programs of the 1950s and 1960s, some of which were efforts to reduce supplies and strengthen prices, were contributors to the near-demise of cotton in North Carolina. But, the most important contributor may have been the small-farm nature of Tar Heel agriculture and the arrival of mechanized harvesting soon after World War II.

The harvesters required larger plantings than were grown on the state's multitude of small farms. The cotton acreage began to gravitate to those areas where the crop could be consolidated into larger plantings. The effect was to almost remove the crop from much of the heart of the Coastal Plain region and most of the Piedmont.

The major portion of the state's acreage now is in Scotland County, which has about 30 percent of the total. Other counties with surviving strong production bases include Halifax, Northampton, Edgecombe, Robeson, Sampson and Cleveland.

The other contributor to the decline of cotton in North Carolina — the one that received the most publicity — was the boll weevil. Hundreds of farmers gave up on the crop rather than fight the costly pest.

This insect hasn't been a major factor in North Carolina recently. A trail eradication program, now in its third year, has helped to drive the weevil out of most sections of North Carolina — the pilot area for the program. However, there are still serious insect pests of cotton, including the bollworm.

How profitable the 1980 crop will turn out to be for Byrd and his fellow Tar Heel cotton growers will depend on the market, the level of insect pressure and the growing season.

Byrd would like to do as well this year on his 150 to 200 acres as he did last year on 60 acres. The farm averaged 750 pounds of lint per acre in 1979, or about a half-bale an acre higher than the state average. If price trends continue strong, that '80 cotton would be worth a good bit more per pound than the '79 lint.

To a grower who has seen cotton priced in the 20 to 30-cent range, recent futures quotes for the current year's crop of 75 to 80 cents are encouraging.

Byrd said he would probably try to "lock in" a profit on part of this year's production by forward contracting. "It's a guessing game when you try to price your cotton," he said, "but I think it would be smart to contract some of the cotton when the price assures a reasonable profit and then take a chance on the rest of it."

The Harnett farmer isn't going to try to do any long-range forecasting about the continuation of the favorable situation for cotton. "We would like to think that things will be looking this good or better for years to come," he said, "but we'll take it one year at a time. I don't think lower prices would force us out of cotton, but it would affect how much we grow."

NCSU Specialist York said the long-term picture for cotton would continue to ride with such factors as its competitive position with synthetic fibers and the general condition of the economy. "Right now cotton is in its best position in years against the synthetics, and consumers seem to be 're-discovering' cotton. Foreign demand for our cotton has been a big plus, too."

If there is sustained strength in cotton, how will North Carolina farmers react?

"I want to be optimistic," said York, "but you have to be realistic. If you're talking about cotton ever returning to anything near what it was 30 years ago, I would say no,

I don't think we'll get there. But if you're talking about a gradual increase in acreage by those growers who have stayed in and by those who have only been out a short time, I would say yes — cotton could make a significant comeback in certain areas of the state."

Blame Bureaucracy For Lengthy Delay

HOLLY RIDGE, N.C. (AP) — Officials of Holly Ridge say bureaucracy is the reason why a new sewage system for the town, in the works for nine years, has still not been constructed.

While the town awaits a decision, residents continue to worry about periodic overloads of the sewage system and the resulting overflow that sends sewage-laden water into town streets. Holly Ridge Mayor A.P. Snodgrass said the town board was considering filing a lawsuit against state and federal agencies for allegedly frustrating attempts to clean up the town's sewage problem. Snodgrass claimed that while other and larger towns obtain the needed grants, "they just lay ours over to the side."

Snodgrass estimated it would take more than one-half million dollars for a new treatment facility and another $350,000 to upgrade existing sewer lines.

Page Benton, chief of the state environmental section of the Division of Environmental Management, said delays in approving improvements to the Holly Ridge system are due to changing regulations, financial considerations and legal problems.

But, he said, "It is their responsibility to clean up the water."

The town's present system was constructed in the 1940s when Holly Ridge was a bustling town because of a nearby World War II military base. The treatment facility cleaned sewage by passing it into a large concrete tank and over sand pits.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market and interest rates moved lower today, as some major banks cut their prime lending rate and the slide in stock prices entered its third day.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 3.58 to 802.22 in the first two hours of trading, as decliners outnumbered advancers by a 7-4 margin on the New York Stock Exchange.

Ameritrust, a Cleveland bank, cut its prime lending rate to 16 percent, and several banks, including Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. and Continental Illinois National Bank, cut their prime rates to 16 1/2 percent.

Auto stocks were strong, following the decision of a federal board to authorize $1.5 billion in loan guarantees for Chrysler, which climbed 3/8 to 7 3/4 and led the NYSE active list. General Motors rose 1/2 to 42 1/2, but Ford Motor was unchanged at 23.

Oil stocks continued to show weakness. Texaco was down 1 to 33, Mobil fell 1/4 to 65 1/4, and Standard Oil of California dropped 3/4 to 65 1/2.

Sears Roebuck was up 1/8 to 16 1/2, but other retailing stocks were weak. K Mart dropped 1/8 to 22 1/2 and Woolworth slipped 3/8 to 25.

Among active utilities, American Electric Power fell 1/8 to 18 1/2 and General Public Utilities, which was given a rate increase in Pennsylvania, rose 1/4 to 6 1/4.

CBS, which last week ousted its president and chief executive officer, John Backe, fell 3/4 to 42 1/4.

The NYSE composite index of common stocks fell .25 to 59.54 in the first two hours of trading, as Big Board volume totaled 12.13 million shares, compared to 14.35 million at the same point in the previous session.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index slipped 1.20 to 245.09.

Nashville Mayor Firm On Firemen's Walkout

By LES SEAGO
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Mayor Richard Fulton held firm today on the major issue keeping striking firefighters away from the bargaining table and on the picket line. "Amnesty completely is out of the question," Fulton aide Rich Riebeling told reporters. Federal mediators stepped into the dispute Sunday, but face-to-face bargaining has not resumed between the strikers and the city. Riebeling, in a Metro Courthouse briefing for reporters, made his comment after a lawyer representing the Metropolitan Firefighters Association said the firefighters want to meet with city negotiators and try to end the four-day-old strike.

The lawyer, Cecil Branstetter, said the firefighters were prepared to scale their wage demands down and the new figure would be "nowhere in the neighborhood" of the 28 percent increase which the union demanded earlier.

He said, however, the union would insist on amnesty — freedom from discipline, job loss or loss of seniority because of the strike.

"Money has never been the real issue," Riebeling said. "It is apparent by the conduct of union leadership that the goal of this strike was to establish the precedent that such action could be called with impunity... The choice is clear. We can deal with it now or we can expect to deal with it again and again in the future."

The firefighters are paid $908 to $1,277 per month. Strikes by public employees are illegal under state law, which does not authorize collective bargaining by unions or employee associations.

Federal mediators shuttled between Fulton's and Branstetter's offices late Sunday, trying to reach a settlement. Fulton declined to discuss the progress of the mediation effort as he emerged from one of the sessions.

Union president Doug Horn ordered his men to lay down their picket signs and take off their red, strike-embazoned T-shirts Sunday afternoon as a show of good faith. But shortly after midnight, picketing resumed and the firemen carried their "on strike" signs at the city's 34 fire halls today.

Court Martial Resumes Today

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — An army investigator continued his testimony today in the murder trial of Pfc. Alvin Williams, causing a delay in court-martial proceedings in the case.

Williams is charged with murder in the parachute death of Capt. Lawrence Hill. Hill was killed when his parachute, which had a severed line, failed to open on a jump on March 26.

The investigator, David Miller, testified earlier that Williams, a parachute rigger, admitted he sabotaged a parachute out of frustration with his job.

Court-martial proceedings had been scheduled to get under way at 9 a.m. today. Final arguments were also scheduled to be heard today.

Miller testified that Williams "seemed happy that he made the statement that he had deliberately cut the static line of a parachute."

Miller, said Williams, 20, "seemed happy that he made the statement that he had deliberately cut the static line of a parachute."

Defense motions to bar Miller's testimony may delay the proceedings. Final arguments on the defense motions also were scheduled for today.

Miller said he interviewed Williams during a four-hour period at Fort Bragg on March 31. Miller, an agent with the Army's Criminal Investigation Division, is also a polygraph examiner based at Fort Meade, Md.

During cross-examination Saturday, Miller said he looked at polygraph charts in front of Williams prior to the alleged confession. He said he told Williams that the charts indicated Williams knew he had cut the static line.

Army prosecutors had called Miller to testify despite defense motions that his statement be barred from Williams' court-martial.

If convicted, Williams faces life imprisonment.

Descended, Arraigned

NEW YORK (AP) — Two men have descended from their perch on the Statue of Liberty where they stayed for 24 hours, authorities said.

The climbers — Edwin Drummond, 35, and Stephen Rutherford, 31 — who spent a chilly night in sleeping bags in a fold of the statue's metal robes, were to be arraigned today in Manhattan federal court on charges of criminal trespass and damaging government property.

A third man, David Flatley, 35, who remained on the ground handing out leaflets, will also be arraigned in court on charges of littering government property.

National Park Service officials initially estimated that the climbers had caused $80,000 damage to the national monument, but an inspection Sunday showed that it was not that extensive.

"We've done some initial examinations and we're relieved that the damage does not appear as serious as we thought," said David L. Moffitt, superintendent of the Statue of Liberty National Monument.

Earlier, Moffitt had claimed that the pair drove metal spikes into the statue's penny-thin copper skin. But Drummond, an experienced climber, had maintained that only large suction cups and ropes were used to scale the first lady of New York Harbor's weathered green structure.

Calling themselves members of the San Francisco-based Committee for the Defense of Elmer "Geronimo" Pratt, the two men began their vigil at 10 a.m. Saturday.

Two hours after they began their climb, they rested in the crook of Liberty's knee and unfurled a white-and-red banner reading, "Liberty was framed — free Geronimo Pratt."

The FBI said Pratt, 37, is a former Black Panther serving a life sentence at San Quentin for the 1969 fatal shooting of a Santa Monica woman during a tennis court holdup.

Factory Plans June Layoffs

ANDERSON, S.C. (AP) — Owens-Corning Fiberglass Co. will lay off 300 workers next month when it shuts down one of its three Anderson plants, company officials said.

Personnel Director Jim Burch said on Sunday that Factory D, which produces Fiberglass reinforcements for cars, will close June 2 because of declining car sales and the sluggish economy.

Burch said the factory will remain closed until economic conditions improve.

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — France and Saudi defense ministers on Sunday signed an agreement for France to provide the Saudi navy with equipment, its nature undisclosed, Riyadh Radio reports.

Charged In Drug Probe

LENIOR, N.C. (AP) — James Lee Norwood III, Burke County administrator of Blue Ridge Community Action, was charged Sunday night with possession with intent to sell and deliver marijuana and felonious possession of marijuana, a Caldwell County Sheriff's Department spokesman said today.

Norwood, who was released on $10,000 bond, was scheduled for his first court appearance today, spokesman Marshall Clontz said.

Sheriff's deputies searched Norwood's home late Sunday night and confiscated about 10 pounds of marijuana and some white powder after Norwood allegedly sold a small amount of marijuana to an undercover deputy, Clontz said.

He said charges in connection with the white powder, which is believed to be cocaine, were pending a lab report from the State Bureau of Investigation in Swannanoa, where the substance had been sent.

The value of the drugs were estimated at $9,000, Clontz said.

Norwood administers the CETA program for Burke and Caldwell counties under the Council of Government Region E.

Will Seek Wild People

HONG KONG (AP) — A "crack team of scientific investigators" will investigate reports of wild human beings roaming the mountains in northwestern Hubei Province in central China, it was reported today.

The reports of "yeren" — as the wild human beings or savages are called — have aroused considerable interest among Chinese scientists.

A government radio broadcast said the scientific investigators will be dispatched in late May to the mountain areas in Shennongjia and Fang counties where the sighting of "yeren" had been reported.

A translation of Wednesday's broadcast, made available in Hong Kong today, did not describe the creatures but said previous surveys of the areas resulted in the discovery of "invaluable hair, excrement and footprints left behind by savages."

It said these surveys, which started in 1974, also studied the geological conditions, climate and ecological environment in which plants and animals live in the areas.

Reports Oil In Uneasy Uganda

By ARTHUR GAVSHON
AP Diplomatic Correspondent

LONDON (AP) — A former United Nations official said today he has evidence of a major oil find in troubled Uganda and claimed "Mideastern interests" tried to get him to suppress it.

George Ivan Smith, who was special representative in Africa of two U.N. secretaries general, Dag Hammarskjöld and U Thant, said in an interview he discovered documents showing the existence of highly promising oil deposits near Lake Albert.

Former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin initiated talks with British and American firms to develop those resources in 1972, but Libyan strongman Moammar Khadafy intervened and blocked any prospective deals, Ivan Smith said.

Ivan Smith, an Australian who has had access to Amin's private papers in Uganda's capital, Kampala, plans to publish a book next month on how Khadafy persuaded Amin to abandon ties with Britain and Israel and embrace Libya as an ally.

In the book, "The Ghosts of Kampala," he describes Amin's 1971 trip to a region about 150 miles northwest of Kampala where pools of oil had surfaced through old drill holes.

"Amin found a tin, filled it with oil, then poured it over his head and uniform in excitement, believing he had found a way of extricating Uganda from its economic problems," Ivan Smith quotes an informant who said he was in Amin's entourage as saying.

Ivan Smith said Kirkwall Associates, a British company headed by Rear Adm. David Kirk, had told Amin earlier that year that there was positive evidence of oil deposits in the area.

The retired U.N. envoy said he found among Amin's papers a draft agreement under Amin's name, dated Dec. 6, 1971, giving the sole concession to develop the oil deposits to Kirkwall Associates.

He said in February 1972 Amin arranged to meet with an oil drilling firm, Bown and Collins, in West Germany. Before the meeting could take place, Ivan Smith continued, Khadafy called Amin in West Germany and urged him not to conclude any deal before seeing him.

Amin stopped in Tripoli on his way home and on Feb. 13, 1972, issued a communique abandoning cooperation with the British and Israelis and agreeing to cooperate with Libya.

Expects Learn Leak Sources

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — U.S. Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti says he expects to learn by early summer who leaked information to the press about the Abscam and Brilab investigations in which members of Congress and state government allegedly took bribes offered by undercover agents.

"There has been a very substantial investigation in the last two months — directed exclusively at the source and not at all the recipient of the information," he said before receiving an honorary degree at Tulane University Sunday.

Civiletti said he expects more undercover probes of public corruption.

76ers Triumph

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Every once in awhile, Darryl Dawkins breaks loose and gives a glimpse of just how good he can be. And those moments are awesome, "Chocolate Thunder" at his roaring, most fearsome best.

Dawkins picked a most opportune time for one of his sprees Sunday, scoring four baskets and blocking a shot by Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in a span of 2:06 of the third quarter as the Philadelphia 76ers rallied to beat the Lakers 105-102 and even the National Basketball Association championship series at two victories apiece.

Game Five will be played in Los Angeles Wednesday night, with the sixth game back here Friday night.

"We were struggling, but Double D did the job," Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham said of Dawkins, the 6-foot-11, 252-pounder who is in his fifth pro season at the tender age of 23. "He showed me how badly he wants to win and how he is willing to work for it."

"The turning point of the game was when Darryl became effective inside," said Sixers' forward Julius Erving. "We struggled until Darryl became the dominant force on the floor."

Rookie Earvin "Magic" Johnson's three-point play had given Los Angeles a 67-61 lead with 5:50 to go in the third quarter, and the Lakers seemed well on their way to a sweep of the weekend games here — they won 111-101 Saturday — and a 3-1 edge in the series. And as Cunningham said, "Going to L.A. down 3-1 would put us in a very precarious position."

Then Dawkins took over. Twice he got the ball in the low post and scored layups past Abdul-Jabbar. Then, as the Lakers' center wheeled toward the basket on a drive, Dawkins raced over and batted the ball away. That led to a fastbreak basket by Maurice Cheeks that tied the score 67-67.

Johnson hit a jumper for Los Angeles, but Dawkins responded with one of his most emphatic dunks. And after Johnson made one of two free throws, Dawkins hit a 15-foot jumper to put Philadelphia ahead to stay 71-70. "I knew Jim Chones (the Laker forward who was trying futilely to guard Dawkins) had four fouls and I could take it to him," said Dawkins. "It was play me or foul me, and either one was fine with me."

"My mother came up from Florida for the game today," added Dawkins. "She's the president of the 'Chocolate Thunder Fan Club.' She likes to win as much as I do, and this made a nice Mother's Day present for her."

But some fourth-quarter heroics by Erving were needed before she could celebrate.

Erving, who sat out the latter part of the third quarter when Philadelphia went on a 20-9 tear to lead 81-76, scored 10 points in the final 7:36 to keep the 76ers on top after Los Angeles twice pulled to within one. "I saw some things on the floor," said Erving, "and when I returned to the game, I took advantage of those openings. You play to daylight — sometimes it's there and you take it."

The Sixers frequently isolated Erving on one side of the floor in an effort to isolate him against one defender and offset Los Angeles' double-teaming tactics. The Lakers were called for a zone defense on the first play of the game, but nevertheless stuck to their strategy.

Cain Resigns As ECU AD

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor
Bill Cain, athletic director at East Carolina University for the past five years, announced his expected resignation from that position this morning.

In a prepared statement, Cain said that he would be accepting a position in the university's Department of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Safety.

The resignation was rumored Friday afternoon following the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the University, where it was reported that the board had asked for it. This morning, however, Dr. Brewer denied that the board, or he, had asked for the resignation. "There is no truth to that whatsoever," he said. "(Cain) resigned of his own volition."

Brewer praised Cain for his loyalty and dedication to East Carolina, which he said was "unsurpassed by any son or daughter in the history of the university."

"His hard work has contributed mightily to the growth of East Carolina athletics from a small, struggling program to one moving toward national recognition. Every alumnus and friend of ECU owes Bill Cain a debt of gratitude which can never be repaid."

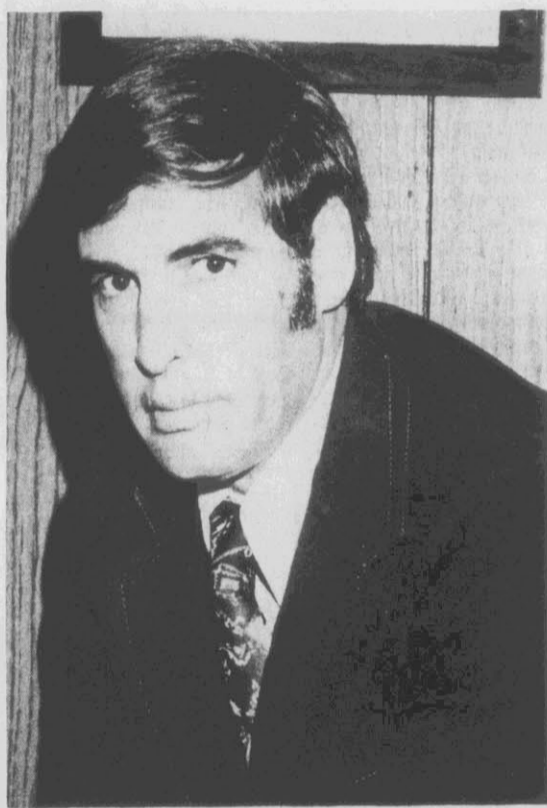

Cain, who was named to the post of athletic director on November 1, 1975, just a week following the death of then athletic director Clarence Stasavich, first came to East Carolina as a student athlete. He served a captain of the 1959 football team, and was twice all-Conference.

Following coaching positions in Suffolk, Va., and Albemarle, N.C., Cain returned to East Carolina in 1968, serving as freshman football coach. He later became business manager of athletics and head of the Pirate Club, moving up to assistant athletic director in 1972. He held that position until taking over the head job three years later.

A Rockingham native, Cain earned both his B.S. and M.S. degrees at East Carolina.

No date was set for the resignation to take effect, but it was believed that Cain's tenure would officially end on June 30, the end of the fiscal year.

Brewer also announced that a search committee, with the chancellor serving as chairman, would be named later in the week. Applications and nominations will be accepted until June 9, at which time the committee will begin screening applicants.

Watson Wins Again

DALLAS (AP) — They called it incredible and ironic, ho-hum and high drama. It probably was some of each.

Whatever, Tom Watson's victory Sunday in the $300,000 Byron Nelson Golf classic propelled the fairway financier toward the richest jackpot in the history of a game he now dominates.

"Just four more rounds," he grinned. "I'm looking ahead now to that $200,000 bonus."

Watson, 30, conquered bumpy greens, blustery winds and two serious challenges and swept to a 1-shot, $54,000 triumph that sent PGA officials scurrying for the record book.

The Nelson verdict was his third straight victory and fifth of the year and sends him into the $300,000 Colonial National Invitation at nearby Fort Worth with a monumental incentive. It's called the "Texas Bonanza."

Sponsors of the Nelson and Colonial put up $200,000 in bonus prize money for any golfer who could win the back-to-back tournaments. Watson narrowed the list of potential winners to one.

"I've never won three in a row before," he said after his third straight. Then, with a smile, he added, "I've never won four in a row either."

Watson closed the rain-delayed, 36-hole finale Sunday with rounds of 69 and 71 for a 72-hole total of 274 over the 6,993-yard, par 70 Preston Trail course.

The 6-under-par effort, triggered by a spectacular 64 on Friday, was a stroke ahead of Bill Rogers, whose closing 70-67 earned him $32,400.

Rogers, who lost to Watson in a playoff here last year, spoke not in anger but in awe when he pointed out that Watson has led or shared the lead in his last 12 rounds of competitive golf.

Today, the reign of Bill Cain as athletic director at East Carolina University came to an end.

There are many who are glad to see him go. But there are just as many who are unhappy about it. There are a number who respect Cain, too.

Personally, we are among the latter. We backed Bill Cain when he was named as the athletic director at the death of Clarence Stasavich. He has guided the university through some hard times, and times of great growth.

Certainly he had problems. No man in such a position wouldn't. Some of them he was able to overcome. Some he wasn't.

Still, no matter what, we believe that Bill Cain had East Carolina's best interests at heart. He did his best for the school, and he worked hard for it.

During his tenure, he led the school through the difficult affair with former basketball coach Larry Gillman. There are those who claim that Cain was at fault in this, and perhaps he does share the guilt. But Gillman was largely forced not only on him, but former chancellor Leo Jenkins too, by outside money. Certainly he did try his best to rid the school of Gillman after one year, but was rebuffed by Jenkins. Few have given him the credit he deserves for that effort. Paying off Gillman's salary helped contribute to the financial deficit that help lead to Cain's resignation.

One of the biggest gripes we heard from Cain's detractors was that he didn't have the contacts to bring in the people the fans wanted to see play in Greenville. In fact, it is going to be very hard for anyone to bring in the kind of teams the fans say they want to see. It is difficult now even to get games with teams on a par with the Pirates. Look at North Carolina: they want out; Wake has refused to play more games. And the Duke series is in question for the future. And these are the teams that people want to see in Greenville.

Getting teams to come to Greenville, too, has been difficult since so many are scheduled for so many years in advance. Even those would who be willing don't have dates until far in the future. East Carolina has been in a position to offer the kind of guarantees it takes to get those teams only for the past few years, since stadium expansion (under Cain's direction) was completed.

Many of the problems Cain has had to face were not of his own making. Inflation certainly has hurt the athletic program, helping to cause the deficit. Title IX brought on added budget problems, without adding vital resources. Added expenses incurred in hiring new coaches also add up. The lack of a television game, plus declining attendance at football and basketball games did not help either as projections were not met during the past year.

Those against Cain site the lack of an attractive schedule in the declined attendance. But who do you come to see? East Carolina or an opponent?

We believe that Bill Cain has served East Carolina well. He didn't make everyone happy, but neither will the man who replaces him. It doesn't go with the job. Perhaps five or so years down the road, people will be able to give Cain the credit he deserves for his services to East Carolina.

We wish his successor well. He's going to need all the help he can get and it would be good if the Pirate fans would give it to him and avoid criticism for a while. It isn't going to be an easy period ahead for the new man.

Gerulaitis Overcomes McEnroe

NEW YORK (AP) — He didn't let the poor court conditions bother him. He ignored the pelting raindrops. He blocked out the security guards who followed him around the West Side Tennis Club all week and overlooked the fact his opponent was the top seed and No. 2 player in the world.

Vitas Gerulaitis simply went out on the stadium court at Forest Hills and gave his mom a special Mother's Day present ... and gave himself a $100,000 gift: the title in the World Championship Tennis Tournament of Champions.

Gerulaitis dropped the opening set 2-6 with some tentative play before blitzing John McEnroe 6-2, 6-0 Sunday to win the $500,000 event that pitted only tournament winners in the past 12 months. It was his third consecutive victory over McEnroe, who last beat Gerulaitis in the finals of the U.S. Open last September.

"Last year, he caught me twice and shook me up," said Gerulaitis of McEnroe, who grew up in the New York borough of Queens, as did Vitas. "At the Masters (in January in Madison Square Garden), I beat him on his favorite court and things fell into place for me."

The HarTru clay court at Forest Hills couldn't have been anyone's favorite surface during the finals. The rain that fell throughout the week softened the courts and, on Sunday, in still more rain, the surface was barely playable. Obviously, it bothered McEnroe a lot more: he seemed to lose concentration early in the second set and Gerulaitis broke him the last six times McEnroe served.

"He wasn't trying to serve hard, the balls were so heavy," said Gerulaitis, currently ranked fifth in the world and headed to Rome to defend his Italian Open title in two weeks. "It wasn't the greatest conditions. On any other surface, we definitely couldn't have played. It was really slippery. But with TV, it would have put a damper on the whole occasion if we hadn't played."

"I never played in rain like that in the States. In Europe, they make you play all the time."

"We both could have walked off the court, and let the people boo, I guess," said McEnroe. "But life isn't like that."

Gerulaitis heads into the European tour with a great deal of confidence after his performance at Forest Hills. He played five tiebreakers in five matches and won them all. He beat John Sadri, Peter McNamara of Australia, Balazs Taroczy of Hungary and Vijay Amritraj of India before dominating McEnroe.

Rams Win 14th In ECC

SNOW HILL — Greene Central moved within two games of a perfect season in the Eastern Carolina Conference Saturday night, as it gained a 10-7 baseball victory over Charles B. Aycock.

Greene Central has to complete a protested game and then play a regular game against Ayden-Grifton on Tuesday, and only the Chargers stand in the way of a perfect 16-0 mark in the league for the Rams.

Aycock grabbed the lead in the first inning, scoring twice. They added two more in the top of the third, but the Rams came to life after that.

In the bottom of the third, Greene Central pushed over six runs to take a 6-4 lead. Ken Johnson walked and so did Greg Holmes. They scored when Al Murray cracked a home run.

Donald Shaw singled to keep things going, and Walt Tyndall reached on a fielder's choice. Jeff Scott walked, and Tyndall scored on Chip Hardy's sacrifice fly. Robin Bowen then brought in two more runs with a single, after both had advanced on a wild pitch.

After scoring again in the fourth, the Rams put the game away with three more in the fifth. Scott singled and stole second, scoring on Hardy's single. Johnson walked and Jabo Fulghum doubled in the final two runs.

Turner, Satterfield and Taltou each had two hits for Aycock, while Murray had two to pace Greene Central.

Now 14-0 in the league and 18-3 overall, the Rams will represent the conference in the State 3-A playoffs, starting next week.

Higgins Grabs Atlanta LPGA

ATLANTA (AP) — Pam Higgins, hampered by tennisitis in both elbows a year ago, cashed in the first five-figure check of her 12-year career on the women's pro golf tour Sunday, and vowed to give much of it away.

"You can always get money, but you can't always win," Higgins said after her wire-to-wire victory in the $100,000 Atlanta Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Higgins finished with a 70 on the hilly 6,270-yard, par 73 Brookfield West Country Club course, giving her an 11-under 208 total that produced a 3-shot triumph over the charging Donna Caponi Young and Amy Alcott, who started the final round deadlocked with the eventual champion.

"It's the first five-figure check I've ever made," she said of the $15,000 first place money. "But I'm going to give most of it away anyway. I'll give some to charity and I've got to pay my caddy, but I'll still keep some of it, too."

'Princess' Film Under Pressures

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Is "Death of a Princess" "a completely false picture of the life, religion, customs and traditions of Saudi Arabia," as that country's government claims, or is the film "a sensitive and thoughtful exploration of the Arab dilemma," as its producers maintain?

The Public Broadcasting Service insists the right to answer that question belongs to the viewer and will show "Death of a Princess" tonight despite pressure from the State Department and one of the system's major underwriters, the Mobil Corp.

One consequence already is clear: "Death of a Princess" has affected this country's relations with a foreign government like no previous television production.

The PBS broadcast is scheduled for 8 p.m. EDT, though air date and time for the two-hour film may vary. PBS will follow "Death of a Princess" with a six-minute documentary on the controversy, as well as an hour-long panel discussion on the issues raised by the film.

Here is a viewer's guide to "Death of a Princess":

THE STORY — Saudi Arabian Princess Mish'al and her commoner lover were publicly executed July 15, 1977, in a parking lot in Jidda. The 19-year-old princess was shot to death and her companion hacked with a sword.

They had been accused of adultery, and the execution was ordered by the princess' grandfather, a powerful member of the royal family. The princess was given an opportunity to deny the adultery, but refused to do so.

THE FILM — British filmmaker Antony Thomas learned of the execution four months later, during a casual after-dinner conversation. He was intrigued, and initially considered a dramatization based on the execution.

After several months' work in England and the Middle East, Thomas decided to produce instead a film detailing his search for facts behind the sensational story.

The film has been called a "docu-drama." The film's producers use the term "nonfiction movie."

THE POLITICS — Saudi Arabia expelled Britain's ambassador after the film was broadcast in England April 10. As the date for the PBS presentation approached, the Saudis expressed their concern in a letter to Warren Christopher, the acting acting secretary of state.

Christopher passed the communication on to Lawrence K. Grossman, PBS' president, urging the non-commercial, government-supported network "give appropriate consideration to the sensitive religious and cultural issues involved..."

THE CONTROVERSY — The Saudi letter to the State Department described "Death of a Princess" as "disparaging to the Muslim religion" and "offensive, not only to Saudi Arabia but to the entire Islamic world."

The film does not mention Saudi Arabia by name.

It does question the position of women in Arab society.

Never Got To Give Address

KEENE, N.H. (AP) — Barbara Seelye, new president of Keene State College, never got to deliver the commencement address.

After the nearly 600 degrees were awarded Sunday, Mrs. Seelye began to deliver her speech and the sky opened up to rain.

She told the 3,000 people to go home. "I'll have this printed and sent to you," she said.

One college official commented that she made many friends.

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10762 ♥AJ93 ♦Q ♣AQ97

The bidding has proceeded:
East South West North
1 ♠ Pass 1 ♥ 2 ♦ 2 ♣ ?

What action do you take?
A.—We don't blame you if you think you are playing with a pinochle deck. The only explanation is that West made a very light one heart response, because your partner surely isn't fooling around with a vulnerable two-level overcall. Since you have all the opponents' suits well in hand, double. If partner is unbalanced and can't stand the double, don't worry. Your singleton diamond honor and wealth of other prime values offer him a comfortable margin of safety.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A954 ♥A8 ♦KJ107 ♣J6

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
Pass Pass 1 ♠ Pass 2 ♥ Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—Since partner is a pass hand, you should abandon all thoughts of game. Your goal now should be simply a matter of settling for the safest partial. Partner must have a reasonable five-card suit for his two-over-one response, and you have no reason to believe that there is a better place to play the hand than two hearts. We would pass.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠6 ♥AQ95 ♦8752 ♣K965

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ 2 ♦ ?

What action do you take?
A.—You have no ideal bid. However, defending against two diamonds your hand has excellent prospects of producing four or more tricks. Therefore, we suggest a double. If things work out badly and the opponents make their contract, no serious damage will have been done, for we have not doubled the opponents into game. But if partner has the right hand, the penalty could be extremely lucrative.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ875 ♥K ♦KQ962 ♣Q7

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 3 ♥ Pass 4 ♦ Pass 4 ♥ Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—If you didn't give the hand much thought, you probably passed because of the misfit. But you have overlooked the fact that your singleton in partner's suit is the king. By jump shifting partner has hinted at slam without having any particular fit for your suit. Therefore, he must have a long suit of his own, which you know isn't solid. You should give him a bit of encouragement by raising to five hearts.

Now, however, that would not be forcing, so you have to jump to four hearts. Don't put partner under pressure when you know where you want to play the hand.

Departure Of Cronkite Highlighted Meeting

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS has just adjourned its annual meeting with its 204 affiliates and the mood was rather light, considering that among the business discussed was the impending departure of Walter Cronkite and the network's plans to enter the cable TV game.

Cronkite has made CBS Evening News the best — and, equally important to affiliates — best rated network news show for a dozen years. His employment brought the network prestige and power envied by NBC and ABC.

And the revelation by John D. Backe, president of the CBS empire, that CBS may become a cable TV supplier couldn't have been too happily received by the affiliates. Their commercial stations compete with cable.

In fact, several voiced concern over the prospect of the network giving cable outlets ammunition in their battle with commercial TV.

Backe assured the station owners and managers that he could "see nothing that is going to alter network programming as we know it right now."

He promised that CBS' adventures in cable TV would not limit financial support of the commercial network, and assured them that if CBS does provide programming for cable, it will be in areas not feasible for commercial stations.

CBS has already entered the videodisc business and is experimenting with teletext, a new technology that allows printed information to be transmitted through television.

Perhaps the network's cable prospects seemed a bit dark and far away, in light of the remarkable return of CBS' return to the top in prime time ratings. That feat was real and recent, and, you got the feeling from affiliates, carried a nice, warm feeling. Not to mention added commercial dollars.

As to Cronkite's departure, there is compensation for CBS, in the form of Cronkite's shiny heir, Dan Rather. A symbolic transfer of power took place last Wednesday, when the departing anchorman was honored in a sort of "Cronkite Festival," featuring clips from the famed newsmen's career, narrated by Rather.

He claimed he's "just a guy who served my country, got a wife and a place to live," but he suspected his being 109 years old may have had something to do with the commotion.

Post spent seven days at the center for removal of a small cancerous patch of skin near his left temple and another operation to correct a prostate problem.

Nurses marveled at Post. "One man in the ward, he must have been in his 60s or so, asked him when do you get too old to be interested in your sex life," one hospital official said. "Well, Mr. Post looked at the guy and said, 'I don't know, you'll have to ask an older man.'"

Post said he doesn't have any spare time, what with taking care of his two dogs, a garden and spending the rest of his hours with his wife of five years, Thelma, who is 33.

He said he met her in a boarding home where they both rented rooms. "I just noticed her one day and she noticed me, too, I guess, and that was that."

Afterward, Cronkite reminisced for a while, then brought Rather to the stage.

"I didn't recognize you without your burnoose," Cronkite joked, referring to Rather's recent undercover assignment in Afghanistan, for which he disguised himself (tried to, anyway) as an Afghan.

Cronkite expressed his admiration for Rather's courage and skill, adding, "I particularly admire your new salary." Cronkite referred to the estimated $8 million over five years Rather will reportedly receive for succeeding Cronkite.

In A Hurry At Age 109

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Glenn Post couldn't understand what all the fuss was about.

After all, he was just going home Saturday to his wife after surgery at the Veterans' Administration Center here.

He claimed he's "just a guy who served my country, got a wife and a place to live," but he suspected his being 109 years old may have had something to do with the commotion.

Burnett, Arkin In Coming Film

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Carol Burnett will costar with Alan Arkin in "Chu Chu and the Philly Flash," a new movie based on an unsuccessful dance instructor and a washed-up baseball player.

David Lowell Rich will direct the action-comedy on locations in San Francisco this summer for 20th Century-Fox.

Although it is the first time Burnett and Arkin have acted together, Arkin directed the comedian in the CBS-TV special, "Twigs."

Secret: Follow Instructions

NEW YORK (AP) — What knocks job candidates out of contention?
 According to Bill Cantor of the Cantor Concern, a New York based executive-recruitment firm, many people eliminate themselves from consideration because they fail to follow instructions when they answer an ad for a job.
 "For example," says Cantor, "a candidate who fails to include salary history, a resume or other information, stands a good chance of eliminating himself from contention."
 Other things that play a role in one's failure to obtain a position, according to Cantor, include: sloppy resumes, dressing improperly, being rude or overbearing, telling untruths and being found out, and pricing oneself out of the salary range.

Islamic Fundamentalists Win

By The Associated Press
Hard-line Islamic fundamentalists including advocates of spy trials for the American hostages have won a majority in the new Islamic Parliament which Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini says will decide the fate of the captives, Radio Tehran reported.

The official Iranian radio said that with returns in from all but 25 of the 247 seats being filled now in the Majlis, or Parliament, the Islamic Republican Party had won a total of 110 and Moslem fundamentalists running as independents had won enough more to give the IRP a majority.

The IRP won 50 of the 98 seats decided in the first round of voting March 14. In runoff elections in 149 other districts Friday, Radio Tehran said the IRP had won 60 of the 124 seats decided by noon Sunday, and most of the others went to independents.

The Majlis at full strength is to have 270 members, but the runoffs in 23 districts were postponed because of unsettled conditions or charges of irregularities in the first round of voting. But the constitution provides that the legislature can convene as soon as two-thirds of the members, or 180, are elected.

Khomeini and other leaders of his revolutionary regime have said that the Majlis will decide what is to be done with the 53 members of the staff of the U.S. Embassy in Tehran who today are spending their 191st day as hostages. But no decision appears likely before late June or July.

The U.S. government had hoped that supporters of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr would win a sizable bloc of seats since he is considered a pragmatic moderate who wants to end the hostage crisis so he can get on with trying to restore the shattered Iranian economy. But many of the Islamic fundamentalists want the hostages tried as spies unless the United States forces Egypt to return Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi to Iran and also turns over the royal family's holdings in the United States.

The Swiss Embassy in Tehran, which represents the United States there, said it was pressing the Iranian government of information on a 54th American prisoner, freelance writer Cynthia Dwyer of Buffalo, N.Y., but has not been able to find out where she is being held.

Mrs. Dwyer was reported arrested last Monday night by three revolutionary guards in Tehran, and a local newspaper said she was accused of being a CIA spy. Informed sources in the Iranian capital said she was turned over to the Foreign Ministry on Tuesday.

Pope Ends His African Tour At Leper Colony

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer
ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Pope John Paul II ended his African tour today with a visit to a leper hospital to express his solidarity with the sick everywhere on the continent.

The pope said he went to the hospital at Adzote, 35 miles north of Abidjan, to "embrace all the other lepers and sick of the country and in all of Africa."

"I would fall in my mission if I didn't spend time with those Jesus particularly loves, who cheer nursing, comfort, cure and hope," the pope said.

In his 11-day tour across Africa, the pope visited Zaire, the Congo, Kenya, Ghana, Upper Volta, and the Ivory Coast to strengthen the Roman Catholic Church on the continent.

Emphasizing one of the major themes of his trip, he told young people at a special Mass for them Sunday to safeguard the values of their African culture and to reject materialistic pursuits and violence.

"Respect for life, the family and the elderly are a real treasure," the pope said in his homily to thousands of young people in Yamoussoukro, the birthplace of President Felix Houphouet-Boigny 150 miles northwest of Abidjan.

Africa's 460 million people include 53 million Roman Catholics, and the pope got warm, enthusiastic welcomes everywhere he went.

Tailoring his remarks to local conditions, he told his bishops in Zaire to speak out against injustice and corruption, warned the Marxist rulers of the Congo Republic that the church will raise its voice if religious freedom is threatened, and warned the Ivory Coast of the widening gap between the rich and the poor.

Throughout the trip, he expressed respect for African culture and traditions. But he condemned polygamy, told priests and nuns to respect their chastity vows and warned that the church should not go too far toward so-called Africanization.

The trip has been the pope's most physically demanding to date. He crossed the equator four times, traveling by plane and helicopter and crossing the Congo River on a barge. Some of his aides had trouble keeping up with him, but the pope, who will be 60 next Sunday, showed no signs of fatigue in the tropical climate.

Commission Criticizes Dix Hospital Policies

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A Chicago-based commission has criticized Raleigh's Dorothea Dix Hospital for the improper restraint and seclusion of patients.

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals last month refused to accredit the state psychiatric hospital. The commission's survey team said patients were being restrained or secluded for such rule infractions as "not attending vocational rehabilitation" and "not attending horticulture therapy."

Representatives of the commission were unavailable for comment.

Dix Director A.G. Tolley said after reading the report he thought the deficiencies cited resulted from inadequate record-keeping and not the actual misuse of the practices.

"It was my feeling, based on discussions (with the survey team), that it was more a matter of what was not written in the record rather than an actual misapplication of seclusion and restraint," Tolley said.

Tolley said he has appealed the commission's decision not to accredit Dix, and the hospital will retain its accreditation during the appeal.

It marks the second time in four years that Dix has lost its national accreditation, creating the possibility of a loss of $2 million annually in Medicaid and Medicare funds. Those programs help pay for health services for certain groups of the poor and elderly.

Commission standards call for the use of physical restraints or seclusion "only as a therapeutic measure" to prevent the patient from causing a serious disruption or harming himself or other patients.

Tolley said the use of seclusion and restraint in some cases is appropriate if it is part of the patient's prescribed treatment plan.

But the report also cited instances when a patient's treatment plan did not specify it.

Hospital policy requires daily accounting of every instance in which a patient is restrained or secluded. Reports are then made to the hospital's human right committee, a group responsible for looking into any "questionable situation," according to Tolley.

Dix was also cited by the JCAH for staffing inadequacies, a poor "therapeutic environment" and safety violations.

Long Clean-Up At Nuke Plant

RUSSELLVILLE, Ark. (AP) — It will take at least three weeks to clean a nuclear power plant that was shut down when 50,000 gallons of radioactive water flooded the basement of the reactor building, Arkansas Power & Light Co. officials say.

There was no release of radioactivity into the atmosphere in Saturday's accident, which left about 18 inches of water in the basement of Unit One of Arkansas Nuclear One, utility officials said.

William Cavanaugh, utility vice president, said the accident at the west-central Arkansas plant was caused by a broken seal on a reactor coolant pump. The nuclear power plant's second unit was not affected.

Kills Children, Self In Dispute

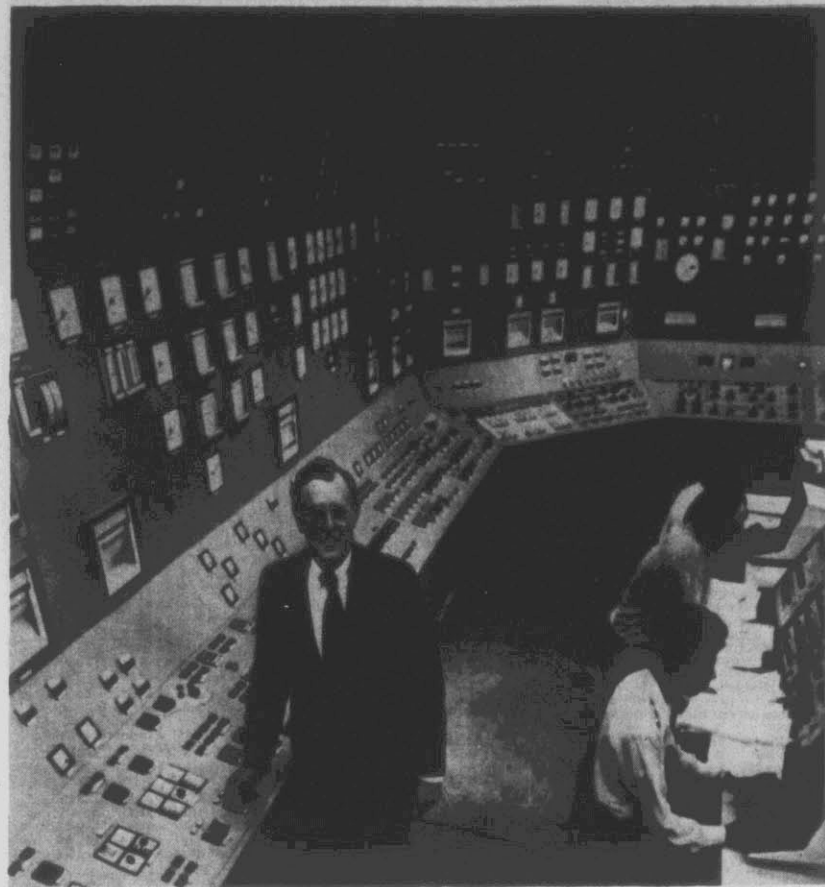

NEW YORK (AP) — Authorities say a 35-year-old man, apparently distraught about a custody fight over his two children, shot and killed his son and daughter in a motel room before killing himself.

Police say they found the bodies of Valentino Donatelli, his 7-year-old son Marco and 10-year-old daughter Claudia Sunday morning in a motel in the Astoria section of Queens.

Police say Donatelli was depressed about a fight with his ex-wife, Maria Theresa Cohen, over the custody of the children. He had picked up the children from a babysitter's house Saturday afternoon.
