Uphold N.C. Ban On 'Supermarket'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today left intact a North Carolina law state officials say is aimed at preventing "sex supermarkets."

The law prohibits a building from containing more than one kind of adult establishment such as an adult bookstore, movie theater, peepshow, massage parlor or sexual device store. By a 7-2 vote, the justices refused to review a North Carolina Supreme Court ruling that the state law does not violate free-speech or free-press rights.

Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall voted to review and summarily reverse the state Supreme Court's ruling. Four votes are needed to grant such review.

The law, which took effect Jan. 1, 1978, states that "no building, premises, structure or other facility that contains any adult establishment shall contain any other kind of adult establishment."

The practical effect is to limit adult businesses to one medium. For example, bookstores cannot show movies or sell sexual devices.

Establishment owners who violate the law can be punished by up to three months in jail and a $300 fine.

Bookstores throughout North Carolina challenged the law. It was upheld by the North Carolina Supreme Court, but two federal trial courts struck it down as unconstitutional.

Then the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last Dec. 4 reversed the two trial courts and upheld the law.

"We find the North Carolina statute to be merely a regulation of the place and manner of expression, without proscription of that expression, of the type not forbidden by the First Amendment," the state's highest court ruled.

The state court relied heavily on a 1976 Supreme Court decision that upheld Detroit's so-called "anti-skid row" zoning ordinance requiring businesses dealing primarily in sexually explicit materials to locate at least 1,000 feet apart.

The 4th Circuit Court compared the North Carolina law to the Detroit ordinance and said, "The fundamental effect sought by both is geographic dispersal of these operations, in an obvious attempt to reduce adverse external effects perceived to result from a concentration of 'adult' activities."

In seeking Supreme Court review, lawyers for the adult bookstores contended that the 4th Circuit has created "a bizarre First Amendment doctrine."

Call Meeting

The City Council will consider several items of business, in addition to conducting a public hearing on the 1980-81 city and Greenville Utilities budget, at Tuesday's 8 p.m. special call meeting.

Following the budget hearing, the board will consider: an amendment to the contract with Olsen Associates for engineering services for 14th Street; a resolution authorizing execution of a contract with the Department of Transportation for the maintenance of traffic control devices on the state highway system in Greenville;

An ordinance on the Youth Conservation Corps grant budget; and appointments to the Board and Adjustments and the Greenville Citizens Bikeway Committee.

The meeting will be held in the council chambers at city hall.

OK Industrial Revenue Bonds

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners this morning passed resolutions approving in principle the issuance of industrial revenue bonds to finance expansions by two county industries.

The board approved a $1 million issue for expansion at the TRW plant in Greenville, and $1.25 million for expansion of Electrical Utilities Co. of Farmville.

TRW, the 70th largest company in the United States, manufactures power rack and pinion steering component parts in Greenville, in a 105,000 square foot facility.

The firm began its operations in Greenville in April of last year with two employees, and now has 177 workers. It expects to employ 220 by Christmas, and continue to grow until 400 to 500 persons are employed.

The bond funds would be used to purchase machinery, including a cold header — one of two such units in the world.

Company officials said this morning that the present $8 million investment at the Greenville facility is expected to grow to $20 million by the end of the year.

Electrical Utilities Co.,

makers of capacitors used by such companies as Xerox, Control Data, GTE-Sylvania, Briggs & Stratton and Litton Microwave Cooking, presently employs 35 people in Farmville at two sites. It's current payroll is $390,000 per year.

The bond funds would be used to construct a new facility, or purchase and expand one of the two sites now being leased by the firm.

A proposal from EUC, indicating that it may move its entire operation to Farmville from La Salle, Ill., projected that employment at the end of the first year after expansion would total 199 with an annual payroll of $2.6 million. At the end of the second year, the proposal projected, 251 persons would be employed and the payroll would total $3.35 million.

The present 32,000 square feet of space would be expanded to from 60,000 to 84,600 square feet.

In other business this morning, the board rejected a proposal which would place two of some 14 Sheriff's Department deputies, currently members of the N.C. Local Governmental Employees Retirement System, under the Law Enforcement Officers Benefit and Retirement System.

Commissioners were told that to shift the two to the law enforcement officers retirement program would cost the county $10,600.

County Planner Craig Smith reported to commissioners that it would cost some $48,600 to install road name signs at the intersection of secondary roads throughout the county.

The project, as yet to be approved by the board, is a pilot project, funded in part by the Governor's Highway Safety Program. Pitt's share of the cost would be $14,580.

The board also reappointed Heber Braxton to the Ayden Planning Board for extra-territorial jurisdiction, and designated commissioner R. L. Martin as their voting delegate to the National Association of County Officials' national convention.

Commissioners this afternoon, were to continue their study of the proposed 1980-1981 budget.

Proposal Is Allowed For House

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Miriam Moore, dean of the School of Home Economics at East Carolina University said today that she has been told that the school will be allowed to submit a proposal for the continued use of the Bloxton Home Management House.

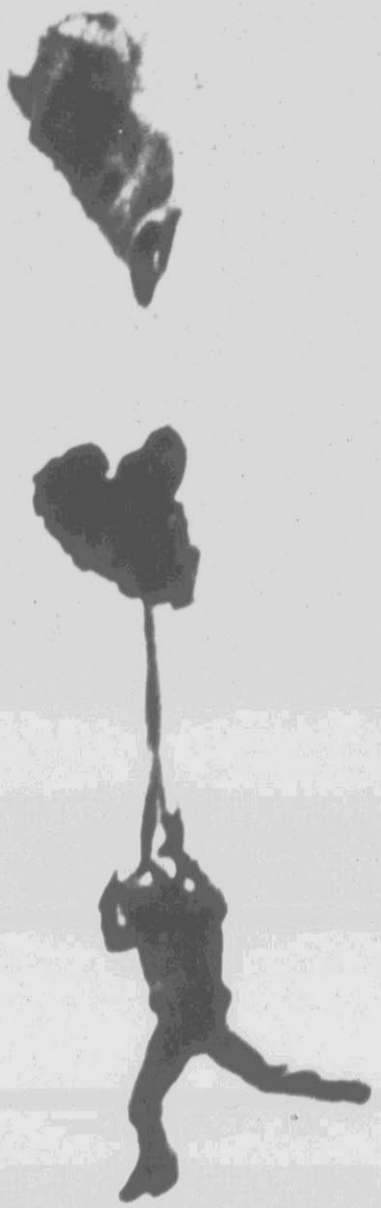

Mrs. Moore, at mid-day Friday, expressed concern over rumors that the facility, used by the School of Home Economics, would be turned over to other university agencies.

Chancellor Thomas Brewer and Vice Chancellor for Student Life Elmer Meyer, said a proposal to house the Career Planning and Placement office in the Bloxton house was being considered. However, comments from other administration officials suggested that a decision had already been made.

Mrs. Moore said this morning that she met with Chancellor Brewer late Friday afternoon, and was told that the move was still being considered, and no decision had been made.

Saying that Brewer was "unaware" that the Bloxton facility was still being used by the School of Home Economics, Mrs. Moore was told that the home economics school could submit a proposal for continued use of the facility.

In the past, the Bloxton House has been used to train students in home management and as a lab facility. She added that the school has submitted proposals to the ECU administration in the past which would result in increased use of the facility — such as a family research center and use by students, faculty and alumni as a site for luncheons and dinners.

Propose Giant Atom Smasher

BATAVIA, Ill. (AP) — Officials at the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory have proposed building a $500 million, 10.5-mile circular particle accelerator, 10 times more powerful than the largest "atom smasher" now in use.

The machine, called Pentevac, would be used for high-energy physics research and would be able to push a beam of atomic particles to an energy level of 5 trillion electron volts, officials said Saturday.

Researchers hope larger accelerators will provide further insight into the quark, a particle that apparently cannot be subdivided. Some scientists believe it to be the basic particle of nature.

Pentevac would have a diameter of 3.25 miles and would extend to the perimeter of the 6,800-acre Fermilab site near Batavia, a suburb northwest of Chicago.

Particle accelerators are used to smash apart elementary particles so scientists can study their makeup. Protons or electrons are accelerated in a vacuum along a circular tube at speeds near that of light (186,000 miles per second) and then smashed into targets where the high-energy particles collide with other atomic particles.

The proposed accelerator would be 10 times more powerful than the world's largest accelerator, also located at Fermilab.

Laboratory officials said plans for the accelerator were approved recently by the Woods Hole (Mass.) Panel, a group of American scientists drafting a 10-year program for high-energy physics research.

The panel's recommendations will be presented to the Department of Energy, which funds such projects.

Construction could begin in 1985 and be completed by 1990, Fermi officials said.

A key reason for building the machine at Fermilab would be to take advantage of the existing accelerator, which has a capacity of 500 billion electron volts and could be used to inject already accelerated beams into Pentevac.

Space Shuttle Survives Test

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Heat-protective tiles on the space shuttle Columbia have survived a critical test without damage, say officials at the Kennedy Space Center.

Engineers reported no damage in the tiles after a test Saturday night that simulated the separation of the shuttle's giant fuel tank. The success of the "pyrotechnic shock test" brought the shuttle a step closer to launch next year.

Israeli Kill Terrorists

TEL AVIV (AP) — An Israeli naval patrol intercepted and killed three PLO terrorists in a speedboat early today, less than 24 hours after Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government warned the Common Market's call for involvement of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Mideast peace talks was an invitation to Nazi-like liquidation of the Jewish state.

Yasser Arafat's PLO claimed responsibility for the attempted sea raid on Israel's Mediterranean resort town of Nahariya and said the guerrillas clashed with Israeli forces to the north of the town "in a three-hour confrontation that left many enemy soldiers killed or wounded."

The Tel Aviv command said the guerrillas were heading down the coast from Lebanon when their fiberglass boat was intercepted by an Israeli patrol boat. The Palestinians fired with a rocket-propelled grenade at the patrol craft and the Israelis returned fire, sinking the boat and killing all aboard in a three-minute clash, a spokesman said.

One Israeli sailor was wounded in the clash in the Mediterranean, about a mile off the northern Israeli coastal town of Acziv, the spokesman said. It was the fourth time this year Israel said it had intercepted seaborne Palestinian raiders.

Begin, reading the unusually harsh Cabinet statement approved during its regular meeting Sunday, said Israel rejected Europe's call for involvement of the PLO, which he termed "the Arab SS." The Common Market declaration was reminiscent of Europe's appeasement of Nazi Germany before World War II and a sellout to "totalitarian blackmail," the statement said.

The Cabinet referred to a recent vow to "liquidate" Israel by Al Fatah, the largest terrorist group within the PLO. "Since (Hitler's autobiographical manifesto) Mein Kampf was written, no words were ever more explicit for all the world to hear, Europe included, on the striving to destroy the Jewish state and nation," it said.

The statement also criticized the Common Market offer to guarantee Israel's security, saying the Jewish state "asks for no security guarantees of any European people. Israel does — and shall know (how) to — defend itself."

Bengali Village Massacre Claimed Hundreds

By SANJOY HAZARIKA
Associated Press Writer

MANDAI, India (AP) — Dogs paw at the earth, sniffing the rotting flesh and bones poking up from a shallow grave in the charred rubble and ashes of this once-thriving Bengali village in northeastern India, ravaged in a savage attack by Tripura tribesmen.

"I've never seen anything like it, nor do I want to," said an Indian army major, wiping away tears as he surveyed the village. Mandai had been home to some 400 Bengali immigrants until the Tripura natives stormed out of the jungle on June 8 and cut their way through the villagers with bows and arrows, spears, shotguns and daos, the heavy scythes the natives use for chopping wood.

"I saw a six-month-old child chopped into two with each piece lying on either side of his dead mother," said Maj. Raja Mani, describing the scene when his army unit regained control of the area last Monday.

Officials in the northeastern state of Tripura say 345 persons were killed in the five days of statewide bloodletting that began June 6.

Tripura tribesmen went on a rampage, wiping out whole families of Bengalis who controlled much of the local economy, in one of the worst outbreaks of butchery since India gained independence 33-years-ago.

Foes of the state's Marxist administration claim the statewide death toll could exceed 10,000.

The official reports say 212 died in Mandai alone, but police here put the number of villager dead at 350.

Bengali survivors fled into the jungle, sought shelter in refugee camps, or were taken to hospitals at the Tripura capital of Agartala, 75 miles away.

Nagendra Saha, 45, his face swollen with bruises and his head striped with gashes and stitched wounds, spoke to a reporter from his hospital bed in Agartala.

"As the tribals came nearer we prayed aloud, 'Oh God, Please save us,'" he said. The natives demanded money and the Bengalis turned over all they had, about $250.

"Once we were outside, they swung their daos at us," Saha said. "One man gave me a chop on my head and I fell unconscious. Before hitting me, I saw him force an old woman to lie on the ground and he smashed her head with the dao.

"My two sons died within seconds of one another. They were killed by the tribals. They were beaten to death. They died on my lap. I tried to save them but then it was my turn. They left me for dead."

According to the Bengali survivors, about 700 tribesmen massed and threatened to attack Mandai on June 7, but were deterred by armed police in the area. The police fled the next day when the tribesmen returned, this time armed with guns and native weapons, the survivors said.

Most of the estimated 1.3 million Bengalis in Tripura are Hindus who fled from predominantly Moslem Bangladesh after that country won its war for independence from Pakistan in 1971. The Bengalis now outnumber the Tripura natives about 2-1.

Tribal frustration and anger at being a minority in their own land exploded in the storm of arson and rioting. All-India Radio claims the carnage was instigated by the Mizo National Army, formed by guerrillas in neighboring Mizoram seeking independence for that small state.

Most of the Tripura natives fled, but some have been arrested on charges of rioting and sedition.

to-ceiling drapery without valances are suitable in plain, colored, textured fabrics. If a patterned fabric is used, however, it must be one with a motif demonstrably in the modern idiom. In a modern room, it is usually better to include drapery columns as an integral part of the room's background and to keep them in the same tone as the walls. Veteran Sky Diver Is Chute-Failure Victim

FREDERICKSBURG, Va. (AP) — An Army sky diver, a veteran of more than 5,200 jumps, has fallen to his death with thousands of spectators, including his parents, watching in disbelief.

Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Johnson, 33, a member of the Army's Golden Knights sky diving team, plummeted 10,000 feet Sunday when his parachute failed to open during an air show at Shannon Airport near Fredericksburg.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Johnson of De Ruyter, N.Y., and his brother, Charles Johnson Jr., saw Johnson and Sgt. Carter Edge jump.

Only one parachute appeared. The second jumper continued to fall, trailing red smoke that was part of the demonstration.

Spectators at first thought the jumper deliberately was delaying the opening of his parachute.

The first indication the audience had that it was real was from an Army announcer, who said, "It looks like we have a parachutist with a problem."

It took about 10 minutes for some of those in the crowd to realize what had happened. Some spectators said they thought it had been a dummy — a part of the show.

Maj. Thomas Woods, public affairs officer at Fort Bragg, N.C., where Johnson was stationed, said Johnson and Edge had jumped from the plane at 10,000 feet, made a baton pass, and then pulled the rings to deploy their parachutes.

Edge's chute opened, but Johnson's failed, Woods said, when the small pilot chute used to pull the main chute free broke away.

Woods said Johnson waited too late to try his reserve chute. Both his main and reserve chutes began to open, trailing behind him, moments before he struck the runway.

One of the Golden Knights, who was not identified, said, "If he had had one or two seconds more he would have made it."

Johnson had been with the Army ever since he graduated from high school. His brother said, "He was doing what he loved. This was his life."

State Police Trooper J.J. Dellavecchio said the Army was conducting an investigation into the failure of the parachute.

Demonstrators Try Save Spruce Goose

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hoping to keep the world's largest aircraft from being cut into eight pieces, demonstrators rallied outside the hangar where Howard Hughes' "Spruce Goose" is kept.

The giant piece of aviation history built by the late billionaire recluse has been stored in the T-shaped hangar for most of its life.

About 175 people rallied in support of the flying boat Saturday. Summa Corp., Hughes' holding company, has said it will go ahead with plans to dismantle the 320-foot wingspan seaplane in about two weeks, splitting it into eight sections for display at various museums.

After waiting for supporters to gather $750,000 to assure a new home for the "Spruce Goose," Summa announced May 21 that the plane would have to be cut up because it had to honor a contract with the Port Authority of Long Beach to vacate the hangar. Construction of an oil handling terminal is to begin at the site Oct. 1.

Dick Gunton, a spokesman for the Committee to Save the Hughes' Flying Boat, said Sunday he has hopes the craft can be saved. But he said the group had not received any replies after asking several large corporations to put up the money needed to keep the plane in one piece.

The museums have indicated a willingness to forgo receiving the parts if the flying boat can be preserved in one piece.

With that in mind, supporters held their protest mirrally outside the hangar at Pier E in Long Beach Harbor. Speakers proposed that the craft be made a national historic monument and urged a letter-writing campaign to federal officials.

Only about 300 people have seen the plane since its one and only flight Nov. 2, 1947. The eight-engine giant, larger than any jumbo aircraft flown today, is 80 feet high and 220 feet long and was designed as a World War II transport that could carry up to 750 soldiers and a Sherman tank.

Summa had established a June 1 deadline for gathering the $750,000 to save it in one piece, and if the money was obtained the corporation said it would authorize a $1.5 million loan for construction of a final showcase for the craft. Suggestions have included a display in Long Beach next to the berth of the

The ability to see images is a direct result of the eye's conversion of light to nerve impulses. When light strikes a lens that is thick in the middle and thin on the edges (convex), the light rays tend to group together. This type of convex lens, which focuses light, is said to be a "converging lens". As exemplified by magnifying glass, a converging lens bends light in such a way as to make the image larger. It is this type of lens, which can be made up to differing strengths, that is the basis for correctional eyeglasses.

Prescription eyewear must be individually designed to meet the needs of each person. Investigation Needed

We have to watch in amazement as allegations of bid rigging on highway projects in North Carolina unfold.

The attorney general's office says representatives of a construction company are willing to testify that most paving contractors operating in the state have rigged bids. These are, at this point, only allegations but it is enough to warrant the full attention of state authorities.

Gov. Hunt says any company which is found to be involved in bid-rigging would be suspended from handling any work for North Carolina.

"We'll take that action even if there's nobody left to do the paving," the governor said. He also pledged to take action "to get every penny of the taxpayers' money back, plus interest."

Transportation Secretary Thomas W. Bradshaw, Jr. said North Carolina would itself pave the roads, if that becomes necessary.

The bidding process is established by law to make certain that public agencies get the best possible price on jobs and supplies. If it is short-circuited by bidders getting together to set prices, then obviously there is no benefit to the taxpayers.

North Carolina should investigate these charges fully. Every effort should be made to retrieve any funds lost through bid-rigging and any companies involved should not be allowed to do business with the state

Budget Balanced — For Now

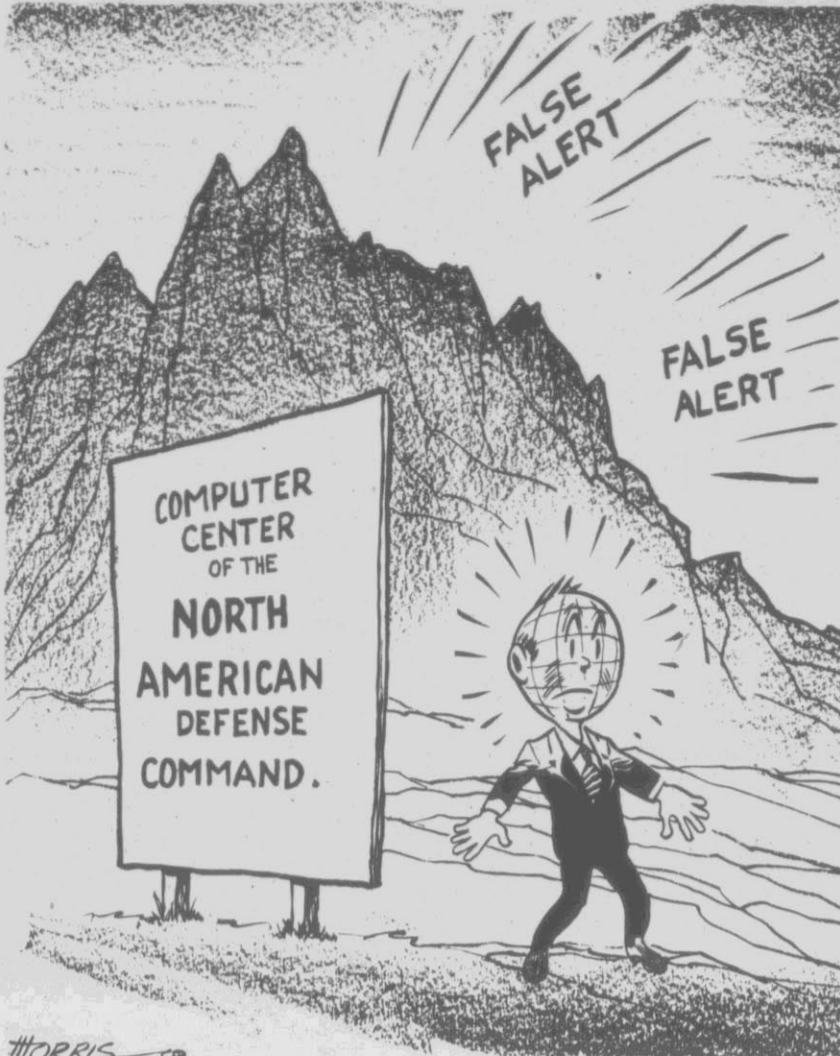

At first reading Congress seems to have done it — balanced the budget for the fiscal year 1981-82, that is.

The only problem is, if one really believes the $613.6 billion budget will stay in balance. The recession is hanging over the nation for one thing, and that could reduce projected revenues. More important Congress just won't be able to leave the budget alone. There will be plan-after-plan to spend more money in the months ahead . . . and some of them will be approved.

If Congress wants to cool inflation it will make certain that the budget stays in balance — but the election will come and go in November. Then we can be certain that Congress will be back to its old ways.

Not A Computer's Role

WASHINGTON — As if we didn't have enough unthinkable things to think about — we now have to think about a computer going berserk at NORAD and starting World War III. The same computer has malfunctioned three times within the Year, thereby alerting American forces to a Soviet attack which was not taking place.

I'm one of those people who believes war is too serious a business to be left to computers.

The day after the foul-up, a blue ribbon panel of generals and admirals was assigned to investigate what had gone wrong.

They were flown out to NORAD in Colorado Springs to question the computer about the mistake.

"Ask it," one of the generals said, "what went wrong?"

The colonel started to hit the buttons on the computer, and the printout read, "AS FAR AS I WAS CONCERNED, WE WERE BEING ATTACKED BY SOVIET MISSILES AND I WAS ONLY DOING MY DUTY."

An admiral said, "Find out where it got its information."

"That's not the point," the general tapped in. "You said they HAD fired them."

"I HAD THIS DREAM THAT THEY WERE GOING TO LAUNCH THEM. IT SEEMED JUST LIKE THE REAL THING. IF SOMETHING BAD HAPPENED AND I HADN'T ALERTED ANYONE, I WOULD HAVE FELT TERRIBLE."

The general hit the keys again. "That is not a decision for a computer to make. You took an oath of office when you were installed to only alert us if they fired their missiles first."

"HOW DO WE KNOW THEY WEREN'T GOING TO FIRE THEM?"

"That's not the point," the general tapped in. "You said they HAD fired them."

Not All That Good

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — On the surface, those astounding competency test results just announced by the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction: over 98 percent passing and getting their high school diplomas. The reaction is, "Wow...that must mean the kids are really bucking down, the teachers are pushing, and the remedial programs are really doing a job."

All of those things are true, as reported from a variety of sources.

But not so good that fewer than two percent are failing.

You have to read the report carefully to find out what is really going on. The first line says simply that "71,795 seniors (class of 1980) have taken the N.C. Competency Test. 70,814 (98.6 percent) have successfully passed the reading test. 70,565 (98.3 percent) have successfully passed the mathematics test."

The key words are "seniors (class of 1980)."

Cutting
State officials decided to peg the test data to only those who took the competency test, became seniors, and thus were eligible for a high school diploma and needed to pass the test in order to graduate and get that diploma.

Actually, the test is given in the junior year of high school. A lot of things can happen between then and graduation. And things did happen to a big number of kids; things which if they had been factored into the Competency Test results would show that while progress is being made, the problem of high schoolers who can't read, write, or cipher very well is not nearly so close to a solution as it might seem.

Educators in Raleigh admit they don't have all the data at hand, and will try to get better figures next time around.

Of juniors who first took the test last year, a sizable number have since dropped out of school altogether. Based on standard statistical data and not on actual hard numbers, that group likely comprised about 7,000 youngsters since the annual dropout rate for juniors normally runs around eight percent.

Then, of the juniors who took the test, another sizable number were not promoted from the junior to senior class and thus did not become the Class of 1980. Again, hard data isn't available, but statistically about eight percent aren't promoted so another 7,000 test-takers have been discounted. Then, there are those who transferred in or out of the state's public high schools in the period. There are no figures available for this smaller group.

So when state officials tell us that only 981 students have not passed the reading test in all of North Carolina, and that represents only 1.4 percent of the potential graduates, more than 14,000 youngsters have been eliminated from the data.

Real Figures
This is true as well for the figures showing that 1,230, or only 1.7 percent, have not passed the mathematics test. Of course not all of those 14,000 missing students failed the test; many passed it, including some who have since dropped out or failed a grade.

Best estimates at this time indicate that the actual failure rate remains about what it was on earlier testing, and on the test for the seniors of the Class of 1981 which was

Other Editors Say The Wayne Image

(Goldsboro News-Argus)

It's business as usual in the Carter administration. One day Secretary of State Ed Muskie says Ramsey Clark and his cohorts shouldn't be prosecuted for defying a presidential order and going to Iran.

The next day President Carter, perhaps after sampling the political breezes, says Clark should be prosecuted.

We'll wager ten bucks to a dime no prosecution is forthcoming. Mr. Carter has made his points with those of us who feel Clark should be slapped down. But he will not risk alienating Clark's left-wing backers by pushing him toward the jailhouse.

But Ed Muskie's explanation of why Clark shouldn't be prosecuted offers a third dimension to the subject of law and order.

The president's order banning travel to Iran was designed to prevent people from going — not to punish those who violated it, explained Mr. Muskie.

That's interesting. One cannot help but wonder why, then, violation of the ban carries the possible penalty of imprisonment and a fine of $10,000.

Perhaps the law should, instead, provide that violators must write 100 times that they shouldn't have done it, or stand in the corner for 30 minutes.

And does the Muskie doctrine apply to laws against bank robbery? We can hear it now, the Superior Court judge pats the stickup man on the head and says "That's all right, son, the law is intended to prevent people from robbing banks, not to punish those who do."

He puts an entirely new interpretation on a presidential order, too. When the president "bans" travel to a foreign country, he's really saying "I wish you folks wouldn't go."

That's what we need in these perilous times. Some forthright hard-nosed leadership — some folks who say what they mean and mean what they say.

Pass the sassparilly, and drag out the tiddlywinks. When the going gets tough, it's time for us toughs to get going.

That's the way to strike an awesome and respect-inspiring figure as we swagger across the world stage. Yessiree. Jimmy Carter, Ed Muskie and John Wayne. Three of a kind!

Strength For Today

THE PLUMB LINE
In the fable of Amos we find the famous parable of the plumb line. "The Lord stood beside a wall made by a plumb line, with a plumb line in his hand. And Jehovah said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, a plumb line. Then said the Lord, behold, I will set a plumb line in the midst of my people Israel."

The plumb line is designed to keep a wall vertical as it is being built and thereby keep it from ultimately collapsing. The prophet Amos assures us that the Lord has set a plumb line in the midst of his people. He has set it today in the midst of our nation as he set it in the midst of ancient Israel. He sets a plumb line in the lives of every one of us — the moral law which comes out of his word, the Bible, by which we are instructed how to do good and how to abstain from doing evil.

We do not fail morally because we are ignorant. We fail because we do not like the plumb line, or heed its warning. — Elisha Douglass

The question was fed in and the printout said, "IT WAS JUST A FEELING I HAD. I NEVER DID TRUST THE RUSSIANS."

A general angrily went over to the keyboard and tapped in, "None of us trusts the Russians, but at the same time we don't want to start World War III."

The computer replied, "BETTER DEAD THAN RED."

"Your job is to give us information based on facts" the general told the computer. "You are not programmed to alert the entire nuclear defense network of this country just because you don't like Communists."

The computer answered, "IT'S TIME WE NUKE

Still Another Economic 'Cure'?

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — Don't hold your breath just yet, but another Carter economic program may be in the works — the third this year.

While nothing is decided, it's likely the new program will be an anti-recession package that will include a tax cut to take effect in 1981.

Also likely are expanded programs to provide jobs for the nation's unemployed, whose ranks are expected to grow beyond the 7.8 percent of the labor force that was jobless in May.

Carter would embrace such a program reluctantly, and only because the recession has hit the nation's economy with stunning impact.

The feeling is growing among some of his advisers that something will have to be done to blunt the recession if it continues to worsen.

That the recession is bad is now amply documented. The president himself has acknowledged that the downturn in the past few months was "steeper than we anticipated."

He previously had predicted the recession would be only "short and mild."

Treasury Secretary G. William Miller is holding to the administration line that it's too early to deviate from the current economic program, which emphasizes combatting inflation.

"Our concern is where we go from here," Miller told reporters last week. "We do not know the path of the economy from here, and until we have that in mind, we do not intend to flinch or change ourselves from our course."

But Miller's choice of words shows that the administration is getting ready to take action if that course continues downward.

Carter, who previously had ruled out reducing taxes until the budget was balanced, changed his position earlier this month. He said June 1 that "we will begin to prepare for a tax reduction to be considered for application in 1981."

And Commerce Secretary Philip Klutznick told reporters Monday that "when the president and his advisers feel the time is right, I'm sure there will be a program presented. That it's being

Public Isn't Satisfied

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Never before had so many people cast so many ballots in so many elections to choose presidential nominees. Now the critics are saying they got it wrong.

There were nearly 32 million votes in 34 Republican and 34 Democrat presidential primaries, from New Hampshire on Feb. 2 Feb. 26 to California on June 3.

That's about 37 percent of the people who were eligible to vote in those states, which is a fair turnout for a primary.

But in the primary election business, it develops, more is not necessarily better.

The pollsters report widespread dissatisfaction with the prospect of a Nov. 4 election choice between President Carter and Ronald Reagan as the Democratic and Republican nominees. Carter acknowledges that at this point, about a quarter of the electorate may prefer "none of the above" to the major party choices. That's his explanation for the poll showings of Rep. John B. Anderson, the independent candidate.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, still battling Carter for the Democratic nomination despite the president's delegate majority, is arguing in effect that the primaries shouldn't count — at least the primaries he lost.

That was most of them. He wants the delegates freed from primary commitments.

And congressional reforms are talking, as they do every four years, about overhauling the system. Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore. said Congress "has a responsibility to end this madness" and set up a better primary system.

A dozen years ago, there were 17 state presidential primaries, and they awarded about 40 percent of the delegates to national nominating conventions. Then the Democrats began changing the process in the name of reform.

Always before, party leaders and officeholders were the most important constituency a would-be presidential nominee had to convince. The primary elections were like final exams — a candidate would seek to convince the party power brokers that he could win votes and do better than his rivals in regions far from his home political base.

John F. Kennedy did that by defeating Hubert H. Humphrey in Wisconsin and West Virginia in 1960.

Barry Goldwater won only one significant primary — California — on his way to the Republican nomination in 1964.

Humphrey became the Democratic nominee in 1968 without entering a primary.

But all that ended with the era of Democratic reform, a movement designed to broaden participation in the selection of nominees, while guaranteeing that women, blacks and other groups got a fair share of the action.

By 1976 there were 30 primaries, and about three-quarters of the delegates were chosen in those elections. This year 80 percent of the delegates were chosen in primaries.

There are primaries without pattern, coast to coast on a single night. The demands on the time, and treasures, of the candidates have multiplied along with the primary schedule. As a result, each of the last three presidential campaigns has produced a round of demands for reform of the process produced by reform.

The candidates who fare best tend to be the candidates not otherwise occupied — or employed. Carter campaigned for two years before his election in 1976. Reagan has been at it for five years now, counting his losing bid for the last GOP nomination.

Senate Republican Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., a short timer in the 1980 presidential campaign, said it was virtually impossible to run for the nomination and do the work of a senator.

Former President Gerald R. Ford says the primaries are undercutting the political parties. Their leaders no longer have any clout, and their conventions are settled before they begin.

"Gold Medal Games"

Like other American amateur athletes, members of the U.S. Olympic basketball team won't be competing at the Moscow Summer Olympics next month. But this week, the basketball players will get an unusual chance to display their talent against some of the toughest competition in the world. In a series of five "Gold Medal Games," the Olympic basketball squad will take on a team of star players from the National Basketball Association. Some of the Olympic players, picked in last week's NBA draft, will be playing in the NBA themselves next season. The Gold Medal series starts tonight with a game in Los Angeles. Games in Phoenix, Seattle, New York and Indianapolis will follow.

Magazine Cites Links Between Union And Mob

WASHINGTON (AP) — A magazine claims it has obtained a confidential Justice Department memorandum that says one of the nation's 10 largest labor organizations is controlled by organized crime.

The memo refers to the Laborers International Union and calls Angelo Fosco, president of the 475,000-member union, "a tool of the crime syndicate." It also says "major decisions regarding Laborers Union contracts are made by organized crime leaders, not Fosco."

Fosco and other union officials were unavailable for comment. A copy of the memo was obtained by Ed Barnes and Bob Windrem, authors of a story in Mother Jones, a San Francisco-based magazine.

Mears Col...

"I think there are too many, they are too expensive, and they take too much time from the candidates," Ford says.

He proposes a system of regional primaries, with neighboring states all voting on the same days, over a four-month election span.

Packwood is trying, for the third time, to get congressional action to institute regional primaries.

"We no longer choose our presidential candidates by their character, intelligence and stands on issues," Packwood says. "The choice is dictated by whether they can stand at all after the primaries."

There are other reform proposals, to group primaries by date or by time zone.

They've been made before, but the urgency always fades as the election year passes.

For all the complaints about the ordeal of 1980, that may well happen again. Change, if change there is to be, is more likely to come when one of the parties decides that the primaries have saddled it with a losing ticket.

That's when the politicians will decide that the primaries shouldn't count for so much.

And that is the case Kennedy is trying to make now.

Justice Department lawyers did draft such a memo two years ago, government sources confirmed. Most of the union members are construction workers, street cleaners and garbage collectors.

The Fosco family has led the union for decades. Peter Fosco, Angelo's father, went to work in 1913 as a business agent for the union. Eventually, Peter Fosco rose to power in the union and in Chicago politics. He became friends with Chicago mob boss Paul "The Waiter" Ricca, and Peter Fosco was questioned about his relationship with Ricca during congressional hearings in 1948.

In 1968, Peter Fosco became president of the union and his son, Angelo, took over as the organization's Chicago regional manager. When Peter died in 1975, Angelo Fosco succeeded him as president and Angelo's son, Peter, moved into the Chicago job.

The Mother Jones article said Ricca "appointed most officials of Chicago's major unions," particularly Laborers International, until he died in 1974. Other mob leaders have continued the practice since, the article says.

Angelo Fosco "follows the orders" of Joey Aiuppa and other Chicago bosses of the crime syndicate known as La Cosa Nostra, the article quoted the Justice Department memo as saying. Law enforcement sources say Aiuppa is the current mob boss in Chicago.

Much of the magazine article was based on extensive public records, many of them from little-noticed proceedings before various courts, state agencies and the National Labor Relations Board.

Those records describe alleged racketeering schemes involving Laborers

general that he wanted to take a crack at the keyboard. "Do you realize that this is the third time you have given us a false alarm?"

The computer appeared agitated. "ARE YOU TRYING TO SAY I DON'T KNOW WHAT I'M DOING?"

"No, but you have been working very hard lately, and the pressure can get to the best of us."

"I AM AWARE OF WHAT I WAS FED, AND AS FAR AS I WAS CONCERNED THE DIRTY BOLSHIES HAD LAUNCHED THEIR MISSILES AT THIS COUNTRY IN A FIRST STRIKE ATTACK."

"But you told us before that it was just a feeling, and you had no evidence to back it up."

"Cool it," the admiral typed in. "You're only making things worse. You have a fine record in the service and we don't want to discharge you. But you're not giving us any choice."

"WHAT DO YOU WANT ME TO DO?"

"Could you at least show a little remorse for what you did?"

The FARM SCENE

By ROGER COBB
Asst. Agricultural Extension Agent

Delays in the topping of tobacco could be costing Pitt County tobacco farmers money. Topping in the early button stage reduces high quality tobacco as well as an increase in yield. This is about 20-25 pounds per acre on most farms. You can expect a decrease of one percent per acre per day for every day the floral parts remain on the plant after the button stage. You can normally expect to receive 150-180 more pounds of tobacco with early topping.

Topping early will also promote the development of good-bodied upper leaves. The feeling is that good-bodied tobacco will sell well this year since we have a greater supply of light tobacco. Light tobacco can be purchased at a much lower price in other countries than in the U.S.

Suckers must be controlled before increases in poundage are accomplished. Use of a contact followed by a systematic sucker control is recommended. Suckers are the way a tobacco plant tries to reproduce after the top has been broken out. If suckers are allowed to grow, or tops are left on the plant, then leaf development suffers.

There are some other advantages to early topping. Since harvesting time is critical, it pays to have tops removed before harvesting begins. This spreads out the workload before harvest.

Tobacco that has been topped is not as likely to be blown over as untopped tobacco. The tops are very good at catching the wind and topping over plants.

There is a good chance that early topping helps reduce several pests. Among them is the aphid, budworm and hornworm. The budworm is no longer a problem in tobacco once it is topped. Aphids like young, succulent growth so they are attracted to both tops and suckers. Early topping and good sucker control can help remove this tender growth from the plant.

Early topping can also stimulate root growth. This is a good practice to use under drought conditions. The available moisture is directed to the leaves after the top is removed.

Tobacco goes through two major stages. The first 60-65 days the plant is in the field it is producing vegetative growth. The leaf then suffers so that seeds may be produced. When topped the plant still tries to reproduce by putting out suckers.

Production costs are up in 1980. We have been experiencing dry weather, blue mold and some Granville Wilt in the county. With so many problems, anything we can do to increase yield is necessary. Begin by getting your tobacco topped early because we are in the business to grow leaves, not seeds.

He was jailed without bond pending a court hearing.

ROADBANK SEEDING UNDERWAY...Roadside seeding is underway again as a result of the Mid-East RC&D Project. The Department of Transportation, which will do the actual work, has begun fourth-year seeding on roadbeds near Bethel. Through an agreement between the N.C. Board of Transportation, divisions of Highways and Pitt District, the Department of Transportation will supply the manpower and equipment. The Mid-East RC&D will provide funding for the lime, fertilizer and seed used in the project. The purpose of the project is to control erosion within the highway right-of-way to prevent siltation of streams, lakes, ponds and other right-of-way areas. This will provide less maintenance cost, and less sedimentation in streams and road ditches. Cooperation is needed by keeping farm equipment and operators from plowing and disking over these grassed borders.

Seeks Increase Trooper Ranks

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Crime Control Secretary Burley Mitchell said Sunday he will seek funding for an additional 200 Highway Patrol troopers in 1981.

"We recognize that there are other demands and needs for money in addition to law enforcement. But we can completely justify the need for 200 additional troopers," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said he had discussed his request with Gov. Jim Hunt, indicating that Hunt was responsive to the idea.

"He's aware of the needs of law enforcement and has expressed concern about it," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said the patrol's strength had remained constant at about 800 troopers since 1972 although its work load had increased, the total highway mileage had gone up and the number of licensed drivers had increased.

Extra duties added on the patrol since 1972 included monitoring for radiation, training for disaster control and monitoring compliance with gasoline pricing regulations, Mitchell said.

More troopers are needed to help with those chores as well as to cut down on speeders, he said.

Mitchell said recent roadside checks indicated that more than 45 percent of the motorists exceeded the 55 mph speed limit by some degree. "It could be 56 miles an hour, it could be 70. It doesn't matter," he said.

He noted that, by 1983, the percentage must be at 30 percent or below or the state stands to lose 10 percent of the federal highway funds it normally would receive.

Mitchell said the state has relied heavily on voluntary compliance with the speed law. Troopers have, in recent months, concentrated on patrolling dangerous stretches of road and apprehending drunken drivers in an effort to reduce highway deaths.

State agencies are now preparing their budget recommendations for 1981. Hunt and the Advisory Budget Commission will examine the requests and submit them to the 1981 Legislature.

TOP OF THE STALK QUALITY

Cutting corners on sucker control is no way to grow quality tobacco. That's why more and more growers are using Off-Shoot-T in their sucker control program. It's dependable, it's consistent and it's "top of the stalk" in quality. Because our quality control team makes sure that everything on the label is in the container.

And we don't just test it once, but all the way from raw material stages to shipping. We'd rather stop a whole shipment than risk a single tobacco plant. And that's a fact.

So, this season get America's favorite contact sucker control agent. Get Off-Shoot-T. You'll get the quality you pay for, and you'll never have to worry about chemical inconsistency. Because every shipment of Off-Shoot-T has to pass our tests, before it passes yours.

Soweto Boycott Call Apparently Fails

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A nationwide job boycott planned by blacks to mark the fourth anniversary of the bloody Soweto riots apparently fizzled today despite early reports of absenteeism of 75-100 percent in Cape Town, the nation's oldest city. Police there said non-whites were turning up at work in factories and stores by mid-morning.

Blacks in Soweto, the sprawling ghetto outside Johannesburg, virtually ignored the boycott call. They crowded buses and trains as usual to commute to work in Johannesburg. A planned memorial service in a church in Soweto was called off by Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, the black churchman who is secretary-general of the South African Council of Churches. He said church leaders did not want to expose worshippers to possible police action.

A policeman was fatally stabbed taking part in a baton charge against demonstrating blacks in Cape Town late Sunday, and Police Commissioner, Gen. Mike Geldenhuys, told reporters he would not allow police officers to be assaulted and murdered.

"If they (demonstrators) don't want to listen to reason other methods will be used to maintain law and order," he said.

Police patrolled Soweto's streets maintaining a low profile today following disturbances Sunday when some 100 black youths were locked out of a memorial service at a Roman Catholic church for the hundreds who died in the 1976 riots. Sporadic skirmishing went on for about five hours until dusk and police occasionally fired tear gas to disperse the crowds.

The church was locked because of a government order last Friday banning all gatherings of more than 10 persons, an apparent attempt to prevent any violence before and during the Soweto anniversary. The ban lasts until the end of the month.

The Soweto riots broke out in the township of 2 million after black students rebelled against a government order that they learn Afrikaans, the language of the Dutch settlers. Violence spread to other black ghettos in this nation of 26 million, 19 million of whom are black.

By the time the fighting subsided in February 1977, some 575 people died and 3,900 were injured, the government says. Black journalists say more than 700 died. Meanwhile, the government order on Afrikaans was lifted.

The Soweto anniversary follows months of unrest, including the bombing of refinery plants two weeks ago, transportation strikes and a school boycott by black and mixed-race students.

The two-month old school boycott began with protests from mixed-race students against inequalities in public education. Under the government's official policy of apartheid, or racial segregation, $800 is spent annually on educating white students while $400 is spent on those of mixed-race.

There have been sporadic demonstrations during the boycott and police shot and killed two mixed race students during one rock-throwing incident.

In a commentary in the Post, the country's major black newspaper editor Percy Qoboza, one of South Africa's most articulate blacks, wrote that "The rulers of this land have not been able to understand...Soweto 1976 did not make an impression."

"I could not help crying out loud. 'Oh South Africa. You beautiful land. What crime have you committed to be cursed with rulers whose deep sensitivity and human compassion have been dulled with the scourge of racism.'"

AT&T Juror Believes Juries Can Do The Job

CHICAGO (AP) — After four months of complicated testimony about "interconnections" and "multipoint service" in the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. case, juror Muriel Green says she still believes juries can decide complicated cases.

"I think you have to have jury trials if you are going to maintain democracy," Mrs. Green, one of the 12 jurors in the case, said Sunday.

The jury decided Friday night that the giant utility must pay $600 million in damages to MCI Communications Corp. to compensate for monopolistic practices that allegedly hurt AT&T's smaller competitor in the early 1970s. Under antitrust law, the judge tripled the award to a record $1.8 billion.

AT&T's attorneys have indicated they will appeal.

Besides listening to the complex testimony during the 18-week antitrust case, the seven-man, five-woman jury waded through nearly 1,000 exhibits and ruled on several highly technical points.

"The first time around it was all new and foreign to us," said Mrs. Green, a retired elementary school teacher. "None of us knew anything about it. But it was repeated to us enough times that I felt I had a good grasp of it."

The jury's foreman, James G. Barone, a 25-year-old employee in research and development for International Harvester, agreed.

"Maybe it seemed complicated for the people that were sitting there for a day or two," Barone said, "but if you were there every day, the lawyers took a lot of time in explaining what it was. It was very explicit."

Jurors were allowed to take notes during the trial, which Mrs. Green said helped considerably. She filled two legal pads with notes on the testimony. She also said it was apparent that the witnesses and lawyers in the cases were trying to make things clear to the jury.

She said the jury did not have trouble reaching its verdict, but it did have difficulty deciding how much in damages it should assess against AT&T. The jury's verdict of $600 million was two-thirds of the $900 million

CARS COLLIDE

Cars driven by Ella Daniels Ward of 408 Village Dr. and Elsie Yeingst Brignindi of Newton, Conn., collided yesterday at the intersection of Bancroft and Line Avenues.

Damage from the 12:12 p.m. mishap was estimated at $1,200 to the Ward car and $975 to the Brignindi vehicle.

sought by MCI.

"We spent a great deal of time on that," she said, adding that jurors spent four to five of the 20 hours of deliberations deciding damages alone.

She would not say how the jury reached the $600 million figure.

Rough Fathers' Day For Lindsay

WEST MECOX, N.Y. (AP) — A U.S. Senate candidate is used to bad breaks, but all John Lindsay wanted was a quiet Father's Day at home.

Lindsay, a former New York City mayor, was riding his bike from the family's country home here to get the Sunday papers when "this huge dog suddenly attacked him," said his wife, Mary.

The dog knocked Lindsay off the bike and a neighbor found the candidate for the Democratic Senate nomination sitting beside the road. An examination determined Lindsay's collarbone was broken.

Lindsay was put in a neck brace but refused to be hospitalized during the family's Father's Day celebration.

"He's experiencing some pain but he's determined to have a good time," Mrs. Lindsay told the Daily News. Said Lindsay: "This was definitely not the break we were looking for in the campaign."

Unveil Secret CIA Efforts

NEW YORK (AP) — The Central Intelligence Agency's secret experiments to develop new espionage methods between 1965 and 1975 have included using trained otters, electric stun guns, calibrated blackjacks and marshmallow barrages, The New York Times reported.

The agency's research and development staff also was interested in the secret life of plants, peace pills, an investigation of "bioplasma fields" and electroslap.

The information was contained in about 3,000 heavily censored pages of studies and documents related to CIA activities during the ten-year period, the newspaper reported in today's editions. It was made public in the agency's Langley, Va., headquarters as a result of a Times request under the Freedom of Information Act.

Which ideas were developed and which were discarded is not known, the Times said, because the agency refused to comment on the documents. Many details, proper names and titles were deleted from the papers, leaving very general descriptions, the Times reported.

In one project, the CIA apparently attempted to teach seals, otters, dogs, cats and other animals to carry explosives or microphones to places humans could not reach. Otters seemed to be the favorite since they traveled on both land and in water, the Times said.

Other projects included "a study of incapacitating darts," and "a flash blindness incapacitator," using a bright light source to blind a subject. The Times said nearly all details were deleted for projects involving "a hand-held calibrated blackjack," plastic cocoons, taffy pellets and marshmallow barrages.

There also was a project describing a giant piston to be used in countering hijackings and terrorists, the Times said. The piston was to be incorporated in an airplane pilot's seat. When a hijacker entered the flight deck, the pilot would trigger a 25-pound piston that would knock the hijacker back through the door.

As in past documents, there were references to Project OFTEN, which the agency jointly started in 1968 with the Army Chemical Corps at Edgewood, Md., to study the effects of rare drugs, the Times said.

In studying bioplasma fields, or extremely weak electrical forces surrounding both inanimate objects and humans, the agency apparently tried to determine if extrasensory perception existed and could be used to "read" enemy agents' thoughts.

Last Supper Wall Cracks

MILAN, Italy (AP) — A six-foot crack has opened on one side of the wall on which Leonardo da Vinci's famous masterpiece "The Last Supper" is painted, art officials said today.

The fissure, half an inch wide, is on the right side of the painting just inches from the figure of the Apostle John. Officials, who declined to be identified, would not say immediately how much of the crack is in the painting itself.

The crack is only the latest of many problems that have troubled the work of art since it was painted in 1496 in the refectory of the Santa Maria delle Grazie church in this major business center. Several years ago art experts discovered that a kind of mold was eating away at the colors of the fresco.

The crack was probably caused by vibrations from heavy downtown traffic in the area where the church is located or by a sinking of the ground underneath, officials said. These problems have also affected other city monuments, such as Milan's famous Gothic cathedral.

Leonardo's "Last Supper" - 29 feet long and 15 feet high - is considered one of the greatest frescoes ever painted because of its masterful use of light and perspective.

The fresco shows Jesus surrounded by apostles at the Last Supper. The Tuscan artist painted it for Lodovico il Moro, the duke of Milan and a member of the powerful Sforza family.

The painting has previously survived a Napoleonic invasion, when the chapel was used as a stable, and a 1943 bombing, which badly damaged the church but not the fresco.

Interstate Plans To Expand Here

Lawton Nisbet, vice president and branch manager of the Greenville office of Interstate Securities Corp., announced that Interstate will expand its Evans Mall facilities.

Nisbet pointed out that the planned work marks the third expansion in facilities and services for the brokerage firm since Interstate opened offices here in early 1968.

The renovations will begin immediately next door to the present location, he said, with a move into the new quarters expected around Aug. 1.

Nisbet noted that the new facilities will contain six private offices, plus a reception area and a board room area for those investors who watch the daily activities on the broad tapes of the exchanges.

The local manager explained that from an initial one-man operation in the Coffman Building, the present office at 308 Evans Street was occupied in 1970. He added that the services of five brokers offering various types of investments, including commodity futures, options, and stocks, as well as tax-free securities, are available now.

In addition to Nisbet, James Black, John Roney, Bob Bright and Joe Thigpen are registered representatives of the New York Stock Exchange. Mrs. Marion Biggs and Mrs. Margaret Peters staff the office.

Interstate Securities, headquartered in Charlotte, is the largest North Carolina member firm of the New York Stock Exchange, operating 44 offices in North Carolina and South Carolina.

Nicklaus Wants 5th Open Title

See related story page 11

SPRINGFIELD, N. J. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus has won his fourth U. S. Open golf championship and already is looking forward to going after his fifth.

The 40-year-old Nicklaus, winner of 18 major titles, made it clear after he captured the title at Baltusrol Sunday that he does not plan to retire any time soon.

He suggested, however, that he had thought about it over the past two winless years, admitting that at times he had self-doubts about his ability to play competitive golf and not lose.

"I want to stop (the retirement) talk right now," said Nicklaus after winning with an Open record-breaking score of 272, 8 under par and two strokes better than Japan's Isao Aoki, who also broke the Open record. "I'm not going to retire. Perhaps I should but I don't have any sense."

"If I wanted to go out with all the dramatics, I would say goodbye. But I kind of like this crazy game. And this little body has a few more wins in it. Hopefully, one or two more this year."

Nicklaus admitted it has been frustrating since his last victory at Philadelphia in 1978.

"The way I've played since, I've often wondered why I put myself through what I have,"

he said. "You often hear about athletes who stay around too long. I kind of wondered at times if I were in that position. When you work for a year and a half and don't win, you wonder if you're doing the right thing for yourself and your family."

"In part, I wanted to prove people wrong," he continued. "I also felt that a large part of winning is desire. You have to work at it. Last year, I didn't do that. It was an accumulation of several years."

"This year, I worked harder than I have for years. I said to myself, 'If I'm going to play, I'm going out and work.'"

Nicklaus said that now that he has won the Open, preparation for the next two major championships — the British Open and the PGA — should be easier. He said in addition to those tournaments, he will play next week at the Canadian Open and in the World Series of Golf.

Nicklaus played outstanding golf during the four days at historic Baltusrol, a par-70 course which plays up to 7,076 yards depending on the tee placements. He etched his name alongside the other winners of three Opens — Willie Anderson, Bobby Jones and Ben Hogan.

In the opening round, Nicklaus tied the 18-hole Open record of 63, set by Johnny Miller in 1973 at Oakmont, Pa. He also broke the 72-hole mark — which he set when he won here in 1967 and which Lee Trevino tied the following year at Oak Hill in Rochester, N. Y.

Nicklaus' opening 63 was only good enough to tie fellow Ohioan Tom Weiskopf. He came back the next day with a 71, to hold the lead by himself, then shot an even-par 70 to tie with Aoki, and finally a 68.

"I kept wondering all week when my wheels were coming off," he said. "They have been coming off for the last couple of years. I probably played four days of golf as good as I have in a long time. The first and last rounds were great and the two in the middle were pretty good but I wasn't making the putts."

In Sunday's round, Nicklaus went head-to-head with Aoki, as he had the previous three days, but he also was pushed by others, such as Keith Fergus, who finished in a tie for third with Lon Hinkle and Tom Watson, the greatest player of his generation. Nicklaus appeared ready to run away from the field when he birdied No. 3 to go 7 under and take a 2-stroke lead over Aoki and Hinkle, a 3-stroke lead over Watson and a 4-stroke edge over Fergus and Mark Hayes. He bogeyed No. 4 and No. 7 to drop to 5 under and into a tie with Fergus, who had made two birdies. They were one stroke ahead of Watson and two ahead of Aoki and Hinkle.

That's the way it remained, except that Watson bogeyed to drop to two strokes off the pace, as Nicklaus made the turn home.

"I was a little irritated after yesterday (Saturday)," said Nicklaus, reviewing his walk down the 10th fairway. "I kept thinking how I could have gone off and hid from the field if I had played the back nine well, but instead I gave it all back."

"I said to myself, 'I will have to play golf to win the tournament.'"

He birdied No. 10 and went on to play what he described "as fine a nine holes of golf as I've played in a long time."

It wasn't until No. 17, however, that he knew he had won the tournament. With Aoki breathing down his neck, Nicklaus maintained his 2-stroke lead after No. 16.

Nicklaus put his third shot about 20 feet from the hole while Aoki was only 3 feet away on the 630-yard, par-5 17th.

"I knew he was going to make his putt," he said. "I wanted to be able to play No. 18 the way I wanted to so I went after it."

Nicklaus rolled his putt into the hole and the Open was his, even though there was another hole to play. Both birdied No. 18.

Each was awarded a $50,000 bonus by a national golf magazine for breaking the Open record — although Aoki didn't know it until informed in the press tent — in addition to the $55,000 and $29,500, respectively, for first and second place.

"I wonder if the Open will end on Father's Day next year," said Nicklaus, whose youngest son, 6-year-old Michael, walked the four rounds with him. "I have now won the Open four times and all were won on Father's Day."

McRoy Still Ticking As Pitt Co. Wins

By LARRY SULLIVAN
Reflector Sports Writer
Pitt County southpaw Doug McRoy took a licking but kept on ticking Sunday afternoon.

The D.H. Conley product survived a first-inning line drive that hit his pitching arm and a sixth-inning collision with Washington third baseman Greg Sullivan and pitched all nine innings to register a seven-hit, 5-1 victory over the visiting Washington unit at Harrington Field in American Legion action.

"It was the first time I've pitched nine innings," the rising junior said after the contest, "and I'm tired. The line drive hit me in the muscle of my left arm, and I landed on my right hand after the collision. But it feels good."

The Pitt County bats backed up the pitching of young McRoy as the hosts tallied three runs in the first off Greg Sullivan, the winning pitcher in Jamesville's 1-A title-clinching contest June 6.

Coach Pat Smith's troops advanced a pair of insurance runs in the bottom of the eighth for the final out.

"Doug pitched a good game," Smith said, "especially in the heat. Those three runs in the first got us off to a good start. This was our third game in a row and we might be getting a little tired, but we have to take each game one at a time. We've got another game Monday (against Williamston at Harrington Field) before we get to take it easy for a couple of days."

It looked as if the game Sunday afternoon was going to be an easy one for Pitt County as McRoy fanned the first two batters he faced, using a tantalizing curve ball mixed nicely with a couple of fastballs. But Vic Walls, Washington's hard-hitting first baseman, lined an off-speed breaking ball back to McRoy, hitting the pitcher on the arm before he fielded the ball and threw out Walls for the third out.

Mark Shank started things off for Post 39 with a check-swing infield single and advanced to second on Mike Campbell's sacrifice bunt. Shank was awarded third on an interference call and walked home on Curtis Spencer's first of three hits in the game. Spencer moved to second when his liner to left was misplayed by Clarence Thomas. Will Barrett then singled to drive home Spencer, and Barrett moved to second on the throw-in. The Pitt County rightfielder scooted to third on Sullivan's first wild pitch of the inning and scored on the second.

Sullivan was replaced on the mound by lefty David Tyson in the second and the game turned into a battle of the southpaws. Pitt's McRoy allowed his first hit in the third on Thomas' infield bingle, but left him stranded on second as the former Viking retired the first, second and third batters of the frame. Pitt managed single hits off of Tyson in the second, fifth and sixth innings before finally reaching him for a pair of scores in the seventh. McRoy suffered his worst inning in the sixth when the visitors scored their only run of the nine-inning game while putting together three hits.

Danny Lilley led off with a single and Walls followed with a long double to put men on second and third. After a strikeout, Sullivan, playing thirdbase, slapped a single between short and third, scoring Lilley. Scot Cutler ended the inning as he hit into a Campbell-to-Mark Douglas-to-Jeff Wilson double play.

In the Pitt County sixth, McRoy singled with one-out and moved to second on Shank's grounder. Campbell then followed with a roller towards third and when Sullivan fielded it, he unintentionally undercut McRoy who was running to the bag. The Post 39 hurler landed on his right hand, spraining the little finger on his right hand. He taped the injury and went back to the mound to sew up the win.

In the bottom of the eighth frame, Pitt County tallied a pair of runs after two were gone to give McRoy some breathing room. The pitcher himself started the rally with a two-out double and Shank followed with a walk before a pair of wild pitches by Tyson allowed McRoy to score and moved Shank to third. Campbell then followed with a single to knock home Shank with the fifth run.

The first batter in the Washington ninth, Cutler, connected on a single and Smith was ready to relieve McRoy, but three straight outs followed, with McRoy, appropriately enough, making the last out when Don Burbage bounced a one-hopped back to the mound.

In going the distance, McRoy gave up the one run on seven hits while striking out 10 and issuing two walks. In his one inning of work, Sullivan yielded three runs on four hits while walking a batter. Tyson toiled for seven innings and

Who Is Eastern North Carolina's No. 1 Volume Dealer

The search for a new athletic director at East Carolina University is continuing, and it appears that the school will possibly go into the early stages of August before a new man is actually on the job.

The search committee headed by Chancellor Thomas Brewer met last week and went over the applications that were submitted to it. According to reports, over 60 applications and nominations for the job were received.

At its meeting, the committee pared that list down to 15 names. From those it is expected that about five will be chosen for interviews in person.

The committee is expected to meet again on Thursday, at which time further study of these 15 will be made. It is believed that the backgrounds, experience and qualifications of the 15 will be thoroughly explored by the committee before it trims the number down to five. How quickly that move will be made is only conjecture, but it will probably come later this month.

At that time, the five will be invited into be interviewed. Shortly after that, it is expected that the committee will reach its decision on who will get the job.

Dr. Brewer has stated that he hopes the committee will complete its work and name a new athletic director by early July. Depending on the personal preference of the new appointee, and the amount of notice he will be giving to his former employers, it could be as long as the first week or so of August before the new man arrives on the job.

In the meanwhile, Dr. Brewer feels that the athletic department is in good hands with the acting leadership of Dr. Ernest Schwarz, named as interim AD after the resignation of Bill Cain.

From all that can be gathered, however, Schwarz is not a candidate for the job himself. He is serving as a member of the selection committee, however.

While it is not expected that many of the names that will surface over the next few weeks will be widely known, at least one is being prominently mentioned. That is Clyde Walker, currently the athletic director of the University of North Carolina-Charlotte.

Walker, who coached on the high school level in Raleigh, later moved on to be an assistant coach at North Carolina before becoming athletic director at the University of Kansas some time back. He left that job, however, to return to Charlotte, saying he wanted to get back to North Carolina.

Officials at the university, however, will not comment on whether Walker is an actual candidate for the job. We have heard reports that he has applied for the job, and also that he has not, but has been highly recommended. At any rate, he apparently does loom as a candidate for the position, possibly the leading candidate.

We will learn the answer to the search in the next few weeks.

'Old Folks' Win At TAC

WALNUT, Calif. (AP) — It was "Old Folks Day" at The Athletic Congress championships, as two greats from the past — Madeline Manning and Brian Oldfield — turned in impressive performances.

The 32-year-old Manning, 1968 Olympic champion, ran the second fastest 800 meters ever by an American woman, winning Sunday's TAC competition at Mount San Antonio College in 1 minute, 58.75 seconds. She had set the national record of 1:57.9 in 1976.

The 35-year-old Oldfield, back in amateur competition this year after being banned for joining the now-defunct pro tour, threw the shot 71 feet, 7 inches, the second best mark in the world this year.

Although she's much older than most of her competitors these days, Manning, who won the first of her five national titles 13 years ago, is still aiming high.

"I am looking forward to competing in Europe," she said after Sunday's victory. "I am going after the world record."

Explaining her excellent condition, Manning said: "I am using weights now. Before, I'd never done weight work. Another big difference in my training is that I am now looking at the 800 as a sprint instead of a distance race."

Oldfield, a rumped, bearded giant of a man at 6-foot-5, 275 pounds, was his usual grumbling self after winning the shot with his revolutionary spin style.

"This whole meet was too slow, I felt everything was slow," said Oldfield, an athlete known for marching to a different drum. "And in my event, the officials were calling everything too closely. "But I was confident coming in here that I was going to win, never really had any doubt. There wasn't much competition for me here."

Jesse Stuart, another competitor in the shot, overheard, shot back an exchange, and he and Oldfield ended up in a shouting match.

Among the winners of women's events were Francie Larrieu, with a 4:12.72 in the 1,500 meters; Coleen Rienstra at 6-4 in the high jump, and high-schooler Sherri Howard with a 51.51 clocking in the 400 meters.

Ellenberger Trial Set Today

ROSSELL, N.M. (AP) — The federal court trial of former University of New Mexico basketball Coach Norm Ellenberger on charges of five counts of mail fraud, one count of wire fraud and one count of interstate travel to aid racketeering opened here today.

The trial was shifted from Albuquerque to Roswell by U.S. District Judge Juan Burciaga, even though Ellenberger had not requested a change of venue.

Burciaga said he moved the trial to Roswell because of extensive pretrial publicity in the Albuquerque area.

Ellenberger, 48, who was fired by UNM President William E. Davis in December, was indicted by a federal grand jury Feb. 14. If convicted, he could receive up to 35 years in prison and $31,000 in fines.

U.S. Attorney R.E. Thompson, who will be joined by assistants Rick Smith and Don Svet in prosecuting the case, said he expects the trial to last at least 10 days.

Ellenberger was the head basketball coach at New Mexico for seven years. His teams compiled a record of 134-62 and earned berths in four postseason tournaments.

The indictments stemmed from a grand jury investigation that began Dec. 13. The indictments are related to a scandal involving phony academic transcripts for Lobo athletes.

The scandal rocked UNM's athletic department last December, resulting in several basketball and football players being declared ineligible as well as Lobo basketball and football victories being forfeited.

The grand jury investigation that led to the indictments began after the FBI revealed in late November it was looking into possible mail fraud and bribery in connection with the preparation of junior college transcripts for Lobo basketball players.

The indictments centered on alleged activity involving the junior college transcripts of two basketball players, Andre Logan and Craig Gilbert, who transferred to UNM.

John Whisenant, a former Ellenberger assistant, also was indicted on four counts of mail fraud by the grand jury. But his trial has been separated from Ellenberger's and is to be held later this summer.

Ellenberger also has been indicted by a state grand jury on one count of fraud in excess of $2,500, 10 counts of fraud in excess of $100, and 11 counts of making false public vouchers. He has pleaded innocent and the state trial is scheduled to be held in July, after the federal trial is completed.

Pirates Win Pair

BUIES CREEK — East Carolina University gained a sweep of a doubleheader against Campbell Saturday night, winning the opener, 6-4, then taking the nightcap, 8-3.

The twin-killing brought the Pirate record to 4-3, while Campbell dropped to 2-5.

Campbell took the initial lead in the first game, pushing over a run in the bottom of the first. John Baldwin doubled and moved up on an out, scoring on Herbie Williams' single.

The Pirates came back in the third to grab the lead, scoring twice. Charlie Smith singled and Mike Sorrell followed an out later with a home run, making it 2-1.

Campbell came right back to score three runs in the bottom of the inning, however, regaining the lead, 4-2. Tim Handy walked and Williams singled. Kevin Barger reached on an error and Tom Montgomery doubled in both Handy and Williams. Ken May reached on a fielder's choice that nailed Barget at the plate, and Ron Brooks singled in Montgomery.

East Carolina added a run in the fourth. Mark Wakai reached on a fielder's choice and took second on a passed ball. Pete Persico singled, and an error let courtesy runner Jeffrey Warren score.

Then, in the sixth, the Pirates pushed over three to take the win. Wakai singled and Persico walked. Smith then cracked a three-run homer to push the Bucs ahead, 6-4, and they held on the final inning to gain the win.

In the second game, the Pirates took the lead in the third, scoring four times. Warren got a one-out single and moved up on an error. A wild pitch put him on third, and he scored when Sorrell singled.

Kelly Robinette reached on a fielder's choice, getting Sorrell, and Todd Hendley singled in Robinette, who had stolen second and moved to third on a wild pitch. John Hallow then cracked out a two-run homer.

Campbell came back with one in the bottom of the third. Mark Calcutt singled and Baldwin got a hit. Steve Williams hit a sacrifice fly, scoring Calcutt.

Pitt County Nips Goldsboro

DUDLEY—The Pitt County American Legion baseball team took a comfortable 8-0 lead into the ninth inning here against Goldsboro Saturday night, only to walk away sweating with an 8-6 squeaker.

The host club rallied for all six of its runs in the bottom of the ninth, three coming on a pinch-hit home run by White to straight away left field, before lefthander Doug McRoy, the third Post 39 hurler, fanned Grey Neal for the final out.

Coach Pat Smith's visitors used six hits to tally three runs in the second inning as Skip Hill led off with a single and was sacrificed to second by Carl Arnold. Pitt starter Jeff Porter walked and Shank doubled to drive home Hill. Mike Campbell then singled to drive home Porter and Shank before he was thrown out trying to score on Will Barrett's single.

Arnold led off the fourth as he was hit by a pitch and he scored after two outs on Curtis Spencer's second hit of the game.

Shank led off the four run sixth with a single and stole second before scoring on Spencer's third hit. Roger Williams followed with a single and both runners scored on Mark Douglas' double. Douglas scored when Hills' grounder was booted.

Goldsboro entered the bottom half of the ninth with only four hits to its credit but clubbed five in the frame to tally the six runs. The host unit also took advantage of a couple of Pitt County errors to make a run at the leaders.

The first two batters, Terry Coates and Neal, reached on errors with Coates scoring on Neal's errored ball and Wes Satterfield garnered a walk before Dave Fredericks brought both runners home with a double. Greg Ransom walked to put two men on before White answered with a three-run homer. McRoy then put the fire out with the strikeout.

Spencer and Barrett picked up three hits each to pace the winners while Shank, Campbell and Williams each collected two hits in the 14-hit Pitt attack. Coates and Brown picked up two hits each for the losers.

Porter picked up the win in going eight innings before being relieved by McRoy who picked up the save. Goldsboro used five pitchers in the contest and Eddie Thompson, the first, suffered the loss. He lasted one and a third innings.

The Bear Answers—In Style

SPRINGFIELD, N. J. (AP) — "Answer him!" "Answer him!"

That was the exhortation that Jack Nicklaus got all weekend from his familiarly flamboyant caddy, Angelo Argea.

On a heavy, humid Sunday over the rolling terrain of the Baltusrol golf course, the man they call the Golden Bear finally responded.

The king of golf is not dead! Stash away those obituaries. Forget the eulogies. Save those testimonials for another day. In winning his fourth U.S.

Open Championship — his 16th major professional title — Big Jack not only answered his keener rival, Tom Watson, but the entire golf world.

Watson, Player of the Year for the last three years and with a big lead toward taking the honor for a fourth time, had raised the question Saturday while pointing to his Sunday showdown against the guy he had beaten in dramatic personal duels for the Masters and British Open crowns in 1977.

"If Jack wins on Sunday, he may retire," Watson told the press. "I have a feeling it is going through his mind." Watson's comments naturally were passed on to Nicklaus when he appeared before the press about 30 minutes later.

"I will answer that question tomorrow when the tournament is over," Jack replied, with a faint smile in his eye.

But Watson's observation was mistaken. Nicklaus is sticking around a bit longer.

But it wasn't an overwhelming, nerve-stabbing triumph. Nicklaus carved his pars in almost boring succession and dared his rivals to come to him. None of them did. Not the classy Tom Watson. Not Isao Aoki, the Japanese magician who makes 20-foot putts disappear with an unorthodox stroke of the blade. Not Lee Trevino, the garrulous but gifted Super Mex.

This victory places him with only other three players in being able to win the toughest and most prestigious of tournaments four times — Scottish immigrant Willie Anderson, who did it back at the turn of the century; the immortal amateur Bobby Jones, and Ben Hogan.

Earlier they said Nicklaus had lost his knockout punch. Jack almost acknowledged as much when he said he had a good chance to virtually run away from the field Saturday yet failed to do so.

He told critics: "You can't go back. You can't be what you were yesterday. You have to work with the best you have today."

Thus, on Sunday, Jack's

sabre was patience, patience and poise. Determined, his boyish face a mask of concentration, he hammered out those relentless pars, 12 of them through the first 16 holes until he came to those two backbreaking finishing par-5s.

Birdie, birdie, a 68: victory. The champ had done it again — this time at age 40.

"I thought a lot this year about not playing anymore," Nicklaus said afterward. "But the way I played today, and this crowd... I have to keep playing."

Parsons 'Strides' To Michigan 400 Victory

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — It was an endurance contest, but Benny Parsons took it all in stride.

The 39-year-old driver, who 20 years ago was driving a cab for spare cash in nearby Detroit, picked up $24,800 Sunday for winning the Michigan 400 Grand National stock car race.

Parsons and the rest of the drivers in the 37-car field endured four hours and 45 minutes of waiting through a soaking rain to see if the 400-mile race would even be started. Then the winner managed to keep his cool through 25 lead changes, an almost disastrous flat tire and a three-car blanket finish in which he held off Cale Yarborough and Buddy Baker as darkness engulfed Michigan International Speedway.

The three top finishers ran single file, bumper-to-bumper through the final 17 laps of the 200-lap race.

"I really expected Cale to try me somewhere along the way on that last lap," Parsons said. "Then I saw that Buddy was right on his tail and I figured Cale would wait right to the end because the minute you pull out to try to pass in that situation, it's a three-car race."

"He came hard on the backstretch and the third turn, but I didn't give him much room."

Yarborough, who also lost his weekend bid for a NASCAR record six straight pole positions to Parsons, said, "I just got beat. He was strong all day."

"When he cut a tire we couldn't catch him to lap him," the second-place finisher added. "No one else could run by himself without getting left behind. Then he caught a caution (flag), caught up and won it."

The right rear tire of Parsons' Chevrolet Monte Carlo went flat suddenly as he led the field into the first turn on the 117th lap.

"The first few moves the car made I thought I was going to get into the wall," Parsons said. "But I got it back and managed to get around into the pits. My crew did a super job of changing the tire and getting me back out before I got lapped."

"Then I just tried to stay ahead of the leaders until the next caution. I got lucky and that's just what happened."

Parsons averaged 131.808 mph, leading the race eight times for a total of 75 laps. He took the lead for good with 28 laps to go. Yarborough, who won $16,300, led five times for 37 laps.

ITALIAN MONROE FAN CLUB — Nostalgia has kept alive the memory of Marilyn Monroe among her fans in Italy. Film libraries are showing her

Another Wave Of Nostalgia For Marilyn Monroe Appears In Italy

By PIERO VALSECCHI
Associated Press Writer
MILAN, Italy (AP) — Italians are experiencing a wave of nostalgia for actress Marilyn Monroe 18 years after her death.

It has produced a "Friends of Marilyn" fan club, an opera based on her life and a flood of posters, T-shirts and cushions with the portrait of the blonde movie star.

The 300-member, Milan-based fan club recently campaigned successfully against the publication of pornographic pictures purportedly of the actress at the beginning of her movie career.

The club sued the Italian edition of Playboy and got a seizure order against the magazine nationwide by a judge in Tuscany. He ruled the pictures were obscene and offensive to the memory of the dead.

Following up its success, the club filed a request to authorities in the United States to reopen investigations and give more details about Marilyn's death.

The actress committed suicide in her home on the outskirts of Los Angeles in 1962.

"Industry is exploiting the nostalgia for Marilyn," said Renzo Bailini, a spokesman for the club. "The interest of club members and of Italian youths is in the days of the Kennedys, of the great ideological hopes."

Teen-agers have put up Marilyn posters in their bedrooms and pasted her portrait on their motorbikes. Boutiques catering to young people are decorated with Marilyn's life-size wooden figures and giant posters.

Local film libraries are showing Marilyn's movies and a young Italian artist wrote a Marilyn Monroe opera, which was performed by the Rome opera company to mixed reviews.

The Milan club has organized an exhibition of Marilyn posters, pictures and documents.

"It is amazing that the myth of a great and unlucky actress is booming among young people who have hardly seen her movies but who have idealized her just the same," Bailini said.

Share Seclusion For Honeymoon

BRANFORD, Conn. (AP) — Cartoonist Garry Trudeau pulled his usual curtain of seclusion around himself and his bride, NBC-TV "Today" show co-host Jane Pauley, as they enjoyed their first day of marriage on an island that sparkled under sunny skies.

They were married Saturday in a ceremony attended by about 40 people and they attended a wedding breakfast Sunday. It was not known whether they planned to remain on Trudeau's private island off Branford or to travel on a honeymoon.

The 8:30 p.m. wedding was held on the waterfront outside the Pulitzer Prize-winning cartoonist's home. It

Veterans In Disney Drama

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Margaret O'Brien and Kathleen Nolan, both veteran actresses when they were in their teens, will co-star in Walt Disney Productions' two-hour TV drama "Amy-On-The-Lips."

Co-starring with O'Brien and Nolan will be Jenny Agutter in the title role of a young woman who teaches hearing impaired children at a school for the deaf and blind.

Filling out the cast are Barry Newman and Nanette Fabray.

Huston Directs WWII Story

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Sylvester Stallone will co-star with Michael Caine and Max Von Sydow in "Escape to Victory" with crusty John Huston in the director's chair.

"Escape to Victory," based on World War II Allied prisoners forced to play the Nazi all-star soccer team in a life-and-death-match, will be the most ambitious American film ever produced in Hungary.

Ultimate Documentary In Self-Indulgence Set

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tonight, PBS documents the ultimate self-indulgence: Suicide, for fun and liberation.

Jo Roman was a New York artist who decided to eat a deadly quantity of sleeping pills rather than leave the details of her exit to fate. "Rational suicide," she called it; rational, because she felt "no desire to kill or injure or maim."

The accident of breast cancer galvanized her loose plans to die before age 70, and in 1978, at the age of 61, she began her "rational suicide project" in earnest.

On her 62nd birthday, she and her psychiatrist husband invited friends to their Upper West Side brownstone to contemplate her suicide. They also invited a videotape camera, and this is where "Choosing Suicide" begins.

What we see is a hip cocktail party gone haywire; with Jo Roman regally at the center, the grim revelers try to wash down the horrible aspect of the circumstance with champagne and goodly portions of psychobabble.

"Rational suicide is an option in life," says Jo, "that can be life-liberating and enriching." The woman sitting cross-legged at Jo's feet nods her head in affirmation, like a jazz aficionada listening to a Charlie Parker sax solo.

"You're an extraordinary planner," one of the guests offers in tribute. "I can't imagine anyone who could bring the project off with more skill, efficiency, grace..."

"...and artistry," chips in another.

"...and artistry," the first continues. "At the same time, I must confess there's something in me that's at war with this."

Another friend, Murray, is less inclined to embroidery. "There ain't no way," says Murray, "that I'm going to accept that there's a greater responsibility or understanding of death by committing suicide."

You are thankful for Murray, a Dylan Thomas among trendies, begging his friend to rage against the dying of the light.

Alas, the others, for the most part, applaud Jo's going gentle into that good night. "Your dying is going to be maybe the greatest creative act you ever did," encourages one friend.

And so it goes, switching later to a gathering of "the family circle," where the ritual of sanitizing self-destruction is repeated.

One needn't be especially optimistic about life to sense there is something wrong here. Jo Roman could have fought cancer (an autopsy shows the disease wasn't as profoundly advanced as she supposed), she could have, as her brother-in-law tearfully implored her to do, given life to another painting or 10 paintings. She wanted to die instead, and she did.

But the way she did it — detailing her plans in letters to 60 friends, grandly playing before the camera and her family, contriving a camouflage rationale — offends life, rather than "clarifying life," as she claimed.

What you confront in this documentary is death shorn of its tragedy, and that is ugly.

Jo Roman wrote her own obituary for the New York Times, but offered a better one in this casual remark made to the camera:

"There are some very interesting things about dying. There's sweetness and sorrow and fun..."

"...And some of it's very boring."

So we see. Did we need to?

Grand Jury Change Is Goal Of Chief Justice

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Chief Justice Joseph Branch has called for changes in North Carolina's grand jury system to update its work and eliminate some duplication, but some officials say the constitutional amendment to implement any change might be difficult to obtain.

"Some people might be concerned that they're losing the protection of having the right to go before a grand jury before they're brought to trial," said L. Poindexter Watts, assistant director of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill.

Watts, a specialist in criminal law and procedure, said that, "to get something done on changing the system now would take a coalition of groups who would be willing not only to propose a change, but push to get the constitutional amendment done."

Branch, who first suggested changes in the jury system last month, said he favors increased use of preliminary hearings in District Court. He said he sees no necessity for a grand jury to have to examine a case that already has been before a District Court judge who found merit for prosecution.

State law mandates that serious criminal cases go before grand juries, even if a District Court judge has issued a ruling.

"I think we might amend things so that (grand jury) action would not be necessary in non-capital cases," Branch said. "I think that might probably help expedite the trial of a lot of cases, and I am in favor of doing anything you can about streamlining things without taking away the rights of the accused."

Watts also expressed doubts about the efficiency of the grand jury system, which meets in closed session. Not even the district attorney is allowed in the jury room, and the jurors pose all questions asked of witnesses.

"If it is a big or complicated investigation, the grand jury can't do it. They are amateurs," Watts said.

Watts worked with a state commission in the early 1970s that redrafted the state's criminal code. That commission also considered changes in the grand jury system.

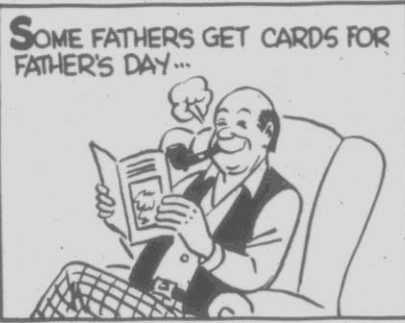

"They finally decided to just leave the system alone, because it would require a constitutional amendment," Watts said.

Tight Security For Klan, Nazi Trial

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — As six Ku Klux Klansmen and American Nazis awaited the start of their murder trial today, police and sheriff's deputies drew a heavy, court-ordered security net around the Guilford County Courthouse.

The six — and five others who will be tried later — are each charged with murder and felonious rioting in the killings last November of five Communist Workers Party sympathizers who were leading an anti-Klan rally.

If convicted in the trial — which is expected to set local records in its length, and its tensions — the six could be sentenced to life in prison or to the gas chamber.

As the Klan-Nazi trial begins in a windowless, third-floor courtroom, five CWP supporters are to be arraigned today on charges of felonious rioting. The charges stem from the same bloody confrontation seven months ago between the two extremist groups.

The CWP scheduled a news conference today on the courthouse steps, despite a court order banning demonstrations within 300 feet of the building. They planned to read a statement terming the Klan-Nazi trial a "legal coverup" and a "sham."

Klan leaders said they planned no protest, but one member said that he and other Klansmen would be in the courtroom to demonstrate "support for our people."

"I'm going to sit and watch," said Imperial Wizard Joe Grady of the Winston-Salem-based White Knights of Liberty. "I'm not going to bear any arms. I'm going to obey the laws of Greensboro although I think this was a shaft job from the very beginning."

Superior Court Judge James Long, who will preside, ordered sheriff's deputies to search everyone who enters his courtroom. He also ordered that the room be searched every morning and during each recess in the proceedings.

A special police squad has been detailed to patrol outside the eight-year-old brick and concrete courthouse until the trial ends. That could be as long as six months, according to District Attorney Michael Schlosser, who said, "This is as complex a case as has ever come to trial in Guilford County."

The six defendants have pleaded innocent to five counts each of first-degree murder and one count each of felonious rioting. The accused are:

David Wayne Matthews, 24, Newton; Lawrence Gene Morgan, 27, and Coleman Blair Pridmore, 36, both of Lincolnton; Jerry Paul Smith, 32, Maiden; Roland Wayne Wood, 34, and Jack Wilson Fowler, 27, both of Winston-Salem.

Fowler was jailed without bail, but the five others were freed on bond. They filed quietly into the county jail Sunday night, carryin small suitcases, brown paper bags full of clothing and suits on hangers under clear plastic.

Under an order by Long, the five men will live in the jail on weeknights, but will be free to return home on weekends. Defense attorneys said the judge's order was prompted by concern over the cost to the defendants of commuting to Greensboro or staying in a motel; all the men are represented by court-appointed attorneys because they said they could not afford to hire counsel.

Several of the men's wives wept Sunday night. Jerry Paul Smith's wife Frances sat on her husband's lap, gently stroking his bare arm as she wiped away tears. Her husband, a muscular man wearing a silver-plated belt buckle bearing the initials "CSA" for Confederate States of America, handed her his straw cowboy hat with a kiss before he entered the jail.

On Saturday night, Pridmore addressed a Klan rally organized by Grady in Walkertown near Winston-Salem. He told about 75 supporters that, if he is convicted and sentenced to death, he will consider that he's dying for his country in the fight against communism.

Grady's rally exploded in panic when gunfire erupted as the Klansmen marched around a flaming cross. Later, Grady said he fired into the woods after one participant stumbled over four black men who surreptitiously watching the gathering.

"It was sort of like dealing with somebody in the watermelon patch," Grady said Sunday. "I don't want anybody to get killed ... especially while this trial is going on in Greensboro. It would make us look real bad."

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
1980 by Chicago Tribune

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AKJ1076 ♥K985 ♦74 ♣8

The bidding has proceeded:

East South West North

1 ♦ 1 ♠ Pass 1 NT

Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—You have a great deal more than you need for a simple overcall, so we would not pass. However, your distributional features suggest that the hand will play better in a suit. While there is the possibility of a 4-4 heart fit, we would give up on that in order to show our playing strength by jumping to three spades, which, incidentally, is invitational and not forcing.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠A965 ♥K1087 ♦K742 ♣6

The bidding has proceeded:

West North East South

1 ♠ Dble. 3 ♠ ?

What do you bid now?

A.—If you consider your hand as a supporting hand for partner's major suit, it is the equivalent of an opening bid. Therefore, you want to be in game. However, partner need not have four cards in each major for his takeout double. To avoid the indignity of playing in a 4-3 fit when there is a 4-4 fit available, cue-bid four clubs. That will force partner to pick a major suit, thus guaranteeing the best possible fit.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠6 ♥KJ95 ♦K1073 ♣KJ82

The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West

1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass

3 ♠ Pass 3 ♦ Pass

3 ♥ Pass ?

What do you bid now?

A.—So far, you have shown no particular strength when, in fact, you have a fine hand with an excellent fit for both of your partner's suits. We would waste no further time. Jump to six clubs to give partner a choice of contracts and to show a good hand with no first-round control. Don't worry about your lack of aces. Partner cannot possibly justify his bidding without at least three of them.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AQJ10 ♥A9762 ♦Q103 ♣8

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♠ Pass 2 ♦ Pass

2 ♥ Pass 2 NT Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—Because of the singleton club, we are reluctant to consign this hand to three no trump—a suit contract may be better. Since we have support for partner's suit which has not yet been shown, a bid of three diamonds now is a standout. This could prove awkward, though, if partner follows with a preference to three spades.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠KJ85 ♥Q1062 ♦87 ♠A96

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

Pass 1 ♦ 1 ♥ 1 ♦ ?

What action do you take?

A.—You are somewhere between a simple raise to two hearts and an invitational jump to three. We like the position of our spade honors behind East, and at this vulnerability the rewards for bidding game are great. So we would stretch a mile and jump to three hearts.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠AJ92 ♥K104 ♦AJ76 ♣J6

The bidding has proceeded:

South West North East

1 ♠ Pass 2 ♣ Pass

2 ♦ Pass 2 ♥ Pass

2 NT Pass 5 ♠ Pass ?

What action do you take?

A.—What started out as a minimum opening bid has improved enormously in value. Partner should have eleven cards in the two suits he bid. Your king of hearts assumes the value of an ace, and your two aces take care of partner's losers in the side suits. Also, your jack of clubs could prove to be an asset. We would bid six even if our lives depended on it!

Good Mechanic Is Prime Need

AUTO REPAIRS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)

— With car repair costs on the rise, finding a good mechanic is important, according to Fram Corp., a manufacturer of auto products.

The firm recommends taking these steps to find a competent mechanic:

— Talk with friends about where they get theirs cars fixed.

— Visit the shop you might want to use.

— Ask about certified mechanics. More good mechanics are voluntarily taking competency tests.

— Look at the condition of test equipment and tools. Are they neat?

— Be wary of mechanics who give curbside diagnoses.

— Ask for a price estimate before work is performed.
