Reagan Nominated And Selects Bush

DETROIT (AP) - Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan broke precedent early today at an unexpectedly dramatic session of the GOP National Convention and personally told the emotionally charged delegates that he had chosen former rival George Bush as his running mate.

President Gerald R. Ford had agreed to accept second place on the ticket. But abruptly word came from Reagan that Bush was the man.

The traditional demonstration when Reagan's name was placed before the convention - the blaring horns, the flags, balloons, signs and banners - seemed commonplace next to the vice presidential drama that dominated the proceedings throughout the night and then came to a stunning midnight climax.

After the presidential roll call on which Reagan received 1,939 of the 1,994 delegate votes, convention officials confirmed that Reagan planned to visit the hall.

Shortly before midnight, word suddenly reached the hall that negotiations between Reagan and Ford aimed at getting Ford on the ticket had fallen through and that Bush would be the vice presidential nominee.

"It was a total surprise to me," Bush told reporters later.

"It's an enormous compliment," he said. "I feel honored by it and I told him I would do what all Republicans should do, enthusiastically support this platform, and secondly, I told him I would work, work, work, for his election."

Bush told the reporters that "you people were circulating a lot of rumors out there" and then added "and, indeed, Governor Reagan confirmed that Gerald Ford, for whom he has enormous respect and for whom I have enormous respect, gave some indication early on there could be some interest there."

Reagan's decision on a running mate will be ratified by the convention tonight at its final session.

Reagan and Bush will deliver their acceptance speeches after the balloting on the vice presidential nomination.

The Republicans' new presidential nominee told the delegates that it was true that a number of Republican leaders had urged Ford to join the ticket.

"It is true also that we have gone over this and over this and over this and he and I have come to the conclusion that he can be of more value as the former president campaigning his heart out, which he has pledged to do, and not as a member of the ticket," he said.

"I have asked and am recommending to this convention that tomorrow when our session reconvenes that George Bush..." The rest of the sentence was drowned by a roar of approval from the convention floor.

Whether it was planned or just came out that way, the session brought a moment of extraordinary drama to a convention that until Wednesday night had been as tightly scripted as a Hollywood movie.

All day there were rumors of efforts to convince Ford to reverse his decision against taking second place on a Reagan ticket.

When the session convened at 6:30 p.m., the delegates quickly learned that Ford had indicated in television interviews that he was reconsidering.

Not All N.C. GOP Delegates Are Pleased

By WILLIAM M. WELCH Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - The Reagan-Bush Republican ticket won mixed reviews from North Carolina's delegation at the GOP national convention today, but former Gov. James Holshouser was among the happy.

"I think it'll be a winning ticket," Holshouser said after Ronald Reagan told the jammed convention that George Bush was who he wanted for a running mate.

"It's been a night of surprises," said Holshouser, referring to the disappointment of conservative allies of Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who said they had been led to believe former President Ford would be the choice.

"There's been a significant amount of support for Bush in the North Carolina delegation," he said. "I've said all along I'll vote for Ronald Reagan's choice."

GOP candidate for governor I. Beverly Lake Jr. called it a surprise following indications Ford was the choice. John East, the GOP candidate for Senate, said he would have other preferences.

"It isn't my first choice, but I think the Reagan-Bush ticket will be a strong ticket nationwide," said East, who is not a voting delegate but sits on the convention floor as a member of Republican National Committee.

One who was enthusiastic was state Rep. Harold Brubaker, R-Asheboro, who said the strength of the Reagan-Bush ticket would spell trouble for Tar Heel Democrats - including Gov. Jim Hunt.

"Beautiful. It's beautiful," he said. "Hunt can start packing his bags."

All 40 of North Carolina's delegate votes were cast for Reagan for president as expected, but they came after Reagan had already clinched enough votes to win with Montana's ballot.

Helms, the delegation co-chairman, yielded the floor to Lake to cast those votes in an effort to gain the candidate some national television exposure. But at least two of the major networks turned their attention away from the floor just before North Carolina was called, and Lake missed his TV opportunity.

Dismiss Two Drug Charges

The state has dismissed cases against Marga Ross and June Miller Edwards, charged in connection with a raid by Greenville police, agents of the State Bureau of Investigation, and federal Drug Enforcement Administration agents in July 1979, in which four tons of marijuana valued at $3.18 million was confiscated.

In dismissing the cases, the district attorney's office said the evidence would be "substantially the same as offered," in the Douglas H. Ross trial, "wherein the jury returned a verdict of not guilty."

Mrs. Ross had been charged with possession of marijuana, maintaining a home for the storage of marijuana, and conspiracy, in connection with the case.

Mrs. Edwards was charged with conspiracy. Ross, a former Greenville policeman, was found not guilty of charges of possession of marijuana and maintaining a structure for the storage of a controlled substance in Pitt County Superior Court last month.

The marijuana was found by officers in a mobile home owned by Ross, located near his home on U.S. 264 just west of the city limits.

Rescue Squad Proposals Offered By Area C-of-C

By TOM BAINES Reflector Staff Writer

The Rescue Task Force of the Greenville Area Chamber of Commerce released yesterday its report concerning the fire-rescue system here and offered several recommendations for consideration by the city.

Recommendations in the report, which was adopted in a special meeting of the chamber's executive board, are keyed by a suggestion that "supervisory management training for appropriate city management personnel" be conducted.

The report also recommended that "more open-door communication should be encouraged at all levels from the mayor's office down."

According to the report, "The City Council should establish a policy decision concerning the future expectations of the level of emergency medical services for the city."

In addition, the task force recommendations stated that, "Personnel should be encouraged to discuss problems, improvements, and suggestions with their supervisors through the chain of command. If the employee feels that the chain of command has not adequately addressed his problem or suggestion, then he should have some recourse, such as the city personnel director or some other appointed official be designated for other contacts."

Stating that, "The city needs to utilize the experienced volunteer rescue personnel to bring the quality of service back to the previous level," the report listed six areas of volunteer participation for consideration. The task force said that: "Volunteers should be used in a planned, scheduled manner and not just for special events; volunteers could make up for shortages in personnel due to vacations, holidays, and sickness; volunteers could be scheduled to work during community and special events; volunteers could provide classroom and training assistance; volunteers could provide emergency and disaster assistance; volunteers have in the past and could again provide a supply of potential candidates for an employment pool for future needs."

Regarding the volunteer personnel, the task force suggested that they "could be assigned with paid rescue personnel, according to their levels of experience, to work regular scheduled shifts."

The chamber committee also suggested that, "The city needs to develop a cadre of rescue and fire personnel according to the degree of expertise and dedication to either field."

The recommendation stated, "However, the city should continue to require fire-rescue personnel to become EMT (emergency medical technician) certified. The city should also offer EMT training to other city employees such as the Police Department, Public Works Department, and Greenville Utilities."

David Duffus, vice chairman of the chamber's Public and Governmental Affairs Council, presented the report to news representatives Wednesday and explained that the purpose of the task force was "to study the levels and quality of service offered by the Greenville Fire-Rescue Department and to provide information about the fire-rescue system."

The task force report explained that several questions were asked of resource persons involved in the department's program of cross training. The committee (Please turn to Page 20)

Soviets, Chinese Take A Dim View Of Reagan

By The Associated Press

The two communist giants today took a dim view of Ronald Reagan's nomination as Republican presidential contender. The Soviet Union warned of an "adventuristic course in foreign policy" and China reiterated its concern over possible restoration of U.S. ties with Taiwan.

Limited early reaction to the Thursday night selection of Reagan and vice-presidential nominee George Bush, was strongest in London, where The Financial Times was sharply critical and The Times said Reagan was more politically moderate than he is reputed to be.

The Soviet Union's official Tass news agency said Reagan's political views represent "the right-wing of the party, coming out for increasing the arms race, strengthening of the American military presence overseas and an aggressive, adventuristic course in foreign policy."

"The domestic political positions of that wing reflect the interests of 'big business' and above all the U.S. military-industrial complex," Tass said.

Defense planks in the Republican Party's campaign platform are "aimed at achieving military superiority over the Soviet Union," Tass said. "Any attempt to gain military superiority is doomed to failure," it said. "The Soviet Union possesses an adequate economic and military potential and will not allow any change in the existing strategic balance."

China's official news agency, Xinhua, called Reagan a "right-wing Republican politician" who wants to protect America's "old friends" on the Nationalist Chinese island of Taiwan.

China has expressed concern that if Reagan is elected, he would re-establish ties with Taiwan, which the United States severed as a condition for establishing relations with China.

Reagan has denied he would try to re-establish diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

Government officials in Taiwan declined comment on the nomination. A Foreign Ministry official in Taipei said that because the election is "a U.S. internal affair, we, therefore, have no comment."

In London, The Financial

Times, Britain's business daily, editorialized:

"To many people, in America as well as abroad, the prospect of an uncompromising right-winger in the White House is not a little daunting, not least because many of Mr. Reagan's views seem simple-minded, perhaps even dangerously so. It is one thing to say that the U.S. needs to be militarily strong, so as to be able to stand up to the Russians, but another thing to talk of blockading Cuba or to reopen the issues of Taiwan and the Panama Canal."

It said anxieties persist "that Mr. Reagan's qualities may fall rather short of those which America needs and expects in its president."

"No one has suggested that he is a particularly intelligent man," the editorial continued, "or that he has a broad and subtle vision; he has no experience of Washington or of the outside world. He may be steadier than President Carter, but is he likely to do better with the Russians, with the Europeans, with the Middle East, with the energy problem, with the economy?"

PARVO VIRUS

I'm a dog owner and am concerned about this fast-acting intestinal virus that's being talked about now. Would you ask a veterinarian to give us the whole scoop on it? D. E.

We asked two - Dr. A. G. Thompson and Dr. Michael House. Both emphasized that there is no epidemic of this relatively newly recognized intestinal virus that is strictly a dog problem. It is not communicable to humans nor to cats or other animals, Dr. House said.

Both veterinarians said that they and every veterinarian in the area can vaccinate to prevent the disease. "Many people are getting their dogs vaccinated," Dr. Thompson said, "and we're glad. This, I hope, will prevent an epidemic here like Charlotte and Charleston, S. C. have had."

Signs, he said, (Humans have symptoms - animals have signs.) are incessant vomiting and fluid diarrhea, the combination of which quickly dehydrates and weakens the dog. Parvo is capable of killing a dog, he said, but it is treatable. Puppies under four months old and old dogs are the most likely to die from it, he indicated.

Since it's so highly contagious, dogs suspected of having it should be isolated, Dr. House said, and keeping one's dog away from other dogs as much as possible is also a good preventative measure.

The inoculation is two injections of Parvocin three weeks apart, Dr. House said.

"This is nothing to panic about," Dr. Thompson commented. "We're fortunate to have a very effective vaccine and most dogs treated quickly can be saved."

Winged Volunteers Sustain Life

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR READERS: While reading the Sacramento Bee, which carries my column, an interesting item by Max Miller caught my eye. It seems that while Tom Goodwin, a Sacramento businessman, was enjoying the view from his airplane one day last year, he was struck by the notion that pilots who fly for a hobby should be able to use their time, talent and aircraft for something more productive than just flying around, burning up fuel.

Then it occurred to him that many lives have been lost because vital organs and rare blood types wait while physicians and transplant centers try to arrange commercial transportation — a service that is simply not available in many isolated areas of the state.

Goodwin then conceived the idea of mobilizing the skills and aircraft of private pilots to provide a network of air transportation for human organs, tissue and blood — on a volunteer basis.

Thus was born the idea of AirLifeLine, a non-profit organization of pilots working with doctors and hospitals to provide free airfield-to-airfield service in medical emergencies.

So far 35 aviation pilots in Sacramento have enlisted. They donate their time, aircraft and fuel, and are available 24 hours a day. The organization's goal is to enroll 1,000 volunteer pilots for a statewide transportation network.

There is no charge to the patient, donor, physician or medical facility. AirLifeLine, 1005 8th St., Suite 302, Sacramento, Calif. 95814, depends entirely on donations, so if there are any "angels" out there, your tax-deductible contributions would be welcomed with "open wings." And wouldn't it be wonderful if this idea caught on in other parts of the country?

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

By ERMA BOMBECK

My husband and I are products of a mixed marriage.

He is left-handed and I am right-handed.

It's not a perfect marriage, but I do the best I can with a man who writes a letter like he is throwing out a net and who winds his watch backwards.

My mother was right. I should have realized it would never work from the night we met. A group of us from the newspaper where we both worked had gone to a restaurant for dinner. As I started to cut my meat, an elbow from my right clipped me between the rib cage and the kidneys. It continued gouging me until his fork reached his mouth. Something was wrong. My right hand and his left hand were working together. We were eating like we were laminated.

He laughed nervously. "I'm left-handed."

"It's okay," I said. "I'm Catholic."

We started seeing one another. We fell in love. His being left-handed didn't seem important then. When he turned on the drinking fountain and nearly drowned me, we laughed. When he worked crossword puzzles backwards, we roared. When he tried to open every door on the hinge side, we doubled over in mirth.

My friends tried to warn me. "Do you want to spend the rest of your life with a man whose bowling shoes have to be 'special ordered'?" My mother showed great restraint. All she said was, "Think of the children. To bring them into a world that prejudices against left-handers would be cruel."

But I didn't listen. At the wedding, when he put the ring on my finger and his elbow once again clipped me between the rib cage and the kidney, I was once again reminded this was to become a way of life.

Somehow, we managed to pull off 31 years ... 31 years of his insistence that he sleep on the left side of the bed so the clock would be on his left side ... 31 years of my trying to figure out which side was his backhand so I could serve a tennis ball to it ... 31 years of being the only one in the house who could use a wrench or a hedge clipper.

The other night he said, "Do you know what the most miserable part about being left-

Austrian Student Group Visits Area

By LEIGH COAKLEY
Reflector Staff Writer
Six Austrian students visited Eastern North Carolina this week in an six to eight week tour of American cities sponsored by national Rotary Clubs.

Existing all over the world, The Rotary Exchange Program gives young people the opportunity to travel to different countries during the summer. The students are hosted by local Rotary families.

This year, 40 Austrian students and 22 Americans are participating in the program. The groups were divided into four groups and are routed to different states. The group visiting Greenville will also tour Ohio, Texas, the state of Washington, San Francisco, and New York. This is their first trip to America.

Two members of the group interviewed were members of two groups. Other students are simultaneously visiting Jacksonville and Asheville.

Ranging from 17-22 years of age, these young Austrians are students of law, dentistry, economics, agriculture, and physical education. Clemens Beinkofer, chairman of the group and a law student, helped to plan the groups activities and served as an interpreter for those that had difficulty understanding the English language. Most of the students spoke English beautifully. The other students visiting Greenville were Verena Fellner, Susanna Feichtinger, Utz Dieder, Christopher Straberger, and Michael Ziegler.

Dr. Richard Taft is this year's chairman of the Greenville Exchange Program and also hosted several of the students. Mrs. Richard Taft said that the students were having a wonderful time and that they were "beautiful athletes." The students played golf and tennis here Monday and learned to water ski.

Beinkofer said that motor boats are forbidden in Austria during July and August. "We have very few lakes, and the ones that we have are overcrowded. Laws were made forbidding boats to protect swimmers and for ecological reasons," he said.

Below are some thoughts about what the young Austrians have observed here and about American in general.

"The thing that stands out the most to us," said Beinkofer, "is the spirit of freedom. Americans act very spontaneously when they want something changed. There's a great deal of individual involvement here."

"We have practically a zero unemployment rate in Austria," he said. "But finding a job depends on who you know and what party you belong to — you must belong to the right party or know the right people."

Student of English and sport, Verena Fellner, spoke of the differences in our educational systems. "All students in Austria have university, and all institutions are free. There are no private institutions there," she said. "This may become a problem because there is no one to take the lower level jobs. It's all a part of the Socialist program."

I hope we haven't been too harsh of Austria. We are just critical — and young," she said.

On the lighter side, Christopher Straberger criticized American beer. "When you buy a draft in a bar here, it's mostly water," he laughed. I think one of the highlights of an American's visit to Austria is our real beer. They drink gallons and gallons of it."

Jack Edwards, Rotarian and past governor of the Greenville Rotary Club, escorted the students on a tour of Voice of America Tuesday. They will have a well-planned schedule ahead of them until departing the state on Friday. At the end of their tour, all 40 exchange students will meet in San Francisco before returning home to Austria.

Billy Poor Investment

Billy Carter's registering as an agent for the Libyan government a few days ago may bring him into compliance with the letter of the law, but it falls far short of removing the indignation felt by countless Americans.

The fact that he insists that the $220,000 he received from the Libyan government is part of a legitimate half-million dollar loan that must be repaid does little to soften the impact. Viewed against the background of his cavorting with the Libyans for the past 15 months, one can hardly help view the whole thing as another influence purchase-peddling arrangement.

At the same time, there can be no doubt that the Libyans have not, and will not, get their money's worth. Billy says openly he has no influence with his brother in the White House so far as Libyan or any other government matters are concerned. The American people have known that for a long time.

The really sad part of it all is the embarrassment it brings to the office of the President and to the whole nation. But if Billy has no influence with his brother so far as government affairs are concerned, it is equally evident that the President has no influence with his brother so far as the latter's personal actions are concerned. To place the blame for Billy's actions at the President's feet is just absurd. Embarrassment, yes. Blame, no.

Whatever the arrangement Billy Carter has with the Libyan government, it is evident he will have no positive influence for them in the United States, with the White House or with the rank and file citizenry. Libya and other Arab nations may have made some good investments in the United States, but Billy isn't one of them.

Republicans Seem United

Republicans are individualist enough that it seems they are willing to tear themselves apart every four years rather than be flexible on issues.

This year, however, the Republicans are doing everything they can to come out of the convention with a unified front and behind Ronald Reagan.

Some of them have had to swallow hard on such things as the party's stand on the equal rights amendment. Nevertheless it looks like it will be a unified party as the convention ends.

Clearly the party loyalists recognize they have a real chance at the White House this year. They are wise in not blowing it with intra-party bickering.

Census Foul-Ups

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — If early signs of major foulups in the 1980 Census are any indication of a trend, there's trouble ahead for those who use the information.

Returns are sketchy at this early date, but a number of North Carolina communities are challenging the information compiled by the head-counters.

The problem is that the federal government went back on its word, and is not giving local governments much chance to double check the figures.

Rough census data was turned over to local officials for only 10 days in June, and they were supposed to check that information against their own estimates, even conducting a "windshield survey" of neighborhoods if possible, to see if the count is substantially accurate.

There are problems. First, this time for the first time the census was taken mostly by mail, with sidewalk census-takers following up only when the forms did not come back.

Discounts
There were administrative foulups, problems in hiring workers and supervisors, troubles with distributing the forms and getting them back, and numerous instances in which new communities or housing developments — even some long-established areas — got no census forms at all.

In the 1970 Census there were so many mistakes that North Carolina officials contend there was an error rate near three percent. After those mistakes were apparent, local officials protested strongly, and the U.S. Census Bureau promised to give local governments plenty of time to review and doublecheck the data, and make protests.

In mid-stream, the rules were changed. In March, the feds notified local people that the review of housing counts and head of the Complete Count Committee, says he can prove another 1,500 to 1,800 people.

Southern Pines officials are filing a challenge of figures putting the town's population at 7,454 instead of the 8,630 which they and state experts estimate.

Challenge
At Conover in Catawba County, the city government stands to lose more than $77,000 in state and federal revenue if census figures are was impossible; the maps for boundary checks to see that all areas were included in city counts were old ones; and that only 10 days would be allowed for the local verification.

And that typical federal foulup is further complicated by the procedure which says that better census data won't even be available to local officials until after the July deadline for claiming errors has passed.

Already, reports are filtering in of local errors and protests.
In Moore County, officials say they will challenge figures showing the county's population at 46,862. Ed Robbins of the Sandhills Area Chamber of Commerce

Old Values Alive, Well

DETROIT — The Republican National Convention winds up tonight in a veritable love feast. The delegates are swimming in a spirit of unity as thick as split-pea soup, but an ominous question hangs over the banquet hall: Have too many kooks spoiled the broth?

The question has preoccupied the working press through much of this convention. Put in the worst possible light, the doubts and reservations are to this effect — that the party has been taken over by a wild-eyed coalition of hawks, homebodies, Neanderthals, reactionaries, Jesus freaks and Bible-thumpers. The New Right and the Moral Majority, it is said, are firmly in charge.

Reason has fled its temples. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, a gray-flannel eminence, has fixed his fundamentalist mark upon the platform. The animals, in brief, are running the zoo.

These dire speculations are so much hogwash, but they have to be taken seriously. They are largely the product of an uneasy interaction between liberals in the media and conservatives in the hall. Generalizations ought to be avoided, but permit me this one: As a general proposition, key figures in the media are uncomfortable in the presence of the values that have dominated this convention. Try as they may to be objective, many of my brothers of the press cannot overcome their intellectual fidgets. Jesse Helms gives them the willies.

More specifically: The party's candidate, the party's platform, and the convention's unrelenting wholesomeness have reduced many of the media stars to the dark broody murmurs. These Republican delegates honestly believe in patriotism; they are born-again flag wavers, free enterprisers, apostles of missiles and motherhood alike. There is nothing sophisticated about them. They do not tease easy. Overwhelmingly, this convention believes — really, truly, believes — in lower taxes, less regulation and greater individual freedom. And such simple, straightforward convictions are more than some of my intellectual brothers can bear.

The platform does indeed bear Helms's stamp. Reading a few passages, even I myself get the willies. "We protest the Supreme Court's intrusion into the family structure through its denial of the parents' obligation and right to guide their minor children." If the topic is hogwash, that sentence provides a prize example. "We will work for the appointment of judges at all levels of the judiciary who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life." The pledge reflects an abysmal misunderstanding of the role of an independent judiciary. I could quote a couple of other eye-rollers.

But these things ought to be kept in perspective. Taken as a whole, the GOP platform strikes me as a consistent, forthright, altogether admirable expression of conservative doctrine. Its section on economic policy is quite first-rate. The platform's pledges on national defense go straight to an undisputed objective: superiority in arms. In addressing questions of welfare, the Republicans strike at the heart of the problem: A system of humiliating dependency has been created, in which the recipients of public welfare are not beneficiaries but rather victims.

Are such pronouncements altogether weird? Kooky? Nuts? Not in my own view. My brothers of the media at some point must consider the awful possibility that they may be wrong — that Reagan and his party's platform are closer than they are to the mainstream of American life. The old values — patriotism, morality, strong defense, limited government — these values are in fact alive and well beyond the Hudson and the Potomac.

Every convention produces its share of eccentrics, rabble rousers and fire-breathers. We have seen them here in Detroit. Every party platform is inflated by hot air. The GOP platform is no exception. But next month in New York, we will see the other side of these same propositions, as the Democrats

To the editor:

When the city council, in its lack of wisdom (and absence of two members) decided to forbid a referendum on the question of mixed beverages last Thursday night, it betrayed 61 percent of the Greenville citizenry who had said "yes" to mixed beverages last year, and it succumbed to the ugly clamor of a loud and fanatical minority.

In doing so, two of the four council members present cast grave doubts on their ability to represent their constituents.

While Messrs. Clark and Taft are to be commended for recognizing the right of all citizens to decide this issue at the ballot box, there can be no such kudos for Mrs. Green and Mr. Gray.

Both Green and Gray demonstrated an ill concealed disregard for the same voters who put them in office by denying them access to the ballot box, to say nothing of their constituents who favored mixed beverages. (Mrs. Green's precinct, for example, voted overwhelmingly in favor of this issue last year in the county referendum.)

Their failure to provide logical and coherent reasons for their negative votes makes their conduct even less excusable.

Having waited years to join the rest of the country and, recently, the rest of the state, it won't bother us to wait a few more months to vote on mixed beverages in a city wide referendum.

But the political irresponsibility and insensitivity of Green and Gray will bother quite a few people for awhile longer — until the next city council election, I expect.

Michael F. Moye

To the editor:

Several months ago I raised some questions as to why the emergency room at Pitt County Memorial Hospital makes people in pain or in emergency situations wait so long to be seen by a doctor. Since then I have learned two reasons for the delay in attention: 1) People abuse the services of the emergency room by going there for help when they do not really need emergency care — i. e. for a sore throat. 2) Private physicians do not always respond to their calls as the emergency room attendants feel they should. (There seems to be a shortage of physicians in the emergency room at times.)

I have been in the emergency room twice and admitted as a patient once in the past four months. All I have is praise for the hospital. I received good care. The food was good and plentiful. Even though there is a shortage of nurses who are inadequately paid, I received more than average attention. Through my experience at the hospital as a minister, family member, citizen and patient, I do see the need for a full-time chaplain. If we want to continue to be progressive, we must meet the whole needs of patients, staff and family members. A chaplain would be a great asset and is very necessary. All the ministers I have talked with are in agreement with me. I know our hospital will want to see that this need is taken care of in the near future.

We the citizens of Greenville and eastern North Carolina should be very thankful for such a fine medical facility. We have some of the best physicians, nurses, staff members and facilities in the country. Thanks, Pitt County Memorial Hospital for being our friend.

Summer Is For Reading

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent
RIDGEFIELD, Conn.
(AP) — Now is that lazy, hazy, happy time of year when the bee drones busily in the lilac bush, the smoke wafts enticingly from the barbecue grill and the columnist, rocking gently in his hammock beneath the tree of knowledge, draws up a summer reading list for his faithful followers.

A copout, certainly, but the hallowed custom has the dual advantage of lifting the reader's spirits with the sudden summer joy of books he or she might have overlooked, while at the same time relieving the resident seer at this end of the porch of the burden of finding something else to write about.

Some who sit in the scorer's seat may regard this annual imposition of book titles as the columnist's subliminal revenge for all the reading lists inflicted on him by demanding pedagogues at the beginning of an otherwise carefree summer away from high school, college or graduate school.

Categorical denials are in order here. The volumes herewith suggested were carefully designed to balance comfortably on the aluminum arm of a beach chair, to grace the verandah of an old wooden seaside hotel, to ride comfortably at anchor in the cabin of a sailing sloop while the cocktail flag flaps in the rigging, to tuck inside a knapsack or a flight bag. They bear no relation to those forbidding mimeographed reading lists, always in purple ink, that dampened the summers of our youth like a cloudburst at a clam bake.

I have settled on six books to brighten what's left of anyone's vacation, a delectable half dozen to add a little cheer and the cooling breeze of culture to the dog days of summer. The list begins with "David Copperfield," since I have made it a rule in life each summer to re-read or perhaps catch up on some classic neglected or hurried through or read at the wrong age or under pressure during my formal schooling.

Last year about this time, you may recall, I decided to fill a large void in my education by reading Marcel Proust's "Remembrance of Things Past" — all of it from "Swann's Way" and "Within a Budding Grove" through "The Captive" and "The Sweet Cheat Gone" to, voila, at long last, "The Past Recaptured."

Great titles, but it was a long hot summer.

"David Copperfield," probably the greatest English novel ever written, and certainly Charles Dickens' best among many masterpieces, should be less of a burden but equally rewarding. Although I have read it a half dozen times, its delight is like going back in time to a vanished summer boarding house and magically meeting again the same cast of dining room characters: Eccentric Great Aunt Betsey Trotwood, the tyrannical Edward Murdstone and his stern sister Jane who make life so miserable for young David, kind-hearted nurse Peggotty, the ever optimistic, impecunious Wilkins Micawber, the cringing, unctuous Urish Heep, the "lone, lorn creature" widow Gummidge and so many others.

If you didn't like it in school, try it again in a porch swing on a lazy summer afternoon with a pitcher of chilled punch at your elbow.

If you still don't like it, go back to TV re-runs and paperback gothics.

Best of all among the new crop of bestsellers I like "Maugham, a Biography" by Ted Morgan, who once worked for The Associated Press under his baptismal name of Sanche de Gramont. Maliciously gossipy, wickedly funny and at times touchingly sad, this definitive Maugham biography doesn't leave an eaves-dropped in chronicling the rise and slow decline of a young medical school graduate, afflicted with an embarrassing stammer, from popular playwright and world renowned novelist, who hid his homosexuality behind the facade of a Victorian marriage, to an aging eccentric who disinherited his daughter and adopted his male secretary-companion.

There are enough naughty tales, celebrity tidbits and witty society notes here to perk up a dozen dullish summer days, like Henry James seeing Willie Maugham to a streetcar in Cambridge, Mass., Maugham's fear of being known as "one of the stately homos of England" and what King Edward VII and "Within

Strength For Today

We often hear the term "wishful thinking", and usually in an unfavorable connotation.

Is wishful thinking always bad? Usually it is; for it consists largely of unrealistic daydreaming. But wishful thinking may be just another word for hope, and hope is one of the greatest of Christian virtues. Hope is desire cherished with a confident sense of anticipation. In hope we not only wish for something, but we have the strong conviction that we will get it.

Certainly wishful thinking of this type is a lot better than the dark, despairing cynicism and melancholy with which many people view life.

St. Paul declared, "We rejoice in our sufferings, knowing that suffering produces endurance, and endurance produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us because God's love has been poured into our hearts through the Holy Spirit which has been given to us." (Romans 5:3-5)

Reasons For Hope On Horizon

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — It seems, after all, that things don't just get worse and worse. Yes, there may be reason to hope.

The rise in property taxes, for example, has slowed. So has the rate at which housing prices are rising. And the domestic car industry, which has been spinning its wheels, may get some traction soon.

After examining state and local property tax collections in the 50 states, the Tax Foundation concludes that the 6.2 percent increase from 1977 to 1978 was the smallest since the recession year of 1974.

But that doesn't tell the entire story. Since then, Californians have passed Proposition 13, limiting property tax measures.

Other states have considered somewhat similar measures.

The swift rise in market values of houses was largely responsible for the feeling that real estate taxes had gotten out of hand. But now the rise in housing values has slowed, for the time being at least.

The National Association of Realtors, which monitors each month's resale prices, reports a 9.5 percent increase between May 1979 and May 1980. Two years ago the increases were averaging better than 13 percent.

That recent 9.5 percent annual rate of increase puts the median price of existing single-family houses at $61,200, but the rate of increase now is no greater than the inflation rate generally.

Moreover, that national rate hides great regional differences. In the North Central states, for example, the latest rate of increase was just 6 percent, and prices in the Northeast appreciated at only 4.5 percent.

When a trend is strong and growing it is easy to succumb to the belief that the direction and pace will be maintained. It was so with housing prices and real estate taxes. It is probably so about automobile sales.

U.S. carmakers are now suffering through their worst agonies ever, having lost a large percentage of their markets to Japanese imports. Chrysler exists by reason of a lien on the U.S. Treasury. Ford is losing money. American Motors is also having a tough time of it.

But now the nation's largest investment advisory service, Value Line, predicts the U.S. industry will make a remarkable comeback, beginning as early as next year, perhaps reaching record profits in 1983-1985.

That would indeed represent a sharp turnaround. Analysts expect the industry might lose about $1.5 billion this year, but Value line says profits three to five years from now might surge to $6 billion.

Explaining its views, Value

Line says Detroit can and will adapt to making small, fuel-efficient cars, and that it will reduce the import share of the market from 26 percent to around 20 percent.

Additionally, it foresees new-car sales being stimulated by higher replacement demand, by new households and by the demands of new drivers and multigenerational families. Because of the present low level of sales, the advisory service feels a growth in replacement demand is inevitable.

While that forecast might be construed by some as a mere wish and a hope, it does demonstrate that some fairly informed people haven't lost faith in the ability of the system to get moving again.

And remember, if the automobile industry recovers so also do the thousands of companies and millions of workers whose fortunes are linked with it. Yes, things can change, hard as it is to believe.

New Help For Younger Breast Cancer Victims

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Younger women who are given multi-drug therapy after surgery for advanced breast cancer have a better chance of long term survival, a panel of experts says.

Because of these advantages to women who have not yet gone through menopause, doctors should consider giving this supplemental chemotherapy to many treated for advanced breast cancer, the panel said Wednesday.

However, the group assembled by the National Institutes of Health said women with a less severe form of the disease that has not spread elsewhere should not get secondary chemotherapy.

For these women with so-called stage-1 breast cancer — a type with small, localized tumors and no evidence of spread to the lymph nodes — the adverse effects of drug therapy outweigh benefits, the panel said.

The issue is clearer for those with advanced cancer that has spread into the nodes of the lymph system. Studies indicate only 44 percent remain disease-free five years after surgical treatment alone, compared with 60 percent for women who had drug therapy after surgery, the panel said.

Although there is preliminary evidence this approach also may benefit some women after menopause, data is not conclusive enough to recommend the practice, the group said.

Dr. Stephen V. Carter, director of the Northern California Cancer Program and chairman of the panel, told a news briefing that some doctors may be overusing supplemental drug therapy, particularly with less severe disease. With stage-1 cancer patients, 80 percent are cured by surgery alone, Carter said. It is questionable whether the remaining 20 percent of patients will get enough benefit from chemotherapy to subject the majority of these patients to risks connected to the treatment, Carter said.

Doctors cannot tell in advance which of these patients will benefit from added drug therapy, he added.

The panel, which included cancer experts, a patient and consumer advocates, was charged with developing recommendations on the effectiveness and use of drug therapy to back up primary treatment.

The primary treatment for women with breast cancer is mastectomy, which is the surgical removal of the breast and varying amounts of underlying muscle and tissue.

Doctors then give various forms of secondary treatment — such as chemotherapy with drugs, radiation and hormone manipulation — in attempts to kill cancer that has spread to other parts of the body.

However, chemotherapy, administered for up to two years after surgery, is toxic to the body.

Major side effects include suppressing bone marrow which makes blood cells and possibly causing later cancers. Other effects can be severe nausea, lethargy, irritability, hair loss and emotional and sexual problems.

Questions remain about the effectiveness of each supplemental treatment, which individual patient will respond best to each therapy, and about balancing gains against side effects.

as low as preliminary data shows. City Manager J. Ed Robinette says the figures are about 500 people lower than it should be.

The census figures are critical in a variety of ways to government, to community development experts, to businesspeople planning future expansions and locations, to planners in a host of fields. Errors will affect funding programs, and will show up in national and statewide rankings of cities, thereby affecting civic pride for the next 10 years.

North Carolina had once hoped to edge Massachusetts from the nation's 10th most populous ranking, and could still do so if the error rate is proven unusually high.

The cutback in local review has been labeled "disgraceful" by state and national leaders of local government organizations.

Some close to the situation say preliminary census data is so far off base that to make it public would create considerable confusion and alarm. Bureaucratic mismanagement is blamed for much of the problem.

Mulligan Col. ...

mistress, Lillie Langtry had to say to each other on the subject of battleships.

After getting to know Maugham so intimately, you might want to sample a Maugham novel. Although he deprecated himself as being "in the very first rank of the second rate," his reputation is on the rise again.

Gore Vidal, whom I recently interviewed in Italy, elevates him to the first rank, ahead of Hemingway and Fitzgerald. "Of Human Bondage" undoubtedly is his best novel, but far too depressing for light vacation fare. Try "The Narrow Corner." In an exotic Southeast Asia setting, a sardonic, disbarred doctor and a delightfully dyspeptic scoundrel of a sea captain, afraid of nothing but his wife, observe together a torrid tropic romance. Great fun, marvelous Malaysian atmosphere.

For sheer enjoyment and English prose at its satiric best, discover or rediscover "Scoop" Evelyn Waugh's hilarious send-up of Fleet Street, the only great book ever written about foreign correspondents. Instead of the fashionable novelist John Courtney Boot, the London Daily Beast mistakenly sends its nature writer, William Boot, off to cover "a very promising liue war" in Ishmaelia. His most recent contribution to the paper, "a light dissertation on water voles," had begun: "Feather-footed through the plashy fen passes the questing vole."

And there the fun begins and never really ends, because despite the passage of nearly five decades, the ranks of foreign correspondents today present splendid targets of opportunity for Waugh's pinpoint bombardment.

If you don't know that Somerville & Ross (sic) were women, cousins, collaborators and two of the wittiest Irish writers who ever lived, then you have some lovely summer days ahead if your library has in stock "Some Experiences of an Irish R.M." R.M. means Resident/Magistrate, a circuit rider who presided over the Petty Sessions Courts in the rural south and west of Ireland, where as the authors allow "two and two are likely to make five, or three, and are still more likely to make nothing at all." Finally, just out for those who like to be au courant in their reading, ahead of the bunch at the cabana, there is "The Second Coming," the new Walker Percy novel. Percy's prose is always a joy, but this one even has a happy ending.

Revive Proposal To 'Dome' City

WINOOSKI, Vt. (AP) — Despite a rebuff by the federal government earlier this year, Winooski residents have revived a proposal to cover the city with a weather-proof dome.

City councilmen will decide July 28 whether the Winooski Development Corp. should try again to get money for a feasibility study.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development earlier this year denied a $55,000 grant for the study.

Mark Tigan, the corporation's director, expects councilmen to ask him to seek funding from the Department of Energy, the National Science Foundation or private foundations.

Simmering Tension In Miami Erupted For A Second Time

By ANNES CROWLEY
Associated Press Writer
MIAMI (AP) — A pregnant teen-ager was hit by birdshot, a policewoman was injured and public buses were pelted with rocks and bottles as simmering racial tensions in riot-torn Liberty City erupted for the second day.

Officials reported the situation in the northwestern Miami neighborhood was "pretty calm" early today following scattered sporadic violence as darkness closed on the area Wednesday. However, isolated incidents were reported after a crowd of black youths dispersed shortly before midnight.

Police won praise for their handling of the violence. But several Dade County officers, protesting understaffing, department leadership and the dangers they face in Liberty City, pitched their badges into a garbage can Wednesday night. They later retrieved them.

At the urging of police, black leaders called off plans to walk the streets Wednesday in an effort to calm youths in the neighborhood that was devastated by bloody rioting in May.

That rioting claimed 18 lives and caused millions of dollars in damages. On Tuesday, a white plainclothesman and four other Dade County officers were shot and wounded and 24 civilians were hurt by roaming mobs of black youths.

"It's quiet but not everybody has gone home," police spokesman Thomas Banks said just before dawn. "We still have a few idiots running around out there setting small bonfires."

Sporadic sniper fire also was reported, and a small arson-caused blaze early today damaged Liberty City's the James E. Scott Community Center, where some looting also occurred. A gang of black youths also set fire to several railroad ties in the area, police said.

Early today, Fulgencia Acosta, 16, was hit in the arm at "point-blank range" by birdshot from a shotgun. The pregnant woman and her husband got lost on their way home to suburban Hialeah and were fired on when they stopped to ask directions, said Lt. Robert Fortney.

Several black youths also were reported shooting at cars on interstate highway 95, police said.

Police closed some roads Wednesday night after a pipe smashed through the windshield of Officer Sheila Smith's patrol car and two Metro Transit Authority buses were hit by rocks from a black crowd.

Ms. Smith was in satisfactory condition with neck and chest injuries at North Shore Hospital, where the bus drivers and passengers were treated for minor cuts and abrasions.

Two white men were arrested Wednesday after they shot into a crowd of blacks throwing rocks, police said.

Most of the violence Wednesday occurred near the James E. Scott housing project, where more than 700 families live, as 150 youths lined the streets and threw rocks.

Two Latin men, attacked by rock-wielding blacks as they drove through the area at dusk, hit an off-duty policeman's car as they sped off in fright. The men were not injured.

Police cordoned off some roads leading to the area and kept freight trains out of northwestern Miami neighborhoods.

Black leader Marvin Dunn praised the police for using restraint, but said, "It's going to take the responsible people in the black community telling them this has got to stop."

Officers were upset by department policy forbidding them to disperse mobs with force.

"If they want to act like that, then they should be treated like animals," said patrolman Fred Sadtler.

A group of detectives tossed their badges into a garbage can at one point, and 23 of the department's 30 homicide detectives signed a petition criticizing police leadership. "In case the administration hasn't heard, we are losing the war," the petition said.

"I think our morale is not good," said Acting Chief Robert Dempsey. But he said the force has reacted well to tense, hostile situations.

"When the chips are down they rally and stand very tall for the county and the citizens," he said. "They didn't shoot anybody.... They're being rocked, bottled and sniped at. They are not returning fire and they are not overreacting."

Meanwhile, in Broward County, a Coconut Creek police officer was slightly injured Wednesday night when three black youths drove their car over his shoulder. Officer Steve Schumacher, 30, had been knocked off his feet by a shotgun blast.

The shot didn't wound Schumacher, who was wearing a bullet-proof vest. The youths escaped by driving over him.

Claim 'Big Ear' Spans Europe

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — The leftist weekly New Statesman claimed today that the U.S. National Security Agency is running a massive "big ear" spying operation on government, corporation and individual telephone and telex lines throughout Europe from a secret telecommunications center in northern England.

There was no immediate comment from U.S. officials, but both the British Defense Ministry and the Post Office denied the claim, saying the facility was a "relay communications center for United States forces in Europe, its main purpose being rapid and secure communications."

Journalists Duncan Campbell and Linda Melvern named the center as the closely guarded, 562-acre Menwith Hill base in remote moorland in Yorkshire County eight miles west of the spa town of Harrogate and some 170 miles north of London.

They said the center, run in close partnership with the British Post Office, is the largest and most secret civilian listening post maintained by the agency outside America. "Unless the KGB (Soviet security police) has something even bigger, (it) appears to be the biggest tapping center in the world."

Campbell, a communications expert, and Melvern wrote: "The base is so secret that even trivial details of its facilities are a secret from the United States Congress."

The two writers said that more than 800 employees at the center work round the clock "sifting the communications of private citizens, corporations and governments for information of political or economic value to the U.S. intelligence community."

"From its heavily guarded operations room a special high capacity cable runs underground to the Post Office microwave tower at Hunters Stones five miles away; this provides an umbilical link into the international telephone and telex system running through Britain. A direct tap which is placed on lines to France and elsewhere in Europe has been in operation for more than 15 years."

Campbell and Melvern said the operation plays "a much bigger role" in a "massive exercise in spying on civil and commercial communications."

Among unnamed sources they quoted were: —An ex-NSA analyst who said he had seen a document giving the base authority for "tapping the telephone lines to Europe."

—A high ranking intelligence consultant still working for the U.S. intelligence community who "told us that he was aware of Menwith Hill's elaborate telephone and telex tapping facilities."

—A former British military officer who had visited the center, which he said housed "hundreds of millions of dollars worth of computer, communications and satellite tracking equipment."

Campbell's earlier allegations in the New Statesman that Britain is running its own widespread internal eavesdropping operation embarrassed the government last February.

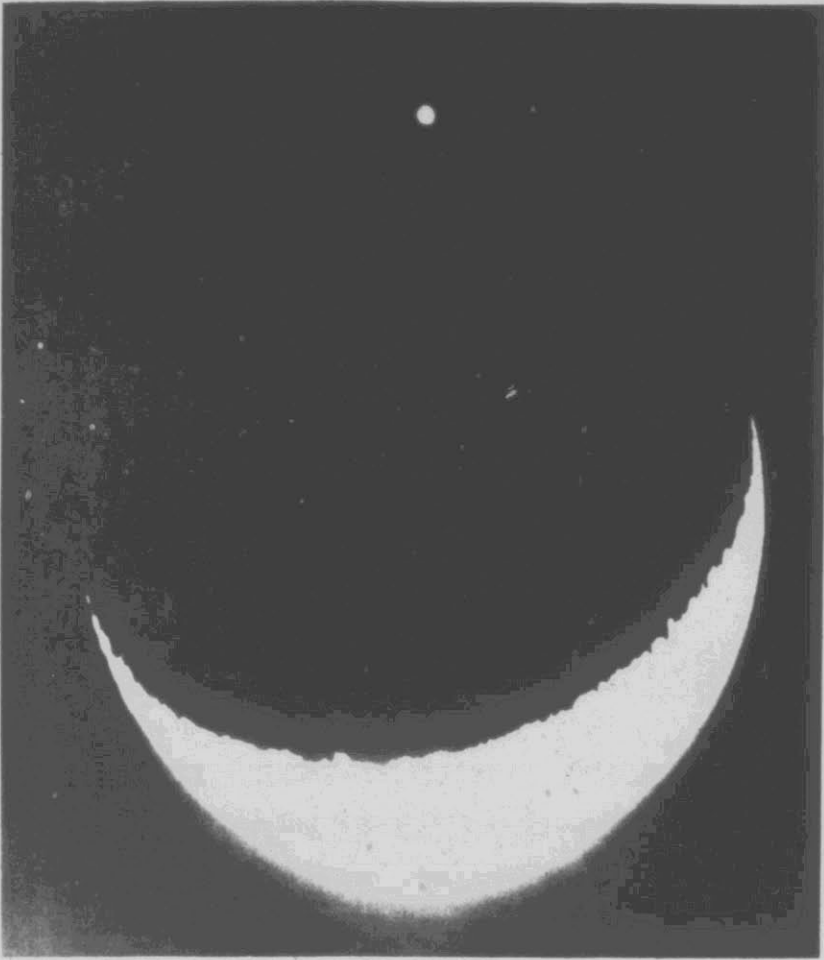

Campbell, 27, reported at that time that the British secret service and police based in London office buildings use a phone tapping and bugging operation codenamed "Tinkerbell" to spy on embassies, even friendly ones like the United States, and "thousands" of diplomats, lawmakers, union leaders and strike organizers. He said his sources included published material and "people on the inside."

The government denied charges that eavesdropping has grown so extensive in Britain that it is beyond government control and a threat to civil liberties. But shortly afterwards it appointed a senior judge to act as watchdog on telephone tapping.

AWOL Soldier Claims She Fled Harassment

ROCK HILL, S.C. (AP) — Two weeks after she went absent without leave from Fort Jackson, saying she could no longer stand sexual harassment by another female soldier, Pvt. Lisa Munn turned herself in.

The 19-year-old woman is in jail in Jackson, Miss.

Pvt. Munn told the Rock Hill Evening Herald in a telephone interview that she said she called her mother Tuesday morning because she was "so homesick. Mother told me about all the publicity and how things seemed to be moving now with the investigation."

So, acting on her mother's advice, she gave herself up that night. She said she hoped publicity about her case would help.

Army spokeswoman Lois Duke said the investigation into Pvt. Munn's charges of harassment is still in progress. "Action, if any, deemed appropriate by her commander will be undertaken once the investigation is completed," she said.

Ms. Duke said Wednesday that officials did not know when she would be returned to the fort.

Pvt. Munn said she is "scared to go back. I don't too long, she wrote Rep. Kenneth L. Holland, D-S.C., whose district includes the Fort Mill woman's York County home. Her mother said a sergeant "chewed her out" after she made the complaint.

Pvt. Munn has been in the Army about eight months. She had basic training at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and dental technician training at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. She was assigned to Fort Jackson in May.

Alice Munn said she first heard her daughter complain of being harassed while she was in Texas. She said Pvt. Munn said her roommate was bothering her.

The two were roommates again at Fort Jackson.

Pvt. Munn's mother said her daughter felt as if she were being punished.

"I know you have to sign an oath saying you have no homosexual tendencies before you can get into the Army. I can't understand why the other girl wasn't disciplined," Alice Munn said.

know what's going to happen and I'm afraid I'll be put in jail, but maybe now somebody will listen to me."

In the interview she said she fled the Army "after I felt I'd done everything I could in the system. Nobody seemed to care about me or my problem. I just couldn't stand being around that girl any more."

"I had to leave to preserve my own self."

Transit Funds Authorized

The State Board of Transportation has authorized Department of Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw to apply for $448,166 in federal grant funds to be used to assist in purchasing 37 vans and mini-buses for private non-profit organizations across the state which transport elderly and handicapped citizens.

The East Carolina Vocational Center in Greenville is one of 10 organizations scheduled to receive vehicles purchased with the grant money.

The funds will be allocated on an 80 percent federal, 20 percent local money basis.

Bradshaw said, "This program has greatly increased the mobility of our elderly and handicapped citizens. It's another example of what the local, state and federal partnership can accomplish as we all work to meet the special needs of our citizens through a comprehensive transportation system."

Deadly Heat Wave Still Has Big Area Of The Country In Its Grip

By C.W. MIRANKER
Associated Press Writer
Brief downpours brought a few degrees of relief to a half-dozen dry, hot states, but a deadly heat wave still gripped the South, Southwest and Midwest and pushed northward to raise its death toll past 800.

The mercury reached 99 degrees Wednesday in New York City, where one man was reported to have died from the heat. And in Washington, where government workers sweltered in 103-degree temperatures, the National Weather Service issued a 30-day forecast predicting above-normal temperatures and only light rainfall across most of the country through mid-August.

The unrelenting heat has caused at least 840 deaths in 19 states, according to an unofficial tally by The Associated Press.

The loss to farmers has topped $2 billion, with poultry, livestock, corn, hay, grain sorghum, soybeans, wheat, tobacco and peanuts all suffering from the three-week-long heat wave and a severe dry spell from Texas to the Dakotas.

Southern and central Alabama got some relief from the heat Wednesday as thunderstorms produced heavy rain and gusty winds. Montgomery had 100-degree heat before a thundershower pushed the mercury down to 75 degrees.

But temperatures reached 105 degrees in Birmingham and Muscle Shoals, 104 in Pinson, 103 in Tuscaloosa and 101 in Gadsden and Mobile.

Youths cooling themselves in open fire hydrants in Mobile pelted police with bottles and rocks when officers turned off the hydrants. Hundreds of open hydrants had drained the city's water pressure, jeopardizing supplies for National Guardsmen serving at fire stations because of a city strike.

In Illinois, the governor asked heat-relief centers to remain open as temperatures rose to 105 degrees in Centralia and 96 in Springfield. At the Menard Correctional Center near Chester, prison officials bought 20,000 pounds of Gatorade concentrate to give to inmates who are suffering from heat and lack of air-conditioning. The drink is advertised as a solution that helps replace body fluid. Two recent inmate deaths have been blamed on heat at Menard and a third has been said to be heat-connected.

Gov. James R. Thompson asked the state's Department on Aging to keep its air-conditioned senior citizen nutrition centers open as shelters from the heat.

Despite some scattered thunderstorms over northern Oklahoma and the Panhandle on Wednesday, there was no break in the high temperatures and the water shortage still posed serious problems.

It was 104 degrees at Gage, and 109 in Tulsa.

In Kentucky and Maryland, officials said the persistent heat was aggravating air pollution.

In Louisville, where temperatures reached 101 degrees, the afternoon air pollution readings were the highest of the year. The National Weather Service said Jefferson County would remain under an air pollution alert today.

In Baltimore, a state public health official said the heat and stale air had raised ozone levels. Officials urged the elderly and people with respiratory problems to stay in air-conditioned buildings.

Heat-related deaths in Tennessee have risen to 78, and Rep. Harold Ford asked the White House to include the state — and Memphis in particular — on the list of states receiving emergency federal funds.

Shelby County Mayor Bill Morris has asked Gov. Lamar Alexander to dispatch National Guard medical corpsmen to aid the elderly during the heat wave.

Wednesday was the hottest day in 37 years in Jackson, Miss., as the mercury soared to 106 degrees. Dozens of heat shelters began operations across the state after Gov. William Winter ordered sites opened in all 82 counties.

Elderly Try Cope With Heat

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer
WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The windows are shut tight. The blinds are drawn. A fan circulates air in a living room filled with the baubles of long life.

Outside, it's 107 degrees. Inside, where 85-year-olds Oscar and Mabel Clites live, it's only a few degrees cooler. In that kind of heat, the Clites say, inactivity is the best activity.

"We just sit around and try to keep cool," Mrs. Clites said. "But at 85, you're supposed to be retired, anyway, aren't you?"

Sometimes Mrs. Clites takes a mid-afternoon bath. Or she'll put a wet washcloth around her neck. She put her hair up in curlers one afternoon and left it that way. "It was cooler," she said.

Her husband, wearing an undershirt and long pants, will catch up on some sleep in his easy chair, the fan blowing warm air over him. Sometimes he'll take a sponge bath.

Living in a furnace isn't easy. The Clites are like thousands of elderly folks across the scorched Great Plains who are facing the fourth week of a heat wave without air conditioning — and with little hope for a quick break in the weather.

Since the Fourth of July, Wichita's high temperature hasn't been below 106. It's been 110 or hotter six of those days, and the nation's hottest city twice in the past week. The mercury rarely has dipped below 80, even at night.

Elderly people, many in failing health, often live on a string even in the best of times. They are frightened by the numbers of elderly who are dying in the sweltering heat. At least five in Wichita and more than 800 nationwide have died in this summer's heat wave.

Heat shelters have opened in cool church basements across the sun-baked midlands, but few people are showing up for help. Many older people don't want to leave their homes. Others aren't aware they are in danger. And some simply don't want to take handouts.

Oscar and Mabel Clites have turned down offers of help from the Red Cross and others. They say they're managing just fine.

"We might need help a lot worse some other time," Mrs. Clites explained.

They accepted a fan from Mabel's son a few days ago and soon expect a small window air conditioner from her daughter. But they figure a few more days of heat won't hurt them.

"We'd go down to that heat shelter, but we'd just sit there with nothing to do," said Mrs. Clites as she brings a tissue across her thin face to wipe off a trace of perspiration. "We have to be here to take care of the place."

The Clites supplement their Social Security and retirement benefits by renting out — for $50 to $100 a month — the four apartments they have carved out of their 14-room house.

They live in a three-room apartment. Between the two non-working television sets at one end of their living room and the working black and white TV at the other end sits stuffed furniture and tables teeming with trinkets.

As landlords, they always have work to do. But "these days we try to get our chores out of the way by noon," Mrs. Clites said. "Then we don't do much of anything."

Clites hasn't mowed the yard in three weeks. But no matter. It hasn't rained since mid-June and the brown grass hasn't grown an inch.

"I figure if God wants it watered, He'll do it Himself," Clites said. Mabel worries about Oscar and Oscar worries about Mabel. But they worry little about themselves.

"I'll tell him to get in out of the heat, but he don't mind me," Mrs. Clites said.

During the day, she avoids using her oven and hasn't even plugged in the old electric washer and dryer she got recently.

"It's too hot to be running a dryer," she said.

At night, the Clites watch a little television, but they don't turn on any lights. Light bulbs create heat, enough to make the living room even more uncomfortable.

They also keep the living room windows closed.

"At 110 degrees or better out there, what can you let in here but 110-degree wind?" Clites said.

The Clites' long memories can recall only one heat wave this bad — the Dust Bowl days of the 1930s.

"Nobody even had a fan back then and the house would just burn up inside," Clites said.

The Clites are more fortunate than most older people in these scorched parts — they have the companionship of each other.

SUNTANNING CAN BE HAZARDOUS TO YOUR HEALTH

Every day people are exposing themselves to the ultraviolet radiation of the sun strictly in order to get a tan. These people have no regulations or warning labels to tell them how long in the sun is enough. Other people purchase home sunlamps and may or may not follow the manufacturer's recommendations. Last year 7,700 people required hospitalization because of misuse of sunlamps.

Without doubt the tanning process can be dangerous, but it need not be. The value of our business is to operate tanning facilities with knowledge, care, and safety awareness. We are the professionals to whom people can go for a tan, feeling confident that under our trained guidance they will be as safe as possible.

Given the fact that people want sunlamps and will often injure themselves in obtaining them, it would seem that the opportunity to obtain a relatively safe, comfortable, and inexpensive tan would be encouraged.

Anyone who tans in the sun can do so safely in a tanning booth. Moreover, professionally-guided tanning can prevent the number of ultraviolet accidents annually. So come now to the Hawaiian Suntanning Center, 3006 E. 10th Street for a safe, even and inexpensive tan.

COMPLETELY THROUGH THE ROOF — This home in a residential section of Eau Claire, Wis. was almost sliced completely into two sections when a tree toppled by night winds went through its roof. One occupant inside narrowly escaped serious injury and

Severe Storms Ranged Over Number Of States

By The Associated Press
Severe thunderstorms and winds gusting over 100 miles per hour buffeted Michigan, Delaware, Illinois and Wisconsin, ruining millions of dollars of property and causing at least four deaths, officials say.

High winds forced Chicago's O'Hare International Airport to close temporarily Wednesday after air traffic controllers fled the swaying control tower.

Winds up to 112 mph knocked down power lines in Eau Claire, Wis., and some residents there may be without electricity for a week, officials said. A 25-year-old woman was crushed to death when a refrigerator overturned on her in a wind storm.

Storms also made mischief at the Republican National Convention in Detroit. As George Bush, later named as the vice presidential candidate, urged Michigan's 82 Republican delegates to vote for Ronald Reagan, the lights and telephones failed. He finished his pitch by candlelight.

Meanwhile, heat continued to ravage much of the nation, and the number of heat-related deaths rose past 800.

In Illinois, Menard Correctional Center officials bought 10 tons of Gatorade for inmates suffering from heat and lack of air conditioning. At least two recent inmate deaths have been blamed on heat at Menard.

In another heat-fighting measure, the Echlin Manufacturing Co. in Litchfield changed its regular day shift to 6 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. so employees can work during cooler hours.

Damage from Wednesday's windy thunderstorms in Illinois was estimated at more than $1 million.

Commonwealth Edison repair crews were still working to restore power to 69,000 Chicago-area homes.

In the suburb of Lombard, 200 people were evacuated from an apartment complex after high winds damaged the roofs of several buildings.

In Delaware, thunderstorms with 58 mph winds felled tree limbs and electrical wires. A utility worker was electrocuted as he tried to clear a fallen tree from a road north of Wilmington.

A teen-ager was badly burned when he rode his bicycle over a live wire in Southbridge, and a husband and wife were injured when a 100-foot-tall tree fell on their car in Edgewood Hills.

Morning thunderstorms in southern Michigan killed two people, interrupted power to more than 400,000 and caused millions of dollars in damage.

A 9-year-old boy was crushed to death when winds blew a tree onto his Hemlock Island home, and a 70-year-old man was electrocuted in Dearborn when he snipped a fallen power line with pliers.

More than 1,000 Detroit Edison workers were on 16-hour shifts to restore power to customers, but about 250,000 households in southeast Michigan may not have power restored until Friday.

The village of Schoolcraft was closed. "We've got no power, most people are without phones, cars are bashed in, trees are on houses, and live wires are in the streets. The town is officially closed except for U.S. 131," a police dispatcher said.

May Appear In Chicken Suits

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ted Giannoulas, better known as San Diego's KGB Chicken, can appear in chicken suits similar to the one that brought him fame the state supreme court has ruled.

Giannoulas, 47, however, remains barred from wearing the distinctive painted red-blue-pink suit developed six years ago by rock star KGB as part of a promotional stunt.

The court says with an appellate ruling that blocked a trial court's decision not to allow Giannoulas to wear at public events the KGB suit or any similar suit in San Diego County or surrounding counties.

VP Selection Turned Out Chaotic And Confused

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent
DETROIT (AP) — Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan wound up having it both ways: he got the advantages of asking Gerald R. Ford to join his ticket with few of the drawbacks. But a vice presidential selection that was supposed to be neat and orderly turned out to be chaotic and confused.

So the Ford for vice president caper raises anew the old questions about Reagan decision-making. It isn't clear, and may never be, whether the nominee or the former president finally scuttled the idea of running together.

Since Reagan had known for seven weeks that he would be naming a vice presidential nominee today, the night's doings hardly attest to a clear and ordered process of making major judgments.

Nor do they enhance Reagan's credentials as a firm and decisive leader.

Reagan-Ford would have been an unprecedented lineup, and almost surely an uncomfortable one. Ford's terms for accepting the nomination made it more so.

With George Bush as the GOP vice presidential nominee, Reagan is unquestionably the master of his own ticket. It wouldn't have been that way with a former president running No. 2.

His lieutenants did nothing to put down the reports of a Reagan-Ford ticket that swept the convention floor. They came from governors, from senators, from campaign aides.

The Reagan camp didn't say no, just maybe.

Reagan convention strategists said they would play the vice presidential nomination for all the excitement it could generate. They surely did that.

A national political convention is volatile, even when there's no contest. Plant an idea and it will explode across the floor, just as this one did.

In the process, the talk of a Ford ticket could serve to defuse some of the conservative opposition still directed at Bush. After all, the Reagan side can say, they looked to Ford first.

Perhaps. But Reagan never said he offered the nomination to Ford, only that they discussed it.

"In watching at the hotel on television, and seeing the rumors that were going around, the gossip that was taking place here, I felt that it was necessary to break with tradition," Reagan said early today, appearing at the convention moments after he was declared the nominee.

"It is true that a number of Republican leaders felt that a proper ticket would have included the former president in second place," he said. "And it is true also that we have gone over this and over this and over this and he and I have come to the conclusion and he believes deeply that he can be of more value as the former president campaigning his heart out, which he has pledged to do, and not as a member of the ticket."

Reagan described that as a decision Ford came to, but didn't say why. Ford had, in effect, demanded a share of the presidency as his price for accepting second place on the ticket. He said he would have to be guaranteed a meaningful role in administration decisionmaking.

Indeed, Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas said it would have to amount to a sort of shared presidency. He said Ford "doesn't want to go around the country cutting ribbons."

Terms like that would seem impossible for any potential president to accept, but Reagan and his aides spent a long Wednesday night in negotiations on the subject.

Dole, who ran with Ford in 1976, and other congressional Republicans had pushed hard to get the former president onto the 1980 ticket. And they thought they had a deal almost cemented.

So did Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, an ardent conservative critic of Bush who plans to make his own token bid for the vice presidential nomination in protest. Helms said he was told a Ford nomination was virtually certain and so quit a drive for signatures on petitions opposing Bush.

By dickering with Ford, Reagan undoubtedly scored points with House and Senate Republicans, and with party moderates. It really isn't clear why he needed points.

After all, the nomination was his unopposed, by acclamation, and the polsters now rate him the leader over President Carter in the preference of the voters. His was not the situation of an embattled nominee, narrowly nominated and far behind in the public opinion ratings.

That was Ford, four years ago.

Ford and Reagan met on the night of that nomination, too. A Reagan vice presidential nomination might have carried that ticket in the general election. But Ford didn't offer it, and even now, his allies and Reagan's give contradictory versions of what happened.

The Ford side said Reagan insisted that no offer be made, so that he wouldn't be put in the position of rejecting the vice presidential nomination he didn't want. Reagan said long after the fact that he might have agreed if Ford had asked.

The real story of Wednesday night's Reagan-Ford sessions may prove as elusive.

But they can't go on meeting like this.

Youths Fired On Guard Patrol

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A group of young men fired on a national guard patrol investigating the slaying of a guardsman and five youths were killed in the gunfight that followed, a police spokesman said.

The spokesman said the shootout occurred Wednesday outside a primary school on the south side of this capital city. He said the dead, aged 16 to 20, had no connection with the school.

Earlier in the day, the spokesman said, a group of youths lured a national guardsman into the school where they slit his throat and shot him. A search of the school, unused during the summer vacation, revealed a cache of weapons and propaganda of the Popular Liberation Movement, a terrorist organization, the spokesman added. The movement is one of the left and right-wing groups waging a war of terror against the joint military-civilian junta that has ruled the country since the military toppled conservative President Carlos Humberto Romero last October.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market continued its rally of the past three months with a moderate advance today.

Gainers outnumbered losers by a 2-1 margin in the mid-day tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 2.39 to 906.83 in the first two hours.

Analysts said the market continued to benefit from hopes that the economy would begin recovering soon from the recession.

In the economic news, the Commerce Department reported that personal income rose 0.4 percent in June.

Chase Manhattan Bank of New York lowered its prime lending rate from 11 1/2 to 11 1/4, matching a cut posted a few days ago by Citibank of New York.

Public Service Electric & Gas led the active list, off 3/4 at 20 1/2. A 703,400-share block traded at that price.

Gainers among the volume leaders included Polaroid, up 3/4 at 25 1/2; Boeing, up 3/4 at 39 1/2; International Telephone & Telegraph, up 1/2 at 30 1/2, and Warner-Lambert, up 1/4 at 19 1/2.

The NYSE's composite index gained .40 to 68.94. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.77 at 310.65.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 21.38 million shares at noontime, up from 19.64 million at the same point Wednesday.

Found Body Of Victim

WASHINGTON — Searchers early Wednesday recovered the body of Charles S. Brown, 50 of Greenville, from the waters of Chocowinity Bay, after searching the area from about 10:45 a.m. yesterday until dark without success.

Beaufort County Deputy Sheriff Don Nelson said Brown's empty boat was found yesterday by Cliff Parrish of Beaufort County, "running in circles in seven feet of water."

A pair of shoes and a baseball cap were found floating near where Brown's boat was first seen.

A search was started about 10:45 a.m. and rescuers dragged the water until dark without locating the body.

Nelson said Brown's body was found floating on the bay about 7:30 a.m. by Chocowinity Police Chief Gordon Edwards, in the area where the boat was first seen — some 100 to 150 feet from shore, off Bayside Shores.

The officer said an autopsy is scheduled to determine the cause of death.

Some 1,500 invitations to the affair have been mailed, Speight said, and some 5,000 persons are expected to attend the event.

Speight said last year's dinner was the largest — with 4,500 attending — since the annual event began in 1972.

Boycott: Not Total Success

MOSCOW (AP) — The United States government's effort to totally turn its back on the XXII Summer Olympics has not met with total success.

First came the International Olympic Committee's vow to raise the American flag at the closing ceremonies and then the decision by three U.S. citizens from Puerto Rico to march in Saturday's opening ceremonies.

Boxers Alberto Mercado, Luis Pizarro and Jose Molina — the only Puerto Rican athletes here — defied President Carter's boycott and their own country's endorsement of that policy by coming to compete in the Games, which take to the playing fields and arenas on Sunday. And the three said Wednesday they planned to march behind the Puerto Rican flag at the opening ceremonies.

The symbolism of boycotting the opening ceremonies, or at least parading behind the non-political IOC banner, was considered a slap at the Soviet hosts for their military intervention in Afghanistan.

Besides the three Puerto Rican fighters, the Australian delegation reversed its stance Wednesday and decided to have its entire 190-member team appear in the traditional pageant that launches every Olympic Games.

"We debated the matter and conferred with delegations from the western nations," said Phil Coles, manager of the Australian team, which defied its government's call to boycott the Games. "We thought we could follow their lead but, when some of them seemed indecisive, we made the decision to let our entire team participate."

"I think there's some weakening among those who planned not to participate in the opening ceremonies."

Australia had been one of 16 nations which had informed the IOC that it would participate in the opening ceremonies with only its name and the IOC banner. The majority of the other 15 countries were holding fast to this symbolic gesture.

Team leaders from Britain, France and Italy said they had not changed their minds and would still play down the opening ceremonies, but officials from Belgium and Ireland were uncertain of their plans, awaiting a meeting of western teams on Friday night.

Wednesday's apparent weakening of the movement to stage some form of protest of the Soviet military action followed by one day the IOC's announced intention to raise the American flag at the closing ceremonies. The flag-raising will be over the strong objections of the U.S. government, although the IOC considered it mere protocol since tradition requires hoisting the colors of the next host just as the current Games are closing down.

"I believe the IOC is the owner of the Olympic Games and the Olympic ceremonies, and I believe it is their right to do as they please," said Peter Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee.

Ueberroth appraised the IOC Wednesday on the progress of Los Angeles in readying itself for the 1984 Summer Games. He said the facilities for 17 of the 21 sports were completed, and scoffed at suggestions that the Los Angeles Games have been jeopardized by the American-sponsored boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

"We don't think the current problems will have an overlap effect. We have been assured from all quarters that there is no danger to the Games in Los Angeles."

N's Wiggins Likes What He Sees

North head coach Walt Wiggins was smiling. After his first day on the practice field, he liked what he saw.

"We're getting there," he said as his 33-member unit was calling it quits after Wednesday's second practice. "We got everything in on offense, which is good at this stage of the week."

The Union unit will square off against the Confederate squad this Saturday night in Ficklen Stadium in the 18th annual Boys Home Football Game.

Wiggins, who did not report to the practice field until Wednesday morning because of a death in his family early this week, was in high praise of his Yankee forces.

As Wiggins and assistant coach C.K. Siler of Southern Guilford watched, the North unit ran through its repertoire of offensive plays. "Fire off that line," Wiggins yelled. "That's the way. Now you're looking like a team."

"This is a good bunch of boys to work with," he said after the workout in the 90-degree plus heat. "I wish I could coach a group like this at Rocky Mount this year. We've got an abundant amount of talent. We've got better than average size and speed. It's just an outstanding bunch of boys."

While Wiggins was absent during the first two days of practice, Plymouth's Mac Allen was at the helm of the North. He, too, liked what he saw Wednesday afternoon. "We definitely look better, much better," he said. "The boys want to play. They've got a lot of class."

"Despite the unbelievable conditions so far this week, the enthusiasm of the boys has not died. They really want to play."

At Wednesday's practice, the finishing touches were put on the North's offense, which Wiggins considers his unit's strong point. "Our offense is stronger at the present time because we haven't spent that much time on defense."

"We're going to be as wide open as possible," he said of his pro-set offense. "I've always been a pass-oriented coach at Rocky Mount, so I'd say we're going to throw the

Pirates Slip By Camels In 12th

BUIES CREEK — Three straight walks in the 12th inning brought home Kelly Robinette with the winning run as East Carolina nipped Campbell, 5-4, Wednesday night in a Summer League baseball game.

With the score tied at 4-4 and one gone, Robinette singled to lead off the 12th. Todd Hendley and John Hallow walked to load the bases before Charlie Smith walked, forcing Robinette home. When Campbell went down in order in the bottom of the inning ECU had the win.

The victory leaves ECU at 17-8, one-half game ahead of Louisburg, which defeated UNC-Chapel Hill last night, 12-5. Louisburg is Campbell drops to Campbell took the lead with a run in the second and maintained its advantage until eighth when ECU pushed across three runs.

Jeffrey Warren walked to lead off the eighth and moved to second on Robert Wells' sacrifice. After Mike Sorrell walked, Robinette's sacrifice moved both runners up a base. Hendley then singled to score Warren and Robinette and when Hallow followed with a single Hendley scored, giving ECU a 3-1 lead.

Campbell, however, tied it up in the bottom of the ninth on a two-run homer by Tom Montgomery.

ECU regained the lead in the 10th with a run only to see Campbell counter with a run in the bottom of the ninth on a throw to first was late and meanwhile Sorrell had scored, giving ECU a 4-3 lead.

Campbell tied it up in the bottom of the 10th on Wayne Dale's home run. Then after a scoreless 11th, the Pirates took the lead for good in the 12th.

Kirk Parsons went all the way on the mound for ECU to gain his sixth win in seven starts. Parsons struck out three and walked three.

Stone Notches 14th Victory

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer
"For it's one ... two ... but where's that of 'third strike'?" Baltimore's Steve Stone finally found it about a year ago, and he's been almost unbeatable since then.

When the Orioles ripped Milwaukee 10-4 Wednesday night it was Stone's 12th straight victory, his 14th in 17 decisions this year and his 19th in the last 22, dating back to last July 22.

"I owe a great debt to Ray Miller. He's the greatest pitching coach I've had," said Stone.
Rick Dempsey drove in five runs for the Orioles with a two-run double in the second inning and a three-run homer in the sixth.

Blue Jays 5, Mariners 0
"This was by far the best game I've ever had, the best game I've ever pitched, no doubt about it," Dave Steib said after baffling Seattle with a three-hitter. He faced just 28 batters, one over the minimum, and the Blue Jays supported him with four double plays.

to lead off the fourth inning, New York rapped out six straight singles. One of them, by Bucky Dent, drove home two runs.
Bob Watson's three-run triple capped the seven-run explosion.

Tigers 7, A's 2
Milt Wilcox limited Oakland to one hit in three innings — a two-run single by Mario Guerrero in the second inning — before pulling a hip muscle, then rookie Roger Weaver came on to complete the Tigers' three-hitter.

Detroit scored five in the fifth, three on a homer by Lance Parrish.

Indians 6, Angels 2
Wayne Garland pitched a six-hitter and Jorge Orta drove in two runs with a double and a single in Cleveland's triumph.

Auburn's 'Shug' Jordan Dead

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Retired Auburn football Coach Ralph "Shug" Jordan died early today after a long illness.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete. There were reports earlier this month that Jordan, 69, was suffering from acute leukemia. A heart pacemaker was installed last spring after Jordan suffered a heart attack while in a Birmingham hospital for tests.

Jordan, one of the legendary football figures in the South, compiled a record of 175-83-7 during his 25 years as head coach of the Tigers. He retired at the end of the 1975 season.

A tough field master with a colorful, gentlemanly manner away from the field, Jordan turned Auburn from a Southeastern Conference cellar club into a consistent Top 10 contender, winning the national championship in 1957.

Jordan, a native of Selma, was a three-sports star at Auburn before he graduated in 1932.

The next year — the year the SEC was formed — he became an athletic assistant at Auburn. He held that post for 12 years, for a time coaching the basketball squad.

After a military stint in World War II, he returned to Auburn briefly before joining the staff at the University of Georgia.

Four years later, in 1951, he was named head football coach at Auburn, which had lost all 10 games the year before.

"Auburn coaches didn't stay around long then," he recalled later. But Jordan did.

He gave Auburn a winning tradition that included 12 trips to post-season bowl games. His teams enjoyed success in spite of two periods of NCAA probation.

For his last 19 seasons, he made Auburn one of the South's most formidable clubs even though he had to contend with a cross-state rival, Alabama's Bear Bryant, perhaps the most dominating force in college football.

Highlights of the Jordan era: The unbeaten championship team of 1957; the 1969-70-71 squads led by Hiesman Trophy winner Pat Sullivan which beat Alabama two out of three times; and the 1972 team which wrecked Alabama's national championship hopes by turning two blocked punts into fourth-quarter touchdowns for a 17-16 victory.

When he retired, the university's Jordan-Hare Stadium bore his name.

Canadian Wins 'Bell' Pentathlon

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Politics cancelled the Olympics for over 500 athletes from 29 countries, and a violent rainstorm threatened to wash out the first day's events at the Liberty Bell Track and Field Classic.

But the storm turned into a "good omen," said Canadian Diane Konihowski, who won the pentathlon, one of two final events Wednesday, after the driving rain had delayed for two hours the alternative meet organized to showcase the U.S. team and other athletes boycotting the Moscow Olympics.

The remaining 31 events were to be completed this evening, beginning with the final five events of the decathlon at noon.

In the other championship Wednesday, Don O'Connor, a California contract administrator for a car-racing company, won the 10,000-meter walk in 43:25. Trials were also held in the 100, 200 and 400-meter dashes.

"It's been a long day, long and hot," said Konihowski, 29, sixth in the 1976 Olympics and last year's Pan American pentathlon champion, after the sweltering heat of the afternoon dropped 27 degrees to 68 in the sudden storm.

"It's cool now; that was a good omen," she said after finishing third in the 800 in 2:12.6 for 888 points and a winning total of 4,650.

Second was Marlene Harmon, a 17-year-old Californian whose 4,346 points were a national high school record. Linda Waltman, another American, was third with 4,314. Both Harmon and Waltman, who finished one-two in the 800, exceeded the Olympic qualifying standard of 4,260 points for the first time, earning the right to be called Olympians.

Konihowski held only a three-point lead on West Germany's Cornelia Sulek after four events, but Sulek withdrew from the competition because of a back injury suffered in the long jump.

Konihowski was sure she would have won anyway, and just as certain she would have won in Moscow had not Canada joined President Carter's call for a boycott because of the Russian occupation of Afghanistan.

"I myself was en route to a gold medal," Konihowski said. "You can't stew though, just carry on."

Her disappointment in not going to the Olympics was shared by other competitors.

"There's no way anybody can say this takes the place of the Olympics," said American decathlon champion Bob Coffman, third with 4,135 points after the first day's five events. "It's a track meet."

U.S. teammate Lee Palles led the decathlon competition after the first five events with a 4,272 total, including a 2.13-meter (7-foot) high jump and a 7.50 (24-7/8) long jump. West Germany's Jens Schulze was second with 4,136 points and fellow countryman and pending world record holder Guido Kratschmer was fourth with 4,104.

British Open Begins Today

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Tom Watson, the top U.S. hope in the 109th British Open golf championship, says when today's first round is over the only place to be was out front and taking the pressure.

"I want to be in the lead in every round. That's the only way to be a winner," said Watson, who with Jack Nicklaus is co-favorite to carry off the world's oldest and most revered golf title.

A field of 151 is contesting the championship over the 6,926-yard, par 71 Muirfield links set beside the windswept waters of the Firth of Forth in the east of Scotland.

Watson made clear he is no subscriber to the theory of tucking in behind the leaders and saving the crucial charge for a later round.

"I don't agree with players who talk like that," said the 30-year-old two-time winner of the British Open, and leading money-winner on the U.S. pro tour since 1977.

"If you're in the lead, you can afford to make a mistake. I'm not saying I don't feel pressure. It affects everyone. In my case, it makes me speed up a little bit.

"But I can control that pretty well and I don't fear pressure."

Rookie Walk Wins 6th Straight

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Several times during the game, Bob Walk felt like a rookie pitcher should — awkward. Unfortunately for the Houston Astros, Walk doesn't run scared.

Walk ran his victory streak to six without a loss Wednesday night, hurling a three-hitter that propelled the Philadelphia Phillies to a 4-2 victory over the Astros.

He yielded only a pair of infield singles to Jose Cruz and a two-run homer to Art Howe in the fourth inning. "The first two batters in that inning, everything was really smooth, but then all of a sudden I felt awkward," the 23-year-old right-hander said. "That happened to me a couple of times tonight, but now I'm able to ignore those things."

The Phils got to Houston right-hander Ken Forsch, 8-9, for two runs in the first. Pete Rose doubled and scored on a single by Bake McBride. McBride went to third on a single by Keith Moreland and scored on Garry Maddox's ground ball.

Philadelphia scored once more in the fourth and again in the sixth. In other National League games, Montreal downed Cincinnati 6-4, Pittsburgh defeated San Francisco 3-1, Chicago whipped Los Angeles 4-1, Atlanta beat New York 5-2 and St. Louis blanked San Diego 3-0.

Expos 6, Reds 4
Montreal clung to a one-half game lead over Pittsburgh in the NL East as Ellis Valentine drove in two runs and scored two more to pace the Expos. Steve Rogers, 11-6, survived solo homers by Ray Knight, Joe Nolan and Sam Mejias in the seventh to post the victory. Larry Parrish homered for the Expos.

Pirates 3, Giants 1
John Milner cracked a two-run single in the first inning and scored Pittsburgh's third run in the sixth on Bill Madlock's sacrifice fly, giving the Pirates their seventh victory in nine games.

Cubs 4, Dodgers 1
Rick Reuschel tossed a seven-hitter, striking out eight for his third complete game of the season, as the Cubs stifled Los Angeles.

The Cubs broke a 1-1 tie with two runs in the sixth. Los Angeles shortstop Bill Russell committed a fielding and throwing error on the same play to allow one run to score.

Braves 5, Mets 2
Bob Horner slugged two solo homers, giving him 14 for the season and nine in 16 games, and Gary Matthews added a two-run shot to pace Atlanta.

Cardinals 3, Padres 0
Pete Vuckovich tossed a six-hit shutout and provided himself with all the offense he needed by scoring a run and bunting one home. Vuckovich struck out five and walked two in earning his second shutout of the season.

Soviet Shoppers In Kabul Buying American Goods

RUSSIANS BUY AMERICAN — Wives of Russian officers and officials shop for second-hand American clothing at a special bazaar on the lawn outside the apartment complex where they reside in Afghanistan. (AP Laserphoto)

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer
KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Every day, the wives of Soviet officers and officials shop in their own bazaar in Kabul for one of America's largest exports to Afghanistan — secondhand clothing.

Hanging in the trees and lying in piles on the grass are the castoffs from American closets and basements. The clothing has been donated to U.S. charities, sold in bulk through brokers to Afghanistan and is now destined for a new life on Russian backs.

Western clothes began flooding into the country in the 1920s after King Amanullah Khan, a reformer considered the father of Afghan independence, decreed that Western dress must be worn in Kabul, the capital. There is no such requirement any more, but between $12 million and $20 million worth of secondhand clothing is shipped to Afghanistan every year, informed sources report.

Shoppers in sidewalk bazaars can choose from a wide variety of used foreign clothing: mini-dresses of early 1970s vintage, men's flare-bottomed slacks, high-school band uniforms and now and then a Hell's Angels motorcycle jacket.

After Soviet troops poured into the country last winter to help the Afghan army battle Moslem tribal rebels, some of the Soviet officers and officials were joined by their wives. Several enterprising merchants, aware that public hostility kept the Russians out of the downtown shopping district, set up the special bazaar for the Soviet women on a lawn outside the housing complex at Microrayon where they live.

Prices are cheap — $1 for some blouses and $3 or $4 for a dress — and there's no worry that a neighbor will end up wearing the same thing since it's strictly one-of-a-kind.

The Russians sometimes go shopping in groups in the tourist quarter of Share Naw, but shopkeepers say they are bad customers because they are cheap.

"They're no good to do business with," said a merchant named Hafiz. "If I pay nine Afghans (about 20 cents) for a juice glass, I would sell it for 10 Afghans, but the Russians want it for two Afghans."

Russian vodka and caviar are on sale on the black market. An American visitor paid $11.50 for four ounces of Russian caviar and drank Russian vodka at a local restaurant.

Informed sources said some Soviet soldiers have been selling the Afghans fuel from Soviet reserve supplies at about 56 cents per bucket and have even sold a few Kalashnikov rifles. This could not be independently confirmed.

There is little to entertain the Soviet troops. Groups of them in bathing suits have been seen frolicking in the water near the road to the Kabul Gorge. Soldiers in swimming trunks with automatic weapons slung over their shoulders have also been seen near Qargah Lake, about nine miles northwest of Kabul.

Informed sources said three Soviet soldiers were shot and killed while swimming in the lake about six weeks ago. Now while some of the men swim, others watch from the bank with weapons close at hand.

During June, informants said, several Soviet soldiers climbed the wall between the French Embassy and a billet for Soviet generals and took a swim in the embassy pool. The French charge d'affaires protested to the Afghan government and emptied the pool, but the soldiers returned several days later.

This time, they spotted the ambassador's belongings, which had been packed for shipment home, demanded to know what was in the packages and opened one of them. Nothing was taken, but the charge d'affaires protested again, this time to the Soviets.

Most Local Governments Lag In Accessibility For Handicapped

By LEE MITGANG
AP Urban Affairs Writer
Seven years after the federal government passed a law requiring local governments to make services accessible to the nation's 36 million physically handicapped persons, many cities have done little to comply.

The law, Section 504 of the 1973 Rehabilitation Act, has been slow to take hold for several reasons. First, the law is widely misunderstood. Second, financially pressed cities fear the cost of supplying buildings with special ramps and elevators, setting up taped announcements, Braille and the like, so that handicapped people can share in tax-supported city programs equally with non-impaired citizens.

What the law says, in effect, is that cities have to make local programs that use federal funds accessible to handicapped persons. What it does not say is that all city-owned buildings therefore must be fitted out with special elevators and ramps, or that all city buses must be supplied with costly lifts. Federal agencies have been slow to issue regulations on how cities must comply with Section 504. Only 11 of 33 agencies have done so. They all are supposed to be issued this year, and it is that deadline that has re-heated the controversy in some cities and in Congress.

The Washington-based National League of Cities contracted with the Office of Civil Rights of the Department of Education to help two cities — Hartford, Conn., and New Orleans — comply with Section 504 by 1981. The aim is to point out less expensive ways to make city services accessible to the handicapped.

"One of the major problems communities face is that Section 504 is essentially a civil rights document," said Jim Revard, project director for the NLC, in a recent interview. "Cities perceive it as another expensive federal regulation. The reason NLC got this contract is to show Section 504 is not the onerous regulation it is sometimes portrayed to be."

Plans in Hartford still are being drafted. But Revard said among the proposals to ease the potential strain on city budgets is to use workers in federal jobs programs to rebuild facilities like toilets in city parks to make them accessible to the handicapped.

Even simpler, Hartford and other cities are complying with the law just by moving certain city offices to the first floors of municipal buildings — so building a special elevator becomes unnecessary.

Kathy Coffin, director of Hartford's new Office for the Handicapped and herself confined to a wheelchair, said her city may ask local corporations that had in the past made cash donations to the city to donate a "curb cut" instead. A curb cut is the gradual incline that allows wheelchairs to glide up a sidewalk curb.

The biggest problems with Section 504 have to do with transportation. Regulations issued by the Department of Transportation last July provide that at least half — not all — of a city's buses used during peak hours have to be accessible to the handicapped. That usually means installing lifts to assist the wheelchair-bound onto a bus.

And half — not all — of a subway system's key stations must be made accessible, with ramps or elevators.

Everyone agrees this will cost millions, maybe billions of dollars nationally. But as explained by James Weisman, attorney for the Eastern Paralyzed Veterans Association, the rules are so loose that a city can have anywhere from 10 to 30 years to comply. More importantly, the federal government in most instances would pick up 80 percent of the cost.

A number of cities, like Seattle, Washington, D.C., and Boston have made strides to comply with Section 504. But cities that choose to resist or delay complying have a couple of things going for them.

The law says cities that don't comply risk losing their federal funds for those services not in compliance with Section 504. But that prospect is politically unlikely.

Equally difficult is the only other remedy under the law — a lawsuit against the city. But few among the handicapped, probably the poorest of the nation's minority groups, can afford that.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

The company that our son works for sent him to a doctor for a physical examination. The purpose was to take out extra insurance, one of the benefits that the company offered. His blood pressure was so high that he was denied insurance. The next day he went to his own doctor who told him his blood pressure was normal. He is strong and healthy, but we are afraid he might be harboring something that has not yet surfaced. Do you think we have reason to be concerned? — Mrs. N.P.P., Maine. Dear Mrs. P.:

Extreme tension, nervousness or anxiety during a physical examination can frequently cause wide fluctuations in blood pressure readings. This kind of temporary high blood pressure is called "labile" hypertension. All that it means is that there is a momentary change in blood pressure levels without any apparent physical reason for the change.

Almost everyone has felt a pounding-in-the-heart sensation and a quickening of the heartbeat during a moment of great excitement or stress. This is a reaction to psychological tensions identical with a sudden rise in blood pressure.

The fact that your son's blood pressure returned to normal when taken by his own doctor is a good indication that there is no intrinsic disease. I am certain that his doctor will communicate his findings to the insurance company doctor. After rechecking, your son will undoubtedly "pass" the examination.

Even doctors who know their patients very well sometimes note a transient rise in blood pressure during a routine examination. That is why doctors so often chat and put the patient at ease in order to let their heart rate and respiration quiet down.

***
What does vitamin B12 do for the body? Would an overdose be harmful? — Miss D.T., Fla. Dear Miss T.:

Vitamin B12 is only one part of the vitamin B complex. Vitamin B12 is involved in tissue growth and in blood formation. Red blood cells and nerve tissue are affected by it.

Its greatest importance in modern medicine is in its use for pernicious anemia. B12 is found in large quantities in green vegetables, liver, beef, pork, organ meats, eggs, milk and milk products.

The overdose of B12 is just as wasteful as the overdose of any vitamin. A normal, nutritious diet should supply enough vitamin B12 to satisfy the body's daily requirements. It has been noted that strict vegetarian diets are deficient in vitamin B12. Only in such instances, and in the presence of pernicious anemia, are massive doses given, under the strict supervision of the doctor.

Juggling Principles Described As Easy

FARGO, N.D. (AP) — Even in the registration line, the jugglers were restless.

One twirled a parasol, balancing a rubber ring along the rim. Six others lined up and passed a dozen clubs back and forth in a zigzag pattern.

And while the uninitiated might wonder how those feats are possible, the 11- to 60-year-old twirlers and balancers at the 33rd annual International Jugglers Convention at North Dakota State University claim the basic principles are easy.

"Everybody says he's uncoordinated," said Lester

McNeely as he caught three clubs. "So am I. Coordination is a skill you learn."

Some participants — such as Bob Goggins, who pedaled 2,000 miles on his bicycle to attend the convention — juggle as a hobby. And then there are those who make their living by juggling.

"No one could pay us enough money to do what we do," said Greg Dean of Hollywood, who works as a street performer. "We work too hard. I worked five years before I made a living at it."

"You love it, that's why you do it."

Corn Crop Is Another Cloud Over Area

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer
KANSAS CITY (AP) — Wallace Robinson has watched his land parch beneath his feet. Parts of his 4,000-acre spread in western Kansas, near Scott City, have almost no water left.

"Why did we ever start growing corn out in this semi-arid climate?" he laments.

Corn, a thirsty crop better suited to wetter climates, is a major cause of the cloud that hangs over the economic future of this region, the heart of America's cattle country.

Robinson's future and that of 1.8 million fellow residents of the 225,000-square-mile High Plains region depends on water — how it is used and what will be done to find new sources.

Robinson's ranch is located almost in the center of the Ogallala Aquifer, a water-bearing layer of gravel and sand deposited under the nation's High Plains 20 million years ago. The aquifer stretches into parts of eight states — Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming and South Dakota.

An abundance of research predicts economic doom for the area. Some studies indicate a large section will be dry early in the next century if farmers keep sucking water from the earth for irrigation.

Water from the aquifer sustained the early settlers of the plains, where rainfall is meager and surface water is quickly evaporated by hot summer winds and a searing sun.

The pioneers raised cattle on the sparse grass and grew wheat using available moisture. The capricious rainfall made farming an uncertain business.

But in the 1930s farmers discovered irrigation. Hand-dug wells and windmills brought water to the surface and the region blossomed.

The seemingly boundless water supplied one of the largest irrigation developments in the world. By 1975, irrigation consumed 97 percent of all water used in the Kansas High Plains.

With irrigation, farmers could grow corn instead of dryland wheat and milo. In the 20 years ending in 1973, grain production for cattle feed — mostly corn and sorghum — multiplied by 275 percent in parts of Kansas, Colorado, Texas and Oklahoma.

"There's something psychological about growing corn," Robinson, 51, said. "It makes you think you're in the rich farmland of Iowa or Illinois. But corn just wasn't meant to be grown here."

The growth spawned by irrigation brought a new boom industry to the region — cattle feedlots. Parts of the High Plains became supplier to half the nation. An elaborate agribusiness support network sprouted in Denver, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Kansas City, Albuquerque and Omaha.

Now all that is threatened. In parts of western Kansas, irrigation used half the water in the aquifer's reserves between 1950 and 1975. Similar declines have occurred elsewhere and some isolated spots already are pumped dry.

"We're a good indicator of where some of these other areas are going to be in 20 to 30 years," said Keith Lebbin, administrator of Kansas Ground Water District No. 1, based in Scott City. The district runs programs on conserving water and stretching available supplies.

In 1976, Congress authorized a $6 million study of the Ogallala Aquifer and the region's water problems.

"Congress had just been through the Appalachia thing, and they didn't want to see the Midwest become another economic disaster," said Jean Williams, project manager for the study, being overseen by an Austin, Tex.

consulting firm.

The study, planned for completion in mid-1982, is examining potential solutions to water shortages. One extreme is a proposal for a multi-billion-dollar pipeline and canal project that would pump water from hundreds of miles away. Another is a gradual return to dry-land farming, growing only crops which don't need irrigation.

The Army Corps of Engineers is studying four diversion projects, which would move 10 million to 20 million acre-feet each year, enough water to supply Kansas City for 100 years.

The water would be "excess" from the Missouri River and several smaller rivers in Arkansas piped to specially built lakes in the High Plains. The consultants say the proposed volume of water would double that of California's huge diversion projects, largest in existence.

Other partial solutions include replenishing the aquifer by seeding clouds to increase rain and building small dams to trap runoff and give it time to seep into the ground. Scientists also are developing crop strains which require less water and give off less moisture.

But rancher Robinson, former chairman of the state Water Resources Board, is impatient with all the research, the High Plains project in particular.

"They're spending $6 million to tell us the obvious," he said. He called the diversion projects "a dream," saying that water imported in such a fashion is bound to be too expensive for irrigation.

"It wouldn't be the end of the world if we went back to dryland farming," said Robinson. He no longer grows corn and pumps only enough water to give his dryland crops a boost.

"People will adjust. The tax base will go down, our gross production will decline. Some amenities that aren't essential might be lost.

"But we have to use our wits to get more out of what we have. To me, that's part of the challenge of living out here."

Small Share To Imported Brews

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The U.S. beer market is so large that imported beer, although highly visible, accounts for only 2 percent of the total.

The top imported brands can cost double the price of national U.S. brands in a six-pack. But, according to one Japanese importer here, "consumers select imported beers by brand name, not by price."

Rescue Squad... Rebel Attacks Cited By Afghan Authorities

compiled answers to pertinent questions from the responses and from other documented information, it was explained.

According to responses regarding a question about the organizational structure of the rescue squad before cross-training was implemented, in 1979 the squad had one assistant chief of rescue, a captain, two lieutenants, and nine rescue officers, for a total of 13 rescue personnel.

The task force asked, "What instigated the problems of the Fire-Rescue Department?" The responses, according to the report, indicated that a "lack of communication and cooperation among the paid rescue squad, the volunteer rescue squad, the fire department and city administration" represented "one of the major problems."

"There were at least four groups with varying degrees of selfish power building motives concerning who would determine policies and money expenditures," the report stated. "Also, it appeared to be reasonable that the consolidated system would alleviate dissension and aid in uprising financial pressures," it reported.

Employee figures involved the 13 rescue personnel, 22 rescue volunteers, and 63 fire personnel, according to the report, and two men were assigned to rescue calls and three to fire calls. The report added that today, three men are assigned to rescue calls and two to fire calls.

The task force found that, "The level of rescue service has improved in that (1) one additional person rides the rescue vehicles, (2) one of the rescue trucks has been located at the Memorial Drive Station allowing for a better response time for all of the city, (3) rescue personnel are utilized at fires and, (4) the number of basic EMT trained personnel in the fire-rescue services has increased."

However, the reported stated, "The quality of rescue service has declined because (1) continued resignations of experienced paid rescue men, (2) resignations of volunteers, (3) the inexperience of the newly trained EMT's and, (4) loss of the highly motivated and dedicated rescue personnel who specialized in rescue work."

The task force also concluded that the "financial requirement for personnel and operational expenses was not serious" prior to the cross-training.

The study concluded that the "present system is working and could be improved by incorporating experienced volunteers into the system which would require a commitment by all parties."

In asking, "Do you think that rescue workers' expertise would decline if assigned to other duties for six months?" the reported stated, "Yes. Rescue men who are not assigned to rescue work for an extended time do lose some of their expertise. To provide the best utilization of all personnel, all fire-rescue employees should be EMT trained."

The question responses indicated that, "After all fire-rescue personnel are cross-trained, personnel will be assigned according to their expertise. A cadre of rescue personnel of about 25-30 people will be developed. Others will be required to maintain EMT certification and will principally work with the fire cadre," the report stated.

Regarding job descriptions, the study concluded that new employees have been hired by the city as fire-rescue personnel and have signed contracts to perform both duties. Former employees, it was mentioned, have not received written job descriptions.

The task force suggested that "meetings should have been conducted with the city administration and the fire-rescue employees to carefully explain the purpose of cross-training."

The study also indicated a definite place for volunteers in the system and modifications in the rescue schedule were suggested "to allow volunteers to actively participate in the rescue program." Volunteer participation would be addressed in a manual of standard operating procedure, the study said.

According to the report, "The consolidated fire-rescue system can be very effective. All rescue-fire personnel should be cross-trained and a qualified cadre of rescue workers should, with the help of experienced volunteers, perform rescue duties."

Duffus said that the task force report would be delivered to the mayor and council members. He added, "I feel they will benefit from it."

The six-member task force has studied the issue and worked on its report since February, it was pointed out.

The chamber spokesman added that while the governing board would receive the report now, it was hoped that the matter would be placed on the council's next business agenda for formal presentation.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan authorities said today Moslem rebels on orders of their "imperialist masters" recently killed four Afghan officials, abducted a number of civilians and committed sabotage attacks in various parts of the country, Afghan radio reported.

Meanwhile, one of the anti-communist Moslem rebels groups claimed to have killed more than 100 Soviet and Afghan troops and destroyed three Soviet aircraft and two tanks. All of the claims could not be independently verified.

The state-owned Radio Kabul, monitored here, quoted Afghan security authorities as saying rebels had "embarked on terror, subversion and intimidation in some parts of our country." Three Afghan officials were killed at the Shekarpur bazaar in the southern province of Kandahar, while another was killed at Naserkhan Khil in the Kohistan district of Parwan province, it said.

"During the past few days, plunderers and murderers (rebels) have plundered a number of trucks and agricultural vehicles, and set fire to a number of state buildings and schools in Kandahar, Parwan and Baghlan provinces," it said. Baghlan is in northeast Afghanistan. "These brigands, by their inhuman and indecent actions, have hindered public transportation, committed atrocities and abducted a number of our innocent and muslim people", it said.

The radio said in the town of Herat, capital of the western province of Herat close to the Iranian border, the rebels had set fire to 70 shops.

It said rebels also set fire to a school in Zakhil, in the northern province of Kunduz. The schools have been targets of rebel action because the educational institutions are being used to preach Communism, the rebels say.

The state radio made no mention of any casualties among the estimated 80,000 Soviets troops in Afghanistan since December to help the Marxist government in its battle to put down rebel resistance.

But here in Islamabad, one of the rebel groups, Ittehad Islami, issued a statement saying its forces had attacked a militia camp at Khost, in the eastern Afghan province of Pakti, killing 27 Soviet and Afghan government troops and destroying two tanks.

At the town of Nurzadi in the same province, 24 Soviets were killed in another encounter, while five rebels lost their lives as a result of bombing by Soviet aircraft, the group said.

Another 52 Soviets were killed in Parwan province, north of Kabul, the Afghan capital, the rebels said. There, three Russian aircraft were shot down, it said.

It also claimed that five Soviets surrendered to the rebels in Ghazni province, south of Kabul.

Suspended For Landing Error

ATLANTA (AP) — The pilot and first officer of a Delta Air Lines jet that landed at the wrong Florida airport last Tuesday have been suspended pending the outcome of an investigation by the Federal Aviation Administration, an airline spokesman said.

Delta spokesman Jim Ewing said Capt. N.W. Abare and first officer R.J. Baurer were suspended even though an air traffic controller apparently directed the Miami-bound craft to the runway at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood airport in West Palm Beach 20 miles away.

Jack Barker, an FAA spokesman, said the air traffic controller had been assigned administrative tasks. The controller was not identified.

Reagan Nominated..

"If I go to Washington I have to go there in the belief that I would play a meaningful role," said the former president.

Gov. Robert Ray of Iowa, seated on the floor, told reporters a short time later that "I understand that there really are no problems and Ronald Reagan would truly like to have Gerald Ford on the ticket."

The two men were meeting in Reagan's suite at the Detroit Plaza Hotel.

Suddenly, a new rumor swept across the convention floor: Reagan planned to come to the hall that night and bring Ford with him for a dramatic announcement that they were forming what most delegates described as a "dream ticket."

The reports that Ford, 38th president of the United States, had agreed to break historic precedent and become the first former president to agree to run for vice president, electrified the atmosphere on the floor. Delegates talked of little else.

Familiar figures in the political world huddled in various parts of the floor. Reagan political operatives circulated around the hall, listening on walkie-talkies to messages from their control trailer outside the hall.

Nancy Reagan and the couple's four children and one grandchild arrived in time to witness Sen. Paul Laxalt's speech nominating Reagan. They stayed through the long, noisy demonstration, then left before the balloting.

Secret Service agents and police sealed off one side of the convention hall and there no longer was any doubt that the nominee planned to visit the hall.

But there problems. Reagan and Ford couldn't quite close the deal everyone thought was firm.

At 11:15 p.m., Reagan emerged from a private meeting with Ford and told his staff that he would tell the convention his choice was Bush.

GOP Chairman Bill Brock said later that the discussions were "an intensely difficult situation." He said Ford "never said yes, but he was willing to listen."

While there were no specific accounts of what sort of role Ford wanted in a Reagan-Ford administration, reports indicated the former president wanted a say in the makeup of the National Security Council, on domestic affairs and also wanted Henry Kissinger to have a key role in formulation of foreign policy.

Reagan's choice finally came down to the man who unexpectedly gave him the toughest fight of the primary campaign, the man who upset Reagan in the Iowa caucuses and claimed his "big momentum" from that victory would carry him to the GOP presidential nomination.

But Reagan's landslide victory in the New Hampshire primary devastated Bush's prized momentum. A series of big victories in the South followed by another landslide in Illinois gave Reagan what seemed like an insurmountable lead in the nomination race.

Reagan's other rivals quit the race. But Bush refused to drop out.

Lands In Jail Doing A Favor

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer
BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — Jeffrey Streeter, 19, swears he'll never do another favor for a stranger. His last favor landed him in jail after he stood in for the defendant in an assault trial — and was found guilty.

"And I'm afraid it's not over for me yet. They could send me back and make me serve time," the Haines City youth said.

Streeter was recruited to stand in for the real defendant in an assault and battery case by a defense attorney who said he wanted to prove witnesses could not identify the attacker.

"It was a real shock when I got convicted and sent to jail," Streeter said after he was released on his own recognizance Wednesday. "I told them I wasn't the real defendant, but they wouldn't believe me."

It was Streeter's first time behind bars, he says, and he didn't like it one bit. "I'm never going to stick my nose in nothing again. No more favors. Never."

The switch occurred Tuesday as attorney Warren Dawson represented Lee Marvin Anderson in a non-jury trial before Polk County Judge Edward Threadgill on charges of assault, battery and resisting arrest in the beating of a 67-year-old man.

"I doubted the witnesses knew who Lee Marvin Anderson really was," Dawson said. He found Streeter in the corridor of the courthouse and asked him to sit in when Anderson's case was called. Streeter said he agreed after Dawson assured him he couldn't get in any trouble.

According to testimony, the assailant was angry that Francis Garell's car was parked too close to his own and knocked Garell down. Garell said he needed six stitches in his head after the April incident. Three state witnesses, including the victim, identified Streeter as the culprit.

Threadgill, who was unaware of the switch, found Streeter guilty of battery, sent him to jail and called for a presentence investigation. Possible penalties range from probation to one year in jail.

Streeter and Anderson are both black. Garell said there were few blacks in Johnstown, Pa., where he worked before retiring to Florida.

"Since he was sitting at the defense table I just assumed that was the man," Garell said Wednesday. "So did everybody else. 'If they had the real man up there I couldn't be certain I could identify him. It happened three months ago and it was getting dusk."

Dawson says that was his point — witnesses tend to identify the person sitting at the defense table. He said he rose after the identifications to tell of the switch and brought Anderson forward.

"The judge put a man in jail he knew was not the defendant," Dawson said.

Paul Bennett of the state attorney's office said the judge had no choice. "The only evidence before him was (that) the gentleman in front of him was in fact the one who was charged," he said.

Says Threadgill: "Three witnesses positively identified him — whoever he is. But I released him because of some statements after the trial that he was picked up out of the hallway and stuck in the courtroom.

"If he is not the right man, and he was put in this position it would make me angry if I were sitting at the table and three people identified me," the judge said.

Dawson argues he was not Streeter's lawyer, and that without certain waivers, a man can't be sent to jail without a lawyer. Streeter has a lawyer now. Attorney Ted Lasseigne said he is looking into the matter.

Bennett said his officer is considering refiling charges against Anderson, who has never been jailed in the case. Although no dates are set for further proceedings, the judge says Streeter will have to return for sentencing unless the case is set aside.

Nomination Path Smooth

DETROIT, MICH. — Herb Lee of Greenville, in Detroit this week as a delegate at the Republican National Convention, said Wednesday that activities leading up to Ronald Reagan's GOP nomination for president had "gone very, very smooth."

Lee, a member of the North Carolina delegation at the GOP gathering, reported that some effort had been made on the convention floor to change the platform committee's stand on the Equal Rights Amendment and abortion issue but the effort was a "tremendous failure."

The delegate explained that six states would have been required for a minority report to be heard but "they got only two states and the platform was adopted as written."

Lee, former chairman of the First District GOP, said that proceedings were so orderly and without controversy that floor fights on civil rights and ERA, which had been anticipated to some extent, never even materialized.

"There was a pro-ERA demonstration," he observed, "but 99 percent were not aware it was going on."

According to Lee, U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, who has been mentioned prominently in some circles as a possible running mate for Reagan, called in the state delegation Monday night and discussed the situation with the representatives. Lee said that "We agreed that if he wanted to run and be nominated from the floor we would support him. I don't think it will happen."

The delegate said that he feels Helms wants to be assured that the vice presidential nominee will be conservative. (Ronald Reagan announced last night his choice of George Bush as vice presidential candidate.)

Lee is one of three from North Carolina's First District in the state's contingent, which includes 40 delegates and 40 alternates.

He is a GOP candidate for the state senate from the Sixth District.

Bizarre Prize To Bark-Eater

ZIONSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Bark is worse than any bite. And the more bites you take, the worse the bark gets. Just ask Jay Gwaltney, who ate an 11-foot birch tree to earn $10,000 and the title of crown prince of the bizarre.

"It took three days, but I ate all of it — branches, leaves, roots everything. It was bitter — really terrible," said the rural Zionsville resident, who took first prize in Chicago radio station WKQX's contest to determine how far people would go for $10,000.

Gwaltney's culinary feat topped the efforts of two men who dressed as giant tomatoes and sailed down the Chicago River in a boat disguised as a taco shell, and of another fellow who buried 101 people in sand at a beach and led them in a chorus of patriotic songs.

Gwaltney, a sophomore at Indiana State University, didn't dress down for his feat. "I was dressed in a tux, and I sat at a dining table with a formal setting of china and a rose in a vase. It looked real classy."

The delegate said that he feels Helms wants to be assured that the vice presidential nominee will be conservative. (Ronald Reagan announced last night his choice of George Bush as vice presidential candidate.)

Lee is one of three from North Carolina's First District in the state's contingent, which includes 40 delegates and 40 alternates.

He is a GOP candidate for the state senate from the Sixth District.

There's a great deal of sales resistance to be found in most bridge players. Having been weaned on such ancient bromides as "Always return your partner's suit" and "Lead up to dummy's weakness," it's difficult for them to break with tradition when the need arises.

North-South reached three no trump via simple arithmetic, and West made his natural lead of a low heart. Dummy played low, East contributed the nine and declarer made a feeble attempt at deception by winning with the ace. Not even the most naive defender should be taken in by this falsecard, which is, on the face of it, a shrieking lie. If declarer had no card but the ace that was higher than the nine, he would have tried the queen from dummy at the first trick in the hope that West had lead away from the king. And West would not have led low from a four-card suit headed by the K-J-10.

Declarer ran the queen of clubs to East's king, and East was in the hot seat. Obviously, a heart continuation would be futile, and it was most unlikely that West held sufficient strength in the diamond suit to defeat the hand, considering that the suit was not strong enough to lead. That left only the spade suit, and East needed to find his partner with no more than the queen to have a chance to defeat the contract.

He shifted to a low spade, and West's queen fell to dummy's king. Declarer had only eight running tricks - the ninth would have to come from setting up a second diamond trick. But when West won the king of diamonds, he reverted to spades through dummy's jack, and East was able to score three spade tricks to complete an excellent defense with a one-trick set.

Study this hand carefully. This combination occurs quite frequently and you should be ready to seize the opportunity when it presents itself.

Vaudeville Man Eddie Jackson Dies, Age 84

SHERMAN OAKS, Calif. (AP) - For years after vaudeville passed from the scene, comedian Jimmy Durante talked about his old vaudeville trio of Clayton, Jackson and Durante. Now, the last surviving member of that act - Eddie Jackson - has died.

The 84-year-old entertainer died Wednesday after a massive stroke at Sherman

Oaks Community Hospital, a family spokesman said.

Jackson, who was admitted Sunday, had been in critical condition, spokesman Joe Bleeden said.

The Brooklyn native got his start in 1914 as a singing waiter in New York City and Coney Island clubs. At the Alamo Club, he met an unknown piano player named Durante.

The duo played a number of clubs in the next eight years before Durante opened his own nightclub in 1924, the Club Durant. Then soft-shoe specialist Lou Clayton joined the others to form Clayton, Jackson and Durante.

Although Club Durant was closed down in 1926, the trio became popular at other New York City bistros and was featured in the Florenz Ziegfeld production "Showgirl."

One act was so popular that Jackson and Durante performed it years later on television. Durante, at his familiar piano, rasped out a song about the virtues of wood as Clayton and Jackson gathered every wooden object in sight and smashed them on stage.

Jackson was famous for his rousing rendition of "Bill Bailey" and for a dance known as the Strut.

In 1931, Durante went to Hollywood and the threesome broke up, but Clayton was Durante's business manager until he died. Jackson remained Durante's sidekick in clubs and on television until 1971, when a kidney ailment confined him to his Van Nuys home. Durante died earlier this year.

Jackson's last years were spent in a wheelchair after a series of strokes crippled his legs and left hand and partially paralyzed his throat.

He is survived by his wife Jeannie, a daughter and two sons.

Funeral services are scheduled for Friday at Forest Lawn-Hollywood Hills.

Satellite Shortage For The TV Programmers

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) - In 1975, a little-known subsidiary of Time, Inc., named Home-Box-Office took the radical step of leasing space on an orbiting satellite to distribute programs to cable TV systems.

But in five short years, such television programmers have suddenly found they can no longer buy space on the satellite of their choice.

"It's a temporary situation that will probably last another two or three years," says a top regulator at the Federal Communications Commission who asks not to be named. "Everybody got caught by surprise."

The story of how video program companies got locked out of space, and of a growing battle over ways to overcome the problem, is tied to the cable TV industry.

Few people were willing to predict in the early 1970's that cable programmers would become one of the biggest users of satellites.

With a satellite, a programmer could offer his service to any cable system in the country that put up a receiving dish and the cable system could finally offer something more than network television.

Even though a receiving dish can only be aimed at one satellite at a time, the programmers solved that problem by using just one satellite.

Cable's popularity began to soar and cable firms are now offering cities high-capacity systems with up to 125 channels. Programming companies are cropping up everywhere to fill that video void.

There is a cloud, however, over this picture of prosperity. The primary "cable bird," the RCA American Communication Co.'s SATCOM satellite, is full.

Once the nation's biggest cities grant cable franchises, high-capacity cable systems will proliferate and it probably won't be uncommon for them to have two, or even three, antennas.

For now, however, more than half of the existing cable systems in this country offer only 12 channels - which they filled long ago - and the operator isn't worried about buying a second antenna.

RCA's grip over the cable satellite business has thus become tight. But its position is being challenged.

Two companies which have leased space on different satellites are trying to attract enough cable system customers to establish a second network. The battle has even featured offers of free receiving stations.

"We're going to see a real shakeout this fall because most observers wonder if both can make it now," says

Jonathan Miller, who edits the Satellite Week newsletter.

The protagonists are: Satellite Syndicated Systems (SSS), the firm that distributes the signal of Ted Turner's WTBS-TV in Atlanta and the Satellite Program Network; and Satellite Communications Network (SCN), which is jumping into the programming business with the Las Vegas Entertainment Network and Cinemera network for older viewers.

SSS wants the cable community to use one of Western Union's WESTAR satellites, on which it has leased space.

SCN is one of several programmers temporarily using a COMSTAR satellite controlled by the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., thanks to the mysterious disappearance of RCA's newest satellite shortly after launch in December. SCN expects to move to one of RCA's satellites after a replacement is launched next year.

George Bush Profile: A Man Who Drives Himself

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — At the tender age of 10, George Bush entered a sailboat race with some buddies off the coast of Kennebunkport, Maine.

One of the boys had a particularly fast boat, an 11-footer, that had won every race that summer.

So before the final race started, young Bush tied a bucket to the underside of his rival's boat. When the wind came up, all the other boats sailed toward glory. The favored boat sat dead in the water.

"George has always had a little of the imp in him," says Bush's brother John, who tells the story.

George - Herbert Walker Bush, the Lone Star Yankee, has never liked to come in second.

Bush proved tenacious during his two-year quest for the presidency. Despite Ronald Reagan's overwhelming lead in the primaries, Bush refused to pull out until late May. When he did, after spending an agonizing weekend in a sterile motel room overlooking New Jersey swamplands, he pronounced the decision "agonizing."

"George agonizes over everything," said a fellow Texas Republican who knows him well. "Even obvious decisions tie him in knots."

"There has to be a certain ego factor to drive a person to run for president," Bush said last year. "I've been driven to do a lot of things in life. I was driven to be a success in business, to excel in college, to be the youngest fighter pilot. I'm confident that I'm better than those other guys, but I haven't been able to prove it."

As former congressman, former GOP national chairman, former CIA director and former envoy to China, Bush has notched a wide range of Washington and foreign policy experience.

Bush - athlete, fighter pilot, Yale man, oilman - has never been one to let opportunities pass him by.

Friends and colleagues describe Bush as a meticulous organizer and relentless campaigner, a man who memorized Jimmy Carter's start-early, shake-every-hand campaign strategy and stuck to it.

He even programmed relaxation into the strategy. One weekend a month, he scheduled time at home with his family.

But when he really wants to get away from it all, Bush retreats to the family's summer place at Kennebunkport.

And there, he drives himself again. "He jumps into his long, skinny blue and white gas guzzler and zooms 90 miles an hour out into the ocean, all by himself," says Bush's 27-year-old son, Jeb. "I guess it's his way of getting out the anxieties and letting it rip. He's another man when he's up there."

A Republican official who worked on Bush's presidential campaign claims he was being dull on purpose, that it was all part of his strategy, his determination to win.

"If you have nice, down-pat statements and never vary from them, the press goes to sleep and doesn't print anything bad about you," said the official.

Bush's reply: "I'm not as dull as you think I am."

Right after college, Bush decided against following his father's footsteps to Wall Street. He and his young wife drove west, specifically, to west Texas. There they moved into a garage apartment next door to a prostitute. "Honey, we shared the same bathroom," Mrs. Bush once recalled.

Bush got a job from a family friend as a contractor in the drilling rig business. He later formed an oil construction firm and branched out with two other companies.

Today, he's worth about $1.4 million, "depending on the stock market," says his bookkeeper, Don Rhodes. At 55, Bush is lean: 6 feet, 2 inches, 190 pounds. He jogs three miles a day, pacifies a once-bleeding ulcer with antacid whenever he eats his favorite Mexican food and is partial to the country and western songs of Dolly Parton.

The Bushes live in the Memorial Tanglewood section of Houston in a big house with a pool and, despite a penchant for tennis, no court. A Southern writer describes Bush as a man "who has managed to live in the Southwest for over 30 years without acquiring a drawl, a herd of cattle or even a cowboy hat."

The Bushes have five grown children, four boys and a girl. Asked recently what in his life he's proudest of, Bush replied, "That my children still come home."

"We've got a great family, but it's not physically tight-knit," says Jeb Bush, who put his banking career aside for a few months to campaign for his father. "Even when we were growing up in Houston, Dad wasn't home at night to play catch. But if anything ever went wrong in my life, Dad would be right there to help."

"Mom was always the one to hand out the goodies and the discipline. In a sense, it was a matriarchal family."

Dorothy, 20, Bush's youngest child who answered phones in his Boston headquarters, said the hardest part of the campaign for her parents was being separated from each other: "It's not easy for them to be apart from each other. Sometimes I'll be reading the paper about them and I think, 'Poor, Mom, poor Dad, alone in some hotel room.' They're so lonely. They depend on each other so much."

Last fall, after campaigning independently for three weeks, the Bushes met for a fundraiser in New York where they were to spend the night. Because Mrs. Bush had to get up at 5 a.m., an hour before the candidate, the scheduler booked them in separate hotel rooms.

"We thought it seemed logical," a staffer said.

Ford Settles Big Pinto Suit

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Ford Motor Co. has agreed to payments of an unspecified amount to a woman severely burned when her Ford Pinto sedan was struck from behind, both sides say.

Patricia Ann Oberding, mother of the woman who was burned, confirmed Wednesday that a settlement had been reached, but declined to elaborate.

The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette said it had learned the agreement totaled more than $2 million. However, Ford spokesman Charles Gumushian said the cost to Ford "is going to be considerably less than $2 million." He declined to give any details.

Debra A. Oberding, 22, of New Castle, suffered second- and third-degree burns over 70 percent of her body following the June 18, 1976, accident.

Miss Oberding was trying to re-start the stalled 1972 Pinto when it was struck from behind, rupturing the fuel tank, her mother said. Mrs. Oberding said her daughter had undergone a series of skin grafts and faces still more operations.

Louis M. Tarasi Jr. of Pittsburgh, one of Miss Oberding's attorneys, declined to discuss the case, saying the settlement's terms were confidential.

Gumushian described the agreement as a "structured settlement" and said investments and annuity purchases could eventually make it worth more to the recipient than the cost to Ford.

The settlement with Ford is the second in as many months in western Pennsylvania.

Many Calls On Missing Youths

CHICAGO (AP) — The Cook County medical examiner's office has received 27 calls from friends and relatives of missing young men following publicized facial reconstructions of nine unidentified victims of mass murderer John Wayne Gacy Jr.

Officials said callers are being asked to compile medical and dental records as well as descriptions of belongings the victims might have carried with them before their disappearance.

The victims appear to be in their mid-teens to early 20s.

The families of two Fayette County children killed in a 1978 rear-end crash involving a Pinto were awarded an out-of-court settlement worth more than $2 million, the plaintiffs' lawyer said.

In March, an Indiana jury found Ford innocent of charges of reckless homicide in the deaths of three young women killed when their 1973 Pinto exploded in flames when it was rammed from behind in 1978.

The trial lasted 2½ months and marked the first time a major corporation had faced criminal charges for alleged defects in a product.

Ford's defense claimed the force of the impact, not alleged defects in the car, caused the explosion.

Ford voluntarily recalled 1971-76 Pinto sedans after the government alleged that gas tank defects made the subcompact cars likely to explode when hit from behind.

The Pinto was modified in 1976 when Ford added a fuel tank shield and lengthened the fuel filler pipe. Gumushian said, however, that the company never acknowledged the auto had a defective system.

Slowest Title To 'Noon News'

BALTIMORE (AP) — It was billed as "The Slowest Sport on Four Feet" as some 100 fans watched 69 turtles crawl through Baltimore's 39th annual Chesapeake Turtle Derby.

With temperatures nearing 100, a turtle named Noon News, entered by WMAR-TV, scampered off Wednesday to win the grand prize of a huge trophy and a crown. Art Norman, a WMAR reporter who coached the winner, said the secret to getting a turtle to run in hot weather is "all in the feet."

"Turtles hate heat. We would not let his feet touch the ground before the races. We soaked his feet in ice before the finals," Norman said.

Since turtles are known not to run in a straight line, the race course consisted of a 16-foot-wide circle - reduced because of the heat from the 25-foot-wide circle usually used.

But even despite the change, some turtles apparently were overcome by the heat and refused to run.

Author, Diplomat Avers World Edging Into War

NEW YORK (UPI) — Mrs. Gunnar Myrdal believes that World War III is a 75 percent risk by the year 2000, with the two superpowers — the United States and the Soviet Union — going at it with every weapon in their arsenals.

"If it occurs, it will be only a competition in destruction," said the 78-year-old diplomat, author, and outspoken foe of the nuclear arms race.

"Nobody will win. The whole Northern Hemisphere will become a wasteland."

Mrs. Myrdal spoke of her fears of another world conflict in an interview when she came from Stockholm to New York to receive the first Albert Einstein Peace Prize worth $50,000.

With her was her husband, who has a Nobel laureate in economics.

Mrs. Myrdal said she thought that, "Weapons have been amassed for the world's arsenals in a relentless process of competition... scares me but I don't sense many Americans scared."

"They and the Russians both are hawkish."

"Europe is afraid of war. Perhaps the American attitude stems from the fact you've never been invaded."

"I don't mind being a prophet of doom," said this Swedish woman who has served her country in many national and international capacities.

"I used to rate the chances of peace at about 50-50. But as the arms race gains momentum, I've changed to the 75 percent risk factor."

The Einstein prize is the seventh of her special citations for working toward peace. The first was in 1970, when West Germany cited both her and her husband.

Alva Myrdal, a dainty, lovely woman with fair skin and graying hair, sat in her sun-filled room at the Sherry Netherland Hotel discussing the world's prospects for annihilation as if she and a guest were having tea.

She said perhaps her own country's 150-year history of neutrality gave "us a chance to look at things more objectively."

"Russia is stronger in combat forces. That should make European countries worry more. It also has a prime geographical position."

Nonetheless, she said, the United States is "four to eight years ahead technologically." She expected that margin to be maintained.

In accepting the peace prize, Mrs. Myrdal urged citizens of the two superpowers to resist the kind of "nationalistic propaganda that fosters antagonism, the arms spiral, and consequent world tensions."

"The people of both the United States and Russia are warm, very nice people. They themselves are not to blame for escalating tensions between nations. The blame must rest with their leaders, leaders who are prisoners of their own propaganda."

"People must, therefore, be made propaganda-proof."

She conceded it was difficult to place blame in any one specific area for the "propaganda," but it starts with presidents and premiers and works its way down and around.

She reminded, however, that the final word is from the people — "People are not powerless," she said. "It was your people after all... the public pressure... that got you out of Vietnam."

"Congressional leaders should exercise more power, even if it means loss of votes back home."

Mrs. Myrdal repeatedly returned to what she considers the only route to peace — "Now is the time to negotiate, negotiate, negotiate."

There should have been negotiations, for instance, long before the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, a crisis she called "abominable."

"The United States... other nations... knew that the Soviet was banking troops on those borders. Why couldn't they have talked before... made agreements that would avoid such confrontation?"

The Iranian crisis saddened her, she said, but "most of us foreigners regard the military rescue attempt as a blunder."

She expressed sympathy for the hostages, their families and friends, and for all hostages and victims of terrorism everywhere.

"But in a way," she said, "the whole world may feel it's a hostage... to the constant threat of war, what with the arms spiral and the relentless struggle between the world powers..."

What about sanctions? The United States is using them against the Soviet Union and Iran.

"Look," she said, "Sanctions won't work. They didn't in Rhodesia. The League of Nations wanted sanctions against Mussolini when Italy invaded Ethiopia (1935) — they didn't work."

What Mrs. Myrdal considers the most forceful immediate step toward world peace is to get SALT III (Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty) talks going between the United States and Soviet.

SALT I ran out in 1971. She called SALT II dead. "We live in a vacuum," she said. "Unless we get SALT III going, all the control over the arms race may be lost. Europeans should take the initiative on SALT III."

Alva Reimer Myrdal was born in 1902 in Uppsala, Sweden. She married the economist in 1924 and they have three children — a son and two daughters. There are eight grandchildren and one great-grandson.

Mrs. Myrdal holds degrees from Stockholm and Uppsala Universities, and was a Rockefeller Fellow at the University in New York.

She was Sweden's ambassador to India, its minister to Ceylon and Burma, ambassador to Nepal, ambassador at large, member of the Swedish parliament and also a cabinet minister.

She's been her country's representative to numerous conferences at the United Nations and led the Swedish delegation to the Disarmament Conference in Geneva from 1962 to 1973.

Her writings are extensive — from population problems to women's equality, and, of course, disarmament. Her major book is "The Game of Disarmament" (Pantheon Books) in 1976.

The Einstein Peace Prize is announced every March 14, Einstein's birth date. The foundation running it was founded in 1979, to mark the 100th anniversary of the scientist-pacifist's birth.

Its purpose is to honor those who over a long period of time have served to prevent war, especially nuclear war.

What will Mrs. Myrdal do with the $50,000 peace prize money?

"I hadn't given that much thought yet," she said, "but I always give for a specific purpose."

Indian State Is Resisting Red Society

By SANJOY HAZARIKA
Associated Press Writer
AGARTALA, India (AP) -

Communists have negotiated the violence-racked northeastern state of Tripura for more than two years without setting up communes, collective farms or any of the institutions symbolic of Marxism.

Instead, thousands of peasants cultivate tiny private plots of land in this humid, lush-green but economically backward state which is hemmed in on three sides by Bangladesh.

"We live in a capitalist-dominated society and cannot implement Marxism," said Ajoy Biswas, a Communist member of the national Parliament from Tripura.

Government-run stores often are poorly stocked, leaving Tripura's natives at the mercy of private traders who raise prices at will.

Bananas, an important part of the local diet, cost the equivalent of $1.50 a dozen in Agartala, the state capital about 200 miles northeast of Calcutta. This is about three times the price in many other parts of India.

Tripura Marxists, however, have created a powerful organization of low-salaried government employees which has reduced top bureaucrats to pen pushers.

"We have been instructed by the government to seek the advice of clerks and sweepers on policy decisions affecting our departments," a senior bureaucrat told a reporter. He called the experience "humiliating" and asked not to be identified because he feared losing his job.

"It's a virtual shadow Cabinet," the official added. "They have direct access to the ministers."

Asked about the achievements of the leftists, he said: "They could have done a lot. Their intentions were excellent but because of the power spread by this committee, they haven't been able to do anything."

He was referring to the powerful Coordination Committee of Government Employees.

Biswas argues that the bureaucrats behave as if their offices are "their personal fiefs." He claimed a following of nearly 50,000 low-ranking government and semi-government employees.

Tripura is an impoverished state connected to India by a narrow strip of land. Most of its 1.8 million residents are farmers who grow rice, jute and other crops.

Their annual per capita income is officially estimated at about $90.

Chief Minister Nripen Chakraborty, the state's top elected official; Biswas, and other leaders say that their main aim now is to consolidate power.

During communal clashes last month between tribesmen and Bengali settlers, who have come to Tripura over the years from East Pakistan, now Bangladesh, the local administration collapsed in several areas and called upon the Indian army to stop the trouble.

Officials estimate more than 1,000 persons have died in the violence.

Members of the pro-Soviet Communist Party of India came in large numbers to Tripura in the 1950s and gradually built up mass support. Its candidates won decisively in state parliamentary elections in 1978 and captured both the state's two seats in the national Parliament in the elections last January.

In more recent local elections, the Marxists also won control of 80 percent of Tripura's village councils.

The communists claim success in setting up rural banks to provide low-interest loans to farmers. They also say they have organized cooperatives to help Tripura's 10,000 fishermen get a better price for their catch.
