Parents Anonymous, A Program That Deals With Child Abuse

By SUE FERNALD
Reflector Staff Writer

"As long as there are parents who grew up as being abused or neglected, as long as the world is full of stress and tension, as long as these factors are in existence, this agency will be in the business of protecting children," says Edward L. Garrison, director of Pitt County Department of Social Services.

Previously the Department of Social Services was the major resource available to aid children who were abused or their parents in this area. However, Pitt County now has an alternative resource for parents under stress, Parents Anonymous.

According to the group sponsor, Randie Reinerth, Parents Anonymous is "a new program for troubled parents which includes crisis intervention and ongoing help through weekly meetings with a professional and other parents under similar stress . . . Parents Anonymous is a non-authoritive organization in which a parent can involve himself anonymously without fear of judgement, social stigma, reprisal, rejection or legal and punitive measures."

Reinerth pointed out, however, "that the group often becomes stigmatized as an organization for abusive parents," or parents who physically abuse their children. There are several forms of abuse including physical; there is neglect for the child's needs for good emotional and physical development; sexual abuse; and emotional abuse.

RANDIE REINERTH

The whys of child abuse can also be specified to a degree including marital and financial difficulties, parental history, doctor hopping, medical history of the child, and alcohol and drug abuse. According to Reinerth often when a child is premature the bonding process between mother and child does not occur. In this instance the mother can not touch or relate to the child and may see it as different. This is in relation to the finding that the parent will "usually single out one particular child as different," says Reinerth. Other reasons for child abuse include parental expectations of the child, are they realistic and is the child fulfilling these expectations? Was the child wanted in the first place?

Some misconceptions about child abuse include the belief that it is only found in the lower bracket of society. Reinerth commented that this was not so and that child abuse hits all status' of the economy. However, there are usually more child abuse cases reported in an urban setting, which, says Reinerth, could be attributed to the large amount of peer pressure and pressure on the parents.

In cases where the Department of Social Services has to intervene Garrison explained how they respond to information concerning children who are reportedly being abused. In cases where abuse is suspected the Division of Social Services has to respond within 24 hours, and in cases where neglect is suspected the service must respond within 72 hours. In response the service makes a home visit to observe the general level of functioning within the family, the physical condition of the home and determine if the case warrants intervention. This decision is made by the workers' and supervisors' professional judgement. In cases when the child's health or well being are in immediate danger the department can take custody for up to 12 hours. When the child is taken into custody it is usually placed in a foster home or on rare occasions the child is placed with extended family members or relatives. However, Garrison pointed out that, "the court is the only entity that can make the decision to remove the child."

"Parents Anonymous gives us a resource we don't have now. It will serve as a safety valve for parents to be involved with other parents and will give them an outlet for frustrations and anxieties," and "is much needed in this county and all counties," commented Garrison. He also said "that Parents Anonymous can serve as a release and the atmosphere as a sounding board, therefore, the frustrations won't be bottled up and the explosion that would have occurred can be handled and arrested before it does occur."

The group will meet each Tuesday at the Student Methodist Center on 501 E. 5th St. from 7-9 p.m. beginning July 22. Anyone knowing someone who would benefit from this group is encouraged to inform them of this program and get them to call 757-4490 or the Parents

Carter Administration Accuses Reagan Of Being Inaccurate

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Less than 24 hours after Ronald Reagan formally accepted the Republican presidential nomination, the Carter administration accused him of being inaccurate and "apparently unaware of what's been going on for the last 3½ years" in federal hiring.

White House spokesman Ray Jenkins welcomed Reagan's pledge to impose an immediate hiring freeze as "belated support for the very policy (President Carter) announced" in March.

And Carter's government personnel chief, Alan K. Campbell, called a news conference Friday to tell reporters the former California governor "apparently is not aware we are currently in a hiring freeze, the third since President Carter took office."

The double-pronged attack on Reagan's acceptance speech signalled the start of a key element in Carter's campaign strategy: to try to point up any factual faux pas the GOP candidate makes and ensure they get the widest possible attention.

In his speech Thursday, Reagan said, "I believe it is clear our federal government is overgrown and overweight. Indeed, it is time for our government to go on a diet. Therefore, my first act as chief executive will be to impose an immediate and thorough freeze on federal hiring."

Campbell, director of the Office of Personnel Management which supplanted the Civil Service Commission in Carter's overhaul of the civil service system, said an absolute freeze "would be disastrous" for critical government services such as air traffic control or the issuance of Social Security checks.

The partial freeze Carter ordered as part of his latest anti-inflation package permits supervisors to hire one new employee for each full-time, permanent worker who resigns or retires.

Campbell said that has resulted in a 6,000-person drop in the federal payroll since the end of February and is expected to result in an overall decline of 20,000 full-time, permanent employees from the federal work force that now totals 1.9 million people.

All told, the personnel manager said, Carter has reduced the work force by 27,000 since he took office.

Campbell also claimed Reagan promised a similar hiring freeze for California while running for governor there and finished his eight years in office with a 25 percent increase in personnel.

Federal agency heads often get around hiring freezes by hiring full-time "consultants" to replace permanent employees who leave their jobs. Campbell conceded that has traditionally been the case but said strict instructions have been sent out to prevent the practice. Asked if he could provide any figures to show whether those instructions are being followed, he said he had none.

Armed Bolivian Miners Vow To Resist Regime

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Armed miners in southern Bolivia vowed to resist the new military government Saturday, but La Paz was quiet after a night of sporadic gunfire. A general strike called by labor unions closed businesses and halted public transportation.

Reliable sources said that on Thursday, the day of the coup, Bolivian military cadets entered the U.S. Embassy commissary in La Paz and shot an American who had an apartment in the building. They identified the victim as Tom Watson, and said he and his wife were taken into custody by the cadets and held until Friday.

They said a bullet creased Watson's head, but he was not seriously wounded. Watson, an employee of a private aircraft company maintaining a U.S. government plane, was investigating noises in the commissary and was shot as he fled from the cadets, according to the sources who asked not to be named.

Watson ran to the apartment to hide his wife, the sources said, but the cadets shot a lock off the door and ransacked the apartment. They said they believed Watson's mother-in-law lives in Harveys Lake, Pa.

The sources also said that one of Bolivia's top labor leaders, Juan Lechin, was captured Thursday after a gunbattle at a La Paz union headquarters and was beaten and jailed. One source quoted a military officer as saying of the imprisoned Lechin, "We have left him there to die."

Although the three-man military junta banned trade union activity and declared Friday a national holiday to reduce effects of a strike, there was no indication the junta would try to force people to return to their jobs.

Reports reaching La Paz, mainly from radio stations of the miners' union, suggested government tanks and troops were meeting resistance in the tin mining region high in the Andes and some 180 miles southwest of La Paz.

But the reports gave few details and Saturday afternoon the radio stations fell silent, indicating they had been seized by military units.

Earlier broadcasts had said some 5,000 miners, mostly Indians, blocked roads with dynamite charges and trucks.

A Canadian who arrived in Lima, Peru, Saturday from La Paz said many Bolivians were predicting the miners and peasants would battle the military regime.

David Bain, a Toronto high school teacher, said La Paz residents were warned by the two armed forces radio stations to remain home with their children "to avoid unfortunate consequences."

"The downtown stores are closed, communications are down and only a few street vendors are selling the basic necessities," Bain said.

The military command cut telephone and telex communications with the outside world Friday and closed the La Paz airport to incoming flights. Some departures were permitted, including the Lufthansa flight that took Bain and other passengers to Lima.

Red Cross and labor union sources said at least two labor leaders and two other persons were killed in La Paz following the armed forces coup Thursday. Hundreds of people, including politicians, labor leaders, at least 20 journalists and a number of Roman Catholic priests were reported under arrest in La Paz.

The Roman Catholic archbishop, Monsignor Jorge Manrique, issued a pastoral letter Saturday urging the government to free all persons held without charge and "spare the people greater pain and suffering."

The archbishop said the closure of newspapers and radio stations had plunged Bolivia into a "fearful silence."

Will Women Be Soldiers?

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The possibility of drafting women was considered and widely debated in Congress when it approved the draft registration plan that goes into effect Monday. It also was urged by President Carter.

But now the same issue is threatening to interfere with the government trying to register men. A three-judge federal panel in Philadelphia has declared the registration law unconstitutional and only a stay order Saturday by Supreme Court Justice William Brennan kept the registration plan on track.

President Carter, in his State of the Union message last January, urged draft registration as a means of showing the nation's resolve and preparedness. And when Carter sent the plan to Congress, he urged that both men and women be included.

According to the Defense Intelligence Agency nine countries currently either register or draft women into the military service. They are Algeria, Chile, Israel, North Korea, Peru, Romania, South Korea, the Soviet Union and Vietnam.

IT'S COOLER UP HERE...Greenville parachutist Lonnie Willer descends to earth after one of several jumps Saturday at Whichard's Beach on the Pamlico River. The jumps included two paraplegics, Terry Wall and James Breeze. Breeze, who was jumping for the first time, said he was not worried at all...after he was sure the chute was functioning properly. "It was very quiet up there," he commented. "I'd like to do it again." According to Wall, all it takes to make a jump is simply going ahead with it. "It doesn't take guts, all it takes is just doing it," he emphasized. (Reflector Photo By Mary Schulken)

National Guardsmen Help In Heat Wave

By RON KOEHLER
United Press International

National Guardsmen distributed fans to parched residents of St. Louis and Kansas City today to provide relief from the killer heat wave blamed for more than 1,100 deaths in the South, Southwest and Midwest.

Missouri Gov. Joseph Teasdale Friday ordered 250 guardsmen to relieve weary volunteers who have carried hundreds of fans to the elderly and poor.

"They (guardsmen) may be working as long as this heat lasts," said Bruce Jacques, a spokesman for the governor. "There are a growing number of needy who need the fans. These people may have to be on the job for several weeks, depending if the heat breaks."

Teasdale also requested the state be declared a disaster area, calling upon President Carter to provide 20 million in federal funds to pay residents' soaring utility bills.

A total of 1,105 heat-related deaths have been reported nationwide. Missouri has been hit the hardest, with some 264 deaths blamed on the searing heat.

Another 138 people have succumbed to the heat in Tennessee; 120 in Arkansas; 96 in Texas; 92 in Alabama; 85 in Georgia; 74 in Kansas; 62 in Illinois; 55 in Mississippi; and 35 in Oklahoma. Louisiana and Kentucky both have recorded 23 heat deaths and nine other states report one or more.

While Teasdale was issuing his call for federal help, a group of psychics holding a convention in St. Louis predicted cool breezes were not long away. Members of the Psychic Entertainers Association predicted the heat wave would abate in exactly 10 days.

In Oklahoma, the state government turned to God for help.

Gov. George Nigh, saying he had received numerous calls and letters requesting the action, issued a proclamation declaring Sunday as a day of prayer for rain.

"Oklahomans in time of great need have traditionally turned to God through prayer and sought his help anduidance. Therefore, I, George Nigh, do hereby declare today a special dav of prayer for rain and call upon all Oklahomans to join with me in this endeavor," the proclamation said.

In the nation's breadbasket, where agricultural losses already total in the billions, farmers fear the lack of rainfall and the disruption of pollination would destroy their crops.

Barry Funeral Set For Monday

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — A funeral will be held Monday for actor Donald Barry, the star of the "Red Ryder" serial of the 1940s who shot and killed himself following an argument with his estranged wife.

Los Angeles Police spokesman Capt. Dan Cooke said officers were called to Barry's home in North Hollywood at about 9:30 p.m. Thursday to quiet a family dispute.

"The officers thought the dispute was settled," Cooke said, "but as they were getting in their car to go, Barry walked out of the house, put a .38-caliber revolver to his head and fired."

Barry was pronounced dead a short time later at Riverside Hospital in Los Angeles. He was 69.

The actor's wife of 20 years, Barbara, recently had moved out of their home with the couple's two daughters, and rented a nearby apartment.

Two N. C. Men Electrocuted

WADESBORO, N.C. (AP) — A freak accident in which an antenna touched a power line has resulted in the deaths of two men through electrocution, while a third was injured.

Anson County Sheriff Tommy Allen identified the dead as Beverly Simpson, 61, of Norwood, and Lynn Polson, 23, of Wadesboro. The injured man was identified as 26-year-old Victor Hough.

Allen said the three men were trying to fasten a 30-foot television antenna to the side of Hough's mobile home Friday night.

The antenna slipped out of their hands, Allen said. "It looks like they tried to catch it," he said, "but it fell over and hit a 7,200-volt line."

Allen said a neighbor, who was outside and about 200 yards away, reported seeing a bright flash when the antenna toppled into the power lines, owned by the Pee Dee Electric Membership Cooperative.

The neighbor ran over, found all three men lying on the ground, and called the sheriff's department.

Several Accidents Listed

An estimated $6600 in property damages occurred Friday and Saturday in traffic accidents, according to reports of the Greenville Police Department.

A vehicle driven by Alicia Kaye Pleasant of 1410 E. 14th St. struck a parked vehicle on Glen Arthur Ave. Friday at 7:21 a.m.

Estimated damage to the Pleasant vehicle was $300 and $350 to the parked vehicle.

A vehicle driven by Leona Doughtry Tripp of 1307 Forbes St. struck a parked vehicle in the parking lot of At Barre Ltd. Friday at 2:05 p.m.

Estimated damage to the parked vehicle was $250 and there was no damage done to the Tripp vehicle.

A four vehicle accident occured on Greenville Blvd. Saturday at 11:30 a.m. in front of the J.C. Penny Auto Center. A vehicle driven by Willey Frank Mitchell of 1210 Pitt St., Farmville collided with a vehicle driven by Jenny Sutton Sanchez of P.O. Box 431, Ayden, who in turn collided with a vehicle driven by Edwin Gary Ramey of 3495 Summitridge, Doraville, Ga., who hit a vehicle driven by Willie Edward Basnight of 1426 Greenville Blvd.

Five were reportedly injured in the accident. A spokeman from the hospital said none were admitted.

Anti U.S. Remarks Voiced By Castro

By GORDON MOTT
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro told hundreds of thousands of Nicaraguans celebrating the first anniversary of the overthrow of the country's dictatorial regime, that the United States should spend more money on aid and less on arms.

Castro said "we salute" the $122 million in aid the United States is providing Nicaragua, but he added:

"We only lament, and we say this sincerely, it is only a little (from) ... the richest country in the world that in the next five years will spend $1 trillion on its military. It would be more beneficial to spend it on underdeveloped nations in the world."

The Cuban leader, who stood side-by-side with the five members of the junta that has ruled Nicaragua since the forced exile to Paraguay of President Anastasio Somoza, also called the recently approved Republican Party platform "terrible." He said it would "apply the 'big stick' policy in Latin America."

Several other nations also sent delegations to the rally in the capital of the central American nation. The U.S. delegation — led by William Bowdler, assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs — was seated several rows behind Castro and the Sandinista leadership on the reviewing stand. Bowdler and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Donald McHenry chatted with Castro at a government reception Friday night.

Among the other speakers were former Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, who urged Nicaraguans to retain "political pluralism," and Grenada's prime minister, Maurice Bishop. In a fiery speech, Bishop said the revolution here would not not have been possible without the Cuban revolution.

Expected guests who did not arrive included Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat and Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh.

A crowd estimated at 300,000 traveled here by foot, bus and car to cheer military bands and other marching groups participating in the rally broadcast live throughout the Central American nation on radio and television.

Thousands of them waved the red and black flag of the Sandinista National Liberation Front that fought Somoza and finally forced him to flee the country on a private jet. Sandinistas accuse Somoza of living off millions of dollars taken out of the country in suitcases.

The Sandinistas battled for a year to oust Somoza, but success did not come until the business community backed the rebellion. The president, whose family had run the country 42 years, finally left after his national guard disintegrated.

Above the reviewing stand at Saturday's rally was a huge sign with pictures of Carlos Fonseca Amador, the founder of the liberation movement and of Carlos Augusto Sandino, the man for whom the group is named. Sandino fought invading U.S. Marines from 1927 to 1933. He was assassinated shortly after the United States forces left.

Also on the sign were the phrases: "Sandino yesterday, today, always."

The celebration was to last four hours, and the people who had come from the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, the north the south and the mountains in government buses, enthusiastically cheered.

John East Asks For A Debate With Morgan

The East for Senate Committee announced that John East has challenged Senator Robert Morgan to defend his record in a public debate.

East said, "Last weekend, Mr. Robert Morgan expressed anger to the editors of the Winston-Salem Sentinel regarding comparisons of his voting record with ultra-liberal Senators like Ted Kennedy and George McGovern. But Morgan failed to address the central issue — the fact that he has voted to weaken our national defense and increase inflationary government spending.

"Morgan's record clearly shows that he voted to kill the vitally needed B-1 bomber, slash defense spending by $1 billion, and give away our Panama Canal — as did McGoven and Kennedy," East said.

He added, "Morgan should come forward and debate his record on government spending, a record that is best on votes on spending issues, the group rated Morgan and other liberal Senators as 'big spenders.' Morgan owes the tax payers an explanation of why he so liberally spends their hard earned money.

East emphasized that "Morgan is attempting to downplay the significance of these votes and issues. The people of North Carolina have a choice this year. I am running on a platform that will regain military superiority over the Soviet Union and cut government spending to stop inflation. But unfortunately, Robert Morgan still clings to the failed policies of liberalism that have weakened our defenses and given us 18 percent inflation.

He concluded, "I am ready to debate Morgan immediately. A public debate is the best way to make these differences clear and I hope Morgan will come forward and let the people know where he stands."

Reports Say Soviet Base At Cam Ranh Bay

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Soviet Union is building a huge military complex with offensive capability at Cam Ranh Bay, the onetime U.S. base that was America's largest beachhead in Vietnam, according to an interview with the Pacific commander of the U.S. Army, published Saturday.

Maj. Gen. Herbert Eric Wolff was quoted as saying Soviet occupancy of the former American naval and air complex is a threat to non-communist Southeast Asian countries and the region's air and sea lanes, the newspaper Bulletin Today reported.

Wolff was interviewed at the close of a Southeast Asian tour.

According to the paper, he likened the Soviet presence to a dagger pointed toward the side of the Philippines, where the United States maintains two major military bases.

"Should the Soviets want to project out of Cam Ranh, they would very well do so in any direction, including the Philippines and the U.S. bases here," the general was quoted as saying — adding U.S. forces in the Pacific could cope with the threat.

Wolff gave no estimates of the size of the Soviet presence in Cam Ranh or the weapons there, according to the paper.

A former South Vietnamese police officer and government adviser has said the Soviets started rebuilding the base after Vietnam's relations with China soured in 1977.

Phan Ngoc Cac, 53, who claims to have been an executive assistant to former South Vietnamese Premier Nguyen Cao Ky and director general of the special police under the Ngo Dinh Diem regime, told reporters recently there have been "tens of thousands of Soviet troops" in Cam Ranh since 1977.

"It is public knowledge that the Soviets are trying to build a huge military installation in our country which is aimed at neutralizing the U.S. forces now in the Philippines, Thailand, Korea and Japan," he said.

Cac arrived in the Philippines last week aboard a Greek cargo ship that had rescued him and 18 other Vietnamese refugees from a boat in the South China Sea.

Community organizations that have assisted in forming Parents Anonymous include the local steering committee comprised of professionals from various agencies; Junior Women's League — fund raising; Greenville Jaycettes — baby sitting services for the weekly meetings; and Real Crisis Center — assisting with answering the P.A. The number of child abuse cases substantiated in Pitt County from June 1, 1979 to May 30, 1980, according to the North Carolina Department of Social Services in Raleigh, was 174 and a total of 10,891 for the state. In addition to these are the number of cases that go unreported each year. According to Garrison, "child abuse is a timely topic," and "in today's stressful society the human reaction is to lash out and when adults lash out it is usually children who get it."

Tropical Depression

MIAMI (AP) — The hurricane season's first tropical depression, expected to strengthen into a tropical storm by Saturday, was reported Friday about 350 miles off the coast of Texas, forecasters at the National Hurricane Center here said.

"It looks like it might strengthen overnight," forecaster Gil Clark said. "Right now, though, the winds are less than 39 mph and not a big threat."

At 5 p.m. Friday, an Air Force reconnaissance aircraft reported an area of disturbed weather in the Gulf of Mexico had developed a low pressure center. Clark said the weather system was located 350 miles east of Brownsville, Texas, moving only about 12 miles west each hour.

The Hurricane Center said it packed winds of 35 mph and gusts of 45 mph in a few squalls east of the center of the depression. The hurricane center warned all vessels to avoid the area.

Independence Set For New Hebrides

PARIS (AP) — France and Britain have agreed to go ahead and grant independence to the New Hebrides on July 30 despite the rebel takover of the largest island in the South Pacific chain, French officials said Saturday.

New Hebrides, located 1,000 miles east of Australia, has been jointly ruled by Britain and France for 74 years.

But bow-and-arrow weilding natives overran the northern island of Espiritu Santo on May 28, chased authorities away and declared their island independent from the archipelago.

After a day-long meeting here Saturday, French Secretary of State for Overseas Territories Paul Dijoud and his British counterpart, Peter Blaker, issued a statement saying they were optimistic that negotiations with the rebels were progressing toward a peaceful solution.

French and British negotiators will returned to Port Vila, the capital of the New Hebrides, to try and gain a settlement between the rebels and the islands' Chief Minister Walter Lini, the statement said.

The rebels are led by former bulldozer operator Jimmy Stevens, a tribal chief purportedly backed by right-wing U.S. businessmen who would like to make Espiritu Santo an anti-communist, tax-free haven for companies.

CARD OF THANKS

We would like to take this means to express our sincere gratitude to everyone, far and near, for their kind expressions of sympathy during the tragic loss of our loved one.

Thank you for your prayers, food, flowers, cards, and most of all for your Christian love, concern, and support. To members of the Fire/Rescue Department and others who went beyond the call of duty, we owe a debt of gratitude.

May God richly bless each of you is our prayer.

Hospital Is A Major Trust

The budget approved by the Pitt County Memorial Hospital board of trustees Tuesday gives us a measure of what a potent economic force the operation has become in our community.

The trustees approved a budget of $38,836,594 for the fiscal year which begins Oct. 1. It represents an increase of 26 percent over the present year, with 16.4 percent of this going either for salary increases or establishment of new positions in the medical complex.

How big is the hospital budget? It is bigger than the county's entire budget including school expenditures. The county commissioners last month approved a 1980-81 fiscal year budget of $26.83 million. It is also bigger than the entire city budget, including the operation of Greenville Utilities. The City Council approved a combined budget of $38.04 million.

It is well to remember, of course, that the hospital has now gone far beyond the boundaries of being a county hospital. With its affiliation with the ECU School of Medicine, it has become a regional referral center. It is a rapidly gowing one at that, and next year it will be opening new psychiatric unit beds, establishing a post intensive care unit, a pediatric intensive care unit and increasing the staff of the department of emergency medicine. Some 51 new nurses are expected to be added to the staff.

The hospital now receives $1,073,000 from the medical school as reimbursement for shared services and $540,000 from AHEC for the residency training programs.

Although the county can subsidize the hospital there will be no county appropriation required, and there hasn't been for the past eight years.

Pitt County Memorial Hospital has grown into a major operation — one of the county's largest. It is also a major trust for the board and all the staff involving not only Pitt County but all of North Carolina.

Know What Candidates Stand For

The Republican National Convention is over now, and It has chosen its ticket for the upcoming presidential election.

Ronald Reagan and his chosen running mate, George Bush, will face the Democratic nominee, almost certain to be Jimmy Carter.

At last we can get down to the serious business of listening to two president candidates, rather than dozens.

November is only a few weeks away and we voters might be making the most important choice of our lifetimes.

It is essential that we know well what each of the candidates stands for.

SUNDAY MORNING

Not All Teachers Female

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The tendency persists, even among educators and legislators who ought to know better, to think of "teacher" in the female gender.

That myth has been to put to rest by the research division of the State Department of Public Instruction which has compiled a tabulation of male to female teachers in grades seven through 12. The male teacher is still rare in the elementary grades.

Nearly 40 percent of the upper grade teachers are men, but males are dominant in only one subject area: physical education where nearly 65 percent are male.

The ratio is close, however, in science, social studies, vocational education and cultural arts where nearly half of the teachers are men.

When it comes to teaching English or foriegn languages, however, the women far outnumber the men with more than 80 percent being women.

Cost Benefit

A fascinating insight into public school spending compared to results comes from the recent publication of test scores.

J.P. Huskins of Statesville, a member of the General Assembly and editor of the Statesville Record and Landmark, stacked the achievement test results alongside local per-pupil spending in his area and came to a surprising conclusion:

"Although results show that many students in Catawba, Gaston, Iredell and Lincoln counties tested well above the national average, the fact remains that lowest scores at the first, second, third, and sixth grade levels were made in the school district where the most money was spent per student," Huskins found.

Statesville City schools rank 10th in the state per capita spending, but elementary students stood at the bottom in almost every category tested in the four countries.

The Iredell County system ranked near the bottom in per-pupil spending statewide, yet scored as high as — or higher than — their city counterparts.

It causes one to wonder if money provides the answer to all problems.

Staggering

There has been a lot of hoopla about staggered registration of motor vehicles beginning this month in North Carolina, but it will be a long while before most of us come in touch with that change.

From now till the end of the year, the new system will affect only those just moving into the state, those reinstating registration which had been revoked, and those who get a new vehicle. Then, they will remain on the new schedule for registration in years to come.

For the rest, it will still be license plate time between January 1 and February 15, 1981. But at that time, the registration will be made for a shorter or longer period than one year, so that future renewals will be staggered.

State officials have figured out a monthly cost schedule so that you will pay the registration fee to cover only the months remaining before renewal is required on the new schedule. For some, though, that might prove costly because the date might be more than a year away, and the fee for 18 months would be $24.

BILL NOBLITT

The new system is supposed to prove more efficient and will eliminate the long lines at the license plate offices each winter.

Some students of human nature predict, however, it will only mean long lines every month instead of once a year as some people will insist on waiting till the last minute — whenever the minute arrives.

Freemen Institute

Agent Of The Far Right

By JIM BOARDMAN
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — W. Cleon Skousen, onetime FBI man and former chief of police in Salt Lake City, is building a political organization that may be eclipsing the John Birch Society on that end of the ideological spectrum.

Skousen directs the Freemen Institute, which hopes to save America from "socialism" by eliminating federal income taxes, federal welfare, and the Federal Reserve Board.

The Institute is a political power in Utah, where it's spreading its gospel well beyond the region. A spinoff political action group, the Informed Voters League, hopes to wield increasing influence in national politics.

Skousen has personal ties with leaders of the Mormon church, though the church itself has taken no position on his movement. Among those who have aided the Freemen Institute financially, Skousen says, is Texas billionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt.

Skousen's supporters consider him an agent of the Lord fighting the forces of socialism and communism at home and abroad. Foes say he is an insidious charmer who sees Communist subversion everywhere.

In 1976, Skousen helped propel unknown Orrin Hatch past popular three-term Sen. Frank Moss into the U.S. Senate from Utah. A half dozen congressmen support the institute, including Rep. Philip Crane of Illinois who briefly sought the GOP presidential nomination this year; Rep. Steve Symms who, with Skousen's support, is trying to oust Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and Rep. George Hansen of Idaho, who visited Iran last winter.

Skousen began nine years ago with a secretary and a telephone in a tiny office across the street from Mormon-owned Brigham Young University in Provo, where once he taught religion.

Last year the Institute moved to a Salt Lake City complex with printing facilities, videotaping studio, computer center, a library and book distribution service.

It has offices in eight cities from Rochester, N.Y., to Palo Alto, Calif. Dozens of lecturers are spreading the Freemen doctrine to more than 4,000 people a week, Skousen says.

He won't say specifically how much money the Institute takes in each year. But he says 124 Century Club members donate $100 monthly and another 2,700 "pledged Freemen" give at least $10 a month.

Strength For Today

A LATER FAITH

"I bless myself and am thankful", declared Sir Thomas Browne, "that I never saw Christ nor his disciples. If I were one of those on whom Christ worked his wonders, then had my faith been thrust upon me, nor should I enjoy that greater blessing pronounced to all that believe and saw not."

Thus did this godly figure of a day long past express his satisfaction that he could live in a generation when men apprehend Christ spiritually and not, as the disciples did, in the flesh. To accept Christ on faith, said Sir Thomas, is surely more blessed tghan to do so as an onlooker to a miracle merely acknowledging Christ's superior powers.

Quite apart from Sir Thomas's view, there is another reason why we may be glad we were not living when Christ was here on earth. More likely we would have been among the great multitude which rejected Him rather than among the handful which accepted Him.

Sunday Morning Notes

The lady stood in a checkout line at a local store. She was obviously old enough to remember some things that we had back in the old days which aren't around anymore.

She peered at those items which are stacked just ahead of the cash register as an attraction for last minute shopping.

"They're making those again," she chuckled.

Your columnist peered, too. What she was referring to was a package of four cylindrical items. They could have been mistaken for dry cell flash light batteries.

The lady picked one up and gazed at it, perhaps recalling the past.

"You know," she said. "They're fly catchers. You hang them up and pull out the bottom."

I did indeed know. What is inside is a ribbon of sticky paper. The container is hung up and the ribbon is pulled out a couple of feet. Something on the paper attract flies. When the house pests perch on it, the sticky substance holds them there and they die.

What's more, abandoned by our society as they are, the things worked. One hung in a fly-infested area would soon be covered by the insects.

There was a time when no respectable country store would be without the fly catcher strips, usually several of them hanging in the candy and cookie area, or around the vegetables. The strips never failed to attract their fair share of flies. Only problem was there were more flies than any number of strips could handle in the un-air conditioned stores.

Come to think of it there

Other Editors Say Feelings Prevail

(Washington Daily News)

It bothers us that we have men in high places who put their own personal philosophies ahead of the constitution when it comes to decisions that have an impact upon the lives of Americans all over the country.

We speak of the members of the United States Supreme Court, and we refer particularly here to capital punishment. Regardless of what the U.S. constitution says or what legal considerations demand, already held opinions and philosophies over-ride our constitution, it seems, in the minds of such justices as William Brennan and Thurgood Marshall.

We have believed that a justice sitting on the high court is supposed to render verdicts based on the interpretation of the constitution and not on personal feelings or beliefs. Yet, every time we have that matter of capital punishment coming before the high court, we have Mr. Brennan and Mr. Marshall holding that capital punishment should not be even though the same court has previously declared it constitutional.

Should not they too consider capital punishment as constitutional once their own court says it? It seems to us that both Mr. Brennan and Mr. Marshall ought to adhere to the very court's opinion on which they sit even though they were in the minority when the decision came down.

And in reality it is not merely capital punishment that sets them off as two together. They are the court's two most liberal members, and when it comes to the establishment of a liberal philosophy as determined by a liberal court opinion, they can be sure to be on the side of the liberal philosophy regardless of what the constitution says or what the court majority says.

The entire nine members of the court are there until death or retirement. They are appointed by the president with consent of the Senate, and once approved, they have it made. When we talk with individuals with fine legal minds, they so often tell us that decisions from the United States Supreme Court have many times been the expressions of prevailing philosophies of the justices rather than the strict interpretations of the constitution. So if we evaluate this kind of justice, we see that what is happening is that men are writing an extra paragraph or two to our constitution as a new appendix rather than as an interpretation.

If our constitution has been formulated and construed through the years more by philosophy than by strict interpretation, it is no wonder that our nation is in the predicament it is today.

With each changing of the guard we have a changing philosophy, perhaps, and a changing majority on the court.

A New Buenos Aires

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — After four centuries of benign isolation, this elegant port city has suddenly discovered skyscrapers, superhighways, imported cars, color television and fast-food restaurants.

Such well-worn fashions of modern civilization are the novelties of 1980 to "portenos," Buenos Aires residents, who recently observed their city's 400th birthday by inviting the Queen of Spain to dedicate monuments to its Spanish-born founders and independence heroes.

These statues on horseback, centered in sprawling green parks and rounded plazas, are at home among the stately baroque houses, spiky iron fences and broad, feebly lit boulevards that give Buenos Aires an old-world Mediterranean charm.

But that look is fading as bulldozers level 500 city blocks to make way for six elevated expressways that will crisscross the city and for more high-rise office towers like those already soaring from the port district's cobblestone streets.

The construction boom has focused criticism on City Hall. Last year a citizens' group led by a former vice president, retired Adm. Issac Rojas, prevented the Bank of Tokyo from obscuring the neoclassic Central Post Office with a high-rise headquarters next door. City officials ordered the site moved a few blocks.

But a coalition of prominent architects and engineers has failed to stop the expressway scheme.

'Balk' At Executive Mobility

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Not long ago some major corporations moved executives around the countryside as energetically as political candidates move about in the fall of an election year.

There was a mystique to mobility. You moved around the country and you moved up in the corporation. If you didn't agree to move you learned what it's like to sit on the shelf and gather dust.

There were practical reasons for it. Large companies are diversified geographically, and it was considered necessary for anyone aspiring to the top job to have an overview of the entire corporation.

Moreover, there were practical management lessons to be learned, such as facing front-line fire as manager of a division. Divisional responsibilities were considered necessary training for the top job.

But over the past decade several things have been happening to mobility, most fundamental of which has been the almost heretical tendency of some to choose lifestyle over executive advancement.

To the astonishment of old-line managers, some younger ones have been choosing what they consider quality living conditions over corporate needs. In some instances it has become family over company.

"Young executives, traditionally the most mobile, are the most difficult to move today because they are weighing lifestyle versus career issues much earlier," says John Seyman, an executive searcher.

How can you ask a young executive to give up an 8 percent mortgage for one of 12 percent? How can you ask him to leave a roomy house in one area to accept, at a greater price, a smaller one in another?

Often you cannot. In parts of California, where housing prices are higher than in most other areas of the country, some companies report difficulties in attracting workers. And executives are no different.

A company vice president who did move explained his tradeoff. "I knew I couldn't get a house comparable to the one I had (near New York)," he said, "but I wouldn't have gotten this kind of job either."

Many other executives, say recruiters, are balking at such moves, forcing companies to raise the incentives. This in turn raises corporate expenses at a time when companies are trying to cut costs.

Having little choice, however, some concerns apparently are putting up the money. One recruiter, Eastman & Beaudine, surveyed 200 companies and found most of them are liberalizing relocation expenses.

Sixty-five percent of the companies pay something toward equalizing the difference between mortgage interest rates, usually for three years, it said. Another 22 percent, it said, are thinking of doing so.

It also found 70 percent of the companies have raised reimbursements for nondeductible expenses, and more than a quarter of them are basing relocation payments on the new area's cost of living index.

Telecommunications also seems destined to have an impact. While you cannot run a New York division from the West Coast, there are instances where video conferencing reduces short-term executive relocations.

New, more rapid and effective forms of communications, which consultants such as Booz, Allen & Hamilton say are now ready for use, are behind the concept of moving the problem rather than the man.

That, along with the tendency among some young executives to put the quality of life above corporate considerations, and the rising costs to both the moved executive and the company that moves him or her.

Public Split On Sign-Up

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — When the nation's roughly 2 million 20-year-old men head to the nearest post office tomorrow to register for the draft, they will do so in a climate of public opinion whioh not only favors the registration of the names of young men but a return to the military draft as well.

Young adults, however, do not entirely share the views of their elders. While about as many young (18- to 24-year-old) adults of both sexes as older adults (25 and over) favor the registration of the names of young men — more than seven in 10 in both groups — the young vote against actually reviving the draft, 56-38 percent. The older adults, on the other hand, vote 63-29 percent in favor of such action at this time.

President Carter has backed Selective Service legislation as a way of showing U.S. resolve in the face of the Soviet Union's military intervention in Afghanistan.

The plan to reinstate obligatory draft registration tomorrow for the nation's males, 19 to 20 years of age, follows a five-year period during which men were not required to register. Under the plan enacted, all 20-year-old males must register the week of July 21 at post offices across the country, with 19-year-old men registering the following week.

The penalty for youths who willfully fail to register is a fine of $10,000 and up to five years in prison.

Carter originally also included women in the registration plan, but Congress limited the registration to only males.

Although the administration maintains that the current registration plan is not necessarily a prelude to the military draft, draft protest groups have sprung up across the country. Some social observers predict campus unrest when colleges reopen this fall.

"Do you favor or oppose the registration of the names of all young men so that in the event of an emergency the time needed to call up men for a draft would be reduced?"

Registration Of Young Men

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
ALL ADULTS	82%	14%	4%
Young adults (18-24)	71	22	7
Older adults (25 and older)	84	12	4
Men (all ages)	84	13	3
Women (all ages)	80	15	5

Among adults of all ages, both mcn and women, far less support is found for the registration of the names of all young WOMEN, although the weight of opinion is marginally pro, as seen in the answers to this question:

"Do you favor or oppose the registration of the names of all young women under these circumstances?"

Registration Of Young Women

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
ALL ADULTS	51%	44%	5%
Young adults (18-24)	47	44	9
Older adults (25 and older)	52	44	4
Men (all ages)	53	42	5

Teenagers, Young Adults Oppose Draft

Regarding the draft itself, the following question was asked:

"Do you think we should return to the military draft at this time, or not?"

Return To Military Draft?

	Yes	No	No opinion
ALL ADULTS	59%	33%	8%
Young adults (18-24)	38	56	6
Older adults (25 and older)	63	29	8
Men (all ages)	63	32	5
Women (all ages)	55	35	10

According to the latest Gallup Youth Survey, reported July 16, an overwhelming majority of American teens, 13-18 years of age, also oppose a return to the draft. Sixty-two percent of the country's teenagers oppose a reinstatement of the draft, while only 38 percent favor such a move.

Public Backs Drafting Women

The pattern of support for drafting women is similar to that found regarding female registration. Support outweighs opposition among the general public, and majorities of men favor both steps.

Here are the question and results:

"If a draft were to become necessary, should young women be required to participate as well as young men, or not?"

Should Women Be Drafted?

	Should	Should not	No opinion
ALL ADULTS	51%	45%	4%
Young adults (18-24)	50	47	3
Older adults (25 and older)	51	45	4
Men (all ages)	57	40	3
Women (all ages)	46	50	4

A further question, asked of those who think women should be drafted, shows national opinion about evenly divided on whether women should be eligible for combat roles, with little difference found between the views of men and women.

National Service — Alternative To Draft?

The possibility of a return to the draft has prompted discussion of a national service program. Gallup surveys over the last three decades have consistently shown a large majority of the American people in favor of a proposal to require every young man, 18 and older, to give one year of service to the country, either in military or non-military work. Those surveys also show young people would be more likely to sign up for non-military work under such a plan, but the evidence indicates enough youths would still opt for military service to more than fill the manpower needs of the armed forces.

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,242 adults, 18 and older, interviewed in scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period July 11-13.

As I Recall It

Kidnaped From Jail, He Escaped Lynch Mob

By NOEL YANCEY

When Godwin "Buddy" Bush eluded his captors and fled into the night at Jackson on May 23, 1947, officials said it was the first time a person had escaped a lynch mob after being kidnapped from a North Carolina jail.

But it was not known at first that the 22-year-old black man had escaped from the group of armed, masked white men who had removed him from the Northampton County Jail. Some people feared he had been lynched.

Bush had been arrested at nearby Rich Square about four hours before the armed men took him from the jail. He was accused of attempted rape after Margaret Allen Bryant, a beautiful blonde, was frightened by a black man while she was walking to the movie theater.

She told officers that the man had "jumped up and started after me." She said she screamed and three boys started chasing the man who had never touched her and never said a word to her. Rich Square Police Chief Frank Outland said that Bush, a sawmill worker, was "about half drunk" when he was arrested about three blocks from the scene.

Outland said Bush told him had been waiting for a black girl and admitted he was "the one who scared" Mrs. Bryant. He denied attempting to rape her. But the episode touched off racial tensions which had been mounting since a white woman had allegedly been raped by a black man who broke into her house a month before.

Solicitor Ernest Tyler happened to be in Rich Square that night and heard about the alleged attack on Mrs. Bryant. He heard a "lot of cars rolling around and suspected something was doing."

He said he attempted to call Sheriff J.C. Stephenson at his home in Jackson, but could not reach him. Finally he called the jail and told jailer A.G. Edwards, "you'd better move that man (Bush)" to another jail, but Edwards said the mob had already taken him from the jail.

When Tyler arrived at the jail a few minutes later, he learned that Edwards, a grey-haired 60-year-old, had not notified the sheriff. Tyler said he "scouted around" and soon learned enough to convince him that Bush had eluded his captors. Edwards' wife and jail inmates said they heard a single shot after the men left, and Rose Howard a black woman who lived across the street, said she saw a man run between her house and a vacant one next door.

The jail snatch and apparent lynch attempt aroused the entire nation. Asserting that North Carolina "will not tolerate lynchings and mob violence," Gov. Gregg Cherry ordered in the State Bureau of Investigation and the Highway patrol to assist local officers. J. Edgar Hoover sent in FBI agents.

Then radio commentator Walter Winchell, a Hoover favorite, breathlessly told the world that Bush was indeed alive, that he had surrendered to Tyler and FBI agents and was safe in Central Prison at Raleigh.

Bush told officers he recognized one of his captors and his automobile. He identified the man as Joe Cunningham, assistant manager of the Rich Square Theater. Hoover then announced that the FBI had obtained a confession from a white man implicating six other white men.

When the seven were arrested, they were quickly released under $2,500 bond each. Those signing their bond included Rich Square Mayor Charles E. Myers and Northampton School Superintendent N.L. Turner. Outland said the accused men could as easily have raised $4 million bond.

"They're not criminals," Outland

CARROLLTON, Ala. — When Lucille and Norman House were younger, "We were so poor our kids couldn't do all the things others were doing. They'd come home and cry because they couldn't go places like the children they knew." So "Ma Cille" (as she's known by nearly everyone in Pickens County) made herself a promise: "I decided then that if I were ever able to, I'd build a place where kids could go and not have to pay."

That dream has now materialized into a sprawling, homemade museum, but the process took nearly a half a century. Ma Cille's own children were grown and even had grandchildren themselves before she could begin displaying the memorabilia she had collected over the years.

During the early 1960s, Mrs. House recalls, "My husband gave me a little one room house to display my stuff. Later on we started adding rooms."

At first, she worked alone, collecting materials for what she later billed as "Ma Cille's Museum of Miscellania." She picked up bottles, trying to get as many different shapes, sizes and colors as possible. (At last count there were well over 5,000 in her collection.) Next, she began digging around old home sites throughout west central Alabama, gathering bits and pieces of pottery and china which she then painstakingly pieced together. Today she has displayed in her museum shelves upon shelves of plates, bowls, platters, cups and saucers she has carefully reconstructed.

The museum began to grow, and with it Ma Cille's talent for innovation. She completed a correspondence course in taxidermy and proceeded to place wildlife scenes about the museum replete with squirrels, deer, birds, fox and even cows and pigs. An artist in the family painted landscapes on the walls as backdrops for the scenes.

Taxidermy takes patience, Mrs. House learned. "It took me a while to learn how to fix the animals so they wouldn't ruin, but I finally started doing it right."

Among Ma Cille's "miscellania" one will also find: handwoven baskets collected and displayed by the dozens; a collection of barbed wire samples that goes back more than a century and shows the evolution of the fencing material from its first use to the present day; a collection of rifles dating back to the late 1700s; keys of every description; a log cabin from central Alabama, moved log by log to the museum; and even a skeleton.

Experts from the nearby University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa have determined that the skeleton belongs to a man who died about the same time as Christ. His bones are now in a glass display case between a basket exhibit and one of the wildlife scenes.

One of the more recent additions to the museum is a building housing Ma Cille's doll collection. In it one finds dolls from as far away as the Orient and up to two centuries old.

She has put together a "First Lady" display, with individual dolls representing each of the White House's different mistresses. Each is dressed in material of the same quality and style used during their individual periods.

People have come to see "Ma Cille's Museum" from throughout the United States and at least a dozen foreign countries. And no one has ever been charged admission. That's basic to Ma Cille's dream. Visitors may donate what they wish by placing coins on a kitty plate near the museum door.

"Lots of folks ask us why we don't charge an entrance fee and advertise — we might get more here that way, but that's not why we built it. I wouldn't feel right charging anyone . . . I might think someone wouldn't see it because they couldn't afford it . . . I'd feel some children wouldn't get to come as often as they do . . ."

Also, she points out, "Everybody would be rushing in and be in a hurry. We want people to come in, enjoy themselves, and have a good time."

SORT OF A KIDNAPPING-OF-CONVENIENCE!

Willpower Is The Last Resort In Diet Effort

By GAIL MICHAELS

I have only one complaint about my labor and delivery. The doctor forgot to deliver 10 pounds.

This weight is still hanging on my hips like an albatross. I've tried everything to get rid of it, from descending the stairs on my behind to doing isometrics during dessert. But it has become clear that nothing will take it off short of an honest-to-goodness diet.

Unfortunately, the last time I came close to a diet was when I passed up the coconut cake in order to fix the zipper I had just popped. And I only managed this because I don't like coconut. Chocolate is a different story. I'm attracted to chocolate like Mickey Rooney is to marriage.

Of course, if it's not around, I can't eat it. But Phillip has managed to make sure that temptation never leaves my side. Since Zachary's birth, Phillip has "helped out" by doing the grocery shopping. And what he brings home is enough to boost the sugar industry's profits by 10 percent a week. I gain a pound just by watching him pull in the driveway after each trip.

I realize that I'm partly to blame. Women married to men who don't believe in grocery lists should do the shopping even if they have to order by phone from Intensive Care.

I can spend two hours making a list and Phillip might refer to it once, if he happens to use it to clean his glasses. He balks at lists because he prefers to use two other organizing principles: impulse buying and buying in quantity. If we need one, he buys six. If we don't need one, he buys 10.

He never checks dates either. The last time he brought home the bacon, it had definite geriatric problems. And the green beans he purchased had to be cooked in Oil of Olay.

They were the only vegetable in the bag. Wedged around them were Doritos, doughnuts, chocolate chip cookies, and a box of chocolate ice cream bars.

"Deep down, you really want me to lumber through life in a wrap-around skirt, don't you?" I moaned as he unloaded these goodies.

"No."

"Then why did you buy this stuff?"

"I was hungry."

"So why didn't you get celery? You know I'm not supposed to eat all this junk."

"Who says you have to?"

"Do you expect me to ignore it?"

"Why not?"

"You have a poor attitude, Phillip. Married couples are supposed to help each other out."

"That doesn't include mutual starvation. I refuse to diet when I don't need to. But I will hide these things so you won't have to look at them."

I ripped the ice cream bars from his hands. "You know the trouble with you, Phillip? You don't have any willpower."

were many homes where the strips were hung up as a welcome way to reduce the fly population.

Of course, the modern age came and fly catchers didn't fit the decor of our times. So they gave way to air conditioning, closed windows and perhaps the insect spray bomb.

The fly catchers can be had, however, and some of us even remember what they are.

At any rate the house fly will always be with us. Neither fly catcher strips, closed buildings, or insect spray bombs has totally eliminated them. Nor has the most effective fly exterminator ever devised by Man. That would be a small boy armed with a fly swatter, a Mason jar and the promise of a penny for every fly he can swat.

Wonder if that kind of fly catcher is still around?

Plainly Simple Chore Of A Minority Party

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

DETROIT — What is the task ahead of Ronald Reagan and George Bush? It's no big deal. The Republican candidates, representing a minority party, have only to defeat an incumbent president, gain significant support in the House and Senate, form a government, and govern.

What are their prospects? Good, I think. Their success or failure will depend primarily upon three factors-the nature of the economy,. the nature of their campaign and the effect of the John Anderson factor. None of these is now knowable. At this point the White House is up for grabs.

Barring catastrophes, scandals and egregious blunders in one camp or the other, the November election will be decided almost entirely on the momentum of the economy. If the indices are encouraging — if auto sales and housing starts are going up, and if interest rates and unemployment are going down — Mr. Carter will be tough to beat. He will benefit from the universal tendency among men to cling to the ills they have, rather than fly to others that they know not of. But if the indices are down, it's Reagan's ball game.

Subjective factors also will figure heavily. How effective will the Republican contenders prove to be? Are they knowledgeable? Are they forceful but not abrasive? Are they fair? Do they demonstrate a presidential aura? Carter and Reagan will debate. Conceivably Reagan could blunder as Gerald Ford blundered in 1976, forgetting the Soviets' domination of Eastern Europe. But Carter's record is unusually vulnerable to skilled attack. The candidates will be seen and judged every night on TV. Those who live by the tube may die by the tube. As the incumbent president, Mr. Carter has a built-in advantage. As a speaker, Reagan is superior.

John Anderson, the independent, is the loose cannon. The public opinion polls now reflect deep dissatisfaction with a choice limited to.Cartereagan. One survey in May found only 23 percent of the people happy with these alterna ves. Contrary to many predictions (including my own), Anderson has not peaked in his popular support. Both Gallup and Harris continue to give Anderson roughly 25 percent of the vote. It now appears certain that Anderson will command the largest third-party vote since George Wallace in 1968.

The Anderson factor is elusive. On how many state ballots will his name appear? What vote in the electoral college would these states command? What kind of campaign will Anderson run? Four Gallup surveys between late March and early June indicated that Anderson would take net votes from Carter in five regions, from Reagan in four. The polls suggest that many young Republicans might defect to Anderson: many professionals, Jews and Catholics might move from Carter to Anderson. Anderson will be a spoiler. Whose dreams, finally, will he spoil?

Assume Reagan's election: Could he form a government, and govern? A point to remember here is that party labels become more meaningless with every passing election. With luck, Republicans could gain seven or eight seats in the Senate, perhaps 25 or 30 in the House. In neither instance would the GOP, as such, "control" a chamber. But when it comes to major issues, as distinguished from mere parliamentary organization, no party "controls" Congress. Party discipline and party regularity are things of the past. On such issues as energy, foreign aid and prayer in the schools, a hundred House Democrats regularly abandon their president. What matters is not the number of Republicans in the next Congress, but the number of conservatives. Reagan's program might not prevail, but this could not be attributed to a shortage of Republican votes, but to a shortage of votes, period.

Thus the task is carved out for the 69-year-old Reagan. He goes off to the November wars on waves of adulation as warm as any we have seen since Eisenhower in 1956 and Goldwater in 1964. But 24 years ago Ike's task was easy: 16 years ago Goldwater's task was impossible. In this uncertain summer of our discontent, Reagan's prospects lie somewhere in between.

said. "They're the highest type families we have."

While the Rich Square townsfolk rallied around "the boys," some voiced resentment at "outside interference" especially the FBI. Newspapermen were warned to leave town by an official who said he feared one "might be killed."

When Tyler presented Cunningham's confession the the Northampton County Grand Jury, it refused to indict anyone. It returned "not a true bill" against the seven whites and against Bush.

Cherry was outraged by the release of the seven. He called it "a miscarriage of justice," and directed Superior Court Judge J. Paul Frizzelle and charged with conspiracy to break and enter the jail and with breaking and entering the jail with intent to kill or injure a prisoner.

Action at a hearing that followed was even more weird. Cunningham was bound over, but the six other white men were freed because the confession was ruled to be admissible as evidence only against him. Also charged was jailer Edwards because the judge thought he had been lax in carrying out his duty to protect his prisoner.

"You did not ask them to desist, and you did not one time oppose them even by word," commented the judge.

Two weeks later, the Warren County Grand Jury said it could find no cause for action against Cunningham and Edwards. This also aroused Cherry's ire.

"We know that a crime was committed by forcibly taking a prisoner from a lawful jail," said the governor in a statement. "Until the persons who committed this offense are brought before a trial jury, the case can never be closed."

Eventually, Cherry's promise was fulfilled. The seven were indicted and brought to trial, but the jury acquitted them.

Probably the kindest comment was made by Bush, the target of the attempted lynching.

After the Northampton Grand Jury had released him and the seven white men, he told reporters he was "glad it came out this way. It was all a mistake anyway."

Ed Firmage, a law professor who ran unsuccessfully for Congress in 1978, calls the Institute an insidious right wing force, "the dark underside of Utah politics. A lot of them are John Birchers with different hats."

At 66, Skousen is a dynamic teacher and a skillful debater. A smallish bald, bespectacled man, he's the author of 20 books, including a Cold War best-seller, "The Naked Communist."

He spent 16 years in the FBI, training police, supervising communications and serving as administrative assistant to J. Edgar Hoover, whom he admired.

Skousen resigned from the FBI in 1953 to teach at BYU. In 1956, he became chief of police in Salt Lake City. In 1960 he ran unsuccessfully for governor and was fired as police chief by a new mayor.

Skousen teaches that inflation, "abusive taxation, federal meddling in local affairs, the loss of states' rights, corruption in high places, scandalous government waste and a multitude of other anxieties" can be eliminated through a series of Constitutional amendments, including repeal of the federal income tax.

Inflation can be cured by returning to a gold or silver standard and by abolishing the Federal Reserve Board, he says. He advocates phasing out federal welfare programs and turning Social Security over to the private sector.

Skousen's opponents say the Mormon church fails to criticize him because of his friendship with Benson. The church leader frequently speaks at Freemen events, and one of his sons, Mark, is executive vice president of the Freemen Institute.

At one time, Freemen lectures were announced from pulpits of Mormon wards. The practice was banned to avoid an implication that the church endorsed the contents of the lectures.

Skousen says he got the idea for the Freemen Institute from the late Mormon President David O. McKay in 1967. "When he asked me to rejoin the faculty at BYU he said it would be a wonderful thing if we could get a lot of people studying the Constitution in the tradition of the Founding Fathers," Skousen says.

Church spokesman Don LeFevre says of the Freemen Institute: "The church neither endorses nor condemns nor opposes it."

Utah political observers say Skousen's political clout waned after he was fired as police chief, but returned in the '70s. Today, some say, he can sink a GOP candidate in state conventions or make an unknown. Skousen's critics have raised questions about his political activities in light of Internal Revenue Service rules that prohibit political action by nonprofit, tax-exempt organizations.

Glenn Kimball, executive director of the Informed Voters League, says the IVL was formed in part to counter the threat to the Institute's tax-exempt status.

The IVL goal, says Kimball, is to consolidate conservative factions and single-issue groups into one national political force.

"We're seeking support from good, God-fearing people from all walks of life," Kimball says. "We'll ask ideal people to run as delegates in conventions. We'll caucus on the convention floor, support candidates, issues and platforms.

"We hope to be powerful enough to at least influence the selection of the vice president. We have our eyes on the presidency."

Kimball says the IVL would be happy with Ronald Reagan as president. He says the Republican candidate for governor in Utah this year, W. Robert Wright, "has attended our meetings."

The IVL recently began a newspaper, then merged it with the conservative Utah Independent. The new tabloid, "The National Independent Voters League Sentinel," claims a circulation of 3,000.

While Skousen insists that the formation of the IVL "had nothing to do with me," its founder, Californian Bill Doughty, is on the Freemen Institute's board of directors.

which was based on a visionary book by the city's public-works secretary, called "The Arterial City" and put in motion by a military government decree.

In a just-published book titled "Beyond the Expressways," Argentine architect P.H. Randle comments: "A merely arterial city would be like a corpse which has died of some other cause but whose arteries are in perfect condition."

Those who remember the days before triple-digit inflation say Buenos Aires is dying in another way: downtown strips like Corrientes, once called "the street that never sleeps," now darken at a respectable hour.

Economic austerity has forced many portenos to take two jobs and get to sleep earlier. The restaurants, cafes and tango bars where they once lingered over wine and steak dinners after the late movie can no longer afford three shifts of waiters.

Such places now face competition from dozens of new American-style franchises with names like Che Burger that cater to a faster pace of life. Pumper Nic, the local version of U.S. hamburger shops, offers "Pumper futures." You buy one coupon today to "freeze" the price of next month's hamburger and thus beat the 6 percent monthly inflation rate.

To fight inflation, the government has overvalued the peso so that imports get cheaper and force local manufacturers of competitive goods to hold down their prices. The policy has made Buenos Aires one of the world's most expensive cities for tourists who once crowded the Florida street pedestrian mall to buy cheap leather goods.

Now the mall looks like an international trade fair, as Argentines snap up imports never available here until a few months ago. Most of the thousands of color television sets bought since color transmissions began here May 1 are from Japan and West Germany.

An even bigger status symbol is the imported car, banned here until last year to protect Argentine automakers but now subject to duties that make it just more expensive than the local model.

Devise A Chart For Diagnosing

GENEVA (AP) — The U.N.'s World Health Organization is developing a series of simple question-and-answer flowcharts to help paramedics decide what is wrong with their patients.

The pioneering work on diagnostic flowcharts was carried out by Dr. Ben Essex in Tanzania in the 1970s. Essex developed a series of 53 flowcharts which use 60 commonly observed symptoms to diagnose over 200 illnesses. Each flowchart begins with a symptom. The health worker is then guided through a series of questions and answers and ultimately to a diagnosis.

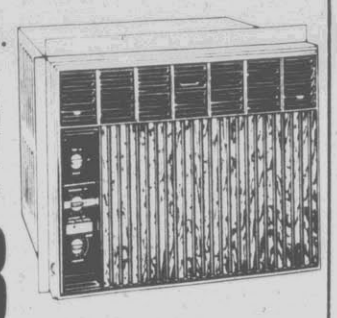

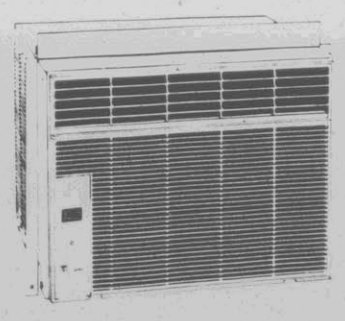

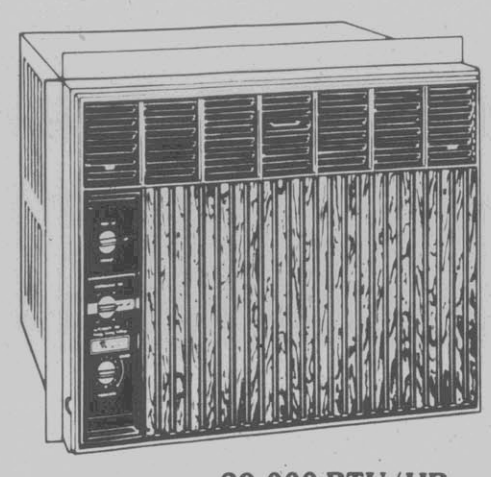

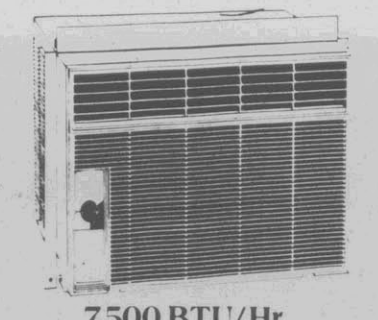

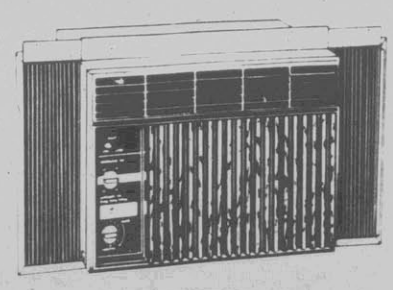

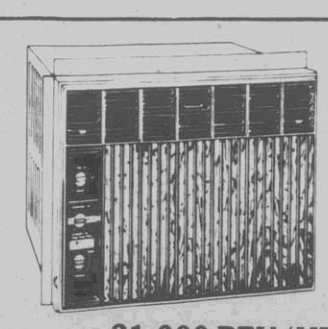

Essex has also developed another set of flowcharts to help midwives select the best course of action when faced with 15 common obstetrical complications.

Clay Kirkman Says...

One of the most beautiful flowering plants you can have for summer is the Crape Myrtle (Lagerstroemia indica). This plant will be blooming while everything else is suffering from the heat. The Crape Myrtle is beautiful year round. Its multitrunked form and beautiful bark adds interest to any winter landscape.

Crape Myrtles will grow better in a slightly acid soil. They do best in full sun and are very drought resistant. Crape Myrtles should be planted slightly above the ground to insure good drainage. Be sure to dig the hole wider and deeper than the container itself and add large amounts of organic matter to the backfill.

Crape Myrtles bloom on the new growth. Therefore it is important to fertilize them well in order to stimulate new growth. The faded flower blossoms should be pruned to encourage blooming the next season. You may also want to prune away any suckers at the base of the plant.

A beautiful, multitrunked Crape Myrtle makes an excellent focal point of any garden. They can also be planted along a walk for a nice effect or be used as a screen when used in combination with an evergreen plant. Crape Myrtles also look nice when a ground cover is planted beneath them. In addition to being fast growing, Crape Myrtles do not normally exceed 25 to 30 feet in height. By the leaves having a fine texture, these plants offer light shade that creates an open and airy feeling.

By DAN SEWELL
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Three young Cubans who stole a boat for their daring flight to freedom may land in American jails because the U.S. government has decided to prosecute "boatjackers" from the Communist island.

"Why are we being accused? Why are we the ones?" asked Epifano Mantilla, one of three 24-year-old refugees.

The trio had bound the captain of a 30-foot fishing boat and piloted his craft to Key West, where they landed July 8.

In a statement Friday, the Justice Department said the federal government "cannot condone situations where fleeing Cubans choose means of escape which jeopardize the lives or safety of innocent persons."

The three appeared before a U.S. Magistrate Friday on charges of transportation and introduction into the United States of stolen property. A hearing on the charges, which could carry sentences of 10 years in prison and $10,000 fines for convictions, was set for Aug. 4.

The captain of the hijacked craft, Jesus Hernando Rivero, returned to Cuba and may come here to testify in the trial of the three men, authorities said.

U.S. officials say the decision to prosecute isn't intended to placate Cuban President Fidel Castro, who has complained about the United States accepting boatjackers.

"This problem has been under study by the Administration since last October, when the first incident took place," said a Carter administration official who asked not to be named.

"We have a genuine concern that the world not gain the impression that the United States condones hijacking of vessels or boats under any circumstances."

But lawyer Ellis Rubin, who is representing the alleged boatjackers said, "I think this is absolutely outrageous, that the Carter Administration is in some way apologizing to the Castro government.

"The United States is cooperating with Fidel Castro to prosecute three young men trying to escape communism."

Myles Frechette, head of the State Department's Cuban desk, said the charges against Omar Blanco, Mantilla and Luis Collazo are a warning to others who might be planning to do the same thing.

The three were released to the custody of their Miami relatives, who posted $25,000 surety bonds for each pending the August hearing.

There have been hundreds of boatjackings to the United States since Castro's 1959 revolution, but only a few in recent years until an October incident. That was followed by three boatjackings in February and at least two since the "Freedom Flotilla" began April 20.

Denies Role In Bhaktiar Death

By ROBERT KAYLOR

PARIS (UPI) — Iran's Foreign Minister Shadegh Ghotbzadeh Saturday said his country "condemned" terrorism, and the Islamic regime was not involved in the assassination attempt against Shapour Bhaktiar, the deposed shah's last prime minister.

Police announced that two more suspected members of an Arab "hit squad" were arrested at dawn, bringing to five the number of people in custody for the attack, which touched off a wild gunbattle that killed a police officer and a woman.

"If there are certain elements that wanted to do something, they had nothing to do with the Iranian government," Ghotbzadeh told French television in a brief interview Saturday. "The Iranian government has no need to adopt terrorist methods, which it has always condemned."

Ghotbzadeh canceled a trip to Nicaragua after French officials protested the "terrorist action" while he was changing planes in Paris Friday. He went to the Foreign Ministry Saturday to deliver his government's views.

Bakhtiar, an outspoken opponent of Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Khomeini, charged the gunmen were dispatched by Tehran to kill him.

The would-be assassins tried to shoot their way into Bakhtiar's apartment with silencer-equipped pistols. Besides the police guard and a woman neighbor killed in the attack, three others were wounded, including a police officer who was in a coma Saturday.

In an apparent reference to the recently smashed coup in Iran to which Bakhtiar has been linked, Ghotbzadeh said, "There are many plots against us." He indicated he would discuss with French officials the possible involvement of exiles in Paris.

Miami Curfew Is Continued

By MIKE McQUEEN
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI (AP) — Dade County officials say they will wait until after daybreak today to decide whether to keep the racially torn Liberty City neighborhood under the stiff curfew that has helped calm violence in the area.

The 9 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew, along with restrictions on firearms, gasoline sales and carrying alcoholic beverages in public, was imposed Thursday, initially for a three-day period ending Sunday morning.

During the first two nights of the curfew, police arrested 78 people, mostly on curfew violation charges. Sporadic gunfire and throwing of rocks and bottles was reported in a two-square-mile trouble area, but there were no injuries.

"More than likely, it (the curfew) will be extended Sunday night," said Dade Metro police spokesman Rueben Jones. "Things are quiet now, but I personally think it'll be a good idea to just extend it right through the weekend. Then Monday morning, we'll see."

The violence centered in the same area wracked by the bloody May riots that killed 18 people and left more than $100 million in damages, erupted Tuesday after white policemen tried to arrest several robbery suspects in the James E. Scott Homes project, the largest public housing development in Dade County.

Violence the next two nights injured more than 40 people, including six policemen who required hospital treatment.

Some 400 National Guard troops, activated Thursday by Gov. Bob Graham, remained at armories ready for possible duty. And County Manager Merrett Stierheim called Public Safety Director Bobby Jones back from a vacation camping trip.

Meanwhile, Roy Innes, national chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, visited the city. "Please come to Miami, situation critical," Innes was asked in a telegram from community leaders.

One black leader, Archie Hardwick, director of the James E. Scott Community Center, said there were grim differences between the Miami trouble and the riots in Los Angeles during the 1960s. Hardwick worked at a community center in Watts at the time.

"There are a lot of similarities, but there are basic differences.

"In Watts, there was a feeling of hope that somehwere down the line things would change. This time," he said, "there's more hostility, more violence. I think a lot of us feel too much time is spend asking who the leader is. The whites ask that, rather than spending time working on solutions."

Trial Moved To West Palm Beach

MIAMI (AP) — A judge has moved the trial of a suspended high school principal charged in the "gold plumbing" case amid reports that several potential jurors have received threatening phone calls.

Circuit Judge Marvin Mounts ordered the trial of Solomon Barnes to be moved to West Palm Beach. It is to begin Aug. 18.

Mounts granted the change of venue Friday at the request of H.T. Smith, Barnes' attorney. Mounts said the prosecution agreed to the move.

A number of potential jurors had reported threatening telephone calls to their homes this week.

Priests Plead Innocent To Charges

MIAMI (AP) — The Rev. Joe Doss, one of two priests who brought 437 Cuban refugees to the United States after President Carter ordered a halt to the "Freedom Flotilla," says he felt a moral obligation to continue the mission even though he knew he might be arrested.

Doss, 37, and the Rev. Leo Frade, 36, both of New Orleans, pleaded innocent Friday to charges of illegally bringing Cuban refugees to the United States and violating Carter's order.

Frade and five other crew members waived their rights to appear in court. Innocent pleas were entered on their behalf before U.S. Magistrate Peter Palermo.

The priests, using contributions from Cuban exiles and other sponsors, had bought a converted World War II submarine chaser, christened the vessel "God's Mercy" and sailed off for Cuba last month.

Doss said he wasn't defying U.S. foreign policy or immigration laws by ferrying the Cubans to Key West.

"The one tremendous mistake was, when (President Carter) changed his policy, he did not take into account the fact that many of us had already turned in names to the Cuban authorities," Doss said. "You don't turn in names of people and leave them there.

Will Not Receive Special Programs

MIAMI (AP) — Children of Cuban, Haitian and Nicaraguan refugees who recently arrived in this country will not be provided special programs by the Dade County school system, officials say.

The county school board voted Wednesday to defy federal laws mandating that all refugee school children be given special classes and counseling.

Board members said they do not have the money to pay for the special programs for the recent influx of school-age refugee children who arrived during the "Freedom Flotilla" from Cuba.

School officials say they need $20 million in federal funds to provide special education for the estimated 20,000 refugee children expected to enroll this fall.

Federal law says the children must be taught English and given special counseling to help them adjust to American culture as well as a full schedule of classes in their native tongue.

Women In Denmark Protest Coup

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Sixty women stormed the United Nations women's conference here Saturday to protest the military coup in Bolivia. They fought with Danish police and several women were hurt.

The Bolivian military overthrew interim President Lidia Gueiler on Thursday and annulled the outcome of last month's presidential election, thwarting leftist Hernan Siles Zuazo who had been expected to succeed Miss Gueiler as leader of the South American nation. It was Bolivia's 189th coup in 155 years of independence.

The protesting women here were led by Domitila Barrios de Chungara, a Bolivian tin miner's wife and mother of seven children, who was attending another women's conference being held nearby. She has been in conflict with Bolivian authorities for trying to organize Bolivian women.

Takes Court Challenge Under Advisement

BOSTON (AP) — A federal judge Saturday took under advisement a court challenge aimed at halting Monday's draft registration for 20-year-old men.

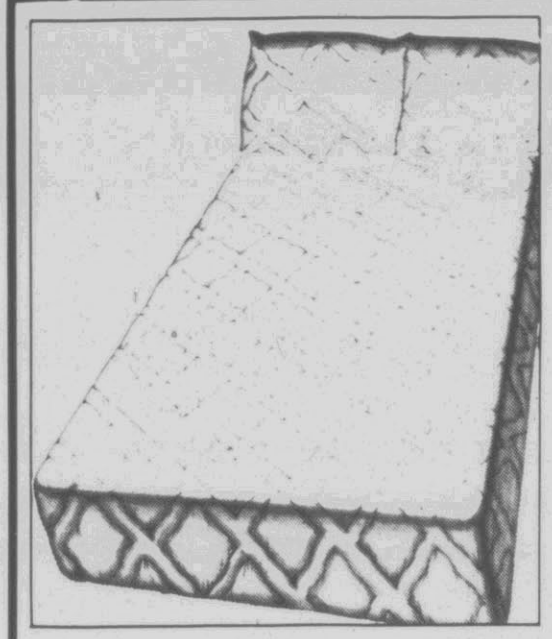

"I'm still entertaining some doubts on the irreparable harm" as alleged by the plaintiffs, said Judge Walter Jay Skinner in U.S. District Court. Irreparable harm must be shown for a temporary injunction to be granted.

Lawyers for three college-age plaintiffs argued that historically there has been a draft only at times of national emergencies or actual hostilities. And they said the draft registration was an invasion of privacy that could lead to the death of those who registered.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Marianne Bowler responded, "I don't believe a trip to the post office to fill out a card is a serious deprivation" of rights. "The basic problem is the plaintiffs have not demonstrated irreparable harm."

Earlier, Skinner said he talked to officials at federal court in Philadelphia where a similar suit was filed. Bowler had asked Skinner to delay hearing the Boston case until there was a ruling from Philadelphia.

Blackbeard, An Ideal Subject For Outdoor Drama

A Review

Although most of us may not wish to be remembered as scoundrels, even of the most colorful sort, there's something about the swagger and bravodo of intemperate figures who have cut a path in history that most of us secretly admire.

A figure who has served as a magnet of attraction to several generations of North Carolinians is the 18th century pirate, Edward Teach, more familiarly known as Blackbeard, a British lad endowed with an evil chirasma that made it possible for him to rise a notch or two beyond the run-of-the-mill ruffians of his day.

Accurate details of Blackbeard's life are rather scanty, but legends attached to his name have proliferated, have been embellished until today the legends seem more substantial than the reality.

Greenville's Stuart Aronson is another in the long line of story tellers who have created another dimension to this roving robber of the high seas. Using the known fact that Teach did on occasion make Bath Town one of his ports of call, Aronson several years ago authored an outdoor drama for Bath, "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag." Whatever it's deviation from the general concept of the pirate as a ruthless cutthroat, the drama is a fine piece of entertainment — full of action, color, music, romance, intrigue — ingredients necessary for the special requirements of an outdoor drama.

This year's production, which opened June 26, reveals a decided improvement, particularly in the script, over the last production I saw in 1978. Some judicious cuts have taken Aronson's Blackbeard several steps away from the near-elegant dandy of the first couple of seasons.

The cast this year is a mixture of old and new members. Ervin Bonner Ambrose, Jr., is back in the title role after a year's absence. Ambrose is excellent in the scenes in which he plays a coarse, robust Blackbeard; and handles with conviction the scenes in which the other, more tender side of his nature is manifest. Shauna Holmes as Mary Ormond, the Bath lass whom Blackbeard woos and marries, is consistently in top form, first as a starry-eyed girl in love with a legend, then as the devoted wife able to see what others cannot see, and finally, as a maturing woman who holds steadfast to her conviction that Blackbeard was basically a good man.

Tanya Wall gives a well-rounded interpretation of Virginia Flanniken, the shrewd, capable but thoughtful proprietress of a Bath bar, The Golden Tankard. Joseph Bailey, a young Beaufort County Negro who has portrayed Caesar, Blackbeard's sidekick every season, is as impressive as ever, physically and as the one among the pirates whose loyalty to Blackbeard never wavers. Rose High student Lisa Distefano carries off with aplomb her role as the beautiful, vivacious Elizabeth Gale, always ready to use her feminine charms to get results.

One of the real pleasures of this year's cast is Doug Hamilton as pirate Nathaniel Jackson. He manages to appear simultaneously brittle and elastic as he swaggers about, and his fine singing voice is put to excellent use in solo openings of two songs, "A Roving," and "Hanging John."

Young Roy Tripp III of Greenville, who has been in the news recently as the recipient of two talent singing trips, has the play's only child role, that of young Ned Teach, Jr. Others among the large cast include Greg Ange as Israel Hands; Drille (Li) Carter in her repeat role of Margaret; E. T. Taylor as Governor Eden; Will Sumner, the pathetic mute Mudo; Donald Wagoner as Edward Moseley; David Morgan, Colonel Maurice Moore; and Sheila Holland as the nagging Mrs. Ormond. Robert Sharpe, possessor of an exceptionally resonant voice, has a small role as John Clayton. Bill Roberson's narration is well-timed, lucid and adds much to the success of the evening.

Linda Bredin serves the dual roles of production stage manager and light designer. Musical direction and arrangements, as well as original music, is by Joseph Distefano, a faculty member of the ECU School of Music. For the first time this year, Distefano has scored music for the battle scene. Admittedly, it's an invigorating addition. However, I have reservations about the use of music at this point, remembering the effectiveness of silence evoking a true feel for night hours as the pirates waited on water for the expected attack by Governor Spotswood's men.

Elaine McCaujley is responsible for the spirited choreography. She also has the role of woman pirate Anne Bonney. Christopher Kara-Eneff, who plays Calico Jack Rackham, has staged the battle scene, and Sally Brooks and Doris Moore have designed the costumes.

Greenville area people who have not yet seen "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag" should give it a try. It is a fine evening of entertainment — and happily, it's only a 47 mile drive from central Greenville. The drama shows each Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening at 8:45, and will be presented through August 16. Tickets are priced at $4.50 (reserved), $4 for general admission and $2 for children under 12. For information and reservations, write: Blackbeard, P. O. Box 209, Bath, N. C., 27808 or call 923-6931.

The Ambience Of Old Bath Town

As Bill Roberson, spotlighted by a single circle of light on the bare wood stage of the Bath amphitheater, narrates a brief history of the village of Bath at the beginning of "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag," it is easy to slip back in time and to experience something of the ambience of old Bath Town of two and a half centuries ago.

Typically, as the performance begins, the last of summer's lingering twilight hues fade into smoky darkness. Nearby, the wide, placid waters of Bath Creek reflect a glow like old pewter through the openings of dark pines, whose silhouettes are decorated by flickering flashes of gold as fireflies fly about. An occasional bat swoops overhead in his swift evening ballet, and in the distance, laughter of children playing late outdoors drift across untended fields dense with Queen Anne's lace.

On Thursday night, because of the time of month, a first quarter moon shone in the sky, framed by trees encircling the amphitheater. By intermission time, night clouds obscured the moon. Just as the tempetuous battle scene got underway, a summer storm approached, its sheets of lightning and moaning gusts of wind creating a perfect accompaniment to the impending battle.

Penzance To Air On Radio

CHAPEL HILL — One of the favorite Gilbert and Sullivan musicals, "The Pirates of Penzance," will be performed in a live broadcast over WUNC Radio at 8 p.m. on Sunday, July 27.

The performance being broadcast is by the Cincinnati Opera, and will originate from Cincinnati's historic Music Hall, America's second oldest opera house.

"Pirates" is 100 years old this year, and received its world premiere in New York City in 1880.

The cost of the production has been underwritten by a grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

CHERRY — Photographer Jackson Hill's wanderings have resulted in "Cherry" and other studies of women in various stages of adornment. Hill is one of nine photographers represented in "Photo Tech: Alternative Methods," on view through July 27 in the Collectors Gallery of the N. C. Museum of Art, Raleigh. The public is invited to attend the show and there is no admission charged. (Photo Courtesy N.C. Museum of Art)

Family Night Set For Drama

KENANSVILLE — Family night with special rates for admittance to "The Liberty Cart" begins tonight. Tonight and every Sunday night during the season (through August 24), two or more members of the same family will be admitted for half price.

The drama is being performed every Thursday through Sunday night. For information and reservations, write to: The Liberty Cart, P. O. Box 470, Kenansville, N. C., 28349 or call Kerry Maher at 296-0721.

First Summer Theater Play Opening July 28th

MAKING A POINT . . . Amanda Muir, as Doris, emphasizes a point to George, played by Del Lewis, in the East Carolina Summer Theater production of "Same Time Next Year," which opens July 28 at the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus. The play is one of two comedies being presented this summer. Tickets are priced at $10 for both plays, and at $7 for a single play. These can be reserved by calling 757-6390 between 9 and 5 daily. (ECU News Bureau Photo by Marianne Baines.)

Bernard Slade's "Same Time Next Year" is more than an adulterous love affair that takes place briefly once a year. It is a reflection of two and a half decades of manners, morals and attitudes in America — mirrored in the change of the play's two characters — Doris, portrayed by Amanda Muir; and George, played by Del Lewis.

George picks up Doris in a California inn in 1951 and they agree to meet "same time, next year." Both are happily married, each with three children, and except for their yearly encounter, they remain loyal to their respective spouses.

Six scenes take place, each one five years later than the previous one. Between scenes, tapes portray through speeches, songs, sports and news broadcasts, America at the time of the next scene.

In the beginning, George is an uptight neurotic accountant. Over the years he becomes increasingly stuffy and richer, only to give it all up to go into analysis. He joins encounter groups, becomes a latter-day hippie, and finally ends up back in the establishment.

Doris starts out an awkward, uneducated girl becoming in progression a restless young housewife, a student returning to college, an over-aged flower child, a successful career woman, and eventually, a settled matron.

Their personal transitions are never synchronized, making the contrast and change in each all the more pointed.

Drama critics praised the play when it came to Braodway: ". . . a delicious and very moral kind of immoral play," Clive Barnes of the New York Times wrote. "It has wit, compassion, a sense of humor and a feel for nostalgia — who could ask for anything more? — an enchanting evening."

"Same Time Next Year" opens July 28 at the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall and will run through August 2 with performances at 8:15 nightly. A matines is being given at 2 p.m. on July 30.

Tickets are $7 for this play alone, and are priced at $10 for this play and the succeeding one to be presented by the East Carolina Summer Theater, "Vanities," which opens August 4. For reservations, call 757-9390 between 9 and 5 daily.

Hospitality House

WASHINGTON — Energy is the basic theme of Kay Currie's "Hospitality House," being aired over WITN-TV, Channel 7, from noon to 1 p.m. today.

Guests on the opening part of the show are Dr. Gene Harrison, manager of Crew Engineering for the Apollo Moon Program, and Doug Hill, coordinator of New Bern's L-Five Society. The two will talk about a satellite in space that will provide a 24-hour around the clock source of electricity.

Six other guests, all discussing various phases of energy, were interviewed by Ms. Currie earlier this year at the national meeting of women in TV and radio held in San Antonio, Texas. These guests, appearing in taped segments, are:

— John B. Westfall of Phillips Chemical Co, who explains the costs and procedures in manufacturing polyester from oil;

— David Fetterman of Oxirane Corp., whose topic is a new gasoline blend to increase the quality of gasoline;

— Frank M. Brodgen, PR director of Tennessee Eastman Co., talking about the possibilities of using coal, not gasoline energy, in manufacturing;

— Clive R. Gardner, of the Plastics Division of ICI Americas, who discusses the uses of polyester film for many purposes; and — Bill Kacy of the Division of Energy, Transporation Dept., Union Carbide Corp. Kacy sums up the role of energy conservation as an ace in the hole for users.

Pony Roundup Set

CAPE CHARLES, VA. — The Chincoteague Pony Roundup and Auction at the tranquil Virginia eastern shore village of Chincoteague begins this year on Wednesday, July 30.

On that day, scores of wild ponies, natural inhabitants of Assateague Island, will be rounded up to swim the narrow channel which separates the barrier island from the town of Cincotaague.

On Thursday, July 31, the ponies will be auctioned off to persons who will take them home as pets. In past years, the ponies have brought as much as $150 per head. Then, on Friday, August 1, unsold ponies will be herded back to the channel for the swim back to their island home.

The final day of the festival, Saturday, August 2 will be devoted to rides, entertainment, and serving of freshly-caught oysters and clams. All these activities are conducted by the local volunteer fire department, for the purpose of raising funds for the department.

Audubon Prints On Exhibit

RALEIGH — An exhibition of 12 prints from John James Audubon's famous portfolio, "The Birds of America," is on view at the N. C. Museum of Art in Raleigh, to be up through August 3. The prints, from the Museum's complete set of more than 400 prints, are being shown on the fourth floor of the Museum, located at 107 E. Morgan Street. Admission is free.

This famous portfolio was issued in a limited edition of less than 200 copies between 1827 and 1838.

Most of the folio was purchased for the N. C. State Library in 1846 and was transferred to the Museum in 1974. The few prints that were needed to complete the set have been acquired by the Museum over the past several years.

GOV. SCHOOL SOLOIST

LAURINBURG —Sonya Marie Morris, a rising junior at Rose High, was soloist with the choir of the Governor's School-East, St. Andrews College, in a program held July 15. A soprano, Ms. Morris was featured in Norman Dello Joio's "A Jubilant Song."

Riverfest '80 Slated

WILMINGTON — Plans for the second annual "Old Wilmington Riverfront Celebration," also known as "Riverfest '80" have been announced.

This year the celebration is set for October 3, 4 and 5 with a variety of activities scheduled — including a major arts and crafts show, children's events, and musical, dance and drama performances.

Other features of the festival will be the Raft Race on the Cape Fear River, the German tent specializing in German food and beer, the Bike Race, and live entertainment on a barge docked opposite the Fedeal Building on Water Street.

In addition, various games tournaments, water activities, historic tours, gymnastics exhibitions and a film festival will be held. Full details of events will be announced at a later date.

Persons interested in entry or other information are to write to: Cindy Marr, Wilmington Hilton Inn, 301 N. Water Street, Wilmington, N. C., 28401.

Symphony Appointments

RALEIGH — Two persons have been named to positions with the North Carolina Symphony. Announcement of the appointments were made by R. Max Abbott, president of the symphony.

Robert P. Hyatty, general manager of "The Lost Colony," has been named director of development and marketing for the symphony. Hyatt is a graduate of Yale University, UNC-Chapel Hill and Duke University, where he received a master of theology degree. He has been with "The Lost Colony" since 1977, and prior to that time, was dean of students at the N. C. School of the Arts for nine years.

Jackson Parkhurst has been named director of education and assistant conductor of the North Carolina Symphony. Founder of the Brevard Chamber Orchestra four years ago, Parkhurst has been music director of the Lexington Park String Ensemble and director of choral music at UNC-Asheville for the past year. He was also a former assistant conductor of the symphony from 1969-1971.

Barbershop Quartet, Male Chorus Featured In Today's Park Concert

The harmonic strains of barbershop and male choral music are the featured attractions for today's Sunday in the Park concert.

At 7 p.m. today on the grassy slope of the Sunday in the Park site east of Reade Street, two local groups will be performing. (In the event of rain, the program will be presented at the same site at 7 p.m. Monday, July 21).

One group on the entertainment bill is the Double Paradocs Quartet — composed of Drs. Billy Jones, baritone; Norman Pierce, baritone, Al Ingenito, lead, and Bob Hanrahan, tenor. The second group is a chorus of 30 male voices, directed by Washington attorney Jim Vosburgh. Don Lawler is president of this singing group.

A number of well known favorites of musical America will be heard in today's concert, including songs such as "Alexander's Ragtime Band;" "Ida;" "Dem Bones;" "Darkness on the Delta;" and "Wait Til the Sun Shines, Nellie."

The public, including children, are welcomed. It is suggested that folding chairs, pillows or other aids to comfort be brought along for the informal on the grass setting.

Sunday in the Park is funded by the City of Greenville and is presented under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department. Stuart Aronson is coordinator of the weekly Sunday programs.

Second Session Of Music Camp Students Giving Concert Today

The second concert this summer by students attending the East Carolina University annual Summer Music Camp will be held today at 6:30 a.m.

The concert, being presented by students attending the second session of the camp, will begin at 6:30 p.m. and will be held in the open space before the A. J. Fletcher Music Center. All four bands will be playing. The public is invited and there is no charge. Those attending are welcome to bring along pillows, etc. to make listening more comfortable.

Herbert L. Carter, director of the camp, is in charge of this second summer session (Harold Jones directed the first session). Carter is conductor of the student Blue Band, and other conductors are: Ray Haney of Elizabethtown, the Red Band; Ed Jones of Woodbridge, Virginia, the Green Band; and Dr. Ralph Shumaker, the Purple Band.

Musicians and teachers on the staff include Dr. Joseph Distefano, theory and administration; Tom Goolsby, jazz ensemble and trumpet; Ann Searl and Lynne Marks, flute; David Hawkins, double reeds; Luther Gillon, clarinet; Robert Cowles, saxophone; James Parnell, horn and small ensembles; George Broussard, trombone; Guyte Cotton, baritone and tuba; James Stockner, percussion; Denise Hodges and Dan Farina, theory. Band assistants are Ronnie Wooten, Mickey Eury, Bill Keith and Willie Morris.

This year, a contingent of students from the Panama Canal Zone are attending the second session of the summer camp. They are from Balboa and Cristobal High Schools. Their attendance is sponsored by Dr. James Wolf, chief, Educational Division of the Department of Defense Dependent Schools in Panama.

The current second session began July 13 and continues through July 25.

STUDENTS FROM PANAMA — Students from two high schools in Panama — Balboa and Cristobal — are attending the second session of the ECU Summer Music Camp now underway. They are shown here in the open space in front of the A. J. Fletcher Music Center, where a four-band concert will be held at 6:30 p.m. today. The public is invited to attend and there is no admission charge. (ECU News Bureau Photo).

FILMMAKER AND ACTRESS — North Carolina filmmaker Earl Owensby and actress Raquel Welch discuss Owenby's plans for five productions in North Carolina this year. The Shelby native has completed "Lady Gray: Superstar" and "Day of Judgement" and is currently on the set of "Circus Magic," starring Dana Andrews, which his studio is producing for a New York company, The Krypton Corporation. Two other Owenby films are scheduled for the coming months, to be filmed in western North Carolina — "Nightmare" and "Hit The Ground Running." Owenby's E.O. Studio is the largest independent facility in the country outside of California.

Stacey Jones' show at the Greenville Art Center, "An Installation," is, so far as I can remember, the first of its kind at the center. For that reason alone, it would have interest as an innovative event — but this "concrete" installation has a solid appeal as an example of how everyday, utilitarian objects can take on a totally new dimension through non-conventional usage.

Jones, a native of Raleigh and a recent graduate of the School of Art, East Carolina University, has installed (or to use a second definition, arranged) a total of 132 cement blocks in three basic sizes in the three sections of the south gallery at the center. On the floor of one section, Jones has installed a carpet of 89 solid, thin rectangular blocks arranged in a pattern five blocks by 16 — with an empty space where the 90th block would go. This "missing" block within the pattern allows for multiple rearrangement of the basic pattern, and Jones has a chart on the wall showing different placements of the empty space at different time periods.

A second installation is also of solid rectangular cement block, 21 of them, arranged in a pattern of 3 by 7 blocks with space between each row of threes. The third arrangement involves 22 stand up blocks, installed on the floor in the shape of the letter L to fit the shape of the gallery space. These are square, frame shaped blocks. The long leg of the L faces unpainted plywood steps against a wall. The presence of the steps are accentuated by framed black and white photographs of the steps placed on the wall directly above the steps. One other plywood structure, a standing box, completes the show.

Jones' formal, geometrically controlled arrangement of basic materials — concrete blocks and plywood, underscores the simplicity of beauty that exist in ordinary, everyday objects subjected to a visual framework designed to pinpoint qualities not usually apparent in more familiar terms.

"One of my aims in this installation is to provide an art experience that goes beyond the ordinary way of seeing these objects," Jones commented. "I hope what I've done here can help make more accessible to many people a new way, a different concept in looking at objects that are readily recognizable.

"It's important to me that people learn to appreciate art at any level," Jones added. "Whatever people seeing the show might get out of it, is, I feel, entirely up to the individual, and I think there are many valid responses to this type of show."

Jones plans to attend graduate school in the future, and also hopes to be able to travel some. The current show at the Gray Gallery on the East Carolina University campus, a correspondance exhibition, was coordinated and hung by Jones.

Concrete blocks for the installation were provided through the courtesy of Hurst Concrete Products Co., Inc. of Greenville.

Art Center hours are 9 to 5 daily, Monday through Friday. The Greenville Art Center is located at 802 Evans Street. All exhibitions at the center are without charge, and the public is invited to attend.

New Director For The Greenville Art Center

NEW DIRECTOR NAMED . . . Mary Anne Pennington, center, has been named the new director of the Greenville Art Center, succeeding Mrs. Edith Walker, who resigned earlier this year. With Ms. Pennington are Mrs. Blanche Monroe, left, president of the East Carolina Art Society, governing body for the center, and Maggie Noss, currently the interim director of the center.

On August 18 a new director will come on board at the Greenville Art Center. Mary Anne Pennington, artist-teacher who formerly studied and taught in the Greenville area, has been selected for the position of director of the center, located at 802 Evans Street. Announcement of the selection was made by Mrs. Blanche Monroe, president of the East Carolina Art Society, the governing body adminstering the Greenville Art Center.

Born in Franklin, Va., the daughter of a professional military man now retired and living in Hertford, she attended East Carolina University, the University of Maryland in Okinawa, and Virginia Commonwealth University. She received the MFA degree from ECU.

After graduating from ECU, Ms. Pennington was employed to set up the art department at Presbyterian College in Clinton, S. C., where she spent three years. From South Carolina, she went to Fort Sill, Oklahoma. While there, she took a course in machine shop welding at Cameron College, and then for a period of time worked in a foundry in St. Petersburg, Florida.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

BY WILLIE MAE GIBBS

Several new books at the library address the subject of career guidance for women who may be new to the job market, aiming for a top executive position, or somewhere in between.

Catalyst, the national nonprofit organization dedicated to helping women choose, launch and advance their careers, offers in a book called "Marketing Yourself" proven advice on how to impress potential employers through resumes and interviews. The step-by-step instructions given in Part One, Resume Preparation, are fully tested guidelines designed to help the woman in today's job market determine realistic goals, develop a personal biography, analyze her achievements, and choose a resume format that will open doors to interviews. Part two, The Interview Guide, teaches women how to sell themselves through techniques such as hypothetical interviews, role playing, and focusing on personal experiences, goals and situations. This section also discusses job research, body language and other ploys that can give applicants the competitive edge. Hundreds of job seekers across the country have used techniques and approaches in "Marketing Yourself" to face crucial interviews with confidence, composure, and well-organized marketing skills.

"Re-Entering" by Eleanor Berman goes well beyond the usual career guide and deals specifically with the problems of returning homemakers. Job hunters whose children have passed infancy, those escaping the later "empty nest" syndrome, the newly divorced, widows, or women who simply want to augment the family income — can now transform what has often been a traumatic experience into a rich and rewarding period of growth. In "Re-Entering" they can discover the best ways to overcome initial fear associated with a return to work, a wealth of factual information on newest trends in today's job market, an eye-opening section on financial assistance and special programs available from colleges, special techniques for those who want to make up for lost time by moving ahead fast, and invaluable advice on keeping the family back home happy. Information is also given for getting a job when you lack experience. A chapter on becoming re-acquainted with yourself and your hidden strengths can yield surprising results. Firsthand accounts from re-entering women offer a realistic but also inspiring picture of what the successful back-to-work strategies in "Re-Entering" can accomplish.

CHAPEL HILL — Wednesday is the day that viewers can see something of the fascinating underwater world off the coast of North Carolina, when "Beyond The Breakers" is aired. This and other programs highlighting the coming week on UNC-TV (Channel 25, Greenville), are:

— Monday, July 21, 8 p.m. — "The Lathe of Heaven," a science fiction drama based on Ursula K. Le Guin's 1971 bestseller, has Bruce Davision as George Orr, a man plagued by dreams that he could create a Utopia. Kevin Conway portrays the doctor.

— Wednesday, July 23, 8 p.m. — For the first time, underwater cameras for television explores the waters off Cape Hatteras, the graveyard of the Atlantic, to study the marine life the area sustains. Also, underwater photographer Bill Lovin and his crew of divers visit three wrecks off the coast — the Papoose, the tanker John D. Gill, and the German U-boat U-352. Outer Banks historian David Stick, Doug Young of the Office of Marine Affairs, and divers Ron Thrower and David Katzenmeyer comment on the importance of wreckage to the livelihood and recreation of Tar Heels living along the coast.

— Wednesday, July 23 — 10 p.m. — Rosamond Bernier is hostess for a two-part series, "Meaning of Modern Art." The first session is entitled "Impressionism: When Art is Made New" and covers the work of 19th century artists suh as Monet, Manet, Pissaro, Renoir, Degas, Sisley, and Morisot. The second part, "New York: Capitol of Avant-Garde" will be aired at 10 p.m. on Wednesday, July 30.

— Thursday, July 24, 9 p.m. — "The Gentle Killers," a documentary by Robin Brown on killer whales, reveals that the mammals have massive brains, two voices, and the possibility of telepathic contact with others of their kind. The film traces the capture and transport of two whales to a research center in Holland.

New Art Center Director . . .

In 1970, Ms. Pennington returned to Greenville to teach art in the Pitt County and Greenville City Schools — with two years at E. B. Aycock.

Typical of many children of the military, Ms. Pennington early in life acquired a deep-rooted love of traveling, and after teaching in Greenville, she relocated to coastal Virginia where she taught at the Eastern Shore Community College in Melfa. There, she also established a studio.

Next was a trip to Europe. It began as a tourist jaunt, but for a while she lived in Stuttgart, West Germany and worked in nearby Ludwigsburg. On returning to the states she opted for Washington, D. C., but was soon back in North Carolina to accept an offer to teach at Pembroke State University. There she taught sculpture, drawing and art history.

Ms. Pennington's major is sculpture, "but just now I'm concentrating on wood and wood construction," Ms. Pennington observed.

Her work has been exhibited in numerous North Carolina and eastern seaboard exhibitions. She also had a one-artist show at Gallery Gruen in Stuttgart, and her work is represented in "Artist's Show Case," a gallery in Virginia Beach, Virginia.

Commenting on her decision to accept the directorship of the Art Center to succeed Mrs. Edith Walker, who resigned a couple of months ago, Ms. Pennington said "this is an opportunity to let my career take a totally new direction. I'm really excited about the possibilities here at the Art Center, and I'll be ready to be right in the middle of things when I come back in August. Also, I'm happy to be coming back to Greenville."

South Stings North, 27-0

By LARRY SULLIVAN
Reflector Sports Writer

For the boys from the South, there is no place like Home. The Boys Home All-Star Football Game, that is.

Facing an uphill battle heading into the 18th annual event, the Will Campagna-coached South unit dominated every facet of the game last night in completely destroying its North counterparts, 27-0.

"I just can't explain it," an obviously happy Campagna said after the final second ticked off of the clock in East Carolina's Ficklen Stadium. "I am real pleased to say the least. I think the boys showed great determination throughout the game."

The two most determined efforts of the game came from a pair of Confederate running backs as Most Valuable Back Chris Cook of Huntersville and Andre Mangnum of Clayton teamed up for 202 of their team's 301 net yards on the ground.

"Because of his speed, Chris can go both inside and out," Campagna said of his prize running back. "Andre has the power to go anywhere he wants to. They were the key to our offense. There is no doubt about that."

According to the North's head coach Walt Wiggins, it was the defense of the smaller South that made the difference in the game. "I told their coaches before the game that I thought they had a better defense," a somewhat disappointed Wiggins said of the game. "We just couldn't keep the football. That made the difference."

The defense of the South, on the other hand, had little difficulty in stopping the supposedly potent offense of the North. The North unit was able to manage only 21 net yards on the ground and added 86 through the air while the South was comprising 301 and 17, respectively. The blue and white-clad losers ran 18 rushing plays, with only eight coming in the second half, while the South was gaining close to six yards per play on each of its 58 rushing attempts.

"We couldn't stop them on offense, either, but when you've got a set defense to work with, it's hard to make changes. I just wish it could have been a closer game," Wiggins said.

The game was as close as it could be throughout the first quarter and through three minutes of the second before the South unit put its first of four scores on the board. The Rebels added another touchdown in the third period and completed the route with a 14-point fourth quarter, highlighted by a record-shattering 98-yard pass interception TD run by Stanley Davis of Fayetteville's E.E. Smith.

"We stayed aggressive. We had to," Campagna said of his winners. "We knew we couldn't let up and allow them to dance their way through us. This is a great ending to a great week."

After the scoreless first period, MVP Cook got the South on the scoreboard with an 11-yard touchdown run with 8:50 left in the half, culminating a six-play drive that began at the South's 45 yard line.

Cook picked up 28 yards on the second play of the drive, moving the ball to the enemy's 30, before zipping through the middle for the final 11 yards four plays later. South View High School's Ray Witiak added the extra point, giving his squad the 7-0 lead.

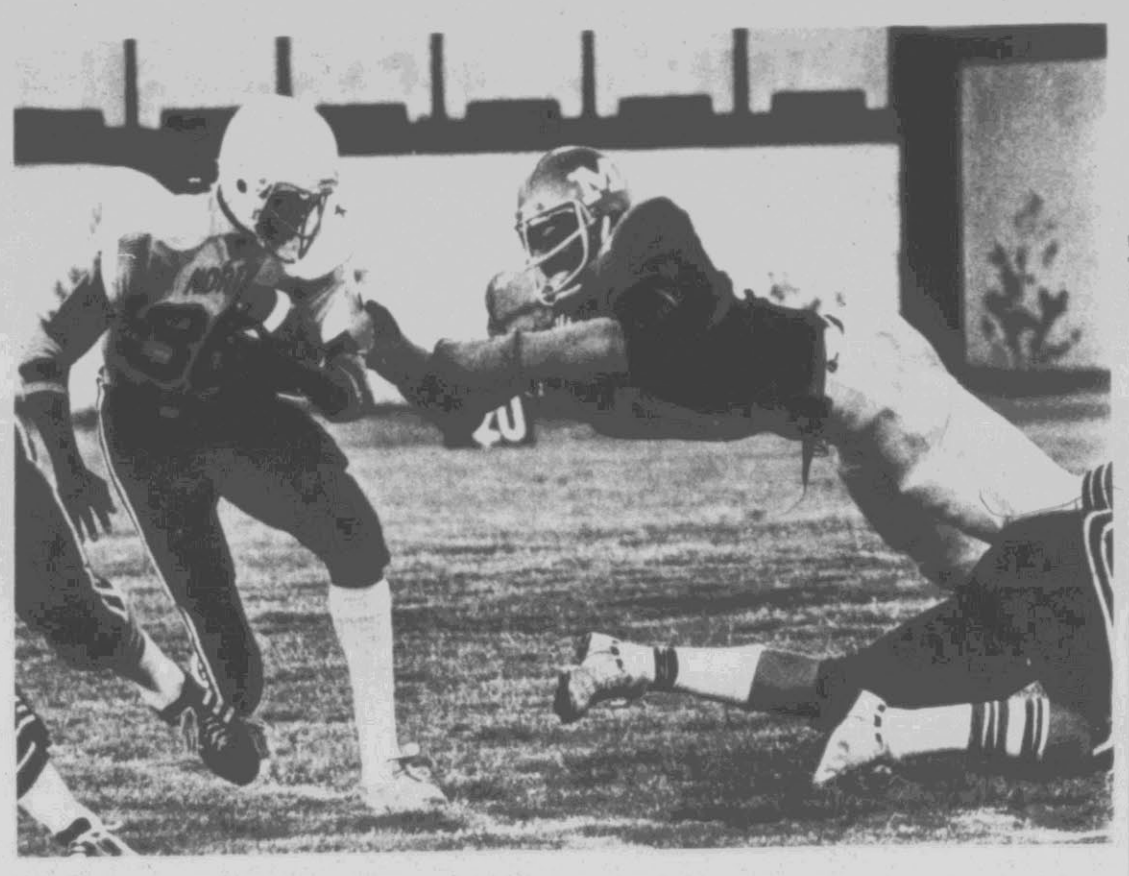

On their first possession of the third period, the Southerners responded with a 72-yard, 11-play scoring drive, aided by a 15-yard personal foul against the Yankees. Mangum began and ended the drive, opening with a four-yard spurt and the ending with a two-yard burst into the end zone. The Chowan-bound fullback carried the ball five times in the drive, picking up 42 of the 72 yards. Mangum scored the second South tally with 6:59 remaining in the third period. Witiak's PAT attempt was blocked, leaving the score at 13-0.

Controlling the ball for all but nine plays in the fourth quarter, Campagna's crew tallied their third score on the game with 2:12 remaining in the game. Beginning the drive on their own 22 with 2:07 left in the third period, quarterback Sam Patilla of Bryson City engineered a 17-play, 7:15 minute drive that ended with Kannapolis' Derrick Brown scampering around right end on a 10-yard run.

The threesome of Cook, Mangum and Cunningham manhandled the North's defense, averaging over four yards a carry in the scoring drive. Cunningham ignited the crowd of 3,250 in the fourth period by gaining all 55 of his yards in the final 12 minutes. He scored the winner's third touchdown with 7:12 left in the fourth when he spurted around the right end after being shut off in a play designed to go up

Watson Rallies, Leads British Open By Four

MUIRFIELD, Scotland (AP) — Tom Watson came from 3 strokes off the pace with a spectacular, 7-under-par 64 and moved into a commanding 4-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the 109th British Open Golf Championship.

Watson, 2 shots behind Lee Trevino when they made the turn on the rain-softened links of Muirfield, played the back nine in 5-under-par 30 and put together a 54-hole total of 202, 11 shots under par.

Trevino, who won this title in 1972 the last time it was played here, simply couldn't keep pace.

Trevino bogeyed the last three holes for a 71 that left him in a tie for second with skinny Ken Brown, a 23-year-old British Ryder Cup player who has won only one tournament in his life. Brown shot a 68.

It was another 2 strokes back to Ben Crenshaw, a runner-up in each of the last two British Opens. Crenshaw had a 68, including a bogey on the final hole, for a 208.

No one else was within 8 shots of Watson, a five-time winner in the United States this season and gunning for a third British Open crown.

Hubert Green, one of the earliest starters, came from well back with a 64 and was tied at 210 with Andy Bean, who shot 70.

Jack Nicklaus, who won the U.S. Open a month ago and had such high hopes of adding this title to his record collection, all but took himself out of it with the shoddy putting that marked his play most of the year.

He three-putted for bogeys on the third and fourth holes, missed two other short ones and had a 71 that left him at 211, 9 strokes back of the hottest hand in golf.

Also at 211 was Isao Aoki of Japan, who chased Nicklaus to the American national championship. Aoki one-putted 12 times on the way to a no-bogey 63 that tied the British Open scoring record.

Also at that figure, but almost certainly out of title contention, were Sandy Lyle of Scotland, Carl Mason of England and Americans Dr. Gil Morgan and Craig Stadler. Lyle shot a 70. Stadler had a 69. Mason took a 70.

Morgan, once among the leaders, took 3 shots to get out of one of the deep fairway bunkers on the back side, took a triple-bogey 7 and fell back to par 71.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, the defending champion and Masters titleholder, had a 72 as Nicklaus' partner and fell to 212.

Trevino, with a 3-shot lead in hand when play started in cool weather and occasional light rain, played steadily over the front side, birdied the ninth and made the turn in 35, 1 under par. Watson had been able to trim only 1 stroke off the lead.

But coming home, Watson turned it on.

Olympics Open- 36 Missing

Related stories B-4, B-5)

MOSCOW (AP) — The summer Olympics opened Saturday with all the color and pageantry the 100,000 spectators in Lenin Stadium could want, but 36 nations were missing because of the U.S.-led boycott and 10 others kept their athletes out of the opening ceremony in front of Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev.

It was the first time since the modern Olympics were organized in 1896 that American athletes did not march in the opening parade, did not set up camp in the Olympic Village, did not lend to the Games that special Yank flavor.

Signboards with the names of 81 nations were carried in the opening parade, but in addition to the 10 whose athletes did not march, six more sent their athletes in behind Olympic flags rather than national banners.

That symbolic protest against Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan seemed to be hardly noticed by the crowd, which applauded about equally for the foreign delegations as they were announced.

A young man, apparently a tourist, unfurled an American flag in the stands as the ceremony began and displayed it again as the teams marched out of the stadium. Spectators in the area applauded as the man and two elderly women held it up the first time.

About 3,000 American tourists are in the Soviet Union for the Games, down from an estimated 18,500 who planned to come before President Carter announced the boycott drive in January.

Marching seventh and getting the second-loudest round of applause was the 17-member delegation from Afghanistan. The 350-member Soviet team, following its hammer and sickle flag, brought a standing ovation from the huge crowd.

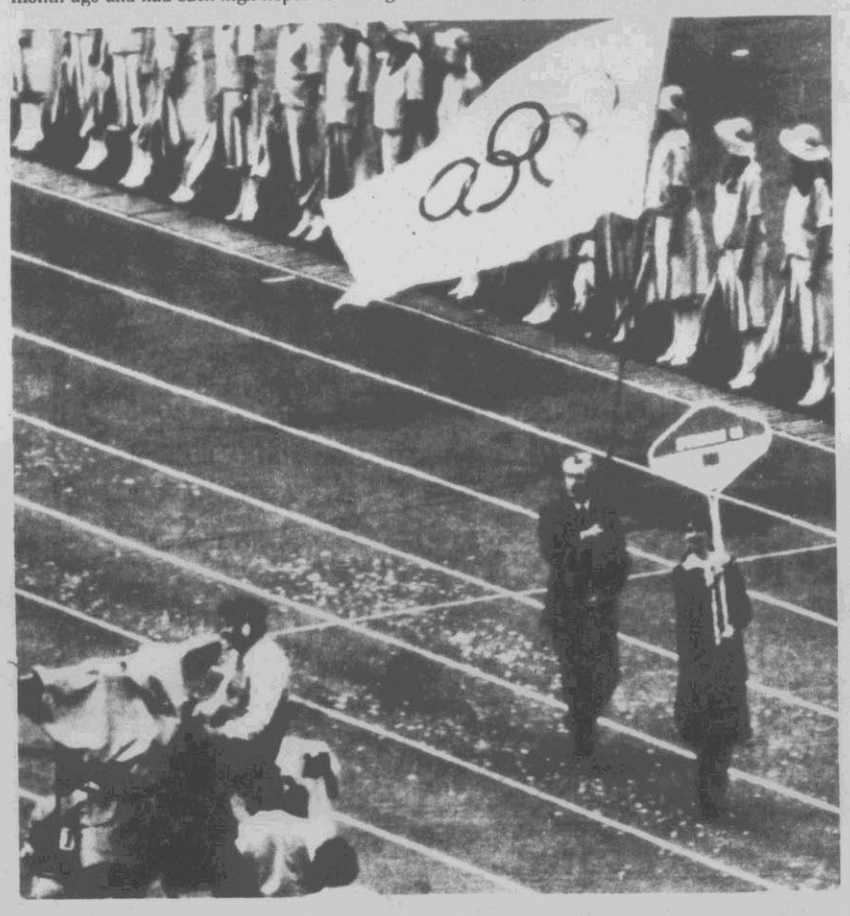

The Soviets declared the boycott a flop. A Russian television commentator referred to it during the ceremony as "an unwise plan by Washington that had failed in all respects."

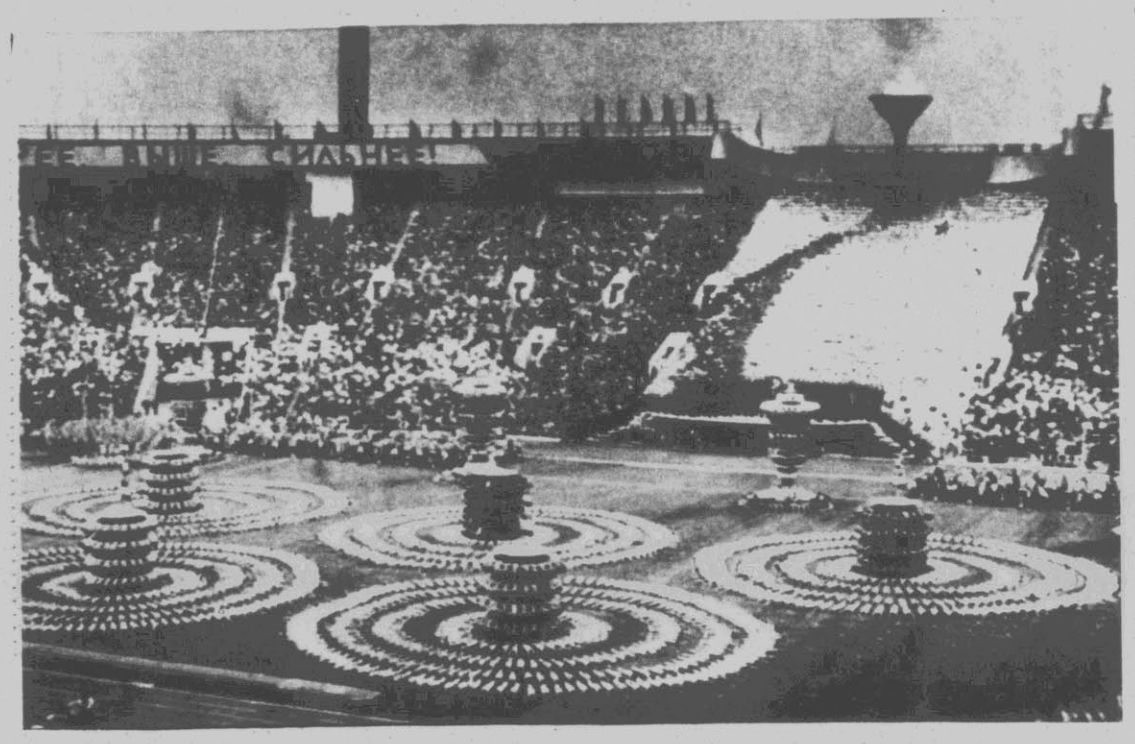

But the protest was expected to be reflected sharply in the competition which begins Sunday. In swimming, nine of the 11 men's world record holders are not here and seven of the 11 women's standard bearers are absent.

Among the missing in track and field, besides the Americans, are such stars as Henry and Kip Rono of Kenya, John Walker of New Zealand, Annegret Richter of West Germany and Grete Waitz of Norway.

There will be some sensational matchups, however. Runners Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett of Great Britain will duel in the 800 and 1,500-meters. In gymnastics, Nadia Comaneci of Romania and Nelli Kim of the Soviet Union, stars of the 1976 Montreal Olympics, are expected to struggle for the all-around women's title.

Pirates Win Without Stargell

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates remain without Willie Stargell, but lately his understudies have been playing Stargell's customary hero role.

"With Willie out, we've just been trying to hold down the fort," said left fielder Mike Easler after he and John Milner each drove in two runs to key Pittsburgh's seventh straight triumph — a 7-3 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers Saturday.

"As much as he means to this ball club, when he comes back, we'll be unstoppable," Easler said.

Those feelings were shared by Milner, who is filling in for Stargell at first base.

"We're playing good baseball, but we're not at our peak," Milner said. "We have a couple of guys who are still not quite over injuries, and Willie is coming back Tuesday."

Stargell has been on the disabled list with a severe hamstring pull. In Saturday's game, an injury paved the way for Eddie Solomon to turn in six innings of emergency relief.

"He did an outstanding job," Dodgers first baseman Steve Garvey said. "He pitched well, and that has to be a very difficult thing for a pitcher to come in like that."

"I don't have any doubts about my ablity," Solomon said. "It's just a matter of getting the opportunity, and today was one of those."

In the first inning, Omar Moreno and Dave Parker walked and both scored on Easler's double to left center.

Parker doubled in the third and scored on Milner's fifth home run of the year and second in as many games over the right-field wall.

Solomon, 5-3, entered the game in the second when starter Don Robinson was forced out with a recurrence of a groin pull suffered July 13.

All seven Pittsburgh runs were charged to Los Angeles starter Rick Sutcliffe, 3-7, who was lifted in the fourth.

San Diego 7

CHICAGO (AP) — Cliff Johnson's two-run double off Eric Rasmussen in the bottom of the ninth inning Saturday boosted the Chicago Cubs to only their third victory in 12 games — an 8-7 triumph over the San Diego Padres.

Gene Tenace's ninth-inning single had given the Padres a 7-6 lead. Jerry Mumphrey walked and stole second, then took third on Dave Winfield's fly ball to right before Willie Montanez was walked intentionally and Tenace rifled his single to left.

But the Cubs came back on a single by pinch-hitter Jerry Martin, a two-out walk to pinch-hitter Ken Henderson and Johnson's double to left-center.

HOUSTON (AP) — A two-run single by Denny Walling and a solo home run by Craig Reynolds keyed a four-run Houston seventh inning Saturday and lifted the Astros to a 4-2 victory over Montreal in the first game of a doubleheader.

Montreal starter Charlie Lea, 2-4, had blanked the Astros on two hits through the first six innings. But then he yielded the game-tying solo homer to Reynolds, a single to Rafael Landestoy and a walk to Terry Puhl.

Lea then was relieved by Fred Norman. Norman walked Joe Morgan to load the bases prior to the Walling single that scored Puhl and Landestoy and gave the Astros a 3-1 lead. Rookie first baseman Danny Heep's third hit of the game brought home Morgan with the fourth run.

Houston starter Joaquin Andujar is 1-4.

CINCINNATI (AP) — The New York Mets set a season-high for runs and amassed 20 hits while Roy Lee Jackson hurled a three-hitter to pace a 13-3 rout of the Cincinnati Reds Saturday night.

John Stearns drove in three runs with a double and a single, Lee Mazzilli clouted his 12th home run, and Bill Almon collected four hits to back Jackson, who was called up from Tidewater of the International League just two weeks ago. Jackson struck out 12.

Jackson came within one strikeout of the major league season high for strikeouts and retired the last 19 Cincinnati batters in winning his first decision of the campaign.

Stearns and Joel Youngblood added three hits apiece in the searing heat at Riverfront Stadium.

Mazzilli's solo homer, his 10th in 18 games, ignited a four-run Mets fifth inning. Stearns, who had a two-run double in the first, later chased starter Charlie Leibrandt, 8-6, with a an RBI single for a 5-3 New York lead.

Jerry Morales and Elliott Maddox capped the rally with consecutive RBI singles off reliever Joe Price.

The Mets, who pounded four Cincinnati pitchers, added two runs in the seventh when Morales singled and Doug Flynn tripled and scored on Ron Oester's throwing error. They got more in the eighth on Youngblood's two-run double, and two more in the ninth on RBI by Mike Jorgensen and Youngblood.

The Reds stole four bases to set up their three runs. Dave Collins drew a walk from Jackson in the first, stole second and third and scored on George Foster's single.

Collins again walked in the third, stole second and scored on Ken Griffey's 1,000th career hit, a single to center.

ATLANTA (AP) — Gary Matthews and Bob Horner hit consecutive home runs in a four-run sixth inning that carried the Atlanta Braves to a 5-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies in the opener of a twi-night doubleheader Saturday.

Matthews' 12th homer was the first off Philadelphia pitcher Dick Ruthven, 8-7, in 851-3 innings. It came after Chris Chambliss had tied the game 2-2 with an RBI single that scored Brian Asselstine.

Doyle Alexander, 8-5, yielded five hits.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Alan Hargesheimer, making his second major league appearance, teamed with Gary Lavelle for a nine-hitter and had a hand in every scoring rally to help the San Francisco Giants beat the St. Louis Cardinals 7-4 Saturday night.

Hargesheimer, a 23-year-old right-hander, picked up his second victory since he was called up from the minors earlier this month. Lavelle stopped the Cards over the last 21-3 innings for his fifth save.

St. Louis starter Bob Sykes, 3-8, surrendered the first six San Francisco runs.

A fumble recovery by the North's Gary Walker of North Wilkesboro thwarted the South's next drive, turning the ball over Wiggins' team on its own 17 yardline. From there, the North put together back-to-back passes for 13 and 20 yards, putting the ball at midfield. After an incomplete pass, the South was called for pass interference, placing the ball on the Conferderate 35, giving the Yanks their best field position of the night.

Two plays later, quarterback Randy Joyce lofted a pass towards his receiver at the South two-yard line where Davis picked it off.

Following excellent blocking and displaying talented open-field running, Davis broke the previous Boys Home distance scoring record of 90-yards, set in 1966, by going the 98 yards to score. Witiak's kick made the final score of 27-0 with 16 ticks left on the clock.

Next year, the boys from the South will remember all the comforts of its 1980 Home.

Prep Stars Win

NEW BERN — Greenville's Prep League All-Stars moved became one of only two teams left in the winners bracket of the State Tournament with a 16-0 win over Albemarle Saturday night.

Greenville defeated Wilmington 10-9 Friday before winning its second game in two nights Saturday.

Greenville plays tonight at 7 p.m. against the winner of Lee County-South Granville. The finals are Tuesday night.

Most of the players in the field did not wear gloves in the first official baseball game in the National League in 1876: a 6-5 victory for Philadelphia over Boston.

Freedom Wins Cup Race

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Dennis Conner steered Freedom to a three-race sweep over young Russell Long's Clipper as the second round of trials for an America's Cup defense candidate got underway Saturday off Newport.

The victories in the observation trial races left Conner and Freedom unbeaten since their initial setback in the opening match of preliminary trials last month.

Clipper trailed at the start and at every mark in the day's races, which were run on shortened courses in Rhode Island Sound. Freedom's largest lead of the day came in the first race when Conner sailed the 12-meter yacht across the starting line with a 35-second margin over Clipper. The early advantage became a whopping 2:30 gap by the first weather mark, and Conner maintained that advantage to the finish of the six-mile course.

Arroyo Hurls Shutout As Twins Whip Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) — After 10 years in the Detroit Tigers' organization, veteran right-hander Fernando Arroyo is determined to prove he belongs in the major leagues — with the Minnesota Twins.

Helped by double plays in four consecutive innings, the 28-year-old Arroyo fired a five-hitter Saturday in hurling the Twins to a 4-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

In his third consecutive starting chance since being called up from Toledo of the American Association last month, Arroyo posted his first major league shutout since June 15, 1977.

"That year I pitched 209 innings in 38 games for the Tigers, but I had knee surgery after the season and I guess they kind of gave up on me," Arroyo said. "After splitting the last two years between Detroit and Evansville, I wanted to get out of the organization.

"I just wanted to go somewhere else and show people I can pitch in the major leagues. Now I'm happy to be here with the Twins."

Acquired by Minnesota in a minor league trade for Jeff Holly last winter, Arroyo started the season in Toldeo although the Twins felt he was a "sleeper."

"I got off to a very good start (6-1, 1.63 ERA) as a starter and the Twins called me up," he said. "I got rained out of a couple of starts and pitched in relief. Now the manager (Gene Mauch) has me in the starting rotation."

In blanking the Red Sox, Arroyo threw only 94 pitches. He faced just 29 batters, two over the minimum, and after getting Rick Burleson to ground into a double play in the sixth, he retired the next 10 batters in order.

Arroyo hooked up with Bob Ojeda in a scoreless duel for five innings before the Twins shelled the Boston rookie with three runs after two were out.

Ojeda, shelled by Detroit after two were out in the sixth in his major league debut last Sunday, took his first loss with the Red Sox.

NEW YORK (AP) — Reggie Jackson slammed his 25th home run, knocked in five runs and took over the American League lead with 71 RBI as the New York Yankees defeated the Kansas City Royals 13-7 Saturday night.

Jackson has hit 25 or more homers in 10 consecutive seasons. He had four hits, the same as Bob Watson, as the Yankees pounded out 19 hits off four Kansas City pitchers.

Paul Splittorff, 7-7, lasted two innings-plus and gave up five runs before he was removed during New York's six-run third.

Doug Bird, 1-0, made his second appearance and first start since the Yankees called him up from the minors and went six innings, giving up eight hits and four runs.

Texas 11
Baltimore 8

BALTIMORE (AP) — Mickey Rivers drew a bases-loaded walk to snap a 10th-inning tie, and Bump Wills followed with a grand slam homer, giving the Texas Rangers an 11-8 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Saturday night.

The grand slam by Wills, the first of his career, was the only hit allowed in the inning by loser Sammy Stewart, 3-7, the fifth Baltimore pitcher. The Rangers loaded the bases on two walks and a hit batsman and, after Dave Roberts hit into a force play at the plate for the second out, Rivers walked on a 3-1 pitch to drive in his third run of the game.

Danny Darwin, 8-1, the fourth Texas pitcher, pitched the last 12-3 innings for the victory although he yielded two runs in the bottom of the 10th on a bases-loaded grounder by Rick Dempsey and Lee May's infield hit.

White Sox 10
Milwaukee 7

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Bob Molinaro's two-run double highlighted a six-run Chicago eighth inning, rallying the White Sox to a 10-7 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday night.

Lamarr Hoyt, 2-0, pitched 2 2-3 innings in relief of starter Richard Wortham to gain the triumph.

The White Sox trailed 7-4 going into the eighth but Chet Lemon, Harold Baines and Kevin Bell led off the inning with singles to load the bases and pinch hitter Ron Pruitt walked off reliever Bob McClure, 1-4, to force in the first run.

Bill Castro replaced McClure, gave up a run-scoring pinch single to Thad Bosley and then surrendered Molinaro's two-run double down the right field line to give the White Sox an 8-7 lead.

Sunday's competition features finals in the men's 200-meter butterfly and women's 400 medley swimming events, in the 114-pound weightlifting class, pistol shooting and cycling. Preliminary action is scheduled in 12 other sports.

Lord Killanin of Ireland, president of the International Olympic Committee, made the only politically tinged comment of the opening ceremony when he said he wanted to "welcome all athletes and officials here today, especially those who have shown their complete independence to travel to compete, despite many pressures placed upon them."

Brezhnev's remarks were limited to the traditional: "I declare open the Games of 1980, called the Games of the XXII Olympiad of the modern era.'

In Wales, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher attacked the Soviet Union in a speech, saying "The Olympic Games are beginning not only to the sound of national anthems and Olympic hymns, but to the background of gunfire in the Hindu kush and in the villages and plains of Afghanistan."

Her attempt at stopping British athletes from competing had failed and she said the city of the Games "has become a forbidden city to its own citizens and its own children lest they be tainted by the attractions of freedom."

Authorities had asked parents to send children to out-of-town Young Pioneer camps during the Olympics. Strict traffic controls have been put into effect and tight security measures were in evidence at hotels and other public buildings.

Western correspondents who work regularly in Moscow noted that the average Muscovite has not been touched by the Games. In a small apartment in central Moscow, one Russian said, "All this is not for us, it's a 'Please stay at home, or better, leave the city altogether.'" The expected profusion of food on the shelves of Moscow stores did not materialize, though hotels served tourists in a surprisingly good style.

The Carter administration, in calling for the boycott, contended that the Soviet Union intended to use the Olympics as a massive propaganda effort for the Soviet system. A Soviet military magazine said this week the holding of the Games here partly reflects world recognition of the USSR's "merits in the struggle for peace."

The competing countries whose athletes did not march in the opening ceremony were Belgium, Great Britain, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, San Marino, France and Switzerland. Six others — Australia, Andorra, Denmark, Spain, New Zealand and Puerto Rico — marched their athletes but carried Olympic flags instead of their national banners.

The refusal to march and-or carry national flags was a compromise position for Olympic committees whose governments wanted them to join the boycott. Officials said in this way they registered their sentiments on the Afghanistan situation, but still allowed their athletes to compete. The subtlety appeared to be lost on the crowd.

Among the 36 boycotting nations, besides the United States, are West Germany, Japan, Norway and Canada. The nations which did not send teams won about 40 percent of the medals in the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

Puerto Rico, a U.S. commonwealth, is represented by three boxers who marched in the parade and carried an Olympic flag. One of them, Alberto Mercado, is considered to have a good chance for a medal in the 110-pound division.

A number of Americans are involved in the Olympics in various ways other than representing their country. Mike Perry of Alabama is the Swedish basketball coach. A number of Jamaican track and field competitors live in the United States. At least five Australian and British swimmers attend or have attended college in tgh and holds dual citizenship.

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Al Cantello, the cross-country coach at the Naval Academy, thinks the running boom in the United States may have lowered the caliber of our runners.

Cantello insists road races blunt a runner's competitive edge. "During the past several years," he said, "I have attended over 40 major road races. I have yet to see more than 10 or 15 runners trying to win in fields of 4,000 to 6,000."

Oakland 3
Cleveland 0

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Rickey Henderson stole home for the second time this season, highlighting the three-run eighth inning that backed Steve McCatty's four-hitter and boosted the Oakland A's to a 3-0 triumph over the Cleveland Indians.

A sacrifice fly by Jim Essian and an RBI single by Tony Armas produced the other runs off Rick Waits and supported McCatty in his first major league shutout.

Waits, 7-9, began his own downfall by walking Jeff Cox with one out. Henderson followed with a double to left and Dwayne Murphy walked to load the bases.

Essian, followed with a sacrifice to center that scored Cox and moved Henderson to third. With Armas at bat, Waits threw to first baseman Mike Hargrove and appeared to have Murphy picked off at first. As soon as Waits threw, Henderson broke for home and beat Hargrove's throw to catcher Ron Hassey.

Armas then singled to center, scoring Murphy.

Martin Says Owner Monitored Calls

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Martin, in his forthcoming book, "Number 1," accuses New York Yankees boss George Steinbrenner of monitoring his private phone calls and threatening to destroy him by revealing a file on his private life.

The copyrighted story in Sunday's edition of the New York Daily News also says that, in the book written by Martin and Peter Golenbock, the former manager of thhe Yanks and now manager of the Oakland A's claims Steinbrenner meddled in team affairs, broke promises to Martin and planted stories in the press.

Martin, the once fiery second baseman of the Yankees, was fired from managerial jobs with Detroit, Minnesota and Texas. He was first hired to manage New York late in the 1975 season and guided them to the pennant in 1976 and a world championship in 1977.

He resigned under pressure midway in 1978 after verbally attacking Jackson and Steinbrenner ("One's a born liar; the other's convicted," he said). He was rehired a few days later, supposedly for the 1980-81 seasons, but he returned before the '79 season ended. Finally he was fired by Steinbrenner, the Yanks' principal owner, last October following Martin's fight with a marshmallow salesman in a Bloomington, Minn., hotel bar.

In the book, Martin says he was told Steinbrenner set up the Yankee Stadium telephone system in such a way that he could listen in on anyone's calls and that a secretary told him Steinbrenner was keeping a file on his activities.

"The first time my agent, Doug Newton, met with him," Martin says in the book, "George pointed to his file cabinets and said, 'I have a file on Billy Martin. I have dates, I have names. I know everything about the man's private life and let me assure you I won't hesitate to use it and make it public, and I'll destroy this man if he pushes me too far.'"

Martin also says in the book that Steinbrenner:

—Tried to convince Martin that Jackson hated him but that he and the Yankees star outfielder remained friends,

—Promised to buy Martin a $300,000 tugboat if the Yankees won the '76 pennant, then reneged and said he had promised it only if the Yanks won the World Series (they lost it to Cincinnati in four games).

—Made up the story about Martin's allegedly failing health and offered him a chance to resign if he would use his health as the reason.

Martin is quoted as saying Steinbrenner's biggest problem is that he "looks at baseball like a football coach. He goes around telling everybody he was once assistant football coach at Purdue, that he was the big man in college football."

Martin says in the book: "You know what his job really was? I heard he was in charge of getting tickets for the football players! But he wants me to run the team like a football team."

HURLEY ON WINNING

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Bill Hurley, the star quarterback for Syracuse who was selected on the fourth round of the NFL draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers, was discussing the subject of winning.

"Winning is very important at all levels," Hurley said. "But I do think there's too much emphasis on winning in Little League competition. As you come up through higher levels, high school, college and ultimately, the pro game, winning becomes more important."

The Olympics

Still At It

As Summer Games Open

U.S. Absent In Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — The XXII Summer Olympics, games the Soviet government wanted so badly and the American government wanted to destroy, began today without a United States team for the first time in modern history.

When the Olympic torch was carried into Lenin Stadium to light the flame that will burn until the Games end Aug. 3, it ended a journey that began July 19 in Greece, a journey that was jeopardized by an American-led boycott.

When President Carter called for the boycott last January, as a response to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, these Games, the first-ever in a socialist nation, were threatened with the pullout of the Western countries.

But the Games are beginning, and more than 6,000 athletes from 81 countries are here to play them. Competition begins Sunday in basketball, boxing, soccer, swimming and gymnastics, among the major sports.

Soviet President Leonid Breshnev, who has said the existence of the Olympics on Soviet territory demonstrates an affirmation of its policies, was to formally declare the Games open with one brief sentence: "I declare open the Games of Moscow celebrating the XXII Olympiad of the modern era."

The opening ceremony, normally a lavish fashion show that reflects the variety of people and customs brought together for sport, was to be loaded with symbolic gestures of political protest.

Thirty-six nations, including Canada, West Germany and Japan, have accepted the U.S. position that the business of sport cannot go on as usual in the Soviet Union while Russian troops are in Afghanistan. They will not be here for the Olympics.

In a milder form of protest, some 10 countries here had planned not to march in today's parade: Belgium, France, Great Britain, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Holland, San Marino and Switzerland.

The Australian contingent, which was caught in the middle between a pro-boycott government and an anti-boycott National Olympic Committee, decided this week to march, but without its own flag. Instead, Australia and some 28 other countries were to parade behind the banner of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), the five interlocking rings.

"There is nothing in the rules that compels any athlete to march in the opening parade," said Lord Killanin, who steps down as IOC president at the conclusion of these Games. "The opening will be a little different from usual, but the opening ceremony is less important than the Games themselves. The important thing is to have good, healthy competition."

Killanin, normally a mild-mannered, even-tempered Irishman, lashed out at President Carter Friday for his administration's boycott campaign.

"If they understand other matters as well as they understand sport, God help us all," Killanin told a news conference. "To my mind, they had no knowledge of sport other than about American football and American baseball. If football and baseball had been in the Olympic Games, perhaps we would not have had a boycott."

And Killanin did not provide much hope that the U.S. government's objection to the IOC raising the American flag at the closing ceremony Aug. 3 would merit much consideration in changing Olympic protocol. The flag and national anthem of the next Olympic host, which will be Los Angeles in 1984, link one Games to the next.

"It is our unanimous view that we should stick to the protocol," he said. "There may be discussions on the U.S. flag in the next few days, and I would not like to commit myself on what will happen.

"My own view is that we should stick to protocol because this has to do with the next Olympic Games, and not the present Games."

One of the traditions of the Games, the Olympic torch, arrived here Friday, sparking the pride of this city as Muscovites in the tens of thousands lined the wide streets to cheer its arrival.

"Maybe this flame will warm a little bit the policy of Jimmy Carter," said Alexander Saveleyev, a 22-year-old student.

Carter's boycott also drew the ire Friday of the president of the Puerto Rican Olympic Committee. German Rieckehoff blasted his government's strong-armed tactics in attempting to get complianece with the boycott.

"Our athletes were told that if they went to Moscow they would return some day with guns in their hands," said Rieckehoff. "They said if our athletes competed they would be party to slaying the Afghans.

"I was completely against a boycott. I'm against all boycotts."

But three Puerto Rican boxers, apparently the only three athletes here holding American passports, resisted the boycott. Alberto Mercado, a favorite for the gold medal in the 112-pound class, will be joined by teammates Luis Pizarro and Jose Molina.

Coe, Ovett May Shine In Games

MOSCOW (AP) — Sebastian Coe and Steve Ovett are miles apart in personality, but only inches separate them on the track.

The two young Britons — the personable Coe is 23, the irascible Ovett is 24 — are expected to overshadow all of the world's big athletes in the 1980 Olympic track and field competition, and perhaps even the entire Games.

Between them, they hold or share four world middle distance records. But because of their bitter dislike for each other, they never have met in a 1,500-meter race or the mile. And they have faced each other only once, in the 800-meter final at the 1978 European Championships, with Ovett finishing second and Coe third behind East Germany's Olaf Beyer.

Now, they are scheduled to meet twice — in the 800 and 1,500-meter Olympic finals ... the piece de resistance of the Games.

The first round of the 800 is set for July 24, the opening day of track and field, with the semifinals on July 25 and the final July 26. The first round of the 1,500 will be run July 30, the semifinals July 31 and the final on Aug. 1, the closing day of track and field.

Coe, coached by his father, Peter, holds the world 800 record of 1 minute, 42.4 seconds and the world 1,000-meter mark of 2:13.4. He also shares with Ovett the 1,500-meter mark of 3:32.1. And Ovett owns the world mile record of 3:48.8, a mark he took from Coe on July 1.

The record in the 1,500 — the metric mile — is most intriguing. Under rules of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the world governing body of the sport, on races over 400 meters, the official time, given in hundredths, is recorded to the next highest 10th of a second.

The rule will be changed on May 1, 1981 — and will be retroactive, meaning that if no one betters the mark by then, Coe would be the world record holder with a time of 3:32.03, and Ovett would be No. 2 at 3:32.09.

Ovett, however, has a burning desire to take away all of Coe's records.

When he broke Coe's mile mark, he said, "It tastes terrific."

However, he has refused to be drawn into a discussion about his races against Coe in the Olympics. "It is difficult to say what is going to happen in a particular race," said the usually uncommunicative Ovett, who is coached by Harry Wilson.

The wispy Coe, who carries only 129 pounds on his 5-foot-9½ frame, doesn't often discuss Ovett. But when asked about the upcoming battles against his countryman, he said, "In terms of athletics, he is a magnificent athlete. But when we get to a racing situation, he is just another competitor."

While neither will talk much about the other or their Olympic races, others have some thoughts.

Dr. Thomas Wessinghage of West Germany, the runner-up to Ovett in his record-equalling 1,500-meter performance at Oslo, Norway, last Tuesday night, compares that race to a meet in London in 1979.

"Last year, when we were in London and we were shoulder-to-shoulder in the last 300, Steve was all out," said Wessinghage. "I realized then that I was getting close ... that he's human and that I could catch him one day and beat him.

"Today (last Tuesday night), when I came close to his shoulder, with 200 meters to go, at that fast a pace, he just took off and left us," continued Wessinghage. "When he did it so easily, then turned around to look at the opposition and waved to the crowd, I realized he's not human."

New Zealand's John Walker, the 1976 Olympic 1,500-meter champion who finished third behind Ovett in the Briton's record-tying race, said, "He looks like a man who could win the gold, but both he and Coe have to get into the final first. He (Ovett) is ready to run the race of his life."

Watching Over Moscow

A giant mural of Lenin graces the side of a building on a street filled with traffic and Soviet policemen Friday in downtown Moscow. Security in Moscow has been strengthened for the duration of the 1980 Summer Olympic Games which begin July 19. (AP Laserphoto)

British shot putter Geoff Capes said, "If I were a betting man, I would think that a 1,500 meters on an against-the-clock basis could be won by Coe, but in the rough-and-tumble of a real championship event, Ovett seems to have that killer instinct."

Many other observers agree that the killer instinct will enable Ovett to beat Coe in the 1,500. At 800 meters, however, Coe is considered the favorite.

This is Ovett's second Olympic appearance, Coe's first. In the 1976 Games at Montreal, Ovett finished fifth in the 800.

Both started running very young. By 13, Ovett was the fastest 400 runner for his age in England, at 17 he became the country's youngest four-minute miler and the European Junior 800 champion, and at 18 he won the silver medal in the European 800 championship.

Games Open — To U.S. Flag's Wave

MOSCOW (AP) — A 22-yearold shipworker from Howard, Ohio waved the American flag at the Olympic opening ceremony at Lenin Stadium Saturday in honor of the American athletes who were boycotting the Games.

Dan Patterson, a member of a tourist group in the Soviet Union for the Games, said: "I don't agree with the boycott. I don't agree with mixing politics with sports. It's unfair to the athletes who spent so much time training, and it's a big letdown for them."

So he brought an Americn flag measuring about three feet by four feet through Soviet customs and unfurled it twice during the ceremony, in which 81 nations marched to open the Games.

"I was trying to show that I am sympathizing, that our athletes aren't here. I was trying to show that we are remembering them. Even though we're here as spectators, we're remebering them," Patterson said.

He said when he unfurled the flag just before the beginning of the opening parade, two elderly American women who were part of the tour group, helped him hold it up. There was considerable applause in his part of the stadium, and Patterson said it came from Americans, Australians and Polish spectators.

Then he unfurled it again at the end of the ceremonies. Asked if there was any difficulty with security, Patterson said, "There was no problem. Nobody said anything."

Asked what he would do with the flag, now that the ceremony is over, Patterson said, "I think I'll give it away as a gift. If I find somebody here in Russia that I like, I'll give it away as a gift from the United States."

Patterson said he booked his trip to the Soviet Union with a roommate in April, 1979.

"We've been planning for almost a year and didn't hear of any cancellation or any problem until the boycott. We wanted to come to the Olympics."

Howard said he works on an ore-carrying ship that traverses the Great Lakes. He is in Moscow on vacation.

He said he had wondered what the reaction would be at customs when he landed at Moscow. "Customs saw the flag, and let me go right on through. One guy did ask another about it, but he said it was OK, and I didn't have any trouble at all."

Showdown

As the Soviet flag is carried out of Moscow's Lenin Stadium after the parade of teams in opening ceremonies Saturday for the 1980 Moscow Summer Olympics, an unidentified man holds up the American flag in the stands above. Olympic Ceremonies Awesome

MOSCOW (AP) — Take the Super Bowl, the Radio City Rockettes, Ringling Brothers Circus and the Bolshoi Ballet, multiply them by 1,000 and you have a rough idea of the dazzling opening ceremony of the Games of the XXII Olympiad.

In a phrase, it was awe-inspiring.

Yet despite its vast scope and artistry, involving some 8,000 of the Soviet Union's most talented youths honed by months of rehearsals, there was a rancorous note to these festivities, hailing the start of sport's greatest event.

Absent was the normally powerful team of the United States, which has dominated the Olympic medal pursuit for most of the century, boycotting the event along with West Germany, Canada and 33 other delegations. Ten other nations failed to march their athletes while six expressed protest by parading behind the Olympic banner instead of their own colors.

Thus there was a poignancy to the parade itself, normally one of the most rousing features of the quadrennial extravaganza, and two incidents which sent a slight quiver through the crowd of 100,000 in the Lenin Stadium.

Shortly before the show began, an intrepid Yank unfurled an American flag and let it dangle over a side of one of the portals from which the entertainers emerged.

Then in the march, New Zealand, emerged marching behind an Olympic flag with a black instead of a white background for the traditional five circles.

This brought a gasp from the crowd. Later, it was disclosed that no protest was intended. New Zealand's rugby team call themselves the All-Blacks and they honor a black Olympic flag.

The day's 3 hour, 19-minute program opened with the band playing a Tchaikovsky concerto and the ringing chimes of the Kremlin, and closed with the huge crowd on its feet applauding a performance that kept them almost breathless.

The ceremony came off as if the USSR had gathered the cream of performing talent and subjected them to endless months of discipline under the kind of teachers who produce the Rudolph Nureyevs and Olga Korbuts.

The windup scene on the green carpeted infield of the stadium involved thousands of gymnasts, dancers and acrobats forming human 30-foot flowers inside five circles, opening and closing the buds with body movement and changing colors like a chameleon.

They presented Mishka, the cuddly bear which is the Olympic symbol, in living color. When the gymnasts performed on the field, Mishka copied them on the screen, doing the parallel bars like a Nadia Comaneci.

From the wings emerged 272 of the country's fairest, dressed in gold pleated dresses with green hats and long scarves of various colors. They ringed the field and waved the scarves continuously as the athletes passed in parade.

The communist bloc was represented by imposing squads of men and women — the largest from the Soviet Union.

Moscow's Airport Closed Suddenly

MOSCOW (AP) — Moscow's international airport shut down suddenly for three hours Saturday evening, forcing the rerouting of an undetermined number of flights, Western airlines officials said. The shutdown times they reported coincided with the opening ceremonies for the Moscow Olympics.

Airport officials contacted by The Associated Press denied the facility had closed.

"Nothing of that sort has happened," a control tower employee said.

An official for the West German carrier, Lufthansa, said "we had a plane that was two hours out of Frankfurt and over Soviet territory when it was told to turn back for technical reasons."

But he said Soviet authorities told his employees at Sheremetyevo International Airport the closing from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. was for "security reasons."

Another airline official, who has been in Moscow for 2½ years, said he could not recall the airport being closed for such a reason for such an long time.

Japan Airlines said its flight from Frankfurt that was to have arrived at 6:40 p.m. had to turn back and be rescheduled.

During the times of the reported shutdown, eight non-Soviet flights were scheduled to have arrived in Moscow.

Despite 3 Bogeys, Hoch Leads Quad Cities By 3

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — Rookie Scott Hoch shook off the effect of three bogeys on the front nine and shot a 68 Saturday for a 13-under-par 197 to hold a two-stroke edge after three rounds in the $200,000 Quad Cities Open.

In a fine head-to-head battle with Howard Twitty, Hoch scored three birdies on the back side to turn back any challenge.

Hoch, 24, who has led from the start, set a 54-hole record for the Quad Cities tournament that had stood since 1978 when Victor Regalado shot 199.

Hoch, whose best finish this year was a tie for 19th in the Western Open, entered the third round with a four-stroke lead. After shooting a 36 on the first nine, his lead melted to one stroke as Twitty birdied the first and third holes for a 33.

Twitty caught Hoch by shooting a birdie on No. 10 but never could get ahead of him. Typifying their shot-making was the 11th hole when Hoch's approach was five feet from the pin and Twitty planted his one foot from the cup. They both had birdie-3s.

Hoch took a one-stroke lead with a birdie on 14 and Twitty caught him for the second time with a birdie on the next hole. Hoch birdied the 16th to go ahead and took his two-stroke edge when Twitty bogeyed the 17th.

Tommy Valentine was third with a 67 for 201. Gary Hallberg, who turned pro on July 2, fired the best round of the day, a 64, to stay in the running for the $36,000 first prize with 202. Tom Jones had a 69 to join 22-year-old Hallberg at eight under.

Grouped at 203 were Don Pooley, who had a 65; Curtis Strange, 66, and Brad Bryant, 69.

Record Round Gives Melton Tourney Lead

LUTHERVILLE, Md. (AP) — Nancy Lopez-Melton shot a tournament record 7-under-par 66 and took the lead after two rounds in the LPGA $100,000 Greater Baltimore Golf Classic at the Pine Ridge Golf Club Saturday.

Added to her opening-round score of 69, she headed into the final day's play with an 11-under-par total of 135. She also held a three-stroke lead over Sally Little who stood at eight under after firing a 68 to go with her first round of 70.

Four strokes back were Pat Bradley and first round co-leader Julie Stanger. Bradley added a 3-under-par 70 to her opening 69, while Stanger had a 2-under 71 to go with her first round 68.

Par took a definite beating at the 6,304-yard, par-73 Pine Ridge layout as many of the ladies found the five par-5 holes reachable in two shots.

Heading into the final round, 39 of the lady pros stood at even par or better. The two-round cut was only 4-over-par 150 and 70 of the women qualified out of the original field of 97.

Lopez-Melton said her strategy was to birdie the par-5s, and that was exactly how she played the course. On the front nine, she birdied the three par-5s plus the par-4 second and par-3 eighth to tie the nine-hole course record of 5-under-par 32. On the back nine, she birdied both par-5s for a 2-under 34.

The 66 also was her personal low round of the year. A winner of this event in 1978, Lopez-Melton already has won two Ladies Professional Golf Association titles this season.

Seahawks Defeat East Carolina, 8-5

WILMINGTON — UNC-Wilmington rode a four-run fourth to an 8-5 win over East Carolina Friday night which dropped the Pirates into second place in the North Carolina Summer Collegiate League standings.

ECU is 17-9 and trail Louisburg by one-half gamegoing into Sunday's doubleheader in Chapel Hill with UNC. UNC-W is 16-11. The Pirates return home Monday night to face UNC-W and then, if necessary, will have play Louisburg in a makeup doubleheader Tuesday.

Friday night, ECU took a 1-0 lead in the second only to see the Seahawks rally to grab the lead with two runs in the bottom of the inning before the Pirates tied the game with a run in the third.

In the second, John Hallow walked to lead off the inning and moved to second on Charlie Smith's single. Hallow scored on on Jay Carraway's single.

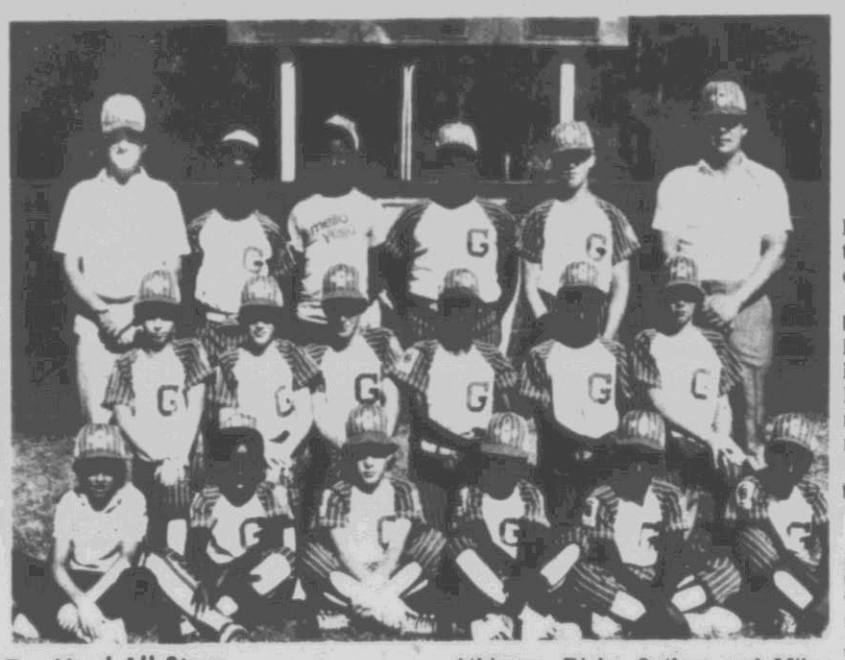

With UNC-W up, 2-1, the Pirates tied the game in the third. Mike Sorrell singled, moved to second on Kelly Robinette's sacrifice bunt and went to third on Todd Hendley's single. Sorrell subsequently scored on Hallow's single.

The Seahawks took the lead for good in the fourth with four runs, helped by two ECU errors and three straight singles. ECU closed within one with three runs in the top of the sixth but UNC-W tallied solo runs in the seventh and eighth to win.

In the sixth, Mark Wakai singled to lead off and moved to third after Kirk Parsons and Robert Wells walked. Sorrell and Robinette then hit back-to-back singles to score all three runners and bring ECU within one, 6-5. It was as close as the Pirates got, however.

"We're hurting now," ECU coach Gary Overton said. "Sorrell and (Pete) Persico are injuried and probably out for the season. That's going to hurt us, especially now with it near the end of the season."

Unser Wheels Way To Michigan Twin 200 Pole

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Bobby Unser won a pole position Saturday, but it didn't come easy.

The older of the two racing brothers from Albuquerque, N.M., wheeled his metallic blue Penske PC-9 around Michigan International Speedway's two-mile banked oval at 192.488 mph.

That performance put him on the inside of the front row for Sunday's championship car half of the Michigan Twin 200 program.

Next to him on the front row will be Johnny Rutherford, who drove his bright yellow Chaparral to a 190.814 lap.

Rick Mears, Unser's teammate, and Pancho Carter grabbed the second row spots with speeds of 189.409 and 188.438, respectively. Bill Alsup, at 187.799, and Al Unser, with a 187.730, were in the third row of the 26-car field.

Unser and Rutherford have been the top guns in Indianapolis-style racing all year, with Rutherford winning three races — including the Indy 500 — and Unser the other two.

And the two teams, although on friendly terms, are fiercely competitive.

The owner-designer of Rutherford's sleek car, Jim Hall, and his crew chief, Steve Roby, were seen eyeing Unser's car closely both before and after the latter's qualifying run.

Unser, noticing Roby standing nearby as he climbed out of the cockpit, laughed and said, "See anything you like?"

Roby nodded and walked quickly away.

"We've got the shoe on the other foot for a while," Unser said, referring to the early-season dominance of Rutherford.

"But, believe me, they're still competitive and we've got to keep watching them."

"The engine we broke was quicker," Unser explained. "I think we could have done a 194 or 195 with it."

The pole-winner also was under something of a handicap because a new set of articulated skirts, which aid the aerodynamics of the new ground effects cars, were lost en route from England.

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — The lineup for Sunday's championship car feature in the Michigan Twin 200, with type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

1. Bobby Unser, Penske-Cosworth, 192.488.

Greenville Falls, 4-2, In Playoffs

When it rains, it pours. And it did so for Greenville-Pitt County in its first game of the Senior Babe Ruth State Championships at Guy Smith Stadium Friday night.

Leading by a run going into the seventh inning, the bottom fell out of the home team's cloud as Albemarle used two errors, two passed balls and a balk to rally for two runs and take the lead.

After knotting the score in the bottom of the seventh, Greenville-Pitt lost the game in the ninth, 4-2, as Albemarle parlayed a wild pitch and a passed ball into a pair of runs.

Greenville scored first with a run in the fifth after two were gone. Following the two outs, Sammy Tucker singled and scored on Mike Mills' double.

Pitt hurler Kenny Barnes, who fanned 10 Albemarle batters through six innings, protected the one-run spread until the seventh. In that frame, Ryland Lindsay walked and moved to second on catcher Mills' error. Jimmy Knight followed with a strikeout, but Mills missed the third strike, allowing Lindsay to score and putting Knight on first. Knight then stole second, went to third on another passed ball and scored on Barne's balk, giving the visitor's the 2-1 lead.

Greenville-Pitt tied the score in the bottom of the seventh as Tucker doubled, moved to third on Mills' grounder and scored on catcher Knight's error.

Both sides went down in order in the eighth before another downpour hit the the home team in the ninth.

Billy Sawyer led off the ninth with a single and stole second. Lindsay walked and both runners advanced on Knight's sacrifice. Sawyer crossed the plate on a wild pitch and Lindsay scored on a passed ball.

Greenville-Pitt went down quietly in the bottom of the inning, taking its first loss of the double-elimination tournament.

Sawyer paced the winners at the plate, slapping out four hits in five trips.Tucker collected three hits for the losers while Mills picked up two in the losing effort.

In other first round action Friday night, Central Carolina North whipped Nash Franklin, 14-1, New Bern dramatically defeated Coastal Plain North on an eighth inning home run, 2-1 and Central Carolina South whitewashed the Kinston Lenior Duplin Seniors, 3-0.

Central Carolina North used an eight-run first to get off on the right track against Nash Franklin before scoring two more in the third, three more in the fourth and the final run in the seventh.

Johnny Johnson and Mark Regan combined for a one-hitter for the winners, that coming in the second inning on Jeff Griffin's one-out single. Nash scored its only run in the second on an error.

New Bern's Robbie McClanahan gave his team the victory with an extra-inning round-tripper after two were gone in the bottom of the eighth inning. McClanahn, who was the starting pitcher for New Bern re-entered the game as as pinch-hitter in the eighth to end the game.

Coastal Plain took the initial lead with a run in the third before New Bern knotted the score with a single run in the fifth.

CC tallied a pair of runs in the inital frame and added a single run in the fifth to register the win. Alan Tyndall collected two hits in three trips and drove in the final run to highlight the winner's attack.

Play was to have resumed today at Guy Smith Staduim and will continue through July 22 when the champion will be decided.

Little League Playoffs Set

The Little League District Area I and II Tournaments are set to begin this week in Greenville and Havelock. Play starts Monday when Greenville T.H. faces Roanoke Rapids at 5 p.m. here and Southern meets Beaufort in Havelock.

Play continues Tuesday with Greenville N.S. playing North Hampton at 3 p.m. and then Tarboro facing the the winner of the Greenville T.H.-Roanoke Rapids battle at 5 p.m.

The Area finals are set for Wednesday at 5 p.m. in Greenville while the District championship is scheduled for Friday at 5 p.m. in Havelock.

The winner of the districts goes to Asheville Aug. 5-8 for the State Championships. The winner there goes on to the regional title series, set for Aug. 17-23 in St. Petersburg. The Little League World Series will be Aug. 26-30 in Williamsport.

Raiders Given An Ultimatum

OAKLAND (AP) — Oakland Coliseum officials have given the Oakland Raiders an ultimatum — sign a lease by July 25 to play in the facility, or the club may have to find another place for home games.

Ironically, the Raiders want to move to Los Angeles next season if the courts let them. But they now find themselves in a situation where they may be kept from playing in the stadium that club officials have tried hard to move out of for months.

"Unless we have a contract, we will not be able to permit use of the stadium," outgoing Coliseum General Manager Bill Cunningham said. "And further, we would not be able to complete the things we have to do in order to get ready for games if they want to play at the Coliseum.

"We would be subjecting the city and county to substantial risk if we let 50,000 people into the stadium without insurance protection."

Al LoCasale, executive assistant to Raiders Managing General Partner Al Davis, wouldn't say whether he expected the team to meet the deadline. LoCasale said that the current offer before the team is different than in past years, raising the rental of a practice field from $1 to $30,000.

Cunningham said that the Coliseum needs a lease by July 25 so it can contract to set up the football bleachers used for Raiders games. He said that the seating change costs $20,000, half of which has been traditionally paid by the Raiders.

Davis has been trying since January to move the team to Los Angeles but numerous legal roadblocks forced him to play another year in Oakland.

U.S. Open Tennis

Agreement To Avert Boycott Doesn't Change Much

NEW YORK (AP) — An agreement reached last week to avert a potential boycott of the U.S. Open by the players doesn't change much about the tennis tournament.

So claims Doug Tkachuk, the executive assistant of the Association of Tennis Professionals. His organization is quite satisfied that two Grand Prix supervisors will serve on a committee overseeing the running of the championships, which start Aug. 27.

What the ATP members aren't too happy about is the treatment they've been accorded at past Opens. Even the president of the U.S. Tennis Association agrees — to a degree — that things could have been run better.

"The boycott is a dead issue for this year," said Tkachuk, speaking for most but not all of the touring pros — Bjorn Borg, John McEnroe, Jimmy Connors and Vitas Gerulaitis, the top four men's players in the world, do not belong to the ATP. "The only opposition to the agreement was that it wasn't long-range.

"The lack of supervisors (paid officials who are the final authority at Grand Prix events and oversee the enforcement of rules and the players' code of conduct on the Grand Prix tour but aren't used at Grand Slam events) at a Wimbledon doesn't figure to be a problem because Wimbledon usually is so well run. But look what happened in Paris and look what has happened at the Open."

What happened in Paris was that Manuel Orantes of Spain defaulted his match in the French Open against Guillermo Vilas after the Argentinian was granted a delay for illness. Orantes was not consulted and felt Vilas should have forfeited the match. It took an overnight delay before the contest was rescheduled.

"A supervisor would have made a spot decision," says Tkachuk. "Orantes was right that the tournament officials erred. He was entitled to an immediate decision."

At the 1979 Open, John McEnroe and Ilie Nastase were involved in a match filled with delays and uncalled-for displays by both players. Eventually, Nastase and umpire Frank Hammond became embroiled in a shouting exchange and Hammond was removed from the chair as the situation took on near-riot proportions.

"The beauty of supervisors is that they would deter such incidents," says Tkachuk. "These are guys who are there each week and who get to know the players and situations.

"The makeup of the Open committee insures all rules will be enforced fairly, regardless of who is involved or how it effects the tournament," adds Tkachuk. "We've replaced the concept of the supervisors with a committee of supervisors."

Still, says Tkachuk, there are many problems with the Open.

"The U.S. Open is a whole new ballgame," he notes. "It's an embarrassment to the players the way the thing is run. You get all kinds of scheduling problems. The players also complain how the courts are not taken care of.

"This is not an 18-and-under tournament at some local facility. It's the national championship and surely the courts should be in decent shape, should at least be cleaned after matches.

"Then some players get shunted to the outer courts while others never leave the stadium or grandstand.

Granted the big stars are important but they shouldn't be treated differently. That attitude of the Open is offensive to the players. They get the feeling that the USTA would love to have it without the players."

"We want the players to be happy at the Open and we don't try to be hard-nosed about it," says Carrico. "There have been problems but there were lots of factors involved.

"We moved the Open from Forest Hills to a new facility and it takes awhile to solve problems.

"On scheduling, for instance, we set up a procedure months ago where, each day after the schedule is ready, players, supervisors and officials will get together to approve it.

"As for the courts, there were complaints they weren't uniform. Well, all the courts are being redone simultaneously. It's expensive but it will make them as uniform as possible.

2 Expo Arms Keep Houston From Going 90 Feet

By The Associated Press

The Montreal Expos used two important arms to keep the Houston Astros from travelling 90 important feet.

Montreal right fielder Ellis Valentine threw out Houston catcher Luis Pujols at the plate in the sixth inning Friday night and later, in the ninth and 10th innings, Astros runners held third base on fly balls to Valentine's territory.

That helped matters for Expos pitcher Woodie Fryman, who survived bases-loaded crises in the eighth, ninth and 10th innings and rode Gary Carter's 11th-inning RBI single to a 5-4 victory over Houston.

"I got myself in a lot of trouble, but each time I made the good pitches when I had to get myself out of trouble," said the 40-year-old Fryman, 4-4.

"Any other manager would have had me out in any one of those three (bases-loaded) innings," Fryman said in praise of Montreal's Dick Williams. "It really helped my confidence that Dick left me in."

It didn't help the Astros any to show so little after so much offensive push.

"It's a shame to get 18 hits and score only four runs," said Houston's Terry Puhl. "We just let that one slip away."

Valentine threw out Pujols when the Houston catcher tried to go from second to home on a single by Puhl in the sixth.

Montreal came back twice on home runs by Gary Carter in the second inning and Tony Bernazard in the seventh to tie the score both times. Bernazard's homer tied the score at 3-3 and the Expos took a 4-3 lead in the eighth on Rodney Scott's sacrifice fly.

Houston's Jeff Leonard tied the score in the eighth with a solo home run that forced the extra innings.

Montreal finally won it in the 11th inning when Valentine singled, went from first to third on a wild pitch by losing pitcher Dave Smith, 1-3, and scored on Carter's single.

Giants 8, Cardinals 7

Milt May doubled, singled and belted his third career grand slam — a one-out blast in the ninth — powering San Francisco over St. Louis.

The Giants, trailing 6-2 after seven innings, got two runs in the eighth and won it in the ninth. Bill North and Larry Herndon walked, then Jack Clark reached on an error by third baseman Mike Phillips and one out later reliever Kim Seaman served up the decisive pitch.

Pirates 6, Dodgers 4

Former Dodger Rick Rhoden withstood a three-run Los Angeles second inning and defeated his former teammates for his first victory since September, 1978.

"There was a little extra adrenaline flowing, knowing I was going up against the Dodgers," said Rhoden, who was traded to Pittsburgh for Jerry Reuss.

Rhoden developed bone chips in his right arm last season and pitched only five innings. But Friday night, said Manager Chuck Tanner, "He finally found it."

Phillies 7, Braves 2

Bake McBride and Pete Rose drove in three runs apiece and Nino Espinosa — also coming back from arm troubles — pitched seven innings of two-hit ball in Philadelphia's triumph.

Padres 2, Cubs 1

Dave Cash hit his first home run of the season and Willie Montanez delivered the game-winning run with a sixth-inning double to help San Diego hand Chicago its ninth loss in 11 games.

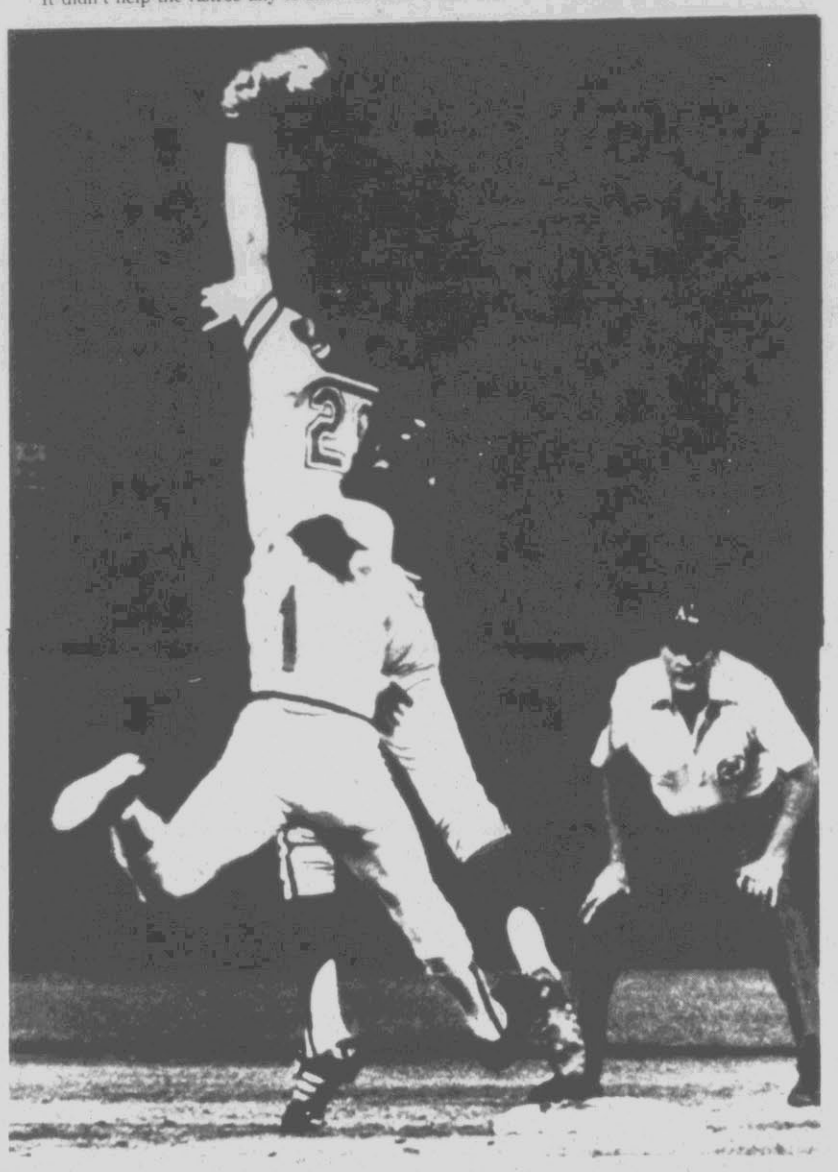

Bob Shirley, pressed into a starting role when Juan Eichelberger underwent an appendectomy, combined with Rollie Fingers on a six-hitter.

Reds 5-8, Mets 3-3

George Foster slammed a three-run homer in the nightcap to help Bruce Berenyi record his first major league triumph after a three-run homer by Hector Cruz had powered the Reds in the opener.

Close At First

A's Power To Victory

By The Associated Press

The Oakland A's have been scratching out runs this season by playing Billy Martin baseball — bunts, steals, hit-and-run plays. Friday night, however, they put on a power-packed show reminiscent of Martin's old New York Yankee teams.

Hot-hitting Tony Armas slammed his 20th and 21st home runs of the season, Mitchell Page hit two more and Jim Essian and Dwayne Murphy also connected as the A's set a club single-game home run record and pounded the Cleveland Indians 9-1. Homers by Murphy, Armas and Page in the fifth inning equaled a team mark.

The power barrage enabled Mike Norris, 12-6, who usually doesn't get many runs to work with and has griped about it, to breeze to his 13th complete game with a four-hitter.

"I guess I got my message across," he joked. "I've never experienced anything like this. Two or three is probably the most anyone's hit when I've pitched before .. and I'm not sure about the three."

The Yankees also got a taste of their own medicine when the Kansas City Royals made like Murderers' Row by pounding out 21 hits and crushing New York 13-1 in a battle of American League division leaders.

Royals 13, Yankees 1

Larry Gura pitched a three-hitter while Willie Wilson led Kansas City's assault with five hits and George Brett and Hal McRae drove in four runs apiece as the Royals defeated the Yankees for the fifth time in seven meetings in what may have been a playoff preview.

Gura, 12-4, who has beaten the Yankees six times in seven regular-season decisions since they traded him to Kansas City four years ago, had a no-hitter until Bob Watson singled with two out in the sixth.

"I was treated very well by the Yankee organization," said Gura. "It was my boyhood dream to pitch for them. I only had trouble with one person — Billy Martin — and he was the manager."

The Royals jumped on Rudy May in the first inning when Wilson singled and Brett socked his ninth homer of the season into the upper right field stands. They got two more in the fifth on a single by Brett and Amos Otis' sacrifice fly and chased May in a four-run sixth, which featured two-run doubles by Wilson and McRae.

Red Sox 1, Twins 0

Orioles 8, Rangers 7

Ken Singleton's two-run single capped a six-run Baltimore rally in the seventh inning that erased a 3-0 Texas lead. Singleton's hit came off Sparky Lyle, the fifth Texas pitcher of the inning, after a bases-loaded walk to Pat Kelly forged a 3-3 tie. The Orioles then took the lead on Benny Ayala's infield out. Loser Jim Kern suffered his 11th setback in 13 decisions.

The Orioles added two decisive runs in the eighth when Mark Belanger rapped an RBI triple and scored when catcher Jim Sundberg dropped the ball while attempting a tag on the relay. The Rangers battled back with four runs in the top of the ninth.

Brewers 5, White Sox 1

Cecil Cooper rapped a pair of RBI singles and Robin Yount added a solo homer to back the nine-hit pitching of Moose Haas as Milwaukee snapped a theee-game losing streak. Haas blanked the White Sox until an eighth-inning home run by Jim Morrison.

By that time, the Brewers had a 5-0 lead on Yount's triple and Cooper's single in the first inning. Jim Ggantner's RBI single in the second, Cooper's run-scoring single in the fifth and two runs in the seventh on Yount's homer and consecutive singles by Cooper, Gorman Thomas and Ben Oglivie.

Tigers 5, Mariners 3

Al Cowens singled home the tie-breaking run in the 10th inning and scored on a double by Tom Brookens. Steve Kemp, who had two RBI singles earlier, started the uprising against Jim Beattie with a single and advanced to second on an infield out. Rick Peters had three hits and scored three runs for the Tigers.

Angels 6, Blue Jays 3

Rod Carew's bases-loaded triple and Stan Cliburn's two-run single highlighted California's six-run second inning. Ed Halicki pitched five innings to earn the victory before leaving with a sore right side.

Wilson To Be Traded?

Meanwhile, negotiations continued with Wilson's agent, Howard Slusher, despite the opening of training camp for rookies without Wilson.

"I don't know if (Managing General Partner) Al Davis is planning for Marc Wilson ever to come to Oakland," Slusher said. "Personally, I think they want to trade him."

Ron Wolf, director of operations for the Raiders and the man handling the negotiations with Slusher, refused to discuss the talks with the agent.

"I'm not interested in negotiating contracts in the papers," Wolf said.

Wilson, the Brigham Young standout, is the Raiders' first No. 1 draft choice since 1975. He set a host of passing records at BYU but figures to be the Raiders' No. 3 quarterback this season behind Dan Pastorini and Jim Plunkett.

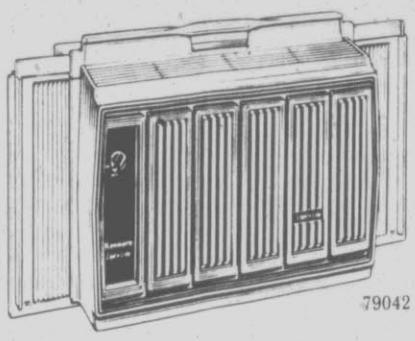

The Raiders' rookie camp began on Thursday; veterans will report next week.

Sugar Ray Wants Rematch Soon

Football Already?
Atlanta Falcons' Russ Mikeska (87) reaches for a cup of ice water Friday during the first practice of the Falcons' pre-season workouts at the training camp in Suwanee, Ga. Also taking a drink are Sammy Banks (18) and Alfred Jackson (85). Many NFL training camps are scheduled to open this week. (AP Laserphoto)

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sugar Ray Leonard says he wants to fight only two more times — at the most — and then retire from boxing. Of course, he wants to meet Roberto Duran again.

"I'd like to fight Duran as soon as possible, get him while he's still recuperating," Leonard told the Washington Post's John Feinstein. "But he's saying that he doesn't want to fight me until '81. If that's the case I think I'd like to fight the winner of the Cuevas-Hearns fight in October or November, then fight Duran.

"When I beat Duran, that will be it, the end. I want to get the title back and I want to get him. Once I've done that, I'll quit."

Leonard lost the World Boxing Council version of the welterweight title to Duran last month. The fight, shown on closed circuit television at the time, will be aired on ABC-TV Saturday.

Leonard told the Post he plans to return to the gym next month and talked of the Duran fight without bitterness but with regret in his voice.

"I still feel as if my title was confiscated," he said. "I've looked at it on film now and there's no question in my mind about it. The problem was the judges had never seen Sugar Ray Leonard fight that way before. They didn't know what to look for. I hit him two punches for every one he hit me. But he kept bullying me towards the ropes so it looked like he was the aggressor. I hit him more often and I hit him cleaner."

Leonard fought Duran toe-to-toe in Montreal because, he said, "I wanted to beat him at his own game. It wasn't pride or anything. I just wanted to show him. I was willing to risk my title to beat him that way.

"I know if I had fought a Sugar Ray Leonard fight, I would have beaten him. Next time that's the way I'll fight. I'll be faster and quicker. I'll beat him clean. There won't be any question about it

"I want to beat Duran. He talks about moving up a weight class to try and win three different titles. If he moves up, I'll follow him. I definitely want him."

Leonard said he is determined to retire after he fights Duran again even if he is offered major financial enticements to continue in the ring. He said he doesn't need the money.

"After I won the Olympics I said that I was going to quit fighting and go to school," he said. "That didn't happen, though, because funds were low and I had to become a fighter.

"That's not a factor anymore. I'm well set financially now.

A California man attempting a trans-Atlantic crossing in a motorized hang glider was winging his way toward Lake Champlain on the New York-Vermont border Saturday.

Eagle Sarmont, 28, of Santa Cruz, Calif. left at 11:30 a.m. EDT from the Kingston-Ulster Airport in upstate New York, where he spent the night, planning to fly non-stop to Lake Champlain for another overnight stop befoee crossing into Canada and turning east.

The control tower supervisor at the Albany County Airport said the 140-pound Sarmont was overheard talking by radio about 1:30 p.m., but was not in contact with the tower as he passed through the capital district.

A member of Sarmont's crew said a tail wind slowed his progress Friday after the glider took off on his projected 6,000-mile journey from Republic Airport in Farmingdale, N.Y.

If the trans-Atlantic flight is successful, Sarmont said he plans to "circle the Eiffel Tower and then land somewhere on the outskirts of Paris."

After that, he said, "I just may continue on around the world."

He equipped his single-wing rig with a radio for navigation and an emergency location transmitter to give his position in case of a crash.

The plan called for a maximum altitude of 9,000 feet, weather permitting.

The route was north via Lake Champlain and Montreal, then across the ocean via Greenland, Iceland, and Scotland. He planned daily stops for sleep and fuel and said he hoped to complete the trip in 22 days.

The hang glider, which has a 35-foot wingspan, was equipped with several tanks with a total capacity of 20 gallons of fuel to feed the engine that Sarmont said would use about two gallons an hour. Top speed is 50 mph.

On take-off from Farmingdale, it was carrying five gallons, because Sarmont said he expected to glide for most of the first leg of the trip.

Each gallon meant six pounds of weight, he said. The total weight of the glider is 150 pounds, including a 30-horsepower, two-cylinder snowmobile engine.

BOOK PRIZES

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Times 1980 Book Prizes — a program to honor literary excellence in five writing categories — has been announced by Art Seidenbaum, book editor of the Times.

SERVICE STATION DAMAGE BY FIRE — Greenville fireman make their way to the roof of the Citgo service station at 2112 Dickinson Ave. early Saturday morning after fire was reported in a small storage room in the rear of the building. Firemen quickly brought the blaze under control which had spread from floor to ceiling. Damages included the storage area as well as smoke damage to the rest of the station.

Wild Horse Lady

FREEBURG, Ill., (UPI) — "Wild Horse Lady" Barbara Stanley, who earned her nickname by saving starving equines through a program called "Adopt-A-Horse," says she has 500 animals ready for placement.

"The drought is really causing problems in Wyoming and other Western states," she said Friday. "We have 600 horses coming in from Wyoming and another 200 from Colorado.

Mrs. Stanley said 300 of the 800 coming in already have homes.

She said anyone interested in adopting a horse through the federal "Adopt-A-Horse" program must fill out an application and be approved by inspectors.

"Mostly they make sure a person has the proper facilities," she explained. "Experience is not necessary."

The horses can be picked up at a ranch near Smithton, and a fee of 175 is charged for the transportation and other costs.

Mrs. Stanley can be reached at 1-618-539-5510, or by mail at Rural Route 2, Box 321, Freeburg, Ill., 62243.

Fish Kill

OVIEDO, Fla. (AP) — Depleted oxygen levels have killed some 5 million fish in Florida's St. Johns River and Lake Jessup, in the second large fish kill in the central Florida area in five weeks, officials said.

Almost 40 percent of the dead fish were game fish such as bluegills and shellcrackers, biologist Harold Moody of the state Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission said Friday. The rest were small, nonedible fish.

The oxygen in the water has been depleted by decaying algae blooms, whose growth is due to warm water temperature, the presence of large amounts of nutrients and the sluggish water flow.

No bass were killed this time, unlike the kill in June in which an estimated 10 million fish died, Moody said. "That means there are almost no bass left in Lake Jessup."

Moody said the bass have been driven out of the lake by the lack of food and poor water quality.

Moody said the nutrients come from a number of sources, including the Big Econolockhatchee River, which carries sewage effluent from 12 secondary treatment plants in Seminole and Orange counties.

The lack of rainfall this year "slows the flow of the water and increases the concentration of the nutrients," he said.

And he predicted more problems because of those conditions.

"The level of algae was barely reduced by this fish kill," Moody said. "I'm afraid the possibility of more kills is very likely."

Adopt-A-Pet

HIGH AND DRY — Cattle graze near a parched pond near Farmington in northwest Arkansas. The heat wave has dried stock ponds and pastures, forcing many ranchers to begin supplemental feeding and watering. Some farmers are forced to reduce their herds at auction. A sale barn in the area reported a run of 2,600 cattle sold last week, compared with 900 head sold the same time last year. (AP Laserphoto).

Professor Crossed The Atlantic Without Aids

By PAUL MOSES
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Guiding his sloop by stars, waves and the sun, a retired professor has made a 8,000-mile trip across the Atlantic Ocean and back, shoring up his theory that ancient mariners could take long voyages without instruments.

"We zig-zagged a bit," said 64-year-old Marvin Creamer.

But after dodging a water spout and spending nine slow days near the Bermuda Triangle, Creamer said he had proved it was possible to sail the North Atlantic without sextant or compass.

But the former geography professor missed his intended destination on the other side of the ocean — the Azores, a group of islands in the North Atlantic off Portugal. He arrived in Dakar, the capital of Senegal, a country in west-central Africa, after navigating along the coast of that continent.

His 39-foot sloop Navstar was tracked by satellite by the U.S. Coast Guard Oceanographic Unit in Washington, D.C.

The Navstar sailed into a marina in Atlantic City Friday, and the former Glassboro State College professor and his three sailors were greeted by several hundred people and a band.

Creamer's wife, Blanche, presented her well-tanned husband with the ice cream sundae he had requested as a welcoming present before he left 92 days before. Then she hugged him.

Dr. Kenneth Helfant, a white-bearded psychologist who was a crewman, stepped onto dry land with somewhat more relief than the others.

"It's no fun being seasick half the time," the 58-year-old Great Neck, N.Y., resident said. "When we were in Bermuda, I read about a new cure for seasickness. I got it, but it didn't work. Nothing worked."

He enjoyed nine days of calm winds and slow speed in what is often called the Bermuda Triangle, he said. But the others were worried about spotting Bermuda, which has a low elevation.

"We were going around for three days and we didn't know where it was," he said. "We were 50 miles away and we saw the light."

Creamer generally guided the ship by the North Star, much as ancient sailors navigated, he said.

The most frightening moment, he said, came when the crew had to dodge a tornado at sea, or "a full-blown water spout," as Creamer called it, just after leaving Bermuda for the voyage's last leg.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture predicts soybean acreage will shrink slightly this year to 71.3 million acres.

Former POWs Pay Homage To MIAs

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A group of former prisoners of war gathered at the plaza of the Guilford County Offices this weekend to pay homage to those soldier still missing in action.

"I'm not sure everyone here realizes why we're here today," said ex-POW Richard Hackworth. He said after the ceremony that the purpose of the commemoration was to keep the attention of the public and the government focused on the fate of the hostages and those who are classified as "missing in action" from previous wars.

Hackworth is senior vice commander of the Department of North Carolina Ex-American Prisoner of War at whose request Gov. Jim Hunt designated July 18 as "National POW-MIA Recognition Day."

Hackworth was held prisoner for 29 months after being shot down over Germany in World War II.

Will Have To Seek Off Campus Housing

ELON COLLEGE, N.C. (AP) — Despite the completion of a modular dormitory complex, officials at Elon College say they will again have to seek off-campus housing for some students.

The college is appealing for housing for students in private homes and has rented rooms in a local motel in recent years because of continually increasing demands for college-furnished housing.

The new Oaks Dormitory complex will provide housing for about 144 more students on campus. However, college officials say they have reserved about 100 beds for Elon students at a Burlington motel.

Joanne Solday, assistant dean for student affairs, says the college is asking residents of Elon and surrounding areas who have rooms for rent to contact the college to help provide housing for all enrolled students. Most of the students in need are upperclassmen, she said.

Blacks Say Will Reoccupy Land If Hunting OK'd

ATLANTA (AP) — Black coastal residents who claim the Harris Neck Wildlife Refuge as their ancestral home may reoccupy the land if the government opens the refuge to public hunting, the president of a group which represents many of them said Friday.

"We will go back to our home to stay," said the Rev. Edgar Timmons, president of People Organized for Equal Rights. "We will not tolerate, under any circumstances, anybody coming into our homeland to hunt and kill over our dead bodies buried there in 1942."

Timmons made the statement Friday during a press conference at city hall in response to a decision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to add the refuge to a list of public hunting areas this fall.

Timmons, a descendant of former Harris Neck residents, said public hunting in the wildlife area would "be a slaughter." He attacked the government for allowing the killing of animals "that were so precious just a few months ago."

A spokeswoman for the wildlife service, Meg Durham, said the Harris Neck refuge has an overabundance of deer which could strip the refuge of its vegetation and eventually cause disease and sickness among other wildlife.

The land was bought from black residents during World War II for use as an emergency air base.

The protesters say the government had promised to sell the land back to the residents once the air base was no longer needed. But the land was transferred to McIntosh County, then to the federal govermant.

In May 1979, 50 black protesters occupied the land during a demonstration. U.S. District Judge B. Avant Edenfield ruled last June that former residents and their descendants had no legal claim to the land and permanently banned the 50 protesters from the refuge.

National Radiological Technology Week Observed Last Week

BY JILL ALLEN
Reflector Staff Writer

National Radiological Technology Week was recognized at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, along with other hospitals across the nation July 13-19.

"A committee from the radiology department was selected and they did all the planning for the recognition of Radiological Technology Week," said Edith Lancaster, diagnostic supervisor, at a reception given by the Radiological Techs.

"There are different fields of radiology — diagnostic, C.T. section, ultra-sound, nuclear medicine, and special procedures," she continued, mentioning that each area was responsible for what they wanted to display. Then the committee members made the posters.

Members were Vickie Wesson, Robyn Denson, Gayanne Eastman, Gwen Lenler, Debbie Pardue, and Vickie Davenport. "They all worked real hard for this and I think they did a great job," Lancaster said.

During the week, posters were displayed throughout the hospital and announcements could be heard on the radio recognizing Radiological Tech Week.

The grand finale was a reception held in the cafeteria Thursday where posters, pamphlets and new machines concerned with the field of radiology were displayed. Radiological techs were there explaining the functions and procedures of the new equipment to guests and other members of the medical profession.

"We want to make ourselves known as part of the heath team," Lancaster said, including that radiological techs are required to have 24 months training and are registered nationally. "They have to be trained to do numerous radiographs. For example; there are five positions for a routine skull x-ray." The techs also assist radiologists.

"They take the pictures and radiologists do the actual reading and interpreting of the x-rays," said Frank Noble, a radiological tech here. The informative Noble spent the afternoon explaining and pointing out the differences between x-rays taken by the regular machine and x-rays taken by a fairly new one, the Computerized Tomography machine, better known as the C.T. Scanner. "The conventional x-rays show little tissue difference," he said, noting that with the C.T. Scanner, x-rays are sent through an angling degree. "You're taking a composite picture of all the exposures — an image created by the computer," the technologist said. "It really helps in head work with detecting tumors or any type of abnormality." Another quality of the machine is its capability to blow up the picture.

Noble also explained the versatile functions of the Gamma Camera, a brand new machine for the use of the radiology dept. The expensive equipment has its own computer built in, not only recording information, but the actual picture and movements. For example, a beating heart can be recorded.

The machine works by giving the patient radioactive material. "Then we watch on the screen to see how it reacts," Noble said. "We will see the area as clear if the heart is damaged," he continued, saying that with the use of the machine they can tell if a person is about to have a heart attack. In this way, they can be prevented, he concluded.

Another new machine, the Real Time Digital or Ultra-Sound, is done with sound waves. "It's good for checking tumors and any type of fluid or dilated gall bladder and stones," said Jan Jones, another Radiological tech. There are now two ultasound machines in the radiology department, with the Real Time showing motion. This machine, unlike the Gamma Camera, does not have a built-in computer. "It's also used for a lot of O.B. patients. On the screen you can see the baby's feet and hands and you can tell if the child is in the right position," Jones said. Also, abnormalities of the child can be detected. Local radiologist, Dr. Michael Weaver, explained that the machine uses high frequency sound waves that are continuously sent out.

FRANK NOBLE ... Local Radiological Technologist explains differences between conventional x-rays and Computerized Tomography Machine x-rays at a reception located at Pitt County Memorial Hospital Thursday.

NO STREET DANCING

PEKING (AP) — Police have banned street dancing in the Peking district of Chaoyang because six couples were found necking and "rocking and rolling" at a roadside restaurant there in June, the Peking Daily reports.

REAL TIME DIGITAL (ULTRA-SOUND) MACHINE ... New machines were displayed at the reception given by Radiological Techs as a part of Radiological Technology Week.

Tribe Files $11 Billion Suit

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) — The Oglala Sioux tribe has filed an $11 billion suit seeking lost resources and compensation for the "hunger, malnutrition, disease and death" the Indians suffered when they lost their sacred Black Hills land more than a century ago.

The suit, filed Friday on behalf of the Tribe, seeks $1 billion in damages for "hunger, malnutrition, disease and death" caused by loss of seven million acres of land, located in South Dakota. It seeks an additional $10 billion for the loss of non-renewable resources.

Among the defendants named in the suit, filed in U.S. District Court, was the federal government.

The U.S. Supreme Court last month upheld a Court of Claims ruling that the Sioux nation is entitled to about $122 million because the government broke an 1886 treaty setting the property aside for the Sioux.

But Oglala Sioux attorney Mario Gonzalez said the tribe wasn't a party to the action — filed by other Sioux tribes — that resulted in the Court of Claims ruling. So, he said, the Ogala were entitled to file a separate suit.

"While the $10 billion which we will seek based on the trespass and illegal use of the land over the past 100 years seems monumental, we feel it is quite conservative in view of the fortunes and property values claimed by the present illegal occupants of our Black Hills land," said Oglala Sioux Tribal Chairman Stanley Looking Elk.

He called the $1 billion damage claim a "pittance" compared with the suffering the Oglala Sioux endured after the land was taken.

Gonzalez said that if the tribe won, that did not mean it wanted to throw out anyone living in the Black Hills. He said the main purpose of the suit was to transfer the land back to the tribe.

The suit also seeks a declaration of the right of the tribe to hunt on the land, an injunction preventing removal of resources and an injunction barring the federal government from interfering with the Indians' use of the land for "subsistence and religious purposes."

A Cold Summer In Europe

LONDON (UPI) — An advertisement for anti-freeze in a London street market said it all: "Mix some with your suntan oil."

As most of the United States blisters in 100-degree sunshine, Europe is suffering one of its harshest summers in recent memory.

Rain and low temperatures damaged vineyards in France and West Germany, delayed the grain harvest in Britain, clogged mountain passes with snow in Austria and Switzerland and ruined thousands of summer vacations across the continent.

It is France's coldest summer in 22 years. Beaches are half empty and hoteliers are facing a 30 to 50 percent drop in business.

SPLISH — SPLASH — Tony Collins splashes lava-like mud from a puddle created by sprinklers attatched to fire hydrants by the city of Atlanta to cool residents during the current heat wave. The high temperatures and humidity have claimed 63 residents in Georgia. (AP Laserphoto)

Business Notes

SPENDING PROJECTED

Carolina Telephone reported that during 1980 it plans to spend more than $89.3 million for new equipment to expand and improve service.

The company, which now serves 959,634 telephones, forecasts a growth rate of 3.6 percent or a gain of 33,685 telephones this year.

The nation's 1,488 independent or non-Bell System telephone companies, including Carolina Telephone, will spend $4.2 billion on new construction in 1980, an increase of 2.9 percent over 1979, according to the U.S. Independent Telephone Association.

The organization, which has published the independent telephone industry's annual report, forecasts a growth of 5.6 percent in telephones for 1980, to more than 35 million by the end of the year in the independent industry.

INCOME REPORTED

Peoples Bank & Trust Co. reported income before security losses for the period ended June 30 was $2,051,000 compared to $1,969,000 for the same period in 1979, an increase of 4.2 percent.

Net income for the period ended June 30 was $2,033,000, an increase of 4.1 percent over net income of $1,953,000 for the same period in 1979.

In comparing second quarter earnings, income before security losses for the three months ending June 30 was $991,000 compared to $1,025,000 for the same period in 1979.

Net income for the three months ending June 30 was $984,000 compared to $1,022,000 for the same period in 1979.

DEFICIT NOTED

Imports of textile and apparel products totaled $3.4 billion for the first five months of 1980 while exports ran at $2 billion, producing a $1.4 billion deficit, according to figures released by the American Textile Manufacturers Institute.

Although the deficit is about equal to that of the same period last year, it rose 18 percent for the month of May, alone, against May of 1979, the ATMI reported.

The figures are based on Census Bureau data made available to ATMI, it was reported.

EMPLOYEES CITED

Jessie M. Murchision and Peggy J. Biggs, local employees of Carolina Telephone, received emblems recently in recognition of five years of service with the company.

Both employees are operators in the company's Traffic Department in Greenville.

INCREASE REPORTED

Branch Corp., parent holding company of Branch Banking and Trust Co., reported a 14.7 percent increase in consolidated net income for the six months ending June 30 over the same period in 1979. Net earnings were $3,727,090 compared to $3,249,173 last year.

Consolidated income before securities transactions was $3,719,987, it was reported, compared to $3,229,371 the previous year.

For the second quarter of 1980, net earnings were $1,814,538 compared to $1,658,215 for the 1979 period. Income before securities transactions was $1,810,523, an increase of ten percent over $1,646,313 in 1979.

BANKING OFFICER

Wilma O. Tyson has been elected banking officer of Wachovia Bank & Trust Co. here, according to J. Reid Hooper, vice president and Greenville city executive.

Mrs. Tyson joined Wachovia in 1955 as a bookkeeper, accepted new duties in 1963 as teller, and in 1971 became head teller. In 1974 she assumed new responsibilities as personal banker secretary and in 1977 she was named personal banker, her present position.

A Farmville native, she is a graduate of Farmville High School and member of Wesley United Methodist Church. She is married to Henry C. Tyson of Farmville and they have two sons.

Nervous Market For Grain And Soybeans

Early weakness developed because farmers sold large quantities of their old-crop corn and soybeans to take advantage of the higher market prices. But country elevator operators buying from farmers took price protection anticipating a fall in futures prices.

That nervousness in the country, in turn, led to selling pressure in the futures market as traders reasoned that the weather or crop outlook could change over the weekend and alter their market positions.

Meanwhile, traders said commercial firms were scaledown buyers in the trading rings. Technical buying and selling also occurred as prices reached levels or resistance or support.

Meanwhile, the northern corn and soybean belt had some showers overnight, but the South and Southwestern United States remains dry and badly in need of cooler temperatures and rain.

Soybean futures declined 11½ to 19 cents per bushel; wheat was 1½ to 10 cents lower; corn was 2½ to 4 cents lower, and oats were 2¾ to 3½ cents lower per bushel.

Board of Trade officials said that for the second time this week, corn and soybeans had record volumes and that overall volume established a record 289,392 contracts. The previous records for all three were set July 15.

Gold and silver futures continued to move in a wide trading range in a largely technical market. Futures prices declined in part because of a stronger dollar that resulted from rumors that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries members might lower the price of crude oil, said Howard Levine, metals analyst for ACLI International Commodity Services Inc.

Gold declined $1 to $9.50 on the Comex, while silver fell 9 cents to 21 cents per pound.

Cotton futures on the New York Cotton Exchange declined as traders sold contracts to take profits after sharp advances based on the possibility of crop damage because of drought conditions in the Texas cotton regions, analyst said. Futures were .25 cent to 1.32 cents lower per pound, with the October contract quoted at 83.75 cents per pound.

Moderate Increase In Money Supply

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's basic money supply rose $700 million in the latest reporting period, the Federal Reserve said, a moderate increase that was less than many analysts had expected.

The report Friday showed that the M1A money supply rose to a seasonally adjusted average of $371.8 billion, from $371.1 billion in the previous reporting week. M1A includes cash in circulation and commercial bank checking accounts.

M1B, a slightly broader definition of money supply, increased $1.5 billion to $392.3 billion in the week. M1B includes M1A money plus funds in checking-type accounts at savings banks and other financial institutions.

"There were (Wall) Street estimates of up to a $2 billion increase ...The numbers are fairly moderate in light of that," said David Jones, who follows monetary policy for the Wall Street investment firm Aubrey G. Lanston & Co.

Cost-of-living increases in Social Security checks were a major reason money supply figures were expected to rise in the reporting week ended July 9, Jones said.

Other indicators for the week ending July 9, included:

—Commercial and industrial bank loans at the nation's major banks fell $379 million, after increasing $1.22 billion the previous week. Total bank loans in that category stood at $153.9 billion at the end of the reporting week.

—The average rate paid by major banks on large 90-day certificates of deposit rose to 8.72 percent, from 8.65 percent the previous week.

—Member bank borrowings from the Federal Reserve System averaged $327 million, up from $210 million. The Fed increased its holdings of government securities by $3.10 billion.

—Federal funds, the interest rate on short-term loans of uncommitted reserve funds among banks, averaged 8.98 percent, down from 9.26 percent the previous week.

—The three-month Treasury bill rate averaged 8.02 percent, unchanged.

Village Still Alive

By CYNTHIA KYLE
Associated Press Writer

LYONS, Mich. (AP) — One year ago, Chrysler Corp. packed up and left this sleepy, west central Michigan village of 758 people, closing a plant that had turned out auto trim since 1965.

Many of the 800 folks left jobless by the cost-cutting move remain out of work, but Lyons residents don't seem to have fully felt the effect of the shutdown yet.

"I can't see any difference in the village since the plant closed," said Jim Van Poperin, a consulting engineer who's lived in Lyons seven years and been village president the last three months. "We don't have any more problems here than in any other villages."

A study commissioned by Gov. William Milliken forecast increasing suicides, mental illness and drinking problems as the recession takes hold, and officials say there are signs of such problems developing in Michigan.

But in Lyons, things are pretty much the same — so far.

The village's finances are sound, Van Poperin said. A recent arts and crafts festival — the town's first — netted merchants more than $5,000.

Recent reports that Lyons was a depressed, dying community were greatly exaggerated, but did prompt three businessmen to inquire about the idle plant, Van Poperin said.

Only about 40 Lyons residents worked at the plant at the west edge of town. Most of the employees lived in Ionia County, where unemployment has caught up with the rest of Michigan — hovering around 14 percent.

The town's jobless are counting on government and union-paid benefits that add up to almost full pay. However, state unemployment benefits run out after 39 weeks, supplemental unemployment benefits through the United Auto Workers union are thinning, and federal payments to workers hurt by imports are limited to 52 weeks.

When that money runs dry — another month in some cases, five months in others — people are looking to welfare and hoping that another business will fill the empty Chrysler plant.

Betty Barnes, laid off after 12 years as a quality control inspector on the plant's vinyl roof line, talks daily to former Chrysler colleagues, hearing of some misery but more hope.

"People are happy-go-lucky. You talk and you worry about what's going to happen. Then you meet people and they have big smiles on their faces," she said.

"As long as they've got government or SUB benefits coming in, they're not in dire straits. Some are putting in gardens. I started sewing, it's cheaper."

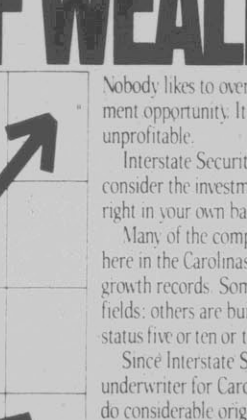

Lyons has one tavern, a lone grocery store, a barber shop, bank and post office in its two-block downtown.

THIS LINE OF THINKING HAS DRIVEN SOME TO THE BRINK OF WEALTH.

Many of the companies headquartered here in the Carolinas have outstanding growth records. Some are giants in their fields; others are building toward giant status five or ten or twenty years from now.

Since Interstate Securities is a major underwriter for Carolinas businesses, we do considerable original research on firms here. Armed with our reports and your own objectives, you can develop a sound line of thinking about investment opportunities in the Tarheel and Palmetto States.

So give us a call. Because you may be on the brink of opportunity and not even know it. And even a small investment program, if it's growing to meet your objectives, is of major interest to us.

The Long House, Circa 1916, Is An Aged Gracious Lady

Like a dowager, she stands aloof, not a brick out of place, her large white Corinthian columns serving as her calling card.

She is every inch an aristocratic lady. She descended from a much older house, which once was said to be the oldest building in Greenville before it was torn down in August 1917. George Washington even took dinner in her forebear. a frame house.

The descendant, which today is known as the W.H. Long House, circa 1916, was purchased in December from Mrs. Anna Long Royer by the legal firm of Howard, Vincent & Duffus. The partners are now working to list the house on the National Register of Historic Places.

Located on the corner of Fourth and Cotanche Streets in the urban redevelopment area of downtown Greenville, the structure was once rumored to be marked for demolition so that the site could become a parking lot. Mrs. Royer quietly decided against selling her property until she could be satisfied that the house would remain intact.

Preservation of the home had been sought previously by such organizations as the Daughters of the American Revolution, who in 1975 stated that "We have been advised by several architectural experts that in spite of the relatively late date (1917), this building is an excellent example of the classical revival style in America; moreover, it lends a valuable traditional touch to a city that possesses almost no old architecture of quality."

Each of the four large stone columns supporting the porch facing Fourth Street are one solid piece of stone, in contrast to most other columns of their size. which are in sections. The columns were brought to Greenville by barge traveling the Tar River. Once they reached town, they were pulled by teams of oxen the approximately half mile from the river to the building site.

Inside, the house contains 4,500 square feet of usable space, including a basement, first and second floors, and a third floor that was originally intended to be a dance area.

The latter is constructed of eastern North Carolina tongue and groove pine. However, the dances were held in the downstairs foyer, where Mrs. Royer and her friends literally rolled up the carpets for their festivities.

The downstairs flooring is oak, inlaid with mahagany, while the second story floor is of heart pine. The walls are eight inches thick, with decorative woodwork and eight-inch crown moldings. All the rooms have high ceilings and large windows that contain glass one quarter of an inch thick.

A hidden stairway, once used by servants avoiding the grand stairwell in the entrance hall, leads from the first to the third floors.

Also intact and still functional are eight fireplaces, each one featuring a different brick or tile frame and mantel.

The man responsible for constructing the house was Mrs. Royer's father — William Henry Long, Greenville attorney and mayor for a two-year term from 1901-2. A native of Tennessee, he received his law degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He then moved to Greenville, where he studied law under the late Governor Thomas J. Jarvis and was licensed to practice in 1893.

Five years later, he married Jennie Williams, whose physician father, Richard, owned the property and the original house, which was located on the northwestern corner of the lot.

Until the sale in December, the property had been in the Williams-Long families for over 100 years.

When Lawyer Long had the old frame house torn down to make way for his new brick home, its passing was duly noted in a local newspaper. An aged, unidentified clipping in Jennie Williams' journal is entitled "Passing of a Land Mark" and states:

"The tearing down of the old house on the corner of Cotanche and Fourth Streets, commonly known as the Williams house, will cast a shadow on the hearts of many of the oldest citizens of Greenville.

"It is not known when the house was built, but there is on one of the outside planks a date that reads — April-1st-1791. This is the day on which General George Washington is said to have taken dinner within its walls. For the last several generations the place has belonged to the well known Williams family and has been occupied by them.

"The passing of this the oldest landmark of the town is just one of the inevitable changes that follows in the trian (sic) of time and progress. It seems a great pity that this old home that has weathered so many storms, that has been warmed in the sunshine of more than a century, under whose sheltering roof so many souls have been brought into the world and from whose their flight heavenward, could not have been preserved and kept for the future generations of Greenville."

The mournful obituary for the old house was followed by a news article with a more positive ring. It described a gavel made of wood from the orginal Williams house. The gavel, which was inscribed with silver band, was presented to the Woman's Club by its first president, Mrs. Mark Quinerly. At the time, she expressed the hope that the gavel would be used "for many generations to call to order members of the Woman's Club of Greenville."

Today, the ladies of the club have the only known momento from the old frame house. The whereabouts of the dated plank signifying when George Washington dined there is unknown, though at one time it was in Mrs. Royer's possession.

The Long house was built during World War I, when construction costs were escalating rapidly and tobacco was selling for over a dollar a pound. Consequently, Long did not make a contract with his builders but worked on a cost-plus basis. He never told anyone, not even his wife, how much the house cost.

Two local builders have said recently that the house would be impossible to replace. Today, a replica would exceed one million dollars.

Prior to purchasing the structure last December, the Howard, Vincent & Duffus law firm had been investigating possible new office sites. "All of us are interested in history and in preservation," Vincent said. "When this house became available, we saw that it could be rehabilitated, with enough space for future expansion."

The fact that Long had been an attorney increased the firm's interest.

Before any repairs were made, Vincent consulted representatives of the N.C. Department of Archives and History for recommendations on renovations and modernization. Their advice was the basis for refurbishing. Except for modifications in three downstairs doorways, the house was left intact. Even the bookcases can be removed so that the building remains in its original form.

Today, Vincent who is former Mayor Pro Tem of Greenville, is actively pursuing the listing of the house on the National Register of Historic Places.

His partners are Malcolm J. Howard, the firm's founder and former Watergate defense counsellor, and J. David Duffus Jr. Stanley M. Sams is an associate.

Local interest in the building has continued since the day it was formally opened by the law firm, with passersby still stopping to view it. A guest register is kept to record their names.

While Anna Long Royer misses her portico for parking, her dining room buzzer and the high ceilings which complemented the family antiques, she is satisfied that her wish has been fulfilled. The house not only is standing, but also is cared for.

The former owner of the Long House, Mrs. Anna Long Royer, sits adjacent to a pier mirror, an original furnishing, used by her family over the years for picture taking. Posing with her is her daughter, Jane Long Joyner.

Kathy Purvis, Mr. Frazier Married In Bethel Saturday

BETHEL — Kathy Purvis and Alvin Bland Frazier were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in the Bethel United Methodist Church. The Rev. Ellis Jennings Bedsworth, pastor, performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Clayton Purvis of Bethel and parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Frazier of Red Oak.

A program of wedding music was presented by Mike Edmondson, organist, and Mrs. Debbie Southwick, soloist, who sang "The Wedding Prayer," "The Wedding Song" and "Make of Our Hands One Hand."

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal length gown of white silesta over white peau de soie designed with a Queen Anne neckline outlined in silk floral Venise lace beaded with clusters and scrolls of bridal pearls. The lace extended down to and encircled the empire waistline. The long fitted sleeves were enhanced by inserts of the silk floral Venise lace with cuffs edged in scalloped lace. Accentuated at center front with a sunburst of knife pleats, the flared skirt extended to an attached chapel length train.

MRS. ALVIN BLAND FRAZIER

She wore an imported braid garden hat overlaid in double layers of chiffon on the brim with the crown covered by re-embroidered alencon lace beaded with pearls. The veil of illusion, pencil edged, extended from under the brim to floor length in back. Her formal cascade bridal bouquet consisted of white phalaenopsis, royal bouquet orchids and pink sweetheart roses with sprays of springerri greenery tied with white velvet.

Debbie Purvis of Bethel, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Tammy Purvis of Bethel, sister of the bride, Mrs. Rhonda Frazier, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and Mrs. Laura Johnson, sister of the bridegroom, both of Rocky Mount, Charlene White of Raleigh and Kathy Felton of Macclesfield.

The bridal attendants wore periwinkle blue formal dresses of silk maracaine knit. The sleeveless blouson bodice was fashioned with a square neckline enhanced with scalloped Venise lace while the gathered skirt stemmed from the waist under a sash-belt ending in bow and streamers, featuring a deep front slit. The removable coats were hiplength with sheered shoulders and split dolman sleeves trimmed in lace. They carried bouquets of mixed summer flowers tied with blue satin bows.

The father of the bridegroom served as best man. Groomsmen were Sandy Frazier of Rocky Mount, brother of the bridegroom, Ted Keel of Oak City, Dick Webb of Greenville, Kenny Capron of Winston-Salem and Eddie Gupton of Greenville.

The mother of the bride wore a rosette floor length silesta gown. The bodice featured a yoke neckline and elbow length push-up sleeves, with a natural waistline accented by a self fabric wrap belt. The mother of the bridegroom wore a pink floor length gown accented with lace. Each wore a white orchid corsage.

Mrs. Robert Joseph Whitehurst of Bethel directed the wedding.

Immediately following the ceremony, the parents of the bride entertained at a reception honoring the bridal couple and their wedding party in the fellowship hall of the church.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will reside in Ayden. The bride is a graduate of Atlantic Christian College and is employed by the Pitt County School System. The bridegroom is a graduate of East Carolina University and is employed by the Lenoir School System.

Friday, friends and relatives of the bridal couple entertained at the Robersonville Country Club with an after-rehearsal pig picking and dance. Music was provided by John Moore of Farmville.

Oak City Man Marries Miss Moye

RALEIGH — Deborah Sue Moye and Willie John Daniels were united in marriage Saturday afternoon at four o'clock in Saint Mark's United Methodist Church here. The Rev. J. Malloy Owen III, assisted by Dr. Albert G. Edwards, performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Wilson Moye of Raleigh. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler Vance Daniels of Oak City.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal length white silesta gown designed with a Queen Anne neckline trimmed with alencon lace and seed pearls. The full bishop sleeves had large appliques of matching lace with wide schifli lace cuffs and a lace ruffle buttoned with small covered buttons at the wrist. The bodice featured a French net yoke, a net covering the front and back, and alencon lace appliques and seed pearls which covered the front bodice while matching lace scattered across the back. A full accordian-pleated skirt fell from an empire waist into a chapel length trim bordered with two rows of schifli lace. A wide pleated flounce had a wide border of schifli lace at the hem. She wore a cathedral length veil of white illusion with a camelot cap of alencon lace and seed pearls. Appliques of matching lace were scattered across the veil with alencon and schifli lace bordering the hem. Her flowers were a silk cascade of white roses, lily of the valley, stephanotis, and baby's breath interwined with silk ivy.

Betty Moye of Raleigh was her sister's maid of honor. She wore a formal length blue qiana gown. The dress featured a ruffled collar forming capped sleeves which gathered at the shoulder with a bow and layers from the waist down and a self tying bow. She carried a silk nosegay of dusty pink roses, Williamsburg blue phlox, daisies, and dried baby's breath.

Mrs. Julia Parker of Raleigh, cousin of the bride, was matron of honor. Bridesmaids included Carol Harrington of Raleigh, cousin of the bride, Mrs. Vickie Daniels of Knightdale, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and Bonnie Boyle of Budd Lake, N.J., Pam Grant of Greensboro, Lenora Reeves of Raleigh, Mrs. Kim Ingram of Dunn and Elizabeth Underwood of Goldsboro, all sorority sisters of the bride. Their suede rose dresses were styled identically to that of the matron of honor and their flowers were similar.

The parents of the bridegroom entertained at a dinner at Balentine's Friday evening for the wedding party and out-of-town guests. A bridesmaids' luncheon was held at the home of Mrs. Dot Harrington who was assisted by Mrs. Shirley Gower and Mrs. Norma Whitfield.

The bride, employed by the state of North Carolina, works at the Vocational Rehabilitation Center, Dorothea Dix Hospital. She is a graduate of East Carolina University. The bridegroom is employed by the National Home Life Assurance Company as a field underwriter. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

The couple will live in Raleigh after a wedding trip to the Bahamas.

MRS. WILLIE JOHN DANIELS

The father of the bridegroom was his son's best man. Serving as groomsmen were Darrell Daniels of Knightdale, Kenneth Daniels of Clinton and Roger Daniels of Lexington, all brothers of the bridegroom, Raymond Groseclose of Randleman, Chip Plyler of Garner, David Ruth of Concord, Tommy Williams of Raleigh and Tim Smith of Greenville.

Following the ceremony, the bride's parents hosted at a reception on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Long.

Miss Mincey, Mr. Shearin Had Burlington Wedding Saturday

BURLINGTON — Elizabeth Annette Mincey of Burlington and Sidney Howard Shearin, III, of Littleton, were united in marriage at three o'clock Saturday afternoon at Northside Baptist Church in Burlington. The double ring ceremony was conducted by Rev. Phillip W. Norwood.

MRS. SIDNEY HOWARD SHEARIN III

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Haywood Mincey of Burlington, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Howard Shearin Jr. of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of Chantilly lace over peau de soie. The dress was designed with a portrait neckline. The Empire waistline and long semi-fitted sleeves were accented by the triple tiered flounce which encircled the A-line skirt. A satin ribbon was attached with Venise lace appliques at the waistline. The Venise-laced neckline was outlined with a Bertha lace collar that extended over the shoulders. The laced sleeves were enhanced with ruffles. She wore a waltz length veil of imported white silk illusion encircled in a scalloped band of Chantilly lace attached to a Camelot hat. She carried a white bible covered with white roses and baby's breath.

Mrs. James F. Mincey of Oak Ridge, Tennessee, was matron of honor. She wore a formal gown of yellow printed chiffon over taffeta designed with a high neckline blouson bodice and long bell sleeves gathered at the wrists. The skirt was accented with three rows of tucks and around the gathered waistline was tied a green satin ribbon. She carried a bouquet of yellow and white daisies with baby's breath and satin streamers.

The bridesmaids were Mrs. Glenn Woodief, sister-in-law of the bride of Henderson; Mrs. David Cates, sister of the bridegroom of Pleasant Garden; and Tamar Herring and Colleen Henderson of Greensboro. Wendy Pyles of Burlington was flower girl. The flower girl and bridesmaids wore gowns identical to that of the maid of honor.

The bride's mother wore a blue chiffon gown over taffeta, and the mother of the bridegroom wore a formal gown of pink chiffon over taffeta.

Mr. Sidney Howard Shearin Jr., the bridegroom's father, was best man. Ushers were Lee Shearin, brother of the bridegroom of Greenville; James F. Mincey of Oak Ridge, Tennessee and David Mincey of Burlington, brothers of the bride; and Bill Overby, cousin of the bridegroom of Freehold, New Jersey.

A reception was given by the bride's parents following the ceremony in the church fellowship hall. Directors of the wedding were Mrs. Irwin Glenn and Mrs. Colen Chandler. Mrs. Jeff Marco of Greensboro resided at the guest register. Serving refreshments were Mrs. James Boswell, Mrs. Emery Garrett, Mrs. David Bridgman, Mrs. Alonzo Sorrell, and Mrs. Dan Smith.

The bride attended Cummings High School in Burlington and received a B.S. in Mathematics from UNC—Greensboro. She has served as a missionary journeyman in Nigeria. The bridegroom is a graduate of Rose High School and N.C. State University. He is employed by N.C. State Park System as a ranger at Medoc Mountain State Park.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va., the couple will reside in Enfield.

Mrs. Jones' Food Processor Book Can Help Lower Cholesterol

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

If you are interested in recipes low in cholesterol, sodium and fat, there's a new cookbook — the first of its kind — you may want to look into. It contains 200 recipes that range from hors d'oeuvre to desserts.

It's "The Low-Cholesterol Food Processor Cookbook" by Suzanne S. Jones (Doubleday, $9.95) and its author tested every recipe in the book herself. We emphasize this because, unfortunately, too many cookbook authors are more familiar with a typewriter than a kitchen stove.

Sue Jones' interest in cooking started early. "When I was young, I loved 'helping' my Swedish grandmother prepare Smorgasbord. And the summers I spent on a farm introduced me to the intricacies and foibles of cooking on a wood-burning stove."

During her college years she worked as a part-time waitress and cook in a small restaurant. After graduation, during a teaching stint, she developed recipes for open-fire cooking for a Girl Scout group particularly interested in camping.

After she married she cooked for her husband and their daughter and did a lot of entertaining. But when, eventually, her daughter went off to college and her husband suffered a mild heart attack, she got herself a job.

An energetic and enterprising woman, first she managed a gourmet cookware and food store; then she went to work for a food-processor firm. Naturally, she began to use a food processor in cooking the special food her husband's doctor prescribed for him — and before she knew it she was writing a book.

SUZANNE JONES

Rice Salad for whole-family use.

MAIN-DISH
RICE SALAD

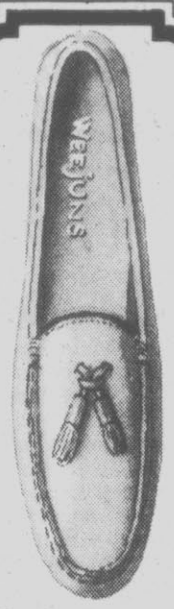

1 cup long-grain rice
¼ cup corn oil
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Salt and pepper to taste
½ cup parsley sprigs
5 scallions, with part of green tops
2 medium ribs celery
8 radishes
¼ pound mushrooms
2 cups cooked, skinned, boned and cubed chicken breast
½ cup mayonnaise whisked with 1 tablespoon lemon juice
Salad Greens
Garnish: cucumber slices and cherry tomatoes

Cook rice according to package directions; in a large bowl, toss with oil, lemon juice, salt and pepper; let stand until cool; reserve.

In a food processor, with the steel blade, mince parsley; with machine running, drop scallions through feed tube and mince fine; reserve.

With the processor slicing disc, slice celery, radishes and mushrooms; add to the reserved rice along with the reserved minced mixture, the chicken and the mayonnaise mixture; toss well. Serve at room temperature on salad greens; garnish with cucumber and tomatoes.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Erma Gets Myriad Response From Parents Of Handicapped

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

This column has always dealt with survival in one form or another . . . with some input from readers.

Never, in the 16 years of its existence, has there been such a reader response as there was to the column on mothers of handicapped children. An emotional dam broke, bringing in its torrent pain, anger, insight, humor, frustration, relief, criticism, and gratitude. The Mother's Day column only skimmed the surface.

It would behoove all of us to read and to understand what happens when a handicapped child enters the life of a mother, father, brothers, sisters, grandparents and friends.

The anger of the letters went from the tasteless comment of a woman who didn't even want to talk about "gross" retarded children and resented the attention being given to them ("It's almost fashionable these days to have one," she said) . . . to a couple of letters that took exception to the fact that these children ever came from God, as HE only made "perfect children." (Authors's note: If anyone finds one, please report them immediately.)

The legitimate criticism of the column ironically came not from the mothers, but from the social workers and organizations who work with the families.

"Don't patronize them. They have a tough enough time dealing with the very real and sometimes agonizing situations without having to wear halos. Sure, some gain the strength you talked about. But tell about the ones who drown."

"Parents of handicapped children are no more, no less likely to be patient than parents of non-handicapped children. They're madder than hell that their children aren't like everyone else's. Don't add a guilt trip to this."

And finally a plaintive letter from a mother of a severely retarded hyperactive child who spent her days replacing broken TV sets, buying locks and fences to protect her "God-given gift," and feeling like a prisoner in her own home.

"With the guilt of being less than God intended, we placed our retarded daughter in an institution and got on with our lives. Please don't make our decision reached through pain any harder than needs be. Help us teach the world there is no single answer and that we need not try to be saints."

A good 95 percent of the letters were from mothers of handicapped children who knew they weren't saints — or even close — but needed so badly the appreciation and the encouragement.

"I look in a mirror and see a 30-year-old face with 100-year-old eyes. I have two handicapped children. If I live to be old I will treasure every one of my age wrinkles because I have earned them. My children are special and I love them not because they're special, but because they're my children."

"My daughter has Downs syndrome. She was two years old before she could pat-a-cake. The applause was deafening!"

"Parents of normal children can never experience moments like my son who spent five years playing with a faded plastic bucket and actually asked for a toy for Christmas. I cried for three hours and bought the toy store out!"

"B.J. was my mid-life crisis. I scream a lot. On Mother's Day he handed me a gift and said, 'Happy Father's Day.' I don't see a saint when I look in a mirror, but I'm a better person because of him."

"My daughter was born with asthma, extreme hyperkineticism, moderate retardation, grand mal, petit mal and psych motor seizures. Seven years I have watched this poor soul die millimeter by millimeter. I have railed and ranted and shook my fist at God a thousand times, told Him what scum He was, screamed at Him wondering where this so called love and mercy He speaks so high of was. I've raged at His giving His son only three hours of suffering before death while mine is going through literally years of it before hers. It's taken me five years for the light to dawn. I know that I am here because there is a need for me to be here."

Mothers of handicapped children have been dealt a bad hand of cards. Each one plays her hand in her own way. Some have a tough time buying the "God never gives you more than you can handle" number. One mother begged for understanding that handicapped children had to be disciplined like everyone else and that a little humor could save a life — her own. I received snapshots of their children, hand-made greeting cards, personal stories from all over the world and a list of diseases and medical terminology that I could not begin to understand . . . let alone deal with. I received requests to say something about the fathers who were the support systems and several letters paid tribute to other children in the family who also live with the problem. But most of them said simply. "Your column made me feel good and I need to be made to feel good."

I hope in some way this emotional torrent will carry away in its path some of the ignorance, cruelty and prejudice that surrounds the parents and their children.

I thank all of the editors who gave the extra space today to deal with this topic.

In closing I will share with you an anonymous conversation for all of you who still ask, "Why me, God?"

"One night I dreamed I was walking along the beach with the Lord. Scenes from my life flashed across the sky. In each, I noticed footprints in the sand. Sometimes there were two sets of footprints; other times there was only one.

"During the low periods of my life I could see only one set of footprints so I said, 'You promised me, Lord, that you would walk with me always. Why, when I have needed you the most, have you not been there for me?'

"The Lord replied, 'The times when you have seen only one set of footprints, my child, is when I carried you.'"

SHRINKING PSYCHIATRISTS

CHICAGO (AP) — The number of psychiatrists is decreasing, according to a recent article in the American Journal of Psychiatry.

The almost constant rate of 7 percent of medical-school graduates entering psychiatry during the years following World War II began to fall in the mid-1960s and has continued to decline since then, reports Dr. Arthur Nielsen of Northwestern University Medical School. He predicts further declines for the next several years.

In the period of 1925-1929, the percentage of graduates entering psychiatry was 2.7. It was 7.1 in the 1945-49 period and 7 in the 1960-1964 period. In 1977, it was 4.7.

Engagement Announced

NETTIE ALMA TYSON. . .is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. Kermit Tyson Sr. of Ayden, who announce her engagement to E. Frank Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Frank Evans Sr. of Greenville. An October wedding is planned.

Miss Sullivan Is Wed In Raleigh

RALEIGH — Kimberly Dawn Sullivan of 309 Circle Drive, Winterville, and Teddy Randall Harris of 120 Tuckahoe Drive, Greenville, exchanged wedding vows Saturday at five o'clock at the Hillcrest Baptist Church in Raleigh. The double ring ceremony was conducted by Steve Bolton.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Britt E. Sullivan of Knightdale, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest M. Harris of Greenville.

A program of wedding music was provided by Martha Chandler, organist, and Linda Bryant, soloist.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal length gown of white bridal satin designed with a high neckline encircled with scalloped Chantilly lace. The empire bodice was overlaid in sheer lace accented in a floral design. The long sheer fitted sleeves were of matching lace. The full flared skirt extended to an attached chapel length train. She wore a waltz length veil of illusion bordered in miniature lace and enhanced by motifs of the lace to complement her gown. She carried a bouquet of silk pink and white roses with pink ribbons flowing in front of her gown.

Angie Sullivan, the bride's sister of Knightdale, was maid of honor. She wore a long pink satin dress with a ribbon enhancing the empire waist and a ruffle accenting the neckline. She carried a brandy snifter with a candle inside and pink ribbons flowing in front. The bridesmaids were Flonnie Godwin of Benson, Cathy Wall of Raleigh, Elizabeth Davenport of Edenton, and Mrs. Judy Harris of Greenville. They wore dresses identical to that of the maid of honor.

The flower girl, Inglis Davis of Raleigh, was flower girl. She also wore a dress the same as the maid of honor's and bridesmaids' and carried a small brandy snifter with candle and pink ribbons.

The bridegrooms's father was best man. The ushers were David and Gary Harris of Greenville, Ed Davis of Raleigh, and Travis Pearce of Zebulon. Steven Harris of Greenville was ring bearer.

The bride attended East Carolina University and is employed at Kiddie College. The groom graduated from Greenville Christian Academy and is employed by G.B. Electric Company.

After a wedding trip to the beach, the couple will reside in Winterville.

MRS. TEDDY RANDALL HARRIS

Belva Plain Still Surprised By Success

By PHIL THOMAS
AP Books Editor

NEW YORK (AP) — Belva Plain says she stole the title of her new best-selling novel "Random Winds" — from herself.

"I had a different title, 'Farrell's Journey,' in mind," Mrs. Plain recalls, "but I wasn't all that crazy about it and my editors didn't like it at all.

"So they looked about in my first novel, 'Evergreen,' and picked out a subtitle from that book — 'Random Winds.' So you might say I stole my title from myself.

"I think it very apt. It reveals one of the points that I make in my book — that you can drive steadily toward a goal and then comes a wind, call it fate, chance, luck or whatever, and it whirls you away from your goal. We are all at its mercy."

"Evergreen," a surprise best seller that Mrs. Plain says sold over 200,000 hardbound copies and more than 3 million in paperback, was Mrs. Plain's choice of title. "It also relates to the book," she says with a smile, noting that "in the book I am telling about family tradition, about the family lasting through good times and bad — the way the evergreen tree does."

The 60-year-old Mrs. Plain, who lives in South Orange, N.J., with her husband, a retired doctor, "and two dogs," is still surprised by the success of her first book.

"Oh, I should say so," she says. "One nice thing is that my name is familiar now. I picked up a ticket at an airline office in Chicago recently and the clerks asked me if I was the writer. When I said I was, they told me they liked my first book and were going to buy my new one. That's very nice. I'm so pleased that people like my work."

Although her books are well-known now, Mrs. Plain came late to novel writing.

"I wrote and published short stories for years," she recalls, "but I stopped that about 12 years ago because I didn't like the popular short story any more. It involved writing too much to a pattern.

"But I kept on writing for myself. I have drawers full of things — character sketches, pieces of dialogue, descriptions of scenery. What I always really wanted to do was write a big novel. But I kept putting it off.

"I had time to write short things but not a novel. I had three children at home and a husband. When you write a novel, you have to have thinking time before you write because you really live with your characters. You can't have that kind of reflection when there are a lot of people bustling around your house."

About five years ago, Mrs. Plain decided the time had come to write her big book.

"I just did it," she says and laughs. "The actual writing took about two years but the assembling of the information for it had taken many, many years. Remember those drawers of writings I said I had, I used a lot of that material in 'Evergreen.'"

Book finished, Mrs. Plain took it to the literary agent who had handled her short stories in the past. "She was surprised to see me after the lapse of all those years, but she liked my novel, she put it out and it was immediately accepted."

Although the book was a success, Mrs. Plain reserved decision on whether "Random Winds" — "That also was two years in the writing, that seems to be my stride" — also would be a best seller. "I am a very prudent person. While I have the utmost faith in man, I had to see before I would believe it would be a best seller."

Home Bake That Wedding Cake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

What with the high cost of "catered" wedding cakes, it's time to revive a fine idea for baking one at home. I discovered this new way of presenting a bridal cake some years ago when I went to a wedding in the home of a friend and neighbor whose daughter was getting married, and I was asked to cut the cake. Frankly, I didn't look forward to serving the traditional, elaborate, tiered cake.

Happily, the wedding cake turned out to be a beautiful rectangular one with a nosegay of roses at one corner. Its decorative frosting marked off portions that could easily be sliced. When we originally decided to copycat it, we used a pound cake mix. We still use the mix, but this time the frosting is improved — it's a luscious butter cream instead of the time-worn Royal Icing.

HOME-BAKED WEDDING CAKE

3 packages (each 17 ounces) pound cake mix
2 cups milk
6 large eggs
1 cup cultured sour cream
Apricot Glaze, recipe follows
Base Coating, recipe follows
Butter Frosting, recipe follows

Into the large bowl of an electric mixer empty 2 packages of the cake mix; add 1 and 1-3rd cups of the milk; at low speed, scraping bowl, beat until blended; at medium-low speed beat 1 minute. Add 4 of the eggs; at low speed beat until blended; at medium-low speed beat 1 minute. Add 2-3rds cup of the sour cream; at medium-low speed beat 1 minute. Pour into a greased 17¾ by 11¾ by 2¼-inch roasting pan; set aside at room temperature. Using remaining ingredients and the same method, make a second batch of batter and pour over first batch in roasting pan. Bake in a preheated 325-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 1¼ hours. Place pan on wire rack to cool for 15 minutes. With a spatula loosen edges; turn out onto a wire rack; leave bottom side up; cool completely.

APRICOT GLAZE

2 jars (each 12 ounces) apricot preserves (about 2 cups)
½ cup brandy

In a heavy 1½-quart saucepan, stirring constantly over low heat, heat the preserves to bubbling; over moderate heat, stirring often in the beginning and almost constantly at the end of cooking, boil uncovered until reduced to 1½ cups — about 15 minutes. Cool 5 minutes; stir in brandy. Cool to room temperature — about 20 minutes. Stir glaze; leaving cake on wire rack, spread over top and sides. Allow to dry at room temperature before applying base coat — at least 6 hours.

BASE COAT

2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar
¼ cup warm water

Gradually whisk the water into the sugar, keeping smooth — mixture will be quite thin. Leaving glazed cake on wire rack, pour base coat over top, allowing it to flow down sides and spreading it with a spatula. Allow to dry at room temperature before frosting it — 1 to 2 hours.

BUTTER FROSTING

2 cups (1 pound) butter, chilled and cut into pats
1 tablespoon vanilla
3 pounds confectioners' sugar, chilled
1 cup (½ pint) heavy cream

In the large bowl of an electric mixer beat the butter and vanilla until creamy; beat in the sugar, alternately with the cream, until smooth and fluffy. Reserve 3 cups of frosting for decorating; cover tightly and refrigerate. Spread remainder of frosting over entire base coat of cake.

To decorate — Place strips of wax paper around edges of a serving tray. Slide cake onto tray. Mark off each of the four sides of the cake in 5 equal portions; mark off top, lengthwise and crosswise, to make 25 rectangles. Using a number 30 rose tube pipe rosettes along marks on top; pipe rosettes down sides, continuing the top surface piping; pipe rosettes down corners; remove wax paper from under cake; pipe rosettes around base edge.

SANDRA KAY WILLIAMS. . .is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm E. Heath of Farmville, who announce her engagement to Paul Thomas LoCastro, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor LoCastro of Wilson. An Aug. 16 wedding is being planned.

Common Sense Ideas Can Ease Funeral Burden

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I attended three funerals in the last month and have some tips for good friends who really mean it when they ask the family of the deceased, "Is there anything I can do?"

There are countless details to deal with, such as funeral arrangements, people to be notified, transportation and housing for incoming relatives and friends.

When bringing in food, please bring it in foil or disposable containers, otherwise containers must be washed, labeled, stored and returned. This takes time.

It would be helpful, too, if some casseroles could be brought in unbaked to be frozen and used a week or two later, when needed.

Friends shouldn't visit at mealtime, especially those with children who need to be fed.

Offer to sit with the house during the funeral. Due to publicity, families across the nation have returned from funerals to find that their homes have been burglarized. Most people are reluctant to ask a friend to miss the funeral, but believe me, this is one gesture of friendship that is greatly appreciated, so please offer.

I realize that these suggestions are only common sense, but you might find them worth printing.

IOWAN

DEAR IOWAN: Indeed they are. Common sense is very uncommon.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Why would a man insist on knowing where his wife is every minute of the day? Do you think he suspects that she might be fooling around?

B. IN BIRMINGHAM

DEAR B.: Not necessarily. Maybe he just wants to be sure where she is while he's fooling around.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Why do people expect musicians to entertain at weddings, benefits and other functions for free? They'll say, "You're lucky God gave you a talent. You should share it with the world!"

A good musical performance is 10 percent talent and 90 percent work.

Parents spend thousands of dollars on music lessions. They are not free!

Costumes, music, gasoline and baby sitters all cost money. Organizations will spend money for a meeting room, decorations, food and speakers. But they expect musicians to donate their time and talent.

Abby, please spread the word that the ability to sing or play an instrument may be a God-given talent, but it takes hard work and practice to make it entertainment.

PAYWORTHY

DEAR PAYWORTHY: Consider it spread.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I disagree on something. I feel that an 11-year-old child should be sent to another room, outside, or somewhere out of hearing range when his parents are having a serious disagreement about money matters, marital problems, etc.

My husband feels that it is perfectly all right for the child to hang around and listen, so he can "learn."

DIFFERING VIEWS

DEAR DIFFERING: An 11-year-old should not be an ear-witness to his parents' marital disagreements, money fights or adult discussions. But if he is pointedly sent away, he may suspect that something is seriously wrong between his parents, causing him to feel threatened, frightened and anxious.

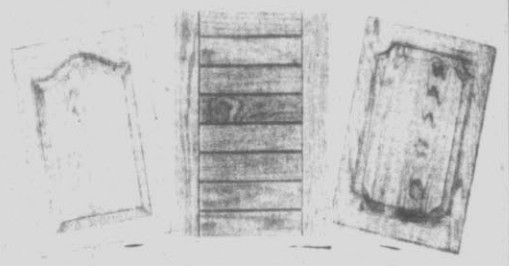

So I recommend privacy for such occasions — and subtlety in acquiring it.

Locomotive Engineer For The Santa Fe Is A Woman

By CHRIS CHRYSTAL

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Impatient motorists waiting at a railroad crossing while the Santa Fe chugs by do a double take when the engineer leans out the window, smiles and blows them a kiss.

Casey Jones wouldn't have believed it either, but the slim, dark-eyed gal with the reddish brown curls tucked under her striped cap is the engineer.

It was not a lifelong fascination for railroading that brought Anita Davis to the train yards. It was the need for a better paying job on the Santa Fe than clerking and typing in the office.

"I was tired of hand-to-mouth living, and the engines were kind of interesting," Anita said, sitting in a coffee shop near the railroad's crew headquarters.

She's 31 now, confident and, she believes, accepted by the other engineers and conductors.

But it did not come easy. It was 1975 when she mustered up all of her determination and applied for a job as an engineer.

"One guy showed me a report on all the train accidents that had happened. He told me 'others have tried and failed.'"

Another guy said "you don't want to get grease under your fingernails."

Three years later, she got the job.

Her problems were just beginning.

The training was tough, condensing the normal 18 months training period into only seven because of a shortage of engineers.

"These people were talking about pistons and turbo chargers and I was snowed," Anita recalls. She had to learn more than 1,000 rules of the rails and pass tests on them.

She laughs about it now, but when it was happening, it often made her cry.

The men did not accept her. They scrawled scornful, insulting graffiti on the bathroom walls.

The women in the office shunned her.

"I couldn't believe they could be so vicious," Anita said.

Some nights, overcome with fatigue, frustration, anger and disappointment, she went home and burst into tears, only to be comforted by her two young sons, of whom she is sole support.

Early in 1978 she got her first long distance run, a night trip from Los Angeles to San Diego, a ride that made her knees quake from the sheer nervous strain of it.

"Putting the power on the train and getting out of the yard was the hardest part," Anita said. Once she got the "high ball" — the railroad's version of the signal to "play ball" — it was downhill from there on.

Still, she confessed, when the train was safely back in Los Angeles, her knees shook so hard she could barely climb out of the engine.

Now she sticks mostly to switching — moving engines around — in the yard, preferring regular hours and accessibility to her nearby West Covina home while sons Suede, 13, and Benjie, 11, are growing up.

"They're my main crew."

Anita's job in a traditionally male-dominated, macho profession is interesting to men she dates, she said, until she has to break a social engagement because of her responsibilities.

"I don't have a lot of time," she said. "I'm not superwoman."

Moving engines around the tracks pays about $25,000 a year, but Anita can remember the lean times in Elwood, Ind., when she was 19 and pregnant, with a runaway husband, a toddler by the hand, $5 in her pocket and no professional training.

Inevitably, she turned to waitressing, but finally went home to mother in Boise, Idaho, and enrolled in a program in which she went to school part time while working as a teacher's aid.

"It was time to grow up," she said.

Anita married again, this time to an industrial engineer who brought her to California. But that marriage also broke up after three years, leaving her with a plant, some pots and pans, a 1966 Mustang, and of course, her boys.

She went job hunting and at her sister's suggestion, applied for a typing slot with the Santa Fe.

Now she wants to build a sideline career as a public speaker and recently had her first paid engagement.

The message: make your own definition of success, plan how to get there, and then do it.

That washroom graffiti was washed off the walls a long time ago.

"I think I earned it," she said.

Scientists Watch The Iceburgs Melt

Steve Neshyba and Ed Joshberger are more than halfway through their two-year study on icebergs' rate of melt and its effect. They say the upwelling, created by iceberg melting, may be important because it is one means by which Mother Nature helps enrich the ocean for microscopic plants that are the first link in the ocean food chain for marine animals.

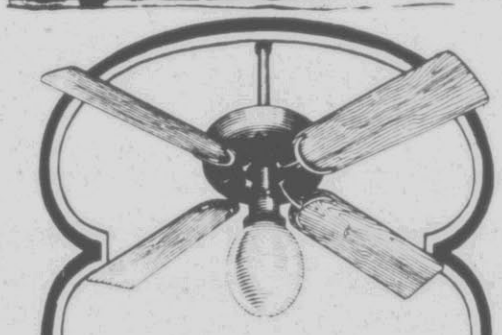

In Antartic waters, says Neshbya, tremendous populations of euphausia (krill — shrimplike crustaceans) are supported perhaps in part by the plant production associated with iceberg melting. Seen as a future food for humans, krill now are the diet for some whales and many smaller marine animals.

The scientists believe the findings will provide data on which to base calculations for melting rates of icebergs that might be towed from frozen to warmer climates and used as a source of drinking and-or irrigation water.

"From a distance, icebergs look peaceful, serene, beautiful," Neshyba said. "Up close, they are awesome and noisy. As you approach one, you can hear ice cracking along with groaning and squealing sounds. It's very unnerving.

"During my work in the Weddell Sea at Antarctica I took a number of trips by helicopter away from the ice breaker vessel. On one of those trips we actually tried to land on an iceberg but the pilot finally said no... Who's going to help you if you get stranded on an iceberg?"

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — LEAN COUGAR ELUDED THE COURAGEOUS HUNTERS.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: A equals D

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

See Decline In Contributions

NEW YORK (AP) — Recent trends in contributions to Jewish charitable causes indicate they're likely to decline in years ahead, says the 1980 American Jewish Yearbook.

An article in it by Queens College Professor Steven Martin Cohen, analyzing recent figures, says the decline would have serious consequences for Jewish health and welfare agencies, and for social services in Israel.

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, JULY 20, 1980

YOUR DAILY Horoscope from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: A very good morning to consider just what you can do to be more helpful to your close companions and to put such a plan in effect without delay. Make plans for the future.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) You need to apply yourself more if you wish to gain your most cherished aims. Be more understanding of loved one.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Try to please those who have done you favors in the past. Don't waste time with those who have an eye on your assets.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Handle routine chores early in the day so you'll have time for social activities later. Make this a worthwhile day.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Try to be of help to family members before seeking personal pleasures. Be active and you are happy.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Study new interests that can give you greater abundance in the future. Take a little time for meditation. Be calm.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You have to be more practical now to gain your most cherished aims. Save time to engage in favorite hobby.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Handle little tasks around the house early in the day and then join congenials for recreation. Be clever with others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Study your environment and do something to improve it. The afternoon and evening is fine for much sociability.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Know what your true aims are and then go after them in a positive manner. Show thoughtfulness to others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Do whatever will add prestige to present standing in your neighborhood. Show increased devotion to family members.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Study some new philosophy of life and put it to use for your betterment in life. Avoid one who brags too much.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Use your hunches as well as your good judgment to solve problems today. Show more consideration for the one you love.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY . . . he or she will be one who can easily comprehend what others are thinking and upon reaching maturity will become a most determined person with a strong will. Be sure to give ethical and religious training early in life.

Claim Wounds By 'Powerful'

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — "Our world is deeply wounded by the oppressions inflicted by the powerful upon the powerless," says the World Conference on World Mission and Evangelism.

In such a situation, the Christian message heartens the poor to "affirm their human dignity, liberation and hope," but to oppressors, speaks "judgment, challenge and a call to repentence," the statement says.

It was unanimously approved by about 500 delegates from 85 countries at the recent conference, sponsored by the World Council of Churches.

Decor Often Sets Mood

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — At some restaurants people tend to linger, while at others they rush through the meal and leave soon afterward. It may be because of the time, the company, the service or the food. More likely they are reacting to a mood created by color and light, says a professor of art and synesthetic education at Syracuse University.

O. Charles Giordano says when a restaurant wants its customers to linger, it creates a low-key mood with incandescent yellow-orange light, natural wood furnishings and red carpeting. Conversely, a restaurant desiring high turnover uses cool or fluorescent lighting.

"The manipulation of color and light is carefully paced to our physiology," he says. "Color affects us below the level of active consciousness. It affects us physiologically, psychologically, emotionally and aesthetically."

The spectrum is divided into cool colors (centripetal) and warm ones (centrifugal). Cool colors — blue, blue-green and ultramarine — have a tranquilizing effect and promote introspection, he says. Warm colors — red, yellow and orange — make the senses more acute, and increase the levels of energy and interaction among people. Department stores, supermarkets, classrooms and hospitals rely on the interplay between color and light to produce desired moods.

"Light is not exclusively a retinal phenomenon," Giordano says. "Color affects all our senses. People who are blindfolded react in predictable ways to the manipulation of color and light."

He believes the study of color and light should not be restricted to art students and young children, as often happens. His course in color and light at Syracuse University, although offered through the College of Visual and Performing Arts, attracts students from many different fields of study.

Soaring Temperatures Result In Shorter Tempers

By S.J. GUFFEY
Associated Press Writer

DENVER (AP) — Soaring temperatures mean shorter tempers and increasing crime — but only up to a point, says a psychologist.

"If it's 100 degrees, you're probably going to have fewer street crimes — the muggers are gasping for breath, too," Robert Baron said in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C., on Wednesday, when the mercury passed the century mark.

Baron, a Purdue University professor on leave to serve as program director for social and developmental psychology at the National Science Foundation in Washington, built his reputation on almost 10 years of laboratory and field studies of the "long hot summer syndrome."

"Up to a point, people get more likely to respond aggressively," Baron said. "But that effect is lost about the mid-80s. By that point, people get lethargic.

"They feel so miserable that rather than getting up and doing anything, they prefer to concentrate on things like keeping cool."

Some things, though, can skew Baron's predictions.

He says that if crime rates rise during a heat wave like the one now suffocating America's mid-section, the cause is more likely the well-known curse of the pioneers — cabin fever.

"People are afraid to go outside," he said. "They stay inside to be next to the air conditioners and fans, and eventually the feeling of being trapped can start getting to them."

That situation is occurring in Dallas. Carole Bowdry, director of the child abuse program in the Dallas County Child Welfare Department, says adults feel cooped up because the heat keeps both them and their summer-vacationing children inside.

"In the last two to three weeks, my case load has been up substantially," said Ms. Bowdry. "Not only have I been getting new people, but some people that came to us for child abuse counseling in the past are coming back.

"If you're hot, you're going to get angry faster. That applies to parents and especially to children who are going to get fussy. If the parents are the type who are going to be abusive, this is the time when it will show up.

"Historically" she added, "our worst cases of child abuse have happened in extremely inclement weather of one type or another."

Paul Bell, an associate psychology professor at Colorado State University who studied under Baron, said a person's behavior is also influenced by factors closely related to temperature.

"As beer consumption increases, there's an increase in aggression," Bell said. "As a heat wave drags on and people adapt, as their bodies cope with the heat more effectively, well, then the 85-degree limit means less and less."

In Kansas, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri and other states where the mercury has been above 100 for weeks, law enforcement officials offer varying opinions about the heat's effects.

A police spokesman at Kansas City's Heat Wave Command Post said crime levels have been stable since the onset of the hot weather, and they can find no crimes which are directly attributable to the three-week heat wave.

In St. Louis, police say normal disturbances often escalate to murder during hot summer months, but this year is different.

"I've noticed a de-escalation of violence," said police Capt. Robert Richters. "It's just too hot to fight. When it's this hot, people just say the hell with it."

"I think people just get too pooped to worry about fighting and carrying on," said Capt. James McGauley.

In Dallas, despite Ms. Bowdry's remarks and the fact that all crimes — from murder to robbery to disturbances — were up 26 percent last month compared to June 1979, police spokesman Bob Shaw dismissed heat as a factor.

"I don't really think the heat has contributed significantly to the increase in crime," Shaw said. "It's been on the rise here for some time."

But Blytheville, Ark., Police Chief R.J. Cox said he's noticed a difference. Temperatures there have been above 100 for 17 straight days, and Cox said, "There doesn't seem to be much tolerance with our fellow human beings."

Baron said he began his study of heat's effect on human aggression "because heat has always driven me up the wall. In the late '60s and early '70s, when there were major riots, people kept talking about how much effect heat had, but I found there were no studies."

He was surprised, he said, when his research — including checks of National Weather Service records — showed no significant correlation between heat and erratic behavior, except when the temperature isme statistics. Thefts of air conditioners — five or six crime statistics. Thefts of air conditioners — five or six a dae statistics. Thefts of air conditioners — five or six a day — are at an all-time high.

Eligible To Get Plates

The North Carolina General Assembly in their June session amended the statute providing distinctive auto license plates for wartime ex-prisoners of war, to provide that these plates will be issued free of charge. The provision was effective June 25, 1980.

In order to qualify it will be necessary for the ex-POW to prove his ex-prisoner of war status. Due to the loss of some Army and Air Force records in a fire at the GSA Records Center in St. Louis in 1973, it may take some time to secure proof of POW status, and action is advised to be taken to secure proof of POW status now in order to establish entitlement before the date to purchase 1981 license tags.

Other veterans qualifying for free N.C. plates are those who are 100 percent disabled because of service-connected disabilities, or those who have lost an arm, leg, or have severe impairment of vision due to wartime service-connected disabilities.

In all cases the veteran must furnish proof of financial responsibility, valid N.C. operators license (if he is to operate vehicle) and show that the vehicle is properly equippoed to compensate for his disability.

Veterans who feel they are entitled to receive one of these license plates may contact the District Office of the N.C. Division of Veterans Affairs, in the Tipton Annex, 232 Greenville Blvd.

A 'Short-Haul' Trend Is Seen

NEW YORK (UPI) — The presidents of two airlines predict an increase in air travel for "short hauls" by people who used to take the family car.

Glenn L. Ryland, president of Frontier Airlines, and Edwin I. Colodny, president of US Air, said at a Wings Club meeting that travel under 1,000 miles will be the fast-growing market for regional airlines in the 1980s. The club, under president John E. Emery Jr. of Emery Air Freight, comprises 1,400 members from throughout the airline industry.

"The air travel market is about to grow, " Colodny said. "The medium-sized carriers have a built-in advantage to serve more markets and more cities."

De Lorean Introducing His New Wheels This Fall

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — He was born the son of an auto worker on Detroit's near East Side. At the age of 8, he was taking cars apart and putting them back together again. Today, listening through a dull meeting, he is liable to doodle himself a new transmission.

Yet, looking at John Zachary De Lorean, casually urbane at 55, one wonders if his nails were ever black with automobile grease.

It's a far cry from General Motors and its austere executive offices on the 14th floor of its own building in Detroit, where DeLorean used to maneuver.

Now, of course, he's said goodbye to Detroit, and his mind is geared to a longtime dream, his own car, in production by August, as yet unnamed, unpriced, but intended to compete with Porsche and BMW, intended to last, with or without guarantee, for 25 years. Stainless steel, riding on oversized tires that should last 60,000 miles, and maybe 40 percent more fuel efficient than some similar cars.

"This is the car I've always wanted to build," he says. "It's very conservative of resources. It takes one-and-a-third fewer barrels of oil to fabricate than a car made by conventional techniques. More importantly, it's designed of materials whose life is virtually eternal."

Now, a lot of people have tried to build cars, but they've always gone into mass production competition with Detroit. Not John De Lorean. He'll be doing well, he says, if they can sell 30,000 of his DMC-12s a year worldwide.

The price? One journal mentioned $15,000. John De Lorean says probably less than $25,000. He's sunk $200 million into the DMC-12 to date.

"We are incorporating an awful lot of features. Air conditioning is standard, aluminum wheels are standard, everything you can think of in a car. We're including a 50-watt stereo which is more powerful than the one in my house."

At 6-foot-3 and a lean 180, De Lorean exudes a rugged elegance. General Motors, with its gray-flannel executive image, never could get quite used to his European-cut clothes nor his brisk life style, which included getting photographed with movie stars or marrying models. His second wife was fashion model Kelly Harmon.

While both De Lorean and his present wife, Cristina, are in the public eye, they keep their marriage and their children sheltered. They have a son, Zachary, and a daughter, Kathryn, named after De Lorean's parents.

De Lorean was once also married to General Motors. He turned the Pontiac division around with a number of engineering changes, from the wide track look to the radio antenna in the windshield. And he reorganized the Chevrolet division, put it on a computer footing condensed the product line, boosted dealer profits more than 300 percent and made Chevrolet the first automaker to sell more than three million cars and trucks in a single model year.

GM beckoned him to the inner sanctum, as vice president and group executive for North American cars and trucks.

But the closer he got to the top, the less enthusiastic De Lorean became. He found many management decisions capricious, and his long battle is documented in J. Patrick Wright's book, "On A Clear Day You Can See General Motors," which is written in De Lorean's voice from long tape-recorded sessions.

He quit GM and served as president of the National Alliance of Businessmen, trying to generate jobs for the minorities and disadvantaged. He formed his own consulting firm, and finally followed his dream, establishing the De Lorean Motor Company in 1975, headquartered on a few floors of a Park Avenue office building.

He's building his car in Northern Ireland, both because there is a pool of unusually skilled people at bargain wages, and because he hopes that the business might improve the economics of the area and so reduce the tension there. He is considering building a European-designed bus in Miami, both to offer an alternative to General Motors and Grumman which make the only U.S. buses now, and to bring employment to that city which recently endured racially and economically triggered violence. Besides, he says, his buses would be built lower to the ground, have wider doors, be easier for old people and children, and save gas.

The DMC-12 carries his personal signature. He's having fun with it. It takes him back to his first real engineering job at Packard where one man was responsible for an idea from its inception through the manufacturing process.

"Unfortunately, today major organizations tend to want to compress you into a mold, so that you become one of the standard these-or-those," he says.

"No great car was ever done by a group. Almost all the great cars in the world were individual efforts. The Bugatti was a man. Ferrari is a man. The car is an accurate expression of what he thinks it should be.

"In a big company you don't even have a guy who is responsible for the whole engine. He may have the block. Another may have the carburetor. Another the starter. It gets hard to get very proud about the whole thing when you only have a little part of it."

De Lorean has the whole thing with the DMC-12. He's been "fooling around with the concept for a long time."

His people are assembling a nationwide network of 350 dealers, people already in business selling Fords, Mercurys, Datsuns, Chevrolets, Oldsmobiles, Cadillacs and others.

"Somebody like Porsche sells 40 percent of their cars in California, and another 20 percent in Texas," De Lorean explains. "I think our pattern will be similar. Also, California is the trend-setter for automobiles... The small cars got started out there, and today the scary thing is that over 50 percent of non-fleet sales there are foreign cars. If California trends are a sign, then the domestic industry has a lot more trouble coming than they think."

The big automakers, he thinks, will survive current troubles.

"Like any established industry, it's easier to keep doing what you are doing than to stand back and ask what the public really wants. Now they've been dragged kicking and screaming into the small car era, more by the government's fuel economy standards than by anything else, and thank God for that."

If his car is successful, "it will encourage a lot of other people who think they have something to offer," he says. "That's really what made America. I think we're going to be a demonstration that even at this level free enterprise maybe stil does work."

After the car is established on the market, De Lorean wants to build a small sedan in the same fashion, using many of the same parts.

With a rear-mounted V6 engine and gullwing doors, the DMC-12 is described by Autoweek Magazine as resembling a Lotus Esprit with some performance characteristics of a Porsche 911 and a Renault Alpine, a ride similar to the Mercedes-Benz 450-SL and the powertrain punch of BMW 633 CSI. It can go from zero to 60 miles an hour in less than eight seconds, the magazine says, but the measure may be not its speed on the road but its performance in the marketplace.

At any rate, in August, for sale in the fall, John De Lorean introduces his dream, wheelbase 96 inches, 168 inches long, 46 inches high, and designed to outlast some of the people who'll buy it.

Bowman Also Expert Hunter

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — With his curly hair, his beard and his piercing gaze, Mesa's Todd Kluth could be an Elizabethan bowman.

Elizabethan he's not, of course, but bowman he is — and has been since he entered his teens.

"My first big animal I shot with a bow was an Arizona whitetail buck in the remote wilderness area," the 28-year-old archer recalls. "I'll never forget that. It was one of the most exciting moments I've ever had in my entire hunting career."

That career, which began while he was still a youth in Illinois, has taken him through much of New Mexico, Utah and Catalina Island as well as Arizona.

Being "basically right-handed," he started with a right-handed bow. "When I got familiar with the technicalities of hunting, though, I learned that I should be shooting left-handed," he says. "So I had to stop and start all over again.

"I guess people figure since I have actually hunted just about every animal you can in Arizona, I'm an expert," he adds. "I haven't taken every one of them, though. And none of the animals I've shot has ever made the record books."

Kluth is also accustomed to shooting down complaints from those who think his hobby is inhumane and barbaric.

Managing a hunting store in Phoenix for about five years, he says, "I came in contact with a lot of people who didn't like the idea of bow hunting or hunting at all.

"But I just started talking to them about hunting, and now I see an increasing number of people starting," he says.

"You see most of them have the wrong information about the sport. They don't realize what's involved with the sport itself.

"I try to explain to them that it takes a lot of time and a lot of research, and you have to observe hundreds and hundreds of animals and watch where they go before you can ever get one," he explains. "The more you learn, the more you respect animals."

Some who become interested in bow hunting are archery buffs reversing Kluth's route. He got into archery because of his interest in bow hunting and still shoots in competition several times a year.

Fitness Aided By Backpacks

CHICAGO (UPI) — If jogging is not your exercise bag, try walking daily with a light backpack load.

Dr. Yehuda Schoenfeld of Tel Aviv University Medical School in Israel says research has shown you can improve physical fitness substantially in three weeks with the backpack method. No backpack? Substitute a briefcase or a shopping bag, the doctor suggests in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

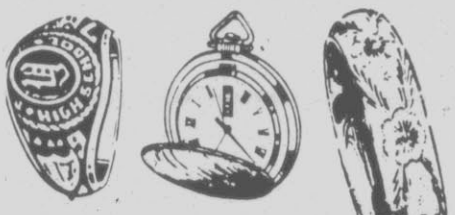

Schoenfeld says a fairly high degree of physical conditioning can be achieved by increasing your walking speed, distance and pack load.

Put Priority On Energy-Saving

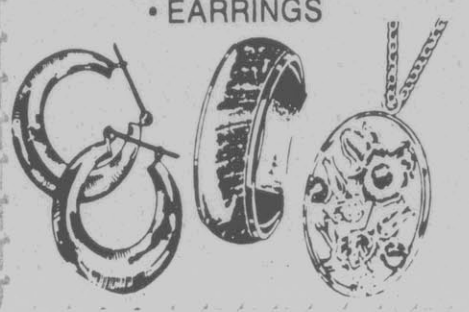

NEW YORK (UPI) — Energy saving is a top priority with Americans who are expected to spend $40 billion this year to expand, remodel or renew their homes. This forecast from a leading shelter magazine.

In increasing numbers they are rebuilding older houses, customizing co-ops and condominiums, renovating apartments, adding second stories to single story houses, building on family rooms and remodeling kitchens and bathrooms.

A Couple Fulfills Dream Of A World Journey

RECALLING THEIR GLOBAL TRAVELS . . . Rev. and Mrs. Howatt Mallinson point out to their son David some of the routes they covered on their recently completed dream trip — around the world by plane, train, boat and on foot with back packs. The Hampton, Virginia couple found beauty, friendship and the challenge of getting to see places and people at their own pace in a globe-encircling trip that lasted from September to May.

Text And Photograph By Jerry Raynor

For long years while living and working in Hampton, Va., Howatt and Minnie Mallinson had dreamed of taking a long, leisurely around-the-world trip.

Last September, when their second daughter, Mary, got married and their youngest child, David, came to Greenville to attend East Carolina University, the couple decided the time had come to make a temporary break from their professions and to embark on their longed-for voyage.

So, as their daughter set out on her own as a young married, Rev. and Mrs. Mallinson took steps to embark on their seeing people and places tour. He resigned his pastorate as minister of Wythe Presbyterian Church in Hampton, and Mrs. Mallinson, a nurse, resigned her position at Mary Immaculate Hospital, also in Hampton.

At last, all was in readiness for New York City born 'Mal' Mallinson and China born Minnie Sanders (Sandy) Mallinson to test their determination and endurance of the rigors of the type of tour they planned — a back-pack, walking one interspersed with necessary train and air travel for covering long distances.

"I plan to return to the ministry," Mallinson remarked, "but first I wanted to get in this time of vacation, travel and study of other people. I can say it was a mind expanding experience." He added that his three years service in the Navy during World War II "didn't involve much traveling. I was stationed on the eastern seaboard, spent all my time stateside."

For Mrs. Mallinson, the trip was the first extended sojourn since her youth. "My parents were Presbyterian missionaries in China," she explained. "I was born in the city of Suchow-fu and lived there until I was 14. I can still speak Chinese, Mandarin Chinese to a certain extent, and I've discovered I understand a lot more than I thought I had remembered."

Getting To Know Each Other

"In one way," Mallinson smiled, "this trip was a time for us to get to know each other better. The trip is something we'd talked about for 33 years, even before we were married. Before becoming a nurse, Sandy taught school and, with my ministry, time passed by. We've both always been interested in the ministry as it applies to foreign missions, and this was a chance to see about that at first hand."

Their trip began September 1, 1979. "We flew out of New York on September 2 on a tourist flight," Mallinson said. "Our entire trip was carried out with independent planning, no set itineraries or tour group plans, just going and planning as we traveled."

Europe Was First Leg

"England was our first country," Mrs. Mallinson explained. "The first thing we did was to purchase the Eurail tickets, good for three months of unlimited traveling anywhere in Europe. We certainly made good use of them too."

Mallinson noted "it was a little chilly, but we managed to camp out with our tents." The English tour included a swing up into Scotland. Among sites they visited were Stonehenge, the lakes district of Scotland, Edinburgh and York.

"It was exciting being in London, and we explored the city by doing lots of walking" Mrs. Mallinson remarked. "We attended an evensong at Westminster Abbey, and took in places made famous in Sherlock Holmes and Agatha Christie."

"We also fed the pigeons at Trafalgar Square," Mallinson said, and "the view from our hotel window of chimneys in the rooflines of London is even now right out of the time of Charles Dickens."

The Channel By Hovercraft

They crossed the English Channel from Dover by hovercraft, heading for the Scandanavian countries. Their coverage of Norway and Sweden was relatively brief, with sightseeing in the famed fjord country of Norway around Bergen and Trondheim, and in the Norwegian and Swedish capitals of Oslo and Stockholm. "From Stockholm," Mallinson said, "we took a ferry for a quick side trip to Helsinki. Finnish is not a Nordic language, it's a bit difficult to understand."

The Mallinsons admitted that early training in languages helped them immensely during their trip. In addition to childhood knowledge of Chinese, Mrs. Mallinson has studied Spanish and French. In seminary training, Mallinson studied German, Greek, Hebrew and Latin.

Next on the itinerary was Amsterdam. "It seems we hit it just right," Mallinson commented. "On our visit to Texel Island, a resort area north of Amsterdam, in early October, we were told the summer season had just ended, that the weekend before 40,000 people jammed the beaches. We had it to ourselves, and loved it, though we had a little difficulty in finding bed and board." Before taking a steamer down the Rhine River into Germany, they visited Dutch museums, attended concerts and took rides on the canals that lace the flat country.

Festive River Trip

"The four days on the Rhine River steam down to Frankfurt was a festive affair," Mrs. Mallinson said. "At one time a group of Vietnamese children with new clothes, boat people, we discovered, and a lot of Japanese tourists with cameras made it seem like being in the Orient. We encountered German school children who tried their English out on us. One man entertained everybody with his accordian playing. This is where we also met a number of Americans and Australians, mostly young people, who were back packers."

From West Germany the Mallinsons headed into the mountain country of Switzerland. "We both love mountains," Mallinson explained, "so we spent nearly two weeks in Switzerland. At Interlaken we camped out for two days, in the rain."

From the town of Zermatt they hiked to the base of the Matterhorn. "It was a fine hike with a really beautiful view," Mallinson said. "The peak, covered with snow, was clearly visible. For me, this hike was the high point of our trip." Another of their side trips was a visit to Vienna, Austria.

They took time to visit Zurich and Geneva including Reformation Square with its statues of famed reformation leaders and the headquarters of the World Council of Churches.

"To Spain by train was the next leg of the trip," Mallinson said. "It was by Eurorail again, on down to Grenada in southern Spain." "The architecture there is exquisite," Mrs. Mallinson said, "and the colors of the barren hills strikingly different from the greens of northern Europe."

The two camped out along the beaches and hills, which they had much to themselves because of the time of year. "This is where we met a couple of young American back packers, from Orlando, Florida and San Francisco," Mrs. Mallinson remarked. "Later, we kept running into these two couples."

Three things in particular impressed Mallinson about Spain — "the way they are growing vegetables under plastic, the country's reforestation program, and the trains which gallop like horses."

The First Of Cousins

In Madrid, Mrs. Mallinson had a chance to see the first of several cousins living in scattered parts of the world — one who works in the Embassy in Madrid. After visiting and sightseeing in Madrid and taking in the ancient Roman aqueducts of Segovia, they dashed into Portugal for a day in Lisbon.

Then, it was north again, into Paris. "Rain was falling, and it struck me how much Paris resembles Washington," Mallinson said. "We arrived just before Armistice Day, so got to see the celebration. The day we spent in the Louvre was devoted mostly to the archaeological section to help prepare us for our travels into Greece, Egypt and the Middle East."

Italy was next — and again it was by train — to Milan, before going into Venice. "Of all the places we visited, I think Venice is my favorite," Mrs. Mallinson decided. "It's so incredibly beautiful." In Florence, Mallinson said he was "impressed and moved by the marvelous energy shown in Michelangelo's unfinished statues where the figures seem to struggle to emerge from the stone." In Rome they hiked throughout the city, visiting the Vatican and Mrs. Mallinson added, "getting caught up in a parade of protestors who seemed intent only in having fun with their bands and banners."

At Brindisi, it was farewell to Italy. They had to wait in a pouring rain and were delayed overnight before being able to board the ferry to Greece. "This was one of the few times we encountered any difficulty as well as lots of paperwork," Mallinson said. The overnight ferry ride took them to the island of Corfu, gateway to Greece. The trip to Athens was another of many train rides.

Days In Ancient Greece

The latter days of November 1979 had arrived by time they began their Greek tour — "which lasted nearly four weeks," Mrs. Mallinson said. "We loved the cheeses and fruits, ate our fill of them. Greece is a land of such strong contrasts, the ever present old along with the new. There are haunting old olive trees, villages mostly filled with women and children because many of the men have gone to other countries to seek work. I remember siesta times, when streets were empty of people."

Mallinson remarked "Greece is delightful for hiking, with mountainsides and villages. In remote areas, children stared at this pair of older strangers with packs on their backs."

Destination Egypt — and for the first time since the initial flight, travel by plane from Athens to Cairo. "Egypt took 12 days of our time," Mrs. Mallinson said, "mostly in Cairo and Luxor."

Their travel-on-their-own paid off handsomely again. "We'd hiked eight or nine miles to the Valley of the Kings," Mallinson related, "to be there for a light show on the pyramids in the evening. When we arrived day tourists were leaving. We had a spectacular sunset over the desert and pyramids to ourselves. It was a profound sensation to be there, just the two of us with this ancient splendor."

Both agreed they enjoyed the sailboats on the Nile and the engaging friendliness of the Egyptians. "Many stopped and told us 'Jimmy Carter OK, U.S.A. OK.' Our visit coincided shortly after the taking of American hostages in Iran and the attack on Mecca."

Christmas In Israel

The Israeli segment of the around-the-world tour coincided with Christmas. Their experiences left them with mixed emotions. "Christmas Eve in Bethlehem, our foot tour of Jerusalem were memorable experiences, as were the nights we spent in Tel Aviv and a visit with an Israeli family in Haiffa whom we'd met in Helsinki," Mrs. Mallinson said.

"But the 12 mile hike we took along the coast of the Sea of Galilee was through a desolate stretch without shade, peopled only by armed soldiers, mines and barbed wire. Nobody lives there, the villages are deserted. This was the only time in all our travels that we felt uneasy."

Following New Year's Eve spent in Tel Aviv, the Mallinsons were ready to head farther east, to India. Before departing, they put in calls to their children in the states. "Because of government differences which we never quite fathomed," Mallinson explained, "we had to fly from Tel Aviv back to Greece to get a Swiss Air flight into India."

Long Stay

Their stay in India was by far the longest of any country on the trip. Before they left, nearly three months had passed. "India, however included side trips to Nepal and Bangladesh," Mrs. Mallinson commented. "We had a fine visit with another cousin and her husband, both medical missionaries at Bidar in south central India."

The great teeming cities of India, including Calcutta and Dehli were included in their sightseeing "and of course we saw and marveled at the Taj Mahal. Indians love this place and the romance involved in its creation," Mrs. Mallinson observed.

"Perhaps the most exciting event of our trip was attending the first public evangelistic services ever allowed in the mountain kingdom of Nepal," Mallinson said. "It took place during our stay in India and we flew into Katmandu to be there. It was a historic occasion, a gathering of 34 different Christian denominations from just about everywhere." The event was sponsored by the United Missions of Nepal."

Mallinson said he is encouraged "by the evidence in India that the work of the church is strong. In many places the work of missions, schools and hospitals is making splendid progress, and much of this is being done without the presence of foreign missionaries."

After the coolness of Europe in the autumn and the relative mildness of Greece, Egypt and Israel, the Mallinsons found the Indian climate during January, February and March "very hot."

During their Indian visit, Mallinson was invited several times to speak to church groups there.

To Down Under

When March 1980 ended, the back packing Virginia couple headed south once more — this time to the down under continent-country of Australia, with a brief stopover in the exotic island kingdom of Sri Lanka (better known to earlier generations as Ceylon).

"We had a month in Australia," Mallinson said. "Much of our sightseeing there was by bus. We are both interested in the outback country and all the things people usually want to see in Australia, the aborigines, kangaroos, cowboys, koala bears and the vast, dry stretches of the country which we witnessed on a trip to Alice Springs."

Taiwan, their next stop, was the scene of "a visit with another cousin, my second cousin," Mrs. Mallison said. "He is a missionary in a Christian college. We also visited the church my parents established in the early 1900's. It was such a warm feeling, having this opportunity to visit this site, to know it's still active. The pastor there now is an American-Chinese."

Doctor Honored

On to another island group — Japan. "And" Mallison smiled, "another visit with a cousin. He's the chaplain at Yodagawa Christian Hospital in Osaka, the only American on the staff." Mallinson related that the founder of the hospital, Dr. Frank Brown, had been awarded the Order of the Emperor. He's the first foreigner ever to receive the order, and only the third person in 25 years to have this honor bestowed on him. He's now retired, living in Atlanta."

They enjoyed their visits in Kyoto and Kobe. Mrs. Mallinson said "we were quite surprised to see the long lines at McDonald's hamburger shops, and everywhere there were Snoopies, Muppets, and Coca-Cola."

In keeping with their seeming propensity for being in places at exciting times, they came into Korea "at the height of the time riots were going on. At one place we were visiting, we were strongly advised not to go back to Seoul. With that, we made a decision to call our tour completed. On Memorial Day we flew into Hawaii and suddenly realized we were back in the states," Mrs. Mallinson commented.

In San Francisco, back on the American mainland after nine months of travel by train, foot, ferry, and air, they made a stop over to see friends and a couple of family members living there.

"It was in every way a trip that fulfilled our expectations," Mrs. Mallinson remarked. "We got to know each other quite well," she laughed, "and got to know so people from many different places."

"What is apparent and gratifying," Mallinson said, "is that God is at work in the world today. Everywhere we went we found kindness and friendliness, and people wanting to get to know other people. It's a beautiful experience."

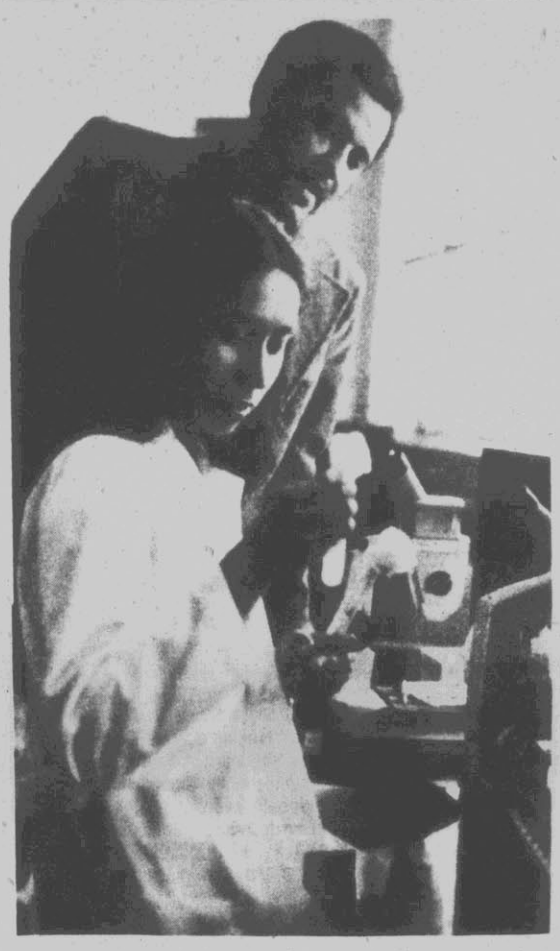

Looking Ahead

For the time being, the Mallinsons are taking a respite following years of work and the excitement of seeing much of the world. "I'll be busy for a time showing some of the hundreds of color slides we took," Mallinson said.

Their other children are Edward, who lives in Orlando, Florida, Stephen, living in Decatur, Georgia, and Mary, the youngest daughter, now in Scottsboro, Alabama.

Everything Comes Early To Young Sophomore At NCSU

Elizabeth City State University News Bureau

ELIZABETH CITY — Everything "comes early" to Wendy Deonanan, 17-year-old first semester sophomore at Elizabeth City State University. Or so it seems by the record. Wendy began school a year early at age five, the legal age for residents of the West Indies.

When she moved to Elizabeth City ten years ago with her parents, Drs. Carlton and Venus Deonanan, both professors in the Department of Modern Languages at ECSU, she was found to be a year ahead of her grade.

Afer taking advanced courses in chemistry, physics and biology at Northeastern High School, she completed all required credits mid-year and became enrolled in the Early Admission Program at ECSU.

"I chose ECSU because of its good program for premed majors," Wendy said. "I knew if you are seriously interested in what you want to do, the professors are willing to help you do it." They did.

While carrying a full load of courses in the required General Studies program, she was enrolled in the Research Improvement and Development (RIAD) program by Dr. Curtis Turnage, Chairman of the Biology Department. Last summer she was involved eight hours daily in a research project with upper level students, which later was reported by the students at a scientific seminar in Atlanta, Ga. Wendy also became an HCAAP Scholar, enrolling in the Health Careers Academic Achievement Program under Dr. Bobby J. Lewis of the Biology Department. "This has really helped me improve my reading rate and comprehension," Wendy said. "I've learned different techniques which have proved very, very helpful." This was happening during Wendy's freshman year at ECSU — at age 16.

This summer — at 17 — she is enrolled in a special program at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Selected from Wide Field

Wendy was selected as a participant in the 1980 Summer Program at the ECU School of Medicine from a wide field of upper level students heading for medical or health related careers.

For eight weeks she is learning skills in scientific methodology from preclinical and clinical faculty, while meeting and talking with medical faculty who are distinguished leaders in academics, research and clinical areas.

From advanced medical students she is learning strategies for survival in highly competitive academic environments.

She is experiencing her first practical exposure to the medical environment while utilizing facilities at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the ECU School of Medicine.

The summer pre-med program provides free tuition and a stipend of $600 for expenses for the eight-week period.

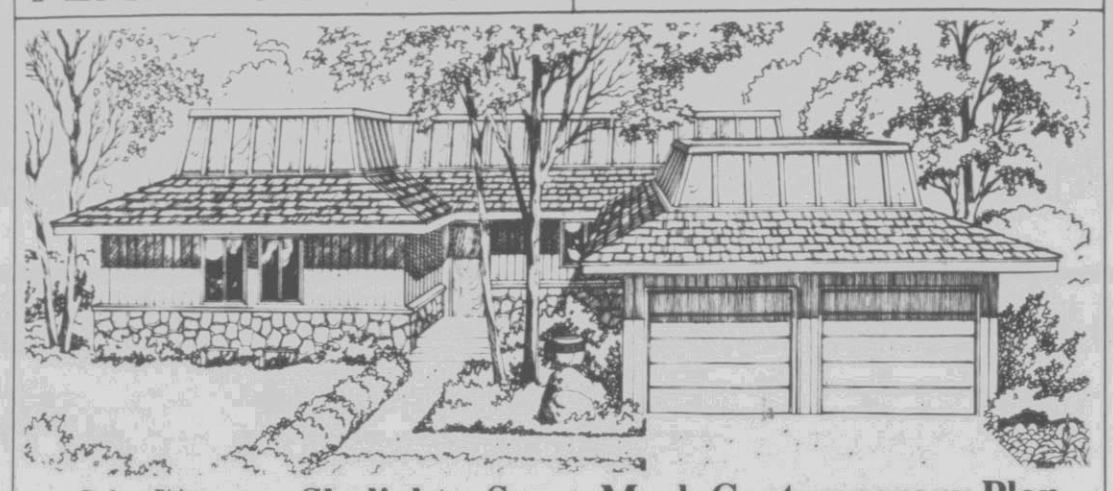

She returns to classes at ECSU August 20th with a lot to share with fellow students in the RIAD and HCAAP programs. In the meantime, give her one day to be with her family and she will probably be found the next day in the Biology lab peering through a microscope to determine "Variations of Cytochemistry and Population Dynamics of a Free-Living Protozoan," a current research project.

From her earliest years Wendy has been interested in science and becoming a medical doctor.

PLAN YOUR HOME — The Goldboro

Skylights, Space Mark Contemporary Plan

By Jerry Bishop

Natural light from skylights brightens the roomy living areas of the Goldboro, a three bedroom contemporary. Besides being a privacy-protecting and sunlight-snaring device, the skylights add a futuristic touch to the exterior and make for a striking and attractive plan.

Formal and informal living areas are carefully defined and separated in a way that allows the home to grow with the family. If desired, the living and dining rooms, set to the rear and out of the mainstream of traffic, can be reserved for entertaining and parents' use, while the family room can serve teenage or young children.

Glass, stone and vertical siding layer the exterior, and the small entry porch leads to the foyer. Placement of the kitchen and family room to the right of the foyer helps discourage traffic from more formal areas. The large kitchen offers a remarkable amount of counter space and a broom closet, while the connecting family room shows sliding glass doors to the patio.

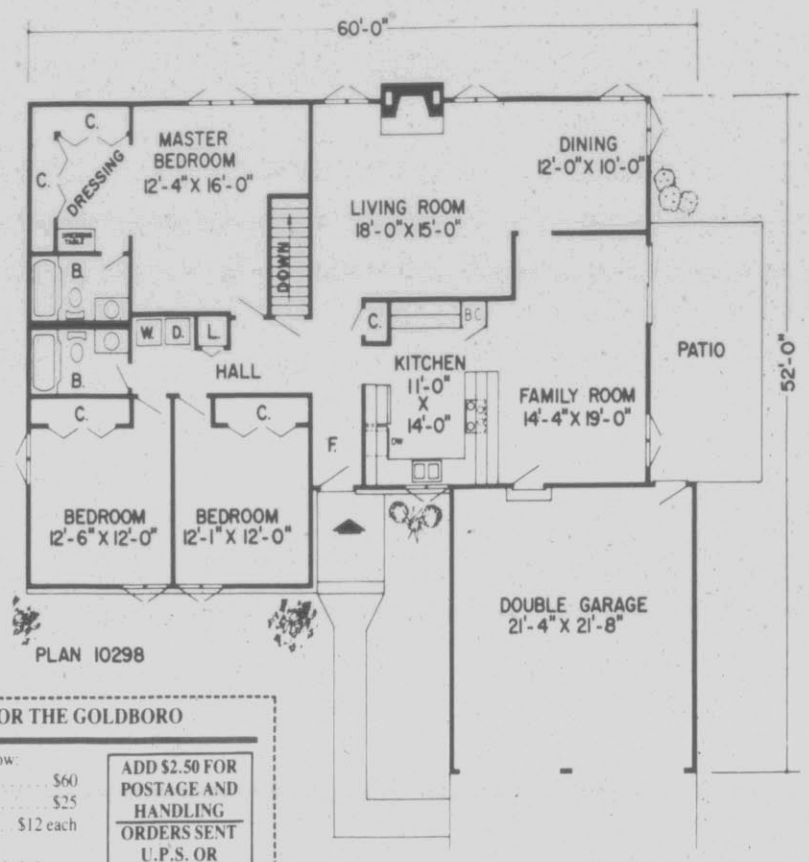

Together, the living and dining rooms total a sizable amount of space for entertaining, with a wood-burning fireplace present to warm and cheer.

Bedrooms occupy the left wing of the home and they, too, are airy and skylit. Large and luxurious, the master bedroom annexes a dressing room with closet and dressing table and borders a private bath.

Besides the second full bath and two front bedrooms, the design also offers a laundry niche and linen closet, set side by side, in the hallway.

Double garage and full basement are specified.

Organize And Tame The Paper Explosion Beast

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

A few years ago, the question of organizing one's papers would hardly have seemed a suitable home-furnishings subject.

But the paper explosion has changed that. Today, the home office, whether planned or there by default, is a fact of life for most people who pay taxes, buy products (and then must keep the receipts and warranties), receive and write letters, and have investments and hobbies and vacation plans to deal with. Inability to handle paperwork has become a liability for homemakers even greater than a heavy hand with the pastry.

But, according to Stephanie Winston, whose business is counseling individuals and companies on handling paperwork and record-keeping, anyone can learn to become an efficient manager of papers.

Ms. Winston, who has written the book, "Getting Organized: The Easy Way to Put Your Life in Order," gave a group of editors tips on how to organize paperwork at a recent seminar on the subject in New York.

"First of all, get rid of the idea that being organized is the same thing as being neat and is a moral issue. It isn't," she told her listeners. "You are organized if you can accomplish what you wish in the time you have available."

Some people are well-organized when it comes to managing time and people or work, but they fall down when it comes to dealing with paper.

However, by making a time and a place to deal with paper, the householder is well on his or her way to an increase in efficiency. First of all, find the place. If you don't have a desk, buy one or designate a table as your desk. Add a large wastepaper basket, a cork bulletin board, a desk calendar, a small, spiral notebook, some file folders and a file cabinet if the desk has no file drawer. These supplies will add more than they will cost in terms of convenience and time saving.

Next, designate a certain time as your paperwork time. Ms. Winston suggests at least an hour at the same time every week. Depending on how complicated a life you lead, you will perhaps need less or more time.

Remember that simply opening a letter and putting it aside is a form of negative action. Instead, set up a simple system that will enable you to deal with all the papers that are likely to come across your desk. A four-file system that works well for many families, according to Ms. Winston, is to have files labelled "to do," "to file," "spouse," and "financial."

Sort your mail and other papers into these files each day. Then, once a week, take up your files and work through them. Having placed all paper on which some additional work is needed in your "to do" file, work through it from top to bottom, paying bills, answering letters, further sorting the material as needed. The next week, start working on your "to do" file from the bottom up. This way, nothing will ever get buried until it is too late.

Use your bulletin board to tack up reminders of chores which need to be done later. Write down dates of importance — parties, appointments — on your desk calendar. Make lists of what you have to do each day in your spiral notebook.

Then, when you have completed your day's list of chores, cross them off the list. "It's a good feeling," said Ms. Winston.

Use the big waste basket to throw away immediately anything that has no value to you.

Filing seems to terrify many people, says Ms. Winston. They fear they will lose valuable papers in their file system and never find them again. This won't happen if you develop a subject file properly, she said.

For each piece of paper, find the broadest and most important association and use that as your file heading. If it has to do with finances, file the paper under financial. If it is a warranty file under warranty. Medical records go under medical. Material for tax purposes can be filed under financial or under taxes, whichever seems to make most sense to you.

Typical useful file subheads for a home filing system include such subjects as decoration, financial, instruction booklets, medical, property, receipts, restaurants, services, travel and warranties and guarantees, she said.

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A sanding wheel and sanding file for electric drills.

Manufacturer's claim — That the wheel is 1½ inches wide and enables you to do with-the-grain sanding just like a belt sander...that it fits the chucks of all standard quarter, three-eighths and half-inch drills...that both the wheel and the sanding file take strips that are applied by peeling off protective paper from the backs of the adhesive sides...that the file enables you to sand inside and outside curves, sharp or tight angles and just about any metal, wood or plastic surface.

Manufacturer's claim — That these coatings provide the same level of rust protection as traditional oil-based rust inhibitives while featuring quick soap-and-water cleanup...that they can be applied by brush or spray...that they can be applied over damp surfaces...and that they dry to the touch in 15 minutes.

THE PRODUCT — An electric nailgun.

Manufacturer's claim — That the nailgun drives and countersinks brad-type, 18-gauge nails 1 and 1-32nd inches long...that the nails are easily inserted into the tool after releasing the spring-lock bottom plate...that it has the power to drive a nail completely into a piece of ¾ths-of-an-inch oak...that the nailgun is housed in high-impact plastic, has a chrome-plated base and a three-conductor plug, and uses standard household current.

THE PRODUCT — A pump for transferring fluids.

Manufacturer's claim — That the pump is a 12-volt, 100 percent solid-state product that comes with 10 feet of plastic hose and 18 feet of lead wire, with the choice of a battery clamp attachment or a cigarette lighter plug-in for the car...that the pump will transfer gasoline, kerosene, paint thinner, antifreeze, mildly corrosive solutions and almost any fluid, including water not used for human consumption...that it can tap the fuel supply of the family car to fill lawnmowers, chain saws, motor bikes, etc.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J. 07666.)

(The sanding wheel and file are manufactured by 3M, Building 223-IN, 3M Center, St. Paul, Minn. 55101; the acrylic coatings by Rust-Oleum Corp., 11 Hawthorn Parkway, Vernon Hills, Ill. 60061; the electric nailgun by Swingline, Inc., 32-00 Skillman Ave., Long Island City, N.Y. 11101; and the pump by Facet Enterprises, Elmira, N.Y. 14903.)

GARDEN CLINIC

N.C. State University answers timely gardening questions.

Q. Where can I purchase pyrethrin? Columbus County garden stores are not familiar with it? (Mrs. W.M., Chadbourn)

A. Pyrethin is a natural insecticide. It is made from chrysanthemumlike flowers produced in Africa. There is a shortage of this product throughout the world. Supplies are limited and prices are high. You might ask your garden center operator to obtain some of the product. You might also consider using another insecticide such as malathion. (K.A. Sorensen, extension entomologist)

Q. How can I get rid of kudzu on a chain link fence? (N.R., Fayetteville)

A. Spray with a combination product containing 2,4-D and MCPP. An example is Ortho Weed-B-Gon. This same type of product is used to control broadleaf weeds in lawns. Throughly cover the vine and keep off any desired plants. Repeat applications will be required. Roundup is another herbicide which may be used to control kudzu. (W.M. Lewis, extension agronomist)

Q. My pecans are very inferior. What causes this? (M.F., Raleigh)

A. North Carolina is not the most favorable place to grow pecans. This is especially true north and west of Raleigh. Major problems include frost, rain and cloudy weather at bloom time. The disease "scab" can cause early dropping and unfilled nuts (blanks). The Agricultural Extension Service has a publication which offers a lot of helpful ideas on growing pecans. Ask your county extension office for a copy. The title is "Growing Pecans in North Carolina." (Mel Kolbe, extension horticulturist)

Q. Is it safe to fertilize tomatoes after the blooms have set? (H.Y., Greensboro)

A. Yes. Tomatoes should be sidedressed after they have been planted four to five weeks. This is about the time the first fruits are beginning to form. Give them three to four pounds of 8-8-8 fertilizer or the equivalent per 100 feet of row every two to three weeks. Timely applications of sidedressing is better than a lot of fertilizer at planting time. If you fertilize too heavily before the blooms are set, you may get all vegetative growth and little fruiting. (Larry Bass, extension horticulturist)

Mail Cautions Are Necessary

Several simple steps before going on a trip can insure vacationers that their mail is handled smoothly while they're away, according to Postmaster H. Lloyd Mills.

"Ask a neighbor or relative to remove mail and newspapers from your mailbox daily, or have mail held at the post office," he said. "A written request to hold mail up to 30 days can be given to your letter carrier or submitted at the local post office. If an extended abscence is anticipated, a temporary mail forwarding order can be requested."

Postmaster Mills stressed the importance of not letting mail accummulate in a mailbox, saying "It's a sign even novice burglars can detect."

Other tips include taking ample supplies of stamps and postcards, as well as taking the addresses of those being written. Mills added that post cards require only ten cents postage, while standard letters require 15 cents.

Here's the Answer

Q. — I will soon finish my basement. Rather than putting up paneling close to the concrete walls, I intend to make a framework of studs about a foot from the walls, then apply the paneling to the studs. Is it a good idea to put up plastic foam behind the panels, since there sometimes is a dampness problem in the basement, although no water actually leaks in?

A. — Yes. For extra protection, attach polyethylene sheets to the insulation on the side facing the interior of the room. Remember, though, that these are measures to prevent the dampness from causing any trouble. You can eliminate most or all of the dampness by keeping air circulating through the basement or using a dehumidifier.

Q. — I bought a second-hand coffee table. There are stains on it. I don't know what they are, but I do know they appear to be under the varnish. Is there anyway these can be removed without stripping the table of all the varnish?

A. — You not only will have to remove the varnish with a commercial remover, you will then have to bleach the wood to get out the stains. The only exception to that is if the stains are under the final coat of varnish, but not under any preceding coats or coats. If bleaching is necessary, be sure to follow the bleach manufacturer's directions on how to rinse off the residue. Once bleaching has removed the stains, you then must determine whether to use a stain to put some color back into the wood.

Q. — I want to put in a couple of dry wells to handle the water that collects in the gutters of my house and runs into the downspouts. Right now the water is settling into the soil alongside the fountain and I am sure that eventually it will cause trouble. I have two old metal drums that I intend to use. Are these okay and how far should they be from the house?

A. — The metal drums will do fine. Cut out more than half of each bottom. Make dozens of holes in the sides of the drums. Holes with diameters of about one inch are best. The drums should be placed into the earth so that the bottoms reach at least to the bottom of the house foundation. They should be from 10 to 20 feet away from the house. Place one on each side of the foundation. Fill the drums with with large pieces of rock and stone, packing them in so there is no movement although obviously there will be plenty of spaces for water. The soil pipe should be laid below the ground so that it goes from the bottom of a downspout to the top of the dry well, being certain the slope is sufficient to carry away the water. When everything is set and working properly, cover the top of each drum with a heavy wooden planks or a concrete slab. Spread soil over the area and, if desired, plant grass seeds.

Church Leaders Draw Sentences

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Thirty-five South African church leaders, including two Anglican bishops, were found guilty of attending an illegal gathering and given an alternative of a $70 fine each or 50 days in jail.

Offers Tips On Travel Alone

HOUSTON (AP) — Industrial-chemical saleswoman Jewel Lovel, 27, suggests to women traveling alone, "When checking into a hotel, never mention in a loud voice that you are traveling alone and never leave a name and address tag on your luggage. Remove it at the airport." Miss Lovel logs 30,000 miles a year traveling through five states in the southwest.

No Panic If Freezer 'Out'

BALTIMORE, Md. (UPI) — If your freezer quits during a summer electrical storm or blackout, don't panic.

Food may remain frozen 24-48 hours after the power fails, even in the summer, if you keep the door closed, says the Cooperative Extension Service at the University of Maryland.

The length of safe time depends on the amount and type of food in the unit, the size of the freezer and the temperature of the room it is in.

Dry ice will keep food frozen for several more days, the service says. Dry ice is available at meat-packing plants, beverage companies, ice cream manufacturers and ice dealers.

The extension service urges caution in handling dry ice, which is frozen carbon dioxide. Be careful not to handle it with bare hands or inhale the fumes given off when the ice evaporates as gas.

Because its temperature can go as low as -100 degrees F, food packages should be packed in heavy cardboard to prevent dehydration.

Evaporating dry ice also expands, so the door of a freezer containing it should be left slightly ajar to prevent a dangerous buildup of pressure. The area around the freezer should be well ventilated for the same reason.

Gardeners Are Educated

EMMAUS, Pa. (UPI) — More than half the home vegetable gardeners polled by a national gardening magazine had college educations. More than 20 percent had done post-graduate work and over 33 percent held jobs requiring professional or managerial training.

The home gardeners questioned had a median income of $21,040. More than 90 percent own and live in one family homes.

The study by Organic Gardening was based on its 1.25 million subscribers. The survey showed they spend an average of 10 hours a week on their gardens and 86 percent of those responding said they preserve the food the grow, mostly by freezing or canning.

Today's tightening credit market need not necessarily close the door on your ability to buy a house. Consider the case of a second mortgage takeback. For example, you are set to buy a $100,000 house, the down payment will generally be $20,000. If the bank will lend only $60,000, $20,000 is still needed to make up the difference. The place to start looking may be the house's present owner. Depending upon his financial and/or living circumstances, he may be able to lend you the money. In this way, you both obtain your objective through negotiations.

In addition to more favorable mortgage conditions, now that interest rates have dropped REALTY WORLD-CLARK BRANCH REALTORS, INC., 1902 S. Charles, 756-6336 would like to remind you that there are many different types of mortgage instruments that can be tailored to fit your individual circumstances. An Ordinary Guy Builds Robots As Garage Hobby

By BARBARA McMAHON
Associated Press Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Before 7 one morning, the automatic garage door at Harold D. Aggeler's house rumbled open, and a cylindrical metal form moved slowly down the driveway.

The robot headed for the morning newspaper, its single arm nearly scraping the ground. It grasped the paper and returned to the garage.

A few mornings later, as Aggeler directed his radio-controlled robot to the newspaper, he noticed neighbors peering from their windows. Before long, people in cars were lining the street at paper time.

That was nine years ago.

"Most people believe that if you build robots you're this tall," Aggeler says, holding his hand about four feet off the ground, "and you wear thick glasses and walk with a limp."

The description doesn't fit Aggeler, a self-described "ordinary guy," who is marketing manager for a technical firm. While some men collect stamps or coach Little League baseball in their spare time, the 36-year-old Aggeler builds robots in his basement.

"I do it because I get a kick out of it. I like to be able to do something nobody knows anything about."

Aggeler really doesn't care if anyone ever sees his creations. His first robot sat in the garage for a year before making its debut down the driveway.

"I'm always afraid if I capitalize on it, I won't enjoy it," he explains.

Building robots was something Aggeler wanted to do since he was a boy growing up on a farm.

Armed with a couple years of technical training and, after collecting parts "for ages," he was able to build Herbie, the newspaper-fetching machine.

Three robots, each about four feet tall, now stand watch over Aggeler's basement workshop, which is cluttered with spare metal arms, hands, sheet metal and solid state components.

His recently completed J-7 is shaped like a four-sided pyramid with claw-like hands. Its radio controls have a one-mile range, it can broadcast any cassette tape and it can "talk" via a hand-held microphone within 200 feet.

Three wheels allow J-7 to move and turn quickly and accurately. His arms move much like a human's, and his hands can grasp and carry things, such as the pulsating light gun Aggeler's young son provided for J-7.

But it was Herbie Too, the second robot Aggeler completed in 1973, that stole his creator's heart.

Herbie Too made the original one-armed model look almost primitive. He has most of J-7's features but is more fragile. However, his rounded-aluminum body, glass dome head with facial features and whirling radar on top make him look genuinely friendly, a quality that endears him to children.

Herbie Too has made frequent trips to hospitals to cheer up children. His rubber hands can grasp the handles of a child's wheelchair and push it down the halls. And he's been known to wander into a children's ward, ask if anybody has a birthday and burst into song when indicated. Stardom has some drawbacks. Like the timid knocks at Aggeler's door early weekend mornings from children who want to see the robot. Or the curious who gather outside the garage when he fiddles with his robots there on a warm day.

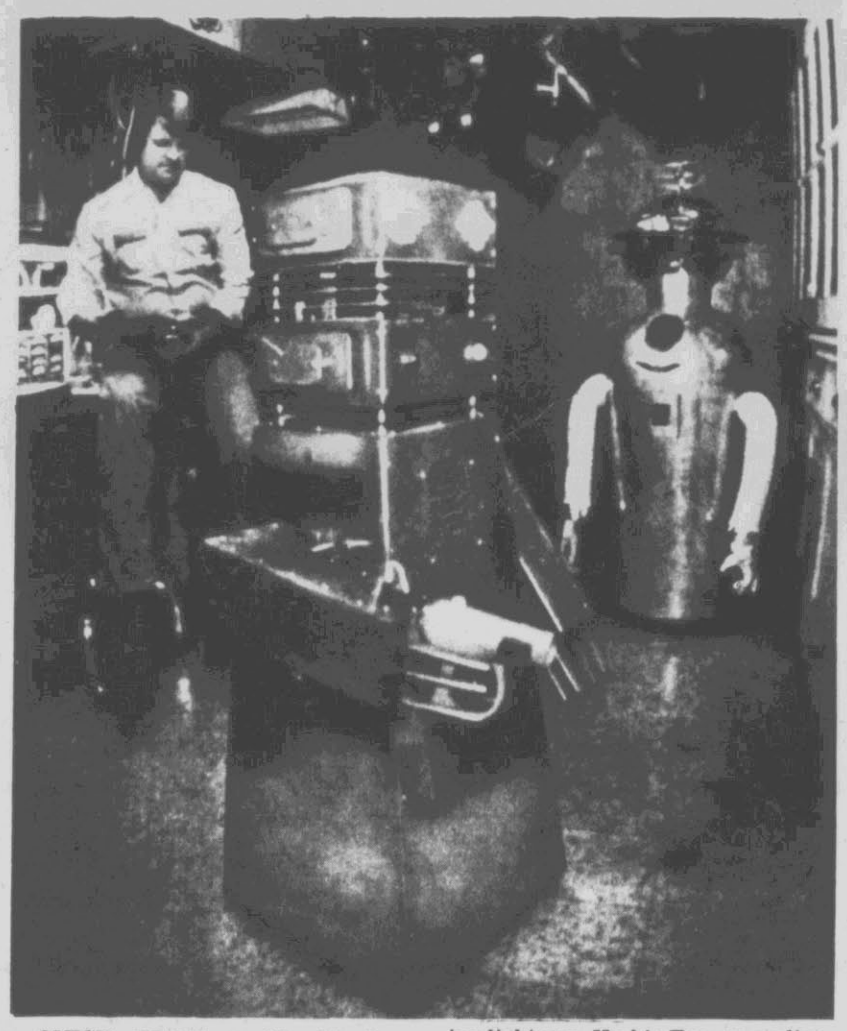

Robots make frequent appearances at birthday parties of Aggeler's two children, plus his nieces and nephews. Aggeler generally does a benefit or two each year for some of his favorite causes. He often takes one to a trade show to present his firm's taped message.

"I'll order a drink at the bar, and ask the bartender, 'Do you mind if I bring my robot in?'"

The bartender usually says it's OK, and Aggeler's companion rolls in.

Last Heard, First Hired

NEW YORK (AP) — The last person interviewed has a better chance of being hired than any of the preceding candidates, according to a study that revealed the final candidate was hired 55.8 percent of the time, while the first person interviewed got the job in only 17.6 percent of the cases.

The study was based on a sampling of positions recently filled by 40 of the offices of Robert Half Inc., financial executive, accounting and data processing recruiters.

"It would appear that many employers are heeding the old baseball adage about never hitting the first ball pitched," said Robert Half, who heads the firm. "But, just as a batter may be missing an opportunity for a home run, an interviewer may be rejecting an eminently qualified job candidate."

He suggests that employers fill out a detailed rating sheet immediately after each interview, to provide a more accurate and comprehensive picture of each candidate's assets and liabilities. "It would be an invaluable tool in assuring that positions are filled by the best-qualified candidates," Half added.

Q.—Those of us who open five-card majors are handicapped when we do your weekly quiz. Since you employ four-card majors in the column, the opening bids and responses are geared to that system. We are left out in the cold. Can't you do something for us?—L. Griffith, San Francisco, Calif.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—You are not as badly treated as you might think. Perhaps the one area where we might differ occasionally is in the opening bid of a major, but let's look at the matter realistically.

On more than a third of the cases where you have an opening bid in a major suit, that suit will be five cards long. Then, on some of the occasions when we have only a four-card major suit, we will also have a four-card minor suit in our hand, and there again, in most cases, we would make the same opening bid you would, so the rest of the sequence should correspond. Throw in those hands where our four-card major suit is not biddable, and those where, to solve our rebid problems, we open a "convenient" three-card minor suit, and you will find that, in the vast majority of cases, we make exactly the same opening bid that you would even though our methods differ.

When it comes to responses, again there is not much difference. We know you claim that you raise freely with only three-card support, but so do we when that is the logical bid. Our jump raises are the same—unless, of course, you are one of those who believes in giving a jump raise with only three-card support, in which case we suggest that you change your methods.

We are not arguing that there is no difference between auctions if you play four- or five-card majors. We are simply pointing out that the differences have been exaggerated. So go ahead and try our quizzes. If you are doing really badly, we would tend to believe that the reason is something more fundamental than the difference in our methods!

Q.—On a recent talk show, I heard you say that you have bought a casino. I thought you had given up gambling! —R. Vincent, New York City

A.—The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. However, one thing is working in my favor—I have now found a way to win at gambling. After all, when last did you hear of anyone breaking the casino's bank?

Motivation Not Always Involved

CHICAGO (UPI) — Teaching people about good nutrition doesn't necessarily motivate them to practice what they've learned.

ARE YOU A $50,000 PER YEAR SALESMAN?
For a proven salesman looking for opportunity, we have an immediate opening for a territory sales representative who would cover a multi-county area surrounding Raleigh, North Carolina.

We're Mayhill Homes, a multi-million dollar company selling panelized house packages to home building contractors throughout the Southeast.

The job is SALES. Realistic commission earnings after salaried training is $35,000 to $50,000 per year. Knowing your way around the home building business is a strong asset but equally important is a proven record of successful selling experience.

We're also a growth company with plenty of career opportunities for the effort you invest. If you're serious, and know you are better than your present job and what you earn, send me a letter of facts in confidence.

Put Your Trust In A 'Real' Pro

In case you've found yourself in a quandary about who to vote for in the upcoming Presidential election, here's a new candidate — J.D. 'Boss' Hogg!

This nationally celebrated public servant of Hazzard County, who's seen weekly in "Dukes of Hazzard," has hurled his hat in the ring, right alongside Carter, Reagan and Anderson. In fact, he's even opened his national headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

"When you open that ballot and see those amateurs runnin' against me, your hand will just shoot to the 'None of the Above' box, and that's a vote for me!" says Boss, in a blustering filibusterous voice. "It's gonna be a landslide. Put a real pro in office."

Boss Hogg's credentials are beyond reproach. If you don't believe it, just ask him. He'll be the first to tell you that he's come to public prominence working from the bottom up.

J.D. first won a seat as County Commissioner as a write-in candidate and he's been writing himself into one election or another ever since. Almost singlehandedly, his public involvement in the county has made it what it is today. As a prominent businessman, county commissioner, justice of the peace, county assessor, bank president and participant in numerous other enterprises, temporary and otherwise, he's not only a stanch supporter of law and order, his word is the law! His strongest vow for justice is to put Bo and Luke Duke so deep in jail that air will have to be piped to them for the next 99 years.

And it's in this spirit of knowing what he wants and where he's going that he shouts with jubiliation and pride: "Remember if I win, I'll act like a winner should...winner take all!"

A bright, imaginative child, J.D. was always a busy little rascal: chasing skunks in the woods of Hazzard County with his pet turkey 'Lizzard'; selling clothes found at the local watering hole, collecting door-knobs and other people's chickens, etc. He was very musical and liked to play his gazoo and sing, especially during full moons.

Now, I ask you...who could do a better job as the President of the United States?

Come on, everybody...join the crowd. J.D. 'Boss' Hogg will give you what you deserve!

HAZZARD COUNTY's J.D. 'Boss' Hogg has tossed his hat into the political ring. The wheeler-dealer lawman of "Dukes of Hazzard" is running as a presidential candidate on the newly formed 'None of the Above' party ticket.

Drama Based On Novel

ELIZABETH MONTGOMERY and Hal Holbrook star as two single-minded pioneers who decide to marry in the first episode of "The Awakening Land," the epic seven-hour motion picture for television which will be rebroadcast on NBC-TV Sunday July 20 and Monday, July 21 (9-11 p.m.) and Tuesday, July 22 (8-11 p.m.).

Elizabeth Montgomery and Hal Holbrook star in "The Awakening Land," returning to NBC-TV this week. Others featured in the drama — based on Conrad Richter's Pulitzer Prize-winning story — are Jane Seymour and Steven Keats.

The film, covering the total story encompassed in the Richter work, will be rebroadcast on three consecutive nights. — Sunday through Tuesday, July 20-22 (9 to 11 p.m. Sunday and Monday, 8 to 11 Tuesday).

These segments, subtitled "The Trees," "The Fields" and "The Town," are the original short novels by Richter which were later combined and published as "The Awakening Land."

The story focuses on a courageous American pioneer woman, Sayward Luckett. It begins in 1790, tells of her love for her family, the man she married — Portius Wheeler — and the land which she helps to settle.

Seymour co-stars as Jenny Luckett, Sayward's sister, and Keats plays Jack Tench, whose path crosses that of Portius. Others in the cast include Tony Mockus, Louise Latham, Devon Ericson, Jeanette Nolan, Dorrie Kavanaugh and Berg Remsen.

The setting of the drama is the deep woods of Ohio immediately after the Revolutionary War, and filming was done in the village of New Salem, Ill. The crude cabins in the area, of course, contain furniture of the period, handcrafted with the simplest tools by pioneers. But these antiques were unsuitable for the story since the furnishings depicted were supposed to be newly made.

Fortunately for this particular production, it was possible to set up a 'furniture factory' in an abandoned college gym in the nearby city of Springfield, Ill. There, not only were 'authentic' chairs and tables of Sayward Luckett's primitive cabin furnished, but a costume 'factory' was also improvised.

The clothing worn by the cast was of such a primitive nature that no costume rental company in the area was equipped to outfit the extras — particularly with footwear. Those who'd supposedly moved to the woods of Ohio from civilized places along the Eastern seaboard wore bits and pieces of clothing they had brought from 'home.' But those who were supposed to have been in the wilderness long enough to wear out their 'back East' clothes had an odd assortment of clothes. Footwear was made of deerskin, while shirts and dresses were linsey-woolsey. Buttons were actually bits of deer-horn and ties made of leather laced up shirts.

Boxing, Softball Set

Eddie Mustafa Muhammad (formerly Eddie Gregory) will defend his World Boxing Association light-heavyweight title against Jerry Martin to highlight a "CBS Sports Spectacular" Sunday edition, on July 20 (3-6 p.m.). Also scheduled for the program will be a softball game between the world-famous "King and His Court" and a celebrity team that includes musician-actor Kenny Rogers; the conclusion (Part II) of the "Tour de France" bicycle race from Paris; and the "World Championship Swamp Buggy Race" from Naples, Fla.

Muhammad, who has a record of 36-4-1 with 30 knockouts, won the WBA title last March 31, stopping Marvin Johnson in the 11th round in Knoxville, Tenn. His most recent loss came on Oct. 12, 1978, when Rahway (N.J.) State Prison inmate James Scott won a 12-round decision.

On Nov. 20, 1977, Muhammad lost a very close 15-round bout in Italy against Victor Galindez for the WBA light-heavyweight crown. In 1975, when Eddie was fighting in the middleweight class, he dropped another extremely close 10-round split decision to Benny Briscoe in Philadelphia. Muhammad's first loss was in 1973, when he lost a 10-round decision to the now-late Redonas Cabrerra.

MUSICIAN-ACTOR Kenny Rogers will be taking the field as part of a celebrity softball team set to battle the world-famous "King and His Court" as a feature of "CBS Sports Spectacular" on Sunday, July 20 (3-6 p.m.). Also scheduled is a WBA light-heavyweight title bout between Eddie Mustafa Muhammad and Jerry Martin.

"He's lost four fights, but he's never been stopped, and I'm not sure he can be stopped," says Ring Magazine Associate Editor Randy Gordon. "There are some fighters that I don't think you can knock out and I'm not sure Eddie can be KO'd."

But, while he's never been knocked cold, Muhammad has been to the mat on more than one occasion. He defeated Matthew Saad Muhammad (Then Matthew Franklin) in 1977 in a close 10-round split decision. In that match, Eddie was dropped in the first round, but he quickly returned to his feet and went on to win. Eddie was also down and apparently almost out in a 1974 fight against Mario Rosa, but he came back to knock out his opponent in round No. 8.

In his two fights this year, Martin stopped Billy Douglas in the 10th round in February, and then fought one of the greatest fights 1980 has yet to see, beating James Scott at Rahway. In that fight, Martin dropped powerful Scott to the floor in both the first and second rounds, and, according to Gordon, it is being given close consideration for Ring's "Fight of the Year."

'Jack Is Back'

For the first time since 1969, ABC Sports will telecast live coverage of the final round of the world famous British Open, which this year will be held at Muirfield, the links of the Honourable Company of Edinburg Golfers in Scotland. The final-day action is on Sunday, July 20.

The charismatic Spaniard and current Masters Champion, Severiano Ballesteros, will return to defend his British Open title, and then, of course, "Jack is back."

The 1978 British event was the last tournament won by Jack Nicklaus until his remarkable victory at the recent U.S. Open Championship. While many truly believed the 1978 Open was his swan song, Nicklaus proved them wrong and is a favorite to win his fourth title in the tourney.

Two-time British Open Champions Tom Watson and Lee Trevino, as well as three-time winner Gary Player, will also be trying to burn up the Scottish links.

The winner's purse this year is 25,000 pounds sterling, or approximately $60,000. Eleven British Opens have been played at Muirfield, the last being Trevino's victory in 1972. The course measures 6,926 yards, and is par 71. The fifth, ninth and 17th holes are probably the most difficult, with par 5's and respective distances of 558, 495 and 542 yards from tee to cup.

To Be A Series

CBS-TV has purchased th two-hour TV film "Nurse" an plans to develop it into a series The Michael Learned/Rober Reed starrer will go into proc uction in New York City this fal and the first one-hour segmen should be ready by December.

The Suspense Is High

Burt Lancaster stars as a dedicated, if misguided, patriot who seizes control of a nuclear missile base to blackmail the U.S. Government, in "Twilight's Last Gleaming." The film will be rebroadcast on CBS-TV Wednesday, July 23 (8 to 11 p.m.).

Lawrence Dell (Lancaster) is an ex-U.S. Air Force officer who's serving time in prison on a manslaughter conviction — a frameup brought on by his doubts over the country's conduct in the Vietnam conflict. He breaks out of prison, then — with the help of three other escapees (Winfield, Young and Smith) — he captures a Titan missile base.

Dell, who designed the base, knows exactly how the missile system works. And he threatens to launch them unless the government meets his demands; $10 million, safe conduct to a foreign country, and the President (Durning) as a hostage. He also demands that the Government make public a secret document revealing the true reason behind the Vietnam conflict and the way it was fought.

While the President gathers his cabinet members and aides to determine how to deal with Dell's demands, the commanding general (Widmark) of the Strategic Air Command mobilizes forces to blast the renegades out of the base.

Viewers will find the action scenes of "Twilight's Last Gleaming" heightened to good effect by well-coordinated split-screen techniques. Exceptionally well done is the step-by-step programming of the lethal technical gadgetry involved in launching the missiles; the attendant confusion at the White House as Dell's threats become more adament; and the nick-of-time reprieve that halts the missiles.

Disney Classic Concludes

A vicious band of mutineers clash with ship officers in the concluding segment of "Treasure Island," presented on Disney's Wonderful World, Sunday, July 20 (7 to 8 p.m.).

Before his death at the hands of other pirates, Capt. Billy Bones (Finlay Currie) gives young Jim Hawkins (Bobby Driscoll) a map of Treasure Island. Squire Trelawney (Walter Fitzgerald) and Dr. Livesey (Denis O'Dea), friends of Jim, with the assistance of Capt. Smollett (Basil Sidney), outfit the square-rigger Hispaniola to search for the loot. When the ship is near its destination, the sea cook Long John Silver (Robert Newton) organizes a mutiny and escapes to the island with Jim as a hostage.

After quelling the mutiny and imprisoning the pirates in the ship's hold, Capt. Smollett and his men leave the vessel. They are no sooner afloat when the mutineers escape and take over the Hispaniola.

Gunn leads Jim to the stockade, where the captain's party has set up headquarters on the island. Silver wages a heavy attack against them. While the battle rages, Jim slips away and cuts the Hispaniola loose so it drifts out of firing range. In so doing, he is forced to climb aboard where he is attacked by a mutineer.

Happy 20th!

NBC-TV and Hanna Barbera Productions will celebrate the 20th year of "The Flintstones" on the small screen with two new series. One's a 90-minute Saturday morning program, and the other is a series of primetime half-hour segments.

The Saturday a.m. series, starting this fall, is titled "The Flintstone Comedy Show." New characters to be introduced include Cavemouse, a mischievous rodent and the Frankenstones, a monster family living in Bedrock.

Also featured will be the Flintstone 'regulars' — Fred, Wilma, Barney, Betty, Pebbles, Bamm-Bamm and Dino. Joining them will be two characters from other Hanna-Barbera shows — Captain Caveman and the Shmoo.

The primetime show, "Flintstone," will evolve around the antics of a Stone Age Gothic family. And a 90-minute special introducing the family will launch the series.

'Edge' Addition

Allen Fawcett has been signed for the role of Kelly on "The Edge of Night," ABC-TV's long-running daytime series.

The character is new, but he is expected to be involved in major story lines.

Although Allen has been signed to a two-year contract, he will be allowed to perform in other productions.

Big Night For Gumshoes

Tom Selleck guest stars in "Nice Guys Finish Dead," a segment of "The Rockford Files" airing Friday, July 25 (9 to 10 p.m.), on NBC-TV.

Selleck's also starring in the title role of a new series, "Magnum, P.I.," slated to premiere on the small screen within the next few months.

An acting career was never high on Selleck's list while he was attending high school and college. In fact, baseball was his number one priority in those days. Then he switched his allegiance to basketball in junior college, and the sport provided him with a scholarship to USC. Other than a very brief course in the history of the American Theatre, he concentrated on sports and on his studies in business administration.

When financial problems began to threathen his college days, a theater arts teacher suggested he try commercial modeling to help pay his bills, and his first time before the cameras was with an Air Force training film.

During an appearance on television's "The Dating Game" a few months later, Tom was spotted by talent scouts from a number of major studios and signed with 20th Century-Fox, which had made the best offer. But just as his career looked as though it was about to take off, the entire talent program at the studio was cancelled. However, Tom managed to land a role in the "Bracken's World" series and appeared in 15 segments.

His feature film debut was in "Myra Breckenridge," and he's since been seen in "Seven Minutes" and "Coma." On TV, he appeared in an episode of "Stockard Channing in Just Friends." He's also starred in a number of movies for the small screen — "Countdown at the Superbowl," "The Sacketts," "Gypsy Warriors," "Boston and Kildare" and "The Concrete Cowboys."

In his new series, Tom's portraying Thomas Sullivan Magnum, former Naval officer and now a free-lance private investigator who's living and working in Hawaii.

His work may be difficult and dangerous, but Magnum's living arrangements are decidely easy to swallow. He lives on the palatial estate of an absent writer in exchange for providing expert security for the house and grounds.

What Happens!

What really happens to all those gorgeous gals who win pageants each year? Hopefully, a two-hour film titled "Miss American Beauty" will furnish the answer. The movie, slated to air on CBS during the upcoming season, follows a pageant winner during her year's reign, chronicling the young woman's inner voyage of self-discovery amid ever-growing pressures.

Over The Mark

When LPGA golfer Nancy Lopez-Melton fired a two-under-par 71 on the final day of the $125,000 Sarah Coventry tournament in Rochester, N.Y., to wrestle the $18,750 winner's check away from a determined Pat Bradley, it pushed her over the $100,000 mark in 1980 earnings.

Michele Will Tell

Q: Is the actor who played Bo Duke on "Dukes of Hazzard" really getting married? It's making me sick to think that he may be. T. MOSLEY, MT. AIRY, N.C.

A: Although neither John Schneider nor actress Melinda Naud say a word about it, close friends feel that they'll be announcing their engagement anyday now. Be strong and find someone else!

Q: Has "The Contender" been cancelled? It was my favorite show on Thursday nights. M. MAHAFFEY, WAYNESVILLE, N.C.

A: Yes. In spite of the fact that it was indeed a good show, 'Contender' never pulled its weight in the ratings, and CBS axed it after only a few episodes had been broadcast.

Q: Who plays Jason Hayward on "The White Shadow"? T. FAIRLEY, MAXTON, N.C.

A: He's Thomas Carter, an intense, articulate and intelligent young actor who grew up in Texas. Tom hopes to eventually become a director and did an excellent job helming a segment of 'Shadow' titled "Me?," that aired last season. He's a single, now lives in Hollywood, reads several books each week and loves to dance.

Q: Did Rick Lohman, who's starring in "Phyl and Mikhy," ever play Gary Walton on "Search For Tomorrow"? B. HYTHE, CONWAY, N.C.

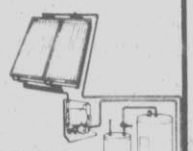

A: He certainly did! And there's another cast member of 'P&M' — Larry Haines — who was also on 'Search.' He played Stu Bergmen for 18 years.

Q: Who portrayed Jo March on "Little Women," and where do I write to her? B. HOPKINS, GREENVILLE, N.C.

A: She's Susan Dey, and you may remember her when she played that cute teenager named Laurie Partridge on "The Partridge Family" series. Susan's now married to agent Lennie Hirshan, and they live in a palatial home in Beverly Hills. Write to her c/o The William Morris Agency, 151 El Camino Dr., Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — Determined to hold out for $50,000 per episode. JOHN SCHNEIDER missed the filming of the first episode of "DUKES OF HAZZARD." But, when the show's producers placed an ad in a trade journal for a "5-ft. 10-in., green-eyed, blonde actor," Jon promptly reported for work — for considerably less $$$$ than he'd expected!

Although those helming "DIFF'RENT STROKES" heatedly deny it, there are definitely behind-the-scene problems with certain cast members, namely DANA PLATO, who's complaining about the scripts focusing solely on GARY COLEMAN. "Nothing is ever funny but his lines," she says, "and I think people are getting sick of hearing Gary, Gary, Gary."

The latest of Hollywood's 'happiest couples' to call it quits are PATTI and JERRY LEWIS — after 36 years of wedded bliss. At least that's what everyone thought!

Following in his parents' footsteps is GARY LEWIS. The 35-year-old musician has filed for divorce from his second wife, PAM.

It's a different scene around DENNIS and GERRY WEAVER's house, however. Their actor-son, ROBBY, will wed LYNN HAUG in September, and momma and papa couldn't be happier!

Working couples: macho threatened?

● A man who feels "less masculine" if his wife works is confused about masculinity; he and perhaps his wife may need individual or marital counseling. We know of no statistics showing a higher divorce rate among working couples — who are fast becoming the norm — than among those bound to traditional roles. In fact, many wives who don't work have had to confront divorce. Some men and women do find it hard to cope with change and increased pressures, but I believe a couple making the effort to communicate and enjoy and appreciate each other are likely to benefit from the growth and stimulation of a wife's new career.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

What was the outcome of the fight that Yul Brynner had in a New York restaurant, and what's Brynner like? — J. Verdone, Flint, Mich.

● Brynner didn't have a fight in a restaurant. He took one to court over his contracting a case of trichinosis. According to Harry Lipsig, the lawyer who handled the actor's case, "Brynner started the lawsuit with no interest about his personal gain or the ultimate funds." Summing up Brynner as the most agreeable and charming client he had ever represented, Lipsig pointed out that when Brynner was 17 and worked as a circus acrobat, he fell 30 feet, fracturing bones in his spine. He is racked with pain 24 hours a day, says Lipsig, and every movement brings agony to him. He is, his lawyer observed, "a man of iron."

Wide World

FOR SENATOR HOWARD H. BAKER JR. (R.-Tenn.)

You advocate a 10-percent cut in all Government spending. Does that include a cut in your salary? — Marjorie MacMeekin, San Mateo, Calif.

● Yes. I proposed a cut in salaries and expenses in the executive, legislative and judicial branches. The only exclusion would be for the uniformed military. It would be up to the individual bureaus to decide where the actual reductions would be made.

FOR JULIA CHILD, gourmet-author

What do you do if the food you ordered in a restaurant is not up to par? — W.P., Cumberland, Md.

● If one complains, it's a difficult situation because it could develop into a terrible scene. I've found the best thing to do is very obviously not eat the food, so it's quite clear that it's not what I like — and ordered. I've had too many unpleasant experiences of this nature and find that this seems to be the best way out of them.

FOR MARGAUX HEMINGWAY, actress-model and granddaughter of the late Ernest Hemingway

What memories do you have of your grandfather? — E.M., Las Vegas, Nev.

● Not too many, because I was 6 when he died. What I remember most is that he was so huge. I have just one memento of him — an old Stetson hat. I vaguely remember taking a watering can and going over the hat with it. I thought if I did that it would shrink, and then I would be able to wear it myself.

FOR ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON, ambassador at large, special representative for the Law of the Sea Conference

What are the Law of the Sea and the conference you represent? — A.S. Kravitz, New York, N.Y.

● The Law of the Sea consists partly of traditional rules and practice and partly of rules spelled out in treaties. The Law of the Sea Conference would revise and codify the existing rules and new rules for administering them. It has been able to reach consensus on more than 90 percent of a draft text.

FOR DAVID PROWSE, Darth Vader (the body, not the voice) in The Empire Strikes Back

How much of a lift have the two Star Wars movies given your career? — H.M., Yuma, Ariz.

● It looks good on paper, but I haven't noticed producers and directors falling over themselves to give me work. Of course, when work does come along, I'll be in a different negotiating bracket. Thank God for TV — that's where my bread and butter is. It's not that I'm bitter or suffering. It's just that I'm 46 and in a hurry.

FOR ELLA T. GRASSO, Governor of Connecticut

I read that you fastened a yellow bow to a ribbon around an oak tree as a reminder of our people held hostage in Iran. What suggestions do you have for others who want to remember? — G.S., Decatur, Ill.

● What's wrong with everyone doing what I did? This is a movement that is spreading across the country, the yellow ribbon idea. If not that, then do anything that will show your support — any action that is your own personal thing, to show your feelings.

PRO AND CON

Should Hospital Costs Be Controlled by the Federal Government?

PRO Senator Gaylord A. Nelson (D.-Wis.)

The rapid escalation of hospital costs has strained our nation's economy, forcing unnecessary Government spending and robbing the pocketbooks of the American people. I have introduced legislation to bring exorbitant hospital costs under control. This legislation would establish voluntary guidelines on annual increases and would provide a trigger mechanism so that if these increases were excessive, mandatory limits would come into force. Enactment of this legislation would save $53 billion over the next five years — $22 billion in Government spending on Medicaid and Medicare alone.

CON Senator Roger W. Jepsen (R.-Iowa)

I believe a policy which puts Government in the major role of directing the nation's health care is ill-advised. The proposed Government program of hospital cost-containment clearly increases the regulations which are forced upon community hospitals. Those hospitals estimate that Government regulations cost each hospital patient $38.86 each day. Additional regulatory costs of Government-administered cost-containment programs will increase, rather than decrease, hospital costs. Voluntary efforts by local hospital boards to control costs have been initiated. These efforts should be encouraged.

For Actress-Singer Sissy Spacek, Marriage Matters Most

Despite striking paydirt with* Coal Miner's Daughter *(the film and the record), the wispy, strawberry blond star declares she and her husband will never "go Hollywood."

By Fred Robbins

Unlike the character she plays in the hit movie Coal Miner's Daughter, actress Sissy Spacek did not grow up dirt poor nor end up married at 13 with a baby on the way. Sissy had, in her words, an "enchanted childhood," and at 13 she was on her way to being a cheerleader, drum majorette and homecoming queen.

Nevertheless, there are similarities between Sissy (christened Mary Elizabeth) and country-western singer Loretta Lynn, on whose life the movie is based. Both are from close-knit Southern families (Sissy grew up in Quitman, Texas, population 1,500), and both as young girls loved to sing more than anything. In fact, Sissy — who did all her own vocals in the movie — ordered a guitar through a mail-order catalog in the hope of one day becoming a rock 'n' roll star.

Fate, however, wrote her a quite different script. At 30, Sissy Spacek, still looking much as she did in her teens, has emerged as one of Hollywood's bona fide stars of the 80's.

Surprisingly, Sissy has achieved such distinction with only seven pictures behind her. And in the first five she was dangerously type-cast as a weirdo teen-ager: Prime Cut with Gene Hackman, Badlands with Martin Sheen, Carrie (which won her the National Society of Film Critics' Best Actress award as well as an Academy Award nomination), Welcome to L.A. and Three Women.

But with her stunning performance in Coal Miner's Daughter, Sissy has finally shown her full range, depth and versatility. She knocked critics out of their screening room seats with the consummate artistry she uses in maturing on screen from a child bride of 13 to a middle-years superstar who has survived fame and a nervous breakdown. (And her recording of the title song has put her on the country and western music charts.)

There was a time when an actress with Sissy's looks — skinny and freckled with wispy strawberry blond hair — would not have made it in Hollywood. But all that's changed: "I'm lucky to have been born when I was, to be acting now when an actress with offbeat looks can make it in movies," Sissy observes. "We live in a different world now, a more sophisticated world. People see beauty today in a different way. They connect more now with an emotional response than with superficial looks."

Of all the women she's played, real or fictional, Sissy says the one she feels closest to is Loretta Lynn: "There's a real feeling of kinship we have, a closeness that's been there from the day we first met nearly two years ago."

Loretta feels the very same way: "It's almost as if we're the same person." It was Loretta who actually chose Sissy to play the lead role in the film. Long before Sissy had even been contacted by the movie's producers, Loretta was announcing to concert and TV audiences that Sissy Spacek would play her on the screen.

Capturing Loretta Lynn's personality, Sissy says, was difficult, however, because "she's elusive, an enigma." But Sissy applied the technique she has used in every film to date: "With every role I've played I have a habit of 'living' the people I play." And it worked. Wrote Time critic Frank Rich, "Spacek gives her character a spine of emotion, of pure innocence and instinctive cracker-barrel wit."

Movie stars are actually nothing new to Sissy. She's always had them in her own family. Her first cousin, on her father's side, is actor Rip Torn. And his wife is Geraldine Page, a six-time Academy Award nominee.

Sissy lived with the Torns when she first arrived in New York at 17, immediately after high-school graduation. She had left home reluctantly. A few months before, her adored older brother Robby, to whom she felt especially close, had died of leukemia. And since her other brother, Ed, was away at college, she felt she should put aside her aspirations and stay home with her mother. Her mother, though, wouldn't hear of it.

"That was the greatest thing she did for me," Sissy says. "She let me go even though she was still grieving over Robby. She wanted me to go out into the world and have a chance at a full, meaningful life."

Though Sissy lived with Rip Torn and his family and was surrounded by theatrical people, she never considered going into acting at that point — she still wanted to be a singer. Rip and Geraldine did have a great influence on her, however. "They have such creative artistic integrity," says Sissy, "that I knew whatever I did, I would have to give it everything I had. And they opened many doors for me."

Her cousin helped her in her singing career by arranging meetings for her with agents. ("I remember taking my guitar and singing my heart out.") But they always suggested she come back when she had more experience.

She got it: "I played my guitar in the park. And I sang in clubs for $10 a night and my meals. And I learned a lot about life and myself. For one thing, no one can pave the way for anyone else."

"It just seems that Sissy and I have known each other in another life," says Loretta Lynn (right) about the actress who plays her on screen.

After doing background vocals and TV jingles (offscreen), Sissy got a record contract and cut a rock album. But she began to feel "like a puppet" under her contract (the record company wanted to change her name to "Rainbow"), and decided the business wasn't for her.

For a few months she worked as a model. Then, at the suggestion of friends, she decided to try acting and for six months studied at Actors Studio. "But I never got to 'scene class' even — I got my first movie job before that."

In 1974, co-starring in Badlands, Sissy met and fell in love with the film's handsome, bearded young art director, Jack Fisk. They married a short while later in a highly informal, jeans-clad ceremony witnessed only by their dog — who added his paw print to the license.

After Badlands, Sissy rejected the few roles she was offered: "None of them were parts in which I could grow as an artist and human being. I find I can respond only to characters that I can intertwine my own life experience into but that are different from my own experience."

For two years she didn't act. Instead, she worked behind the scenes, assisting her new husband as set decorator on movies directed by Brian De Palma. Later, of course, De Palma chose her to star in Carrie.

"I've had a lot of breaks," Sissy says. "Growing up, I had a very secure home life, very loving and wonderful parents who supported me in everything I did and now a loving and wonderful husband. So I can put myself way out on a limb artistically because I don't have to worry about those basic things, love and security."

Sissy's most recent film was the little seen Heart Beat, in which she plays Carolyn Cassady, the lover of Jack Kerouac, inventor and chronicler of the Beat Generation. She is presently working on the film Raggedy Man, which her husband is directing. (Their success has enabled them to set up their own production company, The Flying Armadillo.)

Besides owning a small house in Los Angeles' Topanga Canyon and a farm in Virginia, they've bought a cabin on a lake near Sissy's hometown, to which she has always returned a half-dozen times a year.

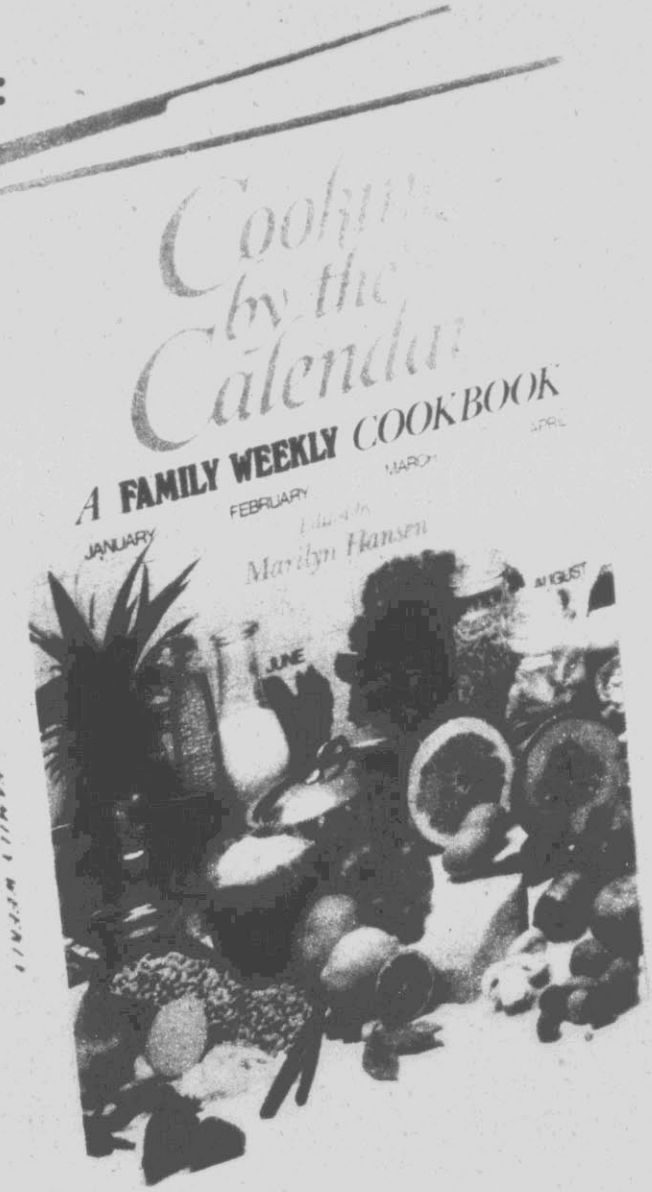

"My career will never 'take over,'" Sissy Spacek insists firmly. "I refuse to live my life so that I can maintain the position of a movie star. I want to grow as a human being.

"Martin Sheen sent me a Christmas card one year with a copy of a note written by an elderly woman. In it, she said if she had life to live over again, she wouldn't do anything different except she would dance longer, stay up later, sing louder, laugh harder, cry more. Just live everything more fully. And that is what I am trying to do." FW

The Friendly Green Apple With the Happy Crunch

By Marilyn Hansen

Of course, we're talking about those popular green apples, the Granny Smiths, that are charming new fans everywhere because of their crisp, firm texture and sweet/tart juicy flavor. A cooling green bowlful of Grannies will brighten your kitchen or family room table and suggest a handy, healthy snack for everyone in the family. Granny Smith apples are a good source of nutrients — vitamin A, thiamine, riboflavin, potassium, iron, phosphorus and carbohydrates. A medium-size apple has about 96 calories. We have some recipes for you to try, too, that make the most of their pleasing personality.

NO-COOK TANGY APPLE RELISH

1 Granny Smith apple, cored, chopped
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup chopped sweet pickle
¼ cup raisins
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
¾ teaspoon Dijon-style mustard
½ teaspoon sugar

1. In small bowl, combine all ingredients; mix well. Refrigerate at least 3 hours before serving.

2. Serve with ham, pork, poultry or lamb. Makes 1½ cups

APPLE ZUCCHINI BISQUE

2 Granny Smith apples, peeled, cored, cut in wedges
1 large zucchini, unpeeled, sliced (about 2 cups)
1 onion, sliced (about 1 cup)
2 cups chicken broth
¼ teaspoon dried leaf marjoram, crushed
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
1 cup milk
1 cup heavy cream, divided
Freshly shredded Granny Smith apple

1. In medium saucepan, combine apples, zucchini, onions, 1 cup chicken broth, marjoram, salt and pepper. Cover. Simmer 5 minutes until tender.

2. Pour half the mixture into the container of an electric blender; process until mixture is smooth. Pour into large bowl. Repeat. Stir in remaining 1 cup chicken broth, milk and ½ cup heavy cream. Cover. Chill well.

3. Whip remaining ½ cup heavy cream. Garnish cold soup with whipped cream and shredded apple. Makes 8 servings

Approximately 170 calories per serving

GRANNY'S APPLE SKILLET

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
½ cup sliced onion
2 Granny Smith apples, cored, thinly sliced
1 zucchini, sliced, ¼-inch thick
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ teaspoon dried leaf savory, crumbled
⅛ teaspoon salt
1 large or 2 small tomatoes, cut in thin wedges
1 cup shredded Cheddar cheese

2. Add zucchini, lemon juice, savory and salt; cook 1 to 2 minutes longer. Add tomatoes; sprinkle with cheese. Cover. Cook 2 minutes longer or until tomatoes are tender and cheese is melted.

3. Serve as accompaniment to a simple hamburger, scrambled egg, cottage cheese or poached fish supper. Makes 4 to 6 servings

GERMAN APPLE PANCAKES

- 1½ tablespoons sugar
- ¾ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 4 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 2 Granny Smith apples, peeled, cored, cut in thin wedges
- ¾ teaspoon grated lemon rind
- ⅔ cup unsifted all-purpose flour
- 1½ tablespoons sugar
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- 2 eggs
- ⅔ cup milk

1. Combine sugar and cinnamon. In large 10-inch iron skillet, melt 2 tablespoons butter; sauté apples with 1 teaspoon of the cinnamon-sugar mixture and lemon rind until apples are slightly soft; turn out of pan and set aside.

2. In medium bowl, mix together flour, sugar and salt. Beat eggs and milk together; stir into dry ingredients.

3. In same 10-inch skillet with ovenproof handle or handle covered with aluminum foil, melt 2 tablespoons butter until foamy. Pour in half cup of the batter; cook 2 or 3 minutes over medium heat until pancake is almost dry on top.

4. Spoon apple mixture evenly over the pancake; cover apples with remaining cup batter. Place under preheated broiler, about 5 inches from source of heat; broil 3 minutes until batter is almost dry.

5. Sprinkle with 1 teaspoon cinnamon sugar mixture. Broil 2 or 3 minutes longer until sugar begins to melt. Slide pancake out of skillet into serving plate. Serve with browned sausage links or patties.

Makes 4 servings

HOT CHICKEN-APPLE SALAD

- 2 cups diced, cooked chicken*
- 2 Granny Smith apples, cored and diced (about 2 cups)
- 1 cup diced celery
- ¾ cup broken walnuts
- ¾ cup mayonnaise
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon grated onion
- ¼ teaspoon dried leaf tarragon, crumbled
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 3 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1 cup fresh bread crumbs (about 3 slices bread)

1. In medium bowl, combine chicken, diced apples, celery and nuts. In small bowl, combine mayonnaise, lemon juice, grated onion, tarragon, salt and pepper; mix well.

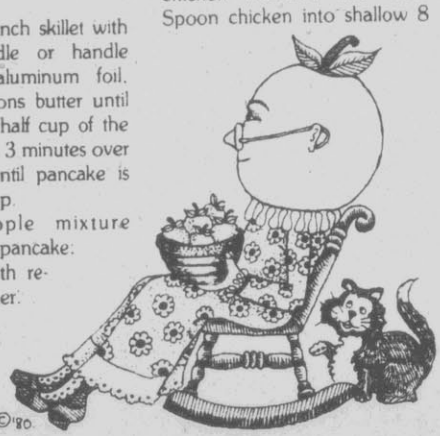

2. Stir mayonnaise into chicken mixture; mix well. Spoon chicken into shallow 8 x 10-inch buttered baking dish.

3. In small skillet, melt butter; sauté bread crumbs until golden; sprinkle crumbs over chicken. Bake in 350°F oven 20 to 25 minutes, until heated through.

Makes 6 servings

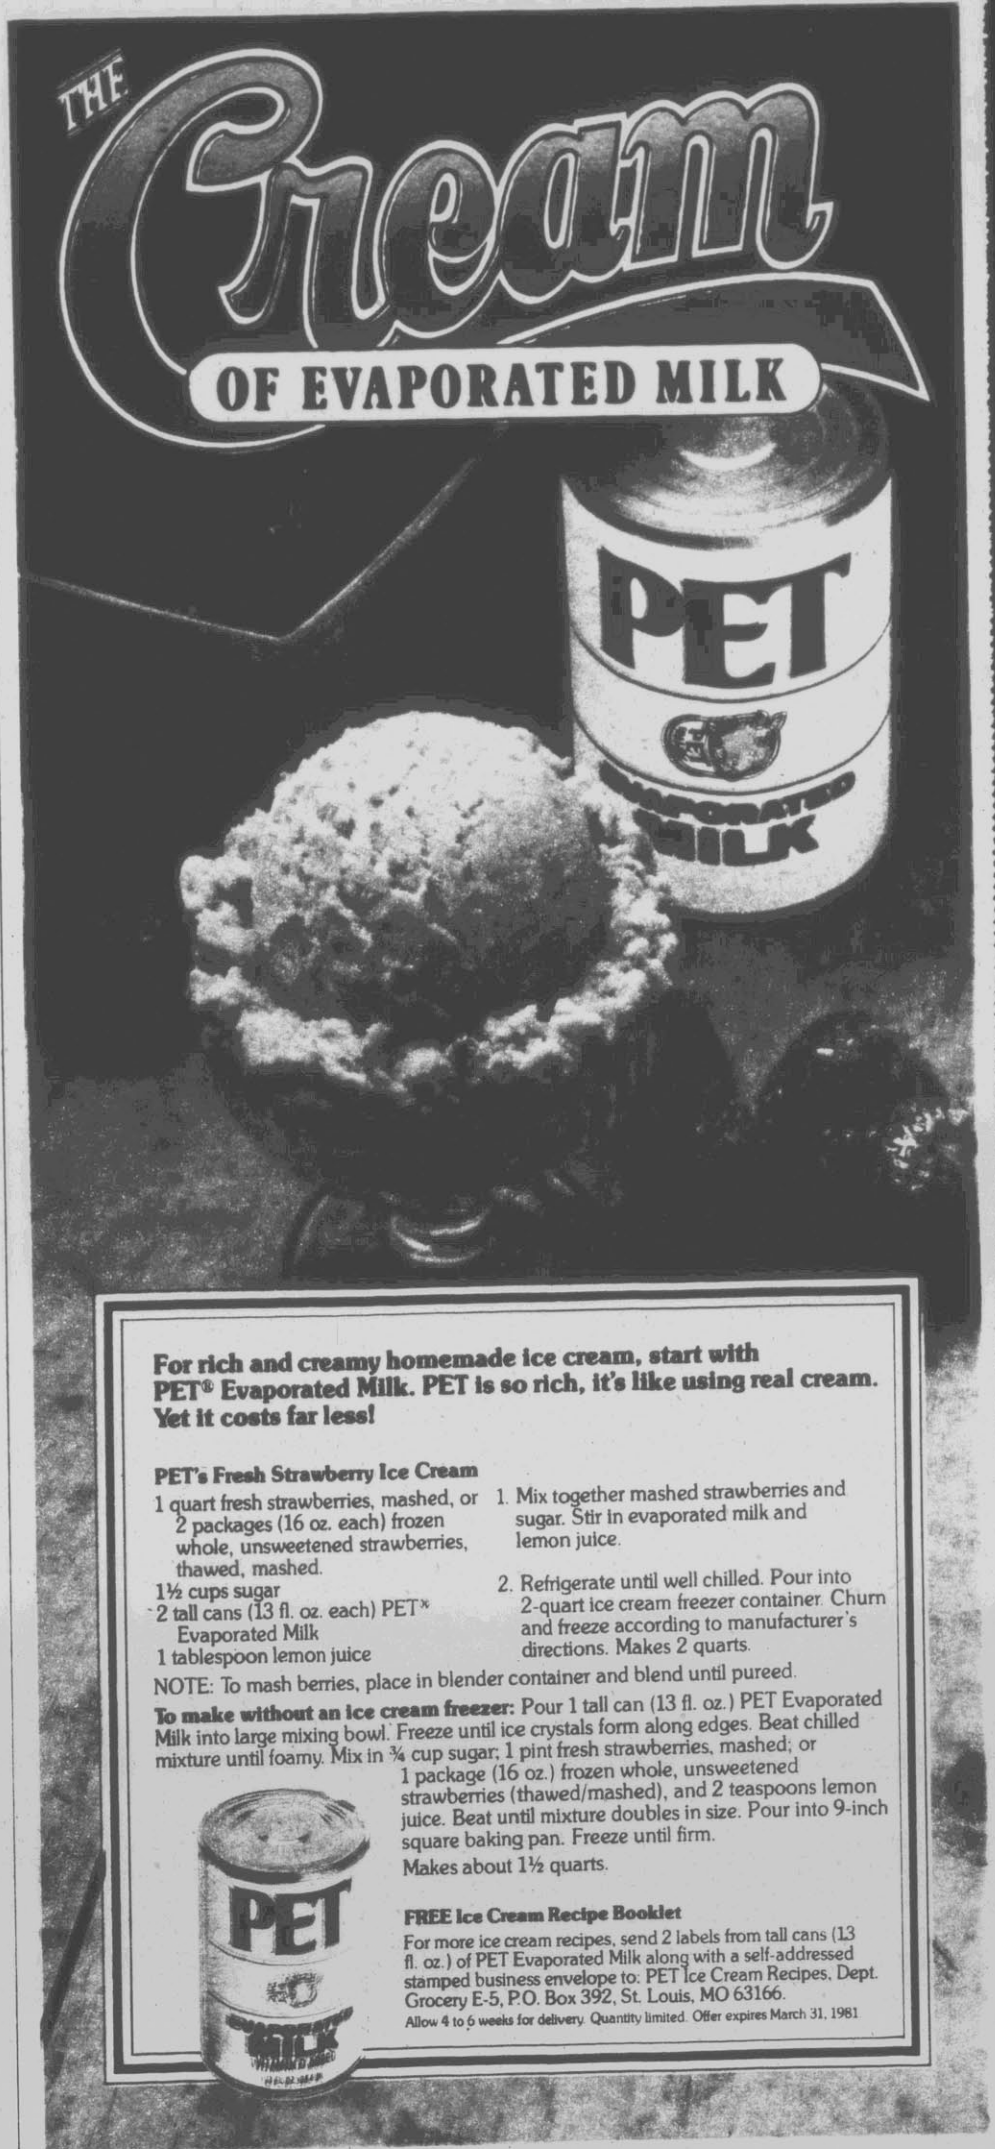

Approximately 495 calories per serving.

MORE TANGY IDEAS FOR GRANNY SMITH APPLES...

- Sandwich juicy Granny Smith apple slices with peanut butter, honey, ham or chicken spread or a mild cheese for a superspecial lunchbox meal.
- Assemble bite-size cocktail kabobs of cheese chunks, diced Granny Smith apples and ham cubes.
- Fold diced Granny Smith apples into butterscotch or vanilla pudding sparked with cinnamon for an unforgettable dessert.
- Dried beef wrapped around Granny Smith apple cubes is easy and appetizing.
- Dip Granny Smith apple slices in honey and roll in granola or chopped nuts for healthful snacking.
- Wake up with Granny Smith apples chopped into oatmeal or other cooked cereals.
- Layer slices of Granny Smith apples with tangy yogurt or in a gelatin dessert.

PET's Fresh Strawberry Ice Cream

- 1 quart fresh strawberries, mashed, or 2 packages (16 oz. each) frozen whole, unsweetened strawberries, thawed, mashed.
- 1½ cups sugar
- 2 tall cans (13 fl. oz. each) PET* Evaporated Milk
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice

1. Mix together mashed strawberries and sugar. Stir in evaporated milk and lemon juice.
2. Refrigerate until well chilled. Pour into 2-quart ice cream freezer container. Churn and freeze according to manufacturer's directions. Makes 2 quarts.

NOTE: To mash berries, place in blender container and blend until pureed.

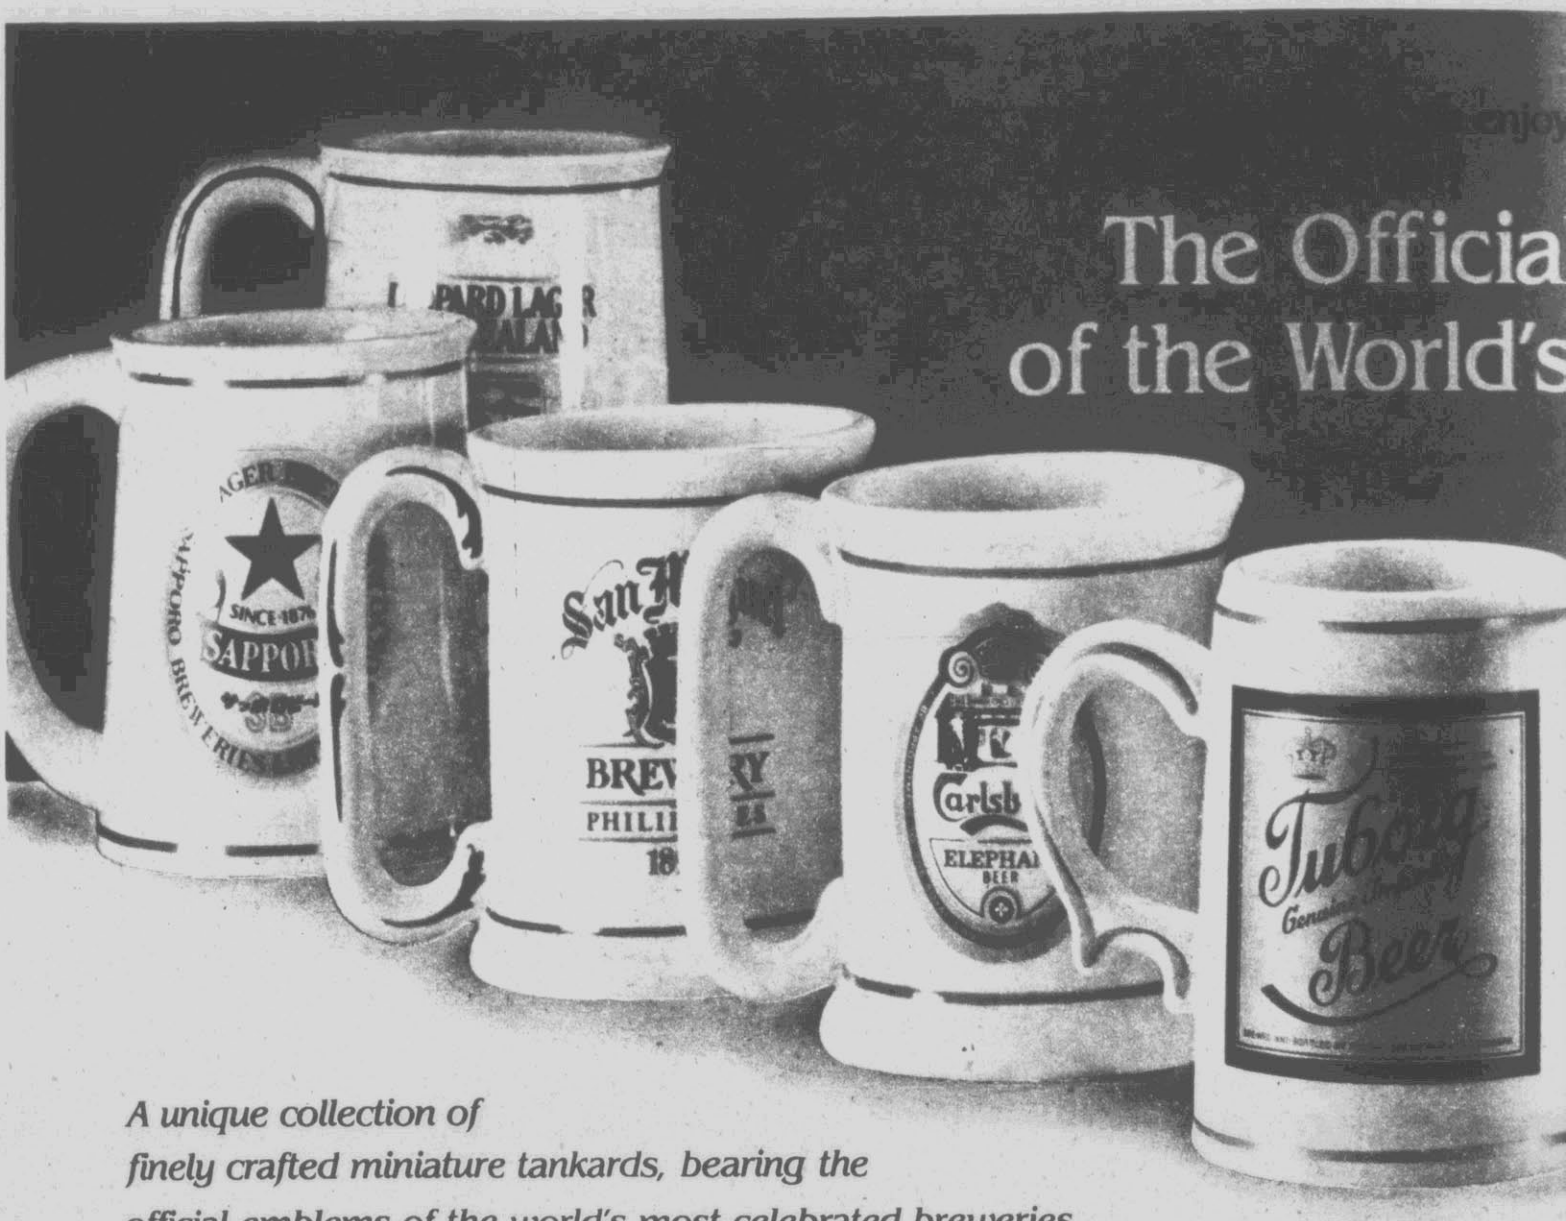

To make without an ice cream freezer: Pour 1 tall can (13 fl. oz.) PET Evaporated Milk into large mixing bowl. Freeze until ice crystals form along edges. Beat chilled mixture until foamy. Mix in ¾ cup sugar; 1 pint fresh strawberries, mashed; or 1 package (16 oz.) frozen whole, unsweetened strawberries (thawed/mashed), and 2 teaspoons lemon juice. Beat until mixture doubles in size. Pour into 9-inch square baking pan. Freeze until firm.

Finely crafted miniature tankards have a fascination all their own. And they have been admired and collected for centuries throughout the world. Especially prized by collectors are those tankards officially issued by leading breweries—richly embellished with the proud emblems that have come to signify preeminence in the brewmaster's art.

Franklin Porcelain has had the privilege of creating, for the world's great brewing houses, a number of privately issued miniature tankards. These individual tankards are produced as presentation pieces expressly for the use of the issuing brewery. As such, each reflects a standard of quality and intricacy of design not often found in miniatures of this kind.

Only a very small number of these handsome earthenware tankards are ever produced for any one brewery. And—given the private nature of their issue—they are extremely difficult to come by.

But now, Franklin Porcelain—with the permission of the individual brewing houses—has assembled a collection of these unique miniature tankards from the world's great breweries. And we are able to offer the complete collection—exclusively by direct subscription—on a limited basis.

Collector's tankards from around the world

The collection will consist of 35 tankards from as many leading breweries. In every case, the overall shape of the tankard will be an original design created exclusively for this important issue. And each tankard will bear the official emblem that symbolizes the brewery issuing it. For example:

The white bull elephant of Denmark's Carlsberg beer. The key and crest of Germany's Beck's lager. Montezuma, the Sun King, on Mexico's Dos Equis ale. The Irish harp of Guinness stout. The stately coat of arms for Spain's Aguila beer. The distinctive red triangle—the world's oldest registered trademark—on England's Bass ale. And other unique emblems from breweries in every quarter of the globe . . . Sapporo of Japan, San Miguel of the Philippines, Leopard of New Zealand, Red Stripe of Jamaica.

The complete collection of 35 brewery tankards—varying in shape, in color and in design—will be totally fascinating. A country-by-country tour of the world's great breweries. And, indeed, that would be the only way that an individual—who had both the time and the resources—could ever hope to assemble such a collection of specially crafted brewery tankards.

Totally authentic . . . finely crafted in every detail

The tankards will be meticulously crafted in traditional earthenware, under the supervision of Franklin Porcelain's affiliate in Japan—each to the exacting specifications of the issuing brewery. The colors and emblems appearing on each tankard will be vivid and true—carefully authenticated by the officials of that brewery. The decorative borders and handle flourishes will be individually applied by hand. Even the capacity of each tankard has been established to approximate the size of a brewmaster's tasting mug—a purpose to which these tankards are particularly suited.

Tankards Great Breweries

Each tankard, moreover, will be accompanied by a specially written commentary providing the history and background of the brewery. These commentaries will contribute very significantly to the enjoyment of the collection. For they will also include information on the art of brewing. Quotations by the famous—and near-famous—in praise of a particular brew. And stories of fact and fancy associated with the brewing houses represented in the collection.

Complete with display rack . . . just $9.50 per tankard

A solid hardwood display rack has been specially designed to accommodate all 35 brewery tankards. Its handsome proportions and richly grained finish are in the spirit of the collection itself: bold, substantial and masculine. And each subscriber will receive the display rack as part of the collection.

Yet the price is especially favorable—just $9.50 per tankard. And payment will be on a convenient monthly basis—corresponding to the rate of issue of the collection: one tankard per month.

Issued in strictly limited edition

The Official Tankards of the World's Great Breweries will be issued in just one edition . . . only by direct subscription . . . and only for a limited period of time. There is a further limit of just one collection per person.

To subscribe, please mail the attached subscription application by the advance deadline of July 31, 1980. Under agreement with the issuing breweries, the collection will be withdrawn at the end of 1980, and the edition will be permanently and irrevocably closed.

Remember that your application must be sent directly to Franklin Porcelain, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania 19091—no later than July 31st.

His Father Helped Win MVP

Keith Hernandez Chases The St. Louis Blues Away

By Eliot Kaplan

As every baseball buff knows, Willie Stargell of the Pittsburgh Pirates and Keith Hernandez of the St. Louis Cardinals shared last year's National League Most Valuable Player award. But perhaps a share should be awarded to a third gentleman as well — Keith's father, John.

When he was hitting only .214 last April, Keith flew his father into St. Louis to observe him in action for a few games. Pop picked up the problem right away. "He was looping the bat," John says simply. "Swinging it over his head, trying to hit more home runs."

Wide World

Obviously, father knows best. Line drives started zipping off Keith's bat, and the lefty first baseman finished hitting .344 (tops in the majors), good enough to win the N.L. batting title, as well as half the MVP.

"Dad has a very good eye for things guys are doing wrong at the plate," says Keith, 26. "He can do it for anybody, but he knows me best of all because he's seen me play since I was a little kid."

Indeed, since he was 7, Keith was seemingly groomed to be a major league baseball player by his father, himself a former minor league first baseman in the Cardinal organization whose promising career in the 1940's ended abruptly after he was hit twice in the head by pitches, and his vision deteriorated. Father John would give both Keith and his older brother, Gary (also a former Cardinal minor leaguer), written tests on baseball strategy, all the while schooling the boys on the fundamentals of both hitting and fielding (the lessons paid off — Keith has won the Gold Glove the past two seasons).

The Cardinals signed Keith straight out of high school, and after two lackluster seasons in the minors ("I was only 18, what did they expect?"), his stock suddenly rose in 1974 when he led the American Association in hitting with a .351 average and followed that up in '75 with a .330 mark. Soon people started talking of "the next Stan Musial."

But in his first year with the Cardinals, Hernandez reminded fans more of Stan Laurel. He struggled, hitting but .250, and over the next three years, despite hitting .289 in '76 and .291 in '77, Hernandez gave no sure sign of superstardom. In 1978 his average dipped to .255.

"There he was going for homers," says his father. "Keith distorted his swing all out of whack trying to give the Cardinals what he thought they wanted."

But then came 1979 — .344: 48 doubles, 116 runs scored, 105 runs batted in — and only 11 homers.

Baseball folks attribute the turnabout to Hernandez' new maturity, new confidence. Perhaps in his early years, Hernandez, a quiet, introspective guy, a true student of the game, should have listened to Yogi Berra's famous advice, "You can't think and hit at the same time." "Keith would come back to the dugout, moaning, 'What am I doing wrong? Why didn't I hit that fastball?' " recalls former Cardinal star Lou Brock. "He had to learn to turn that aggression off himself and focus it on the opposition."

Hernandez is the first to agree. "Some guys are cocky," he notes, "and maybe that's good in an athlete — knowing you're good — because if you believe in yourself and you have the tools, you will succeed. But if you have the tools and don't believe in yourself, you may not succeed or it might take longer. In my case, it took three or four years."

And now that he's achieved that success, he, his wife, Sue, and daughters Jessica, 7, and Melissa, 1½ months, will be well provided for for many, many years; Hernandez recently signed a five-year contract worth $3.8 million.

Hernandez is again among baseball's leading hitters this year, and most experts expect him to remain there for several more. ("I'm just entering my prime," he says.) In fact, he recently hit two home runs in a game for the first time in his career.

This display of power didn't please everyone, though. "Frankly, I was worried when I heard that," his father relates. "I don't want him to slip back into any bad habits."

Not to worry. His next time up after the two homers, Keith calmly stepped to the plate and lined a solid single to right. John Hernandez could relax. FW

Royal Roman Country
Estate Bell

Give your home or patio a touch of luxury out of the past—an authentic replica of the Roman Country Estate Bell that might have once graced the royal summer palace of the mighty Caesar himself!

Since you may not have as large a household staff as Caesar, we've had the entire bell carefully antiqued so that it will never need polishing. Its beautiful luster will last year after year, throughout the four seasons, and its musical refrain will delight your guests.

Of course, with the price of metals and craftsmanship skyrocketing, you could expect to pay an emperor's ransom for a collector's treasure like this, complete with its own chain pull! 20" long. Act now, you can still obtain this decorator's gem for just $19.95—because our supply comes directly from the source.

Observations

Name that cartoon. Step right up, ladies and gentlemen, and try your skill in the First Annual Observations Cartoon Contest. Exercise your humor. Exercise your mind. Simply write a caption for the cartoon above. Make it as funny as you can, and as short as possible. Here's a hint: We won't mind if your caption deals with energy use (misuse), government policy, government regulation... you get the picture. The three funniest captions, and the names of their authors, will be published in a later Observations.

Livelier art. Why a cartoon contest? Because we'd like to know how you view the lighter side of national problems... and because humor has always been a good way to make a point. Besides, we like cartoons. Since starting Observations back in 1975, we've run a cartoon or two in practically every column. That's close to 150 cartoons—all used to enliven the column, and present a point of view.

Artful lodger. Cartoons have a long and honorable history in America. Benjamin Franklin's drawing of a snake representing the colonies cut into many parts with the caption "Join or Die" was used during the Revolution. By 1880, a German-American cartoonist, Thomas Nast, earned almost as much as the President. Nast gave us "Uncle Sam," the Republican elephant and the Democratic donkey. A favorite target was New York's infamous "Boss Tweed," whom he once drew as a pot-bellied vulture. In our sample Nast cartoon we see a jackass blowing inflationary soap bubbles during the Panic of 1873.

Fame and glory. Our contest won't turn you into another Nast. But your caption may appear at a later date in the 503 newspapers which carry Observations about every other week. Just clip the cartoon and write (or type) your caption underneath (one caption per entry, please). Send by August 20 to Observations, Box CC, 150 E. 42nd Street, New York, N.Y. 10017. And keep watching for the winners.

It's a fact: To build a single power plant, a utility must obtain as many as 90 different licenses or operating permits from federal, state, and local agencies.

Children in Hospital: No More Tears

By Stephen Fried

A trip to the hospital — whether for routine tests or a major operation — is often a terrifying experience for a child. But the way a parent handles the situation can help ease some of that fear.

Dr. Ann Beuf, a sociologist at the University of Pennsylvania, has studied children in hospitals and written a book titled Biting Off the Bracelet, which offers guidelines for any parent whose child faces a hospital stay. Here are some of Beuf's suggestions.

Children's Hospital National Medical Center

Children entering the hospital should be told everything that will occur. A child will be less scared if he knows the truth.

● Bolster your child's self-esteem before he or she goes into the hospital. One way to do this is by allowing him or her to make as many decisions as possible. "Ask the child what kind of meat the family should have for dinner," Beuf suggests. "Instead of saying, 'Let's go to the zoo,' ask where the child would like to spend a family outing. This builds up his or her sense of self, which you know is going to be eroded in the hospital. Parents should also praise their child as much as possible before a hospital visit."

● Ask the doctor — with your child out of the room — to explain everything that will happen in the hospital. Ask the kind of questions you think your child will ask you.

● Next, pick a good, quiet time and place to explain to your child what will occur. Tell him everything, keeping the explanations simple but truthful. If something is going to hurt, say so. "Don't withhold anything," Beuf says. "Otherwise your child will just be terrified and will think that he's been betrayed, that someone knew this was going to happen and just didn't tell him."

Also get as basic as possible in your explanations. Explain things like bedpans and intravenous feedings.

● Make sure you clearly explain the link between the procedures your child will undergo and his or her medical problem. "A child must know why he's there," Beuf says. "This may be readily understandable in the case of an accident victim, but children often don't understand the link between painful or embarrassing diagnostic tests and the way they feel."

● If doctors and nurses ask questions that your child is perfectly capable of answering, let him respond to them. If you do all the answering, this will make your child feel even more helpless.

● Don't in any way imply that your child's illness or accident is his responsibility. While doing research for her book, Beuf noticed children who were subtly, or in some cases not so subtly, given moral responsibility for their illnesses. How? By a parent who jokingly says, "Oh, if you only had listened to me and stayed away from that street," or similar remarks.

● Avoid the "arrival ceremony." This occurs when the parent comes to visit the sick child, presents a gift and expects the child to immediately perk up and smile. In this situation, the parent must spare the child from any responsibility to act "appreciative."

● Try not to let your child see how upset you are that he is sick.

● Ask the doctor or hospital personnel to explain any particular programs or arrangements they offer for children. Many hospitals now allow parents to spend the night with their child — right in the same room. Others, like the Children's Hospital in Denver, allow a child's young siblings to visit with a doctor's permission. Such contact with family members contributes the most to easing a child's fears. An important announcement to collectors

The Carson City Silver Dollar

Solid Sterling Silver Commemorative Miniature

Only $1 each if you act Before Aug. 23, 1980

Because we took a large position in precious silver at extremely favorable prices, we are now able to offer collectors these miniature Carson City Silver Dollar commemorative coins at just $1 each when purchased in rolls of ten. Each is .925 pure Sterling Silver (a higher silver content than even the original full-size government issue coins). Each offers extraordinary beauty and value. But to take advantage of this unique $1 offer, you must act now.

Created to take advantage of silver from the fabled Comstock Lode in the nearby Nevada Mountains, the Carson City Mint struck Morgan dollars, which have become the rarest and most desirable of all U.S. Silver coins.

Designed by George T. Morgan, the coin features the head of Miss Liberty on one side and an eagle within a wreath on the other. The letters "CC"—mark of the Carson City Mint and the only double-letter mint mark in U.S. history appears under the wreath.

Now you have the unique opportunity to possess the world's finest miniature silver dollar—minted in solid sterling silver—for just $1 each, when purchased in rolls of ten. This exquisite coin is a perfect reproduction of the 1878 Carson City Silver Dollar produced at that historic mint.

Value of Silver Changing Rapidly

While the attention of many has focused on the soaring price of gold, it is a fact that silver has changed even more dramatically in value in recent months. Because of this, we are able to offer these exquisite miniature Silver Dollars to you now for just $1 each—but only if you act by Aug 23, 1980

Die-Struck for Exquisite Detail

Each miniature coin is painstakingly die-struck from polished solid sterling silver, to achieve an extraordinary fine, mint perfection. Every detail of the breathtaking original is faithfully reproduced.

Each coin contains .925 pure sterling silver, and they come to you in "banker's rolls" of ten. Each roll is accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity. These rolls of miniature Carson City Silver Dollars are a silver treasure to be cherished for years to come—and, as rolls or as individual coins, they make the ideal gift.

Price Guaranteed Only Until Aug. 23, 1980

We expect demand for these commemorative miniature Carson City Silver Dollars to be enormous—and we have taken a position on the metal markets of the world. However, due to the rapid fluctuations in the price of silver, we frankly don't know what we will have to pay for silver when our current inventories run out. Therefore, we cannot hold open the low price of $1 each for these brilliant coins beyond the date printed above. In addition, we must set a strict order limit of ten rolls per order.

An Unusual UNLIMITED Guarantee

We are so certain that you will be thrilled with the beauty, workmanship and enduring value of your miniature solid sterling silver Carson City Silver Dollars that we offer them to you on an unlimited guarantee of satisfaction.

You may return them at any time in the original "banker's roll" with the Certificate of Authenticity for prompt refund of your purchase price (except postage and handling, of course) no questions asked.

We expect heavy demand for these desirable collector's coins, and we will fill orders on a strictly first-come-first-served basis. Place your order now. For fastest service, use our toll-free telephone number, or mail coupon today.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

Preschool Reading

Educators have traditionally frowned on teaching prekindergarten-age children to read, but Drs. June and Robert Hamblin, two Brigham Young University researchers, say the concept is not only a myth, it also inhibits the intellectual growth of children.

The Hamblins have developed a method of teaching reading to youngsters that they say "should revolutionize preschools." They've divided work time in preschools into 15-minute segments, during which a child works on reading skills. When the time is up, the child is rewarded with a play project. The Hamblins have found that the youngsters who've gone through their unique "work-relax" program don't lose interest in school when they're placed in the more traditional setting. And, note the Hamblins, who have conducted their research with children from both middle-class and welfare-receiving families, two-thirds of the youngsters they've trained are labeled "gifted" when they enter kindergarten.

Senior Citizen Rides Again!

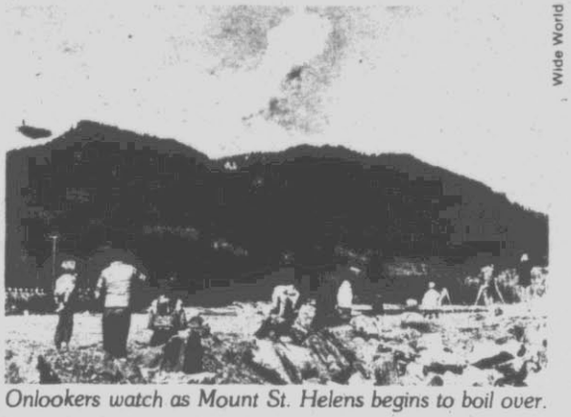

Riding a bicycle across the country is hardly news these days — unless the rider happens to be 75 years old. On May 1, Ed Delano left his home in Davis, Calif., and, in 33½ days, peddled his way across the country to Worcester, Mass., where he joined his former classmates for their 50th reunion at Worcester Polytechnic Institute. Delano knows the route fairly well; 10 years ago, he bicycled to his 40th reunion.

Delano, christened "Foxy Grandpa" by one of his 18 grandchildren, took up serious bicycle-riding at the age of 58, after a 39-year hiatus. "Riding keeps me fit and happy, and, since I'm retired, it gives me something to do," he explains. "I've also found that I've motivated a lot of people to take up the sport — I guess they figure if I can do it, they can, too."

Marvin Richmond

Wide World

Bubble, Bubble...

Mount St. Helens' eruption in May left devastation in its wake, but to geologists interested in geothermal energy, the volcano also confirmed that the Cascade Range offers a promising source of energy.

"What Mount St. Helens indicated is that in the Cascades there is a great possibility that high-temperature molten rock exists at shallow depths," explains Dr. Wendell Duffield, who coordinates the U.S. Geological Survey's Geothermal Research Program. "We are now exploring ways of harnessing this naturally occurring thermal energy."

Duffield points out that the heat in the rocks isn't much good unless it can be brought to the surface in a usable form, usually in water or steam. "Geysers, hot springs and the mud pots you see in Yellowstone are good examples of geothermal energy," he adds. "However, we generally have to drill down about 8,000 to 10,000 feet to tap our energy source; the steam that rises to the surface is used to power a turbine generator, which produces electricity. And if the water that rises isn't hot enough to generate electricity, it can always be pumped directly into home heating systems. Nearly all of Iceland is heated that way."

That Snake In The Grass

Snakes have long been burdened with an undeserved reputation, but according to Steve Aird, a Colorado State University herpetologist, "they're more scared of you than you are of them."

Aird, who has a collection of 50 to 60 snakes from around the world, points out that of the hundreds of species of snakes that live in this country, only about 25 are poisonous. "Snakes are deaf, and they don't see very well; when one strikes, it's usually reacting to a sudden movement," he explains. "But most snakes are harmless, although people often kill them out of fear. In fact, snakes are beneficial to have around because they eat all sorts of garden-destroying insects."

Lifestyles

School. In 1950 only 6 percent of all the applicants to this country's medical schools were women. By the end of the 1970's, however, nearly 30 percent of medical-school applicants were women, reports the New England Journal of Medicine. At present, women constitute only 10 or 11 percent of the total number of practicing physicians in the United States; within the next decade or two, this number will increase to around 30 percent.

Animals. A recent American Animal Association survey revealed that veterinarians in the United States and Canada would rather treat dogs than cats, reports Animal magazine. Dr. Keith Hills, a spokesman for the Association, says he thinks dogs and cats are equally likable but that dogs are usually easier to handle than cats.

Travel. Vacationers and business people are cutting back on their use of cars; automobile travel throughout the United States in 1979 was down 12.8 percent from the preceding year, a survey by the American Automobile Association indicates.

Smoker Preference: Among the 95% of smokers stating a preference, the MERIT low tar/good taste combination was favored 3 to 1 over high tar leaders when tar levels were revealed!

Long-Term Satisfaction: In the latest survey of former high tar smokers who have switched to MERIT, 9 out of 10 reported they continue to enjoy smoking, are glad they switched, and report MERIT is the best-tasting low tar they've ever tried!

MERIT is the proven alternative to high tar smoking. And you can taste it.

FREE! PAPAYA the Magical Melon of the Tropics Famous as an AID to DIGESTION

WHAT IS PAPAYA? Papaya is a luscious melon-shaped fruit that grows in clusters on short palm trees. It grows only in the tropics where the natives have valued it as both food and medicine for centuries. Papaya offers properties not found in any other fruit or vegetable. PAPAYA IS THE ONLY FOOD CONTAINING PAPAIN, a powerful enzyme that DIGESTS PROTEINS.

Now we are able to bring you the potent Papaya enzyme that helps digest proteins in our convenient "PAPAYA-ENZYME TABLETS."

These tablets also include a powerful starch-digesting enzyme, giving you 2 digestive aids in each tablet.

Right now you can get a bottle of 100 PAPAYA-ENZYME TABLETS—FREE, if you send an order for any of the products in this ad. See what this amazing combination of Papaya and concentrated enzymes can do in helping you digest your food better.

Check the box in the order blank and return it with an order for any of the items in this ad and we will include without charge a bottle of 100 PAPAYA-ENZYME TABLETS.

This offer expires Aug. 4, 1980.

ENJOY THE REWARDS OF PAINT-FREE LIVING

Made of solid vinyl, this astonishing siding needs no painting. It shrugs off the punishment of sun, wind, rain, ice and snow. It can't rot, peel or blister like wood . . . won't rust, dent or corrode like metal. What's more, it insulates your home to make it warmer in winter and cooler in summer. Saves fuel and makes the home quieter. Adds to the home's value. And how beautiful it is! See it. Touch it. Test it yourself. Mail the card today!

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

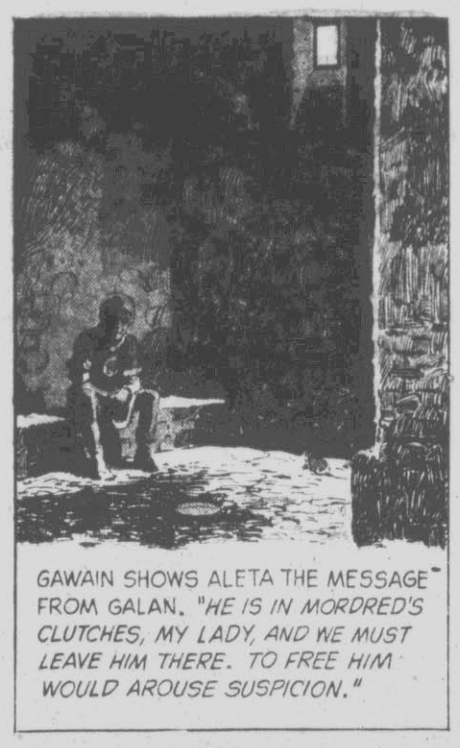

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

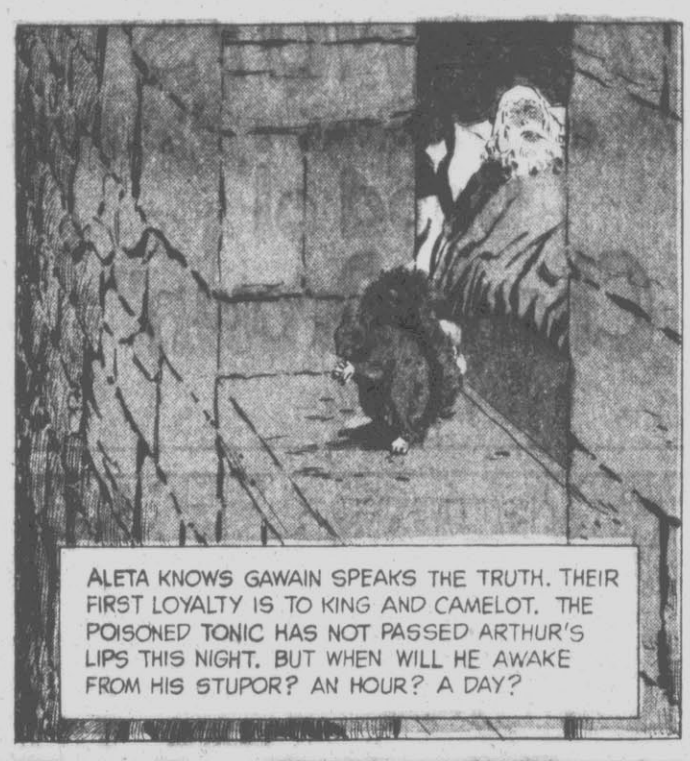

Our Story: A KINDLY NURSE HAS CONFESSED TO HELPING POISON KING ARTHUR, BUT ONLY TO SAVE HER SON FROM A CRUEL FATE AT MORDRED'S HANDS.

"MORDRED WILL BE EXPOSED AND OUR PROOF WILL BE PLAIN," ALETA RESOLVES. "NURSE: RESUME YOUR DUTIES. OBEY MORDRED AS IF NOTHING HAS HAPPENED."

GAWAIN SHOWS ALETA THE MESSAGE FROM GALAN. "HE IS IN MORDRED'S CLUTCHES, MY LADY, AND WE MUST LEAVE HIM THERE. TO FREE HIM WOULD AROUSE SUSPICION."

ALETA KNOWS GAWAIN SPEAKS THE TRUTH. THEIR FIRST LOYALTY IS TO KING AND CAMELOT. THE POISONED TONIC HAS NOT PASSED ARTHUR'S LIPS THIS NIGHT. BUT WHEN WILL HE AWAKE FROM HIS STUPOR? AN HOUR? A DAY?

THROUGHOUT THE NIGHT THEY ATTEND THE KING. ONLY THE CRICKETS VIOLATE THE SILENCE. MOMENTS BEFORE SUNRISE, A GROGGY ARTHUR OPENS HIS EYES. "I WANT A SIDE OF BEEF!" HE COMMANDS DELIRIOUSLY. "A SIDE OF BEEF AND TWENTY EGGS."

ALETA DISCREETLY MAKES HER WAY TO THE KITCHENS. THE KING MUST REGAIN HIS STRENGTH, BUT NO ONE MUST YET KNOW OF THE RECOVERY. SHE HAS A PLAN.
