

Consumer Prices Inch Up Again In Data For June

By GLENN RITT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Propelled by rising food and housing costs, consumer prices in June rose at an annual rate of 12.4 percent, slightly higher than the month before, the government said today.

The Labor Department reported that consumer prices in June increased 1 percent, compared with 0.9 percent rises in both May and April. The annual rate during those two months was about 11 percent.

For the first six months of this year, inflation — as measured by the consumer price index — accelerated at a 14.8 percent seasonally adjusted annual pace, the Labor Department said.

The Labor Department also reported that average take-home pay in June fell 0.4 percent. Over the year, inflation adjusted spendable earnings — which subtract Social Security payments and federal income taxes — were down 7.7 percent.

Despite June's slight increase, the inflation rate is proving more moderate than earlier this year when it stood at more than an 18 percent annual level.

The Labor Department reported that four-fifths of June's 1 percent increase was due to housing prices and mortgage costs. That entire component jumped 1.8 percent, but officials said it should show sharp declines soon.

"Mortgage interest rates have declined, but did not show up in June's figures," said Labor Department economist Patrick Jackman. "We know they will turn around drastically next month, but we aren't quite sure about home prices," he said.

Food prices, meanwhile, rose 0.5 percent in June compared with 0.3 percent in May. Gasoline prices, however, dropped 1 percent last month, the department said.

Gasoline rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 105.7 percent during the first three months of this year but has declined at a 6.2 percent pace in the second quarter.

Jackman predicted "relatively stable" gasoline prices in the current quarter and probably throughout the year.

"On the other hand, food prices are a big question mark. They are the key to where consumer prices go this year," Jackman said.

Food prices, due largely to the heat wave that has struck the Midwest and South, are expected to rise strongly beginning in late summer.

Once this begins, particularly for beef, consumers could expect a period of six months to a year of generally upward prices, Jackman suggested.

Besides housing and food, most other consumer goods continued to show moderate rates of increase — a trend that began in April.

The Labor Department reported this general breakdown for June:

—Home financing costs rose 4.6 percent.

—Rents jumped 1.2 percent

—Auto finance charges, which rose at a monthly rate of 4 percent during the first five months of 1980, declined 0.8 percent.

—Prices for sugar, soft drinks and other prepared foods rose substantially, but meat, poultry, fish and egg prices declined, although not as much as in the previous 2 months.

—Restaurant meals rose 0.9 percent.

—Public transportation was up 1.1 percent, reflecting large increase in airline and inter-city train fares.

—Apparel and their upkeep was unchanged in price.

Ash Masks Again As Volcano Erupts

By KEVIN McCULLEN
Associated Press Writer
VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — After lulling observers with six weeks of relative serenity, Mount St. Helens exploded in a spectacular series of eruptions, hurling ash 11 miles high into a clear blue sky. Ash reached Canada and air traffic was restricted in parts of the Northwest.

Residents of some cities in eastern Washington were warned they may have to haul out their ash masks again following the mountain's display Tuesday, which could be seen for more than 100 miles.

The U.S. Geological Survey said a pyroclastic flow — a superheated avalanche of ash, gas and rock — poured down the north slope of the mountain almost to Spirit Lake. The mountain resort area six miles away became a volcanic wasteland after the mountain's first eruption May 18, which had a force as great as an atomic bomb.

There were no reports of injury late Tuesday and the only evacuation was carried out in the town of Cougar as a precaution. Many of the town's residents had not returned after the volcano's previous eruptions May 18, May 25 and June 12, and some of the 20 to 25 people who did were not fleeing the town again, authorities said.

The eruption came as a surprise to scientists and federal disaster officials who were winding down activities.

Scientists had said that a recent lull in volcanic activity indicated that pressure was being released rather than building within the volcano. That theory was blown as the first blast ripped a hole in the lava dome building in the volcano's gaping crater.

"Yesterday, we did not expect anything like this to happen," said USGS geologist Tim Hait. "Today, probably this morning, we did not expect anything like this."

The eruptions began at 5:14 p.m. PDT, shortly after a flurry of earthquakes. Six quakes were picked up between 6 a.m. and 11 a.m. and by 3 p.m., they had increased in frequency to about one every five minutes, scientists said.

A series of four or five small earthquakes ended at 5:13 p.m. One minute later came a mushroom-shaped eruption of steam. Subsequent blasts contained ash that darkened the sky and could be seen as far north as Seattle and south as Corvallis, Ore.

The National Weather Service charted ash plumes that moved north-northeast, following the same path as the ash-laden cloud that caked eastern Washington and northern Idaho with the grit May 18.

No Shortages

The City of Greenville is not experiencing the water and power shortages many cities around the nation are dealing with.

According to Charles Horne, director of Greenville Utilities, the city is experiencing some peaks and has operated its load management system, but the load has not been as heavy as it was this time last year.

"It will probably be up there where we were last year some time in August when the university gets back into full swing and when the tobacco curing gets going," he commented. "We are not having any water problems either," added Horne. "Our treatment plant is adequate."

The high and low temperatures for Tuesday were 95 and 73 degrees. The level of the Tar River on the National Weather Service gauge at 8 a.m. today was 2.5 feet. No precipitation was reported.

Time Out To Study Water Plant Bids

By LEIGH COAKLEY
Reflector Staff Writer

Consulting engineers for the Greenville Utilities Commission will be studying and evaluating bids during the next several months and must decide what companies will construct a water filtration plant and make improvements to the Greenville water supply system.

Bids from approximately 24 local and out-of-state contractors were opened yesterday at a bid-letting session held on the third floor of the Greenville Utilities Building. The low bids for construction on the filtration plant project totaled $5.8 million. Supplementing this figure will be the costs of filtration equipment, constructing an impoundment structure to create settling basins, and building a raw water intake structure.

According to Charles Horne, director of the Commission, the entire project will cost approximately $10 million. "The apparent low bidder will be awarded the bid," said Horne. "Bidding was very active here and a broad interest in this project was represented."

Low bidder for the general construction contract was Lee Construction Company of Charlotte with a base bid of $5,075,200. Other general construction bidders were D.R. Allen & Son of Fayetteville, $5,249,544; Wrenn Wilson of Durham, $6,039,960; Harry Pepper Associates of Jacksonville, Fla., $6,060,800; Barnhill Contracting Co. of Tarboro, $6,112,546; Paul N. Howard Co. of Greensboro, $6,043,292; King Hunter Inc. of Greensboro, $5,549,000; Arthur Pugh Construction Co. of Chamblee, Ga., $5,581,750; Christopher Construction Co. of Columbus, Ohio, $5,379,000, and Dickerson, Inc. of Monroe, $5,824,000.

The bids for filtration equipment were postponed until Aug. 26 due to an insufficient number of bids. Horne pointed out that N.C. law requires at least three bidders on a project prior to the first opening before being made public. After the bid has been readvertised, the bid may then be awarded to a single bidder. According to Horne, the contract for filtration equipment is highly specialized and indicated that that may be the reason for only one bidder.

The low plumbing bidder was Jessup Co. of Greensboro with $86,750. (Please turn to Page 16)

6 Bombs Explode In Central Tehran

By The Associated Press

Several bombs exploded today in a bustling shopping district in downtown Tehran, killing six persons and injuring nearly 100 others, Tehran Radio reported.

At least one of the bombs exploded on Ferdowsi Avenue, a main street in the center of city, near the Turkish Embassy and the German Consulate, the radio said.

Ferdowsi Avenue, one of the busiest streets in the capital, is lined with shops selling carpets, antiques and other items. A number of embassies are also located there.

The bombs began exploding about 9:30 a.m. — 2:30 a.m. EDT — at a time when the street usually is crowded with shoppers.

The state radio quoted a revolutionary committee spokesman as saying authorities had "clues" to the identities of the bombers. He did not elaborate.

The official Pars news agency said 10 more drug traffickers were executed this morning on orders of the regime's special anti-narcotics court, headed by Ayatollah Sadegh Khalkhali. The state radio also reported the executions of four Iraqi "saboteurs" in oil-rich Khuzestan Province.

On Tuesday, Iran reported new Iraqi border attacks as an exile opposed to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's regime was killed in the United States by an assassin disguised as a mailman.

Pars said Iraqi gunners scored a direct hit on an oil well at Naft-Shahr, setting off a fire that raged for hours.

It said a land mine planted in the same area by Iraqi mercenaries blew up under a bus, killing five Iranians and wounding 15.

Several border villages also came under Iraqi artillery fire, and Iranian forces returned the fire, inflicting "heavy casualties" on the Iraqis, Tehran Radio said.

Pars also reported that Kurdish guerrillas fighting for autonomy from Khomeini's regime killed eight revolutionary guards and wounded 13 near the town of Baneh in West Azerbaijan, Pars said. The report claimed scores of the rebels were killed or wounded in a seven-hour battle.

Tehran Radio said "a large number" of guerrillas and three pro-Khomeini men were killed in fighting along the Sanandaj-Marivan road, in the northwestern Kurdish region.

In Bethesda, Md., an assassin posing as a mailman with a special delivery package shot and killed Ali Akbar Tabatabai, former press attache at the Iranian Embassy in Washington and president of the Iran Freedom Foundation. The foundation has scheduled a rally in Washington Sunday to protest Khomeini's rule and the holding of the 52 U.S. hostages in Iran.

Kennedy To Avoid Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy says he will step aside as the Senate committee he heads decides whether to investigate Billy Carter's links with Libya in the midst of Kennedy's political struggle with President Carter.

Through his spokesman, Richard Drayne, the Massachusetts Democrat said he will tell the Judiciary Committee that "he should not participate" in today's scheduled decision in view of the fact he is challenging Carter for the Democratic presidential nomination.

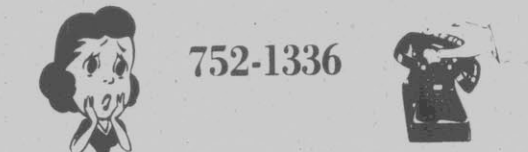

The seven Republicans on the 17-member committee voted unanimously Tuesday to recommend that the panel hold hearings on Billy Carter's relations with the Libyan government.

Democratic members were noncommittal with Sen. Dennis DeConcini of Arizona saying he had an open mind and others declining comment.

The president's brother registered as a foreign agent for Libya under protest last week to avoid a grand jury investigation and acknowledged accepting $220,000 from the Libyan government. He claims the money constituted installments on a loan to him.

The White House said Tuesday that Billy Carter arranged a meeting between the president's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, and a Libyan official in an attempt to gain Libya's support for release of the American hostages in Iran.

The Pitt County Red Cross has asked Hotline to add to the information given in yesterday's item about Water Safety Instructor renewal that anyone wishing to request this or any one Red Cross-sponsored course should call the Red Cross office, 752-4222.

Oil Consortium Plans Finance Coastal 'Test'

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A consortium of oil companies will finance a $22 million test drilling project in the outer continental shelf east of Wilmington in October, a state spokesman said Tuesday.

Angela G. Skelton, a coordinator for the state Office of Marine Affairs, said the first drill site will be 93 miles east of Wilmington. It is designed to gather geological information from that area, she said.

If the tests are encouraging, she said, exploratory drilling could begin by the fall of 1981.

The consortium is headed by Chevron Oil Co. Six other companies have confirmed their interest in the project and 10 others are considering it, Ms. Skelton said.

"If there is a find, the oil or gas would not necessarily be produced," she said. "There would have to be enough to make it commercially feasible. Oil production is very costly. A mile of pipeline is more than $1 million."

Ms. Skelton is traveling through the state's 10 oceanfront counties to explain the oil and gas exploration and the potential effects of a discovery.

Meanwhile, backers of a proposed oil refinery in Brunswick County said they remain optimistic despite an industry analyst's notation of "signs of distress" among oil companies as a result of the unprecedented drop this summer in the demand for gasoline.

"We have to look at this long term," said Marge Howell, a spokeswoman for Brunswick Energy Co., which plans to build a $750 million refinery on the west bank of the Cape Fear River.

She said the company is committed to building a 150,000-barrel-a-day refinery.

Firemen Aid Foresters

ABOUT 100 ACRES of pasture and woodland was involved in a fire near Bethel yesterday, North Carolina Forest Ranger Mark Webb said. Webb praised the efforts of volunteer firemen from Bethel, Staton House and Pactolus who assisted the foresters. "It was hot," he said, "and it was nice to have some relief." The fire was brought under control in about two hours and the area was safe this morning, he said. He cautioned the public to take care during this dry weather to prevent future fires. (Reflector Photo By Sue Fernald)

Inflation Fighting Tips Given

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — While food is the consumer's major concern, home economists responding to a survey seeking inflation-fighting tips overwhelmingly agree that credit, followed closely by clothing, offers better money-saving opportunities.

The survey, conducted by Botsford Ketchum Public Relations, a San Francisco advertising and public relations firm specializing in consumer products, sought to find out how inflation is affecting consumers and how business can best respond.

The "Penny For Your Inflation Thoughts" study was made among members of Home Economists in Business, a professional organization of graduate home economists in consumer-related industries such as foods and nutrition, textiles and clothing, home service, household products and institutional management.

Respondents reported that the majority of questions they receive from consumers are food-related, indicating that this area appears to be the consumer's primary concern and greatest challenge.

Buying sale items was the most frequently given tip for controlling the food budget, followed by better menu planning. Among other suggestions from the 252 responses:

—Use shopping lists; don't buy on impulse.

—Cut down on convenience foods.

—Substitute dairy and other protein sources for high-priced meat cuts.

—Make wise use of food coupons.

—Comparison shop.

—Shop for good nutritional value for the food dollar.

—Buy large cuts of meat and whole chickens; do own butchering.

—Plan menus to serve more than one meal.

—Cut down on serving-portion sizes.

—Serve more casseroles and one-dish meals.

Respondents had few specific suggestions for controlling costs in either credit or clothing but indicated that the best use of credit is no credit buying at all and that clothing costs can be controlled by simply curtailing purchases.

Inflation fighting can be best handled if consumers take inflation personally and use some creativity, according to one respondent who said, "Share everything from carpooling for groceries to bringing your own beverages and appetizers to parties."

Another home economist said, "Exchange your expertise for services needed; for example, mend a bachelor's britches or make a meal in exchange for stereo repair."

Questioned on saving energy, one respondent stated, "It's not the saving of energy that's hard — it's just the getting started."

Suggestions for energy conservation included:

—Don't preheat the oven.

—Turn off unnecessary lights.

—Make use of microwave oven as often as possible.

—Use energy-efficient window and fireplace treatment.

—Carpool as often as possible.

A positive attitude toward fighting inflation was another theory: "It's more fulfilling to rise to the challenge of inflation than to just approach it from the dreary standpoint, 'I have to do it to survive financially.'"

Nutrition Day Camps To Be Held

The Pitt County Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program will conduct Nutrition Day Camp in four communities this month. Activities are planned for boys and girls ages nine through 13.

The camp will include classes on Fun With Nutrition Snacks, bike safety, nature study and recreational games and songs. Refreshments will be served at the close of the program.

The day camps will be held 10 a.m. to noon on the following dates: July 23, Ayden Grammar School, cafeteria, Lee Street, Ayden; July 24, Simpson Community Building, Simpson; July 29, Robinson Elementary School, cafeteria, Winterville; and July 31, G. R. Whitfield Elementary School, Grimesland.

The EFNEP is a part of the Agricultural Extension Service. For further information call 758-1196.

Dear Abby

Husband Smokes While Wife Burns

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can't stand cigarette smoke, but two years ago I married a three-pack-a-day man. I knew it would be hard for Jim to give up smoking altogether, so I told him I'd appreciate it if he wouldn't smoke in our bedroom.

He promised, and for a long time he kept his promise. Then he started to "forget" once in a while, and now he's been smoking in our bedroom regularly.

One night his cigarette rolled off the ashtray and burned a big hole in the nightstand. That did it! I finally said, "OK, Buddy, there are going to be some new rules around here. There will be no lovemaking in the same room you smoke in."

Knowing Jim, I thought for sure that would cure him, but it didn't. Jim is still smoking in the bedroom, and I'm ... HUNGRY FOR LOVE

DEAR HUNGRY: You overplayed your hand. Give Jim another chance and remind him of his promise. And insist that he owes it to you to honor that promise. Should he "forget," remind him, and remind him, and remind him. But never withhold marital relations as a means of punishing him.

DEAR ABBY: HEARTSICK PARENTS wrote: "Recently our 25-year-old daughter decided to follow-in the ways of the times. She took to living with her boyfriend, and now they have a child. They say that marriage may or may not come later. God knows how upset and brokenhearted we have been, but we thought it best to tell our wonderful friends of many years that we were new grandparents."

HEARTSICK PARENTS' complaint was that not one of their friends had written or kept in touch since. They wrote: "How it would have helped to ease our heartache if they had responded. Do they think that we condone our daughter's lifestyle? (We do not, but we're making the best of it.)"

You replied, "Wonderful friends should be supportive, loving and non-judgmental, so perhaps your friends were not so 'wonderful' after all."

Abby, before "wonderful friends" can be supportive, loving and non-judgmental, the parents must exhibit these traits.

If the new grandparents themselves admit to being "upset and heartbroken," then what can their friends say?

Frankly, if friends told me that they had unfortunately become grandparents, expressing negative feelings about the event, I'd be at a loss for words, too. And perhaps permanently.

ZEPHYR COVE, NEV.

DEAR NEVADA: Thanks for an angle I failed to see. But "wonderful friends" can help "upset and heartbroken" parents understand and endure the unconventional lifestyles of their children. That's when "wonderful friends" are really needed.

DEAR ABBY: An acquaintance of mine sent me an invitation to her daughter's wedding. I have never met the daughter and do not plan to attend the wedding. Neither do I plan to send a wedding gift.

I feel that to ignore the invitation would be rude, so I thought I'd just send the bride and groom a nice card of congratulations.

I have asked the opinions of others about this, and have been told that sending a card with no gift would be worse

Crowded Housing Said Factor In Miami Riot

MIAMI (AP) — Overcrowded public housing that creates "attitudes of disrespect and hopelessness" was one of the major causes of racial disturbances in Miami, says a Dade County official.

County Housing and Urban Development Director Melvin Adams, reporting to a citizens' panel appointed by Gov. Bob Graham after bloody racial rioting in May, said county officials hope to help some families in overcrowded housing projects find apartments elsewhere.

Police say the worst violence of Miami's May riots, which resulted in 18 deaths and more than $100,000 in property damage, occurred in the James E. Scott Homes, a low-income housing project.

The projects erupted again last week as three days of racial disturbances rocked predominately black Liberty City. During last week's disturbances, many older residents blamed the problem on youths who had no jobs and no respect for the law.

County officials, saying that overpacked low-income public housing projects are breeding grounds for unrest, want to change the makeup of the Scott Homes.

"Scott will always be a black project," Adams said. "But it doesn't have to be a welfare project."

Adams said that with more than 3,000 residents living in 956 units, the Scott Homes is Dade's most densely populated area. Adams said potential problems of unrest apparently weren't given much thought when the project was built in 1954.

"Part of the project was built on the site of a dump, which shows you what people back in that time thought about where poor people ought to live," Adams said.

The seven-member panel plans to tour the Scott project next week to hear citizens' grievances. It also is investigating charges of racial injustice in Dade's legal system.

The May rioting broke out after four white former policemen were cleared of charges stemming from the beating death of a black businessman.

James Burke, vice chairman of the committee, said it hopes to have a report to Graham within two months.

Miss Schroeder, a victim of mental retardation and cerebral palsy, died three years ago at the age of 21.

Orlando contributed $10,000, and persuaded Caesars Boardwalk Regency to add another $15,000 toward the purchase of a $105,000 home on two acres of land here. Six moderate to mildly retarded men and women and one staff member will move into the home, which was dedicated Monday, on Sept. 1.

Our Ports Are Essential

If we are looking for good news it has to be that North Carolina's ports had their best year in history during the fiscal year 1979-80.

Gov. Jim Hunt announced that the ports had exceeded previous records for the second consecutive year.

There were combined revenues of $10.4 million for the year and profits were $819,488, exceeding the $575,200 of the previous year.

June was the best single month in history with profits of $267,287 at Wilmington, and a significant profit of $37,046 at Morehead City. For the year, however Morehead had a net loss of $116,506. Hunt said the state ports had become the major lumber products ports on the East coast.

Hunt saw the ports as the "bedrock for successful international trade by North Carolina companies." He also saw the desirability of moving ahead with capital expenditures for the expansion of both ports.

We are pleased that our ports are doing so well. If we want economic development the availability of good deep sea ports is essential. For many years North Carolina did little about that, but now we seem to be on the move.

Becoming Civic Institution

Speaking in behalf of an unknown number of Greenville families (and there are obviously many), a thank-you is due the performers, coordinator, the Recreation and Parks Department, and the City of Greenville, for the summer treat "Sunday in the Park"

City funds are spent on a very worthwhile project that pleases adults and children, attested to by generally splendid turnouts.

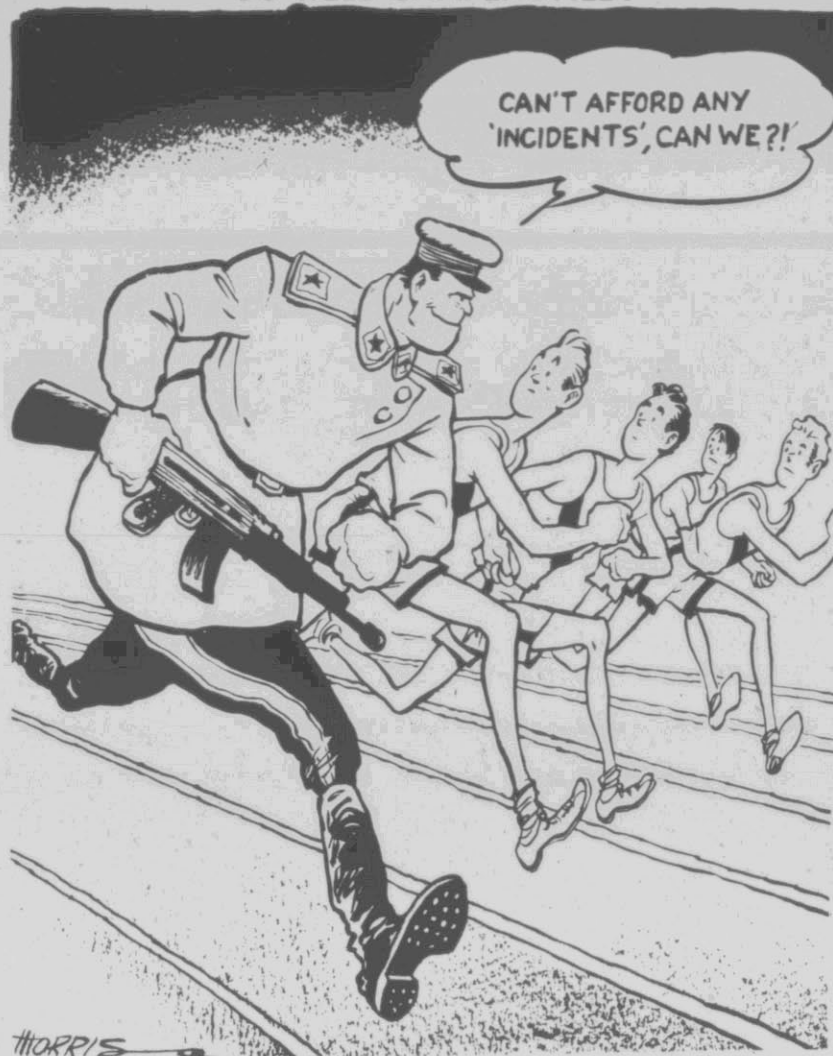

True, tastes vary. What is a joy to one is something less to another; but even a casual observer is apt to recognize many of the same faces sharing the pleasure of "live" entertainment.

The setting — a grassy slope — and informality add immeasurably to a pleasant evening.

After just so many seasons, "Sunday in the Park" has approached the status of a Greenville institution. It's one of the pleasurable institutions families can and do look forward to on a summer weekend.

All About Warranties

(Since Art Buchwald is now leading in the polls against Carter, Reagan and Anderson, his political managers have advised him to take a few weeks off to formulate his summer strategy. He left behind some of his favorite columns. — Editor)

Betty Furness, in a recent speech, revealed something that the average consumer has known for years. It is that the warranties that come with most American products aren't worth the computer cards they're printed on. There may have been a lot of changes in Washington, but one thing you can be sure of: the American consumer is getting a shuffling by the great free enterprise system.

Not long ago I went to McCarthy, Swaine and Klutzknowlton, the appliance store, to return an electric can opener I had bought my wife for Christmas.

"Why do you wish to return it?" the man asked.

"Because it doesn't work."

"Yes, but since it was a Christmas present, we didn't open up the package until Christmas morning, and therefore we didn't see the Green Warranty Card and have a chance to fill it out for a few days as we were too busy trying to get the thing to work."

"But if you didn't fill out and mail the Green Warranty Card within 24 hours of the purchase, it's hardly our fault that the electric can opener doesn't work, is it?"

"I wouldn't say that," I said. "I think I should get a appliance."

Re-Thinking About ERA

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
DETROIT — Had they another chance, Ronald Reagan's political advisers would stand up to the wrath of Phyllis Schlafly and push for reaffirming the 1976 platform plank that endorsed the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA).

"Except for Phyllis," one Reagan insider told us, "all the real pressure on ERA comes from the pro side... just like all the pressure on the abortion question comes from the anti side." Therefore, strictly in terms of hard practical politics, Reagan would have been best off to push for an anti-abortion plank (as he did) and a pro-ERA plank (as he did not).

Reagan's political high command feels newspaper and television obsession with ERA has hurt with women who might otherwise vote for Reagan. While the right might complain, Reagan advisers in hindsight believe that the strong anti-abortion plank would satisfy them no matter what happened on ERA.

Reagan's Warning

During a private talk with party leaders, Ronald Reagan referred to polling statistics that gravely disturbed his audience: Reagan, not President Carter, may suffer the most from Rep. John Anderson's independent candidacy.

Reagan said the statistics show that in the first 20 percentage points of Anderson's national vote on Nov. 4, Reagan would lose more votes than Carter. After that point is reached, the bigger loser would be Carter. But with Anderson unlikely to exceed the 20 percent tipping point, the Republicans stand to lose the most because of him.

A footnote: One reason right-wing haters of Henry Kissinger were persuaded not to demonstrate against his speech to the convention Tuesday night was a poll, taken for the Republican National Committee, showing a 68 percent national popularity rating that is higher than any other Republican, including Ronald Reagan.

Complaints About Casey
Reagan campaign manager William J. Casey is being rapped by Reagan political operatives for making a deal during his recent trip to Europe that he could not deliver: a promise that Americans living overseas would have a voice in the selection of the party's presidential ticket. The proposal was rejected overwhelmingly by the convention's Rules Committee.

Casey, a hard-working, tough New York lawyer, has still not managed to satisfy Reagan's regional political directors (known as RPDs) that he really knows his new trade of political management. On the organizational chart of the Reagan campaign, 54 state and territorial chairmen plus the 19 RPDs report directly to Casey.

One reason for the unhappiness of the RPDs: They have yet to see the fall campaign road map, which pollster and political adviser Richard Writihin is supposed to be perfecting. Now that the convention is over, they are hoping strategy for the fall campaign may soon emerge.

No Wheels

When Republican National Chairman William Brock heard that Reagan-Ford negotiations over the vice presidency were breaking down, he asked two early participants in the talks — Sens. Howard Baker and Robert Dole — to rush from Joe Louis Arena to the Detroit Plaza Hotel for emergency help.

But when the two Republican worthies left the convention, they could not find a car to take them back to the hotel. They were stranded. In fact, it was too late; by the time they would have arrived, the impasse between Reagan and Ford Cure In Assembly?

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — Locating group homes for the mentally handicapped in neighborhoods across North Carolina is bogged down in a stalemate which will likely be broken only by action in the General Assembly.

So far, the General Assembly has rejected efforts to override local legal stumbling blocks which are often put in place only to satisfy opposition to a group home by neighbors.

Local officials will pull out the book on zoning, fire, density, safety, health or any other ordinance they can find when intent upon stopping a proposal. Local opposition will often be wrapped in the pretext of protecting local autonomy over land use decisions.

The measures which failed in the Legislature would have essentially declared group homes for the mentally handicapped as permitted use in any residential area. Clear distinctions were made between group homes for the mentally handicapped, and those for drug or alcohol addicts or criminal offenders which would not have been automatically allowed.

Fears
"In fact, local governments' opposition, though it may be grounded on unjustified fears and stereotypical myths about mentally handicapped people, also is based in part on legitimate considerations having to do with local autonomy in land-use regulation and institutional impact," says H. Rutherford Turnbull, III, a mental health law specialist with the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill.

"But the issue is not whether state interest or local government interest alone should prevail.

"The real issue is how to accommodate the two so that the community-based residence can be available to those who need and want it," Turnbull states in a recent publication detailing the history of community treatment of the mentally handicapped in North Carolina.

In exploring the issue, Turnbull takes pains to define mentally handicapped in its two separate distinctions: mental retardation, and mental illness. He says it is important to point out that community group homes should be relatively small places in which residents live, receive limited treatment, and use community facilities for school or jobs.

Consideration of these group homes should be kept apart from those for drug and alcohol abusers, or criminals; and it should be clear that no dangerously mentally ill individuals would be housed there.

Such a narrow definition might reduce community fear and undercut local opposition, Turnbull feels. Also it would help if the facilities were called "community living facility," or "family care home."

Changes

State law would appropriately bar a local community from excluding a

Other Editors Say Save The Wretches

(The Raleigh Times)
Ever since the non-smokers began giving tongue to THEIR rights, puffing and paranoia go together.

Many who won't or can't kick the habit show a pronounced personality change — their obnoxious, ash-strewing self-confidence of yore replaced by a meeching, diffident insecurity.

Brash souls who once whipped out, lit and smoked a cigarette without a thought for others' eyes and noses and lungs now show their packs around the group with beseeching eyes and the hopeful plea "Is it all right if I smoke?" When they say "smoking, please" at the airline check-in counter, they whisper.

The common non-smoking view, now so freely expressed, is that quitting is simply a matter of will. That's true to a degree that varies from smoker to smoker. In some, addiction seems as real, enslavement as hopeless and helpless as in any opium den.

The people in white lab coats recognize this, and they keep trying to help. But such help!

Some of them recommend hypnosis — but only if you're suggestible. Another study says eat sunflower seeds — often, even continuously — as a nicotine substitute. They don't say how to live with the grossly fat new you that will result from inhaling sunflower seeds every waking hour.

Now comes an AMA Journal research report on nicotine chewing gum. Hmmm, says the addict, that sounds like a winner — it'll keep the mouth busy, supplying the nicotine fix the body's used to, but relieve the precious lungs from further wracking.

But he reads on. The same report says the gum tastes "somewhat vile" and comes with a full line of options in side effects that run from hiccups through burning throat, nausea and dizziness to coronary danger. So much for chewing gum.

Meanwhile, for each new still-lower-tar, still-less-nicotine brand the manufacturers release with almost weekly regularity, some researcher announces a new warning that carbon monoxide, not tar or nicotine, is probably the worst villain.

A foolproof cure for smoking certainly wouldn't mean as much to as many as a sure cure for cancer. But for some poor wretches chained to their habit, its immediate welcome would be almost as warm.

"Maybe three days, a week, I'm not sure."

"But it specifically says that the Green Warranty Card must be filled out 24 hours after purchasing the

Cites Transcendental Capital

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — The most profitable way of accumulating wealth today is through the medium of "transcendental capital," says James Dale Davison, the young founder of the National Taxpayers Union.

The phrase isn't likely to attain wide usage — it isn't one of those easily understood terms like "tax cut" — but for those who want to understand the economy it pays to understand the definition.

Transcendental capital, says Davison, possesses rights and powers that other capital, such as your savings account, can't even approach. It is very popular today. Your neighbor uses it; you probably use it, too.

And yet, it isn't even capital in the conventional sense. "It is merely a substitute by which an individual enjoys returns on capital owned by someone else," says Davison in his new book, "The Squeeze."

Politicians use it. It keeps many of them in power, says Davison. Strip them of their ability to take your capital and redistribute it — for votes, of course — and some would lose their seats, he says.

Chrysler, which lost its ability to raise conventional capital, has learned to tap transcendental capital in the form of government loans, Davison points out. So did Lockheed and General Dynamics, he says.

He isn't through with his list. "Doctors, lawyers, and other professionals also profit mightily from regulations which grant them an effective claim on productive wealth," he says. And others, too.

It includes recipients of welfare payments, jobless benefits, and income-transfer programs; "which have come to include disability payment for just about any hurt," to say nothing of pensions.

Davison says that one consequence of transcendental capital, the definition of which seems to be based in its transcending legal power, is that it destroys productive capital.

"And if that happens, he suggests, there won't be any conventional capital left to transcend or redistribute. There are other terms, too, whose definitions demand understanding. "Tax cut," is one. Will we have a tax cut next year? "If we cut taxes we will have a tax cut," you say. But it isn't that simple.

Any widely publicized tax cut this year or next isn't likely to offset the unpublicized tax increases, some from "bracket creep," or the tendency of inflation to push taxpayers into higher tax brackets.

The Conference Board estimates that President Carter's revised budget for fiscal 1981, the so-called balanced budget, calls for $44.5 billion in tax increases at the sizeable tax boosts enacted in 1980.

While Congress cut this figure back a bit, it then added its own tax increases of $4.2 billion, for a total of $37.6 billion. And atop this will be added another $15 billion to $20 billion of bracket creep.

The result, says the board, which claims political neutrality, is a huge tax increase and a badly unbalanced budget. And, it can be added, a lesson in the definition of the terms tax cut and bracket creep.

For those wondering when the economy will pull out of the recession, and how strongly the recovery is likely to be, an examination of the term "consumer liquidity" could prove rewarding.

As of now, consumer liquidity is poor. That is, aside from the money to buy essentials, consumers don't have much to spend. They have cut into their savings. They have absorbed all the credit they can.

The question now is whether — in view of continued inflation and higher taxes — they will be able to improve their liquidity. Seemingly, the only way they can do so is to cut their living standards even more.

If they can suffer the indignity — and for many Americans the very idea of stepping down is undignified — they might also improve their liquidity. In doing so, however, they won't help retailers very much.

Will they need help in the form of a tax cut? Will they decide that it is better to continue building liquidity rather than reduce it again by spending? Will the recovery be prolonged or will it be swift?

Keep an eye on consumer liquidity, and the reflection of it in polls of consumer buying attitudes, and you'll have a fair idea of what's coming up — or down — in the economy.

FLOWERS IN SAND

Some years ago an English woman had an inspiration whereby she turned a small savings account into a work of love which became her monument.

One day she visited the island of Iona, off the west coast of Scotland, from which some 1200 years ago missionaries had set out for Scotland and England to convert the rude, barbarian tribesman there. At the time of her visit the island was being rebuilt to reflect its great heritage.

But the island was a bar-ren place. So the woman withdrew from the bank her little savings account, bought flower seeds, and forthwith began a planting enterprise. Today the island is a place of great floral beauty and color.

No one knows what happened to the woman who did the planting, but the flowers on the slopes of the Iona hills are a monument to her love of beauty, her love of God, and all mankind.

To serve well we do not need great resources; only a willing heart and a self-evancing spirit. — Elisha Douglass

New Doctors' Code May Brake Costly Lawsuits

By KEVIN MCKEAN
AP Science Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — The American Medical Association has adopted a new doctors' code of ethics — the first in more than 20 years — that could help halt the spread of a costly series of lawsuits.

The AMA House of Delegates on Tuesday approved a code which, among other things, permits physicians to advertise for patients and to accept patients referred to them by chiropractors.

The House is holding its annual meeting here through Thursday.

Dr. Lowell H. Steen of Hammond, Ind., AMA chairman of the board, said the action should help the group in its legal battles with both the Federal Trade Commission and with chiropractors in Illinois, Iowa, New Jersey and New York.

The 214,000-member AMA is spending $50,000 a month in legal fees, Steen said, and could go bankrupt if the chiropractors won all of their suits.

Chiropractors, who practice a method of healing based on spinal manipulation, have charged that the AMA tried to prevent doctors from working with them. They particularly wanted to be able to send patients to radiologists for X-rays.

Meanwhile, the AMA is appealing a ruling by the FTC last year that said the AMA restrained trade by forbidding doctors to advertise.

proliferation" of new suits over the chiropractic issue, which has led to five suits since 1976. The AMA settled one chiropractic suit out-of-court in Pennsylvania last year.

In addition, the attorney said, the change makes it less likely that, should the FTC case be lost, the FTC would try to limit what ethical principles the AMA could adopt.

The new code of ethics, the first since 1957, removed a stipulation that physicians should not associate with those who do not use a scientific method of healing, which chiropractors said was aimed at them. It also deleted a provision that doctors "should not solicit patients."

"It certainly is a change from their previous position ... Any change that allows M.D.'s to cooperate with other licensed health care providers would be a step in the right direction," said Bruce Nordstrom, executive vice president of the International Chiropractors Association in Washington.

But William F. Holmberg, chief fund raiser for the National Chiropractic Antitrust Committee, which is funding the Illinois suit, said he doubted the case would be settled out-of-court.

"Of course, when you get into the law you can never tell. But the way it stands now, we're not going to settle at all," said the Rock Island, Ill., chiropractor.

An FTC attorney, March Coleman, said he could not comment on whether the AMA case would be affected since that involved FTC policy rather than strictly legal issues.

In other action, the AMA's House of Delegates voted not to accept the resignation of the 42,000-member American College of Surgeons, which pulled out of the House in a policy dispute this spring.

Surgeon members of the AMA urged the delay, saying they wanted to work for a reconciliation between the two groups.

The House also passed a resolution saying doctors should not participate in death-by-injection executions, which are now legal in Oklahoma, Texas, Idaho and New Mexico although no prisoner yet has been executed that way.

There are only 31 group homes for emotionally disturbed children, and none which are state funded for mentally ill adults.

NEW BERN — A Greenville native, Dr. Lewis S. (Steve) Redd, has been named Dean of Instruction at Craven Community College.

Redd received his B.S. and masters degrees from East Carolina University and earned his Doctor of Education in community college administration from N.C. State University.

Rhode Island Deadlock
Of all reports of Jimmy Carter's decline sweeping through this Republican convention city, the most startling was about his precipitous decline in overwhelmingly Democratic Rhode Island that has produced a three-way tie with Ronald Reagan and John Anderson.

In late winter, various surveys put President Carter 20 to 30 percentage points ahead in Rhode Island. A new private poll shows a virtual three-way deadlock: Carter, 28 percent; Reagan, 27 percent; Anderson, 27 percent, undecided, 18 percent. An even race in Rhode Island projects to a national landslide for Reagan if the election were held today.

Did Heinz Flub?
Presenting Republican Senate candidates to the convention Tuesday night, Sen. John Heinz of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, was distracted by the wildly waving Idaho standard: He had failed to mention Rep. Steve Symms, who has a 50-50 chance of beating Democratic Sen. Frank Church, a very special Republican nemesis.

When he saw the standard, Heinz quickly paid tribute to Symms, who stayed home in Idaho, campaigning during the convention. Heinz may have been following orders from convention managers in praising only those candidates physically present on the platform. But considering the importance of the Symms-Church contest, some delegates strongly criticized the omission.

new electric can opener."

"We can't do that. The only one who has the authority to give you a new electric can opener is our warranty department, which is located in Leavenworth, Kansas. But since you didn't send in the Green Warranty Card within 24 hours of purchase, they probably have no record of your buying an electric can opener in the first place."

"You have a record of it. Here's my sales slip."

"Yes, that's true. We know you purchased an electric can opener, and you know you purchased an electric can opener, but Leavenworth, Kansas, doesn't know."

"Look," I said, "I should think you would be worried for the good name of McCarthy, Swaine, and Klutzknowlton."

"But we're not owned by McCarthy, Swaine and Klutzknowlton anymore. We were bought out by Federated Pumps and Warehouses, which is a subsidiary of Drinkwater Fire and Theft, which is owned by Sable Hosiery and TV Antennas, which merged last month with Moon Orbiting Platforms, Inc."

"That's great, but what about a new electric can opener? Just give me one, and I'll be on my way."

"We can't. You see, we've discontinued making electric can openers."

"How could you discontinue making them? I just bought this one for Christmas."

"That's why we discontinued them. A lot of people bought them, and they didn't work. I guess our mistake was putting the head of our tire division in charge of electric can openers."

"What do I do now?"

"I'll take your name and see if there is some way of getting Leavenworth to accept your Green Warranty Card, even if it was sent in late."

"And will that get me a can opener?"

"Of course not. But it will put you on our mailing list for any new appliances we plan to put out this year."

LONDON (AP) — An unidentified dealer in rare books has paid $237,000 for a notebook containing the final draft of Alfred Lord Tennyson's poem "In Memoriam", a tribute to Arthur Hallam, the Victorian poet's friend and his sister's fiancé who died in Vienna in 1833.

Sally's Fan Is Part Of Exhibit

NEW YORK (AP) — Two ostrich-feather fans that once shielded burlesque dancer Sally Rand have become part of a museum exhibit dedicated to "feather arts."

The feathers, on loan from the Chicago Historical Society, were put on exhibit at the Museum of Natural History here Tuesday with a bit of fanfare. Dana Moore, a member of the cast of the Broadway musical "Sugar Babies," did a dance with them.

Miss Rand became a national sensation with her appearance at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933. Despite sporadic charges of indecent exposure, she continued dancing into her 70s and died last year at the age of 75.

The ostrich-feather became her trademark. Asked whether the body shielded by the feathers actually was nude, she would answer, "The Rand is quicker than the eye."

Admits Cashing Two More Campaign Checks

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Rep. Ike Andrews, D-N.C., said Tuesday that he cashed two campaign checks totaling $1,000, which he did not report to his campaign treasurer.

Recent published reports have disclosed that Andrews failed to report $3,100 in campaign funds to the Federal Election Commission.

Last week, Andrews held several news conferences to explain $600 of the funds in question. He said he was awaiting photostatic copies of the six remaining checks totaling $2,500 before commenting on them. Andrews said Tuesday that he had received copies of two of the six checks and admitted that he had endorsed them.

"I have on a few occasions cashed campaign checks which I received and have used such money for campaign purposes intending to reimburse such amounts with an explanation to my treasurer to be included in my campaign report as to the source of the funds and the purpose of the expenditure," Andrews said in a prepared statement. "It appears evident I failed to do so in certain instances. He said he plans to refund the entire $2,500 to his campaign treasury. He already has refunded $500 of the questioned amount.

The two checks Andrews discussed Tuesday were from the Realtors Political Action Committee, in the amount of $500, and a $500 check from the N.C. Dental Society.

The $500 Andrews refunded was from the Mid-American Dairymen's Association. That check was discovered by the FEC in routine examination of the dairymen's political action committee.

Andrews said he plans to name a new campaign treasurer to devise a system for keeping track of all funds received.

Meanwhile, Andrews' Republican opponent in the 4th Congressional District, Thurman Hogan, may be gaining ground due to Andrews' recent campaign-fund woes.

State GOP chairman Alan Pugh said further disclosures about Andrews would "throw the whole election up for grabs."

Charges Orders 'Disregarded'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal attorney charged Tuesday that the University of North Carolina has disregarded desegregation mandates and continues to operate a racially dual system.

The charge came as an administrative law judge opening hearings on a move by the Department of Education to cut off nearly $90 million a year in federal funds to UNC. The hearings are expected to last three months or more.

In response to the government contention, UNC lawyer Joseph Levin told Judge John J. Mathias that "severe and lasting adverse consequences" could be expected for academic freedom if government proposals are implemented to end program duplication at the university system's predominantly black and predominantly white campuses.

"The government is hiding its collective head in the sand," Levin said.

Richard Foster, a Justice Department lawyer, maintained that federal funding should be cut off because UNC has maintained two sets of colleges, which he identified as black and white

"What the government is saying is that the sum total of North Carolina's actions over the past 26 years... has been to maintain the racial identifiability of its public colleges; to maintain two separate sets of colleges — one black and one white," Foster said.

"And the sum total has also been to perpetuate discrimination and inequality of educational opportunity."

Foster said black colleges have been given inferior programs, buildings, teachers and supplies. He said the average black UNC campus has 36 degree programs, while the average white UNC campus 93 programs.

Levin said UNC has spent "tens of millions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of hours" upgrading the black colleges. Professional schools at UNC's predominantly white universities rank near the top in the nation in the percentage of black enrollment, he said.

"The government is fixated on the concept of (the) body count," said Levin.

Levin said that shifting academic programs between colleges would not increase minority enrollments and "would turn the UNC institutions into educational oddities."

"This case is not about provincial defiance, recalcitrance or resistance, but rather about the earnest efforts of a major national university system to broaden the participation of black students in higher education while continuing to promote the academic excellence that makes such an education worth having," Levin said.

Deductions Up

GREENSBORO — The Internal Revenue Service has announced increases in the standard mileage rate deduction for automobiles used for business, charitable, medical, and moving purposes. The increases are retroactive to Jan. 1, 1980.

The deduction for the first 15,000 miles of a business vehicle has been increased from 18.5 cents to 20 cents a mile. The rate for use over 15,000 miles a year, and for automobiles that have been fully depreciated, was increased from ten to 11 cents a mile.

A increase from eight to nine cents was made in the rate for automobiles used for charity, medical, or moving expense purposes.

Individuals may deduct the standard mileage rate instead of actual operating expenses.

Fewer Deaths By Pesticides

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Accidental poisoning from agricultural chemicals have declined by one third since an educational program for farmers was initiated three years ago.

Bill Buffalo, director of pest control for the state Department of Agriculture, said more than 50,000 North Carolinians have taken the special training programs, which certify them to apply restricted-use pesticides.

Since the first certifications were issued in late 1977, a state health official said, the number of accidental poisonings annually has dropped from 150 to 100. The number of deaths has dropped from 10 a year to four.

Farmers using the more hazardous chemicals, such as herbicides and some insecticides, are required to have the certification before the chemical be purchased. The certification program includes instruction on how to use the chemicals safely.

Certification was required after a switch two years ago from chlorinated hydrocarbon pesticides to more toxic, organic phosphate compounds.

Use of such chemicals is widespread in eastern North Carolina because of the extensive acreage planted in tobacco and grains. Buffalo said the earlier compounds had long-lasting and environmentally hazardous effects. The newer chemicals have shorter life periods but are more easily absorbed through the human skin, which mandated the training program.

Certification requiring more extensive education also is now necessary for dealers in agricultural chemicals.

Buffalo noted that development of new agricultural chemicals may be slowed because of the stringent requirements imposed by federal and state governments.

It costs about $10 million to develop a new chemical and win label approval for the product. The development process can take eight years or more.

"Fewer companies are willing to foot the bill," Buffalo said.

Prevention Of Swimmer's Ear

Minor ear infection, more commonly known as swimmer's ear, can lead to more serious infection which can drydock you for days at a time.

It's hard to knock droplets of water out of the ear that have mixed with the wax deep in the ear canal.

A preventive measure suggested by the N. C. Medical Society is to keep a nose dropper filled with one-fourth white kitchen vinegar and three-fourths rubbing alcohol. Put a few drops in each ear immediately after you come out of the water and let the solution drain out. The vinegar increases the acid in the ear canal and thus helps guard against growth of fungi and bacteria. The alcohol serves as a drying agent by displacing the water in the ear and acts as an antiseptic once the ear is dry.

If you should develop an earache or infection, discontinue the eardrops and consult your physician, the medical society advises.

Responded To 61 Pitt Alarms

During June the rural fire departments of Pitt County answered 61 alarms.

There were 10 house fires; four house trailer fires; four building fires; 11 motor vehicle fires; 16 grass or woods fires; one false alarm; and 15 "others." There was $402,000 involved in fire; $145,100 exposed; $70,300 lost; and $476,800 saved by the rural fire departments, County Fire Marshal Bobby Joyner said.

The Staton House Fire Department had the most fires, 15.

College Costs Are Squeezing The Family Budget

Costs of Attending College

For Resident Student For Year 1980-81

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The cost of a four-year private education is now higher than the median income of all U.S. families, and the worst is yet to come.

A student who attends a four-year, private college or university and lives on campus will face a bill of over $6,000 for the coming academic year, up from about $5,500 last fall, according to a new study.

Joe Paul Case, director of program administration for the College Scholarship Service, says the $20,000-a-year college education is approaching.

The College Board on Tuesday released its annual estimate of college costs for the 1980-81 academic year, based on a survey of 3,200 schools. Case said the increase from last year's figures was lower than the boost in the preceding year and lower than expected "considering the way inflation has escalated." But he painted a gloomy picture for students and parents struggling to pay the bills.

He said Congress is unlikely to increase federal aid for college students this year. "Without increased appropriations," he said, "more students will have to share the same financial-aid pie."

Case said college costs have gone up about 90 percent since 1970. If the rate of increase continues, he said, "we'll see college expenses approach $20,000 a year at high-cost colleges by the end of the decade."

Students and their parents now pay 56 percent of the college bill, according to the College Board. The rest comes from scholarships, Social Security and Veterans' Administration benefits, etc.

Case said, however, that the proportion may change in coming years. "If parents' incomes don't keep pace with inflation, the gap between the amount they are able to pay ... and the rising cost of college will widen," he said.

The board survey indicated that total annual costs — tuition, room and board, transportation, books and personal expenses — during the 1980-81 academic year will average $6,082 at private, four-year colleges and universities. At that rate, a four-year education would cost $24,328. The Conference Board, a non-profit, business research organization in New York City, calculates that the median family income for 1980 is $21,350. (The median is the exact midpoint; half of all families have a higher income; half have a lower income.)

According to the survey, the 1980-81 cost of a year at a private, four-year college for a resident student will be 10.3 percent higher than it was last year. From 1978 to 1979, the cost rose 10.6 percent.

Costs for resident students at public, four-year colleges will be an average of 8.1 percent higher this fall — $3,409 for the year — than they were last fall. During the preceding year, costs at the four-year, public institutions went up 8.5 percent.

Tuition and fees will be the biggest expense for on-campus students at private, four-year colleges, adding up to $3,279 in 1980-81. Room and board will cost $1,746; transportation, $291; personal expenses, $524; and books and supplies, $242.

At public, four-year colleges, in contrast, the biggest bite for resident students is room and board, which will cost $1,620 next year. Tuition and fees will cost $706; transportation, $262; personal expenses, $586; and books and supplies, $235.

Students who commute will face steeper increases, apparently because of the soaring price of gasoline. Expenses for commuting students at private, four-year colleges will be 14.3 percent higher this year than they were last year. Commuting students at public, four-year colleges will face a 12.7 percent boost in costs.

Also hard hit will be students at public, two-year colleges, where expenses for residents will be 20.1 percent higher this year than last

Dance Festival Is Looking For Funds

DURHAM — "Live from the American Dance Festival" is not yet dead, according to Lisa Booth, administrative director of the American Dance Festival in Durham. Last year, the live broadcast featured a world premiere of music and dance by the Paul Taylor Dance Company. Plans were made to have a live broadcast again this year, with a premiere of work by the Pilobolus Dance Theater.

These plans, however, failed, as the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, which funded a major portion of last year's program, was unable to contribute to the summer program funding due to a reorganization underway.

However, Ms. Booth noted, in the last few days the South Carolina Educational Television Network has offered to provide the American Dance Festival with $80,000 of the $150,000 budget for crew and production costs. Of the remaining $70,000 needed for the live broadcast, $5,000 has been raised.

Ms. Booth has issued an appeal to corporations and/or foundations to provide the additional $65,000 needed for the program. She notes that as on all PBS television programs, television credit will be given to funders.

The Public Broadcasting System is currently holding a time on Saturday, July 26 open for the national live broadcast of the Pilobolus music and dance world premiere — but time is critical as the American Dance Festival must get commitments for the remaining funds if the second live broadcast is to take place.

For more information, interested persons, corporations or foundations are to contact Lisa Booth at the American Dance Festival headquarters, telephone 684-6740.

C&A Cancer Project In Second Phase

FARMVILLE — Collins & Aikman began phase two of its cancer education and screening program for employees here July 16.

The program, designed by Dr. Siegfried Heyden, professor of community and family medicine at Duke, consists of an audio-visual presentation by Dr. Heyden which discusses telltale signs and diagnostic techniques for detecting seven of the most common cancers. The second part of phase two, which will be conducted the week of July 28, consists of a screening program which includes testing for cancer of the colon and upper bowel, bladder cancer, diabetes and blood pressure measurement.

"We're really pleased with the response to our program, both on the part of our employees and the citizens in our community," says Bob Findley, Farmville plant manager.

"Dr. Heyden puts the disease into perspective, pointing out how important early detection is to cancer cure," said Findley.

As a service to the community, Collins & Aikman is planning to make the educational program available to interested civic and medical groups in the near future.

Govm't Plans Finance A Refugee Tent City

MIAMI (AP) - Bulldozers started clearing an old baseball field along the Miami River after the federal government agreed to finance construction of a "tent city" on the site for more than 700 Cuban refugees living in the Orange Bowl.

The stadium has to be vacated by Friday to prepare for the start of the Miami Dolphins' exhibition season Aug. 10.

The U.S. government gave speedy approval for the city to spend between $800,000 and $900,000 to house and feed the Cubans who have lived in the Orange Bowl for the past month, since they arrived in the "Freedom Flotilla" boatlift.

The city had asked for $200,000 to pave the site of a planned Latin Riverfront Park with asphalt and erect a tent city that homeless and jobless refugees could use for up to a year.

"It is not a good solution to the problem, but I understand they could find no other suitable alternatives," said Miami Mayor Maurice Ferre. "And we need the Orange Bowl."

Some neighbors of the park worried about the arrival of refugees in an area already troubled by alcohol, drugs and juvenile delinquency.

"What if there are bad people among them?" asked Felicia Rivero, 80. But her daughter, Laura Milian, said, "They don't have any where else to go. Let them come."

Miriam Roman, director of a day care center, worried that the 210 children in the program had lost their recreation area. But Assistant City Manager Cesar Odio promised that a new baseball field would be built for the children. He also said a fence would surround the area used by the refugees.

Odio said city, county and federal officials would help the refugees find jobs and housing and would relocate them out of Miami if the refugees would agree.

The tent-city plan was opposed by County Manager Merrett Stierheim, who said he would ask the Carter Administration to take the refugees out of Dade County altogether and put them in one of the military-run camps housing refugees around the country.

Willy Gort, chairman of the Little Havana Development Authority, said the tent city was the "worst thing" the government could do. "I think the federal government has enough abandoned buildings where the refugees can be given temporary shelter," he said.

The Orange Bowl was opened to homeless refugees last month after several hundred were found wandering the streets of Miami. Many had been abandoned by sponsors and were unable to find jobs since their arrival in the boatlift.

Brzezinski Used Billy As Libya Go-Between

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's national security adviser capitalized on Billy Carter's controversial relations with the Libyan government by using him as a go-between in seeking Libya's assistance in an effort to gain release of the American hostages in Iran, White House officials say.

The revelation marks the first acknowledgment by White House officials that the president's gregarious, plain-spoken younger brother, who reluctantly registered with the Justice Department last week as an agent of the Libyan government, played any role in U.S. foreign policy.

Presidential press secretary Jody Powell, in a lengthy briefing Tuesday on the controversy swirling about Billy Carter, said national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski asked him to set up a meeting on Nov. 27, 1979, with Ali el Houderi, Libya's chief Washington representative.

A written statement released by Powell's office noted that the meeting between Brzezinski, Houderi and Billy Carter took place "three weeks after the seizure of the hostages (in Iran), and the United States was exploring every possible avenue of contact with the Iranian leaders."

Powell said he didn't know whether the president was aware of the meeting. But he also insisted, "There can hardly be any serious thought that the president's brother is in a position to advise the president on foreign policy matters."

While the meeting was unsuccessful in winning the hostages' freedom, Powell said Brzezinski was informed a few weeks later that Col. Moammar Khadafy, leader of Libya's leftist Arab government, had sent a message to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in Iran calling for their release.

President Carter, in a two-paragraph statement on the controversy, said it was not "appropriate for a close relative of the president to undertake any assignment on behalf of a foreign government," and he called for a full public disclosure of "the existence of any such relationship."

The president did not mention his brother's receipt of $220,000 from the Libyans, which Billy Carter and the Libyans have characterized as part of a $500,000 loan.

Billy Carter was surrounded by reporters as he left a restaurant at a New York hotel, where he was staying Tuesday night. When a reporter held up a newspaper with the headline, "White House Says: Asked Billy Aid on Hostages," the president's brother said: "Paper's right." He refused further comment.

The Senate Judiciary Committee was deciding today whether to investigate the Billy Carter-Libyan ties. Disclosure of the three-way meeting on the hostage issue was the latest bizarre twist in the story of an 18-month Justice Department investigation into Billy Carter's relationship with the Libyans. Powell said the White House has scrupulously avoided contact with the investigators.

The probe's progress only occasionally bubbled to the surface before July 14, when papers were filed in federal court revealing that the department had reached a settlement with Billy Carter in which he agreed under protest to register as a Libyan agent to avoid a grand jury investigation.

Here, from public statements, official documents and published reports, is the sequence of events which brought the White House to issue Tuesday's statement, described as an attempt to fully disclose Billy Carter's relations with Libya:

In January, 1979, after Billy Carter hosted a Libyan delegation in Atlanta and Plains, Ga., officials of the Justice Department's foreign agents registration section wrote the president's brother asking him to register as an agent of the radical Arab government.

At this point, Billy Carter already had accepted from the Libyans four gold bracelets, a saddle, a serving platter and a ceremonial sword. He also had accepted $3,900 in expenses for a 10-day trip to Libya for himself and an associate in late 1978.

The Justice Department's January letter and a follow-up letter went unanswered.

By March, Billy Carter had denied he was a Libyan agent, and the FBI had been called in to help investigate the case.

At about the same time, Billy Carter entered a Navy hospital in California for treatment of alcoholism. Sources have said that development put the inquiry on the back burner.

In September 1979, Billy Carter received another $9,780 in expenses from the Libyans to pay for a trip by him, his wife, his son and his associate, Henry R. Coleman, to Libya for the 10th anniversary celebration of Khadafy's rise to power.

At the end of the year, Coleman made a 13-day expense-paid trip to Libya. The renewed activity led the Justice Department to resume its inquiry, and department investigators questioned Billy Carter at his Georgia home last January.

He again denied he was a paid agent of Libya, but has since admitted he received $20,000 from the Libyan government that same month. He said it was the first installment on a $500,000 loan.

On March 14, FBI agents interviewed Phil Wise, President Carter's appointments secretary, about calls he received from Billy Carter before the trip to Libya in 1978 and a Libyan delegation's return visit in early January 1979.

Also in March, President Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, noted an intelligence report that Billy Carter was attempting to assist an oil company in obtaining an increased allocation of Libyan oil. White House officials say Brzezinski telephoned Billy Carter and warned him to avoid activity which could embarrass the administration.

Last April, Billy Carter received the second installment of the loan, $200,000. And about that time, Justice Department investigators began to get hints from intelligence sources that the Libyans were seeking to acquire influence in the Carter administration and that Billy Carter was receiving money from them.

They also learned of briefings by two members of the White House National Security Council staff that Wise reportedly arranged for Billy Carter prior to the 1978 trip to Libya.

In May, Attorney General Benjamin R. Civiletti told a news conference he thought the Billy Carter investigation was taking too long.

On June 2, intelligence sources confirmed that Billy Carter had received money from the Libyans. On June 4, Wise was interviewed again by the FBI about the telephone calls.

On June 9, Billy Carter set up meetings in Washington for the next day with Justice Department officials and Brzezinski.

In the session at the Justice Department, he told about the money he had received from the Libyans. He then saw Brzezinski at the White House, and Brzezinski asked the White House counsel, Lloyd Cutler, to sit in on the meeting.

Cutler, when he learned Billy Carter had been talking to investigators without a lawyer, urged him to hire an attorney and recommended some, including Steven J. Pollak and Henry Ruth, who had previously represented former White House chief of staff Hamilton Jordan in the much-publicized cocaine probe.

Cutler placed a call to Pollak and introduced the FBI Aiding In Iranian Assassination

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — An Iranian activist opposed to the revolutionary regime in Tehran was shot and killed Tuesday at his suburban Washington home by a man dressed as a postman, police said.

Montgomery County police identified the victim as Ali Akbar Tabatabai, 49, and said the FBI was assisting in the investigation.

Tabatabai was president of the Iran Freedom Foundation, an organization which supports a democratic government in Iran. The group had scheduled a march Sunday in Washington to express opposition to Iranian revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and the taking of American hostages in Tehran.

Members of the Iran Freedom Foundation could not be reached immediately for comment.

The group is believed to have been formed about a year ago, after the overthrow of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in Iran, and has become increasingly active in recent months.

Tabatabai was a press attache at the Iranian Embassy in Washington during the shah's regime.

Jackson Bain, a newsman for a Washington television station, WTTG-Metro, who has known Tabatabai for several years, said that while Tabatabai opposed the Khomeini regime, "Ali was not in favor of the shah. He was against the shah's return."

Nancy Moses, a spokeswoman for the Montgomery County police department, said a man dressed as a postman knocked on the door of Tabatabai's home, where the Iran Freedom Foundation is based, pulled a gun when the door was opened and fired several shots before fleeing.

Bain said associates of Tabatabai had told him the gunman, wearing a postman's uniform, claimed to have two special-delivery packages for Tabatabai, who was upstairs.

When Tabatabai came downstairs, according to this account, the gunman pulled a gun and shot him twice.

The victim died a short time later at Suburban Hospital, authorities said.

None of the other occupants of the home was injured in the gunfire, although one man cut his foot as he jumped from a window to escape.

The shooting came less than a week after an assassination attempt in Paris against former Iranian Premier Shahpour Bakhtiar by five gunmen. Bakhtiar escaped injury, but a policeman and a neighbor died in the shootout.

Tabatabai had been scheduled to appear on a radio interview program in Washington at 1:30 p.m. EDT Tuesday — about two hours after the shooting — but told the show's producer he was afraid to leave his house.

"He was reluctant to go out (of his home) where people could find him," said Chuck

Rich, producer of the program on WTOP Radio. "Apparently he had alienated a lot of people."

Delta Jetliner Returns After Cuba Hijacking

ATLANTA (AP) — A Delta Air Lines jetliner en route from Chicago to San Juan, Puerto Rico, was hijacked Tuesday afternoon and "forcibly diverted" to Cuba, a Delta spokesman said.

Because of bad weather at Havana's Jose Marti Airport, the plane was diverted to Camaguey, southeast of Havana in central Cuba, and landed there at 4:28 p.m. EDT, the spokesman said in Atlanta, where Delta is based.

The plane carried 133 passengers and 14 crew members, the Delta spokesman said. However, Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Ted Maher in Washington said there were 142 passengers and 13 crew members.

It was the third hijacking to Cuba this year, and the second involving a Delta plane.

FAA spokesman Dick Stafford said in Washington that Delta Flight 1135 originated at O'Hare Airport and made a scheduled stop in Miami.

After the plane left Miami, the spokesman said, a Spanish speaking male who claimed he was armed got into the cockpit and ordered the pilot to fly to Havana.

The plane, a Lockheed L-1011 wide-bodied jet, was about 200 miles south of Miami when it was hijacked at 3:03 p.m., Delta spokesman Jim Ewing said.

"We don't have any details of what happened on board," Ewing said. "We're trying to find out."

The plane left Miami at 1:30 p.m. and was due in San Juan at 3:50 p.m.

Delta spokesman Bill Berry said that as far as he knew it was the first time a hijacked plane had landed at Camaguey.

Ali Is Getting Full Check-Up

Former world heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali has entered the Mayo Clinic for a complete physical, a clinic spokesman said.

Ali, who signed into the clinic Tuesday afternoon after flying into Rochester from Allentown, Pa., has said he would get an OK from his doctor before launching his try for a fourth championship.

"It could result in the plane staying on the ground much longer than is normal in a hijacking," Berry said. "There may be no government facilities immediately available at Camaguey."

The FAA had no contact with the plane after it landed, a spokesman in Atlanta said.

On April 9 a former dental school student armed with an automatic pistol scaled a wall at the Ontario International Airport near Los Angeles and commandeered an American Airlines jet waiting to take on passengers. The jet, with only the hijacker and seven crew members aboard, first flew to Dallas, then Havana. The crew members were allowed to return with the jet.

On Jan. 25, a man later identified as Samuel Alden Ingram Jr. of Atlanta took over a Delta Air Lines plane over North Carolina and forced the pilot of the Atlanta-to-New York flight to fly to Cuba. The 61 passengers and crew members sneaked off the plane while it was on the ground in Cuba and later returned to the United States.

Summer Tourism Falling Off This Season In West Europe

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer
ROME (AP) — Tourism in Western Europe, usually an overbooked crush of sun and culture seekers, is shaping up this summer to be about as dismal as the weather and the economy.
From Brighton, England, to Spain's Costa del Sol to Athens, Greece, hotel vacancy signs are up, beaches are semi-deserted and night clubs are virtually empty.
American tourism, which began declining a few years ago with the fall of the dollar, appears to be further slowing, but Europeans, too, are staying at home or planning alternative vacations, a survey by The Associated Press has found.
"If I knew the season would be like this I wouldn't even have opened," complained a beach club owner in Italy's chic Tyrrhenian resort of Viareggio, pointing to unused beach umbrellas and unrented cabins.

Unseasonably cool and rainy weather has discouraged travelers, but even in sun-soaked Greece alarmed hotel owners are predicting the drop in tourists could reach 15 percent by the end of the year.
Tourist officials say the economic crunch and, in the case of Americans, unease generated by the events in Iran and Afghanistan, are apparently also keeping people home.
"Americans are very sensitive to political events," said Nicola Messina of Italy's national tourist agency. "We understand many have decided to spend the summer touring at home."
Official figures for the first four months of the year in Greece showed an 11 percent decrease in tourists, and agencies dealing with the U.S. market say the number of Americans has dropped by as much as 35 percent.
Don Gilliland, a manager of the luxury American tour company Maupintours, said that nearly half the firm's tours in Greece have been canceled. "But at least at this deluxe level of the industry we are suffering much less than our tour operators. I can't complain, I'm working."

Amid one of the rainiest summers on record, the number of visitors to Britain's seaside resorts such as Brighton and Bournemouth has fallen 20 percent this year. But factors also include economic uncertainty, cut-price competition from overseas resorts such as Miami, Fla., and the strong pound sterling which discourages foreigners.
Ninety percent of tourism in Britain is by Britons, but the crisis has also hit London which relies on overseas visitors. Hotels have been cutting prices to draw guests and many theaters are playing to half-filled houses because the traditional American audiences aren't coming.
For more than 15 years, tourism has been Spain's No. 1 industry, but it has been declining and officials are predicting at least another 10 percent drop this year. Although bombings at resorts by Basque separatists have had some effect on the drop, tourist officials blame inflation abroad and the increasing price of gasoline.
"Business has dropped to unbelievable levels," complained Jose Maria Sanchez, and runs a Flamenco show on the Costa del Sol. "For years fun was very important on holidays, but tourists coming in now hardly have money to meet their hotel bills."

Tourist sources said 1.3 million Americans visited Spain in 1979, but the number could drop as much as 12 percent this year.
As hotel prices have shot up — in Italy, for example, many resorts are asking 20 percent more than last year — Europeans have turned to camping or to day-tripping between home and the beach.
One of the few bright spots in the tourist picture is Austria, where despite bad weather a record number of tourists visited the country in May. Officials credit it to Austria's stable price structure as well as to a reflection on strikes and political turmoil elsewhere.
Norway, too, is cautiously optimistic about summer tourism with much depending on the weather.
"Our estimates are that we may do well on all foreign markets except the United States where we had a 10 to 15 percent drop the last two years. This trend is expected to continue," said H. Staugard, spokesman of the Norwegian Travel Association.
Denmark is also counting on a small increase in tourism, but the bulk will come from neighboring countries as the long-distance traveler, especially the American tourist, is becoming increasingly rare there.

Experimental Drug Findings

BOSTON (UPI) — The Upjohn pharmaceutical company reports that an experimental drug it has produced called Atgam has been found in tests to have helped patients survive rejection crises in organ transplants when used alone or in combination with other anti-rejection drugs already in use.
The company said studies released at the VIII International Congress of the Transplantation Society recently showed "the one-to-two-year survival rate for kidney transplants increased as much as 32 percent when the experimental drug Atgam was given beginning either at the first sign of rejection or at the time of transplant."
Some 4,000 kidney transplant operations are performed in the United States each year. If an organ is donated by someone not related to the recipient, only 50 percent avoid rejection. When the kidney is from a close relative, the success rate is about 80 percent.

Marathon Makes For Fast Town

NEW YORK (AP) — The largest marathon running event in the world last year was the New York Marathon with 10,477 runners, including 1,203 women who finished, says Fred Lebow, president of the N.Y. Road Runners Club.
The largest women's sporting event ever — the 1980 L'eggs Mini Marathon in Central Park — had 4,600 starters, with 4,021 finishers, according to Allan Steinfeld, race director.

Underground Oil Spills A Hazard

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — The manager of detection systems for Emhart's Mallory unit says evidence is mounting that underground oil spills, the least publicized of pollution dangers, represent a serious long-term danger to drinking water supplies.
Hugh M. Peters, whose company manufactures an electronic system for detecting such spills, notes that 50 percent of the U.S. drinking water comes from ground water. Once polluted by seeping oil from underground storage tanks or surface spills which infiltrate the top strata of the ground surface, it can take years or even decades to cleanse the water supply.

PROMISE NO TAX
WASHINGTON (AP) — The House has approved a resolution that promises Congress won't tax Social Security benefits. It also acted to keep Social Security benefits to elderly people from running short by the end of the year.

Came Of Age Behind Walls Of A Kentucky Prison

By NANCY SHULINS
Associated Press Writer
EDDYVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Arrested at 15 and convicted at 16, Simon Sylvester Hayden has come of age in the shadow of the guard towers that rise above the haunted gray walls of the Kentucky State Penitentiary.

Here, locked in his cell, he dreams of teen-age pleasures beyond his reach — of trench fries and fishing holes, baseball and burgers.

Three winters and four springs have passed since he ran from the arms of his family into the arms of the state.

"The hardest thing is missing out on life," he says. "Christmas isn't Christmas in here, and birthdays aren't birthdays. I missed out on my brother's child getting born, on my father getting remarried."

"I missed out on a good education and getting my driver's license. I missed out on my first date.

"It's hard to judge yourself," Hayden says. "I understand and realize I did wrong. But I've spent three years in here. That's part of my child life gone."

He's 19 now, square-shouldered and deep-voiced. But the pale, pinched face and light blue eyes belong to an edgy child one minute, a weary man the next.

He says he still doesn't know why he pulled the trigger the night of Nov. 15, 1976, killing a 19-year-old Vietnamese refugee and his 16-year-old girlfriend.

"I didn't want to kill them. They were my friends," he says. "But I was lost that night, just plain lost."

"I heard voices telling me to shoot them, and it just happened. I shot both of them."

"I wish I'd never done it. I still don't know why."

When he gets out of prison, Hayden says, he wants to get a job. Sometimes he'd like to be a forest ranger, other times, a preacher.

"I just want a regular job like anyone else. I won't drink and I'll settle down. It would be real nice to get married and have kids."

"One thing I do know," he says softly, "When I get out of here, I won't ever hurt anybody again."

Hayden lives in 2 Cellhouse, the prison's protective custody unit. He was put there, he says, to escape the homosexuals who bothered him because of his age and small stature.

During the day, Hayden studies for his high school equivalency test. An eighth grade dropout, he hopes to earn his diploma.

A good day is when he can go to the prison church, where he serves as an altar boy, or when he can go to the canteen to buy cookies.

On the other days, the bad ones, there's only boredom. "I talk to myself sometimes. I write letters and draw. I do OK."

He landed here because of what happened in the autumn of his 15th year.

His parents had been divorced, and a Vietnamese family he shared with his father and brothers in Geneva, a tiny farming community in western Kentucky.

Hayden quit school and began drinking heavily. He had his first encounters with the law: first for hitchhiking, then for drinking, and once for breaking and entering. He was placed on probation.

On Nov. 15, 1976, he argued with the Vietnamese woman.

"She accused me of hitting her son. She came at me with a steak fork."

He slammed the kitchen door, the glass shattered and he started drinking. Hayden says he'd drunk about a quart of wine when his friends Truong Huy Do and Shirley Ann Yates came over. He asked them for a ride.

"I just wanted to get away," he says. "I ran upstairs for my pistol. I carried it with me all the time. I was drunk and everything, and without even realizing it, I just got the gun out of my pocket and in an instant..."

Three months later, Hayden went on trial in Henderson County Court on two counts of murder and one count of armed robbery. His lawyer, Carlton Buchanan, used "a defense of mental disease or defect."

A psychiatrist and a psychologist testified that Hayden could have been mentally deranged when the shooting occurred. They said they believed Hayden suffered from a long-standing schizophrenic disorder marked by a distorted sense of reality.

The trial ended a day later, when the jury convicted Hayden on two counts of manslaughter in the deaths of his friends and one count of robbery in the theft of several hundred dollars from Truong's wallet. He was sentenced to 40 years.

Thomas Hectus, a Louisville-based public defender, is hoping the U.S. Supreme Court will review Hayden's case.

Hectus says there are unanswered questions about whether Hayden was mentally competent at his juvenile waiver hearing, the hearing at which it was decided he would be tried in adult court.

Hayden will be eligible for parole in November 1982, and he dreams of the day the iron gates will open, setting him free.

"When I do get out, the first thing I want to do is find a piece of stick and an old string and go fishing," he says.

Parole officers say Hayden's age probably will be a factor when he goes before the board for consideration. In the same breath, they stress that the seriousness of his crime will be weighed, too.

Don Weaver of the state Parole Board says officials also will look at Hayden's education, his job prospects and his record as an inmate. Also, what will he do, how will he live, on parole?

Simon Hayden doesn't have the answers. Today, he has only dreams.

"When I get out of prison, everything will be brand new to me," he says. "The world will be like Disneyland, and I'll be like a child being born to the world again."

Once Paid For Escalator Ride

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Shanghai shoppers once had to pay for riding an escalator.

When the first escalator was installed in Shanghai's Sun Department store in the early 1900s, customers were delighted with their first glimpse of "moving stairs," an Otis Elevator Co. report reveals. The crowds, which police had difficulty controlling, gladly paid a 30-cent admission fee, redeemable in store merchandise, for the thrill of riding the then-new phenomenon.

Predicts Dissatisfaction Over Acquitting Kluxers

By JOHN NOLAN
Associated Press Writer
CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — A black leader predicted dissatisfaction among the city's blacks over the acquittal of two of three Ku Klux Klansmen charged with shooting four black women, and hours after the verdict police reported a rash of suspected firebombings and brick-throwing.

A third Klansman was found guilty Tuesday of reduced assault charges.

Police spokesman Doug Fisher said early today at least six blazes were reported during the night, with the most extensive damage reported at Orgill Brothers Inc. industrial warehouse, where firefighters responded to calls twice. Five of the six were suspected firebombings, he said.

More than a half dozen brick-throwing incidents were reported. During one, a firefighter was injured and the windshield of his truck broken as engines raced to the site of one of the fires. The fireman was treated at the scene, Fisher said.

Fisher said most of the incidents occurred in or near the city's predominantly black Alton Park area. He said police used two-man patrols through the night and blocked sections of the area, allowing access only to residents.

Asked whether police thought the violence was related to the Klan trial verdict, Fisher said, "Quite obviously everybody is going to draw their own conclusions, but we have no firm evidence that this is related."

The incidents were, however, "totally out of the norm," Fisher said.

Shortly after the verdict, Harry Hill, of the Youth Coalition, a black community organization, praised the state's prosecution of the Klansmen for the April 19 shootings. But "as far as the verdict, it's a joke," he said.

Hill said he did not think the blacks in this city of 170,000 would be satisfied with the jury's findings. "There'll be a backlash," he predicted. "I hope it'll be on the positive side."

Defense lawyers, who had urged jurors to decide the defendants' guilt or innocence without considering the verdict's effect on racial relations, said they were pleased with the outcome.

The six-man, six-woman jury deliberated for nearly six hours over two days before reaching a decision Tuesday.

The verdict "should not be seen as a slam at blacks, because it's not," said defense lawyer Leroy Phillips. "That jury was composed of some very intelligent people. There was a college professor on there."

But Viola Ellison, 64, one of the four black women who was wounded, said, "I don't feel good about it (the verdict)."

"If a black person had shot one of your whites, he would have been in jail. But blacks, we ain't got no damn justice in this town. We got to get some defense," she said.

The women were struck by shotgun blasts fired from a car as they walked from a tavern in the city's Ninth Street area.

William Church, 23, who calls himself imperial wizard of the Justice Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and member Larry Payne, 26, were acquitted of four counts each of assault with intent to commit murder which resulted in bodily injury.

Marshall Thrash, 30, also a member of Church's group, testified he fired the shotgun from a red Mustang that Church was driving. Thrash was convicted of three reduced counts of assault and battery and another reduced charge, simple assault.

He was fined a total of $225 and given three workhouse sentences, two of nine months each and one of two months. Prisoners at the Hamilton County workhouse in Chattanooga work on a farm or on road repair crews. Thrash's lawyer said he will ask in a few days whether his client wants to appeal.

Thrash testified he fired the shots to draw attention to wooden crosses the men had set afire at a Ninth Street overpass, and said he saw no one around when he fired. Thrash testified he brought along two shotguns and 75 shotgun shells for protection during the cross burning, and Payne said Thrash fired both weapons five times.

Payne testified that he did nothing more than drink beer in the car's back seat.

Defense witnesses testified the men had been drinking all day before the shooting and that Thrash is a heavy weekend drinker, sometimes staying away from his family for long periods of time.

Thrash's wife, Deidre, cried and hugged family and friends when she heard the verdict, but declined comment.

District Attorney General Gary Gerbitz released a statement which said, "We have done everything we know to do to prosecute a successful case of assault with intent to commit first-degree murder. We have expedited the case on the dockets of Hamilton County and have spent endless hours preparing and trying the case. Naturally, we expected a verdict greater in offense and punishment, but the jury's verdict is the jury's verdict."

Payne told reporters, "They gave a fair judgment and I'm glad it's all over. I'm going home to my wife and kids." He said he is ending his association with the Klan.

Asked how the trial has affected his life, Payne said, "I've lost everything I've got."

After police arrested the men within an hour of the shootings, Payne was fired from his job at a Chattanooga foundry and Thrash was fired as a commercial telephone systems installer. Both are married with two children.

Hank Hill, one of Payne's two lawyers, said Payne also lost his house as he put up some of his $50,000 bond and tried to pay bills.

"It's very, very expensive to prove yourself innocent in this society," Hill said. "Lawyers are expensive."

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices continued to slump today as the government reported consumer prices rose 1 percent last month, slightly more than in the preceding two months.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 1.11 to 926.19 in the first half-hour of trading as declines outnumbered advances by a 3-2 margin among New York Stock Exchange issues.

Charles Schultze, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, said the bottom of the recession may be reached by the end of the year and added that "the worst of the inflation is behind us."

The rise in consumer prices last month was traced largely to rising housing costs, with the Labor Department noting that declining mortgage rates have not yet been reflected in the figures.

Among early volume leaders, Sony was down 1/4 to 97 1/2 and General Motors rose 1/4 to 50. Commonwealth Edison, which reported lower profits, fell 1/4 to 20 1/2.

On Tuesday, the Dow Jones industrial average, which was up almost 8 points earlier in the day, finished down 1.37 to 927.30.

Declines outnumbered advances by a narrow margin on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled about 52.23 million shares, against 42.75 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index fell .16 to 69.94.

Leaf Prices Are Steady

VALDOSTA, Ga. (AP) — Average prices in the Georgia-Florida flue-cured tobacco belt were steady to higher for more than 70 percent of the grades on Tuesday, with the practical top price steady at $159 for 100 pounds.

Georgia markets sold 2,038,335 total pounds Tuesday at an average price of $122.27. Florida markets reported no sales.

Increases ranged mostly from $4 to $11 a hundred pounds. The Federal-State Market News Service reported sharp gains in non-supported grades of $12 to $20.

The few losses registered were on lugs and better quality primings. The composition of marketings improved slightly as fewer primings appeared on warehouse floors.

On opening day, gross sales totaled 4,922,473 pounds and averaged $126.20 a hundred. This average was up $3.06 from the average on opening day last season.

Deliveries to the stabilization corporation amounted to 10.6 percent of gross sales compared to 1.4 percent on the first day last season.

Auction bid averages for a hundred pounds on several U.S. grades Tuesday compared with Monday's price were: C5F $158 unchanged, X4F $151 down $3, X4KM $142 up $1, P3L $126 down $10, P4L $119 up $4, P5L $100 up $11, P3F $135 down $4, P4F $128 up $12, P5F $103 up $15, N1L $89 up $18.

Plant Bids...

Other plumbing bidders were J.J. Barnes of Fayetteville, $134,000 and W.M. Wiggins of Wilson, $103,318.

Heating, ventilation, and air conditioning low bidder was Southern Piping Co. of Wilson with a base bid of $124,000. Other bidders were Jessup Co. of Greensboro, $224,178; J.J. Barnes of Fayetteville, $192,000; H.B. Allen of Greensboro, $256,000; Community Heating and Plumbing of Greensboro, $238,800; Cereils Plumbing of Greensboro, $249,750 and Electricon, Inc. of Kinston, $149,000.

Low electrical bidder was Electricon of Kinston with a bid base of $518,000. Other electrical bidders were Watts and Electric Construction Co. of Wilson, $581,080; Southerland Electric of Jacksonville, $562,000, and Roanoke Electric Construction of Pantego, $608,750.

On Aug. 26, the filtration bid, along with bids for an impoundment structure to create settling basins and a raw water intake structure will be opened. At that time, the engineers will evaluate every aspect of each bid.

"This session today represents what we call Phase One," said Rowe.

Bids will be awarded on Aug. 26 and at the Sept. 9 meeting of the Utilities Commission. Actual construction of the filtration site will begin the first or second week in October.

USSR, E. German Swimmers Dominating Games

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's awesome men's gymnastic team won the gold medal and the East German and Soviet swimmers continued their domination of the pool today at these boycotted Moscow Olympics.

In fact, there was hardly a venue that wasn't being turned into a Soviet-East German playground. With two medal events still to be completed, the Soviets had nine gold and 20 total medals, while East Germany had five gold and 19 medals overall.

The Soviet Union, led by world all-around champion Alexander Dityatin and Nikolai Andrianov, quadruple gold medalist four years ago, easily won the team gymnastics event. The Soviets had 589.60 points. East Germany had 581.15 and Hungary won the bronze with 575.

In swimming, Vladimir Sahnikov of the Soviet Union smashed the world record in the 1,500-meter freestyle, winning the gold medal in 14:58.27. He was the first person to swim the grueling 1,500 in under 15 minutes, shattering American Brian Goodell's world record of 15:02.40, set at the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

Ines Diers led an East German sweep of the women's 400-meter freestyle, winning in the Olympic record time of 4:08.76. Petra Schneider won the silver and Carmela Schmidt took the bronze.

East German women have won all four finals contested thus far.

Rina Reinisch of East Germany set a world record in the women's 100 backstroke during today's preliminaries.

Her time was 1 minute 1.50 seconds.

Duncan Goodhew, formerly of North Carolina State, broke the East European control of the swimming by winning the 100-meter breaststroke in 1:03.34, giving Great Britain its first gold medal of the Games.

The first medal awarded today went to an Italian in the trap clay pigeon shooting. Luciano Giovannelli shot 198 to win Italy's first gold of the Games.

In Greco-Roman wrestling, Soviets Zaksylik Ushkempriov and Boris Kramoreko won the 62- and 48-kilogram events, respectively, and Norbert Notty of East Germany won the 90-kilo class.

Lothar Thoms of East Germany won the one-kilometer cycling in world record time of 1 minute 2.955 seconds.

There were 10 award ceremonies Tuesday, and in nine of them East Europeans occupied at least two of the spots. Most of the time, those positions were taken by Soviet and East German athletes, which, for these Games, is the dominating flip-side story to the American-led boycott.

After three days of competition in this two-week sports festival, the host Soviets had 10 gold and 21 total medals. The East Germans totalled 18 medals, five of them gold. Hungary was a distant third with two gold and five total medals. The best non-communist bloc could manage was Australia's four bronze and Britain's one gold and two silver.

It was a relatively quiet day on the political front. Tight Soviet security has been placed around the Afghan athletes, some of whom had approached western journalists about defecting. And the Italian who had protested Soviet laws against homosexuality returned to Italy with his tour group Tuesday after being detained overnight by Soviet police.

Vladimir Popov, deputy chairman of the Moscow Organizing Committee, raised a fuss by accusing western nations of delaying their reporters' transmissions from the Games. Citing communications slowdowns to Italy, Sweden, France, the Netherlands and Latin American countries, via New York, Popov said the problems were being caused "by the other side."

The East European medal

onslaught was not expected to sweep all 13 if they can win tonight's 200 breaststroke, in which the Soviets have the world record-holder, Lina Kachushite, and the owner of this year's best time, Svetlana Varganova.

Goodhew carried on in the tradition of great British breaststroke swimmers. David Wilkie, a Scotsman, won the 200 breaststroke at Montreal four years ago, the only swimming event out of 13 that America's supermen didn't win.

Goodhew's winning time of 1:03.34 was slower than the American record of 1:03.08, set this year by Steve Lindquist of Southern Methodist University. Unlike many male swimmers who voluntarily shave body hair from head to toe for added speed, Goodhew didn't have a choice. A fall from a tree when he was a youngster caused a freak nerve dysfunction and stopped hair growth. "I was playing Tarzan. I hit my upper lip and it affected the whole nervous system," said Goodhew. "It's an integral part of my person now. I don't want any hair. It's a nuisance."

Boycotts and political protests in sports aren't for him. (Please turn to page 20)

South Wins State Title

GOLDSBORO — Coastal Plains South, sparked by the pitching performances of Bobby Avery, won the North Carolina 16-Year-Old Senior Babe Ruth championship Tuesday night by defeating Central Carolina twice, 3-1 and 4-1.

The win moves South into the National Babe Ruth Championships in Butler, Ala. The locals will open tournament play Aug. 1 against the Georgia state champ.

In the opener Tuesday night, Avery struck out one and walked one while giving up only four hits before getting relief help in the sixth from Butch Brown. In the second game, Avery struck out three and walked three while limiting the visitors from Chapel Hill to four hits before leaving in the seventh for Emory Vines.

South took the lead in the second after a scoreless opening inning when Mitch Brann doubled to score Bill Kittrell, who had singled to lead off the inning. Central Carolina tied it up in the bottom of the inning but Coastal Plains South rallied for single runs in the third and fourth to grab the lead for good.

Crowell Pope and Dixon Page walked to lead off the third and with one gone Scott Galloway walked to load the bases. Kittrell then reached on a fielder's choice, which scored Page. Pope had been thrown out earlier in the inning going home on a ground ball.

In the fourth, Paul MacMillan ripped one-out solo home run to give the locals a 3-1 lead, which was all they needed to win the opener of this double-elimination tournament.

The second game was nearly a repeat of the first, with South getting another strong pitching performance from Avery and just enough runs to win.

South grabbed the lead in the first when MacMillan, who had walked to lead off the game, scored on Page's fielder's choice. South then increased its lead to 3-0 with runs in the third and fourth. Central Carolina's lone run came in the sixth.

ECU Falls, 9-1; Meets Hurricanes Here Tonight

LOUISBURG — Louisburg ripped out 13 hits to defeat East Carolina, 9-1, Tuesday night to win the Summer League regular season crown.

The win left Louisburg at 19-10, one game ahead of ECU, at 18-11. ECU plays host to Louisburg tonight at 7 o'clock. A loss tonight would drop the Pirates into a second place tie with UNC-W but the Seahawks, having defeated ECU five-out-of-six this season, would get the second place bye.

Tuesday night, the Pirates did not score until the sixth. By then, the Hurricanes led 6-0. Louisburg scored twice in the first, once in the third and twice more in the fourth. Louisburg added solo runs in the next four innings to win easily.

ECU's lone run came in the sixth. Mike Sage singled, moved to second on a balk and went to third on Mark Wakai's single. Sage subsequently scored on Jay Carraway's single.

Sage and Wakai had two hit for the Pirates while Sammy Martin went five-for-five, including two doubles.

Horner Hitting Again

By Associated Press
It's a long, long way from April to July. But Bob Horner admits it's a long way from July to October, too.
When Horner, Atlanta's shaggy-blond, slightly pudgy third baseman, started the season, it looked as though it would be a long one, indeed — batting .059, making one error after another and getting into a lengthy row with Ted Turner after the Braves' owner tried to ship him to the minors.
But he's hitting like a major leaguer now. On Tuesday night he slugged two home runs, driving in four runs to help the Braves beat Montreal 7-5.
More important, perhaps, the homers were Horner's 15th in his last 23 games, the 19th and 20th of the season and gave him 13 in July, two short of the major league record shared by Joe Adcock and Hall of Famers Hank Greenberg and Joe DiMaggio.
"I don't know why," Horner said. "I just hope nobody wakes me up until the end of October. Honest to God, I can't say I'm doing anything different than I was on opening day. It just fell into place."
"I've never seen a hitter that hot," said Braves Manager Bobby Cox. "The hottest home-run hitter I've ever seen."

In the rest of the National League Tuesday night, Cincinnati edged Philadelphia 3-2. Houston shaded New York 6-5. St. Louis trimmed Los Angeles 3-2 and Pittsburgh nipped San Diego 4-3. In the completion of Monday's darkness-suspended game, San Francisco beat Chicago 2-0 in 15 innings, then the Cubs won the regularly scheduled game 3-1.
Horner ripped a three-run homer in the fourth inning and a solo shot in the sixth. Both came off Bill Lee, Montreal's starter and resident flake.
Had he ever seen anyone hit the ball the way Horner's hitting it now? Lee's brow furrowed in concentration. "Yeah," he said after perhaps 10 seconds. "Wagner, Honus Wagner. Used to play for Pittsburgh. Third baseman, too. I believe. That's the guy. Saw him in my dreams."
"Horner's seeing the ball well," Lee added. "He's got one heck of an optometrist. He's got a lot of patience for a young kid. I kept throwing him good pitches and he kept fouling them back 'til he got what he wanted."
His homers helped the Braves to a 5-3 lead, but when Horner kicked away a grounder in the eighth inning, it helped Montreal tie it. In the bottom of the inning, though, Glenn Hubbard got the winning hit off loser Stan Bahnsen, a two-run single up the middle.
Reds 3, Phillies 2
Ray Knight doubled and tripled and Dan Driessen drove in two runs with a sacrifice fly as the Reds handed Philadelphia its fifth successive loss and eighth in the last 11 games.
It also ruined Steve Carlton's bid for a major-league high 16th victory. He's tied at 15 with American Leaguers Steve Stone of Baltimore and Tommy John of New York.
And Carlton also is sixth on the all-time strikeout list. His five strikeouts in six innings gave him 173 this year, tops in the NL, and 2,856 for his career.
Astros 6, Mets 5
Pinch-hitter Jeff Leonard crashed a two-run homer in the sixth inning to start a three-run burst that gave the Astros their victory over New York and widened their West Division lead over Los Angeles to two games. Consecutive singles by Terry Puhl, Danny Heep and Jose Cruz accounted for Houston's winning run.

Cardinals 3, Dodgers 2
Dane Iorg, who hit a three-run homer to beat the Dodgers Monday night, doubled and came around on a Ken Reitz sacrifice and pinch-hitter Terry Kennedy's sacrifice fly to break a seventh-inning tie and give the Cardinals their triumph.
St. Louis' other runs against Don Sutton came on homers by Ted Simmons and Leon Durham. Ron Cey homered for Los Angeles.
Pirates 4, Padres 3
Steve Nicosia drove in two runs and Jim Bibby notched his 12th win, but it wasn't easy. After Bibby silenced the Padres on five hits for seven innings, Enrique Romo started the eighth in relief. Dave Winfield greeted him with a homer, then Dave Cash tripled and Jerry Turner singled in the ninth. On came Grant Jackson — and out he went after singles by Gene Richards and Ozzie Smith cut the lead to a run. Kent Tekulve finally put down the uprising and earned his 13th save.

Giants 2-1, Cubs 0-3
Larry Herndon's home run in the 15th inning gave San Francisco a victory in the game halted by darkness after 12 innings Monday, then Chicago came back to win the regularly scheduled game as Mike Vail drove in two runs with a fourth-inning double.
"It's been a tough year," said Vail, a spot starter and pinch-hitter despite being the owner of a .300 average all season. "I've been struggling and swinging at some bad pitches lately, but it's very difficult to play under these circumstances and very hard to prepare mentally. Even when I was third and fourth in the league in hitting, I was never sure of being in the lineup. It's all very hard to understand."

Putt Putt Roundup

The Seals, led by Paul Williams and Jimmy Gillahan's 72, defeated the Squirrels and the Junior Aces in Junior League play at the Greenville Putt Putt Golf Course Tuesday night.
Besides Williams and Gillahan's 72s, Ernie Thiel had an 85 for the three-man team. The Squirrels were paced by Dusty Carter's 74, Mike Sturtevant's 80 and Timmy Bland's 86.
Carl White led the Junior Aces with a six-under-par 66, which was low score for the day. Aaron Williams had an 88 for the Junior Aces, who had only two players at the match.
The wins keeps the Jr. Aces in first at 15-9-2. The Squirrels are 11-13-2 followed by the Seals with an 11-15-0 mark. White is the individual shot leader with a 33.6 average. Williams is second at 39.3 followed by Carter at 39.8.

tired hockey player Gordie Howe. Because the tournament is officially known as the Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open, entertainer Sammy Davis Jr. also will play.
Ayden Run Is Planned
AYDEN — The fourth annual Collard Festival Footrace will be held in Ayden on Sunday, September 7. There will be a one-mile run for ages 12 and under and an open mile run beginning at 4 p.m. A open two-mile and an open 10,000 meter run will follow.
Trophies will be awarded the winners and other awards will be given the top three runners in each age group. T-Shirts are guaranteed to the first 240 entries.
For entry forms and other information, contact Chuck Dunn, 420 Park Ave., Ayden (746-6155).

Trevino Ready For Hartford Tourney
WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Lee Trevino, fresh off a second-place finish in the British Open, may have been giving fair warning to his opponents when he said he's ready for this week's Greater Hartford Open golf tournament.
"I always think I'm going to win," Trevino said Tuesday. "And I'm playing well."
Trevino finished four strokes behind Tom Watson in the British Open in Muirfield, Scotland, last week and returned to the U.S. aboard a 9:30 a.m. flight Tuesday. But he said he was not suffering from jet lag as he readied for a practice round shortly after noon at the Wethersfield Country Club.
Golf fans will see if the long flight affected Trevino's game today. He will be teamed with comedian Bob Hope in a Pro-Am event that kicks off this week's tournament. Other celebrities participating in the Pro-Am will be basketball player Julius Erving and re-

Two Bells Make All Well For Rangers, White Sox

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Two Bells — Buddy and Kevin — and all's well with the Texas Rangers and Chicago White Sox.

The Rangers continued their smooth sailing of recent days and ran their winning streak to four games when Buddy Bell again tormented the Boston Red Sox, collecting three singles and scoring twice — including the winner in the ninth inning — in Texas' 4-3 victory Tuesday night.

Meanwhile, Kevin (no relation) Bell rapped a two-run double and eventually scored as the White Sox defeated the Kansas City Royals 6-1, ruining another comeback attempt by off-injured Steve Busby.

In other American League action, the New York Yankees defeated Milwaukee 3-0 in the opener of a two-nighter but the Brewers bounced back to take the nightcap 4-1, the California

Angels beat the Detroit Tigers 6-4, the Baltimore Orioles trounced the Minnesota Twins 8-4, the Oakland A's defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 5-1 after dropping the opener 6-2 and the Cleveland Indians blanked the Seattle Mariners 4-0.

Texas third baseman Bell is making a career of hitting against the Red Sox, especially in Boston. Bell, who singled ahead of Rusty Staub's fourth-inning homer, led off the ninth with his third consecutive hit, was sacrificed to second and scored the winner on a single by Pat Putnam. The triumph lifted the Rangers to the .500 level and left them 9½ games behind Kansas City in the AL West.

"This is an excellent hitters' ballpark and you get up for a game here," said Bell, who has a .277 average in his nine-year career but is batting .333 against Boston with 168 hits in 505 at-bats, with 17 homers and 67 RBIs.

"The fans are great and it's a nice place to play. It's a baseball town. I don't think I've ever heard anyone say they didn't want to play here, except maybe a few pitchers."

White Sox 6, Royals 1
Kevin Bell's double continued his hot hitting since White Sox owner Bill Veeck sent him to a hypnotist. Bell was hitting "about .080" when Veeck convinced him to start working with Chicago furniture magnate and amateur hypnotist Mort Cohen.

"I've been talking to him every day, even on the road," said Bell. "You count to five, then you close your eyes. Your eyes get tired. Each session lasts about seven or eight minutes. He mostly works on self-confidence and thinking positively."

"The first night I was 2-for-4. I've been hitting the ball pretty well. He just tells me to go up there and be comfortable, that I'm going to make solid contact and have good knowledge of the strike zone. He doesn't charge me anything for it; he's a multimillionaire and doesn't need the money."

Busby, who has been trying since 1976 to bounce back from shoulder surgery and was recently recalled from the minors, lasted 42-3 innings, giving up nine hits and six runs in his first big league start in almost a year.

Yankees 3-1, Brewers 0-4
Paul Mitchell pitched eight innings of one-run relief and Don Money hit a two-run home, pacing Milwaukee to victory in the nightcap. The Yankees took the opener as Tommy John, 15-3, hurled a four-hitter for his sixth shutout and tied Baltimore's Steve Stone and Philadelphia's Steve Carlton for the most victories in the majors.

Mitchell relieved starter Bill Travers following a rain delay of two hours and nine minutes after the first inning. He went the rest of the way, scattering five hits, striking out six and retiring the last 13 batters. The Brewers scored on Ed Romero's two-run single in the second inning and Money's homer in the third.

Angels 6, Tigers 4
Larry Harlow singled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Mark Clear recorded his eighth save to help Andy Hassler snap a personal 17-game losing streak in a California uniform. Hassler last won as an Angel on April 29, 1975. He pitched for Boston, the New York Mets and Pittsburgh before the Angels reacquired him last month.

Jason Thompson, who opened the seventh with a double and scored on Harlow's hit, provided an insurance run in the eighth with an RBI single. Lance Parrish hit two home runs to rally the Tigers from an early 4-0 deficit.

Orioles 8, Twins 4
Dan Graham drove in four runs with a homer and a double to help Mike Flanagan win his 10th game with a seven-hitter. Graham, a former Twins player who drove in six runs against his old club Monday night, clubbed a three-run homer in the first inning off Roger Erickson and doubled home another run in the fifth.

Graham wasn't gloating. He wasn't doing much of anything. "I really don't have anything to say," he said. "It's not anything out of bitterness or toward reporters. It's just the way I am."

Indians 4, Mariners 0
Len Barker pitched five perfect innings and finished with a four-hitter as Cleveland ended a four-game losing streak. Barker struck out eight and didn't walk a batter. Ted Cox singled to lead off the sixth inning, breaking up his perfect game bid. The Indians, sparked by Toby Harrah's two-run triple, scored all their runs in the first inning.

Blue Jays 6-1, A's 2-5
Mike Norris pitched a four-hitter after flirting with a no-hitter for 52-3 innings and took over the AL knockout lead with 109 as Oakland won the second game. In the opener, Toronto went ahead on second-inning homers by Otto Velez and Roy Howell in a four-run second inning and Jesse Jefferson got his first victory since May 16.

G'ville Teams Meet For Area II Title

It will be Greenville against Greenville this afternoon as the Little League District IV Tournament continues play today at the Elm Street diamond.

Greenville North State soundly defeated North Hampton, 9-2, to remain alive in the single-elimination tourney, while the town's second entry, Greenville Tarheel, whipped Tarboro, 7-2.

The victories advanced the teams into today's action, where they will face each other at 5:00 for the District IV, Area II championship. The winner will play the Area I champion Friday at 5 p.m. in Havelock for the District crown.

Pitching performances by local hurlers highlighted yesterday's action as North State's Tyrone Jones tossed a three-hitter and Tarheel's Terry Warren pitched a two-hitter.

After falling behind by a run after the first inning of play, North State tallied three runs in the second to take the lead for good before adding a run in the third and four more in the bottom of the fifth.

Van Alston paced the winners' attack with a three-for-four game, including a home run and a double, and he drove home three runs. James Mathews and Scott Davis, the number nine hitter, each picked up a pair of hits in the win.

Winning pitcher Jones limited the North Hampton batters to just three hits in the six innings while whiffing 13 batters and walking three.

Greenville Tarheel used a pitching machine of its own to eliminate Tarboro from further tourney action.

Tarheel Warren held the losers to just the two hits while striking out 11 and walking six, three in both the second and fourth innings.

The Tarheel squad pushed across a pair of runs in the first inning and added another in the second before crossing the plate twice more in both the third and fourth innings.

Tarboro scored a pair of runs in the fourth when Carlton Bishop doubled following three straight walks.

Sterling Edwards and Mitch Phillips paced the winners with two hits each.

Greek Wins Greco Gold

MOSCOW (AP) — Stilianos Migiakis of Greece will bring an Olympic wrestling gold medal back to the country where the Greco-Roman style was created more than 2,500 years ago. He won it in the 62-kilogram category Tuesday, defeating Istvan Toth of Hungary in the final.

Migiakis also prevented a complete medal sweep by wrestlers from Hungary, Romania and the Soviet Union, which otherwise dominated the three weight classes contested Tuesday.

The title in the 90-kilogram category went to Hungarian Norbert Novotny, and tiny Zaksylyk Ushkempirov of the Soviet Union won the 48-kilogram category.

Goodhew Wins But Not Happy

MOSCOW (AP) — Duncan Goodhew, champion in the Olympic 100-meter breaststroke, is proud that he has no hair, but wasn't happy that his victory was not celebrated as a British achievement.

After winning a gold medal Tuesday night in 1 minute, 33.4 seconds, Goodhew stood on the victory stand as the Olympic flag was raised and the band played the Olympic anthem instead of "God Save the Queen."

Great Britain is one of the countries which had asked that its flag and anthem not be used at the Olympics as a protest against the Soviet presence in Afghanistan.

"I'm still British and I still believe in my country and that I swam for my country," said Goodhew, who swam collegiately at N.C. State. "But I agree with my (swimming) federation that politics should not be mixed with sports, so it was worth the sacrifice (to not have the British anthem) in order to keep politics out of sports."

Svetlana Varganova of the Soviet Union set an Olympic record today in qualifying for tonight's final of the women's 200-meter breaststroke. She was timed in 2 minutes, 29.77 seconds in erasing the previous mark of 2:33.35 set in 1976 by Marina Koshevaia of the Soviet Union.

Irena Fleissnerova of Czechoslovakia also won the previous Olympic record with 2:32.79.

East Germans won each of the first four gold medals in women's swimming, but their fastest qualifying time was only good for fifth place, a 2:34.88, by Sylvia Rinka.

Goodhew, a former student at North Carolina State, defeated silver medalist Arsen Miskarov of the Soviet Union, who was timed in 1:03.82, and bronze medal-winner Peter Evans of Australia, who was clocked in 1:03.96. The best U.S. time of the year is 1:03.08, an American record, by Steve Lundquist of Jessup, Ga.

Goodhew lost his hair after a fall from a tree at age 10 damaged his nervous system. He now says that having no hair "is a part of my person and I don't want any. It's a bloody nuisance."

The attention Goodhew received after the playing of the Olympic anthem overshadowed a tremendous performance by Vladimir Salnikov of the Soviet Union, who became the first man to swim 1,500 meters in under 15 minutes.

His time of 14:58.27 can be considered a special milestone because he had to average less than a minute for each 100 meters. Brian Goodell of Mission Viejo, Calif., had come the closest to achieving the feat previously with his 15:02.40 in the 1976 Olympics.

Salnikov was right at the 14-minute mark after 1,400 meters, but he sprinted the final 100 in 58 seconds to shatter Goodell's record and defeat the silver medal winner, Soviet teammate Alexandr Chaev, by a staggering 16 seconds. Max Metzker of Australia in 15:14.39.

"When I passed the 1,200 or 1,300-meter marks I was sure I would finish first, but I wasn't sure I could break the record," Salnikov said. "But I was sure I could break the record after the 1,400 mark."

He said he didn't believe the 15-minute barrier was a psychological one or that his physical limit has been achieved.

The East Germans won all the women's swimming gold medals here, making it four in a row Tuesday night when Ines Diers, the bronze medalist in the 100 freestyle Monday night, won the 400 freestyle in an Olympic record of 4:08.76. That broke the previous Olympic mark of 4:09.89 by East German Petra Thumer in 1976 but was slower than the best American time this year, 4:07.86 by Kim Linehan of Austin, Texas.

The 400 freestyle silver and bronze medals were also taken by the East Germans, with Petra Schneider taking second in 4:09.16 and Carmela Schmidt third in 4:10.86.

Even when they don't win medals, the East Germans are impressive. Rica Reinisch set a world record in the preliminaries of the 100 backstroke with a clocking of 1:01.50, one-hundredth of a second under the mark she shared with Ulrike Richter. Reinisch had equalled the previous mark on Sunday night when she swam the backstroke leg on the East Germans' world record medley relay.

In the 100 butterfly semifinals, Kees Vervoorn of The Netherlands was the top qualifier for tonight's final in 55.02, followed by Par Arvidsson of Sweden, who was only three-hundredths of a second behind. The final should be hotly contested since even the eighth and final qualifier, Alexei Markovskiy of the Soviet Union, was just .67 off Vervoorn's pace.

The 400 freestyle silver and bronze medals were also taken by the East Germans, with Petra Schneider taking second in 4:09.16 and Carmela Schmidt third in 4:10.86.

Even when they don't win medals, the East Germans are impressive.

Breaks Four-Year-Old Record
Vladimir Salnikov of the USSR celebrates his win in the 1,500-meter freestyle swimming event of the Moscow Olympics Tuesday night.

USSR, East German...

"I'm still British and I still believe in my country, and that I swam for my country," Goodhew said. "I agree with my federation that politics should be kept out of sports, so it was worth the sacrifice. I made the sacrifice with regret to keep politics out of sport."

No swimmer has a tougher time than the 1,500-meter man. The pain of swimming the 1,500 meters is said to be comparable to doing a marathon. On Tuesday, Vladimir Salnikov of the Soviet Union became the first man to swim the grueling distance in under 15 minutes. His time of 14:58.27 smashed American Brian Goodell's 4-year-old standard of 15:02.40, established at the Montreal Games.

"I don't think it (the 15-minute mark) was a psychological barrier for me, or that the limit has been achieved," Salnikov said.

Only one man could have pushed Salnikov today, and that was Goodell, who hasn't been swimming all that well since easily winning the 400 and 1,500 meters at Montreal.

"If they (the Americans) were here, I'm sure I would swim as I did today," Salnikov said.

Only the American women would seem to be able to seriously challenge the East German swimmers. Ines Diers led an East German sweep in the 400 freestyle, clocking an Olympic record 4:08.76, but the time was slower than American Kim Linehan's best time of the year, 4:07.84.

In the preliminaries for tonight's 100 backstroke final, Rica Reinisch of East Germany set a world record. Her time was 1:1.50, one-hundredth of a second faster than the mark she shared with countrywoman Ulrike Richter.

The Soviet men's gymnastic team easily won a competition diluted by the absence of the boycotting Japanese, who had won this event in every Olympics since 1952, and the improving Americans. Kurt Thomas and Bart Connor had led the American men to a close, third-place finish at the 1979 world championships.

"They (the Japanese) took the silver and won only one bronze in individual events at the 1979 world championships," said Soviet Coach Leonid Arkayev after world all-around champion Alexander Dityatin and four-time Montreal gold medalist Nikolai Andrianov propelled the Soviets to 589.60 points and a clear-cut victory over East Germany. Hungary was third.

Pittsburgh's Parker Wants Out

SAN DIEGO (AP) — All-Star outfielder Dave Parker, upset that he's become a target of homepark fans, says he's "reached the point of no return" in Pittsburgh and wants the Pirates to trade him.

His trade demand came two days after the latest fan abuse incident involving the National League's 1978 Most Valuable Player and two-time batting champion.

Parker, who took a .284 batting average with 12 home runs and 52 runs batted into Tuesday night's game, walked off the field in the eighth inning of a doubleheader opener last Sunday in Pittsburgh after a spectator nearly hit him with a transistor radio battery. The 29-year-old outfielder sat out the second game, won by Pittsburgh 8-7 over Los Angeles.

"It is in the best interests of both parties — the city of Pittsburgh and myself — to complete my career without bodily harm," said Parker. "Whoever feels that strongly about Dave Parker, we can eliminate that problem."

Pirates' Manager Chuck Tanner said Parker has become the target of "a sick person." Parker said he's informed the Pirates' front office that they "have to get me out of town, period."

If traded, terms of his contract confine the list of potential team to nine, including Cincinnati, his hometown. Other teams he identified Tuesday are the Los Angeles Dodgers, California Angels and Atlanta Braves.

"I was hit in the back of the head with a gas valve from a pellet gun last year Sunday it was a battery. Earlier this year somebody tossed a sock full of nuts and bolts that weighed five pounds. A couple of years ago it was a bat," Parker told The Associated Press.

"Maybe it's the money. But everybody else in baseball respects me. It hasn't happened all year except in Pittsburgh and I find that hard to digest because that's where I live."

Parker entered Tuesday's game against San Diego batting .285 with 52 runs batted-in and 12 homers.

"Hey, I love the city and I'd love to stay there. Fact is I've got to go out everyday and put my career on the line. I'll do everything I can to help the Pirates win, but I've reached the point of no return."

"He's right in everything he says about the abuse," said Tanner. "But, for every one that tries to do something to him, there's 100 that love him. I sure don't want to see him leave. He's the best player in the game. He's the guy that makes the wheel go around for the Pirates."

Prep Stars Fall, 8-6

GREENVILLE — There's something about South Granville that the Greenville Prep League All-Stars can't beat — its baseball team.

In the Prep League State Tournament here, the local unit lost to the South Granville unit for the second time in the tourney last night, 8-6, winding up second in the state behind the winning team. Greenville suffered its first defeat of the event Sunday night at the hands of South Granville.

Greenville held a 5-2 lead going into the top of the fourth inning before several throwing errors by the home team allowed the undefeated team to score a pair of runs.

South Granville tied the game at 6-6 in the top of the sixth before crossing the plate two more times in the top half of the seventh to take the state title.

Pat Rand, Bill Michel and Steve Wall paced the losers with two hits each in the team's final game of the season.

South Wins...

MacMillan singled to lead off the third and went to third when Pope followed with a single. Page then ripped the locals' third straight single to score MacMillan.

In the fourth, Avery singled, moved to second on Brann's single and went to third on an error. He scored on Pope's two-out single. Central Carolina scored in the sixth but it wasn't enough as Coastal Plains South captured the state title.

Neither team had anyone with two hits in the first game. In the second, Jeff Cox had three hits for the winners while MacMillan, Pope and Page had two hits.

June 6, 1944, Utah Beach, D-day — the longest day.

And so it was for then Lt. Martin Lederhandler, photo officer attached to the 4th Infantry Division, and a couple of his fine feathered friends.

Lederhandler and his friends were part of a noble experiment that failed miserably, at least for the Americans. But, thanks to his friends, it did get Marty one of the most surprising bylines he's ever had.

Long before that D-day invasion that brought Allied forces into direct land confrontation with the Germans in France, someone in the planning department wondered how to get newsphotos of the invasion back to London in a hurry for dispatch to the rest of the world.

"Pigeons," that someone thought — and pigeons it was. Some 24 racing pigeons that were used to make the run from Calais to Dover were borrowed for the cause.

Special waterproof-canvas bird cages were designed, equipped with water and food for two days, plus breathing tubes that could be sealed should the person carrying the cage get dunked in the water during the landing. There were two birds per cage.

Cigar-tube-like cannisters complete with a small harness that would fit on the bird were also designed. Then 12 photographers were chosen to carry the birds ashore on various beaches all along the front.

Each photographer was issued a 35mm Leica camera and special 10-exposure cassettes that could later be inserted into the tube. The tubes were labeled "Do Not Open. Exposed Film..." plus the Signal Corps unit and APO number back in London, where the film was supposed to be processed after arrival.

These special photographers carried a Rolleiflex as their second camera in order to hold the weight down. The normal Signal Corps photographer of that day carried a Speed Graphic, but the bulky 4x5 film was not suitable for the pigeons to carry in any quantity.

The planners and suppliers had thought of everything, or so it seemed when Lederhandler boarded his ship for the invasion with his birds on June 3rd. What they hadn't counted on was the storm that lashed up the channel, delaying the landing by one day.

Birds must be exercised, Lederhandler found out later. They can not stay cooped up for more than two days. In this case it had been at least three.

Off shore, when Lederhandler transferred from an LST to a Rhino barge for the actual landing, he shot photos of other equipment being unloaded. While the barge was making its way towards the shore, Marty loaded the film tube and lashed it to the pigeon's back. He then tossed the bird into the air only to see it fall like a shot into the water where it fluttered its wings and swam, not flew, towards shore. In the excitement, Lederhandler had to forget about the bird.

Once ashore, Marty made some more pictures with his Leica, loaded the second tube onto the back of his second pigeon and again tossed the bird up into the air. This time the bird fell back to the ground, fluttered around a while, finally took off and disappeared over a nearby hill.

Confident that at least one of his birds would get back with his photos, Lederhandler then switched to the Rollei and standard film shipments to be made by press pouch via boat until a landing strip had been secured.

Days later, while poking around in an abandoned German pillbox in the town of Cherbourg, Marty picked up a German newspaper and was startled to see a familiar picture on Page One. He had the caption translated. It read:

"ON THE WAY TO DESTRUCTION: Reloading of vehicles of the 4th American Infantry Division from a special transport ship to barge. The barge was destroyed by German coast artillery fire. The picture comes from the USA reporter, Lt. Lederhandler, and was taken from a carrier pigeon that fell into German hands completely exhausted." Of course, none of it was true except that Lederhandler had taken the picture. Other photos from other pigeons apparently also appeared in various German newspapers. Not one of the 24 carrier pigeons returned to England with their film. Lederhandler learned later. Signal Corps photographers were never given bylines in those days. It amused Marty to think that his only byline in World War II came from an enemy newspaper. When the American GI newspaper, Stars and Stripes, heard about the story they kiddingly accused Lederhandler of working for the other side. And, oh yes, this all led to his new nickname — "Pigeon Lederhandler!"

Old "Pigeon" is still with us. Today he's a photographer with the Associated Press in New York and getting plenty of bylines with a lot less effort.

energy pioneers probably never expected perfection, and at the same time realized they were doing something, though small and imperfect, for the energy situation.

Beyond that, members of the solar-energy families view themselves as being among the leaders in a great cultural transition, she says.

"It involves a realization that we are not separate from the environment, that what we do affects the environment, and the environment in turn affects us," Ms. Zimmerman says.

She says the feeling got into a willingness to share and exchange ideas and resources with other people, instead of the more common ethic of hoarding and competition.

Office hazards to consider when selecting plants include poor lighting, lack of air circulation, and drafts from air conditioning.

Dick Husby, marketing manager of Garden Scene planterware, says plastic pots are good containers for office plants, because they retain moisture longer than other pots. Also, plastic pots have a variety of colors and shapes to blend with office decor and to liven up a drab environment.

Ms. Zimmerman explains that by saying the solar-

The bidding:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♠ Pass
2 ♠ Pass 3 ♠ Pass
4 ♠ Pass Pass Pass
Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

Some years ago we had a pupil who became a bridge enthusiast. Despite our strenuous exhortations, she refused to take any fineses because, she said, "they make me nervous." She would have done very well on today's hand.

Once hearts had been raised, South's hand became very good. He made a try for game by bidding a suit in which he needed help. North, with full values for his simple raise, was quite willing to accept the invitation, but he was not sure where South wanted to play the hand. So North contented himself with a bid of three spades, and South corrected to the heart game.

West led the jack of diamonds. Declarer won in hand, cashed the ace king of hearts, felling the queen, then tried the club finesse. That failed, and declarer now had to hold his spade losers to two. He tried to achieve that goal in the recommended fashion by leading a spade from his hand and finessing the nine. Unfortunately, that lost to East's ten, and two more spade tricks to the defense spelled down one.

Bad luck, claimed South. Had both fineses succeeded, he would have made an over-trick. That was true, but what he overlooked was that, even though both fineses were wrong, he could have made his contract.

When you have a holding such as declarer had in the spade suit, you should spend every effort to have the opponents open that suit for you. If you can accomplish that, they cannot take more than two tricks in the suit. Declarer should win the first trick in dummy, draw trumps in two rounds and cash his high diamonds, discarding a club from the table. Now the ace of clubs is cashed and the queen of clubs is led.

It matters not who wins the club trick, for that opponent will be faced with a Hobson's choice. He must either lead a spade, in which case the defenders can collect only the ace and king, or return a minor suit, permitting South to discard a spade from his hand while ruffing in dummy.

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1980

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: It could be easy to get involved in a confrontation with an associate over a petty matter so make a point to avoid all such likelihood by maintaining a pleasant attitude.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Daytime is likely to be difficult except for late afternoon when an interesting person relieves tensions. Express happiness.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Be sure not to react bitterly to remarks made by a careless person. Take steps to improve your health and appearance.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Don't become involved in an altercation between two associates and it will soon blow over. Use care in motion.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Use extra care in whatever work you are involved in today and get excellent results. Sidestep a spendthrift.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Keep busy at important business matters and gain benefits. Your mate may be in difficult mood but take this in stride.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Be more concerned with home duties than outside affairs today. Follow all rules and regulations that apply to you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Put your fine ideas to work and gain the support of associates. Take no risks in travel when it gets dark. Be wise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Handle monetary matters wisely now and postpone less important affairs until later in the week. Be logical.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Study long-range plans and be patient, since they do not come to fruition quickly. Improve your appearance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Be sure to obtain the data you need from the right sources. The planets are now favorable for getting ahead in career matters.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Good day to be your gregarious self. Try to understand the problems of others. Avoid one who is too talkative.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Carry through with outside chores in an efficient manner and gain added benefits. Plan the future wisely.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be endowed with many talents, so be sure to give a good education that could lead to a most successful life. Teach to be patient since your progeny is likely to be impulsive. Don't neglect religious training.

"The Stars impel, they do not compel." What you make of your life is largely up to you!

BES PAK TRASH BAGS ARE STRONG, DEGRADABLE AND ECONOMICAL!

You see, BES-PAK trash bags are specially treated. This treatment does not effect the strength of the plastic, until after the bags are used and placed outdoors.

Here's how it works: Use the bags. Put them outdoors as usual. When the plastic has been exposed to prolonged sunlight of sufficient intensity (in your yard or at the dump), a gradual chemical change will begin.

And a few weeks or months later, the plastic will break down and turn back into harmless natural elements. Even if it's buried in landfill.

Isn't it nice to know you can help save the environment for your children and at the same time, save some money for yourself? BES-PAK trash bags are strong, degradable and economical!

At BES-PAK* we expect a lot from our trash bags. We expect them to be strong. Economical. And we expect them to help make a better environment. For you and for future generations.

Libel Award Is Upheld By Court

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - A federal appeals court has upheld former Mayor Joseph Alioto's $350,000 libel award from Look magazine.

The decision by the 9th U.S. Court of Appeals on Tuesday was the latest in the case that has gone to trial four times and been appealed twice.

A 1969 article in the now-defunct magazine claimed Alioto attended meetings with men who were identified by Look as Mafia leaders. After two trials ended in hung juries and another was decided in Look's favor and then reversed, a federal judge ruled in May 1977 that the article was published "with reckless disregard" for the truth.

An attorney for Cowles Communications, Inc., which closed the magazine in the early '70s, said an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court would be decided by insurance underwriters.

Property Owners Can Work Off Their City Taxes

By JAMES V. HEALION
HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI)
At 8:25 a.m. one day a week for a year now, Mary Haley has arrived in her old white Chevrolet at a hole-in-the-wall office to help victims of domestic violence.

Two bare bulbs burn overhead. There are two telephones on the desk, one of them a hot line for the police and the Family Service Society.
She will not see a paycheck for her work at the experimental Crisis Intervention Support unit.
But Mary Haley is satisfied with the arrangement because she is working off the balance of her property taxes and thus saving from foreclosure by the city her small house near Trinity College, which she and her four children call home.

Ninety-seven other Hartford residents living on meager incomes and enduring hard times in Connecticut's capital city — as the municipality is itself — have been able to keep the tax wolf from their doors through the 5-year-old In-Kind Services Program.

The city's program, the first in the nation, is limited to the unemployed, retired, and those whose taxes exceed 10 percent of their income. Average income is $5,400. Average property tax is $974. The program was the idea of former councilman Nicholas Carbone. He felt the city had an obligation to help its tax needy.

Participants are paid, depending on their aptitudes and skills, from $3.30 to $4.80 hourly and have done everything from taking the rust pits off the outdoor brass railings at City Hall to legal work.

and retiree from the Aetna Life & Casualty Co. has lived in her pin-neat, six-room house for 50 years. She spent three weeks reducing her tax liability by sorting out tax payments in the peak return period. This allowed the payments to be deposited quicker, and the city drew more interest than it would have ordinarily.
Hargreaves winces when he recalls a corporate tax check for $3 million which arrived on a Friday. The payment didn't reach the bank until the following week in the routine shuffle. This probably wouldn't have happened with a Ruth Flynn around, he said.

Christian convictions.
There's another side to it. "Foreclosure is a tacky business," Hargreaves said. First, there's the problem of putting people out on the street, and then there can be resale and vandalism problems.
A telephone inquiry from a Florida company which develops entire communities suggested the concept could be broadened to include in-kind services for those unable to pay utility bills, Hargreaves said.

So while working and attending college, she also reports at the Farmington Avenue office for her round of chores. And she's thankful for the tax break program.
"It's one of the best things going in the city of Hartford. It works. It can be done," she said. "It gives people an opportunity to do something like this in lieu of giving up their homes. It's the right kind of program with the right kind of people running it."

MARY HALEY, participating in a program where qualified home-owners perform services to work off their property taxes, puts in one day a week at the Crisis Intervention Support Unit in Hartford, Conn. (UPI Photo)

So far the city has realized $180,000 in services, but David Hargreaves, 35, who runs the program when he isn't wearing his systems analyst hat, says the services performed sometimes translate into cold cash in the city treasury.
For example, a young lawyer who was bequeathed a house and was unable to pay the taxes paid his debt by taking on and winning a case for the city which meant a lot more money in licensing fees.

Another participant, Iva Morrill, 81, disabled for 25 years, lay awake nights figuring a way to pay more than $1,000 in taxes on an income of $2,000. She then sorted parking tickets for seven weeks. "It was very rewarding," she said. "They were very considerate. Every time I moved my wheelchair, somebody had to move, too."

Mary Haley's 64-year-old house in a working class neighborhood has a fireplace, oak flooring, a dog, and an old rubber tire swinging from a backyard maple.

A Good Case For Bullish On Stocks

She worked the "housewives' shift" at the Travelers Insurance Co. in the evenings when her children were growing up. Her world split apart two years ago: Divorce.
"That should have been enough. It was hard on both of us and I just wanted to keep some sense of order for my children." Then she got a property tax bill for $1,100 and was stunned. She paid what she could and considered selling the house and moving into an apartment. But few landlords want a divorced woman with four children and a mutt named "Mack."
Her income as a part-time secretary was only $5,400. Support payments from her former husband, a traffic engineer, totaled $3,000.

The stock market has rallied strongly from its Spring lows. Investors seem preoccupied with the market's short term direction at a time when longer term considerations could be far more important. A good case can be made for being bullish on stocks.

Stock market cycles are very closely related to economic cycles, with major downlegs preceding recessions and upmoves beginning in advance of economic recoveries. We are officially in recession, but have we seen the market bottom?

The last year of 1975-80 market cycle was very volatile, with the final declining phase apparently obscured by external events, principally the decontrol of domestic energy prices.

Since energy related stocks account for about one-fourth of the market value of all stocks, the boom in these stocks set off by decontrol effectively masked a sharp decline in the remaining three-fourths of the market, what some analysts are calling a classic cyclical market decline in advance of a recession. Nonenergy stocks topped out in October 1979 and declined for seven months. So, a market bottom could already have been reached.

Interest rates are another clue to market cycles and market bottoms are usually reached within a few months of interest peaks. We have seen the interest rate peak and experienced an "interest rate rally." The decline in rates will be followed by falling corporate profits. What is not known is whether or not expectations have been sufficiently reduced to prevent another market decline as lower profits are reported over the next several months.

The risk of being out of the market could be greater than the risk of being invested, particularly since this is an election year, full of tax cut talks and supply-side solutions to our economic problems. An improved inflation outlook further bolsters the case for buying stocks.

The flat market of the Seventies stemmed from an unexpectedly high and volatile rate of inflation. Business profitability suffered and dividend growth failed to offset inflation. Investors sought higher and higher yields for protection of their purchasing power.
Businesses now appear to have adjusted their operations to a continuing high rate of inflation. Dividend increases are well above the trend-line rate of growth, now averaging about 10 percent annually. If this growth can continue, there will be no need for ever increasing yields on stocks. If yields remain in the ranges of recent years and dividends rise at 10 percent each year, stock prices should rise at the same rate.

The inflation outlook has been encouraging lately, with the Federal Reserve restraining monetary growth. This could continue a while longer, even in an election year.
Inflation is not going to disappear, but the chances of it remaining below 10 percent are good.

20-Cent Gas Is Problem In Ecuador

By KERNAN TURNER
Associated Press Writer
QUITO, Ecuador (AP) —

This tiny South American country is struggling to sustain an oil boom which has brought it unprecedented prosperity and subsidized gasoline at 20 cents a gallon.

Natural Resources Minister Jose Corsino Cardenas said recently that "the success or failure of the government depends on its petroleum policy."

One of the problems is heavy domestic demand for petroleum, especially the cheap gasoline.

Ecuador, a Colorado-sized country of seven million people, returned to civilian rule last Aug. 10, after seven years of military dictatorship.

Even before the military stepped aside, economists were warning that petroleum was not being extracted fast enough to sustain high economic growth.

The state-owned oil company, CEPE, estimates proven reserves at about 1.4 billion barrels. Ecuador is the smallest producing member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

It isn't a lack of oil that is causing concern, but that domestic demand for petroleum products is outpacing exploration and production.

Exports are expected to continue into the mid-1980s, but in decreasing volume. Unless domestic consumption is curbed or production greatly increased, government planners believe exports will dry up by about 1985, only 13 years after they began.

Petroleum sales will finance more than half this year's $1.8 billion federal budget.

Petroleum exports represented 55 percent of all sales abroad in 1979, earning $1.16 billion.

Economists believe oil exports will earn $1.6 billion this year, compared with $263 million for coffee, $234 million for cocoa products and $200 million for bananas, which have become the No. 3 export.

The oil sales have sustained one of South America's fastest growing economies. The gross national product — the total of all goods and services — is expected to increase about 5 percent this year.

The oil boom is reflected in streets jammed with cars and motorcycles running on the 20-cent gasoline, one of the lowest prices in the world.

Oil exports have helped pay for a refinery, a gas plant, housing projects, new industrial plants, highways, electrical projects, loans and modern weapons.

The nation's annual per capita income since 1972 has risen from $300 to $800 a year, which still is far below that of other oil-producing and industrialized nations.

The government announced it would offer new "model contracts" to foreign companies later this year in an attempt to attract new exploration.

But there is agreement within the government that the toughest problem is how to reduce domestic consumption.

The most obvious, but politically dangerous, way would be to raise the price of gasoline by removing subsidies.

But merely mentioning that possibility sends leftists and students into the streets to demonstrate. Thousands took to the streets and one student was killed during demonstrations in January over increased milk prices.

The government recently announced it will introduce a high-octane gasoline which will not be subsidized. The 90-octane gasoline will sell for 20 sucres (74 cents) a gallon.

The idea apparently is to phase out the cheap, subsidized 80-octane gasoline, and force people to switch to the more expensive high-octane.

Gasoline represents about 41 percent of domestic petroleum consumption.

A recent television report suggested that a third of the petroleum purchased domestically is being smuggled to countries where the price is higher.

Some Actors Stranded By Strike

By JAY ARNOLD
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD (AP) - Larry Hagman took a vacation from "Dallas" and union telegrams told movie and television stars to stop working as negotiators for producers and two actors unions wrangled over issues blocking a settlement to a two-day strike.

The striking actors, many of whom are expected at a demonstration Thursday, say picketing may begin if talks with studio and TV network producers do not produce a new contract soon. "If this goes on much longer, there will be many more such demonstrations," Screen Actors Guild spokeswoman Kim Felner said Tuesday just before negotiations ended for the night. As the dispute continued here, actors and film crews were idle on locations all over the country. Telegrams telling actors to stop work arrived at dozens of sets. Although closed talks with studios and networks continued on a virtually around-the-clock basis, the strike has halted shooting for almost all U.S. theatrical film and prime-time television productions. Ms. Felner said some progress was being made as the strike entered its third day today, but SAG and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists were still wrangling with producers' representatives for what the unions view as a crucial stake in the lucrative pay-TV and videocassette market.

"There are just real major differences," she said. SAG, which represents actors in movies and filmed TV shows, walked out early Monday. AFTRA, whose striking members appear in taped prime-time TV shows, followed 24 hours later. Ms. Felner said federal mediator Phyllis Cayse had not attended any negotiating sessions because a legal impasse had not been declared. The key issue continued to be the actors' demand for a share in producers' gross receipts for sales of shows to new "supplemental" markets - pay TV, videodiscs and videocassettes.

Ms. Felner said the unions had backed off from their previous demands of 12 percent of the producers' gross in supplemental markets and were asking for only 6 percent.

John Davidson Is Quick To Master The Format

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) - John Davidson has only been on the air with his new talk show for a few weeks, and already he's mastered the form. At asking the inane question, singing the vapid song and shamelessly plugging his guests' products, he is as able as the man he replaced, Mike Douglas. You'll recall that Group W Productions hired Davidson to replace Douglas in the hope of attracting a younger audience, that 18-49 group advertisers so dearly covet. But Douglas landed on his feet in a new show, making it possible, in some markets, to test Group W's wisdom by watching Davidson AND Douglas. Why anyone would willingly do that, I don't know, but it's possible.

Such is the staple of most talk shows, information that isn't really information at all, just blabber posed as information. A proper talk show host must be able to shovel out heaps of servile flattery upon his guests, and Davidson seems to grasp that. One of his guests was songwriter Burt Bacharach, who teamed with Hal David for a string of cute, catchy little pop hits a decade or so ago.

Sellers Again Is In Hospital

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) - Comedian Peter Sellers, star of "Being There," "The Pink Panther" and more than 40 other movies, remained in critical condition early today after his third major heart attack in 16 years, a spokesman for London's Middlesex Hospital reported. The 54-year-old British actor collapsed Tuesday afternoon while talking to his secretary in his hotel suite. His heart beat and his breathing stopped. He was revived by mouth-to-mouth resuscitation and heart massage by a hotel nurse, Bridget Sikios, and the ambulancemen as they rushed him to the hospital. A hospital spokeswoman said he suffered a cardiac arrest and was in the intensive care unit. Actress Brit Eklund, who was married to Sellers when he suffered his first heart attack, arrived from Stockholm with their 15-year-old daughter, Victoria. Lynne Frederick, the actor's present wife, was reported flying to London from California. She is his fourth wife, 29 years his junior, and they were talking divorce last year. But they got together again and recently completed a movie in Paris.

Playing Role In 'Blackbeard'

A Greenville youth, Carl Wille, will be performing the role of Blackbeard's son, Ned Teach, Jr. in the Thursday, Friday and Saturday performances this week and the following week of "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag," the Bath outdoor drama, according to director Stuart Aronson.

Sellers took court action in Britain last year to prevent newspaper serialization of her account of their marriage. But her memoirs were published in book form this month and revealed many details of their life together. Sellers suffered his first heart attack in 1964 and was said then to have "clinically died" eight times. After another attack in 1977, he was fitted with a pacemaker to regulate his heartbeat. He had a mild attack in Dublin in May and was hospitalized for six days. Shortly afterward, he appeared, looking strained and exhausted, at the Cannes Film Festival, reportedly against the advice of his doctors. Sellers raved about movie "Being There" is currently being shown in London. In it he plays a slow-witted gardener who by a fantastic chain of circumstances appears destined for the White House.

Married During Her Day Off

Youth Unrest Rears Head In Placid 'Land Of Heidi'

By HANNS NEUERBOURG
Associated Press Writer
ZURICH, Switzerland (AP) — The tourist put his camera down.

"No," he explained. "No, this is not the photo I would like to bring home from the land of Heidi."

As he spoke, some 150 policemen in riot gear, with shields and gas masks slowly moved down Limmatstrasse near the main railway station, firing tear gas to dis-

Egged on by "Radio Banana," a pirate broadcasting station, the youths had been gathering, in defiance of a police ban, for a demonstration protesting criminal proceedings brought against others after riots six weeks ago.

Clashes continued almost up to dawn July 13 in the narrow streets of Zurich's Niederdorf, a conglomerate of discos and antique stores. Litter bins were toppled, construction fences were turned into barricades and set on fire, show windows were broken, and bottles and rocks flew as police moved in with water cannon, rubber bullets and tear gas.

Cafe Odeon, the historic Art Deco hangout once patronized by exiles Benito Mussolini, V. I. Lenin and James Joyce, was smashed up for the fourth time. More than 120 demonstrators were arrested.

By some international scales, the rioting has been low key. There have been no deaths or serious injuries reported. But it has been enough to tarnish ever so slightly the image of Switzerland as an island of peace in a troubled world, the land of Heidi, chocolate and watches.

What caused the unrest was a multimillion dollar project by the city to renovate the Zurich Opera, narrowly approved in a local vote last month. Several youth groups had joined in urging that the funds earmarked for what they called the "theater of the elite" should be spent instead on promoting "alternative" cultural activities for the 60,000 Zurichers between 18 and 25.

On women's lib, Ms. Laird says there is no fixed role for a man or woman. "We get our genes from both and should feel free to break out of so-called natural roles. I was born a liberated woman."

Her first book, "The Chemehuevi," was finished in 1969 but wasn't published until 1974 because of difficulties in translating its Indian dialect. Although Ms. Laird lived with the tribe for 20 years, her editors refused to believe a little gray-haired lady with twinkly eyes was an expert on a rare Indian lore and language.

The daughter of a Coleman, Texas, newspaper publisher, she moved to San Diego after dropping out of high school and found work as a field assistant to John Peabody Harrington, a nationally known linguist and ethnologist. He sent her alone to live and do research among Southwest tribes under grants from the Smithsonian Institution.

Once she slept eight months pregnant on a dirt floor, hiding an ax in fear of being scalped.

She divorced Harrington in 1920 after six unhappy years and married his Indian interpreter and study subject, George Laird. She had fallen in love with the half-Indian, half-Scot while married to Harrington.

Twenty years of tribal research among Arizona's Chemehuevi Indians came before Laird died in 1940, at which time his widow spent two frightening months in a prison-like nursing home, plotting her escape.

The literary world was surprised to discover an 80-year-old woman wrote "Encounter With An Angry God," her emotionally charged autobiography. In the Washington Post, reviewer Larry McMurtry wrote, "Were it fiction, one would have to think it great, if not the great American novel."

"Limbo," describing how a remarkable old woman was held in a nursing home, was published last year. "I call it my personal horror story of filth and torment which most people still endure," the author says. Some readers have called "Limbo" top-notch motion picture material.

Big publishers have been inexplicably shy of books by new-author Laird, whose works usually are printed by the tiny Malki Museum Press on the Morongo Indian Reservation near Banning, Calif. Although she smiles like she doesn't mean it, Carobeth Laird says, "I would trade some of this fame and notoriety for hard cash."

along with the equivalent of $27,000 for repairs and sanitary installations.

But the move did not soothe the youths who have, meanwhile, formed a movement of "freaks, workers, punks, students, spontis (anarchists)," listed in that order by their underground paper.

Some believe the movement has only a few hundred activists and a few thousand sympathizers in a city of a half a million, of whom only 359 are listed as being unemployed.

Social analysts believe that the motives of the movement are widely divergent.

Werner Fritsch, a sociologist specializing in youth problems, says the causes of unrest range from sheer boredom to legitimate grievances, from disgust with an affluent society to frustration because things are "so hard to change."

To Emanuel Hurwitz, a Zurich psychiatrist and Social Democratic member of the state Parliament, the movement also reflects a feeling of general "diffuse uneasiness" among many Swiss, particularly the young.

There seem reasons for malaise in a country where the head of the biggest arms-making company was convicted of illegally shipping arms to both white-ruled and black Africa, where the deposed Shah of Iran and Emperor Bokassa of the Central African Empire bought villas — but where foreign workers are under stringent restrictions, and where one of the biggest banks registered record profits only a few years after losing hundreds of millions of dollars in a scandal involving the flight of foreign capital.

And there is also the Swiss conservatism, resented by a large part of the younger generation, which once prompted Friedrich Duerrenmatt, the noted playwright, to speak of a country "where each new idea is seen as a source of epidemic."

The "Movement's" most favorite slogans: "Turn this state into cucumber salad" and, more enigmatic, "Freedom for Greenland, down with the pack-ice"

The building is in the industrial section of Zurich, only a 10-minute walk from Bahnhofstrasse, Switzerland's most expensive piece of real estate which is lined with elegant stores, sidewalk cafes and banks.

"Work makes sick" and "Sabotage is fun" proclaim other slogans covering a freshly painted front of the building along with a graffiti parade of red pigs.

"Everybody here is free to express his failings," said a young man who acted as guide. "We are just fed up."

Said another youth with a blond goatee, "And whoever thinks that this rathole makes us keep quiet is badly mistaken."

Arthritis Remains a Mystery

Is there anything new anywhere for the prevention and cure of arthritis? — Mr. B.D., N.C.

Dear Mr. D.: Arthritis still remains a most exasperating mystery from the point of view of prevention and of cure.

Many startling advances have been made, however, in the creation of drugs that serve to reduce pain and give greater mobility to the joints. Cortisone, in all of its forms, remains the great hormone-drug used to control some forms of arthritis, but in the last 15 years extensive research programs have been aimed at finding non-steroid (cortisone), anti-inflammatory agents which can offer relief of pain without the side effects of cortisone.

Some of the newer drugs have been remarkable. Unfortunately, they do not all accomplish the same objective in all people.

Vast studies in immunology hold the greatest promise for decreasing inflammation and reducing the severity of joint dysfunction. Without a doubt, the most dramatic advances are those that have been made in the field of joint replacement. Patients formerly destined to spend the rest of their lives in severe pain and chronic invalidism now can have hips, knees, ankles and other joints replaced with remarkable success.

There has been a great upswing in the study of genetics in relationship to arthritis. Perhaps the knowledge that will emanate from this will help prevent the onset of this relentless disease. It can well be said that a great impact is being made by the National Arthritis Commission and its associated agencies to combat the devastation of arthritis.

You recently wrote that alcohol and drugs consumed by pregnant women can affect the unborn child. My husband smokes cigarettes. Over weekends he adds a great deal of marijuana and alcohol. I'm curious to know, if we should ever decide to have a baby, could his drinking and smoking cause trouble? — Mrs. S.E., N.J.

Dear Mrs. E.: Yours is a most interesting question. Up to now little or no attention has been paid to the possibility that the offspring can be adversely affected by the father's use of alcohol, marijuana and hard drugs.

In recent years, however, a number of studies on this very subject have been taking place at universities all over the United States. At the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine and at the University of Vermont, some preliminary studies indicate that men, as well as women, should be cautioned against the use of such drugs at the time when families are being planned. For there now is a growing amount of evidence that paternal exposure to drugs can also influence the health and growth of the newborn child.

Hangovers Cost Billions

GENEVA (AP) — According to the International Labor Organization, at least 10 million adults suffer from alcoholism.

About 3 percent of the alcoholic population ends up on skid row. The other 97 percent remains in the work force.

The cost to industry through lost work time, health and welfare services, property damage, workman's compensation claims and insurance amounts to $15 billion annually, says the ILO.

Calling on more companies to institute formal programs to help alcoholic workers, the ILO says that whereas a decade ago only a few companies in the United States did so, today some 4,000 firms have inaugurated such programs.

The problem is not confined to the United States. In Chile, about 30 percent of the health-care budget is spent on patients with alcohol-related illnesses.

But Be Careful Where You Stick Out Your Tongue

By ROBERT LOCKE
AP Science Writer
SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A smile is a smile all over the world, but be careful where you stick out your tongue.

Psychologist Paul Ekman says he has hard scientific proof that, regardless of country or culture, human faces use the same expressions to show the same basic emotions.

"If you go anywhere in the world and you smile," he said in an interview, "everybody's going to know that either you are happy or you want people to think you're happy. That's quite apart from culture."

He said his and others' research on nonverbal communication shows that happiness, sadness, surprise, anger, fear and disgust produce the same expressions — smiles, frowns, wide eyes, clenched jaws and so on — in any culture.

These universal expressions, said the University of California-San Francisco psychologist, seem to be programmed into our genes.

But if expressions are the same from culture to culture, gestures emphatically are not.

These symbolic signs with hands or faces "are really like a language," Ekman said. "They have a vocabulary that's different from place to place and the same movement can mean entirely different things."

He said the circled thumb and forefinger that means "A-OK" in the United States is "a real insult in Southern Europe — an unprintable insult."

And where an American youngster might stick out his tongue to show defiance, "in some cultures that's a sexual invitation."

Even the head shakes for "yes" and "no" and the shrugged shoulders that mean "I don't know" are not found everywhere.

While Americans have 60 or 70 common symbolic gestures, Ekman said, Israelis — the champion gesturers — use more than 200. Southern Italians are close behind.

Social scientists have argued for decades whether emotional expressions are products of our genes or of our culture.

Charles Darwin sparked the debate 100 years ago by contending such expressions grew out of man's evolutionary past. Many psychologists argued in this century that, as one said, "What is shown on the face is written there by culture."

Ekman, after nearly 25 years of research including two expeditions to an isolated village in New Guinea, contends both groups are partly right.

"We've got these biologically based expressions (for the primary emotions)," he said. "But culture teaches us to control our emotions — to manage our faces."

The universal expressions, Ekman said, are controlled by each culture's "display rules," which can be so strong they are violated only at great peril. Politeness is an example.

"In this culture," he said, "we teach little boys not to show fear or distress because it's not considered manly. You see people struggle with that."

"We have the famous case of (Secretary of State) Edmund Muskie losing his credibility because he cried.

I think it's a tribute to his humanness; his wife had been insulted and he was very moved."

Muskie, seeking the Democratic presidential nomination in 1972, appeared to weep slightly after a newspaper printed innuendos about his wife. Many observers felt the incident ended his candidacy.

Ekman said television, movies and jet planes are shrinking the world so rapidly that few cultures are unexposed to the expressions and gestures of other societies. And exposure raises the possibility that one culture's expressions may have been learned from another.

But Ekman visited a South Fore village so isolated on a New Guinea mountain that villagers didn't know the purpose of the camera that recorded their expressions —

In a series of experiments, the villagers almost always correctly identified the emotions displayed on pictures of American faces.

Ekman contends the research, published this year as a book called "The Face of Man," was "very decisive."

The origin and value of these universal expressions is subject to considerable debate, Ekman said. Answers are mostly speculation.

"I think one of the most important roles for a happy expression," he said, "is to get parents to take care of their kids. All parents look for the smiles of their infants and there's every reason to think a smile helps sustain the parents' interest. It also helps you learn what the child likes."

Besides, he added, "It feels good to smile."

World War II Revisited By Group Of Friendly Florida 'Invaders'

SILVER SPRINGS, Fla. (AP) — When forester Tom Williams saw the "Nazis" invading the U.S. Navy's Pinecastle Electronic Warfare Range, he didn't know what to think.

First their car stopped and then he saw "they were wearing sidearms," Williams said. "I looked into the car and there was a shotgun painted camouflage and a machine pistol. I didn't know what I had."

So he called for help from the Game and Fish officers and the Marion County sheriff's department. When the reinforcements arrived, the men, dressed in camouflaged clothing and hunters' outfits, explained that they belonged to the World War II Historical Re-enactment Society of Miami and were simply looking around for a mock battlefield.

Ron Nesselhaus, 38, one of the pseudo-German infantrymen, explained that members of the group dress up as Germans all the time.

"We're not political activists, just collectors," he said. "We have exotic weapons and we carry them. We're friendly, harmless."

Resorts Fear Long-Term Effect From Recession

By KAREN MacPHERSON
United Press International

The dollar is down and the price of gasoline is up but it appears nothing will deter Americans from packing their bags and exercising that inalienable right — taking a vacation.

Because of the American insistence on an annual vacation fling, tourism officials across the country agree that neither the recession nor inflation is likely to put a major financial damper on the vacation business this summer.

"People will continue to travel," said Dale Hess, general manager of the San Francisco visitors and convention bureau. "Americans regard vacations as a right."

Even the recent rash of layoffs probably won't hamper the vacation surge this summer if unemployed workers follow the precedent set during recession. "What happened then is that a lot of the jobless went to Florida," said Suzanne Cooke, a travel survey manager with the U.S. Travel Data Center. "They were getting some kind of unemployment compensation and had some free time and decided to use it."

"But if it's a long-term kind of thing, sooner or later it could have a negative impact on the travel industry this year," she added.

Owners of some exclusive resorts which attract a well-heeled clientele said they don't have to worry about the recession.

"Our customers don't hesitate to pay our prices," said Bill Cody, grandson of Buffalo Bill, who runs a resort in the Wyoming mountains. "They buy the best."

While the recession doesn't appear to have shaken the American desire for a vacation, it is changing the kinds of vacations people are taking — determining how far and where they go, how much they spend and what they do.

For example, the memories of last summer's gasoline lines, which drastically cut 1979 attendance figures in many vacation spots, have enhanced the popularity of "short-haul," close-to-home vacations this year, officials said.

Americans also are doing more "destination travel" — going to one place and staying put, officials said.

"A lot of people now realize they could have a week here in the best room with the best of everything and still come home with money in their pocket," said Tony Farda, general manager of the Summit, one of many honeymoon resorts in Pennsylvania's Pocono Mountains.

"We are a nearby destination for millions of people. We say, 'Hey look, on a tank of gas you can get here and back,'" Farda added.

Melanie Ply, executive director of the Outer Banks Chamber of Commerce in North Carolina, said people feel they are saving money by staying in one place for a longer time.

"I'd say that is a result of inflation or other pressures on the economy," Ms. Ply said. "People, instead of driving to two or three beaches, are staying a little longer at one."

Where Americans are spending their vacations this year seems to hinge on the cost of transportation, said Ms. Cooke of the U.S. Travel Data Center.

"Given the gasoline crunch last July, we're anticipating that travel is going to look better this summer than last summer. Still, vacationers must contend with the rising costs of gasoline this year. It's one problem replaced by another."

While many Americans apparently will ignore the increased cost of gasoline in favor of putting around some vacation spot in their own cars, others are opting for motorcoach tours, which travel officials predict will have record volume this year.

Also popular are package tours, which many vacationers believe give them more value for their money.

"There's... an indication that people are shopping for value this year," said Linda Lacher, public affairs manager in the American Express travel division. "People are taking advantage of group packages or tours or any kinds of pre-arranged travel that gives them a better cost so they'll know before they leave how much their vacation will cost."

The recession also has changed the tenor of vacations taken by Americans. More people are seeking to immerse themselves in a whirlwind of activities in an effort to leave their money-worries far behind.

This attitude has given a boost to amusement parks, but spelled bad attendance figures for many outdoor historical museums, such as Colonial Williamsburg in Virginia, which generally attract those tourists in search of a more thoughtful vacation experience.

The recession also appears to have dampened the appetites of vacationing Americans for three big meals a day. Restaurant associations across the country report that more tourists are eating the main meal a day and munching on light snacks in between.

"I think the recession is having an effect on the dining room business but not on the room business," said Foy Shaw, owner of the Island Inn on Ocracoke Island in North Carolina. "People can eat one meal a day and snack rather than eat three meals a day."

The changes in American vacation habits necessitated by the recession are minor compared with the inflation woes besetting many restaurants and hotels as they struggle to keep their rates competitive.

"We aren't hiring as many people as in years past due to the cost of labor," said a spokesman for the Cape Cod Chamber of Commerce in Massachusetts. "Small property owners, instead of hiring three employees will hire two, pay them better and demand more work."

The owner of the John Village Cabins, also on Cape Cod, said higher costs have forced him to cut back "until we make up for it."

"Before, we could just let things go, but not anymore," he said. "Like the hot water. We put the hot water on time clocks and our customers know that from midnight until six the next morning, the hot water is off."

But, "if we raised rates according to the national inflation rate, we'd lose customers," he said.

Still, much of the slack in the U.S. vacation economy is readily picked up by record numbers of foreign visitors, particularly to destinations in the West and South.

Talk Of Resort To Violence If Fishing Is Barred

By MARY A. DEMPSEY
SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich. (UPI) — Clifford Parish, like his father and grandfather before him, is a fisherman.

This summer his nets hang idle. His boat has not been launched.

Parish, a Bay Mills Chippewa Indian, has been barred by law from fishing commercially in a controversy which has bounced from court to court for nearly a decade.

During the dispute, the Indians voluntarily have stopped fishing to avoid violence, limited their fishing takes, reduced the numbers of lakes in which they fish and carried identification cards.

But this summer is the first time they have been ordered to stop fishing.

At issue is the legality of a pair of century-old treaties granting the Bay Mills and Sault Ste. Marie Chippewa Indians in Michigan's Upper Peninsula unlimited rights to fish in the Great Lakes.

The court battle started on the state level in 1973. Now it is pending in the federal court system. In May, the Sixth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati ordered the Indians to stop fishing until a final ruling is issued.

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources argues unlimited commercial fishing will deplete the state's fisheries. The gill nets used by the Indians to catch whitefish also kill the sports fishermen's prize — lake trout.

"I don't know what I'm going to do. Fishing is all I know," said Parish, the father of four. "I have a little bit of savings but it won't be long before that goes."

There are few other sources of employment for Indians in the economically depressed Upper Peninsula where the reservation is located.

Wade Teeple, 36, tribal chairman at the reservation on Whitefish Bay, said the Indians considered growing fruit trees or trying to farm, but the rough terrain and long, bitter winters make it impossible.

Parish, like most of the sports fishermen, does not know what he will do when his money runs out. He and the others hint there may be violence if they go many more weeks without working.

"I think violence is the only thing that's going to straighten this up. There are a lot of people saying the same thing," said the burly, gray-haired Parish, who began fishing at the age of 9.

"I can't eat rocks. I have to do something. We're in a corner right now. If you stay in a corner long enough you'll come out fighting."

But Parish knows if he tries to fish illegally he risks having his equipment confiscated. And even if he can elude conservation officers, it is illegal for fisheries to buy his catch.

"They can't get unemployment because they don't pay enough into it," Teeple said. "And they can't get welfare unless they sell all their fishing equipment first — which means even if they could find a buyer they'll probably never have enough money to buy it back and get into fishing again."

Teeple said he expects some Bay Mills tribal members will have their boats and trucks repossessed because they will be unable to make payments on bank loans.

Arnold Parish, 26, who lives just down the road from his cousin, Clifford, is the only college graduate on the reservation and runs a three-man fishing crew every spring and summer.

"We started out and did some fishing in Muskegon for about five weeks before all this happened," he said. "Now I'm just doing nothing."

The young men and women involved in the fishing industry right now don't have anything else to lose. I think for the first time you've got us incited enough that we'll react."

Parish, who has a criminal justice degree from Michigan State University, considers himself one of the lucky ones. He is single and has friends in the Lansing area who will help him search for work.

"We haven't really gotten a fair shake on this," said Parish, a husky man whose long, jet black hair is tied at the nape of his neck.

Most of the families on the thickly wooded reservation fear the ban on the fishing will further divide the already fragmented Indian community.

"People don't seem to understand the problems of forcing the Indian community to break apart," Arnold Parish said. "They want us to assimilate right now."

"They don't realize there are still Indians who want to be Indians."

As far as the Indians are concerned, their problems can be blamed on sports fishermen and their allies in the Department of Natural Resources.

Teeple said the sports fishermen — biggest opponents to commercial fishing — have the agency's ear because they support it through their fishing license fees. Indians are exempt from buying fishing licenses.

"We are concerned with law enforcement. We have no interest in what the revenues are," insisted department law enforcement chief Frank Opolka.

Bear Keeper Is Held In Escape

BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — It took four days for authorities to catch up with Hazel, the bear on the lam, and now they are trying to put the brakes on her keeper.

Kenneth Curtis, Hazel's owner, faces up to 60 days in jail or a fine of $500 if he is convicted on a negligence charge of letting the 300-pound animal escape last week from Masterpiece Gardens, a tourist attraction he owns near Lake Wales.

Curtis says the charge isn't fair. When a prisoner escapes from jail, he said, the warden isn't charged with a crime. Why should the keeper be penalized for an escaped bear?

His trial is set for Aug. 12. Hazel had been moping around since the death of her mate a year ago, and her escape into the jungle-like terrain near the Gardens was an attempt to find some companionship, Curtis said.

Hazel was finally caught by a game warden who bagged her with a tranquilizer gun 500 yards from her cage.

PURGE GOES ON

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea's military leaders have announced 1,819 executives and lower echelon employees of state-run banks, corporations and other organizations have been dismissed in a continuing purge of corrupt and inefficient officials.

First Roadmaps Made In 1909

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — The first American automobile road map was developed in 1909 when Andrew McNally II and his new bride photographed every turnoff and landmark on the road between Chicago and Milwaukee.

Today, according to the editors of Rand McNally's 1980 Road Atlas, mapmaking is executed by researchers, surveyors, geographers, cartographers, draftsmen and printers.

By contrast with the 49 locations listed on that early Chicago-to-Milwaukee auto guide, Rand McNally's road atlas edition for 1980 identifies more than 76,000 towns and physical features.

Ping-Pong Player Dreams Of An Olympic Stature

By CHRIS ALLEN
MINNEAPOLIS (UPI) — She shines now in relative obscurity, but Sheila O'Dougherty foresees a bright future for her sport — once it comes "out of the basement."

"I don't personally feel neglected," she said. "I guess I do feel misunderstood. Because even when people watch good players play table tennis, there's not enough understanding of the game to watch it properly."

"It is considered a parlor game, a basement sport. It can't seem to overcome that stigma."

O'Dougherty, 22, an accounting major at the University of Minnesota and the No. 1 women's player on the U.S. table tennis team, wants to change that by setting up a college league.

She has won three national collegiate championships and finished runner-up once.

"I would say that tourney is the one I've enjoyed the most," she said. "It's set up and run so well. There's only 30 people but everybody is so nice... There were quite a few fans. I was surprised. It probably averaged 50 or so at times, maybe 50 to 100."

"The number is not really increasing over the years. I'm still waiting for that one big explosion. It's not quite there yet."

The explosion of table tennis — O'Dougherty doesn't mind if you call it Ping Pong, though some enthusiasts do — into a major sport could occur soon, she suggested.

"If there is an explosion it will be in the next couple of years, because of television and the interest in the junior Olympic and Pan American games," she said in an interview.

"I guess I'm trying to work with colleges to build more grass roots. If I get a college league going, it might just take off."

O'Dougherty, who has traveled extensively in the United States and made table tennis trips to Israel and Thailand, said the sport provides a wonderful chance to meet people.

"There's so many different kinds of people who play. I'm not sure if there's any correlation between personality and style of play. Everybody is kind of nice and held together by it."

A main haunt of the serious ping pong player in the Twin Cities, and one of the largest such parlors in the country, is "Disney's" in Minneapolis. O'Dougherty divides her 20 to 30 hours of weekly practice between Disney's and the university.

"Our membership has been as high as 450," said owner Charlie Disney, 38, who opened shop 11 years ago. "There's all types of people in here." He pointed out a psychiatrist, a law student, a housewife, an engineer, a psychologist.

"I like table tennis because you can play it a lifetime and it's coed," said Disney, who doubles as a tennis pro. "Also, you don't get hurt, like in football and basketball. You get cramps, pulled muscles and maybe a sprained ankle, but that's it."

"And it's highly competitive. People get madder than hell. But it's more focused into a human-type competition."

As a sport, Disney rated table tennis more "intriguing" than most.

"There are so many facets to it," the defending Minnesota champion said. "You can be a hitter, a blocker, a defender, a spinner, or a combination of different styles. Some people are powerful, some are deceptive, some quick."

"There's more spin in this game than in tennis. The ball is faster and goes a shorter distance, so you have to be quicker."

O'Dougherty, whom Disney calls an "aggressive, powerful player," began practicing her serves, spins and slams about seven years ago after playing in a city park tourney and seeing an exhibition by Disney and his partner Don Larson.

Although a top women's competitor, O'Dougherty doesn't reign at Disney's. The best player at the club is 13-year-old Brandon Olson, national 15-and-under champion, Disney said.

"I haven't been working on my game lately," the owner said. "I've been concentrating on tennis. Brandon is as good or better than I am now."

While both Disney and O'Dougherty are frustrated at the failure of table tennis to catch on with the public, their expectations differ. Disney believes it has the potential popularity of tennis. O'Dougherty disagrees.

"I'm not sure it's quite as good as tennis is," she said.

Shah's Alpine Villa For Sale

ST. MORITZ, Switzerland (AP) — The deposed Shah of Iran's sumptuous alpine villa is up for sale, a caretaker at the mansion said today.

Ex-shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi bought the Villa Survetta, on the outskirts of this ski resort, in 1968 at a reported price of 3.5 million Swiss francs, worth some $800,000 at the time. Its current value has been estimated at 6 million francs, now equivalent to about 3.75 million devalued U.S. dollars.

The former Iranian ruler has not been here since the winter of 1975-76, when terrorists briefly held oil ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries hostage in Vienna, Austria, and said the shah would be their next target.

At that time, Swiss authorities told Pahlavi they could no longer guarantee his security. Since then the mansion has been used only occasionally by members of his family.

Pahlavi fled his homeland in January 1979 at the height of the anti-shah revolution. Suffering from cancer, he currently is hospitalized in Cairo, Egypt.

A caretaker at the villa confirmed that a buyer is being sought for the property, but he declined to provide further details. The ex-shah's Swiss lawyer refused to discuss the subject with reporters.

"It's more confined. It's harder to see the ball. And you have to be knowledgeable to speculate or you won't understand what you see."

According to O'Dougherty, table tennis skill is harder to acquire than many believe. Likewise, the sport demands more physically than most suspect.

"It takes a couple of years to get your strokes, then three or four to learn how to play," she said. "But in racquetball you can go out every day and improve a little bit."

"If you don't have the right coaching and don't know what the sport is, you don't get physically exerted. If you do, it's a real workout. I do a lot of foot work drills and stuff."

O'Dougherty competed recently in the Minnesota Open Tournament, one of six state tourneys held during the year to determine state champions.

Like most experienced players, she varies her serve, alternating backhand and forehand deliveries, changing the spin, occasionally employing the unusual "high toss" serve. On that variation, the server tosses the ping pong ball about three feet in the air before striking it with his or her paddle.

The tall O'Dougherty uses her long reach to return looping forehands and darting backhands.

"I've just switched to a fast blade from China," she said. "The blade is the wood part of the paddle. You put the rubber on yourself. I have a fast blade and fairly thin rubber so I can get a lot of speed. I mainly use spin to set up speed shots."

Her goal is to participate next year in the world table tennis tournament in Yugoslavia.

"I'm proud of being No. 1 on the (eight-member) U.S. women's team," she said. "But a lot of women didn't compete because it's not a world championship year. My goal is to get on the team going to Yugoslavia."

SUNSET SWIM — Swimmers in the Tennessee River at Decatur (Ala.) splash each other in the glow of the setting sun. High temperatures caused the group to seek relief in the river but discovered the river water temperature higher than normally found. (AP Laserphoto)

DON'T FENCE HIM IN — A black and white spotted dog whom Hampton, S.C. police had dubbed "Spot", was no ordinary resident of the city's dog pound. Here the would-be escape artist shows the pound's fence is no match for him. The freedom-loving canine (whose real name turned out to be Houdini) was eventually picked up by his owner. (AP Laserphoto)

Pay Extra To Change Clothes

NEW YORK (AP) — For just $297 a year, commuters who want to run in Central Park can join a club where they can change their clothes afterward.

That's how much membership costs in The Runner's Station, a new club three blocks from the park. Facilities include hand-crafted, teak-paneled changing booths and lockers, showers, a storage room for clothes and gear, and a lounge where joggers can order food from a local deli.

Says owner Christopher Metzger: "It's expensive, but it's done in style and I figure in New York, there are enough people who would like to live in style."

Liars' Bench Once Was A Church Pew

CICERO, Ind. (AP) — The bench on the sidewalk in front of Dudley Purkey's barber shop seats 10 comfortably. It is a sturdy old bench, once a church pew.

In small-town America, such sidewalk benches often earn titles of fond disrespect: loafers' bench, usually.

In Cicero, a town of 1,400, it is celebrated as the liars' bench, and it is as familiar a landmark as the post office or the firehouse. Tell someone to meet you at the liars' bench, he will know just where you mean.

"It is a last remnant of neighborliness," Dudley Purkey said. "Nowadays," he said, "people lock themselves inside their air-conditioned mobile homes and never come out to visit."

In Cicero, the liars' bench is where the menfolk gather to say good morning, to start the day reassured that nothing much in their lives has changed.

On lazy afternoons, the liars' bench is a place to doze with the newspaper, a main street sanctuary.

On hot summer evenings, Dudley Purkey often has to drag a dozen extra chairs out of the barber shop to accommodate the men and ladies, outmovers mostly, who wander down to the liars' bench to visit and chat about how the world was before it got in such an all-fired hurry.

Dudley Purkey, for his part, is seldom in a hurry. He always has time to visit. It goes with the haircut.

Purkey's is a two-chair barber shop, though the second chair hasn't been used for years, ever since he lost his son in a highway accident. The chairs are the old-fashioned kind, porcelain and leather with a heavy iron footrest. They were bought new in 1925 and Purkey has seen no reason to change them.

He has been Cicero's barber for 58 years, ever since he graduated to the barber chair from the shoe-shine chair. Not much that has gone on in town over the years has escaped his notice.

"We've had a lot of fun with that bench," he was saying the other day. "It has quite a history, you know."

"That one is not the first liars' bench. It's the second. The first met with a great disaster, the worst disaster in Cicero since they removed the town drinking fountain."

"The first bench was a pew from the old Christian Church, which was built in 1855. I got it when they put new pews in the church. Paid $5 for it. It was made of poplar and was better than 100 years old when I got it. You could still see the carpenter's plane marks."

"I varnished it up and put it in the shop. Finally it got too crowded in here so I put it outside."

"The bench stayed outside for many years, until 1977. That's when the disaster happened."

"During the blizzard of '77 they decided to plow the sidewalk. The plow hit the bench and busted it beyond repair. I felt sorry for the boy driving the plow, he was so full of remorse."

"Well, a town needs a liars' bench."

"When word got out the following spring what had happened to a woman over at Fishers called and said she had an old pew she would let us have. That's the one you see there now."

"We were so glad to get it we had a dedication ceremony. Richard Roubush, the former congressman, cut the ribbon and made a speech. We had a grand time."

"It would be mighty hard to go through a summer in Cicero without a liars' bench."

Draw Prison In Flag-Burning

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Two members of the Revolutionary Communist Party were sentenced Monday to eight months in prison for a flag-burning incident March 27.

Teresa Kime and Don Bonwell, both of Greensboro, were convicted June 18 of burning an American flag in front of the U.S. Post Office on West Market Street last March.

Willie Said Unmatched As A Robber

By JOHN L. SCHMIDT
Associated Press Writer
MARION, Ill. (AP) — As bank robbers go, Willie Foster Sellers was one of the best.

A bit out of the ordinary maybe, but a real professional. A family man. A charmer with dashing good looks.

The FBI says Sellers had no equal. He averaged 10 times the take of most bank robbers, and once he made off with more than $100,000 from a North Carolina bank.

After two years and as many as 30 or 40 bank jobs — by the FBI's calculations — Sellers is out of circulation and behind bars.

At 46, Sellers has reached the top of the federal prison system's line — the U.S.
Penitentiary at Marion.

Experts call it the most secure prison in the United States. Carved out of 1,000 acres of scenic rolling Shawnee National Forestland, Marion was built to replace Alcatraz. All who have tried to escape have failed.

That's the kind of place the FBI says Sellers belongs. His last escape, when he cut through the bars of Atlanta's Fulton County jail with a blowtorch smuggled to him by friends, led authorities on a two-year chase.

Seller's newspaper, kept by his mother in Baxley, Ga., tells how he rented a house from a judge in Little Rock, Ark., in 1978 and moved his wife and five kids out four days before the law tracked him down.

"People think there may have been something glamorous about my past.
Well, it was exciting, but not glamorous," says Sellers, who has been in and out of jails since he was 20.

Days spent on his hard bunk in cell No. 12, Cellblock
D, are given to reading law books. "I know more about my own case than a lot of lawyers," he says.

Articulate, intelligent, well-read he has represented himself in court and plans more appeals in the future.

"I'm in an argument with the Bureau of Prisons right now, to let more members of my family visit," he says.
That's just one of several legal battles he says he's planning.

He's doing 65 years on federal charges of bank robbery, forgery and firearms violations. Last November the state of Texas added another 99 years for bank robbery in Chireno.

The FBI says in the summer of 1978, Sellers was at his most productive, robbing 12 banks and operating mainly from a base in Little Rock.

"A lot of what they say I've done is still under appeal," Sellers says carefully.
"Maybe someday we can sit down and get the whole story out," he says.

Sellers says the summer of 1979 was his downfall. He was on a trip to the United States from his Central America island hideout to get a part for his son's motor bike.

FBI accounts say Sellers would spend two weeks in a town casing the bank. He'd pay cash for a new car and stash it in nearby woods.
He'd recruit an accomplice, usually a thug.

On the appointed day, Sellers and his accomplice would steal an old car and drive to the bank, arm themselves heavily, don masks and go inside.

After the robbery, the pair would split. Sellers would hide out in the woods and then drive away several days later in the "clean" bought and paid for car, usually completing his escape in his $45,000 airplane.

Calendar Set For August

At its meeting Monday evening, the executive committee of the Pitt County Branch of the NAACP established its calendar for the next month.

The NAACP will join with several other community organizations in a voter registration and education drive. Mrs. Willie Mae Carney will coordinate this effort. Registration will be conducted in each township, with the schedule to be announced through the newspapers and churches.

There will be a planning session July 26 in Raleigh for the 37th annual state convention of the NAACP, which will be held in Asheville in October.

The Pitt County Board of Education has agreed to meet with the NAACP Aug. 5 regarding practices concerning employment and promotion of minority personnel.

On July 25 at 8 a.m., a Ministers' Breakfast will be held at Shoney's here to plan Phase II of the Month of Prayer program which the NAACP is promoting.
