MacDonald Case
Murder Convictions Reversed By Court

By GEORGE WILBUR
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court today reversed the murder convictions of former Army Green Beret doctor Jeffrey MacDonald in the 1970 slayings of his wife and two daughters in North Carolina and told a lower court to dismiss the indictments against him.

The 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals said MacDonald's constitutional right to a speedy trial had been violated during the long delay between his indictment and the time he was found guilty in 1979 by a federal jury.

"We cannot and do not assess the correctness of the jury's verdict," the court said.

But it added that it could not condone "a prosecutorial method of obtaining convictions in violation of the fundamental constitutional right of future generations."

MacDonald, 36, claimed that four drug-crazed intruders killed his pregnant wife, Colette, 26, daughters Kimberly, 5, and Kristen, 2, anad stabbed him at their Fort Bragg, N.C. home.

After a federal jury convicted him last Aug. 29, U.S. District Judge Franklin Dupree Jr. sentenced him to three consecutive life terms and denied appeal bond.

MacDonald has been serving the sentences at the Terminal Island, Calif., federal prison, near his Huntington Beach, Calif., home. He was an emergency room physician before his conviction.

In Raleigh, where MacDonald was tried, defense attorney Wade Smith termed the decision "a 100 percent victory."

Among those who attended the trial daily were Colette MacDonald's mother and stepfather, Mildred and Alfred Kassab of Cranbury, N. J. Once MacDonald's strongest supporters, they subsequently became convinced he was lying and fought to bring him to trial.

In arguments to a three-judge appeals court panel in February, defense attorneys arrgued that government delays before MacDonald was indicted prejudiced efforts to defend him.

Federal attorneys countered that the defense had failed to meet the legal tests that determined prejudicial delay.

After the killings, the Army decided not to court-martial MacDonald. It wasn't until January 1975 that a federal grand jury handed up an indictment and the trial was delayed until last summer by defense pre-trial proceedings.

Israel Attacks UN Vote Calling For Withdrawal

By WILLIAM N. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Israel rejected the latest U.N. resolution calling for its withdrawal from the territory it captured in the 1967 war as an attempt to subvert peace and pledged to pursue the Camp David formula in the face of Third World opposition and the new West European peace initiative.

Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Z. Blum announced his government's "total rejection" of the resolution adopted Tuesday at the end of a week-long emergency assembly session by a vote of 112-7 with 24 nations abstaining.

Blum said the resolution was an attempt "to frustrate and, if at all possible, to subvert the ongoing peace process in the Middle East." But he said the U.S.-sponsored peace process between Israel and Egypt "will go on despite the efforts to torpedo it."

The Carter administration, however, feared that the peace process would be torpedoed by Israeli action rather than U.N. resolutions.

A State Department spokesman said there was a "logical fear" that Egypt would quit the deadlocked negotiations with Israel on Palestinian autonomy because of a law to be adopted by the Israeli Parliament today proclaiming all of Jerusalem the capital of the Jewish state.

The U.N. resolution called for Israel to begin withdrawing from all occupied territory by Nov. 15 and for the West Bank of the Jordan River, East Jerusalem and the Gaza Strip to be turned over to the Palestine Liberation Organization for establishment of a Palestinian state.

The votes against it were cast by the United States, Israel, Norway, Australia, Canada, Guatemala and the Dominican Republic.

The nine European Common Market countries abstained, marking the first time in five years none of them joined Washington in opposing a pro-Palestinian resolution. But PLO representative Farouk Kaddoumi said their abstention disappointed the Arabs in the light of their statement in June supporting the Palestinians' right to self-determnination and the PLO's right to participate in peace talks.

The abstentions were expected, however, since Common Market spokesman Gaston Thorn of Luxembourg demanded during the debate last week that the resolution include guarantees for Israel's existence. The nine nations — Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Ireland, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg — took the same stand in June, but the Arabs did not amend their resolution tol meet Thorn's demand.

Greenville Tobacco Mart Opening Falls Below '79

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville Tobacco Market opened on a disappointing note Tuesday, recording an average that fell more than $15 per hundred pounds below last year's record-breaking figure.

While local warehouses combined to sell over a million pounds yesterday and topped the $1 million mark, Greenville's overall average of $110.21 per hundred pounds brought few smiles.

Growers and tobacco industry personnel offered varied reasons yesterday for the somewhat surprising auction quotes; but they were in agreement in expressing dissastisfaction.

Bill Cleve of Vanceboro, who had 15,000 pounds on the local market yesterday, attributed part of the problem to down-grading, saying "government grades here are down 15 cents a pound from last year."

Greenville sold 1,147,791 pounds Tuesday for $1,265,010, according to figures compiled by the Market News Service. The 1980 opening figures, marking Greenville's 90th season of auctions, compared with last year's opening day totals of 870,222 pounds sold for $1,094,090, an average of $125.73 per hundred pounds. The market opened in 1978 with an average of $119.56 per hundred pounds.

Belt-wide, the eastern markets yesterday opened on a level well below the 1979 mark, the News Service reported, running over $6 per hundred pounds below the opening day average last year. The 14 Eastern Belt markets that opened compiled an average of $117.18 per hundred, compared with the 1979 average of $123.49. Rocky Mount, with an average of $108.79, had the lowest figure on the belt.

N.C. Commissioner of Agriculture Jim Graham, who attended Greenville's opener, said yesterday that the back-to-back Border and Eastern Belt openings this year may have played a role in Tuesday's problems. While offerings appeared to be similar to those on the Border Belt markets on Monday, he observed, prices may have been affected by the close openings.

Graham indicated that the Eastern Belt might have opened too early on the heels of Monday's Border Belt kick-off, pointing to difficulties on the part of the buying companies in having their buyers at both markets.

With the apparent lack of competition among the buyers yesterday, purchases by the Flue-Cured Tobacco Stabilization Corp., which administers the government loan program, were up from 1979. The News Service reported that Stabilization bought 1,222,182 pounds yesterday or 15.5 percent of overall Eastern Belt volume, while Greenville receipts amounted to 238,619 pounds

Pres. Carter 'Anxious' To Tell His Side

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, launching a counteroffensive in the Billy Carter-Libyan case less than two weeks before the Democratic National Convention, says he's anxious to appear in person before Senate investigators, possibly in nationally televised hearings.

In an effort to minimize the political fallout from the affair, Carter said he is eager to respond to Senate questions, "the sooner the better."

And just to make sure his side of the story gets out before the convention begins Aug. 11, Carter said he will send the Senate a full report early next week and then hold a news conference to answer questions about it.

Carter made a surprise appearance Tuesday in the White House press room to declare — once again, but this time on television — that his brother had no influence on policy toward Libya and that there was no interference with the Justice Department investigation of the affair.

Billy Carter has acknowledged contacting White House appointments secretary Philip J. Wise Jr. last year to inquire about eight C-130s purchased by Libya in the early 1970s, The Washington Post reported in today's editions. The newspaper quotes informed sources as saying he made the disclosure in a Jan. 17 interview with Justice Department officials.

The State Department has refused to approve export licenses for the planes, which are being stored at a Lockheed Corp. facility in Marietta, Ga.

According to one account of that session, Billy Carter refused to answer when asked whether he had tried to influence the president in the matter of the planes, the Post reported.

Billy Carter also refused to say whether he had attempted to pressure his brother on the issue through their mother, Lillian, telling investigators it was none of their business, the newspaper quoted one source as saying.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said there has been no decision on whether the president would go to the Senate panel or the senators would come to Carter to hear his testimony. But he said live, televised hearings are "in no way excluded."

The special Senate committee, which is searching for a non-partisan counsel, is expected to open hearings next week.

Powell said that if the president appeared in the early hearing sessions and subsequent investigation required additional presidential testimony, "we would be reasonable about" returning to testify.

Gerald R. Ford, who testified before a House Judiciary subcommittee in 1975 to explain his post-Watergate pardon of Richard M. Nixon, is the only president to testify publicly before Congress.

Acknowledging his deteriorating political standing, the president himself was reported to have offered Tuesday to skip campaigning with some members of Congress if he might hurt their re-election chances.

Plan Emergency Bridge Repairs

OREGON INLET, N.C. (AP) — Emergency repairs will be started this week to shore up the south end of the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge, which is being undermined by shifting currents and erosion on the sandy bottom of Oregon Inlet.

Marc Basnight of Manteo, a member of the state Board of Transportation, said 16 new twin pilings would be placed on the outside of the endangered bridge section.

The damage is in the same area where the roadway sagged 12 inches in 1978. At the time, new pilings were driven through the decking of tons of rock dumped around bridge supports to counter erosion.

Anderson Ruled Ineligible In N.C.

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — John B. Anderson's brief campaign as a Republican presidential candidate in North Carolina makes him ineligible now to run as an independent or third-party candidate, the state Board of Elections decided Tuesday.

Ruling on a challenge brought by the Democratic National Committee and 11 prominent North Carolina Democrats, the board voted 3-2 to keep Anderson's name from appearing on the state general election ballot.

The decision marked the first time Anderson has been flatly denied in his bid to have his name placed on a state ballot so far in his independent campaign for the presidency, and his lawyers immediately said they would appeal through the courts.

"This is the first state where Anderson has been kept off the ballot," said Ellen Semonoff, one of the lawyers for Anderson. "I think it doesn't speak very well of their (Democrats) commitment to the Democratic process to keep candidates off the ballot."

Attorneys for the national Democratic organization had argued that Anderson should be stricken from the ballot because of a state elections law prohibiting anyone who "participates" in the primary election from running in the general election in another party.

R. Kenneth Babb, chairman of the elections board, said he was convinced Anderson was ineligible despite the fact Anderson withdrew as a candidate shortly before the state's May 6 primary.

"Absentee ballots had already been cast, money had been spent (by the Anderson campaign), and it was agreed that Mr. Anderson had participated in the election," Babb said.

The board voted along party lines, with Democrats prevailing and two Republicans supporting Anderson. But the board also agreed unanimously that the Independents for Anderson Party can remain on the state's ballot with a substitute candidate.

Mitchell Rogovin, attorney for Anderson, said a decision would be made in several days on whether to appeal in state or federal courts.

The board's ruling, if it stands, makes it unlikely — but apparently not impossible — that Anderson could win North Carolina's 13 electoral votes.

Voters could still cast write-in votes for Anderson, but elections director Alex Brock said they would amount to wasted votes because there are no electors for a write-in candidate.

"A write-in vote for president is a non-exercise because the candidate has no electors behind him," he said.

Vepco Cuts Fuel Charge Once Again

ROANOKE RAPIDS — Virginia Electric and Power Company (VEPCO) today announced it reduced fuel charges to Greenville for the fifth consecutive month.

The latest reduction of 11 percent represents a drop from $5.46 per 1,000 killowatt hours in June to $4.84 in July.

Fuel charges represent one portion of municipal customers' bills. When fuel costs increase or decrease, the fuel portion of the bill rises or falls accordingly. Randy McIver, VEPCO vice-president, Southern Division, in Roanoke Rapids, said "Since February, we have reduced fuel charges to Greenville by more than 71 percent due to reduced use of oil fuel generation and increased use of nuclear generation. This trend will continue as we bring two more nuclear units into service in the near future and as additional oil to coal conversions are completed."

The benefits of the reduced fuel costs will also be passed on to VEPCO's retail customer in lower bills according to procedures established by the North Carolina Utilities Commission.

VEPCO's 12 other municipal customers receiving the reduction are: Washington, Elizabeth City, Edenton, Tarboro, Belhaven, Enfield, Hertford, Scotland Neck, Hamilton, Hobgood, Robersonville and Windsor.

Prices Disappoint At Farmville

FARMVILLE — Prices on opening day at the Farmville Tobacco Market were somewhat disappointing to practically all growers.

Prices on poor grades of priming and nondescript grades accounted for most of the decline compared with last year.

Support prices on eight of these grades were dropped this year. Surprising to some of the growers was the fact that several of the best grades went to Stabilization. They were of the impression that quality grades would be in strong demand. Stabilization receipts accounted for 23 percent of the volume. Quality grades accounted for most of the volume. Prices ranged from 69 cents per pound to $1.59 for company purchases.

The market sold 400,864 pounds for an average of $115.59 per hundred. Last year the market sold 388,410 for an average of $125.58 per hundred.

DIABETIC, TWO OTHERS SOUGHT

The State Department of Human Resources has asked Hotline to appeal for information as to the whereabout of three youths who ran away from Dobbs Training School in Kinston Sunday night.

One of the youths, a 16-year-old black male who weights about 95 pounds and is about four feet eight inches tall, is diabetic. Unless he has his insulin shots, he may go into shock.

The others are a white male 15 years old who stands five feet seven inches and weighs 130 pounds and a black male 16 who is four feet 11 and weighs 94 pounds.

The three may be armed and dangerous and may have access to an automobile, we were told. Their whereabouts cannot be guessed. Anyone having a lead is urged to contact the nearest law enforcement authorities.

A Review

Criteria Met By 'Next Time'

Twenty-four years of two people growing up, meeting one weekend a year and holding a two-way talkfest about what has taken place in their lives, at first thought might seem to be an impossibly restrictive situation on which to base a play. But Bernard Slade has used this one-room setting, man and woman get together situation to provide a scintillating play in which wit and intelligence are the sustaining ingredients of a superbly crafted script.

Because "Same Time, Next Year" is this kind of play, it naturally follows that it is one whose success in production calls for the highest level of professionalism. The East Carolina Summer Theater production which opened at the A. J. Fletcher Recital Hall Monday night admirably meets the demands on every level.

Amanda Muir as Doris and Del Lewis in the role of George, are, quite simply, superb as the two faithful to their respective spouses with the exception of the once-a-year tryst at the same place, the same time for a February weekend. They meet the marathon conversational challenge without a moment's faltering, and bring to the roles the delightful feeling they are actually living, not merely acting the roles.

Ms. Muir is a lovely woman, and is consistently radiant whatever changes the two decades plus bring physically. The subtle differences in the inner woman that is Doris in each five year span reflected in the play is totally convincing in Ms. Muir's hands. Whether it is the young, uncertain housewife early in the play, the more assured woman of a few years later, the woman approaching middle years detoured from her true self by a fling with the flower child bit, or at the play's end, the warm, wise woman who has achieved success and knows what life is really about — Ms. Muir is a marvel in capturing every nuance that the playwright has placed in this marvelous role.

Lewis' performance is right on a par with that of Ms. Muir. His George is a man searching for meaning, a person obsessed with the enjoyment of guilt he feels obliged to suffer. He too, is subjected to changing lifestyles and attitudes, and the sometimes foolish, sometimes boyishly touching, at other times abrasive behavior these changes impel.

These comments may lead one to think "Same Time, Next Year" is a serious, solemn probe of the inner lives of two people. In a sense it is just that, but it is also a play in which the reflections of changing American morals and attitudes are couched in the highest order of comedy. At Tuesday's performance, the audience showed time-after-time their appreciation of the sparkling wit by hearty laughter. Best of all, the clever run of dialogue is a rare instance of intelligence devoid of superficial glibness.

While it is true the annual meeting of the two obstensibly focuses on sexual pleasure, and while this factor gets its fair share of the script, it is soon obvious the deeper pleasure is that which these two humans share as companions. All through the years they share the joys, the hurts that befall each other — and the unseen family members become a real presence as we learn about them, spouses and children.

"Same Time, Next Year" is a play that perfectly balances the lilt of superb comedy with the everyday drama of living. And it is difficult to imagine two more capable than Ms. Muir and Lewis in projecting the finely tuned rapport of interplay needed for this play.

Edgar Loessin's directing is again marked by a sure sense of timing that keeps the action lively and knowingly orchestrated to the shifting themes of the play. Michael Gall is technical director, Judy Mahl, production stage manager, and Gregory Buch designed the excellent scenery with its highly original headboard for the bed. Lighting is by David F. Downing and Ingrid Wright is responsible for the gorgeous costumes.

"Same Time, Next Year" is being presented nightly at 8:15 through Friday only. Because of the limited seating at Fletcher, advance reservations are encouraged. The number to call is 757-6390.

Congress Is Told Cuba Exporting Revolutions

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. intelligence analysts have told Congress that Cuba armed and advised the successful Sandinista revolution in Nicaragua, probably considers El Salvador the "next one to fall" and is supporting revolution in Guatemala and Honduras.

The rare Central Intelligence Agency and Defense Intelligence Agency testimony — heavily censored — was released by the House inter-American affairs subcommittee.

CIA analyst Randolph Pherson told the subcommittee April 16, "The perspective is that Cuba sees itself as the arsenal, the training center, the adviser and the catalyst for revolution in these areas.

"Looking from the Cuban perspective, I think El Salvador would probably be the next one to fall," he said. "In Guatemala, the military is stronger....It probably ranks in Cuba's perception as the number two target behind El Salvador....Honduras still has a long way to go. You have a very strong polarization of the right and left in that country."

But almost all testimony on whether U.S. intelligence has specific proof that Cuba supplied arms to revolutionaries in those countries was censored out of the transcripts made public.

A subcommittee source said the analysts had good evidence that Cuba supplied arms to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua, but had no hard evidence that Cuba is arming revolutionaries in El Salvador, Guatemala or Honduras.

However, intelligence analysts and State Department witnesses agreed in uncensored testimony that Cuba's longstanding training program for revolutionaries has supplied many of the guerrillas now operating in Central America.

A DIA official said Cuban President Fidel Castro's major contribution to the Sandinista revolution was to unite three factions into the force that overthrew Nicaragua's former president, Anastasio Somoza.

Lt. Col. Rafael E. Martinez-Boucher, chief of the DIA's Latin America Branch, said Castro now is trying to unite revolutionary factions in El Salvador and in Guatemala.

Replying to a question, Martinez-Boucher said the Sandinistas could not have overthrown Somoza without Cuba's help.

He said the Sandinistas were weak until 1974, when their operations "apparently convinced Castro that the situation was ripe for revolution."

"With the assistance of (censored) — which had differing reasons for seeking the overthrow of the Somoza government - Cuba provided training, funds, arms and advice to bolster the Sandinistas until they became a viable core around which other anti-Somoza forces coalesced," he said.

"Somoza's downfall had a ripple effect in Central America," he said.

"Guerrillas training for Salvadoran cadres has been provided in Cuba, arms have been furnished and steps taken to enlist the cooperation of all leftist forces in El Salvador and surrounding countries to support the insurgency."

But in Honduras, he said, "while the potential for revolution exists, the pressure for change is not nearly as strong as in El Savador and Guatemala."

Overseas Sales Rose In June

WASHINGTON (AP) — Increased exports pushed U.S. sales overseas to a record level in June and cut the nation's trade deficit to $2.28 billion, the Commerce Department reports.

Merchandise exports rose 5.2 percent from May, to $18.64 billion, while imports fell 3.3 percent, to $20.92 billion, the department reported Tuesday. The resulting June deficit was $1.68 billion less than the May figure. Oil imports increased 0.7 percent during the month, to 213.2 million barrels, at a cost of $6.89 billion. The average price of imported oil actually declined 6 cents during June — the first drop in more than a year.

Job-Training Fights Myth Of Weaker Sex

NEW YORK (AP) — Refuting old theories of what a woman can accomplish career-wise isn't anything new at the national YWCA, says Sara-Alyce P. Wright, executive director of the organization. "We've been at it for more than a century," she says.

Back in 1858 when the association was formed in New York City, the aim of the founding women was "Aside from prayer, to labor for the temporal, moral and spiritual welfare of self-supporting girls."

"Even in those days, that meant job training—a platform that has been a solid foundation for the progress and evolution of programs that today serve more than 2½ million women and girls in 400 areas in 49 states," explains Mrs. Wright.

Obviously, most concepts and needs have changed, she notes, but, she adds, many of the then and now barriers have gone on for 12 decades — barriers a woman faced then are the same today. "One of them," she points out, "is the purported 'lack of strength' which has kept distaffers in the field of 'women's work', much against their wills."

At the turn of the century, even though the "self-supporting girls" had been well trained as "typewriters," they were rejected by prospective employers as lacking the physical stamina to perform the job," Mrs. Wright says.

"To convince prospective employers, feisty YW directors consulted doctors who certified that the women, indeed, were fine and fit, thus new opportunities were opened for women capable of holding their own in a man's world," she says.

Because the "weaker sex" image persists, many new YWCA programs have been introduced to equip women for the non-traditional jobs of their choice, the YWCA's executive director reports.

At the Downtown Brooklyn YWCA, for example, would-be carpenters, plumbers, movers and auto mechanics concentrate on weight training. Through a series of sessions involving handling graduated levels of weights, the candidates strengthen themselves, particularly their upper torsos and arms.

As the result of a pilot training program for non-traditional jobs conducted last year at the Philadelphia YW which emphasized physical capabilities coupled with actual field experience, 87 women have been placed in jobs. Today, they are piloting city buses, repairing railroad tracks, driving parcel delivery trucks and maintaining complicated electrical systems in large hospitals.

In Denver, the Metropolitan YWCA has placed more than 870 women in 70 blue collar, skilled trades categories in the nine years since the inception of its "Better Jobs for Women" program. Starting salaries for the women average $6.35 an hour — the same as for men — and earning potentials are extensive and diverse. One female railroad braker-switch tender is making $24,000 annually — after only two years on the job.

Some 300 teen-age girls have had an opportunity to learn about the availability of non-traditional jobs since the YWCA of Greater Atlanta established its "Project Focus" two years ago.

Based near two "feeder" high schools, the program combines classroom instruction and on-the-job training to help the students set realistic career goals based on the knowledge gained during their internships.

Among the most recent graduates are four who are working in various capacities in bottling operations at a soft-drink manufacturing concern and one who is a fork-lift operator at the same factory.

A relatively new program in Tucson, Ariz., is intended to fit women, girls and the handicapped for jobs in the printing field. Here, they not only learn to set type but, as a dividend provide modest-cost typesetting services for other not-for-profit organizations in the area. This helps to defray the cost of the course for the local YWCA which sponsors it.

The San Gabriel Valley YWCA in southern California concentrates primarily on in-class training. Students can complete high school diploma equivalencies while they are encouraged to "open their minds to the non-traditional opportunities out there" through guest instructors and on-site visits to a variety of jobs. Many of the women, who range in age from 18 to 40, are interested in work as telephone linepersons or in other occupations in construction and with the police department.

What's ahead? "I feel as my earlier counterparts did," says Mrs. Wright, who plans "more and more training programs so that other skilled women will be able to handle the work in the trades or professional fields of their choice."

Cooking Is Fun

COLD CUCUMBER SOUP

You may prefer to leave the cooked cucumber unpeeled.

European cucumber (12 inches long and 2 inches wide)
Small onion, thinly sliced (¼ cup)
1 cup water
1 chicken bouillon cube
½ cup half-and-half
Salt and white pepper to taste

Cut off a 9-inch length of the cucumber; reserve rest; pare the 9-inch length and slice thin — makes about 1½ cups. In a 1½-quart saucepan bring the sliced cucumber, onion, water and bouillon cube to a boil. Simmer, covered, until vegetables are very tender — 15 to 20 minutes. Puree vegetables with their liquid in an electric blender or food processor — makes about 1½ cups. Finely dice the unpeeled reserved cucumber — makes a scant ½ cup; stir into the puree with the half-and-half, salt and pepper. Chill. Makes about 2½ cups.

Dear Abby

Mother's Love Vs. Baby's Welfare

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I just turned 15. I had a baby girl in May of this year. The baby's father is 16. He said he would marry me, but I wasn't ready to get married at the time, and I'm still not. He is in no position to be a husband and father either.

I had plans to put the baby up for adoption, but I changed my mind. The baby is under temporary foster care now, and there will be a court hearing in September, so I have until then to make up my mind.

My parents want nothing to do with this baby. They think I should adopt it out. I really want to keep her, but the people at the welfare department are giving me a hard time. They don't think I'm capable of taking on so much responsibility at my age.

They may be right, but I think I would like to try.

Please tell me what to do.

ALL TORN UP

DEAR TORN: You need much more help than I can give you in this column. Expert counseling is available to you without cost from your local Planned Parenthood Chapter, Family Service Association or mental health clinic. Please call one of these facilities (they are listed in your directory) and tell them Abby suggested you call.

You have already shown mature judgment by refusing a hasty marriage and considering adoption for the child.

You need to sort out you thoughts, plan for your future and then decide what will be best for a) the baby and b) yourself. I have confidence in your ability to make the right decision. Good luck and God bless.

And please let me hear from you again. I care.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow, and I frequently travel with other widows. When we go into a restaurant, the waitress will invariably ask, "One check, or two?"

Abby, women rarely pay for each other's meals, and it gets to be quite embarrassing at times.

Please inform waitresses that when two women dine together, she should make out separate checks. If one woman has planned on paying for the other, she can pick up both checks. Most women pay their own way when traveling.

SEPARATE CHECKS

DEAR SEPARATE: Thanks for the "tip," which I shall pass on to the waiters and waitresses of the world.

DEAR ABBY: You asked if there were any adult thumb-suckers among your readers.

Well, I have been in the mortuary business for over 40 years, and I had to embalm a 77-year-old woman who had died with her thumb in her mouth! As I recall, we had one devil of a time getting that lady's thumb out of her mouth. And judging from the condition of her thumb, she had been a thumb-sucker all her life.

This is a small town and we're still in business, so if you use this in your column, please forget my name. Or sign me . . .

Tips for Faster and Better Meals

Today, more than 50 percent of American women work outside the home. The number of single-parent households of either sex also is increasing steadily. The realities of juggling careers, parenting and home responsibilities are affecting more and more people.

With less free time, mealtime is often either a hasty, thrown-together affair, a quick peanut butter and jelly sandwich or ignored altogether, no matter whose turn it is to cook. Whether you're trying to feed a family well on a tight schedule or just eat better yourself, here are some tips that may help.

Consider investing in one or more of the many time-saving appliances on the market today. Stews and chowders can be put together quickly in a slow-cooker and are ready to serve when you get home. A microwave oven can cook a casserole in a matter of minutes. A food processor or a blender makes pureed soups and sauces easy.

A lettuce-spinner can be a real time-saver. Buy several different types of lettuce at one time; wash, spin dry and store in separate plastic bags. That one bit of preparation time will yield fresh, crisp, ready-to-use greens for days and make salads a snap to put together.

Plan at least a week of menus before going to the grocery store. That way, you won't have to make a second trip for things you forgot to buy the first time. Choose a store that offers the greatest selections for the best overall prices. Remember that time, in your case, is money. If you've got a freezer, take advantage of supermarket specials to stock up for future use. Divide meat and poultry into family-sized portions before freezing so you can thaw just what you need.

Draw up a list of pantry staples and make sure you have everything on hand. When an item gets low, immediately add it to your shopping list. You won't lose time in the middle of a recipe for lack of a basic ingredient.

Cut food preparation time without sacrificing flavor by using a browning sauce and flavor enhancer. To make quick sauces keep beef and chicken broth and bouillon cubes on hand. To vary those sauces add cheese, wine, herbs or spices. Shorten the baking time for potatoes by first boiling them in salted water for about 10 minutes or by inserting an aluminum nail into each one. If you need soft butter in a hurry, grate it.

The following recipe for "Oven Meatballs" uses simple ingredients and the hints just given to create a main dish for a family of four in 15 minutes. You'll need: 1 lb. lean ground beef, 1 egg; 1 slice crumbled sandwich bread; 2½ tsps. browning sauce; ½ cup milk; 1 tsp. salt; ¼ tsp. pepper and ¾ tsp. onion powder.

Mix all ingredients together, reserving 1 tsp. browning sauce, and form into balls. Mix remaining tsp. browning sauce with 1 Tbsp. water; dip balls into this liquid mixture to coat. Place in a single layer and slightly apart in an ungreased, shallow baking dish. Bake at 450° for 10 minutes. Serve with noodles or rice.

Empty suitcases or cardboard boxes can be used to store out-of-season clothing if closet space is short.

And Let The Chips Fall

Sen. Birch Bayh's commitment that the Senate inquiry into Billy Carter's activities will "pursue the truth wherever it may lead and let the chips fall where they may" is exactly what most Americans want.

Nothing less will suffice.

The nine member bi-partisan committee of Senators which will conduct the inquiry has the pledge of the administration that it will fully cooperate with the inquiry. Both Sen. Bayh, a Democrat, and the ranking Republican on the committee, Sen. Strom Thurmond, have said they intend the inquiry to be a fair, non-partisan search for the facts.

It is far too serious a matter to be turned into a political charade or to be made a political football in this national election year. The committee must go about its inquiry in a business-like manner with as few partisan overtones as possible from either Democrats or Republicans.

The facts will speak for themselves.

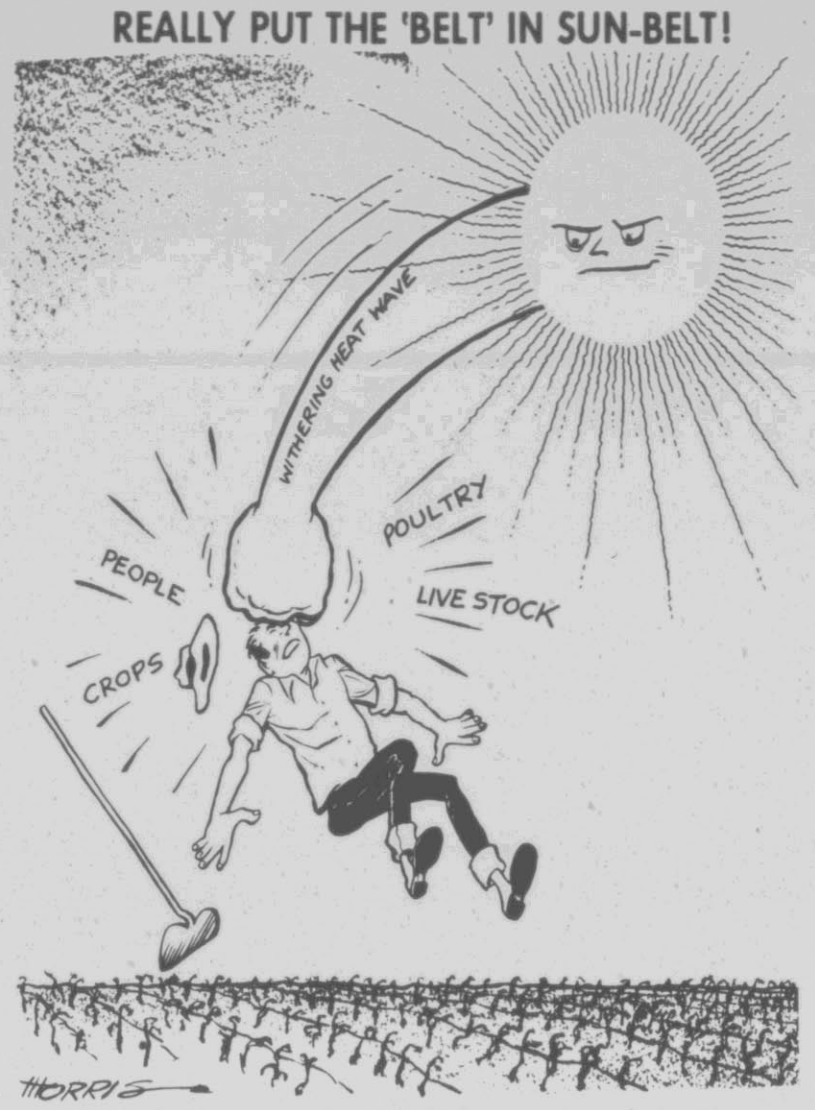
Story Needs Verification

Once again the shadow of financier Robert L. Vesco has fallen across the American political scene.

Vesco, in a conversation with two U. S. senators, claimed he orchestrated the $220,000 Libyan loan to BillyCarter as a way to embarrass the Carter administration.

What Vesco's motives are in this current political scandal is anyone's guess, but certainly his story should not be taken as the final word in this matter. Investigation should be aimed at getting at the truth, and the Vesco tale means nothing if it is not under oath, or verified in some way.

REALLY PUT THE 'BELT' IN SUN-BELT!



Politics And The Tax Cut

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — While Republicans were performing in Detroit, Democrats scattered around the rest of the country were coming to a fateful decision that hands the tax-cutting issue to Ronald Reagan.

The surprise finding by Democratic lawmakers, testing voter sentiment back home during the brief congressional recess: tax-cut fever is down, not up. In fact, returning to Washington July 21, they reported their constituents never had been interested in the Kemp-Roth tax reduction bill.

That message was most joyously received in the Oval Office, where President Carter and his advisers felt touched by heaven-sent tidings. They had dreaded the return of Congress, panting with tax cut demands. Instead, Democrats at the White House and Congress are in rare unison that tax reduction should be postponed until after the election. Thus, party lines on tax reduction are clearly drawn for November.

There might yet be pre-election tax cuts if one highly influential Democratic dissenter — Sen. Russell B. Long, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee — gets his way. But a tax bill pushed through by Long and Republican senators (even if reluctantly signed by the president) will not alter the clear partisan choice on tax reduction.

That may well reflect a massive misreading of the public mood, if expert pollsters are correct. It could be a fatal error in Carter's strategy to keep beleaguered blue-collar workers from joining the Reagan crusade. The Democrats are gambling that the autoworker, oppressed by inflation and fearful of losing his job, is not interested in an $800 tax cut.

That is precisely the impression veteran Democratic politicians, adept at winning elections, brought back to Washington. Rep. John Brademas, the shrewd House majority whip, told us that his South Bend, Ind., businessmen and workingmen alike, victimized by inflation, want no part of Kemp-Roth (cutting income taxes 10 percent a year for three years).

Old-fashioned liberal Brademas might be accused of pro-taxation bias, but not Rep. James Jones, the leading Democratic tax-cutter in the House. He reported findings identical to Brademas, both in his conservative Tulsa, Okla., district and on a speaking trip to South Dakota.

No wonder, then, that tax fever on Capitol Hill has subsided, much to Carter's comfort. While presidential aides a month ago worried that Carter could not catch up with Reagan on this issue, they are now convinced the Republicans have hung an albatross around their necks. Indeed, Carter strategists are urging Democratic politicians to call it Reagan-Kemp-Roth, linking the popular presidential candidate with a supposedly unpopular notion.

But is it that unpopular? One prestigious pollster recently took a secret national poll that indicates voters are aching for tax cuts, but are troubled by two factors: First, they have been so misled by the politicians that they no longer believe promises they hear; second, they are so concerned by runaway federal spending that they give the priority to budget balancing over tax cutting.

But voters actually cannot choose between Carter's balanced budget and Reagan's tax cut. Whether or not taxes are reduced, the budget will be far out of balance — a fact clearly understood by voters (nearly 5-to-1 in the secret national poll). What's more, 40 percent of these voters think the budget can be balanced by greater business activity induced by tax reductions — probably a higher percentage than among even Republican congressmen.

Democrats may be so influenced by their nostalgia for the days when low-bracket tax cutting was the name of the game that they are misjudging the public mood. In a July 20 article for the New York Times, Carter campaign chairman Robert Strauss noted that the taxpayer in the $6,700-to-$10,000 bracket would receive a mere $120 tax cut. But the great election chase of 1980 is not for these lowest income taxpayers, notorious non-voters who vote Democratic if they vote at all.

The quarry is that autoworker who now earns $25,000 a year but falls ever farther behind economically, partly because of rising taxes. In 1979, an estimated 38 million Americans paid taxes on income over $15,000, of whom 27 million reported over $20,000. For the $25,000 autoworker with a wife and two children, the third year tax savings of Reagan-Kemp-Roth would be a tidy $809.

That taxpayer would profit less from Democratic plans, particularly temporary one-year tax relief (not to be pushed until after election day). The potential danger that Democrats may get caught in this tax trap is countered by claims that any tax reduction is inflationary.

In 1978, Rep. Brademas sent his colleagues a Business Week commentary denouncing Kemp-Roth as inflationary, which they put to good use in their races. Republican opponents ran for cover. Brademas is now thinking of reprinting the same article. With Ronald Reagan certain not to copy the Republican retreat of 1978, voters will be able to make a choice on policy rarely offered them.

Decline Of SATs

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — For more than a decade, now, freshmen entering college in North Carolina and across the nation have shown a distressingly steady decline in scores on the standardized Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Again last fall, test scores showed a downward trend at some of the 16 campuses of the University of North Carolina; but not as steeply downward, and not down at as many of the schools as has been the trend in recent years.

A year ago, scores contginued to slide at 12 of the 16 colleges. Last fall, scores were continuing downward at only six schools. But nowhere is there an upturn of significant proportions, and a return to the high scores posted as recently as 1970 is not in sight.

Student scores last fall at N.C. State University in Raleigh were strong enough to return that school to the exclusive ranks of those surpassing the 1,000 mark. State fell from that spot last year for the first time, leaving only Chapel Hill at the peak.

Top Rank

Prior to 1972, Chapel Hill, State, and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro all had scores above 1,000.

The Scholastic Aptitude Test consists of two sections: one verbal, and one math. At every campus except the School of the Arts at Winston-Salem, entering freshmen score higher in the math section than in the verbal section.

At each campus with the exception of Asheville and Pembroke, out-of-state students score higher than do those from North Carolina. This condition is largely due to the fact that entrance requirements are typically more rigid for non-Tar Heels.

The downward trend in scores continued at these six institutions: East Carolina, A&T, N.C. Central, Pembroke, UNC Charlotte, and Winston-Salem State. Those which were down last year, but improved this year, if only slightly, are Appalachian, Fayetteville, N.C. State, Asheville, Greensboro, Wilmington, and Western Carolina.

Chapel Hill (1,062); State (1,007); Greensboro (956); School of the Arts (934); Asheville (930); Charlotte (917); Appalachian (883); East Carolina (866); Wilmington (855); Western Carolina (817); Pembroke (802); A&T (687); N.C. Central (678); Winston-Salem (625); Fayetteville (602); and Elizabeth City (596).

Scores on the Scholastic

BILL NOBLITT

Aptitude Test and the ranking of the colleges also reveals considerable information about the enrollment procedures at each of the schools. Some obviously go for the brighter high school graduates than others.

At Chapel Hill, for instance, 89 percent of the entering freshmen were in the top fifth of their graduating class in high school.

Best Scholars

Eight percent were in the second fifth, leaving only a smattering of students who fell below that mark. At no other college does the position of entering freshmen in their graduating classes run that high.

At N.C. State, only 45 percent are in the top fifth, and at Charlotte it is 44 percent. At Appalachian, East Carolina, Asheville, Greensboro and Wilmington, the figures range from 27 percent to 37 percent in the top fifth. At Elizabeth City, A&T, Fayetteville, N.C. Central, and Winston-Salem between eight and 12 percent are in the top fifth, with many of the students falling into the middle ranges of their graduating classes.

N.C. State, Chapel Hill, East Carolina, and A&T — in that order — attract by far more students from out of state than do the other schools. State enrolls 1,965; Chapel Hill enrolls 1,944; East Carolina enrolls 1,221, and A&T enrolls 1,163, for a total of 6,293 of the 10,712 non-North Carolinians at all 16 schools.

Busy Little Old Ladies

PARIS — What happened to all the little old ladies in tennis shoes? I am happy to report that they are alive and well and most of them are on package tours in Europe.

Because traveling abroad has become so expensive, you do not see many Americans on the Continent any more.

Occasionally, a bearded kid with an American Flag on the seat of his pants may walk by your cafe table, but it isn't like the old days when there wasn't a corner of Europe that didn't have a "U.S. Go Home" sign.

If it weren't for the little old ladies in tennis shoes, no one would be aware that the United States still exists, and it makes any red-blooded American's chest swell with pride when he sees a battalion of them marching down the Champs Elysees, Piccadilly or the Via Veneto, to the tune of "Colonel Bogie's March."

Make no mistake about it, the little old ladies in tennis shoes still strike terror in the hearts of every tour director in Europe.

ART BUCHWALD

Most of the ladies are veterans of previous overseas tours, experienced in hand-to-hand combat at flea markets, versed in the skills of fierce haggling in souvenir shops, trained to assault churches and museums, and prepared for sneak attacks on any American Express branch in the country.

The cemeteries of Great Britain, France, Italy, the Benelux and Scandinavian countries are dotted with graves of tour guides who expired trying to keep up the pace set by these indomitable souls. At airports all over Europe you see fresh young guides barely out of college, wearing their tour uniforms, waiting nervously for their group to jump off the plane and encircle the city. Screaming "We take no prisoners," the little old ladies, carrying their duty-free shopping bags from the previous airport, climb aboard their buses determined not to miss one single thing included in the price of the tour.

No mountain is too high for them to climb, no fjord is too wide for them to cross. Heaven help the guide who forgets to stop for tea in Zermatt (included in the package) or leaves out a church in Montmartre. Let a waiter skip a salad course in Salzburg or a cheese plate in Brussels, and he'll get a karate chop he'll remember for the rest of his life.

In the last 30 years, Europeans have seen their countries invaded by American, Japanese and now Arab tourists. But none of them has ever shown the strength, the moral fiber or the staying power of the little old ladies in tennis shoes.

Why do they do it? When most Europeans have lost interest in tourists, when waiters and concierges and shopkeepers have become more surly, when most things are cheaper in the States, why do the ladies keep traveling abroad?

The answer came from a little old lady sitting next to me at Fouquet's. "Someone has to carry on," she said simply.

"The young people can't do it because they don't have the money; the middle-age people can't do it because they don't have the stamina. If it weren't for us little old ladies in tennis shoes, no one would remember what an American looks like. We've all taken a vow that as long as we can

Rising Land Costs

(Laurinburg Exchange)

A recent study of farm land prices in North Carolina was undertaken by N.C. State University.

The study points out that the 18 percent increase in farm land value in North Carolina last year was exceeded by only five other states. To some that might indicate that the farming industry in North Carolina is that much more healthy than elsewhere. Another common conclusion might be that the land owners (being farmers) stand to benefit in some way from the increasing value of their lands.

Neither, however, is true. As the study indicates, the increasing farm land prices are not a result of increased farm profits but rather of the lands' locations. And when location becomes important, you are talking about the real estate business, not farming.

If anything, the land price spiral is a hindrance to farming. The farmer who intends to farm his land even though a shopping center is being built next door may suddenly find his property taxes a heavy burden. In some cases, farmers have been forced to sell off part of their land in order to be able to manage the tax payments.

As development pushes land prices up, it also reduces the possibility that nearby lands in timber will ever be used for farming.

All this doesn't necessarily mean that developers and farmers are at odds. One alternative, which was discussed at a county commissioners' meeting in Scotland County during property revaluations last year, was evaluating property based on proposed use, not location.

That would allow farm land values to remain lower than lands for commercial, industrial or residential developments. The problem there, of course, is that some land owners intending their land for development could escape paying higher taxes by saying they intended to farm.

If a workable solution could be found, it would satisfy both sides; and it would do away with impressive-looking figures on land cost increases that could lead to false conclusions.

Strength For Today

TRIUMPH OF THE HANDICAPPED

Recently a retired woman teacher in a New England college passed away at the age of 98. When she was a girl she was crippled by polio. Although she was able to walk with difficulty, she went around the campus most of the time in a wheelchair to save time and painful effort. She became distinguished in her field and was nationally known in academic circles.

Although Franklin D. Roosevelt was a controversial figure, everyone who knew him or knew of him admired his ability to triumph over his great handicap and go on to become one of the great figures of the twentieth century.

We are always hearing stories about people who in their youth were given up by their doctors but lived useful lives and died in extreme old age. Such stories make us realize that what the world calls handicaps become for some people a veritable shot in the arm. Many of our great geniuses achieved success not in spite of a handicap but because of it. —

NEW YORK (AP) — In the past 30 years, said Richard Lesher, "if we had set out to screw up our system we couldn't have done it better."

In that time, he said, we have raised government spending and debt, created inflation, cost people their savings, lost our leadership in trade, lost our confidence in institutions, destroyed productivity.

Lesher, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, is one of a growing list of business spokesmen who today speak their views with confidence they will be listened too.

Loud they have always been. But the pitch over the past three decades has been shrill with frustration and defeat, and the message often has been lost in a barrage of outrage, denunciation and accusation.

Now, however, they think the message is getting through: That you can't consume goods and services without producing the same, and that you can't pay your bills by relying on inflation to bail you out.

Few business organizations are so self-centered as to take credit for having changed attitudes. The more receptive mood, they concede, might result largely from the frustration of Americans with economic affairs.

But they — the National Chamber, the Business Roundtable, the National Association of Manufacturers and various trade groups — are seizing the opportunity to be heard. They sense a turnabout in political fortunes.

Lesher, who feels that in January the country will inaugurate a long road back to prosperity, began his public fight to make the views of business acceptable when he became president of the Chamber in 1975.

Immediately he set out to raise membership, which now stands at close to 93,000 corporations, compared with 52,000 when he took office, and 2,700 local and state chambers and 1,300 professional associations.

He writes a weekly column sent to more than 700 newspapers. He appears weekly on radio and on a half-hour weekly television program broadcast by 117 stations.

The chamber's weekly newspaper, "Washington Report," now claims a circulation of more than 500,000 readers. The circulation of "Nation's Business," a monthly magazine, has climbed to 1.3 million.

"Businessmen had hidden in a corner — they wouldn't say anything," said Lesher, a 46-year-old former professor (he holds a doctorate) and space agency official. He does say things, wittily, and acerbicly too.

"The Carter administration didn't have a compass when it got us into the swamp and now it's mired down and baffled," he said recently. It wasn't the usual colorless statement that come from business leaders.

But Lesher is angry. "The federal government is the only entity that benefits from inflation because we all get pushed into higher tax brackets," he said, and then expressed his belief that most people have become aware of it. He calls for an immediate tax cut.

The chamber's current push is to "rebuild America," a program to "give America the clear direction it seeks."

It perceives the challenges as removing "the cancer of inflation by cutting government spending, reducing taxes, increasing productivity and fully utilizing our rich natural resource base.'

It urges Americans to "regain international leadership by aggressively trading in world markets and increasing U.S. military readiness."

It seeks to "rekindle people's confidence in their institutions — family, church, school and community," and to "reassert the individual and business role in the political process."

The answers, it says, begin with rebuilding the economic base, by balancing the budget, reducing taxes, providing production incentives and incentives to savings too, and eliminating regulatory waste.

The answer to whether the public agrees to such changes might come in the November elections. Lesher is confident the public is receptive. He is confident there will be a big change next January.

Knesset Will Vote Jerusalem Capital Of Israel

By JOEL EPSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli legislatoPs put the finishing touches Tuesday to a bill formally proclaiming Jerusalem the undivided capital of Israel, thus ensuring both its passage and a new international furor.

Despite protests by the United States, Egypt and most of the world community, the Knesset (parliament) is to vote the bill into law Wednesday.

U.S. officials fear the law, and Prime Minister Menachem Begin's plan to move his office into the eastern, Arab sector of the city, could end the faltering American-sponsored peace talks with Egypt.

After a marathon two-day hearing in the Knesset Law Committee, leaders of Begin's ruling coalition and the main opposition Labor Party assured the bill of broad support by adding clauses to protect the religious rights of Christians and Moslems in Jerusalem and to provide the holy city preferential economic treatment.

In Washington, the State Department criticized the Jerusalem legislation as "not helpful." A department spokesman said the United States was opposed to "any unilateral act which detracts or distracts from the peace process."

U.S. officials in Tel Aviv underscored that Washington viewed the Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem as illegal. Israel Radio reported that U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis would be unable to meet with Begin in his office if it were moved to the eastern sector.

Legal experts maintain the law will have little practical effect on the status of East Jerusalem, which Israel annexed after its capture from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war.

The vote's timing, during talks on autonomy for Palestinian Arabs living in the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, has prompted Venezuela to move its embassy from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv.

Israeli officials now fear a chain reaction, with others of the 12 remaining embassies in Jerusalem moving out.

"No good will come to Jerusalem because of this law," Mayor Teddy Kollek said after the Law Committee hearing. "I am sorry about the law altogether." Kollek is a member of the opposition Labor Party.

Labor Party leader Shimon Peres was to have met with Begin in an effort to dissuade the prime minister from moving his office to new quarters in the old Arab quarter of the city. Begin, who plans the move next month, canceled the meeting at the last minute without explanation.

Peres has said he believes the move is unnecessary and will alienate Israel's allies. Labor Party leaders also have expressed their disapproval of the Jerusalem bill itself, but fear a vote against it will be interpreted as lack of support for Israeli rule of the city.

Peres had threatened to withdraw Labor support from the Jerusalem bill unless the legislation contained clauses granting religious guarantees and economic aid to the city. The law was introduced by a member of the extreme right-wing opposition, but all the major parties have pledged to support it.

The first clause of the bill states: "Complete and united Jerusalem is the capital of Israel." Reference to the city's borders being those established "after the (1967) Six Day war" was deleted for fear it might have impeded further negotiations on the future of the city.

The second clause reiterates that "Jerusalem is the seat of the president, the Knesset, the government and the Supreme Court." The clause is a composite of measures already enacted into law.

The third clause assures that "holy sites shall be protected from desecration or any other offense and from anything which is likely to prejudice the freedom of access of all religions to the places holy to them or their feelings toward those places." The city is sacred to Jews, Christians and Moslems alike.

The final clause provides that the Knesset will bestow economic benefits, including a "special annual grant," on the city.

In another development, an Israeli correction department spokesman disclosed that a hunger strike by 72 Arab convicts in the top-security Nafha prison had spread to two other jails. By official count, 323 Arab convicts now are on hunger strikes, the spokesman, David Zilberman said.

The strike at Nafha, east of Jerusalem, was entering its third week. Prisoners were refusing all but one cup of liquid nutriments a day. Two prisoners have died of lung infections caused by forced feeding, and a third remains hospitalized in "serious condition."

The Nafha prisoners, who are serving sentences for terrorism, are protesting allegedoercrowding, inadequate ventilation, poor food and other "subhuman" conditions.

But prison authorities say the strikes in Nafha and other institutions are being orchestrated by the Palestine Liberation Organization from outside the prisons, to coincide with diplomatic attacks on Israel from abroad.

At the United Nations Tuesday, the General Assembly voted overwhelmingly to demand that Israel start withdrawing from occupied Arab teritories by Nov. 15 to make way for a Palestinian state. Egypt split with its Camp David accord partners — the United States and Israel — to vote with the majority for the non-binding resolution.

Tourists Barred By Church Over Liquor

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Amid crying parishioners and ringing church bells, the historic San Felipe de Neri Church was closed to tourists after a restaurant received a waiver to sell liquor within 300 feet of the church and its school.

"Over the years, we have been aware of the steady erosion of the spiritual centeredness of this community by the blatant commercialism of Old Town," the Rev. George Salazer told parishioners Tuesday.

"Now we must guard the sacredness of the church. After 274 years, we will close our doors."

After a five-month fight, La Placita Dining Rooms in Albuquerque's Old Town section was granted the waiver Tuesday by the City Commission. The issue now goes to Mayor David Rusk, who indicated he would sign the bill.

Commission member Jo MacAleese, who voted for the measure, called the church's position "hypocrisy" because the church sometimes has its parishioners bring liquor or serves liquor itself.

But state liquor director Jim Baca said liquor served at special church functions is "entirely different from having that service there day after day."

Archbishop Robert Sanchez had threatened to ask other Catholic churches throughout the state to close to tourists if the restaurant were granted the liquor license waiver. He was not available for comment Tuesday.

Parishoners cried and church bells pealed as Salazar nailed to the church doors a plaque saying the church would be open only for regular services and individual worship.

Larry Lamb, attorney for the parishioners, said he planned to meet with attorneys to determine what legal steps could be taken to keep the restaurant from serving liquor. He also said Baca and Gov. Bruce King will be asked "to conduct a full hearing in this matter."

Baca said that after a hearing before him on the waiver, La Placita must apply to his office for a license, and that the application then goes to the Albuquerque commission. If the commission approves the application, he said, "it comes back to me and we'll issue the license."

Following the city commission's approval of the waiver, another Old Town restaurant within 300 feet of the church and school said it would seek a liquor license.

I almost broke into tears. Twenty years ago, the American traveler ruled Europe from Gibraltar to Helsinki. Our traveler's checks were coveted from Dublin to Istanbul. There wasn't an arcade in Venice or a bazaar in Athens that didn't have a sign, 'English Spoken Here.' Those were the golden days for Americans, and we may never see them again.

So, let's hear it for the little old ladies in tennis shoes. God bless them for showing the Flag in the Old World. As long as they have the money and the time and the grandchildren, the spirit of American tourism will never die.

Three Georgia Death Row Escapees Caught In N.C.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — State, federal and local officers captured three of four Death Row escapees from a Georgia prison early today and the FBI said the fourth man was found dead in nearby Gaston County.

Each of the escapees had been condemned to death for murder. They fled from the Georgia State Prison at Reidsville, Ga., Monday after hacksawing their way out of individual cells and walking by at least two guards.

The three men captured were taken into custody without "strong resistance" although one of them was armed, Mecklenburg County Police Capt. Edward Brooks said.

The men were found in a house at Lake Wylie, south of Charlotte, after two days of investigation by Gaston County and state authorities, FBI agent Cecil Moses said today.

Brooks said the officers initially tried to talk the fugitives into surrendering, and then — about three hours later — fired tear gas into the house.

A witness said that, after the first cannister was fired, a voice from inside called out, "The door's open. The door's open."

Brooks identified those arrested as Timothy W. Mccorquodale, 27, of Alma, Ga.; David A. Jarrell, 25, of Greensboro, and Johnnie L. Johnson, 26, of Logan, Utah. Moses said the dead man, who was found floating in the Catawba River in Gaston County, had been identified as Troy Leon Gregg, 32, of York, S.C.

Gregg's home is only a few miles from the river site where his body was found by swimmers at about the same time officers were arriving at the house on Lake Wylie.

Moses said the cause of Gregg's death had not been established. Identification was made "through descriptive data furnished by the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and by a preliminary reading of fingerprints," Moses said.

The captured fugitives were held in Charlotte to await extradition, Moses said.

Brooks said officers had placed the Lake Wylie house under surveillance about 8 p.m. Tuesday.

"I can't tell you how the initial information developed, but we did receive information where these individuals were ... in southern Mecklenburg. The officers went down, and for a number of hours, tried talking to these individuals ... but they got no response," Brooks said.

"About 1:20 this morning, gas was administered to the building and these three individuals came out. My information is now that there was no strong resistance."

Moses said the initial information on the escapees was picked up by the Gaston County police who, with the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation, worked for more than a day before confirming their presence. The FBI was called in Tuesday night, Moses said.

A nationwide alert had been issued Tuesday for the escapees, although Georgia authorities expressed the belief they were still in the Southeast. Families and known friends of the escapees were contacted during the day, authorities said.

Gregg, who was given four death sentences in the deaths and robbery of two men who had given him a ride, served as the basis for a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that upheld Georgia's death penalty law.

McCorquodale was convicted of murder in Georgia's Fulton County for the April 1974 torture slaying of Donna Marie Dixon, 17, of Newport News, Va. Witnesses testified at his trial thaat the victim was tortured for more than two hours in an Atlanta apartment.

Johnson was convicted of murder in the July 20, 1974, abduction and slaying of Suzanne Elaine Edenfield of Savannah, Ga. A native of Utah, Johnson has lived in Sumter, S.C., and in Savannah. He escaped from the Chatham County jail in Savannah in December 1978 and was recaptured in California two months later.

Johnson, the only North Carolinian among the escapees, was convicted of kidnapping and murder in the Dec. 24, 1973, abduction and slaying of Mala Still of Lawrenceville, Ga.

The four escaped from the Reidsville prison after altering their pagamas to resemble uniforms. The escapees passed at least two guards before they hopped into a parked car and drove off.

After escaping, the inmates called a reporter who notified prison officials, but authorities refused for several hours to believe him.

Two guards at the maximum security prison were relieved of their duties Tuesday pending an investigation of the escape, said warden Charles Montgomery.

Montgomery said he had no evidence of collusion in the escape: "I prefer to believe it was neglect."

He blamed the escape on "negligence, inattentiveness, lack of training, lack of procedures and lack of conscientiousness."

One suspended guard had told authorities after the escape that one of the convicts was still in his cell. A tower guard who saw an "officer" with a rope on the prison roof, but failed to report it, also was suspended.

Uniroyal Cites Loss In Period

NEW YORK (AP) — Uniroyal Inc. has become the second of the "Big Four" tiremakers to report a loss for the second quarter as the industry stuggles in the shadow of the slumping U.S. automotive industry.

Uniroyal reported Tuesday that it lost $2.6 million in the second quarter, or 10 cents a share, on revenues of $593.2 million. Last year, when the company was struck for 40 days by the United Rubber Workers, Uniroyal reported a loss of $3.1 million, or 12 cents a share, on revenues of $726.8 million.

The No. 3 tiremaker, which will close two tire plants this year, said the report reflected a sharp decline in U.S. automotive markets. The performance would have been worse had it not been for gains in chemical operations and tire sales abroad, it said.

For the first six months of the year, Uniroyal reported a loss of $14.7 million, or 55 cents a share, on revenues of $1.17 billion, compared with earnings of $2.9 million, or 11 cents a share, on revenues of $1.44 billion in the first half of 1979.

In May, No. 2 Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. reported losses of $65.8 million in the first half of its fiscal year compared with earnings of $67.4 million in the same period in the previous year.

Firestone's loss included $49 million in after-tax charges in the second quarter to cover the cost of closing five U.S. tire plants and other facilities.

The industry leader, Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., and No. 4 B.F. Goodrich Co. have reported sharply lower earnings for both the second quarter and first half.

Uniroyal, an international developer and marketer of chemical, rubber and plastic products, recently won agreement from the URW to reduce compensation for employees by about 19.5 percent through next year to help make ends meet. Uniroyal hopes to reduce expenses by $54 million over the next 18 months.

The tire industry has been hard hit by depressed conditions in the automotive industry, reduced driving caused by rising gasoline prices and the longer tread life and growth in popularity of radial tires.

Uniroyal said it incurred a $5 million operating loss from its tires and related products segment in the second quarter, compared with a $10 million loss in the same period a year ago. For the half, operating losses from the tire and related products segment totaled $15 million, compared with operating earnings of $2 million in the first six months of last year.

'Tattoo' Rushed To A Hospital

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Herve Villechaize, the 3-foot-10-inch "Tattoo" of television's "Fantasy Island," was rushed to St. Joseph's Medical Center after complaining of abdominal pain.

"He is conscious but uncomfortable," hospital spokesman Sal Esperza said Tuesday night. "We won't know what's wrong until we see results of several lab tests. He's in stable condition."

A native of Paris, the 70-pound Villechaize lives in Shadow Hills, a Los Angeles suburb where he raises horses, rabbits and dogs.

Villechaize, 36, last week announced his engagement to actress Camille Hagan. The couple met last fall when the actress appeared on the TV series.

His films include "The Gang That Couldn't Shoot Straight" and "The Man With The Golden Gun."

Two Dead In Carrier's Collision In Far East

PEARL HARBOR, Hawaii (AP) — Two non-commissioned officers were killed and three sailors slightly injured in a collision between and the U.S. aircraft carrier Midway and a merchant ship off the southern Philippines, the Navy's Pacific Fleet headquarters announced.

Apparently nobody was hurt on the freighter, the 450-foot, 7,718-ton Cactus, registered in Panama. The Philippine Navy said it had a hole nine feet above the waterline and was being escorted to port by the U.S. Navy frigate Kirk.

A Navy spokesman said there was no damage below the waterline of the 64,000-ton, 1,002-foot-long carrier. A Navy report issued in Washington said the catwalks and deck supports on the port side were damaged, an elevator was jammed, three holes were punched in the hull plates and six planes near the elevator were damaged "moderately."

The Midway, a conventionally powered ship and the oldest carrier in the U.S. fleet, carries about 70 aircraft.

The collision occurred Tuesday in the strait between the Philippine island of Palawan and North Borneo, about 450 miles southwest of the big U.S. naval base at Subic Bay, in the Philippines. The Navy refused to discuss the circumstances of the collision but said it was being investigated.

U.S. military authorities in Tokyo said the two Americans killed were Petty Officer 2nd Class Daniel Francis Macey of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Petty Officer 3rd Class Christian O. Delgun of Thousand Oaks, Calif. Injuries to the other sailors were described as minor and their identities were not announced.

The Midway's home port is Yokosuka, Japan and it is the only American carrier operating in the Western Pacific region. It was en route to Singapore at the time, but the Navy did not say whether it was being diverted to another port for repairs.

The Navy said it did not know yet whether another carrier would be moved into the area to replace the damaged ship. America's carrier resources are strained by the stationing of two of them in the Indian Ocean-Arabian Sea area because of the Iranian and Afghanistan crises.

Toy Tugboat Fleet Is Not For Children

By ROBERT LEE ZIMMER
Associated Press Writer

ARGENTA, Ill. (AP) — Dwight Hartman's tugboats separate the men from the boys.

The handsomely detailed reproductions that Hartman turns out of his basement shop might be considered toys, but buying, assembling and operating one certainly is not child's play.

"It takes about 16 hours of labor for me to make one of these tugboats," said Hartman. "I build one of these a week and ship it out every Friday."

What Hartman creates is a fiberglass kit that assembles into a 42-inch-long scale model of a harbor tug. He estimates construction and painting time for the purchaser at 100-150 hours: "It's not just a snap-together thing you do in one night."

The economy version is $185, but the $400 model includes everything from the tug itself to the metal detail castings, paint, 32 minature crewmen and the battery-powered motor to propel it.

"A lot of my customers have put steam engines in these things," said Hartman, 54, who has sold 209 tugs since 1973.

Radio control units, not included, turn the owners into shoreline ship captains at a cost of $150 to $400.

Hartman's own prototype tug, the Clayton F. Thoms, is named after the man who designed it and inspired Hartman to manufacture the fiberglass version.

It sports miniature rubber tires on its sides to protect it from the inevitable bumps with docks, barges and other ships. The front bumper is a rope-mesh type fashioned from an old washcloth.

A new radio control unit will operate the lights, blow the horns, ring the bells and turn the radar antenna on Hartman's model.

Hartman was working as a cabinet-maker when he decided in 1962 to become his own boss and go into the model-making business.

"I built a lot of model airplanes as a kid," said Hartman. "I've been a model-builder all my life."

A friend taught him the fine points of using fiberglass, and he combined that with his knowledge of woodworking to produce his first set of molds.

He began with airplanes, and sold 1,700 fiberglass fuselages of one design before he switched to ships. Model planes, he said, became outdated too quickly.

"A tugboat always looks like a tugboat," said Hartman. "It's kind of a classic design."

The wood-framed fiberglass molds for the tugboat took about 100 hours to construct, but Hartman expects them to last forever.

He advertises in national model magazines occasionally, but his reputation has spread through model ship clubs which have meets and contests all over the country.

"People see them at shows where the owners are running them," said Hartman, who has more than two dozen people on a waiting list for the tug model. "They ask who made them and they write to me."

Hartman said he enjoys his basement enterprise, but it not certain how much longer he will make the tugboats.

"I've got enough parts down there for 75 more," he said. "Then, I don't know whether I'll retire that design or not."

Hartman, a bachelor, said, "This is a labor of love, but you have to make a little money out of it."

Food Stamp Cutback By Amendment

WASHINGTON, D.C. – An estimated 200,000 people, including 150,000 college students, will be dropped from the food stamp program, and food stamps will be cut by $80 million a year under rules published by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Assistant Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said the new rules, required by 1980 amendments to the Food Stamp Act, will cause 150,000 adult students (over 18 and under 60 years of age) who now receive food stamps to lose their eligibility on Sept. 1. The only exceptions will be low-income students with disabilities or those who: work more than 20 hours a week; head households with dependents; participate in a federal work-study program or are enrolled in a work incentive program.

In addition to eliminating most college students from the program, the new rules will cause 50,000 more food stamp recipients to lose their eligibility when a new assets limit takes effect Oct. 1.

Under the present food stamp law, most food stamp households must have assets worth less than $1,750. The new law and regulations lower this limit to $1,500. Households of two or more people, in which at least one person is elderly, will not be affected by the change. The assets limit for these elderly households will remain at $3,000.

"The rules issued carry out 1980 amendments to the food stamp law aimed at cutting program costs and tightening management," Foreman said. "Earlier this month the semi-annual cost-of-food increase was cancelled, and new procedures lowering food stamp income limits took effect."

"Together these changes are expected to save $448 million in the upcoming fiscal year," Foreman said. "With the publication of the new rules, we have implemented all of the savings provisions of the new law that will affect eligibility for food stamps and benefit levels."

The interim final rules published in July 8 Federal Register also exclude the counting of federal, state and local energy assistance payments as income or resources in determining a household's eligibility for food stamps. Vehicles used by handicapped people also will not be counted as a household resource. These latter two provisions become effective Oct. 1.

Oil Revenue For Alaska Soared

ANCHORAGE (AP) – Alaska's direct revenues from the oil and gas industry during 1979 increased 288 percent over 1978 revenues, the state Oil and Gas Conservation Commission said.

The commission said the revenues shot up to $1.7 billion primarily because of increased production, and partly because of an increase in the average price of oil, $10.74 a barrel, and gas, 52 cents per thousand cubic feet, during the year.

The state's oil production stood at nearly 1.88 billion barrels through 1979, the report said, with almost 8.4 billion barrels of crude oil reserves.

Advise Veto If Passed

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Justice Department is labeling unconstitutional a congressional move to restore prayer in public schools by superseding the Supreme Court's jurisdiction over the issue.

Assistant Attorney General John M. Harmon said Tuesday the measure should be vetoed if it is passed by Congress and sent to President Carter. Harmon told a House Judiciary subcommittee the proposal would "undermine the Supreme Court's role in protecting the integrity and supremacy of federal law." The plan, sponsored by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., passed the Senate in April 1979 and is now before a House committee.

Iraqi Youth Build Homes During Camp

By STEVE K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

QADISIYAH HEROES CAMP, Iraq (AP) — Teenagers in khaki fatigues and checkered Arab headdresses are busily going about their activities at this summer youth camp on the outskirts of Baghdad. The temperature is 115 degrees and they are laying bricks.

This is summer camp — in the style of Iraq's governing Arab Baath Socialist Party. About 3,000 volunteer boys are on one side of the road and 2,000 girls on the other. They are Baghdad students, aged 16 to 21, and they are building 240 free houses for the peasants who live now in mud huts near the city.

The program, in which about 200,000 Iraqis participate every year, is part of the Ministry of Youth's effort to involve all young Iraqis in public works.

Karim Mulla, the minister of youth, says there are similar work programs in factories and on farms.

The camp is named after the Battle of Qadisiyah in the year 638 when a heavily outnumbered Arab army defeated the Persians.

Today Iraq is involved in sporadic border clashes with what it calls the "Persian racist regime" of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini in Iran.

On the road leading to the camp are 20-foot-high posters memorializing four students killed when an Iraqi "of Persian origin" tossed a grenade at a top official at a Baghdad university earlier this year.

Hassan Nafal, the camp commander who wears commando-style fatigues and a burgundy beret, explains the daily regimen at the camp to a group of visiting Western correspondents:

"Wake-up, 3:30 a.m., a half-hour of exercises, flag-raising, breakfast, start work 5:00 a.m., half-hour break at 11:30 a.m., shower, rest, lunch, more work 4:30-6:30, p.m., lowering of the flag and dinner and discussion of day' progress."

Each of the seven days in camp has a special evening program. The programs range from get-acquainted nights to political seminars.

The second-in-command at the camp, Aleya al-Naki, a young woman, steps forward to answer an Iraqi official's question about why these students are not demonstrating in the streets like students in other countries.

"Before the revolution, the students made demonstrations, but now they are working for the revolution and the transformation of the socialist society," she says.

The campers, meanwhile, work away in a blazing sun. Some shovel sand into wheelbarrows, some mix cement, and others stand shoulder-to-shoulder passing one brick at a time to the masons fashioning the walls of the homes.

Their headresses are worn in many styles and there are boys with long hair and boys with short hair. The girls are chanting Baathist slogans and singing.

One girl who speaks English was asked if she minded working in the hot sun.

"No," she says. "The sun doesn't bother us. This is our country. This is our sun and we e used to it. We like to work because we like our government and our president very much. We love our president, Saddam Hussein."

Avers Religion Is Life-Blood

COPENHAGEN (AP) — Denmark's Queen Margrethe says "Christianity is not merely an outward cultural organization, something which provides us with beautiful old churches, fine furniture and good hymn singing, but it is something that belongs to the life-blood of Western culture."

On a recent Danish television portrait on her 40th birthday, she added: "There is in the Western world the spiritual resources on which we shall be able to survive, and personally, I have no hesitation in saying that Christianity is a very, very essential side of this spiritual strength

Some Make Big Changes In Careers

By CYNTHIA ROBERTS
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — He abandoned his law practice to run a bakery — gave up torts for tortes, with no regrets.

His college classmate — a finance officer — took a decade to decide that his career goals just didn't add up. He's a scenic designer now.

They are both "radical changers," people whose drastic career switches make their employment records look something like a chapter from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Howard Mitchell, head of the Human Resources Center at the University of Pennsylvania, is hunting "radical changers" in the belief that their reasons for complete career changes could affect theories of job counseling.

Mitchell took charge of the study in 1978 to examine the relationship between education and career. Penn's classes of 1964 and '65 were singled out, and more than 1,500 alumni participated.

Responses from some of the "radical changers" were as unusual as the graduates themselves. Mitchell described the exquisite calligraphy of one woman who wrote:

"Your inquiry is concerned with the relationship between education and a job. For me, no such simple relationship exists.

"Education does have to do with my work, which is painting, the fine arts. (But) jobwise, I have been a calligrapher, a store owner, a free-lance designer, a waitress, a pre-school director and even a factory worker in a sardine plant."

The study, released recently, was financed by the National Institute of Education. Some of the results challenge advice that career counselors have doled out for decades. Among the findings are:

—Many of the "radical changers" switched jobs without seeking additional education. They eschewed formal education or training programs in favor of transferring their work skills to new fields.

—A liberal arts degree did not necessarily lead to more career flexibility than a technical or specialized field.

—The data did not support the notion that a college freshman should pick a career and never stray from that track.

—Many of the graduates were astonished that the researchers viewed their career patterns as radical.

A majority of the respondents saw nothing unusual about their job changes. Asked about the U-turns in their career itineraries, 60 percent were surprised and puzzled.

One woman denied she was a "radical changer" and contended that Mitchell didn't understand the courses that attracted her to the university.

"She told me, 'I majored in music composition because its progressive nature excited me. Construction is my business now, and it is the progressive nature of that which interests me too,'" Mitchell said.

"You see, whether it was music composition as a creative act, or her construction company getting a contract to lay an interstate highway, to her mind, she is dealing with the same kind of thing," he added.

The music-major-turned-construction worker voiced a phenomenon experienced by most "radical changers," Mitchell said. Nearly all were able to identify a common thread running through their education and work experiences.

"It has long been known that many lawyers never practice law, but build careers in other fields following graduation," the 80-page study said.

Graduates who recognized their law degrees would be helpful in finance, real estate, insurance or politics were able to make career changes that seemed radical on the surface, but in fact were a natural blend of their skills and education.

Computer Camp Is Preparing For The 1990s

By JACKIE HYMAN
Associated Press Writer

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — In the afternoon, the campers swim and ride horses. In the evening, they sing and dance. In the mornings and just before dinner, they play with floppy disks and a mini-robot named Turtle.

"We're trying to prepare the kids for what it's going to be like a decade from now, when they're getting out of school," said Denison Bollay, a 27-year-old computer consultant and founder and president of California Computer Camp.

The camp opened this year at Rancho Oso deep in the Los Padres National Forest, about 20 miles inland from this seaside resort north of Los Angeles.

The campers, who attend one or more of the five two-week sessions, work on 10 computers, the sort that are set up for home use. The youngsters, about 20 per session, range in age from 10 to 15 and pay $795 each.

Students have come from as far away as New York, London and Tokyo to learn to use the computers, which are equipped with television-type screens and keyboards similar to those on typewriters.

"Computers have a certain fascination," Bollay said. "It's almost like a new hobby."

A decade ago, the current home computers, costing $1,000 to $2,000, were unheard of, Bollay said.

"When I started using computers in 1966 or '67, a computer took up the whole ground floor of the building. It cost millions," he said. "Yet these little home computers are more powerful than that by a factor of five or 10."

The students begin by becoming "computer literate" — learning computer languages, although Bollay predicts that within five years computers will be able to understand human speech. Some are already equipped with synthesizers that enable them to talk, using limited vocabularies.

One language, aptly named Basic, enables students to give a variety of simple commands using English words and some symbols. It could be used with a home computer to make airline reservations, obtain news or perform other simple functions. More advanced students learn languages geared for more difficult commands.

Greg Berman, a 12-year-old from Santa Barbara, is one of the advanced students. He designs programs that create graphics similar to those used in movie titles. Elaborate combinations of brightly colored geometric shapes form, dissolve and give way to lettering, which in Greg's case reads: "Computer Camp."

Greg also enjoys explaining the camp's mini-robot, called Turtle because it looks like one. "You hook it up to a computer and, for instance, when it runs into something, you could program it to say, 'Ouch!'"

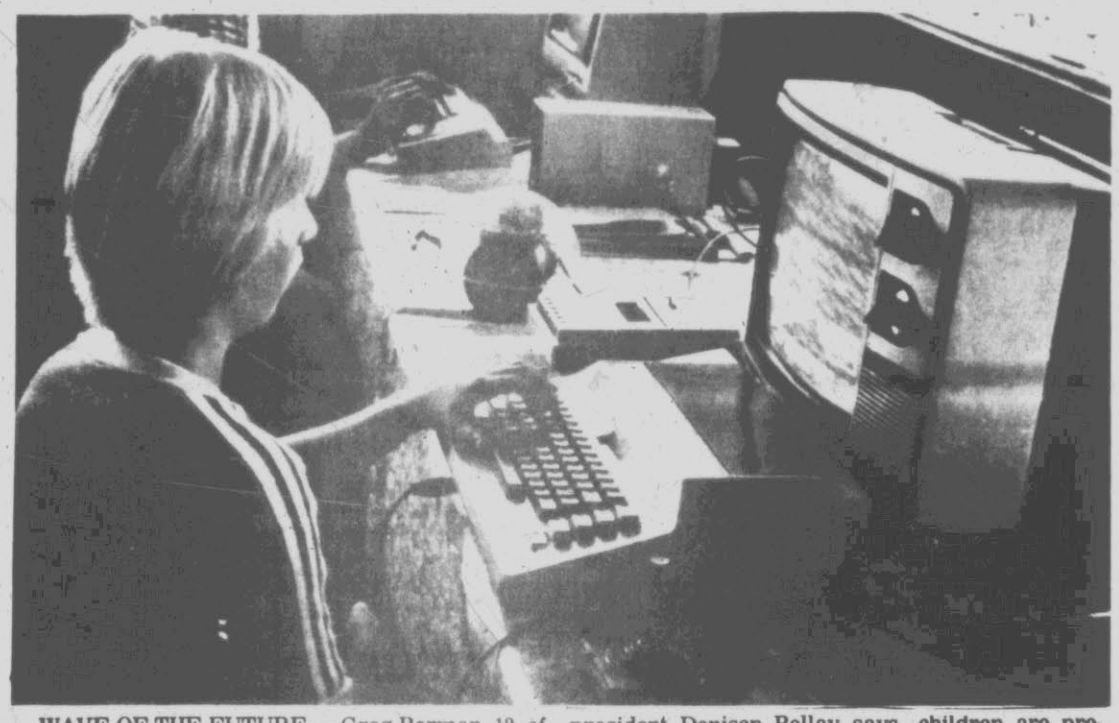
Camper Tom McCroskey, 15, of Atlanta, plans to study electrical engineering. "Computers are an expanding field and I'm interested in them," he said.

And Andy Reed of Alexandria, Va., who's 12, said he was given a basic computer for his birthday two years ago and has been adding components since then, as previous generations did with stereos.

"I decided this was my chance to learn what this is all about," he said of the camp.

Even those students who don't plan futures in the computer field will find themselves using computers at home and at work, Bollay said. He himself rigged one up to his telephone answering machine in Santa Barbara.

"It could call up here and say, 'Hello, you have had five calls. Please call so-and-so,'" Bollay explained. "Five years from now, we'll be saying, 'What did we ever do without it?'"



WAVE OF THE FUTURE — Greg Berman, 12, of Santa Barbara, Calif., sits at computer console at California Computer Camp near Santa Barbara. The camp is a place where, as founder and president Denison Bollay says, children are prepared "for what it's going to be like a decade from now" in a world increasingly reliant upon computers. Lion's Lair Is Legal In Akron

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — In Akron, it's against the law to raise a rabbit, keep a cow or have a hog. But lairing lions? Well, that's a horse of a different color.

Michael McCann recently purchased Timba, an 11-month-old, 250-pound lion, and despite calls from McCann's worried neighbors, city health officials say there is nothing they can do about it.

Municipal law makes it illegal to keep rabbits, cows or hogs inside city limits, but there is no provision for lions. Health officials say McCann need only ensure that Timba is not a nuisance or a safety threat.

Timba's home is a heavy steel cage at the rear of McCann's garage. For about an hour each day, McCann chains Timba to a tree in the backyard to let the lion catch some sun.

And McCann says his pet is not ferocious, "just a playful kitty cat."

Robbery Arrest Attempt Stirs Orlando Violence

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Four black ministers walked the streets of this central Florida city trying to restore calm early today after an angry crowd of more than 100 people pelted police and passers-by with rocks and bottles.

A six-block area of a predominantly black neighborhood was cordoned off and two police officers received minor injuries as roving groups of blacks looted at least two convenience stores. The four-hour surge of violence was sparked by the arrest of two robbery suspects, officials said.

At least one car was set ablaze, but firefighters were forced to withdraw from the area after they were pelted by rocks, officials said.

Shortly before 6 a.m. EDT, said Police Chief James Nursey said, there were 10 to 15 people wandering around the neighborhood throwing rocks and bottles.

He said police hoped to quell the remaining disturbances and "move those people out" so barricades could be removed in time for the morning rush hour.

Nursey said there were numerous arrests, but he could not provide an exact number. Police had made no damage estimates, he said.

Ministers led by the Rev. W.D. Judge, a leader in the Orlando black community, walked through the area and urged young blacks to stay calm. The ministers said a general community meeting would be held today to allow blacks to air their grievances.

The incident began when police attempted to arrest two robbery suspects, Nursey said. One suspect resisted arrest, drawing an angry crowd of 100 to 150 people who threw rocks and bottles at officers, the chief said.

The crowd broke up into smaller groups and roamed the area, police said.

Two Orlando police officers were slightly injured when they were struck by flying bottles, said Nursey. One was hit in the back by a bottle while another suffered a cut on his arm.

As the violence broke out, Orlando police called in reinforcements from the Orange County Sheriff's Department and the Florida Highway Patrol to guard the sealed-off area. Police permitted no one but the ministers and a few reporters to enter.

"The ministers were telling the people to stay cool....A number of young men would come up to them and complain about jobs and things like that," said Jeff Kunerth, a reporter with the Sentinel-Star of Orlando.

"Some said there was excessive force used in the arrest of the robbery suspect with police shoving a gun in his ribs."

Kunerth said he saw one woman running from a looted convenience store with several boxes of disposable diapers in her arms. But damage seemed to be mostly confined to broken windows, he said.

The outbreak in Orlando was the third episode of violence to rock Florida this year.

In May, 18 people died during bloody race riots in Miami that were touched off by the acquittal of four former Dade County policemen charged in connection with the beating death of black Miami businessman Arthur McDuffie.

Earlier this month, violence erupted again in the riot-scarred and predominantly black Liberty City section of Miami after police attempted to arrest several robbery suspects. That violence was quelled by a dusk-to-dawn curfew imposed on the area.

Annual Checkup For Lady Bird

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson, 67, widow of former President Lyndon Johnson, is at the Mayo Clinic this week undergoing tests for her routine annual physical examination, a clinic spokesman said.

The former first lady, who lives in Johnson City, Texas, checked in at the clinic Monday.

Johnson was a public member of the Mayo Foundation's Board of Trustees from February 1969 until his death in January 1973.

He began going to the Mayo Clinic for periodic checkups in 1941 while he was a Texas congressman.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices climbed again today as the government provided evidence the economy may be coming out of the recession.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 2.65 to 934.56 in the first half hour of trading, as advances outnumbered declines by almost a 2-1 margin among New York Stock Exchange issues.

The Commerce Department reported the index of leading economic indicators rose 2.5 percent in June. The index, which is designed to anticipate changes in the economy, had not shown an increase since the previous June.

Brokerage stocks were strong and active in early trading, with Merrill Lynch up ⅛ to 28⅛ and Donaldson Lufkin Jenrette rising ⅛ to 7⅛.

Among other active issues, Pan Am was unchanged at 5⅞ and Dow Chemical was up ¼ to 35¾.

On Tuesday, the Dow Jones industrial average rose 6.48 to 931.91, the highest figure for that indicator since it finished at 936.48 on May 19, 1977.

Advances outnumbered declines by a 9-5 margin on the NYSE.

Big Board volume totaled 44.84 million shares, against 35.33 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index gained .56 to 69.99.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.32 at 317.28.

Carolina East To Celebrate Anniversary

Carolina East Mall will celebrate its first anniversary this week with festivities similar to the August 1, 1979 opening which included balloons, entertainment and specials provided by mall stores.

The highlight of the anniversary celebration, according to spokesmen for Ernest W. Hahn, the developers of the 340,000 square foot mall, will be the awarding of over $500 in gifts to the first baby born at Pitt Memorial Hospital on August 1.

Cartoon celebrities — Woody Woodpecker, Pink Panther, Mighty Mouse, Deputy Dog, and Heckle — will appear at the mall Thursday through Saturday, from 1 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Mall officials, who had projected $29 million in sales generating over $1.74 million in sales tax revenues during the first year, said those figures have been exceeded despite the recession.

No Parole For Tate Murderer

FRONTERA, Calif. (AP) — Susan Atkins, who was convicted of eight murders committed while she was a follower of cult leader Charles Manson, has again been denied parole.

The Board of Prison Terms denied her latest request Tuesday, calling the murders "extremely heinous." Miss Atkins confessed to stabbing pregnant actress Sharon Tate in a case that shocked the nation in 1969.

The 32-year-old Miss Atkins, who says she is a born-again Christian, said Tuesday, "Nothing I do from this day forward will ever undo or outweigh the ugliness of my past."

or roughly 21 poercent of total volume. In 1979, Stabilization receipts on the Belt totaled 503,295 pounds or 7.1 percent, while Greenville receipts amounted to only 3.84 percent of total sales.

Dunn, with an average of $127.20 per hundred pounds, topped the 14 eastern markets yesterday and was one of five towns to surpass the $120 mark. Last year, all but two of the 14 markets opened with averages of $120 or better.

Robersonville joined Ahoskie and Tarboro in holding first sales today as the Eastern Belt held second-day auctions with hopes for improved buying activity.

Gov. Hunt To Speak At Oct. Meet

Gov Jim Hunt will be the featured speaker at a First Congressional District Democratic rally here October 16, according to Joyce Hastings, president of the Pitt County Democratic Women who are hosting the event in cojunction with the Pitt County YDC and the Teen Dems.

Others expected to attend the event include First District Congressman Walter Jones, members of the Council of State, state legislators, and candidates for election to public office in the November election.

Reporting to members of the Pitt County Democratic Executive Committee at a Tuesday planning session, Mrs. Hastings said that the Democratic Women will host a public reception for the wife and daughters of Sen. Robert Morgan, who is a candidate for re-election to the U.S. Senate, on August 19 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Howell on Longmeadow Road.

Pitt Democratic chairman George Saleeby reported on Jefferson-Jackson Day activities, and appointed committees to handle various aspects of the Democratic campaign.

He noted that the formal opening of Democratic Headquarters for the county has been tentatively set for September 2.

Indicators See Upturn In June

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's barometer of future economic activity rose sharply in June, marking the first increase in a year, the Commerce Department announced today.

The Index of Leading Economic Indicators rose 2.5 percent, the largest gain since June 1975. Seven of the 10 available components of the index posted gains, led by a drop in the rate of lay-offs from manufacturing jobs.

The index rose to 126.9, according to the department's Bureau of Economic Analysis. The May index was revised to 123.8, a 2.3-percent decline from the April level of 126.7.

The index is designed to predict monthly movements in economic activity and is closely watched for indications of how the economy might fare in coming months.

In addition to a drop in the lay-off rate, other indicators that improved in June were: a change in total liquid assets; contracts and orders for plant in equipment, adjusted for inflation; stock prices; money supply adjusted for inflation; new orders and building permits.

Declines were registered in the average work week; in vendors' delivery time to companies and in sensitive raw materials prices.

Despite the June gains, the overall index is still below the 135.5 level posted at the start of the year and under thw 141.6 in June 1979.

But today's figures indicate the sharp drop in economic activity earlier this year has been slowed dramatically. For example, in the record 3.9-percent plunge of the index in April, all 10 indicators declined, signaling that the current recession was likely to be steeper than originally forecast.

Mystery Plane Is Gone Again

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — If people love mysteries, the circumstances surrounding a B-25 bomber in Burlington should be of great satisfaction to them.

The vintage World War II bomber land at at the Burlington Municipal Airport under the cover of darkness in April 1979. No admits seeing it land or knowing anything about.

Now it's gone, just as mysteriously as it came. Sometime early Sunday, someone climbed aboard, cranked the engines and took off.

The Federal Aviation Administration had requested notification before it took off so they could give it a safety check. The FAA was interested because the aircraft wasn't registered.

Some say it was used to smuggle drugs and others claim it belongs to a rich person who wants to keeps things quiet.

But no one really knows. The Alamance County Sheriff's Department has no record on the plane. Since no owner can be found, there is no one to report it stolen, if it was.

"There is no chance of it being stolen," said Ed King, FAA chief in the Raleigh region. But he has no idea what happened to it.

Russians Set Olympic Record For Total Medals

Yugoslavs Oust Soviets; Face Italians In Finals

MOSCOW (AP) — The men's Olympic basketball gold medal game today pits Yugoslavia against Italy. That's right: no Soviet Union.

Favored along with the Yugoslavs to dominate the tourney in the absence of the boycotting Americans, the Soviets were eliminated from gold medal contention Tuesday night when Yugoslavia beat Brazil 96-95 in a nerve-tingling semifinal.

That left Italy and the Soviet Union tied in the semifinals with a 3-2 record, but Italy advanced on the basis of its 87-85 upset ver the Soviets last Saturday.

The Italians never have won an Olympic basketball medal and were beaten by Yugoslavia 102-81 in the semifinal round.

The Yugoslavs survived the semifinals unscathed with a 5-0 record. They were silver medalists in 1976 when the Americans took the title.

The Soviets also play Wednesday, but for the bronze against Spain. The Spanish had a 2-3 record as did Brazil, but qualified because they beat Brazil 110-81 in their semifinal.

The bare statistics hardly describe a tournament that has proven exciting despite the U.S. boycott. It has produced players of flair and talent, a couple of overtime games and two refereeing controversies.

The first came when the Soviets lost to Yugoslavia 101-91 in overtime after the Russians were denied a basket and potential three-point play that could have won them the game in the last minute.

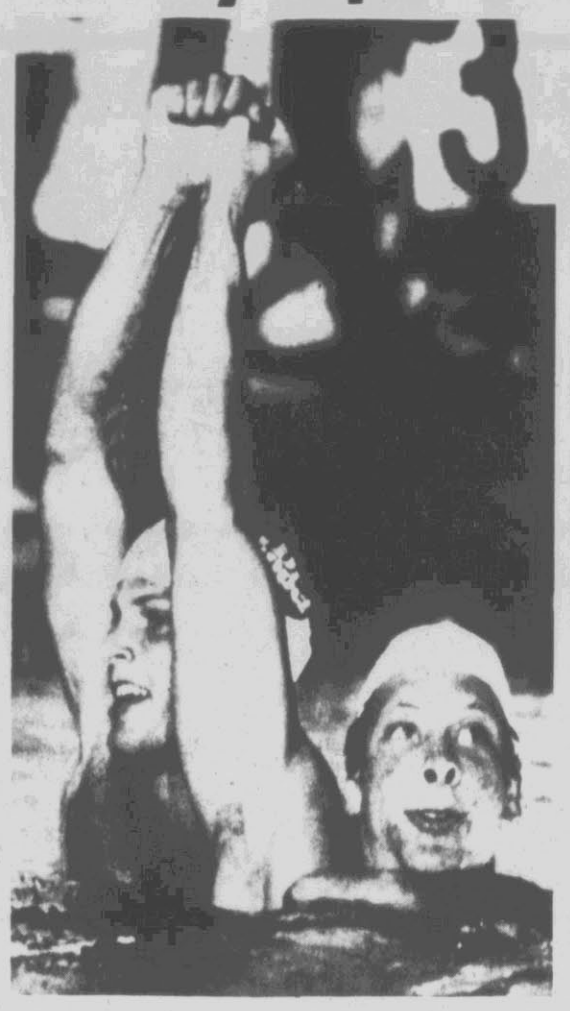
Tuesday night, Yugoslavia sneaked past Brazil by one point following an incident that brought memories of the 1972 Olympic final when the Soviets nipped the U.S. by one point after the clock was restarted.

It happened when Yugoslav center Kresimir Cosic — who played U.S. college basketball at Brigham Young — punched the ball out of play with less than two seconds left. The Brazilians had the throw-in and missed a wild shot. The Yugoslav team celebrated, then filed off to the showers.

Brazil's coach protested that the clock was wron. The Yugoslavs were called back, the clock set at three seconds, and the throw-in replayed. This time another shot was hurled at the basket and missed. The Brazilians left the court in tears, and Coach Claudio Mortari said later that Cosic should have been penalized with a two-shot technical foul for batting the ball out of bounds.

Soviet fans had shrieked and stomped their feet, trying to unnerve the Yugoslavs. If Brazil had won, the Russians would have qualified for the final instead of Italy under the complicated scoring system.

Yugoslav forward Drazen Dalipagic was the game's top scorer with 26 points. Oscar Schmidt had 24 for Brazil.



Record Setting

Steve Lunquist, left, and Bill Barrett rejoice after placing first and second in the men's 100 meters breastroke finals inthe 1980 U.S. Long Course Swimming Championships Tuesday night in Irvine, Ca. They both bettered the mark set in the Moscow Olympics with Lundquist setting an American record in the process. His time was 1:02.88, just .02 seconds off the world mark. Barrett's time was 1:02.93. Americans Play Role In Main Soviet Setbacks

MOSCOW (AP) — The powerful Soviet athletes have set an Olympic record for total medals, but many people will remember the Summer and Winter Games of 1980 for the two that got away from the Russians.

The United States played a role in both Soviet setbacks, actively turning the screws at Lake placid and passively letting Italy and Yugoslavia do the deed here.

Their failures came in two most important team sports at the Olympic Games — ice hockey in the winter and basketball in the summer.

And it won't matter in 10 years or 100 years how many cleans and jerks the Soviets won, or how many millions of medals the Soviet system produced, the more lasting memories will be USA 4, USSR 3...and the Soviet Union playing for the bronze in basketball.

That a bunch of scruffy American collegians and minor leaguers could beat the best hockey team in the world was humiliating. The Soviets, with easy victories over the top teams in the National Hockey League, had refined the sport and were its best practitioners. Then America beat them at their own game.

But basketball is America's game. The United States has won every basketball gold medal except one. With the Americans boycotting, the Soviets were favored to win. But they were beaten by Italy and then Yugoslavia, so in the Yank-less Olympics of 1980, Italy and Yugoslavia played today for the gold and the Soviets were to meet Spain for the bronze.

In other major events today, Alberto Juantorena of Cuba, 400 and 800 gold medalist in 1976, was to try for a repeat in the 400-meter race, one of five track and field finals today. The others were the pole vault, shot put, 50-kilometer walk and the women's 200 meters.

Qualifying for the men's 1,500 meters was also to begin with Englishmen Steve Ovett and Sebastian Coe rekindling their on-the-track rivalry after both said this week their supposed personal feud was just media hype.

The Soviets can take some solace in their medal count. Even with the United States and 35 other nations boycotting, the numbers are awesome.

After Tuesday's action, the Soviet Union had 55 golds and 137 medals, breaking marks for both golds and total medals. The records had been the Soviets' haul of 125 at the Montreal Games four years ago and their mark of 50 golds at Munich in 1972.

Long before the Soviet Union ever began competing in the Olympics, the United States had won 110 medals at the Los Angeles Games of 1932, now the third highest total. That mark, achieved when the Olympic program had fewer events, may be the most impressive medal count of all time.

Another significant medal count for the United States will be its no gold, no silver and no bronze for the Moscow Olympics. Instead of medals, America has its symbolic gesture, boycotting the Games in protest of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

President Carter, the driving force behind the boycott, was to be on Capitol Hill today, when the U.S. Olympic team, selected but not participating, was to receive commemorative gold medals.

"Some on the team are disturbed that Carter will be there," said Elizabeth Hills of Hingham, Mass., captain of the women's rowing team. "They don't want to appear to be supporting what he has done this year."

Carter's boycott not only kept an American team out of Moscow, it served to keep the U.S. flag out of all Olympic ceremonies — until today. The U.S. flag was to be hoisted and the "Star Spangled Banner" was to be played at the closing ceremonies of the Olympic regatta in Tallin in Estonia.

The flag-raising, normal Olympic protocol, was in recognition that Los Angeles would be the next host of the Summer Games.

These Moscow Games are the Soviet Union's chance to shine. But the Sovits lost a little of their luster when Yugoslavia beat Brazil 96-95 in basketball Tuesday. In the complicated qualifying scheme, Brazil's loss knocked the Soviets out of championship contention.The Soviets, who were 3-2 after beating Cuba 109-90, needed Brazil to beat Yugoslavia, already assured of a berth in the gold medal game. That would have created a three-way tie for second place among the Soviet Union, Italy and Brazil. The Soviets then would have moved on to the championship game on the basis of a better points differential.

Yugoslav guard Mirza Delibasic hit two foul shots in the final seconds for a 96-95 lead over Brazil. The buzzer then sounded after Brazil's desperation heave at the basket. The Yugoslavs celebrated and headed for the dressing room, but were brought back to replay the last three seconds because Brazil's final throw-in

Indians Win 7th Straight

By The Associated Press

Indian summer has come to Cleveland in July.

The Cleveland Indians, hottest team in the American League, won their seventh game in a row Tuesday night as Mike Hargrove slammed two home runs and Dan Spillner and Sid Monge combined on an eight-hitter in a 7-2 trouncing of the Seattle Mariners.

Monge, the Indians' 1979 bullpen ace, was ineffective during the first half of 1980. But in his last nine appearences he has yielded only one run and four hits in 162-3 innings — one hit in 22-3 innings Tuesday night — and has combined with Victor Cruz to give Cleveland a red-hot relief corps.

"Tonight, had this been a month ago, I might have left Spillner in there," said Manager Dave Garcia. "The bullpen wasn't doing it's job. Now I have all the confidence in the world in them."

The victory boosted the Indians into fifth place in the American League East, less than one percentage point ahead of the sliding Boston Red Sox, who dropped a wild 9-8 decision to the Kansas City Royals.

Elsewhere, the Minnesota Twins nipped the New York Yankees 3-2, the Baltimore Orioles edged the Texas Rangers 4-3, the Milwaukee Brewers whipped the Chicago White Sox 7-1, the California Angels trimmed the Detroit Tigers 7-0 and the Oakland A's shaded the Toronto Blue Jays 6-5 in 12 innings.

Cleveland scored single runs in each of the first three innings off Seattle's Rick Honeycutt, who lost for the 10th time in 12 decisions after a 6-0 start. Bo Diaz delivered a run with a first-inning grounder, Jerry Dybzinski singled one across in the second and Hargrove hit the first of his two solo homers in the third.

After Seattle pulled to within 3-2, Monge came on with one out and runners on first and third in the seventh and eventually got out of a bases-loaded jam by striking out Bruce Bochte.

Hargrove homered again in the bottom of the seventh and the Indians' final three runs came on RBI singles by Ron Hassey, Alan Bannister and Toby Harrah.

Royals 9, Red Sox 8

George Brett homered, singled, hit two doubles and scored the winning run with two out in the ninth inning on an error to end a wild game that included 31 hits and seven errors. Brett doubled to start the ninth against Tom Burgmeier and, after Hal McRae was walked intentionally, went to third when John Wathan bounced into a double play. Amos Otis' grounder to Rick Burleson's left then caromed off the shortstop's glove.

The Red Sox, who blew a 6-1 lead, tied the game in the top of the ninth on a double by Dwight Evans and Jim Dwyer's pinch single after Dave Chalk's first home run of the season had given#Kansas City an 8-7 lead in the bottom of the eighth.

"That's the best one fans in Kansas City have seen in a long time," said Brett, who raised his average to .382. "Six-to-one — you're supposed to win one once in a while," sighed Boston Manager Don Zimmer.

Twins 3, Yankees 2

Rob Wilfong's tie-breaking two-run single with two out in the bottom of the eighth produced Minnesota's victory behind Geoff Zahn's 10-hit pitching. Wilfong's hit came off Luis Tiant, who had checked the Twins on three hits until Ron Jackson and Hosken Powell singled with one out in the eighth. After Roy Smalley bounced out, advancing the runners, Tiant intentionally walked Ken Landreaux, but Wilfong responded with a hit to right-center.

"When you're hitting .238, you've got to expect that," said

Borscht!

Just Another Friendly Olympic Sport

MOSCOW (AP) — The USSR's Valdemar Novitsky came to the bench, his nose gushing blood. Yugoslavia's Jovica Cvetkovic dropped to his knees, put both hands over his eyes and moaned in his native tongue, "I can't see. I can't see."

Drago Jovovic, a big, bearded Yugoslav, almost beheaded the Soviet's Sergei Kushniruk with a running hammerlock. Eugeny Chernysov of the USSR and Yugoslavia's Pavle Jurina collided with such violent force that both went sprawling on the floor. It took three men to carry a wincing, groaning Chernysov to the sidelines for medical treatment.

Goalie Nikolai Tomlin beat his fists on the Soviet bench and burst into tears. Five Russians clasped each other in a huddle embrace. Emotions on both sides ran the gamut.

What's this? Had American pro football come to Moscow? Was this the "Thrilla of Mockba" with a socialistic backdrop or just a Russian version of a rumble in the Bronx?

Nope.

It was just a friendly team handball match between friendly Communist nations and one of the 24 certified events of the 1980 Olympic program.

The Greeks must have had a word for it: "Borscht!"

It's a mixed bag. Its ancestry is questionable. Old Abner Doubleday, who invented baseball, wouldn't have any part of it. Neither would the fathers of soccer or hockey, whoever they may be. Yet the game has earmarks of all, with a few wrestling holds, boxing punches and a good old-fashioned barroom brawl tossed in for flavoring.

It's played on an indoor court a little larger than a basketball court with a ball smaller than a soccer ball and about the size of a bowling ball. There are six players to a side plus goalies in long underwear, whose only job is to guard a net 9 feet-9 by 6-feet-6 — not an easy task.

The defense sets up a human picket fence on a semi-circle just in front of the goal. The offense tries to move the ball in by dribbling it, running with it or throwing it until someone gets an open shot.

It's mad stuff, played at a very fast and intense pace. You can't kick the ball in or butt it in with the head — only with the hand, thus handball.

It's largely an East European sport, popular in the clubs and communes. Its basic nature is mayhem. It's apparently legal to poke somebody in the eyes, shove a fist in his face, butt, grab, tackle and push.

If a player grabbed the timer's gun and shot the referee, the penalty probably would be an out-of-bounds for the other side.

The Soviets won 22-17, but left the uninitiated wondering: How did this sport get in the Olympics?

If the International Olympic Committee should ever become enlightened and start whittling the fat and fooish out of its obese, over-stuffed child, it should start with this bizarre adaptation of handball.

But there are other sports that should be sheared, such as:

The 20-kilometer walk: about as interesting as a Sunday stroll down Kalininsky Prospect Avenue. Ties up traffic for miles and accelerates nobody's pulse.

Water polo: a street riot in 50-meter pool. Beneath the water's surface, anything goes. It's rough and unspectacular. The matches usually follow the end of a swimming program, when everybody gets up and walks out.

Shooting: if the Olympics are dedicated to peace and international goodwill, what do you need sharpshooters for? Let the soldiers have it.

Moscow: A Scenic Hodge-Podge

A Reporters Notebook

MOSCOW (AP) — There is one way to get around strict Soviet policemen.

Two American journalists, here to cover the Summer Olympics, tried to get into a cab that was stopped at a traffic light. This upset the corner policeman who gave chase, on foot, blowing his whistle furiously. Apparently, Moscow cabs are only supposed to take on passengers at designated stands.

The policeman got in front of the cab and there ensued a heated exchange, in Russian, between the cabby and the policeman before the driver made a futile attempt to maneuver the car up the curb and around the policeman.

Knowing that the Soviet police abhor being photographed, one of the journalists held her camera up as though to photograph the two men yelling at each other. Suddenly the argument stopped, the policeman returned the cabby's drivers license and left.

The cabby jumped into the car, chuckled, and sped away.

It is forbidden to give foreign currency to Muscovites. Therefore, "hard money" is a hot item on the black market.

While an Italian press technician was walking through an understreet passage, one Soviet citizen asked him several times, in English, "Change money? Change money?"

The technician said, "No, go away," several times.

But instead of giving up, the frustrated Soviet just changed his tactic.

"Change shoes? Change shoes?" he asked.

•

The Soviets are very particular about everyone having the proper creditials in order to get into, stay in or get out of certain areas.

A journalist at the rowing course saw a young man wearing the gold medal he had just won. Even so, security agents were pushing him out of the area because he didn't have the right kind of name tag.

•

There is a bus system that carries press personnel from the main press center to the Hotel Rossiya, and to the different venues.

For the most part it has operated efficiently, certainly without the hitches that plagued the same system at the Winter Olympics in Lake Placid, N.Y.

Late one night an American photo editor caught the bus that should have headed for the Hotel Rossiya. But the bus driver, who spoke only Russian, got lost.

The passengers, all foreigners, tried to help, but none spoke Russian. They did shout, applaud and cheer wildly, however, when the driver made what appeared to be a turn in the right direction. They also yelled in dismay when he took a wrong turn.

The driver asked three policemen for directions, but still he was lost. Thirty minutes later, the passengers demanded to be let off. They walked for another 30 mintues and finally managed to find their way to their home away from home.

•

Most journalists covering the Olympics are working long hours, and some carry food to the office.

One reporter, carrying a popular American-brand granola bar packaged in foil, was stopped as she entered the main press center.

Security officers wanted to know what was in the package. A blue-uniformed man gave it to a woman, who took it into another room and gave it to another uniformed man.

When the security agents asked the reporter to open the foil, the reporter refused, saying the granola bar would get stale. By this time there were several more security police in the room.

The reporter finally satisfied the security officers by breaking the granola bar inside the foil, without breaking the package open.

•

Obviously, many of the problems here, funny and otherwise, are due to the language barrier.

One British writer found himself outside the Moscow Dynamo Stadium with no press bus in sight. So he walked to a security guard to ask where he should go.

Suddenly the guard started jumping around and yelling something in Russian.

A little startled, the Britisher started yelling, "Press! Press!" After a few unitelligible statements by both parties, the security man pointed to the ground and gave the writer a little push — off the grass.

That done, the guard calmed down and proceded to point in the direction the reporter should go.

The moral: Keep off the grass, even in Moscow.

•

Another reporter, while walking on the grounds of the Hotel Rossiya, noticed a small red pyramid-shaped object. Curiously, she lifted the lightweight pyramid and found only a manhole cover and a bedroll.

Then she noticed that she was being watched by three policemen, so she left. The police marched slowly to the spot as she walked away. When the reporter looked back one more time, she saw the police lifting up the pyramid and talking excitedly.

The next day, the same reporter lifted the pyramid and there was the manhole, but no bedroll. Again she left, and again the policemen went to look under the pyramid.

Mazzetti Looking To Regain Touch

SUWANEE, GA. (AP) — Tim Mazzetti, reflecting on his fall from grace, longs to regain the feeling he had when his kicks made the difference in Atlanta Falcons games.

"I feel a lot older," said the 24-year-old National Football League placekicker, who is practicing this week at the Falcons' training camp northeast of Atlanta. "You get old real quick in this game."

Mazzetti, who hit 13 of 16 field goals and never missed an extra point in his first season with the Falcons in 1978, had a disappointing performance last year, hitting only 13 of 25 field goals and 31 of 37 extra points.

"My first year, I thought there was nothing to it, that I could kick with anyone," he said. "Now, I know how much experience means in this game."

Mazzetti is convinced that his poor performance, which lost several games in the final seconds, caused him to be blamed for the Falcons' 6-10 record.

"Last year it was Scapegoat City," Mazzetti said. "First I was trying to re-negotiate my contract. Then I started putting too much pressure on myself. And then there were the first four games."

The Falcons defeated New Orleans and Philadelphia in the first two. But in the two losses which followed, to Denver and Detroit, Mazzetti missed field goals in the final seconds.

The next week, against Green Bay, Mazzetti completed three field goals. His performance slipped against Oakland when he missed two field goals and two extra points. The season went downhill from then on.

"I was the eye of the hurricane," he said. "I was taking all of the blame. Something just snapped."

The Falcons have brought in four players this year to vie for Mazzetti's job. Hoppy Langley of Ole Miss has already been cut, but veteran Rich Szaro and rookies Jorge Portela of Auburn and William Adams of Texas Tech remain.

Former Rose Netter Wins Tennis Title

GOLDSBORO — Fred Matney, a former high school tennis star at Rose High School, won the Eastern North Carolina Closed Tennis Tournament in Goldsboro which ended yesterday.

Matney's victory his third straight in the last month. Three weeks ago, he won a tournament in Kinston, and last week captured another in Charleston, S.C. All three are USTA sanctioned events.

Matney's next venture will be in the State Tournament, which will be held in Chapel Hill starting August 11.

A 1978 graduate of Rose High School, Matney has been concentrating on his tennis game since graduation, playing in a number of tournaments in the southeast.

San Diego's Jones Ends Streak

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

Jerry Coleman plays a strange kind of numbers game — but for once the numbers added up to a win for Randy Jones.

"Jones was one-third of our offense and 108 percent of our defense," Coleman, the San Diego Manager, observed Tuesday night after the one-time ace of the Padres' staff ended a personal seven-game losing streak by scattering eight Chicago hits and beating the Cubs 3-1.

Jones, indeed, was one-third of the offense, getting one of San Diego's three hits. All three runs against Doug Capilla were unearned as the Cubs comitted four errors.

"When the season started, I had visions of a 20-win season," said Jones, the 1976 Cy Young Award winner who hasn't had a winning season since then.

"The impact of the seven losses in a row plus the injury (to a rib which sidelined him for a month) really hurt me," he added.

Jones, who struck out two batters and didn't walk any, zipped through the game in 1 hour, 59 minutes.

"I'm trying to work quicker now and be more aggressive," he explained. "If I work faster, I can get in a better groove. It's a mental rather than a physical thing. I want the ball as soon as I can get it."

In the second inning, Dave Winfield's single, a walk to Gene Tenace and an error by shortstop Ivan DeJesus loaded the bases. Two runs scored when second baseman Steve Dillard misplayed a liner by Tim Flannery.

In the fourth, the Padres loaded the bases on an error by third baseman Lenny Randle and two walks, and a run scored when Ozzie Smith was hit by a pitch.

The only run off Jones came in the seventh when Cliff Johnson hit the second of his three doubles and scored on Mike Vail's single.

Dodgers 10, Pirates 2

If Jones was vital to both the offense and defense of the Padres, Burt Hooton was even more instrumental in the success of the Dodgers.

He pitched a seven-hitter for his seventh straight win and drove in four runs, three with a homer, as Los Angeles battered the Pirates.

Eight of LA's hits went for extra bases, three of them by Ron Cey, who doubled twice and homered.

Hooton's first RBI came in the sixth inning on a squeeze bunt. And in the eighth, after Cey doubled and Steve Yeager was walked intentionally, Hooton hit his third career major league homer and first since 1975. "When you hit only three, of course it's a thrill," he said.

Phillies 9, Astros 6

"We came back, we've got to be proud," said Phillies Manager Dallas Green. "We could have cracked several times and we didn't."

Instead, Philadelphia pulled even with Houston in the seventh inning when Mike Schmidt cracked a two-run homer, then Lonnie Smith broke the tie with an eighth-inning single and Bake McBride added a two-run single. McBride had five singles and drove in three runs for the Phils.

Expos 4, Reds 1

Rookie Bill Gullickson muffled Cincinnati with a six-hitter, striking out 10 Reds for a team high this year and personal career high. "That's as fine a performance as w've had this year," said Expos Manager Dick Williams.

Warren Cromartie, Andre Dawson and Gary Carter had RBI singles for Montreal.

Mets 2, Braves 1

Doug Flynn, with a triple in the second inning, and Joel Youngblood, with a single in the sixth, gave the Mets their victory over Atlanta.

Mark Bomback was the winner. He needed relief from Neil Allen, who got his 17th save although he gave up Mike Lum's RBI single in the ninth.

Giants 4, Cardinals 1

Larry Herndon drove in three runs against his former team with a triple and a single and Jack Clark picked up his league-leading 15th game-winning RBI of the season as the Giants beat St. Louis.

Olympic Travelers

Americans Go, But Have No One To Cheer For

EDITOR'S NOTE: AP Writer Kiley Armstrong has just returned from Moscow with the first of the American tour groups to travel to the Olympics. In Part I of a three part series she recounts the general impressions of the Americans who didn't boycott.

By KILEY ARMSTRONG
AP Sports Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — It was a bittersweet time for Americans at the Moscow Olympic Games.

The travelers at one point thought their tours would be canceled after years of planning and payments. They were among the approximately 3,000 Americans — down from a pre-boycott 18,500 — who made it. But they had no one to cheer for.

"I went to a lot of boxing. Everybody else was cheering for the Russians," said Dr. Robert Neilson of Bluefield, W.Va. "We have the best boxers in the world, but I didn't have anybody to cheer for. So I yelled for the British."

Neilson and Tel Skidd of Cleveland were roommates in a group of 46 travelers that arrived in the Soviet Union two weeks before the opening ceremonies. They were told they were the first American tourists to visit the country since the U.S. decided to boycott the Games.

"Because I was traveling alone, I ended up sitting alone at the events. There were empty seats around me most of the time," said Skidd.

An English-speaking guide in Leningrad asked some Americans touring the Peter and Paul Fortress if they feared they would be punished for going to the Soviet Union during the boycott.

When they explained that their government could not prevent them from going, she shook her head in disbelief and called them "the bravest Americans."

The group was told by its Soviet Intourist guide that it would be inappropriate to show the American flag during the opening ceremonies. But a member of another tour group, Dan Patterson of Howard, Ohio, did unfurled the Stars and Stripes "to show that I am sympathizing that our athletes aren't here."

Some tourists, including Neilson, said people at home had chided them for ignoring the boycott. But for many, canceling the tour would have meant a financial loss.

"I would never want to seem unpatriotic. My country comes first. Before I went, I was a little apologetic about making the trip. But I'm glad we went," said Betty Martimick of Phoenix, Ariz.

The bureaucracy of Intourist, the government tourist agency, and of Soviet life in general was a source of irritation for some Americans.

On several occasions the tourists had their luggage picked up at 11 p.m., then were roused at 4:30 or 5 a.m., flown for several hours to the next city before getting breakfast, and herded onto a bus tour.

When they complained that they would prefer a few hours of sleep before the bus tour, the Intourist guide snapped: "You didn't come here to sleep."

Confusion also mounted as crowds of bellowing Americans gathered outside the hotel rooms of Russian Travel Bureau officials. Employees of the New York-based agency, which handled all American tours, hand-sorted Olympic event tickets in Moscow after a last-minute court order allowed the tours to proceed. Many tourists didn't get their ticket confirmation until they arrived, the day before the Games.

Most Soviet citizens did not see their athletes compete because event tickets were reserved for foreigners. Yet, tourists who wanted to change the events picked from hundreds of left-over tickets piled in the hotel rooms of American tour representatives.

"Those people (Soviets) knew we got tickets and food and privileges that they didn't get. They had to know. Yet they didn't show it. I was treated very warmly," said Skidd. "It bothered me to see people in our group picking at their food."

The preferential treatment was evident when the "militia" ordered Soviets to step to therear of the line at tourist attractions and on Aeroflot planes, which have no seat assignments or boarding passes.

Carolyn Shepherd of Peoria, Ill., went to a Moscow restaurant with a Soviet friend. "The maitre d' gave my friend the run-around, first with getting reservations and then getting seated. Finally, I said something in English and, like magic we were given a table and suddenly everyone was friendly."

"The guards, the security, it bothers him too," Shepherd said of her Soviet friend. "Everywhere you go, in every doorway and corner, we felt the presence of the militia."

Pat Miller of Flagstaff, Ariz., also noted "men in suits" watching the Americans at airports and standing outside one of Moscow's few active churches during Sunday services.

"The officials seemed to be afraid we would contaminate people. We even sat in a separate room in the airport," said Katie Quastler of San Diego.

Security — and even the residents — seemed more relaxed in Siberia and Central Asia.

Outside the officialdom there were some sparks of communication.

An American who had been ill in Alma Ata near the China border went to the "floor lady," one of the women charged with handling room keys when hotel guests leave and return.

Leading the visitor into her tiny room, the "floor lady" offered tea, used sign language to introduce her daughter, and pointed to English phrases she had been copying into a notebook.

Given a small book on New York City, the two women marveled at pictures of tall buildings. Pointing to a picture of the Statue of Liberty, the old woman smiled and said, "Nice."

In the marketplace of Tbilisi, Georgia, as Quastler attempted to bargain for some fruit, a teen-age girl stepped up, bought the fruit and handed it to her.

The girl said she had studied English for nine years and would like to write to Quastler, who speaks Russian.

Dorothy Ruschewski of Truth or Consequences, N.M., met a Soviet woman at the circus who "talked to me about her grandchildren. When you stop to think about it, we're very much alike."

Although the Intourist guide who traveled with the group constantly scolded Americans who were tardy, a local guide in Tbilisi, Georgia, frequently granted tourists' requests to stay longer.

Told she would be known as a "soft touch" in America, the guide replied, "How can I deny a person who wants to learn more about my country?"

was made while the game clock showed the wrong time.

Another desperation heave was missed; Italy was in and the Soviet Union was out for the second straight final. Yugoslavia lost to the United States in the gold medal game in 1976.

The Soviet Union, which has never lost a women's basketball game in Olympic competition, crushed Hungary 120-62 Tuesday and was to meet Bulgaria, 122-83 losers to the Soviets earlier in the tournament, in today's final.

Another dominating force in Olympic competition has been boxer Teofilo Stevenson, the two-time Olympic champion. The powerful Cuban heavyweight, with the right hand of steel, won his 10th fight in 10 Olympic appearances stretching over three Games. None of the fights has gone the the full three-round distance.

On Tuesday, he attacked a fleeing Grzegorz Skrzecz of Poland and stopped him at 2:12 of the third round.

The Soviets' abundant security measures and limited entertainment menu continued to be issues at the first Olympics behind the Iron Curtain.

The West German coach of Spain's silver medal field hockey team got into a scrape with Soviet police Tuesday. They were denying him access to the medal podium with his team even though, he said, he had a competitors' identification around his neck and a team jacket on.

Orioles 3, Rangers 2

Scott McGregor pitched eight shutout innings and Tippy Martinez put down a ninth-inning rally as Baltimore climbed to within 7½ games of the Yankees, the closest they have been since June 28. Pat Kelly singled home a run in the first inning, the Orioles added two more in the second on Rich Dauer's RBI single and a run-scoring passed ball and Gary Roenicke's eighth-inning homer made it 4-0.

McGregor blanked the Rangers until the ninth when Martinez retired pinch-hitter Richie Zisk on a fly ball with the potential tying run at second base after Pat Putnam barely missed a game-tying homer and had to settle for a double.

Brewers 7, White Sox 1

Ben Oglivie drilled three hits, including his 25th homer and a double, and drove in three runs and Cecil Cooper added a solo home run. Meanwhile, Moose Haas posted his fourth victory without a defeat against Chicago this season, allowing four hits in seven innings.

Chet Lemon's seventh homer gave the White Sox a 1-0 lead in the second inning but Cooper homered with one out in the fourth and, one out later, Oglivie connected off loser Richard Dotson. The Brewers wrapped it up with three runs in the eighth and two in the ninth.

Angels 7, Tigers 0

Bobby Grich drove in six runs with a pair of homers, one a grand slam, while Fred Martinez and Andy Hassler combined to pitch a four-hitter and hand Detroit its third consecutive setback. Grich hit a two-run shot in the second inning and belted his grand slam in the fifth. Carney Lansford homered for California's other run.

A's 6, Blue Jays 5

Rickey Henderson doubled with two out in the top of the 12th and scored the winning run on Dwayne Murphy's single. Bob Lacey picked up the victory with five innings of relief although he yielded a ninth-inning home run to Toronto's Barry Bonnell that sent the game into extra innings.

Olympic Athletes Bored

MOSCOW (AP) — Western athletes at the Olympic Village say the beds are comfortable and the training facilities are good, while the food has received mixed reviews.

They also say they are bored stiff.

At night they head from the residential compound to the disco at the cultural center. In the daytime, when not training or competing, they hang around the village's central courtyard, chatting and swapping souvenir pins.

One problem, the athletes say, is that the crowded disco closes at 11 p.m.

"This is the most boring place I've ever been," 20-year-old British swimmer Deborah Rudd said Thursday. "It's awful. We're really tearing our hair out. Thank God we're leaving. I would have left a week ago if I could."

She complained that the Moscow social whirl doesn't compare with what she experienced at the 1976 Games in Montreal. And that wasn't all. "Even the food here is boring. Every day its the same thing: A piece of beef."

Moscow isn't a city for spontaneous night life, and even if it was, the Olympic village is isolated from downtown. Instead of evenings in sidewalk cafes watching a fashion parade, the athletes stay in their dorms or dance in the disco for as long as they can.

The disco's early closing evidently sparked a minor food-throwing disturbance Monday. Atheletes wearing Australian, British and Brazilian team jackets were miffed and protested the dancing curfew with a messy march through a dining hall.

They left the disco shouting "Music, Music, Music." As they passed through the dining facility they began chanting "Russians out of Afghanistan."

The disturbance, witnesses said, quickly broke up with the arrival of several plainclothes security men.

The Soviet news agency Tass blamed the "unlawful demand" that the disco remain open a little longer on athletes from "Western countries who had some booze left."

Bernardo Rezende, a 20-year-old member of the Brazilian volleyball team, blamed the mess hall melee on boredom among the athletes who have few ways to let off steam.

"We don't have much choice," he said. "There's only the disco and the little room where you can listen to music. There's the cinema, but it's mostly in Russian."

Rezende, however, complained of more than boredom. "There's a lot of bad feeling here. There are too many police and they are just not polite. Every day we have some kind of little problem with them. Aside from the police, we have no contact with the Russians."

Mexican middle distance runner Enrique Aquino agreed.

Scores Dropping As Philly Classic Nears

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Professional golf scores appear to be getting lower and lower and lower. Why?

Some of the 156 golfers getting ready to tee off Thursday in the Philadelphia Golf Classic were asked if they could explain this unprecedented assault on par.

For example, in the last three weeks, the winning score on the PGA Tour has been 266. Last week's winner at Hartford, Conn., Howard Twitty, has been 45-under par in the last three tournaments.

Curtis Strange, with three Top 10 finishes in succession, has been 40 under. If you shot even par at any of these events you earned $1,748.80.

The 266 is the low for 72 holes for the 1980 season.

While most of the golfers, young and old, aren't surprised with the low scores, they don't expect the same result over the 6,687 yard, par-71 Whitemarsh Valley Country Club course this week. The consensus is that this course is a much tougher layout and won't yield to the scoring of the last three weeks.

There are 14 of this year's winners in the Philadelphia field, including Andy Beam, Jim Colbert, Ray Floyd, David Graham, John Mahaffey, Scott Simpson, and Scott Hoch.

Among those missing are Tom Watson, the British Open Champion, Jack Nicklaus and Lee Trevino.

The field, however, is considered formidable with 16 players of 25 who have earnings of $100,000 or more on hand.

Gary Koch, a former Walker Cup player who turned pro in 1975, says the perfect condition of the courses and good weather have been contributing factors to the low scores.

"It hasn't been the winning scores that have dropped so much, but the cut scores," Koch said. "Look at the last few weeks. If you don't shoot par or under you don't make the cut (after two rounds)."

Mark Hayes, who has won three times since joining the tour in 1973, noted that you just have to shoot sub par to make the cut.

"And if you're not playing good that's hard to do," Hayes said. "Heck, even par didn't make the cut at Hartford."

Old pro Dan Sikes said there are just more good players on the tour now than ever and that the courses are in good condition.

"We used to have 50 good players, now we have 100," Sikes observed. "The last four or five years everybody coming out is good."

John Cook, the youngster out of Ohio State in his first year on the tour, says the low scores are mostly due to the intense competition.

"The veterans are finding out the younger players can really play, and they have to shoot better to make the cut," Cook said.

Defending champion Lou Graham, who has been sidelined with an injury since June 22, is here, but doesn't think too highly of his chances of repeating.

ECU Recruits Star In All-Star Games

GREENBORO, N.C. (AP) — East center Bill Nealy scored six points at the start of the fourth period Tuesday night to lead his team to a 96-89 victory over the West in the 32nd annual East-West high school all-star basketball game.

The state's eastern high schools made a clean sweep by winning the girls' game, 95-76, with Lisa Fennell (bound for East Carolina) scoring a game-high 23 points.

Nealy scored the final point of the third period and the then ran off six straight in the fourth period as the East controlled the game in the final minutes.

Nealy and Frank Dickens shared scoring honors for the winners with 18 points apiece. Bill McNair, another ECU signee, and Kenny Willson threw in 15 each. John Toms led the attack for the West with 16 points. Harrison Finklea added 13 and Mel Melton threw in 12.

In the girls' game, the East broke the contest apart in the second half with a 56-34 surge after trailing at the half, 42-39.

Marcia Richardson added 16 points for the winners and Regina Miller tossed in 12. The West got 19 points out of Cissy Little and 12 from Angie Benfield.

Pirate Firms Are Taking The Pay Out Of Pay-TV

By TERRANCE W. McGARRY

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The ads make no crossbones about it. "Pirate TV" is the name and taking the "pay" out of pay TV is the game.

"Enjoy home entertainment without those monthly service charges," read the newspaper advertisements, decorated with a portrait of a grim buccaneer, in eyepatch and bandanna headdress.

What Pirate TV offers is equipment to receive pay TV signals, which usually carry feature movies and special sports events, without the broadcaster's knowledge — much less paying the company for it.

Pay TV broadcasters are expressing their unhappiness over this turn of events by filing lawsuits, but the pirate business is booming, say John Sampson and MacKenzie Davis.

Most subscription TV companies broadcast on a microwave frequency "that our antenna just happens to receive," noted Sampson, who calls the dispute a matter of freedom of the airwaves that cuts both ways.

"They're sending those waves right through all of our bodies and homes, right through our eyes, though we can't see them without the right equipment.

"If they're free to broadcast those things right through us, we should be free to do what we like with them while they're passing through."

"That's like saying it's legal for a burglar to break into my house if I can't protect myself," says Cahill, a vice president of ON-TV of Los Angeles.

"I was administrative assistant to three chairmen of the FCC, I helped write the subscription TV regulation and I know what they're doing is illegal.

"We have over $40 million invested in this, and these pirates think they can steal our product and get a free ride. What they're doing is illegal and it's immoral and we'll pursue them down every legal avenue, in every community they appear in, until we drive them out of business.

"We believe the federal government will enter the picture and they will be prosecuted, and the people who buy these devices will be the losers."

Meanwhile, Pirate Electronics has grown in two years from a garage workshop to a $900,000-a-year business with 15 employees and a factory on the east side of Phoenix.

"Business is very, very good," said Davis, who also has offices in New Orleans and Florida and sells equipment elsewhere too. He has a three week backlog of orders for the antennas and converters, "which anyone can install themselves."

The equipments costs about $400 — a one time cost against the pay TV expense of an installation charge plus a monthly fee of $15 to $40.

"There's some 100 cities where this (microwave) system is in use and maybe I'll give it a go in all of them. If I'm going to get sued for selling antennas, I might as well get sued for selling a million of them."

Davis is not being sued. "But there's lots of lawsuits, against about 12 other guys here in L.A. alone, and I think everybody's just waiting to see what the judge's ruling is..."

Sampson's manufacturing company is currently involved in four suits, in California, Oklahoma, Florida and Arizona. He credits a court action with giving the company its buccaneer trademark.

"We were in court in Phoenix a year and a half ago when one of our people remarked that 'Everybody keeps calling us pirates, so we ought to name this company Pirate Electronics.'

"The name is almost as big an asset now as the good antenna we make. I have a dozen pirate t-shirts in my wardrobe."

Sampson and Davis maintain that the federal law cited by the pay-TV firms prohibits only wiretapping, not monitoring broadcast signals, and they religiously abstain from aiding those who would tap the line of a cable TV company.

"That cable is sacred," said Sampson. "Those cable companies put a lot of money and work into stringing those lines and it would be wrong to interfere with their use of their own property."

Both argue that by offering competition to the pay TV companies, they are "performing a public service by preventing establishment of a monopoly." The broadcasters will always have a large market among those who would rather make low monthly payments than buy the equipment outright for a higher price, they maintain.

"We've met with the Federal Communications Commission and the Justice Department in Washington and they don't have any interest in us," Sampson said. "If we're doing anything wrong, it's not wrong enough for them to bother with us."

Eventually, Davis said, "the FCC or the Supreme Court better sit down and clarify this, but as long as the ambiguity lasts, I'm going to capitalize on it."

A major problem, they complained, is with other dealers who set up shop "as Pirate something or other" and market shoddy equipment, damaging their reputation.

They wish those guys would stop pirating the pirate name.

A word about the Gatorade® shortage.

If you can't find this...

In many areas of the country, there simply aren't enough bottles of Gatorade® thirst quencher to meet the unprecedented demand.

We are working round the clock to try to keep up. We know how much it means to you, especially in weather like we've been having this year.

Here's a suggestion: Instant Gatorade powder mix, in pouches and canisters, is available in greater quantity. It's the same as the liquid except you add the water. (Instant Gatorade is the Gatorade that professional athletes use, as a matter of fact.) It's also an economical, practical way to make sure you have enough Gatorade on hand.

So while we're working to catch up, try Instant Gatorade. It, too, gives your body what it's thirsty for.

Filly Is Among Top Achievers

NEW YORK (AP) — Genuine Risk, the filly that won this year's Kentucky Derby with 13-1 odds against her, has galloped into another winner's circle — Harper's Bazaar's top seven 1980 women achievers.

No, the magazine wasn't horsing around. It said the filly's name reminded women of what is required by the best — willingness to chance the odds.

The other six winners were Carol Bellamy, New York City's council president; Sarah Caldwell, conductor of the Boston Opera; Shirley Hufstedler, secretary of the U.S. Department of Education; choreographer Twyla Tharp; columnist Jane Bryant Quinn; and WNBC-TV anchor Sue Simmons.

Cite Kids' Health Risks

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — According to the recently issued report prepared by U.N. Environment Program, 350 million of the world's 1.5 billion children lack the basic needs of food and shelter.

In industrial countries, UNEP says, there is an average of 15 deaths per 1,000 live births. In poorer African and Asian nations, many infants, weakened by malnutrition, die from preventable diseases.

The worst killer is filthy water, with which a long list of diseases like cholera, typhoid and typhus are associated. A standpipe in a slum or a concrete lip on a village well are just two ways of improving a child's chance of survival, the report says.

Children are the section of society most vulnerable to a contaminated environment, UNEP points out. Pesticides used to grow crops can contaminate human milk. In cities, children are at risk from pollution in the form of smoke, sulphur oxides and lead from car exhausts.

Equally damaging to the child, the report adds, is the lack of education. Although enrollment in primary schools doubled in developing countries between 1960 and 1975, about one-third of their 6-11 year olds don't even start school. In some of the poorer countries the children living in the countryside grow up unable to read or write.

Media Lawyers Seek Quash Abscam Quizzing

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Attorneys for The New York Times and NBC-TV have asked a federal judge to quash subpoenas of their reporters, whom the defense seeks to question on the source of their Abscam stories.

U.S. District Judge John P. Fullam said Tuesday he would rule on the motions after the government decides whethet to disclose the "Blumenthal Report," an investigation of Abscam news leaks made by Deputy Attorney General Richard Blumenthal.

The reporters subpoenaed are Leslie Maitland of the Times and Brian Ross of NBC, both of whom disclosed details of the Abscam scheme in news stories, including portions of a secret prosecution memorandum on the operation.

Subpoenas also were issued for Anthony Marro, manager of Newsday's Washington bureau, and William Small, president of NBC News.

Fullam said he had been given a copy of the Justice Department's "Blumenthal Report" and had read it.

"It still remains secret because the government has not yet decided whether the report should be kept from public view under executive order," Fullam said.

Attorneys for a Philadelphia lawyer and three city councilmen are seeking in pretrial hearings to have Abscam indictments against the four dismissed. They contend that prosecutorial misconduct and leaks of information to reporters on Feb. 2, prior to the indictments, have made it impossible for the four to receive a fair trial.

Richard Ben-Veniste, a former Watergate prosecutor now defending lawyer Howard Criden, demanded that the report prepared by Blumenthal be made available immediately to the defense.

Blumenthal reportedly interviewed all government officials involved in the investigation, including FBI agents, informants and lawyers, in order to pinpoint the source of news leaks about the corruption investigation.

Ben-Veniste said the purpose of questioning the reporters "is in no way to chill the press, but to protect the concept of a fair trial, and we must know the identity of the leaker."

In addition to Criden, the pretrial proceedings here concern the cases of City Councilmen George Schwartz, Louis Johanson and Harry Jannotti. Charged with conspiracy, racketeering and attempted extortion, the four are accused of accepting a total of $65,000 for their help in the construction of a downtown hotel by an Arab sheik.

Cars Damaged In Collision

An estimated $5,500 property damage resulted from a Monday afternoon collision at the intersection of Memorial Drive and Fairlane Road, according to Greenville police.

Officers reported cars driven by Wayne Robinson Bland of Wrightsville Beach and Sandra Harris Adams of Route 2, Greenville, were involved in the 2:05 p.m. mishap.

Damage was estimated at $4,000 to the Bland car and $1,500 to the Adams vehicle.

Avers State Neglected Racial Role

WASHINGTON (AP) — North Carolina's Legislature and its university should have worked more closely together years ago in trying to work out a desegregation plan for the system's 16 campuses, a former federal civil rights official said Tuesday.

Solomon Arbeiter, who was director of the U.S. Office of Civil Rights' higher education program in the late 1960s, testified at a hearing on an attempt by the government to cut off nearly $90 million in federal education funds for the University of North Carolina.

Arbeiter said it would cost the state $60 million to $100 million a year for the next 10 years to desegregate the university. He also said a plan developed by UNC would not desegregate the system successfully.

Arbieter is now planning officer with College Boards, the New York organization that produces college entrance exams.

Arbeiter said UNC's plan, which was rejected by the government in 1977, "does not sufficiently involve the governor and the Legislature — the bodies responsible for de jure segregation."

He said their involvement was necessary because any effective desegregation would be costly and would require major new staate appropriations.

Arbeiter said his estimate of the cost of desegregating UNC was based on an eight-point plan he had developed. His plan includes more active recruitment of black students and faculty, open admissions of all black high school graduates and placement of "all or virtually all" new academic programs at black colleges.

He also said that program duplication between predominantly white and black campuses should be eliminated so students could choose a school for its academic offerings rather than its racial identity.

Would Super Export Firms Counter Imbalance?

BY LEROY POPE
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — A bill to permit establishment of American export trading companies to rival Japan's huge Mitsubishi and Mitsui combines is being pushed in Congress by a group of senators led by Adlai E. Stevenson (D-Ill.).

The group has obtained support of the Commerce and Justice departments for the necessary exemptions from antitrust laws that would permit such combines to represent thousands of small American manufacturers.

This is an idea that goes back many years. The Webb-Pomerene Law, enacted in 1918, sought to create such export trading companies but it is vaguely worded and has been little used. It is administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

The Stevenson Bill, on which several hearings have been held, would put both administration and antitrust regulation of the companies under the Commerce Department. The bill also would permit commercial banks to have interests in export trading companies, as could state and city governments.

The potential significance the export trading company movement is underlined by those pessimistic predictions being heard that American free enterprise economics cannot survive in competition with Marxist economics — or even with the capitalist systems that are tightly controlled such as Japan's.

A big reason for these dire forecasts is that the Marxists and nations like Japan are taking over so much of the world's international trade. Sen. Henry J. Heinz of Pennsylvania, a co-sponsor of the Stevenson bill, notes that the United States' cumulative foreign trade deficit for the past three years is a staggering 90 billion.

Oil imports are responsible for much of that, but American exports of consumer and industrial goods also have failed to keep up with the growth of world demand.

The Russians and some of the underdeveloped nations also have taken over an increasingly big share of ocean shipping.

The Soviet bloc countries are able to make these big gains at the expense of the West even though their technology still lags far behind that of the free enterprise world.

Why?

The chief answer lies in the vast difference between Marxist and western concepts of profitability. There is a similar difference between American ideas of profit and those of the Japanese.

In the United States and many other western countries, profit is just something quantified at "the bottom line" of a financial statement. If the bottom line margin is not high for a company or an industry, it's an unattractive business even though it is necessary, as food production and distribution are necessary.

The Marxist nations have a different concept of profitability. To the Russians, social utility and, above all, the strategic political opportunities of business activity count for far more than bottom line financial gain. Westerners have noticed that the Russians have an excellent knowledge of capitalist economics and when they choose to compete with western business on capitalist terms, they do so with great success.

More often, though, their trading is not concerned with profit in the western sense. All their trading and production activities are government directed and are backed by massive government funding and unlimited government-provided manpower.

To a lesser, but distinct, degree, Japanese and west European business operates similarly on considerations of long-term strategic national advantage rather than short-term gain. Business in those countries, particularly foreign trade, is a tightly knit partnership between government, industry and the financial institutions. The big Japanese trading companies are the ultra examples of such partnerships.

The sponsors of the Stevenson bill feel that the United States' position in the world has been eroded dangerously by its inability to continue to compete adequately with the Marxist and the Japanese and west German systems. Stevenson told the Senate committee on banking the purpose of the bill is "to encourage the provision of export trading services to tens of thousands of American producers not currently realizing their export potential."

He said many American companies and small farm co-operatives fail to export even though their products are competitively priced and are competitive in quality. They don't export because foreign trade is too complicated and unfamiliar and requires specialized expertise and much time-consuming work.

Under the present system, in order to export, a small firm must deal with a baffling number of freight forwarders, brokers, insurance companies, shipping companies lawyers, advertising firms, foreign customs brokers, banks and foreign purchasing agents.

The export trading companies to be created under the Stevenson bill would put all these difficult steps under one roof and one telephone number and do them all for the small manufacturer. The trading company would assume most of the risks, too.

Stevenson said the export trading companies created so far under the Webb-Pomerene law specialize in certain commodities and raw materials and do little to expand overall U.S. trade. He said there are a host of restrictions under present laws on banks, exporters and others that the new bill seeks to remove or modify.

The Stevenson bill would give the Export-Import Bank the right to guarantee loans by commercial banks in order to increase the financial leverage of existing American export trading companies and to encourage new companies to enter the business. The Eximbank loan guaranties also would be available to direct exporters. Initially, there would be ceiling of 1 million in guaranties to one company in one year for general exports.

Senator Heinz said the trouble with present American export policies is epitomized in the famous remark of the cartoon character Pogo the 'possum — "We have met the enemy and he is us." Heinz said that all through this century, the U.S. government has been busy creating barriers and impediments to exports for one reason or another.

Meanwhile, the Soviet Union's Ekonomicheskaya Gazeta reports that Russia's foreign trade grew by 14 percent last year to 123 billion and that its trade with the West increased by four percentage points to 32 percent of the total. The Soviet trade deficit with the West was slashed to 1 billion from more than 3 billion in 1978. This was accomplished in spite of the fact that, according to the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, the overall economic growth rate for Eastern Europe, including Russia, fell to about 2.4 percent, virtually no growth in real terms.

A hard winter, transportation breakdowns and the difficulty of the cumbersome communist bureaucracy in reacting quickly to changing conditions were blamed for the slowdown in an editorial in World Business Weekly, a periodicial put out by the Financial Times of London.

But meanwhile, American companies also are having new difficulties in exporting. The stronger dollar is one trouble, it makes American goods cost more abroad, and the Export-Import Bank, which was very agressive with loan guaranties last year, has been having budget trouble this year. Also some of America's main trading partners are less able to buy this year.

Expect Power Shortage In Northwest

By B. J. McFARLAND

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Reddy Kilowatt, an animated cartoon character that once extolled the abundancy of cheap hydroelectric power in the Pacific Northwest, has taken a greater fall than Humpty Dumpty.

Thus far, not all the nation's horses and men can put it together again. Until they do in the Congress or through technology, Reddy Kilowatt never again will be quite so ever ready.

The days of abundance are gone, like cheap gasoline from Texas, which once upon a time could run all the nation's automotive vehicles, and cheaply. Demand simply has outstripped supply. The nation's chief substitute for hydro power — nuclear powered generators — has created a national debate on safety, fed by a residue of fear from the Three Mile Island accident in Pennsylvania.

The region's nuclear and alternate fuel efforts to augment hydro power are in "shambles," says Sterling Munro, administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration. BPA administers distribution and use of the federal power supply in the region.

"Conservation and rapid development of renewable resources are the main hope for reducing — but not eliminating — the big power shortages predicted for the Pacific Northwest in this decade of the 1980s," says Munro. A bill in Congress would seek to accomplish this, but at the cost of increased government controls.

"If we all don't join in a concerted new effort, each of us doing everything within our power to do, our region is headed for the damnedest power shortages over the next 10 years that it has ever seen," Munro says.

The Northwest, says Munro, could be short by as much as the power needs of two Seattles (2,000 megawatts) in the coming water year and by as much as the needs of four Seattles (4,000 megawatts) in the latter half of the decade. The greater metropolitan area of Seattle contains upward of 2-million people, and is the Northwest's largest city.

"If streamflows, which feed the rivers that power the dams, are better," says Munro, "the shortages will be less severe. Average streamflows would alleviate but not eliminate all the threatened shortages. There are some years in the latter half of the '80s when even a recurrence of the highest and best streamflows we ever had in this region would not entirely eliminate the dangers of shortages.

"And streamflow statistics, based on past runoff figures, indicate the mid-80s could be critical, especially if the region gets a drought."

Should region-wide curtailment become necessary, it would be implemented in accordance with plans adopted by individual states, based on recommendations of a task force appointed by Northwest governors in 1977, which may have to be updated.

A BPA study of the economic impacts of Northwest power deficiencies indicates it would take a power shortage of 6,650 megawatts, or more than six times the power requirements of a city the size of Seattle, to shut down all six of the region's biggest industries with a loss of half a million jobs. "The industries looked at in the study included aluminum, pulp and paper, agriculture, chemicals, lumber and wood, and food processing," says Munro. "And those six industries happen to use two-thirds of the industrial power consumed in the region."

He adds that it would take a regional deficit of only 176 megawatts to close down the region's entire food processing industry, 404 megawatts to shut down the lumber and wood industry, 441 megawatts to close the chemicals industry, 940 megawatts to stop the irrigated crops industry, 1,030 megawatts of regional shortages to close down the pulp and paper industry.

As for the region's largest industry, aluminum, which has a great appetite for electricity to exist, it would take 3,654 average megawatts all directed at that single industry to close it down, said Munro.

These statistics brought on introduction of a regional power bill, after hearings to gather information from public and private power users on how to amalgamate their needs for energy in the region, as well as provisions for meeting those needs.

The bill was offered by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., in the Senate where it passed. It is a different story in the house, where there is opposition, chiefly from from Reps. Jim Weaver, D-Ore., and Bob Carr, D-Mich.

Weaver, in his attack on the bill, said he didn't like the "guaranteed purchase" clause which would allow BPA to underwrite construction costs of nuclear and coal-fired generating plants, whether or not they ever produce electricity. He also was critical of the bill's provisions to end the preference clause in current law guaranteeing that cheap hydro electric power from BPA goes first to publicly-owned utilities.

The legislation would rewrite the electricity rate schedule for the region, set up a planning process to meet the northwest's future energy needs and make BPA the area's central agency for energy conservation and planning.

Weaver and supporters of his efforts to kill the bill, including the Water and Electric Board, a public utility in Eugene, Oregon's second largest city, as well as 19 state legislators, say the bill would give broad powers to the BPA administrator and regional planning under direction of the federal department of energy.

PAUSE FOR TAPE — Randy Millirons, from Dell City, Okla., pauses to tape the paws of his dog Rocky during competition in a catch and fetch contest in Dallas. The artificial turf became so hot that some dogs refused to compete. The tape was tried on their paws, but would not work; so the contest was moved to a grass surface. 'Pogo Campaign' Warms Up For Presidential Vote

BY MARK FRANKEL

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Name a well-known Georgian who this past winter and spring spent his time wooing voters. He has loads of hair, a big smile, pious blue eyes and a prehensile tail.

Yep, a prehensile tail.

The answer is Pogo, neither Democrat nor Republican but possum — genus Dedelphidai — and most famous cartoon resident of the Okefenokee Swamp. And, since January, presidential non-hopeful.

Rest assured, however, that Pogo is not the Marsupial Candidate.

"He is the reluctant candidate," says Kerry Stowell, his campaign director. "He still wants to go fishing."

A veteran of presidential campaigns in 1952 and 1956, Pogo has his eyes not on the White House this time but on nearly 11 million first-time voters and 28 million Americans aged 18 to 24 who Stowell and the non-partisan "I Go Pogo" campaign hope to convince to participate in the coming election.

The campaign originally started as promotion for an animated film, I Go Pogo, based on the late Walt Kelly's comic creation that ran in newspapers from World War II days until two years after Kelly's death in 1973.

Stowell and her partner in Stomar Enterprises, Marc Chinoy, worked a year and a half on the film after buying the rights to Pogo and the other Okefenokee denizens from Kelly's widow, Selby.

Starting with $700 from Stomar Enterprises, Ms. Stowall mailed a newsletter to 200 colleges across the nation. The response, she said, was "overwhelming," enough for volunteer campaign managers in 48 states to begin laying the foundation for what she hopes will be registration drives on "Pogo Days" this summer and autumn, beginning in Florida, California and Ohio.

Also planned is an effort with the National Association of High School Principals directed at those turning 18 and "hitting beaches, summer schools," where young people gather.

Good news for the possum's camp came recently in the shape of a Federal Elections Commission ruling that non-partisan voter registration programs such as I Go Pogo could accept corporate contributions.

Previously, company contributions for similar efforts were classed as illegal political contributions.

The $10-15,000 spent so far has come primarily from the sale of buttons, posters, tee-shirts and other assorted flotsam and jetsam that are the debris of any presidential race.

Requests sent to the Georgetown headquarters have come addressed to "campaign managers" Albert T. Alligator and the bearish P.T. Bridgeport. A Voice of America interview with Stowell and Chinoy brought letters from five continents, she said, and there are even reports of secret I Go Pogo buttons behind the Iron Curtain.

There are undercover Pogo admirers closer to home, too.

At a White House affair she attended, she says, "Secret Service men continually asked for Pogo buttons."

Both the Carter and Kennedy camps sought the possum's support after his non-announcement in January. They were afraid, said Stowell, "that Pogo would take votes away from them."

"When I assured them we were only interested in voter registration, they were relieved, but still not sure."

"We don't want to be in the position of swaying anyone," she said. As a result, she has refused to answer such questions as "What does Pogo think of the Ayatollah?"

"The bottom line is, how could a possum be partisan?" retorts Stowell.

She did not rule out, however, the president or the senator throwing their support to Pogo.

"We felt that would be a very American thing to do," she said.

"He's soft, lovable, kind and decent."

KERRY STOWELL is the presidential campaign director for Pogo, a veteran of similar campaigns in 1952 and 1956. Pogo has his eyes not on the White House this time but on nearly 11 million first-time voters he hopes to convince to participate in the coming election. (UPI Photo)

The Vegetable Ice Cream Is Local Legend

By LLOYD G. CARTER

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — In Ted and Lydia Hansen's ice cream shop, nestled in a quiet neighborhood just a few blocks from the Pacific Ocean, you can get an ice cream cone that tastes like a rose smells.

"Here, try this," says Ted, his baseball cap slightly askew from scurrying around. He hands me a miniature-size cone with a small scoop of ice cream.

It's true. It does taste like a rose smells. I lean over to smell the ice cream. There is no odor. He laughs.

"I told you. It tastes like a rose smells. Here. Try this."

This one is green, with little bits of something in it. It's good. Ted hands me a card. This ice cream, it says, contains 14 different types of vegetables. I start to pick out the flavors in it. Celery. Tomatoes. Carrots. Zucchini. Spinach. Spinach? I hate spinach.

"The kids all love it 'til they find out what's in it," he laughs. "The parents love me when they find out."

Ted and Lydia, whom everyone calls "Lee," have run Polly Ann's Ice Cream for 14 years. With a combination of hard work, cheerfulness and humor they have created a local legend whose fame has spread to all parts of the world.

Where else are you guaranteed a doggie cone for your pet, even if it's an otter or a snake? Where else can you get five different kinds of whiskey-flavored ice cream?

Children have to say "please" or "thank you" or they don't get served.

Kids unruly enough to spout an obscenity get blasted with a squirt gun wielded by dead-eye Lee, who countenances no profanity.

Foreign tourists are treated with respect.

The shop itself has just enough room between the counter and the wall to wedge a Little League team. The wall behind the counter is covered with decorated placards containing the names of currently available flavors. About 50.

On the other wall hangs a large 1874 photograph of San Francisco's baseball team. Ted's great-grandfather, sprouting great mutton-chops, is in the second row.

Over the years, Lee and Ted have cooked up 277 flavors, ranging from Greek ouzo to black vanilla.

"The kids ask me why the vanilla's black," Ted says. "I tell them I put black shoe polish in it."

A city bus driver halts outside, his bus idling, passengers gazing out the window. He rushes in and orders a chocolate shake. Ted whips it up and he's gone again.

Ted, 58, and Lee, 57, have been happily married for 38 years. When he quit his machinist job, they decided to open a business that everybody liked. They chose ice cream and bought Polly Ann's. It had only eight flavors at the time.

The place is always packed. Kids getting free samples. Lee or one of the young helpers trying to fill the orders. Ted in the back, mixing up some new concoction or rushing out front to say "hello" and offer homespun advice.

"I tell people, whatever your job, just make sure you like it," says Ted. "If you like your job, you can work 20 hours a day. If you don't, nothing goes right."

Lee loves the children. She jokes that their four grandchildren were all allergic to ice cream but now can eat it.

It's an American success story. And Ted and Lee believe they know how to keep it that way.

"To be honest with you, they want us to franchise. I've had chances to expand and I don't want to," Ted said. "We've talked it over but we're a small shop and we know many of our customers and we won't cut our product no matter what happens.

"The minute you expand you lose something. I don't know what it is but you lose something. You lose contact with your customers. The customers are always coming in asking for me or Lee and if we were off somewhere else it just wouldn't be right."

Ted's next project is an ice cream flavor for every country in the world, with a tiny paper flag from the appropriate country stuck on top.

"It'll give the kids a chance to learn about the flags of other countries," he beams, offering me a taste of Bumpy Freeway.

"What's Bumpy Freeway?" I ask.

"Don't you know?" he chided. "Rocky Road."

Disparity In Ministers' Pay

NEW YORK (AP) — A study finds that salaries of female ministers in United Church of Christ congregations increased less than half as much of those of male counterparts from 1976 to 1979.

The average salary increase in that period for female ministers was 8.6 percent and for male ministers, 20.7 percent. Average salary for female clergy was $10,724 annually and for male clergy, $15,479.

Found Skeletons In German Sub

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — A Union County man says he and five other civilians diving in the Atlantic in 1957 found the remains of seven German sailors aboard a U-boat sunk during World War II.

Roy Yow, now a railroad worker, said only "skeletons and uniforms" were left after 15 years in the watery grave southeast of Beaufort.

Yow said the sailors were found aboard the submarine U-352, which has been the subject of an extensive study in recent weeks by the Navy. The Navy reported a few weeks ago that armed torpedoes remained in the sub.

Navy Petty Officer 1s Class Jerry Minser said Tuesday 11 sailors were belived aboard the submarine when it was sunk in 1942.

"While we were diving on it this particular time, we did not find bodies; that was not the intention of this survey," Minser said.

In Washington Bernard Cavalcante of the Navy Operations Archives Branch said Navy-initiated and private sport expeditions have visited the site of the sub several times, starting with one on May 16, 1942.

Yow said he and his friends retrieved the remains of the sailors, filed a report with the Navy and had the bodies shipped to Germany.

Yow said he and the diving party studied the submarine for about two hours.

"It was like a huge pipe, with a few openings and looked like it had two or three inches of asphalt sprayed on it from the barnacles," he said.

"Looking at that thing you can see the sterm plainly, with bronze propellers that must have been almost six feet across. I remember the deck seemed made of wood or aluminum."

He said the bridge radar and radio antenna were still attached to the conning tower, and the hatch was open.

He described the experience as "something like going to a sale. You know, like you have a special suit you wanted for $250 and then you find it for $125."

U.S. Steel Earnings Sag

PITTSBURGH (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steel maker, says the sagging economy pulled its second-quarter earnings down nearly 26 percent from the same period in 1979.

The dip in earnings follows similar announcements by other producers, including National Steel, Inland Steel, Republic Steel and Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel. All blamed the economic slowdown.

U.S. Steel said Tuesday it earned $111.5 million, or $1.28 a share, on sales of $3.1 billion in the latest quarter. During that period last year, the company said it earned $150.4 million, or $1.75 a share, on sales of $3.6 billion.

Company Chairman David Roderick said steel shipments for the half-year were down by 24 percent compared with that period in 1979.

Despite the drop in earnings and the adverse effect of lower volumes, he said all segments of the industry reported second-quarter operating profits.

But "without the substantial improvements realized from programs initiated last year, steel manufacturing would have been unprofitable," he said.

Roderick was referring to U.S. Steel's retrenchment that closed more than a dozen facilities with a loss of about 13,000 jobs late last year.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♡.

Alexander Pope must have been a whist player. Could "a little learning is a dangerous thing" have originated anywhere other than over the green baize?

The bidding was orthodox. When North learned via his Stayman inquiry that his partner did not have a four-card major suit, he jumped to game in no trump.

West led the top of his heart sequence. Declarer could count eight tricks, and the logical place to look for another trick was in clubs. So declarer won the heart in dummy and led a club to the ten. That was the correct way to play for three club tricks if you judge that East is likely to have no more than two clubs. West won the queen of clubs and persevered with hearts. When West showed out on the second club, correctly discarding a spade, declarer could come to no more than eight tricks.

Declarer's play is demonstrably wrong on several counts. First, since West presumably had led from his longest suit, East rated to have more clubs. Therefore, if declarer needed three tricks from the club suit, the correct play is to lead low to the jack first.

More important, however, is the fact that declarer needed only two club tricks. With this combination, the proper play to insure two tricks from the suit is to lay down the ace first. If the clubs are divided 3-2, a long club will develop by simply continuing the suit. But even if the clubs are 4-1 or 5-0, declarer will always be able to get two tricks.

Assume that West started with four clubs to the K-Q. Declarer continues with a club and West must win the queen. Another lead forces out the king, and the fourth club is good.

If East has four clubs, West will show out on the second lead. Dummy's jack forces an honor, and declarer gets back to dummy to lead another club toward his ten, again insuring a second trick in the suit.

Toddler Seen A Scene-Stealer

FREMONT, Neb. (AP) — With the help of a crooked smile and some good connections, 16-month-old Wesley Ivan Hurt may become the year's biggest little movie star.

The toddler, grandson of director Robert Altman and son of writer John Hurt of Fremont, steals scenes from the likes of Robin Williams and Shelley Duvall in Altman's latest film, "Popeye." Wesley plays Swee'pea, the "orphink" left abandoned to the maritime cartoon hero.

"He was terrific," said proud mother Christine Hurt. "He followed everyone who was talking. He didn't stare into the camera. He acted completely natural.

"He was the only one who didn't give my dad any trouble," she said of the filming in Malta.

Cause Not Determined, But Networks See A Dip

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Something is making scary noises outside the networks' door. ABC, CBS and NBC are telling themselves it's not the dreaded boogeyman, pay-TV.

Not yet, anyway.

For some reason, not yet ascertained by the networks' research departments, the share of television viewers garnered by the three networks dropped in the last television season.

In the second week of June, the three networks' combined share of the TV audience was down 5 percent from the same period last year. The networks' combined rating for the whole season was down 1 percent, a figure that translates into hundreds of thousands of viewers.

The obvious implication is that people are watching pay-TV; subscription and cable television operators continue to do big business, and it would seem safe to assume that viewers use what they are paying for.

Yet, Al Ordover, a research executive at NBC, says he's not so sure:

"My personal opinion is that it's not pay-TV. Everything is a factor, all the little pieces in the puzzle are factors — independents, baseball, a number of things."

(Indeed, baseball seems to be a big attraction on the independent stations this summer: a Yankees-Red Sox game last month drew one-fourth of New York's television audience.)

"The share the three networks are getting does look off from prior years," says CBS' research executive, Arnold Becker. "People are saying it's pay cable that's doing it. I just don't think it's happened yet ... my hunch is we're going to find that it's the independent stations that are doing it."

Still, more than one-in-five U.S. households are hooked up to cable TV, and more than a third of those subscribe to some pay-TV entertainment service, such as Home Box Office.

Last February, when HBO premiered "Saturday Night Fever," network usage among HBO households was down 44 percent from the national average.

"But there aren't that many pay cable subscribers to start with," says Becker, "and there's not much pay cable programming to watch even for an ardent pay cable watcher. If a whole lot of people watch some spectacular movie on pay television, but it is only on for two hours, it doesn't make a lot of difference to this mass audience we are talking about."

If it is the independents that are draining off the networks' share, as the networks seemed inclined to believe, the loss is more easily shrugged off as a quirk. Independents are a known challenge.

"Our prediction," says NBC's Ordover, "is that, come next fall, there won't be any fall off ... but that doesn't mean we're ignoring it. We wouldn't be looking into it as much as we are if it didn't concern us."

Plan Filming A History Of War

BOSTON (AP) — One of the most ambitious projects ever undertaken by American public television, a 13-part history of the Vietnam War, may have to be cut back because neither government nor business wants to finance the effort, a Boston public television station says.

The biggest blow came last week when the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the official funding agency for public TV, turned down WGBH-TV's request for $1 million. Program Manager Peter McGhee said he believes many companies are reluctant to participate because they fear the series "may open wounds." WGBH may sponsor an on-the-air drive to fund the $3.8 million, project, McGhee said.

Green River 'Loved To Death'?

By JOY FRANKLIN
Forest City Daily Courier

FOREST CITY, N.C. (AP) — Moses Bradley sits on his front porch and watches the cars go by. His frame house, weathered with nearly a half-century of living, sits about 30 feet off one of the busiest dirt roads in North Carolina.

"I sat out here one Sunday and counted 38 cars in 30 minutes — that's going one way. This road is dusty, and all that time, I'm eating their dust," said Bradley, who owns about a mile of property fronting on the Green River.

The river, discovered 10 years ago by whitewater followers, has become one of the most popular waterways for recreational purposes in the state. It has become so popular that some conservationists say "it's being loved to death."

Beginning in Henderson County, the river flows through Polk County, along the southern edge of Rutherford County and into the Broad River about 30 miles above Duke Power Company's Cliffside Steam Station.

In Polk County the river drains through Green River Cove — a narrow valley accesssible only by the dirt road that crosses Bradley's property.

Duke Power owns about 85 percent of the property in the Cove, with the rest divided among Champion Timber Co., the Agricultural Foundation of North Carolina State University, the Wildlife Resources Commission, the Bradleys and a few other families.

Aside from limited farming and timbering, a few houses and one small store, the Cove remains essentially a wilderness area.

"It's a botanical paradise," says conservationist Sam Thomas. "It's rich in geological land forms, and archeologists have unearthed artifacts in there dating back 7,000 years."

Thomas and others like him want the 16-mile Cove segment of the river included in the state Natural and Scenic River System, but Bradley, Duke Power and most of the other landowners oppose the move.

"The Green River is the second most used river in the state, second only to the Nantahala," Thomas said. "It's well worthy of preservation. It's a recreation area that can't be surpassed anywhere, and it's being loved to death. It needs to be managed badly."

Duke Power spokesmen say the utility opposes the scenic rivers designation beause the company has long-range plans to build a dam that would flood most of the Cove. Bradley opposes the designation because he believes it will give the state the right to tell him what he can and can't do with his land and because he fears it would bring more people into the river.

"I'm 100 percent against it," Bradley said. "I've worked 40-odd years here to pay for this property to leave it to my children. I hate to see it took away from them. I'm 100 percent capitalist. I believe if I've got one dollar it's mine and if you've got a thousand dollars, it's yours, and I don't covet it."

Duke Power already has two power plants on the Green, above the Cove in Henderson County and downstream at Lake Adger. During some hours of the day the river flowing through the Cove is shallow, easily waded.

But when Duke Power is generating power and releases water from its reservoir upstream, the Green becomes a whitewater stream.

Groups such as the Piedmont Paddlers, a Charlotte canoe club, use the river regularly. Youth camps, church groups and outdoor recreation organizations use the river each week, along with families and groups of friends who pile as many inner tubes as they can in a truck and set out for an afternoon bobbing through the rapids.

They come from Charlotte, Asheville, Hendersonville, from Greenville and Spartanburg, S.C., and even from Georgia.

Local landowners have had their crops trampled. Garbage is left behind, sometimes strewn, sometimes in bags left along the roadside. Only a few groups, such as the Piedmont Paddlers, clean up their camps.

"We're living in hell in here on Saturday and Sunday, and I'm against it and I don't care who knows it," Bradley said. "We don't never see no peace here for them."

The Green was one of six rivers recommended for inclusion in the scenic rivers program when it was created in the 1960s. Only two — the Linville and New rivers — have been included.

A 15-member advisory committee was set up five years ago to study the feasibility of adding the Green River to the system. It has been stalemated as a result of the conflicting views of landowners and conservationists.

Committee chairman Mickey Lewis says four alternatives now are before the group: do nothing, designate the river as part of the scenic rivers program, work out a cooperative agreement between Duke Power and the other landowners to manager the area, or develop a cooperative agreement between Duke Power, other landowners and the county and the state.

Lewis favors the scenic rivers designation, which would require the state to provide whatever management needed to maintain and protect the river.

The committee has scheduled public hearings in Hendersonville Oct. 20 and in Columbus Oct. 21 before making its recommendation this fall.

GREEN RIVER — Canoeists, swimmers and floaters line the beach and water of the Green River, one of North Carolina's more popular recreational and whitewater areas. Some conservationists want 16 miles of the river included in the state's natural and scenic rivers system. (AP Laserphoto)

Plans Evict Palestinians In Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Bachir Gemayal, a 33-year-old lawyer who claims the unrivaled leadership of Lebanon's Maronite Christian enclave here, says he wants to drive 600,000 Palestinians out of the country.

The commander of the right-wing Phalangist militia took over the leadership of Christian East Beirut and nearby Mount Lebanon highlands by crushing the rival "Tigers" militia in a lightning strike July 7 that left as many as 300 people dead. The Tigers also are Maronites.

Gemayel's defeated Maronite opponents are expressing fear that his hard line on the Palestinians could plunge the country into another civil war.

Leftist Moslems, who fought the Maronites in Lebanon's 1975-76 civil war, accuse Gemayel of seeking a separate Christian state. Palestinian guerrilla chief Yasser Arafat, allied with the leftist Moslems, has ordered a "full mobilization" to deal with the Phalangists.

The Maronite Christians, who have been affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church since the 12th century, are the largest and most influential Christian sect in Lebanon, comprising about 25 percent of the nation's estimated population of three million.

They trace their origin to the 5th century hermit St. Maron and the monks of the period who built retreats in the Mount Lebanon area.

Gemayel studied law at St. Joseph College in Beirut, a school run by Roman Catholic Jesuits. After graduation in 1971, he set up a law office in Beirut's predominantly Moslem western sector, but gave up his practice at the onset of the civil war.

"We have our faith and our determination and we are not relying on anyone," the stocky, dark-haired Gemayel said in an interview with The Associated Press at his "war council" headquarters overlooking the Mediterranean.

"We cannot allow 600,000 Palestinian refugees to stay even to please (President) Carter," he added. "We are not going to let them remain here."

In the compound behind his headquarters — in what was once a hospital — are bullet-scarred barracks damaged in September 1978, clashes between leftist Moslem-Palestinian forces and Syrian peacekeeping troops. The Syrians were allied with the Christians during the civil war.

A Phalangist spokesman said the "Lebanese forces," including several small militias also under Gemayel's command, could field 40,000 fighters in a crisis. This would be about equal to the size of the Palestinian guerrilla force in Lebanon.

"We are expecting some major developments on the Arab scene that will allow us to start a war of liberation," Gemayel said without elaboration. "Even now we can start with some kind of liberation."

Such talk alarms other Christian leaders such as Dany Chamoun, military commander of the defeated Tigers, who said that attacking the Palestinians would be "absolute folly," especially without backing from Syria which keeps a 20,000-man deterrent force in Lebanon.

"If he is left alone, he will re-plunge the country into another civil war," Chamoun said in an interview with The AP. "He definitely believes he is king of the castle now."

Chamoun, son of former President Camille Chamoun, claimed Gemayel had become "bloodthirsty and ruthless" after his 18-month-old daughter Maya was killed in a car bombing last February that was apparently intended for him.

The bombing was blamed on followers of ex-President Suleiman Franjieh, another Maronite, who lost his son, daughter-in-law and granddaughter when Phalangists attacked his mountain stronghold in north Lebanon in June 1978.

With the defeat of the Tigers of the National Liberal Party, Gemayel's forces now control all the sea ports north of Beirut in addition to captured ammunition dumps.

Authentic Drive-In Is Endangered

By DEBORAH BELGUM
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — What do Rep. John Anderson, Sally Struthers and Ricardo Montalban have in common? They're all trying to save one of this city's last authentic drive-in restaurants.

Straight out of "American Graffiti," Dolores Drive-In in Beverly Hills has been delighting the famous and not-so-famous since 1946, with its Dolores burgers, Suzy-Q fries and homemade pies.

The quaint, brown-stucco landmark seats 75 people inside and on the California-Spanish patio, and has 26 spaces for vehicles, where real-live carhops skillfully balance food-laden trays as they scurry from Volkswagens to limousines.

Celebrities especially enjoy Dolores because they can have a quiet bite to eat while maintaining complete anonymity inside their cars.

But after 34 years, the haunt soon may be replaced by another of the steel and smoked-glass high-rise buildings that already dwarf it along bustling Wilshire Boulevard. If property owner Don Levin gets his way, bulldozers will raze the culinary landmark on Oct. 31.

However, Dean Williams, who owns the building and has operated Dolores for 10 years, has undertaken a petition drive to preserve the restaurant as an official "landmark historic site."

A 1975 ordinance empowers the Beverly Hills City Council to designate historic landmarks on the advice of the city's Architectural Commission, protecting their continued existence. To date, the ordinance has not been tested.

With a goal of 150,000 signatures, Williams so far has gathered 50,000 names on his list, which reads like a Who's Who in spots: Miss Struthers, Montalban, Shelley Winters, Chuck Barris. Anderson, the independent candidate for president, even called and asked to sign the petition when he was campaigning in town recently.

Williams also hired behaviorial scientist John Simmons to put together a study pointing out the nostalgic and historic value of Dolores, one of the few original drive-ins still operating in Southern California.

"With the petition and the study, I think we have a 90 percent chance of having the drive-in declared a historical site," Williams declared.

However, Beverly Hills Mayor Edward Brown is not as enthusiastic: "When the issue was brought before the city council about four weeks ago, no one was that interested because they don't believe it's a historical landmark," Brown said.

The Dolores saga goes back to 1925 when Amanda and Ralph Stevens opened the Goody Goody Drive-In in Tampa, Fla. Four years later, the couple moved to Oklahoma City, where they opened the first drive-in restaurant on Route 66 and named it after their 2-year-old daughter, Dolores.

As World War II was nearing an end, the family moved again, this time to Los Angeles, where drive-in restaurants dotted the city. They opened Los Angeles' first Dolores Drive-In in 1945 on Sunset Boulevard. In the summer of 1946, they moved the drive-in to Wilshire.

For out-of-work actors and discharged veterans alike, Dolores was the first Los Angeles drive-in that hired male carhops. One of them was Marty Cable, a fresh young kid just out of the Marine Corps.

Recounting his days at the drive-in, Cable, who today owns his own restaurant chain, said Dolores had a reputation for good tips and beautiful female customers.

"I'd never worked as a carhop in my life," said Cable. "I was so poor I had to dye my Marine greens brown. Our uniforms were brown slacks, white shirt and black tie."

Cable remembered that the carhops were paid $1.90 a day plus tips. "On a good day we could make about $25 in tips. We knew who the big tippers were.

He Provides Power For Small Town

By MAUREEN DEA
Associated Press Writer

DOVER-FOXCROFT, Maine (AP) — Charles MacArthur single-handedly keeps nuclear power out of this small Maine community — at least until 4 p.m. each day.

"That's when everyone rushes home, plugs in vacuum cleaners and hair dryers" and hikes the town's electrical demand above the capacity of his hydroelectric plant, says the 52-year-old MacArthur.

Then Central Maine Power Co. must transmit electricity from other sources, including nuclear plants, into Dover-Foxcroft.

Until three years ago, Dover-Foxcroft had no hydroelectric facility serving its 4,000 residents. And the community had never heard of a character named Charles MacArthur.

But in 1977 local officials began a desperate search for someone to take over an abandoned five-story wool mill along the Piscataquis River. The 80-year-old brick building, equipped with two generators that once produced electricity for the mill, attracted little interest.

Then along came MacArthur.

MacArthur, who tools silently about town in a yellow electric car, rang the mill bell a week or so ago to celebrate the third anniversary of his purchase.

"Or at least to celebrate Bastille Day," he says. "We ring the hell out of the bell whenever we feel like it."

And next summer, MacArthur, who knew little about hydroelectric plants when he bought the mill, hopes to start the nation's first apprentice program for aspiring hydro operators.

"Isn't that the biggest damned toy anyone could have?" says MacArthur, giving one of his daily public tours of the mill. Decked out in red suspenders, jeans and a blue workshirt, the gray-haired MacArthur gleefully peers inside one of the generators he rebuilt.

"Who else has got a hydroelectric plant to play with?"

A Lewiston native, MacArthur graduated from Bates College and did a stint as an English teacher at Auburn's Edward Little High School.

He then moved to Connecticut, where he began an engineering photography firm; designed, built and flew hot-air balloons, including a memorable flight over a nudist colony, and made a name for himself as an "energy entrepreneur."

But by 1977, MacArthur had grown tired of the frazzled life. He and his wife, Anne, began hunting for an old mill in Maine.

"I felt we'd be running into energy problems and that if I could find an energy source it would be like having an oil well."

The Dover-Foxcroft property seemed perfect because it included the generators, a carpentry building that the MacArthurs converted into a home, and 26 acres along the river.

"I made a ridiculous offer — said I'd take over the $100,000 mortgage," he says. "Two weeks later they called me and said OK."

MacArthur figures that, for the price of a "moderate" Connecticut home, he picked up a house, 26 acres, two generators "and a hell of a lot of fun for an English major who wasn't allowed to take shop."

And Dover-Foxcroft picked up a wry character who is working on 86 alternative energy projects; grows tomatoes in recycled human waste from his home, and ceremonially threw an electric toaster into the river one year to demonstrate the need to conserve energy.

Believe China Preparing Downgrade Mao Tse-tung

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

PEKING (AP) — China is preparing for National People's Congress and Communist Party sessions that are expected to sharply downgrade the legacy of the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung and bring new men into top government posts.

Both government and ideological changes have been presaged by insistent demands for old leaders to make way for younger men and by a vigorous campaign to discredit Mao, who died in September 1976.

Mao founded the People's Republic of China but he also unleashed the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution that now is held responsible for the devastation of the country's industry, agriculture, education and culture.

When the National People's Congress meets sometime after mid-August, more than 3,400 deputies will put the proletarian seal of approval on major changes in economic policy and amendments to the constitution. The major change will be abolition of the freedom to put up wall posters.

Before the congress convenes, its agenda and its outcome aready will have been decided by China's most important body — the Central Committee of the Communist Party.

These are some of the changes, already announced or strongly indicated:,

—Senior Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping, 76, has announced he will give up his government post but retain his more powerful position: vice chairman of the Communist Party.

—Premier Hua Guofeng, 59, Mao's successor as party chairman, reportedly will step down as premier but stay in his party post, although he already is boxed in by Deng's allies. Hua has been tarnished by the campaign to criticize Mao and unlike Deng he has urged a slower pace in China's drive for modernization.

—Vice Premier Zhao Ziyang, 61, a protege of Deng's, reportedly will replace Hua as premier. Zhao is an economist who has displayed a willingness to try capitalist-style methods.

—A number of aging officials also are expected to resign to make way for younger men. Those expected to step aside include Vice Premiers Li Xiannian and Chen Yun. There is speculation Vice Premiers Bo Yibo and Chen Yonggui also may step aside, but their status apparently remains undecided. Chen was the founder of the now-discredited Tachai agricultural project that was held up as a model by Mao. Marshal Ye Jianying, chairman of the Standing Committee of the People's Congress, also is mentioned as possibly giving up his post.

—The Congress also is expected to approve the policy of economic readjustment which shifts emphasis from heavy to light industry and agriculture. The new economics also calls for greater flexibility and incentives in industry and agriculture.

—China finally will do away with the "Four Greats" in its constituion. They are "speaking out freely, airing views fully, holding great debates and writing big-character posters." The constitution still guarantees freedom of speech.

China's leaders now are saying that modernization demands stability and unity and that big character wall posters have been used by "bad elements" to disrupt the social order.

At its meeting last February, the Central Committee proposed to do away with the "Four Greats."

At its forthcoming meeting sometime in August, the Central Committee will set the stage for the People's Congress session. If a new premier is to be named, as Chinese and foreign sources indicate, then he must be nominated by the Central Committee.

Top government and party posts increasingly have been filled by allies of Deng — who was purged twice by Mao for being too pragmatic.

Deng appears to be ensuring that his modernization policy will be carried out — and eliminating those who could stand in the way.

Hua is not regarded as one of Deng's men. He has criticized, indirectly, Deng's emphasis on material incentives and has put his emphasis on the Maoist politics and ideology.

Hua also appears to be a major target of a campaign to criticize Maoist agricultureal policies. The press recently disclosed that Mao's famed Tachai Brigade in Shanxi Province reported false bumper harvests.

Hua was a major speaker at "Learn from Tachai" conferences. The brigade was played up as a model for large-scale agriculture and Tachais were to be duplicated all over China. Now, however, the model is discredited.

Chinese and diplomatic sources also note that while Hua has been taking part in numerous ceremonial functions — such as his meeting with President Carter when both went to Tokyo for the memorial services for the late Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira of Japan early in July — he does not appear to have a strong hand in policy.

On the party side, too, Hua appears isolated. The day-to-day business of the party is handled by the resurrected party secretariat, stacked with Deng's supporters.

Last month the party general secretary, Hu Yaobang, was quoted as saying Mao made grave mistakes. Yugoslav journalists said Hu told them in an interview that Mao must bear responsibility for the Cultural Revolution.

Heretofore, the Cultural Revolution and all of China's ills have been blamed on the "Gang of Four," led by Mao's widow, Jiang Qing.

China's leading newspaper, the Peking People's Daily, indirectly criticized Mao more recently by saying disaster was inevitable when one man's will could affect an entire nation.

Utility Studies A Solar Source

RENO, Neb. (UPI) — An ambitious plan under study could save a local utility company the equivalent of 550,000 barrels of imported oil annually by conversion of a power plant to use solar energy, according to Energy User News, an industry publication.

The utility plans to convert of its two 110-megawatt units at its nearby Fort Churchill generating site to utilize sun power. About 10,000 heliostat mirrors would be placed on a 500-acre field to focus sunlight on a central receive atop a 700-foot tower. Molten salt would be used to retain hat and initials estimate are that solar energy could produce 70 megawatts at the station.

FRIENDLY LITTLE STINKER — In the summer, nothing can take the place of time spent taking it easy with a friend. As the hot weather continues in the Anderson, S.C. area, Jeffrey Vassar rests with his two-month-old skunk Chanel. The unusual pet usually draws second glances as the pair stroll in the neighborhood. LONDON (AP) — Saudi Arabia has agreed to restore full diplomatic relations with Britain, ending a three-month rupture because of the Saudi royal family's displeasure at the TV film depicting executions of a Saudi princess and her lover.

NOTICE OF HEARING BEFORE THE GREENVILLE UTILITIES COMMISSION

In the Matter of Consideration of Adoption of Standards and Policies Under the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act

NOTICE OF HEARING PURSUANT TO PUBLIC UTILITY REGULATORY POLICY ACT

1. On Monday, August 4, 1980, at 7:30 P.M., a public hearing will commence in the Council Room at the City Hall Building (Third Floor), to consider standards and policies under the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act as follows:

A. Cost of Service - Rates are to reflect cost of providing electric service to various classes of customers.

B. Declining Block Rates - The Energy component of a rate for any class of customer may not decrease as kilowatt-hour consumption increases unless it is demonstrated that such charges track cost of service.

C. Time-of-Day Rates - Rates are to reflect costs of providing electric service at different times of day unless such rates are not cost-effective.

D. Seasonal Rates - Rates shall be on a seasonal basis reflecting costs of providing service at different seasons to the extent that such costs vary seasonally.

E. Interruptible Rates - Industrial and commercial consumers shall be offered interruptible rates reflecting costs of providing interruptible service to the class of which the consumer is a member.

F. Load Management Techniques - Load managment techniques are to be offered to consumers where it is determined that such techniques are practicable and cost effective, reliable, and provide useful energy or capacity management advantages to the electric ulitity.

G. Master Metering - Where appropriate, master metering in new buildings is prohibited or restricted as necessary to carry out the purposes of the Title.

H. Automatic Adjustment Clauses - Such clauses must be considered in an evidentiary hearing not less often than every four years to determine whether such clauses provide incentives for efficient use of resources. Such clauses must be reviewed not less often than every two years.

I. Information to Consumers - Utilities are to provide to each consumer a clear and concise explanation of existing rate schedules, proposed schedules and, upon request, information of individual consumption.

J. Procedures for Termination of Electric Service - Service may not be terminated unless reasonable notice is given and an opportunity is provided to the consumer to dispute the reasons for termination. Also, service may not be terminated when to do so would be dangerous to health as determined by the regulatory authority and the consumer shows that he is unable to pay in accordance with the requirements of the utility's billing or he is able to pay only in installments.

K. Advertising - Promotional and political advertising expenses must be charged to shareholders, not ratepayers, and to provide public comment pertinent thereto.

2. Information concerning such standards and policies is being prepared by the Commission staff and is on file at the offices of the Commission Staff for review during the hours of eight a.m. to five p.m., Monday through Friday.

3. During the hearing, the Commission staff will give its report and testimony will be taken concerning the standards and policies.

4. Any person desiring to intervene in this hearing must give notice to the Presiding Officer, as designated below, no later than July 25, 1980, by filing a petition prepared for this hearing. Such petition shall be filed in accordance with Chapter V, paragraph A of the Procedures Manual governing this hearing on file in the offices of the Commission Staff. The petition shall be personally delivered or sent by regular mail to the Presiding Officer.

5. Persons desiring to make limited appearances for the purpose of presenting oral or written statements may do so at the start of the hearing.

6. The Hon. Donald C. McGlohon, Mayor of the City of Greenville, whose address is P O. Box 1905, Greenville, N.C. 27834 has been designated to preside over and conduct the hearing.

7. Copies of the Procedures Manual governing this hearing are available at the offices of the Commission Staff.

8. The hearing may be continued from time to time without further notice or advertisement by announcement at the hearing.

Lowe's Pricing Policy

Many items in this tabloid carry a reference retail price. This reference is intended to provide a guide to the range of retail selling prices in our selling area and may be useful in identifying different units of the same manufacturer. An item's reference retail price is either the manufacturer's suggested retail price or our determination of its full retail price based on prices at which it or similar merchandise is offered by principal retailers (department stores, specialty shops and other non-discount sellers) in our selling area. While we believe our reference retails do not appreciably exceed the highest retail prices at which sales are made in our selling area, we cannot assure you that our reference retail prices, as described above, represent the prices in every community on any given day. Some items in this advertisement are listed at "regular" selling price. The merchandise is offered at this price except during a special sale. The purpose of showing a reference retail price (or a regular price) is to assist you, our customer, in making a knowledgeable and better informed buying decision. We suggest that you also do comparative shopping and compare our prices. (Delivery charges extra.)

Lowe's Raincheck Policy

If we sell out of an advertised item, we'll issue you a raincheck. When we restock, you'll be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price (except for products marked "Limited Quantities"). Our smaller stores may not stock all advertised items. But every item shown here can be ordered for you. Stop by today!

Kroger Sav-on garden

In the Kroger Sav-on Garden most of our fresh fruits and vegetables are in bulk displays, as opposed to pre-packaged as many stores have. You can choose one green pepper or five, one lemon or a dozen, and YOU pick and choose the one you want. Then take your choice to the "Gardener" for weighing and pricing. Your Kroger Sav-on "Gardeners" will be pleased to answer your questions about any of the hundreds of fresh fruits and vegetables we have here for you.
