BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Hurricane Allen, second strongest hurricane of the century, roared toward southern Texas' coastal resorts Saturday night, throwing torrential rain, tornadoes and winds up to 160 mph at a region deserted by an estimated 200,000 people.

Heavy rain and swollen tides ahead of the storm cut off most escape routes from offshore islands but most beach areas, including Port Aransas, Port Isabel and South Padre Island, had already been completely evacuated.

There was some coastal flooding and roofs were torn from some buildings at Los Fresnos, a coastal town about five miles away, according to ham radio reports monitored at Brownsville Airport, but no deaths or injuries had been reported in the area.

A disabled tanker loaded with nearly 12 million gallons of oil was driven aground by 40- to 50-foot waves off Corpus Christi after its uncontrolled drift threatened oil rigs. The Coast Guard was unable to rescue the crew of 37 but said they should be safe if the Liberian-registered Mary Ellen did not break up.

High tides rushed into the streets at Kemah and Seabrook along Galveston Bay, about 300 miles to the northeast, edging to the windows of some stalled cars and swirling into businesses and homes, officials said. There was little communication with other points along the coast.

At 7 p.m. CDT, Allen's center was near latitude 25.7 north and longitude 96.7 west, or about 45 miles east-southeast of Brownsville, the National Hurricane Center at Miami reported.

By early evening, the wind was gusting up to 75 mph at this border city of 67,000 people. An oil rig 53 miles east of Brownsville recorded wind up to 140 mph late in the afternoon.

The storm's calm eye, surrounded by winds of up to 160 mph, was expected to reach shore between 10 p.m. and midnight, said Richard Hagan, weather service supervisor here.

Although the winds had dropped from 170 mph earlier in the day, Hagan said he was not encouraged that Allen was slowing down. He said he had no doubt the "worst is still on the way."

The Hurricane Center said Allen was moving at about 10 mph with hurricane-force winds extending 100 miles in front of it.

"Right now, we're just playing the waiting game, waiting it out, fearing the night time and what is going to hapen," said Louis Messer at the San Patricio County sheriff's office just north of Corpus Christi.

The Hurricane Center said the highest surge on the beaches near here would probably be about 15 feet.

"If we get more than 12-foot tides, I don't even want to think about it," said Al Cisneros, general manager and port director for the Port of Brownsville. The docks at the port are 12 feet high, and seas above that height could damage loading facilities, he said.

"There are still some ships in the harbor. We have a couple of large ships and the crews are going to stay aboard and ride it out there," he said.

Muskie Forces Want Kennedy To Withdraw

NEW YORK (AP) — The chairman of a committee to draft Edmund S. Muskie for the Democratic Party's presidential nomination said Saturday that the withdrawal of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy from the race would persuade delegates to vote for an "open" convention.

King Golden, a San Diego attorney, said "We have a message for Sen. Kennedy. Withdraw. Release your delegates and have an open convention."

Asked if Kennedy would drop out in avor of an alternative to he and President Carter, a top Kennedy aide said Saturday, "You've got to be kidding."

Golden said his committee is working on Muskie's behalf without his permission. Muskie has said he is happy in his new job as secretary of state.

"Kennedy clearly has become an obstacle to an open convention," Golden said. "He fought a good fight, but he finished second. The delegates will vote against an open convention unless Kennedy withdraws."

An open convention is a euphemism for releasing delegates from commitments imposed in primaries and state caucuses. This would provide an opportunity for Kennedy, or an alternatiuve candidate such as Muskie, to wrest the nomination away from carter.

Golden said his committee has budgeted $50,000 for its effort. It has set up an office and telephones a block from the convention hall.

An Associated Press-NBC News poll taken Tuesday through Thursday found Muskie would do slightly better than Carter against Republican nominee Ronald Reagan if the election were held today, although the difference was small. Muskie would draw 29 percent to Reagan's 43 percent among 1,389 likely voters interviewed by telephone. Independent candidate John Anderson drew 15 percent and others and not sure 13 percent.

That compares to the 22 percent Carter gets against Reagan in the same poll, with 15 percent naming Anderson; 3 percent mentioning others; 13 percent not sure.

UNC Funds Allocated

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina Board of Governor approved Friday plans for splitting a $485 million allocation among the 16 member schools.

The largest chunk of the appropriation — $353.7 million — will go to continue existing university operations. Almost $32 million will go toward academic salary increases of as much as 15 percent. Program expansion and improvements will take $20.7 million of the total allocation.

Appropriations for program expansion includes $6.4 million to cover a projected system-wide enrollment increase of 1,773 students. The approved appropriations were based on an estimated enrollment of 99,785 full-time students for 1980-81.

In other action Friday, the board approved plans for a doctoral degree program in the school of pharmacy at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Masters degree programs in special education and criminal justice were approved for UNC-Charlotte. The board also approved a masters degree program in elementary education for Fayetteville State University.

Rajaie Nomination May Signal Change

By The Associated Press

Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr nominated Education Minister Mohammad Ali Rajaie, a favorite of the clergy-dominated Parliament, as Iran's new prime minister Saturday, Tehran's official news media reported.

The selection of Rajaie, a 47-year-old former high school teacher, apparently signaled a truce in Iran's bitter political feuding and may remove a major obstacle to the Parliament's consideration of the American hostage issue.

But it remained unclear when the Iranians will take new steps toward resolving the crisis over the 52 Americans, who on Sunday begin their 41st week in captivity.

Bani-Sadr had been bruised in his first encounter with the Parliament over appointing a prime minister. He was forced last month to withdraw the name of his original nominee, national police chief Mostafa Mir-Salim, evidently because of opposition within the Parliament, or Majlis, which is dominated by the clergy-led Islamic Republican Party.

For months the Iranian president and the IRP have been locked in a struggle over control of the direction of the Iranian revolution.

After Mir-Salim's rejection, the Majlis established a select committee to advise the president on possible nominees. Late last week reports from Tehran indicated Rajaie had emerged as the likely choice, and on Friday the Majlis speaker, Hashemi Rafsanjani, said 107 of 155 deputies attending Friday's Majlis session expressed support for the education minister.

Rafsanjani, saying Bani-Sadr would be informed of their decision, declared that the president retained "the right to introduce anyone he wishes." But on Saturday Bani-Sadr sent a letter to Parliament acceding to the choice of Rajaie.

"Having heard the consultations of the select committee and the preference that the esteemed Majlis has indicated, I introduce Mr. Mohammad Ali Rajaie as the prime minister. I pray to God to give the esteemed deputies and him success," Tehran Radio quoted the letter as saying, in a broadcast monitored in London.

The new prime minister and his yet-unnamed Cabinet presumably still require a formal vote of confidence from the full Parliament, under terms of the Iranian constitution. Such a vote could come within days.

He is a native of the northern town of Qazvin, holds a bachelor of science degree in mathematics and taught in Tehran's secondary schools before being named as education minister in the provisional revolutionary government, Tehran reports said. He spent four years in jail during Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's regime because of his political activities, the reports said, and he is married, with three children.

Rajaie is believed to be staunchly loyal to Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and to the precepts of a strictly Islamic political system.

Iran has been without a prime minister since Mehdi Bazargan, chief of the provisional revolutionary government, resigned last

Democratic Delegates Reporting In For Convention

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — President Carter lags far behind Republican presidential nominee Ronald Reagan in voter preference on the eve of the Democratic National Convention — but so do Sen. Edward Kennedy and potential compromise candidates, an Associated Press-NBC News poll showed Saturday.

Democratic delegates streamed into sweltering Manhattan as Kennedy worked to persuade wavering Carter supporters that they should vote to erase commitments to his renomination. His spokesman released a list of vice presidential possibilities, a sign of Kennedy's everlasting optimism.

Carter's campaign chairman, Robert S. Strauss, dismissed the Kennedy challenge as "yesterday's news," and said Carter now wants a convention that will serve to spell out Democratic differences with Republican nominee Ronald Reagan.

The AP-NBC poll, conducted Tuesday through Thursday — after Carter's nationally televised news conference defense of administration conduct in handling the Libyan connections of his brother, Billy — showed the president the preferred nominee of rank and file Democrats.

Thirty-eight percent of the 815 Democrats interviewed said they wanted Carter renominated. Twenty-one percent were for Kennedy, the rest were undecided or wanted other candidates.

But among likely voters of both parties, Carter trailed Reagan by 25 percentage points. The poll showed 47 percent said they would vote for Reagan if the presidential election were held today, 22 percent for Carter, 15 percent for Rep. John Anderson, the independent candidate. The rest were undecided or scattered.

That compares with a 42 percent to 27 percent Reagan advantage in the last AP-NBC poll, conducted July 8 and 9, just before the Republican convention. Strauss has said Carter will be renominated and narrow the pollsters' margin after the Democratic convention. The president himself recalled the wide lead the polls gave him midsummer 1976, a margin that shrank as tge campaign progressed.

Kennedy argues that he is the Democrat best positioned to defeat Reagan, but the poll showed him 25 points behind the Republican nominee, too. Reagan held similar, or wider margins over Democratic names like Muskie, Mondale and Jackson.

That survey covered 1,389 people who are likely to vote in November. The results should vary by no more than 4 percentage points from those that would be obtained in telephone interviews with all likely voters.

Kennedy, who spent most of the day in his Waldorf-Astoria Hotel suite making his case in telephone calls to delegates and party leaders, said he's far from finished as a candidate.

"I'm hopeful of being the Democratic nominee," he said. "That's what I'm looking forward to ... I realize we have a long way to go."

Kennedy's spokesman, Richard C. Drayne, announced that the challenger has a list of seven vice presidential prospects under consideration as potential running mates should he win the nomination.

The list: former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida; Mayor Thomas Bradley of Los Angeles; Rep. Lindy Boggs of Louisiana; Secretary of Education Shirley Hufstedler; Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington; Rep. Richardson Preyer of North Carolina; and Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson III of Illinois.

To keep his challenge alive, Kennedy must win Monday night, when the opening session of the convention votes on a proposed rule to bind delegates to the commitments they made when elected.

Since Carter has 1,986 delegates, 320 more than he needs for renomination, Kennedy's campaign will be finished unless he can block the rule. Kennedy has 1,234 delegates in his column.

An Associated Press delegate survey pointed to victory for Carter. Fifty-five percent of the delegates interviewed said they support the so-called "loyal delegate" rule that would enforce commitments growing out of primary elections and party caucuses. Forty percent said

45 Die In Nepal

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Forty-five people died and 65 were seriously ill from eating poisonous wild mushrooms and berries in Nepal villages where drought and recent severe earthquake damage have caused food shortages, an official source said Saturday.

The source said the government has rushed medical teams to the villages in Surkhet district, 180 miles southwest of Katmandu.

A strong earthquake July 29 jolted 11 villages in the far northwest region of this mountainous central Asian kingdom, killing at least 83 persons and injuring 700 others.

The entire western region of Nepal was hit by a severe drought last year that caused acute food shortages. The villagers have been forced to search for edible mushrooms and wild berries.

Workers Prepare For Walkout Near Deadline

By OWEN ULLMANN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bell System's 700,000 unionized telephone workers prepared for a coast-to-coast walkout on Sunday as bargainers launched a final drive to reach a contract settlement without a strike.

Two hundred telephone installers working at the Democratic National Convention in New York did not wait for the strike deadline, refusing to report to work Saturday morning.

Spokesmen for American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said a nationwide strike would have no impact on direct-dialed calls, which are handled through automation.

But the company's 72 million residential and business customers might encounter delays in completing operator-assisted calls, obtaining directory information, getting repairs or having new service installed.

The company estimates that one in 1,000 local calls and one in 20 long-distance calls require operator asistance.

In New York, Ted Marr, Bell's convention manager, said that supervisory personnel were being used to replace the union members who refused to complete work on the installation of 7,600 phones and circuits for 25,000 Democratic delegates and media representatives. The 200 no-shows at the convention site were among several hundred workers assigned to special overtime projects who walked off the job in New York state to protest the status of the talks, officials said.

Marr said the convention work was 96 percent done and supervisory personnel were filling in to complete the job by Monday's opening session. Phones for the convention floor, the podium, facilities for vans and trailers and private lines for broadcast networks had yet to be installed, he said.

The largest of three unions bargaining with the nation's largest private employer said Saturday that negotiators were "still far apart" on a new contract, and expressed waning optimism about the chances of settling before a midnight EDT Saturday strike deadline.

"An agreement is becoming less and less likely, but the negotiating is continuing," said Lee White, spokesman for the Communications Workers of America, which represents 525,000 Bell workers.

CWA President Glenn Watts arivate meeti. Reed, Bell's chief negotiator, were holding private meetings almost around the clock since Friday night in Washington with assistance from federal mediators.

One source close to the talks said the two sides were separated over a "series of small problems," mainly involving union demands for job security protections from increased use of automation. The source, who did not want to be named, said none of the issues could provoke a strike by itself, but "cumulativly these can lead to a strike."

The CWA settlement will serve as the pattern for another 175,000 workers represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union. Three-year contracts with all three unions expired Saturday.

Storm Batters Texas...

Ham radio operator Cliff Wareham, barricaded in a church at Los Fresnos, reported he saw a mobile home tumbling past that looked like "a tornado did a little dance on it and turned it inside out."

A late afternoon teletype message from the National Weather Service station here closed with: "No storm of this strength has struck this area in recorded history. We can offer only some ideas of what has happened in other areas in storms of similar strength. From now on, we must just endure. Many people have had to go through hurricanes and have survived.

"May God help us."

The storm had left a trail of death and despair through the tropical plantations of the Caribbean as it slowly worked its way up off the coast of Mexico.

It claimed at least 100 lives, including 87 in the Caribbean and 13 people aboard a helicopter evacuating oil rig personnel off Louisiana, and one person was dead and three were missing after a barge overturned near Lake Charles, La., Friday night.

Wind squalls knocked out Brownsville's power in the afternoon, and tornadoes destroyed five houses and a bakery and damaged several others.

"The city is without electricity, gas and water," said Cameron County Deputy Sheriff Robert Tamayo.

Several other communities in the Rio Grand Valley also lost power, including Harlingen, 20 miles northwest of Brownsville.

Coast Guard officers in Corpus Christi said the 840-foot tanker, with a crew of mostly Chinese and Italians and loaded with 11.8 million gallons of oil, ran aground about 12 miles south of Port Aransas on Mustang Island.

"It did miss all the (oil rig) platforms so, hopefully, if the ship stays intact and it stays hard aground and the people can stay on board, they should be all right," said Coast Guard Lt. Steve Sparks. "It's an extremely critical situation, but unfortunately there's nothing we can do for them."

Two National Guard C-130 transport planes evacuated 162 Corpus Christi mental patients to San Antonio late Friday.

Border officials said entry policies were relaxed for "thousands" of Mexican nationals pleading for shelter on the U.S. side of the Rio Grande.

"We are not refusing any request for shelter," said Fernando Marcias, Brownsville's International Port Director. "At the moment, about 300 persons have expressly asked to seek shelter on this side of the border."

Allen, one of three storms rated in Category 5 since records have been kept, is second in strength only to the Labor Day hurricane of 1935 that swept through the Florida Keys, killing more than 400 people. Category 5 hurricanes have central barometric pressure of less than 920 millibars, meaning a very low pressure area that pulls in strong winds of more than 155 mph.

Accepted Expenses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House acknowledged Saturday that Ruth Carter Stapleton, President Carter's sister, accepted expenses from a businessman for a trip to the Middle East earlier this year, but insisted she never discussed her political views on the Middle East with the president.

White House spokesman Jody Powell said Mrs. Stapleton said she has no interest in Middle East politics, but realized she had been used to help make impressive business contacts for her benefactor.

"She has never discussed any political views on the Middle East with the president," Powell said. "We did not help make arrangements for the trip. We did notify the embassies about the travel schedule."

Mrs. Stapleton was quoted as saying the businessman, Sam Bamieh, president of the Industrial Development Group of Palo Alto, Calif., paid about $3,000 in expenses and she and an associate provided another $8,000.

Strauss predicted the president's convention forces would win the rules fight with a margin of about 300 votes. He acknowledged they likely will lose some delegates. "My guess is that it will be less than 200," he said.

Paul Kirk, political director for the Kennedy campaign, claimed Saturday that the challenger is within 75 to 100 votes of blocking the commitment rule. Kirk said Kennedy and his allies were telephoning about 200 Carter delegates and party leaders in a quest for votes.

He scoffed at the suggestion Kennedy might be considering withdrawal. "You've got to be kidding," Kirk said.

Edward Bennett Williams, the Washinghon attorney who heads "The Committee to Continue the Open Convention," claimed delegate headway and public support for the campaign against the delegate binding rule. Williams said the "open convention" movement was within 25 votes of a majority, a claim that does not fit with independent surveys or with the estimates of the Kennedy camp.

"The fight in the Democratic Party is over as far as I'm concerned," Strauss said. He said Kennedy is finished. "I think we've got to ignore him," Strauss said. "He's yesterday's news as far as we're concerned. Ronald Reagan is today's news."

But Strauss said he expects a heated debate, and a sharp attack on Carter economic policy when Kennedy speaks to the convention during Tuesday night's platform debate.

Kennedy took a hard line against Carter in a New York speech on Friday, repeating a primary campaign attack that likened him to Herbert Hoover and said the country has had four years too many of the current Democratic administration.

Strauss said attacks like that can hurt the Democratic ticket in the fall. "But what are we going to do about it, kill ourselves?" Strauss said.

He said the president's camp has tried to be conciliatory, agreeing to the prime time speech by Kennedy, offering concessions on convention arrangements, and hoping that the challenger will, in the end, support a Carter ticket.

"We've done all we can do," Strauss said. "... There's a limit to how much begging you can do."

Meanwhile, the League of Women Voters was reported ready to announce guidelines for participation in three presidential campaign debates this fall, and aides to Rep. John B. Anderson said the independent candidate would qualify to take part.

November in the aftermath of the seizure of the U.S. Embassy and hostages.

Khomeini has given the Parliament responsibility for deciding the future of the American hostages. Officials in Tehran say such a debate cannot take place until after the installation of a new, permanent government.

Many in the IRP favor putting the Americans on trial as "spies," an idea opposed by Bahi-Sadr, who wants to end the crisis swiftly and peacefully.

Last week, the Majlis speaker announced that the hostage debate was being postponed still further because of the U.S. detention of almost 200 pro-Khomeini demonstrators in Washington. He also said the Majlis had called on judicial officials to begin preparing the grounds for a trial of the hostages.

The detained Iranians were released by U.S. authorities last Tuesday, but since then there has been no reported comment from Tehran officials on whether they were planning to go ahead with a trial of the Americans.

In London, most of the 68 Iranians jailed Monday during a demonstration in front of the U.S. Embassy ended their hunger strike Saturday, British authorities said. Thirteen Iranians jailed im Manila began a hunger strike Saturday saying they will continue until they are released.

They were arrested during an anti-American march Friday in the Philippine capital. Demonstrations are banned by the Philippines' martial-law government. As in the Washington and London cases, Iranian students in Manila claimed their fellow Iranians had been "savagely beaten" in detention. Authorities in all of the cases have denied the allegations.

Twenty-eight other Iranian protesters had been jailed in San Diego as a result of a demonstration at the state university campus there last Monday, but they were released on bail Friday.

Strong Quake

By FREDDY CUEVAS
Associated Press Writer

PUERTO CORTES, Honduras (AP) — A powerful earthquake shook eastern Central America just before midnight Friday, causing at least one death and collapsing dozens of buildings in towns along the Caribbean coast, authorities reported.

They said the quake, centered in the Gulf of Honduras off this old banana port, registered between 6.5 and 6.8 on the Richter scale. It struck here at 11:47 p.m. — 1:47 a.m. Saturday EDT — and was felt in much of Honduras, Belize and parts of Guatemala.

Almost all of the reported damage was in Puerto Cortes or in the nearby Guatemalan town of Puerto Barrios. But Honduran officials noted that communications had been knocked out to many villages on the coast and in the northern Honduran hills.

The tremor sent tens of thousands of terrified residents in all three countries fleeing from their homes, authorities said.

Puerto Cortes fire department officials said at least 75 wooden houses collapsed here, and three persons were injured by falling walls or ceilings. Part of a hotel also crumbled, and a refinery of Texaco Caribbean and a rail line owned by United Brands were damaged, the officials said.

In Puerto Barrios, Guatemala, two houses collapsed but there were no injuries reported.

In Belize City, about 100 miles north of the reported epicenter, authorities said the quake was felt but there were no reports of damage. The area of Belize between here and Belize City is sparsely populated.

The tremor was not felt in Guatemala City.

Support Hinson

By JAMES SAGGUS
Associated Press Writer

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Three top state Republican leaders say they will continue to support the re-election campaign of Rep. Jon Hinson, who has disclosed his involvement in two incidents in places "frequented by some of Washington's homosexual community."

"These things took place at a time when he was caught up in emotional problems, before I ever heard of the guy," said former state GOP chairman Wirt Yerger Jr., a top Hinson supporter in 1978. "He had solved the problems and put them behind him by 1978, and he's done an outstanding job since then."

Hinson said at a news conference Friday that he was arrested in September 1976 in Arlington, Va., on charges of committing an obscene act, the nature of which he did not describe. He said he paid a $100 fine for creating a public nuisance.

Dorm Room Planning Is Needed

Demand for student housing on many of the campuses in the University System is certain to cause problems for the University and for the legislature unless great care is taken in evaluating the situation and planning its solution.

At East Carolina, Appalachian, Winston Salem State, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, N.C. Central, UNC-Asheville and on other campuses, campus housing slots are filled for this fall and there are waiting lists of students who want a roof over their heads. At most of the institutions, officials say that natural attrition during the fall semester will take care of the problem even though there has been doubling-up in room assignments.

The situation is drastically different from that of several years ago when a number of dormitories on many of the state's campuses were closed because students preferred to live off campus. In the past couple of years, for whatever reasons, the trend back to the campus has accelerated. At least in part it is probably due to economic reasons, the fact that a dorm room is considerably cheaper than the pro-rata share of apartment rental. It is also partially due to the changing cycles of student life style. It is again fashionable to live on campus.

Administrators on many campuses, as they look to budget planning for another biennium, are certain to be weighing the need for additional dormitories to meet student demand. That means the legislature is going to have to weigh the same question even though few if any state dollars have gone into building dormitories in the past decade. Dormitories on state campuses have been paid for out of dorm rentals paying off long-term bond issues of the individual institutions.

The new peak in demand for campus housing in North Carolina comes at the same time universities all over the nation are bracing themselves for what is expected to be a decline in college enrollment. The reason, of course, is that over the next two decades, the number of traditional college-age people in this nation will be lower than at any time since the generation of post-World War II youngsters began entering college. While North Carolina's University System is projecting a modest enrollment increase during the period, it is partially predicated on the theory that an increasing number of older adults — "non-traditional students" — may be returning to college.

Even if one assumes it is possible to accurately predict changes in the cycles of life style of college students, North Carolina's educational institutions have to take a realistic look at the pool of potential students who will be available in the years immediately ahead.

They must be careful not to let the immediate demand for dormitory housing on many campuses to lead them into unsound long range plans for dormitory rooms which may not be needed by the time they are ready for occupancy.

"'Course, the joke's on him! That dumb bunny hasn't read the book!"

New Facilities Should Help Center

It took a lot of work — and there is still more to do — but the official ground breaking was held for a $4.87 million recreation and housing complex to serve the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center last week.

A last minute supplemental appropriation had to be wrangled through Congress this year, a nearly impossible task. Some additional funds still have to be raised to complete the project, but it is indeed underway.

SUNDAY MORNING

Slash Creek Oysters

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — When Hughes Tillett first heard of some oysters in North Carolina which spurted growth up to five inches in one year, it sounded like a tall tale.

Fishermen kept talking about oysters in Slash Creek near Cape Hatteras that were the biggest around. Tillett, a marine advisory agent in manteo for N.C. State University's Sea Grant program, set out some trays of baby oysters no bigger than BB shots.

The oysters grew so fast that Tillett had a hard time keeping them from smothering one another. The average oyster takes two years to grow big enough to harvest. Tillett's were that big in one year.

A biologist at the University of Maryland ran tests, and found that growth sterols normally found in oysters were present in the Slash Creek oysters in double amounts.

Is there something special in the water? Or, wonders the marine experts, is Slash Creek one of the last remaining places where an oyster can get a decent meal? Is it possible that Slash Creek oysters are "normal" while all others are just stunted versions produced by changes in the environment?

Boll Weevil

Chartreuse traffic cones mounted on poles have become familiar along North Carolina roads of late. They are not put there by some disoriented highway worker.

Some 50,000 of them are in place to trap boll weevils, according to State Department of Agriculture Pest Administrator Howard Singletary.

Each trap costs about 45 cents: a plastic cup, a screen wire, a cigarette filter, a plastic box, and some paint.

A material which attracts weevils lures them into the trap which is inspected periodically to determine if pesticides are needed in the area.

Big Savings

Little things can mean a lot. Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw says Tar Heels are already saving more than 900,000 gallons of gasoline each year from changes in traffic control systems.

Already, 21 cities and

towns have changed their traffic lights to night-time flashing instead of stop-and-go. That, alone, is saving 320,000 gallons, Bradshaw says.

If all of the 4,600 signals on state roads were changed, it would save over three million gallons a year.

Bradshaw is also pushing yield signs in place of stop signs where feasible, better signal timing, and more right turns on red.

Still Rural

A measure of how rural North Carolina remains despite the growth of cities and towns comes from the State Health Division of the Department of Human Resources.

More than half the homes in the state are still on septic tank systems rather than public sewers. That's more than one million houses, with more than 50,000 being added each year.

Edward Terrell, staff assistant with the sanitation branch, says such widespread use of septic tanks, coupled with growing water usage in the home, make it critical that septic systems be properly installed and handled.

State inspectors help determine if the soil will handle the load; if placement is correct; and if installation is proper. And when troubles arise, they advise what to do.

Sunday Morning Notes

A couple of weeks ago David Stevens, ECU attorney, and lieutenant governor for division 7-N of the Kiwanis, received a call asking him to meet Jim Storie, governor-elect of the Carolinas District, Kiwanis International on a specified afternoon.

The message said the governor-elect and three other Kiwanians would be arriving at the Greenville airport. As a Kiwanis lieutenant governor Stevens readily accepted the assignment as part of his duties. He showed up at the airport on time and the private plane arrived.

The group exchanged greetings and Stevens asked, "Where do you want me to take you?"

Stevens, who knows his five-county district pretty well, noted with surprise that there wasn't any charter night ceremony scheduled.

That sent them all scurrying to the pay phone. They pooled their change and started calling.

Turned out there was a charter night ceremony, all right. It was in Greenville, South Carolina.

By that time some violent thunderstorms had developed and it was inadvisable for the visiting Kiwanians to fly back to Statesville. So Stevens got them in the car to take them to his home.

Car wouldn't start. Stevens started walking in the rain and finally flagged down a Greenville Police Department patrol car which got assistance.

The group went to a local restaurant for dinner and stayed at the Stevens home for the night. The next morning they arose at 5:30 a.m. and Stevens drove them back to the airport for the flight back.

A few days later, Stevens got a letter from Ben Stinson, secretary of the Statesville Kiwanis Club.

"Back in the year 1620 there occurred a most remarkable, but unintentional incident. It seems that a bunch of folks set out from England heading for a new life in the new colony of Virginia, landed instead in what came to be known as Plymouth, Massachusetts. That accident brought this country untold riches not the least of which was an annual day of celebration called Thanksgiving. Last Thursday four pilgrims from Statesville, North Carolina took off looking for a new Kiwanis club to be chartered (and) landed in Greenville, North Carolina. That accidential landing in the wrong Greenville has produced riches for that 'entourage' far exceeding the one back in 1620.

Fishing Was No Joy

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Walter F. Mondale likes to go fishing whenever he can. His favorite fishing holes are in the north woods of Minnesota and in Canada.

But this summer he decided to try something closer. It was a mistake and he came running back to Washington, apparently preferring to face the dilemmas posed by presidential politics and Billy Carter rather than the difficulties of catching fish off New Jersey.

It all began when the vice president accepted an invitation from New Jersey Gov. Brendan Byrne to spend a vacation at the gubernatorial summer residence at Island Beach State Park. Midwesterner Mondale could try his luck casting for fish in the Atlantic Ocean.

He tried. And he tried. But his luck failed him and he headed back home about two days earlier than originally planned.

"He got tired of sitting around on the sand," said one aide. "The fish weren't biting from the surf or the boat. He caught nothing except flies."

President Carter is known for his appreciation of a pretty face.

He met briefly with two of them at once the other day, when he posed for pictures with Miss U.S.A. and Miss Universe. He did not object when photographers suggested that an appropriate picture would show the two planting kisses on his cheeks simultaneously.

Other Editors Say Anti-Nuke Kooks

(Goldsboro News-Argus)

Those who are so determinedly opposed to nuclear powered generating plants will get a lesson in basic economics this winter.

Carolina Power and Light Co.'s nuclear plant in Brunswick has been shut down for repairs for several weeks. As a result, the company has had to purchase electricity from other utility companies.

CP&L can produce electricity with its nuclear plant at Southport for 90 cents per 1,000 kilowatt hours. But when it goes outside to purchase power from non-nuclear sources, it has to pay $4.50 for the same amount.

The customer, of course, must bear that increased cost burden.

The strongest argument in favor of nuclear power is its considerably lower cost. Those opposed to nuclear plants, having failed in banning them by law, have constantly pressed for restrictions that have steadily pushed up the cost of nuclear power production. The hope, apparently, is to create an economic barrier where other anti-nuke efforts have failed.

As all of us pay considerably higher electric bills this winter, we should keep in mind that this will be the ultimate result if not necessarily the goal of the anti-nuke kooks.

Illinois Loyalty To Jimmy

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

CHICAGO — The hopelessness of efforts to deprive President Carter of renomination can be appreciated by tracing the course of the Illinois delegation in general and State Treasurer Jerry Cosentino in particular during the 10 days before the Democratic National Convention in New York.

The possibility that Cosentino, a state Carter- for-President leader and delegation co-chairman, might provoke substantial numbers of Carter delegates into rebellion excited Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's campaign and alarmed the White House. That rebellion was aborted by a combination of the Carter campaign's diligence (utilizing the first lady and vice president) and the inflexibility of the "reformed" nominating process.

So, there will be few defectors among Carter's 163 (out of 179) Illinois delegates Monday night at Madison Square Garden when they vote on the rule to bind themselves to last March's primary outcome. Cosentino will go along with the president, though he fears the worst Nov. 4 against Ronald Reagan. Here is Il-

Strength For Today

THE LONG LOOK

Someone has said that the thing which embitters all loss and deepens sorrow is the feeling that the world is all and that nothing lies beyond the grave. If we cannot look beyond the grave for the final adjustment of life's difficulties and the righting of all wrongs, then we are hopeless indeed.

Fourtunately the Christian has resources with which to combat such an attitude. Although he will strive for justice here on earth, he will not feel crushed if his efforts appear temporarily to be unavailing. He knows that there is a future in which God's will prevails.

Loss we shall have, and sorrow. just as God makes the sun to shine upon the good and upon the evil, and sends his rain upon the just and the unjust, so does he permit failure as well as achievement to be the lot of the saint as it is so often the lot of the sinner.

In order to see the final triumph of the good we need to bring eternity into the focus of our vision.

Retirement: A Dream Delayed

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Smaller, less elaborate houses. Two or more households sharing one house. Smaller automobiles. Smaller families. Shorter and less expensive vacations. Wives working to bring in a second income.

Willingly in some instances, forced to in others, Americans have made many adjustments to fend off the impact of inflation, higher taxes, high interest rates and, in general, economic deterioration.

To that list might be added another: a possible change in the trend of Americans workers to retire by age 65 or before, a trend that got its greatest impetus from the enactment of Social Security in the 1930s.

Now, researchers say, evidence is building that more Americans will be delaying retirement, not only because of federal legislation delaying mandatory retirement to 70 from 65, but because of severe inflation.

Studies by Morgan Guaranty suggest "there is a good chance that the decade of the eighties will see a reversaL in the historic pattern: a rising, rather than a falling, participation rate for older workers."

In 1900, the study shows, two of every three men aged 65 or more were at work or were looking for work. By 1950, just under half of that age group was in the work force. And by the mid-1970s only 20 percent.

The trend of retirement at 65 or before has been more pronounced for women also, despite their increasing presence in the labor force. But analysts wonder if that trend also might bend before inflation.

"At today's underlying rate of inflation of close to 10 percent," the Morgan study points out, "the buying power of the dollar would be cut in half in a scant seven years." The rule of thumb: to find the years it takes to halve the dollar, divide the inflation rate into 72.

Cost-of-living escalators might keep Social Security payments at about the same buying power in the future, but that isn't at all true of most private pensions, which havE no such automatic increase mechanisms.

These financial factors — plus greater life expectancy, a possible need for their experience, an$ a change in the mandatory retirement age — could make themselves felt very soon, despite government projections.

What is certain is that the 80-year decline in work participation by those 65 or over is slowing, and it isn't difficult to draw a correlation betwean that fact and the reality of worsening inflation.

It isn't all bad. If many older workers are forced to delay retirement it could solve as many problems as it creates.

Younger workers feel the competition might delay their progress, but many of them also might be greatly relieved to realize that some of the burden of paying pensions would be taken off their shoulders.

Social Security could benefit, of course, from having workers pay into the plan over a longer work span, while receiving benefits for a relatively shorter perid. And industry too might benefit from the wisdom, skills and steadier work performance of older workers.

But in another context, if workers are forced to delay retirement because of finances it will mean a little more yeast gone out of the American dream.

The young learned it; they can't buy houses. Drivers learned it; they can't afford big cars. Families learned it; they can't feed, clothe and educate as many children as they once could. Vacationers learned it; they can't travel to Europe this year. Wives learned it; they went back to work for the finer things, but inflation instead grabbed the money.

Reagan Widens Lead

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — In the latest nationwide Gallup Poll, completed last Sunday, Ronald Reagan has substantially widened his lead over President Jimmy Carter and independent candidate John Anderson. Reagan now wins the support of 45 percent of registered voters to 31 percent for Carter and 14 percent for Anderson.

In the previous Gallup trial heat, conducted in mid-July, Reagan led with 37 percent to 34 percent for Carter and 21 percent for Anderson, who for the first time has suffered a significant decline in support. Prior to the current survey, Anderson's support had stayed within a narrow six-point-range, varying from 18 to 24 percent.

Not only has the Anderson vote slipped sharply but enthusiasm for the Illinois congressman is lower than that recorded for either Reagan and Carter. While about one-third of registered voters who choose either Reagan or Carter in the latest trial heat say they strongly support their candidate, only about one Anderson backer in seven (14 percent) now describes his or her support as strong.

As in previous trial heats, Anderson's support comes about equally from both Carter and Reagan. In the current survey, he draws eight percentage points from Reagan and six from Carter.

Here is the question asked to determine the relative strength of Reagan, Carter and Anderson:

"Suppose the presidential election were being held TODAY. If President Jimmy Carter were the Democratic candidate, running against Ronald Reagan, the Republican candidate, and John Anderson, the independent candidate, which would you like to see win?"

Those who named another person or who were undecided were asked:

"As of today, do you lean more to Carter, the Democrat, to Reagan, the Republican, or to Anderson, the independent?"

Carter vs. Reagan vs. Anderson

	Reagan	Carter	Anderson	Other/ Undecided
LATEST (Aug. 1-3)	45%	31%	14%	10%
July 11-14	37	34	21	8
June 27-30	37	32	22	9
June 13-16	33	35	24	8
May 30-June 2	32	39	21	8
May 16-19	32	40	21	7
May 2-5	33	38	21	8
April 26-27	35	38	19	8
April 11-14	34	42	18	6
March 28-31	34	40	21	5

Carter Suffering Record Defection

At the present time Carter is suffering serious losses of his own party members, with only about half of Democratic voters choosing Carter in the latest trial heat. The president's current rate of defection even exceeds that recorded for Sen. George McGovern in a test election against President Richard Nixon in the summer of 1972.

Among all registered voters the president scores slightly better in his native South than elsewhere, but even here Reagan holds the lead, with 45 percent to 36 percent for Carter and 9 percent for Anderson, as seen in the table below:

Reagan vs. Carter vs. Anderson

	Reagan	Carter	Anderson	Other/ Undecided
NATIONAL	45%	31%	14%	10%
Republicans	80	8	8	4
Democrats	24	50	13	13
Independents	48	18	22	12
East	43	30	15	12
Midwest	48	25	17	10
South	45	36	9	10
West	42	34	16	8
18-29 years	41	29	20	10
30-49 years	50	23	14	13
50 and over	43	37	11	9
College background	46	27	19	8
High school	44	32	13	11
Grade school	43	37	4	16

Responses to another survey question indicate that none of the three candidates can boast of very solid or enthusiastic backing, least of all Anderson. Large majorities say they "only moderately" rather than "strongly" support the candidate of their choice in the latest trial heat.

The sharpest decline in enthusiastic support since the previous (July) survey has been the 17 percent fall-off for Anderson. The comparable drop for Carter was 10 points and for Reagan three.

Following is the question asked:

"How strongly would you say you favor (name of candidate) — very strongly or only moderately strongly?"

Strength Of Support
(Based on registered voters)

Reagan
LATEST (Aug. 1-3)	35%	63%	2%

July 11-14	44	55	1
Anderson
LATEST (Aug. 1-3)	14	84	2
July 11-14	31	65	4

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 938 registered voters out of a total sample of 1,261 adults, 18 and older, conducted in scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period Aug. 1-3.

Switch To Lethal Gas In N.C. Brought Protests

By NOEL YANCEY

The first lethal gas execution at Raleigh's Central Prison brought indignant protests and a precipitated debate on whether it's kinder to kill a person by gas or electricity.

"This was the most terrible and horrible thing I ever looked at," said Wake County Coroner Lawrence M. Waring, who had witnessed 72 electrocutions and five hangings, after he saw the state put Allen Foster, a 20-year-old black, to death in its brand new gas chamber on January 24, 1936.

"I think it's an awful butchery," commented W.T. Bost, the dean of Raleigh newspapermen who had witnessed 156 electrocutions, several hangings and two lynchings. "There are ways and ways of killing a man and almost any way is better than this," added Bost who was opposed to capital punishment.

Three of four physicians who attended the execution said Foster was fully conscious and in obvious pain for two and a half to three minutes after he first inhaled the deadly gas.

"I would not say he was tortured," said Dr. George S. Coleman, the prison physician who had officiated at 40 electrocutions, "but the least that could be said was that the man was in acute distress, obvious to those who watched him. There is no doubt in my mind that electricity is the most humane method."

Dr. Kemp Neal agreed, saying that electricity was much preferable because the loss of consciousness was instantaneous in an electrocution.

Warden H.H. Honeycutt, who had seen 156 men die in the electric chair, said Foster's death agonies had sickened him and there was no doubt in his mind that electrocution, or even hanging, was much to be preferred.

But Dr. Charles a. Peterson, the Mitchell County Republican legislator who sponsored the bill to switch from electrocution to the gas chamber after witnessing one electrocution. demurred, saying he was satisfied that Foster felt no pain and that "the new method is more humane than electricity."

But newspaper accounts of the execution said that Foster, a Birmingham, Ala., native, accused of raping a white woman, "suffered obviously and consciously" for at least three of the 11 minutes that elapsed before he was pronounced dead.

A newspaper editorial called the execution "a terrible spectacle" and said the General Assembly had passed Peterson's bill because "he was a good fellow" without giving any "real study to determine the most humane method of destroying life."

But newspaper accounts of the second lethal gas execution at Central Prison a week later were entirely different. One account said that Ed Jenkins, a Bessemer City white man convicted of murdering

Restoring Old House Was No Easy Task

COAL CITY, Al. — The early American house was being restored to its original structural design.

The owner lead me through, explaining the problems involved in restoring a 140-year-old house. A major problem was the woodwork in baseboards, door facings, floors and mantles. No one he had hired seemed to be able to return the wood to its original condition.

The owner's wife said, "Mr. Smokey Taylor is the salvation of this house. One day nothing was going right, so I called him, and he said he had retired in July. I started crying and said, 'You just can't retire.' He came by that afternoon and just took over."

Smokey Taylor is one of the few remaining woodworkers who has the skill and understanding of wood which characterized the old time cabinet makers. However, he's not much of a conversationalist.

I found him Sunday morning dressed in the usual overalls, and reclining in an easy chair at his house in Coal City, Alabama.

How has wood changed in the 45 years Smokey Taylor has been a craftsman?

"It's changed all kind of doggone ways."

"I was born into it. My daddy had an ol' time sawmill and planer."

Since the time he was too small to see over machines in his father's shop, Taylor has been practicing the craft of wood work.

From rebuilding old wooden school buses to restoring wood supports between metal sheets of cars; from Savannah, Georgia to Ragland, Alabama to Louisville, Kentucky; from construction work to handmade cabinets to reproducing antiques, Taylor understands wood.

"There are no more ol' time cabinet men — now most are box builders, (staple gun) trigger pullers. They don't know nothing about how to design or do quality work. The biggest proportion is not interested in quality work, but a time clock — not all of them are like that, but most of 'em are.

"I bought something else with my money besides four-wheel drives, junk tools and deer rifles. I bought the necessities of life and more good tools to work with.

"I am a tool fanatic. I'll buy anything from a computerized fountain pen to water bed work boot if it can offer the same high quality. If it can do the job better and faster, it's sold.

"In 1936 I borrowed $350 from I.C. Hellman and bought two pieces of equipment, and along with a few tools I had accumulated I put up a shop at Dayton Street in Savannah, Georgia.

"That was the beginning, and I've never been without work since.

"The key to a cabinet man having work is to do quality work at a reasonable price, but a high enough price to make a living. Only way you can do it is turn out something that can't be got some place else. You're not a cabinet maker in three or four years. You're a craftsman after years and years of work."

Most of Taylor's life has been spent working in other aspects of wood just to support his shop and his desire to reproduce the sturdy old fashioned furniture styles.

When he arrived in Pell City to open a furniture shop in 1963, he did construction work during the week and helped his wife Virginia in the shop on weekends.

"I didn't have much time to spend in the cabinet shop then, and that's where Vergie came in. she worked in the shop, mostly in furniture work. She's one of the best finishers that can be found.

"It came to her natural like it did to me. She used to build doll houses and rent them out to her sisters. If they didn't pay up, she'd evict them."

Currently, Taylor works only on special projects, like the 140-year-old house, and on reproducing antiques.

"The shop is not open for the general public, just special work. Any work in there will be done by me. No more payrolls or contracts that will put me in a bind.

"When I finish a desk or bed I'll put it up for sale. I'm not making any more orders, 'cause people will be wanting to know if it is finished every week.

"I'm a little above average in price and far ahead in quality, but I'm still broke — have been and always will be.

"It costs more to build high quality cabinets than it does junk like our average fly-by-night builders."

Inside the Taylor home the furniture is a collection of styles and ages. Only the cabinets in the kitchen are of the famous Taylor handwork.

"If I was a shoemaker, I'd be barefooted," he laughed.

The Tomato Invasion Finally Hits Home

Last Sunday some friends of ours came over for sandwiches. "You can have ham, lettuce, and tomato or bacon, lettuce, and tomato. I'll even fix you a tomato quiche," I said. "But if you don't want anything with tomatoes, you can turn around and get back in your car."

I hate to be like that, but every summer we are overwhelmed with homegrown tomatoes. It's not that we don't like tomatoes, but at our house they are served on the breakfast cereal. That's the only way we can eat them all.

And we don't even grow them. Our entire summer stock is supplied by desperate gardeners who have come to suspect that the tomato may be the next species to take over the earth. Every time I pass a garden filled with heavy-laden tomato plants, I thank God that the highway department chose to plant kudzu.

The only thing more incredible than the fertility of the average tomato plant is the number of schemes the average tomato grower can hatch to get rid of his excess produce. One head of a department at a Charlotte bank took bread, mayonaise, and tomatoes to work and announced, "Everybody's eating in today."

This was universally mistaken by his apartment-dwelling staff as generosity until one man who didn't care for tomatoes tried to leave at lunch time.

He found his boss blocking the doorway. "If you leave," the department head said in an apologetic tone of voice, "I'll have to fire you."

The coercion Phillip and I have experienced has been a little subtler but just as effective. New neighbors are easy prey for the tomato-grower. Practically every person on the block came to welcome us with a bag of tomatoes. For the past three weeks our daily diet has included salad, tomato juice, tomato soup, stewed tomatoes, fried tomatoes, and a baked tomato suprise.

We've eaten so many tomatoes that our skin has even begun to get ruddy. Just yesterday I noticed that I clashed with my lavender dress.

Phillip's aversion to this insidious fruit has become so strong that he actually walked barefoot in the poison ivy and then tried to pass it off as a tomato allergy. He was so distraught when he saw yet another neighbor walking up the sidewalk with a paper bag, he suggested that we refuse to answer the door.

"I have to," I said. "I can't be rude."

"Then throw them away after she leaves," he begged.

"And it's too bad. Then at least the birds might eat some," he said acidly.

I opened the door while he mustered a sick smile and accepted the bag from our visitor. "Hi, I brought you some fresh lima beans," she said.

She looked bewildered. "No . . ."

Importance Of Learning English Still Is Valid

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — In the matter of bilingual education, the do-gooders 12 years ago set out to do good. A sufficient time has elapsed to warrant sober re-examination of a project that once seemed so wise and humane. The program may be taking us down paths we will live to regret.

Back in 1964, the Civil Rights Act prohibited discrimination by reason of national origin in any program funded in part by federal taxes. In 1968, the problem of the non-English speaking pupil was addressed specifically: The Elementary and Secondary School Act provided modest funds for bilingual education. In 1974, the Supreme Court weighed in with its unanimous decree in Lau vs. Nichols.

The case is worth recalling because it spells out the underlying fairness and justice behind the concept of bilingual instruction. In San Francisco, the local schools had enrolled 2,856 students of Chinese ancestry who could not speak English. About 1,000 of them were receiving supplemental courses in English, but roughly 1,800 were not.

Mrs. Kam Wai Lau sued the San Francisco school board on behalf of her son, Kinney Kinmon Lau, and other Chinese children. The lower federal courts denied relief, on the grounds that the school board had not created their problem and thus had no duty to resolve it. Speaking for the Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Douglas said it was not so simple a matter. Under California law, English is the basic language of instruction in the public schools; all pupils are required to master English, and no pupil can be graduated without such proficiency.

"Under these state-imposed standards," said Douglas, "there is no equality of treatment merely by providing students with the same facilities, textbooks, teachers and curriculum; for students who do not understand English are effectively foreclosed from any meaningful education."

That reasoning cannot well be challenged. A child has a right to an education, but if he cannot speak or read the language in which the education is offered, the right becomes a mockery. With all justices concurring, the court ordered San Francisco to institute affirmative remedial efforts.

Given that encouragement, a rush toward bilingual programs began. In the current fiscal year, $167 million is spread among the states; the request for fiscal '81, now in a House subcommittee, is for $192 million. Upward of 300,000 children are participating nationwide. Some 65 percent of them are from Spanish-speaking households; other large groups speak Asian tongues or native American (Indian or Eskimo) dialects.

If official bilingualism could be confined strictly to elementary instruction, as a tool of temporary use, the program might be endorsed without reservation. In a few other areas — the courts, for example, and the voting booth — official bilingual policies may be defended.

But an uneasy observation is in order that when do-gooders set out to do good, there often is no stopping them before they do harm. The educational bureaucracy is like every other bureaucracy: It multiplies by cellular division. Programs expand to spend the money appropriated for them. Bilingualism is spreading to the point that in the Miami area, efforts are underway to conduct a November referendum that would restore Dade County, officially speaking, to an English-only locality.

It is time to pause and reflect. One of the most vital elements of our society is that we share not only a common law and a common currency, but a common language also. English is a part of the tie that binds us together. To the extent that we encourage official bilingualism, we tend to dissolve that cultural adhesive. Pushed too far — pushed beyond the remedial point required by the court — such policies are bound to divide our people, to foster bloc and faction, and to raise linguistic barriers among us.

In times past millions of immigrants have managed to master English without elaborate forms of federal aid. They have kept their ethnic tradition in their homes and churches and shops, but in public matters they have accepted English as their first language, not their second. It would be a grave error, as I see it, to let that wise system yield to a trendy and doubtful cause.

linois loyalty that nails down Carter's renomination.

That was not certain as the Billy Carter affair came to dominate the headlines. Illinois seemed shaky. Not only did the president have more delegates from here than any other state because of his March primary landslide, but most were "Carter worshipers" (the contemptuous description by a pro-Carter professional). Thus, any major Illinois defection would be leveraged across the country.

That's why Cosentino, one of the few practicing politicians on the delegation, quickly got the Carter camp's attention when he commented that he as president would not press for a binding rule. It seemed possible that he might vote against Carter on the rules fight. Would that presage Illinois defections on the nomination itself?

Apart from the rules fight's merits, Cosentino reflected the mood among Democratic politicians here and elsewhere: pessimism about November, skepticism about Carter's general election campaign strategy. Cosentino insists the president cannot carry Illinois until he makes peace with Chicago's pro-Kennedy Mayor Jane Byrne, but feels the advice goes unheeded. "There is no input to these people," Cosentino told us.

His gloom is common among the state's Democratic politicians. Secretary of State Alan D!xon, who once viewed an easy road to the U.S. Senate this year but now is threatened by a Reagan landslide, has called for an open convention. Dixon is signaling that he wants neither to displease Mayor Byrne nor pick up an unwanted Carter label.

Dixon, like most Illinois office-holders, is not a delegate. Only a quarter of the delegation has any previous identity in politics, and scarcely 5 percent of those could be called "regulars." Consequently when Carter operatives here reported some 25 defectors on the rules fight with a possibility of a great deal more than that, mayday sounded at the White House.

Cosentino, a burly 49-year-old ex-truck driver and self-made businessman, was summoned to Washington for two days of hand-holding. He conferred privately with Vice President Walter F. Mondale and Campaign Chairman Robert S. Strauss and was taken out for a high-priced dinner.

Carter's telephone brigade targeted the Illinois delegates wavering on the rules fight. Bud Loftus, a well-known Democrat from suburban DuPage County, was telephoned by Rosalynn Carter herself. Tony Scariano, a veteran liberal from Chicago Heights, received uninterrupted telephone promptings, from Mondale on down.

This campaign, coupled with the solid pro-Carter front at the governors conference in Denver and the president's effective televised explanation of the Billy affair, calmed the rebellion. Cosentino climbed back on board. Loftus is now undecided. Scariano still opposes the binding rule (while vowing to support Carter in any event), but he is now among a diminishing number of rules rebels — perhaps less than 15. That's not enough to make a stir.

The rebellion collapsed so quickly in part because no viable alternative was sighted. Cosentino calls himself a "moderate-to- conservative" and abhors Kennedy as "the biggest liar in politics." But he has no love for the Democratic right's longtime champion, Sen. Henry M. Jackson; when Jackson upbraided the Carter record at a party fund-raiser in Chicago this year, Cosentino snorted "This is ridiculous" and walked out.

He contends Democrats had better stick with Carter, like it or not — reflecting fatalism and frustration among Illinois Democratic politicians identical to the attitude of the governors in Denver. The politicians here think the president will be sandbagged by Byrne in Chicago, could be devastated by Reagan in the suburban "collar" counties surrounding Chicago and is dead among the downstate farmers. But they are stuck with him, will back him in New York and then hope for a Trumanesque miracle.

As I Recall It ...

a friend as the climax to a July 4 argument, "died without apparent suffering."

Dr. Coleman told reporters he had changed his mind and now felt that asphyxiation was as humane as electrocution. He joined Dr. W.C. Davison, dean of the Duke University Medical School, and Dr. F.M. Hanes, a Duke Medical School professor, in issuing a statement saying that Jenkins had stopped breathing nine seconds after inhaling the cyanic fumes.

"We beleive that this man died painlessly and that the method of execution was humane," the doctors concluded.

Oscar Pitts, then acting prisons director, said he was convinced gassing is more humane and that it "has come to stay in North Carolina."

Prison officials said they have made two changes during the week that may have accounted for the big difference. They said that on the advice of another state which executed by cyanic gas they had changed the formulas for the gas, and they had heated up the death chamber which had been below freezing when Foster was executed. The fact that Jenkins was much older and in much poorer physical condition than Foster also may have been a factor.

But the debate did not end there, and Dr. Coleman apparently had another change of heart. He and Warden Honeycutt backed a bill a year later to return to electrocution. The Senate Calender Committee unanimously approved the bill after hearing Coleman testify that "death by gas is painful, tedious and horrible" while electrocution "is a quick process and I feel sure is without pain." However, the measure was later killed by the full Senate.

A year later newsmen got a chance to observe both methods of killing in action on the same day when desperados Wash Turner and Bill Payne were executed for mudering a highway patrolman who had cornered them on a dead-end road near Asheville. Payne and Turner were gassed shortly after Wiley Brice, a black man, who was electrocuted for the murder of Shelley Lea in Alamance County in 1926. The Supreme Court had ruled that he had to be electrocuted because that was the method of execution prescribed by law when the killing occured.

After covering those executions and numerous others and discussing the issue in many bull sessions with other reporters, my own conclusion is that electrocution is kinder because the first jolt of electricity knocks its victim unconscious instantly and he is aware of nothing thereafter. People who are revived after being struck by lightning testify that this is so.

But I feel a person being executed by gas can die a thousand deaths between the time he is strapped in the big oak chair and is left alone in the death chamber. He can hear the massive chamber door being closed and then can hear the click as the executioner trips the switch that drops pellets of cyanide into a pail of sulphuric acid beneath his seat. Several seconds then elapse before the cloud of white gas comes boiling up around him. I have no way of being certain, but I'm convinced that the doomed man can hold his breath for a few seconds more. He probably feels no pain after he gets the first whiff of that deadly gas, but he certainly must have suffered torments during those few seconds.

Coleman testified at that legislative hearing that condemend men on Death Row had told him they would prefer electrocution because they "have a horror against gassings."

Census Lawsuit

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City and New York State filed suit Friday charging that the federal Bureau of the Census undercounted the state by one million people.

Mayor Edward I. Koch and the state's attorney general, Robert Abrams, said preliminary census results indicate the city would lose four congressional seats and Buffalo one because of the alleged undercount.

They also said more than $1 billion in federal and state aid to the city over the next 10 years is at risk.

The suit filed in federal court here named the federal Commerce Department as defendant.

Abrams said there was "a pattern of gross mismanagement and repeated errors of judgment on the part of Census officials."

"This undercount will cost New Yorkers criticaly important federal financial aid, job programs and representation in the halls of Congress," he said.

The suit, believed to be the first of its kind against the Census Bureau, asks that statistical sampling be used to determine the size of the miscount in time to be used for reapportionment purposes.

It then urges that the census figures be adjusted to reflect the undercount for both state and federal reapportionment and funding purposes.

The complaint demanded that the Census Bureau be enjoined from closing any district office until all "local review" challenges have been resolved.

There was no immediate reaction from the bureau.

When a reporter complained to him later that only photographers were allowed to witness the event in the Oval Office, the president replied:

"There's only so much temptation you can stand. I've seen you yield to lesser temptations."

The president is evidently a man willing to be kissed and to tell all about it. He tied the honors the two women won to "athletic ability."

That afternoon, he attended a ceremony on Capitol Hill honoring members of the U.S. Olympic Team and told the crowd that "as president I have had the opportunity to recognize outstanding athletic ability. A few minutes ago, I welcomed to the White House ... two beautiful young women, Miss U.S.A. and Miss Universe."

If you are trying to figure out how the presidential and vice-presidential contests are going to turn out, you might try the prognosticating equipment employed at the White House.

A set of dice has been redecorated, with each of the potential candidates' names written on a side.

Roll the dice and some interesting combinations come up. Would you believe a ticket of Walter Mondale and Edmund S. Muskie facing the Ronald Reagan-George Bush combination?

One night last week, Carter invited several members of Congress to meet with him and talk politics.

Reporters waited for the representatives in the White House driveway, hoping to get some information about the meeting. While waiting, a large rat was discovered skittering along the pavement. It was chased almost to the door of a guard house, where nervous members of the Secret Service Uniformed Division eyed the ruckus and prepared to jump from their post if the rat decided to duck in.

LBD Voted In At Blowing Rock

BLOWING ROCK, N.C. (AP) — More than half the registered voters of Blowing Rock approved liquor by the drink for their town Friday by a slim 34-vote margin.

Of the 573 votes cast, which represents about 64 percent of the town's voters, 303 votes were in favor of the mixed drinks sales, while 269 votes were against.

Election officials said one ballot was apparently missed and not counted.

The vote now makes the Wautauga County town the only northwest mountain area which can serve mixed drinks. It is also the third town in the North Carolina mountains to approve the sales.

Both Asheville and Maggie Valley have authorized mixed drink sales.

The sale of beer and wine has been a heated issue in Blowing Rock since it was permitted in 1966. The State Board of Alcoholic Control voted earlier this year to cancel the licenses of five establishments for violating the town law that allows beer and wine to be served only in Class "A" restaurants and hotels.

Three of those establishments have appealed the ruling to Wake County Superior Court.

Newsman, Photographer Testified Friday At Klan-Nazi Trial

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A Greensboro reporter and photographer testified Friday that as they watched an anti-Klan rally last Nov. 3, a group of Ku Klux Klansmen and Nazis began firing shotguns and pistols into a crowd of demonstrators.

The two said the crowd, which included children, was practicing chants for the rally when Klansmen and Nazis drove up in a motorcade and began shouting threats and obscenities.

Winston Cavin, a reporter for the Greensboro Daily News, and Donald Davis, a photographer for the Daily News and The Greensboro Record, testified in the murder trial of six Klansmen and Nazis charged with the slayings of five Communist Workers Party members and supporters last Nov. 3.

Cavin said the rally began in a "cheerleader" atmosphere, with children taking turns punching at an effigy of a Klansmen and a man playing a guitar and singing CWP songs.

"It was like a cheerleading crowd," he said. "They were getting ready for the rally, practicing their chants and songs.

"All of a sudden, I heard someone say, 'There's the Klan.' In the street in front of me was a carload of men, about six."

He said in one car with about six men in it, he could see pistols in the laps of two of the men.

Cavin said the Klansmen and Nazis exchanged taunts with the communist group. As the car moved slowly down the street with its windows rolled down, he said, the men inside shouted threats and obscenities.

"I heard the word 'niggers' a lot. 'We're going to get you, we're gonna get your ass,' just random things like that."

He said the crowd began chanting loudly, "Death to the Klan, Death to the Klan," and exchanging insults with the men in the motorcade.

More cars began moving by in the motorcade, he said, and some of the demonstrators ran out and kicked the cars and hit them with sticks.

Cavin said as he started across the street to get away from the commotion, he heard what sounded like gunfire.

"I heard a pop sound and I looked across the street and saw a white man standing beside a car pointing a pistol at this guy.

"I noticed several of the demonstrators pulling very small handguns about the size of Derringers out of their clothing," he said.

He said a free-for-all broke out that last only a few minutes before he heard a barrage of gunfire and saw the group of men standing around a blue Ford and a yellow van.

"A lot of people were getting out of them (the vehicles) and were already out, firing weapons into the crowd," he said. "The men were gathering at the trunk of the Ford handing out weapons right and left. There were a lot weapons."

Cavin said one man turned around and pointed a gun in his direction. "I was frightened, I thought he saw me," he said.

Asked by prosecutors if he could identify the man, Cavin pointed to defendant Coleman Pridmore.

He said the gunfire lasted only a few seconds, then the men jumped into the vehicles and drove off.

Photographer Donald Davis testified that while the fight was going on, he heard what sounded like three shots and saw a man holding a pump shotgun.

Speaking so softly at times that attorneys and the jury strained to hear him, Davis said he photographed the man with the shotgun as he was backing toward the blue Ford.

"The man was pumping the shotgun," he said. "He was backing toward a car where a bunch of men had gathered around the trunk."

Asked if he could identify the man with the shotgun, Davis pointed to defendant Pridmore.

Davis also identified defendants Lawrence Morgan and Roland Wayne Wood as two of the men he saw getting guns out of the trunk of the blue car.

During his testimony, Davis said a man wearing a denim jacket and blue jeans was attempting to open the trunk of the car.

"The trunk opened and the man in the denim jacket reached inside and straightened back up with guns," he said. Davis said the man in the denim jacket, whom he said he thought was defendant Jack Fowler, was holding what appeared to be an M-16 automatic weapon.

Davis testified that he saw the man point the gun into the crowd.

Davis said that a few seconds later when the shooting was over, he heard the van and the car starting up and made photographs of the vehicles as they were leaving.

He said as he walked around the area after the shootings, he saw a small pistol in the hand of one of the demonstrators who was bending over a man who had been shot.

A Look At North Carolina Delegates To The Demo Convention

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Democratic delegates are mostly well educated, affluent, middle-aged white-collar workers. They are closely divided among men and women, and represent almost exactly the racial makeup of the state.

That profile of the 69 delegates to the Democratic National Convention which opens Monday in New York emerges from a survey conducted by The Associated Press.

And it is in sharp contrast, in some respects, with the all-white, mosly male — but also affluent — North Carolina delegation to the Republican National Convention last month.

That is in part because of national Democratic Party rules which require even representation for women and men and set "goals" of fair representation for blacks and other minorities.

In most cases, the North Carolina delegation exceeds those goals, but it falls short slightly in giving women an equal voice.

The delegation, based on the results of the May 6 primary, is composed of 56 persons committed to support President Carter for renomination and 13 committed to Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy.

All, the AP survey found, are sticking by those commitments and intend to cast their votes for the presidential nomination in those numbers.

Gov. Jim Hunt and Sen. Robert Morgan are the chairman and vice chairman. But the Carter delegates are led by the Carter state chairman, Wallace Hyde of Asheville.

"We've been in constant touch with our delegates," said Hyde. "We don't know of a single Carter delegate that has wavered at all."

Leading the Kennedy delegation is Christopher Scott, a Winston-Salem union organizer who claims several Tar Heel Carter delegates will vote with his side on the crucial rules vote Monday to free delegates from their commitments. An AP survey found only one North Carolina Carter delegate considering voting with Kennedy on that issue.

"There will be several," he said. "If I was a Carter delegate and going to vote against the rule, I wouldn't be telling anyone."

Latane, by the way, says he wants to see Kennedy select John B. Anderson, the Republican running for president as an independent, as his Democratic running mate.

Although lawyers complain they are losing representation in North Carolina's Legislature, they are well-represented in the party. Thirteen of the delegates are lawyers, a greater number than any other occupation.

There are also a lot of educators, 11. There are six elected office-holders, including Hunt, Morgan and Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green, and another six are government workers.

The other delegate is an Indian, Della Maynor, the Hoke County register of deeds and a Carter delegate.

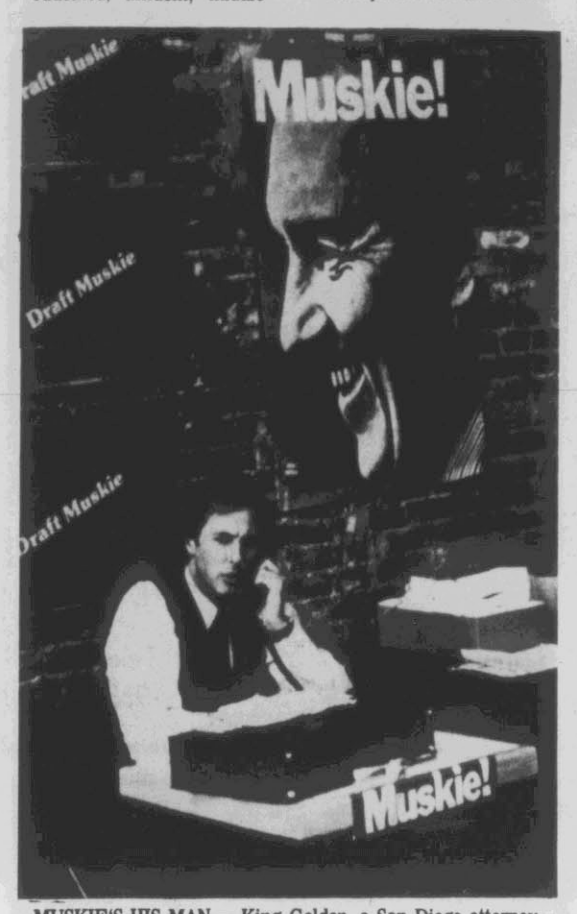
They make a lot of money. Forty-one said their household income is greater than $25,000 a year — and 26 of those said it was more than $35,000. Only one listed an income of less than $10,000.

Sixty-two have attended some college, and 42 of those have gone on to do post-graduate studies.

For most, this will be their first trip to a national convention. Only seven said they have been to a previous convention as a delegate. Among them is Hunt, who attended the 1972 and 1976 conventions, and state party chairman Russell Walker, an Asheboro state senator who went to the 1968 convention.

Thirty-seven of the delegates are men; 32 are women — giving women slightly less than the 50 percent representation the party is committed to.

The state party set a goal of 20 percent black representation, about the same percentage of blacks that make up the population of North Carolina. In fact, they exceeded that. There are 16 blacks and 52 whites.



MUSKIE'S HIS MAN — King Golden, a San Diego attorney who heads the Draft Muskie Committee, talks on the telephone Saturday in his New York office. Golden, who is working to draft Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, said Senator Edward Kennedy should withdraw from the race for nomination and called upon President Carter to release his delegates. Seize School To Protest Its Closure

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
Associated Press Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Mayor Richard Berkley and two representatives of Gov. Joseph Teasdale met Saturday with a group of adults and children who took over a high school building to protest its closing.

About 45 people, including some families, entered the three-story, brick structure Friday and ordered its principal and staff members to leave.

Doors were chained shut from the inside, and American and Mexican flags were draped from its windows. The neighborhood is largely populated by Mexican-Americans.

Authorities made no move to remove the protesters from the school, known as the West Business-Management Center, formerly West High School and now a school for specialized training. The occupying group kept in touch with outside members via walkie-talkie radio. Police stayed away.

The group, calling itself the Coalition to Preserve Education in the West Side, had demanded a meeting with Teasdale. The governor instead sent his attorney, Gene Boesch, and William J. Wasson, deputy director of the state Department of Elementary and Secondary Education.

Berkley was invited inside by the group upon his arrival. The state representatives entered the building about a half hour later.

"I never support taking over a public facility," Berkley said. "I do support the concern west side people have."

Robert D. Frerking, pastor of the Lutheran Mission of the Good Shepherd, visited the protesters and later said they were in good spirits. He said they were a "very peaceful group of people."

City School Teachers Attended Workshop

"Report Card Revision and Promotion/Retention Policy," was the title of a workshop attended by Greenville City teachers recently.

Teacher representatives from grades Kindergarden through seventh gathered at Greenville Middle School to take a look at the system's method of reporting elementary student progress to parents with the objective being to revise the report cards presently being used.

Another specific objective of the workshop, conducted in three different sessions, was to make reccomendations for a promotion, retention, and placement policy to be used by the school system. Teacher participants contaeted parents for input relative to changes to be made on the report cards.

The workshop, which had 83 participants including principals, was planned and conducted by Charles Ross and Kay Whitehurst, Directors of Instruction.

Viking's Mission Officially Ends, Begins Tumble Toward Mars

By TAMARA JONES
Associated Press Writer

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Viking I's orbiter is out of gas and contact with Earth as it begins its 75-year tumble toward the surface of Mars, a Jet Propulsion Laboratory spokesman said.

"It marks the end of an era," spokesman Alan Wood said Friday. "This is the formal end of the Viking project and, really, it's the end of the '70s for space exploration. We're looking at a long, dry period now."

Scientists cut off the orbiter's radio signal Thursday to prevent phantom signals from interfering with other spacecraft.

The Viking I orbiter transmitted its last pictures of Mars on Tuesday, but the photos haven't been processed yet. Funding difficulties could mean several weeks' delay in processing, Wood said.

The pictures are not "expected to turn up anything surprising," he said. "We've been looking at Mars since 1964."

Viking I's lander remains on the surface of Mars, where it set down July 20, 1976. It should continue transmitting weather data and one picture a week to Earth for 10 more years, Wood said. Its sister ship, the Viking II lander, quit working four months ago.

Viking I was on its 1,489th orbit of Earth's nearest planetary neighbor when scientists sent the computer command ordering the satellite to turn off the radio. The command went out at about 12:45 p.m., with confirmation coming back from the ship 30 minutes later, Wood said.

"Everything is still working," Wood said, "but we had to turn off the transmitter to keep the radio channels clear."

Viking I, which arrived at Mars on June 19, 1976, will continue orbiting the planet for at least 75 years before crashing to the surface of Mars, Wood said.

ALLEN'S AFTERMATH — Residents of a village on the southern coast of the Caribbean island of Haiti wade through rain-swollen streets left by Hurricane Allen which caused widespread destruction and at least 56 deaths. (AP Laserphoto)

Vacationers Defy Ban Due To Shark Sightings

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer

EMERALD ISLE, N.C. (AP) — Police banned swimming or surfing along a 26-mile stretch of Carteret County beach Saturday as schools of hungry sharks swam close to shore. But many sun-scorched vacationers dared the sharks and entered the water anyway.

Undeterred by the police order closing the waters to swimming, thousands of people jammed the two bridges to the Bogue Banks resorts and hundreds could be seen openly defying the police ban along the shoreline.

"They're just not paying any attention to the warning," said J. M. Tucker II, chief of police at Atlantic Beach. "And there's not much we can do but warn them.

"We can't order them out of the water, and we sure can't arrest them," he added.

Nonetheless, Tucker said the ban would continue in effect on Sunday. He said 17 separate sightings of sharks had been made on Saturday.

Tucker said he saw two sharks himself Saturday, one of them a 15-foot shark and a smaller one in just three feet of water 20 feet from shore.

"They're out there, that's for sure," he said.

Motels and cottages were filled to capacity along the string of popular Carteret County beaches, and resort operators said the closing had not driven away any tourists yet. Temperatures were in the 90s.

No one was reported injured or attacked, and motel operators hoped the unique shark scare might even draw tourists.

"At this point we're not having any adverse effect," said Doug Everette, president of the Carteret County Chamber of Commerce. "It could ends up to be an attraction — people coming down just to see the sharks."

Although many people entered the water, most appeared to be keeping close to shore. Few ventured into water above chest level.

High concentrations of sharks were first sighted Friday, and Frank Schwartz, scientist at the University of North Carolina Institute of Marrine Science, said such numbers of sharks come so close to shore only "once in a blue moon."

Others said such a phenomenon hadn't occurred in 20 years.

The main bridge to the resort, from Morehead City on the mainland to Atlantic Beach, was so jammed that cars were backed up five to six miles. Many waited two or three hours to get across to the beaches.

Lines are common on the bridge on weekends during the summer season, but many were lured by the unique shark scare and an annual Sand Bar Festival that drew 5,000 people.

"Business has never been better," said one motel operator, asking not to be identified. "There may be sharks here, but it's not stopping the people from coming. People are going to have a good time."

All beaches in the county, from Atlantic Beach west to Bogue Inlet, were closed to swimming and surfing. The beaches in between included Emerald Isle, Indian Beach and Pine Knoll Shores.

There were no reports of similar shark sightings at other North Carolina or South Carolina beach areas.

The decision by mayors at each of the beaches to ban swimming and surfing came after the first shark alert was issued Friday by the state Division of Marine Fisheries. Biologists said sharks in schools of 60 or more and weighing from 50 to 300 pounds were sighted in water as shallow as three feet.

Scientists attributed the unusual shark activity to high water temperatures, which were above 80 degrees. The warm temperatures have driven out fish sharks normally feed on, and the sharks have come closer than usual to shore looking for other food, scientists said.

"The sharks are hungry," said Connell Purvis, director of the marine fisheries division.

Tucker said he didn't know when the ban would be lifted and said it would depend on the water temperature.

"It is a unique situation that has never happened before," he said. "We're having to play it by ear and by mother nature."

As Coast Guard planes and helicopters searched for sharks by air and police patroled the beaches, many swimmers expressed no fear.

News Briefs

Says Jetty Would Create Problems

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The Oregon Inlet Bridge and the town of Nags Head on the Outer Banks would be increasingly threatened by storm damage if the government goes ahead with plans to build a jetty at the inlet, a Duke University marine geologist contends.

Orin H. Pilkey said the $75 million jetty system proposed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers would increase the chance of disaster in the event a "blowout" follows a severe storm.

Pilkey said such a blowout is the inevitable aftermath of a major storm — even one of less than hurricane proportions — along the barrier island coastline.

If the jetty is built at Oregon Inlet, Pilkey said, a blowout would eventually destroy the Herbert C. Bonner Bridge, which spans the half-mile inlet that links Pamlico Sound with the Atlantic Ocean.

Storms would also cause a new inlet to form elsewhere, Pilkey said. The most likely place is a low point at nearby Nags Head, he said.

The Corps of Engineers has proposed building the jetty system extending out into the sea at both the northern and southern edges of the inlet in an attempt to keep the inlet from shifting.

The shifting sands has already endangered the bridge and the state is trying to stop further damage.

Pilkey said he and a group of scientists who have done geologic studies of the state's coast sent a letter to the Department of the Interior protesting the proposal.

Blowouts have occurred in area in the past and have shaped Oregon Inlet and others along the Outer Banks.

Pilkey said blowouts occur when a great volume of water is blown into the sound behind the barrier islands and, when the storm subsides, the water seeks a way through the barrier islands back to the ocean.

In 1962, Oregon Inlet was widened from a half-mile to two miles by the backwash of a blowout.

A similar blowout, he said, killed 6,000 people in a Galveston, Texas, storm in 1900.

Skeptical About Reasons For Closure

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Some veteran Johnson Motor Line employees are skeptical about why the company is shutting down its operations and dismissing all 2,300 workers.

"They pulled the rug from under us," said Jerry Bradley, who logged his last day on the job Friday after 18 years of loading freight for Johnson.

Bradley, 44, earns $459 a week under a Teamsters contract.

"I think they'll try to reopen in six months or so as a nonunion operation. If they do that, all hell will break loose," said Bradley.

Pigpen Convicted Marine Released

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Marine Pvt. Scott Duncan, convicted of disobeying an order to fish through food scraps at a pig farm for discarded silverware, was released from the brig at Camp Lejeune on Friday.

Duncan's sentence to 30 days at hard labor was cut short by 10 days, said Capt. George Conroy, a spokesman for Camp Lejeune. "He was given what we call 'good time' for good behavior," Conroy said. He added that Duncan, 18, of Port Huron, Mich., returned Friday to his normal duties as an infantryman at nearby Camp Geiger.

In a special court-martial July 16, Duncan also was ordered to forfeit more than $1,100 in pay and was reduced in rank from private first class to private.

He had been charged with disobedience and disrespect to an officer in connection with the pig farm incident. He also was charged with "wrongfully using provoking language" in connection with a separate incident.

Another Marine, Pfc. Dana Gidney, also was charged by the Marine Corps with disobedience for refusing with Duncan on June 10 to go to the pig farm to look for silverware. The Marine Corps dropped the disobedience charge against Gidney last week.

Duncan's mimlitary lawyer, Capt. Carl Fisher, is seeking to have Duncan's conviction overturned in two separate appeals filed with the Marine Corps and Navy officials.

Notes From A French Traveller In Iran

(EDITOR'S NOTE — The following was written for The Associated Press by a French traveller who frequently visits Iran. He requested anonymity.)

PARIS (AP) — The long arm of the Islamic revolution reaches the lowliest bank tellers in Tehran. They refuse to accept the new French 100-franc notes because they feature a barebreasted woman.

No amount of explaining that the woman is Delacroix's vision of "Liberty Guiding the People" can persuade the clerks to touch the money. So experienced French travellers to Tehran have learned to equip themselves with old 100-franc bills.

Foreigners can pick up faint rumbles of discontent. Mahmoud, who drives a taxi-cum-bus in Tehran, told me on the drive from the airport to downtown Tehran:

"A pack of Winstons (Iran's favorite cigarette) went from 100 rials to 250 rials (about $1 to $2.50) in a month. The price of a kilo of onions has doubled. You can't get meat and a watermelon costs 700 rials ($7)! This is a revolution? We ate better before."

Another Iranian says: "Everything is banned. Forbidden to drink, forbidden to dance. They even banned music at weddings. The men sit in one room, women in the other. Even the bride and groom can't be together."

The criticisms are guarded, because Iranians who once feared the shah's secret police, SAVAK, have learned to fear in equal measure the ubiquitous revolutionary guards and their powers of summary arrest.

The Intercontinental Hotel, where most Western visitors stay, is reviled in revolutionary jargon as "the No. 2 nest of spies" — the U.S. Embassy being No.1.

Recently, revolutionary guards raided the hotel in search of a pornographic videotape. They confiscated the movie "Love Story."

With the tapes seized, the hotel's guests — rarely more than two dozen — have nothing for entertainment but an array of preaching mullahs on television.

Nine-mile-long Pahlavi Ave., originally named after the late shah's family but now Mossadegh St. in honor of the late Premier Mohammad Mossadegh who ousted the shah briefly in the early 1950s, used to be a bustling commercial center in whose bazaars you could buy anything from a bottle opener to a pair of Western jeans.

Today it is deserted, but for the occasional knot of shawled women waiting for a taxibus that contains no men.

One day the Foreign Ministry told me I had 48 hours to get out of Iran, and gave me a letter saying so. My bags were already on the plane when the immigration officer turned me back because my passport lacked the right stamp.

The following day was a Friday, the Moslem sabbath, so everything was closed and by the time business resumed my 48 hours were up. The Foreign Ministry gave me a new letter and sent me to the Ministry of National Guidance which gave me a letter to the Ministry of Immigration which gave me a letter allowing me to appear before a court that handles "foreigners' crimes."

I was fined the equivalent of $50 for being in Iran without permission and, once I had paid I finally got the necessary stamp in my passport and was able to leave.

Soviets Seize Afghan Students

MOSCOW (AP) — KGB security police have questioned about 20 Afghan students in Moscow and seized at least two who have said they want to go to the West, a source close to the Afghan student community said Friday.

The source said those held by police have made known they want neither to return to their war-torn homeland nor remain in the Soviet capital

The Soviet Union sent an estimated 100,000 troops into Afghanistan last December to shore up the pro-Soviet government and fight Moslem insurgents.

One of the students arrested Monday has been accused of illegal currency dealings, the source said.

Another Afghan student was picked up for questioning April 15, the source said, and has not been seen since.

Canadian Indians Get Gas Royalties Bonanza

FORT NELSON, British Columbia (AP) — As a financial adviser fended off "snake oil salesmen" peddling everything from cars to cattle ranches, 300 Fort Nelson Indian band members each got a $20,000 check at a private party celebrating their windfall natural gas royalties.

"They're all happy, very happy," said Dave Wilson, a security guard at the recreation center where the invitation-only dinner-dance and free bar was held Friday.

Elsewhere in town, things were quiet, but John Gowan at the Fort Nelson Hotel said that could be the "the lull before the storm ... I think there's a mood of 'what's going to happen next?'"

The local bank was to open specially today, but with the proviso that eager checkholders could draw only $1,000 because there isn't enough money to cover all checks fully.

And auto showrooms, appliance and furniture stores have been stocking up after band members checked over cars, couches and minibikes during the week.

An agreement earlier this year gives the 300-member Slave Indian Band $15 million in back royalty payments for gas wells on their property. About $6 million was being distributed to band members; the rest stays in a fund to be overseen by the Indian affairs department.

Minors will have their shares held in trust until they reach the legal age of 19.

The band hired a financial consulting firm, W.K. Smith and Associates, in May to suggest uses for the money.

And Ken Smith, who heads the company, has proposed investments in blue-chip stocks and high-interest bank deposits. But part of his job is to warn band members about bogus schemes and would-be profiteers.

Car salesmen and housing contractors have beat a path to the 2,300-acre Muskwa reserve, five miles south of Fort Nelson, to make a pitch.

Iranian Immigration To U.S. Cut Sharply

WASHINGTON (AP) — The entry of Iranians into the United States has dropped sharply since President Carter issued tough new rules last April.

Janet Graham, spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said Friday that only 984 Iranians had entered the United States since Carter's order of April 8.

She said that by comparison, more than 16,000 entered this country between the time U.S. diplomats were taken hostage in Tehran last Nov. 4 and April 8. Of those, 2,400 were resident aliens returning from trips abroad.

In April, Carter revoked all outstanding visas held by Iranians abroad. He ordered that Iranians seeking to enter this country have their visas revalidated by the State Department or U.S. consular offices abroad.

Carter ordered that new visas and revalidated visas be issued only to Iranians with close relatives here, with medical reasons for entering this country or who are seeking political asylum here.

Graham said the 984 admitted since then fit one of those three categories.

Park Ranger Doffs Uniform To Become Elizabethan Performer

By CRAIG WEBB

OCRACOKE, N.C. (UPI) — Once a day, Nancy Abernathy changes from her park ranger's uniform into a $1,500 Elizabethan outfit, sits at a harpsichord and begins talking about 16th century English life.

On North Carolina's Outer Banks, other rangers doff their Smokey Bear hats to become 1890s lifeguards. At Ocracoke Island, others patrol the federal protected seashore on native ponies.

A ranger's life on the Outer Banks these summer days involves more than protecting wildlife and snuffing fires. National Parks Service officials say the use of props, characters and costumes has grown during the past five years to become the service's most popular feature. The extras are a hit with the rangers, too, because they explain coastal life while they entertain.

"When I'm wearing my ranger's uniform the kids don't always listen," Ms. Abernathy said. "But when I'm in my costume the kids are enthralled."

On Roanoke Island, where the English in 1585 and 1587 made their first attempts to settle the New World, Ms. Abernathy puts on her 13-piece outfit and Nick Hodsdon dons his gentleman's clothes to portray upper-class British. They speak with Elizabethan accents, play period instruments and dance to tunes that Roanoke Island's settlers probably enjoyed.

"Music wasn't just a pastime for the Elizabethans; it was the crux of their whole culture," she said.

The songs of later residents are featured in other programs on the Cape Hatteras and Cape Lookout national seashores. Once a week, Hodsdon plays the sea tunes and chanteys, courting songs and ballads that were popular a few generations back.

"A good ship owner would pay top dollar to a good chanteyman who could sing good chanteys, because that set the pace and got the work done," he said.

Connie Mason, Hodsdon's counterpart for the Cape Lookout seashore, said most of the Outer Banks songs were sad — reflections of bitter existences on a bleak ribbon of sand.

But she added there were a few joyous ones. They included "Booze Yacht," the humorous tale of the day during Prohibition when a schooner smuggling illegal whiskey ran aground and had to toss its load overboard, where it soon washed ashore to thirsty natives.

Stranded ships were common in the area, as was the federal Lifesaving Service (forerunner of the Coast Guard). Every Thursday, the various stations were to roll out their equipment and test it. Now the parks service recreates the drill at the old Chicamacomico Lifesaving Station, with the participants dressed in the same kind of wool and cotton uniforms their predecessors wore.

At Ocracoke Island, rangers are recreating history and saving gasoline as well by using the island's ponies for beach patrol.

Besides patrolling, some islands rangers wear pirate costumes to portray shipmates of Blackbeard and Stede Bonnett, who used the island and its neighboring shallow waters as hideouts.

Soviet Jokes

By SERGE SCHMEMANN Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — It wasn't long after the summer Olympics began in Moscow that the first joke surfaced. The butt was the widespread expectation that stores would be packed with food to impress visitors.

A woman calls the local food store: "Tell me, is it true that during the games we'll be able to order food by phone?"

Store manager: "Sure, and it'll be delivered over TV."

The anecdote quickly made the rounds in Moscow, adding to the rich store of topical underground humor that has become a permanent fixture of Soviet life.

They come in waves — Armenian jokes, Brezhnev jokes, food shortage jokes, Jewish jokes.

In Stalin's day they could — and often did — serve as one-way tickets to Siberia. Today they're still sometimes told in low, conspiratorial tones, and most could never be printed in the controlled press.

But they provide a vital antidote to the heavy diet of official propaganda.

Shortages of food in state stores are one of the most popular current themes. An Armenian is asked, "How's the situation with meat in Yerevan (capital of Soviet Armenia)?"

"With meat it's excellent," comes the reply. "But without it's terrible."

Or a child asks: "What came first, the chicken or the egg?" Grandmother answers: "Ah, in the old days we had both."

A listener calls the Armenian official radio: "Is it possible to ride a horse from the Hero City of Moscow to the Hero City of Odessa?"

Radio: "Yes, if it's not devoured by people in the Hero City of Kaluga."

Mimicking official rhetoric provides an inexhaustable resource for jokes. One classic: "What is the difference between capitalism and communism?" Answer: "Capitalism is the exploitation of man by man, and communism is the opposite."

The perpetual official glorification of Soviet cities supplied this one: "Is it possible to make Paris into an exemplary socialist city?"

"Of course. But it would be a terrible shame."

A new one has him officially opening the Olympic games from notes on his program, proclaiming: "O, O, O, O, O" — a reference to the five interlocking rings that are the symbol of the Olympics.

Jewish jokes have flourished with the emigration movement.

Question: "Why are Jewish babies prettier than Russian ones?" Answer: "Because they're made for export."

Or there's the one about Rabinovich, a frequent character in Jewish jokes, calling the KGB secret police: "I've lost my parrot and just want you to know I don't share its views."

PBS Specials

Among programs scheduled to be shown on PBS (UNC-CH TV), Channel 25, during the coming week, are:

— Today, 3:30 p.m. — "The Oldest Man in the Sea" documents James "Doc" Counsilman's 13 hour, 7 minute swim of the English Channel. The unusual thing about his 1979 feat, which broke the previous time record established in 1951 is that Counsilman, of Bloomington, Indiana, was 58 years old at the time. The story of his transition from a seriously overweight man with high blood pressure into a champion swimmer is the story told in this documentary.

Grant For Dance Theater

WINSTON-SALEM — North Carolina Dance Theater is one of 11 major ballet companies in the United States to receive a grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

J. Erik Hart, the company's general manager, announced that trustees of the foundation have awarded the N. C. Dance Theater a grant of $50,000. The grant is to assist the company, over a period of about three years, in developing ways to increase its earned and contributed income. Currently, the company relies on gifts, grants, and contributions to meet about half of its annual operating costs, projected at $500,000 for the coming season.

Other dance companies receiving Mellon Foundation grants in the program are: New York City Ballet, American Ballet Theater, Dance Theater of Harlem, Joffrey Ballet, Pennsylvania Ballet, San Francisco Ballet, Ballet West, Pittsburgh Ballet Theater, Eliot Feld Ballet, and Cleveland Ballet.

Hart also announced that the N. C. Dance Theater has met its fund raising goal for the fiscal year that ended July 31, and added the theater would begin its second consecutive season with an accumulated operating deficit.

Calling In From Pitcairn

By JACK V. FOX

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (UPI) — The English-accented voice came crackling 5,000 miles over the shortwave radio from Pitcairn Island, the haven for almost two centuries of the mutineers and their desendants from HMS Bounty.

The speaker was none other than Tom Christian, the great-great-great grandson of Fletcher Christian, the master's mate who defied Captain Bligh in 1790 and founded a colony on the tiny isle.

"Thirty-four waist, 38 length," said Tom Christian.

"Roger," said Eddie Pullen, seated before a powerful ham radio console in the headquarters of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Thousand Oaks.

Pullen had a Sears Roebuck catalogue on his lap. In his radio shack on tiny Pitcairn Island, Christian held an identical catalogue. The mutineer's descendant was ordering a pair of slacks from the wish book.

Almost every Tuesday, Pullen and Christian have a one-hour conversation between the church office and the 1-by-2 mile island in the Pacific halfway between the Panama Canal and New Zealand.

On a recent Tuesday this reporter sat in on the exchange at the Thousand Oaks studio and was permitted to address a few words to the islanders.

"Mr. Christian, it is astonishing how many people have heard of Pitcairn Island, mostly through the book and the movies. My question is whether you have seen the movies and which did you prefer — the Clark Gable version or Marlon Brando as Fletcher Christian?" I asked.

"Yes, we've seen them both," Christian's answer came crackling back. "The Clark Gable version many years ago. We had the Marlon Brando picture about a year ago. The photography in it was great but I liked the Gable version better."

"Why is that?"

"Well, the ending of the Brando picture. It had him dying on the beach shortly after they got here. Actually he lived three more years. If he hadn't I wouldn't be here today," Christian said.

A followup question on whether he preferred Charles Laughton or Trevor Howard as Captain Bligh was deftly turned aside and Christian's wife Betty came on instead.

"Roger," said Pullen.

"The short gowns. Size 36 or medium. Two in light blue and two in yellow," said Mrs. Christian.

It was Sears Roebuck time again.

Christian, who is about 45, and his wife, a few years younger, have four daughters. If they have no more children that will be the end of the Fletcher Christian male line.

There are only 57 permanent residents on Pitcairn. A ship anchors offshore about once every six weeks and sends a small boat in. That is the only contact with the outside world except for the ham radio, cables and long delayed letters.

All 57 Bounty descendants are members of the Adventist Church. Their chief official is a magistrate. They are a British protectorate and the governor general of New Zealand is their contact with the commonwealth.

They are faithful to the crown as evidenced by the fact that one of Christian's orders on the latest radio session was for a set of sheets of the new commemorative stamps celebrating the 80th birthday of Britain's queen mother.

Sale of such stamps with a Pitcairn Island cancellation to collectors is one of the few sources of outside income for the islanders. Otherwise they scratch out a bare living through raising their own food — including the breadfruit trees over which Captain Bligh became so exorcised.

"I've got to go, Eddie," she said. "I smell my pies burning in the oven."

Then Christian's voice came through again.

"Roger," said Eddie.

Premiere Of Play By Richard James

ASHEVILLE — Today at 8 p.m. the premiere of Richard James' "Mesmer," a play-in-progress, will take place in a special public performance at the Asheville Community Theater. This production, being carried out under the auspices of The First Stage, is being co-sponsored by the Carolina Regional Theater of Chapel Hill and the Cherokee Historical Association, producers of "Unto These Hills" outdoor drama in Cherokee.

James' play has received considerable attention from drama enthusiasts in North Carolina, and has been given a fully mounted production in the outdoor drama's Actors Canteen Theater prior to its public premiere today.

The playwright, currently in-residence at Cherokee, last year served as playwright-in-residence for the Palisades Theater Company, St. Petersburg, Florida, where three of his plays were produced.

In addition to playwriting, James has published more than 40 short stories, poems and articles. He did his undergraduate study at UNC-Asheville and received his masters degree from Appalachian State University.

"Mesmer" is the story of 18th century French doctor and scientist Franz Anton Mesmer, who found himself exiled from his country for developing a unique method of magnetic treatment which later became known as hypnotism.

Visionary Drawings Opening At NCMA

RALEIGH — "Visionary Drawings: Architecture and Planning" is the name of an exhibit going on view today at the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh. The show is on the museum's fourth floor.

Futuristic ideas conceived by some of the century's most liberated imaginations, dating from 1900 to the late 1960s, illustrate a range of types and styles from quick sketches to finished details.

Designs include buildings, towns, residences, megastructures, artifical environments, floating submarine and subterranean structures and settlements in space.

George R. Collins organized the exhibition for The Drawing Center in New York City. He constantly searches to locate drawings such as these, which, since they are most often not considered finished works of art, tend to be treated badly or discarded. Collins attempts, insofar as possible, to exhibit the items as found — that is, with mold, paper degeneration, coffee stains and creases resulting from the life the pieces have led.

The exhibition is being circulated by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Services (SITE), and is made possible by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, the New York Council for the Humanities and the New Hork State Council on the Arts.

In connection with the exhibition, which will be on view through September 21, Dr. John Reuer, associate professor at NCSU's School of Design, will give a lecture on the exhibition at 3 p.m. on Sunday, September 7.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

BY JULIE HICKS

Among the new books at the library are several which deal with various hobbies and leasure-time activities.

In "Weekend Knitting Projects," Margaret Hubert and Dorothy Dean Gusick have compiled an excellent array of beautiful items, each of which can be knitted in just a few hours. These two talented needlework instructors have taken today's exciting new yarns and combined them with interesting stitch patterns to create a splendid collection of classic and high fashion styles. Anyone who has a basic knowledge of knitting can complete the dozens of items contained in this book such as sweaters, wraps, pillows, afgans, handbags, etc.

"Decks And Patios Plus Other Outdoor Projects" will be of interest to another type of do-it-yourselfer. It combines complete design and planning aid with comprehensive instuctions for basic construction methods using wood, brick, concrete, pavers, stone, and gravel. Professional techniques are offered in easily understood language. Over 200 photographs and diagrams are utilized leading the reader through all stages of planning and building. In addition to decks and patios, some of the topics included are: electric wiring, screens, walls, fences, and outdoor furniture.

"Cooking On Your Own" by Henry Creel is a collection of more than 300 mouth-watering recipes for single gourmets. Many of the recipes are adaptions from menus of the renowned chefs, Craig Claiborne and Pierre Franey. According to the author, mealtime need not be drab or dreary just because one may be alone. Instead, the occasion can be festive, delicious, healthy, and fun without being tedious or extravagant. Creel supplements this delightful book with advice on how to store food for one, equipping a kitchen, and expanding his recipes to entertain as many as you want. "Cooking On You Own" is indeed a lesson in the art of being your own best company for dinner.

First Greenville Bizzare Is A Playful Show

"There were a lot of young people here for the opening last Sunday, and they seemed to like the idea very much," said Maggie Noss, interim director of the Greenville Art Center about the August 3 opening of "The First Annual Greenville Bizzare" at the Greenville Art Center. "What was really heartening is that most of these people were not artists or art students, but young people interested in what such a show would be like."

What the artists left behind on display is a collection of playful works of art — some spontaneously carried out, others showing the obvious results of careful planning and meticulous execution. In either case, the factor of using all sorts of discarded items, from tiny fragments of paper and doll limbs to ornate architectural pieces are revealing examples of transforming things salvaged into expressive statements of art.

Larry Shreve has assembled decorative architectural pieces with plastic, plain lumber and mirror to create a fine wood assemblage, all painted in stark white. James Jordan, who organized this show, has a delightful arrangement of dolls and doll limbs, bottle cap tops, string and cracked mirrors, framed and outfitted with small lights. Both Shreve and Jordan have contributed several items.

Edwin Utermohlen is another who has several pieces — including the spider web-like structure outside the front entrance of the center. One of his inside pieces has tissue wrapped rocks suspended from the ceiling on rough twine, and behind that, nine identical small wood framed metallic pieces each surmounted by an object — a plastic fragment, string wrapped bones, etc.

Anna Daughtry's "Once A Bridesmaid" is an appealing free standing constructed sculpture of large sprayed egg cartons stacked with an arrangement of dried flowers, feathers, lace and broken egg shells on top.

While the concept of this exhibit is one now familiar to artists and has been used rather extensively, it is the kind of show that, when well done, can be a provocative reminder that there's unsuspected beauty in America's great daily junkpile. And the contributors to this show reaffirm the fascination of the possibilities of making art out of unlikely objects.

Priest For The Big Top

By LAURINDA KEYS
Associated Press Writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Rev. David Hennessy ministered to Londoners during the blitz and later worked on the waterfront with New York seamen. Now the 68-year-old Catholic priest baptizes little troupers, teaches catechism and says Mass under the Big Top as chaplain to the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus.

The English native, who travels cross country with the circus performers, got the "unexpected" parish two years ago after 40 years in the priesthood.

Always a fan of the circus, Hennessy never expected to have that traveling ministry, and in fact he never thought he'd be a priest.

"I wasn't the type," he said. "If you asked anyone who knew me then, they'd say, 'Strike him out.' I thought I would be a great chef."

After World War II, he worked on the New York waterfront with seamen as part of the Pontifical Commission for People on the Move.

Then nine years ago, the commission asked Hennessy to take over for a Boston priest who had worked with the circus people in his spare time for 42 years until his death.

And two years ago, Hennessy and the commission felt he could be of more help if he traveled with the circus "rather than bopping in and out." So he took to the road.

Hennessy serves two units of the Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus, shifting from one to the other when their routes cross.

Traveling with the performers in their caravan, he says Mass on Saturdays and sometimes Sundays in front of the Big Top.

He baptizes circus children, prepares them for their first communion and teaches catechism. With Italian, French and "a good bit of German" at his command, he also teaches English to the foreign troupers in the circus.

"I don't only take care of Catholics. I also take care of everybody else," he said. Circus people, he says, have "little problems here and there, ordinary little things of life. They're the same human flesh and blood."

He attends every show "to be available. That's what's expected of me."

Hennessy has comforted injured performers and even delivered last rites, but talking about those somber incidents would violate a circus taboo, he says.

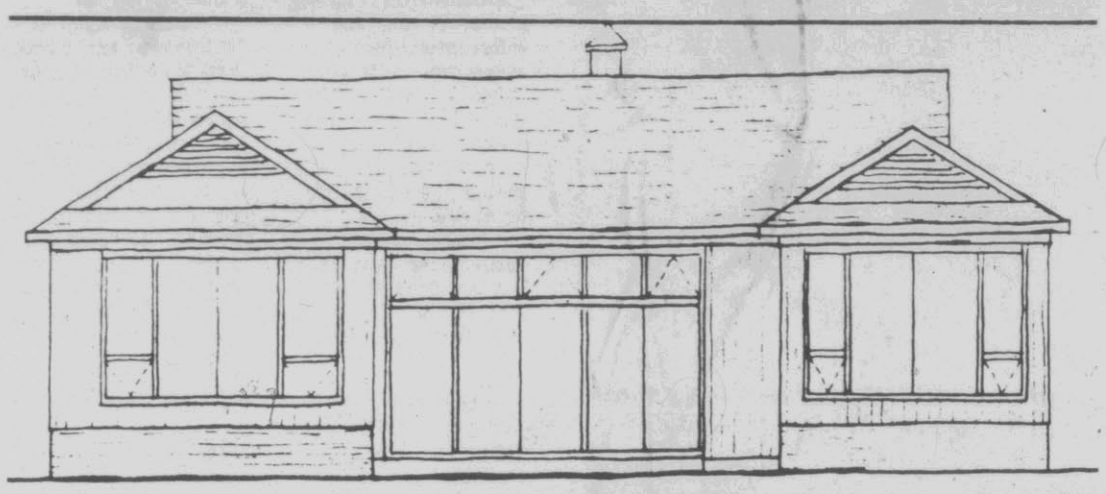
Pitt Community College Constructing A Passive Solar House



PASSIVE SOLAR HOUSE . . . this drawing shows the house which will be built by Pitt Community College students with a $5,000 grant announced by Gov. Hunt.

Pitt Community College has been awarded a $5,000 grant which is to be used to assist in the constructing of a "Passive Solar House" in the Greenville area, according to Gov. Jim Hunt.

The carpentry, masonry, electric installation, maintenance, and heating, refrigeration and air conditioning students at PCC will build the house. It will be sold at public auction upon completion.

The Energy Institute of the North Carolina Department of Commerce is funding the program to encourage the incorporation of passive solar features in traditional, moderate priced housing. This is a special pilot project and is the first nationwide.

The 1,400 square foot house, designed by PCC's Architectural Drafting Instructor, Sam Arnett, will utilize direct gain and trombe wall passive solar methods that will provide approximately 60 percent of the heating needs. "Passive Solar" means using the sun's energy to provide space heating without having circulating liquids in a collector system such as those used to provide hot water.

The large amount of glass on the south side of the house with the mass of the brick in the floor and the trombe walls will absorb heat during the day and release it at night. Covering the glass areas at night with insulated shutters will prevent much of the heat from being lost at night. The overhang will shade the windows during the summer months and keep the sun from striking the bricks. Having small amounts of glass on the north, east, and west sides and an open plan increases the efficiency of the system. The house will meet the E-300 standards set by the Greenville Utilities Commission through the use of extra insulation, caulking and good construction practices.

Construction will be coordinated with the normal PCC class schedules so as to provide "live" project experiences for the various curriculums. Additionally, this will give prospective members of the construction industry firsthand experience in energy efficient construction.

Depending upon the weather and the availability of supplies, this solar house is expected to be completed in about 18 months from the start of construction.

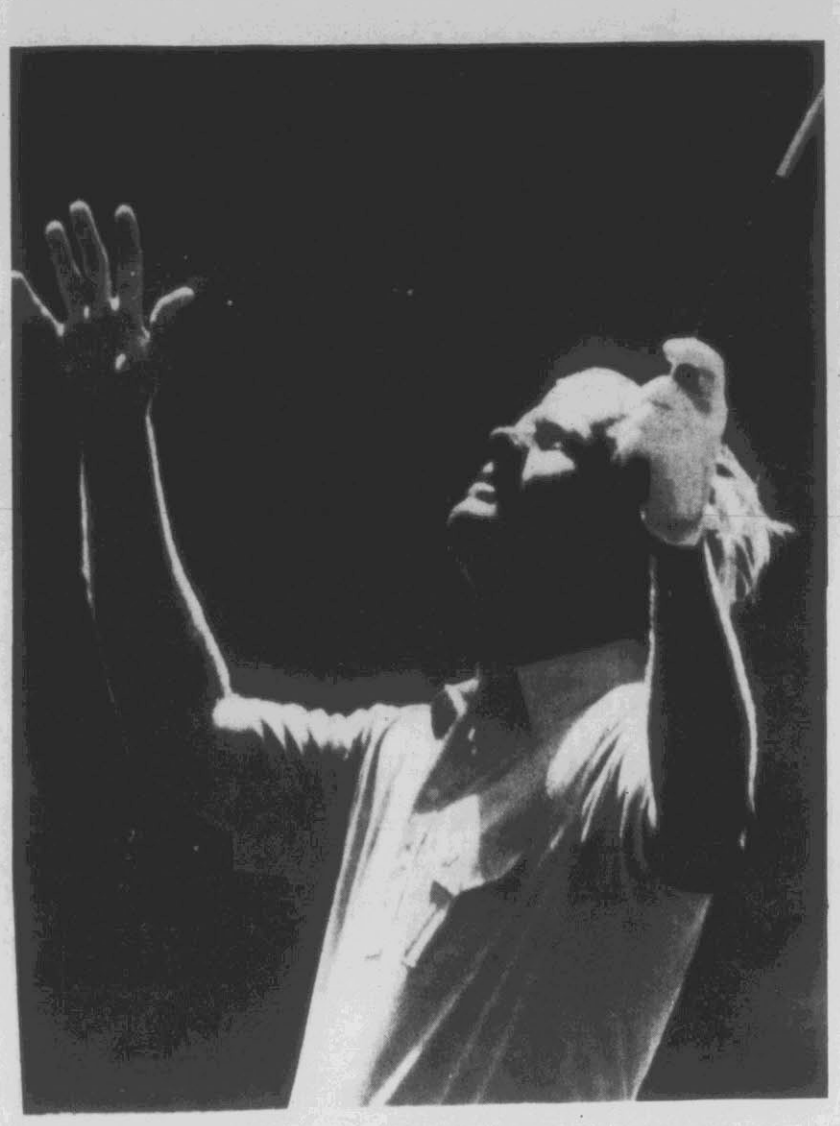
Nicklaus' 66 Leads PGA By 3



Oh, Happy Days
Jack Nicklaus looks to the sky after sinking a fifty-foot putt on the first hole for a birdie Saturday in the PGA Championship. Nicklaus, who started the third round one stroke back of Dr. Gil Morgan, was tied with Morgan after the birdie. (AP Laserphoto)

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The cold, dry figures showed that Jack Nicklaus shot a 4-under-par 66 and took a 3-shot lead in the third round of the 62nd PGA national championship Saturday.

But those figures don't reflect the see-saw drama, the two-part round, the sudden shift from sheer brilliance to worried, anxious scrambler that Nicklaus exhibited before a gallery of about 30,000.

"For 14 holes, Jack definitely was playing in a different world. Then I don't know what happened," said Lon Hinkle, the player closest to Nicklaus going into Sunday's last round.

"Basically," analyzed Nicklaus, "I stopped using my hands."

But that was the technical explanation.

After 14 holes of the third round Nicklaus held a 7-shot lead. He was 6-under-par for the day.

After 17 holes he held a 3-shot lead. And he was only 4-under for the day. He later said he was "very lucky" not to have lost more.

"Obviously, I played very, very well for the first 14 holes," said Nicklaus, who won his 16th major professional title with a record-setting performance in the U.S. Open a couple of months ago. "Then I was just trying to figure out a way to come home."

"After the first 14 holes I was ready to come in, but they made me play the last four," he said.

And those last four turned his potential run-away in Sunday's final round into a race that has not been resolved.

"Sometimes," Nicklaus said, "you get on a streak like I was (over the first 14 holes) and you just keep it going. Somtimes you get on a streak like that and you start thinking, and that's a mistake. That's what I did today.

"This is a golf course that has to be played. You can't play it waiting for someone to catch you. If you do, they'll catch you sure as anything.

"Believe it or not, this was fun. It was work, hard work, over the last few holes. But it was fun.

"There's still nothing more fun that coming down the last nine holes with a chance to win the golf tournament. You don't always do it. I've lost some. But that's the fun of it. I'm looking forward to it."

Although his fortunes took a turn for the worse over the last four holes, Nicklaus managed to cling to a lead that, under other circumstances, would be described as commanding.

He finished 54 holes over the 6,964 yards of deep, deadly rough that make many of the touring pros call the Oak Hill course the toughest they've ever played, with a 205 total, 5-under-par.

The only other player under par for three rounds of this, the last of the season's four major tests of golfing greatness, was Lon Hinkle, who refused to quit in the face of a tremendous performance by the greatest player the game has ever known.

Hinkle, with a spectacular, scrambling par on the last hole, finished with a 69 and a 208 total.

No one else appeared to have a legitimate shot in Sunday's final round at Nicklaus, who capped his comeback with a record-breaking triumph in the U.S. Open a couple of months ago.

Andy Bean and Dr. Gil Morgan, the non-practicing optometrist who led after 36 holes, shared third at 211, six shots behind the leader. Bean closed up wih a 68 and Morgan, who took a double bogey from the water on the sixth hole, shot 73 in the bright sunshine.

Hometown boy Terry Diehl and Curtis Strange were next at 212. Diehl, a touring pro who is a life-long resident of Rochester and a member of the host club, had a 68. Strange shot 72.

Defending champion David Graham of Australia was 73-217. South African Gary Player shot 71-217. Lee Trevino, who scored his first career victory on this course in the 1968 U.S.

Hinkle: Jack Can Be Caught If Pressure Put On

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Maybe you have to be a little crazy to believe mere mortals could catch Jack Nicklaus on the last day of a major tournament.

If so, Andy Bean displayed a fine madness Saturday at the same time that Nicklaus' play at the Professional Golfers' Association Championship was bordering on extraordinary.

"Yes, he can be caught," said Bean, who wrestles alligators for relaxation and has been known to chew golf balls. "But you have to put some pressure on him so that when he pulls out the driver maybe he's got something else to think about. You can't let him freewheel it."

At the time of the comment, Bean was the leader with a 2-under-par 70 at unyielding Oak Hill Country Club and a 54-hole total of 211. Nicklaus, still on the course, had just sunk his seventh birdie in 13 holes and was 6-under for the day and seven strokes ahead of Lon Hinkle.

"Jack knows what it's like. He's come from behind to beat them that way. All the champions have, and you don't need to do it yourself — it just takes someone to get hot," Bean said.

True to the recipe, Hinkle birdied two of the last four holes while Nicklaus bogeyed the same number. Going into Sunday's final round, Nicklaus was 5-under at 205, Hinkle was within striking distance at 208 and Bean and Gil Morgan were six shots back.

Nicklaus, Hinkle and Bean will tee it up in the final threesome.

Bean, winner of one tournament and more than $207,000 this year, said his round of 16 pars and two birdies was an example of what it would take to catch Nicklaus — but he needs more 1-putt greens.

"My middle-iron play has been great," he said. "If I make as many putts as he did today, I'll catch him. If I could make the turn and be within three or four shots, I'd have a real chance at it.

Theismann Stars As 'Skins Beat Colts

BALTIMORE (AP) — Bert Jones returned to action for the Baltimore Colts, but it was another No. 7, Joe Theismann, who was the star as the Washington Redskins defeated the Colts 13-3 in the preseason opener for both National Football League teams Saturday night.

Jones showed no ill effects from the shoulder miseries that have limited him to seven appearances the past two seasons, as he completed 13 of 21 passes for 139 yards.

Jones dispelled any concern about his throwing arm with a 70-yard pass early in the second quarter that went off rookie receiver Ray Butler's fingertips.

But Theismann stole the show when he led the Redskins from a 3-3 deadlock on a 14-play 80-yard drive in the third period that was capped by Clarence Harmon's 2-yard burst over right tackle.

Place-kicker Mark Mosley added a 52-yard field goal with 10:54 to go in the game to ice the victory for the Redskins.

Theismann, playing the first and third quarters, piloted a Redskin running attack that rode roughshod over the Colts second team defense that Coach Mike McCormack inserted after the half.

Rose Has Holes To Fill As '80 Season Nears

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Eight months ago Greenville Rose's football season came to an end with a 21-97 loss to High Point Central in the State 4-A playoffs. The Rampants lost 29 seniors — 20 letterman — off last season's squad, leaving Coach Dave Bumgarner with more than a few holes to fill.

However, before Rose faithful reach for their crying towels consider this: the Rampants return 20, giving Bumgarner a better-than-average nucleus with which to work.

"When you're 11-3 and play a lot, like we did last year, you get a chance to play a lot of people," Bumgarner said this past week. "And most of the people we have returning did get a chance to play quite a bit last season."

Four weeks after the regular season ended for all but the best football teams in the state, the Rampants were still practicing and playing football. "Being in the playoffs, our season was longer than any high school except High Point Central."

Bumgarner hopes his Rampants again find themselves practicing and playing long after the 1980 regular season has ended. But he isn't ready to predict a repeat of last season's performance.

"I've only felt good about getting in the playoffs during the preseason once, and that was in 1975," Bumgarner said. In 1975, Rose won the 4-A championship, defeating Richmond County, which was coached by Ron Krall, who headed up the High Point Central

Expos Still In First; O's Win

Montreal, Cubs Split

CHICAGO (AP) — Ellis Valentine's tie-breaking single in the eighth inning boosted Montreal to 4-3 win over the Chicago Cubs Saturday for a double-header split which kept the Expos in first place in the National League East.

Tim Blackwell's three-run homer in the fifth inning of the opener gave the Cubs a 3-1 triumph, but Montreal's victory in the nightcap kept the Expos one-half game ahead of second-place Pittsburgh.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the third inning of the second game when Steve Dillard singled, went to second on a sacrifice and scored on a single by Jesus Figueroa. Montreal tied it in the fifth on Larry Parrish's 13th homer.

Successive doubles by Lenny Randle, Dillard and Bill Caudill gave the Cubs a 3-1 lead in the fifth. The Expos tied it in the sixth on a triple by Ron LeF-lore, a single by Andre Dawson and a run-scoring double by Warren Cromartie.

Tony Bernazard opened the Expos eighth with an infield single off reliever and loser Bruce Sutter, 3-7. He went to second on Dawson's sacrifice and scored on Valentine's single up the middle.

Reliever Elias Sosa, 7-4, was the winner.

Steve Rogers, 11-7, was the loser in the opener, although he allowed only four hits. Three of them came in the fifth when Randle and Figueroa singled and scored ahead of Blackwell's fourth homer.

The Expos scored their only run in the third when Rogers singled, went to second on a sacrifice, took third on a deep fly and scored on Rodney Scott's sacrifice fly.

Rick Reuschel, 9-9, ran into trouble in the ninth when Cromartie and Parrish singled with two out. Sutter came in and gave up an infield single to Rowland Office, loading the bases, but pinch-hitter Tommy Hutton grounded out to end the game and earn Sutter his 24th save.

In the first game, Montreal starter Steve Rogers, 11-7, allowed just one hit until Lenny Randle and Jesus Figueroa opened the fifth inning with consecutive singles. Blackwell ran the count to 3-2 and then slugged his fourth homer of the season into the right field bleechers.

Chicago's Rick Reuschel, 9-9, was nicked for a run in the third when Rogers beat out an infield single, went to third on a single by Jerry White and scored on Rodney Scott's sacrifice fly.

The Expos threatened in the fourth when Ellis Valentine singled, went to second on a sacrifice bunt and to third on a deep fly to center, but Reuschel fanned Larry Parrish to end the inning.

With two out in the fifth, White, who was in left field because Ron LeFlore was late in arriving for the game, singled and tried to stretch it into a double but was throw out by rightfielder Jerry Martin.

Birds Close Within 3½

NEW YORK (AP) — Ken Singleton's RBI triple keyed a two-run rally in the eighth inning, giving the Baltimore Orioles a 4-2 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday night.

New York's Tom Underwood, 9-8, was locked in a 2-2 tie with Baltimore's Steve Stone, 18-4, when the Orioles rallied to win the game.

Rich Dauer slammed a one-e-out double and came home with the tie-breaking run on Singleton's triple. Relief ace Rich Gossage replaced Underwood and later gave up an RBI single to pinch-hitter Terry Crowley for Baltimore's fourth run.

The victory, the second in a row for Baltimore over the Yankees and their eighth straight, reduced New York's lead in the American League East to 3½ games over the runner-up Orioles.

The Yankees jumped ahead in the first when Bobby Murcer singled and Oscar Gamble slammed his sixth home run of the season. Baltimore tied it in the third when catcher Rick Dempsey doubled and rode home on Al Bumbry's fifth homer of the season.

Palma Captures WBA Crown

Palma, 24, who weighed 121½ pounds at a midnight weigh-in, put the short-lived champion to the canvas twice in the first round and finished him with a series of left-right combinations to the head at 1:12 of the fifth round.

It was the first title defense for Randolph, 22, a gold medal winner in the 1976 Montreal Olympics. Randolph defeated Ricardo Cardona on May 4 in Seattle for the junior featherweight title.

Palma came out at the opening bell and displayed an aggressive strategy, batting Randolph about the head at will for the first two rounds. He drew blood from Randolph's nose when he knocked the champion to the canvas midway through the first round.

Randolph appeared to be making a comeback in the third and fourth rounds, hitting the Buenos Aires boxer constantly with lefts and rights to the head.

But Randolph appeared to be no match for the persistent Argentinian, who backed Randolph into the corner and hammered away before Randolph hit the deck for final time.

Arguello Pounds Boza-Edwards

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — World Boxing Council super-featherweight champion Alexis Arguello took advantage of his opponent's driving southpaw stance and pounded unranked Cornelius "Corny" Boza-Edwards with vicious left hooks for an eighth-round victory on Saturday.

Arguello, 28, took on the relatively unknown Ugandan in a nontitle, over-the-weight 10-rounder, and after a slow start, grabbed the offensive in the seventh and eighth rounds with unmerciful right and left combinations.

Arguello, a native of Nicaragua but now fighting out of Coral Gables, Fla., now has a record of 68-4 with 54 knockouts. At 135½ pounds, he is having trouble trimming down to the super-featherweight limit of 130 pounds and may move up to the lightweight division.

Boza-Edwards, 23, now fighting out of England, tried to outbox the more experienced Arguello in the early rounds, scoring with lightning-fast combinations inside.

But Boza-Edwards, who fought at 134½ pounds, was clearly too anxious, sometimes leaping at his opponent and leaving his right side wide open for Arguello's solid left hooks.

"I hit him with the best shots I had in my career," Arguello said. "But I think I did a good job too."

Australia Tops In Cup Race

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Australia breezed to an easy win over Lionheart in the America's Cup challenger trials Saturday, but dropped a second match when it lost a sail racing against Sweden's Sverige.

Australia's 6-2 mark for the trials still tops the field of foreign 12-meters competing for the right to challenge the New York Yacht Club's hold on yachting's most coveted prize.

France topped Lionheart by a huge 2:06 margin in the day's final pairing. It was Lawrie Smith's first day as skipper of the English 12.

The Lionheart syndicate announced after the races that Smith, 24, has replaced John Oakeley at the helm.

Hugh Lawson, a spokesman for the Englsih campaign, said the yacht's designer, Ian Howlett, also has joined the crew as navigator.

"It was the first time he (Smith) has ever sailed the boat in a race," Lawson said of Saturday's losses. He conceded replacing the skipper so late in the cup summer is "very risky indeed."

He said a tactician will also be named for Lionheart on Sunday. Oakeley has been performing as both skipper and tactician on the yacht.

France 3, the flagship for Baron Marcel Bich's fourth cup challenge effort, is 4-4 for the week. Both Sverige and Lionheart are 3-5.

Australia was trailing Sverige by 11 seconds at the third mark of the six leg course when it blew its genoa jib.

Sverige reached the fourth mark 1:52 ahead of the struggling Australia, which was unable to close the gap after replacing the lost sail.

Over the next three legs of the course Australia pulled away from the English boat in the 16-knot southwesterlies ruffling Rhodes Island Sound and crossed the finish line with a whopping 2:29 lead.

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran slugger Lamar Johnson drove in three runs with a pair of singles and relief ace Ed Farmer picked up his 20th save of the season, helping the Chicago White Sox to a 5-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday.

Johnson lined a run-scoring single to break a 2-2 tie in the fifth. Then, with the bases loaded in the seventh, he reached out and looped a two-run single to right.

"I'll count my blessings on that second hit," Johnson said. "I have two strikes on me and I was thrown a breaking ball away. However, it was just a little up and I managed to get my bat on it.

Farmer got the call from the bullpen with the score 5-3 and two out in the seventh. He walked the first batter he faced, but ended the jam by retiring Dave Stapleton on a fielder's choice grounder.

Then in the eighth, he was tagged for a run before getting out of a one-out, bases-loaded jam. In the ninth, he gave up a single to Stapleton before Fred Lynn flied out to the 420-foot mark in center. The next batter reached on an error before Farmer ended the game by getting Carlton Fisk on a called third strike.

"This was Farmer's toughest save of the year," said Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa. "Look at the situations he was in for three innings."

"No question about it," Farmer said. "Those were tough circumstances in the eighth and ninth innings.

For the Red Sox, it was a case once again of never on Saturday. They are 0-8 at home on Saturday afternoons this season.

"We had enough chances to score in double figures," Boston Manager Don Zimmer said after the Red Sox left 10 runners on base in failing to come through in the clutch once again.

Farmer made his 43rd appearence of the season in bailing out Mike Proly, who allowed three runs and eight hits in his first start after 40 relief appearances. His last starting assignment came on Aug. 30, 1979.

Proly, 2-6, gave up a run in the first inning on Dave Stapleton's wind-blown triple and a wild pitch. Chicago went in front on an error by Tony Perez, Chet Lemon's single and Bruce Kimm's double in the second, but the Red Sox tied the score 2-2 with an unerned run in the second.

The White Sox went in front to stay on singles by Mike Squires, Bob Molinaro and Johnson in the fifth.

Squires, who had three singles, led off the seventh with a single and took third on a double by Jim Morrison. After an intentional walk to Molinaro, Johnson poked his two-run single to right.

The Red Sox picked up a run in the seventh on a single by Dwight Evans and a double by Glenn Hoffman.

Carl Yastrzemski, who had three hits, made it 5-4 with an RBI double in the eighth. But Farmer worked out of a bases-loaded, one-out jam by getting Evans to ground back to the mound for a force at the plate, then striking out pinch-hitter Jim Dwyer.

Steve Renko, 6-5, was the loser.

Milwaukee 4
Cleveland 2

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Sal Bando singled home the go-ahead run in the sixth inning and Moose Haas scattered eight hits, leading the Milwaukee Brewers to a 4-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

The Brewers broke a 2-2 tie against Bob Owchinko, 1-5, when Gorman Thomas singled with one out in the sixth and took second on a fielder's choice. After a walk to Sixto Lezcano, Thomas scored on Bando's bloop single to right. Lezcano was thrown out trying to score on the play.

It was the second run batted in since June 16 for the 36-year-old Bando, who went into the game batting .183.

The Brewers made it 4-2 in the seventh as Ed Romero doubled, took third on infield grounder and scored on a sacrifice fly by Paul Molitor.

The Brewers jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first inning. Molitor opened with a double and scored when Owchinko fielded Robin Yount's bunt and threw the ball down the right field line. Yount raced to third on the error and scored on a single by Cecil Cooper.

The Indians got a run back against Haas, 13-9, in the second. Ron Hassey reached on a fielder's choice, took third on a bloop double by Alan Bannister and scored on an infield grounder by Rick Manning.

The Indians tied it 2-2 in the fourth when Joe Charboneau walked, reached third on a double by Hassey and scored when Bando fumbled Bannister's grounder.

Oakland 2
Seattle 1

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mike Norris stopped Seattle on three singles, pitching the Oakland A's to a 2-1 victory over the Mariners Saturday.

Norris, 15-7, posted his second shutout of the season, striking out seven and walking none and lowering his earned run average to 2.40. He leads the American League with 122 strikeouts, two more than New York's Ron Guidry.

Norris did not allow a hit over the first five innings, but Mario Mendoza broke up the no-hit bid with a sharply hit single inside third base leading off the sixth inning.

That was Seattle's only hit until the ninth, when the Mariners got their only run on singles by Joe Simpson and Dan Meyer and a sacrifice fly by Willie Horton.

The A's scored both their runs in the third inning against Seattle starter Rich Honeycutt, 8-12. Mario Guerrero singled to open the inning and Dave McKay doubled him to third. Guerrero scored on a suicide squeeze bunt by Jeff Cox and McKay came home on Rickey Henderson's infield grounder.

Seattle has now lost 13 of its last 14 games and four of five under new Manager Maury Wills. The A's have won four of five and 10 of their last 12 games.

Toronto 4
Kansas City 3

TORONTO (AP) — Pinch-hitter Steve Braun's single in the 14th inning scored Alfredo Griffin from second with the winning run, giving the Toronto Blue Jays a 4-3 triumph over the Kansas City Royals Saturday night.

Griffin led off the Blue Jay 14th with a single off reliever Rawley Eastwick, 0-1, and moved to second on a sacrifice by Damaso Garcia. After Al Woods was intentionally walked, Bailor lined his game-winning hit to left field.

The Blue Jays tied the game at 3-3 in the bottom of the ninth when Bob Bailor came home from third on John Mayberry's fielder's choice grounder. The Royals had taken a 3-2 lead in the top of the inning on Willie Aikens' solo homer, his 12th of the year and his third hit of the game.

George Brett's RBI single after U.L. Washington's double gave Kansas City a 1-0 lead in the first inning. The hit extended Brett's club-record hitting streak to 22 consecutive games.

Ott Leads Pittsburgh Past 'Friends'

But catcher Ed Ott set friendship aside and drove in two runs to lead the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 4-1 victory over the Phils Saturday.

"This is our state rivalry. It's been our No. 1 rivalry the last few years," said Ott, whose off-season residence in Allentown is deep in the heart of Phils territory.

It was the fifth straight victory for the Pirates, the eighth consecutive road loss for Philadelphia, and another big day for Ott.

He collected his two RBI on a solo home run and a groundout. Earlier this year he had three game-winning RBI against the Phils, including a ninth inning single that gave the Pirates a June 3 victory in Philadelphia.

"He has beaten us many, many times. He's a gamer," said Philadelphia Manager Dallas Green. "I like him. He's a professional."

Ott, enjoying his best season with a .300 average, admitted he gets a special thrill beating Philadelphia because of his eastern Pennsylvania roots.

"They're all Phillies fans out there. They think the grass grows red ... this helps me over the winter. I can throw little digs in against the Phillies, and I get the laughs instead of the Phillies fans in Allentown."

Mike Schmidt's sacrifice fly gave the Phillies a 1-0 lead in the first inning, but Ott tied it with a solo home run in the second off loser Nino Espinosa, 2-3.

Bill Madlock led off the Pirate fourth with a triple. After Phil Garner was walked intentionally, Espinosa walked Candelaria on four pitches to load the bases and Omar Moreno brought Madlock home with a sacrifice fly to right.

The Pirates added two more runs in the seventh after loading the bases on a single by Tim Foli, a walk to Lee Lacy and a single by Willie Stargell. Kevin Saucier relieved Espinosa and allowed a sacrifice fly by Mike Easler. After Madlock was walked intentionally, Ott drove in another run with a groundout to shortstop Larry Bowa.

Candelaria, 8-11, was relieved in the eighth after walking Mike Schmidt and giving up a single to Keith Moreland. Tekulve, who notched his 16th save, got Garry Maddox to bounce into a forceout and Manny Trillo to ground into a double play.

Cincinnati 4

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ron Cey's three-run homer capped a seven-run second inning that carried the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 9-4 victory Saturday night over the Cincinnati Reds.

Jerry Reuss, 13-4, posted his third straight victory with seventh-inning relief help from Rick Sutcliffe, who gained his fifth save.

Tom Seaver, 4-6, lasted 12-3 innings in his second start since coming off the disabled list. The Dodgers sent 10 men to the plate in the second, their biggest inning of the season.

Rick Monday led off with a single and Pedro Guerrero and Steve Yeager followed with doubles to ignite the rally. Two outs later, Darrel Thomas doubled and Dusty Baker singled for two more runs.

After Steve Garvey singled, Cey blasted his 17th homer and third this season off Seaver, off the left field foul screen.

The Reds got a run back in the second when Dan Driessen walked and scored on singles by Johnny Bench and Dave Concepcion. They added two more in the fourth when George Foster walked, took third on Driessen's double and scored on Bench's grounder. Reuss then wild-pitched Driessen home.

Steelers, Saints Capture Openers

Barr Drills 2 Field Goals

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Pittsburgh quarterback Cliff Stoudt connected with Theo Bell on a 24-yard scoring play and Matt Bahr drilled a pair of 42-yard field goals Saturday night, leading the Steelers to a 13-0 victory over the New York Giants in the National Football League preseason opener for both clubs.

Stoudt started and lasted into the fourth quarter before rookie Mark Malone took over. Regular Terry Bradshaw sat out the game.

Bell split the New York secondary and was wide open as Stoudt laid the pass in perfectly.

The play capped an 82-yard, nine-play drive for Pittsburgh, which failed to capitalize on numerous other scoring chances thanks to fumbles, a missed field goal, a Stoudt pass intercepted in the end zone and an offsides call which nullified a touchdown. Bell's score came at 3:58 of the second quarter and put Pittsburgh on top 7-0.

Manning Leads New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AM) — Archie Manning rolled in from 5 yards out in the first quarter to give the New Orleans Saints the lead for good en route to a 17-13 National Football League exhibition season victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Saturday night.

Manning's score came with a little more than a minute left in the first quarter after St. Louis took a 3-0 lead on a 38-yard field goal by Steve Little.

It was Manning's last action of the evening. He finished two-for-two passing for 27 yards and was relieved by a succession of three backup quarterbacks.

New Orleans scored on a 6-yard run by rookie running back Jimmy Rogers in the second quarter and a 40-yard field goal by Russell Erxleben with a little more than three minutes remaining in the game.

Little booted a 41-yard field goal in the fourth quarter, and reserve running back Randy Love scored on a 1-yard run in the third quarter for the Cardinals.

Jim Hart started at quarterback for the Cardinals, playing in the first and third quarters.

coaching staff this past season.

"I think the kids made up their minds early last season that they were going to play well enough to get in the playoffs and then after they got in the playoffs they knew if they lose now they don't go any farther.

"I think we have enough seniors back to help continue that."

Unfortunately for Bumgarner, the Rampants also four seniors who had much to do with the Rampants success in 1979. The major loses include All-East linebacker Ron Butler, all-conference linebacker Wallace Brown, running back Mark Shank and kicker/punter Ted King.

Despite these loses and others, Bumgarner feels the Rampants have the personnel to fill the gaps.

"If we had a starting offense right now we'd probably have 11 seniors starting and probably 11 on defense also," Bumgarner said. "I think offensively we're way ahead of the game from last year. The kids are familar with the offense and know who to block."

Among those returning on offense this season are quarterback Kenny Barnes, tailback Alonza Taylor, wide receiver Chris McLawhorn and split ends Paul McMillan and Van Warren.

"Basically, we have to fill one running back and one fullback position," Bumgarner said. "It's hard to take the experience away there."

As a result of the backfield losses, Bumgarner said Rose will throw more this season. "We'll still run the wishbone and try some counters but I think, in general, we'll throw the ball more."

Defense, however, may be a problem in the early going. Only three proven starters return this season: defensive end Curtis Spell, defensive back Donald Johnson, who will also see action at tight end, and linebacker Jeff Ferrell.

"We've got a lot of holes to fill on defense," Bumgarner said. "We don't have many people over 200 pounds like we did last year and we could be hurting there."

Of the Rampants' 10 opponents this season, four have new coaches: Kinston, Washington, Northeastern and Bertie. "That's going to create problems," Bumgarner said, "either for them or us, you never know."

As they did last season, the Rampants open the season against Kinston. The Vikings defeated Rose, 14-8, last year, something Bumgarner and the Rampants have not forgotten.

"I've been thinking about that," Bumgarner said. "We haven't forgotten it. But that could have been a blessing in disquise. It made the kids and the coaches realize we needed to get on the ball if we were going to get into the playoffs."

Perhaps the most awaited game of the season for Rose, and its fans, is the Oct. 3 battle with Rocky Mount. The Rampants lost, 21-14, to the Gryphons during the regular season before ripping Rocky Mount, 36-7, in the semifinals of the state playoffs.

"Rocky Mount might be the favorite this season, although I feel we'll be at 1, 2 or 3. It's going to be tough. Northeastern should be improved and the Wilson schools will also be better."

Turning to the Rampants' chances, Bumgarner said: "Two things are important for us to have a good season this year: one, the attitude of the youngsters. They've got to want to win. I don't care how good you are, you've got to have that good, winning attitude.

"And two, it's going to take community involvement. We need to get the people in the area interested in them (the players). When a youngster knows someone is interested in what they're doing they're going to work just that much harder."

Last season, Rose got the former without the latter. This season, for a repeate of last year's performance, it may take both.

Lutz Defeats Gottfried 6-4, 7-5

GROVE CITY, Ohio (AP) — Bob Lutz defeated defending champion Brian Gottfried, 6-4, 7-5, Saturday to gain the singles finals of the $75,000 National Revenue Tennis Classic at Buckeye Boys Ranch.

The 32-year-old Lutz, who won the first tournament here in 1970, broke Gottfried's service in both sets to sweep into Sunday's final. He will face either rookie Tom Cain of Richmond, Va., or Terry Rocavert of Austrialia, who met Saturday night in the other singles semifinals match.

Lutz came here after a three-week break from tournament competition. He trailed Gottfried 5-4 in the second set when a severe electrical storm swept the area, felling tents and concession stands.

Play resumed after a 90-minute delay, and a refreshed Lutz squared the set at 5-5, then broke Gottfried's service to go up 6-5 and swept the final game without an error.

"This is the best I have felt all year," said Lutz, of San Clemente, Calif. "I have to be confident when I beat a player of the caliber of Gottfried after the bad year I have had."

Lutz, who beat Arthur Ashe in the first tournament here in 1970, won his last major title in Taiwan last November and took a minor tournament at Greenville S.C., in May this year.

Nicklaus, who started the day a single shot back of Morgan and tied for second with Hinkle, had a round that was sharply divided into two parts.

The first part was his magnificent performance over the first 14 holes. He played those holes 6-under-par, with one stretch in which he birdied three holes in a row and had five birdies in seven holes.

Walking off the 14th green, Nicklaus was seven strokes in front of the field and it appeared he was ready to make a casual stroll to his 17th major professional title. But suddenly, he was a scrambling struggler.

He 3-putted the the 15th for a bogey and Hinkle chipped in from 20 feet for a birdie. It was a 2-stroke swing and Nicklaus' lead had gone from seven shots to five.

Nicklaus had to work hard to save par on the 16th. His drive hit the out of bounds stakes on the left and bounced back into play. He had to play over trees and got the next one in a bunker. He came out to 10 feet and made that one.

On the 17th, he got his approach in a bunker, failed to get it on the putting surface, came out of the deep stuff to about four feet and had to nurse that one in for a bogey.

Hinkle, meanwhile, had run a great shot up to within tap-in distance and made the birdie. It was another 2-stroke swing and Nicklaus' lead had shrunk to three shots.

Both Nicklaus and Hinkle had to make scrambling pars on the final hole.

Both drove in the rough. Both came up short of the green, short of the hill that leads up to the greens. Hinkle put his through the green to the fringe and Nicklaus got his some 12-15 feet from the flag.

Hinkle ran his par putt in the hole, giving a big grin and a happy little twirl of the putter. Nicklaus then was faced with his tough putt to avoid losing still another shot—and got it in with a 3-stroke lead.

The gates still were open for a challenge over the last 18 holes.

He had holed about a 50-footer for a birdie on the first hole, went to 2-under with a 20-footer on the seventh, scored from about 12 on the ninth and 10th, hit it some 3-4 feet from the flag on the 11th, and made an 8-footer for birdie on the 13th.

Then came the troubles.

"I was very lucky to avoid disaster," he said.

RUTH'S HOME RUN

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Here's the latest on the long-ago episode in the 1932 World Series involving Babe Ruth of the Yankees and the home run he allegedly called against the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley Field:

Eric Painter, then the trainer of the Yankees, detailed this account for the Baseball Hall of Fame:

"When Ruth came up in the fifth inning of the third game, the crowd and the Cubs were on him. The first pitch from Charley Root was a strike. The crowd roared in approval. Ruth turned toward the stands and held up one finger.

"Root put over another strike and the Babe held up two fingers. Then, before digging in, he swept his arm full length toward the center field fence. The next pitch landed over that fence for a home run."

Eagles Rip Bills, 24-9

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Quarterback Ron Jaworski threw one touchdown pass and guided Philadelphia to two more in the first half Saturday night as the Eagles beat the Buffalo Bills 24-9 in a preseason National Football League game.

Jaworski took the Eagles 84 yards in 10 plays the first time they had possession, connecting on a 32-yard pass play to Keith Krepfle for the touchdown.

A few minutes later, after the Eagles intercepted a Buffalo pass, Jaworski floated a 29-yard aerial to Wilbert Montgomery at the Bills' 4, and Montgomery ran in it on the next play for the TD.

Jaworski also engineered a second-quarter scoring drive that covered 48 yards in nine plays with Billy Campfield carrying the ball in from 1 yard out.

Bradley's 69 Leads LPGA

TORONTO (AP) — Pat Bradley, the leader from the opening round, shot a 4-under-par 69 Saturday to take a three-shot lead after three rounds of a $150,000 women's golf tournament.

Bradley, who faltered on the back nine Friday to see her lead shrink to a single shot, ran into what may prove to be a costly bogey on the final hole.

Bradley's bogey occurred seconds after JoAnne Carner sank a 20-foot putt birdie putt that enabled her to move into second place.

Bradley was at 206 while Carner, who started the day a shot behind, fired a 71 and was alone in second spot at 209.

Donna Horton White and Jane Blalock shared third place at 210. White shot a 4-under 69 Saturday while Blalock was 2 under with a 71.

Beth Daniel, the Ladies Professional Golf Association rookie of the year in 1979, made a big move and was 10 under after 17. She double bogeyed No. 18 to finish the day at 211 after a 70.

Nancy Lopez-Melton turned in the day's low score of 68 and was at 212, 7 under.

The event officially is called the Peter Jackson Golf Tournament.

Bradley was short of the green on the 18th after her second shot. After her chip, she 2-putted for bogey. The question now is, can Bradley be caught?

White thinks she can be.

"There are so many good players in contention it's still anyone's ball game," she said. "I was six back of Bradley going into the last round of the Coca-Cola (a May tournament) and won, so anyone has a shot, especially with the par 5s.

"But Pat is playing so well she'll be tough to catch."

Once again, Bradley took advantage of the par-5s on the 6,265-yard, par-73 St. George's Golf and Country Club course. She birdied five of them and parred the other.

"I know a three-shot lead won't do it," Bradley said. "With all those par-5s, there's 5-under there. I'll need 5- or 6-under. Carner's birdie on 18 didn't make or break the tournament."

Blalock believes she's at a disadvantage to the big hitters such as Carner and Bardley.

"They can reach a few of the par-5s in two shots, but I can't," she said. "It gives them a bit of an advantage. I know one thing though. There's no way I'm going to quit."

Low scores are not uncommon here, especially by Carner who holds the course record of 64. She's also won the tournament both times it was held here.

Lloyd Defeats Jaeger For 6th U.S. Clay Title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd, crediting her experience and strength, beat 15-year-old challenger Andrea Jaeger 6-4, 6-3 Saturday for her sixth U.S. Open Clay Court tennis championship and a tourney record first prize of $30,000.

"Right now, I am a little stronger than Andrea, but next year could be a different story," said Lloyd, who took control in the second set and held off the fourth-seeded challenger in the nationally televised match at the Indianapolis Sports Center.

"Right now, I'm taller and heavier than she is. She's only 15. It'll take two more years, I think, for her to develop real power ... for her to gain some weight and grow a little taller."

Lloyd said Jaeger will also "have to learn to volley a little better to be a world class player. But she moves very well, she covers the court well. She is a better player at 15 than I was."

Lloyd said she still has room for improvement herself, though.

"That's one of the reasons I keep playing, because I think I can improve."

Jaeger, trying to become the youngest U.S. Clay Court winner, stayed even with Lloyd midway through the first set. The two women each broke service twice, then held serve through a series of long returns.

The 25-year-old Lloyd went ahead 5-4 on a deuce game, then broke Jaeger's service to clinch the first set.

The first three games of the second set all went to deuce before Lloyd broke service and held serve for a 4-1 lead. Neither player was overly aggressive in the sweltering heat, and they each held serve the rest of the way.

The second-place finish for Jaeger, her best showing in a major tournament so far in her young career, was worth $15,000.

It was the third time this summer that Lloyd beat Jaeger. The last time they met, Lloyd won 6-1, 6-1 in the quarterfinals at Wimbledon.

The victory extended Lloyd's unbeaten streak in this tournament to 31 straight matches. She has won every year since 1972, except for a three-year stretch in which she did not compete because of World Team Tennis commitments.

"Andrea's the toughest opponent I've had this week. You can't give her an inch," Lloyd said of the Lincolnshire, Ill., teenager who beat No.2-seeded Evonne Goolagong in Friday's semifinals.

"I knew that I couldn't outsteady Andrea," Lloyd said. "That's what makes her so good on clay. Therefore I had to go for more shots and play more aggressive."

Lloyd said that when she started taking command in the second set, "I was picking my shots better. I would use drop shots, or go deep and come in and try to cut off the volley. I wanted to get the point over and end the volley sooner."

In the long, first set, the two hit the ball back and forth 49 times on one point. Other times, they volleyed 37, 35, 32, 31 and 30 times. Only once in the second set did a volley go past 30.

By that time, Lloyd said, "I was playing tired, I admit. If it had gone to three sets, I'm sure I would have been very tired."

Lloyd said the style of play has changed since she first won here at the age of 17.

"Then, the trend was serve and volley, and all I had to do was be patient. Now there are so many more good players. Now you need good ground strokes, too."

Jaeger, a pig-tailed teen-ager who still wears braces on her teeth, felt she did well under the circumstances.

"It was hard for me to keep the game going for that long, but I'm glad I did so well," she said. "When you lose to someone that good, allu can do is go home and practice."

Jaeger said the older Lloyd is "so much better than I am. It takes a long time for somebody so young to get that good. She's just a lot stronger. I felt I played pretty well, but I'm so young, and it's hard to play Chris."

Mel Purcell, 21, defeated Mario Martinez, 18, of Bolivia 6-1, 6-3 on Saturday in the men's semifinals.

Purcell and Martinez, both playing on the pro tennis circuit for only three weeks, were unseeded and reached the semifinal round with stunning upsets over heavily favored opponents.

Writers, Coaches Pick 'Heels As ACC Favorite

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The men who coach and the people who watch Atlantic Coast Conference football have tabbed North Carolina as the pre-season favorite to take the 1980 conference championship.

In two separate polls, the coaches and the media also predicted the same order of finish for the seven schools eligible for the title.

The Tar Heels, 1979 Gator Bowl champions, received six of the seven first-place votes cast. Coach Dick Crum, unable to vote for his own team according to the rules of the balloting, awarded his first-place pick to Maryland.

In both polls, the order of finish after North Carolina was; Maryland, Clemson, Wake Forest, North Carolina State, Virginia and Duke.

Georgia Tech is not eligible for the conference crown until 1983 and was not considered in the voting.

The coaches awarded Maryland four votes for second place and one to finish third during the 1980 season. Clemson also received three votes for second and three for third. The Blue Devils received all six votes to take seventh in the ACC during the upcoming campaign.

In the media poll, points were awarded on the basis of seven for first, six for second, etc. The final tabulation showed North Carolina with 568, Maryland at 518 and Clemson at 466.

The remaining four teams were: Wake Forest 302, N.C. State 301, Virginia 267 and Duke 98.

The Cinderella Demon Deacons, who finished tied for second in the conference and earned a trip to the Tangerine Bowl, was the only team in the media poll to receive votes for each of the seven positions.

Former N.C. State Kicker Getting Out

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Former North Carolina State University booter Jay Sherrill, dropped by the New England Patriots earlier this week, says he's getting out of the game for good.

Sherrill, a 1977 Wolfpack graduate, said he is through working the in professional football and will begin working for a Virginia roofing company.

"I'm basically going to hang it up," he said. "It has been three frustrating years, but I haven't regretted being involved because it has been a tremendous experience for me."

Getting cut by New England was nothing new to the Norfolk, Va., native. He's been cut by four National Football League squads since his Wolfpack days.

Sherrill holds N.C. State's record for consecutive points after touchdowns with 51. He tried to make it in the pros as a free agent, and said he learned the rules of that game.

"Most of the free agents that go to camp don't have a chance. This is something a lot of people who dream of trying out for a team don't realize," he said.

Bettenhausen 200

Rutherford Wins Pole; Rival Shares Spotlight

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Johnny Rutherford won the pole position for the Tony Bettenhausen 200, but it was his chief rival, Bobby Unser, and Unser's crew who gained the spotlight Saturday with some last-minute heroics.

Rutherford, winner of the Indianapolis 500 and three others championship car races this season, toured the one-mile oval at Wisconsin State Fairgrounds Park at 133.838 mph.

Al Unser, who has been struggling all year long to get his new Longhorn racer into victory lane, was the second fastest qualifier. His top lap was 133.684.

Rick Mears was the third fastest at 130.813. And the second row belonged completely to the Penske team after Bobby, the older of the two racing Unser brothers from Albuquerque, N.M., made it into the lineup in his backup car with less than two minutes remaining in the time trials session.

Unser, a three-time winner this season, went out earlier in the qualifying session and turned in the third slowest speed among the 29 cars which completed at least one lap.

"We had nothing but problems all day with that car," Unser explained after turning a 130.723 mph lap in the backup Penske PC-9.

The team had to pull the original car out of the qualifying line after it developed some kind of fuel injection problem. Then, when they did run it, the engine and the handling were off.

Team owner Roger Penske was beaming after the crews from both his team cars combined to get the backup machine ready for racing in just seven minutes.

"We knew we didn't have much time," Penske noted. "The car qualifies fourth and it didn't even have any practice time. Everybody pitched in and they did quite a job just to get us in the show."

There was some griping by drivers who were bumped from the 26-car field after Unser's late run and the promoter's decision to stick with 26 cars when 29 made qualifying attempts.

But Wally Dallenbach, a former Indy car driver and now competition director for Championship Auto Racing Teams, said it was all very legal.

"We're working in a tight framework here," Dallenbach said. "We've got an hour and a half after the first car qualifies and suddenly we're getting more cars out to qualify than we've had in the last three years.

"I told those guys upstairs (the timers) to make sure of the time because I knew it was going to come to this.

"I checked with them when he (Unser) was rolling, and he had two minutes to spare."

Rutherford quietly got into his street clothes and prepared to leave the track as Unser scrambled for his late run.

"I'm happy with what we did and I'm glad we got it done quickly," the Texan said.

Weaver: We're The Champions

By The Associated Press

"We are the champions," says Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver, and his Orioles are not ready to relinquish their crown without a fight.

"If we can get through these 11 games," adds Weaver, pointing to a stretch that has his club playing New York eight times and Kansas City three, "we can beat the heck out of the rest of the American League."

Weaver's team made it through the opener of that tough schedule in fine fashion Friday night, rallying for three runs in the eighth inning and one more in the ninth to beat the New York Yankees 5-2.

It was Baltimore's sixth consecutive victory and 14th in the last 16 games and brought them within 4½-games of the first-place Yankees in the American League East — New York's smallest lead since May 14.

The Yankees, who won the AL East three years in a row before Baltimore dethroned them last season, are well aware of the Orioles' bearing down on them.

"They have a very good team and they have been playing well, but we have to prove we can come back," said New York slugger Reggie Jackson.

Red Sox 4, White Sox 1

The Boston Red Sox turned to their bullpen and came up with Skip Lockwood, who hadn't started a game since 1974. Lockwood allowed five hits but only one run over the first three innings, then gave way to Bill Campbell and Bob Stanley, who also worked three innings each and the trio combined on an eight-hitter.

Royals 9-7, Blue Jays 0-4

Kansas City's sweep over Toronto gave the Royals six victories in the last seven starts and 11 in the last 14. Royals third baseman George Brett had two hits in each game and has now hit safely in a club-record 21 games.

Brewers 4, Indians 1

Ben Oglivie slammed a two-run homer, his 28th of the season, and Billy Travers pitched a four-hitter as Milwaukee snapped Cleveland's winning streak at five games.

Tigers 8, Rangers 0

Dan Petry pitched a five-hitter and Champ Summers hit a two-run homer and a two-run double for Detroit, which stole six bases — the most ever allowed by the Rangers.

Angels 9, Twins 5

Dan Ford, sidelined since May 28 because of a sore knee, hit a two-run homer and a run-scoring single to help California win its fifth in a row.

Mariners 2, A's 1

Seattle snapped a 12-game losing streak and gave Manager Maury Wills his first victory in four games since replacing Darrell Johnson as skipper of the Mariners.

3rd-Ranked Middleweight Now 27-0

Davison Pounds Parker

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — At 6-foot-2, Dwight Davison was 6 inches taller than middleweight foe Curtis Parker. But the lanky Davison found the height and reach advantage wasn't all that advantageous.

"He was a little more difficult than I anticipated; I thought I could keep him off with my jab but he kept getting up under me," Davison said Friday night after taking a 10-round unanimous decision over Parker at Caesars Palace in the second edition of NBC's resurrected "Friday Night Fights."

Davison, of Detroit, the World Boxing Council's third-ranked middleweight, said after running his record to 27-0 that Parker's speed and his tactic of coming in low presented some problems.

"He gets to you so quickly that you never really have time to set up," Davison said.

Parker, from Philadelphia, said he was disappointed with the loss, which ended his record of 17 straight wins.

"It's just something that I have to overcome," he said. "I thought I won it."

Parker, the World Boxing Association's No.3 middleweight, set the tempo in the opening two rounds, as Davison tried to figure out how to handle his low-charging foe.

Olympic Team Makes Most Of Opportunity

BERLIN (AP) — It was as close as the U.S. Olympic team ever got to Moscow this summer, and they made the most of it. The team scored 12 victories Friday in a 25-event track and field meet featuring athletes from 24 countries.

U.S. sprinters Stanley Floyd, Carl Lewis and Harvey Glance finished 1-2-3 in the 100 meters. Floyd clocked 10.25. Edwin Moses, meanwhile, missed his own world mark of 47.13 by only four-hundredths of a second in winning the 400-meter hurdles.

In some respects, it was a battle of the Olympic boycotters.

Athletes from the United States, West Germany, Kenya, Canada, China, Japan and elsewhere stayed away from the Moscow Olympics last month to protest the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Many of them showed up Friday night in Olympic Stadium, site of the 1936 Games manipulated by Adolf Hitler into a glorification of the Nazi Reich.

Kenyan Kip Rono electrified the crowd of about 55,000 with a fast start in the 3,000 meter steeplechase but tired on the last lap. He won in 8 minutes 16.9 seconds, but the time was well off the 8:05.4 world record of countryman and namesake Henry Rono, a Washington State product. American Henry Marsh was second in 8:27.2.

Apart from Moses' fast 400 hurdles, world records — six of which fell in Moscow's Lenin Stadium — never appeared in danger.

"I never knew I was anywhere near that (record), or I would have gone for it," Moses said. "When you get these rabbits on the track you need to have those little hundredth-second clocks around so you can see your times."

Bench's 'Picture' Slam Gives Cincinnati Game

By The Associated Press

The Johnny Bench Show was one strike away from becoming an all-time television flop. Instead, it wound up getting rave reviews.

When Cincinnati's All-Star catcher stepped to the plate in the eighth inning with two men out, the bases loaded and the Reds trailing the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-4 Friday night, he knew that a television crew from his native Oklahoma City was at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium filming a special program about him.

"I was 0-for-3 with three strikeouts. I was thinking, 'Geez, why do those guys have to show up tonight?'" Bench said.

Reliever Don Stanhouse, who had just entered the game, quickly got ahead of Bench 0-2. Bench fouled off a pitch, then got hold of a slider and watched the ball sail deep to left-center.

"If it wasn't a homer it would have been a three-run single because I was standing there watching it," Bench said.

It was indeed a home run, the 10th grand-slam of Bench's career, and gave the Reds an 8-5 triumph over the Dodgers that left three teams one game apart in the frantic National League West. The Houston Astros, beaten 5-3 by the San Diego Padres, lead Los Angeles by one-half game and Cincinnati by one.

The Reds started their winning rally off Los Angeles reliever Bob Castillo when Ray Knight walked with one out in the eighth, moved to third on Ken Griffey's single and then was out trying to score on George Foster's grounder to third.

Padres 5, Astros 3

Pinch-hitter Von Joshua's two-run double with two out in the ninth inning drove in the tying and winning runs in a three-run San Diego rally.

Cubs 8-2, Expos 4-5

Chicago's Mike Krukow was the starting pitcher May 28 when the Cubs and Expos were halted after 10 innings by darkness at Chicago's Wrigley Field deadlocked 3-3. When the proceedings resumed Friday, Krukow was long gone and the Cubs prevailed 8-4 on Cliff Johnson's grand-slam homer in the 15th inning. But when the regularly scheduled game got under way, there was Krukow on the mound again. This time, he was tagged with the setback as the Expos got home runs from Ellis Valentine and Gary Carter.

Pirates 6, Phillies 5

Pinch-hitter Lee Lacy snapped an eighth-inning tie with a sacrifice fly off Philadelphia reliever Tug McGraw to give the Pirates their fourth consecutive triumph and pull them within one game of first-place Montreal in the NL East.

Braves 7, Giants 3

Bob Horner's three-run homer highlighted a five-run seventh-inning rally as Atlanta beat San Francisco. The Braves jumped on relief pitchers Greg Minton and Tom Griffin for four doubles and a single besides Horner's 22nd homer in the winning rally.

Mets 3, Cardinals 2

NL Set To Again Consider DH

Senior Circuit Seems Closer To Adoption Of 'Unsightly Wrinkle'

DETROIT (AP) — The National League decides this week at baseball's summer meetings whether to break with tradition and adopt the designated hitter rule after seven years of rejection.

National League clubs have consistently voted against the controversial DH rule since 1973 when the American League started using a batter designated to hit for the pitcher. But baseball's senior circuit appears closer than ever this week to approving what critics call an unsightly wrinkle on the fabric of the national pastime.

Proponents of the DH reportedly have five of the seven votes they'll need for victory. Four clubs are against it while three teams — Los Angeles, San Francisco and Montreal — are undecided.

If the battle lines are drawn that way, DH supporters will need to win over two of the three undecided clubs.

The DH vote should highlight the two days of meetings among officials of major league baseball's 26 teams that will focus on the financial status of the game, player relations and television and radio rights.

The sessions open Tuesday in suburban Detroit with the start of a 1½-day seminar on baseball's financial status. Sure to be discussed will be the hot issue of compensation for free agents and the results of last Thursday's first meeting of a special player-management committee appointed to look into the matter.

That committee consists of general managers Harry Dalton of Milwaukee and Frank Cashen of the New York Mets for management and, representing the players, Milwaukee's Sal Bando and Philadelphia's Bob Boone.

"The serious financial concerns of our clubs and the constant search for ways to improve the relationship between the clubs and players are major subjects these days," said Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, who will preside over the seminar.

After the seminar concludes Wednesday, the leagues will conduct separate meetings and the National League will vote on the DH. A joint session will follow.

Those favoring the DH this time around, according to a survey conducted by the Atlanta Journal, are St. Louis, Atlanta, New York, San Diego and Houston. Those opposed: Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Chicago.

"We are going into the meeting with an open mind and see how the proposal is presented," said General Manager Spec Richardson of San Francisco.

Al Campanis, the Dodgers' general manager, said he and Los Angeles owner Peter O'Malley would huddle on the rule.

"My initial response to the DH rule was that I was in favor of it," Campanis said Friday. "However, after studying the effect it has had in the American League, I have some reservations. It may have some adverse effect on a pitcher's arm."

St. Louis General Manager John Claiborne, a former executive in the AL with Boston and Oakland, said the DH will "enhance" the game. The Cardinals formally introduced the DH issue onto the agenda.

"I've seen it (the DH rule) over in the American League and it was good for the game," said Claiborne. "It will generate offense and help improve attendance. I think more people prefer to see a 10-9 ballgame than a 2-1 game.

"It will also be good to have both leagues uniform," Claiborne added.

Pete Peterson, general manager of Pittsburgh, the defending World Champions, said he isn't convinced by the argument that the DH has boosted attendance in the American League.

"The National League has also increased its attendance over the last few years, so who's to say that the DH was responsible in the American League?," Peterson said. "We'll vote 'no' because we don't think it's good. It takes too much strategy away from the manager."

Peterson said he fears the DH also would hamper a team's ability to give its young pitchers some work. And he said he isn't swayed by the argument that the DH helps prolong the careers of aging sluggers.

"From a selfish standpoint, I would say let's have the DH rule. We're a good-hitting team and it would let us play a guy like (Willie) Stargell in 140 games instead of 110 games a year," Peterson noted.

"But who wants to see an (Henry) Aaron or a Stargell waddle up to first base" once past their prime? Peterson asked.

Another staunch DH opponent, Cincinnati general manager Dick Wagner, said the rule "doesn't belong in baseball."

"I like National League baseball the way it is," Wagner said. "We've done research among our fans and they haven't shown any great degree of interest in it."

PLAN YOUR HOME

The Laurelton

By Jerry Bishop

Expansive and generously proportioned living areas combine with five sizable bedrooms, including a lavish master bedroom with deck, in the Laurelton, a contemporary family home.

The refreshing exterior blends angular contemporary lines with traditional small-paned windows and adds double entry doors for an inviting effect. The facade also gives a promise of unrestricted space that is fulfilled inside.

Double doors lead to the closeted foyer, with living room at right. Indulged with space for entertaining, the living room also spotlights a wood-burning fireplace on one end of the room and sliding glass doors to a roofed, semi-private patio on the other.

Proceeding through the patio, we come to another set of sliding glass doors, this time to the 23-ft. family kitchen. The U-shaped kitchen blends with an equally large area of space for family dining and hobbies. A planning desk is featured.

Edging the kitchen, the formal dining room can be reserved for entertaining. The neighboring family room, the largest of the living areas, shows two sets of sliding glass doors to a second patio at rear.

Upstairs, the sprawling level is devoted to sleeping quarters. The 19-ft. master bedroom is favored with an oversized walk-in closet, private bath, and sliding glass doors to the deck. Four more bedrooms, all sizable and well-furnished with closets, are included.

For laundry and storage, the plan calls for a laundry room flanked by four closets in the first floor hallway. A basement is also provided.

Auto Makers Go Small In Hope To Hit It Big

By JAMES V. HIGGINS
UPI Auto Writer

DETROIT (UPI) — It's exactly the opposite of the horsepower race of the 1960s.

But like that earlier competition, the U.S. auto industry's all-out economy drive will produce a few milestones when it begins in earnest this fall.

Ford Motor Co., so closely identified with V-8 power in the past, already is bragging about the gas-stingy new 1.3-liter four-cylinder engine that will power its new 1981 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx small cars.

Typifying the new model launch, that engine is the smallest Ford has built in the U.S. in its 77-year history — including the Model T.

Car buyers who were abundantly supplied with horsepower and big car performance for two decades now are screaming for economy. The domestic industry, harassed by efficient imported cars, responds this fall with new car offerings widely described as the most important in its history.

Ford, Chrysler Corp., General Motors Corp. and American Motors Corp. will try to entice reluctant consumers with cars calculated to fight the import tide.

According to Ward's Automotive Reports, an authoritative industry statistical journal, U.S. automakers will double their capacity to produce front-wheel drive cars in the 1981 model year to 2.9 million units.

Front-wheel drive is the key, yielding great benefits in overall vehicle packaging. With transverse-mounted four-cylinder engines and front-drive transaxles, engineers can trim overall dimensions and weight yet conserve interior space.

The most worrisome question at present, though, is not whether the new offerings can match the imports in fuel economy. Automakers are expected to surpass easily the federally mandated fleet average fuel economy of 22 miles per gallon for 1981.

The auto industry now is mired in its worst depression since the 1930s, but most auto executives and some Wall Street analysts optimistically predict a sales upswing this fall gathering steam early in 1981.

Opinion, however, is divided.

One forecasting house, the Chase Automotive Division, says 1981 car sales could be hurt by record price hikes which automakers are blaming largely on sophisticated emissions control equipment required by the government.

Add continuing economic problems and the prospect of big carryover inventories of unsold 1980 models, and Chase says the passenger car outlook for the 1981 model year "is indeed bleak."

But the optimists say Americans already have smiled favorably on the first generation of technologically advanced, U.S.-built, front-wheel drive small cars — the GM X-cars and Chrysler's Horizon-Omni subcompacts — promising success for those that will follow.

General Motors Corp.

GM's most significant 1981 car offering will actually be a 1981½ model due out next spring — the pattern the No. 1 automaker followed with the highly successful X-cars in April of 1979.

They are the new "J-body" small cars replacing the sporty subcompact Chevrolet Monza and Pontiac Sunbird.

Detroit's traditional secrecy about new car models has been observed for the J-car alone among the new 1981 small cars. Chrysler, Ford and AMC all have openly displayed, or at least acknowledged, their versions.

The front-wheel drive J-cars are said to be smaller than the X-car compacts but larger than the two models they replace and will be offered in a coupe, two-door hatchback, four-door sedan and wagon.

A year after their introduction, J-car derivatives will be given to other GM car divisions, possibly including Cadillac.

Indications are the Chevrolet and Pontiac versions will be powered by a 1.8-liter four-cylinder engine yielding city gas mileage as high as 28 miles per gallon, and GM is said to be considering a diesel engine option that could boost highway mileage well above 45 mpg.

A diesel engine built by GM's Japanese partner Isuzu also may be made available next year in the subcompact Chevrolet Chevette, which reigned through much of 1979 and 1980 as the nation's No. 1 selling car.

Word also has seeped out that GM plans styling changes this fall for its specialty mid-sized Chevrolet Monte Carlo, Pontiac Grand Prix, Buick Regal and Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme and the luxury Buick Riviera, Olds Toronado and Cadillac Eldorado lines.

Here's the Answer

Q. — We live in a small town and have had our eyes on a very small house for some time, but even though it is nothing more than a cottage, we are finding it difficult to get a mortgage for it, actually through no fault of our own. Someone told us the government has some kind of mortgage for people in our situation. Where can I find out about such a mortgage? Can you tell us what it is all about?

A. — You really haven't supplied enough information on which to base a precise answer, since such things as the exact reason why you can't get a mortgage and what you mean by "people in our situation" are important factors. However, it is likely you are talking about a loan program of the Farmers Home Administration, which was discussed some time ago in this column. Under that program, the regulations apply only to properties in areas with 20,000 or less population. It is designed to assist persons who cannot obtain mortgage loans through conventional sources, but that doesn't mean the money will be furnished to people who cannot afford to pay it back.

At one time the program dealt only with low-income families. It now applies to families in the moderate-income brackets. The loans are made on houses of moderate cost and size, the latter being less than 1,300 square feet of habitable space. Interest rates are very low for low-income buyers. If you live in a qualified area, then your local bank, savings and loan association or other lending institution most certainly will know about the program and be glad to explain it to you.

Q. — You told someone recently about the proper way to clean screens. I suppose it was all right, but I have been using a method that has worked very well over the years. Combine in a gallon jug 1 cup of ammonia, ½ cup of white vinegar and ¼ cup of baking soda. Pour some of the mixture into a bucket. Dip a firm brush into the solution and rub over the screens. The dirt will run off. I am sure your readers will be interested in this.

A. — I am sure, also. Thanks.

Q. — I finished an old cabinet the other day after taking off all the old finish. I followed the instructions carefully about rinsing off the varnish remover, then applied two coats of shellac, but the finish is slightly sticky and doesn't seem to want to dry. What did I do wrong? How can I fix it?

A. — There are several possibilities. One is that the shellac was very old, since shellac deteriorates in the container after six months or a year. The other is that you applied the shellac full strength, when it should be diluted considerably — as much as 50 percent in most cases. A third possibility is that you put on the shellac when the humidity was very high. To get rid of the stickiness, apply denatured alcohol to a clean, lintless cloth and rub over the surface for as long as necessary.

(The techniques of applying varnish, shellac, lacquer, bleach, remover, stain, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents PLUS a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG

Insulation experts generally agree that an uninsulated attic can add hundreds of dollars to the heating and cooling costs of a single-family house.

Since many attics are still lacking insulation and others have an insufficient amount of it, millions of dollars are being wasted in an era when saving energy is an essential part of national policy.

How much you save by providing enough attic insulation depends on how much is already there, the rates you pay for fuel and electricity, and what other energy-saving measures you have taken, among them proper weatherstripping, caulking and such.

There are many insulating materials for use in existing homes, including cellulose fiber, vermiculite, perlite, plastic foams, reflecting foil and the most widely used type — mineral wool, either fiber glass or rock wool.

Mineral wool is available in blankets, rolls of insulation with vapor barriers or without; batts, similar to blankets but cut into 4-foot and 8-foot lengths; pouring wool, loose insulation often used in attic floors; and blowing wool, loose insulation which is blown into place in ceilings and walls by professionals using pneumatic equipment.

When an attic is used for living, insulation should be placed between collar beams, between sloping rafters, between the studs of "knee" walls, between the joists of the floor outside the living space, and in dormer walls and ceilings. Adding mineral wool to the attic floor is the easiest way to improve the thermal performance of your house.

As much as R-30 or R-38 insulation is economically justifiable because already-high energy costs are expected to rise, your house may be in a climate that is colder or warmer than average, your house may be both heated and air conditioned, and a high amount of floor insulation will compensate partially for poorly insulated walls.

An important point in the insulating of an attic is not to cover eaves vents with the material being used. With batts, just be careful about batt placement. With pouring wool, either construct a baffle with boards or lay pieces of thick batts next to the vents. This will keep the wind from disturbing the loose wool and prevent you from inadvertently covering the vents in the first place.

Ventilation in the attic is vital. There should be at least two vent openings, located so that air can flow in one and out the other. A combination of vents at the eaves and the gable ends is better than gable vents alone. A combination of eaves vents and continuous ridge venting is best of all.

(Do-it-yourself instructions for attic insulating are in Andy Lang's booklet, "Save Money by Insulating," available by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y. 11743.)

Making Little Seem Like Lot

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

A growing decorating problem for many persons is changing their lifestyle to fit into a small apartment after years of living in a larger house.

So numerous are the people moving into considerably smaller quarters that specialists have evolved a theory of small-space decorating. The decorating prescription calls for reordering your priorities. There is no room for sentiment in a studio apartment. The second set of dishes, the golf clubs you haven't used in 10 years, and the complete, collected works of a childhood author will have to go if you expect to have room for the essentials, such as a bed, a dining table, storage furniture and comfortable seating.

Think clearly about future needs. If you will be entertaining a great deal, keep the prerequisites. But if you expect to curtail your at-home gatherings to smaller, more manageable groups, eliminate the unnecessary items. Allow room for what is really important to you, whether it's appliances to cook fancy food or enough bookshelves to accommodate all your favorites.

Once needs have been spelled out, the physical dimensions of the space available must be measured and put on paper. This information should be readily available for shopping expeditions.

One way to maximize your living area is to think unconventionally about the division of space. Room dividers that also serve as storage are more useful than partitions or walls. For example, bookcases which form a solid surface on the back side can be covered with cork board or fabric and used as a "wall" against which to rest a bed, studio couch or desk. A homemade room divider can be made by stapling fabric to a wood frame.

Usually, you gain more storage space with built-in furniture. But, if the added costliness of this type of furniture eliminates it as a solution, consider using a combination of ready-made bookcases and cabinets with a custom-made, wood-or laminate-covered top.

You should give preference to multi-purpose pieces when choosing furniture. A plain desk can serve also as a dining table. Comfortable but upright chairs may double for dining and accommodating guests in a conversation grouping.

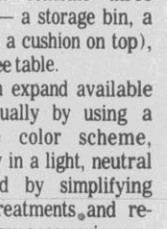
Modular seating which is easily moved into different configurations can be used as a sofa or separate chairs, as the occasion demands. Furniture on wheels, such as a tea wagon or a side table with drawers, offers flexibility. And a refurbished, old trunk can combine three functions — a storage bin, a seat (with a cushion on top), and a coffee table.

You can expand available space visually by using a monotone color scheme, preferably in a light, neutral color, and by simplifying window treatments and removing fussy accessories.

Another marvelous space expander is the mirror. A mirror on a dark wall catches the sunlight and livens up a dreary room. A mirror on the long wall of a narrow room makes it look wider. On a short wall, a mirror makes the room look deeper. Try this trick if you have a half-circle table: stand the table against a mirror that goes down at least as far as the table's top. You will have created the illusion of a round table in a space that appears twice as large as it is.

Color can be a room enlarger. To raise a ceiling that is too low, paint it white or any color which is much lighter than the wall. To lower the ceiling, use a darker or brighter color than the one which is on the walls.

Let's Talk Real Estate



by Connally Branch

A good approach when house hunting may be to take a notebook and pencil. On a house-hunting tour, if possible, consider bringing along a camera as well. It is a good idea to write down the name, address and phone number of each owner. The name and number of the real estate professional handling the showing will be given to you. Make notes on all special points of interest and note the specific problems which are obvious in each. Later, your real estate professional will be able to use this information in finding other houses especially suited to your requirements. A couple of pictures of each house are good for later reference and to show other family members.

1981 Ford Escort and Mercury Lynx in a recent meeting and boldy described them as "the most sophisticated, efficient and technically advanced small cars ever made in this country."

Replacements for the 10-year-old Pinto and Bobcat, they will be set off by racing-derived hemi-head four-cylinder engines, a new manual transaxle, an innovative automatic transaxle and a fully independent suspension system.

With the looks of a subcompact and an interior space rating that puts them technically in the compact class, the Escort and Lynx will compete directly against all the new domestic front-wheel drive cars.

The 1.3-liter engine will be standard and a 1.6-liter version will be optional in three-door hatchback and four-door "liftgate" or wagon configurations. Ford believes the car will be rated as high as 30 mpg in city driving and 44 mpg on the highway.

Ford also said it expects the Escort and Lynx will have more patented features than any other car in its history. The company has applied for 35 U.S. patents, indicating the high-technology input.

Among them is the ATX automatic transaxle with a unique split-torque feature Ford claims will provide fuel efficiency approaching that of a manual transmission.

As in a conventional automatic transmission, the three-speed ATX transmits all power through the torque converter in low and reverse gears. But in second and third gear, the power flow is split between the torque converter and a more efficient mechanical connection.

"This arrangement eliminates almost all torque converter slippage associated with conventional automatic transmissions and results in significantly better fuel economy than is possible in less sophisticated designs," said Erick A. Reickert, Ford's director of small car programs.

The Escort-Lynx is due for introduction Oct. 17, and sister versions of this world car will be introduced in Europe and elsewhere around the globe.

Sporty coupe versions which the trade publication Automotive News said will be named Ford EXP and Mercury LN-7 will be introduced in 1981½.

Ford also will offer for 1981 a downsized and restyled Ford Granada-Mercury Monarch intermediate based on the platform of the successul Fairmont and Zephyr compacts.

Chrysler Corp.

Chrysler has more at stake with its 1981 front-wheel drive K-car compacts than any other automaker: its survival.

Chrysler says the new Plymouth Reliant and Dodge Aries compacts will make up as much as half of its 1981 car production, and the No. 3 automaker's situation is hopeless if they don't sell.

So it is striving to make them a winner with the most rigorous quality control steps in its history. Preproduction has been going on since April to check tools and components, and the first 5,000 models off the assembly line late this summer will be test driven to shake out any remaining bugs.

Compared with the Volare and Aspen compacts they replace, Reliant and Aries will be 27 inches shorter, more than 1,000 pounds lighter and 36 percent more fuel-efficient — with about the same passenger space.

The standard powerplant will be a Chrysler-built 2.2-liter four-cylinder engine, and Chrysler will offer as an option a 2.6-liter four-cylinder engine built by Mitsubishi Motor Co. of Japan.

Pentagon Eyeing Retired Liner As Possible Hospital Ship

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior Pentagon officials say they are seriously considering converting the retired ocean liner United States into a super hospital ship for possible wartime duty in the Persian Gulf.

But the Federal Maritime Administration — which has been trying to unload the liner for about a decade — says it finally has a buyer who has made a $2 million down payment.

What's more, it appears unclear whether the Pentagon has the power to commandeer the ship in peacetime.

The idea of converting the United States into a hospital ship arose as defense medical officials studied possible ways to provide medical care for American troops if they are ever sent into the Persian Gulf-Indian Ocean region to defend against a Soviet attack.

Top medical specialists under Defense Secretary Harold Brown say they believe the giant United States, moored at Norfolk, Va., since 1969, could be remodeled to accommodate at least 2,000 hospital beds and some 20 operating rooms. This would be nearly 10 times as many beds and five times as many operating suites as there are aboard the Navy's only hospital ship, the Sanctuary.

The Sanctuary has been in the reserve fleet for about five years and it is known that the Navy favors bringing it back into condition so that it could be sent to sea on about 10 days' notice.

Navy officials appear unenthusiastic about converting the United States, the cost of which has not yet been calculated.

But top defense officials have told the Navy to plan for such a possible conversion, with the money to come from future budgets.

One defense medical official said he is concerned that the Rapid Deployment Force might experience a high rate of illness, as well as casualties, if sent into the Persian Gulf area, which he described as a "particularly notorious" area for diseases of various kinds.

But maritime administration spokesman Walter Oates said the United States has been sold for $5 million to United Cruises Inc., of Seattle, Wash., which he said is interested in remodeling the vessel for passenger service.

Insurance To US Businessmen In China

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter on Friday signed a bill that will provide U.S. government insurance for American businessmen in China in the event they suffer losses due to war, rebellion or insurrection against its communist government.

The measure also will protect investors if the Chinese decide to expropriate their property or prevent them from taking their money out of the country.

"It is a further step in establishing mutually beneficial economic relations between the largest nation and the largest economy in the world," Carter said in a statement accompanying the signing.

Carter noted that the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, a U.S. government body, has written over $10 billion worth of this kind of insurance in nearly 70 countries. These include communist-ruled Romania and Yugoslavia, but not the Soviet Union. The new law authorizes OPIC to make an agreement with the Chinese government to extend the service to China.

A businessman has to pay an insurance premium of 1.5 percent of the value of the property he wants to protect.

If a war or an armed rebellion destroys his property, OPIC will compensate him in full. It will also give him U.S. dollars if the country where he has invested declares that it will not change his local currency.

Robert Jordan, OPIC spokesman, said the policy does not insure against riots — though there is a move in Congress to authorize that too.

Americans are not expected to invest directly in China, as they do in Canada, West Germany or other private enterprise countries.

"The (People's Republic of China) has now adopted a new law on joint ventures, making it possible for private American business to participate in the economic modernization and growth of the PRC," said the White House statement.

"Now private U.S. investors and contractors insured by OPIC can serve the interests of both the United States and China.

"OPIC is selective, supporting only those investments that contribute to the development of the host country and that do not harm the U.S. economy.

Over 4,000 N.C. Jobs Eliminated

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — More than 4,000 jobs were eliminated in North Carolina during the first six months of 1980 because of plant closings or permanent layoffs, the State Economic Development Board said Friday.

A report released by the board showed that 40 companies either closed or announced permanent layoffs resulting in 4,318 jobs being eliminated. The figures for the same period last year were 16 companies and 2,298 jobs.

"North Carolina would be in a very bad way if we hadn't had the economic expansion of the past few years," said Miles J. Smith Jr., the board's vice-chairman.

Smith said that in the first seven months this year, industry had announced plans to build plants that would employ 18,000 people. In 1979, industry announced 37,000 new jobs for the entire year.

The report indicated the greatest loss of jobs occurred from April through June with 32 plants announcing 2,773 jobs eliminated.

Companies announcing closings and layoffs ranged from manufacturers of mobile homes to yachts to hosiery. Texfi Industries Inc. laid off 450 people, and since June has closed its operation in New Bern, which employed 440.

From April through June, companies announcing layoffs or closings that affected 100 or more jobs were Phenix Chair of West Jefferson; Kayser Roth in Hickory; Monsanto Corp. in Fayetteville; The National Spinning Co. in Warsaw; Clark-Gravely Corp. in Clemmons; Corl Corp. in Gastonia; Frito-Lay Co. in Greensboro; Old Fort Finishing in Old Fort; and Northern Telecom in Goldsboro.

Mystery Candidate

DETROIT (AP) — Alfred Lawrence Patterson, a 25-year-old patient in a psychiatric hospital, spent about $40 dollars campaigning for the Republican nomination in Michigan's 17th Congressional District.

He won.

Patterson, one of three GOP candidates, couldn't vote for himself in Michigan's primary Tuesday because he wasn't allowed to leave Northville Regional Psychiatric Hospital.

But he polled 4,464 votes for an even 50 percent. His nearest rival, Raymond Cochran, got 2,531 votes for 28 percent.

"I never saw hide nor hair of him," said Cochran.

In November, Patterson will face a strong Democratic incumbent, William Broadhead, and he is trying to get released from the suburban Detroit hospital to wage his campaign.

Patterson says the Secret Service wanted him committed because he wrote a letter to Sen. Edward Kennedy threatening to sue the presidential hopeful because Kennedy's staff lost a federal prison reform proposal he sent them.

GOREN BRIDGE

ASK OMAR

Q.—Among the many people with whom I play, the convenient or "short" club is regularly used. In defending against a "short" club, it had been my understanding that an overcall of two clubs, instead of being a cue-bid, shows a club suit. However, recently I was playing and my partner overcalled a one club opening bid with two clubs. My hand was: ♠ xx ♡ KJxxxx ◇ xxx ♣ xx I toyed with the idea of bidding two hearts, but decided against it and passed. Partner nearly exploded—she held a balanced hand of 21 points with ♠ Axx. We need a referee. How about it?—G.H., Chicago, Ill.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—Considering the prevalence of "short" club openings and home-grown short club systems, a number of players have decided to use a two club overcall of a one club opening bid as a natural bid, showing a club suit. However, the majority still plays that it is a cue-bid. Unless I had a specific agreement with my partner, I would presume partner was making a cue-bid.

I can make quite a convincing case in support of the cue-bid. It is a misconception that when a player who is using a system that includes a "short" or convenient club, opens one club, he will be short in the suit. Quite the contrary. A player is more likely to have five cards in the suit than three or fewer. And if you add to that the number of times that opener has a four-card suit, you will find that in the majority of cases the one club bidder has a genuine suit. And it is not too often that you will want to play at the two-level in the suit that opponents have opened at the one-level.

Q.—I have heard mention of Key-card Blackwood. Something about "five" aces, altbough all the packs I play with have only four. Can you explain?—L. Winters, Pittsburgh, Pa.

A.—My pleasure. It treats the king of the trump suit as an ace, thus bringing the total number you show to five. The responses to the four no trump inquiry are now as follows:

5 ♠ = 0 or 3 "aces"
5 ◇ = 1 or 4 "aces"
5 ♡ = 2 "aces"
5 ♠ = 2 "aces" and the queen of trumps

How do you show all five "aces"? You don't; it is presumed that no one will inquire for aces when he has no ace and is also missing the king of trumps. No sane bidder, anyway.

I am not completely sold on this method. I can think of hands where I would want to be in slam if I am missing one ace and the king of trumps. However, with Key-card Blackwood I have no way of knowing whether I am missing two aces, or only one and the king of trumps.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, c/o this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

U.S. Firm Sold Thousands Of Trucks To Libya

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Motors Corp. has sold almost 2900 trucks to Libya over the past four years, some of which are said to have been earmarked for the Libyan Army for "general purpose use."

The disclosure drew an indignant reaction from Rep. Millicent Fenwick, D-N.J., the author of a 1979 amendment barring the sale of U.S. equipment which could have a military purpose to countries engaging in the export of international terrorism.

"It's madness," Mrs. Fenwick said Friday in a telephone interview, adding that she will demand an explanation from the State and Commerce Departments.

Mrs. Fenwick's concern over the sales stem from Libya's reputation as one of the most militantly anti-Israeli states in the Arab world and as the alleged sponsor of numerous hijackings and attempts to overthrow pro-Western government in the Middle East and Africa.

AMC spokesman Lloyd Northland said 1425 of the trucks sold to Libya were four-wheel drive "utility vehicles" with no military application. But he said there were "indications" that some trucks sold under a 1976 contract "would go to the Libyan Army for general purpose use."

The most recent delivery came July 14 and involved 50 of the utility vehicles, which have a configuration similar to a jeep.

The shipment took place at a time when Billy Carter, the president's brother, was under investigation for his relationship with Libya. But State Department officials pointed out that the delivery was part of a continuing series dating back to before the Carter administration took office.

Questioned about the AMC sales, the State Department provided a written answer which referred only to the July 14 delivery.

"These were commercial, not military vehicles, and are exportable under a general license," the Department said. "They are freely available throughout the world from a wide number of suppliers. There was no requirement that the exporter seek U.S. government authorization prior to shipment."

Northard acknowledged that the trucks can be modified to make them suitable for combat operations but said the same can be done with most any vehicle.

Because of Libya's alleged support of terrorism, the United States has blocked the sale of eight C-130 military transports and six commercial jets Libya has been seeking.

Mrs. Fenwick said the sales raise questions about the American commitment to fighting international terrorism.

"We keep doing things that must convince them (the Libyans) that we don't really mean it."

In addition to the utility vehicles, AMC also has sold Libya cargo trucks, ambulances, fuel and water tankers, vans, dump trucks and wreckers. The total value of the contracts is $58.8 million, Northard said.

The latest of the four sales contracts between Libya and AMC involve 761 vehicles and was signed in 1979.

Interest Futures Dropped

By KATHY OSOBA
AP Business Writer

Interest rate futures dropped sharply Friday with analysts pointing to the weak demand for the government's 30 year bonds as a key factor in the slide.

Market analysts said sales of new homes in June were 16 percent higher in June, creating further pressure on bond prices, which move inversely to yields.

Thomas Ramseth, floor man-ager at the Chicago Board of Trade for Paine Webber Inc., said yields at the bond auction varied more widely than dealers had expected. Yields as high as 10.80 percent were in-cluded in the auction when the top was expected to be only at 10.72 percent.

Ample supplies of government bonds resulting from the Treasury auction of $8.2 billion worth of intermediate and long-term bonds this week and slack demand kept prices lower.

Meanwhile, the Commerce Department announced that sales of new single-family houses increased by 16 percent in June to an annual rate of 535,000 homes. Economists expect later reports will show that a decline in mortgage rates boosted housing sales beginning in July.

Increased demand for housing usually means greater demand for credit, Ramseth said. As credit demand rises, interest rates usually increase to ration the available supply of mortgage money.

Longterm U.S. Treasury Bonds traded at the Chicago Board of Trade closed 43 to 48 ticks lower, Ginnie Maes were 37 to 38 ticks lower, and U.S. Treasury Bills traded at the Chicago Mercantile Exchange were .23 to .30 points lower.

Meanwhile, the sharp rise in pork bellies futures despite ample frozen supplies in warehouses has fueled speculation of a "squeeze" or shortage of de-liverable supplies against expiring contracts. That squeeze causes traders who have commitments to deliver to bid up the price to liquidate their positions on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Curtis Mahon, livestock analyst for Thomson McKinnon Securities, said frozen stocks (uncured bacon) are higher now than last year.

"There's no shortage of bellies," Mahon said. "We've got more bellies in storage this year than last year. Someone's holding back something artifically from the market."

Pork bellies advanced the 2 cent daily trading limit in all contract months, with the August contract closing at 50.20 cents a pound.

Live hogs were also sharply higher because hog slaughterings have been lower than expected, causing retailers to buy on a day to day basis, said Art Paulsrud, livestock analyst for Cargill Investor Services Inc.

Higher grain prices and the possibility that ranchers may cut their herds if overhead costs continue to climb also weighed on the market, he said. If there are fewer fat cattle in the coming months, prices probably will climb.

Live cattle and feeders advanced as much as the 1.5 cents daily trading limit, with August cattle closing at 74.60 cents per pound while August feeders were 79.95 per pound.

Program Notes For Big Apple's Big Show Monday

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

Long before Republicans were even invented, the Democrats held their first convention in 1832, in Baltimore, giving the nod to the incumbent Andrew Jackson. It wasn't the nation's first party nomination convention, however. Something called the Anti-Masonic party met in Baltimore the previous September and chose William Wirt of Maryland as their Man Who. William who?

Although Baltimore and Chicago have been the most popular convention sites down the years, the quadrennial plague of delegates, alternates and preying media has been visited on such places (among others) as Albany, Buffalo, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Denver, San Francisco, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Houston, Atlantic City, N.J., Harrisburg, Pa. (birthplace in 1840 at the Whig gathering of the nation's first political slogan, "Tippecanoe and Tyler too"), Miami, Philadelphia, Kansas City, Los Angeles and for the first time in New York in 1868 at an insignificant brick building on Park Row called Tammany Hall.

The Democrats in 1860 had to meet in two different cities to get the job done. The delegates first met in Charleston, S.C. in April, but failed to nominate anyone when eight Southern states withdrew in a snit over slavery. They then more or less (actually less) reassembled in Baltimore in June to nominate Stephen A. Douglas, except for the renegade Southerners who came to town a week later to appoint John C. Breckinridge. Meanwhile, in Chicago, the Republicans needed only three ballots to dispose of the pre-convention favorite William Seward and settle on a lanky chap named Abraham Lincoln.

All sorts of pressure groups are apt to turn up at a convention. At the recent GOP clambake in Detroit the Dancing Cuckoos, the local Laurel and Hardy fan club, called on Ronald Reagan to choose a fat man as a running mate, instead of the lean and hungry George Bush, in the interests of rounding out the ticket.

Speaking of open conventions, the Democrats required 99 ballots to nominate Franklin Pierce in 1852, 46 to settle on Woodrow Wilson in 1912 and 103 to choose John W. Davis in 1924. John W. who? Republicans do seem to get on with the business at hand more expeditiously. The 1920 GOP convention in Chicago was deadlocked for only 9 ballots before the seclusion of a smoke-filled room at the Blackstone Hotel produced Warren G. Harding. Experts are divided over whether the room was booked by GOP Chairman Will Hays of Indiana or a party stalwart named Col. George Harvey.

Anyhow, at 5 a.m. on June 12, The Associated Press filed a new lead under the byline of Pulitzer Prize winner Kirke Simpson: "Harding of Ohio was chosen by a group of men in a smoke-filled room early today as the Republican candidate for President."

The 1924 Democratic convention in New York's old Madison Square Garden was the first to be covered live by radio — and almost the last: it lasted for 17 days. Florida began spoiling the fun of the great floor fights and taking the suspense out of things when it held the nation's first primary in 1904.

Conventions have always been known for their hot air, but unless the Democrats can come up with a topper, a lady named Lorrie DuMouchelle may enter the Guinness Book of Records. She was in charge of blowing up the 24,512 balloons that descended on Ronald Reagan in Detroit.

NBC's David Brinkley, who has covered every convention since 1952, ranks as the dean of TV anchor men, going back to the days before sky booths were hung. That being so, Hamilton Fish, who turned up in Detroit last month at age 94, must rank as the doyen of the delegates. Fish, the only surviving member of Walter Camp's original All-America football team, was in Chicago in 1912 when Teddy Roosevelt's Bull Moose supporters vamoosed because President William Howard Taft's delegates were seated.

"National conventions," wrote professional curmudgeon H.L. Mencken, "are almost always held in uncomfortable and filthy places (he excepted San Francisco from his indignation, however). The decorations are carried out by the sort of morons who arrange street fairs. The hotels are crowded to suffocation. The food is bad and expensive. Everyone present is robbed, and everyone goes home exhausted and sore."

"A stupid business," he called them, "as fascinating as a revival or a hanging... (but) not without its charms to connoisseurs of the obscene." His convention welcoming piece was entitled "The Clowns Come Marching in."

"At a convention," said Mr. Dooley, Finley Peter Dunne's immortal saloon keeper and political oracle at the turn of the century, "nearly all of th' dellygates lave as soon as they've nommynated th' president f'r fear wan iv thim will be nommynated f'r vice president." This, of course, was before Walter Cronkite held open auditions for the job.

TV covered its first conventions in 1948 when both parties met in Philadelphia. Only the East Coast could receive the transmissions.

Rumors were rife (to say nothing of rampant) that NBC toyed with a new sign-off slogan during the GOP convention in Detroit: "This is the 38th day CBS has held Roger Mudd hostage."

Deadly Snake Dies After Biting Man

MONROE, La. (AP) — A highly poisonous snake that bit its handler has died, perhaps from the stress of that attack, the handler says.

James Lee, an amateur snake collector, was bit by a krait July 30 while force feeding it through a tube. Kraits, which are native to eastern Asia, are more poisonous than cobras.

Lee was saved when he received a blood transfusion from a snake handler who had survived a krait bite. But Lee said the snake died soon after.

"I think the whole situation caused a lot of stress on her and she died," Lee said in an interview this week.

Lee, who is recuperating from the bite at his mother's home, said the krait had not been well to begin with and that was why he was feeding her when he was bitten.

"I was tube feeding the krait when one of my wife's girlfriends said something dumb. It distracted me and I looked up. That's when the snake bit me," Lee said.

Demo Feminists Will Press For ERA Planks

By JOAN J. CIRILLO
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A coalition of leading Democratic feminists promised Friday pressure for an open Democratic National Convention and the debate and passage of minority planks on reproduction and the Equal Rights Amendment.

The Coalition for Women's Rights, a group of delegates crossing candidate lines but heavily weighted toward Sen. Edward Kennedy, denied it was a front for an open convention or a particular candidate. The women said they organized to focus on women's issues at a critical time for women in the party.

The group said it thought the minority planks — neither or which have been supported by Kennedy or President Carter — could carry should delegates be allowed "to vote their conscience."

The ERA plank calls for the party "to withhold financial support and technical campaign assistance from candidates who do not support the ERA" and the other opposes funding restrictions or government interference with what it calls reproductive freedom.

"We're going to debate. We're going to discuss. We're going to caucus in advance," said Bella Abzug, a fomer member of Congress from New York. "This coalition is not just together to create a campaign debate."

The group included Gloria Steinem; Midge Costanza; Eleanor Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women; Iris Mitgang, chairman of the National Women's Political Caucus, and Carol Bellamy, president of the New York City Council.

Coalition members could not estimate their numbers but said that 400 delegates are members of the National Women's Political Caucus and 200 are NOW members.

The organizing committee includes 36 feminists, most of whoom are Kennedy delegates with the remainder about equally divided between Carter and no commitment

Hunter. The Original Olde Tyme Ceiling Fan.
$149.95 UP

Air movement, as well as temperature, determine your comfort level. So a room with a Hunter ceiling fan at 78 degrees has the cool comfort of a room at 70 degrees. Set your air conditioner thermostat up 8 degrees and save, because a Hunter runs on the power for one light bulb. In winter, a Hunter recirculates hot air that rises to the ceiling and cuts heating costs. But all ceiling fans aren't alike. Hunter is the original. Since 1886. Cast iron housing. Permanent oil reservoir. Real wood blades. No short cuts. No cheap substitutes. Choice of models and finishes makes Hunter fit any decor.

"Hunter. the oldest name in the business—what you get that your great grandfather didn't is a five year warranty and the assurance that comes with a reputation stretching back to 1886. Hunter is still the industry standard.

"Hunter confidently predicts a fan life of well over 40 years. Less expensive fans have large lightweight motor cases with small capacitor motors inside—the extra weight of solid cast pancake cases contributes to smooth operation, stability, and long life expectancy."

Dear Abby

Son's 'Perfect' Mother Lives Next Door

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Can a mother sue a neighbor for alienating her son's affection? I'm serious. A neighbor woman has all but adopted our 14-year-old son, Rick. She is the mother of Rick's best friend, Bob. According to Rick, she is the "neatest lady" he's ever known. She "understands" him, lends a sympathetic ear to all his troubles, and she's let him know that her home is his home. Rick has spent many nights there. He'd live there if we'd let him.

At home Rick has chores to do, which he does grudgingly, but I understand he's constantly asking what he can do to help at Bob's house. At home, Rick is criticized and restricted when necessary, but at Bob's he's treated like a guest. Naturally, Rick thinks Bob's mother is the "perfect" mother, and he keeps asking me why I can't be more like her.

I'm not jealous, Abby, but I wonder if Bob's mother realizes how hard she's making it for me. Or could she be deliberately competing with me to feed her own ego?

In the meantime, how do I cope with this?

DISTURBED IN VIRGINIA

DEAR DISTURBED: Before making any accusations, examine your own attitudes honestly. Do you make time to listen to Rick's troubles? Are you overly critical and restrictive? Are Rick's friends as welcome in your home as Bob's friends are in his?

If Bob's mother scores higher than you, perhaps you should take a page out of her book. Meanwhile, your son isn't the only adolescent who thinks another mom is "neater" than his own. He's reacting normally to the guest treatment. Don't lose any sleep over it.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: My fiance and I recently attended a wedding at a very nice hall. In fact, my fiance was the best man.

All eyes were on a young woman who came wearing a pair of silver stretch pants that were so tight, she looked like all she was wearing was a coat of silver paint! She also wore a tight-fitting sweater and a tight wide belt. She attended the ceremony as well as the reception and wedding dinner. Believe me, she was the talk of everyone there. She would have been appropriately dressed for a disco, but certainly not a wedding!

My fiance and I are being married soon, and we want to make sure nobody attends our wedding in that kind of a getup. My question: Would it be proper to have printed on our wedding invitations, "Ladies, no pants, please," or "Ladies, semi-formal dress required?"

TAKING NO CHANCES

DEAR TAKING: No. The only acceptable mention on a wedding invitation concerning dress is "Formal attire," "Informal attire" or "Dress, optional."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

The story belonged on the front page. Somehow it got crowded off by news of the Mideast, domestic problems and campaign promises.

It was only two small paragraphs: "A builder says he will construct a home in 48 hours or less to prove that a good, solid house can be built in a short period of time.

"George Davis, Albuquerque, N.M., and president of the U.S. Home Corporation of Houston, said none of the house will be prefabrication. 'Forty-eight hours is our maximum. We might be able to do it faster.'"

Good grief, people, do you realize the impact of that story? It could constitute a major breakthrough in the mental health of millions who have named plumbing and electrical contractors in their divorce suits.

For years, the public has been led to believe that you can uncork no new home until its time. Patience is not a virtue, it's a part of the contract. Do you want it done in a hurry or do you want it done right? The same goes with remodeling. Who among you has not grown old watching a garage turned into a family room or senile while the attic is transformed into a spare bedroom?

Behind every set of blueprints is a horror story. The one that seems to typify most of them is from a woman in Tennessee who began her letter, "October 1977: Selected a new kitchen. Salesman came out and measured. Promised I'd be cooking in it by Thanksgiving.

"December 1977: The cabinets are en route.

"Jan. 9, 1978: Cabinets delivered. Water was turned off. Dishwasher in middle of floor. Refrigerator pulled out from wall. It snowed. Water meter froze and burst. Water bubbled in yard for six weeks because city was too busy. Cabinets didn't fit. Neither did hood vent. They were returned. Recessed light over sink hung down like dirty underwear. It hummed.

"Jan. 27, 1978: Installer returned to hook up dishwasher. It will fill up, but will not empty. Sink hooked up wrong. Doing dishes in bathroom.

"Feb. 9, 1978: A woman came to take notes on all the things that went wrong. Told me to stay home March 4 so they can finish my kitchen.

"March 9, 1978: Still waiting by phone. Woman called to apologize for the serviceman not showing. I developed a migraine. My husband had terminal indigestion from eating from a tray in his lap for five months."

The letter sorta trailed off incoherently. For all I know she is still waiting in Tennessee for a new kitchen.

I still cannot imagine a whole house built in 48 hours. Whatya wanta bet . . . it'll take five years for the loan to be approved.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Moore of Harkers Island announce the engagement of their daughter, Tammy Rochelle, to Dallas Mabrey Smith, son of Mrs. Corrine H. Smith and Mr. Dallas G. Smith, both of Beaufort. The wedding is planned for Sept. 27.

Use a single high-watt light bulb rather than several small ones. It takes six 25-watt bulbs to provide the light of one 100-watt bulb.

Couple Marries On Saturday

FARMVILLE — The wedding of Shelley LuAnn Trowbridge of Farmville and David Allen Williams of Wilson took place Saturday at 3:00 p. m. in the First Baptist Church here, with the Rev. Ronald Davis officiating.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Harold Trowbridge of Farmville and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Williams of Wilmington, Del.

Music was provided by Mrs. Jones Fuquay of Wilson, vocalist, and Mrs. F. Arthur Brill, aunt of the bridegroom, of Wilmington, Del, organist. The ceremony was double ring.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, wore a formal gown of white qiana and venise lace. The empire bodice was Victorian in style with a yoke of English net defined with venise lace and seed pearls. The traditional sleeves had insets of venise lace. The semi-fitted skirt fell into soft folds to the hem and extended into a chapel train. Her mantilla was fingertip length bridal illusion with a border of Brussels lace. It was attached to a Juliet cap of lace and seed pearls. She carried a colonial bouquet of white silk carnations, pink pixie buds, baby's breath and trailing satin ribbon.

Miss Kelly Eddelmon, cousin of the bride, of Cincinnati, Ohio was maid of honor. She wore a floor-length sleeveless mandarin-collared gown of sweet pea green qiana. The semi-fitted skirt was accented with a side sash. Her bouquet was a replica of the bride's. She wore a spray of baby's breath in her hair.

Bridesmaids were Miss Susan Jackson of Fayetteville and Mrs. James Barnett of Shelbyville, Ky. Their dresses were identical to that of the maid of honor and they, too, wore baby's breath in their hair. Each carried three long-stemmed carnations, accented by greenery, baby's breath and trailing satin ribbons.

The bridegroom's father served him as best man. Ushers were Bill Patrick of wilson, David VanVeen of Wilmington, Del., Michael Perkinson of Burlington and Stewart Trowbridege, cousin of the bride.

The mother of the bride wore a formal pink gown and the bridegroom's mother chose a formal gown of mauve. Both were presented wit/ white cattleya orchid corsages.

What Others Have Thought Of U.S.

By DAVID M. MAXFIELD
Smithsonian News Service

"Their starting point is different, and their courses are not the same," the young Frenchman, Alexis de Tocqueville, concluded about the United States and Russia back in 1835, "yet each of them seems marked out by the will of heaven to sway the destinies of half the world."

Early attitudes about America, both pro and con, began taking shape as the first visitors from abroad, curious about the new democratic experiment, arrived here to observe and pass judgment on the young nation.

From their letters and first-hand accounts, often filled with perceptive observations and predications that are intriguing to read today, came a batch of mixed reviews.

"America is the land of experiment," Swedish author Fredrika Bremer enthusiastically wrote after a visit in 1853. "One of its sons drew lightning from the clouds; another created wings out of steam. And all of this has been accomplished in the early morning of the country's life."

A Model And A Promise

Even more excited, perhaps, was Domingo Faustino Sarmiento, a president of Argentina, who had sailed from New York in 1868. "I take the states away with me as a model and promise of the world's future," he exclaimed. To Sarmiento, there was "no country on Earth which has more rational human beings."

Since its founding, the United States has been examined, praised and attacked by thousands of travelers from abroad — reporters, social critics, artists and authors among them. Coming from Europe, Asia, Africa, South and North America, they have scrutinized U.S. political institutions and business practices, manners and social customs, climate and cities, personal values and family life.

"What most of these travelers felt in common was a sense of intense curiosity about the future and about America as a country of the future," says Marc Pachter, a historian at the Smithsonian Institution's National Portrait Gallery. He is also the editor of Abroad In America, a collection of essays about many of the foreign visitors.

Pachter believes that the insights and conclusions early travelers drew may provide some historical perspective for the American public as the nation faces another round of changing world attitudes stemming from current international developments, including those in Iran and Afghanistan.

Not All Were Sanguine

Not all visitors, of course, were sanguine about American goals and potential. "The future will tell the tale," former French Prime Minister Georges Clemenceau concluded shortly before his death in 1929, "but I greatly fear that America will reap the consequences of her extravagant pride."

The British author, H.G. Wells, expressed similar thoughts, sensing that the nation gave little thought to anything but the present. The American, he wrote in 1906, has no idea that his business activities and private pursuits "affect other people and the world forever, and cannot, as he imagines, begin and end with him."

Like tourists anywhere, the visitors did not always understand everything they saw or heard. A young Japanese, for example, described the new telegraph system he observed this way: "Wires are hung above the roads . . . and a letter can be attached to this to be dispatched automatically from one station to another."

Perceptive Visitor

But one of the earliest and most perceptive visitors was Alexis de Toqueville, author of the classic "Democracy In America." Arriving here in 1830 on the eve of the Industrial Revolution, he was struck that "Americans of all ages, all conditions and all dispositions constantly form associations." The Frenchman, who is viewed today by social scientists as a prophet of the coming 20th-century organization man, added that Americans "have not only commercial and manufacturing companies in which they all take part, but associations of a thousand other kinds, religious, moral, serious, futile, general or restricted, enormous or diminutive."

If Toqueville had accurately gauged the future influence of both Russia and the United States, some views of another visitor, from Russia itself, have not withstood the test of history. Paul Svin'in, secretary to the Russian General Counsel in Philadelphia between 1811-13, wrote "no two countires bear a more striking resemblance than Russia and the United States." Svin'in was struck by the rapid development in both countries of impressive cities - - - St. Petersburg, Philadelphia, New York - - - where, little more than a century before, there had been nothing but "impenetrable forests and marshes, inhabited by bears and wolves." Svin'in, however, also wrote: "In each country, the unfortunate and the persecuted find an asylum and a home."

Grand Tour Equivalent

A visitor during the 19th century embarked on what Pachter calls "the moral equivalent of a Grand Tour." The itinerary was likely to include Philadelphia, as an example of rational city planning; the factory towns of Massachusetts; Cincinnati, one of the miracle cities of the West, which had suddenly sprung up out of the wilderness, and at least one of the country's Utopian communities, possibly New Harmony in Indiana.

Chicago became a particular favorite a little later, expressing to some the qualities and drawbacks, the paradox of American life. Giuseppe Giacosa, an Italian, was impressed in 1898 by the city's "enormous factories, endless streets and fantastic stores," and yet, he said, "the people are anxious and frowning."

Each visitor, of course, brought along his own cultural framework by which to judge America. New York's Central Park, for example, in the eyes of one Chinese visitor, Liang Ch'i-ch'ao, was lying profitless in the very heart of the city. "Such waste is lamentable, lamentable," he complained in 1903, dismissing as frivolous the park's purpose — to make city life healthier and happier for its residents.

Travelers Ventured West

Travelers from abroad also ventured west, traveling by steamboat, train, stagecoach and covered wagon across mountain regions, plains, forests, rivers and canals. "What an empire, what a world is North America," Fredrika Bremer glowed, "embracing all climates, natural scenery and products."

If she and most others were enthusiastic about the country, the British, according to Pachter, "were the hardest on us," particularly when it came to American manners and characteristics. Frances Trollope, who settled in Cincinnati for a time in 1828, found Americans lacking in "all the usual courtesies of the table ...(and) the dinner hour was to be anything rather than an hour of enjoyment." Complained another: "Vegetables and fish are served before the meat, the oysters for dessert. In a word, complete barbarism."

But Henryk Sienkiewicz, a Polish visitor, struck a sympathetic note on this subject. Knowledge was not as profound nor good manners so refined as in Europe, he said, but "both are certainly more widely diffused."

Natural Topics

Women and family life were natural topics of interest to the arrivals. As early as 1783, the Marquis de Chastellus reported that "it is very rare for young people to live with their parents, when they are once settled in the world," an observatin as true now as then. A number of visitors noted that the American woman was generally free and independent until marriage ("Free as a butterfly," said one), but "shackled" to household duties thereafter. Still, the Norwegian Bjornstjerne Bjornson saw in the American woman of 1800 "an independent look" unlike the "bent down, shy" females on his side of the Atlantic.

From the outset, the visitor to America found that the business of the country was business. "There is one single point to which all are driving, and this is 'wealth,'" concluded two Hungarians in 1844. "Business, business, business, from morning til night, that is all you see, read and hear," Sienkiewicz wrote about New York. "Wealth is the chief criterian by which men are measured."

A Look At The Genius Of Truman Capote

"There are three or four writers left in my generation in this race and I have this feeling I am going to win it" — Truman Capote

By PETER COSTA
UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — You can tell a true genius, Jonathan Swift wrote, by the confederacy of dunces in league against him.

The confederacy poised against author Truman Capote is Roman-legion large and reflects the scope of the 56-year-old author's true talent.

"When I released the first six chapters of 'Answered Prayers' (the book that tells all about many still-living jetset personalities) there was such a screaming," he said, his blue eyes narrowing mischievously.

"On the preface page of 'Answered Prayers' I am using a quote from Albert Camus — I seldom use quotes in my books — but this one says that one never says one quarter of what one knows and there is such a screaming, wait until the whole book is out, the howls will be tremendous."

He sat on a long, gracefully curved couch in his New York apartment and gazed out floor-to-ceiling windows at the East River traffic gliding 22 floors below.

He had granted the interview to discuss his new book, "Music for Chameleons," published by Random House.

Before him, covering a purple-tiled 4-foot-square coffee table were objets d'art and flowers. It was a virtual Proustian remembrance of things past. Coiled snakes (a large gray rattler, a black cobra and a small garter snake), three glass piggy banks filled with coins, a pair of old shoetrees, glass fish and turtles, beadwork belts, all were carefully placed, like artifacts from a complex mental archeology.

"I have quite a few houses and looking for objects amuses me. It is my favorite form of exercise. I swim also, but I do an awful lot of walking looking for these things."

He has a beach house in Long Island, one in Switzerland, one in California and others.

Of all the places he has lived, he dislikes southern California most.

"It's like living in Forest Lawn. There is no intellectual life, only going to the studio and coming from the studio. San Francisco has a cozy drama to it, but it is one of the most provincial cities in the world. It's like a carrousel, one sees the same people over and over in about 10 days."

"I think Paris is very boring, Rome is just a small town pretending to be a city. In Moscow I die of sheer boredom, Venice is a gradually dying museum and Tokyo is hell on earth. I did like Kyoto, however, the parts of it I knew."

Like Frank Sinatra, New York is Capote's kind of town. "It's the only city I know that is a city city, it is going 24 hours a day. If you want to buy a book at 4 in the morning, you can buy a book."

He was dressed in a modified Mao shirt, white pants, soft brown shoes, no socks. He wore a maroon hat at the beginning but took it off shortly after the interview began.

He spoke deliberately, painfully slowly, in a chantlike cadence with unusually labored intonation and overly long syllables. It was as if his voice were being altered by deep sea helium effects or a delayed loop problem in a coast-to-coast telephone call.

As the author of such immensely successful books as "Breakfast at Tiffany's," "Other Voices, Other Rooms," and "In Cold Blood," he was asked what he felt was his next goal.

"There are three or four writers left in my generation in this race and I have this feeling that I am going to win it," he said.

He looked out at the river and spoke about the loneliness of living in the country and its attending anxiety.

"I have had a house in Switzerland since 1956 but after a few weeks there I get slightly stir crazy. In that village there were only three people I really liked and do you know all three committed suicide.

"And I know why they did. It wasn't for anything specific. It's something I have myself — extreme anxiety. I've had it since I've been a child. It flows down for long periods of time — it never really leaves — but when it reaches this other level where it becomes a form of illness, the anxiety becomes physical."

He suffers from a physical problem he called "l'oeil douleur." "It's a nerve thing in my eye that is unutterably painful. Painkillers don't help."

He was asked whether he thought Norman Mailer, who was also a very young success and now an anxious public awaits his promised "big work," had lost his talent or squandered it.

"I don't think Norman lost anything, I think he found something. Norman was never a good novelist. Norman is a very, very good literary critic, even though he has some foolish ideas. His really strong talent was for reportage. I like him as a person, he is a very good writer but he was miscast in that role of novelist-filmmaker."

Capote finds it amusing that contemporary writers who once criticized him for writing what he called the "nonfiction novel" are now writing factual pieces using techniques from other genres.

"When I wrote 'In Cold Blood' many were critical. I spent six years on that book wandering the plains of Kansas and nearly went mad but I saw it through. Mailer called it 'a failure of the imagination,' and now I see that the only prizes Norman wins are for that very same kind of writing. I'm glad I was of some small service to him." He smiled wickedly.

He was asked to discuss his personal feud with author Gore Vidal.

"Gore's idiotic law suit against me has truly cost me a lot of money but I don't have any harsh feelings about Gore... I think Gore Vidal is a man with a first-rate mind who, if he used it as an essayist and critic where he genuinely excells, would be an important figure in American cultural life instead of being a peripheral and mediocre novelist."

Does he still think publishing was controlled by what he years ago had called a "Jewish literary Mafia?"

"Well, time passes. There was a time, that all publications were edited and controlled by Jewish intellectuals and Jewish tycoons and they therefore over a period of 15 years pushed for Jewish writers.

"I never thought of it as a conspiracy, rather a kind of camaraderie that said at last we're going to push every Jewish writer and Saul Bellow is going to win a Nobel Prize and Arthur Miller and Norman Mailer will get Pulitzer Prizes year after year."

He said all this has changed in the last four years.

"They tried to make a hero of Philip Roth but he's a very uneven writer. They lost their hero, Salinger."

He was acidly critical about some publishing houses.

"I would sooner take a manuscript and throw it in a sewer than have it published by Doubleday. They will publish anything."

He got up from the couch and moved to an adjoining sitting room. On a stand were pictures from his past and a large fan. He picked up the fan and gently set it back down. He was a man who believed in a calculus of finite differences and for whom everything had a physical as well as temporal place.

"This picture was taken of me by Cartier-Bresson when I was 18 and I think it is a psychological statement. Don't you see, this picture (a beautiful portrait of a handsome but unsmiling young Capote) is really the inner person getting out from inside this picture."

He sat down on a small couch in the sitting room and sighed.

"I am well, but very tired. I have been under a great many strains."

He stood up suddenly and picked up a large brown pillow and fluffed it with gentle pats.

"This pillow was designed, drawn and the actual needlework was done for me by Jean Cocteau," he said.

He was asked if he contemplated his own mortality.

"Of course, anyone who is trying to accomplish something does, especially if they have a lot of emotional and difficult problems. I have absolutely no fear of ceasing to exist. Not at all. I would just like to finish what I've worked on so long.

"But I'm so tired. I start working about 10 in the evening and work to four or five in the morning. I have long conversations with people on the phone, I don't go out to restaurants or night clubs anymore, especially since Studio 54 has closed — but it was my idea of what a nightclub should be like. I have had a row with Lee (Radziwell), of course, as you know, but still all those people are still friends of mine."

Chicken Flying Contest Draws Birdwatchers

By SANDRA L. LATIMER

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Chickens are birds. They have wings and feathers. And they do fly.

That feat is exhibited each year at the Bob Evans Farms at Rio Grande in southern Ohio at the International Chicken Flying Meet.

Clyde A. Marsh, a poultry expert at Ohio State University's College of Agriculture, is Flight Director. He gently nudges chicken chickens if they don't flap their way out of a mailbox in the alloted time.

"This year, about 30 percent of the chickens wouldn't move," he said. "The contest starts at 1 p.m. and you can't wait all day for the chicken to make up its mind.

"The plunger is a humane way to keep the contest on schedule," he said. "I don't think it does much to stimulate the bird. It just pushes them into the air."

And where they go eggsactly after they leave the mailbox high on a hill is anyone's guess.

"This year, for the first time, we had chickens take off and fly up on top of telephone poles," Marsh said.

Handling the chickens up to the mailbox causes some embarrassing moments.

"One year as the girl was passing the chickens up, she let out a yell and caught an egg the chicken laid," he recalled. "She handed the egg over to officials and the next year, they said a chicken entered in the contest came from that egg. It didn't fly any better than its mother."

The distance record for a flying chicken is 302 feet 8 inches, held by Lola B., owned by Sherwood Costen of Point Pleasant, W. Va. Lola B., who set the record in 1979, was enshrined into the Coop of Fame this year.

"I would have said 10 years ago you couldn't get a chicken to fly that long," Marsh said. "Now my mind is open."

"People who have been winning have been working on chicken psychology rather than physical training," Marsh said. "They elect chickens that can get away.

"The best chicken is anti-social, one that wants to get away from people," he said. "People keep chickens out in remote barns where they are away from people, then gather them up the night before in the dark, put them in a dark box and bring it to the contest."

He said the man who owns the record-setting chicken is knowledgeable about animals and has experience with birds.

"He put Japanese bantams as baby birds in a room designed so he could reach in through a curtain and feed and water them," he said. "The chickens never saw him. They didn't know what man was like.

"He gathered them up and brought them into the contest," Marsh said. "They took off like wild birds. Those kind will try to fly away more vigorously than domesticated ones."

Japanese Bantams, Marsh said, "have a large wing span, a large tail, light body and more power-weight ratio than other chickens. People competing seriously tend to use these or chickens crossed with them."

Each year in May the meet creates more flutter among people. This year, 1,200 people braved fowl weather — it rained — to egg-on their favorites.

"It appeals maybe because it's different, completely unpredictable, and goes in purts," Marsh said. "The crowd stands around and watches. They don't know when the chicken will take off like a bird or a rock."

Anyone can get a chicken and enter it, even if the contestant borrows it from a barnyard.

"I get as much kick out of the photographers as the chickens," he said. "There are a tremendous number of people taking pictures and it's amusing to see the different angle they assume as they try to get pictures of chickens going out of the mailbox."

About 10 years ago, as publicist Lee Durieaux cackles about it, he and his friend Bob Evans, a sausage maker, restaurateur, farmer and conservationist, were talking about their childhood.

"Bob told of how he had thrown chickens out of haylofts and off cliffs and watched them fly," Durieaux said.

Later, Evans, approached Marsh at the Ohio State Fair where Marsh was in charge of the fair's poultry department.

And the idea of a chicken flying contest hatched.

TINY TIMEPIECE FROM TOKYO — Model displays woman's watch, described by its manufacturer as the world's smallest quartz watch, Friday in New York. The watch, made by Citizen Quartz of Tokyo, measures 120 cubic millimeters in volume, or about one-third the size of a dime. It will be available at the end of this year in three models costing from $8,000 to $15,000. (AP Laserphoto)

Sympathizes With Billy

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — Dr. Arthur Wilson says anyone who's in debt deserves some sympathy, so he is sending Billy Carter $220 to help pay off a $220,000 loan Carter says he got from the Libyan government.

"If there's another thousand like me, he can pay that bum off in Libya — that Khadafy," said Wilson, referring to Moammar Khadafy, the Libyan head of state.

Billy Carter registered as a foreign agent last month, after saying he received money as a loan from Libya.

Wilson, 74, a podiatrist, said he is an admirer of Carter's brother, the president. And, referring to Billy Carter's reported financial problems, he said "if someone's in debt, they have to get help wherever they can."

Wilson said he's following the example of a man who once helped him in a time of financial distress.

"I tried to repay the man and he wouldn't let me. He told me to pass it along to someone else some day."

U.S. farmers are expected to plant nearly 79.5 million acres of wheat this year.

Valuables Fortress

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI) — International terrorism and industrial kidnapping are never far from the mind of Robert Oreck, creator of a fortress-like security center for corporations.

Oreck, chairman of a worldwide real estate development company, recently bought the old Federal Reserve building in downtown New Orleans for $2.3 million.

The building has four vaults. Oreck's security expert, retired Army Col. Daniel Miller, planned installation of sophisticated security equipment:

—X-ray mail machines.

—an outside digital sign that at the push of a "panic button" can tell the world a robbery is in progress.

There are also armed guards.

Oreck plans to create similar buildings in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and other cities.

"All we are doing quite frankly is filling a need," he says, displaying a letter from a London insurance firm eager to know whether the Oreck Group might expand to cities like London, Copenhagen, Antwerp and Tel Aviv where diamond robberies are almost weekly occurrences.

Oreck declines to name the prospective tenants at his New Orleans building but says they include a gem wholesaler, lawyers representing foreign governments, an art dealer and possibly a major oil company.

SHE LOST IT...

NANCY NEYER

Nancy Neyer was like many: extremely overweight her entire life and had exhausted all hope of losing weight. She had failed with weight control groups, quick weight loss diets and diet pills. She would always gain all the weight back and usually some additional pounds. But Mrs. Neyer, who is a computer operator, was more than 100 pounds overweight last June when she heard about a hypnotist in Greensboro who had had some success in helping people break the habit of overeating.

She had 4 appointments with Therapeutic Hypnosis of America in Greensboro and has lost 105 pounds so far, without hunger or any unpleasant side effects and without giving up any food she likes.

In contrast to all other weight reduction methods she had tried the hypnotic technique was easy, she said. "This was no trouble. If we were having fried food, I'd eat fried food". She didn't count calories, or carbohydrates, or weigh portions, or restrict herself to any particular foods. She ate whatever she cooked for her children or whatever was served to her away from home, but took small portions.

The weight loss has been steady, and she continues to lose at about the rate of a pound a week. She hopes to lose about 10 more pounds. Mrs. Neyer said she has not been hungry and even in the first months when she was losing about 5 pounds a week, she felt healthy and increasingly energetic. She didn't plan a formal exercise regime to go along with her reduced food intake, but as the pounds dropped off she found that she wanted to exercise more, and she runs, or walks almost every day.

"I would tell anyone that there is still hope," she said. "One year ago I would have never believed this could happen to me. Eating properly is now part of my life and I've learned how easy it is to use my mind." Nancy Neyer: "I would tell anyone that there is still hope."

Dutch Welfare Art Purchases Irritate Artists

SUBSIDIZED ART — Some of the thousands of pieces of art work bought by the Dutch government to keep artists from starving sits in a warehouse. A few pieces are used to decorate government buildings, but most are stored, infuriating artists and frustrating the government. (AP Laserphoto)

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press Writer

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The Dutch government buys art to keep artists from starving in garrets in the land of Rembrandt and Van Gogh — purchasing about 200,000 pieces in 30 years — but some say the practice merely fosters unworthy works.

Some of the artworks are loaned to public buildings, but most are crammed into dusty warehouses, infuriating artists and frustrating a government that has replaced the kings, popes and merchants of old as a patron of the arts.

The government program began in 1949 to try to help about 100 young artists through hard times after World War II, much like the Works Progress Administration's system of art commissions in the United States in the 1930s.

But unlike the WPA, the Dutch subsidies mushroomed with prosperity. The system, believed unique in the world, is among dozens of entrenched social welfare programs in this nation of 14 million people.

About 2,850 artists get between 373 and 555 guilders weekly — $185 to $275 U.S. dollars — with paid vacations, for paintings, sculptures, silkscreens, lithographs and other works. The program now costs about 110 million guilders — $55 million American — annually, and buys about 20,000 works of art.

"It's very depressing to know that your work has been sitting for 10 years in a warehouse," says Hans van der Sande, a sculptor who sells about two works yearly to the government.

But van der Sande, general secretary of the major Dutch artists' union, said the program encourages daring, innovative art — work that could not survive in the commercial market.

Union members argue the subsidies have become a right. Artists occupied the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam and the Mauritshuis in The Hague last year to protest proposed cutbacks, and the cuts were postponed.

Some culture ministry officials say artists lose their drive and imagination because money is coming in. And critics say much of the work is wretched art and the best artists shun government aid.

"Second-rate art is not much of a problem, but third- and fourth- and 10th-rate art is very serious," said Bertie Stips-van Weel, head of the ministry's visual arts division.

"There are a lot of artists who should not be in this program," she added, saying the program generates a "butter mountain of art" like the common market's "butter mountain" — the huge frozen supply of the dairy product bought and stored to support prices.

Van der Sande said the problem is not too much art but the government's failure to make good use of it. He said the art should be loaned to the public through art libraries, making people curious about art and thus broadening the commercial market.

But Robert de Haas, in charge of the government art archives, said funneling government-bought art to the public would be a disaster for the commercial market.

To qualify for the stipend, artists must be between 25 and 65, have at least three years of academy training, and have low incomes. Once eligible, they submit works to local boards made up of artists, community members and government officials, who decide whether to accept the work and how much to pay for it above the stipend.

De Haas contends the government pays higher prices than the works would bring in galleries, a practice that discourages artists from venturing into the marketplace.

The program's goal is to aid artists, not to create brilliant art. Funds come from the social affairs ministry — the welfare department — not from the culture ministry.

Pieter Ott, who heads the program for the social ministry, said it's healthy to build a broad creative base and keep artists at work, even if the art is not all museum quality. And he said the program costs no more than straight welfare.

He said that in its early years the program helped many unknowns — such as painter Karel Appel — who are now respected worldwide.

Ott said the warehouses may yield treasures in the future. "Maybe after we are dead, people will say, 'this is a brilliant artist,'" whose work was possible because of this program," he said.

The Big Apple, a dance, was named for a club in Columbia, S.C., where it originated.

Famous Saratoga Bath Waters Are Now Dingy

PAT FERGUS
Associated Press Writer

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Visitors still come to bathe in the bubbly mineral spring waters that made this small upstate city famous. Some bathers come from as far as Europe and Japan.

But they don't flock here the way they did in the spa's heyday three decades ago, when nearly 200,000 treated themselves to the bubbly waters annually. Now the baths draw only about 20,000 people a year.

The Depression-era pipes are plugged with minerals and the bath houses are a little dingy. State workers say their budget barely goes far enough to keep the city's treasure clean and presentable, and that the state makes no money on the baths.

There's a move among residents to turn what was designed as a center for the ill into a center for the healthy. They say a new generation of customers could be attracted — if someone could take the right steps to make up for years of neglect.

"The baths are the heart of the city, and the heart's not beating," said Michael London, who with his wife, Wendy, runs Mrs. London's Bake Shop, a restaurant and bakery in the renovated downtown area of this city of about 22,000.

London says Saratoga's baths could be like those they visited in Austria — modern, efficiently-run and popular. He is among business people and residents advocating a private takeover of the baths to reverse their decline.

Such a reversal would come very dear.

Stephen Dyer, general superintendent for the baths, said no estimate has been made on a repair project, but turning even one of the two remaining bath houses into a truly modern facility would cost "millions" and replacing the plumbing alone would be a "monstrous" endeavor.

For $13 in peak season, a bather can buy 15 minutes privately submerged in naturally carbonated water, followed by a mineral oil massage and a nap in warmed sheets. The water, heated to body temperature, relaxes tense muscles and, some say, stimulates circulation and relieves arthritis symptoms.

The waters, depending on the spring from which they flow, contain varying amounts of salts and minerals — such as calcium, potassium, magnesium and iron — and some radioactive elements. The state warns that drinking some of the waters in large amounts for a long time could be a health hazard.

When they were built in the 1930s, the baths were touted as a health spa, and doctors were on hand to help bathers with arthritis, circulatory ailments and other ills.

Hydrotherapy — use of water to treat illness — has since fallen from favor in the United States. The State Parks and Recreation Commission, which runs the Saratoga Spa State Park and baths, now emphasizes relaxation from the baths, although it takes part in therapy programs with two medical centers.

The oldest of the three famous bath houses — the Washington — was shut down several years ago because its plumbing was deemed beyond repair, and its baths were torn out. The others suffer from antiquated facilities, and some fear the Roosevelt and the Lincoln baths could go the way of the Washington.

Groups have formed to try to save the baths, but some privately fear conditions may already have deteriorated too much. Although there is talk about a private takeover, there have been no concrete proposals.

"In Europe, the spas are flourishing — packed with Americans," said Mary Ann Lynch, head of a loosely-knit coalition known as "Friends of the Spa."

She said she believes the baths can be revived, and blames the state for failing to keep them in the international limelight.

"I don't think the legislators know what a jewel they have in the waters," said Ms. Lynch, a onetime state Assembly candidate. "It astonishes me that people are not able to look past rusty pipes to see a resource as precious as this."

Reminiscences Of The Daughter Of A Slave

LEAVE IT TO THE LORD . . . is an expression Mrs. Clarks likes to use. She says that after years of living, she finds that whatever happens, it's best to not worry too much and to "leave things in the hands of the Lord." (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Alert at 85, Mrs. Zelma Clark has vivid memories of the way things were in the days when life was centered on rural homesteads in North Carolina.

Text By LaRona Murray

"Before my daddy was ten years old he'd been sold, not once, but twice as a slave." Warmth is reflected in Zelma Clark's black eyes and with it a keenness of memory that belies her 85 years.

She was born in Yadkin County, 28 miles from Winston-Salem, the youngest of seven children of Amos and Mary Jane Williams. For many years she has lived in and around Greenville and now resides on Van Dyke Street in the Meadowbrook section of town.

Mrs. Clark is now a widow. Her second husband, the late John Clark, was a native of Greenville.

Broom Incident

Many of his earlier reminiscences are of her father and his episodes as a young slave on the farm of James Williams in Yadkin County. One of her favorites involve an incident with a broom.

As the story goes, Amos had been loaned to James Jr. by his father for a few yard chores which included sweeping with a homemade dogwood broom. The young Mrs. Williams didn't approve of the work Amos was doing so tried to wrestle the broom from him. "Squire Williams told me to sweep this yard!" he blurted angrily, "and I intend to sweep this yard!" At that, Mrs. Williams stopped him and as Amos swung his broom at his mistress, she fell.

Amos didn't know where to run but back to the elder Mr. Williams. James Jr. demanded custody of the young slave, having in mind a good flogging. "Leave him alone," his father insisted. "It won't be long before they're all free."

Farmland In Ruin

Her father told Zelma of years of carpetbagging, of reconstruction; of farmland and homes that had been brought to ruin . The demands of the war had been great and the South was showing the strain. Amos recounted incidents of hard times that became even more difficult, not only for him but for everyone.

The Williams, with their financial losses, could supply their few remaining slaves with bare necessities. Because of conditions, the maturing Amos received only six weeks of formal education.

When he was yet a young man, he fell in love with and married Mary Jane Dickens. By that time, big farms had been divided into little ones and it was on one of these farms that Zelma grew up as a share cropper's daughter.

Zelma Clark recalled "walking six miles to a one room schoolhouse where one teacher taught all grades." She remembers, too, buckboards, wooden washboards, thick heavy irons heated at the fireplace, and making lye soap. "Our family even made their own lye from fireplace ashes placed in a wooden hopper. where water was added to them." When the lye was made they mixed it with water and waste pork fat, and boiled it to the right thickness. When it was cool it jelled, then it was cut into squares and used for household chores.

First Quilt, First Pie

When Zelma was five years old she made her first patchwork quilt. By the time she was married at 18 she had stitched together nine beautiful comforters. She was also five when she baked her first pie. "It was blackberry, cooked in a skillet on the fireplace." Zelma remembers swelling with pride when her dad told her mother — "Mary Jane, from now on you stay out of the kitchen. Let Zelma do the cooking. We have here the smartest girl in the whole United States."

Most clothes were handmade when Zelma was young. Zelma wanted some store bought clothes, especially a silk dress and a certain pocket book that cost 98 cents. She plagued her father for weeks until he finally and bluntly told her that she would look silly wearing a silk dress and carrying an expensive pocketbook when everyone knew that she had to go home and hang up an empty purse and a flimsy dress in a one room log cabin closet. "Besides," he explained, "if your dress gets dirty you couldn't wash it, you'd have to travel 28 miles to get it cleaned."

There is a mischievious glint in Zelma's dark eyes. "You know," she chuckles, "'til this day I haven't bought a pocketbook, but I have nine or ten now. I never did get a silk dress, though."

Father Buys Farm

The pinnacle of the Williams' family life came when — Zelma doesn't exactly remember what year — her father Amos bought a farm. "It was the happiest day of our lives. Daddy bought 26 acres for five or six dollars an acre," she said, "a little more than a hundred dollars, including the taxes.

"Things were reasonable in those days," Zelma reflected. "Dresses were about 49 cents each unless you were rich and if you were, you could buy one for 98 cents. Shoes were about 98 cents a pair. If you paid $2.00 for a pair, they would be equal to Florsheim's today."

One year she worked for wages on a farm. The usual rate was 20 cents a day, but Zelma said she did her work so well her employer slipped her an extra nickel, paying her 25 cents a day. "After a week," she said, "I had enough to buy a pair of tennis shoes, five yards of material, a straw hat, stockings and a box of snuff, with five or six cents left over." She explained that she "couldn't stand snuff now."

Chores Shared

Other chores were shared, like making hominy from whole kernels of corn. They soaked it in lye water for days, husked it, soaked it some more and finally cooked it. There were vegetables to grow and can, eggs to gather, chickens to pluck and cook in the fireplace skillet. When the weather was suitable, they butchered and salt cured hogs for the smokehouse.

"I'll never, never forget the first time I saw a car," she laughed. "I had read about them but I just couldn't imagine what they would look like." She nodded toward the street, "it sure wasn't like those out there. I was going to the mailbox when I heard a strange putt-putt sound and around the bend came the first buggy without a horse I had ever seen. I was so scared I didn't bother to put the letter in the box, just shoved it into the hand of the mail man driving the car."

Clears Land With Steer

In summer she watched her dad plow, using a steer to pull up stumps for new grounds. In the autumn she donned overalls and tagged along behind her brothers as they hunted for oppossum and rabbits.

Her first husband was Jake Glenn. They too settled down on the farm. He, like many today, supplemented his income by moonlighting. One of his jobs was cutting and selling cord wood for 25 cents a cord. "And that was gathered without the help of a power saw. But then flour was only 25 cents for 24 pounds and a side of meat was about a quarter," Zelda explained.

For years Zelda has been an ardent believer in the curative powers of roots and herbs. "After all," she states, "most medicines are made of roots and herbs. You just have to know what you're doing." Her favorite is a wine made from dandelion blossoms, flavored with lemon juice. "Everybody wants some of my dandelion wine," she laughed, "but I tell them its for taking, not drinking. I tell them to make their own.

Gin And Garlic

For arthritis she chips garlic in small bits, places it in a jar and pours in a pint of gin. After mellowing it for 21 days she strains it and every day she drinks one teaspoonful in a large glass of water. "It, too, is made for taking, not drinking, but I have a hard time convincing people of that."

She and Jake had four children. During those years she learned much about midwifery and assisted in many deliveries. "The midwives taught me many things," Zelma remembers. "For instance they told me that roots like sassafrass, black haw, red oak and broomsedge made into a brew were great blood builders. We used the brew many times before and after birth."

Creator Comes First

Today Zelma Clark is a happy energetic small lady who looks remarkably young for her years. Her Creator comes first in her life and love for her fellow man knows no bounds.

Zelma Clark says she feels no bitterness for past unpleasant systems, but instead looks confidently ahead to a better one.

MRS. CLARK'S PARENTS . . . A post-card photograph of Amos and Mary Jane Williams taken in the early years of this century is one of Mrs. Clark's most prized possessions. "I'm almost certain I made the dress mama is wearing," Mrs. Clark said of the long, pleated, many-buttoned dress in fashion at that time.

TALKING TO A NEIGHBOR . . . Mrs. Clark, left, talks to her next-door neighbor, Mrs. Mamie Tyson. Both women love growing things, and their adjoining porches are covered with vines and potted plants. Mrs. Clark tends a small garden in her yard.

MOTHER AND SON . . . In this photograph, taken before the turn of the century, Mary Jane Williams was a young mother holding her oldest child, a son, Cicero. Though faded with age, the photograph clearly shows the pride of a young mother in her dressed up child.

NCSU's 'Spider Man'

By Sonnya Quinn
NCSU News Bureau

RALEIGH — A "spider man" is working in North Carolina State University's School of Textiles.

His enthusiasm for his research subjects is such that he convinces hard-bitten spider haters to go out at night with a broad-beamed flashlight and watch the night hunters build their webs.

Dr. Robert W. Work, a 72-year-old professor emeritus at NCSU, spent his life in textile research and knew he would miss it when he retired.

But why spider research?

As every person knows who has walked into a spider web, it is both strong and sticky. Work's research is focused on the strong fibers.

In fact, these fibers, for their size, are equal in strength to the strongest man-made product. In addition, the amount of energy needed to break them is greater than any known fiber.

Work wants to know why.

The National Science Foundation is also interested in arachnid behavior. The foundation has awarded funds for Work to investigate the phenomenon of strength. This summer he received $48,472 to probe the supercontraction of one of the silks the spider uses in spinning its web.

Shrinking Web

During his research, Work discovered that some of the fibers instantly shrank to almost 50 percent of their original lengths when wetted with water and are unrestrained. This was a discovery never reported before in scientific literature.

He also has established that the formation of the strong spider silk was quite similar to the way that the "as spun" nylon or polyester obtains its strength and becomes a usable product. But, he jokingly cautions against describing this process as similar to the way the man-made item is produced.

"After all," he said, "spiders have been doing it for millions of years."

Work also takes his research on vacations. He has collected specimens from such diverse places as the Yukon and East Africa.

An African safari furnished him with one of his most important finds. Busily spinning a web on the balcony of a Hilton hotel in Kenya was a fellow traveller.

This Brazilian arachnid (probably a suitcase stowaway) was found to have such an unusual characteristic that this research was steered in an important new direction.

When he returned to his microscope, Work found that the fellow traveller's fibers shrank much less in water than those previously studied. Furthermore, fibers from webs built by this spider in the laboratory in North Carolina were the same as those from the hot, dry climate of Kenya, indicating that species, not climiate, was involved.

Research Important

When quizzed on the practical aspects of his research, Work is quick to reply that he has spent most of his scientific career in industry and has learned that the fruits of basic research are beyond prediction.

"However," he says, "if you must pin me down, I would suggest that if you owned a textile company that was having to produce man-made fibers at a very high temperature and using expensive equipment, and something had mastered the technique of making similar fibers at room temperatures, wouldn't you be interested?"

The majority of his subjects are in residence at the Department of Mental Health where he shares a "spiderarium" with its research director, Dr. P. N. Witt. Witt is internationally known for his work on the effects of hallucinogenic drugs on the spider's web-building behavior.

"A successful researcher will always take advantge of chance observation. I picked up the 'Hilton spider' not because I had a premonition that it was of any great importance. At the time it was merely another spider. Only later, back in the laboratory, was it found to have critical importance. I would also like to think in 20 years someone may follow my lead and that it will take then a direction that I never dreamed of."

Meteor Shower Monday

CHAPEL HILL — The year's most reliable meteor shower will reach its peak Monday, August 11, says Jim Manning, assistant director of the Morehead Planetarium at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

"The Perseids should be at their best on the evening of August 11-12," Manning says. "Under ideal conditions, one can see 50 or more meteors per hour. In our hazy region at this time of year, counts of 20 to 30 per hour are typical."

The Perseids are named after the constellation Perseus, from which the meteors appear to come as they streak across the sky, Manning explains. The constellation will be low in the northeast at sunset, getting progressively higher as the night passes unti it is overhead at dawn.

"The best way to observe Perseids is to find a dark, open area free of direct lighting, spread a blanket or cushion on the ground and lie down with your feet pointing northeast toward Perseus," he says. "This will give you the best and widest view of the sky."

Manning says that, if the clouds and haze stay away, this year's show should be a good one. "The moon is a waxing crescent setting just after the sun, so there will be no moonlight to interfere with observing," he says.

"The Perseids will be visible all night, increasing in number and brightness after midnight. Most will be swift and white, but many of the brighter ones will have noticeable hues, especially blue, yellow and red."

The Perseids are tiny particles that are shed from the nucleus of the comet Swift-Tuttle as it travels in its great orbit around the sun. The particles follow the comet's path and burn up when they collide with the Earth's atmosphere.

The comet itself last rounded the sun in 1962 and is due to return in the next several years. "That may mean we'll be in for especially good displays of the Perseids in the next several years," Manning says.

The Puzzling Farm Economy

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's a complicated story the way government economists try to explain it, but figures compiled by the Agriculture Department suggest overall farm production expenses may not rise quite as rapidly this year as they did in 1979.

That is a generalization and overlooks some obvious flaws, including the vastly different rates of production costs that are involved for specific commodities. For example, the cost of producing wheat or corn may differ dramatically from that of turning out beef cattle or cotton.

Farm production costs are cited often during the development of legislation in Congress, by farm groups seeking additional aid for producers and by political candidates seeking to defend or attack existing farm policy.

Two USDA reports issued this week helped cloud the complex subject by using different methods of computing farmers' production costs.

One official, who asked not to be identified, said the discrepancies result "when different series" of figures are tabulated. He declined to be more specific.

On Wednesday, in a report primarily about farm income prospects this year, the department's Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service, projected figures showing that farmers' production expenses in 1980 may range between $123 billion and $128 billion.

Last year, the agency reported earlier, production expenses totaled about $113.4 billion. Thus, using the "midpoint" of about $126 billion in the range of 1980 costs, this year's expenses would show an increase of around 11 percent.

The 1979 expenses rose about 16 percent from $98.1 billion in 1978, according to agency figures. That suggested the percentage rate of increase would be less this year.

Meanwhile, on Thursday the same agency — ESCS, as it calls itself — issued a report on "Farm Expenditures for 1979" in which farm production costs last year were shown at $135.1 billion, up 18 percent from $114.2 billion in 1978.

"This was the largest percentage increase since 1973," the second report said of the 18 percent spiral last year. "The average expenditure per farm was $58,049 in 1979, compared with $48,273 in 1978."

On the backside of the four-page report, which was a summary of a detailed analysis that will be released later, the ESCS offered an explanation to those who might compare the two sets of production figures and note their discrepancies.

"Expenditure data in this report will differ from production expenses estimates in farm income tables also published by Economics, Statistics and Cooperatives Service," it said.

The statement said that the agency in its farm income figures treats agriculture "as a sector within the U.S. economy" and does not measure "transactions between farmers" in analyzing income.

"Transactions between farmers are not measured in the income accounts since they cancel within the farm sector," the statement said.

An example could be the sale of feeder cattle by one farmer to another, which would be excluded from expenses listed in the report on farm income, it said.

In any case, when farmers and other users of the information want to illustrate how much farm production costs have risen, it depends on which figures are used.

Fowl Play

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — One fowl taste of the outside world apparently was enough to persuade a resident of the Indianapolis Zoo that freedom wasn't everything.

According to general curator Daniel Baffa, Jan, a 5-year-old pure white, Southeast Asian peacock, decided to take a closer look at the other side of the fence.

Soon after it landed next door in a park, a passerby saw a man get out of a car, throw a net or blanket over the 8-pound bird, pitch it into the trunk and drive away.

Baffa received a call from a man who wanted to know how much he'd pay to have his bird back. The peacock is worth about $150, but Baffa refused to pay a ransom. The man gave in and released the bird at an agreed spot.

The bird was back in its pen two hours after the crime was reported. He was unscathed physically but apparently got some psychological scars. "He's as far from people as he can possibly be," Baffa said.

Agree As To A Partnership

JERUSALEM (AP) — A four-day, American-Israeli "dialogue" ended in mid-July with general agreement that American Jews and Israelis have a responsibility to participate in each other's affairs as "partners in the Jewish enterprise."

But the 40 Israeli and American Jewish scholars and community leaders differed sharply over whether criticism should be aired in public about Israel, says the American Jewish Congress which convened the gathering.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department is spending $80,075 to see if federal inspectors may be able to electronically detect foreign agricultural products before they enter the United States.

The money is for a one-year grant to scientists at the Georgia Tech Research Institute to develop electromagnetic devices "for the detection of contraband agricultural products in international travelers' baggage" at U.S. ports of entry.

"In this approach, microwaves can be transmitted through baggage or reflected by items in baggage or handbags," said Anson Bertrand, director of USDA science and education.

"The device would detect fruit, meats and vegetables that may carry disease organisms or insect pests without agricultural inspectors having to open baggage."

Bertrand said that if successful the research could lead to faster service to people arriving at U.S. ports of entry, about 25 million of them last year.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although production is down nationally, Oregon producers of tall fescue seed are having a bumper harvest this year, says the Agriculture Department.

Oregon seed output was forecast Thursday at 9.35 million pounds, up 30 percent from last year. Yields were reported at a record of 850 pounds an acre, an 18 percent increase from 1979, and the acreage for harvest was up 10 percent.

But nationally the tall fescue seed harvest is expected to be 81.7 million pounds, a 15 percent decline from last year. Smaller crops in Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee more than offset better harvests in other states, officials said.

Tall fescue is primarily used as livestock forage.

SPIRIT OF THE LAW

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under federal law, all distilled spirits bottled since Jan. 1 must be sold in metric containers.

Metric bottles are similar to but different from the familiar pint or quart bottles. For example, the pint, 16 ounces, is replaced by a 500 milliliter bottle of 16.9 ounces. The quart, 32 ounces, is replaced by the liter bottle of 33.8 ounces.

History buffs know that Claude Emile Jean-Baptiste Litre was among the founding fathers of the metric system. His family sold wine bottles in the first litre (liter) bottles to have the name.

Why A 'Dance' In New York City This Spring?

Literally thousands of people are converging on New York City this weekend, and they're all headed for the same place — Madison Square Garden, where the Democratic National Convention will convene Monday, August 11.

Two who are among the many are Ted Koppel and Frank Reynolds. The highly respected correspondents, both residents of Washington, D.C., will be anchoring ABC New's coverage of the convention.

You may very well be asking the question — why New York? Actually there's no logical explanation. It's all a part of an extremely complicated mechanism.

And it happens every four years in the spring...like a ritual dance. Not the mating step of the ruffled grouse, not a pagan rite, but the quadrennial search for the cities where the Democrats and Repbulicans can hold their nominating conventions.

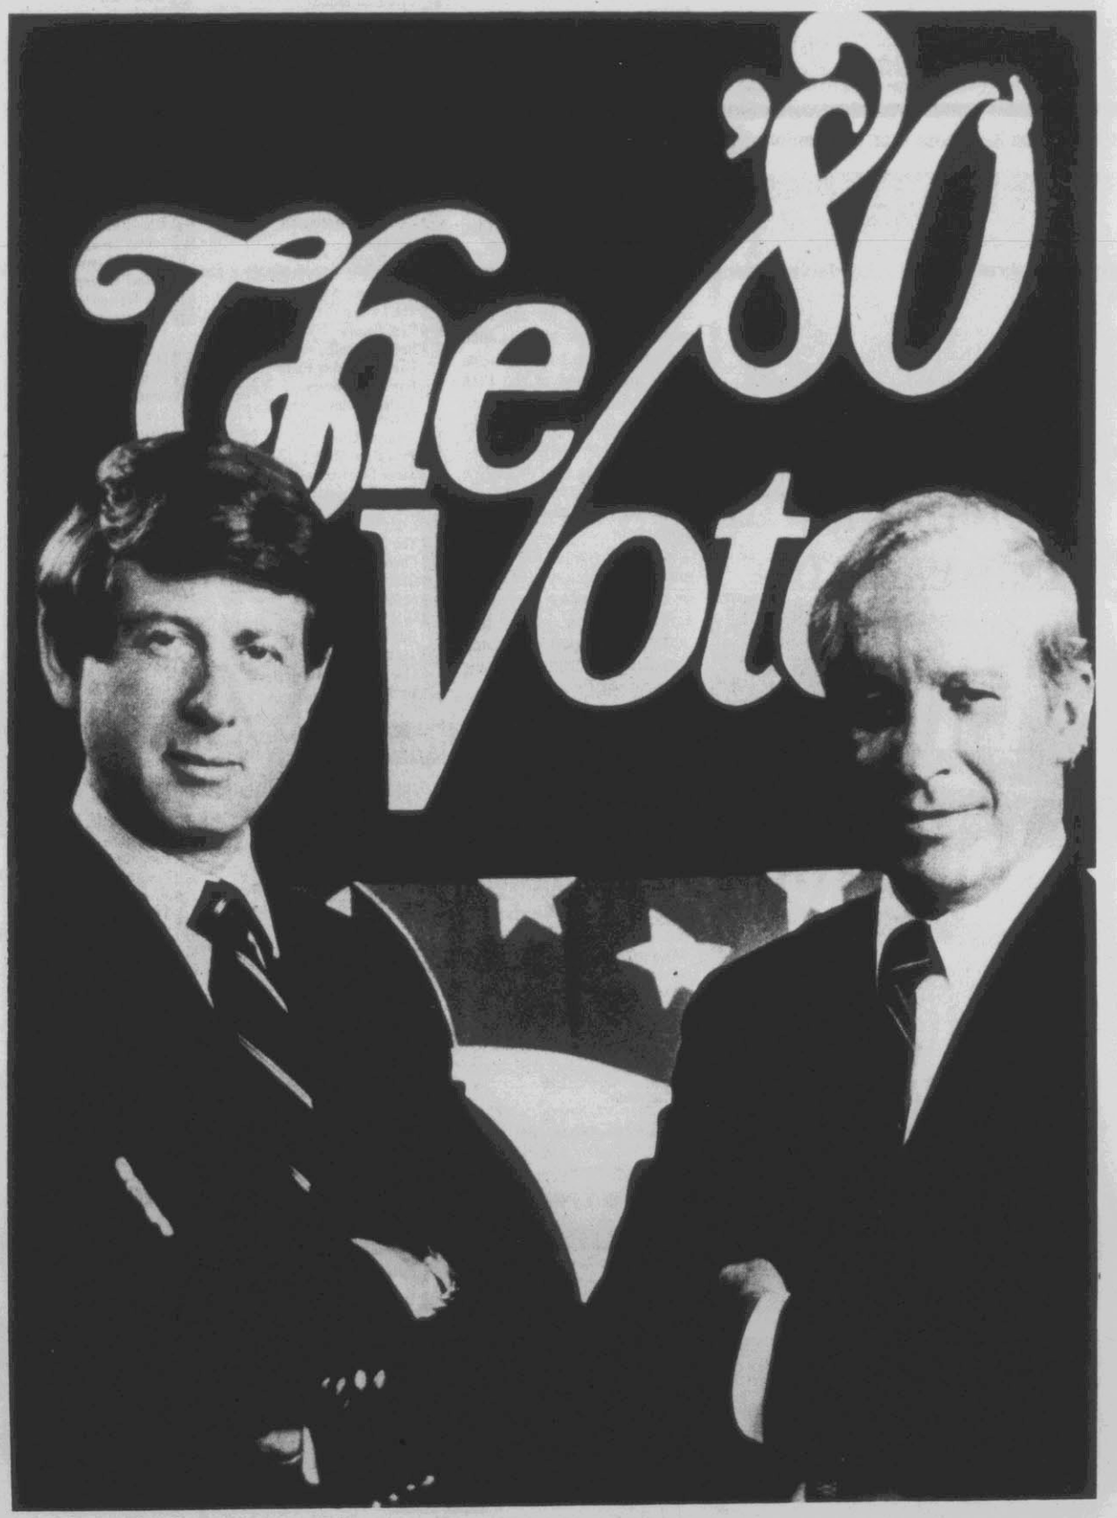
Why the dance? It all sounds simple enough. Just find a city. There must be plenty which would want the honor, prestige and publicity of having a presidential nominee chosen in its hometown. Not necessarily so.

By the time all the considerations are filtered out by both the party picking the city, and the city picking the party, there really isn't all that much choice.

First of all, there's logistics. The Democrats need about 25,000 hotel rooms...that eliminates Sheboygan. Then there's the Convention hall. Every delegate should be seated on the main floor. And the media needs plenty of work space in and around the hall.

Besides hotel rooms and the hall, there are other crucial headaches for the Site Selection Committee...money and politics.

A suggestion has been made that the two parties get together, build the perfect convention hall in the 'non-political' city of Washington, D.C., and hold their conventions there every four years. The idea never went anywhere and probably won't. It's too logical. And besides, we wouldn't be able to tap our toes to the ritual dance performed every four years in the spring.



ABC NEWS' comprehensive coverage of the Democratic National Convention in New York will begin at 8:00 p.m. each day the convention is in session August 11-14. Anchoring the coverage will be Correspondents Ted Koppel and Frank Reynolds.

ABC SPORTS commentators Jim McKay will give live and exclusive coverage of the action from the 62nd PGA Golf Championship at the Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester, New York Saturday, August 9 (5-7 p.m.), and Sunday, August 10 (3:30-7 p.m.).

Par-ticular Fondness

Winner of the prestigious tournament in 1965, Marr has a "particular" fondness for the tournament itself as well as fond memories of the Oak Hill course.

The final round of the PGA Championship, one of the four major events on the Tour, will be seen live and exclusively on ABC-TV Sunday, Aug. 10 (3:30-7 p.m.). The final day rounds out six hours of network coverage on the tournament.

Marr will join ABC Sportscasters Jim McKay and Peter Aliss in describing the tournament action, with Bob Rosburg, also a past PGA champion, and Bill Flemming serving as roving reporters.

Film Completed

After ten weeks of filming in and around Los Angeles, production has been completed on "Modern Romance," a theatrical release starring Kathryn Harrold and Albert Brooks.

JACLYN SMITH stars as a small-town girl with big-time ideas who has the beauty and charm to bring them off in the velvet jungle of Hollywood's social set in "The Users," on "The ABC Sunday Night Movie" Sunday, August 10 (8-10:30 p.m.).

'Angel' Trades In Her Wings

Jaclyn Smith stars as a small-town girl with a dark past who falls in love with a fading screen star, goes with him to Hollywood and masterminds his spectacular professional and personal comeback in "The Users." ABC's Sunday Night Movie, August 10 (9 to 11:30 p.m.).

Tony Curtis, Red Buttons, Alan Feinstein, Joan Fontaine, John Forsythe, George Hamilton, Darren McGavin, Carrie Nye and Michelle Phillips round out the starring cast.

In a dramatic departure from her role of Kelly Garrett in "Charlie's Angels," Ms. Smith plays Elena. She's an admitted former call girl who gratefully accepts an invitation from veteran screen actor Randy Brent (Curtis) to leave Arizona and live with him in Hollywood. Soon afterward they are married. Then, when Elena sees how Hollywood powers have demoralized Randy, she embarks on a courageous crusade to put him back on top and restore his dignity.

Despite the shocking discovery of Randy's secret liaison, and the realization that their life together will end, Elena carries out her mission. Finally the man who took her from the Arizona backroads and introduced her to Sunset Boulevard wins an Oscar.

In her quest, Elena wins the respect of a host of colorful Hollywood characters, including Randy's superstar daughter, Marina (Ms. Phillips), and professional socialite Grace St. George (Ms. Fontaine). Others include producer Adam Baker (Hamilton), best-selling author Henry Waller (McGavin), superagent Warren Ambrose (Red Buttons) and multimillionaire Reade Jamieson (John Forsythe.)

Designed by executive producers Aaron Spelling and Douglas S. Cramer as a glamour movie in the grand Hollywood tradition, much of "The Users" was filmed in and around the mansions of Bel Air and Beverly Hills. Highlighted is a sequence in which Jaclyn Smith and Michelle Phillips tour elegant Rodeo Drive.

Blame It On J.R.!

Linda Gray, who plays the wanton Sue Ellen Ewing on "Dallas," says she's never been verbally or physically attacked like other stars who play characters as contemptible as hers.

"My husband, J.R., is so despicable — he hasn't one redeeming feature — that everyone looks at me with empathy," Linda explains.

Winless Drought

"I feel like a million," was all LPGA golfer Pat Bradley could say after she ended a 22-month winless drought by sinking a four-foot birdie putt on the final hoel to defeat Nancy Lopez-Melton by one stroke and win the $100,000 Greater Baltimore Golf Classic.

Michele Will Tell

Q: How may I obtain blueprints for the Ingalls' home that we see on "Little House on the Prairie"? B. MAYNARD, FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Why don't you write to William F. Claxton, a producer/director of 'Little House.' Send your letter to Claxton c/o NBC Productions, Inc., 1020 W. Washington Blvd., Culver City, Calif. 90230.

Q: Will Brooke Shields be doing anything on television in the near future? What is her address? BROOKE'S 'SECRET ADMIRER' IN HENDERSON, N.C.

A: Theatrical films are considerably more lucrative than television for the attractive and talented young performer. So, the only time you'll probably see her on the small screen is when she's guesting on talk shows. Write to Brooke c/o Columbia Pictures, 300 Colgems Sq., Burbank, Calif. 91505.

Q: What happened to Tina Cole, who played Katie Douglas on "My Three Sons"? B. WILSON, MT. AIRY, N.C.

A: Tina was 24 years old when she joined the popular series in 1967, and has made only a few appearances on TV since the show topped filming. She's a member of the performing King Family, daughter of Yvonne King and the late Buddy Cole.

Q: I'm a 13-year-old girl who's really interested in body building. How do I write to Lou Ferrigno for some information about this? A GOLDSBORO, N.C. READER.

A: Write to Lou c/o "The Incredible Hulk," Universal City Plaza, Universal City, Calif. 91608. Better still, talk with your gym teacher when you start back to school this fall.

Q: How did Carrie Fisher get the role of Princess Leia in "Star Wars"? M. NICHOLE, WILSON, N.C.

A: George Lucas used the some approach he used on 'American Graffiti" when he began casting "Star Wars." He chose new, fresh talent for three of the five major roles (Fisher, Ford and Hamill). In the other two roles, he cast British veterans, Alex Guinness and Peter Cushing.

Live Coverage Of Convention

Covering the action on the floor of the Democratic National Convention for NBC News will be Tom Brokaw, Garrick Utley, Tom Pettit and Chris Wallace. And they are just four of many correspondents who'll be on hand to bring you the latest up-to-the minute developments.

Madison Square Garden will be filled to capacity with delegates and newsmen all week. And because of space limitations, the networks have formed a 'pool' which makes the newsmen's job considerably less confusing.

Unilaterally, the networks are free to do their individual coverage of the convention story — and offer unusual and exclusive facets of that story.

What the pool does not do is offer any editorial support: it has no reporters, correspondents, commentators, interviewers or announcers. it's strictly in the business of providing coverage of basic activities inside the convention hall.

The pool has five cameras covering the action in the hall. Two prime head-on cameras in the center facing the podium; two are on the podium, and one is on a kind of caboose at the end of the center platform.

For sound, there will be 65 to 70 microphones, including one at each state delegation on the floor, a couple on the podium, and several for the orchestra.

In addition to the three TV networks, between 30 and 40 radio stations will be subscribing to the pool's audio coverage, and several independent TV stations will subscribe to the audio-and-video coverage. The pool also will service the needs of foreign broadcasters, some whom plan daily satellite feeds to their own country.

Convention coverage is considered by the TV medium to be their Mt. Everest. It's a great challenge, but the reasons for the behind-the-scenes work is more than just because it is a challenge. Political conventions are a great coming together of thousands of people from every corner of America for a very great reason — to elect a man who will become the President of all of us.

Every American has a right and perhaps an obligation to see what is happening at these conventions and to learn why certain things happen. Television, so far at least, has found its responsibility to cover events inescapable.

Norris Has Signed

Loni Changes!!

Chances are strong that you won't recognize 'WKRP's' Loni Anderson when she guests on this season's premiere segment of "The Love Boat." The curvaceous blonde will be playing a starlet who's so bothered by fans that she winds up disguising herself as a drab secretary — with a brown wig and thick eyeglasses!

Purchased Rights

NBC-TV has purchased the rights to Disney Shelton's "Rage of Angels" for $1,000,000. No decision has been made at this time about what direction the web will go — a mini-series or motion picture.

The Training's Not Easy

Every role is a challenge to Richard Chamberlain. But few will ever match the physical and emotional demands of playing Blackthorne, the shipwrecked English navigator who becomes a samurai warrior in James Clavell's "Shogun."

The epic 12-hour miniseries about 17th century Japan will be broadcast on NBC-TV over five consecutive nights in September.

Chamberlain, who appeared in virtually every scene during the six months of location filming in Japan, prepared for the role with the discipline of a competitive athlete.

"Before I even got the part I knew they wanted somebody bigger than I generally am, so I started going to a gym for several months before coming out for meetings with James Clavell. I put on a lot of weight — about 12 pounds of muscle — and I really felt great.

"Unfortunately, I lost most of it during filming, but I worked real hard to keep up my stamina. I knew I had to be in exceptionally good shape because it was a very physical role."

One big advantage was the fact he enjoyed Japanese food.

"It's tremendously nourishing. I tried to eat well, sleep as much as I could, go running and get a lot of exercise. I had sort of a little gym with barbells set up in my room."

The heat was relentless, especially when we were doing the boat scenes in Nagashima. I found I had to just sit very still in a chair, or hold an umbrella over me so the sun wouldn't scald me. It was the only way to conserve my energy.

"I noticed some of the actors would horse around the set and when it came time to do a scene they wouldn't be able to remember their lines because they were so tired."

Looks Like A Winner

Early location filming shows evidence that NBC-TV's "Real People" is going to be as innovative, provocative and popular as it was last season when the show was in the forefront of nonfiction television entertainment.

The series' researchers have completed work on a variety of intriguing topics, and in many instances, shooting has already been completed. Here's a partial list:

Joan's A Busy Gal

Joan Van Tassel produces, directs and writes segments for NBC-TV's new "Speak Up America" series. And if it bothers anyone that she is functioning in a so-called man's world, no one's told her.

"I do what George Schlatter asks me to do. I'm well trained and if anyone feels it's unusual for me to be doing what men 'generally' do, I haven't heard about it," Joan comments.

The busy gal recently completed a whole passel of segments. They deal with various subjects — the L.A.P.D. trick force, gigolos, marriage and the new morality. Now she's in the process of preparing location shootings on illegal aliens, sex in the church and compulsive gamblers.

Joan was born in Ann Arbor, Mich., and raised in Seattle, Anchorage and El Paso. In 1969, she returned to college and completed her Master's degree in Educational Psychology at California State College in Northridge, Calif.

More Superstars

The producers of CBS-TV's "The White Shadow" were so pleased with the way a guest appearance by the Harlem Globetrotters boosted the series' ratings that they've signed several other sports stars to guest-starring roles. Among those who'll be appearing in upcoming segments are Mickey Mantle, Magic Johnson and Bill Walton.

Steelers, Falcons Open NFL Season

Pittsburgh's powerhouse Steelers, defending Super Bowl champions, will invade Atlanta to challenge the hometown Falcons in a prime-time, pre-season National Football League contest to be seen on ABC-TV, Friday, August 15 (9 p.m. to conclusion).

ABC Sportscasters Frank Gifford, Howard Cosell and Fran Tarkenton will call the action from Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium.

Coach Chuck Noll's Steelers, Super Bowl champions in four of the past six seasons with a 12-4 regular season mark in 1979, enter 1980 bursting with confidence that they can become the first NFL club to win a total of five Super Bowls and three in succession. In fact, only two other teams in history — the 1929-31 and 1963-65 Green Bay Packers — have ever won three consecutive league titles.

Pittsburgh's reasons for optimisim again this season certainly are justified with 22 players on the roster who played on all four Super Bowl teams. Their depth is characteristic of a champion.

Once again, the key to the Steeler's fortunes will be quarterback Terry Bradshaw (No. 12), the Most Valuable Player in the past two Super Bowls. Coming off of his best campaign statistically (completing 259 of 472 passes for 3,724 yards and 26 touchdowns), Bradshaw will be joined by a "dream" supporting cast, including wide receivers John Stallworth (82) and Lynn Swann (88), running back Franco Harris (32) and a solid offensive line anchored by All-Pro center Mike Webster (52).

Defensively, such familiar names as defensive tackle "Mean Joe" Greene (75), defensive end L.C. Greenwood (68), middle linebacker Jack Lambert (58) and cornerback Mel Blount (47) lead a veteran contingent brimming with talent and depth.

Matt Bahr (9), who won three games with field goals in 1979-80, will handle the placekicking chores.

A pair of Arizona State products highlighted the Steelers' draft. They are quarterback Mark Malone and linebacker Bob Kohrs, who were both picked in the first round.

After a 9-7 record and a playoff appearance in 1978, Coach Leeman Bennett's Falcons dipped to 6-10 a year ago. Bennett's task in 1980-81 is to produce a more consistent offense while rebuilding the once-devastating "Grits Blitz" defense, which allowed a modern day record of only 129 points in 1977.

Quarterback Steve Bartkowski (10) set club marks for attempts (379), completions (203), yards (2,502) and touchdown passes (17) in 1979. He will be surrounded by an outstanding group of targets, which include veteran wide receivers Wallace Francis (89) and Alfred Jenkins (84) and No. 1 draft choice, Junior Miller (80), a "can't miss" tight end out of Nebraska.

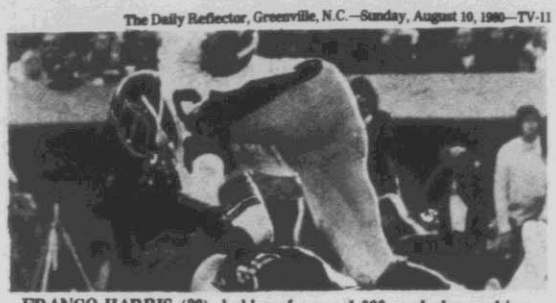
All-Pro center Jeff Van Note (57) is the key in a maturing offensive line, which was one of the most positive elements for Atlanta last season.

Defensively, there will be changes in philosophy as well as personnel.

Ends Jeff Yeates (79) and Wilson Faumuina (74) and tackle Don Smith (65) are the pillars of strength on the Falcon's defensive line. With the retirement of standout Greg Brezina, the linebacking crew will take on a new look.



FRANCO HARRIS (32), holder of seven 1,000-yard-plus rushing seasons, will lead the World Champions Pittsburgh Steelers to Atlanta to take on the Falcons in the first preseason game on "ABC's Friday Night Football," Friday, August 15 (9 p.m. to conclusion).

Long Ball Stars Vie

ABC Sports will cover the finals of the sixth annual "National Long Driving Championship" from Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester, N.Y., Sunday August 10 (3-3:30 p.m.), immediately preceeding live coverage of the final round of the PGA Championshp.

Dave Marr and Peter Alliss will handle announcing duties for the event.

Thirty six of golf's "long ball" artists will advance to the semi-finals on August 4 at Oak Hill to compete for $50,000 in purse money, including a $15,000 first prize. This group includes 25 players who have survived the 79 sectional and 15 district competitions, and 11 golfers who have earned exemptions. A total of 17 will advance to the televised final round.

There will also be an added attraction in this year's event. The five longest drivers on the PGA tour, through the Sammy Davis Jr. — Greater Hartford Open (July 24-27), will automatically advance to the final round. Long driving statistics on the PGA Tour are determined by the average of a golfer's measured distances on two designated driving holes at each Tour stop.

Pike's Peek

PIKE'S PEEKS

HOLLYWOOD — Although PAM DAWBER strongly denies there's any friction on the "MORK & MINDY" set, she does admit that she's "sick of playing second fiddle" to ROBIN WILLIAMS. "There's never been any problems between the two of us," she explains, "and we're great friends. It's just that I'm so tired of people ignoring me. Sometimes I want to scream, 'I'm here too!' But I never do." Apparently Pam did 'scream' because now the show's producer, GERRY MARSHALL, is planning to make use of her musical talents and will have her singing in several episodes this year.

As if RON HOWARD's departure wasn't enough trouble for "HAPPY DAYS" execs, now ERIN MORAN's causing more problems. Plans call for an 'attractive young actress' to join the series as a new friend for Joanie, Erin's character. But Erin's angrily saying "no way!" to any gal who's prettier than she is!

There're also problems with "LAVERNE & SHIRLEY" topliners — CINDY WILLIAMS and EDDIE MEKKA. And this could possibly drag the show down even lower in the ratings. Cindy stormed off the set the other day when producers refused to go along with her accusations that Eddie was 'upstaging' her. In fact, she's telling friends that this will probably be her last season.

A Reconciliation?

Stasha Stallone decided to put her second divorce proceedings 'on hold' and winged to Budapest for a second (or is it a third?) honeymoon with hubby Sylvester. He's in the European country filming "Escape to Victory."

For Ft. McHenry, an eight-stripe flag.

FOR WILLIAM F. BOLGER, Postmaster General

Why does the flag on the 15-cent stamp have eight red stripes, when it should contain only seven? — B.S., Iron River, Mich.

● Eight is the correct number. This particular design depicts the American flag that flew over Fort McHenry during the British bombardment in 1814. It is the same flag, with its 15 stars and 15 stripes, that inspired Francis Scott Key to compose the work that was to become our official national anthem in 1931. At that time, it was customary for a star and stripe to be added to the flag's design each time a new state was admitted to the Union. The historic Fort McHenry flag can actually be viewed at the National Museum of History and Technology in Washington, D.C. Come on in and see it.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Is it true that Sophia Loren recently lost a bundle at the gaming tables of Las Vegas? — B.G., Joplin, Mo.

● No. We checked around and were told by the management of the Union Plaza Hotel that when Sophia made her first visit to Vegas a few months ago (as part of her U.S. tour to promote her book, Sophia, which is now being made into a film with Sophia as the star) and they invited her to try her hand at roulette or blackjack in the gambling casinos, the actress graciously but firmly declined. She explained that due to her lack of formal education, arithmetic is her weak spot ("except when it comes to what someone is going to pay me for a movie"), unlike those people in Naples, where she grew up, who can count money before they can say "Mama" or "Papa."

Bad in arithmetic; expert in paychecks.

Does working in a TV series make you feel older than your 11 years? — P.R., Amarillo, Texas

● I feel my age. I guess people think I am older because I act a year older. Sometimes I wish I was 16 because then I could drive — at least in California. But until I get to be 16, I think I will enjoy being 11 and 12, then 13, 14 and 15. That's because my mom says you can only be young for a very short time.

FOR JOSEPH COTTEN, star of The Hearse

● Hardly, because the records show I first stepped onto a Broadway stage in 1930, and this is my 50th anniversary in show business. Any irritation I might feel is offset by the fact that acting for me has always been a rewarding profession. In my younger days I was able to somehow support myself on enthusiasm, in lieu of monetary security.

FOR ERIC CARMEN, rock recording star

If your heart is in the classics, as you claim, why did you become a rock musician instead of a classical one? — M.R., Bangor, Maine

● Because there is more money in it. But I am still in love with the classics. Many of the songs I write are inspired by them. My ambition is to perform Rachmaninoff's 2nd Piano Concerto with a symphony orchestra. If I have a choice of going to a rock concert or a classical one, I go to the latter.

FOR CONSTANCE TOWERS, star of the Jones Beach, N.Y., production of The Sound of Music

Is there a reason why you keep your children under wraps? — P.J., Great Falls, Mont.

● My older children keep a low profile because this is the way they want to live their lives, and it is something that I prefer. Neither one (Michael, 19, Maureen, 18) is interested in a theatrical career, so there is no sense in getting exposed to it. I do keep my younger daughters, Maria and Christina, under wraps.

FOR CHARLOTTE ZOLOTOW, publisher of books for young people

At what age should children start reading books that refer to sex? — V.M., Albany, N.Y.

● There are some lovely picture books that deal with birth and are for the very young child. "Sex" is not what they are about, but "life" and "love." And there is no age too young for children to wonder about the world around them in all its phases. It is how these books are written that matters.

FOR GEORGE GALLUP of the Gallup poll

What section of the country do you poll? I've never been polled, nor do I know anyone who has. — Ruth H. McGriff, Fort Walton Beach, Fla.

● This is a frequently asked question. Obviously we do cover all sections of this country — the big cities, small cities, farm areas — and in true proportion. The chances of anyone being interviewed in a single survey are only one in 100,000 — and that will help explain why you have never been polled.

PRO AND CON

PRO Representative Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D.-L, N.Y.)

Yes. Foreign holdings in the U.S. probably total $750 billion and are significant in vital sectors of our economy: farmland, real estate, energy, natural resources, banking, high technology, chemicals and pharmaceuticals. Despite public concern, the Government does not know the nature, extent or true ownership of foreign holdings. Such unchecked investment means increasing foreign influence over our nation's economic and political decisions. Most foreign investment does not create jobs or bring in capital. Like many other nations, the U.S. should restrict foreign holdings harmful to U.S. national interests.

CON Elinor G. Constable, Deputy Asst. Secretary, International Finance and Development, State Department

Foreign direct investment in the U.S. can positively affect our productivity, output, employment and technology. Existing restrictions, in sectors such as national defense, utilities and communications, protect our essential security interests. Further restrictions would only encourage like treatment of the $140 billion in U.S. interests abroad and hurt efforts to facilitate viable foreign investment in key sectors with high unemployment, such as automotives. Moreover, fears of foreign control of certain economic sectors are not supported by the facts, e.g., foreigners own less than 1 percent of U.S. farmland.

Mount St. Helens: After The Fallout

Residents have begun the long job of shoveling away tons of volcanic debris. Yet geologists aren't saying St. Helens won't erupt again soon.

By Thomas Ryll

Some scientists call it the greatest natural disaster in the country's history. With a volcanic muscle not demonstrated in 30,000 years — and with the strength of a hydrogen bomb — Washington State's Mount St. Helens literally blew its top on May 18.

The eruption blasted off 1,300 feet from the mountain's once-rounded summit, devastated its entire north face and spewed ash, boiling mud and pulverized rock for miles.

When it appeared the worst had passed, officials began the monstrous task of calculating the cataclysmic eruption's effect on human beings, forests, fisheries, crops and the state's economy. Losses were staggering and officials lament that the overall salvage job will take months, even years. Congress, fortunately, has provided a relief package of $951.1 million. Here's a look at what's being done right now — and what will be done in the future.

Forests

In just one instant, the volcanic explosion leveled a billion board feet of prime timber — worth $500 million — in a fan-shaped 125-square-mile area on St. Helens' north side. In photographs, the felled trees, with all their greenery blown away, look like a heap of matchsticks. More than half the devastated area was originally unlogged, protected forest, and some of the old-growth trees had trunks up to 12 feet thick and were 200 years old. Even though thousands of trees appeared flattened but undamaged, ash particles were found imbedded several inches into their trunks.

Forestry officials have just begun talking of plans to reseed the area and are trying to determine how much timber might be still usable. The task will be formidable. "There's going to be a few generations of children go by before they see forest again there," says one Forest Service worker, who estimates it will take 300 years to regrow forest close to the peak.

Officials agree that thousands of acres will probably be left untouched as a scientific study area and tourist attraction. Where reseeding is necessary, it will most likely be done by air, since roads have been obliterated.

Bob Lewis, a member of a Portland, Ore., U.S. Forest Service rehabilitation task force, notes pessimistically, "We don't even know if you can grow anything in the ash." Geologists, though, have already spotted small plants pushing up through the ash — without any help from man.

Wildlife and Fish:

Thousands of animals paid with their lives when Mount St. Helens turned a quiet Sunday morning into a holocaust. An estimated 5,000 elk and 6,000 deer were killed outright by ash and poisonous gas, say some officials. The bear, cougar and mountain goat populations in the area were hit hard, too. And an estimated 17 percent of the state's bee population perished.

Fish life also was devastated when the lakes and rivers became engulfed with mud. Seventy million trout and salmon are thought to have been wiped out. The long-term effect on the fishing industry could be much more drastic, says Larry Cassidy, State Game Commission chairman, who predicts a $20 million loss to the local economy the first year. The figure, which includes tourist expenditures, could top $117 million over the next 25 years, as fish and game populations struggle to rebuild themselves.

To nurse the animal and fish populations back to health, the Washington State Games Department has already outlined a 10-year, $22 million plan that will put teams of biologists to work around the mountain and in the ash-coated eastern parts of the state.

The agency's plan will cost $7.4 million to help rebuild fish runs and $13.9 million to aid wildlife by introducing more elk, deer, bears, cougars and mountain goats into the area. Funds will also be used to reseed wildlife feeding areas that were destroyed.

But it could be months before work crews make their way into the devastated backwoods to begin this work.

Waterways and Lakes

When the eruption was over, the Cowlitz and Toutle rivers — tributaries of the Columbia River — were totally clogged with mud and nearly devoid of fish. The Columbia was partially clogged. Army Corps of Engineers experts estimate that 46 million cubic yards of muck — enough to fill nearly 5 million dump trucks — will have to be dredged from the three waterways. Congress has granted the $215 million the work will require.

Shipping to Portland and two other Columbia River ports was strangled for several days until a channel could be opened. But it will be late September before the Columbia's channel will be cut back to its former depth of 40 feet and width of 600 feet.

Flooding remains the main danger along the Toutle and Cowlitz. The silt-choked waterways are running at or near-flood stages, Corps experts report. It appears the cleanup effort will be a race with time, as work must be completed before heavy fall runoffs. If not, warns Corps official Donald E. Lawyer, four southwest Washington cities — with 60,000 residents — could be flooded.

With no guarantee that the mountain won't erupt again, Corps engineers have proposed building two rock dams on the Toutle River between the mountain and those Washington cities to contain further debris and mud.

No plans have yet been made to rebuild the three lakes in "ground zero" — including scenic Spirit Lake — that all but disappeared after the eruption and the 25 others that were heavily damaged by thick coats of gray ash.

St. Helens

Health

Most of the people who died on St. Helens (25 are known dead; 40 are missing and presumed dead) were asphyxiated by large amounts of gas and volcanic ash. Fortunately, scientists believe that the extremely fine ash — which coated everything, including crops — is nontoxic and apparently poses no long-range health hazard. Still, long-term studies are underway at a Center for Disease Control laboratory in Morgantown, W. Va., where doctors have investigated "black lung" coal dust disease.

"It's just an unfortunate opportunity for people here to see what people who work in a coal mine see all their lives," said Dr. Robert Bernstein of the CDC. "People will have to be comfortable with going back to what they were doing before."

What Next?

Uneasy residents continue to beg scientists for predictions on whether there will be another eruption. "It is clear the volcano is into an episode of explosive eruptions," says Donal Mullineaux, co-author of a 1978 Federal publication that predicted a Mount St. Helens eruption before the year 2000. "This leaves us in a position of watching and waiting." Mullineaux is convinced the worst is yet to come for Washington residents. "But we can't tell time very well," he says. "And that is critical to our information."

Dwight Crandell, the geologist who co-authored the 1978 study, warns that an eruption 4,000 years ago dumped a foot of pumice (volcanic dust) 50 miles away in a single, narrow line and that "we should expect similar eruptions in the future."

A pumice eruption like that of four millennia ago would threaten thousands of people — depending on which way the wind blows. But like Mullineaux and other scientists, Crandell cannot say whether the "future" is two days, two years or two centuries away."

Nevertheless, nearly 300 persons who were evacuated from a 20-mile radius danger zone around the mountain have obtained state permits to move back to their homes. Crandell points out that people did not heed scientists' earlier warnings — and so some perished in the eruption.

There's one consolation resulting from the Mount St. Helens eruption. The reams of evidence, instrument readings and experiment results will add immeasurably to science's knowledge. "We are writing the book on volcanoes," says Peter Rowley, a geologist with the U.S. Geological Survey's Denver office. "I know it is going to save lives down the road someday." FW

The dots on the map above indicate volcanoes in the U.S. that might be expected to erupt in the near geologic future (the next 10,000 years), according to Wendell A. Duffield, a geologist with the Geological Survey in Menlo Park, Calif.

Family Report

By Norman Lobsenz

Counsel from Grandparents

Grandparents feel close emotional links with their grandchildren, and even though most of them say they would never try to interfere in a young person's life, they cannot help but make some attempt to influence them.

Grandmothers are likely to offer advice to grandchildren of both sexes on a wide variety of issues, ranging from relationships with family and friends to lifestyles, dating and marriage. But according to Dr. Gunhild Hagestad, a professor of human development at Penn State University, grandfathers take a narrower approach. They seem to establish closer emotional ties with grandsons than with granddaughters, and even then "limit their influence to two areas — getting an education and finding a job."

Hagestad told a meeting of the Gerontological Society that grandfathers hesitate to offer advice to granddaughters because they do not consider themselves competent to do so. Moreover, she said, "They also seem to think that young women don't want or need the kind of advice they might offer."

Women, Work and Sex

Does working outside the home help or harm a married woman's sex life? When 400 psychiatrists were asked this question, 20 percent said working wives' sexual satisfaction improves because they are happier and more sure of themselves; another 20 percent said sexual satisfaction declines because of fatigue and marital conflict; and more than 50 percent said there is little or no difference between the sex lives of working women and full-time homemakers.

"It's common for many aspects of a marriage to improve when the wife's self-esteem rises for any reason," said Dr. Merle Kroop, director of education for New York Hospital's human sexuality program. "On the other hand, if a wife works because of financial pressures, there are likely to be detrimental effects based on her resentments and the husband's loss of self-esteem."

When Children Want to Be Alone

At what ages do children become concerned with privacy? Two psychologists recently surveyed the habits of middle-class youngsters. They found that 2- to 5-year-olds closed the bathroom door behind them 64 percent of the time but were far more casual about shutting their bedroom doors. Nearly all 10- to 13-year-olds insisted on bathroom privacy, but only half bothered to close off their bedrooms. All 14- to 17-year-olds shut the bathroom door, but nearly half left their bedrooms open. Oddly, 6- to 9-year-olds were least concerned with privacy. The percentages held true in each age bracket for both boys and girls.

Two factors seemed to exert the most influence on children's attitudes toward privacy. Youngsters who lived in smaller houses with more than five family members showed a greater interest in seclusion, as did those who lived in larger homes with four or fewer relatives. Children in "moderately crowded" homes worried less about privacy. The psychologists theorize that youngsters who seldom get the chance to be alone take it when they can, and those who are used to privacy take it for granted. FW

PEOPLE QUIZ / By John E. Gibson

Pain: Does It Feel the Same to Men and Women?

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Many people have aches and pains for reasons that they are not aware of.

2. You can raise or lower your pain threshold at will.

3. There are certain clues that can tip you off as to whether a given pain is psychologically induced or results from a physical cause.

4. Pain feels different to a woman than to a man.

5. To some people, each kind of pain (dull, sharp, throbbing, burning, etc.) has a different color.

ANSWERS

1. True. Many aches and pains are not caused by any physical or organic condition but are purely psychological — and stem from various mental and emotional states. This has been found to be particularly true of head and facial pains. In his definitive treatise, Orofacial Pains, Dr. Welden E. Bell, clinical professor at University of Texas Southwestern Medical School, cites findings showing that "Depending on past emotional experience, especially from childhood, pain may be used to gain attention, relieve guilt, substitute for various forms of aggression or express grief." He notes further that pain has other emotional values. It commonly excuses one from carrying out an unpleasant task. Headaches have been used frequently as socially acceptable excuses or as a means of avoiding responsibilities. Pain, as with other illness, can be used as a weapon or threat against those over whom the subject would have his way. (Such pains are real and hurt just as much as those physically caused.)

2. True. In studies at the University of Calgary, subjects' sensitivity to varying amounts of painful stimuli — administered with an apparatus designed to deliver controllable intensities of pain — was carefully evaluated. It was found that sensitivity to pain (induced by either radiant heat or pressure) was markedly reduced when subjects were in a relaxed state. It may be hard to relax in a dentist's chair or when a nurse approaches with a hypodermic needle or when you have a splitting headache, but it's easier to do so when you know that the simple act of relaxing makes aches and pains hurt less — while, as other studies show, being tense and anxious can make a garden-variety pain feel like a major one.

3. True. A University of Western Ontario study reported on the aches and pains of men and women subjects of various ages and walks of life. Diagnosis showed that dull or aching pains and most steady pains tended to result from physical causes, while only 31 percent of throbbing pains were from physical causes — the rest being psychologically induced. A further finding: "Headache is more common in those with psychological causes for pain, whereas backache was more common in those with physical causes."

4. True. But not in all cases. In a University of Western Ontario study of various types of pain, sensations described by both men and women were recorded. Most men reported "aching" or "dull" pain. In contrast, 90 percent of persons reporting "stabbing" pain were women, and 75 percent of those reporting "burning" pain were also women.

5. True. In an Ohio State University study of children's perceptions of pain, the majority of child subjects perceived the pain inflicted by a hammer blow as dark red, while the pain of a needle was seen more often in a lighter shade of red. And findings are cited of an adult's reaction to pain, in which "each type of pain produced its individual and invariable color; for instance: hollow pain, blue color; sore pain, red color; superficial headache, white color." What'll You Have? An Effective New Method for Choosing Your Child's Sex

By Paula Dranov

Probably the first question prospective parents are asked after they announce that a baby is on the way is "Do you want a girl or a boy?" By then it's too late to choose — sex is determined at the moment of fertilization.

Recently, however, a number of methods — none of them foolproof — have been advanced as means of determining the sex of a child before conception.

The most effective new method seems to be one devised by Dr. Ronald Ericsson, a California specialist in reproductive physiology. (He is a Ph.D., not a medical doctor.) His method is not a sure-fire guarantee, but it does increase the likelihood of having a boy. (No similar method is available to heighten the chances of having a girl.)

The Ericsson method is not a do-it-yourself technique, explains Roxanne Feldshuh, executive administrator of Idant Laboratories, a New York City sperm bank that is one of nine centers around the country authorized to offer the procedure to couples who qualify.

Essentially, it involves separating sperm bearing Y chromosomes from those bearing X chromosomes. (Each male sperm cell and female egg cell carries a pair of sex-determining chromosomes. At fertilization, the male contributes one of his XY chromosomes, and the female contributes one of her XX chromosomes. The sex of the child is determined by which of the male chromosomes — X or Y — joins with one of the female's X. If it is a Y, a boy will result; if an X, a girl.) In the Ericsson method, the sample with the Y chromosomes is then used for artificial insemination.

Ericsson explains that his method first requires extracting the sperm from the seminal plasma, the fluid that carries the sperm. This is accomplished by separating the fluid in a centrifuge. Then the sperm are placed in pencil-sized tubes of serum albumin, a natural human protein and an essential part of both the seminal plasma in the male and cervical secretions in the female. The sperm are filtered twice through this protein, first to separate the healthy, viable sperm from the less than healthy. Then the healthy sperm are filtered, allowing the faster, lighter Y (male) chromosome-bearing cells to separate from those bearing the X (female) chromosomes.

"We haven't eliminated all the sperm bearing X chromosomes," Dr. Ericsson cautions. "Statistically, however, about 80 percent will carry a Y chromosome, while the other 20 percent will carry the X chromosome." He estimates that by using the separated sperm, the likelihood of having a boy increases from a 50-50 chance to 75-25.

Another factor couples must keep in mind is that artificial insemination doesn't always result in conception, just as every natural sex act during ovulation doesn't always produce a pregnancy. A couple could go through the whole process (at a cost of approximately $125) and conception might not take place.

Because there are still so many uncertainties involved, not all of the centers authorized to use Ericsson's procedure accept couples who have not yet had children. "If you've had two or three girls and still want a boy, then it might be time to think about this," says Feldshuh. "With a first child the important thing is getting pregnant without any difficulty."

Many applicants are discouraged by the logistics of the Ericsson procedure. The first step is for the husband to have a semen analysis to make sure his semen quality is good enough to begin separating sperm bearing X and Y chromosomes. If it is, the woman then must keep precise body-temperature records for several months to determine when ovulation occurs. The artificial insemination must be timed to coincide with ovulation.

There has been a certain amount of controversy over procedures designed to determine sex. Some studies have shown that a higher percentage of parents would choose to have boys rather than girls. Should Ericsson's or any other method of advance sex determination become widely used, it is possible that men might outnumber women to the point that the social order would change dramatically.

That's not considered likely to occur soon and may never be of concern at all — one recent survey found that nearly half of all women oppose selecting the sex of their children in advance.

For more information on centers offering the Ericsson method, write: Gametrics Ltd., 180 Harbor Drive, Dept. FW, Sausalito, Calif. 94965. FW

Farmers' Market Guide

By Marilyn Hansen

August, it's the time of year when home gardens and local farm stands are bursting out with all kinds of fresh vegetables and fruits. Inventive ways of serving them are always welcome.

CURRY DIP

⅓ cup low-fat plain yogurt
1 teaspoon instant minced onion
Few twists freshly ground black pepper
½ teaspoon curry powder
Dash Tabasco

1. In small bowl, stir together mayonnaise, yogurt, onion, pepper, curry powder and Tabasco. Add additional curry powder, if you want it more zesty.
2. Cover; refrigerate. Serve with fresh vegetables. Makes about 1 cup

Editor's Note: An unusual presentation idea is to hollow-out about a cup-size cavity in a whole fresh cauliflower or cabbage head. Place in a basket and fill with the Curry Dip. Surround with clumps of vegetable sticks or dippers, alternating according to color. For example: whole trimmed green beans, cauliflowerets, trimmed whole mushrooms, zucchini sticks, carrot sticks, cherry tomatoes and celery sticks all make excellent go-withs.

HERB BREAD

3 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
3 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
2 teaspoons caraway seeds
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon ground nutmeg
½ teaspoon dried thyme leaves
1 cup skim milk
⅓ cup corn oil
1 egg, lightly beaten

1. Grease 9 × 5 × 3-inch loaf pan. In large bowl, stir together flour, sugar, baking powder, caraway seeds, salt, nutmeg and thyme.
2. In small bowl, stir together milk, corn oil and egg. Add to flour mixture, stirring just until moistened. Turn into prepared pan.
3. Bake in preheated 350°F. oven 55 minutes or until cake tester inserted in center comes out clean. Immediately remove from pan. Cool on wire rack at least 30 minutes. Makes 16 servings

COUNTRY CARROT RELISH

5 cups (2 lbs.) sliced carrots
1 large or 2 medium green peppers, cored, seeded and chopped
1 large or 2 medium onions, chopped
½ cup corn oil
¾ cup sugar
¾ cup vinegar
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon salt or seasoned salt
1 teaspoon coarse black pepper or seasoned pepper
1 can (10¾ ozs.) tomato soup

2. In large bowl, combine peppers, onion, oil, sugar, vinegar, mustard, Worcestershire, salt, pepper and tomato soup; stir.
3. Add carrots; mix well. Cover and refrigerate at least 24 hours before serving. Store in refrigerator. Makes about 2 quarts

Editor's Note: Recipe supplied by Bob Young of the Family Weekly advertising staff, who has a productive and growing farm in New Hampshire.

Family Weekly Brings Them Together

Mom Finds Daughter She Gave Away 27 Years Before

By Gloria Hochman

It was the same bride, the same wedding. But the first woman described above was the bride's adoptive mother, who had raised her from the time she was 6 months old; the other was the bride's "birth mother," who had not seen her daughter in 27 years.

"It was a wedding I never expected to attend," says Mary Kathleen Johnson, the birth mother, who lives in San Antonio. "I couldn't believe it was happening. There I was, sitting in the mother's row, feeling so proud of my beautiful daughter, Nancy. I was a little scared, but everyone treated me royally. It was like a fairy tale come true."

The story had begun back on August 5, 1951, when Mrs. Johnson gave birth to a little girl she knew she could not raise. Mrs. Johnson was unmarried, had little money and felt that "while it was very sad for me to give up my child, it would be the best thing I could do for her." A few months later, the baby, Georgia Kay, had been renamed Nancy and adopted by Beth and Richard Wright, of Wheaton, Md.

"I had a good childhood," says Nancy. "I had been told that I was special because I was adopted, and I was very proud of it. In fact, I would bring friends home who didn't believe I was adopted and urge my mother to tell them. Only once while I was growing up — during my rebellious teens — did I ever talk about searching for my original parents. My mother tried to help me: She called the adoption agency to get information, but my social worker was on vacation. By the time she returned, I had lost interest."

Nancy's interest was renewed in 1972 when she was divorced from her first husband. (Studies show that adoptees often begin searching for their birth parents at times of transition in their lives — births, deaths, divorces, marriages — when they are confronted by turning points.

Also, some time later, Nancy learned that she had developed arthritis. "All my life I had had allergies, and doctors would ask me who in my family had this history," says Nancy. "Of course, I couldn't tell them. Now with the arthritis, I was in the same position. So I decided I had to get busy and search for my background."

Nancy's parents understood her "natural curiosity" and supported her search efforts. Says Mrs. Wright: "When Nancy began to search, inside myself I didn't know quite how I felt. But my husband and I told her to do it with our blessing. After all, she was 28, and if she didn't love us by that time..."

ROACH PRUFE NO.1 IN UNIVERSITY TESTS

In a report just released by the UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, eight commercial and test products that included a broad spectrum of insecticides were tested against a product called "ROACH PRUFE." The report concluded "Our experience under field conditions has shown that when properly applied, the ROACH PRUFE formula provides a degree of cockroach control that is usually superior to all other registered commercial or consumer products."

Alan Brite, who 30 years ago developed and lent his name to what is now a standard household cleaner, Copper Brite, stated: "Because roaches simply do not recognize ROACH PRUFE as an insecticide, they do not try to avoid it by scattering to other parts of your residence as they do with the other insecticides. Plus the electrostatically charged powder sticks to their bodies, which they then carry back into the walls spreading among the other roaches. The result is you kill not only the roaches you see, but also those hiding and multiplying in your walls."

Odorless, Easy To Apply

ROACH PRUFE is odorless, non-evaporating, non-staining and non-flammable. It is simply applied with a teaspoon under kitchen appliances and other hidden areas. It can be used in homes, schools, hospitals, restaurants, plus new construction.

Brite has a problem, however. He says most retailers apparently think it's unprofitable to stock ROACH PRUFE on their shelves when the same customers will come in again and again to buy the other insecticides. So until they do, he's decided to sell his product direct to consumers.

ROACH PRUFE costs $7.95 plus 95¢ for postage for a one-pound can, add 6% tax in California. One can covers up to a 9-room residence, plus one can for basement and garage. To obtain the product, send a check or money order to Copper Brite Inc., Dept. 93 at 5147 West Jefferson Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90016. Copies of the University tests are available by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Copper Brite, Inc., Dept. A.

Mother Finds Daughter

Unfortunately, they had little information that could lead her to her birth mother. Nancy's adoption agency, the Barker Foundation in Washington, D.C., reported that neither of Nancy's parents had been in touch with it. The agency was, however, able to reveal non-identifying information.

"It was great," remembers Nancy. "I learned that my mother was 22 when I was born, that my father was 5 feet 11 inches and had brown hair, that my mother was friendly, had dignity and composure, that I weighed 8 pounds 7 ounces when I was born, that one of my feet turned in and that I am English, Irish, German and Dutch. I cried...just seeing this information meant so much to me. I had never resented being adopted, but there was a big black hole in my background. I didn't know where I came from."

Even with these little bits of information, it didn't seem to Nancy as though the hole was much closer to being filled. She decided to register with ALMA (Adoptees' Liberty Movement Association), a New York organization that matches inquiring adoptees with birth parents. (For information, write ALMA, P.O. Box 154, Dept. FW, Washington Bridge Station, New York, N.Y. 10033.) But she heard nothing, and after more than a year of being registered, she became discouraged again.

Meanwhile, however, Nancy's birth mother, who was married and had a 22-year-old son, had made herself a promise: "I decided that when I was 50 and my daughter was 28, when she was a mature young lady able to decide whether she was interested in me, I would search for her," says Mrs. Johnson. "On August 5, 1979, her 28th birthday, I felt myself getting depressed as I did every year on that date. I told my husband, 'The time has come.'"

A few days later, Mrs. Johnson read a story in FAMILY WEEKLY (in the San Antonio Express-News) called "The Moving Story of Parents Who Give Away Their Children," which mentioned Concerned United Birthparents, Inc. (CUB), an organization that encourages birth parents to "come out of the closet." Mrs. Johnson wrote to CUB and was referred to ALMA.

She registered with ALMA immediately. Three weeks later, she received a telephone call from a young woman who said, "ALMA suggested I call you. I think we have a match. I have reason to believe you are my mother."

Mrs. Johnson and her daughter cried and talked for an hour. They were hungry for information about each other. What kind of life have you had? What do you like to do? What are your parents like? Who is my father? Why did you place me for adoption? Do I have brothers or sisters?

A month later, the women met in Washington. "I guess we were both a little nervous," admits Mrs. Johnson. "We wondered if we would accept each other. But inside we both felt it was going to be O.K. We went right to a motel and talked for eight hours nonstop. I was so proud of her. She was more than anyone could have hoped for — pretty, well educated, a beautiful, warm human being. We had so many years to make up, and we got along in every way. We discovered little things we had in common — we both have a crooked finger on each hand. We both love yams and detest squash."

"It was great," agrees Nancy. "A couple of months later, I went to Texas and met Kathy's husband and my half-brother, Duane, who has always wanted a sister. I also met aunts and uncles and grandparents and Kathy's friends. I felt so good, like a whole person." (Nancy has also now met her birth father.)

In May, Nancy's birth mother came to Washington for her daughter's wedding. She met Nancy's adoptive parents, whom she calls "Nancy's folks."

The Wrights were pleased with how the situation turned out. Mrs. Wright recalls, "In our case, everything has worked out beautifully. Nancy is relieved, and I don't think there is any question that we are her parents. Kathy sat in the first pew with me and my husband when Nancy was married, and it was a very happy time. It was like having a new and nice friend."

Mrs. Johnson agrees: "We got along so well," she says. She told me what a joy Nancy has been to them.

"Yes, I feel sad sometimes because I realize what I have missed by not being with Nancy all of these years, but I still feel I did the best thing for her. I was young and unmarried and I didn't know what the future would bring. Nancy has had a wonderful life with parents who love her. She is well traveled, educated and has a beautiful personality. And I feel that now we have developed a good relationship that we can enjoy for a long time. Every morning I wake up and say, 'Has this wonderful thing really happened?'" FW

MARRY NOW, PAY LATER?

In this mad, mad world, marriages on our continent are breaking up at a frightening rate. One analyst states that out of every ten marriages in the U.S. today, four will end in divorce. No need here to get into a religious debate on divorce. We are all agreed that it is at very least a human tragedy. Even when the separated put on a brave front, there remains a certain anguish over "what might have been."

Getting married is not like buying a car. One can get rid of one car and get another without suffering any soul scars. Not so when one leaves one spouse and goes it alone or takes up with another. Often too, there are children whose suffering at the separation of their parents can affect their whole lives.

Surely, if we have any feeling for the good of society and the happiness of individuals, we ought to do what we can to prevent unwise and premature marriages, and to help prepare those who are planning to marry. As a step in this direction, we are pleased to offer a new pamphlet: "Are You Fit to be Tied?" It has a light touch but a serious message in easy language. Write for your free copy today. No one will call on you.

Olivia Newton-John: Success and the Single Girl

By Isobel Silden

Olivia Newton-John believes in fantasy. And the fact that her brand-new movie, Xanadu, is a total fantasy strikes Olivia as merely a beautiful coincidence.

"I kind of believe a Xanadu-type fantasy can come true," she says. "I believe in destiny and fate, and I'm a romanticist. I'd like to believe that it can happen."

Olivia admits that most of the fantasies she had when she was young have already been fulfilled. She was a smash hit in her first big movie, Grease, with John Travolta. Add to that: 10 gold singles, including her latest, "Magic," and nine gold albums; $12-million to date as her share from Grease; and an equal amount in recording and concert contracts.

In Xanadu, Olivia, 31, co-stars with Gene Kelly, and the result is $10 million worth of happy singing, dancing and expensively beautiful romping.

Though Olivia tends to "think of the worst that can happen" when it comes to big projects like Xanadu, she claims she is basically a happy person: "Most things make me happy: a nice day, good friends, a good meal, music, my animals."

Born in England and raised in Australia, Olivia won a talent contest at the age of 15, for which the prize was a trip to England. She decided to stay to pursue a singing career, and in 1971 released her first single, Bob Dylan's "If Not For You." Her worldwide prominence grew with such songs as "Let Me Be There" and "Have You Never Been Mellow?"

Olivia is a gentle person; yet she has been attacked in the press over the years. One vicious line was, "If white bread could sing, it would sound like Olivia Newton-John."

Doesn't that hurt her? "Yes, it did initially," she says, "and I think the more successful one becomes, the more it happens, because it makes interesting reading. It used to upset me, but now I know not everyone can like you. People might not like my music, but I don't have to prove I'm all right because I know I'm all right," she adds emphatically.

Olivia recently ended a five-year live-in relationship with her manager, Lee Kramer (who was the executive producer of Xanadu), but they remain friends. She refuses to divulge the current status of her love life, though she has been linked with singers Andy Gibb and Cliff Richard.

Her current plans include promoting Xanadu and recording an album, but no concerts because they are very draining for her. What remains unsaid?

"What I would like to see written about me is that I am a normal person. I enjoy what I do. I feel very fortunate. Life as a star doesn't have to be crazy. It's really hard work, but I don't think of it as work. It's a pleasure." FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

High-Risk Mothers

Women with diabetes have an increased chance of giving birth to defective children, but Dr. Lee Rigg, a Washington University obstetrician, has found a way to help diabetic women have normal, healthy babies.

"Diabetes results when the pancreas produces inadequate quantities of insulin to properly regulate blood sugar levels," explains Rigg. "By strictly regulating a woman's insulin supply at the time of conception and for two months after, we may be able to cut down and even eliminate the chances of birth defects."

A number of Dr. Rigg's patients are controlling their disease in a unique way; they wear a small pump that supplies insulin at the level and frequency they need. "Diabetes can have serious effects on a developing fetus, so I recommend that any woman with a family history of the disease consult an obstetrician if she's contemplating pregnancy," says Rigg. "With good management, the chances of complications can be lowered."

Free Energy

Food cooked outdoors always tastes especially good, but a troop of Boy Scouts in New York City are roasting their hot dogs and hamburgers without using any fuel other than the sun. They're taking part in a Solar Energy Workshop, where they're taught how to use the sun to cook food, heat water, generate electricity and tell time.

The Solar Workshops are the brainchild of Jesse Slome, a former Boy Scout who now leads a troop in Queens, N.Y. "It's very important to have kids learn about energy conservation," says Slome, "but we should also make them aware of the energy problems and possibilities of the future." To help explain the solar principles of absorption, refraction and reflection, Slome and his troop have put together a booklet which also includes building instructions for some simple solar-powered cookers and ovens. The pamphlet is available for one dollar by writing to Troop 70 Solar Kit, P.O. Box 1375, Flushing, N.Y. 11352.

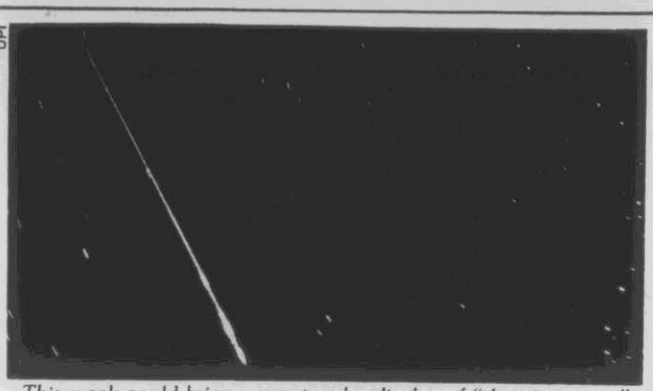
UPI



This week could bring a spectacular display of "shooting stars."

Twinkle, Twinkle, In The Sky

Starry, summer nights are a pleasure to behold, but this week the views promise to be particularly spectacular because the Perseus meteor shower is staging a show.

"The Perseus meteor shower, which originates in the constellation of Perseus, occurs at about the same time every year; this summer, August 10 through 14 are the nights to see it," explains Bob Harrington, a Naval Observatory meteorologist. "Meteors are little pieces of debris that float around the solar system in the paths of comets. When a comet is deteriorating, you get a spectacular shower, but once the comet has broken up, the little pieces of rock remain in the same orbit that the comet followed. When the earth passes through that orbit, you see a meteor shower."

A shower, however, doesn't mean that the sky rains down meteors, warns Harrington. "If you go out around 2 A.M., when the visibility is the best, you'll notice more 'falling stars' than usual, but you won't see them shooting all over the place," he adds.

Divorce Counseling

Marriage counselors often play the role of divorce counselors because they find that one partner in a marriage has already decided that divorce is the only solution. "In the old days, marriage counselors tried to keep the couple together," admits Dr. Katherine Evans, a marriage and divorce counselor at the University of Louisville (Kentucky). "Now we're saying, 'If you've already decided divorce is the answer, let's deal with that so we can diminish feelings of hostility and guilt.'"

The most common fears divorcing couples confront concern readjusting to being single. "How to begin dating again, how to cope with mutual friends and how to overcome fears of loneliness are all problems that both men and women face," says Evans. "And while women have more difficulty with the economics of divorce, men have a harder time coping with loneliness. Having a mediator or someone to talk to about it all does help."

Lifestyles

Driving. In many states teenagers who want to become licensed to drive before age 18 must take a driver-education course. However, according to a Connecticut study reported in the American Journal of Public Health, in communities where driver-education courses have been dropped from high-school curricula, the number of auto accidents involving drivers under 18 is substantially reduced because students have to wait until they come of age to legally drive. In Connecticut, which has one of the lowest serious-crash rates among the states, one in five drivers licensed to drive at the age of 16 will be the driver of a vehicle in a crash that causes injury or more than $400 worth of property damage before his 18th birthday.

Plants. Poachers are stripping the Southwest desert of cacti, reports Science 80 magazine. The growing popularity of desert landscaping, combined with the high price of water, has made cacti very chic plants. In Arizona, half a million dollars worth of rare cacti have been stolen from the desert. Convicted cactus thieves face $1,000 fines and 18-month prison terms, and six full-time "cactus cops" are now patrolling parts of the desert.

*In accordance with U.S. Dept. of Energy Test Procedures, the operating cost was calculated on the basis of 64.3 gallons per day of hot water usage by a family of 4 with 90° F temp. rise, with gas rate of 36.7¢ per therm and electricity rate of 4.97¢ per kilowatt hour (U.S. government national average cost figures). Savings were calculated by subtracting the operating cost of our Power Miser 8 40-gal. gas and 52-gal. electric models from the cost of operating our standard 40-gal. gas and 52-gal. electric water heaters. IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: KING ARTHUR HAS BARED THE TREACHERY OF HIS HALF BROTHER, MORDRED. "HAVE MERCY," THE TRAITOR PLEADS.

"YOU HAVE LIVED TOO LONG ON MY MERCY," ARTHUR THUNDERS. "NOW YOU WILL TASTE MY JUSTICE. GAWAIN, SUMMON THE PEOPLE OF CAMELOT."

BEFORE THE ASSEMBLED THRONG, GAWAIN STRIPS MORDRED OF HIS SWORD AND CUTS THE EMBLEM FROM HIS TUNIC. NOW ARTHUR UNSHEATHES EXCALIBUR AND PLUNGES THE BLADE INTO HIS OWN ARM. THE HEAVENS TREMBLE AT HIS WORDS:
"MORDRED, FALSE KNIGHT AND FALSE BROTHER, I SPIT YOU OUT. FROM THIS REALM I BANISH YOU. YOUR ESTATES AND YOUR WEALTH I GIVE TO THE POOR. MAY YOUR CHILDREN SCORN YOU AND YOUR GRANDCHILDREN CALL YOU JUDAS. BEHOLD, FROM MY ARM SPILLS THE BLOOD WE ONCE SHARED. I AM CLEANSED. BEGONE, VIPER, I KNOW YOU NOT."
