Motorists Face Higher Taxes To Drive

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In addition to the rising costs of fuel and motor vehicles, North Carolina motorists face the likelihood of having to pay more to the state to operate their cars and trucks.

A study commission appointed by Gov. Jim Hunt will present a report next month on the state's transportation needs and financing — and all indications are that its proposals will include some tax increases for drivers of cars, trucks, boats and airplanes.

Hunt has been talking for months about the need for finding new ways to raise money to build and maintain roads. The governor and other state officials have pointed to long-range problems that will result from a drop in the highway fund, which is used for highway construction and maintenance and for operation of the Highway Patrol.

Hunt's press secretary, Gary Pearce, said the governor is not yet committed to a tax increase. "He has said that we need additional sources of revenue, but that doesn't mean that there necessarily will be a tax increase," Pearce said.

The transportation study commission is reported to have decided that the central problem is a drop in revenues for the $500 million annual highway fund while costs of building and maintaining roads have been rising rapidly.

The highway fund grew by about 7 percent a year before the 1973 oil embargo, but the growth rate quickly fell to zero as motorists responded to rising fuel costs by cutting back on driving.

The reason for the decline in collections is that the state's motor-fuel tax is 9.25 cents per gallon. Since it is based on a per-gallon rate rather than a percentage rate, increases in the price of gasoline do not affect the amount collected by the state.

There has been a decrease in fuel-tax collections over the last two years, and revenues from the tax fell by $19 million in the fiscal year that ended June 30.

The drop in revenues from gasoline taxes while construction costs have risen by about 20 percent has raised the fear by some officials that the state will be unable to match federal highway funds, which pay for up to 90 percent of some transportation projects, by 1982.

"It would be penny-wise and pound-foolish in the extreme for us to fail to find the money to match federal funds," said former Gov. Dan Moore, chairman of Hunt's study commission.

"We are either going to find additional revenues to meet minimum highway needs or we are going to see our highway system fall into disrepair, at a potentially tragic cost to future generations of Tar Heels," Moore said.

The commission's finance committee has come up with several proposals — none of which has been endorsed yet by the panel — for increasing collections for the highway fund. They include:

— A new tax of 4 percent on the wholesale price of gasoline. This would be in addition to the current tax of 9.25 cents per gallon. It would provide an estimated $188 million in state revenues for the first year.

— Freeing about $49 million a year for the highway fund by shifting financing of the Highway Patrol from the highway fund to the state general fund. The increased burden on the general fund would be partially offset by removal of the $120 ceiling on the 2 percent sales tax on motor vehicles.

— Raising general-fund revenues for other transportation programs by as much as $6 million.

In addition to those ideas discussed by the commission's finance committee, its steering committee has decided that the full commission should consider some other alternatives, including:

— Raising the state gasoline tax by a flat 5 cents per gallon — Raising the ceiling on the sales tax on motor vehicles from $120 to $300 or raising the tax from 2 percent to 3 percent and setting a $200 ceiling

— Raising the fee for truck license plates from 10 percent to 15 percent.

Deny Reports Of Turnover

Militants Claim Hostages

By KEVIN M. COSTELLO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Islamic militants deny reports that they have turned the American hostages over to the Iranian government, the State Department says its No. 2 man may return to Algeria soon with the next U.S. response to Iran's demands for ending the 13-month standoff.

Spokesman John H. Trattner held out the possibility of a return trip by Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher after two days of talks with Algerian intermediaries ended Thursday apparently without bringing the 52 hostages any closer to freedom.

Christopher flew to Algeria earlier this month to deliver the first U.S. response to Iran's four conditions for releasing the Americans.

Meanwhile, one of the Islamic militants occupying the U.S. Embassy in Tehran denied today news reports that the 49 hostages held in the embassy had been delivered to the Iranian government.

"We have not delivered the hostages to the government yet, and when we do we will issue a statement announcing it," said the militant, who was reached by telephone from Beirut, Lebanon.

Both CBS and NBC quoted foreign sources Thursday night as saying the Iranian government has taken custody of the hostages from the militants who seized them Nov. 4, 1979. Three of the hostages are being held in the Foreign Ministry.

CBS, quoting "usually reliable sources," said most of the hostages have been moved from the U.S. Embassy to Tehran's Evin Prison, which once held some of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's foes.

NBC said the militants at the embassy claim they no longer are involved in the hostage matter.

Iranian government sources denied that a hostage transfer had taken place, and State Department duty officer Sondra McCarty said U.S. officials had "nothing to confirm that the (Iranian) government has taken over responsibility for them."

Trattner said such a move "would be helpful," but he emphasized that there is no sign the hostages will be released in the near future and said he is neither optimistic nor pessimistic at this point.

"We're just beginning a process that we hope will result in the release of the hostages, and at the beginning of a process like that it's not advisable to project any kind of feelings of up or down," he said.

Trattner said the clarification requested by the Iranians was at least more than a demand for a yes-or-no answer to their conditions.

"I would like to steer you away from assuming there is a yes-or-no situation existing here," he said. "All the signs indicate that it is rather the other way."

Trattner said the next step is for the United States to respond to the Iranian demands for clarifications.

Those responses presumably would be contained in any message Christopher might take to Algeria for delivery to the Iranians.

The conditions set by the Iranian Parliament on Nov. 2 were return of the wealth of the late shah, dismissal of U.S. legal claims against Iran, a pledge of U.S. non-interference in Iranian affairs and release of more than $8 billion in frozen Iranian assets in this country.

The Algerians in their talks here had been seeking a clarification of why the United States says it cannot comply fully with the first two demands. The second two — a pledge of non-interference and freeing the assets — are not believed to be in dispute.

The three Algerian intermediaries spent four hours with Christopher and other top American officials on Thursday, following 5½ hours of meetings on Wednesday. The Algerians had no comment for reporters following the talks.

Trattner refused to say whether the gap between the United States and Iran has narrowed, although at one point he said the Iranians have "taken pains to examine our response to their proposals very carefully."

There has been no confirmation of the whereabouts of the hostages since the unsuccessful U.S. rescue attempt in April.

Arabs Inject Palestinians

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Arab states on the Mediterranean called on the 35-nation European Security Conference today to recognize the human rights of Palestinians as a step toward peace in the Middle East.

Tunisia and Morocco, non-voting participants in the conference, lamented that the Palestine Liberation Organization was not allowed to address the meeting, which is reviewing implementation of the 1975 Helsinki accords on human rights and detente.

American officials had said earlier that they would veto an appearance by Yasser Arafat's PLO on grounds that it is a terrorist organization. All 35 nations which are signatories to the Helsinki agreement have veto power over any decisions made here.

The Arab states were called to the conference to give their views on Mediterranean security. Only Algeria pressed for withdrawal of U.S. and Soviet military forces from the area.

"One implicit objective in the elimination of conflicts and crisis is the withdrawal of all fleets and the dismantling of foreign military bases," said chief Algerian delegate Mohammed Yazid.

He noted there had been much discussion of human rights in the first two weeks of the conference and said it was unfair "to champion such rights and ignore the occupied Arab lands in Palestine."

Yazid said Mediterranean countries should be given full participation in the security conference.

Moroccan delegate Matti Jorio, ambassador to Spain, raised the issue of his country's feud with Algeria, although he did not use Algeria's name.

He said Algeria has suffered "five years of aggression perpetuated from a neighboring country."

Algeria supports the Polisario Liberation Front, which is conducting a full-scale guerrilla war in Moroccan-controlled former Spanish Sahara in West Africa.

Egypt's Abou Baker Abdel Chaffar said his country had taken "many practical steps" toward peace in the Mideast and "the restoration of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

But he said Israel should undertake "confidence-building measures to bring about a climate of understanding and coexistence between the Palestinian and Israeli peoples."

He referred to Jerusalem as its capital, saying the action had been "absolutely rejected by the whole of international society."

Soviet delegate Yuri Dubinin, who spoke after the Arabs, did not mention Mediterranean security and criticized the United States for restricting its trade with the Soviet Union.

Civilian Guards Less Costly

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The U.S. Army says it has found that a civilian security firm can guard Oakland Army Base at less cost than the military, and has signed a three-year contract with the concern.

The Army said Wednesday it will pay Stovall's Security Services Inc. $3.5 million to provide security at the base. It would have cost more than $6.5 million if the Army continued to use its 24 civilian guards and 41 military police, officials said.

Reno Woman Held As Driver Of Car That Killed Five, Injured 27

By TOM GARDNER
Associated Press Writer

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A Reno woman was being held on $500,000 bond today for investigation of murder after a blue Lincoln sped down a crowded sidewalk on the city's gambling strip, sending holiday strollers diving for cover and leaving behind five mangled bodies, police said.

Police said 27 people were injured, some of them apparently seriously, in the Thanksgiving Day incident on South Virginia Street.

"She came right at us; she came right at us with a body still on the hood of the car, and she looked like she was looking for somebody else to hit," said a weeping Marty Edmundson of Reno.

The car hit a cab in front of Harold's Club with such force that its windows shattered. The car twisted street signs, crushed newspaper vending boxes and knocked over a fire call box as it careened down an entire city block, according to authorities.

The car carried one woman on its hood the length of the next block, police said.

The dead and injured littered the bloody sidewalk along the glittering strip as rescue workers frantically administered aid.

Casinos along the strip stayed open.

Booked on five counts of open murder and 21 counts of attempted murder was Priscilla J. Ford, 51, of Reno, said police Lt. Richard Kirkland. He said she was arrested without incident after the car she was driving halted at a traffic jam at an intersection.

Police estimated the sidewalk has been crowded by 1,000 people, some of whom dove for cover behind cars and into casinos during the incident.

"She must have been going 80, right smack through everybody," said Patty McClain of Hayward, Calif.

Kirkland said the car was traveling at a "very high rate of speed."

"We're not calling it an accident," said Kirkland, declining to discuss a possible motive. He called the incident "a major criminal case."

"We may never know why," said police Capt. Don McMillip of a possible motive.

Killed were Jolene Cranmer, 20, of Horseheads, N.Y.; Paul A. Nitzel, 73, Sunnyvale, Calif.; Josephine A. Starkey, 50, Sparks; Iva Brittan, 80, Reno; and John Koschella, 60, Reno, authorities said.

Nine people were admitted to Washoe Medical Center for treatment, and 11 were admitted to St. Mary's Hospital, officials said.

"HALF MILE OF DISGRACE"

Seventy-five people in 28 homes live on approximately one-half mile of disgrace — State Road 1733 off Highway 33 South (coming out of Greenville you turn left next to Roberson's Nursery). The preliminary work (grading, culvert installation, etc.) to pave this short distance was done ages ago, but till the paving is done we exist in either mud or dust. We were told some action would be taken in November, but so far we've seen none. H. B.

The November action is the taking of bids in Raleigh, according to C. W. Snell of DOT. He said the contractor for this job, which is part of a much larger district-wide paving project, has until May 15 to complete the work and probably will not get well underway until spring. Other Pitt County projects addressed in the same contract, he said, are the paving of Roads 1563 and 1770 and the resurfacing of 1517 and 1910. Large contracts allow for much taxpayers' money saved, he said, but often cause unwelcome delays while projects are being accumulated.

Soviet Said Convinced New SALT II Needed

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Sen. Charles Percy said he told Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko today that "SALT II as such is dead" and he claimed the Kremlin leadership was convinced there must be a new treaty.

The Illinois Republican, who is expected to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he hoped his talks with the Soviet leaders had convinced them President-elect Ronald Reagan is not a "warmonger."

"We are not going to throw away seven years of negotiations," the senator said, referring to the negotiations that led to the first strategic arms pact.

After four hours of talks with Gromyko in the Kremlin, Percy told reporters: "I had to clarify for Ambassador (sic) Gromyko ... that in my judgment SALT II as such is dead and they must accept that."

He continued, "with Afghanistan, it had no chance of passage whatsoever ... Negotiations that will take place — and I'm sure they will take place — must take place on a realistic framework."

Reagan has said the SALT II arms limitation treaty signed by President Carter and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev in 1979 is "fatally flawed" and that it must be renegotiated.

The Soviets, angered by the U.S. Senate's failure to ratify the treaty, have publicly insisted that it be approved in its original form. However, Americans who met with Soviet officials in recent weeks, said the Soviets seemed open to hearing new American ideas to break the deadlock.

Percy, who conferred for nearly three hours with Brezhnev on Wednesday and for three hours Thursday with Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri Ustinov, said:

"There was no question but that they now have the message. I think they now fully understand that the treaty is unacceptable as it now stands. I do believe that they are now unconvinced after nine hours of discussions at the highest levels that there must be a new treaty."

Percy, who said earlier his visit here was "closely coordinated" with the President-elect and his advisers, described his meeting with Gromyko, like his earlier meetings here, as free give-and-take on the issues.

"I think always Foreign Minister Gromyko is very direct, very blunt. I felt his tone was a businesslike tone. He was down to earth. He presented his points. But he also recognized reality."

Political observers in the United States believed the SALT

II treaty initiated by the two countries in Vienna, had little chance of passage even before the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan last December. The Soviet troops were sent in to help the Moscow-backed Kabul government in its continuing fight against Moslem Afghan insurgents.

After that, the Senate did not consider Salt II.

Percy had said his talks today would include stern U.S. warnings against any interruption in the flow of Persian Gulf oil.

Percy also had said he planned to raise the more general problem of the Iran-Iraq war during today's talks. There was no immediate indication of whether those subjects were discussed.

On Thursday, Percy told reporters: "Any effort by anyone to jeopardize the secure flow of oil from that region would cause us to react decisively — and there should be no misunderstanding or ambiguity about this."

Earlier, he met with Ustinov and with Brezhnev, who had not conferred with a top U.S. leader since five months before the Afghanistan crisis last December.

Percy says he is not on an official mission for Reagan, although he is coordinating his trip closely with the president-elect.

Dear Abby Answer Service For Peace

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a friend (not a close friend — but a talkative one) who telephones me daily, and sometimes two or three times a day.

I am a very busy person and I have no time for chitchat. Her calls are always the same. She talks endlessly about the same people. Boring!

I realize that this woman has nothing to do but talk on the phone, but it is a waste of my time and makes me very nervous.

I have purposely refused to answer my phone at times thinking it was "Mrs. Time-waster," only to learn later that it was an invitation that I would have been delighted to accept.

Please don't tell me to get an unlisted number. She would be the first one to ask for it, and I wouldn't know how to keep from giving it to her without hurting her feelings.

READY FOR A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

DEAR READY: Since you don't want to hurt her feelings, I hope you can afford an answering service or a tape-recording device, because that appears to be your only hope for peace and privacy. It's not cheap, but it's cheaper than a nervous breakdown.

DEAR ABBY: A reader signed STUFFED wrote to say that after a satisfying meal, in order to be more comfortable, he would unbutton the top button of his trousers. This embarrassed his wife. You suggested "bigger trousers or smaller portions."

There's another solution dreamed up by a New York tailor named Wetzel. (He makes my clothes; that's where I got this story.)

It seems that Wetzel also made clothes for a Mr. G. who loved to eat. Mr. G. confided to Wetzel that after a filling meal he would slip down his zipper a bit. His wife thought this crude, so Wetzel solved the problem by putting two zippers in all of Mr. G.'s trousers — one in front and one in back — so Mr. G. could reach around under his jacket and pull down the rear zipper without being noticed!

N.Y. ADMIRER

DEAR ADMIRER: I wonder how many tailors will read this and try the "Wetzel maneuver?" Nu?

Cooking Is Fun

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: Here is my version of the French butter cream I learned to make in one of the Richard Grausman cooking classes I recently attended in New York City. I used it to fill and frost a high sponge cake (cut in layers) for a special dinner party. Then I pressed chopped, toasted filberts over the frosting on the sides of the cake. An ordinary cake triumphed! — SALLY BARNES

DEAR SALLY: Thanks so much for your recipe. Because Richard Grausman is the U.S. representative of the Cordon Bleu school in Paris I know many readers of this column will be delighted with your authentic contribution. — C.B.

SALLY BARNES' FRENCH BUTTER CREAM
1/4 cup sugar
9 tablespoons water
5 egg yolks
1 1/2 tablespoons

(two 1-pound sticks less 1 tablespoon) butter, softened
6 squares (6 ounces) semi-sweet chocolate
2 generous tablespoons instant coffee dissolved in 2 tablespoons boiling water

Put the sugar and 6 tablespoons of the water in a heavy saucepan. Over medium heat, cook mixture, stirring from time to time and testing temperature of syrup until it reaches the soft ball stage — between 234 and 239 degrees on a candy thermometer. Heat rises slowly to about 220 degrees, then rises quickly. So watch carefully and test. Remove from heat immediately.

While sugar is cooking, melt chocolate with the remaining 3 tablespoons of water in another pan over low heat. When chocolate is melted, remove from heat and set aside.

With an electric beater, begin beating egg yolks (preferably in a metal bowl) and very slowly add the cooked sugar syrup to the yolks, avoiding pouring the syrup directly on the beaters.

Continue beating until mixture is thick, rather fluffy and cool. Add softened butter, a little at a time, and mix well.

Pour about 1-3rd of this butter cream into another bowl; reserve. To the remaining 2-3rds butter cream, add the melted chocolate and mix thoroughly. Set aside.

Add dissolved instant coffee to the reserved butter cream.

To use the French Butter Cream: With a serrated bread knife, slice a high sponge cake (baked in a 9-inch tube pan) into 3 equal layers. Place bottom layer on a cake plate and spread with a generous layer of chocolate butter cream. Place a second layer atop the first and repeat, this time frosting with mocha cream. Then add the final layer, crusty side up, and adjust so the cake is level on top. Spread chocolate butter cream on sides and top. Fill a pastry bag 2-3rds full of mocha cream; using a star tube, pipe rosettes over the top of the cake to decorate.

Life As It's Lived

Begin With The 'Glad Game', And Go Downhill

By GAIL MICHAELS
I wish that I had never read "Pollyanna" to Meg. I chose this book because I thought Pollyanna's "glad game" might cure Meg's growing tendency to complain. To be sure, Meg was inspired by Pollyanna's effort to find something good in every catastrophe; unfortunately, she was so inspired that she expected me to play the game, too.

It's one thing to have your daughter tell you that she is ever so slimy, the green beans on her plate are still better than slugs. But it's another thing altogether when she tells you that you ought to be glad that she has a stomach virus instead of scarlet fever.

"Of course I'm happy that you're not very sick," I told Meg when she told me this. "But I can't help being upset that our medical expenses are so high this month."

"Meg has a point," Phillip said. "After all, there's no use crying over spilled milk."

"That's easy for you to say. You didn't have to spend your birthday money at the pharmacy today. And you don't have to look forward to driving two sick kids to Durham tomorrow so that your daughter can have a root canal on a fractured baby tooth."

Meg was persistent. "But Mommy, I know you can find something to be glad about."

"Okay, I'm glad that we didn't turn in our church pledge card before we found out that you had to have this dental work."

Phillip glared at me. "I don't think that's the attitude the glad game is supposed to foster."

"I can't help it. I'd prefer a bit part in "Alligator" to this pilgrimage tomorrow."

Someone with a whole lot of influence must have overheard me because the trip to Durham surpassed all my wildest dreams. The baby's ear infection kept us both up for most of the night so I began the day in third gear. Meg had wet the bed for the first time in years so I had to use my coffee time to strip the sheets and bathe her.

From there the day went downhill. Meg's extremely vocal hunger pains from the liquid diet she had been on for the past two days kept me awake during the drive to the dentist's. On the way back even her moans and the baby's screams weren't strong enough. When I found myself driving down the wrong side of a four-lane highway, I decided that she could use a little solid food and I could use a lot of caffeine.

But Murphy had not yet released me from the death grip of his Law. I knocked over my coffee while cleaning up Meg's milk.

I had barely finished wringing out my new dress when a lady walked into the restaurant and asked me, "Is that your green station wagon? You left the lights on." She pointed toward my car. "Oh never mind. They just went out."

Meg could tell the warning signs. "There's no use crying over split coffee," she said anxiously. "Be glad, Mommy."

"Oh Lord," I said as the tears hit the bottom of my cup. "I'm glad this day is almost over."

Poland Strike Alert Cancelled As Union Heeds Walesa Appeal

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's largest independent trade union called off a strike readiness alert at Warsaw-area plants today after workers at a steel mill heeded an appeal by union leader Lech Walesa and ended their strike.

Walesa, clearly upset over the labor movement's frequent use of strikes and their use in support of political demands, told a rally of 10,000 workers that "rockets and tanks" could be the response to a serious confrontation in this Soviet bloc nation.

The end of the half-day strike at Huta Warszawa and cancellation of the strike alert appeared to have ended a labor crisis that erupted over the arrest of a union worker and once threatened to trigger a general strike around Warsaw.

Workers at Huta Warszawa began returning to their jobs at 6 a.m., some three hours after they agreed to end the strike during a series of meetings at the plant and deliberations with senior government officials.

Walesa, who led the August strikes along the Polish coast in which the independent labor movement was born, flew to Warsaw from Gdansk to take part in deliberations at the plant.

"The situation now is very tense," he told workers assembled after midnight in the mill auditorium. "And I feel awkward for giving promises to the government that we will fight only for the union. Some of the demands are now political."

Walesa reminded workers that the government could send in troops or police to operate factories and rail service in an emergency.

He said the response to a serious confrontation might be "rockets and tanks. If we have some power, let's not risk it. This is a step toward confrontation."

Walesa said the union should spend its time building an organization "and prepare for the great battles to come."

But he pledged to support the workers at Huta Warszawa if they decided to continue their strike.

Solidarity strikes at six other Warsaw plants and plans for walkouts in other factories were called off Thursday when the government released two men arrested in connection with a classified government document found by police in the union's Warsaw office.

The union called off the general strike an hour before it was to have begun after police freed the two. But charges against them were not dropped, and they still face prosecution.

The strike had continued at the Huta Warszawa steel plant to back up the union's demands for an investigation of police actions during labor unrest in 1970 and 1976, limits on the budgets of the police and the state prosecutor and the release of four men charged with "anti-socialist" crimes.

Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Jagielski told the president of Solidarity's Warsaw chapter, Zbigniew Bujak, he would meet union officials next week. But he refused their request to travel to the Huta Warszawa plant to sign such a commitment. He also refused to give prior guarantees on the scope of the talks.

The steel workers agreed to resume work after Walesa and other Solidarity officials told them they were satisfied the government would honor a commitment to negotiate.

Walesa leads a moderate faction that believes the independent labor movement should consolidate its gains and concentrate on setting up a working organization. More militant leaders want to keep pressing the government without any letup on both economic and political issues.

East Germany and Czechoslovakia continue to criticize the Polish labor movement almost daily, and U.S. State Department spokesman John Trattner made reference Thursday to Soviet troops on the Polish border being in a "state of readiness."

ECU Professor Receives Award

Dr. Lala Carr Steelman, professor of history at East Carolina University, has won the 1980 R.D.W. Connor award of the Historical Society of North Carolina for the best article published in the N.C. Historical Review.

Dr. Steelman's article, "The Role of Elias Carr in the North Carolina Farmer's Alliance," appeared in the April, 1980, issue.

Another article by the ECU historian, "The Life-Style of an Eastern North Carolina Planter: Elias Carr of Bracebridge Hall," was published in the January, 1980, issue of the N.C. Historical Review.

Dr. Steelman, who is no relation of the subject of her research and articles, is writing a biography of Elias Carr and also preparing Carr's papers for publication. Lady Diana Won't Fuel Speculation

LONDON (AP) — Lady Diana Spencer, the latest girlfriend of Britain's Prince Charles, was quoted today as saying she would like to get married if the right man comes along.

But she reportedly refused to confirm or deny excited speculation in Britain's tabloid press that the prince had proposed to her.

A reporter for Britain's domestic Press Association chased down Lady Diana, 19, at the London kindergarten where she works and quoted her as saying: "I'd like to marry soon. What woman doesn't want to marry eventually?"

The news agency reported that Lady Diana said, "I don't think 19 is too young. It depends on the person." Charles, eldest son of Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip, turned 32 on Nov. 14.

Lady Diana, wearing a paint-spattered smock, "giggled nervously" when asked if the heir to the British throne had proposed to her, the agency said.

"I can't say yes or no to that," she was quoted as saying. "I can't confirm or deny it."

She did deny a report that she had spent a night with the prince on the royal train.

Her denial was carried by both the Press Association and the tabloid Daily Star, which quoted her as saying, "I am not a liar. I have never been on that train. I have never even been near it."

The Press Association quoted Lady Diana's roommate as saying the allegations about the royal train were "an absolute load of rubbish."

Secretary Anne Bolton, 20, said, "Lady Diana was horrified by the allegations and we were shocked."

Propose To Fine Utility

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has proposed a $225,000 fine against the Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. of Syracuse, N.Y., for allegedly claiming falsely that its Nine Mile Point nuclear plant complied with a radiation-measurement requirement.

Victor Stello, NRC director of inspection and enforcement, said Wednesday the NRC had required all operating nuclear plants to install by Jan. 31, 1980, equipment for measuring high releases of radioactivity. The requirement was triggered by the Three Mile Island nuclear accident in March 1979.

Stello said Niagara Mohawk assured the NRC on Jan. 22, 1980, that it had met this requirement, but a later NRC inspection found that the equipment was not actually installed. It was not installed, Stello said, until October 1980, eight months past the deadline.

In addition, the NRC ordered Niagara Mohawk to remove from its nuclear affairs section a former site superintendent at the plant, and ordered the company to explain why an executive vice president should not be transferred out of nuclear affairs.

Stello's order required Niagara Mohawk to respond by next Jan. 5.

The company, and the individuals involved, have the right to request a public hearing, and the company also may protest the proposed fine.

There was no comment from the company.

Other noted performers on the show include Ann Reinking, Eva Evdokimova and Sandman Sims.

The special was taped at Merriweather Post Pavilion in Maryland this past summer.

Lost, 250 Miles Away, Is Home

LONDON (AP) — A ginger tomcat named Samson has turned up at his home in London after being lost 250 miles away in Pembrokeshire, South Wales, two years ago.

Owner Margaret Adams of London's East End said Thursday she advertised in newspapers for Samson without success after he disappeared during a vacation.

"He was sitting on the garden wall, very bedraggled and very hungry," she said.

Depend on Higher Costs

Understanding the pricing of electricity challenges accountants and electrical engineers these days.

Greenville Utilities Director Charles Horne questioned a Virginia Electric and Power Co. contention that there would be a five percent reduction in rates to municipal customers (Greenville Utilities is a customer of Vepco).

Horne says the basic cost of power will increase by 9.8 percent. The fuel adjustment charge is to increase some 8 percent, Horne says. The Vepco claim is based on the idea that the North Anna No. 2 nuclear unit being in service will mean only a ten percent increase rather than the projected 15 percent; hence the claimed five percent savings, or so says Horne.

If a rate adjustment is allowed, power costs will increase ten percent in January, Horne said.

ElectriCities attorneys have intervened in the proceedings.

Confused? Well depend on the cost of electricity to continue to increase. The increases are probably going to be there for a long time at least until some more economical way to produce electricity is developed.

Housing Dollars Scarce

By GLENN RITT
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The already-battered housing industry appears on the verge of yet another crunch, the result of ever-rising mortgage rates. And there is mounting concern that help is far, far away as economic strategies shift to efforts to "reindustrialize" America.

While homebuyers and builders may be frustrated and frazzled, the problems of high interest rates and unaffordable houses appear to have a lower priority in official Washington than the shaky future of troubled industries, the nation's waning productivity and costly regulations.

The battle for the middle is already underway, and 1982 will tell whether either or both parties are reaching down to the local level to win the footsoldiers who will determine the outcome of future battles.

Retooling American industry may be in conflict with housing for the time being," says Louis H. Nevins, chief Washington lobbyist for the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks. "Housing will continue having a tough time competing for limited capital."

But Nevins adds: "It's not necessarily the wrong decision to go the industrial route."

And Anthony Downs, a housing economist at the Brookings Institution, says the tough times for housing may not be as bad as some distressed builders and lenders claim.

Downs suggests that the housing industry for years has attracted more capital than it should, crowding out investment in more productive areas.

He argues that much of the money channeled into housing has fed speculation, which in turn dramatically inflated home prices.

"It is not that the United States is building too much housing," he says. "The point is that we are providing too much money to finance housing."

The tax advantages of home ownership are overwhelming, he says, particularly compared with the benefits for investing in stocks and bonds.

A person can sell a house and avoid a huge capital gains tax by acquiring another residence. This option is not open to someone investing in a small business, even though these firms provide most of the nation's innovation and jobs, Downs points out.

He calculates that between 1966 and 1971, 16 percent of all capital raised by non-financial sectors went into housing. By 1977, the amount jumped to 28.5 percent.

Pendulum Of 1982

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — What happens in 1982 general elections will tell the tale about Republicans in North Carolina.

The pendulum swing in politics is back to the right, and as the recognized conservative party, Republicans should be the beneficiaries of that direction.

Will they be in North Carolina? Even now, with this year's election still fresh in the minds of most, political activists and analysts are looking ahead to see what it will mean in future elections.

In 1982 there will be elections for the North Carolina General Assembly, the U.S. House of Representatives, and a host of county and municipal governing boards.

Republicans gained 14 seats in the State Legislature, now numbering 10 in the Senate and 24 in the House of Representatives.

In the U.S. Congress, the count is now seven Democrats and four Republicans. There were only two Republicans.

Will Republicans take advantage of the conservative sweep to build local organization and field good candidates for offices across the board?

The Club Traditionally, the Republican Party has aimed at the White House and enjoyed the patronage and appointment fallout resulting in North Carolina, it has often seemed that the party didn't want to expand, didn't want to sign up new members, didn't want "outsiders" enjoying membership in "the club."

Tar Heels, registering to vote, complied without complaint. Even longtime Republican activists who moved here from other parts of the nation quickly determined that if they wanted to make their vote count in local and state elections and primaries, they would have to switch to the Democratic Party.

Even former Gov. James E. Holshouser, first Republican elected governor in this century (1972) admitted in candid moments that nobody was as surprised as the morning after election. He was unprepared. And one of his biggest problems proved to be the lack of qualified, willing Republicans to fill hundreds of state jobs, both fulltime and on boards and commissions.

Will North Carolina Republicans, badly fragmented within their own ranks, unhappy with the domination of party affairs by the Congressional Club which was established to provide a home for dissatisfied Democrats but has emerged as the "kingmaker," and struggling for identity and leadership, be able to pull itself together and field a slate of candidates two years hence which takes advantage of the conservative trend?

Or will Democrats, already well organized and to the left to hold the affection of disenfranchised liberals. "If anything, the party will move slightly to the right," Hunt feels.

What Democrats must do is seek solutions "appropriate to the times," and that means reducing inflation, balancing governmental budgets, providing jobs, and so on, Hunt says. That sounds a great deal like what the Republicans are saying, too.

What the Democrats don't need are "grandiose schemes" involving big government experiments which are now discredited, Hunt feels. What people want is government which works, which is moderate, which is effective.

The battle for the middle is already underway, and 1982 will tell whether either or both parties are reaching down to the local level to win the footsoldiers who will determine the outcome of future battles.

Other Editors Say Their Opportunity

(Richmond Times-Dispatch)

Senate Republicans have set a good example by agreeing in principle to cut the Senate operating budget by at least 10 percent across the board next year when they become the majority party in that chamber.

Their action ought to be made a challenge to the housekeeping efficiency of Democratic House Speaker Tip O'Neill and his lieutenants. During the past three decades, Congress itself has become a swollen bureaucracy.

According to a new study by the American Enterprise Institute, congressional expenditure of time, money and effort has increased enormously in the past 30 years.

One reason cited by AEI for this ballooning of business in Congress is the tremendous increase in the size of congressional staffs. Senators now have six times as many aides on their personal staff as they had in 1947, while the personal staffs of House members have increased fivefold.

Staffs of major committees have become bureaucratic fiefdoms unto themselves, with a tendency to make work for themselves in order to increase, or at least maintain, their size and influence.

A Congressional Quarterly study last year noted that Congress often busies itself to a standstill. In no fewer than 11,000 instances during 1977-78, individual members of the House were scheduled to attend two or more committee or subcommittee meetings at the same time!

The practice of "joint referral" — having a bill considered simultaneously by two or more committees — has grown popular; but, as Congressional Quarterly noted, joint referral in the House results in a fivefold increase in debate on a given piece of legislation while cutting in half the bill's chance of ever reaching the chamber floor.

Rep. James M. Collins, a conservative Republican from Texas, has complained that committee staffs rather than members of Congress are now determining legislative priorities. "Like the bureaucracy that surrounds us," he said, "committees have become pervasive in their influence."

Senate Republicans have a golden opportunity to reduce the bureaucratic bloat within their own institution. They ought to cut Senate spending by more than the proposed 10 percent if possible. Even more ambitiously, they ought to apply the principles of "zero-based budgeting" and "sunset" legislation to the bureaucracy that they will be directly controlling.

Strength For Today

HELP ONE ANOTHER

As we all know, the erosion of beaches along the extensive coastlines of our country has become a great national problem. Sometimes individual owners have tried to protect their own beaches by building little jetties or breakwaters. But it has been discovered that no one who tries to protect only his own beachfront ever gets much accomplished. The man interested in saving only his own beach ends up by not saving it at all. People have to combine in order to help save one another's beaches.

Jesus once said that whoever tried to save his own life would lose it, but that whoever would lose his life for his (Christ's) sake and for the sake of the gospel would save it. Whoever works just for himself comes out in the end with nothing. Whoever goes further and joins the great project of God for human betterment which we call Christianity, finds every satisfaction he is looking for. — Elisha Douglass

Seek Avoid Age Image

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — "Aren't we a very old team?" Winston Churchill asked Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain on Sept. 2, 1939, surveying Chamberlain's proposed war Cabinet. It is a question President-elect Reagan also should ponder as he begins Cabinet-making in earnest back home in California.

In fact, he should broaden the question: Aren't we in danger of becoming a very old, very gray and very establishment team of businessmen with reputations as managers but not as men of ideas? Before Reagan himself has made a single Cabinet decision, the most probable and important selections are arousing anxiety among thoughtful Reagan supporters.

The antidote happens to be very old himself but is anything but gray, is not establishment, not a businessman, not a manager and is surely filled with ideas: Ronald Wilson Reagan. Just as Reagan is the best hope for radical economic and national security policies, he is also the principal obstacle to an old gray Cabinet.

That Cabinet is taking shape in leaks from senior Reagan aides. New York lawyer William Casey, 67, at CIA and Los Angeles lawyer William French Smith, 63, at the Justice Department are considered all but certain. Those twin executives from the Bechtel Corp., Casper Weinberger, 63, and George Shultz, 60, are prime possibilities to be named somewhere — State Department, Pentagon or Office of Management and Budget (OMB).

Adding William Simon, at 54 neither old nor gray, only slightly modifies the gerontocracy of this presumptive Cabinet. Along with Reagan, soon to be 70, its average age is almost 63. That approaches the proposed Chamberlain war Cabinet's average age of 64 ("Only one year short of the old age pension!" the then 65-year-old Churchill exclaimed).

But age is not the most serious problem. Some insiders call it an "embarrassment" to make an attorney general out of Smith, described by one Reagan adviser as "a society lawyer." Old Reaganites blame him, as Reagan's family lawyer, for Reagan's politically embarrassing zero income tax payments of the past. Whether such criticism is well-founded, nobody has accused Smith of serious thought about government.

Nor does anyone believe that Casey, a brilliant World War II manager of espionage operations, has an agenda for rehabilitating today's CIA. Although Weinberger may return to his Nixon administration post at OMB, his transition paper on the budget is considered by experts to be 10 years out of date.

The widely-respected Shultz is so much an establishment conformist that even some of his admirers believe he would be an effective secretary of state only in an administration peppered with younger, more innovative personalities. Otherwise, he might take on the coloration of his older, grayer colleagues.

Why are the names emerging from Reagan's kitchen cabinet so lacking in youth, dynamism and imagination? Because the advisers, elder establishmentarians from the world of business, seek above all managerial ability.

Past Republican administrations, like Jimmy Carter's, have been seduced by the notion that managerial ability is the principal governmental skill. Lawyer-banker Laurence H. Silberman, a trenchant Republican analyst of government, has written that ideology and program are far more important. Without ideology, Silberman wrote in 1978, "we see the now familiar picture of President Carter pondering each new question as if it were an isolated ad hoc engineering problem."

That is why the abrasive, controversial Simon is welcome relief to Reagan

Gov. Jim Hunt signals what is coming when he says that he doesn't see the Democratic Party moving further

The Buck Has Finally Stopped

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — After more than a decade of failing to face up to inflation, Americans may have arrived at a critical turning point. And it isn't so much a result of admonitions as of recognizing reality.

The reality is that the buck has stopped.

It now appears that large numbers of people are learning, bitterly perhaps, the difference between the illusion of economic progress and the reality of an economy stalled in its tracks and even slipping back.

Early in the life of inflation it can provide many advantages to certain groups: companies can report higher sales without selling more goods, for example, and workers may feel flush with cash.

The borrower too feels power over events, knowing that repayments are made in cheaper dollars. And homeowners may become ecstatic as they see the value of their tract houses rising as fast as the price of gold.

The warnings begin, but aren't heeded. Everyone knows that inflation might be bad for the country, but the correction begins with the other guy. Meanwhile, inflation remains something to exploit, if you can.

The establishment admonitions grow harsh. Just a few days ago Harold Williams, Securities and Exchange Commission head, urged patriotic Americans to commit a once "un-American" act: cut living standards.

The financial evangelists then arise, preaching repentance before the day of judgment, which we are told will mean chaos in the streets and a collapse of most prices except those of precious metals and food.

And the next stage? Well, it seems, it might already be here. All the warnings and threats might have been ignored, but there is no ignoring the evidence now presented to Americans: a decline in real earnings.

With inflation subtracted, the Labor Department announced, the earnings of families with at least one wage earner fell 4.2 percent during the past year. That dictates a lower living standard.

Taxes, meanwhile, have been rising, since the Internal Revenue Service insists illusion is reality. It persists in elevating taxpayers into higher tax brackets — and taxing them on what they never earned.

The Tax Foundation has the figures. "U.S. median family income is higher than ever — $19,950 in 1980, compared to $9,750 a decade ago," it states. And then adds:

"However, after-tax income measured in constant 1970 dollars is lower than it was in any year of the last decade — $7,976 in 1980 compared to $8,412 in 1970."

Interest rates are rising too, and doing so with such speed that all but the most essential loans are being ruled out by would-be borrowers or would-be lenders. It is becoming impossible to get money with which to live beyond your income. And when possible, it is unprofitable.

Because it is almost always in demand, the house has been considered the best hedge against inflation, but what good is that for someone who must sell or raise cash? Sales are now blocked every day because those who want to buy cannot afford the terms or the downpayment.

Because of such factors, inflation's damage now seems to outweigh the benefits. And as it worsens, the number that are hurt rises and the number of beneficiaries shrinks.

Such evidence against inflation is overwhelming, and probably had as much to do with the election of a more conservative political leadership as any one issue.

Americans, it appears, have a huge capacity for ignoring admonitions and threats, but they can read and heed as well as anyone the stark evidence of that bottom line. It's where the buck has stopped.

Iraq Prepares For Long War; Abadan Battle Flares

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraq, indicating it expects a long war, has almost completed building a 57-mile-long wall in Iran's oil-rich Khuzistan Province to protect Iraqi forces against winter floods and possible attempts by Iran to "drown" the invaders by letting loose irrigation dams, an Iraqi newspaper said today.

Both sides reported their troops, tanks and helicopter gunships engaged around the Iranian refining city of Abadan, at the southern end of the battlefield on the Shatt al-Arab estuary, and the highway town of Susangerd, 85 miles to the north.

Meanwhile, a Baghdad military communique claimed Iraqi troops beat back an Iranian counterattack in the highlands of Gilan Gharb in the northern sector of the 300-mile-long war zone, leaving 70 Iranian troops dead.

Pars, Iran's official news agency, said Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr visited Abadan under enemy fire overnight to underscore his country's claim that a five-week-old Iraqi siege had been cracked. Pars said Bani-Sadr, who is commander-in-chief of Iran's armed forces, also visited the nearby port city of Khorramshahr, whose western sector is said to be in Iraqi hands.

According to Pars, Bani-Sadr, accompanied by his defense minister and army chief of staff, drove along the 10-mile Khorramshahr-Abadan highway recently recaptured from Iraq, crossed the Bahmanshir river by boat for a daring arrival in Abadan and then took a motorcycle ride into frontline bunkers a few yards from enemy forward lines, overruling objections by aides. He then set out for a return trip to his secret frontline headquarters, Pars said.

The Iraqi government-controlled, English-language, Baghdad Observer also quoted Iraqi engineering corps officers as saying other embankments were under construction to protect the roads and communication routes of the Iraqi forces from being inundated by flooding from the Karun and Karkheh Rivers.

The Karun runs by the port of Khorramshahr, which the Iraqis seized last month, and the Karkheh by Susangerd, about 75 miles to the north, which both sides have been fighting for the last two weeks.

Both Iran and Iraq reported attacking each other's positions Thursday near Abadan and Susangerd, 35 miles northwest of Ahwaz, the Khuzistan capital.

Iran claimed it killed 440 Iraqis near Susangerd and Abadan and that its jets destroyed ammunition dumps, power stations, a radar antenna and a factory in raids on northern Iraq.

Iran also said its forces killed 30 Iraqis in the Gilan Gharb area, at the northern end of the invasion front in the foothills of the Zagros Mountains overlooking highway routes west to the Iraqi capital of Baghdad.

Iraq reported killing 76 Iraqis and suffering 16 dead along its 300-mile invasion front.

Iraq invaded Sept. 22 aiming to gain sovereignty over the Iranian east side of the Shatt al-Arab estuary, which divides the two nations at the southern end of the front and is Iraq's only waterway to the Persian Gulf.

Swedish Socialist leader Olof Palme, special envoy of U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, said he got the two sides to agree to let 63 stranded foreign ships out of the waterway under Red Cross flags.

But he said on returning to Stockholm Thursday, "Neither side showed any willingness to make peace and took very tough bargaining positions."

"Public opinion is not responsive in either of the nations and consequently the political conditions for peace are not particularly good."

"But the situation might change overnight. Both sides fear a head-on collision between the superpowers in the strategically and economically important area."

"But even more they fear a deal between the superpowers, dividing the area between themselves and this might bring about a change in their attitude."

Today was the 391st day in captivity for the 52 American hostages in Iran, and the State Department said its No. 2 man, Warren Christopher, may return to Algeria soon with the next U.S. response to Iran's demands for ending the crisis.

U.S. officials just ended talks with Algerian envoys, who reportedly asked for clarifications of America's position on Iran's demands for return of the wealth of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, cancellation of U.S. lawsuits against Iran and release of $8 billion in Iranian assets frozen in U.S. banks.

Meanwhile, one of the militants occupying the U.S. Embassy in Tehran today denied reports the hostages were transferred to Iranian government custody, as called for by Iran's Parliament when it announced the ransom terms Nov. 2.

Special Thanks Marked 104-Year-Old's Thursday

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — Willie Monroe paused Thursday — which he says was his 104th Thanksgiving — to give a special thanks: "Freedom is God's finest gift. I thank God that I'm free and I was born free."

Monroe, who says that as a small child he lived on a South Carolina plantation, missed education as a youth but is now making up for it.

For the last four years, he has enrolled for classes offered by the Lee County Council on Aging at Central Carolina Technical College.

His teacher, Sarah Wilson, says Monroe rarely misses a day of school.

"He is quiet but has become more outgoing recently," she said. "He's slowed down physically in the past year, but he's still mentally alert. He is well versed in politics and a perfectionist" in his work at the school.

Monroe claims to have been born in March 1876, or 13 years after Abraham Lincoln issued his Emancipation Proclamation.

The proclamation had changed little in their lives, Monroe says.

"We were still slaves. We used to sleep in a hay loft and eat out of a wooden trough just like a hog. Had to. Then I come here to North Carolina," Monroe said.

"I was about 11 years old. I reckon, when I come here with Mr. John White. A mighty fine man. We had wooden cups and he treated us real good."

Monroe worked on White's farm, the only kind of employment he has known.

No records exist proving his age, but the Lee County Council on Aging last year honored Monroe for living to the age of 103. However, the Social Security Administration lists Monroe's birthday as Aug. 16, 1893.

Richard Monroe, 52, said the Social Security birthdate for his father was established arbitrarily to allow the elder Monroe to receive benefit checks.

"He knows he was born on March 16, and it had to be about 1876 because his baby brother, Raymond, just died last summer, and he was 88," Richard Monroe said.

And on top of that, Monroe says he knows better than to lie.

'Replays' In Reagan's Day

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan says he was doing instant replays as a radio sportscaster long before the days of television.

Reagan was a sports announcer from 1932 to 1937 and the replay he described occurred sometime during that period when he was calling the Drake Relays, a major track and field event. Reagan said in a taped interview broadcast by CBS on Thursday.

"All day, I'd been talking about the quarter-mile, the 440; this was going to be the biggest event," Reagan said.

"Just between events, a public relations man brought the president of Drake University into the broadcasting booth to say a few words to the audience, and I sat there and listened to him speak into our microphone while I watched the quarter-mile event I'd been talking about all day go by," Reagan said.

"And when he signed off... I just couldn't tell the audience it was all over, so I just said, 'We're just in time for that event I've been telling you about.'"

"And of course I got my watch and I knew that it had to take about 48 seconds and I took them off and around the track and brought them in 1, 2, 3 with no problem at all in about the required time."

"But there was no roar from the crowd," Reagan said, "so I explained that that was because they were stunned by the sheer drama."

"Our current huge investment in housing finance is often justified by references to demographic trends," such as a growing adult population, Downs says.

But, he asks, "Do people need as much housing as they are buying?"

In 1979, for example, 22 percent of all home purchases were made by single people, and many of these were large enough for families of four.

Inevitably, the housing crunch and reindustrialization are closely linked, experts agree.

Unless America's industries can be revitalized, workers won't have the jobs to afford housing, says Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, incoming chairman of the Senate Banking Committee.

"But in the meantime," Nevins says, "housing seems 'be the loser.'"

Need Parents In Transplant

RICHMOND, Calif. (AP) — A Mexican family is getting bone marrow tests to see if they can save an ailing teen-ager who may be their own — but who was brought up by another family after a hospital crib mix-up 13 years ago.

It wasn't until Efrén de Loa developed aplastic anemia — in which bone marrow stops producing blood cells — that doctors found he was not related to the family that raised him.

The de Loas and their seven other children were being tested as possible marrow donors when tissue studies revealed the youth was not biologically part of the family. Without a transplant, the boy has only a 15 percent chance of survival.

Through hospital workers and news reports, the 13-year-old's apparent biological family was located in Mexicali, Mexico, where de Loa was born.

The tests on Mauricio Montes, his wife, Margarita, and their family were being completed this week at the University of California at Los Angeles to confirm their biological relation.

If they are related, a transplant operation could take place next month and increase the youth's chance supporters who worry about an old gray Cabinet. Whatever the complaints about his temperament, Bill Simon lives in the world of ideas. What's more, he is willing to change them, currently showing much more inclination toward radical supply-side economic notions.

Republicans originally attracted to Reagan as a force for change also want at least one young, clearly innovative figure in an important Cabinet post. Thirty-four-year-old Rep. David Stockman of Michigan carries that hope in an intensifying push for him as OMB director. Stockman has informed Reagan transition agents he has no interest in a token position, such as secretary of energy.

The conventional wisdom doubts Reagan would stray far from the advice of his old friends. While insisting on massive tax cuts and massive defense spending against the counsels of caution, it might be too much for Reagan to cast a gimlet eye on eminently-respectable recommendations from his kitchen cabinet.

But unlike those retired business tycoons, Ronald Reagan has never met a payroll. For the last 20 years, he has dealt with ideas — showing startling receptivity to new concepts. He might prefer a few younger colleagues with similar intellectual boldness by his side.

Powerhouse Province Of Alberta Seen Prospering

By CHARLES J. HANLEY
Associated Press Writer
EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — The Canadian province of Alberta, once a backwater of cowboys and wheat farmers somewhere north of Montana, is now galloping toward the 21st century as a steel-and-glass powerhouse led by oil. And much of North America's big money is chasing it.

million barrels of crude oil a day, 85 percent of Canada's output, the result of a tremendous petroleum boom in the 1960s and 1970s. But some predict that the real explosion is yet to come, as Canadian domestic oil prices are allowed to rise close to world levels and production of Alberta's "synthetic" oil from Alberta's tar sands gets into full swing.

companies and Canadian governments are spending billions of dollars on gargantuan projects to extract oil from the sticky sands. The Ottawa government's aim is to make Canada energy self-sufficient by 1990, a goal virtually everyone agrees is achievable.

Reagan has been talking about a "North American accord" or common market for energy — an idea dismissed by Canadians as a U.S. bid to drain their oil.

Edmonton and Calgary each has a population of a half-million, and Edmonton expects to hit the 1 million mark by the end of this decade.

A keystone of the development effort is the Alberta Heritage Fund, a unique rainy-day account in which the Lougheed government stashes away one-third of its resource revenues. Plagued by Recurring Polyps

Three times within the past 10 years I have had polyps removed from my nose. After each operation I feel fine. Then the polyps come back and my nose becomes blocked again. Is there any way to keep these polyps from coming back once and for all? — Mr. L.W., Maine.

nasal polyps from returning.

A better understanding of what nasal polyps are and what causes them may give you a better insight into your problem. Polyps in the nose are caused by infections of the nose and the sinuses and often by allergies. Since the combination of infections and allergies so frequently go together, polyps can be attributed to one, the other or both.

I remember when I was a young girl my mother used to talk about having dropsy. Was there ever such a condition? Why don't we hear about it any more? — Mrs. D.M.K., Mich.

Polyps are grape-like swellings on the inner lining, or mucous membrane, of the nose. When they grow large, they impair breathing because of their size. Often associated with the blocked nose is some degree of loss of the sense of smell.

"Dropsy" is a word that has slowly disappeared from the layman's terminology. Physicians, too, used the term at the turn of the century. The origin of the word probably is from the term "hydrops," which is an abnormal collection of fluid in various tissues of the body.

An interesting phenomenon occurs immediately after surgery. The free passage of air through the nose is so comfortable that many patients fail to return to their surgeon for further treatment.

When unusual amounts of fluid collect anywhere, it is essential that the underlying condition that causes it be pinpointed. With intensive treatment of the basic problem and with drugs, fluid retention can be controlled.

Herein lies the reason for the return of the polyps. If the underlying allergies or sinus infections remain untreated, the polyps will form again and continue to grow until they once more affect free breathing.

Two hundred miles out of here, close to the Rockies, Edmonton's rival city of Calgary is also spreading out and rising up over the prairie. Calgary has become Canada's No. 2 financial and computer center behind Toronto.

It is most essential, therefore, that after surgery the underlying reason for the formation of polyps be determined and attacked. With antibiotics, antihistamines, X-rays of the sinuses, and immunological studies it is often quite possible to keep the Shoppers and workers make their way among the downtown buildings through a maze of subterranean passageways, an accommodation to the sometimes-frigid weather. A newly opened subway line ties the city center to outlying districts, and another line is being built.

Newcomers pour into the province at the rate of about 1,000 a week to catch the rising oil tide. Newly affluent Albertans are streaming into the nearby Rocky Mountain valleys of British Columbia, buying up and building expensive vacation homes.

In this provincial capital, little more than a fur-trading post a century ago, skyscrapers now march across the scenic bluffs above a bend in the North Saskatchewan River. The castle-like MacDonald Hotel, which once dominated, has become a dwarf on the glittering skyline of 40-story oil company office towers.

Deer Hunt Shootout Has Resulted In 2 Men Dead

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — The brother of one of two men killed in a pre-dawn shootout in North Carolina over an alleged game law violation was scheduled for arraignment today on a murder charge.

Arrested Thursday in Portsmouth after a brief high-speed chase and accident — with the body of his brother in the back seat of the car — was Samuel A. Faison, 23, of Newport News.

Faison waived extradition and was returned Thursday night to face a murder charge in Jackson, N.C., in the shooting death of game warden Lloyd O. Mayse, 34, of Jackson.

North Carolina authorities said Mayse was shot to death after a fight in Northampton County in which Faison's brother, Chester Mack Faison, 22, of Portsmouth, was wounded fatally.

Sheriff B.W. Corey said Mayse was shot in a wooded area of the county near the Virginia border during an argument with the Faison brothers which resulted in the shooting of the younger Faison.

Corey said Mayse apparently confronted the brothers jacklighting deer along Road 1321 about 4 a.m. Jacklighting — poaching deer at night with a strong light — is illegal.

An argument ensued and the younger Faison was shot. Police allege that Samuel Faison then turned a shotgun on the game warden and shot him to death.

Mayse's body was discovered Thursday afternoon about 40 feet from his car and about 30 feet off the road. Officials said the body had been covered with leaves and honeysuckle vines, and the ground indicated he was dragged to that spot.

A search for the officer had begun about dawn Thursday when Mayse failed to show up for an end-of-shift meeting, said North Carolina's chief wildlife enforcement officer, Eugene Abernethy.

Abernethy said game wardens routinely carry firearms but are instructed to use them only in self-defense.

"We are not supposed to shoot people for shooting animals," he said. He said poaching deer is a misdemeanor.

Portsmouth police said they were alerted to the incident by an unidentified citizen who spoke with Samuel Faison Thursday morning. Faison reportedly told the citizen his brother was dead in his car and that he had shot a game warden.

Police spotted Faison's car in the Academy Park section of the city about 9:30 a.m. and chased it onto Interstate 264 at speeds estimated at more than 60 mph.

The car went out of control near the Victory Boulevard exit, hit a guardrail and flipped over several times before coming to rest on its roof, police said.

Samuel Faison was taken to Maryview Hospital for treatment of minor injuries and then to the police station for questioning. He was taken into custody Thursday night by Northampton County officers. Police said no charges were filed against him in Portsmouth.

The body of the younger Faison was taken to Portsmouth General Hospital, where he was pronounced dead as a result of a wound from a service revolver. Portsmouth police said.

Mayse's supervisor, R.M. Crumpton, said game wardens frequently have trouble with night deer hunters.

"Scuffles are not uncommon. They're (night hunters) rougher and often have been drinking," Crumpton said.

Mayse's death was the first for a North Carolina game warden since 1979, when one died in a Brunswick County helicopter crash. The last fatal shooting of a game warden was in 1971 in Burke County, where a warden clashed with men who were fishing illegally.

Metric Board Is In No Hurry

WASHINGTON (AP) — It may be 10 years — or never — before the metric system becomes predominant in the United States, the U.S. Metric Board says in its first annual report to Congress. Either way, the board says, is OK with it.

"Our job is neither to cajole nor persuade," chairman Louis F. Polk, a Columbus, Ohio, businessman, said in the report released this week. "It is to educate, inform and assist those parties who make a voluntary decision to convert."

Nevertheless, in a news release issued with the report, the board conceded, "There is some confusion about (our) role and the national policy on metric conversion."

The board was created by the Metric Conversion Act of 1975, which neither made conversion mandatory nor set a deadline.

Set up in 1978, the $2.5 million board consists of 17 part-time members from business, labor and other walks of life. It has a full-time staff of 31.

A 1978 General Accounting Office study challenged the assumption that metrics were inevitable and claimed the cost of converting could run into the billions of dollars.

A board spokesman, William DeReuter, said conversion to metrics continues to gain momentum in some industries, notably auto manufacturing, where General Motors plans to be metric by 1982.

"G.M. isn't switching because they think it would be a nice thing to do. They're doing it because they see some cost savings involved," DeReuter said. "They won't have to keep two parts inventories."

But he said most polls show Americans oppose the growing use of the metric system, which substitutes meters, liters and grams for the English measures of yards, gallons and pounds.

The United States is one of the few nations in the world that has not converted or begun a changeover to metrics. Other holdouts are Burma, South Yemen and Brunei.

Some oil companies now sell gasoline by the liter. The wine and liquor industries switched their stock to liters in the past two years. Many bottlers boosted prices in the process, which DeReuter said "kind of gave metrics a black eye."

Board member Francis R. Dugan, president of a Cincinnati construction firm, said the nation is unlikely to abandon the metric uses it has adopted, "so the choice is whether we want to live with dual measurements. Probably the answer is that we are going to be metric in the workplace and customary on our own time."

Find Evidence Of Cannibalism

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — The Indians who lived in Ohio up until the 17th century may have cannibalized their enemies, a University of Toledo anthropologist says.

"We've found clear evidence of cannibalism at three sites between Waterville and Rossford," said Dr. William Strothers, associate professor of anthropology.

Because American Indians usually took great care in burying their dead, the discovery of skeletal remains of six people mixed with garbage pointed to cannibalism, Strothers said.

The cannibals also may have removed the bone marrow and brains of their victims. In the excavated remains were mostly long, narrow bones sliced in such a way that the marrow may have been removed, Strothers said.

And the skulls had been deliberately detached, possibly so the brains could be withdrawn, he said.

"Cannibalism among North American Indians is not as uncommon as most people think," Strothers said. "This is ritual cannibalism" we're talking about. These people were quite able to meet their nutritional requirements through other methods."

The cannibals, who probably were eating their enemies to show contempt and to absorb such good qualities as bravery or cunning, lived near Toledo from 1400 until after 1600, he said.

They were part of a group generally known as the Sandusky Tradition that moved into northern Ohio after 1300, he said. More advanced than the Woodland Indians who also inhabited the area, they drove the Woodland Indians from the region by 1450.

One victim apparently died about 1610, according to carbon dating techniques. With the remains were glass beads made in the Netherlands, but Strothers does not believe the victim was European.

Eyes On '84?

Earlier this month, Americans went to the polls to vote in the 1980 presidential election. President-elect Ronald Reagan won't take the oath of office until January. Yet some observers believe the race for the Democratic presidential nomination four years from now may have already begun. Vice President Walter Mondale and Senator Edward Kennedy are already being mentioned as possible candidates for the White House in 1984. Both men spent much of the fall campaigning around the country for President Carter. With the election over, both are expected to continue making appearances at party fund-raising events, hoping to build up support for possible presidential campaigns.

DO YOU KNOW — What state does Edward Kennedy represent in the Senate?

Special Day Is Proclaimed

Today has been proclaimed by Pres. Carter as "Salvation Army Day."

A joint resolution passed by the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives recognizes the Salvation Army's 100th anniversary of service to others in the United States. The resolution cites both the diversity of Salvation Army services and the efficiency with which the Army is able to provide those services to people in need. Across the nation more than 414,000 members and 380,000 volunteers assisted more than 30 million people last year.

Dec. 5 will mark the beginning of the Salvation Army's Christmas season of good works in Pitt County. The local Salvation Army Center at 237 W. Dickinson Avenue will begin collecting donations to aid the needy through mail appeals and Christmas kettles. During this special season of good will to all, food, clothing, toys and other remembrances will bring cheer to the lonely and the forgotten. Maj. Arnold Williford said.

Indochina Refugee Flood Pours Into Southeast Asia

By JOHN LAIRD
Associated Press Writer
BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Refugees from Indochina are still arriving in other Southeast Asian countries by the thousands, but resettlement programs are keeping pace with the flow and gradually diminishing the backlog.

Refugee officials say the programs of the major recipient countries — the United States, France, Canada and Australia — are going well, and West Germany is planning to increase the number it accepts.

A spokesman for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees — UNHCR — said about 9,000 refugees were expected to arrive in Southeast Asian countries this month. Some 6,000 Vietnamese boat people were expected to land in Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia, while about 3,000 Laotians were expected to cross the Mekong River to Thailand.

The exodus of Cambodians, which reached huge proportions last year, has stopped. Thailand has many more than it can handle and is reluctant to admit more, a reasonable rice harvest is expected in Cambodia in December, and food relief shipments are reported getting to most of the country.

A total of 177,292 refugees were reported in official camps in six Asian countries, Hong Kong and Macao at the end of October. But the number is gradually diminishing.

Last month 23,092 were resettled while 11,350 arrived, according to UNHCR figures. The United States took 9,410, Canada 1,481, France 615, Australia 426, Britain 164 and New Zealand 162.

This month, the UNHCR expects 19,980 to leave Southeast Asia for new homes.

The Carter administration and Congress agreed to admit up to 168,000 refugees from Southeast Asia to the United States between Oct. 1, 1980, and Sept. 30, 1981.

Thailand has 263,000 displaced people on its territory, including 145,000, most of them Cambodians, in holding centers classed as illegal immigrants and 118,000, mostly Laotians, in other camps. In addition, more than 90,000 Cambodians camped on the Thai-Cambodian border are not eligible for resettlement because they are denied official refugee status, but UNICEF — the United Nations Children's Fund — feeds them.

The presence of so many refugees is a major political issue in Thailand, and the future of the 90,000 camped on the border is the subject of continuing debate.

Many of them are supporters of the Khmer Rouge guerrillas whose government turned Cambodia into a death camp until the Vietnamese army drove it from Phnom Penh nearly two years ago. Many profess to be anti-Vietnamese guerrillas, but their chief interest seems to be supplying the black market inside Cambodia.

A number of Cambodians in the camps have been killed in armed clashes, and relief officials working there fear for their own safety.

Informed sources say the Vietnamese government may agree soon to an emigration program that will allow significant numbers of people to leave southern Vietnam for the United States instead of risking their lives in small boats on the South China Sea.

The program has been the subject of long and frustrating negotiations between the U.S. and Vietnamese governments with the U.N. refugee agency acting as an intermediary.

More than 250,000 In-dochinese have left Thailand for resettlement since the communists took over South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia in 1975. They included 149,506 Laotians, 57,990 Cambodians and 52,502 Vietnamese.

Request Details Of Torture Complaint

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Indian government has asked the Bihar state administration to provide details of allegedly deliberate blindings of suspected criminals by policemen, a government spokesman said today.

A spokesman for the Home Affairs Ministry said the Bihar government has appointed a seven-member committee of legislators to investigate the incidents at Bhagalpur, 180 miles northwest of Calcutta.

In a graphic report today from the state capital of Patna, the Indian Express newspaper said three prisoners in the region were arrested by policemen who poked their eyes with a bicycle wheel spoke, punctured the retina with a needle and poured (sulfuric) acid into the wounds, permanently blinding them. The men were identified as Baljit Singh, Saligram Sah and Umed Yadav.

In an earlier report, the Express said the policemen blinded the men in an effort to extort money. In the latest story, it said that the Bhagalpur police blinded the youths and falsely implicated them in several criminal cases in a campaign to intimidate and control criminal elements.

Sah, 18, said that several policemen pinned him to the ground and that a doctor punctured his eyes with a needle "many times." "His eyes were padded with acid-soaked cotton and bandaged," the Express reported.

They were kept in different prison cells for several more days, it added.

The Express said that there are at least 29 such victims currently in Bhagalpur Jail.

A woman lawyer has moved habeas corpus motions before the Supreme Court in New Delhi appealing for the release of the prisoners.

Three Persons Are Reported Injured

Three persons were injured and over $6,000 in property damage resulted from three Thanksgiving Day accidents investigated by Greenville Police.

Officers said that the injuries and heaviest damages occurred in a 10:45 p.m. wreck at the intersection of Greenville Boulevard and E. Tenth Street.

Investigating police said that the accident involved vehicles driven by Edmond Allen Wooten of P.O. Box 35, Falkland, and Edward Clark May of 902 W. Church Street, Farmville. May and two passengers in the Wooten vehicle were injured and transported to Pitt Memorial Hospital.

Police, who charged May with a stop light violation, estimated damage at $3,500 to the Wooten car and $1,500 to the May vehicle.

No charges were preferred following investigation of a 5 p.m. accident on W. Fifth Street, just west of Bancroft Avenue, involving vehicles driven by Kenneth Earl Edmondson of Apt. B, 1100 Chestnut Street, and Gwendolyn Ann Fleming of 617-A McKinley Avenue.

Officers, who noted that no injuries were reported, estimated damages at $400 to each vehicle.

Jessie Alton Smith of 1603 Garland Street was charged with following too closely by officers who investigated a 1:25 p.m. mishap at the intersection of Highway 33 and N. Memorial Drive.

According to police, the wreck involved vehicles operated by Smith and Polly Davis Craft of Rt. 5, Greenville. No one was injured and damages were estimated at $300 to the Smith vehicle and $75 to the Craft car.

Carbon Monoxide Measured

The American Lung Association of North Carolina, Eastern Region, and the East Carolina University Student National Environmental Health Association announced today that the two groups will conduct measurements of carbon monoxide levels in homes as a free service during the week of December 1-6.

Carbon monoxide is a hazardous gas produced by the incomplete burning of fuel and is a potential hazard in homes utilizing unvented heaters. The gas is odorless, colorless, tasteless, and non-irritating. A person exposed to low levels of carbon monoxide in an enclosed area — room, trailer, workshop — may experience headaches, dizziness and sleepiness. Exposure to high levels can cause death.

The American Lung Association and the Student National Environmental Health Association share an interest in protecting the environment and the health of all people.

Any Greenville or Pitt County resident desiring this service is requested to call the Lung Association Office at 752-5093 (8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday) to make an appointment to have their home tested.

TINY GUARDIANS
COBHAM, England (AP) — A jewelry firm has brought in six tiny guards to protect $1.2 million in gems on display in a hotel here. They are six black scorpions, "females, because they are deadlier than the males", says the exhibit organizer.

Terror Fueled In El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Right-wing gunmen kidnapped six leftist leaders and murdered at least four of them, striking a heavy blow at their opponents in the terrorist war that has taken about 8,000 lives this year. But it appeared that most or all of the victims were political leaders rather than guerrilla commanders.

A right-wing paramilitary organization, the Maximilian Hernandez Brigade, claimed responsibility for the kidnappings in a communique to several radio stations. The abductions were carried out at noon Thursday in a raid on a secret meeting at a Roman Catholic high school here.

The brigade takes its name from a rightist general who led a campaign against leftist guerrillas in the 1930s.

A spokesman for the Roman Catholic Church's Legal Aid Society said army troops surrounded the Externado San Jose High School and plainclothesmen carrying walkie-talkies and automatic rifles rounded up Enrique Alvarez Cordoba, president of the Democratic Revolutionary Front and the leading leftist; Juan Chacon, head of the Popular Revolutionary Bloc (BPR), the largest left-wing group; Manuel Franco, a leader of the National Democratic Union; Humberto Mendoza of the Popular Liberation Movement, one of the most radical leftist groups; Enrique Barrera of the National Revolutionary Movement and Doroteo Hernandez, the leader of a small union.

The bodies of Chacon, Mendoza, Barrera and Hernandez were found a few hours later in Asino, a small lake spa 12 miles southeast of San Salvador. Sources at the funeral home where they were taken said there were no apparent signs of torture on the corpses.

There was no word of Alvarez Cordoba and Franco, but one high-ranking diplomat predicted they would "turn up dead."

Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia denied that any government officials, army troops or security forces took part in the kidnapping and said the National Police were investigating.

"What we know is that a group of persons carrying weapons entered the building and seized Alvarez Cordoba, Chacon and the others," he said.

This small, impoverished Central American nation has been torn by bloody strife between leftists and rightists since a coup on Oct. 15, 1979, led by two moderate colonels threatened the small oligarchy of wealthy families and right-wing military men who have controlled El Salvador for years.

The new junta instituted a land redistribution program and promised other reforms, but the leftists interpreted this as a sign of weakness and stepped up efforts to replace the regime with a Marxist government. This touched off a fierce backlash from the extreme right.

Slated To Die In Poisoning Case

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — A 47-year-old woman has been scheduled to die in the state's gas chamber Dec. 12 on a conviction of killing her boyfriend with rat poison.

Superior Court Judge E. Maurice Braswell rejected Wednesday a request from Velma Margie Barfield that he overturn her conviction.

The request alleged Mrs. Barfield did not receive adequate legal help during her trial two years ago.

James Little, a Fayetteville attorney who has taken up Mrs. Barfield's defense, said after Braswell's ruling that he would appeal to the state Supreme Court.

No Leads In Robbery, Death

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — There were no leads to help solve the shooting death of a teen-ager and the robbery of at least 10 other people who attended a rock concert at Oakland Auditorium, police said.

Sgt. Dan Murray said Thursday that Steven Bucol, 19, of Newark, Calif., was found shot to death and robbed in a walkway on the third floor of the auditorium after Wednesday's concert by Kool and the Gang.

"There was a series of robberies of patrons by other patrons," Murray said. "We're not sure what the motive was. There was a lot of jewelry being snatched, gold chains being ripped off."

Researches Try Solve Mystery

ATLANTA (AP) — Health researchers are stepping in where detectives have failed in an effort to solve the deaths and disappearances of 15 black children in Atlanta.

The researchers, from the Fulton County Health Department and the national Center for Disease Control, will meet Monday with police to try to find a common thread among the cases of the 11 slain children and the four missing ones, officials said.

Officials did not elaborate on the techniques the medical sleuths might use. Police have been stumped by the case.

Forcing A Safety

Cowboys Move Closer To Playoffs With 51-7 Win

IRVING, Texas (AP) — After the pounding they took from the Dallas Cowboys, no one would have blamed the Seattle Seahawks if they had come up with some excuse. The final was 51-7, and it was as bad, or worse than the score indicated. The Cowboys, virtually assuring themselves of their 15th trip to the National Football League playoffs in 16 years, delivered a quick knockout to the Seahawks, who self-destructed with four fumbles and three interceptions. "You've got to be pleased," Cowboys Coach Tom Landry said. "It's hard to score that many points in a dummy scrimmage. I felt for Seattle." Besides the fumbles and interceptions, the Seahawks quarterbacks were sacked five times. Even trick plays turned into embarrassment. Quarterback

Jim Zorn gave Dallas a safety when he was flagged for intentional grounding while trying to pass from his own end zone in the first quarter. Landry gave one of his former players, Coach Jack Patera, quite a lesson. "As I've said before, it's nice to be in the playoff position, but what we really want to do is to play well," Landry said. "If we can play well the next three weeks, I think we will be ready for a playoff shot." The 10-3 Cowboys, who trail Philadelphia by 1 1/2 games in the NFC East, play Oakland, Los Angeles and the Eagles to close out their schedule. "We'll have a test," Landry said. Dallas built a 30-0 halftime lead and cruised to victory. "It was my impression that the Cowboys were always getting the ball on our 10-yard line," Patera said. "I can't give any reason — a tipped ball, a fumble. There's really nothing you can do about a score when it starts building like that." Dallas quarterback Danny White threw touchdown passes of 18 yards to Tony Hill and 14 yards to tight end Billy Joe DuPree, who also caught a 12-yard scoring pass from backup Glenn Carano, his first NFL completion. To y Dorsett scored twice on runs of 1 yard and gained 107 yards on 24 carries. It was Dorsett's 18th 100-yard day, surpassing Calvin Hill's club record. The Seahawks avoided a shutout when Zorn flipped a 2-yard pass to Ron Essink on a tackle-eligible play late in the game. "We thought this was going to be a tough one, but we realized going into this game that they had some injuries," White said. "I'm sure their spirits were down somewhat since this is a short week for them and they were traveling." Linebacker Mike Hegman, who intercepted two passes, said he knew in the first quarter the game was going to be a blowout. "They looked kind of flat, and we were up for the game. I knew we were just going to blow them out." Tackle Randy White and end Harvey Martin led the sack brigade with two each. Tackle Larry Cole said the Cowboys felt bad for Seattle but not sorry enough to let up. "You felt sorry for them after a while," he said. "We have been on that side of the game, too." Patera said his team never quit.

Pirates Open Season At Ohio

East Carolina University officially opens the 1980-81 basketball season Saturday night in Athens, Ohio, facing the University of Ohio Bobcats. Tipoff is set for 7:30 p.m. East Carolina got the season off to an unofficial start last Monday, bowing to strong Marathon Oil in an exhibition game, 103-83. At the same time, Ohio was also holding an exhibition with Western Ontario, rolling to an 86-41 victory. While coach Dave Odom was disappointed with the showing of the young Pirates in the exhibition, he does not feel that the Bucs will continue to play in that vein. "Marathon Oil is a very tough team to play. They have nothing to lose and play very loose, confident and smart. They make you look worse than you are." Odom added that he did not think that the type game played between the two would be typical of the way most games would be played. "This is not the type team we normally defend against, nor the type team we'll run our offense against." The Ohio game will present different problems for the Pirates. "They are a lot like we are, except for different reasons. They're going to be starting a lot of new people, but it is by choice. For us, it is not by choice since we lost so many people," Odom said. The Bobcats have a new coach in Danny Nee, a former Notre Dame assistant, and Odom is sure that he has brought a lot of new enthusiasm to the team. "They lost players off a losing team and are replacing them with new, fresh players. This will give Coach Nee a chance to build quicker," his ECU counterpart pointed out. "I expect it to be a hard-fought game," Odom continued. "The team with the best execution and least mistakes with the most concentration over 40 minutes will win. I expect it to be a close and physical battle. Both teams would like very much to win this opener, but I don't think a loss for either team will be critical. It will be interesting to see how they do." But, he added, "A win could be a big boost for us." East Carolina will probably start Mike Bledsoe, a 6-1 sophomore junior college transfer at the point. He averaged 14.8 points a game last year in junior college. At the big guard, the likely starter will be Barry Wright, a 6-5 freshman. Mark McLaurin, one of four members of last year's team, will probably be at the small forward. The 6-6 junior averaged 2.0 points a game last year. Michael Gibson, 6-8 junior, will be at the big forward slot. He is the lone starter back from last year, averaging 5.9 points and 5.6 rebounds. The other spot will be taken by either David Underwood (6-6 junior 5.0 ppg), or Tom Szymanski (6-11 senior 2.3

ppg), both returning from last year's team. Top Ohio players include 6-0 Kirk Lehman, a junior who averaged 17.6 points a game last year and Eric Hilton, a 6-2 sophomore who hit 20.0 points per game in junior college. At the guards, in the post is 6-9 freshman Sean Carlson, while the forwards include 6-7 Jim Zelenka, a 6-7 senior with a 7.9 average, and Tim Woodson, a 6-4 sophomore with a 3.8 average. Also expected to see lots of playing time is guard Mick Isgrigg, a 6-4 sophomore with a 1.2 average. Following the Ohio game, the Pirates next face the University of Maine in Orono, Me., on Wednesday. They open their home season on Saturday against Texas Wesleyan.

Kiffin Brings Something New To ACC: Laughter

By BILL WERONKA Associated Press Writer RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — When Monte Kiffin took over as head football coach at North Carolina State this season, he brought something new to the Atlantic Coast Conference — laughter.

He had the fans rolling in the aisles at pep rallies and sportswriters falling out of their seats at his weekly news conferences. Win or lose, Monte was always loose and ready with an unlimited selection of one-liners. On first meeting the tall, home-grown Nebraskan, he leaves you bedazzled. He comes on fast and loud, more like a 1950s disc jockey than a football coach. And as ACC country has found out, he is apt to do anything and usually does. In his first season he has rode around on a white horse sporting a Lone Ranger mask, jumped out of an airplane and put on the gloves with former heavyweight champion Joe Frazier. One can't meet the man and come away unaffected. And his players haven't. But it's not only the laughter that affects. It is also the genuineness and sensitivity of the 40-year-old former assistant at Nebraska and Arkansas.

He came in to take over a team that won the ACC football title last season under the late Bo Rein. He quickly won the team over with his ram-bunctious and caring style. He made them laugh and have fun, but he let them know he cared, too. Because of that, he weathered the bad times this year pretty well. The team he took over was depleted by graduation and lack of depth. Through the season, injuries weakened the team even more. But win or lose, the team stuck by Kiffin, kept working and didn't complain. Then after the loss to Penn State, the team hit its low point, dropping to 4-5. "After the Penn State game, all our bowl hopes were gone," Kiffin said. "The only thing we had left was the chance for a winning season. So our squad made a commitment to be 6-5." First came Duke and the Wolfpack evened their record at 5-5. And after the win over East Carolina this past Saturday, the N.C. State locker room exploded. "Barry Switzer (Oklahoma coach) couldn't have been any more excited than I was after the East Carolina game," Kiffin said. "We were 6-5 and that's why we were so ecstatic in the locker room." But the one thing that made the season worthwhile for Kiffin, was the "way the team hung together." "To lose that last game would have put a damper on the whole year," Kiffin said.

"But it wasn't going to happen. To me the most rewarding part of the season is the way they stayed together. "You'd think the seniors would be bitter because they didn't get a chance to go to a bowl and the underclassmen might. But they were telling the other player, 'You had better go to a bowl, because we're coming back to see you.'" Of course, Kiffin was disappointed because he hasn't yet met any of the three goals he set at the beginning of the year — win the national championship, win the conference title and go to a bowl of the team's choice. But, "It could have been worse," he said. And he said in the aftermath of his first season as a head coach, "It feels good. It's like playing a freshman; you hope he gets better in his sophomore and junior years. "You're always learning something. We did a lot of positive things this year, but some things we could have done better. But I couldn't be more thrilled with N.C. State. The fans are great and I've had only one or two negative letters all year." But now is not a time for Kiffin to relax. He has to recruit for next year and prepare to change his offense.

DAYTON, Tenn. — Greenville Christian Academy's bad luck continued in the National Association of Christian Athletics Tournament yesterday as it bowed to West Palm Beach (Fla.) Christian School, 66-65. The loss was the second in as many games in the tournament, and both came by a total of three points. The two stuck close throughout the first period, which ended with West Palm Beach up, 16-14. Tar Heels Have The Talent But Are A Bit Lead In Experience

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina basketball coach Dean Smith has a lot of talent floating around this year but the Tar Heels are a bit lean when it comes to experience.

In fact, this is the youngest team Smith has fielded since the early 1970s.

Al Wood, the 6-foot-7 senior forward with the soft shooting touch, is the only fulltime starter back.

Junior guard Jimmy Braddock split time at point last year and is fighting it out with sophomore Jimmy Braddock this year.

Sophomore forward James Worthy is back. The 6-foot-9 high school sensation played only 14 games last year before a broken foot put him out of action.

Senior Pete Budko was expected to start at center but a stress fracture has kept his practice time limited. Smith has said that the 6-foot-9 center is needed factor in the offense this year.

Out of the recruiting wars, Smith picked up two of the nation's top blue-chippers — 6-foot-9 Sam Perkins and 6-foot-7 Matt Doherty. Both will probably see a lot of action early. Perkins is the top candidate for Atlantic Coast Conference Rookie of the Year.

"A Carolina fan came up to me the other day and said he wasn't worried. But he should be," Smith said recently at the ACC's Operation Basketball in Greensboro. "This is a very inexperienced team. I think it could be a very fine team but we lack experience players."

"But we need Budko very much," Smith said. "We need him to be healthy. He's put on weight (230 pounds) and I expect him to have a great year, if he's healthy."

Smith said Worthy is still having problems with a tender achilles tendon, but "he's improved greatly over last year." Before leaving for the season, Worthy was averaging 13 points and seven rebounds a game.

Perkins could end a hand if Budko does not bounce back. In high school he averaged 25 points, 16 rebounds and eight blocked shots a game.

Budko has been around the program for a while though, and doesn't think the team is in that bad a shape.

"Almost half the team is new," Budko said. "It takes some time for everyone to learn the system. But the young guys we got aren't as inexperienced and people might think. They can play with anyone. Perkins, I'd compare to anyone. He's a lot like Ralph Sampson (Virginia's 7-foot-5 center).

"Our offense will probably be about the same, although we might do a little more free-lancing and go inside alltime more."

Doherty showed a lot of savvy in an intra-squad game and is considered by many to be similar to UNC forward Mike O'Koren, now playing for the New Jersey Nets.

North Carolina was expected to win the ACC crown last year, but after losing Worthy it ended up in a second-place tie.

"We're coming off a disappointing year," Smith said. "I'm concerned whether we will be as good this year. Defensively we won't because experience helps on defense. But if we don't throw the ball away we could be a good offensive team. And we could be a better rebounding team than last year."

Chicago Rallies In Second Half, Takes Overtime Win Over Lions

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Vince Evans has plenty of reasons for giving thanks, but the Chicago quarterback must be especially thankful for the Detroit Lions.

Evans received his first National Football League start of the season six weeks ago against Detroit, led his team to an easy victory, and has become the Bears' offensive leader.

On Thursday he did in the Lions once again, rallying the Bears from a 14-point deficit in the fourth quarter to set up an overtime period which lasted exactly 21 seconds.

Chicago won the coin toss and return specialist Dave Williams raced 95 yards with the kickoff to give the Bears a heart-stopping 23-17 triumph.

"I felt, and I could see everyone else on our team felt, we could still win the ball game," Evans said. "We needed this win in a big way."

The fourth quarter was less than three minutes old when Evans concluded an 86-yard, nine-play drive by hitting tight end Bob Fisher with a 20-yard touchdown pass to narrow the score to 17-10.

With 3:37 left, the Bears began a drive on their own

6-yard line. Evans drove them to the Detroit 4 where — with time running out — he dropped back, found his receivers covered, then darted straight up the middle and dove over the goal line with no time left on the clock to force the overtime.

Evans, a fourth-year pro from Southern California, completed 11 of 22 passes for 167 yards in the nationally televised Thanksgiving Day game before 75,397 fans at the Silverdome.

"I've been in football a long time, but I just don't ever remember seeing a game like this," Bears Coach Neill Armstrong said. "A touchdown scored with no time left, we win the toss and run the kickoff back for a TD."

"You know, that was the only real coaching I did today. I told them to go out and win the toss."

Williams, a speedster who ran the 100-yard dash in 9.7 during his college days at Colorado, said he felt he could break it all the way after he crossed his own 35-yard line.

"After I caught the ball, I was trying to get us the best field position possible," Williams said. "I felt I had a chance to go all the way after I cut left and could see the goal line."

Detroit Coach Monte Clark, whose club wanted desperately to win the game in order to expand its first-place lead over the Minnesota Vikings in the Central Division of the National Football Conference, called the defeat "the bitterest loss I can remember as a coach." Detroit quarterback Gary Danielson completed nine of 21 passes for 157 yards, including a 47-yard touchdown pass play to Billy Sims, and Danielson also scored on a 1-yard sneak.

Eddie Murray booted a 34-yard field goal for Detroit, 7-6, and Bob Thomas hit a 24-yarder for Chicago, 5-8.

Georgia Goes For Perfect Year

By KEN RAPPOPORT

The last time the Georgia Bulldogs had a perfect year, the redoubtable Charlie Trippi was running rings around the opposition.

That shows you how long it's been.

Since that peerless 10-0 season in 1946, the Bulldogs have been close a few times — but not until now have they been so near to getting the cigar.

The nation's top-ranked team, bound for a Sugar Bowl meeting with Notre Dame on New Year's Day in a game that figures to decide the national title, can finish a perfect regular season by beating Georgia Tech Saturday.

It's one of several season-ending games this weekend pitting a host of traditional rivals.

The action got underway today when fourth-ranked Pitt met fifth-ranked Penn State in their annual "battle of Pennsylvania." On Saturday, Army plays Navy in the continuation of their spectacular series.

While Georgia is experiencing its best season in many years, Georgia Tech is not. The Yellow Jackets only have one victory and one tie, against mighty Notre Dame, during their disappointing season.

They'll have to contend with one of the nation's best runners Saturday in Herschel Walker.

"We're going to have to do the best job of the season if we're going to hold him," Georgia Tech linebacker Steve Mooney said of Walker. "They're going to try to get him Tony Dorsett's freshman rushing record, especially in a game with as much incentive as Georgia-Georgia Tech."

Walker needs 176 yards to break the 7-year-old NCAA freshman rushing record set by Dorsett at Pittsburgh. But he won't be the only problem facing Georgia Tech.

"If you try to stop Herschel, the other two guys — (quarterback Buck) Belue and (fullback Jimmy) Womack — will kill you," said Georgia Tech's defensive coordinator Ken Blair. "We're just going to play our regular defense and do the best job we possibly can."

Both Penn State and Pitt had 9-10 records and both were going to bowls — the Nittany Lions to the Fiesta Bowl on Dec. 26 and the Panthers to the Gator Bowl on Dec. 29. Penn State held a 39-37 edge in the series.

Navy has a chance to pull ahead of Army in the honored series between the service academies. Navy's sixth victory in seven games last season evened the series at 37 victories apiece. Navy, with a 7-3 record and a stronger schedule, is favored over Army, 3-6-1, at Philadelphia's JFK Stadium.

Among Saturday's other traditional games, it'll be Alabama vs. Auburn, Arizona State at Arizona, Holy Cross at Boston College, Miami (Fla.) at Florida, Oklahoma State at Oklahoma, Texas A&M at Texas and Tennessee at Vanderbilt.

In a light day Thursday, Brown beat Rhode Island 9-3 as Hank Landers hurled a first-quarter touchdown pass to Mike Campbell.

New Coach Wants To Bring Back Days Of Big Orange Machine

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

BETHEL — The 1980-81 basketball season will be a "building" one at North Pitt High School for the Panthers.

"I really can't call it a re-building year," rookie coach Randy Avery said, "since you have to have had something to re-build. It's been quite a few years since we could talk about the 'Big Orange Machine.'"

But, Avery says, that's where he wants the North Pitt program to return to, those days when the Big Orange Machine ruled the Eastern Carolina Conference's girls' standings.

"We are really very young," Avery said. "There are only three seniors on the team, and just two of them, both returning starters, have any experience."

Those two are Connie Dupree and Jeanette Brown. The former will occupy the center spot, while the latter will be either at forward or guard.

"The rest of the group really has no experience on the varsity level," Avery continued, "so that is going to be our biggest problem to overcome."

The team will be a tall one, one of the tallest at North Pitt in some time. Tops on the list is 5-11 freshman Phillis Daniels, who will probably start at one of the forward slots. "We should be anywhere from 5-6 to 5-11 in our starting lineup," the coach said.

"But, we don't have the tall dominate player yet. And I don't think that our height is going to help much right now in rebounding. We didn't do well at all on the boards in our scrimmage game. We're not aggressive enough yet."

Speed will be another problem, as will defense. "Our shooting ability is probably our strong point, so we may just have to outshoot people if we want to win," Avery said.

Joining Daniels, Brown and Dupree in the starting lineup will probably be Patricia Daniels, a sophomore, at one of the guard spots. "The other spot is still open. We have several people who could claim it, but none of them have stepped forward yet."

Those include Sherry Bradley and Alice Pittman, both freshmen, and Gladys Roberson, a junior.

"Our depth is the type where I can go to the seventh and eighth player and not lose a lot. We're pretty balanced, but then we'll all so young."

Others on the squad include guards Trudy Sheppard, a senior; freshmen Peggy Latham and Peggy Purvis, and sophomore Cynthia Tyson; forwards Lisa Carraway, a junior; and Cindy Carraway and Linda Harrell, both sophomores; and freshman ceter Delores Pittman.

"The key to any success we may have will be our gaining experience. I'm about as inexperienced as our players, and that doesn't help us either right now," Avery said. An assistant to last year's coach Gail Stanfield, he moved up to the head job this year.

As far as the ECC race is concerned, Avery looks to Southwest Edgecombe to be the best, and feels that the rest of the league will be fairly well balanced.

"I hope that we can come along enough to be a factor in the race. I would like to think that we can make some people know we're here, and we could affect the finish. One think I do know: we'll finish."

With so many young players, Avery is hopeful that lessons will be learned this year and put into practice in the future.

"I remember the days when the Big Orange Machine was the best around. Days like those are what I hope our long range future will bring."

Is Big Money The Cause?

Woody Peele

The opening game of the 1980-81 basketball season for East Carolina's basketball Pirates wasn't exactly what coach Dave Odom was hoping for.

Prior to the game, he said that winning or losing wasn't important, but he noted that he didn't want his team to get blown away.

That nearly was what happened, however. But, as Odom pointed out later, Marathon Oil isn't exactly the type team that the Pirates will be playing throughout the season. They were probably one of the better teams on the schedule.

What caused the Pirates to play what Odom called an atypical game isn't certain. It could have been a certain amount of "stage fright" with so many new players on the team. It could have been just the old first game jitters, or it could have been the way Marathon played the game.

At any rate, Odom is positive that the version of the Pirate team seen Monday night is not the real one.

Tomorrow night's official opening of the regular season will tell a lot more. Ohio University is a team a lot like the Pirates were last year — and this year. They have gone through a coaching change, and that is sure to bring on some enthusiasm as they come off a losing record. They have new players, but enough old ones are on hand to insure some continuity.

The two opening games on the road — the other comes against Maine on Wednesday — will tell a lot about the Pirates, but not the whole story. Odom said earlier in the week that the Pirates could easily come back 0-2 or 2-0, and that he'd be happy with 1-1.

All the ballyhoo about the Leonard-Duran fight probably will go on for a while. There are many disgruntled fans (most of them with money on Duran) who will complain long and hard that it was a set-up.

But it would seem that the most likely thing is that Duran, who probably prepared himself badly for the fight, realized that it was all over.

With the recent number of ring deaths, Duran was no sucker. He could see how tired and upset he was getting. There was no reason to continue.

Duran apparently is a man who got all he could from the ring, and when he realized that he had reached his limit, chose the wisest path to follow — to get out of the ring before he, too, followed in the footsteps of many who allowed themselves to be pounded unconscious long after they knew they were beaten.

One observer pointed out that it was an inglorious end to a glorious career. But looking back on it, there have been few glorious ends. Rocky Marciano was one of the few who quit — and stayed quit — while he was ahead. Many others have tried comebacks only to be well beyond the times. Look at Ali, Patterson, Lewis, etc. They all had the chance to go out on top, but came back for more, and came out on the short end.

Maybe Duran will prove smarter.

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent
First, it was Muhammad Ali. Then Roberto Duran. Will they never learn?

Within the space of a few weeks, the legends of the two greatest fist fighters of our time have been tarnished by revolting performances that opened them up to public scorn.

It's a tragedy.

The great Ali, who surmounted gigantic obstacles to dominate the sport for most of two decades and become an international figure, emerged from retirement at age 38 in Las Vegas on Oct. 2 in an attempt to win the heavyweight championship an unprecedented fourth time.

His skills were rusty. His once dazzling speed dulled by age and inactivity, he was crushed by the unbeaten WBC titleholder Larry Holmes. The old champion, although honed to fighting weight and full of his old bombast, never won a round.

The public was victim of a multimillion dollar charade. Was this trip necessary?

Then, last Tuesday in the New Orleans Superdome, Duran, the rough, tough street fighter from Panama, defaulted to classy Sugar Ray Leonard with 16 seconds left in the eighth round.

Unmarked, showing no outward signs of injury, he stopped abruptly and lowered his gloves. Everybody was stunned.

With a half-smile and a half-snarl on his bearded face, the man they called "The Little Assassin" strode unassisted to his dressing room.

"I quit," he said calmly in Spanish through an interpreter. "I don't want to fight anymore — ever."

The incident sent shock waves through the boxing world and created widespread consternation and skepticism among those not familiar with the sport.

What happened? "It's all that big money," said a disenchanted South American ring official, rushing to catch the first flight out of New Orleans. "They can't pass it up. Greed is going to kill the fight game — and maybe other sports, too."

Neither Ali nor Duran should have entered the ring. Ali is too old, all his bounce and bravado gone. Duran is only 29 but going on 45, wearied by 14 years in the ring and spoiled by affluence.

"I have been fighting too long," he acknowledged afterward. "I am tired of the sport." He said he got stomach cramps. He lacked the stomach to keep fighting.

Why do it, then? The big bucks, that's why. An easy $8 million payday and a ticket back to Panama.

In Ali's case, the temptation was not entirely mercenary. Ali feeds on the limelight as a moth is drawn to the flame. Take it away, he shrivels.

Oh, how everybody pleaded with Ali to hang up his gloves after he regained the title from George Foreman in Zaire and also after his classic battle with Joe Frazier in the "Thrilla in Manila." Ali had redressed all wrongs and was at his zenith in success and popularity.

But, no. He was hooked. There always had to be that "one more time," leaving people to remember him as the futile, fraying retreat who couldn't take a round off Holmes.

The worst image damage was done to Duran. "Manos de Piedra," "Hands of Stone," pound-for-pound the greatest fighter around, bully, animal, savage, destroyer of social graces, hero of the underprivileged throughout the world.

In boxing, it's not very macho to quit while standing up and apparently unhurt — not when you think of those bruising, bloody battles between Tony Zale and Rocky Graziano, typical of the sport.

So what could a few million more bucks mean to Ali and Duran, both millionaires many times over? A few more baubles, maybe.

Nothing to compare with the glitter of a good name and people saying years later: "He was the greatest."

Jabbar Taking Up The Slack

OAKLAND (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers re-discovered a winning formula from the days before the arrival of Magic Johnson, now missing from action.

It involves 7-foot-2 Kareem Abdul-Jabbar — as much as possible.

"We have to mix things well on offense. Of course, that means one play for Kareem, then one play for the rest of the team," Coach Paul Westhead joked after Jabbar scored 40 points in Thursday night's 128-119 victory over the Golden State Warriors.

In the night's only other National Basketball Association game, the Washington Bullets beat the Indiana Pacers 123-108.

The Lakers have had some rough nights since the loss of Johnson, the brilliant guard who had knee surgery recently.

"The team can do something about that. I can't," said Jabbar, whose teammates got the ball to him more than enough Thursday night.

"He just has to play his normal game," said Westhead. "Tonight, he was very assertive on both ends of the court."

Forward Jamaal Wilkes contributed 24 points for the NBA champions and said, "We've still got a lot of talent. We're not going to fall apart."

Jabbar went 10 points over his previous single-game high this season and he did it against a team which had the NBA's best homecourt record, 10-0. He made 15 of 22 shots from the floor, 10 of 14 free throws, and grabbed 11 rebounds in 38 minutes.

"My hook shot was good, but what helped most was the fouls. I've got to go to the line to have big scoring nights," he said. "If they don't call fouls, it makes my job a lot harder."

He came back from a 5-for-15 shooting performance in last Sunday's 110-94 loss to Milwaukee. The Lakers shot .385 from the floor in that game compared to .573 against the Warriors.

Joe Barry Carroll, the Warriors' 7-foot rookie center, had his best scoring game as a pro with 32 points, with 14 coming in the final period. In the third quarter, when Jabbar had 14 points, Carroll and backup center Clifford Ray both got into ool trouble and went to the bench.

The Warriors, down by 15 points late in the third quarter, cut the margin to five several times in the final minutes.

"I think we've proven we can play with anyone in this league," said Coach Al Attles, whose team will be home Saturday night against the Phoenix Suns, the Pacific Division leaders.

Carroll, in his first regular season meeting with Jabbar, was outscored 29-14 on Oct. 19 in Los Angeles.

"I thought J.B. was tremendous this time. He fought him tooth and nail," Attles said after the rematch. "It seemed like everything he put up went in."

"Of course, when I looked down at the other end of the court, everything Kareem shot went in."

4-4 fits usually make desirable trump suits. But there are exceptions. This is the first hand from the match between the United States and Indonesia in the semifinals of the World Team Olympiad in Valkenburg, Netherlands.

When the Americans held the North-South cards, they reached the normal contract of five clubs, and made twelve tricks after the lead of a spade. The bidding in the diagram is that of the Indonesian pair, and is largely the result of the forcing one club system they were using. Instead of opening with two clubs, the normal way to show a one club opening bid, South chose to open one diamond. As a result, Indonesia ended up in a slightly inferior contract of five diamonds.

East and West for the United States were the West

Coast pair of Mike Passell and Fred Hamilton. Hamilton led his fourth-best heart, dummy played low, and Passell inserted the nine. Declarer ruffed the heart continuation and led the king of trumps, followed by another trump when West held up the ace. Hamilton won the ace on

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) —
Guys in drag can be funny, to a certain point. Past that point, the drag drags, unless the fellow wearing the dress is Steve Allen or Rodney Dangerfield.

Absent those gentlemen, "Bosom Buddies," an ABC sitcom that premiered last night, should endure about as long as it takes to read this column.

Peter Scolari and Tom Hanks play two buddies who suddenly find themselves out of residence and move into a women's hotel. To get in, and to stay in, they dress as women.

Can you imagine how utterly firesome that gimmick would be after two or three shows?

Every TV comedy has a gimmick — that's the "sit" in "sitcom." The best sitcoms blend the gimmick into background, against which writing and execution are projected. "Barney Miller," for example, or "M-A-S-H."

"Mr. Ed" was a series whose gimmick was the whole show. That series, at least, had a horse.

There are only so many drag jokes available to prime time, and the first episode of "Bosom Buddies" spent a good many of them. One of the guys fiddles with his phony breasts and says, "Am I crooked?" Okay, that one's gone. The other fellow, after a day in his dress, says, "Something happened to me last night. I feel like a completely different kind of man." That's now spent, too.

The real problem here is that "Bosom Buddies" is so completely bound to its exhaustible gimmick. How long can two guys in dresses be funny? For about as long as they'd be funny without the dresses. In this case, the 20 minutes are already gone.

"Breaking Away," the ABC series based on what critics call "that darling little film" of the same title, is better than you'd expect the TV version of a "darling little film" to be. "Darling little films" tend to be fragile creatures.

As it turns out, "Breaking Away" is quite at home on TV. The simple conflicts and resolutions of the story — limited pretty much to local pride vs. university privilege, bicycle races and love gained and lost — are just the stuff of TV series.

"Breaking Away" doesn't need a big screen. It's charm fits nicely into 19 inches. Unfortunately, Shaun Cassidy's acting talents would rattle in confines considerably smaller.

What ABC's "Breaking Away" sorely misses is Dennis Christopher, who played the starry-eyed Dave in the movie. As one of four local teen-agers struggling for identity in a university town, Christopher presented a sort of inspired quasi-lunacy, a joyous craziness that made you happy inside.

Shaun Cassidy, as Dave, presents a sort of simple-mindedness. Come to think of it, that's same lobotomy-souvenir smile he used in a TV movie about a mentally retarded young man a year or so ago. At the time, I thought it was just method acting.

He may improve, though. The rest of the show seems just fine. Steve Tesich, who wrote the movie, wrote this first episode and is serving as executive producer.

MOVING ON — Actress Mary Crosby smiles during a recent interview in an Inglewood, Calif. police station, where she was taping a scene from television movie "Midnight Lace". Miss Crosby, as Kristin in the "Dallas" series, pulled the trigger and shot the infamous J.R., and now her character is being written out of the show's scripts. "Kristin is behind me now," she says. card with suspicion. Eventually, however, he decided to take the lady at face value. He crossed to dummy with the ace of spades and led a club to the nine. West won the ten of clubs, and declarer's hand was now dead. The only other tricks he could collect were dummy's king of spades and the remaining trump, but that merely held his losses to down four! The United States was off to a good start.

Busts Of Marijuana, Several Arrests In S.C. Bust

EDISTO ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Colleton County Sheriff John I. Seigler said drug charges would be filed against 21 men arrested in what the sheriff believes was South Carolina's biggest marijuana bust ever.

Law enforcement agents who staked out a boat landing on the Edisto River 30 miles southeast of Walterboro on an informant's tip found men loading marijuana from two shrimp trawlers into four trucks Thursday morning. Sheriff's deputies arrested five men in the motor vehicles and U.S. Customs Service agents took 16 more suspects into custody aboard the shrimp boats, Seigler said. The sheriff said he didn't know how much pot was in the two tractor-trailers, which were fully loaded, and a pickup truck and 10-ton rented van. But when deputies opened the back doors of the 18-wheelers, bundles of marijuana began falling out. Marijuana residue was found in the shrimp boats. "Even though we do not have the exact tonnage, we feel this bust today probably was the biggest pot bust in South Carolina history," Seigler said. He believed the haul was larger than a raid in April 1979, when authorities seized 21 tons of marijuana from a 70-foot freighter in the Ashepoo River in Colleton County. That is believed to have been the biggest previous marijuana raid in South Carolina.

Acting on a tip received from a confidential informant at 9:30 p.m. Wednesday, three Colleton County sheriff's deputies went to a boat landing at Bennett's Point near St. Helena Sound and the Intracoastal Waterway. Noticing a tractor-trailer, the deputies staked out the area and called for assistance.

Officers said they watched as marijuana was unloaded from two shrimp trawlers and moved by conveyor belt into the two tractor-trailers. When the first truck pulled away from the scene, officers began making arrests. Several of the suspects were carrying large amounts of cash but none were armed, officials said. One man carried $2,100 and another had $1,500, they said.

Officials said the two tractor-trailer trucks had Georgia license plates, but they were unsure of the destination of the vehicles. Authorities said they did not know where the shrimp boats and other vehicles had originated.

About 25 law enforcement agents from the sheriff's department, Walterboro police force, State Law Enforcement Division, Customs Service, state Wildlife Department and U.S. Coast Guard were involved in the bust.

The suspects were taken to the Colleton County Jail in Walterboro and were being processed Thursday night. Seigler said the suspects would all be charged with drug offenses today.

Arrested were Harrel Lewis Jr., John B. Barton Jr., John W. Flannel and Arthur Duncan, of Savannah, Ga.; David M. Summerville, Kermit T. Brogden and Robert C. Michael, of Atlanta; and John O'Hare, Timothy A. Laxton and Aaron D. Staetter, of Orlando, Fla.

Also, Eddie Brantley, Thomas S. Hightower and John I. Stevens, of Freeport, Texas; Mark H. Sale and Donald O. Bohanan, of College Park, Ga.; James A. Hastings and Gregory M. Scott, of Flagler Beach, Fla.; John M. Iyob of Sarasota, Fla.; Thomas E. Folske of Gainesville, Fla.; Jessie L. Mallory of Lake Jackson, Texas; and Josephus L. Proden of Mount Hone, Ark.

BIG MARIJUANA SEIZURE — Colleton County (S.C.) Sheriff John Seigler hands a sample of marijuana to Deputy Earl Fowler from a tractor-trailer seized in one of South Carolina's largest drug busts. Twenty-one persons were arrested and three other vehicles and two fishing boats were seized in the Thursday raid. (AP Laserphoto)

Abscam Prosecutors To Appeal Judge's Acquittal

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — While some defendants celebrated, Philadelphia prosecutors were seeking an appeal today of a federal judge's ruling that acquitted on the grounds of entrapment two Philadelphia politicians convicted of Abscam charges.

U.S. District Judge John P. Fullam, who presided over the extortion-conspiracy trial of former City Council President George X. Schwartz and Councilman Harry P. Jannotti, threw out their Sept. 15 convictions on Wednesday, ruling the courts had an obligation to protect citizens from "governmental overreaching."

"The turkey will go down a lot smoother today," Michael J. "Ozzie" Myers, a Pennsylvania congressman expelled from the House after his August conviction on bribery-conspiracy charges, said Thursday.

Entrapment and government misconduct arguments have been raised by several defendants in the FBI's undercover investigation, and Myers said he hoped a similar decision would be reached in his appeal before the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York.

Rep. John Jenrette, D-S.C., who based his defense on entrapment and is appealing his conviction on Abscam charges, said, "I think our case is stronger than the one in Philadelphia."

Meanwhile, U.S. Attorney Peter F. Vaira said he would initiate an appeal of Fullam's ruling today.

"I'm going to ask that the solicitor general, who is the only one with the authority to do so, direct the appeal to the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals," Vaira said, adding the process will take "a few weeks."

Seven members of Congress and several municipal officials were indicted as a result of the FBI undercover operation, which involved agents posing as representatives of an Arab businessman willing to pay bribes for favors.

Part of the operation involved videotaping politicians accepting envelopes purportedly containing cash.

Fullam's 64-page decision was the first favorable finding for any of the Abscam defendants.

Schwartz, in Miami Beach for the holidays, refused comment on the ruling. But his daughter, Marjorie, said she was delighted with the ruling.

"I believe in my father, and it's the happiest day of my life. I sat through that trial, and to see them destroy a man's reputation, it was horrible," she said. Schwartz resigned his council seat after the guilty verdict.

"I'm flying. I am really happy about it although I still want to see what the decision said," said Jannotti, who took a leave of absence from the council after the trial.

GATHERING OF THE HMONG'S — The Hmong families, who are refugees from Indochina, gathered in Morganton on Thanksgiving Day to celebrate the New Year. Over 200 members of the families from across North and South Carolina met to usher in the New Year in their native garb and with food from their homeland. The New Year celebration is usually held in January, but this is the only time that many of the families were able to get away from their jobs. Entangled By Words

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — A recent letter from the government division of the U.S. Census Bureau has convinced Maricopa County Recorder Bill Henry that the agency ought to stick with numbers and stay away from words.

The letter to Henry and some 3,500 other officials was attached to a report entitled "Need For a Multi-Purpose Cadastre," released by a "Committee on Geodesy" and referring to studies published "quinquennially."

"As the most comprehensive source of timely statistics emanating from local assessing and recording offices, the Bureau of Census has an operational interest in the progress affecting these offices," the letter said. "Consequently, the bureau endorses all reasonable efforts to simplify and thus modernize parcel identification systems, in a sequence of expeditious evolution for multi-purpose land data systems."

A cadastre, by the way, is a public record of property for tax purposes. Geodesy is a branch of mathematics dealing with geography, and quinquennially means every five years.

SENTENCED TO DIE
PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Three black nationalists have been sentenced to death for high treason by a judge who said their attack on a police station, which injured nobody, was "the very worst form of behavior."

NTE Scores Said Related To Pupil Achievement

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A study by the Department of Public Instruction has concluded that "teacher quality", as reflected by scores on the controversial National Teachers

Examination, is more important in boosting student achievement than class size or the amount of money spent per child.

The study has been rejected by state School Superintendent A. Craig Phillips and H. David Bruton, chairman of the State Board of Education, as being inconclusive. The state board has requested $100 million in state funds to reduce class size during the next two years.

It also has drawn opposition from Eliot B. Palmer, assistant executive director of the North Carolina Association of Education.

"This is nothing more than another form of discrimination," said Palmer, who contended that the NTE is biased in favor of prospective teachers with a white, middle class background.

"I don't see any reason why any educator wouldn't oppose the conclusions," Palmer said Thursday. "I don't know what fool could conclude that there is a correlation between a (potential teacher's) score on a test and the achievement of a student on a student test."

The study was prepared at Phillips' request by the statistical services division in the department's controller's office. It was compiled by using the average NTE score for each school system in the state and comparing it with the system's achievement test scores, along with other factors.

"To the best of our knowledge, these are valid results," Assistant Controller Alan T. Hill said. Hill said the statistics have been reviewed and "they are correct."

Phillips disagreed, saying his objection was not related to his support of class-size reductions. "The evidence, the data is just not there," he said.

"We're accepting the notion that the quality of teacher does have a significant impact on achievement," Phillips said. "Now, how you measure that quality and how you relate that to others, well, there are just a lot of questions."

Phillips and Palmer agreed that a higher minimum score on the NTE would reduce the number of blacks qualifying for teaching positions in North Carolina.

Phillips said there will be no change in educational policy because of the study.

The study concluded that the "most significant things to note is that (a) the amount of money spent and (b) class size are not significant contributors to the test scores of the students."

"The other finding ... is the emergence of the NTE scores of the teachers as the strongest predictor of scores among the policy variables," the report said.

Bruton said that conclusion presented a problem in itself.

"The study's saying, the better the teacher the better job you're going to get. And that money's the hardest to get, money to improve the quality of your teachers," Bruton said.

Requirement In Smelter Permit

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Proof of financial backing will be required before environmental permits will be issued to a proposed $550 million aluminum smelter in Columbus County, a state spokesman said Thursday.

Steve Meehan, a spokesman for the Department of Commerce, said the state wants "to make sure we're endorsing a project that is a viable one."

Meehan acknowledged that the requirement was unusual, but he pointed out that the state does not have many investments so large involving a newly established company.

The smelter has been proposed by Coastal and Offshore Plant Systems Inc., which recently moved its headquarters from Wilmington to Washington, D.C.

Company director Wendell McHenry said the move to Washington was made because many of the company's board members live in the Washington area and the company's law firm is located there.

"I would not create the impression that Coastal is evacuating from Wilmington and North Carolina," McHenry said.

McHenry said a small office will be maintained in Wilmington.

McHenry also said that Coastal may construct a proposed smelter in South Carolina's Marlboro County first because that state already has issued a clean air permit for the company. Other considerations also are involved, he said, without elaboration.

A final decision on which smelter will be erected first will be made by Coastal's board, McHenry said.

State Sen. R.C. Soles, D-Columbus, said he was in contact with Coastal president D.J. Hoffman Jr. on Wednesday.

"He was quite concerned because the North Carolina permit had not been issued," Soles said. "He indicated he was going to start on whichever (project) could be started on first."

Meehan said three other companies have told state officials during the past month they might be interested in taking over the Columbus County project if Coastal should drop out.

Program Moves To New Time

"Mental Health Matters" will move to a new air time each Sunday beginning this week. The weekly radio segment will be heard at 10:12 a.m. on WNCT radio. It was formerly aired at 1:06 p.m.

Dr. Malene Irons will be this week's guest. She and her husband, Dr. Fred Irons, are serving as honorary chairpersons of Operation Santa Claus, an annual project of the local Mental Health Association.

Dr. Malene Irons will talk about the purpose of the activity, which is designed to give Christmas presents to mental health patients at institutions as well as at local service sites.

Volunteers wrap and distribute gifts to Pitt County citizens who are mental health service recipients. Gifts will be received through December 5, according to Dr. Irons, and may be taken to the Mental Health Association Office on Evans Street. The association makes Christmas presents available to the Pitt County Mental Health Center among service delivery agencies.
