Cold Out Of Siberia Setting Record Lows

By CHARLOTTE PORTER
Associated Press Writer

A cold front that swept in from Siberia set more freeze records from New Orleans to Portland, Maine, today while rain-swollen rivers poured from their banks in the Pacific Northwest and some western states were basking in unseasonable warmth.

Two homeless residents of Washington, D.C., died of exposure on Christmas Day. Another man was found dead in the doorway of a building in Philadelphia. Thousands of tenants in New York City complained their buildings had no heat on the coldest Christmas of this century.

While New Orleans reported a record 27 this morning, temperatures plunged well below zero in numerous cities in the East for a second day today. It was 26 below in Burlington, Vt., and 2 below in Atlantic City, N.J. Some other sub-zero records included:

Elkins, W.Va., -11;
Portland, Maine, -20; Boston, -4; Concord, N.H., -13;
Hartford, Conn., -14.

By contrast, Los Angeles had its warmest Christmas Day on record, a balmy 85, and the thermometer was heading back into the 80s in Southern California today. Similar readings came from several cities in Arizona.

Besides making some Christmas celebrants shiver in front of their fireplaces, the cold played havoc on one annual historical observance. It was so frigid in Pennsylvania that Philadelphians were forced to abandon their boats and mark George Washington's crossing of the Delaware River by marching across a bridge.

Thursday's lows set records in Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Illinois, Michigan, Arkansas and Maine. Below-zero readings in Massachusetts were the lowest in more than a century, and the reading of 41 below zero in North Stratford, N.H., was the unofficial low for New England.

It was 11 below in Portland, Maine; 10 in Roanoke, Va.; 1 below in New York City; 8 below in Detroit and Chicago; zero in Newark, N.J.; and 13 below in Hartford, Conn. Early today, the mercury fell to 3 below zero in Boston and to 10 in Roanoke, Va., both records.

New Hampshire forecasters blamed the cold on a high-pressure front that drifted in from Siberia and settled over the Northeast and the Ohio and Mississippi river valleys.

"I don't know what is worse, having these dropping in on us or having a nor'easter coming up the coast and dropping a foot and a half of snow on us," said forecaster Fred Schaefer.

For thousands of holiday travelers, the cold meant hours of waiting for someone to come and recharge frozen batteries. The American Automobile Association in Massachusetts, where a low of 26 below zero was recorded, reported five-hour delays in answering emergency calls.

For some who stayed home, it was a battle to keep warm as power failed. The extreme cold loosened a clamp on a Dalton, Mass., utility pole, cutting electricity to about 500 people for several hours, and in Springfield, Mass., dozens of customers lost their gas heat for much of the day.

At Mildred Hull's home, Christmas guests opened packages in front of the fireplace.

"It's kind of tough with the ribbons," she said. "The children are shivering."

The cold hampered crews working to restore power to more than 2,500 residents of Connecticut. Springfield and Boston officials said the cold was to blame for traffic lights sticking on one color or refusing to shine at all.

Hundreds of minor traffic accidents were reported in New Jersey as snow and ice made driving treacherous.

At Washington Crossing, Pa., it was one degree above zero, the coldest Christmas on record, as Revolutionary War enthusiasts tried to re-enact George Washington's sneak attack on Hessian troops encamped at Trenton, N.J.

John B. Kelly, a former Philadelphia city councilman and brother of Princess Grace of Monaco, who has played Washington in the observance for three years, decided that he would wait for another day to cross the partly-frozen river by boat, as Washington did the night of the great military victory in 1776.

"There's no water out there," said Kelly, who instead took his troops over to Trenton by bridge. "It was just a symbolic crossing."

ALGERIAN WITH HOSTAGES — Three U.S. hostages, sporting T-shirts labeled with the names of American colleges, talk with Abdolkarim Gharaeb, left, the Algerian ambassador to Iran, on Christmas Day in Tehran. Report Hostages Visited By Algeria Ambassador

By The Associated Press

The Iranian news agency said today that the Algerian ambassador to Iran had met with all 52 of the American hostages and found them "looking quite healthy and well nourished."

There were other reports he had briefed them on the complex U.S.-Iranian negotiations for their release.

Papal envoy to Iran Anibale Bugnini visited the hostages Christmas morning and said they were in good health and high spirits but that he had seen only 25 or 30 of them. This, and the telecast of a short film of the meeting showing only a few of the hostages, had aroused some concern for the condition of the other 20 or so Americans.

The Algerians, who have been acting as intermediaries between Tehran and the United States, saw the hostages in their "places of detention," Tehran Radiosaid.

Three Americans are being held in the Foreign Ministry and the whereabouts of the other 49 has been a closely guarded secret since the Iranian captors said they dispersed the Americans around the country after a failed U.S. rescue attempt last April.

But reports on the Algerian ambassador's visit to the hostages, indicated all 52 hostages were in Tehran.

One report said the Algerian Ambassador met with all 52 hostages — 49 of them in one unnamed location — from 5 p.m. Thursday local time to 4:30 a.m. today. Another report said he described to them the weeks of negotiations that led to Iran's demand of $24 billion in cash, assets and gold in exchange for their freedom.

Pars said Gheraieb and Ben Hossein of Algeria's Foreign Ministry met with all the hostages and the ambassador said "All the hostages were looking quite healthy since they were living in very good conditions. They were well nourished and were provided with every facility."

Gheraieb said the hostages could speak freely but he had no comment on their reaction to the news of the negotiations, one report said.

Photographs released by Iran showed the ambassador talking with three unidentified hostages. They three men were wearing T-shirts bearing the names of American universities.

He reportedly held the meetings at the request of both the United States and Iran, and said he would convey letters from the Americans to their families. Gheraieb was expected to leave Tehran for Washington to report to U.S. officials on the hostage situation. According to Pars, he said he "guessed" the United States would make its latest reply on the hostages "within three days."

Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie has called the Iranian demands "unreasonable" and expressed doubt that progress on release of the hostages can be achieved before President Carter leaves office on Jan. 20.

According to another report, Behzad Nabavi, in charge of Iran's hostage negotiations, said that if the United States was willing to propose some other kind of guarantee, Iran might consider it. There was no indication of what kind of guarantee he meant.

Tehran Radio said the United States must either (Please turn to Page 16)

Cold Christmas

Christmas 1980, though without snow, turned out to be a cold weather holiday with low temperature dipping into the teens.

Dave Perkins, Greenville Water Plant operator, reports that on Wednesday, December 24, the weather was still typically moderately warm for this time of year with a high of 51 degrees Fahrenheit and the low Christmas Eve dropping to 34 degrees. A slight rainfall of .01 inches that day made it a damp, cool day.

On Christmas day, with the rains gone, the weather turned colder, with a low of 14 degrees and a high of 50 degrees registered.

Today continues to be cold. At 4 a.m. this morning, the thermometer dropped to a chilling 13 degrees, and had risen only one point to 14 degrees at 8 a.m.

Over the holidays, requests for assistance from individuals or families with fuel needs due to the cold weather seems to have been minimal in the Greenville area.

A spokesman at REAL House says they received two or three requests for last minute fuel assistance, and that most requests of this nature had been received and handled prior to the holidays.

Confer Over Polish Issue

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet

President Leonid I. Brezhnev met today with Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek and both men denounced what they said were "attempts of imperialist and other reactionary circles" to subvert socialist Poland, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

Tass said the Soviet leader told Czyrek he was confident Poland's problems will be overcome under the guidance of the Polish Communist Party. It said the meeting was held in a "warm and cordial atmosphere."

It was the first reported session between top Soviet and Polish officials since a Warsaw Pact summit convened here Dec. 5 to discuss Soviet bloc response to Poland's labor turmoil.

At the time of the summit, there was widespread concern in the West that the Soviets might move troops into Poland to quell its fledgling independent labor movement, formed in agreements ending last summer's widespread strikes.

Tass said Brezhnev, Czyrek and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko discussed "questions linked with further development and perfection of (bilateral) cooperation." The Soviet Union recently increased its economic aid to Poland, which incurred an estimated $23 billion deficit this year.

The talks also were expected to focus on the Warsaw government's efforts to control its labor activists and dissidents, Western observers said.

Polish media was closed for Christmas and had no commentary on the visit.

Meanwhile, the Soviet Communist Party daily Pravda published a major theoretical article today that once again denounced strike action and "free" trade unions in socialist countries.

Referring directly to Poland, it said work stoppages in socialist countries, for any reason, play into the hands of "anti-socialist elements" seeking to change the countries' social system.

The article left virtually no justification for strikes in a socialist country, claiming that in the "new society," unions have no need to turn to "strikes and other extreme measures to defend workers' rights."

The use of such measures, it said, testify either to "an inability of workers to use their rights fully" or to workers' "impatience" to receive certain benefits before other workers do.

Pravda reminded workers that material benefits are determined by what a society produces, and that "it is well known that it is impossible to distribute and consume more than is produced."

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) —

Some North Carolina towns are just plain confused.

The 1980 census figures show the several towns' populations shrank during the 1970s. The town officials aren't sure why either, but municipal managers reacted in anger because they feared that smaller populations would mean less money from federal grants and sales taxes, and for highway repairs.

Some managers even began counting empty apartments, voting lists, sewer hookups and vacant houses to prove census takers had missed something.

But the facts of the census still say otherwise. According to those figures Wilmington dropped 5.2 percent in population from 1970 to 1980. Hickory lost 0.1 percent. Statesville lost 7.2 percent. Winston-Salem 1 percent and Asheville 7.1 percent.

Other cities at first expected a population drop, but then actually scored small gains when census takers studied recent annexations and data gathered from apartment complexes and voting lists.

Wadesboro got bad news last summer when officials were told the town had lost 11 percent of its people over the decade. But the corrected data gives the Anson County town a population of 4,066 people — 2.7 percent higher than 10 years ago.

Census officials can't explain the increases or the decreases — or the increase in the state's population from 5,082,059 in 1970 to 5,846,159 in 1980, making North Carolina the 10th most populous state. Officials say they still don't have enough information to guess.

"All we've got now are still preliminary figures," said Lawrence McNutt of the Census Bureau's Charlotte office. "And they can't tell you everything."

Towns will just have to wait until state officials let computers examine the data to analyze population counts, interpret growth rates and examine the number of households.

Certain trends are beginning to take shape, however.

"The decline in persons per household appears to be a lot greater than we thought," said state Demographer Francine Ewing. "We expected a 12 to 13 percent drop ... but it looks like it's going to be something like a 15 to 20 percent drop."

That means families are getting smaller because of divorce, declining birth rates and other factors.

One unexpected trend is the increase the populations of counties whose cities are declining. For example, Wilmington's population shrank 5.2 percent over the decade, but the population in New Hanover County grew 23.8 percent.

"Right now, I can't explain that," Ms. Ewing said. "All I can do is marvel at it."

MAGAZINE BILLING MIXUP

I ordered "Mother Earth News" magazine from American Family Publishers last year. They billed me and so did "Mother Earth News." So I paid "Mother Earth News." For some time now I've been getting bills from American Family Publishers, saying they'll turn me over to a magazine billing collection agency, which will ruin my chances for ordering future magazine subscriptions from anyone. Yet when I write to them to try to straighten it all out, I get no response, except form letters which are not applicable to my situation. Also, my subscription was cut off after two issues. C. B.

Hotline called American Family Publishers in Chicago and explained your situation. The man we talked to was cordial, but could offer no explanation as to why your letters have not been answered. He said billing from his company will stop immediately and took responsibility for informing Mother Earth News of your non-payment, which resulted in your subscription being cut off. He suggested that you write Mother Earth News, enclosing a copy of your canceled check to show that you have, indeed, paid for your subscription directly to its office in Hendersonville. He could not explain why you were billed twice, and said he's glad to give up the commission his company would have received and regrets the great inconvenience the mixup has caused you.

Yuletide Marred By Dozens Of Deaths In Fires

By DAVID GREEN

Associated Press Writer
Strangers cheered a Cleveland couple distraught over a missing child, and thousands of elderly and needy people sat down to free meals ranging from simple turkey to rabbit in champagne sauce as Americans marked Christmas with the spirit of charity.

Meanwhile, more than two dozen people died and others were forced to flee into record-breaking cold as fires faged through homes in a number of cities.

President Carter

family spent the day in Plains, Ga. Carter gave his wife a television set, said Rosalynn Carter, because the family didn't have one in that community, where the Carters will settle next month.

One of the larger free dinners was held in San Francisco, where the Franciscan fathers of St. Boniface Church served turkey to 4,000 people in the seedy Tenderloin district.

The dinner attracted down-and-outers from the attended were just out of jobs or old, said Father Floyd Lotito.

"We ask no questions and give no sermons here," he said.

In Vineland, N.J., the celebration was fancier as about 100 senior citizens dined on rabbit in champagne sauce and candied fruit in brandy sauce, prepared by Mayor Patrick Fiorilli.

"We were just sitting in the office and thinking about what senior citizens with no families do on Christmas 11 year," Fiorilli said. At the same time, however, Christmas Day fires claimed 30 lives.

In Sioux City, Iowa, six children ranging in age from 10 months to 14 years were killed when fire engulfed their home. Their parents had left for a short time to collect presents at the house of a nearby relative. The fire may have started when a Christmas tree ignited, officials said.

In Upper Arlington, Ohio, six people died when fire swept through a two-story chimney may have ignited floor joists, officials said. Among the victims was Carol Schoonover, 38, a former nun who was awaiting the birth of her first child.

Four members of a family were killed in a house fire in Richmond, R.I. Another house fire in Pines, Ind., also took four lives, and two people died in a Mount Pleasant, S.C., blaze.

Fatal fires were also reported in New York, where four died, and in Indianapolis, Frankfort, Ky., Portland, Maine, and Pit-

Dear Abby

Face The Owners And Clear Your Conscience

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I can't sleep for worrying about something I did that is so terrible I can't believe I actually did it.

While driving on wet pavement, I hit a dog. I stopped immediately, but the dog was already dead. The dog had tags, so I put it in my car and started to take it to the owner, but it was such a beautiful dog, I didn't have the heart to face the owner. So I drove out to the city dump and disposed of it under a lot of debris.

Abby, my conscience has been bothering me something terrible since this happened. I even went to confession, but didn't have the nerve to confess this sin.

I am sure the owners of that dog are looking for it, assuming it is lost. Would it be better if they knew it was dead? Please advise me.

NO GUTS

DEAR NO GUTS: Yes, it would be far better for the owners to know the truth than to go on searching, and hoping and praying they will find their beloved pet. I beg you to inform the owners. If you lack the guts, give me the facts, and I will do it for you.

DEAR ABBY: Last June I was engaged to be married on Thanksgiving Day to a man I'll call John. I had several showers and received some lovely shower gifts. I called off the wedding in September, but delayed returning the shower gifts because I felt that John and I might get back together again.

In the meantime I met another man I'll call Pat, and now I know I will never go back to John. In fact, it appears that I will be marrying Pat right after Christmas.

What should I do about the shower gifts? Although they were given to me when my intentions were to marry John, is it proper to keep them to use with Pat? My mother says it's not proper etiquette. What do you say?

PERPLEXED IN FRESNO

DEAR PERPLEXED: Common sense, consideration and kindness transcend etiquette any day in my book. Keep the gifts that came from your friends and relatives. But return those that came from John's.

DEAR ABBY: When Gary and I were married, we agreed that we would have no children. (I was 21 and he was 23 at the time.) Gary came from a poor family and was struggling through medical school, and I came from a broken home and wanted to be certain our marriage would survive before bringing children into the world.

Gary is now a physician and I am a medical secretary. We could easily support a family, but he doesn't want children. He thinks they would tie us down. He is a wonderful husband and I'm sure he'd be a good father. We are good friends as well as lovers, and we enjoy travel and the freedom that only childless couples have.

I want a child, but every time I mention it, Gary says no. I'm considering getting pregnant "accidentally" on purpose.

Should I honor his wishes and my promise? Or get pregnant and hope that Gary will forgive me and be as happy as I after the baby is here? I am 33 and time is running out.

SOMETHING MISSING

DEAR MISSING: Don't trick Gary into fatherhood. He may not forgive you — or the child. If you can't persuade him that a child would enrich your lives, better to content yourself with something missing than to betray him with something added.

All Those Leftovers!

Leftovers can be met with groans or can be welcomed. They're a time and energy saver for you so use them creatively. There are many good recipes that use cooked ham, turkey and beef. Turkey can substitute for chicken in most recipes. You can save time and effort if you planned your menu around foods that can be "disguised" to go for another party or special meal. Many types of casseroles can be prepared that would be suitable for a brunch, luncheon or buffet. Small sandwiches can be turned into festive fare with special garnishes. Meat salads make a nice, light luncheon dish; add soup for a warm touch. Crepes with meat fillings go for brunch, lunch or dinner.

Leftovers can be frozen for later use. Casseroles freeze well; a double recipe (one for now, one for later) is an energy and time saver. You can also freeze meat slices for sandwiches or cubes for salads or casseroles. Be sure your packages are in convenient sizes.

Food Safety or Is It Really The 24-Hour Bug?

Food poisoning is a big concern during holiday times. Lack of cold storage space, types of food prepared, large quantities of food prepared and more leisurely dining all contribute to the increase of illness at holiday time.

Upset stomachs or flu-like symptoms may not be due to over eating, but could actually be due to food poisoning. There's no need for this to happen if food is prepared and stored properly.

Holiday Foods

Many typical foods are great places for bacteria to grow, so watch out!

Creamed vegetables, gravies, foods with eggs and dairy products, meats, fish and poultry should be stored in the refrigerator; never leave them at room temperature for two hours or more.

Cooking the turkey, especially if it's stuffed, requires special care.

Buffet Meals

Do you serve meals buffet style? Because it's a convenient and easy way of entertaining, it is often the choice at holiday times. Extra care must be taken if it's to be done safely.

It's important to remember that food poisoning bacteria grow rapidly at room temperature and only 2-4 hours will allow enough growth to make the food unsafe. Buffet serving can mean that food could sit for long periods of time. The

'I Think I Can Fix It' Signals Fresh Disaster

By GAIL MICHAELS

When it comes to manual ineptitude, Phillip and I take the cake, that is, if we don't drop it.

Phillip goes in mainly for woodworking. He actually built me a desk once. It was 6 feet high except in the middle. There it was 5-and-a-half.

He also cut the slats for our bed. They're all one-fourth inch too short. Meg once dropped a Nerf ball on the bed, and the mattress fell in.

I can't complain much though. What Phillip is to woodworking, I am to sewing. Last year I made one of those stuffed Christmas trees for my aunt, and she wrote a note thanking me for the cup rack.

This year my family was spared. On December 1, my sewing machine broke down. My mother missed out on the designer original potholders. And my father-in-law didn't get the red and green quilted vest I had planned for him.

Unfortunately, the sewing machine was only the first thing to go. It has long been a theory of mine that the machines in our house share a malevolent intelligence. Phillip thinks I'm bananas, but he can't come up with any better explanation for the way our appliances always manage to poop out when we are most financially pressed. No sooner did we decide that we could do without a sewing machine for awhile than the vacuum cleaner froze on the "low" setting.

Now this might not have presented a problem in some homes, but our house is awash in a sea of algae-colored shag. I tried my best to push the vacuum through it; I was at it at least five minutes. But it was obvious that the machine needed repair. I felt that we must do it immediately. Phillip, however, said that the rug had managed without it that long; it could undoubtedly go without it for two or three more months.

Because things always come in threes, I expected my washing machine to be next. It was about time for its quarterly wire-popping stunt. But apparently, it surrendered its prerogative to the electric typewriter. I was right in the middle of a column due two days earlier when I heard a ping and the machine's right hand margin stuck two inches from the left side of the page.

I shouldn't have been so surprised. My typewriter is more temperamental than James Garner's knees. But being as I was in the midst of my annual "get everything done before Meg gets out for the holidays" rush, I panicked.

"That's it," I said. "It's absolutely essential that I get this repaired, and it'll take three or four days at least! I may as well go to bed with a family-sized bottle of Tylenol and never get up again."

Phillip walked over and examined the typewriter. "Don't get so upset. Maybe I can fix it."

That was enough to send me into shock. "It's just a typewriter. There's no call for violence."

"Gail, I know what I'm doing. Some sort of belt is loose, that's all."

He went to get his screwdriver while I administered last rites. After poking around a few minutes, he turned the typewriter on. Sure enough, it gasped two times and died.

"Now what am I going to do?" I wailed.

"I guess you'll have to use my old manual."

"Great! My fingers can't even walk through the yellow pages without stumbling. How do you expect me to manage with that prehistoric Remington?"

"I don't know, but you'll have to."

The next thing slated to break down in this house is me.

Building Costs Skyrocketed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average price of a newly built home in the Washington metropolitan area has been climbing at a rate of 18 percent a year and now stands at $113,700, according to a local study.

It said that within the District of Columbia, the average price of new homes was currently more than $215,000 — mainly a result of the opening of several high-priced luxury developments and condominium complexes.

The study was prepared by Housing Data Reports, a research firm based in suburban Bethesda, Md.

Ousted Leader Took Own Life

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — Andre Pedro Gomes, chief of staff of the Guinea-Bissau armed forces before a military-led coup in the small northwest African nation, committed suicide in his prison cell, the Portuguese national news agency ANOP said today.

Gomes had been imprisoned since Nov. 24.

Paving Contractor Will Face N.C. Court Action

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Another North Carolina paving company is going to court, but this time it has nothing to do with bid-rigging.

Instead, the state has filed suit against Dixie Asphalt Paving and Concrete Co. and a family of owner-managers, accusing them of deceptive commercial practices.

State Attorney General Rufus Edmisten contends the five defendants made false representations to prospective customers, performed shoddy asphalt and concrete work around Forsyth County and refused to correct defective work.

The company primarily deals in paving driveways with asphalt and concrete.

Raymond A. Nugent, his wife Roma and three adult sons — Warren John Nugent, Scott Dennis Nugent and Allen Paul Nugent — are named as defendants in Edmisten's action in Wake Superior Court.

Deputy sheriffs said the family has moved out of the house and the county.

The state has attached the Nugent property at Winston-Salem's Old Town as security for $75,000 in damage claims. The claims must be satisfied before the property can be sold.

In addition:

—Attorney William T. Graham of Winston-Salem has filed a claim for $2,750 he says the company owes him for a civil suit and two of the sons owe him for his services in criminal cases.

—The Forsyth County tax supervisor's office has served the Nugents with an assessment for delinquent taxes.

—Hoots Concrete Co. has filed a $5,883 suit in Forsyth Superior Court alleging the Nugents did not pay for delivered materials.

Edmisten's suit alleges that the Nugents solicited business through newspaper advertisements and handbills that portray the company as licensed, bonded and insured, when in fact it is not.

The suit contends the company regularly refused to follow through on guarantees of their work; produced unworkmanlike projects with non-hardening asphalt, early base failure and sinking, cracking and crumbling of the asphalt material; and refused to correct defects or refund part of the purchase price.

Edmisten has asked for an order restraining the defendants from deceptive practices and has set a preliminary hearing for Jan. 5.

Town Ravaged By Tidal Wave

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A tidal wave struck the coastal town of Gingoog City, leaving more than 500 people homeless but apparently causing no deaths, the national Red Cross reported today.

The Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C.—Friday, December 26, 1980—3

Ireneo Zabala of the Red Cross said a telegram from the Red Cross at Gingoog City reported that the wave struck about Thursday night, destroying at least 53 houses and damaging 20 others. He said about 85 families, totaling 545 people, were left homeless and were temporarily housed in a public school and soft drink warehouse.

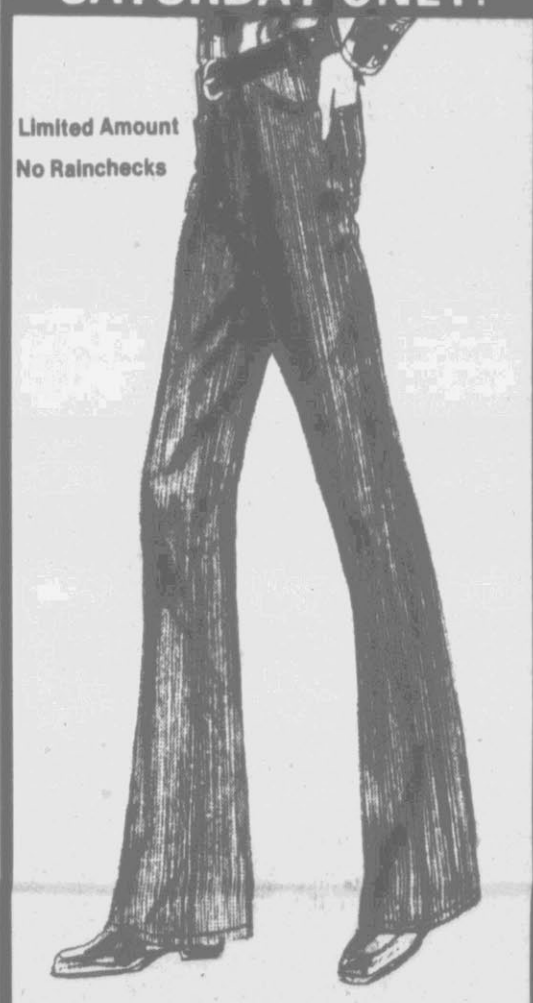

Gingoog City is about 490 miles southeast of Manila. Zabala said he had no details but that the telegram said "no casualties were reported."

Numerous earth tremors have been reported in the Philippines in recent days.

- chance of food poisoning is great!
- Several things can be done to insure buffet foods are safe:
1. Make sure that cold cuts are fresh and chilled. Use several trays to hold them, while one is on the table, the rest should be refrigerated. Then bring out a fresh, cold tray when needed.
 2. Meat and seafood salads should be put in serving dishes and placed on ice or use smaller serving dishes to bring out as needed.
 3. Deviled eggs, cheese and sour cream dips all must be kept cold. Serve only what is needed at any one time and replace with a fresh, cold dish when necessary.
 4. Eggnog is another food to be especially careful with. A bowlful is a fine breeding place for bacteria, so keep egg-nog well chilled and replace the supply often.
 5. Perishable cold foods such as cream pies, seafoods and dishes made with eggs, fish, meat and poultry should be kept cold — below 40° F. — and never left standing at room temperature for more than two hours.
 6. Hot perishable foods such as seafood, poultry and cooked meats should be kept about 140° F. These foods should also not be allowed to stand at room temperature for more than two hours. Take them piping hot from the range and keep them hot by using slow cookers, chafing dishes, fondue pots or hot trays.
- Packing The Refrigerator
- Everyone knows the problems of food storage at holiday time. Refrigerators always seem to shrink. Here are a few things you can do to make the most of refrigerator space.
1. Go through and be ruthless. Questionable items such as old leftovers should be discarded. Freeze any leftovers that won't be eaten quickly.
 2. Consolidate partly used jars of condiments or other items that will mix together acceptably.
 3. Certain items may be safely stored at room temperature: condiments such as mustard, relish, catsup, jams, jellies, preserves, peanut butter. Mayonnaise may also be safely stored at room temperature. It often has unfairly been accused of causing food poisoning, but is actually too acid to allow food poisoning bacteria to grow. Refrigeration does preserve fresh flavor and quality of these foods over long periods of time, but a short time at room temperature will not affect them.
 4. Fruits and vegetables can be stored on a cold porch or basement or outdoors if they are animal and bug proof. If it's very cold (below 40° F) any food can be stored outside.
 5. To prevent wasted space, be sure to use storage containers that are not too large for the amount of food.

We Can't Meet Ransom

It has to be a bleak Christmas for the American hostages held in Tehran and for their families in this country.

They have been deprived of their liberty in a way that is difficult for any of us in this nation to understand.

Still our government could not accede to the multi-billion dollar ransom demand that the Iranian government — or what passes for a government — has made known.

To do so would make every American diplomat the potential target for any crazies who want to grab them and demand ransom. It would give credence to the Iranian contention that that country had some kind of right to capture representatives of the United States and hold them as prisoners. In sum, it would strike at the orderly processes of diplomatic representation that exist world-wide.

There can be no giving in to illegal demands in this case or any other like it. We don't know how the dilemma will be resolved; perhaps the solution will have to await the involvement of a civilized government in the nation of Iran.

Family Holiday Letter

WASHINGTON — Some people send Christmas cards — others send tomes. They are Xeroxed letters, catching you up on everything that has gone on in the family for the past year.

Harlequin decided to send one out this year which would take care of the holiday epistles once and for all.

"Dear Buchwalds, 'Well, it's been a very eventful year for the Harlequins. Clint Jr., who just graduated from Med School, traded in the old Pinto for a new Mercedes-Benz 450.

"Julie, our oldest daughter, got married to a very nice boy from Houston who is in business with his father, selling and buying tankers. The kids found a lovely four-bedroom, Spanish-style house in Beverly Hills for $46,000, with a mortgage of 5 3/4 per-

"Teddy, our oldest son, is studying to be a genetic engineer at Harvard. He has loved splicing genes ever since he was a little boy.

"Everett, our middle daughter Connie's husband, won his second Pulitzer Prize offers from Notre Dame, the University of Southern California, Alabama and Oklahoma. We told him it was his own decision and we didn't care if he played in the Rose Bowl, the Sugar Bowl or the Cotton Bowl as long as he was happy.

"Lots of visitors from abroad. Princess Grace stayed with us for Thanksgiving, and Prince Charles was our house guest when he came over to play polo last spring. Bjorn Borg visited us on his way to the U.S. Tennis Championships, and Pavarotti showed up unexpectedly one evening with his suitcases and said he hated the hotel they had put him in. Naturally, we said he could stay as long as he wished.

"The only sad news is that we had to withdraw Far Flung from the Kentucky Derby because of a bruised ankle.

"Our trainer decided to put him out to stud for a $5,000 fee.

"As for myself, I lucked out this year. I found some wonderful shelters, so I only had to pay $50 in income taxes last April. A Saudi Arabian sheik bought our farm in the country for $1.5 million and the computer company I invested $25,000 in last year just went public and my stock shot through the roof. The Lear jet was in the shop for two weeks, but we should have it out in time to go to Bermuda.

"All in all, it's been a quiet year, but we have nothing to complain about. Hope you have a wonderful holiday season and a great 1981.

"Love from all the Harlequins.

The Chimney Caper Story

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent
NEW YORK (AP) — Desk sergeant Ned Martin peered over the green lamps of justice in the 18th Precinct, and what to his crime-beary eyes should appear but Santa Claus trudging in to report a stolen chimney.

"Let me get this straight, Santa," the sergeant sighed. "Some meany made a heist of your chimney."

"You got it," rasped the old man, whose beard and breath seemed to be made of old bar rags. "And not a copper in sight when you need one."

This evoked a raucous titter from three hookers being booked for soliciting beneath the Rockefeller Center Christmas tree and stirred to life a gray flannel drunk sleeping off an office party. He burped and joined the guffawing.

"Cool it, Santa," Martin cautioned, relieved to note that the press was still occupied at a savings bank freeloading the street. "Let's just have the details."

The sergeant's ulcer throbbed like a Salvation Army tambourine. The season to be jolly always deposits a grab bag of human folly on the steps of the 18th, better known as Midtown North, Manhattan's busiest. Since 9 a.m. there had been a steady procession of stolen wallets, cab fare ripoffs, cars broken into, shoplifters, unlicensed peddlers, pickpockets, 3-card monte dealers, panhandlers, dope pushers, the usual grafters, grifters and brawlers. Victims and victimizers, all took their turn under the green lamps on the tall mahogany desk. And now Santa.

"Where was this chimney and how come it's missing?" The sergeant tried to hurry things along before the reporters got back.

"Stolen," the florid-faced elf corrected him. "My post is outside Cartier's, the jewelers, on Fifth Avenue. That wind today would shave you, so I went for a cup of coffee at the Brew & Burger. When I got back 10 minutes later, maybe a little longer, my chimney was gone. Filched. In broad daylight, on a crowded street."

Martin signaled the 124 officer, the precinct clerk, to take down the squalor, the complaint. Santa's outraged citizen stance spelled trouble.

"Brew & Burger?" he echoed in mock disbelief. "I didn't know they was big on coffee. What's the value of the chimney and how much was in it?"

"What do I know from chimneys," Santa shrugged. "Some plywood; a little paint, say 20 bucks. On a cold morning like this maybe I took in nine, 10 clams. Dudes who frequent fancy ice works ain't big at stuffing the greenery into chimneys. You do better in front of Woolworth's."

Martin ignored this input of pavement psychology and figured the loss at $30 at most. Petty larceny, a misdemeanor. The precinct had more important cases on the blotter, but he decided to buck this one up to the squad detective unit in case the press got onto it. He could see the Post and the News yucking it up at police expense and another Times editorial on the deterioration of midtown. Besides, the commissioner was rabid on street crime.

"O.K. Santa. Get yourself some more coffee."

"You better — I got my reputation to consider," crowed the crime victim, punctuating his threat with a beard-shaking hiccup.

Upstairs in the squad room, 1st Class Detective Bernie Gold thought the case of the missing chimney might have civil rights ramifications. Church property and all that. He alerted the bunco squad to be on the lookout for a con man operating an illegal chimney. At his nod, three other detectives deserted their coffee mugs and hit the pavement running. New York's finest drew their dragnet. Even the A & E boys, arson and explosion, were called in. Swift as a midnight flight of reindeer, the facts clattered into place.

A bank dick at Marine Midland saw Santa entering the Brew & Burger near 11. Saw him leave, with tottering step, at half past one. Angelo, the hot dog vendor outside the TWA office, gave Santa a free frank with onions to "get the booze out of his breath." A monsignor getting into a cab near St. Patrick's witnessed Santa's return: "He was shaking his bell at a meter maid and shouting his chimney had been stolen."

But shortly before that, it was still in place. A decoy cop, posing as a chesnut salesman, noticed an untended chimney as he was going off duty early for lack of suspects. "All the muggers," he convinced the lieutenant "are either home decorating a tree or out stealing one."

The first break in the case from a Radio City Music Hall Rockette. On her way to the stage door, she saw a tall man in a tuxedo and trench coat hurrying down 52nd St. with a chimney in his arms. Detectives fanned out and did a door by door.

A lady walking her Afghan caught a glimpse of a tall man with a chimney going down the steps of the 21 Club. His collar was drawn up against the biting wind so she missed the tuxedo bit and figured he was a deliveryman with some late Christmas decorations. The coat check chick at 21 confirmed the arrival of a chimney. Sure enough, there it was: parked next to the cigar counter. Seems one of the waiters on his way to the bank was intrigued by the Santa-less chimney. When it was still there after he sweated out the long teller line, he decided to take it along to the club for safekeeping in case Santa was off on a bender. Not wishing trouble on anyone, he told two Armenians selling stolen neckties on the corner where he was taking the chimney. Unfortunately, they were run in for peddling without a license before Santa got the word.

Every Christmas story should have a happy ending. The case of the missing chimney is no exception. A Wall Street brokerage house was having its holiday bash in a private dining room upstairs at 21 about the time the waiter deposited the chimney by the cigar counter. Leaving the premises full of the Christmas spirit, to say nothing of assorted martinis, stingers

Pains Of Gas Tax

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — Growing up on a Wilson County farm, Gov. Jim Hunt knows what it means to find yourself between a rock and a hard place.

He learned his lessons well. When it comes to a gas tax hike for Tar Heel motorists, the governor seems to remember his basic strategy: either try cutting a new row; or come back later with help to bust the rock.

It was clear well over two years ago that gas tax income would fall below highway construction and maintenance needs as inflation combined with driver conservation to cut into revenues.

Tom Bradshaw, secretary of transportation, and some leaders in the General Assembly called, then, for a higher gas tax — maybe two cents per gallon. But Hunt, obligated by his no-tax-hike pledge, said No.

He named a study commission, headed by former Gov. Dan Moore to look at the problem and suggest solutions. It was certain that a higher gas tax would be recommended. The report was not due until this December; after the general election in November.

Reluctant

Meanwhile, the people back home understood what was happening, and many candidates for the 1981 General Assembly found themselves pinned down on a higher gas tax. Close Hunt aides now tell us that it is doubtful there are votes enough in the Legislature to pass a tax hike.

When Hunt got his report from the Moore Commission, it was painfully obvious that he sees himself between another rock and a hard place. Departing from his usual style of immediately laying out what he thinks needs to be done, the governor waffled: he will study the report; he will delay a recommendation until late in the General Assembly session; he will push for more efficient and economic operation of the Transportation Department; and he will take letters and phone calls from the public about how to get the job done.

Meanwhile, a slide presentation and taped commentary will be shuttled from town to town seeking to convince citizens of the need and, in reality, try to establish a public resignation to the harsh facts of life. And the fact that all of this will happen only after another winter of potholes and broken pavement which will be worse than usual because corners have been cut in past years, and can't be fixed because the money isn't available may dampen current widespread opposition to the gas tax.

Facing such a many-horned dilemma, Hunt would characteristically forge ahead with his proposal. He knows that more money is imperative to just maintain the present system, let alone building new roads to serve a growing population and help attract new industry.

But he also knows that despite a study commission report and legislative action, the proposal is going to be labeled Hunt's Gas Tax Hike.

Seething
And he also knows that the public is seething over the fact that they are trying to conserve gas by driving smaller cars slower and less often; that gas prices are going up regularly; that auto costs are out of reach for many; that federal taxes are going up; and that the bid-rigging scandal is growing messier and messier.

"Before I act on the report of the Moore Commission, I am going to satisfy myself that we are saving every nickel we possibly can," Hunt commented recently. He will also satisfy himself that the general public is convinced that a tax increase is inevitable.

Meanwhile, another rock is in sight. The Moore Commission report makes it clear that just boosting income some $200 million a year will only solve short-term problems.

"With reluctance, we recognize that increased congestion and lower quality standards must be accepted ... for the immediate future we will be able to meet only a fraction of our highway needs," even with the higher income, that commission determined.

Other Editors Say A Closed Scandal

(High Point Enterprise)

For months, now, the media of North Carolina have been giving citizens a far-from-complete account of what measures up as a major scandal. Thousands of dollars in fines have been paid and a number of executives sent to prison for conspiracy to rig bids on state paving contracts. Most of the big names in this considerable industry have been involved.

Curiously enough, the stories go on skimming the surface. Exactly how the crimes were committed, and whether there is adequate investigation of involvement by public officials, are matters closed to public scrutiny.

Because the courts have handled most cases through guilty pleas and promises to cooperate in the investigations, there has yet to be any full airing of what we must assume to be raids on the public pocketbook.

Basic to the matter is reported evidence that whenever major state contracts were to be bid upon, those who are supposed to set their best price in sealed bids have known in advance what other contractors would be bidding. There has been talk that the state has in effect been "carved up" into paving company fiefdoms which, if nothing else, has undoubtedly contributed to runaway highway maintenance costs. During the current debate over how to finance these needs, it has been repeatedly pointed out that highway repair costs had risen at rates which make recent inflation rates look small by comparison.

Beyond that, the public (taxpayers) have been able to learn little. How was the first conspiracy discovered? How long has it been going on? Should state Department of Transportation experts have spotted questionable bidding long ago? In fraud this widespread, and involving so many politically powerful people, is there basis for suspicion that public officials might have somehow been involved? We believe there are answers that the people should have.

Strength For Today

ONLY THE CHIMES

The tower of an old church in London contains the works and chimes of a large clock, but there is no face or hands of the clock on the outside of the tower. The architect who designed the tower objected that a clock face would spoil the symmetry of the architecture, and in deference to him the face was omitted. But the chimes work continuously, sounding at fifteen minute intervals.

This seems to be an unsatisfactory arrangement. The chimes of course do not indicate the time of day until they sound the hour. The rest of the time the chimes may be very melodious, but they tell the listener nothing.

The lives of many people operate in just this same way. They may be good in heart and talk pleasantly, but they say nothing indicating any commitments or principles. If we are around them long enough for them to strike the hour, then we might know their moral time, but that might entail a long wait. What these people need are faces and hands to tell passers-by the exact time of day. — Elisha Douglass

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

Martin Anderson, the conservative scholar chosen as President-elect Ronald Reagan's closest adviser on domestic affairs, says poverty has been virtually wiped out in the United States.

"The number of people remaining in poverty is very small and it grows smaller every day," he says.

Only a handful of the needy go without help — those unaware they qualify for benefits, those unjustly denied aid or those who don't apply because of the social stigma, he says.

As a result, he adds, the nation's welfare problem isn't how to help the poor get by, but how to get them off welfare.

Anderson says a costly side effect of "the virtual elimination of poverty in the United States" is the destruction of any incentive for people to leave the welfare rolls. If they earn a little more money, they lose benefits and are no better off, he says.

Anderson's solutions are to require welfare recipients to work to ensure "that only those who truly cannot help themselves receive aid," to turn welfare over to the states and to assign private charity a larger role in caring for the nation's needy by giving greater tax deductions to their beneficiaries.

Anderson, author of a 1978 book on welfare, spelled out his views more recently in a book published by the conservative Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace, where he has been a researcher. On Tuesday, Reagan appointed him assistant to the president for policy development.

Anderson was a member of the White House working group that developed former President Richard Nixon's welfare plan, which called for a guaranteed income for the poor. But ultimately Anderson concluded the plan was unsound and recommended that Nixon not submit it to Congress. It failed to pass.

In the Hoover report, Anderson argues that census and other government studies repeatedly overstated the number of poor in America. He writes: "The 'dismal failure' of welfare is a myth. There may be great inefficiencies in our welfare programs, the level of fraud may be very high, the quality of management may be terrible, the programs may overlap, inequities may abound and the financial incentive to work may be virtually nonexistent.

"But if we step back and judge the vast array of welfare programs, on which we spend billions of dollars every year, by two basic criteria — the completeness of coverage for those who really need help, and the adequacy of help they do receive — the picture changes dramatically. Judged by these standards our welfare system has been a brilliant success. The war on poverty is over for all practical purposes."

Institute Lances The Wound Of Alcoholism

By JERRY HARKAVY
Associated Press Writer
BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Fighting back tears, 10-year-old Robin told of a stark Christmas past, a time when her father sprawled across the couch in a drunken stupor while her mother nursed bruises and black eyes.

"It wasn't a happy Christmas," Robin told her father, seated directly across from her, close enough to touch.

More than 100 people sat in a circle around them, straining to hear a child's tiny voice reveal grown-up memories.

Robin's mother, seated next to her, recalled how every Christmas holiday seemed to wind up the same way — in pain, fear and violence.

Looking directly at her father, Robin told of her biggest disappointment: "You've never told me to my face that you love me."

Trembling, her father said he was sorry, then whispered, "I do love you ... but when I'm drinking I don't love anybody."

Robin — not her real name — was taking part in one of the weekly family encounter sessions conducted at Eastern Maine Medical Center's Alcohol Institute, one of the nation's most comprehensive community-based treatment programs for alcoholics.

Family treatment is one of the cornerstones of the program's philosophy, based on the concept that alcoholism affects the entire family and each member must become involved in the recovery process.

In the family encounter sessions, children and spouses confront patients with bitter memories, sharing hostilities, lies and infidelities that have often been repressed for years.

The technique remains controversial, even among the hospital staff, because of the potential for embarrassment and psychological pain. But advocates say the sessions help break down the barriers that usually separate alcoholics from family members.

Dr. Stanley Evans, founder and director of the Alcohol Institute, likens the process to "lancing a wound."

"Take the risk. Share those feelings," he said. "We say, try this. It's going to embarrass you or make you cry. But it can't be any worse than the living hell you have now. And our experience has been that people get better."

The 36-bed institute, founded in 1974, claims a 75 percent success rate. Patients come from all socioeconomic levels, but the program is geared toward those in the early stages of alcoholism, rather than the "skid row" types.

"These are younger people — the average age is 35 — people with families, people with jobs, people who have not gone through the losses," Evans said.

Patient treatment begins with three to 10 days of detoxification, followed by intensive rehabilitation. Three weeks of in-patient treatment are followed by two years of aftercare, in which patients take part in community self-help groups and Alcoholics Anonymous.

Saturday is a special day at the institute, the day when family members play their part in recovery.

Spouses and older children attend lectures on how to cope with alcoholism in the family, but the most poignant sessions involve the younger children, many of whom have been thrust into premature adulthood by the family burden. When a family arrives at the hospital for screening, Evans pays special attention to the children, looking for that "9-year-old kid who's acting like a 20-year-old." Robin and 20 other children ranging in age from 4 to 12 gathered in a small room in the hospital basement, where psychologists combine individual and group counseling with art work and games like the Magic Store.

and Irish coffee, these bulwarks of the business community divested themselves of surplus cash and even an occasional check as soon as they saw the homeless chimney.

"Santa," as the sergeant said, while returning the chimney in a glitter of flashbulbs and TV lights, "made out like a bandit on Christmas Eve." The take came to $678, including a sawbuck apiece from the three hookers who for some reason couldn't stop crying.

Oh yes, Santa won the Bible for having the most chockful Christmas chimney. And nobody yelled "humbug," which is Old English for gonif.

You won't find any of this on the police blotter. But it might have happened.

Brazil Finds Population Lower

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The population growth rate here in Latin America's biggest country surprisingly and remarkably dropped by 18 percent during the last decade, preliminary results of the 1980 census show. There are some 6 million fewer Brazilians than had been predicted.

This spontaneous and totally unexpected falloff could automatically defuse the long-standing birth control debate in Brazil, which has involved the military government, liberals and the Roman Catholic Church.

The census figures also belie doomsday-like predictions of an uncontrollable population explosion in this Third World giant, which is seeking to become a major international power but is struggling with serious problems of poverty and underdevelopment.

Brazil's population will turn out to be around 117.5 million when final figures are released early next year, the federal Census Bureau says. A bureau estimate made just one year before the 1980 census had predicted the population would be between 122 million and 124 million.

"Brazilian women simply had fewer babies during the 1970s," the president of the Census Bureau, Jesse Montello, said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"We still don't have all the answers, but it appears there was a massive movement of people from the most backward areas of Brazil to more developed ones, coupled with the entry into the job market of more women than ever before."

Montello added: "Out in the backlands, these women would have little else to do but keep having babies year after year. And in the really backward regions of Brazil, where there is a lot of ignorance and illiteracy, they wouldn't know how to stop having babies even if they wanted to."

"But when these women move to more progressive areas, it seems they quickly learn about birth control. They have contact with radio and TV and a generally more sophisticated way of life. Also when they're working in urban jobs, such women have less time and less desire to get pregnant."

The widespread movement of Brazilians from poorer to more prosperous areas that occurred in the 1970s did not, however, seem to result in a mass rush to slum "favelas" in Brazil's major coastal cities, Montello noted.

This phenomenon — assuming it is borne out by the final census figures — counters a widely held local demographic theory. Big-city populations did generally go up, but the greatest flux of migration recorded by the 1980 census was from the dirt-poor Northeast to the newly booming Brazilian Midwest and certain parts of the Amazon jungle.

In 1960-1970, Brazil's population growth rate was 2.8 percent a year — nearly three times higher than in the United States and Western Europe. There were projections in those days that if Brazil's population growth rate remained unchanged, the country would have 222 million people by the year 2000. These projections were coupled with predictions that this already underdeveloped nation would wind up, basically, as an eternally wretched, uncontrollable mass of poor people and that it might even drop from the developing Third World into the rock-bottom "fourth world."

But now the population growth rate is down to 2.3 percent. According to Montello, "We have every reason to believe there will be a further reduction during the 1980s."

If Brazil's population growth rate goes down by a similar proportion during this decade, to 1.9 percent, and then levels off during the 1990s, the country will wind up with 171 million people by the end of the century. That's fully 50 million fewer than previous estimates.

The falling growth rate could resolve the sticky issue of birth control in Brazil. The government here has been reluctant to get involved in family planning. Now it may not have to.

was here for 12 days in mid-1980 and preached to countless millions of people — in person and on television — against artificial birth control.

Also, for political reasons, there have been occasional outbursts of nationalism here in which it has been argued that birth control is an "imperialist plot" against Brazil's desires to become a great nation and that to defend itself against possible outside economic and even military designs, Brazil needs more people.

The government's course of action has been, basically, not to do anything to discourage artificial means of contraception, but it has refused to set up contraceptive-distribution programs or even — with rare exceptions — sex-education courses for poor, illiterate women who can't afford birth-control devices and often don't even know such things exist.

Other highlights of Brazil's 1980 census:

—Sao Paulo, traditionally Brazil's biggest city, now has passed New York as the Western Hemisphere's No. 1 city — in terms of city-proper population, not metropolitan area. Sao Paulo's expected inside-the-city-limits final total for 1980 is 8,456,521 people.

—Brasilia, the new inland capital that was built from absolutely nothing in the late 1950s and inaugurated just 20 years ago, now has passed the 1 million mark in population.

Fighting In Afghanistan

By The Associated Press
Afghan government forces killed scores of Moslem insurgents battling the country's Marxist regime and captured several of their leaders, state-run Radio Afghanistan said.

In a report monitored in New Delhi Thursday, the radio said several rebel leaders were captured during fighting in the provinces of Badghis, Urusgan, Kandahar, Zabul and Takhar. The report did not mention involvement in the fighting of Soviet troops, who intervened in Afghanistan one year ago.

The report said Afghan government troops seized large quantities of arms with U.S., Chinese and Pakistani markings as well as leaflets from "these servants of American imperialism." It did not elaborate.

Fundamentalist Moslem tribesmen have been fighting the Soviet-sponsored regime of Babrak Karmal for more than a year, and the Soviets have sent in some 85,000 troops in an attempt to quell the revolt and bolster Karmal's regime.

In Cairo, Egypt, President Anwar Sadat said in an interview on this 62nd birthday that all Egyptians should "do what they can" to aid the Afghan rebels.

"I ask my people to do what they can, participate in any way they can, to aid the people of Afghanistan. I ask them to donate what they can, clothes, money, blankets, food — to help the Afghan people and refugees," Sadat was quoted as saying in a text of the interview with Egyptian television that was carried by the Middle East News Agency.

Hitler's Submarine Commander Said Dead At 89

HAMBURG, West Germany (AP)—Adm. Karl Doenitz, who commanded Hitler's submarine fleet and ruled a crumbling Nazi government for the final 23 days of the Third Reich, has died at age 89, relatives said. Doenitz, hospitalized about four weeks ago, died Wednesday, a family spokesman said. The former admiral will not receive formal military honors at his funeral and no official military delegation will attend the services, scheduled for the first week in January, the West German Defense Ministry announced today.

He had lived in relative obscurity since his 1956 release from West Berlin's Spandau prison in 1956 after serving a 10-year sentence. The International Military Tribunal in Nuremberg convicted Doenitz of war crimes and crimes against the peace, rejecting his defense that he had only followed orders.

During World War II Doenitz commanded the Nazi submarines, or U-boats, that sank almost 3,000 Allied ships. He commanded the German navy during the final stages of the war, and was informed by Berlin on April 30, 1945 that Hitler had named him as successor.

ADM. KARL DOENITZ

The appointment took him by surprise, Doenitz recalled in his memoirs.

"I did not know of (Hitler's) suicide," he wrote. "I did not consider this from all I thought I knew about him to be possible. I took it told to touch the gun only if someone was breaking into the house.

Police said there were conflicting reports on how the shooting occurred. One child said the gun fell off the couch and went off. Another said the gun discharged by itself.

Police said the investigation is continuing, and no charges have been filed.

Girl Wounded In Gun Mishap

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP)—Charlotte police say the shooting of a 10-year-old girl Christmas Eve appears to have been an accident.

Ann Frazier remained in critical condition at Charlotte Memorial Hospital with a gunshot wound in the head.

The shooting occurred when a .22-caliber rifle went off, apparently while she was working a jigsaw puzzle.

Lewis Holcomb, Ann's 12-year-old cousin, said shortly before the shooting, Ann had moved the gun around on the couch. Her sister, Linda, said Ann was

Marcos May Be Lifting Philippines Martial Law

Rejected Son

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The parents of a 9-year-old boy told him they didn't want him anymore and kicked him out of the house on Christmas Eve, according to police.

"We're not going to forget this," Columbia Police Sgt. Bob Connell said Thursday. "We're going as far as we can with it."

He said the department would ask the state Department of Social Services to investigate the parents.

Connell said the parents refused a police request to take the boy home after officers found him walking cold, wet, and hungry on the Sumter Highway at 1:30 a.m. Christmas Day.

The boy, whom police declined to identify, told officers his parents "just didn't want him anymore and if they didn't want him, he didn't want them."

Until action on his case is complete, the boy will remain in a youth shelter, authorities said.

Before taking him to the shelter, police officers threw a Christmas party for the boy at the station, presenting him with gifts of a football, wrist watch and about $25 in cash.

"He is a likable little guy they threw out at the wrong time," Connell said. He described the boy as "very polite."

Connell said the boy told officers that his parents were "after him all the time and blamed him for everything." The boy was considering running away when his parents ordered him out, the officer said.

He was on his way to an aunt's home on the Sumter Highway when police spotted him. They telephoned the aunt's home repeatedly but could not contact her.

Connell said a patrol car was sent to the parents' home with a message to call police headquarters. When no one called, Connell said he and another officer drove the boy to the parents' home.

"They absolutely refused to take him back," Connell said. It was not immediately known whether the couple had other children.

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Martial law could end in the Philippines in the coming weeks, but there is no indication Ferdinand E. Marcos will give up the presidency or his far-reaching powers.

Marcos, 63, has announced he'll run for "interim president" in 1981 and for prime minister when a new Parliament is formed in 1984. That could keep him in power well into the 1990s.

During eight years of martial law, Marcos has built up a powerful new political party whose members hold all but a few seats in the temporary National Assembly and nearly all local elected offices across this 7,000-island nation.

Even with the lifting of martial law, Marcos would retain his power to make and repeal laws if he feels the National Assembly isn't acting fast enough. That's written into the constitution.

Marcos has said several times over the past eight years he soon would lift the martial law he imposed in 1972, but there is little doubt this time he intends to lift it, at least in name.

The president told fellow graduates of the University of the Philippines law school earlier this month it could come by the end of January if the Supreme Court clears cases questioning his rule by that time. Court officials say that will be difficult but not impossible.

Earlier, he had said it would come at least before the presidential election in March or April.

Marcos has led this former U.S. colony for 15 years, extending his second elected four-year term in 1972 in his declaration of martial law, which he said was to end growing rebellion, stop corruption and bring social reforms to a failed U.S.-style democracy.

Marcos claims success on several fronts. Opponents claim he's spawned his own corruption, building a personal political and financial empire.

The meager opposition isn't even sure it wants to field a candidate in next year's proposed presidential election, which would be the first in 12 years. Marcos says he wants an opponent so it won't "look funny," but he clearly expects to win.

Assemblyman Salvador Laurel, a possible challenger, says the opposition will participate only if freedoms of the press, assembly and speech are restored and a fair election guaranteed.

Laurel calls Marcos "one of the most powerful dictators in the world."

"He has the entire military at his beck and call. He has a rubber-stamp Parliament. And the judiciary is subservient to him," Laurel said in a recent speech.

Marcos is now both president and prime minister, ruling by decree — nearly 2,000 separate decrees to date, ranging from tree-planting declarations to orders arresting his most-powerful political opponents.

But Marcos, a lawyers as well as war hero, claims he governs carefully within the constitution and is paving the way for a parliamentary democracy.

Despite martial law, he claims to have maintained strict civilian control over the military.

His reputation, even among his most severe critics, is that of a leader more cunning than ruthless.

Marcos' spokesmen claim all but a few of the estimated 60,000 people arrested in the early years of martial law have been released. A number, including Marcos' chief rival, former Sen. Benigno Aquino, have gone into self-imposed exile in the United States, from where Marcos claims they launched an unsuccessful terrorist bomb campaign to unseat him.

Seventy-nine accused terrorists, including the absent Aquino, face a military tribunal. They are charged with more than 30 bombings in August, September and October. All face a possible death sentence.

Aquino — the only man given any chance of a serious run against Marcos in an election — has already been sentenced to death in another plot.

The firing squad has been used only once during martial law, against a convicted drug dealer, although Marcos' critics claim scores of people have been killed or tortured by the military without publicity.

The latest deadline for lifting martial law falls just days before the scheduled visit in February of Pope John Paul II to this predominantly Roman Catholic nation of 46 million.

The country's most influential Catholic leader, Cardinal Jaime Sin, archbishop of Manila, has criticized the detention of political prisoners and urged that martial law end soon.

In recent weeks, Marcos has taken several steps that appear aimed at reducing pressure against his government for human rights violations.

He ordered the release of two long-held communist leaders. Earlier, he released several other political prisoners, including two former senators charged in alleged plots.

Even though Marcos appears far from giving up the reins of power, he has supported a proposed constitutional amendment on succession.

Assemblymen sponsoring the measure point to criticism "from abroad" that no orderly transition of power is provided for in the event Marcos dies or becomes disabled before the Parliament is seated.

The amendment would allow the temporary Parliament to elect one of its members president, who would then face a public vote.

The proposal is designed to dispel the notion that Marcos' long domination of Philippine political life leaves him with only one likely successor — chaos.

Hitler Didn't Heed Doenitz

LONDON (AP) — If Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler had listened to Adm. Karl Doenitz, the chief of his submarine fleet, the Germans might have won the Battle of the Atlantic and the outcome of World War II might have been different, the official historian of the British Royal Navy said today.

Capt. Stephen Roskill made the assessment in a brief interview with Britain's Independent Radio News after Doenitz's death was announced in West Germany.

Doenitz commanded the German U-boat fleet that waged relentless, brave and finally suicidal attacks on the Allied convoys and warships that kept island Britain alive and fighting.

"If Hitler had given more importance to the influence of seapower and had listened to Adm. (Erich) Raeder who was Doenitz's predecessor as Commander-in-Chief of the German Navy, and to Adm. Doenitz himself, they might have won the Battle of the Atlantic," said Roskill.

"But Hitler was always a land animal and he gave his army first priority, the air force second priority, and the German navy came off third."

Roskill said that Doenitz's wolf pack U-boats came close to isolating Britain, but Hitler wouldn't listen to him when the admiral called for greater priority for the submarine fleet.

The historian said: "Doenitz was very much admired by his submarine commanders, and still is to this day. They regard him as a very great leader, those who survived the war."

"And you must remember that the German submarine fleet suffered enormous casualties, as many as nearly 50 percent were lost and there were very few fighting forces that endured 50 percent casualties."

Unwittingly On Defiant Message In Coronation

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — When Queen Elizabeth II was crowned in Westminster Abbey in 1953, she apparently sat atop a defiant message hidden inside the ancient "Coronation Stone" by Scottish nationalists two years earlier.

The son of a Scot who helped repair the stone in 1951 says his father inserted the message in one of two copper tubes that now hold it together. The message was the subject of a British Broadcasting Corp. program, "A Gesture of Destiny," broadcast Thursday following similar reports earlier in the week.

Demonstrating that ancient passions live on in the British Isles, the message reads:

"March 1951. Stone of Destiny. This stone belongs to Scotland. It was stolen by Edward the First of England in 1296. The Church of England should be ashamed to admit that they have allowed this piece of stolen property to remain in Westminster Abbey from that time.

"It must be returned to Scotland and no doubt it will be demanded for the reopening of the Scottish Parliament, which was never closed but only adjourned in 1707." It was in that year that the separate Scottish kingdom came under English rule in a move still disputed by many Scots, who demand independence.

Known to the Scots as the Stone of Destiny, or the Stone of Scone, the 448-pound oblong red sandstone was the coronation stone of Scottish kings at Scone, 49 miles north of Edinburgh, from the dawn of history.

Its resting spot on Boot Hill — a mound built up by chieftains who each brought a bootful of earth from their territories as a sign of allegiance — was the sacred spot for the early Picts, who lived in what is present-day Scotland 2,000 years ago.

The stone was captured by the English in 1297 and since then has been embedded in the throne on which British monarchs are crowned at Westminster Abbey in London.

But not without objections from generations of Scots.

On Christmas Day of 1950, four young Scottish nationalists stole the stone from Westminster Abbey. They kept it hidden for 109 days, moving it about to foil both Scotland Yard and Scottish republican militants.

During the theft the stone was broken, and after its recovery it was repaired by a Glasgow stonemason, Edward Manley.

According to the reports here, Manley inserted the message aided by two leading Scottish nationalists, Glasgow University Rector John M. MacCormick and Robert Gray. All three men are dead.

But Gray attached a copy of the message inserted in the stone to his will, which passed to his wife in 1961. When she died last month, the couple's son passed it on to the BBC.

"I did not know this until now," said the Dean of Westminster, the Rev. Edward Carpenter, after learning about the message.

Generous Patriot Left $1 Million To America

ALVIN, Texas (AP) — Lee Hamlin Edwards, who felt privileged to have been born an American, never lost faith in his country. And when he died, he left the bulk of his fortune to the government.

Shortly after the first of the year, his attorneys will turn over about $1 million to the Federal Reserve Bank in Dallas.

Edwards, who died at the age of 78, explained in his will that he was making the bequest as a token of his appreciation to the government.

"I count as one of my highest blessings the fact that I was privileged to have been born in the United States and to have lived a good life under the government of such a country," Edwards wrote in his will.

In the two years since his death, attorneys have been busy trying to locate Edwards' fortune — mostly royalties, stocks, government bonds and cash stored in at least 17 different banks. And the lawyers say they still aren't sure they've found it all.

Edwards' attorney, Wily Thomas of Angleton, said the bachelor also left some jewelry, an undetermined amount of cash, his Alvin home and three cars to several friends.

Art Tribble, senior attorney for the Federal Reserve Bank, said the inheritance will be used to pay off interest owed on various government bonds and treasury bills held in Texas.

"It will have the effect overall of reducing the public debt," he said.

The money, the will stated, was to be used "solely for the retirement in Texas of public debt obligations of the United States owed by citizens and residents of the state of Texas."

According to Thomas, Edwards was an "unpretentious patriot" who loved his country and his home state.

That love began decades ago when Edwards joined the Army at San Antonio after a rift with his father, described as a "no-nonsense Episcopalian," who dabbled in real estate, construction and fruit selling.

Father and son were reconciled after 1935, when T.C. Edwards made a fortune from oil royalties. Most of the estate comes from those royalties, born of a real estate deal that left the elder Edwards with 400 acres in the middle of Hastings Oil Field.

The field was brought into production in 1935 by Humble Oil, now Exxon, and Standard Oil of Indiana.

Young Edwards spent three tours of duty with the Army, most of it at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio.

Hua Guofeng Among Absent

PEKING (AP) — Communist Party Chairman Hua Guofeng, last seen in public 29 days ago, was absent from the ranks of officials who met with visiting Pakistani Foreign Minister Agha Shahi. Foreign diplomats here say Hua's unexplained disappearance indicated his ouster may be imminent.

Pakistani officials said Shahi had left his appointments up to Chinese officials, who arranged meetings for him with Foreign Minister Huang Hua, Premier Zhao Ziyang and Party Vice-Chairman Deng Xiaoping, the key man in Chinese politics.

Shahi was to leave Peking today, without the traditional meeting with the Communist Party chief.

The official Chinese press has published increasingly sharp attacks against Hua, successor to the late Chairman Mao Tse-tung, accusing him of clinging to some of Mao's discredited radical ideas while the rest of the party moderated its policies.

Diplomatic sources say Hua is expected to resign formally at a party Central Committee meeting scheduled for January.

Planning Minister Yao Yilin denied Monday that Hua has already submitted his resignation. Only the party's Central Committee or Congress can decide Hua's future status, he said.

Criticism of Hua has intensified since the trial of Mao's widow, Jiang Qing, and nine other disgraced radicals began four weeks ago. The ten defendants face possible death sentences on charges of treason and persecuting thousands of Chinese during the 1966-76 decade of purges known as the Cultural Revolution.

Mao himself has not been implicated in the trial, although he was in power at the time of the crackdown. The prosecution maintains he was too old and ill to know what Jiang Qing and her cohorts were doing in his name. Jiang Qing, has pleaded innocent on grounds all her actions were taken on Mao's orders.

The trial was in recess for the second day today after Jiang Qing disrupted the court with a volatile defense argument. It was not clear whether officials would allow her to resume her lengthy final statement, the last to be presented in the trial.

Gunmen Kill 3 Policemen

By The Associated Press
Three policemen were killed on Christmas, one in a routine robbery investigation in Birmingham, Ala., one lured into a trap in a run-down apartment building in Daytona Beach, Fla., and one along a foggy highway in California.

Sam E. Etheredge Jr., a 34-year-old father of two children, was called to the rundown section of Daytona Beach where he and Lt. Neil Clain were led into a bedroom. Police said a gunman in a closet began firing, killing Etheredge and seriously wounding Clain. They managed to return the fire and killed the gunman, identified as Arthur Stone, a 35-year-old drifter from Texas. Joseph Courtney Johnson, a 28-year-old drifter who allegedly lured them into the room, was charged with first-degree murder.

There was no apparent motive.

Lt. Edward K. Alley, 34, pulled over a car matching the description of one used in a convenience store robbery in Birmingham. As the driver got out, the passenger turned and shot through the window, hitting Alley in the shoulder, police said. He died on the operating table at University Hospital. Two suspects were arrested several hours after the shooting.

Gerry Dormaier, a 14-year veteran of the California Highway Patrol and the divorced father of three, discovered an overturned propane tanker on fog-shrouded Highway 99 near Bakersfield early Thursday morning. Visibility was only 50 feet. Dormaier and his partners were trying to put up warning flares when a truck drove out of the fog, braked and jackknifed. The 42-year-old patrolman died three hours later at Mercy Hospital.

Fire Claims Big Market

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — A cigarette flicked by an angry customer into a pile of fireworks touched off a spectacular fire that left one man missing and presumed dead in the charred rubble of this border city's popular marketplace, a fire official says.

The blaze, which sent plumes of orange flames towering 60 feet into the air, swept through the sprawling two-story marketplace early Thursday, destroying 100 shops.

Police said Santos Hernandez Zapata, 20, of Laredo, Texas, and a 16-year-old boy were charged with arson and denied bond after being arrested as they fled from the scene of the fire.

Police said the operators of a fireworks stand in the sprawling two-story marketplace said they had asked Zapata and the youth to leave the stand because they appeared intoxicated.

Zapata allegedly became angry and flipped a lighted cigarette into the stand, touching off a fire that sent flames shooting 60 feet into the air and destroying 100 shops.

Mayor Hector Canales, who estimated the damage at about $17 million, said he would allow burned-out store owners to set up temporary shops in city parks until the Mercado can be rebuilt.

Firefighters from Laredo, Texas, crossed the Rio Grande to assist Nuevo Laredo's lone firefighting company.

A wrecker had to be used to pull off a locked door that prevented firemen from working inside the blazing building for almost an hour, said Laredo Fire Chief Mike Perez.

During the delay, Perez said the fire spread to all the little stands filled with straw hats, paper flowers, dresses and other highly flammable souvenir items sold to tourists.

cattle ranches and peasant squatters are killing Mexico's last virgin forest and snuffing out the culture of its most traditional Mayan tribe, the Lacandon Indians.

"When the jungle is destroyed, the world dies. There won't be any water and the roots die. When there are no roots, there is no land," said Chan Kin Viejo, the 85-year-old spiritual leader of the Lacandons.

Anthropologists and ecologists say nearly half of the 40-square-mile jungle, a tropical rain forest near the Guatemalan border, has been cleared by loggers, cattlemen and invading peasants, who slash and burn the natural vegetation to plant subsistence crops of corn and beans.

If the clearing continues at this rate, they say, today's 25,600 acres may be whittled down to as few as 7,000 acres by 1990.

The tropical forest that 30 years ago was home to no more than 3,000 Lacandon, Chol and Tzeltal Indians is now home to more than 100,000 peasants who left their homes to find more land. Officials say their numbers increase daily.

"The jungle is full and the world is going to end," Chan Kin said.

Among the invading peasants are thousands of Indians from other, already Westernized tribes. The Chols and Tzeltals also have been exposed to Western influences over the decades, and absorbed them into their cultures. But the fragile Lacandon culture, protected by jungle isolation for centuries, is directly threatened.

Many of the 450 remaining Lacandons are giving up their white togas, bare feet and flowing, long hair for jeans, tennis shoes and haircuts. Some drive trucks, sport expensive watches and pray to new gods.

In Naja, Chan Kin and his son, K'ayum, pray to Hacha'kyum, the God of Real People, and to Kianto, the God of Foreigners. In the village of Lacanja, 75 miles away, K'ayum's brother, Chan Kin III, prays to Jesus Christ in a crude bamboo Baptist church.

Kianto, once considered the god of disease, guns and machetes, is now honored as the god who brought machines, electricity and money to the jungle. He is the most powerful god.

The Lacandons, who for 900 years lived on a subsistence level, now sell mahogany and cedar to lumber companies, bows and arrows to tourists. They buy Coca Cola, powdered milk and meat to replace a diet of wild boar, monkeys and parrots, which are becoming scarce. Some employ newcomers to work their fields and speak Spanish as well as their native dialect.

Gertrude Duby Blom has been visiting the jungle since 1943. She doesn't like the changes.

"They are already more aggressive. They want radios, cars, more cars," she said. "There was no stealing when I came. All that comes with greediness. There was no competition. That comes, too. They were reliable. They had time to sit and look at nature."

James Nations, an ecological anthropologist, blames the jungle's demise on land scarcity and a government push to develop a cattle industry. "The Mexicans are seeking to colonize the jungle to decrease pressure for land reform in other areas. It takes the pressure off the government to break up large land holdings," he said.

Ernesto Gonzalez Castillo, a government Agrarian Reform official, disputed Nations' charge, saying the peasants are moving to the forest because of heavy erosion in the highlands.

But an official from the government's National Indigenous Institute, who asked not to be identified, agreed with Nations: "The (peasant) Indians don't go to the jungle because they want to. They go because their problems in the highlands aren't resolved. There isn't any more land there. It is in the hands of big landholders, or their lands have been subdivided among children. The government sends them to the jungle to resolve political problems."

Nations said peasants clear land for crops and are then offered cheap loans from the government Rural Credit Bank to get them to raise cattle.

Manuel de la Torre, another Agrarian Reform agent, said cattle production is limited to areas already cleared by the peasants, but Nations alleges that ranchers illegally rent collectively owned lands from Indians, who then clear more land for crops, destroying more jungle. He said the rain forest's northern third has already been turned into pasture land.

De la Torre said that in an effort to save the remaining jungle, the government is relocating some 25,000 peasants to a southern section of the jungle called Marquez de Comillas. The government is putting in schools, clinics and roads and will give six months of corn and beans to those who resettle there.

And in Naja, in an effort to salvage the dying Lacandon culture, K'ayum and linguist Robert Bruce, an American, are building a school to teach the Indians to read and write their native Mayan dialect and preserve some of their traditions.

"I want to teach them ... about political and economic domination of one group by another before they are swallowed by it. I don't want them to throw away all of their traditional values, morality and language in order to use a flashlight and electricity," Bruce said.

"As long as they think in their own language, they will be Lacandons. When they forget, and think in Spanish, they will be the descendants of Lacandons."

Silicon Valley In California Had Varied Problems

By PAUL RAEURN
Associated Press Writer
STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — The dense cluster of computer companies stretching from Stanford University south to San Jose is known for its mass-production of millionaires as much as for its manufacture of computers. The northern part of Santa Clara County, mostly undeveloped rolling hills and small suburban communities 20 years ago, has become the world center for the production of the tiny computer

"chips" that are the heart of the computer revolution. It has also become the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow for many bright young engineers who are becoming millionaires almost overnight. Fortune magazine estimated in 1978 that the industry had produced 400 millionaires. The number is growing.

The area is referred to as Silicon Valley, after the principal component of computer chips. More than 1,000 high-technology firms are located in the 25-mile Silicon Valley, and the computer chips are the basis of a $40 billion industry that is expected to grow to $400 billion by 1990.

But the growth is not without its problems. Jobs are being created at the rate of 40,000 a year, and housing construction cannot keep up. As a consequence, housing costs have skyrocketed.

Only a handful of the valley's employees use public transportation to get to work, and county officials say they do not have the funds to make significant improvements in public transportation.

The highways that crisscross the valley are so congested that stop lights have been posted on many freeway entrance ramps to slow the flow of traffic to the freeways.

The housing and transportation problems are getting worse, officials say. As the American economy slumps and unemployment climbs, Silicon Valley is creating so many new jobs that some local officials are crying for a limit until housing and transportation can catch up.

The congestion is making it increasingly difficult for companies to expand and to recruit the top engineers and executives they need to stay in the forefront of the industry, especially with increasing competition from the Japanese.

As a result, officials from elsewhere in the U.S. are making a pitch for a piece of the action. A notable recent example was Gov. Jim Hunt of North Carolina, who is trying to build a $30 million state Microelectronics Center to do research that would attract computer companies.

California is gearing up to fend off the competition. "I'm optimistic about us getting our fair share of the expansion," said Melinda Luedtke of the state Department of Economic and Business Development.

The stakes are high. The state's electronics industry — most of which is located in the Silicon Valley — employs 400,000 workers and pays them $6 billion a year in wages, Ms. Luedtke said.

Silicon Valley traces its origins to Stanford University, which lured a number of electronics experts to California in the 1950s. One of those was William Shockley, one of the inventors of the transistor.

Shockley came to Stanford in 1955 and formed a company to make transistors. That company eventually led to the formation of 71 different firms, some of which have in turn been absorbed by others or dissolved.

Transistors were the forerunners of the computer chips that have made Silicon Valley famous. Both the transistors and the chips are made of "semiconductors," materials that are poor conductors of electricity.

Each chip is smaller than a fingernail and contains the equivalent of tens of thousands of transistors. The technology for making the chips is developing so fast that within a few years a single tiny chip will contain the equivalent of several hundred thousand transistors, and be as powerful as today's largest computers.

Silicon Valley sprang up around Stanford, a leading center of computer science research. Stanford encouraged the electronics firms to locate near the campus by converting part of its sizeable land holdings into an industrial park.

"The industry escalated far beyond what we thought was in the realm of possibility," said Steve McKinney, a planner for Santa Clara County.

The industry has added 200,000 jobs during the last five years, McKinney said, but only about 50,000 new housing units were built in the county during that period.

"Most of the cities filled out their housing supply and still had substantial industrial areas," he said. "Until recently, they welcomed industrial growth." The benefits to that growth are clear. "It's allowed some cities like Santa Clara to almost stop using property tax as a base for general revenue funds," McKinney said.

Larry Klein, a Palo Alto lawyer who worked on the recently released Santa Clara County general plan, blames the problem of congestion on a lack of county-wide planning.

He supports the proposal in the county plan that job growth be limited to about 100,000 during the next 10 years. That's about half of the number of new jobs that could be expected without controls.

The only other alternative, Klein said, is to speed development and start building homes in agricultural areas and conservation lands, which he thinks would be a mistake. "We don't want to develop this place to the last degree, or it won't be a desirable place to live," he said.

Peter Giles, president of the Santa Clara County Manufacturing Group, strongly opposes limiting the number of new jobs, but said he has no answer to the housing and transit crisis.

"I think it's extremely serious," Giles said, "and over time it's going to constrain the kind of life we have here."

Dental Surgery Said Deterrent

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — A child with a grotesque face may feel so rejected that he opts for a life of crime, says a dental surgeon who specializes in correcting misshapen jaws.

Ridiculed by peers because of deformed jaws or other facial abnormalities, the child may turn to anti-social behavior that could have been prevented through corrective surgery, Dr. Edwin Joy said.

Joy, who chairs the department of oral surgery at the Medical College of Georgia, said interviews with prison inmates helped him draw his conclusions.

At the Medical College of Virginia, where Joy specialized in oral surgery, "we were operating on prisoners for many problems, but many of these people had physical symptoms from jaw problems that also were facially disfiguring," he said.

"When I came here (the Medical College of Georgia) in 1975, we were starting to do the same thing on the prisoners from Reidsville. One prisoner said to me that his deformed jaw was "the reason I was in prison."

The inmate "considered himself so ugly and he had been rejected by his peers. In school, he turned to asocial behavior," Joy said.

"We started asking other prisoners how they felt. They reported there was a correlation between negative body image and their being social outcasts," he added.

Archivist Asks Keep A Record

WASHINGTON (AP) — With an eye toward the history that hasn't been made yet, the archivist of the United States wants President-elect Ronald Reagan and his associates to plan now on keeping a record they will leave behind.

Historian Robert M. Warner, the national record keeper, says his advice to the new president is: "Be interested in the preservation of the historical record; start right away to be sure that the record is something that's going to be useful to the future."

Warner noted that no other great power makes its records as quickly available so that citizens and presidents alike can learn from the mistakes of the immediate past. "It's an American trend we can be proud of," he said.

Surgeons aren't sure "we can change anyone's behavior after the fact. We don't think we will turn prisoners into bank presidents," Joy said.

"What we want to do is make an appeal to parents to get hereditary deformities in their children's jaws corrected before the deformities lead to anti-social behavior patterns that become established," said Joy, who performs an average of three operations a month to correct misshapen mouths.

The surgeon said corrective facial surgery shows dramatic improvement for many non-prisoners who undergo it.

"These people seem to improve markedly in school, in their personal lives, and go on to further education or careers beyond what would have been expected of them before," Joy said.

Sauce For The Gander

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Timothy Lee, homecoming king at the University of Michigan, says all he wanted was a little equality.

Now, he says, he's got it — and is trying to find a ticket to the Rose Bowl.

It all started when Lee and Sherry King were crowned at their school's homecoming. She got to go to the Michigan-Ohio State football battle; he watched it on TV. And she got a ticket for the New Year's Day contest in Pasadena, Calif., between Michigan and Washington; he didn't.

So he hired an attorney. "What's good for the goose is good for the gander — or maybe if it's good enough for Queen King, it should be for King Lee, too," said Lee, a public administration student from Essexville.

Before the Ohio State game, Lee had a run-in with a director of a campus dormitory over campaign signs. Lee said he spit on the director and was dismissed as a dorm resident adviser.

"Then they (the office of Student Services) said the incident was the reason I wasn't going to be going to the Rose Bowl," Lee said.

On Wednesday, the university and Lee reached an out-of-court settlement. Neither side would release details, but Lee said it would be more than enough to pay for his ticket — if he can find one.

Boxing Day

Most people in the United States have opened all of their holiday gifts by now. But for many people in Great Britain and Canada, the gift giving and getting continues today. The occasion is Boxing Day, a holiday that traditionally takes place on December 26, or the first working day after Christmas. Boxing Day got its name from the custom of giving Christmas gift boxes to postmen, lamplighters and other minor public servants whose work was often taken for granted. Today, many people give money instead of boxes. Because Boxing Day is a legal holiday in Canada and Great Britain, most businesses there are closed today.

Embezzler Is Building Anew

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In June 1977 John T. Morrisey was convicted of embezzling almost $44,000 from the N.C. Association of County Commissioners.

Morrisey, who was executive director and legal counsel for the association, was sentenced to a 45-day active prison sentence, fined $3,000, placed on probation for six years and forbidden to practice law for four years.

But four months ago, Morrisey's life took an ironic twist. He began working for the man who prosecuted him and urged the court to give him an active prison sentence — Wake County District Attorney J. Randolph Riley.

In his time as clerk-receptionist for the district attorney's offices, Morrisey, 58, has earned a reputation for being courteous and efficient. And he is trying to rebuild his life and prove he is worthy of holding a law license again.

"But how can you prove to somebody else that you believe yourself to be rehabilitated?" he says. "Demonstration takes time."

"You first have to regain your self-respect. You do that by trying to make yourself productive and trying to help others," he said, answering his own question.

Morrisey, also a volunteer for the Raleigh area Prison Fellowship, began working as a volunteer in the district attorney's office in June and then assumed a paid position in August. And the man who prosecuted him is happy with his decision to hire him.

"I had no hesitation whatsoever in hiring him," Riley said. "I know he has paid his penalty."

Tax Forms Are Delivered

Households throughout the country will begin receiving 1980 income tax packages from the Internal Revenue Service starting today, Greenville Postmaster H. Lloyd Mills said.

Most post offices have already received the packages and will hold them for distribution until the day after Christmas, as requested by IRS. "The only exception for earlier delivery are packages going to certain business firms and tax service agencies," he said.

Postmaster Mills noted that while the packages travel as third-class mail, "they are forwarded without charge to the recipient if such service is necessary." The Postal Service will recover any forwarding charges from the Internal Revenue Service through a prearranged agreement.

MASS ARRESTS

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Police have arrested almost 5,000 people in India's western Maharashtra and Tamil Nadu states in a crackdown on farmers demanding higher government support prices for their crops, the United News of India reports.

Morrisey volunteered to help out in the district attorney's offices after becoming reacquainted with Riley through the Offender Aid and Restoration program in Wake County.

Morrisey worked with the program as a VISTA volunteer. After four months of VISTA service in Raleigh, Morrisey decided it was time for something different. But after years of doing more challenging work, he admits he's sometimes frustrated with his job as clerk-receptionist.

A native of Lynn, Mass., Morrisey graduated for college and law school at the University of North Carolina. Before heading the commissioners association, he worked as legal counsel for the N.C. Local Government Commission and the N.C. League of Municipalities and as Charlotte's first full-time attorney.

Now, in his new job, he meets many of his former associates.

"As grateful as I am for where I am, I've got to admit that sometimes I'm frustrated," he said.

"I could go away. But that wouldn't do any good. The problem would go with me."

Toys Chosen For Selves

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Some toys are abandoned the day after Christmas because pushy parents bought items which were too advanced for their youngsters, a child development expert says.

Simple and inexpensive materials such as modeling clay and crayons with blank paper often hold a child's interest longer than modern toys like electronic games, said Fanny L. Brooke, director of the University of Georgia child development center.

"Many so-called 'toys' are really produced for adults," Ms. Brooke said. "Often parents buy toys too advanced for their children because there's a tremendous push for children to get ahead cognitively."

Toys which elicit creativity and energy from children continue to be favorite playthings after the newness wears off, Ms. Brooke said in a recent interview.

"Play equipment should be something which allows the child to put his or her own stamp on it," she said. "For example, blocks allow children to be creative. They can stack them, build objects, count them or gather similar shapes together."

Checkers also is a good choice because children value games, Ms. Brooke said. "But the focus of children's games should be the working out of strategies, not just winner-take-all."

"Checkers allows children to consider alternative methods of playing the game. They must also keep in mind the other player's strategy," she said.

Warship Engine Bungling Cited

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bureaucratic bungling was to blame for the government's approval of the export of eight American-made engines destined for Iraqi warships, the General Accounting Office says.

The GAO, a watchdog agency of Congress, said in a report released Thursday that the sale was approved last Jan. 23 by the Commerce Department — without consulting the State Department — as an export to Italy, which is building the frigates for Iraq's navy.

In effect, this circumvented a U.S. law banning sales of military equipment to countries supporting international terrorism. Among those countries are listed Iraq, Libya, Syria and Marxist-ruled South Yemen.

The GAO said that in recommending approval of the engines deal, a Commerce official saw "no reason to refer to other agencies," thus preventing a State Department review that could have recognized the implications of the sale.

By the time State became aware of the pending sale, the GAO said, the Italian prime minister already had made a direct inquiry to then-Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, who passed along the word from the Commerce Department that the export license was approved.

According to the GAO, one State official described the case as "the worst bureaucratic experience in which he has ever been involved."

Another official called it as "one of the best examples of Murphy's law a person could find." The whimsical "Murphy's law" holds that whatever can go wrong will go wrong.

The GAO's conclusions were contained in a classified report to Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., who has spoken out against the engine deal. Rosenthal released a "sanitized" version of the report and said he would renew his efforts to block the sale when Congress convenes in January.

Although the export license technically is still valid, the General Electric Co., manufacturer of the engines, has voluntarily complied with a State Department request not to ship the engines.

The GAO said that both the State and Commerce departments have revised their regulations since the Iraqi ship incident to prevent a recurrence of similar export problems.

$5 Check Launches 'Ransom Account'

TACOMA (AP) — Frustrated by Iran's refusal to release 52 American hostages, Jack Ragsdale sent a $5 check to an Algerian bank to start a "ransom account."

The Tacoma man doesn't expect contributions to the fund ever to produce the $24 billion the Iranian government has demanded to secure the release of the hostages. And, in truth, he doesn't want to pay ransom.

But he hopes the check he sent earlier this week for the "American Ransom Account for the Iranian kidnappers" at the Credit Populaire d'Algerie will show the world the seizure of hostages was a criminal, not political, act.

"If I get back a canceled check, that means there's an account there," said Ragsdale, a state employee. "By creating that account, they admit there is a ransom-hostage situation, a blatantly criminal situation."

"The key thing is to have the designation stick with the money," he said. Ragsdale said the idea "grew out of an intense amount of frustration" after Iran demanded the United States deposit $24 billion in an Algerian bank before it would release the hostages held since Nov. 4, 1979.

He hopes his gesture will be matched in francs, pounds, yen, deutschmarks and other currencies and force Algeria to report the extent of world opinion to Iran.

"My objective is to get word to the Iranian parliament and government that what they are doing is condemned on an international basis," Ragsdale said.

He figures his chance of starting an international movement at only 10 percent, but sending the check at least relieved some of his frustration.

"Maybe because I've done something and I feel better — that's success," he said.

Roses Parade Is Most Filmed

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Everyone loves a parade and officials here figure that people love the annual New Year's Day Tournament of Roses Parade so much it becomes the single most-photographed event of the year.

The parade annually draws some 1.5 million spectators. Tournament officials and Eastman Kodak Co. estimate that 98 percent of those spectators take pictures, making it the world's largest picture-taking event.

Church Forced To Lock Doors

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Winos have accomplished something Greensboro police have been trying to do for years — get the priest at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church to lock the doors at night.

Because of recent gang warfare among wino factions the church has finally given in and ended its long tradition of keeping its doors unlocked around the clock.

"It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and they were so drunk, so out of it, they didn't even know how early it was," said the Rev. John Broome, rector of Holy Trinity. "A big fight started in front of the church and, before anyone knew what was happening, they came running inside and were screaming, bleeding and chasing everyone with their broken wine bottles."

The open-door policy had survived for decades at many of Greensboro's churches to allow people to chance for meditation, prayer, study and private worship. Gradually, however, difficulties arose when transients and priests became convinced that their churches had to be protected. "We'd become the last remaining downtown hotel for a colony of drunks, winos and transients," said Broome. He said the interlopers slept in pews, on carpets and "couldn't even control themselves. It was unbelievable to see what they were doing to the church."

Transients had been sent to Holy Trinity in droves because similar occurrences had forced closings of other churches, according to Lt. Bob Brewer, coordinator for patrols in the downtown area.

"The same thing happened recently at West Market Street United Methodist Church and we met with the ministers and other church leaders in efforts to help them," said Brewer. "We can't babysit any church. There are more churches than officers available for our patrols and we can't devote all of our time to overseeing the winos in churches."

Brewer said the winos "always knew about unlocked churches and who was going to let them stay." They have "an unbelievable grapevine," he said.

The "grapevine" was so effective, said Broome, that often, after a meal was bought for one transient, it would take only several minutes for a crowd of about 30 to gather to beg for food. Broome said transients would steal poinsettias at Christmas and Easter lilies between church services, then try to sell the flowers for the cash needed to purchase another bottle of wine.

Moving Has An Energy Factor

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Before companies pack desks, typewriters and inventory and move to one of the currently popular relocation sites in the United States, they are taking a long look at a new factor — energy.

According to Theodore Barry & Associates, a management consulting firm, energy costs and reliability are now key relocation issues.

Many firms, especially those in high-technology fields or with large data-processing centers, can't be worried about power interruptions. The regulatory environment, TB&A says, can give a company a lot of information about future prices and the availability of power.

The costs of energy are not only measured in the type used by the company, but also by its employees commuting to and from work. More and more companies are considering sites where employees will not be totally dependent on their cars.

The folks who lived in the day of the hourglass had a psychological advantage. They could see time passing.

And as each fine grain slipped through the neck of the glass, a man's conscience would whisper within him: less time left!

When we look at a clock its hands seem motionless. Is that why millions put off the important decisions that ought to be made right now?

Whatever its cause, procrastination is a disease. It lulls the senses into indolence. It wastes our energy on trivial pursuits, while important tasks remain undone. Especially it attacks the soul, tempting man to believe that there will be plenty of time later to tend to his spiritual needs.

But the cure is simple... and immediate. Just set the alarm clock and begin the New Year with worship in your church or synagogue. You'll soon be facing every important task with eagerness and courage and faith!

Sugar In Milk Said Infant Risk

By WARRENE LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sugar in milk increases the body's absorption and retention of lead, and that may help explain why babies are more susceptible to lead poisoning than older children, scientists reported today.

But despite the findings, researchers at the University of Wisconsin at Madison said more study is needed to determine the overall effect of milk in lead poisoning.

The researchers said experiments with rat pups indicate milk sugar or lactose greatly increases the amount of orally ingested lead the intestines absorb. And tissues apparently keep more lead because more is taken into the body through the intestine, they added.

Too much lead can cause brain damage and sometimes death. Lead poisoning can lead to neurological problems and retardation. The condition has been tied to children breathing lead pollutants and eating old, lead-based paint as it flakes off walls.

Drs. Philip J. Bushnell and Hector F. DeLuca said that while milk is generally good for children, its role in lead poisoning has been questioned because of conflicting test results. Some indicate milk protects against absorbing lead, while others say it increases the amount of the toxic substance the body retains.

Depending upon circumstances, Bushnell said in a telephone interview, milk apparently can do both. But the exact reasons milk appears to have opposite effects is unknown, he added.

Bushnell noted that the pre-weaning diet of most babies consists almost exclusively of milk. Younger children absorb much more lead than older ones and it can do more damage to them, he said.

Survived Cold In Mud Coating

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — A 14-year-old boy covered himself with mud on a swampy riverbank to survive freezing temperatures as he waited for help after a motorcycle accident, officials said.

Rodney Duplechin of Lafayette was in good condition at Lafayette General Hospital after the Christmas Eve wreck. Steven Sonier, 25, of Lafayette was killed in the accident, in which Sonier's motorcycle flew off a curve and went into the Vermilion River, officials said.

"(Duplechin) covered himself to keep warm, which was a very bright thing for a 14-year-old to know how to do," said nursing supervisor Mary Bellina, adding, "He has minor injuries compared to what it could have been."

"Maybe this is due to consuming so much milk, but this is what we are looking into," Bushnell said.

"We really don't know the overall effect of milk," he said. "Milk is very complex and what we are saying ... is that we should look at the components to see what each does."

Bushnell said milk is rich in minerals that appear to have a protective effect against lead.

"On the one hand, its lactose content would enhance absorption of lead, as shown here, whereas its high concentrations of calcium, phosphorus, zinc and protein would be expected to reduce the retention of lead," the scientists said in a report published in Science magazine.

Bushnell said milk probably would be protective against lead poisoning if there were no lead in it to begin with.

"Normally, there isn't much lead in milk," he said, "but there may be a problem in some canned milk in which there may be lead in the solder of the can."

There also are other ways in which lead can get into milk, he said, but whatever the source, the important thing is that the lactose could help it get into the body.

The researchers found that young rats given radioactive lead in water absorbed 38.7 percent of the metal. However, when high doses of lactose was put into the solution, rats absorbed up to 74.7 percent of the mineral.

In a second experiment comparing lactose to other sugars, the lactose-fed rats absorbed up to 50 percent more lead than those getting glucose, galactose or maltose, the researchers reported.

No Agriculture Talent, Man Copying Machine

RESACA, Ga. (AP) — Five monks who lack the farming talents of their counterparts are manning copying machines at a northwest Georgia monastery, providing services to the greater glory of anyone who will commission their work.

The livelihood of a small group of Russian Orthodox brothers at the Monastery of the Glorious Ascension may seem unusual, except perhaps to television viewers familiar with a popular commercial.

A sophisticated copying machine, computer, document printer and video display terminal are among the trappings of the monastery, says Father Damian, the abbot and president of MGA Computer Services. The firm is a wholly owned subsidiary of Monastery of the Glorious Ascension Inc.

"Last year we were casting about for something to do, since none of us are farmers," Father Damian said. "Then I went to a seminar that IBM put on and one thing led to another and here we are."

Copying material is but one task the monks want to perform for both non-profit and profit-making services who hire their services.

Corralled Leaking Oil

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — About 2,500 barrels of crude oil which leaked from a pipeline were prevented from flowing out to sea by workers who corralled the spill with booms, the Coast Guard says.

The crews replaced a 20-foot section of the pipeline and placed the booms in the Dominguez Channel, Coast Guard Lt. Scott Settimo said Thursday. Vacuum trucks then scooped up the goo.

The leak began Tuesday in a Southern California Edison Co. pipeline in Carson, which is about 15 miles southwest of Los Angeles, Settimo said. The cause of the leak was under investigation.

BODIES RECOVERED
TOKYO (AP) — China has recovered remains of some 300 bodies and more than 600 items of personal effects from the Japanese ship Awa Maru that was mistakenly torpedoed by a U.S. submarine in 1945, China's Xinhua news agency reports.

Their brochure, with medieval lettering reminiscent of old hand-lettered scriptural texts, boasts experience in the mail order field and offers computerized list maintenance and mailing services to prospective clients.

"We beg the indulgence of a conversation with you," the brochure begins. "We pray we will hear from you."

The monks moved in June to the 8,000-square-foot contemporary building on 31 acres just off U.S. 41 in Whitfield County. Prior to June, the brothers ran a residential school and farm for problem boys in Picayune, Miss.

The boys' school became too big a task for the small monastic group, Father Damian said. Before that, the monks had run a parochial school in San Diego, Calif.

"In our previous work, we depended a lot on contributions," he said. "We had to rely on contracted computer services to help in the fund raising, so we know how important such a service is to non-profit organizations."

Starting next month, the monks will have two hospitals and a child care facility as clients. The monks plan to use the profits from their work with these and other clients to build a chapel and a guest house retreat on their Whitfield County property.

Father Damian acknowledged the business was an unusual pursuit for monks. He said most orders tend to engage in such activities as the Trappist Monastery in Conyers, Ga., which is known for its food products and home-baked bread.

"This business is merely a means of support," said Father Michael, vice president of the company, "to help keep some of the Trappists' bread on our table."

The brothers laugh about recent television commercials indicating that monks wear ceremonial vestments to operate copying machines.

"I wouldn't go near that machine dressed up the way they described it," said Father John, another member of the business. "Something would be sure to get caught in all that machinery."

Stock And Market Reports

Iraq Vows To Keep Iran Territory It Captured

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were little changed today in a very quiet post-holiday session on Wall Street.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 1.10 to 961.65 by noon.

Gainers and losers were evenly balanced in the broad tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Wednesday's trading was the lightest in more than seven months. Analysts expected an even slower day today with many investors taking a long Christmas weekend.

About the only economic news of the day was something that didn't happen.

New York's Citibank kept its prime lending rate unchanged at 21½. In so doing, the bank declined to match a reduction to 20½ percent posted earlier in the week by San Francisco's Wells Fargo Bank and Chase Manhattan of New York.

International Harvester climbed ¼ to 26½. On Wednesday Teledyne Inc. disclosed that it had increased its stake in Harvester to just under 10 percent.

The NYSE's composite index lost .04 to 77.91. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .87 at 353.37.

Volume on the Big Board came to just 6.68 million shares at noon, against 15.15 million at the same point on Wednesday.

By FAROUK NASSAR

Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iraqi President Saddam Hussein says his nation will keep all captured Iranian territory as its "military border with Iran ... as long as the state of war exists," and confirmed that his forces opened a third front in the 95-day-old war, striking at Iran's northwestern province of Kurdistan.

In Tehran, Iran's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, today said Hussein was "in a state of madness." He accused the superpowers of trying to "separate the Moslems" and said the Iraqis were instigating Arab rebellion in Kurdistan "under the cover of nationalism," Tehran radio reported.

"Our forces crossed the Iranian-Iraqi international border into Kurdistan a week ago," Hussein said in a statement distributed Thursday by the official Iraqi news agency.

"Iraq's military borders with Iran have been stretched northward to the remote frontier juncture with Turkey."

"Our military borders as long as the state of war exists will remain in Abadan, Ahwaz, Dezful (refinery, capital and military garrison cities respectively, in Khuzistan province), Gilan Gharb and Kurdistan."

Until the invasion of Kurdistan, the battlefield stretched 300 miles north from the northern tip of the Persian Gulf and was largely unchanged during the past two months.

Hussein said he ordered the new invasion because of Iran's "intransigence" and declared he would accept no proposal of an Iraqi pullback until Iran proffered "unambiguous recognition of Iraq's full sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab waterway."

The Shatt al-Arab is Iraq's only shipping outlet to the Persian Gulf. The two oil-rich nations shared the 120-mile waterway as their border under a 1975 treaty. Iraq abrogated the pact shortly before it invaded Iran last September.

Iranian communiques conceded a new invasion front in Kurdistan's Marivan district 40 miles east of Suleimaniyeh. But they did not mention any thrust that would put Iraqi forces close to Iran's major Kurdish city of Mahabad, 50 miles from Turkey's southeastern border.

Iranian communiques said the push from Marivan put the Iraqi forces within a 50-mile distance from Sanandaj, the second major city in the province where Kurdish insurgents have been active since the 1979 rise to power of Iran's Islamic revolution.

They said 92 Iraqi troops were killed and 15 captured in the Marivan fighting, but gave no Iranian casualties.

Iran's official Pars news agency has reported a sharp escalation of Kurdish guerrilla activity in area during the last three weeks. It accused Iraq of encouraging a breakaway Kurdish state in northwestern Iran.

Both Iran and Iraq reported Iranian air raids on Iraqi supply routes to the invading forces in Marivan, along with artillery exchanges and helicopter gunship raids in Iran's western highlands and the southwestern oil province of Khuzistan.

Iran claimed 43 Iraqi soldiers killed and 47 injured in combat in the two traditional war theaters on the northern rim of the Persian Gulf. Iraq claimed 68 Iranian fatalities in both sectors Thursday.

Tehran Radio said Khomeini made his comments on the war in a talk with Arabic and Farsi-speaking Iranians from Khuzistan and Kurds from Kurdistan, where the new war front has been opened.

"It is immature to think that he (Hussein) could destroy Iran in one week," he was quoted as saying. "He could not even get Khuzistan, which is only a section of Iran. Now he is nervous and in a state of madness. He wants to achieve victory in whatever means."

Tehran Radio also quoted a report from Pars that said three women and four men, "apparent supporters of Pishgam students" were arrested in Abadan for carrying "illegal weapons," including Soviet-made machine guns. The report said the seven were detained by the Islamic revolutionary court of Abadan for investigation.

Pishgam is a spin-off group from the Marxist Fedayeen-e-Khalq guerrilla organization.

Much Mail To A Runner

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Some people say the art of letter writing is dead, but you could never get Terry Fox to believe that.

When he returned to his Port Coquitlam, British Columbia, home in September after cancer spread to his lungs and forced him to halt a cross-Canada run, Fox was greeted with three to five hefty postbags of mail a day.

A postal worker told him that while he was in the hospital for cancer treatment before his homecoming, more mail was dumped on his doorstep than was delivered to the entire city of Port Coquitlam, a city of 23,000 about 25 miles east of Vancouver.

The mail tapered off in October and November but has picked up during the holiday season, showing Canadians haven't forgotten the one-legged cancer victim whose Marathon of Hope raised more than $20 million in pledges and donations for cancer research.

Fox gets everything from gifts of books — including about 20 Bibles — to pleas from children who ask that he recover.

Writers often offer their own cancer cures to Fox, who suffers from osteosarcoma, a rare type of bone cancer that forced amputation of his right leg above the knee 3½ years ago and now has spread to his lungs.

He turns down the cures. "I think maybe they're really trying to help, but there's no way I'm going to stop taking what my doctor says."

Fox is undergoing chemotherapy at Royal Columbian Hospital in nearby New Westminster. Preliminary results show the drugs have shrunk the tumors in his lungs and doctors remain hopeful they'll save his life.

The curly-haired 22-year-old has even had a couple of marriage proposals to which he jokingly responds: "Maybe when I'm healthy."

One letter from the United States, addressed only to "Terry Fox, Canada," was dutifully routed to his home.

"The mail service has been great," he says.

Letters from children often are accompanied by adult-size donations of as much as $200 or $300, which the children have raised through mini-marathon runs at their schools, in skits, dance marathons and other events.

For some the gift is a special sacrifice, as it was for the boy who donated his life savings of $7.

Others draw pictures of themselves or enclose snapshots and relate everything from how they like their teacher to their latest trip to the movies.

Hostages...

accept Iran's "logical" terms for their release, or watch them be tried as spies.

The papal envoy Bugnini, saw groups of the captives twice earlier since their capture on Nov. 4, 1979, when Iranian militants overran the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Iranian officials Thursday released to U.S. networks a film of the visit to the hostages by Bugnini and several Iranian Christian clergymen. It was the first film of the hostages seen on American TV since last Easter.

The officials promised an additional 90 minutes of film today, reportedly containing holiday messages from about 45 of the hostages to their families.

Identified on the first film were Joseph Hall of Elyria, Ohio; Kevin Hermening of Oak Creek, Wis.; Steve Kirtley of Little Rock, Ark.; Paul Lewis of Homer, Ill.; Consul-General Richard Morefield of San Diego, Calif.; Charles Scott of Stone Mountain, Ga.; Phillip Ward, no hometown available; Donald Cooke of Memphis, Tenn.; Elizabeth Swift of Washington, D.C.; Bert Moore of Mount Vernon, Ohio; and Kathryn Koob of Jesup, Iowa.

Pars, the Iranian news agency, said 49 hostages attended services at "the place of their residence," and that three others detained at the Foreign Ministry in Tehran had Christmas services later Thursday.

Bugnini said he did not know where the hostages were billeted because he was driven blindfolded to the five-hour meeting which began late Christmas Eve.

"It was very fine and very beautiful," Bugnini said, adding that at one point, one of the women hostages cried and laughed at the same time. He did not identify her.

Two American women remain hostage and are described by Iran as high State Department officials. They were accused of spying and were not released with the group of blacks and women freed soon after the embassy takeover.

Both Bugnini and the Iranian Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tehran, the Rev. Youhannan Semaan Issayi, described the hostages as physically well.

Earlier this week, U.S. officials said they feared some of the Americans might be in prison and not receiving proper medical care. But State Department officials refused to comment on the issue Thursday.

Two Iranian Protestant ministers whose identities were not made known apparently met with other hostages, although that also was not disclosed by Iranian authorities and could not be confirmed by Bugnini.

Yuletide...

tsburg, Calif., blazes that claimed one life each.

In El Monte, Calif., 5-year-old Mark Herron was riding his first two-wheel bicycle, a gift of his parents, when he was struck and killed by a hit-and-run truck driver, officials said.

In Cleveland, a family in despair over the loss of a small child and distraught about a burglary were cheered by a parade of sympathetic strangers who brought them food and presents despite bitter cold.

Earl Gravely, his common-law wife, Patricia Wright and their children, Elizabeth, 7, and Connie, 5, prepared for a subdued Christmas because Denise, 3, has been missing since August. On Tuesday, a burglar ransacked their home.

But publicity about the burglary brought people to their door.

"They really made it nice for us," said Gravely, 33. "You know how bad the weather was. This has cheered us up a whole lot."

In Elizabeth, N.J., about 270 inmates at the Union County Jail received 5,000 cookies as a present from the sheriff's mother.

And in Denver, Charles Fluty, an unemployed cook, spent a quarter of his $197 monthly pension check on holiday treats and stayed up all Christmas Eve to cook dinner for 52 fellow tenants of a shabby transient hotel.

Fluty spent $50 on green beans, cranberry jelly, yams and marshmallows, mashed potatoes, stuffing, bread and tossed salad. Bill Weaver, manager of the DeWitt Hotel, put up $20 for a 24-pound turkey.

Without Fluty's charity, many of the tenants might have spent Christmas at a nearby mission or soup kitchen.

"Those are the ones I'm doing it for — the ones who can't afford to go out," Fluty said.

Blue Put Clamps On Gray & Venuto

Nip Gray, 24-23

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — With the final seconds ticking away, the Blue team defensive line clamped a pressure squeeze on quarterback Jay Venuto to squelch a Gray comeback and claim victory in the 43rd annual Blue-Gray All-Star Football Classic.

"We just put the pressure on the quarterback," said Blue defensive coach Jimmy Johnson, after the Blue team defeated the Gray 24-23 on Christmas Day.

The North squad foiled two passing attempts by Venuto for a 2-point conversion in the last 31 seconds of the game.

Gray Coach Doug Barfield and the Wake Forest quarterback elected to win rather than tie the game after a last-minute scoring strike from Venuto to Auburn's Byron Franklin brought the Rebels within a point.

Venuto's first pass to Ken Toler of Mississippi was incomplete, but a penalty gave Venuto another chance. Under heavy pressure from the Blue defensive line, Venuto again threw incomplete to Marvin Harvey of Southern Mississippi.

Johnson said he thought the Blue squad played extremely well in the second half.

"We made some mistakes in the first half, but not in the second. The Gray team was great ... they're just one point shy of the Blue," he said.

Blue offensive coach Joe Restic said of the Gray's come-from-behind attempt, "I didn't think we would get out of there alive."

Restic said he was satisfied with the way the North handled the ball. He said the Blue squad's winning margin would have been wider if it had not fumbled on a long drive early in the fourth quarter. The South recovered in its own end zone.

"These were two fine football teams, and they played their hearts out," Restic said.

The Blue team's offensive attack was led by Harvard's Brian Buckley and Drake's Rick Casko.

Buckley's 65-yard scoring pass to Southern Cal's Kevin Williams in the first quarter gave the Blue squad a 7-7 tie. The Gray team pulled ahead 14-7 in the second period, but Casko engineered a Blue scoring drive capped by his 12-yard scamper into the end zone.

In the second half, Villanova's Howard Long blocked a punt by the Gray's Stan Talley of Texas Christian. Colorado's Steve Doolittle recovered the ball for the Yanks on the Rebels' 1-yard line.

One play later, Indiana's Lonnie Johnson sailed over to make it 24-17 Blue.

Long was named the game's most valuable player for a defensive effort that set up the winning score.

In the opening game, at 1 p.m., North Carolina A&T faces Northwestern. Virginia and Indiana meet at 6 p.m., with Temple and Queens facing off at 8 p.m.

Play continues on Sunday and Monday.

The Lady Pirates bring a 5-1 record into the tournament, and that if only their official mark. Two games played in the Carolina Classic, against West Germany and Poland, counted only as exhibitions, and will not show up on the overall record.

That was bad news for three members of the Pirate team too. Mary Denker poured in 27 points and grabbed off 14 rebounds against Poland, while Sam Jones had 28 points and Kathy Riley pulled down 17 rebounds against West Germany. Those stats, unfortunately, will not count for them.

Riley is the leading scorer for the Pirates, hitting at a 17.7

clip, while Jones is scoring 13.2 points a game, and Marcia Girven is hitting 10.7 per game. Girven is also the leading rebounder with a 10.7 mark.

Massachusetts is led by Julie Ready, a 6-2 forward with a 22.2 scoring average and a 9.8 rebound mark. Center Ginger Legare, 6-1, is scoring 10.6 points a game. The team has gotten away to a 3-2 start.

Coach Cathy Andruzzi is worried about Massachusetts, with good reason. Last year, they were one of the top teams in the region.

However, New York has been good to the Pirates this year. Earlier, on a visit to the Big Apple, the Pirates best Queens and Wagner. "It'll be great to be back in New York," Andruzzi said. "It is an exciting place to play and it gives the girls a lot of exposure."

After the Queens event, the Lady Pirates head south. They have a three-game swing through Florida, starting January 5, when they play at Florida. On the 6th, they are at Stetson, and close off the trip on the 8th against Florida State. They also face North Carolina on the 13th before finally coming home against William & Mary on January 17.

Rose Star Honorable Mention

From Staff & Wire Reports — athlete from Winnfield, La., who is being recruited nationally as a defensive back.

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Sentinel Star All-Southern high school team has featured great passers and great receivers in its 61 years of honoring the South's top high school football players.

But never has a passing combo such as Todd Dodge-Brent Duhon dominated a selection as the 1980 squad.

The Dodge-to-Duhon combination accounted for 90 completions and a dozen touchdowns as Port Arthur Jefferson went to the finals of the Texas large school championships. Dodge compiled 3,135 yards worth of passing statistics and over 30 TDs.

This unique passing duo means a Baker's Dozen standouts have been named No. 1 in their respective Dixie states.

Dodge and Kent Austin, from Brentwood, Tenn., Academy, are the lone quarterbacks honored as No. 1. Austin led his team to the AAA state title and ran or passed for 30 TDs.

The only area player named to the squad was Greenville Rose's Curtis Spell. The 6-5, 230-pound senior was named as an honorable mention selection.

It is a year for the Ds ... and the running backs.

D for Dodge and Duhon. For Marcus Dupree, the sensational junior running back from Philadelphia, Miss., with 3,300 career rushing yards and 58 career touchdowns and one more year to go. For Mark Danielowicz, a bruising blocker at tight end from Little Rock, Ark., Sylvan Hills. And for Jeffrey Dale, a superior Vikes Second In Bull Durham To No. 1 High Pt.

DURHAM — Going into the Bull Durham Classic this past week, D.H. Conley was unranked in the state. That will probably change following the Vikings' second place finish in the annual wrestling tournament held at Durham Jordan.

Conley, with two firsts and three seconds, wound up second behind High Point Andrews, ranked #1 in the state by Mat News, in the final tally, 172½ to 155, in the eight-team tournament.

Northwest Guilford, ranked 20th in the state, wound up third with 141 points while Saint Stephens was fourth with 107 points. Jordan had 90 points followed by Hillsboro Orange with 60½, South Caldwell 28 and Southern Durham 20½.

"I think we could move up into the rankings," D.H. Conley coach Milt Sherman said. "We were in the 'Could Move Up Category' (in the latest poll) and I think we'll be up there somewhere."

Leading the Vikings at the Bull Durham were Alexander Crandell and Michael Long, both of whom took home first places.

Crandell, in winning the 138-pound weight class, became only the third wrestler in the tournament's history to win three straight titles. The other two to win three consecutive crowns were Conley's Gary Harris ('77-79) and Greensboro Grimsley's Ken Jenkins ('73-75).

Crandell had a bye in the first round before decisioning NW Guilford's Keith McDonald, 10-1, and then defeating High Point Andrews'

Damon Tobin, 6-3, in the finals. Crandell is now 9-0 on the season, the best record on the team.

Long pinned Kenneth Morrison (NWG) at 3:03 and George Hamilton of Jordan at 1:52 before whipping Stacey Davis of High Point Andrews, 18-15, to capture the 185-pound crown.

Finishing second for Conley were William Green (105 pounds), Shannon Carson (112 pounds) and Willie Greene (167 pounds).

"The Bull Durham was excellent competition for us,"

Sherman said. "It was a real strong test, particularly that we got to face High Point Andrews. They're tough as nails and deserve their ranking. But we hung in there."

D.H. Conley's next match is another tournament, this time the West Carteret Invitational which begins Friday, Jan. 2 in Morehead City.

'Selfish' Bird Pleases Coach, Not Opponents

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics is learning to be a little selfish — and his coach, Bill Fitch, couldn't be happier.

"One area in which he has improved this year is that in a tight ball game he feels he can take over," Fitch said of the 6-foot-9 forward who was the National Basketball Association's Rookie of the Year last season. "He looks to take charge more, which is what we want."

That's exactly what Bird did Thursday, taking matters into his own hands in the second half to carry the Celtics to their ninth consecutive victory, 117-108 over the New York Knicks.

In other NBA games Thursday night, Washington beat the New Jersey Nets 109-94; Phoenix dumped San Antonio 131-111, and Portland edged Golden State 115-114.

Bird scored 20 of his 28 points in the second half, including four straight Celtics baskets in the fourth quarter when Boston outscored the Knicks 22-15.

"In the last quarter, I felt it was up to me to make things happen," said Bird, who also tied his season high by grabbing 20 rebounds. "The plays we ran were set up for me. The first few times I scored, then I passed to (Cedric) Maxwell who was open."

"We held our composure in the end," Bird added. "We know who to go to when the game is tight. I'm glad the coach calls plays for me. I don't feel any extra responsibility or pressure in tight spots."

The Knicks, on the other hand, seemed to lack direction down the stretch. Their running game bogged down, several shots rolled off the rim, and that was all the edge Boston needed.

"I can't complain. It was a well-played game that could have gone either way," said Knicks Coach Red Holzman. "Boston is a fine team. Down the end we didn't hit anything and made some errors. The Celtics did what they were supposed to do and didn't make any errors. And Bird was very tough in the second half."

Bird's baseline jumper put Boston ahead to stay 103-102 with 5:17 left. He followed with a driving layup and Nate Archibald also scored on a layup to give Boston a five-point lead. The Knicks closed to 109-106 on a stuff shot by Bill Cartwright, but Bird scored on a short hook and Cedric Maxwell and Archibald hit two free throws apiece to clinch the victory.

"What you saw is what we see in Boston every night — which is why Boston sells out every night," Fitch said. "You can't just stop one guy on this team. Everyone picks everyone else up."

Maxwell, making eight of nine field goal attempts, had 24 points, while guards Archibald and Chris Ford added 16 each. For New York, guard Ray Williams had 30 points and a team-high 10 rebounds, while Michael Ray Richardson added 23 points and Cartwright 22.

Bullets 109, Nets 94

Elvin Hayes, who scored 16 points, also pulled down 15 rebounds and replaced Walt Bellamy as the fourth all-time rebounder in the history of the NBA. He grabbed his 14,242nd rebound with 4:02 left in the third period to surpass the retired Bellamy.

Greg Ballard led the Bullets with 24 points, 12 in each half.

The Bullets, who won their first game against New Jersey in three tries this season and only their second game in the last eight, jumped to a 10-0 lead in the first period and stayed ahead.

Mitch Kupchak came off the bench to score 18 points for the Bullets and rookie Rick Mahorn, who replaced the injured Wes Unseld at center, grabbed seven rebounds and blocked three shots in the first half. Unseld was sidelined with a swollen ankle.

Rookie Mike Gminski, who scored only six points in the first half, led the Nets with 19 points.

The loss was the second straight for the Nets since Bob MacKinnon replaced Kevin Loughery as coach.

Suns 131, Spurs 111

Guard Dennis Johnson broke open a close game with four points and three assists during an 18-2 second-quarter spurt that propelled the Suns to their sixth straight victory.

The Suns led just 44-42 when Johnson hit a 10-foot jumper at the 5:03 mark to start the spurt. Guard Kyle Macy and forward Len "Truck" Robinson added four points apiece as the Suns opened a 62-44 margin.

Johnson put in the Suns' first eight points of the second half and they led by as many as 25 midway through the period.

Guard George Gervin, who led game scorers with 31 points, helped the Spurs cut the lead to 97-83 at the end of three periods, but they couldn't come any closer than 11 points in the final quarter.

Johnson led the Suns with 23 points, Robinson added 20 and a game-high 11 rebounds, and Walter Davis also finished with 20 points for the Suns.

Trail Blazers 115, Warriors 114

Mychal Thompson's three-point play with 31 seconds left kept the Warriors winless at Portland since Feb. 8, 1976.

Lloyd Free, who led the Warriors with 32 points and Joe Barry Carroll, who had 20, scored seven straight points for Golden State to put them up 109-108 with 1:16 remaining.

Portland's Kevin Kunnert and Golden State's Bernard King, who had 21 points, then exchanged field goals, setting the stage for Thompson's game-winner and free throw.

Owens led the Blazers with 23, followed by Jim Paxson's 21 and Kelvin Ransey, who had 19 points and nine assists.

Buckeyes Face Penn State Today

Ohio St.'s No. 1 Isn't

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — His uniform number is somewhat of a misnomer.

Even though Ohio State's Bob Atha wears No. 1, he is not the Buckeyes' starting quarterback. Fellow junior Art Schlichter is and has become the most prolific passer in the school's Big Ten Conference history.

The 5-11, 180-pound Atha is not his team's field goal or extra point kicker. Vlade Janakievski, a 23-year-old senior from Yugoslavia, is and has gone on to set school records in those departments.

"I knew from the beginning that I was just going to be a backup. But that didn't discourage me," Atha said. "I was a walk-on with no expectations of ever seeing the field. The fact that I earned a scholarship was reward enough for me."

But Atha was expected to see his share of action in today's Fiesta Bowl when 11th-ranked Ohio State met No. 10 Penn State.

Atha's primary duty is to kick off, which he does so well that few teams ever return one on Ohio State.

As Schlichter's understudy, Atha played in all 11 games for the Buckeyes this year — completing 15 of 28 passes for 190 yards. He is considered one of the quickest players on the Ohio State roster and showed that by averaging 5.7 yards on 31 carries and five touchdowns in 1980.

One of the scores was a 63-yard run against Michigan State.

"I think I could do the same things Schlichter does if I had the chance," said Atha. "I'm a better runner, I think. He has a super arm and is a sure bet for the pros. But I think I can play in the NFL, too. All I need is the chance to prove myself."

A high school standout in Worthington, Ohio, Atha turned his back on scholarship offers from Notre Dame and Penn State for the chance to play for then-Buckeye Coach Woody Hayes, even if he had to be as a walk-on.

"My dad grew up with Coach Hayes in Newcomerstown, Ohio. They went to school together and were really close," Atha said. "I grew up watching 'The Woody Hayes Show' on television. I wanted to be a Buckeye for as long as I can remember."

"One day during my senior year, Coach Hayes called me and asked me if I wanted to play for him," added Atha. "I was tickled to death. It was what I always wanted to do."

As a freshman, Atha made six of nine field goal attempts. He kicked a 50-yarder his sophomore year.

"He's a valuable asset to us," said Ohio State Coach Earle Bruce. "He does everything asked of him and then some."

A newspaper log should burn about as long as a wood log. Roll your newspaper log as tight as possible. The tighter it is rolled the better it will burn.

STEP TWO

After you have squeezed it tightly, bind it with a coat hanger or metal wire. Soaking the rolled newspaper in water and letting it dry completely will "season" the newspaper and make it burn more efficiently.

Finally, stack about six dried newspaper logs in a crisscross to provide more ventilation to the fire and light it. Enjoy.

Baseball Hall Of Fame

Controversial And Significant Poll Taking Set To Begin Soon

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Now that we've decided to put a new president in the White House, we can settle down to an important winter election — the annual vote on baseball's Hall of Fame.

A province of the Baseball Writers' Association of America, this traditionally is one of the most significant and at the same time most controversial poll-taking enterprises in sports.

The questions inevitably arise: How much of the vote is dictated by the heart rather than the head? How heavily are the scales weighted by a player's "good guy" image — his popularity as opposed to another player's unpopularity with the press?

How objectively do the voters follow the guidelines spelled out so clearly in the ballot — "ability, integrity, sportsmanship, character, contribution to both team and baseball?"

For the living honorees, it is an exhilarating experience — the crowning glory of their careers to be given a niche in Cooperstown, N.Y., beside such immortals as Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb, Walter Johnson, Joe DiMaggio and Willie Mays.

For those who miss, it represents bitter disappointment and disillusionment, often total despair.

So here we go again — 300 to 400 baseball writers pouring over a ballot of 39 names, 16 of them pitchers, 21 on the sheet for the first time, others — such as Roger Maris, who broke Babe Ruth's season home run record — keeping their fingers crossed as they face another time at bat.

It's an imposing list — some genuine stars, some on the fringe of stardom, others of moderate accomplishments for whom Cooperstown will remain an impossible dream. It takes 75 percent of the votes to be elected to the hall.

Automatically, the inclination is to examine those players who barely missed a year ago. They would be Don Drysdale, the big Dodger pitcher who finished third behind the 1960 inductees, Al Kaline and Duke Snider; the late Gil Hodges, fourth for the second year in a row, and relief ace Hoyt Wilhelm.

The new freshman class is exemplary, headed by the durable Harmon Killebrew, who slammed 573 home runs in a 22-year career; pitchers Bob Gibson and Juan Marichal and the late Thurman Munson, the Yankee catcher who died in the crash of his private plane Aug. 2, 1979.

Munson's name was put on the list before the prescribed five-year wait after retirement as a sentimental gesture for which a precedent had been set in the case of Roberto Clemente.

Clemente, a Pittsburgh outfielder with all the necessary credentials, died in the crash of a mission of mercy plane on Jan. 1, 1973. Two months later he was overwhelmingly elected to the Hall of Fame, then inducted posthumously at Cooperstown the following August.

The baseball writers now seem inclined to close the door on such departures from the five-year waiting period.

A strong sentimental aura has built up around Hodges, who like Snider was one of the colorful "Boys of Summer" of the old Dodgers and later a popular manager of the world champion Amazin' Mets. A nice man, Hodges died of a heart attack in the spring of 1972.

Enos "Country" Slaughter, who was the Pete Rose of the St. Louis Cardinals over three decades ending in 1959, was justifiably bitter in failing to make the Hall of Fame in the 20-year period following his retirement, thus dropping from the current rolls. He felt writers were swayed by his sometimes crusty personality rather than his performance. Some attribute the same reason to the repeated slight of Maris.

Tiffs with the law or authority apparently are no deterrent to consideration.

Gates Brown, who set records as a pinch-hitter, spent 22 months in an Ohio reformatory for a breaking and entering charge in his youth. He paid his dues and later helped the Detroit Tigers win a World Series. Orlando Cepeda was incarcerated nine months after marijuana was found in his luggage. Insisting on his innocence, he later returned to baseball as a coach. Marichal once hit Dodger catcher John Roseboro with a baseball bat, drawing a suspension, a fine and a heavy lawsuit. All are on the ballot.

You don't have to be perfect to get into baseball's Hall of Fame, but it helps.

Opening lead: Two of ♦.

The return of Trump Coup Tommy to our club seemed to herald a rash of hands where trumps broke badly. It was almost as though the Fates, knowing that he was a poor player in any other circumstance, were conspiring to make Tommy invincible.

Tommy and his partner reached the optimum contract of seven spades due to the fact that Tommy's partner took control of the auction as soon as he heard Tommy bid spades. When Blackwood elicited the information that Tommy possessed two aces and two kings, North, with some trepidation (he had seen Tommy play dummy before), leaped to a grand slam.

West was delighted with the turn of events — he surely held one more trump than either declarer or dummy. He made the wise opening lead of a trump and settled back to collect his "sure" set. East discarded a diamond on the opening lead, and Tommy was in his element. He had six top tricks in the side suits, so if he could score seven tricks in trumps, he

Another Victim Of Freeway

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — A body discovered last week near Yucaipa has been identified as that of Sean King, 14, of South Gate, apparently a victim of the Freeway Killings, police say. Identification was made with the aid of dental records, San Bernardino County Sheriff's Deputy Larry Malmberg said Wednesday. Authorities were tipped to the body's location by an anonymous telephone caller.

King disappeared from a bus stop in Downey on May 19. Two men accused in the killings, William G. Bonin and Vernon Butts, were charged in his death before the body was found. Some 44 young men and boys whose bodies were dumped near Southern California freeways since 1972 are believed to be victims in the series of killings.

Yesterday's Cryptiquip — LOVE LIVES ALONE IN SILENT, LOST LANES.

Today's Cryptiquip clue: S equals N

The Cryptiquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Urges Space Laser Be Given Priority

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan's Defense Department transition team is recommending a crash program to develop a space-based laser weapon to defend against ballistic missiles, according to published reports.

The Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin, in a copyright story Thursday, said the program would be comparable in urgency and thoroughness to the Manhattan Project that produced the U.S. atomic bomb in World War II. The laser proposal was spurred by reports that the Soviet Union will deploy such a system by 1985, the paper said.

The Washington Post, in today's editions, said the Reagan team is proposing development of a high-energy laser system that would fire an intense beam of laser light at ballistic missiles as they rose into low Earth orbit on their way to a target 5,000 miles away.

Basing the weapons in space would avoid clouds, fog, rain or snow that ground-based lasers would be unable to penetrate.

At the present stage of development, the Post said, laser weapons are at least 10 years from being used in space.

Arrested For Baby-Selling

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Police said today they have arrested a woman believed involved in a baby sale syndicate who allegedly was offering a two-day-old child for sale for $100.

Police said the woman told them she bought the baby for $40 from a young mother.

The paper said laser scientists hope accelerated development will allow them to miniaturize laser weapons and their power sources so they could be put aboard satellites weighing no more than 40,000 to 50,000 pounds. That would enable the space shuttle to haul them into orbit, the Post said.

The Norwich Bulletin said the laser program is among 10 strategic "quick-fix" initiatives expected to be recommended in the Pentagon transition team's final report.

William R. Van Cleave, head of the Pentagon transition team, and Defense Secretary-designate Casper Weinberger discussed the projects this week while reviewing a proposal to seek up to $20 billion in supplemental defense spending for fiscal year 1981, the Bulletin said.

Doubt Value Of 'Agreement'

CHICAGO (AP) — A proposed agreement to restrict FBI political spying would be far from effective, three attorneys say.

The FBI and the CIA have signed agreements promising not to engage in illegal political spying against Chicago organizations or their members. The settlement, subject to approval by a federal judge, stems from suits filed by citizens' groups against the federal agencies.

Lawyers Jeffrey Haas, Flint Taylor and Dennis Cunningham told the judge in a letter that the proposed settlement places an "impossible burden of proof" on anyone complaining of improper FBI actions and doesn't require the FBI and CIA to reveal informants or infiltrators.

Declares 'Witness' Is A Smokescreen

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A former Army investigator continues to maintain that the recent confession of an alleged witness to the murders of the wife and daughters of former Green Beret Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald is nothing more than a "smokescreen" concocted by defenders of MacDonald. But he is unable to confirm that government agents had ever explored the means through which a Los Angeles private detective claims to have broken the case.

Peter E. Kearns, a Fayetteville real estate salesman who spent two years on the MacDonald case as an Army criminal investigation agent, said in earlier interviews that the reported confession of Helena Stoeckley that she witnessed the ritualistic slayings of the MacDonalds was "ridiculous." He added in an interview with The Fayetteville Times Thursday that Ms. Stoeckley was "an expert on confessing."

MacDonald was convicted in 1979 of the bludgeoning and stabbing deaths of his pregnant wife, Collette, 26, and their daughters, Kimberly, 5, and Kristen, 3. But he was free last week by an appeals court which ruled he was denied the right to a speedy trial. The murders were committed in February 1970.

MacDonald contends that he and his family were attacked by a group of strangers. He described the attackers as three men and a woman with long blond hair, a floppy hat and boots.

Despite his charges, Kearns was unable to confirm that government agents had ever explored the means private detective Ted Gunderson claims to have used to break the case.

Gunderson, a former FBI agent for 27 years, insists the critical key to unlocking the truth rests with a woman whom he believes watched the departure of the murderers in two cars during the early morning darkness of Feb. 17, 1970.

The woman, Jan Snyder of Cleveland, Ohio, lived two buildings away from the MacDonalds on the morning of the murders. She has described, said Gunderson, a unique manner in which two cars left the Ft. Bragg quarters area that morning. Gunderson said it matches precisely the manner in which Ms. Stoeckley claims she and those she has implicated drove away following the murders.

Other witnesses, both before and after the crimes, have placed Ms. Stoeckley and some of her friends in a car of the same make and model described by Ms. Snyder, the detective said.

But equally important, he said, Ms. Snyder picked out a picture of a man she saw enter the car. Gunderson said it is a picture of a man Ms. Stoeckley implicated in the crimes.

Kearns, although insisting that all leads were checked thoroughly by government investigators, was unable to confirm Thursday that government agents in their investigation had ever shown Ms. Snyder pictures of Helena Stoeckley or her friends for possible identification.

Kearns said he believes, though, that "anything we would normally do in an investigation would have been followed through."

Ms. Stoeckley's confession, according to the newspaper, details how members of the "Black Cult" to which the then 17-year-old Ms. Stoeckley belonged, set out to "punish" MacDonald for his dealings with certain drug members.

But Kearns calls Ms. Stoeckley "an expert on confessing." He maintains she has confessed before, and that anything in her current confession "has probably been made available to her during past interrogations." Ms. Stoeckley was dismissed at MacDonald's 1979 trial by the judge, who called her an unreliable witness.

But Kearns believes there can be nothing that Ms. Stoeckley mentions in the way of details in a confession "that she could not have picked up from her preliminary interviews long before she was interviewed by Gunderson."

Kearns said during his interrogations of MacDonald, the physician had his chance to identify Ms. Stoeckley from the photos.

"If Helena Stoeckley was there, why wasn't (Dr.) MacDonald able to identify her pictures," Kearns said.

Kearns said he personally put pictures of Ms. Stoeckley before MacDonald during an interview in Philadelphia in 1971 in the presence of MacDonald's attorney, Bernard Segal.

"There were several pictures of her — side shots and mug shots," Kearns said. "He (MacDonald) had his chance then."

However, Ms. Stoeckley, in her confession, said she was wearing a long blond wig and a floppy hat during the attack on the MacDonald family, according to the newspaper.

Reagan, Portillo Plan Seek Working Relationship

By ISAAC A. LEVI
Associated Press Writer
MEXICO CITY (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan's first trip abroad to meet with President Jose Lopez Portillo is a strong indication the two want to develop a personal working relationship, American and Mexican diplomats here say.

It is a relationship that Lopez Portillo never managed to achieve with President Carter — and relations between the United States and Mexico have stayed humdrum as a result.

Reagan is scheduled to meet for the day with Lopez Portillo on Jan. 5 at the border city of Juarez, across the Rio Grande from El Paso, Texas, Mexican officials said. The main purpose of the meeting is for the two to get to know each other better. Reagan and Lopez Portillo first met when Reagan, while still a presidential candidate, visited Mexico City last year.

The fact that Reagan sought the meeting, his first trip abroad since Election Day, has impressed the Mexicans. "Let's hope it will underscore the importance Mexico really has for the U.S. and vice versa," said one Mexican official who asked anonymity.

Lopez Portillo himself described the coming meeting with Reagan as "a necessary personal relationship with the chief executive not only of the most powerful nation on earth but a neighbor ... with whom we have problems."

Among other things, Lopez Portillo is expected to try to convince Reagan that the United States must drop what Mexicans feel is a "big brother" attitude toward this oil-rich nation, something the Mexican president feels he failed to impress upon Carter.

"The chemistry between the two men just wasn't there," said an American diplomat who asked not to be named. "Now, there is every indication Reagan and Lopez Portillo want to develop a personal relationship, and that is always a big plus in relations between two countries."

New oil finds have made Mexico the world's fifth richest oil nation, increasing its strategic importance to the United States and, with it, Mexico's political influence internationally.

"We have already seen signs of a new interest in Mexico in playing an influential role in regional and world affairs," U.S. Ambassador Julian Nava said recently.

"No U.S. administration could ever have ignored the significance of Mexico to our own security," Nava added.

Among other things, the two countries share a sparsely patrolled 1,776-mile border, and are major trading partners.

Under Reagan's new Republican administration, Mexican Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda says he expects "the most difficult problems between Mexico and the U.S. to come up ... on multilateral regional issues," as a result of Mexico's more assertive international role.

Mexicans are particularly worried by reports that Reagan will be more aggressive in opposing growing leftist movements in Central America and the Caribbean, two areas in which Mexico recently developed an interest.

It recently joined Venezuela in an agreement guaranteeing the oil needs of Central American and Caribbean countries, financed by long-term, low-interest loans to help their sagging economies. Mexico wants no forceful U.S. political intervention in the area, or at least it wants to be consulted before the United States takes any action, Castaneda indicated.

Mexico is resisting a Reagan trial idea for a North American common market with the United States and Canada. Trade among the three countries is hitting all-time highs, and the Mexicans are afraid U.S. technology will absorb them.

More than two-thirds of Mexico's exports go to the United States, making it the third biggest trading partner after Canada and Japan. It is the principal U.S. supplier of silver, zinc, gypsum, antimony, mercury, bismuth, selenium, barium, rhenium and lead and a major supplier of winter vegetables and fruit.

Total trade between the two countries went up from $13 billion in 1978 to $19 billion in 1979 and is going up another 55 percent this year.

Also recently, Mexico resisted pressure from the Carter administration to join the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs and lower its import barriers to cheaper foreign-made goods. The Mexicans say they are determined to protect their developing industries.

Mexico similarly refused to raise its oil production or increase current sales of 650,000 barrels of crude oil and 300 million cubic feet of natural gas to the United States, because of fears the additional income will worsen inflation at home.

The large number of Mexicans settling illegally in the United States is another major problem that has been souring relations between the two countries for decades.

An average 800,000 Mexicans a year are caught crossing the border illicitly and returned. The number of so-called Mexican "illegals" living in the United States has been variously estimated at 3 million to 6 million.

Talks between Mexican and American officials have been going on for years, but Mexico has persistently refused to curb the flow of "illegals" because of its economic and population pressures.

Mexico's population of 85 million is growing 2.9 percent annually, and government planners estimate the country must provide 850,000 new jobs every year just to keep up with new jobseekers.

"No matter what restrictive measures you may adopt, the United States will continue to absorb for some time to come part of our excess population," a Mexican official said.

Police Seize Santa Claus

TRENTON, Mo. (AP) — It had all the appearances of a typical arrest report — until you read it closely.

Then it became clear that police in this northwest Missouri community were just having a little seasonal fun.

The report, contrived by Trenton police in the early hours of Christmas morning, said authorities were called shortly after midnight to a residence to find a 5-foot-6, 250-pound man stuck in a chimney.

Police were told the man, dressed in a velvet suit, had been seen flying from rooftop to rooftop and from chimney to chimney, the report said. He was identified as St. Nicholas, a toymaker from 1201 Reindeer Lane, North Pole.

Officers said the Trenton Fire Department assisted in extricating the man while they examined his vehicle — described as a red convertible with nine reindeer tied to the front. Officers reported they found numerous packages in the vehicle.

According to the tongue-in-cheek report, St. Nicholas was taken to police headquarters, the animals were directed to a veterinary clinic and the convertible was towed to a local body shop.

Asked how many stops he'd made, the man told police five or six million.

Asked if he knew where he was, the man replied, "Trenton, New Jersey."

Dallas Police Infiltrate School 'Smoking Groups'

DALLAS (AP) — For three months, Christa Parker earned honor marks at Thomas Jefferson High School. She was even named student of the month. But as well as being a "brain," Christa was a "head" who hung around the smoking area — with plenty of money to spend on marijuana.

The long-haired girl whom students knew as Christa, however, was really a 21-year-old mother — and a Dallas Police Department undercover narcotics agent.

Her work resulted in the arrest of 13 people, including the parents of one student and two non-students. Four other people, including one student, were arrested after a similar operation at W.T. White High School.

Dallas police first began infiltrating high schools in the early 1970s, when arrests were made at five schools. "There were more psychedelic, hallucinogenic type drugs then. Now there's more marijuana," said Capt. Don Milliken, commander of the vice division.

The officers, youthful-looking rookies using fake cover identities, usually enroll as transfer students. School principals are told about the operation, but do not know who the officers are.

Dallas Independent School District trustees and Superintendent Linus Wright have cooperated fully with the projects, Milliken said.

"We give these people very strict behavioral and tactical guidelines," Milliken said. "Obviously, they can't go out there and smoke dope with somebody or rip off a motorcycle. It's like you and I playing baseball and I have to play by the rules, but you can play any way you want to."

The officers do homework, participate in extracurricular activities and have little trouble fooling teachers and students, he said. Their mission is to find the dealers — students at the hub of the drug culture who supply the rest of the school.

"We could just go out and round up the smoking area," Milliken said. "But at every secondary school there are people who are actually pipelines and they make it available to the other students."

"If you get one guy who's dealing to six or seven kids, that's the whole idea. You cut out this little kid that takes a joint because he doesn't want to look like he's a chicken."

The investigations also serve as a deterrent — to scare teen-agers enough to override peer pressure. Drug users wield heavy influence at secondary schools, he said.

"We do not need the business," he said. "The justice system does not need any more kids in it. ... So the objective is, through enforcement and education, not only for the kids but for the parents, to deter them. There are certain other people who you are not going to deter from anything. We want to reach someone who might be considering going over to that group."

Milliken said dealers are as likely to be student leaders as not nowadays. "You can't tell the good guys from the bad guys anymore because it used to be the good guys all had short hair.

Now everybody has beards and holes in the back of their blue jeans."

Milliken said he was surprised at the number of girls who act as brokers, or middlemen for the dealers.

"Girls generally think nothing's going to happen to them. They have an untouchable attitude," he said. "Another thing is that they have a lot of freedom. Here's this 15-year-old girl staying out till 2 a.m. on a school night."

While marijuana is the most abundant drug in Dallas schools, Milliken said everything from LSD to cocaine can be found. Myths surround some drugs and increase their popularity, he added.

The sedative Quaalude has "the image of some kind of aphrodisiac," he said. And caffeine pills, legally purchased in drugstores, are sold as "speed."

An operation last spring at Bryan Adams High School resulted in more than 30 arrests. Milliken said the publicity may have helped deter would-be drug users at other schools, including Thomas Jefferson.

Police would not allow "Christa" to talk with reporters, but Thomas Jefferson students who were interviewed seemed stunned by the arrests.

"I thought it might be Christa," said Leslie Gibson, 17, who attended music class with the officer. "She was very intelligent. She said she was from Wichita Falls and that her boyfriend went to W.T. White."

Christa once joined Leslie and some friends for a pizza, she said. "When we'd talk about things, it sounded like she knew a whole lot, like she had been through a whole lot."

"I think it's great somebody is trying to get rid of it (drugs)," said 16-year-old Barbara Goss.

Others wondered why their school was singled out.

Although "the kids may not think that's fair ... the reaction from the parents and the public has been good," Milliken said.

Marooned On Holidays

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A 72-year-old man spent most of a frigid Christmas Day stranded in a tower in the middle of the Passaic River because the drawbridge he operates was stuck open for 18 hours, officials said.

Christopher Hillman of Plainfield opened the bridge at 2:40 a.m. Thursday to let an oil tanker pass by. But the center section of the span between Newark and Harrison became jammed when the bridgetender tried to swivel it back from its position parallel to the river banks.

The Essex County Bridge Commission employee was stranded in an equipment tower until 9 p.m. when firefighters finally rescued him. A fire boat crew managed to attach a cable from the bridge gates to a tow truck in Harrison, which pulled the span closed.

Asked why the fire department responded as late as 7 p.m., Deputy Fire Chief John Griggs said: "We couldn't get him out until then, because I couldn't spare anyone since we had some fires."

Bill Crafferty, another bridgetender, found his colleague in trouble when he arrived for his shift at 1 p.m.

"We tried everything, even throwing a fishing line out to him," Crafferty said. "He had no food or nothing."

Hillman was not much the worse for wear, officials said.

"Believe it or not, he was in pretty good shape when it was over," said firefighter Bill Burkhardt.

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood
Reporter

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — It had to be a memorable scene in the life of Jean Stapleton, an experience to be shared with millions of fans who came to love her during the long run of "All In The Family."

The time was last fall. The setting: Jean's home in Bel Air, Calif. The occasion: the telecast of the opening episode of this season's "Archie Bunker's Place."

As the curtain rises we find Jean seated in an elegant, overstuffed arm chair in her tastefully furnished living room. Her eyes are glued to the large color television set. She watches Carroll O'Connor, as Archie Bunker, and Danielle Briscoles, as little Stephanie, mourn the death of Edith Bunker who had passed away of a heart attack some months earlier in her sleep.

A tear trickles down Jean's face. She is moved and touched by what she sees.

Why was Jean weeping? Surely, she had advance knowledge that Edith had kicked the bucket. Was Jean so caught up in the demise of the beloved dingbat that she would miss her company? Did she cry because Edith was her honest-to-god clone?

"I cried because Carroll

O'Connor is such a fine actor," Jean said cheerily the other day. "He played the scene so well I couldn't help myself."

"I certainly wasn't weeping because it was my funeral. I'd been away from the show for a year and a half and I don't miss Edith Bunker at all."

It would come as no surprise if Jean were delighted that the dear departed dingbat had gone to glory.

It's not that Jean has hardened her heart against Edith, but after 8½ years in the role of Archie's long-suffering wife, she is happy to regain her identity as the actress-wife of director-producer Bill Putch, a man considerably easier to live with than Archie.

Putch's name is an Ellis Island immigration officer's corruption of the Italian name Pucci (given one of Bill's forebears). Putch owns and operates the Totem Pole Playhouse in Fayetteville, Pa.

Married 23 years, Jean and Bill are every bit as colorful as the Bunkers albeit more stylish. There is also more togetherness and Jean doesn't jog around the house, coolie-style, as did Edith.

Last summer Bill produced and directed "Oklahoma" which starred Jean as Aunt Eller, daughter Pam as Ado Annie and son John as Will. The family enterprise played to full houses for four weeks.

Jean also starred in "Murder at The Vicarage" for three weeks under her husband's direction.

Also, since deserting the Bunker family for her own, Jean toured 11 cities in 21 weeks from October to March of this year starring in "Daisy Mayme."

I caught up with her at the Los Angeles location of "Angel Dusted," a two-hour NBC-TV drama in which she plays the mother of a son strung out on PCP or angel dust. It will be aired sometime in February.

It is Jean's third major TV outing since leaving "All In The Family" and the first time she has plunged from comedy into the deep, cold waters of tragedy.

There was no vestige of Edith Bunker evident as Jean sat in the noonday sun enjoying lunch from a catering truck. Her wardrobe, hairstyle and attitude bore no trace of Edith whose aspirations fell short of Jean's.

Jean, active in the feminist movement, is a public-spirited woman who served on the International Women's Year Commission under President Ford and was appointed by President Carter as a commissioner at the National Women's Conference in Houston in 1977.

She is on the board of directors of the Women's Education and Research Institute.

These activities are sandwiched into her acting career and her life as wife and mother.

"I'm enjoying a bit more free time now that I don't have a weekly series," Jean said. "It gives me more time to be with my family. There are fewer distractions now."

"I don't miss the security, the cocoon of being on a hit show with a big network. I never had a big entourage so I don't miss that sort of thing."

"Of course, I did spend a lot of time on the road last year. But it was a wonderful change for me. Playing for live audiences in theaters again has been stimulating."

"I left 'All In The Family' because it was a logical step for me. I will never forget that playing Edith made it possible for me to play starring roles instead of supporting characters."

"My role in 'Angel Dusted' is highly dramatic, but it's not all that difficult to make the adjustment from comedy."

"In the last few years of 'All in the Family' we were using dramatic story lines more and more. Edith had to deal with cancer, death, attempted rape, infidelity and a lot of other heavy subjects."

"I kept reminding the writers we were supposed to be doing a comedy show."

Benjamin In Directing Debut

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Richard Benjamin makes his directorial debut with MGM's "My Favorite Year," a nostalgic comedy set against a background of live television in the 1950s.

Benjamin starred with his wife, Paula Prentiss, in the TV series "He and She," and in such movies as "Goodbye Columbus," "Catch 22," and "Love at First Bite."

The following week Dr. Nenno and Middleton will discuss the recession and mental depression.

Thief Leaves Apologetic Note

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Betty Armstrong got a unique Christmas message this holiday season.

Spokane Police Officer Ronald J. Peters said $10 was taken Wednesday in a theft at Mrs. Armstrong's home.

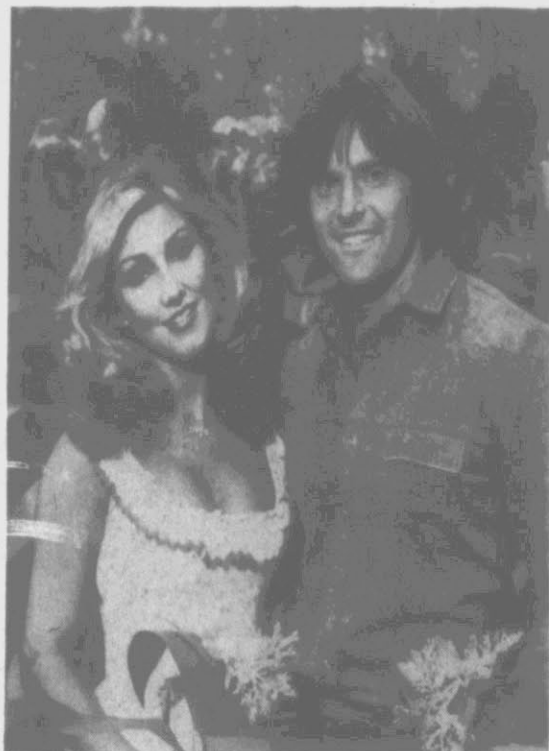

But the thief left this note: "I'm sorry I ripped you off. I promise to pay it back."

Peters said it was signed: "The Rotten Thief."

New Debbie TV Series

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Debbie Reynolds will star in the new ABC series "Aloha Paradise," to be filmed partly in Hawaii.

The series will be a romantic comedy in the mold of "The Love Boat." Miss Reynolds will play the manager of the Kona Village Resort on the Island of Hawaii.

CORNFIELD COUPLE — Olympic gold-medalist Bruce Jenner and his wife-to-be actress Linda Thompson are shown here in the Cornfield from the television set of "Hee-Haw". Jenner will be a guest on the show early in 1981 and Thompson is a regular. (AP Laserphoto)

Governor George Nigh: A 'Good Guy' Image

By HARRY CULVER
OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — The handsome man in his early 50s danced across the stately Blue Room of Oklahoma's Capitol to his distinguished visitor and, with a flourish, sang "All of Me."

The occasion was "Governor's Day," a day set aside for visitors. The special guest was New York composer Gerald Marks. It was a typical production for George Patterson Nigh, Oklahoma's 22nd governor and super salesman for the Sooner state.

"You're getting to be a star on television," Marks said. "Let's see it was on Texas..."

Nigh beamed, recalling that he and his wife Donna had played a bit part on the NBC soap opera, "Texas," that was taped while Nigh was in New York for the Democratic National Convention.

Nigh had regarded that appearance like nearly everything else he does, a way to sell Oklahoma.

"I think it was good for people to see an Oklahoma governor on national television," he had said. "And the night club singer on the show sang, 'Oklahoma.'"

Nigh, who knew Marks was coming, had done his home work. He reeled off some of Marks' songs from memory, singing bits as he went. "Is it True What they Say About Dixie," "Oh, Suzannah."

In typical fashion Nigh issued proclamations naming Marks "Territorial Marshal of Oklahoma" and proclaiming two days as "Gerald Marks Days."

When Miss America Susan Powell visited the Capitol a few weeks later, Nigh solved the problem of giving her a greater honor. He declared 1981 "Susan Powell Year."

Nigh also sent out the word for several hundred state employees to be given time off, assuring a good crowd for the television cameras.

Nigh's latest project is to get more Hollywood producers to choose Oklahoma for film locations, not just for the business it would bring from free-spending production crews but as another way to advertise Oklahoma's terrain.

The Democratic governor, who sports a full head of wavy silver grey hair and white cottontail sideburns, is rated by Democrats and Republicans, friends and foes, as one of Oklahoma's most popular chief executives of all time. He is favored to succeed himself when his current term ends in 1983, becoming the first Oklahoma governor elected to a second term.

Those making that assessment include his detractors.

"When you assess his administration and his leadership, what you have is a great personality without any other pluses," says one senator. "He's got a great personality. That's about it. No programs."

While legislators complain in general that he does not assert himself as a leader, the most recent poll showed two-thirds of the members rated his performance as good to excellent.

Nigh, a popular after-dinner speaker, spent 16 years as lieutenant governor before his election to his current four-year term in 1978. His campaign was typically Nigh. He called his supporters "George Nigh's Good Guys," wore a white cowboy hat and rode from town to town leading a caravan on a white horse.

One of Nigh's most popular achievements — tax reductions he estimates at $90 million — is the result of forces over which he had little or no control, the world energy shortage.

Like his predecessor, David Boren, now a U.S. senator, Nigh came into office at a time when the state's economy was booming from rising oil and gas prices, causing a corresponding bonanza in state tax was illegally fired. A worker who believes the state pension plan discriminates against the elderly. People wanting roads or jobs. Any one with a problem.

George Nigh's background reads like that of the mythical Horatio Alger Jr.

nounced he would run for Senate.

Nigh's 16 years as a lieutenant governor, ribbon cutter, Boy Scout and Masonic worker, tourist promoter and civic club speaker, began paying dividends. He won successive primary, runoff and general elections that made him governor.

While Nigh's relationships are generally cordial with the Legislature, leaders say he is often a loner on his programs and will almost always avoid confrontation.

"I think he's doing a good job," says Democratic House Speaker Dan Draper, who has frequently tangled with Nigh. "Two years ago, it was pretty apparent he didn't have a very good understanding of the workings of state government and the budget despite the fact he had been lieutenant governor 16 years."

"I think he has a tendency not to rock the boat. For example, he showed no leadership on some controversial retirement bills. There has been a reluctance on the part of the governor to discuss with the legislative leadership what he is going to propose. That has caused the Legislature to initiate more of its own program, because we really had no input on his."

"This is not necessarily bad," Draper said. "It has led to separation of the executive and legislative, which is what the Constitution intended."

Draper led a move to successfully trim some of Nigh's tax-cutting plans, making more money available for schools, colleges and highways. But all are programs Nigh will ultimately be credited for.

One senator describes Nigh's administration as "bland."

"He hasn't come to grips with any major problems. But he hasn't caused any either."

Rep. David Riggs, a Tulsa Democrat, says Nigh "doesn't seem to want to get involved in solving problems or dealing with difficult issues."

Sen. Phil Watson, an Edmond, Okla., Republican, says Nigh acts too much like a lieutenant governor whose chief function is ribbon cutting.

"When you are governor," Watson said, "there are times when you have to be a bad guy."

One Nigh appointee to a state agency says Nigh was elected because Oklahoma voters considered him to be a "nice guy."

"And that," she said, "is what Oklahoma voters got."

collections.

This has produced a politician's dream. Appropriations have been increased by record sums and taxes cut during each of Nigh's first two years in office. Nigh has promised further reductions in 1981, saying he wants to create a psychology by which citizens will expect a tax cut every year.

Nigh credits Oklahoma's current prosperity, including an unemployment rate below 4 percent, to such things as "a good work attitude," western ingenuity, and state government's efforts to create a "good business climate." Unless someone reminds him, it's almost as if oil, gas, cattle and wheat, the state's biggest income producers, had nothing to do with it.

The governor and Mrs. Nigh are frequent entertainers. They stage mansion open houses monthly. They host a constant stream of luncheons and dinners.

Nigh is never stuffy, mixing freely among guests. It is more common to see him fetching extra ice or tea for a guest than it is for him to be sitting at a head table.

He stages "Governor's Day," the third Thursday of each month, sometimes in the Capitol, sometimes in a rural city. The four-hour period is reserved for whoever wishes to show up. Some examples: A state employee who contends he was born in McAlester, Okla., June 9, 1927, worked his way through grade and high school making deliveries for his father's small grocery. He recalls one year his birthday present was a bicycle basket to permit him to carry more groceries.

He served a tour with the Navy on an aircraft carrier in 1945 and 1946, was graduated with a BA degree from a small school, East Central State College at Ada.

He returned to his hometown to teach school. At 23, he became the youngest person in history up to that time elected to the State House.

Four terms and eight years later, he was elected the youngest lieutenant governor in state history at age 31.

In the final year of his term, his political career seemingly ended when he was defeated in a race for governor. Just before he left office, a stroke of fate made him governor for nine days. That came as the result of the death of Sen. Robert S. Kerr and Kerr's replacement by then Gov. J. Howard Edmondson.

Nigh dropped almost out of sight the next four years, then resumed his career as lieutenant governor for three successive elections and 12 consecutive years.

In 1978, opportunity again knocked for Nigh, who had pledged he would never run against an incumbent while he was lieutenant governor. Boren, then governor an-

CHICAGO (AP) — About 10 percent of the Grumman Flexibles buses tested so far by the Regional Transportation Agency have been found to have hairline cracks in their frames and have been taken off the road, officials said.

Of the 66 Flexibles tested, "six or seven" had cracks and were sidelined, RTA General Manager Bernard Ford said Wednesday. There are 205 Flexibles in the fleet.

Similar cracks have shown up in Grumman buses elsewhere. In New York City, 637 Flexibles were taken off the road last week, while 200 of the buses were pulled off the streets in Los Angeles.
