

State Department Tells Hostage Offers To Iran

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration offered in mid-November to take 13 steps in exchange for release of the 52 American hostages in Iran, including a freeze on any of the late shah's assets in the United States, State Department documents show.

The proposals, involving vast sums of money and highly technical legal questions, were contained in a five-page, double-spaced document delivered to Algerian intermediaries Nov. 11 by Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher and made public Sunday.

The document also said the United States would release $2.5 billion in Iranian capital, assets and properties held by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York once the hostages were released. In addition, all U.S. legal restrictions on $3 billion in Iranian assets abroad would be removed.

The statement said the United States believed the hostages should be released "in the next several days," concurrent with implementation of the U.S. proposals. That was seven weeks ago.

Iran now is insisting all financial issues be resolved before the hostages are released while the United States says the Americans should be freed first.

Negotiations through Algerian intermediaries continued today after 10 hours of apparently inconclusive talks over the weekend. Assistant Secretary of State Harold Saunders greeted the Algerians as they arrived at the State Department.

Algeria's ambassador to Iran, Abdelkarim Gheraieb, who visited all 52 hostages in Tehran last week, met separately Sunday with President Carter at his Camp David, Md., retreat and some of the captives' families in Washington to report that the Americans are well and in "excellent spirits and morale."

Secretary of State Edmund S. Muskie said Gheraieb also brought letters from 42 hostages and told reporters the relatives "feel much better about their loved ones than they did before."

Penne Laingen, wife of hostage Bruce Laingen, said: "I was encouraged because they're (the Algerians) not losing hope and therefore neither are we."

The State Department released a text of the Nov. 11 U.S. response to Iran's four demands for freeing the hostages after Iran made public excerpts of the U.S. position on Saturday. U.S. officials said they felt release of the full U.S. position was necessary to provide a complete picture.

Social Security Bite Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Social Security tax will take a bigger bite out of American paychecks starting Thursday, the first day of the new year.

The maximum any of the 115 million contributors to the system will pay increases to $1,975 in 1981, or $387 more than in 1980.

The estimated $15 billion tax increase, voted by Congress two years ago, hits workers in two ways:

—The percentage of pay withheld from paychecks for Social Security increases to 6.65 percent, from 6.13 percent in 1980. Employers pay the same percentage.

—The total wages or salary subject to the tax jumps from $25,900 in 1980 to $29,700 in 1981.

Another change is an increase in how much money a Social Security beneficiary can earn before his Social Security benefits are reduced.

People 65 to 71 years old now will be allowed to earn $5,500 without losing any benefits; the earnings ceiling in 1980 was $5,000. The ceiling for people younger than 65 increases to $4,080, up from $3,720. Benefits are cut by $1 for every $2 earned in excess of the ceiling.

There is no earnings ceiling for beneficiaries 72 and older.

The Social Security tax increase taking effect Jan. 1 is part of President Carter's effort to put the program on a sound financial footing. But because inflation has driven up the amount of money paid out as benefits, the program's position when Carter leaves office in January will be almost as precarious as when he became president four years ago.

The 35 million recipients of Social Security benefits are expected to get a total of more than $135 billion in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1. That would be an increase of $20 billion from a year earlier.

The maximum payment to a 65-year-old worker retiring this year is now $660 a month. The minimum is $135. Benefits are increased each July.

Congress has been strongly committed to the program and is expected to provide new financing to keep the system from going into the red. Congress may have to resort to drawing on general government funds for the program.

But a different approach may be preferred by Ronald Reagan. The president-elect has vowed not to tamper with Social Security benefits, but a member of his Social Security task force has said some changes are being considered.

The member, Rita Ricardo, said among the options being considered is a gradual increase in the eligibility age for maximum benefits for future beneficiaries.

But a move like that might be difficult to accomplish since Congress would have to approve any recommended changes. Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., chairman of the House Committee on Aging, has said he would oppose raising the eligibility age or changing the way cost-of-living adjustments are computed. He said such changes might be the first steps in a total "ravaging" of the program.

Report Rioting In Kabul

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Rioting was reported today in Kabul, capital of Afghanistan, where Soviet forces have been trying for more than a year to put down Moslem rebels.

There was no immediate word of any casualties. The cause of the disturbance was also unknown.

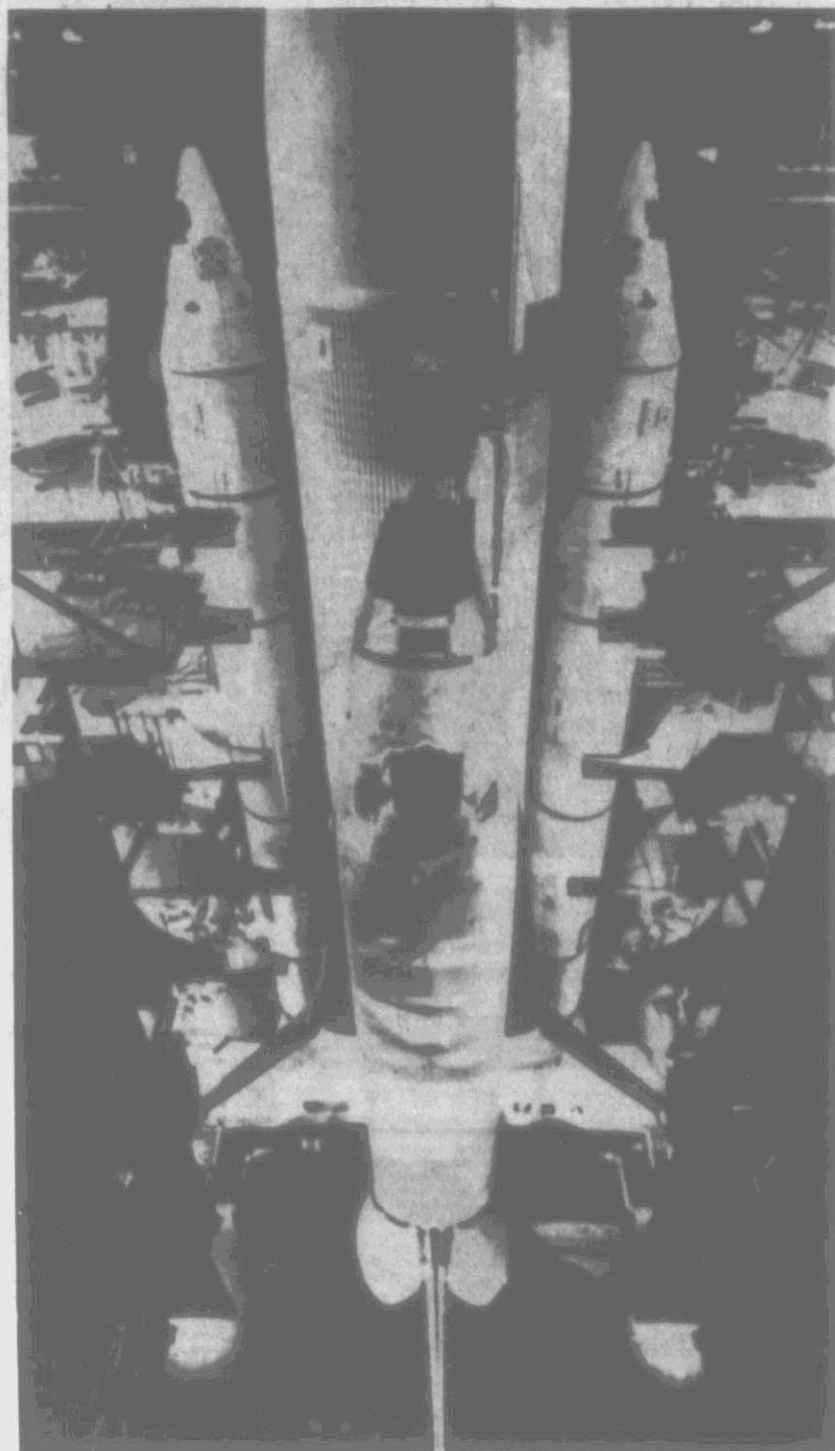

A crowd gathered outside the Ministry of Information and Culture at about 11 a. m. and began hurling stones at the building, according to the report from a diplomatic source.

People also threw stones at passing vehicles for a few minutes, then turned and began stoning the government building, said the source, quoting a witness in Kabul.

Afghan police arrived on the scene in the old Shahri-Nau section of Kabul about 45 minutes after the rioting began, and Soviet and Afghan MI-28 helicopter gunships flew over the area about 15 minutes after that, the source quoted the witness as saying.

The police apparently contained the demonstration and prevented it from spreading to other sections of the city, said the source, who asked not to be identified.

Troops reportedly blocked off the main street in front of the Arg, the old Royal Palace, the source reported.

READY FOR MOVE —The Space Shuttle Columbia, poised inside the Vehicle Assembly Building, undergoes final preparations Sunday for a 3½-mile move to its launch pad. Moving the fully assembled 2.7 million-pound spacecraft Monday is expected to take seven hours. The Columbia, two years behind schedule, is being prepared for a March launch. (AP Laserphoto)

Shuttle Inching To A Launch Pad

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A huge crawler-transporter traveling at 1 mph today began moving America's space shuttle to its launch pad for what officials hope will be a mid-March liftoff to space.

The squat orbiter Columbia, strapped vertically to a disposable fuel tank and its twin-rocket boosters, sat on its mobile launching platform atop the ponderous transporter as it began a 3½-mile trip to the same launch pad from where American astronauts blasted off to the moon.

The shuttle spent the past five weeks undergoing tests at the Kennedy Space Center's Vehicle assembly building after 20 months of critical work on its re-entry heat shield.

The rollout to the launch complex, 39-A, began precisely on time at 8 a.m. EST. It marks the start of an 11-week countdown period to blast off.

The target date for the much-delayed first launch is March 14. That is three years later than the original target date, and George Page, director of shuttle operations here, says, "I would not rule out May."

Cmdr. John Young and Robert Crippen, the astronauts chosen for the first shuttle test flight, watched the Columbia begin its journey to the launch pad near the Atlantic Ocean, officials said.

"We feel it's a great day for the United States," Young said. "Wait till March. Just wait till March."

Much of the past year has been spent attaching and repairing thousands of tiny, heat-resistant tiles outside the shuttle. The tiles are intended to protect the craft and the astronauts from the searing heat of re-entry to Earth's atmosphere.

Once it reaches the launch pad, the shuttle will undergo a final battery of tests, including manned rehearsals of take-off and a 20-second firing of its three main engines.

There have been problems in the past with the engines, and if trouble develops during the firing, the launch could be delayed again, officials said.

"It is going to be tough to accomplish everything on the launch pad in time," Page said.

The last manned space-craft launched from here was the Apollo-Soyuz mission in 1975, when American astronauts met up with Soviet cosmonauts in space.

At 184 feet long, the shuttle is about the same size as a DC-9 airliner. Its cargo bay can take 65,000 pounds into space, and if it were turned into passenger space, it could hold some 200 people.

The Columbia and three other orbiters to be built during the 1980s will take off like rockets but glide back to Earth on wings like jetliners. Only the external fuel tank will be thrown away. The casings of the solid propellant rockets will be picked up in the ocean and filled with a new supply of fuel for repeated use.

National Aeronautics and Space Administration officials say reusing the space-craft and rockets will be cheaper than the "throw-away" rockets used in the past.

The space shuttle program, however, already has cost $8.8 billion, well over the original $5.1 billion forecast. Officials predict a single flight in 1983 probably will cost more than $100 million — about four times the cost of one-shot Delta rocket missions.

In 1976, the House Subcommittee on Space Science was told the per-flight cost would be $22.6 million.

NASA officials are preparing a report for Congress explaining and detailing their current cost projections.

THOUGHT SHE WAS MARRIED

I thought for 33 years that I was married to a man. When I began trying to divorce him some years ago, though, I found that a former marriage of his had never been dissolved. The lawyer told me not to say anything and to go ahead with the divorce, though, so I did. Then after a few years he died, with both of us never having married anyone else. I am getting old now and feel I am entitled to widow's benefits based on his income. I never worked outside the home, just stayed home and raised his children, and I went through a marriage ceremony in good faith. Social Security has turned me down, though.

Hotline talked to Fred Lilley of the Social Security office who said that his agency has to judge each situation based on the law. North Carolina does not recognize common law marriage, he said. If you had ever visited and stayed overnight with your "husband" in Alabama, Colorado, the District of Columbia, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Montana, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina or Texas — states which do recognize common law marriage under various specific circumstances — your claim might be valid.

Also, if you had been living with your "husband" at the time of his death, a de facto marriage might be established, but your "divorce" and extended separation prior to his death eliminates that possibility. He said he knows of no way to help you verify your claim, which he admits seems to say that satisfying the law does not always mean that justice is done.

In view of the circumstances, however, Hotline has suggested that you look into the Program for Displaced Homemakers, Vocational Rehabilitation (You say you have some physical disability) or just getting out and seeking a job on your own. Since it's a fact that you are not eligible for benefits based on your "husband's" income, you say you need to make it on your own and accrue some old-age benefits of your own. We're pulling for you. It takes a lot of courage to work away from home for the first time, after having been a stay-at-home person since marriage at age 15.

Chief Justice Urges Changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chief Justice Warren E. Burger is pushing for federal judgeships to be created more frequently and for prison inmates to be rehabilitated rather than just housed.

"The haphazard way in which judgeships are created, in large numbers after long periods of adding none at all... underscores the dire need for some better means of allocating new judgeships at the district and circuit level," Burger said in a 23-page year-end statement released Sunday.

Burger, who as chief justice heads the federal court system, said the 152 new judgeships created by Congress in 1978 did little to ease the workload of individual judges. Almost all the new judgeships have been filled.

"Despite the allocation of additional federal judges... the average caseload handled by each judge continues to increase, thereby necessitating a concomitant increase in each judge's productivity," he said.

In his comments on the way judgeships are created, Burger reiterated a proposal that Congress authorize the U.S. Judicial Conference to create new judgeships as they are needed. The judgeships would be subject to congressional veto. The U.S. Judicial Conference, headed by Burger, is a federal court system board of directors.

The chief justice singled out the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington, D.C., as needing more judges because the "unique jurisdiction of that court has placed an unrealistic burden on its judges." That court hears cases involving the federal government, including the most of the appeals from actions by regulatory agencies.

In his comments on prison conditions, Burger said the need for "fundamental change" in the nation's criminal justice system was reaffirmed by February's riots at the New Mexico state penitentiary in which 33 people died and a more recent outburst at Washington State Prison.

"Specifically, we must focus more attention on the conditions of incarcerated persons," the chief justice said.

"To put people behind walls and bars and do little or nothing to change them is to win a battle but lose a war. It is wrong. It is expensive. It is stupid," Burger said, reiterating what he told the American Bar Association last February.

Burger, in his year-end statement, also called for the legal profession to find ways to keep down the costs of legal representation and going to court.

CALLS FOR CHANGE — Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, in a year-end statement released Sunday, called on Congress to change "the haphazard way" it creates federal judgeships, arguing that the present method only adds to the problem of too great a workload for each judge. (AP Laserphoto)

Killarney cables and bobbles highlight this striking Fisherman Knit, a classic cardigan with an Irish air. It's yours for the making in your choice of sports or knitting worsted weight yarn in medium (12-14) or large sculptured patterns in 1981. Admittedly, it will take some careful concentration in the beginning but, with most patterns, you will learn to recognize the next step at a glance. For ease in following the instructions, you might find it helpful to write out each pattern stitch row on a three-by-five index card. Stack the cards together in sequence with the card for row one on top. As you finish each row, place the card for that row on the bottom of the stack and you will always know where to start when you pick up your work.

Just to give you an idea of how easy it can be to work in pattern stitchery, with any needles and yarn you have on hand, cast on 29 stitches for a sample swatch. On these stitches, you will make an "antler cable" panel bordered with double moss stitch on either side with the directions that follow.

In these directions, always repeat any steps given in parentheses the number of times specified. The first nine stitches and the last nine stitches are worked in the double moss with the center 11 worked in the antler cable.

For the first row, knit one (purl one, knit one) four times; purl one, knit nine, purl one; work last nine stitches same as first nine stitches.

Row two: purl one (knit one, purl one) four times; knit one, purl nine, knit one;

work last nine stitches same as first nine stitches.

On the third row, work the first and last nine stitches as you did on row two, working the center 11 stitches as follows: purl one, slip three stitches to a cable holder and hold in back of work, knit one, knit the three stitches from holder, knit one, slip next stitch to holder and hold in front of work, knit the next three stitches and then knit the one stitch from holder.

On the fourth row, work the first and last nine stitches as you did on row one and work the center 11 stitches as follows: knit one, purl nine, knit one.

Repeat these four rows over and over for desired length. If you have little or no trouble working these patterns and found it fascinating, then you will probably become a pattern stitchery addict. A reader once told me, "Pat, you're not just an addict ... you're a pusher!"

Here's another tip to make it easier to keep up with patterns when more than one is used. Put a little plastic ring marker on the needle between the pattern panels. These markers act as a signal that you are to change from one pattern to another. If you

Holiday Mail Brings Too Many Greetings

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1980 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Every year, around the holidays, we receive through the mail personalized key chains with our license numbers on them, fancy soap, assorted greeting cards, and a variety of other gift items we did not order. These things are supposedly sold to benefit disabled war veterans, the blind, poor Indian children or handicapped children. They may be from legitimate organizations, but there is a limit to how far we can go in our giving.

Just before Christmas, we received a box of three-dozen Christmas cards with our names already printed on them! They were very nice, but we prefer to select our own cards. I might add that there is a minimum price on all these things, but you are urged to give as much as you can.

Abby, are we legally obligated to return things we didn't order? Why should we go to the trouble and expense of rewrapping and returning stuff we didn't send for? I'd feel guilty using these items, but it seems such a waste to throw them away. What should we do?

THE JONESES

DEAR JONESES: You are not legally obligated to return anything you didn't order. Give everything to the Salvation Army, then send a postcard to the senders telling them how you have disposed of their merchandise and request that your name be removed from their mailing list. Also, notify your local postmaster whenever you receive unsolicited merchandise.

DEAR ABBY: Our 9-year-old printed the following letter to Santa:

"Dear Santa: All I want for Christmas is for my mommy to quit smoking because I love her and I don't want her to die yet. If you brought me some toys, please give them to some other little boy, because all I want for Christmas is a mommy who doesn't cough anymore and doesn't get nervous when she can't find a cigarette. Thank you. — Tommy"

Tommy's mommy cried when she read that letter, but she's still smoking.

Sign me, TOMMY'S FATHER, or more appropriately, DISGUSTED WITH MOMMY

DEAR DISGUSTED: Mommy is hooked. But she won't quit smoking until she's ready. In the meantime, she needs understanding and encouragement, not contempt. Don't nag her.

DEAR ABBY: Loved your column about waitresses from all over, and what they earned. I'm a waitress, and here are some of my pet peeves:

1. Customers who whistle, snap their fingers, or yell, "Hey, girlie," to get my attention.
2. Customers who come in with children, then turn them loose to run all over the place.

don't have ring markers on hand, just tie a loop of contrasting yarn onto the needle.

On the sample swatch, for example, you would work nine stitches, place a marker on the needle, work 11 stitches and place another marker. On all following rows, the markers are simply passed from one needle to another as you reach them and thus they remain in place dividing the pattern panels.

3. After giving the customers their menus, when I return to take their orders, nobody is ready to order because they haven't even looked at the menu.
4. Customers who ask for substitutions when it says on the menu: "No substitutions, please."
5. Customers who complain about the high prices. We only serve the food, we don't set the prices.

Guerrilla Effort 'Under Control' : El Salvador

By EDUARDO VAZQUEZ-BECKER
Associated Press Writer
SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Army reinforcements, rushed to the jungle province of Chalatenango, have controlled a weekend offensive by leftist guerrillas, military sources said today.

"A large number of guerrillas" and at least four soldiers were killed in three days of fighting in the province, 50 miles north of here, said an army source, who declined to be identified. He would not say how many guerrillas were killed.

The offensive — one of the sharpest leftist military challenges yet to El Salvador's embattled centrist government — began Friday night with simultaneous attacks on police stations and army posts in at least eight towns scattered across the province, on the border with Honduras, military sources said.

all day Saturday, the sources said.

One informant estimated as many as 1,000 guerrillas were involved in the fighting, but others put the total number of insurgents at no more than 500.

The provincial military commander said army reinforcements, backed by airplanes and helicopters, broke the back of the offensive at noon Sunday when they surrounded about 400 guerrillas in an area near the town of Dulce Nombre de Jesus.

"The situation is under control," the officer said in a telephone interview.

The commander, who identified himself as an army colonel but refused to give his name, said scattered firefights between guerrillas and troops continued Sunday, but he claimed they were "of no importance."

Most telephone communications between San Salvador, the capital, and the battle zone were out of commission, blocking efforts to get independent reports on the situation.

The Unified Revolutionary Directorate, the umbrella organization for five of the six guerrilla groups active in this Central American nation, claimed responsibility for the attack, calling it "the beginning of a final offensive" to overthrow the government and set up a Marxist regime.

A directorate spokesman said the guerrillas "soon plan to declare a liberated zone" in the Chalatenango area and "set up a democratic-revolutionary government."

However, a highly-placed military source in San Salvador described the guerrilla offensive and the directorate's claims as "just harrassments on their part and without much importance."

"Some of the police and national guard posts attacked had only four or five men in them," he said.

"The army exercises absolute control in the area," said the informant, a senior military officer who declined to be identified.

"It's impossible for them (the guerrillas) to remain in one place for more than 24 hours," he said.

Chalatenango's jungle-covered hills have been the scene of increasingly intense guerrilla activity in recent months.

President Napoleon Duarte's military-backed centrist government is caught in the middle of a war between leftist and rightist extremists that has claimed more than 9,000 lives this year. Right-wing militants are seeking to replace the current government with a more conservative regime while the left wants Marxist rule.

Duarte's Christian Democratic Party government is the successor to a military-civilian junta that seized power from the rightist military government of Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero in October 1979.

Briton Escapes Saudi Prison , Reunited With His Family

BACUP, England (AP) — A British engineer has been reunited with his family after escaping from a Saudi Arabian jail where he was serving a three-year sentence for illegally manufacturing and possessing alcohol, authorities said.

After crossing the Saudi border into neighboring Bahrain, 43-year old Ian Fraser was issued with a fresh passport by British authorities. He returned to Britain on Christmas Eve, but news of his escape was withheld until the weekend.

Fraser, who comes from Bacup, near Manchester in northwestern England, was alleged to have been involved in running a club selling alcohol for Britons working in the Saudi capital of Riyadh.

The manufacture and consumption of alcohol is forbidden under Saudi Arabia's strict Islamic law.

Fraser, who was in Saudi Arabia on a construction project, was arrested in May when his passport was confiscated and later was jailed, authorities said. He was reportedly also sentenced to 300 strokes of the cane but never received the punishment.

Fraser, who apparently wrote his wife several times while in jail complaining of severe headaches, declined to reveal his exact method of escape but said it took him two weeks to plan and involved receiving "certain materials" from friends outside the jail.

Once in Bahrain, Fraser was given a new passport by the British Embassy. After telephoning his wife and two children, he boarded a plane for Manchester where more than 20 relatives welcomed him home.

A British Foreign Office spokesman said Fraser was issued the new passport because he had committed no offenses either in Bahrain or the United Kingdom.

"Even though the authorities were aware of his prison sentence, they issued him a passport on request," the spokesman said.

During his imprisonment, Fraser's wife Anne persuaded her local government representative, Conservative lawmaker David Trippier, to appeal publicly for clemency for her husband.

Trippier said he did not condone Fraser's escape because he had violated Saudi law. "But we all thought the punishment too severe," he told reporters. "Mr. Fraser had been ill and was in need of medical attention."

British newspapers said Fraser had been unable to obtain pain-killing drugs needed for a plastic plate lodged in his head.

No Saudi official was immediately available for comment on the escape.

Two other Britons caught manufacturing alcohol in Saudi Arabia were publicly flogged in June, 1978.

Brian Cooper, from Colchester in eastern England, and Nigel Maidment, from Wiltshire County, west of London, were each given 70 strokes of the cane after spending six months in jail.

The floggings caused a storm of controversy in this country with British lawmakers howling protest over what they called the "barbaric" punishments handed out by the oil-rich

Persian Gulf state.

The floggings were one of several incidents that have troubled relations between Britain and Saudi Arabia.

The two countries broke off diplomatic relations for four months earlier this year after the screening of the controversial British-made television film, "Death of a Princess," which re-enacted the executions of a Saudi princess and her lover.

That rift was healed when Foreign Office Minister of State Douglas Hurd paid a visit to Saudi Arabia.

But in the last few months, charges by an ex-detective that his daughter and her boyfriend were flung to their deaths after the girl was sexually assaulted at a party given by a British couple in Saudi Arabia have caused official embarrassment and growing scandal here.

The Foreign Office says all evidence indicates that 23-year-old nurse Helen Smith accidentally fell from the balcony of the party's host and hostess, Richard and Penelope Arnott.

ENCOURAGED — Penne Laingan, wife of U.S. hostage in Iran, Bruce Laingan, leaves the Washington residence of Algeria's ambassador to the U.S. Sunday evening after a meeting between hostage families, Algerian intermediaries in the hostage talks, and State Department officials. Mrs. Laingan said, after the meeting, that she was encouraged because the Algerians are not losing hope, and therefore, she said, "neither are we". (AP Laserphoto)

Full of Surprises

The hopes and frustrations of community minded municipalities ride on the census which is conducted by the U. S. government every ten years.

Growth is the keyword, and the census figures, when they become available, show whether a city has grown or not with the growth measured in numbers of new citizens.

Some cities are not satisfied with the results of this year's census. Many of the major metropolitan areas in the northeast showed disappointing gains, or losses. It has also affected some cities in North Carolina. The census figures so far show Wilmington dropping by 5.2 percent, Hickory losing 0.1 percent, Statesville, 7.4 percent; Winston-Salem, 1 percent and Asheville, 7.1 percent. Those communities consider themselves growing and the shrinking population figures are mystifying to them.

There will be protests to the Census Bureau, which answers that the figures are preliminary.

In some cases the disappointing growth is an illusion. While Wilmington showed a percentage decrease New Hanover County had a 23.8 percent growth, indicating that new population located outside the Wilmington city limits.

Grants, revenue sharing and even apportionment of Congress and the Legislature depend on the population figures. We can be sure there will be protest concerning the figures released by the U. S. Census Bureau.

Best Wishes To Mrs. Hadley

Yesterday Mrs. Clara Bruce Forbes Hadley celebrated her 100th birthday.

It was a festive occasion with relatives and friends gathered around.

Not many of us will see a full century of life. Few of us at any age will be loved and admired as Mrs. Hadley is.

We wish for her many more happy birthdays.

A Math Incentive

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — Some way to get and hold qualified math teachers in the public schools is essential, Gov. Jim Hunt feels, even if that entails paying them a salary differential.

But such a move doesn't necessarily lead to widespread use of a merit pay system for teachers, he hastens to add.

Facing a situation in which more than 2,000 of the state's junior and senior high school math teachers are not certified — some 45 percent of the staff — officials at the State Department of Public Instruction are preparing a plan to pay math teachers more in order to attract them back from the burgeoning electronics industry which is draining this particular teaching field.

The governor is pushing expansion of the electronics industry in North Carolina, and high technology jobs is a cornerstone of his development program. "Good math teachers are essential to the future of the economy of North Carolina... a salary differential needs to be seriously studied... as perhaps one way to provide the money necessary to attract the people essential to us."

Supplement

Hunt has mentioned the idea of a salary differential — whether five, 10 or 20 percent — to a special personnel committee working in the field of teacher pay. "We already pay special supplements to people in particular fields such as coaching or certain vocational fields," Hunt points out.

But the governor is keenly aware of the volatile politics in the subject of merit pay for teachers, and doesn't feel that extra pay for math teachers opens the door to full merit pay.

"I have not taken a position that we need merit pay for teachers... at this time," Hunt said. This subject, along with teacher tenure and reduction of classroom size, occupies a top place in priorities of the North Carolina Association of Educators.

At the same time, it is

known that a number of experts in education — in the General Assembly, on the State Board of Education, on local school boards, and elsewhere — are hopeful that getting legislative approval to pay math teachers more will be a foot in the door to broaden merit pay in future years.

Why would Hunt waffle on merit pay for teachers? First, there is the political repercussions certain to come from embracing this approach. But he also believes that merit selection and retention of teachers — approaches to that are already in the works — can work just as effectively to gain the desirable goal of keeping the better teachers before a class while weeding out the less well equipped.

Specifically, teacher preparation programs in the colleges are being revamped to better prepare teachers, and to counsel out of the field those not suited.

Testing
The state has reinstituted the National Teachers Exam as a criteria for certification, and is gradually raising the passing level. Other tests upon completion of college requirements are being studied.

And last year when the General Assembly passed a hefty pay raise for teachers, and instituted a new pay plan which essentially boosted the salaries of teachers, there was a rider attached which requires the state and local school boards to implement a regular teacher evaluation system. That approach is now being worked out.

Hunt says the testing to improve the level of teacher skills, and the evaluation program to either counsel teachers into other areas when they fall down on the

Two laws proposed by the N.C. Human Relations Council merit early consideration by the General Assembly next year. One would reform the method by which juries are selected. The others would ban weapons from public demonstrations.

The proposals are in part a response to the acquittal last month of six Klansmen and Nazis in the deaths of five Communist Workers Party members here. But they should be considered on their merits, not simply because they may be an emotional response to the verdict by an all-white jury.

We think both proposals will stand on their own. The first would require jury commissions in the individual counties to base jury selection on combined use of drivers license lists and voter registration lists. Most counties, including Guilford, currently use tax lists and/or voter registration lists to create jury pools. But that can skew the results, not only against blacks and lower-income jurors but also against young people and others who tend not to own property or to vote in heavy numbers. The addition of drivers license lists should greatly expand the selection process and insure a better cross-section of jurors.

A banning of all weapons from within a specified distance of a public demonstration would be redundant for Greensboro, which passed such an ordinance earlier this year. Moreover, such a law would not always prevent violence. The parade permit issued to the CWP for November 3 — a copy of which was obtained by the Klan — specifically prohibited the carrying of weapons at the demonstration. Yet court testimony showed that both sides were armed.

Still, a statewide law along these lines would carry much greater weight than local ordinances, especially if severe penalties are attached to it. More important, it would be a good way for the General Assembly to serve notice on future troublemakers that they can and will be arrested if they show up armed at what is supposed to be a peaceful event.

Strength For Today

CONCERNING HEROES
There is a little girl in one of our large cities who is a hopeless cripple. She reads the newspapers assiduously, and if she ever encounters the story of a recovery from some crippling affliction, she makes it a point to write a letter of congratulation to that person.

Most of us, if crippled, would probably begin to whine and complain. We would become so self-indulgent that we would expect the whole world to wait upon us and we would derive our chief pleasure in telling about our ailments. But there are a few brave souls in the world who take the handicaps of life and bravely nail them together into a ladder by which they can climb to moral achievement.

These are the world's choice souls who disregard their troubles and turn them into opportunities for service to others. The little girl who writes the letters of congratulations is one of them — a heroine indeed. — Elisha Douglass

Urge Haig 'Offensive'

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON — Gen. Alexander Haig is being urged by prominent senators to take the offensive in his Senate confirmation hearings, using the planned four days of confrontation with Watergate-minded liberal Democrats to exploit Ronald Reagan's clear national security mandate.

That advice to Haig shows how much more is at stake in his confirmation hearings before a generally dovish Senate Foreign Relations Committee than allegations of wrongdoing during the national agony of Watergate.

What is really at stake is the blind horror many liberal Democrats share for President-elect Reagan's nonsense national security policy, following four years of unrestrained Soviet advances. Strapping Haig to the Watergate mast for 100 public lashes is destined to humiliate and weaken him (and also exact revenge for the Republican attack on Paul Warneke's nomination to head the arms control agency four years ago). Wounding Haig would undercut Reagan's ability to use him to carry out the major revival of national security he has promised.

But for Haig, it will be no easy matter to keep the hearings that start Jan. 9 glued to what he hopes to accomplish in building America's depleted strength in the world. That explains Haig's surprise coup in coming up with Joseph Califano, a prominent Democrat with recognized liberal credentials, to defend him. A better choice would be difficult to find.

Escalating political and press attacks on Haig have questioned his character, his honor and his fitness for secretary of state. That assault has deeply angered the career Army officer who won the Distinguished Service Cross in Vietnam and earned unanimous praise from America's closest allies as supreme commander of NATO.

Haig, say his friends, wants to keep himself on a tight leash. He knows he should not respond in kind to his critics, but instead should stick to his and Reagan's plans for a toughened, revitalized foreign policy.

But if his critics, led by Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston and Sen. Paul Tsongas, convert his confirmation hearing into a Watergate II, Haig will be irresistibly pressed to test the theory that whatever its allure in the capital, Watergate is an issue long since dead and buried throughout the nation.

Reagan's transition agents believe that any Democratic effort to revive the horrors of Watergate would sicken voters and that the effort would boomerang. But Haig's enemies from the days of Watergate claim that if the Democrats play the Watergate card deftly, it could polarize the country all over again.

Haig strongly lines up with the Reagan transition advisers. One Haig intimate, exuding optimism over any showdown between Haig and his adversaries, says privately: "Those senators are going to be on television with Haig. If they want to take that political risk, so be it. Haig would slaughter them."

Haig would not have been Reagan's pick for secretary of state if Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd had not publicly warned that a Haig nomination would face deep trouble in the Senate. Against such public pressure, Reagan, with Haig agreeing, felt he had to nominate Haig.

At that time, Haig did not begin to imagine what his critics had in store for him. Now that he knows, he is working full-time on his

Bankruptcies Hit Japan, Too

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — Despite general good health, Japan's economy is troubled by a disturbing number of bankruptcies among small and medium-sized companies which form the backbone of the nation's phenomenal growth.

Some 1,631 business failures were counted in November, with combined debts equivalent to $1.2 billion, pushing the total past the 1,500-company "crisis line" for the third straight month.

Toko Shoko Research Ltd., a credit survey company which tabulates business failures every month, said total bankruptcies for the year will be just below the record of 18,471 failures set in 1977.

Most of the failures are of small and medium-sized enterprises with 50 to 150 workers. Unlike their big brothers in autos and electronics, they were unable to deal with high energy costs and falling demand. "The appreciation of the yen against the dollar, rising fuel costs, and growing competition from developing nations — they all combined to drive us in a hole," said Mitsuo Shimizu, accountant for the Kyoei Electric Manufacturing Co., which failed this fall with liabilities equivalent to about $17 million.

"We started to feel the pinch in 1977," said Shimizu, whose company was formed in 1960 and made a name as an exporter of tape recorders and radio cassettes.

Led by the big export industries, Japan's economy had weathered the oil shocks and stagflation of the 1970s. Government forecasts project economic growth of 5.3 percent in fiscal 1981, up from a projected 4.8 percent this year and well ahead of other western countries.

The rise in consumer prices is expected to be less than 7 percent this year, and will drop to the 5 percent level in 1981, according to government estimates.

Industry has learned to move to the drum's slower beat by reducing employees, conserving energy, working in close coordination with the government and convincing labor to accept smaller annual raises.

"Small factors in the recent rash of bankruptcies," Shunichi Nakao, a government bankruptcy official said, are the belt-tightening of consumers whose real incomes have leveled off or dropped, and the government's fiscal austerity policies which have clamped down on public works projects, a bad blow to the construction industry.

Said Nakao: "What we have is a split economy, where business is good for most big companies but where many small companies are still mired in the recession. We are very concerned."

Some critics argue that the big business-oriented government and the nation's banks, many of which are affiliated with industrial conglomerates, have ignored the struggles of the smaller enterprises. The government has begun a counseling program to help these smaller companies and has increased the number of "hardship industries" such as textile makers who are eligible for low-interest government loans. But Nakao acknowledged their efforts are not always enough.

Futaya Fukuda, senior official at Taikoku Koshinsho Ltd., another credit research firm, said there "are too many companies in trouble for the government to help them all."

"We should look at the problem coolly," he said, explaining that "the Japanese economy is becoming more modern and efficient, shifting from manufacturing to service and high technology industries."

He said he felt sorry for the companies that fail, "but the government must be highly selective in deciding who it will bail out."

Few disagree that bankruptcies, which totaled only 8,000 as recently as 1973, will continue to be a serious social problem.

New Minimum Pay

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A new federal minimum wage will become effective Thursday, boosting income for covered workers by 8 percent, but some North Carolina merchants say the pay raise will also bring a rise in consumer prices.

The increase, from $3.10 to $3.35, is the last in a series ordered by Congress in 1977.

G. Wesley Williams, executive director of the Raleigh Merchants Bureau, said the increase will trigger another round of price increases that could eat up any benefits a worker might receive.

"The new minimum wage will increase the consumer's spending power, but it's a question of whether the increase will be equal to the higher prices they'll be paying," he said.

Williams said the 8 percent wage increase probably will trigger a 2 percent price increase.

James C. Stuart, area director of the wage and hour division of the U.S. Department of Labor, said about 80 percent of North Carolina's 2.7 million workers are covered by the federal wage law. All of those workers would not be affected by the higher minimum level, however, as it applies only to non-farm employees of firms with annual revenues of $325,000.

The state minimum wage law, which rose from $2.75 to $2.90 per hour on July 1, covers most non-farm workers not affected by the federal law.

Other Tar Heel business spokesmen also expressed concern about the increased labor costs.

Jerry Williams, executive vice president of the North Carolina Restaurant Association, said some restaurants will have to cut employees from the payroll in order to pay the new minimum wage.

But Tom Smith, executive vice president of Food Town Stores Inc. in Salisbury, said he doesn't have any room to cut back on employees.

"We all will have to find ways to be a little more efficient," Smith said.

Holiday Traffic Claims 19 Lives

Traffic accidents killed 19 people in North Carolina during a long Christmas holiday that included the first winter storm of the season, a storm that left snow, sleet or freezing rain in much of the state during the weekend.

The fatalities raised the state's toll for the year to 1,472, compared with 1,511 at the same time last year.

The N.C. Motor Club has predicted that 50 people will die in the Christmas and New Year's holiday weekends. For counting purposes, the holiday period starts at 6 p.m. on the Wednesday preceding the holiday and ends at midnight Sunday.

During the Christmas period, the patrol said 136 people were injured in addition to those killed. The patrol investigated 68 accidents across the state.

A Kinston woman, Debra Ann Vause, 24, was killed by a hit-and-run car while she was trying to aid a friend who had been involved in a separate traffic accident.

The accident occurred on U.S. 70, about a mile east of Kinston.

Three people died Saturday when their cars left the road and overturned.

The patrol said Donald Ray Davis, 36, of Hickory, was killed in a one-car accident on a rural road less than a mile from Hickory.

A Virginia man died in an accident on N.C. 49, 12 miles north of Roxboro. The patrol identified the victim as Charlie Lawson, 65, of Virginia, Va.

Joyce Tanner Davenport, 18, of Albemarle was killed when her car left a rural road about a mile from Albemarle. The patrol said the car overturned in a swamp, pinning Ms. Davenport in the car underwater.

Ned Junior Harrison, 52, of Kinston, a pedestrian, was killed Sunday when he was struck by a vehicle on a rural road south of Kinston.

Fourteen other people were killed earlier in the holiday period.

N.C. Not Hurt By Road Plans

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A proposal by the Reagan transition team to drop plans for completion of the nation's interstate highway system would not affect North Carolina's uncompleted network of roads, Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw says.

Bradshaw said the recommendation by Reagan's task force on transportation would apply to the 1,547 miles of interstate highways on which work has not begun, or those that are considered "non-essential or controversial."

Bradshaw, who met with the task force earlier this month, said the remaining 10 percent of North Carolina's scheduled interstate network is considered essential by the advisory group.

"We anticipate the building of all the interstate North Carolina has been allocated. All of our essential gaps will be and should be built," he said.

These gaps consist of three remaining portions of Interstate 40, and the Interstate 85 section between Greensboro and Lexington. The I-40 sections include Hillsborough to Chapel Hill, Raleigh to Benson, and Benson to Wilmington.

It will cost at least $200 million to finish three of the four sections, Bradshaw said.

The Benson-to-Wilmington link, due for completion in 1986, was funded by special legislation Congress passed in 1978 to reward states for effective highway programs.

The I-85 leg is expected to be completed by 1982, and the target date for the other two links of I-40 is 1985.

It was reported during the weekend that the task force, headed by former U.S. Transportation Secretary Claude S. Brinegar, considered most of the remaining highway links controversial and north worth the cost of completing. They make up about 4 percent of the entire interstate system.

About one-third of the remaining mileage is controversial urban roads.

Bradshaw said the task force wants to drop the controversial roads so the interstate system can be declared completed.

counterattack with Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, the committee member who will lead his defense. Privately, Haig is stunned by what he has been reading and hearing about himself. Alluding to implications that it was he who arranged Richard Nixon's pardon by Gerald Ford as the price for Nixon's resignation, Haig recently confided to an ally: "Does anyone think I would ever have got out of Washington without going in to the slammer if I'd tried to arrange anything like that?" Since Byrd's warning, the Haig nomination has escalated under the thickening cloud of Watergate into a struggle with major implications for Reagan's presidency. The unpublicized fact that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy strongly proposed Terry Lenzner, a Democratic investigator on the Senate Watergate committee, to help prosecute Haig in the con-

Former Instructor And Pupil In Garwood Trial

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — The court-martial of Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood at Camp Lejeune has brought together a collection of experienced legal figures, including a former instructor and pupil who now are opposing each other.

Vaughan E. Taylor of Charlottesville, Va., one of Garwood's civilian attorneys, once taught criminal law to Marine Maj. Werner Hellmer, the chief prosecutor.

Garwood, a 34-year-old native of Indiana, is charged with desertion and collaboration with the enemy in Vietnam. He spent 14 years in Vietnam after disappearing in 1965 while serving as a jeep driver near Da Nang.

His court-martial is in a recess now for the Christmas-New Year's holiday period. Defense attorneys began a presentation of their case just before the recess was called.

When the case does finally go to the five-officer jury, there is a good chance the judge's charge will include guidelines on an insanity defense that were written by Taylor.

Taylor, an expert in military law and psychiatric defenses, drafted the insanity defense instructions in 1977. They since have been adopted by several courts.

"I wrote it long before I ever heard of the Bobby Garwood case," Taylor said recently.

Taylor joined the law firm of chief defense attorney John Lowe in May after serving 11 years in the Army.

Lowe, with 13 years of trial experience, was chief counsel for Robert Robideau, an American Indian acquitted by jury in 1975 of murder in the death of two FBI agents in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He also served on the defense team for another Indian tried and convicted of murder in the slaying of two FBI agents in Fargo, N.D.

Col. Robert E. Switzer, the presiding judge, is not a novice to controversial cases. A military judge since 1968, Switzer, 51, has presided over two court-martials that stemmed from military race riots in 1973, several drill instructor mistreatment cases in 1974 and 1979, and eight murder trials.

His discharge could come as early as July, he said, but added: "That is, if this case is finished."

FOCUS

Wounded Knee

In 1890, the Sioux Indian leader Sitting Bull helped start a religious movement called the Ghost Dance. The movement's followers believed that through dances, songs and other practices, all the dead Indians and the buffalo could come back to life. The government feared the movement could start another Indian war, and ordered Sitting Bull's arrest. Sitting Bull resisted and was killed. Some of his followers fled and joined a band of Sioux led by Big Foot. U.S. troops followed the Indians, and eventually trapped them at a creek called Wounded Knee, and wiped them out. More than 200 Indian men, women and children were killed. The massacre took place 90 years ago today.

Food Exports Play Big Role

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

One way to look at the importance of U.S. farm exports is to put them alongside other goods that are sold to overseas buyers.

The Agriculture Department examined in detail last fiscal year's record farm exports. Those soared in value to $40.5 billion in the year that ended on Sept. 30 from about $32 billion in 1978-79.

Taken as a category by themselves, exports of agricultural products exceeded imports — $17.3 billion last year — by nearly $23.2 billion, a record trade balance in favor of American farmers.

But the United States exports other items, too, and those added up to about $169.6 billion last year.

Unlike the agricultural category, however, imports of non-agricultural goods — including oil — soared far higher than the exports to about $220.9 billion, a trade deficit of around $51.3 billion.

Making an allowance for the plus on the agricultural side of the ledger, however, the net trade deficit for 1979-80 was about $28.1 billion.

Farm exports are rising again this year, probably to a 12th consecutive record of about $48.5 billion, according to the department's current estimate. Imports are expected to rise further to around $18.5 billion, leaving a 1980-81 agricultural trade balance of about $30 billion.

Looking at the major overseas buyers of U.S. agricultural products, the latest report listed these countries in order of their approximate dollar value of purchases in 1979-80 (all but the Soviet Union and United Kingdom showed increases from the previous year):

Japan, $5.78 billion, an increase of 13 percent from 1978-80; Netherlands, including transshipments to other countries, $3.52 billion, 40 percent; Mexico, $2.01 billion, 106 percent; China, $1.96 billion, 113 percent; West Germany, $1.87 billion, 33 percent; Canada, $1.83 billion, 7 percent; South Korea, $1.62 billion, 17 percent; Spain, $1.46 billion, 49 percent; Soviet Union, $1.46 billion, down 33 percent; Italy, $1.33 billion, 32 percent; Taiwan, $1.11 billion, 14 percent; and United Kingdom, $1.06 billion, down 2 percent.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The University of Arizona will be turning tons of desert plants into oil, gasoline and petrochemicals within five years, preparing for the day when plant-produced oil will supply 5 to 10 percent of the nation's energy needs, a researcher says.

Jack Johnson, the school's Arid Lands Studies director, says that day could come in 10-15 years. He also predicts that a 40-acre Arizona Biofuels Research Facility now being developed near the Tucson International Airport will put the school at the forefront of biofuels development.

Biofuels include a wide variety of renewable energy resources such as plants, algae and refuse that can be processed into liquid, solid or gaseous fuels.

"There is no other facility like this in the U.S.," he said. "The university is already the unquestioned leader in the development of energy from biofuels. We're the only ones doing research at this level."

About 20 acres of the site are already in use, and the university hopes to have the site fully operational in 10 years.

Funding for the project, which Johnson estimates will entail $50 million to $100 million in capital investments over the next 20 to 30 years, has come from the state and the Diamond Shamrock Corp., a Dallas-based chemical, energy and technology company, he said.

The university will retain patents on the developments but plans to give investing companies exclusive rights to use the inventions commercially, he said.

The facility will include about 10 acres outdoors and 3,000 square feet of greenhouse space for growing plants like jojoba, buffalo gourd, guayule and gopher weed to process into oil.

Unlike crude oil pumped from the ground, such oil-producing plants don't contain sulfur and heavy-metal contaminants that must be refined out, Johnson said. However, Johnson said, oil produced from the plants contains toxic agents that irritate skin.

"We might be able to breed the toxic agent out of the plant" or remove it during processing, Johnson said.

Agriculturally, such oil-producing desert plants are a wonder. "They can be grown on lands not producing crops now," he said. "We can bring (into agricultural use) new lands and marginal lands with limited water supplies."

The plants could triple Arizona's agricultural acreage to about 3.5 million acres in 25 years, with almost no increase in the total water used by agriculture, he said.

Scheduled for construction at the school this spring is a batch extractor capable of extracting liquid fuels from 50 tons of plant material weekly and a densifier to press tumbleweed and other plant materials, including pecan shells, into fireplace logs.

Also planned are a $2 million miniplant capable of processing a ton of plant material weekly and a small refinery to process the plant oil into products including gasoline, diesel fuel and petrochemicals.

A cogeneration plant, which Johnson says will become the facilities centerpiece, will probably be the last item built. The plant, which could make the facility energy self-sufficient, would burn waste from research projects to produce steam and generate electricity.

Ridomil will be in ample supply for control of blue mold in the field and plant bed. Ridomil will be available in one quart and one gallon containers. Be sure to store Ridomil in a room where the temperature is above 32 degrees Fahrenheit.

Ridomil has received label clearance for use on plant beds as a soil treatment for control of blue mold and Pythium damping off. There is no label clearance for a foliage spray. To prepare plant beds, first treat with methyl bromide for weed and disease control. Second, prepare and seed bed. Third, apply Ridomil broadcast at the rate of one quart per acre (one fluid ounce or two tablespoons mixed with two gallons of water per 150 square yards). Fourth, irrigate (about 1/4 inch water) following application. Growers that do not plan to irrigate their beds should broadcast Ridomil just before seeding and incorporate by raking beds lightly.

It will be necessary to apply three applications of fungicides containing ferbam, zineb, maneb, or metiram to Ridomil treated beds to prevent anthracnose. The first treatment should be applied when plants are near the dime size, the second application about two weeks later and the third about the time of transplanting.

Ridomil is simple to apply, cost less than $1 per 100 square yards of bed area, and gives full season protection in plant beds.

The preventative spray or dust program is also available for blue mold control in plant beds. This plan involves spraying or dusting beds twice each week beginning when plants are about the size of a dime and continuing until transplanting to the field is complete. About 14 applications are necessary for protection by this method.

Growers should destroy beds immediately following transplanting to the field regardless of whether the Ridomil or preventative plan is followed. The Ridomil treatment is expected to give out following transplanting and the bed is open for blue mold attack when fungicide application is stopped. The bed site may provide a source of casual agent for field outbreak.

Control of blue mold in plant beds provides a healthy plant for transplanting but provides no protection in the field.

Says Migration A 'Death Knell'

NEW YORK (AP) — A presidential commission's proposal that migration to the Sun Belt be encouraged would be "a death knell for Eastern cities," says Deputy Mayor Nathan Leventhal.

Leventhal, who has been in charge of the nation's largest city since Mayor Edward Koch left for a tour of the Middle East, added that when Koch was informed of the commission's proposals his reaction was "unprintable."

The President's Commission for a National Agenda for the Eighties, headed by former Columbia University President William McGill, proposed a "long-range reorientation of federal urban policies."

A draft report made public over the holiday suggests that the government stop trying to prevent the decline of older cities in the Northeast and Midwest and assist workers who want to migrate to Sun Belt cities of the South and Southwest.

The report said that "contrary to conventional wisdom, cities are not permanent."

Leventhal blasted the report, saying he found it "hard to think that a number of distinguished people could get together and come up with such a dumb conclusion — that we ought to be doing more to assist migration to the Sun Belt."

"It all reminds me of the last scene from 'Fiddler on the Roof.' Perhaps the McGill Commission expects us all to get together, pack our goods and get out of town in three days," he said.

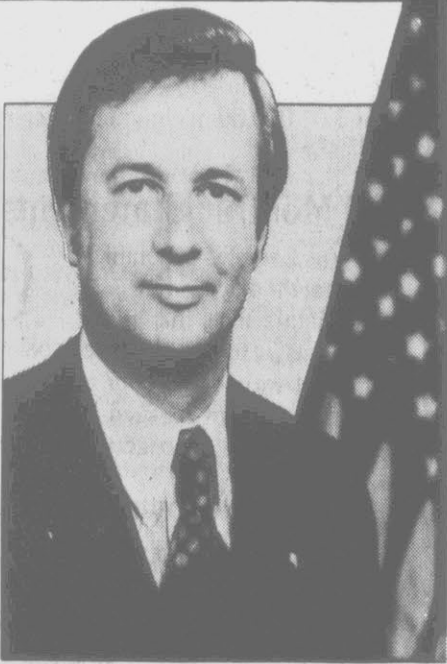

Leventhal said New York and other cities already suffer from policies that have favored Southern cities, noting that the federal government now picks up 70 percent of the welfare and Medicaid tab for Mississippi compared with 50 percent of New York's costs for those programs.

He called the commission inconsistent in recommending a federal takeover of state and local welfare expenses, something New York has long fought for, while at the same time proposing that the government not go out of its way to help older cities.

Energy Farms Seen Agriculture's Future

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Energy farms that provide fuel and synthetic chemicals from trees could be the new wave for Southern agriculture if research now under way proves the new concept in forest management is economically feasible.

By selecting fast-growing trees, growing them close together and managing them intensively and harvesting often, university and industry researchers are creating woodlands where trees are used solely for energy.

Initial commercial operations probably would be handled by the pulp and paper industry, which already has vast woodland plantations, but Robert C. Kellison, a forestry specialist at North Carolina State University, says the program could become an industry in itself.

"Other industries, such as the brick, textile and furniture industry, may buy their energy from these plantations," Kellison said. "But one of the most exciting possibilities is that hydrocarbons and sythetic products such as plastics may some day be made from hardwood trees."

Kellison said the Southeast probably is more amenable to energy farming than other areas of the country because of its climate, terrain and the cost of labor.

Two experimental farms were established in North Carolina 1978. One is on a six-acre site in Halifax County and the other is a four-acre operation in Granville County.

"We're looking at several varieties of hardwoods and at loblolly pine to see what species will do best in which sites," Kellison said. "Because we're interested only in fuel, we're not concerned at all with how the tree looks, only in its rate of growth" and BTU production."

Kellison said hardwoods were better suited than pines because of the way they grow.

"Hardwoods can be cut down to the ground, and they'll re-sprout into a new tree, which means we can get up to four generations of wood production from an original planting," he said. "Pines have to be replanted after every harvest."

Kellison said the trees would be harvested every four to eight years year in contract to the 12- to 25-year harvesting in hardwood pulp stands.

Spacing between trees also is closer than in pulpwood forests.

"For pulp and fiber plantations, you have about 100 square feet per tree. In energy plantations, we can go down to 20 square feet per tree, although the eventual reality will probably be a compromise between the two," he said.

One major problem facing the program is the need for productive land. Widespread use of energy farming would displace land now used for conventional agriculture.

Some researchers have predicted that, within 20 years, energy farms could take up as much as seven million acres of land in the Southeast.

Hmong People Of Laos Unlikely Refugees For N.C.

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
MARION, N.C. (AP) — Set on the eastern edge of the Blue Ridge Mountains, this small town has become an unlikely hub for some of the world's most desperate refugees, the Hmong people of Laos.

After coming to the United States from dismal refugee camps in Thailand, several hundred of the Laotian mountain tribesmen have found the North Carolina mountains an attractive reminder of the homeland to which they cannot return.

"I came here to look and I like it here," says Cheu Vang, who speaks in broken yet understandable English. "It's pretty country. The weather is pretty same to our country."

The Hmong — the H is not pronounced — also are known around the world as the Meo and are an ethnic minority in Laos.

It has been widely reported that the Hmong, an independent, farming people, were enlisted by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency to fight a secret war aimed at communist movements along the Ho Chi Minh Trail during the Vietnam War.

The Hmong began to flee Laos in large numbers in 1975 following the communist takeover. There have been reports this year of re-cremations and great atrocities committed against the Hmong who remain in Laos, including the dropping of poisonous powders from the air.

"There was fighting in my country," Cheu Vang's wife, Chia Yang, says simply. "The communists come and we could not stay."

The first Hmong family arrived in Marion nearly two years ago. Now there are about 270 Hmong in the town, the surrounding McDowell County and nearby Burke County, said the Rev. Don Guffey, assistant pastor at the Garden Creek Baptist Church, who has made work with the refugees his entire ministry.

Thousands of Hmong have been resettled in California and elsewhere around the United States under the sponsorship of a coalition of religious groups.

In Marion, a town of only 3,680 people, many Hmong have been sponsored by Garden Creek, a Southern Baptist church. But many more came on their own after originally settling in other parts of the country, as word spread of the climate, the familiar mountains and the availability of jobs.

"We're seeing what we call second migration," said Austin Conners, an official with the state Office of Citizen Affairs who has helped with refugee resettlement. "For the most part they were not sponsored in that county in the traditional way. A few were, and they've invited friends and relatives to join them."

Cheu Vang and his family were among the luckier ones, leaving immediately after the takeover of Laos.

"All the Hmong people had been involved with the U.S.," he said. "When communists come they change rulers and search for people who have involvement with U.S. You have to get out as soon as you can."

Guffey and the Garden Creek's pastor, the Rev. Allen McKinney, have helped the Hmong find housing, clothing and jobs. On Sundays, 100 or more gather at the church for their own Christian service or to hear Cheu Vang translate McKinney's sermon.

Almost all the adult Hmong men have found work, though it is often low-paying, in nearby textile, furniture and pharmaceutical plants.

"Many of them are working at jobs that have gone begging for years, menial jobs that no one has taken," McKinney said. "But they know they've got to take it first, to get a grubstake."

Some have worked their way into better-paying jobs and several, such as Cheu Vang, have bought their own homes.

But many others live close to destitution. Mee Her, 20, and two members of her husband's family, Houa Moua, 17, and Lee Moua, 15, shivered in their dilapidated house last week as they kept the furnace off to save fuel. Cold air poured through the cracks in their rented house, a bare, white-frame structure that once was a mill-company house.

Outside town, two other families of a dozen people with only one wage-earner, Vang Pao Moua, live in a house with no insulation and three tin stoves providing the only heat.

They just moved from Philadelphia, and found the house — at $250 a month — before Guffey learned of them.

Upset at their rent, he set out to find them a cheaper home in town, but not before taking six of their youngsters to the Health Department for shots required by school.

"This is sustaining me. I think I'd already be dead if it weren't for these people," said Guffey, 51, who retired six years ago with a heart condition and has done his refugee work without pay.

"I think most of them will stay right here if we can get them technical training," he said. "Right now the major thing is getting some through high school."

Language has been the primary obstacle. Marcy Thoma, who teaches them English at night, said Hmong is especially difficult to translate, as it is a monosyllabic language distinct from Laotian and until recently had no written alphabet.

"Many of them can't read or write in their own language," she said. "We are trying to have some of the leaders teach them their own language, so then we can teach them English."

The Hmong appear to be largely accepted in the town, though some opposition has been expressed in letters to a local paper.

But there is culture shock on both sides.

"We've got a great little community here and the number of Laotians here is no great problem," said Brady Brooks, a businessman. "But I'll tell you, you don't find grocery stores in many towns this size that handle 25-pound sacks of rice."

8 Districts

Face Change

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Incoming House Speaker Lister Hill says preliminary census figures show that eight state House districts have grown out of balance since 1971 and will require new boundary lines during the upcoming legislative sessions.

Ramsey, D-Madison, said the 5th District, in northeastern North Carolina, has the worst imbalance — 23 percent fewer people than is required for the two existing representatives under the "one-man, one-vote" ruling issued by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1966.

The western 42nd District, which includes Henderson County, has grown and now has 19 percent more people than is required for one representative.

Federal court rulings have knocked down district lines that show differences greater than 10 percent between the districts. Ramsey noted, however, that a change in one district will affect another district.

"You can shift a county in the mountains that will have an effect on the coast," he says.

The process is complicated by a number of rules, including one that forbids dividing a county between districts and another that allows multimember districts. But by 1981, the state's 100 counties must be divided into at least 11 congressional districts and enough districts to elect 50 state senators and 120 state representatives.

The state House and Senate each will come up with a plan to reapportion itself, which the other house must approve. Together, they devise the congressional districts.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was mixed today, leveling off after a two-week rally.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was up .60 at 966.98.

But losers held a lead over gainers in the broad tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

In the past two weeks the Dow Jones industrials have climbed 49.23 points. The rally has been attributed in large part to hopes that interest rates might be headed lower before long.

Today a medium-sized Chicago bank, American National Bank & Trust, lowered its prime lending rate from 2 1/2 to 20 percent. Some large New York banks meanwhile cut their broker loan rates to the 19 1/2-20 percent range.

But after a strong start, stock prices began to slip.

Aerospace issues, which led the market higher late last week, remained active. Boeing rose 3/4 to 43; General Dynamics gained 1 1/2 to 40 1/2; and Northrop picked up 1 1/4 to 60 1/4.

Among issues sensitive to interest-rate prospects, American Telephone & Telegraph was unchanged at 48 1/2, while Federal National Mortgage lost 1/2 to 12 1/2.

The NYSE's composite index dropped .13 to 78.15. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .74 at 353.48.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 16.89 million shares at noon, up from 6.68 million at the same point Friday, when the market was in the midst of its slowest session in more than two years.

Oppose Change Census Figures

NEW YORK (AP) — A city Bar Association committee has released a report opposing adjustments in the 1980 census because the accuracy of the changes could be questioned.

Some 20 states, counties and cities, including New York City, have sued the U.S. Census Bureau, contending their populations were undercounted, and federal judges in Detroit and New York City have ordered adjustments in the figures. At stake are federal funds and House seats.

The committee, in a 60-page report released Sunday, said adjustments should be made only if the statistical method used can ensure that the new figures are more accurate than the original headcount.

Angry Reaction To 'Barbarian'

By The Associated Press
The speaker of Iran's Parliament reacted angrily today to President-elect Ronald Reagan's charge that the American hostages were "kidnapped by barbarians," and the Iranian official implied that the United States was trying to swindle Iran.

Reagan was asked by reporters in Los Angeles Sunday if he could go along with the latest Iranian proposal for a $9 billion down payment for the release of the 52 hostages, with the rest of the terms to be negotiated.

"No," he replied. "I don't think you pay ransom for people that have been kidnapped by barbarians."

Hashemi Rafsanjani, the speaker of Majlis, or Parliament, responded to Reagan's comments from the floor of the 228-seat assembly, saying Iran was not worried about confronting the United States.

"We are not scared of your threats," he said.

"We want our money back and you call it ransom," Rafsanjani said. The deposit of financial guarantees is necessary to "prevent you from swindling us."

"The world must know that according to our Islamic morality we wanted to solve the hostage issue but it is the U.S. which looks about for an excuse."

"We will settle accounts with you," he said without elaboration.

Iran asked the United States earlier this month to deposit $24 billion with the Algerian government as guarantees for assets Iran wants returned. Today was the hostages 422nd day of captivity.

Commenting on the television film of the hostages released over the Christmas holidays, Rafsanjani said: "All the world saw the film of the spies and knows they are healthy and happy after a year and some months. 'You call this treatment barbaric and uncivilized but the savage crimes of the U.S. ... in the world are not considered savage and are said to be signs of civilization.'"

Rafsanjani was interrupted three times during the course of his remarks by Majlis deputies shouting "God is great!" and "Death to America!"

Iranians at separate religious holiday demonstrations in Tehran and other cities Sunday called on the government and the Majlis to set a deadline for the United States to accept Iran's terms, Iran's official Pars news agency reported. There was no immediate reaction from the Iranian government.

Rafsanjani also singled out the Soviet Union for criticism, objecting to Moscow's protests Sunday about alleged lack of protection for the Soviet Embassy during a demonstration by Afghan exiles in Tehran.

Thousands of Afghan exiles demonstrated at the embassy Saturday, the first anniversary of a Soviet-backed coup in Afghanistan, and tore down and burned the Soviet flag.

Soviet diplomats protested that the Iranian government had advance warning of the demonstration but took no action to prevent it or to increase security.

"You expect millions of people who have become homeless by you not even to protest?" Rafsanjani said in an open question to the Soviet Union. "What is the difference between you and the U.S. superpower?"

Iranian propaganda frequently refers to the United States as the "Satanic West" and to the Soviet Union as the "Criminal East." However, direct criticism of Moscow is less frequent in Iran than that directed at Washington.

A Tehran Radio commentary today said the United States was trying to "open a second front" against Iran after failing to achieve its aims through the 14-week-old Iraq-Iran war.

It said U.S. connected groups were creating disturbances in northern and western Iranian cities aimed at keeping government military reinforcements from reaching border areas. It said Kurdish rebels "linked to the White House Democrats" stopped an army column and tried to destroy weapons and ammunition being sent to the war front.

"Although our army brothers managed to frustrate this ominous plot, nevertheless the good news reaches America that White House-trained remnants in Iran as well as the U.S. Democratic Party's Marines are prepared to raid reinforcement units being sent to border areas."

Students Attending Conference

Seven local students representing Junior Achievement of Greenville and Pitt County will attend the 1980 Junior Achievement Management Conference (JAMCO) in Asheville December 28-30, according to Sue Lemish, local JA director.

Those students attending from this area are Debra Kirkman and Carla Jones of North Pitt High School; Cathy Chapman and Robin Muzzarelli of Rose High School; Rosetta Lawrence and Denise Hewitt of D.H. Conley High School; and Hope Strickland of Farmville Central High School.

The theme of the three-day conference is "I Believe," with general overtones of patriotism, the 1940's and the Big Band sound. In addition, all achievers will participate in a four-hour seminar entitled "Winning On Your Own Terms." Other conference activities will include workshops, discussion groups, outstanding young businesswomen, speech contest, product fair and talent show.

According to Ms. Lemish the students will be accompanied by two local JA advisors, Thomas Little and Naomi Levy.

No Snow, Just A Big Drizzle

By MARY SCHULKEN

Snow predicted for late Friday and early Saturday didn't materialize in the area, but rain, mixed with ice, besieged the county during the weekend.

A check of weekend temperatures showed a warming trend through Sunday continuing into Monday. According to Greenville Utilities' Water Plant, the low temperature for the period was 10 degrees Fahrenheit, recorded Friday. The high for Friday was 34, moving up five degrees on Saturday to 39. The low Saturday was 29 degrees.

On Sunday, temperatures returned to more seasonable levels. The high for the day was 55, accompanied by a low of 37. At 8 a.m. today, the temperature stood at 51 degrees.

No precipitation was measured at 8 a.m. Friday or Saturday in the area, but .51 inches was measured Sunday morning, and by 8 a.m. today .14 inches more was recorded. The level of the Tar River on the National Weather Service Gauge ranged from 3.1 feet Friday to 2.6 feet Saturday, back up to 3.8 feet Sunday. At 8 a.m. Monday the river had risen to 4.9 feet.

The Department of Transportation reported that dirt roads in the county were "very wet." According to

Horace Vincent, none of the roads are impassable, but most are very muddy. "Our dirt roads are very messy and in bad shape," he said, "but we have all our equipment out working to make them better."

Malcolm Greene of Greenville Utilities reported no electrical difficulties from the small amount of ice that accumulated Saturday. "We saw a very slight buildup early Saturday morning about 7 o'clock, but it quickly disappeared," he commented, "and we experienced no weather-related problems throughout the period."

Greenville's Public Works Department reported no problems either. "There was no icing on the streets," said Mayo Allen, director. "About all we did was put up the signs that say 'Caution, Ice on Bridge,' and this is standard procedure whenever it's raining and the temperature drops below 32 degrees."

Raiders, Cowboys Advance In Playoffs

Oakland Romps By Oilers, 27-7

By ERIC PREWITT
AP Sports Writer
OAKLAND (AP) — The Oakland Raiders welcomed Ken Stabler back to his former home field by pounding him to the turf seven times.

"They talked to me a lot, mostly friendly stuff. They asked me if I was all right after they knocked me down," said Stabler, who went down and out of the National Football League playoffs Sunday with the Houston Oilers.

The Raiders, playing what could have been their last game ever in Oakland, gave a sellout crowd a great show as they trounced the Oilers 27-7 in the meeting of American Football Conference wild-card teams.

They sacked former teammate Stabler seven times, and cornerback Lester Hayes intercepted two passes including one returned for 20 yards and a game-clinching touchdown in the fourth period. On offense, the Raiders got two touchdown passes from Stabler's 1979 backup, Jim Plunkett.

The team which Al Davis, the managing general partner, wants to move to Los Angeles next year advanced to the semifinals of the AFC playoffs and will be on the road next Sunday, facing the AFC Central champion Cleveland Browns.

Stabler was making his first appearance in Oakland since being traded to Houston early this year. He demanded to be traded after being the target of what he considered unjust criticism from Davis.

"But I came here to win today. Al Davis had nothing to do with the game," Stabler insisted when asked about Sunday's homecoming. "Playoff games are all the same. I don't care where they're played. Pressure comes with my job."

"The only thing we won by beating Houston was the right to play one more game — not two more, not three more," said offensive guard Gene Upshaw, one of the Raiders' team captains.

"But we want to bring back what belongs to us, what we deserve," added Upshaw, meaning the Super Bowl title. The 1976 Oakland team coached by John Madden beat the Minnesota Vikings in Super Bowl XI, but Sunday's game was the Raiders' first playoff appearance since 1977.

"I don't know that I've ever seen a better game by a Raiders' defense," said Tom Flores, the second-year head coach who was an assistant to Madden.

The Raiders, as a wild-card team, entered the playoff with the same record, 11-5, as all AFC contenders but at a definite disadvantage. They knew they would have just one home game.

If they win at Cleveland, they'll be on the road against the winner of next Saturday's game between the Buffalo Bills and San Diego Chargers.

"I think they'll go a long way," said Oilers Coach Bum Phillips, whose team had reached the AFC title game the past two seasons as a wild card only to lose to the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Denkler's Basket Gives Lady Pirates 63-62 Win

By JOHN STALLINGS
Special To The Reflector
FLUSHING, N.Y. — Mary Denkler's follow shot with 27 seconds left boosted East Carolina University's Lady Pirate basketball team to a 63-62 win over Northwestern University Sunday night and into the finals of the Queens College Holiday Tournament.

Denkler, a 6-0 sophomore center, got 10 of her 12 points in the second half and also pulled down the Wildcats' final shot of the night with a second left on the clock to insure the win.

East Carolina will meet the University of Virginia, a 62-51 winner over Queens, in tonight's finals at 8 p.m.

Northwestern's Amy Prichard, who led all scorers with 25 points, scored inside to knot the score at 61 apiece with 1:21 left. Her free throw with 47 seconds left gave the Wildcats a one-point lead.

After both teams missed scoring opportunities, Denkler made a twisting follow shot in a crowd for the winner.

With seven seconds left, East Carolina's Laurie Sikes missed the front end of a one-and-one and the Wildcats claimed the rebound. With no time-out left, Northwestern pushed the ball down court to Prichard, who missed an 18-foot jumper from the corner with two seconds left on the clock. Denkler grabbed the rebound and waited for the final buzzer.

"We are very lucky to be in the finals," Lady Pirate coach Cathy Andruzzi said. "Technically, we missed 13 free throws, but five of those misses were at the front of one-and-ones. Northwestern is a very, very good team. They ran their offense well."

"They ran back door, back door, back door all night," Andruzzi continued. "We just didn't adjust well to the ball to stop it."

"We played good in spurts — short spurts. We didn't allow them to work for their shots — we gave them shots."

The methodical Northwestern team worked the ball inside to Prichard, Patience Vanderbush and Julie Calahan for the bulk of its points. Vanderbush netted 10 points and grabbed 11 rebounds for the Wildcats and Calahan added 10 points.

Cowboys Get Revenge, Run Over Los Angeles

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer
IRVING, Texas (AP) — A good case of public degradation two weeks ago turned the Dallas Cowboys into a wrathful team. They rolled over the Los Angeles Rams Sunday like they had run on no other team in the club's 21-year history.

The Cowboys pounded the Rams for a club-record 338 yards rushing in a 34-13 National Conference wild-card playoff victory which set up a meeting this Sunday with the NFC Western Division champion Atlanta Falcons on the road.

Tony Dorsett rushed for 160 yards on 22 carries to establish a Dallas record for yards gained in a playoff for the Cowboys as they avenged a 38-14 flogging at the hands of the Rams on Monday night national television.

"They embarrassed us and we had something to prove," said Dallas quarterback Danny White, who threw three second half touchdown passes to break a 13-13 deadlock.

Dorsett, who scored on a 12-yard run and made an impressive run with a 10-yard touchdown pass from White, was the catalyst for the determined Cowboys.

"In that first game with them (the Rams) out on the coast, we were believing all that stuff about so many of them being hurt and all that rot," said Dorsett. "We didn't take them as seriously as we did today."

The Cowboys scored on their first three possessions in the second half and ran out the clock with their fourth in the amazing turnaround that Coach Tom Landry called

"One of our finest hours ... one of our best games of the year." The Dallas defense, which had yielded three touchdown passes to Ram quarterback Vince Ferragamo two weeks ago and also in a 21-19 Los Angeles divisional playoff victory over the Cowboys last year, was only effective in the first half.

Ferragamo threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Preston Dennard but was intercepted three times in the second half as the maligned Cowboys' secondary came alive.

"This was about as well as we can play," said Landry. "We had 45 guys ready to play ... our kicking game, offense and defense. Everybody was moving and hitting."

Besides the touchdown toss to Dorsett, White shook off three first half interceptions to throw a 35-yard scoring pass to Butch Johnson and an 11-yarder to Drew Pearson.

"I thought Coach Landry's play-calling was unbelievable," White said. "He just seemed to have things under his control. I remember when I came to the sidelines in the second quarter after an in-

Lakers Prove Their Title

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It was just one game in the National Basketball Association's lengthy regular season, but there still was a special aura when the two 1979-80 championship finalists met this time.

"There was a lot of energy by both teams; both wanted to win this one a lot," Los Angeles Coach Paul Westhead said after his Lakers downed the Philadelphia 76ers 122-116 Sunday night.

"Kareem (Abdul-Jabbar) and the Lakers were out to prove they were the champs," said Philadelphia Coach Billy Cunningham. "I thought they played outstanding basketball."

The Lakers defeated the 76ers in six games for the NBA crown last season, with Earvin "Magic" Johnson starring in the clinching game as Abdul-Jabbar was out with an injury. Sunday night, the Lakers were without the injured Johnson, but Abdul-Jabbar and Jamaal Wilkes combined for 66 points to lead the way.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 34 points and had 13 rebounds and five assists, while Wilkes added 32 points for the Lakers, who took control of the game late in the third period.

In the only other NBA game Sunday, Kansas City beat New Jersey 102-99.

The 76ers, 33-6, have the NBA's best record and their loss to the Lakers, coming on the heels of a loss to Denver, marked the first time this season Philadelphia has dropped two straight.

"Our two losses in a row could be a blessing in disguise," said Cunningham, indicating he didn't want his team getting complacent.

Michael Cooper added 15 points for the Lakers, whose record is 25-13, and Nixon had 14.

Lionel Hollins had 18 points for the 76ers, while Bobby Jones and Darryl Dawkins added 17 each.

Kings 102, Nets 99
The Kings handed the Nets their fifth straight loss and 10th in 11 games as Otis Birdsong scored 35 points. Maurice Lucas had a game-high 39 points for the home-standing Nets and Mike Newlin added 24.

Birdsong scored 16 of 20 points in a third-quarter streak that brought the Kings from a 58-56 lead to 78-62 late in the period.

But the Nets came back with Birdsong on the bench. A 21-2 streak gave New Jersey an 83-80 lead but Birdsong returned, and with Scott Wedman, rallied the Kings.

Wedman scored 10 of the King's final 17 points.

terception, he told me not to worry, we were going to win this one.

"This was sweet revenge," he added. "This game really evolved from that long airplane ride home from LA that Monday night they embarrassed us. Some time before we landed here, we became a different football team."

Pearson was even more bitter toward the Rams than White.

"I think LA will probably think we are a pretty good football team now. We just got no respect from them. Like after that Monday game, (Coach Ray) Malavasi said they just beat our tails. Well, now we have beaten the Rams' tails."

Malavasi said he tried to warn the Rams.

"I kept telling people all week that Dallas was going to be a lot tougher this time around than they were two weeks ago when we beat them," Malavasi said. "Well, you saw what I was talking about. Dallas just went after us and got us. They are an exceptional team, well coached and disciplined."

Ferragamo said Dallas used a five-man rush which bothered the Rams.

"They're five-man rush was a big difference and we didn't have everything together and they beat us," said Ferragamo. "Knowing we beat Dallas like we did the first time and losing today like we did ... well, it's kind of scary."

Ferragamo had passed for three touchdowns the last time the two teams met just as he did when the Rams knocked Dallas out of the divisional playoffs in Texas Stadium last year 21-19.

"We didn't have the intensity we had when we played the Cowboys on Monday night," said Ram defensive end Fred Dryer. "We were asleep."

Dallas finished the year 9-0 at Texas Stadium and take a 13-5 record to Atlanta.

Los Angeles closed the season at 11-6.

The game marked the 19th time out of 20 that Dallas has won when Dorsett has gained 100 yards or more.

Dallas drove 63, 70 and 95 yards against the Rams in the second half for its three killing touchdowns.

Cowboys' guard Tom Raftery said "We were really getting off the ball. Anytime you are embarrassed like we were a couple of weeks ago you want to come back. I feel pretty good about the rest of the playoffs. We haven't played Atlanta in a couple of years, but if we play as we did today we're going to be in New Orleans (site of the Super Bowl.)"

Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Around the Atlantic Coast Conference they call him "Famous" Amos Lawrence.

And since the North Carolina tailback has 4,391 career rushing yards to his credit, the ninth best total in NCAA history, it would seem an apt nickname.

Lawrence will play his last game in a Tar Heel uniform, against Texas in Wednesday's Bluebonnet Bowl in the Astrodome. But Sunday after practice he surprised a few people, saying if he could go back four years he would choose not to be a Tar Heel.

"I've been satisfied with my performance and the things I've done at Carolina," said the 5-foot-11, 182-pound senior. "But if I was to start all over again I think I would go to a bigger school. I had a chance to go to UCLA. They recruited me pretty heavily, and I think if I had that chance again I would go."

The Norfolk, Va., native's reasons are simple. It's just that he feels the publicity he received in the ACC, or rather the lack of it, hurt him.

"It's really not that I have anything against Carolina or the people there," he said. "But I think it's (UCLA) a little more big time. Publicity in the ACC is just something that you just don't get. At UCLA or some of the other major colleges in the country I feel like I would have had a better chance publicity-wise."

"I really feel like I could have had a strong chance at the Heisman (Trophy). But as far as publicity in the ACC for the Heisman, you just don't get it."

Lawrence, the Tar Heels' all-time leading rusher, compiled the statistics. His 1,118 yards this season is a major reason for the Tar Heels 10-1 record and ACC title. Plus, he is only the second player in NCAA history to gain more than 1,000 yards in four successive seasons. Tony Dorsett, now of the Dallas Cowboys, was the first to do it while at Pitt.

But the national accolades avoided him.

"In my freshman year, I gained over 1,200 yards and felt like I had a good chance to be a freshman All-American on the first team," Lawrence said. "But I guess the publicity didn't get it for me."

But that's all history and the Norfolk, Va., native knows why he's in Houston and plans to do his part to see that the Tar Heels finish the season 11-1 by beating the 7-4 Longhorns.

"I'm not disappointed at all," he said of the season. "I'm happy with the way it turned out. I'm glad I got a thousand yards. I'm glad Kelvin (Bryant) got a thousand yards. Kelvin and I complemented each other well."

Lawrence and Bryant are another problem but it's not really a problem for them or the team. They split time this season at tailback, which led to speculation that the platooning had created some tension between the senior and the sophomore.

"That's just a lot of talk," Lawrence said, denying the rumor. "He helped me stay injury-free and I helped him stay injury-free. I think some people wanted to see Kelvin and I having conflicts but I didn't let that happen. I'm not a selfish person. As long as I know Kelvin can help me out, I'm grateful."

Bryant, who may be the best backup tailback in the country, agreed the talk of tension was just talk.

"When I went home, people kept telling me that Amos and I didn't get along, but that was news to me. We got along fine," the Tarboro, N.C., native said.

The tension may have been talk, but what they did for the offense was not. And the Texas defense, which allowed only 141 yards rushing a game, may have its hands full, because the Tar Heel tailback tandem led North Carolina to a 271-yard rushing average and a 25.5-point scoring average.

Both men passed the 1,000-yard mark this year in the final regular season game against Duke. And they did it in style. Lawrence broke loose for a 56-yard touchdown run to pass the magic number and finished the game with 143 yards.

A 44-yard run pushed Bryant past 1,000. He finished the game with 199 yards after gaining only 35 by the half. He finished the regular season with 1,039 yards.

Lawrence is the "dancer," North Carolina coach Dick Crum says, deceiving the opposition with smooth and deceptive moves. Bryant is the "slasher," cutting and speeding by the opposition. He ran the 100-yard dash in 9.3 seconds in high school.

But there is another man in the backfield, that both men credit for their success, fullback Billy Johnson.

Johnson gained only 433 yards this year, but his main responsibility is as a blocking back. And with 253 pounds to back him up, he is capable of helping the offensive line make some big holes. Plus he's easy to hide behind, Lawrence said.

"Billy Johnson has helped out tremendously," Lawrence said. "Whenever I'm running behind him I feel secure."

Bryant agrees. "Billy is like having another offensive lineman in front of you. And he's fast enough to block when I go outside."

Johnson himself knows his role. He came out of high school as a 235-pound tailback and it took him a while to adjust to being a blocking back. He suffered through a lot of nagging injuries, but not this year.

"I worked hard and kept myself healthy this year," Johnson said. "I'm glad Amos and Kelvin both got a thousand, because I take pride in my blocking and I felt like I really contributed to what they did."

"That's my job, to block. Plus, when we need one or two yards, I have to be able to get it."

That backfield trio, plus

Oakland...

Dave Casper and safety Jack Tatum, two other players traded from Oakland to Houston this year, didn't fare much better.

But two former Oilers, running back Kenny King and defensive lineman John Matuszak, along with Houston native Hayes contributed greatly in the Raiders' victory.

King, held out of the final regular season game to rest a sprained ankle, caught a 37-yard pass from Plunkett to set up the Raiders' first touchdown, one which sent them ahead to stay, 10-7 in the second period. His 31-yard run in the final quarter led to a Chris Bahr field goal which made the score 20-7.

Matuszak, who began his NFL career with Houston, blocked Toni Fritsch's 37-yard field goal try which would have tied the score at 10-10 just before halftime. Fritsch made a 32-yarder seconds before, but it was nullified by a penalty.

Plunkett completed only 8 of 23 passes but several of the completions were for big yardage. The first touchdown pass was for just one yard, to tight end Todd Christensen who made his first NFL reception, but the second was a 44-yard strike to running back Arthur Whittington and it gave the Raiders a 17-7 lead in the opening seconds of the last quarter.

Houston had taken a 7-3 lead in the first period on a 55-yard drive which featured the running of Earl Campbell, who blasted 1 yard for the touchdown. Campbell, the NFL's leading rusher, finished the day with 91 yards, only 29 in the second half.

Texas Running Game Is In 'Jam' Without Jones

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — The 1980 season started for University of Texas running back A.J. "Jam" Jones just like he had dreamed it would while he was growing up back there in Youngstown, Ohio.

Jones seldom had any doubts that he would be a running back. Even as a junior high quarterback, Jones' play-calling reflected his future ambitions. It was quarterback keep left, followed by quarterback keep right.

Jones, coming off knee surgery that prevented a 1,000-yard season as a sophomore, exploded 165 yards against Arkansas in the first game this season and rushed over 100 yards in the next three games. The Longhorns rolled to a 5-0 record and No. 2 ranking in the nation.

Then the dream turned into another nightmare.

In the fifth game against Oklahoma, Jones suffered a pinched nerve in his neck and three games later against Houston a dislocated collarbone ended his second chance for a 1,000-yard campaign.

Jones, a 6-foot 1-inch, 200-pound junior, led the Longhorns with 657 yards this season, but he will go into Wednesday night's Bluebonnet Bowl clash against 18th-ranked North Carolina with only a chance to see action.

"I'll admit after the Houston game my spirits were really down," Jones said. "I didn't know what was going on with all the injuries. I thought I would lose my mind. But I don't think I'm injury prone. I just put it in the Lord's hands. What will be, will be."

Prior to his latest bout with injuries, Jones was hearing his name mentioned with the Heisman Trophy and former Texas All-America selection Earl Campbell.

"They started to compare me with Campbell, not as a powerful runner, but as Texas' next 1,000-yard rusher," Jones said. "But after the Oklahoma game, when I got the pinched nerve, things started to go down."

Jones was given clearance last week to resume non-contact workouts with the team, but a decision won't be made until game-time on whether he will be allowed to play.

half, the Lady Pirates went ice cold. Prichard and Julie Egan ran off eight points to give the Wildcats a 28-26 halftime lead.

The lead changed hands seven times in the second half with neither team leading by more than five points.

A pair of Sikes free throws at 2:31 gave East Carolina a short-lived 59-57 lead. Calahan and Marcia Girven of East Carolina traded baskets to tie the score to 61-59 and set the stage for the wild finish.

It was the Lady Pirates' poor 9-for-22 night at the foul line which turned a win into a narrow escape. During the final three minutes, East Carolina missed the front end of one-and-one opportunities three times.

"We played well in the clutch at the end of the game," Andruzzi said. "But we made things hard on ourselves. We didn't play as hard as we are capable of and we must to make up for our lack of size."

Riley led the Pirates with 17 points and 13 rebounds, while Sam Jones, who fouled out in the second half, added 11.

The victory raised the official Pirate record to 7-1. They are 8-2 in all games. Northwestern is now 6-2.

Senior guard Lydia Rountree became the fourth all-time leading scorer for the East Carolina women with a follow shot at 10:19 of the first half. Rountree now has 1,069 points, passing Gale Kerbaugh's total of 1,065. Third on the list is Sheilah Cotton, who scored 1,270.

"Lydia played well," Andruzzi noted, "especially on defense." Rountree had five rebounds, four assists and did not have a turnover as she scored four points.

Duke, Clemson Gain Tournament Finals

By The Associated Press
Tonight could be called "tournament night" in the Atlantic Coast Conference with Duke taking on Tennessee for the Sugar Bowl title in New Orleans and Clemson going for broke in the finals of the Rainbow Classic in Honolulu.

And added to that, Maryland is at home as host in the Maryland Invitational and North Carolina goes against Louisville in the first-round of the Holiday Classic in Los Angeles.

Duke moved into the game against Tennessee by beating the University of New Orleans 77-63 Sunday. The Vols made the finals by upsetting previously unbeaten Arizona State 69-53.

Duke took command during a two-minute streak midway through the first half, getting 9 unanswered points to open a 25-15 lead. New Orleans closed within 6 points over the next five minutes, but never got closer than 10 after that.

Kenny Derrard got 18 points for the Blue Devils, and reserve guard Chip Engelland got 10.

Clemson got its 50-49 victory over Louisiana Tech on a short jumper by Larry Nance with 1:57 remaining in overtime. Clemson had thrown the game into the extra period when substitute Vincent Hamilton hit a 16-footer with 1:30 left in regulation and then Ray Jones hit on a eight-footer that knotted the score at 46-all.

quarterback Rod Elkin, made for a potent and explosive offense.

Texas, on the other hand, has had its share of problems on offense. And all the problems are spelled I-N-J-U-R-Y.

The Longhorns' top running back, A.J. "Jam" Jones, was knocked out of action in the seventh game of the season with a dislocated collarbone. Up to that point he had 657 yards. Then halfback Rodney Tate was lost because of an infected finger that required surgery. He had rushed for only 230 yards.

Their replacements — Darryl Clark and Mike Luck combined for only 409 yards.

The Longhorns' All-America defensive tackle Kenneth Sims summed up the problem.

"I don't see how you can blame the problem on anything but injuries," he said of the 7-4 record and fourth-place finish in the Southwest Conference. "Jam means so much to our offense. We're a different team when he's not in there."

But there is now speculation that Jones will be back. He has been cleared for non-contact practice. And Tate is healthy again.

That may put some punch into the offense that averaged only 204 yards rushing a game this season. But the Texas offense will be up against the nation's 11th best defense which limited its opposition to 125.5 yards and 11.1 points a game. Texas average 23.6 points a game.

In the meantime, Bluebonnet Bowl officials are unhappy with ticket sales. North Carolina returned 3,000 tickets, but what upsets the officials more is that Texas returned 1,500 and there are more than 100,000 alumni in the Houston area.

All told there are 8,000 tickets left for the game in the Astrodome, which holds about 52,000.

Game time is 8 p.m. EST and will be televised by the Mizlou Network.

Kiddie Shows Take Place Of X-Movies

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Residents of this Chicago suburb, upset when the Coronet Theater started showing X-rated films, now are offering free parking and advertising for the theater as a pledge of support for its new family fare.

The switch to PG-rated features and kiddie matinees came less than a year after the theater began showing adult films, and follows months of negotiations between community leaders and the theater owner.

Both sides are hoping to make the arrangement work. "We were willing to work on this issue for as long as it took ... a porno theater is not part of what Evanston supports," said Sandy Wright, who headed a campaign to change the Coronet's policy.

Mrs. Wright and other Evanston residents banded together when theater owner Leo Freedberg started

'Mixed Couples' Has Its Yawns

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Critic

NEW YORK (AP) — As a rule, it is not wise to expect too much from a comedy that occurs in a hangar at an airfield in New Jersey in 1927.

"Mixed Couples," which opened Sunday on Broadway, is such a work. It features two middle-aged couples, one played by Rip Torn and Julie Harris, the other by Geraldine Page and Michael Higgins.

I won't say it's dull, but it struck me as kind of a Yawn Festival periodically interrupted by chuckles.

Our foursome unexpectedly meets in the hangar while waiting for the fog to clear so their pilot (John Stewart) can fly them elsewhere — the Torn-Harris team to Florida, the Page-Higgins duo to Washington, D.C.

They are stunned and dismayed to see each other. It seems 25 years ago Torn was wed to Miss Page and Higgins to Miss Harris. Then Torn took up with Miss Harris and Higgins took up with Miss Page. Or vice versa.

Then all four adulterers divorced their spouses and married those with whom they'd been adulter. You suspect this right off the bat, as there are some fond looks and even a furtive hug afoot. But there's a lot more coy hinting to endure before you can shout, "Bingo!"

It's at this point the plot thins. In due course, old memories about their youths in New York are recalled, flaws exposed, motives for affairs and re-marriages scrutinized and two hours wasted.

You find that Torn is a bluff, confident real estate mogul who used to be shy, that Miss Harris is an ex-showgirl and failed actress who fibs a bit and still dreams of success.

Oh, yes, they live in Manhattan and have an "enlightened" marriage, i.e., they can fool around now and then.

As for Couple No. 2 (Page-Higgins), they just live in suburban New Jersey. He's a stuffy author and lecturer on Elizabethan literature, and she's a housewife and mother of their two children.

As you might expect, the women are suitably catty towards each other and the menfolk gingerly amiable, save one scene in which the mild author gets mad at the mogul and almost is belted by same.

This occurs when Higgins, having been belittled by Torn for not knowing of a famous Gene Tunney fistfight, erupts and says, "You're not superior to me, you're my inferior and you know it."

He also warns him to adopt "an inferior tone." Alas, only a raised fist and a hard stare ensue. Still, it's the liveliest moment in "Couples," which largely devotes itself to rehashing 25 years of love or what passes for it.

You find yourself very pleased when the fog clears and three of our gang press on. Miss Page having decided to stay home in New Jersey. Despite her decision, everyone winds up as friends at the finale.

It is a slow night, this "Mixed Couples," written by James Prejeaux, a Tony-winner for "The Last of Mrs. Lincoln," and directed — somewhat uncertainly, it seems — by George Schaefer, director of "Mrs. Lincoln."

The co-stars, fine talents all, valiantly try to save the show by mugging a bit (excluding Higgins) or by putting funny little vocal spins on their dialogue. Torn even gives his man a vaguely southern accent. But they're in a losing cause.

Even though a bit of wit slips into the play now and then, the dialogue generally is in the Who Cares? category, likewise the characters. This portends no good for a show.

It's sad, but I suspect "Mixed Couples" is headed for a swift breakup.

told the residents that pornography was on its way out.

"They came up with a beautiful plan and I decided to go along with it," he said. "I never wanted to hurt anybody. They've decided to give us backing."

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Arts Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — I am hanging around the hallways at NBC, watching vice-presidents scurry by and talking with my old man, who has just stumped the panel on "To Tell the Truth."

They failed to guess he is the real Del Sharbutt, famed announcer in the glory days of network radio. Two imposters with him fooled the panelists. We have many laughs about this.

We get to chatting with Susan Handy, a pretty lady who helps pick imposters for the game show, which is taped at NBC, syndicated to 70 cities and once was a very big CBS series.

Miss Handy gets a strange look in her eye. "How'd you like to be an imposter?" she asks me. We have many laughs about this, too.

But I wind up in her office, pouring out my life story. "Ah-hah," she says. "Just what we need. A man of action."

Well, perhaps I exaggerated a bit with that business about climbing Mount Everest, flying Navy fighters, coming in third at the Indy 500 and winning the Heisman Trophy without a press agent.

But this is OK, as she is just looking for people who lie well. Besides, I hear there is big dough in TV and so does my bookie, to whom I am greatly indebted as a rule.

A few months pass. Then the phone rings and Miss Handy is on the other end. I am on my way to becoming a TV star like Erik Estrada or someone. I hasten over to the "To Tell the Truth" office.

There I am meeting another imposter, Jay Henry, a financial consultant, and the gent we are supposed to pretend we are, Jack Wheeler, who runs an adventure tour agency in Beverly Hills.

Jack has been around. He's climbed the Matterhorn, swum the Hellespont, retraced the path Hannibal took when he crossed the Alps with 37 elephants. He's also been to the North Pole six times.

He fills us in on such things as the whereabouts of the Matterhorn, the Hellespont and the Alps. He reminds us the best time to visit the North Pole is in April. And he wishes us well.

We sign various forms. Two days later it's show time.

We do two run-throughs before the cameras without the panel. Then a makeup man pummels us with powder and we are ushered into a small room filled with poseurs and The Real McCoy.

If I stump the panel, I can make up to $291. Failure will get me but $50 and that much in prizes, including $25 worth of Clorets. I am not nervous, although everyone seems alarmed that I am pacing about saying, "I am Jack Wheeler, I am Jack Wheeler."

Finally, we face the panel, which consists of Kitty Carlisle, Tom Seaver, Nipsey Russell, the fine comedian, and Pat Collins, a local TV celebrity. They start grilling us.

Miss Carlisle asks if I've ever met pygmies. I say, "Yes, I could tell on account of they were short." Then Mr. Russell asks where one can find tigers in Africa.

"Zaire and Tanzania, mostly," I say. There is no end to my confidence. This is Easy City. I am slightly above brilliant. Then they go and poll the panel. It seems I didn't fool anyone.

My bookie tells me later there are no tigers in Africa. He also wants I should sell my $25 worth of Clorets pronto and pay off.

Estimated 'Hood Count'

By The Associated Press
Here is a list of the various Ku Klux Klan organizations, their leaders and estimates of their membership where available.

Since the Klan does not divulge its membership and the FBI no longer infiltrates the organization, the estimates were provided by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The ADL, which monitors the Klan through 26 regional offices, bases its figures on attendance at rallies and the circulation of KKK publications.

The hood count: United Klans of America — Robert Shelton, Tuscaloosa, Ala. — 3,500-4,000.

Invisible Empire, Knights of the Ku Klux Klan — Bill Wilkinson, Denham Springs, La. — 2,000-2,500.

Character Actor Sam Levene Is Found Dead

NEW YORK (AP) — Sam Levene, a character actor who created the role of Nathan Detroit in "Guys and Dolls" has been found dead in his St. Moritz hotel room. He was 75.

Levene's body was discovered Sunday night by his son Joseph, who had gone to meet him for dinner.

Police said the veteran actor, found dressed and lying on the floor of his suite, had suffered an apparent heart attack.

Levene got his start on the stage in the 1920s and specialized as a fast-talking, hard-boiled, streetwise New Yorker. He played Patsy in "Three Men on a Horse,"

Finkelstein, the theatrical agent in "Dinner at Eight," and Al Lewis, a retired vaudeville man, in the "The Sunshine Boys."

Frascible and hot-tempered in appearance, Levene's characters often were affectionate and kind under their tough exteriors.

Born in Russia on Aug. 28, 1905, Levene came to the United States in 1907 and became a naturalized citizen in 1937.

His first Broadway appearance was in "Wall Street" in 1927, and he went on to starring roles in "Room Service," "The Matchmaker," "Heart Break House," "Street Scene," "Last Analysis," "Dreyfus," "The Prince of Grand Street" among others, including a role last year in "Goodnight Grandpa."

Levene also had more than 30 films to his credit, including "Act One," "Shadow of the Thin Man" and "The Babe Ruth Story."

His son, Joseph K. Levene, said his father had returned to New York last Wednesday after appearing in Toronto in "Horowitz and Mrs. Washington."

He had lived in the Central Park South hotel for many years.

Optical Topics

opticians association of america

by Beecher Kirkley

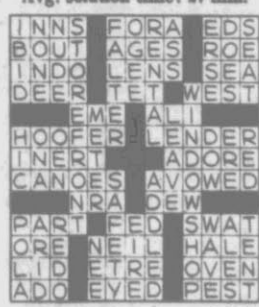

It is quite natural for one's focusing ability to decrease after the age of 40 years. The resultant blurry vision while reading is known as "Presbyopia." It is not a disease. Although it seems to come on suddenly, it does not. The process is as gradual as aging. Once Presbyopia reaches a critical point, its effects are more noticeable and seem more rapid. The symptoms are blurred vision at normal reading distance and/or eyestrain. The effects of Presbyopia may be compensated for by using properly prescribed glasses.

Periodic eye exams are important at all ages, but more vital as we grow older. Should you find yourself in need of corrective eyewear, at any age, the staff of CLEAR VUE OPTICIANS, 1706 8th Physicians Quadrangle, Building A, can assist you. Our professional staff will dispense the corrective eyewear as prescribed while affording you the choice of frames that will fit properly and be fashionable. Prompt, careful and professional attention to your eyewear and eyecare needs are available at CLEAR VUE OPTICIANS. Tel. 752-1446.

What do you bid now?

A.—It looks as if the hand is probably going to play in no trump, but you should not bid two no trump now even if that bid does not show extra values. Since your hand has virtually no tenaces, there is no reason to suppose that no trump will play better from your side. Your cause will be better served if partner declares a no trump contract. For the moment, just rebid two diamonds.

partner cannot bid again, you certainly have not missed a game. And partner's rebid will give you a better idea of the hand's potential.

What action do you take?
A.—Ask whose lead it is. Despite your five-card support, you hand is not worth another bid. You described everything you had when you freely raised partner's one heart to two. Unless partner is hard of hearing, or refuses to bid a second time with fewer than 20 points, the possibility of your side making a nine-trick contract is nil.

What action do you take?
A.—Your hand should prove very useful to partner at no trump, especially since you know that he has at least two diamonds. Also, partner must be better than dead minimum, since he was under no compulsion to bid over West's overall. We feel that a raise to two no trump describes your hand adequately.

What action do you take?
A.—If you think that your partner has made a "drop dead" bid, you are greatly mistaken—partner has shown a hand strong enough to play in four hearts even opposite a minimum response with no help in hearts. Actually, you have a magnificent hand with a key heart honor. We would ask for aces, and bid a small slam if partner has two and a grand slam if he shows three.

Street Gangs Adopt New Image

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — The tam has been traded for a fez, the streets for a temple and the threatening reputation for a veiled identity. But many of the faces are the same — members of what was once the city's most notorious street gang.

They now call themselves the El Rukns. Their uniform is a fez and a medallion. Their congregation spot is a South Side movie house converted into a temple and they say their business is religion.

Police say different. The religion, they say, is just a front. The El Rukns "have taken on a religious tone to their operation and they try to legitimize it," says Ed Pleines, commander of the city's Gang Crimes unit. "Their main operation is drugs."

Many El Rukns, police say, are former members of the Black P Stone Nation, one of the "supergangs" in Chicago who donned tam o'shaners and strutted the streets during the late 1960s. The group's leader, in fact, is Jeff Fort, former P Stone leader, convicted in 1972 for defrauding the federal government in a job training program.

The El Rukns, police say, are typical of a black gang movement that seems to be on the rise in Chicago. "There is an increase both in activity and in membership of these gangs," Pleines says.

The increasing black gang activity in the city, both police and community officials say, is due to a combination of a feeble economy, the release of old gang members from prison and simply a new cycle in a city with a long history of gangs.

"The tradition of youth gangs in Chicago is probably better established than in any other major American city," says Walter Miller, director of the National Youth Gang Survey of the Office of Juvenile Justice.

Black gangs exist in other major cities, Miller says, such as Detroit and Philadelphia, but "where there are high proportions of black gangs, the gangs are not very active or very violent at the present time."

Where gang activity is flourishing, Miller says, only a small percentage is black. Chicago, he says, is the exception.

The current rash of gang activity, which in recent years had shifted to the Latino community, many officials say, can be traced to the late 1960s, when black gangs were at their peak in the city.

Though police crackdowns then helped dissipate gang activity, some say the groups never died in Chicago.

"Instead, prisons became extensions of the streets," says Eugene Perkins, director of the Better Boys Foundation.

And now gang leaders who have recently completed their prison sentences are returning to the streets, reviving the gangs.

"We're no longer dealing with teen-agers," Pleines says. "We're dealing with adult criminals."

Gang members, he says, who served time, "were learning from other people in the prison community."

Now, he says, "they're more sophisticated and streetwise. They have criminal expertise. They know how to avoid some of the pitfalls that got them there the first time."

The result, Pleines says, is that the gangs are not operating as they did in the 1960s, when shootings were frequent and members were busy siphoning off federal funds for community programs and extorting legitimate businessmen.

"Today, they're extorting from people in illegal criminal activities — drug dealers, gamblers, prostitutes," Pleines says. "If you're involved in illegal activities, you can't say (to police), 'I'm a gambler, they're extorting money from me.'"

By doing this, he says, "they're taking the heat away from themselves."

But even though gangs are preying on the illegitimate operators, police say the black community is again a victim because the leaders are trying to attract black youths.

The recruitment often is aimed at younger kids, particularly in public housing developments, says Renault Robinson, head of the Afro-American Police League.

"You've got such a large concentration of youths in the area," he says, "it makes it easier to find kids they can terrorize."

And, says Perkins, "young people need to belong to something. They need a sense of pride and self-esteem. When other institutions fail, the gang will fill those needs."

When you live in public housing, he adds, "you're there all day. You have nowhere to go. And you don't have any money."

John McDermott, publisher of the Chicago Reporter, a publication focusing on racial issues, says the economy also may be contributing.

"The high school dropout rate is enormous," he says. "The number of jobs for those needs."

Studs Terkel Listens To How America Was, How It Is Now

By DAVID SMOTHERS
UPI Senior Editor

CHICAGO (UPI) — "I don't believe Will Rogers for a moment," the professional people-liker said. "When he said he never met a man he didn't like he showed he didn't have much taste in people."

Studs Terkel was taking a dispassionate look at his stock in trade.

Even if he ever met a man he did not like, as he says, he probably never met one he did not want to talk to.

Terkel is a 68-year-old people enthusiast, trained as a University of Chicago law school graduate, soap opera gangster and jazz disc jockey.

As such, he came to modest local repute. As a people listener he became a best-selling author, even though he did not write more than a small percent of that which appears under his name.

All he does is wander about Chicago, and about the country and the world, grabbing hold of people and getting them to spill their guts.

He is better at it than almost anybody. With his ready recorder, he has taped thousands of interviews, hacked, edited and discarded them, and produced what amounts to a free association account of what America is and was.

The first time he was asked to do it he said, "You're out of your mind." That was around 1965, when Andre Schiffler, publisher of Pantheon books in New York, called to suggest he do a bunch of interviews about, as Terkel recalls, "a village in America, like Chicago."

Terkel went out and talked to people and delivered "Division Street: America."

Then Schiffler thought it would be a good idea to talk to someone who had made it through the depression of the 1930s.

Terkel told him "you're out of your mind" and delivered "Hard Times."

He apparently forgot to mention Schiffler's mind when the publisher suggested books on how people felt about their jobs and their dreams. The results: "Working" and "American Dreams, Lost and Found."

All did well, critically and financially.

Along the way, Terkel came up with "Talking To Myself," a rather chaotic account of his own life and times. That, outside of introductions, was about all he wrote in the books. The rest was talk — other people's talk.

The talk books run to 60 or more than 100 published interviews each. They are the pick of up to 300 interviews Terkel may have conducted.

Only two or three out of four of these pan out for publication. Those chosen are edited until Terkel feels he has "the gold." Each interview lasts an hour to an hour and a half. Terkel tries to limit himself to just two a day.

"My technique is that I have no technique," Terkel said in an interview. He was sitting in the offices of WFMT, a Chicago classical music station which also airs Studs Terkel.

"I'm interested in the person, I look for certain kinds of people. There are certain people who have a way of talking. You find them everywhere, in small towns and big city neighborhoods there is someone who is on that block."

"He is not the clergyman or the high school principal, but somebody on that block has a way of thinking that reflects the way all the others really feel. There's no

STUDS TERKEL has taped thousands of interviews to produce what amounts to a free association account of what America is and was. Terkel is a grad of the Univ. of Chicago law school and was a soap opera gangster and jazz disc jockey. (UPI Photo) one way of finding them.

"Sometimes someone tells me about them. Sometimes I run into them by accident. I work on hunches, phrases, the way someone talks. Some of them don't work out all the time but my batting average is pretty good."

"In a way you seduce or induce people into talking, inviting them to give you their trust. I think people want to talk about their lives if they feel you're interested. They've got to believe you're a guy just like they are and that you're going to listen to them and respect them."

"Now if I shove a microphone in front of them and say 'Are you for or against busin?' what the hell does that mean? I want to know how come they grew to feel this way and how they really feel."

He is a small, driving, tousled, ingratiating, explosive, gesticulating, laughing, somber, insistent, idealistic, sardonic, cultivated and Chicago street-smart package of volubility.

He knows his job is to get people to give him — Studs Terkel, the soap opera refugee, survivor of McCarthyism, lifelong comrade of rebels, dissenters and general free-thinkers — their complete trust.

The wonder is that most of the time he appears to pull it off. He does it largely because he comes across as intensely, genuinely interested in finding out about people.

He is not altogether naive, however.

"There are a lot of people I don't like," he said. "I don't like Henry Kissinger. I imagine I would dislike him intensely if I met him."

"But even people I don't like I want to interview them. I want to get that person out. Generally speaking I have faith. If not, there's no point in going on. 'I'm not saying people are beautiful and decent. People are both. In each of us there's a saint and a devil. I just want to talk naturally to them, as somebody who would want to be a friend.'"

"I went to the University of Chicago Law School and forgot everything I learned. Then I was an actor in soap opera, a gangster, on Ma and Pa Perkins and Betty and Bob."

"I was always getting killed. Even worse, getting killed meant I lost my job."

"In Betty and Bob I was threatening the mother of Betty who was played by an elegant, beautiful character actress named Edie Davis. And now I discover the Edie Davis I knew was the mother of the woman who is now Nancy Davis Reagan."

"I watched the election returns and thought of Betty and Bob and said to myself, 'It's hard to tell where soap opera leaves off and life begins.'"

If there is one thing in the exuberant life of Studs Terkel which he might regret, it would be that he was not born in Chicago.

The fact is, he saw birth on May 16, 1912, on Manhattan Island and did not get to Chicago until he stepped off the train at the LaSalle Street Station when he was 8.

Since then, he has done his earnest best to make up for the mischance of his birthplace. During his 60 years in Chicago, he has endeavored to fashion himself as its most devoted son outside the late Richard J. Daley. He practically revels in the city and "wouldn't dream of living anywhere else."

Studs is not his name, of course. But it is a product of Chicago devotion.

At college, Terkel was so engrossed with James Farrell's "Studs Lonigan" trilogy about the South Side Irish of Chicago that he carried the book everywhere. Accordingly, people started calling him Studs. His real name is Louis (pronounced Louie).

He grew up in a rooming house and later in a men's hotel, both run by his mother. In the hotel lobby, he listened to the unfettered talk of Wobblies, (early radical union men) and Scissorsvilles ("guys who always spoke up for the boss").

"It was free and open and wild discussion of which we have so little today," Terkel said. He found it "a kind of metaphor for our country."

After university, Terkel put his law degree in his pocket and never used it. A taste for melodrama led him to the soap operas and, briefly, to a network television show of the '50s called "Studs' Place."
