Will Discuss Valuation Complaints

(This is the second of a two-part series on the controversial property tax revaluation recently done in Pitt County.)

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Brent Weisner, supervisor for the W. P. Ferriss Co., which is conducting the Pitt property revaluation, said his employees have been, "staying pretty busy," handling questions and complaints since notices of the new property values were sent to most property owners earlier this month. However, he added that the number of complaints is, "about what we expected...five to six percent of the people."

According to Weisner, "the biggest thing is the argument of how much the increase was from last time. We're interested in market value...what we think the property is worth today."

"Some areas in the county have increased more than others. Some neighborhoods went up more than others," he said, citing, "the old neighborhoods close to the college (East Carolina University)...property in areas that are growing, like areas around Lynndale, Brook Valley, the hospital area...acreage in close to town where the highest and best use is not farm land but for development."

If owners feel the value placed on their property is too high — or too low — what recourse do they have?

According to Hardee, owners may request an informal meeting with Ferriss representatives by calling 752-0933.

"Make an appointment, don't just walk in," Weisner emphasized, adding that, "people should bring pertinent facts about the property with them. We'll discuss it...reduce it...compromise."

"We want people to leave understanding that that's the way it is, or that we'll recheck it."

There are errors, he noted, which will be corrected when they are found.

Most owners, especially of rural land, are, "shocked, but know the value is here," according to Weisner.

If owners are not satisfied after the informal hearings with Ferriss' employees, Hardee explained that a formal hearing may be requested before the Board of Equalization and Review. Those hearings, Hardee said, will begin in April and, "run as long as necessary...possibly four to six weeks."

If owners are still not satisfied, Hardee said, they may appeal to the State Property Tax Commission.

How will revaluation, particularly the increase in property values, affect a person's tax bill?

An individual's tax bill is figured by multiplying the tax rate — say $1 — per $100 valuation, by the property value in hundreds of dollars. Thus, if a person owned property worth $50,000, his bill would be $500 ($50,000 divided by $100) multiplied by $1, or $500.

If the value of the property is increased, and the tax rate were to remain the same, the amount of tax would go up.

However, Hardee emphasized, "in a normal revaluation, the tax rate does drop...it's adjusted downward," because a smaller rate applied to more value would yield the same amount of money.

"Commissioners don't consider the tax rate until the amount of money needed to run the county, and the tax base — what they have to draw from — is established," Hardee explained. So the tax rate that will be applied to the new revaluation won't be set until July.

But County Manager Reginald Gray cited some figures that might be used for comparison.

He noted that the budget for fiscal year 1979-80 — which ended June 30 last year — was figured on a total property valuation of $1.06 billion, including $414,598,086 in personal property value, $805,772,299 in real property, and $46,807,524 in public utility value. The tax rate was 95 cents per $100 valuation, while the tax levy — the amount of money the 95 cents rate was expected to raise — totaled $10.14 million.

This year, the 1980-1981 fiscal year which ends June 30, commissioners set a $1.03 tax rate on a total property value of $1.12 billion ($438,154,439 in personal property, $636,882,011 in real property and $46,076,708 in public utility value), for a tax levy of $11.59 million.

Assuming the personal property value and the value of property held by public utilities remain the same for the 1981-1982 fiscal year, which begins July 1, and assuming the value of real property — because of the revaluation —

Returnees' Day Of Rest

By BARRY SCHWEID

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP)

— The liberated hostages awoke on U.S. soil today for the first time in 14½ months and their sympathetic government gave them what they wanted most — privacy.

Privacy to become reacquainted with children grown a precious year older, privacy to re-establish contact with spouses alone for those many nights, privacy to reflect on picking up their lives.

Today was set aside for a continuation of the reunion with no intrusion from outside.

The hostage group was whisked away to a retreat at the U.S. Military Academy shortly after they landed Sunday, but not so swiftly that they could miss a whiff of what awaits them in coming days — an outpouring of emotion not experienced since the prisoners of war came home from North Vietnam in 1973.

"It was just so damned nice that everyone was together," said a beaming Steve Adams, manager of the Hotel Thayer where the former hostages and their families spent their first night together since their ordeal began a world away.

mediately for Johnstown, Pa., to see his mother, Anna, 69, who was taken to a hospital coronary unit after greeting him on the telephone Wednesday.

After a night of gourmet meals and quiet reunions with their families — some watched the Super Bowl while the hotel showed the movie '101 Dalmations' for the children — the guests started stirring about the hotel at dawn today.

Some went jogging.

John E. Graves, 53, of Reston, Va., wearing jogging shorts and a T-shirt, went for a morning run in a cordoned-off security area with his wife, Bonnie. Asked how he feels, Graves replied, "Great."

Asked how the others are faring, he replied, "Some are good. Some are not."

Gregory A. Persinger, 23, of Seaford, Del., and Steven W. Kirtley, 22, of Little Rock, Ark., didn't want to talk. When two reporters tried to run alongside, the two looked at each other, nodded, and sped away.

Paul Needham, 30, of Bellevue, Neb., was the first out jogging. He also said he felt "great."

Virgil Sickmann of Krakow, Mo., father of Marine Sgt. Rodney V. "Rocky" Sickmann, 23, wandered down the driveway to a large group of reporters behind a barricade. He said that Rocky embraced him as he got off the airplane and said:

"Thank God, Dad."

"He is bouncing back to the same old Rocky who left home a couple of years ago," the elder Sickmann said, "but he will need a lot of time, I think, I can speak for all the boys, and they will need a lot of time."

The only hostage with no family present is Clair Barnes, 35, of Falls Church, Va., a bachelor and state department communications specialist who had been in Iran only five days at the time of the takeover. Because his mother is ill in San Diego, the only person who met him was a friend from the state department.

The first formal ceremony for the group will come Tuesday at the White House, where they will be joined by the families of the eight servicemen killed during an abortive rescue attempt in April.

Bruce L. Laingen, 57, of Bethesda, Md., the charge d'affaires and top U.S. diplomats in Iran when the embassy was seized, will speak on behalf of the hostages.

After dinner Sunday, Ernest Cook of Memphis, Tenn., father of former hostage Donald Cooke, 25, wandered outside into the sub-freezing night, wearing the new fur-hooded jacket his son had been issued.

He said families were introducing their hostage-kin to each other. It was mostly small talk, he said: "This is so-and-so and that is such-and-such and we did this-and-that."

He said Donald is "doing fine." It seemed that the entire nation shared in the joy of the hostages, their wives, parents, children and sweethearts. Yellow ribbon became the national symbol for the day. Yellow was everywhere: on the lapels of the families, on mailboxes, wrapped around airport towers. Yellow ribbon flew from the six buses that carried the entourage from airport to hotel. Yellow ribbon adorned the hair of grade school girls and their older sisters.

WELCOME! — Waving American flags and welcome signs a huge crowd greeted the lead bus carrying freed American hostages and their families as the convoy reached the main gate of the U.S. Military Academy in West Point. (AP Laserphoto)

Thursday To Be Day Of Thanks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, declaring the former hostages freed from Iran have shown that "the spirit of our country can never be broken," signed a resolution today designating Thursday a day of Thanksgiving in their honor.

The resolution, the president said, "salutes the unity of the nation when we are confronted with threats to our freedom."

"It recognizes the principle of public service which 53 men and women fulfilled in the highest tradition of their calling," Reagan said. "It recognizes the devotion and bravery of professional soldiers, the memories of those eight men in the long line who have given everything to preserve everything."

"It reminds us that greater glory has no man than he lays down his life for another," the president said.

Reagan signed the resolution at his desk in the Oval

Office, appearing to read his comments from a typewritten paper on the desk.

At one point, he got his words mixed up, stating: "This resolution pays strength to the tribute of America."

With all the hoopla usually reserved for visiting heads of state, Reagan will salute the hostages with a ceremony Tuesday on the South Lawn of the White House and a reception in the East Room.

The former hostages and their families, shielded from the public and the press, were reunited Sunday and went into seclusion at the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y. Today was to be a private day for them.

As the freed hostages' plane flew over the Atlantic toward home Sunday, Reagan opened the second week of his administration by assembling his relatives at the White House for a pep talk and send-off to New York.

Iran's Parliament Hears Details Of Hostage Deal

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's prime minister today gave the Iranian Parliament "a detailed and comprehensive report on the solution" of the U.S. hostage issue, Tehran radio said, but it did not broadcast any details of his report. Deputies were said to have hailed the outcome as a victory for Iran.

The parliament, meanwhile, endorsed Iran's boycott of the Islamic summit conference under way in Saudi Arabia and urged the attending heads of state to denounce Iraqi President Saddam Hussein as an "aggressor," the radio said in a broadcast monitored here.

Moslem leaders tried to persuade Iran to attend the summit, where an attempt would be made to bring an end to the 4-month-old Iran-Iraq war, but Iran rejected the overtures on the grounds that Hussein would be there.

Deputies thanked the government for its handling of the 444-day standoff with the United States, according to another broadcast.

The 52 Americans taken captive by Iranian militants Nov. 4, 1979, were freed last week after the signing of a complex financial settlement by the United States and Iran, as mediated by an Algerian delegation. They returned to the United States on Sunday after four and a half days of "decompression" in a U.S. military hospital in Wiesbaden, West Germany.

One Majlis deputy, Ali Mohammad Basharat-Jahromi, told the assembly "We are very grateful to the government for implementing the Majlis decisions and once again rubbing America's nose in the dirt."

"As the Imam (leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini) has said, our struggle against the great Satan has not ended and this struggle is not only against America but against Russia too. We will fight global oppression to the end," he was quoted as saying.

"CALL THEIR HAND"

My husband and I spent about two years building a house for rental purposes and had temporary electric service from Greenville Utilities, paying less than $10 a month all that time. But the first month we acquired permanent service, the bill was $40-plus. We worked and worked to get this straight and to have $30-some credited to our bill. Now, this month, knowing that it's been too cold to do the painting there we need to do before we rent the house out, so not even one light has been turned on, we get a $50-plus bill. I know it's, again, just an estimated bill, and that with some effort, we'll get it straight, but I'd like to make this point to the public: When a utility bill doesn't make sense, question it and question it assertively. We'd be nearly $80 poorer if we had not called their hand before and don't this time. Mrs. V. M.

Family Escapes Burning House

A Pitt County couple and their two-month-old son narrowly escaped injury when their two-story house in the Camelot subdivision caught fire this morning.

Glenn Warren, his wife Linda and their son Eric were preparing to get out of bed shortly before 8 a.m. when an unusual sound was heard.

Warren said, "Linda woke me and wanted to know what the crackling noise was. I went to see and saw the entire back of the house in flames."

"Linda wanted to call the fire department, but I said let's get out. I had just enough time to grab my pants and car keys," Warren added.

Warren described the exit from the burning house. "It was all black — jet black — we couldn't see anything. We crawled out on our hands and knees. I just couldn't believe how black the smoke was."

Warren said his family was not injured leaving the house.

Fire units from Eastern Pines were first to arrive on the scene and found the rear portion of the wood frame house engulfed in flames.

Firemen immediately summoned extra help from Winterville, Simpson, and Station House.

Neighbors helped Warren move some of his belongings (Please turn to Page 8)

Saturday's Cryptokuip — PATIENT WOODWORKER PROCESSED TRICK GEWGAW ON POWER SAW.
Today's Cryptokuip clue: Q equals O

The Cryptokuip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

New Problem For Grumman's Buses

BETHPAGE, N.Y. (AP) — Grumman Corp.'s Flexible buses, already yanked from service in several cities because of cracks in undercarriages, have another "potential safety problem" that could make them difficult to control, the company says.

Spokesman Sandy Jones said 27 local and regional transit systems which operate the buses have been notified that metal fatigue had caused cracks in several buses in a part of the undercarriage called the "trunion."

The trunion controls the lateral movement of the rear wheels.

"If the trunion should break, the bus could be difficult to control," the company said in a statement.

Jones said the company had not heard of any accidents connected with the cracks. He said Grumman would repair any defective trunions.

The 27 localities notified were Atlanta; New York; Hartford and New Haven, Conn.; Roanoke and Norfolk, Va.; Chicago, Decatur and Champaign-Urbana, Ill.; Louisville, Ky. and Honolulu.

Also, Tacoma, Wash.; Los Angeles, Santa Monica, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, Orange County and Monterey, Calif.; Kansas City, Kan.; Fargo, N.D.; Albuquerque, N.M.; Grand Rapids and Ann Arbor, Mich.; Lincoln, Neb.; Raleigh, N.C., and Dallas and Houston.

Cracks in the A-frame portion of the undercarriage led New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and other cities to take some Flixibles out of service for repairs last month.

Effort Inadequate In Family Planning

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina spent more than $9 million during the past year for family planning services to public assistance recipients but a state official says the effort is not adequate.

"I realize that this sounds like a lot of money and it is, but when you realize that today almost one out of five babies are born out of wedlock across the state and that more children are being reported as being abused or neglected by their parents, we are still not making an adequate effort to see that unwanted children are not conceived in the first place," Human Resources Secretary Sarah T. Morrow said Sunday.

She said the state does not know how many people received the services because they were served by different local agencies with federal funds from four programs.

The largest number of recipients — about 120,000 — received family planning services costing about $6.8 million from local health departments.

She said local health departments are seeing an increase in the number of teen-agers seeking family planning services.

"I feel that the number of teen-agers becoming pregnant and having babies would even be greater today if the North Carolina General Assembly had not enacted legislation in 1977 that gives minors the right to receive family planning services," she said.

Other officers elected at the membership meeting are: Ted Hahn, vice chairman; and Louis Stanfield, treasurer.

Board of directors elected by the membership are as follows: Horace Tripp, Ross Persinger, Marvin Baldree, Diane Hill, Don Russell, Bobby McLawhorn, and Gratz Norcott.

Cars Collided Here Saturday

An estimated $3,000 damage resulted from an 11:40 p.m. collision here Saturday at the intersection of Charles Street and Greenville Boulevard.

Officers identified the drivers of the cars involved as Danny Nuckles Moore of 115 Cherrywood Dr. and Ann Marie Dorffeld of New Bern.

Damage was estimated at $1,000 to the Moore car and $2,000 to the Dorffeld vehicle by investigators, who charged Moore with reckless operation and hit and run driving.

Utilities Board Meets Tuesday

The Board of Commissioners of the Greenville Utilities Commission will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the board room of the Utilities Building at the intersection of Fifth and Washington Streets.

Included on the agenda is the consideration of interim electric rates to track VEPCO increases, consideration of a proposal to extend the Comprehensive Community Energy Management Program, and consideration of the level of service to be provided by the Gas Department.

Legislature At A Snail's Pace

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The 1981 General Assembly is still moving at a snail's pace as it enters its third week, but outside the languid sessions legislators have been gripped with one concern.

That is, what to do about a gasoline tax increase.

"It's just got this whole place tied up," says Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas, D-Hendersonville. "It's all I hear anybody talk about."

That talk intensified during the past week with a series of events that even the highway program's biggest legislative boosters acknowledge made passage of a higher tax more difficult.

First, one of the Legislature's own staff budget analysts told House and Senate Finance committees that even if a higher tax on gasoline is passed, dropping gasoline sales mean it may only postpone, not solve the problem.

Then a Republican, Sen. Gilbert Lee Boger of Mocksville, introduced legislation calling for a special committee to investigate the Transportation Department. It was a move given little chance of gaining favor in the heavily Democratic Legislature, but one that increased the discomfort of legislators pondering a higher gas tax while the state's highway bid-rigging case is in the headlines.

And there was the latest turn in that scandal, the suspension of a Transportation Department employee who was in charge of estimates the state uses as a yardstick to judge private company bids on road projects.

After months of assertions by top state officials that no evidence had yet been found connecting any department employee, the suspension gave the scandal fresh relevance for any gas-tax considerations.

"It's bound to hurt. It hurts citizen confidence in the whole program," said Gary Pearce, press secretary for Gov. Jim Hunt. Hunt hasn't said yet whether he will recommend a higher gasoline tax, but has said he will recommend some solution for Transportation's financial troubles this spring.

No charges have been filed against the suspended employee, J. Preston Allen, but even Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw ac-knowledgeed it opens the question of whether other employees may be implicated.

"We were told at every board meeting since this has been going on that there was no involvement," said Sen. James Garrison, D-Albemarle, a member of the state Board of Transportation.

"It was probably the biggest shock that's occurred to him," he said of Hunt. "I guess he was like me, he had an awful lot of confidence in the people over there."

Rep. Dave Bumgardner, D-Belmont, chairman of the House Transportation Committee and member of the state Board of Transportation, says the suspension comes as an embarrassment to the administration.

"I think it is," he said. "I think the governor was basing his (previous) statements on what the United States Justice (Department) investigators and our own investigators were telling us."

While opposition to the gas tax is easy to find in the Legislature, most lawmakers seem to be taking the cue from Hunt and waiting before taking a public position.

One example is Bumgardner. If there's a likely proponent of a gas tax hike it would seem to be him.

But sitting last week in his legislative office, drinking coffee from a cup with the DOT symbol on it and a "Roads Scholar" certificate signed by Bradshaw hanging on a wall, Bumgardner said he has a "totally open mind" on whether a higher gas tax is the correct solution.

The public will recognize more money must be found to keep up road maintenance and improvements, Bumgardner said. And he estimates there's a 60 percent chance this Legislature will pass some kind of higher gas tax. But it may be as little as a one or two cent per gallon hike, and the latest highway scandal complicates even that, he said.

"This is unfortunate," he said, "because the bid-rigging scandal that has developed with contractors ... is going to make the General Assembly and the public less willing to do something until this is cleared up."

South Korea Promotes Planned Visit To U.S.

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer
SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Big Korean and American flags, red, white and blue bunting and banners went up in this South Korean capital today to herald President Chun Doo-hwan's visit to the United States later this week.

Signs on the gate in front of the capitol, on the city hall and on arches and crosswalks said "Hwan Song," the Korean version of bon voyage.

Chun leaves for the United States on Wednesday and is scheduled to meet President Reagan in Washington a week from today. The decorations are part of an intensive government campaign to portray the trip as the beginning of a new era in Korean-U.S. relations.

Since the invitation from Washington was announced last week, Chun has taken several steps last week to clear the air between the two countries.

Chief among these was his commutation of the death sentence imposed by a military court against Kim Dae-jung, South Korea's leading dissident. The death sentence, which drew heavy criticism from the United States, was handed down after Kim was convicted of sedition by trying to organize a rebellion to overthrow the military regime last year.

Both the Reagan and Carter administrations made known their opposition to the death sentence, and word that it was commuted to life imprisonment was welcomed in Washington.

On Saturday, Chun ended 15 months of martial law imposed after the assassination of President Park Chung-hee in October 1979. Chun, a former army general, came to power in a palace coup that followed the assassination.

Much has been made here of the timing of his U.S. visit, which comes early in the new Reagan administration and makes Chun one of the first foreign leaders to meet with the new president.

While the meeting will be largely ceremonial, South Korea expects some substantive results, including a firm commitment that there will be no further cuts in the 40,000 American troops based in South Korea as a hedge against invasion from the communist North.

Former President Carter had called for a review of the U.S. troop strength in South Korea this year, but Korean officials think Reagan will scrap that plan.

The lifting of martial law brought no immediate outward changes for the Korean people. It was seen as a move toward smoothing relations between Seoul and Washington, although plans for it were announced by Chun last fall, to provide a fair and free atmosphere for national elections, he said.

In addition to ending martial law, Chun set Feb. 11 for the election of 5,278 deputies to a presidential electoral college that will choose a president on Feb. 25. Only officially-sanctioned political rallies will be permitted, there will be restrictions on the distribution or display of campaign literature, and Chun, the Democratic Justice Party candidate, is expected to win.

Elections for a National Assembly are expected to be held about a month after the presidential elections.

Brooke Shields Makes Debut In High Fashion

ROME (AP) — The three-day Italian high fashion show closed in triumph this week with the runway debut of America's teen-age darling, actress Brooke Shields.

Miss Shields modeled only five of more than 100 spring and summer outfits in the Valentino collection Thursday. But her wholesome charm stole the limelight before a delighted star-studded audience in the designer's posh studio in downtown Rome.

The 15-year-old movie star stopped the show when she appeared in a see-through lace top matching a cocktail-hour midnight-blue wide taffeta bloomer, which she later confessed was her favorite of the ones she modeled.

"I guess it had the most of me in it," Miss Shields said coyly.

Miss Shields relied on youthful enthusiasm and sparkling green eyes rather than frills like heavy make-up or fancy hair-dos.

Her auburn hair combed loosely back, she drew animated applause when she walked down the runway for the first time in a pink linen baby girl sack dress.

Miss Shields' outfits became more sophisticated as the hour-long show continued. They culminated in an old rose taffeta flounced gown that captured her charm: not a girl anymore, but not yet a woman either.

Even without Brooke Shields, the Valentino show was a success. His outfits hide women's mysteries behind a veil of classic femininity. Highlights this year were pleated daytime suits in gray and white, and luxuriously feminine evening gowns — predominantly in red, black or white chiffon — with airy flounces and accordin pleats everywhere.

What trends came off the Roman runway for spring and summer of 1981? Skirts are definitely shorter, dwelling stubbornly around the knee or venturing slightly above it, and more tailored.

Masculine slacks are out. The designers prefer the softer cuts of the Far East or 18th century knickerbockers for chic daytime wear. Lace collars and inlays add femininity everywhere.

Of particular note are Galitzine's loose Indonesian pants cut at the knee, Andre Laug's Chanel dresses and suits softened by bits of lace, and Lancetti's ode to China in fantastic porcelain-colored fabrics tailored Mandarin-style.

Shoulders are narrower and waistlines lower in all the collections. The 1950s sack dress makes a comeback, while shoes are either high-heeled Channels or soft ballerinas.

Mario Goracci, chief of Italy's National High Fashion Institute, predicted high fashion might make a comeback this year after several rough seasons financially.

"The death knell has been ringing for years, but the funeral never comes," Goracci said. "Women are fed up with being typecast in 50 different alternatives, none of them convincing. They want to dress well and look well. This is where we come in."

High fashion has become the albatross of the industry because few can pay the minimum of $10,000 an evening gown charged by Valentino to cover the cost of quality fabrics and skilled labor.

Ready-to-wear fashions and accessories, however, are one of Italy's biggest foreign exchange earners.

Placing Cake in Oven

Before heating the oven, adjust the rack so that it is positioned slightly lower than the center of the oven. When only one pan is used, center it on the rack. When two pans are used, place both on the rack in a staggered manner. Be sure that the pans do not touch each other or the oven wall. Proper pan placement allows the heat in the oven to circulate properly giving the best baking results.

With Examples Like These, We Can Overcome

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: In a recent column, I shared an inspirational item sent by Herman Endler, who, at age 40, suffered a stroke that left him totally disabled. He wrote:

"I wasn't able to get out of bed, but by the grace of God and a surgeon's skill, I made it. At times I was so despondent, I prayed it would all end. Then a friend gave me the enclosed inspirational piece, which I must have read 1,000 times. I had moments when my vision clouded, and I thought, 'This is it; this is the end.' Then I'd read that message again, and it pulled me through."

"Abby, some of the greatest men and women of our times have been saddled with disabilities and adversities but have managed to overcome them."

"Perhaps somewhere there is someone who is at the end of his or her rope and needs encouragement. Pass this along. It may save a life. It saved mine."

A portion of the inspirational piece:

"Cripple him, and you have a Sir Walter Scott."

"Lock him in a prison cell, and you have a John Bunyan."

"Bury him in the snows of Valley Forge, and you have a George Washington."

"Raise him in abject poverty, and you have an Abraham Lincoln."

"Subject him to bitter religious prejudice, and you have a Disraeli."

The response to that column was overwhelming. A distinguished publisher, philanthropist and former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain wrote:

"Dear Abby: Your column, 'From Adversity, Many Find Strength,' is indeed a masterpiece. I am adding it to my personal collection of 'reminders.'"

"There are two great sources of inspiration in life, enthusiasm and tragedy, and I have been boxed in by both. But having been boxed in by both, I also recognize that perseverance is the key to escape and satisfaction. Sincerely, Walter Annenberg."

Hundreds of readers submitted additional names for the list of those who had succeeded against the odds. Some contributions follow:

Spit on him, humiliate him, then crucify him and he forgives you, and you have Jesus Christ.

Strike him down with infantile paralysis, and he becomes a Franklin D. Roosevelt, the only president of the U.S. to be elected to four terms.

When he is a lad of 8, burn him so severely in a schoolhouse fire that the doctors say he will never walk again, and you have a Glenn Cunningham, who set the world's record in 1934 for running a mile in 4 minutes and 6.7 seconds.

Deafen a genius composer who continues to compose some of the world's most beautiful music, and you have a Ludwig van Beethoven.

Drag him, more dead than alive, out of a rice paddy in Vietnam, and you have a Rocky Bleier, that beautiful running back with the Pittsburgh Steelers.

Have him or her born black in a society filled with racial discrimination, and you have a Booker T. Washington, Harriet Tubman, Marion Anderson, George Washington Carver or Martin Luther King Jr.

Make him the first child to survive in a poor Italian family of 18 children, and you have an Enrico Caruso.

Amputate the arm and leg of an aspiring young actor, and you have a James Stacey.

Have him born of parents who survived a Nazi concentration camp, paralyze him from the waist down when he is 4, and you have the incomparable concert violinist, Itzhak Perlman.

Call a slow learner "retarded" and write him off as ineducable, and you have an Albert Einstein.

See tomorrow's column for others who have succeeded against the odds.

SKI SWEATERS. . . can be done in double crochet for sizes 34 through 46.

Pat's Pointers

By Pat Trexler

Scandinavian crochet is sure to be a smash hit on the '81 sweater scene. These circular yoked pullovers are great for skiing, golfing, yachting — almost any outdoor activity.

The sweaters are worked throughout with double crochet using light, sports-weight yarn in three colors. Directions are written for sizes 34 through 46. The size denotes the finished chest measurements.

To obtain directions for making the Scandinavian Crochet Pullovers, send your request for Leaflet No. 7819 with $1.00 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler, "The Daily Reflector," P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582.

Or you may order Kit No. 7819, containing Brunswick Fore 'n Aft Acrylic Sport Yarn and the instructions by sending check or money order to Pat Trexler at the same address. Prices (including shipping charges) are: $19 for size 34; $21 for size 36; $25 for size 38; $27 for sizes 40 and 42; $29 for size 44; $32 for size 46. Please specify your choice of charcoal, grey, white; camel, brown, ecru; sea green, periwinkle blue, white; or blue heather tones.

If you can work a simple double crochet stitch, chances are you will have no problems with Scandinavian crochet, also known as tapestry crochet. You will only need to learn two techniques involving changing and carrying colors.

Whenever you are changing colors, work the last step of the previous stitch with the new color. Let's say that you are working a pattern row alternating three blue stitches with three white stitches with three white stitches ches. To do this properly, work two double crochets completely in blue. In the third double crochet, yarnover and draw through a loop of blue, giving you three loops on hook (step one). Now, with blue, yarnover and draw through two loops (step two). Next, drop the blue yarn and pull a loop of the white yarn through the two remaining loops on the hook (step three). You would then work the next two double crochets and the first two steps of the third with white yarn, changing to blue in the third step of the third double crochet as before.

Color changes in single, half-double and treble crochet are made in the same manner, always changing to the new color in the final step of a stitch.

When you are working with two colors on a single row, there are a variety of ways to carry the colors when they are not being used. When you are working double crochet in rounds (the method used for the ski sweaters featured today), use the following

Roads A Somber Picture

A somber picture was painted by George Harper, N. C. Board of Transportation member, and C. W. Snell, Division 2 highway engineer.

Speaking to the Pitt County commissioners, the two officials cited a 20 percent inflation rate for road construction materials.

Since 1967, when gas taxes were last raised, asphalt prices increased from $8.36 per ton to $28.96 per ton. A cubic yard of concrete rose from $74 to $242.

Just keeping up the roads we now have is a monumental task. There are 1,045 miles of roads in Pitt County — 785 paved and 260 unpaved. Around 200 miles of the paved roads need resurfacing, and 144 miles of primary highways and 77 miles of secondary roads need widening.

Harper said the U. S. 264 throughway from Wilson to Greenville was "onstream". However, he said, "We're in a money pinch and we have to do the best we can."

It was noted that the gas tax, set at 9.5 cents per gallon in 1968, was about 25 percent of the cost of a gallon of gas. Now because of the soaring cost of gasoline the tax is less than 8 percent of the cost.

Meantime there are projections out which show that North Carolina will still be heavily dependent on the automobile at the end of this century. We are a spread out, semi-rural state without large population centers.

No one can be blamed at frowning at any new taxes these days, but it doesn't take an expert to see that we are falling badly behind in funds for new highway construction, and even for maintaining the roads we have. Nothing is going to save us from a crumbling highway system but ourselves.

The Time To Bail Out?

Several weeks ago, the stock market went into a panic when a man in Florida, who runs a private service for investors, called up 3,000 of his clients and told them to sell all their stock. The next morning, Wall Street was in a panic and everyone was selling. Apparently, thousands of sane, educated people, who handle billions of dollars of investments, got caught up in the selling fever at the same time. And people all over America started wondering, if one man could make so many bulls into bears overnight, whether the stock market was a safe investment.

Also, if one man could affect the stock market with one telephone call, what about the other markets — particularly the real estate market, which everyone says is overinflated?

I have this nightmare that early one morning I am going

My wife is on the ladder, painting the ceiling. "Hurry up," I tell her, "before it's too late."

"Where are we going to live if we sell the house?"

"Don't ask stupid questions. We've got to get rid of this place before the market collapses."

At five o'clock in the morning I'm driving the "For Sale" sign into the ground.

My neighbor Ewing hears me and comes out in his bathrobe. "What the hell are you doing?"

I say, "I'm only telling you this because I'm your friend. The real estate market is going to collapse as soon as the market opens this morning. I got it on the hot line from my broker, and he hasn't been wrong since I subscribed to his service."

to get a phone call from my real estate broker, Longworth, who says, "Sell your house right away. The price is going to tumble."

"But you told me two days ago it was going to go up!"

"Don't ask questions. I've been studying the classified ads and it's time to bail out."

I wake up my wife and say, "We have to sell the house."

"When?" she wants to know.

"Right now. I just got a call from Longworth and he says we have to sell immediately, or we'll lose our shirts. I'll go down into the basement and make a 'For Sale' sign. You clean up the house and re-paint the kitchen."

"At four o'clock in the morning?"

"We have to move fast before other people in the neighborhood are tipped off."

I put on my bathrobe, and go down to the cellar and nail a piece of plywood onto a stake, and paint "For Sale" in large black letters.

Joys Diluted By Choices

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The prospect of Reaganite policy carried out by non-Reaganite officials in the new administration was dramatized by the contrast between the inaugural address and a backstage battle over who will be the nation's civil service chief. Ronald Reagan's faithful followers, in Washington inaugural week to watch six years of dreams and work become reality, were overjoyed by an uncompromising address that committed the new president to radical change. But their joy was diluted by the apparent failure of one of their own, Dr. Donald J. Devine, to become director of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), successor to the old Civil Service Commission, certainly will not set the administration's philosophical course. Yet, continuing struggle behind the scenes over whether Reaganite Devine will be there represents the last sounding of this transition protest: Those who so clearly share Reagan's ideology have been systematically excluded from much of his administration. That Reagan himself since the election has remained faithful to his political movement is not questioned by his own followers. Rather, it is political opponents and news commentators from the first hour of his election victory who have perceived that Reagan was about to abandon his ideology now that power beckoned and was embracing "pragmatism."

It is mostly wishful thinking. Breakfasting with reporters Jan. 16, presidential counselor Edwin Meese in answers to questions laid down a general pattern of no retreat on all issues. That previewed Reagan's inaugural address four days later when he declared "there will be no compromise."

Seeming policy retreats during the transition were either false alarms or misunderstandings. Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, who in his confirmation hearing suggested a six-month delay in the tax cut, during a Jan. 21 interview over ABC's "Good Morning America" changed his tune: "We're not talking about any delay." Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in his confirmation hearing seemed to be abandoning a 3 percent arms spending increase for NATO members. Confirmation hearings for his deputy secretary, Frank Carlucci, corrected the impression; Carlucci said 3 percent was only the "starting point."

Nevertheless, the Reagan political movement has been in declining spirits since Nov. 4 because ideology and political loyalty have not counted for much in appointments. Particularly intense was a long fight over a role in the administration for campaign defense adviser William Van Cleave, which ended inaugural weekend. Cut down from high expectations to a place on the National Security Council (NSC) staff because of what Reagan aides termed abrasiveness; Van Cleave decided to go back to the University of Southern California faculty. The appointment as deputy defense secretary of Carlucci, a non-ideological civil servant, instead of Van Cleave has triggered more complaints than have been publicly revealed. One meeting of the steering committee, the informal group of conservative Republican senators, was consumed by unhappiness about Carlucci (especially from newly-elected members). The most pained complaints have come from Reagan's regional political directors, who have looked askance at filling high office with non-political, non-ideological, non-Reaganite administrators. This is not merely the usual post-election grievance of the grass roots worker. Reagan's operatives are committed — often doctrinaire — conservatives. They fear their exclusion from office is preparation for dilution of policy, and the Devine case has become a symbol. Whereas Meese has privately cited lack of qualifications to justify rejecting Reagan's political operatives for office, that cannot be done with Don (Continued on Page 5)

THIS AFTERNOON

A Policy Of Rules

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — It is going to take concentrated action all the way from Raleigh to the local schools to the homes across the state before discipline is restored to the buses and classrooms.

That is obvious from the variety of activities now ongoing or building to tackle the nagging subject of student behavior, and the recurring evidence that a problem of major sorts awaits attention.

When the Goldsboro League of Women Voters sponsored a public discussion of the school transportation system the other night, discipline — on and off the bus — quickly emerged as the central issue.

"They can be loud and rowdy; they will sass you and curse you, and even attempt to hit you....My biggest problem is discipline," said Tony Harris, a city school bus driver.

Beth Brown, a county bus driver, echoed that sentiment: "Discipline on the bus is my main problem. The students stand up and shout out ... we have to turn it over to the principal because drivers are not allowed to discipline the students."

An Epidemic
Details were added as the session progressed: books tossed from moving vehicles, students "moonin'" out the windows, occasional fights, and so on.

Wayne County is not alone in this dilemma; nor is trouble isolated to the buses. Reports continue of extortion rackets, threats and vandalism, drug and alcohol abuse, classroom disruption in the school buildings themselves.

The problem is severe enough that the Governor's Crime Commission has been seriously exploring the link between this behavior crisis and juvenile delinquency.

BILL NOBLITT

and the role that schools must play in bringing things back under control.

Gov. Jim Hunt and leaders of the State Department of Public Instruction are attempting to design an in-school suspension program so that punishment can be handed out even while the student continues the important job of getting an education.

Early next month a North Carolina Conference on Delinquency Prevention involving the governor's office and a number of youth-serving agencies will be held in Raleigh.

Those closely involved are beginning to point at a central problem in all of this: social conditions are at the bottom of the dilemma, but there really isn't time to waste on such a slow-moving creature to adjust itself.

A couple of comments by

Elton Aycock, assistant superintendent of the Goldsboro schools, help to focus on the elements of that major change in society: drivers who tried to stop a fight have been threatened by parents; a driver who ordered unruly students to close the windows on the bus and parked it until they quieted down, was reported for child abuse; the worst lot is kindergarten through fourth grade youngsters.

Other Editors Say Cornbread Recall

(The Raleigh Times)

Even in an era of recalls, it is highly disturbing to cornbread lovers when the state has to issue a recall on aflatoxin-tainted cornmeal that could kill humans as it killed 55 Bladen County birds a few weeks ago.

Although the Food and Drug Protection Division of the Agriculture Department is doing its damndest to keep tainted cornmeal off the market, it cannot guarantee much protection until its weapons are sharpened through new legislation and more funding.

The need for legislative attention was underscored again recently by news that a Chowan County mill has been selling meal containing more than 90 times the allowed level of aflatoxin. It was the fifth batch of tainted meal turned up by Food and Drug Division during the past month.

Leonard F. Blanton, acting director of the division, says his department has greatly increased efforts to detect the bad meal. It has held workshops for the state's 49 mill operators, mailed letters encouraging them to carefully check corn purchases to be sure they are free of high levels of aflatoxin, and has made follow-up efforts to see that aflatoxin-tainted meal, once detected, has been removed from the shelves.

Blanton admits the cornbread-eating public is becoming apprehensive. He cited a case in which a diner at one restaurant looked at his fried chicken, and fearing it had been breaded with contaminated meal, sent it back to the kitchen. Mill operators, he said, report significant drops in meal sales.

Although corn growers — who last year lost $100 million due to aflatoxin — and mill operators have been urged to cooperate in reducing the dangers of contaminated meal, it is significant that it has been Blanton's department ... not farmers or millers ... that has detected the contaminated meal. That is one reason Blanton is putting on additional personnel to increase the frequency of spot checks of cornmeal on grocery shelves.

Abhorrent as government regulations are to farmers and millers, there seems no alternative to some form of forced certification of every batch of meal that leaves a mill. The public needs better protection against cornmeal that, consumed in fairly large quantities, could kill cornbread lovers. Leaving it to farmers and millers and an understaffed agency is dangerous.

Strength For Today

GOD'S NAME IN VAIN
"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."

Some people take God's name in vain flippantly. Others take the name of the Lord in vain fiercely. They curse their fellows sometimes in cold bitterness and at other times in hot anger. But who are you, brother, to pass condemnation on anybody? Count yourself lucky that the strong arm of God has not reached out and taken you vigorously by the shoulder long before this. "Forgive us ... as we forgive" is one of the petitions of the Lord's Prayer.

Still others take the name of the Lord in vain hypocritically. The people whose tongues drip piety and whose daily actions in dealing with their fellows are selfish and inconsiderate are people for whom the name of the Lord is unreal. The worst form of blasphemy is to follow the Lord in word and repudiate Him in action. — Elisha Douglass

Economic Debris Out Of Past

By JOHN CUNIFF

AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) — Looking forward to the springtime of the year, when the administration will be two months old and showing its first few blossoms, one sees also the ravages of winters past.

Which is to say that any new economic beginning, which every President offers, drags along economic debris that fouls the scenery and clogs the machinery. By this year's spring the burden should be obvious.

It will be a time when carmakers make perhaps their most intense sales effort ever, not just to move inventories from the lots but to remain solvent. For one, Chrysler, it is do or die or merge with another.

The problem, which includes General Motors and Ford to lesser degrees, and which concerns the economic fortunes of millions of Americans, is not of Reagan's making, but it is his to deal with, for good or bad.

He didn't create high interest rates, for instance, but when the big sales push comes, so also may come costlier financing. The ingredients already are in place, just waiting to be activated by demand.

The car companies received a painful lesson from those rates last fall: When interest rose into high double digits, as they did, people simply postponed buying cars. The industry is interest rate-sensitive.

Now add in this situation: The after-tax buying power of American factory workers declined 4.8 percent last year because of inflation. That situation isn't changing; workers continue to lose buying power.

Considering these problems — rising interest and shrinking buying power — will buyers bail out the automakers? And if they don't, will Reagan be able to step in to help, if only to save his own programs?

Spring is also home-buying time, but the latest government figures show neither housing prices nor mortgage rates falling. Those housing people who claim to know say they're getting ready for a dismal year.

The dual problems of these two basic industries, affecting hundreds of other industries, provokes the question: Can the President avoid a recession? Especially with energy and food prices also likely to rise?

No doubt the President Reagan needs no reminder of other calamities, natural and manmade, that seem to pile on when the economy is down. They hung over Carter like a gray cloud. Reagan will have them; some of the industrial Northeast, for example, is running out of water.

Such a list of problems and potential difficulties isn't meant to deflower the spring. It's purpose is to paint a landscape a bit more real and less colorful than the roseate pre-inauguration perspectives.

On that landscape is the likelihood of strong wage demands and even strikes (the coal miners have a March 27 deadline); resistance to cost-cutting (government payments to individuals, including Social Security, food stamps and medical care, surged from $45 billion in 1965 to $145 billion in 1980); and continuing, enormous federal budget deficits.

Perhaps the most formidable challenge may come from the impatience of people who will be asked to lower living standards while submitting to inflation, one of the main reasons why voters retired Jimmy Carter.

Wasn't Reagan supposed to have freed people from this economic trap?

That's what he said, but now in the dusky light of mid-winter it is easily perceived he can't free anyone from the economic shackles with the twist of a key. He'll have to file the chains away. It takes time.

Lives Lost In Tree-Felling

Martin County in has lost four if its citizens in the last year in tree-felling accidents. A number of persons have been injured by chainsaws or by incorrect lifting of wood.

According to Associate Area Extension Agent Jim Kea, although felling and cutting up trees is dangerous for the most experienced logger, common accidents can be avoided.

Kea cautions loggers to never cut alone. Most fatalities occur when one person attempts to do the work of two. A second person can always go for help or assist if an accident occurs.

When felling rees, always establish several clear escape routes. When the tree starts to fall, cut off the saw and move quickly away from the direction of the fall and at an angle to either side. Never stand or run straight back behind a tree. Fatalities commonly occur when trees fall the wrong way, feet become entangled or the tree splits and jumps backward.

Keep all spectators and equipment out of the reach of the tree. All spectators should devote full attention to the felling operation. All necessary conversation and running motors should be stopped. Fatalities often occur when a warning was not heard by the victim who was not watching the felling operation.

Be aware of limbs that may break loose with windy conditions or when a tree begins to fall. Hard hats are still necessary just in case.

Know the limitation of the equipment involved. This includes ropes, chains, saws and winches, as well as the people doing the work. Most accidents occur when cutters are tired or in a hurry to get through. Loosen up with stretching exercises before starting to avoid sore strains. Always lift with knees bent, using leg muscles rather than back muscles.

Finally, Kea cautions to always keep a firm footing when cutting and guard against kickback from the saw.

"Always think ahead," he added. "Take time for safety and read directions that go with your equipment."

Corn Meeting On February 2

A corn production meeting will be held February 2 from 1-3 p.m. at the American Legion Building in Greenville.

According to Roger Cobb, assistant agricultural extension agent, two specialists from N.C. State University will be on hand for the meeting. Dr. Gene Krenzer will speak on such topics as ways to reduce aflatoxin and yield limiting factors with irrigation and other topics. Dr. Bill Lewis will speak on weed control in corn.

A new weed problem, broadleaf signalgrass, will be discussed. This weed is becoming a problem in many counties. Refreshments will be served during the meeting.

All farmers, agri-business and people interested in corn production are welcome to attend.

CBC MEETING

The Citizens Bikeway Committee will meet Tuesday, Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m. in the conference room at city hall.

telling me," and rushes back into his house to make a "For Sale" sign. Apparently, he tells Sullivan, who lives next door, and Sullivan is soon out nailing a "For Sale" sign on his door. A few minutes later, Symington has one on his house, and so does Cafritz, Connolly, Seigel and Winston.

Word sweeps like a brushfire through the neighborhood. The Tower Apartments, the Westchester and the Colonnade also put up "For Sale" signs, and by the time the real estate markets open in the morning, everyone is standing in front of his house or apartment building, waiting to sell. As each hour passes, every homeowner keeps lowering his price. Houses that people wouldn't have sold for $200,000 are now going for $125,000. Then they drop to $90,000, $80,000, $70,000. But there are still no takers. Guggenheim, in desperation, offers to sell me his house for $50,000, completely furnished, but I offer to sell him mine for $40,000, and he says he'll take it.

In my nightmare I move into a Holiday Inn and get a call from Longworth, who says, "Well, was I right or was I wrong?"

"You couldn't have been more right. I've never seen the real estate market in this town take a nose dive like this. I managed to sell out at $40,000."

"The reason I'm calling," Longworth says, "is that I've just been studying the new indicators, and it's now time to buy real estate again."

I wake up my wife. "Get dressed. We have to go over and see Guggenheim about buying back our house."

"For how much?"

Devine, a political science professor at the University of Maryland. At least three other names have been floated in series for the OPM post against Devine, suggesting the search is for anybody-but-Devine. Reaganites point the accusing finger at acting White House counsel Peter McPherson, who in 1976 battled for Gerald R. Ford in Maryland while Devine led Reagan's forces. He successfully blocked Devine from the state Republican chairmanship in 1978, later telling a friend "Devine is too conservative." That Devine, Republican nominee for state controller in 1978, is now considered "too political" is traced to McPherson.

The treatment of Devine transformed what should have been a weekend of celebration into dark foreboding. Several key Republican state chairmen met with Meese the day before the inauguration to plead Devine's case, but won no assurances. Reagan's crisp reiteration of his credo the next day lifted the spirits of his followers. But with Don Devine's fate still unclear, many political operatives here for the election and transition and now on their way home wonder whether non-ideological businessmen and administrators can be counted on to follow that credo. Their question: Can Reaganism survive as government policy?

The ingredients are well recognized: a contentious society has become common, with behaviorists endorsing self-centered attitudes and rejection of authority. Witness the lawsuits, public hearings, protests, and belligerence evident daily in a wide range of activities from language to dress to promotions to salaries. It involves not just students, but their teachers, and their parents as well.

John Tart, a Wayne County resident, president of Johnston Technical Institute, and a member of the State Board of Education, says it is time to cut through the running argument about whose fault it is: whether home, teacher or principal is to blame; or whether it can be fixed best at what level.

"We need to push local school boards to draw up firm rules and policies on student discipline, and order them enforced from top to bottom," Tart said.

Parents need to know what those rules are, and what will happen if they are not obeyed; students need to understand that the rules are definitely to be enforced; teachers need to know the principals will back them up; and administrators need to be confident that the community intends to return order to the classrooms. Tart believes.

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦KJ102 ♥764 ♦952 ♠A96
Partner opens the bidding with one spade.
What do you respond?
A.—What at first looks like a reasonably good hand withers somewhat under closer scrutiny. One major flaw is the 4-3-3-3 pattern, which means there is no ruffing value present. Then the concentration of spade honors could represent a slight duplication of values—if your partner has A-Q, the knave is a wasted card. All in all, a simple raise to two spades adequately describes your hand.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦A6 ♥108742 ♦AJ63 ♦KQ
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Pass 2 ♥ Pass
4 ♥ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—There must surely be a slam here and we vote for the value bid of six hearts. We don't think that there is room to find out whether partner has all the key cards we need to make a grand slam. However, we award full marks to any move beyond game provided you intend bidding a slam even if partner makes no further forward-going move.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♦J83 ♥97 ♦84 ♠AK10762
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
2 NT Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—Even if your club suit produces five tricks, there is no guarantee that partner's hand is good enough to yield four more before the opponents have collected five. However, we wouldn't pass. We would bid three spades, and would be delighted if partner goes to game in either spades or no trump.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦K1072 ♥6 ♦AKJ632 ♠AK
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass ?
What do you bid now?
A.—You have an enormous hand in support of spades. Since all your values are in prime cards, no spade raise will do your hand justice. Make a jump shift to three clubs. That maneuver is perfectly safe, for if partner raises clubs, you can always return to his spades without increasing the level of the auction.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦K1072 ♥6 ♦AKJ632 ♠AK
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass ?
What do you bid now?

A.—In terms of strength, your hand is worth a jump rebid of three diamonds. However, that bid is tactically incorrect—it could result in missing your best spot. Bid one spade. There is no reason to bypass a fair four-card major and, in view of the potential misfit, you are not strong enough to jump to two spades. If partner passes one spade, in all likelihood he also would have passed a jump to three diamonds. But at least you will have given yourself every chance to reach the right contract.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♦AK95 ♥982 ♦753 ♠AK4
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Dble. 3 ♦ Pass ?
What action do you take?
A.—Partner does not have a good hand. On the contrary, a jump raise over a double shows a weak distributional hand with little or no defensive value. If you realize that, then you must also see that the hand offers no prospect for game. Pass.

TAIF, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq today told the 37-nation Islamic summit "the highest priority" should be given to ending the 18-week-old Iran-Iraq war which he said weakens the entire Persian Gulf region.

"The conflict between the brotherly Islamic countries, Iran and Iraq... is a tragic blow to our hopes and expectations," said Zia, the president of the conference of Islamic nations, who has made two unsuccessful mediation trips to Baghdad and Tehran.

"The attrition of the resources of these two Islamic states weakens the entire region and makes it more vulnerable to outside pressure," Zia said in a prepared text.

Therefore, he added, "it is a matter of the highest priority for the Islamic world to explore all possible ways and means to bring this conflict to an end."

Hopes that a truce might be arranged at the summit to halt the war were dashed when Iran refused to attend because Iraqi President Saddam Hussein was coming.

Iraq has demanded Iran recognize its sovereignty over the Shatt al-Arab waterway, its only outlet to the Persian Gulf, which it captured early in the war. Iran says it won't negotiate until all Iraqi troops leave its territory.

Zia also called on the conference to take "decisive action" against Israel to force the return of occupied Arab land for a Palestinian state.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabia, the summit host, lobbied the Islamic leaders to get the divided Moslem world to unite and drive Israel from East Jerusalem and Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

"I call on you individually to unify your ranks, unite your views and mobilize your full potentials to defend Islam, rescue and aid your (Palestinian and Afghan) brothers and restore their rights," Saudi Crown Prince Fahd told the leaders from 37 of the 41 Islamic nations and the Palestine Liberation Organization who assembled Sunday in Mecca, Islam's holiest city, for the opening of the three-day meeting.

Libya, Iran, Afghanistan and Egypt were absent.

The kings, princes, presidents, sheiks and others also heard a prayer asking Allah, the God of Islam, to "help Moslems cleanse Jerusalem of the Jews."

The first tangible result of Saudi Arabia's peacemaking was a handshake between King Hassan II of Morocco and Algerian President Benjedid Chadli, whose North African nations have been at odds over the former Spanish Sahara. Morocco annexed the northern half of the big territory on its southern border when Spain pulled out, and Algeria arms and supports the Polisario guerrillas fighting the Moroccans.

"I hope this handshake will be the forerunner of an agreement," said an Arab diplomat present when the two foes shook hands and smiled at each other.

A host of other problems divided the Moslem leaders as they left Mecca and drove to Taif, the Saudi summer retreat in the mountains 40 miles to the southeast, where they are talking for two days in a new $250-million conference center complete with gold-plated doorknobs and bathroom fixtures.

In addition to Iran's absence, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, who heads the most populous Islamic nation, was absent because he has been an outcast in the Moslem world since he signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979.

The government of Afghan President Babrak Karmal was excluded because it and its Soviet allies are fighting Moslem rebels. Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy refused to attend because of the presence of U.S. radar planes in Saudi Arabia.

Israel's 13½-year occupation of Arab lands, Palestinian rights and statehood, and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan were the key items on the agenda.

Radical Arab nations were expected to propose political and economic sanctions against Western nations that support Israel, but moderates led by Saudi Arabia are likely to block the harshest proposals, such as an oil or trade embargo against the West.

The Arab states also are expected to press for extension of the Arab boycott to all Moslem states. The boycott blacklists all firms that do business with the Jewish state.

Marketing New Pipe Tobacco

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — The R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. announced Sunday that it plans to market a new pipe tobacco beginning Feb. 16.

The light aromatic tobacco will be called Royal Comfort. The brand is the newest pipe tobacco to be introduced nationally by the company since 1973 and is the company's first entry into the aromatic market.

"The cool, aromatic category is the primary growth area of the $216 million smoking tobacco industry," said E.A. Horrigan Jr., company chairman.

"It has been dominated by imports but we feel we now have an American brand that will compete very favorably against European products."

Reynolds Tobacco already has five brands on the market, including Prince Albert, Carter Hall, Madeira Gold, George Washington and Apple.

A pedestrian — Milton Knight, 30, of Oak City — was struck while walking along N.C. 125 near Hamilton.

A Sanford man was killed when his car ran off a rural Lee County road. The patrol identified the man as John Alan Richardson, 32.

Thurman Hairston, 70, of Durham was killed when his vehicle ran off Interstate 40 near Greensboro and struck a bridge abutment.

Luther George Brown, 50, of Germantown was killed when he was struck as he was leaving his disabled vehicle on U.S. 52 near Winston-Salem.

A Shelby man was killed when his car ran off N.C. 18 near Shelby, struck a culvert and overturned. The patrol identified the victim as Joel Mark Jenkins, 19, of Shelby.

Two teen-agers were killed when their car ran off a rural road near Plymouth and struck a ditch and a pole. The patrol identified the two as Jack Pritchett, 18, of Jamesville and Colton J. Helmuth, 17, of Plymouth.

Duke Divers Attempt Simulated Dive Record

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Three men trying to set a world record for a simulated dive reached pressures equal to a depth of 460 meters Sunday, about two-thirds of the way to the goal they hope to reach within the next two weeks.

"They are performing tests with various tools, and their scores are very good. They are in good condition and we're very satisfied," according to Dr. Peter Bennett, test director at Duke University Medical Center where the experiment is being conducted.

Bennett said the three divers were doing fine, living in a steel ball eight feet in diameter atop a 10-foot tall cylinder. Gases under pressure are carefully mixed and pumped into the chamber to simulate the pressures found at various underwater depths.

Divers Stephen V. Porter of Colorado, Leonard Whitlock of Florida and Erik Kramer of Virginia entered the chamber Friday in an effort to break a record of 650 meters set last year by another team at Duke University. Bennett said the new team is scheduled to remain in the chamber for 36 days.

The team members are spending their days with performance tests and respiratory work to measure the amount of effort required to breathe during workouts. At night the divers sleep on folding beds suspended from chains in the ceiling of their chamber.

A group of 15 scientists is monitoring their progress.

Bennett said the pressure in the chamber would be increased by the equivalent of about 30 meters — or 100 feet — until it reaches a depth of 650 meters.

"We plan to keep them at 650 meters for four days to look at their reflexes and psychological performance. After four days we will assess the situation to see if they are in sufficient condition to take them to 2,250 feet or 686 meters for 24 hours," Bennett said.

Porter and Whitlock are commercial divers and Kramer is a former U.S. Navy underwater demolition diver.

Data from the experiments are expected to help work in offshore drilling, salvage operations and the use of ocean resources.

The first test in the department's Atlantis series of experiments took place in 1979. The project is funded by the National Institute of Health, the U.S. Navy Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Shell Oil Co. and Ocean Engineering International, a commercial diving company.

Bomb Rips

Iranian Bank

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A bomb blast ripped the Bank Melli Iran early today with an explosion strong enough to shatter windows on buildings across the street, police said.

There were no injuries and no one claimed responsibility for the 12:35 a.m. PST blast at the bank, located on Montgomery Street in San Francisco's financial district, a police spokesman said.

The explosion blew out all of the windows in the Iranian bank, which had offices in the Wells Fargo Building, as well as the windows in the Union Bank office across the street, the spokesman said.

State agents were investigating and federal authorities were notified of the blast, officials said.

The blast came less than a day after 52 Americans, freed last week following 444 days in captivity in Iran, returned to the United States for reunions with their families.

Police said the bomb apparently had been placed on the outside of the bank building. A witness said the blast left a "bowling ball-sized hole" in the wall.

Arrested With Marijuana

James Edward Henderson Jr., 22 of 432 Jones Dorm, was arrested on marijuana possession charges by Greenville Police about 1:15 a.m. today.

Chief Glenn Cannon said Henderson was charged after officers found a small quantity of marijuana in his possession at the Town Commons boat ramp off First Street.

Ordeal Left Invisible Scars On Former Hostages

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer
Mostly, the scars are not visible.
As they laugh, wave to the cameras and toast their freedom, nearly all the 52 Americans who were hostages in Iran seem hearty enough.

But they, and their families, carry the mark — a private, often haunting, always painful mark — of the 444-day ordeal.
“We’re seeing about what we expected,” said Dr. Jerome Korcak, head of the State Department medical team with the former hostages in West Germany. “But you can’t tell from looking at a person.”

For the hostages, it was 444 days of helplessness. It was isolation. It was hunger. It was terror in the face of a gun held by a laughing fanatic. It was word that Mom was dead.

It was no word at all.
For the families, too, it was 444 days of helplessness. It was knowing Jimmy was a hero — yet keeping silent. It was knowing Dick was hungry, battered — yet keeping silent. It was waiting, hating the sunlight that the hostages could not share.

Now, at last, it is joy, relief — all wrapped in a yellow ribbon.

But the joy is tempered by the knowledge that it isn’t over yet, that for the former hostages and their families, the 444 days must touch each of the days to come.

And the joy is tempered by anger and bitter tears as the brutal details of the hostages’ 14½-month ordeal slowly trickle out.

“Every day the presence of death was in my mind, but the Iranians never maintained—they would kill me and I wasn’t brutalized at all. I wasn’t beaten at all,” said Barry Rosen, the 36-year-old balding, bearded former U.S. press attache.

“But what I had and the others had was prison sentences. We all spent six months in maximum security prisons. I found out what stress can do to you ... I had total insomnia for over a year. And I was a big sleeper.”

I learned about myself, all kinds of truths ... I couldn’t really cope in some ways. I tried to read, but I couldn’t too much. You have to eat. But I once thought, ‘What’s the use of eating?’ ... Religion didn’t help the way it did other people. What I had was my family.

At the hospital in West Germany where the former hostages began their readjustment to freedom, a clerical worker walked past a young man, a former hostage, hunched over a telephone on Thursday. She overheard one phrase: “I’m still safe.”

Richard Queen, the hostage freed last July after he developed multiple sclerosis, a degenerative nerve disease, described for the first time details of his 250-day captivity.

For nearly five months he was held with Joseph Hall in a tomblike, windowless basement room. Then they were moved to the chancellery. It was better there, Queen said.

“We were first put in a brick room, a room which had a window which was bricked over, but there was a little crack and some light came in.

“... And to hear people outside. I remember there were a couple of school girls, just walking along and talking and singing outside and it just — again, something that can’t really be described, what it meant to feel life again.”

“I never had any hope from the beginning,” said Clair Barnes. “Sometimes I thought I’d never see the sun rise again.”

Barnes also said that some hostages tried to escape by sawing through bars in the prison where they were held.

“They’d go out the windows, then they’d get caught and get beaten with rubber hoses.”

Like other members of hostage families, Richard Morefield’s wife, Dorothea, was not surprised as the ugly details of the hostages’ 444-day ordeal began to come to light. She lived with that secret knowledge for more than a year.

“Some of them we ... knew about from talking with Richard Queen, talking with the group that were released — the blacks and the women ... It was, I think, just generally felt it was better not to talk about it while they were still there. We didn’t know what kind of reaction it would have.

“Dick never mentioned it, because he wouldn’t. Even though he was telling me he was fine, I knew the ‘fine’ was a mental fine.”

On the hostages’ flight to freedom in West Germany, they described one of their captors’ cruelties to Air Force crewmen.

The Iranian guards would bring a letter, saying it was from a relative. They would begin to hand the the precious missive to the hostage. Then they would snatch it away, saying, “We didn’t check it close enough.”

Usually, the letter was never seen again.

Since last Easter, the Lopez family had heard nothing of their son, a Marine sergeant. They knew that on Nov. 4, 1979, when mobs attacked the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, James Lopez singlehandedly held them off long enough for 15 Americans to escape.

It was little comfort to know their son was a hero. Fearing he would be killed in retribution, they kept their knowledge secret.

His mother overcame her bitter urge to tell the story when a letter to the editor of a Phoenix newspaper suggested that the only thing James Lopez was missing, while he was captive in Iran, were “his tamales.”

Meanwhile, James Lopez had scrawled a slogan on the wall of his cell, a slogan his captors could not read: “Viva la Roja, Blanca y Azul.”

Long Live the Red, White and Blue.

Malcolm Kalp told his wife, Cheryl, that he had been “beaten very badly.” He told his brother, Richard, that he’d been kept in solitary confinement for 374 days because he’d tried to escape.

“He said he had written us often and asked if we had received any of his letters,” Mrs. Kalp said. “We told him we hadn’t and he said he never received any of ours and we had written, too.”

Andrew Kalp, 12, broke out in hives when his father telephoned from West Germany.

In Wellsburg, Iowa, Katy Koob’s sister described her relief this way:

“She was denied the freedom to come and go and that’s the hardest thing of all. But we were here waiting. We were held hostage as much as they were.”

When Marine Sgt. Johnny McKeel telephoned his home in Balch Springs, Texas, he was stunned to hear his mother’s voice.

The Iranians had told McKeel, “Your mother is dead and if you want to go back for the funeral, you’ll have to tell us what we want to know.”

Instead, a grieving Johnny McKeel told them his name, his rank, his serial number. They knocked out one of his teeth.

The pain was so profound — and the joy — that many of the former hostages spent most of those first, pre-dawn telephone conversations with family talking of food or sports — the precious trivialities of life.

Sgt. Rodney Sickmann: “Hey, is this Squirrel?”

Kurt, his 16-year-old brother: “How are you doing?”

Sickmann: “Are you tearing the roads up, Squirrel?”

Kurt: “Yeah, how are you doing?”

Sickmann: “Pretty good. Pretty good.”

Kurt: “I got my license.”

Sickmann: “Once I get home, you can drive me around, Kurt.”

During 444 days Donald Cooke had never talked to his family. When finally he heard their voices, nothing could tear him from the phone. But he interrupted his mother to say:

“Guess who has his hand on my shoulder? President Carter ... Would you like to talk to President Carter?”

His mother later couldn’t remember what the former president said to her from West Germany: “I was more interested in what Donald had to say, to tell you the truth.”

In Johnstown, Pa., 69-year-old Anna Ragan was hospitalized with an apparent heart attack just four hours after she spoke to her son, Master Sg. Regis Ragan.

It was the first time she’d heard her son’s voice since Nov. 4, 1979.

Michael Metrisko spent more than 8 months in solitary. He later said he couldn’t even recognize some of the other hostages when they were reunited in Algeria.

During the first few months, Richard Queen and Joseph Hall had to whisper furtively to one another. Talking among the hostages was forbidden.

Moorhead Kennedy told his wife he and others were lined up in their underwear, guns to their heads, for a mock execution.

One wife who asked not to be named said the former hostages “were in worse shape than we ever imagined. They may look OK, but they are mentally in a very bad state.”

Richard Queen described two midnight raids — one in February 1980, and one a few months later — when Iranians in fatigues, combat boots, white masks and carrying automatic weapons terrorized the hostages.

The first time, the Iranians shoved the hostages into a large room, lined them along a wall, then cocked their weapons. “I just tried to give myself last rites, said the Lord’s prayer,” Queen said.

The raids were haunting. Queen said, because they were “so irrational” and, “There’s always that in the background — that the next time it ... could be for real.”

When Dorothea Morefield told the press the hostages weren’t getting their mail, the Iranians were livid, Richard Morefield said. “They ranted and raved for about three days,” she said. “It delighted him and soon more mail started coming through.”

When Mrs. Morefield sent her husband a backgammon game, the Iranians gave him the game. But the Iranians kept the dice.

It only made Morefield more determined.

“We beat them,” he said, “because ... each one of us came to the conclusion that we were going to cope and we were going to come out and we were going to come out with our brains unscrambled and in the best possible health.”

Bert Moore’s wife, Marjorie:

“He was never beaten or tortured. He was threatened with a gun to his head. And he said, ‘Go ahead and shoot, you bastards.’ But they didn’t get the combination of the safe they wanted.”

Former hostage Don Hohman said he talked to the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, although he didn’t explain how, and complained about their captors’ brutality. It didn’t make any difference.

“The man knows nothing about — the first thing about human rights,” he said. “He is a person who sits on a ladder or a fence and watches somebody else do his dirty work. The man is a pig.”

Bruce German described a “security shakedown” during his captivity caused by reports that the hostages were passing notes “and some of the guys may have had weapons. How that was possible, I don’t know. What weapons, you know? A spoon?”

“So they brought in these goons with the Uzi’s and G-3’s and shook the place down ... and they cocked the guns in our ears and we experienced total terror.”

German was asked how he felt when he awakened, free, in West Germany.

“The first night I woke up and I wasn’t quite sure this was real. I looked around for the guards to ask permission to go to the toilet.”

Bruce Laingen, the charge d’affaires, the top U.S. diplomat in Iran, was also the most ecstatic freed hostage. He flashed a huge grin and waved V-for-victory from the liberation aircraft in Algiers. He hugged Jimmy Carter.

Later, he described his ordeal to his wife:

“It was just humiliating.” His wife Penelope, in turn, put into words what many of the beleaguered families were feeling as their trial at last ended.

“I’m not burned up,” she said. “I’m burned out.”

Fishermen Seek Disaster Help

NANTUCKET, Mass. (A) — Scallopers around this Massachusetts island, contending ice has ruined a month of fishing worth about $500,000, want state officials to declare their trade a “disaster” and make them eligible for emergency federal loans.

Alan Holgate, Nantucket’s shell fish warden, said the harbor where much scalloping takes place was locked in ice up to 18 inches thick. Two Coast Guard icebreakers are needed to help a ferry carrying essential supplies make one daily trip to the island of 6,000 year-round residents, he said.

The collapse of scalloping during a recent cold wave has thrown at least 300 fishermen and other scalloping workers out of work, said Jim Gross, past president of the Nantucket Fishermen’s Association.

“It’s a bad situation,” he said. “If you go down to the local bars, you’ll see nobody.”

Gross said the fishermen are preparing a letter asking Gov. Edward J. King to declare a “disaster,” permitting them to seek low-interest loans from the federal Small Business Administration. He estimated the loss at $500,000 for January.

The scalloping season, which runs from Nov. 1 to March 31, brings in up to $2 million annually for Nantucket fishermen, said William R. Klein of the island’s economic development and planning office.

A total of 424 commercial scalloping licenses have been sold, with 120 boats fishing from the island, said Holgate. Most boats were ice-bound, he said.

A 44-foot Coast Guard motor life boat used its steel prow to free three scallop fishing vessels from the ice about 100 yards offshore Sunday, said Coast Guard Fireman Gary Jesierski.

“The island is locked in ice,” he reported. “The tide leaves the ice when it goes back out, and you can stand on ice on the shore with the water four feet below where you should be standing on the sand. The ice is stacked up sideways and it looks like mini-icebergs.”

Find Bodies Of 6 Youths

HENDERSON, N.C. (AP) — Rescue workers who had searched the waters of Kerr Lake for six days recovered the bodies Sunday of three Vance County teen-agers who had been missing since last Monday.

The young men had disappeared after completing a test at Vance County High School and driving off, telling friends they were going ice skating.

Parents of the three teen-agers — David P. Meadows, 18, T.K. Kempton, 17, and Todd Lynch, 17, all of Henderson — reported them missing on Tuesday.

Sheriff Bobby L. Hamm said the bodies were found bunched together in water about 20 feet deep.

“They were all together ... There was too much weight in one place. Once they fell in, there was no way to get back out,” Hamm said.

About 180 people were involved in Sunday’s search, and nearly 30 boats took part in dragging operations during the past week.

Several members of the families were on hand when the bodies were found.

Fred Owens, principal of the high school, said students and faculty would observe a short period of silence for the dead teen-agers today.

Two Collisions Here Yesterday

An estimated $7,600 property damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated by Greenville Police, Sunday.

Heaviest damage resulted from a 12:35 a.m. collision at the intersection of Pitt and Fourth Streets, involving a car driven by Frederick Allen Lee of 300 South Pitt St. and a truck operated by Forrest Ray Mills of Route 2, Greenville.

Damage from the mishap was set at $6,000 to the Lee car and $600 to the Mills vehicle.

An estimated $500 damage resulted to each of two cars involved in a 1:20 p.m. mishap at the intersection of Bancroft Avenue and Lincoln Drive.

Officers identified the drivers involved as Fredrick Eugene Acklin of IDurham, and Carolyn Jones Freebee of 1704 Battle St.

Police charged Acklin with improper passing.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices edged lower today, extending a week-long skid. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which gave up 33.44 points last week, fell 2.31 to 937.88 in the first two hours of trading today. On Friday, the Dow had fallen 0.25 to 940.19.

Losers outnumbered gainers by a narrow margin, among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues. The market has been depressed on uncertainty over the future course of interest rates. But analysts said last Friday's encouraging money supply report from the Federal Reserve Board may be a precursor of lower interest rates.

The $8.7 billion drop in the money supply, as measured by M1A, left money supply growth essentially flat since November and could indicate some sluggishness in the economy, analysts said. At mid-morning, a small St. Louis bank lowered its prime corporate lending rate by one percentage point to 19 percent.

Among today's early prices, precious metals issues were off sharply as gold prices plunged in Europe. Campbell Red Lake was down 3 3/4 to 48 1/2. Dome Mines fell 4 to 76, and Homestake Mining had declined 3 1/2 to 53 1/2. Gold opened as much as $20 an ounce lower in London today. RCA Corp., which announced over the weekend that Chairman Edgar Griffiths had submitted his resignation, effective July 1, dropped 1/2 to 27 1/2. The company said Griffiths would be replaced by Atlantic Richfield president Thornton Bradshaw.

Big Board volume was 149.7 million shares at noon, down from 16.82 million in the comparable period on Friday.

The NYSE's composite index of common stocks was down 0.22 at 74.50.

On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 1.53 to 339.83.

Revaluation...

increases to a projected $1.85 billion, the same $11.59 million tax levy could be raised with a tax rate of less than half the present $1.03 per $100 valuation.

Hardee noted that presently, "45 percent of the tax base in Pitt County is personal property...valued at 100 percent every year." With revaluation, "what you have is a shifting effect of the tax base from personal to real property. That's why you do a revaluation — to re-establish equity between real and personal property, and between different types of real property."

To give some idea of the increases in some property values, Weisner pulled several property cards at random.

One example was a 55.5 acre farm on Secondary Road 1724 in Ayden Township that had been valued at $28,315.

The new value on the property, including a two acre home site, 30.5 acres of crop land, 23 acres of woods land, three acres of swamp and a 1,660 square foot three bedroom home and outbuildings, is $104,330.

A 116 acre farm on SR 1417 in Belvoir Township had been valued at $70,910.

The new value — $150,010 — including a one acre home site, 74 acres of crop land, 19 acres of pasture, 20 acres of woods, and 15 acres of swamp, with a 2,047 square foot, four bedroom home and outbuildings.

Still another farm, 43 acres on SR 1900 in Winterville Township, was valued at $40,495.

The new value, including the storage buildings, barns and small tenant house — $100,130.

Power Struggle Said Not Over

By WILLIE MA
Associated Press Writer

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A government spokesman on this Nationalist Chinese island said today he did not believe the stiff sentences imposed on ten former radical leaders in Peking marked an end to a power struggle in the Communist Chinese hierarchy.

In the first official

Nationalist reaction to the sentencing Sunday of Jiang

Qing, the widow of Mao

Tse-tung, and nine other leaders of the 1966-76

Cultural Revolution, spokesman

Dr. James Soong said the trial

"proves once again" that the current regime in Peking has "encountered resistance in its efforts to remove dissidents." Soong said internal strife may escalate in the months to come.

The Communists, led by

Mao, drove the Nationalist

Chinese regime of the late

Chiang Kai-shek from the mainland in 1949. Both Peking and Taipei claim they are the only legitimate Chinese governments.

Peking's highest court sentenced Jiang Qing, 67,

and former Vice Chairman

Zhang Chunqiao, 63, to death

but gave them a two-year

reprieve to allow them to reform through labor. Eight other defendants were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 16 years to life for their activities in the tumultuous Cultural Revolution,

when production plummeted and schools shut down as power was apportioned solely on the basis of political "correctness."

Soong said he believed the pragmatist regime of

Communist Party Vice

Premier Deng Xiaoping

was using the now-vilified

radicals as "scapegoats."

The power holders, led by the Deng group, try to hold the Cultural Revolution responsible for all the crimes that led to the economic backwardness and the sufferings of the people on the mainland," the American-educated

Soong said. But, he contended,

"the past and present leaders of the Chinese Communist regime" are to blame for the setbacks.

As long as the Communist system exists, power struggles within the Communist regime will go on, and no matter what political line prevails, the Chinese people on the mainland will always suffer,"

Soong added.

Dr. Han Lin-wu, president of Taiwan's Chinese Association for Human Rights, commented that

Sunday's judgment was an indirect indictment of Mao, who instigated

the Cultural Revolution.

Peking's trial of the so-called radicals...was, in fact, a trial of Mao," Han said.

Jiang Qing reportedly defended herself during the proceedings by saying Mao knew of and condoned her activities. The Peking regime has criticized "The Great Helmsman" for "mistakes" during what is called the "decade of turmoil," but has avoided any implication he was guilty of crimes.

Firemen arriving on the scene found a wood frame house completely engulfed in flames. Firemen from Ayden also assisted Winterville in fighting the blaze for about an hour.

According to Mike McLawhorn, son of the owner, the house had not been used for some time, and there was no electricity to the old house. A witness at the scene, Andrew Smith, said he spotted the fire as he went to tend his hogs near the dwelling.

Investigation into the fire is continuing by the Pitt County Sheriff's Department and the Pitt County Fire

Marshal's office. Members of the Simpson fire department were called to a house on Rural Paved Road

1755 near Galloway's Crossroads

Sunday night about 8:40 p.m. when fire was discovered in an abandoned house. The house was reportedly owned by T. J. Paramore and was a Glass Slipper Fits — Oakland Wins NFL Crown

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — They are a roster of rejects, living in the halfway house of the National Football League.

They are outcasts, playing for a franchise operated by an owner called "an outlaw."

They are a team torn between two cities, 45 men who play for each other and against the rest of the world.

Call the Oakland Raiders all those things today, but don't forget to call them champions. They are the world champions of professional football, convincing winners of Super Bowl XV with a 27-10 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday.

Led by Cinderella quarterback Jim Plunkett, who completed a storybook return from football's scrap heap with a record-shattering three-touchdown, 261-yard game, the Raiders stepped gingerly into the glass slipper and found the fit was perfect.

"World champions! That sure sounds nice," said guard Gene Upshaw, captain of this scrappy team which delights in confounding the establishment.

"We were against the world," Upshaw continued. "Everyone said we had no chance, but we knew we did. They kept reminding us we're not good enough. You know, if we played another game next week, we'd still be underdogs."

It is a role the renegade Raiders delight in filling.

"We have a strong feeling for each other and it makes us stronger and better as a team," said flanker Bob Chandler, one of the retrained, who caught four of Plunkett's passes for 77 yards.

The pass Chandler remembered best was the one he didn't catch — a busted play which developed into an 80-yard touchdown for running back Kenny King. It was in the final seconds of the first quarter with the Raiders on their own 20-yard line and leading 7-0.

"I wanted to go to Bobby, but I ran out of time," Plunkett explained. "I started to scramble."

That was a signal for King to start free-lancing. He had been running a simple short pattern, but when the quarterback leaves the protection of his pocket, all bets are off. The linebacker covering King moved in to try and trap Plunkett. Suddenly, the running back was alone and Plunkett saw him.

"The defensive back was in front of me and there was no one behind me," King said. "The ball went through his hands and dropped into mine. When I turned and started running I didn't see anybody. That's when I knew I was gone."

Eagle cornerback Roynell Young (43) to scored in the second half of Sunday's Super Bowl XV in New Orleans. (AP Laserphoto)

King caught the ball at the Oakland 39 and turned the play into the longest touchdown pass in Super Bowl history. And when he high-stepped his way into the end zone, there was Chandler, the original primary receiver, right behind him.

"I told him with 100 million people watching I didn't want to fall away from him too quickly," said Chandler who, at 31, isn't exactly the fleetest player in the league. "I was surprised to see him," King said admiringly. "That boy's fast."

That touchdown gave Oakland a 14-0 lead and all three players involved in that key play were reclamation projects, acquired and nurtured by owner Al Davis, who never let his war with the league interfere with his team's drive for the championship.

You wouldn't invite Davis and Commissioner Pete Rozelle to the same cocktail party. They are bitter adversaries, locked in a court battle over the Raiders' proposed move to Los Angeles. Davis has linked Rozelle's name to ticket-scalping schemes and the commissioner has denied those charges and called the Oakland owner "an outlaw."

But both men were on their best behavior for the championship trophy presentation ceremony. Rozelle was cordial, paying tribute to this team, the first wild-card club ever to win the Super Bowl. And Davis accepted gracefully and advised his team to "take pride and be proud. Your commitment to excellence will endure forever."

Davis acquired Chandler from Buffalo and King from Houston during the off-season. He saw qualities in both men which he thought could help his team. They were rejects, but they fit into the Raider blueprint. So did Plunkett, but only as a backup to Dan Pastorini, another, more glamorous off-season acquisition.

Chandler and King were minor reclamations compared to Plunkett. He was a washed-up quarterback, ready for retirement, when Davis signed him. He spent two seasons virtually unused and a disappointing career seemed at a dead-end for the 32-year-old quarterback.

I was so far down that I wanted to throw in the towel and try something else," Plunkett said. "Fortunately, I had some good friends who stayed with me, who told me to hang in there. I am indebted to them."

When Pastorini broke his leg in the season's fifth game, Plunkett inherited the quarterback job. The move was made as Sampson '40 Leads Cavs Past Ohio St.

OSU's Williams: It Was Frightening

Ralph Sampson could only have been more impressive if he had hopped a jet to New Orleans, donned football pads and earned himself a Super Bowl ring.

Virginia's 7-foot-4 center quieted all critics of his aggressiveness and durability Sunday on national television when he turned University Hall at Charlottesville, Va., into his private showcase.

He scored a career-high 40 points, grabbed 16 rebounds and blocked three shots to lead second-ranked and undefeated Virginia to an 89-73 rout of Ohio State. He scored 14 of his points in a seven-minute streak midway in the first half during which the Cavaliers outscored the Buckeyes 24-6 and grabbed a 19-point lead.

He produced his points from a variety of locations and angles — a sky-high layup, a hook, a short jumper, a slam dunk and a jump shot from the perimeter among them.

"It was one of my better games, I'd say. I felt like I could be devastating from the beginning," said Sampson, who led the Cavaliers to their 21st consecutive victory — 16 this season — and kept alive the nation's longest winning streak.

Sampson's offensive display nearly overshadowed the defensive work he did against opposing center Herb Williams, who scored only 10 points and fouled out with 13:24 to play.

"If there's a better player in the nation, I've never heard of or seen him," Williams said. "This was a frightening experience."

Sampson did it all despite playing on a gimpy ankle that kept him out of 3½ minutes of the first half.

"He has shown a remarkable ability to play on that ankle," Virginia Coach Terry Holland said. "He realizes a player who's as important to us as he is has to be ready to play."

The game was Ohio State's second in two days, coming 24 hours after a 69-63 upset at Columbus of No. 16 Michigan. Buckeyes Coach Eldon Miller was not sure how to measure the effect of the consecutive games against ranked opponents.

"I really don't know if it was a factor. It is hard to measure," Miller said. "We are used to playing every Thursday and Saturday, but this week we had a tougher schedule."

Saturday's action included a pair of upsets of Top 10 teams on their own courts. Notre Dame, ranked 13th, stunned 10th-ranked Maryland 73-70 at College Park, and Minnesota upended No. 9 Iowa 60-48 at Iowa City.

In other Top 10 games, top-ranked Oregon State defeated Washington 97-91 in overtime; third-ranked Wake Forest clobbered UNC-Asheville 99-68; DePaul, tied for third, trimmed La Salle 69-62; No. 5 Louisiana State downed eighth-ranked Tennessee 80-63; sixth-ranked Kentucky stopped Vanderbilt 78-64, and No. 7 Arizona State defeated Arizona 83-65.

In the Second 10, it was: No. 11 South Alabama 64, McNeese State 60; No. 12 UCLA 75, California 61; No. 14 Utah 86, Colorado State 56; Wisconsin 54, No. 15 Illinois 45; No. 17 North Carolina 100, Georgia Tech 60; No. 18 Brigham Young 84, Wyoming 70; Duke 75, No. 19 Clemson 57, and No. 20 Connecticut 75, Georgetown 73 in overtime.

Kelly Tripucka scored six of his 25 points from the free-throw line in the final 1:53 to help Notre Dame squeeze by Maryland. Tripucka came to the line three times down the stretch, all in 1-and-1 situations with Maryland down by one, and he sealed the Terrapins' fate by hitting both shots each time.

Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell called the loss "a disgrace."

"I don't know what it is," he said. "We're the same team, same players and same coach as last year, and still we're losing at home."

Oregon State remained undefeated at 15-0, in large measure due to the work over the Beavers' big man, Steve Johnson. Johnson scored 38 points, five in overtime, to help rally Oregon State from a 10-point deficit late in the Pacific 10 Conference game.

ECU Men Host Baptist Tonight

East Carolina's men's team returns to Minges Coliseum tonight to face Baptist College. Game time is 7:30. Baptist, 2-11 following a 74-65 loss to UNC-W Saturday night, is led by Eddie Talley and Joe Kennedy. Talley, a 6-7 forward, is averaging 13.9 points a game while Kennedy, a 6-8 forward, is averaging 8.9 points and leading the team in rebounding with 7.3 rebounds a game.

East Carolina, 8-9 following Saturday night's 77-52 loss to N.C. State, is led by Charles Watkins (15.5 ppg) and Mark McLaurin (10.5 ppg).

Tom Szymanski leads the Pirates in rebounding with a 6.5 average while Michael Gibson is pulling down 5.5 rebounds a contest.

Pirates Win 8th Straight, Upend No. 15 Virginia

Lady Pirates Ranked 19th

It's a first. For the first time in East Carolina's history, the Lady Pirates are ranked in the AP's Top 20 poll. The poll, released at about 11:00 this morning had ECU ranked 19th in the nation following their victory over Virginia, which fell to 17th.

The Lady Pirates, now 16-3, must immediately face two other top 20 foes this week. ECU plays host to N.C. State, which dropped to 13th from 12 this week, Wednesday and then entertains Southern Cal, ranked eighth this week, Saturday night.

Louisiana Tech is ranked first in the poll followed by Rutgers and Old Dominion, a team ECU lost to earlier this year, 89-77.

10 of her 18 points but moments after Ackerman's two free throws Mitchell was tagged with her third foul and sat out the rest of the half.

The Lady Pirates, led by Denkler and Riley, who finished with 11 points, inched closer. Lydia Rountree's jumper with 3:31 to go put ECU up, 33-31. It was a lead the Lady Pirates never lost. ECU led at the half, 41-36.

"Kathy Riley had only 11 points but she played a very good game," Andruzzi said. "She was five for eight from the floor and led us with four assists and played well defensively."

"And of course, Denkler was unbelievable." Just how unbelievable? Well, when UVA cut the ECU deficit to 66-61 (the closest the Lady Cavaliers would get), Denler responded with 10 straight points over a 2½-minute span to push the Lady Pirate lead to

Raiders Agree: AFC Tougher League

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — My, how things have changed since Super Bowl I when an upstart young league was humiliated by Vince Lombardi.

"The record speaks for itself. I think our conference is stronger," said Oakland Coach Tom Flores, whose Raiders were decisive 27-10 winners Sunday in Super Bowl XV.

Oakland won its second Super Bowl title and gave the American Football Conference its eighth victory in the last nine years against the National Conference representative, this time the Philadelphia Eagles.

"Yes, I believe the AFC dominates the NFC. It's tougher, more competitive," said Cliff Branch, who caught two of Jim Plunkett's three touchdown passes. Things have gone full-circle since the American Football League, forerunner of the AFC, took on the established National Football League in the first Super Bowl.

Lombardi's Green Bay Packers beat AFC champion Kansas City 33-14. Lombardi said any one of the top half-dozen NFL teams could have handled the Chiefs.

The Eagles were supposed to handle the Raiders. So said the oddsmakers, influenced in part because Philadelphia beat them 10-7 in November.

"This time, we made the big plays and they made the mistakes we made in the first game," said offensive tackle Art Shell, one of 11 Raiders who played on the 1977 title team.

Plunkett hit Kenny King on the longest touchdown pass play in Super Bowl history, an 80-yard completion in the first period. On defense, Rod Martin intercepted three passes, Ted Hendricks blocked a field goal attempt and Willie Jones recovered an Eagles' fumble.

"I think we went into the game better prepared," said Martin, whose first interception came at midfield with the game less than two minutes old. "We're the world champions now. No one can deny us that."

"The coaches keep things loose. On this team, no one demands that you stand at attention. It's the greatest organization in football."

The fourth-year pro had an excellent season but Hendricks, the other outside linebacker, had a spectacular, All-Pro year and Martin was relatively unnoticed — until Sunday.

"Do I mind the attention Ted gets? I love it. He's been in the league 12 years and he deserves it. He's a great teacher, too," Martin said.

The Raiders struck quickly for a touchdown after Martin's first interception and they never let up in their quest for the big play, a game plan Flores made public all week.

"He told me even going into the fourth quarter that he wanted to stay aggressive," said Plunkett. "We never considered sitting on the ball."

In contrast, the Eagles used basic running plays too often when they trailed late in the game, at least in the opinion of many of their green-clad fans who booed from their $40 seats in the Louisiana Superdome.

The triumph was a victory for Oakland's team lifestyle, too.

"The Eagles talked about how hard they worked all week. We did all the partying," said Shell.

Defensive lineman John Matuszak was the standout party-goer, drawing a $1,000 fine for a midweek night on the town. He played an excellent game Sunday.

"It's important to go out four nights before the game, not three, two or one," Matuszak said.

"No one demands that you stand at attention on this team," said Martin, "and it's the best organization in football."

The Raiders' style on the field against the Eagles was no more conservative.

Flores said he stressed in his pregame talk with Plunkett that "we're not going to be conservative at all. We're going to keep going for the big plays, like we have been."

The Raiders' second Super Bowl title came in their first season after long-time quarterback Kenny Stabler was traded to Houston.

"I knew when we made the playoffs we were as good as any of the teams and had a chance to go all the way," said Flores, wrapping up his second season as the Raiders' head coach.

Flores told his team after the game:

"We were the best team. We deserve to be world champs and I'm proud of you. I love it. This is the greatest moment of my life."

It was a victory woven from a bunch of NFL remnants — Plunkett, Martin, King — spun from threads thought by others to be weakening.

Some were likely heroes like Branch, the veteran and consistent fleet-footed wide receiver. Others, such as Martin, were surprises.

Plunkett — A Story With A Happy Ending

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — On a day that America's heart was wrenched by the homecoming of its hostages from Iran, it was warmed by a timid, Indian-featured young man who wrote one of the most dramatic chapters in the annals of sport.

If there's anything we Yankees relish as much as a happy ending to a period of travail — as in the case of the hostages — it is seeing some kid overcome almost every conceivable obstacle and rise to the top.

That's the reason our dads went heavy for those 10-cent Horatio Alger throbbers and so avidly followed the pulp-paper exploits of Frank and Dick Merriwell.

Now Jim Plunkett has made pikers of them all.

When this 32-year-old Mexican-American, son of blind parents, a college football hero later scorned by the pros, quarterbacked and passed the rag-tag, underdog Raiders to a 27-10 victory over the Philadelphia Eagles in Sunday's Super Bowl, script writers were sent scurrying for a scenario to top it.

Let them just dare.

Standing in the glare of a spotlight, a battery of microphones at his chin and sweat cascading down his square, rugged face, Plunkett disdained the hero's mantle.

"Now that you are the MVP in the Super Bowl, do you feel you are a storybook story?" a reporter asked.

"You write storybook stories, I don't," Plunkett replied. "I just read them."

"You were the Heisman Trophy winner in college and you quarterbacked Stanford to a win over Ohio State in the Rose Bowl," someone else interjected. "Is this just as great a thrill for you?"

Plunkett's brow furrowed in meditation.

"When I did those things in college," he answered, "I thought they were the biggest things in my life. But they were at a different time and a different place. Because of the circumstances, this is more satisfying."

When he was a tyke back in San Jose, Calif., he suffered rickets. It was thought he might be an invalid. But he persevered, became a four-star athlete in high school and got a scholarship to Stanford.

His blind father died when he was a sophomore in college, leaving him with a mother who couldn't see. She listens to all his games back home.

Most of the time she has listened with pride swelling in her breast. Other times — more recently — disappointment and sadness have gripped the Plunkett household.

VPI's Dooley To Speak Here

Virginia Tech head football coach Bill Dooley will speak at the Greenville Sports Club Tuesday at noon. The luncheon is held at Western Sizzlin' with the program getting started at 12:30.

Heading Back

Oakland Raider quarterback Jim Plunkett fades back to pass in first quarter of Sunday's Super Bowl XV game in New Orleans. (AP Laserphoto)

Drafted out of college by the New England Patriots, he threw 19 touchdown passes his first season and was NFL Rookie of the Year.

After four years the Patriots traded him to San Francisco where his fortunes suddenly went sour. His statistics fell off. Critics said he was a poor passer in the mold of Minnesota's former Joe Kapp. He had a wobbly delivery and no poise.

San Francisco dumped him. He put out feelers to other pro clubs. For a disheartening period, the phone never rang. Then one day Al Davis, maverick owner of the Raiders, brought him into the fold with Oakland's band of rascals, rejects and retdreads.

"We took people nobody else wanted," says Oakland Coach Tom Flores. One of them was Plunkett.

"Plunkett at first was a stand-in for the veteran Kenny Stabler. When Stabler was traded to Houston, the Raiders brought in hotshot Don Pastorini. At Oakland he didn't get to handle the ball once during 1978.

"I was really down," Plunkett confessed. "A couple of times I said to myself, 'The hell with it, I should try something else."

"Vindication? What vindication?" he repeated a question. "It was just a good football game. The whole team was great. And I'm happy we won."

Steelwheels Split Pair

CHARLOTTE — The Greenville Steelwheels split a pair of wheelchair basketball games with the Carolina Tarwheels this past weekend.

The Steelwheels won the first, 50-49, in overtime, behind Richard Hudson's 16 points, Therone Moye's 15 and Miller Saund's 14.

In the second game, the Tarwheels, using all 15 players compared to Greenville's six, wore down the Steelwheels before winning, 54-44. The Steelwheels were led by Hudson's 16 and Moye's 12.

Greenville, now 8-8 in the conference, plays Asheville this weekend. Charlotte is 10-8 in the conference.

WHY YOU GET A MORE UP-TO-DATE NEWSPAPER WITH THE MACHINE ON THE RIGHT THAN WITH THE MACHINE ON THE LEFT.

The machine on the left allows a news reporter to type a story. The machine on the right is a visual display terminal (VDT) used at THE DAILY REFLECTOR. The VDT is a reporter's pencil, paper, eraser, typewriter, file cabinet, wastebasket and notebook all rolled into one highly technological newswriting system.

As a reporter types a story on the keyboard, the words appear on the video screen. An editor can then call the story onto his own VDT to make any needed corrections and give the story a headline. The edited story is then transmitted to a storage unit that can hold 48 million characters at one time. This storage capacity allows a reporter or editor to call back a story within seconds to add last minute updates. This insures that you are reading the most recent news report available to you.

Some of the things the terminals can't replace are the news judgement, common sense, integrity and intelligence of the reporters at THE DAILY REFLECTOR. Experienced people plus new technology working together to make your newspaper the best it can be — so you can be the most informed citizen. The most value-conscious consumer and the most secure individual possible.

That's why THE DAILY REFLECTOR puts advanced news reporting first.

East Carolina University has no plans to bolt the AIAW and switch its women's sports to the NCAA — at least not at the present.

During the recent NCAA convention, after quite a bit of maneuvering, the governing body of the male-oriented athletic organization voted to sponsor nine sports in Division I schools, and a total of 12 in all in women's programs, effective with the next school year.

Schools which are currently aligned with the AIAW, that body which has governed women's athletics through its current growth period, were given a four-year period in which to decide which group's code it would adhere to.

Starting next year, Division I schools, such as East Carolina, could compete in divisional championships in basketball, softball, tennis, outdoor track, cross-country, field hockey, gymnastics, volleyball and swimming. In addition, open championships in fencing, golf and lacrosse would be sponsored by the NCAA.

Of these sports, East Carolina has seven, basketball, softball, tennis, track, field hockey, gymnastics, volleyball and swimming. Plans have been announced to drop field hockey at the end of this year, however.

Division II and III of the NCAA, which sponsor championships in some sports this year, increased their totals to nine and eight, respectively.

"According to my understanding," East Carolina Athletic Director Ken Karr said, "schools can continue to operate under AIAW rules, and still participate in NCAA championships. But only until August 1, 1985. After that, they must either continue under AIAW rules, or switch to NCAA rules." Those who do not switch to NCAA rules will not be able to participate in championships of that group after August 1, 1985.

The NCAA vote was a close one, as expected. On the first ballot, conducted by raising paddles for counting, a 127-127 vote was recorded, and a tie killed the NCAA bid to conduct women's championships. However, a recount was demanded, and that resulted in a 127-128 vote against the motion.

After that, moves were made to drop the current Division II and III championships. Those votes, however, sustained the current rules.

At that point, a motion was made to bring the Division I championship issue back to the floor. That motion carried, 141-105. Following the defeat of a proposal to recess, a motion was passed to end debate on the issue. The proposal for Division I championships was then passed, 137-117.

"At this point in time, I feel our program will remain under the AIAW," Karr said. "We will observe what changes will be made in the NCAA structure in regard to women's representation on the various committees."

"It's highly unlikely that we will participate in any of the NCAA championships next year, either. Whether we do during the remaining three years of the option period will depend on the quality of our teams and other factors."

Karr added, "Something like this (the NCAA sponsorship of women's sports) needs an extended time frame for things to shake down."

Karr also said that should East Carolina and several other teams be successful in forming a conference, he doubted if women's sports would be included, at least at the start. "It's naturally possible that a national trend might evolve where we tend to have both men's and women's teams participate in a conference," he said. Currently, however, East Carolina is only talking in terms of a men's group to start with.

One other key group of rules changes were made at the convention, involving recruiting.

Rules changes were made to do away with the "institutional grant" signing ahead of the national letter of intent. From now on, that will be the only date a student-athlete may sign on or after.

Recruiting in football may only be done from December 1, or the final game of the recruit, whichever comes later, through March 1. This involves actual contact. Coaches may still make evaluation visits to watch games or practices from August 1 to December 1 (or the final game), but no personal contact is allowed.

Evaluation is also allowed during the month of May.

In basketball, contacts are permitted August 1 to October 1, and between March 1 (or the final game, whichever comes later) and May 15. Evaluation visits may be made October 1 to March 1.

A student may still make paid visits to six college campuses, and coaches are still allowed only three contacts.

"I don't think this will greatly affect our recruiting," Karr said. "It will cut down on a lot of harassment of players, however."

'Super' Loss Has Eagles In Shock

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles were in shock.

They knew the Oakland Raiders beat them 27-10 Sunday in Super Bowl XV. They just couldn't understand how it happened.

"It was a big downer as far as our season is concerned," said linebacker Reggie Wilkes. "We wanted to go out playing our best football, but we didn't."

Frank LeMaster, another linebacker, said he couldn't explain it, but the Eagles were flat.

"The offense and defense didn't have the zest we're accustomed to," lamented LeMaster.

Wilbert Montgomery, the Eagles' star runner, gained just 44 yards on 16 carries. He, too, was puzzled by what happened.

"All year we've been a second-half club," said Montgomery, who was positive the Eagles would rally from their 14-3 halftime deficit. "But it seemed like we gave up. It was a terrible feeling."

"We just failed to capitalize on a long drive early in the game," the soft-spoken Montgomery recalled in the solemn Eagles' dressing quarters. "It seems everybody's dropped their heads."

"We couldn't seem to get together on the sidelines. We weren't jovial, but tense. I wasn't uptight. I wish I could have got the other guys psyched up the way I was," Montgomery added.

Linebacker Jerry Robinson shrugged his shoulders and said: "You can't defend against the big play. When it happens, it happens. The Raiders deserved to win."

John Bunting, another linebacker, said Oakland used an Eagles' trait to win its second of three Super Bowl appearances.

"They had the opportunities and they took advantage of them," Bunting said. "We didn't."

Defensive back Herman Edwards, a victim of Oakland quarterback Jim Plunkett's long passes, felt the lack of pressure by the defensive line was the answer to his problem.

"Plunkett had time to throw, time to look for his receivers," said Edwards.

The Eagles sacked Plunkett eight times in beating the Raiders 10-7 during the regular season. They got to the Oakland quarterback just once in the Super Bowl.

Charley Johnson, the middle guard in the Eagles' three-man front, couldn't explain the difference in the two games.

"I don't know. I don't know how to answer that," he said. "They didn't do anything different. They used a basic offense and a basic defense. They just scored more than we did."

Quarterback Ron Jaworski, who was intercepted only 12 times all season, had three passes picked off Sunday. He offered no excuses.

"All I can say is that I don't think we ever gave up, although when they went ahead in the third quarter 17-3 it meant we had to get three scores," Jaworski noted.

Linebacker Bill Bergey, who played in his first Super Bowl game after 12 years in the league, said: "They (the Raiders) just played well, came up with some quick scores. If I come back to the Super Bowl, I don't know anything I'd change in preparing for the game. We just didn't have the intensity that we played with throughout the season."

The Eagles were glum, dazed, disappointed, unbelieving. They shook their heads in wonderment at the sound beating they took. But there were no tears.

Coach Dick Vermeil led the way when he said the better football team won.

"They deserve to be world champions. They outplayed us. They turned broken plays into big plays."

Pirates Win...

God, I don't know what we'll do." But Sikes played sick and did a great job controlling the game.

"Those two foul shots at the end were crucial."

Sikes finished with 10 points and five rebounds. Also in double figures for ECU, which shot 50.8% (31-61) for the game from the floor was Sam Jones with 20 points. "Sam got most of her points in the second half, when we really needed them," Andruzzi said.

Uva, now 16-3, got 18 points from Mahony, 13 from Debby Stroman and 11 from Ackerman. The Lady Cavaliers ended up shooting 46.7% (32-69) from the floor for the day.

The Uva-ECU game preceded the Virginia-Ohio State game, which was nationally televised and a larger-than-average crowd saw much of the women's game. But Andruzzi said her women handled it well.

"The Virginia crowd was well over 6,000 (by the end of the game) but the kids overcame the cheering and waving well," Andruzzi said. "They kept things under control."

The Lady Pirates return home Wednesday to meet N.C. State, their second straight nationally-ranked opponent. The Lady Wolfpack were ranked 12th in last week's poll but is coming off an 80-60 shellacking at Maryland.

Slipper Fits—Raiders Champs...

much out of desperation as anything else because prized rookie Marc Wilson simply wasn't ready for the job.

Given the chance, Plunkett flourished, weaving the Raiders through the regular season and the mine field that awaits any wild-card team in the playoffs. When it was over, he was the Most Valuable Player in the Super Bowl and beamed at the designation.

"I guess," he said, "I showed a few people Jim Plunkett wasn't through yet."

The Eagles will be the first to testify to that. Plunkett picked their pockets all day long, settling for short passes underneath the deep backs and spicing them with an occasional bomb, just to show Philadelphia he is still capable of throwing home runs.

The game went badly for the Eagles right from the start. On their third play from scrimmage, Ron Jaworski threw his first pass. It was complete...to Oakland linebacker Rod Martin — the first of a record three swipes recorded by Martin in the game.

"I just dropped back and played the ball," said Martin, rather matter-of-factly.

He returned the interception from midfield to the Philadelphia 30 and seven plays later Plunkett had the Raiders in the end zone with a 2-yard pass to Cliff Branch.

For a fleeting moment, Philadelphia thought it had the tying touchdown late in the first quarter when Jaworski hit Rod Parker with a 40-yard pass in the end zone. But an illegal motion penalty against Harold Carmichael nullified the play and moments later Plunkett and King burned the Eagles with their 80-yard TD for a 14-0 lead.

Early in the second period, the Eagles got on the scoreboard when barefoot kicker Tony Franklin converted a 30-yard field goal.

Then, in the last 3½ minutes of the first half, Philadelphia drove from its 27 to the Oakland 11. The Raider defense stiffened and the Eagles tried to settle for three more points. Instead, they got none when linebacker Ted Hendricks blocked Franklin's 28-yard field goal try.

"It's probably the easiest field goal I've ever blocked," Hendricks said. "I didn't even penetrate. I just stepped up there and jumped." When you're 6-foot-7 like the "Mad Stork," a jump sometimes is all that's needed.

The blocked field goal sent the Eagles into the dressing room on a depressing note. It got worse when they came out for the second half. Plunkett drove the Raiders to their third touchdown, this time hitting Branch with a 29-yard scoring pass. Branch simply outwrestled rookie cornerback Roynell Young for the ball.

"We get paid to get open, so I got open," Branch said with a shrug.

Young recalled how close the play had come to being an interception.

"I zeroed in on the ball," the rookie said. "I had a feel for it, but then I lost it."

"That play was just a world championship catch," said Philadelphia Coach Dick Vermeil. "It was a super job."

Now the Raiders were clearly in control. They were dominating the line of scrimmage and had constructed a 21-3 lead. They had the Eagle defensive backs bickering among themselves.

"They were upset," said King. "They were saying things like, 'Hey, what's going on here?'"

The answer was Plunkett, pulling one completion after another out of his bag of tricks. If you want to know about a quarterback, ask his receivers. Branch offered this testimony:

"Jim Plunkett is the most efficient quarterback I've ever played with. He can take off and scramble. That gives you a lot of zing. Jim Plunkett gave us the kind of leadership we needed all season. What kind of leadership? He wins. That's the only kind of leadership you need."

Before the third quarter was over, Chris Bahr kicked a 46-yard field goal to make it 24-3. Still, the Eagles weren't dead.

"Going into the fourth quarter, I still thought we had a shot," Vermeil said. "But we just could not generate anything."

Oakland's defense had something to do with that. The Raiders, smelling victory and savoring the chance to stick it to the establishment again, were swarming over the Eagles at that point.

They grudgingly surrendered Philadelphia's only TD on Jaworski's 8-yard pitch to tight end Keith Kreple at the start of the final period and then finished the Eagles off. Bahr's 35-yard field goal completed the scoring and when time ran out the Raiders were champions of the league they are suing.

"It's hard to find the words to express how I feel," said Coach Tom Flores. "It's great to be No.1 and to do it the way we did, as underdogs, overcoming adversity. I'm really proud to be a part of it."

John Matuszak, the swaggering giant of a defensive end whose early-morning visit to Bourbon Street shook the Raiders' camp at midweek, could not resist a dig at Vermeil. The Eagles' coach said he would have sent "The Tooz" home if he played for Philadelphia.

"I like to go out four nights before a game, not three or two or one," Matuszak said. "Lookit, Dick didn't go out once, but we won. That made it extra sweet."

Then Matuszak added a somber note, saying he had dedicated the game to a 15-year-old boy named John Filbeck who is suffering from cancer.

"He's my friend," said Matuszak, "and his favorite number is 72. That's my uniform number and he's got my jersey if I see him."

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, JAN. 27, 1981

YOUR DAILY Horoscope

from the Carroll Righter Institute

GENERAL TENDENCIES: The morning can bring some problems you do not need, but the afternoon finds you able to overcome obstacles easily. Listen closely to suggestions made by close ties.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Avoid calling on a difficult person early in the day. Be alert to carelessness on the part of others. Use good judgment.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) A financial matter needs more study before making a definite decision. Make this a most worthwhile day.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Show others that you have poise if some unusual situation comes up today. Be sure not to lose your temper with anyone.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) A private matter could be upsetting early in the day, but later everything works out to your advantage.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Get rid of whatever is not practical in the morning and later you can be happy with your friends. Relax at home tonight.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You can take care of an important home matter early in the day and later expand where your career is concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Avoid changing present arrangement at work until you have first studied it well. Plan how to gain your finest aims.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Find a much better way of carrying through with agreements you have made with others. Strive to be more successful.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Steer clear of an irate associate in the morning and later all will straighten out. Safeguard your reputation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Use extreme care in handling all work ahead of you and avoid possible trouble. Plan how to gain your finest aims.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Doing something special for persons you really like brings excellent results at this time. Express happiness.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Avoid arguments at home early in the day and later there will be real harmony. Make long-range plans for the future.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she will be one of those capable young persons who can get at the core of a situation and then know how best to handle it. Be sure to give chores early in life that could pave the way to success later. Give fine spiritual training.

Adele Astaire Dies After Long Illness

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP)

A private funeral will be held for Adele Astaire Douglass, a Nebraska-born hooper who danced across Broadway stages with brother Fred Astaire before retiring at the peak of her career to marry a British nobleman.

Mrs. Douglass, 83, died Sunday in a Scottsdale hospital after a lengthy illness.

Her brother, 81, had visited her in the hospital.

The Astaires, children of an immigrant Austrian brewer, were raised in Omaha, Neb. They moved to New York in the 1920s, and danced in some of the stage's biggest musical comedy hits, including "Funny Face" and "Lady Be Good."

As late as 1945, a critic wrote: "Many a fan who saw her on Broadway still mourns Adele's passing from the stage. For the Astaires were the most adroit and versatile dance team the United States theater ever knew."

Miss Astaire quit the stage in 1932 to marry Lord Charles Cavendish, son of the Duke of Devonshire, and went to live in his castle in Ireland.

"Women gain wisdom more quickly than men, their wisdom enables them to fend off age with greater ease to retain their independence and individuality," she said at the time of her marriage to Lord Charles, three years younger than herself.

"They should never tie themselves up to husbands older than themselves. That is an old-fashioned custom and should be discarded," she said.

Lord Charles died in 1944. In 1947, his widow married Kingman Douglass in Warrenton, Va., and moved to Montego Bay, Jamaica.

Douglass died in October 1971, eight months after he and his wife had moved to Phoenix, Ariz.

In 1972, the opening of New York City's Uris Theater featured the Astaires' first appearance on Broadway in more than 40 years. Mrs. Douglass had just been released from a hospital after recovering from a broken hip.

The nature of her last illness was not disclosed by Scottsdale Memorial Hospital. The New York Times reported today that family members said she suffered a stroke Jan. 6 and never recovered consciousness.

Forecasts Ill For One Of Big Clients

By PETER J. BOYER

AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) —

Herb Jacobs, a TV prognosticator worthy of attention if for no other reason than his delightfully crude delivery, foretells ill for one of his biggest clients, ABC.

"If figures, don't lie," Jacobs recently told a convention of California broadcasters, "ABC should have more to worry about than NBC."

Jacobs, a programming consultant whose clients include ABC's five owned-and-operated television stations, emphatically stated his belief that NBC President Fred Silverman is drawing more negative criticism than he deserves.

"He's still the most capable and the most dangerous competitor in the business," Jacobs said. "But bad news makes good copy and it's always been fashionable to kick around a so-called genius."

Having already kicked a genius today (my Tommy Lasorda doll) and not anxious to appear unduly fashion-conscious, I'll pass comment on that observation.

Anyway, Jacobs went on to make a solid point about a possible ABC-NBC struggle for second place that has less to do with Silverman's esteemed skills than with ABC programming failings.

Jacobs pointed out that only 29.5 percent of ABC's prime time shows are drawing 30 percent or more audience shares, a level considered safe from cancellation. And, he says, prospects for ABC's future are dim, based on that network's current schedule.

(By the way, ABC was to have made a couple of minor schedule changes on Friday, including the insertion of "Foul Play" into its Monday lineup.)

On Monday, Jacobs predicts, ABC will fall on its face without "Monday Night Football." ABC's "Dynasty," described by Jacobs as "yet another horny nighttime soap," won't hold off NBC's movie entry. CBS owns the night with "M-A-S-H," "House Calls" and "Lou Grant."

On Tuesday, which has been an ABC fortress, Jacobs reckons NBC will move to the top (it's a weak night for CBS) because NBC's "Sheriff Lobo" is "low-brow enough to steal" audience from ABC's "Happy Days" and "Laverne and Shirley." ABC's other Tuesday entries, "Three's Company" and "Too Close for Comfort" are fading, Jacobs suggests, the former because Suzanne Somers is gone and the latter because, as Jacobs charmingly put it, "it's really a dog being held up by 'Three's Company.'"

Wednesday is already NBC's night and, Jacobs predicts, will remain so. Thursday is CBS' night, with ABC second and NBC third, and will also stay put, Jacobs says.

But Friday, Friday is "Disasterville" for ABC, in Jacobs' thinking. With CBS'

"Dallas" earning 60 percent of the audience, and "Dukes of Hazzard" performing well in front of it, Friday is also Disasterville for NBC. Jacobs predicted big things for "Nero Wolfe," but that NBC show finished seventh from the bottom of the weekly ratings in its premiere.

ABC owns Saturday night with "Love Boat" and "Fantasy Island," and should breathe a little life into "Charlie's Angels" by moving it to Saturday. Jacobs predicts better things for NBC's "Gangster Chronicles" and "Walking Tall" than seem supportable. That latter show made its premiere to 28 percent of the audience, compared to a 37 share for ABC's "Love Boat," which played opposite it.

Sunday is CBS' strongest night. Jacobs thinks NBC's entry of "CHiPs" and a movie is good for second place.

So, as Herb Jacobs sees it,

ABC is a network in trouble. NBC is on the rise. And "the gloating press, sneering security analysts and carping critics" won't have Fred Silverman to kick around any more.

Hmm. I wonder if ABC has any geniuses?

Bay Area Attracting A Flock Of Filmmakers

By DAVID EINHSTEIN

Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) —

"It seems like in Los Angeles they look for you to fail," said film producer Saul

Zaentz. "But up here everybody wants each other to succeed."

And that, he said, is one of the main reasons why the San Francisco Bay area can claim to be a new Mecca for the motion-picture industry.

Zaentz, co-producer of the Academy Award-winning "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," is part of a new breed of producers at the cutting edge of an industry rooted for years in the glamour and big money of Hollywood.

The list of northern Californians making movies is impressive. At the top is a triumvirate including Zaentz, George Lucas of "Star Wars" fame and Francis Ford Coppola, the larger-than-life director of the "Godfather" movies.

Other producer-directors like Mike Ritchie ("Semi-Tough" and "The Island"), John Korty ("The Autobiography of Miss Jane Pittman"), Phil Kaufman ("The Invasion of the Body Snatchers") and Carroll Ballard ("The Black Stallion") have solidified the Bay area as a formidable challenge to Los Angeles.

"The work atmosphere ... has always been more conducive to freedom," said Zaentz, a long-time northern California resident who headed Fantasy Records' rise in the '70s and now heads Fantasy Films.

"Film people have to go to New York and Los Angeles because that's where the big money and the big action are," he said. "But if they had their choice, they'd probably live in San Francisco."

Korty, who also produced the Academy Award-winning documentary, "Who Are The DeBolts and Where Did They

Kenny Rogers Quick To Decide

NEW YORK (AP) — It doesn't take singer Kenny Rogers long to make up his mind.

Less than a week after he first saw it, Rogers has agreed to buy the $5-room Beverly Hills mansion of movie producer Dino De Laurentiis.

He'll pay $14.5 million, reportedly a record price for the sale of a private estate, a realty company announced Sunday.

Rogers made the offer after several days of negotiations, according to Sotheby's International Realty Corp., a subsidiary of the London art auction firm which helped arrange the sale.

The firm said escrow papers were signed in Los Angeles on Saturday, and Rogers is planning to move into the 10-acre estate, known as "The Knoll," by late March.

Starring In TV Movie Drama

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Susan Clark, Mitchell Ryan and Jennifer Warren star in "The Choice," the story of a mother and her unmarried daughter who must make a decision about her pregnancy.

The two-hour movie will be telecast on CBS on Tuesday, Feb. 10.

Miss Clark plays the mother and Largo Woodruff is her daughter. Ryan is the girl's father, and Miss Warren plays a confidante of Miss Clark.

Tuesday Weld As 'Madame X'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Tuesday Weld will star in a new two-hour version of the classic "Madame X" for NBC.

"Madame X" began as a play in France and has been made into six previous motion pictures. The first was in 1915 and the last was in 1966 starring Lana Turner.

Miss Weld plays Holly Richardson, who marries into a wealthy political family and is forced to abandon her husband and daughter by a tragic accident.

FOCUS

Contract Time

For the next few weeks, representatives of some of the nation's largest coal companies will try to work out a new labor contract with representatives of the United Mine Workers union. A labor contract is an agreement between workers and employers dealing with wages, hours, working conditions and other matters. When the miners and mine owners failed to agree on a contract three years ago, 160,000 miners walked off their jobs. They stayed away for 16 weeks, shutting down coal production in much of the eastern United States. It was the longest "strike" in the union's history. The current United Mine Workers contract expires March 27.

DO YOU KNOW — Who is the president of the United Mine Workers?

FRIDAY'S ANSWER — Rocky Bleier retired at the end of the 1980 football season.

Problems Aired By Navy Wives

By R.D. GERSH
Associated Press Writer

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) —

The problems some 80 Navy wives discussed at a program on family relationships within a military community weren't new — but the fact the session came under Navy sponsorship was.

They knew about the difficulty of giving birth without a husband around, about the adjustment a first-time father has to make when he arrives home to a new baby, but Saturday they heard a Navy captain say it.

"If they've gone and come home to find the child already born, they may have a big jump to make in the realization he is no longer just a man and a husband, but a father too," said Capt. James L. Chandler, director of child psychiatry at Portsmouth Naval Hospital.

"It's different process when the father's not around," Chandler said of a specific stage in a child's development, but he could have been talking about any.

The women were Navy ombudsmen — liaisons between their husband's ships and shore commands and other families — discussing with medical and social service professionals, both civilian and military, the difficulties of marital and parental relations among the Navy's inevitable deployments and transfers.

The symposium, one of a series sponsored by the Navy Family Services Center, the Naval Hospital and Eastern Virginia Medical School, was an outgrowth of the Navy's slowly growing concern about its families and realization that happy families help keep sailors in uniform.

"This should have been done 150 years ago," said Carol Cronk, an ombudsman for the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Nimitz. "The importance of the family in retention has finally come to light. If the wife's not happy, the husband's going to leave."

They got a number of lectures on child development — with and without fathers around — and sexual adjustment to physical separations.

They got in some direct requests — about better mail service to deployed ships, good Navy day care centers and ways to make the local schools aware that students' behavioral problems may stem from a father's absence.

An activity such as Saturday's "gives us confidence in what we have been saying. It makes us comfortable with what we already know," said Dianne Boughey another Nimitz ombudsman, and it helps in dealing with other wives and families to be able to say "the Navy does care."

It also gives the 10-year-old ombudsman program a stamp of approval, she said.

"Even the master chiefs (the Navy's top enlisted men) now say the ombudsman's program is good. It gives you some credibility in their eyes."

Pitt Farmer Is On Board

RALEIGH — Lawrence Davenport, Pitt County farmer, and seedsman, has been elected to the North Carolina Soybean Producers Association Board of Directors.

A graduate of North Carolina State University, Davenport also serves as vice president of the North Carolina Crop Improvement Association, the Pitt County Planning Board and the mid-East RC & D Council. He belongs to the Farm Bureau, Ruritan Club, Pactolus Baptist Church and the Pactolus Rural Fire Department.

The North Carolina Soybean Producers Association is a soybean trade association that is affiliated to the nationwide American Soybean Association.

Arrest 2 With Marijuana

Greenville Police early Sunday arrested two persons at a dance at Agnes Fullilove School on charges of possession of marijuana.

Chief Glenn Cannon said Goldie McNeil, 16 of 1711 Lincoln Dr. and Rosemary Anderson, 18 of 113 Ridge Place were charged about 12:25 a.m. after a small quantity of marijuana was found in their possession.
