GLASS BLOWN OUT BY STRONG WIND — High winds buffeted the area late Sunday night and early Monday, taking off parts of roofs and demolishing store windows. A store on Dickinson Avenue, above, had its plate-glass window smashed and the Valet Car Wash on Dickinson Ave. sustained heavy damages. Keel's Warehouse lost a portion of its roof to the high winds also. The Kinston Airport recorded gusts of winds this morning topping 30 knots. Malcolm Green of Greenville Utilities reported a number of problems resulting from tree limbs and house services being blown down. "The extremely heavy wind destroyed a number of house services," he explained, "and tree limbs also gave us a lot of trouble. Greenville's Public Works Department reported similar problems. "We had a large number of calls this morning about limbs and debris being in the streets and one call about the roof of a warehouse blocking Smith Street," said Public Works Director Mayo Allen. "We also had at least one tree down this morning." According to Greenville Utilities' Water Plant, the temperature at 8 a.m. today was 56 degrees Fahrenheit and the level of the Tar River was 3.7 feet on the National Weather Service Gauge. Sunday's high and low temperatures were 61 degrees and 15 degrees. Precipitation measured 0.19 inch at 8 a.m. Monday. (Reflector Photo By Tommy Forrest)

Groundhog Signal For More Winter

By JIM McKAY
Associated Press Writer
PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. (AP) — Punxsutawney Phil, the famous weather-forecasting groundhog, today poked his head out of a burrow atop Gobbler's Knob, saw his shadow and predicted six more weeks of winter, according to his interpreter.

"Sco-co-colese. Eeny meeny miny mo," Phil reportedly told Charles Erhard, president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club, and the only man who claims the ability to translate the groundhog's predictions.

"At 7:27 a.m., the king of all weather prognosticators seemed temporarily confused by the unpredictable nature of the winter thus far," said Erhard, after rapping on the door of Phil's heated burrow.

"But Phil definitely saw his shadow. There will be six more weeks of mild winter weather," said Erhard, wearing tails and a silk hat.

As Erhard made the prediction, a crowd of a few hundred who braved wet snow and chilly temperatures, booed loudly.

That means, so the legend goes, six more week of winter weather. No shadow would mean an early spring. The groundhog, according to tradition rooted in Pennsylvania Dutch legend and the Christian feast of Candlemas, will scurry back into the burrow and hibernate for six more weeks if he spots his shadow.

"A mortal man can readily miss the shadow, but Phil never misses it," said Erhard, president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club. "He'll whisper into my ear. He doesn't lie. He tells me the exact truth."

And Erhard says Phil has never been wrong. The groundhog made his first official prediction in this town of 10,000 in 1886.

Last year, by Erhard's count, some 1,500 spectators braved cold winds to hear and film the animal's prediction. Foreign exchange students visit. High school students elect a groundhog king and queen and a man and woman of the year are named at an evening banquet.

"It's a holiday to enjoy without a present or a card," said Elaine Light, whose husband Samuel was president of the club for 25 years.

A pair of the marmots, Phil and his mate Phyllis, are kept in groundhog comfort at the center. Their heated home is complete with a burrow, a tree and a running stream.

"This time of the year, most groundhogs are hibernating and frozen stiff underground. But we've been able to observe them no matter what the temperature in the zoo," said Mrs. Light.

Frederick Greeley, a University of Massachusetts wildlife professor and unofficial groundhog guru, says "somebody should shout down the groundhog's hole that the price of heating oil went up again and that we're really hoping for spring."

How did a furry brown creature who weighs from 4 to 10 pounds and raids vegetable gardens in the summer become an oracle of spring?

"Groundhog Day is a symbol of rebirth and re-growth, a celebration of coming into daylight," Greeley said. "What better symbol of that than an animal coming into the daylight from a dark place?"

In ancient Rome, Groundhog Day was celebrated as the Festival of Light, a symbolic occasion to hail the coming of spring.

Prince Phillip Assails Buildup

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prince Philip of England, maintaining that there is no justification for the "massive buildup" of Soviet armed forces, said the Soviet Union has created world tension with its military aggression and interference in other countries.

The Soviet challenge to the Western world is military and political, not economic, said Prince Philip, husband of England's Queen Elizabeth, in an interview published Sunday in U.S. News & World Report.

"The state of present world tension and the arms race is largely the creation of Soviet military aggression and interference in countries all over the world, so that a reduction in Soviet military power and activity would be a much more effective means of reducing the need for such massive armaments," the prince said.

"Military power and political ambition can only be met by military power and a tough political will," he

WASHINGTON (AP) — A middle-level bureaucrat working for the Federal Bureau of Land Management in Utah quit his job, sold his home and left for the Lake

Tahoe region on California's border to take a higher-paying federal job. Half-way there, he received word that his job was gone.

"When he called (us), he was hysterical, alternately screaming and crying," recalls a government official. "We were sympathetic, but he said, 'God damn it, I don't need sympathy, I need help.'"

The official declined to identify the man.

Bruce Merchant, 30, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and his fiancée drove 200 miles to Oxford, Wis., where he was to start work today at a federal prison. They rented a house, installed a telephone, enrolled her 10-year-old child in school and changed their mailing address.

Last week, when they returned to Fort Wayne, Merchant and his fiancée, who had quit her job, discovered his position had been frozen.

"I have no job, neither does my fiancée," he said. "We're at the government's mercy."

These people and thousands of others have been left out in the cold by President Reagan's hiring freeze, which was designed to symbolize the administration's intent to cut federal spending and reduce the size of federal government. The freeze was made retroactive to Nov. 5.

"The panic, the uncertainty can rip your guts out," says a government official who has taken calls from potential federal employees. "We've literally had threats on our lives," he said, requesting anonymity.

The hiring freeze comes as a shock to those who lost jobs. For those who must administer the program, it is creating turmoil.

"Officials are still trying to figure out how this all will operate," says an Office of Personnel Management spokeswoman.

"We have to sit here and tell these people, 'Gee, I don't know,' when we're asked about jobs," said another official.

The freeze applies to "all departments and establishments and to all types of appointments, temporary as well as permanent, except for certain exempted positions."

Exempted positions include jobs that protect life and property and those for medical, hospital and other health care operations.

The freeze does not affect people who actually have begun new jobs. Nor does it affect the U.S. Postal Service, executive-level jobs or non-career positions in the government's Senior Executive Service.

Hardship exemptions also may be granted under guidelines issued by the administration last week.

Tools Turn Back 'Clock'

OLDEST TOOLS — Archeologist Jack Harris holds photograph showing some of the stone tools believed to be 2.5 million years old, a half million years older than any previously found. (AP Laserphoto)

By KEVIN MCKEAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The date for the origin of human technology has been pushed back half a million years by the discovery in East Africa of primitive stone tools fashioned at least 2.5 million years ago, scientists say.

The tools were found by a French-American team at what may be the remains of an ancient campsite in a now-desolate area of northeastern Ethiopia.

Scientists who have studied them say the artifacts — 48 sharp flakes used like knives and three fist-sized "choppers," all made from volcanic rock — appear to be the first evidence of culture among man's early ancestors.

In addition, the tools may document the beginnings of group behavior by these primitive creatures, as well as the concept of a "home."

The excavated artifacts have yet to be formally announced in the scientific literature, but scientists agreed to discuss them with The Associated Press after they were mentioned at scientific conferences.

They were found by the International Afar Expedition near a remote site known as Hadar in the Afar Triangle region of Ethiopia.

"This essentially takes our knowledge of stone tool manufacture back a half million years over what we had known previously," said Don Johanson of the Cleveland Museum of Natural History, one of the directors of the Afar expedition.

The expedition, also led by Maurice Taieb of the French National Center for Scientific Research (CNRS) in Marseille and Yves Coppens of the Musee de l'Homme in Paris, had earlier found fossils of 3.5 million-year-old pre-human ancestors at Hadar.

Although excavated in 1977, the tools were not logical survey of the area last year, scientists said.

Scientists believe the small, sometimes razor-sharp flakes were used to slice through skin and butcher a carcass. Similar tools from other sites have shown microscopic wear marks, and some fossil animal bones show grooves cut by such tools. The choppers served as a source of the flakes and also may have been used to crush bone.

The next oldest evidence of tool-making comes from a site just over 2 million years old excavated by American anthropologist F. Clark Howell and colleagues at the Omo River in southern Ethiopia.

Tools of nearly that age were found by Louis and Mary Leakey at Olduvai Gorge in Tanzania.

OK Purchase Court House Furnishings

Pitt County Commissioners this morning approved awarding a contract to Carolina Office Equipment Co. for furniture for new court facilities at the court house.

Carolina Office Equipment Co. submitted a low bid of $13,725 for the furniture. The only other bidder was Taff Office Equipment Co. which submitted a bid totaling $15,131.

Ralph Hall, director of the physical plant at Pitt Memorial Hospital told the board that construction of the new bed tower at the medical facility is progressing on schedule. He noted that the 138-bed facility is scheduled to be completed in December and should be opened in January.

In other business this morning, the board approved the final plat for Section 1, Northridge Subdivision on N.C. 30 in the Stokes Community.

Alice Keene, reporting on activities of the Pitt County Community Schools program, said that there was a 36 percent increase in the number of participants last year over 1979, and that there was an eight percent increase in hours of use of school facilities in 1980 as compared with 1979.

Polish Labor Crisis Eases

By ROLAND PRINZ
Associated Press Writer
WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Teams of government and trade union negotiators met today to try to resolve local wildcat strikes by farmers and workers in southern Poland after a national union-government compromise eased Poland's labor crisis.

A commission led by Deputy Agriculture Minister Andrzej Kacala met with representatives of farmers and workers who have been holding a sit-in for a month in a former trade union building in Rzeszow, demanding legalization of a union for the nation's private farmers.

Lech Walesa, the chief of Solidarity, Poland's big independent labor federation, went to Rzeszow to join the worker-farmer negotiating team led by his deputy, Bogdan Lis.

A Solidarity spokesman said Walesa would also go to the province of Bielsko Biala, where a general strike entered its seventh day today. The strike over local and national grievances has shut down 120 plants, municipal offices and transportation systems, the official PAP news agency said.

Solidarity's national coordinating commission on Sunday called off a nationwide one-hour strike scheduled for Tuesday after the government opened the negotiations in Rzeszow. But Walesa warned that the strike would be rescheduled "if there is any attack on us or on the farmers. Solidarity will consider any attack on farmers' unions as being directed against us."

The coordinating commission also called for "supportive" action Tuesday on behalf of the farmers. Walesa said the local Solidarity chapters would determine what this would consist of, but it might include "the display of flags, the wearing of armbands or other manifestations."

The private farmers account for 75 percent of Poland's agricultural production. The deputy agriculture minister said the Supreme Court would review the application for registration of the farmers' union in the next 10 days. Labor leaders said the hearing would be held Feb. 10, and several members of Solidarity's presidium expressed doubt that the government would approve the application.

"The government suggested a mixed commission," he said. "We will be meeting with the government, regardless of tensions or unrest, on a regular basis."

PLANNING . . . Detailed business records kept by wife Mary give the Ozzie Kearney Jr. farming family of Snow Hill the necessary ingredients for important management decisions.

Jointly Plan A Better Season

By WOODY UPCHURCH
NCNU Agricultural Communications

SNOW HILL — Ozzie Kearney Jr. can't grow as much tobacco this year as he did in 1980, so he's planning to grow better tobacco in order to make up in quality what he is losing in quantity.

That may not be easy to do since his '80 crop — which brought about seven cents a pound over the Eastern Belt average — was in the high quality category.

The 32-year-old Rt. 3, Snow Hill tobacco, corn and beef farmer has set for himself an '81 goal that appears to be almost impossible to reach. "I'm going to try to make 37 acres of tobacco generate as much net income as 46 acres did last year," he declares.

Kearney thinks he has an even chance of pulling it off, particularly if he gets a break from the weather.

The Greene County man, who is a public school teacher turned farmer, and his wife Mary have been farming on their own since 1979. Prior to that they were in partnership with Kearney's father.

Kearney, who is heavily involved in community activities and in farm-related organizations, is the latest winner of the Outstanding Young Tobacco Grower Award. This is a belt-wide awards program sponsored by Philip Morris U.S.A. and conducted in this state by the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service. Its purpose is to recognize young farmers for accomplishments as tobacco producers and as community leaders.

"I think this will be an interesting year," Kearney said. "We ought to know a lot more about ourselves as farmers after this season — particularly how good we are at making management decisions."

Mrs. Kearney, a college business graduate, keeps the farm records. "We thought we were keeping good records until we incorporated the farm last year and had to start keeping very detailed records," said Mrs. Kearney. "It's real eye-opening to see where every penny goes. It gives us the kind of information we need to make good business judgements," the farm wife and mother of two small children commented.

Kearney, in the same situation in 1981 as many of his fellow Greene County farmers — has had his basic allotment reduced by 7.5 percent. He is planning some steps to cope with this reduction, though. These steps include:

- Planting a high quality indexing tobacco — NC 82 — without sacrificing disease resistance.
- Keeping nitrogen fertilization rates within the 75 to 80 pounds per acre recommendation of the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service.
- Irrigating to activate fertilizer as well as providing necessary moisture for normal plant growth.
- Participating in the "10 percent" program.
- Improving application of chemicals.
- Scouting fields on a regular basis.

"We're in the heart of tobacco country down here," he said, "and there is a lot of demand for marketing quotas. We decided that we wouldn't get too heavily involved into lease bidding and to grow the amount of tobacco we think we can handle well."

Kearney added, "We want to prove to ourselves that we can grow quality tobacco on the acreage that we have. When we can do that, we'll think about expanding."

Volcker Points To Required Cutbacks

NEW YORK (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker says projected federal spending must be reduced by "tens and tens of billions of dollars" to reduce the government deficit and permit tax cuts.

In an interview Sunday on ABC-TV's "Issues and Answers," Volcker said that if tax cuts alone were approved by Congress, the Federal Reserve's response would be to maintain tight control over the growth of money and credit, almost certainly causing higher interest rates.

"Perhaps there can be techniques for tying action on one with action on the other as we move along," Volcker said of the relationship between tax cuts and spending cuts.

Rep. James R. Jones, the Oklahoma Democrat who is chairman of the House Budget Committee, proposed that tax cuts be made contingent on spending reductions.

Jones, who appeared on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," said spending should be cut in such "big-ticket" areas as food stamps and Social Security, as well as subsidized loan programs to business and individuals.

He also indicated that the military budget would not be exempt from cutting, saying that one of the administration's important tasks was getting defense spending under control.

Volcker's and Jones' suggestions of a link between spending and President Reagan's long-promised tax cuts followed reports that Budget Director David Stockman and the Senate Finance Committee had considered the idea of a "trigger" that would allow the phases of a tax cut to go into effect only if the budget were controlled.

Farm Scene

By LEROY JAMES
Cnty. Ext. Chair.

In agriculture every year has its casualties. Drought, flood, insects, low prices and poor management all account for a good number of farmers going under.

But 1980 proved worse than most as a rare combination of adverse factors afflicted producers across the country. For many, relief is too late. For others, however, survival is possible with fine-tuned management and astute production decisions. Agricultural economists at the University of Georgia point out some keys to survival.

- Analyze each asset under your management. Idle assets, for instance, should be put to work or disposed of with capital shifted to more profitable enterprises.
- Renting marginal land is one practice that begs to be eliminated from an operation. Money saved here can be switched to move productive acres and used to intensify management where it counts.

- Identify and plug every economic leak in the business. (Consider such things as idle borrowed capital, inefficient livestock, excessive machinery repairs, untrained or unsupervised labor, non-productive enterprise and excessive cosmetic expenses.)
- Maintain a flexible management position. Avoid high risk ventures; consider joint investments, leasing expensive equipment and double cropping.
- Plan marketing and buying carefully to take advantage of highs and lows.
- Finally the price outlook for 1981 is generally brighter, but one must consider the enterprises that best fit the available resources. Cost-return analysis is essential in determining the best crops.

Badenoff Is Now Texan

TEMPLE, Texas (AP) — Boris Badenoff, the tiny villain whose plots against the moose and squirrel heroes of TV's "Rocky and Bullwinkle" cartoons seldom bore fruit, has cleared out of Hollywood and moved to central Texas.

His hoarse, vaguely Russian voice occasionally pops up on KTEM Radio nowadays, along with his friends Astro, George Jetson's space-happy dog, Scooby Doo, another pooch that usually haunts Saturday morning television; and Mr. Arrax, a red, long-necked alien featured on several of the cartoon-version "Star Trek" episodes, to name but a few.

Bob Raleigh created the voices for all those characters and 80 others, and Raleigh has said goodbye to Southern California and become a disc jockey in this Texas city.

Raleigh, a Harvard University graduate who gave up a career in psychology because he thought it was too much like "a Jerry Lewis movie," said he still plans occasional visits to the West Coast for voice-dubbing sessions. The demand for character voices remains high, the pay is excellent and the work can be fun.

"When they need a voice for a talking cucumber, you just have to sit there and imagine what a cucumber would sound like," said Raleigh, 36, during a recent break from his duties as morning "jock" at KTEM Radio.

Badenoff, whose name is a pun on the title of the classic Russian play "Boris Godunov," may not be happy without his female sidekick Natasha, but Raleigh says he'll have to adjust.

"I'm tired of moving," said Raleigh. "The people are nice here, and that's good for me now."

Aide Punched A Congressman

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Rep. Albert Lee Smith, R-Ala., who needed five stitches in his head after a punch from an aide knocked him into a marble stairway, says he will ask federal attorneys not to proceed with charges today against two fired aides.

"I am disappointed in a man I had high hopes for," Smith said of Lige Richardson.

Richardson, who along with Pete Gresham was taken into custody for two hours Saturday, said he hit the freshman congressman in the mouth because Smith lied about jobs for minorities.

The two former aides are black. Smith is white.

The incident occurred at a federal courthouse here when the former aides were returning to Smith's office to discuss why they had been fired moments earlier.

Hitting a congressman is a federal offense. Authorities told Richardson and Gresham they wouldn't be charged until Monday. Smith said he would ask the U.S. attorney's office not to proceed with the charges.

Richardson was angry and "was acting irrationally and did not realize the consequences of his act," Smith said.

Richardson said he punched his former boss because "of the fact he lied to us."

The aides met with R.T. Gregg, Smith's administrative assistant, Saturday afternoon to discuss their involvement in Positive Action for Youth. The program tries to locate jobs for minority youths in an effort to combat youth gang problems.

Richardson said he and Gresham were told they were being fired for meeting, without authorization, with Birmingham Mayor Richard Arrington to ask for his support of the program.

Susan McElvey, Smith's press secretary, said the two aides were fired for repeatedly violating the congressman's rule that they were not to push programs without consulting him first. Smith learned about the jobs program from a newspaper article rather than from his aides, she said.

Richardson was an aide to former Birmingham Mayor David Vann and Gresham is a part-time student of religion and philosophy at the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

Richardson said he and Gresham campaigned for Smith thinking the former Mountain Brook insurance executive would help create jobs for minorities.

"We felt we had been used. We did nothing wrong," Richardson said. "And then he fired us."

An aide to the congressman said Smith was so impressed by the two men last summer he borrowed $14,000 to help them clear their debts before they joined his Birmingham staff.

Sen. East Questioning Some Aid To Disabled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John East says he opposes some federal requirements for helping the handicapped as expensive and unnecessary.

East, the first wheelchair-bound senator in several decades, said last week he supports many federal regulations for removing architectural barriers for the handicapped, such as widening doorways in public buildings.

But he questioned the necessity of providing lifts on public buses and other, more expensive requirements.

"We are going to have to look at the cost-benefit balance here of what is required to accommodate physically disabled people," East said.

victim confined to a wheelchair for most of his adult life, East's opinions on the handicapped are likely to receive much attention.

During the last session of Congress, some legislators tried unsuccessfully to restrict federal programs calling for buildings to be made accessible to the handicapped and for schools to educate disabled children.

The Reagan administration is reviewing how far to press requirements for the handicapped. Officials are examining whether New York City should be required to spend millions of dollars to build elevators at every subway stop.

East said he generally is sympathetic to legislation for the handicapped, because "if people cannot function and get out, they can't become self-sufficient, and that's ultimately what we want."

East is a member of the Senate Handicapped Committee.

Changes At College Eyed

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The new president of Guilford College says he's planning big changes in the Quaker institution's curriculum to cope with a changing world.

Dr. William R. Rogers said new courses such as world justice, population studies, urbanization problems in emerging countries and the psychological effects of microelectronics may be needed to cope with changes in our society.

"We need increased work that links theory and practice," he said.

Rogers became the sixth president of the college Saturday. He said the institution must strive to produce an education that inspires love, excellence and benevolence.

He told representatives from more than 180 colleges and universities at the ceremonies that colleges must be prepared to confront inflation, recession, government restrictions and productivity.

Rogers came to Guilford College after serving as chairman of the department of applied theology at Harvard University. He succeeds Dr. Grimsley Hobbs, who resigned to return to teaching at Guilford.

More Treasures Of Old China

PEKING (AP) — Chinese archaeologists, digging near the site where the famed "pottery army" was unearthed, have found important bronze figures, chariots and horses, the official Xinhua news agency reported Saturday.

The 8-foot-long chariots each have four horses and a driver. These discoveries "are the earliest, largest, most complicated and best-preserved bronze chariots and horses so far found in China," Xinhua said.

They were found at a site west of the tomb of Emperor Chin Shih Huang, who unified China and founded the Chin dynasty (221-207 B.C.), Xinhua said. In 1974, peasants digging an irrigation well discovered the first of hundreds of life-size figures — the pottery army — guarding Chin's tomb.

HOLIDAY INN
MEMORIAL DRIVE
Delicious Dinner—6:30 p.m.
Meeting—7:30 p.m.

BACKGROUND—Herb and Edi Hutchinson grew up in the state of Maine and they both found the Lord as little children. Herb was raised in a small country town and Edi's childhood was spent in the city of Portland, Maine. They did not know one another until a blind date made that meeting possible and about a year later they were married.

HERB—In Herb's late teens he began being involved in church youth leadership which carried over into his early twenties and marriage. In each church he attended Herb has been involved in many areas and feels that it is very important to be involved in your local body, leading, helping and assisting in any way that you can.

Before the Lord's calling, the "GREATEST" calling, Herb had held many varied and interesting positions such as—State Health Inspector—Insurance Agent—Assistant Manager in retail and radio advertising sales.

EDI—Edi's involvement in Church has mostly been in music (piano) and Sunday School areas. She has taught in many classes and together they have worked in church school. The Lord worked an exciting miracle in Edi's life. After moving to the state of Vermont in 1970 the Lord opened the door for Edi to attend the University of Vermont, and while working as a teacher's aide, plus keeping house, she graduated with HONORS and received her teaching degree.

TODAY—Herb and Edi as a family with their sons, Mark and Jeff, travel nationwide sharing the Gospel in music and word. The fact that they minister AS A FAMILY—ministers TO FAMILIES—that the Lord can keep THE FAMILY TOGETHER and bring FAMILIES BACK TOGETHER! As part of their ministry Edi has conducted "seminars" for ladies and together they have held husband and wife seminars.

Herb and Edi have appeared on Christian television in various parts of the country and have been music guests on a national program called "Celebration."

An important part of their ministry is praise and worship and the desire of their hearts is that JESUS be lifted up and that people find the Lord as their personal Saviour. Also their ministry is to the body...to the families of God...to Christians...that they will draw closer to their Lord and truly make "Him Lord of their life!...In every area!"

CABLED VEST

Pat's Pointers

By Pat Trexler

Take a vested interest in your '81 wardrobe with a simple-to-knit cabled vest that's easy on your budget. Seed stitch borders are knitted in as you go. Directions are written for sizes small (8-10), medium (12-14) and large (16-18). Knitting worsted weight yarn is used with a gauge of five stitches per inch.

To obtain directions for knitting the cabled vest, send your request for Leaflet No. W830 with $1.00 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Pat Trexler, "The Daily Reflector," P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582.

Or you may order Kit No. W.K830, containing instructions and yarn, by sending check or money order for $10.00 to Pat Trexler at the same address. Specify your choice of Natural, Denim Mist, Camel, Burgundy or Banana. Price includes shipping charges.

DEAR PAT: I tried and liked your idea for working short rows for shoulder shaping in place of stair step bind-offs, but I have a couple of questions. First, when I work the short rows, I find that I have holes in my work where I turn in mid-row. If you can tell me how to eliminate this, I would then like to know how else I can use the short row technique. — Jeanne S., Staten Island, N.Y.

For those who may have missed earlier columns on short rows, I'll start by saying that this is a method of shaping where you work part way across a row and then turn your work to the other side and work back across that row.

At the point where the turn is made, a small hole will appear in the finished work. In some nubby or fluffy yarns, this is barely noticeable, but in smooth yarns, it is quite apparent.

Over the years, I have tried various ways to eliminate this hole, but the method I like best I found in a book entitled, "Knitting from the Top" by Barbara Walker.

When you are working on a knit row, knit all stitches to the point where you are to turn your work. Then, bring the yarn to the front and, holding it in that position, slip the next stitch from the left needle to the right needle. Now, take the yarn to the back of your work, return the slip stitch to the left needle and turn your work to the purl side.

When a short row is to be made on a purl row, purl all stitches to the turning point, then take the yarn to the back of your work, slip next stitch from left to right needle, bring yarn forward and return the stitch to left needle before turning to the knit side of your work.

There are many times when short rows can be put to good use when shaping knit garments. The full-busted woman needs extra fullness across the front of a sweater and the use of darts made with short rows can give this extra fullness without changing the length of the underarm seam. Fellows with "bay windows" can use the same type of extra fullness in that area.

As an example of where and how to place darts, let's assume you are working with a gauge of five stitches and seven rows per inch. Starting at the bottom of a sweater or dress bodice, work until piece measures two inches less than the required length to the underarm shaping if you are going to make bust darts.

Starting on a knit row, work to within four stitches of the end of row, then slip the next stitch as previously described. Turn, place a marker on the needle, purl to within four stitches of end of that row. Again slip a stitch in manner described, turn and place a marker on needle.

On succeeding rows, you will work in the same way except that you knit or purl to within four stitches of a marker instead of within four stitches of end of row.

Continue to work back and forth in this manner until you have six or seven markers on each end of the row. At that time you will resume working from one end of the row to the other.

To people who are color blind, the entire color spectrum is seen in yellow and blue tones. It appears as though this condition is inherited as a sex-linked trait and is more common in men than in women, affecting between 5 and 8 percent of the male population. Color vision can be determined by many pseudo-ochromatic tests. One of the simplest is the Dvorine color-perception test. The person being tested reads the numbers on a series of pages, a matter of identifying patterns of colored dots on a background of similar dots of varying colors.

For the proper perspective on the whole spectrum of functional and fashionable eyewear that is available, come to CLEAR VUE OPTICIANS, 1706 8th, Physicians Quadrangle Building A. Dear Abby

Around World, Around Block, Moving Is A Pain

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: IF LOVES TO MOVE were married to a petroleum engineer, as I am, she would soon lose her appetite for moving.

I recently completed my 72nd move! These moves have encompassed 17 foreign countries, three states and four Canadian provinces. To date, the record has been six moves in less than 11 months!

Each of our four offspring has attended over 30 different schools. Happily, none has suffered either academically or psychologically. I consider myself fortunate to have been able to spend two consecutive Christmases in the same house.

In the last 30 years, I have set up housekeeping in the bustling cities of the Far (and Near) East, in the steaming jungles of South America, and I've even pitched tents in the deserts of Saudi Arabia. I've braved native uprisings, revolutions, sandstorms, tropical floods and was left completely homeless twice through evacuations.

Small wonder my family and friends think I'm crazy, but were they to read OF LOVES TO MOVE, they would consider her to be totally insane! Sign me...

MOVIN' RIGHT ALONG

DEAR ABBY: LOVES TO MOVE is sitting on a gold mine! She should help others (for a fee) who hate to go through the hassles of packing and moving.

I don't think she's any crazier than the men who buy a different car every other year, but I do think she's crazy if she doesn't use all that energy to earn money. If she doesn't live in a town large enough to make money helping people move, she can "move" to a bigger town.

ALSO LOVES TO MOVE

DEAR ALSO: Move over for another reader who shares your view:

DEAR ABBY: Why do you think the woman who loves to move should have her head examined? Let her do her thing. And I think her husband deserves praise for understanding. I know people with sillier and more expensive hobbies. At least she is moving within the same city, that keeps the cost down.

We also moved a lot but always to another country — usually crossing an ocean. I'll bet lots of people thought we were nuts, but I enjoyed it tremendously.

LIESEL IN SEAL BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from LOVES TO MOVE made my day. My husband and I also love to move, but this is the first time we ever heard of anyone else who did. We've been married for 26 years and have moved so many times we actually lost count. (We even moved back into the same house three times!)

It's expensive and hard work. We're not young any more, and I hope our next move is to the cemetery.

CRAZY LADY

DEAR ABBY: LOVES TO MOVE answered her own question: "I'm never satisfied." I know how her children must feel, because my mother was also a mover. No sooner did we get settled in a new house when Mother found one she liked better. It was hard on us kids having to make new friends in a strange neighborhood.

I had a friend who had the same problem, only worse. Her mother moved 33 times in 14 years, and they never left the neighborhood! This friend's father woke up in bed with a neighbor lady one morning. His wife had actually moved two doors down while he was out of town, and she never told him about it. He came home in the middle of the night, let himself in the darkened house and went directly to bed. The Widow Jensen never got over the shock.

Your advice was perfect. LOVES TO MOVE needs to have her head examined.

HAVEN'T MOVED IN 35 YEARS

Give Swirl Cookies A Whirl

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

If you are an experienced baker, you can probably make up a batch of swirl cookies with ease. But if your baking experience is limited, a detailed recipe will help you.

That's just what we have provided for cooks who want to make the following delicious version of swirl cookies. After two neophytes tried baking them, we came up with directions that a third novice followed easily. Her cookies looked professional and tasted deliciously rich and crunchy. Best of all, these walnut whirls store exceptionally well.

WALNUT SWIRLS

2 1/4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
1 cup (two 1/4-pound sticks) butter, at room temperature
1 cup sugar
1 large egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 teaspoon molasses
1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/4 teaspoon ground cloves
1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
3/4 cup walnuts, finely chopped

Sift together the flour, baking powder and salt. In the large bowl of an electric mixer, cream the butter and sugar; beat in the egg and vanilla until blended. Add the flour mixture; at high speed beat until blended — dough will be soft and sticky. Divide into thirds. Wrap 2 portions separately in saran, flattening each into a square. To the portion remaining in the bowl, add the molasses, cinnamon, cloves and ginger and stir until blended; stir in the walnuts. Divide in half; wrap each half separately in saran. Chill all portions in freezer or refrigerator until surfaces are firm to the touch. On a lightly floured sheet of wax paper, with a stockinet-covered rolling pin, roll one of the plain doughs into an 8-inch square — if dough cracks on edges, mend with fingers, sprinkle with flour, turn over and continue to roll. On another sheet of lightly floured wax paper, roll out one of the spiced walnut doughs into an 8- by 6-inch rectangle; with one hand underneath the paper for support and one hand on top, gently slip the spiced dough onto the middle of the plain dough, leaving 1 inch at each of two sides. Using fingertips, press down lightly to ensure that the two rolled doughs stick together; remove the top layer of wax paper. Starting from the 6-inch edge of the walnut dough, roll up the combined doughs tightly; use the wax paper underneath as a helper to lift and roll the doughs. (If the dough is too sticky to roll in this way, refrigerate the sheet until stiff.) After rolling, tuck in the ends, wrap in wax paper and chill thoroughly. Repeat with remaining dough. Using a sharp knife, cut chilled rolls into 1/4-inch slices and place about 1 inch apart on greased cookie sheets. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until edges brown — 8 to 10 minutes. Makes about 5 dozen.

IT'S INVENTORY TIME AGAIN!

CLOSED ALL DAY TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 3RD

We'll be closed all day Tuesday to check our inventory and prepare for a very exciting sale!

Hurry in Wednesday for lots of special values during our spectacular After-Inventory Clearance Sale.

Streamlining A Staff

Congressman Walter B. Jones moved into the chairmanship of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee vowing to cut the size of the staff.

The North Carolina First Congressional District congressman said the size of the staff he inherited dismayed him. He promptly issued 21 termination notices which, he claimed eliminated $500,000 per year in salaries.

Jones said he planned further efforts to streamline the staff and indicated this could be done without affecting the committee's efficiency in any manner.

We have only vigorous applause for our congressman's efforts. If government is to be made more efficient someone is going to have to take the lead in operating with the least number of employees needed to do the job well.

If such leadership is to develop it will have to begin in Congress, itself.

It has long been accepted by observers of government that too many people are on the payroll. We hope cutting down time has arrived and Rep. Jones will continue to set an example by streamlining the committee he heads.

Investment In The Future

The Greenville Public Works Department showed off its new facility at 1500 Beatty Street with an open house yesterday afternoon.

The new work area, which replaces an old one on W. Third

It is an outstanding facility and represents an investment by local citizens in the community's future.

THIS AFTERNOON

Vote Can Backfire

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — The art of making law is a slow and deliberate process, designed to prevent hot tempers, hysteria, and selfish interests from ruling.

That is why there are committees to gather information and argue, two legislative chambers to counter one another, and several readings of proposals and votes by lawmakers.

It seems at times, though, that the representatives get out of touch with what people want, and are too available for influence by special interest lobbyists and governmental bureaucrats with their impressive reams of computer printouts.

And so the notion of voter initiative continues to make its presence felt, and it is possible that before the 1981 General Assembly completes its business, that matter will be on the floor for debate.

Initiative is simply the method by which citizens, having gained sufficient signatures on a petition, may put a governmental question to a statewide vote with the results binding in law.

Proposition 13
The famous California tax-cutting assault popularly known as Proposition 13 which has resulted in heightened cost-consciousness in every state of the nation and at the federal level is the best known example. As many as half the states now provide some form of citizen initiative, and in this year's elections more than 200 questions appeared on ballots in various states ranging from tax-cutting measures, bond issues, nuclear power referendums, state government reforms, housing proposals, and so on.

Spearheaded by a taxpayers association in Burke County, the groundwork is currently being done for consideration of voter initiative in North Carolina. The state's Consumer Council is taking a close look at the topic.

And while that organization has not yet taken a stand as yet, the subject is likely to lead to some hot debate. Bill Winn, Consumers Council President, is personally opposed to the effort to expand the use of citizen initiatives, and carefully outlined his position in an opinion column printed in late January in The Christian Science

BILL NOBLITT

Monitor.

Winn's dissent is largely based on the constitutional safeguards which were designed into our system of government which, at its heart, is "representative government rather than direct government" with "human excesses to be curbed by deliberation."

Says Winn of the foundation: "The makers of the Constitution would consider wide use of initiatives as simplistic and drastic. They thought that when the people go wrong they may go wrong terribly. They preferred evolution to revolution."

To Disaster

N.C. Historian William Powell characterizes the Tar Heel temperament as one prone to dash headlong toward disaster, but usually recovering in time to retreat.

But in direct voter initiative, complex matters such as taxation or energy or criminal justice may be grossly influenced by passing tempers. Winn worries that "the common good requires the making of unpopular decisions" and that the "common welfare can be endangered by reckless actions coming out of irrational impulses or provincialism."

The prospect of television viewers responding by push button to matters of national importance "may not be as promising as some advocates think. During periods of hysteria there can be simplistic public responses."

From Burke County where he is in retirement, former U.S. Senator Sam Ervin adds his dissent. In a recent interview, Ervin rejected the initiative as a drastic departure from representative government as established by the U.S. Constitution. Representatives are supposed to weigh all measures in their various effects, and exercise leadership in making decisions. The voters have recourse, Ervin says. They can vote the representatives out.

To the editor:

This year is a special time in all America. The Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History joins with our counterparts in urging citizens of this great nation everywhere to assess African and Afro-American heritage, to evaluate present status and to project for the future.

Why Afro-American (Black) History Month? The true facts of the contributions of Afro-Americans to the discovery, pioneering, development and continuance of America have not properly and adequately been presented in the textbooks, media and other communication devices in this country. Indeed, for the most part, Blacks have been left out of the written record about America. The fact that some changes have been made in recent years points succinctly to the need for a fuller report about Afro-American contribution. Designating February each year is an attempt by the Association to remedy this neglect and provide for all Americans the information needed for creative and empathetic understanding about the Afro-American in this nation.

The Association dreams of the day when the sharing and contributions of all Americans in America will be so appreciated and so accepted and so understood that there will be no longer a need for any ethnic group to call attention to its contribution to and its exploits for the good of the country. That day has not arrived, as all will agree, and until it does, we shall continue to provide the information needed about the Afro-American citizens in the United States and abroad, the Association says.

This year's theme is BLACK HISTORY: ROLE MODEL FOR YOUTH. While February is the specially acclaimed month, any time of the year is appropriate for the study of Black History or its observance.

To the editor:

Judging by news accounts of the meetings that have taken place regarding revaluation of real property in Pitt County, political pressure seems to be building.

Few like to see real estate taxes rise. Yet, it is actually fairer for revaluation to take place periodically. Otherwise, those with older property fail to pay their fair share of the tax burden. Those with new homes pay more than their fair share.

My property was recently doubled in value. The revaluation is not higher than its actual market value, and I have no problem with such a higher figure, so long as others pay their fair share and the tax rate is adjusted downward appropriately.

My concern is that those with older property may be successful in reducing their own revaluations by political methods, and that my tax rate doesn't go down as far as it should. If that happens, I'll end up paying more than my fair share.

My best interest will be served if officials will not cave in to political pressure, and call it as it is.

AN IDEA WHOSE TIME HAS COME!

BY ART BUCHWALD

Business In Washington

WASHINGTON — The people who have been the most adamant about government spending have been from the business community. I haven't spoken to a businessmen's group in the past three years which hasn't been critical of all the taxpayers' money being wasted by the bureaucrats in Washington.

The only problem with their argument is that, in many cases, the government is big business' major client.

While they all voted for Ronald Reagan because he promised to cut down the cost of the government, big business is starting to have second thoughts about the economics Mr. Reagan is proposing.

I happened to discover this

when I stopped by a large computer office the other day that does millions of dollars of business with the government.

The office manager was shaking. "Reagan just put a freeze on all new equipment for government offices."

"That's a good start," I said.

"Are you crazy? Three-quarters of our business is done with the government."

"Well, if you're going to cut government expenditures, you have to start somewhere."

"You don't start with computers," he shouted. "That's false economy. Computers are supposed to figure out ways of saving the government money."

"Maybe we have enough computers now."

"You can't have enough computers in the government. I can see Reagan putting a hold on chairs and desks and carpets. You can run the government without them. But you don't throw the baby out with the bath water."

"I'm sure the people who make furniture for the government feel differently. They're probably saying furniture shouldn't be frozen, because you can't govern if you don't have chairs to sit on. It seems to me that the president is going to have to make his cuts across the board if he hopes to keep his campaign promises."

"You can say that in your business. But Reagan is going to have to get the economy back on its feet, and he won't be able to do that if he won't buy computers. We'll have to shut down our factories if his freeze stays in effect."

"I can see your problem. If you cut down on the size of the government, that means it won't order all the things that big government requires, which will hurt the private sector more than the government."

"Now you've got it. Big business provides the fuel that makes the government go. And the government provides the money to buy the fuel."

"I wonder why Reagan never thought of that when he attacked big government," I said.

"The worst thing is that we never thought of it when we supported him. I just got a call from my boss in the home office and he wanted to know why we weren't moving any computers."

"What did you tell him?"

"I told him we would as soon as I figured out how to put them on a cruise missile."

His Eye On Pensioners

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK
WASHINGTON —

The audacity of political and economic strategy taking shape in the Reagan administration is glimpsed in budget director David Stockman's rejection of conservative orthodoxy and opposition to broad cutbacks in Social Security benefits.

Politically, Stockman is seeking to protect the Republican Party from its incorrigible desire to throw widows and orphans to the wolves and thereby embellish a villainous reputation that has helped lose elections for a half-century. The new Office Management and Budget (OMB) director is saying that there are methods less painful, both for Republicans and the old, to cut the budget.

His economic justifications are equally intriguing. They are based on his confidence that President Reagan's supply-side economics will transform inflationary contraction of the economy to non-inflationary growth. If indexing of Social Security payments (which is designed to keep pace with inflation) is reduced, it would be tacit admission that Reagan's policy will fail.

Specifically at issue is an idea to save billions in Social Security payments by recalculating cost-of-living allowances. When Stockman visited Wall Street after his selection by Reagan, he found stalwarts of the nation's great financial houses obsessed by the idea of cutting the budget by clipping away at old-age pension checks.

On Capitol Hill, Republicans were equally enchanted by the notion, perpetuating the party's image crystalized when President Herbert Hoover dispatched the U.S. Army against the bonus marchers. Many Democrats were also interested, including House Budget Committee Chairman James Jones. Even Jimmy Carter, who campaigned for re-election as the pensioner's best friend, proposed scaled-down cost-of-living allowances in his last budget.

Stockman was opposed from the start and said so publicly to the National Press Club in his first speech as OMB director, a position given surprisingly little publicity. Long before that speech, Stockman had determined that the politically feasible way to reduce federal spending is to pull out a few goats from the herd, not shear all the sheep.

Cutting back cost-of-living adjustments for all Social Security beneficiaries certainly would be shearing sheep. Stockman prefers less politically sensitive goats: reducing special categories of Social Security, saving over $3.5 billion a year. That includes eliminating aid to college students and restructuring disability payments.

Stockman always doubted budgetary benefits from throwing widows and orphans to the wolves. To make sure, he called for advice from an astute supply-side economic analyst: Alan Reynolds, vice president of Chicago's First National Bank.

Reynolds' eight-page memo, now circulating at OMB, asserts "there is no clear evidence that the existing Consumer Price Index (CPI) as a basis for Social Security cost-of-living adjustments exaggerates living costs at all." In fact, he said, "retired people usually spend a larger share of their budgets on food and fuel than the CPI assumes, and these prices have risen faster than the CPI"

The Reynolds memo also points to a pitfall inherent in the Carter budget proposal to switch the indexing formula away from purchased housing to rental housing: declining mortgage rates would then not cause reduced costs, because the decline would not be reflected in the index. Indeed, OMB tables show that if inflation is subdued and interest rates fall, the Carter change would step up Social Security outlays by fiscal 1984.

Thus, tinkering with Social Security indexing would be a sign of retreat for Reagan's bold economic policy. "Undue political concern with the budgetary cost of adjusting benefits for inflation does not give a helpful signal," Reynolds writes. "If political and monetary authorities are serious about getting inflation down, why would they express alarm over minor changes in the way federal spending is adjusted for inflation?"

Supply-siders Stockman and Reynolds clearly would not. They have bigger dreams on their horizon. They are less concerned by vagaries of indexation on Social Security than in using tax reduction for inflation-free growth.

Strength For Today

WORKING OUT OUR SALVATION

The Bible teaches us that we cannot gain our salvation through works. Salvation is not our achievement — it is the gift of God.

But although we cannot gain our salvation by works, it is equally true that we cannot keep our salvation without works. We cannot perform certain acts and become Christians because of these achievements, but once we lay hold on the Christian life by faith, we have to work to keep that life intact.

If we are going to be Christians, we have to work at it every day. This means seeking God's counsel in the Bible, seeking His guidance through prayer, practicing self-restraint, and continually putting our religious beliefs into practical operation.

It takes a lifetime of effort to integrate God's gift of salvation into the structure of our lives. — Elisha Douglass

Briefing For The Ground Hogs

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer
NEW YORK (AP) —

Suppose that, just for the sake of variety, the neighborhood woodchuck decided to do something different on Groundhog Day this year.

Instead of just peeking out of his winter residence for the customary weather forecast, what if he turned his predicting powers to the American economy?

His credentials for the job are certainly good. Like any conventional economist, he's used to working with shadowy figures. And he's familiar with the hazards of sticking his neck out too far.

To give the little marmot a fighting chance in his new assignment, he will need a fill-in on where the economy stands today. That briefing is hereby provided:

While you were busy getting ready for your annual hibernation, Ronald Reagan won the presidency. His election was great for the stock market (the Dow went up 16 points) but his inauguration was not (the Dow went down 20 points).

President Reagan wants to increase military spending, cut taxes drastically, and balance the budget. The experts say that is an impossible combination. But if he doesn't do it all, and soon, they say, the whole country will feel betrayed.

The recession of 1979 never came. It arrived in 1980, but left again so quickly that many people were sure it would soon be back. It doesn't appear to have returned yet, though, unless you ask the manufacturers of cars and houses, who report that it has been here all along and shows no sign of going away.

After the oil shortage a while back which resulted in higher prices, there was an oil glut which resulted in higher prices. Last week there was full decontrol of oil, which resulted in higher prices.

The Federal Reserve, according to its critics, has been both too lax and too stringent in controlling the money supply. To be honest about it, just keeping track of the money supply has been a problem.

A few months back, a new method was adopted to try to do a better job, but then along came the NOW accounts in January that threw the calculations out of whack. There was also some mention of Social Security payments distorting the seasonal adjustments, or something like that.

The numbers, in any case, will certainly be revised. Speaking of Social Security, the payroll tax went up between 8 percent and 24 percent last month. It will go up much further in the next few years, but the system still might collapse.

The weather has been hostile all around. At the same time that it was too cold in the East and too hot in the West, it was too dry almost everywhere.

Oranges froze in Florida. An aunt in Oklahoma writes that the farmers are desperate for rain. A friend in Rhode Island tells of panic buying of peanut butter, which is now selling in New York for $2 or more for an 18-ounce jar.

A lunch of a tuna fish sandwich and a soft drink, in a brown paper bag with a pickle, went up to $3.25 last week at a Manhattan coffee shop.

While inflation keeps roaring ahead, sad to report, some of the inflation investments aren't doing so well. Gold is down 40 percent (more if you adjust it for inflation) in the past year.

When an occasional bit of good news crops up — say, a rise in industrial production or a drop in unemployment — it depresses all the markets because it implies that interest rates will stay high. In fact, interest rates —

There doesn't seem to be much point in continuing. The groundhog just scurried back into his burrow for six more weeks. Or maybe a lot longer than that.

Blood Drive

The Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corp. (AFROTC) unit at East Carolina University is sponsoring a blood drive on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 4 and 5 at Wright Auditorium on the ECU campus.

Fred Padilla, blood drive chairman for the ROTC unit, said that collection activities will be held each day from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Mrs. Ruth Taylor of the Pitt County Red Cross, encouraged faculty and staff personnel at ECU to join students in participating in the campus effort.

In the last decade, it was pointed out, the ROTC unit has raised almost 7,000 pints of blood and almost 25,000 pints since the first blood drive was held in 1951.

Concerned Over Water Levels

By STEVEN K. PAULSON
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A serious water shortage in North Carolina has prompted National Weather Service officials to ask for a meeting with state officials Tuesday to discuss immediate conservation measures and possible health hazards.

Precipitation in Raleigh is 9 inches below normal, Greensboro is 14 inches below normal and Charlotte is 7 inches below normal for a seven-month period since the drought began last July, said weather service hydrologist Allan Gustasson.

"It's quite a mess. We're not trying to scare anybody, but there is reason for concern," Gustasson said. "We have requested a meeting with state officials to discuss conservation measures."

Low water levels could have an impact on health, Gustasson said, because as water levels go down, concentrations of pollutants and chemicals in the water increase.

The weathermen say they intend to bring figures to the Tuesday meeting to show that the Deep River near Cape Fear is at its lowest level in 46 years. Rainfall in the Raleigh area for January was the lowest since 1928.

"Normally the wet season is in December and January. October and November are generally very dry, but it picks up in December and January. But that hasn't happened," Gustasson said.

"We are also quite concerned with a forecast for below normal rainfall through February," he said.

"We're three months going into spring with the water levels down. Farmers may be concerned. Rivers are down and the water table is down."

High Rock Lake, which flows into the Pee Dee River, is 18 feet below normal. The Neuse River is 9 feet below normal. Streams have dried up and ground water levels are "exceedingly dry."

"It could be very serious," Gustasson said.

Gustasson said he does not know what kind of conservation measures the state will order as a result of their meeting.

Chapter Met On Sunday

Rofelt Pasha Chapter No. 175 met Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Ebron Jr., 102 Beachwood Drive here to coordinate and plan activities that will be discussed at the regular meeting on Tuesday, Feb. 4.

Officers elected for 1981 include: James Ebron, chairman; Annimas Smith, secretary; and Simon Hemby, treasurer.

The Greenville Nobles will leave from Noble Cornel Parker's house to attend the regular monthly meeting.

Noble Sutton Austin will host the next meeting in March.

Banker Reynolds, one of the nation's most succinct writers about economics, concludes his memo by making an unrepentant, unbankish comment that economically-strapped retired people are not to blame for the runaway budget: "There is no unambiguous evidence that indexing Social Security benefits by the CPI does more than barely compensate for inflation ... even if real Social

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The American hostages and their Iranian captors joked and teased each other about their plight and no one told any tales of brutality during a visit to Tehran by clergymen, according to a priest who has been criticized for saying the hostages were well-treated.

The Rev. Darrell Rupiper's accounts have been at odds with those of the returning hostages, who told of mock

Damage Results From Wrecks

An estimated $3,100 property damage resulted from two pre-dawn collisions investigated by Greenville police Sunday.

Officers reported heaviest damage resulted from a 2:57 a.m. mishap at the intersection of Greenville Boulevard and Tenth Street, involving cars driven by Mark Ephraim Gorham Jr. of Falkland and Sheila Ann Baker of 2111 Montclair Dr.

Officers, who reported Gorham was injured in the mishap, estimated damage at $900 to the Gorham car and $1,000 to the Baker auto.

Ms. Baker was charged with failing to stop for a stop light following investigation of the mishap.

Cars driven by Joan Renee Harrington of 309 Bubba Blvd., and Debra Lynn Stocks of Shady Knoll Trailer Pk., collided about 1:51 a.m. at the intersection of Greene Street and Mumford Road, causing an estimated $800 damage to the Harrington car and $400 damage to the Stocks auto.

Police charged Ms. Harrington with failing to stop for a stop light in connection with the collision.

Security benefits of retired people rose during inflation, many of those same people are greatly injured by what inflation does to private pensions and lifetime savings."

Accordingly, leaving the Social Security index alone not only fits Stockman's sheep-and-goats tactical maxim but adds a new dimension to Reagan's economic strategy. It avoids the politically ruinous Republican instinct to conscript inflation's sorriest victims as vulnerable front-line soldiers in the war against it.

executions, solitary confinement and mental and physical brutality.

The 43-year-old Omaha cleric has been the target of criticism from some of the freed Americans for remarks that there was "a spirit of camaraderie, joviality and fellowship between hostages and captors."

Rupiper said he and other visiting clergymen must have been "deliberately misled" by the hostages about their conditions.

In an interview published Sunday by The Omaha World-Herald, the Roman Catholic priest defended his remarks, saying he heard hostages and their captors joking about who among them was the "ping pong champion" or the "chess champion."

He said he also heard hostages "teasing" the Iranians about being nervous in the early weeks of the embassy seizure. "And the students were teasing back, 'Yeah, you were uptight, too,'" Rupiper said.

Rupiper visited the hostages in February and April of 1980. He told the newspaper that "no mention of torture was made by any of the hostages to me or any other member of the religious delegation of which I was a part."

"I was faithful to the reports we had received from the hostages themselves," he said in an interview from Chicago where he was vacationing.

Immediately after the release of the hostages, Rupiper had expressed surprise and shock at the reports of brutality from the hostages.

"Either I was willfully misled privately by the hostages, or we have to look at which hostages were mistreated, when they were suspected of being CIA operatives," he said in a Jan. 23 interview.

In the interview with the World Herald, he again said he had been "deliberately misled."

In addition, in an interview with CBS News in Chicago, Rupiper said some of the hostages' families told him that they felt "their phones were tapped and that their mail was being censored" by the U.S. State Department during the crisis.

"Those are serious accusations, but I just think that the truth is at the service of the people," he said.

Rupiper is a member of the Roman Catholic Oblate order. In 1968, he said he and a fellow priest were jailed by the military regime in Brazil for several days, then expelled from the country.

In Omaha, he has staged demonstrations at Offutt Air Force Base, spoken out against arms sales and promoted the cause of human rights.

The harshest criticism leveled at Rupiper came from ex-hostages Marine Sgt. James Lopez and Moorhead Kennedy Jr.

Lopez has been quoted as telling his family in a telephone call from West Germany that, "If you see that Rev. Rupiper, spit in his face for me Didn't he say that everything was peaches and cream (after his April visit)?"

Kennedy, the third-ranking diplomat at the embassy, said a Roman Catholic priest who visited in April "spoiled Easter for all of us." Rupiper was the only Roman Catholic clergyman to visit then.

Kennedy quoted the priest as saying, "You fellows, I'd like to spend 20 days with you or so to give me a chance to meditate."

"What I said was exaggerated and taken out of context, and was a response to what Mr. Kennedy had said about his personal reaction to being held captive," Rupiper said, adding he would not disclose what Kennedy said.

Rupiper also responded to criticism by a former hostage that the clergymen failed to deliver 106 letters from the captives after the April trip.

He said the letters were taken by a woman who represented Families Liaison for Action Group, a hostage family group. In an April 24 report in the World-Herald, Rupiper was quoted as saying the woman was Katherine Keough, wife of William Keough of Waltham, Mass.

Mrs. Keough was not immediately available for comment.

At Branch Banking and Trust Company, we know our customers expect the most from us. So we wouldn't consider paying anything less on our new NOW account than the highest interest rate allowed by law—a full 5 1/4%.

Frost Belt Hoping To Target Outlays

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although federal policies alone cannot stem the economic decline of the North and Midwest, they can help reverse the flow of investment to the Sun Belt, contends a study prepared for the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition.

The study called upon the federal government to target its spending to help narrow the economic gap between the Frost Belt and the Sun Belt.

If left unchecked, the economic decline of the Frost Belt represents "a pronounced threat to the physical and economic well-being of the 100 million Americans living in the Northeast-Midwest region, and to the nation as a whole," the report said.

The 111-page report, "The State of the Region 1981," was conducted for the 18-state coalition by the Northeast-Midwest Institute, an independent research center. It was financed by grants from the Commerce Department's Economic Development Administration and the Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

The study said the poor economic condition of the Frost Belt "is the product of a host of changing domestic and international conditions, the inability of public officials to deal with an aging economy and federal policies designed to spur growth in the South and West."

Public officials in the North and Midwest realize that "the policies of the federal government are only a partial cause — and thus can only be a partial solution — to the region's economic ills," the study said.

"It is obvious to almost everyone that Washington cannot ride to the rescue of our declining region," said Rep. Robert W. Edgar, a Pennsylvania Democrat who heads the coalition.

But, he said, the federal government "does have a legitimate role" in aiding a recovery in the area.

"The problem is not that too little is being spent, but that we're not spending it in the right places," Edgar said.

The report strongly disputed a recent recommendation by a panel of the President's Commission for a National Agenda for the Eighties that the aging industrial cities of the North are beyond help and that the government should direct its attention to the Sun Belt, where people and jobs are moving in increasing numbers.

Since the 1930s, the federal government has spent billions of dollars in the South and West on such things as water and energy projects, interstate highways, the space program, military bases and goods and services, the study said.

In view of the economic decline of the East and Midwest, the report said, policies that continue to favor the Sun Belt "clearly contradict the national interest."

Sees Reason To Keep Embargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poor wheat harvests this year in Argentina and Australia are another reason why President Reagan should maintain the partial U.S. grain embargo against the Soviet Union, Rep. Les Aspin said today.

Aspin, D-Wis., contended that "the embargo has worked fairly well and this new development will help reinforce it."

The Reagan administration has not yet decided on whether to continue the partial embargo, imposed a year ago in response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The embargo bars American exports of wheat and corn above levels set in a U.S.-Soviet grain accord.

Aspin noted that Moscow sought to soften the embargo's impact by boosting its purchases of Argentine wheat and course grain from 1.4 million tons to 5.5 million tons. Australia's grain exports to the Soviet Union rose sharply from 100,000 tons to 3.9 million tons.

Firemen arriving at the scene on rural road 1709, east of Winterville, found the front section of the wood frame house engulfed in flames. Firemen brought the blaze under control in about 15 minutes. Officials said the occupant of the house was identified as Sinclair Payton, who reportedly escaped injury. Damage estimates were not available. Members of the Eastern Pines Fire department were also called for assistance. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Pirates Bury Andruzzi's Worries & ASU, 96-54

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Coach Cathy Andruzzi of East Carolina was a little worried prior to the game with Appalachian State on Sunday.

Her Lady Pirates were coming off games with three ranked teams and had vaulted into the national rankings themselves, and Appalachian State's 4-12 record wasn't exactly the type to send chills down the backs of the players.

"When you're on top and winning," Andruzzi said, "you are ready for a let down. It could have come today."

But Andruzzi's worries were quickly put to rest as the Lady Pirates came firing out of the dressing room and worked their way to a 96-54 rout of the Lady Mountaineers.

The victory boosted the Pirate mark to 17-4 as they wait to see where they go from their 19th ranking of last week. With three victories during the week, two over higher ranked teams, plus a four-point loss to

Lady Bucs Now 18th

East Carolina's Lady Pirates moved to 18th today in the latest Associated Press top 20 poll. The Pirates were ranked 19th last week, the first time in the school's history ECU had been in the top 20.

Undoubtedly, the move up was helped by ECU's 78-77 win in overtime over then 13th-ranked N.C. State and a tough 77-73 loss to then eight-ranked Southern Cal Friday night. State dropped to 15th this week while USC moved to seventh, despite losing to Old Dominion Sunday.

ECU is now 17-4 following Sunday's 96-54 win over Appalachian State. The Lady Pirates play host to the UNC-Chapel Hill Thursday night. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

In the second half, things got no better for ASU, which did not start three of its regulars. Murial Higgenbotham, the leading scorer for the Lady Apps, did not start, denied that right along with another regular for arriving late for the game. The third, Angelita Horton, the second leading scorer, was out with a sprained ankle.

East Carolina continually pulled away, leading by as much as 48 points late in the action. That came with 2:40 left when Fran Hooks hit a jumper to make it 92-44.

Among the starters for the Lady Pirates only Marcia Girven and Sikes played over half the game, both going 27 of the 40 minutes.

Sam Jones led the scoring with 18, including 14 in the first 10 minutes of the second half. Rountree added 17, all but four in the first half, while Denkier had 14, all in the first half, and Riley had 13, all but one in the first half.

ASU was led by Betsy McLelland with 14, while Carolyn Cameron had 10.

The Lady Pirates dominated the boards, holding a 57-35 advantage. Jones led the way with eight, while Girven had seven. Susan Cameron had eight for ASU.

The game got frantic at times, with a lot of turnovers. ASU was charged with 36, while East Carolina suffered 30. A number of those came on long passes that were just inches beyond leading guards on the fast break.

"The turnovers were a lot for us," Andruzzi said. "But we had good free throw shooting, and I thought our kids worked hard on the court. The full-court press worked well. It could have gotten really sloppy in the second half, when we were up 20 at the half, but I thought our girls did a good job in keeping it together."

Andruzzi praised the play of Denkier, Rountree, Riley, Girven and Sikes, and gave special attention to the latter.

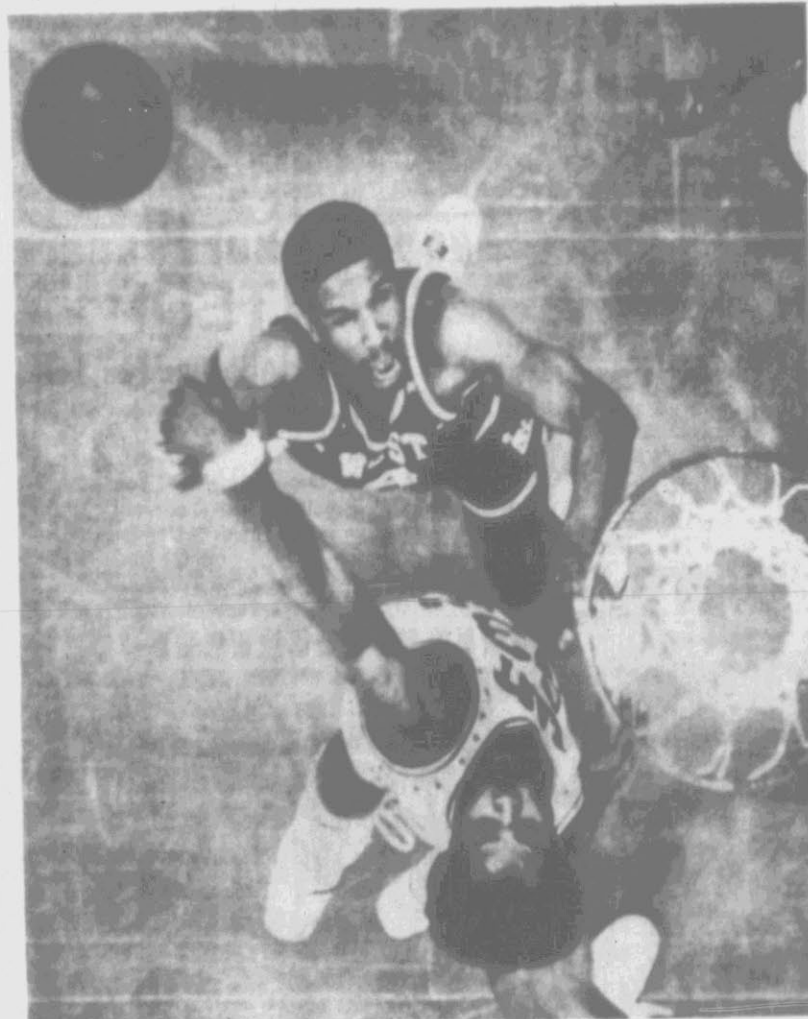

"Denk has been getting a lot of ink recently, and she deserves it, but Laurie is the backbone of this team. It's her floor play that's getting things done. Denk is doing well because the rest of them are getting the ball to her, and Laurie creates a lot of offense moving the ball," Andruzzi said.

Returning her attention to the game, she noted that the Pirates took charge in the game early. "It was really good. We played well defensively. Fifty-four points: that's one of our best defensive efforts."

East Carolina shot well in the game, hitting 50.6 per cent, along with an 80 per cent free throw percentage. ASU shot only 31.9 per cent from the floor and 62.5 from the line.

East Carolina returns to action on Thursday in an important NCAA game, hosting the University of North Carolina.

'Team Ball' Lifts East By West, 123-120

RICHFIELD, Ohio (AP) — It can be considered, possibly, a tribute to the unselfishness of the players, or to the defenses of both teams.

But the fact is that, in a game laden with stars, no one emerged as the clear-cut standout of Sunday's National Basketball Association All-Star Game, won by the East 123-120.

"We played team ball today," said East guard Michael Ray Richardson, representing the New York Knicks. "We had some one-on-one moves, but they were in a team concept."

No one for either team could crack the 20-point barrier. Paul Westphal of Seattle and Dennis Johnson of Phoenix shared scoring honors for the West with 19 points apiece, while Julius Erving of Philadelphia had 18 to lead the East.

"These guys' attitudes are beautiful," said Philadelphia's Billy Cunningham, now undefeated in three All-Star coaching appearances. "They have the ability to adapt to any situation. I just thought the overall attitude was great."

Echoed West Coach John MacLeod of Phoenix: "Billy and I talked before the game about how it's a pleasure to watch these guys play — guys you usually coach against, and now you have them on your team."

About 200 media representatives voted veteran Boston guard Nate Archibald Most Valuable Player in the game — even though Archibald scored only nine points. His nine assists and his playmaking earned him the honor.

Celtic teammate Robert Parish, who had 16 points and a game-high 10 rebounds, was runnerup in the MVP balloting. But the favorite of the 20,239 fans — representing the second-largest crowd in the 31 years of NBA All-Star play — was Cleveland Cavalier

Murray, NFC Kicks AFC

HONOLULU (AP) — Detroit Lions' rookie Eddie Murray was the Pro Bowl Most Valuable Player by virtue of his four field goals, but members of the National Football Conference defensive unit made most of the difference in the game.

With Tampa Bay's Lee Roy Selmon, Dallas' Bob Breunig and Los Angeles' Jack Reynolds among the standouts, the NFC defense held the potentially explosive AFC offense in check in Sunday's 21-7 National Conference Pro Bowl victory.

"Our secondary did a great job and gave the defensive line time to get to the quarterback," said Selmon, who logged four tackles and had two of the NFC's four quarterback sacks.

The NFC held Houston running back Earl Campbell, the NFL's leading rusher the past three years to just 24 yards on eight carries. The entire AFC running game netted only 65 yards on 22 attempts and the American Conference passing attack was generally ineffective.

NFC Coach Leeman Bennett of Atlanta lauded the entire defense and added: "I was particularly pleased with the defensive play of Charlie Johnson, Randy White and Rod Perry."

"There was some outstanding play from both teams' defensive secondaries."

The Eagles' Johnson was in on seven tackles, Dallas' White recovered a fumble that eventually led to one of Murray's field goals and Los Angeles' Perry figured in five tackles.

Murray hit field goals of 31, 31, 34 and 36 yards. He missed on pair of 37 yard attempts, the last hitting the crossbar with just 22 seconds left to play.

"I watched the Pro Bowl on television last year and at that time, I wondered if I could even make it in the NFL, much less the Pro Bowl," said Murray.

The other NFC scoring came on a 55-yard touchdown pass from Steve Bartkowski to Atlanta teammate Alfred Jenkins, and a safety when the AFC was called for holding in its own end zone.

Sometime today, the new national rankings for women's basketball teams will be out, and we will be surprised if East Carolina isn't climbed to around the middle of the second ten.

This past week has been something unprecedented in ECU history. Last Saturday, East Carolina played James Madison, recording a 98-67 victory there.

Then, on Sunday came an 84-78 win over then 15th ranked Virginia in Charlottesville.

That was followed by a second win over a nationally ranked team, as 13 N.C. State fell before the Pirates, 78-77, in overtime before 4,000 people in Minges Coliseum.

The Lady Pirates followed that up by almost beating eighth-ranked Southern California on Friday before 4,500 fans. In that, USC took a 77-73 decision, scoring the final two points with just one second left. Southern Cal went on to Old Dominion to lose only its second game, (both to ODU) in another tight contest.

Sunday closed out a hectic eight-day period as the Lady Pirates romped over Appalachian State, 96-54.

There are still a lot of games to be played. East Carolina has played but one "conference" game. They host UNC here Thursday in their second, and must play Appalachian and N.C. State on the road in league games. Wake Forest visits here.

So seeding for the state tournament won't be known for some time yet.

A 20-win season seems almost assured at this point. With six games left in the regular season, losing three of those would take a major miracle by opponents.

Appalachian seems to have an identity problem. Sports Information Director Rick Layton recently sent a letter to the media asking to get things right.

First of all, he explained, it's Appa-LATCH-un State, not Appa-LAY-chun, as many of the television commentators not from this area term them.

Then, in print it's to be Appalachian State University, Appalachian State, Appalachian, ASU, App. State, App. St., App. St. Univ., etc.

However, Layton writes, "Appy State" is a no-no. "Our people loathe, detest, hate, despise, and abominate that name," Layton continues.

Not only do they hate it (some say they will, from here on, refer to other Southern Conference members as "Marshy, Davy, Furny and Chatty" to name a few).

And when using the nickname, Layton asks that we use Mountaineers or the Apps and never Mounties (which he says Webster defines as a member of the RCMP, and "that is not us.")

Well, okay, Rick. But really, think about it. Try and fit Mountaineers into a headline sometime.

Team Ball Gives East Win...

forward Mike Mitchell, who scored 14 points.

"I thought I had played exceptionally well for his first game, and being at home," said Cunningham. "He showed he belonged out there today."

Mitchell was added to the East team after Atlanta's Dan Roundfield had to drop out because of calcium deposits in his right leg.

"You just have to feel great when you hear cheers like I did," said Mitchell, who received a standing ovation when he entered the game in the second quarter. "It makes you excited, and it made me want to play great."

The West took a 27-23 lead after one quarter behind 10 points from Westphal.

But Mitchell's eight second-period points helped the East jump on top 61-58 at the half.

Guard Eddie Johnson of Atlanta then scored nine of his 16 points in the third quarter as the East expanded its margin to 88-97.

A Mitchell stuff on a fastbreak pass from Parish gave the East a 16-point edge, its largest of the game, with 10 minutes remaining.

Walter Davis of Phoenix and Los Angeles Laker Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, however, led a West surge that cut the deficit to 119-116 with just over three minutes to play.

Baskets by Archibald and Eddie Johnson maintained the East edge, and a last-second West three-point attempt by Seattle's Jack Sikma missed.

"There are always going to be spurts like that, where you're playing sloppy, because you're playing with new faces," said Cunningham. "First you're dead and out of it, but then you get a spurt and you're back in it."

"The key was what we did defensively, with (Philadelphia's) Bobby Jones making a steal and Michael Richardson making a big play."

MacLeod held true to a pregame vow to give all his players an equal amount of playing time. All performed between 20 and 25 minutes except Kansas City's Otis Birdsong, who played only 12 minutes because he was battling the flu.

Confusion Reigns At Crosby Golf

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — The Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Golf Tournament, which usually leads the PGA Tour in spectacular scenery and cavorting seals, is almost certain to top the season in confusion this time.

For example, there's John Cook. Only after he'd finished play late Sunday did he discover that he had but one more round to play. He thought there were 36 holes yet to go.

And there's CBS. The confused finish — which will have players completing their rounds today on six different greens on three different golf courses — provided too much of a logistical problem for the network.

So, after providing national television coverage of the first two rain-delayed rounds of the famed tournament, they packed up and left the Monterey Peninsula to the seals playing on the rocks in Carmel Bay, the soaring seagulls and the players, 168 pros and a matching number of amateurs. There will be no national TV coverage of the final round.

There's also the question of who's leading going into the last round.

By the numbers, it's Tom Watson and Brad Bryant, with 36-hole totals of 136, eight shots under par.

Not so, said Watson.

"The real leader is (Jerry) Pate," Watson said.

Pate has a 137 total, but also an advantage. He will complete the tournament at Pebble Beach. Most of the other leaders have to play their third and final round at Spyglass Hill, which Ben Crenshaw says is "two shots harder than the others. It gives everybody the willies."

"Pate has that course behind him," Watson said. "If we get good weather, he certainly has the advantage."

Watson, the outstanding performer in the game and golf's Player of the Year for the past four seasons, got a share of the lead when he rammed in a 22-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole at Pebble Beach, about an hour after the TV cameras had ended their coverage of the tournament late Sunday afternoon.

That finished off a 3-under-par 69 and tied Watson for the numerical lead with longshot Brad Bryant, who is seeking his first title in three years of PGA Tour activity. Bryant birdied his last three holes, also at Pebble Beach, for a 67.

Tied with Pate at 137 were Crenshaw and Cook. Both played their second round at Pebble Beach. Crenshaw shot a 70 in sunny weather with gentle breezes. Cook, a 23-year-old former national amateur champion and the first-round leader, took a 71.

"I thought we had two more rounds to play," he said, a puzzled look on his face.

But there's only one.

A series of storms washed out the first two days' play Thursday and Friday and prompted officials to cut the tournament from 72 holes to 54. The purse was reduced from an announced $300,000 to $225,000.

Money Paid Wichita St. Players?

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A former Wichita State University basketball player says he received more than $3,000 in gratuities over a two-year period from coaches and wealthy athletic supporters, according to a copyright story today in The Kansas City Times.

Richard Williams and three other former players told The Times that as team members they received thousands of dollars in cash, clothes, airline tickets and "forgiveness" loans over the last three years.

The newspaper also said the mother of Wichita State basketball player Antoine Carr, Jo Ann Carr, moved her family into a $62,500 home and bought two new cars after her son joined the team in 1979.

Acquaintances said the family had been living near the poverty level before the son's success, The Times said. The former Wichita State players — Williams, Tyrone Augburns, Lawrence Howell and Auguster "Sarge" Jackson — told The Times they each received money from coaches or team supporters either for trips to their hometowns or personal expenses. In Williams' case, the monetary gifts amounted to more than $3,000, the newspaper said.

The Times said it also determined during its probe that the girlfriend of a former basketball player had an abortion, arranged by Wichita State coaches, so her boyfriend would not leave school because of her pregnancy.

The practices uncovered by The Times' investigation appear to violate National Collegiate Athletic Association rules governing sports at member institutions, the newspaper said.

Attempts Sunday night by The Associated Press to reach Wichita State officials and Mrs. Carr for comment on allegations contained in The Times story were unsuccessful.

Earlier, Wichita State President Clark D. Ahlberg, Athletic Director Ted Bredehoft and basketball Coach Gene Smithson and his assistant, Jeff Jones, declined to respond to specific allegations, The Times said.

However, Bredehoft told the newspaper, "Well, in all of those allegations I can safely deny the validity of the rumor."

The fortunes of the Wichita State Shockers, considered a basketball powerhouse for varying periods during the 1950s and 1960s, began an upswing in the 1980s. The team's overall record stands at 16-2.

The report on Wichita State was the first of a five-part series planned by The Times this week based on its investigation of athletic programs at major universities in Kansas.

According to The Times, the NCAA has been investigating possible basketball program violations at Wichita State for the last year. However, Bredehoft told The Times that the school's coaches "have never had, to our knowledge, an inquiry from the NCAA."

Meanwhile, Mrs. Carr, in an interview with the newspaper, strongly rejected the suggestion that her family's improved economic condition was linked to her son's decision to play

Essay Winners Are Announced

Melissa Owens, a tenth grader at Farmville Central High School, has been named a winner in the District VIII Daughters of the American Revolution American History Month essay contest.

A Fountain area resident, she is to compete in the state contest.

The local contest held in the Pitt County schools under the sponsorship of the Maj. Benjamin May chapter of the DAR, Farmville, had as its elementary school subject, "A Military Leader in the Battle of Yorktown," and as its high school subject, "Of, By and For the People."

Sixth grade winners were Laurie Ann Walker of Bethel Elementary School, first; Kim James of Farmville Middle School, second; and Terry Nash of Farmville Middle School, third; fifth grade winners — Melissa Jean Young of H. B. Sugg School, Farmville, first; and Jeff Mazingo of Sugg, second; seventh grade winners — Peggy Maria Jenkins of Bethel Elementary School, first; Junius Walter Stencil of Farmville Middle School, second; and Scott Manning Rawls of Bethel Elementary, third; eighth grade winners — Veronica Ann Hamm of Bethel Elementary School, first; Regina Mazingo of Farmville Middle School, second; and Carla Snow of A. G. Cox School, Winterville, third.

Owens was the only high school winner.

The essays had to be handwritten and have a bibliography and were judged on historical accuracy, adherence to subject, originality, interest, neatness, spelling and punctuation, Maj. Benjamin May Chapter Regent, Mrs. R. T. Williams said.

Other DAR projects for American History Month, which the organization hopes will be made a nationally acclaimed special month, include spot announcements

Doubt Return Overpayment

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Social services officials say they doubt the state will recover all of the $400,000 accidentally paid to the poor recently to help with their heating bills.

The state has no legal authority to demand that the 6,200 recipients return the money, said N.C. Department of Human Resources spokeswoman June Milby.

Legend on the Court

Some of the top names in women's tennis are scheduled to compete in a tournament in Detroit this week. One of them is already a tennis legend. Billie Jean King was winning amateur championships before some of today's younger professional players were born. She has won more Wimbledon titles than any other player, and her work to gain more recognition and prize money for women paved the way for Chris Evert Lloyd, Martina Navratilova, Tracy Austin, and other talented young athletes. At 37, King knows she won't be playing professional tennis forever. "When I go out and play tennis, I'm like a little kid," she says. "I know that I don't have much time left, and I'm going to make the most of it."

DO YOU KNOW — In what type of tennis do a man and a woman play on each team?

Power Outage In 3 Counties

FRANKLIN, N.C. (AP) — A three-county area in southwestern North Carolina was left without electric power Sunday night for more than three hours after a tree fell on a main power line in Macon County.

Power went out around 7 p.m. in Macon, Swain and Jackson counties, all served by the Nanpahala Power and Light Co., which supplies power to the five southwestern most counties of the state.

Nanpahala spokesman Fred Alexander, western manager of corporate communications, said the outage was the largest the company had experienced since the spring of 1975.

Alexander said a tree fell across a wire in the Pellico Gap area in northwestern Macon county affecting all three counties under the 161 thousand kilowatt system.

Located in this system are Franklin, Bryson City, Sylva, Hollins, Highlands and Western Carolina University. At WCU six of nine residence halls remained without power for most of the period, while three halls had emergency lighting in operation.

Immediately following the incident company officials attempted to restore partial power to the counties on a sectionalized system in the Cullowhee-Sylva area. Power was restored in some areas by 8:30 p.m. but the Franklin remained with power until 10:30 p.m.

Alexander said the company conducted the standard emergency procedure to guard against potential danger. Day personnel were called back on duty, and they called radio stations in operation, checked to see if hospitals had working auxiliary power systems and informed area law enforcement personnel of the outage.

Jurors Reluctant To Apply Death Sentence

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Court records show that North Carolina juries have sentenced more convicts to life in prison than to death, despite the 1977 law legalizing a revised death penalty.

"There appears to be a reluctance on the part of jurors to recommend death," said Donald W. Stephens, an assistant attorney general who has compiled data on first-degree murder convictions since the law took effect.

Of 31 first-degree murder cases reviewed by the North Carolina Supreme Court since the law took effect, juries have recommended life sentences in 22 cases and the death sentence in nine cases.

The Supreme Court agreed with 21 of the life-sentence verdicts, but of the nine cases in which the death sentence was imposed, the court has affirmed the verdict and sentence of only two.

In the other cases, the Supreme Court sent two back for new trials, changed one to a life sentence, and ordered new sentencing hearings for four.

With 177 people on death row in 1976, North Carolina led the nation in the number of persons sentenced to death.

At that time the law required anyone convicted of first-degree murder to receive an automatic death sentence. That law was later ruled unconstitutional.

A law passed in 1977 separates the trial and sentencing. Once a person is convicted of first-degree murder, a separate sentencing hearing is set.

"I think prosecutors and lawyers assume there is a strong feeling in favor of capital punishment in North Carolina," Stephens said.

"But when you become one of the 12 (jurors) you find it far more difficult to put that abstract concept into reality."

Emotion plays a large role in determining death sentences, said attorney Wade M. Smith of Raleigh, who frequently defends people charged with capital crimes.

"It's easy as an abstract proposition to say you favor the death penalty," Smith said. "However, when you get involved in a case and have the opportunity to examine the life of this person ... you find every person has redeeming qualities."

Superior Court Judge Donald Smith of Raleigh said many people believe the change in the law — not a change in jurors' attitudes — is responsible for the difference in the number of persons sentenced to death.

"Jurors are always reluctant to sentence a person to death," he said. "Even though North Carolina had more than 100 people on death row at one time, it was because of the mandatory death sentence, not because the jurors wanted to do it."

Illustrator Is Worried

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The Empire State Building and Egypt's pyramids aren't very controversial, and David Macaulay made a name for himself with books illustrating their construction step-by-step.

Now Macaulay finds himself sitting in his studio, wondering if pen-and-ink drawings of nuclear power plants could jeopardize his career.

Macaulay is famous for books that illustrate the construction of great buildings, so the Tennessee Valley Authority offered him $25,000 to do about a hundred drawings of the hydroelectric, nuclear and coal plants the federal utility uses to produce power.

The 34-year-old artist says he took the job even though he thinks doing a book that involves a controversial issue could hurt him. The TVA has been concentrating heavily on building nuclear power plants, and plans 13 in the seven states it serves.

"I was having tremendous second thoughts," Macaulay recalled recently. "But then I thought — they're not going to stop building this, just because I refuse to make the drawings for this book."

"Perhaps a contribution could be made by me as an explainer of what they're doing."

Macaulay's need to know every detail before doing a drawing leads him to take up to three days on each one, and he hopes the results will be "objective."

According to the company, the drawings are for a brochure that is a response to school teachers who requested information about the utility for their students. Completion of the brochure is set for this summer.

Media Society To Have Meet

The Pitt-Greenville Media Society will have its winter meeting at Fosdick's Restaurant Wednesday, at 6:15 p.m.

The guest speaker will be Dr. James H. Batten, chairman of the Secondary Education Department of East Carolina University. He will speak on the roles of the community college, university, public and school libraries as viewed by someone outside the library profession.

The society extends invitations to all members, librarians, and friends of libraries to attend this dinner meeting. No advance reservations are necessary.

New Drug Helps Fight Chicken Pox Effects

BOSTON (AP) — The state of Massachusetts has started nationwide distribution of a new drug, rejected by commercial manufacturers, designed to help children with cancer or other serious illnesses battle chicken pox infections.

The state decided to produce the drug because commercial manufacturers were not interested, said laboratories director Dr. George F. Grady, director of the biological laboratories division of the state Department of Public Health.

His staff developed the drug, Varicella Zoster Immune Globulin, or VZIG, in conjunction with the Sidney Farber Cancer Institute in Boston and the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"There are certain products, like VZIG, that can only be used for a very special purpose," Grady said. "And, although the large commercial manufacturers do not find it financially in their interest to produce such a product, the need remains."

The drug became available nationwide Sunday.

While chicken pox in healthy children often is not serious, the illness results in death 7 percent of the time and pneumonia 25 percent of the time when it hits children who have cancer or other medical problems that impair the body's natural ability to fight disease, department officials said.

In three years of tests, VZIG reduced the severity of chicken pox infection by 75 percent in children under age 15 who are without natural immunity to disease, said the health department.

The biological labs division will make the drug and distribute it with the help of the American Red Cross.

Grady said revenues from the distribution of the product "will be returned to Massachusetts so that we can continue to produce not only VZIG, but also a variety of other blood products and vaccines that we use to combat disease in the commonwealth."

Scientists said VZIG is most effective when administered within 96 hours of exposure to chicken pox. It can provide protection for up to six weeks.

The drug also is reported effective in protecting newborn infants of mothers who develop chicken pox within five days of delivery or 48 hours after delivery.

Grady said the supply of VZIG was limited, so it will not be prescribed for normal, healthy children who come down with chicken pox.
