55-mph Limit Is Target Of Repeal In 22 States

By LEE MITGANG
AP Urban Affairs Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — The 55 mph speed limit, mandated by Washington six years ago and targeted for extinction by Ronald Reagan during his presidential campaign, is under attack in at least 22 state legislatures.

But the speed law, dubbed the "law we can live with" by auto safety advocates, isn't dead yet.

Passed during the height of the 1973 gasoline shortage, the law provides that any state which does not enforce a 55 mph limit can be denied federal highway funds.

State efforts to raise the limit have stalled because Reagan hasn't said when he will ask Congress to repeal the law and allow each state to set its own speed limits.

"It's not one of our top priorities," said a Reagan administration source who asked not be identified.

"Most are waiting to see if the federal administration is going to do something," said Rep. Rusty Barlow, a lawmaker from Idaho, which defeated a bill last month to raise the speed limit.

But three out of four Americans believe the 55 mph speed limit should stand, according to a recent Gallup Poll. The survey last month of 1,589 adults across the nation found only 29 percent who obeyed the law "all the time," while 48 percent admitted they exceeded the speed limit "most of the time," according to today's New York Times.

A 65 mph bill working its way through the Indiana legislature has doubtful prospects, since Gov. Robert D. Orr supports the 55 mph limit and would probably veto any change.

An Illinois House committee approved a bill to boost the speed limit to 65 mph on state toll roads, and Louisiana legislators will take up two bills raising the speed limit when their 1981 session opens in April.

Idaho legislators are considering a measure that would automatically raise the speed limit to 65 mph if federal sanctions are lifted. Arizona senators passed a bill automatically repealing the 55 mph limit under those conditions, as did their Tennessee counterparts, who want to boost their speed limit to 65 mph.

Montana could become the fastest state in the nation if the Senate approves two bills raising speed limits to 70 mph.

The Nevada legislature is considering limiting speeding fines to $5, along with other salves to take the sting out of the 55 mph limit.

This week, a Florida Senate committee passed a bill to make 65 mph legal on interstate highways and the Sunshine State Parkway.

But state transportation official Joe Blanchard said he'd received a letter from the Federal Highway Administration warning that any move to boost the speed limit would cost Florida at least $430 million yearly in highway aid.

Energy Costs Push Price Index Up; More Jobless

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rapidly rising energy costs pushed overall wholesale prices 0.8 percent higher in February, although food costs were falling, the government reported today. Unemployment dropped to the lowest rate since last April, but the decline was only slight.

The Labor Department's seasonally adjusted Producer Price Index for finished goods — down slightly from January's 0.9 percent — translates into about a 10 percent annual inflation rate. The 7.3 percent unemployment rate for February followed two months of 7.4 percent reports and ended a nine-month stretch in which the rate had hovered between 7.4 percent and 7.6 percent.

However, the decline of one-tenth of a percentage point is considered statistically insignificant by the Labor Department, which released both reports today.

By far the biggest jump in producer prices, which usually precede cost-of-living increases at the consumer level, was in energy costs.

The 3.6 percent energy-cost rise, the fourth straight big monthly increase, included a 6.5 percent jump in fuel oil prices and a 4.7 percent increase in gasoline costs at the wholesale level. However, prices for natural gas remained even after rising steadily for 10 months.

The trend toward higher energy costs is expected to continue, particularly in light of President Reagan's recent action to decontrol most remaining U.S. oil prices.

The consumer foods index declined 0.6 percent in February after showing no change in January, but government and private economists expect food prices to rise substantially later this year.

Prices for finished consumer goods other than food or energy rose 0.7 percent in February after rising 0.8 percent in January, the report said.

Increases occurred for a broad range of items, including alcoholic beverages, cosmetics, drugs, tires and tubes, health products and newspaper publishing.

Overall, the producer price index rose 1 percent, before adjustment for seasonal variations, to 262.4. That means that goods which cost $10 in 1967 would cost $26.24 today.

One day earlier, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told the U.S. Chamber of Commerce "we know that inflation will come down" if the administration's economic package is passed.

He asked the businessmen to write members of Congress to assure continued pressure when general public interest in the program diminishes in coming weeks and months.

Administration officials predict that if the president's program is approved by summer, results should show up late this year.

Prepared To Negotiate In El Salvador's War

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key congressman says the president of El Salvador has offered assurances he's willing to negotiate with leftist rebels if "appropriate auspices" can be found.

Rep. Michael D. Barnes, D-Md., said Jose Napoleon Duarte also told him in a telephone conversation Thursday that his government does not foresee the need for additional U.S. military personnel to be assigned to El Salvador.

Barnes, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin America, said Duarte voiced an "emphatic statement that the war in his country is ... not so much a military war as it is a political war."

On the question of possible peace talks, Barnes quoted

Duarte as telling him: "You're a politician, I'm a politician — and what we do best is talk. I am prepared to talk with the leftists if the appropriate auspices are available."

The Salvadoran president said he believed any such talks would be best held under the auspices of West European social democratic parties or other non-governmental organizations, according to Barnes.

Regarding military aid, Barnes said Duarte "felt that no further American military personnel should be considered for El Salvador," beyond the 54 advisers who will be there after the just-promised group of an additional 20 arrive.

Barnes disclosed his conversation with Duarte as his House subcommittee began a round of hearings on El Salvador.

The administration's policy came under strong criticism from several liberal House Democrats testifying at the session, including Rep. Richard L. Ottinger, D-N.Y., who has introduced a resolution aimed at applying terms of the War Powers Act to the U.S. advisers in El Salvador.

"Our alignment with the forces of repression in El Salvador can only help — not thwart — the interests of the Communists," Ottinger asserted.

GET A WARRANT YOURSELF

My ex-boyfriend broke into my home while I was out and vandalized the place. I had legitimate proof that he was the one who broke in, but the policeman refused to do anything about it. He said "It will just be laughed out of court." I always thought breaking and entering was a felony offense, regardless. I can't sleep at night thinking the law will not protect me. This is not the first time the law has not helped me. I am beginning to feel they enjoy seeing young females being harrassed.

Police Chief Glenn Cannon said the officers know that your case would much better stand up in court if you get the warrant yourself. Obviously, the man knows that you're the one reporting him anyway, so you have nothing to lose swearing out the warrant, the chief said. So often, if an officer makes such an arrest based on one person's report, then the person who called the police changes his or her mind and doesn't want to follow through, he said. The officer was being wary, he said, and he hopes that he fully explained to you that it was well within your right, and still is, to make the charge. Then, of course, the warrant will be duly served by the law enforcement agency.

Builders Ask Mayor Put An End To Controversy

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

A contingent of "Concerned Members of the Building Community" today reacted to the inspections controversy at city hall and urged Mayor Don McGlohon's "prompt attention and, if necessary, intervention" into the matter.

Dillon Watson, president of the Greenville Home Builders Association, said that some 90 to 100 of its members would sign a letter of petition to McGlohon expressing concern on behalf of the building segment.

The letter pointed out, "It is with great concern that the building community of Greenville has viewed the events of the past few days in regards to our Inspections Department. Turmoil of this type is not good for our community and especially for the ones of us directly involved in construction and future development within the city of Greenville."

The builders continued, "It is our belief that the prime purpose of all city employees should be to protect the interest and serve in a helpful capacity for the citizen's of Greenville. We further believe that no city employee has endeavored to do this to any greater degree than our current building inspector, Alton Warren."

"We urge your prompt attention, and, if necessary, intervention into this situation so that a satisfactory solution may be reached that will satisfy the needs of the public servants involved as well as furthering the best interests of this community," the builders' letter stated.

They wrote, "One possible solution that we would like to see considered would be to return building inspections to a separate department directly responsible to the city manager. This arrangement worked well in this community for many years and we see no reason that it should not be given serious consideration for the future."

N.C. Insurance Dept. Reports No Inspection Request In Its Files

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

A spokesman for the N.C. Department of Insurance this morning said an extensive search of their files has failed to turn up a formal request from the City of Greenville for an inspection of the community building at the intersection of Third and Greene Streets. They said, however, that an informal inspection of the facility may have taken place.

Commissioner of Insurance John Ingram said yesterday that the department had received a telephone request for an inspection of the facility, but indicated that city officials had been asked to make the request in writing.

Although city officials said yesterday that the building had been inspected by Insurance Department employees Tuesday, Ingram said, "I can't verify that any of our people have been down there," to check the building.

City officials referred inquiries about the inspection to the Department of Insurance when asked the name of the inspector.

Bob Wray, Director of Engineering for the Insurance Department this morning acknowledged that representatives of his office, including Tom Mullins, were in Greenville earlier this week conducting a seminar, but said he had no knowledge of an inspection of the city building. He added that if the building was checked, it was done informally.

City manager Ed Wyatt this morning referred questions about the inspection to Ron Sewell, director of engineering and inspections.

Sewell said the city has requested an inspection in writing and added that the report will be made public as soon as the city receives it.

When asked if Mullins conducted the inspection, Sewell acknowledged that "Tom was up here looking around," indicating that Mullins did inspect the facility.

Reagan Said Seeking To Abolish Free Legal Aid

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, who clashed with a poor peoples' legal aid group when he was governor of California, is calling for elimination of all federal money for free legal help for the poor.

Reagan's budget proposals for 1982 also would give states direct control for the first time over 40 health and social programs — such as rat control and alcohol abuse — but provide 25 percent less money from Washington to run them.

Initially, that group was to include the Legal Services Corp., a program stretching back to the Johnson administration's anti-poverty initiatives of the mid-1960s.

But a spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, who asked not to be identified, said Thursday that Reagan now wants to abolish Legal Services altogether.

The legal services agency, which provides free legal help in civil disputes to some 1.5 million people a year, has a $321 million budget for 1981 and requested $399 million for fiscal 1982, which begins Oct. 1.

Local legal aid groups who receive the money represent poor people only in civil disputes, such as divorces, tenant-landlord cases, consumer problems, minimum wage violations — particularly those involving farm workers — and suits against the government. The agency does not deal with criminal matters.

Reagan's attempt to abolish it reopens a fight that he fought and lost as governor of California.

In 1971, then-Gov. Reagan vetoed a $1.8 million federal grant to California Rural Legal Assistance, which he charged was illegally helping United Farm Workers President Cesar Chavez organize field hands.

Reagan, who frequently attacked the legal organization, reversed himself after a federal review group exonerated the California agency.

The fight this time is unlikely to be any easier for Reagan.

"We would be strongly opposed to any move of this kind," said Robert Evans, a lobbyist for the American Bar Association. "It would result in a serious denial to equal access to justice. ... Many view this as a keystone to the basic rights of people in this country."

Reagan also may encounter opposition to his plan for saving $2.2 billion by consolidating the 40 health and social programs into state grants for basic health, preventive health, social services and emergency aid.

Spending on the programs — totaling nearly $9 billion this year — would be reduced to $6.8 billion in the next fiscal year, with each state given the power to decide how its share should be spent.

Reagan, who will unveil complete details next week of his proposals to cut 1982 spending by $45 billion, has promised that the neediest Americans would not be hurt by the budget cuts. But opponents of increased state control argue that the federal government has shown itself to be a better guardian of needy Americans.

By letting the states run the programs, Reagan estimates the federal government can eliminate several agencies and more than 3,000 employees who now do the administering. In turn, the administration contends, the programs would be more efficient, avoiding much of a reduction in actual services.

Med School To Begin Prenatal Testing

By GEORGETTE F. HEDRICK
ECU Medical Writer

Shortly after she finished college, Vickie knew she wanted to establish herself in a career before she and her husband started a family. By the time she was 33, promotions had put her almost to the top of her corporate ladder, and she and her husband kept saying "maybe next year" when they discussed having a baby. At the back of their minds, however, was the realization that Vickie's biological time clock was ticking away and increasing her chances of having a baby with a congenital defect.

Vickie's name is fictitious, but her situation is similar to that of many couples today who are postponing pregnancy because of career goals and financial considerations. More effective birth control methods make this possible, and couples who are professionally ambitious appreciate being able to control the start of a family. But for women of advanced childbearing age, the stark reality is that pregnancy carries a higher incidence of chromosome abnormalities. The good news is that prenatal tests are available which provide physicians and parents with information on the health of the fetus.

The sophisticated tests are performed in a cytogenetics lab such as the one being established at the East Carolina University School of Medicine. Women in Eastern North Carolina requiring prenatal testing are presently referred to the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, but as early as this spring, many of the procedures will be conducted in the new cytogenetics lab here in the Development Evaluation Clinic, a division of the medical school's pediatrics department. This lab will enable ECU to provide advanced genetic services for the state's 33 eastern counties.

Genetic counseling and prenatal tests are routinely recommended for prospective mothers over 35 years old, according to Dr. Theodore Kushnick, professor of pediatrics and DEC director. Although researchers are unable to pinpoint why women over 35 are at an increased risk, statistics do show that they have a one to 1½ per cent risk of having a baby with a chromosome abnormality. After 40, the risk is two to five per cent. For example, the incidence of Down Syndrome increases dramatically for the woman over 35 to one in 280, compared to one in 750 for women between 30 and 34 years old.

The main purpose of prenatal testing is to detect abnormalities early enough in gestation so that parents may make an informed decision on interrupting the pregnancy. Kushnick says 98 per cent of the tests show no abnormalities and thus relieve the couples of undue anxiety. When a genetic disorder is identified, only 1.7 per cent of parents choose to end the pregnancy. For parents deciding to continue a pregnancy with a known fetal abnormality, the prenatal diagnosis helps them prepare for the arrival of the child and aids the physician in managing the pregnancy.

"When all the statistics are compiled, you realize that we mainly give parents good news," said Kushnick. "For every 100 pregnancies, 98 healthy children are born. For the other parents, we are able to provide them with information to make an informed decision regarding termination."

That information comes from tests conducted in a cytogenetics lab. Under the direction of Dr. Kathleen Rao, the new lab will eventually offer many of the tests that may be used to detect fetal defects. Of the 2,000 genetic abnormalities that have been identified, nearly 500 may be detected before birth.

Basic to testing of the fetus is amniocentesis, a technique for removing a sample of the fluid that surrounds the fetus.

Although amniocentesis is not currently performed at ECU for genetic counseling, Dr. Jarlath MacKenna, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology, does about 600 procedures a year to evaluate fetal lung maturity. In the future, however, samples of the fluid he obtains will be hand-delivered to Rao and her technicians in the cytogenetics lab for genetic evaluation. The fluid is very delicate, and testing must begin immediately after it is removed.

In the lab the fluid will be spun in a centrifuge to isolate the cells, which are then put in an incubator for 10 to 14 days to encourage growth. From that stage the cells may be manipulated in several ways to aid the study of chromosomes. In preparing slides for the microscope, different stains are employed to assist the technician in counting the chromosomes and studying their shapes and sizes. Images of the chromosomes are cut and pasted into a karyotype, an arrangement of chromosomes that identifies causes of some birth defects.

For example, Down Syndrome, the most prevalent of chromosome abnormalities causing mental retardation, shows up as an extra chromosome in the 21st pair for a total of 47 chromosomes, rather than the normal 46. Edward Syndrome, or Trisomy 18, is identified by the presence of three number 18 chromosomes, a condition that usually causes death before the age of three months. Karyotypes also show balanced translocations of chromosomes in which the proper number is present but some of the genetic material is in the wrong place. In addition, the technique identifies missing pieces of chromosomes and inverted chromosome material.

Neural tube defects in the formation of the skull or spine may also be identified before birth. These defects, which occur about one month after conception, include spina bifida and meningocele, conditions which may be diagnosed by a biochemical test for alpha-fetoprotein. Other specialized laboratory procedures are applied to diagnose other rare genetic disorders.

Another technique is used to identify chromosome abnormalities in children with birth defects and adults with reproductive problems. A blood sample, a non-invasive and less expensive method of genetic screening, may also be used to do a karyotype. If the blood karyotype does not correlate with the symptoms described by the physician, a skin biopsy may be taken to identify suspected defects as well as diagnose metabolic disorders.

Rao and technicians in the cytogenetics lab will select a technique for studying the chromosomes based on the physician's diagnosis and description of the patient's family history. "The major thrust of genetic counseling is diagnosis," said Rao during an interview in the lab. "We can't tell parents the risk of having a child with a genetic defect until we know the cause of the problem. Usually in a prenatal diagnosis we look for everything, but there are still many problems that can't be identified by the tests."

"This is extremely specialized work, and we have to place a lot of emphasis on detail because some deletions may be so tiny. Because of the important consequences of error, our equipment must be working perfectly and strict quality control standards must be maintained."

Rao said blood samples and skin biopsies will be the first tests performed in the lab, and she noted that amniotic fluid studies will begin when the lab is fully staffed. In addition to Kushnick, Rao and MacKenna, the ECU genetics team also includes Dr. Sudesh Kataria, assistant professor of pediatrics and primary genetic counselor, and Dr. Charles E. Boklage, an assistant professor of microbiology and genetics who is responsible for statistical risk assessment. Boklage, an internationally known expert on genetic characteristics of twins, coordinated the development of the lab.

COOKING IS FUN

By CECILY BROWNSTONE

COME FOR DESSERT!
Pineapple Cake Coffee
PINETOP CAKE
Fresh pineapple is beginning to come into season.
Medium-size fresh pineapple
¼ cup butter
½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar
2 tablespoons water

4 serving-size squares
vanilla-flavor cake
Heavy cream, whipped and sweetened to taste with sugar and vanilla
Red preserves (from strawberry to guava)
Cut the top and bottom off the pineapple and cut away the rind. Cut the pineapple crosswise to have 8 slices from ¼- to ½-inch thick. With a small sharp pointed knife cut out the center fibrous core from each slice, cut out any "eyes" around edges of slices. In a large skillet stir together the butter, sugar and water until butter melts and sugar dissolves. Arrange pineapple in skillet. Cover and cook over moderately low heat about 5 minutes; turn with a wide spatula being careful not to break slices, and cook, covered, for about another 5 minutes. Place 2 hot slices (with a spoonful of the small amount of syrup) on each cake square. Top with whipped cream and garnish with the preserves. Serve at once.

Makes 4 servings.

Although you can prepare your own will, it is easy to make mistakes that would cause that will to be invalid or misunderstood after your death. You should have an attorney prepare your will who can make valuable suggestions, provide the necessary witnesses and recommend proper storage for your will. The cost may be less than the costs of administering your estate if you have no will or a poorly drawn will. To help you save on will preparation costs and prepare a better will, here are some facts:

- Everyone over age eighteen, and of sound mind, can legally have a will.
- You can leave your property to anyone, but you cannot totally disinherit your spouse! You do not have to leave anything to others, but remember the special needs of minor children and disabled dependents.
- Any property which belongs to you alone, and your share of property you own "in common" with others, is the property to be distributed by your will. You do not include the property you own with joint owners who already have "survivorship rights" in that property, or insurance proceeds when a beneficiary is named on the policy.

- Plan ahead for will preparation. List everything you own or have ownership rights in that is not already legally designated for others at your death—your home and other real property, bank accounts, insurance payable to the estate, and any other financial and personal property. Also, make a list of your debts.
- Decide whom you would like to have what remain of your property after your debts are paid, and write it down. As much as you can, make these decisions in the privacy of your home. You may want to discuss your decisions with your spouse or adult children. But this

Outside Opinion Best

It is difficult to determine who is right or wrong in the current city controversy over the city-owned building at Greene and Fourth Street.

Chief Building Inspector Alton Warren, who was suspended by his superior Ron Sewell, has indicated that the building is not up to standard.

City officials, while being closed mouthed about the Warren suspension, said they requested an inspection by the State Department of Insurance.

Certainly this was the proper way to proceed. If there is a question about the building structurally, it obviously can't be resolved within the city government given the current situation in the inspections department.

The best thing to do in such a situation is call for an outside inspection to find out for certain if the structure is safe to use.

income down, he is faced with soaring cost of fertilizer, fuel and labor.

That eventually could mean some farms shutting down and food shortages or soaring prices for food.

Farmers Face Lower Income

Fighting inflation is complex. Food prices are reported lower in the first quarter of the year, but so also is farm income.

What is a short term break for the consumer could be disaster for the farm operator. With the farmer's

GETTING TO BE THAT TIME OF YEAR!

BY ART BUCHWALD

That's The Way It Is

March is the cruelest month of the year, particularly this year when we all lose Walter Cronkite as an anchor man on the CBS nightly news. We are not only saying goodbye to a man who has spent more time in our homes than most of our children, but also to a person who has been voted, year after year, as the most trusted man in America.

I am a personal friend of Walter's and I can now reveal for the first time how Walter achieved this title. Walter Cronkite was born in St. Joseph, Mo., the only child of a dentist and a housewife. When he was 7 years old, his mother sent him to the store for a quart of milk. Walter saw a lady drop a dime on the floor of the store. He picked it up and gave it to her. She patted him on the head and said, "Some day you will be the most trusted man in this country." This incident changed Walter's life because he finally knew what he wanted to be when he grew up.

His family moved to Houston and Walter attended Sidney Lanier High School, and was the only student the teachers would trust to clean the blackboards.

He was also the only boy that parents in Houston would trust with their daughters. Walter never violated that trust, and most of the girls he went out with reported it was the most boring date they ever had.

After finishing high school, Walter enrolled at the University of Texas where he majored in "Trustworthiness," with a minor in "Integrity."

We read that if the five cents per gallon extra tax is enacted, some 400 to 500 will still have to be laid off.

From many parts of our state come stories of layoffs in industry and in both state and local governments. These people being laid off first will normally be expected to go into the labor market seeking jobs. They also will be going to the Employment offices seeking help. That measure of help of itself will have an impact upon the economy.

The picture continues to grow difficult as we read that here in North Carolina as the economy worsens and as inflation takes its toll, some school systems have already spent their year's budget for utilities. Some are already cutting down daily hours to save fuel. Others are talking about temporary closings until warmer weather prevails.

Well, we wish to tell the state of North Carolina one distinct fact. Not only are public schools in the predicament of having spent their allotted monies for energy, so are thousands and thousands of home owners and renters in the very same predicament. In a true sense we are all in the same boat. The cries of the educators is loud and clear, but it might well be drowned out by the cries of the "little folks" who are hit so hard.

When we examine the picture, we just wonder where it all will stop.

Although he had a brilliant record in scholarship, his social life suffered because the word was out that Walter could be trusted not to make a pass at a girl. The coeds at the University of Texas refused to have anything to do with him.

For the first time Walter started having doubts about wanting to be the most trusted man in America.

He told his mother, "Maybe I should go into law or politics instead."

His mother sympathized with him and said, "I know it's hard not to lie and cheat and mess around in convertibles, but someday if you stick to your vows and become America's most trusted man, women will throw themselves at your feet, and you will never have to do without again."

So Walter graduated from the University of Texas "Magna Cum Virgin" to take up his role in journalism, which many say is the second oldest profession in the world.

Walter worked on newspapers, for wire services and eventually joined the electronic media. In 1962 he took over the CBS Evening News, and achieved his dream of becoming the most trusted man in this country.

The role Walter Cronkite has played in all our lives cannot be overestimated. I recall during one of the space shots, when the astronauts were having trouble with their capsule, Walter was the first to tell us that there was a malfunction in a computer that had made the ship lose control. I was sick with fear, but my wife said, "Don't

Credibility By Cronkite

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent
NEW YORK (AP) — Evenings at seven (depending on the time zone) will be different from here on out for many Americans. "That's the way it is" now becomes part of the way it was and the way we were.

Walking west on 57th Street to Walter Cronkite's incredibly cluttered office in the CBS studios for a farewell interview, I think about some of the events and incidents that go into making a man the most trusted American of his time.

Hanoi, 1973, rushes to mind. The release of the last American pilots from those North Vietnamese prison camps. A number of us had flown in from Laos on a press charter. Through some lucky scheduling foulup we had gotten there ahead of time. The prisoners were still in their concrete cellblocks, wearing their POW pajamas and Ho Chi Minh sandals.

At a camp named "The Zoo," one of the worst for horror stories, I went into a low-slung building, once a stable, to talk with American servicemen who were about to be freed after four or more years imprisonment. To my surprise, they all climbed on their straw bunks, turned their faces to the wall and rebuffed all questions. One pilot's cot faced a window.

"Hey," he cried, "there's Walter Cronkite. We really are being released."

"You got to be blipping me," said his comrade, but tears already were running down his face.

All at once the prisoners surrounded me, embraced me, peppered me with questions. Until they saw Walter Cronkite, they apologized, they thought we were part of "another Jane Fonda peace group."

Cronkite had given us credibility. His image even surmounted the language barrier. The North Vietnamese referred to him as "Mister Concrete."

I remember the first time I met him. It was at Cape Canaveral during an early manned missile shot. Alan Shepard's Walter was in a chaise lounge off by the pool surrounded, almost obliterated, by a pile of scientific background material. As always, he was doing his homework to go live on camera for hours on end.

Missile shots and moon shots were the most difficult to prep for, he confessed, as movers carried out the mementoes of three decades from that tiny office next to the CBS newsroom. "I started out from an advanced state of idiocy."

Conventions, elections that went far into the night, even until 10 a.m. the next morning, like Nixon-Kennedy in 1960, were comparatively easy for "old iron pants," as he knew he was called by his colleagues. "I had the easy part. I had to keep going, keep thinking, keep coming up with new material. That kept the adrenalin flowing. I felt sorry for those who had nothing to do for long periods of time but had to keep awake anyhow."

Through it all, the deaths and elections of popes and presidents, the assassination in Dallas, earthquakes, budgets, hostages, whatever had to be anchored and amplified, Walter Leland Cronkite Sr. never thought of himself as anything but a newsmen. He had begun more than a half century ago as a paper carrier on the Houston Post, advanced to copy boy covering civic lunches, then the police beat, where he was known as "Needle Nose," onward and upward to war correspondent at Normandy and the Bulge, then Moscow bureau manager for United Press.

At KLMO, his first fling in radio, a girl named Betsy talked him into playing the male lead in a commercial that, as he recalls, went like this:

MAN: Hello, Angel, what heaven did you drop from?

GIRL: I'm not an angel.

MAN: Well, you look like an angel.

GIRL: That's because I use Richard Hudnut facial cream.

"I think she wrote me into these skits to get my attention," says Walter, who married Betsy and took her off to Moscow, where in that bleak winter of 1947 "his wildest Walter Mitty success dream was of some day being a top news executive."

"The familiarity quote," as he describes the anchor role, had not surfaced yet in his career. Luckily so, in the case of his first meeting with Gen. Patton. On the second day of the Battle of the Bulge, "covering the terrible chaos of the first American retreat I had ever seen," Cronkite was returning from the front in an open jeep when his helmet blew off and landed in a mine field. His driver was happy to push-on without it. A sudden scream of sirens announced Patton was heading up to the line. The general's jeep skidded to a halt and a colonel came running back to Cronkite, who had pulled off the road.

"Soldier, where's your helmet?" the colonel relayed Patton's annoyance.

"I'm not a soldier, I'm a correspondent," said Cronkite, rattling off the serial number he has never forgotten: "0225612."

That may have been Walter Cronkite's last identity crisis. Since joining CBS in 1950, he has had a recurring nightmare "of being on camera and not being able to think of anything to say," although he daydreams nostalgically of his early Washington days when they did the nightly news without a script. He still believes "that's the proper way to do news, in a conversational tone. As if you had just walked into a cocktail party and began rattling off what happened in all the necessary 'detail.'"

THIS AFTERNOON

Crusade Is Ready

By BILL NOBLITT
RALEIGH — A crusade against voluntary abortions, rallying thousands of fundamentalist and evangelical Christians in an assault on state and federal spending on abortion for birth control, is now beginning in North Carolina.

The theme, at its simplest is this: your tax dollars are paying for the murder of thousands of unborn babies. You have a Christian duty to stop that.

Resolutions and letters from Baptists across the state are already hitting desks of legislators. Gov. Jim Hunt and other state officials.

Mail is expected to reach floodstage proportions shortly as Churches for Life and Liberty bring full energy to the battle. At this time, information on abortions, letter-writing techniques, and the addresses and phone numbers of legislators are being distributed in churches across the state.

Tested Method
Yet to come are the rallies and marches in Raleigh and elsewhere which are designed to draw media and public attention both in North Carolina and nationally.

The techniques have already been thoroughly tested and proved effective two years ago when essentially the same Christian organizations successfully fought state regulation of private schools, winning for themselves the right to run church-related schools without state supervision or interference.

After that experience, evangelicals moved solidly into political action and most observers agree that this involvement played a considerable role in the conservative Republican sweep in last November's election. Some see the strength of evangelicals as pivotal in that political counter-revolution, while others contend that the public at large was simply ready for such a change at the same time as evangelicals became politically active.

The lead paragraph in letters now being distributed, urging participation in the anti-abortion crusade, point to the vigor with which the issue will no doubt be addressed.

"Your taxes murdered almost 12,000 babies in North Carolina in 1979-80. Cut up like chickens in a butcher shop... Alive! Chopped up, torn apart, shredded. Alive! Some were pickled. Alive! A salt solution burned their delicate pink skin to a mummy brown. Struggling and strangling for 20 minutes until their lungs were destroyed, until their poisoned hearts and brains surrendered in death.

Christians are warned that the state budget now under consideration in the General Assembly calls for doubling the current $2.2 million spent for abortion, providing $4.4 million, and possibly leading to as many as 23,000 abortions in the next year.

Black Births
The political muscle of organized evangelical Christians puts many legislators in an especially difficult position. Lawmakers will not say so publicly, this is altogether too delicate and volatile a subject. But there is widespread support within the General Assembly purely on the grounds that it is a method of at least slowing down the birthrate in the lowest socio-economic strata.

Strangely enough, a sizable number of evangelical Christians support that same sentiment — to slow the births among poor blacks. But disagreement comes on the method. Abortion, they contend, is still murder of a living organism. The solution must be found in more effective birth control measures prior to conception.

The crusade will seek to strike from the North Carolina budget all funds for abortion except those essential in cases where the health or life of the mother is in jeopardy.

The campaign also provides an effective way to keep the Christian political machinery in working order... both to maintain interest and support, and to keep politicians on notice that the group remains viable.

Other Editors Say Problems For All

(Washington Daily News)

It might sound disturbing to ask an embarrassing question in the midst of all the talk about cutting down on inflation and cutting back on expenses and carrying on business as usual with a pared-down staff.

Yet before us right now, staring us in the face, is a very human question: What are all the people who are to be laid-off do?

Most of them have families to support, and when General Motors lays off 19,000 salaried workers as it plans to do, it will not be a case of these 19,000 being able to go over to Ford or Chrysler and getting jobs, because these latter two are in great difficulty too. They are laying off workers, and since the auto industry, along with steel, seems to set the industrial pace of America, the layoffs soon could go far down the line.

Here in North Carolina we read that without the proposed five cents extra tax per gallon on gasoline that between 2,000 and 3,000 highway employees must be laid off during the next biennium.

We read that if the five cents per gallon extra tax is enacted, some 400 to 500 will still have to be laid off.

From many parts of our state come stories of layoffs in industry and in both state and local governments. These people being laid off first will normally be expected to go into the labor market seeking jobs. They also will be going to the Employment offices seeking help. That measure of help of itself will have an impact upon the economy.

Strength For Today

EVILS OF COMPROMISE.

The Greeks and the Romans loved to indulge themselves in wine and sexual promiscuity. They even created a god called Bacchus and worshipped him as the presiding deity of their orgies.

This was at least frank and out in the open as compared with the compromise and equivocation that we find among so many people today. Moderns would be repelled by the idea of worshipping either intoxication or vice. But, although they conspicuously wear the habiliments of respectability, they like to make a quick change now and then when they are on vacation or away from home.

Jesus became so impatient with people like this that he declared, "Make the tree good and the fruit good, or else make the tree corrupt and the fruit corrupt." This was not one of our Lord's statements regarding moral procedure as it was an ironic and grievous condemnation of the moral compromise he saw all about him. And we confront the same today. — Elisha Douglass

Tiller Sees Slow-Down, Then Recovery

By SUE FERNALD
Reflector Staff Writer

"We think Greenville shows tremendous growth opportunity as a financial center and that investment banking and brokerage will be well received," said F. Carlyle Tiller, president and chief executive officer of Wheat, First Securities.

According to Tiller, "The initial impact of the new (Reagan) administration program will be a slow down, primarily due to the slower rate of money growth that the administration is advocating and the federal reserve is supporting." However, he added "1982 could be a very strong year of recovery and we could have a substantial period of growth."

Tiller was here for the opening of Wheat, First Securities office, the 15th in the state.

The company deals with investments, options, insurance and securities. Its working area includes North Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia.

"Our approach is to really concentrate in an area. We want to know that area and provide unsurpassed services," commented Tiller.

Tiller stressed that Wheat, First Securities is not located here in Greenville for only economic reasons. "We want to contribute to the civic, social, cultural, and education activities as much as possible," Tiller said.

Paul Rendine, vice-president and branch manager of the Greenville office noted that along with providing company services for the city employees of Wheat, First Securities are already putting their talents back into the community. Rendine is currently teaching a night course through East Carolina University, Financial Planning for the Medical Profession. He also taught an accounting course last semester. Two other members of the staff are teaching courses at Craven County Community College.

Employees of the Greenville office include: John Sherman Jr., Van C. Fleming III, Harold E. Bissett Jr., Patrick L. Pollard, Harry S. Gurganus, all account executives; Karen Shannon, administrative assistant; Lisa Wooten, wire operator; and Michele Eri, receptionist.

$50,000 Fine

Superior Court Judge Frank Brown Wednesday sentenced Diane Wilhelmina Cherry, 27 of 1207 Clark St. to six years in prison and ordered her to pay a $50,000 fine after a jury found her guilty of drug trafficking.

Ms. Cherry was arrested by Greenville police and agents of the State Bureau of Investigation on October 3, on charges of trafficking in heroin.

Under state law, she could have received a 15-year jail term and a $50,000 fine. The sentence handed down by Judge Brown was the minimum sentence allowable under the law, he said.

'We're putting out the last edition of the Crimson and we welcome you to join us.' So after the President's dinner I spent the night putting the Crimson to bed. Heady stuff for a college drop out."

Asked to contemplate his own epitaph, a favorite interview question of his friend Hal Boyle, he thought for a long minute. "Here Lies Walter Cronkite" wouldn't sound too good for a guy who's supposed to have a reputation for truth. How about, 'Here Lies Walter Cronkite, the First Time He Ever Did.' Or maybe, 'The First Time He Ever Got Caught At It.'"

On the walls, as yet untouched by the packers, were pictures of Wytje, his beloved sailboat. The lamp on the table was made from a ship's lantern. On his desk was a letter from a sailing friend who could "be reached after March 26 at the yacht club in Bora Bora and after April 6, care of the Port Captain, Pago Pago."

Walter Cronkite sighed. Audibly. Visibly. The anchor's one retirement dream was of "waving goodbye to the staff and all that mail," hauling in the anchor and sailing Wytje around the world. "It's not going to be that way. CBS has too many other plans for me."

And that's the way it is with Walter Cronkite in his final hours at anchor.

Sure enough, 20 minutes later Walter was back on the air, reporting the computer had been fixed and the astronauts were safe.

A man less trustworthy would have taken credit for correcting the problem, but Walter refused. Yet everyone in America knew that once again Cronkite had saved the day.

Walter is not leaving television. He will be doing specials and other newsworthy events. But he won't be coming into our living rooms every night anymore.

We'll miss him not only in the evenings, but also during the space shots and political conventions and the summit talks.

But most of all the American people will have to find another person in this country they can trust. With a population of only 220 million citizens to choose from, it isn't going to be easy.

Search Underway For Woman

FARMVILLE — Local police have been joined by Farmville citizens and fire-rescue personnel in searching the area for Charlie Dean Harper, a 46-year-old woman who was reported missing on March 2, according to Police Chief Ron Cooper.

The chief said that the black woman, who resided at 514 Cameron Street here, was reported missing by her mother last Monday morning and since that time an extensive search has taken place, including the dragging of area ponds.

Cooper pointed out that "we have knocked on every door on her block" and everyone interviewed said it was not like Ms. Harper to wander off. He added that the woman did leave a note to her children.

Cooper said the disappearance is "completely opposite" to the woman's normal habits.

According to the chief, local citizens and members of the Farmville Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad have assisted in the search.

He described Charlie Harper as weighing approximately 200 pounds and standing five feet-one inch tall. The lady was last seen wearing a white blouse with green and orange flowers, black pants and a gray short coat with red stripes. Cooper added she had a bad burn scar on the back of her right hand.

Harburg, Oscar-winning lyricist for the hit 1939 musical movie, "The Wizard of Oz," starring Judy Garland, died immediately after the accident at 12:30 p.m. PST, said West Los Angeles traffic officer George Lamonica.

E.Y. HARBURG

"He was eastbound on Sunset Boulevard crossed the double yellow line and hit another car head on," said Lamonica. "It was raining and the road surface was wet."

Lamonica said the driver and passenger in the other car were injured, but he didn't know how seriously.

Youth Chosen For Olympics

Tommy Moran, a 14-year-old Special Olympian from Winterville, has been chosen to represent North Carolina at the International Winter Special Olympics Games, set for March 8-13 in Smugglers Notch-Stowe, Vermont.

North Carolina will send a team of 12 Special Olympians to the games, including six alpine skiers, three nordic skiers, and three ice skaters.

Tommy, foster son of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Stocks of Winterville, is the only Special Olympian from Eastern North Carolina chosen to attend the 1981 games. He earned the right to compete by winning a gold medal at the Southeast Regional Winter Special Olympics held in Boone in January.

He and Michael Turnage of Grifton were among 150 Special Olympians from seven southeastern states competing in Boone. Tommy won his division in the giant slalom, thus earning a spot on the state's international team. Michael won a bronze medal in the downhill race.

Some 700 Special Olympians, their chaperones and coaches from all 50 states and several other countries will begin arriving in Vermont this weekend with North Carolina's delegation arriving Sunday afternoon. Monday will be practice day and time trials are scheduled for Tuesday morning.

TOMMY MORAN

Tommy will compete on Wednesday in the giant slalom and the downhill race.

His appearance at the international games is sponsored by East Carolina University's Circle K Club, which, along with help from Sigma Nu fraternity and Gamma Sigma Sigma and Kappa Delta sororities raised the funds necessary to send Tommy to Vermont.

Eric Heiden, five-time Olympic gold medalist, and his sister Beth, an Olympic bronze medalist, will serve as Honorary Winter Special Olympics head coaches. Decathlon gold medalist Bruce Jenner, silver medalist Billy Kidd and Karen Magnussen Cella will also be on hand for the games.

Iran Defense Council Rejects Meditation In War

Utilities Meet

The board of commissioners of the Greenville Utilities Commission will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the board room of the Utilities Building at the intersection of Fifth and Washington Streets.

Included on the agenda is the consideration of a resolution requesting the city to sell $4.5 million in authorized water bonds and a resolution declaring switchgear in the old boiler plant surplus, as well as consideration of bids received on a surplus propane tank.

Also on the agenda is consideration of bids received for an elevated water tank, foundation and main work, consideration of bids for various equipment, a number of reports, and other items.

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer
BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's Supreme Defense Council today unanimously rejected the latest attempt by other Moslem nations to mediate the Iran-Iraq war, sources in Tehran reported.

The sources, reached by telephone by The Associated Press, said the Council took the "no" resolution at an extraordinary mid-morning session held in Tehran under President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

The newest initiative to end the 5½-month-old war called for a cease-fire at midnight March 12 and a four-week Iraqi withdrawal starting March 20.

But Bani-Sadr told a crowd of 100,000 at Tehran University Thursday that Iran would not accept any cease-fire proposal unless it made the Iraqi invaders withdraw completely at once and punished them.

"I will not agree with any accord which jeopardizes a bit of our soil and a bit of the republic. We will not accept the solution which does not involve punishing the invader," Bani-Sadr said.

"I promise you that I will resist in this war until the decisive victory of our armed forces. In our view, the enemy's forces are neither able to advance, nor to retreat. And our forces can resist against the enemy."

Bani-Sadr said a cease-fire and withdrawal must be implemented simultaneously, and that Iran would not agree to any accord unless it reiterated Iranian sovereignty over the east side of the Shatt al-Arab.

Iraq claims complete sovereignty over the Shatt, its only waterway to the Persian Gulf, and invaded Sept. 22 and occupied a 300-mile swath of Iranian territory running south to the estuary.

Fistfights and rock-throwing erupted during the rally between Bani-Sadr's supporters and foes who back the fundamentalist Islamic Republican Party, leaving dozens injured and about 30 arrested.

Reporters said the brawls broke out after both sides chanted slogans against each other and Bani-Sadr ordered his followers to arrest the fundamentalists.

A nine-member panel of the Islamic Conference Organization submitted proposals in Tehran and Baghdad Wednesday aimed at ending the Iran-Iraq war, then returned to Jidda, Saudi Arabia, to await a reply it said it expected by Saturday.

Habib Chatti, secretary general of the organization, told a news conference in Jidda Thursday that Iran and Iraq showed "a spirit of understanding. We have entered the road to peace and hope that peace will be fulfilled soon," the Saudi state radio reported.

The peace commission briefed Saudi King Khalid on its efforts, then Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat, one of its members, flew to Damascus to brief Syrian President Hafez Assad.

In addition to Arafat and Chatti, the panel included President Ahmed Sekou Toure of Guinea, the leaders of Pakistan, Bangladesh, Gambia and Turkey and ministers from Senegal and Malaysia.

Long Job Lines For Greensboro

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Job hunters lined up by the hundreds Thursday for the second round of applications for 150 jobs at a proposed, Proctor & Gamble plant.

The number of applicants became even more meaningful as Cone Mills officials said they were having difficulty in finding new jobs in the Greensboro area for about 400 workers being laid off at a corduroy plant.

The North Carolina Employment Security Commission screened about 2,000 people Thursday for the Proctor & Gamble jobs, which will pay $7 an hour for production of toiletries. A screening session two weeks ago produced an equal number of applicants.

One of the applicants Thursday, William Squires of High Point, who lost his job in a layoff, said he has filed applications for jobs in Greensboro, Winston-Salem and Thomasville.

Meanwhile, Cone Mills spokesman Frank Fary said limited cutbacks in the company's other plants in the Greensboro area would make it difficult to relocate 400 workers who are losing their jobs at the Revolution plant.

"Of course, Cone operates 22 plants in which we'd offer the Revolution workers jobs if an opening came, but I would think most of them would prefer not to leave their homes," Fary said.

Fary said Cone Mills is closing down some old looms at the Minneola plant in Gibsonville, phasing out a small weave room at Tabardrey in Haw River and taking a few older looms out of production at White Oak in Greensboro.

He said workers at those plants have been reassigned to other jobs in the plants.

Cone Mills said earlier it is phasing out its corduroy operation because of slumping foreign markets. The Revolution plant, which now employs about 800 people, will continue to produce flannel shirting.

Cone operates 11 other plants in North Carolina, one in Mississippi and four in South Carolina.

Debate About Beginnings Has Simmered For Ages

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer
KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—The question of how we got here is as old as humankind: Did we emerge from a primordial soup, evolving through lower life forms? Or did some sort of divine handclap bring us to sudden life, thinking and feeling? The emotional debate has simmered for ages. Even the most recent round is a century old, spawned by the theories of a British naturalist named Charles Robert Darwin and his 1859 book, "Origin of Species." The conflict pits those who see evolution as tried, tested scientific theory against those who see it as mere guesswork, and no better than the Bible's explanation of creation. In recent months the controversy has taken on added intensity. A trial widely compared to Tennessee's 1925 Scopes "monkey trial" opened in California this week to decide whether the state can be forced to teach public school children a more biblical theory of creation alongside Darwin's ideas. The fight is mounting along other, less noticed fronts as well. Bills that would give the biblical account of creation equal time in the classroom have been introduced in 10 state legislatures this year, many of them pushed by lawmakers who feel a conservative, fundamentalist religious tide among their constituents. Similar proposals are under study in another seven states.

The fight is also being pressed in scores of school board meetings and in thousands of private conversations among parents worried about loss of traditional values in the schools. And it's being fought out when states draw up their lists of approved biology textbooks.

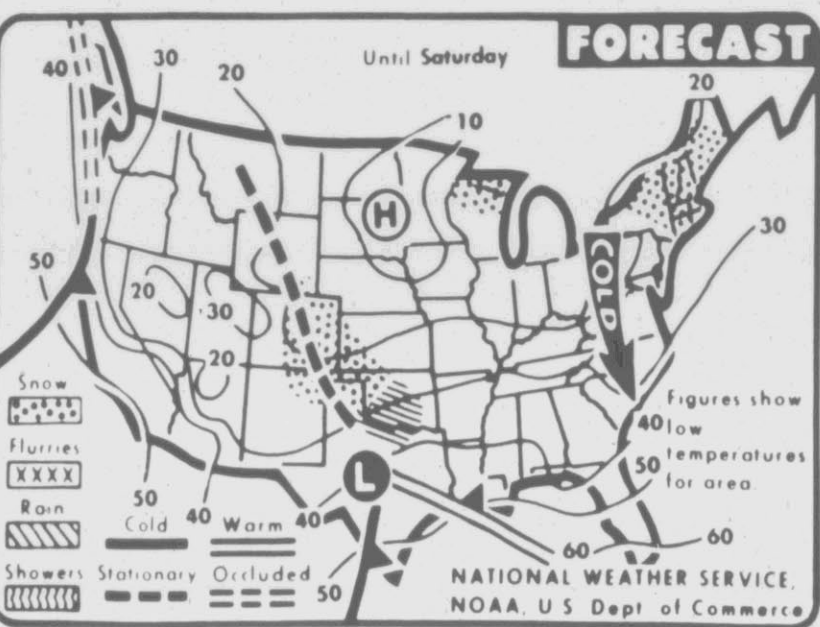

"I don't think we've even begun to see the grass-roots support for action like this," said Karen Dukewits, Missouri coordinator for the Pro Family Forum, a national group pushing conservative, fundamentalist causes. Mrs. Dukewits lined up enough support to get a creationist bill introduced in the Missouri General Assembly this year.

The bill takes a relatively new twist, arguing that the creationist point of view is as well founded in scientific research as evolution. "It's a new idea. It's just now catching on," she said. "There's a definite conservative trend in the country, and this is all a reflection of that."

But Wayne Moyer, executive director of the National Association of Biology Teachers, based in Reston, Va., said the "scientific" in "scientific creationism" is just a smoke screen. "It's not science because it ultimately depends on revealed truth at the end," Moyer said. "As soon as you trace through all their arguments, they end up with, 'God did it. A deity did it.' No matter what they call it, it's some outside being. "They're trying to resurrect ideas that were discarded hundreds of years ago. They're trying to rewrite science to agree with the Bible."

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST - Snow is expected in the forecast period until Saturday morning for New England. Rain changing to snow is expected from Oklahoma to Utah. Most states will be relatively cold. (AP Laserphoto)

By The Associated Press
Fair skies and chilly temperatures will prevail as North Carolina begins the weekend. The National Weather Service said a storm system that brought rain to the state

Thursday moved on over the Atlantic, leaving North Carolina under the influence of a high pressure ridge extending from the northern plains to the lower Mississippi Valley. Skies will be mostly clear tonight with low temperatures ranging from the upper teens in the northern mountains to about 30 along the Coast. Sunny skies will dominate Saturday's weather, with highs in the mid 40s to the mid 50s. The northern mountains will be somewhat cooler.

Life As It's Lived

The Well Child Office Is One Treasured Memory

By GAIL MICHAELS
If I had to name the one thing I've missed most since moving from Greenville, I'd have to say the Well Child Office. This mission of mercy is maintained by Greenville Pediatrics, P.A. so that children needing regular check-ups don't have to mix with the sniff-and-drip set. Just one more-time I'd like to walk into a pediatrician's office without having the one toddler in the room least likely to reach her next birthday come over to breathe in the baby's face and ask, "What's she got?" This kind of germ warfare is bad enough in a regular doctor's office, but at least there a patient can launch a good defense. The last time anyone sat next to me and asked between wheezes what I was there for, I merely remarked, "I'm not sure, but I've got all the symptoms of the plague." Within two minutes I had one whole side of the waiting room to myself. Unfortunately, people are much more fatalistic at the pediatrician's. The mother of the curious toddler is far less likely to snatch her away from my child's potential germs than to look up from her magazine and sigh, "Now Andrea, don't give the baby your flu." Occasionally, we're lucky enough to make an appointment for a time when there are only two or three children in this shape. But when I took Zachary in for his nine months check-up, the waiting room was packed with little children whose noses should have been hooked up to well-pump. I would have walked out right then, but this check-up, the doctor had assured me, was necessary to make sure that Zachary remained healthy. I had to take Meg, too, because I've found no one in Smithfield who babysits during the day. She immediately zeroed in on an eight-year-old with gray skin. "I tried to remain calm," Meg, come over here and sit by me." "I don't want to. She's going to read me a story." I clenched my teeth and smiled. "I'll read you a story." Meg was agreeable. "Okay," she said. "After she finishes." The other child's mother hesitated, then asked, "What's she got?" "Nothing." She smiled with relief. "Aren't you lucky? We think Amy has pneumonia." For an hour and a half I let politeness overrule my impulse to restrict my children's breathing space. We were cheerfully exposed to everything from flu to chickenpox. But I reached a breaking point when a two-year-old with terminal croup stuck a toy in his mouth, then darted over to let Zachary have a taste. I held the germ-bearer gently but firmly at arm's length. As he struggled and screamed, his mother jumped to the rescue with a look that clearly said, "You've got your nerve." I just wish I'd got it sooner. The next day Zachary developed a hacking cough and a runny nose. Meg complained of a stomachache. So much for the maintenance of good health.

Re-Appointed

RALEIGH - Col. John T. Jenkins, who has headed the North Carolina Highway Patrol since 1977, was reappointed to that post Thursday by Gov. Jim Hunt. Jenkins, 58, has served in the patrol for 33 years with assignments in Havelock, Rocky Mount, Greenville, Goldsboro, Fayetteville, and Raleigh. A native of Enfield, Jenkins served 12 years in Craven County before being transferred to Rocky Mount (1959) as a corporal and a short time later to Greenville. After serving in Goldsboro as a sergeant and Fayetteville as a lieutenant, Jenkins, in 1968, was promoted to the rank of captain and placed in charge of the Troop C, with headquarters in Raleigh. He was commander of Troop A in Greenville from 1973 until named Highway Patrol commander in April 1977.

explain development of all living things. The curriculum would also include the ideas that men and apes have separate ancestries; that the Earth was formed relatively recently, not 20 billion years ago as scientists widely believe; and that the Earth's geology be explained by "catastrophism, including the occurrence of a worldwide flood." The creationists, as they call themselves, have boosted their scientific image by recruiting supporters with advanced academic degrees. "There's a lot of evidence against evolution," said David Rodabaugh, a mathematics professor at the University of Missouri who is head of the Missouri Association for Creation. "It claims that life evolved by randomly increasing in complexity. If someone handed you a watch and said, 'This came about by chance,' you'd laugh at them. But if they hand you a life form, something vastly more intricate, and say the same thing, you say, 'Sure.'" Scientists have only recently awakened to the creationist lobbying effort, said Stanley Roth, a high school biology teacher in Lawrence, Kan., who is past president of the biology teachers association. "We felt smug that we had done an adequate job of teaching the American public and educators what science was, that they wouldn't take it seriously," Roth said. "But now we're seeing legislators and boards of education starting to sway, and finally we've gotten on the ball to counter this." States where bills to force the teaching of creationism have been introduced are Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Indiana, Kentucky, Oregon and Colorado. Others studying the issue in committee or planning to propose such legislation include Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Iowa, Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana, according to Richard Bliss, a biologist and director of curriculum development for the Institute of Creation Research in San Diego.

The Sky's The Limit For Big N.C. Balloon-Makers

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press Writer
LOVE VALLEY, N.C. (AP) — It's up, up and away for The Balloon Works of Love Valley — a company where "the sky's the limit" takes on new meaning.

The Balloon Works manufactures colorful hot-air balloons for balloonists all over the world. The company turns out more than 300 balloons a year and rings up more than $1.5 million in sales.

According to company president Dodds Meddock, an alumnus of Harvard Graduate School of Business and a former philosophy professor, The Balloon Works is the world's largest hot-air balloon manufacturer. But that fact is not obvious from first glance at the company's plant and location.

The firm's office and manufacturing space is housed in four dilapidated chicken houses and tobacco barns in rural Iredell County. The company has its own airfield — a 2,800-foot-long sod strip called Rhine Aerodrome that blends in with the surrounding pastureland.

But The Balloon Works' products are flown all over the world and its customers range from international sports enthusiasts to multi-national companies.

"Right now, there is a bank in Bogota, Colombia, flying eight of our balloons for advertising," Meddock said.

The average hot-air balloon stands 70 feet tall and is 55 feet in diameter. It is made from about 1,000 yards of material.

Balloons from the Balloon Works sell for $8,000 to $25,000, depending on how fancy the customer wants his balloon. The company has made all designs of balloons, including one shaped like a football helmet for the University of Oklahoma.

About 50 percent of the huge balloons the company sells are custom designed. Another 20 percent go to businesses, such as Coca-Cola, IBM and Forbes Magazine, to be used as "flying billboards." The other 30 percent are standard models bought off the shelf.

The Balloon Works, which employs 70 workers to turn out 1½ balloons a day, moved from downtown Charlotte to tiny Love Valley in 1973. Meddock said he selected the area for several reasons.

"In a rural area like this, there is a tradition of craftsmanship from the textile and furniture industries that is very appropriate to our business," he said.

"The balloon is divided into two parts. The envelop (the balloon itself) is very similar to the cut and sew operation in a textile mill. And the skills involved in making the baskets are similar to furniture making."

The company is a self-contained manufacturing plant, with all work done on the premises by hand.

The balloon is stitched up by hand by about a dozen seamstresses. Cloth for the balloons — brightly colored polyester coated with polyurethane — is stored in huge bolts in the sewing room.

The giant baskets that carry the balloon's pilot and passengers are woven by hand by area craftsmen. One weaver works full time in the company's "basket building" while two country craftsmen weave the baskets in their homes. It takes a weaver about 25 hours to finish one of the baskets.

Even metal parts used on the balloons are made and fitted at the plant.

It takes 90 to 150 days from order to delivery of a balloon. "We always have a backlog of orders, so it takes a while to fill a new one," said Meddock's wife, Suzanna. "But if a customer has to have it in a hurry, we try to accommodate him."

An abundance of craftsmen wasn't the only reason Meddock chose the Piedmont foothills for his company.

"The weather is almost perfect for ballooning," he said. "There's the Bermuda high off the coast, and that means good balloon-flying weather. The weather in this area is very suitable for ballooning. You have low winds in the mornings and evenings."

The perfect wind speed for ballooning, he said, is 10 miles an hour.

Although a hot-air balloon has no motor and consists only of a fabric envelop, a rattan basket and a propane burner, it is classified as aircraft and comes under the jurisdiction of the Federal Aviation Administration.

"The FAA requires as much control here as you'll find in a Boeing plant, only on a smaller scale," Meddock said. The Balloon Works is FAA-certified as an aircraft manufacturer.

Ten hours of flight time and a pilot's license are required to fly a balloon.

Meddock and his partner, designer Tracy Barnes, are internationally recognized balloonists. Meddock, who is on the board of directors of the Balloon Federation of America, built and flew the first solar powered balloon in 1973. He was the first balloonist to fly over the North Pole last year.

Barnes, chairman of the board of The Balloon Works, has won awards from the National Collection of Fine Arts, The National Endowment for the Arts Bicentennial Commission, the balloon federation and the international Federation Aeronautique Internationale. He was the first balloonist to fly across the country in 1967 and he still holds the world altitude record he set in 1964.

Barnes designed the company's most popular model, the Barnes Stormier, which sells for just under $8,000.

Future plans at the company include further experiments with dirigibles. So far, the company has built and tested seven airships. "With the cost of energy going up all the time, airships are definitely the transportation of the future."

The company is also getting ready for its annual balloon rally, held in October at the airfield. More than 100 balloons from all over the world are expected this year for the eighth get-together.

Meanwhile, both Meddock and Barnes say it's the thrill of ballooning, not the fame or money, that keeps them flying high.

"It's such a serene, safe sport — soaring with the wind with no noise," Meddock said. "There are virtually no accidents in ballooning because they're so easy to fly."

"Ballooning is a sociable sport. You fly at such low levels you can talk to people on the ground. It's a wonderful way to set yourself free and make new friends at the same time. It's the best sport around," Meddock said.

THE BALLOON WORKS — Despite its rural appearance, The Balloon Works in Iredell County is the world's largest manufacturer of hot-air balloons. The company moved its operations from Charlotte to Love Valley in 1973. (AP Laserphoto)

Peanut Growers Are Seeking Higher Price Commitments

By The Associated Press

Peanut growers in northeastern North Carolina have begun giving solid support to a coalition of farmers in their state and Virginia who are seeking firm commitments for higher prices.

The commitments for $800 a ton are being sought from shellers under the threat that crops won't be planted unless the higher prices are assured. The two-state coalition of farmers have told shellers they needed an answer this week.

In meetings this week, growers in Northampton County — the state's largest producing county — committed 65 percent of their acreage to the coalition's bargaining effort.

Hertford County growers have pledged nearly half of their 14,000 acres and more is expected. Gates County growers have put up 80 percent of their acreage.

North Carolina ranks only behind Georgia and Texas in peanut production in the United States.

Growers are seeking the $800 per ton price in the face of federal support levels of $455 a ton for peanuts grown under the quota system and $250 per ton for additional peanuts.

Those are the same price support levels used last year, when production nationally dropped 42 percent. North Carolina's growers suffered a loss of 40 percent of their crop due primarily to problems resulting from drought and other adverse weather factors.

The poor 1980 production has resulted in a shortage of seed peanuts, which are up in price. Growers, who say the support price has gone up only 15 percent since 1975 while the cost of production went up 18 percent last year alone, say inflation is continuing to cause their costs to soar.

Virginia farmers began organizing their efforts to get higher prices in January.

Since then they have met with North Carolina growers, who joined in the movement.

One of the organizers of the effort, Carlton Butler of Carrsville, Va., says 90 percent of Virginia's 104,000 acres of peanuts has been placed in the bargaining program.

Butler, a farmer, said he and other farmers have been crimped by skyrocketing fuel and equipment costs and almost no increase in the amount they receive for their crop. And that situation hurts each time he picks up a jar of peanut butter, which now costs twice as much as it did just a few months ago.

"Somebody's making a killing, and I know the farmer's not getting any of it," said Butler.

"Since 1977 my expenses have doubled while my gross income has gone up very little," Butler said.

It takes two acres to raise three tons of peanuts, he said. At the support price, he earns $1,365 off those two acres, but it costs him $750 an acre to grow the peanuts, so he would lose $67 an acre at the announced support price.

He said that farmers, looking at peanut butter made with imported peanuts purchased for more than $2,000 a ton, decided it was time to do something to increase their return.

As peanut supplies are at an all-time low from last year's poor crops, Butler said he's optimistic the shellers will cave in and pay more.

Stalemate At Weyerhaeuser

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — Negotiators for Weyerhaeuser and the United Paperworkers International union met for a little more than two hours Thursday without reaching a settlement to end the union's strike at a New Bern pulp mill.

A federal mediator said no date had been set for a resumption of the negotiations.

About 375 union members struck Feb. 16 after negotiations for a three-year contract stalled over wages, tool replacement, holidays and overtime.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

JERUSALEM: ANCIENT FORTRESS WHICH STOOD UNCONQUERED IN THE HEART OF ISRAEL SINCE THE DAYS OF JOSHUA, WAS FINALLY TAKEN 500 YEARS LATER BY THE NEWLY ANOINTED KING DAVID (CIRCA 1000 B.C.)...

...THE JEBUSITES, WHO LIVED IN THIS STRONGHOLD HIGH ON MT. ZION, WERE SO CONFIDENT THEIR FORTRESS COULD NOT BE SUCCESSFULLY ASSAULTED THAT THEY INSULTED DAVID'S ARMY BY ONLY MANNING THE WALLS AND BATTLEMENTS WITH MEN WHO WERE BLIND AND PITIFULLY LAME!

BUT DAVID'S MEN FOUND A TUNNEL, LEADING FROM AN OUTSIDE WATER-SUPPLY SPRING, DIRECTLY INTO THE MIDDLE OF THE CITY! IN THE DARK OF NIGHT, DAVID LED HIS TROOPS THROUGH THE TUNNEL, TOOK THE JEBUSITES UNAWARES, AND CAPTURED THE FORTRESS WHICH WAS TO BECOME HIS CAPITAL—THE 'CITY OF DAVID!' AND SINCE THAT DAY, JERUSALEM HAS BEEN CONTINUALLY FOUGHT OVER—RIGHT UP INTO MODERN TIMES!

NEXT WEEK: CAN A MAN BE CALLED WISE WHO HAS A THOUSAND WIVES?!!

Self-Styled Chaplain For Race-Car Drivers

By LAURINDA KEYS Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — In his black felt cowboy hat and black leather jacket, 210-pound, 6-foot-4 Dennis Agajanian of San Diego looks like a bad guy.

"I am a bad guy in the eyes of the bad people; I'm a rebel to the wrong," says the 33-year-old country gospel singer and "unofficial" chaplain to the race drivers. "Rebel to the Wrong" is Agajanian's third album, but the first to be released nationwide (by Light Records). He said it's something new in country gospel music: "It's not Southern gospel, it's almost the Waylon Jennings-Willie Nelson approach to music."

He explained the title this way: "As a Christian I'm an outlaw to sin. Now, I'm a sinner, but I hate sin. And I like to stand up wherever I am, and say that Jesus Christ is alive today and we're all going to die someday and we're all going to stand before him at the judgment. I think too many people have painted Christianity in a sweet, candy little way."

Of his preaching to the race track gang, Agajanian said, "because I'm their REVIVAL SERVICES Saint Rest Holy Church in Winterville will hold revival services March 9-13 at 7:30 p.m. nightly. Evangelist will be Rev. Zebedee Harris of Durham. Various area churches will provide music. Rev. W. C. Elliott, pastor, invites the public to attend.

TO PREACH The Rev. Clifton Gardner will preach at Bethel Chapel F.W.B. Church Friday night for the Pastor's Aid Club at 7:30 p.m. He will be accompanied by the Selvia Chapel Choir and congregation. The public is invited to attend.

friend I think it's a time of confrontation. It's time we start speaking the truth. Jesus told us to be fishers of men, not keepers of the aquarium. I think being a fisher of men is to be able to go out and reach people who are a great influence to the public and to share Christ with them."

Agajanian, has some famous uncles: J.C. Agajanian, who operates Ascot Raceway in Los Angeles, and Ben Agajanian, kicking coach for the Dallas Cowboys. For the past 15 years, Agajanian, with a backup band of shifting members, has been playing his guitar in the "outlaw" or basic country style developed in Austin, Texas, performing in churches and at Billy Graham crusades, and racing dirt bikes and trucks with such racing names as Parnelli Jones, Malcolm Smith and Bobby Unser.

He's billed as the "fastest packing guitar player in the United States today." He says, "I love racing and I love speed, and I love to play the guitar fast." His racing friends know him as "Dennis the Christian." "What basically takes place is that when a person is out of a race, or crashes I'm immediately to the scene, I'm talking to them, just encouraging them, that they're still alive and they have a lot to be thankful for, that the Lord is still there," he said.

Along with his predominantly country gospel songs, Agajanian writes songs about race drivers, in which he tries to dispel the image of the racer as a womanizing, hard-drinking playboy. "Race drivers are highly intelligent people, they have to design racecars that car manufacturers are going to buy," said Agajanian. "They can't be drinking all the time, because more of them would be getting killed."

It all started when he wrote a song about A.J. Foyt called "Race-Driving, Two-Fisted, Texas Man," giving the image of a rancher who loves to hunt, to create and build the fastest race car in the world. He also wrote one about Bobby Unser.

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Form prevailed in the first round of the 28th Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament.

Not only did the four top seeded teams score victories Thursday as expected, but

Virginia and Georgia Tech engaged in another of their bruising battles, and Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell turned in a tetchy postgame performance. In a word, everything was normal. Virginia, the ACC's regular season champion and ranked fourth in the nation, romped over hapless Georgia Tech 76-47. That moved the Cavaliers into tonight's 7 p.m. semifinal game against 20th-ranked Maryland, which blew a nine-point lead in the final five minutes but edged Duke 56-53.

Wake Forest, rated No. 11 nationally, pulled away in the final 4:20 to top Clemson 80-71, and 12th-ranked North Carolina handily disposed of North Carolina State 69-54. The Demon Deacons and Tar Heels will meet in the other semifinal game at 9:30 p.m.

Center Ralph Sampson topped Virginia, 25-2, with 20 points, but he was frustrated enough by the roughhouse play to draw two technical fouls and he spent the last eight minutes cooling off on the bench.

"Sampson was getting frustrated," said Coach Terry Holland. "It was the best thing to take him out at that time."

Sampson had just been charged with his second technical, which does not mean automatic ejection in college ball, following a deliberate foul against Tech center Lee Goza. Virginia led 58-32 after each team shot two free throws.

"It was a physical game, wildly physical," Sampson said. "I got elbows, I got forearm."

Goza, who allegedly spat on Sampson earlier this season in a game at Atlanta, said in his own defense Thursday: "When somebody hits you in the head with an elbow, you've got to do something."

A 12-0 streak by Virginia, as Tech went scoreless for more than six minutes, gave the Cavaliers a 21-8 lead with 6:42 left in the first half.

The Yellow Jackets, 4-23 for the season and winless in 16 games against ACC foes, were charged with 27 turnovers. They were led by Fred Hall with 17 points.

Maryland, 19-8, led 53-44 with 5:04 remaining, but didn't score again until Greg Manning sank one of two free throws to break a 53-53 tie with four seconds left. Maryland's Ernest Graham was fouled after rebounding the second shot, and put in two more free throws.

Duke, 15-12, had a chance to ahead with 26 seconds left, but Vince Taylor missed a second free throw after forging the 53-53 tie. Taylor also was charged with the foul against Manning in the closing seconds.

"I had no doubt it was a charge," Taylor protested. "I just stood there. I didn't jump."

Driesell, perhaps upset by his team's performance in the stretch, gave testy answers to postgame questions, closed the locker room to allow his players to dress quickly, and left the Capital Centre in a huff.

A career-high 32-point effort by senior Frank Johnson paced Wake Forest, 22-5, to its victory over Clemson. The Deacons scored 16 of their last 20 points from the foul line, six apiece by Johnson and Alvis Rogers.

Rogers was only 2-for-11 from the floor, but his six-point streak ignited Wake's final push after Clemson pulled to within 64-63. Rogers sank a field goal and four free throws to make it 70-63 with 1:33 remaining.

"We didn't shoot well enough," said Clemson Coach Bill Foster, "we made too many turnovers, and it was too much Frankie Johnson. During a five-minute stretch, he was the only one shooting for them, and they were coming from downtown."

Johnson jokingly called his "can't-miss range" at between 15 and 20 feet. "That's money in the bank," he said.

"Johnson played a great game," Coach Carl Tacy of Wake Forest agreed. "You can't imagine what he means to the team until he is out of there. He has total command of everything on the court. I wouldn't trade him for another guard in the country."

Larry Nance had 27 points and 11 rebounds in a losing effort for the Tigers, who are 20-10 and looking for a possible bid to the NCAA tournament.

North Carolina, in beating N.C. State for the third time this season, was in command after a 12-3 streak gave the Tar Heels a 45-34 lead with 13:20 to play.

The Tar Heels, 23-7, were paced by freshman Sam Perkins with 22 points. Al Wood managed only 13 and James Worthy, showing no sign of back trouble which kept him

ECU Opens Baseball Season

By WOODY PEELE, Reflector Sports Editor

East Carolina University's Pirates open the 1981 baseball season at Harrington Field on Saturday, hosting the N.C. State Wolfpack. The game is set to begin at 1 p.m.

Coach Hal Baird, in his second year at the Pirate helm, feels that the ECU nine "has a chance to be a real good ball club," but admits that some of the youth on the team has to come through.

"We should be very strong on defense in the infield, and our pitching staff returns almost intact. We should be strong through the first five pitchers, but after that, it's a question mark."

The chief areas that concern Baird are the ability to swing the bat and the defense in the outfield. "We have looked good enough with the bat at times to beat anyone we play," Baird said. "But at other times, we have looked bad enough so that we couldn't beat anyone we play. We just have no consistency right now. A lot of this is due to the fact that we have a lot of new people. We lost seven of our top eight hitters, and that makes a difference."

"We do have some young and talented kids, but I don't know whether they can do the job right away."

So, Baird feels, the Pirates will have to rely on pitching and a strong defense to pull them through the year. "The bad thing is that we've got the toughest part of our schedule early in the season. I'd rather play them later, but we'll see quickly what we have to do to be good."

The Pirates have an outstanding schedule. Their 45-game slate includes 33 home appearances. "There definitely is a home field advantage in baseball," Baird feels. "It has an effect on the game itself. In a tight game, when you get down to the last few innings, it's almost as if you get to bat twice for each time your opponent does."

With all but Mickey Britt and Bill Davis returning to the mound staff, Baird feels he may have the strongest overall staff ever, since five of the top six return. Led by righthander Bill Wilder, who was 10-2 last year, the Pirates also return righthanders Rick Ramey (5-1) and Kirk Parsons (0-0), and lefties Bob Patterson (6-2) and transfer Robbie Harper.

"These five can win," Baird said. "But we're going to have to use them as much as we can. I wouldn't trade Wilder for anyone, and I expect him to be our ace. I don't expect him to go 10-2 again, but if we can get some runs for him and play good defense, he has a chance to do it again."

Baird doesn't expect Wilder to see any relief action, but all of the others will. "Wilder will start Saturday, and Patterson and Ramey will come on if we need them. And if we don't then, they'll be starting in the next games."

Being an independent, Baird noted, doesn't give the Pirates the luxury of being able to look at a lot of players during non-conference action.

The infield is almost intact. Todd Hendley returns at third, Kelly Robinette at shortstop and Mike Sorrell at second. Mike Sage will be at first, a position where he has seen both starting and back-up duty.

"Pete Persico could start at any of the infield positions," Baird said. "He gives us a lot of depth, and makes the infield the strength of the club."

Catching sees some experience as Jay Carraway, who played some games last year, returns. Joining him is transfer Fran Fitzgerald. "We'll be using them both early on," Baird said. "A lot will depend on pitcher preference until one of them settles in with the job. Raymie Styons was a fine catcher and we haven't replaced him yet. Fran's arm is stronger and he seems to be a more powerful hitter, but Jay is a better receiver and defensive catcher. It may turn out that we may have to go with the better offensive player, however."

The outfield, where Butch Davis, Billy Best and Macon Moye all graduated, will be completely rebuilt. Currently Todd Evans, a freshman, will be in left. "He may be one of the best we've had as a freshman, and will probably be our number three or four hitter. He's really a first baseman, and will probably move there next year."

In center, Charlie Waynick, another freshman, who has a brother on the North Carolina team, moves in. "He's very talented. He runs and hits well, but hasn't quite made the adjustment to college pitching yet."

In right, John Hallow, who served mostly as the designated hitter last year, but did play some in this position, takes over fulltime. "He's just coming off a broken (left) hand. He just got the cast off, but we think he'll be ready to play Saturday. He probably will be our best hitter."

Three others could also see some action here. They include Robert Wells, Charlie Smith and Mark Shank.

Mark Wakai is slated for the designated hitter duties, and Baird feels he may be the best bet for power hitting.

"We're a long way from being an NCAA candidate right now," Baird said. "But if we can get through April still in contention, then we'll be a candidate. That stretch from Virginia through Fairfield (11 games) will tell us a lot."

After Saturday's game, the Pirates host William & Mary on Sunday (2 p.m.) and Monday (3 p.m.), then take a break until Connecticut comes in on Friday.

Kentucky, Tennessee Upset In Tourney

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer
Some of the poor relatives in the Southeastern Conference are finally getting rich, thanks to inspired play in the post-season basketball playoffs. Such teams as Vanderbilt,

Mississippi and Georgia, who spent the season idling at the middle or bottom of the standings, won quarterfinal games Thursday night in one of the most upset-studded SEC playoffs in history. Vanderbilt pulled off the biggest surprise, beating seventh-ranked Kentucky 60-55 in the tournament at Birmingham, Ala., as freshman Al McKinney hit seven straight free throws in the final 2½ minutes. Mississippi knocked off No. 10 Tennessee 81-71 as Cecil Dowell scored 22 points, and Georgia, which had lost twice by big margins to Alabama during the regular season, upset the Crimson Tide 88-80 behind Dominique Wilkins' 31 points.

In both of Georgia's prior games with Alabama, the Bulldogs gave up more than 90 points. "We didn't do anything differently from the first two times we played them," said Georgia Coach Hugh Durham. "We just started keeping them from getting those easy baskets."

Only third-ranked Louisiana State among the favorites got away unscathed, beating Florida 85-73 as Leonard Mitchell came up with 27 points in the other quarterfinal. Upsets also marked play in the Big East and Southwest conferences as a variety of college basketball playoffs continued from coast to coast Thursday night.

Regular-season champion Boston College was beaten 67-65 by last-place Providence in the first round of the Big East playoffs as Ricky Turner delivered a final-second shot for the Friars.

In other matches Thursday night, Eric Floyd scored 19 points to lead Georgetown to a 58-52 decision over Seton Hall; Aaron Howard scored all of his 15 points in the second half to lead Villanova past Connecticut 65-64, and Erich Santifer and Leo Rautins each scored 18 points to lead Syracuse past St. John's 71-66.

In the SWC quarter-finals, Texas Christian stunned Baylor 56-47 as Jeff Baker came off the bench to score 18 points. LaSalle Thompson scored 21 points and collected 13 rebounds to pace Texas over Texas Tech 66-58. "We finally started to get the ball to LaSalle in the second half," said Texas Coach Abe Lemons. "That was a key factor."

In other ACC games, Frank Johnson scored 32 points to lead 11th-ranked Wake Forest over Clemson 80-71; Sam Perkins ignited a nine-point run midway through the second half to lead No. 12 North Carolina past North Carolina State 69-54, and Greg Manning's free throw broke a tie with four seconds left as 20th-ranked Maryland defeated Duke 56-53.

In first-round play of the Metro Conference tourney, Dale Solomon scored 25 points as Virginia Tech beat Memphis State 72-66; Kevin Gaffney hit a jumper with 13 seconds left to lift Cincinnati over Tulane 67-66, and Mickey Dillard's 23 points triggered Florida State past St. Louis 84-77. Antoine Carr scored 25 points to pace Wichita State to an 88-74 decision over Drake, and Daryl Stovall hit two free throws with one second remaining to provide Creighton with a 66-64 triumph over Tulsa in the semifinals of the Missouri Valley Conference playoffs.

In first-round action of the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, Craig Dykema scored 16 points and grabbed nine rebounds in Long Beach State's 83-77 victory over the University of Pacific, and Doug Murrey had 15 to lead San Jose State over Fullerton State 63-54.

In the opening round of the ECAC Metro Division tournament, Earl Fuller scored 14 of Long Island University's final 24 points to lead the Blackbirds to an 85-78 triumph over Fordham, and Iona stopped St. Peter's of New Jersey 41-38 with the help of Gary Springer's tie-breaking jumper with three seconds left. In the ECAC North, Eric Jefferson and Pete Harris each scored 18 points as Northeastern beat Vermont 76-69 in overtime, and Tom Seaman scored 21 points to pace Holy Cross over Maine 63-54.

Oklahoma City beat Loyola of Chicago 73-71 behind Eric Watkins' 21 points and Xavier of Cincinnati stopped Evansville 72-69 as Anthony Hicks had 26 in the semifinals of the Midwestern City Conference tourney. Grambling whipped Texas Southern 68-66, Alcorn stopped Prairie View 90-79 and Jackson State beat Mississippi Valley 83-70 in the Southwestern Athletic Conference playoffs. Northeast Louisiana stopped Northwestern Louisiana 79-73 and Centenary defeated Samford 76-69 in the quarterfinals of the Trans America Conference playoffs.

Woody Peele

The 1980-81 basketball season may well be over for the East Carolina Lady Pirates. They will learn Sunday for sure.

The Pirates do have a great shot at an at-large bid in the AIAW Region II tournament. Five state champions qualify automatically, while three others from the region draw at-large berths.

Coach Cathy Andruzzi, despite the Pirates' loss to Carolina in the semifinals of the state tournament, feels East Carolina is more deserving than the Tar Heels.

Whether the selection committee (which has three Atlantic Coast Conference coaches among its members) will name the Pirates is the question.

Certainly the fact that four members of the ECU team, Kathy Riley, Laurie Sikes, Marcia Girven and Lydia Rountree made the ten-member all-State team, should count for something. No other team could claim that many selections.

The fact that East Carolina was the only Division I women's team in North Carolina to win 20 games should also count for something. The fact that the Pirates were nationally ranked for at least four weeks also should count.

But whether record or politics rules will be seen Sunday.

East Carolina's team this year certainly rewrite the record book.

In just about every category, team members moved up in the ranks of the best to play for the Lady Pirates.

Riley's 596 points this year stands as the third best for a single season. Mary Denkler's 427 is ninth, while Sam Jones' 420 is 10th. Girven has 338 and is 19th.

In single season rebounding, Girven's 293 stands third, while Denkler's 201 is 13th.

Sikes' 177 assists stands second in single season totals. Jones has 94 to stand fourth, while Riley has 64 to place seventh, and Rountree has 51 to stand tenth.

Jones had 51 steals, the sixth best among single season performers, while Riley's 49 stands seventh.

Girven had 25 blocked shots, fifth best.

In the career categories, Rountree now has 1,254 points, third best among Lady Pirates. Riley has 1,121, fifth best, while Girven's 1,087 is sixth best. Denkler currently has 655 for eighth place.

In career rebounding, Girven is second with 1,011 and is only the second Lady Pirate to score 1,000 points and pull down 1,000 rebounds. Rountree's 548 rebounds is fourth, while Denkler's 371 is sixth. Riley stands seventh with 366.

Sikes with 402 assists holds the career record, while Rountree, with 242, is second. Riley stands fourth with 146, while Jones is ninth with 94 and Girven is tenth with 82.

Rountree has tied the career record for steals with 176. Riley stands fourth with 103, while Girven is sixth at 96 and Sikes is eighth with 90.

In blocked shots, Girven is the record holder with 212, followed by Sikes in seventh place with 15 and Jones in eighth with 13.

Girven holds the record for games played with 119, while Rountree is second with 116. Lillian Barnes stands seventh with 74, while Riley, Denkler and Sikes are all tied for ninth place with 60 appearances.

Not bad for one team. And maybe these young women will have the opportunity to increase these marks before the season does finally end.

"We had the poorest mental discipline that we've had in a game this year," said Kentucky Coach Joe Hall. "A coach hates to see this, but we jumped ahead 10-0 and at that point we got complacent and got out of our good offensive discipline."

Mississippi turned the trick against Tennessee without the services of star forward Elston Turner down the stretch. He fouled out with four minutes to play.

"We struggled but we finally got there because we were patient," said Ole Miss Coach Bob Weltlich.

League Officers

Officers for the 1981 Little League Baseball season have been named.

Charles Wilkerson will serve as president of the North State League, while Paul Kelly will head up the Tar Heel League.

Other North State officers include Bruce Thompson, vice-president, Mrs. Ralph Harper Jr., secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Neta Thompson, women's auxiliary president, and Dr. Carl R. Wille, safety officer.

The other Tar Heel League officers are R.W. MacKenzie Jr., vice-president, Don Parrott, secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Ruggie MacKenzie, women's auxiliary president, and Dr. Emmett J. Walsh Jr., safety officer.

Dan H. Gordon was reappointed as league supervisor and player agent for his 14th season.

Gordon set up the following schedule for the spring. The annual organization meeting will be held on March 24 at Jaycee Park Auditorium at 8 p.m. Registration for the season will be held March 26-27 at Elm Street Park from 4 to 6 p.m. Tryouts will run April 13 through April 17 at Elm Street Field, 4 to 6 p.m.

League play starts on May 4, and the annual luncheon-supper, the primary fund raiser for the league, is set for May 27.

out of the last regular season game, scored eight points. Art Jones had 14 points for State, which shot only 29 percent in the second half. Seldom-used Chuck Nevitt scored a career-high 10 points before fouling out after 14 minutes of action.

"North Carolina was exceptional," said State Coach Jim Valvano. "To win, we would have had to play better than we really are."

Coach Dean Smith of North Carolina, noting the Tar Heels have lost two of three games to Wake Forest this season, said of tonight's rematch: "We should be the underdogs."

Swimmers In Fifth Place

CLEVELAND — East Carolina University's swimmers were in fifth place following the first day of competition in the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships being held at Cleveland State yesterday.

Pittsburgh held the team lead with 168 points, followed by West Virginia with 147 and Penn State with 109. Maryland was just in front of the Pirates with 91, while ECU had 71.

The second five include Syracuse with 68, Cleveland State with 67, Marshall with 55, Villanova with 41 and St. Bonaventure with 35. A total of 16 teams are competing in the event.

Individually, East Carolina had four placers during the day, along with one relay unit. Jan Wiklund finished third in the 500-yard freestyle, timed at 3:35.2.

In the 200-yard individual medley, Doug Nieman was fourth in 1:55.3, while Kevin Richards placed ninth in 1:56.8, a new ECU freshman record.

Jack Clowar finished tenth in the 50-yard freestyle in 21.47. The medley relay unit of Nieman, Matt McDonald, Clowar and Wiklund finished seventh in 3:32.06.

Competition continues in the Easterns through Saturday.

Jack Jumps into Early Tie

LAUDERHILL, Fla. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus came into the start of his Florida swing with the idea, as he put it, "the time has come to start putting some numbers on the board."

The game's greatest player did so at the earliest opportunity.

He shot a 7-under-par 65 in gusty winds Thursday to grab a share of the first round lead in the $300,000 American Motors Invitational Golf Classic. He was tied with Larry Ziegler, a 15-year veteran who scored the last of his three PGA Tour victories five years ago. "Obviously, I played very well," said Nicklaus, who was opening a string of three consecutive tournament appearances as the final preparations for his annual assault on the Masters in Augusta, Ga.

Nicklaus, holder of a record 17 major professional titles, broke the only real slump of his legendary career with record-setting victories last year in the U.S. Open and the PGA. He took a long break from competition and was not overly concerned that he'd failed to score a finish in the top 10 in any West Coast tournament this year.

Midget League Co-Champs

"When you take five months off, it takes a little time to get it back," Nicklaus said. "But now it's time for me to start getting tournament-sharp."

And he very obviously felt the 65 was a major step toward that goal.

"My best round since the PGA (last fall)," he said. "For the conditions, it was a very good round."

The conditions were difficult. The winds were announced as gusting to 30 miles per hour, but they may have been higher. They were strong enough to blow down a tree on the fourth hole at the 7,129-yard Inverrary Golf Club course.

"It was not an easy day to play," Nicklaus said. "I'm kind of surprised the scores were as low as they are."

But, generally, they weren't all that low. Charles Coody, with a 67, and Curtis Strange, with a 68, were the only men in the field within 4 strokes of the co-leaders.

Andy Bean, a runaway winner last week in the Bay Hill Classic, topped a big group at 69 that also included Tom Kite, Gibby Gilbert, Morris Hatalsky, Jim Chaney, Dan Frickey and Barney Thompson.

Johnny Miller, who won this event last year when it was known as the Jackie Gleason-Inverrary Classic, managed a 70. Gleason no longer is associated with the tournament.

Nicklaus, a three-time winner on this golf course, played his frontside in 34, two under. It was, he said, "about as high as I could have shot. It was kind of frustrating. I kept hitting it close to the hole and missing the putt."

But things turned around dramatically on his back nine, the tougher side and playing into the winds.

He shot 31 — with a bogey — "and that was about the best I could have got out of it," he said.

He bounced a tee shot off a tree back into the fairway, dropped a 40-footer for birdie, once chipped in front 60 feet and used only 10 putts over his back nine.

"An interesting round," he said.

He started that backside flurry with a couple of shots close to the flags that were bent almost double by the winds. Those produced birdies. He also birdied the next one, from about 15 feet.

The 40-footer came on the next hole and made it four birdies in a row.

A couple of holes went to pars before Nicklaus, who strengthened his arsenal last year with the addition of a better short game, chipped in from about 20 yards. He went to eight under for the day with a 6-iron to six feet on his 17th, then dropped back to a tie for the top when he bogeyed his 18th from a bunker.

Boston Is Not Out Of Picture Yet With Fisk

By The Associated Press
Don't count out Boston in the Carlton Fisk sweepstakes. The Red Sox have been vigorously pursuing Fisk in an effort to re-sign the veteran catcher, who was declared a free agent in an arbitration decision last month.

General Manager Haywood Sullivan said Thursday night that the Red Sox would offer Fisk a four-year, guaranteed contract. He said the proposed contract includes several incentive clauses, such as playing in 140 games and making the All-Star team, that could make it worth up to $3 million.

The Toronto Blue Jays and the Chicago White Sox also have expressed strong interest in signing Fisk, who has been with Boston for nine years.

Jim Essian, a catcher who already has signed with the White Sox as a free agent, was one Chicago player not enthused about the prospect of Fisk joining the team.

"I hope he signs somewhere else so he doesn't come here and catch all the games," Essian said Thursday. "It's not going to break my heart if he comes here, but if he does, I'd expect to be traded."

Fisk reportedly was in San Diego, Calif., with his agent, Jerry Kapstein, today and was expected to make a decision on which team to sign with by this weekend.

Another Kapstein client, pitcher Dennis Leonard of the Kansas City Royals, said his 75 victories in the past four years should make him worth more than the $180,000 a year he has been getting.

Leonard, 20-11 for the Royals in 1980, said he probably will become a free agent this year unless the Royals sign him before the end of spring training.

"I read where so-and-so is making $600,000 a year. I look at what he's done and what I've done and I say, 'Geez, if he's worth that, I'm probably worth more,'" Leonard said.

The Royals have not offered a new contract to Leonard, but say they will make a "legitimate offer" based on how much money other pitchers are making.

At other spring training sites, much of the attention was focused on how previously injured players are faring in their comeback attempts.

Reggie Smith of the Los Angeles Dodgers, coming back from a shoulder operation, was not expected to participate in an intrasquad game, but he cracked two singles as his team won 2-1.

John Stearns of the New York Mets, recovering from two operations on his fractured right index finger, took 50 swings in batting practice and declared afterwards that he would continue to do so daily. Ten days ago, he had to quit after only two swings.

Bake McBride arrived at the Philadelphia Phillies camp after receiving permission to report late because of the opening of his liquor business in St. Louis. He was unable to test his recovery from a broken thumb, however, because of rain in Clearwater, Fla.

Utilityman Dan Briggs was given his unconditional release by the Montreal Expos.

Lifegate In Tourney

Lifegate Christian School of Greenville will compete in the ACE (Accelerated Christian Education) State Basketball Tournament today and tomorrow.

Lifegate, which won its conference title with a 6-0 record, finished the regular season 14-4 overall.

The tournament is being played in Monroe. First round pairings have Berean of Fayetteville having a bye in upper bracket play. In the same bracket, West Duplin of Warsaw faces Lifegate at 7:30 p.m. The winners meet at noon on Saturday.

In the lower bracket, Liberty of Durham drew a bye. The other game in that group plays at 4:30 p.m. today, with Resurrection of Charlotte and Tabernacle of Monroe. Winners in that bracket meet at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The consolation championship will be played at 4:30 p.m. Saturday, with the finals at 7:30 p.m.

Protests Greet Across-The-Board Spending Cuts

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Legislative calls for across-the-board budget cuts are bringing cries of protest from some state departments and now from the University of North Carolina, whose president says lawmakers may cripple the university system.

"It strikes at the very quality of the institutions," UNC

President C. Friday said. "It strikes at the strength of programs we have spent years building."

Friday made the comments to a legislative budget subcommittee Thursday, while other legislative budget panels searched for cuts in other state departments.

Budget leaders, in a meeting of House and Senate base budget committee and subcommittee heads, agreed that they were running into resistance from department heads and the Hunt administration.

The budget committees have asked for proposals to cut 6 percent from the 16 campuses system's operating budget, as well as similar reductions in all state agencies.

Deputy state budget officer Marvin Dorman said Gov. Jim Hunt would give legislators a list of marginal programs that might be cut in his departments, but that they won't amount to as much money as legislators want.

"Everybody's going to be screaming by next Friday," said Sen. Robert Jordan, D-Mount Gilead, referring to the deadline he has set for finding the cuts. "The voices are already rising."

Except for the Transportation Department, which faces dwindling gasoline tax collections, the departmental cuts haven't been ordered because of a shortage of money. Instead, Jordan and other budget chairmen say they want to be ready with the cuts if federal budget reductions and a worsening economy make them necessary.

For the university system, those cuts would amount to $32 million in 1981-1982 and $33 million in the second year of the two-year budget.

Legislative staff analysts have proposed a range of options for applying the cuts, ranging from across-the-board slashes in all UNC spending to reductions in the number of faculty members and to tuition hikes.

Another of the proposals would eliminate the university's agriculture extension program — a $15 million-a-year project that extends statewide.

"This is the first time in 30 years I have ever heard this Legislature talking about reducing teaching positions by as many as 700 in some cases," Friday said.

As the cuts were deliberated, lawmakers learned the state's bill for Blue Cross-Blue Shield medical insurance was going up $40 million over the amount already in the proposed two-year budget.

The policies cover nearly 200,000 teachers and state employees across the state, and legislators have begun discussing a reduction in the benefits those policies provide as a way to cut premiums.

In other legislative action:

Income Tax

A bill was filed in the House to lower personal income taxes by about 3 percent to 4 percent. Rep. Ed Warren, D-Greenville, one of the bill's sponsors, said he did not know how much the proposal would cost.

"I was looking for a way to cut taxes across the board," Warren said. "It may not sound like a lot, but 3 to 4 percent is a lot of money to some people."

Subpoena

A bill that would allow police to serve subpoenas in criminal case by telephone ran into some trouble in the House. Several representatives expressed concern there might be some confusion in getting the subpoena to the right person.

Sheriffs and their deputies now have authority to serve subpoenas by phone.

The House gave the measure tentative approval and a final vote was scheduled for Tuesday.

Property

With only two dissenting votes, the House approved and sent to the Senate a bill that would allow a married couple to jointly control and profit from property. Under common law, the state has allowed only the husband to control and profit from the property.

The House gave tentative approval to a bill that would require all school buses to stop at railroad crossings.

Highway Bids

Sen. Jim Garrison, D-Albemarle, filed a bill that would allow the state to contract for larger highway construction projects without having to go through a competitive bidding process. His bill would require bids on projects over $30,000.

The present limit is $10,000. Garrison said it is "a money saver for the state," because it would allow the state to use its own personnel to build crossovers and put up stop lights. He said because of inflation, the costs for that type of construction is now over $10,000.

Garrison also filed a bill that would allow oil companies to pay $100 to put their logos on interstate highway signs that indicate the presence of service stations.

Heavy March Snowstorm For East; Big Rain Hits Florida

By The Associated Press

A snowball-makers' delight that broke a 29-year-old record in New York City left a white coating up to 10 inches deep in parts of the Northeast early today.

The wet, sticky snow led to two traffic deaths Thursday in New York, and driving became more hazardous today when dipping temperatures turned slush to ice.

Heavy rains in Florida, meanwhile, led to the death of a 44-year-old man who drowned when the car he was driving slid from a flooded street and dropped into a lake.

Connecticut was spared much of the brunt of Thursday's snowstorm, but state police in the southwestern part of the state, which received up to 4 inches, reported about 20 accidents on state highways.

Most were pileups, chain collisions, during rush hour, state Trooper James Pavello said.

The 8-inch snowfall recorded in New York City's Central Park, by far the heaviest of the season, broke the previous record for March of 6.5 inches in 1902.

One man was killed when a tractor-trailer truck on the Staten Island Expressway smashed into a disabled bus carrying sequestered jurors from a Staten Island motel to the state Supreme Court in Manhattan, officials said. The accident involved a second truck and a car and injured 12 people.

A telephone company worker died when he was unable to stop his van on a slippery road in Bethpage and slid onto Long Island Rail Road tracks in the path of a train, authorities said.

Nine inches of snow fell in southeastern Pennsylvania and up to 4 inches blanketed downtown Philadelphia. Scores of Pennsylvania schools were closed and numerous traffic accidents, including a four-car collision, were blamed on the snow.

Much of the nation had precipitation early today in one form or another: Rain was scattered from southern California to the southwest deserts, and there was snow over the mountains of California and Arizona.

Light snow was scattered across the Great Lakes and the middle Atlantic coast states after the snow-laden storm moved over the Atlantic Ocean. A few showers moved across western Montana, with snow in colder spots.

Snow accumulations were spotty and widely varying, from 2 inches to 10 inches in various parts of New York and New Jersey.

The snow tapered off to scattered flurries by late Thursday night and the National Weather Service predicted occasional flurries today and tonight.

"We're expecting the temperature to drop to the low 20s, and the wet snow will freeze," said Ben Scott, National Weather Service chief meteorologist at Newark International airport, which was closed for about an hour Thursday morning so snow could be cleared from runways.

Police on Long Island reported more than 300 other auto accidents. In Westchester County, police reported at least two chain-reaction collisions, one involving nine cars and the other involving four.

The snow prompted many schools in the metropolitan area to dismiss their classes early and cancel evening classes.

In Tallahassee, Fla., officials said more than 5 inches of rain fell late Wednesday and Thursday, disrupting power and temporarily flooding some streets.

Police said the car that slipped into Lake Ella held four passengers, who managed to escape. Divers pulled the body of the driver, identified as Thomas Moore of Tallahassee, from the lake early today.

Retailers Say Spending Rose

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite the burdens of inflation and high interest rates, consumer spending at the nation's largest retail stores showed a modest increase in February.

"The results were a little better than expected," said Jeffrey Edelman, a retail analyst at the investment firm of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "The higher-priced items went well."

All major retailers said their sales were higher than those in February 1980, but few had gains that outpaced inflation. And many had to cut prices in order to stimulate sales.

"If you exclude inflation and exclude new stores, sales were essentially flat," said Edelman. And without large promotional efforts at many retail stores, the sales reports would have been significantly worse, he added.

The nation's biggest store chain, Sears Roebuck & Co., posted a 6.9 percent increase last month — its biggest monthly gain in more than 2½ years. The Chicago-based company said sales climbed to $1.19 billion in the four weeks ended Feb. 28 from $1.12 billion in the comparable period last year.

Edward A. Brennan, chairman and chief executive officer of Sears' retail operations, said the best sellers were women's apparel, major appliances and home improvement items.

J.C. Penney Co. Inc., which had suffered lagging sales in past months, posted a 7.6 percent gain, with sales of $704 million in the four weeks ended Feb. 28, compared to $654 million in February 1980.

Wall Street analysts said slight improvements in January's employment and personal income levels helped the retailers. But the sales gains did not signal a significant change in consumers' spending habits, they added.

The economy's resilience despite high interest rates helped spur sales, Edelman said. Average weekly earnings in January, the latest month for which statistics are available, rose 1.4 percent from December while total employment increased 0.4 percent, the government has reported.

Fresco Master
Michelangelo was born on this day in 1475. He and other artists of his time used a special method to create wall paintings, or "frescoes." Fresco is an Italian word meaning "fresh." To create a fresco, the artist applies fresh plaster to a wall, and draws his outline. He then begins to paint with water-based pigments. The lime from the plaster helps bind the pigments to the wall. The result is clear, pure color. But the technique is exacting, and the use of wet plaster requires that the artist work quickly. The artist is also limited to a small area at a time. For these reasons, the technique is seldom used today.

DO YOU KNOW — In what chapel in the Vatican did Michelangelo paint his famous ceiling fresco?

Sperm Banks Moving From The Lab To Market

By YARDENA ARAR
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Not yet so common as the corner pharmacy, sperm banks are starting to move from the medical laboratory to the storefront, buying sperm from outside donors and selling it to infertile couples.

The San Fernando Valley's first sperm bank has just opened, an Encino concern called Valley Cryobank.
And a local physician who's been in the business of storing human sperm at ultra-cold temperatures for four years says business is booming.

"We're busier than ever, and I think that's partly due to increased social acceptance and increased social awareness," said Dr. Cappy Rothman, a Century City andrologist — a doctor who specializes in treating infertile men.

Rothman, 43, says that since 1977, thawed sperm from his office has impregnated approximately 200 women. He said studies have shown the success rate for pregnancies accomplished by insemination with thawed sperm is 62 percent.

Sperm banks hit the headlines recently when Robert Graham announced that his Repository for Germinal Choice in Escondido was seeking sperm from Nobel Prize winners to impregnate women with high IQs and thereby produce offspring of superior intelligence.

Neither Rothman nor Dr. Cyrus Milani, the 40-year-old pathologist who founded Valley Cryobank, advocates Graham's approach with its controversial overtones of genetic engineering, but both men do some donor screening.

Milani says that to insure "minimum intelligence," he uses only college students or graduates, paying $20 a sample to the 10 donors he has lined up so far. Rothman, who pays $25 a sample, recruits his donors through ads in the UCLA student newspaper.

No regulations govern sperm bank operations, but the two doctors follow donor selection and sperm freezing guidelines set forth by the American Association of Tissue Banks.

A would-be donor's medical history is taken, he is examined physically and the sperm is examined in the laboratory for any infection.

Rothman's 31 donors are screened by a UCLA geneticist. Milani sets up genetic screenings if recipients wish, for a surcharge above the $40 fee he charges couples for sperm and service. Rothman says his fees to couples vary depending on the services they receive but are also in the $40 range.

To reduce the chances of two children of inseminated mothers marrying without knowing they had the same father, Rothman drops donors after their sperm results in 10 pregnancies — a limit recommended by UCLA geneticists who eased their calculations on Los Angeles' population of 2.5 million.

The concept of buying sperm from donors, freezing it and then selling it to couples who cannot otherwise conceive is relatively new, but Rothman says the ideas behind sperm banks have been around for a while.

The first recorded donor insemination was recorded in the 1800s by John Hunter in England, Rothman says, and scientists by then had already recognized that sperm could be preserved at cold temperatures.

However, it was not until the 1920s and 1930s that refrigeration techniques were developed to the point where sperm could be vitrified, or brought to a glasslike state of suspended animation.

Rothman said he stores sperm at minus 196 degrees centigrade, or minus 321 degrees Fahrenheit.

The first birth of a child fathered by sperm preserved through freezing was recorded in 1953, the first such birth through donor insemination was about 20 years ago, Rothman says.

Sperm banks also provide a sort of insurance service to men who may at some future time be sterile and wish to father a child. These include men about to have a vasectomy, a sometimes irreversible tying of the ducts that carry sperm, or those who are about to be treated for cancer through radiotherapy or chemotherapy that may cause sterility.

BOOMING BUSINESS — Dr. Cappy Rothman, 43, says that since 1977, thawed sperm from his office has impregnated about 200 women. (AP Laserphoto)

Warn 'Uniform Sentencing' To Require Funds

By W.A. WERONKA JR.
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's uniform criminal sentencing law will force the state to spend more money to support a growing prison population once it takes effect, state officials say.

Correction Department officials cautioned Thursday that they can't be certain just what effect the new law will have on their already crowded prisons but, if their assumptions about how judges will apply the new law hold up, the state's prison population would increase by 1,000 during the first two years.

The uniform sentencing act was passed during the 1979 session of the General Assembly. It establishes categories for crimes and fixes sentences for each category. Judges would be expected to impose the prescribed sentences unless there were unusual circumstances.

The act was supposed to take effect March 1, but was delayed until April 15 so a House judiciary committee could consider a bill that would amend the act to give judges more flexibility in sentencing.

Jeff Williams, director of management and research for the Department of Correction, said the full study on the effect of the act is not completed but, in other states where similar laws have been passed, prison populations have increased.

Williams said the proposed legislation giving judges more flexibility would have the effect of keeping the initial increase down.

One way to avoid the increase, Williams said, was to decrease the sentence in the category of 10-year felonies such as breaking and entering.

That is not now part of the proposed legislation, but committee chairman Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, hinted that might be something a subcommittee studying the proposal might consider.

Williams pointed out that the current prison population in North Carolina is 16,094, about 400 above the average population. He added that 14,766 is the maximum number of prisoners the state can efficiently control.

At the present cost of about $23,000 per control cell, that represents quite a problem for funding, Williams said.

"If this passes," Williams said, "the state must allocate more funds to house additional prisoners."

The state now has the highest incarceration rate in the nation at 240 persons per 100,000 population. And Williams said that is increasing at a rate of about 8 percent a year because of population growth and other factors.

Rep. George Hux, D-Halifax, a member of the committee, said he was "ashamed" he had voted for the act in 1979.

"I support the amendments," he said. "But that doesn't mean I won't introduce a bill that would delay implementation for two years. I am seriously concerned about the law and I think we need to see the results of the studies."

Miller said the Legislature has allocated about $50 million for state prison construction in the last few years, but much of it has not been spent yet. That he said would offset part of the cost of the present overload in prison population.

But Miller agreed with state officials in saying that prison populations would increase anyway because of general population growth.

Miller also said the committee is considering several changes, which he would not elaborate on, that would give all judges more flexibility.

If the bill passes, as is, the effective date of the act would be pushed back to July 1.

Indians Urged Seek Reform

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Indians have been urged to "raise a strong voice" in seeking reforms in federal programs but to do so wisely.

"It's time for a major restructuring of Indian programs by the federal government," Sioux leader Vine Deloria Jr. said Thursday at the opening session of the sixth annual North Carolina Indian Unity Conference.

But, Deloria said, Indians should "advocate sensible reforms" and not waste their time trying to deal with federal bureaucrats.

"When you cross that District (of Columbia) boundary, the stupidest idea in the world sounds like it makes good sense," he said.

Deloria, a political science professor at the University of Arizona, is a former executive director of the National Congress of American Indians.

More than 300 North Carolina Indians participated in Thursday's events marking the start of the three-day unity conference. North Carolina has about 50,000 citizens who claim Indian heritage.

Deloria, a Standing Rock Sioux and author of the book "Custer Died For Your Sins," criticized government programs for the way they affect Indians.

He said participants in Indian conferences usually devote their efforts to "not talking about the future of the Indian people, but finding out what hurdles the federal bureaucrats have devised for us."

Deloria said he has "watched the federal bureaucracy become more and more insensitive to the needs of human beings." He also called for the Reagan administration's budget cutters to place their attention on bureaucrats who know nothing about Indians.

Cronkite Leaving CBS Anchorman Seat Tonight

By TOM JORY
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Cronkite is retiring as the nation's most beloved anchorman tonight, leaving his familiar seat at "CBS Evening News" to Dan Rather after 19 years of assuring Americans that "that's the way it is."

Cronkite, recognized in a poll taken in the mid-1970s as the most trusted man in America, leaves as the pre-eminent figure in television journalism.

"He has been an absolute giant, and all of us in the business owe him a great deal," said Rooney Arledge, president of ABC News and Sports, whose "World News Tonight" stands to gain from Cronkite's departure.

The competition for Cronkite's faithful began several days ago, though neither Arledge nor William J. Small, NBC News president, expects any sudden shift in viewer preference.

"I think a lot of people underestimate Dan Rather's ability and popularity," said Small, a former CBS News executive. "I don't see any immediate change. If one does come, it will be a matter of months."

Rather takes over as "Evening News" anchorman Monday night. His new contract was originally reported to be for $8 million over five years, but a recent report put the pact at $20 million over 10 years.

Cronkite, at 64, will continue as a CBS news correspondent and sometime commentator, and will anchor "Universe," the network's new science magazine.

In a full-page advertisement in some newspapers today, CBS presented a picture of Cronkite above the phrase "Introducing Our Newest Correspondent."

The decision to give up the "Evening News" assignment he took April 16, 1962, was his own, Cronkite said, and "I don't doubt that I am going to miss this a great, great deal."

The selection of Rather to replace Cronkite touched off a chain reaction that elevated Ed Bradley to "60 Minutes," where Rather had been co-editor since 1975, and sent Roger Mudd — once considered Cronkite's heir-apparent — to NBC.

Ironically, Rather and Mudd may someday compete as rival anchor-men.

"At the time," said William Leonard, CBS News president and the man who made the choice, "the only other serious alternative was to team Dan and Roger. I just wasn't able to put that package together."

Cronkite, a former foreign correspondent for United Press, joined CBS News in July 1950, and replaced Douglas Edwards as "Evening News" anchorman when the program was still 15 minutes long.

He developed a reputation for a calmness that became tinged with emotion only in the strongest circumstances, as in the death of President John F. Kennedy.

Frank Reynolds, an chorman for ABC's "World News Tonight," called Cronkite a "symbol of authority and responsibility." And John Chancellor, the NBC "Nightly News" anchorman, credited his longtime adversary with guiding television news toward "serious journalism without a lot of hokum."

Rather, tall and dark-haired at 49, will bring a new style to the "Evening News" flavored so long by Cronkite's avuncular personality.

Rather "will be different from Walter, and that will probably lead to a charming effect for a while," predicted ABC's Arledge.

"I think in time, Dan could be as formidable a competitor as Walter," said Arledge, whose own efforts to attract Rather to ABC helped make the new CBS anchorman perhaps TV's highest-paid newsmen.

Painters were to replace Cronkite's beige "Evening News" background with a blue-gray set tailored more to Rather.

Meanwhile, CBS was stressing Rather's experience — he was in Dallas when Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, he covered the Nixon White House, he was with "60 Minutes" when the program became the most popular in prime-time.

"I suppose I am apprehensive," said Leonard, "because others in the news organization are apprehensive, which is natural."

"But I'll look at the upside; it has the potential for that, too," Rather's boss added. "CBS News has been No. 1, and I guess it will be that after Dan takes over."

Alda And Burnett Lead As People's Favorites

Convicted 8 Of Piracy

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Eight people have been convicted by a federal jury on charges associated with a multimillion-dollar tape piracy case ranging from Jacksonville to Gastonia, N.C.

Sentencing in the trial, which ended this week after five weeks of testimony and three days of deliberation by the jury, was delayed pending an investigation of probation probabilities.

The trial resulted from an 18-month investigation that ended with the discovery of about $22 million worth of tape manufacturing equipment in Jacksonville and Gastonia.

FBI agents said pirated eight-track tapes worth $6,000 to $14,000 were shipped each week from Gastonia to Florida, with the illegal tapes being distributed in Florida, Maine and South Carolina, primarily at flea markets and other reduced-price markets.

The defendants had been charged with infringement of copyright, conspiracy to infringe copyright or wire fraud.

Those convicted were: Jerry Jones of Tampa, formerly of Gastonia, John C. McCulloch of Tampa, a former Gastonia police vice officer; Ferrell (Bud) McKinney and Frances Lockamy, both of Dallas, N.C.; Lanny Drum of Bessemer City, N.C.; Curtis Snipes of Charleston, S.C., and George W. Cooper II and George W. Cooper III, both of Piedmont, S.C.

In October 1980, nine others pleaded guilty to related charges. Among the nine are Robert Lee Nations, Gary Nations, Jeffrey Nations and Jack Painter, all of Gastonia. Their sentencing was deferred until the end of the trial.

According to the indictment, the tape piracy operation's Gastonia base was J&J Wheels, a used car lot owned by Jones.

Hosted More Than The News Slot In 31 Years

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tonight, Walter Cronkite enters semi-retirement and leaves the "CBS Evening News." The Republic may endure, but our national fabric will surely strain with the weight of the loss.

Walter Cronkite's mustachioed mug has been omnipresent during the entire lifetime of nearly half this country's population.

I'm not only talking about the 19 years he's headed up the "CBS Evening News." I, for one, happen to think of "The 20th Century" when I think of Cronkite. You may remember "Man of the Week."

But Walter Cronkite has been before the nation as an anchor type, in one format or another, since 1951, when he hosted a show called "Open Hearing," a weekly CBS documentary series. He moved on to:

"Man of the Week," 1952-53, the program that was the forerunner of CBS' news-panel show, "Face the Nation."

"You Are There," the show that featured reenactments of historical events and gave Cronkite a line more famous (at the time) than his "That's the way it is..." news signoff. It was, "What sort of day was it? A day like all days, filled with those events that alter and illuminate our times ... and you were there."

"It's News To Me," a game show featuring a panel of celebrities whom Cronkite quizzed on news events. He hosted the show in 1954.

"Air Power," 1956-58, a documentary produced with the Air Force.

"The Twentieth Century," 1957-70, Cronkite's tour to the marvels of modernity.

"Eyewitness to History," a current events show that Cronkite hosted in 1961-62, until he became anchor of "CBS' Evening News" program.

In these 30 years, America has been to war a couple of times, to the brink a couple more, and has been jarred by social and technological revolution.

And Cronkite was always there, telling the survivors just what they'd survived. Through some cosmic connection, having, I think, as much to do with Cronkite's ubiquity as anything else, America has come to associate making it through another day with the fellow who stamped it "official" on the "Evening News."

Miniseries On Custody Fight

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The story of the headline-producing 1934 child custody fight involving America's "poor little rich girl," "Gloria Vanderbilt," will be made into a miniseries for NBC.

The story will be adapted from Barbara Goldsmith's "Little Gloria ... Happy 'at Last."

The bidding:

 Opening lead: King of ♣.

Over the course of a year, Trump Coup Tommy was one of the club's big losers, as might be expected. His bidding and play were appalling, except in one circumstance — when trumps broke badly. Tommy was suddenly transformed into a genius.

North's jump to four diamonds at his second turn was an expert action, showing six good diamonds and four-card support for partner's major. With no heart control to cuebid, Tommy wisely decided to bid no more than four spades. West's failure to double was mute testimony to the awe in which Tommy was held by any player who had a trump stack.

The defenders started off with three rounds of hearts, Tommy winning the last with the queen while discarding a diamond from the table. He cashed the king of spades. Lesser mortals might have been devastated by the bad break — Tommy just smiled and went to work.

He cashed the ace of clubs, crossed back to the closed hand with the jack of diamonds and cashed the king of clubs. Then came a diamond to the ace, reducing the hand to this position:

♦ A 8 4
 ♠ K Q
 ♦ J 10 9 7
 ♠ 10
 ♦ 10
 ♠ J 10 8 4
 ♦ Q 6 5
 ♠ 9 7

position. Whichever trump he returned, declarer was bound to score the last three tricks. Tommy had triumphed again!

Legendary City Thought Found

ROME (AP) — Two archeologists believe they have located the site of the ancient city of Crustumium which, according to legend, battled Rome to liberate the Sabine women, the newspaper La Stampa said today.

Lorenzo Quilici and his wife Stefania, of the National Council of Research, told the Turin paper they found remnants of huge embankments and ditches around a flat area where they believe the ancient city once stood.

The area is on Via Salaria, about 10 miles north of Rome.

They also have found remains of two large tombs, ancient alleys and streets and earthenware believed to have been used by the Sabines, La Stampa said.

Legend has it that the Romans invaded the Sabine cities in the hills northeast of Rome in the 6th century B.C., and abducted and raped their women.

Rome was involved in numerous wars with the Sabines. Horatius is supposed to have defeated them in the 5th century B.C.

UNC Is Not Segregated To Educator

WASHINGTON (AP) - A black economist-educator once mentioned for a post in the Reagan administration told an administrative law judge Thursday that the University of North Carolina would suffer from program shifts ordered by the government to achieve more desegregation.

Dr. Thomas Sowell, whose name was linked with a possible post on the Council of Economic Affairs during the White House transition period, said that, under his definition, UNC "would not be considered segregated."

Sowell is now a professor of Economics at the University of California at Los Angeles and is a fellow at the Hoover Institute for Research at Stanford University.

He testified at a hearing to determine whether the Department of Education will succeed in cutting off nearly $100 million a year in federal funding to the 16-campus UNC system.

Sowell defined segregation as some force or coercion that imposes a differential that is greater for one group than another. "In other words," said Sowell, "a differential based on race."

"My position is that statistics, by themselves, do not constitute segregation. But certain figures may lead me to question whether an institution is segregated," he said.

Sowell expressed opposition to government proposals calling for major program shifts from one campus to another in an effort to promote integration on all campuses.

"Program shifts involve the movement of human beings. It amounts to a casual shifting of people. I am shocked at the casual recklessness with which third parties make recommendations hundreds of miles away," Sowell said.

Sowell also criticized proposals to lower academic standards or to provide special admissions standards for lower-qualified students, saying such moves would "mismatch the students with the institution."

"It has been my experience that blacks admitted under such a program feel as though they are constantly under a cloud of suspicion," he said.

Sowell, responding to government attorneys, said he was being paid $2,000 a day by UNC for his testimony. He said he normally receives $5,000 for a lecture.

UNC chief counsel Joseph R. Levin said during a court recess that "all expert witnesses are paid, unless they want to give you their time, which isn't too common. The amount paid depends upon what field the witness is in."

The Sheriff Of Nottingham On Industry Hunt

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) - The sheriff of Nottingham was in Greensboro Thursday but, instead of looking for Robin Hood, he was on an industry-hunting trip for his home city in England.

Frank Dennett, who toured the city wearing his ceremonial plumed hat and mink robe, said he stopped by Greensboro to visit a family friend. He has been on an industrial promotional trip in California and Canada.

Dennett said his office now is mostly ceremonial.

"They go down the list according to seniority until they find someone willing to serve," he said. "I was fortunate enough to have time to serve."

Marines Going To Fort Bragg

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) - The Marine Corps said Thursday more than 2,000 Marines will be assigned to Fort Bragg for three weeks of field artillery training utilizing live ammunition.

The Marines began moving to Fort Bragg Thursday. Part of their training will include familiarization with the new 198mm towed howitzer.
