To Recommend Phased Cut In Health Dept. Aid

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Manager Reginald Gray told the Board of County Commissioners today that a legislative staff research committee will recommend a phased reduction in state appropriations for the county's middle health department program.

Gray said the legislative committee will recommend an appropriation of $481,000 for the health department for the 1981-82 fiscal year - a $144,000 reduction from the present level of funding. He said the committee would recommend only a $50,000 appropriation for the second year of the biennium, fiscal year 1982-83.

Under the proposal, Gray said, all state-funded positions at the health department would revert to the county July 1 of this year.

There has been a move over the past several years for state withdrawal from the model health department project in Pitt County.

In other business this morning commissioners accepted a report from the Transportation Committee, outlining a plan to develop a public transportation system over the next five years.

No action was taken on the plan itself, which, under present circumstances, would cost Pitt County an estimated $6,000 a year for the first three years, or 10 percent of the cost. Under present regulations, 80 percent of the cost would be funded by federal grants and another 10 percent by the state.

The board heard a report from Mrs. Ruth Trevathan, representing the League of Women Voters, which indicated that of the 217 persons appointed to 31 boards, commissions, councils, authorities and committees by commissioners, 22.6 percent or 49 are women.

On behalf of the League, Mrs. Trevathan recommended that "commissioners be aware of this discrepancy and make every effort in the future to make more equitable appointments...consider a compilation of data indicating an individual's desire to serve and on which particular board," and possibly use the League to help compile such a list of volunteers to draw from when a vacancy occurs.

The board also heard a report from Lynn Olmstead, executive director of the Est Carolina Arts Festival who said some 85 events have been scheduled for the 16 days of the festival this Spring.

She noted that the old Belk-Tyler building in downtown Greenville will serve as headquarters for the festival and should open the last of this month.

Swarm Of Media Becomes Part Of Story On Atlanta's Children

By LAWRENCE KILMAN
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — They seem to be everywhere, taking pictures, pointing microphones, furiously scribbling on notepads. To residents of a city staggering under the pressure of 22 child slayings and disappearances, the media have become part of the story.

To some, the hundreds of journalists who have descended on this Southern city are bringing to the world's attention a story that has plagued the city for 20 months. To others, the press is a reminder of things they would prefer to forget.

"They told our story when no one else would," said Ann Maxey of the Committee To Stop Children's Murders, which was formed by mothers of the young black victims. "If it hadn't been for the press, our side would not have been told."

But Ms. Maxey, who is not related to any of the victims, said the recent influx of journalists from around the world has caused some problems.

In recent months, journalists from as far away as Germany, France and Australia have joined their American colleagues in pursuit of the story, which has drawn donations and concern from around the world.

Last week, when Curtis Walker, 13, the 20th victim, was buried, at least nine television cameras and a flock of reporters flanked both sides of the flower-bedecked coffin.

"It was a circus," said Ms. Maxey. "All we ask is that the press deal on a human level and not treat this like a carnival."

Ernestine Stephens, mother of 12-year-old Charles Stephens, whose strangled body was found last October, has mixed feelings about the attention focused on her and her family.

"They don't bother me too much," she said. "But I see no reason for them to keep coming and asking the same questions."

"It only makes it worse," she said, referring to the constant reminder of her dead son. "It only makes it worse."

But John Bascom, coordinator of weekly volunteer searches for clues in the cases, cited the media's help. "I think they've been very helpful in relaying and mobilizing information on the searches," said Bascom, who is with the United Youth Adult Conference. "They've even run errands, gone to get the police when we find something and picked up stranded searchers."

Bascom said media interest is not just limited to pursuit of a publishable story.

"They're searching too," he said. "They come without their pads and mikes and get out there with the rest of us."

Caught Five

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — British commandos captured five men suspected of being leaders of the Irish Republican Army in a raid near the border with the Irish Republic, authorities reported today.

Police spokesmen said army troops handed the five men over to police Sunday along with captured weapons, radio sets and camouflaged combat uniforms.

Military headquarters said the men were rounded up in a cottage near the village of Rosslea, in County Fermanagh, where the outlawed IRA's Provisional Wing has waged a bloody hit-and-run campaign for several years.

Colleges Await Congress Action On Student Funds

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Up to one-half of North Carolina's 165,000 college students receive some form of financial aid, so they — along with parents and college officials — are worried about President Reagan's proposed cuts.

Officials say the cuts would affect students in one of three ways — most students would have to wait for loans, some would have to work to earn college money and a few might not get to go to school at all.

Colleges now are waiting on final action by Congress before awarding any aid, because the Reagan proposal would affect the two biggest aid programs — Basic Educational Opportunity Grants and Guaranteed Student Loans, which Reagan wants to make more expensive for borrowers.

Officials at North Carolina State and East Carolina say students may have to wait as long as five months before knowing if any aid is coming and whether they can afford to return to school.

"It's crippled our abilities," said Robert Boudreaux, student aid director at East Carolina. "When students show up this fall, saying, 'Here I am,' you can't turn them away."

The school might have to work out a system of deferring tuition and fees payment, and that "triples the amount of work we would have to do," Boudreaux said.

The Reagan proposals would reverse a trend that began in the 1970s easing financial aid requirements for middle-income students, student aid officials said. If the proposals become reality, the officials say, they would effectively negate the federal Middle Income Assistance Act of 1978, which opened the loan program to all students, regardless of family income.

Reagan wants student borrowers to pay the 9 percent interest rate on loans while they are in school. The government now pays the interest until the student's graduation. And the proposals would require students to prove financial need to get a loan.

The basic grants are awarded on the grounds of financial need. Reagan wants to increase to 20 percent from 14 percent the portion of family income that is considered "discretionary" and available for families to use in paying college costs.

This year, about 17,183 students in the state have received $35 million in guaranteed loans for an average of more than $2,000 per student.

About $61.5 million in basic grants was awarded to 70,000 students at an average of about $880 per student.

Talent Bank Serves Purpose

The city reported that its talent bank is proving to be a useful resource to the mayor and city council in selecting local citizens to serve on boards and commissions.

The talent bank affords the council immediate access to persons who have indicated their desire to serve on a particular city board should a vacancy occur, it was noted.

According to the city, approximately 161 citizens have registered in the talent bank. In the past year, the council has considered 184 appointments, of which 127 were appointees to serve on the mayor's advisory committee.

Appointments being considered on city boards and commissions are published in the newspaper at the end of each month. Persons interested in serving on a local board should contact Lois Worthington, city clerk, at 752-4137.

PREVIOUS TENANT'S DEBT

I applied for Cable television service and was denied it because the previous tenant in my apartment owes the company. I don't think this is reasonable. I don't even know the guy who lived here before. Why should I be penalized for his debt? D. W.

You shouldn't, Greenville Cable TV manager Ray Bell said. Before Hotline called him, he'd already called you and assured you that the company will be glad to have you as a customer.

The reason the lady you talked to was cautious, he said, is that the company has experienced many instances of being ripped off by people who were cut off for not paying and who then got service reinstated in another family's member's name and did it again. You were suspected because the phone number you provided the company was the same as the one the previous tenant gave. Bell knows now, though, that this was a neighbor's phone number that each of you gave.

He said he regrets the error, but hopes you understand the problem he and his company are up against.

Expansion

Jack W. Richardson, general director of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, filed notice Mar. 11 of intent to incur a capital expenditure for the proposed expansion of laboratories, cafeteria, medical records departments, respiratory therapy, and pulmonary function services.

The project is estimated to cost $1,104,365 and is scheduled for completion in March, 1982.

The project proposal has been submitted to the Certificate of Need section, of the Division of Facility Services of the N. C. Department of Human Resources. Planning agencies will seek to determine whether the project is needed. If it can be adequately staffed and operated, whether it is economically feasible within prevailing rate structures, and if it proposes specific cost-containment features.

Bachelor Is Suddenly Breadwinner For Eight

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — When bachelor Joe Swift undertook a life-long commitment and adopted a Chinese boy, he had no idea he would soon be the breadwinner for a family of eight.

Swift, a contract negotiator for the government, adopted the boy four years ago. The two became friends while Smith was working as a civilian in Vietnam, where the boy's family had lived for years.

"It almost blew my mother's mind," Swift said. "She is just a nice, middle-aged Baptist lady from Hazel Green. She was really concerned that I'd taken the responsibility to adopt, educate and take care of a young Buddhist from the other side of the world."

"She said I didn't know what it would lead to — and she was right."

Swift and the Chinese boy became friends while Smith was working as a civilian in Vietnam. Shortly before the final evacuation of U.S. troops, Swift told the boy, now named Michael Swift, he could come live with Swift in the United States if he managed to get out.

One night, Swift said he got a call from Michael, who was in Guam, and the two met in Huntsville in a matter of days.

While Swift says Michael was very excited and happy to be in the United States, he soon began to worry about his brothers and sisters living in Vietnam. Swift says he agreed to take care of them if they could get out.

"After three attempts, the family did get out with the boat people, but their mother went overboard and was killed. The (other) seven children are all here with me," Swift said.

Swift — who would not give his age, but looks no more than 30 — says the costs of taking care of his new family, including a staggering $14,000 dental bill, made it necessary for him to take a temporary job in Saudi Arabia. The kind of work he will be doing was not known immediately.

Swift says he also bought a bigger house, while Michael spent $200 he had saved to buy sheets, pillows and bunk beds for his brothers and sisters. Michael, 21, is the only one Swift has legally adopted.

Shortly after Michael's brothers and sisters arrived, Swift says he got a book of names and each one picked out a new American name: Lucy is 20; Lana, 19; David, 18; Richard, 17; Mindy, 15; Ellen, 13, and Van, 11. They all wanted to use Swift as a last name.

Swift says the two oldest girls work, and all the others have afternoon jobs except for the youngest boy. All money they earn is pooled and goes to buy necessities. The young people take care of all the household chores and cooking.

Swift says he has no qualms about leaving them alone while he works in Saudi Arabia.

"They can do it," he said. "They will be all right. They can all speak English now."

Swift said the whole experience has touched him deeply. "I am not a do-gooder religious person, but a lot of things that have happened through all this have certainly deepened my faith. Who would think that a guy like me could take care of all this?"

KEEPER OF THE DREAM AWARD . . . Roanoke Award To 'Miss Betsy'

MANTEO — A 92-year-old Tar Heel woman, Mrs. Cecil L. Sanford of Laurinburg, known throughout North Carolina as "Miss Betsy," is the recipient of the first "Keeper of the Dream" award bestowed by the Roanoke Island Historical Association (RIHA), producers of "The Lost Colony."

The title of the award comes from Sir Walter Raleigh's "dream" of establishing a colony in the New World.

Mrs. Sanford, mother of former Governor Terry Sanford and three other children, and the widow of the late Cecil Sanford, received a copy of the 1937 Virginia Dare commemorative half-dollar as the first recipient of the award.

Still very much active at just eight years short of being a century old, Mrs. Sanford is currently Scotland County chairman of the annual RIHA membership drive in North Carolina.

Children have always been a special interest for Mrs. Terry — she taught in the public school system of 35 years and is a former North Carolina Mother of the year.

This year, the RIHA will present the 41st season of "The Lost Colony," scheduled to open June 12 and run through August 29, nightly except Sunday.

Harbingers Of Spring Arrive

HINCKLEY, Ohio (AP) — For those who doubt the credibility of groundhogs, this small northeast Ohio town offers yet another harbinger of spring — buzzards.

To the delight of thousands of buzzard greeters, the gangly birds returned to their roosts Sunday, as legend claims they have every March 15 since 1818. There were 169 sightings Sunday, but officials say the biggest single huddle of buzzards numbered 17.

Legend says the first buzzards were drawn here by tons of decaying game killed in the Great Hinckley Varmint Hunt. The carcasses froze in the winter cold. When they thawed in the spring, the smell of rotting animals attracted the buzzards.

Armed Robbery At Rural Store

Pitt County deputies are investigating a Friday night armed robbery at a rural store that resulted in the theft of approximately $1,000 in cash and $150 in food stamps.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson said the robbery took place at Connor's Grocery located north of Highway 30 between Stokes and Bethel.

He said the couple attending the store told officers two males, one of them armed with a pistol, entered the business and robbed them of a pocketbook containing keys and some $600 and also took money from the store's cash drawer.

The store attendants, who were not injured in the incident, reported the robbers instructed them to lie on the floor until they left.

Sheriff Tyson said the two males were described as being in their late teens or early 20's.

The robbery took place around 7 p.m., he said.

Banking Industry's Bill Held Attention

By SAM D. BUNDY
N. C. House of Representatives

Well, things are picking up some. Bills introduced in the House now total 439 and in the Senate 262 for a grand total of 701. The banking industry bill in the Senate was a focus of interest this week. Representatives of the banking industry had been pushing for higher interest rates on amounts under $25,000, while at the same time some banks were charging higher rates than allowed by state law by taking advantage of a loophole offered by a federal law as far back as 1874. Frankly, this did not set well with many members of the General Assembly. As a result, the bill before the Senate was returned to committee for further investigation and study.

Another bill in the Senate that has attracted attention is the bill that, on divorce, would give husbands and wives equal rights to property they acquired during their marriage, with the exception of inherited property. This has been kicked back and forth for about a month. Final vote is set for Tuesday, Mar. 17.

The ire of coastal legislators was raised to the boiling point this week over threatened cutbacks in ferry service and sharp increases in tolls. The appropriations subcommittees are in a "cutting" mood. They want to raise fees and tuition in the community college system and also reduce the number of senior administrators by approximately 50. This would amount to about $5 million a year or $10 million for the biennium.

Closer home, Pitt County, the only county where the state actively runs the agency rather than subsidizing a county health department, gets about $400,000 a year more than if the county operated the health department. In appearing before the committee on two occasions in an effort to get full funding for one more year, we were unsuccessful. However, by a nine-to-eight vote, the committee agreed to give the county $250,000 in 1981-82 and $50,000 in 1982-83, plus the categorical grants and regular state aid. This will amount to $525,000 in 1981-82 and $325,000 in 1982-83. This will soften the blow; however, I am afraid health services in Pitt County will be cut from their present level.

Survey Points To '82 Growth

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — If President Reagan's tax and spending cuts are implemented, and if the Federal Reserve maintains a tight money policy, the nation's economy will begin to prosper next year, University of Michigan economists suggested today.

"By the spring of 1982, business investment activity begins to reflect the investment incentives in the tax cut program, consumer spending continues to reflect lower personal tax rates, and the economy begins to experience substantially more rapid real growth," the report predicted.

The university's annual economic forecast, released last November, was updated by E. Philip Howrey, Saul H. Hymans, Joan P. Cray and U-M President Harold T. Shapiro and released today.

Assuming the second phase of the Reagan tax cut takes effect in mid-1982, the researchers predict economic growth up 4.7 percent during the six-month period from April through September.

In the same period, they see inflation "projected to decline steadily from a 10.2 percent annual rate in the current quarter to a 7.5 percent annual rate."

With inflation slowing, interest rates also should decline slowly, they said.

The economists predicted auto sales would improve by early 1982 and residential housing would bottom out at the end of this year and improve slowly after mid-1982.

They said Reagan defense spending plans are "most important to watch."

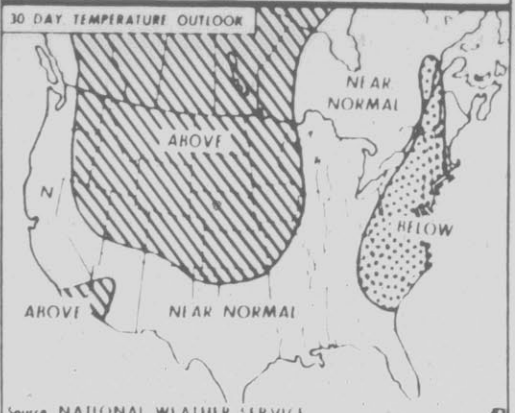

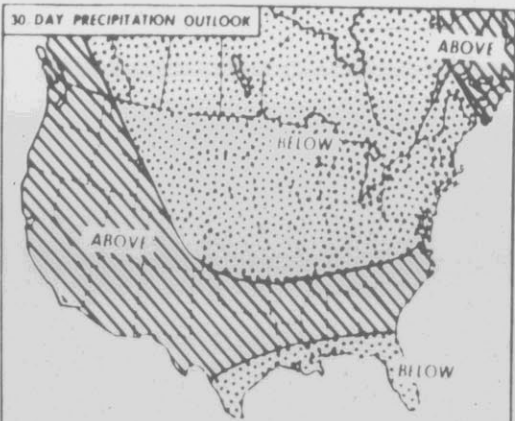

"Defense increases beyond those already called for in the Reagan proposals do not appear all that unlikely, and would have major implications — both for the growth of the economy and for the need to contain inflationary pressures," they said.

Dear Abby

Save People Then Marriage

By Abigail Van Buren

1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: What has happened to you? You used to encourage married couples to do everything within their power to save their marriages. Lately, you give the impression that divorce could be the answer for some couples. Why?

WASHINGTON STAR READER

DEAR READER: Because I think it's more important to save people than marriages. And often, in an effort to save a marriage that isn't worth saving, people have destroyed themselves and/or each other.

DEAR ABBY: My wife keeps telling me I have bad breath. I've consulted my doctors in medicine and dentistry, and they both have assured me that there is nothing abnormal about my breath. I have even asked some of my best friends, and all have affirmed that I do not have bad breath. Meanwhile, every time I go to kiss my wife, she pushes me away, saying, "Your breath is terrible!" This totally destroys any romantic impulses I might have, leaving me frustrated, rejected and depressed.

It has occurred to me that my wife is using this "bad breath" excuse to get out of having a normal husband-wife relationship.

Obviously, if this continues, it will be the end of our marriage. My wife is a very desirable woman of 58, and I love her very much. Please advise.

NO LOVE IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR NO LOVE: Your wife could be suffering from "olfactory hallucinations" (smelling imaginary, non-existent odors). If this is not the case, and she is keeping you at arm's length for reasons of her own, you have another problem. Your marriage smells!

DEAR ABBY: Fifteen years ago I chose a sterling silver flatware pattern and have accumulated two place settings. Since it has become so expensive, my husband discouraged buying any more.

You can imagine my excitement when an aunt came from another state to visit and in the course of the conversation I discovered that she and I had the same silverware pattern! She has a complete service for 12. How do I go about asking if I may have her silverware after her need for it has passed?

She is a very gracious lady in her 80s, very proper, well-to-do, and has many grandchildren. We are not close, but I correspond with her daughter.

When the time comes for this aunt to dispose of her silver, I would buy it if it were for sale. (It probably wouldn't be as expensive as brand-new silverware since it was purchased many years ago, and is "used.")

I would appreciate any suggestions you have on how to handle this ticklish problem.

THE GREEDY NIECE

DEAR NIECE: I would not "handle" this problem at all. Gracious, proper, well-to-do ladies in their 80s rarely "sell" their silver. They usually give it away or leave it to their closest kin.

Your aunt already knows that you and she have the same pattern. Any further mention of it on your part would be inappropriate and presumptuous.

Have you ever wondered how a knock to the head, or pressing on the eyeball when rubbing an eyelid, can make one "see stars"? These light images, flashes, circles or complex patterns, are called phosphenes (from the Greek, phos-light and phaino-show). The patterns arise from within the brain and eyes and can be aroused by as little as the force of a shower upon closed eyelids. It is also possible that rubbing eyes before going to sleep will produce a short technicolor cartoon. You do not need light to see phosphenes but merely the absence of external visual stimuli!

If the "bright lights" are bothering you, an eye exam is in order. Lunch Cuts Will Hurt Cuts in the federal budget, while they are not disastrous in terms of percentage of the total budget, are going to be felt at the grass roots.

In Pitt County it is already being seen that the school lunch programs will be affected.

Food Services Director Donna Ware says the budget cuts will end the school lunch program as it now exists.

Children paying 60 cents for lunches will pay $1.10 and those on the reduced lunch program will pay more.

She foresees that the cuts will cost the state about 4,200 positions and in Pitt county 26 of the 128 positions will be lost.

The result could be children bringing bag lunches and some not getting nutritious meals.

"We will just be able to give the children the bare minimum meal to meet the minimum requirements," she said.

The situation could be difficult, and certainly few of us would want to see children go undernourished. It is an important time in their physical development and young people need balanced diets.

There will possibly be changes in the cuts proposed by the administration as they make their way through Congress. We must wait and see.

14th Street Allocation Wise

The City Council has allocated some $1,222,585 in funds turned over from the Central Business District and Southside projects.

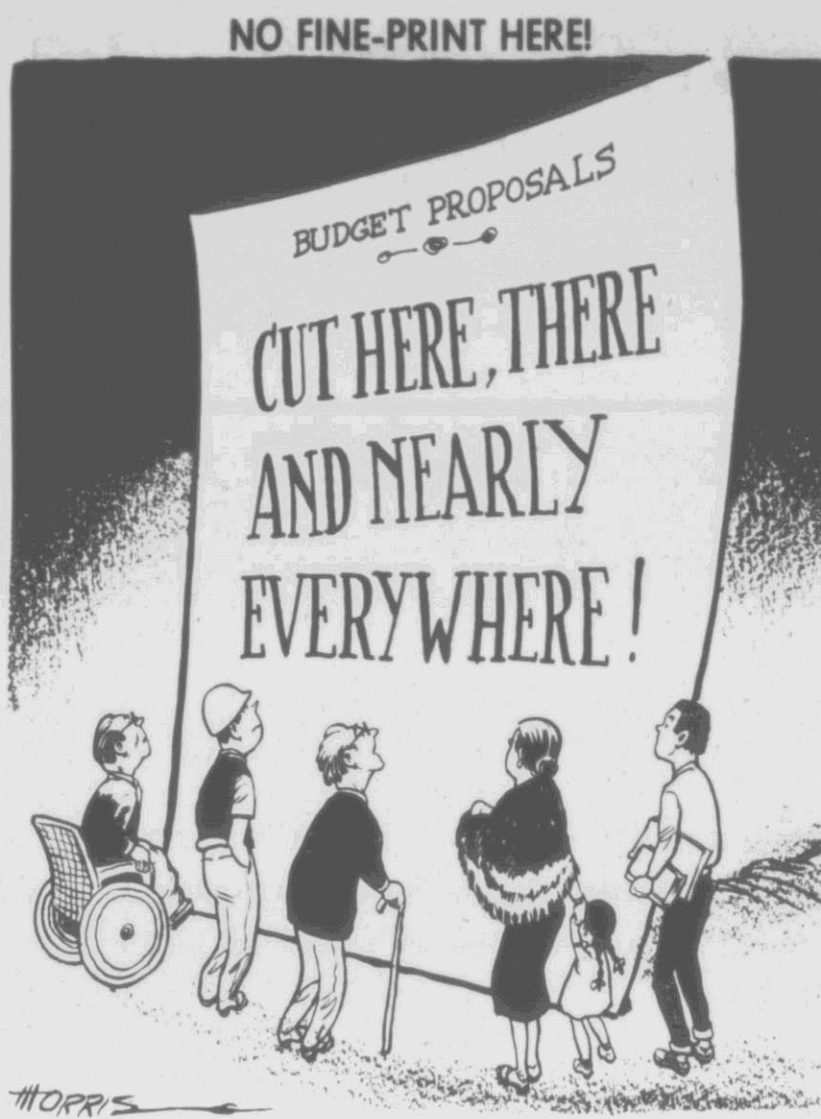

The money will be used largely for capital improvements including completion of the 14th Street improvement project.

This is one-time money that is not likely to be repeated, given the cutting mood in Washington.

The 14th Street project is perhaps the most needed in the city with the traffic rapidly increasing to the Pitt County Memorial Hospital complex.

Thus we would consider the council allocation of the funds wise, indeed.

Really Mean Business

The Post Office is going to make one more attempt to see that people address their mail correctly. If this fails, it's going to have to resort to drastic measures.

I was informed of this by a relative who works in the Post Office, who said the PO was losing patience with its customers. "We've done everything we could to make life easier for the customer. We've raised the rates of first-class mail, we've given everyone a five-digit ZIP code, we've put restrictions on the size and shape of the envelopes, and still the mail is late. We have no choice but to take stronger steps to had to show for it were slower deliveries, lost letters, and lower productivity. So we've taken the next step. The letter-writer is either going to have to shape up or ship out."

"So you believe by taking a hard line, the Post Office service will improve?"

"If the nine-digit ZIP code doesn't sober people up, we have a contingency plan that will change the entire system."

"What's that?" I asked.

"We're going to make the customer deliver his own mail."

"How are you going to do that?"

"It will go something like this: After a person writes a letter, he will take it down to the post office and have the stamp canceled. Then he will proceed to the addressee's house and drop it in his mailbox. If he wants to get it there fast, he can take a taxi. If he isn't rushed, he can take the bus or subway, or even walk it there. But our responsibility ends as soon as one of our employees cancels the stamp."

"I understand that would speed things up in the same town. But suppose someone in Louisville is sending a letter to someone in California. That wouldn't work very well for him."

"We have the answer for that. The person in Louisville would deliver someone else's letter from California to someone in Louisville, and the person in California would deliver the Louisville letter to the person in the town in which he lived. For example, if you were writing to your Aunt Flora in Burbank, you preserve the system."

"How's that?" I asked.

"We're going to up the price of first-class stamps to 18 cents, and institute the nine-digit ZIP code. In that way, the customer will know we really mean business."

"I'm not too clear how raising the price of the stamps and adding a nine-digit ZIP code is going to help. Most people have trouble remembering a five-digit number."

"We have to make the customer realize that when he mails a letter, he has a responsibility for getting it to the other end. He can no longer just dump it in a mailbox and expect the Post Office to do all the work for him. We've tried to be nice about it in the past, but all we

CAPITOL LETTER

Symbol That Ires

By WILLIAM M. WELCH Associated Press Writer RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Republicans are seeing red over that red, white and blue map of North Carolina that keeps showing up around the state.

The map is worn as a lapel pin — and badge of political loyalty — by Gov. Jim Hunt and his political supporters throughout state government and across North Carolina.

Since Hunt has been governor, it also has crept onto much of the stationery of state government as an unofficial symbol and logotype of the Hunt administration.

The minority leader of the state Senate, Don Kincaid, R-Lenoir, is disturbed by the wide and official use of the map is receiving, and he is sponsoring a bill aimed at outlawing its use.

The distinctive map, says Kincaid, is more than just a representation of the shape of the state — it is a political symbol of Jim Hunt, and it is being subtly implanted in the minds of voters.

"It's wrong," says Kincaid. "You know the key to advertising is repetition."

"Obviously the governor is going to be running against (Senator) Jesse Helms in 1984, and you can bet he's going to use this logo. He's used it ever since he ran for lieutenant governor."

The map is a stylized version of regular state maps. It divides the state into thirds, with each section a different color.

In his campaign, Hunt used a version that incorporated his name on the map. And since taking office in 1977, the map has become affixed to official state proclamations, memos and letterheads of the Department of Administration, and elsewhere.

Kincaid has begun keeping a file of all the places in state government where he finds the Hunt symbol. One version of it has appeared in use by the Department of Transportation, often in only one color of ink and with the words "The Good Roads State" in the center.

A similar version also has appeared on the front of a pamphlet reprinting Hunt's inaugural speech, published recently by the governor's Office of Citizen Affairs.

"It's the first time I've seen any governor try to put his logo on state publications and expect no one to notice," Kincaid said. "I would like to know how many pamphlets a day go out with that."

It is probably a lot, Kincaid notes the map also has appeared on the back of envelopes used by the Transportation Department to send out automobile license tag renewal forms.

Joseph Grimsley, secretary of the Department of Administration, says his department adopted the symbol in 1977 as its department logo. Grimsley, who was Hunt's campaign manager in both races for governor, then recommended it to other departments.

"Why would they want to legally keep people from using the state of North Carolina's geographic boundaries?" he asks.

Besides, says Grimsley, when Republican Jim Holshouser was governor he used a stylized version of the state flag, a symbol that still appears on GOP lapels.

The map got its start in 1972, before Hunt ran for lieutenant governor. The lapel-pin map was used by the state Jaycees, and Hunt — who was a Wilson Jaycee then — adopted it.

Kincaid's bill would limit official stationery to official symbols only, such as the state seal, motto, flag or other officially adopted items, such as the state flower. To include the pin-wheeled design that is the official Transportation symbol, he added a provision allowing designs "appropriate to represent by abstract expression" a state agency or department.

The bill isn't given any more chance of passing than most Republican legislation in the heavily Democratic General Assembly.

Hunt press secretary Gary Pearce laughed when told of the proposal. "What would he prefer we use?" he asked. "The map of South Carolina?"

Other Editors Say Well Running Dry

(Washington Daily News)

From what we read a few days ago regarding the present plight of Beaufort County Community College, it appears that deep trouble is bound to ensue unless some money answer is found immediately.

We are advised that unless some money is forthcoming BCCC's future for the balance of this fiscal year (which ends June 30) is in jeopardy. We are also advised that the minimum needed to operate through June 30 is about $25,000.

By way of explanation, all salaries are paid by the state out at BCCC except those paid to custodial personnel. Local taxpayers do not bear any part of the cost of curriculum either, we are told. But Beaufort County is called upon to pay about 11 percent of the institution's total budget for a given year.

According to the story, there is just about enough money in the budget to pay utility costs until perhaps the middle of May. What happens out there from May 15 through June 30 should be a matter of deep concern to all our people. After all, we have made the good fight over many years now for a better community institution, and today is no time to give up.

We fully realize the plight of the Beaufort County Commissioners, too. To find $25,000 in the last few months of a budget year is well nigh impossible. Practically speaking, existing funds have already been allocated and for the most part either spent or committed. There might be a few dollars here and there that are unspent; and "unspent dollars here and there" might be the only answer we have immediately, even if they be few in number.

We have asked a question of BCCC. "Have you cut everywhere you possibly can, and cut out everything not really needed; and are you now at the point where you cannot cut down or cut out anything else?" The answer: "absolutely we have."

So what do we do now? The state hardly will help and we understand that state help has been sought. The money must come from Beaufort County. If BCCC is absolutely in a situation where it is a matter of either getting the necessary money or closing the doors about the end of May, we have no choice but to come up with the funds. Again, we do want to be absolutely sure that this precise condition does exist before the county commissioners are called upon to bail out the institution.

Once the doors are closed, the state hardly will choose to sustain us in the future or to allot state funds for an institution which it might feel is being neglected by Beaufort County.

We are in a sensitive situation. Rather than leave the money to chance, the better part of wisdom tells us that if the well has now run dry, Beaufort County must borrow or in some practical manner come up with the needed $25,000 to keep the doors open.

VIRTUES IN ORDER

The Second Epistle of Peter contains a list of Christian virtues, and the order in which they are placed is of great significance. The writer tells Christian followers (2 Peter 1:5-7) that their salvation begins with diligence. Then to diligence is added faith, and to faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love. So here is the order through which the human soul passes in its pilgrimage from bondage to freedom. We begin with the plain homely virtue of diligence. Anyone who believes we can relax and sink down into the benefits of Christian salvation is wrong. The person who wants to benefit spiritually must do something to gain these benefits. But the end of this experience is love for God and man. This is the test of true religion. — Elisha Douglass

Advertising For Runner

By WALTER R. MEARS AP Special Correspondent WASHINGTON (AP) — Conservatives launching a long shot attempt to unseat Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in Massachusetts next year are looking for a candidate — with a help-wanted ad.

They certainly can't promise applicants a job with a future. Kennedy has won four Senate elections in a succession of landslides. He got 63 percent of the vote last time he ran, 70 percent the time before that.

The Kennedy name may not have been magic in the presidential primary elections, but even Republicans acknowledge it still is in Massachusetts.

Still, this time, the New Right is out to get him, or at least try. He is atop the conservative hit list for 1982. The campaign already is under way, with letters like the one that accuses Kennedy of "leading the pro-Hanoi forces in the United States."

Even if they cannot overcome the long odds, Kennedy's conservative and Republican foes would see some measure of success in a campaign that tied him down in a costly campaign in Massachusetts. That would keep one of the Democrats' more effective campaigners from lending much personal help to other liberal candidates next year.

Kennedy managers anticipate a bitter and probably well-financed conservative offensive, beginning in the Democratic primary next year and escalating in the fall.

So they're starting early, too. John Leslie, who has been a special assistant to Kennedy, will be managing the campaign. The Committee to Re-elect Sen. Kennedy filed with the Federal Election Commission on Feb. 9. Its headquarters has opened on Federal Street in Boston.

Kennedy is commuting to Massachusetts often these days. He is speaking out on national issues — on President Reagan's budget and tax programs, for example — but he is doing it almost entirely in his home state.

"He's working very hard up there," said spokesman Robert Shrum. "But that's not unusual. He is in what are fairly regular rhythms for him in an election campaign."

What is unusual is the head start on organization and fund raising. Leslie said that phase of the campaign was launched earlier than before, in part because of the looming conservative challenge. The New Right was a potent force against such liberal losers as Frank Church, George McGovern and Birch Bayh in the 1980 elections that put Republicans in control of the Senate.

Kennedy said long ago he would be running for re-election next year, and reaffirmed his plans after announcing Jan. 19 that he and his wife will seek a divorce.

He dismisses talk about another presidential bid in 1984 as premature. The 1982 election at home comes first.

Kennedy contends that the conservative tactics of 1980 won't work in Massachusetts. "The politics of negativism really won't have much of an appeal to Massachusetts voters," he said.

But he's not ignoring the political threat. He will launch Senate fund-raising

To the editor:
Down with high blood pressure!
In the United States, approximately 17 percent of all adults have high blood pressure (Eastern North Carolinians — 24.9 percent). Sodium intake is one of the factors known to affect blood pressure. Table salt contains two essential elements which the body needs: sodium and chloride. Of these two components, 40 percent is sodium.

There is a great need to decrease the amount of salt because sodium is present in many processed foods and beverages. Many antacids and other medication contain sodium, as well as toothpaste, chewing tobacco, snuff, mouthwash, bouillon cubes and some canned soups.

To avoid too much sodium:

- Learn to enjoy the unsalted flavor of food.
- Cook with only small amounts of added salt.
- Add little or no salt to food at the table.
- Limit intake of salty foods such as potato chips, sauerkraut, salted nuts, pickles, cured meats and prepared sauces.
- Read food labels carefully.

(From "Nutrition and Your Health" USDA and USHEW)
Remember, salt substitutes should not be used unless prescribed by a physician who has evaluated the patient's condition and the chemical composition of the salt substitute.

Vets Oppose Jobless Pay Plan

By W. DALE NELSON Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) — Veterans' organizations, among the biggest boosters for most of President Reagan's military policy, are lining up against his plan to deny unemployment benefits to servicemen who do not re-enlist.

The proposal, which the administration says would save $1 billion over six years, also has drawn fire from the AFL-CIO but has won the endorsement of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

State employment security officials are urging Congress to take a close look at the proposition and probably either reject it or soften its impact on the estimated 150,000 servicemen a year who decide against making the military a career.

The law now grants unemployment compensation to any person who has served at least a year in the military and has not been dishonorably discharged.

"At a time when we are trying to upgrade the military capacity of our all-volunteer service, and at a time when we are attempting to curb unnecessary government spending, there can be no justification for spending taxpayer dollars to encourage present military personnel to leave the armed services," Secretary of Labor Ray Donovan says.

Spokesmen for veterans' organizations, all of which have come out strongly for Reagan's proposed increases in defense spending, argue there is a lot of difference between quitting a job and deciding not to take on another hitch in the service.

"When I got out of the service, I don't know what I would have done if it had not been for unemployment compensation," says Phil Riggins, a Vietnam veteran and deputy director of legislative affairs for the American Legion.

Donald Schwab of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, testifying before a House Ways and Means subcommittee, said the proposal probably would not hurt servicemen with sought-after skills such as computer technology but would be devastating to parachute riggers, demolition experts and automatic riflemen whose specialties are less in demand in civilian life.

Steve Edmiston, an administrative assistant for the Disabled American Veterans, argued that military service, unlike most civilian jobs, is a contractual arrangement and a person deciding whether to re-enlist faces a different question than a civilian deciding whether to change jobs.

Bill Caldwell, a public affairs officer at the Pentagon, said the Defense Department has no official position on the proposal.

Bert Seidman, director of Social Security for the AFL-CIO, told the House Ways and Means Committee that the proposed change "significantly reduces the service member's freedom of choice in deciding whether or not to re-enlist."

"Those who choose not to re-enlist would have no protection while they seek attachment to the civilian labor force," Seidman said. "During periods of high unemployment and tight labor market conditions, these individuals would experience severe hardship while seeking work." Samuel E. Dyer, a vice president of Federated Stores in Cincinnati and a representative of the Chamber of Commerce, disagreed, saying: "Unemployment compensation was never intended for persons who leave their jobs voluntarily."

William L. Heartwell Jr., executive vice president of the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies, took a middle view, urging the House panel to "consider the implications" of the administration plan.

"Should it become clear that this proposal amounts to an arbitrary elimination of wage credits for a class of workers, the interstate conference would urge the subcommittee to recommend against this proposal," Heartwell said.

"If the intent of the proposal is to consider voluntarily leaving the military as voluntarily quitting employment," he added, "then some other considerations may be required to determine if there are any situations which should be considered as good cause for not re-enlisting."

Uncertain Impact Due Reduced Tobacco Sums

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Agriculture officials and lawmakers say it's hard to tell what will happen to tobacco farmers in the wake of President Reagan's proposed multi-million-dollar cuts in funds aiding leaf production and marketing.

Tobacco farmers will lose federally subsidized loans that cost taxpayers some $510 million during the past 50 years. They will lose direct funding for leaf inspection and grading, which cost the government $6.2 million in 1980 alone.

Since 1933, the Commodity Credit Corp. has paid $7.6 billion in interest on money it borrowed from the U.S. Treasury and loaned to farm commodity cooperatives at a lower rate. The cooperatives have paid the CCC $1.6 billion in interest for those loans, leaving an outstanding interest deficit of $6 billion. Of that deficit, tobacco's share is $510 million.

The cost of the federal tobacco program is hard to determine because it is scattered through the budgets of many agencies. Many observers were surprised last week when agriculture officials identified the loan subsidy program as one of the costs of the tobacco program.

It is just as hard to estimate the benefits of the tobacco program. Tobacco's high per-acre yield supports thousands of farming families who couldn't make it on less lucrative crops, and many tobacco supporters call their commodity a savior of the small farm.

"This serves as a kind of social welfare objective," said Jasper A. Womach, an agricultural policy analyst in the food and agriculture section of Congressional Research Service in Washington.

"Without the program, the tobacco productions would become concentrated on fewer, larger, more mechanized farms. If these small operators went out of business, what would the small farm operator and his family do, especially if unemployment rates are high?" Womach said.

Agriculture Secretary John Block still maintains support for the price-support system, which guarantees the nation's 276,000 tobacco farmers a minimum price for their leaf. But officials say a tradeoff probably was not involved.

The loss of federal money for grading and inspection was not "presented as a price we have to pay for (keeping) the price-support program," said Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., chairman of the House tobacco subcommittee.

"But if that were a clear swap, it would be a good one," he said in a telephone interview.

"I don't think it's a tradeoff," said a spokesman for the Senate Agriculture Committee, which Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., leads. "The tobacco program makes money for the government. It would be foolish to cut it off."

Since 1933, the federal government has sustained $227 million in tobacco program losses — $56.7 million in price-support losses and $220 million in an unsuccessful export program — in addition to the $510 million in interest subsidies.

Rabies Clinics

Each year the Pitt County Health Department, in cooperation with the veterinarians of the county, conduct vaccination clinics for dogs and cats at various sites throughout the county.

Pet owners are urged to take advantage of these clinics to provide a barrier against the transmission of rabies from wild animals, the most common reservoir for the dread viral infection, to humans through domesticated animals.

The vaccination clinics this year will be held Mar. 30 through Apr. 10.

Skunks, raccoons, foxes, and bats lead the list of warm-blooded animals known to carry this disease.

Once rabies symptoms appear in man or other animals, there is no known treatment and the outcome is almost always death.

Persons bitten or scratched by a rabid or suspected rabid animal must take a painful and expensive series of injections to build the body's defenses against further invasion of the virus.

A later article and ads will provide the times and places that the clinics will be held.

One Man Dies In Light Plane Crash

RAEFORD, N.C. (AP) — One man died and another was injured Sunday afternoon when their light airplane crashed near a Hoke County landing strip.

The names of the two men were withheld late Sunday. But officials said the victim was an Army captain from Kentucky who was stationed at Ft. Bragg.

The injured man, reportedly from Greensboro, was taken to Womack Army Hospital where he was admitted.

Team Seeking New Substitute

CHICAGO (AP) — A researcher will travel to South America next month to

A university research team received a $318,000 grant to efforts April 22 with dinners in Boston and elsewhere in Massachusetts. Leslie said the Kennedy organization is determined to take and hold the offensive in the coming campaign, starting now.

In the last campaign, he said, conservatives succeeded in forcing liberal Democrats to react to their charges, and put them on the defensive. Kennedy wants to avoid that.

Leslie said Kennedy anticipates a challenge in the Democratic primary from conservatives seeking to soften him up for the general election. So far there is no real indication of who will be running against him, then, or on the Republican ticket.

That's where the help-wanted ad comes in. In its political newsletter, the conservative Free Congress Foundation says the Northeastern Conservative Political Action Committee plans to take out advertisements this month looking for candidates.

"We want these ads to show concerned voters that we need a viable candidate to replace Kennedy and that we will begin our search early," the organization's executive director, Rick Reed, said.

But the newsletter said conservative groups will proceed gingerly, given the odds against a successful challenge to Kennedy. They have campaign money to spend, but not to squander. They want to see some polling numbers before deciding how much to invest.

Whether they put big money into Massachusetts or not, the Kennedy people figure he will be a prime target in national conservative fund-raising efforts. "It's a great direct mail device," Shrum said. "You can get a lot more money by saying it's to beat Kennedy than by saying help beat Senator X."

"He's the greatest fund-raising tool in the world for them," Leslie said. He said the question is how much of the money will be invested in the Massachusetts race, and how much will be used against other conservative targets who presumably would be more vulnerable.

Either way, there is likely to be considerably more campaign money arrayed against Kennedy than in the past, when his challengers have run cut-rate campaigns. Last time, his campaign budget was five times that of his opponent.

But the Kennedy organization is getting ready for that. Leslie said the 1982 campaign budget could be double that of 1976, when Kennedy spending totaled $896,000.

would go to the post office and after the stamp on the letter was canceled, you would pick up a letter from Pasadena. Someone in Burbank who was sending a check to someone in Maryland would pick up your letter and get it to your Aunt Flora.

"That sounds like a great idea," I said. "Through rain or sleet or dark of night the customer will get your mail to you. If that plan goes through, will you be able to lower the price of a postage stamp and eliminate the ZIP code?"

"No, we'll have to raise the postal rates to 20 cents, because we'll have to hire more people to see that the customer delivers the mail properly. Also, we have to keep the new ZIP code or our stamp-canceling machines won't work. The only advantage of the new system will be the customer will be involved with the mail service, and will understand how difficult it is to get a letter to where it's addressed."

"Will the customer also have to deliver junk mail?"

"Certainly not. That mail is much too valuable to leave in the hands of someone who is not trained in our business."

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST—Snow is expected in the period until Tuesday morning for the Northeast. Showers are forecast for the Southwest and snow flurries for the western Plains and adjacent Rockies. Cool weather is expected for northern states, mild temperatures for the southern tier. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press
A cold front moving through the state brought rain to North Carolina on Monday, and another cold front is poised to bring more wintry weather. During the night and early this morning scattered light rain spread into western sections of North Carolina. Skies were mostly cloudy over the piedmont and coastal plain. Just before sunrise the rain area had advanced eastward into the piedmont. Unfortunately, the rain was not widespread, so some locations did not receive precipitation. Temperatures during the early morning hours were much warmer than those recorded at the same time Sunday. A mild southwesterly wind flow held readings in the 40s and 50s. The light rain was triggered by a cold front moving through the state. The front will reach the coast later today, pushing the precipitation out to sea.

To our north, yet another cold front is moving southward across the midwest. As this leading edge of cold air reaches the east coast later today, it will encourage the development of a rather vigorous storm system off the Virginia capes. As a result, North Carolina will experience a strong northwest wind flow tonight. The developing storm will move away from our area but it will cause cold air to pour southward bringing us another brief taste of winter weather. Highs today will be in the 50s and low 60s except for 40s in the higher mountains. Tonight the mercury will dip into the teens in the northern mountains and 20s elsewhere. The strong northwest winds will make the air feel even colder. Some snow flurries are also possible in the northern mountains. Tomorrow skies will be mostly sunny except for partly cloudy conditions in the west. Winds will diminish gradually and temperatures should rise into the 50s and even near 60 in the southern portions of the state.

Farm Scene

By SAMUEL UZZELL
Agr. Ext. Agent

The improper disposal of pesticide containers is a needless problem in Pitt County. Throughout our woodlands and roadsides, trash of every description is tossed away heedlessly. All too often, empty pesticide containers end up in heaps at the woods' edge. This spoiling of our landscape is preventable.

Many of our farmers have a feeling of stewardship to the land. They want to return their land to following generations of farmers in better shape than it was originally found. Time-honored practices such as leaving areas for wildlife, cover cropping and contour plowing have demonstrated much worth. Newer practices such as minimum or no-till planting are also soil and water conservation practices that have great merit. Another area of conservation that needs a closer look is the disposal of pesticide containers properly.

Each year in Pitt County, thousands of agricultural chemicals containers are left empty. Some of the containers can be safely disposed of in landfills. Other paper containers can be burned in small piles. It is wise to stay well out of the smoke where insecticide and nematicide bags are being burned. Other metal containers may even be returned for a premium or recycled and reconditioned.

Most of the disposal problems occur with metal containers. These are the items that are found along roadsides or along borders of fields. They may leak their contents into the area for a period of time. They also may fill with rain water and form an area for mosquitos to breed. They also provide shelter for rodents and detract from the aesthetic beauty that hunters value so highly.

We are fortunate in Pitt County to have a system of solid waste disposal sites that are located throughout the county. Pesticide containers can be placed in these if the following conditions are met. Where possible, rinse a container at least three times to remove as much of the chemical as possible and to get as much pesticide out of the container so that it will not take up space or collect water. Metal containers treated this way can be placed in the solid waste container sites. It is important that the containers are crushed so as not to take up too much room. This year, hopefully, more users of agricultural chemicals will use and dispose of their pesticides and pesticide containers properly. Ask your ag-chemicals dealer what, if any, containers can be returned or recycled. A little attention to proper disposal will prevent many negative effects and adverse off-target problems. Good management of the land is well worth the effort.

NOTICE OF HEARING

ON IMPLEMENTATION OF
FEDERAL ENERGY REGULATORY COMMISSION ORDER No. 69
COGENERATION AND SMALL
POWER PRODUCTION

Notice is hereby given that Greenville Utilities Commission will conduct a public hearing and will receive oral and written comments regarding the implementation of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) Order No. 69, Cogeneration and Small Power Production, and the Greenville Utilities Commission's proposal to request certain waivers from these regulations.

This activity arises as a result of U.S. Congressional action in 1978 which enacted a law entitled "Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978" (PURPA). The purpose of this law is to, among other things, encourage conservation through the use of cogeneration and small power production. Cogeneration is when nonrenewable fossil fuels are used for more than one purpose. An example of this is when oil is used to generate electricity and then the wasted heat is used in a district heating system. Small power production, on the other hand, is when the primary fuel for the generation of electricity is renewable. Examples of this are wind, solar, and biomass. PURPA gave FERC the responsibility to carry out the law. To do this, FERC has adopted some regulations. Specifically, FERC Order No. 69 requires ALL utilities, no matter how large or small, to do certain things to ensure that cogeneration and small power production are encouraged. One of the things that Greenville Utilities Commission must do is to interconnect with and buy power from cogenerators and small power producers. This hearing is established for the purpose of considering these rules and the related obligations.

Greenville Utilities Commission encourages the public to attend this meeting and provide their input. Any person, group, or governmental entity which desires to make its comments, questions, and/or recommendations in writing may do so either at the meeting or by writing to: Charles O'H. Horne, Jr., P.O. Box 1847, Greenville, North Carolina 27834. Any oral presentations will be limited to ten (10) minutes. Written comments must be received at the office of the Director of Utilities, Greenville Utilities Commission, 200 West Fifth Street, Greenville, North Carolina 27834, by March 19, 1981.

The public hearing will be held on March 24, 1981 at 7:00 P.M., in the Board Room of the Greenville Utilities Commission Building. Any questions prior to the meeting concerning the nature of the proposed rules or requests a copy of the proposed rules should be directed to Charles O'H. Horne, Jr. at the address given above or by calling 752-7166.

Wood Permits Have Expired

Weyerhaeuser Co. reported that firewood permits which allow employees and members of the general public to obtain salvage wood from company-owned timberlands have expired. Bill Ray, land and timber manager for the North Carolina region, noting the permits expired on March 15, said no permits will be issued until the wildfire season has ended. Ray said, "This is standard practice for us. We are entering a crucial season for wild forest fires which, traditionally, begins around this time of the year." He said the company asks for the public's assistance in controlling forest fires by observing the fire season and not attempting to cut firewood until after the wildfire season has ended, usually around June 1. Ray said Weyerhaeuser also encourages people to report wildfires to the company. The land and timber offices can be reached in New Bern at 633-7486 or Plymouth at 733-8916.

Medical Care Rebates Studied

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Reagan administration is thinking about giving rebates to people eligible for Medicare who sign up with private insurers instead. Interviewed on the ABC-TV program "Issues and Answers," Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker said Sunday, "We're going to consider giving people rebates if they buy the less expensive plan and begin to insure themselves, like an automobile—$50 deductible, $100 deductible. If they begin to take some of the burden themselves, we'll give them some kind of rebate" of the money they already have paid into the Medicare trust fund. The administration plans to introduce a new plan to bring more competition to health care insurance because "we believe that competition will keep costs down far better than federal controls and federal regulations," Schweiker said.

Bureaucrats Seek Sabotage Revenue

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer
LONDON (AP) — British civil servants, fighting a guerrilla war for higher wages, are trying to hit Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government where it hurts by cutting off more than $2 billion a week in tax revenues.
Civil service union leaders said 2,300 key personnel were ordered to shut down income tax computers in England and Scotland today to block the equivalent of an estimated $1.32 billion from flowing into the treasury.
In addition, they ordered 260 workers at the Southend computer center east of London to quit work, halting collection of $770 million a week in VAT, or value added taxes, an indirect sales levy.
Walkouts at the Southend facility last week cost the government some $550 million in uncollected taxes.

"The next two weeks will be very important to see whether the government decides to start negotiations after its cash flow has been affected," said William Kendal, secretary-general of the Council of Civil Service Unions, an alliance of nine civil service unions, representing 530,000 civil servants.
Government officials conceded that a significant shortfall in government revenue could have serious repercussions for the Thatcher government which last week imposed stiff taxes to beef up income.
The Civil Service Council, whose members range from tea ladies to departmental heads, launched their campaign of no-warning "lightning" strikes last Monday with a one-day national stoppage.

They want a 15 percent pay hike. But the Thatcher government, waging an inflation-fighting tight-money campaign, refused to go above 7 percent.
Janitors and other low-echelon personnel are paid the equivalent of about $9,900 a year, while top-level departmental chiefs earn about $44,000 a year.
Despite a week of widespread disruptions, there was no sign of the government backing down, and Kendal said there "isn't a cat in hell's chance" of the strikers giving up.

Strike organizers said the unions now plan to extend their action into other government operations, warning that Customs and Excise and Social Security departments will be hit this week. Law courts also were expected to be struck.

Seethe Over Ferry Policy For Ocracoke

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Ocracoke residents say they are furious they were not consulted about the state's decision to double ferry fares and eliminate reservations on runs to the island, saying the move will hurt livelihoods and disrupt lives.
The state Board of Transportation took the move Friday to avoid a shortfall in ferry funding for the current fiscal year.
"Ocracoke is an island totally dependent on the ferry system, and we just felt that it was a little unusual that something affecting our lives was not discussed with us," said Foy J. Shaw, an Ocracoke restaurateur and innkeeper.
"We feel like our representatives didn't represent us on this situation," said storeowner David B. Spenseny. "No one in Ocracoke knew about this meeting in Raleigh until it came out in the paper."
"It would be sort of like heading to Raleigh and not having a hotel reservation," he said. "It's really hurting the people that live here."
Doubling fares, ending reservations and abolishing some runs on other state ferries was designed to avoid a deficit for the current fiscal year.
But the principle objection of the islanders is the elimination of the reservation system.
"The whole stinking island is going to be affected," said Jack C. Willis, owner of a general store and a member of the Hyde County Board of Education. "People are mad because they can't get on the boat after they get here."
"And getting trunks in with supplies — that costs Ocracoke. If they have to tie up a truck all day — my goodness — the island (businesses) will have to pay that driver and the company."
Ernest H. Cutler, principal of Ocracoke School also voiced an objection. "I've got a group of kids going to Wilmington in May," he said. "They would leave on Thursday and get back Friday afternoon. You couldn't do that with an activities bus not knowing if you could make the ferry without a reservation. They're have to make another trip 300 miles by Manteo."
But Eastern state legislators urged the board to cut the reservation system. They said tourists who couldn't get reservations avoided Ocracoke and hurt its tourist business.
James A. Henning, district ranger with the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, said he sympathizes with the citizens. "But there's a good argument," he said. "They had more people riding the ferry before the reservation system."
Hyde County commissioner Irving S. Garrish of Ocracoke said the board's decision could lead to medical problems.
"We are very upset," he said. "The ferry's reservation system has assured us a way to get to doctors in Morehead City, New Bern, Beaufort. If you can't make a reservation on the ferry, you can't bet to the doctor and get back the same day."
Fares for passenger cars will rise from $5 to $10. Ocracoke residents said there are other ways, such as placing tolls on bridges and roads throughout the state, to keep the Highway Fund in balance.

TOUR OF HERITAGE HOMES

PRESENTED BY THE GREENVILLE AREA PRESERVATION ASSOCIATION

Saturday, April 4
10:00 A.M.-6:00 P.M.
TICKETS $5.00

THE J.N. WILLIAMS HOUSE, 422 W. Fifth St. Careful restoration work will soon begin by the present owner, Mrs. Lily Richardson. This gracious elegant interior offers a double 19th century staircase in the entrance hallway, imported chandeliers, handpainted cupids on the music room ceiling and nine interesting fireplaces in the 12 room house. Completed about 1908 by G.W. Baker and his wife, Lina Sheppard, this house was later sold to J.N. Williams in 1944, who owned the estate along with his wife, Eulalie W., and heirs until Dec. 16, 1980.

THE E.B. FICKLEN HOUSE, 508 W. Fifth St. Ficklen was a tobaccoist who completed his Victorian mansion around 1899 for his bride Elmira (Myra) Skinner of Greenville. The foyer fireplace is a marvel of decoration with its columns, moldings and tiles exhibiting dragons and scrolls. The curved porch railings are a monument to their carpenter. Arched windows, small and large, punctuate the facade of the house and upstairs balconies add dimension. Few changes have been made to the interior and is now considered the oldest remaining house between Evans and Elizabeth Streets.

The Ficklen House and the Williams House are 2 of 14 homes on the Heritage Tour.

Robbery Investigated

An early morning robbery today at Hobo's Fried Chicken on N. Memorial Drive is under investigation by the Pitt County Sheriff's Department.

A spokesman for the firm told deputies that some 40 chickens, an adding machine, and a cassette player, valued at approximately $300, were taken in the robbery, according to Sheriff Ralph Tyson.

Sheriff Tyson noted two trays containing some 30 chickens were recovered near the rear door of the restaurant. He added that bloodhounds were called in to search the area.

The sheriff said his department was notified at 1:48 a.m. by someone in a neighboring store that a robbery was in progress at Hobo's.

UAB Edges Wildcats, 69-62; Bagley Leads BC Past Deacs

By KEN RAPPOPORT AP Sports Writer

Knock, knock. Who's there? Alabama-Birmingham. Alabama who? Well, it may sound funny, but there are Gene Bartow's Blazers knocking on the door of the Midwest regional championships in the NCAA basketball tournament.

How they got there is no laughing matter to Kentucky, however. The nation's eighth-ranked team was beaten by the UAB upstarts 69-62 Sunday in Tuscaloosa, Ala., as upsets continued to underscore this year's crazy-quilt tournament.

"Without question," said Bartow, "it was the biggest win in UAB history. It may be the biggest win in Gene Bartow history."

Bartow could become the first coach to lead three different schools to the Final Four. Previously, he had brought Memphis State and UCLA to that level.

Third-ranked Arizona State, No. 11 Wake Forest and No. 13 Iowa also were upset in Sunday's second round. That continued a dark trend for Top Twenty teams from Saturday when No. 1 DePaul, No. 2 Oregon State, No. 10 UCLA and No. 12 Louisville all went down.

Glenn Marcus converted 12 free throws in the final 5 1/2 minutes to pace UAB's conquest of Kentucky. The Blazers, playing in only the school's third year of varsity basketball competition, blew a seven-point lead midway through the second half before rallying to beat one of the country's most honored teams.

"We couldn't get the ball inside and couldn't hit from outside," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall. "That's a tough spot to be in. They played a tough, inspired game. They're a good ballclub."

The victory sent the Blazers against Indiana in Bloomington, Ind., in Friday night's Midwest semifinals. Boston College will meet St. Joseph's (Pa.) in the other Midwest game. The Eagles got there with a 67-64 conquest of Wake Forest Sunday, a result that did no harm to the eastern basketball image.

"We've been kicked around in the East a little bit," said Boston College Coach Tom Davis. "Folks say we don't play good basketball, but I'd have to disagree..."

Leading the way for the Big East team was John Bagley, who scored 35 points, including four big ones in the final minute.

"We got impatient," said Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy, whose team was forced into 22 turnovers by the BC press. "We made some mental errors that hurt us in crucial parts of the game."

Arizona State was upset 88-71 by Kansas and Iowa lost to Wichita State 60-56 in the Midwest regionals at Wichita, Kan. Tony Guy scored 36 points to lead the Jayhawks' surprisingly easy victory over the Sun Devils.

"The problem was we did nothing on the offensive boards," said Arizona State Coach Ned Wulk. "Guy just murdered us early and played an outstanding game. They were definitely more up for it than we were. We seemed to get down on ourselves."

Virginia Marches On Virginia cheerleaders hold up a sign that gives their opinion of who's #1 in the nation following the Arizona State thus became the third and last Pac-10 team to be knocked out of the tourney, with the earlier exits of Oregon State and UCLA.

In the other Midwest game Sunday, Wichita State beat Iowa with the help of a technical foul call on Hawkeye Coach Lute Olson near the end. The Shockers were awarded two foul shots after Olson inadvertently called a timeout when his team had none left, and Randy Smithson converted them for Wichita State with five seconds remaining.

"We had a communications breakdown on the staff," said Olson in explaining the mistake. "I was told we had one timeout remaining."

Smithson said he was aware that the Hawkeyes were out of timeouts at that point of the game and when he heard guard Bob Hansen call one, "I was elated."

Wichita State and Kansas will play each other in the Midwest semifinals Friday night at New Orleans. In the other game, Louisiana State will meet Arkansas.

Sunday's other second-round results went according to form, although fifth-ranked Virginia and No. 15 Tennessee both had tough times with their opponents in the East Regionals at Charlotte, N.C. The Cavaliers struggled past Villanova 54-50 behind Ralph Sampson's 17 points while Tennessee edged Virginia Commonwealth 58-56 on Dale Ellis' medium-range jumper with two seconds left in overtime.

The Cavaliers came back from a five-point deficit in the second half and Virginia Coach Terry Holland said the deficit was "the best thing for the team" because it fired up his players.

"It was a hard-fought win for us and we were a little tentative in the first half," said Holland. "In the second half we got the good shots early but the best thing for the team was that we missed them, got five points behind, then threw caution to the wind and played like the devil to stay in the game."

VCU Coach J.D. Barnett thought his unheralded team stood up well under playoff pressure.

"I thought we took it pretty well for most of the ballgame — 58-56 is not much of a difference, just a little crack between who wins and who loses," noted Barnett.

The results sent the winners to a meeting in Thursday night's East semifinals at Atlanta. In the other game, Brigham Young will play Notre Dame.

James Worthy scored 21 points and Sam Perkins had 19 as sixth-ranked North Carolina coasted past Pitt 74-57 in the West Regionals in El Paso, Texas.

Wilson's Four Free Throws Lift Cavaliers By Villanova

By TOM FOREMAN Jr. Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — In the spirit of the wild weekend experienced by several teams in the NCAA basketball championships, both Virginia and Tennessee went down to the wire Sunday before capturing the second round victories in the East Regional in Charlotte.

Othell Wilson, a late replacement in the Cavalier starting lineup, and Lee Raker, the senior forward whom Wilson replaced, sank four free throws in the final 25 seconds of play to give Virginia a 54-50 victory over Villanova in the first game of the doubleheader.

In the nightcap, Tennessee and Virginia Commonwealth took their skirmish into an extra period before Dale Ellis' jumper with two seconds left boosted the Volunteers to a 58-56 victory over the Rams.

Villanova took a 27-24 lead into the lockerroom at the half. Wildcat coach Rollie Massimino said before the contest that he wouldn't plan anything special for Virginia center Ralph Sampson. However, the zone defense his team implemented allowed big men Alex Bradley and John Pinone to shut off the base line to Sampson.

Nonetheless, Sampson's 10 points in the first half kept Virginia in the game.

Visions of last-minute heroics became clear when Virginia crept back into the contest. Finally, at the 4:14 mark, Jeff Lamp put the Cavaliers ahead to stay with a pair of free throws. Wilson's and Raker's tosses iced the victory.

Raker is suffering from calcium deposits within a charley horse on his right leg, but he managed Sunday to log 21 minutes of playing time. Wilson was runner-up in the balloting for Atlantic Coast Conference rookie of the year.

Virginia coach Terry Holland said his team took too cautious an approach in the opening period and needed a great effort in the final minutes of play to earn a trip to Atlanta.

"We were just a little tentative in the first half, maybe hurried ourselves a little."

Pirates Drop Two, Win One

By WOODY PEELE Reflector Sports Editor

Sunday was a long day for East Carolina's baseball team, and it brought some good news and some bad.

The good news was that in the first game of a double header, the Pirates romped to a 14-5 victory over the University of Virginia.

The bad news was that the Pirates dropped their suspended game with Virginia, 6-5, finishing the last inning of that contest before starting the doubleheader. Then, the Pirates dropped the second game of that twin bill, falling to Connecticut, 3-1.

The net result of the three days of play was that each team came away with 2-2 records for the series. East Carolina, overall, climbs to 5-2, Virginia is now 3-2, and Connecticut is 2-2.

"I really thought that we played our best game against Connecticut (in the second game)," Coach Hal Baird of East Carolina said. "We played with a vengeance against Virginia. We wanted that one badly. I kind of expected a let-down against Connecticut, but we really didn't have one. (Kenny) Brown just threw a fine game for them."

Brown, in going the full nine, gave up only four hits, and two of those came in the ninth. The Pirates didn't leave a baserunner until the sixth, although two had reached on hits earlier. One went down in a double play and the other trying to stretch a double into a triple.

"That was about the best game anyone's pitched against us in a long time," Baird said. "Connecticut really has a good club."

While Baird said that a win would have helped, going into the Clemson series starting Wednesday, he was happy with the team's play. "We're getting better and we should be a good ball club before it's all over."

Baird also had praise for pitcher Kirk Parsons, who came on in relief of starter Robbie Harper in the Connecticut game. He allowed only one hit in the final four and a third inning. "He's working his way up in the rotation. We just have to find some more help. He's 145-pounds of guts, and really goes after 'em."

While the Bucs couldn't put the hits together against Connecticut, they surely did against Virginia, banging out 17. Mike Sorrell led the way with four, while Charlie Smith had three. John Hallow, Todd Evans, Todd Hendley and Fran Fitzgerald each added a pair.

The whole show started Saturday afternoon, when the Bucs opened against Virginia. The Cavs pushed over a run in the first to take the lead, as they handed Bill Wilder his first loss of the year. However, only one of the six runs off him was earned.

Mark Meleski singled and moved up when Jay West reached on an error. He scored on Don Meeks' single.

A second Cavalier run crossed in the second. Glenn Harris reached on a bunt single and moved to third when Mel Barbee doubled. An error on the relay let Harris scamper home.

East Carolina then came back in the bottom of the inning to tie it up. Hendley walked and Mike Sage cracked a homer to left to knot it at 2-2.

The Pirates moved ahead with one in the fourth. Hendley reached on an error and Sage reached on an infield single off the pitcher's glove. Both were sacrificed up, and a passed ball scored Hendley.

Virginia retied it in the sixth. Joe Lange walked and Harris singled. A hit by Anthony Latham brought Lange over to make it 3-3.

Then, in the seventh, Virginia pushed over three to sew it up. With one down, West reached on an error and scored on a triple by George Priftis. With two away, Lange reached on an error, letting Priftis score. Harris then doubled, scoring Lange for a 6-3 lead.

The Pirates rallied for two in the bottom of the inning. Sorrell walked and was safe on an error at second on Hallow's infield bouncer. Evans followed with a single to score Sorrell, and after Hendley walked, Sage hit a sacrifice fly scoring Hallow.

But the rally died there, and the Bucs never got another runner on base.

"The game didn't end without some more excitement, however. In the eighth, Meleski was thrown out at the plate for the third out of the inning, as umpire Claude Kennedy claimed he slide by, rather than over, the plate, allowing Fitzgerald to make a late tag. By the time the argument was over, Meleski, first baseman Harris, and coach Dennis Womeck were all ejected.

After the Pirates batted in the eighth, the game was suspended because of darkness, and was finished off first thing Sunday morning, with neither team scoring in that final inning.

East Carolina jumped into a 5-0 lead in the second inning of the regular game with Virginia. Hendley walked and Fitzgerald reached on a bounce to third that was late after the fielder first considered going to second. Smith walked, loading them up for Charlie Waynick, who singled in Hendley. Kelly Robinette reached on a fielder's choice, getting the runner at the plate, and Sorrell singled in Smith. An error on the play let Waynick score. Hallow singled in Robinette, and Sorrell scored on a double steal. Evans then singled in Hallow.

Virginia rallied for four in the fourth. West walked and Prittis did too. Meeks singled in West and Lange singled to score Prittis. A hit by Harris brought in Meeks. After Harris went out on a fielder's choice as Latham reached, Steve Heon walked, and Meleski singled to score Lange with the final run of the inning.

East Carolina got a couple more runs in the fifth. Smith doubled and scored when Robinette reached on an error. Robinette stole up, then scored when Sorrell singled.

Virginia's final run of the day came in the sixth, as Meleski slapped a homer to right, cutting the lead to 8-5.

The Pirates got two more in the bottom of the sixth. Hendley doubled and Mark Shank walked. Fitzgerald also walked, and a single by Smith brought in both Hendley and Shank.

The seventh saw three more score. Robinette singled and Sorrell walked. Evans singled to drive in Robinette, and Hendley reached on an error, allowing Sorrell to score. After Shank reached on a fielder's choice, Fitzgerald reached on an infield hit, scoring Evans.

The final run came in the eighth. Sorrell doubled, advanced to third when Evans bounded to the infield, and scored on an error on the play.

Rick Ramey got the victory, his second of the year.

Connecticut got single runs in the second, third and fourth to account for all of the Huskie scoring.

In the second, Kevin Trahan led off with a double and scored on Bill Smith's single.

The third saw Mike Johnson reached on an error, advance on an out, and score on Doug Elliott's hit.

Tom Capalbo walked to open the fourth, was sacrificed up and scored on John Gallic's hit.

East Carolina held in check most of the way, finally got a run in the ninth, after a double play took them out of a chance in the eighth.

Mike Wells led off the ninth with a single and Sorrell followed with a hit. Hallow reached on an error, loading the bases, and Evans grounded to the infield, scoring Wells.

A double play, the third of the game for the Huskies, ended it, however.

Yarborough Captures Coca-Cola

HAMPTON, Ga. (AP) — "Atlanta has been good to me," Cale Yarborough said Sunday after winning for the sixth time at Atlanta International Raceway in the Coca-Cola 500 NAS-CAR Grand National stock car race.

Yarborough, the 40-year-old superstar from Timmonsville, S.C., won by 33.2 seconds over Harry Gant, averaging 133.629 mph in his Buick Regal over the 328 laps of the 1.522-mile oval.

The victory was No. 70 in Yarborough's career and the $28,950 check boosted his earnings to more than $3.4 million, second on the money list to Richard Petty's $4.1 million.

It also was Yarborough's fifth victory in this race. He won here in 1967, 1968, 1969 and 1974, and he won last November's Journal 500.

"We won't win them all here, but we hope to get our share of them," he said after equalling Petty's record of six victories on the track.

For Gant, it was another frustrating day, despite earning $32,750, including the $10,000 prize for leading 90 laps in his Buick. He was the only driver on the lead lap when Yarborough took the checkered flag.

It was the fourth runner-up finish for Gant, who was second three times in 1980 but still is seeking his first Grand National victory.

Yarborough led for 75 laps — most of them coming at the end when he took the front spot for good with 46 laps remaining.

The two drivers swapped the lead three times in the final stages and were only seconds apart until the 41-year-old Gant had to make a pit stop for a tire change.

Defending champion Dale Earnhardt was third in a Pontiac Grand Prix, followed by Bobby Allison, in a Pontiac LeMans and Benny Parsons in a Ford. Pole sitter Terry Labonte's Buick had rear suspension problems early. He was never a factor and finished 19th.

Favorites Richard Petty and Darrell Waltrip both retired with blown engines in their Buicks before the halfway mark. Each had led the race for 33 laps. Also dropping out with blown engines were veterans David Pearson in a Chevrolet and Buddy Baker in an Oldsmobile.

Neil Bonnett, who was making a strong bid for the victory and led for 84 laps, was forced to the sidelines when his Ford overheated and blew a water pump 234 laps into the race.

"The first part of the race, the car was a little loose, but we kept working on it until it was right," said Yarborough, who qualified in the 17th position. "After that it was pretty much our ball game."

Sunday's race was the first run under new rules set by NASCAR limiting the size of the rear spoiler on all cars.

Allison, who was not allowed to qualify during the first two days when NASCAR officials would not permit him to run his sloped-rear window Pontiac with a 3½-inch spoiler, finally gave in and qualified Saturday with the 2½-inch spoiler.

Allison started in the 30th spot and gradually moved up all day to finish fourth, a little more than one lap behind the leaders.

Floyd Savors Doral Victory

MIAMI (AP) — Although there's the possibility of a huge, quarter-million dollar prize awaiting him at the Tournament Players Championship, Ray Floyd didn't even want to think about it.

"I just want to cherish this for a while, a day or so, before I start thinking about that," an emotionally drained Floyd said after his dramatic victory Sunday in the Doral-Eastern Open golf tournament.

"It was very exciting, very rewarding.

"But I'm just drained. That was 5½ hours of intense pressure.

"It was match play all day (against his playing partner David Graham) but in addition to that, every time I looked at a leaderboard there were six other guys getting close.

"But that's what it's all about. The guys who win, the guys who can win, can pull off the shot they need in those conditions."

And Floyd, 38, in his 19th year of PGA Tour activity, pulled off just enough of them to acquire his 13th victory in a successful defense of the title he won a year ago on the 7,065 yard Blue Monster course at the Doral Country Club, just a few miles from his home.

"It's very important to come back and win again, particularly when you're playing at home," he said.

He achieved the repeat victory with a 4-under-par 68 that gave him a 273 total, 15 strokes under par. He led or shared the lead at all the 18-hole breaks, but he trailed Graham at one point on the final round and was pressured by Gil Morgan, Tom Kite, Leonard Thompson and Keith Fergus.

The triumph was worth $45,000 from the total purse of $250,000 and made Floyd eligible for a $250,000 bonus prize if he's able to win this week's Tournament Players Championship.

Graham, a former PGA champion and winner at Phoenix earlier this season, tied with Fergus for second at 274. Each had a closing 67 in the warm, sunny weather.

Kite was next at 275 after a 67, with Thompson and Morgan tied at 276, only three back.

Thompson had a closing 69, Morgan 70.

Jack Nicklaus, who lost to Floyd in a playoff here a year ago, failed to make the cut for the last two rounds this year.

Floyd's victory also negated the opportunity for anyone to claim the $500,000 bonus prize put up by the sponsors of Inverrary. Doral and the Tournament Players Championship for any man able to sweep all three titles. Kite won at Inverrary and could have claimed $250,000 with a victory here, a bonus that goes to a player winning two of the three titles in succession. Floyd now has a chance at that.

"I played well with a 67," Kite said. "I gave it a good run. I hit a lot of good shots but I came up empty this week."

Playing well in front of the other leaders, Kite simply ran out of holes. He parred the last seven holes, grazing the cup on birdie putts on the 15th, 16th and 17th.

Morgan, Thompson and Fergus all faded at one time or another until only Graham was left to challenge.

Duke Faces Alabama Tonight Michigan Wallops Toledo In NIT

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Michigan Coach Bill Frieder is looking ahead in the National Invitation Tournament, but not too far.

"We've got a good enough club to win, but in no way am I saying we are favored," Frieder said following his Wolverines 80-68 triumph Sunday night over Toledo in the NIT's second round.

"There are a lot of great clubs including the other Big Ten teams (Minnesota and Purdue) and Syracuse and Kansas," he added.

"Once you get to the final eight, any team can win it."

Toledo jumped to a 27-20 lead behind Harvey Knuckles, who scored 17 of his 27 game-high points in the first half. But the Wolverines were able to re-group in time to knot the contest 40-40 at the intermission.

Michigan and Toledo scored just one basket during the first two minutes of the second half before the Wolverines broke it open, outscoring the Rockets 17-4 during a six-minute span, to go ahead 59-46. The Rockets never came closer than 10 points during the final five minutes.

Mike McGee, who was held to just seven points in the first half, led the Wolverines with 25 points while Johnny Johnson added 22. Adamek had 19 for Toledo, which finished its season at 21-10.

Frieder, the first-year coach, said he believes defense was the key to Michigan's turnaround and eventual victory.

"We played pretty well, especially in the second half when our defense picked up and we continued to play well offensively," Frieder said.

2 Gymnasts Qualify For State

WINSTON-SALEM — Judy Benson and Carmela Weber both qualified for the state gymnastics meet this past weekend at the Salem Gym Center.

Benson finished seventh all-around with a score of 59.35 and Weber had an all-around total of 58.25 as both qualified for the state meet set for April 3-4 in Carmichael Auditorium. The qualifying score for the state meet is 56.0.

Competing in the class 2 division, which includes both compulsory and optional exercises, Benson was fourth on the floor exercise and balance beam. She had an 8.55 compulsory score and 8.0 optional score on the floor exercise and an 8.45 and 6.95 on the balance beam.

Weber was fifth on the balance beam with an 8.45 and 6.6. Jenny Johnsrude, who has already qualified for the state meet, was fifth in both the optional vault and floor exercises with scores of 8.0 and 7.4. All three girls competed in the 15-and-over age group.

Christy Garrison, in the 9-11 age group, was second on the floor exercise with an 8.0 and 8.0.

Reaching For A Foul

Cavs Edge...

Holland said. "We knew in the second half if we had to hold the ball for two minutes and make Villanova come out and foul us... then that's what we were going to do."
Meanwhile, Massamino said his team couldn't afford to be in awe of Sampson, but things didn't go according to plans.
"I thought if we controlled Lamp and controlled the big guy, eventually everything else would fit into place. Obviously, it didn't," Massamino said.

Tennessee was in the driver's seat with a 12-point lead early in the second half with VCU. But the Rams, who squandered a big lead against Long Island last Friday before winning, finally caught the Volunteers on a Danny Kottak jumper with 2:24 left in regulation.

VCU had a chance to win the game within the regular 40 minutes, but Greg McCray was called for traveling and Tennessee had its last chance.

That last chance fell in the hands of Steve Ray, who had missed several games due to colitis. Ray fired up a baseline jumper, which was partially deflected. Tennessee couldn't pull the trigger again, and the extra period was on.

Although half the overtime expired before VCU committed a turnover that gave the Volunteers a chance to win, Ram coach J.D. Barnett said he wasn't waiting for a last shot.

"We were running the motion, trying to sneak something, trying to get an easy shot off the pressure," Barnett said. "We were trying to keep it as spread as possible."

However, the last shot never came as Kottak stepped on the sideline in front of his own bench with 2:25 left.

Then it was Tennessee's turn to play the waiting game. The Volunteers allowed two minutes to elapse before calling a time out to set up a play.

The play was designed for Howard Wood, who scored 12 of his 18 points in the second half. But Wood never got to shoot, leaving the responsibility to Ellis.

With the hand of the VCU's Kenny Stancell in his face, Ellis swished the jumper and Tennessee held the victory party.

"It's a great feeling to win a game like this," Ellis said. "I was glad I was able to shoot it and make it."

Ellis led the Tennessee attack with 22 points.

UVA's Holland Voted ACC Coach Of The Year

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Terry Holland, who coached the Virginia Cavaliers to a first-place finish in the regular-season standings in the Atlantic Coast Conference, has been named Atlantic Coast Conference coach of the year.

In the closest vote in the history of the award, Holland finished four votes ahead of Carl Tacy of Wake Forest and six votes ahead of North Carolina's Dean Smith.

Holland will receive the annual Gerry Gerard Award given by the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association. He was the choice of 32 of the 92 voters.

Voters said that Tacy had the most improved team in the conference and that Smith's team won the league championship in the ACC tournament.

Driesell, now head coach at Maryland.

Holland became an assistant to Driesell and took over at Davidson in 1970, when Driesell left. The first four of Holland's five teams won conference titles.

He has won 222 games and lost 116 in his 12 years as a head coach.

Before the ACC tournament, Virginia lost only one conference game. That defeat came at the hands of Wake Forest, three days after the Cavaliers' loss to Notre Dame.

In his first three seasons as a head coach, Holland was voted coach of the year in the Southern Conference while he was at Davidson. Holland, a Clinton native, played at Davidson for coach Lefty

"We made a couple of runs in the second half, but we couldn't seem to get anything to go," said Pitt Coach Roy Chipman. "Maybe we were trying too hard."

Chipman said the officiating was "closer than...during the regular season" and it hurt his team "because it made us play more passive than we normally are."

Danny Vranes scored 27 points as Utah overwhelmed Northeastern. The Utes took control of the game after the first six minutes and never trailed, building their margin steadily on baskets by Vranes and Tom Chambers, who added 21 points.

"When we came out with a 15-point lead in the second half," said Utah Coach Jerry Pimm, "we as much as told them there would be no comebacks."

Northeastern Coach Jim Calhoun: "We were in a downhill tumble (at the start of the second half) and everything fell apart. We played one of the poorest games we ever played, but Utah forced us to play that way."

Utah and North Carolina will play one of the games in the West semifinals at Salt Lake City Thursday night, while Kansas State will face Illinois in the other.

Among Saturday's games, DePaul's 49-48 knockout by St. Joseph's in the Midwest Regionals was clearly the most surprising. To many observers, the Blue Demons were the odds-on favorites to win the tournament. And the defeat by the Hawks so upset Ray Meyer's team that the players were unavailable for comment after the game, skipping town quickly in an embarrassed retreat back to Chicago.

Oregon State, another solid tourney favorite, went down to Kansas State 50-48 in the West Regionals at Los Angeles. UCLA, the NCAA finalist last year against Louisville's national champions, was routed 78-55 by 16th-ranked Brigham Young in an East game at Providence, R.I. The 12th-ranked Cardinals, one of the hottest teams in the country, lost a 74-73 sizzler on a last-second miracle shot by Arkansas' U.S. Reed in the Midwest at Austin, Texas.

ECU Golfers Finish 11th

DURHAM — East Carolina's golf team shot a final day 397 for three-day total of 1,181 to end up tied for 11th with Wake Forest in the eighth annual Iron Duke Classic golf tournament which finished up Sunday.

The Pirates finished far behind N.C. State, which won the 22-team tournament with a score of 1,122. Clemson was second with a 1,129 and Duke tied at 1,131.

Clemson's Larry Penley won individual honors by defeating Charlie Bolling on the first hole of a playoff. Both had ended regulation play tied at two-over-par 215.

Three players — Illard Fruit of Clemson and Butch Monteith and Eric Moehling of N.C. State — finished tied for third at 221.

ECU's top finisher was Steve Jones, who shot a 228, including a final day 76. Don Gafner, who shot a 75 Sunday, finished with a 229.

Carl Beaman, Mike Moye and Mike Helms all shot 82s

the tournament will feature the "who's who in golf."

Authorities Dispute Ways To Assure Oregon Inlet's Safety

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — While federal and state officials argue about how to make the Oregon Inlet safer to navigate, the success of the $7.6-million Wanchese Industrial Seafood Park depends on solving the dangerous problem of shifting sands in the inlet.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers wants to build huge jetties flanking the inlet. But North Carolina scientists say that plan would not work and would cost too much.

The fish-processing complex, located on the Pamlico Sound about 12 miles from Oregon Inlet, will hold opening ceremonies March 23.

but officials say fishing trawlers may refuse to bring cargos through the treacherous channel.

The corps' plan was authorized by Congress more than a decade ago. But the U.S. Department of Interior refused to issue the Corps a construction permit.

The Interior Department, through the National Park Service and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, manages the land north and south of Oregon Inlet to which the mile-long jetties would be anchored.

The North Carolina Academy of Science recently issued a resolution criticizing the Corps for not cooperating fully with scientists who want to analyze its data.

The academy, which has about 1,000 North Carolina scientists as members, said it was concerned "by the lack of open scientific dialogue about a project which may be unworkable, environmentally unsound and economically disastrous."

Gov. Jim Hunt, in a letter to President Carter last November, said the state's top navigational priority is construction of the jetties at Oregon Inlet.

Rep. Walter Jones, D-N.C., says he is ready to introduce legislation that would permit the project to go ahead without authorization from the Department of Interior. Jones says he's waiting to see what position President Reagan's appointees to the Interior Department take.

Robert Williams, executive director of the park, said owners of seagoing trawlers will hesitate to send their vessels through Oregon Inlet unless the channel is improved.

"We would anticipate that the park will continue to develop only if there is a safe and reliable all-weather channel," he said.

Coastal geologists who have studied the project for the National Park Service contend that construction of jetties would sharply increase erosion along adjacent shorelines, adversely affecting as much as 25 miles of beach on Cape Hatteras National Seashore.

They argue the alternative of dredging the inlet channel should be tried before a more expensive and potentially harmful project is undertaken.

Spokesmen for the Army Corps of Engineers say erosion can be prevented. They argue that building the jetties will be cheaper in the long run than continual dredging.

Another point of contention is whether the islands flanking the inlet, Pea Island to the south and Bodie Island to the north, are migrating toward the land. The scitists say the islands' migration will affect the jetties in the future, leaving them protruding into the sea and making additional expensive construction necessary.

Picture Chuck Barris Owing Phillies!

PROUD MOTHER — President Ronald Reagan, right, holds framed poster presented to him by Robert Joffrey, director of the Joffrey Ballet, second from right, and Mrs. Reagan and son, Ronald, a performer with the troupe embrace during intermission in Sunday evening's performance at New York's Lincoln Center. This was the first time the Reagans had seen their son dance. (AP Laserphoto)

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — I see that TV producer Chuck Barris is trying to buy the Philadelphia Phillies. Hmm. Perhaps the development is not as ominous for baseball as it might seem.

Indeed, we could have here a simple solution to baseball's problems, and it might help television, too.

Barris, for those of you blessed with memory-erase, spent the 1970s as television's circus master. He made shows such as "The Gong Show," "$1.98 Beauty Contest" and "Three's a Crowd," programs that suggested clever parody but delivered sleazy humiliation.

"Gong Show" was a mock amateur talent show that invited the studio audience to yield to its mob instincts. The crowd loudly exhorted the "celebrity panel" — composed of Hollywood fringe types — to gong the performers, whose talents ranged from ghastly Elvis imitations to the rendering of "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" on a set of burning candles. It was fun, until it got depressing.

"Beauty Contest" skipped the fun stage. It featured a lot of ladies who wouldn't take home to Mama (at least, not before covering up the tattoos), many of whom betrayed as their lonely talent the undulating grind of the ecstasist. Skin and ridicule were served up in heavy doses here, television's lowest point.

"Three's a Crowd" was a short-lived variation on Barris' 1960s hit, "The Newlywed Game" (which also came back in the new Barris era, in seedy version). "Three's a Crowd" asked a secretary and wife to compare notes on the man they shared, e.g., "Where does Jim like to be tickled?" The secretary would invariably yield some hint of intimacy, which incited the wife, and a jolly time was had by none.

Anyway, Barris made a lot of money and got out at about the time some were sizing him up for a tar-and-feather suit. Now he wants to buy the Phils, once known as the Phutlle Phils but now the reigning champs of all baseball.

How could that be good? Consider:

The Phils are for sale because the club's owner,

Ruly Carpenter, is fed up with the place baseball has come to, a place where sweet associations of the summer game are smothered by the bitter stench of greed. It's a place no longer peopled by "Minnies" and "Dizzys" and "Pee Wees" but by "Daves" and "Steves" and "Georges," faceless professionals who "go to work" when they come to the ballpark.

A place with no Van Lingo Mungo.

Now, Barris doesn't strike me as the type who'd foster an atmosphere of quiet professionalism. Say, for example, that a .140 utility infielder comes to owner Barris at the end of the season, demanding renegotiation. He wants $350,000 a year, and a no-cut contract.

Barris says, "You got it, baby! Uh, there's one thing. You gotta play in a rubber suit, and every time you boot a grounder or botch a double play, your wife comes out on the field to spank you. Yeah, yeah, I like that. What do you say?"

The Phillies would soon be shed of prima donas, I'll bet, and the effect might be felt throughout the bigs. That playing baseball for a quarter-million-a-year isn't such a bad thing would soon become a common sentiment.

In turn, grateful baseball owners would return to the fans such lost amenities as the 50-cent hot dog, the 70-cent beer and the $3.50 box seat.

As for television's benefit, well, you can hardly expect a busy sports magnate such as Barris to produce any more TV shows... See? Simple.

Successes, Setbacks For Closed Captioning

By NORMAN BLACK
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — One year after the world of television became a little bit more accessible to the deaf and hearing-impaired, there have been some major milestones and a few setbacks.

It was March 16, 1980, that the National Captioning Institute added "closed captioning" similar to subtitles on NBC's "The Wonderful World of Disney," the Public Broadcasting Service's "Masterpiece Theatre" and ABC's movie, "Force 10 From Navarone."

For the first time, a deaf viewer could follow a prime-time TV program through elaborate captions invisible to viewers with normal hearing and without a special decoder.

Since then, the amount of network programming captioned regularly each week has grown from 16 hours to 22 hours, primarily on PBS. Dozens of advertisers have begun captioning commercials and TV specials.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. continues to offer the required decoders at cost — $250 — and now markets a color TV set with a built-in decoder for $520. The Internal Revenue Service recently agreed the decoding equipment could be treated as a medical deduction.

Live closed-captioned programs also have been broadcast. One viewer wrote to thank the captioning institute "for allowing me to feel a part of the American political process for the first time" after President Reagan's inauguration was captioned.

And NCI officials say they're on target toward becoming self-sufficient by 1983, a necessity since next year will bring the final $400,000 of $6.9 million in federal money spread over four years.

On the minus side, the number of decoders and specially equipped TV sets sold by Sears stands at about 35,000 — a small number given the estimated 2 million Americans who are totally deaf and another 12 million with some type of hearing impairment.

Neither of the participating commercial networks, ABC and NBC, has agreed to expand its captioning schedule. And the third commercial network, CBS, still refuses to participate in the project, focusing instead on development of a more flexible "teletext" system.

"I realize how frustrating it is for the hearing-impaired not to see all the programs on television," says NCI spokesman Jane Miller. "But remember, last year there were no captioned programs on commercial television at all. I think we can all look back and be very proud of what we've accomplished."

ABC and NBC cannot be faulted for their reluctance to expand the number of shows captioned each week, Ms. Miller adds.

"ABC and NBC have been tremendous," she says. "They've each probably sunk $1 million in this so far and we have to show them now that the deaf community is responding to this opportunity. We'll be doing a lot more promotional work during the next year."

Carolinas Plan Barbecue Bowl

WASHINGTON (AP) — The long-standing rivalry between South Carolinians and North Carolinians over the merits of their states is heating up over a new issue, but the winners this time may be Virginians and Georgians.

At issue is barbecued pork and an invitation issued by Rep. Gene Johnston of Greensboro, N.C., to his 6th District counterpart, Rep. John Napier of Bennettsville, S.C., for a "barbecue bowl" on April 1 in the nation's capital.

Napier comes from a section of the Palmetto state noted for its pork barbecue basted in a mustard sauce, while Johnston's part of North Carolina is known for pork barbecued in a tomato sauce.

Each congressman will provide 100 pounds of meat cooked according to his hometown recipe.

And the congressional delegations from Virginia and Georgia will pick the winner.

Bombeck Works On TV Series

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Humorist Erna Bombeck is creating a half-hour comedy series for ABC and Marble Arch Productions.

It is the first creative involvement in a television project for the syndicated columnist, author and TV personality.

She appears on ABC's "Good Morning, America" as "Housewife-at-Large." One of her books, "The Grass Is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank," was made into a TV movie.

Six Reporters To Share Award

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six reporters for the Chicago Sun-Times will share the $1,000 Thomas L. Stokes Award in journalism for their study of hazardous waste disposal.

The winners announced Sunday are Harlan Draeger, Paul V. Galloway, Bruce Ingersoll, Claudia Ricci, Terry Shaffer and Pam Zekman. The award by the Washington Journalism Center was established by friends of the late Thomas L. Stokes, a columnist who wrote on environmental subjects.

Reagans' Eyes On One Dancer

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — "Diana Ross and the Joffrey Ballet at the Met" was the billing Sunday night, but the eyes of President and Mrs. Reagan and the dance critics were on dancer Ron Reagan of the Joffrey II company.

Eight Joffrey II dancers, who usually tour the country, re-building up experience, danced the third of four ballets presented. "Unfolding." They usually danced in unison, or the four men or four women danced in unison. They were of similar skill, so that Ron Reagan, the Reagans' son, neither showed the most brightly nor disgraced himself.

All looked, on the basis of this one viewing, good enough to leave the junior company and join the Joffrey Ballet. Since Ron Reagan has been a member, Joffrey II hasn't danced in Manhattan and has had only one appearance at Brooklyn College.

The first time Ron Reagan had to partner Melissa Zanzola in a brief pas de deux in "Unfolding," it looked like hard work. The second time it looked more effortless. Ron Reagan is the most slender of the four men on stage and his thrusting arm gestures looked the least effective, possibly because he has the thinnest arms. His running steps and kicks were strong.

At the end of the ballet in which Ron Reagan appeared, the loudest applause went to the most muscular of the men, Edward Morgan, and his partner, Julie Janus. Gray Veredon choreographed.

The sellout audience paid between $25 and $200 each for seats as a benefit for the Joffrey Ballet.

After the one intermission, the stage poured with steam, lights twinkled through a blue backdrop, and Diana Ross' voice was heard singing "I'm Coming Out," before she was seen. She appeared from below on a stage elevator with sparkles in her hair, wearing a silver gown, sitting on the front and a coat of white fur tails.

The roar that went up immediately — and after each song — indicated that the Metropolitan Opera was as full of Diana Ross fans as any summer concert she gives at Forest Hills Tennis Stadium in Queens.

The other three ballets presented by the Joffrey Ballet were "Epode," a modern but lyrical ballet by Gerald Arpino, the company's resident choreographer. "Return to the Strange Land," a modern, four-part work of varying moods by Jiri Kylian, who gained prominence in Europe, and excerpts from "Postcards," a jolly, re-storied ballet by artistic director Robert Joffrey.

The Reagans attended a party after the performance with them in their box, as did Anthony Bliss, general manager of the Met, and his wife, former ballerina Sally Brayley, now artistic director of the Joffrey II Dancers. Gov. Hugh Carey was in the adjoining box. The center line of the opera house runs between those two boxes.

Updating 'Valley Of The Dolls'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — An updated version of "Valley of the Dolls" is now in production for CBS, starring Catherine Hicks, Lisa Hartman, Veronica Hamel, David Birney, Jean Simmons and James Coburn.

Renee Valente is producing the four-hour miniseries at 20th Century-Fox, based on the novel by Jacqueline Susann. It was made into a movie in 1967.

The miniseries also features Gary Collins, Bert Convy, Carol Lawrence and Steve Inwood.

O'Toole Will Be At Awards

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Oscar nominee Peter O'Toole will make his first appearance at the awards show at the 53rd annual presentations of the Academy Awards Monday, March 30.

O'Toole will be a presenter. His nomination as best actor for "The Stunt Man" is his sixth nomination. The show will be telecast live on ABC.

Dolly Parton will make her singing debut on the show, singing "Nine to Five," the song she wrote and sang for the movie.

Eric Clapton Is Ulcer Patient

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — British rock star Eric Clapton is expected to be hospitalized for two to three weeks for treatment of a perforated ulcer that forced him to cancel his entire four-month North American tour, his personal manager says.

Clapton was rushed to a St. Paul hospital Saturday, following a Friday night performance in Madison, Wis. He was in serious but stable condition Sunday.

The singer's manager, Roger Forrester, said Clapton will be "losing himself — going away with his wife for a time to recuperate for many months" after his release from the hospital.

The manager said Clapton has been kept heavily sedated and is aware that he has a "major problem."

But "the great thing about it is he's very up," Forrester said. "He's in good shape mentally."

Clapton had performed only 8 of 60 concerts scheduled on his tour, which began March 2, and he "can't possibly work again for the rest of the year," Forrester said.

Odds On Redford In Oscar Honor

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — If history repeats itself, Robert Redford should clinch the Oscar for best director with his first effort, "Ordinary People."

Redford won the Directors Guild Award for the best directed film of 1980 at the Directors Guild banquet, held simultaneously in New York and Beverly Hills on Saturday night.

The directors have veered from the Oscars only twice in 33 years.

Redford, making one of his rare public appearances at the Beverly Hilton dinner, told the blue-ribbon audience: "I really am shocked, I am thrilled. It's a heavyweight crowd. I'm very honored; thank you very much."

FOCUS

"Bull" and "Bear" Markets

"Bears" and "bulls" have a special meaning for people who buy and sell stock, or shares of ownership in corporations. A "bull" market means stock prices are rising. A "bull" stock buyer purchases shares at a low price. His purchase may encourage others to buy the stock. The new, increased demand cuts the supply of stock and raises the price. The "bull" profits by selling his stock at a new, higher price. In a "bear" market, prices are falling. A "bear" agrees to sell stock he doesn't have. Before a "bear" has to turn over stock, he hopes its price will drop. Then he can buy the stock he needs to complete his trade, and still make a profit.

GOREN BRIDGE

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KQ6 ♣K7 ♦AQ10854 ♠A4
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—It is a choice between a jump to three diamonds and two no trump. Two no trump? With a six-card suit and only 18 points? Essentially you have a balanced hand and stoppers in every suit. Also, your long suit, which could be a valuable source of tricks at a no trump contract, more than compensates for the missing point. In all, we think two no trump is the more descriptive rebid.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ10653 ♥4 ♦AJ52 ♠AK
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 3 ♦ 4 ♠ Pass 6 ♦ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—Partner is marked with extreme shortness in diamonds, and he must surely have the king of trumps and ace of hearts to justify his leap to slam. Even the Cowardly Lion would bid a grand slam with your tickets. But bid seven spades, not seven no trump—you may need diamond ruffs in dummy to come to thirteen tricks.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J1064 ♥4 ♦A1032 ♠9863
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 Pass Pass Pass 2 ♥ ♦ Pass 2 NT Pass 3 ♦ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Your hand has suddenly grown to immense proportions, so much so, in fact, that a direct leap to six spades would not be out of the question. The safest course, however, and the one that gives you the best chance to reach your optimal contract, is to cuebid four diamonds before raising to five spades. That also protects against the possibility that partner has a highly distributional hand with two fast club losers.

Q.4—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠1083 ♥43 ♦KQJ6 ♠Q1043
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass 1 NT Pass Pass 2 ♥ ♦ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—There is an old and true saying: The five-level belongs to the opponents. You have already achieved your object—you have pushed East-West one level higher than they wanted to go. If you bid again, you defeat your own ends. You give up the chance to defeat the contract, and the penalty the opponents will exact may be roughly equivalent to their vulnerable game!

Q.5—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠1083 ♥43 ♦KQJ6 ♠Q1043
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♦ Pass 1 NT 2 ♦ 4 ♦ 5 ♦ Pass Pass 5 ♦ ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—We are not partial to partners who overcall in the opponents' suit, especially when we are vulnerable. However, we presume that partner is aware of the auction and the vulnerability, so he is not stepping in at the two-level on a poor suit and weak hand. We would not dream of rescuing partner—even if he gets doubled. Pass.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠Q42 ♥3 ♦Q9653 ♠A1087
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♥ Pass 1 NT Pass Pass 2 ♥ ♦ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—We are not partial to partners who overcall in the opponents' suit, especially when we are vulnerable. However, we presume that partner is aware of the auction and the vulnerability, so he is not stepping in at the two-level on a poor suit and weak hand. We would not dream of rescuing partner—even if he gets doubled. Pass.

Air Controllers In N.C. Demonstrate

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Air traffic controllers in North Carolina joined controllers throughout the country in informational picketing Sunday to publicize their contract demands with the Federal Aviation Administration.

The FAA's contract with the Professional Air Traffic Association, representing most of the nation's 15,000 controllers, expired Sunday.

Demonstrations took place Sunday at Raleigh-Durham Airport and at airports in Charlotte, Greensboro, Wilmington, Kinston, Winston-Salem and Fayetteville.

The controllers were also protesting a lack of air safety programs and other issues such as overwork, insufficient pay, salary and retirement benefits.

The controllers and the FAA have not agreed on a new contract, but leaders of the controllers' group said they would not stage a strike or work slowdown.

"This is not a protest against the airport," says L. Kevin Kelly, president of the Raleigh-Durham chapter of the controllers association. "It's just an informational picketing, telling people that we do have problems."

Kelly said the biggest concern at Raleigh-Durham is a gap in the airport's radar coverage that is about 15 miles square and 40 miles southwest of the airport.

The controllers must guide aircraft in that area even though they can't see them on radar, he said.

Another problem is that controllers often are scheduled to come in early one day after working late the day before. "You're not 100 percent," Kelly said. "And this is the kind of job where you have to be 100 percent."

Mrs. Hilda Alexander was made an honorary FHA/HERO member and was presented a club pin. Approximately 100 members and 10 guests attended.

Brewer Encourages Participation

Dr. Thomas B. Brewer, chancellor of East Carolina University, has expressed support for the tenth annual "Walk For Humanity" sponsored by the ECU Hunger Coalition and the campus ministry. The walk is scheduled for April 11 in Greenville.

"I encourage all students, faculty and staff and members of the community to participate in this outstanding humanitarian program," said Brewer. "There are millions of less fortunate in our nation who are not able to fulfill the basic human need of an adequate diet. Fortunately, severe hunger is not prevalent in our country because the American people are understanding and generous in their commitment to the needy.

"Yet hunger does affect some people in almost every community in our country," he added. "We must continue in our efforts to eliminate this human problem in our nation as well as other regions of the world where it prevails in devastating proportions."

Anyone wishing to participate in the "Walk For Humanity" program should call the ECU campus ministry at 752-4216.

Studying Visit By S.Africans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department says it is looking into the circumstances of a trip to the United States by five South African military officers in violation of a 19-year-old ban on such visits.

The five did not disclose their military status when they applied for and were granted visas, U.S. officials said Saturday.

The quintet paid a "courtesy call" last week at the Defense Information Agency and met with an officer of the National Security Council, said the officials, who asked not to be identified. The South African Embassy said the officers had come to "consult" with the embassy staff, the officials said.

Bid Rigger To Prison Despite Abhorrence Claims

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Convicted bid-rigging conspirator Jon Reynolds begins a four-month prison sentence today for his part in corruption that state officials say may have cost North Carolina taxpayers millions of dollars.

Reynolds, 39, president of L.A. Reynolds Co. of Winston-Salem, was to report at 4 p.m. to a federal prison at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., despite his claims that he tried to break out of the widespread practice of fixing bids on state highway paving contracts.

About a dozen North Carolina paving company executives have been sentenced to prison. The officials, mostly prominent citizens in their communities, were caught during an 11-state federal investigation into the industry's bidding practices.

Reynolds, owner of a small company sandwiched between subsidiaries of multibillion-dollar conglomerates, said he only wanted to survive.

"I didn't like the system and I was fighting to change it and keep my company afloat at the same time," he said. "I felt I could justify my motives. I knew what was going on was against the law but I knew what my intentions were."

Reynolds pleaded no contest when his case came up in January. He didn't deny conspiring with the Charlotte-based Rea Construction Co. to split paving work in Davidson County, but he says he couldn't bring himself to plead guilty when he knew he had tried to break out of the bid-rigging system.

In any case, Reynolds admits he talked with other pavers and they agreed on who would be low bidder on upcoming road projects in their areas.

He joined the monthly gathering of contractors at the Royal Villa hotel in Raleigh the night before state highway officials opened bids on new highway work. There he learned who was bidding on projects he wanted and who he had to deal with if he was to get the project. Reynolds said he accepts that he must be punished as a participant in the crime. But he insists that he and his wife, Libby, have three children, ages 9 and 6 years and 4 months.

Just after his conviction, Reynolds took his 9-year-old son to the mountains for a weekend to explain what had happened. But he says the boy "just can't understand why his daddy is going away."

Reynolds said his wife has found it difficult to accept because "she knows what I have fought. She knows I'm telling the truth. I have no problems of conscience with it."

In 1967, Reynolds was 26 and brash enough to believe he could fight two of the largest and most aggressive conglomerates in the business, J.A. Jones and Ashland Warren, he said.

But Reynolds was destined to lose from the beginning, he said. The two, if they chose, could run him out of business. And that, Reynolds said, is what they threatened to do.

Reynolds knew bid rigging was a way of business, but its cutthroat nature was new to him. Rea President Charles Wuertenberger was the first to show young Reynolds the industry's dark side when, in 1967, Reynolds attempted to flex his muscles in Davidson County by putting an asphalt plant there and bidding competitively.

"That's when I first realized the hardball nature of the business," Reynolds said. "Wuertenberger let me know Rea could and would put me out of business. He said Rea could come in and dot the county with asphalt plants."

The result was no competitive bidding in Davidson County, he said.

By 1973, Reynolds was losing projects while petroleum prices soared. He said the company almost was insolvent and family members gave him an option to buy them out.

Reynolds persuaded Blythe Industries of Charlotte to take 51 percent interest while he took the rest and remained as chief executive officer. To Reynolds, selling control of his business was like losing a part of his family.

But in 1975, when Blythe suffered financial problems, Reynolds acquired full control.

Beginning in 1977, he said, Reynolds began openly encouraging other companies to get out of the bid-rigging system. Eventually he told at least one other paving executive "I wasn't going to play ball anymore."

Soon afterwards, federal investigators began probing bidding practices. Before he could establish a record of consistent competitiveness, Reynolds' record of participating in the system caught up with him.
