

Senators Push For More Budget Cuts

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Recommending even deeper overall cuts than President Reagan has asked, Senate budget writers are slicing more money from some social programs to make room for restoring export subsidies that benefit big business.

By the time it quit work for the night Wednesday, the Senate Budget Committee had approved more than $35 billion in cuts, a net of about $2.4 billion more than Reagan recommended for the areas covered.

One of the panel's votes was to restore $110 million — a third of Reagan's proposed cut — for the Export-Import Bank. The bank subsidizes exports through loans and loan guarantees to purchasers of American goods, and most of the benefits go to a few large American corporations.

At the recommendation of Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., the panel supported deeper cuts in housing for the poor and community services aid to more than make up the money put back in the Ex-Im Bank budget.

Mrs. Kassebaum denied the move was designed to help companies like Boeing and Cessna, which produce airplanes in her state and sell them abroad with the Ex-Im Bank's help. She said the change is intended "to help workers keep their jobs, not big business."

The action on the Ex-Im Bank was one of few times the committee voted more money than Reagan had recommended as it completed its second day of work on the 1982 federal budget.

Sen. Peter Domenici, R-N.M., the committee chairman, predicted the panel would complete its spending blueprint today, and aides said it would wind up approving more than the $48.6 billion in cuts the president has recommended.

Reports Due Early April

By TOM BAINES

The executive committee of the mayor's advisory board was brought up to date yesterday on the status of reports being made by the six subcommittees that are charged with studying city services.

Subcommittee chairmen attending the noon meeting indicated that reports containing recommendations relative to the study areas are in various stages of completion and all should be ready by early April.

Dr. Wallace Woole, general committee chairman, set Wednesday, April 8 as the date for a meeting of the subcommittee chairmen to submit their reports for initial discussion and comments.

Woole said the executive committee will accept the reports and recommendations at the meeting, address any areas of omission, and set up a priority listing of recommendations in preparation for submitting the report to the mayor and city council.

"We're just about done," the general chairman said, adding that the committee work is boiling down to "making hard decisions" on the study area recommendations.

The overall report of the committee's findings will be prepared in a bound volume for presentation to the city and a number of copies of the detailed document will be on hand locally. It was recommended that a copy be placed at Sheppard Memorial Library.

"I am encouraged about what we will come up with," Woole observed.

The overall committee, initiated by Mayor Don McGlohan several months ago, has been taking an in-depth look at all city services. The study areas have involved the general categories of protection and safety, leisure activities and recreation, environmental protection, public transportation, new revenue sources, and administrative services.

A Thin Snow Dusts County

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

A thin blanket of snow dusted Pitt County this morning, surprising those who thought winter was on the way out.

An accumulation of .01 inch of snow was recorded by 8 a.m. today, following a .01 inch rainfall yesterday. High temperatures Wednesday reached 65 degrees, according to Greenville Utilities' Water Plant, and lows plunged to 34 degrees. At 8 a.m. the temperature stood at the freezing mark, 32 degrees.

The scant rainfall did not alleviate the dry conditions plaguing the area's forests, but according to a Forest Service spokesman, an increase in humidity did ease the situation.

"The situation is not as bad today because the humidity is higher than it has been," said Pitt County Forest Ranger Mark Webb. "But we received notification this morning that the burning ban is still in effect and will remain statewide until further notice."

Webb estimated it would take two-three inches of rain before the ban is lifted.

Several blazes, the most serious in Onslow County, were reported yesterday in the eight-county district that includes this area. None have occurred in Pitt County.

"High and gusty winds have been predicted for this afternoon," said Webb, "so I suspect we may have some fires."

The snowfall vanished in most areas of the county by mid-morning. Clearing skies and frigid temperatures are predicted for tonight and into the weekend.

Spring, officially only two days away, may have to thaw its way out of winter's icy grip.

SAMUEL L. TUCKER

The award received by Tucker is a $1,000 National Achievement Scholarship sponsored by the Kimberly-Clark Foundation.

Tucker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Tucker, Jr., is active in sports and academics. He has been class president for three years, is a member of the National Honor Society, the Literary Club and the Math Club, and attended Governor's School.

Tucker rated all-conference in baseball, basketball and football and is a member of the cross-country track team. He is also active in church work, is secretary of a Sunday School and a member of a church choir.

As winner of a National Achievement Scholarship, Tucker is one of 530 winners nationally of two types of scholarships — the $1,000 achievement scholarships and corporate-sponsored four-year achievement scholarships.

Range Of Steps Studied To Curb Cuba Arms Role

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said today the administration is considering a full range of steps to take if necessary to stop Cuban supply of arms to Latin American rebels, but said it has no specific plan for military action against Cuba.

"With respect to a specific plan, why no. The president has not had an opportunity to approve or to consider in detail any courses of action for the period ahead," Haig said.

Haig gave that reply when pressed at a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on an administration official's testimony Wednesday that specific administration plans do not exclude military action against Cuba.

"It is the responsibility of the executive branch to consider a whole range of options, then prepare a full range of options to deal with this serious problem," Haig said. "And I can assure you that process is underway."

"But in no sense does it represent an approved game plan, if you will," he said.

Undersecretary of State Walter J. Stoessel had told the committee under questioning that the administration does have specific contingency plans and "I would say they do not exclude anything."

Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., had asked Stoessel the question and he pressed Haig today on whether there in fact are such plans.

Stoessel, asked by Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., if Central America could turn into another "quagmire" like Vietnam, replied, "We are determined that this situation will not develop into another Vietnam ... the situation is containable."

Arms from Cuba and other communist countries into El Salvador have "substantially abated" and the administration hopes they will stop altogether, he said.

But if they increase instead, he said under questioning from Dodd, "we would have to consider what steps to take to stop that flow."

Haig told the House Foreign Affairs Committee on Wednesday that the guerrilla movement in El Salvador is part of a four-phase communist strategy.

"Phase 1 has been completed with the seizure of Nicaragua," Haig said. "Next is El Salvador, to be followed by Honduras and Guatemala."

Rep. Jones Expresses Surprise At Proposal For Redistricting

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

A proposed redistricting plan that would remove Martin, Greene and Lenoir counties from the 1st Congressional District would "stretch the imagination" in making the district contiguous, Rep. Walter Jones says.

Jones, a Farmville Democrat who has represented the district since 1966, joined county Democratic chairmen in expressing surprise at the realignment proposal drawn up by state Rep. Allen C. Barbee, D-Nash. However, all expressed doubt that the plan would be adopted as envisioned by Barbee.

Barbee's plan would shift Martin, Greene and Lenoir counties to the 2nd Congressional District, now served by Rep. L.H. Fountain of Tarboro. They would be replaced in the 1st District by Onslow County, which adjoins two other counties — Jones and Carteret — on the southern end of the big district.

"The geography is horrible," said Bill Wilson of Jacksonville, Democratic chairman in Onslow County. "Off the top of my head, I don't see the sense of it. It just seems that you could say, 'Jiminy crickets, they're at it again.'"

In Williamston, Wanda Caldwell said she and other Martin Countians "are completely satisfied" with their affiliation with the 1st District and with Jones' representation.

"I feel this is an attempt to check out feelings, and that is very definitely the feelings in Martin County. We would very much like to stay a part of the 1st District," Mrs. Caldwell said.

Similar feelings were expressed by Melvin Oliver, the Greene County Democratic chairman.

"That would be gerrymandering," Oliver said of the proposal.

"We used to be in the 2nd District, but we are very compatible with the 1st District. It doesn't make sense to move," Oliver said.

Jones, who will return to Washington this weekend after a month of recuperation following a bout with pneumonia, said he considered Barbee's proposal just one of many before the Legislature passes a new district plan later this year.

"I don't know of any incumbent congressman that would like to give up any of his counties. I know that I would be very reluctant to give up any," Jones said.

He noted that his years in Congress have left him with "some deep-seated ties with some of the counties."

"I have no criticism of Mr. Barbee, but one objection might present itself. If he takes Martin out, it would stretch the imagination to make the 1st District contiguous," Jones said. "I just don't think this is final."

The Legislature is required to redistrict after each 10-year Census report to keep the districts' population within the confines of the U.S. Supreme Court's "one-man, one-vote" mandate. The official 1980 Census report will not be available until about April 1. No official action by the General Assembly can be taken until those figures are available.

Legislative subcommittees plan to hold public hearings around the state in April to receive public input.

Lobbyist Seeks Funds-Source In White House Redecoration

By ANN BLACKMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Common Cause lobbyist is calling for disclosure of the names of 167 donors who contributed more than $375,000 — nearly twice as much as was sought — to redecorate President and Mrs. Reagan's personal living quarters at the White House.

"It creates the potential of a conflict of interest," said Fred Wertheimer, senior vice president of the citizens' lobby. "I'm not arguing against raising private funds, but that they should be disclosed."

"The problem side of raising private money for public offices is that it allows people who may be doing business with the government to come in with large sums of money."

Peter McCoy, chief of Mrs. Reagan's staff, said he is convinced none of those who contributed to the redecorating project had any interest in currying favor with the Reagans or with White House aides.

The tax-deductible contributions averaged $2,248.67 each. Sheila Patton, Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, said they ranged from $20 or $30 to gifts in the $10,000 to $20,000 range.

"I can tell you that most of the money, the larger contributions, came from foundations," McCoy said in an interview. "They have absolutely no political interest, no political motives."

McCoy refused to name the donors because "some of them asked that their names not be released." He also said he would not give a breakdown of the $375,529 in contributions to show the size of each donation because "it would not serve any purpose."

McCoy stressed that the project to redecorate and refurbish the second and third floors of the Executive Mansion, the first major facelift in 20 years, would benefit all future occupants of the White House and that the Reagans would not gain personally from the improvements.

"The project was designed to re-establish the dwelling, the edifice," McCoy said. "It's not as though the Reagans will take the painted walls with them."

White House officials announced last month that the Reagans would not accept a $50,000 congressional appropriation to redecorate the family's living quarters.

LYING ON COLD TABLE

I am a patient in Pitt County Memorial Hospital and, if I don't call Hotline while I'm here, I may lose my nerve. I am a sick man, yet this morning, I was taken down to the radiology area and was made to lie practically naked on a cold table until it was convenient for someone to come in and x-ray me. I waited there almost an hour. I wouldn't be in this hospital if I weren't sick and I don't think this is the way anyone, but especially a person who's sick, should be treated. They could leave patients in their rooms, even if a doctor, or whoever, had to give up a minute or two of time until the patient could be brought to the x-ray department. It's humiliating and dehumanizing for people to be so treated, even as they pay through the nose for the services of this hospital and its x-ray facilities.

The person in radiology to whom we presented our inquiry referred it to M. E. (Rick) Gilstrap, hospital executive director. Gilstrap said your complaint has already been investigated by administrators who found that there was a foul-up that particular day with the radiologist who was to handle your barium x-ray procedure having two appointments at once. It was a matter of 'Who are we going to pull from some other work to do this?' after the scheduling error was discovered, he said.

He said you did have to wait much too long and that such a wait in an x-ray gown on a cold metal table would undoubtedly be extremely uncomfortable. The hospital regrets your discomfort, he said.

This kind of mix-up does not occur often, he said, and he hopes that waits like yours prior to x-raying are not common occurrences. Usually, he said, while it is true that to pack as many procedures into a day as is possible, patients are brought to the department prior to the time for the procedure to be done, the waiting is done on the stretcher on which one is brought from the room, not on the metal table.

Gilstrap reiterated that he believes your experience was the result of an unfortunate error. "We constantly stress to our personnel," he said, "that each of them should put himself in the place of the patient, realize he or she is not feeling his best, and try to be kind. If people are not treated kindly at Pitt Memorial, we want to know about it. We can't make a barium x-ray a quick or pleasant experience, but we do try to do everything we can to make it as bearable as possible."

He promised to see that someone looks at the way people are brought to the department and see if there is any means of providing more comfort. And he will try to see that such scheduling problems are kept to a minimum, he indicated.

Club Has Workshop

The March meeting of the Grass Roots Garden Club was held at the Greenville Recreational Center. A demonstration workshop on making Easter rabbits was given.

Mrs. R. M. Merritt used plastic jugs, styrofoam balls, cotton balls and pipe cleaners to make a rabbit. Members also made rabbits.

President Ruth Crawford conducted the business session and named officers for the coming year including: Mrs. James Hecker, president; Mrs. Thurston Wynn, vice president; Mrs. Merritt, second vice president; Mrs. Calais R. Shepard, secretary and reporter; Mrs. Earl Simmons, treasurer and historian; Mrs. H. T. Brown Jr., yearbook; and Mrs. Robert L. Barlow, telephone.

Plans were made for the group to tour Beaufort in April.

Mrs. H. T. Brown Jr. was meeting hostess.

Engagement Announced

Mrs. Lonnie Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Roy L. Brock of Greenville announce the engagement of their daughter, Patricia L. Brock, to Danny Ray Stallings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stallings of Greenville. The wedding will take place April 4.

DEAR BLUSHING: Yes. Make up your mind that if you blush, you blush, and you don't give a hoot! Your fear of blushing contributes to your blushing. Once you overcome that fear, you'll have the problem licked. (P.S. In the meantime, it might be a consolation to know that blushing is "in." Women who haven't blushed in years are buying "blush" at the cosmetic counter.)

DEAR ABBY I feel as though I should be doing something about this problem, but I don't know what. A relative of my husband has epilepsy. He's on medication, but he forgets to take it and keeps on having seizures.

The law here states that if an epileptic hasn't had a seizure for a full year, he can apply for a driver's license. Well, this relative has had seizures right along, but he lied about it and got a license anyway.

Last year while driving alone, he had a spell, lost control of his car and hit another car. Fortunately, nobody was seriously injured. Three months ago while he was driving, he had another seizure. His wife grabbed the steering wheel, but the car jumped the curb and struck two children playing on the sidewalk. They were lucky they weren't killed. After that, he swore he'd never drive again. In less than two weeks he was driving again!

Abby, for his own safety and the safety of others, this man should not be permitted to drive, but I don't want to be the one to turn him in. What should I do?

ANONYMOUS, PLEASE

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Write to the department of motor vehicles in care of your state capital and describe what you have told me. Your identity will be held in the strictest of confidence. Please do this today, before he maims (or kills) himself and innocent people. You will be doing the man — and society — a tremendous service.

DEAR ABBY Concerning friends and relatives flocking to visit Florida I was once one of those friends who went to Florida in the winter and stayed with friends. In the near future I expect to be a resident there and will undoubtedly have friends visiting me. I have penned these lines to express my thoughts about visitors.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

A few months ago, I suggested that television ease up a little on sex in Texas and give the other 49 states a chance to be unscrupulous and immoral. So far, no one has taken the bait.

"J.R." and the Ewing clan have made sex the biggest group sport since water volleyball. They've also succeeded in setting a style that the entire country is trying to emulate.

To be perfectly honest, I've had it with the Western look. If I never see another fanny in a pair of tight jeans it will be too soon for me. If I never see another chase between a pick-up truck and a sports car, it'll be just fine. If I never see a man in a ten-gallon hat arguing about his inheritance, I can live.

No wonder we don't have any oil in this country. We can't get the oilmen out of the bedroom and back on the oil rigs where they belong.

I'm not exaggerating when I talk about the impact Texas has had on the country. In one week alone, I received booklets and ads that offered: Western pillows, boots with matching bags, a doormat that says, "Hi Y'all," horn-shaped beer steins, a stuffed Clydesdale for the wall, a tie clasp in the shape of a Conestoga Wagon, a bolo tie, a belt made out of diamond-back rattlesnake hide, and a game called "Go to Texas" with the objective being to be the richest player.

There's also a silver boot match-holder, packets of Texas chili with enamelware to serve it in, belt buckles, a pound of Texas leather to carry around because it looks and smells great, an oil cap with J.R.'s official emblem on it, an eight-inch ceramic armadillo filled with jalapeno lollipops, barbed-wire swizzle sticks and napkin holders and (get ready) for $25 you can buy a square foot of J.R.'s ranch, Southfork. (You can bet if J.R.'s letting it go, it died.)

I don't deny Texas is easy to fall in love with... the warmth of its people, the outgoing honesty, the extremes and the laid-back lifestyle, but let's not get limited by our imagination. What's the Midwest city you think of when you think of sin? Cleveland!

Try this plot on for size. An envelope baron is buying up all the stationery manufacturers in the Midwest to create a monopoly and bring corporations to their knees. He has a wife who winters in Akron and a mistress in Chagrin Falls. He is trying to marry his only daughter off to a glue magnate and is upset because his only son wants to clerk in a maternity shop. One night the Cuyahoga River catches fire and one of his envelopes is seen on the banks, near the crime. I'm telling you. Give it a chance and in three months the whole country will be talking with a Cleveland accent and wearing loafers.

Diesel Course Is Offered

"The Transition From the Gasoline Engine to the Diesel Engine will be the topic for a two-evening seminar sponsored by the auto mechanics department of Pitt Community College March 26 and April 2, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Henry D. Bahr, president of the Coastal Diesel Service, Inc. of New Bern and a 40-year veteran of the diesel engine and fuel injection industry will lead the seminar.

The seminar will highlight the GM-5.7 liter diesel engine that is presently an option of the full product line.

The Roosa Master rotary distributor, developed in North Carolina, featuring inlet metering and opposed piston injection pump, will be included. This pump system is now being assembled and tested by the Stanadyne facility in Jacksonville.

Roland Smith, chairman of the auto mechanics department at PCC, emphasized that this seminar should be of prime interest to the experienced gasoline engine mechanic who would like to make the transition from gas to diesel power mechanics.

The event will be held in the automotive mechanics shop on the PCC campus. Admission is free and the public is invited.

Judge Rules Enquirer Not In Newspaper Role

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — A

judge's ruling that the National Enquirer is a magazine, not a newspaper, means the publication is not eligible for statutory protection against a $10 million libel claim by comedian Carol Burnett, attorneys say.

If Superior Court Judge Peter Smith had found that the Enquirer was a newspaper, its liability in the case could have been reduced to as little as $250, assuming it was found to have libeled Ms. Burnett, her attorneys said.

State law excuses newspapers, but not magazines, from punitive or general damages in libel cases if the newspaper prints a retraction of the material within 21 days of a demand for such action.

"I have looked at the qualifications for a newspaper under the statute," Smith said Wednesday. "I'm sorry. I don't think it's even close."

Ms. Burnett is suing the Enquirer over a 1976 article saying she got into an argument in a Washington restaurant with then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. She contends the article was untrue and implied that she was drunk. The Enquirer later printed a retraction.

Earlier, Smith dismissed two jurors who told him they had seen the "Tonight Show" Tuesday night, when host Johnny Carson blasted the Enquirer for a story in the current issue that reported his third marriage was headed for divorce.

"I'm going to call the National Enquirer and the people who wrote this 'liars,'" Carson said. "This is absolutely, completely, 100 percent falsehoods."

He said he would not sue the Enquirer, but challenged the publication to sue him for slander.

Enquirer lawyer William Masterson demanded a mistrial, contending Carson's attack was prejudicial and damaged the Enquirer's chance at a fair trial. The judge refused.

The panel of 12 jurors and two alternates was already one person short due to an earlier dismissal. The action Wednesday left the jury with 11 members, and nine votes are needed for a decision.

Ms. Burnett is seeking $250 special damages for legal fees in the suit besides $5 million in punitive damages and $5 million in general damages. Her attorneys said that if the judge had found the Enquirer qualified for newspaper libel protection, she may have been able to collect only the $250, assuming the verdict was in her favor.

Ms. Burnett's lawyers called the ruling on the issue a major victory.

"I think it removes some serious legal obstacles we no longer have to overcome," said Paul Sanner.

Masterson said the impact on the case would be minimal.

"I'm going to win this case anyway on the lack of actual malice," he said.

Smith's ruling came after he heard testimony from two journalism professors.

Albert Pickrell of the University of California at Berkeley said the Enquirer was not a newspaper because it "does not have as its primary purpose the conveying of current and timely news."

Ben Cunningham of California State University at Long Beach compared the format of the Enquirer to the New York Daily News and said, "I believe the National Enquirer is a tabloid newspaper."

Smith said, however, "I have no problem distinguishing the New York Daily News from the National Enquirer. Sure, they're both tabloids. But that goes to form, not substance."

Asking Supreme Court Ruling On MacDonald

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors say they plan to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to review a lower court ruling overturning the 1979 triple-murder conviction of former Green Beret Dr. Jeffrey MacDonald.

Federal prosecutor Bryan Murtaugh said Wednesday that a writ of certiorari had been printed and would be filed Wednesday afternoon asking for the Supreme Court review. However, no filings had been received at the Supreme Court by late Wednesday.

MacDonald was sentenced to three consecutive life terms after convictions in August 1979 on three counts of murder. On Feb. 17, 1970, his pregnant wife and two young daughters were bludgeoned and stabbed to death at their home at Fort Bragg, N.C.

But last July 30, the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the conviction on grounds MacDonald had been denied a speedy trial.

MacDonald maintained throughout the trial in Raleigh that four drug-crazed hippies broke into his home and killed his wife and children. He said they also stabbed him.

He was discharged from service in 1970 and moved to California to work as an emergency room doctor.

MacDonald and his lawyer, Bernard Segal, both of San Francisco, could not be contacted for comment.

After receiving a written reply from MacDonald's lawyers, the Supreme Court will decide whether to review the decision by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, Murtaugh said.

MacDonald's lawyers must file a response to the government request for review. That probably will delay until the next term any decision on reviewing the case, the government lawyers said. The current Supreme Court term ends in July.

"My gut feeling is that I doubt all the paperwork will be filed by the end of the court's session in July," Murtaugh said.

Alfred and Mildred Kassab, the parents of MacDonald's slain wife, Colette, said Wednesday the government's decision to appeal to the Supreme Court came as no surprise to them.

"We never had any doubt that the government would file the appeal," said Kassab from his office in Kings Park, N.Y. "The 4th Circuit Court is the only circuit court which has ruled the time between indictments impacts on the speedy trial issue."

The Kassabs said they fully expect the Supreme Court to hear the appeal and overturn the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals decision.

New Drive

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A spokeswoman for a national group of fruit lovers has launched an attack against one of the most hallowed American homeowner traditions: the neatly manicured lawn.

Nellie Shriver, national coordinator of the Fruitarian Network, an offshoot of the Committee of American Vegetarians, says she is spearheading a national drive to save grass.

The organization says it wants people to lock up their lawnmowers and free themselves of the habit of whacking their grass down to two inches above the ground every Saturday.

"We are strongly urging that everyone who owns grass should let it grow under their feet," Ms. Shriver said, "and over their ankles, and even up to their knees, if grass can grow that tall."

The reasons, Ms. Shriver says, are many. But the primary ones which crop up are the organization's belief that grass is a living thing and has a "consciousness," and that large stands of grass could be home to thousands of tiny creatures who would otherwise be slashed to pieces by a lawnmower.

Besides, say the Fruitarians, more than 55,000 people are killed or injured by lawnmowers annually nationwide.

That Agony Of Serving

There is an agony in serving as a university trustee these days.

Many of those members recall their own college days and how difficult it was for themselves and their families to finance a college education.

For many successful men and women, obtaining a degree has been the difference in a fulfilling life and one locked into a dull job. For some, it was a thin financial line between going on to college and, either not going at all or having to drop out.

The ECU board was caught up in that agony Monday when it fell to it to authorize increases in room rents and fees which will place an additional financial burden on all present and future students of the university. The board approved a $166 annual dorm room rent increase and $26 in student fees increase.

It was too much for Trustee Louis Gaylord, a local attorney. He produced a letter he wrote last year but never made public in which he predicted that college cost will place a college education out of the reach of the children of working people.

It is a situation of despair. One of the strengths of our nation has been that the children of the poorest of families could educate themselves into better things if they had the will and the intelligence.

This is something that we are in danger of losing. Federal funds for student loans are being cut back at the same time that costs of attending college are rapidly escalating.

Alas, in the face of Trustee Gaylord's plea, the board had to face the fact that the additional money is essential if the bills for operating dormitories and such are to be paid. Thus the increases were approved.

That is facing reality, but somehow our society must find ways to insure that all deserving young people have the opportunity to attend college, if they so choose and are willing to do the work.

THE WAY IT SEEMS TO BE WORKING!

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

How Did We Survive?

WASHINGTON — It's getting pretty noisy around our town. For the past week, ever since Mr. Reagan sent up his definitive proposals to cut federal spending and to reduce federal tax rates, the outcry has been horrendous. Permit me, if I may, to holler back.

A word, first, about what the administration is trying to do. It is trying to avert economic disaster. It is trying to reduce the role of the federal government in our lives. Mr. Reagan proposes to restore some of the responsibilities of state and local government. He is asking Congress to shore up national defenses that have declined disturbingly in relation to Soviet power.

Now, those are laudable objectives. To judge from last November's election returns, not only in the presidential sob sisters and crybabies to agonize over the cruelties that Mr. Reagan would impose. The television networks have been perfectly in tune with the caterwauling chorus. If your taste runs to demagoguery of the very first chop, feast your eyes.

All right, I dare say that those of us on the conservative side have done our own demagoging also. We have a way, on our side, of citing welfare queens as typical beneficiaries of public welfare programs. We have revealed in horror stories of grants under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. We have pounced upon occasional true tales of fat cats on food stamps and con artists on the take. Our examples may have been as distorted in one direction as the liberals' examples in the other.

A fair picture of our federal social programs lies somewhere in between. Most of the beneficiaries of food stamps, school lunches, Medicaid services, black lung payments, housing subsidies and the like are truly needy. But Mr. Reagan is most certainly right when he insists that many beneficiaries cannot truly be so classified. Here he would cut expenditures — and why not?

Let me pose a rhetorical question. I was born in 1920. How did our generation ever survive without these costly programs? I will tell you a true story of a Depression family broken by divorce in 1937. The oldest girl, 22, dropped out of college to make her own way as a commercial artist. The older boy, 16, borrowed money to buy a camera, took up photography, and worked his race but also in senatorial contests, the president's purposes overwhelmingly are endorsed by the American people. The people voted for change — for drastic change — and that is precisely what Mr. Reagan is offering. He wants to reverse a 50-year thrust in public policies.

Behold the uproar. You would think the people had elected Genghis Khan and restored the court of Marie Antoinette. Over on the House side of Capitol Hill, where the Democrats can pick and choose committee witnesses, we have seen a staged parade of the weak, the halt and the destitute. The Washington Post, casting objectivity to the winds, has gone overboard; the newspaper has assigned whole teams of bleeding hearts, weep-easies,

Other Editors Say Subverting Law

(Greensboro Daily News)

Some members of the N.C. Senate obviously consider their colleagues dullards or fools. That's the only conclusion we can reach about a little bill slipped through that body this month, the first step toward restoring retirement benefits for an ousted judge, Linwood T. Peoples, of Henderson.

The matter would scarcely deserve more than passing attention were it not for the subterfuge and trickery involved. The N.C. Supreme Court, in a highly unusual procedure, removed Peoples from office shortly after he was elected Superior Court judge. The court removed him on recommendations of the State Judicial Standards Review Commission, because of misconduct during his tenure as district judge. Charges against him included handling cases out of court and accepting money from settlements of traffic cases.

In addition to removal from office — the first such action on the part of the high court in this century — the justices also stripped Peoples of his retirement benefits. Now, however, and for the second time, Peoples' legislative friends are maneuvering to restore those benefits to the tune of $385 a month for retirement and $155 a month for his widow in survival benefits upon his death.

The Supreme Court handed down its ouster decision on December 31, 1978. Peoples' political friends lost no time seeing what they could do about retirement restitution. In the 1980 legislature they tried to pass a bill restoring his pension rights, specifically using his name. That effort passed the House but failed in the Senate when a legislator, Sen. Henson P. Barnes, D-Wayne, spoke against it, noting that it was unconstitutional to enact special legislation for the benefit of one particular party.

This year's effort is a brazen attempt to undercut both the General Assembly and the State Supreme Court. It would negate the law by refraining from mentioning Peoples by name and simply denying retirement benefits to judges removed from office after January 1, 1979 — one day after Peoples was removed.

House members should cut this cynical scheming off at the pass. The reputation of public officials has suffered enough lately for a variety of shortcomings, ranging from bribery to sexual misconduct. Participation in this play not only undermines the law; it is a shocking sign of irresponsibility on the part of the General Assembly.

Strength For Today

SLAVERY IS STILL WITH US

We assume today that the institution of slavery has been abolished. Of course, it never has been abolished, and never will be.

The greatest amount of slavery exists in areas where men and women are accustomed to think themselves free. Most of us, more or less, are in the toils of some servitude. Some people have emotional disturbances which make their lives distraught, frustrated, and full of anxiety. Still others are held in the bondage of prejudices which determine all the patterns of their thought. Alcohol, narcotics, and sensuality have an iron grip on millions.

The worst form of servitude, however, is of a moral and spiritual variety. People who have no religious faith either because they don't want it or because through some misfortune they have not come under the proper religious influence, are in servitude. But fortunately there is an escape available to everyone — the Bible and the Holy Spirit. — Elisha Douglass

China Woos Hard-Liners

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — A tete-a-tete luncheon at the Chinese Embassy here for three Reaganite hard-liners with high credentials on the Republican right signaled an exotic alliance with this common objective: Stop the Soviet Union.

Two of the guests at the March 9 lunch with high-ranking Chinese diplomats are top officials in the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) with long-standing anti-Soviet records: Dr. Michael Pillsbury, Deputy ACDA director, and David Sullivan, a former Soviet analyst in the Central Intelligence Agency. The third was John Carbaugh, an aide to Sen. Jesse Helms who has placed more anti-Soviet hard-liners in the Reagan administration than anyone else.

The Chinese wanted to know how many and what kind of new arms President Reagan would send Taiwan; the three Americans wanted to know if China would help the U.S. resist Soviet gains in Black Africa. No commitments were given, but the two-and-a-half-hour exchange over a six-course lunch opened a dialogue that will continue despite the strong pro-Taiwan loyalty of American conservatives.

Canadian Blues

Behind his calm exterior, Ronald Reagan was angry as he left for Canada on his first presidential state visit about the way the State Department had arranged the trip.

Reagan grumbled that U.S. diplomats had agreed to place "acid rain" and other confrontational issues on the agenda of his talks with Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. The president's grievance was shared by his three top aides: Edwin Meese, James Baker and Michael Deaver.

That is only the latest of multiple aggravations between the Reagan White House and the State Department, beginning with resistance there to foreign aid budget cuts. The basic complaint is indirectly against Secretary of State Alexander Haig — not so much his own views but what the president's men see as his failure to control the State Department bureaucracy.

Auto Wars

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, a cool, tough customer in Pennsylvania Republican politics, outbluffed his adversaries in the Reagan Cabinet to keep alive his proposal for a quota on Japanese auto exports.

Lewis was outnumbered with Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and budget director David Stockman leading the fight against import restrictions. When no agreement could be reached, the free-traders suggested the matter go directly to President Reagan for his decision. That decision almost certainly would have gone against Lewis.

But Lewis protested, saying the Cabinet should make a last effort at consensus and suggested they start by listing all matters on which they agree. "We were eyeball to eyeball with Lewis, and we blinked," one free-trader told us. The matter was not sent to the president for his decision, keeping alive the auto import question and increasing the possibility of some limitation eventually resulting.

Tip's Strauss Appeal

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill went to his knees to beg Robert Strauss, one of the most effective long guns in the Democratic Party, to fire a blast of anti-Republican oratory at the party's annual fund-raising congressional dinner, originally scheduled for mid-May.

When O'Neill first asked the former party chairman, Strauss said not a chance; taking his family on a long-deferred vacation up the Nile River in Egypt and then to Israel had precedence over everything else. "I have paid my debt to the party," Strauss quipped to O'Neill.

But the speaker wouldn't take no for an answer. He got Strauss to agree to speak if the dinner could be postponed to June. The new date is June 17, and Strauss will speak in the grand ballroom of the Washington Hilton.

To the editor:

In your news accounts of automobile accident I see a driver often is charged "with failing to see his intended movement could be made safely." It seems to me the charge should be "with failing to see his intended movement could not be made safely." This error is repeated in the story on Page A6 of The Daily Reflector of Sunday, Mar. 15. I believe your reporters must pick up the charge verbatim from the police records without noticing how contradictory it is.

I have seen this error in your columns many times in the last three or four years. If you are interested in factual reporting, and I am sure you are, perhaps you may be able to persuade the police to revise this frequent charge to what I believe is in line with the truth.

Home Financed By Employer?

AP Business Analyst
NEW YORK (AP) —

Sooner or later the high cost of housing and money may force employers in boom economic areas into large-scale financing of homes for workers, thus providing a new twist in the housing scene.

Corporate spokesmen generally decry the likelihood, but indications are mounting that they might be forced far more deeply into the housing field than they have been. Otherwise, some of them may soon be facing the identical situation that caused them over the past decade or so to forsake troubled industrial cities: A lack of good, secure, affordable housing within easy commuting distance.

Heretofore, many blue chip concerns have sought to assist transferred employees buy or sell houses, without becoming involved either as long-term lenders or as part-owners. But pressures are mounting.

Companies that fled New York for Fairfield County,

Conn., in part to be closer to what they felt were better housing conditions, now find soaring prices are forcing middle managers into hour-long commutes.

Competition for clerical workers has become intense, especially since the local supply — largely made up of suburban housewives returning to the labor market — seems to be exhausted. Real estate agent report many office workers now must commute more than 30 miles from New York.

Much of the pressure comes from soaring housing prices, at least in part a direct result of the inflow of companies. Dadakis & Co., a corporate real estate broker, says Fairfield is now headquarters for 47 companies in the Fortune magazine list of the 1,000 largest.

"Housing has become a disadvantage," he says. "It's affordable for top executives, but not for middle managers." And with gasoline prices rising, he said, transportation has become a serious impediment.

The extent of the dilemma is realized by recalling that some companies justified their moves by saying it would better enable them to attract young managers, some of whom had been refusing transfers to New York.

In Palo Alto, Calif., where the lowest priced single-family homes are beyond the reach of many professors, Stanford University has sought to protect its reputation by plunging directly into the market, sharing financing costs with resident professors.

A pilot program, called COIN — for coinvestment — enables newcomers to the staff and faculty to obtain houses they would be unable to buy on their own. In the past 18 months, 58 families have bought homes as partners of the university, with each sharing the financial benefits.

Now, the university says, "rising home prices and high interest rates may lead to a major revamping" of the program. Under consideration is what is called the Stanford Shared Appreciation Mortgage, which the university says would permit a family with income of $39,519 to buy a $162,500 home with a down payment of $18,959.

That price, the university says, is equivalent to the least expensive single-family home now available in Palo Alto. Financing would include a conventional first mortgage of $29,794 at 14 percent for 30 years, and a shared appreciation mortgage of $113,748. Total monthly payments, including taxes and insurance, are estimated at $1,097.

For important institutions such as Stanford, and corporations whose success has sparked economic booms in their areas, the alternative to housing assistance appears to be a slow sapping of vitality.

If they cannot obtain affordable housing, workers inevitably must flee to areas where they can afford to live. And potential employees must just as certainly avoid moves that could destroy them financially.

Retirees Hold Area Workshop

Peter Anderson, assistant state director for the American Association of Retired Persons, conducted a leadership workshop recently for five chapters; Ahsoskie, Beaufort County, Greenville, Roanoke Rapids and Rocky Mount, with the Greenville chapter as host.

Attending from the Greenville chapter in addition to Anderson were Lee Williams, president; Polly Dail; Bob Knapp and Elizabeth Deal.

Jim McCombs, state director, and Jim Cook, assistant director, showed a film depicting the history of AARP and the National Retired Teachers Association founded by Dr. Ethel Andrus. AARP area volunteer structure was explained. Working through more than 3,000 local chapters, members are actively involved in community volunteer programs.

Jim Edens, field administrator, pointed out membership benefits. He discussed the reasons people joined the AARP and the need for membership, program and public relations committees to work together.

Chapel Hill spends nearly $40,000 — most of that for membership in the North Carolina Hospital Association which also gets more than $16,000 from the Department of Human Resources as well.

Members of the General Assembly enjoy membership and meetings of the National Conference of State Legislators, and the dues run nearly $40,000 per year.

Education

Second only to the university system in total membership activity is the Department of Community Colleges which spends $176,257 yearly, joining. Other examples are Human Resources, $56,960; Transportation, $34,252; Public Education, $28,445; Commerce, $21,424; and Insurance, $10,072. Other departments fall under the $10,000 yearly mark.

As can be seen from titles of many of the associations, a major function is lobbying and public relations, both in the U.S. Congress, and in the national press. Thus, many of your tax dollars go directly at efforts to increase those tax dollars for programs under consideration in legislative chambers.

Auditors pinpointed five distinct purposes of membership in various associations: accreditation of programs; lobbying; professional training and development; technical assistance; and simple membership.

On the long list are associations for aviation officials, development agencies, transportation officials, highway safety, child welfare, mental retardation, drug abuse, welfare, hospital accreditation, college business officers, libraries, travel, equal opportunities of various sorts, and a host of organizations in various fields of education.

'Wraparound' Mortgages

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal National Mortgage Association will offer its own "wraparound" mortgages after March 30 in an effort to increase earnings. FNMA, a private corporation, holds mortgages it has been sold by retail lenders who continue to handle homeowner payments.

President David O. Maxwell said Wednesday the agency now will offer homeowners mortgages to replace old mortgages to permit them to cash in on the increased market value of their homes or sell their homes more easily.

level job within reach of William Van Cleave, the tough defense expert who was read out of any possible Pentagon job by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

The likeliest possibility: running the important National Foreign Assessment Center, known by its acronym as NFAC at the Central Intelligence Agency. Van Cleave would be the No. 3 CIA official if he is offered and accepts the job.

Another post high on the list for Van Cleave is ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), a job with prestige and substance held by such luminaries in the past as the late David K.E. Bruce and Donald Rumsfeld. President Reagan will personally decide which job to offer Van Cleave, the Ph.D. who is a former Marine enlisted man with a professor's rank at the University of Southern California.

way through college in three years. The younger boy, 13, sold Collier's and the Saturday Evening Post so vigorously that he earned enough to get through law school. The mother worked nine hours a day in a book store at 25 cents an hour. The whole family sort of doubled up in grandmother's rooming house. By any current definition, they were truly needy.

There wasn't any Medicaid then. There wasn't any Section 8 housing subsidy. There weren't any Pell Grants for college tuition. No food stamps. No Aid to Families with Dependent Children. No tax-financed legal aid. But there was something else — a sense of self-reliance, a gritty determination to survive and get ahead, a feeling that nobody owed us a living. In the cities and on the farms, the rule was make-do; the rule was root, hog, or die.

The Reagan proposals would not approach a return to that independence. The president is recommending changes that would have a relatively small effect on most beneficiaries. Cumulatively, his reductions in federal spending would add up to a giant step toward fiscal sanity. Mr. Reagan is trying to get a rope on a runaway horse. If the Humane Society will quiet down, he may yet succeed.

Find More Than Half Of Teen-Agers Are Drinkers

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer
RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Most high school students drink alcoholic beverages and about a third of them are moderate to heavy drinkers, say researchers who conducted a nationwide study of alcohol use by adolescents.

"It's very clear that a large proportion of adolescents have some experience with alcohol," said J. Valley Rachal of the Research Triangle Institute, director of the study.
"By the 10th grade about seven of 10 can no longer be called abstainers. But it doesn't really matter

whether it's 70 percent or 80 percent. The fact is that a large portion of adolescents have at least some experience with alcohol, and a large percentage drink fairly regularly," Rachal said.
The findings reported this week are from a follow-up study of earlier research conducted in 1974. That study surveyed 13,000 students in grades seven through 12. The present study sampled 5,000 students in grades 10 through 12 taken at random from the 48 contiguous states and the District of Columbia.

"Several studies in recent years seem to indicate that girls' drinking is becoming more and more like that of boys," Rachal said. And RTI data showed the gap is closing.

In 1974, 18 percent more girls than boys were drinking at "moderate" levels or less.
But the 1978 figures showed the difference was reduced to 13 percent. In addition, the 19 percent advantage boys held as "heavy" drinkers decreased to 14 percent in the latest study.

"We called the teen-ager a heavier drinker if he or she drank at least once each week and had at least five drinks on a typical drinking occasion," Rachal said.

RTI's social scientists called an adolescent a "problem drinker" if he or she was drunk at least six times in a year, or experienced negative consequences of drinking in such areas as friends, family, school,
police or driving.

Rachal said three out of 10 high school drinkers fit into the category of "problem drinkers." But the data shows more than three of five teen-agers drink at least once a month.

The problem can also be seen on the nation's highways. "About one in four reported having driven after having a good bit to drink," Rachal said. "And one in 10 reported having done this at least four time in the past year."

Teen-agers with drinking problems tend to be involved in other problem behaviors, the survey indicated.

"The evidence we have shows that young people who drink heavily tend to do less well in school than those who don't drink as much," Rachal said. "They also tend to smoke marijuana more, and are involved in more

'unconventional' behavior."

But Rachal said there is no evidence that alcohol leads to the problems. He said he believes instead that the problems share a common set of causes.

Dr. Richard Jessor, director of the Institute of Behavioral Science at the University of Colorado at Boulder, has advanced a theory explaining adolescent alcohol use in terms of a number of factors. He has found relationships between drinking and lower academic expectations, lower religious interest and a greater interest in peers than in parents.

Jessor warned that any program aimed at reducing alcohol misuse runs the risk of treating a symptom while missing a far deeper problem.

The RTI study bears out Jessor's theories in a number of areas. Heavier drinkers were found to be three times more likely to receive lower grades in school than higher ones. And the study shows drinkers tend to associate with peers who drink, while non-drinkers stick with companions who do not.

The study also showed that drinkers tend to reinforce positive attitudes toward alcohol. They were the respondents most likely to say they drink "to have a good time."

But the strongest influence on teen-age drinking seems to be parental attitudes about alcohol, and their behavior in the home. Adolescents from non-drinking homes were four times more likely to abstain from drinking than those whose parents approved of drinking.

But while alcohol use by teen-agers tends to follow parental encouragement, the study showed that some of the heaviest drinkers come from homes in which parents were "strongly disapproving" of drinking.

Many of the 1974 findings were reinforced by the 1978 study. Blacks were still found to drink considerably less than whites, with non-white adolescents classified as heavy drinkers only one-third as often as whites. And "religiousness" was still found to be associated with abstinence.

The study also showed that alcohol use is least prevalent among teen-agers affiliated with fundamentalist denominations like the Mormons and Baptists. It is more common among Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Jews — and most prevalent among Catholics.

Researchers found one surprising change in geographic regions, however.
The West — found in 1974 to be equal to the Northeast and North Central regions in high alcohol use — dropped considerably in 1978.

Rachal said teen-age drinking there is now about the same as in the South, which continues to have the highest proportion of abstainers in the nation.

Rachal said it was possible that the decline in the West came about because of legislation sweeping the country to increase the drinking age.
In the complex swamp of data on the subject, he said that was one of the few known ways to stop drinking by the young.

"Our studies have shown that ease of availability is related to heavier drinking," he said. "Those states that allow 18-year-olds to purchase alcohol have heavier drinking. And that's reflected in a growing tendency to move the laws to a higher age."

The study also showed that despite laws against minors purchasing alcohol, seven of 10 high school students said they could "usually" or
"always" obtain it.

Fewer than one in 10 said they could not obtain alcohol at all.

WEATHER FORECAST — Snow flurries are expected in the forecast period until Friday morning, from the Ohio Valley into the Northeast. Snow flurries are also predicted for the northern Plains. Showers are due for most of California and the western intermountain region. Cold weather is expected from the northern Plains to the Northeast and warm weather for most of the southern tier. (AP

tomorrow, but winter isn't taking the hint.

Gale warnings are in effect over the Outer Banks and a travelers advisory continues over the northern mountains for snow accumulating several inches today.

A late winter storm moved across North Carolina Wednesday night with occasional light rain over much of the state.

Colder air spread down across the state during the night with the precipitation changing to snow over the northern mountains and the northern coastal areas.

A few light snow flurries were also reported over the northern piedmont and coastal plain areas this morning but with no accumulations.

Gusty north winds prevail over the state on the heels of

is responsible for the much colder air that is being pumped into the area this morning.

High temperatures today will be 20 degrees colder over some areas of the state with afternoon temperatures remaining in the 30s over the north and west.

Some light snow flurries will linger into tonight over the northern mountains and northwest piedmont with
Overnight lows will be in the teens in the west to the 20s in WASHINGTON (AP) — The Moral Majority, conceding that a good public servant doesn't have to be a church-going teetotaler, says it will ignore the personal lives of Reagan administration officials as long as they are true believers in political issues the fundamentalist group considers important.

Denying what it called a rumor that it sought to block confirmation of President Reagan's choice to head the Environmental Protection Agency because of the nominee's private life, the group said it never judges nominees on those grounds.

For example, an official of the group said, the Moral Majority is making no judgment on the decision of Reagan and his wife, Nancy, to re-introduce hard liquor into the White House, even though some of its members have complained.

"We are not interested in whether people are drinking or not drinking, are teaching Sunday school or not going to church. We are interested in people who can run the country," said Cal Thomas, the group's vice president for communications.

"We have some Sunday school teachers who are not really good on the issues as we view them and we may have some other people who have an occasional highball who in our view would vote right," he said. "At some point you have to make a distinction on where the personal life leaves off and the political life begins."

In its statement, the Moral Majority, led by the Rev. Jerry Falwell of Lynchburg, Va., denied it had raised objections to the nomination of Anne Gorsuch as head of the EPA on the basis of her relationship with Bob Burford, nominated to head the Bureau of Land Management.

Both are from Denver and both are in the process of getting divorced. The Denver Post said March 12 that they developed a "close personal association" during the time they served in the Colorado House of Representatives.

Thomas said he issued the statement "to kill a rumor that seems to be floating around Washington" that the Moral Majority was working to block Mrs. Gorsuch's nomination out of displeasure with her personal life.

"We are not opposing her," he said. "As far as her conservative credentials are concerned, it would seem she has them together. Her living arrangements, we would say, would be irrelevant to her ability to do the task."

A spokesman at EPA said Mrs. Gorsuch would have no comment. Burford also said he would not comment on the Moral Majority's statement.

Asked to describe his relationship with Mrs. Gorsuch, he said, "She and I are longtime acquaintances." He declined to elaborate.

In its statement, the Moral Majority said, "We have seen no evidence that would cause us to be concerned about (Mrs. Gorsuch's) personal morality, nor do we ever list personal morality as one of our four requirements for public service."

Thomas described its requirements as support for "pro-life, pro-family, pro-moral and pro-American" positions. He said that means, respectively, opposing abortion, honoring the husband-wife relationship, opposing pornography and drug abuse and supporting Israel and a strong national defense.

He said those were ideals that the group supported, and when making political choices, "you opt for the best of what is available. The president has found that Mrs. Gorsuch will do the job he wants done and that's why he nominated her."

Mrs. Gorsuch, a corporate attorney for Mountain Bell Telephone Co since 1975, has drawn stiff opposition from environmental groups who have assailed what they term anti-environmental stands she took in the Colorado Legislature. They also have complained that she knows little about EPA's mission.

Rita Is Running Out Of Secrets

By BRUCE M. SMITH
Associated Press Writer
COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Rita Jenrette, estranged wife of former Rep. John Jenrette, D-S.C., has revealed more "capitol secrets" in a recently-released paperback book.

But, the book doesn't contain much new material. Mrs. Jenrette is apparently running out of secrets to tell.

"My Capitol Secrets," is being promoted by Bantam Books Inc. as the book by "the lady who blew the lid off Washington." It reached the newsstands this week, only a few weeks after Mrs. Jenrette attracted national attention by posing semi-nude in Playboy magazine.

But the "secrets" really aren't new to those who have read her story in the Washington Post or Playboy, or who have seen her on television talk shows.

The 165-page paperback is a compilation of kiss-and-tell stories of sex and sin in Washington and Mrs. Jenrette's cravings for Diet Dr. Pepper.

Mrs. Jenrette also says she has been in contact with her husband since their celebrated squabble on the "Phil Donohue" talk show.

"He phoned me in my hotel suite and said that he was planning to 'smear' me by disclosing, with the help of Jack Anderson, that I had had an abortion and that what Playboy readers saw in the pictorial was head-to-toe plastic surgery," she writes.

"I have never had an abortion or plastic surgery," she huffs in print.

Perhaps the most revealing feature is the diary Mrs. Jenrette kept during the spring of 1980 — from the time her husband first learned of the Abscam probe to the time he was indicted by a Washington grand jury.

She writes of the time she called the Justice Department and "proceeded to give whoever answered the phone a piece of my mind."

"It's so hard to sit silently by as you watch people unjustly destroying your husband. I can't seem to control my impulse to tell people exactly what I think of them, even though by doing so I might be playing right into John's enemies' hands."

Jenrette was convicted last October of taking a $50,000 bribe from FBI agents posing as aides to phony Arab sheiks. He has appealed that conviction.

Mrs. Jenrette writes that people still ask her how she could think her husband was innocent after seeing the evidence and hearing the jury's verdict.

"Well the answer to that is the same as the answer to people who want to know why I still believed he was faithful after seeing him in the arms of another woman: I loved John."

But since that time, Mrs. Jenrette has filed for divorce and the parting of the ways hasn't been easy.

The book does include some of the mandatory spicy gossip. Mrs. Jenrette again tells of the now-famous night when she and her husband made love on the Capitol steps.

"We wrapped my coat around us, and we made love standing in the shadow of a large column. I remember thinking how cold, very cold, it was but how warm it was next to John. We giggled like school kids as members of Congress walked by," she writes.

"Tip O'Neill walked by, and we waved. He said, 'Hi, John, how are you?' We both said hello to Tip." O'Neill, D-Mass., is Speaker of the House.

Mrs. Jenrette, who plans a career as a singer and an actor, writes that she thinks of herself as a survivor.

"I no longer believe a wife is required to stand by her husband unless he's willing to treat her as he would want to be treated himself. I never lied or cheated on John. I'm proud of that. I'm not proud of the pain and the punishment I endured, but I will say it has made me a stronger woman today than I was five years ago," she writes.

"I'm on my own now. I have no more secrets to share."

Unaffected By Negative Poll

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House says an unprecedented negative poll rating for a 2-month-old administration is having no effect on policy decisions.

The 24 percent disapproval in a recent Gallup Poll probably results from an economic program "designed to change the direction of government," White House Press Secretary James Brady said Wednesday.

REBUILDING PORT JIDDA, Saudi Arabia (AP) — West Germany and Saudi Arabia have agreed to finance the $300 million reconstruction of Sudan's Red Sea port of Sowakin, the Saudi newspaper Al-Madina al-Munawara reports.

Fears Japanese Turn To Europe

WASHINGTON (AP) — West German Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff is warning that U.S. restrictions on Japanese auto imports would mean increased Japanese car shipments to Europe — and that European countries would react within two weeks.

The reaction, he said after meeting with President Reagan on Wednesday, would not be limited to Japanese automobiles. West Germany is the only country in Western Europe without formal or informal barriers to Japanese cars.

Panel Okays Restoring Fired Judge's Benefits

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A House Committee approved Wednesday a bill that would restore retirement benefits to ousted judge Linwood T. Peoples, one day after it violated a legislative rule requiring public notice of meetings.

The approval by the House Committee on Pensions and Retirement came despite demands by the North Carolina Bar Association for a public hearing.

The ailing Peoples would gain $386.87 a month retirement and a $155 per month survivors' benefit to his widow if the bill, already passed by the Senate, is passed by the House.

The North Carolina Supreme Court removed Peoples from his District Court judgeship in December 1978 for allegedly mishandling traffic cases.

Charged with embezzlement and other criminal violations in the same incidents, he was acquitted in three separate trials.

Peoples had been elected a Superior Court judge but was removed three days before he was scheduled to be sworn in. Under state law, the removal required him to forfeit any judicial retirement benefits and barred him from holding any judicial office.

"It is generally felt in my district that he was overly punished," said Sen. James D. Speed, D-Franklin, sponsor of the bill.

Speed also said that Peoples' failing health had prevented him from earning a living as a lawyer.

Rep. T.W. Ellis, D-Vance, chairman of the committee, conceded in an interview with the News and Observer of Raleigh that he had violated a House rule Tuesday when he held an unannounced committee meeting on the bill.

Only a few hours later, Bar Association President Dewey Wells of Elizabeth City released a statement strongly opposing the bill and calling for a public hearing on it.

Ellis denied he was trying to rush the legislation through committee. "I misread the rule," he said.

He called a second meeting on the House floor Wednesday and the measure again passed the committee.

"I just don't see the necessity of a public hearing because we hashed all this out last year, and I think everyone knows what this bill does," Ellis said.

Several legislators said it is unlikely the bill would be sent back to the committee so a public hearing could be held.

Wells said he had sought a public hearing so that Judge Edward B. Clark of the N.C.

Court of Appeals, chairman of the state Judicial Standards Commission, could testify.

During a committee session Wednesday, Speed said the Clark had been invited to appear before the Senate Judiciary II Committee on March 5, when the bill was being considered.

Committee minutes showed a Senate secretary called Clark on March 5 to invite his testimony, but that the judge could not be reached.

"I don't know why they couldn't reach me. I was in my office all that day," Clark said.

Upkeep Had Disparities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The five black schools in the University of North Carolina had more run-down buildings than three white institutions examined in a 1978-1979 study, a structural engineer testified at a Department of Education hearing Wednesday.

Ellis P. Thomas of Thomas and Olive said the study revealed that black institutions were in need of $16.2 million in maintenance compared to $15 million at the three white schools buildings, which have twice the square footage.

Thomas testified at an administrative hearing on an attempt to cut off nearly $100 million in annual federal aid to the University of North Carolina system because of failure to remove alleged vestiges of racial discrimination. Building condition is one of several issues in the hearings.

But Thomas added that $40 million recently appropriated by the state General Assembly would correct the disparities. Some projects already are underway, he said.

Thomas and Olive Inc. and The Raleigh architectural planning firm of Haskins and Rice were contracted by the university to examine buildings at black and white institutions which had comparable academic offerings.

He said the needed repairs ranged from general structural problems to plumbing and electricity.

Thomas said the worst black school was Winston-Salem State while East Carolina University was the worst white institution.

Term Damage Insignificant

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most soldiers and airmen given the hallucinogenic drug LSD in experiments apparently suffered no "significant damage," the Pentagon says.

In a report on the experiments conducted between 1955 and 1967, the Army said Wednesday the subjects suffered about the same rate of physical and mental illness as the general population. The Pentagon has admitted the experiments on 741 volunteers violated its rules and disregarded ethical standards.

Shuttle's Rehearsal

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The 33-hour simulated countdown for the Columbia — a dress rehearsal for the space shuttle's maiden flight next month — was completed successfully today, a spokesman for the Kennedy Space Center said.

"It went super. Everything went real well" with the simulated ignition at 7:25 a.m. EST, marking the end of the test run which began late Tuesday, said National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman Mark Hess.

The rehearsal was a dry run of what astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen will be doing on launch day, Hess said.

"The reason (for the test run) was to establish a good time frame, to know how long the pre-launch activities will take on launch day," he said.

Early today, just as will be done on the actual launch day, the flight team was awakened by NASA officials, given breakfast, suited up and taken to the launch pad, Hess said. He said the activities took two hours and 25 minutes.

The shuttle is scheduled for its first blastoff into space on a 54-hour voyage during the week of April 5.

Hess said repairs still need to be completed on the insulation of the craft's huge fuel tank.

Then two exercises involving the loading of propellants will precede the countdown for the first launch.

The actual launch date, already two years behind schedule, should be set by the end of this month, he said.

Young and Crippen have practiced simulated liftoffs and flights many times previously, but this was the first time the whole countdown process had been tied together, Hess said.

"That was the final dress rehearsal for the launch from the standpoint of a running countdown," Hess said.

Officials also successfully tested a simulated shut-down sequence of the shuttle's engines. Hess said a premature shutdown of one engine during the actual countdown would trigger the same effect in the other engines so the count could be picked up and resumed later.

Once the reusable space shuttle is fully operational, it will be the "workhorse" of the U.S. space program. It is designed to take scientists and astronauts into space and return them to Earth, gliding on wings like an airplane.

In April's flight, the shuttle is to land at Edwards Air Force Base in California on its return trip.

Bus Ridership Reported Up

The Greenville Area Transit (GREAT) system was one of ten publicly-owned systems in the state recording increases in ridership for the period from September of 1979 to September of 1980, according to the N.C. Department of Transportation.

A spokesman at D.O.T. said that the Greenville system reported an increase of 4.63 percent in ridership as overall transit system usage was up throughout the state. Only one city, Asheville, experienced a drop in ridership for the period (5.12 percent).

Statewide, ridership on publicly-owned systems rose nearly 4.5 million from the 1979 to 1980 reporting period and transit revenues across the state increased by $2.7 million. The transit report said the revenue figure marked the most significant increase since the 1973-74 oil embargo.

The Charlotte Transit System recorded the strongest gains in ridership, posting an increase of 20 percent. Other increases were noted in: Fayetteville, 15.9 percent; Raleigh, 13.7 percent; Gastonia, 13.3 percent; Chapel Hill, 12.55 percent; Wilmington, 11.6 percent; Winston-Salem, 8.31 percent; High Point, 6.72 percent; and Salisbury, 3.10 percent.

The City of Wilson assumed ownership of the transit system there last September and was not included in the D.O.T. report.

Budget Cuts....

grams ranging from unemployment benefits and Social Security to food stamps and welfare.

While Reagan was generally getting his way in the Senate, he was winning another victory in another committee of Congress.

The House Ways and Means Committee gave its initial endorsement to $8.8 billion in spending cuts in social programs it oversees and a $50.4 billion tax cut, nearly identical to the president's request.

The vote in the Democrat-controlled committee was unanimous despite the reservations by some members about specific cutbacks proposed by the administration.

But in the Senate Budget Committee, the majority Republicans sometimes had to overcome Democrat opposition as they voted for abolishing the $3.6 billion public service jobs program, a reduction of more than $1 billion in education programs and a $2 billion cut in some Social Security programs.

The committee also backed Reagan's call to slash food stamp expenditures by nearly $1.5 billion, and it called for reducing the budget for school lunch programs by $1.5 billion.

However, it rejected Reagan's proposal for a 30 percent cut in a program that provides milk for pregnant mothers and infant children, voting to spend $223 million that the president wanted cut.

And it voted to restore $63 million Reagan wanted to cut from elementary and secondary education, aid for the handicapped and youth training programs.

Republicans rebuffed attempts by Democrats to restore $500 million for the Urban Development Actions Grants that are popular with many mayors, and the committee overwhelmingly rejected a move by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum to close $3.9 billion in so-called tax loopholes for the oil industry.

Technically, the committee is drafting instructions to the other committees of Congress, which have broad discretion in deciding how to make reductions among programs under their jurisdictions.

Among other actions Wednesday, the Budget Committee voted 15-3 to support Reagan's call for ending the Social Security minimum benefit of $122 a month, a move affecting relatively few Americans on retirement.

Doctor's Day Proclaimed By Mayor

March 30 has been proclaimed by Mayor Don McGlohon as "Doctor's Day" in Greenville and Pitt County "in appreciation of the outstanding service rendered by members of this profession."

McGlohon said the doctors "have helped to establish our city as one of the great medical centers of the world."

He said they have "demonstrated the highest skill and professional achievement, and have won the admiration and respect of the community."

It has been the custom of the Woman's Auxiliary to the Pitt County Medical Society since 1942 to sponsor an annual observance in recognition of the contributions made by doctors, he reported.

"Although this observance does not extend beyond the members of the medical profession and their wives and families," he said, "it is appropriate that the city government extend its greetings on behalf of all citizens."

Ask OPEC Assistance

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Kenya's energy minister urged the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries today "in the spirit of brotherly love" to give more financial and technical aid to non-oil producing Third World countries.

Minister John Henry Okwango called for assistance in developing new and renewable sources of energy, direct financial investments by OPEC members and increased imports of goods and services by OPEC countries from Kenya and other non-oil producing Third World nations.

He also asked OPEC for technological exchanges in the field of energy, more grants and loans on concessional terms, assurances of steady oil supplies at fair prices and expansion of balance of payments support.

"We are keen to increase direct government-to-government oil transactions to drastically reduce or eliminate the enormous profits made by middlemen, or on the spot market, at the expense of both oil producers and consumers," he said.

Okwango spoke at the opening of a three-day workshop for 40 African journalists sponsored by OPEC.

Weinberger Considers New Builder Of Trident

By JANE ANDERSON

Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says he's committed to the Trident submarine but is thinking about having it built someplace other than the Electric Boat shipyard in Groton, Conn.

Weinberger told the House Appropriations defense subcommittee Wednesday he is "seriously contemplating" finding another shipyard to build Trident subs, and he refused to rule out having them built overseas.

"I'm not going to give up any alternative to get that submarine built," he said.

The Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics in Groton, Conn., is the only shipyard in the nation now equipped to construct the giant missile-firing Trident submarines.

"The Trident program thus far has been a disappointment to me... because of problems with the manufacturer," Weinberger said.

The Navy has no other yard it can turn to at the moment to build Trident submarines, but the country's other submarine yard, in Newport News, Va., does construct the SSN 688 class attack submarines. Electric Boat also builds the Los Angeles class subs. Both yards are private.

Weinberger said he ordered Navy Secretary John Lehman on Tuesday to give contracts for three SSN 688 attack submarines to Newport News Shipbuilding instead of Electric Boat.

"There's a lot of pain and suffering" in Connecticut because of the contract denial, he said, "but I've gone through a lot of pain and suffering" because of the Electric Boat performance.

The Navy has not built ships at any of its own yards for several years, but several top-ranking Navy officials have advocated outfitting a Navy yard to build SSN 688 attack submarines.

Asked by Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., about the possibility of building Tridents at a Navy yard, the secretary said he was "inclined against it" at this time.

Since Electric Boat won the contract for the first Trident in 1974, it has been awarded contracts for seven other Trident submarines.

The first Trident, the USS Ohio, will not be ready for delivery before December 1981, two years and eight months behind schedule. The Navy now estimates the cost of one Trident at $1.2 billion.

The nuclear-powered Trident ballistic missile submarine will carry 50 percent more missiles than the Polaris-Poseidon class submarines.

Navy Rear Admiral James D. Murray, Jr., told the House Appropriations military construction subcommittee Wednesday that the Navy is projecting delays of up to about 14 months each for most of the Trident subs being built by Electric Boat.

He said the firm has not given the Navy estimates of ship construction schedules for the Tridents except for the Ohio.

Electric Boat General Manager P. Takis Veliotis has been asked to appear before the House Armed Services' seapower subcommittee March 25 to answer questions about the shipyard's problems.

Must Face Gas Tax Says Hunt

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Hunt hasn't made his proposal yet for solving the state's highway finance problem, but he is warning legislators they must face the issue this year.

Hunt, in a Wednesday news conference, said the General Assembly must address higher gasoline taxes or some other solution while they are in session this year because the problems may be too difficult for most to handle in 1982 when their re-election races are at hand.

"The highway situation has got to be dealt with this year," Hunt said. "Next year is an election year, and anybody who thinks the Legislature is going to come to Raleigh next year and deal with the highway situation is kidding themselves."

"As you get further on down the road to 1984, it probably gets worse instead of better. And the roads are going down, down, down. The potholes are appearing and they're getting deeper and deeper."

Hunt's remarks came as the latest indication he is moving closer to recommending an increase in the gasoline tax to solve the problems posed by dwindling highway taxes due to increased conservation by motorists.

At a meeting of the N.C. Traffic League on Tuesday, Hunt said motorists "may very well have to pay more in taxes to keep our roads and highways from going to pot and to keep our jobs."

Hunt said his proposal on the highway problem will be announced in late April.

Meanwhile, Hunt is considering proposals to raise the state's 9 1/4 cents per gallon gasoline tax by as much as 5 cents per gallon, to levy a new 4 percent tax on the wholesale price of gas, or to transfer money from the state's general tax revenues.

DIAMOND BAR, Calif. (AP) — An 18-month-old boy bitten on the hand by a baby rattlesnake will be hospitalized at least five more days at County-USC Medical Center, where he was in fair condition, officials said.

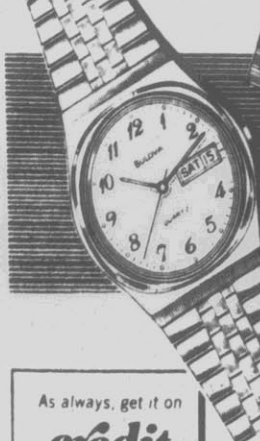

The boy, Steven Leibrecht, had a good chance of recovery, Dr. Willis Wingert, director of the hospital's venom laboratory, said Wednesday.

Khomeini Ruled Not Above Law

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's prosecutor general said today that Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini is not above the law and challenged his decree silencing Moslem fundamentalist foes of President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

The official, Ayatollah Musavi Ardabili, said Khomeini's attempt to silence Moslem hardline critics of the president and end their power struggle was impermissible, Tehran Radio said.

Moslem fundamentalists, led by Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai, have been attacking Bani-Sadr since the president's supporters clashed with Moslem militants at a Tehran University rally March 5. The hardliners claim Bani-Sadr ordered his supporters to attack the militant hecklers, more than 50 of whom were injured.

"If we start saying our laws do not treat the president, the speaker of the Majlis (Parliament), the prime minister and even the imam (Khomeini) himself in the same way as that girl hit at the university or the boy who was stabbed, such logic cannot be considered Islamic," Ardabili was quoted as saying.

"All remain equal before the law," he said, adding, "So far this has been declared verbally, but should there be a case in the Islamic Republic, we will translate it into action." The radio report did not elaborate.

The statement by Ardabili, a supporter of the Moslem hardliners, appeared to hint the president would be tried if an investigation now under way finds grounds to charge him in connection with the March 5 clash.

It also signaled the hardliner's anger over Khomeini's apparent siding with Bani-Sadr in the power struggle.

The 80-year-old revolutionary patriarch intervened in the lengthy squabble last Monday, calling in Bani-Sadr and his opponents — including Chief Justice Ayatollah Mohammed Beheshti, Parliament Speaker Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani and Prime Minister Rajai — for a showdown at his home.

Khomeini ordered all of them to quit making speeches in public until the war with Iraq, now in its sixth month, is over. He also ordered the formation of a three-man commission to arbitrate the power struggle. The commission will include one representative of the president, one chosen by his opponents and one picked by Khomeini.

Bani-Sadr praised Khomeini's ruling and said he would soon name his representative to the arbitration commission.

Ardabili said his interpretation of Khomeini's order was neither inconsistent with Khomeini's position nor against the position of the president, Tehran Radio said.

N.C. Senate Approves Equality Divorce Measure

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — After two months of debating and rewriting, the state Senate has almost unanimously approved a bill which supporters say is aimed at recognizing the contribution of housewives to a marriage.

The Senate voted 46-2 Wednesday in favor of the bill, which would divide property equally between a husband and wife if they divorce. The measure now goes to the House.

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gastonia, introduced the bill in January. But the Senate Judiciary III Committee proposed a substitute measure, which bogged down after it reached the Senate. By Wednesday, a total of nine amendments had been proposed and about half of them were incorporated in the bill.

The bill would authorize the courts, upon application by either spouse, to divide equally property acquired during the marriage. But the bill includes a list of factors, to be considered in dividing the property, that could justify one spouse receiving more property than the other.

The factors include the income of each spouse, the health of the individuals and the length of the marriage.

Amendments approved Wednesday would add consideration of tax consequences to those factors. They also would delay implementation of the measure from July 1 until Oct. 1.

Gov. Jim Hunt, in his weekly news conference, urged the General Assembly to quickly approve the measure.

"It is high time that wives in North Carolina who work as equal partners on farms, in businesses and in the home be treated equitably in the distribution of property that is acquired during a marriage," he said.

Sen. Robert Swann, D-Asheville, a leading opponent of the bill, restated his opposition to the measure Wednesday and proposed an amendment that would bar husbands or wives who abandon their spouse from gaining property. The amendment was defeated 20-25.

"I have tried honestly to help this bill, to make it where we can live with it and make it so judges understand what we're doing," he said. "But where a judge has absolute discretion, he doesn't even know what discretion he has."

Swann and Sen. Walter Cockerham, R-Greensboro, each announced they would pair votes with absent senators who supported the bill. As a result, the computer printout on the vote showed the tally to be 44-0.

At least one senator who had proposed several amendments to the measure urged its passage Wednesday.

"This bill is three times as good as it was when it first came to the floor," said Sen. James McDuffie, D-Charlotte, who voted for the bill Wednesday.

McDuffie has introduced a bill calling for a study commission on equitable distribution of property. He said Wednesday he hoped a study commission would be approved in addition to Mrs. Marvin's bill.

Money

Legislative subcommittees are nearing an end to their search for $200 million in budget reductions, with education programs targeted to make up the bulk of the cuts.

The House and Senate Base Budget Committee will meet

Tuesday to begin receiving subcommittee reports on the cuts, but a number of legislators already have begun expressing reservations about the spending reductions they have identified.

"These are just recommendations, and we hope none of it will come to pass," said Rep. Gordon Greenwood, D-Asheville.

Meanwhile, Gov. Jim Hunt said at a news conference that proposed education cuts could be "disastrous."

"North Carolina has made great strides in teaching," Hunt said. "To turn our backs on that now would be the worst possible thing this Legislature could do."

A base budget subcommittee on education has drawn a list of cuts amounting to $84 million next year in public schools, $32.5 million in the University of North Carolina System and $10.6 million in the community college system.

The subcommittee has set priorities for making the cuts. It identified only $7.1 million in all three segments of education to be cut immediately, and those cuts fall mainly in reductions of administrative jobs.

The other areas, including large reductions in the number of teacher aides and increases in some classroom size, would come only if more spending must be reduced to balance the state budget.

Loans

A subcommittee of the Senate Banking Committee voted to recommend a change in two bills raising state usury ceilings, pegging the new limits to a rate set by the North Carolina banking commissioner.

The subcommittee went along with the proposal by Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Raleigh, to have the commissioner set the rate based on a formula tied to the national interest rate for six-month Treasury bills.

Both bills would raise legal limits on interest rates that can be charged for consumer and small-business loans, with one bill dealing with installment and second-mortgage loans and the other dealing with contract loans, such as 90-day notes. The limits would not cover interest rates on loans of more than $25,000, which have no legal limitation.

Under Johnson's proposal, the limit would be set by the commissioner every month. The limit would be 6 percentage points above the Treasury bill rate, rounded off to the next highest one-half percentage point.

Currently, Johnson said, the six-month Treasury rate is 12.65 percent. Under the proposed formula, the legal interest rate limit would then be 19 percent.

The bills also include a minimum limit of 16 percent, so that when the Treasury bill rate falls below 10 percent, the legal limit on interest rates would go no lower than 16 percent.

That provision was opposed by Sen. Charles Vickery, D-Chapel Hill, who noted that the Senate voted to delete a similar provision — at 18 percent — when one of the bills was on the Senate floor earlier this month. The banking industry, which is vigorously pushing both bills, withdrew the bills and came up with the new proposal following Senate amendments.

The bills were sent to the full banking committee, where a vote could come today.

Insurance

An industry representative told the House Insurance Committee the cost of automobile liability insurance could increase another 4 percent when the current 6 percent limit on rate increases expires July 1.

Ruffin Bailey, a Raleigh attorney representing the American Insurance Association, predicted rates for high-risk drivers covered by the North Carolina Reinsurance Facility could increase as much as 10 percent.

The ceiling will expire July 1 unless the General Assembly takes action before that time.

Bailey also criticized the committee's proposed substitute bill to eliminate surcharges for safe drivers, saying the measure raises serious constitutional questions.

The bill would require insurance companies turn over to the reinsurance facility all policies of drivers who have been involved in accidents and earned points for the mishaps. The facility insures those drivers considered to be high risks by insurance companies.

Bailey said the measure might interfere with the insurance industry's right to contract for business. The committee decided to ask the state Attorney General's office for an opinion on whether the measure would be constitutional.

Washington

A group of legislative leaders, both Democrats and Republicans, planned to travel to Washington today for a meeting with Vice President George Bush and to attend a series of meetings by the National Conference of State Legislatures.

As part of the conference, which draws lawmakers from legislatures around the country, the group was to attend briefings with Congressional leaders and President Reagan.

The 10 North Carolina legislators were to meet privately with Bush this afternoon, however, in a session arranged by Rep. Harold Brubaker, R-Asheboro, former state chairman of the Reagan-Bush campaign.

Brubaker said the meeting was set up to allow legislators to talk with the vice president about the administration's proposed budget cuts and their impact on the states.

The five senators were flying to the meeting in a state plane, while the House members were flying commercially at state expense, said John Allen, legislative services officer.

School Assaults

The House voted tentative approval to a bill raising the penalties for assault on school personnel. The sponsor, Rep. Aaron Plyler, D-Monroe, said it would raise penalties from a $50 fine to a maximum $500 fine and up to two years in prison. The vote was 104-1, and a final vote was set for Thursday.

Ferry Protest Support Aired

OCRACOKE, N.C. (AP) — Angry Ocracoke Islanders got some support Wednesday from state officials in their fight against a state Board of Transportation order ending reservations for ferries to and from the mainland.

Gov. Jim Hunt directed the Transportation Department on Wednesday to look into a reservation system for local residents only.

Transportation Board member Marc Basnight of Manteo attended a public meeting Tuesday night on the island and said he had made a mistake and now would support a continuation of reservations.

And state Rep. Howard Chapin, D-Beaufort, said he has asked for a meeting with Transportation Secretary Tom Bradshaw to discuss the reservation system.

The reservation system allows motorists to book space on the ferries 30 days in advance.

Ocracoke islanders are cut off from the mainland except by several ferries. They say the seven-year-old reservation system is crucial to their mobility and the island's survival as a tourist attraction.

tourism to the Outer Banks.

Bradshaw said there could be a problem implementing a "local residents only" reservations system.

"We are under the impression that the reservation system is like the (ferry) toll system," Bradshaw said, suggesting reservations must be equally available to everyone or to no one.

Bradshaw said he had requested a legal opinion from the Attorney General's Office.

In previous cases, the attorney general has ruled that ferry tolls must be applied to all users of toll ferries and there can be no reduced rate or free service for local residents.

Chapin said he hoped the Transportation Board would consider some changes in its decision at its April meeting, before reservations are to end May 1.

Brenda Vaccaro Planning Wed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Brenda Vaccaro, who rose to stardom in the movie "Midnight Cowboy" and has since won an Oscar nomination and an Emmy, will marry a New York photographer in two months, her publicist says.

Ms. Vaccaro and Charles Cannizzaro met recently through mutual friends in New York, the spokeswoman for Rogers & Cowan Inc. publicity agency said Wednesday.

It will be the third marriage for Ms. Vaccaro, 41, and the second for Cannizzaro, 27.

Ms. Vaccaro received an Emmy as best supporting actress for her role in "The Shape of Things" and was nominated for an Oscar in the same category for her role in "Once Is Not Enough."

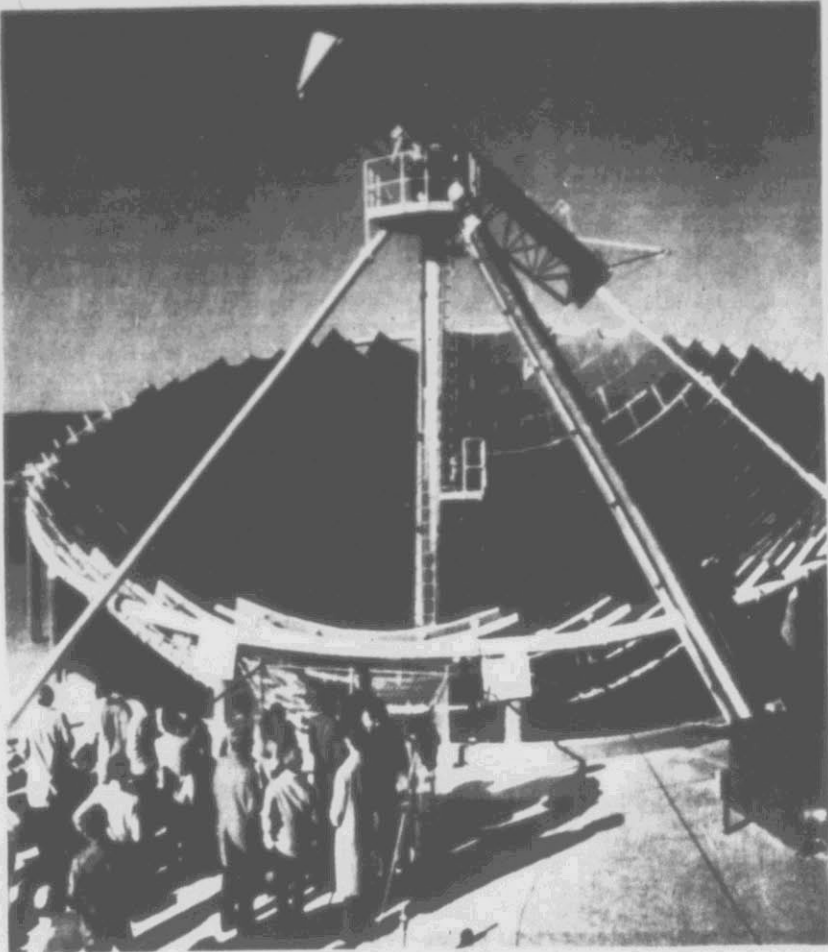

Opponents of the system claimed reservations hurt

About 200 people assembled at the Ocracoke School Tuesday night to argue against the end of reservations. "Our legislators have had a snow job," one speaker said.

Basnight told the crowd he had changed his mind about supporting elimination of the system and said he would vote to restore it.

Hunt said at a news conference Wednesday that the Board of Transportation had thought it had the views of those affected by the end of the reservations system.

However, "The people had not spoken fully and fairly, and I regret that," Hunt said. "I did not make the decision. I think you can make a very strong case for at least having a reservation system for the local residents."

Test Satellite-Killer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A hunter-killer satellite damaged a target satellite in the first full-scale Soviet test of such a weapon in more than three years, Pentagon sources report.

Although the target was not destroyed, the sources said shrapnel from the non-nuclear explosion aboard the hunter spacecraft probably would have disabled the sensitive cameras and electronic equipment spy satellites usually carry.

The hunter vehicle used an early-model radar guidance system to approach the target, said the sources, who asked not to be identified. They said in other tests monitored since late 1977, the Soviets have sought with mixed results to perfect an infra-red system that would home in on heat radiated by the target.

The disclosure Wednesday of the successful test Saturday over Eastern Europe followed by one day an announcement from the Air Force that it will establish a control center at Peterson Air Force Base in Colorado for U.S. military missions in space, including manned space shuttle flights.

U.S. officials, who generally believe the Soviets are ahead in space weapons, have been paying close attention to Soviet work on killer satellites. Such weapons could knock out communications satellites, thus cutting links to commanders in the field, and could blind photographic satellites keeping watch on Soviet military moves.

Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said in his annual report to Congress last month that "most of our military space systems are vulnerable to damage and require survivability enhancements to assure operation in a hostile environment."

What this means is that the United States has been working on ways to "harden" some satellites so they could survive a conventional anti-satellite attack or a remote nuclear blast.

The most promising U.S. anti-satellite system calls for a "high-technology interceptor using a miniature vehicle which directly impacts the (target) satellite" as opposed to the Russian technique of a nearby explosion. The launch vehicle would be an F-15 fighter.

Borge Plays For An Ex-Hostage

CHRISTIANSTED, U.S. Virgin Islands, (AP) — Comedian-pianist Victor Borge played and sang "God Bless America" at a hotel dinner-dance at the request of a former American hostage who was on a free vacation here.

Air Force Col. Tom Schaefer made the request Tuesday night at a St. Patrick's Day dinner-dance at a hotel on the island of St. Croix, a part of the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The party was held in honor of the 52 former hostages, all of whom had been invited by the hotel for a week's free vacation in the Caribbean. Seven accepted.

Schaefer said he wanted to recall the moment on the final leg of the journey home after his release. He said that "God Bless America" was played over the jet's radio system once it entered U.S. air space.

"There was little talking and many tears," he said.

Top Teams Again Put It On Line In Upset City

By HERSHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Upset City, alias the NCAA basketball tournament, resumes tonight with Virginia, North Carolina and Notre Dame putting their Top Ten rankings on the line and Louisiana State, Indiana and Utah hoping to take advantage of friendly surroundings.

The East and West Regionals tip off tonight with the Midwest and Midwest coming up Friday night. The regional championships to determine the Final Four will be played Saturday and Sunday.

The fifth-ranked Virginia Cavaliers will get things rolling against No. 15 Tennessee in the opener of a doubleheader at the Omni in Atlanta. And All-American Ralph Sampson, their 7-foot-4 star, put things in perspective for all the remaining games, as well as most of those already played.

"It will be a battle," he said. "It will be a war."

The 48-team skirmish already has claimed 10 members of The Associated Press Top Twenty among its victims, including top-rated DePaul, runner-up Oregon State and third-ranked Arizona State.

In the Atlanta nightcap, seventh-ranked Notre Dame meets No. 16 Brigham Young. Meanwhile, the University of Utah, ranked 14th, will be at home in Salt Lake City against sixth-ranked North Carolina. In the second game, No. 19 Illinois faces Kansas State.

Friday night starts with a twinbill at Bloomington, Ind., where the Cinderella Hawks of St. Joseph's (Pa.) meet Boston College and the hometown Indiana Hoosiers tackle upstart Alabama-Birmingham.

At the New Orleans Superdome, little more than an hour down the road from Baton Rouge, fourth-ranked LSU faces No. 20 Arkansas after intrastate rivals Kansas and Wichita State meet for the first time in 25 years.

All four teams in the East have ailing players. Lee Raker, Virginia's third leading scorer, is not expected to start, although he will be available. And Tennessee's Steve Ray developed colitis last month and has been slow to recover.

Orlando Woolridge, one of Notre Dame's key performers, is still slowed by a charley horse and hasn't practiced all week. And BYU's Danny Ainge, the regional's top scorer with a 25-point average, has been bothered by a back ailment. Coach Frank Arnold says his star is 90-95 percent effective.

Utah will have the homecourt advantage but the home uniform disadvantage against North Carolina. That's because the Utes are seeded third in the regional and the Tar Heels are second.

"We may be wearing our home uniforms against Utah, but I can tell you who will have whatever homecourt advantage there is to be had," says Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

The game will match two imposing front lines. North Carolina goes with 6-6 Al Wood, 6-9 James Worthy and 6-9 Sam Perkins while Utah counters with 6-7 Danny Vranes, 6-7 Karl Bankowski and 6-10 Tom Chambers.

Kansas State relies heavily on 6-6 guard Rolando Blackman, whose last-gasp shot eliminated Oregon State. Illinois' strength is in the front court in forwards Eddie Johnson and Mark Smith.

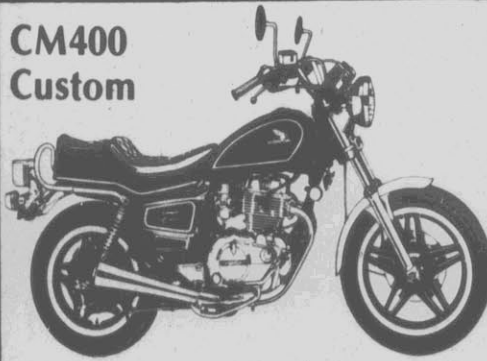

Alabama-Birmingham's Gene Bartow is trying to become the first coach to take three different schools to the Final Four. He did it previously with UCLA and Memphis State.

"We're playing as well as we have all year," he said. "It's going to be tough going into Bloomington to play Indiana. But who knows? At this time of year anything can happen."

The other contest matches a pair of scrappy teams in Boston College and St. Joseph's that have been overshadowed — but not outplayed — by bigger-name teams in the tourney.

Clemson University bombed East Carolina's Pirates, 14-4, yesterday, sending ace hurler Bill Wilder to an early exit.

But Wilder's exit could have come on an even sorer note thanks to a freak hit off his

Pantego's Baker Coach Of Year

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

Pantego High School's Albert Baker has raised a team of champions. In three years, Baker has guided the Warriors to two state championships. And this weekend, Pantego challenges for another 1-A crown as Baker's club faces Tryon in the Greensboro Coliseum for the title.

For his 31-0 record this season and his 53-game winning streak, Baker was named today as Associated Press North Carolina High School Coach of the Year.

Gerald Whitley, whose Goldsboro High School teams have compiled a 73-4 record in his three years as coach, was named girls' coach of the year.

Goldsboro rolled up a 25-0 record this year before falling 82-60 to Cary in the girls 4-A semifinals last week. Cary Plays Chapel Hill for the title this weekend at Elon College.

Whitley, who attended Dillard High School in Goldsboro, graduated from St. Augustine's College in Raleigh in 1970 and earned a master's degree from East Carolina. Except for one year, he has taught in the Goldsboro school system since then.

Baker also coaches the junior varsity basketball team at the Beaufort County school. He says that experience helps him in establishing his style of play at the varsity level.

"I can work with them on fundamentals and get them adjusted to my philosophy and my system," Baker said. "When they become juniors, they can move right in."

Baker's idea has reaped tremendous benefits. The current Pantego team went undefeated as freshmen and won the conference title as sophomores. Of the 11 freshman players who started out with the team in 1977, nine remain.

That unit has forged a record that is quite impressive, but Baker says trying to keep that record intact hasn't been easy.

"It has been quite a bit of pressure. But I've taken a positive attitude about it, and I try to instill this within my players," Baker said.

"Each night we go out on the floor, we have to be mentally and physically ready because we know the other teams are gonna play that much harder to beat us. They want to be the first one to do so," Baker added.

Baker attended Elizabeth City State University on an athletic scholarship. After a brief stint at the old Beaufort County High School, he assumed the role of junior varsity coach at Pantego in 1970.

Even with the championships, Baker sees a much greater benefit from the success of his basketball program — the development of teenagers into responsible young adults.

"I really love sports. The biggest thrill I get out of it is seeing a young man come to me as a freshman ... and then to work with that young man and see him grow and mature, to turn out to be an outstanding basketball player," Baker says.

He said he tries to mold his players into "productive citizens."

"We realize this is going to be a carryover into their everyday life once they leave here," Baker said.

Despite his successful record, Baker said Friday night's state championship game will be his last as coach at Pantego. He said he is giving up the job for personal reasons but that if an opportunity came up at another school, he would jump at the chance.

Lady Bucs At Gator

The Lady Pirate track team opens its outdoor season Saturday as it travels to Gainesville, Fla., to compete in the Lady Gator Relays.

As many as 14 universities and 30 high schools are expected to participate in the high school open and collegiate meet.

Head coach Laurie Arrants is optimistic about the coming season. "We've had good practices, and fairly good weather to practice in. Our injuries are healing up, and the girls are really looking good. If the weather holds for us, I think we can expect a good performance."

TWO NOT ALIKE

YPSILANTI, Mich. (AP) — Eastern Michigan has two tall forwards on its basketball team who both are 6-9 but that's where the resemblance ends.

Jack Brusewitz packs 215 pounds on his 6-9 frame while Jeff Zatkoff is a lean 170 pounds.

Wilder limped around the mound, then collapsed behind the hill, as teammates rushed to him. After a couple of minutes, however, he arose, and resumed his position. But, hindsight being 20-20, coach Hal Baird admitted later that he should have lifted Wilder at that point.

"I was hoping that he could get a couple of more batters, down to a string of lefthanders, then I would change pitchers. I should have taken him out then."

Wilder, trying to shake off the pain, delivered up another double down the left field line to the next batter, followed by a single up the middle and then a homer to left before finally calling it a day.

By then, the Tigers, now 15-7 on the year, had pushed out to a 10-3 lead.

For Wilder, it was his second loss in three starts, and just like in the other defeat, he didn't get a great deal of support, as four errors behind him helped the problems mount.

"We're making Bill pitch out of jams by not playing well behind him," Baird added. "We did a good job behind him last year, and that made a lot of difference."

Baird said that a new approach may be necessary. "We may have to go with our best defensive lineup, and try to manufacture runs." He added that right now, he's not sure what changes he might make.

Baird said that Wilder's knee was swollen, and he was not sure how badly he was hurt. "I'm not sure now, but it looks like he may miss a turn on the mound before he's ready to go again."

In looking for something good about the game, Baird could find little. "There just weren't any bright spots," he said. "They just mauled the hell out of us in every phase of the game."

Men Aided By Sponsor

East Carolina University's men's track team will open the outdoor season Saturday and Sunday at the strong Domino's Pizza Classic-Sunshine Relays in Tallahassee, Fla.

The local Domino's, managed by Tony Eredie, is serving as sponsor for the Pirate team in the meet, donating expense money for the team to travel on.

"This is a very prestigious meet," Pirate coach Bill Carson said. "It may be as good a meet as we will run in this year, although the times probably won't be that good because everyone is just coming outside for the first time."

"I really want to thank Domino's for their support in this meet, both as a national and a local sponsor," Carson added.

That was putting it mildly.

Banging out 14 hits, including three homers, a triple and three doubles, Clemson had everything going for it. Of those extra base hits, three were chalk-dusters along the line and the other was the freak double off Wilder's leg.

The Tigers started the scoring in the second inning. With two away, Scott Powers walked. Bryan Smith followed with a liner down the third-base line that just raised dust at the line and went for a run-scoring triple. Then, Jimmy Key reached on an error, scoring Smith, and another error, on Mahoney's fly to center, scoring Key.

The top of the fifth saw three more runs score for Clemson. With one away, Mahoney, who had three hits, got a single. Greg Guin walked and Bob Pauling cracked a homer to dead center, running it quickly to 6-0.

The Pirates came back to score three in the bottom of the inning and cut the lead in half. With one down, Charlie Waynick reached on an error and Kelly Robinette singled. Mike Sorrell singled to left, loading the bases, and with two away, Todd Evans delivered a triple to center, driving in all three runners.

Clemson came back in the seventh to chase Wilder, scoring five runs. After Mahoney doubled off Wilder's leg, Guin again raised the chalk with a double to left, scoring Mahoney. Pauling singled up the middle, driving in Guin. Glenn Gallaher followed with a

After getting one out, Kirk Parsons saw Steve Van Dyke single off his glove, and an error on the throw after the ball was chased down let Van Dyke go on to second. He moved up on an infield grounder by Scott Powers and scored on a sacrifice fly by Smith.

The final three came in the eighth. Guin singled and Gallagher walked. Craig Robertson then cracked the third homer of the day for the Tigers.

The Pirates came back with one final run in the eighth. Todd Hendley reached on an error and advanced on a wild pitch and out. He scored on Jay Carraway's infield out.

The loss was the third in the last four games for the Pirates and dropped their record to 5-3 on the year.

The two teams are scheduled to meet again today, and the Pirates next face Yale in a doubleheader on Saturday.

Golfers' Conversations: UNC-Bound Trio Tops All-State All About The Weather

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The conversations, as usual at this tournament, were mostly about the weather.

And that means the wind. "I can remember being so confused by the winds, they were swirling so much. I misclubbed on my second shot on No. 9 by three clubs," said Tom Watson.

"I can remember withdrawing because it was so cold," said Lee Trevino. "And, of course, there were recollections of Cesar Sanudo, who won a place in golf's legend and lore when he once withdrew while his tee shot was in the air, heading for the water."

And golf's leading players fully expected more of the same today in the first round of the Tournament Players Championship, the annual championship of the touring pros.

The forecast called for winds to continue in the 45 mile per hour range. They were at that level in Wednesday's practice rounds, strong enough to knock down some tents and overturn portable toilets.

But Watson and Trevino, generally considered the men most likely to succeed in the high event, aren't too concerned.

Given my choice between playing in the wind and not playing in the wind, I'll take the wind every time," said Watson, golf's Player of the Year for the past four seasons and a title contender in his last starts in this event. He's finished second and third in his last two appearances on the tough Sawgrass links which, traditionally, are swept by gale-force winds.

"I don't mind the wind," said Trevino, the defending champion in the tournament that offers $440,000 in total prizes, with $72,000 to the winner.

"The wind doesn't bother me if it doesn't get cold. But if it's 50 degrees, a two-mile wind will kill me. I just can't fight that cold."

And Watson, who admits to some disappointment with his start for the year, appeared confident going into today's first round.

"I'm not disappointed with the season," said Watson, who has had some high finishes but failed to win, "but I'm disappointed with the way I've played."

He's taken the last two weeks off and spent most of the time working on his swing.

"I was kind of tinkering with it earlier in the year," he said. "I'm kind of gone back to my old swing."

And, he said, "I'm playing better. I'm driving it better. I'm looking forward to the week."

He glanced over at Trevino, seated beside him, nodded and said "but this is the guy that's got as good a chance as anyone to win. He's playing very, very well right now."

Also playing very well coming into the start of the event most players call "our own championship," are Tom Kite, Ray Floyd, Johnny Miller and Bruce Lietzke.

Miller and Lietzke each have won twice this young season, each has more than $100,000 in winnings and lead the stroke average. But neither has a history of playing well in the wind.

Kite and Floyd have won the last two titles, and Kite matched the Sawgrass record with a 66 in the pro-am. Both are full of confidence, regardless of the weather.

"Wind makes it tougher for everybody, but I'm playing so well right now I feel like I can hit the shot I need regardless of the conditions," Floyd said.

Other major standouts include Jack Nicklaus, a three-time winner of this title, 1981 tournament winners Hale Irwin, John Cook, David Graham and Andy Bean; South African Gary Player, Masters champ Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Arnold Palmer, Ben Crenshaw and Jerry Pate.

CBS will televise portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Three guards who are planning college careers at the University of North Carolina head a list of 10 players on the 1981 Associated Press All-State Boys' Basketball Team.

On the girls' squad, the Graham High School combination of Donna Trollinger and Robyn Hadley leads the 10-member all-star team, selected by a panel of sports writers from across the state.

All-state selections Robert "Buz" Peterson of Asheville, Mike Jordan of Wilmington Lane and Lynwood Robinson of Southern Wayne signed letters of intent with the Tar Heels during the past season and all are seen as challengers for two openings that will be left by graduation of North Carolina seniors Al Wood and Mike Pepper.

All three are from 4-A schools.

Also named to the boys' team were Cedric Cokely of Greensboro Grimsley, Edward Farmer of Wilson Beddingfield, Vernon Odom of Bandys, Bruce Peartree of Pantego, Ryland Lindsey of Currituck, Kevin Bryant of Tuscola and Curtis Hunter of Southern Durham.

The rest of the girls' team is Gladys Best of Goldsboro, Ranty Killian of East Lincoln, Angie Buford of West Mecklenburg, Alpha Jenkins of Southwest Edgecombe, Pam Hammond of East Bladen, Gwen Austin of Wallace-Rose Hill, Karen Parker of Asheville, and Candy Lucas of Northern Durham.

Peterson, a 6-foot-4 point guard, averaged 24.6 points per game this season. He led his team to a 19-6 record and into the state playoffs where, ironically, the squad was knocked off by Chapel Hill. Peterson has been chosen to play in several nationally recognized prep all-star games.

Jordan, also a 6-foot-4 guard, averaged 27.8 points per game, 12 rebounds and 6 assists. Lane went 19-4 on the year.

Robinson, a 6-foot-1 point guard, was chosen as a pre-season all-America by several magazines. He averaged 16.9 points per game and handed out an average of 7 assists. Robinson missed several games in the regular season because of a knee injury.

Cokely averaged 18 rebounds and 11 assists per contest this season. He shot at a 53 percent clip from the floor and made 63 percent of his free throws. Cokely is a 6-7 forward.

season at the center position, while grabbing 10 rebounds a contest. From the guard spot, Odom averaged 29 points a game while leading his team to a 25-2 record.

Peartree has already been recognized as player of the year in the Beaufort County area. Pantego has lost only one game in the last three years with Peartree occupying one of the guard spots. He is averaging almost 17 points and 6 rebounds a game.

Lindsey, a 6-foot-2½ senior forward, has scored in double figures in 71 of the 72 games he has played for Currituck. He led his 2-A team with a 23.9 scoring average and a 60 percent accuracy from the floor. He was second on his team in assists.

Bryant, headed for Furman, averaged 24.8 points per game during the regular season. He switched between the guard and forward positions at 6-foot-4. Hunter, also 6-4, contributed 24 points a game to Southern Durham's attack while grabbing 10 rebounds a game.

For the girls, Hadley and Trollinger joined forces to average 42 points and 19 rebounds per game. Trollinger has been Mid-State player of the year for the last three seasons. Hadley has averaged 14 points and 10 rebounds in her four years at the Alamance County school.

Best is a 64 percent field goal shooter who has contributed in Goldsboro's 51 straight victories in the last two years. Goldsboro is defending state 4-A champion.

Killian's team lost in the district finals, but she finished with a 30 point-per-game average. She is a 5-foot-10 senior.

Buford is regarded by many to be the best female player in Charlotte. She is a 5-foot-7 guard who averaged 28 points and 12 rebounds a game. Jenkins has led her team to a clean slate in 28 games this year, and only one loss last season. She averaged 16 points and 13 rebounds as a senior.

Hammond, a 5-foot-5 senior point guard, dishes out 6 assists and 4 rebounds a game in addition to her 23.7 points. Austin has scored 1,785 points in her four years at East Bladen. She averaged 21.7 points per game while her team went 22-3 this year.

Parker, player of the year in the Western 4-A conference, is a 5-foot-11 senior who scored almost 20 points per contest. Lucas is the all-time leading scorer at Northern Durham with almost 1,700 points. Selections for player and coach of the year will be announced later this week.

NFL Owners Bar Hayes' Stickum

By JACK STEVENSON
AP Sports Writer

MAUI, Hawaii (AP) — Owners of National Football League teams have decided not to modify the pass interference rule because they felt such changes would lead to more injuries.

The rule gives possession to the offensive team at the point of infraction by a defensive player. Offensive pass interference calls for a 10-yard penalty from the line of scrimmage.

Spokesman Tex Schramm, president of the Dallas Cowboys, said most of the owners were not in favor of changing.

The owners did pass several new rules, most of a minor nature.

One of interest will prohibit the use of stickum on players' hands. Lester Hayes of the Oakland Raiders, who led the NFL in interceptions last season with 17 (including post-season play), smeared stickum on his hands and arms. Many other players also used stickum.

Also, it will be against the rules to use any slippery sub-

Another rule passed concerned quarterbacks intentionally grounding the ball when about to be sacked. Instead of just a 10-yard penalty and loss of down, the defense will have the option of taking that or making the offense put the ball in play from the point of the infraction, plus the loss of down. So there will be no advantage in grounding if a quarterback is about to be hit 25 yards or so behind the line of scrimmage.

In a move for more safety in the game, the owners approved a resolution against chop blocking by interior linemen, a rule already in effect for the ends. Coaches must agree not to coach that type of block where a player goes after the knee of one already engaged by another.

The owners refused to change the rule concerning onside kicks that go out of bounds. The rule says that the kicking team gets a five-yard penalty and must kick again. Proposed by the Competitions Committee, was a change that would give the receiving team the option of taking possession at the point where the kickoff went out of bounds.

Also kept on the books was the rule that the offensive line must hold its set for a second before the ball is snapped. Defeated proposals were for either no delay or a delay of two seconds.

NFL attorney Patrick Lynch takes over the meeting today to explain facets of the suit between the league and the Los Angeles Coliseum Commission-Oakland Raiders.

Lynch was originally scheduled to talk on Wednesday but he flew to San Francisco Tuesday to file an appeal against a ruling by U.S. District Judge Harry Pregerson in Los Angeles that day that denied a request for a change of venue in the anti-trust case against the NFL.

Women To Open Year

"We've been preparing for eight weeks and I think the team is ready mentally and physically," East Carolina's new women's tennis coach Caroline Brown said of her squad.

The Lady Pirates open their season at UNC-Wilmington Friday in a 2:30 p.m. match.

"We're still in challenge matches now, so I don't know what the lineup will be for Friday," she added.

From practice thus far, Brown figures that juniors Karen Jeffreys and Tracey Eubank and sophomores Debbie Christine and Laura Redford will be her top four singles players. The other singles slots are wide open.

E.C.T. will visit Guilford Tuesday for a 2 p.m. match. The team's home opener is on March 26 against Atlantic Christian at 2 p.m.

Boston's Night Turns Into Celtic Nightmare As Sick Hawks Win

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

It should have been Boston's night. Instead it became Boston's nightmare.

The Celtics had won 28 straight games at Boston Garden, and when the Atlanta Hawks came to town they brought only eight healthy bodies. The Celtics, who had moved into first place in the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division the previous day, figured to have a cakewalk.

"We thought with all their injuries they were going to lay down, but they didn't," said Boston's Larry Bird after the Hawks stunned the Celtics 108-97 Wednesday night behind 38 points by All-Star guard Eddie Johnson.

The Philadelphia 76ers took full advantage of Boston's defeat, climbing back into first place by one-half game with a 107-95 decision over the Indiana Pacers. Julius Erving scored 25 points as Philadelphia snapped a three-game losing streak.

The 76ers have the best record in the NBA, 59-18, with five games to play. Boston is at 58-18 with six to go, including two against Philadelphia. Whoever finishes first gets a first-round playoff bye and the home-court advantage in every postseason series.

"Both teams should be complimented on their seasons," said Erving. "We've won 59 games and the Celtics 58. Both teams have played at a tremendous pace. The game here (in Philadelphia) Sunday against the Celtics is an important game and probably will determine which one of us wins the Atlantic Division."

In other NBA games, the Phoenix Suns defeated the Los Angeles Lakers 126-114, the Golden State Warriors nipped the Houston Rockets 118-117, the New York Knicks beat the Milwaukee Bucks 116-103, the Detroit Pistons edged the New Jersey Nets 118-115, the Denver Nuggets trimmed the Kansas City Kings 126-124 in double overtime and the Utah Jazz beat the Dallas Mavericks 120-113.

Atlanta was without injured forwards Dan Roundfield, John Drew and Craig Shelton, and trailed 51-45 at halftime before Johnson scored 20 of his points in the third period to put the Hawks in command.

"They ran the tempo," said Bird. "Their guards controlled the game. It doesn't take much to get beat by any team if you're not ready to play."

"Any time you snap a 28-game home winning streak and you're undermanned, you've got to give all the credit in the world to the kids who played," said Hawks Coach Hubie Brown, whose team has been plagued by injuries all season.

Atlanta wiped out the halftime deficit by scoring the first 11 points of the third quarter and never trailed again.

Erving scored 10 of his points in the fourth quarter to keep Philadelphia in front. Indiana closed to 87-85 with 5:48 to play, but baskets by Erving, Lionel Hollins and Bobby Jones enabled the 76ers to pull away.

The 76ers shot 52 percent from the field to 36 percent by Indiana.

"Every time we got close, they'd put in a few field goals and draw away from us," said Pacers Coach Jack McKinney. "Even though the 76ers didn't play all that well, they are still the best team in the league. And they played just well enough to squash us."

Suns 126, Lakers 114

Phoenix stretched its Pacific Division lead over Los Angeles to 4½ games by beating the Lakers behind 23 points apiece by Walter Davis, Len Robinson and Dennis Johnson. The Suns pulled away by shooting 65 percent from the field in the third period and outscoring Los Angeles 34-24 to open a 14-point advantage.

Any combination of three Suns victories or Laker defeats will give Phoenix its first division title since joining the NBA 13 years ago.

"We couldn't have asked for a better effort than what we got tonight," said Phoenix Coach John MacLeod, whose club outrebounded Los Angeles 46-36.

Warriors 118, Rockets 117

Bernard King's short jumper with four seconds remaining gave Golden State a crucial victory over Houston in a game in which the lead changed hands five times in the final 1:12. Calvin Murphy, who scored 16 of his 34 points in the final period, had put Houston ahead by one with a long jumper with 12 seconds left before King hit his game-winning shot to finish with 32 points.

The Warriors lead Kansas City by one-half game and Houston by 1½ games in the scramble for the final two Western Conference playoff spots.

Golden State guard John Lucas was absent without leave for the sixth time this season and was suspended by the Warriors for the remainder of the season.

Knicks 116, Bucks 103

New York saw a 16-point lead dwindle to three in the third period before bouncing back to beat the Bucks for its fourth consecutive victory. Guard Michael Ray Richardson led the Knicks with 28 points, 12 of them in the fourth quarter.

Pistons 118, Nets 115

A 15-foot jump shot by rookie guard Larry Drew and a free throw by Kent Benson in the final 44 seconds were the margin of victory for Detroit, which outscored New Jersey 38-17 from the foul line. Bob McAdoo, who was waived by the Pistons last week, returned to the Pontiac Silverdome and played the first eight minutes for New Jersey, scoring four points.

Nuggets 126, Kings 124, (2 OT)

Reserve guard Billy McKinney sank a floater from the lane with 22 seconds left in the second overtime to give Denver the victory. Alex English led Denver with a career-high 42 points while Scott Wedman of Kansas City scored a season-high 41.

Jazz 120, Mavericks 113

Adrian Dantley, the NBA's leading scorer with a 31.2 average, riddled Dallas for 48 points to power the Jazz over the Mavericks. Dantley got 15 of his points in the final period to help Utah take control of what had been a close game.

Red Sox Finally Erupt, Roll Over Philadelphia

By HERSHEL NISSENSEN
AP Sports Writer

New Manager Ralph Houk has been saying all along that he thinks the Boston Red Sox have "enough offense to score runs," but even baseball's perennial optimist must have thought his rose-colored glasses starting were starting to fog up.

That was prior to Wednesday. After scoring a meager 32 runs while winning just two of their first eight exhibition games, the Red Sox erupted with a 20-hit explosion and buried the world champion Philadelphia Phillies 15-3.

Boston broke open a 3-2 game with five runs in the fourth inning, including a solo homer by rookie Dave Schmidt and a three-run shot by Jim Rice. Dwight Evans also homered for the Red Sox.

"They sure brought their bats along. I haven't seen that many hits in a long, long time," said Houk, who might have permitted himself a fond remembrance or two of his 1961 Roger Maris-Mickey Mantle New York Yankees.

The Red Sox didn't pick on any sore-armed pitchers. They clobbered 17-game winner Dick Ruthven for 11 hits and eight runs in the first four innings, tacked on Evans' homer against Nino Espinosa, raked rookie hotshot Mark Davis for four runs in two innings and finished up with three hits and two runs off Sparky Lyle in the ninth.

"Hey, you know we're going to score runs," said second baseman Jerry Remy, who had three hits. "It's just a matter of putting things together."

The Red Sox didn't even miss Fred Lynn, who drove in four runs on three hits, including a home run, as the California Angels pounded Milwaukee 12-4 despite two homers by the Brewers' Robin Yount and one by Paul Molitor. Jim Slaton, coming back from a shoulder ailment, was battered for 13 hits and nine runs in four innings after two impressive outings previously.

The pitchers stole the show in the Oakland-San Francisco contest. Mike Rowland, Randy Moffitt and Fred Breining combined on a one-hitter in hurling the Giants to a 1-0 victory over the A's, the run coming on Johnnie LeMaster's bases-loaded single with two out in the bottom of the ninth. The Oakland hit was a third-inning single off Rowland's glove by pitcher Matt Keough.

Forty-year-old Luis Tiant, trying to hook on with Pittsburgh, pitched two scoreless innings and Rusty Torres, Tony Pena and Dale Berra homered as the Pirates trounced the St. Louis Cardinals 11-3. But another group of Cardinals defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 6-2, the big blow a pinch three-run homer by pitcher Bob Forsch.

Forsch's brother Ken worked four shutout innings but his Houston Astros lost to the Minnesota Twins 3-2 on Pete Mackanin's RBI single in the eighth inning.

Seattle outfielder Tom Paciorek, who says he wants to be traded, rapped out three hits to raise his spring batting average to .591 and drove in three runs in the Mariners' 10-3 route of the Chicago Cubs.

"I thought I made the club last season," said Paciorek, who hit .273 with 15 homers and 59 RBIs in 1980. "A veteran player, it seems, should make the club on what he did last season. He shouldn't have to come to camp and prove himself."

Paciorek said Manager Maury Wills told him he was "going to be used as a pinch hitter and only occasionally against left-handed pitchers."

Johnny Bench, tired of catching, homered for Cincinnati but the Reds bowed to the Kansas City Royals 7-6 on Dave Chalk's RBI single in the bottom of the 11th innings.

Larry Parrish hit a pair of two-run homers and Tommy Hutton slammed a three-run shot to power the Montreal Expos over the Atlanta Braves 12-8. The Braves gave outfielder Gary Matthews permission to talk trade with the Phillies. There have been published reports that Matthews will be dealt for pitcher Bob Walk.

Drungo Hazewood walked with the bases loaded in the 11th inning, forcing home the run that gave the Baltimore Orioles a 5-4 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Bears In Two Wins

BELHAVEN — Bear Grass won a pair of games from Belhaven yesterday.

The Bear Grass boys gained a 7-3 baseball victory over the host team, running their record to 3-1 on the season. The Lady Bears took a 16-0 softball victory, evening their record at 2-2 on the year.

Details of the games were not available.

The Bears return to action on Friday, playing host to Chocowinity. The softball game between the two schools, however, has been postponed due to Chocowinity's competition in the state 1-A basketball finals this weekend.

Rev. Hammond To Be Honored

ROBERSONVILLE — Members and friends of Christ Temple Baptist Church will honor the pastor, the Rev. Hoyt Hammond, Sunday with testimonies concerning his 40 years in the ministry.

The 11 a. m. service will be conducted by the Rev. L. C. Spruill, accompanied by First Zion Grove Baptist Church, Plymouth. Holy communion will follow and then dinner will be served. At 2:30 p. m. the appreciation service will begin, under the direction of the Rev. Kenneth Hammond. Serving with him will be Mount Shiloh Baptist Church of Williamston.

During his 40 years of service, Rev. Hammond has served six churches as pastor, including Christ Temple, 30 years; Poplar Point, 20; First Zion Grove, 15; Sycamore Chapel, 17; Long Ridge, Plymouth, 10; and Philippi, Simpson, five. The public is invited, says Mrs. Minnie D. Council, church clerk.

Rural Dep'ts Answer Calls

During February the rural fire departments of Pitt County answered 85 alarms, with 84 fires, County Fire Marshal Bobby Joyner said.

There were 20 house fires; five house trailers; six buildings, four automobiles; 30 grass or woods fires; no commercial, no false alarms, 19 "others" and one mutual aid.

There was $159,100 involved in fires; $3,923,260 exposed; $124,600 lost; and $3,957,760 saved by the rural fire departments. Eastern Pines, Staton House and Winterville each had 11 fire calls.

Running A Farm By Computer Is Here

By DAVID PYLE
Associated Press Writer
DORCHESTER, Neb. (AP) — Bob Weber raises cattle and farms 1,600 acres of corn and soybeans with the help of an electronic "hired hand" — a computer terminal that can tell him what tractor to buy and when to turn on the irrigation sprinklers.

The 38-year-old Weber is one of 62 farmers and livestock producers with a personal computer link to the latest agricultural information, through the University of Nebraska's Agnet computer in the basement of the Nebraska Statehouse.

Some 230 others with a stake in farming also have terminals; farm management consultants, other universities, government agencies, feed and fertilizer manufacturers, and sales companies and manufacturers of crop or livestock equipment.

And the system is serving many more thousands through links with county extension agents across the country.

"I'm convinced that with time, this is the trend, the solution, to making things work," Weber said. "Farmers need to become more management-oriented, instead of pure production-oriented. Some farmers are just physically working too hard. They don't have time to think, and it's costing them."

Agnet was conceived five years ago when Dr. Thomas Thompson, a University of Nebraska agriculture professor, and one of his students, Alfred Stark, realized from classroom work that a computer system could be applied to agriculture. The idea has grown into a network of almost 600 terminal links.

"The program has turned out to be much more than we expected," Thompson said. "We have terminals in every county agent office in Nebraska, Montana, Wyoming and Washington (state) and between 50 and 60 percent (of the county agencies) in the Dakotas. It's now used in 31 states, Washington, D.C., two Canadian provinces and Venezuela."

The system, Agnet employees say, helps users in three areas: management problem solving, information sharing to keep up to date on market conditions, trends and predictions; and communications as an electronic mail service.

One Agnet service called HAYLIST, for example, carries a directory of those with hay for sale and those who want to buy.

During last summer's severe drought, "We had some farmers in North Dakota contacting farmers in Missouri for summer pasturing," Thompson said. "We even had people in New York wanting to list their hay."

The Agnet programs are varied:

—Does a farmer need a $70,000 tractor or is the $15,000 model more practical for his operation? TRACTORSELECT gives him an idea. Once he's made the choice, he can use another Agnet program to calculate annual depreciation.

—A neighbor puts 200 acres up for sale. Is it worth buying? Using BUYLAND to figure inflation rates, anticipated income and expected returns on invested money, a farmer can make a better-informed decision.

—In MINCOME, the farmer tells the computer how much he's willing to pay for a parcel of land and the computer calculates the minimum cash income per acre he'd need to support the purchase.

—CASHRENT suggests what he can afford to pay to rent land, the long-range value of production relative to costs of production and what he wants as a rate of return on his own capital, management and labor.

"In the past, you could look in an extension agent's booklet and find these kinds of recommendations for the average farmer," said Patrick Ebmeier, an Agnet supervisor at the university. "Well, there is no such thing as the average farmer."

With Agnet, a farmer can put information into the computer which applies exclusively to him, Thompson said. The recommendations that come rolling out of his terminal are tailor-made for his operation.

Weber explained the system's adaptability. He had been using a consultant to calculate when to turn on the irrigation sprinklers and how long to run them. This year, he'll do it without the consultant, using Agnet's irrigation scheduling program.

"We really felt the program was a little more fine-tuned to us," he said. "We did better on our own

(with the computer) than with the consultant we had had for five years."

But the cost of signing on with Agnet makes some farmers draw deep breaths. It's one thing to spend $8,000 for a new pickup that the neighbors can see wheeling around on the farm. It's another to spend a couple thousand for a computer gadget many farmers still regard as some sort of toy.

When the cost of a personal terminal is figured in with the hourly rate charged for tying into the computer, users can pay up to $20 an hour. But Weber, Thompson and Ebmeier said the money-saving information available more than makes up for the costs.

"Generally, after spending that $20, the farmer will say, 'You just saved me $3,000!'" Thompson said.

Canyon Burros Airlifted To Safer Grounds

LAST ROUNDUP — Cowboys with the Fund For Animals lasso two of the last wild burros left in the Grand Canyon on Wednesday. Fund president

By LARRY LOPEZ
Associated Press Writer
GRAND CANYON, Ariz. (AP) — This 277-mile-long, mile-deep ditch will no longer echo with the braying of wild burros. The last four known to live here have been roped by cowboys and airlifted by helicopters to the high ground their ancestors occupied before the gold rush.

The last two were dubbed "Over" and "Out."

Wednesday's burro runs brought to an end a program begun last summer when the National Park Service threatened to shoot the 580 creatures in an effort to preserve the fragile ecology of the canyon, home to rare sheep and other native canyon-dwellers.

"It's a wonderful feeling, after all the tension and strain of this, to have it end this way, successfully," said Cleveland Amory, president of the Fund for Animals, as he waited for the last roundup to begin. "But I think people hiking in the canyon are going to miss the bray of the burro."

Dozens of cameras clicked and whirled as a yellow and brown helicopter herded two donkeys over the crest of a nearby hill. Former champion bronco-buster Dave Ericsson and cowboy Jimmy Green moved their horses in front of the donkeys and lassoed them expertly.

Each burro was then wrestled to the ground, tied around the legs, and flipped into a hammock for the helicopter trip to higher ground.

"If they can do it in the Grand Canyon, there's nowhere in the world it can't be done," said Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who hiked down from the canyon's South Rim for the roundup. "When I first heard of their plan, I was skeptical, but they've done a splendid job."

"If I could save only one animal, it would be the donkey, the beast of burden for the whole world," Amory said, adding the Fund spent hundreds of hours and more than $500,000, double its initial estimates, to get the burros out of here safely.

"It's great if private citizens want to do it," said Jim Walters, a park official who accompanied Babbitt through the snow and ice and prickly-pear cactus. "We can't justify spending that amount of money, when the park is underfunded and understaffed in so many areas."

The wild burros are descendants of donkeys brought to the canyon by gold prospectors who began arriving in the 1850s, Walters said.

Roughly 10,000 wild burros are believed to exist throughout the West, but the park service said burros in the canyon would endanger other wildlife with their foraging.

Park officials and other humane groups opposed the Fund's plans at the outset, saying the roundup might end up harming the burros.

But Ericsson and his crew braved temperatures of up to 125 degrees on the canyon floor and rounded up enough burros last summer to convince the Park Service that the plan might work.

The cowboys came back in the fall, with horses, hounds and helicopters. They roamed the 237 miles of burro trails across an estimated 45,000 acres of sharp hills and red rock ledges. Ten burros died, but 570 to 580 were saved, said Amory.

Roughly 200 of the burros have already been adopted, at fees of $200 without transportation or $400 with it, he said. The fees were set high to discourage abuses or resale to packing houses, he said.

The Fund now is preparing to take on the U.S. Navy over

The Navy "is going to have to pay a public relations price, just as the Park Service would have had to pay a tremendous public relations price if they'd shot the burros in Grand Canyon," Amory said. "At a time when they're building battleships with money that could have gone to school lunches, they don't need to shoot a defenseless animal."

Arson Role Indicated In N.C. Fires

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Nearly half of the 56 forest fires reported in North Carolina on Wednesday were suspected cases of arson, a fire prevention specialist with the North Carolina Division of Forest Resources said Wednesday.

Tom Hegele said 24 fires were suspected as arson. He said 52 fires were contained and four were still burning late Wednesday afternoon, adding up to a total 1,370 charred acres.

The fires were "pretty widely scattered," Hegele said. While all districts reported fires, most seemed to be concentrated in the southeastern part of the state and in around Fayetteville, Whiteville and New Bern.

Hegele said firefighters were looking forward to rain today.

"We'd settle for a heavy dew," he said. "We'd like to have that rain though. One of those good soaking rains would be just dandy."

A ban on outdoor burning is still in effect and will remain so until moisture returns and high winds die down, Hegele said.

The fires were not confined to the east. Brush and wood fires have kept volunteer firemen throughout Gaston County busy for three days straight.

After spending about six hours fighting a forest fire near State Highway 275 on Tuesday evening, volunteer firemen from Spencer Mountain, High Shoals and Alexis returned Wednesday morning.

Ten acres were destroyed Tuesday and an additional 20 acres had burned by Wednesday morning.

Gaston County forest rangers also were on the scene Wednesday bulldozing a fireline in an attempt to stop the fire.

A Surplus Of Gasoline As Americans Buy Less

AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — With Americans driving less because of high fuel prices, gasoline supplies have reached a record high and the resulting competition among oil companies has brought a dip in prices, the industry says.

The American Petroleum Institute reported Wednesday that inventories of gasoline rose 2.6 million barrels in the latest week, to a record 284.3 million barrels. A barrel contains 42 gallons.

At the same time, the group reported that refineries operated at only 69.1 percent of capacity, down from 70.4 percent a week earlier and "the lowest figure in recent memory," spokesman Gene Johnson said.

The reasons for the surplus include sluggish economies around the world and increased conservation brought on by higher prices.

The latest Department of Energy report showed that in February sales of gasoline averaged just over 6 million barrels a day, down 8.6 percent from the same time last year.

roleum Exporting Countries were passed on and after President Reagan ended controls on domestic crude oil prices.

But gasoline prices are now weakening because of the surplus. In a number of areas, competition has forced price cuts in the last few weeks, including reductions announced Tuesday of up to two cents a gallon in some areas by Shell and Sun.

Those cuts are in wholesale prices, but retail prices have also come under pressure and margins are declining. The average dealer markup for regular unleaded gasoline sold at self-service pumps was 8.37 cents a gallon earlier this month, down from 12.31 cents a year earlier, according to the Lundberg Letter, an industry newsletter.

"Increasingly, there has been surplus gasoline available to sell, and there has been an increasingly competitive scramble to sell it," the newsletter commented in its latest issue.

Responding to the excess supplies, Gulf Oil said earlier this week it would close plants in Toledo, Ohio, and Venice, La. Earlier in the month Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) said it would close a refinery in Wood River, Ill.

The old record for gasoline inventories was 283.2 million barrels, set in the week that ended last April 18. Last week the figure was 281.7 million barrels, and the figure for a year earlier was 278.4 million.

While gasoline supplies rose, supplies of distillate fuel, used for home heating and diesel fuel, fell slightly in the latest week to 171.3 million barrels, from 172.9 million a week earlier and 179.3 million at this time last year.

Distillate production declined to 2.4 million barrels daily from 2.7 million barrels a week earlier and 2.8 million barrels a year ago.

Crude oil inventories increased to 388.4 million barrels from 380.7 million the previous week and 351.5 million a year earlier, the institute said.

John Heard, Jr., from New Bern, is a North Carolina Brownbuilder—one of the men and women of Brown & Root—at work in North Carolina.

John is typical of many North Carolinians who join Brown & Root and learn skills leading to advancement in the traditional way of craftsmen. Starting his career with Brown & Root in 1980, John is presently a scheduler and planner.

Brown & Root has a tradition, too. We're one of the world's largest engineering and construction companies, and we owe much of our success over the past half-century to the skills and loyalty of the thousands of people who work with us worldwide—North Carolina Brownbuilders like John, for example.

We take pride in the fact that, when there are job openings, local people get preference. We often train them on the job and regularly promote them on the basis of their individual ability and merit. That way, local communities, counties and the state get maximum benefit in payrolls, purchases, savings and taxes from projects on which we work.

NEW YORK (UPI) — It might be easier for David Frost to list the people he has not interviewed, than the people he has. Barring that, the urbane picker of famous brains settled for a few names he would like to add to his collection.

"I suppose the queen has never been interviewed — not even by Prince Philip," he said. "I don't think popes give that many interviews either — in Latin or otherwise."

"But I'd really like to do Mugabe of Rhodesia. I think the Ayatollah is un-interviewable, but I'd like to debate those fundamentalist Islamic issues ... possibly with Zia of Pakistan who goes in for flogging."

Frost probably will get all of them — minus the flogging — eventually, but right now he's busy working on "Showbusiness," a one-hour television magazine devoted exclusively to the world of entertainment, to be aired at 8 p.m., March 30, by ABC in conjunction with the Academy Awards presentation.

"I regard it as just one special, but there's lots of talk about it having a future life," he said. "These days, I like to pick and choose — do two or three specials a year. I would be very content if 'Showbusiness' was just an occasional special, but it is exciting to face up to the danger that it might be a series. Challenge and new frontiers are a joy."

Frost described his new format as "a show biz version of '20-20' or '60 Minutes.'"

"We're working on 12 to 15 stories right now," he said. "They'll be boiled down to seven or eight. This is not firm, but we're hoping to have a segment from the Hasty Pudding awards given to John Travolta and Mary Tyler Moore at Harvard. We're also trying to set up a reunion between Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau and we're planning a piece on the hottest new lady in rock — Pat Benatar."

Frost said "Showbusiness" also will attempt to investigate "ongoing mysteries" of the entertainment world, such as the one that still shadows the death of Marilyn Monroe, and he'll button up the segment with an "essay" by Gary Marshall, creator of television's "Mork and Mindy" and "Happy Days."

"He's the Art Buchwald of the piece," said Frost.

Frost, of course, owes most of his fame to the Richard Nixon interviews during which, for the first time, the disgraced president admitted that he "let down the Ameri-

Frost went on to his much-publicized clash with Henry Kissinger who balked at answering questions not previously submitted for approval and to his revealing talk with the late Shah of Iran after the shah fled to Contadora Island in Panama. "We got more from Nixon than we ever anticipated," he said. "I think he made as much of a mea culpa as he was psychologically capable of making. He admitted more to me about Watergate than he did two years later in his own book ... I don't think Watergate will ever be forgotten. It was part of a profoundly anti-democratic cast to the Nixon administration."

"I came to the conclusion that he had been punished enough. Those four years in San Clemente were like Elba ... a tremendous penalty for anyone as mindful of his place in history as Richard Nixon was — to know that the first entry in the history books will be that he was the first president ever forced to resign."

Frost took a feisty, if nerve-taut, joy in going head-to-head with Kissinger, but he said there was little joy in the interview with the shah in Panama.

"There were all these armed guards, and I wasn't sure, and neither was he, if they were there to keep the Ayatollah out or to keep him in," he said. "There was a mixed bag of journalists there, and the first time we met him, everyone had the same reaction — this is a dying man."

"The theme was the fall of kings — 'how are the mighty fallen.' It was one of the most difficult things I ever had to do."

Last year, he was a prime force in engineering a massive music for UNICEF benefit that raised $5 million for the agency through donation of copyrights by top recording artists.

"These copyrights will go on earning money for UNICEF for 50 years," he said. "If you've been as fortunate in your life as I have been,

He is giving plenty now to his own career, shuttling back and forth between his offices in New York and London, working on his "Showbusiness" special from the former and on a new franchise, with Peter Jay, for "breakfast, television" — a British version of "Good Morning America" — from the latter.

And how will he manage all that frantic commuting if his "Showbusiness" special does go to series?

"I've pledged 26 weeks a year for the English television project," he said. "If I wind up pledging 22 weeks in an American series,

Shakeups Hinging On Evening News Ratings

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When the A.C. Nielsen ratings came in on Dan Rather's first week as anchor of "The CBS Evening News," CBS didn't invite comparisons to their news program's performance the week before, when Walter Cronkite was anchor.

That suggests, of course, that Rather's ratings fell off compared to the numbers Cronkite earned in his final week. And they did.

For the week March 2-9, "The CBS Evening News with Dan Rather" averaged a 16.6 rating and a 29 percent share of the television audience.

For the week March 9-13, "The CBS Evening News with Dan Rather" averaged a 15.1 rating and a 26 percent share of the audience.

Rather lost 9 percent of the audience that tuned to CBS for news during Cronkite's last week. ABC's "World News Tonight" picked up 4 percent and NBC's "Nightly News" added 2 percent.

CBS protests that Cronkite's five-day finale was an anomaly, that viewers tuned in to honor the departing Cronkite. This is certainly true, but it should follow that Rather's first week was also an anomaly, that Rather, too, benefited from viewer curiosity.

Indeed, Rather's first-week ratings should be higher than his average rating will be after things have settled down a bit.

CBS suggests that instead of comparing Rather's first week to Cronkite's last, a look at the ratings of a year ago are in order. Rather's performance was about the same as Cronkite's ratings yield for the week ending March 10, 1980.

It should be noted again, however, that Rather's debut week figured to attract a lot of viewers tuning in just to see what an $8 million anchorman does. If so, Rather's ratings will decline this week.

Parenthetically, the three networks' combined share of the evening news-time audience seems to be significantly lower than it was last year. In 1980, the combined network news shows drew an average of 74 percent of the viewers. In the week Rather made his debut, the three networks attracted only 71 percent of the viewers.

That could reflect the fact that last year was a "hot" news year, with the Iran crisis and primaries and all, but it could also simply mean that fewer folks are spending their time with networks. Network prime time shares have dropped also.

Anyway, it will be interesting to see what happens in the lucrative evening news market, especially if ABC and NBC make some changes. It's said that ABC is interested in bringing NBC's Tom Brokaw to "World News Tonight" and that Roger Mudd will step in for John Chancellor if no inroads are made against Rather.

Charles Kuralt, meanwhile, is supposed to be in waiting for Rather's job if Cousin Dan falters. Or was it Bob Schieffer stepping in for Leslie Stahl?

Dismissed From Show

NEW YORK (AP) — Three members of the cast of NBC-TV's struggling "Saturday Night Live" — Charles Rocket, Gilbert Gottfried and Ann Risley — and four of its writers were dismissed Wednesday by the show's new producer, officials say.

NBC spokeswoman Simone Harris confirmed that Dick Ebersol, who took over the comedy program after the resignation of producer Jean Doumanian, was not planning any further dismissals of writers or actors, although he might make some additions.

She could not confirm a published report that Ebersol was told by NBC that for financial reasons he could only replace a certain number of those on the show.

The program's ratings have been dropping since the resignations of producer Lorne Michaels and the team that made the late-night comedy series a hit. Last year it averaged a 13.8 rating and a 39 percent share of the audience. During the last eight weeks it has not exceeded a 9.1 rating, or a 27 percent share.

Atlanta Is Now Over-Financed

ATLANTA (AP) — If the slayings of 20 black children here in the past 20 months remain unsolved, it won't be because of a shortage of money to finance the investigation.

Atlanta officials pleaded for weeks with state and federal officials to help fund the investigation, which has been costing an estimated $250,000 a month. Now, thanks to $1.5 million in federal aid and countless contributions from around the country, the city has more money than it knows what to do with.

The $1.5 million grant announced by President Reagan last week is expected to cover the cost of the investigation for some time, the city's community affairs director, Leon Hall, said Wednesday. "We're hopeful we will solve this case before all of that is spent."

That leaves the problem of what to do with money collected for the investigation from other sources, including some $200,000 raised last week at a benefit concert by Sammy Davis Jr. and Frank Sinatra and another $200,000 donated by the state.

Hundreds of other donations, large and small, have come in from around the country, and a group in Philadelphia this week announced plans to raise a $1 million reward fund for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the child killer or killers. A $100,000 reward fund already has been set up by the city.

After the federal grant was announced, Mayor Maynard Jackson asked the public to funnel contributions to the families of the slain children instead of to the police investigation.

But Hall says donations continue to come in.

"Some groups and individuals around the country had fund-raising drives already under way," he said. "Many others called to indicate they were aware we received the federal grant, but they still want to make a contribution to the investigation fund."

"Of course, we will accept it. But we're encouraging those interested in initiating fund-raising projects to make donations for the families... We're absolutely not soliciting any money," he said.

What happens to the money already received, and the contributions that undoubtedly will continue to flow in, will be decided by Jackson and the City Council, Hall said.

"There hasn't been any indication of what their position will be, but we are facing a major need to beef up our recreational activities this summer," he said. "I wouldn't be surprised if the decision is made to channel some of the funds above the federal grant into parks and recreation activities."

FOCUS

The Bird Is On The Wing

Today, the California seaside community of San Juan Capistrano expects the yearly return of the swallows to the local mission. Every October, when the shadows lengthen, the birds become restless. At dawn on October 23, as if on cue, they group to begin their migration to Argentina, where they spend the winter. The length of the shadows in the Southern Hemisphere also tell the small insect-eating birds when to start northward. The swallows' return was first recorded in 1798. Since then, the birds have arrived on March 19 all but three years. Twice they were early, and once, in 1935, they encountered severe winds over Mexico and were late.

DO YOU KNOW — What is the name of Argentina's capital city, which is very close to the swallows' winter nesting area?

WEDNESDAY'S ANSWER — On a basketball court the ring of the basket is 10 feet above the floor.

Good technique is not necessarily a matter of genius. Sometimes it simply means correctly applying the information available to you from the auction.

North's takeout double is somewhat light. We don't mind it for that reason, but in view of the disparity in the strength of his suits we slightly prefer a one spade overcall. East's preemptive tactics could not keep South out of the auction.

Since diamonds did not seem to offer prospects for many tricks in light of East's preempt, West led the king of clubs — if partner had as little as the jack, he would set up two tricks in the suit. There was also the possibility of getting a club ruff. Declarer won the ace and took time out to consider what he knew about the hands.

The possibility of a defender obtaining a club ruff was obvious, but which defender was it likely to be? The bidding offered a clue. Between them, the defenders held seven spades. East was unlikely to have preempted if his hand contained a spade suit, so West was more likely to have spade length. His diamond suit almost certainly was real. Therefore, there were fewer cards unaccounted for in West's hand than in East's, so West was more likely to be short in clubs.

If declarer led a trump, the contract would be defeated. West would step up with the ace, cash the queen of clubs, then underlead his ace of diamonds to get to his partner's hand for a club ruff.

There was probably no way to stop the club ruff if East held the ace of hearts, for he certainly held one diamond honor as well. But if East's only quick entry was in the diamond suit, then transportation between the defenders' hand could be severed.

Playing for this possibility, declarer led a diamond at trick two. It made no difference, as the cards lay, which defender won the trick. After the queen of clubs was cleared, West had no way to get to his partner's hand. So declarer made the contract, losing only one trick in all suits but spades.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deal opening leads!" Film Showing At Jarvis

"Reflections of His Love," a new film highlighting the life and the ministry of Joni Eareckson, will be shown on Friday, March 20 at the Jarvis Memorial Church located at 510 S. Washington St. at 7 p.m.

Eareckson is the star of a recent theatrical motion picture, "Joni," which relates the story of her diving accident, as a young girl, which left her paralyzed from the neck down. It chronicles her struggles to piece together her life and her faith in God, in spite of the devastating circumstances.

The church invites the community to attend this special screening.

Ports Jammed; Moving Coal To Market Is Rough

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Pennsylvania coal operators, eager to take advantage of burgeoning overseas demand, are struggling just to move coal out of the state because of ports so jammed that ships sit for weeks waiting to be loaded.

In addition, the Conrail system that has gradually been winning over many mine operators, who suffered for years with erratic, inefficient rail service, is under threat of losing its federal dollars.

The dilemma faced by one company, Barnes & Tucker Coal based in Valley Forge, illustrates the current problems in moving coal.

A new mine Barnes & Tucker is developing to produce coal for Korea is located between rail lines operated by Conrail and the Chessie System. But the transportation decision the company must make is not based on rail service, which is equally good, said vice president Edwin Sheriff.

Instead the company will compare port facilities in Philadelphia, served by Conrail, and Baltimore, served by Chessie.

"The pier situation is such that we have to take a hard look at the best place to send it. The congestion at the piers this last year, and particularly since the cold weather came, has been terrific," Sheriff said.

The clogged ports are caused in part because of the demand for U.S. coal from developing nations and those in Europe, where Poland's labor troubles have cut the amount of coal it can supply.

"There are European coal buyers crawling all over the United States. If we can find a way to get it out of the country, that's a potential market for U.S. coal," said Alan Walker, president of Bradford Coal Co. in Bigler, Pa.

Charles Potter, chairman of the board of Rochester & Pittsburgh Coal Co., the state's largest producer, said R&P is afraid it will lose some contracts because of demurrage fees — the price paid for ships to sit in port, waiting to be loaded.

"We have had to ship coal to Hampton Roads, Va., because Philadelphia and Baltimore couldn't handle it. There's not enough dump capacity. The ports aren't big enough," said Potter.

"Ships are waiting six weeks to get in here (Philadelphia)," Carl Reed, a spokesman for the Delaware River Port Authority of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, acknowledged.

Reed said annual coal exports from Philadelphia, steady at 1 million tons since 1975, tripled last year to 3 million tons. The port ranks fourth in coal exports, tied with New Orleans behind Norfolk, Va., Baltimore and Mobile, Ala.

The state has recently committed itself to financing a $22.6 million renovation of Pier 124 in Philadelphia, but U.S. Sen. John Heinz said the project, while helpful, "barely puts us in the ball game."

"While we are improving the port of Philadelphia from 2.5 (million) to 10 million tons, Hampton Roads is increasing its capacity from 25 (million) to 75 million tons a year," he said in a recent speech to the Keystone Bituminous Coal Association.

Heinz said another Philadelphia pier — Port Richmond, which has a capacity of 30 million tons of coal a year — is endangered because its owner, Conrail, wants to sell off parts to settle short-term cash problems.

"It's at great risk," Heinz said. "If we lose that, I do not know how we uncork the bottleneck in the port of Philadelphia."

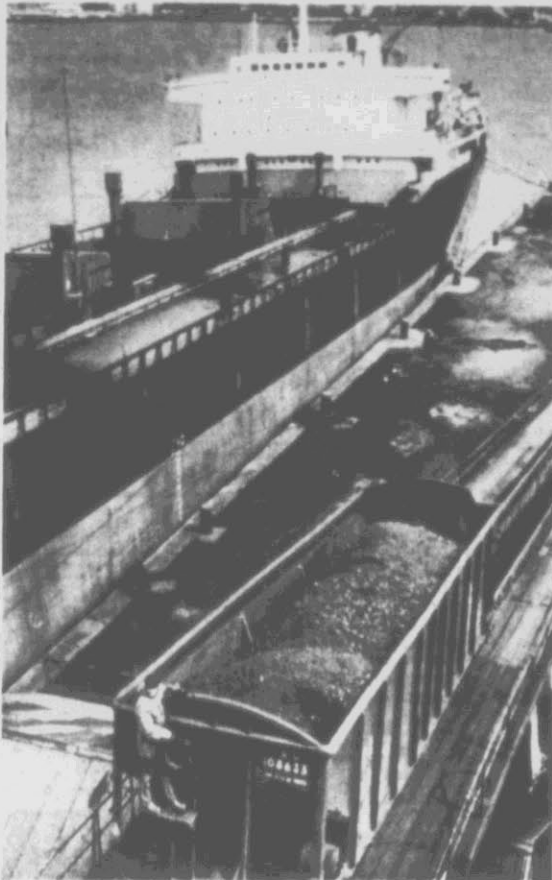

Conrail Vice President Warren Barber said Conrail would work with anyone interested in developing Port Richmond. One possible investor is the Port Authority, whose spokesman, Reed, said results of an inhouse study to see if rehabilitation of the pier would be worthwhile are due later this month. He said the facility was abandoned five years ago and has been "badly vandalized."

Some coal operators are worried that, once port renovation takes off, Conrail won't be able to handle the resulting traffic. But Barber dismissed those fears: "The base part of the railroad is there today. We've invested in anticipation of this growth in the coal industry."

Nevertheless, President Reagan has called for track abandonment, layoffs, changes in union work rules and more local subsidies to make Conrail self-sufficient. He also wants to cut off federal aid after 1982.

The line, created five years ago out of six bankrupt northeastern railroads, is still shackled with reputation for less than perfect service. Robert Shinn, director of the Governor's Energy Council, calls Conrail "one of our major crosses to bear. The railroad that hauls Pennsylvania coal is not healthy. The service that small mines get may be less than optimum."

Nevertheless, many mine operators, veterans of years of poor rail service, say Conrail has revived a deteriorating coal transport system.

"Conrail should be given at least two more years to see whether or not the railroad can make it," Walker said. "The old railroads lost (coal business worth) 40 million tons in a short time. Conrail moves 80 million tons a year. They say if Conrail can get 100 million tons, it can operate profitably."

Despite $3.3 billion in federal aid, Conrail has yet to turn a profit. It recently reported, however, that its $12 million fourth quarter loss in 1980 was the lowest quarterly loss in its history.

"To be totally fair to Conrail, look at what they had when they started. There's still a long way to go, but they've done a credible job," said Vince Marino, acting executive director of the Pennsylvania Coal Mining Association.

Pentagon Studies Ways To Put Men, Machines In Earth Orbit

By HOWARD BENEDICT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — To challenge a growing Soviet space threat, the Pentagon is moving to station an effective military force of men and machines in orbit.

The action stirs visions of Americans and Russians flying space reconnaissance missions, controlling land and space forces from orbiting command posts and perhaps trading laser beams among the planets.

Defense officials, citing a strong and continuing Soviet military thrust beyond the atmosphere, contend such a force would be a major deterrent to a space battleground.

Only a few of the precursor machines already are out there and the first U.S. military astronauts won't go aloft for a couple years.

But to prepare for the day when this nation expects to have a strong spaceborne defense corps, the Air Force said Tuesday it has selected Peterson Air Force Base as the site for a proposed control center for all American military space missions, including manned space shuttle flights.

Air Force Secretary Verne Orr said the proposed Consolidated Space Operations Center, slated to begin operations in mid-1985, could share personnel and services with the North American Aerospace Defense Command in the mountains west of Colorado Springs, Colo.

The Air Force also had considered sites near Kirtland Air Force Base in New Mexico and Malmstrom Air Force Base in Montana.

The announcement comes just a few weeks before the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is to launch its first manned space shuttle, the first reusable spaceship. That is scheduled for April 8.

After languishing for months because of technical and financial problems, the shuttle received strong endorsement late in the Carter administration because of its military potential. President Reagan has backed the project for the same reason.

The Air Force has some ambitious plans for the shuttle, taking military space operations beyond the unmanned satellites which now assist conventional forces in communications, surveillance, missile warning capability and navigation.

The Colorado center would require an immediate $13 million appropriation for planning and design, but the Pentagon expects to get the money from a defense-minded Congress. Construction costs are estimated at $150 million, with an additional $250 million needed to make the facility operational, officials reported.

Since Reagan took office, several senators have warned him about the Soviets' military intentions in space.

They cite an increasingly active Soviet military program that in 1980 sent a record six cosmonaut teams to a space station and 132 payloads into orbit, 85 of them for military purposes. The United States sent no men into space last year and only 13 payloads.

"We haven't fully realized the military potential in space; the Russians have a much clearer vision of the future in this regard than we do," says Sen. Harrison Schmitt, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate subcommittee on science, technology and space.

Schmitt, a former astronaut who walked on the moon, wants Reagan to commit the nation to developing a permanent multi-man command station in orbit. Such a declaration, he says, would be "a major decision that we are going to compete in space, that we're not going to allow the forces of oppression to dominate that new ocean."

He said the military astronauts on board could keep track of troop, ship and aircraft movements; monitor missile deployment and testing; fly small shuttle craft to repair military communications or other payloads; and inspect potentially hostile satellites, destroying them if necessary.

In a recent interview, Schmitt said his conversations with the president "have been quite upbeat and encouraging, especially his interest in the defense capabilities of space."

"The president expressed a strong desire to expand our technical base to move the country away from the brink of nuclear war," Schmitt said. "In particular, he expressed a strong interest in the possibility of developing a laser defense against ballistic missile attack."

Such laser weapons could be based on an orbiting station, poised to destroy an enemy ballistic missile climbing above the atmosphere toward a target.

Ground-based lasers have been used to shoot down drone aircraft, but space tests are believed to be a few years away. Once perfected, they could be carried aloft in the shuttle's cargo bay, just as sections of a station would be ferried into orbit.

If there are five shuttles, the Air Force and NASA plan to operate two each and share the fifth. Most of the civilian launches will be from Cape Canaveral, Fla., with control from the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

The military will launch most of its missions from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California, where a shuttle base is being built for use starting in 1984. The Colorado control center would provide these missions with much more security than is available in Houston.
