Welcome, Spring

SPRINGTIME? — It might be the first day of spring by the calendar, but someone forgot to tell old Mother Nature. A major snow storm hit the North Carolina mountains Thursday and continued into Friday, which is officially the first day of spring. Some areas were reporting as much as 8 inches of the white stuff with more continuing to fall. This jeep found visibility bad on Highway 181 out of Linville in Avery County. (AP Laserphoto)

Reagan Budget-Cutting Vote Slated Next Week

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans, moving to exploit their new majority swiftly, are pushing for a floor vote next week on a budget-cutting package containing most of President Reagan's recommendations and a few of their own.

The Senate Budget Committee capped a grueling, four-day budget review Thursday and approved a blueprint for $36.4 billion in spending reductions in 1982, $2.3 billion more than the president wants in the areas covered. The vast majority of cuts would come in social programs such as unemployment, welfare, education, nutrition and some Social Security benefits.

Even before the committee gave its approval on a 20-0 vote, Republican Leader Howard Baker announced the full Senate would begin debate on the proposal next Thursday. He said there was a "realistic prospect" for a final vote a week from today but added that he would schedule an unusual Saturday session if necessary to complete action by the end of next week.

Meanwhile, the House Agriculture Committee voted to back Reagan's proposal to scrap a scheduled April 1 increase in dairy price supports. The vote was 30-7 to approve the measure, which would save an estimated $147 million.

The full Senate is scheduled to vote on an identical bill next week.

Reagan is seeking $48.6 billion in cuts for fiscal 1982, which begins Oct. 1. Congressional aides said the committee's figure is lower because some additional money can be saved through other legislation and still more can be saved through administration actions that don't require congressional approval.

In all, the package adopted by the Senate Budget Committee calls for cutting planned spending $87 billion through 1983 — $2.8 billion this year, $36.4 billion in 1982 and $47.7 billion the following year.

Some the additional cuts made by the committee might not last.

The panel's biggest departure from the president's program called for private financing of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, at a savings of about $3 billion.

But Sen. Peter Domenici, R-N.M., who shepherded the bill through the budget committee as chairman, predicted a floor fight over the reserve proposal, since the Senate Energy Committee voted later in the day to reject the idea for the time being.

Domenici hailed the Budget Committee's work as "the most historic exercise in (spending) restraint that has ever been attempted by the Congress of the United States."

He predicted no significant changes when the full Senate debates the measure, but he conceded the proposed reductions face a hazardous passage in the House, where Democrats retain a majority.

Some of the Senate Democrats who voted for the overall package vowed to attempt to force changes during floor debate.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who tried and failed repeatedly during the committee's discussions to soften the cuts in social programs, declared that the panel was voting for proposals that would "wreak unbelievable havoc in the lives of millions of Americans."

"Millions of poor Americans, millions of disadvantaged Americans, millions of middle-class Americans" will be hurt by the proposed cuts, Metzenbaum said.

Bankruptcy Or Losing Baby

By KEVIN McKEAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Caring for very premature babies is becoming so expensive that some parents may have to choose between losing their infants or going bankrupt, a nursing administrator says.

Dr. Mitzi L. Duxbury, assistant dean of graduate studies at the University of Minnesota School of Nursing, said Thursday the average cost of saving a premature baby weighing under 2.2 pounds at birth is now $40,000 and problem cases can run over $100,000.

Only 30 percent of such babies can be saved, said Ms. Duxbury, and the costs for those who don't survive tend to be even higher because of the need for specialized care. Normal birthweight is seven to eight pounds.

From 15 to 25 percent of the survivors have severe mental or physical handicaps, she said.

"Most parents want and expect normal healthy babies. They don't bargain for a handicapped child and bankruptcy together," Ms. Duxbury told a March of Dimes symposium on pregnancy and modern living.

Technical advances and the proliferation of neonatal intensive care units in the last decade have made it possible for doctors to save the lives of some babies born as many as 15 weeks prematurely.

But Ms. Duxbury described the life support measures in these units as sometimes amounting to "extraordinary means of preserving life."

"I'm advising health professionals not so much to 'pull the plug' as to think about it before they put the plug in. ... At this point, the decisions (regarding whom to save) have been made almost unilaterally by the technology people, and I don't think that's appropriate in a society with limited resources," she said.

In some cases, she said, doctors have threatened to go to court if parents refuse to authorize special care for very premature babies.

"Parents need to ask more questions, need to be more involved in the decision-making," Ms. Duxbury said. "It is their baby. They will be caring for that child, if the baby lives, at least until adulthood and maybe many years beyond."

Seek Leeway On Paying Medicaid

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Legislators asked the federal government for more flexibility in controlling Medicaid costs Thursday, while a budget panel earmarked potential cuts of $29 million in Medicaid and other human resources spending.

The House and Senate both approved resolutions calling on President Reagan and Congress to grant the state more leeway in paying medical expenses for the poor.

The resolutions were sponsored by Sen. Russell Walker, D-Asheboro, and Rep. Ruth Cook, D-Raleigh, chairmen of the base budget committees on human resources. The resolutions were taken to Washington by 10 legislative leaders who were scheduled to meet Thursday afternoon with Vice President George Bush and later attend legislative conferences.

The human resources budget panels recommended cuts totaling about 6 percent from the proposed 1981-83 state budget for the Department of Human Resources — a goal set by legislative leaders for committees reviewing all agencies. The Medicaid custs passed on a 7-5 vote.

The panel's recommendations will go Tuesday to the joint House-Senate Base Budget Appropriations Committee.

Meanwhile, a base budget committee on education formally — but relucantly — adopted a subcommittee report outlining cuts of more than $125 million in aid to public schools and higher education. Another budget committee spent much of the day on the Department of Transportation budget, but came up with only about $1 million in cuts from the 1981-1982 budget.

The human resources panel also reversed its earlier recommendation to eliminate high school classes at the Eastern North Carolina School for the Deaf in Wilson. Committee members voted Thursday to leave the classes in Wilson.

The move came a day after about 200 parents and students marched at the school Wednesday to protest the subcommittee's recommendation.

The panel's recommendations include an end to state support of the Confederate Women's Home in Fayetteville; McCain Hospital, a tuberculosis center in Hoke County; the Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center in Butner, Samarkand Manor Training School in Moore County and the Oxford Orphanage.

Officials at the orphanage agreed to the cutoff because they do not comply with civil rights laws. Another orphanage, the Freewill Baptist Children's Home, does not comply with civil rights laws and stands to lose money unless its policy changes.

About half the recommended cutbacks in the Medicaid program are contingent upon the federal government giving states increased flexibility in running their programs.

The panel, for example, recommended freezing the rate at which health care providers are being reimbursed for services to needy patients, cutting back reimbursement to patients for drugs and eliminating Medicaid coverage for 18-to 21-year-olds under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program, the main welfare program.

Police Beatings Set Off Strike Alerts In Poland

BYDGOSZCZ, Poland (AP) — Polish workers went on nationwide strike alert and staged warning walkouts in at least five cities today to protest police beatings of 23 labor activists. Independent union leader Lech Walesa vowed: "We shall respond by a similar attack, but calmly, with common sense and without fear. Our legs aren't shaking."

The two-hour strikes were held in this northwestern city, in nearby Torun, Grudziaz and Inowroclaw, as Soviet-led Warsaw Pact troops continued maneuvers in Poland and other East Bloc countries.

As the strikes ended, thousands of people gathered in the railway yards here for a massive union meeting.

Some 200 policemen stormed the Bydgoszcz city hall Thursday and beat farm workers and their supporters, including union activists Jan Rulewski, Mariusz Labentowicz and Michael Bartoszcze, Walesa's independent union, Solidarity, said.

Photos of the men lying on the ground and spattered with blood were posted on walls and fences around the city beneath red and white Polish flags and Solidarity banner.

A loudspeaker near the Solidarity headquarters blared out the union leaders' charge that the incident was "a direct provocation of local authorities against the government" of Poland's new premier, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who has called for a peaceful dialogue to settle labor strife.

A large banner outside the headquarters proclaimed, "90 Days of Calm Shattered," in reference to the premier's call for three months of labor peace.

Warsaw Radio reported that Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski sent a commission of experts here to determine the causes of the incident. Rakowski is head of trade union relations and said earlier this week that he would react swiftly to any reports that Solidarity members were beaten.

Meanwhile, Walesa and other national leaders of Solidarity rushed here and formed a "staff for action" to run all Solidarity activities nationwide from the city. They also announced a break in all negotiations with the communist government, and Walesa said he was cancelling a scheduled trip to France Sunday because of the turmoil.

Walesa then addressed a crowd on the river banks that divide the city, saying, "We are all together. But it came to serious abuse. Someone's talons are too long, but we'll lop them off.

LISTING VOLUNTEER NEEDS

I am interested in doing volunteer work, both as a way to share myself with others and as a way to get experience in the world of work before I have to, in later years, try to obtain a paying job to support myself. I would like to have a complete list of organizations in the Greenville area which need volunteer workers. Then I will try to make a choice in line with my time and talents and interests. C. J.

Sheppard Memorial Library has a file titled "Volunteer Opportunities" which may be helpful to you.

However, Hotline is also attempting to compile a current list of organizations needing volunteer help. We have enlisted the help of a volunteer who is willing to accept calls and collect information for us. She will accept calls at 756-7095.

APPEAL SUCCESSFUL

The Simpson family appealed for in Hotline last week now have the gas stove they needed, plus other household items and clothings. "We would like to thank each and every one for their kind deeds," Mrs. Simpson said.

Ask Release Of 'Energy Report'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A New York congressman is calling on the Reagan administration to release an unpublished government report on energy that espouses the "free market" philosophy of the administration but draws vastly different conclusions.

Rep. Pichard Ottinger said in letters sent Thursday to budget director David A. Stockman and Energy Secretary James Edwards that the administration should shift its energy budget in light of the report.

"Our national security and economic interests demand that it be available for the public debate over the direction of federal fiscal policy," Ottinger said. "I would therefore encourage you to release this report as soon as possible."

The report, done for the Energy Department, says it is possible to achieve the kind of economic growth President Reagan wants and at the same time cut energy consumption by 25 percent — a notion that is at odds with Reagan's push for greater energy production.

The report, still in draft form, assumes a 45 percent growth in per capita income by the year 2000 and an unemployment rate of 4 percent — the current rate is 7.4 percent — up to that time.

It calls for no "Draconian interference with the market process" and says that by the year 2000 oil imports would be virtually eliminated and electricity demands could be met with generating equipment now operating or in advanced stages of construction.

Reagan's budget calls for more money for nuclear energy. He has maintained oil production could be greatly increased, and his proposals call for cutting funds for conservation, alternate-fuel and solar-energy programs.

Advanced Placement Seminar

About 200 educators, including teachers, principals, guidance counselors, along with consultants and representatives from national agencies, gathered Thursday on the East Carolina University campus for a seminar on advanced placement. Representatives of various departments of ECU also took part in the seminar, which was hosted by Walter Bortz, Director of Admissions, and members of his staff.

Basically, the advanced planning program is one in which high school students can take college level courses during high school days for which college credit is given. Some eastern North Carolina schools already have an advance placement program in effect, but many do not and are looking into the possibility of implementing this program in their school systems.

Although those attending were primarily from school systems in the eastern counties of North Carolina, some came from as far away as Alleghany County in western North Carolina and from school systems in Virginia.

Sessions and workshops were held in two basic areas — administration and courses of study. Some of the administrative topics covered included the background of the advanced planning program; which schools should take part in this program; the mechanics of an advanced planning program including selection of courses, teachers and students; coping with economic factors involved in the program; and the role of the gifted programs in advanced placement planning.

Sessions in college courses in the high school curriculum for which advanced placement credits can be given included a variety of subjects — art, biology, chemistry, physics, English, foreign languages, history and mathematics.

Psychiatric Services Expanded

By GEORGETTE F. HEDRICK
ECU Medical Writer

The patients in this unit don't stay in bed. They wear street clothes, participate in square dances and gather in the day room to watch "Love Boat" on television. They may prepare their snacks in the unit's kitchen or walk down the hall to the hospital dining room. On Tuesday afternoons they go bowling, and on weekends they may go home to visit their families or friends.

These are the most obvious differences between patients on the psychiatric unit and those on the other medical services. But the patients at Pitt County Memorial Hospital enjoy something else that makes them special — a new facility that opened in December.

The 18-bed addition to the psychiatric unit represents an expansion of psychiatric services at Pitt Memorial to meet the increasing regional need for inpatient beds. When the new beds opened, the old 14-bed unit closed for renovation, which should be completed in March. When the entire project is finished, the unit will have 36 beds and modern support facilities, including a multipurpose room for group therapy, rooms for occupation and recreation therapy, a classroom, a new dining area and offices for physicians and staff. It will be the largest inpatient psychiatric unit in a community hospital in Eastern North Carolina.

Why is there an increased demand for inpatient psychiatric beds? Several reasons, according to Dr. W.R. Walker, assistant professor of psychiatry at the East Carolina University School of Medicine. "The public is beginning to understand mental illness better, and so are psychiatrists. Recent research, which has identified biochemical components in some mental illnesses, has also given us more effective approaches to diagnosis and treatment," he said.

"Mental illness has lost some of the stigma that once prevented patients from entering a voluntary unit such as the one at Pitt Memorial. Not so many years ago, patients had a choice between admitting themselves to a state hospital or entering a private hospital, if they could afford it. Today many patients find psychiatric care in a community hospital more attractive personally and financially."

According to the National Institute of Mental Health, the emphasis for treating mental illness shifted between 1955 and 1975 from the larger state mental hospitals to community programs, particularly mental health centers and inpatient psychiatric services in general hospitals like the one at Pitt Memorial. This shift in the selection of a facility was responsible for a reduction in the average length of stay, which decreased from 38 days to 16 days.

The average stay in the Greenville unit is 18 days, a short-term visit that Walker says is good for the patient mentally and economically. After the patients are discharged, they receive outpatient therapy in mental health centers or with private psychiatrists.

"The problem with long-term care is the institutional effect it has on some patients," Walker said. "They start to regard the hospital as their home, and they adapt to that setting rather than maintain the bonds with their families, friends and communities."

The unit at Pitt Memorial offers treatment for the full range of psychiatric illnesses, including schizophrenia, depression, psychiatric complications of alcohol and drug abuse, and geriatric disorders. Severe depression and manic depression are the most frequently treated illnesses.

Physicians do not know what causes many forms of mental illness. It may be triggered by an emotional conflict in a person's life, or it may be the result of chemical changes in the brain. Generally all forms of the disease are characterized by the patient's inability to cope with reality, and treatment usually involves psychotherapy in conjunction with drug therapy. A psychiatric evaluation determines the patient's need for inpatient care.

Although the majority of patients in the unit are from Pitt County, Walker said more referrals are coming in from psychiatrists, other physicians and mental health centers throughout the region. When the original 14-bed unit was open, patients frequently had to be placed on a waiting list for admission. "We simply were not able to deliver the services the patients needed," he said.

"The old unit was too crowded for patients and staff and lacked privacy. The new unit will help us take referrals promptly, and we hope that a wait will no longer be necessary. We want to make treatment for mental illness as available and convenient as treatment for other diseases."

Since the main goal of the unit is to prepare patients to return to their homes and work, the staff is particularly concerned with helping patients keep their ties with the outside world. Patients receive as much freedom as possible to make their own decisions and express their likes and dislikes. Recreation therapy may, while it is providing entertainment, show a patient how to use leisure time, an important component of everyone's life. These sessions, along with occupational therapy, may also help patients learn to express their feelings and assert themselves.

"Recreation therapy and occupation therapy are prescribed for a patient just like medication," Walker explained. "All the members of the staff — nurses, medical students, residents, physicians and activity therapists — contribute their special ways of preparing the patients for a return to their usual lives. Patients also are very supportive of each other and often develop strong friendships here."

State appropriations to the School of Medicine provided the funding for the psychiatric unit's expansion and renovation. The project is part of a $5.3 million construction package that, with the addition of a 144-bed patient tower, will add 166 beds to Pitt Memorial.

The 1978 President's Commission on Mental Health estimated that 15 percent of the population is in need of mental health services and that 25 percent suffer from depression, anxiety, or other mental disorders. The Eastern Carolina Health Systems Agency says those figures may be higher for Eastern North Carolina due to low income, low educational level and the rural setting. In projecting the needs of the 29-county area from 1980 to 1985, the agency noted that the number of short-term beds should be increased, especially in Pitt, Onslow, Lenoir, Roanoke-Chowan and Albemarle counties.

According to Webster, there are five ways the name of a famous Russian soup may be spelled: borsch; borscht; borsht; bortsch; borshch. Take your pick of spellings, but if you are interested in serving a hot main-dish soup for a weekend company dinner, consider trying the following recipe. This offering is on the thrifty side.

We cadged the recipe from a friend who likes the same sort of hot borscht we do: rich with beef (from short ribs) and vegetables — tomatoes, cabbage, carrots, celery — along with the essential beets. She introduced us to a classic but new-to-us addition: caraway seed. It does wonders for the flavor of the soup.

Only one caution: after the borscht is made, taste for seasoning. Vegetables vary in their sweetness; you may want to add a bit of sugar and more pepper. Or you may want a few more drops of lemon juice; lemons vary in their acidity.

We like to serve this borscht in wide-rim soup plates with fresh crusty rye bread or rolls (homemade or bought) and sweet butter. Because of all the vegetables in this main-dish soup, we skip a salad course. Instead, we offer an assortment of cheeses. Then, of course, a special dessert. Recently at our house, chocolate spongecake or chocolate angelfood cut into layers and sandwiched together with sweet chestnut puree, then frosted with chocolate whipped cream, has been a great favorite. Pecan pie has also filled the dessert bill.

4 cups water
2 cups beef bouillon, see Note
One 16-ounce can whole tomatoes, broken up and undrained
1¼ teaspoons caraway seed
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
2¾ pounds (about) beef short ribs, cut in 3-inch lengths
2 cups loosely packed finely shredded cabbage
1 cup pared thinly sliced carrots, not packed down
1 cup thinly sliced celery, not packed down
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
One 16-ounce can beets, undrained (see Note)
Salt to taste

In a large saucepot bring to a boil the water, bouillon, tomatoes, caraway seed and pepper. Add the short ribs; simmer, covered, until meat is nearly tender when pierced with a fork — about 1½ hours. Add cabbage, carrots and celery; simmer, covered, until beef and vegetables are as tender as you like — 15 to 30 minutes. With a slotted spoon, remove meat from short ribs; cut meat into ½- to 1-inch chunks; discard bones and return meat to saucepot. Stir in lemon juice, beets and salt. Refrigerate soup overnight. Remove almost all the layer of hardened fat from the top. Heat.

Makes about 2½ quarts.

Note: You may want to use less water and more bouillon, as we do. We use canned small whole beets and cut them into thin slices or strips; the whole beets seem to have optimum color, flavor and texture.

Minister's Wife Was Out Of Line

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: A friend of mine wrote to you last year, and you advised her to go to her minister for counseling. She went, and he helped her a lot, so I decided to go to my minister to talk over some marital problems I was having.

I made an appointment to see him at his office, which is in his home, and I found him to be very kind and understanding. I have never been able to discuss anything of an intimate nature with anyone. He sensed my shyness and suggested I go home and write down what I had trouble saying, and bring it back for him to read before our next session.

I did as he suggested and it worked out very well. We had three sessions and he helped me so much. Then, as I was leaving his home after my last session, his wife followed me to the door and said, "Please don't write my husband any more letters. I happened to see one on his desk, and it was disgusting!"

I was terribly embarrassed and felt so bad I never went back. I called the minister and made up an excuse for not getting back to him for two weeks. Abby, I really want to continue with the counseling, but I just can't face his wife. What should I do?

EMBARRASSED

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Call the minister and make an appointment to see him. And while you're there, be sure to tell him why you nearly dropped out. (It's important for him to know the truth.) And should you see his wife, you need not feel embarrassed. She was clearly out of line.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I eat out a lot. Our problem is with tipping. When we go to a large, expensive restaurant, my husband tips between 15 percent to 20 percent of the bill — even if the service is terrible. But when we go to a small family-type place, or a diner where the prices are more reasonable and the service is really good, he leaves what I consider a very meager tip, even though it's between 15 and 20 percent of the bill.

Example: Breakfast for two in a small diner costs $4, so my husband leaves a 60-cent tip. Yet breakfast for two in a classier place costs $8, and my husband leaves a $1.60 tip!

I contend that the waitress in the diner works just as hard as the one who works in the more expensive place, and she should get at least $1 for serving two people. My husband says, regardless of what the bill is, he sticks to the accepted rule — 15 to 20 percent of the bill.

Maybe I should keep my mouth shut and let him handle it, but we are constantly arguing about this, so I hope you won't think this is too trivial to answer.

SHIRLEY IN WORCESTER

DEAR SHIRLEY: Trivial? No way. One of the hardest jobs in the world is serving hungry (and sometimes disagreeable and demanding) people. The waitress who works in a less expensive place needs tips as much (and often more) than those who work where the prices are higher. Tell the old boy to loosen up.

DEAR ABBY: I recently married a man who is 50. I am 40. He has never been married. I have, but I'm now divorced. I am a mother and grandmother. I can no longer have children because I had a hysterectomy.

My husband wants a baby in the worst way, but I can't give him one. He is very hurt and disappointed. Have you any suggestions?

SOUTH DAKOTA

DEAR SOUTH: The obvious option. Adoption.

Miss McDaniel Honored Tuesday

Miss Terrie Ann McDaniel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry McDaniel of Greenville, was honored at a bridal luncheon Tuesday.

Hostesses were Chip East, Eleanor Scheipers, Patsy Denson, Carol Whiteford, Annette Staton, Lucille Sumrell and Nancy Evans. The luncheon was held at Margaux's Restaurant.

Miss McDaniel will marry Jeffery Brent Weisner of Statesville April 4 in St. Paul's Pentecostal Holipess Church.

Rumblings Over Tobacco Funds Are Being Raised In Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tobacco supporters are worried that the cost-cutting mood in Congress may soom lead to a full-scale attack on the government's price-support system.

For example, the Senate Budget Committee voted late Wednesday on a proposal by Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, to end government funding for tobacco price supports.

The move caught tobacco supporters off guard, and the measure was rejected narrowly, 9-7. But Metzenbaum probably will introduce the measure on the Senate floor next week, said a spokeman for the senator.

That proposal, along with recent decisions to end federally subsidized loans and government funding for the tobacco trading system, has sent waves of alarm through the ranks of state tobacco officials.

"Now tobacco is under as strong an attack as it has been in many years," said John M. Sledge, president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau.

Sledge said elimination of price supports would force the federal government to increase food stamp allocations because "a significant number (of tobacco growers) would have to stand in line for them."

Rep. Charles G. Rose III, D-N.C., said he is more afraid of the Reagan administration's actions against tobacco than Congress' actions.

"If the administration's proposals for the peanut industry are any indication of how they feel about the tobacco program, we could be in serious trouble," said Rose, in Raleigh for the annual meeting of Tobacco Associates Inc.

Rose was referring to the Department of Agriculture's refusal to raise price supports for peanuts and its decision to eliminate the peanut acreage allotment system.

Fred G. Bond, general manager of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corp. in Raleigh, said Reagan's emphasis on free enterprise could eventually mean the end of the price supports.

"That could cause serious economic repercussions," Bond said.

The support program guarantees farmers a minimum price for their tobacco. Under the program, the USDA's Commodity Credit Corp. lends money to grower-operated cooperatives such as Bond's organization.

Then, if a farmer's tobacco fails to bring at least the support price at auction, the cooperative buys it at that price, resells it when market conditions are more favorable and uses the proceeds to repay the CCC. Any profit on the resale goes to the farmer.

Metzenbaum's proposal would have deleted $63 million designated in the 1982 budget bill to the CCC for making those loans. Tobacco cooperatives have failed to make repayment on $510 million of the $7.6 billion worth of loans the CCC has made since 1933.

"There isn't any reason why the tobacco industry ought not to be self-supporting," Metzenbaum told the committee.

But Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., the only committee member from a tobacco-growing state, defended the price support program.

Even if the budget commitee had cut the $63 million, the bill would have then gone to the Senate Agriculture Committee, which has the authority to spread out the cuts over several farm programs. The chairman of the committee is Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., a strong tobacco proponent and Reagan ally.

Hollings said that if tobacco supports were eliminated, the small tobacco farmer would be replaced by corporate farmers and foreign-grown tobacco.

First Customer Is Also Bank Robber

ASHEBORO, N.C. (AP) — The first customer at opening day of the Randolph Bank and Trust Co. branch in Asheboro was eager to make a large withdrawal — so eager he used a gun.

After asking a teller outside if the bank was open, the gunman tied up and threatened to kill three employees, taking a substantial amount of cash from the bank, police said.

Randolph Bank President Joe Howard said the robbery occurred at 9 a.m. just as the doors were unlocked for the first day of business at the branch.

"This was the first individual in on the first day we opened for business," Howard said, adding this was his first experience with a robbery in 17 years of banking.

The man, armed with a blue steel pistol, threatened to kill two women tellers and the branch manager if they did not do what he said, Asheboro Police Lt. Det. Paul Tatum said.

Tatum said the man told the manager he had three minutes to open the vault before the shooting started. The robber apparently took all the currency from the vault, leaving the change and the money in the tellers' cash drawers, Tatum said.

The robber made the bank employees lie face down on the floor and then tied their hands behind their backs with ropes that he brought with him, the Asheboro detective said.

Witnesses said he left in a van described as blue with whitewall tires.

After the robbery, the manager managed to dial police on a "touch dial" phone while he was getting untied, Tatum said.

Concern About Trains

Since plans to develop Morehead City as a coal shipping port were announced, concern has risen about the vast amount of coal which will have to be shipped by rail to reach the port.

There is particular concern in Morehead City where the town is split by the railroad which leads to the port area. There was also concern in Goldsboro, Kinston and New Bern which are on the direct line from Raleigh to the port at Morehead City.

Now it turns out that at least some of the coal cars will come through Greenville on its way to Chocowinity where it will be shuttled to New Bern and on into Morehead City.

It is obvious the Morehead City port needs the coal business if it is to be a profitable operation, and continuation of the port can be beneficial to our entire area. It is also too soon for local people to get too excited about the coal shipping prospects. It may, after all, not prove to be a major problem.

However, Greenville is divided into four sectors by the tracks of the Southern and Seaboard Coastline. The tracks are currently busy and they cross some of the state's busiest thoroughfares. If train traffic is to increase, ways will have to be found to move the freights more rapidly and additional crossings must have adequate warning devices.

Any growing city must live with the trains, but it is up to us to see that it is done in the safest and most expeditious manner possible.

Strike May Not Be Long

A coal strike looks certain, but observers feel that it won't be a long one.

three years ago there was a strike which last 111 days, and such a strike can be crippling to the nation's economy.

AT the same time any settlement with the unions which is inflationary can do major damage to the economy.

We can hope for a relatively short strike with a reasonable wage settlement so that we can avoid any depressing effect on the economy or feeding of further inflation.

Democrats' Headache

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The movement of Americans to the Sunbelt and out of cities is forcing a redrawing of political lines that could wipe out the advantage Democrats might expect as the party out of power in the 1982 congressional elections.

The 1980 Census figures seem just one more headache for troubled Democrats still reeling from last year's Republican landslide that put Ronald Reagan in the White House and gave the GOP control of the Senate.

Leaders of both major parties see the 1982 elections as the test of whether 1980 signaled a genuine shift in the nation's political direction.

The biggest factor influencing the 1982 results could be the public perception of the success or failure of the Reagan economic program. But few politicians expect a clear consensus on the economic program to have emerged by November 1982.

Governmental efforts to control the economic numbers — rates of inflation, unemployment and interest — have been announced over the past decade with great fanfare and little clear impact. The Reagan administration hopes it will be different this time, but the people who plan campaigns are looking for other advantages for 1982.

At this early stage, the redrawing of congressional and legislative district lines to reflect the results of the 1980 Census is seen as a potentially decisive factor in the battle for control of the House of Representatives, the last bastion of Democratic power in Washington.

If the Republicans gain 26 seats in the 1982 elections, they would take control of the House.

But, historically, the party out of power comes out ahead in non-presidential election years. The average gain for the outs in recent years has been 33 House seats.

More significantly, the outs have picked up House seats in every off-year election since 1938. The last time the party in power consolidated its gains was in 1934, the election two years after Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House.

It was the 1934 election that established the political and philosophical shifts represented by the Democratic Party of Roosevelt and the New Deal.

What has Democrats worried is the extraordinary political bias inherent in the population shifts during the 1970s.

The big losers of House seats are the Northern industrial states. New York loses five, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois two each. Losing one seat each are Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Indiana, Missouri and South Dakota. Within those states, the districts that lost the most population tend to be in the cities and all are held by Democrats.

The big gainers are Florida with four seats, Texas with three, California with two and Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah, Washington and Nevada with one each.

When the politicians finish redrawing the lines that shift 17 House seats from the North and Midwest to the Sunbelt states, it won't represent a clear loss of urban Democrats seats to increasingly Republican areas in the South, Southwest and West.

The odds are that in Northern states losing two seats each the new lines will result in a loss of one Democratic and one Republican seat. That's the way of political compromise.

It's in the new districts that Republicans see the

Seeing A Respite

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Not so many months ago, top state officials including a number of legislators expressed concern that unionism was gaining a foothold in North Carolina.

Elected officials at state and local levels were warned at the time to be on guard against growing interest in unions among public employees: teachers, firemen, sanitation employees, policemen.

The contention is that if public officials give in to public employee unionization efforts, a bad example is set for private industry and union activity in that sector would likely increase.

For this state which has the lowest unionization rate of any other in the nation (seven percent of the industrial workforce unionized, compared to 25 percent nationwide), and has among the lowest industrial wage rate in the nation, sharply increased unionization would hamper what has become a selling point in luring new industry to the state.

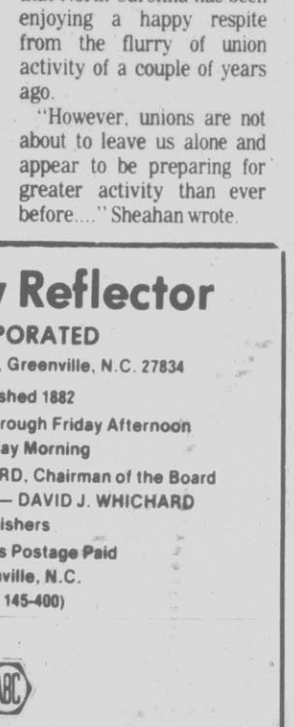

Two significant developments have now occurred which give those concerned with union growth some breathing room.

Public Employees

— The North Carolina Association of Educators has put on the back burner its push for collective bargaining rights; a perennial effort in the General Assembly which is viewed as a strong move toward true unionization of that largest of all organizations of state employees;

— Recent statistics demonstrate an overall reversal of union successes in efforts to organize in the private sector.

Analysts see several key factors at work in this trend: generally bad economic conditions make those well employed more apt to hold on rather than push for gains; the influx of new industries, some of which are unionized and pay higher than prevailing wages, is exerting a strong upward push on the average pay for industrial employees in a number of communities across the state; and enlightened management is learning the lesson that they can take specific steps to discourage union efforts.

BILL NOBLITT

Robert E. Sheahan, a High Point lawyer specializing in labor relations and personnel management and active as a consultant in this field, summarized the current situation in a recent report published in "We the People of North Carolina", a periodical of the N.C. Citizens Association.

"In summary, it appears that North Carolina has been enjoying a happy respite from the flurry of union activity of a couple of years ago.

"However, unions are not about to leave us alone and appear to be preparing for greater activity than ever before...." Sheahan wrote.

A review of yearly organizing activities demonstrates the trend.

Decline

In 1977, unions won 53 elections, a new peak in activity. The union successes climbed again in 1978, to 57 elections won.

According to National Labor Relations Board figures, this upward trend reversed in 1979 with union victories in only 41 of 106 elections.

In 1980, unions were successful in only 27 of 87 elections; while at the same time, total numbers of workers voting in union elections dropped from 14,385 in 1979 to 11,315 in 1980.

Sheahan warns, however, that the same conditions which industry finds so attractive in North Carolina, and which government officials use so effectively to

A Crewless Battleship

The United States is going into a crash program to build up its military might. We want to be in a position to match the Soviets on land, on sea and in the air. There is only one problem. Once we get all the new helicopters, planes and ships built, where do we find the people to man them?

The Navy, for example, does not have enough crewmen to handle the ships they're supposed to keep on the high seas now. If we take the "New Jersey" and "Iowa" battleships out of mothballs as Defense Secretary Weinberger wants to do, this is what might happen:

"Captain, as admiral of the North Atlantic Forces, I turn over the command of the battleship New Jersey to you and your fine crew."

"Thank you, sir. Where's the crew?"

"They're standing over there."

"Six men for a battleship?"

"That's all the bureau of personnel could spare. I asked for 10 but they said they needed the others to man a missile cruiser that will escort you at sea."

"Begging your pardon, sir, and meaning no disrespect, but a battleship calls for a complement of 4,000 men."

"I'm aware of that, Captain. But we're going to have to make it with what we've got. I'm sure with proper training your six-man crew can do the job. They'll just have to double up on their watches."

"You actually want me to take this battleship out of harbor with six people?"

"Captain, may I remind you that getting command of a battleship is one of the highest honors that the Navy can bestow on one of its officers."

"I'm aware of the honor, sir, and it's been my dream to command a ship like the New Jersey. But I always thought when I got one this size, the crew would go with it."

"I assure you, Captain, once you get the hang of it you'll be amazed how few people it takes to run a battleship. We've put in an automatic steering system, so you won't need anyone at the wheel, and all your meals have been prepackaged so you won't require a mess crew, and the engines have been fitted with computers so

We would like to call public notice to the director of our school's musical, "Tom Sawyer."

Mrs. Carol Ann Davis is a superb person. She spends every minute of her day for us, plus her afternoons for rehearsal. She's a fun-loving teacher, always smiling through good or bad. Mrs. Davis is not only our director, but our drama teacher and friend.

Mrs. Davis, all the time, all the tears, all the headaches — it's going to be worth it! Thanks, Mrs. Davis, for everything.

To the editor:

I really think the City should be commended for such a grand job they did on saving gasolines and taxpayers' money in 1980.

But what really concerns me more than anything else is the amount of gas that is being spent on cars with permanent tags in this town that you see at the barber shop, or at the grocery store, etc: this seems to me Mr. City Manager, not to be justified.

Solution: All these cars should be kept in a compound. Checked out in the morning and checked in when not in use or at the end of the work day. Why should these people be able to drive these cars home and back to work. I am paying for this with my tax dollars. I have to drive to work in my own car. Why not they?

"RICHLY TO ENJOY"

It is a terrible thing to lose a sense of relish for life. People who have lost this sense stagger through life surrounded by darkness. They have no light without to guide them nor any light within their souls. They wish for death.

Psychologists would say that when we are in this condition we are mentally and emotionally sick. Certainly every holy impulse within us and all the religious faith we have rises up to witness the fact that a lack of relish for life is moral and spiritual sickness. Insane people are out of their heads; people who lack normal love for life are out of their souls.

If you feel this way, don't plunge into despair but snap into quick and effective action. God has given us life to enjoy. We are normal when we enjoy it, we are blind and in despair if we do not enjoy it. And remember this word from the Bible: "God has given us all things richly to enjoy." — Elisha Douglass

U.S. Management's Mistakes

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business News Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Eugene Jennings was lamenting the weakened world position of American business. "Competitors in the international marketplace are beating us at our own game," the professor said.

The game and techniques for playing were established by U.S. firms years ago, he said. But as competitors learned, Americans forgot.

"The Japanese are merely applying a winning formula that once made us the premier economic force in the world," said Jennings, a Michigan State University professor, corporate scholar and adviser to top executives.

He forecast that "President Reagan's attempt to turn America around by investment incentives will surely fail if corporate chiefs don't return to wise management." America, he contends, "suffers more from a shortfall of wisdom than a shortfall of capital." The bitter pill, he said, "is that today's mistakes were yesterday's lessons."

On his hit list are arrogance and ignorance, behavioral scientists, bad teaching and a dulled sense of purpose. He hopes the lessons will be relearned. He senses they will.

1. Know your business. "It isn't determined by products or profits," he said, citing an observation by Harvard's Theodore Levitt that drill makers sell holes, not drills, and another by the inventor of the reaper, Cyrus McCormick, that his product was economics, not reapers.

By this reasoning, he said, you can see that General Motors and AT&T are in the same business, that of bringing people together. Their goals, he pointed out, are the same, though the instruments differ.

2. Technology and marketing must be married. "America was seldom first in technology, but we were first to marry it to markets in a timely, orderly fashion," he said. "Our asset was responsiveness."

3. Other companies cannot be bought blindly. "To acquire the other guy's products you should know either the technology or the market. Without either you don't know what you're buying." The message is proved daily as companies divest holdings acquired a few years earlier.

4. Quality begets customer loyalty. "We invented the principle," with Model T Fords and other products, said a chagrined Jennings. "We shouldn't have to have Sony reteach it to us." They know, he said, what Henry Ford learned: Quantity doesn't offset poor quality, because people buy products one at a time.

5. Strategy precedes structure. "We knew that once a business organization was functioning the management style had to defer to it."

The best corporations, including General Motors and IBM, he said in illustration, don't reorganize every time a new chief rises to the top. Less successful, more erratic ones, he pointed out, often do.

6. People are a company's most important asset. We knew that too, he said. "But then companies abandoned their employees."

One of the oldest maxims in American management, he said, is that you cannot hire a pair of hands. "Andrew Carnegie observed that a man also has a mind and a heart, and that he thinks and feels. But management abandoned the mind and heart, and the unions eagerly sought them."

7. A business needs a sense of purpose. The greats of American industry knew it. "A company is too abstract to give loyalty to," the professor asserted. "We must turn an organization to a purpose. It must have meaning and justification. This is the art of leadership."

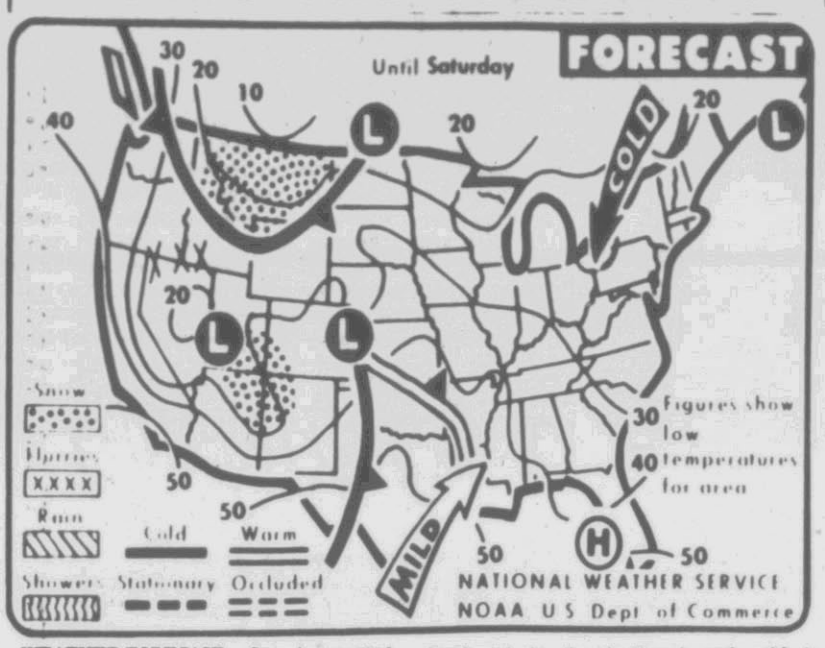

And so, said Jennings, author of many books on corporate life, these seven bits of wisdom have become the seven deadly mistakes.

How did we go wrong? Among other things, through the arrogance of the affluent 1960s and the ignorance of the 1970s, he said.

The latter was produced largely by "business schools turning to the mechanics of business from the philosophy and history of business." School management departments, he said, "became overrun by behavioral scientists whose affinity to management was that they could spell the word. They never knew the lessons of management and business history."

More recently, he continued, blame can be directed at disrespect for the past and "the urge for instant knowledge perpetrated by the media and pop writers who wrote as if no scholarship preceded them."

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — Snow is expected in the forecast period (until Saturday morning) for the Southwest and northwestern Plains. Mild weather is due from the Southwest to the Southeast and cold is predicted for the northern states. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press

Spring arrives at 12:03 this afternoon but winter apparently is on a different timetable.

Travelers advisories continue in effect for the northern mountains of North Carolina where up to 3 inches of new snow is reported.

Colder air swept across the state Thursday, bringing new record lows for the date in some areas of North Carolina this morning.

In the Raleigh-Durham area a temperature of 24 shortly after midnight broke the old record of 26 degrees for March 20, set in 1965. Temperatures were in the 20s across most of the state this morning.

Snow flurries persisted over the northern and central mountains Thursday night with 1 to 2 inches of snow reported. Boone measured up to 3 inches of new snow this morning.

Across the state Thursday, brisk northwest winds were the rule with partly cloudy skies and rather cold temperatures.

Afternoon highs were in the 40s over much of the state with 30s in the northern mountains ranging to the lower 50s on the south coast. Wilmington with 52 degrees was the warmest in the state yesterday.

The storm center that brought the last surge of cold air has now moved well out to sea with high pressure moving over the southeastern states. This will bring an end to the snow shower activity today in the mountains of the state but will keep brisk northwest winds across the state.

Temperatures will continue on the cool side this first day of spring but by tomorrow temperatures will begin to warm up considerably. Abundant sunshine is forecast for the state on Saturday with temperatures in the 50s reaching to around 60 in portions of the state.

The next weather system to affect the state will be a developing low system in the southern Rockies this morning. This system will bring an increase in cloud cover to the mountains of the North Carolina during Saturday and over the state Saturday night.

Warmer temperatures are expected Saturday night with rain spreading into the mountains. The rain will continue eastward over the state on sunday with mild temperatues expected.

The prolonged dry spell over North Carolina continues to present a hazard in the dry woodlands of the state and the fire danger is still very high. Until much needed rainfall occurs statewide, authorities urge caution in the wooded area and fields of North Carolina.

you won't need anybody in the boiler rooms. And when you press this button you can fire your guns fore and aft. So actually the only thing your crew will have to do is scrape and paint the ship when it pulls into port."

"It sounds very reassuring, Admiral. I imagine my first job will be to brief the officers."

"Officers? You're it."

"You mean I have to eat by myself?"

"Don't feel bad. Your only chief petty officer has to eat by himself also."

"What are my orders, sir?"

"You're to seek out the enemy and destroy him at will. But first check with Washington before you engage in action."

"By radio?"

"We couldn't spare a radioman. Here is a bag of dimes. There's a pay phone on the bridge."

"Thank you, sir. That's very generous of you."

"Money isn't our problem, Captain. We have more of it than we know what to do with. Our problem is that the more ships the Defense Department wants to put to sea, the more we have to stretch our manpower. After I leave here I have to recommission the aircraft carrier Oriskany with three squadrons of Grumman fighters."

"That should beef up the fleet."

"Not quite. They only gave me two pilots."

"Would you like to address the crew, sir?"

"No, Captain, I believe you better pull up anchor right away before they find out they're the only ones on board. We can't afford to have any of them jump ship."

greatest opportunities. For example, in Florida and Texas, Republicans believe they inevitably will gain because they now are under-represented on the basis of their overall vote in congressional contests within those states.

Church In Bankruptcy

HOUSTON (AP) — The South's largest black Baptist church has filed a bankruptcy petition in an attempt to keep creditors from seizing the church's new $1.1 million sanctuary, which hasn't been paid for.

A Dallas bond company has foreclosed on Pleasant Grove, and 500 bondholders went to court in Harris County to claim possession of the property after the church defaulted on a $1.1 million deal to finance construction of the church's new sanctuary.

The bankruptcy petition will temporarily block the bondholders from seizing the church until Pleasant Grove's finances are sorted out by a court-appointed trustee. The bondholders' suit, scheduled to go to trial Monday, has been postponed indefinitely.

The Rev. Charles L. Jackson, pastor of the church, could not be reached for comment Thursday. His wife said he was not at home and she would not say where he could be reached.

Pleasant Grove is located in one of Houston's poorest neighborhoods, the Fifth Ward, and has 10,000 members.

In depositions, Jackson said he and others committed the church to the construction debt without consulting the congregation.

Jackson has filed a countersuit against the bond company alleging it did not live up to the terms of the construction loan contract and harassed the church for bond payments.

Patient Care Role Is Debated

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The white-uniformed people who draw your blood at the hospital are nurses.

And the people who monitor pacemaker patients are nurses.

Or are they?

Present laws allow unlicensed people to perform such duties — called mechanical acts — if the hospital, physician or registered nurse agree.

But there is a heated and bitter debate raging between nurses, doctors and hospital administrators over whether that practice should be continued. And the health-care profession is asking the General Assembly to take the role of referee in the debate.

Legislators are discussing two proposed bills that would regulate the nursing profession and settle the debate.

Each bill would classify so-called mechanical acts, like drawing blood and patient monitoring, as nursing acts and would require they be performed only by licensed nurses.

The bills also would give nurses more authority in deciding who would determine exactly what jobs should be performed only by nurses.

Doctors and hospital administrators argue that the change isn't needed because they are adequately training people to relieve nurses of lesser duties.

The nurses, however, argue the hospitals are allowing some people without a high school education to perform the jobs and in so doing, they say hospitals are putting the public in danger.

Hospital management also argues that a nursing shortage has created a need to use unlicensed personnel. But the nurses counter that argument saying many of their peers leave their jobs because they have too little authority.

The nurses point to Greensboro's Moses Cone Hospital, where there are very few unlicensed people hired to care for patients. They say the hospital has hired more than its budgeted amount of nurses and very few of the nurses have left their jobs at the hospital.

A final point of contention is the cost of hiring all licensed personnel to perform such duties. The doctors and hospital administrators say insurance costs will soar and Medicaid costs will increase drastically.

But the nurses say the practice will make hospitals more efficient. They say unlicensed people tend to be busy for a small percentage of their day while nurses work a greater amount of hours.

Abuses cited by the nurses include hospitals that let untrained people administer medications, conduct psychiatric admission interviews, monitor vital signs after an operation, add drugs to intravenous solutions and care for the intravenous solutions.

They say the revision of the law will continue to allow unlicensed aides to take temperatures, blood pressure, pulse, bathe, feed and turn patients.

They say only the Board of Nursing should have authority over the acts.

Fire Forces 300 From Raleigh Hotel In Night

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — One hotel guest made a rope from bedsheets and 300 were evacuated from the Sheraton-Crabtree Hotel around 11 p.m. Thursday as fire erupted from a third-floor trash can and filled lower floors with smoke.

No serious injuries were reported. At least 22 rooms were damaged by smoke, but guests in other rooms of the nine-story building were back in their rooms by midnight.

Earlier reports indicated arson was involved, but District Fire Chief E.H. Beasley said arson was not suspected.

Many of the guests fled from the hotel in night clothes and overcoats, some with no shoes, when the fire alarm rang at about 10:45 p.m.

About two dozen more were trapped for 30 minutes on the third and fourth floors. They shivered on balconies while they awaited rescue.

One of the guests, prevented from leaving by heavy smoke, broke out windows of his room with a TV stand and dangled a rope of bedsheets from the balcony to provide an emergency exit. But the rope was not needed, and the man eventually was able to walk from the hotel when the smoke subsided.

Fire dispatcher M.W. Williams said the fire began in a hallway on the third floor of the recently-constructed east wing of the hotel.

Beasley said somebody may have thrown a cigarette into the trash can to ignite the contents.

"We had two aerial trucks there, and they just went up there and scooped them all out," said Williams.

Williams said it was the second night that a Sheraton Hotel in Raleigh caught on fire. On Wednesday night, the ballroom at the Sheraton Highwoods was scorched in a case of suspected arson, he said. But fire officials said they suspect no link between the two fires.

Williams said that besides damage to the third floor of the east wing, the fourth and fifth floors of the hotel sustained heavy smoke damage.

Four fire trucks and two rescue squads responded to the fire call and had the flames under control within an hour.

"It was kind of scary with the MGM Grand fire (in Las Vegas, Nev.) there," said Williams. The Las Vegas hotel fire last November killed 84 people.

Seth B. Jones, former Raleigh mahor and an owner of the 260-room hotel, said he believes the fire loss would be covered by insurance.

Says Pathet Lao Hold MIAs

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty-seven Americans listed as soldiers missing in action during the Vietnam war are being held prisoner in Laos by the communist Pathet Lao government, an anti-communist guerrilla leader in that Southeast Asian nation has told ABC News.

The guerrilla, whose name was not revealed, told ABC correspondent Norman Bottoroff in Bangkok, Thailand, that he got his information from Pathet Lao officials who are holding the Americans but who might defect because of Vietnamese domination of their country.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said the Defense Department has been unable to substantiate reports that some American servicemen are still alive in Laos and are being held prisoner.

The guerrilla interviewed by Bottoroff was described Thursday as commanding a 15,000-man force operating in Laos.

"They are keeping them, not just saw them, but they are the masters of those prisoners," the Laotian said. "They are saying 27 are under their control and they are willing to exchange at any proper time."

"What do they want?" Bottoroff asked.

"Their safety in a third country and certain financial rewards," was the reply.

Asked what prompted the disclosure, the Laotian replied:

"We are trying to put a clear picture to the American people that there is fact, that can prove, Americans are still left behind."

The State Department said it has received reports that groups of Laotians claim they have access to the remains of American servicemen killed in Laos during the Indochina war.

A department spokesman said he was responding to a broadcast report that Laotian refugee groups in Thailand had recovered the remains of 17 American servicemen and were demanding payment in exchange for turning them over to American authorities.

In a written response to inquiries, the spokesman said the United States is aware that Laotian groups claim to have recovered remains of Americans or to have the ability to do so.

The spokesman also said the government has received reports that private American citizens have approached these groups and offered payment. He said he was not aware that any remains had been turned over to these Americans.

Life As It's Lived

Security Blanket Poses Real Test Of Detergent

By GAIL MICHAELS

That detergent commercial in which the housewife is invited to write her own scenario has always intrigued me. If those were real housewives, they wouldn't be messing with easy stuff like football jerseys. They'd go for the really impossible item on the laundry list: the security blanket.

At least a mother knows what kind of dirt she's dealing with on football uniform. But there's no telling through what a security blanket has been dragged. We have retrieved Meg's blanket from the floors of fast food restaurants, service station restrooms, and motel Dempsey Dumpsters. (For some reason, the maids always mistake it for trash.)

As a result, the lovely pink shawl with which we started out is now a limp, grayish-brown rag. Only the border remains. The inside has been eaten away entirely.

Meg likes it that way. It's much more versatile than a solid square of material. It can alternate as a hula skirt or a turban. Wrapped around her neck several times, it becomes a boa or a poncho. Wrapped around Zachary's neck, it becomes a lasso.

Of course, we made her stop doing that. We didn't fear strangulation as much as we feared that it might give Zachary a disease.

Phillip and I have tried to bribe her into giving the blanket up, mainly because it's a nuisance. We get tired of the scavenger hunt which must be conducted nightly at bedtime. The last bribe almost succeeded. We offered her a dollar for the blanket. Two hours after her bedtime, she crept into the den and pushed the money back into my hand. She wiped her tear-stained face on my sleeve and looked up at me soulfully. "Mommy," she said, "there are some things more important than dollars."

Meg's attachment to her blanket distresses her grandmothers even more than it distresses us. Naturally, they are proud of their descendant, especially when she is well-scrubbed and fancily-dressed in one of the many lovely frocks which they have bestowed upon her. They are not proud, however, of the piece of matter that usually trail behind.

My mother's reaction is mainly passive. She just groans as if she's having a gall bladder attack whenever the blanket appears. Phillip's mom is more action-oriented. Realizing that Meg was a hopeless case, she set out to save her grandson from the same fate. On Christmas Day the most visible present under the tree was a sturdy Fisher Price Security Bunny.

Zachary does like it. He uses it to demonstrate his pitching ability. But for comfort he has, true to form, turned to a far flimsier yellow thermal blanket. (I took away a shawl similar to Meg's the first time I saw him smile when it touched his face.)

For three weeks running he has been wiping his nose on the thermal blanket each time I've entered his room to rescue him from his crib. For the past four days he has stiffened and screamed whenever I've tried to pull it away from him.

Today I noticed it was changing color.

Oh, Tide, are you up to this challenge?

Car Dealer Pitching Pigs

CLINTON, N.J. (AP) — A car dealer who has wearied of flashy gimmicks to entice buyers has an idea which he says puts the whole game into perspective.

Stuart Lasser says he will give a free live pig to anyone who can find cars priced lower than those on his lot.

"I just got fed up with all this nonsense," said Lasser, who owns a Ford dealership. "To be honest with you, there are a lot of ploys used in all types of car advertising. But we all buy from the same dealerships and work with the same mark-ups, so it's ridiculous."

Lasser said he decided to pitch porkers because he was tired of dealers who promised cash or other rewards to buyers.

"As long as I'm going to get down in the mud, and get down to their level, I'm going to have some fun doing it," he said.

"Besides, there's too much seriousness in this world. People have enough troubles, so I figured I'd give them something to laugh at."

California Faces Costly Burden Of Refugee Funds

By PETE JACOBS
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Minh fled Vietnam for the United States three years ago, homeless and broke. Next month, along with thousands of other jobless Indochinese refugees, Minh will become part of a multimillion dollar burden for state and local officpals.

Effective April 1, a provision of the Refugee Act of 1980 will cut off the 100 percent federal reimbursement for Indochinese refugees who have been in the United States for 36 months. Those here a shorter time will not be affected

State and local governments will have to bear the costs of the refugees' transition into society.

Nowhere will the cutoff have a greater effect than in California. Between 130,000 and 165,000 of America's 450,000 Indochinese refugees — about 30 percent — live in the state, says a report issued last year by the state Social Services Department. The report estimated 5,000 more refugees arrive each month. Federal officials say some 14,000 refugees arrive in the country monthly.

"If there is not a change...and the April cutoff remains, we will be in a very difficult fiscal situation," said Marion Woods, director of the California social services department.

Last October, the state Department of Finance estimated that 92,580 Indochinese in the state were receiving cash assistance.

"The federal funding will end for almost 11,000 refugees," Woods said, estimating the number of refugees who have been here three years and thus will transfer from federal to state and local rolls.

"That will mean...California will have to pick up almost 50 percent of the grant cost," Woods said, pegging the tab at about $24 million for the state fiscal year beginning July 1.

Reps. Dan Lungren, a Long Beach Republican, and George Danielson, a Los Angeles Democrat, have introduced a bill to extend the deadline. The congressmen, and other critics of the federal act, say state and local officials have not had time to prepare for the refugees, partly because control of where the refugees are sent after they enter the country rests with volunteer agencies in New York City.

At the offices of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies in Manhattan, the refugees' destination is decided in what is known as the weekly "auction."

Each refugee's dossier is assigned to one of 11 volunteer agencies working under contract with the federal government. According to their individual policies, the agencies determine where refugees are sent. Representatives say most decisions are based on reuniting families, and because California has the most refugees, the flow tends to continue in that direction.

Minh, for example, arrived in New York City and stayed there for two years. But after contending he could not find a job, could not adjust to the cold and missed his relatives, he was relocated to Linda Vista, the "Little Saigon" section of San Diego.

This tree-shaded four-mile square residential chunk of north-central San Diego, carved out by developers in 1941, is the largest Indochinese community in the country. An estimated 7,000 of 15,000 residents are Indochinese. That is more refugees than most U.S. states have taken in.

At Linda Vista Elementary School, classrooms are filled with the confusing chatter of 19 languages, evidence of decades of ethnic movement from Mexicans to Laotians, Cambodians and Vietnamese.

"Linda Vista is the only area I know where aliens from outer space could land and it would take two weeks before they would be noticed," commented local resident Margarita Castro.

The patient load at the Linda Vista Health Care Center, which was 5 percent Indochinese in 1976, now exceeds 70 percent.

Unable to anticipate this sort of explosive "migration," San Diego officials can only estimate the county's Indochinese population at 20,000. They further estimate they will have to spend $500,000 in the first year of the Refugee Act if federal aid is withdrawn from all 2,500 refugees in the county.

In Orange County, Supervisor Harriet Weider, who estimates the county refugee populaton at 31,000 to 50,000, said: "We are not being impacted, we are being inundated." Officials say about 2,800 county refugees will move from federal to county rolls, at a cost of $1.6 million the first year.

Los Angeles County estimates its costs at about $3.6 million for 3,900 refugees from a population of between 50,000 and 75,000. Officials estimate San Francisco's first-year cost at $220,000.

Woods believes a national plan would help distribute refugees more evenly that they are apportioned now, with 90 percent of them going to 10 states.

"We don't get the refugees until one day they walk into a welfare office," Woods said. "That's where we begin. I'm saying we need to begin at the decision-making level."

Young Bowler Largest Individual Fund-Raiser

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Joal La Monica's greatest enthusiasm is bowling and with this enthusiasm he became the largest individual fund-raiser ever for the American Lung Association of North Carolina, Eastern Region.

JOAL LA MONICA

Joal, 14, raised $705.77 in the third annual American Lung Association Bowlathon held recently at Hillcrest Lanes here. This was nearly a third of the total raised, $2,260, Association Director Connie Landen said.

Joal bowls at Hillcrest four or five nights a week, along with his mother, Mrs. Sandra Hardison, whom he calls "one of the best bowlers in Greenville." He lives on Fourteenth Street here with his mother and stepfather, William A. Hardison. He has four sisters, two of whom he says also like to bowl.

Joal calls himself a fair bowler. He used to be in a junior league, but it's disbanded. So for now he's bowling on his own and will probably join an adult league this summer. "It's a big decision," he said, "because once you start bowling on a certain level, you can never go back to a lower one."

Joal obtained 97 different sponsors for his three game entry into the bowlathon. No one person pledged over five cents a pin, though Ernest Payton put in a $100 donation on his behalf. Payton provides this amount every year to one participant in the bowlathon, Mrs. Landen said.

A ninth grader at E. B. Aycock Junior High School, Joal was the only minor to take part in the bowlathon.

The second-highest money raiser was Hope Sermons, who raised $517.

Mrs. Landen praised everyone who took part and gave special credit to the members of Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity of East Carolina University. "Those guys were out at the lanes every night for two weeks lining up participants in the bowlathon," she said. "They were indispensible to the success of the event."

Money raised in the bowlathon will go mainly to finance the pediatric programs of the Association, she indicated.

Proxmire Seeks The Gift List

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire wants the White House to reveal the names of people or groups who contributed $1,000 or more to a $375,529 fund for renovating President and Mrs. Reagan's living quarters.

"If contributions are being made by oil companies or dairy lobbies, the public has a right to know who is giving large sums of money," Proxmire said Thursday. "It is not calling on the taxpayer, which is to Reagan's credit. But if private interest is involved, the public should know about it."

White House officials have refused to release the names of any of the 167 donors who have contributed an average of $2,249 each to redecorate and refurbish the second and third floors of the executive mansion.

Wisconsin Univ. Official Says UNC Plan Working

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Univeristy of North Carolina plan ot increase minority presence in the system is working, while a federal desegregation plan would not, a former top official for the University of Wisconsin system testified Thursday.

Dr. Donald K. Smith resigned last July as a senior vice president for the Wisconsin system. He testified during an administrative hearing on a federal Department of Education attempt to cut $100 million in annual federal aid to North Carolina.

The department alleges UNC has failed to remove vestiges of its former dual system for whites and blacks.

North Carolina's plan to increase minority presence at its schools is "wise, judicious ... and working," while the federal plan is "bizarre and disheartening," said Smith, now a professor of communication arts at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Smith attacked a 1979-1980 federal study by Dr. Robert Dentler, senior sociologist at Abt Associates, a Cambridge, Mass., firm contracted by the federal government for $80,000 to suggest policy models for increasing minority presence on UNC campuses.

Dentler recommended shifts in UNC's educational programs between the predominantly white schools and predominantly black schools, saying students and faculty would follow the programs changes and improve the racial mix.

"There is no relationship between this trivial study and the kind of hard work needed to make a good evaluation," Smith said.

North Carolina officials contend Dentler's plan would disrupt the university system, lower faculty morale limit student access to the universities.

Agreeing, Smith said the Dentler plan showed "a lack of understanding" of why students pick a certain university.

Program choice is only a secondary consideration when a student chooses an academic institution, Smith said . He said a student first goes by his perception of the school, whether the student will feel comfortable there.

The Wisconsin educator said Dentler's use of college catalogues to determine duplicated programs at North Carolina schools was "a weak indicator."

He also faulted Dentler for his "quickie visits" to North Carolina colleges during the research, saying Dentler's four-to-six hour visits per campus were insufficient to make a proper evaluation.

Smith also criticized the Dentler for its possible effects on long-range planning. "Even if you do get people to go along with the program shifting, you're going to have to do it over and over again as the attraction of programs change over time," he said.

For example, Smith cited the study of the environment, popular in the 1970s but now on the decline.

The University of Wisconsin, like the University of North Carolina, is a multi-campus system. Wisconsin consolidated in 1974. UNC consolidated in 1972. Smith said the two systems are "very similar."

"If I had made these proposals at the University of Wisconsin," Smith said, "I would have been asked to resign immediately."

In earlier testimony, Raleigh, N.C., architect Albert L. Haskins Jr., a partner in the firm of Haskins and Rice, said "buildings on white campuses (in North Carolina) are generally in better condition" than buildings on black campuses.

But Haskins said a $20 million special appropriation for renovations at the traditionally black institutions and $20 million the Legislature later approved for capital improvements on the five black campuses during the 1979-1981 biennium will considerably improve the black schools' facilities.

He said that even with those appropriations, both white and black schools will have some unmet needs but that the difference between the unmet needs of the black and white institutions is "negligible."

Haskins' firm made a study of the five black campuses and three similarly sized white campuses — Appalachian State, East Carolina State and UNC-Wilmingtoin — in 1977-79 at the request of UNC.

The study compared the "state of repair" of buildings on the eight campuses. Not included in the study's evaluation were the general attractiveness of the campuses, landscaping of campus grounds, architectual design of the buildings, layout and design of the campuses or use of space, Haskins said.

Under cross examination, Haskins said the lack of library space at any particular campus was not included in his study.

He said the upgraded black facilities would still not approach the quality of buildings at UNC-Wilmington because most of buildings on the Wilmington campus are comparably modern — constructed in 1962.

"Some of these buildings (at the black institutions) are obsolete and should be torn down," said Haskins during a recess.

Haskins said that spending money to repair the obsolete buildings when new buildings serving the same function have been built "is just not economically feasible."

"If you have an old dog house, and don't have the dog any more, what's the use of keeping it?" Haskins asked.

Throughout the hearings UNC has maintained that it is upgrading the facilities of the predominantly black institutions in the 16-campus system.

Robb Will Seek Governorship

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Lt. Gov. Charles S. Robb, son-in-law of the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, has announced he will run for the Democratic nomination for governor.

Robb, 41, husband of Lynda Bird Johnson, appears likely to be unopposed for the nomination at the party's convention May 29-30 in Virginia Beach. His announcement came Thursday.

If nominated, Robb is likely to be opposed in the general election by Republican Attorney General J. Marshall Coleman, who announced his candidacy Monday. The GOP will pick its nominee at a Virginia Beach convention June 4-6.

Gov. John Dalton, a Republican, is not allowed to succeed himself.

Robb was elected lieutenant governor in 1977 in his first bid for public office.

Filling Interdenominational Needs

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — A laconic, practical-minded Texan, who built a national newspaper empire among United Methodists to fill a denominational gap, is stepping into another breach — to provide a national interdenominational news weekly.

It's to "fill a void," says the Rev. Spurgeon M. Dunnam III of Dallas, editor and general manager of the weekly Texas Methodist and also of a national denominational edition, the United Methodist Reporter.

The new, interdenominational weekly, the National Christian Reporter, was launched last week, aimed at offering a broad, ecumenical cross-section of religious news in the contemporary ecumenical climate.

No other existing religious newspaper specifies itself as interdenominational, although the magazine, Christian Century, does so, and most denominational periodicals now include some news of other churches.

"Informed Christians tend to be more committed Christians," says Dunnam, whose past operations have defied the general shrinkage in recent years of religious weeklies.

What offers strength to the new interdenominational weekly is that it's based in an already flourishing, self-supporting enterprise that in the last decade has become the nation's biggest denominational newspaper.

Its national edition, tailored with local news for 44 United Methodist regional units across the country and also for 350 local congregations, each version assembled in Dallas, has a combined circulation of 520,000. That growing output, built up since 1972, will continue.

The new paper, Dunnam says, is "an extension, adding to what we're already doing, a separate paper not limited to the Methodist angle."

Actually, he adds, such broadness is "consistent with the Methodist tradition of not being merely denominational or creedal" but mirroring founder John Wesley's view of his parish as "the whole world."

The first issue of the new paper March 13, with front-page stories about human rights, a misleading fund-raising letter and clergy confusion over new income tax rules, went to about 2,000 initial subscribers.

That was about the number with which the United Methodist Reporter launched its national edition in 1972, and it has since boomed to more than a half million.

Dunnam engineered the earlier expansion three years after he, fresh out of seminary, became editor of the Texas Methodist and pushed its lagging circulation swiftly upward. About that time, two national, officially subsidized Methodist magaines folded, and he saw the opening.

"It took off from there," he says, and it's grown ever since.

Of the new paper, Dunnam, now 38, says it was triggered by numerous inquiries from people in other denominations about such a publication. "We feel there's a pretty good market for it. We're totally free enterprise, and it'll have to pay its way."

Its purpose, he says, to offer all Christians an inclusive, credible source of religious news and a forum for exchange of Christian viewpoints.

"We're not beholden to any church organization or agency," he says. "We have no ax to grind for or against any church program... We need to recognize the diversity of opinion within the church and to reflect it in balanced form."

In Roman Catholicism, most dioceses have diocesan weeklies, and Southern Baptists have state papers in many states. Several major Protestant denominations have monthlies.

The weekly ecumenical magazine, Christian Century, offers some news, as does the evangelical fortnightly, Christianity Today, but they mainly contain lengthy articles of opinion. The independent weekly, the National Catholic Reporter, offers general religious news but focuses on Catholicism.

That left a beckoning berth for Dunnam's new interdenominational newspaper. "We went from regional to national denominationally, and then came this wider need being expressed," he says. "We're trying to meet it."

Intensive Care For Critically Ill Babes

By CHRIS ROBERTS
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Kristin's feet were so tiny store-sized booties were too big, so her mother bought her booties made for a doll.

A teddy bear was placed in her isolette in Children's Hospital's infant intensive care unit, next to a toy monkey wearing a green cap to which a red cross was stitched. Together, they helped the nurses and doctors look after her.

On the side of the life-giving machine was a note that said, "Please call my Mommy and Daddy everyday." Beneath it, a card. "Have a happy Valentine's Day," it said. It was signed, "Love Daddy."

Kristin was one of those tiny infants who arrive too soon or with a life-threatening defect. If not for immediate, sophisticated medical care, these babies die.

"The biggest problem today in pediatrics is the first five to 10 minutes in the delivery room," says Dr. William Fox, medical director of the infant intensive care unit at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. "A lot of cases are too late by the time they reach us."

Children's does not deliver babies. Instead, it cares for the ones who are critically ill, doctoring them in what it says was the first intensive care unit dedicated for infants in the country and the biggest so far with 20 beds.

The babies are referred from the tri-state area — Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, ferried to Children's by a special transport team which includes at least one doctor and one registered nurse.

Often within hours after birth, these infants, their hands the size of nickels, are being readied for the ambulance ride with tubes and wires to monitor heart beat, breathing and blood pressure.

Kristin weighed two pounds, 10 ounces at birth on Jan. 7. She was recently moved from the intensive care unit to the hospital's infant transitional unit. She's getting better, thanks to recent medical advances.

One-half to three-quarters of the babies here are premature and suffer from RDS — Respiratory Distress Syndrome, caused by underdeveloped lungs. Some 55 employees work in the unit around the clock, checking on the little patients once an hour.

Monitoring devices sound alarms if a child stops breathing or has cardiac problems. There are oxygen hoods and music boxes, and rows and rows of guages, and dials, flashing lights and blips above the pint-sized beds. And everywhere stuffed animals, dwarfing their owners.

There is little crying. "The endotrachael tubes (used for breathing) press against the vocal chords and keep them from vibrating," explains head nurse Pat Bush, 28. "So they can't cry. That's why this unit sometimes is very quiet."

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market swung upward today, rebounding from Thursday's late selloff.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, off 7.48 Thursday, rose 5.13 to 991.71 by noontime today.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about a 9-5 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts noted some disappointment over the Dow's unsuccessful bid to make a stand above the 1,000 level earlier in the week.

But they also said expectations of a continuing decline in interest rates helped give the market a lift.

There were general forecasts that the bank prime lending rate, now in the 17-17½ percent range, would come down further before long. One small St. Louis bank today posted a prime rate of 16½ percent.

Newmont Mining fell 2¾ to 59. The stock jumped 6⅝ Thursday on rumors that the company might be a take-over target.

But Exxon issued a statement declaring that it had no interest in buying Newmont, and Newmont itself said it couldn't explain the activity in its stock.

The NYSE's composite index rose .23 to 76.87. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 2.19 at 348.81.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 25.52 million shares at noontime, down from 30.06 million at the same point Thursday.

Report New Shift In Thieves' Taste

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Authorities across the Carolinas say the taste of burglars has shifted away from silver in favor of guns and more traditional idems.

Many areas of the both North and South Carolina were beseiged with silver thefts as recently as January, authorities say, prompting the enactment of laws controlling second-hand silver sales, the formation of special police squads and the reactivation of crime prevention programs.

But authorities say the problem has begun to ease — mostly because of the declining price of silver.

"Stolen guns ... that seems to be our big problem now," said Floyd Wiley, a Beaufort, S.C., detective. Wiley said he recently had his investigators tracking a ring of silver thieves blamed for 21 unsolved case's in the county.

"We've only had a couple more silver cases since January," Wiley said. "It's beginning to look like the burglars are going back to their old ways again. They're after other things now."

Police in Charlotte, Raleigh, Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Greenville, S.C., confirm the pattern evident to Wiley. The authorities say silver thefts have leveled off or dropped during the last two months.

During the last four months of 1980, Charlotte sometimes averaged 30 silver burglaries a week. Lask week there were 13, two weeks ago, 18, and three weeks ago, 11.

A Winston-Salem crime analyst said weekly silver thefts have dropped nearly 40 percent compared with the weekly averages for late 1980.

"We've seen a decrease in these cases for over a month," said Winston-Salem Det. John Reaves. "The demand for it — the scrap silver — just isn't there anymore."

Slackening demand for recyclable silver is the reason police cite most often for the decrease. Demand is down, they say, because silves prices, as much as $50 an ounce in late 1979 and early 1980, have dropped over the months, hitting $11.50 an ounce this week.

Permits Inquiry In Magazine Outlays

NEW YORK (AP) — A judge has given the Federal Election Commission the go-ahead to investigate of funds spent by Reader's Digest magazine to provide TV stations with videotapes of a study of Sen. Edward Kennedy's accident at Chappaquiddick Island.

U.S. District Court Judge Pierre N. Leval's decision Thursday was a setback for the magazine's publisher, which contended such an investigation violates its First Amendment rights.

Reader's Digest Association had the Chappaquiddick study made for an article published in February 1980. Prior to publication, it sent out copies to the news media.

It also sent videotapes to television stations that outlined and illustrated the findings of the technical study.

The FEC started looking into the matter after receiving a complaint last August from a woman in Vale, Ore.. She contended Reader's Digest made an illegal corporate campaign contribution because it was spending money to distribute material unfavorable to Kennedy, who was seeking the Democratic nomination for the presidency.

The 1969 accident in Massachusetts claimed the life of Mary Jo Kopechne.

On Nov. 11, the FEC notified Reader's Digest that it had reason to believe the Federal Election Campaign Act had been violated.

The magazine publisher filed suit Jan. 30 to block the investtigation, arguing that it would hamper the publisher's right to speak freely and comment on newsworthy events.

In denying a preliminary injunction, Leval said it was "appropriate" for the FEC to determine whether Reader's Digest was distributing a news story or doing something unrelated to publishing.

However, he outlined the area the FEC could investigate and said Reader's Digest could seek an injunction again if the agency strayed.

Renovation For Old Cable Cars

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For more than a century, the historic wooden cable cars that helped make San Francisco famous have given lifts to millions of foot-weary tourists and residents.

But the cable cars are showing their age, so the city has mounted a $60 million renovation drive. That drive got a boost Thursday when Mayor Dianne Feinstein accepted a $1 million contribution from United Airlines and Westin Hotels, formerly Western International Hotels.

The donation raised the total of contributions to about $3.5 million of the $10 million expected to be raised by 1982. The city hopes the federal government will come up with the rest of the money, said Mel Wax, an aide to the mayor.

Protest Election Result

BANGUI, Central African Republic (AP) — Police fired tear gas and dispersed 2,000 young people who tried to reach the center of the capital today to protest the election of President David Dacko.

The demonstators were identified by witnesses as supporters of one of the defeated candidates, former Premier Ange Patasse, whose Movement for the Liberation of Central African People organized the turnout.

Dacko was re-elected for a six-year term, the supreme court announced Thursday night. It said Dacko won 50.2 percent of the votes Sunday, the first election here in 17 years.

Had he not received 50 percent, Dacko would have been obliged to enter a runoff election with Patasse who finished second.

Dacko was first elected president after the French granted independence in 1960 and re-elected in 1964, but overthrown by dictator Jean-Bedel Bokassa Dec. 31, 1965.

Dacko regained power in a French-backed coup on Sept. 20, 1979, and was acting president up until the Sunday election.

THE LOULA WHITE FLEMMING-MARGARET WINSTEAD HOUSE, 302 S. Greene St., is an excellent example of a distinctive style of Southern architecture used at the turn of the century. With its large rooms and high ceilings, its eight open fireplaces with no two mantles alike, its hidden sliding doors which transform the living room, hall parlor and dining room into one large open area, its ornamental slate roof with a handsomely structured corner turret (a little tower) and its long front porch with unusually well-balanced and graceful wrought iron grillwork, the house was built in 1902 by Senator James L. Fleming, a Greenville attorney, who was elected in 1904 to represent the sixth senatorial district in the North Carolina Senate. His wife, Loula Victoria White and Sen. Fleming were married in the Memorial Baptist Church next door to the property which was to become the site of their future home. A daughter, Margaret Fleming Winstead, was given life estate to the property.

THE JACOB WILSON HIGGS HOUSE, NOW "THE GATHERING PLACE", 1112 Dickinson Ave., has been restored and turned into an elegant restaurant known as "The Gathering Place," an ornate structure completed in 1905. After restoration, the large downstairs rooms that once served as library, dining room, sitting room and music room became dining areas in tan and gentle rose hues with Victorian floral wallpaper. The original handpressed tin plates decorate the ceiling with a different pattern in each room. Two large ornate staircases are features in the foyer. Seven gables were constructed to satisfy Mrs. Higgs' desire. A porte-cochere was added sometime after 1914 to house the family car. The horse and buggy had become obsolete. Free refreshments at "The Gathering Place" will be available during the day to ticket holders, courtesy of Pepsi Bottling Co. of Greenville and members of the association. Restoration by Mr. and Mrs. John Cox and Dr. Lewis Forrest. Courtesy of the lessor, Carl Jordan of Windsor.

The Fleming-Winstead Home and the Higgs House are two of 14 homes of the Heritage Tour.

Ramey Hurls ECU Past Clemson, 4-1

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

What a difference a day makes!

Wednesday, East Carolina's Pirates were bombed by Clemson, 14-4. Yesterday, however, the shoe was on the other foot as East Carolina gained the victory, 4-1.

Rick Ramey turned in an outstanding game on the mound against the Tigers, and although he had to give way to Bobby Patterson in the eighth, he still recorded his third win of the year. Patterson, who has struggled in earlier games, was on top of things Thursday, earning a save and striking out the side in the final inning.

"We just got a tremendous game pitched by Rick today," Coach Hal Baird said. "Rick pitched well, and Bobby did a great job in relief."

The coach was also happy with the play behind his pitchers, although an error did contribute to the only run the Tigers scored — an unearned one. "We played fairly solid on defense, and the pitching was just super," he said.

Baird said that things are going about as he expected. "Earlier, I said that we'd be inconsistant early in the season. You can tell that by the way we played Wednesday and Thursday. I just hope we can use this as a springboard to get some consistancy."

Ramey effectively handcuffed Clemson until late in the game. The initial batter reached on an error, but Ramey kept himself out of trouble until the sixth. Although he was tagged for a walk in the second and a hit in the fourth, double plays erased those runners.

In the sixth, Joe Jasensky singled with one out, then died on third after a two-out single by Mike Mahoney. In the seventh, a walk and a single put two men on before Ramey got the Tigers out.

Finally, Clemson managed to chase him in the eighth. Mitch Wilson led off, reaching on an error. Jimmy Kee followed with a single and Patterson came on at that point.

Although Patterson walked the first man, he got the next on a ground out, which allowed Wilson to score. Then, after another walk, two pop-ups in foul territory got the side out. Patterson then fanned each of the batters in the ninth.

East Carolina jumped ahead with two runs in the bottom of the first. Kelly Robinette led off with a double up the alley in left center, and scored then Todd Evans doubled to right. Mike Sage singled to right, and when the ball was overthrown at home, Evans scampered home.

After a Charlie Smith double in the second got nothing for the Pirates, ECU picked up one more in the third. Evans reached on a fielder's choice and moved up on an out. Todd Hendley singled to center, scoring Evans.

The final run came in the sixth, as John Hallow hit a solo homer to open that frame, cracking the ball out in right field.

Robinette and Smith led the Pirate hitting with two each, while Mahoney had a pair for Clemson.

The loss dropped the Tigers to 15-8, while East Carolina climbed to 6-3.

East Carolina will entertain Yale University on Saturday at 1 p.m. in a doubleheader.

Tar Heels Gain West Finals, 61-56

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Illinois Coach Lou Henson said he'd have to see the game film before deciding why his team didn't get a single break in its NCAA West semifinal loss to Kansas State.

But for his part, Utah Coach Jerry Pimm won't need a film to tell him why his Utes, ranked No.10 and playing at home, fell 61-56 Thursday night to sixth-ranked North Carolina in the other West semifinal.

Pimm's autopsy? If you can't shoot, you can't win.

The 19th-ranked Illini fell afoul of a patient, careful and unranked Kansas State in a 57-52 loss that Henson was hard-pressed to explain.

"It seemed like to me that not a single break went our way all night," Henson said. "And we could take it a lot better if we thought we'd played better."

Henson said he knew beforehand what to expect from Kansas State's 3-2 zone defense, but prior knowledge didn't help. "They did a good job with the zone and we did a poor job of attacking it," he said.

Kansas State of the Big Eight, now 24-8, had the advantage throughout the contest. As Coach Jack Hartman explained, "We had the lead and the ball. That's a good combination." Crucial free throws by Ed Nealy, Rolando Blackman and Tim Jankovich in the closing minutes made it unbeatable.

"I felt we were in control the whole time," said Blackman, who along with Nealy finished with a K-State-high 12 points. "We controlled the tempo and set the pace all night."

"We had opportunities to win," Henson said, "but we never got any breaks." He also bemoaned Illinois' foul troubles — Mark Smith and James Griffin fouled out — and added, "We didn't shoot well in the first half and we didn't shoot that well in the second half."

But if Illinois, which finished at 21-8, didn't shoot that well under ferocious Kansas State pressure, what's to be said of Utah, which made its share of contested baskets but couldn't connect on open jump shots?

"We're a 53 percent shooting team on the same kind of shots we took tonight," said a bewildered Pimm. "To hit 39 percent of 58 shots is just not us. It was our worst (shooting) of the season, and it just came at a real bad time."

Even North Carolina Coach Dean Smith, whose 27-7 Atlantic Coast Conference champions meet Kansas State Saturday in the regional final, saw Utah's poor shooting as just that.

"We did some good things defensively, but they just missed a lot of open shots," said Smith. North Carolina hit 71 percent from the field in the second half to break a 27-27 tie and steadily builf to the victory.

Smith said his chief concern going into the game was to "play with poise in front of this crowd," a noisy throng which had watched Utah win 14 straight in the Special Events Center.

Smith said that at halftime, the Tar Heels decided to take the ball inside. North Carolina's front line of Al Wood, Sam Perkins and James Worthy hit a flurry of close-in baskets and finished with 15 points each.

In contrast, Utah forward Karl Bankowski, normally the Ute's most proficient outside shooter, sank just one of nine attempts.

Lamp Lights Cav's Fire

ATLANTA (AP) — Jeff Lamp wasn't about to panic when 15th-ranked Tennessee built a five-point lead over No. 5 Virginia 6½ minutes into the second half Thursday night.

"This team has worked too hard this year," said Lamp, who scored six quick points shortly thereafter to trigger a 13-0 run that put the Cavaliers in control in a 62-48 victory in the NCAA East Regional semifinals.

Seventh-ranked Notre Dame met No. 16 Brigham Young in the nightcap, with the winner facing Virginia Saturday afternoon for a berth in the final four at Philadelphia next week.

"We didn't want to go out tonight," said Lamp. "We have a lot of confidence and there was a lot of time left so there wasn't any real panic."

Tennessee used a straight man-to-man defense throughout the game, something the Cavaliers seldom see.

"Tennessee is a fine man-to-man team, but we have a good man offense," said Virginia Coach Terry Holland.

Holland also said the key to the victory was when his team left the zone and employed a man defense.

"We were able to get ahead and play it tough down the stretch," he said.

Coach Don DeVoe of Tennessee said his team usually did well against man defenses but, "tonight we didn't score."

"We made a game of it, but the ball stopped going in for us," he said. "We were just within a whisker of making things happen."

Virginia destroyed the Volunteers immediately after Tennessee had taken a 36-31 lead with 13:20 remaining on a steal and layup by Michael Brooks.

Tennessee went scoreless for the next 8:08 as Lamp, a third-team All American, who had a game high 18 points, hit an eight-foot shot, a jumper from the free throw line and a five-footer as the Cavs took the lead 39-36.

Gary Carter ended Tennessee's drought with 5:12 remaining, but the Cavs came right back with six more unanswered points and finished the rout at the free throw line in the final three minutes.

Lee Raker, playing with an injured thigh, and Jeff Jones each added 10 points for the Cavs, 27-3. Ralph Sampson was held to only nine points, but he did have four blocked shots.

Dale Ellis led Tennessee, 21-8, with 13 points.

Tennessee overcame an eight-point deficit late in the first half when it got two key

Big Ten Sees Two Dumped

By The Associated Press

Suddenly the Big Ten is no longer the big force in the National Invitation Tournament.

Three teams from the Big Ten Conference got as far as the round of eight, but two were knocked off Thursday night as Syracuse defeated Michigan 91-76 and West Virginia upended Minnesota 80-69.

The quarterfinals continue tonight when Purdue, now the only surviving Big Ten team, plays host to Duke and South Alabama visits Tulsa. The semifinals and finals will be played at New York's Madison Square Garden March 23 and 25.

Syracuse, leading 46-42 at halftime, hit its first 16 shots of the second half to pull away from Michigan. The Orangemen did not miss a shot until Leo Rautins' layup attempt rolled off the rim with 6:05 to play. By that time, Syracuse had built a 79-64 advantage.

"They were just hot. There's not much you can do against a team like that," said Michigan's Mike McGee, the Big Ten's all-time leading scorer who had 20 points for the Wolverines, 19-11. "That Schayes, I don't think he missed at all."

Senior center Dan Schayes had 22 points on 10-for-14 shooting for Syracuse, 21-11, which will face West Virginia in the semifinals. Erich Santifer had 21, Tony Bruin 18 and Rautins 16.

It was Syracuse's sixth postseason victory on its home floor and came before a crowd of 20,695 at the Carrier Dome.

The home-court advantage was not enough to save Minnesota, which led 11-2 after 2½ minutes but was outplayed the remainder of the game.

West Virginia, 23-8, recovered from its slow start and went ahead for the first time at 23-22 after 12 minutes. Minnesota trailed by just one at 61-60 with 4:40 remaining before the Mountaineers pulled away with an 8-2 burst.

"Getting back and getting the lead was very important to us," said West Virginia Coach Gale Catlett. "It made the second half go very nicely."

Greg Jones scored 21 points for West Virginia, Diego McCoy had 17, Greg Nance 16 and Russell Todd 13. Center Randy Breuer led Minnesota, 19-11, with 17 points.

"We have no excuses," said Minnesota Coach Jim Dutcher. "If there was a difference, it was in team speed. They were a lot quicker than us. They beat us soundly in our own gym."

Purdue's 6-10 freshman center, Russell Cross, who sprained a foot in practice Monday, is expected to be ready to play against Duke, 17-12. Cross, the top rebounder for the 19-10 Boilermakers, missed one practice and has gone through light workouts the rest of the week.

Duke has a major injury of its own. Forward Gene Banks, the No. 2 scorer and No. 5 rebounder in school history, broke his left wrist in the first round of the NIT.

Tulsa, 23-7, is a team used to tournament pressure. Four of its players won the junior college title a year ago and followed Coach Nolan Richardson when he moved from Western Texas J.C. to Tulsa this year.

South Alabama, 25-5, is led by two 6-7 players, Ed Rains and Rory White.

Peterson, Trollinger Top Prepsters

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

The top basketball coaches in the country aren't the only ones impressed by Robert "Buzz" Peterson — even though he has already opted for North Carolina.

A panel of sportwriters thinks the 6-foot-four Asheville High School star's 24.6 average per game this season is good enough to name him the Associated Press North Carolina High School Male Player of the Year.

Peterson also grabbed 102 rebounds, handed out 139 assists and chalked up 33 steals during the season.

Donna Trollinger, a 5-foot-7 senior center for the Graham High School girls basketball team, was named The Associated Press Female Player of the Year.

Trollinger averaged 24 points and 10 rebounds a game to lead her team to a 26-1 record. Coach Don Amos calls her "the best athlete, male or female, I've been associated with in my 17 years of coaching."

Many of those college coaches were hoping Peterson would choose to showcase his talents in college for them. What they didn't know was that Peterson's mind had been made up since he was old enough to turn a television dial to watch the University of North Carolina Tar Heels.

"I was always a Carolina fan," Peterson said in a telephone interview this week. "I used to watch them on TV every time. They've always been my favorite team."

Peterson then listed some of his favorite players, most of whom were from the early 1970s. One of them, Eddie Fogler, will be one of Peterson's coaches when he arrives in Chapel Hill next fall.

There's only one regret that Peterson expresses in his decision — that he didn't announce the decision sooner.

"It was very frustrating before I committed. Everything was getting hectic with recruiting," Peterson said. "Just getting recruiting over helped me more than anything."

Once the pace slowed, Peterson could concentrate on his game. He led the Asheville parade to a 19-6 season. Ironically, it was in Chapel Hill that his high school career ended as the Chapel Hill High Tigers defeated Asheville in the state playoffs.

With a few nationally renowned prep all-star games remaining, Peterson has a chance to increase his stock. But then comes the spotlight of Atlantic Coast Conference basketball.

"I just want to give it my best, try hard. I want to get the most out of what I can do," Peterson said.

"As far as his effort, it's tremendous," Johnson said. "His intensity probably affects his shooting when he's not quite intense and concentrating on his shooting."

Johnson has followed Peterson since the sixth grade and said he knew then that the youngster was destined for a great career, especially when the upperclassmen began picking Peterson in street games.

"Older kids don't do that unless they see an ability and talent there in a younger person," Johnson said.

As for Peterson's future, Johnson said choosing to play in Chapel Hill can only help him.

"A kid like Buzz is gonna be even more effective when he's playing with the type of ballplayers he'll be playing with on Carolina's level," the coach said.

Just a few years ago, Peterson was on the outside looking in. Now, he gets to be part of the experience.

Trollinger alsos may be heading to Chapel Hill. She said she is deciding whether to go to North Carolina or to Elon.

She is faced with the choice because of her abilities on the basketball court, and her coach said she honed those abilities through dedication.

"She comes to practice first and stays late," Amos said. "She comes happy and leaves happy. The only thing she can't do is dunk the basketball."

Her dedication helped her score in double figures in 85 of 100 games in her four-year high school career, which ended this week with a 56-53 loss to East Bladen in the Eastern 4-A Regionals. It was the team's only loss in 27 games this season.

As a senior she hit 62 percent of her shots from the field and 70 percent from the free throw line.

Asked what is the best part of her game, Trollinger said, "My attitude, I guess. I try not to get mad and to stay in control."

She grew up playing ball with her brother and imitating the men on TV. She attributes her success to two factors: "I'm not as timid as most girls, and I practiced a lot on my own."

Eichelberger Ties Morley

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Given his choice, Dave Eichelberger said, he'll take the calm weather every time.

"Everybody thinks I play better in the wind," Eichelberger said. "But if I've got a choice, I'll take calm conditions every chance I get. Maybe, against the whole field, if I was compared against the whole field, I might play a little better than the average in the wind, but I'd rather play when it's calm."

But the winds blew at Sawgrass, the cold, blustery, whipping winds that have become traditional at the rich Tournament Players Championship, and Eichelberger was in his element. He birdied the last three holes for a 68 and tied Mike Morley for the first round lead in the $440,000 event that offers $72,000 to the winner.

While most of the gaudy field of 144 of the world's finest players — almost certainly the top field that will be assembled in any tournament this year — were complaining bitterly of the severe playing conditions, Eichelberger merely shrugged.

"I've seen it blow harder," he said. And it blew harder when he scored his last victory, in the 1980 Bay Hill Classic. Those were the worst conditions of the entire season, with a wind-chill factor near zero.

"There's no secret to playing in the wind. It's fairly simple," said Eichelberger, who learned the game on the windy plains of central Texas. "You play good in the wind the same way you play good any other time, by putting.

"Most people underplay the wind. You just have to figure what the wind is going to do to your ball, how much it is going to move it left or right, how much it's going to knock it down."

Enquirer Suit To Jury Monday

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After a five-year legal battle, Carol Burnett's libel suit against the National Enquirer will go to the jury Monday.

The defense rested Thursday without calling any witnesses.

"All the witnesses I was going to call were called by the plaintiff during their case," defense attorney William Masterson said in Superior Court immediately after the prosecution said it was resting.

Later, outside the courtroom, Masterson said he was upset to learn that Ms. Burnett said she received a phone call from Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. offering her good wishes.

"I wish the chief executive of the state of California would keep his opinions to himself and not exercise his First Amendment rights in a matter when the case is still on trial," the attorney said.

"He is a very influential person," Masterson said of Brown. "I just don't know that he ought to be speaking out now."

There was no indication that any jurors heard of Brown's comments.

Ms. Burnett contends the Enquirer libeled her in a 1976 article which said she got into an argument with then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger at a Washington restaurant. She said the article incorrectly implied she was drunk.

The Enquirer later printed a correction.

Attorneys for the publication contended the article did not imply Ms. Burnett was drunk and that the Enquirer printed a timely correction. The defense also contended the activity described in the article was not counter to Ms. Burnett's frequent stage depictions of drunk women.

On Thursday, a transcript was released of Judge Peter Smith's private questioning of jurors after Johnny Carson criticized the Enquirer on the "Tonight Show." Carson denounced the Enquirer for reporting that his marriage was breaking up. He said that report was false.

The transcript showed that at least six of the panelists heard about Carson's outburst. Although Smith denied a defense motion for a mwstrial after the Carson remarks, he ordered two jurors dismissed — one man who watched Carson's TV attack and one who heard of it on the radio.

With one alternate stepping in, the jury shrank to 11 members. Under state law, juries need not have 12 members, and nine votes will be needed for a decision.

Attorneys were scheduled to argue a few remaining motions today, and the judge said he would meet with them to discuss jury instructions.

Smith set final arguments for Monday, when the case is expected to go to the jury.

Meanwhile, at Enquirer headquarters in Lantana, Fla., executives of the popular weekly tabloid said they don't expect the attacks by Carson and Ms. Burnett to do much harm to their circulation.

One executive said recent press runs have been augmented because of television advertising campaigns in several regions of the country.

"We haven't increased the press run becwuse of the trial," a company executive said Thursday.

He asked that his name not be published because attorneys representing the Enquirer in the libel case told employees not to speak on record to the media during the trial.

During an average week, the tabloid sells 5 million copies at 40 cents per copy, but Enquirer executives estimate 20 million people see the paper each week.

"We are an escapists' newspaper," Haydon Cameron, the Enquirer's senior staff editor, said in an interview before the trial began. "We look for inspirational stories because one of our beliefs is that people are blitzed out by daily newspapers."

Cameron said the tabloid has taken pains to be accurate.

"When we make a mistake, we make it before our 20 million readers. We have to try very hard not to make a mistake because we're totally naked in the public eye," Cameron said.

Before articles are published in the Enquirer, a team of legal researchers review the copy to check for accuracy and libelous statements, Cameron said.

Would Close Butner Center

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The alcoholic rehabilitation center at Butner, one of three remaining regional alcoholism centers operated by the state, would be closed under the budget cuts proposed by a legislative committee.

The House and Senate Base Budget Committee on Education has recommended elimination of the Butner facility as one of its list of budget-trimming proposals to the full House and Senate Base Budget Committee.

The proposal would phase out the facility by the end of 1981 and provide money for area mental health departments in a 16-county region served by the Butner institution to open local treatment programs in halfway houses or other facilities.

"This is part of a trend toward dealing with people in their communities rather than shutting them up in institutions," said Charlotte Ashcraft, fiscal analyst for the committee. "It's a move toward deinstitutionalization."

The Butner center serves the North Central mental health region, which covers an area from Warren County westward to the foothills, including Guilford and Forsyth counties.

Treatment is already provided locally in the South Central region. The alcoholism centers for the eastern and western regions, in Greenville and Black Mountain, would remain in operation.

The committee proposal would provide $375,000 to pay for local treatment programs in the North Central area next year and $500,000 in the following year.

The move, say staff analysts, would result in a savings to the state of $490,000 the first year and $1.3 million the second.

The Butner facility handles an average of 55 patients per day and admits them for 28-day treatments, Ms. Ashcraft said.

There are 93 employees who would lose their jobs, but most would be able to find work at other state medical facilities at Butner, she said.

MacDonald Says Appeal Big Waste

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A former Green Beret doctor, whose conviction in the murder of his pregnant wife and two daughters was overturned, claims the government's attempt to reinstate his conviction is "a waste of taxpayers' money."

"It's outrageous," 37-year-old Jeffrey MacDonald said by telephone only hours after Justice Department prosecutors asked the U.S. Supreme Court to review an appellate court ruling that set MacDonald free on grounds he had been denied a speey trial.

The right to a speedy trial is guaranteed under the due-process clause of the federal Constitution.

An angry MacDonald claimed the latest action "shows the government is continuing a 10-year smokescreen to cover up the inadequacy of its initial investigation. It's simply a matter of (Justice Department lawyer) Brian Murtagh out of control."

"I think they are totally ignoring the evidence," the former Army captain said, adding that he was "leaving town for a few days to get away from it all."

MacDonald has claimed throughout the ordeal that his family was slain by four drug-crazed "hippies" who broke into his home at Fort Bragg in the early morning of Feb. 17, 1970.

Attorney Is Pleased By Palimony Whammy

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — You don't have to be married. You don't even have to live together. The "palimony" whammy can strike at any time.

Some people blame Marvin Mitchelson for this. He's the guy who started it.

Mitchelson says men at social gatherings sometimes sidle up to him and hiss comments like, "You traitor!" He doesn't really mind. In fact, he's pleased with what he's done.

The tanned, white-haired Los Angeles attorney commented in an interview: "I had to create the law to get a remedy for these people. There was an inequity, a hole in the law, and all these people were left with no legal recourse."

"These people" are unmarried people who are burned in break-ups with live-in lovers. Mitchelson found them a remedy after he agreed to represent Michelle Triola Marvin.

Ms. Marvin legally changed her name and dropped her show business career during the six years she lived with actor Lee Marvin. After their break-up, she sued.

Lee Marvin had not married her, but in 1979 a California judge awarded her $104,000. The award is still under appeal.

"Up to that time people who live together had no place to go," he said. "Marriage was the only game in town."

During the Marvin case, the California Supreme Court agreed with Mitchelson that unmarried couples can have contracts — written, oral, even implied — and can sue each other claiming breach of contract.

Since then, Mitchelson says, things have snowballed.

In California, a married man is being sued by his former mistress. She says he promised her the world — including marriage — and then left her. He unsuccessfully asked a judge to dismiss the suit, noting that he never moved in with her. Mitchelson quotes the judge's comment:

"He who enjoys the benefits of a polygamous lifestyle must be prepared to meet the financial burdens."

A California man won $500,000 in palimony after his live-in jilted him. An elderly California woman whose married lover died after a 49-year affair and left her nothing in his will is suing his estate.

And it's not just in California.

"Courts in nearly 30 states have evolved with the Marvin decision," Mitchelson said. "I believe that in five years all states will have either a law or a high court ruling about live-togethers."

As palimony spread, Mitchelson started writing. He visited here recently to promote his new book: "Living Together: A Practical Guide to Help You Understand."

The book covers the legalities of every kind of situation — from the average young couple that decides to live together to the average young homosexual couple that decides to live together.

But the bottom line, said Mitchelson, is this:

"This field of law is in such an unsettled state that every couple that decides to live together ought to have a written agreement."

Exchange Spy For Prisoners

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Christel Guillaume, convicted of treason in the 1974 spy scandal that led to the resignation of Chancellor Willy Brandt, has been exchanged for West Germans imprisoned in East Germany, a government spokesman said today.

The spokesman, Kurt Becker, said the prisoner exchange was carried out for humanitarian reasons. He said several people were involved, but only Mrs. Guillaume was identified.

Mrs. Guillaume is the wife of Guenter Guillaume, a former top aide to Brandt who was sentenced to 13 years imprisonment for treason after he was unmasked as an East German spy.

Mrs. Guillaume was sentenced to eight years in prison for carrying secret documents from her husband to the East Germans.

Opening lead: Ten of ♡.

Half a loaf might be better than none at all, but being half right at the bridge table is usually no better than being completely off the track.

South considered his hand too strong for a simple overcall of one spade, so he started with a takeout double. He intended bidding his spades over any minor suit response from his partner. When North jumped in clubs, South followed through by bidding three spades, and a sound game was reached.

West led the ten of hearts and, since it might have been a singleton, declarer won the ace. The opening bid marked East with virtually every high card, so declarer entered dummy with a club to the ten and led a low trump. East played low and declarer's queen won. Declarer continued with a spade to the jack and ace. East cashed the king of hearts and led a third round of the suit, and declarer was a goner.

If he ruffed low, West would overruff; if he ruffed high, West's ten would be promoted to a trick. Since declarer still had to lose a diamond, he ended up down one.

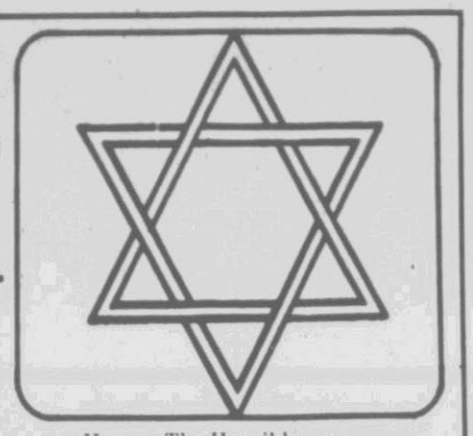

Declarer was on the right track when he crossed to dummy to lead the first trump toward his hand. Unfortunately, he didn't follow his plan through to the end. When the queen of spades wins, declarer should reenter dummy with the ace of diamonds and lead another low spade toward his hand!

Note the difference that makes. East wins the ace of trumps and again continues with two rounds of hearts. But now declarer can ruff high—the jack of spades is still in dummy to draw West's ten. Declarer will lose a trick in each suit except clubs, and the contract sails home.

FOCUS

Haman The Horrible

The joyous Jewish festival of Purim is celebrated today. It honors the safe delivery of the Jews of Persia from an evil plot to destroy them. The Old Testament Book of Esther tells the story. Esther was the beautiful Jewish queen of King Ahasuerus. Haman, the king's wicked minister, persuaded Ahasuerus to destroy all the Jews in his kingdom. Urged by her cousin Mordecai, Esther pleaded with the king, and saved her people. Haman was later hanged for his plot. Jews traditionally celebrate Purim by acting out this story, giving to the poor, and eating three-cornered cakes filled with popppy seeds or prunes, called hamantashen, or Haman cakes.

Oscar Bashes Top The Ratings

By VERNON SCOTT
UPI Hollywood Reporter

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The annual Academy Awards Oscar presentations, along with the Super Bowl, is the most consistently popular television show every year — it's always No. 1.

The producers of the 53rd Oscar bash March 30 confidently expect it to top the ratings again as it has since the first televised show back in 1953.

This year Johnny Carson will be master of ceremonies and last year's best actors winners, Dustin Hoffman and Sally Field, will be on hand to present the best performing awards to the 1980 winners.

Howard W. Koch, a member of the motion picture academy board for 11 years, produced the Oscar show for six years and says it is more difficult than producing movies, which is what he does for a living.

"It's a hard show to cast," he said. "You have to come up with something new every year in the way of a theme and pace all within the fixed framework of an awards show, and still try to entertain.

"The casting is rough because some of the stars are reluctant to appear on the show. You don't even think about asking people like Marlon Brando and George C. Scott. They turned down their Oscars in the first place.

"Clint Eastwood won't even attend the awards — and I have to take the blame for that."

Eastwood was victimized in 1973 when he sat in the audience preparing to enjoy the show which was scheduled to be opened by Charlton Heston reading a Biblical-like history of the academy.

Heston's car broke down on the Hollywood freeway minutes before the show went on the air. With time running out, Koch grabbed the unsuspecting Eastwood, thrust the text of Heston's speech in his hands and propelled him on stage.

If stout-hearted but shy Eastwood ever came close to cardiac arrest, this was the moment. He stumbled apologetically through the speech to the puzzlement of viewers and the astonishment of the star-studded audience.

"Clint told me it was the most terrifying moment of his life," Koch said.

"But I discovered a lot of very big movie stars choke up when they have to appear before an audience of their peers. They are embarrassed in that situation although they can play any other role that's given them.

"I can sympathize with the actors. I've had to appear on the show a couple of times and it ain't easy. This year Norman Jewison is producing the show.

"One trouble with casting the Oscars is dealing with the stars' agents. I call and ask if a star is able and willing to appear as a presenter. The agent wants to know what award his client will be presenting.

"They all want the five big awards that come at the end of the show — best picture, best actress, best actor, best director and best writer. Some stars will only appear if they get to give one of the major Oscars.

"We try to get a sprinkling of old-time stars, former winners and popular new stars on the show. And we try to stick with movie people rather than TV stars. Thank God Johnny Carson made at least one movie, 'Looking For Love.'

"While some stars are uncooperative, others such as Heston, Greg Peck, Jimmy Stewart, Jack Lemmon, Walter Matthau and Jack Nicholson are happy to pitch in."

In addition to Hoffman and Field, this year's ceremony will include such presenters as Peter Ustinov, Richard Chamberlain, Billy Dee Williams, Brooke Shields, Richard Pryor and Angie Dickinson.

Participating for the first time in an Oscar show will be Sissy Spacek, Natassia Kinski and Mary Tyler Moore (all best actress nominees this year), Alan Arkin, Lesley-Anne Down, Mikhail Baryshnikov and Lily Tomlin.

This year's presentations will be held at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of the Los Angeles Music Center. Oscar's ninth home. The first awards were held during a dinner party at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel.

Over the years 1,108 presenters have participated in the show, including such giants as Will Rogers, Clark Gable, Bette Davis, Ingrid Bergman, Marilyn Monroe, John Wayne, Cary Grant, Tyrone Power, Gary Cooper and W.C. Fields.

In the 52-year history of the Oscars there have been 77 hosts, including years when there were as many as four co-hosts. Most durable of all the emcees was Bob Hope who appeared many times.

Other hosts of the past were Jack Benny, Frank Sinatra, Danny Kaye, Shirley MacLaine, Sammy Davis and Jane Fonda.

The ceremonies often include special honorary awards to giants of the industry who have never won an Oscar. One of the most memorable was the special award given Charlie Chaplin a few years before his death.

An emotional moment will be provided this year by the presentation of a special Oscar to Henry Fonda, one of America's most distinguished actors. Incredibly, the award has eluded him for half a century.

"The most important thing about the Oscars is their integrity," Koch concluded. "They are a respected symbol for excellence in the arts around the world today. We are very proud of Oscar."

The Mandrell Show Is Best Of Variety Series

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marty Krofft, producer of NBC's "Barbara Mandrell Show," was considering the subject of variety shows, how they were the foundation of television and such. Still, a visitor wondered how Krofft and his brother Sid managed to sell the Mandrell show to NBC, considering the unhappy fate that has met so many variety shows lately.

"Variety is the thing we know best," says Krofft, adding with pride, "in 1975, we created and produced the last successful variety show — 'Donny and Marie.'"

Yeah, that's a point...

"And don't forget," he adds, still beaming, "you're talking to the guy who produced 'Pink Lady.'"

It is observed that "Pink Lady," perhaps the goofiest television attempt in history, wasn't something you'd want to put on a resume.

"No," Krofft allows, "but give me credit. I'm the guy who sold two Japanese who didn't speak English to American television."

Point taken.

Krofft, of the puppet family Krofft, had almost as difficult a time selling Barbara Mandrell as he had with "Pink Lady." And Barbara Mandrell speaks good English. Better than good English, actually, it's good Southern.

"I'd been trying to get a country music variety show off the ground for years," Krofft says. "The networks wouldn't listen. So when a fellow came to me and asked about putting together a show with Barbara Mandrell, I told him I couldn't sell her. Not by herself, anyway.

"I asked if she had any relatives that played or sang. He showed me this picture."

At which point, Krofft whips out a worn snapshot, featuring the lovely sisters Mandrell in a sort of "Charlie's Angels" pose. The photograph used to be stationed in Mama Mandrell's wallet. Krofft refuses to part with it. He sold a series on that photograph.

"I took the idea to ABC and CBS," says Krofft, "and they turned it down. Then I went to Saul Ilson (NBC's vice president in charge of variety and comedy) and said, 'Saul, this is what I have.' I gave him the picture.

"I know that Fred Silverman didn't know the Mandrells, but he can see. Saul too. He looked at the photograph and said, 'If you can get them, you've got a pilot.'"

Luckily for NBC, Barbara Mandrell is more than eyeball medicine (although her sisters, Louise and Irlene, haven't yet proven to be). Miss Mandrell brought with her to television a sizable following, earned by such recording hits as "If Loving You is Wrong" and "Married But Not to Each Other."

She insists on giving the show a strong country flavor, but easily slides into other musical modes, and has demonstrated a nice, light touch in her hostessing duties. "I told her I couldn't guarantee her success with this show," says Krofft, "and she said, 'You don't have to ... I never fail.'"

So far, she hasn't. The "Mandrell Show" has occasionally won its Saturday night time slot and earns ratings that rank it in about the middle of NBC's lineup. But that's not quite a success, either. On another network, Mandrell's show might have been canceled by now.

Still, the show is, all in all, the best regular variety series on television. And it's almost enough to forgive Marty Krofft for "Pink Lady."

Actress Leaving 'World Turns'

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Helen Wagner, who has been on the CBS soap opera "As the World Turns" since it began in 1956, will leave the show when her contract expires at the end of this month, according to her husband-manager.

"She was offered a renewal, but they cut her part down to less than nothing and just wanted her to wait around in the wings," Robert Willey was quoted as saying in Thursday's Daily News.

Responding To Treatment

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — British rock star Eric Clapton, undergoing treatment at United Hospitals in St. Paul for an ulcer, is responding but is still in serious condition, a Clapton spokeswoman said.

Clapton was admitted to the hospital early Saturday after performing in Madison, Wis., Friday night as part of a scheduled four-month U.S. concert tour.

The remaining 47 dates of the concert tour have been canceled, said Ronnie Lippin, director of national publicity for RSO Records of Los Angeles.

Ms. Lippin said Clapton is responding to treatment but will remain hospitalized for two to three weeks.

He was listed in serious condition on Thursday, she said.

Banks' Interest-Rate Bill Again To Senate Floor

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The banking industry's latest attempt at raising legal limits on interest rates for most types of loans is headed to the Senate floor for the second time.

The banking lobby, after retreating in the face of major Senate amendments earlier this month, won complete overhauls in the Senate Banking Committee Thursday on a pair of bills raising usury limits.

The committee action came as budget committees neared an end in their drives to identify places to cut 6 percent from the state's operating budget, and House and Senate redistricting panels scheduled public hearings on how new congressional district lines should be drawn.

The two banking-industry bills would set new floating ceilings on interest rates that can be charged on installment loans, such as for new cars, on second mortgages and on contract loans such as 90-day notes. All would apply only on amounts under $25,000.

The ceilings would be pegged to a level of at least 6 percentage points above the prevailing rate on six-month Treasury bills, a formula that would set the limits at 18½ percent if in effect this week.

Senate Banking Committee Chairman Sen. Billy Mills, D-Mayesville, ruled that the committee had approved both bills after a confusing, hour-long meeting that left opponents grumbling about the complexity of the proposals and the unusual committee procedures.

"This ain't no Einstein's theory," said Senate Majority Leader Kenneth Royall, D-Durham. "Why the hell don't you put it in simple language?"

The leading opponent of the measures, Sen. Charles Vickery, D-Chapel Hill, succeeded in gaining one amendment that reduced the legal limit by a quarter of a percentage point. But he failed in other amendments aimed at restricting the rates even further, and he vowed to resume his fight on the Senate floor next week.

The measures originally would have tied the new interest rate ceilings to the Federal Reserve Bank's discount rate. But after major Senate amendments, banking lobbyists supported a new proposal put forward by Sen. Joe Johnson, D-Raleigh.

The bills also include a provision setting a minimum ceiling of 16 percent, so that the legal limit will never fall below that point even if the formula would indicate it should go lower.

The bills were approved by a one-vote margin, cast by the chairman, Sen. Billy Mills, D-Mayesville.

James Currie, state banking commissioner, said the Treasury bill rate this week is 12.096, meaning an 18½ percent usury limit. At present, the rates are between 12 and 15 percent.

Districts

Public hearings for congressional redistricting were set as follows:

— 1:30 p.m. April 6 in Williamston for the First, Second and Third Districts.

— 7:30 p.m. April 9 in Pinehurst for the Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Districts.

— 10:30 a.m. on April 13 in Statesville for the Fifth, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth Districts.

— 3 p.m. on April 16 in Raleigh for the Second, Third, Fourth and Sixth Districts.

— 9 p.m. on April 20 in Asheville for the Tenth and Eleventh Districts.

Several redistricting plans have been proposed to the panel, but the committee has agreed not to meet again until final census figures arrive from the U.S. Census Bureau sometime in April.

Records

The Senate Judiciary II Committee approved a bill that would establish a uniform $1 fee for each copy of a driver's license record obtained from the Department of Motor Vehicles.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, said the bill clarifies current laws and is aimed at making businesses, such as bulk mailing firms, pay the same price for the records as individual citizens.

Hugh Stevens Jr., lobbyist for the N.C. Press Association, said his organization opposes the proposal. He said the charge could be used to discourage reporters' access to public records.

Forgery

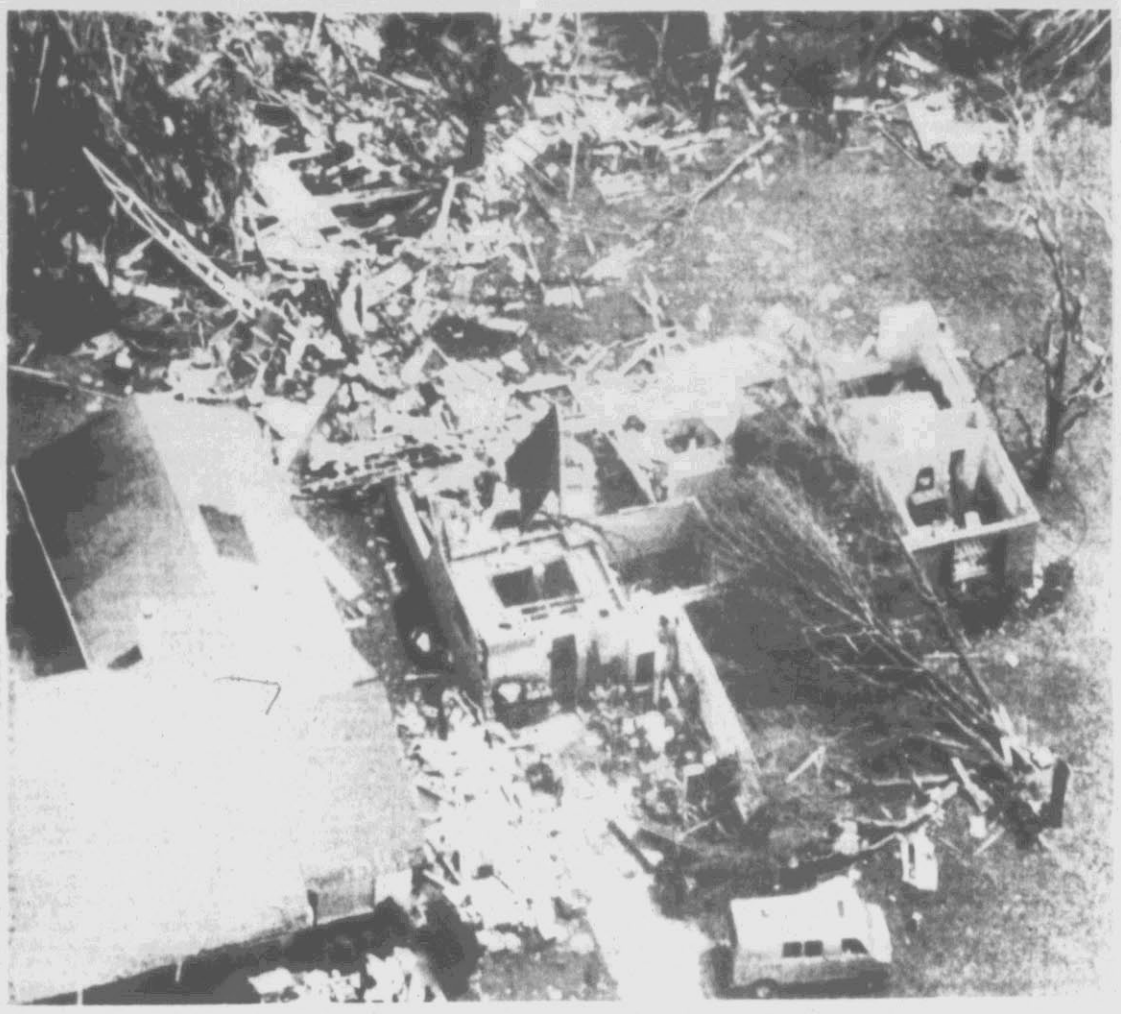

The judiciary committee also recommended approval of a bill that would make it a misdemeanor to forge school transcripts or diplomas.

Sentencing

Sen. Cecil Jenkins, D-Concord, introduced a bill that would reduce penalties set out in the uniform sentencing act approved by the Legislature in 1979 and scheduled to take effect April 15.

The act sets specific penalties for certain crimes and requires judges, if they deviate from the sentences, to provide an explanation.

Jenkins' bill would reduce the maximum penalties and fines for most felony categories and keep the current sentencing method in which a judge is allowed broader discretion to set penalties.

Officials, Parents Say Cuts Certain To Hurt The Needy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several North Carolinians told congressional committees Thursday that President Reagan's proposed budget cuts would hurt the needy.

Officials, mothers and legislators said the cuts would close 45 percent of the state's school lunch programs, would deny food stamps to the needy and would end programs that help troubled children.

Anne G. Smith, state director of the school lunch program, testified that the administration's plan to restrict federal subsidies for lunch programs would make cafeteria operations in many schools unprofitable.

"We feel that the severe cuts now proposed will result in the elimination of the programs in 45 percent of the schools in North Carolina next year," Mrs. Smith told the House Budget Committee.

Mrs. Smith said the Reagan proposal would close lunch rooms in 900 North Carolina schools serving 426,128 pupils.

The end of federally subsidized lunches for middle-class students would force many children to bring their lunches to school, making cafeteria operations unprofitable, she said.

In other testimony Thursday, Esther Terry, a working mother of six from Oxford, said the cuts would force her to lose $52 per month in food stamps, which she said she could not afford.

Testifying before a House Agriculture subcommittee, Mrs. Terry said she was seasonally unemployed at a tobacco processing plant from August until February at $3.35 per hour.

When she is not working, she receives $189 per month to feed her six children. She said she would lose $53 per month under the Reagan cuts because her children receive free school lunches and because she would not be immediately available for food stamps the month after she was laid off.

"If we don't receive food stamps, or if these cuts go through, I don't know how we'll be able to eat," she said.

Rep. Ike Andrews, D-N.C., said several "excellent" programs were doomed under the proposals, including programs that counsel teenage runaways, keep youthful offenders out of jail and require teenagers to make restitution for minor crimes.

Testifying before the House Budget Committee, Andrews said he opposes elimination of several programs under his subcommittee's jurisdiction.

Forrest Campbell, a Guilford County commissioner, said he welcomes some new restrictions on food stamps but opposes deducting free school lunches from the food stamp program.

Campbell told an agriculture subcommittee that the National Association of County Commissioners supports restrictions on the food stamp program.

But the group opposes budget reductions that would "unduly burden the poor and elderly".

FIRE DESTROYS MILL — Adams-Millis Corporation plant in Kernersville, (N.C.) belches smoke as firemen pour water into the blaze that started early thursday afternoon. The plant was used to dye and package socks for other companies. (AP Laserphoto)

Area Evacuated In Big Kernersville Plant Fire

KERNERSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Fire destroyed the sock finishing operation at the Adams Millis textile plant Thursday and foreced nearby residents to evacuate their homes.

Kernersville Fire Chief Brent Bauguess estimated damage "in excess of $5 million."

No injuries were reported, although a fire department spokesman said one firefighter was treated for smoke inhalation at the scene.

Kernersville Mayor Roger P. Swisher termed the fire, which began if a rack of materials and swept throughout the plant, the worst single economic loss that Kernersville has ever had. He said it was unbelievable how quickly the flames raced through the building.

The fire, which burned out of control for almost four hours, has forced about 600 employees out of work — about 10 percent of the town's work force, Swisher said.

Company officials watched as flames leapt through the roof and as walls crumbled. Bauguess said company officials told him the plant would be immediately rebuilt.

Bauguess said about 100 firefighters, using more than 40 pieces of equipment, were at the scene for more than 20 hours. He said initial reports attributed the fire to either careless disposal of smoking material or faulty electrical wiring.

The decision to evacuate the relatively new housing development near the plant came as winds swept plumes of gray and black smoke over the homes. None of the houses burned.

An emergency center was established at the Kernersville Junior High School.

Firemen said the blaze began about noon and quickly spread. Within two hours flames had burst through the ceilings and crumbled some walls.

The fire was brought under of control at about 3:30 p.m., police dispatcher Carol Hauser said.

Many plant employees were out for lunch when the fire erupted; others successfully evacuated as a public address system blared a fire warning.

Investigators said some highly flammable material fed the blaze, although they declined to speculate what the substance might have been.

Firefighters, who chopped holes through ceilings to get at the flames, said thick firewalls and a lack of windows in the plant hampered their efforts.

Several firemen also said they were wary of the flames reaching highly flammable dye stored in fire-proof areas in the plant.

Despite a call for all available firefighters from both Forsyth and Guilford counties, the rising smoke from the fire could be seen in Winston-Salem, 12 miles away, for more than three hours.

Musicians Perform At Clinic

ECU News Bureau

Approximately 170 high school band musicians from 30 North Carolina schools were selected for participation in ECU's recent All-State high School Band Clinic (Eastern Division).

They included instrumentalists from junior and senior high schools in Beaufort, Chowan, Craven, Dare, Edgecombe, Granville, Halifax, Johnston, Lenoir, Nash, New Hanover, Onslow, Pasquotank, Pender, Pitt, Vance, Washington, Wayne and Wilson Counties.

Each student was selected by audition to perform in either of two bands: the Symphonic Band, conducted by Emery Fears of Norfolk State University, and the Concert Band, conducted by Tom Goolsby of the ECU faculty.

The clinic was co-sponsored by the N.C. Music Educators Conference and the ECU School of Music. Directors were Herbert Carter, director of bands at ECU, and Michael Stephens of Willimston, chair of the Eastern Division of the N.C. Bandmasters Association.

After rehersals, each band performed a public concert. All participants heard performances by ECU's Symphonic Wind Ensemble and Jazz Ensemble.

Names of participating area musicians, their instruments and high schools are as follows:

PITT COUNTY — Ayden-Grifton High School: Patricia Black, B flat clarinet; Alex Warren, trumpet; Melvin Lang, trombone; Adrien Williams, baritone horn; Farmville Central High School: Julia Smith, flute; Conley High School: Glenn Buck, trumpet; and Dalls Braxton and Darla Richards, percussion; Rose High School: Beth Congleton, Holly Rodgers, Jayne Conway and Jennifer Mahoney, flute, Jim Bearden, B flat clarinet; Todd Lynch and Bill Saunders, trumpet; Mike Pollard, trombone; and Vince Hankins, baritone horn.

Satellite Killer Part Of 'Game'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The successful Soviet test of a satellite-killing space weapon is the latest move in "a technological chess game of development and counterdevelopment," says the head of a major electroncis firm.

Bernard L. Schwartz, chairman and chief executive officer of the Loral Corp., said at a press conference here Thursday that the United States was aware of the Soviet efforts and already has done a lot of work on it.

"You are going to see in this decade laser-directed missiles," he predicted. Schwartz said the United States is substantially ahead of the Soviets in the strategic area but they have deployed their electronic capability in the tactical area more effectively.

Peanut Producers Say No To '81 Crop Offer

COURTLAND, Va. (AP) — Virginia and North Carolina peanut producers have rejected a $600-per-ton offer for their 1981 crop and have moved to organize for continued negotiations toward a price of $800 per ton.

"I don't think the shellers (buyers) are going to stop at $600 per ton," Richard Turner of Isle of Wight County, a leader of the peanut coalition seeking higher prices for this year's crop before the planting season, said Thursday night.

About 800 growers from Virginia and North Carolina endorsed the coalition's recommendation to reject the offer of $600 per ton by Planters Peanuts.

The coalition's steering committee has called for a 28 percent reduction in the acreage planted in 1981 unless an agreement is reached with shellers on a price between the $600 Planters offer and the $800 the coalition is seeking.

Turner called the $600 proposal "a fish being drug in front of you. It's going to buy a few," an indication the coalition feels some growers may opt for the Planters offer.

Turner said the offer from the major purchaser of peanuts in the two states "is to test your support. They are going to wait and see what you are going to to."

The coalition indicated it will call another meeting in two weeks to bring the membership up to date on its continued efforts to negotiate a higher price.

The consensus of Thursday night's meeting was to form an agriculture association to replace the informal coalition that has been engaging in collective bargaining on behalf of the peanut growers.

The association's purpose, according to G. Elliott Cobb of Franklin, attorney for the coalition, will be to "improve the economic conditions of peanut producers."

Cobb said a formal organization with listed membership is required to prevent charges of price setting from being drawn against the informal coalition. Agriculture associations are exempt from federal antitrust regulations.

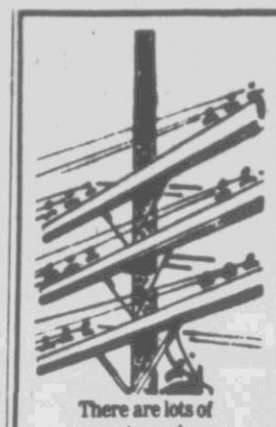

Membership in the association will cost each producer 20 cents for each allotted acre but not less than $10 annually.

The coalition at the Thursday night session brought in two Georgia farmers to urge this area's growers to hang together on the higher-price issue. Carl Lynn and Gerald Long said growers in their area around Decatur, Ga., are being offered contracts of $750 per ton for portions of their quota crop.

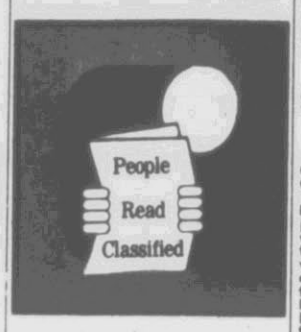

A former official of Planters Peanuts, David Kelly, who was also once president of the shellers' association in North Carolina and Virginia, urged the growers to remain united in their efforts.

The coalition movement began early this year but gained momentum when the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced the 1981 price support for quota peanuts at $455 per ton, the same as last year.

Peanut growers, saying the support price was 30 percent below the cost of production, went out on their own to seek a higher price.

A roof, is a roof, is a roof!

Poets we're not. Roofers we are.
What we'd like to do, now during our off season, is inspect your roof. We'll check for loose or missing shingles, dried out caulking and rusted flashing.
If your roof is more than a few years old, chances are it could use a going over. If repairs are needed, we'll give you an estimate on doing them, quickly and reasonably.

Passions Run High On 10 Commandments Ban

By HERBERT SPARROW
Associated Press Writer

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Thou shalt post the Ten Commandments on the classroom walls, says a 1978 Kentucky law. Thou shalt not, says the U.S. Supreme Court. Help! say confused local school boards.

A group of Crittenden County residents sued when their school board decided to remove copies of the Ten Commandments from the public schools.

In Bullitt County, an angry woman shouted, "And I thought we had Christians on this board!" after her local school board voted 3-2 last week to remove copies of the commandments from classrooms.

Such passion is butting up against the vow of a Louisville civil rights attorney, the lawyer who originally took the matter to the nation's highest court. He says he'll go to court against any school board that votes to leave up the Ten Commandments.

The controversy began three years ago with passage of the state law requiring copies of the commandments to be posted in all public school classrooms. The law was struck down by the U.S. Supreme Court last fall.

Backers of the law, led by the Kentucky Heritage Foundation in Louisville, contend the ruling struck down only the law and does not apply to donated copies.

But state Attorney General Steve Beshear, asked for an opinion by state school officials, says he believes the Supreme Court meant to ban the posting of the Ten Commandments in public classrooms under any circumstances.

A random survey by The Associated Press turned up 10 districts whose boards voted to take the copies down and 10 districts whose boards voted to keep them up despite Beshear's opinion that the boards are leaving themselves open to legal action. The state has 180 school districts.

John Wilson, chairman of the Shelby County board of education, said he didn't feel his board was defying the law in keeping up the copies.

"If there was a state law or clear instruction that they come down, I'm sure they would come down promptly," Wilson said.

There is also a political danger involved, as the three members of the Bullitt County board who voted to remove the Ten Commandments found out.

"You're on our list," Kenneth Mills, one in a large crowd that attended the board meeting, said to the three. Mills and others urged that board members Bill Dawson, Charles Hamilton and James Robards be voted out of office when their terms expire.

The Bowling Green Independent school board decided in January to remove the commandments from the classroom walls. The Warren County board voted March 9 to keep them up against the advice of its attorney.

"We felt like the parents don't really want them taken down," said board chairman Henry Moss. "We were elected to serve the public and if the public wants them up then we will keep them up as long as we can."

The Hopkins County Board of Education passed a motion Feb. 2 saying it would allow the commandments to remain posted "for the time being." The board received petitions with more than 4,000 signatures urging that the commandments remain posted until the question is settled.

A petition containing nearly 6,000 signatures was circulated in Christian County to keep the commandments posted, but the local board voted to take them down.

"It is one of the hardest decisions I ever had to make in my life," said board chairman Richard Brame. "I'm bound by my oath to uphold the law."

Wolfe County Schools Superintendent Richard Jett said, "My recommendation will be that, unless we have a suit, we leave them up as long as we have 'In God We Trust' on the dollar bill."

Tom Riner, executive director of the Heritage Foundation, says his organization has volunteered to pay legal costs for any school board that is sued. It is also providing legal aid for the 90 disgruntled Crittenden County residents who filed suit March 4 seeking to have the Ten Commandments put back up in their schools.

But Bill Stone, the Kentucky Civil Liberties Union attorney who successfully pursued the original suit that challenged the law, predicts the Crittenden County suit won't be the last one on the matter.

He said sooner or later his group will file suits against every district that doesn't comply with the Supreme Court ruling.

Stone says he is waiting to see what the Jefferson County Board of Education, which controls the state's largest school district, will do when it votes on the issue. The Jefferson County board has not scheduled that vote.

"If they do vote to take them down it may influence other counties that are still debating," Stone said.

He added, however, that if it becomes necessary he will go to federal court on a civil rights suit — and seek the largest possible damages against both the local board and its individual members.

MAKING A POINT — James Richards, left, a member of the Bullitt County School Board, tries to make a point during discussion of why the school system took down copies of the Ten Commandments. Midwest Farmers Fearful Over If Summer Rains Fail To Come

By ROBERT MACY
Associated Press Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The cattle ranchers and the wheat farmers of the Midwest speak of the weather in anxious tones these days. They talk of the droughts of the 1930s and the 1950s. And they talk about what will happen "if" — if the rains don't come, if there is another summer like last year's.

Recent rains helped a little. They generally provided enough water to support the winter wheat crop now in the ground. But more rain is needed to replenish subsoil moisture.

Changes in weather patterns eight miles in the sky, hold out the promise of a wet March, April and May. But there will be problems if the promise is not fulfilled.

"You don't create a drought overnight and you don't solve it overnight," said Phil Shideler, the National Weather Service meteorologist for Kansas. "You've got to replenish subsoil moisture, solve the problem of below-normal reservoir levels.

The winter wheat crop in Kansas is just becoming active and will need more rain quickly.

"There's a high probability we will get through the spring with enough moisture to maintain growth," said Shideler. "But if we don't have well-above normal precipitation in March, April, May and June, the first dry spell that comes along, we're going to be right back in the dry weather situation."

Shideler said the chances for spring rain look much better than they did because a high pressure system in the West that kept moisture from the Midwest this winter has given way to a low pressure system.

Dr. Norton D. Strommen, chief meteorologist for the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Washington, said last week: "The (weather) pattern has changed... The prospects are continuing to look up." Strommen said he thought most of the winter wheat crop would be saved. He said the prospects for crops planted in the spring depend on the rainfall during the summer.

Fred Ostby, head of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center, calls the recent rains "a drop in the bucket ... (but) better than nothing." He said that even an above-normal rainfall in March would not end the problems from the drought "although it certainly would be helpful."

Nebraska is in the midst of its driest winter in 106 years of record keeping. The Nebraska Crop Service said many farmers were taking advantage of the warm, dry weather to do field work. Much of Nebraska's corn, soybean and milo crop is irrigated so farmers will plant even if the weather is dry. But irrigation means high bills for diesel fuel and will further deplete the already-low underground water supply.

In Oklahoma — the heart of the 1930s Dust Bowl — experts say that the state needs heavy downpours by April or the effect could be devastating. The state's Soil Conservation Service say the dry soil and high winds are "freeze-drying" the winter wheat crop and a hay shortage and lack of water in stock ponds have forced cattlemen to cull their herds by 10 percent.

Dr. Robert A. Clark, associate director of hydrology for the U.S. Weather Service in Washington, said that the Palmer Index, used to measure drought severity, showed widespread patches of extreme and severe drought in the beginning of February. "It doesn't have those any more," he said, adding the index for the first week in March showed only scattered areas of extreme or severe drought, including southeast Kansas, northeast Oklahoma and east Texas.

The drought is not expected to stop spring planting in Texas, but problems remain, particularly in the northeast section of the state where some of the Red River Basin reservoirs are less than half full. Clark said last week's rains should help.

A state water specialist in Illinois said the drought in the southern two-thirds of the state will be over if Illinois receives normal rainfall in the next three months. In central Illinois, where February showers were heavier than usual, the situation has improved greatly.

Paul Waite, state climatologist in Iowa said the western third of the state remains dry, needing at least four inches of rain "just to stay even," but he said the rest of the state is in "better shape than others around us." The weather service is hopeful March will be wetter and warmer than usual and spring planting will be earlier because of the warmer weather.

Farmers in Colorado also are hoping — hoping for snow or rain. Colorado's reservoirs won't begin to fill until the spring runoff from snow in the mountains and this year's snowfall is reported at 41 percent of normal. State conservationist Sheldon Boone says the state would need a major storm like the March 3-4 blast every week for six straight weeks to reach average snowpack conditions.
