Hypersonic Descent

Columbia Prepared For Final Challenge

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

Rocketship Columbia and it two pilots faced a final, white-knuckle challenge today with a blazing, hypersonic descent through the atmosphere to an airliner-like landing in California's Mojave Desert.

It is man's first "wheels down" approach from outer space. The shuttle's touchdown target was the wide-open Rogers Dry Lake runway, a 27,000-foot-long blanket of rock-hard sand with margin for error.

There are risks: Never has a winged vehicle returned from orbit at 25 times the speed of sound. Nagging questions remain about the craft's thermal lifeguard tiles, which must throw off re-entry heat of up to 2,700 degrees fahrenheit.

But there was also confidence enough to go around.

Before descent began, the shuttle's historic maiden voyage had gone more smoothly than its most ardent supporters had dreamed. A perfect launch, flawless operation of its major systems, routine repairs of minor glitches.

Commander John Young, five times up in space and four times down, was looking forward to a drink on terra firma and told capsule communicator Henry Hartsfield, "I understand you're buying."

Pilot Robert Crippen, now a space veteran but anticipating his first return, was so relaxed he didn't need a sleeping pill last night.

"We've done every single thing we wanted to do and now it's time to get on with the entry," flight director Neil Hutchinson said today. He said the crew was up early, "ready and raring to get on with the day."

This morning, the astronauts, working by remote control, opened and closed Columbia's cargo doors one last time. That accomplished, the ship had passed its orbital operating tests with flying colors. The shuttle's maiden mission was designed to evaluate systems and ready the day Columbia would go into business as a space freighter.

Wheels-down, after 2¼ days and 36 orbits, was set for 1:22 p.m. EST — 10:22 a.m, California time — on the 44-square-mile lakebed at Edwards Air Force Base in the Mojave Desert. Perfect conditions, clear skies and light winds, were forecast. "Sounds good," Young commented.

The astronauts had their sleep interrupted briefly shortly after midnight today when an alarm sounded, indicating a low temperature reading on one of three auxiliary power units. The units produce pressure for the hydraulic system that operates rudders, speed brakes and flaps, and just one of them is sufficient to steer Columbia safely through re-entry.

Young and Crippen flipped some switches after the alarm and again at wakeup time — just before 4 a.m. — but the problem persisted; Shuttle Control said it would have no effect on the re-entry.

To wake the space travelers, Shuttle Control beamed up a raucus tape recording — a bugle call, wild music and a series of snappy one-liners alluding to re-entry: "Crip, you've waited 12 years for this. If you don't wake up you'll miss the whole darn thing." And: "John, after five missions you ought to have this down."

Actually, the astronauts had roused themselves, 30 minutes earlier.

A successful landing would mark the first time a spaceship has rocketed into space and returned to Earth, ready to fly again. It would accelerate the day when Columbia can routinely ferry satellites and people into orbit for scientific, commercial and military missions.

One hour before the planned touchdown, the astronauts were to turn their ship around and, flying backwards over the Indian Ocean, fire tail engines that slow the orbital speed of 17,400 miles an hour and start Columbia on a long, shallow descent that takes it north of Australia and across the Pacific north of Hawaii.

Insulating tiles were to protect Columbia from the searing re-entry heat. If tiles were missing in critical areas, vital control and other systems could be destroyed and the mission

Parliament Building Of Lebanon Heavily Shelled

By ALEX EFTY
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Mortar and artillery fire rained down on the Lebanese Parliament building today, trapping the speaker, some government ministers and legislators inside for three hours, official communiques reported.

Syrian peacekeeping forces and rightist Christian militias accused each other of the bombardment of the Villa Mansour, near the mid-city Green Line that divides the Christian and Moslem sectors of Beirut. At least eight shells exploded in the courtyard and around the Parliament building while the ministers and legislators dove for cover.

The new fighting shattered a nearly week-old cease-fire between Syrian soldiers and Christian militiamen here and in Zahle, 30 miles to the east. The truce had been sporadically observed.

A police spokesman said President Elias Sarkis arranged with the Lebanese army and Syrian peacekeeping forces to coordinate a rescue of the trapped officials.

A Syrian armored unit got Moslem ministers and parliamentarians to the Moslem side of the demarcation line and a Lebanese army force took Christians from the building, as shooting and sniping flared on both sides of the line, the spokesman said.

Prime Minister Sahfik Wazzan, a Moslem, and Foreign Minister Fuad Butros, a Christian, had left the Parliament building for their offices on opposite sides of the Green Line only a few minutes before the shooting began, the police spokesman reported.

The Christian-controlled Voice of Lebanon radio said shrapnel tore through the glass windows of the conference halls, forcing four ministers and 14 members of Parliament to crawl to shelter in the corridors.

The radio accused Syrian peacekeeping forces manning the Moslem side of the mid-city dividing line of shelling the building, and said a Parliament guard was wounded by shrapnel. One shell hit Defense Minister Joseph Skaf's limousine, parked in the building's courtyard, but Skaf was not harmed, the radio said.

A communique from the Syrian command charged the Christian militias with opening mortar and sniper fire at 11 a.m. as three Parliament committees were meeting. It said Syrian soldiers did not return the fire "out of consideration for the safety of cabinet ministers and members of Parliament."

Two people were killed Monday in Syrian shelling of Zahle and the city's mayor, Aziz al-Abdi, was slightly injured, a Christian spokesman said.

Syrian soldiers have besieged Zahle since April 1, when they moved in to stop the building of a military supply road. The Syrian action ignited a week of fighting that killed 265 civilians, according to police count.

The Zahle outbreak was followed by fighting among Syrians, Christians and Lebanese army regulars in Beirut. The shooting gave way to a cease-fire Wednesday, but the top Christian commander, Bachir Gemayel, warned today it might not last.

"We are sitting on top of a volcano," he said.

In the Syrian-controlled city of Aley, a suburb of the capital, a bomb exploded in a parked car Monday, killing two people and wounding 16, Lebanese state radio said. The Voice of Lebanon said three were killed and 10 wounded.

Monday was the sixth anniversary of the outbreak of the 1975-76 civil war. In April 1975, rightist Christians attacked a bus carrying Palestinian guerrillas, and 19 months of fighting ensued between Christian militias and an alliance of guerrillas and Moslem leftists.

Greenville School Board Carefully Trimming Cost

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Careful trimming is the basic stance members of the Greenville City Board of Education are taking as they struggle to maintain programs and keep personnel intact in the face of tight federal, state and local budgets for the coming school year.

At a workshop meeting of the board on Monday night, school board members carefully scrutinized a list of proposed cuts offered by Superintendent Glenn Cox as the effort to study all the ramifications each paring down of budget item will have on curriculum, personnel, maintenance, and services involved in operating the school system.

One of the qualifying factors expressed a number of times was that of the unknown in terms of dollars and cents of budget money which the board must deal with in trying to shape up a budget — the amount of state allocations, the final totals to be authorized for school budgets (city and county) by the County Commissioners.

One of the first considerations by the board Monday night was that of looking at the current school budget to be appropriated by county commissioners.

On April 7 the Pitt County Board of Education approved a proposed county school budget of $7,080,705 for submission to the county commissioners for their consideration.

In the event that total is approved by the commissioners — and it was stressed that this is an unknown factor at this time — approval would, based on the pro-rata structure of county funds for schools, give the Greenville City school budget a local current expense budget from the county of $2,131,901, and a local capital outlay amount of $916,084.

Looking at the local current expense amount of $2,181,901 as a working figure basis, this amount falls short $170,065 of the tentative proposal of $2,301,156 to be sought from the county in local current expense funds for the city schools.

At Monday night's workshop session, the focus was on recommended trims to come up with $170,000 in potential cuts. After more than an hour of discussions of recommended proposed cuts, the board expressed a concensus for Cox to proceed with incorporating the cuts into budget proposals.

Proposed cuts include cutbacks to 11 months employment of assistant principals previously scheduled for 12 months employment, $4,122; trimming from $10,000 to $7,000 an allocation for athletics; a cut of $17,860 in not hiring a replacement for a resigned librarian; a cut of $3,250 in library books and magazines; $17,628 in not hiring a replacement for a maintenance worker and not adding a proposed additional worker; a $2,000 cut in the testing program; the elimination of a property account inventory manual, $3,600; not stepping up to 12 months the employment term of five guidance counselors and not hiring an additional one-half guidance position, $17,891; delaying until a future school year the hiring

Territorial Limits Are Extended By Ayden Bd.

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

AYDEN — The one-mile territorial town limit was revised last night after no opposition to the move was expressed at a public hearing held during the board of commissioner's monthly meeting.

The revision, approved unanimously by the board, will decrease the one-mile limit to the northeast. "If we included an entire mile it would put us in the Winterville district, which would obligate us to have a representative on the planning board," explained Town Clerk Ralph Ford. "This area is mostly swamp and there is no one living there."

The territorial boundary will remain one mile elsewhere.

A public hearing was also held to discuss street improvements on the remaining portion of Pinewood Drive. The board afterwards adopted a resolution to undertake these improvements as soon as funds are available.

An amendment to the zoning ordinance was passed, adding a new classification of zone, B-2(R) highway commercial rural. This zone is one in which no public water and sewer is available, and no area less than 40,000 square feet will be considered for rezoning in this classification. A public hearing will be held May 11.

A request to rezone the area on the south side of Boulevard Street to Blount east from R-8 residential to RA-6MH, residential-agricultural, mobile homes, was considered. The rezoning would affect an area 1,050 feet by 140 feet. The board voted to send the matter back to planning board for consideration.

A public hearing was set for May 11 on a request by Bill McLawhorn to rezone property located at the intersection of N.C. 11 and S.R. 102 from M-1 general manufacturing and RA-20 agricultural to B-2 highway commercial. The planning board recommended the corner lot on the north and south side measuring 210 feet by 240 feet be reclassified.

May 11 was also the date set for a public hearing on small power production and cogeneration. This public hearing will deal with the

Flaherty Tells Pitt GOP Job Not Done Yet

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

"I'm proud to be a Republican," David T. Flaherty, chairman of the North Carolina Republican Party told some 100 persons attending a Pitt County Republican Party meeting here last night.

"We've had a great year," with the election of a Republican U. S. senator, two congressmen and a president ("the greatest president the nation has ever had"), Flaherty said. "You've every right to be proud.

"But the job isn't done yet," the state party official said. "We've sent a man to Washington who has the determination to lessen inflation," and reduce the size of government. "But Congress doesn't have the guts to say 'no'," to special interest groups, Flaherty charged.

"It's up to you and I to see his (Pres. Reagan's) programs are adopted. This country needs courage. Write your legislators and say you support the president. Let them know you are behind the president 100 percent.

"There's no question that we've got a great president. Let's help him," Flaherty urged.

Turning to North Carolina, the state chairman asked, "Do you realize government in North Carolina is growing faster that the government in Washington?"

According to Flaherty, hiring by the State in 1979 totaled about 750 persons per month. After Gov. Jim Hunt ordered a hiring freeze, the speaker said, an average of 800 persons per month were added to the State payroll. "Just prior to the election, over 1,000 per month," were hired.

YOUNG VIOLINISTS . . . of the Suzuki Violinists of Eastern North Carolina are shown in action at a recent concert. The performers will be in concert at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 15 at St. James United Methodist Church. There is no admission charged and the public is invited to attend. This concert is part of the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival.

Suzuki Violinists Will Perform On Wednesday

Young children will be adding to the festive atmosphere as they perform for the public at 7:30 Wednesday night in St. James United Methodist Church, in an Eastern Carolina Arts Festival program. There is no admission charged and the public is invited to attend.

The Suzuki Violinists of Eastern North Carolina is made up of players from the ages of two on up to adults who have been taught to play the violiin by the method devised by the Japanese teacher, Shinichi Suzuki.

The Greenville program is area wide, with students from Washington, Wilson, Kinston, Farmville, Ayden, Plymouth and New Bern, as well as those from Greenville. The program was started here in 1966 by Joanne Bath, who serves as director of the Suzuki Violinists of Eastern North Carolina.

JoAnn Moore, elementary music teacher for the Greenville City Schools, will accompany the group on piano. Teachers who have students performing include Joanne Bath, Melodie Jones, Paul Topper, Stephen Bath, Mary Dixon, Hih Song Kin and Jeri Walker.

The program will feature German folk songs, compositions by Bach, Vivaldi, Beethoven, Dvorak, Handel, Weber, Paganini, Gossec, Bayley and Suzuki, as well as a Sonatina written especially for the group by Robert Hause, conductor of the East Carolina Symphony.

The group has performed extensively for schools, churches and organizations throughout eastern North Carolina. Last Saturday it performed at the Sidewalk Art Show. A tour of England is planned for early June, with a performance scheduled at Westminster Abbey.

of a custodial supervisor, $10,524; not hiring from local funds two teacher aides previously funded by state funds, $12,000; and cuts in social security, retirement and hospitalization plans for seven and one-half classified employees, $19,566.

These recommended cuts, along with a number of others, amount to a total of $140,000 in proposed cuts. This still leaves $30,000 in cuts to be considered from the proposed local current expense budget.

Commenting on the concept of judicious, multiple trimming recommendations, acting school board chairman Dr. Jon Tingelstad said "I feel the idea of saving positions, of giving up pieces, such as 11 months instead of 12 months employment, is a good idea."

Cox noted that for many of the uncertainties in the budgets "at this point, state allocations can be our salvation."

Flaherty.....

"The reason the people of this state voted Republican," according to Flaherty, is, "they wanted to cut government. This country wants a more conservative government."

The Republican Party in the state is, "on the grow. There's no question that the mood of this country and state is toward conservative," according to Flaherty.

"There's one basic thing you've got to remember. Our priority must be the election of a Republican legislature in 1982...and work together.

"We've agreed we are going to be together, so let's make sure we organize every precinct. Let's make sure we raise the money needed to run the necessary ads...do the necessary things so people will realize the difference in the candidates," Flaherty urged.

"We don't need to raise taxes," in North Carolina, according to Flaherty. "We need to learn to spend what we have more efficiently...more effectively.

"We've got to get the best candidates we can to run...quality candidates. Then run as a team.

"We've got an objective in front of us that is real...we can capture control of the North Carolina houses (the Senate and House) in 1982. If we can capture the North Carolina Senate, we can force the Governor and the House to reduce spending," Flaherty said, adding that the election of 16 new Republican state senators would give the GOP a majority in the Senate.

"That's our objective...just add 16 additional senators. Let's make it a reality. The challenge is ours."

Pitt County Republican chairman Malcolm Smith, who presided at the meeting, presented plaques to Henry Aldridge, Bob Browning, Herb Lee and Jim McIntyre, all candidates for office in the November 1980 election.

The awards, Smith said, were for their, "effort and contribution," to the Pitt County Republican Party through the years.

installation of windmills and other small power plants by private citizens, and the requirements of both the town and the citizens.

Joel McLawhorn of the Ayden Theatre Workshop presented the regional award the Ayden Recreation Department received (for the workshop) April 5 to the town, saying, "This is an award of which the town can be proud. I saw entries more elaborately presented at the competition, but I saw none that had better subject matter.

"What I think the award was trying to do was encourage recreation departments to get involved with things besides sports," he added. "Over 200 people had an active role in the theatre workshop last year and over 2,500 persons attended performances."

Other business at the meeting included:

— A 30-month lease on the old theater lot used for public parking was approved.

— A resolution was passed commending former utilities director Mike Finney for the "highest quality of professional expertise and service to the town."

— Utilities Director Mark Suggs was appointed as Ayden's representative to power agency No. three, with Ralph Ford as the alternate.

— A committee consisting of Don Russell, Ross Persinger and Aaron Hines was selected to meet with the Rural Fire Association to determine 1981-82 budget requirements.

— Purchase of a Burroughs L-8000 accounting machine for $1,000 was approved.

— A $54.75 tax release for Bessie Jenkins, on disability, was approved.

— Bids for community development rehabilitation project were opened and the low bid of Reynolds Home Improvements from Tarboro was accepted, pending the approval of Housing and Urban Development.

— Also subject to HUD's approval, the Ayden Housing Authority's audit contract was awarded to Touche Ross & Company for the amount of $705.

Grant Money

RALEIGH — Dr. Sarah T. Morrow, secretary of the N.C. Department of Human Resources and Governor James B. Hunt Jr. announced that state grants of $6.4 million were made this past quarter to 24 local governments across the state for water supply systems project.

Greenville received $87,799 in grant money. The grants were made under the provisions of the N.C. Clean Water Bond Act which permits grants of up to 25 percent of the total eligible costs to assist in financing the construction of approved water supply systems projects.

Grants are based on priority ratings and the total amount of funds available each fiscal year. To date, under the present act and the one that preceded it, 1,047 applications have been received.

More Eagles Building Nests

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — State wildlife officials say they're "ecstatic" at signs that more bald eagles are building nests this year along Lake Erie.

"Things are looking better than they have in 20 years," says state biologist Denis Case. Officials say one eaglet has hatched, at least five are due later this month and a sixth eagle couple is incubating eggs. Four eagles were born here in each of the past two years.

London Rioters On 4th Night Of Arson, Havoc

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Black gangs in London's Brixton slum district went on a rampage for the fourth straight night, smashing windows and setting fires. But the rioters stayed away from the police, and no new injuries or arrests were reported.

Large numbers of blacks again surged through Brixton, in South London, after dark Monday. They attacked several stores and a post office building, adding to destruction Saturday and Sunday nights estimated at more than $2 million.

Police with riot shields moved into the area, but no clashes between police and rioters were reported.

With 200 people injured and 199 arrested, the weekend rioting and battles between police and mobs of blacks and some whites was Britain's worst racial violence. Black leaders said it was touched off by "heavy-handed" police action. But they said it stemmed from anger and frustration over unemployment — about 20 percent, or twice the national average, in Brixton — and discrimination against non-whites from the former British colonies in Asia, Africa and the West Indies.

Police said the violence began Friday night when youths saw a policeman aiding a black who had been knifed. They thought he was arresting the man and set upon the policeman.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher acknowledged that blacks were angry, but said, "Nothing, but nothing, justifies what happened." In a television interview Monday night, she said the rioting was "totally and utterly wrong ... I cannot condemn it too strongly."

Home Secretary William Whitelaw announced a broad government inquiry into the violence and its causes. He said it would include social and economic conditions in Brixton, where 29 percent of the residents are non-white. Most of these are West Indian blacks.

However, Whitelaw vowed to "maintain the law" and said he would not bow to pressure for a reduction of the police presence in Brixton.

Meanwhile, Brixton community leaders announced formation of a defense committee to aid those arrested. A spokesman, said a rally would be held Sunday to protest police violence. Officials accused the committee of "provocative."

BUDGET MEETING

The Pitt County Development Commission will hold a special meeting on Wednesday, April 22 at 7:30 p.m. to consider the budget for 1981-82.

The meeting will be held in the offices of the commission at 201 E. Second Street.

Daughter Born In Parking Lot

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Parking lot attendant Debbie Simpson left her collection booth at Presbyterian Hospital Monday afternoon to attend to a waiting car — and a mother in labor.

When she looked into the car, she saw Bessie Stokes arched above the seat with the baby underneath her.

"There were two kids in the back seat," Mrs. Simpson said. "They were leaning over, watching it all."

She took the baby's head out of the embryonic sac and untangled the umbilical cord, and it started to cry. "It sounded good," she said.

After the child, a baby girl, was born, a student nurse wrapped her in her jacket and took her into the hospital's delivery suite.

It was Mrs. Stokes' sixth child.

The reason that there are so many charters today is that there are more people eligible to use them. One no longer has to belong to a club in order to charter a flight. The Civil Aeronautics Board has eased the rules regarding operation of charters because of popular demand for them. Not only are there lots of charters today, there are lots of charter types, too. Some are mostly just air transportation. However, there are others, like the ITC's and OTC's, which include hotel arrangements and transfers in the price of the overall charter package. Consult your travel agent for recommendations.

QUIXOTE TRAVELS INC is the senior travel agency in Greenville. We have a staff of 7 full time agents to service all your travel needs. Crocheted popcorns in a diamond design are worked on a background of double crochet to create a stunning, textured purse. Using double strands of four-ply worsted-weight yarn and a large crochet hook, this is a jiffy-quick project. Directions are included on the leaflet for knitting an Aran Isle purse also.

To obtain directions for making crocheted and knitted purses, send your request for Leaflet No. PT-567 with $1.00 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler, "The Daily Reflector," P.O. Box 810, North Myrtle Beach, S.C. 29582.

The kit price includes shipping charges, sufficient Wintuk yarn to knit or crochet one purse, instruction leaflet and purse handles. Specify your choice of the following yarn colors: fisherman white, light gold, beige, pink or blue.

Dear Pat: Did you ever make flowers from cast-on knit stitches? Just slip them off and pull the yarn through all the stitches. — Mrs. J. Peters, Tionesta, Pa.

Many thanks, Mrs. Peters, for sharing this idea with us and for sending me the sample so that I might expand on these directions for other readers.

Any size needle and yarn may be used and the number of stitches may be varied. I used knitting worsted-weight yarn and size nine needles, casting on 24 stitches. The resulting "flower" was about the size of a quarter. Finer yarn and smaller needles would make a smaller flower while larger needles and yarn would give you a larger one.

The directions are quite simple. Just cast on the stitches, then thread a tapestry needle with the yarn end and slip the stitches off of the knitting needle onto the threaded needle. Draw it up so that you have a circle of stitches and whip the two edge stitches together.

Using the same yarn or contrasting yarn, give it a finished look by working two or three French knots in the center.

Just after Mrs. Peters' letter arrived, a friend showed me a favorite sweater of hers that had been ruined by a stubborn tea stain that would not come out.

It could have been covered with a pocket, but she had no matching yarn and was asking me for a suggestion. We quickly made up five of the little flowers in pastel yarns, sewed them to the sweater and embroidered leaves and stems with green yarn.

Now, instead of a disaster, she has an "original design" sweater, reaping compliments galore wherever she goes.

I can think of many ideas made with the simplest basic

Dear Abby

Sister Should Shut Him Out

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure my problem is common to all young girls who have older brothers. I am 11 and my brother Joshua is 13½.

Joshua keeps saying, "Shut your face." (He's forbidden to say "Shut up," so he uses this instead.) This makes me very angry, even angrier than when he used to tell me to shut up.

If I tell Joshua to shut his own face or something like that, he starts hitting me, then I hit him back. Then he overpowers me and I end up in tears. Please help.

LITTLE SISTER

P.S. Please don't involve my parents. They are sick of this problem.

DEAR SISTER: I can't tell your parents what to do, but Joshua should be forbidden to hit you. (Hitting is worse than saying "Shut up.") Your best defense is to ignore him, stay out of his way and learn to run fast. (P.S. It offers little comfort to you now, but older brothers come in handy later on. The trouble is, they have to grow up first.)

DEAR ABBY: A recent column printed in the Arizona Daily Star featured a verse by John Owen:

"God and the doctor we alike adore
"But only when in danger, not before:
"The danger o'er, both are alike requited
"God is forgotten, and the doctor slighted."

I don't know this John Owen, but I am familiar with an unsigned 16th-century epigram that reads:

"God and the soldier we adore
"In times of danger, not before:
"The trouble past, and all things righted,
"God is forgot', and the soldier slighted."

History does seem to repeat itself.

DEAR ABBY: In regard to the parents who invited only a percentage of a kindergarten class to a birthday party:

In the day of the one-room schoolhouse, Mrs. B. sent apples to school for her daughter's birthday party minus one apple for one little girl whose mother Mrs. B. didn't like. When the "birthday girl" came home, her mother asked her how the little girl took the snub.

"Oh, I gave her half of my apple," she replied.

This is a true story told by my mother, who taught school in Kansas from 1900 to 1910.

Let's Strengthen System

Doomsdayers have been with us from the beginning of time, and if enough people sound the clarions of doom enough one of them is eventually going to be right.

Neverthless we don't buy the argument heard these days that Social Security will collapse. The system faces potential trouble, yes, but nothing that a nation as rich as ours can't head off if we have the will and the proper restraint.

We are now taking steps in that direction. A House committee has given tentative approval to a proposal which would raise the retirement age from 65 to 68. It would be phased in over a period of ten years and the plan would offer some protection for those who want to retire as early as 62. Retirement at 62 would net 64 percent of full benefits, while retirement at 65 would mean benefits of 81 percent. Full benefits would begin at age 68.

The plan would not work a hardship on most who are now planning on drawing benefits at 65 since it would be phased in over a period of time. Younger workers would have plenty of time to plan for the change.

By the time it is fully effective people will be living longer than now and they will have more productive years.

Social Security has worked for many years, but its financing could eventually be insufficient. We must plan now to keep the system strong for present and future generations.

State Has A Committment

Ending of the reservation system on the state's ferries and cutting of service ran into a buzz saw of opposition from Outer Banks and coastal people who see the ferry service as their link to the rest of the state.

Consequently the N. C. Board of Transportation is expected to restore the reservation system for Ocracoke Isand and rescind service reductions.

Increases in fares on ferries which have them will remain in effect.

Finding places to cut spending is difficult, but the state has made a committment to ferry service for the coastal regions and in doing so has a responsibility to see that reasonable service is maintained.

THEY HOLD QUITE A DEFENSE RECORD!

THIS AFTERNOON

Dropout Concern

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The dropout problem in North Carolina schools is big and complex: some 29,000 quit each year, and the reasons vary from individual to individual.

Tackling the problem is going to take painstaking effort by a lot of people over a long period of time. There are no easy answers. But there are some difficult steps to be taken which over time can produce results.

That is the conclusion of an exhaustive report on the subject just completed by the Department of Public Instruction which calls for a "concerted effort.....Educators, parents and the community at large must join together in a major new thrust toward excellence in education for all youth."

Without attempting to attach dollar marks to specific programs, the booklet instead encourages those responsible for education at all levels to rethink and redesign the system from policy to philosophy; over a period of time.

Top Priority

The dropout has become a popular concern. Gov. Jim Hunt has attached the label "top priority" to finding solutions; and a legislative study commission has been at work. Two essential steps are already in the works as the General Assembly now tackles the budget for the coming two years. One, given top emphasis, is reduction of class size so that teachers can spend more time with "problem students". Another is closer working relationships between the public schools and the Community College system.

Critics have contended, however, that those beginning steps do not move far enough fast enough in coming to grips with the real dropout problem: schools not geared to young people who must enter the world of work.

BILL NOBLITT

The new guideline, "Helping Students Graduate", does recognize this important dilemma, and spends considerable space exploring reasons students and schools sometimes don't get along well together, and how schools can be changed to help those students who, realistically, must prepare themselves for real-world jobs — even while remaining in school.

As Craig Phillips, state superintendent of schools, puts it: "...we must find better ways to help every student graduate with adequate academic and vocational skills sufficient to continue an educational pursuit and/or enter the world of work."

A dropout follow-up system is considered a major step forward in building this new educational approach. Both the State Board of Education and the Community Colleges Board have endorsed the launching of a routine program to "exit interview" every student who leaves school to find out why, what could be done to help keep him in, how to help continue education, and follow up talks.

Individualized

This process will help pinpoint the variety of problems which leaving students face, and help design individualized programs to help them continue their education in some form.

A major step in this process will be improved links between the public schools and the community colleges with further relaxation of the barriers between the two systems which have worked in the past to hamper public school students from enrolling at the community or technical schools.

Still to come are dozens of innovative and flexible programs which accept the reality that not all high school students plan to go to college. For any number of reasons, they plan to get a job; if they can. That is where "Helping Students Graduate" begins in its exhaustive exploration of suggestions and alternatives.

As the opening comments explain: "The emergence of

The Good School News

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Have you heard enough bad news about our public schools? If so, you may want to pause for a moment to catch up on some good news instead. Here in Jacksonville, the Duval County system is demonstrating what can be accomplished when all the right elements of academic excellence and discipline are put together.

This is a middle-sized school system — 101,000 students, 34 percent black, embracing diverse social and economic levels. On the face of it, there's nothing to distinguish Jacksonville from other Southern or Southwestern cities with about the same mix. But something exceptional is happening down here. In these schools, learning comes first.

Elsewhere in the country, the scores on student achievement tests have been declining. Here in Jacksonville, the schools have racked up four consecutive years of steady improvement. In one predominantly black high school, 80 percent of the students failed the Florida Student Assessment Test in 1977. Last year 84 percent of them passed.

The system is producing individual scholars. Because of a heavy emphasis on mathematics, test scores in this area have soared dramatically. Last year a senior at Englewood High School, Richard Greene, took statewide honors in math. They're also big on Latin. A senior at Terry Parker High School, Lee Anderson, topped 1,100 other students of Latin last year to win overall first place in the National Junior Classical League Convention.

JAS. J. KILPATRICK

Sports aren't ignored, but sports are secondary here. Other competitions have a higher priority. There's an annual Math Field Day for 60 schools in Northeast Florida; you won't be surprised to learn that Duval County took first and second places last year. The Terry Parker debating team captured the state title in 1980 and placed among the top 10 in the national forensic championships.

A couple of weeks hence, on April 24, Jacksonville will host what the sponsors hope will become an annual event — an Academic Super Bowl to be waged in the football stadium of Sandalwood High School. A team from Duval County will meet a team from Henrico County, Va., head-to-head on the 50-yard line. Two marching bands will make a joyful noise. Cheerleaders will spur the contestants on. The questions will range from physics and biology to social studies and math, with some tough ones on history, English and languages thrown in.

You will guess that all this emphasis upon learning is accompanied by an emphasis on discipline, and you will be right. The state of Florida requires every school system to adopt its own Code of Student Conduct. Jacksonville's is thought to be the toughest in the state. The student who misses nine days in a nine-week grading period is flunked for that period. The code spells out offenses and punishments, and the code is firmly enforced. As one consequence, vandalism has virtually vanished.

Much of the credit for Jacksonville's performance probably lies with the system's gung-ho superintendent, 50-year-old Herb A. Sang. He came here from Kansas City as an assistant superintendent in 1970 and moved into the top slot in 1976. His purpose was to weld students, faculty and parents into a cohesive whole. Last September 71,600 parents turned out for an open house called "Education Is a Family Affair." In a survey conducted by the Florida Times-

Theology Of The Budget

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — Green eyeshade worship of the sacred balanced budget, persistently followed by a Republican Party during half a century in the minority, was behind the Senate Budget Committee's peculiar conduct April 9 that could spell serious trouble for Ronald Reagan.

Defection by three right-wing Republican senators to defeat the budget resolution, 12-to-8, is of no overriding importance in itself. It does create a political problem that the White House will have to work out over the Easter recess. Irretrievably, it slowed down the Reagan economic program's momentum.

But the broader danger for President Reagan is the show of Republican susceptibility to Democratic taunts of deficit spending. If Republican members of Congress fall into the Democratic trap of holding Reagan's tax rate reductions hostage to accusations of apostasy in worshipping the balanced budget, Reagan's program is doomed. Clearly, the president has not yet convinced his party that only through lowering tax rates today can the budget be balanced in some tomorrow.

Tax rate reduction is not only the cutting edge of Reagan's program to revitalize the economy but is the prime target for the opposition. Democrats first held tax cuts hostage for spending cuts, a tactic that failed when Reagan produced budget reductions larger than anybody thought possible. Within the last two weeks, the tactic was changed to put emphasis on the balanced budget in the plan put forth by the chairman of the Democratic-controlled House Budget Committee, Rep. James Jones of Oklahoma. In essence, Jones was projecting a balanced budget by severely limiting tax reduction, exaggerated in its budgetary impact because of static revenue estimates not accounting for growth.

This proved unusually effective because of Sen. Pete Domenici of New Mexico, budget committee chairman in the newly-Republican Senate. Domenici has struck a stern Republican bookkeeper's pose toward tax rate reduction. It was far less important, he stressed, than moving toward a balanced budget.

Domenici's inclinations along this line were enhanced when he hired as a committee staff economist Preston J. Miller of the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank, an institution known as a hotbed of anti-tax cut sentiment. The bank's 1979 annual report, prepared by Miller, was a screed against the Kemp-Roth tax cut. In 1980, Miller wrote: "The proposed tax cuts will result in less revenue for the government year in and year out and will thus be inflationary." Only a balanced budget will save us, he declared.

Miller is regarded as the principal influence behind Gail Fosler, selected by Domenici as the committee's chief economist. With an MBA in finance, she has forecast interest rates markedly higher than the Reagan administration's. Consequently, Fosler estimates national debt service $9 billion higher than does Reagan in fiscal year 1983 and $10.3 billion higher in fiscal year 1984. In effect, the committee's Republican staff is betting on the Reagan program to fail.

Domenici himself sparked last week's blowup by refusing to take budget director David Stockman's I.O.U. for unspecified spending cuts in fiscal years 1983 and 1984, the so-called "out years." That bookkeeping nicety created not only a deficit but also a bounty for Democrats desperately seeking a hold on the Reagan program.

Sen. Bill Armstrong of Colorado, who unlike Domenici is a strong advocate of tax rate reduction, argued that the deficit resolution on the floor would invite destruction of Reagan's tax program. Two freshman Republicans, Iowa's Charles Grassley and

Strength For Today

PATIENCE

"Be still, my soul; the Lord is on thy side;
Bear patiently the cross of grief or pain."

These words, written by Katherina von Shiegel three hundred years ago and set to the moving melody of Finlandia, by Sibelius, have sustained the souls of thousands of Christian believers. Yet the conviction that God is on our side and that all can be resigned into his hands is hard for us to get through our minds and souls. Even the greatest saints have to struggle to attain such faith, and after gaining it, to keep it. You and I and the most holy persons who have ever lived are not so much different after all.

The Bible assures us that in patience we shall possess our souls. There is no broad and easy highway to success in anything, and this includes success in spiritual matters as well as in material ones.

But when we bear our cross patiently, the knowledge slowly wells up in us that God is on our side.

To the editor:

In response to the letter in "The Public Forum," on April 10, written by Mrs. Floyd Robinson, I have a few additional remarks.

There would not be a problem with discipline in the school systems if parents would fulfill their obligation as parents and discipline their children at home. Children who have been disciplined at home usually behave at school and this enables their classmates to learn what is being taught. Parents must cooperate with teachers to discipline their children.

If parents would do their part in the discipline of their children, the problem of stealing in schools would also be minimized. Teachers who are burdened with the additional responsibility of discipline are unable to give their best effort to teaching.

To the editor:

The heading on the article concerning the Bike-a-Thon for St. Judes Children's Hospital on Sunday, April 12, 1981 was grossly incorrect. It stated "Farmville Bike Event Nets $200." The amount collected by the 60 children participating on March 28 was in excess of $2,500.

It must be disheartening to those adults and children who gave their time and energy for this worthy cause to see such a mistake!

I feel it only fair that Mrs. Marsha Tripp, chairperson for the fundraiser, be commended on the successful job she did in Farmville. Not only did she chair a successful campaign — she also raised six times more than was raised last year. Without caring, hard-working volunteers like Mrs. Tripp, hospitals and charities would undoubtedly not be able to help the number of children that they do today. I salute Marsha Tripp and all of the children and adults who participated in the Bike-a-Thon for St. Judes.

Pressured Into A Paying Job

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Full-time homemakers say they are being pressured by society to take paying jobs, but they also indicate they do not feel any sense of inferiority because of the lack of a career.

Those are among the findings of a new study by the advertising firm of Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne, which warns that marketers may be making a mistake if they assume the non-working woman is unhappy with her lifestyle.

Feminists have long complained that women are not portrayed accurately in commercials. The feminists say working women are ignored; they scoff at advertisements which show women who seem to be concerned with nothing more than a clean shirt or a polished floor.

Now, says Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborne — popularly known as BBDO — advertisers seem to be in danger of going to the other extreme, and the agency says that companies which "set up the working woman as the prototype of the 1980s admired female will be off-base."

Statistically, working women today outnumber full-time homemakers. The Department of Labor says that 52 percent of all women 16 and over were in the labor force as of February 1981.

BBDO says its study "indicates the professional homemaker is a happy woman. She feels good about herself and her ability to stick to her decision to remain at home, even under strong societal pressure to find an outside job and, thereby, supposedly find herself."

The agency based its conclusions on telephone interviews with a sample group of 300 women, all of whom had children under 18 living at home and had no plans to go to work for at least five years.

The women cited their children as the major reason for their decision not to work. Asked why they had chosen to stay at home, 54 percent of those interviewed said it was because of the youngsters.

The women were asked whether they thought there was more pressure on women in today's society to work or to stay at home. More than two-thirds — 69 percent — said there was more pressure on women to work outside the home. Nineteen percent said there was more pressure to be a homemaker and 12 percent gave no answer.

Two-thirds of those interviewed said they thought their husbands preferred them to be homemakers. Seven percent said they thought their husbands would rather they had an outside job; 18 percent said their husbands didn't care or left it up to them; and 9 percent had no answer.

The interviewees were given a list of 12 characteristics and asked how well each characteristic applies to homemakers and to working women. The characteristics most frequently applied to homemakers were: family-oriented, busy, faithful to spouse, energetic, fun-loving and intelligent. The characteristics most often cited for working women were: busy, fashion-conscious, self-confident, energetic, materialistic and intelligent.

The homemakers generally thought they were sexier than their career-oriented colleagues. Twenty-six percent of those questioned said the characteristic "sexy" applied to homemakers; only 17 percent said it applied to working women.

Homemakers said the biggest advantage to their lifestyle was having more time for their families and for the household chores. They said the biggest advantage for working women was an income of their own.

The importance of money was evident in the answer to another question as well. Asked under what circumstances they would go to work, 55 percent of those interviewed said they would look for a job if inflation gets worse. Forty-seven percent said they would join the labor force if their children were no longer at home and 42 percent said they'd work if they were trained in an interesting field.

As might be expected, the homemakers had a different view of today's commercials than the one presented by feminists. About one-third of those interviewed — 34 percent — said there was too much emphasis on working women in advertisements. Eleven percent said there was too little emphasis, 48 percent said the emphasis was about right and 7 percent had no answer.

Winterville Annexation Move Again Tabled By Town Board

By Tommy Forrest
Reflector Staff Writer

WINTERVILLE— Winterville town board members opened bids for a new police vehicle last night prior to the regular scheduled meeting. Low bidder on the car was Leo-Venters Motors of Ayden with a bid of $7,432.14.

In regular business considered by the board, a request for the annexation of the new Pinewood Village apartments was brought up and, once again, the motion for the board to finalize the annexation was tabled until a time when a representative of the complex can be present to clarify some details.

The board was also asked to make a final decision on the annexation of the old Polly Nobles property off Church Street. A decision as to the cost of curbing, guttering, and paving of the street has not been figured yet, according to Town Clerk Elwood Nobles, who said the matter needs to be worked out with the other land owners first. The motion was tabled until an exact figure can be obtained as to the cost of the project.

Poe Worthington, representing the Recreation Commission, reported on the progress of the purchase of new property adjacent to the existing ball field, and said plans were nearing final stages for the purchase. Worthington also presented the board with the commission's annual report and requested board approval of a membership list of 26 persons that would make up the commission for another term. The board approved the financial report and the membership list.

In other recreation business, Worthington requested the board to let four baseball games be played on Wednesday night during May and June. He said the request was necessary due to players working on Saturdays and their having a hard time getting officials on the weekends. The request was approved by the board.

In new business brought before the board, a tax lien sale for 1980 real estate taxes set for June 9, 1981, at 12 noon in front of the town hall, was approved by the board. Mayor Walter Dail said final notices have been mailed.

John Weathington, developer of a four-unit apartment complex west of Winterville off Main Street, requested from the board permission to tap on sewer lines to the city's system. The new apartments will be outside the town limits.

Dail stated it was his understanding that he (Weathington) also wants to tap on a mobile home near the new apartments. After some discussion, the board approved the sewer tap for the apartments, but did not approve the tap for the mobile home.

A request by Patricia Waller to have a garden on the old Jenny Brock property owned by the town was approved.

Dail reported that amendments to the 1980-81 budget were necessary. Those amendments were to increase contributions to Contentnea Metropolitan Sewer District fund, $9,016.12; to add to the government revenue sharing account, $9,016.12; to increase electric charges, $10,228; and to increase electric contributions to general fund, $10,228. The board approved the corrections.

The board also approved the sale of water for one more year to farmers for crops. Rates were set at $3 per thousand gallons or below, $1.50 per acre for setting out and spraying, $1 for setting out tobacco, and $0.50 per acre for spraying other crops. The rates were approved by the board.

Dail said Robert Hill Construction Co. has purchased the Warren-Gardner subdivision off Jones Street, and agreements need to be worked out as to the paving of the streets in the development. Dail instructed Councilman Bobby Crawford to check into the cost of the paving and tiling and see what agreement can be reached with the new owners. The old agreement was made with prices of about a year old, and a new agreement will have to be reached using today's prices.

AMOS C. LEGGETT

A native of Stokes, Leggett graduated from Greenville High School in 1945, served in the U. S. Navy, attended East Carolina University, and has been employed as a tobacco buyer since that time.

A Master Mason in Crown Point Lodge, Leggett, has served as a district lecturer, and has been awarded the Visitor-of-the-Year Award in the Fifth Masonic District for seven out of the last 11 years.

Break-In Investigated

Greenville Police are investigating a break-in at the Etna Service Station on Memorial Drive early today.

Chief Glenn Cannon said thieves broke a window to gain entrance to the building and took 62 cartons of cigarettes, valued at $247 from the business.

Two Wrecks Are Reported

An Ayden man was charged in an accident in Greene County Sunday morning.

Trooper M. C. Whitley reported that Ricky Herbert Wood, 18, of Rt. 1, Ayden lost control of his car on U. S. 13 seven miles north of Snow Hill and hit a utility pole.

About $2,100 damage was done to Wood's vehicle and about $200 to the pole, owned by Pitt and Greene Electric Membership Corporation. Wood was charged with driving under the influence. The accident occurred at 12:40 a.m. Sunday.

In a different accident Sunday, Alexander Little, 26, of Rt. 1, Snow Hill was charged with reckless driving after he lost control of his vehicle and hit a mailbox. Trooper T. J. King said approximately $300 was done to Little's car and about $25 to the mailbox owned by Roy Lee Harrell. This accident occurred on U. S. 13 two miles north of Snow Hill, King's report showed.

Idaho's Steve Symms, agreed. The three defectors, added to the happy Democratic minority, killed the resolution.

Stockman came trotting over from the House side of the Capitol when he learned of unexpected trouble in the Senate but had no solution. The White House inexplicably never even engaged the problem. President Reagan could have averted the embarrassment with a few phone calls to Republican senators (Symms said as much). From the hospital, Reagan would have been irresistible.

All the commotion is about spending and revenue projections for two and three years hence. Thus, Stockman must now find programs to show reductions in the out years, needlessly revving up still more enemies that the Reagan program does not need.

But the real menace is what budget-balance worship does to tax reduction. Another freshman Republican member on the budget committee, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, perceived this. "Do you realize," he asked Symms after the vote, "that you just voted to kill Kemp-Roth?"

The day before the Senate Budget Committee ran amuck, Rep. Jack Kemp had declared that Republicans no longer worshiped at the shrine of the balanced budget. In truth, however, Republican lawmakers have been bowing down to the old idol for the past several weeks, goaded by the Democrats. The folly that led Herbert Hoover to raise tax rates amidst depression has not died in the Grand Old Party. The need for a recuperated Ronald Reagan, who was elected on promises of economic growth through tax cuts and not a balanced budget, was dramatized once again last week.

Union, three-fourths of the parents rated the schools good or excellent.

Perhaps these achievements are matched in other urban school systems. If so, let us sing their praises also. We have heard about all we truly need to hear about student pregnancies, drug abuse, vandalism, violence, teacher strikes and indifferent academic achievement in the public schools. Last week we read the findings of Dr. James Coleman, to the effect that private schools are better. Maybe so. But public schools don't have to be inferior. Jacksonville proves the point.

stitches for adorning knit and crochet projects. Why not make a set of place mats in a knitted quarter stitch or a single crochet stitch and attach a cluster of three or more flowers in one corner? Or arrange a semi-circle of them on the yoke of a knit or crochet sweater or blouse.

The flowers could be tied on or stitched to plastic or traditional needlepoint canvas or to macrame pieces. Combine them with embroidery stitches on pillows, pocketbooks, eyeglass cases — the list is endless. Just let your imagination go.

Another simple flower that combines well with this idea is the embroidered Lazy Daisy stitch. To work this, bring the needle up through the fabric or canvas at a point that is to be the center of the flower. Leave a loop on top of the fabric and take the needle back down through the fabric very close to the point where it was brought up. Next bring the needle up just below the center of the loop, cross over the top of the loop and take the needle back to the wrong side of the fabric, thus working one "petal." Work as many petals as desired.

Aging GI's In Bradley Tribute

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The old GI stopped at the coffin of Omar N. Bradley, put on an overseas cap, stood at attention, saluted smartly and then marched off.

"I always said that if I didn't die first, I'd come to the old man's funeral," said S.M. Smith, 69, a retired truck driver from College Park, Md., who drove a jeep as a private first class during World War II.

Old GIs who served with Bradley in Europe and Americans not yet born when he commanded an army of 1.3 million men joined dignitaries to pay their respects to the old soldier, last of the nation's five-star generals. He died Wednesday in New York of a heart attack at age 88.

Bradley, a master military tactician and a hero to the GIs who fought under him, was receiving a soldier's funeral today at the Washington Cathedral and a hero's burial in Arlington National Cemetery, on a hillside overlooking the Pentagon. The honors included a horse-drawn caisson bearing the body through the streets of the capital.

A stream of Americans from all walks of life came to the cathedral where Bradley lay in repose overnight, his flag-draped coffin attended by servicemen from each of the four military branches.

Among the mourners were FBI Director William Webster, Averell Harriman, America's wartime ambassador to Moscow, and former Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo. The soft-spoken, lanky Bradley was a fellow Missourian, son of a schoolteacher in the little town of Clark, Mo.

Bradley's flag — five big stars against a field of red — dipped in tribute when his body was brought to Washington aboard a presidential jetliner Monday from Fort Bliss, Texas, his last post, where he had lived the past four years. More than 6,000 people, including senators, soldiers and veterans, had paid their last respects during a four-day vigil at Fort Bliss.

At Andrews Air Force Base in suburban Maryland, an honor guard stood at attention as eight servicemen carried the casket under gray clouds and 19 guns boomed in tribute. An Air Force band played "Nearer My God to Thee."

Bradley's widow, Kitty, wearing a black veil, leaned on the arm of Air Force Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Bradley was known as a friend of the foot soldier, the "GI's general," since he plotted ways to win battles with the least possible loss of American lives.

He rarely raised his voice. In marked contrast to the flamboyant Gen. George Patton, Bradley wore simple combat clothes, his trousers stuffed into his boots.

"I'll see you on the beaches," he told his men before the invasion of Normandy, and he was there on June 6, 1944, when 156,000 Allied forces crossed the English channel to France to free Europe from the Nazis.

He shared with only four other soldiers the title of "general of the Army" and wore the five stars that went with it. The others were Dwight Eisenhower, H.H. Arnold, Douglas MacArthur and George C. Marshall. All are dead.

He finished 44th in the West Point Class of 1915, known as "the class the stars" because it produced 30 World War II generals. But Bradley thought his military career was over when he never was sent outside the country in World War I.

But in World War II, he made a name for himself as the leader of the 2nd Corps when he smashed through the Nazi's Afrika Korps and, with the British, ended the war in Africa.

He commanded first a division, then a corps, then an army and finally a group of armies — in charge of 1.3 million men, the largest American force ever assembled. Later, he served as the first chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Winners Are Named In Sidewalk Art Show

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Robert Dick, a graduate student in the School of Art, East Carolina Univrsity, is the 1981 winner of the Best-in-Show award of the Sidewalk Art Show of the Greenville Museum of Art.

His award winning work is a large acrylic and oil painting entitled "Reep and Pealeage." This painting, Dick says "is inspired by two of my mentors, one of my teachers here at ECU, Ed Reep, and the early 19th century painter Raphael Peale."

Dick, a native of Birmingham, Alabama, is due to graduate from ECU in May with the MFA degree in painting. "My plans at this time include looking for a teaching position," Dick commented.

This year, an added category was that of an honorary award, "The Peoples Choice" award based on votes registered by viewers for what they considered their favorite work of art. This went to an untitled limestone sculpture by Kris Gunderson.

Also, best-in-show awards were given to a work chosen by the juror from among students in grades 10-12 and in grades 7-9. The best-in-show for grades 10-12 went to Neil Kopping for "Backwards," and the award for grades 7-9 went to David Lister for "Cool, Ma."

Collision Is Investigated

Hester Shivers Ellison of 1404 West Sixth St. was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of a 5:30 p.m. collision yesterday on Greenville Boulevard, just east of the Highland Drive intersection.

Police Department investigators reported the Ellison car collided with a vehicle driven by Charleene Clark Boyd of 117 Greenwood Dr., causing $400 damage to each of the two cars and injuring a passenger in the Boyd vehicle.

Posed As Priest In Robbing Of Homes

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A man who posed as a Catholic priest to gain entry to two jewelers' homes has been convicted of aggravated robbery by a Golden District Court jury.

After 10 hours of deliberation Monday, the jury found Arthur Watson, 53, guilty of two 1978 heists in Lakewood and Evergreen, Colo. Watson reportedly dressed as a priest and — calling himself "Father Monahan" — stole jewels with an estimated value of $17,000.

Watson now is serving three concurrent 20-year sentences in federal prison for bank robberies in North Carolina. He also was convicted recently in Colorado Springs of being a habitual criminal, which normally carries a life sentence.

Watson, whom a Jefferson County deputy district attorney described as "probably the most notorious criminal in Colorado," once was sentenced to death for the 1956 murder of a Wheat Ridge security man. The sentence later was commuted and he was released.

In the latest trial, defense attorney Alexander Garlin tried to show Watson had been led into the priest scheme by accomplices, who joined him in the robberies once he gained entry to the houses. Garlin argued that Watson thought he was an actor playing the part of a robber to help the jewelers collect theft insurance.

But prosecutors Joseph Mackey and Robert Ruddy pointed out that the jewelers didn't even have enough insurance to cover their losses.

After Monday's verdict, Watson requested immediate sentencing and was given a term of 16 to 20 years on the robbery charge.

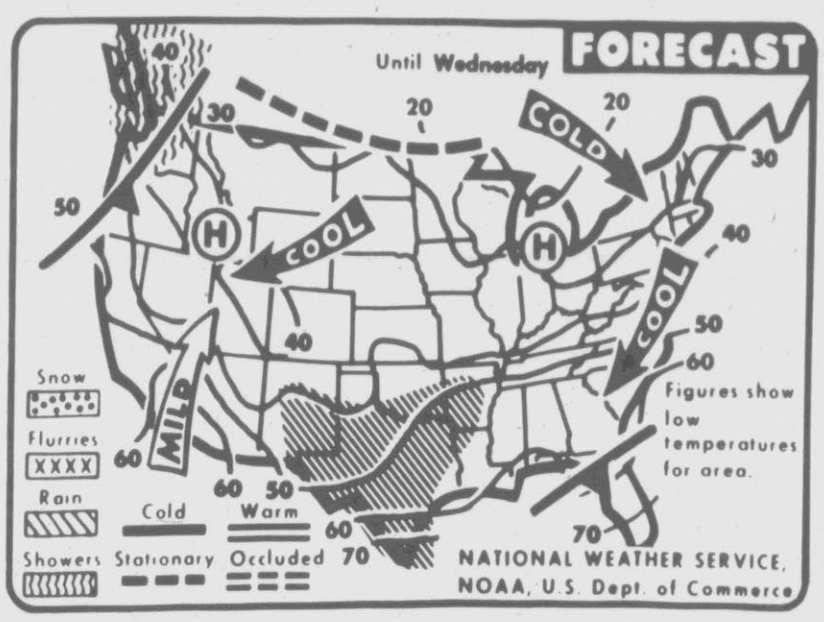
How's The Weather?



WEATHER FORECAST — Rain is expected in the forecast period (until Wednesday morning) for the south-central states. Warm weather is forecast for the southwest and Florida. Most of the country will be colder. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press

Drier weather is on the way, reports the National Weather Service.

High pressure centered over northern New England continued to pump cool air into North Carolina during the night on the heels of a moist easterly wind flow.

Most of the state experienced cloudy skies and there was even some patchy drizzle and fog. Early morning satellite pictures showed that the extreme western tip of the state was the only area free of the thick blanket of cloudiness.

Temperatures before dawn were in the upper 40s and low 50s at most reporting stations. It was a little warmer on the Outer Banks. At Cape Hatteras the mercury hovered in the low 60s.

But a change in the weather is on the way. A cold front that was in the Mississippi Valley early this morning will move steadily eastward and cross North Carolina this afternoon and tonight.

As the front approaches our western border today, southerly winds will gradually spread over the region and push most of our low cloudiness and drizzle out to sea.

The front will trigger some shower and thundershower activity in the mountains that will move into the piedmont and coastal and coastal plain as the day progresses. The shower activity will be scattered, so some areas may receive no rain at all.

As the cold front moves offshore late tonight, brisk northwesterly winds will push drier and cooler air into North Carolina. The showers will end in the west by evening but continue in the coastal plain until tonight.

Wednesday will be a mostly sunny day except for some lingering cloudiness near the coast.

Highs today will be mostly in the 70s. Lows tonight will range from the 30s in the northern mountains to the low 50s in the southeast. Highs Wednesday are going to be in the 60s except for some 50s in the higher mountains.

Along the beaches, today will be cloudy with patchy drizzle and fog mainly this morning. There is a chance of showers or thundershowers late this afternoon and tonight.

Partly cloudy weather and rather brisk winds are on tap for Wednesday. Highs today will be near 70. Highs on Wednesday will be in the 60s.

Charlotte Paper Shares In Pulitzer Prize Honor

NEW YORK (AP) — An author who committed suicide while his novel went ignored and a small-town newspaper that found an erupting volcano in its back yard have been awarded Pulitzer Prizes for their contributions to the arts and journalism.

"I'm very proud and overwhelmed," said Thelma Toole, mother of the late John Kennedy Toole, winner of the 1981 prize for fiction for the comic novel "A Confederacy of Dunces."

The 29-member staff of the Longview (Wash.) Daily News "erupted in cheers" when it heard its coverage of the eruption of Mount St. Helens had won them the prize for general reporting.

"It's something that every journalist dreams about, but very few small papers have a chance to have that dream come true," said Bob Gaston, managing editor of the 27,500-circulation paper.

Rich Oppel, editor of the Charlotte (N.C.) Observer, was doused with champagne Monday after the announcement that the newspaper had received the coveted gold medal for public service in journalism for its series "Brown Lung: A Case of Deadly Neglect."

The series of 22 articles charged government and industry with ignoring the disease caused by cotton dust in textile plants, one of state's leading industries.

The Pulitzers, awarded annually by Columbia University on the recommendation of a jury, were endowed by Joseph Pulitzer, late publisher of the old New York World. Except for the public service award, which carries a gold medal, winners receive $1,000.

"A Confederacy of Dunces," was still unpublished when Toole committed suicide in 1969 at the age of 32. After his death, his mother, unable to win the interest of publishers, took the book to novelist Walker Percy. He persuaded the Louisiana State University Press to publish it last year.

The Longview Daily News wrote more than 1,500 stories about its deadly neighbor between July and December, said Gaston. After the May 18 blast that left 61 dead or missing, reporters "trudged through mudflows and climbed across rooftops for interviews," the citation said.

The international reporting award went to Shirley Christian of the Miami Herald for her coverage of events in El Salvador and other Latin American countries, including the deaths of American church workers in El Salvador.

New York Times writers took two Pulitzers.

Houston correspondent John M. Crewdson, who "walked across the Mexican desert at night with smugglers," received the national reporting award for a series on the treatment of illegal immigrants which led to a Justice Department investigation.

Times sports columnist Dave Anderson was honored for distinguished commentary.

Clark Hallas and Robert B. Lowe of the Arizona Daily Star received the prize for special local reporting for their investigation of the sports department at the University of Arizona.

The prize for editorial cartooning went to Mike Peters of the Dayton (Ohio) Daily News, while the award for spot news photography went to Larry C. Price of the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram, who took extensive pictures of a firing squad in Liberia that executed members of the ousted Liberian government.

Taro Yamasaki of the Detroit Free Press was honored for feature photography for photos taken inside a state prison; Jonathan Yardley, book reviewer of the Washington Star, received the prize for criticism; and Janet Cooke of the Washington Post was honored for feature writing for her report on an 8-year-old heroin addict.

The Pulitzer board gave the history prize to Lawrence A. Cremin's "American Education: the National Experience, 1783-1876;" the biography award to Robert K. Massie's "Peter the Great: His Life and World," on the life of one of Russia's greatest czars; the poetry prize to "The Morning of the Poem," by James Schuyler, and the award for general non-fiction to "Fin-de-Siecle Vienna: Politics and Culture," by Carl E. Schorske.

The play which won the 1981 drama award, "Crimes of the Heart" by Beth Henley, had been seen in regional theaters in several cities before it had a month's run at the off-Broadway Manhattan Theater Club last early this year. The play, to debut on Broadway this fall, concerns three eccentric sisters in a small Mississippi town.

No awards were made by the Pulitzer Prize Board this year for editorial writing or for a musical composition by an American. It was the first time in 46 years that editorial nominees were passed over, and the first time in 16 years that the music prize went unclaimed.

The announcement by President Michael Sovern of Columbia University made no comment on the missing editorial award, but said the music award was passed "on the recommendation of the nominating jury."

INSIDE THE CRATER — The lava dome inside the crater of Mount St. Helens continues to grow larger Monday as snow covers most of the volcano. Farm Scene

By MIKE REGANS
Assoc. Agri. Ext. Agent

A major cause of baby pig deaths in today's swine operations is starvation due to milking problems in the sows or gilts. A two-year study of a large number of swine herds showed that 20 percent of death losses in the farrowing house occurred as a result of starvation. Elimination of milking problems could increase the average litter size by one-half or more pigs.

Milking problems in swine herds are characterized by a disease complex known as MMA. The name MMA is an abbreviation for the clinical signs mastitis (inflammation of ther mammary gland), metritis (inflammation of the uterus), and agalactia (no milk). Symptoms of MMA vary but usually some or all of the mammary glands are hard and fevered. Sows may refuse to eat or drink, are reluctant to move about, are usually constipated, and may refuse to let the pigs nurse. Lactation may return to normal but usually it is too late to save pigs which have become dehydrated and die of starvation. An affected sow may lactate normally with her next litter.

The cause of MMA is unknown but studies have shown that genetics, imbalance of hormones, environment, nutrition and bacterial infection are factors.

Genetics may be involved since stress-susceptible lines have more problems than stress resistant lines. Good husbandry practices that reduce stress and keep sows from getting excited during or near farowing are important in preventing MMA. Regularity of feeding, no excess or strange noise and familiarity with the people in the farrowing house will all help reduce stress to the sow. Contented, comfortable sows have fewer milking problems.

Normal lactation depends on a sequence of events, beginning with the production and release of several hormones. Anything that changes this process will interfere with milk production. Oxytocin, commonly known as POP, can be injected to stimulate the let down of milk. Several injections may be necessary and can be given every two to four hours. Oxytocin is a treatment for agalactia and should not be used as a preventive measure. At farrowing, oxytocin should not be used until one or more pigs have been born and if symptoms, such as straining without delivery indicate that a pig is blocking the birth canal.

Environmental conditions in the farrowing house such as temperature and humidity are important factors to consider in preventing MMA. Hot weather seems to cause more milking problems. The sow's comfort range is 65-75 degrees Fahrenheit. Baby pigs require temperatures 20-25 degrees higher so careful placement of supplemental heat sources is necessary.

Feeding and condition of the sow during gestation is important in preventing MMA. Sows should gain 30-60 pounds and gilts 70-100 pounds during gestation. A bulky ration with 400-500 pounds of oats or wheat bran per ton of feed will have a laxative effect and help prevent constipation. The bulky ration should be fed from five to seven days before farrowing until five to seven days after farrowing. Water should always be fresh and available.

Bacterial infection can best be prevented by good sanitation. The farrowing house should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before sows are moved into farrowing stalls. Sows should be thoroughly washed, especially the sow's underline. All-in-all, all-out production system is recommended.

Good management practices can prevent MMA and reduce baby pig losses, which in turn reduces production cost per sow.

Lava Dome Is Seen Growing

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Storm clouds rolled back to give scientists their first view of a growing lava dome inside restless Mount St. Helens, which has been rumbling with volcanic activity since an eruption last Friday.

A dozen scientists flew into the crater Monday to explore the greatly changed dome after being barred from the area for 16 days because of inclement weather. They planned to return today.

Although there was only low-level seismic activity, an eruption alert remained in effect.

The dome was formed by molten rock oozing into the crater where it hardened into a mound. Before Friday's eruption, it measured approximately 900 feet in diameter, with the elongation in the east-west direction. The height was put at 400 feet.

But scientists who measured the dome Monday said the elongation had changed, with about 240 feet of new growth along the north-south axis. It was not immediately known if the dome had grown taller, they said.

"The dome is elongated north-south," said U.S. Geological Survey geologist Susan Russell-Robinson. "The new growth has occurred to the north ... the new growth has extended across an east-west fracture ... which has steaming activity along it.

"The outward end of the growth is kind of toe-like. It's like it moved outward in a flowing motion ... and it has gentle ridges in it, like soft ice cream."

While skies were clear Monday, there was "fairly good snow cover" inside the crater, Ms. Russell-Robinson said, and the melting snow made walking difficult for the scientists. She said there was some concern since slipping and sliding would make escape more difficult if the volcano turned violent.

Restricted zones around the mountain remained closed, keeping most people at least 20 miles away.

Private Property Week Set

April 19-25 has been designated by Mayor Don McGlohon as Private Property Week.

He urged residents "to join the Greenville-Pitt County Board of Realtors and all the members of the National Association of Realtors who are setting aside this special time to remind us all that we are a free people with the right to own real property and the obligation to protect that right."

He said in his proclamation, "of all the rights we have, one of the most precious is the right to acquire real property and to own it, use it or transfer it as we see fit, without interference, as long as we do not infringe on the rights of others."

He said "in many countries where citizens are denied the right to own real estate, they are also denied such rights as free speech, peaceful assembly and voting for the candiates of their choice — privileges Americans often take for granted."

The Board of Realtors, in conjunction with Realtors and Realtor-Associates throughout the nation, are observing the week, McGlohon noted, "a tradition established in 1956 to mark the celebration of private property ownership, and the protection of the rights that attend this ownership."

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices continued to fall today amid concern over rising interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which fell 7.11 points Monday, slid another 4.51 points to 988.65 by noon.

Losers held an edge of nearly 2-1 over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

There were mixed interest rate signals today.

Yields on Treasury bills and long-term government bonds fell.

Citibank, the nation's second-largest commercial bank, left its prime lending rate unchanged at 17 percent. But No. 5 Morgan Guaranty Trust joined several other banks and raised its prime rate one-half percentage point to 17.5 percent.

The move to a higher prime rate began Friday and spread Monday.

The NYSE's composite index lost .30 to 76.64. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off 3.68 at 359.42.

Big Board volume reached 22.19 million shares over the first two hours, up from 21.93 million in the comparable period Monday.

GREENVILLE FIREMAN HURT ... Fellow firemen give aid to firefighter Berry Sullivan, injured while fighting a fire at 1702 South Elm St. early yesterday afternoon. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Fireman Hurt Fighting Blaze

A 12:57 p.m. fire caused heavy damage to a house at 1702 South Elm St. yesterday, and one fireman was injured battling the blaze.

Fire-Rescue Department officials said the fire apparently started from an electrical short circuit in a junction box in the attic. The fire spread over the attic and the rear portion of the home, resulting in heavy fire, smoke and water damage.

Firefighter Berry Sullivan, according to spokesmen, was injured when a folding stair-way into the attic came apart, causing Sullivan to fall. He was taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital where he was treated for a strained shoulder and bruises, and released.

Fire units remained at the scene for more than two and a half hours.

No Partnership For Chrysler

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. says it won't push for a merger with No. 2 Ford Motor Co., but the ailing automaker still thinks such partnerships will prove necessary for the industry.

Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca said Monday the company had no plans to pursue the merger proposal revealed by Ford last week. Ford said a plan presented on behalf of Chrysler had been rejected by Ford's directors.

The federal Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board ordered the company to investigate mergers when the panel agreed to $400 million in new loan guarantees. Iacocca says he thinks the future of the industry "will of necessity include such partnerships."

Hunt Six In Assault Case

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Durham County lawmen plan to continue searching today for six men who allegedly assaulted four sunbathers Sunday afternoon, leaving one man in critical condition.

Ronald Antonevitch, 46, was reported in critical condition Monday night in the surgical intensive care unit of North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

Maj. A.V. Utley of the Durham County Sheriff's Department said four men and two women came to the Little River on Sunday and shouted at sunbathers, "We're going to beat some faggots."

The victims said the fist and stick beatings occurred as at least 10 men watched and did nothing.

Energy Plan

The Greenville energy plan "Proposition E: A Plan for Greenville's Energy Future," will be presented for review by the Greenville Utilities Commission at its regular meeting at 7:30 tonight at the Utilities Building.

According to Reese Helms, manager of GUC's Office of Energy Conservation and Management, components of Proposition E focus on specific actions that are appropriate for the Greenville area and that would make the community more self-reliant in meeting its energy needs.

He said information gathered during the project indicates that, although Greenville currently relies almost entirely on energy types that are produced outside the area, a substantial amount of that energy could be saved through conservation and efficiency measures. Helms added that energy could also be produced using alternative and renewable energy sources such as solar, wood, peat, municipal refuse and other energy supplies that are available locally.

Primary recommendations within Proposition E include: reduce energy consumption in local government operations, increase the use of alternative energy resources in the community, develop energy efficient land use practices, increase energy efficiency in the private sector, and enhance and protect the community's well-being through energy self-reliance and energy preparedness.

Each of the recommendations contains proposals for specific action that can be taken by the city, GUC, other community organizations and by individual citizens.

The energy plan was sponsored in part through a research contract with the U. S. Department of Energy. The two-year project has involved work by GUC staff, state and local technical advisors, and over 100 citizen volunteers.

A number of other items are on the agenda for tonight's meeting, including a status report on the city's 201 Facilities Plan, a report on the transfer of part of the city's energy needs to Carolina Power and Light Co., the consideration of adjustments to service fees and charges, and consideration of a number of resolutions and bid proposals.

Jail Terms In Drug Sale

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The first five of more than 130 students arrested in a drug crackdown by narcotics agents last year have been sentenced to spend time in county jail this summer as part of their punishment for selling marijuana to undercover agents.

The students, who were sentenced Monday, were ordered to report back to Superior Court on May 18 to learn what part of their summer vacation they will spend behind bars.

Superior Court Judge Tony Brannon said the students should be put to work in the jail or in the community as part of their sentence.

Pleading guilty to common law solicitation to commit a felony were James Thomas Crisman, 17, of Hope Mills; Ameenie Courie, 17, a Terry Sanford High School senior; William F. Rowe, 18, of Douglas Byrd High School; Donna R. Baker, 19, a former Terry Sanford junior now attending Fayetteville Technical Institute; and Don Smith, 17, a junior at E.E. Smith High School.

All but Crisman will serve 14-day jail terms. Crisman will serve 60 days.

Brannon is invoking split sentencing in each defendant's case, giving the students long periods of probation and ordering them to repay money used by the narcotics agents to buy drugs.

NO QUORUM

The Redevelopment Commission's regular April meeting was not held Monday night due to lack of a quorum as three members of the board were out of town.

The commission will reschedule a special meeting to consider the April agenda items.

Columbia .....

Columbia was to enter U.S. air space near Big Sur, coast over desert towns like Buttonwillow and Mojave, pass over the lake bed at supersonic speed to drain away energy and circle back on a final and dramatic approach.

Young, maneuvering through a control stick from about 40,000 feet down, was to fly the now-powerless 80-ton craft like gigantic glider to a landing on a 5.2-mile-long runway where there is plenty of room for error — to swerve, skid or overshoot.

More than 100,000 people were expected to crowd viewing areas to watch the historic return.

While engineers are confident of Columbia's design, there are some unknowns about flying a winged craft from orbit to Earth.

"Re-entry is a whole new field in terms of the thermal conditions, the dynamics, the stability ands control," said John Yardley, NASA's shuttle project manager. "It's an area where there isn't much experience. We've run more wind tunnel tests on this than any airplane ever built. We've done everything possible, and we've consulted every expert in the world. But, you know, it's just an unknown area."

Young and Crippen had only one regret: They'd like to stay up longer.

"The only thing bad is we're going to have to come down," said Young, making his shortest space flight.

The space travelers have enjoyed themselves on a remarkably trouble-free flight since their fiery departure from Earth on Sunday.

"The spaceship is just performing beautifully," Young told Vice President George Bush in a spacecraft-to-White House radio hookup Monday.

Marijuana On Fishing Trawler

SNEADS FERRY, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Customs Service officers seized a large quantity of marijuana late Monday after boarding a stranded and unmanned 70-foot fishing trawler in the bay at Sneads Ferry.

Gil Payette, district patrol director for the service, said there was "dope in the head, in the galley, in the engine room, and there's dope everywhere."

The boat, the "Dudley" registered out of Beaufort, N.C., was watched throughout the day after it moored at some pilings in the bay, apparently sometime after midnight.

Agents tried to pilot the boat to Wilmington for unloading but were stymied by steering problems. They called for a Coast Guard cutter to tow the vessel.

Payette said the vessel also contained six parrots in cages. The Department of Agriculture was advised because importing exotic birds without permission is illegal.

The boarding of the boat came just a day after other agents seized a single-engine airplane loaded with 200 to 250 pounds of marijuana at the New Hanover County Airport near Wilmington.

Payette said a Customs Service aircraft tailed the 1979 Cessna 210 after it left the Caribbean area earlier Sunday.

The back seat and luggage compartment of the plane were crammed with bundles of marijuana wrapped in brown paper inside white plastic garbage bags, Payette said.

Two men aboard the plane, William Arthur Anthony Jr., 27, of Danbury, Conn., and Kenneth Lipman, 34, of Long Island, N.Y., were charged with two counts each of trafficking in marijuana under state laws.

North Carolina law sets the penalty at a fine of $25,000 plus a minimum sentence of three years without parole. The maximum penalty is both fine and 10 years imprisonment.

Customs Service officials said they suspected the plane was attempting to refuel when it landed at about 8:30 p.m. Sunday. The Customs Service airplane, which followed with its lights out to avoid detection, landed shortly afterward.

City Clerk Named Officer

Lois Worthington, Greenville City Clerk, was recently elected second vice president of the North Carolina Association of Municipal Clerks.

Mrs. Worthington's election took place at the association's fourth annual Spring Conference, held at the Blockade Runner, Wrightsville Beach.

Former Gov. Bob Scott was the featured banquet speaker.

Blue Jays Keep Home Opener Streak Alive By Beating Yankees

By The Associated Press

Toronto Manager Bobby Mattick says he has a special liking for Jim Clancy because "he's got guts. He can throw out of jams."

On Monday, though, Clancy threw into one in the eighth inning. It was Roy Lee Jackson who got him out of it with a double-play pitch to Bobby Murcer, helping the Blue Jays beat the New York Yankees 5-1.

It was the Blue Jays' fifth home-opening victory in their five years in the American League. In two other AL games, Baltimore beat Boston 5-1 and Oakland edged California 3-2 in the Angels' home opener. Detroit's game at Kansas City was rained out.

The Yanks loaded the bases with one out in the eighth on a single and two walks. So Jackson, acquired from the New York Mets in the off-season, replaced Clancy and lowered the boom on the Yanks.

"Roy throws a sinker and I thought it was easier for a right-hander to pitch to a left-handed hitter, especially when he throws a sinker," said Mattick. "Jackson did a real good job."

So did Clancy, the first time he worked his way into a jam. He'd already given up one run on Jerry Mumphrey's single and Dave Winfield's double in the first inning when two consecutive walks brought Jim Spencer to the plate with the bases loaded and two away. This time, Clancy took care of matters, inducing Spencer to ground to second.

Before he was yanked, Clancy checked the Yanks on four hits in 7 1-3 innings, retiring 14 consecutive batters in one stretch.

"You've got to get to Clancy early," said Rick Cerone, now the Yanks' catcher but, a few years back, Clancy's batterymate. "We just let him off the hook. We were only one pitch away from getting him out of the game. You just can't let a pitcher like him get in his groove."

"I've always been like that," said Clancy. "It takes me a bit of time to get my rhythm ... In the beginning I was rushing but Ernie (Whitt, the Toronto catcher) told me to take my time, pull my leg back and let my arm catch up. When Mattick came out he told me to take it easy, to calm down."

Al Woods and Alfredo Griffin led the Toronto attack. Wood had a two-run single in a three-run fourth inning and Griffin tripled for two runs in the seventh.

Orioles 5, Red Sox 1

Pinch-hitter Jose Morales' two-out bases-loaded single broke a ninth-inning tie and triggered a four-run burst that carried Baltimore past the Red Sox.

Ken Singleton opened the ninth against rookie Boston pitcher Steve Crawford with a double. Tom Burgmeier took over and got into a bases-loaded jam on an error and Gary Roenicke's infield hit. Burgmeier got two outs before Morales grounded a single under his glove for two runs. Two more scored on a double steal and Rich Dauer's double.

"I've mastered and accomplished everything as a pinch-hitter," Morales said. "It's not tough for me to come up in tight situations. I always prepare myself mentally. I know what my role is and I work at it. I just want to hit."

"I should've had it," Burgmeier said of Morales' grounder. "The ball came out of the shadows and I thought it was hit harder than it was. But I still thought I had it. It just hit off the top of the glove and went through."

A's 3, Angels 2

Oakland Manager Billy Martin used a relief pitcher for a change — the first time in five games — and it nearly cost him. But Tony Armas came through with his third home run of the season, a two-run shot in the eighth, to give the unbeaten A's their victory.

The Angels went on top 2-1 lead in the seventh when reliever Jeff Jones, one of four Oakland pitchers in the game and the winner, hit Dan Ford with a bases-loaded pitch.

ECU Women Ranked No. 1

East Carolina's Lady Pirate softball team has been ranked first in the nation, according to the Women's Collegeiate Sports Rankings Service.

Alita Dillon's 30-3 Lady Pirates were ranked first on Friday, prior to the prestigeous N.C. State Invitational Tournament.

East Carolina won that event, downing Florida State in the finals. The tournament had six of the top ten teams in the field.

Besides East Carolina in the field were number two ranked Florida State, number three ranked Florida, number four ranked N.C. State, number seven ranked Northern Kentucky, and number ten ranked North Carolina.

The ranking is believed to be the first time any team from East Carolina has been ranked number one during the regular season.

There are approximately 90 collegiate teams which play slow-pitch softball, and North Carolina and Florida are the two states in which slow-pitch dominates.

The top ten in order are: East Carolina (23-2 at the time of ranking); 2. Florida State (29-5); 3. Florida (22-5); 4. N.C. State (14-6); 5. Pfeiffer (14-0); 6. Elon (10-2); 7. Northern Kentucky (12-4); 8. Auburn (10-4); 9. Florida Southern (7-3); 10. North Carolina (25-12).

The poll is taken weekly.

East Carolina returns to action today, traveling to North Carolina. Their final home game of the year is Friday, against the N.C. State Wolfpack at 3 p.m.

SW Edgecombe.... 63

PINETOPS — Greene Central won eight firsts, led by double-winners John Washington and Michael Pridgen, as the Rams edged Southwest Edgecombe, 69-63, Monday afternoon in an Eastern Carolina Conference track meet.

The Rams lost the final three events of the day — the 200 meter dash, the 3,200 meter run and the 1,600 relay — but had already built up enough of a lead to hold on for the victory.

Leading the way for Greene Central were Washington and Pridgen. Washington won both the shot put (40-4) and the discus (116-10) while Pridgen came home first in the 1,600-meter run (4:58.06) and the 800-meter dash (2:12.88).

Hawkins Won't Play

Ernie Schwarz, East Carolina University's faculty athletic chairman, has announced that Mike Hawkins, the leading returning rusher on the Pirate football team, will not be eligible for further competition.

A review of the 1977 season's NCAA report forms showed that Hawkins participated in five games and had stats in two contests during that year. Coach Ed Emory had earlier said that a review of game films did not show Hawkins.

However, Schwarz ruled that Hawkins indeed had played and therefore had used up his eligibilty.

Hawkins, in his ECU career, rushed 137 times for 720 yards and six touchdowns, averaging 5.3 yards a carry. He rushed for 415 yards and four touchdowns on 78 carries last season.

Carlton Shuts Down Pirates For Phils

By The Associated Press

Steve Carlton is still the strong, silent type. That is, his left arm is still strong and Carlton himself is still silent.

The 1980 National League Cy Young Award winner earned his first victory of the new season Monday night, scattering nine hits as the world champion Philadelphia Phillies won their home opener 5-1 over the Pittsburgh Pirates before a crowd of 60,404.

"When we get to talk about Lefty's (Carlton's) performances they all run together, they're all so good," said Manager Dallas Green. "He shut down a Pirate team that can swing the bats. And when you do that, you're doing something."

In the only other National League games, the unbeaten Los Angeles Dodgers edged the San Francisco Giants 4-3, the Atlanta Braves nipped the winless Houston Astros 2-1 in 10 innings and the Cincinnati Reds trounced the San Diego Padres 7-1.

The Phillies received their gold World Series rings before the game. Then they went out and lashed 11 hits to back Carlton's one-walk, five-strikeout pitching. He was in trouble in just one inning, the sixth, but escaped when right fielder Lonnie Smith caught a fly ball and threw out Bill Madlock trying to advance to third.

"He threw very hard," said catcher Bob Boone. "His slider was very sharp tonight."

The Phillies took a 3-0 lead in the second inning against John Candelaria. Manny Trillo walked and one out later Larry Bowa doubled. Bob Boone singled Trillo home, with Bowa going to third. Carlton grounded to first base and Bowa scored ahead of Bill Robinson's throw. Smith forced Carlton at second but Boone scored when shortstop Tim Foli, thinking it was the third out, flipped the ball to Carlton as he rounded the bag.

Dodgers 4, Giants 3

Pinch hitter Jay Johnstone singled home the tie-breaking run in a three-run fourth-inning rally. The Dodgers ran their record to 4-0 despite some wildness on the part of starter Bob Welch and three relievers, who issued eight walks. The triumph went to rookie Dave Stewart, the first of his major league career. With one out in the Los Angeles fourth and the Dodgers trailing 3-1, Ron Cey, Pedro Guerrero and Mike Scioscia got consecutive singles off Al Ripley. Scioscia's single was an infield hit and Cey scored from third when second baseman Joe Morgan threw wildly past first. Guerrero went to third on the play and scored on a wild pitch, and one out later Johnstone singled to break the tie. He was the first pinch hitter used by the Dodgers this season.

Braves 2, Astros 1

Rookie Rufino Linares, batting .067 with only a bunt single in 15 previous at-bats, stroked a two-out, run-scoring single in the top of the 10th inning off Houston relief ace Joe Sambito to hand the defending NL West champion Astros their fourth straight loss.

Rafael Ramirez opened the 10th with a single and was sacrificed to second. With two out, Sambito intentionally walked Glenn Hubbard but Linares spoiled the strategy by lacing an 0-2 pitch to right field for the game-winning hit.

"I know I can hit, so I was not worried," Linares said. "Everyone was telling me I could do it, so there was no reason to worry."

Phil Niekro, Atlanta's 42-year-old knuckleballer, went 82-3 innings, allowing six hits and one run. He also singled home the Braves' first run in the second inning.

Reds 7, Padres 1

Johnny Bench slammed a three-run homer and Dan Driessen and Ray Knight hit solo shots for Cincinnati. An opening-night crowd of 36,391 in San Diego saw Cincinnati starter Tom Seaver fan five batters to give him 2,997 strikeouts for his career. He is seeking to become the fifth pitcher in major league history to record 3,000 strikeouts. The 36-year-old Seaver allowed three hits and one run in eight innings.

"He's such a master, it's tough for these young guys to step up and face a Tom Seaver," said Bench. "Seaver always knows what he's doing. He spotted the ball well and started to coast when he got the five-run lead."

Prideful Phillies

Philadelphia Phillies Pete Rose, left, and Larry Bowa show off their World Series Championships rings which they received before Monday night's home opener in Philadelphia. For Rose, it was his third championship ring, and for Bowa, his first. The Phillies beat the Pirates, 5-1, in the game that followed. (AP Laserphoto)

Baseball Finances: How Healthy Is The Situation For The Owners

EDITOR'S NOTE: Baseball's team owners say free agency and rising salaries could ruin them. The players don't buy that, and a strike could be the result. Part I (Baseball Finances-State of the Game) of a series of AP analyses examines the state of baseball's finances.

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

It took 98 years for the Philadelphia Phillies to become baseball champions. Owner Ruly Carpenter's family has been backing the club through thick and thin — mostly thin — since 1943. Now, instead of basking in the glory, Carpenter wants out.

"The primary reason for the decision to sell," said Carpenter, "is that it has become apparent to me that some deeply ingrained philosophical differences exist between the Carpenter family and some of the other owners as to how the baseball business has been conducted."

Carpenter's view reflects a concern among owners that baseball is getting to be bad business. Some owners feel threatened by the rising salaries caused by free agency and arbitration. Many cringed when Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner signed an unsung outfielder, Claudell Washington, to a five-year, $3.5 million contract.

But how bad is baseball's financial condition?

"On the one hand, baseball's popularity has never been higher. But in the gloomy science of economics, we don't do as well," said Baseball Commisioner Bowie Kuhn. He said about half the 26 clubs lost money in 1980 but wouldn't reveal which. Most don't disclose figures.

But after interviews with officials, The Associated Press found that the teams with operating deficits in 1980 were Cleveland, Chicago White Sox, Minnesota, Oakland, Seattle, Texas, Chicago Cubs, New York Mets, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Atlanta, San Diego and San Francisco.

San Diego owner Ray Kroc said his team lost $2.7 million. The Chicago Cubs informed their stockholders that the club lost $1.78 million. The Braves announced their operating losses at $3.4 million.

The Phillies drew 2.65 million fans, second highest in baseball, last year. But they needed the playoffs and the World Series to make a pre-tax profit of $2.1 million, according to Bill Giles, executive vice president. Otherwise, he said, the team would have broken even.

As Carpenter learned, owners are not of one mind about how to cope with the problems — rising salary demands, the inflationary cost of off-the-field expenses like transportation and ballpark maintenance, and baseball's long-term indebtedness, estimated at $300 million to $400 million in deferred player salary payments and post-career deals.

The average baseball salary rose from $19,000 in 1967 to $76,066 in 1977, the first year of free agency, according to figures released by the Players Association. In 1980, the average was $149,500, according to figures from the owners' bargaining unit, the Player Relations Committee. Unrestricted free agency is at the heart of the increases.

In order to protect their investments in development of players, the owners have put into effect a plan for compensation to teams that lose free agents to other teams.

At the same time, the owners reason, compensation will put the brakes on spiraling salaries that reached a high this year when Dave Winfield signed a $1.4-million-a-year deal with the New York Yankees.

They also see it as a check on their own excesses.

The players aren't convinced by the owners' sad song. They've set a strike deadline of May 29 in response to the compensation plan.

They won free agency in 1976 through an arbitrator's decision that was upheld in two courts. They say compensation would restrict movement, as it has done in the National Football League.

The players, who speak often through Marvin Miller, director of the Players Association, point out that only 30 percent of baseball's total revenues of $310 million go to player salaries, bonuses and pension costs, compared with football's 40 percent and basketball's 55 percent.

The players also point to the healthy prices teams are bringing when they change hands. Prospective buyers have abounded each time a team has come up for sale in the last two years. Even with inflation, rising costs and salaries, eight franchises have been sold.

"There'll never be a dearth of ownership," said Peter Bavasi, president of the Toronto Blue Jays.

Giles, executive vice president of the Phillies, is lining up a syndicate to buy the team, which sold for $400,000 in 1943. Reported asking price in 1980: $25-30 million.

The New York Mets were purchased in 1980 for $21.1 million, a record price for a baseball franchise. In 1962, their price was $1.8 million. The record payment came on the heels of three recent last-place finishes and dwindling attendance..

The White Sox were recently sold for $20 million. Other purchase prices include: Boston for $13 million, Oakland for $12.7 and Baltimore for $10 million.

How do teams prosper? There is some statistical correlation between success in the standings and the size of the payroll.

According to the "Professional Sports Journal," the teams with the highest five salaries in 1975 finished with a .551 winning percentage. First-place Oakland had the top pay scale, averaging $66,500, while the bottom five-paying teams had a .465 percentage.

In 1978, Oakland, a leader in free-agent defections, went with young players and had baseball's lowest average salary, $49,000. The A's finished with a 69-93 record. "I can no longer compete," said Finley, who sold his club last year to executives of the Levi Strauss clothing company. "I'm going to leave baseball because of these idiotic, astronomical salaries."

The five lowest paying teams in 1978 had a combined won-loss percentage of .458. By comparison, the teams maintaining the five highest pay levels won at a .580 clip, and one of them, the New York Yankees, won the World Series for the second year in a row.

Again last year, the division winners in both leagues — the Phillies and Houston Astros in the National, and Kansas City Royals and Yankees in the American — were among the highest-paying teams.

Kuester Joins Boston U. Staff

BOSTON (AP) — Former National Basketball Association player and University of North Carolina standout John Kuester has been named assistant basketball coach at Boston University, officials of the school announced Monday.

Kuester, 25, will serve under head coach Rick Pitino and will be responsible for most of the recruiting.

"With his background, the addition of John to our staff will really give our program a boost," Pitino said. "What he exemplifies as a player is what every coach wants to teach his own team.

The 6-foot-3, Richmond, Va., native played point guard under UNC head coach Dean Smith for four years and started for the Tar Heels in his last two seasons. He was voted best defensive player on the team and named to the all-Atlantic Coast Conference tournament team both years.

In 1977, Kuester won the Everett Case Award as the ACC Tournament's most valuable player. He was also named most valuable player in the NCAA East Regional and was an all-tournament team pick as North Carolina advanced to the final four.

Kuester spent the last three years in the NBA with the Kansas City Kings, Denver Nuggets and the Indiana Pacers. He was released by Indiana last winter and was assistant basketball coach at the University of Richmond before coming to Boston University.

BU was 13-and-14 last season, its first losing season since Pitino took over three years ago.

Moses Gets His Try At Revenge

By The Associated Press

You don't tug on Superman's cape. You don't spit into the wind. And you don't get Moses Malone angry.

The last time the San Antonio Spurs riled Malone, by forcing him into a sub-par performance in the second game of their National Basketball Association playoff series against Houston, the Rockets' center responded with 41 points and 15 rebounds in the next game, a 112-99 Houston victory.

"They shouldn't have made him mad," Rockets teammate Calvin Murphy said of Malone. "No one's going to keep him down two games in a row."

The Rockets, who resume their best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal at San Antonio tonight, can only hope Murphy's law holds true. The Spurs did their best job on Malone Sunday, limiting him to 17 points and nine rebounds and beating the Rockets 114-112 to even the series at two victories apiece.

"I think Moses may have been a little tired," suggested Dave Corzine, the 6-foot-11, 250-pounder who is one of several Spurs taking turns playing bump and run with Malone. "That's not to say he won't be ready to play again tonight. He is a great competitor and always someone to worry about.

"We haven't found any secret to stopping him."

After tonight's game, the Texas shootout shifts to Houston for Game Six Wednesday night. The other West semifinal resumes Wednesday with Kansas City, leading 3-1, seeking to wrap it up at Phoenix.

In the East, Boston already has clinched a berth in the conference final with a four-game sweep of Chicago. Milwaukee and Philadelphia are tied 2-2 in the other semifinals, which resumes in Philadelphia Wednesday night.

The Kings, playing without regular guards Phil Ford and Otis Birdsong, both of whom are injured, dropped their series opener at Phoenix but since have won three in a row. They'd like nothing better than to make it four with their new, slower tempo.

"The momentum is going our way now," said Kansas City forward Reggie King. "We've got their number. I don't think they like playing our style of game. They won 57 games running and gunning. Any team would have trouble adjusting its style."

Milwaukee has enjoyed a 165-152 rebounding advantage over Philadelphia in the first four games of their series. Center Bob Lanier and forward Marques Johnson were particularly effective for the Bucks in Sunday's 109-98 victory, combining for 21 fourth-quarter points and controlling both boards.

"Marques battled us on the offensive boards, and Lanier kept us from getting more than one shot," said 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham. "Either they got the rebound or they kept it alive for other guys to get it."

Blues, Flyers Seek Victories

By The Associated Press

Sudden-death returns to St. Louis and Philadelphia tonight.

The Blues and Flyers, who had their chances last Sunday night to move into the National Hockey League playoff quarterfinals, permitted a couple of revved-up underdogs to extend the preliminary round to five games.

The Blues, second only to the New York Islanders in the overall regular-season standings, could have knocked 15th-place Pittsburgh out of action Sunday night. Instead, they fell victim to defenseman Randy Carlyle's two goals and one assist and were beaten 6-3 by the Penguins.

The Flyers, sixth during the regular season, won their first two playoff games from Quebec and appeared ready to dispatch the 11th-place Nordiques, but let them off the hook. First Philadelphia lost the third game 2-0. Then, after leading 3-1 with just 4½ minutes to play Sunday night, the Flyers let Quebec tie them — and win 4-3 just 37 seconds into overtime on Dale Hunter's second goal of the game.

"We have to win," said Blues goalie Mike Liut, the NHL's all-star game Most Valuable Player. "If we don't win, we don't play any more. It's that simple."

Coach Pat Quinn of the Flyers saw things in an equally simple perspective. "It's a one-game series now," he said. "It's win or pack your bags."

The Los Angeles Kings, fourth in the overall standings this season, packed their bags a lot earlier than expected. The 13th-place New York Rangers, after splitting the first two games of the series in Los Angeles, blew the Kings out of Madison Square Garden 10-3 and 6-3 to move into the quarterfinals.

Their opposition when the second round opens Thursday night — and the opponents for the other first-round winners — has yet to be determined. Also in the quarters are the Islanders, Edmonton Oilers, Buffalo Sabres, Minnesota North Stars and Calgary Flames.

All Not Quite In Valhalla

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The news was greeted quietly in baseball's Valhalla where things are usually quiet, anyway. All of the game's greats gather there and every now and then, they meet to ponder the progress of their sport. Ty Cobb was the only one excited by the latest development, and that's understandable. Excitement is, necessarily, kept to a minimum there.

Off in the owners' corner, Connie Mack was still trying to figure out the free agent system which allows players in the prime of their careers to walk away from their teams. Whatever happened, he wondered, to the reserve clause.

There've Been Other Champions, But Joe Was Always 'The Champ'

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

To most people, he always will be "The Champ."

There were champions before him and champions who came after, but every time Joe Louis entered a crowded room there was an inevitable stir.

"There's The Champ," someone would whisper. "The Champ just came in."

Soon the room bustled with activity.

"May I have your autograph?"

"One for the kid, Champ. 'His name is Buddy.'"

He may or may not have been the greatest heavyweight fighter who ever lived — such assessments are relative to the era and the fiber of the competition — but middle-aged America will square off and start slugging at the slightest suggestion that he wasn't.

I first saw the sleek, rapier-quick puncher as a teenager covering the national Golden Gloves tournament in Chicago in the early '30s, a veritable three-ring circus.

"Watch that kid from Detroit," word spread around ringside. "He's going to be a good one."

The year before Joe Louis had lost his only amateur fight to a Notre Dame boxer named Max Marek. Now he was more mature, more confident. He was devastating as he destroyed one opponent after another. The pros were one jump away.

It was the age of nicknames. Fight writers dubbed him "The Brown Bomber," "The Dark Destroyer" and "The Sepian Slasher."

In a way, they were racial slurs meant to be colorful and complimentary. Joe never showed resentment. He moved through his private life with the same grace and ease that marked his ring battles.

As a fighter, his technique was swift and final. A little shuffle. Maneuver his the foe into the nearest corner. Shoot the sharp left to the head. Then step back and give the victim room to fall.

It was a pattern Louis followed throughout his pro career spanning 71 fights over 17 years, 54 knockouts, champion for 12 of those years with 25 defenses.

He ducked nobody.

At the same time — in an era which saw World War II brewing and racial bigotry rampant in the "Jim Crow" South — boxing's second black heavyweight king handled himself with the greatest dignity.

Tutored by a pair of black handlers, Julian Black and John Roxborough, he was cautioned to avoid sparking any racial problems.

Now Joe Louis is dead at age 66, to all who ever saw him fight and millions who didn't, still "The Champ."

Ex-Kush Athletes Are Expected To Testify

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Was Frank Kush, former Arizona State University football coach, "a sadistic animal" who physically and verbally abused players or "a living legend" whose methods were synonomous with winning?

More athletes who played under Kush are expected to express both sides today as the multimillion-dollar damage suit against him begins its third week.

Six ex-Sun Devils, including Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White and one-time National Football League standout receiver J.D. Hill, testified last week that Kush was a tough coach but pushed them toward a pro career.

Former ASU punter-defensive back Kevin Rutledge is suing Kush, the university and former Sun Devil assistant coach Bill Maskill for $2.2 million.

Rutledge, who now attends the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, claims Kush and Maskill verbally and physically harassed him into quitting the team in 1979 and forfeiting his scholarship.

"There was constant criticism of me as a player and as a person," Rutledge has told the 11-member Maricopa County Superior Court jury. "I was not given a chance to gain a spot on any rank on the team and not allowed to practice with the punters or defensive backs."

Both Kush and Maskill have denied they harassed Rutledge.

Kush, hired last December to coach the Canadian Football League's Hamilton Tiger-Cats, was cleared March 20 by a 5-3 verdict of a Maricopa County Superior Court jury of punching Rutledge in the mouth after a poor punt in a 1978 game.

The second phase of the trial deals with the harassment issue, a breach of the scholarship contract toward Rutledge and negligent supervision of the university over Kush.

Robert Hing, Rutledge's attorney, has called Kush "a sadistic animal who used malicious methods to run off players that did not meet his standards for performance."

"I would not call him sadistic. I respect him a great deal," testified White, who played at Arizona State in 1973. "You can't outline the proper and improper methods of a coach. He tried to do things one way and other coaches do things another way.

In addition to being accused of abusing his players, Kush has also been charged with making them play hurt.

LPGA Tour Moves On, But Ashes Of Controversy Smoldering On

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Ladies' Professional Golf Association packed its clubs and bags in Raleigh Sunday and headed south for Florida, carrying with it the ashes of an smouldering controversy involving several of its members.

The dispute caught fire earlier this year, when four golfers appeared in Fairway magazine dressed in Victorian fashions. The four were Janet Coles, Muffin Spencer-Devlin, Jan Stephenson and Cathy Reynolds. Fairway is an annual publication which has featured several members of the LPGA tour in fashions of the day.

Much of the debate centered on Stephenson's appearance. She was shown stretched out on a bed wearing a dress with a slit up to the hip. While the dispute has subsided somewhat, Stephenson feels she will hear about the pictures every time she enters a new town on the LPGA tour.

"I think I have already faced the fact that because I go into a different town every week, I'm going to get it," she said during last weekend's American Defender-WRAL Classic. "I think I'm going to have a year of it."

Stephenson appears to have weathered the storm, however. She entered the Raleigh tournament as the 16th leading money winner with just more than $23,000. Although she has not won a tournament in 1981, her best finish has been third place at the S&H Golf Classic in St. Petersburg, Fla.

"I've had a few putts that haven't dropped, a couple of bad breaks ... I'm so close, it's frustrating," Stephenson added.

One member of the tour, Jane Blalock, labeled the pictures "quasi-pornography." Coles, who also participated in last week's tourney, called that charge a little strong, but added that Blalock's comments, published in a Miami newspaper, were not as critical as they were portrayed.

"The LPGA and the media have picked up on it and blown it up into some big controversy just because there's nothing else major going on in women's sports right now," Coles said.

She said the pictures would not have upset her had she been told what was about to happen.

"They didn't tell us what they were trying to portray and I was really upset when it came out," Coles added.

Spencer-Devlin, a former actress-model turned golfer, said attractive golfers are one way to promote the LPGA.

"I think it's important to show that we have a lot of pretty women on the tour," she said. "There's no need to perpetuate the old stereotype of women athletes as masculine and horsy-looking. A lot of beautiful women play sports."

All Not...

Ruth was reading about this young whippersnapper named Hank Aaron who had the colossal nerve to hit 755 career home runs, rewriting a rather important line in the record book. Ruth was still trying to get used to Roger Maris' 61 homers in a single season.

Across the way, Cobb was celebrating — alone. He was not the most popular player of his time with his peers and has done little to mend fences in the afterworld.

In fact, he had been in something of a slump lately. A few years ago, this fellow named Lou Brock rewrote the base stealing record book and last season a kid named Ricky Henderson swiped 100 bases, erasing Gobb's name from the AL book, as well.

But the Georgia Peach made a nice recovery over the weekend, fighting off a surprise challenge and retaining, courtesy of the Official Baseball Records Committee, his 1910 batting championship.

That was no easy task after The Sporting News, baseball's bible, charged that an error in computation had credited Cobb with two more hits than he actually had in 1910 and resulted in giving him a batting championship that actually belonged to Napoleon Lajoie.

We'd need a recount 70 years after the fact to straighten out this tangle, but if we're going to have one, let's start with Red Corriden, who in 1910 was a rookie infielder with the St. Louis Browns. Corriden was assigned to third base for the final game of the season against Cleveland and was instructed by Manager Jack O'Connor to play deep against Lajoie, a menacing pull hitter, who was hot on Cobb's trail in the batting race.

O'Connor said play deep, so Corriden played deep — so deep, in fact, that Lajoie beat out seven bunts in the doubleheader.

Those eight hits in the final day of the year helped Lajoie finish with a .384 average. There was some question about the defensive strategy, and there are indications that Manager O'Connor was one of the legion of Cobb-haters in the game at the time.

The record books tell us that Cobb batted .385 that season, although there is some question about how the statisticians arrived at that figure, since there appeared to be an extra two hits credited to his record in error.

Well, two phantom hits is bad, but seven bunt hits in one day with the opposing third baseman anchored in short left field seems worse.

Rest easy, Ty.

Symphony Fund Drive Goes On

PLENTY OF PICKETS — Extra signs sit idle while members of television and film Writers Guild picket in front of 20th Century-Fox in Hollywood, California. The strike by the 8,300-member Writers Guild follows strikes last year by actors and musicians and a walkout by the Directors Guild of America is considered likely when their contract expires June 30. North Carolina Symphony Shortens Season, Looks to Next Year

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — In a "retrenching" effort, the North Carolina Symphony has canceled 24 concerts scheduled after April 26, but fund raising is scheduled to continue for the 1981-82 season.

"We had been watching the cash flow problem," said Symphony President R. Max Abbott. "In the last couple months our combined contributions and solicited money just wasn't enough. Our contract calls for two week's notice to our musicians, and that happened to fall on the 26th."

Officials said the symphony fell about $500,000 short of its goal to raise $1.5 million from private sources this year.

Abbott said there would be no problem paying the 73 musicians through the 26th. And while their salary increases following last fall's strike contributed to the cash flow problems, Abbott said many other factors came into play.

"I think transportations costs, food, printing ... they all contributed to a $200,000 budget increase this year," he said. Abbott added that while the National Endowment for the Arts came through with $300,000 last year, the symphony received no help this season.

"We've collected just as much in contributions this year as last," Abbott added, "but our needs are that much greater."

The cancellations affect 12 evening concerts and nine educational concerts in May — plus three in April, officials said. Also cancelled is a week of in-school discovery programs involving small ensembles of symphony musicians.

Jimmy Gilmore, vice chairman of the N.C. Symphony Orchestra Committee, had scheduled a news conference today to air the musicians' side of the cancellations, but would not release any information Monday.

"You've spoken with Dr. Abbott and you can use as much of that as you want to, but I can't give you anything right now," Gilmore said. "But I can guarantee that if you come to the news conference we'll have something good for you then."

The North Carolina Symphony is unique in a number of ways, Abbott said. In covering the entire state, the orchestra brings its music to the greatest number of people possible. He added that the educational programs offered by the symphony are as good as any in the country.

Abbott said next season looked much brighter than this one for a number of reasons.

"We're going ahead with fund raising in the next three weeks and expect to kick off a big effort by the end of the month," he said. "We will be looking for sellouts next season. There are already 300 volunteers working on that end."

Abbott said solicitation this spring did not go particularly well, with most halls filled to only 70 percent capacity.

Meanwhile, the symphony is trying to fulfill a state mandate to keep performance prices affordable to North Carolina residents, while the Advisory Budget Commission haggles over funding for the coming year.

Abbott said the symphony is asking for $1.4 million — a $200,000 increase over the present season's outlay. But present state budget recommendations are about $70,000 less. A $75,000 NEA grant expected in the fall should help, he said, but the remaining funds will have to come from contributions and ticket sales.

Tickets are now being sold for $6, $7 and $8, Abbott said, compared with $25 to $30 in New York City, and the educational programs are performed at schools across the state for free.

"The people may learn from the cancellations and realize that we've got to have corporate and individual help," Abbott said. "Many of them have not realized our dependencé on contributions."

He said only 14 percent of the annual operating budget comes from ticket sales, leaving a $1 million void to be filled by contributors.

While symphony officials are looking to next season, Abbott admits there are still two weeks before the first cancellations take effect.

"I guess I'm trying to say that we've looked everywhere for the funding and it just isn't there," he said. "But if somebody comes up with some money, we'll be glad to finish the season."

Heart Checkup For Fonda

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Henry Fonda, who received a special Academy Award two weeks ago for his achievement in films, is "feeling fine" and resting at his home after six days of hospital tests on his heart, his publicist says.

Fonda entered Sharp Memorial Hospital here April 6 for examination. Spokesman Ray Stricklyn said Monday that the 75-year-old star then transferred to a clinic, where he recuperated before going home on Saturday.

Stricklyn said Fonda's wife, Shirlee, said no complications were found and no surgery was planned. The actor, father of Peter and Jane Fonda, has worn a heart pacemaker since 1974 and underwent tests in Los Angeles in December.

He recently performed in plays in California and New Jersey and finished making the movie version of "On Golden Pond."

Fonda accepted his Oscar for lifetime achievement during the Academy Awards ceremonies March 31.

Roy Clark Hurt While Riding

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Country music star Roy Clark has been forced to cancel a Las Vegas, Nev., engagement after being thrown from a horse and hurting both arms, spokesmen say.

The popular entertainer was thrown by a horse Saturday and suffered a dislocated right shoulder and a fractured left arm, doctors reported Monday.

Clark keeps several quarterhorses on a ranch near Coffeyville, Kan., about 50 miles north of his Tulsa home, a spokeswoman said.

Clark, who turns 48 on Wednesday, canceled plans to open at the Frontier Hotel in Las Vegas on Thursday, the spokeswoman said. He is expected to be ready for his next Las Vegas engagement, May 14-27.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — GLAMOR STOCKS DROPPED IN DECLINING MARKET.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: M equals E

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♡.

Usually, a long suit is useful only if you can run it. South, declarer at three no trump, found an intriguing way to employ dummy's long suit even though he could cash only two high-card tricks in it!

South's hand was somewhat off-shape for a two no trump opening bid, but he did have a problem. His hand was too weak for a demand bid in diamonds, and he was afraid that an opening bid of one diamond might get passed out. So he just pretended that one of his spades was a club and made the value bid. North's raise was textbook—it was unlikely that eleven tricks could be made in clubs and not nine in no trump.

West led the top of his heart sequence, and as soon as dummy came down, declarer realized that there was a snag. Because of the unfortunate duplication in hearts, there was no entry to dummy's clubs once they were established. Furthermore, the defenders had already started work on their best suit, thus declarer did not have the time to develop his long suit. However, his solution to the problem was most elegant.

He won the king of hearts, cashed the ace and king of clubs and then led a third club. On this trick he discarded the ace of hearts from his hand!

This remarkable play virtually assured the contract. Dummy's clubs were established, and if the defenders continued with hearts, declarer would have an entry to dummy with the queen. In all, he would score five club tricks, two hearts and his two aces. So, after winning the queen of clubs, West's only chance to defeat the contract was to shift. He chose a low spade. Declarer captured East's king with the ace and continued with the jack. If West took the queen, dummys nine of spades would be an entry, so West ducked.

He was put on play again with a spade, and now was forced to open the diamond suit. Thus, declarer emerged with ten tricks, losing only one spade, one diamond and one club!

FOCUS

If a President is Disabled

The shooting of President Reagan forced Americans to consider what would happen if the President were disabled. Twice in this century, the President was too ill to carry out his duties. In 1919, Woodrow Wilson had a stroke and became an invalid for most of the last months of his Presidency. Some historians have said that Mrs. Wilson became "the first woman President" during these months. In the 1950s, a serious heart attack and then a stroke incapacitated President Dwight Eisenhower for two periods. In 1967 the 25th Amendment was passed, giving formal rules for how the Vice President can take over as Acting President if the President is disabled for a while — rules no one had to use this time.

DO YOU KNOW — Who would become President if both the President and the Vice President were to die?

MONDAY'S ANSWER — Jefferson's Virginia home is called Monticello.

Exile Mourns Soviet Curtain

LEWISTON, Maine, (AP) — Soviet dissident Alexander Ginzburg says his homeland is "a deep hole of totalitarianism" where people must listen to short-wave radios "for news of their own country."

Ginzburg, who has been in exile since last year, when he and two other Soviet political prisoners were released in exchange for two convicted spies, said his wife heard of his release over the short-wave.

"She heard of the exchange over the Voice of America," the 45-year-old human rights activist said Sunday.

Ex-Congressmen See Lobbyist Jobs As Very Lucrative Role

By GENE GRABOWSKI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — William Moorhead ushered executives of a fledgling energy company into the Synthetic Fuels Corp. headquarters and introduced them to the acting head of the government agency.

Then he delivered A-C Valley Corp.'s application for federal funds, smiled and asked how the synfuel grant program is working.

"It's just as you envisioned it, Mr. Chairman," answers John McAtee, who dispenses the money.

When it comes to synthetic fuels, Moorhead is not just another lobbyist.

As a Pennsylvania congressman, he was chairman of the joint committee that created the synfuels program. Now, he is one of about 100 former senators and representatives using their Capitol Hill connections as lobbyists.

The list includes some of Washington's biggest names from the past: former Reps. Wilbur Mills of Arkansas and James Symington of Missouri and former Sens. James Abourezk of South Dakota and Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin.

Why do so many former congressmen turn to lobbying? For one thing, it pays well.

While few lobbyists will divulge their salaries, it is estimated that the best in the field — especially former lawmakers with legal degrees — earn up to $200,000 a year. Congressional pay is $60,662.

Then there is "Potomac Fever," that addiction to power that afflicts those who work in the club-like atmosphere of Congress.

"It's easier for a congressman to deal with a former member of Congress. We know what is proper to ask and what isn't proper to ask. We also are less likely to waste a congressman's time," said Moorhead, 58, who retired from Congress last year after 11 terms and now is a partner with the firm of Coan, Couture, Lyons and Moorhead.

As for any lingering influence, Moorhead said: "The only virtue I have politically is that my name is known to people. They know they're talking to somebody who knows the synfuel legislation from the ground up."

Some current congressmen say they often are more receptive to former colleagues because of personal friendships, and some admit that former congressmen have an edge over other lobbyists.

"I think former congressmen have a real advantage because they have an insider's network in Congress and all they have to do is keep it up to date," said Rep. Richard Bolling, D-Mo., who chairs the House Rules Committee.

"Quite a few ex-members lobby me and I encourage them if they are knowledgeable," Bolling said. "I've also thrown a few out of my office after they blatantly suggested that they have something to say about campaign contributions."

Wilbur Mills left office in 1976 after his 19-term House career was soured by his antics with stripper Fanne Foxe and his admission that he was an alcoholic.

Since then, the 71-year-old former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee has put his intricate knowledge of the nation's tax laws to work for the likes of Encyclopaedia Brittanica, Allied Chemical and Nabisco.

"I got into this line of work because I found myself bored to death after about seven months of doing nothing," said Mills, a Harvard-educated lawyer with the mammoth lobbying firm of Shea & Gould.

"Very little of my work is legislative," Mills said. "Most of it is representing clients before federal departments and agencies and sometimes the Supreme Court."

Some former lawmakers return to Capitol Hill to lobby for causes instead of corporations. Shortly after his defeat at the polls last November, Nelson agreed to work as chairman of the non-profit Wilderness Society.

"I wouldn't lobby for a profit-making organization. I couldn't be comfortable. I had chances to join companies and I didn't," said Nelson, a zealous environmentalist and consumer advocate who served 18 years in the Senate.

Because of the Senate rule barring former members from lobbying for at least a year after leaving office, Nelson said he will spend much of his legislative efforts in the House.

"That doesn't mean I'm going to have a lot of influence," Nelson said. "If I have any impact at all, it is based on the quality of the matter I'm advocating."

Not all former congressmen who lobby like the idea of people knowing who they now represent. House employees who keep track of lobbyists say a lot of firms shield former congressmen from publicity by registering only under the name of the company.

And some companies employing former congressmen file their lobbying reports just late enough to miss the quarterly publishing deadlines in the Congressional Record, said Donna Downs, a staffer in the House Office of Records and Registration.

Speaking of Your Health...

Lester L. Coleman, M.D.

Relief for Lumbago

About twice a year I get a sudden twinge of pain in the lower back. It happens without any relationship to exercise or emotional stress. Nothing I can do seems to keep this from progressing, and within 8 hours I am barely able to move or get out of bed. No one seems to have an explanation of why this happens or how it can be prevented. My doctor calls it lumbago and from then on I'm on my own. — Mr. E.W. Calif.

Dear Mr. W.:

Lumbago is a dull, aching pain which is caused by any sudden shift in position or exposure of the lower back muscles to injury or changes in heat or cold.

Actually, lumbago is not a disease. Rather is it the description of a complaint which is frequently confused with a variety of causes of low back pain.

The muscles of the lower back suddenly — and for no reason at all — go into severe spasm. This is nature's cry for rest and heat, to prevent the serious complications of neglected chronic low back pain.

There are now many drugs that can relax the muscles and free the body of pain. Sometimes a spray of ethyl chloride is carefully used to relax the spasm. I say 'carefully' because ethyl chloride in the hands of someone who cannot handle it may be hazardous to the eyes.

Support of the low back area with girdle and belts often brings great relief.

My own experience with people who have such painful spasms is that they tend to seek help only during the time that they are in pain. When the episode disappears, they then go benignly along their way, hoping and believing that it will never return. This is a mistake.

Anyone who has ever had low back pain should have a thorough orthopedic examination. The character of the shoes one wears, the condition of the arches and the metatarsal bones are all significant in the evaluation of low back pain. X-ray studies and neurological examination are sometimes included in the total workup of the lumbago, or low-back-pain syndrome.

Even though these attacks come on so infrequently, you would be wise to give yourself the gift of a thorough medical examination. The chances are great that you will be able to track down the reason for your lumbago and reduce the frequency and intensity of the attacks.

My 10-year-old daughter has discoloration of the two front teeth. The doctor says it was due to antibiotics. Can anything be done about it? — Mrs. T.J.R., Wis.

Dear Mrs. R.:

Dentists have been using an excellent new technique to cover discolorations of teeth. A plastic substance is applied to the teeth and then is "fixed" with an ultraviolet light beam. The procedure is totally safe and absolutely painless. The discoloration is made to disappear and the shades of the previously discolored teeth can be perfectly matched to the surrounding ones.

Ship's Owner Asks Payment

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — The owner of the Japanese freighter sunk in a collision with the U.S. nuclear submarine George Washington last week will demand $2.8 million from the United States in compensation for the ship and two missing crewmen, lawyers for the owner said today.

The announcement came as a senior U.S. Navy staff officer began an inquiry into the sinking of the 2,350-ton Nissho Maru in the East China Sea last Thursday.

Shunichi Tagawa, a lawyer for the Kutsuna Shipping Co., said the firm will ask $1.87 million for loss of the ship and $930,000 for the families of the captain and crewman lost in the collision.

He said the company will submit its demand to the U.S. government, presumably through the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo, in a week or two.

Navy Capt. Willis Rich, a former submarine skipper, arrived in Japan on Monday to investigate the accident. He will interview the 13 surviving crewmen of the freighter and members of the crew of the sub, which is based in Guam.

Japanese survivors said the sub and a U.S. military plane failed to give them assistance after the collision. U.S. officials said fog and rain prevented them from sighting the survivors.

Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito, replying to questions in Parliament, said preliminary U.S. explanations of the failure to rescue the survivors and the 36-hour delay in informing the Japanese government of the collision were "unacceptable."

The opposition Socialist Party demanded a debate before plenary sessions of both houses of the Diet, the Japanese Parliament. The Socialists, who claim the George Washington may have violated Japan's nuclear prohibitions by carrying Polaris nuclear missiles through Japanese territorial waters, also want the issue raised when Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki meets President Reagan in Washington next month.

Brooks Opposes Exemptions For Young, Aging

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Labor Commissioner John Brooks is opposing a legislative proposal to exempt the elderly and the young from the state minimum wage, and he is backing another bill that would widen those covered by the minimum wage.

Brooks, in an interview, termed "a real bad idea" the proposal sponsored by Rep. John Jordan, D-Saxapahaw, to exempt persons under 18 years of age and those 70 or older from the state minimum wage.

"Anytime you create a special, competitive advantage for one group versus another," Brooks said Monday, "you then preclude somebody else from equal opportunity of employment."

Jordan's bill would also raise the state minimum wage for those who would remain covered by it from $2.90 an hour to $3.10 in January and to $3.35, the federal rate, in 1983.

The proposal backed by Brooks ould also raise the wage by the same amounts, but do so six onths earlier, beginning this July 1.

The state minimum wage covers most businesses with four or more employees and with annual gross receipts of less than $325,000.

Jordan's bill made it to the House floor last week but ran into heavy opposition and parliamentary challenge. It was returned to the House State Personnel Committee after two days of maneuvering.

Bills introduced in the House by Rep. Byron Haworth, D-High Point, and in the Senate by Sen. Glenn Jernigan, D-Fayetteville, were submitted by the Department of Labor.

Besides increasing the wage, Brooks' proposal would broaden the coverage of the state wage by dropping the requirement that businesses have four or more employees to be covered.

It would also change the requirements for overtime payment, requiring that time-and-a-half payments for overtime begin after 40 hours each week — the same as the federal requirement. Currently, state law requires overtime payments after 45 hours for employees covered by the state minimum wage.

Brooks said exempting the young and elderly entirely would do harm to currently employed unskilled workers and to those who would be exempted.

"To exempt them all together is a real bad idea, because we have a serious employment problem in the state," Brooks said. "The two groups of people covered by this exclusion constitute large pools of unskilled labor, and we have an oversupply of unskilled labor in North Carolina."

Brooks said that with a large supply of unskilled laborers for which there is no minimum wage, employers "will hire the cheaper employee."

He said the cheaper wages would reduce earnings that young people need for college expenses. It would also prompt most employers to hire teenagers rather than the elderly because young workers are usually more productive, he said.

Brooks' bills are before the House Manufacturers and Labor Committee and the Senate Manufacturing, Labor and Commerce Committee. Brooks said the House Manufacturers and Labor Committee was "the appropriate place" for Jordan's bill and questioned why it was sent to the other committee. Jordan is chairman of the State Personnel Committee, and Haworth is chairman of the Manufacturing panel.

Loans

Rep. Al Adams, D-Raleigh, a frequent critic of the banking industry, introduced his own proposal to raise legal interest rate limits and to revise state banking laws.

Adams' bill is largely the same as a proposal he offered in the House Banking Committee last week as an alternative to a pair of bills sought by the banking industry — and already passed by the Senate — to raise usury limits on most consumer loans.

Adams acknowledged that the industry may have the votes to get its bills out of the House committee, but predicted they would not win approval on the House floor in their present form. His proposal would offer smaller increases in rates, varying with the size and type of loan.

"If they pass those bills out like they are right now, I think the House will kill it," he said. "I sort of hope they do, and let the people of North Carolina see what they want to do."

Meanwhile, the House gave final approval and sent to the Senate to a bill making technical changes in the state banking laws.

Resolutions

A series of resolutions were approved by the House and Senate, including one House resolution urging the U.S. Department of Agriculture to change the dates on which it accepts bids for buying apples for the child nutrition program. Rep. Charles Hughes, R-Hendersonville, sponsor of the resolution, said he was seeking a date that would allow North Carolina apple growers to bid.

The House approved a Senate passed resolution urging the federal government to seek return of any missing or dead Americans in Southeast Asia.

The Senate approved House resolutions urging Congress to give the states more flexibility in the use of federal highway aid and condemning the "traitorous and violent attack" on President Reagan.

Wildlife

The House approved and sent to the Senate a bill that would allow wildlife enforcement officers to issue warning tickets on first offenses for game-law violations.

Disabled.

Rep. Jeanne Fenner, D-Wilson, filed a bill that would provide $5.6 million over two years as supplemental aid to community programs for the developmentally disabled.

For More Than A Century They Considered Selves 'Virginians'

GIBBS WOODS, N.C. (AP) — For more than a century the people in this community just south of Virginia Beach have considered themselves Virginians.

But now the U.S. Postal Service has ordered the 105 families here to use a North Carolina address.

Until this month, Mrs. Gladys Pecsek's address was Route 4, Box 4209, Virginia Beach, Va. 23457.

On April 4, the Postal Service said Gibbs Woods must own up to its North Carolina location. Moreover, the area was made a part of the Knotts Island mail-delivery route.

Mrs. Pecsek's new address reads Route 4, Box 4209, Knotts Island, N.C. 27950.

The townspeople don't so much mind being North Carolinians. But they rail at the Knotts Island designation.

"We are not a part of Knotts Island at all," said Janie Askew. "I don't have anything against the place, but I don't want to have it in my address."

Added Mrs. Pecsek:

"Knotts Island is 25 miles from here. I don't know anybody in Knotts Island. Just go to Knotts Island and ask where Gladys Pecsek lives. All you'll get is blank stares. They don't know me."

Gibbs Woods residents have launched petition drives and letter-writing campaigns to keep Knotts Island out of their addresses.

In a Feb. 25 letter to Gibbs Woods residents, the Postal Service explained, "Over the years, the Postal Service and its customers have encountered serious problems with the confusion presented when a person resides in one state and has a mailing address in another."

Those problems involved such things as school registration, voter registration, vehicle registration, census counts and homeowner insurance rates (which often are based on ZIP codes).

So, under a recent policy change, the Postal Service "now requires that all delivery areas be realigned to conform with state boundaries," said spokesman Paul Lettmann of Washington, D.C.

Mrs. Pecsek admits that "there are a few problems" living in North Carolina while having a Virginia address. "But it's been that way for so long, we're used to it," she said. Mrs. Askew added that Gibbs Woods residents "kind of consider themselves part of Virginia." For instance, the area is served by the Blackwater Volunteer Fire Department on the Virginia side of the Virginia-North Carolina line. Most Gibbs Woods residents work and attend church in Virginia, Mrs. Askew said.

Gibbs Woods residents say that if their addresses have to be changed, they'd rather be put in with the town of Moyock, N.C.

"Moyock has a post office, and they're only 17 miles away. Moyock is a nice little town. We'd like to be associated with them," Mrs. Askew said.

Gibbs Woods residents suspect that the Postal Service misread the map in lumping their community with Knotts Island instead of Moyock. "Moyock is obviously the logical choice," Mrs. Askew said.

But the Postal Service says its Moyock office would have to hire another carrier to deliver Gibbs Woods's mail, while the Knotts Island office can do the job without extra manpower.

Missy Daughtry won Champion in the Medium Pony Division riding Woodland's Joint Venture, and fourth place in equitation over fences. Ashlie Tripp also participated in the show on Woodland's Joint Venture in the 12 to 14 age group Equitaiton Over Fences and Equitation Under Saddle.

Falwell Did Not Amuse

MOSCOW (AP) — The New York correspondent for Pravda, the Soviet Communist Party daily, says he recently received a form letter from the Rev. Jerry Falwell warning about the Soviet threat and advocating increased U.S. defense spending. He was not amused.

Reporter Tomas Kolesnichenko wrote in today's editions of Pravda that the letter, sent to his New York address and signed by the leader of the conservative organization Moral Majority, informed him that unless the United States beefs up its military power, the Soviets one day will be able to "pick up the phone" and dictate terms for America's capitulation.

"Of course, such demagogy is not intended for educated people," Kolesnichenko said. But he added that many Americans take such letters seriously. And he described for his readers the financial and political resources of Moral Majority, "one of the most right-wing and extremist organizations in America."

Secretaries To Be Recognized

Mayor Don McGlohon proclaimed April 19-25 as Professional Secretaries Week.

McGlohon, who said the week has been designated by Professional Secretaries International, noted that "in keeping with the best tradition of their profession, secretaries are accepting vital responsibilities and are performing important roles in offices in all fields of endeavor."

He said the week was proclaimed "to recognize the professional secretaries now doing their jobs effectively and to encourage others to enter this worthy career."

He asked that business, industry, government, education, and other professions recognize and pay special attendion to Professional Secretaries Day on April 22.
