Typical Family Picture Is Changing

'Complete' Families Decline

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

The poster on the wall of a fellowship hall in a Greenville church conveyed the message: "I'm somebody, because I belong to a family."

In the photo itself, there were two children, a mother and a father. More so than ever, it may be misleading.

Pitt County, along with the rest of the state and nation, has seen the percentage of "complete" families dwindle as marriages break up. As of January, the state Department of Human Resources lists 3,851 "single-parent" households in Pitt County — 13 percent of all households in the county.

Some of those households contain several children.

Statistical information on the number of children in single-parent homes was not available. However, public school officials in Greenville and Pitt County estimate at least 30 percent of all students come from homes broken by separation, divorce, death or abandonment. Some educators, especially in the county system, say the number of such children could run as high as 50 percent of the enrollment at their schools.

Provisional 1980 statistics reflect 1,313 births in Pitt County, including 322 births out of wedlock.

There were 750 marriages in Pitt County last year. There also were 375 divorces.

The trend toward family separation has created a situation in which parents who have not been accustomed to working outside the home suddenly are forced into the labor market. In many cases, standards of living decline. Children accustomed to having a parent at home at all times find themselves in day care centers or with relatives, or alone. The former husband or wife is faced with the task of building a new social life, a process that can be difficult at best when children are at home.

Adjustments are required for all involved — to a new lifestyle, to new responsibilities, perhaps to new surroundings.

The Rev. Van Dale Hudson, pastor of Trinity Free Will Baptist Church, said marital problems have created "an increasing need for pastoral counseling."

"We are involved more so than ever in an attempt to prevent divorce, to bring about a reconciliation or to work after reconciliation becomes impossible," he said.

Fathers Also Learning How To Keep Children

Child care in a single-parent home is immediate. It is always there — as more and more fathers are learning.

"It's a bit hectic," was the way one father of two young boys described his periods with the children.

The parents have been separated legally for about 18 months and are now preparing for divorce. They tried to split custody equally, but the father, who is in his late 20s, voluntarily has kept the children more often than called for in their agreement.

"This is as much as I can handle," the father said. "It's tough, trying to be two parents at one time, seeing that they get a good meal at night, do their homework and get a bath.

"But it's not a bother. I kind of enjoy it, although when I was married I didn't do it because I had someone else to do it."

He said his new life with the children has been rewarding in that "I've experienced more with my kids. Before we separated, I never knew my kids."

The children go to a private day-care center after school and are picked up there by whichever parent will be responsible for them that night. They are taken to school the next day by the same parent. The father says he wants to maintain a similar arrangement after divorce.

Despite the new responsibilities, the father said he has been able to maintain a social life for himself and eventually hopes to remarry. So far, he said, "I haven't met anybody I was head over heels about. And when I have them (the children), it is mostly just the three of us.

"They get confused enough when you split up. I don't want to overload them."

President Flies To Camp David To Prepare Talk

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan, appearing spritely and smiling, Saturday flew to Camp David for a weekend of rest and preparation for his televised economic address.

His press aide said the speech Tuesday night to a joint session of Congress would tell lawmakers considering his proposed tax and spending cuts that "it's now decision day."

It was Reagan's first venture outside the White House since he began convalescing in the presidential living quarters from the March 30 chest wound he suffered from a would-be assassin.

Wearing tan pants and a heavy Irish fishermen's sweater, the president smiled and waved to a group of well-wishers on the White House grounds and, with a strong step, walked with wife Nancy to a waiting helicopter.

He carried a briefcase, and Acting Press Secretary Larry Speakes said the "number one business item" at the Maryland mountaintop retreat would be speech preparations.

Reporters, who routinely see presidents off on their treks to Camp David, were moved about 15 feet back from their usual observation point. Reagan did not say anything as he walked to the helicopter.

"The theme of the speech is going to be that it's decision day," Speakes told reporters. "Now is the time to act. The economy demands it and the public is demanding it. Time is running out as far as the economy's concerned."

Speakes said Reagan will emphasize a "spirit of cooperation" with Congess, but will say the economy has not "substantially improved" and action is needed now.

There will be no talk of compromise, Speakes said, but Reagan will push for what is described as the Gramm-Latta "bipartisan" Republican bill pending in the House which goes beyond Reagan's budget cuts.

Speakes noted that in previous television addresses, Reagan has outlined the problem and offered a cure and now was the time to push for action.

Reagan's schedule is "moving toward" normal, Speakes said, and the president will participate in most of the meetings he usually would chair next week.

His schedule also includes a continuation of his sales pitch to members of Congress on the economic plan, some of whom are tentatively scheduled to meet with Reagan Tuesday afternoon.

He is scheduled to meet with United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim sometime this week.

Speakes said more than a week ago Reagan prepared the opening portion of the speech, which he said would run less than 15 minutes, and that he had worked on it with speechwriter Ken Khachigian.

Aides reported the president's first springtime visit to Camp David, which has served as a refuge for presidents since Franklin Roosevelt, would include a walk. s on arrival were reported in the 50s and there was a slight wind.

"He's going to relax and read and maybe see some movies," Speakes said, refusing to say just what those movies might be. "We never give movie titles because people tend to read things into that."

PRISON PROTEST — Protestant demonstrators gathered outside the Maze Prison in Belfast, Northern Ireland, Saturday. IRA leader Bobby Sands is being held inside the prison. (AP Laserphoto)

Terrorist Keeps Up Prison Fast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — Nearly blind and close to death, IRA terrorist Bobby Sands refused to receive a human rights delegation Saturday, dashing hopes he would give up a 56-day-old hunger strike and spare Northern Ireland from what could be a bloodbath if he dies.

Outside the gates of Maze prison, militant Protestants, already on a "war alert," paraded with placards reading, "Let Sands Die."

In Belfast, a 15-year-old boy died in a hospital 10 days after being hit in the head by a plastic bullet during the first of nine nights of rioting by Sands' Catholic supporters.

When news of the death of Paul Wippers reached Londonderry, hundreds of youths hijacked six vehicles and burned them in the streets.

British troops and police scrambled to break up the demonstration and were met with a volley of bricks, bottles and gasine bombs hurled by youths hiding behind the flaming barricades.

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

Sands, who won a seat in the British Parliament in a special election against a Protestant candidate April 9, was close to death, his eyesight almost gone.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government has steadfastly refused to give into Sands' demand that IRA convicts be considered political prisoners rather than common criminals.

The visit by two members of the European Human Rights Commission could be the last chance to save Sands' life, but militant Protestants bitterly protested it as a capitulation to the IRA.

Sporadic violence also rocked the British-ruled province during the night and a bomb exploded in a Belfast pub as security officials were about to dismantle it, gutting the building but causing no casualties.

Despite the protests of the Protestants, the two human rights delegates spent the day at Maze prison hoping to convince Sands to give up his fast in return for a promise to study his demands.

The delegates — Prof. Carl-Aage Norgaard of Denmark and Prof. Torkel Opsahl of Norway — were whisked into the prison in a bullet-proof limosine, past 100 demonstrators from the Rev. Ian Paisley's Democratic Unionist Party.

French Election Today May Lead To Runoff

PARIS (AP) — President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, once considered a shoo-in for a second term, was expected to retain enough of his eroding support to take first place in Sunday's voting, but not enough to avoid a runoff in two weeks.

More than 30 million Frenchmen are expected to cast ballots Sunday in the first round of the presidential election, paring the field of 10 candidates down to two for a final confrontation.

Under French law, if no candidate wins an absolute majority in the first round, the two candidates with the largest number of votes meet in a runoff.

Of the seven men and three women in the race, representing most of the French political spectrum from extreme left to arch-conservative, the 55-year-old Giscard d'Estaing, a self-described centrist, was generally expected to emerge as the top vote-getter.

Most speculation has centered on who will face Giscard d'Estaing May 10 in an attempt to deny him a second seven-year term in the Elysee Palace. Socialist Francois Mitterrand, 64, making his third bid for the presidency, is widely viewed as the most likely opponent.

But Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, 48, leader of the Gaullist party and Giscard d'Estaing's former prime minister, has emerged in recent weeks as a serious contender. The dynamic mayor's hard-hitting campaign, attacking both the president and Mitterrand, has resulted in impressive gains in recent polls at the expense of Giscard d'Estaing and the Socialist candidate.

Because polls were prohibited during the final week of the campaign, it was not known whether Chirac had managed to catch Mitterrand. Nonetheless, he succeeded in injecting a little excitement into what many observers have described as a ho-hum election.

Perhaps the most startling aspect of the campaign has been the dramatic erosion of suoport for the president, who last fall was considered a sure bet for a second term. The other candidates have been attacking his economic record hard, taking advantage of public disenchantment with unemployment, now 7.3 percent, and inflation, which the latest figures put at 12.7 percent.

The most recent published polls showed Giscard d'Estaing winning 27 percent of the vote Sunday, followed by Mitterrand with 22 percent, Chirac with 19.5 percent and Communist Party leader Georges Marchais, 60, with 18.5 Percent.

Mitterrand's candidacy has been plagued by the dark shadow of the Communists. All of the conservative candidates have charged Mitterrand cannot form a government without the Communists and have portrayed him as the man who will open the door to Marchais' hard-line pro-Soviet party.

Marchais can't realistically hope to make it to the finals. His main effort is directed at keeping the Communists' traditional 20 percent share of the vote.

All the major candidates have been cwlling on the electorate to cast "useful votes" Sunday, fearing that the votes scattered among the minor candidates could have a deciding effect on the position of the top finishers.

'Tis Daylight Time

By United Press International

If you have not set your clock ahead, chances are you are going to be an hour late for church or your Sunday brunch date.

Time in most states jumps ahead by one hour this weekend. A moment of legislated magic transforms 2 a.m. into 3 a.m. and the country awakes Sunday on Daylight Saving Time.

Most people handle the change by setting their timepieces forward one hour before going to sleep Saturday night. They get the lost hour back Oct. 25, 1981, when standard time returns.

Under the 1966 Uniform Time Act, administered by the Transportation Department, daylight time is observed from the last Sunday in April until the last Sunday in October.

The states and territories which do not observe Daylight Saving Time are Arizona, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa and the portion of Indiana in the Eastern Time Zone — 81 of the state's 92 counties.

Hunt Calls For Local Programs Against Juvenile Delinquency

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

"The most fundamental way of stopping crime is preventing it. And the most fundamental way of preventing crime is helping children and young people toward productive and happy and challenging lives," Gov. Jim Hunt told an estimated 150 persons attending the Eastern Regional Conference on Delinquency Prevention here.

The governor's luncheon speech Friday ended a two-day conference, at the Casablanca Restaurant, designed as a forum for sharing needs, concerns, philosophies and goals for strengthening delinquency prevention in eastern North Carolina.

The conference, which emphasized a community development approach to the problems of delinquency prevention, was the first such regional session held in the state. It was a follow-up to the statewide conference in Raleigh in February.

Hunt, who said he wanted similar conferences "held all over North Carolina," emphasized that "preventing crime and helping people be what they ought to be goes hand in hand. That's what we need to understand."

Suggesting that regional sessions will "ensure that we don't lose momentum in the statewide approach to delinquency prevention," Hunt emphasized "we've got to have a coordinated, team approach ... if we are going to really do

Families ...

As the number of divorces increased in recent years, it also became easier to obtain a divorce. Fathers now obtain custody of children. Mothers may pay child support or alimony.

A Greenville attorney said many of the divorce cases handled by his office are amicable, but "you do get into custody battles and concerns about support. But a basic concern is that the economic situation has a severe impact in a family splitting up ... There's no way either parent can maintain the original standard of living."

A survey of real estate dealers tended to back up the attorney's observations, but many salesmen said single parents are buying property, especially small homes, condominiums or duplexes.

"The real estate community views singles and single parents as a very viable buyer," one salesman said. "We have experienced single-parent homebuying, both male and female. Especially the professional people have been able to purchase properties."

Mortgage loans are available to single parents if they otherwise qualify, according to Roscoe King, a senior vice president at First Federal Savings & Loan Association.

King said the number of such loans has increased but that single parents customarily seek smaller homes.

Since the fall of 1979, single parents who are economically disadvantaged have had access to employment development training at the federally financed Career Development Center for Displaced Homemakers.

Amelia Peebles, director of the center, said 111 people — including one man — have taken advantage of the program. She said 97 people have been placed in jobs.

"Their biggest problems have been in not knowing how to get back in the work force or how to look for a job, but a lot of them have lost the motivation to work," Ms. Peebles said.

That program may be lost or at least curtailed in the coming months, she said, because of proposed budget cuts by the Reagan administration.

Although most single parents can find the means of providing the physical comforts needed to keep a family intact, the social aspects of family living may suffer.

One single parent, who is employed in a downtown Greenville office, says she "has had no problems, really." Her pre-school children go to day-care centers and have babysitters if the mother goes out at night. "Income has been adequate, although it's not abundant," the mother said.

Her case may be an exception. The Census Bureau, in a 1979 national report, found that 30 percent of all households headed by women existed with income below the poverty level. The comparable figure for all married-couple families was 5 percent.

Child care usually is available, through churches, private and public centers and relatives. One father who gained custody of his children used friends and relatives and, eventually, even his fiancee to provide child care.

The Rev. Carol Goehring of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church is one of several Greenville area ministers who have been active in working with single parents.

Especially for women, she said, the task of providing care for children has been "the biggest headache. It's just constant ... there's no getting away from it. It's your job, 24 hours a day."

Trinity FWB Church operates a child care center and a private school which has students from split families, Hudson said.

"When the mother has tried to stay in the church (after a divorce), I have been able, as a pastor and principal, to serve as a 'father image' to some of them ... I talk to them, pray with them and sometimes paddle them," Hudson said.

Hudson said he believed that divorce hurts children psychologically more than parents.

Hays Has Surgery For Cancer In Neck

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Wayne Hays, forced from congressional office in a sex scandal, was in good condition Saturday after surgery for cancer of the neck, his surgeon said.

Dr. Arthur James said Hays' cancer appeared to have been localized and that Hays was able to get around.

He said he expected Hays to be discharged from Ohio State University Hospital in five or six days. The former chairman of the House Administration Committee underwent surgery Friday.

Hays underwent surgery last fall for cancer of the lip, James said.

Hays, 68, served as a U.S. representative for nearly 30 years before stepping down in 1976 after his affair with Elizabeth Ray, who was half his age, became public.

He admitted an affair with Miss Ray but said he kept her on a subcommittee staff payroll for doing her government job, not for being his mistress.

His resignation ended investigations into allegations he misused public funds.

Hays, a Democrat, was elected to the Ohio House of Representatives in 1978 to represent a three-county legislative district that was part of his larger congressional district.

He was defeated in a re-election bid last fall.

Hays and his second wife, Pat, live on their farm in Belmont. He divorced his first wife, Martha, in 1976 after 38 years of marriage.

Miss Ray, who wrote a book about her experiences with Hays, later posed nude for magazine layouts and has performed in night spots.

anything about juvenile crime."

The recently organized Governor's Executive Cabinet on Juveniles and the Juvenile Law Study Commission will aid in efforts to have a coordinated team approach, the governor said, as will a Jaycee-sponsored statewide project aimed at "helping pair up troubled kids with caring adults ... letting them know we care about them."

"And I want you to look to me, your governor, for support. I want to make it abundantly clear that this administration's commitment, and this governor's commitment, to juvenile crime prevention is total."

According to Hunt, "The most fundamental duty of any government, any society, is the protection of its citizens from criminal acts. That's why government was formed way back in history.

"Doing those things involves, for some kids who don't have certain advantages, the presence of an adult who volunteers some time and a lot of love.

"We can't give up," the governor said. "Our children are our future. Encourage ... support young people. This goes to the essence of education.

"We've got a long way to go in government in establishing juvenile crime prevention programs," according to Hunt, who emphasized that "government programs can never have the impact that a caring adult touching the life of a kid in trouble — one on one, teaching, listening, counseling, cajoling, playing — can have."

In preventing delinquency and working with young people, "We're talking about making communities work, making the state, the country ... making democracy work," Hunt said.

"There's no question that change must happen in the local community," or there will be no change at all. "It takes all of our people getting involved.

"We need to get organized ... involve adult volunteers working with juveniles," and "get these programs going in every county. I want to see us do it in this state in the next four years. Let's set for ourselves that goal. I think it can be done in North Carolina. Let us dare to try to help every young person in this state.

"We can't do it in Raleigh. We can't do it in government. It's got to be done in each community," he emphasized.

"I know this is a big job. And I know that you deal with frustrations on a daily basis that cause you to get discouraged. But we can't give up. Our children are our future."

Hundreds Protest Budget Proposals

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Nearly 2,000 protesters gathered at a rally Saturday to demonstrate against President Reagan's proposed budget cuts, warning that people will starve, freeze, go on welfare or turn to other means — including crime — to get food and shelter.

"I'll steal to be able to feed my family," said a disabled man from Portsmouth.

Another man told the crowd gathered at the rally in Concord's Everett Arena that cutting social programs for people who need help takes away a person's "last hopes and dreams.

"Then you get bitter," he said, "and when a person gets bitter, then you get trouble."

The rally was organized by the state's six Community Action Programs to develop a "Budget for People" to counter proposed federal cuts which would eliminate many of the programs administered by the CAP agencies, and even the agencies themselves.

Donna Daigle, 21, said programs now threatened helped her family of four to survive after her husband suffered an injury that kept him out of work.

"We would never have had heat, food and shelter," she said. "I regret having my children. The way this damned world is going you can't support them no matter what you do."

She walked back to her seat with tears in her eyes.

Sarah Dustin suggested that to qualify for holding elected office, "office seekers should try to support their families on minimum wage for a year."

Only one of the four congressmen from New Hampshire who will vote on the Reagan administration budget proposals came to the rally. Democratic Rep. Norman D'Amours sat at the head table listening to the criticism and fears expressed by dozens of speakers.

The Republicans in the state's delegation, Sens. Warren Rudman, Gordon Humphrey and Rep. Judd Gregg, sent representatives instead.

The North Carolina Synod of the Lutheran Church in America will conduct a statewide appeal Sunday, May 3, in an effort to raise $1.6 million for its three conference and camping centers.

The LCA has centers at Lutheridge near Asheville, Camp Agape near Sanford and Kure Beach. The money would be used to renovate and expand facilities at the centers.

Ayden Workshop Presents 'Camelot'

In Camelot, a long time ago, might was used for right as the knights sat around the round table. King Arthur's struggles to uphold honor and the true meaning of love was the theme of "Camelot" performed by the Ayden Theatre Workshop Thursday night. The final performance will be held today at 3 p.m. in the Ayden-Grifton High School Auditorium.

Allen Trader's characterization of King Arthur's emotional growth was excellent. All of Arthur's boyish charms, yet simple maturity; honor, and love were evident to the fullest extent. We saw Arthur turn from a dependant young man, who didn't like to think and relied on Merlyn to do his thinking, into a mature older man who kept his dreams intact although all was falling about him. Trader fit the part well, both in appearance and emotional content of his character portrayal. Arthur's personality was exactly as I would have imagined. Honest, amusing, yet intelligent with a heart of gold filled with honor.

Don Watson as Merlin was delightful, his booming voice filled the auditorium. His humorous guidance of "Wart" (Arthur) brought many a chuckle from the audience. Watson's stature, voice, and presence on stage convinced all he was truly a wizard.

Guenevere, played by Heidi A. Lane, was beautiful. Her diminutive size yet ready wit were charming. Her melodic voice was admirable, perhaps one of the best in the play. Lane's skill in characterization is to be commended. Even from the middle of the auditorium one could pick up on her expressions and emotions.

Lancelot, played by Jeffrey Krantz, was unmatchable. Krantz is a man of many talents. His stage presence is dynamic, and he completely controls the audience both in humor and in despair. His voice was stupendous.

Marcus Carraway as Pellinore was hysterical. The character's intense jocularity provided an excellent foil to Arthur's good natured honor and Lancelot's highly structured view of life.

Mordred, the illegitimate son of Arthur, was believably nasty. Kenneth Seufert was a good choice for the part. The antics of Christy Braswell who played Morgan Le Fey and her consorts were excellent. They moved winsomely about the stage creating an of-dream like quality. Morgan Le Fey was an invisible queen who lives in an invisible castle. Le Fey's and her consort's hand movements were very impressive as they tested the invisible wall built around Arthur.

The lords and ladies of Camelot aptly protrayed the customs and dress of the times of chivalry. A hearty pat on the back is to be extended to the set designers, construction workers and costumers. The stage was richly designed, as were the costumes. Modred wore a red and black costume reminiscent of an evil jester's. Guenevere's dresses were beautifully queen-like.

The chorus, directed by Jeff Krantz and the orchestra led by Ron Payne were well rehearsed and talented. Renditions of popular Camelot songs and background music added a bit of class to the production.

The play itself was a complete success. The orchestra, chorus and characters were handicapped, however, due to the small size of the auditorium. The acoustics of the auditorium made it difficult to understand what was being said.

Jobs Comment Is Clarified

C.R. Thomas, an official for a computerized vocational assessment agency, issued a statement Saturday clarifying a comment attributed to his business manager stating that individuals who were placed in jobs at the Employment Security Commission would be "laid off their jobs" due to budget cuts.

Thomas said he and other members of his staff had told clients that "ESC job counselors would be laid off," based on a news story broadcast by a New Bern television station, and that at no time should there have been any statement implying that persons hired through ESC would be affected.

"I have discussed the matter with Jim Hannon, manager of the ESC office," Thomas said, "and both of us agreed the entire incident was unfortunate," adding that differences between himself and Hannon had been resolved.

Clay Kirkman Says . . .

April has been a busy month for gardeners, just as May will be. It is also a time to enjoy the beauty of spring and all its vivid colors. As we approach summer, we will be thinking more about the summer blooming annuals for the garden. If you received an Easter Lily as a gift or bought one for yourself, you can keep it living indefinitely. When the blooms begin to fade, plant it in the garden. Be sure to plant it in full sun. Remove the flower stalks to prevent the seed formation and if the roots are matted around the root ball, sever the roots with a knife.

One of the more popular annuals for the garden are marigolds. Marigolds will bloom right up until the first hard frost. They are usually at their best when combined with other annuals and perennials in a flower border. The taller types look best as background plants for other lower growing flowers. Try using tall, yellow marigolds as a backdrop for red salvia. The dwarf marigolds look well for low edging plants or they also look great in pots. Some types of marigolds are said to lure nematodes away from vegetables in the garden.

When planting marigolds, space the dwarf varieties about 6 inches apart, taller varieties 8 to 10 inches apart. They will grow and bloom best in full sun, but they will tolerate partial shade. They are fairly drought resistant, but they will need to be watered thoroughly during dry periods. Fertilize them once a month with any all purpose fertilizer.

For Second Time As President, Reagan Misses Child's Wedding

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — A teary-eyed Maureen Reagan was married for the third time in a lavish ceremony Saturday featuring music, poetry and a battalion of Secret Service agents, but no mention of the bride's father, President Reagan.

The bridegroom was 28-year-old Dennis Revell, a law clerk who is 12 years younger than his new wife.

The bride, who wore a crown of flowers in her hair and an ivory, medieval-style beaded gown, was escorted by her uncle, Neil Reagan, brother of the president. Doctors forbade the president to travel while he recuperates from a March 30 assassination attempt, and he flew to Camp David, Md., on Saturday.

It was the second time since Election Day the president missed one of his children's weddings. Ronald Jr., 22, didn't invite his parents to his Nov. 25 wedding to Doria Palmieri, 29, in a New York judge's chambers.

Ms. Reagan's brother, Michael, told reporters as he left the reception after the wedding, "We're really sorry dad couldn't be here today, but we're glad that he's well."

Neil Reagan told reporters he had his hearing aid turned up so he would know when to give the bride away.

As the phalanx of Secret Service agents stood by, 75 guests witnessed the private ceremony at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, in which Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Lawrence Rittenband quoted from two British poets and read a brief American Indian poem on love and marriage.

"Dennis and Maureen both cried," said a guest who was at the ceremony but declined to be identified. "They both had tears in their eyes. It was very sweet.

"The judge said they were very special people in themselves," said the guest, who also said that no mention was made of the president or the fact that Ms. Reagan is his daughter.

Two soloists — one a woman who sings for television commercials — provided the entertainment.

Reporters were not allowed on the floor where the ceremony was held. At one point, Revell, wearing a dark blue suit, walked to a balcony and waved to spectators in the lobby.

Secret Service agents and police said Ms. Reagan had asked that the wedding be private, and she declined to pose for pictures except for her private photographer.

Ms. Reagan's mother, actress Jane Wyman, wearing a floor-length coral dress, preceded the bride into the room.

Ms. Reagan carried a large bouquet of coral and white flowers and was attended by a flower girl and maid of honor Judy Miller, her longtime friend.

Ways To Increase Farm Income

Some Pitt County farmers are experimenting with new ways to grow vegetables and fruits.

A recent report concerned a method of covering a bed with black plastic and setting out plants through the plastic. Weeds are kept down by the plastic and evaporation is slowed. Soil is also kept warmer by the covering, speeding up harvesting of the product. That means earlier income for the grower.

Extension Agent Sam Uzzell says the method has been successful in Florida. "People are getting interested in alternative crops, and I hope we'll have an outlet for those."

Tomatoes, strawberries and cantaloupes have been experimented with.

It takes quite an outlay in money for equipment and time on the part of the farmer to experiment with new crops, but the payoff can be great. The basic crops of tobacco, corn, soybeans and livestock have provided incomes for farmers for many years. However the farm operator can increase his income by turning to other crops. He already has the knowlege and in some cases the equipment to produce alternate crops. Why not use that for additional income?

Attendance At Meetings Essential

City Councilman Louis Clark has rightfully cited the failure to have a quorum for the joint city-county Planning and Zoning Commission as embarrassing.

Clark, who represents the council at the meetings suggested "right sharp letters" to absent members.

There may or may not be proper excuses in this particular case, but poor attendance at meetings of public boards and commissions has frequently been a problem.

The bodies cannot function without a quorum and when they cannot meet, business important to the public and to individuals is held up.

It is clearly important that everyone who agrees to serve on a public board make an effort to attend the meetings, and at least let it be known ahead of time if they cannot be present.

Different Methods

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — The complaint is heard at times that public school grouping by skill levels leads to less instruction, and perhaps inferior instruction, for the youngster placed in a low-skill group.

Indeed, because the low groups are often made up of more children from low-income and black families, some specialists have contended tht the inferior academic work in low-skills groups can be at least in part the blame for generally low achievement test scores among those children.

A group of analysts at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Institute at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has taken a closer look at what happens with such skill groups.

Earl Schaefer, the senior investigator, details four significant findings.

Findings

First, the high-skill students were able to work independently in individually assigned areas. Low-skill students were typically grouped around the table with close teacher supervision.

Then, the teachers spent far less time reviewing previously learned material in the high-skill group, and 50 percent more time introducing new material.

Third, teachers used about twice as many statements to control behavior (such as sit down, stop that) when working with the low-skills children; used disciplinary statements six times as frequently; and used positive reinforcement statements twice as frequently.

Fourth, Schaefer reports, "children in the two groups behaved quite differently. Children in the low groups were about eight times as likely to interfere with their peers' academic work by taking materials or otherwise disrupting them."

The results do not confirm suspicions that low-group students get less academic attention, but they do get less new material and independent work while the sessions appear devoted more to discipline, control attempts and punitive teacher responses in an effort to maintain the group's work.

Professionals

A major development in local government during the decade just ended is brought to light in a recent study by the Institute of Government at Chapel Hill.

County governments in North Carolina gained enormous responsibilities in a series of legislative changes which elevated them from mere administrative subdivisions of the state to full local government status which conld enact ordinances, institute zoning, operate utilities, run police and fire departments—in short, do anything which city governments have long done.

As a consequence, long-time resistance to county managers has faded, and now 82 of the state's 100 counties now have full-time professional managers. Prior to 1970, there were only 18.

There are 124 city managers. All cities with more than 10,000 population have managers; and 89 of the 118 citities with population over 2,500 have managers.

Sunday Morning Notes

Cathy Simpson, who lives at Langston Apartments, left home one morning last week to head for her job in the newspaper's advertising department.

She got in her car and started the engine. She pumped the accelerator a couple of times to make certain all was well. Then she placed the automatic tranmission in reverse. The car backed smoothly out of the parking space. She moved the lever to "drive." Then she gave the engine some gas. The engine raced but the car wouldn't move. A puzzled Cathy eased the indicator to "reverse". The car responded by backing up. Then back to "drive." Again there was no movement.

Cathy called everyone she knew for help and finally obtained a tow truck.

The wrecker operator was preparing to haul the car to the shop when he looked inside.

"Here," he said. "This might help." And he released the emergency brake. After that the car operated perfectly in "drive."

Recently we wrote of an inquiry by Bill Porter of his old military friend, Jack Edwards, about the whereabouts of Kay Kyser.

Porter has written us:

"Since there were a few inconsistencies in the column, perhaps you'll allow me to clear them up. First Jack and I were and are close friends — 'You're right! That's right!' We, however, attended Officers' Candidate School at Camp Lee, Virginia, not Ft. Warren, Wyoming — we were both sent there for further training as brand new shavetails and a goodly part of this training consisted of chasing after beautiful Western girls, catching them and all that.

"As to my being retired, 'That's wrong, he's wrong,' but this may have been a misdirection on Jack Edward's part since for a brief period, I did try retirement but have since opened an antique shop in the little village of Funkstown, Maryland.

"And finally, I think the whole business came about because our mail from Hagerstown to Hagerstown is shipped to Largo, Md. — seventy miles down the road — and then back again which is undoubtedly why we're paying 18 cents to mail a letter.

He also said, "I know that the last thing Kay wants is publicity and if I have inadvertently been a part to it, I apologize to him and his family for being so but I think that your readers should know that all during the war years of World War II, Kay Kyser and his band played countless engagements at military installations all over and never accepted a dollar's worth of profit for it. It takes a very special person to do this — you have a fifty carat pearl living down there — I wish we had him here."

Delays Save Dissent

By JAMES GERSTENZANG
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — It may not have been designed this way, but the Reagan administration's delay in filling sub-Cabinet positions means that there are fewer officials to dissent from the president's proposed budget cuts.

The time it has taken to fill the dozens of assistant secretary jobs in government departments has become a cause celebre in Washington. That's the way it always is about 100 days into a new administration.

This year, White House officials are blaming the delay on the extensive security and conflict-of-interest checks required by new laws, as well as the amount of time Senate committees are spending on their reviews of the nominees.

But there is little indication that they are troubled by the delays.

After all, said presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, assistant secretaries have traditionally become part of the alliance that fights cuts in spending for specific programs.

"That's one of the reasons why it's better to have an empty office than one filled with a holdover, and when you do fill the office, it will be with someone who is absolutely committed to the goals and objectives of this president," Meese said in an interview shortly after the Reagan administration took office.

Lyn Nofziger, the president's assistant for political affairs, said, "I know some of the department secretaries are concerned because not enough have

Is Diagnosis Realistic?

By KEVIN McKEAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — K. was an unusually frail 2-year-old. He weighed only 18 pounds and had suffered 26 flareups of a stubborn ear infection when he was admitted to the pediatric ward of a metropolitan teaching hospital.

K. was malnourished, so doctors theorized that his immune defenses were down. But the cause of the infections remained unknown.

K.'s young mother admitted she had sometimes neglected to feed the boy. Other times, she said, K. refused food and she had to stuff his mouth with a spoon and hold it shut until he swallowed.

In the intensive care unit, the child's condition stabilized, but he ate sparingly. Repeated tests still failed to establish a diagnosis.

Doctors were considering even more exotic tests when one young intern noticed the child could sometimes be coaxed to eat if he was made to feel loved and cared for.

The intern thought the tests, which involved jabbing K. with needles and tubes, might be frightening the infant. He had K. moved to a psychiatric ward where his problem could be addressed as partly emotional.

Then a new infection drove K. back to the ICU.

"Over the next nine weeks K. underwent the following procedures: CAT scan; barium swallow; upper GI; abdominal ultrasound; gastric biopsy; small-bowel biopsy; esophagoscopy; a bone marrow biopsy; numerous cultures of blood, urine, stool and throat; six lumbar punctures" and many more, the former intern writes in a new book.

The child stopped eating altogether and was put on intravenous feeding. The diagnosis remained a mystery when he died.

The intern, Harold Bursztajn, went on to become a psychiatrist at the Massachusetts Mental Health Center in Boston. But he remained deeply affected by the incident involving K.

The book Bursztajn wrote with three colleagues, "Medical Choices, Medical Chances," criticizes what the authors call the unrealistic and potentially dangerous quest for medical certainty that prompted the tests K. endured.

"The people who 'attacked' K. with needles were not sadistic," the authors say. They were trying to save his life.

Yet "many of the tests performed were, in fact, designed to identify diseases for which there was no known treatment," the authors say. "What then was the purpose of the testing? Was it to treat K. more effectively or to give the clinicians the reassurance of certain knowledge?'g 1the book goes further than just labeling medicine an inexact science. Bursztajn, Richard Feinbloom, Robert Hamm and Archie Brodsky assert there is no such thing as an "exact" science.

"The problem is, how do you cope with uncertainty when among the outcomes is the possiblity of death?" said Bursztajn, 30, who doubles as a primary care physician at Massachusetts General Hospital.

"When you go to a doctor with a chest pain, you want to know for certain whether it is a heart attack. But in many cases you can't know for certain. The uncertainty seems 'unscientific' and that leads to feelings of helplessness, hopelessness, worthlessness and aloneness," he said.

Doctors worry that if they can't be certain about a diagnosis, they are practicing outside the scientific method, he said.

Frustrated patients, on the other hand, sometimes claim malpractice and sue, or may turn to "alternative" therapies, like Laetrile, which promise cures.

In K.'s case, Bursztajn wanted to risk treating an undiagnosed illness in return for stopping the invasive tests he believed were frightening the infant into a hunger strike. But prevailing medical wisdom demanded an exact diagnosis.

The four authors trace this conflict to a deeper struggle between two philosophies of medicine they call the "mechanistic paradigm" and the "probabilistic paradigm."

Other Editors Say Pay Unthinkable

Goldsboro News-Argus

The attorney for Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood is demanding that the man who collaborated with the North Vietnamese be granted $147,000 in back pay, plus interest, and be given retroactive promotions.

The way some courts treat crooks and other despicable characters these days, Garwood might just get his money and his promotions.

Then, shortly, he probably would be eligible for lifetime retirement benefits.

Many veterans were willing to just shove Garwood behind them as an undesirable, undeserving of their further attention. But those who served honorably will not cotton to this man's coming out with a healthy bank roll and advancements in grade.

There can be no question but that he remained in North Vietnam of his own choosing when others were repatriated. For this country to give him back pay during years he worked for or sponged off an enemy nation should be unthinkable.

But we cannot always depend on our courts to be reasonable and just when they have an opportunity to attract wide attention by being shocking and controversial.

Red Cross is counting on you.

The Lines Are Getting Fuzzier

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Nobody can say when it will take place or exactly what it will look like, but there's a notion circulating that somewhere down the road there'll emerge a homogenized market for financial services.

Instead of going to the bank for cash, to your insurance agent for annuities, to your broker for stocks and to the local coin dealer for gold, you might deal with one outfit that will service all your needs.

They'll know a lot about you, from information you provide and from studying your activity file. They'll be able, as they say, to exercise client control or asset control — the terms are essentially the same.

Control, for one thing, would mean an end to the frustration of having a customer depart because he wanted stocks and you could only sell him insurance. The financial services company could satisfy him either way.

They might have mutually synergistic influences. With inflation and volatile interest rates, insurers today find their traditional fixed-return policies less attractive to customers. But when face values are based on the return of successful stock funds, which brokers have, the insurers might be able to offer security — and an inflation hedge.

The possibilities are numerous, as Harry Jacobs, chairman of Bache Group Inc., said last Wednesday, the day Prudential Insurance Co. gained 51 percent of his company. It was day for celebrating.

"Flexibility, stability, opportunity," Jacobs said several times. That, he said, is what Prudential means to Bache, whose operating arm, Bache Halsey Stuart Shields, is one of the biggest securities firms.

It also meant one more thing to Bache executives: Safety from another investor they frowned upon and feared, and had been trying to ward off for two years. But, said Jacobs, the positive reasons were stronger.

"The first thing we discussed with Prudential was the entrepreneurial nature of our business," he said. "We fluctuate between peaks and valleys." And, he said, securities "is a gigantic user of capital.

In the early 1970s, in fact, many brokers suceumbed to tight money problems. "If we can go to Prudential with ideas that would produce a satisfactory return of capital they might be interested," said Jacobs. "The insurance industry has vast amounts of money to put to work."

Bache can offer Prudential 65 different products, including money funds, stocks, mutual funds, commodities and gold, some of which might be candidates for eventual integration into the insurance product.

That day is still far off, said Jacobs. For the immediate future "the insurance agent and the broker will be distinct, but the cutting edges along the sides will change," he said. Gradually, he feels, the 'crisp line" may blur, perhaps leading to a hybrid "financial planner."

Right now Jacobs' commitment is to "good common stocks carefully selected and held for a long period of time." He declares the future will be good to such investments, and he offers his reasons why.

Fueling the future, he sees a shift from consumption to production, with "great changes' in the tax laws as an incentive.

He predicts the long-term corporate tax rate may drop to 21 percent to 28 percent, that there will be "a tendency" to move the unearned income tax bracket to 50 percent from 70, that a tax credit for venture capital will be granted, and that the double tax on dividends may end.

Four business days after Prudential said it had acquired 51 percent of Bache, another merger, of American Express and Shearson Loeb Rhoades, was announced.

Synergistic? American Express has overseas banking operations. It also has a plastic card that might be used to withdraw money from a broker's cash management account. Customers of Merrill Lynch, the biggest securities firm, use a similar a card to tap assets on deposit with that broker.

But isn't that banking? Yes, it is. But under the trampling of new financial products and the constant testing of laws, the lines between companies in the financial services industry are getting fuzzier.

To the editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to the letter published from Karen M. Downes on April 15, 1981 concerning the Greenville Museum of Art Sidewalk Art Show on April 11, 1981.

Due to lack of funding, the Museum had to cut back on award money for all categories, both professional and amateur, as well as the public school divisions. The Museum regretted having to curtail the cash awards, but simply had no choice. I would like to point out that GMA's Sidewalk Show is one of the few which has allowed artists to enter in different categories offering cash awards on all levels of expertise. Most juried competitions do not offer public schools and amateur divisions at all.

If awards and prizes are the important aspect of entering a show such as the Sidewalk Art Show, then perhaps everyone should enter as a professional artist!

Favor Some Gun Control

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — Public support for tough gun legislation — similar to the Bartley-Fox law now in effect in Massachusetts — has increased sharply since one year ago, with 62 percent of Americans now favoring adoption of a similar law in their own states.

The Bartley-Fox law has two provisions: (1) persons must have a license to carry a handguns outside their homes, and (2) persons convicted of carrying guns without a license are given a mandatory sentence of one year in jail.

Among the 50 states only Massachusetts and New York impose mandatory sentences for persons carrying an unlicensed handgun regardless of whether or not they are involved in the commission of a felony.

Backers of the Massachusetts statue maintain it has been effective in preventing violent crimes in the six years since it was enacted. The New York law was approved only last summer.

But Continue To Oppose Ban

Although support had grown for tough gun laws such as those in Massachusetts and New York, and while a large majority continues to favor stricter laws covering the SALE of handguns, the public continues to vote against an outright ban, with 58 percent of Americans opposed to a law which would forbid the possession of handguns except by police and other authorized persons. At present only Washington, D.C., has a law banning the outright private possession of handguns.

One possible explanation for the apparent inconsistency between support for stricter gun laws, on the one hand, and opposition to a ban on handguns on the other, is that the growing fear of crime has caused many people to believe they need a gun for self-protection — a false security measure in the opinion of many experts.

Recent national Gallup surveys highlight the concern over violence and crime in our society.

1. A majority of the public now take crime prevention measures, with 16 percent saying they have bought a gun for proteciton.

2. Crime was uppermost in the minds of urban residents asked last year to name the top problem facing their cities and neighborhoods. In contrast, a quarter of a century ago, crime was not even among the top 10 problems named.

3. A 54 percent majority of Americans say there is more crime in their communities than a year ago, with this perception common to every region of the nation and in cities of all sizes; 1977 43 percent reported a rise in crime where they live.

4. Fear of crime has grown, with 45 percent now saying they are afraid to walk alone at night in their neighborhood.

5. One household in four has been hit by crime at least once in the last 12 months, with either property stolen or a household member the victim of a physical assault — an increase since the previous (1979) Gallup survey, when the proportion was closer to one in five.

Here are the questions asked in the current survey:

"In Massachusetts a law requires that a person who carries a gun outside his home must have a license to do so. Would you approve or disapprove of having such a law in your state?"

Following is the national trend:

Approve Of Law Requiring License?

	Approve	Disapprove	Don't Know
Latest (April 3-6)	81%	17%	2%
1980	75	20	5
1975	77	19	4

All persons approving of this provision were than asked:

"Under the Massachusetts law, anyone who is convicted of carrying a gun outside his home without having obtained a license is sentenced to a mandatory year in jail. Would you approve or disapprove of this? Here are the latest results — with both the major provision included — and the trend:

Plan Based On Massachusetts Law

	Approve	Disapprove	Don't Know	Against Licensing
April 3-6	62%	17%	2%	19%

The "mechanistic paradigm," they say, views medicine as exact and predictable: every disease has a cause, tests can reveal the cause, and chance applies only when the cause is incompletely known.

In the "probabilistic paradigm," cause and chance are inextricably linked. Physicians may know that a certain food additive causes cancer. But it may happen in only a small percentage of cases. Or it may happen only with factors like stress or a constptutional susceptibility.

The probabilistic model views tests more critically since every one runs the risk of worsening the illness, Bursztajn said, adding that probabilistic thinking also demands that the patient's and doctor's wishes and emotions play a role in decisions.

Bursztajn and Feinbloom, who is director of Harvard's Family Health Care Program, say they have tried to apply these principles in their practice. They encourage patients to think of their treatment as a series of choices, each carrying the potential for benefit or harm, which they and the doctor must make together, Bursztajn said.

"When you go to the race track, there's a good way to gamble and a foolish way to gamble. We teach our patients to gamble well as a way of maintaining some control in the face of uncertainty," he said.

In Greensboro Sit-In Their Action Changed The Course Of History

By NOEL YANCEY

One of the four black youths recalled later that they were scared to death when they entered the F.W. Woolworth store at Greensboro that February day in 1960 and finally built up the courage to sit down at the lunch counter.

"I was the most fearful," David Richmond recalled 20 years later. "If you had said, 'boo,' I would probably have fallen off the lunch counter stool."

But the four young men, 17 and 18 years old and students at North Carolina A & T State University, made history that day. Their action sparked sit-in demonstrations that in a few days spread to 54 cities in nine states. Within a year, more than 100 cities had desegregated some public facilities.

In Greensboro that afternoon, the waitresses asked the youths to leave. So did the manager. He called the police when they did not comply.

"When the police arrived, they just stood there," Richmond related. "They didn't know what to do."

The following day, 41 black students — 27 men and 14 women — seated themselves at the Woolworth lunch counter. Many studied as they waited — in vain — to be served.

The Woolworth district manager in Atlanta said the store had not refused to serve anyone, but the waitresses "have been busy, and they couldn't get around to everybody."

The movement continued to pick up momentum. At one time the following day, 63 of the 66 seats at the lunch counter were occupied by students, and additional students waited to occupy seats when their fellows had to leave. Waitresses were seated at the other three seats. No one was served. A stand-up counter where black and white alike had been served was closed. Woolworth explained that its policy was to abide by local custom in matters of segregation.

State Attorney General Malcolm Seawell told reporters North Carolina had no law forbidding merchants from serving both blacks and whites at lunch counters. Nor was there a law requiring a business to serve anyone it did not wish to serve.

The A & T students were joined by three whites from Woman's College and black high school students in their daily sit-ins as the movement spread to Kress, another Greensboro variety store. Police escorted some whites from both stores after they began yelling and screaming at the blacks, using racial slurs. The blacks ignored the remarks.

By the fifth day, an estimated 250 to 300 persons — both blacks and whites — were on hand as the demonstrations at Woolworth's continued. The blacks continued to occupy seats at the lunch counter. Several white men and women were escorted from the store. Three white men were arrested for disorderly conduct, including one charged with assault for setting fire to the coat of a seated black student. He was not injured. The local Ku Klux Klan leader was in the store most of the day, saying he was there 'to take care of my men and to keep violence to a minimum."

Both the Woolworth and Kress stores were closed the following day — a Saturday — following a hoax bomb scare. Police said the closing averted at least temporarily an "extremely dangerous" situation. Several hundred A & T students, a large number of whites who planned a counter-demonstration and hundreds of patrons and curious bystanders were on hand when the evacuation was ordered. Both groups had paraded through the aisles, bearing American and Confederate flags.

At a mass meeting that night, the A & T students agreed to suspend their demonstrations for two weeks to give the stores time to set policies on food service to blacks.

Meanwhile, the movement begun by the four A & T students continued to spread — to Durham, Raleigh, Salisbury, Winston-Salem and other cities. A group of 50 blacks and whites who demanded service at a Howard Johnson restaurant near Chapel Hill departed after being threatened with arrest. But "We'll be back," asserted a black, a student at N.C. Central University in Durham. The building housing the restaurant was owned by Gov. Luther H. Hodges and U.S. Sen. B. Everett Jordan.

At Raleigh, where 43 blacks were arrested on trespass charges, black and white ministers joined in issuing a statement urging that all persons be treated in accordance with Christian principles in all community relationships. At Winston-Salem 12 blacks and 10 Wake Forest University students were given suspended sentences after they were charged with trespass at Woolworth's lunch counter.

Family Day Care Did Job For Community

BLUE RIDGE, Ga. — "We started thinking of family day care," says organizer and parent Leslie Lilly, "because center-based care just didn't seem feasible. We didn't have the money it takes to put up a day care building which would meet the rigid state requirements. It seemed that a less urban solution would work better anyway, for our rural area."

Today, the Blue Ridge Child Development Family Day Care Center that Leslie Lilly and other parents helped to establish in 1977 in Blue Ridge, Georgia, serves over 70 children in a network of 14 day care homes throughout the county. The day care providers — caring for four or five children (including their own) in their homes — are not directly employed by the Center. Instead, the Center selects and trains the providers and then refers families to them.

The Center's professionally staffed central office offers training, support services and a variety of equipment to the day care providers. "Our big push is to help them provide real child development, not just babysitting," says the Center's child development specialist Cheryl Brown. "It's excellent child care, but it's in a more home-like setting than you would get in a day care center, and there's more opportunity for individual attention. The children can really feel that they're in a home away from home."

Blue Ridge is a small community in the mountains of North Georgia. Despite a recent influx of new industry and jobs, wages for many workers in the area — particularly the women — still hover around the minimum wage. The main employers are several textile mills — including a Levi-Strauss plant employing several hundred women.

Levi-Strauss has played a crucial role in the history of Blue Ridge Family Day Care. An initial grant from the Levi Strauss Foundation enabled Leslie Lilly and the other parents to set up the central office; the Center was also able to use the same grant as the local "seed money" required to obtain operating funds from the federal Title XX program.

Title XX pays the office budget as well as paying fees ($22.50 a week) for the 40 children who qualify for assistance under the program. Almost all of these children are supported solely by single parents. Title XX also pays for medical and dental checkups for the qualifying children. A USDA food program, which reimburses the providers for the money they spend on food for the children, is available to all the providers if their menus meet certain standards for nutritional balance. Jim Clark, former director of the Center, says the USDA program has helped cut down on anemia and other diet-related deficiencies among the children.

The Center staff puts a strong emphasis on the selection and training of good day care providers. It holds three-day training sessions for each new group of providers about once a year — "or whenever we need to," says Cheryl Brown.

Ms. Brown, who's in charge of the training, feels that the extra energy the Center puts into selecting, training and supporting the day care mothers more than pays off in terms of the high quality care the children receive. Flexibility is another asset of family day care; for instance, the program can usually find a provider to care for children whose parents must work a night shift. In addition, says Ms. Brown, people in this traditional mountain community seem more willing to accept a federally funded day care project when the providers are their own neighbors.

"We met with some suspicion at first," she recalls. "But when people later hear that so-and-so who lives down the road works in our program, and she's so-and-so's cousin, and she's really good, then they feel better about it. We've built up a pretty good reputation in the county by this time."

The providers, too, enjoy being able to earn a decent amount of money while retaining the privacy of their homes, Cherly Brown says. "We do a lot of monitoring, but they're not under anybody's thumb. They can arrange things to suit their own needs, and those of the children they're caring for, which they couldn't so much is they were working in a big day care center."

Despite its obvious success — the Blue Ridge project has become a model for family day care programs across the South — future funding for the Center remains a headache. The Levi-Strauss grant and the grant from the Applachian Regional Commission were both given as "seed money" on the premise that the Center would soon become financially independant.

The Center is working to expand the number of fee-paying children, to lessen its dependence on both Title XX and private funding. But Jim Clark says that due to the lack of support for child care in this country, self-sufficiency is not a realistic goal.

"There's just some things that the private sector cannot take care of," says Clark. "The public has to realize that we need to do them, amyway, and be willing to pay for them."

WHO ELSE COULD GET AWAY WITH THAT?

By Gail Michaels

God Hasn't Awarded Her With Patience

Patience is not one of my virtues. I used to pray for it every morning. "God, grant me patience to get through this day with Meg."

Unfortunately, God has not yet seen fit to grant it. By the time I get Meg off to preschool in the morning, I have lost all pretense of civility. Perhaps if Meg were a more cooperative child, I might stand a better chance of staying calm. But Meg is determined to do things her own way at her own pace.

The more agitated I get, the slower and more deliberate she gets. Yesterday morning was a perfect example. Even though I overslept, Meg insisted on her usual hot breakfast.

"Can't you eat cereal this morning? We're running late."

"What kind do you have?"

"Cheerios and Raisin Bran."

She made a horrible face. "Eggs and toast, please."

"But Meg, I don't have time to fix an egg."

"You don't have to boil it. Fried will do."

I repeated my little prayer and broke an egg into a saucepan. After I set her order in front of her, I prepared Zachary's cereal.

"I would like another egg," she stated as I sat down to feed Zachary.

"I don't have time to fix another egg, and that's that!"

"But I'm still hungry," she moaned. "Breakfast is the most important meal of the day, and you want to send me to school without enough to eat."

I clenched my teeth. "How about another piece of toast?"

She considered my offer. "Okay. Not plain toast though, Cheese."

By the time I took her cheese toast out of the oven, I had only 20 minutes in which to shower and dress. Naturally, Meg was still in pajamas, too.

"Don't dawdle over this toast," I said. "We're going to be late as it is."

She proceeded to eat it a pinch at a time.

"Hurry up!" I snapped. "We don't have all day!"

She sighed. "Don't be so impatient, Mommy. I'm just a little girl."

She was still working on the toast when I emerged from my shower. I was furious. I pushed her into the bathroom and told her to brush her teeth while I chose an outfit for her. I laid her clothes on the bed. She was still putting toothpaste on her toothbrush.

I entreated her to make haste. She brushed each tooth with the zeal of a Crest executive. I finally grabbed her toothbrush and finished the job myself.

Then, ignoring her protests that she was no longer a baby, I dressed her. She responded by faking rigor mortis. I handed her her socks and growled, "Now you put on your socks and shoes while I get dressed."

"I don't know where my shoes are," she whined.

After 10 minutes we found one shoe under my bed and another on the third shelf of the bookcase.

"I can't believe this," I groaned as I looked at the clock. "You've made us 10 minutes late already."

She stood calmly watching me. "It seems to me that since you're the one who's not dressed yet, you're the one who's making us late."

At that moment I stopped praying for patience. Now I pray for self-control.

Janet Cooke Story Embarrassing For The Press

WASHINGTON — Those of us in the news business will be a long time getting over little Jimmy. For my own part, I pray to high heaven we will never get over little Jimmy. This bogus little fellow can teach us some painful lessons.

Ten days after the story began to unfold, the hurt and the anger persist. For the record: On the morning of Tuesday the 14th, the Washington Post proudly reported on page 1 that the Pulitzer Prize for feature writing had been awarded to its own Janet Cooke. The Post took a full-page house ad to reprint her prize-winning story, an account of an 8-year-old heroin addict.

Because I had missed the original piece when it appeared last September, I read it with fresh interest. It was a superb story — beautiful quotes, vivid narration, gripping details of the actual shooting of heroin. Great reporting, I said.

On Wednesday the 15th it all fell apart. There was no Jimmy. Miss Cooke had contrived him. On Thursday the Post apologized editorially. The Pulitzer board withdrew the prize. Miss Cooke resigned. This past Sunday the Post carried a four-page report by its ombudsman, Bill Green, explaining but not excusing the fraud.

So much for the facts. I happened to be in San Francisco when the story of Janet Cooke exploded. Reading of her anguish, I reacted as many others must have reacted to the ruined career of a talented young woman. The poor kid, I said. In the next second, I reacted as a newspaperman. I could strangle that girl, I said. Whatever harm she may have done to herself, it isn't a patch on what she has done to all the rest of us. In our business, the news business, all we have to sell is our own credibility. This slick little liar has tainted our whole stock in trade.

In its Thursday editorial, the Post said it would be an error and a shame if "serious students and critics of the press" should take the Jimmy episode as evidence that such feature stories are largely fabrications. That isn't the problem. Serious students and critics will know better. The problem is that ordinary readers will leap to such an unwarranted conclusion.

To our discomfiture, it has to be acknowledged that many of our readers today share an opinion voiced by an angry Thomas Jefferson as far back as 1807: "Nothing can now be believed which is seen in a newspaper." A Gallup Poll last November found that only 42 percent of the people have a "great deal" or "quite a lot" of confidence in newspapers — a drop of nine points from 1979. Long before Janet Cooke came along, we were in deep trouble. Jimmy makes bad matters worse.

The Post has behaved honorably and professionally in confessing error. Mr. Green's extended post-mortem examination provides an impeccable account of editors who reposed too much trust in a gifted phony. But the purpose of such pathology is twofold — to discover mistakes, and to deter their repetition.

What must be done? For starters, let me suggest that we kill all those gorgeous features about Helen, the 14-year-old prostitute — the stories that begin by saying, "That isn't her real name, of course." Let us be sparing — very sparing — about those quotes we attribute to unidentified spokesmen, senior officials and reliable sources. Plenty of real-life Helens can be identified from court records; as for public officials with a passion for anonymity, we can ask ourselves if they are using us or we are using them.

Without abandoning hard investigative reporting, we can insist that in extraordinary cases, when sources cannot be identified, the responsible editors demand corroboration. We can make a repentant vow to get back to what we do best — straight reporting of the news, uncolored by pink opinions and purple prose.

Miss Cooke's personal story is essentially a story of what the Greeks called hubris, a story of exaggerated ambition and self-confidence that result in retribution. Like Icarus, she soared too high; and the sun of truth melted the wax with which her wings were fastened. Let us remember the legend, the brilliant rise and the terrible fall, and let us try harder the next time around.

been confirmed."

Nofziger's job includes making sure, before a nomination can move forward, that a candidate's political history and current beliefs will fit in with the rest of the administration. He said the impact of the delays was "minimal," although they do mean that on occasion there are "not enough people available to testify" about the president's program on Capitol Hill.

"I don't think the administration has been crippled," he said.

For instance, he said, "we've been able to act, we've acted in terms of cutting back federal employees and federal regulations (and) firing Democrats."

Such efforts as Nofziger's are perfectly legitimate, in the view of Lester Korn, a Los Angeles-based executive recruiter.

"A president, who has run a campaign where the issues were so clearly drawn, has a right to make sure the people he is putting in are ideolgically supportive of the changes he wants to make."

One Carter administration holdover, a Democrat who frequently criticized White House political operations in the past four years, speaks approvingly now about what he sees as a more political orientation that can mean more White House control over the departments.

"Look at every agency," he said. "There's a political commissar who is not the secretary's person, who is there to look out for the political side of the operations."

Another Democrat, whose Washington experience includes work at the White House and for a senator, said the personnel delays are showing no signs of becoming a problem and would be so only if debates over nominees become fractious.

One White House official, asking anonymity, said the appointments process is running at the same speed as in previous administrations. But having said that, he added: "If you are as slow as we are, you have a lag" in getting a program under way.

Korn, whose firm has played a close but largely unofficial role in helping to fill the administration positions, said some of the criticism about the slow process "will go away as more and more jobs are filled."

He said the administration is processing in about three months as many positions as a large executive search firm goes through in one year.

"Very few businesses would complain about the pace," he said.

Anti-Nuclear Forces March In Several U.S. Cities

By The Associated Press

Seventeen people were arrested Saturday in Groton, Conn., for spilling bottles of blood at the launching of the nuclear attack submarine Corpus Christi in one of many anti-nuclear weapons protests coordinated in dozens of cities around the country.

The demonstrations, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee, also focused on MX missile and cruise missile installations as well as firms that make nuclear weapons components.

In Groton, about 600 demonstrators denounced the launching of the nuclear submarine Corpus Christi as blasphemous. Police said 17 people were arrested, some of them for tossing bottles of blood on the sidewalk outside the administration building of the Electric Boat shipyard.

Police said all 17 were released on their recognizance.

Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. praised the craft, named after the city in Texas, as "an instrument of peace," but the demonstrators denounced the choice of a name, which means "body of Christ" in Latin.

There also was a rally and teach-in, which included speeches by Nobel Prize winning physicist George Wald, nuclear physicist Michio Kaku. Elmer Maas and Dean Hammer, members of the Plowshares 8 who broke into a weapons assembly plant and damaged an unarmed warhead with hammers, were also present.

About 150 people gathered for the fourth consecutive year in an interfaith prayer service just north of the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant in Golden, Colo. It is the only facility in the country that produces plutonium for nuclear weapons.

Factory guards were called in, but there was no violence and there were no arrests. More than 300 people were arrested during the three previous protests.

In Denver, about 20 miles away, Roman Catholic Auxiliary Bishop George Evans, wearing a cowboy hat, led a mile-long column of about 6,000 people who converged on the state Capitol to protest the manufacture of weapons at Rocky Flats.

More than a dozen actions were planned in California. In one, about 40 protesters — some jogging, others on bicycles and roller skates — marched about seven miles in California's San Fernando Valley past Rockwell International plants where MX missiles and nuclear reactor components are built. No trouble was reported.

In the San Francisco Bay area, more than 200 protestors showed up at the Naval Weapons Station in Concord, and about 100 more staged a demonstration at the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory.

Marches described by authorities as "very peaceful, very orderly and very well-organized were held outside the Moffet Naval Air Station in Mountain View and the Alameda Naval Air Station.

Another demonstration was held near Mather Air Force Base near Sacramento. Demonstrations were also planned at Lockheed aircraft plants near Sunnyvale and Santa Cruz and at Castle Air Force Base near Merced in the San Joaquin Valley.

The California marches were co-sponsored by the Nuclear Weapons Facilities Task Force, which draws its membership mainly from communities where nuclear arms are produced, tested or deployed.

Both pro- and anti- nuclear power groups appeared at a rally near the site of the Bailly Nuclear Plant in Burns Harbor, Ind. The anti-nuclear demonstrators included local and district officials of the United Steelworkers union, the Citizens Action Coalition of Indiana and Save the Dunes.

Both supporters and opponents of nuclear power were permitted to address the crowd of about 1,000 at the plant site, adjacent to a Bethlehem Steel plant along Lake Michigan, although demonstrators against the nuclear facility far outnumbered those in favor of construction. The rally was peaceful.

Opponents, who released thousands of balloons they said signified higher electric rates, claim that no adequate evacuation plans have been prepared in case of a nuclear accident at Bailly.

About 70 people marched peacefully in Damascus, Ark., where an airman was killed last year in an explosion at a Titan missile silo.

About 60 people protested the nuclear arms race at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Bae in Gwinn, near Marquette in Michigan's Upper Peninsula. They were also opposng the Navy's underground low-frequency antenna project for communication with nuclear submarines.

A similar demonstration was held in Clam Lake, Wis.

A group of about 75 students held a prayer service in front of the Winston-Salem City Hall. Standing under the city's All-American City banner, they sang "The Star-Spangled Banner, "My Country Tis of Thee," and "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and recited the Lord's Prayer.

"We just want to let the people know we will not tolerate second-class citizenship any longer," said Carl Matthews, who had started the demonstrations in Winston-Salem a month before by sitting down at the lunch counter in the Kress store.

Meanwhile, four North Carolinians — three whites and a black — were among a panel of six persons who appeared on NBC's Today Show to discuss black demonstrations against segregated facilities in the South.

The panelists included I. Beverly Lake, a Raleigh attorney who later twice ran for governor unsuccessfully under the banner of strict segregation. Lake asserted that if segregation of restaurants ended, "you would have chaos." Mayor George R. Herndon of Fayetteville said blacks would achieve integration "if they don't take it too fast."

Ex-Senator Suspected Bid Rigging

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Former U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan said when he was state attorney general from 1968 through 1974 he suspected highway contractors of rigging bids but could never prove it.

He said he said nothing to Govs. Bob Scott and Jim Holshouser because, "they were suspicions, and just that. If I had had any concrete evidence I would have passed it along."

Morgan even tried unsuccessfully to gather some evidence. Once he sent two college students to a contractors' party as bartenders in early 1973 to listen in on conversations but nothing came of the attempt.

Paving contractors convicted of arranging bids on highway projects have testified that the practice has been widespread in North Carolina for more than 35 years. But the practice went undetected until federal officials caught Rea Construction Co. of Charlotte in a rigged bid in early 1980.

Since then Rea officials' testimony has led to the conviction of dozens of officials and companies.

Morgan was defeated last November by Republican John East after serving six years in the U.S. Senate. He is now practicing law in Raleigh.

When he was attorney general he said he often wondered why some contractors won all the paving contracts in certain areas.

Aside from his one attempt with the college students, Morgan said he took no other investigative action.

"We were a lot more concerned about price fixing than bid-rigging," he said.

He said bid-rigging is difficult to prove "until you break somebody down" and get them to testify.

While manager of I. Beverly Lake's unsuccessful gubernatorial campaign in 1960, Morgan said he was offered a large campaign contribution if the donor, who he refuse to name, could name the transportation department district engineer in his area if Lake won. Morgan said the donation was refused.

Morgan, a Democrat, did not run for governor in 1972 because he feared favors of certain kinds would be asked of him. One of those favors he feared, he said, might have included leaking confidential state engineer's cost estimates on highway projects.

Chestnut Dies In Auto Wreck

LUMBERTON, N.C. (UPI) — William S. "Bill" Chestnut, an unsuccessful candidate in last year's Democratic primary for state auditor and a former mayor of Maxton, died early Saturday in a head-on collision on Interstate 95, Lumberton police said.

Chestnut, 49, was killed when his car crossed the median and struck an oncoming, said Police Chief H.C. Britt. The accident remained under investigation Saturday.

Six occupants of the van, all of them from New York City, were hospitalized for injuries. Police said the van was driven by Neal Robert Nelson, of Flushing, N.Y.

Chestnut, the finance director for Pembroke State University, was traveling south on I-95 after attending the annual Chancellor's Ball for faculty and staff members.

William S. Mason Jr., the PSU vice chancellor for business affairs, said school officials were stunned by Chestnut's death.

"It was a shock to all of us. He was a very loyal and honest, dedicated employee. He was well-liked by all his associates," said Mason.

A native of Mount Olive, Chestnut graduated from Atlantic Christian College and was a certified public accountant. He served as mayor of Maxton for two terms from 1975 to 1979.

Chestnut lost to State Auditor Ed Renfrow last year in a Democratic primary campaign marked by the erroneous candidacy of a registered Republican.

Renfrow led the balloting in the May primary but failed to get a majority over Chestnut, who finished second.

Helms Says Wanted To 'Alert' Haig About Appointment Fears

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an unusual letter, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., outlined on Saturday his rationale for actions that have contributed to long delays in the appointment of a number of top aides to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

As a result of Helms' tactics, several major State Department posts remain unfilled almost 100 days after President Reagan's inauguration.

The targets of Helms' opposition have been carrying out their duties but their authority and their ability to deal with foreign governments have been weakened because they have not completed the Senate confirmation process.

Helms, a leader of the Republican party's conservative wing, explained his position in a 10-page single-spaced letter to Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman Charles Percy, R-Ill. A copy of the letter was obtained by The Associated Press.

Helms, also a Foreign Relations Committee member, denied press accounts that he has been "holding up" the nominations. Instead, Helms said, he requested "holds" on a number of nominations to "alert" Haig and White House officials to his concerns about the appointments.

He noted that the constitution mandates that presidential nominations be made with the advice and consent of the Senate. A Helms aide said the senator believed his actions were proper because they had the support of many other Senate conservatives.

"My only desire is to do whatever I can to try to assure that the policymakers nominated in the name of the president actually reflect, to the fullest extent possible, the president's views," Helms wrote.

All told, Helms raised questions about eight nominees. He suggested his concerns about four of the nominees have been eased as a result of clarifications of their policy views and other factors. One of the four, M. Peter McPherson, has since been confirmed as administrator of the Agency for International Development.

Of the remaining four, Helms' harshest criticism was directed at Chester Crocker, the assistant secretary of state-designate for African affairs.

Even though he lacked Senate confirmation, Crocker, formerly of Georgetown University, recently undertook a 10-country trip to Africa.

"Mr. Crocker's performance in Africa, by accounts that I have received, bordered on being dismal," Helms wrote. "Heads of state refused to see him. Instead of building new friendships for the U.S., he appears to have succeeded in antagonizing the left while alienating old allies."

"The question is: Does Mr. Crocker reflect the Reagan viewpoint on Africa, as laid out by the president during the campaign? Is it not obvious that the president and our nation would be better served by another individual?"

Helms was gentler in his criticism of Thomas O. Enders, nominated last Wednesday as assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

Helms called Enders, a former Ambassador to Canada and to the European Economic Community, a "highly qualified and dedicated civil servant."

But Helms said the Latin American affairs post was not Enders' first choice and that he lacks training and experience in that area. "There probably are many areas where Mr. Enders' talent could be put to better use," Helms said.

Helms said he objects to career diplomat John Holdridge as assistant secretary of state for East Asia because he "has encouraged a tilt toward the People's Republic of China." This, Helms said, "is in no way in tune with the tone, spirit or detail of President Reagan's campaign commitments."

Finally, Helms expressed "great concern" about the appointment of Myer Rashish as undersecretary of state for economics affairs, alleging that he does not support Reagan's economic and foreign policies.

He also said Rashish may have "mixed loyalties" because of his previous service as a representative of private firms located principally in West Germany and France.

Richardson First Casualty

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Warren S. Richardson is the first casualty of the Reagan administration — an almost inevitable political development once his past job with a group even he considers anti-Semitic and racist became a public issue.

Richardson, 57, chief lobbyist for the Liberty Lobby from 1969 to 1973, asked Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker late Friday to drop plans to nominate him as assistant HHS secretary. He also will resign as Schweiker's special assistant.

Had the nomination gone forward as announced, it would have meant a confirmation battle that would have forced the administration into an uncomfortable political position.

With President Reagan already under fire from minorities and his economic plan at a delicate stage, the last thing the administration wanted was to spend valuable political capital on what a relatively minor matter.

"In fairness to you and the president, I cannot allow a protracted political battle over my nomination to impede the progress through the Congress of this administration's crucial economic agenda," Richardson wrote Schweiker.

Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., who strongly opposed the nomination, said Saturday he had "indications" both Republicans and Democrats on the Senate Finance Committee "were going to make a tough fight of it" if Richardson's name came before them for approval.

Schweiker said in acknowledging Richardson's withdrawal that "a careful review produced no convincing evidence that Warren Richardson is or ever was anti-Semitic or racist."

Richardson earlier this week condemned the Liberty Lobby and said he stayed with the ultra conservative group because of "massive" family financial problems.

David Newhall, Schweiker's top aide, said he knew Richardson as a lobbyist for other groups and called him a "decent, honorable man." Newhall, who screens appointments for Schweiker, said he did not know what the Liberty Lobby was.

"It's not exactly your mainstream organization. People knew they were right wing but not that they stood for the vile things that they did," a top HHS aide said.

Helms' Aide Turns Down Offer, Wants To Remain In Capitol

WASHINGTON (UPI) — On the whole, John E. Carbaugh would rather be in Washington.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig offered to send him to Paraguay recently as American ambassador but the offer was "politely declined."

"The thing speaks for itself," Carbaugh replies with a smile when asked whether he thought Haig and others in the State Department might have wanted him out of Washington — and out their hair.

But he denies he is the foreign policy wheeler-dealer he is made out to be.

Carbaugh, 35, is foreign policy adviser to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who sees himself as the conservative conscience of the Senate, in general, and of its Foreign Relations Committee in particular.

As Helms' key foreign policy aide — a position he obviously enjoys — Carbaugh is said to be the force behind the senator's legislative hold on at least seven key State Department nominations. Most of those nominees are Haig's personal choices.

Perhaps it is in that context that the March 18 offer by Haig should be seen.

Carbaugh confirmed to UPI the offer was made but wouldn't say much more about it.

"I politely declined, thanked him and told him I appreciated the sincerity in which (the ambassadorship) was offered," he said. "I am deeply honored ... but I can serve the country better on Capitol Hill than in Paraguay."

Carbaugh made clear that as long as he works for Helms, he has no desire to go to Paraguay or to any other post in the State Department.

"The State Department is a great meat grinder and I am not interested in getting ground up. Having sat there during the transition ... I feel now it is better to stay up here (on Capitol Hill) where I know how the system operates," he said.

It was during the transition period that Carbaugh, who had been known mainly in congressional circles, became widely known overseas, especially in Latin America, one of his main areas of interest.

Would he have accepted another embassy?. "I long ago gave up any thought of seeking a position down there (the State Department)," he replied.

Carbaugh, like his boss, is a conservative and proud of it. They want fellow conservatives — "dyed-in-the-wool Reaganites" — in key positions in both the Defense and State departments.

And also like Helms, Carbaugh questions the conservative credentials of some of the key regional assistant secretaries of state whose confirmations are being held up, much to the dismay of the State Department.

Carbaugh made clear that the concerns of the State Department do not particulaly worry him. He said that by involving himself in the State Department nomination process he is merely doing his job as Helms' aide.

"Any power that I may have, such as it may be, does not come from my position as a staffer. It comes through Jesse Helms ... who has been gracious enough to give me a wide berth," he said.

"But he also has a nice leash attached to me and he reins me in," Carbaugh said. "I was not elected by the people of North Carolina to do anything."

Senator To Take Stand In Abscam Bribery Trial

NEW YORK (UPI) — The key confrontation in the Abscam bribery-conspiracy trial of Sen. Harrison Williams is expected to resume Monday when Williams faces renewed cross-examination by a hardnosed prosecutor with a flair for sarcasm.

Prosecutor Thomas Puccio, 36, who has already successfully prosecuted four former Congressmen convicted in previous Abscam trials, gave one of the Senate's most senior members a taste of his style during 75 minutes of savage cross-examination Friday afternoon.

The New Jersey Democrat, a 22-year senate veteran, spoke slowly and haltingly as Puccio paced the packed courtroom and peppered Williams with questions dripping with sarcasm and disbelief.

The confrontation between the two men pits a slender, intense lawyer with an almost unbroken record of courtroom success against a polished political performer and speaker who hasn't lost an election since he went to the Senate in 1958 as the first New Jersey Democrat elected to the Senate in 20 years.

Williams, 61, is charged with agreeing to use his position to obtain government contracts for a titanium mine he held a concealed 18 percent interest in. His trial in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn is entering its 5th week.

The government contends that the senator believed an undercover FBI agent posing as a wealthy Arab sheik would finance the venture with a $100 million loan in exchange for assurances that Williams would use his political clout to obtains contracts.

New Bill May Soften Uniform Sentencing Law

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A bill that sailed through the state Senate with little opposition last week is being viewed by some opponents of the state's new uniform sentencing law as a way to soften its effects.

And proponents of the criminal sentencing act, which takes effect July 1, acknowledge the bill makes some key concessions to opponents.

The uniform sentencing act — strongly pushed by Gov. Jim Hunt, adopted by the General Assembly in 1979 and altered by the Legislature this year — sets up standard prison terms for each category of crime. A judge may vary from the presumed sentence, but must say in writing why he did so.

The House and Senate recently approved a set of amendments to the act, which would reduce the presumed sentences and give prosecutors an exemption when they are plea-bargaining sentences.

For example, first-degree murder will still be punishable by death or life imprisonment, with eligibility for parole after 20 years. One major change, however, is for people convicted of second-degree murder, now punishable by life imprisonment. The new law will make that a 12-year sentence with a probable release after six years.

"The governor wants fair sentencing to work the way it was originally designed," Zeb Alley, Hunt's legislative liaison, said in an interview. "That means all people ... will get pretty near the same sentence."

But a bill introduced by Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, and approved last week by the Senate would allow some people to avoid prosecution and a possible criminal record. The bill, in certain cases, would permit a defendant to avoid a trial — and a guilty verdict — if he serves a probationary term of up to two years.

Those qualifying for the "deferred prosecution" would be people charged with crimes punishable by up to 10 years in jail — crimes including larceny, breaking and entering, many serious drug law violations and fraud.

People would be allowed to defer prosecution only once, and if they should violate the terms of their probation, they automatically would face prosecution.

Supporters say the bill is aimed at young people, who may be influenced by their peers or who are led astray by older friends or relatives.

"It is to target and treat people who would not likely be repeaters," Alley said. "It would mean something to society to save a person of that caliber from a criminal record."

Alley says Hunt has not taken formal position on the bill, but that the governor likes the part of Swain's bill that would "allow judges to salvage a person that would be beneficial to society."

But he acknowledges that same discretion was targeted for elimination under the uniform sentencing act, and was part of Hunt's argument for swift, certain punishment.

Alley also acknowledges the lack of opposition to Swain's bill "is a concession in that opponents constantly are saying fair sentencing would crowd the prison population.

"This technically would avoid some people going to prison," Alley said. "It will keep the prison population down to some extent."

Swain contends his bill addresses two concerns of uniform sentencing opponents — a potential rise in the prison population and a decrease in discretion for judges.

And it appears to have the support of some judges, lawyers and district attorneys — the same ones who opposed uniform sentencing.

Sen. Cecil Jenkins, D-Cabarrus, who introduced a bill to further reduce the presumptive sentences, says opponents of the uniform sentencing act were mailed copies of Swain's bill soon after it was introduced.

Jenkins, an attorney himself, says he thinks uniform sentencing opponents see Swain's bill as a tool to ease into the sentencing changes July 1.

And he speculates that by his lack of opposition to Swain's bill, Hunt may be saying, "'Hey, this (uniform sentencing) isn't what I thought it was at first.'"

Hunt's Senate point man on uniform sentencing, Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, agrees that some people may see deferred prosecution as a trade off with the new sentencing law.

"In theory there is some conflict (between the two concepts)," Barnes said, adding that deferred prosecution will allow the courts to view some people differently from others.

But Barnes, Alley and Jenkins seem to agree that few judges or district attorneys will use the deferred prosecution, should it become law.

Former Actor's Trial To Begin

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Trial is scheduled to begin Monday for former actor Wilton Werbe Clary, 64, who is charged with first degree murder in the death of a 16-year-old voice student.

After eight hours of pretrial motions, Superior Court Judge Ronald W. Howell of Marshall ruled late Friday that Clary is competent to stand trial. He denied a defense motion for a change of venue.

Clary, a former actor in the musical, "Oklahoma!", is charged in connection with the Feb. 7 slaying of Pamela Denise Durham of East Flat Rock.

Howell heard 18 defense motions Friday. He deferred several of them until the trial begins.

The key motion, which asked for a change of venue, was denied when the judge ruled that coverage of the case by a local newspaper was not inflammatory, did not create prejudicial pretrial publicity and did not exceed the bounds of propriety.

Howell granted a motion to allow the defense the opportunity to have its own experts examine and test items of physical evidence in the case, including the alleged murder weapon.

Phony Licenses, Pay Checks Fuel Con Operation

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Phony driver's licenses and phony pay checks — authorities say those two items have been used to sting merchants in High Point and Greensboro for about $10,000 in a growing flim-flam operation.

Law enforcement officer are frustrated by the scheme that is loading local polic departments with fraud cases, sticking merchants with bogus checks and possibly ruining the reputation of innocent citizens who don't know their names and license numbers are being used in the crimes.

Machines used to print the licenses have been stolen from state offices in High Point, Alamance County and Siler City, police said.

Authorities say at least a dozen thieves broke into driver's license offices in High Point, Alamance County and Siler City — not only stealing the license machines, but taking names and license numbers of local citizens from desks and filing cabinets.

Police say the estimated "dozen or so" people involved in the flim-flam are using those identifications and placing their own pictures on the licenses they print. Now dozens of Greensboro area merchants have run into forged checks.

And the problem does not end there, police said. Thieves apparently broke into homes, cars and businesses to steal checkbooks, and legally bought checkwriting machines to fashion bogus payroll checks. These they passed at shopping malls — in amounts of $200 to $300 — backed up with valid-looking driver's licenses.

"The faces matched the licenses," said Greensboro merchant Leah Barker. "They were everyday looking people. They had ID, they had checks secured on a checkwriter."

The con artists cashed a check with Barker for more than $260 and bought about $60 worth of meat with the money, pocketing the rest. And Barker's neighbor, Sears, Roebuck & Co., also was victimized.

Greensboro police Detective R.D. Huckabee estimated that $10,000 to $11,000 in phony checks have been passed in the operation. Barker said some merchants aren't even reporting bad-check cases to police anymore because the crime is so prevalent and police seem unable to stop it.

The driver's license machine stolen in High Point has been recovered and six suspects have been arrested, according to authorities. But officers say they aren't talking.

"They won't talk," Huckabee said. "You ask them questions and they just smile at you."

Greensboro chief detective Capt. B.L. Thomas said, "We're covered up by these (cases). We admit it. You can wreak a lot of havoc with one of those machines."

Police in High Point and Greensboro are working with the State Bureau of Investigation in hopes of breaking the case. And they are warning merchants to take guarded approaches to accepting checks.

"Business people should think twice before taking payroll checks," said Dan Gilbert, supervisor of the SBI's Raleigh district office. "It's going to hurt consumers who want to pass checks honestly."

State driver's license examiners have been instructed to partially dismantle the cumbersome license-printing machines when they lock up. "They are to take the camera head and identification plate off the machines at night, take them out of the building, and secure them under lock and key elsewhere," said Department of Transportation spokesman Bill Jones.

Compounds May Help Children

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Scientists at the University of North Carolina have developed a group of compounds that could be effective in controlling a leading cause of respiratory infections among American children.

The synthetic compounds, called amidines, have been effective controlling respiratory syncytial virus in the test tube and in preliminary studies in animals, but it is not known if they will be as effective on humans.

But the researchers are encouraged that they could eventually become a significant anti-virus tool for physicians.

RSV can affect people of all ages, causing symptoms that range from runny noses to bronchiolitis and pnuemonia. But it is particularly dangerous for children under 2 and the elderly.

Dr. Richard Tidwell, assistant professor of pathology the university's School of Medicine, said in some cases the inflammation it produces in the lungs becomes severe enough to require enough to require hospitalization and breathing devices.

"Most of the time RS virus is not life-threatening but it puts infants and older people in a bad state of health during a very critical time in their lives," Tidwell said. "It makes them more susceptible to other illnesses and, loter on, to chronic respiratory problems."

In 1978, Tidwell said, an RSV epidemic was blamed for the deaths of more than 70 children in Naples, Italy.

He said since then it has become so widespread that there have been several attempts to develop a vaccine for it, all unsuccessful. He said some researchers even doubt it is possible to create an effective vaccine.

Tidwell, along with colleagues Dr. Edward Dubovi, assistant professor of pediatrics, and Joachim Geratz, professor of pathology, have been using certain amidines to interfere with the functions of the virus. He said they can't just kill the infectious agents because drugs strong enough to do that are harmful to the cells they are supposed to protect.

The new compounds somehow appear to inhibit key enzymes that the viruses make use of in penetrating and reproducing themselves inside cells, Tidwell said.

"We're fortunate in that cotton rats are very susceptible to RS virus and so we already have an excellent animal model to work with," he said.

Bob Wills' Tunes Fill Air As Fans Pay Homage

TURKEY, Texas (UPI) — About 2,500 friends, fans and former Texas Playboys gathered Saturday to honor the late Bob Wills, who left his barber's chair in Turkey and went on to popularize his own brand of country music that came to be known as Western swing.

"In Turkey, Bob means more to those people than the queen does to England," said Al Strickland, Wills' longtime "piano-pounder."

Strickland was one of 25 former members of Wills' band that spread Western swing — an eclectic combination of black blues, Dixieland jazz and hillbilly music — in the 1930s and 1940s. Wills' songs were punctuated by his trademark "ahh-ha!" hollers.

Saturday's 10th annual Bob Wills Day — the largest reunion of former band members since Wills died in 1973 — was highlighted by the Playboys' performance of old Wills' standards like "Faded Love," "Rose of San Antone" and "Milk Cow Blues."

Most of Turkey's population of 600 closed stores and deserted downtown to see the performance at the Bob Wills Center, an old high school converted to house Wills' memorabilia. Townsfolk held a barbecue, parade and fiddlers' contest earlier in the day.

The center is maintained by the Bob Wills Foundation, which raises its money through the annual festivals and has erected a tall granite monument in town that is topped with two big fiddles and bows and broadcasts Wills' music.

The fans included a mixture of young people and old timers, including Jim Garner, a Turkey native who knew Wills when Wills was known as Jim Bob.

"My daddy told Jim Bob to go down to Fort Worth, that you (Wills) could beat all those old boys fiddling," Garner said. "Daddy bought him a bus ticket and gave him a $5 bill to head out with.

"To tell you the truth, for this community, he was Elvis Presley."

One long-time fan drove 130 miles from Gruver, Texas for the show.

"I came because I'm an old fiddler," said Otho Gammill. "I've been to a lot of his dances. He played my kind of music — country Western with good old time fiddling, breakdowns and waltzes."

In Fort Worth, Wills was an original member of the Light Crust Doughboys, a country group sponsored by Light Crust Flour. But Wills, not content with standard country music, was seeking his own style of music and eventually created swing.

"Above all else, he wanted to be different," said Leon McAuliffe, Wills' original steel guitar player. "He was an innovater."

Funeral Set For Ex-Publisher

CAMDEN (AP) — Graveside services for Clarence Ford, former publisher of the Camden Chronicle, are set for 2 p.m. Sunday at Quaker Cemetery.

Ford, 64, died late Friday after a long illness.

Born in Beaufort, N.C., Oct. 14, 1916, Ford was a former city employee in Greensboro, N.C., and was an executive with Burlington Industries.

He moved to Camden in 1949 and founded Blake and Ford office supply. In 1956, he purchased the Chronicle and began building a chain of small weekly newspapers that grew to 15.

Ford sold Banner Publishers, Inc., about six years ago. The publishing company included newspapers in North Carolina and South Carolina, but the Chronicle was the only daily in the group.

He was a former Kiwanis Club member and a deacon in the Presbyterian Church. He was active in the Kershaw County Chamber of Commerce and had other business interests.

He is survived by his wife Alice, two daughters, three sons, a sister, three brothers and three grandchildren.

Police Report Four Accidents

An estimated $2,600 property damage resulted from four traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police Friday and Saturday.

Commercialism, Greed Sour Fairytale Wedding

MORETON-IN-MARSH, England (UPI) — Money-grubbing and tacky commercialism are souring the sweetness of the fairytale wedding planned for Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer and the bride's stepmother says she has never been so unhappy.

With distinctly un-British bustle, manufacturers have rushed out souvenirs for the July 29 wedding estimated by the British Travel Authority at $450 million, a figure that may prove low. People grumble at their tastlessness.

Jamming the display window of the Gift Horse store in this market town near the couple's future country home are wedding teaspoon sets, woven wedding bookmarks, a $16 reproduction of Diana's engagement ring, wedding boxes and mugs and scarves and tea towels and plates.

"That's only a small sample," said the shop's proprietress. "There's a lot more on order which hasn't arrived yet."

Stores throughout the kingdom sell Charles and Diana coat hangers, balloons and crossword puzzles, ash trays, jigsaw puzzles, a special Bible, even a royal wedding electric toaster. There are Charles and Diana cardboard cutouts for auto windows with hands that wave when the car moves.

A London dressmaker is selling four wedding gowns which may or may not be like Lady Diana's.

Pottery firms forced by recession into part-time operation are now on overtime. Wedgwood, admitting "it's a nice boost for business," is producing a full line capped by 25 life-sized busts of Prince Charles, priced at $4,500 each.

When the 32-year-old heir to Britain's throne announced his engagement to a 19-year-old blonde blueblood, this country went a little dizzy.

It had waited long for the world's most eligible bachelor to make his choice and it was simply dazzled by the future queen he picked.

Virtually every magazine in the country has adorned its cover with her features. A recent walk along Fleet Street spotted four girls in two blocks with "Lady Di" hairdos.

Lady Diana, regally removed from any controversy, has been putting together her trousseau — to the astonishment of royal family members, by simply going into stores and buying things.

Diana has also been moving often to escape the public eye. She relays each new telephone number to Prince Charles, who calls at 1 p.m. London time every day from wherever he is on his current overseas tour.

Bulk Cargo Ships Idle

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Bulk cargo ships transporting critical iron ore and low-sulfur western coal between Great Lakes ports remained idle Saturday as the 10-day strike by ship officers, deck hands and stewards continued without sign of settlement.

Although little information about the negotiations was disclosed by either the industry or the striking Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, an AFL-CIO union, industry officials did acknowledge talks had resumed.

Andy Staursky, press relations director for U. S. Steel in Pittsburgh, said negotiators returned to the bargaining table Thursday. He did not say where.

Both the union and industry refuse to discuss the issues involved, but a report in Business Week magazine cited the union's top demand as more paid time off to create more jobs and alleviate a surplus of licensed officers.

The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service said it was "monitoring" the situation.

The strike involves about 1,500 licensed engineers, deck officers and stewards on about 100 bulk cargo ships that transport iron ore, coal and stone to such Great Lakes ports as Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Detroit, and Toledo, Ohio. Some shipments also go to Canadian ports and a few are transferred to ocean-going vessels in the St. Lawrence Seaway.

It includes critical iron ore for steel mills from the Mesabi Range in northeast Minnesota and from Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

The strike, which has also idled about 1,000 members of the United Steelworkers Union and the Seafarers International Union, began April 16 and is the first major walkout in 23 years.

The union is negotiating with three major steel firms — U.S. Steel, Inland Steel and Bethlehem Steel — to set a pattern for industry-wide contract. The old contract expired last August.

Union spokesman Paul Doell in Toledo said about 95 percent of such shipping in the Great Lakes has been halted by the strike.

A union spokesman said two non-union fleets were still moving in the Great Lakes with a total of six ships — one for Hanna Mining Co. owned by National Steel Corp, and another for Ford Motor Co.

"Western coal is not moving at all," said the union spokesman. He said much of the low-sulfur coal from Montana and Wyoming is transported by train to Superior, Wis., and then by ship to power plant and utilities such as Detroit Edison.

Truce Ends In Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (UPI) — Lebanon's 20th cease-fire went up in smoke Saturday as Christian militiamen and Syrian troops traded artillery fire in Beirut and battled for control of the snow-capped mountains overlooking the city of Zahle, 33 miles east of the capital.

Christian Phalangist militiamen charged that Syrian paratroopers backed by artillery and helicopters had launched another offensive against their mountain positions around Zahle.

The thunder of artillery fire also resounded across suburban Beirut, where two shells apparently fired by the Christians landed on the international airport, keeping it closed for the fifth day.

The conflict threatened to widen when a Moslem Lebanese militia warned it would enter the fray if the Christians did not stop shelling the airport.

Fierce artillery and tank fire reverberated through the craggy mountain peaks overlooking Zahle as the two sides battled for control of the approaches to the city only 10 miles from the Syrian border.

Foreign Minister Fuad Butros said he will go to Damascus Sunday for urgent talks aimed at rescuing the three-day-old truce — Lebanon's 20th cease-fire this month — from total collapse.

But to no one's great surprise, the fighting scotched a rather optimistic plan to solidfy the truce by stationing Lebanese security forces in Zahle.

Commander Of Rescue Effort Hangs Up Uniform

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — The man who led the aborted attempt to free the American hostage in Iran plans to hang up his uniform in August.

U.S. Army Col. Charles Beckwith faces mandatory retirement next year when he would complete 30 years service in the Army. But his wife said Friday that Beckwith wants to get an early start on a new life.

"Charlie has had numerous job offers," said Katherine Beckwith, "but he hasn't decided which one he'll accept."

She said the family, which includes a 9-nine-year old daughter, probably will settle in Beckwith's home state of Georgia.

Beckwith began his association with unconventional warfare when he graduated from Ranger school in 1957. He was then assigned to the 77th Special Forces Group at Ft. Bragg.

After that Beckwith served in Laos and Malaysia, with the British 22nd Special Air Service Regiment, and as the commander in 1965 of the secret Delta Project in Vietnam.

The job he did as combat commander of the Delta Project in 1978 earned him the top spot in the multi-service anti-terrorism team which was nicknamed "Charlie's Angels."

The first "real life" operation for the commandos called for an attempted rescue of 53 American hostages from Iran last April. The raid was canceled on April 24, 1980, when only five of eight helicopters remained operational after a secret flight to a staging area on the Iranian desert.

About 45 minutes after an orderly withdrawal began, a helicopter collided with a C-130 aircraft and both burst into flames, killing eight crewmen.

Beckwith got so much attention after the raid that Department of Defense officials transferred him from the anti-terrorist team, where full secrecy is required, a Ft. Bragg officer said Friday.

The officer, who requested not to be named, said Beckwith said then that he planned to retire in the near future. The Pentagon moved him to the newly formed Joint Special Operations Command at Ft. Bragg where he has been assisting Brig. Gen. Richard A. Scholtes in formulating special operations.

On Friday — the anniversary of the aborted raid in Iran — Beckwith was in Washington.

Brady Showing Good Recovery

WASHINGTON (UPI) — White House press secretary James Brady, who underwent a second operation this week to relieve pressure on the brain, "continues his satisfactory recovery," doctors reported Saturday.

A medical bulletin released at the White House said Brady was "quite alert."

"There remains no evidence of infection thus far," the report said. It said the 40-year-old press secretary, who suffered a bullet wound to the brain during the assassination attempt on President Reagan, developed a rash late Friday that was clearing up after a change of anti-seizure medication.

The second, five-hour operation was required Wednesday night when it was discovered the bullet left open pockets that were allowing air to seep into the brain.

After the shooting March 30, Brady immediately underwent lengthy surgery that included removal of a portion of brain.

His recovery had been described as "extraordinary" before the second operation.

Brady was reported talking and eating well, but doctors said he would have to be closely monitored in the days following the operation.

State Praises City Project

A state agency has commended Greenville's Recreation and Parks Department for its administration of the Young Adult Conservation Corps (YACC) Project.

A report on the project was issued by the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development, Recreation and Parks Division, following an audit of the YACC project in March.

The Greenville department was commended for developing projects for YACC enrollees which have variety, are challenging and provide training.

An exceptional rating was also received from the state for developing a safety plan and conducting training sessions for YACC enrollees.

The city has operated the YACC program for approximately three years to provide jobs for young adults so they can learn useful skills and gain employment experience, and also to further the development and maintenance of public parks, wilderness areas and recreational areas.

The YACC program is scheduled to end in September 1981.

TRIBAL LANDS

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Two Maine Indian tribes have purchased 149,000 acres with federal money they were awarded in the settlement of land claims against the state.

The Penobscot Nation took title to 120,000 acres of timberland in scattered parcels in the middle of Maine and the Passamaquoddy tribe acquired 29,000 acres. A trial spokesman said both groups plan to buy additional land

FOOD ALLOCATED

ROME (AP) — A United Nations agency has allocated 7,000 tons of maize worth $1.8 million to Somalia because of a worsening food shortage caused by drought in the African nation.

A spokesman for the U.N. World Food Program said the influx of refugees from Ethiopia into the northern part of Somalia has made the food situation more severe.

ECU Women Nip UNC In Title Tilt

Pirates Capture State Crown, Now In Reg. II Tourney

GRAHAM, N.C. — Jo Landa Clayton doubled home two runs in the top of the seventh and East Carolina's #1-ranked softball team held of North Carolina in to bottom of the inning to emerge with a 3-1 victory Saturday afternoon to capture the NCAIAW state regional softball championship.

The Lady Pirates, now 39-3, will travel to Johnson City, Tenn., for the Region II tournament where they will open play against a yet-to-be determined team at 10 a.m. Thursday.

ECU got to the Region II tournament after defeating UNC twice in three games Saturday in the state double-elimination tournament.

The Lady Pirates, playing in the winners bracket, downed UNC, 4-0, in the opener Saturday behind Maureen Buck, who was three for three at the plate.

But UNC, in the losers bracket, came back to win the second game, 3-1, with a two-run sixth. Mitzi Davis was two for three and Kathy Riley was one for two with a double in a losing cause.

The Lady Pirates, however, took the final game of the day with a three-run seventh. The game was scoreless going into the seventh but Clayton's double brought home both Lydia Rountree and Fran Hooks to give ECU a 2-0 lead in the inning. Clayton, who was three for four at the plate, later scored on Mary Powell's sacrifice fly.

The Lady Tar Heels managed to push across one run in the bottom of the seventh but could get no more as ECU captured the tournament title.

Hooks was three for three for ECU in the victory while Shirley Brown was two for three and Davis two for four.

Purple 'Steaks' Its Claim To Intrasquad Victory

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

The Purple, dominated by the returning offensive players, earned the right to eat steak last night, gaining a 15-0 victory over the Gold in the annual srimmage that wound up spring football drills at East Carolina.

The Gold, slated to eat beans now, missed out on several scoring opportunities, but so did the Purple, as both teams took some advantage of the other's mistakes.

The Purple grabbed the lead when it turned one of its own mistakes into a good play. Earnest Byner, sophomore running back, fumbled the ball at the goal line, but James Martin was there to fall on it for the score.

Seconds later, the Purple recovered a fumble on the kickoff and Byner got the touchdown this time, going over from the three.

The only other scoring was a 31-yard field goal by David Pere.

"The Purple obviously had the best offensive group," Coach Ed Emory, who watched the game from the press box said, "although we drafted the teams and tried to split them as evenly as possible. The Gold had the better defensive team, but the Purple played pretty good defense tonight." That was true as they held the Gold to under 100 yards rushing and intercepted four passes.

"I can't really say that much about a game like this. One has to look at individual performances to evaluate such a scrimmage."

Emory said he felt the Pirates have a better football team now than a year ago at the end of spring drills. "We don't have the quality running backs as the three we lost," he said in reference to the graduation of Theodore Sutton, Anthony Collins and Mike Hawkins. "Our kicking game is not as strong, but our attitude is great, our coaching has been better, we have a better coaching staff and our weight work is far better. But while we are better, that doesn't mean that our opponents won't be much better, too."

Emory pointed out that the Pirates had to rebuild the offensive line. "I think we have 12 or 13 that can play and give up depth, quality and size. Our weight program has really strengthened our team. Our first priority was to build strength on our team and I think we are fast becoming one of the strongest teams in the area."

The coach, who will be starting his second season at the helm next fall, likes the speed of the defensive unit too. "It's the fastest I've ever been associated with. We need more work inside but we are greatly improved at nose guard and defensive tackle. We have five who can play tackle and two fine noseguards. They are bigger and stronger."

The passing game had to be a disappointment, however. The combined passing was only 16 of 46 for 201 yards, with six interceptions.

The offensive action in the first half of the game was limited. Gold got off only one threat, while the Purple had three and made each of them pay off.

The Gold threatened first, in the first period, moving from its own 36 following a punt, to the 24 before a holding penalty stalled the drive.

The Purple got its first break on an interception by Dave Thomas, putting the ball on the Gold 47. On the first play, Stewart connected with Vann for 33 yards, down to the 14. Byner carried twice to the seven, then once again, fumbling before he reached the goal line. The ball bounced into the end zone, where Martin recovered for the score. The kick was wide, and the Purple held a 6-0 lead.

Just seconds later, Chuck Bishop fumbled the kickoff and Arthur Colson recovered at the three. Byner went over from there on the first play, and a run by Stewart failed, leaving it at 12-0.

The Purple got its other score midway through the second quarter, on a 31-yard field goal by Pere. Clint Harris had picked up a key first down on a fake punt at midfield after the team appeared to be stopped. But the Purple failed to get another first down on the drive and settled for the kick for a 15-0 margin that held at halftime.

The second half turned into one of missed opportunities. The Purple had the first threat, after a fumble recovery, but they promptly turned it back on an interception.

Late in the quarter, the Gold had a chance moving from the Purple 47 after a punt, but they failed to pick up a first down. Following an interception a couple of plays later, the Gold moved from its 30 to the four before Gerald Sykes picked off a batted pass at the one.

The Purple drove back down the field to the Gold 23 before failing to pick up a first down on fourth and one.

The Gold then came right back to drive all the way to the nine before they were thrown back, failing to pick up any additional yardage.

The Purple had one more late chance, after a fumble recovery at the Gold 27, but after reaching the eight, saw the ball intercepted by Brent Chambers.

The Gold quickly turned it back over, on another Thomas interception return, but a holding penalty pushed the Purple far back and time ran out.

Chip Simmons led the Gold rushing with 47 yards on 13 carries, while Martin had 37 on eight carries and Andre Bentley had 30 on 11 lugs to pace the Purple rushing.

Pirates To Battle Missouri In '82, '83

East Carolina University Director of Athletics Dr. Ken Karr announced Saturday that the Pirate football team will be traveling to the University of Missouri in 1982 and 1983.

"We are very pleased to announce the addition of the University of Missouri to our football schedule in 1982 and 1983," said Karr. "This represents yet another step forward in the calibre of competition that the Pirates intend to play as the '80's progress."

Earlier Karr announced that the Pirates will travel to West Virginia and Florida State University in 1982. The West Virginia series covers four games starting this fall at Morgantown. The Mountaineers will come to Greenville in 1987 and 1988.

The Florida State series covers three games with the 1982 and 1988 contests in Tallahassee, while the Seminoles will be in Greenville in 1987.

The Tigers of Missouri finished last season with an 8-3 regular season mark and played against Purdue in the Liberty Bowl. Purdue edged Missouri 28-25 in that contest.

East Carolina will be facing its first Big Eight opponent ever in football against Missouri in 1982.

UNC-W Defeats ECU Nine, 4-3

A Staff Report

Johnny Slaughter's sacrifice fly in the top of the ninth broke a 3-3 tie and gave UNC-Wilmington its third straight victory over East Carolina, 4-3, Saturday night at Harrington Field.

The Seahawks, now 28-14, earlier this season swept a doubleheader from the Pirates. Saturday night they took advantage of Pirate miscues, both in the field and on the base paths, to hand ECU its 13th loss in 41 games.

One inning after UNC-W tied the game on a throwing error by second baseman Mike Sorrell, the Seahawks were back for the winner.

Paul Murr got UNC-W going in the ninth with a leadoff walk. He was sacrificed to second by Tommy Phillips and went to third on Tim Whitehead's infield single. Slaughter then sent a drive to rightfield which was caught, but Murr scored standing up for the go-ahead run.

The Seahawks then clinched the victory when they set the Pirates down in order in the bottom of the ninth.

UNC-W wasted little time in taking advantage of Pirate errors. Whitehead and Tom Jones sandwiched walks around a Slaughter double to load the bases in the first. When shortstop Kelly Robinette booted a grounder by Clyde Holley, Whitehead and Jones scored and UNC-W led, 2-0.

ECU got one of those runs back in the second. Todd Hendley singled, John Hallow and Charlie Smith walked to load the bases.

Fran Fitzgerald then grounded into a force-out at third. Hendley scored on the play. But the threat was killed moments later when Robert Wells grounded into a 5-4-3 double play.

The Pirates were back for more in the third. Former Rose High standout Mark Shank led off the inning with a single, stole second and went to third on Robinette's bunt single. Shank subsequently scored on Todd Evans' fielder's choice to tie the game at 2-2.

ECU took its only lead of the game in the fourth. With one out, Fitzgerald reached second when Phillips, the UNC-W third baseman, committed the first of three errors.

Then, with two outs, Shank slapped the ball down third, which Phillips again booted, giving ECU runners at the corners. The Pirates then pulled off a double steal, with Fitzgerald racing home.

The Pirates had a chance to increase their lead in the seventh but Evans, who led off the inning with a double, was thrown out at the plate by centerfielder Roger Hudson. Evans was trying to score on Hendley's single.

The Seahawks retied the game one inning later — without getting a hit. With Holley on second with a fielder's choice and Milkovits on first with an error, Hudson grounded to Robinette. Robinette flipped the ball to Sorrell for the force out but Sorrell then threw the ball in the dirt at first, allowing Holley to score the tying run.

ECU's final chance of the game came in the bottom of the inning. Charlie Smith walked and Fitzgerald reached base on an error with no outs. Fred Williams came in to run for Smith and Pete Persico for Fitzgerald.

Wells then tried to bunt the runners up but missed the ball. When the dust had cleared, Williams was picked off second on a 2-to-6-to-5 rundown and Persico, who was trying to slip into second, was retired when Phillips threw to second to end the threat.

ECU will try to avoid losing its fourth straight game to UNC-W Sunday when the Pirates entertain the Seahawks at 1 p.m. in Harrington Field

Sampson Staying; Isiah, Aguirre Going

By The Associated Press

Ralph Sampson dashed the hopes of the Dallas Mavericks and the Detroit Pistons Saturday, but Isiah Thomas announced his intention to turn pro and Mark Aguirre was reportedly on his way to the National Basketball Association, too.

Thomas, a 6-foot-1 All-American guard who led Indiana to the NCAA championship last month, said he would pass up his final two years of college eligibility and make himself available for the draft.

The Hoosiers' leading scorer with a 16-point average said his decision was difficult, but "the choice was clear." Thomas would not say whether he already has had offers from any NBA teams.

Meanwhile, the Chicago Sun-Times reported that Aguirre, the All-American who led DePaul to national prominence, decided Saturday to pass up his final year of college eligibility and make himself available for the NBA draft.

In a copyrighted story, the newspaper reported that Aguirre, in a statement released by Chicago lawyer George Andrews, said: "I have informed Coach (Ray) Meyer that it is my intention to become eligible for the 1981 NBA college draft on June 9."

In another development, Georgia star forward Dominique Wilkins said he would remain in school rather than declare himself eligible for the draft.

Earlier Saturday, Sampson, the 7-foot-4 All-American center, said that he would stay at the University of Virginia for at least one more year rather than declare himself eligible for the draft — and a sure bet to become an overnight millionaire — as an undergraduate.

Word was still awaited late in the day from several other highly touted undergrads who could go high in the NBA's college draft June 9.

Coaches, scouts and other experts generally had conceded that four of the top possibilities for the No.1 pick this year were undergraduates — Sampson, Thomas and forwards Dominique Wilkins of Georgia and Mark Aguirre of DePaul.

If a college player whose class is not due to graduate this year wanted to forego the remainder of his eligibility and turn pro, he had until midnight Saturday to let the NBA know of his wishes.

The Mavericks, in their first season in the NBA, had the worst record in the Western Conference, while the Pistons had the worst mark in the Eastern Conference. Officials of the two teams will flip a coin Thursday to see who gets the first draft choice.

Both clubs had made no secret of their desire to draft Sampson, who had been compared with the Los Angeles Lakers' star center, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, at the same stage of his career. The Mavs and the Pistons felt Sampson could turn them into instant winners, as Abdul-Jabbar, then Lew Alcindor, did as a rookie with Milwaukee in the 1969-70 season.

Officials of both teams had made personal appeals to Sampson and dangled million-dollar contracts in hopes of convincing him to leave the lush campus in Charlottesville, Va., two years early.

"Certainly, the coin flip has lost some of its excitement for us," said Allen Stone, a spokesman for the Mavericks. "If we win it, we'll obviously be entertaining the idea of a trade if we think we can get what we want that way."

Pistons General Manager Jack McCloskey said he was disappointed by Sampson's decision. He said the Pistons would wait to see who else declared for hardship, indicating that Wilkins, Aguirre and Thomas would be their top choices for No.1.

If Detroit could not get one of the three, it probably would look into the possibility of trading the first choice, according to spokesman Bill Kreifeldt.

Aguirre, the 1980 College Player of the Year who suffered a second straight disappointing season when DePaul was eliminated in the first round of the NCAA tournament, had been scheduled to announce his decision at a news conference in Chicago Friday.

But the session was canceled at the last minute, and Glenn Coble, the Blue Demons' sports information director, said the 6-5 junior "seemed down, depressed." That led to speculation that he had been unable to strike the kind of deal with an NBA club that would entice him to turn pro and had instead decided to complete his college career.

Wilkins, a 6-7 forward, said Thursday that the Pistons' proposed $1.28 million offer was not enough to make him declare himself for the draft, but that he was not turning his back on the NBA "if the money is right." He was unavailable for comment Saturday.

Clemson, Tar Heels To Tangle For ACC

TOM FOREMAN JR.
Associated Press Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Greg Guin collected four hits to back the five-hit pitching of Jeff Gilbert as Clemson whipped Duke 9-2 Saturday night to gain a spot in the finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference Baseball Tournament.

The Tigers will meet North Carolina, whom they defeated 7-4 earlier in the afternoon.

Guin scored Clemson's first run in the nightcap when he singled, moved to second on a walk to Glenn Gallagher, went to third on a passed ball and scored on Scott Power's infield hit.

Gallagher hit a two-strike pitch for a homerun in the fourth inning to extend Clemson's lead to 2-0. Duke cut the deficit in half when Tom Brassil lined a Gilbert pitch over the left-field fence to make the score 2-1.

Clemson scored what proved to be the game-winning run in the fifth inning. Mike Mahoney reached on an error and moved to second on Guin's third hit of the contest. Craig Roberson's single brought Mahoney across the plate.

The Tigers added two runs in the sixth, one in the seventh and three more in the eighth inning.

Three of the five hits Gilbert surrendered were for extra bases. Along with Brassil's homer, Tom Decker added two doubles. The second double led to Duke's second run when Bruce Quintana singled to centerfield. The Clemson centerfielder misplayed Qunitana's hit, allowing him to circle the bases and try for home. But Quintana was nailed on a throw from Roberson to catcher David Lemaster.

Bypasses 17 Players En Route To Top

Watson Sweeps Into Open Lead

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tom Watson's dramatic move, sweeping past 17 players and into a tie for the top spot in the $350,000 USF&G New Orleans Open Golf Tournament with an 8-under-par 64, came as no surprise to Gil Morgan.

"He's won here in the past and he plays well here so you anticipate him doing just what he did," said Morgan, who had to birdie two of the last four holes to retain a share of the third-round lead Saturday.

While Watson, golf's Player of the Year for the past four seasons, got back into the title chase, his work was not over.

"I have to shoot a heckuva good score tomorrow, in the mid-60's, to win it," he said. "The golf course is playing very, very easy. It's an ideal type of course for low scores. I'll just have to play aggressive golf and make some birdies," he said.

Morgan, a more conservative player, took a more conservative view of Sunday's final round of the chase for a $63,000 first prize.

"I'm going to have to play a round where I don't make too many mistakes," he said.

Their third-round play reflected those divergent viewpoints. Watson played an extremely aggressive round while Morgan contented himself with four birdies and said he "just wanted to pace myself."

Watson, the Masters champion and defending titleholder here, came back from a first-hole bogey with nine birdies, most of them after crisp iron shots left him very short putts, to compile a 54-hole total of 202.

That's 14 shots under par on the flat and friendly, 7,080-yard Lakewood Country Club course which continued to yield exceptionally low scores.

Morgan, who led after 36 holes despite an aching left wrist, matched that total with a third-round 68.

"I knew if I had any chance to win the tournament, I had to shoot in the mid-60's today," said Watson, golf's outstanding performer over the past four seasons.

"Fortunately, it was a little better than that.

"My iron play was very, very good. Four or five times I hit it in 4-5 feet for kick-in birdies."

He and Morgan, a non-practicing optometrist who has won four times in the past four seasons, shared a three-stroke lead over a group of four at 205. They are Mike Donald, Mark O'Meara, Dave Edwards and Jay Haas.

Donald and O'Meara had 67's in the mild, cloudy, windless weather, while Edwards and Haas shot 69.

Watson, playing more than an hour in front of the other leaders, put on the pressure with a 5-under-par 31 on his back nine.

His comeback actually started, he said, after he'd made a triple bogey-7 on the fifth hole of Friday's play when he hit one out of bounds. At that point he seemed out of title contention and actually was in some danger of missing the cut for the final two rounds.

"I just had a little talk with myself," he said. "I just said, 'get your act together. A few good shots and you can get back in the golf tournament'."

The 'Hit Man' Disappointed, Settles For TKO

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Thomas Hearns, the boxer known as "Hit Man," ripped cuts over both of challenger Randy Shields' eyes Saturday and retained his World Boxing Association welterweight championship when the fight was stopped by the ring doctor after the 12th round.

Hearns admitted, "I was disappointed I didn't knock him out but had to settle for the TKO.

"I fought three different styles. Each style I used seemed to work only for awhile before Randy figured it out.

"I tried to outmuscle him, then tried to mix it up and then return to just boxing."

Shields admitted the cut he opened over the champion's eye in the opening round was an accidental butt.

And when the champion slipped down later in the fight, the undefeated champ said it was the first time he ever had been on the canvas.

The battle at the Veterans Memorial Coliseum was rough all the way and sometimes dirty with both fighters frequently warned by referee Bobby Ferrara.

Hearns, of Detroit, remained undefeated in 31 bouts and brought even closer a clash with WBC welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard for the undisputed 147-pound title.

Hearns, 146, cut Shields above the right eye in the eighth round and above the left in the ninth and by the end of the 12th the challenger could not see and agreed with doctor C.D. Lake's decision to stop the bout.

Shields' 146½, from North Hollywood, Calif., put up a game battle but was far behind in points even before being cut. Hearns, who has stopped 29 of his foes, sufffered a cut on the lid of his right eye in the first round but it gave him no trouble.

The 6-foot-2½ champion, making his second defense, used a six-inch reach advantage to jab Shields and set up the challenger for right hands. Despite the heavy hitting, there were no knockdowns as a crowd of about 8,500 watched the nationally televised (ABC) scheduled 15 rounder.

Hearns was frequently warned by the referee for wrapping his long left arm around the challenger's neck and trying to pull him closer. Shields, whose record went to 38-7-1, was warned for bulling and a low blow.

Lake had examined the challenger before the end of the 12th, then allowed him to continue. But each round after the ninth Shields' eye cut leaked blood and his nose also was bleeding at the end of the fight which goes into the record as a 13th round knockout.

Shields was far behind on the cards of both judges and the referee long before suffering the cuts. With a reach of 72½ inches compared to 78½, the determined challenger simple couldn't get inside for many shots. Still, the No.5 ranked contender kept trying to work his way inside Hearns' long arms.

But the champion's sharp jabs finally took their toll.

The 22-year-old champion knocked out Jose "Pipino" Cuevas in two rounds at Detroit last Aug. 2 to take the title. He successfully defended with a 5th-round knockout of Luis Primera on Dec. 6.

Shields fought for a $100,000 guarantee while the champion was guaranteed at least $250,000.

Should Hearns fight Leonard as expected, the purses would be in the millions.

Shields was stopped for the fourth time in the 24-year-old's career. Vicente Saldivar, Pete Ranzany and Wilfred Benitez had stopped him before.

Hearns went to the canvas in the fifth but only because he tripped over his own foot.

As the fight started Hearns showed his strategy by jabbing his 5-11 foe and then following with rights to the head.

Overall, very few body blows were thrown by the champion.

In the second round Shields tried to match Hearns with jabs and then switched to a body attack.

Much of the fight followed in the same pattern. In the third round Hearns drew his first warning for wrapping his arm around Shield's neck. He was cautioned several times by referee Ferrara during the bout.

Shields was warned for bulling in the fifth and for a low blow in the sixth.

Shields continued trying to move in during the seventh and Hearns appeared to be grinning at times.

Then came the cuts in the eighth and ninth. Actually, the challenger finished with two in the area of his left eye and one over his right eye. From the 10th on, although his father-trainer Sonny, worked diligently, Shields was bleeding.

Sixers Look For 3-1 Lead

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Billy Cunningham, coach of the Philadelphia 76ers, knows that a 2-1 lead in the National Basketball Association playoffs against the Boston Celtics is not enough. But he also knows how nice it would be to stretch that advantage to 3-1 with a victory Sunday.

"Boston is too good a team to be desperate at this stage," said Cunningham. "But if they don't win Sunday, they will have a tough time taking this series because I don't know if we can lose three games in a row."

The Celtics have lost 10 games in a row in Philadelphia and have not won a playoff game at the Spectrum since 1977, streaks that Coach Bill Fitch would like to see end in Sunday's fourth game of the best-of-seven Eastern Conference final.

"I don't believe in jinxes," said Fitch. "I know we can win here."

"If we don't win one down here, we're in trouble," said Larry Bird, the Celtics' star forward. "If we don't win one down here, they deserve to be NBA champions. We should move on. We have to win one here."

To do so, Bird will have to be more productive that he was in Philadelphia's 110-100 victory Friday night, when he was guarded for the first time by Julius Erving and limited to 22 points. Bird had scored 67 points in the series' first two games, primarily against Caldwell Jones.

The switch allowed Jones to concentrate on what he does best, which is rebounding and clogging the middle defensively. "Bird was shooting from so far out, we just couldn't have our 7-footer roaming around chasing him," explained Erving. So Jones went inside and had 14 rebounds and five blocks shots and let Erving do the chasing, an unusual assignment for him.

"Whenever someone talks about my defense, it's usually to criticize it," said Erving, who matched Bird's 22 points. "They'll say, 'Well, you steal the ball and you block shots but you don't play good defense.' Everybody has their own way of doing things. I didn't get many steals or blocked shots, but I think my presence was felt."

Indeed it was.

"Doc (Erving) did a good job on me," said Bird. "He overplayed me and I never got into the flow."

"Julius set the tone for the night," observed Celtics reserve M.L. Carr. "He came out playing that aggressive defense on Larry and that got his teammates going, and that got the crowd (the 76ers first playoff sellout of 18,276) fired up."

So the 76ers have made their move in the chess game, checking Bird, and now it's up to the 76ers to counter. To Fitch, the next move was obvious.

"We're gonna need somebody other than Larry Bird to put the ball in the hole," he said. But since the rest of the Celtics shot only 26-for-74, barely 35 percent Friday night, it remains to be seen who, if anyone, can pick up the slack.

Kings Must Stop Rockets' Forwards

HOUSTON (AP) — Kansas City Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, whose strategy was to contain Houston center Moses Malone, now must must devise tactics to stop the Rockets' forwards Sunday in the fourth game of their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Rockets rode the performances of forwards Billy Paultz and Robert Reid to a 92-88 victory over the Kings Friday night to take a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven Western Conference championship series.

Reid and Paultz each scored 20 points and Reid scored the last three baskets of the game to hold off a late Kings rally in the final two minutes.

"Someone had to take control," Reid said. "I was out front with a big man (John Lambert) guarding me. So, by process of elimination, I was the man. I told myself, 'Well, let's go.'"

Reid was the key for the Rockets on two occasions when Kansas City cut Houston's lead to four points.

When the Kings pulled within four points shortly before the half, Reid scored on two fast-break baskets. Reid's three late baskets nullified Kansas City's final surge.

Fitzsimmons admitted the Kings' defense would have to improve in Game 4. He said, "Reid hurt us all night long. He played a great game. And Paultz was just super. He looks like the kind of guy that shouldn't be playing basketball, but he can beat you every night."

Malone was held to 12 points and 12 rebounds by the Kings. Calvin Murphy broke out of a two-game slump with 23 points for Houston.

"Murphy, Paultz and Reid were the difference for us tonight," Houston Coach Del Harris said. "It takes three or four guys cooking to do any good. Otherwise, they can put three or four guys on Mo (Malone) and get away with it."

Scott Wedman scored 22 points for the Kings, but had most of his praise for Reid.

"Reid hit some tough shots. I don't care who was on him," Wedman said. "A couple of times he was guarded, but he just drove to the basket and made it."

The series returns to Kansas City Wednesday night for Game 5, with the sixth game, if necessary, set for Houston next Friday night. A seventh game, if necessary, will be played May 3 at Kansas City.

The Houston-Kansas City winner will advance to the NBA championship series against the Eastern Conference champion, Philadelphia or Boston.

Solomon Ties Blalock On 18th

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Beth Solomon sank a 25-foot putt on the 18th hole Saturday to tie Jane Blalock at 6-under-par 138 after the second round of the LPGA $100,000 Birmingham Classic at Green Valley Country Club.

Blalock, who has won the Birmingham Classic twice, was leading by one stroke going into the 18th. But she bogeyed the final hole and Solomon, who had led after Friday's first round, then sank her long putt for a share of the lead on the 6,107-yard, par-72 course.

Cathy Reynolds, Alice Miller, Pat Myers and Cathy Mant remain two strokes behind the leaders at 4-under 140. Donna Caponi, Jo Ann Washam, Janet Coles and M.J. Smith are tied at 141, three shots off the pace.

Nancy Lopez-Melton, a tournament favorite, is at 142, tied with Janet Alex, Kathy Postlewait and Marga Stubblefield.

Eight players were one stroke under par, and six had scores of 144.

Seventeen players, including Sylvia Bertolaccini and Carol Mann, failed to make the cut, which was at 8-over-par 152.

"I really wasn't nervous except for the first couple of holes," said Solomon, who had a first-round 67. It was the first time Solomon has led a Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

"I had such a good time playing. I really enjoyed today," she said.

UNC, Tigers...

Gilbert raised his record to 8-2 as the Tigers climbed to 33-22 overall. Ed Nolan was the starter and loser for Duke. Nolan fell to 3-4 and Duke ended its season at 29-10.

In the afternoon contest, Lemaster's two-run single keyed a five-run outburst to keep the Tigers in the tournament and set up the eventual championship game.

Greg Schuler scored UNC's first run when he reached on a walk, stole second and scored on an error by Clemson shortstop Scott Powers.

UNC starter Brian Rice, who pitched just one-third of an inning on Friday, cruised through the first five innings against the Tigers. Rice also had retired two batters in the sixth inning before Greg Guin reached on a walk. Craig Roberson followed with another walk before Glenn Gallagher doubled to bring Guin across home plate. That hit spelled the end for Rice.

Lemaster then greeted reliever James "Peanut" Parks with his single to left field to score Roberson and Gallagher. Powers doubled to the fence in center field to bring Lemaster home and pinch-hitter Bob Paulling lashed another double to right center field to score Powers and knock Parks out of the box.

A Tired But Famous Rogers Awaits Draft

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The white Thunderbird whipped into the parking lot of South Carolina's Roost Dorm, jerking to a stop at the curb. Two well-dressed middle-aged men in front leaped out, like Secret Service agents ready to stand guard over the president.

Clambering out of the back seat — wearing casual shirt, slacks, loafers — came George Rogers. He looked tired.

"I AM tired, man," he said in a palpably weary voice. "Four hours with the lawyers. I just wanta go somewhere and relax."

Sorry, George.

Harold White, South Carolina assistant coach and, for the past two years, Rogers' informal personal secretary, emerged from the dorm lounge. "The lady's here from United Way, George," he said, reminding his young charge of an appointment to tape a television spot.

"Aw, no, man — I'm tired," said Rogers plaintively. "Four hours man — I gotta rest. I ain't gonna do it. Tell her I can't."

White turned his head away, then looked back at Rogers. He knows his man well. "I'm not going to — you come tell her that," he said.

"OK, I will," Rogers said. But he didn't. The United Way woman was charming, and George has a soft heart. Five minutes later, he was on his way to the TV studio.

Fame. For some — the heroes — it's the hungered-after spotlight of glory; for others — victims — an unwelcome intruder into their lives.

George Rogers has the best, and worst, of both.

Fame for Rogers has meant a total change in life, a ladder up. From dirty Atlanta streets to university halls. From poverty to soon-to-be-realized wealth.

Fame is also a demanding taskmaster. It consumes Rogers' time, exposes him to sugary-sweet adolation on one hand and hucksters on the other, elbows its way between him and his friends.

Four months ago, Rogers reached the pinnacle of college football. Two-time All-American. Heisman Trophy winner. National celebrity. Local hero. Friday night, he went even further: induction into the South Carolina Athletic Hall of Fame.

Tuesday, the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League will make Rogers the No. 1 selection in the NFL draft. In the process, they will also make the former ghetto child a millionaire.

Already, the lifestyle of the poor kid from Duluth, Ga., has changed drastically. He drives a newly purchased Cutlass, license tag "USC 381;" the guy who used to wash dishes and dig ditches for minimum wage was out selecting furniture for his new home.

George can have everything money can buy. But he can't buy what he wants. Time. Privacy. Space.

Sometimes, the losses hurt more than the gains cover.

Attention is not something Rogers craves. "That's what I ain't used to," he said.

Riding to the TV taping session, his Hall of Fame induction came up. He shook his head.

"I'm not putting it down, it's a great honor," he said. "People in South Carolina have done a lot for me. I just don't want them going to extremes.

"It's great to be honored, but I wish they'd do it for the whole team,' he said. "First the mural (on Booker T. Washington Center) and now this. I don't like getting all the attention. A lot of people deserve credit, not just me."

It's a familiar Rogers line, the "Good and Humble Team Man" line. From George, it's sincere. Why should he pretend anymore, if he ever did? He doesn't need blocks from USC teammates now.

What he needs is their friendship, their familiarity. His buddies rib him about his star status. George laughs at the jokes. But there is an element of truth in the jokes, and that hurts.

He reacts to the focus of attention. "The worst part is always talking to guys like you, reporters," he told one writer. "I've never been real good in interviews. And it don't get easier with experience."

Rogers didn't really expect the attention to die down after the Heisman; he hoped though. "I've got no free time," he said. "I just don't like being the center of attention."

He sighed. "It won't end with the draft, man. I really believe it's just starting all over again."

In the WIS-TV studio, George stood uncomfortably before a camera. He read through the wire copy prepared for him by United Way, his forehead wrinkled.

O's Whip Bosox, End Four-Game Losing Streak

BALTIMORE (AP) — All the Baltimore Orioles needed was a little extra batting practice.

Coming off a 2-5 road trip with a .215 batting average, the Orioles rapped out 12 hits and defeated the Boston Red Sox 7-2 Saturday to end a four-game losing streak. Doug DeCinces had three hits and drove in four runs, three on a fifth-inning double.

"The early batting practice definitely helped me," DeCinces said. "It was a tough road trip and we didn't have batting for virtually a week.

"I took some extra swings and I concentrated on staying back and trying to pop the ball."

Boston pitchers recorded 15 strikeouts, including a career-high eight by reliever Mark Clear, but the Orioles bunched nine hits during two three-run innings.

"Doug's hit really changed everything around," said Mike Flanagan, 1-2, who hurled a four-hitter in 50-degree weather made colder by wind gusts up to 25 mph. "It allowed me more room to maneuver, I could take chances and go more with my fastball. Every pitch wasn't the game."

Baltimore did not score any runs for Flanagan while he was in the game in either of his previous two starts.

Flanagan allowed a fourth-inning home run by Jim Rice and an RBI single by pinch-hitter Joe Rudi in the seventh, while striking out seven.

The Orioles scored three runs off Frank Tanana, 0-2, in the fourth and the base-clearing drive by DeCinces chased him in the fifth.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Jim Sundberg cracked a three-run homer to pace a 12-hit attack and lead the Texas Rangers to an 8-4 victory over Cleveland Saturday, snapping the Indians' five-game winning streak.

Rick Honeycutt, 1-0, allowed four runs and six hits in six innings. Steve Comer pitched two-hit relief over the final three innings for his first save.

Sundberg's fifth-inning homer, his second of the year, came off reliever Bob Lacy after John Grubb singled and Pat Putnam was safe on an error. It gave Texas a 7-0 lead.

The Rangers scored three times in the first against Wayne Garland, 1-1, on consecutive singles by Bump Wills, Mickey Rivers and Al Oliver, grounders by Buddy Bell and Grubb and a single by Putnam. They added a run in the second on doubles by Billy Sample and Wills.

The Indians got a run in the fifth on a homer by Bo Diaz, his first, then cut the gap to 7-4 on Andre Thorton's second homer, a three-run blast in the sixth. Texas scored its final run in the eighth on a walk to Sundberg, a sacrifice by Sample and Mario Mendoza's single.

NEW YORK (AP) — John Mayberry and Lloyd Moseby hit two-run homers while Danny Ainge collected three hits and drove in two runs as the Toronto Blue Jays ripped New York 7-2 Saturday, ending the Yankees' four-game winning streak.

Jackson Todd, 1-1, scattered six hits, including Jerry Mumphrey's fourth-inning homer, in pitching his first complete game of the season. Rudy May, 3-1, lost for the first time since July 22, 1980. He had won 11 in a row.

Ainge smacked a two-out double in the first inning and Mayberry followed with an upper-deck blast to right, his third homer of the season. In the fifth, Ernie Whitt singled with one out, Moseby beat out a bunt and Damaso Garcia walked on four pitches, loading the bases. Ainge then blooped a two-run a single to left-center.

Toronto added three runs in the ninth, one on Whitt's squeeze bunt, the other two on Moseby's inside-the-park homer, a liner that rolled to the 430-mark at the wall in left-center field. Graig Nettles had an RBI grounder for the Yanks in the bottom of the ninth.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Willie Aikens capped a three-run first inning with a two-run homer and Larry Gura pitched a three-hitter, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 4-2 victory Saturday over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Royals, who snapped a four-game losing streak, had won only two of their previous 10 games, the worst start ever for the defending American League champions.

Willie Wilson singled leading off the Royals' first, took second on a grounder and scored on a two-out single by George Brett, his first run batted in of the season. Aikens followed with his third homer of the year off Pete Vuckovich, 0-2.

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Rick Burleson slammed a three-run homer to cap a five-run rally in the seventh inning Saturday and lead the California Angels to a 6-4 triumph over the Minnesota Twins.

The Angels fell behind 4-0 before getting to loser Jerry Koosman, 1-3, in the sixth inning on a solo homer by Dan Ford, his fourth of the season.

In the seventh, singles by Brian Downing and Juan Beniquez plus a walk to Bobby Grich loaded the bases. Bert Campenaris drove in one run with a sacrifice fly and another scored when Gary Ward dropped Rod Carew's fly ball to left field.

Pete Redfern, who lasted less than an inning as a starter in Friday's 7-5 victory over the Angels, replaced Koosman. Burleson greeted Redfern with his first homer of the season, a shot over the left field wall.

White Sox Manager Calls Incident A 'Gutless Act'

DETROIT (AP) — Tigers starter Dave Rozema called it an accident. Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa called it a "gutless act."

During the ninth inning of Chicago's 4-0 victory over Detroit on Saturday, Rozema hit Rusty Kuntz in the back.

The throw, Rozema's first pitch after a two-run homer by Chet Lemon, brought the White Sox bench onto the field with catcher Carlton Fisk, who had been hit on the shoulder in the sixth inning, leading the charge.

It also sent Rozema to the dugout. Anderson pulled his right-hander in favor of Kevin Saucier, who got the final two outs.

"I was just taken out of the game," Rozema said. "I was feeling fine, but he (Manager Sparky Anderson) said, 'That's enough,' so I left."

Rozema said he was upset after throwing a fast ball that wound up over the fence in right-center field, but insisted he didn't plan to bean outfielder Kuntz.

Off-Season Trades Paying Off

Cards Beat Bucs For 7th Straight

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Whitey Herzog's off-season deals are paying early season divdends for the St Louis Cardinals.

Gene Tenace slammed a three-run homer in the seventh inning and Bob Shirley and Bruce Sutter combined on a four-hitter as the Cardinals extended their winning streak to seven games with a 5-1 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates Saturday.

Tenace, Shirley and Sutter were all acquired in off-season trades by Herzog in his dual role as manager and general manager. Although Tenace is a part-time player, Herzog knows the 34-year-old catcher has been a winner.

"He's batted in a few world series," said Herzog, referring to Tenace's years with the Oakland A's. "He knows what he's doing."

What Tenace has been doing mostly this season is sitting. Darrell Porter is the Cardinals' No.1 catcher and Tenace has appeared in only three of the Cards' first 10 games.

"I'd love to play every day," said Tenace. "I wouldn't be in the game this long if I wasn't a competitor. I just have to keep myself mentally and physically ready for when I do play. I'm a victim of circumstances and I have to live with it."

HOUSTON (AP) — Ron Oester and Dave Concepcion each drove in one run to back the combined three-hit pitching of Bruce Berenyi and two Cincinnati relievers as the Reds defeated Houston 2-1, handing the Astros their fourth straight loss.

Berenyi scattered the three hits before getting help from Joe Price and Tom Hume in the seventh inning. Hume earned his first save of the season.

The Cubs, closing in on the 1934 team record of 13 consecutive losses, had taken a 5-1 lead when they struck for four runs in the fourth inning.

Pirates Dump Charlotte, 13-1

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

The University of North Carolina at Charlotte held East Carolina scoreless the first and last times the Pirates came to bat Friday night.

But in between, the Pirates had a field day, romping to a 13-1 victory over the 49ers.

It was the second straight victory for East Carolina over UNCC. Earlier in the season, the Pirates had dumped Charlotte, 11-0, on the 49er field.

Every starting member of the Pirate team got a hit except for leadoff batter Mike Sorrell. Of the remaining eight, six came through with two each, paced by Todd Hendley, who had a pair of doubles.

Mike Lloyd turned in the victory, his second in as many decisions this spring. He went through the first seven innings, giving up the lone Charlotte run, five hits, and three walks. Kirk Parsons and Charlie Smith each went an inning of relief.

"This was a good game for us," Coach Hal Baird said after his Pirates had raised their record to 28-12. "We needed a good win going into a very tough weekend. I think we played well in the field and hit well too."

Baird said he felt the Pirates caught Charlotte, now 17-27, about in the same position the Bucs were in, in the lower stages of their pitching rotation. "They've played some people tough too. It was just one of those days when nothing went right for them.

"And I'm glad," he added.

Baird said he was happy to get a good effort from Lloyd. "We were hoping that he would give us seven good innings, and he did. He got behind on a number of batters, but he did what we wanted, and I'm satisfied."

Except for the fifth, when Charlotte got its run, the 49ers put men in scoring postion only three times.

In fact, in the fifth, the Pirates came very close to pulling off a triple play that would have prevented the run.

Carlos Strickland led off the fifth with a double to left. Alan Tyndall singled to left, moving Strickland to third. But Billy Powell grounded sharply to Hendley at third. He looked Strickland back, then fired to Sorrell at second for the first out. Sorrell's relay to Todd Evans at first got Powell, and the relay to the plate just did miss getting the sliding Strickland.

After the first five batters had gone down in order for the Pirates, East Carolina came up with three runs in the second inning — all the Bucs really needed.

Charlie Waynick singled and Kelly Robinette beat out a bunt down the third base line. Jay Carraway then singled, driving in Waynick. Robert Wells reached on a two-base error, scoring the other two runs.

In the third, the Pirates added a fourth run. With two away, Evans singled and came all the way around on a single by Smith.

A single run also crossed in the fourth. With one down, Carraway walked and courtesy runner Mark Shank stole second, and took third on Wells' single. Sorrell grounded out, and an error on the play let Shank score.

The Pirates added three more in the fifth. Hendley walked and Evans was safe on an error. With two away, Robinette again beat out a bunt, loading the bases. Carraway then doubled, driving in all three runners.

Another pair scored in the sixth. John Hallow singled and scored on Hendley's double. Hendley, after advancing on the throw to the plate, scored on Evans' grounder.

The final three crossed in the seventh. Carraway was hit by a pitch and Wells walked. Sorrell reached on a fielder's choice that got Wells, and Hendley doubled in courtesy runner Rob Harper. Evans then singled, scoring both Sorrell and Hendley to wind up the scoring.

Hendley, Evans, Smith, Waynick, Robinette and Carraway each had two hits to lead the Pirates, while Strickland picked up a pair for Charlotte.

The Pirates close out their home season with three more game. UNC-Wilmington was in town for a single games last night and this afternoon at 1 p.m. Monday night at 7 p.m., the Bucs host N.C. Wesleyan, and then close out the season next Sunday, traveling to North Carolina.

Lady Pirates Bop Western, Elon In First Day's State Tourney Play

GRAHAM — East Carolina University's Lady Pirates romped to a pair of victories in the first day's competition in the North Carolina AIAW Softball Tournament, which will qualify two teams for the regionals to be held next weekend.

The Lady Pirates, ranked first in the country, dumped Western Carolina, 14-1 in the opening game, then came back with a 12-1 victory over Elon.

North Carolina also wound its way through the pack to the winners' bracket and was to face East Carolina Saturday morning. The championship games were scheduled for later in the afternoon.

In the opener, East Carolina moved ahead with three first inning runs, then broke the game open with eight in the third. In that inning, both Shirley Brown and Mary Powell cracked homers to spark the Lady Pirates.

From the 11-0 lead, the East Carolina lassies added three more in the fifth, while Western Carolina got its only run in the bottom of the fifth. The game was called at that point.

Mitzi Davis set a new school record in the game, cracking out three triples. Cynthia Shepard and Yvonne Williams both collected doubles in the game.

Fran Hooks went 3-3, while Davis and Shepard were both 3-4 and Brown was 2-3.

In the second game, it was close until the seventh, when the Pirates pushed over nine runs to put it away. East Carolina had taken the lead in the first with a solo homer by Davis, then added two more runs in the second. Elon's only run came in the fifth.

Powell added a double to the ECU hitting, while Davis and Brown both went 3-4, and Williams, Ginger Rothermel and Hooks were 2-4 for the second game.

The double elimination tournament was to conclude Saturday afternoon.

Rose Captures Tournament Title, 20-0

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

In a growing progression of successful showings, Greenville Rose again Friday evening exhibited its full and loaded arsenal.

The Rampants once more displayed why they are surely one of the most talented and most cohesive units not only in the area but in the state as they destroyed Farmville Central, 20-0, Friday night before an audience of about 250 to win the championship of the Pitt County Baseball Tournament.

D.H. Conley nipped North Pitt, 5-4, for third place. Kinston downed New Bern, 14-6, for fifth and Williamston edged Washington, 11-10, for seventh.

Rose, now 14-1 and headed for a Thursday showdown with Northern Nash, the only team to beat Rose this season, scored in every inning but the first to roll to its third straight tournament championship.

The Rampants' attack was highlighted by 19 hits, a nine-run sixth, and the two-hit pitching of staff ace Roger Williams, who was named the tournament's most valuable player.

Twelve Rose players had at least one hit — the best showing all season for the Rampants — including all nine starters. Mark Douglas, Kenny Barnes, Crowell Pope, Paul MacMillan, and reserves Sammy Hodges and Keith Phillips all had two hits for Rose.

Barnes, Douglas and MacMillan were all named to the all-tournament team.

Hodges led Rose with three RBIs while Mitch Brann, MacMillan, Billy Dough and Phillips all had two RBIs. Brann continues to lead the team in RBIs with 21.

Had the Rampants' bats been more subdued, it wouldn't have mattered. For Williams had everything under control on the mound. The Rose right-hander struck out 13 batters, walked three, and never allowed a Jaguar runner past second.

Williams, now 7-0 with six shutouts and a .48 ERA, did not allow a hit until Joey Steppe's two-out single to left in the fourth. Farmville's only other hit was a lead off double in the seventh by Greg Hardison, one of two Jaguars named to the all-tournament team. The other was Bobby Avery.

Otherwise, Williams was near perfect on a night that was not particularly to his liking, given the cold and a brisk breeze blowing in from leftfield.

"I felt like I threw all right but not as well as I have this year," said Williams afterwards while holding his MVP plaque. "I felt I threw my fast ball well and my curve well tonight. But the cold was a factor. I lost my rhythm a couple of times."

"Roger really had his stuff tonight," Vincent said. "He threw hard and was getting his curve over real well."

To say Farmville's pitchers were not as effective would be an understatement times four — the number of pitchers the Jaguars used.

The Jaguars, now 7-9, started David Cherry, who had pitched just one inning before Friday's game. Cherry, who game up 10 hits and 10 runs — nine of which were earned — went three full innings and pitched to two batters in the fourth before being relieved by Bobby Carroway.

Carroway lasted two innings and was seven batters into a third without an out when Farmville Central coach Carl Brock removed him for the Jaguars ace, Bobby Avery. Avery gave up two hits and two runs in his one-third inning of work before Hardison came on to pitch the final two-thirds of an inning.

"We just ran out of pitching," Brock said afterwards standing in the dugout. "One thing we wanted to do before the game started was to make Rose earn its runs. But in the second and third we started making errors and it hurt us. They don't let you get away with any mistakes."

It didn't take the Rampants look to establish that they were indeed the superior team.

After leaving two men stranded in the first inning, the Rose nine got down to some serious scoring. The Rampants tallied five runs in the second, three in the third, two in the fourth, one in the fifth and nine in the sixth for their 20-run total.

Barnes got the Rampants rolling in the top of the second when he hit a ground rule double to right field. Then, with one out and Barnes on third after MacMillan reached on a fielder's choice and stole second, Tom Buie tripled down the first base line to score Barnes and MacMillan.

Douglas walked and stole second before Brann singled to right to drive home Buie and Douglas. Brann later scored on Williams' single and Rose led, 5-0.

Rose was back for more in the third. Pope singled to lead off the inning and scored on MacMillan's double in the left-centerfield gap. After a ground out by Buie, MacMillan stole home for the Rampants second run of the inning.

Douglas then singled and scored when Brann reached on the first of three errors by Farmville second baseman Alvin Baker.

The Rampants added three more runs to its rapidly growing lead in the next two innings.

In the fourth, Barnes and Pope singled to chase Cherry. After Carroway came on to strike out Bill Kittrell, MacMillan singled home Barnes. Pope later scored on Mont Carter's sacrifice fly to center.

In the fifth, Kittrell sent a grounder to the shortstop that took a bad hop and hustled down to second for a double, scoring Billy Dough, who had reached on an error earlier.

Then came the sixth, the Rampants most productive inning of the year. Rose sent 14 players to the plate and six hits, two errors and three pitchers later the Rampants had scored nine runs.

Reserve Sammy Hodges led the parade to the plate with two singles in the inning and three RBIs — a game performance for most players. Dough and Keith Phillips each had two RBIs in the inning, which finally ended when Williams grounded into a force play.

Conley Eases Past Jaguars, 5-4 To Capture Third In Tournament

A Staff Report

D.H. Conley first-year coach Ritchie Wynns was not at all pleased with the six errors his team committed in its 7-6 loss to Farmville Central Thursday night in the second round of the Pitt County Baseball Tournament.

So Wynns called a team meeting in the dugout before Friday's game with North Pitt for third place in the tournament. It must have worked, because the Vikings committed just one error and came away with a 5-4 win over the Panthers.

"We had a little conference in the dugout and I tried to show them the error of their ways and change their attitude," Wynns said. "We came to a kind of understanding.

"We had been losing concentration and we were not doing what was best for the team sometimes, but I'm happy with the way we played today. This was a total team effort. We started three jvs and had only two regulars starting, (pitcher) Roy Lassiter and (rightfielder) Ken Holland."

The Panthers appeared headed for at least a tie if not the lead in the sixth. Gregory Briley reached on an error to open the sixth and Ken Whitehurst was hit by a pitch and Greg Briley had a bunt single to load the bases with no outs. But Lassiter, who had five strike outs and two walks, struck out Quintin Dove, got House to ground into a force play at home and then Hemingway to ground out to third to end the threat.

"We were a little sluggish in the early innings but we had our chances," North Pitt coach Pat Smith said. "We had the bases loaded there in the sixth with no outs and our three-four-five hitters up and we didn't score."

Using its revamped lineup, Conley, now 8-8, forged a 3-0 lead after two innings.

The Vikings led 2-0 after the first inning on Ken Holland's opposite-field home run to rightfield with Joey Joyner on first with a single.

Conley added another run to its lead in the top of the second when Jimmy Kaler walked, moved to second on Jeff Manning's ground out and to third when Roy Lassiter reached on an error. Greg Toler then singled Kaler home and the Vikings led, 3-0.

The Panthers, however, rallied to tie the game in the bottom of the second. Jerry Simpson walked and stole second. Elwood Ayers reached on a fielder's choice when Simpson beat the throw to third. Then, Mike Brown singled home Simpson and Ken Whitehurst grounded out to score Ayers. Brown later came home on Gregory Briley's single to tie the game at 3-3.

Two innings later, the Vikings were back on top. Dixon Page started off the fourth with a double. Jeff Cox then walked and Lassiter singled to load the bases. Ground outs by Sammy Tucker and Wesley Smith brought home Page and Cox and Conley led, 5-3.

Tar Heels Making Amends For Poor Regular Season In Tourney

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina baseball team seems ready to make amends for its failure during the season to successfully defend its 1980 Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season baseball championship.

The Tar Heels slumped to a 6-7 record during the ACC campaign, relegating them to sixth place ahead of Wake Forest and Georgia Tech. Meanwhile, Clemson and North Carolina State tied for the crown at 10-4 each.

But in the ACC tournament on their home field, the Tar Heels show every intention of making up the lost ground. Their latest triumph was Friday afternoon's 8-5 come-from-behind victory over Duke.

In other tournament action Friday, the Tigers sent Wake Forest home, 6-5, on a 10th-inning home run by Jimmy Key. The Wolfpack knocked surprising Georgia Tech out of the tourney by outlasting the Yellow Jackets, 9-6.

In the final action of Friday's play, N.C. State was sent home by the Blue Devils in an 11-7 slugfest.

In Saturday's action, the Tar Heels met Clemson at 1:30 p.m. The winner of that game was to face Duke at 7 p.m.

North Carolina appeared in danger of losing its home-field advantage when Duke jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first inning and knocked starter Brian Rice out of action. Dave Droschak came in for the Tar Heels and slowed the Blue Devils down, although he surrendered four walks in three innings.

The margin was sliced to 2-1 in the fourth before Duke struck again for a run in the fifth and two more in the sixth against James "Peanut" Parks.

But Parks closed the door for the last three innings and allowed his teammates a chance to get back into the contest.

Drex Roberts smashed a home run in the bottom of the seventh, then came back in the eighth with a two-run blast to right field to follow Scott Bradley's double and Pete Kumiega's infield hit to tie the score at 5-all.

"I just took a step and said it's out of here," Schuler said of his game-winning blow.

Of the rally, Schuler said, "Something happened. We just exploded. The home run Drex hit ignited."

Roberts said UNC just needed some time to get untracked before unleashing its bats on the Blue Devils.

"When Scott hit that double and Pete got the hit in the infield, I knew we were rolling," Roberts said.

It took Roberts a while to get his bat untracked during the season, but he felt Friday that if he hit one, why not two.

"I was thinking about it. I didn't think I'd do it, but I was thinking about it," he said.

Rampants Pace All-Tourney

Greenville Rose's Roger Williams was named the Most Valuable Player and the Rampants placed three players on the Pitt County All-Tournament team.

Williams struck out 13 and walked three and was one for five at the plate Friday night in the Rampants' 20-0 victory over Farmville Central for the tournament championship.

Williams, who did not play in the second game, a 5-1 win over North Pitt, hit a home run in Rose's 9-0 win over Williamston in the opening game of the tournament. Williams was two of three against the Tigers with two RBIs.

Named to the all-tournament team from Rose were shortstop Mark Douglas, catcher Emmett Walsh and rightfielder Kenny Barnes.

Douglas, along with having an error-free tournament in the field, was three of 10 at the plate with four runs and one RBI.

Walsh, who threw out the only runner who attempted to steal against him and also picked off a man from first in the tournament, was four of nine at the plate with a home run.

Barnes, who played only briefly against Williamston, was three for six in two games with two doubles and three runs.

Tournament runnerup Farmville Central had two players on the team: Bobby Avery and Greg Hardison.

Hardison was three of four in the Jaguars' 7-6 win over D.H. Conley Thursday and had a double against Rose, one of only two Farmville hits in the game. Avery scored two runs in the DHC win and was the winner on the mound in relief, his sixth win in 10 outings.

Also named to the team from the area were North Pitt's Roger Bell and D.H. Conley's Roy Lassiter.

Others on the nine-man team were Kinston's Jeff Jenkins and Tony Gardner.

Norris Hurls Oakland To 15th Victory In 16 Games This Season

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

Mike Norris stayed away from the fisticuffs and concentrated on his quota, which kept the Oakland A's on the winning track.

"I try to keep a team down to two runs," Norris said after hurling a five-hitter as Oakland stopped the Seattle Mariners 6-2 and posted its 15th victory in 16 games. "We're going to be in the ball game if I do that. I only had one shutout last year."

In other AL games Friday, Chicago nipped Detroit 3-2 in 10 innings, Minnesota stopped California 7-5, the New York Yankees defeated Toronto 4-2 and Milwaukee clubbed Kansas City 6-1. The Texas at Cleveland game was postponed because of rain.

Norris, now 4-0, also hurled his third complete game. The one game he didn't finish was last weekend when he injured his shoulder in a brawl involving the Mariners' Lenny Randle.

Norris posted a 22-9 record last year, finishing with an earned run average of 2.53. This year, he is rolling along below his "quota" with a sparkling ERA of 1.70.

The 6-foot-2, 172-pound right-hander was rolling along with a two-hitter Friday night when he gave up consecutive home runs to Richie Zisk and Jeff Burroughs. Tom Paciorek then singled before Norris set down the next three batters to end the game.

Oakland Manager Billy Martin said he told Norris to challenge the Mariner batters in the ninth. The homers "didn't hurt us," Martin said. "If you've got a six-run lead, you've got to go after them."

Norris gave up the solo shots on fastballs.

"They're the only two good pitches they had all night," Norris said of Zisk and Burroughs.

Oakland opened the scoring in the first inning when Rickey Henderson led off with a double and scored on Dwayne Murphy's single. Mitchell Page then singled home Murphy.

Then, in the third, Oakland chased Seattle starter Glenn Abbott, 0-4, as Murphy's homer ignited a four-run inning.

White Sox 3, Tigers 2

A 10th-inning home run by Greg Luzinski boosted Chicago over Detroit. It was Luzinski's second homer of the season and came off Jack Morris, 1-2.

Yankees 4, Blue Jays 2

Graig Nettles' fourth homer of the season, a solo shot in the seventh inning, was the big blow as the New York Yankees stopped Toronto for their fourth straight victory.

Tommy John, 2-1, held the Blue Jays scoreless. But after he walked Willie Moseby to start the eighth inning, reliever Rich Gossage came on and gave up a two-run homer to pinch-hitter Willie Upshaw.

Nettles' homer was his 284th career roundtripper and moved him to one behind Bill Dickey and in seventh place on the Yankees' all-time home run list.

Brewers 6, Royals 1

Three-run homers by Ben Oglivie and Ted Simmons powered Milwaukee past Kansas City. It was Oglivie's third of the season and Simmons' second.

Oglivie cracked his homer off loser Rich Gale, 1-1, while Simmons hit his off reliever Dan Quisenberry.

The Royals had been shut out for 18 successive innings until Willie Aikens hit his second homer of the year with two out in the Kansas City sixth.

Tigers Top Washington

Roger Barber walked with the bases loaded in the top of the seventh to force home Ed Pippin to tie the game and James Clemmons scored on a passed ball for the go-ahead run as Williamston edged Washington, 11-10, Friday afternoon to capture seventh place in the Pitt County Baseball Tournament.

The Tigers, now 6-9, trailed, 10-9, going into the seventh after the Bears had scored five runs in the sixth to rally from a 9-5 deficit.

Pippin led off the seventh with a walk and moved to second on Clemmons' single. Both runners advanced a base on Victor Thomas' sacrifice bunt and Tim Hines then walked to load the bases.

Barber then worked Pam Pack pitcher Ronnie Harris, who walked 13 on the day, for a walk to force in Pippin with the tying run. Clemmons then raced home on a passed ball and the Tigers led, 11-10.

Williamston led 3-0 after the first inning. Pippin walked, moved to second when Thomas reached on an error and went to third when Hines walked. Greg Rogerson walked to force home Pippin and Thomas scored on a wild pitch.

After Tony Rogers walked to reload the bases, Greg Thomas hit a sacrifice fly to score Hines and the Tigers led, 3-0.

Washington pushed home five runs in the second to take a 5-3 lead but the Tigers matched that with five runs of their own in the fourth.

Pippin went all the way to third on an error by the centerfielder and scored on Clemmons' double. Victor Thomas then wound up on third on an error to score Clemmons.

After Thomas was out on Hines' fielder's choice, Rogerson, Greg Johnson, and Greg Thomas walked to force home Hines. Brian Leggett was then hit by a pitch to score Rogerson and Pippin then popped out to score Thomas.

The Tigers added a run to their lead in the fifth, making it 9-5, before the Pam Pack took the lead with a five-run sixth.

Clemmons led Williamston with two hits in four at bats including a double. Mike Askew was two for three and Lonnie Harris two for four with a double to lead the Pam Pack, who finished last in the eight-team field.

Williamston travels to Roanoke Rapids Tuesday.

one with a run in the bottom of the fifth. Ronnie House tripled to right and scored on Hemingway's sacrifice fly, but could not score again — despite loading the bases in the sixth with no outs.

Brown and Gregory Briley both were two for four for the Panthers. Lassiter had two hits for Conley.

North Pitt plays host to Charles B. Aycock Tuesday and Conley entertains Ayden-Grifton in an important Eastern Carolina Conference game.

Dr. J Proves Can Play Defense Stopping Bird For Philadelphia

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — When you think of Julius Erving, you think of graceful glides and swooping drives to the basket, ending most often in forceful slam dunks. But while Dr. J is not known for his defensive prowess, he does have the ability to rise to a challenge.

After Boston's Larry Bird burned Philadelphia for 67 points in the first two games of their National Basketball Association playoff series, 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham decided he had seen enough. So he took 7-footer Caldwell Jones off Bird Friday night and gave the job of stopping the Celtics' forward to Erving.

For the 76ers, it was a switch in time.

Although Bird led the Celtics with 22 points and 13 rebounds, he was never able to dominate the floor as he had in the previous games. Meanwhile, Erving led a balanced Philadelphia attack with 22 points and Jones was able to lay back for 14 rebounds and five blocked shots as the 76ers beat the Celtics 110-100 Friday night to take a 2-1 lead in their Eastern Conference playoff finals.

It was the Celtics' 10th straight loss here, a streak they hope to end when the best-of-seven series continues here Sunday.

"I think the Celtics were surprised when they saw me covering him," said Erving. "I don't think they expected the change, and if they did, it took them too long to adjust."

The Celtics, shooting from farther outside than usual, missed nine of their first 11 shots and the 76ers took the lead for good with 11 consecutive points for a 21-10 edge with 4:25 left in the first quarter.

"We didn't play well at the beginning," said Celtics forward Cedric Maxwell. "We pressured ourselves. We tried to make quick points and we dug a grave for ourselves."

"We played catch-up all night and you don't win games that way," said Celtics Coach Bill Fitch.

The Celtics, who trailed 31-20 .

Kings Try To Stop Malone But Rockets Whiz By To Win Anyway

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets Coach Del Harris hopes the Kansas City Kings try to gang up on center Moses Malone again Sunday in the fourth game of their National Basketball Association Western Conference playoff series.

Kansas City Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons says the Kings will use the same strategy but try to make it work.

Harris also hopes for the same results the Kings got Friday night when Calvin Murphy broke out of a two-game slump and Robert Reid hit the pressure buckets to lead the Rockets to a 92-88 victory and a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven Western Conference series.

"They geared up to stop Moses and sure, you can stop Moses Malone with two or three guys," Harris said. "Mo was basically a decoy in our offense. We couldn't just play into the teeth of their defense."

Murphy canned 23 points, including the first eight Rocket points of the second quarter to give the Rockets a lead they never lost. Reid shot holes in the Kings defense throughout the game and finished with 20 points, including Houston's final three buckets.

"I'm a long way from being a genius so we'll just keep doing the same thing. I don't want to over-coach," Fitzsimmons said.

Kansas City center Sam Lacey and Reggie King bottled up Malone much of the evening.

'Yeah, we guarded Mo all right but we let some of the other cats out of the bag," Lacey said. "We've got to do better Sunday."

Murphy gave the Rockets their first big burst by hitting the first eight points of the second quarter en route to a 38-26 lead. The Kings cut it to 38-34 but Reid fueled a spurt and the Rockets took a 47-38 lead at halftime.

Houston led comfortably through most of the second half until the Kings, led by King, cut the lead to four again with 2:16 to go, trailing 88-84.

But Reid came back with three straight baskets to put it away.

Billy Paultz also scored 20 points for the Rockets and was a thorn in Kansas City's side.

The Dodger Fans Screamed, But Padres' Lollar Kept His Cool

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Dodger Stadium crackled with noise. Los Angeles fans hoping for some ninth-inning lightning.

Tim Lollar wasn't about to get burned, though.

"I tried to ignore the crowd," the San Diego Padres' young left-hander said of the crowd of 49,256. "It was between myself and the hitter. I just wanted to throw strikes."

After giving up an inning-opening single to Ken Landreaux and a sacrifice bunt by Dusty Baker in the ninth, Lollar retired Steve Garvey and Ron Cey on harmless fly balls to record his first National League save by preserving a 6-5 victory over the Dodgers.

Lollar's nifty performance capped a dramatic night for the Padres, who came back from a 5-3 deficit with a three-run rally in the top of the ninth. The triumph cooled off a hot Dodger team that had won 11 of 13 games prior to Friday night and whose pitching staff had allowed no more than four runs in any game this season.

"We have no illusions, our kids are giving us a good effort," said San Diego Manager Frank Howard.

"This is a team of 'no names' trying to show they belong in the majors," is how Lollar described his teammates.

The Padres started their ninth-inning rally with an infield single by Luis Salazar. One out later, Barry Evans singled off reliever Bobby Castillo's glove.

Gene Richards singled home Salazar to get the Padres within a run and chase Castillo. Pinch-hitter Dave Edwards singled off Dave Goltz to score Evans with the tying run and bring Steve Howe out of the bullpen. Ruppert Jones then singled through a drawn-in infield to score Richards with the tie-breaking run.

Garvey had slugged two home runs, his first and second of the season, and drove in four runs and Dave Lopes also homered for the Dodgers to help them take a 5-3 lead into the ninth.

Braves 7, Giants 1

Bruce Benedict's RBI single in the seventh broke a 1-1 tie and triggered Atlanta over San Francisco. The Braves wrapped up the game with a five-run ninth keyed by RBI singles by Biff Pocoroba and Jerry Royster.

The victory was the fifth in a row for the streaking Braves and the loss was the fifth in six games for the slumping Giants, who have scored only five runs in their last four games.

"Our lack of offense is the most disheartening thing," said Giants Manager Frank Robinson. "If we score three or four runs early, it's a different game. Errors are magnified when you don't score."

Phillies 6, Cubs 4

Mike Schmidt's two-run homer capped a four-run fifth inning and led Philadelphia over Chicago. The rally benefited left-hander Steve Carlton, who won his third game in three starts despite yielding 12 hits in seven innings.

"I like to come to Chicago," said Schmidt, who has hit 31 of his 287 career homers in Wrigley Field. "I like the town and I like the ballpark."

Schmidt also had a walk and a two singles, but probably the hardest ball he hit was a shot to straightaway center that was held up by the wind and caught.

"I'm a straightaway hitter and have been for the last two years," said Schmidt. "I hit the second one as good as I did the first, but in this park sometimes the wind gives and sometimes it takes away."

Reds 3, Astros 0

Frank Pastore allowed only four hits, two of them infield singles, and singled home a run to lead Cincinnati past slumping Houston. Pastore struck out five and didn't, walk a batter and retired the last 11 hitters to hand the Astros their third straight defeat and 11th loss in 14 games this year.

The Reds' first run came in the first inning on George Foster's RBI single and they added two insurance runs in the ninth on Johnny Bench's RBI double and an RBI single by Pastore.

Pastore credited his success to his improved curve ball, a pitch with which he has not been consistently successful.

"In the past, I haven't been able to get it over," he said. "I worked on it during the spring and now rather than going just with the slider and the fastball, I feel like I can use it, too. It kept the hitters on their front foot all night."

Softball Tourney

The West End softball team will sponsor a softball tournament from May 8-10 at the Alberston fields in Alberston, N.C.

The entry fee is $50 per team and team rosters must be turned in before the first game is played. Each team is allowed 15 players and must have at least 10 to start the game.

All USSSA rules will apply during the tournament.

Pairings will be made Wednesday, May 6, and teams will be notified the same day where, when and whom they will play.

Checks should be payable to West End softball team, Woodrow Holloman, 405 W. Blount St., Kinston, N.C. 28501. For further information, call 523-4752 (office) or 523-4996 (home) or J.W. Holloman at 523-1485.

Trophies will be given to the first and second place teams and 15 individual trophies will be given as well.

after the first period, made several runs at the 76ers but never caught them. The closest Boston could come was six points in the fourth quarter, but with the score at 100-94 with 4:02 to play, Philadelphia put the game away with six straight points — a tough layup by Darryl Dawkins and two free throws apiece by Maurice Cheeks and Erving.

Reserve guard Andrew Toney contributed 19 points in 24 minutes for Philadelphia, giving him 80 points in the series. Bobby Jones and Lionel Hollins scored 16 apiece and Dawkins had 15. His Boston counterpart, Robert Parish, had a miserable night, getting in foul trouble and scoring just six points on 1-for-14 shooting.

"Credit for the victory has to go to Julius Erving and Caldwell Jones," said Bobby Jones. "Caldwell was getting the rebounds and getting us going on the fast break and Doc did an unbelievable job on Bird. He hounded him all over the place, forcing him outside and taking the Celtics out of what they wanted to do offensively. That was the difference."

"Doc played good defense against me," Bird said of Erving. "He overplayed me and tried to deny me the ball. I like that because it gives me an opportunity to get inside, but that didn't work tonight."

It didn't work because of the presence of Caldwell Jones underneath.

Wallace Wade Still Has Eye For Sport

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

He is far removed from the game of football now, except for weekends in the fall when he visits the stadium named in his honor to watch the Duke Blue Devils play. But his distance from the game has not meant Wallace Wade has lost his eye for it.

Wade lives in the midst of a huge expanse of land in northern Durham County. The home is surrounded by trees, pasture and silence. There is very little outside the home to let one know that a coaching legend lives inside.

Only in the Wade study does one get an idea of what great feats Wade achieved while he walked the sidelines for Alabama and Duke. In one 8-by-10 frame, there is a cover of Time magazine with Wade's likeness on it. In another frame is a reproduction of the plaque bearing the words "Wallace Wade Stadium."

Among the books on the shelf is a history of Alabama football and several thick volumes on the Tournament of Roses as well as the Rose Bowl game itself.

Wade knows all too well about the Rose Bowl. He coached in five of them, played in one, and brought home three victories. He even arranged the 1941 game for Durham when Californians feared that the Japanese would follow up on their Pearl Harbor attack.

Wade sees only the Blue Devils play football. He doesn't venture beyond Durham. To gain his insights, he uses a large color television set in the study. One thing he has learned is that football has lost its character. He thinks its use now is stepping stone to the National Football League.

"A boy gets from high school football and he thinks about getting a scholarship," Wade said while sitting under a oil portrait of himself. "As soon as he gets to college, he begins to wonder where he's gonna be in the draft."

He calls football during his era "an exercise to build character in young men." Wade says the two-platoon system has moved that task to a secondary status.

"For instance, when you had to play both offense and defense, you had certain skills in one phase of the game or the other. Very few people came along who were outstanding in all phases of the game of football originally," Wade said.

"I think this two-team thing fails to develop the character in the boys," he adds, bringing up the case of Johnny Mack Brown, the legend of Tuscaloosa.

Wade said Brown was one of the best runners and pass receivers he had ever seen. But because of his lack of defensive prowess, Brown had to sit out his entire sophomore year.

Then came the Rose Bowl of 1926 against Washington. The Crimson Tide rallied from a two touchdown deficit to take a 20-19 lead. Brown saved the day for 'Bama, but only because his defensive skills had finally caught up with his offense.

"They had a great runner on that team, George Wilson, one of the finest runner I've seen," Wade said, adding that on the last play of game, Wilson was headed for paydirt with only Brown to stop him.

"There was our football game hanging on it. Knowing Brown's reputation as not having been a naturally good defensive player, you can imagine how I felt watching.

"Well, that Brown tackled right into him, head first, stopped him right there. That meant more to me than all the touchdowns Brown ever made," Wade adds.

Wade saw six Rose Bowls in his football life, the first one as a player on the Brown team which lost by a 14-0 score to Washington State in 1916. He avenged that loss as a coach 15 years later when Alabama whipped the Cougars, 24-0.

Probably his most memorable Rose Bowl was the 1942 event staged in Durham. With three weeks left before the game, Wade decided to take matters into his own hands.

"Finally, I went down to the administration. I suggested 'Why don't we invite 'em to play here.'"

Wade got the go-ahead from Duke officials, then contacted the folks in Pasadena. With their Tournament of Roses gone, any salvage effort was appreciated.

"I told them we'll do the best we can and divide the gate receipts the way I consider to be fair. That's all the contract we had."

It was also a verbal agreement that awarded the tournament officials a cut of the gate to cover their expenses.

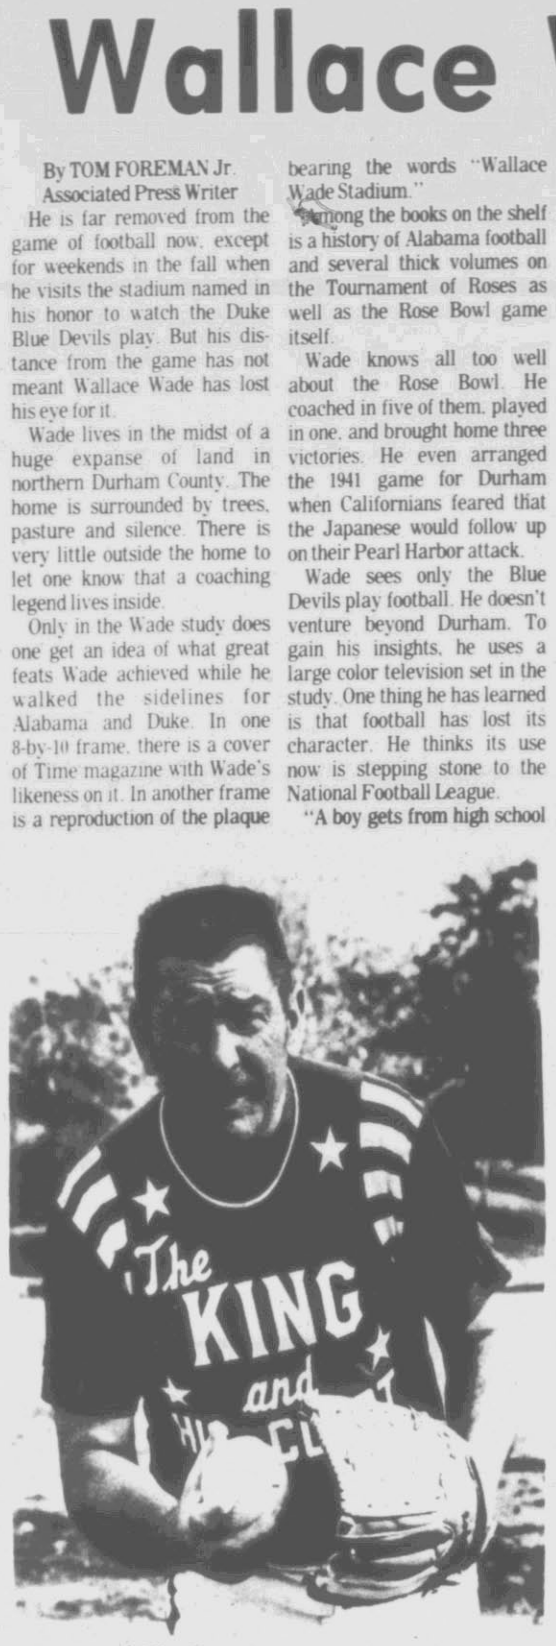
Wade wasn't convinced that the game would come off. But it took a meeting in Greensboro to hear Columbia coach Lou Little that convinced him that it was worth the trouble. He was trying to call Durham to let friends know he'd be late. It was the same night that word of the Durham Rose Bowl was announced to the public.

"The operator said 'We can get you through in three hours.' That's the first time I knew the thing had gone over," he says, explaining that the long-distance lines between Greensboro and Durham were jammed with callers ordering tickets for Jan. 1, 1942.

For the most part, the game came off without a hitch. Except for Wade's team. Possibly because the Blue Devils were denied a trip to Pasadena, Oregon State came to the Bull City and sneaked away with a 20-16 triumph.

The New Year's Day crowd of 56,000 ranks as the third largest ever to see Duke at home. But there might have been a lot more if not for some carelessness.

"The day after the game I just happened to walk into a vacant room in the old gym. There was a wastebasket full of money orders. Some taxi driver, instead of finding out who to deliver them to, dumped them the floor," he says.



King And His Court

Eddie Feinger's "The King And His Court" four man softball team will appear in Greenville, Sunday, May 10, at 7:30 p.m. at Guy Smith Stadium. The team will face a team of Greenville All-Stars in the contest, which will benefit the Greenville Special Olympics. Tickets are $3 for adults and $2 for students 18 and under. They may be purchased at H.L. Hodges, Bond's Sporting Goods and at any of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Centers, or through mail orders to Special Olympics, P.O. Box 202, Greenville, N.C., 27834, with checks made out to Special Olympics. Be sure to include number and type of tickets needed, and return address. Orders received after May 1 will be held at the ticket office at Guy Smith.

Knights In 15-5 Romp

GOLDSBORO — Greenville Christian erupted for nine runs in the fourth inning and then went on to blast Goldsboro, 15-5, in a high school baseball game.

In the girls' softball game, Goldsboro defeated the Lady Knights, 11-1, in a game called in the fifth.

Duane Roeser led the Knight hitting attack with three hits in four at bats and three RBIs while David Hollingsworth was three for five and John Parnell two for four.

The Knights also had 24 stolen bases, led by Jim Laney's six. Laney also stole home.

The Knights trailed 4-0 after the first inning but rallied for three runs in the second to cut the deficit to 4-3. Goldsboro added another run in the third before the Knights sent 12 batters to the plate in the fifth, accumulated eight hits and scored nine runs.

Roeser had two RBIs on a single in the inning and Hudson doubled home another.

Greenville plays host to Bethel Monday and Faith Tuesday.

Troubles Set Him Day Back

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — But for engine problems, NASCAR rookie Mike Alexander figures he might have won the pole position for Sunday's Virginia 500 Grand National stock car race.

As it turned out, the 23-year-old Alexander will start in the No. 11 position — but with a qualifying record for the .525-mile Martinsville Speedway track.

Alexander, an Oldsmobile driver from Franklin, Tenn., competing in only his seventh Grand National race, hit a top speed of 89.094 Friday as the last 21 spots for Sunday's 31-car field were filled.

That wiped out the record of 89.056 mph set just the day before by 24-year-old Buick driver Ricky Rudd of Chesapeake, Va., as he won the first pole position in his seven-year driving career.

"We broke a sump pump and the engine wasn't getting any oil, so we couldn't take a lap," Alexander said of Thursday's first day of qualifying. "The car was really running great, so I wasn't surprised that we qualified as fas as we did."

The second fastest time Friday was an 88.730-mph clocking turned in by another rookie, Morgan Shepherd of Conover, N.C., in a Pontiac. Jody Ridley of Chatsworth, Ga., hit 88.560 mph in a Ford and rookie Ron Bouchard of Fitchburg, Mass., 88.292 mph in a Buick.

"Among those who qualified Friday, but well back in the pack, were veterans Richard Petty, a 15-time winner at Martinsville; former qualifying record-holder Neil Bonnett, Benny Parsons, James Hylton and Cale Yarborough.

Harry Gant of Taylorsville, N.C., will start on the outside pole in an Oldsmobile with Buddy Arrington of Martinsville, Dodge, and Butch Lindley of Greenville, S.C., Chevrolet, in the second row.

Defending Virginia 500 champion Darrell Waltrip of Franklin, Tenn., will start in the No. 6 spot in a Buick.

The $169,385 race, richest of its distance in NASCAR history, starts at 12:30 p.m., EDT, Sunday with the winner earning $19,475. There' also will be $5,000 in lap money.

Final shakedown runs were on tap today with most attention centered on the Azalea 150, a 150-lap National Championship Modified race.

The United States Team Handball Federation will be holding tryouts for both men's and women's teams for the 1981 National Sports Festival at East Carolina on Saturday.

The festival will be held July 23-29 in Syracuse, N.Y. It will include over 2,500 athletes competing in 32 Olympic sports.

Fixed-Rate 30-Year Loans On Way Out

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Those 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages, so familiar to thousands of homeowners, have received a mortal wound, North Carolina lenders are saying.

That type of mortgage was cast into its death throes on Thursday when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board decided to allow savings and loans and other lenders to make the so-called variable-rate mortgages after April 30. That means interest rates and payments can be raised monthly to compensate for inflation.

Gene Curtis, president of Charlotte's Future Savings & Loan Association, said on Friday, "We are going to do nothing but variable-rate-type mortgages.

"I think the whole industry will be going to that and it will be the predominant part of the real estate financing market within the next six months, if no within the next 90 days."

With the board's ruling, an S&L and a borrower can agree to raise or lower the interest rate on the morgage as often as once every 30 days.

Ormond, it was noted, is a recipient of the French Fox Award, the highest honor given a wholesaler by Foodland International, and has held all NCWA offices. He and his father are the only father-son combination to serve as president of the association, NCWA reported.

Markets Go On Despite Order

By PAULINE JELINEK
AP Business Writer

The long-awaited enJ to the Soviet grain embargo caused only a momentary flutter in grain and soybean futures prices Friday, as traders focused more on recent supply news, analysts said.

Prices were lifted a few cents and then fell back, with only soybeans closing higher on the Chicago Board of Trade. Beans rose 4 3/4 cents to 8 cents and closed at $7.90 3/4 a bushel for delivery in May.

Small groups of traders and other exchange employes bunched around newswire machines on the exchange floor, awaiting the announcement that President Reagan was lifting the 16-month sales ban on agriculture products to the Soviets.

New buying came into the market for several minutes after the report finally came and spread across the trading floor at about mid-session. But analysts said the action already had been largely discounted by the market in recent sessions.

"We have been waiting for a report on this for a long time — it's the old adage of buy on the rumor and sell on the news," one trader said.

In recent months, prices often have taken a cue from developments relating to the embargo. For instance, because Reagan campaigned with a promise to end the embargo, prices got a lift from his election victory. And each time Polish unrest erupted in recent months, prices fell on the thinking that Soviet military action in Poland could result in continuation or expansion of the embargo.

Traders also said the market had already anticipated the effect of Friday's embargo news because press coverage of it was intense throughout the week.

Therefore, a stronger factor in the market Friday, traders said, was the U.S. Agriculture Department report which showed higher than expected stocks of grain, particularly corn. Analysts said prices opened lower on that report, which was released after the close of trading Thursday, and then fell back on it once the psychogical boost from the embargo news had faded.

The report held the worst news for corn prices, which the USDA said was about 170 million bushels larger than analysts had been expecting. Corn lost the most in trading, falling 3 cents to 4 1/4 cents and closing at $3.63 a bushel for delivery in May.

Also weighing on prices were private and government assessments of improved moisture conditions in major growing areas, traders said.

In other closing prices, wheat was 1/4 cent to 2 cents lower, May $4.39 3/4 a bushel; oats were unchanged to 1 cent lower, May $2.24 3/4 a bushel.

Analysts said livestock markets were erratic as traders watched movements in grain prices. Pork prices were mostly lower with hogs closing at 49.25 cents a pound for delivery in June and May-delivery pork bellies at 55.40 cents a pound on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

Higher cash beef prices reported at noon contributed to the strength in live cattle, which closed .07 cent to .88 cent higher, June 71.85 cents a pound.

Analysts said precious metals prices slumped, as did financial futures, partly in response to the thinking that the Federal Reserve would keep federal fund rates high. The Fed acted to drain the system when federal funds were at 14 3/4 percent.

On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold was as much as $6.70 lower and closed at $485.30 for delivery in April while silver closed at $11.23 an ounce. On the Chicago Board of Trade, U.S. Treasury bonds were 8 to 12 ticks lower and Government National Mortgage Association certificates were 9 to 14 ticks lower.

After surging all week, sugar prices fell sharply to close at 17.25 cents a pound.

Fire Damages The Dunes Club

ATLANTIC BEACH — A Thursday afternoon fire at The Dunes Club here that rekindled early Friday morning caused damages estimated unofficially at between $10,000 to $20,000 to one end of the facility.

Lt. Bruce Taylor of the Atlantic Beach Fire Department said the fire involved mainly the ladies restroom and the area above that section. He said about 20 feet of the roof in the area above the locker room was damaged.

Taylor, citing an "excellent response time" by local fire units, said the majority of the building, which had not opened for the summer, was not affected as smoke and water damage was confined to the locker room section.

The spokesman said his department responded to a 4:30 p.m. call Thursday afternoon at the club but the fire apparently rekindled and firemen answered a second call there at 12:46 a.m. Friday. He said fire units reached the scene just in time after the second call, adding "another few minutes and we would have had big trouble."

The Dunes Club is located on Fort Macon Road, approximately a mile east of the circle area at Atlantic Beach.

In The Mountains, Color Fills The Gardens Of Asheville's Biltmore Estate

North Carolina's Spring Gardens, East And West

Spring has arrived at Biltmore House and Gardens in Asheville, and with it, the beginning of the peak flowering days of spring flowers.

Some 24,000 tulips, the bulbs imported from Holland, are now in bloom in the formal Walled Garden, along with dogwood, espaliered fruit trees and over 100 varieties of perennials.

The tulips are expected to reach their full color at the end of April and will be in bloom through the first week of May. These tulips are planted each new year to assure the best possible color and maximum size.

Next, Bedding Plants

Bedding plants are to replace the tulips in the formal Walled Garden in mid-May, after all danger of frost is pased. These flowers, such as marigolds, salvia and geraniums, will be in bloom from June through August.

In late August, the summer bedding flowers will be replaced by chrysanthemums providing splendid fall color in the garden from September through October, or until the first frost.

Shrub Garden

A great variety of flowering trees and shrubs are located in Biltmore's Shrub Garden. These include apple, cherry, crabapple, forsythia, redbud, japonica and pink and white dogwood, as well as other domestic and imported trees and shrubs.

Also located on Biltmore Estate is one of the largest and most complete collections of wild azaleas in the world. These azaleas, along with a number of varieties of hybrid azaleas, will be in bloom from early May through the end of June.

Shrubs native to the mountains, the mountain laurel and rhododendron, located all over the Estate, are to be in full flower beginning in early May.

Rose Garden

In the rose garden there is a collection of hundreds of varieties and colors of roses, including rose of the year selections, which begin putting forth their display of summer colors in June.

By a careful selection of shrubs, trees and flowers, garden personnel on the Estate ensure a steady display of flowering plants from May through October.

Restaurant Open

The Deerpark Restaurant, located on the Biltmore Estate grounds, is now open for the season. It will be open daily from 11:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. This year,a newly revised and expanded menu is featured. Deerpark is also available for group dinners and receptions, by reservation only.

Historic Landmark

Biltmore House, which is now a privately owned National Historic Landmark, was built between 1890 and 1895 by George W. Vanderbilt. More than 400,000 people visit the house and grounds annually. Two separate types of tours of the house are available. Both include tours of the garden. Biltmore House and the gardens are open daily, seven day weekly. An admission fee is charged.

In Manteo, A New Gazebo

By Peggy Howe
N.C.Dept. Of Cultural Resources

Spring turns our thoughts to gardens and one of the most beautiful is the 16th century "Elizabethan Gardens" in Manteo, on Roanoke Island.

Created 30 years ago by the Garden Club of North Carolina as "a living memorial to our first English colonists," the gardens have a special new appeal — visitors are invited to watch the construction of a reproduction of an authentic 16th century gazebo.

Three craftsmen experienced in 16th century construction techniques, on loan from Plimouth Plantation near Massachusetts' Plymouth Rock, are at work constructing the gazebo, which will be complete with thatch imported from Norfolk, England.

Octagonal Design

The octagonal gazebo, to be 14 feet in diameter under a 16-foot thatched roof, is situated on the far side of the garden overlooking Roanoke Sound. Designed to be light and airy to catch sea breezes, yet protect occupants, it will have three open sides, three closed sides and two partially closed sides.

Other 16th century construction features include hand-finished timbers and walls made of wattle and daub, according to Marie Odom, chairman of the board of Elizabethan Gardens.

The final construction at the end of April is to be the climax of a year-long planning effort. Lewis Clarke of Raleigh, a native of England, is architect for the project.

Proper Reeds

Designers, Mrs. Odom pointed out, advised the use of the proper reeds from England, grown in Old Buckenham on the Scales Farm in Norfolk. But, she noted, the price of shipment was prohibitive. Then, at a later date, Geoffrey Gilbert of Compton Castle in Devon made arrangements with M. J. Jordan, director of DART Containerline, a British shipping company, to deliver the thatch at a reduced rate. Jordan and DART were intrigued with the ties between Norfolk and Roanoke Island, Mrs. Odom explained.

Period Techniques

When the craftsmen involved in construction began work earlier in April, they used period tools and techniques common to the 16th century.

Erik Eckholm and Jim Marot, both of the curatorial staff at Pilmouth Plantation, are carrying out the work of building the wooden structure of the gazebo.

Peter Sleven, an Irishman from Donegal who also works at Plimouth, is doing the thatch work on the roof.

Visitors to the garden during the construction period are invited to watch the craftsmen at work on the gazebo.

In addition to the temporary attraction of watching craftsmen build in a centuries old style, visitors can also take in the azaleas, dogwoods, flowering fruit trees, spring bulbs and annuals that are now in bloom.

The Elizabethan Gardens are just off Highway U.S. 64, west of Manteo, and adjacent to the "Lost Colony" outdoor theater. The gardens are open daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. An admission fee is charged.

Children Need Self-Esteem

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: When children act out their emotional problems and are taunted constantly and put down by one or both parents, it is not enough to recommend professional counseling for the child. The parents need counseling, too.

A father who calls his daughter a "tramp" lets her know that he neither trusts nor respects her.

My father put me down constantly until my self-esteem was zero. Then he sent me to a child psychologist to find out why I was hostile, angry and rebellious. The psychologist could never figure it out.

After I grew up and left home, I refused to have anything to do with my father and anyone else who was disrespectful to me. Then I began to recover my own self-respect.

A child or anyone else who is forced to live with disrespect will have a hard time maintaining self-respect, no matter how many counselors "treat" him or her.

Sorry I can't sign my name, but 20 years have passed and I am still too angry to have anything to do with my father.

ANONYMOUS

DEAR ANONYMOUS: You deserve credit for having recovered your self-esteem, but you have yet to resolve your anger and hostility.

You could do with more counseling. "Forgiveness is the fragrance of a violet on the heel of the one who crushed it."

CASTROVILLE, Calif. (UPI) — Unseasonably warm weather in the artichoke-growing area of California began bringing a heavy supply to market about 30 days earlier than the usual peak season of April 15-May 15. Producers say quality is high.

A medium artichoke contains only about 50 calories but some important nutrients: about 210 milligrams of potassium, plus good amounts of vitamins A, B and C and only about 30 mg of sodium.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

I think that I shall never see,
A wall as it was meant to be,
And if my wife with nails does not withdraw,
I'll never see a wall at all.

The meter is Joyce Kilmer. The sentiments belong to every husband who signed a marriage certificate, but if you're going to frame it, insists it be hung from a doorknob.

I have no idea why men feel so maternal about walls, but a small nail in it constitutes a violation second only to the rape of their champion Yorkshire by a Baskin-Robbins-96-flavored stray.

My husband is paranoid about nails in the wall. To him, the most beautiful room he ever saw in his life was a recovery room. He couldn't stop talking about it. "Do you know there wasn't one nail hole in the entire wall?" he said. "You must get the name of their decorator."

My father is the same way. If someone gave him the Mona Lisa, he'd prop it up on the music rack of the piano until "you're sure you want to display it permanently."

I can always tell how secure a marriage is by the number of pictures hanging on the wall. If the walls are barren, the commitment to one another is fragile. It is only a matter of time before the wife appears one day with hammer in hand and announces, "Either you hang this picture or I hang it." At that point she will either adjust to what she has married or turn and run.

Men measure to hang a picture as if they are guiding a kidney stone through a birth canal. They do this because they want you to know at the beginning that the wall is crooked and from then on in, nothing is their fault.

They measure from side to side, top to bottom, the four corners, the wire tension, the distance from eyelet to eyelet, then they will balance the picture against the wall, covering it with their entire body, and ask you to tell them if it looks even. Say yes. Then, they will jiggle the picture so it will make a mark on the wall. At this point, you reach your hand behind it, make a faint X with a pencil and they are ready to drill.

Newspapers are scattered to catch the "wall droppings" and a final check is made. The commitment made, they proceed to drill with the caution of a diamond cutter. They miss the stud by three inches.

My husband once said, "We've been through a lot together and I know things get tense, but just remember, I care deeply for you and want your respect."

I wish he'd said that to me instead of the wall.

Young Officer Says Sex Doesn't Matter

ABOARD THE USCGC CAPE CURRENT (AP) — When Lt. Susan Moritz took command of this 95-foot patrol boat in 1979, she helped smash a 190-year-old Coast Guard tradition that prohibited women from going to sea.

The lieutenant, a native of Lynn, Mass., who graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1975 and then earned her commission at the Coast Guard's Officer Candidates School in Yorktown, Va., was the second woman named to command a Coast Guard cutter.

And though she was prepared for hostility from her all-male crew, the 27-year-old skipper has discovered her sex doesn't make any difference to the 13 men aboard this Fort Lauderdale-based ship.

"It depends on how you conduct yourself, not whether you are a man or a woman. A commanding officer is a commanding officer," she says.

"The only thing I can think of is the men might watch their language a bit more around me than they might around a man."

The service acknowledged it was taking a big chance in 1977 when it decided to allow women to go to sea. And although there have been problems with sexual harassment and the desire of married couples to be stationed together, Coast Guard Commandant Adm. John B. Hayes says the 99 officers and 1,504 enlisted women, who comprise about 4 percent of the service's 38,553 personnel, have proved themselves able to handle the rigors of the sea.

"I think the generalization is they're doing fine," Hayes says. "They have proved themselves to be fine Coast Guard women."

But, the commandant notes, there has been sexual harassment of women by senior male personnel that has resulted in court-martials.

"We have had sexual harassment in some of our more isolated units. We have had general court-martials and the men have been found guilty. We are coming down very, very hard on this and we are making it clear that this will not be tolerated."

Lt. j.g. Beverly G. Kelley, the first woman to command a cutter, says she was judged differently than her male counterparts.

"I was totally evaluated — pros and cons — because I was a woman," says Miss Kelley, skipper of the USCGC Cape Newagen, based at Ma'alaea Point on the island of Maui in Hawaii.

"You bring the ship in and bump the pier too hard and they say, 'Oh, she's a woman.' You bring it in real smooth — they say, 'Oh, that's real good for a woman.' It worked both ways."

Coast Guard's Complex Role Stretches Its Resources Thin

MIAMI (AP) — Just over the horizon, barely visible among the rolling whitecaps, a battered and worn shrimp boat sails gamely north, seemingly alone in thousands of square miles of ocean.

Some 20 miles away, Coast Guard Lt. j.g. Paul Redwine peers into his plane's radar scope as a small blip flashes on the screen. Then his voice crackles over the headphones. "It looks like we have something out there. Let's go check it out."

The engines of the aging Convair HC-131 moan as Redwine banks the plane in the direction of the blip. He spots the boat through binoculars.

"Now what do you suppose he's doing out here?" the young lieutenant says, exchanging glances with his co-pilot and flight engineer. "This isn't what you'd call prime shrimping water." They suspect the boat is carrying marijuana.

"These guys are pretty sharp, and they know what we're looking for. He's going to zig-zag all over the place when we come in low. They don't want us to read the name.'

The plane skims low. The shrimper suddenly changes course, but an alert lookout reads off the name. The information is relayed to a cutter patroling nearby.

Later, the shrimper is boarded, and the Coast Guard seizes its load of marijuana, well short of waiting drug dealers.

The Coast Guard was created two centuries ago to patrol the nation's ocean borders and provide safety at sea. It has always taken bottom billing among the nation's military services — no John Wayne movies, no mass-marketed Coast Guard toys — and indeed is part of the federal Department of Transportation, not Defense.

But today its role is increasingly complex. The Coast Guard is more active than ever as a military force, has developed special teams to handle oil spills and other environmental concerns, polices recently established fishing boundaries, has become U.S. law enforcement's first line of defense in the war on drugs, and often gets involved, albeit reluctantly, in diplomatic relations.

A Government Accounting Office report issued last year says that while the Coast Guard's responsibilities have increased dramatically in recent years, its resources have not.

But senior officers wonder how thin the service can be stretched before the public becomes aware of "the desperate straits we're in," as the commandant, Adm. John B. Hayes, puts it.

Lt. Cmdr. Michael Adams, an operations officer at the Greater Antilles Section in San Juan, Puerto Rico, is critical of the Coast Guard's increased drug enforcement and other police duties.

"The service has become nearly obsessed with the idea that it is a federal law enforcement agency. But the public isn't ready for a change in roles, nor is the service itself truly prepared or capable of becoming the FBI of the waves."

Coast Guardsmen also get caught in the middle of international relations.

GOREN BRIDGE

AND OMAR SHARIF

ASK OMAR

Q.—On one question of play I have received so much contradictory advice that my head is in a whirl. I am turning to you in desperation for an authoritative answer. Assume that, on opening lead against a suit contract, you lead the king of a suit, holding ace-king. What does it mean if partner plays a high card? If he follows with a low card? Are these cards encouraging or discouraging, as I've been taught, or are they for suit preference or do they give count, as some of my partners maintain?—J. Bell, Schenectady, N.Y.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—In top levels of bridge, there are some players who use count signals in all situations, and some graft on suit preference as well. However, only very experienced partnerships who have spent a lot of time discussing these methods have adopted them, or should!

By and large, the bridge community has a very simple, and very effective, way of following to partner's opening lead when the card that partner leads is likely to win the trick. A high card is simply a come-on, which states: "Partner, I like the suit. Lead it again at your next opportunity." A low card says the reverse—it asks partner to shift unless he can continue the suit without damaging the defense.

Thus, if partner leads the king and you have either a doubleton or the queen in the suit, you play a high card to ask partner to continue. If you have three low cards, or even four and are afraid that a continuation would establish a trick for the declarer, you follow with a low card to suggest to partner that there might be more fertile fields elsewhere.

However, there are some cases where the card the opening leader's partner plays does have suit preference connotations. Suppose that, when dummy comes down after your opening lead, dummy has a singleton in the suit you lead. Now, an unnecessarily high card from partner is clearly a suit preference signal, requesting you to lead the higher of the side suits; a low card asks for the lower side suit; and an intermediate card says: "Partner I have no preference; continue this suit unless you have something better to do."

If you consider the matter carefully, this system makes eminent sense. If partner leads a suit that you like, you must have some way to encourage him, or discourage him, as the case may be. If every card you play is going to be suit preference, the defense will flit about like a moth near a flame, and eventually get burned.

Q.—I have heard that this year's World Bridge Championship will be played in the U.S. When and where, and will you be there?—R. Davis, Atlanta, Ga.

A.—It will be held at the Rye Hilton Hotel in Port Chester, N.Y., in October. If my commitments permit, I will be there in my capacity as Chief Commentator of the World Bridge Federation.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Opposition Grows, But Britain's Minister Holds On To Position

By GREGORY JENSEN

LONDON (UPI) — Two years ago she was the whole world's woman of the hour. Today Margaret Thatcher is in deep trouble.

On May 3, 1979, the lacquer-smooth matron with the chocolate-mousse voice leaped easily to power as Britain's first woman prime minister.

Now, on her second anniversary in office, opinion polls show three Britons in four eager to vote against her.

"Voting for that woman is one of the biggest mistakes I've ever made," said Christine Kirby, 24, a housewife. "And God knows I'm paying for it now."

Some of Mrs. Thatcher's Common Market counterparts turn purple with bottled anger at her mere name. Mutters of revolt rumble within her party. Her popularity in the United States seems wistfully ironic to distraught supporters at home.

"Her country is in deep recession," said a writer who backed her from the first. "Her cabinet is not so much divided as bewildered. Her once adoring (supporters) are either mutinous or glum.

"Yet she seems impervious to it all. To her supporters she seems intent only on senseless self-sacrifice."

Part of Britain's disenchantment with Margaret Thatcher is inevitable — every leader experiences mid-term slump.

Part is the result of forces outside her control — world recession, shifting balances of industrial clout, gyrating exchange rates.

But part, perhaps a major part, is due to the unique temperament and personality of the Right Honorable Margaret Hilda Roberts Thatcher, 55, member of Parliament, prime minister and first lord of the Treasury.

Her popular nickname, "The Iron Lady," makes that personality seem simple — tough, unyielding, armor-plated.

But a very complex woman lurks beneath Margaret Thatcher's flawless blonde hair-do. Consider this:

From her first moments in office, she vowed there would be "no U-turns" in her course of action. She would pick policies and stick to them.

But while her policies faced east, actual results stubbornly marched west.

She promised to cut taxes and, despite early cuts, taxes have gone up. She pledged to reduce government borrowing, and borrowing has gone up. She vowed to slash handouts to lame ducks and nationalized industry cripples, and has been forced to give them more billions than anyone since World War II.

She set out to cut government spending, and spending has gone up.

White-Collar Americans Find Ways To Act Out Pioneer West

By TAD BARTIMUS
Associated Press Writer

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP) — There's a new cult among middle-class non-conformists who are frustrated because the complexity of our times has made survival too easy.

Thousands of white-collar Americans are dropping out on weekends to wear buckskins, live in teepees and throw buffalo chips for the fun of it.

Mostly they are people disenchanted with a system that has made life too complicated for them to figure out their own income tax or fix their own cars. But they need to stay in the mad, confused dash of modernity to pay the bills.

So, in a headlong retreat from computers, trash-mashers and plastic money, these modern men and women act out a fantasy of experiencing the pioneer West. It is an adolescent rebellion that would puzzle Daniel Boone, who in his way was more like an astronaut than his 1981 proteges are like mountaineers.

Ted Hatfield is a young man who's cashing in on the mountain men's cravings for the past. He crafts guns the same way his great-great-grandpappy did when he followed Boone from Kentucky to Missouri in 1820.

Hatfield is a 32-year-old world traveler who's run bus tours to India, hiked in the Himalayas and homesteaded in Alaska.

"These folks are popping up all over the country, everybody from the local plumber to college professors," says Hatfield. "All over the United States and Canada, enthusiasts are having black powder rifle muzzle loading sessions."

The National Muzzle Loading Rifle Assn., a 48-year-old non-profit group known among hobbyists as the "mother" organization for black powder rifle enthusiasts, currently has 25,000 members. They come from every state and 18 foreign countries and pay $14 annually in dues to be a member.

Headquartered on a 400-acre "range" in the town of Friendship, Ind., the group also has spawned more than 300 charter clubs throughout the United States that meet for regional events.

The group holds two national black powder matches at Friendship every year. Coming up May 13-17 is the spring get-together, and the national muzzle loading championships are slated for Aug. 15-23. Last year the fall meet attracted 10,000 people.

Hatfield grew up around the fine guns his parents sell in their sprawling sporting goods store and has hunted game since he was a kid. He learned early to tell good workmanship from bad and uses the two surviving squirrel rifles his great-great-grandfather Abel Hatfield made in 1820 as his models of excellence.

All his experience has come together in a tiny shop that smells of sawdust and brass cleaner. In two rented rooms he and partner Sandi Guastrella and two artisans manufacture black powder rifles that begin retailing at $450 each.

Enthusiasts of the early 1800s hunting mode, says Hatfield, gather in woods from Connecticut to California to stalk game with only their single-shot, hand-loading weapons and knives. They dress in buckskins, deny themselves the use of matches and start fires with flints, and sleep in tents or modern teepees.

In the evenings, the group participates in such 1800s sports as tomahawk throws and candle shoots, where a marksman attempts to shoot a candle's flame from a 25-foot distance. There's also story telling and a sing-along around a community campfire for the wives and children of these modern-day trappers.

'Body Parts' Museum Aides Students

By JOHN BRONSON
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The head bone, as the song says, is ultimately connected to the toe bone. But there's a lot in between, students are learning at the University of Pittsburgh's unusual "body parts" museum.

Fibulas, tibias and aortas. Hands, feet, heads and torsos — all the pieces that together make up the intricate mechanism of the human body are there to see, to ponder and, in many cases, to touch.

Although some are wax and plastic models, most items in the collection are the real thing, taken from cadavers of people who donated their bodies to science.

"This is unique," says Dr. Nikolajs Cauna, chairman of Pitt's Department of Anatomy and Cell Biology. "No other medical school in the country has one, although you will find reference collections, not teaching museums such as this, in Europe."

The museum occupies a corner of the university's medical school behind swinging doors bearing "No Admittance" signs. Inside the large room are neat rows of shiny, black laboratory tables. Behind them are several shroud-covered bodies on gurneys.

On the walls hang charts of hearts, lungs and other organs and display cases holding specimens. Skeletons ranging from that of a small child to an adult stand throughout the room.

Sitting on racks in a small alcove are 12 metal boxes, each stenciled with the parts contained — "Head & Neck," "Joint-Upper Limb," "Thorax-Abdomen."

By the time anatomy students leave Pitt, they must know 40,000 terms. Seeing the parts first-hand reinforces the learning process, Dr. Cauna says.

"If you have read about Paris in a book, it's not the same as if you have been there," says the 66-year-old native of Latvia.

The museum also contains unusual specimens of malformed parts, diseased organs and cross-sectional views of the body.

While the museum is not open to the public, Cauna says about 1,000 people, including high school groups, visit the collection each year.

He concedes some people may consider the museum's contents ghoulish at first, but most visitors leave convinced of the importance of having body parts available for study.

Cauna sets a business-like tone in the museum and his high regard for its artifacts apparently has been passed on to the hundreds of students who have used it in the last 10 years.

Not one case of vandalism or theft has occurred in that time, he says, adding, "We ask our students to be considerate and they are."

Cauna, whose European career as a lecturer, professor and medical practitioner spanned two decades, came to Pitt in 1961.

The museum of body parts was developed by Cauna and his assistant, Robert Moore, when the university changed its medical curriculum in 1970. Other medical schools still require dissection by first-year students, he says.

"But nowadays they have to do it rapidly. Here they can get the knowledge without dissection. It is a much easier way to learn. Student dissections cannot compare with what we offer here," Cauna adds.

All of the containers, accompanying charts and labels are made on the premises. Commercial models are purchased when necessary.

Pig Defender Tries To Improve Image

By LANCE J. HERDEGEN

MILWAUKEE (UPI) — Don't tell Miss Piggy, but many people still think of pigs as fat, mean and lazy animals that like nothing better than to eat and spend the day wallowing in mud.

They're wrong — to know the pig is to love it, according to Donna Van Wynsberghe, associate professor of zoology at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

It is time more humans realize pigs are really clean, never overeat, are affectionate and motherly and smarter than dogs, cats, horses and maybe even the porpoise, she said.

"I am attempting to create a positive image — to show the good things the pig does for us," she said. "My giant thrust or interest or hobby is to show people that there is more to pig than what we have associated with pigs."

In addition to bacon, pork chops, ham and sausage, pigs also provide insulin for diabetics, valves for human hearts, skin for grafting, hair for artists brushes. Their fat is used in creating items ranging from phonograph records to coloring crayons.

Pigs also don't overeat like cattle and some other animals. "They eat until they are full, then lay down. That's their eating style.," she said, noting pigs are able to convert 35 percent of all what they eat to meat.

Miss Van Wynsberghe was raised on a cattle and hog farm near Kewanee, Ill., an area which claims to be the "Hog Capitol of the World."

While attending Clark College in Dubuque, Iowa, and Marquette University in Milwaukee, she talked about her hometown's product and soon friends and colleagues were bringing her pictures of pigs, piggy banks and pig posters.

She became aware many people did not appreciate the pig, and that's why she developed her lecture, "The Complete Pig," as part of the UWM's "Science Bag" series.

Pigs have gotten a lot of "bad press" and she can understand why, she said.

"In the summer time, you see hundreds of hogs, wallowing in the mud. The odor is terrible. You think, 'How will I ever be able to eat pig again.' People get the idea the pig is dirty, ugly and stupid. If they would spend time with pigs, they would find they would love pigs."

Their image as "dirty" is the result of not having sweat glands. They have to wallow in the water or cake themselves with mud to insulate themselves from the summer heat, she said.

Two Win Silver Venus Award

Two Win Silver Venus Award "Space In," a video production created by David Balch and Charles Kesler of Greenville, received a Silver Venus award at the 14th Annual Houston, Texas International Film Festival of the Americas held April 21 through 26. The Silver Venus was awarded in the Mixed Media division of Experimental Films.

"Space In" is an experimental video production that loosely illustrates current investigations into "right brain, left brain" activities.

Charles Kesler

David Balch

The Modern Minute Man or Comuter Kadet, as hero of this program, works with the left part of his brain and plays with his right part.

He deals with his job of computer programming as well as everyday details of home management with the linear, analytical left side of his brain. Then at home he retreats into the sanctum of the right side with a video home game and his dreaming state.

The end result is an aesthetic visual of a narrative content designed to bring Walter Mitty up to date.

Balch is Assistant Director and Kesler a Medical Illustrator at the Audio-Visual Services Center, School of Medicine, East Carolina University. The pair also had other productions screened during the recent North Carolina Film Festival.

ECU Super Symposium Monday

ECU News Bureau

"It is a super symposium, that's why we're calling it by that name," says Dr. Richard Laing, dean of the East Carolina University School of Art, in describing the Monday, April 27, art/music "Super Symposium 1981" that will bring to ECU an internationally known designer, an art educator and a Pulitzer Prize winning composer.

Scheduled for appearances beginning at 8 p.m. in Hendrix Theater in Mendenhall Student Center, the three who will be giving addresses are Donald J. Irving, director of Chicago's School of the Art Institute; Jack Lenor Larsen, a noted fabrics designer; and John La Montaine of Hollywood, whose compositions are performed regularly by most major orchestras in the United States.

"These men are currently writing and speaking on subjects that art, design and music students want and need to hear, a prognosis of the professional opportunities in the arts in the 1980s and 1990s," Laing said.

In addition to directing the School of the Art Institute, Irving is chairman of the Union of Independent Colleges of Art. Larsen owns a fabric design firm in New York and has written extensively about fabric design and weaving.

La Montaine is the cofounder of Fredonia Press and Fredonia Discs, publishing and recording firms. His compositions include a wide range of undertakings, symphonic, chamber ensemble, ballet, opera, choral and solo works. One of his earliest works, the "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Opus 9" won the Pulitzer Prize in 1956.

The public is invited to attend, and there is no admission charged.

Three In New Art Museum Exhibition

ARTIST JOHN BARKAND . . . is shown with one of his large scale, lightweight wall sculptures fashioned of cotton fibers. One of seven artists in "Lucky Seven," the 1981 thesis show for graduate students of the ECU School of Art, Barkand has also used five tons of Pitt County clay to fashion an imaginative floor display of flat and rounded pieces. The thesis exhibition will be on view at Gray Gallery on the ECU campus through May 10.

Three young local artists are sharing honors in "Triple Feature," their exhibition at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. The show will be up through May 6.

Ceramist Rita Earley, maker of wood instruments Eric Thiele, and sculptor Jack Gresko are the three artists whose work is being shown in the north and south galleries — with Gresko exhibiting two large metal sculpltures in the museum's front yard.

Although the three work in different media and approach their work with varying viewpoints in mind, there is a common thread of unity apparent in their work — a stringent handling of materials to create clean-cut images of finely crafted objects.

Ms. Earley's ceramics are basically sculptural pieces, rectangular boxed-in structures and a few free standing pieces. Her work is for the most part in monochromatic off whites and grays, with a window theme repeated in the works. Slabs of thin clay evoke images of Venetian blinds, through which the viewer looks upon a quiet undisturbed world outside a window.

This concept is heightened in some pieces with the presence of colorless white faces gazing with a dreamlike stance into the distance.

In one series, "Venetian Moon Rise," the changing locations of a moon outside a window are graphically realized in the slightly altered positions of the small spot of yellow color within the window structure.

A remarkable skill in fashioning wood into sumptous musical instruments, dulcimers, is very much evident in Eric Thieles art. These lovely hand-crafted instruments, a departure from traditional design, are fully functional for making music. The time consuming details he has lavished on the instruments make them works of art as well as pieces for music making.

For more than three years, Thiele sailed on the schooner "Sofia" as mate, carpenter and radio operator. There's a quality of freshness in his instruments that obviously echo the cleaness of sea air.

Sometimes a departure from traditional art forms leaves something to be desired — in the case of Thiele, however, it is exciting to see what can be done with a completely new concept in the hands of a talented artist-craftsman.

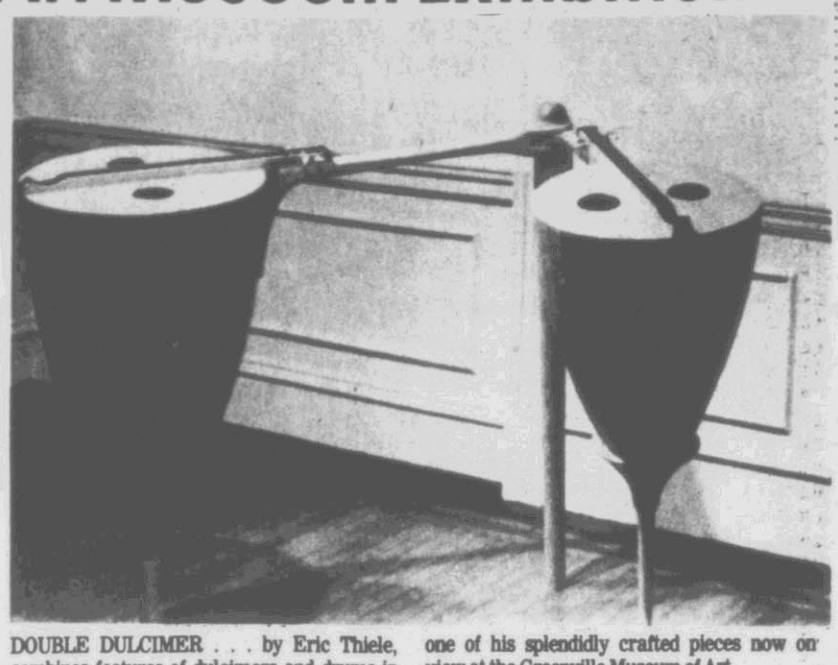
Sculptor Jack Gresko acknowldges that a considerable degree of inspiration for his bronzes comes from "exploring interest in pure form exemplified by the bone and wing forms" which he has incorporated in many of the works he is exhibiting in this show.

Gresko's bronzes are marked by the vibrancy of the tug and pull of one line against another despite their small scale. This same quality is at work in the large vertical piece placed on the ground outside the Museum.

Gresko is also exhibiting a selection of work sketches for the sculpture, and these heighten the interest of the finished pieces.

This is an exhibition with a full measure of fascinating interplay between the work of three artists working in different media with a common bond of creativity.

Jerry Raynor



DOUBLE DULCIMER . . . by Eric Thiele, combines features of dulcimers and drums in one of his splendidly crafted pieces now on view at the Greenville Museum of Art.

Lucky Seven Thesis Show At Gray Gallery

Seven artists have work being exhibited in "Lucky Seven," the 1981 thesis show for graduate students which opened Friday evening with a reception at Gray Gallery, Jenkins Fine Arts Center on Fifth Street, East Carolina University.

The seven whose work are contained in this exhibition, which will be up through May 10, are John H. Barkand, Robert Earl Daniel, Laura Eugenia Jackson, Jeffrey Mages, Judith March, Charlotte Amalie Purrington, and Jan Jackson Wellborn.

Due to circumstances of time, it is not possible at this time to touch on the show with the exception of the work of one of the artists, ceramist John H. Barkand. (Details on the other six artists and their work will be carried in the May 2 edition of this paper).

Barkand's collection of unglazed ceramic pieces, along with large wall pieces of cotton fiber sculpture, can truly be called astonishing. There's almost a sense of being overwhelmed by this young artist's daring in handling this much material — a sense of reaction somewhat like that what archiologists must feel when discovering a huge treasure trove.

"I used five tons of clay, which I dug and transported from the clay quarry at Fountain," Barkand explained. "It's good local raw clay, and I enjoyed working with it."

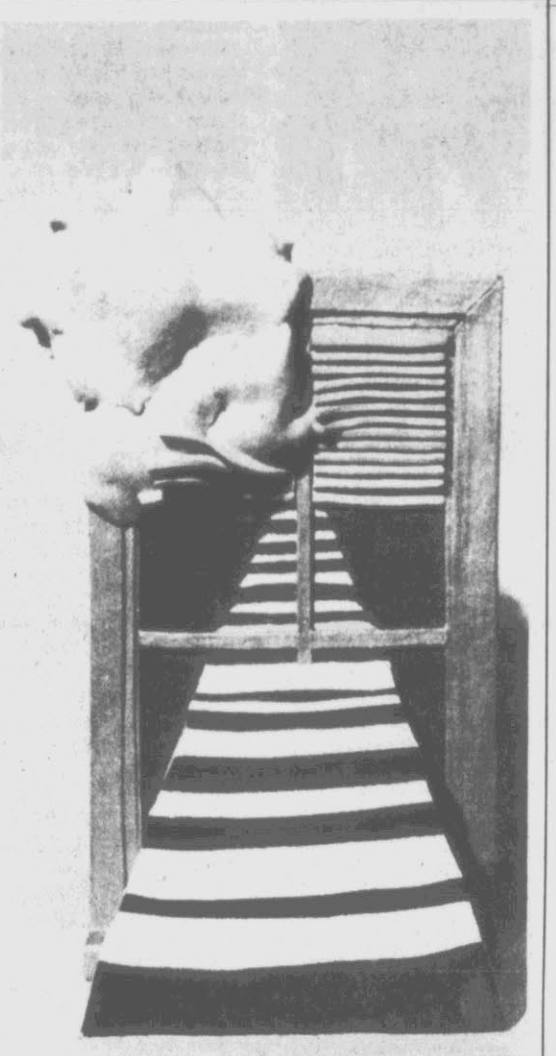
With this huge amount of raw material, Barkand has created a series of locked together floor tiles in flat forms which are contrasted effectively with the round, sensuous forms which he has distributed like chessmen on the tiles. Some of these feature spiked projections, giving them the appearance of ancient Greek or Roman breastplates or shields.

These ceramic pieces are unglazed, and gain in beauty from the natural colors and discolortions of his basic material.

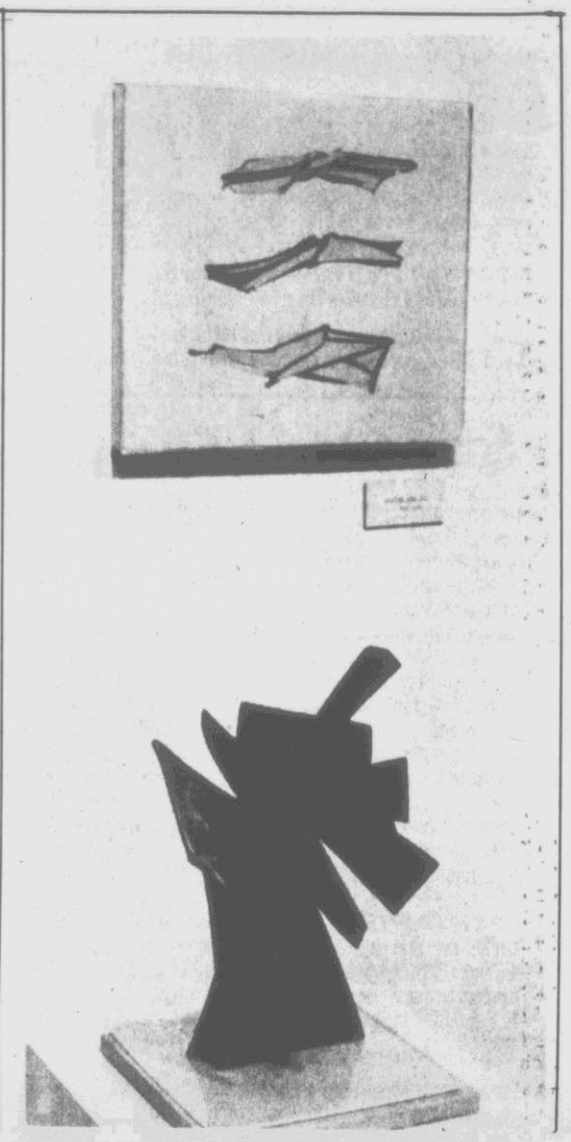
The large wall constructions of cotton fiber at first glance seem massive and weighty, so that it's a shock to discover they are lightweight.

"In these pieces," Barkand commented, "I have attempted to contrast soft qualities, such as represented in the twine like pattern, with the flat, hard qualities of the squared projections within the pieces."

Jerry Raynor



FREE STANDING CERAMIC SCULPTURE . . . by Rita Earley is one a few pieces which incorporates color. Her ceramic sculptures, the majority of which reflect window images, are dreamy portraits of window vistas.



WINGS . . . a small sculpture by Jack Gresko, is one of more than a dozen bronze and steel sculptures, large and small, which Gresko is showing along with a selection of work sketches for his pieces.

Stamp News

A new mint set of 1980 definitive stamps (noncommemorative) and postal stationery will become available to collectors beginning May 18. The definitive mint set is the first produced by the U.S. Postal Service. It contains one of each of the 20 regular stamps, five postal cards, four embossed envelopes and one aerogramme issued in 1980.

In addition to the stamps and stationery items, this mint set features five colorful photos depicting the production process of the Battle of Kings Mountain postal card from conception of the design through printing. The definitive mint set is designed as a companion piece to the 1980 commemorative mint set.

The definitive mint set will be available at more than 13,000 stamp collecting centers and by mail order from the Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, D.C. 20265, for $6.50. If you order by mail, you must add 50 cents for postage and handling charge.

The definitive and commemorative mint sets will provide collectors with every U.S. stamp issued in 1980.

An American rabbi is being honored on the latest stamp from Israel.

The late Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver (1893-1963) of Cleveland, Ohio, appears on a new Israeli stamp as part of its continuing series dedicated to famous persons who helped establish the State of Israel.

During the years 1938 to 1948, Silver was president of the Zionist Organization of America and appealed for the establishment of the new state in the Middle East. In 1947 he carried his plea to the United Nations and mobilized support in the U.S. for this cause.

Asher Naim, Consul General of Israel, came to Cleveland for special ceremonies marking the issuance of the new stamp. One such ceremony was held in the Temple where Abba Hillel Silver's son, Rabbi Daniel Silver, is the present spiritual leader.

The British Post Office is making available a "1980 Collector's Pack" featuring all the commemoratives issued last year with the exception of the London 1980 mini sheet. The cost for this pack is approximately $13.

Six new definitives have been issued by Britain, ranging from the 2½-pence to the 25-p plus first-day covers.

If your local stamp dealer does not have these sets from Great Britain, you may write to "Great Britain Stamp Collectors Society, 744 N. Genesee Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. 90046."

A minor U.S. error — not in printing but in titling — has been reported by the U.S. Postal Service.

Last October, postal officials announced that in 1981 there would be issued a block of four stamps titled "Cacti." After this announcement, it was discovered that one of the featured plants was not of the cactus family but rather a succulent. Therefore the new name for the set will be "U.S. Desert Plants."

Christmas Island, long used as a postmark for Christmas stamps by collectors, has just issued a new set of adhesives that has nothing to do with the holiday. There are four stamps in the set, which honors that island's phosphate industry. The stamps illustrate screening and stockpiling, train loading, railing, and drying.

Christmas Island, a territory of Australia, is located in the Indian Ocean 230 miles south of Java.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Willie Mae Gibbs

Those who like tales of suspense and horror will want to read two books that have been added recently to the library's collection.

Robin Cook, author of the best-selling novel "Coma," takes his readers back to the world of medical horror in "Brain." With this book he has exceeded his previous achievement and has created a thriller of serpentine suspense and truly chilling speculation.

A young girl arrives at Hobson University Medical Center to obtain her medical records and is never seen again, another young woman inexplicably dies a horrible and agonizing death during brain surgery while under local anesthesia. Hidden in a drawer deep in the hospital morgue is a female corpse whose organs are intact, but whose brain is missing.

Inquiries into these bizarre events are lightly dismissed by hospital authorities, and the assistant chief of neoruradiology, Martin Philips, and Denise Sanger, the beautiful young resident who is his lover, persist in their investigation of these incidents only to find themselves sucked into a great turmoil with a secret more awesome in scope that their wildest paranoid fantasies.

It is a secret that will turn Martin Philips into a fugitive, and Denise into the helpless captive of a conspiracy that wants much more from her than her life.

In "Brain," Robin Cook leaves the dark, demonic terror of "Coma," and moves into the gleaming nightmare universe of techno-horror and science gone mad.

Another brillant tale of horror is told by Bari Wood, bestselling author of "The Killing Gift," and "Twins." Mrs. Woods writes of an extraordinary group of men and the secret — older than time and deeper than friendship — that bound them together.

In Belzec, 1945, a group of Jewish captives are found by their liberators in a powdery-grey, dust-coated barracks — miraculously alive and well-fed. Five teen-agers who murdered Professor Adam Levy, a rabbi's son, are found hideously slain in a powder-grey, dust-coated clubhouse in Brooklyn, 1980 — 35 years apart, a continent away.

The mystery that lies hidden beneath the layers of grey dust is a mystery that Adam's beautiful widow, Rachel, feels she must solve as she becomes increasingly suspicious of the strange and powerful bond between her father-in-law, Rabbi Jacob Levy, and his loyal circle of friends that followed him from the old world to the new.

The tension and terror of Bari Wood's storytelling triumph will hold readers spellbound as the inescapable truth emerges from the nightmare of the past.

An oil painting of the "Snap Dragon," by Roger E. Kammerer Jr., an art student at East Carolina University, will be on permanent display in a historic building in Wake Forest. The "Snap Dragon" is the best known of the North Carolina privateers of the War of 1812.

The painting, commissioned by the North Carolina Society of the War of 1812, was given on April 11 to the Wake Forest College Birthplace Society to hang in its headquarters, a pre-1812 building which was the home of Dr. Calvin Jones, a major general of the North Carolina Militia.

A native of Hastings, Neb., Kammerer has spent most of his life in Swansboro and is a graduate of Swansboro High School. He is a senior and is a candidate for the BFA degree in painting at ECU. He has painted a number of portraits and scenes from eastern North Carolina history, many of which have been exhibited and acquired for private or public collections.

FOCUS OF THE FESTIVAL . . . The herring, a beautifully iridescent silver fish, travels up coastal waterways each year to spawn. For several decades, the riverside town of Jamesville has been a prime site for catching the short time visitor to local waters.

A BALLOON, A BOAT, AND BYSTANDERS . . . were typical sights at the easygoing Herring Festival. Before and after eating in the two restaurants and smaller wayside stands, spectators wandered about greeting friends, talking about fishing, and simply taking it easy on a festive Easter season holiday.

Easter Herring Festival Draws Big Crowds

For many years, longer than even most old-timers can remember, it has been tradition in the town of Jamesville for local farmers, merchants, fishermen and their families to gather on the banks of the Roanoke River at herring-run time to share outdoor cooking and eating of the tasty silvery fish and its prized delicacy, herring roe.

After World War II, with more young members of local families moving away to work in the shipyards of Virginia, the pulp mill at Plymouth and the phosphate plant at Aurora, it became convenient to set aside one day for an annual fish fry. Easter Monday was decided to be a convenient day, as most of the young people away from home returned for holiday visits.

Still Authentic

The Herring Festival remains the same basic get together it has been for many years. The path through the woods leading down the slope to the river and the flat area at the foot where activities take place are still unpaved. On days when it rains, like this year's festival date (Easter Monday, April 20), things get rather muddy.

But nobody gives a little mud a second thought. After all, the local populace readily acknowledges that mud is a natural product of rivers and river banks in the flat lands of eastern North Carolina.

Jamesville's yearly festival is predominantly a male event. On Easter Monday Festival day, as on all other days during the spring run of the herring, local fishermen, full-time or part-time ones, are on hand to make the rounds of their nets, haul in the catch, and to sort, clean and sell the fish and fish roe. And the men still do most of the cooking. One of the few noticable differences on the festival day is that young sons and nephews, with a school vacation day at their disposal, are very much in evidence, eager to help the grownups.

Slow Season

Gene Williams, a solidly built Jamesville man who has spent 35 years fishing on the Roanoke . . . "since I was a lad of ten," commented on this year's catch. "It's been the sorriest year I can remember," Williams said. "It looks like the herring spawned out quick this year. For the last four or five days we've been getting what we call the backruns, that is herrings that have already been upriver and spawned and are coming back downriver."

Williams noted that "up to about 15 years ago, Jamesville was the only place around where people come to fish for herring. But now, people fish the river all the way from Hamilton to the mouth of the Albemarle Sound."

A younger fisherman, Randy Gardner, pointed out that "the catch of shad and rock has been pretty good this year, and there's also been some white perch." Under a recent law, rock fish can no longer be caught by net.

Major Attraction

This year, for the first time, an arts and crafts component was added to the festival. Mildred Couch of New Bern, a face painter; Williamston artist Gary Jones, who specializes in realistic rural scenes; weaver Charles Trent of Wilson; local artist Bailey Phelps; Williamston craftswoman Lou Leggett; and Charles Monooch III, author of "Spring Comes to Roanoke," were all on hand to add a new dimension to the festival.

There was country music, too, with the Tar River Boys of Tarboro performing to a packed-in audience in one of the weathered buildings on the river bank where fish were being fried and potatoes stewed. The Tarboro group gladly welcomed local players who joined them in several numbers.

But it is the eating of herring and herring roe that remains the major attraction of the festival. The "River's Edge," a permanent restaurant, and at the "Cypress Grill," a restaurant in an unpainted building that is open only for several weeks during the spring fish season, had long lines going in all during the day to feast on deep-fried herring, herring roe, slaw, potatoes and cornbread. Some fishermen also cook and serve friends and family members hearty portions of fried fish, fish stew and spicy potato stews in their riverside cabins.

Rain or shine, it's the same satisfying story each year. Local people and visitors return by the hundreds to go downhill to eating places on the river banks for their fill of the tasty migrating fish.

READY FOR THE RAIN . . . Local area men, all fishing enthusiasts whatever their regular occupation, and boys out of school for the Easter holidays, came to the festival prepared for a rainy day. As it turned out, they were able to shed their raingear at about noon.

BODY PAINTING . . . especially on the face and arms, featured flowers, insects and designs akin to those worn by Indian braves. Typical is the design painted on the face of this unidentified young man.

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

WAITING TO GET IN . . . These women and children wait outside the Cypress Grill for a vacancy in the restaurant. The Grill, which operates for several weeks during the spring fishing season, and the River's Edge, a permanent brick structure, served overflow crowds from early to late on Monday.

NOW IF IT WAS UP TO ME . . . Herbert Sexton, left, and Rick Batts, right, discuss the right amount of seasoning for the old fashioned potato stew Rick stirs. Herbert's specialty, deep-fried herring, bubbles just out of sight behind him. Most Jamesville men are well known for their cooking abilities.

French Provincial Spotlights Family Room

By Jerry Bishop

Traditional elegance marks the exterior of the Gastonne, a three bedroom design, while the floor plan revolves around family living. Besides the centrally-placed family room, the plan also calls for an 18-ft. gameroom, patio and family dining nook.

With the U-shape and hip roof, the design is true to its French Provincial motif. Tall, small-paned windows and ornate entry door add interest to the appealing facade. Inside, the arrangement takes into account family needs.

Entry is into a small foyer with direct access to the family room. Visible from the foyer, the family room's wood-burning fireplace issues a warm welcome.

To the left of the family room, the large gameroom boasts such extras as attached powder room, storage closet, and access to the patio.

Clustered in the kitchen area are the work and dining centers of the home. A dining nook extends from the kitchen itself, and a more formal dining room adjoins that area. For canned goods storage, the walk-in pantry off the kitchen is a plus.

Between the kitchen and the double garage there is a utility room that is multi-function. A logical location for laundry equipment, the utility room can also serve as mud room.

Bedrooms in this design are separated. The master bedroom is set apart from the others and given a lavish private bath and access to a semi-enclosed patio. Bedrooms two and three are steps from another full bath with double sinks.

Novelist Has Earlier Career In Writing About Decorating

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Barbara Taylor Bradford is a best-selling novelist whose most recent book is called "Luxury Designs for Apartment Living."

Two years ago at age 45 she published her first novel, "A Woman of Substance," and went on to see it become a best-seller in five languages. But before this momentous event, she had another successful career as a writer of home-decorating books and articles.

She has no intention of giving up either career, she said recently at her cheerful New York apartment. And that means she is a very, very busy woman.

"Some of my friends think I am living a glamorous life now that I'm a successful author," she remarked. But that is far from the case. Her life consists of getting up early six days a week and sitting down at her typewriter by 8:30 a.m., where she puts in an 8-to-10-hour day.

One day a week is devoted to writing about decorating. The rest of the time is spent working on her second novel, tentatively titled "Voice of the Heart."

"After that's done, I'll write a sequel to 'A Woman of Substance' and then I'll begin my fourth book, which I've titled 'Act of Will.' That's my life for the next few years," she said.

"Writing the novel was the fulfillment of a childhood dream," she said. "I always wanted to be a writer and sold my first story when I was 12 years old to a child's magazine for 10 shillings and sixpence."

At 13, she received a typewriter from her parents. By 16, she had gotten a job as a typist on a local paper in Leeds, her native town in Yorkshire, which was the locale for "A Woman of Substance."

"It was a boring job typing letters. I wasted so much stationery I was terrified they would find out and fire me. I used to hide the ruined stationery in my desk and take it home at night to burn," she recalled.

However, she persevered and in the proverbial manner was soon writing small stories about local events. She rose to become woman's page editor and then left Leeds for a journalism job in London.

Marriage to an American brought her to New York 17 years ago. One of her first jobs was editing a decorating book. Then came a decorating column which she continues to write and more decorating books.

To Mrs. Bradford, a good description of a novel is "a monumental lie that has to have the absolute ring of truth in order to succeed." Getting the idea is not hard. But "it does take desire, drive, discipline and dedication to sit and sit and sit in order to complete the work. In the earlier books, after I got to a certain point, I'd get frightened and stop writing," she said.

The success of "A Woman of Substance" will make her a rich woman. Eventually, she thinks, the books should bring about $2 million. "But I didn't go out and buy a lot of things. The money is primarily meaningful to me because it shows that I am a successful author," she said.

However, one use she will find for some of it is to redecorate her apartment as soon as her present novel is completed.

"Just as I write in the new decorating book which describes the problems of decorating an apartment, I suffer from a lack of storage space," she said.

Her apartment, a duplex with two bedrooms and baths upstairs, a kitchen, dining room and living room downstairs, was decorated nine years ago in a sunny mixture of yellow and green in the living room, rose-peach in the bedroom and blue in the second bedroom which she uses as a study. Eclectic furnishings mix periods and styles.

Her plans for the apartment read like a prescription for solving space problems in city apartments. "I am going to convert the dining room to a den-study, move my dining table to the living room and close off the den with louver doors," she said.

The color scheme will be simplified. In the living room, where accessories and patterned fabric now dominate, many accessories will be removed, some walls will be covered with beige Belgian linen and the windows will be covered with vertical blinds. Solid colors — pale green and white — will replace the patterned fabrics.

Two identical sets of off-white cotton slipcovers will be made so that when one set gets dirty, another set will go on the upholstered furniture.

Wall systems to add storage space for books, china and files will be installed wherever possible.

"I'm going to be as ruthless in weeding out my apartment as I had to be in cutting my novel," she said.

("Luxury Designs for Apartment Living" and "A Woman of Substance" are both published by Doubleday.)

Flea Market Offers Much In Electronics

By RICHARD BILL
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — It's the most organized flea market in the world, and the money that changes hands each day makes it the biggest.

But it's not antiques that the Japanese are buying at Akihabara (pronounced Ah-kee-ha-ba-ra). It's where they go to purchase their television sets and hi-fi equipment, in fact just about anything that can be electrically operated — even plug-in mosquito killers and heated slippers.

Here, 500 wholesalers and retailers, some in six-story glass emporiums, others in jerry-built lean-to's tucked away beneath the railroad tracks, sell an estimated 25,000 different items.

In the tradition of all great markets, Akihabara's merchants display their goods on the sidewalk, not under lock and key, so that prospective customers can play, tinker and tune and finally haggle at 25 to 40 percent below normal retail prices.

The first shocks for the casual visitor to this electronic festival are the crowds, the noise and the plethora of products on display.

Street hawkers thrust gaudily-printed flyers at passersby, promising hefty discounts on brand-name products at particular stores. Children amuse themselves speeding radio-controlled toy cars down the maze of pedestrian alleyways while parents look for household bargains.

Despite the carnival atmosphere pervading this old quarter on Tokyo's east side, Akihabara is big business. Its annual sales volume has been estimated at about $500 million, some 20 percent of Tokyo's home appliance market.

Akihabara's salesmen are better-dressed and more polite than tourists might expect street vendors to be. It is considered good business in Japan.

The larger outlets set up special tax-free corners for tourists, usually staffed by people with at least a smattering of English.

Here's the Answer

By ANDY LANG

Q. — The brass knob on our door has become tarnished. How should I remove the old finish and what should I use to put on a new finish?

A. — Brass generally is coated with lacquer when new. To remove it, use lacquer thinner. Lacquer thinner is volatile and flammable, so use it with care where there is plenty of ventilation and no open flame. You may have to go over the knob two or three times. Once all the old finish has been removed, clean and rub the brass thoroughly to get off any dirt and fingerprints that might have attached themselves to the metal while you were taking off the finish and polishing the knob. Once you are convinced that the knob is spotless, apply a coat of lacquer diluted 50 percent with lacquer thinner. Allow to dry and apply a second and possibly a third coat of the lacquer mixture.

Q. — The outside of our house is badly in need of painting. It has what my neighbor calls an alligator surface. Must it be scraped off or can we paint over it?

A. — You didn't give enough details, such as the kind of wood, the kind of finish, etc. But an alligatored surface can occur from a variety of reasons, among them putting on too heavy a coat over one that has not dried thoroughly. Generally, an alligatored surface requires that all of it be scraped off before repainting. The one exception is when the cracks are very thin and there is no indication that water has seeped through them. In that case, a sanding may be sufficient before repainting.

Q. — About two years ago we finished a bedroom bureau with varnish. It still looks fairly good and probably would be all right with a cleaning. However, my husband has read about how wonderful polyurethane varnish is and now he wants to refinish the bureau with it. I maintain that it isn't necessary — that the finish won't look much different anyhow. Can you straighten this out for us?

A. — This reply has nothing to do with straightening out anything, but will attempt to give you the facts and nothing more. There is no doubt that polyurethane varnish is an excellent product. It is fairly easy to apply, dries more quickly than conventional varnish and is very durable. Also, it is more expensive than regular varnish. If the cabinet still has a nice appearance and does not show any sign of deteriorating — which it shouldn't — there does not seem to be any reason to refinish it.

Q. — What kind of sandpaper should be used on metal?

A. — For most purposes, emery paper, but there are other abrasives for use on metal.

By ANDY LANG

When you buy a house these days, you have to make some compromises. Housing costs and mortgage interest rates being what they are, there is always a gap between what you want and what you can afford.

As you choose the things which you believe to be most important to your future satisfaction, you necessarily have to eliminate some items you would like. Whatever you do, says one authority, don't compromise on bathrooms and the kitchen. Professor Louis Johnson of Catholic University in Washington, D.C., puts it this way:

"The prospective home owner must be happy with the bathrooms and kitchen, as well as with the basement if the house has one. Bathrooms and kitchens are by far the most costly to rearrange to your tastes. The reason for this is the amount of plumbing and electrical work involved. It is very costly to remove walls or to change appliances from place to place. If there is a basement, it must be watertight or it will cause plenty of trouble later."

Johnson, who specializes in architecture and house planning, has a list of features one should look for when buying a house. They are location, size, the condition and age of the house, whether or not you are looking to make an investment for the future, the amount of insulation, the required maintenance and the site orientation.

"It is true," says the professor, "that older houses are better built than those being constructed today. They tend to be built of better materials. So older houses are not necessarily in worse condition than newer models."

Where should a person's attention be directed?

"Most people are impressed by wall-to-wall carpeting and freshly painted walls, but these are not the things to look for. Such things as roofing, the mechanical parts (furnace, water system, etc.) and the sturdiness of the structure itself are what should be examined."

How can you tell if a house has enough insulation?

"By trying to find some place where you can look behind the wall, even if it is just via an electrical outlet wall plate. It takes only a screwdriver and the owner's permission to make such an examination. Once you own the house, you can suspect inadequate insulation if the house gets cold during the winter despite your attempts to heat it and if it is too warm during the summer despite your attempts to cool it."

How often should a homeowner have to have repairs on a house?

"There are two types of repairs. The first is what I call the five-year cycle, which involves painting and minor repairs. The other type is the 20-to 30-year cycle, which involves roofing and plumbing among other things. When looking over a house, you should give extra attention to the 20- to 30-year cycle equipment, since this takes in repairs that are very expensive.

What about site orientation?

"The side of the house facing the north will always be the coolest, the side facing the south the warmest. The east side will receive the morning sun, the west the afternoon glare."

Worker Finds Silver Lining

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Insurance-company employee Rick Brown has found his silver lining — in a sewer.

An assistant chief engineer at Fireman's Fund computer center, Brown came up with a suggestion for reclaiming silver lost from microfilming in 1978 when silver prices were starting to climb.

Since then Brown has managed to reclaim more than 40 pounds of silver from the center's sewer system. After refining charges, the reward for his ingenuity has reached over $6,100.

A small unit that removes silver from liquids by electrolysis was purchased for about $1,200. Brown and his crew installed it, and have had to replace only a pilot light (price $1.36) since. It costs about $12 a year to operate the device.

Rubber Bands: 'Cheapest Buy'

ALLIANCE, Ohio (AP) — "There's nothing cheaper than a rubber band, plus it's reusable," said the president of a rubber company here.

His company is one of only six major rubber-band manufacturers in the United States.

"The cost of a single rubber band is so small, you can't even figure it," he says.

To illustrate, the executive said rubber bands for wrapping newspapers for home delivery cost about $1 a pound, which contains as many as 4,000 bands.

Offers Tips On Using Coupons

LINCOLN, Neb. (UPI) — If you use coupons and refund offers, extension food specialist Teresa Shaffer has suggestions for getting the most value from them:

Try to get double or triple value: Use manufacturer and retailer coupons on the same item and, when possible, get a refund at the same time.

Figure out when it's more economical to use one coupon to buy a number of small sizes of a product instead of one large size — but check your store's redemption rules first to be sure it's permitted.

Use postcards for requesting refund forms — 10 cents postage apiece instead of 18 cents — unless the refund offer directs otherwise.

Read the fine print in the refund offer: Some clearing houses won't honor multiple requests in one envelope.

Shaffer, who's with the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, also suggests keeping a file box of coupons, forms and qualifiers such as box tops.

Pollution Controls Help To Revive Lake Erie

By WILLIAM SILBERG

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Lake Erie, popularly given up for dead a decade ago, has quietly made an impressive comeback — but environmental officials are hardly ready to declare the pollution war won.

Once referred to as the sewer of the Great Lakes, Erie's appearance and productivity have improved markedly over the last 10 years thanks to millions of dollars worth of tightened pollution controls.

"We think that the indicators show that it is getting cleaner than it was a few years ago, but we want to reserve judgement," said Dr. Gerald Matisoff of Case Western Reserve University, who is studying lake pollution.

The caution urged by Matisoff and others who monitor Erie's ecological struggle stems from the realization that the lake's pollution problems grew over decades and cannot be solved overnight.

But environmental specialists studying the 10,000-square-mile lake that stretches from Michigan to New York and from the United States to Canada are more than happy to point out the positives.

Scientists cite increases in certain "indicator organisms" quickly affected by pollution. Then there is the visible resurgence of sport fishing in general and one species in particular, the walleye.

There are other hopeful signs, such as dramatic increases in the number of people swimming at lakefront parks near Cleveland where excessive pollution once placed bathers among the rarest of lake species.

Environmentalists attribute much of the advance to a drastic decrease in the amount of phosphorus being dumped into the lake — a chemical that was causing Erie to age — become eutrophic — before its time.

"I would say generally Lake Erie has responded quite well to phosphorus controls," said Madonna McGrath, director of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Great Lakes National Program office in Chicago.

"Over the last 10 years," she said, "it's probably made the most dramatic visible changes of any of the lakes primarily because it's so small and would normally react much faster."

Phosphorus promotes the growth of algae, a primary link in the food chain when under control. But as the chemical poured into the lake, mainly from the dumping of municipal sewage, algae growth exploded.

As the algae blooms died, they sank to the lake bottom, eating up available oxygen. This created "anaerobic zones" — sections of the lake where there was no oxygen, an obviously vital ingredient for aquatic life.

The lake's appearance also deteriorated. The shallowest and warmest of the Great Lakes, Erie tends to be muddier than most even in the best of times and the mushrooming algae growth only compounded the problem.

But widespread improvements in municipal sewage treatment and other controls ordered within the last decade finally appear to have taken hold.

About 60 percent less phosphorus is expected to be dumped into the lake this year than in 1975, Ms. McGrath said.

Volunteers Can Help 4-H Club

Pitt County's 4-H program used the services of 169 volunteers last year but associate extension agent Dale Panero says the program can use "any and all people that are willing to work."

April 27-May 1 has been designated "Volunteer Week" in recognition of contributions that volunteers make to the area. Ms. Panero says those contributions to 4-H are sizable.

"The ways in which volunteers assist in our programs are limitless," she explained. "Many share skills connected with their hobbies or professions, such as cooking, needlecraft, woodworking, electrical skills, automotive skills, bicycle safety, etc. Those who prefer not to teach can volunteer to be a helper," she added.

Volunteers of all ages can be used, she said. They can chose from more than 40 projects or serve as recruiters.

Persons interested in this program can contact the Pit County 4-H Office at 752-2934 or 758-1196, ext. 362 for more information.

CARE Prepares For 35th Anniversary As Supplier To The Hungry

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — The original CARE package was called simply the "10 in 1." It cost a donor $10 and was provisioned to feed 10 of Europe's post-World War II hungry for 1 day or 1 of its hungry for 10 days.

The main ingredients were stews and hashes, cereals and biscuits, fruits and jams, vegetables, evaporated milk, sugar and fortified chocolate. Early on, SPAM, that beloved canned pork product of G.I. rations, made its way into CARE.

"Eurpeans loved it," said Frederick W. Devine, deputy executive director of CARE, who has been with the international relief organization almost from its beginning.

That beginning for CARE (Cooperative for American Relief Everywhere) is 35 years old this May. The organization has set aside May 10-16 as CARE week and plans to highlight May 11, 1946, when the first of what were to become 100 million packages was unloaded from the S.S. American Traveler at Le Havre, France.

Devine said that during CARE week there will be observations across the country with embassies giving dinners and governors and mayors issuing proclamations.

At the time the American Traveler was unloading her cargo, much of Europe lay in ruins from World War II. Millions were dead. Other millions who survived wandered ragged, homeless and hungry. The six most destructive years in human history had reduced great cities to rubble.

Farms, factories, railroads and shipping were unusable. In city, town and village, the peak of human effort daily was to secure just one more meal and a chance to live.

"People simply had nothing," said Devine.

Several specialists in relief are credited with creation of CARE, which started with boxes of Army surplus rations.

Voluntary organizations for foreign service combined their resources and pledged $750,000 to launch the packages, shipping through Le Havre, then the central point for receiving goods for all Europe.

"In all, 22 organizations combined to help this 'temporary' organization," Devine recalled in an interview. "The first 5000 went to France itself."

Ultimately CARE packages went by elephant in Ceylon, now Sri Lanka. Reindeer pulled them on sleds in Finland. Camel-drawn drays delivered them in Pakistan.

Devine joined the organization in November 1946, while atttending Columbia University on the G.I. Bill of Rights. He saw an ad that CARE was looking for night-time help in its mail room. He got the job and continued at Columbia by day.

He never got his degree but instead ultimately did duty as operations director in Greece, India, Pakistan, Cyprus and Bangladesh.

In 1946, Devine said, "The mail room was the busiest place. Any donor had to have the name and address of a friend or relative in the (receiving) country." Ultimately CARE shipped 100 million of these packages.

Said Devine, "to this day, if there's a disaster somewhere, we get a surge in donations."

As CARE expanded and grew more sophisticated, it started stockpiling foods tied to ethnic tastes in the receiving country.

"We never sent clothing as such," he said. "Instead, we shipped knitting wools, 3½-yard swatches of fabrics and sewing accessories, blankets and linens (sheets, etc.) and shoes were needed so we contracted with European factories as they got back in operation because they had the lasts to fit.

"One of the most popular of the early CARE shipments was a canned turkey dinner with all the trimmings which a poultry processor offered. Each cost $15 and we thought maybe a donor would balk at the cost, but not a single one did."

"By 1949, the relief work was so well organized that anyone could send packages to anyone else."

It was about this time, too, that CARE became part of the American vernacular. "I'll send you a CARE package" or "Send me a CARE package" became popular exchanges among travelers.

Devine wasn't sure how this became considered humor but he recalled that a radio program exchange between Bing Crosby and Bob Hope gave it a strong boost.

In 1968, the organization took a new direction, phasing out its concentration on relief packages "as more countries got back on their feet." It turned to broad-scope development projects: help in construction of water systems, schools, health clinics, farm to market roads, training in improving agricultural methods and teaching marketable skills, particularly to help women supplement meager family income.

"The self-help concept is essential," said Dr. Philip Johnston, executive director. "But someone has to be there to supply the know-how. So we supply the technicians along with tools and tractors.

"That's why," said Johnston, caught briefly by telephone between international flights, "we oppose the idea of transferring resources to the Third or Fourth World without giving help on utilization. Just dumping materials is a waste.

"I feel the grass roots level is the best way to help. Sustenance is the rule in so many countries."

Since its inception, the relief organization has aided 79 countries with food (it's still strong on distribution of mass food relief) and-or technical training and other supplies. It now embraces Medico, training local health care personnel while treating patients.

Currently, it operates in 35 or more countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Middle East, many of them of the Fourth World where, as Devine said, "People just strive each day to keep from starving to death."

He said India, for instance, can feed only about 40 percent of its population. It's an over-crowded nation where 400 million people still live on less than $100 a year. CARE feeds about 16 million a year in India.

"We've been asked to provide logistical teams to deal with 330,000 tons of relief supplies," he said.

Home Improvement

Brighten your house with new aluminum trim

New aluminum trim can brighten an older house as effectively as new accessories rejuvenate last year's clothes, if the rest of its exterior is in good condition. It can also save you time and money because you won't have to paint the new trim.

Aluminum trim comes in a variety of colors. White is particularly effective in setting off a dark color house, while other colors, ranging from light to dark shades, let you match old brick, stucco, shingle and other wood surfaces. Or, you can use a contrasting color trim to perk up the outside of your home.

Golds, browns, blues, greens, reds and the earth tones are all available. Currently, dark brown trim on beige houses is especially popular, and the reverse scheme can be equally effective if your house is a darker color.

These baked-on finishes are warranteed to last many years, and the metal is durable, corrosion resistant even in damp climates, and does not expand and contract as much as vinyl plastic does.

Variety of uses

Standard aluminum trim is generally used for the roof overhang (soffit), the roof edging (fascia), and gutters and downspouts. However, new installation techniques make it possible for a skilled technician to duplicate even the most complicated designs by forming them from aluminum coil stock (a roll of flat aluminum), also available in a variety of colors. Other siding materials are difficult to form to required shapes.

New gutters and downspouts can put the finishing touch on new house trim. In addition to carrying water from the house efficiently, a good gutter system protects the fascia, eliminates streaks and stains on the face of the house, and helps prevent water damage to the foundation. It's also a factor in keeping basement walls dry.

Before you add new gutters, though, make sure your roof is in good condition, and repair any damage to the fascia.

Choose contractor carefully

The integrity of the contractor you choose, and his ability to work with aluminum coil stock as well as the standard aluminum trim products, will determine the quality of the completed work. Remember, if you want original architectural design duplicated, don't settle for less.

The owner of one 30-year-old, two-story colonial house wanted to retain the curved contours of the old wood fascia, because it softened the severity of the brick surface.

She found a contractor who could achieve an exact replica of the old trim by forming it precisely from aluminum coil stock and concealing the seams. The house now has a fresher, snappier appearance, and painting has been eliminated.

A very steep 1920s-style Tudor stucco house is an example of how the exterior can be improved by the imaginative use of aluminum trim.

Here, the owner wished to retain its basic appearance, enhance it where possible, and, again, eliminate as much painting and repair work as possible.

IMAGINATIVE USE of aluminum trim gives this 60-year-old Tudor style house a facelift, and the brown color contrasts smartly with the tan stucco surface. The gables were covered with matching brown aluminum siding and the windows were framed with the same color aluminum coil stock. The new trim visually reduced the excessive height of the house and eliminated the need for painting.

The tan stucco surface was left intact, but soffit, fascia and all other trim was covered with brown aluminum, and new brown color gutters and downspouts were added.

Then, to cover the original natural wood shakes in the gables, matching double-four-in. aluminum siding panels were used. The contrasting brown color and the horizontal pattern of the newly covered gables reduce the appearance of excessive height.

To complete the job, all the window frames, including the dormer, were built out with furring and then covered with brown coil stock cut to exact fit.

Even very old, turn-of-the-century houses are candidates for new aluminum trim. Typical is a rambling old New England one.

Here, the wood shingles were still in good condition and matching white aluminum trim became the practical alternative to the spiraling costs of repainting the trim periodically.

The new white aluminum soffits, fascia, roof and numerous window frames blend pleasingly with the architectural design of the old house and give it a well-kept appearance. Without touching the aluminum trim, it is impossible to differentiate it from wood.

Modern houses can also benefit from adding aluminum trim. The owners of a dramatic 10-year-old contemporary home with brick, masonry and glass panels, and wood trim, decided they wanted total freedom from exterior painting.

They had the long lengths of wood soffit covered with white aluminum, and the aluminum fascia stretching along the length of the house covered with black aluminum.

After 20 years

If your house was sided with aluminum 15 or 20 years ago, you may want to add aluminum trim if it was not part of the original re-siding package. Most owners of such houses are finding that it costs as much now to paint that wood trim as it did to re-side the whole house years ago.

If you decide to add aluminum trim to your home, select your contractor as carefully as you choose the material, for it is his expertise that will give you the most effective, efficient job.

The trim must be installed so that water does not enter behind it, and should be properly sealed and caulked.

Check around

To help you find the right contractor, check with neighbors and friends who have had their homes re-sided or the trim applied, talk to local bankers, the Chamber of Commerce and the Better Business Bureau.

It also helps to learn as much about aluminum trim as you can. For assistance, write to the Aluminum Siding Information Bureau, 250 West 57th Street, New York, NY 10019 for a free copy of the booklet, "A Homeowners Guide to Choosing Siding."

Check building codes before beginning home remodeling jobs

Though time is said "to wait for no man," anyone who doesn't take it when planning a home improvement is rash.

A remodeling project carefully planned not only safeguards the major investment you have in your home, but most likely will improve its resale value as well.

Such planning should include satisfying building codes, advises the National Home Improvement Council. Established by most cities, towns and counties, building codes vary from one community to another.

As a general rule, a building permit is required whenever structural work is involved or when the basic living area of a home is to be changed, adds the Council.

For example, if you have a house with an unfinished section that you want to complete as a room, you would need a building permit in most localities. This is because you have changed the area from storage to living space.

Any reputable home improvement contractor should be able to take care of the complex details involving building permits. You pay any fee required by your municipality and are responsible for any penalties for failure to file required permits.

But, you shouldn't fear these matters if you hire a reputable contractor who knows the rules. Have all such restrictions and fees spelled out in your contract.

Most Efficient AC Unit Is Now On The Market

The most efficient residential split system air conditioning condensing unit ever marketed in the U.S. is now available. The HS14 Landmark IV, as the unit is called, produces seasonal energy efficiency ratios (SEER) of up to an amazing 14.0 making it the most highly efficient unit rated in the Air-Conditioning and Refrigeration (ARI) Directory.

The new HS14 is available in 3, 4 and 5 ton capacities for residential, apartment or light commercial application. The unit's high seasonal energy efficiency ratios mean that the homeowner can reduce his energy usage and lower his utility bills more than with any other unit currently available. The HS14 Landmark IV is produced by Lennox Industries Inc., a leading manufacturer of heating and air conditioning products.

A variety of indoor evaporator units can be matched with the HS14 for upflow, downflow or horizontal applications.

Several high-quality features of the HS14 make it well-suited to meet the needs of today's homeowner. In addition, its reliability and convenient design make servicing the unit an infrequent, uncomplicated task.

Among its features is a Lennox-designed and fabricated outdoor condenser coil which utilizes reliable, high quality copper tubing rather than the less efficient aluminum some manufacturers use in their products. The HS14's compressor has built-in protection devices to guard against excessive current and temperatures. A powerful direct drive outdoor fan moves large volumes of air uniformly through the entire condenser coil producing high refrigerant cooling capacity. Vertical discharge of air minimizes operating sounds and eliminates hot air damage to lawn and shrubs. Most unit connections are located outside of the cabinet for service convenience.

The HS14 has been thoroughly tested with matching indoor units according to industry standards. With its very high efficiency ratings and performance reliability, it is a unit well suited to today's energy conscience consumer.

New Heat Pump Is Available

A revolutionary heat pump that allows homeowners to reduce energy usage and lower utility bills is now on the market. The new two-speed HP11 "Legend," which heats a home in winter and cools it in summer, is produced by Lennox Industries Inc.

The Legend operates on low speed most of the year allowing the homeowner to realize energy cost savings. High speed occurs only at peak heating or cooling demand conditions. In essence, the Legend is two units in one durable cabinet. During periods of average heating demand, the Legend operates at low speed with very high efficiency and switches to high speed as demand increases. When outdoor conditions are such that the heating requirement is not satisfied at high speed, electric heating elements on the system's indoor unit provide supplemental heat to the system.

There are two sizes of the Legend, each suited for any home or light commercial installation on an outdoor concrete slab or rooftop. The 311/511 model supplies 2-1/2 tons of cooling on low speed with an Energy Efficiency Ratio (E.E.R.) of 8.7 and four tons of cooling on high speed at an E.E.R. of 8.2. The 411/651 model provides three and five tons cooling and E.E.R.'s of 8.8 on 8.0 on low and high speeds respectively.

The Legend also features the energy saving "Latent Load Discriminator" which allows homeowners to save further on utility cost by dehumidifying the air only when necessary. When outdoor humidity rises above a preselected level, the Legend removes the excess effectively.

The goal of every homewner today is to use the least energy possible to maintain indoor comfort levels.

Increase the value of your home with paint

Paint has always been an economical way to increase the value of a house and that is still true today. Despite being an industry greatly affected by petroleum price fluctuations, paint has remained a bargain buy.

Consider that you can buy one gallon of paint for $14-16 (when it's not on sale) and cover about 400 square feet—an average room. Less than eight gallons of paint will cover the entire exterior of an average house.

And, yet, the increased value to a home's worth as a result of a new coat of paint is incredible. Any realtor will tell you that a freshly painted house is easier to sell(and at a higher price).

ARCHITECTURAL FEATURES of a house can be highlighted by painting trim, doors and eaves in contrasting colors.

Minimize problems

Thoughtful selection of paint colors can help minimize the architectural problems of your home, as well as emphasize its best features.

White or very light colors make a house seem larger than it really is, and so can extending the color of the house to all adjoining areas—garages, decks, foundations, etc.

Dark tones will make a large house appear smaller and give it a more "earthy" look. A house that is too tall can be visually lowered with a two-tone treatment, painting the half above architectural breaks a deeper color.

A long, low look can be achieved by painting the body of the house a color strongly contrasting with the color of the roof line, as in the house pictured, to highlight horizontal lines.

Accent trim and doors with a contrasting color; minimize excessive detail by painting it the same color as the house or a darker shade.

Lengthy warranties available

Not only is a freshly painted house more attractive, but paints today provide considerable surface protection. Many interior paints are warranted for up to eight years, exterior paints up to five years, with proper surface preparation.

JC Penney has pioneered several long wearing paints and recently introduced a new line of severe weather paint. "Severe weather" is designed to withstand all kinds of extreme weather conditions.

Proper surface preparation is the key. That means scraping loose paint, caulking cracks, sanding glossy spots, cleaning the surface and priming the surface. Primers must be completely dry before the final coat of paint is applied, usually two to three days later.

Exterior problems

Five main problems strike painted exteriors—blistering and peeling, chalking, cracking, "alligatoring," and mildew.

Blistering and peeling are usually caused by moisture, trapped beneath the surface, that evaporates, pushing the paint away from the surface with it.

Scrape the affected areas, then wire brush or sand. Bare spots should be primed with an exterior primer. Let dry, then apply a finish coat.

However, the problem of blistering and peeling will reappear unless the moisture problem is alleviated. Repair loose caulking and install vents on exhaust fans, especially in the kitchen, bathroom and laundry areas. Consider dehumidifiers and attic louvers.

Chalking is caused by inadequately primed and sealed porous surfaces, overthinning of paint or spreading paint too thin.

This powdery material should be wire brushed away and the surface washed thoroughly, then primed with an exterior oil base primer. Allow the primer to dry two or three days, then finish with paint.

Cracking and "alligatoring" are caused by application of a top coat before the undercoat is dry, applying too many coats, or painting over a glossy surface. Corrective action begins with removal of the old paint film.

If this cannot be done, sand the surface smooth, apply an exterior primer, dry thoroughly, then paint.

Mildew looks like dirt, but is actually a fungus growth which, if left on your walls, will grow right through a new coat of paint.

It should be removed with diluted bleach, dried, then primed. Wait two or three days before applying a finish coat.

Light colors look larger

Interior problems can also be helped with paint. Painting a small room with light, bright colors can create the illusion that the space is larger than it really is.

A large room can be made to appear smaller and cozier with the use of deeper, darker tones.

Surface preparation for interior painting means cleaning away dirt, grime and wax build-up, patching cracks and holes, dulling glossy surfaces and priming new plaster to prevent chalking.

Wallpaper should be removed with steam, removing all glue and sizing as well. Where wallpaper cannot be removed, consult a professional paint dealer for advice.

Peeling main interior problem

The most common interior painting problem is peeling. Improper surface preparation is usually the cause—grease, wax polishes or dirt were present or gloss was not removed by sanding or wiping with gloss remover. Remove all loose paint, sand smooth, wash, prime, dry and repaint.

Peeling paint will also occur on plaster or masonry subjected to moisture. Find and stop the source of moisture entering the walls.

Remove the paint and neutralize the area with a weak acid. Prime with an oil base primer, let dry thoroughly and paint.

Free brochures available

Today's selection of textures, finishes and colors offers the discriminating consumer a greater selection of paints than ever before. For more information and free brochures (including one on Interior/Exterior Painting and one on Paint Problems and Solutions, plus an Interior Color Card and an Exterior Color Card), write Terry O'Grady, c/o "Paint Brochures," JCPenney, 1301 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019.

New siding products offer good looks, low maintenance and choices, choices, choices

People interested in remodeling generally want materials that need little or no maintenance, such as aluminum or vinyl siding, which save the time and cost of constant repainting.

But, siding can do more than save on maintenance costs. It can give your home a new look and, with a little imagination on your part and some help from your remodeling contractor, your home can take on a new personality. Homeowners today can select from a wide range of colors, surfaces and finishes.

Advanced technology

In the last few years, many new, high-quality products have come to market—products that are the result of advanced technology in both manufacturing and in the development of coatings or finishes.

For example, Alcoa aluminum siding is made from an extra-strong alloy called Super 40 which provides added strength and rigidity to the metal, making it easier for your contractor to apply, and better looking on your home.

New coating systems available

Another example of an improved process is the coating used on aluminum siding products to provide resistance to chalking, corrosion, mildew accumulation and dirt pick-up.

Alcoa's process, called Alumalure 2000®, includes a corrosion-inhibiting prime coat, followed by a second coat for weatherability. This new coating system allows Alcoa to offer a 40-year limited warranty on its siding products.

Wide range of products

In addition to aluminum siding, today's homeowner can choose from a wide range of vinyl siding products. Made of impact-modified polyvinyl chloride (PVC), vinyl siding resists cracking, breaking, denting, splitting, flaking, chipping and blistering.

Avoid expensive roofing problems by learning early warning signs of damage

You can avoid expensive problems by knowing the early warning signs of a damaged roof.

Leaks, unseen moisture and seepage can rot roof boards and rafters, reduce the effectiveness of insulation, and ruin stored possessions if a damaged roof remains unrepaired.

Since most homeowners may never have had to replace a roof, they are frequently not as well informed as they could be about available materials, their characteristics and costs. Hasty or uninformed decisions could be costly in the years to come.

Putting a roof over your head is no longer a simple matter of selecting a durable material at an affordable price.

The wide variety of colors, styles and textures currently available adds new dimensions to roofing selection which homeowners will want to consider.

A thorough examination of your roof will help you decide whether it is ready for retirement or simply in need of minor repairs.

According to roofing experts at Bird & Son, a leading manufacturer of roofing materials, bare spots where granules have worn off, shingles with broken or curled edges and missing tabs are all signs of roofing damage. Wooden shingles may be rotted, warped or split.

It may be a little more difficult to detect problems in the attic which are caused by water damage.

If there are any doubts about a roof's condition, it is advisable to call a reliable home improvement contractor. Most likely he will inspect your roof at no charge and prepare a cost estimate for repair or reroofing.

If it develops that your roof does need repair or replacement, asphalt shingles offer exceptional durability and fire resistance.

Asphalt has been used as a waterproofing agent for more than 5,000 years, and walls built with asphalt binder in ancient Babylon are still standing.

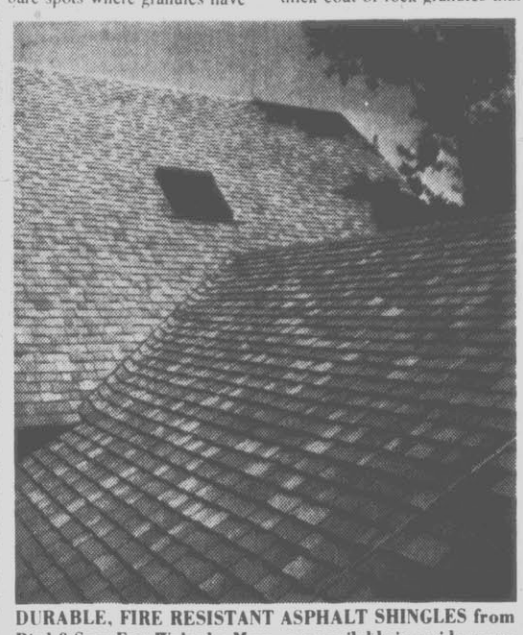
Today, high quality asphalt shingles manufactured in the United States are available in a wide range of weights, textures, colors and styles.

An organic felt or a fiberglass based mat is saturated with special asphalts and covered with a thick coat of rock granules that protect a shingle from its worst enemy, the sun.

Then, spots of adhesive are evenly spaced on each shingle. Set into sticking action by the sun, these thermoplastic dots seal down every shingle with a grip that holds even when subjected to winds of hurricane force.

Most standard asphalt shingles are warranted for 15 years. However, it pays to investigate heavyweight, top-of-the-line asphalt shingles which are usually covered by a 25-year limited warranty.

Check your roof for weather damage and consider all of the options before repairing or reroofing. The time and effort you take now could mean a big savings in the long run.



DURABLE, FIRE RESISTANT ASPHALT SHINGLES from Bird & Son, East Walpole, Mass., are available in a wide range of weights, textures, colors and styles.

Growing miniature roses all year long

Roses look beautiful in your home, but once cut, that beauty lasts for only a short time. However, there is a way of decorating your home with roses all year long without the expense of buying fresh-cut flowers on a weekly basis.

You can grow miniature roses someplace around your house year-round. If you start the roses outdoors and plan on bringing them in, plant them in containers or hanging baskets.

Miniatures grown in pots respond favorably to being moved from outdoors to indoors and vice versa.

If you do decide to grow them inside, miniatures will bloom all year except for about a two-month rest period. If you take care of the roses properly, you can have continual flowering by planning a six- to eight-week blooming cycle and potting at various times.

Excellent drainage

You should select compact, low-growing miniatures for growing indoors. Plant them in a 4- to 8-inch pot with a soil comprising of equal parts of sterilized garden soil, peat moss and coarse sand.

The container must have excellent drainage because, while roses do not like wet feet, they do need quite a bit of water. Rose foliage will wilt if it does not receive enough water.

As soon as the rose is planted, place the pot under water (reaching just over the rim) until the bubbling stops. The soaked plant must then be put in a cool, protected area for a period of two to four weeks, until it begins to show signs of growth. Then bring it indoors and place it in a sunny window.

Under lamps

An alternative to sun is to grow them under lamps, where miniatures do very well. They need 20 watts per square foot, placed from 10 to 12 inches above the roses, for 16 to 18 hours per day. You can use fluorescents, incandescents, special plant light bulbs, or any combination of lights.

Yellow leaves indicate that the air is too dry. If you notice that this is a problem or want to prevent it when first planting, build up humidity by keeping the pot on a tray filled with pebbles or sand and adding water until just before it touches the bottom of the pot.

Proper care includes monthly feeding with a house plant fertilizer and following a preventive spray program to control diseases and pests. Ortho's Systemic Rose & Floral Spray contains all the essential elements for such a program. It comes in an aerosol, which allows you to have more control over where you spray the ingredients. Apply to rose foliage before bringing plant indoors.

Spider mites are the most common problem with indoor roses. You can detect the problem by looking for stippled leaves that look dry, turn brown, red, yellow or gray, and then curl and drop off. Sometimes webs are visible on the undersides of the affected leaves where the tiny pests suck juices from the foliage.

The plants do need a two-month rest period each year and should be placed in the hydrator of a refrigerator. After this rest, the plant should be cut back to one-half its size before resuming normal care.

Additional pruning should be done whenever you care to alter the size and shape of the plant or just to keep it under control. It should be cut just above a five-leaflet leaf, to about one-third its height.

Growing minis outdoors

The method for growing and caring for miniatures outside is similar to large roses. A few things to keep in mind, though, are that they should be spaced about 10 to 12 inches apart and kept separate from larger plants, which can rob roses of sunshine and moisture.

Feed your outdoor miniatures, and use Ortho's Funginex Rose Disease Control on a continual basis as you would with large roses.

Funginex controls the three major diseases of roses: black spot, rust and powdery mildew. It can be combined with ORTHENE Insect Spray for use in the Ortho SPRAY-ETTE.

The plants can be kept outdoors all year long, or can be brought inside whenever you want. The miniatures are more cold-resistant than most garden roses and will bloom year-round in warm climates.

AIR CONDITIONERS are available in many styles and cooling capacities, and there is a model just right for you and your home's cooling needs. For example, Whirlpool Corporation offers several models designed to fit horizontal sliding or crank-out casement windows as well as through the wall and typical double hung windows.

A quick quiz to make you a whiz on air conditioners

Air conditioners are a familiar part of the lives of many Americans. You see them everywhere—on roof tops, on the ground, in windows and in walls. But, when it comes to making a purchase decision, the most important things to be familiar with are your home's cooling needs, say experts from Whirlpool Corporation.

They advise that before you go shopping you should know: How many rooms and connecting halls do you want to cool? What is the size of each room and hall? Are rooms sunny or shaded? How many windows of what size and type are in the rooms to be cooled? Are the walls and ceiling insulated?

Here's a quick quiz on air conditioners from Whirlpool. Knowing the answers to these questions can help you choose and use an air conditioner that's just right for your home and family.

1. It is possible to buy an air conditioner with too much cooling capacity for a room or house. True or False?
2. To save energy during hot weather, you should start your air conditioner in the heat of the day. True or False?
3. The EER—Energy Efficiency Ratio—of an air conditioner is a good indication of its cooling power. True or False?
4. Air conditioner filter should be washed frequently. True or False?
5. Proper landscaping can reduce energy cost for air conditioning. True or False?

ANSWERS

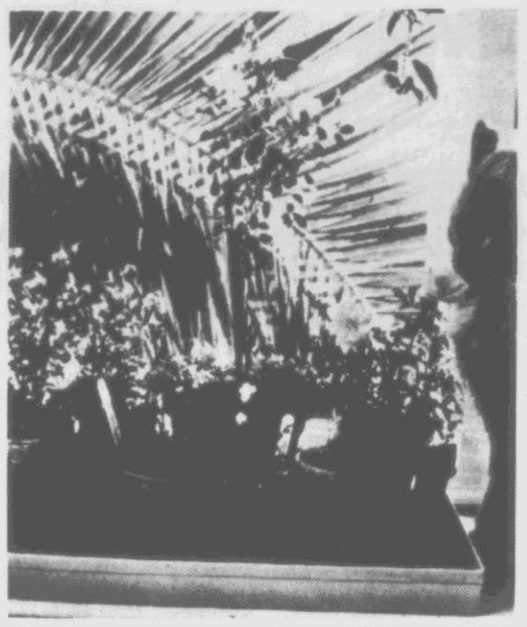
1. TRUE—Too large an air conditioner can give a room or an entire house a cold, clammy feeling. Air conditioners dehumidify as well as cool the air. A unit with too much cooling capacity for an area will cool the air quickly without staying on long enough to dehumidify it.

2. FALSE—You should start your unit in the morning hours during hot weather. Air conditioners operate less efficiently when started during the warmest hours of the day.

3. FALSE—The cooling power of air conditioners is measured in BTU's. The higher the BTU rating, the greater the cooling capacity of the unit. The EER is an index of the air conditioner's operating efficiency. The higher the EER, the lower the cost of operating the air conditioner per unit of cooling power.

4. TRUE—All models in the Whirlpool room air conditioner line feature washable filters and the company recommends that they be washed frequently. A dirty filter impedes air flow and causes the unit to operate less efficiently.

5. TRUE—By screening a home from direct sunlight, trees can keep the structure cooler and reduce the energy an air conditioner requires to maintain a given temperature.



These tiny roses were grown indoors under flourescent light. With miniature roses potted at various times, it is possible to have continual, year-round indoor flowering, according to the Ortho book "All About Roses." The book suggests that you select compact, low-growing varieties for indoor use.

'SOUTHERN COMFORT'

The fastest growing markets for new homes in the country are Fort Myers and West Palm Beach, Fla. The Chicago Title Insurance Company says both areas are moving ahead at a rate five times higher than the national average for new homes.

EARTHTONES MAKE ROOF DECORATING A NATURAL

The trend in the "natural look" has risen to the roof.

Modern three-dimensional asphalt shingles, available in earthtone shades of beiges, buffs and browns, give a homeowner greater flexibility in exterior decorating.

The natural colors and multi-layered appearance of these shingles provide an easy means for blending a home with its surroundings.

Central air conditioning yields savings with high-efficiency motor

As summer approaches, many homeowners across the country are wondering how high their use of central air conditioning will push the season's electricity bills.

To cut energy consumption and record-high utility costs, they can pray for cooler weather or raise their thermostat to the 'just bearable' level.

Or, they can invest in long-term savings and still keep their cool by modernizing their central air conditioning system with new, higher-efficiency motors.

Old, inefficient motors

Some central air conditioning systems installed five to 10 years ago, when electricity rates stood at lower levels, are equipped with motors that by today's spiraling energy cost standards are very inefficient.

'It ain't necessarily so'

Residential central air conditioning, however, does not have to become a cost-prohibitive luxury for homeowners who installed systems even as little as five years ago.

According to motor experts at General Electric Company, it might be a good idea to consider replacing one or more of the "older" central air conditioner motors with a new generation, higher-efficiency "Serv-S-Line" model.

The system's two fan motors—one outdoor and the other indoor (usually the furnace blower)—can be replaced with Energy Saver models that will bring long-term savings, motor experts explain.

How quickly a homeowner recovers the cost of a new central air conditioning motor depends upon the design of the original motor plus local utility rates and hours of operation a year.

A third motor in the system is an integral part of the outdoor, hermetically sealed compressor unit and cannot be separately replaced economically.

Consult an expert

General Electric advises homeowners to have a heating and air conditioning repairman determine the efficiency of existing motors to make certain new, Energy Saver models will help them save on future utility bills.

Five ways to save your valuable time

The total value of housework done by women today is estimated at $250 billion per year. It's no wonder that homemakers are always looking for ways to save their valuable time; with more than half of all women working outside the home, housekeeping shortcuts have become a necessity.

If you feel your own routine needs some streamlining, try these ideas:

• Treat yourself as the chief operating officer of a business—your household. As such, do the most urgent things first, and continue in descending order of importance. Then, it won't matter if you can't complete chores on the bottom of the list; they probably don't need doing anyway.

• Go with your body's own time clock. For example, if you often stay up till midnight and find it hard getting started in the morning, you're a night person, so don't fight it.

You can probably clean the kitchen after dinner in half the time it would take in the morning. But if you tend to wake up bright-eyed and raring to go, try switching some usual evening chores, such as table setting and part of the dinner preparation, to the A.M.

• Keep your freezer stocked with home-made frozen meals. Whenever you cook meat balls, pot roast or sausages, make a few extra portions at the same time.

Divide the extras into small serving-size foil pans, cover with foil and freeze. Then whenever you don't feel like cooking (or don't have time), just pop your frozen meals in a 350°F. oven for about a half hour.

• Look for cleaning products that are easy to use, can do two jobs (such as cleaning and polishing) at one time, or possibly eliminate a chore.

For example, use a continuous action toilet bowl cleaner that keeps the bowl clean with clear water for up to four months. With Bowl Power™, a unique new product from the makers of Lysol products, all you have to do is place it in the tank and you'll scrub less often—or possibly not at all.

When you select cleaning products this way you can end up saving money as well as time and effort.

• Conserve your own and the country's energy by going grocery shopping only once a week, and try to fit as many other errands as possible into that same trip.

Some people manage to find a supermarket, dry cleaner, shoe repair shop and sometimes even a department store, boutique and hairdresser clustered together.

TIME IS VALUABLE, so the smart homemaker takes housekeeping shortcuts. New Bowl Power™ continuous action toilet bowl cleaner keeps the bowl clean, with clear water, for up to four months. Just place it in the tank and you'll scrub less often—or possibly not at all.

Aluminum siding can make old house look like new

If you can't swing the mortgage for a new home, or just don't want to move, you can give your old house a bright crisp look with new siding.

Snappy colors and a variety of new textures and styles available in aluminum siding and trim enable you to recreate the original exterior surface, or change its appearance dramatically.

This kind of facelift also reduces maintenance, because new aluminum finishes, guaranteed to last up to 40 years, eliminate periodic painting.

Consider the cost

The average house needs a paint job every four years. If that paint job costs $2,000 this year, over a 12-year period you'd be spending $12,000 for repainting with the current 10 percent inflation rate. Thus, you can realize an early return on an investment in new aluminum siding.

Durable, resistant to corrosion and cracking, even in damp climates, aluminum is the original re-siding material and has been around for over 30 years. It has been used for remodeling over 12,000,000 older homes and, increasingly, new homes are being surfaced with aluminum.

Wide range of colors

Aluminum comes in more different colors than other siding materials. While white is still a popular color choice, it has given way to a whole palette of new siding colors, ranging the full spectrum. Currently, ivory and beige are favorites with blues, greens, reds and the earth tones close runners-up.

There is also a trend toward using aluminum siding and trim in contrasting colors. This tends to individualize a house, particularly in a development, make it look more interesting and sharpen its architectural lines.

Contrasting trim popular

Ivory aluminum siding with brown trim (or the reverse color combination) is particularly in vogue now and white trim with dark siding colors is also being used more frequently.

House trim includes the under side of the roof overhang (the soffit), edging of the roof (the fascia), gutters, downspouts, shutters and other accessories.

While smooth surface siding continues to be popular, new textures have been developed by aluminum siding manufacturers to simulate wood grains.

Which is which?

These new finishes have been achieved by embossing and by new two-tone coating systems. These new grains look so authentic that it is difficult to distinguish the aluminum siding from wood without going up and touching it.

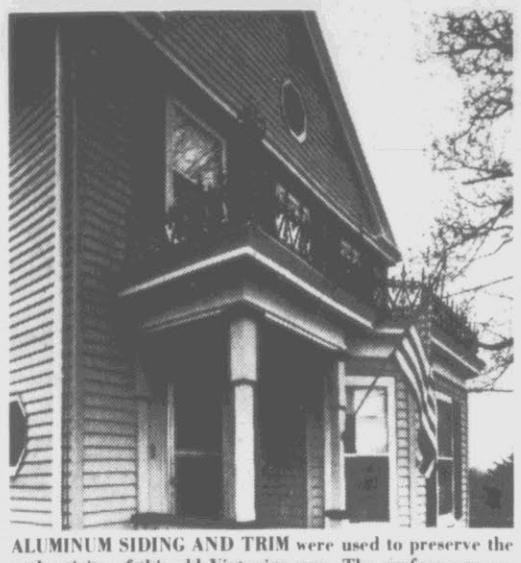
Horizontal aluminum siding comes in 8-in. wide panels and in double-four-in. (an eight-in. panel that looks like two four-in. ones) to suit various styles of architecture. The former is used for contemporary homes and the latter for traditional or Colonial style structures.

Vertical aluminum panels are available for use where special treatment will make the house look more interesting. They are particularly effective for gables and dormers.

Then, there's aluminum coil stock (a roll of flat aluminum), from which a skilled contractor can form designs to duplicate intricate original trim. Coil stock comes in a variety of colors.

To preserve the architectural integrity of a 19th century home, for instance, one home improvement contractor reproduced casings around octagonal windows by cutting aluminum coil stock to fit the original architectural specifications.

In another house, an aluminum applicator reproduced original pediments over each window. He used narrow panels of vertical siding within the triangular areas, and then custom-formed aluminum coil stock to conform to their original wood framings.



ALUMINUM SIDING AND TRIM were used to preserve the authenticity of this old Victorian gem. The surface was covered with double-four-inch aluminum panels which match the original clapboard, and aluminum coil stock was formed to follow the contours of trim such as the octagonal window casings, porch scalloping, ceiling and fascia. Old grillwork on second story was repaired and painted.

Fine old details, such as the gingerbread on a Victorian style house, can be retained and painted to blend comfortably with modern siding. Since repainting such detail is minimal, the low-maintenance aspect of the rest of the house will not be seriously affected.

Most remodeling, and all new buildings today are done with insulated siding, in order to conserve energy. With proper insulation, heat in winter and conditioned air in summer stays inside the house to help reduce fuel use and keep you more comfortable.

Insulation comes in various forms, and you should know their different characteristics.

Pay attention to R values. These are thermal resistance values by which insulating systems are measured. The higher the number, the more efficient the insulation properties.

Aluminum siding over a foam plastic board and reflector foil is particularly efficient, with an R factor of 5 to 6. Hollow-backed aluminum siding with a fiberboard backer provides an R value of 1.4. Siding with foil alone rates an R value of less than one and has little insulating value.

For best results

To achieve the best results from aluminum siding and insulating materials, be sure your windows and doors are caulked properly before trim and accessories are added to the siding.

Windows play vital role in energy

Since a considerable amount of your home's exterior wall space may be made up of windows, the role they play in your home's energy efficiency is an important one.

Andersen Corporation, which manufactures Perma-Shield windows and gliding doors, suggests selecting windows with built-in energy saving features, such as a preservative-treated wood core sash and frame, double-pane insulating glass and factory-applied weatherstripping.

CORK: A practical floor with a versatile look for unique bathrooms. Cork-O-Plast, from PermaGrain Products, Inc., Media, Pa., is a natural cork permanently sealed between layers of wear-resistant vinyl. It stands up to grease, spills, moisture and heavy traffic.

Cork — the flooring with the multiple personalities

A bathroom can be luxurious—or it can be plush or flamboyant or simply elegant.

Unlike most rooms in the home, which reflect your personality, a bathroom can reflect your fantasies. Cork, a new concept in bathroom floors, will turn your fantasy into reality.

Cork-O-Plast, a natural cork flooring, combines the look and resilience of cork with the tough durability and carefree maintenance of pure vinyl.

The natural cork is permanently bonded between vinyl, a moisture-barrier backing and a high quality transparent vinyl wear surface. To maximize water-resistance, each piece is specially edge-sealed.

For the mystery person

Have you ever wanted to be a woman of mystery or a man with mystique? SMOKE colored Cork-O-Plast will give your bathroom a cryptic atmosphere.

Do you have inner thoughts of being a leader, strong and powerful? CHARACTER will give you the confidence you need. Bring back the old days of elegance and grace with CLASSIC Cork-O-Plast.

And, for those who dream of being exotic and passionate, try COLORIT RED Cork-O-Plast for your bathroom floor.

Cork-O-Plast is available in four other color and texture patterns, in square tiles or plank strips (up to 36").

It is a beautiful, ageless floor that meets the top quality-with-efficiency demands of today.

Laboratory test results have shown that Cork-O-Plast will withstand abrasion four times better than a standard vinyl tile. The extra wear resistance is due to the high quality of the cork floor's vinyl wear surface.

Passed durability tests

Prior to its introduction in the home installation consumer market, Cork-O-Plast successfully passed a series of tests for toughness and durability in heavy-traffic commercial building installations.

As a result of its resilient qualities, Cork-O-Plast is not only versatile in look, but is unusually pleasant to walk on, and it's quiet.

Cork-O-Plast can be installed in any room in the house—dining rooms, living rooms, dens and kitchens. It resists indentation from furniture and heels, better than standard vinyl.

In addition, its pure vinyl surface withstands most household chemicals, temporary exposure to alcohol, some petroleum products, alkalis and acids (diluted and concentrated). It also stands up beautifully against typical spills and grease in the kitchen.

Not only can you create an unusual and unique bathroom, but you can do it yourself. (Cork-O-Plast can be installed on concrete, plywood, or other approved substrates where vinyl flooring can be used.) It's easy as 1-2-3.

1. First, prepare the surface by (a) rough sanding, if necessary to smooth or (b) by stripping wax, film and dirt. Be sure the concrete is well cured before you begin.

2. Apply uniform coating, a water-based adhesive (PC-2) is recommended, with a 1/16 inch notched trowel.

3. Put Cork-O-Plast tiles in position— the same as vinyl or other flooring tiles. Follow the same procedure in floor layout as for vinyl tiles.

You now have a new floor. You can also have it professionally installed.

Simplicity of maintenance is another plus for the homemaker. Dirt and dust are easily removed with a damp mopping since the pure vinyl surface is impervious to liquid penetration.

Where a gloss finish is desired, a good quality floor polish such as PermaGrain All Purpose Cleaner may be applied.

Resilient beauty

The beauty of natural cork combined with its inherent resilience plus the hardwearing characteristics of pure vinyl, makes cork an exciting new medium for the home planner and remodeler.

With its simple installation steps and its easy maintenance procedures, Cork-O-Plast will leave you more time to enjoy your mysterious or powerful or elegant bathroom.

New do-it-yourself remodeling door installs in just six simple steps

How would you like to install a steel insulated door in your home with just a few hours work? Now, you can, with a new Benchmark steel insulated remodeling unit that is specially designed for quick, easy installation.

Ideal for older homes or any home with inefficient or unattractive entranceways, this new remodeling door installs inside your existing wood frame in just a few simple steps.

So, you can enjoy the increased security and durability of warp-free steel construction, plus elegant deep embossing which comes in a variety of styles to enhance the beauty of any architecture.

Energy-saving features

You'll also get the advantage of energy-saving features such as dense polyurethane foam insulation, magnetic weatherstripping that seals like a refrigerator, and a frost-free threshold. The Benchmark steel insulated remodeling door provides six times the insulation value of a solid wood door, even with storm door.

What's more, by installing this more energy-efficient door, you may even qualify for an Energy Credit Tax Deduction (Benchmark doors meet the 1.5 inch insulation thickness requirement under Residential Energy Credit Regulation §1.44C-2).

Of course, the unique advantage is the easy installation.

By using your existing wood frame and interior trim, any right or left handed in-swing Remodeling Door can be installed with the following simple steps.

To begin with, measure your existing wood frame. Remodeling Doors come in two sizes, for heights from 79⅜" to 80¼", and widths from 31¾" to 32¼" or 35¾" to 36¼"

After selecting the proper size Remodeling Door, you're ready to install.

First, remove existing trim and save for reinstallation. Then, remove the old door, strike plate, hinges, old weatherstripping and the old threshold. And, make sure the door sill is shimmed to floor level.

Next, slide the aluminum threshold section into the slot of gray vinyl threshold on the remodeling unit.

Simple procedure

Now you're ready to place the pre-hung Remodeling Door into the opening. Just square the hinge jamb to ensure vertical installation and secure with nails.

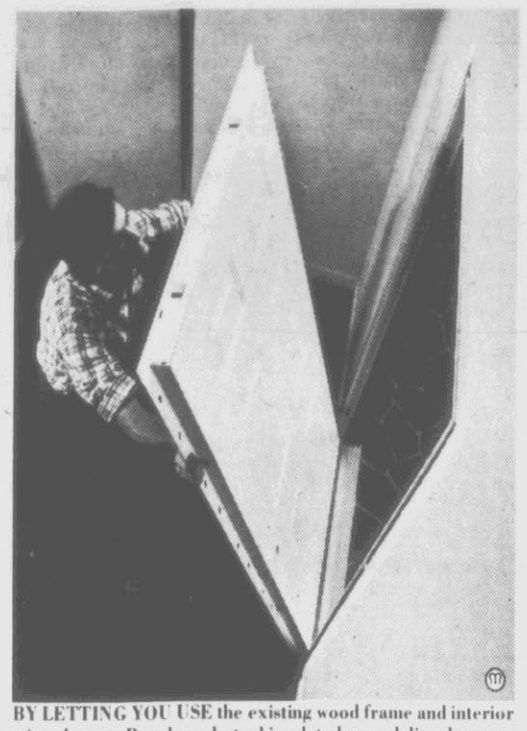
Then, secure the strike jamb with nails and open the door. Secure the hinge jamb to the stud behind the existing frame with screws, and the door is in.

To complete the installation, just install your strike plate and lockset according to manufacturer's instructions.

Caulk and nail factory-supplied weatherstrip stops to the frame. Caulk the threshold. And then replace the interior trim.

By following this basic step by step procedure, any home handyman can complete the entire installation with a minimum of time and effort.

So, you can now enjoy the advantages of a steel insulated entranceway: superior energy savings, increased security and a beautiful appearance that will last for years. The Remodeling Door even comes in a wide variety of styles for any architecture.



BY LETTING YOU USE the existing wood frame and interior trim, the new Benchmark steel insulated remodeling door can be installed in just a few simple steps. Advantages include the added security of a steel door and pre-engineered frame, impressive styling to match any architecture, plus energy savings substantial enough to qualify homeowners for an Energy Credit Tax Deduction.

Spring clean-up's the time to make the home fire-safe

Spring Clean-up—an annual tradition—began more than a half-century ago in Cleveland, Ohio. Bertha Chapman, a school teacher, convinced a student from the slums to care more about her appearance. This inspired the young girl to carry this new respect for cleanliness into her home.

As neighbors watched her family cleaning their house, they soon were caught up in the spirit—the result being the first spring clean-up campaign, which eventually caught on nationwide!

This annual event should be for more than aesthetic reasons, however. It's the perfect time to go through the home, checking for fire hazards which might normally be otherwise overlooked.

A National Fire Safety Program, sponsored as a public service by Burger King® restaurants, instructs children 6-12 years old on how they and their parents can make their homes firesafe. Materials are made available through participating Burger King® restaurants.

Following is a Spring Clean-up checklist which anyone can use when embarking on a Spring Clean-up this year:

INDOORS

- Have the furnace checked and cleaned every year.
- Arrange for professional care of chimney, pipes and flues. After heavy winter use, creosote build-up can easily start a fire in the chimney.
- If painting is on the cleaning agenda, store paints in metal containers (not glass) with tight-fitting lids away from heat, sparks and children. Remember, fumes are as dangerous as the liquid—fires can ignite just from the fumes! Throw out paint and solvent when the job is finished.
- After painting, check to make sure the windows aren't painted shut, and that there's a key within arm's reach if windows have locks.
- Check for frayed wires. Remove any cords running underneath carpeting, under doorways and along walls.
- Install smoke detectors on each floor, as well as between sleeping areas and the rest of the house. Periodically check to make sure they're in working order.
- Clear closets, basement and attic of combustibles such as paper, oil-soaked rags, old furniture.

OUTDOORS

- Move lawn mower away from gasoline fumes before starting. Cool engine before refueling.
- Install a lightning protection system on the roof.
- Cover the roof with a fire retardant.

The Burger King® Fire Safety Program also teaches children other safety measures including holding fire drills, planning two escape routes from every room and practicing "stop, drop & roll," so they know how to react if their clothes catch on fire.

Also, a 16mm film is available at participating Burger King® restaurants, which teaches children these key life-saving techniques through entertaining and lively songs.

While Spring Clean-up is the ideal time to check for "hot spots," this should become an ongoing family activity to make a home safe from fire hazards year-long.

Tidy up fridge to save food

Why do so many of us find our refrigerators too crammed for comfort? It could be that we're storing more leftovers now, more bulky fresh fruits and vegetables, more "from scratch" basic ingredients to avoid the cost of ready-prepared dishes.

Today we'll have regular milk and skim milk, several types of juices and tall mineral water bottles all competing for top shelf space; along with ketchup, white wine and what-have-you.

Foods stored in irregular packages or just loose on plates cannot be stacked, which contributes to space loss and untidiness. And, peering into a messy, haphazard refrigerator can make a person just home from work feel exhausted even before dinner preparations are begun.

Moreover, poorly stored food loses nutrients and flavor, and can spoil more rapidly than properly-contained edibles. A collection of quality storage containers in different sizes and shapes to use in storing various foods is a wise investment for the economy-minded.

The Educational Services Department of Tupperware Home Parties, a group dedicated to nutrition and health education, has some interesting suggestions on proper food preservation. For instance:

• Cooked poultry can keep for several days in a tight-sealed container. Store any stuffing or gravy separately in sealed plastic containers.

• Egg yolks or whites will keep fresh and not dry out refrigerated in sealed plastic containers. Add a little cold water to the yolks if you prefer to; pour it off before use.

• Cheese needs to keep moisture in and air out. Cheese will also pick up or give out odors. Tight-sealed containers in a variety of stacking shapes will hold blocks, wedges or slices of all types of cheese fresh for days.

• Firm vegetable shortenings can be stored at room temperature if tightly covered. But, opened olive oil and salad oils should be refrigerated on the bottom shelf of the door. If they solidify, 20 minutes at room temperature and they will become liquid again.

• Non-fat dry milk can get stale and lumpy once the package is opened. For freshness, transfer the powder to a sealed container and store in refrigerator. Open canned milk should be poured into a small sealed container to keep flavor in and odors out.

• Wash celery, spinach and salad greens, and refrigerate them in special containers with a raised grid to keep them above the water dripping off leaves.

• Some yeast bread doughs can be stored in a tightly-sealed bowl in the refrigerator which slows down yeasty action. Mix one day and bake the next.

• Store syrup in the refrigerator after opening. If it crystalizes, place it in hot water before using.

Containers that stack can give you the best use of your refrigerator space and also allow the cold air to flow evenly.

COMING HOME TO A MESSY REFRIGERATOR (inset) can discourage some cooks. Open packages, uncovered foods and vegetables casually tossed in result in dried out, wilted food. Definitely a no-no. Neaten refrigerator and better preserve food by placing cheeses, lunch meats or bacon in tight-sealed Tupperware, some of which stack to produce more shelf room. Vegetables too big for crispers stay fresh in specially-sized, sealed containers. Pour juices or prepared powdered milk into handled-and-spouted plastic containers.

Conservation methods that help...

Reduce energy waste during the summer

KEEP THE HEAT UNDER WRAPS and increase the energy efficiency of your hot water heater by insulating it against heat loss. This Thermo Saver® water heater insulation jacket meets Department of Energy standards for insulating all types of gas, electric and oil water heaters.

It need not be wintertime for homeowners to concern themselves with finding new and better ways to conserve energy. There are a number of steps which can be taken during the summer months as well to help reduce energy waste.

Consider, for example, the hot water heater. It is the second largest user of energy in the home and, at the same time, one of the most inefficient users of energy.

By properly insulating the outer portion of the heater, however, enough energy will be saved to amount to a $25 to $45 savings each year.

The U.S. Department of Energy recommends adding external insulation to all gas, electric and oil water heaters for the following reasons:

• The energy used to heat water in the average home is greater than the combined uses for lighting, cooking, refrigeration, television and air conditioning.

• Virtually all water heaters are manufactured with insufficient insulation.

• An estimated 25 to 35 percent of the total water heater operating cost is actually the cost of energy which is used to replace heat lost as a result of a poorly insulated tank.

Touching the outside of a water heater to feel if it is warm is not a true test to determine whether or not insulation is needed.

The surface temperature of a standard electric water heater is about 85°F or 90°F, which will feel cool to the touch. At this temperature, however, the tank is losing energy at a steady rate.

Some homeowners attempt to insulate their water heaters with ordinary building insulation. Not only is this material inefficient, but the Department of Energy warns that, for reasons of safety, ordinary insulation should not be applied to gas heaters.

They do, however, recommend the use of specially designed water heater insulation kits, such as Thermo Saver®, the original do-it-yourself water heater insulation jacket.

Sold and recommended by more than 50 public utilities nationwide, this patented jacket can be used to safely insulate gas, electric and oil heaters up to 24" in diameter.

It consists of a 1½" thick fiber glass insulation blanket faced with washable, fire resistant vinyl; a 2" thick top plate; seam tape with specially formulated adhesive; and diagrammed instructions for easy installation.

Thermo Saver meets Department of Energy standards, and retails at Sears Roebuck, JCPenney, Ace Hardware and other major hardware and home centers for about $20.

Here are some additional conservation measures that will help to reduce your home energy bills this summer:

• Lower your water heater thermostat setting to 120°F. This will reduce operating costs by about 20 percent. If you own a dishwasher, set the thermostat at 140°F.

• Reduce your family's usage of hot water by washing clothes in cold water and by taking showers instead of baths.

• Install water-saving aerators and flow-reducers to all faucets and showerheads.

• Use a clock thermostat with a double set back so that you can turn off the heat when you go to sleep and to work, and have it turn on automatically an hour or two before you wake up or return home.

Spend your days gardening, not weeding

Dandelion, Bermuda grass, and clover are just three of the many weeds that plague family gardens. Free weekends don't have to be spent pulling these stubborn weeds. Most lawn weeds can be easily eliminated with a little careful planning.

A healthy lawn won't have much trouble with weeds. According to the Ortho book "All About Lawns," if you keep your lawn cut and fertilize and water it adequately, weeds won't have a chance to grow.

There are two main types of weeds—broadleaf and narrowleaf. Broadleaf weeds have showy flowers and networks of small veins that divide their leaves in half. Clover, dandelion and chickweed are examples.

Narrowleaf weeds have hollow stems and long blades with parallel veins. Crabgrass, Bermuda grass and Dallis grass are examples.

When you do find weeds, recognize that it is a two-headed problem. You must get rid of the weeds and the weed seeds they leave behind.

If the weeds are in their growing stage, spray them with a selective herbicide like Ortho's WEED-B-GON Lawn Weed Killer. It is a mixture of 2, 4-D and MCPP, similar herbicides that single out most broadleaf weeds and kill them without damaging most lawn grasses.

Narrowleaf weeds are harder to get rid of safely because they are so similar to lawn grasses. In fact, narrowleaf weeds like Bermuda grass and bentgrass are considered good lawn grasses when planted for that purpose.

Most narrowleaf weeds can be controlled with herbicides like Ortho's KLEENUP Systemic Weed & Grass Killer. KLEENUP is mixed with water and sprayed directly on growing weeds. It is absorbed through the leaves to the root system where it cuts off the circulation of nutrients to the plant.

KLEENUP quickly becomes inactive in soil, so lawn areas that have been treated for weeds can be replanted after seven days. The product is now also available in a new formula that is already mixed and packaged in a refillable spray bottle—KLEENUP ready-to-use Weed & Grass Killer.

If they've gone to seed

If the weeds have gone to seed, you can get rid of them with a soil fumigant. Fumigants are harder to use since they can kill everything in the soil.

When there are weed seeds in the soil the simplest way to get rid of them is to take some time (from two weeks to a month) before you seed your lawn to treat for weeds.

During this break, keep the soil moist so that the weed seeds will germinate. After they have germinated, spray them with a contact herbicide that leaves no soil residue, like Ortho's CONTAX Weed & Grass Killer.

Remember, simply pulling weeds up or turning them in with a Rototiller only delays the inevitable. If you don't destroy the weed roots and seeds, and keep your lawn healthy, you'll find your free weekends spent on your knees instead of in your lawn chair enjoying the scenery.

NEW WINDOWS COME IN MANY STYLES AND SIZES

If your home improvement plans call for the replacement of one or more windows, don't be misled into thinking you are limited to the same styles and sizes in the new units.

Modern, factory-engineered windows come in many styles as well as sizes. A homeowner's choices in window design are limited only by his imagination.

Depending on the size of the opening, choose from double-hung, casement, gliding, awning, angle-bay and bow windows or gliding doors.

Andersen Corporation, a leading manufacturer of windows and gliding doors, reminds homeowners to replace the entire unit, not just the sash. If frames and sills are showing age, replacing only the sash will probably mean that half of the problem remains.

Just as important as the size and style of windows is the material that goes into them. Wood or wood sheathed in vinyl are most often used in the manufacture of quality-made windows because both offer superior insulating qualities.

Other elements of a well-built window include factory-applied weatherstripping and double-pane insulating glass—two panes of glass with an insulating air space between.

Andersen Perma-Shield windows and gliding doors are twice as weathertight as acceptable industry standards for allowable air infiltration. And, double-pane insulating glass—standard in Perma-Shield—guards against excessive heat loss through the glass areas.

Know what to look for when hiring a contractor

A wise consumer takes the guesswork out of shopping by knowing what to look for.

When it comes to shopping for a capable and reliable remodeling contractor, a wise homeowner does the same.

Because your home is probably the largest investment you'll ever make, you should take as much care in selecting the contractor as you do in planning the remodeling.

Know what to look for and what to avoid. In the long run it will mean savings in time, worry and—above all—money.

Beware of a contractor touting a "bargain." His low bid could be either a result of low-quality building materials or the addition of "extra" costs once the job is underway.

Avoid someone who moonlights as a contractor. A person who does remodeling "on the side" may be less expensive, but he may also be less professional and able.

To eliminate the guesswork in selecting a professional remodeling contractor, the National Home Improvement Council offers the following suggestions:

- Since professional contractors have established their reputations on satisfied customers and longevity in business, one of the best sources of information could be word of mouth.

Ask friends and neighbors who've recently completed a remodeling project. They should be an excellent source for leads and you'll be able to inspect the work that was done.

- If you've hired an architect or designer to plan your home improvement, ask them for the names of several contractors. Lumber dealers, home centers and hardware stores may also be good sources.
- Once you've compiled a list of prospective contractors, check their references with local building or planning departments, the Chamber of Commerce and the Better Business Bureau.

Reputable contractors should be willing to provide you with references. Those who hesitate probably have something to hide.

- Another good source is local chapters of professional contractors' associations. The National Home Improvement Council, for example, is comprised of more than 3,000 professionals nationwide. Contractors belonging to NHIC pledge to observe the "highest standards of integrity, frankness and responsibility in dealing with the public."
- Before you decide on any one contractor, request preliminary bids from a few likely candidates.

It's a popular amenity, according to the developer, because of California's heavy reliance on automobiles and recreational vehicles as well as the need for additional storage space.

Aluminum windows need no painting, conserve energy

Those lazy days of summer may mean a lot of hard work for you if your drafty old windows need repainting and recaulking again. If you face that prospect, think about replacing them with energy efficient, pre-finished, aluminum-framed windows which need no painting.

Primary windows that are still in good condition, however, can be repaired and fitted with new aluminum storm sash which will protect them and seal them effectively against air leaks.

Either way, you can cut energy losses through the windows by as much as 40 percent, to say nothing of improving their appearance and reducing maintenance.

Consider, too, that should you find it necessary to relocate, this investment will help your home pass inspection more easily and add to its resale value.

Replacement windows

Aluminum-framed replacement windows have gained popularity because they are rigid and strong and, despite their light weight, won't shrink, swell or rot like wood, or warp out of shape like vinyl plastic.

You can buy them for just about any style window—picture, bay, single or double-hung, vertical or horizontal sliders. All kinds of doors, including those to the patio, are also available.

If your windows are not a standard size, aluminum replacements can be ordered to fit those openings exactly.

Replacement windows come as complete, pre-assembled units with aluminum frame, balances, hardware, weatherstripping and trim. The frame's enamel coating, which is available in several colors, is baked on so that it does not need repainting.

The newest replacement windows incorporate tilt-out sash which makes them easy to clean. Other designs, because of their light weight, lift out effortlessly for cleaning. Some replacement windows have self-storing screens.

Still others offer you grid-type colonial style windows with the grids permanently sealed between double panes of glass. They have the additional advantage of requiring only one pane of glass to be cleaned.

Thermalized windows

The need to conserve energy has boosted the popularity of thermalized replacement windows, which are the ultimate in reducing heat conduction throughout the entire window.

These windows have a thermal insulating material in the aluminum frame and sash, and insulating glass (two or three sheets of glass separated by a dead air space).

They keep heat inside in winter and outside in summer, helping to reduce fuel consumption and keep costs down. No other window material is more energy efficient than thermalized aluminum.

According to the Aluminum Association, a Detroit, Mich., homeowner with an average size house with 250 square feet of windows could save up to $260 a year on oil heating bills (at $1.00 a gallon) by replacing old, single-pane windows with thermalized, double-glazed, double-hung aluminum-framed windows.

In Bangor, Maine, savings could reach $340; in Duluth, Minn. $425. With electric heat, the savings would be three times higher and with gas heat, a quarter less.

Cooling energy savings from the same type aluminum window improvements in the same size house could reach $90 yearly in Houston, Tex., $110 in Miami, Fla., and $65 in Atlanta, Ga.

If replacement windows throughout the house don't fit into your budget, consider replacing them floor by floor, or even room by room, starting with the rooms you use most often.

Remember, too, that you are allowed a 15 percent income tax credit up to a maximum of $300 for home improvements which help to conserve energy.

Storm windows

While replacement windows are the ideal solution, new storm windows can be equally effective if your prime windows are in good condition. This type investment may repay itself in three to six years.

NEW ALUMINUM PICTURE WINDOW combines two styles. Although all three sections are single panes of glass, making them easy to clean, the sliding side panels incorporate grids to match the Colonial style. This insulated (thermal) aluminum window, which conserves energy, also eliminates the need for painting.

A storm window is designed to provide a second window over the original glass. To be most effective, there should be an air space of one inch or more between the two windows because this air space acts as insulation.

The storm window should fit snugly and have weep holes at the sill for sufficient "breathing" to the outside in order to reduce condensation on the window panes and sill.

The most popular and efficient storm window is the multi-track, low-maintenance, aluminum frame with self-storing screens which slide easily into place.

These units come in standard or custom sizes and shapes, and the frames can be ordered in clear, anodized or enamel-coated finishes in several different colors.

Before you install storm windows, be sure your prime windows are caulked properly, and that cracks between sashes and frames are relatively airtight or weatherstripped. The same applies to aluminum storm doors, which are available in a multitude of designs, sizes and colors.

Shop before you buy

Become knowledgeable about both replacement and storm windows, and then shop carefully before you buy.

Try to see complete windows as well as the small samples in the salesman's kit. Look for window frames that have neat, strong joints and thick weatherstripping.

The heavier the aluminum frame and general construction, the stronger and more durable the window.

Choose the one that will conserve energy most effectively for your home. You can do this by checking its U-value, a rating which indicates the ability of the window's various components to insulate. The lower the U-value, the less heat or cooling air will be lost.

Also, be sure the window you buy bears the AAMA (Architectural Aluminum Manufacturers Association) Certification label.

What is a soilless mix?

Soilless mixes were developed at Cornell University in the late 1950s by Professors J. W. Boodley and Raymond Shelldrake, Jr. because good topsoil had become expensive and increasingly hard to find.

Initially, the major users of what the two horticulturalists called their Cornell Peat-lite mix, were large growers, nurseries and some farms.

Today, soilless mixes abound, but not all of them contain the same ingredients which made the Cornell peat-lite mix so successful.

In the Cornell Information Bulletin #43 on the subject, Boodley and Shelldrake list the components for a soilless mix.

They begin with imported Canadian sphagnum peat moss because, "domestic peats frequently contain large quantities of nutrients or other materials in unknown amounts and are usually too decomposed to provide the desired structural and water drainage characteristics. Canadian sphagnum peat moss is usually free of most disease organisms and weed seeds."

In addition to sphagnum peat moss, they recommend equal amounts of vermiculite and/or perlite. To this base, varying amounts of ground limestone, superphosphate, calcium, a nitrogen fertilizer, and a wetting agent are added, plus trace elements.

Uses

The uses for soilless mixes are numerous and as varied as the imagination of the gardener. Vegetables, flowers, bushes and plants all have thrived in soilless mixes. In addition, they're perfect for starting seeds indoors and repotting plants.

Soilless mixes are available under several brands today. The key to selecting a high quality one is to make sure its major ingredient is sphagnum peat moss.

If prepared soilless mixes are not yet available in your area, here's a simple formula suggested by Dr. Boodley of Cornell University.

½ Bushel of Canadian sphagnum peat moss

½ Bushel of #2 or #3 Vermiculite

8 level tablespoons of limestone (dolomite)

2 level tablespoons of regular superphosphate

3 level tablespoons of 10-10-10- fertilizer

Mix the ingredients thoroughly. If the amount is more than you need, you can store the remainder in plastic bags for use later.

Range combines microwave and conventional cooking

An electric range that produces the same cooking as GE conventional electric ranges in less time has been introduced by General Electric Company.

The TimeMaker™ Range combines the speed of microwave cooking with the results of conventional cooking in the same oven cavity. The new range, Model JBV42G, can cook with microwave energy for speed, with conventional thermal heat for browning and with a combination of both.

During combination cooking, the thermal heat supplemented by microwave energy cooks food faster, but without sacrificing good cooking performance.

The proof is in the results. A chicken basted conventionally requires approximately one hour and 15 minutes to reach proper doneness with good browning. The TimeMaker Range requires only about 25 minutes to obtain the same crispy results.

The full-size oven allows preparation of several dishes at once to save time and money. Two racks with four shelf positions provide for proper placement of food in the oven for best cooking results.

The TimeMaker Range has the P-7® Self-Cleaning oven, which was first introduced by General Electric in 1963. Special insulation in the oven reduces the use of electricity during normal baking and roasting. Enough energy is saved to clean the oven eight times a year.

The porcelain-enamel-on-steel cooktop resists scratches and stains. The range has two eight-inch and two six-inch plug-in Calrod® surface cooking units, a digital clock, an automatic oven timer and a 60-minute reminder timer.

Included with the combination range is an illustrated 352-page cookbook with complete cooking instructions. It features cooking bar charts for each recipe that show which shelf position to use, how to set the oven controls and how long to cook the food.

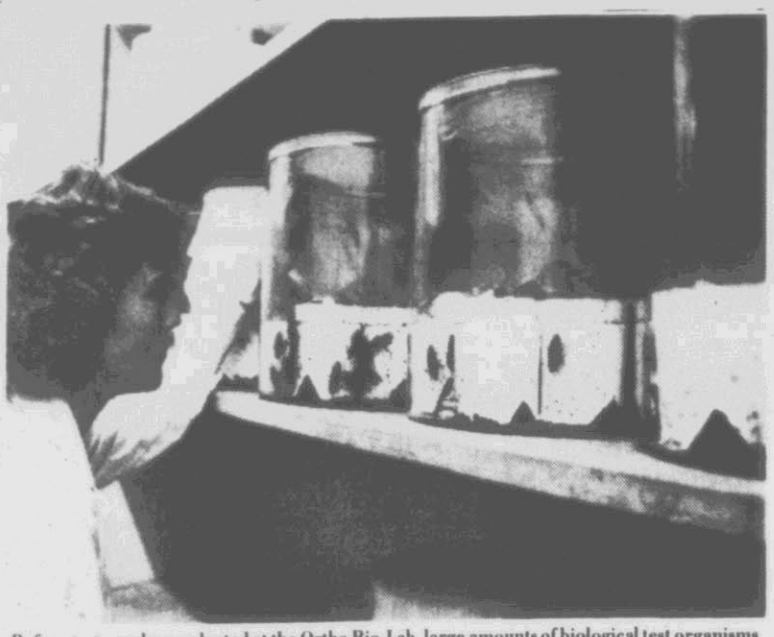
R&D key to scientific plant protection



Before tests can be conducted at the Ortho Bio-Lab, large amounts of biological test organisms must be cultured. It's an ongoing project to provide a continuous supply of insects for testing compounds with potential as pesticides or insecticides.

The first stage of the research process takes place in the Ortho laboratories where thousands of chemical compounds are screened to determine if they have any potential usefulness in the garden, home or on the farm.

At the Ortho Field Research Station in Oregon, a formulation which has left the laboratory is tested for effectiveness, safety, limitations, most convenient use and many other factors under conditions similar to the average home garden in that part of the country.

Many hours of data collection and analysis must take place before an active compound is declared qualified to move into field tests. Here, an Ortho researcher collects data in the greenhouses which are part of the bio-lab.

A dedicated commitment to research and development is the key to scientific plant protection, and this commitment is the foundation on which the Ortho name has been built.

Ortho's research process begins with the problems faced by American gardeners—insect pests, plant diseases, soil deficiencies and others. Scientists undertake an organized and systematic search for solutions to these problems. The development stage is the transformation of a research finding into a beneficial and useful product or process.

Sounds simple enough, but the job of solving plant protection problems is far from simple.

15,000 compounds

Over 15,000 new chemical compounds, on the average, must be examined in depth for every product which eventually comes to market. Once a useful compound has been discovered, an average of seven years passes before a garden or home protection product becomes available to the public. The testing and development costs during this period are millions of dollars per product.

While the familiar bright yellow and red Ortho label is now found on hundreds of problem-solving garden and home products, it all started in 1907 when two Californians discovered that a high-quality form of lead arsenate would control the problem of codling moths on apples.

They invented and patented a new manufacturing process, formed a company and marketed their products under the name Ortho. Their company was acquired by Standard Oil of California in 1945, and today that Ortho label is carried on many products of Chevron Chemical Company.

First stage research

The first stage of research takes place in the laboratory where thousands of chemical compounds are tested each year to see if they have usefulness in the garden, the home or on the farm. These chemical compounds are developed by scientists around the world for various purposes, perhaps something far removed from the plant care and protection business.

For example, a chemical compound that might have been formulated for use in a cleaning fluid could end up producing satisfactory results as a control for a particular insect pest. You never know if you don't try, and that's what the initial laboratory tests are all about.

Before tests can be conducted at the Ortho Bio-Lab, large amounts of biological test organisms must be reared. It's an ongoing project to provide a continuous supply of insects, weeds, bacteria or fungi which cause plant diseases.

The experimental chemical compounds are applied to a broad spectrum of organisms in a search for potential positive results.

When scientists find an early indication of a potential use, for example that the chemical is shown to kill a particular insect pest, the testing is intensified in that area. It isn't enough just to know that the formula kills the insect; Ortho must determine what effect, if any, it has on the plant.

Even among those chemical compounds which produce results, only a very small percentage ever make it out of the laboratory and into field testing. Animal toxicity limits must be within acceptable limits, many hours of data analysis are required and the compound must pass an exhaustive program of residue, metabolism and environmental studies.

Field testing

A formulation which makes it out of the laboratory still faces extensive field testing and then the entire product development process.

Because of the enormous costs involved, it is easy to understand why it is not financially realistic to "start from scratch" in developing a plant care or protection product for household use. Almost every consumer product in this field was originally developed for commercial or agricultural use and then reformulated for the home and garden market.

Products which will be sold to the average gardener must be tailor-made for that purpose. The Ortho Consumer Products Division maintains six field research stations throughout the country—in California, Texas, Oregon, Illinois, Florida and New Jersey. At the two- to four-acre sites, Ortho duplicates the conditions in the average yard and by locating the research stations throughout the country, products can be tested with a variety of climates, soil types and bio-environments.

If you can't move, improve!

As the cost of purchasing a new house continues to skyrocket, more and more people are opting to remodel. Remodeling not only improves the appearance of a home, it adds to its resale value.

In order to get the most for your money, consider a variety of options before embarking on any home improvement project.

A number of new building materials have become available in recent years, and they are quickly gaining popularity among homeowners across the country.

One triumph of modern technology is solid vinyl siding. Since its introduction almost 20 years ago, solid vinyl siding has rapidly come of age.

It pays to invest

Refined and perfected after years of testing and use in all parts of the country, solid vinyl is currently one of the most popular building materials used in remodeling.

Whether you own a new or older home, it pays to invest in solid vinyl siding and accessories. Because it never needs painting, solid vinyl virtually eliminates exterior maintenance costs.

According to siding experts at Bird & Son, a leading building materials manufacturer located in East Walpole, Mass., solid vinyl is easily kept clean looking year-round with a spray of the garden hose.

Take a minute to think about the money you will save over the years, if you invest in solid vinyl siding.

Have you had a painting estimate recently? The cost of maintaining a home's exterior is soaring as the expense of regular painting continues to increase.

If you paint your home every four years, it shouldn't take too long to figure out the savings you would realize if solid vinyl siding were installed.

The average price of installing solid vinyl siding is about equal to the cost of two paint jobs, and it lasts the lifetime of a home. Homeowners can save thousands of dollars in painting bills over the years.

If thermal insulating backerboard is applied with a solid vinyl siding installation, fuel bills can also be reduced.

Besides eliminating the need to paint, solid vinyl solves other problems that are inherent with wood, such as peeling, rotting, blistering and termites.

By selecting one of the new vinyl sidings etched with a woodgrain texture, homeowners can have the good looks of wood without the work.

Looks like wood clapboard

The panels are squared off on the bottom to look like wood clapboard, and they are available in a wide range of colors and styles.

Unlike other types of siding, solid vinyl does not show scratches because the color goes all the way through the material. It will not dent, corrode or conduct electricity.

A quality vinyl siding application is complemented by low maintenance vinyl accessories. Vinyl gutters and downspouts, louvered shutters, soffit system panels and vinyl fascia systems all offer the same low maintenance advantages as solid vinyl siding.

Wise improvement

If you cannot afford to move and are considering home improvements as a viable alternative, consider solid vinyl siding. It is an investment that pays for itself in a short period of time.

Start early on garden bug control

If you're looking forward to some tasty munching from your own vegetable garden—or if a lush green lawn is your landscaping goal—now is the time to apply a multi-purpose insecticide effective against the many common bugs that are eagerly waiting to attack roots and blossoms.

Pre-plant

Before putting in your favorite selection of tomatoes, corn, carrots, cucumbers, lettuce, peas and peppers, try a pre-plant application of Spectracide® 6000, a broad spectrum lawn and garden insect control that contains Diazinon®.

This single product kills virtually all major soil pests in the vegetable garden including wireworms, cutworms, mole crickets, onion and root maggots, to name a few.

Turf treatment

Part of the Spectrum® line of Home and Garden Products, this all-purpose bug killer also controls lawn insects such as ants, white grubs (Japanese beetles), billbugs, chinch bugs, Bermudagrass mites, sod webworms, leafhoppers, armyworms and others.

Apply to grass with a fertilizer spreader. The lawn area should be well wetted before treatment is applied, and a second soaking is recommended to help drench the insecticide into the root zone.

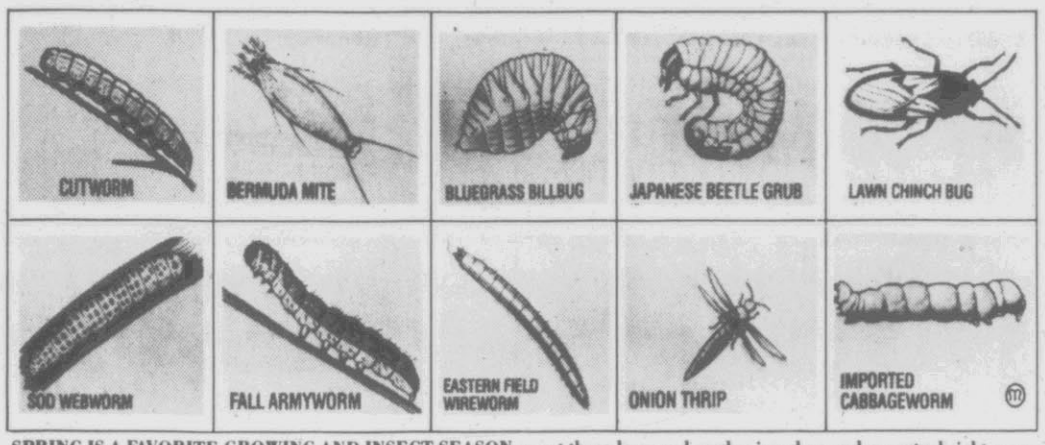
Thoroughly tested

Spectracide 6000 Lawn and Garden Insect Control has been thoroughly tested for home and garden use and is manufactured by the Ciba-Geigy Corporation, Greensboro N.C., developers of agricultural chemicals.

Ready to use in specially formulated granules, it is economically packaged in 12½ lb. bags that cover up to 6,000 square feet. Look for it at your local garden supply center, nursery, hardware or other retail outlet.

New bug chart available

For your free copy of the new full-color bug chart to help you identify tree, shrub, rose, flower, turf, vegetable, nuisance, fruit and nut bugs in the garden, write to Spectrum Home and Garden Products, Direct Mail Dept., Greensboro, NC 27409.



SPRING IS A FAVORITE GROWING AND INSECT SEASON so get those lawn and garden invaders under control right away. Apply a broad-spectrum insecticide such as Spectracide® 6000 containing Diazinon. This bug killer, part of the Spectrum® Home and Garden Product line, is effective against a wide range of lawn and garden pests. Available at local garden supply outlets in economical 12½ lb. bags.

Quality water helps to energize the home

Turning over a new leaf. That's what many homeowners will do come spring when the final thaw reveals a home and grounds in need of cleaning and repair.

This year, along with the routine that's as much a harbinger as robin red breast, consumers will turn their attention towards "energizing" the house in conjunction with traditional improvements.

Homeowners staying put

Still reeling from winter's fuel bills, skyrocketing inflation and double-digit interest rates, homeowners are staying put and improving what they've got in an effort to beat the high cost of living.

In fact, recent reports show that consumers are spending a record $58 billion on home repair and renovation with a large chunk ear-marked for improving energy efficiency.

While major energizers such as insulation, weatherstripping and storm windows may require a healthy financial commitment, there are some simpler measures that take little more than extra time and some common sense, report experts at the Water Quality Association.

Helpful measures

• On the exterior, check walls and foundation for cracks or damages. Repair immediately to prevent water, wind, and mud from seeping in.

• Keep storm windows in place during the summer months. They prevent heat gain just as they prevent heat loss.

• Plant trees and shrubs with a southern exposure. This thick leaf shading will lessen air conditioning demands and saves on energy bills.

As April showers bring May flowers, spend the time inside checking that appliances are working at maximum efficiency.

• Repair leaky faucets. One drop per second can waste as much as 60 gallons of hot or cold water per week.

• Check the hot water heater. With hot water heating accounting for 20 percent of the home's total utility bill, it's important to keep heaters working at maximum efficiency.

According to the Water Quality Association, for homeowners residing in the 80 percent of the country that has a hard water problem, installation of a water softener can cut up to ¼ off the water heating bill.

Virtures of softened water

According to studies, when water is softened, hardness minerals that create scale build-up on pipes are removed, helping the heater to work smoothly and efficiently.

• Keep lamps and lights clean. When bulbs are heated, they attract dust and dirt which can reduce light by as much as 50 percent.

• Inspect the door seal on refrigerator and freezer. If condensation or frost appears, repair immediately.

An idea from the past returns to add new charm and richness to any room in your home.

Stretching the food dollar

The rising cost of fresh food makes proper refrigerator storage essential in the fight against food loss.

Refrigerator manufacturers today include fresh food storage compartments that help to isolate different types of food. But aside from the convenience factor provided by these compartments, simple isolation of food that may otherwise contaminate its neighbor is not enough to save the dollars lost to food spoilage.

Proper balance necessary

The critical issue, according to food and refrigeration experts at General Electric Company, is the proper balance in the fresh food section between humidity and temperature.

For example, fresh strawberries (that average $1.79 a quart in many grocery stores) need a cool storage temperature and low humidity for a storage life of five to seven days. The storage life, of course, also depends on the age of the food at the time of purchase.

The same balance between temperature and humidity applies to lettuce. Because the strawberry is a fruit, it needs a cool and dry environment.

Lettuce, on the other hand, is a leafy vegetable that requires a cool temperature and higher relative humidity to remain fresh and crisp from two to three weeks.

Today, many of the refrigerators that feature meat-keeper compartments also feature compartment temperature controls. Fresh beef, for example, requires a cooler storage temperature than normally recommended for vegetables.

Given the variety of food stored in the refrigerator, one compartment that provides the proper environment for a single food category is not enough.

New to the marketplace is a GE Energy Saver 19 Refrigerator/Freezer that has three compartmentalized environments that match three basic fresh food categories: Moist 'N Fresh bin for vegetables, Cool 'N Fresh bin for fruit or meat, and Snack Pack compartment for left-overs.

Beyond warehousing vegetables in a specific area, the GE Moist 'N Fresh compartment is a sealed high-humidity pan that has an adjustable humidity control.

The Cool 'N Fresh compartment is a lower-humidity pan that has an adjustable temperature control for conversion from fruit storage to meat storage. And the smaller Snack Pack compartment provides a high-humidity environment for unwrapped items that are often left (and lost) on refrigerator shelves.

Dollar stretching

Refrigerators that maintain the balance between temperature and humidity in several specially designed compartments offer an additional dollar stretching opportunity: the longer the expensive strawberry stays fresh inside the refrigerator, the less often the need to take another gasoline-guzzling trip to the grocery store to replenish supplies.

PLAN ADDITION TO SERVE VARIETY OF FUNCTIONS

Adding a room is a good way to get extra living space. When the addition is planned to serve more than one function, you get a bonus in diversity.

When thinking about adding a room, the National Home Improvement Council suggests you make a list of the activities that will take place in the room.

An adult bedroom, for example, ought to do double duty as a quiet retreat for reading, sewing or just relaxing. A dining room might also serve as a library, sitting room or music room.

Consider mood

Another thing to consider, adds the Council, is the mood you wish to express. Should the new room be formal or informal? Should it serve as a quiet background for people, or as a strong reflection of your personality?

Once the decision has been made regarding function and mood, draw a simple floor plan using graph paper and patterns of your furniture cut to scale.

In laying out room arrangements, adds NHIC, keep in mind open traffic areas, a center of interest, conversation groupings, adequate lighting and storage space.

For professional help

For skilled, professional help in building a room addition, contact the local NHIC chapter. Contractors belonging to the Council pledge to observe the highest standards of integrity, frankness and responsibility.

DECLINE IN RENTAL UNITS TO CONTINUE

The decline in rental units is expected to continue in the 1980s, according to economist, Michael Sumichrist.

Sumichrist says the continual decline will be due to a population that still favors home ownership over renting, and a trend towards condominium conversions and cooperatives.

Plan it all before building deck or patio

A key to success in building a deck or patio is to start out right—do not skimp on the design stage. According to the Ortho book "How to Design & Build Decks & Patios," the design phase should probably take as much time as the actual construction. Another suggestion from the book, to help you plan convenience and practicality into your project, is to think of your deck or patio areas as "outdoor rooms," or extensions of indoor living space.

Building an attractive outdoor deck or patio is a project well within reach of average, or even novice, household handymen. Doing most of the work yourself is an economical way to add living space to your home, enhance stay-at-home recreation and increase property value.

A key to success in building a deck or patio is to start out right—do not skimp at the design stage. A complete design probably will take as much time as the actual construction, but in the end it will save you time.

Your design will also help you make accurate cost estimates before starting to build.

Your working design should take into account details of the site and its surrounding scenery, the construction materials to be used, traffic patterns and activities in the area, and wind, noise and lighting conditions. For example, the same deck can look quite different in bright natural light, deep shadows or soft artificial lighting.

Artistic considerations

Artistic considerations might include harmonizing architecture with your home, using angles and geometric shapes to create visual interest, contrasting the textures of construction materials, or use of enclosed or partially enclosed areas.

Your eventual goal will be to develop a "concept" plan that will guide your construction step by step. But how to begin?

Sunday newspaper supplements, home improvement books and decorating magazines are all good idea sources. You may gain inspiration from homes you visit and enjoy—think about what makes them pleasant.

Sense of enclosure

You may find that the most attractive spaces are those that have a sense of enclosure and, thereby, completeness. Many wide-open patios suffer a feeling of emptiness—like an abandoned parking lot.

An Ortho book, "How to Design & Build Decks & Patios," suggests thinking of your deck or patio areas as outdoor rooms or extensions of indoor living space. This will help you plan convenience and practicality into your project as well as an attractive appearance.

An open space could be thought of as a family room for entertaining large groups or for family get-togethers. If your dining room is too large or too small, perhaps an outdoor dining area can remedy the situation. A cozy corner or hammock nook might serve as an outdoor den.

Use hand mirror

This approach will also help you pick the location of your "rooms." Cooking and entertainment areas require access to utilities and need storage and garbage facilities if they aren't sited near the indoor kitchen and service areas.

Another way to get a designer's-eye view of your patio site is to use a hand mirror to visually flip-flop the elements of your outdoor setting. Or take a series of slide photographs of possible sites. This is a favorite technique of professional architects.

Basically, the design phase of your project is a process of asking questions (about location, shape, color, facilities, elevation, uses, etc.) and finding and refining the answers. Some drawing skills will be needed, but these are not beyond the do-it-yourselfer and are carefully explained in "How to Design & Build Decks & Patios."

Wilted roses need 'sauna'

Are your cut roses suffering from the blahs? Has the summer heat gotten to their petals? There's relief in sight—a "sauna bath" treatment.

This technique is simple, according to Ortho's book "All About Roses," and can rejuvenate your tired roses within hours!

First, cut the rose with a sharp knife at least ½ inch above the end of the stem at a very sharp angle, exposing as much cut surface to the water as possible.

Next, immerse the stems in deep water that's too hot for your hands (90 to 100 degrees Fahrenheit). Let the roses soak until the water cools.

Then place the entire container in the refrigerator or a cool place for a couple of hours to condition the blooms.

For the longest lasting cut flowers, recut the stems and add fresh water daily.

Regular checkups important to the health of your home

Just as regular checkups are important to take proper care of your health so too are they important to the health of your home. And, this is the time of year that a careful investigation should be conducted, according to experts at the CertainTeed Home Institute.

All winter long, your exterior siding has taken a beating from the elements. Likely, it's seen lots of rain and snow, and moisture is the worst enemy of wood building materials.

Clapboard siding, for example, can warp or rot when subjected to alternating moist and dry conditions. And other wood members such as shutters, soffit and fascia (located near the eaves) can suffer similar damage. Trapped moisture on painted surfaces may cause your paint to blister or peel.

What to look for

When you inspect your house, take with you a screwdriver and paint scraper. Rather than giving your home a quick going-over, be meticulous and pay particular attention to trouble spots, probing for decay and other problems.

Try to push your screwdriver into the wood, expecially in areas where moisture is likely to accumulate—the underhang of the eaves, the panels nearest to the ground and on the entire shady side of the house. If the screwdriver can be easily pushed into the wood, it may well be rotten.

Visual inspection important

Visually inspect the paint on your home as well. Look for signs of scaling, which may arise because of a poor quality of paint.

Advanced peeling or blistering will be obvious, but go one step further. Run your scraper across the siding surface here and there, especially in the moisture zones. If the paint flakes off, your siding is inadequately protected.

When your checkup is completed, you should know whether repainting, repair or total replacement of your siding is necessary.

If the work ahead of you looks prohibitive, or if you simply want your home to look better, you might consider replacing your wood siding with one of the virtually maintenance-free materials, such as the wood grained solid vinyl siding produced by CertainTeed Corporation.

Solid vinyl siding has the color molded clear through it, so the frequent scraping, sanding and painting required with wood become a thing of the past.

And, unlike metal siding, solid vinyl will not show scratches and it resists dents. It is even washable, so the rain that was your enemy may actually become your friend.

Virtual freedom from maintenance

Twice-annual checkups are advisable for your health and for your siding—unless it is solid vinyl.

CertainTeed's product is so long-lasting that it carries a 40-year pro-rated warranty, which means you can spend less time on home maintenance, and more time at the golf course, at the beach and, when necessary, at the dentist's.

For more information, write to the CertainTeed Home Institute, P.O. Box 860, Valley Forge, PA 19482.

WORKING WIVES SHARE EXPENSES

The move from "housewife" to "working wife" has turned the dream of homeownership into reality for many married couples. More than 56 percent of married couples who recently bought a home had working wives reports Chicago Title Insurance Company.

OPERATING COSTS HIT THE ROOF

The cost of operating a home has increased approximately 150 percent in the last 10 years, report housing experts.

Although the advancing costs of maintenance and repairs is the number one culprit; hikes in insurance, real estate tax and utilities are nearly as high.

BASEMENT LEAKS TOP DEFECT LIST

What's the most commonly reported structural defect in American housing? Basement leaks.

According to a report released by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, 44 percent of the homes with basements reported leaks.

It's nice to have work done by people you know and trust

Home improvement in some instances mean it's time to call a contractor. If price is a prime consideration, you can always find someone who'll do it cheap. And, no doubt, you'll remember this "cheap" firm for many years to come for their work.

We'd like to caution you during this period of time when you're looking around for a contractor. Our caution is simply that you look first to the many contractors in our area before you go elsewhere.

Our community is testimony to the many fine construction firms and individuals in our area who are in the building field.

Many of the contractors we're talking about are perhaps your neighbors or your neighbor works for them.

These same people are the ones who contribute their time and services to the community.

They belong to local organizations and churches.

They are folks who care. They live and work in our area because they like the community and the people in it. They value their reputation.

Isn't all of this important to you the next time you're considering hiring a contractor?

It should be.

It's important to know the kind of workmanship you're going to get.

Don't take chances on your next construction job. Seek out the people who care.

Music Spotlighted On Studio 8H

America's greatest music over the past century will be highlighted during NBC-TV's "Live From Studio 8H: 100 Years of America's Popular Music," to be telecast Monday, Apr. 27 (9 p.m.).

Jack Elliott will conduct the New American Orchestra, and guests include George Burns, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme, Paul Simon, Sarah Vaughan, Henry Mancini and Gregory Hines.

When selecting songs for the program, Elliott says his main problem was deciding "what material to leave out."

"Our musical heritage is so diverse and rich that it provides an endless choice of numbers," he says.

"We selected landmark songs ones that were revolutionary in their time and changed the direction of music."

Starting with the sentimental waltzes of the late 1800s, the program will move to the ragtime music of the early 1900s, then to 20s and 30s music featuring jazz, the Charleston and the beginnings of the big band era. This period peaked in the 40s and spawned such musical giants as Glenn Miller, Tommy Dorsey and Benny Goodman.

Also featured will be the rock 'n roll sounds that dominated the 50s and heralded a new force in American music as such performers as Elvis Presley and Fats Domino surged to stardom. The 60s were marked by the rise of the Beatles and groups such as The Supremes, the Mamas and the Papas and Simon and Garfunkel. Next came the 70s, which saw rock maturing under such influences as Elton John and the Bee Gees.

All of these variant sounds and influences will be represented in the program.

"For instance," said Elliott, "'Alexander's Ragtime Band,' which will be featured prominently, was composed by Irving Berlin in 1911 and summed up the entire ragtime era that made it popular. It's a key song in our musical heritage," he continued.

"Berlin told me he had originally composed 'Alexander's Ragtime Band' as an instrumental and that it was a flop in that form. Later, he put some lyrics to it and gave it to a popular singer of the day. She performed the number in Chicago where it became an overnight success," Elliott explained.

EYDIE GORME, composer-conductor Jack Elliott, and Steve Lawrence gather 'round that irrepressible keyboard wizard, George Burns, for one of the many favorite pop tunes that will be heard on "Live from Studio 8H: 100 Years of America's Popular Music," airing Monday, Apr. 27 (9-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Lasser To Star

Louise Lasser has been cast in a starring role in ABC-TV's comedy series, "It's a Living," which has gone back into production.

She's portraying Maggie, a waitress in a posh Los Angeles restaurant. The character, wife and mother for 20 years and now a widow, has just moved to the west to give the job market a try.

Lasser is perhaps best known for her portrayal in the title role of "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." But her career encompasses Broadway, films, television specials and series appearances. Her theatrical releases include "In God We Trust," "Stardust Memories," "Simon," "Bananas" and "Take the Money and Run."

Marx On Soap

Gregg Marx, grandson of the late Gummo Marx, is playing the role of David on "Days of Our Lives."

A native of Los Angeles, Gregg attended UCLA, receiving his degree in 1976 in political science. He later took graduate courses at USC in broadcast journalism.

He's single and resides in Hollywood. Among his hobbies are bicycle riding, swimming and cooking.

Psychic Prediction

"A psychic told me I was going to make my living as an actress," says Linda McCullough, who plays Callie on "BJ and the Bear."

"He was accurate about a lot of things — not only about being an actress, but he predicted I would have a relationship with a certain person, and I did."

Linda was a regular on "Guiding Light" when she realized that she was very serious about acting and wanted to make it her career.

"I went to another psychic, and he told me I would win a role in a TV series when I would be part of an ensemble of actors. When I heard 'BJ' was looking for seven lady truckers, I thought that might be the ensemble he had in mind, so I actively went after the part."

Linda read for the roles of Callie and Cindy, but Callie was really the role she wanted. "She's an exaggerated version of me," she explained. "She's a tough cookie on the outside but pure marshmallow underneath."

SNOOPY, THE CANINE CUTUP, really puts on the dog when he finds a book about magic and starts putting his dangerously little knowledge about the subject to work on the other Peanuts, including Marcie (right) and Peppermint Patty, in the new animated Peanuts special "It's Magic, Charlie Brown," airing Tuesday, Apr. 28 (8-8:30 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Michelle Will Tell

Q: I was sorry when Shelley Hack left "Charlie's Angels" and have missed seeing her on TV. Will she be coming back in any other series? SHELLEY'S FAN IN LUMBERTON, N.C.

A: There are no TV plans in Shelley's immediate future other than an occasional guest stint on ABC Sports' programs. She's a beautiful gal, but not considered to be too talented when it comes to acting.

Q: I'm crazy about the guy who plays 'Jackpot' on "Trapper John, M.D." Who is he? L. THOMAS, WILMINGTON, N.C.

A: The foxy guy is Brian Mitchell, a native of Seattle, Wash., who began performing in amateur theatrical productions when he was in his teens. He's also an accomplished singer and pianist and devotes a lot of time to writing as well as arranging music. Brian's hobbies include woodworking and refinishing antiques.

Q: Are Bette Midler and Barbra Streisand related? H. HOLLAND, ASHEVILLE, N.C.

A: There's no relation between the two singers other than a solid friendship. Barbra's half-sister is singer/actress Rosalyn Kind, who's several years younger. There's also an older brother, Sheldon Streisand. Bette spent most of her childhood in Hawaii, where her family still resides..

Q: I heard Hal Linden talking about a scholarship that's available to children born June 12 on a recent segment of "F.Y.I." How do I get more information about this? M. SADLER, RALEIGH, N.C.

A: "F.Y.I." is a syndicated series, and I suggest that you contact the station that airs the segments for further information.

Q: I saw a movie on TV named "Back Street" and really like it. Will it be coming back anytime soon? A MOVIE 'FREAK' IN MT. AIRY, N.C.

A: The 'tear-jerker' ranks high on the list of 'golden-oldies,' and it's a mainstay in the programming for many stations, especially the independent ones. The movie, released in 1961, was actually the third version of Fannie Hurst's story of a woman's love for a married man.

Q: Who are the 'regulars' on "Dear Alex and Annie"? H. KING, WILMINGTON, N.C.

A: Eda LeShan, noted author and specialist in child psychology, answers the letters from viewers of this unique show. The songs you hear Alex and Annie singing in the three-minute segments that combine live action with animation are sung by Bing Bingham and Donna Drake.

Cash Honors 'Country Gals'

Women in country music will be honored on "Johnny Cash and the Country Girls," airing Wednesday, Apr. 29 (10-11 p.m.), on CBS-TV. Special guests are June Carter Cash, Rosanne Cash, Misty Rowe, Emmylou Harris and Minnie Pearl.

Twenty-eight women, all currently part of today's country music scene, join Cash for the opening number. "I'm Going to Be a Country Girl Again." Among these are Connie Cato, Skeeter Davis, Jeannie C. Riley, Jeannie Seely, Connie Smith, Helen Cornelius, Billie Jo Spears and Kitty Wells.

Women have always played an important part in the music world, both as performers and as songwriters. Cash, with the help of his guests, honors these contributions by spotlighting such musical standards as "Shine on Harvest Moon," "I Love You Truly," "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," "Chopsticks" and "America."

On a more current note, Emmylou Harris performs "Tulsa Queen," and Rosanne Cash sings her latest composition, "Seven Year Ache," which is now climbing the country music charts.

Although Rosanne is the daughter of Johnny Cash, it's difficult to make any comparisons between the two. "I really don't see any similarities between our styles," she says. "I'm sure he's influenced me of course, because as a child I grew up listening to him, but my music is different from his."

Rosanne was raised in California, away from the Nashville sound, and she says those artists she listened to, and who had an influence on her, were folk-rock performers like Joni Mitchell, Tom Rush, Eric Anderson and The Beatles. As far as country performers are concerned, she lists Emmylou Harris and Patsy Cline as her favorites.

"You are what you listen to, I believe," Rosanne says. "You're the sum of your influences, musically, to a certain extent. Of course, all good artists are original, but still, those influences enter in, in the most subliminal ways."

'Benji' Film Is Different

THAT LOVABLE POOCH stars in "For the Love of Benji" airing Friday, May 1 (8-9:30 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

For those jaded souls who might grow tired of watching the world's most expressive canine face in action, the scenery of Greece, lovingly photographed in "For the Love of Benji," provides a view of that ancient country not usually available in motion pictures.

The film, starring everybody's favorite wonder dog, is making its debut on TV via ABC Friday, May 1 (8 p.m.).

This movie isn't the typical exploration of ancient Greek monuments rather, the back streets after the tour buses have gone, the pentimento of pastels on ancient stone walls, painted and repainted over the centuries. There's also the characteristic people, the narrow cobblestone streets, tavernas and bars of locals.

"More often than not it is merely a selection process," says production designer Harland Wright. "This, of course, was different from the normal procedure when we re-do locations to look as we want them to. The looks that we found for 'Benji,' in many cases, couldn't be duplicated at any cost."

The floppy-eared mutt from the Burbank Animal Shelter became "America's Most Huggable Hero" immediately following the release of a motion picture entitled "Benji." Today, his three movies rank among the most popular family films of all times.

Benji's popularity stretches from Bangkok to Boston and from Sydney to Seattle. He has traveled in Japan, France, Switzerland, Italy, Greece, Germany, Canada, Puerto Rico, Venezuela and in more than 130 cities of the United States. He's been a guest on national television in five countries, ridden in dozens of parades and was the second animal ever to be inducted into the American Humane Society's Animal Actors Hall of Fame (Lassie was the first). Benji has twice received the American Guild of Variety Artists' Georgie Award as the Top Animal Entertainer of the Year. His motion picture theme song, "I Feel Love," won a Golden Globe Award and was also nominated for an Oscar, while two of his TV specials have garnered nominations for Emmys. Most recent is the honor of being voted one of the ten most popular performers in the U.S. by the Performer Q survey.

Benji's most important accomplishment, however, may be simply rediscovering for all of us that even with the international problems of today, a child's laughter is still the same in Muncie as it is in Rome, in Tokyo or Paris, or wherever anyone can feel love for a floppy-eared little dog.

Gilmore's Song

Norman Mailer's Pulitzer Prize-winning and nationally praised book, "The Executioner's Song" — recounting the last months in the life of convicted murderer Gary Gilmore — will become a miniseries for NBC-TV.

The drama is to focus on the life led by Gilmore from the time he was paroled in 1976, through his robber-murder spree and capture, to the moment when he made his internationally quoted request, "Let's do it," before facing a firing squad at the Utah State Prison Jan. 17, 1977.

Phillips Accepts

New Orleans Saints safety Ray Brown had planned to retire from pro football after last season, but changed his mind when Bum Phillips accepted the position of the team's head coach.

"I don't know whether he has me in his plans," says Brown. "But if he does, I'd be very receptive. I can't think of anybody I'd rather play for than a guy like Bum Phillips."

Rozema Wins Back

Detroit Tigers' Dave Rozema turned his diet into dollars when he reported for the first day of spring training. Facing a $100-per-pound fine if he arrived in Florida overweight, he won back the $200 he lost last year by being four pounds under the designated 205.

Champs To Box

World Boxing Council champ Sugar Ray Leonard and World Boxing Association titleholder Thomas Hearns have signed for a welterweight championship bout that could wind up as the richest fight in history.

Leonard (29-1) and Hearns (30-0) will battle it out for the unified title in late Sept. or early Oct.

Leonard will receive a guaranteed purse of $10 million, plus a share of the ancillary rights.

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — Panic hit the on-location filming of "MITCHELL AND WOODS," a spinoff of "Chips," recently when ERIK ESTRADA fell from his motorcycle while the cameras were rolling. Fortunately, Erik wasn't seriously injured this time, although doctors have told him to wear a neck brace for a couple of weeks.

One of Tinseltown's best-kept secrets is out: Tim Hutton, who just won an Oscar for his excellent portrayal in "ORDINARY PEOPLE," has been dating a University of California coed, JILL GRECH, for the past two years. And not one soul knew a thing about it.!

Not so secret is the fact that BO HOPKINS, one of the stars of "DYNASTY" is steady-dating CAROL CONNORS.

Meanwhile, GOV. JERRY BROWN's romance with CINDY WILLIAMS seems to still be smouldering. In fact, he's even smiling for the photogs who stalk the twosome everywhere they go.

"EIGHT IS ENOUGH" star SUSAN RICHARDSON has formed a country music group called HARMONY, and she's hoping they'll cut a record sometime soon. As soon as 'Eight' goes on hiatus, Susan & Co. plan to hit the country and state fair circuit.

Two other popular TV personalities, CANDI and RANDI BROUGH, regulars on "BJ AND THE BEAR," have signed a recording contract with Capitol Records.

Lady lawyers: tender at the bar.

FOR ANN W. LAKE, president, National Association of Women Lawyers

Why should there be an association of women lawyers when there is no association of men lawyers? I thought the thrust was to have one association with everyone being equal, regardless of gender? —V.B., Elkhart, Ind.

● It is vital to have a separate women's organization. The National Association of Women Lawyers, founded in 1899, began as a club to help those few women at the bar who were pioneers in the profession and who could not then join the men's bar association. There was discrimination not only in admitting women to the bar but in permitting membership in men's bar associations. Since discriminatory practices still persist, it is necessary to have a separate group representing women at the bar.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Why shouldn't musicians be appointed to high-level Government posts? They seem to be so worldly. —T. Dixon, Flint, Mich.

● Jazzman Kenneth Red Norvo agrees with you. He told us: "It seems musicians are well qualified for governmental posts. Benny Goodman, André Previn, Count Basie, Billy Taylor, John Birks Gillespie, could hold the floor intellectually, historically and logically with most ambassadorial choices. They're beloved by foreigners, can mix and mingle with the highest to the lowest and communicate with all segments of society. It's time jazz, and its purveyors, were taken as seriously as lawyers, performers and businessmen." Red Norvo rates his colleagues at the Sarasota Jazz Festival, at which he plays, as qualified.

Benny Goodman: upbeat for jazzmen.

FOR CHERYL TIEGS, model

Is it true that you only live in the present and refuse to think of the distant future? —S.M., Provo, Utah

● I think about it, of course, but I am not obsessed by it. People who dwell on the subject of aging do so only out of boredom. It means they have too much time on their hands, nothing to occupy their minds. Fortunately, my mind and hands are fully occupied. But anyone who says he never thinks of what he'll be like in 10, 20 or 30 years is lying.

FOR ALWIN NIKOLAIS, founder and choreographer of Nikolais Dance Theater

Can you tell right away if a person is a born dancer? —G.M., Marion, Ohio

● No. It's impossible. I know many who could not have looked or behaved klutzier, yet turned out to be magnificent artists. I could quote many instances where young people seem to be totally inadequate, then turn out to be quite extraordinary — Murray Louis for one. He never would have passed an audition.

FOR ISAAC ASIMOV, science-fiction writer

Did the lost continent of Atlantis ever exist? Where are its "ruins" located today? And do you think that life, other than marine life, exists in unexplored parts of the ocean? —F.M., Kenosha, Wis.

● I believe that the tale of Atlantis stems from a destructive volcanic eruption on the small but civilized Aegean island of Thera in 1450 B.C. Traces of the civilization are still there — and have been found. In answer to the last part of your question, absolutely not.

FOR EDITH HEAD, designer

When you design gowns for movie stars, do you pay attention to the dictates of Paris, New York, London? —C.I., Sacramento, Calif.

● No. When I design a costume for a star, I am primarily interested in the character she's playing, and I am naturally less influenced by the fashion centers. You must remember that my purpose is to translate the actor or actress into a different person, and that is the primary thought behind anything I do.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Was Glenda Jackson really a problem child at school and nearly expelled? —J.E., Morristown, Tenn.

● It never got that far, but Glenda felt she came pretty close once. She played a prank on a teacher who had a fear of the supernatural. Glenda hid herself in a rarely used classroom closet and proceeded to tap and rap on the door. When none of her students could hear those mysterious noises, the teacher ran out in sheer terror. Glenda said that was her acting debut.

FOR PRESTON ROBERT TISCH, president, Loews Corporation

Please explain the circumstances in which you called yourself a "fruitcake." —J. Morgan, Asbury Park, N.J.

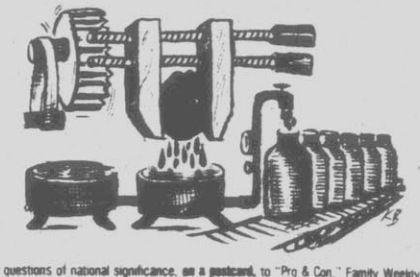
● After the Citizens Union presented me with its Distinguished Service Award, my wife said, "I really enjoy being married to the top banana in the Big Apple." Then my secretary added, "he really is a peach." Which led me to say, "all this talk about 'top banana,' 'big apple' and 'peach' makes me sound like a fruitcake."

PRO AND CON

Should There Be a Federal Assistance Program to Develop Synthetic Fuels?

PRO Representative Jim Wright (D.-Texas), Majority Leader

Since domestic oil production peaked in 1970, the U.S. has become alarmingly dependent on foreign sources. Imports will bleed us of $90 billion this year. We have one-third of the world's coal reserves. Technology exists to convert coal to liquid and gaseous fuels, but industry has been unwilling to build such plants without Government backing. The Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created to provide such backing at virtually no cost to the taxpayer. It is essential to America's future that this program go forward.



Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

CON Representative Toby J. Moffett, (D.-Conn.) chairman, Environment, Energy subcommittee.

Suppose we decide to emphasize nonpolluting energy conservation instead of spending $88 billion on synthetic fuels. It would be quicker, it would be much, much cheaper, and it would not require salaries of $150,000-plus for a new Federal syn-fuels bureaucracy. Nor would it rely on an untested technology. Conservation and solar technologies are known effective factors in the energy arena. It makes good sense to commercialize such inexpensive technologies before subsidizing the oil companies' syn fuel plans. That is what cost-cutting is all about.

New Research About Heredity's Impact on Twins

Amazingly, twins separated at birth and reunited years later show striking similarities in personality — sometimes right down to the way they sneeze.

Enrico Ferorelli

Left: Jim Lewis, third wife, Sandy, and children. Lewis's first son (living with second wife, Betty) is named James Alan — the same as twin Jim Springer's first son.

Right: Springer with his second wife, also named Betty, son James Allan and daughters.

Enrico Ferorelli

By Bruce Schechter

In fairy tales it happens this way: A rich man's wife gives birth to identical twins. One night, several weeks later, a band of gypsies passes through town, and for some dark reason, they spirit away one of the twins. The two grow up unaware of the existence of the other, but there is always a constant, nagging feeling of incompleteness. One day, after a long and unlikely chain of events, they are reunited.

And they live happily ever after.

In real life it happens differently. There were no gypsies passing through Piqua, Ohio, 39 years ago when a 35-year-old immigrant gave birth to identical twin boys. She was no rich man's wife — she was unmarried, in fact, and therefore chose to put the twins up for adoption.

Within six weeks, two couples, the Springers and the Lewises, were found as adoptive parents for the boys. The Springers named their new son Jim. The Lewises named their son Jim, too. Coincidence?

Maybe. But 39 years later Jim Lewis was feeling lonely. Years earlier his mother had told him that he was a twin. "I always kinda felt I wanted to have somebody close to me," he recalls. Finally this desire gave way to action and after a small amount of poking around in the courthouse, Jim Lewis located his long-lost twin. And then the coincidences really started to multiply.

First of all, the Jim twins — as they've come to be known — found that they had both been married to, and then divorced from, women named Linda. They both remarried. The names of the new wives? Betty. Both men had worked part time as deputy sheriffs. Lewis likes to build miniature picnic tables; Springer builds miniature rocking chairs. They both...but the list goes on and on. Says Springer: "It's downright spooky."

The only person who was happier than the Jim twins about this remarkable reunion was University of Minnesota psychologist Thomas Bouchard. Reading of the reunion in the Minneapolis Tribune, he must have felt as if he had discovered the psychological Rosetta stone.

Dr. Bouchard, who had been studying identical twins for some time, saw in the Jim twins a perfect opportunity to investigate the issue of "nature" versus "nurture." Ever since 1865, when the Moravian monk, Gregor Mendel, showed that wrinkled peas inherit their wrinkle from their forbears, scientists have wondered what role inheritance plays in determining the lives of humans. It is clear, for example, that blue-eyed parents give birth to blue-eyed children. But do intelligent parents have intelligent children? Do evil parents beget evil children?

Twins Oskar Stohr (l.) and Jack Yufe: Stöhr was part of Hitler Youth; Yufe was raised a Jew.

© Robert Burroughs 1979

Not necessarily, argued many scientists. Nurture — the way a child is brought up — certainly plays a large role in his future development, too. The question is, how large a role does it play?

To answer this question, scientists would have to observe the same child growing up twice: once with musical parents, say, and once with parents who were scientists. The only solution to this dilemma, it was realized, is to carefully observe identical twins who are raised apart.

Identical twins develop from a single egg cell; so their genetic makeup is identical. The "nature" of a set of identical twins is identical. To the extent that natural inheritance determines the development of the individual, identical twins raised apart should be similar to one another.

Only three and one-half out of every 1,000 childbirths result in identical twins. Of these, very few are separated within weeks of birth. If the infants remain together for more than even a few months, "contamination" begins to occur, for the first months of child-rearing have an enormous effect on future development. Of the identical twins that are separated at birth, very few are ever reunited. And that is why Dr. Bouchard was so ecstatic when he read about the Jim twins.

He knew that he had to work fast. After a few weeks of personal contact, who could say how much contamination of the twins' personalities would occur? Within 48 hours, Dr. Bouchard had raised the necessary funds to bring the Jim twins to Minnesota for a week's worth of intensive testing.

In that week the twins were subjected to a battery of physical tests, asked over 15,000 questions, interviewed and observed until they and the scientists were totally drained. The picture that has emerged from all of this scientific snooping is remarkable. Their personality profiles, when superimposed, were virtually identical. "Had anyone told me this would happen before, I wouldn't have believed him," says Dr. Bouchard.

Susan Farber, a New York University psychologist, would concur. In her own investigation of 95 case histories of reunited identical twins, she has seen remarkable evidence for the dominance of genetic influence. She has tried to explain the similarity observed in identicals as a function of early contact, arguing that the personality is formed in the first few crucial months of life. But her results are puzzling: "Paradoxically," she reports, "twins who had had the least contact proved to resemble each other more strikingly in personality."

Bouchard and his colleagues have collected data on 18 other sets of identical twins, and the similarities have continued to amaze them. In one of their most astonishing cases, the twins Oskar Stöhr and Jack Yufe, were separated at six months of age. Stohr was brought up as a Catholic in Germany and became involved in the Hitler Youth Movement. Yufe was raised a Jew and joined an Israeli kibbutz at the age of 17. Despite their disparate background, despite the fact that they do not even share a common mother tongue, there are astonishing similarities between the two men. Both walk with similar gaits and talk (in their own languages) with the same cadences. Both share the odd habit of flushing the toilet before, as well as after, use. And both think that it is the height of wit to sneeze in crowded places. Other of Bouchard's twins share such characteristics as fear of heights, hyperactivity, bed-wetting and even homosexuality.

Admittedly, it is an enormous body of circumstantial evidence. But, taken together, these "coincidences" begin to paint a new picture of human nature. It may turn out that many of our fears and freedoms are illusory; despite the best efforts of our parents and teachers, our intelligence, habits, talents, likes and dislikes may be programmed into our genetic structure. Our genes could be our most important inheritance. FW

HEALTH

Controlling High Blood Pressure

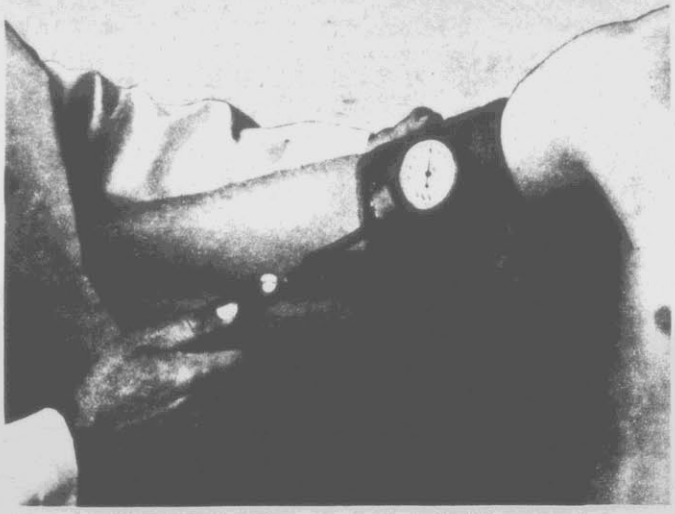
It's called the "silent killer" because it can sneak up on you without any symptoms. But fortunately, high blood pressure is one of the most treatable conditions.

By Gloria Hochman

Several months ago, Nancy C., a healthy, 42-year-old mother of two, went to her gynecologist's office for a routine checkup. She was stunned when her doctor told her that her blood pressure was alarmingly high. He asked her to return the following week so he could check again. It had not changed, and she was informed that she may have had the condition for some time without knowing it.

It is not unusual that Nancy had hypertension (another name for high blood pressure) without realizing it or experiencing any symptoms. In fact, hypertension has often been called the "silent killer" because its sufferers don't usually experience pain or distress. And the symptoms which do appear in some cases — dizziness, headaches and fatigue — are associated with many other conditions and may not be evident for a long time.

More than 60 million Americans are victims of the ailment, and it is a leading cause of death because it precipitates strokes, heart attacks and kidney failure.



More than 60 million Americans — many under 35 — have hypertension. So everyone should be checked once a year.

No one knows what causes high blood pressure, although studies indicate that some people are susceptible to it because of heredity. Persons whose parents had hypertension are at greater risk, and it is they who may be most affected by overweight, stress, drinking or smoking. Physicians point out, however, that these factors will not cause hypertension in persons not prone to the ailment. They remind also that while the word "hypertension" conjures up an image of an anxious, frenzied executive type, the hypertensive patient may be tense or relaxed, aggressive or passive, active or lethargic.

While hypertension has often been thought of as an "older person's" disease, there is increasing evidence that it may be prevalent in men and women under 35 and even in teenagers and younger children. Findings of elevated blood pressure in children may be clues that serious hypertension will develop later.

This is why it is important that everyone have his or her pressure checked regularly. Even though the cause of hypertension is disturbingly elusive, its detection is easy. By using a sphygmomanometer, the rubber device that wraps around the arm and deflates as the blood pressure is read, doctors can gauge the pressure exerted by the blood against the walls of the arteries as it is propelled by the heart through arterial blood vessels into capillaries.

Blood pressure readings vary and change with age (they tend to rise as one grows older), but 90/60 to 140/90 is considered within normal range. Average blood pressure is 120/80. The first number refers to the systolic pressure (the beat of the heart when it is contracting) and the lower number expresses the diastolic pressure (the pressure level in the arteries when the heart is resting).

Since blood pressure can vary as much as 30 points, even within a few minutes, at least three separate readings on different occasions are necessary. If all of them are higher than normal, a diagnosis of high blood pressure is probably accurate.

A modest work-up of the patient should follow. More than 90 percent of the time, no cause can be identified. But sometimes these tests yield results that may suggest secondary hypertension, which exists because of another condition such as a blocked artery to the kidney or a tumor of the adrenal gland. These conditions can be cured, thus eliminating the hypertension.

The work-up, suggested in the National Institutes of Health (N.I.H.) 1980 Report of the Joint National Committee on the Detection, Evaluation and Treatment of High Blood Pressure, includes a medical history, taken and evaluated by a physician, a thorough physical examination, a urinalysis, blood tests and an electrocardiogram. If these findings are negative, no further tests are recommended at that point.

Fortunately, high blood pressure is one of the most treatable of ailments. If hypertension is mild and there is no indication of other conditions which may be causing it, some doctors will urge changes in life style before prescribing medication. These include losing weight, cutting down salt intake and beginning a regular exercise program. If these measures do not work, there is new evidence that drugs are beneficial, even to patients with mild hypertension.

Until recently, persons with diastolic pressures between 90 and 104 were considered to be only mildly hypertensive, implying that their conditions should not cause concern. However, the results of the N.I.H. report demonstrates that this is not the case.

In a seven-year program which included 10,000 people, it was shown that even people with mild hypertension, if aggressively, but appropriately treated, have fewer deaths from all causes than people who receive routine care or no care at all. (Until this study, it was not known that persons with mild hypertension would benefit from treatment.)

The study also revealed the effectiveness of "stepped care." Five thousand patients were closely followed at special clinics set up and operated by N.I.H. The first step of care was simple treatment with diuretics (medication which increases salt loss from the body through the urine). If this did not work, another medication, such as clonidine or propranolol, would be added. Step three would require the addition of a vasodilator, which opens up narrow vessels which could be contributing to the high blood pressure. If hypertension were still not reduced, step four would introduce yet another drug.

"There were 17 percent fewer deaths in the group of patients who had received 'stepped care' than there were in the group that had received traditional care," says Graham W. Ward, chief of the Institutes' Health Education Branch.

When blood pressure is alarmingly high, there are many drugs that bring it down quickly and keep it under control. Diuretics, which lower pressure by reducing the amount of fluid in the blood, are effective with more than one-third of patients. For others, doctors may prescribe drugs to dilate the walls of the blood vessels or to keep blood vessels from constricting.

There are two important rules which everyone should follow:

- Be certain that you and every member of your family have a blood pressure check at least once a year. This includes young children.
- If hypertension is found, follow your doctor's instructions about diet, medication, changes in routine and follow-up visits, even if you feel well and remain free of symptoms. FW

Editor's Note: Next month is High Blood Pressure Month. For additional information about high blood pressure, write to High Blood Pressure Information Center, 120/80 National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md. 20205.

He Tickles Kids with His Itsy-Bitsy Books

By Anita Summer

What's a man to do when his profession makes his sons, 15 and 17, blaze crimson from embarrassment and mumble, "he's in publishing," when asked how their father earns his living?

"No," grins Roger Hargreaves, in answer to the obvious question, "I don't manufacture porn. I write kids' books."

While admitting it hurts that Adam and Giles aren't prouder of his work ("They wish I were a doctor"), Hargreaves is consoled in knowing his drawings and prose make kids around the globe smile, not scowl.

Last year, his Mr. series of books — short, self-contained stories with funny little drawings — was read by eight million small-fry worldwide. Hargreaves published the first book, Mr. Tickle, in England in 1972 and has since followed it up with 30 others, offering such delightful characters as Mr. Tidy, Mr. Silly and Mr. Chatter Box. The series was finally introduced in the United States last April.

Flashing a big smile and poster for his series of little Mr. books.

Not bad for a man who delights in revealing he was the despair of his parents and teachers because he was a late bloomer: "Until I was 7," reports Hargreaves, "I couldn't read or tell the time. I thought I'd never learn, so I didn't bother trying."

And not bad for man who never went to art school. In fact, his sketches with squiggles and blobs resemble the work of a preschooler. And not bad for a man who confides that his interest span is short-lived: "Just like a child's. My wife constantly asks when I'll grow up."

The urbane Englishman and father of four ("My twins, Sophia and Amelia, aren't ashamed of my work because they're 10 and have known nothing else.") collected his first paycheck from his father, a dry-cleaning operator in Yorkshire, England. That business bored him so he moved to London, became a copywriter and did so well he was promoted: "A promotion in advertising is tantamount to the kiss of death. Before I was a big shot. I traveled the world, arranging commercials. After my promotion, I was stuck behind a desk, where I did nothing but hire people to do the fun things I used to do. That was boring."

One night at a cocktail party, Roger met a publisher who complained that children's book publishing lacked a breath of fresh air. Roger decided to be that breath. He pondered what would make kids laugh and concluded it was tickling.

Enter Mr. Tickle and Hargreaves's new career....

The 6-foot 5-inch creator of the Mr. series explains its phenomenal success: "The books are brief and devoid of adult condescension. My characters personify the traits that kids see in themselves and their families — Mr. Lazy, for instance, likes to sleep. Youngsters need entertainment, not education. They're bored with hearing 'read this, it's good for you.'"

Hargreaves maintains that if a child's introduction to reading is a fun experience, he or she will be anxious for more. He opted for small books so "they can fit under pillows."

What Hargreaves finds appealing about kids is their sense of humor. "Ninety percent of the ones I know have humor; only 50 percent of the adults do." He believes that the world's children are amused by the same things.

When Hargreaves acquired a modicum of fame and fortune, he moved from London to Guernsey (in the Channel Islands, off the northwest coast of France), where he is now working on a new Little Miss series plus an illustrated children's dictionary, a parent's guide, board books for infants, 15-minute TV cartoons, a children's newspaper comic strip. His reward for pleasing the next generation? "Money," he beams, unashamedly.

Proving he does indeed possess adult qualities — and failings — Roger reports an affection for fine restaurants, first-class air travel, gardening, sunbathing, thrillers and an aversion to politicians, snails, warm beer, big cities and income tax.

Containers made of craft sticks

A smart bird cage centerpiece.

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Decorate a luncheon table, enliven a kitchen corner, spruce up a bedroom and add color to the bathroom! Here are some bright new craft projects that will brighten your spirits as well as your home. They are easy, inexpensive and fun to do.

There's a songbird in a flower-bedecked cage you make to serve as an attractive centerpiece, and it can be made as small or as large as you like.

For a practical as well as a pretty touch to a bedroom, make a framed fabric pin-and-earring holder.

A fabric-covered tissue box is another decorative addition to the bedroom or bath. The box is covered so that it can be re-used when the initial supply of tissues is gone.

Other colorful and useful items for bathroom supplies are made with the wooden craft sticks frequently utilized in children's crafts. More sophisticated projects involve covering the sticks with fabric before attaching them to a variety of containers to make holders for combs and brushes, nail care needs, bath powder and hair clips.

Complete instructions for all of the items mentioned above, along with photographs and illustrations, are included in our leaflet.

FOOD

A TOAST TO SPRING

By Marilyn Hansen

Along with the daffodils, spring brings the best of fresh seasonal flavors for dining enjoyment. Asparagus, artichokes, salmon — plus a refreshing wine bowl — will lighten your steps during the season.

POACHED SALMON A LA TARRAGON

½ cup sour cream
¼ cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon tarragon wine vinegar
1 tablespoon minced parsley
½ teaspoon sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash ground black pepper
Dash Tabasco
4 (6 ozs. each) salmon fillets or steaks, poached, recipe follows

1. Combine all ingredients except poached salmon; mix thoroughly. Refrigerate at least 1 hour to blend flavors. Serve with poached salmon fillets. Makes 4 servings

POACHED SALMON FILLETS

4 cups water
1 cup white wine
1 small sliced onion
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon peppercorns
½ teaspoon tarragon leaves
2 sprigs parsley
4 (6-oz. size) salmon fillets or steaks

1. Bring all ingredients except salmon to boil in large skillet.

2. Place 4 salmon fillets in liquid; return to boil; cover; reduce heat and simmer, allowing 10 minutes per inch of salmon at its thickest point or until salmon flakes when tested with a fork.

3. Carefully remove fillets with spatula from poaching liquid. Serve hot or allow to cool in poaching liquid and serve cold.

Makes 4 poached fillets

VEGETABLE STUFFED ARTICHOKES

4 artichokes
¼ cup butter or margarine
¼ cup chopped pared carrot
¼ cup chopped fresh onion
¼ cup chopped celery
¼ lb. fresh mushrooms, chopped
1½ teaspoons salt, divided
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
¼ teaspoon dried dill weed

1. Cut off stems of artichokes. With scissors, cut off tips of leaves. Pull off tough outside leaves around base of each artichoke and discard.

2. With scissors, carefully open center leaves, turn the artichoke over on a board and press down firmly at the base to spread leaves open. Turn artichoke right side up and pull out yellow leaves from the center. With a spoon, scrape out fuzzy and prickly portion from the heart.

3. In large skillet, melt butter. Add carrots, onion and celery; cook until vegetables are tender. Add mushrooms, 1 teaspoon salt, pepper, lemon juice and dill. Cook until mushrooms are tender, about 10 minutes.

4. Sprinkle remaining ½ teaspoon salt over cavities of artichokes. Place ⅓ cup mixture in the center of each artichoke. Place in baking pan; add water to cover bottom of pan. Cover and bake in 375°F. oven 45 minutes.

Makes 4 servings

EASY CHIVE HOLLANDAISE

3 egg yolks
½ teaspoon salt
Dash cayenne pepper
½ cup butter or margarine, melted
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
1 teaspoon snipped fresh chives

1. In top of double boiler over hot water, beat egg yolks until thick and lemon-colored; mix in salt and cayenne. Blend in 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine, a little at a time, beating constantly.

2. Slowly beat in remaining butter or margarine alternately with lemon juice. Mix in chives. Keep warm.

Makes about 1 cup

SPRING TUNA TIMBALES

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup bread crumbs
⅔ cup light cream
1 can (6½ or 7 ozs.) tuna, drained
2 tablespoons minced watercress, optional
1 tablespoon minced pimiento
2 eggs, slightly beaten
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper

1. Melt butter; add bread crumbs and cream; heat. Remove from heat; stir in tuna and remaining ingredients.

2. Grease four 6-ounce custard cups; fill ¾ full. Place in baking pan; pour boiling water into pan about 1½ inches deep. Bake in 350°F. oven about 40 minutes or until tip of knife inserted in center comes out clean.

3. Remove from water; let stand 8 minutes, then run tip of knife around timbales and turn out. Arrange in center of salad platter and surround with vegetables.

Makes 4 generous servings

STRAWBERRY BOWL

1 pint strawberries
¼ cup sugar
4 bottles chilled Moselle wine
½ bottle chilled Sekt or 2 cups club soda

1. Cut strawberries in half. Sprinkle with sugar and refrigerate for several hours.

2. Place strawberries and any juice that has formed into the bottom of a punch bowl or in several pitchers. Add wine and Sekt. Serve immediately.

Makes 4 quarts or 32 servings

Editor's Note: Sekt is German sparkling wine, reflecting all the characteristics of Rhine and Moselle wines, with the added benefit of effervescence.

FRESH ASPARAGUS AND ONION PIE

1½ lbs. fresh asparagus
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons finely chopped green onion, leek or onion
4 eggs
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper

¾ cup heavy cream or evaporated milk
1 cup milk
1 unbaked 9-inch pastry shell

1. Wash asparagus; cut off tough ends and remove scales. Reserve 7 spears for later use.

2. Cut remaining spears into ½-inch pieces. In a skillet, melt butter or margarine; add green onion and cook over low heat until golden.

3. In a large bowl, beat eggs with salt, pepper, cheese, cream and milk; add onion and ½-inch asparagus pieces. Turn into unbaked pastry shell. Arrange reserved 7 asparagus spears on top.

4. Bake in preheated 425°F. oven 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 325°F. and bake 30 to 40 minutes longer or until the tip of a knife inserted in center comes out clean. Allow to set 5 minutes, then serve.

Makes 6 servings

THE FAMILY

Kids for Rent: the Plight of Foster Children

By Lynne McTaggart

Jennifer, a spunky 5-year-old redhead, is a foster child. Though free for adoption, she lived with a foster family for two years. When her foster parents pressed the county social service department in charge of her care to find Jennifer an adoptive home, the county social worker transferred her to an institution.

The foster parents then offered to adopt Jennifer themselves. They were turned down because the worker determined that they had shown Jennifer "too much" affection.

Jennifer is one of some half-million children in foster care in the United States. Placement of these children is handled by many of the same child-care agencies that arrange adoptions — agencies that aren't doing much adoption business these days. With the 1973 nationwide repeal of the abortion laws and increasingly more liberal attitudes toward illegitimacy, most pregnant, unwed women are either electing abortion or deciding to keep their infants.

Nevertheless, adoption agencies have kept themselves in operation by "renting" out their stable population of children to indefinite foster care. They are loath to lose a foster child — their most generous source of state, Federal and local subsidy — to a permanent home.

Foster care has created its own class of unadoptable children. Many children first placed into foster care as healthy infants or toddlers become older and thus harder to place by the time they are freed for adoption. Mounting evidence also shows that most foster children develop emotional problems in the system that they didn't have when they entered it.

When foster care was begun in the 1960's it was intended as a social service for families who were temporarily unable to care for their children or as a way station for abandoned children who eventually would be put up for adoption. Children enter the system through their parents, who voluntarily surrender them directly to a local child-care agency, or through a court of law, which awards permanent custody either to a public or private, nonprofit agency in neglect or abuse cases. The agencies are then supposed to place the child in a temporary home — a private foster family, group residence or institution — while helping parents to solve their problems or attempting to find the child an adoptive home.

Trudi Smith

The warehousing effect: For foster-care agencies, maintaining children means maintaining funds.

A number of agencies across the country do try to move children quickly out of the system, but statistics show that the majority may not — and what was supposed to be a temporary shelter too often becomes a permanent one.

"Foster care began as a temporary solution to family problems," says Mary Talen, coordinator of postplacement services at the New York Council on Adoptable Children, a nonprofit advocacy group that helps to find homes for foster children. "What happened was that it got to be a lucrative business."

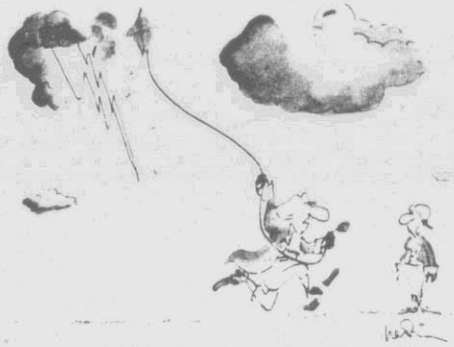
Observations

Spring ahead. Sleepy this morning? Blame Ben Franklin for promoting the idea of Daylight Savings Time to save candlepower, costly energy back in his day. So last night you pushed your clock ahead, investing an hour of rest to gain an hour of daylight. We're investing, too: in energy–exploring, developing, producing all the crude oil and natural gas we can. Costly? Sure, but so is imported oil. We like the good advice in Poor Richard's Almanac: "Plough deep while sluggards sleep." American soil still holds plenty of oil and gas to find and put to work.

"Nothing is certain," wrote wise old Ben, "but death and taxes." Almost as certain are those doom-saying predictions that never come to pass. Like that 1926 federal forecast of only six years of remaining U.S. oil reserves! Or the government's 1939 warning that America's oil would run out by 1952! How did we prove those forecasts wrong? By looking farther and deeper. The first U.S. oil well in 1859 had to bore just 70 feet into Pennsylvania soil; today we drill as deep as 5½ miles...and travel to the four corners of the earth and unexplored corners of America. Even the inventive Mr. Franklin might drop his spectacles in surprise at today's scientific energy search: Into orbit, for satellite photos; and deep into the earth and seas for seismic rumblings that it takes a computer to translate.



"Don't just stand there. Socket to me!"

Key to the rock. Like a kite snagged in a tree, oil sometimes is even harder to get than to find. Science again is the key: Special detergents, like kitchen-sink grease-cutters, "scrub" heavy oil from rock. We make "bubbly," too–injecting fizzy carbon dioxide to free light oil trapped in the rock. When the petroleum we strike is too gooey to flow by itself, we "huff and puff" steam into wells to thin it out. Or we use "fireflooding" (a technique Mobil pioneered) to ignite heavy crude deep underground; the fire "cracks" the thick oil and the resulting gas pushes the thinner oil to the producing wells.

"Time is money." Such special techniques, called "enhanced recovery," are expensive but worth it, since less than a third of America's oil can be recovered by conventional means. And piles of dollars invested in exploration pay off by delaying the day when America's declining oil reserves do finally run out. (In 1979, for instance, U.S. oil discoveries were the biggest in 10 years. Even so, additions to proved reserves replaced only 75 percent of what we produced.) More exploration and more enhanced recovery will buy more time to develop coal, nuclear, synfuels, solar...all the energy resources that do what Franklin stoves can't–power your car, calculator...and career. For America's jobs, economy...and security...require ample energy. Or as Poor Richard observed: "It is hard for an empty sack to stand upright."

It's a fact: The U.S. Geological Survey recently estimated that America could discover oil and gas equivalent to 190 billion barrels of petroleum–26 years of production at current rates.

THE FAMILY

Foster Care

According to the Child Welfare League in New York, children remain in foster care an average of four to six years, and if they aren't returned to their biological parents in a year and a half, chances are they never will be. The result, says Dr. Paul Mott, a former official in the Health and Human Services Department, is that "among the children in foster care on any given day, it is estimated that 50 to 85 percent will stay there through their majority."

The reasons why children remain in care so long are complex, but the primary one is economic. It pays for agencies to keep children as long as possible.

While these arrangements benefit agencies, they are destructive of children, who lack love, family ties and a permanent, stable home. Foster parents are often instructed not to form attachments with their foster children, but simply to supply room and board. Many children have been blithely bounced from foster home to foster home, often when their foster families appear interested in adopting them.

Elizabeth, a 14-year-old who is now adopted, lived in seven foster homes over the course of seven years. She describes her experience as "seven wasted years without a family, without friends, without anything I could depend on."

The other victims of the system are taxpayers, who spend some $2 billion annually in local and Federal funds on foster care. "We're talking about warehousing," said a member of the board of one child-care agency. "From where I sit, I can see where budgets are predicated, to one extent or another, on the number of children in foster care. And there is no adoption agency and no Governmental agency that feels its job is to put itself out of business. And if they lose foster children, that's exactly what they are doing."

While budgets vary from agency to agency, generally about one-half of the foster-care reimbursements pay for child care and one-half for agency upkeep. An agency's gross annual income per child ranges from as low as $780 for a child in a New Mexico foster family to $50,000 for one in a California institution for the emotionally disturbed.

Agencies often complain that stringent state laws about terminating parental rights prevent them from freeing children for adoption. But many agencies don't make adequate attempts to place children who already are legally available. The Child Welfare League estimates that one-third of the children still in care have been legally freed for adoption. A thorough study by the New York City comptroller's office in 1977 stated that more than three-fourths of the freed children were "deferred" from adoption or not listed with the State Adoption Service. It is illegal for a New York agency to withhold such information and still receive payment for the child.

The fiscal "disincentive" to encourage adoption, as one social worker put it, is aggravated by the fact that the determination of a child's adoptability or of a prospective couple's suitability is placed almost exclusively in the hands of a social worker. Decisions are often made according to personal prejudice and outmoded standards, one of which has been to consider older, handicapped and black or racially mixed children unadoptable.

But the New York comptroller discovered that more than half of a random sample of prospective adoptive couples specifically requested or were willing to take such children. (State and Federal studies also show that agencies often exaggerate or misdiagnose the handicaps of children in care.)

A Michigan juvenile justice has been one of the first to challenge agency decisions through a rigorous court-review process in which the court acts as an active advocate for the child. At least every six months, Judge John P. Steketee of Kent County conducts review hearings for each child under the court's jurisdiction to prod the custodian agencies into finding the child an adoptive home — or at least the most permanent situation possible. In conjunction with the National Council of Juvenile Court Justices, Steketee has selected 12 diversified courts to participate in the program, called the Children in Placement Project, and will attempt to involve 25 others.

Several experimental agencies, such as Spaulding for Children, with branches in numerous states, are self-styled "courts of last resort," which specialize in the adoption of children other agencies have been unable to place. Child advocates in many states have set up organizations that push agencies to place children and educate prospective couples in adopting foster children.

Many advocates have suggested that subsidy be cut off to any agency for any child remaining in foster care longer than 18 months.

Jayne Kidney, a social worker at Spaulding's Michigan branch, favors review boards composed of private citizens to challenge agency plans for foster children. "That kind of review board is going to get more results for kids than anything else because private citizens are going to make life very uncomfortable for all of us social workers. And sometimes our lives need to be made uncomfortable." FW

PEOPLE QUIZ

Sports Fans: Do Their Dollars "Choose" Their Sport?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Men tend to downgrade female athletes, considering them invaders in what they like to consider males' exclusive territory.

2. There is much more to spectator sports for the sports fan than the mere enjoyment of viewing the event.

3. Sports hero worship is widespread among men and women of all ages and walks of life — and serves a valuable psychological purpose.

4. The type of sports a person is likely to participate in is apt to be related to his social class.

ANSWERS

1. False. This is not so, at least in the case of college-age men, as shown by studies at the University of North Carolina, where both male and female students were asked to rate female athletes on attitudes, appearance and personality traits. Findings: Female athletes were seen by male as well as female undergraduates to be "strong," "strong-willed," "leaders," "brave" and "healthy." Interestingly enough, men rated all female athletes higher than women did in terms of physical attractiveness, suggesting "that women are more critical of female attractiveness than men are."

2. True. In a study reported by the International Society of Sports Psychology, it is concluded from the findings that the intensity of the emotional response indicates that sports mean a great deal more to the fan than many people ever realize. "The satisfaction that the fan experiences at the end of each game, of seeing a conflict settled (regardless of which team wins), compensates for the permanent conflicts in the fan's own life...and this vicarious resolution of conflicts "may be the most important contribution that sports make to our culture."

3. True. A study of the how and why of sports hero worship, conducted at the University of Alberta (Canada), indicates that it is a significant symbol in both social and psychological senses. It was found that the sports hero helps people escape momentarily from what may be mundane, routinized life styles and affords them a chance to identify with a successful sports star, thus vicariously experiencing the kind of success they themselves would like but can never attain. Sports hero worship was found to be most common among adolescents. And it is noted that "the sports hero may play a significant role in helping to bridge the gap between adolescence and adulthood...because this is the age at which idealization is freshest and most impetuous."

4. True. This was shown to be so in the case of women, at any rate, as indicated by a University of Illinois study of Social Class Influence on Female Sports Involvement. It was found that team-sport participants tended to come from a more disadvantaged background, where the struggle for existence required the most effort. On the other hand, individual and dual-sport participants (tennis, golf and such) tended to come from an affluent background. FW

INTRODUCING QUAKER STATE'S LIFETIME ENGINE LUBRICATION PROTECTION PROGRAM.

Only Quaker State Guarantees New Car Engine Lubrication for a Lifetime. In Writing!

Now Quaker State, the motor oil refined from Pennsylvania Grade Crude Oil, announces the most daring protection program available in the oil industry. It's the Lifetime Engine Lubrication Protection Program, the only program to cover your new car's engine for as long as you own it.

This exclusive program is brand new. So take a few minutes to read the following. Once you do, you'll see just how much this program can mean to you. We're sure you'll want to take advantage of it ...and keep your new car staying on the road with Quaker State.

Q. Just what is Quaker State guaranteeing?

A. We're not only guaranteeing the quality of our motor oil, but we're guaranteeing that Quaker State will protect so well, if your engine is ever damaged because our oil fails to protect it, we'll pay for repairs or replacement of any or all of these parts: Pistons & rings, crankshaft & bearings, timing chain, rocker arms and pivots, rods and rod bearings, wrist pins & bushings, camshafts & bearings, valve stems & guides (grinding & adjustments excluded), oil pump, push rods, valve lifters, cylinder heads, cylinder lining or bore, distributor drive gear and timing gears or sprockets.

Q. What do I have to do to get this protection plan?

A. When you buy a new car, light truck or van from a participating dealer, you'll get the protection plan. To keep it in effect, all you have to do is follow these 4 steps:

1. Have all services performed by your new car dealer or other auto service center.
2. Have the oil changed according to manufacturer's recommendations, or at least every 6 months or 6,000 miles, whichever comes first.
3. Have oil filter and air cleaner replaced, and emission control system maintained, according to manufacturer's recommendations.
4. Keep all service records. These must indicate that only Quaker State Motor Oil was used with date and mileage indicated.

That's it. Now when the manufacturer's warranty ends, your Quaker State limited warranty protection begins...and continues for as long as you own the vehicle!

Q. What won't the guarantee cover?

A. It won't cover defects in manufacture, vehicles used in competition such as racing, damage caused by negligence, collision or abuse, improper installation, or engine parts not lubricated by motor oil.

Q. Suppose something goes wrong and I'm covered. What do I have to do, and how long will it take for me to collect?

A. All you have to do is notify Quaker State of a claim, by writing or calling collect. (Address and phone number are on the warranty.) Our claim representative will contact you within 24 hours. Provide the claim representative with a copy of your warranty, copies of your service records, and a statement of damage and repair cost from the dealer or any repair shop you choose. If everything is in order, the claim representative will approve the claim and make the payment.

Q. If I buy a new car now, and keep it for 100,000 miles or more, will this Quaker State Protection Program be good for that long?

A. Yes. Lifetime really means for as long as you own your new car—even if you keep it for a lifetime. After all, thousands of people are already driving over the 100,000 mile mark using Quaker State without this protection program. Now, you can do it with Quaker State and have this extra protection for as long as you own your new car.

Q. Why is Quaker State the only motor oil with a written Lifetime Engine Lubrication Protection Program?

A. We've been making quality motor oil since 1913. In all that time, millions of people have depended on our ability to help them stay on the road. All that "on-the-road testing," plus our own laboratory tests through the years, are all the proof we need. Quaker State has the confidence in its product to put our promise of quality in writing.

Stardom Sneaks Up on Actor John Savage

By Stephen Fried

Lynn Goldsmith/LGI ©1980

The chief tool an actor brings to his craft is his life experiences. With John Savage, we've seen primarily his unpleasant ones, as his most famous roles — the legless Vietnam veteran in The Deer Hunter and the failed suicide attempt-turned cripple in his latest movie, Inside Moves .— reflect the physical disasters he's suffered in real life. As a child he was stricken with polio, and five years ago, a near-fatal motorcycle accident left him in a coma for six months.

Curiously, Savage, 31, is caught in an actor's Catch-22. He plays supporting characters so well, he fails to grab the spotlight. Even though billed as leading man in Inside Moves, the film — the story of a rundown bar full of men with broken bodies but joyously alive spirits — is such that Savage again blends in.

Yet critics and film buffs have surely taken notice. "He's a marvelous, quiet performer," says Gene Siskel, Chicago Tribune film critic and co-host of PBS' Sneak Previews. "A gentleness and sensitivity charges his acting. He shows promise of the caliber of a silent film actor — which is the highest compliment one can pay because the best actors don't need dialogue, they can communicate silently."

Savage doesn't always see himself as so gentle, though. "I think I can be very selfish and inconsiderate without being aware of it," he confesses. And he seems oblivious to the fact that he's considered one of Hollywood's best players simply because he gives so much to those he works with. "I think I have a pattern of perfectionism about me so that at one time I'm egotistical and at another I'm humiliated or disappointed with myself."

That disappointment tends to pop up as blind guilt in conversation: "It's my fault Robert De Niro didn't get an Oscar for The Deer Hunter," he offers. "I didn't support him well enough."

Growing up on Long Island, Savage took to show business early. He had his own children's theater company by age 13 and made his professional debut Off Broadway the following year. He even tried making it as a rock singer during his teen-age years.

His national break came in the 1973 film Steelyard Blues. More noticeably, his recent film roles include the anguished cop in The Onion Field and the naive farm boy in Hair, while on TV, he played the cub reporter on the 1976 series Gibbsville.

Today acting is practically the sum total of Savage's life, although he also enjoys reading and water sports. His marriage, which began right after high school, recently broke up, but he still spends all his nonworking time in Cape Cod with ex-wife Susan and their two children, Jennifer, 12, and Lachlan, 11. "I love it at home and that's the center of my world," he says. "I'm still not sure what 'divorced' really means, but we're doing the best we can."

Savage is aware that playing too many unhappy sorts could typecast him. After he finishes his next film, The Amateur, the story of a C.I.A. computer genius whose girlfriend is murdered by terrorists, he hopes to try something much lighter.

"I want to do a rip-roaring comedy, something fun," he concludes. "Humanity is humorous, and the wonder of life can go either way. My characters are all in a state of wonder." FW

THE I.R.S. MUSCLES THE MIDDLE CLASS

Pay or Else! Dealing with Tax Cheaters

By Ernest Volkman

UPI

Agents seized Billy Carter's Buena Vista, Ga. home as collateral for taxes owed.

This week FAMILY WEEKLY continues its look at the changing direction of the I.R.S. The agency's powerful criminal division has been abandoning its pursuit of big-time tax cheats in favor of a war on the middle-class taxpayer.

Fortunately, not too many Americans have run afoul of the I.R.S. criminal division, a law-enforcement agency whose powers are only dreamed about by the F.B.I. and the C.I.A.

Consider: The I.R.S. can obtain detailed financial information from any taxpayer, on demand, without subpoena. It can conduct audits of anyone's finances, again without subpoena. It has unlimited powers to collect intelligence information on anyone suspected of tax fraud (the I.R.S. decides the suspects). Without court order, it can seize property for payment of taxes, the only known legal exception to the U.S. Constitution's Fourth Amendment ban against such warrantless seizures.

An encounter with such power can be frightening, as Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Oliver of Fairbanks, Alaska, discovered two years ago.

On August 2, 1979, the Olivers entered something of a climactic battle in their long war with the I.R.S. over a disputed $3,300 tax lien. While they sat in their 1970 Volkswagen, refusing to turn over the car to the I.R.S. so the agency could seize it in partial payment of that lien, the tax collectors took direct action. A half-dozen agents smashed in the car's windows with nightsticks and bodily dragged out the automobile's former owners.

Foolishly, the Olivers insisted that the I.R.S. had no right to seize their car without a court order. They were wrong — the law specifically gives the I.R.S. "power of distraint and seizure by any means," meaning that if you don't pay, the Government can take it out of your hide.

The Olivers were simply part of the new I.R.S. emphasis away from big targets in favor of a war against ordinary taxpayers. And more and more small cases that a few years ago would have been handled by the I.R.S. audit division are now being investigated by the criminal division. Here are a few examples of the kinds of targets on which the I.R.S. is concentrating:

- A major campaign against casino, restaurant and hotel workers in Las Vegas, which is the spearhead of an attempt to get at the unreported income of such workers throughout the country. The I.R.S. suspects widespread cheating on declaration of tips by such employees, hence the campaign.
- Another major campaign to crack down on independent contractors, especially fishermen, independent truckers, small farmers and other similar entrepreneurs. As part of that drive, justified by what the I.R.S. says is significant underreporting of income (although the Office of Management and Budget disputes the claim), the agency wants to subject all self-employed persons to withholding taxes.
- Harassment campaigns against certain categories of middle-class taxpayers considered gross violators, apparently mom and pop operations, certain doctors, dentists and small businesses. In some cases, these campaigns have strong overtones of a Gestapo operation. Last year I.R.S. agents in Idaho were putting chains and padlocks on businesses which did not pay their taxes on time, and, in other instances, they chained cars of recalcitrant taxpayers to utility poles.

The most disturbing I.R.S. operation is an ongoing campaign against the growing tax protest movement. I.R.S. agents have been involved in a major drive to infiltrate and otherwise harass a number of the protest groups. The agency has also moved against the groups' favorite method of protest — overstating number of dependents — by quietly passing a series of rules designed to cripple the method. These little-noticed rules now require an employer to notify the I.R.S. if any employee lists 10 or more dependents on a withholding form. They also require employers to withhold at the rate of one dependent if an employee cannot "justify" the number of deductions listed.

All things considered, it should be no surprise that according to an F.B.I. report last year, 74 percent of all threats and 41 percent of all assaults on Federal workers were directed at I.R.S. employees.

Such statistics come as no surprise to a number of Congressional leaders who have been getting complaints from constituents. One of the I.R.S.'s more severe Con-

Here Is The Surprise News That American Men And Women Can Collect From Social Security Starting As Young As At Age 30!

The Amazing Hidden Money Secret Of The Social Security Department!

Do You Know Exactly How Much Money You Have In Your Social Security Account In Washington?

By JOHN P. CLARK

WASHINGTON, D.C.—You may be cheating yourself out of big money benefits and services from Social Security and Medicare. And, you do not have to be over 60 or retired to start collecting.

Almost a million American men and women, starting as young as 30 years of age get Social Security checks each and every month.

But, no one in Washington, D.C. will write to you and tell you about these benefits, payments and services.

You must know about them; you must know how to apply for them. Then your checks can start to arrive regularly.

For example, has anyone in government ever told you how much of your money is already in the Social Security fund?

No. Even though the government takes the money out of your pay every week.

Would you like to know exactly how much you have invested in Social Security now, and how you can start getting every penny you've got coming to you?

Then would you like to know how to get the most from that investment including all the brand new 1981 Social Security payments and benefits?

Now you can do both. When you fill in the Official Form reproduced in this story and send it to the publisher, it will be sent to the proper government office. They will run a check on your account and then send you a report in a confidential sealed envelope. This report will tell you how much of your earnings have been recorded in your Social Security account year by year. There is no charge for this service, not even postage.

And, when you follow the simple instructions at the end of this story, you will receive a copy of a new book: "The Hidden Money Secret Of The Social Security Department."

If you think that you have to wait until retirement to start collecting your Social Security payments and benefits, this book will really open up your eyes.

Here are some of the little-known facts about Social Security and Medicare you will find out about in this book:

- How to increase the amount of your payment if you are already on Social Security.
- How to collect your share of the brand new Social Security benefits just passed by Congress.
- How to qualify for Social Security disability pensions at any age.
- How to increase your Social Security benefits.
- How-to report your Farm income for Social Security.
- How to make your whole family eligible for Social Security benefits, even your youngest children.
- How to replace a lost Social Security card.
- How to replace a lost Social Security check.
- How to get a refund if you have overpaid your Social Security taxes. (Studies show that two out of three people overpay.)
- How to figure out what your Social Security retirement payments should be.
- What papers do you need in order to file a Social Security claim?
- How ten million people who are only 30 years old, on the average, collect Social Security.
- Should you get a divorce in order to get more Social Security? (A lot of people already have.)
- How to get the special Social Security benefits that are only for veterans.
- How to get a huge lump sum Social Security payoff.
- How to make sure your employer is not cheating you on your Social Security.
- How to work and still get Social Security benefits.
- How to cash in on Social Security even if you've never paid a penny into it.
- How to get hospital and medical insurance for the aged.
- How students between the ages of 18 and 22 can get Social Security cash benefits.

It is sad to say that until now there has been no easy way for the average man or woman to find out about all these payments, benefits and services. Even though, heaven knows, it has been easy enough for the government to take your money.

Today there is a way, the brand new book called "The Hidden Money Secret Of The Social Security Department."

It is easy to read and easy to follow. Remember, it is not enough to qualify for Social Security payments, benefits and services.

To get your benefits and payments, even starting as young as 30 years of age, you must know how to apply for them.

This book tells you how to qualify, including all necessary names and addresses of the people you must contact, and even what to say.

Although this book can mean hundreds and perhaps thousands of dollars to every man and woman in America, it is priced at just ten dollars.

You can order this book today by mail without a worry in the world because it is a 100% no-risk offer. Start using it the minute it arrives in your home. If you don't find out exactly how to get at least $500.00 worth of new benefits, payments and services from Social Security and Medicare, return the book to the publisher who will return your money without quibble or question. You still get the confidential report on your Social Security account.

To order, print your Name, Address and Zip Code, and the words "Social Security" on a piece of paper. Also fill in the Official Form. Send both with $10 (plus $1 postage & handling) cash, check or money order to:

Liberty Publishing, Dept. SS-124
185 Cross Street
Fort Lee, New Jersey 07024

If you don't take advantage of your new 1981 Social Security and Medicare benefits, payments and services, you are only cheating yourself since you have already paid for them.

The I.R.S.

Wide World

Sen. Paul Laxalt: The I.R.S. is "running roughshod over taxpayers."

gressional critics is Senator Paul Laxalt of Nevada. "The high-handed bureaucratic excesses of the I.R.S. are a national disgrace," he says. "Evidence reveals that the I.R.S. singles out areas of the country for special enforcement. It will go completely against Congressional intent and 30 years of past policy by changing its rules to squeeze out more revenue. We appear to be witnessing an agency totally out of control, running roughshod over taxpayers and making a joke out of our rules of law. The cases of abuse are easy to document and too numerous to count."

Especially upsetting to Laxalt was the I.R.S. campaign against workers in Las Vegas. His worst fears were realized last year when, during Congressional hearings on the I.R.S., he learned that the agency had assigned 170 full-time employees to its Las Vegas office, including 26 special agents (for comparison, note that Los Angeles, with a taxpayer population over 10 times as large as that of Las Vegas, has 11 special agents).

That manpower deployment would be understandable if those I.R.S. agents in Las Vegas were investigating organized crime connections in the city, or other such worthwhile targets. Instead, Laxalt discovered, the I.R.S. manpower has been unleashed largely to investigate busboys, waiters and other such low-ranking taxpayers whose combined salaries pale beside the take of just one casino on a busy night.

But the pattern is unmistakable: targeting the little taxpayers while the big targets remain unmolested. It is a pattern that is being repeated throughout the country, and I.R.S. agents privately concede that the pattern is no accident. "It's a penny-ante game," says one agent. "What happened was that once the I.R.S. decided to get out of the business of prosecuting the biggies, they went after people further down the ladder. Now, part of the reason is cost — to go after a really big evader, somebody protected by good lawyers and accountants — it will run the Government about $50,000 just to bring the case.

"All right," he continues, "so you won't get the kind of results in terms of money if you go after middle-class people, but you can make that up in volume; nobody in the middle class is going to be a million-dollar tax case, but if you go after a lot of smaller cases, it starts to add up. Keep in mind the political factor, also: The way the I.R.S. gets its money from Congress is to go there and say, 'Look, we recovered so and so amount of dollars of each dollar you gave us. And you can recover money pretty easily from the middle class: they're in no shape to fight a tax case.'"

Still, despite the groundswell of middle-class revolt, the Reagan Administration thus far seems unconcerned. Administration officials insist that the tax revolt is a function of too-high tax rates, not the collection of taxes by the I.R.S. To that end, President Reagan is pushing his plan for a three-year, 30-percent tax cut that Administration officials are convinced will defuse taxpayer opposition. They are also convinced that lowering the tax rates will crimp the underground economy.

Perhaps, but that will not solve the problem of the I.R.S.'s priorities. For example, even taking the I.R.S.'s own figures, there is an estimated $35 billion in unreported illegal income flowing through the economy every year — a figure some authorities regard as too low. In any event, that still means at least $9 billion in taxes is denied Uncle Sam each year, and some of it isn't too hard to find.

It is hard to imagine that an agency whose cases once ranged from Al Capone to Spiro Agnew seems to be spending its time pursuing penny-ante tax evasions, but that's a fact. Clearly, a major reordering of I.R.S. priorities is overdue, but without a major push from either the White House or Congress (or both), there is not much hope it will happen.

"There's no question," says one former prominent U.S. attorney in a major eastern city who prosecuted a number of tax cases during his tenure, "that the major emphasis now [by the I.R.S.] is on the doctor who cheats $1,500 one year, $2,000 the next. And $20,000 dollars over four or five years is a big case, the I.R.S. feels. I recall I.R.S. agents as totally demoralized. They were being sent back on the street to work the doctor and dentist cases. These guys had been working the big people, the big connections. Once you've gotten close to the big people, the big violators, you are really doing something. But to be stonewalled, especially by your own agency, you just give up."

WHAT IN THE WORLD

QUIET, PLEASE!

Daily we are subconsciously — and often consciously — bombarded by noise from trucks, street repairs, radios. And we're paying the price. Perhaps silence is, indeed, golden.

As far back as 1927, noise was identified as "a slow agent of death," notes Dr. Lillian Glass of the University of Southern California School of Medicine. Studies repeatedly have linked noise pollution not only to hearing difficulties but also to insomnia, ulcers, high blood pressure and heart disease. As well, Glass cites Los Angeles and London studies that reveal a 25- to 30-percent increase in nervous breakdown admissions to hospitals located near airports.

What's the solution to this auditory assault? Simple: Buy earplugs. For most of us, the inexpensive variety will do just fine, says Glass, who keeps a pair handy herself. "Earplugs," she says, "should be even more commonplace than sunglasses."

SENILITY LINKED TO PARENTAL AGE

The new U.S. trend toward later childbirth may be reason for concern: Research shows that couples who don't become parents until their mid or late 30's increase the risk of their babies going senile in old age.

As reported recently in Science, Donna Cohen and Carl Eisdorfer of the University of Washington studied the family histories of 80 elderly patients with Alzheimer's disease (atrophy of the prefrontal brain areas), the most prevalent cause of senility in the U.S., creating confusion and memory loss in nearly two million Americans. The median age of the patients' mothers at the time of their births was 35.5 years; for the fathers, 38. In both cases, this is 10 years older than average for first-time parents.

Interestingly, several investigators have found a degeneration of brain cells in middle-aged persons with Down's syndrome (mongolism, another common disorder linked to late childbirth) that is very similar to the damage in Alzheimer's disease.

ONCE IS NOT ENOUGH

Recently, we reported on the Dani tribe of New Guinea whose couples, for some unknown reason, often abstain from sex for two to six years. Well, after reading that, Dr. Vaughn Bryant, head of the anthropology department at Texas A&M University, clued us in on the world's sexiest culture. It's the Mangaians, natives of the tiny South Pacific island of Mangaia. According to Bryant, the Mangaians have sex an average of 21 times per week.

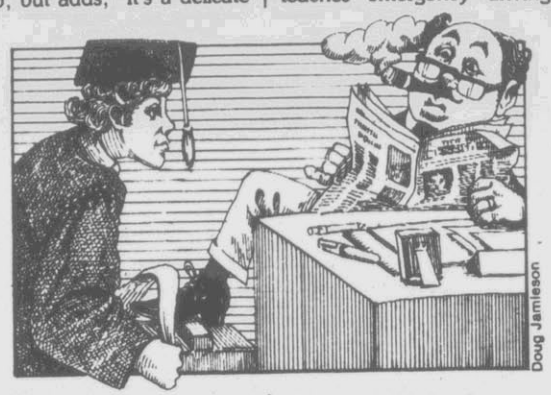
JOB OFFERINGS

For those who've recently traded in a diploma for their initial venture into the working world, here's advice on how to keep that first job from becoming your last.

"The main mistake people make on their first job is expecting to be given a lot of responsibility right away," notes Peggy Schmidt, author of the new book How to Make It On Your First Job. "But it's a mistake not to pay attention to the menial things you're given, the details, because initially that's what your boss is judging you on."

Schmidt says that eventually you may have to speak up, but adds, "It's a delicate line to do what your boss wants while letting him know you want to do more."



Doug Jamieson

Other tips include: Always follow through on your boss's requests and be sure he knows about it; show enthusiasm, even for minor tasks; keep an eye on the hierarchy of power, observing who's getting his ideas through and why; and learn to manage office politics.

"Office politics is no mysterious thing actually," says Schmidt, "and most students are better equipped to handle it than they think. Basically, office politics is simply learning how to deal with different people."

THE NEWS ON SMALL CARS

America's switch to smaller cars surely saves energy, but it may be causing a hike in accidents and highway fatalities.

For drivers used to large gas-guzzling vehicles, smaller cars are bringing some difficulties, observes Dr. Allen Cudworth, director of Liberty Mutual's Hopkinton Research Laboratory, which teaches emergency driving and helped develop seat belts. "Drivers are misjudging passing distances, and they can't see out of the cars as well — over hills, for instance," says Cudworth. "Also, guard rails were designed for bigger cars, as were curbed road dividers, which can flip a small car over if run into."

Cudworth notes that passive-restraint systems such as air bags and automatic-locking seat belts could cut road deaths, but that so far, the Reagan Administration has shown no signs of forcing the rapid installation of either on the ailing auto industry.

A PET BET

Wide World

They take up little room, never need walking and rarely make a peep. Are tarantulas the answer to your pet problems?

Robert Rosenberg, owner of Mineola, N.Y.'s, World Wide Reptiles (which also carries family favorites like pythons), says he sells over 1,000 tarantulas a year to zoos, colleges, museums and pet wholesalers. He insists the little buggers are not vicious and won't bite unless provoked. And even if they do get a tad frisky, he says a tarantula bite is milder than a bee sting.

"You can pet these things, let them walk on you. They have interesting habits," he notes. "Let's face it, it's definitely a little different from owning a dog."

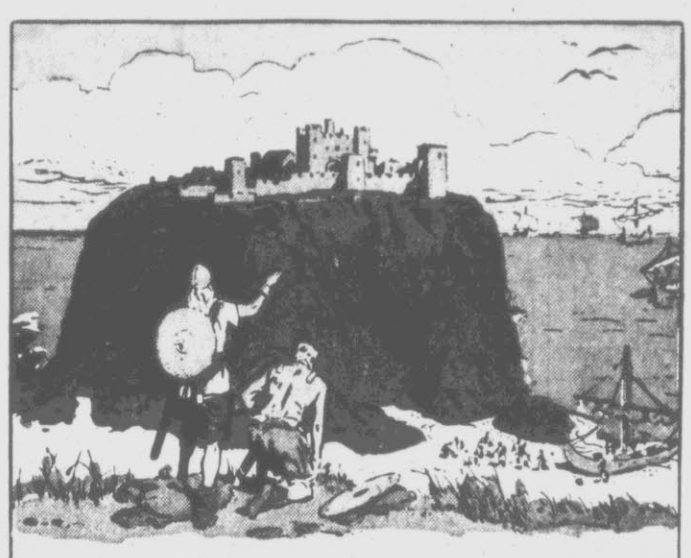
IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: VAL'S MESSAGE CREATES HAVOC AT CAMELOT: THULE HAS FALLEN AND MORDRED IS POISED TO INVADE BRITAIN. YET ALL BUT FRAIL AND TOOTHLESS KNIGHTS ARE AWAY AT THEIR ESTATES TO OVERSEE SPRING PLANTING.

"BLAST," KING ARTHUR SNORTS. RAISING AN ARMY NOW WILL MEAN FAMINE IN SEPTEMBER. HE PRAYS THAT MORDRED WILL DALLY. BUT HIS HALF BROTHER HAS PLANNED WELL.



ALREADY HIS FLEET SAILS FOR CALEDONIA, LAND OF THE PICTS, THE "PAINTED ONES." CENTURIES BEFORE, THE EMPEROR HADRIAN HAD PENNED THEM IN WITH A GREAT WALL ACROSS BRITAIN'S NECK. NOW, AT DUNNOTTAR ROCK, THE PICTS HAIL MORDRED AS "LIBERATOR."

FROM ATOP HADRIAN'S WALL HE SCANS THE COUNTRYSIDE WITH THE PICTISH CHIEF. "HELP ME CONQUER CAMELOT," MORDRED PROMISES, "AND ALL THIS SHALL BE YOURS." AT ONCE THE DYE-POTS COME FORWARD, AND THE PICTS DAUB THEIR SKIN WITH BATTLE BLUE.

THEY SWOOP DOWN ON YORK. THE OLD ROMAN TOWN CAN OFFER NO RESISTANCE, AND MORDRED'S HORDES ARE CONTENT, FOR NOW, TO SLAKE THEIR BLOODLUST IN PERFUMED WATERS. BUT THEN COMES THE SLAUGHTER OF LINCOLN, AND SOON AFTER, THE MASSACRE OF COLCHESTER. VAL AND ARN CAN STAY AT THE FENS NO LONGER.
