House Reagan Blueprint Vote Poised

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, looking forward to House approval of his budget-slashing blueprint, crossed his fingers for good luck today and said of the anticipated vote: "wonderful, just wonderful."

The president conferred with Reps. Delbert L. Latta, R-Ohio, and Phil Gramm, D-Texas, sponsors of the measure, who predicted a victory of landslide proportions when the House votes later in the day.

Reagan, posing with Latta and Gramm in the Oval Office for photos, was at first cautious, crossing his fingers and, when asked if the administration would win the vote, saying, "I'll just settle. ..."

But Latta said "it's going to be big." Added Gramm: "The president's efforts turned our hard-won victory into a landslide."

"No doubt about it," Latta said. "We're going to have a unanimous vote on our side. I can't recall a vote of this magnitude on our side."

Gramm predicted that conservative Democrats would make a strong showing, and added: "I think you're going to see a philosophical coalition here willing to put the interests of the country ahead of partisanship. The American people are for the president's budget and we are going to show them an election works and that the Democratic process still works."

Earlier, House Speaker Thomas P. O:Neill Jr. had conceded that "only the Lord himself could save this one" for opposition Democrats.

The stage for today's showdown was set Wednesday when the House swept aside two attempts to boost spending on social programs.

That left a choice of the Democratic leadership's plan or a modified Reagan program that would outline deep cuts in social programs, accelerated defense spending and a three-year, 30 percent tax reduction.

By nightfall, the Democrats' alternative was likely to be gone, too, putting Reagan within reach of getting the first phase of his economic program through Congress.

The Senatetwas beginning debate today on a spending plan drafted by its own Budget Committee and endorsed by Reagan, and that version was expected to have little trouble winning approval in a chamber ruled by Republicans.

In the House, where most counts showed defecting Democrats giving the Reagan plan at least a 13-vote cushion, O'Neill was left to question not what the result would be, but the wisdom of it.

"The Republicans may be unlucky enough to win this one," the Massachusetts Democrat said.

He charged that Reagan's economic program could send inflation "through the roof" and push interest rates "into the high 20s."

QUENCHING THE CROPS' THIRST . . . was over .12 inch of rain that fell on Pitt County Thursday. The precipitation, the first recorded since April 24, when .05 inch of rain skimmed the area, brought slight, although welcome relief to thirsty crops and worried farmers. The corn in the county, like the plant in the photo above, is soaking up what moisture it can and relishing the respite from the hot sun and dry winds that have inhibited its growth. Senate Panel Endorsing New Food Stamp Rules

WASHINGTON ((P) — The Senate Agriculture Committee, committed to the food stamp savings sought by President Reagan, is endorsing tightened eligibility requirements designed to cut 1 million recipients from the program.

The committee also agreed to deny food stamps to striking workers.

"We hope to cut out a million people and reduce benefits for millions more," Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said in support of the reduced eligibility standards.

Dole, chairman of the Agriculture subcommittee on nutrition, and Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the panel's ranking Democrat, made Reagan's eligibility standards part of a compromise food stamp package they put before the full committee Wednesday.

Still facing the qommittee are proposals to put a lid on the amount of money the government can spend each year on food stamps and whether families with children receiving free school lunches should have their food stamp allotments reduced by the value of those lunches.

Lengthy caucuses of Republicans and Democrats on the committee early Wednesday produced what Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the committee chairman, called "a high degree of agreement" on many of the changes for the food stamp program.

But general eligibility standards were not among the issues settled, Helms said. He had proposed even deeper reductions in program participation to more than double the savings sought by Reagan.

"There shouldn't be any illusions about what's going to happen to the program," Dole said. "It's going to be cut. It should be cut. ... However, there are a few areas where I think savings can be achieved in ways which would have a less harmful effect on low-income Americans."

White House budget director David A. Stockman and Agriculture Secretary John R. Block have said the administration does not support congressional efforts to accomplish the same or greater spending cuts in ways different from those Reagan recommended.

Reagan called for cuts earlier this year totaling $1.8 billion in the 1982 food stamp budget. Estimates made by the Congressional Budget Office, upon which Congress relies in making its spending decisions, placed the needed reductions at $1.46 billion. Dole says the compromise would save $1.6 billion while congressional figures estimate the Helms' bill would slash nearly $3.4 billion.

"This committee must respond to what is really a public outcry for fundamental reform," Helms said. "It's imperative that this committee consider reductions beyond those recommended by the administration."

Good Water Supply For County Despite Drought

By SUE FERNALD
Reflector Staff Writer

Water supplies in Pitt County and surrounding areas are holding out fine under the dry conditions, according to several town representatives.

Charles Horne of Greenville Utilities said that Greenville is currently pumping "six-to-six-and-a-half million gallons a day from the river and two-and-a-half-to-three million gallons from the deep wells, totalling eight-and-a-half-to-nine million gallons per day." However, according to Horne, the wells are being short pumped because the commission doesn't want to draw any more ground water than necessary.

The city is planning for the future says Horne, a new deep well is now in construction which will be in operation within 30 to 60 days. "The new water treatment plant scheduled to be working by Fall of 1982 will take care of all of tomorrow's needs," he added.

TRAFFIC LIGHT TROUBLES

I ride a motorcycle and there are a number of pressure operated switches on stoplights, particularly on cross streets and left turn lanes, that motorcycles will not trip. What is the law on a situation like this? A person could sit there forever and wait, wasting time and gas. The left turn light on Arlington Boulevard and Hooker Road is one that's particularly bad about not turning green. I live near there and to avoid this light I have to go back down Arlington, all the way down Evans Street, onto Greenville Boulevard, and then down Hooker Road, wasting my gas. C.R.

According to Lee Murphey of Greenville's engineering department, most of the signals now have loop detectors that are sensitive enough to pick up both motorcycle and bicycle traffic and are guaranteed to do so. Some of the older ones, however, are not sensitive enough. These detectors operate on a magnetic field. When this field is broken by a vehicle it trips the light. Murphey says as the older ones are replaced, he hopes the problem will be solved.

A spokesman for the Greenville Police Department advises that persons knowing lights will not trip avoid those intersections. Otherwise, he noted, if the light does not change in a reasonable amount of time, it should be treated as a malfunctioning signal and the motorcycle rider should proceed through with extreme caution. "It should be strongly noted, though," said the spokesman, "that the rider is liable for any accident that should occur if he runs the light because he is breaking the law and does not have the right of way."

Rain Settling Dust In County

By MARY SCHULKEN
Reflector Staff Writer

Cool, steady rain — over one-eighth inch this morning alone — splashed Pitt County today, settling dust but only nominally quenching the drought-stricken crops' powerful thirst.

"The rain will help relieve the heat stress the crops have been subjected to," said county agricultural extension agent Rober Cobb, "but at present that's about all it will do." Cobb noted that he didn't feel the rain added enough soil moisture to plant soybeans or peanuts.

"It's very short-term relief," commented Sam Uzzell. "We possibly may have enough moisture to activate some corn herbicides but I doubt don't think we have enough for planting soybeans and peanuts."

According to Greenville Utilities' water plant, the area received .12 inch of precipitation by 10 a.m. The last rainfall measured by the station was on April 24, when .05 inch fell. Only .78 inch was recorded during the entire month of April.

"Any amount is better than what we've had," commented county extension chairman Leroy James. "The crops looked better this morning after the little bit we had last night. The dust is settled and the corn and soybeans looked revived to me."

The drought's miseries now extend to livestock producers, particularly cattle and dairymen, who find themselves confronted with short hay and solid feed supplies.

"Last year's drought gave us poor pasture conditions to begin with," explained Mike Regans, county livestock agent. "Now, a few beef producers find themselves in the situation of cutting small grain (barley and oats) for solids."

Regans added that the corn crop, off to a less-than-auspicious start, could hurt both beef and dairy producers who depend heavily on corn for feed. "This rain today may help the corn some, but it's not what we need — we need a lot more.

"Also, this time of year we are planting the summer annuals, millet, for example, and we'll need soil moisture for germination and growth," noted the livestock agent.

The temperature at 8 a.m. today was 52 degrees Fahrenheit. The high yesterday stood at 85 degrees and the low at 50 degrees. The level of the Tar River at 8 a.m. was 4.1 feet on the National Weather Service Gauge.

The National Weather Service forecast calls for rain ending late today, with partly cloudy skies and cool temperatures Friday. More rain is predicted for Sunday or Monday.

Syrian Armor Is Said Beyond Israel 'Line'

By FAROUK NASSAR
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syria moved some 4,000 troops in two armored brigades past Israel's "red-line" in Lebanon Wednesday, Lebanese government sources reported.

They said the Syrian troops and tanks were taking up positions in Sehmor and Yehmor in the western flank of Lebanon's Bekaa Valley and in Kfar Tibnit, just eight miles north of Israel's northernmost town of Metulla.

There was no independent confirmation of the report, which, if accurate, would put Syria's most forward positions in southern and eastern Lebanon 12 miles beyond the "red line" Israel drew for Syria's military activity and presence in Lebanon five years ago.

The reports of troop movements came as American and Soviet envoys began trying to defuse the latest Middle East crisis.

The sources said the Syrian troops in tanks and armored car were deploying in the three towns south of the 25-mile-long Zaharani River "red line."

The sources said this was the first time the Syrians had punched so deep into southern Lebanon since they intervened in 1976 to snuff out Lebanon"s Moslem-Christian civil war.

Israel has frequently warned Syria would risk war with the Jewish state if Syria's troops crossed the red line.

Syria staged war games on its own territory Wednesday to show that its forces are "continously ready to confront Israel at any time," the official SANA news agency said in Damascus, the Syrian capital.

Israeli warplanes, meanwhile, streaked over Syrian surface-to-air missile batteries in the Bekaa Valley Wednesday for the first time since Syria deployed the Soviet-made missiles there last week. An Associated Press reporter in the valley said no missiles were fired at the planes overhead.

Syria moved the SAM-6 and SAM-2 missiles into Lebanon after Israeli jets shot down two Syrian helicopter gunships attacking pro-Israeli Christian militiamen around the embattled Christian city of Zahle.

Israel demanded Syria remove the missiles, claiming they restrict Israeli air strikes on Palestinian guerrilla positions in southern Lebanon.

Israel contends the missile deployment violated a secret 1976 agreement with Syria that allowed Israeli pilots freedom of the skies over Lebanon in exchange for non-interference in Syrian policing of the armistice that ended Lebanon's 1975-76 civil war between rightist Christians and an alliance of leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas.

Syria denied the existence of such an agreement and refused to withdraw the missiles.

The missile problem "must be solved," Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin said in an interview published Wednesday in the Israeli newspaper Maariv.

"If a solution is not found one way, it will be found another way," he said, apparently threatening military action if diplomatic efforts fail.

New Equipment

Dick Flye, district commercial manager here for Carolina Telephone, said a newly-installed computerized digital switching system began operations today on Hooker Road.

"This new installation will provide an additional 1,024 lines to serve our new customers in certain areas and our customers who want the optional features it makes available," Flye said.

He pointed out that the optional calling features include: speed calling, call forwarding; call waiting; three-party conference; directory number transfer; subscriber identified number assignment; and warm line.

Flye said similar digital switching equipment was installed at the Fifth Street office last year at a cost of some $1.1 million. The new Hooker Road installation cost about $603,000, he added.

"Digital transmission is a revolutionary concept and takes advantage of the best features of computer technology, including speed, miniaturization and reliability," the spokesman said.

Dear Abby

Student's Teacher Untrained In 'Special' Education

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I am a very confused and hurting 14-year-old girl. I became very much attracted to my teacher, who is 28 and divorced. I felt a special kind of love for her, and when I told her so, she looked puzzled and frightened and I could tell she didn't have any special feelings for me. She didn't come right out and say so, but I knew that's how she felt.

Abby, she was the only person I could talk to about sex and drugs and boys, but when I told her about my special feelings for her, she turned me off and cut the conversation short.

I still have so many questions I need answers to. For one thing, some boys are pressuring me for sex.

Should I keep hoping for a special relationship with my teacher, or try to forget my feelings for her? Please help me.

HURTING

DEAR HURTING: Don't hope for a "special relationship" with your teacher. She turned you off because she sensed your attraction to her and felt threatened by it.

You desperately need someone to talk to, so please give your school counselor a chance. A counselor is trained to answer all your questions, and can explain those "special feelings" you have for your teacher. It's not uncommon for young girls (and boys) to get "crushes" on their teachers. But this, too, shall pass.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 72-year-old man and I'm as peppy today as I was 40 years ago and show no signs of slowing down. I'm married to a 62-year-old woman who would be happy if I never touched her again. I have been a faithful husband for over 40 years, but right now I would like to meet an older woman with a little life in her and I wouldn't care how old she was or whether she was good-looking.

Our neighborhood is full of widows, and not one of them has any zip left. I knew all their husbands and the frustrations they suffered. Please ask your medical experts why it is that women lose their interest in sex so much earlier than men.

STILL INTERESTED AT 72

DEAR STILL: I asked. And it's not true.

DEAR ABBY: We have four children (ages 10, 12, 14 and 15) and like most parents, we do a lot of driving. With the price of gas so high, we all try to car-pool as much as possible, taking turns driving groups of kids to their after-school and evening activities.

Abby, there are a few parents who never drive. They are either "too busy," "too tired" or it's "inconvenient." Yet they have their kids do the phone calling, knowing full well it's difficult to turn down your child's friend.

I've talked to other parents, and they feel as I do about these parents whose kids are always riding along with ours. Is there some tactful way to let these freeloaders know that they are taking advantage of us? We don't want to cause any hard feelings.

RUNNING OUT OF GAS IN BOULDER, COLO.

DEAR RUNNING: If you don't come right out and ask them to please take their turns at chauffeuring the kids, they might think that you a) don't care, or b) don't need their cooperation. Don't pussyfoot around. Let them know they are expected to do their share of driving.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from BETHLEHEM, PA., about a woman's insensitivity to her mother's suicide threat, touched me deeply. Nine years ago my mother — in a "middle-age menopausal depression" — did commit suicide. She never threatened, she just took her life without warning. It was a shock from which my father, my sister and I will never recover.

Consider this letter a plea to depressed, suicidal women and men to swallow false pride and ask for psychiatric help and family understanding. The best definition of suicide that I've ever heard is, "It's a permanent solution to a temporary problem."

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

You may not sleep tonight after I tell you this, but it's something you have to know.

For 16 years, I have conducted an informal survey among parents that requires a simple answer to a simple question: "Does your son or daughter pick up anything besides a fork?"

Some parents became quite violent. Two had to be sedated. A dozen or so reminded me they had served in the war. And here's the scary part. Of those queried, NOT ONE PARENT HAD A CHILD WHO FOUND TIDINESS A WAY OF LIFE.

Somewhere between boiling the pacifier and buying black towels, we lost 'em. I don't know where we failed, but we have unleashed upon society a generation of kids who think self-cleaning bathrooms have already been invented.

What most parents fear is that they will be considered incompetent for not teaching cleanliness. This simply is not true. My own children come from a good family. I use soap when I do the dishes. I don't wear a shirt the fourth day by turning it wrong-side out. I do not store Slushee cups under the gas pedal. I do not sleep on pillows that have no cases on them, nor do I drink milk out of the carton. When I saw my son's locker, didn't I pass out?

Some naive little fools think that low-quality air is the fault of too many automobiles and industries. Think about it. We started to note pollution the year this generation found out they had locks on their bedroom doors.

I resent people thinking that slovenliness comes from a mother who was too busy to teach organization. When my firstborn was just a toddler, before I would let her at the table, I'd say, "Did you wash your hands and face?" I never got an answer. Just a 24-inch tongue that came out of the mouth and like a street cleaner made a path, bordered on the north by a nose, east and west by cheeks, and on the south by a chin.

I lost ground every day after that.

I hate to go whining to the government every time there is a problem, but perhaps a Child Neatness Agency could be established to set up some health standards.

Yes, the real problem today is not the threat of UFOs bringing alien people from another planet to earth. It's how are we going to find them in all this mess after they've landed.

Missile Talks Ahead

Secretary Of State Alexander M. Haig has told the foreign ministers of NATO that our nation expects to begin talks with the Soviets this year on the limitation of medium-range nuclear missiles based in Europe.

Secretary Haig's announcement apparently answers some European concern about the missile talks.

The United States has plans for deploying 572 medium-range missiles with nuclear warheads in Europe by 1983 unless there is an agreement on arms control by then. There is growing concern in some European countries about the placement of the missiles there.

Of course there is no question that the western allies have to keep up with the Soviets in the development and placing of nuclear weapons. To do anything else would be foolhardy.

Thus the only way to limit the nuclear weapons and the terrible destruction they could unleash is to reach some kind of agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of the missiles. There will have to be a demonstration on both sides that peaceful intent is, indeed, there and there must be guarantees through inspections that any agreement reached is not violated.

All that is not impossible, however, and it is good to see that the Reagan administration intends to proceed with the talks.

County Tax Collection Study

It makes sense in every way for the county to collect property taxes for the City of Greenville.

The Pitt Board of Commissioners and the Greenville City Council decided at a joint meeting to study the situation.

Certainly collection of city taxes by the county would simplify things for the taxpayer who would have to look to only one office. It is likely also there would be some administrative savings through such a plan.

The study is the proper thing to do.

THIS AFTERNOON

Not That Simple

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Any time overcrowded courts are mentioned, the suggestion is made that minor traffic cases should be taken out of the courtrooms.

Why treat a routine traffic offense like a major crime, especially when the penalties are pretty well spelled out, and a large number of offenders pay off without challenging the charge?

When the North Carolina Courts Commission was first put back into operation by Gov. Jim Hunt a couple of years ago, it was thought that administrative handling of traffic offenses would be high on the list of priorities for consideration.

But when that commission headed by State Rep. Parks Helms of Charlotte made its report and began filing legislatilve proposals, traffic court was missing.

It was not that the commission didn't take a look at alternatives. It turned out that nothing is ever as simple as it seems at first glance; especially when it comes to government.

Costly

The most serious problem was money. Setting up a new statewide administrative system with hearing officers, clerks, equipment and space in which to operate would obviously cost a considerable amount, and if the purpose were to help the courts do their work better, it would not be logical to strip the needed personnel, space or dollars from the courtroom budgets.

The purpose of the change would be to relieve judges, district attorneys and other court people of the pressures so they could better handle the impacts of new speedy trial laws and the fair sentencing procedures now going into effect.

Traffic cases make up a big part of the court's operation. More than 300,000 cases are handled in district courts. The total number of other cases besides traffic is about the same. Additional thousands of traffic cases are disposed of through submission pleas to magistrates or court clerks.

Under any proposal to remove traffic cases from the court dockets, about half the current case load would still remain in the courts:

those more serious offenses which threaten life or limb — such as drunk driving, reckless driving, excessive speeding, racing, ect. About 140,000 routine traffic offenses could then be decriminalized and taken off the court dockets.

But still, knowledgable people would have to handle disposition of those cases, the revocation of licenses, assessment of points, arguments over administration and such. Specially trained hearing officers, most likely working for the Division of Motor Vehicles, would have to be provided locally, and in sufficient numbers and locations to provide public conveniences.

Punishment

Penalties and administrative costs would still be imposed, but specialists in this field say that remedial training programs designed to make offenders better drivers and more safety conscious are much to be desired.

Having the new system directly linked to the motor vehicles operation would form a durable link betweek driver license operations, point assessments and motor vehicle registration.

A big point in favor of the administrative process, aside from relief in the courts, is that political pressures in traffic cases would be effectively eliminated. Often, an individual with points whose driving license is in jeopardy will hire lawyers and put pressure on court officials in an effort to escape judgment. A state agency would be insulated from such pressure. But, say some critics, that would also mean that unyielding bureaucratic administration of justice could produce

Reagan People Missing

WASHINGTON — It is not necessary to agree with Jesse Helms on everything, or even on most things, to avow that the gentleman is raising a good question: Why don't Reagan's people, he asks, behave like Reagan's people?

The senior senator from North Carolina is catching a daily lambasting from the Washington press for his temerity. To read the papers, you might suppose that the senator aspires toward a role as Richelieu to the Oval Office. At the very least, it is supposed, Mr. Helms is a frustrated secretary of state. One of the milder titles bestowed upon him would proclaim him the Great Obstructionist.

In the context of recent nominations, the senator might cheerfully accept that title. If he has no realistic hope of actually preventing confirmation of several appointees, Mr. Helms believes that his genteel resistance is serving an excellent purpose. He is reminding the president pointedly that last November's landslide was not merely for Mr. Reagan but also for the ideas Mr. Reagan professes.

By way of example, Senator Helms has objected to the nomination of John

JAS. J. KILPATRICK

Holdridge, a career diplomat, to become assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern affairs. Mr. Helms has not impugned the gentleman's character or challenged his credentials. His sole objection to Mr. Holdridge is that Mr. Holdridge is — Mr. Holdridge, which is to say that nothing in the record suggests that the nominee could be numbered among those known as "Reagan's people." On the contrary, there is every reason to suppose that Mr. Holdridge would keep Taiwan at a cool arm's length and snuggle ever more warmly toward the People's Republic of China. Says Senator Helms: "That is not exactly what November was all about."

For a second example: Mr. Reagan, for reasons that charitably may be described as mystifying, has nominated Chester Crocker to become assistant secretary for African affairs. Mr. Crocker is doubtless an estimable fellow, but if his views on African policy differ significantly from the views of Andrew Young and Richard M. Moose, those pillars of policy in the Carter administration, it will come as a gratifying surprise all around. Says Senator Helms, again, "we had hoped for something better."

If only Jesse Helms were protesting, perhaps the whole matter might be dismissed as no more than an individual senator's ego trip. But Mr. Helms is not alone. Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah is asking the same questions about the Department of Labor and the Department of Justice. Where are the Reagan people? Over on the House side, John Ashbrook of Ohio is asking questions about the Internal Revenue Service. Where are the Reagan people?

Mr. Ashbrook's complaint was well reported in a recent issue of Human Events. Last year Congress gave unequivocal orders to the IRS in the matter of tax exemption for certain private schools. The IRS was positively forbidden to spend one penny of tax funds in further harassment of these schools. Earlier requirements for proof of "affirmative action" were to be suspended. The intention of Congress could not have been made more explicit.

On February 2, Mr. Reagan nominated Roscoe L. Egger Jr. to become commissioner of the IRS. Mr. Egger's pro-

To the editor:

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners deserves a big hand of applause for its decision to budget money for the Fine Arts program in the Pitt County School system.

This past week has been filled with exposure to productions that we would not have had the opportunity to experience if it had not been for this fine group of people.

The production of "Annie Get Your Gun" was fantastic and those that attended enjoyed an evening of fun and entertainment. All of the preformances were presented to packed houses. The time and energy that went into the productions were tremendous but well worth it. The students involved might never have had this door opened for them without the money that was budgeted.

The musical program that was presented to the PTA meeting at A. G. Cox on May 4, is another example of the time and money and energy well spent. It was a wonderful experience to be so wonderfully entertained. The musical program at Cox is fantastic and opens a new world to so many children, children that might not otherwise know what it is like to be a part of such a successful group and bring such pleasure to others.

I was also pleased to see that "The Daily Reflector" covered the opening night of "Annie Get Your Gun". Rosalie Trotman did such a good job of the write-up and I am pleased for the people involved in the play that you saw fit to give them so much space. You did a good job, Rosalie!

To the editor:

Greenville experienced one of its highlights last week-end. An experience one should not have missed even if you are slightly inclined. The Rose High School production of "Lil Abner" was a magnificent display of what our young people can do to impress us all!

A standing ovation was not enough. All the words like marvelous, stupendous, talented, professional or unbelievable do not express my feelings to the cast and crew of this production. They thing that distresses me is that my family and I almost missed it, due to the lack of publicity! Where were the reporters and photographers? Where is the acclaim these folks deserve?

Members of the Rose High Drama Club, the only thing you should do now is schedule another performance for those who missed it and for those of us who would like to see it again.

Thank you, thank you!

IRA Hasn't NearedGoal

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Bobby Sands' death has united Northern Ireland's Roman Catholics against the British, but their fighting arm — the Irish Republican Army — is split into feuding factions and apparently no neare r to its goal of reuniting Ireland.

"There is a lack of political agreement and coherence within the struggle itself," said Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, the radical republican political leader.

Yet "there has never been more unity" among Northern Ireland's 500,000 Catholics in their opposition to British rule and domination by the province's million Protestants, she said.

The hunger strikes by Sands and three other jailed guerrillas have brought a truce in the squabbling between the IRA's three factions — the Provisionals fighting a guerrilla war in Northern Ireland, the Marxist Officials and the revolutionary Irish National Liberation Army.

But this has not given them cohesive direction. Nor has it advanced the cause of reunification or the IRA's ultimate objective of overthrowing the political establishment in the Irish Republic.

The Republican News, the Provisionals' weekly newspaper, said last week that the Dublin government of Prime Minister Charles Haughey represented a "ruling class which has more in common with the British ruling class than with its own working class."

"We are determined," it said, "to secure conditions in which all the people of the country will unite in a ... democratic, socialist republic. Nothing less will suffice. Nothing else will be accepted. Nothing else can make up for the deaths and suffering of our people."

Sands starved himself to death demanding that the British treat convicted guerrillas as political prisoners rather than criminals. Sands, a Provo, was jailed for 14 years in 1977 fog illegal possession of a handgun.

The Provos' carefully orchestrated propaganda campaign against this British policy of "criminalizing" the guerrillas has rekindled support for them among Northern Ireland's Catholics.

One such standing in the rain as thousands filed past Sands' bier asserted:

"To commit a crime is for personal gain. Bobby never did anything for gain, he was an Irishman. I don't see how you can put it down as a crime."

The Provisionals have pinned down 30,000 police and British troops in the six counties of Northern Ireland for more than a decade. David O'Connell, the guerrillas' former chief of staff who is now vice-president of their political front, Sinn Fein, said during the weekend they have the weapons, men and money to wage their "war of liberation" for years.

British intelligence officers estimate that they can fight on for at least five years even without mass support from the Catholic population. British sources say the guerrillas are believed to be short of explosives but have plenty of weapons.

Army intelligence estimates the Provos have no more than 400 hard-core members, but several thousand sympathizers provide them with safe houses in which to hide, transport and other support.

This support ebbs and flows, depending on how threatened the Catholics believe themselves to be. But tens of thousands have taken to the streets to support the hunger strikers. And 30,000 in the Fermanagh and South Tyrone district elected Sands to the British Parliament on April 9.

Many viewed the vote for Sands as a vote for the IRA. But the district was overwhelmingly Catholic, Northern Ireland traditionally votes along sectarian lines, and Sands was the only Catholic candidate.

The Provos claim to be the standard bearer of the generations of Irish rebels who have fought to drive the British from the Emerald Isle.

They trace their roots back to Theobald Wolfe Tone, leader of an unsuccessful rebellion in 1798 to establish

Strength For Today

AN ANCIENT FAITH

"And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham, his father; for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham."

Is there a message in these words for modern man? Yes, a very great message. The wells which our fathers dug have often been ruined by men who either hate the things for which religion stands or else are indifferent toward them. They destroy the wells from which come our spiritual refreshment by filling them with what they call new and irrefutable scientific facts, by heaping ridicule upon them, by declaring that religion is an outworn superstition.

When we find our faith failing or discover to our consternation that our religion has been destroyed, the thing to do is not to begin looking for new truths but to go back and dig again the wells that have been filled up. We shall find in the faith of our fathers the refreshment our souls need. — Elisha Douglass

No Decline In Interest Rates

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Put away those hats and noisemakers, everyone. The party to celebrate declining interest rates has been postponed again.

Since last winter many of the experts have been talking about a steady decline in interest rates as the economy, and the growth of the money supply, slows.

But the economy and the money supply haven't slowed, and some interest rates rocketed upward early this week to record highs.

For the first timeever, you could buy a long-term U.S. government bond and get more than 14 percent interest, guaranteed, for the next 30 years or so.

But buyers were still reluctant to respond, amid expectations that even higher rates might be available before long.

The administration of President Reagan contends that its economic program, if enacted, will help bring down inflation. And if inflation does indeed abate, interest rates should logically come down too.

Any lender would presumably be willing to do business at much lower interest rates if he could be assured that most of the purchasing power of his money would be preserved by the time he got it back.

But that kind of confidence right now is obviously lacking. Edwin Meese, one of Reagan's top advisers, acknowledged early this week that skepticism wasn't hard to understand in the financial community, since Wall Street has been "misled so often by government" in the past.

Financial leaders are pleased that the Federal Reserve has acted in the last few days to clamp down on unexpected growth of the money supply, which is widely regarded as the fuel that feeds inflation. But they acknowledge that this credit-tightening will mean more discomfort for many participants in the economy.

For homebuilders and people who want to sell or buy houses, it means mortgage rates right now approaching 16 percent, on average.

For the federal government itself, it means heavy costs as well. The Treasury is in the process of borrowing $6.75 billion this week, and it is having to pay the going rate.

As in most financial matters, there are two sides to this coin. For savers, the latest surge in interest rates means continued opportunities to earn relatively high yields on their money.

The maximum rate on six-month money-market certificates at banks and savings institutions is up to 15.35 percent this week, the highest it has been since last December.

Because of their sudden sharp jump, these MMCs can boast for the first time since last fall a yield advantage over the money-market mutual funds. The average yield offered by money funds in the last week of April was 14.2 percent, according to Donoghue's Money Fund Report of Holliston, Mass.

Money-fund yields can be expected to catch up sooner or later with the recent rise in rates. But there is typically a lag, since the average security in the funds' portfolio has about 30 days to run before it matures.

The Federal Reserve's discount rate is a record 14 percent. The bank prime lending rate hit 19 percent Monday, and some say it may be headed for a challenge of the peak of 21½ percent it reached late last year.

The suddenness of these developments has demonstrated once again how chancy the business of predicting interest rates can be. But it has certainly done nothing to damage the reputation of Henry Kaufman, economist at the investment banking firm of Salomon Brothers, who is one of the nation's best known forecasters.

On April 22, Kaufman said in a speech to the National Press Club that widespread expectations of a slowing economy and declining interest rates were off the mark. "It is difficult to say how high interest rates will go," he asserted then, "but it is safe to say they will go very much higher than the levels prevailing currently."

Reluctant To Testify In Molestation Cases

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A district attorney prosecuting Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood on charges of molesting a young girl says parents of other children allegedly abused by the former prisoner of war are reluctant to testify at his trial.

Onslow County District Attorney William H. Andrews said Wednesday he told the court about several other alleged child-molestation instances involving Garwood, who on Feb. 8 became the only Vietnam-era soldier convicted of collaborating with the enemy.

But Andrews said the parents are reluctant to testify when Garwood's sex trial begins next Monday in Superior Court for fear of involving their children.

Garwood, 35, is charged with committing a sexual offense with the 7-year-old daughter of a friend while he was taking her home.

"The court ordered me to give it the exact time, location and date of any other sex offenses involving Garwood that the state might introduce at the trial," Andrews said. "I gave them some information on several other offenses in which children apparently were the victims."

Garwood surrendered Tuesday to Onslow County authorities and posted $10,000 bond on charges of first-degree sexual offense, attempted rape, attempted first-degree sexual offense and taking indecent liberties with a minor. He has pleaded innocent to all charges.

If convicted, Garwood could be sentenced to life in prison.

Garwood returned to the United States in 1979 after 14 years in Vietnam. He was arrested and charged with two of the sex counts in August 1980. A grand jury then indicted him on those two charges and added the other two counts in February.

an independent republic, and the rebels who proclaimed that republic in the 1916 Easter Rising in Dublin.

The Easter Rising was crushed, and the IRA fought the British in 1919-21 to win home rule. Ireland was partitioned in 1922, with the Catholic South becoming the semi-independent Irish Free State and the North remaining in the United Kingdom to provide a haven for the Protestants whose ancestors had been encourage to migrate to Ireland. Then the IRA fought a civil war against its former comrades who settled for less than a united, completely independent Ireland.

The Irish Free State became an independent republic in 1937 and quit the British Commonwealth in 1949. But the passions of the civil war still divide Irishmen. The IRA is outlawed in republic as well as in Northern Ireland.

Most southerners do not support the Provos' bomb-and-bullet reunification campaign, but they bitterly resent what they consider the artificially created statelet in the North. They have considerable sympathy for the guerrillas because of their fight for the cherished Irish dream of becoming a whole nation again.

hardships for individuals who need special consideration.

Experts reviewing these various considerations suggested to the Courts Commission that exhaustive, detailed study should be made before such a far-reaching change is proposed; and that is just what Helms and his group decided to do.

fessional credentials were superb — a certified public accountant, Price-Waterhouse, all the rest. But on this sensitive issue of the private schools — an issue of surpassing importance to Mr. Reagan's Christian fundamentalist supporters — has Mr. Egger functioned as one of Reagan's people? No, indeed. On the contrary, both the IRS and the Tax Division of the Justice Department appear to be pursuing precisely those Jimmy Carter policies that Mr. Reagan has opposed and the Congress has prohibited.

Who's minding the store? Absorbed as he is in his economic package, Mr. Reagan cannot reasonably be expected to keep an eye on every little thing. But Senator Helms is exactly right in pressing for changes that will see Reagan people vigorously pursuing Reagan policies. The senator will lose the pending individual battles, but his flanking forays may yet win the war.

Ship Collision Is Unexplained

By R.D. GERSH
Associated Press Writer

PORTSMOUTH (AP) — Hellenic Carrier helmsman Mahfooz Hussain wheeled the cargo ship a hard left, but the enveloping fog belched out a larger vessel off to the right and the two collided with a gashing of hulls.

"Chief officer told me hard aport. The chief officer was looking at radar. Ship was coming from starboard side. After two minutes, ships were like this," Hussain said, brushing his hands together to describe the Wednesday morning accident off Virginia's Cape Henry.

"I never looked. Too much fog. My boatswain couldn't look. Too much fog," the 32-year-old Pakistani seaman said.

The 471-foot Hellenic Carrier, of Greek registry, and the 870-foot Lash Atlantico, a U.S. Prudential Lines cargo ship, emerged from the 6:50 a.m. collision with gaping cuts in their hulls but were able to limp into port under their own power.

The Atlantico made it to Newport News Shipbuilding, and the Hellenic Carrier moored at a Norfolk pier for a detailed damage inspection today.

There has been no official explanation for the collision. The Coast Guard began its investigation with the first crewmen to reach land Wednesday, leading up to a formal hearing.

Two Hellenic Carrier seamen received minor injuries — a sprained ankle and a cut leg.

Twenty-eight of the Greek vessel's 31 crewmen spent a rough two hours in lifeboats lashed to the side of the ship before the bulk carrier Eastern Saga, out of Hong Kong, plucked them out of the choppy waters 25 miles southeast of Cape Henry.

Atta Mohmmed, who was in his cabin when the accident occurred, said he could see the "ship slowly going down, some cargo coming out," as he sat in the life raft.

"When I was in the water, the ships was still together," until the American vessel pulled astern and away, the 25-year veteran of the Pakistani Navy said.

The life raft came perilously close to the turning propellers, Mohmmed, 57, said, but they cut the ropes in time and "we have good luck."

Eight of the crewmen rejoined the captain, first officer and chief engineer still aboard the Hellenic Carrier to help sail the ship in.

The other 20 Pakistani and Greek seaman were taken aboard the U.S. Navy destroyer Spruance, which had been diverted from operations 50 miles away, for the trip to port. They made it in about 6:15 p.m.

A search and rescue drill had been scheduled aboard the Spruance that afternoon.

"We fed them, gave them cleaner clothes and treated the injured," said Spruance skipper Capt. Richard Hayes. "They were scared. Most of their clothes were soaked with grease and oil...The first one aboard asked for a cigarette."

Hayes described the fog lying on the Atlantic as "thick enough I could not see the bow of the ship. We were a mile away before we saw them huddled on the quarterdeck of the Eastern Saga."

The collision left some 8,000 gallons of diesel fuel oil on the Atlantic, but Coast Guard Petty Officer Fred Maldonado said the slick wasn't close enough to land to pose a threat. Coast Guard pollution control experts were standing by in case they were needed.

Initial inspections showed the Lash Atlantico with gashes on both sides of the hull. The Greek vessel had a large crumpled section amidships that extended below the waterline, allowing water into the holds and engine room.

Both ships were carrying general cargo and apparently had nothing hazardous aboard, Maldonado said.

The Right Thing

Tomorrow, former President Jimmy Carter will accept the eighth annual Harry S. Truman award on the steps of the Truman Library. There was probably a time when few would have coveted an award in Mr. Truman's name. At one point in his Presidency he had become so unpopular that a crowd of baseball fans booed him as he threw out the first ball of the season. Today, eight years after his death, he has become widely respected for his honesty and common sense. One close colleague summarized Mr. Truman by saying that in the kind of difficult situations when most Presidents ask, "What are my options?", Mr. Truman would ask, "What is the right thing to do?"

Senate Approves Paraphernalia Curb

By W.A. WERONKA JR.
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Despite objections that it raises "serious constitutional questions," the state Senate on Wednesday gave its final nod of approval and sent to the House a bill that outlaws the sale, manufacture, use and possession of drug paraphernalia.

The bill was passed over the objections of Sen. Bill Creech, D-Wake, who argued the bill should be sent to a judiciary committee. He said the constitutionality of the legislation is in question because of recent federal court decisions.

But the bill's sponsors, Sen. Joe Raynor, D-Cumberland, and Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, both responded that the Committee on Law Enforcement and Crime Control had studied the bill for six weeks and were satisfied that it was constitutional.

The bill passed its first vote 44-2, and the final vote 37-2, with only Creech and Sen. Charles Vickery, D-Orange, dissenting.

The bill classifies as drug paraphernalia such items as scales and balances, dilutents such as quinine, separation gins and sifters, blenders, plastic bags, hypodermic syringes and a variety of pipes.

It also stipulates a number of ways for courts to determine whether the items are being used as drug paraphernalia.

Several questions arose about how some items that are sold legitimately, in such places as hardware stores, could be shown to be paraphernalia items, and if the seller could be prosecuted if the items were used that way.

Swain said it would have to be proven the seller knew he was selling it for drug purposes.

Creech pointed out the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the U.S. District Court of New Mexico recently ruled that the model statute on which the legislation is based is unconstitutional. The U.S. Circuit Court cited violations of the 14th Amendment involving due process as the basis for its findings.

In an interview after the vote, Creech said the bill was "patently unconstitutional."

"Every law professor in the state that has studied the bill and responded to queries has said it is unconstitutional," Creech said.

Supporters added an amendment that eliminated a section outlawing advertising of drug paraphernalia. Swain said that was done to avoid constitutional questions concerning freedom of speech and the press.

But supporters maintained that the bill is necessary.

"I know we're on a tightrope about some constitutional questions," Swain said, "but we have to do something to get rid of these head shops that even give instructions about how much marijuana to put in a pipe or how to sniff or dip, cocaine, or whatever you do with it."

Sen. Helen Marvin, D-Gaston, said, "We have to do something that proves we are doing something to prevent drug abuse in our communities."

In other legislative action:

Terms

Another House committee delayed action on an amendment to the North Carolina Constitution that would double legislators' terms from two years to four years. The panel scheduled a public hearing on the matter for next Wednesday.

The amendment, introduced by Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, already has been approved in the Senate. It would require a statewide referendum which could be held this fall on the amendment.

Rep. Bill Hiatt, R-Surry, requested the House Constiutional Amendments Committee hold the public hearing.

"There hasn't been any public input on this bill at all," Hiatt told the panel. "I feel like we ought to give them a chance before we put this out on the (House) floor. I'm not necessarily saying I'm against this bill."

Courts

Two constitutional amendments aimed at relieving the case load in North Carolina courts were approved by the House Constitutional Amendments Committee. Both were recommended by the state Courts Commission and already have won approval of House judiciary panels.

The first amendment would allow utilities to appeal rulings by the state Utilities Commission in rate cases directly to the N.C. Supreme Court. Current law requires the commission's rulings be appealed first to the state Court of Appeals.

The second amendment would permit appellate court judges who retire early to be recalled in emergencies to serve in either the state Supreme Court or the state Appeals Court. The judges now may be recalled to serve, but only in the court they were serving before they retired.

S&L's

A bill that would provide a tax break for savings and loan associations cleared a major hurdle when it won approval in the Senate Finance Committee.

The voice vote came without debate and after Sen. Robert Swain, D-Buncombe, withdrew a set of amendments that had thrown the committee into turmoil over the bill last week and infuriated backers of the bill.

The amendments would have applied the state's intangibles tax to deposits in savings and loans, as they are now applied on bank deposits.

The bill itself would apply state income and franchise taxes on savings and loan associations in a manner similar to the way banks are now taxed.

The proposal is estimated to reduce anticipated state tax revenue by $7 million a year. The bill, already passed by the House, is now is expected to be sent to the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

John R. Jordan, chief lobbyist for the banking industry, said he would still seek to have the amendments added when the bill is in Ways and Means.

Automobiles

A House committee killed a bill sponsored by Rep. Howard Coble, R-Guilford, that would have required motorists to turn on their car's headlights when driving in bad weather.

The House Highway Safety Committee also killed a bill that would have estabalished permit requirements for those who transport mobile homes.

Snow Insurance

The House Insurance Committee defeated a motion to approve a bill that would require insurance companies to offer snow damage insurance on farmowner's policies.

Under the bill, the insured person could turn down the coverage by signing a statement to that effect. Bill sponsor Rep. Doug Clark, D-Duplin, said it was to make farmers aware of the coverage and to avoid a situation that occurred in Duplin County several years ago, when ice storms cause $7 million damage and many farmers were not covered.

The motion was defeated 7-6 and the bill was sent to a subcommittee.

Drinking

A freshman Republican, Rep. Austin Allran, R-Catawba, filed a bill that would raise the legal drinking age for beer and wine to 20. The law now allows sales of beer and wine to those 18 years old and older.

New Bills

Sen. Robert Swain, D-Buncombe, filed a bill that would require high-rise buildings built before 1975 to install a number of fire-safety measures over the next five years. The bill would require signs marking escape routes, emergency evacuation plans, smoke detectors, fire alarms, emergency electrical power supplies and other safety features.

Another new bill filed in the House would allow groups to solicit contributions at highway rest areas.

Rep. Doug Clark, D-Duplin, chairman of the House Elections Committee, filed a resolution calling for a legislative study into campaign finance and reporting laws.

A second resolution filed by Clark expressed concern over the present system of presidential primaries in the various states and called for other southern states to consider holding a regional presidential preference primary.

Rep. Bob Etheridge, D-Harnett, filed a bill that would require all able-bodied state prisoners to work.

Ask Early Test Of Competency

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — High school students would take the North Carolina Competency Test in the 10th grade rather than the 11th grade under a recommendation approved Wednesday by State Board of Education's policy committee.

The change wouuld affect 86,642 pupils, Department of Public Instruction figures show.

It would help school officials better plan programs for students who need help in math and reading and allow more time for remedial training, said Barbara M. Tapscott, chairman of the Competency Test Commission and a state board member.

"We think that this would be an important advantage," she said.

Since 1977, state law has required North Carolina students to pass the test in basic reading and math skills before they can graduate. Students may repeat the test as often as necessary to pass.

The graduating class of 1980 was the first to take the test. State figures show 85 percent passed the math portion and 90 percent passed the reading portion on their first try.

Ms. Tapscott said 98.18 percent of the high school seniors eventually passed the test and received high school diplomas. The remaining 1.82 percent received certificates showing they had completed graduation requirements except the test.

The concern most often raised about the test has been the need to give it earlier in a student's career to identify those with problems, Ms. Tapscott said.

Under the current policy of giving the test to high school seniors, many students in vocational educational programs are interrupted when they have to take remedial courses, she said.

"Remedial courses sometimes interrupt the very things they will need when they graduate from high school," she said.

The new policy is subject to statewide hearings if the full State Board of Education approves it. Officials then would seek approval by the 1982 Legislature, Ms. Tapscott said.

Board Chairman H. David Bruton said the change is "a good idea."

Gov. Jim Hunt, who proposed the original competency testing law, is in favor of the change, Bruton said.

Also Wednesday, the committee endorsed the idea of adding a writing section to the test, but agreed with the testing commission that more study is needed to find an affordable, reliable test.

Two Wrecks Investigated By Police

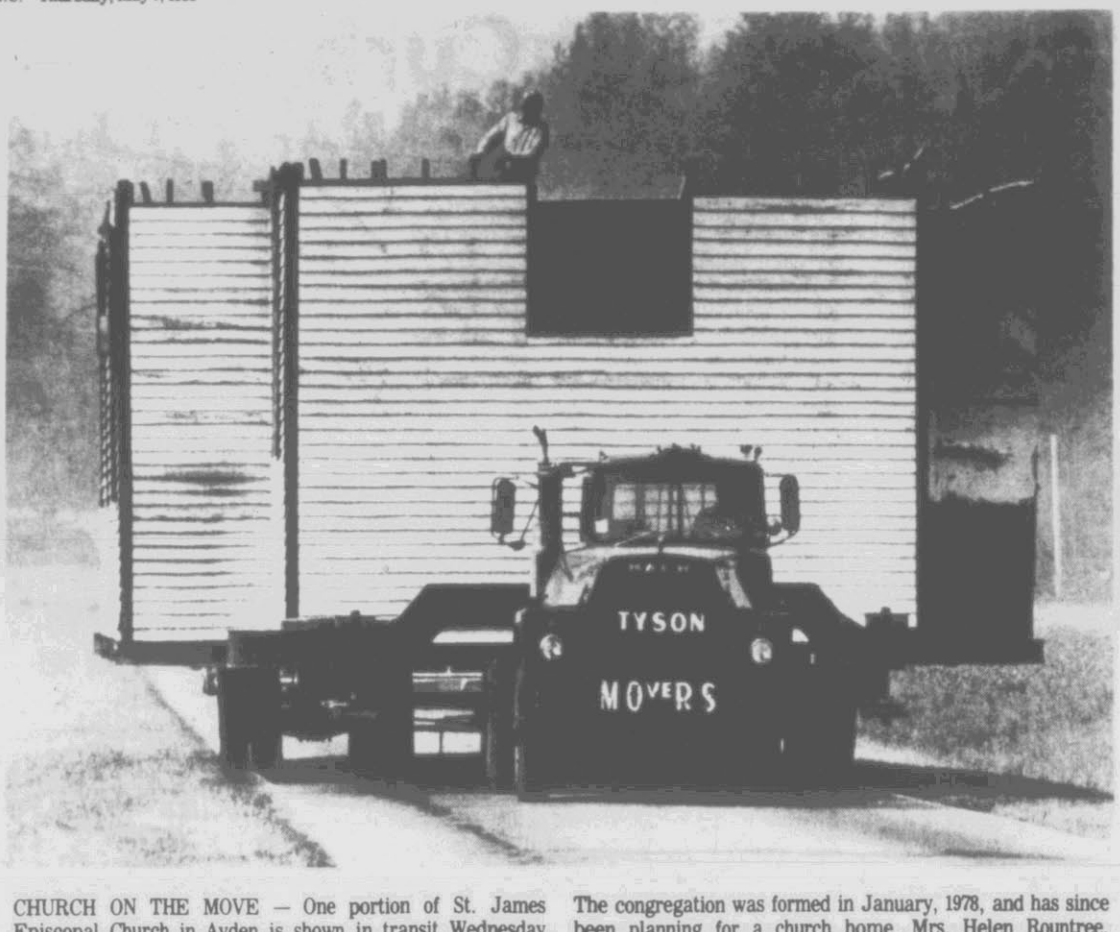

An estimated $2,250 property damage resulted from two traffic collisions investigated by Greenville police yesterday.

Officers reported Michael Richard Sprouse of 140 Aycock Dorm was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of a 5 p.m. mishap on Reade Street, 35 feet south of the Fifth Street intersection.

Police said the Sprouse car collided with an auto driven by Richard Earl Higgins of Wilson Acres, causing $250 damage to the Sprouse car and $500 damage to the Higgins auto.

William Voyles Heath of 351 Mumford Rd. was charged with failing to see his intended movement could be made in safety following investigation of a 4:45 p.m. mishap on Greene Street, three tenths of a mile north of the First Street intersection.

Investigators said the Heath car collided with a truck driven by Robert Emmett O'Hara Jr., of Shady Knoll Trailer Park. Damage was set at $1,000 to the truck and $500 to the Heath car.

CHURCH ON THE MOVE — One portion of St. James Episcopal Church in Ayden is shown in transit Wednesday morning along old Route N. C. 11 between Ayden and Greenville. The church building, which has been deconsecrated for several years, is being moved in two stages to Cherry Oaks Subdivision where it will be reassembled to serve as the church building for the congregation of St. Timothy Episcopal Church. The congregation was formed in January, 1978, and has since been planning for a church home. Mrs. Helen Rountree, spokesman for the project, said both sections were due to be in place at Cherry Oaks by late Wednesday afternoon, and that on Friday, a crane is scheduled to arrive to lift the sections into place. Claims N.C. Quake 86th In 246 Years

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Tuesday's minor earthquake was not an oddity in North Carolina — the state has had an average of about one earthquake every three years, a U.S. Geological Survey geophysicist said Wednesday.

Carl Stover said the tremor was the 86th notable quake in the state in the past 246 years.

"North Carolina has experienced a small but notable amount of seismic activity in its recorded history, with the western part of the state considerably more shaken than other parts," Stover said.

The latest quake, centered near the North Carolina-South Carolina border about four miles northwest of Hendersonville, measured 3.5 on the Richter scale.

For comparison, the 1906 San Francisco earthquake had an estimated Richter magnitude of 8.3, capable of causing widespread death and destruction. Scientists say there are 15 to 20 earthquakes of magnitude 4 in the world every day.

Tuesday's quake, which occurred at 5:22 p.m., caused no injuries and only minor damage.

Stover said the USGS recently finished a map of North Carolina showing seismic patterns from 1735 to 1977. The map shows the known dates, locations and magnitudes of the earthquakes.

The maps are designed for local, state and federal planners who want to analyze the environmental impact of projects, choose sites for power plants and establish earthquake insurance rates.

Six earthquakes since 1977 have been strong enough to be felt in North Carolina, the USGS reported.

The most recent before Tuesday's quake was a 3.0 tremor that shook Asheville on April 9. The earliest recorded earthquake in the state was on March 8, 1735, near Washington, N.C. No intensity was recorded.

Refuses To Reinstate

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A Superior Court judge refused Wednesday to order the state to reinstate a state jobs official suspended after he was charged with conspiring to misuse federal job-training funds.

Robert L. Hughes was suspended from his manpower planning post with the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development after a federal grand jury indicted him, state AFL-CIO president Wilbur Hobby and a Hobby associate, Mort Levi.

Judge A. Pilston Godwin Jr. ruled that the department would be disrupted if Hughes were allowed to return to his job.

Hughes charged in an affidavit given to Godwin that his suspension was designed to cover up actions by department secretary Howard Lee and Wayne Daves, director of the NRCD Division of Employment and Training.

He said Lee and Daves "have sought to protect themselves from criticism and responsibility for CETA (Comprehensive Employment and Training Act) mismanagement and misconduct."

Lee and Daves were defendants in the civil rights suit Hughes filed last month, requesting court orders to reinstate him.

Daves refused to comment and Lee could not be reached.

How's The Weather?

WEATHER FORECAST — The National Weather Service forecast for Thursday until early Friday predicts rain mixed with snow in Montana, Wyoming and parts of Idaho, Utgah, Colorado and the western Dakotas. Showers are forecast from the eastern Dakotas to northern Alabama. (AP Laserphoto Map)

By The Associated Press

Fair and cool weather is predicted for North Carolina tonight and Friday in the wake of rains last night and today, the National Weather Service reported today.

The precipitation will continue to taper off from west to east today.

Highs today are going to be in the 60s, and temperatures tonight will dip into the 40s. Friday highs will be in the 60s in northern sections and near 70 in the south.

During the night most of the state was dampened by some much-needed rain. Rainfall amounts in a few areas, especially in the piedmont, may have totalled more than a half inch.

Just before sunrise the rain had ended across most of the mountains and it was beginning to taper off over the foothills and western piedmont.

A cold front that moved across the state during the night combined with a weak low pressure system over Georgia to produce the rainy weather pattern. The front will move offshore today and allow a strong high pressure system to build into our region from the north.

As the high pressure sytem settles over the Middle Atlantic states tonight and Friday, a strong northeasterly wind flow will develop along the North Carolina coast.

The persistent onshore winds may result in some beach erosion for those areas that are susceptible to this problem.

For the past few days the erosion potential has been confined to the outer banks. It now appears that the risk will extend to the southern beaches at least through Friday and occur mainly near times of high tide.

A small craft advisory is in effect for the coastal waters and Albemarle and Pamlico sounds.

Temperatures this morning were in the 50s and 60s statewide.

Admission Test

Pre-medical students graduating this spring should register for the Sept. 12 Medical College Admission Test, a nationally standardized examination, as soon as possible.

Applications are also available at the ECU Testing Center, 105 Speight Building, ECU, Greenville, N.C. 27834.

Senate Trims Abortion Notification

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Opponents of a bill that would require doctors to notify a parent whose daughter is seeking an abortion stirred up enough support Wednesday to gut the bill with an amendment.

The amendment, which passed 24-23, would give doctors a choice whether to notify parents when the young woman is under age 18, is unmarried and is both living with and dependent on her parents or another guardian.

Physicians still would be required to give the young woman names and addresses of two state-licensed adoption agencies, the services they offer and information on possible complications and risks involved in an abortion.

Violators would face a maximum of six months in prison and a $500 fine.

Sen. Marshall Rauch, D-Gaston, a spokesman for opponents of the bill, proposed the amendment, which ended three days of debate on the bill and a series of unsuccessful amendments by opponents.

Supporters succeeded in delaying a final vote on the amended bill until next Wednesday.

"It (the amendment) would put in the hands of physicians (the decision) whether or not parents should be notified," Rauch said, adding that the amendment should satisfy both sides of the issue.

Sen. William Creech, D-Wake, who had voted for the bill earlier, agreed.

"People can die of tonsillectomies. People can die of abortions, even in the best of hospitals," Creech said. "The amendment would make it possible for all of us to have a coming together on the bill.... A good doctor would want to do exactly what this amendment says."

Creech was one of a handful of legislators who had voted for the bill Monday, when the measure passed 32-17, but who voted for the amendment gutting the bill Wednesday.

But Sen. James McDuffie, D-Mecklenburg, said he is not satisfied with the bill and charged that opponents "have yet to offer a piece of constructive suggestion for what we're trying to do and that's preserve the family."

And Sen. Harold Baker, R-Wilkes, said he doesn't think doctors would know enough about the young woman's situation to decide whether to tell her parents about the abortion.

Pitt's Water....

time, Horne pointed out some measures that would be taken in the event of acontinued drought. He urged the public to put saving measures into use all the time. "In the event of a shortage the greatest thing would be to appeal to the major industries to cut back during peak hours and to the consumers to cut out car washing and lawn watering unless necessary or to encourage them to do so during the night."

Farmers aren't receiveng water from the town of Greenville according to Horne. "The farmers would have a difficult time getting a bucket or tanker to the plants." He further pointed out that most seem to be using ponds or creeks for their planting needs.

Winterville at this time is operating two of the town's three wells, and has a backup water supply of 575,000 gallons. All of Winterville's water comes from underground unlike Greenville's system, according to Elwood Nobles, Winterville town clerk. "The water table is stable at this time, but may have dropped off a little, which could account for the problem with the town's third well," Nobles says. However, Nobles is optimistic. "If we can get enough rain for it, it will be OK." As for conservation measures Nobles noted that in case of a shortage the first to be cut off would be farmers. Then they would go to a public appeal to cut down lawn watering, car washing and so on. Nobles pointed out that water services provided for farmers are offered every year, it is not just in effect this year because of the lack of rain. Many farmers use the service for resetting tobacco.

Annabelle Heath of the Grimesland town hall says that everything is "doing very well." The Grimesland supply is holding up and the town's back up well is full. The farmers are not buying water, according to Heath. "Maybe they're using ponds and streams." The town has taken no action on the dry spell because everything is holding up well.

Robersonville is fortunate, according to J.S. Simpson, director of utilities. "We are real fortunate to be on top of a strata that's a real lake, about 400 feet deep." The supply seems to be holding, he says, and he does not forsee that they will have to cut back. "We have checked our table and it seems to be holding steady." So far, the town hasn't had any farmers to come in for water and they do not expect many to come as the tobacco setting season is just about over.

Simpson noted some developments in the Robersonville water system. The town of Everetts was included on the Robersonville water system a few years ago and the town is now in the process of taking in Parmalee to the west. "We don't forsee any shortage unless anything unusual happens," Simpson said.

Farmville is now in the process of lowering a pump 30 feet deeper, according to J.A. Wooten, director of utilities; however he said it is a routine procedure, not a reflection on the lack of rain. The town board also voted recently to let contracts for a new 500 gallon per minute well which has been in the planning stages for a couple years.

"We have let some farmers use the town water for transplanting tobacco, but it has been a minor thing," Wooten said. "We always encourage conservation especially in this drought time, although we haven't encountered any problems." Wooten sees no shortage for Farmville, unless something unknown happens.

Snow Hill is currently installing an additional well and all present tanks are full, according to Mayor Melvin Oliver. He said a few farmers have been using city water for spraying insecticides and for setting tobacco; however, no large amounts. Snow Hill is on the same strata as Kinston, so Oliver sees no problems ahead for Kinston either.

Willie Long Jr. of Williamston reports that water supplies are fine at the present. "I really don't see any problems here, our system is on deep wells. We've had no problems in the past and rain in this area does not affect our water supply." The town has been supplying up to 1,000 gallons to some farmers to spray their crops with chemicals but are not doing any irrigation. "As far as I can tell, our water table is refurnishing itself with no problems so far."

Depression In Caribbean

MIAMI (AP) — A tropical depression has formed in the northwest Caribbean and could develop into the 1981 Atlantic hurricane season's first tropical storm — three weeks before the season officially begins, forecasters said today.

The depression's strongest sustained winds this morning were 35 mph — four mph below the strength needed for it to become Tropical Storm Arlene.

The depression was centered about 75 miles southeast of Grand Cayman Island, which is south of Cuba, andhwas moving to the east at seven to eight mph.

"There is a possibility of slow development as this system moves to the east," said forecaster Ray Biedinger.

Although the hurricane season officially beings June 1 and ends on Nov. 15, tropical storms and hurricanes at times have occurred in every month except April.

Puzzled About Loss Of Water

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Monroe city officials say they are puzzled about an apparent loss of more than 1 million gallons of water a day from the city water system.

"We don't know where the water is going, but we are getting ready to check all the meters to make sure we don't have some error involved instead of an actual leak," said City Manager Jim Hinkel. "We are unable to account for 20 to 25 percent of the water we are processing."

Hinkel said the losses do not affect water pressure or fire protection.

The city was faced with serious water problems last summer when several leaks and losses were reported.

Maneuverings Delay Interest Rate Boost Bill In Assembly

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A majority in both chambers of the General Assembly has shown an inclination to raise legal rates of interest on consumer loans, but opponents of a banking industry proposal used parliamentary maneuvers Wednesday to postpone final House action until at least today.

Opponents of the industry bills won a short reprieve when House Speaker Liston Ramsey ruled in their favor, invoking an obscure House rule that prevented the House from taking a final vote Wednesday.

The delay came after Rep. Al Adams, D-Wake, failed for the second day in a row in his attempt to take out a major section of the bill raising usury rates.

The bill, passed in a somewhat different form by the Senate, covers rates on installment loans, such as are commonly made for new car purchases, of less than $25,000.

State law now limits those loans to interest rates of no more than 12 to 15 percent, depending on their size. The bill would establish new limits of 16 percent or, if higher, a limit that would float at a level 6 percentage points above the auction rate on six-month U.S. Treasury bills.

That formula would yield a 22 percent rate this week.

Also delayed was debate on a companion bill similarly raising rates for contract loans, such as 90-day notes, usually involving businesses.

Adams' major amendment would delete the 16 percent minimum limit, a provision that he said actually amounted to a "floor" below which banks would never allow their rates to drop.

The amendment failed on a 62-52 vote. An identical amendment failed on the House floor Tuesday by a 60-53 vote.

The bill itself won tentative approval by a 101-12 margin on Tuesday, but final House approval was held up when Adams pointed out that the title printed on the bill failed to mention one section of state law changed by the bill. The House approved an amendment fixing the title, and Ramsey ruled that such a change required a day's delay.

Rep. Roger Bone, D-Nash, floor manager of the bill, denounced the move as a stalling tactic and vowed to expedite action today.

"All we're doing is delaying the inevitable," Bone said.

Ramsey said House rules would prevent Adams from offering the same amendment a third time today, but Adams said afterwards that he had plans for still more amendments. "There are other forms that amendment can take," he said.

Opponents of the 16 percent minimum limit argued that it was unfair to allow rates to float upwards but not to allow them to float down when conditions favor consumers.

"I don't believe a one-way street is fair," said Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven. "Let's treat the people fair, as well as the banks."

But supporters said banks should be able to charge up to 16 percent, even if market conditions fall, and that competition would keep rates down. "I just have more confidence in our bankers than that," said Rep. Dan Lilley, D-Lenoir.

Chinese May Use Ports

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The Chinese may use North Carolina ports to export "millions of pounds a month" of textiles, lumber and chemicals to China, a State Ports Authority official said Wednesday.

George Young said he is "hopeful and encouraged" that the Chinese will use the ports at Wilmington and Morehead City to export goods from the United States.

Declining to be more specific about what effect the Chinese trade might have on North Carolina ports, Young said competition among various ports authorities for the China trade and the possibility premature statements "could backfire" and reverse the progress the state has made so far.

However, Young said the growing Chinese shipping contracts on American goods are "a lot larger trade and a lot bigger than most Americans anticipate."

He said Chinese officials also were enthusiastic during his seven-day trip to China to consult with government transportation officials about using North Carolina ports.

Young said his China trip, from which he returned last Friday, concentrated on shipments of textiles from North Carolina and surrounding areas.

Will Honor Reagan Guards

NEW YORK (AP) — Two Secret Service agents and a Washington, D.C., police officer who were guarding President Reagan on the day he was shot in an assassination attempt will be honored by the New York City Police Department.

The three — Secret Service agents Tim McCarthy and Jerry Parr, and Police Officer Tom Delahante — will be inducted into the department's Honor Legion, which salutes officers who "faced imminent death" in a dangerous situation.

McCarthy and Delahante were shot in the March 30 incident. Parr shoved Reagan into a limousine to get him out of the line of fire.

The three, who are the first non-members of the city's police department to be so honored, "put their lives on the line," said Honor Legion President Charles S. Scott.

Scott said each will each receive a scroll from the legion as well as its medallion and green, white and blue ribbon. The medal carries the Latin oath "Fedelis Ad Mortem" — "Faithful Unto Death."

Refused Appear For TB Care

MIAMI (AP) — The refusal of many Haitian refugees to show up for tuberculosis treatments poses a "grave threat" to other Haitians living in Dade County, health officials say.

A total of 104 TB cases, a fourth of all new cases in Dade County last year, involved Haitians, who have a rate of the communicable lung disease that is 40 times higher than that for other area residents, says Irving Mushlin of the Dade-Monroe Lung Association.

Haitians arriving in the Miami area are tested for TB and other diseases before they are released into the community, but many do not complete treatments, he said.

United Telecom Chief Cites Efforts

By TOM BAINES
Reflector Staff Writer

Community leaders and Carolina Telephone officials joined visiting principals of United Telecommunications Inc., CT&T's parent company, for a noon luncheon here Wednesday.

The United Telecom delegation, led by Paul Henson, chairman and chief executive officer, was in town for an afternoon regional shareholders meeting, only the second such meeting scheduled by the corporation outside its Kansas City, Mo. headquarters area.

Earlier Wednesday, press representatives gathered with Henson, Wayne Peterson, president of Carolina Telephone, and Don Forsythe, United Telecom's vice president-corporate communications, for a news conference.

Henson reported during the press session and luncheon that followed at the Casablanca that the Tarboro-based Carolina Telephone is the largest member of the corporation's United Telephone System, accounting for some 20 percent of its telephone business. Florida and Ohio are gaining ground, he said.

The United Telephone System, one of three groups comprising United Telecom, is currently the second largest independent telephone system in the nation, Henson pointed out.

It was mentioned that United Telecom is striving to become as strong in the computing services, distribution and other competitive telecommunications areas as it is in the regulated telephone industry. Involvement is already underway in the areas of fiber optics, solar power and energy management systems.

The chief officer said the telephone industry supports President Reagan's amended economic package, adding "we've got to get government spending under control" and "revise tax policy to encourage investment rather than consumption."

Henson related that in a monopoly environment, there is no pressure to pursue good cost control measures and there is a tendency to "build up fat." He said that in today's competitive environment, "other standards apply."

Peterson suggested that, "If any company is trying to get the fat out, Carolina Telephone exemplifies that."

The CT&T chief, noting that the company is "constantly cutting back," explained that Carolina Telephone has basic local services it has to provide and has no choice about the territories it serves. He said the only way the company can stay in the terminal business is to make a profit and if money is being lost in an area, "we might have to eliminate that segment."

Peterson mentioned that home repair services could be eliminated in some areas as the company changes operations "to meet the environment."

Carolina Telephone serves 542,000 customers in 50 North Carolina counties, it was pointed out. By the end of 1980, CT&T had total revenues of nearly $267 million.

UNC Offering Final Witness

WASHINGTON (AP) — The University of North Carolina planned to present its last witness in Chapel Hill, N.C., today in federal Department of Education hearings on UNC's desegregation plan.

On Wednesday, Dr. Gary T. Barnes, assistant vice president for planning at UNC and the university's chief statistician, testified in Washington.

The federal government alleges that there are still vestiges of a dual system for whites and blacks in the 16-campus UNC system. DOE is threatening to cut off some $100 million in aid a year unless UNC submits an acceptable desegregation plan.

Barnes was asked to clear up some discrepancies in his previous testimony, but not all were cleared up.

He said after the hearing that even after he reviewed the figures, there are still considerable differences between university financial data and federal data.

Barnes said he considers the university's financial data most reliable. The government figures were compiled by Price Waterhouse and Co., a recognized New York accounting firm.

Leon M. Ennis Jr., the UNC official who compiled most of the financial data in question, is expected to testify in Chapel Hill today.

UNC attorneys decided not to call several witnesses because of scheduling problems. Among them were Notre Dame president Dr. Theodore Hesburgh and former University of California president Dr. Clark Kerr.

UNC chief counsel Joseph H. Levin said their absence would not affect the university's case because they "wouldn't say anything that hasn't already been said."

Federal lawyer Richard L. Foster said the government will present eight to 10 witnesses in rebuttal.

The rebuttal is scheduled to begin in Washington on June 22 and is expected to last less than three weeks. Foster said a final list of witnesses has not been completed.

After the rebuttal, the university may present its own rebuttal, but that has not been decided, Levin said.

Administrative law judge John J. Mathias will then look over post-trial briefs condensing over 15,000 pages of testimony and about 500 exhibits before he makes his decision. Both sides agree that ruling probably will not come before December or January.

Even if Mathias decides that DOE may cut off the funds, his decision could be appealed to Education Secretary T.H. Bell and eventually to the courts.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned higher in sluggish trading today, helped by gains among oil issues, but remained preoccupied with rising interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 3.15 points to 976.49 at noon. After falling 51.61 points from an eight-year high over six straight sessions, the Dow Jones industrials rose .90 point Wednesday.

Advances held a 7-5 lead over declines among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

"Interest rate problems are just dampening down spirits," said Lew Smith, an analyst at Bear, Stearns & Co. "It's a market that has been shell-shocked by the problems of the bond market. It's been trying to stabilize but it hasn't been able to turn around yet."

The Treasury Department's quarterly refinancing this week has already resulted in record-high yields for new issues of three-year and 10-year notes and the government was scheduled to auction 30-year bonds today.

And shortly before noon, the Federal reserve intervened in the credit market, arranging four-day matched sale agreements, a move that will drain reserves from the banking system and could drive up interest rates.

The NYSE's composite index of all of its listed common stocks rose .37 to 75.97. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 3.31 at 356.54.

Big Board volume totaled 18.59 million shares over the first two hours, down from 22.12 million in the comparable period Wednesday.

Middle South Utilities topped the active list, up ⅛ at 11¼ in trading that included blocks of 400,000 and 100,000 shares, both changing hands at 11¼.

Commonwealth Edison gained ¼ to 18⅛ in activity that included blocks of 190,000, 110,000 and 47,200 shares, each changing hands at 18.

Conoco, which rose 6⅝ as the most active issue Wednesday, fell ½ to 56. Dome Petroleum is seeking to buy 14 million shares of Conoco stock at $65 a share in an effort to obtain Conoco's holdings in Hudson Bay Oil & Gas.

On the Amex, Hudson Bay Oil & Gas topped the active list today, up 1½ at 24½; and Dome surged 3⅛ to 82⅜.

Among active NYSE oil issues, Sun rose ¼ to 35½, Standard Oil (Indiana) leaped 1⅞ to 59¾, Phillips Petroleum jumped 1¼ to 45⅝, Mobil gained ½ to 62¾, and Texaco advanced ⅝ to 37.

Sears Roebuck, which today reported that April sales rose 20.5 percent from the same 1980 month, was up ¼ at 18¾. K mart, the second-largest retailer after Sears, rose ½ to 21½ after reporting April sales rose 18.4 percent.

Four North Carolina Teams Join Fight For AIAW Championship

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Softball in college is no longer reserved for the intramural fraternity set. It's now for coeds, and 13 teams of them will meet in Raleigh next week to decide which of them is the best in the U.S.

The event is the national AIAW tournament, and North Carolina State is the host team. Four of the teams involved are home-bred, including the Lady Wolfpack. Joining in the title hunt are East Carolina, North Carolina and Western Carolina.

Florida State is the top-seeded team; small wonder with their record of 50-7. The Lady Pirates are second at 42-6 and the Tar Heels are third at 43-20. N.C. State is fifth-seeded with a record of 30-13.

The Catamounts are ninth on the list at 24-17.

Women's slow-pitch softball has reached its prominence only within the last decade. As far as championships go, this will be the first time the AIAW has gathered teams in one spot to determine a winner.

Just because the event is being played their hometown, Coach Rita Wiggs isn't ready to claim the title.

"It's a definite advantage for us with the hometown fans. We've really been excited about it all year," Wiggs said.

How does a slow-pitch softball coach like Wiggs find players to make up a team. The same way Jim Valvano and Monte Kiffin find their teams — by recruiting.

"In the past, since North Carolina's such a strong softball state, we've been able to find the players. A lot of times we find players through newspaper coverage in their hometown papers or Wolfpack club members might contact us," she says.

Coaches on the high school level also play a key role in getting word of their star players to the colleges.

"They see a good player in their conference or they're coaching one and they'll contact us," Wiggs says. "There are a variety of ways we find out about the players."

She says about half the 15 members of her team are the result of recruiting. The rest are walk-ons. Most are on partial scholarships. Thus, competition for a spot is intense.

"It's pretty serious business. We are limited with the scholarships, so we do have to depend on walkons."

Wiggs claims the Wolfpack established their record on the basis of team play. But someone has to provide the spark and freshman pitcher Sue Williams has apparently done it.

She was just recently voted the team's most valuable player with a .457 batting average. She's already shown that there's a little power in that average.

"We were playing in Graham in the state tournament. She hit a home run over the left field fence," Wiggs said of the shot which measured more than 260 feet. "Everyone there said they had never seen a woman hit it over that fence."

Then, there are people whose devotion overcomes their lack of salary. Such a person of Susan Clark of UNC.

Her full-time job is with the Alamance County Recreation Department. She then travels 30 miles to Chapel Hill to get the softball team in gear. Her road to the head coaching job was about as long as her trip between home and the practice field.

"(After) I went to school at Appalachian State, Dr. (Beth) Miller ... told me she would coach the softball team if she could get me to be her assistant. I was her assistant in 1979."

Clark says Miller was eventually offered the job of business manager for the UNC athletic department. Seeing that she could not wear both hats, she stepped off the diamond and behind the desk. Clark got a promotion.

She, too, must roam the countryside to find the best athletes. But Clark has developed a team of just two seniors into a contender for the national title.

"We've eliminated a lot of our mental errors. They hurt us early in the year. The kids are really playing well as a team right now. If we can hold out just one more week, we'll be okay," she says.

At East Carolina, Alita Dillon has managed not only to establish one of the the best records going into the tournament, but she has also guided the team to a place behind Florida State. But just as the other 12 teams meeting on May 14, her job won't be easy.

The Lady Pirates, in advancing from the Region II tournament in Tennessee into the championship round, had to face the Lady Tar Heels on three separate occasions. They dropped the opener 5-3, raced to a 14-4 victory in the second game and fell by a 14-11 count in the championship.

Perry, After Shaky Start, Rolls With Atlanta To 292nd Victory

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

At the start, Gaylord Perry looked shaky, which is about what you'd expect from an old man in a young man's game.

But it only took the 42-year-old Atlanta right-hander two batters to shed his senior citizen image Wednesday night and handcuff St. Louis for the 292nd victory of his brilliant career.

After a leadoff single by Garry Templeton and a home run by Tony Scott, Perry limited the Cardinals to just four more hits and coasted to a 10-2 victory.

Chris Chambliss drove home five runs, three of them on a ninth-inning homer, as Perry won his third game in five decisions for the Braves, the sixth team he has pitched for in his 20-year major league career.

In other National League games, San Diego battered Montreal 13-5, Cincinnati edged Pittsburgh 9-8, San Francisco downed New York 6-4, Los Angeles nipped Philadelphia 2-1 and Chicago edged Houston 2-1.

Perry signed as a free agent with Atlanta last winter and looked like a kid again, mowing down the Cardinals. St. Louis had won 12 of its last 14 decisions before running into the crafty Perry.

"He can go as long as his enthusiasm carries him," said Atlanta Manager Bobby Cox. "Right now, he's pumped up."

"I've got three wins and I've got three complete games," said Perry. "When you win, it gets you going. It makes you want to win more."

Scott's homer gave the Cards a quick lead but the Braves bounced back. Glenn Hubbard tripled home a run in the second and Atlanta took the lead in the sixth. A hit batsman, Claudell Washington's single and Chambliss' force play grounder tied the score. Then hits by Dale Murphy and Biff Pocoroba moved Atlanta in front.

Singles by Ed Miller and Chambliss around a triple by Washington produced two more in the seventh. Then Chambliss' three-run homer highlighted Atlanta four-run wrapup rally in the ninth.

Padres 13, Expos 5

Broderick Perkins drove in five runs with three hits including a homer and Ruppert Jones contributed three RBIs as San Diego ripped Montreal pitching for 19 hits.

"It was just one of those games that everyone has now and then," said freshman Padre Manager Frank Howard, whose team has had precious few of them. "I'm just glad we were on the winning side of it."

The 19 hits were one short of the Padre club record and Perkins' big night boosted his average to .409.

Reds 9, Pirates 8

Cincinnati rallied for two runs in the bottom of the ninth on clutch hits by Dave Concepcion and Johnny Bench to overtake Pittsburgh.

"Both teams hit the heck out of the ball, but they just had the last crack," said Pirate Manager Chuck Tanner.

Comcepcion contributed three hits and drove in two runs, giving him a league-leading 25 for the season. George Foster homered for Cincinnati and Dave Parker and Mike Easler connected for Pittsburgh.

Giants 6, Mets 4

Jack Clark tripled and scored in the third inning and then singled home another run in the sixth, helping San Francisco past New York.

Bullpen ace Greg Minton shut the Mets out for the final 22-3 innings and evened his record at 1-1. He has five saves, sharing the National League lead with Bruce Sutter of the Cardinals and would have preferred a sixth, since Al Holland was the pitcher of record. But Holland was judged ineffective by the official scorer and so Minton got the win instead.

"I'd rather have the save," he said. "That's my job. I don't care about won-lost records, even if it were 2-10. A save is far more important in my book."

Dodgers 2, Phillies 1

Ron Cey's fourth-inning home run gave Los Angeles its victory over Philadelphia with Burt Hooton pitching a sharp five-hitter for his fourth straight victory.

"I was looking for a ball I could drive and I got it," Cey said.

Two of the Phillies' hits were by Pete Rose, who is just six away from tying Hank Aaron for second place on the all-time National league list at 3,600. Rose needs 37 more hits to break Stan Musial's record of 3,630.

Cubs 2, Astros 1

Chicago won its fourth game of the season when Ken Reitz drilled a two-out RBI-single in the 11th inning to beat Houston.

Reitz' hit scored Steve Dillard, who had walked and advanced on a sacrifice by Tim Blackwell.

Lady Pirates Seeded Second

East Carolina's Lady Pirates, seeded second in the AIAW National Slow-Pitch Tournament, will have a first round bye in the event which opens next Thursday at N.C. State University.

Florida State is the top seed in the tournament, and will also draw a bye, as did third-seeded North Carolina.

East Carolina will face the winner of the Florida-Northern Kentucky game in the second round of the double elimination event in a 7 p.m. game on Thursday.

Florida, 32-11, is seeded seventh, while Northern Kentucky, 24-9, is seeded tenth. They meet at 2:30 p.m. Thursday.

In the same bracket, Georgia Southern (29-10), seeded 11th, faces number six Auburn (34-8) in another 2:30 game. The winner of that meets North Carolina (43-20) in the other 7 p.m. game.

Florida State, 50-7, will have a bye into the second round, where it will face the winner of the Western Carolina-Wilmington (Ohio) game. Western, seeded ninth, is 25-17, while Wilmington is eighth seeded and has a 21-1 mark. They play at 11:30 a.m. Thursday, with the second-round game at 5:30 p.m.

In the other half of the bracket, N.C. State, the host team, is 30-13, and seeded fifth. The Wolfpack faces Morehead State, (22-10), the 12th seed in a 1 p.m. game. Lakeland (Ohio), 20-3, and seeded 13th, meets South Florida, 34-21, the fourth seed, in the other 1 p.m. game. The winners meet at 5:30 p.m.

Play in the tournament will continue through Saturday.

East Carolina, winner of the Region II tournament last year, when the AIAW went no further than that level, goes into the tournament with a 42-6 record.

A key match in the meet came when Jesse Murphy, down 5-2 in the third set, rallied to win a 7-5 decision.

Greene Central plays host to Southern Nash today in the final match of the year.

One Upsmanship

New York Yankees' manager Gene Michael, right, and American League umpire Ken Kaiser have a heated discussion over a call by Kaiser at home plate during action Wednesday night in Anaheim between the Yankees and the California Angels. Kaiser called Yankee batter Jerry Mumphrey out when Mumphrey interfered with Angel catcher's throw to second when Willie Randolph attempted to ateal. Michael was also called out, out of the game, that is. (AP Laserphoto)

Blyleven Deserves '10'

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

John Mayberry was saying before the game that he would rate Bert Blyleven's curveball a perfect "10."

"He's got the best curve in the majors," the Toronto Blue Jays slugger said, "certainly the best from the right side. It breaks sharp, and you can't pick it up, and he can control it."

Wednesday night, Blyleven showed he deserved the "Bo Derek" rating. The 30-year-old Cleveland Indians pitcher took a no-hitter into the ninth inning against Toronto. He lost it — and his shutout — on a double by Lloyd Moseby and single by pinch hitter George Bell, but Blyleven emerged with a 4-1 victory.

The hit that stopped the no-hitter came on Blyleven's first pitch in the ninth. Moseby hit a curling line drive to left-center. Defensive replacement Larry Littleton overran the ball, allowing it to skip past him for a double.

Pressbox opinion was split on whether the official scorer should have called it a hit or an error, but Blyleven said he couldn't protest too strongly.

"It's a call that goes both ways," he said. He added: "There's always disappointment when you go with a no-hitter in the ninth inning and lose it. You'd like to get it. It just didn't work out, but I'm very happy with a two-hitter. I'll take that any day."

Blyleven said Moseby hit a fastball that "didn't sink, and he hit it good."

In other AL games, Baltimore edged Minnesota 5-4, Texas downed the Chicago White Sox 4-2, Boston defeated Kansas City 3-1, Detroit upended Oakland 3-2, New York whipped California 5-2 and Seattle drubbed Milwaukeek 12-1.

Littleton said he lost Moseby's drive in the lights, and by the time he found it, "it had cut more than I thought, and that's when I tried to turn back and it hit me in the hand."

Blyleven allowed just three baserunners through the first eight innings, two on walks and one on a fielding error by Joe Charboneau, who started in left. Blyleven, who threw the American League's last no-hitter on Sept. 22, 1977 against California when he was with Texas, struck out nine.

All four of Cleveland's runs were unearned off Jackson Todd, 1-3. The Indians scored three in the third on errors by shortstop Alfredo Griffin, right fielder Barry Bonnell and third baseman Danny Ainge. A throwing error by second baseman Garth Iorg gave Cleveland another run in the eighth.

Orioles 5, Twins 4

Al Bumbry scored the winning run in the ninth inning after Minnesota's second rundown on the same play went awry.

Trailing 4-3, Baltimore tied the score on a walk to Rick Dempsey and singles by Lenn Sakata and Bumbry. Mark Belanger then hit a ground ball to third, and Sakata was out when he was caught in a rundown. Belanger also was caught off base, but Twins second baseman Rob Wilfong dropped the ball when Belanger ran into him, allowing Bumbry to score.

"You try to stay in the rundown as long as you can, until something happens," Belanger said. "You look for someone to run into."

Rangers 4, White Sox 2

Texas came up with two runs in the seventh inning to snap a 2-2 tie and beat Chicago. One run scored on a single by Bill Stein, and Al Oliver's fielder's choice grounder delivered the other.

Bump Wills had two hits and scored twice for Texas.

Chicago erased a 2-0 deficit in the top of the seventh. Carlton Fisk, Greg Luzinski and Lamar Johnson hit consecutive singles for one run, and pinch hitter Bobby Molinaro drove in another with a single.

Red Sox 3, Royals 1

Dennis Eckersley tossed a four-hitter, retiring the final 17 Royals, and Dwight Evans smacked a two-run homer to pace Boston over Kansas City, which has lost three of its past four.

Kansas City led 1-0 on George Brett's RBI single in the first inning until Evans unloaded in the eighth. Boston added a run in the ninth on an RBI single by Rick Miller.

Eckersley, who hadn't won at Royals Stadium since 1978, struck out two and didn't walk a batter.

Tigers 3, A's 2

Tom Brookens' sacrifice fly in the Detroit eighth snapped a 2-2 tie and handed Oakland only its sixth loss of the season. Al Cowens started the inning with a grounder to third baseman Wayne Gross, whose throw was wild for an error. Cowens got to third on a fly ball by Rick Leach, the former Michigan quarterback.

Milt Wilcox scattered seven hits for Detroit, and Rick Langford pitched his fifth complete game of the season for Oakland. Langford allowed just five hits but walked eight.

Yankees 5, Angels 2

Bucky Dent hit his fourth home run of the year, a two-run shot in the fourth inning, and added two more RBIs with a double to pace the New York attack. Dent left the game when he was hit by a pitch on his left forearm his next at-bat. X-rays were negative.

Ron Guidry went five-plus innings for the victory, and Rich Gossage mopped up, earning his seventh save.

Mariners 12, Brewers 1

Mike Parrott snapped a personal 18-game losing streak, one shy of the AL record, and Seattle made a success of the managing debut of Rene Lachemann. Lachemann replaced Maury Wills, who was fired Wednesday.

Parrott, who had not won since opening day in 1980, worked seven innings, allowing five hits and striking out five. Jim Anderson drove in five runs for Seattle,

Seattle Fires Wills, Lachemann Is Named

By LENNY PALLATS
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE (AP) — Maury Wills, base-stealing king of the 1960s, has been thrown out at Seattle.

Wills was fired as manager of the Mariners Wednesday. He was replaced by veteran minor-league manager Rene Lachemann from the Mariners' Class AAA club in Spokane.

The third manager in the Mariners' five-season history, Lachemann took over Wednesday and the team drubbed the Milwaukee Brewers 12-1 in the game at Seattle.

Lachemann, 36, managed the Spokane Class AAA farm club of the Pacific Coast League since 1979. He has been with the Mariners organization since the beginning, coaching the Class AA club in San Jose in 1977 and 1978.

"I'm not going to change my style just because I'm in the big leagues," said Lachemann, described by club management as an interim manager.

"One of the things I am going to do is get 100 percent out of the players I have. I'm not going to ask Gary Gray to steal 50 bases but I hope Julio Cruz will steal 80."

Wills had promised the Mariners would play .500 baseball this year but the club stumbled from the gate with a 6-18 mark and lost 11 of the last 13 games under his leadership. It was the worst start in team history.

The team was 20-38 under Wills in 1980, finishing at 59-103, the bottom of the American League West.

Wills declined comment Wednesday. He told an Associated Press reporter at his Bellevue apartment that he didn't want to talk. "I just want to relax today and shoot some baskets," he said. "Why don't we wait until tomorrow?"

Wills, 48, got the word Wednesday morning that his services as manager were no longer needed. He had been with the team since August 1980, when Darrell Johnson was cut after three and one-half seasons.

"After consulting with (team president) Dan O'Brien we decided to make the move," said the M's majority owner George Argyros, who purchased 92 percent of the team last winter and has stayed close to the club's operations.

Argyros said Lachemann, who played briefly with the Kansas City and Oakland A's in the mid-1960s as a catcher, "has some great skills I think will help our team."

Argyros and O'Brien had been spending time with the Spokane club in recent days.

Wills, who stole 104 bases for the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1962 to set a major league record later broken by Lou Brock, had made no secret of his long-time desire to be a manager. He had been a commentator for NBC-TV and a sportscaster on cable television.

Wills had managed winter baseball teams in Mexico and coached with the Dodgers.

Wills was a standout shortstop for the Dodgers from 1959 through 1966, when he was traded to the Pittsburgh Pirates. He went to the Montreal Expos after the 1968 season and was traded back to Los Angeles during the 1969 campaign.

Wills retired following the 1972 season with a lifetime batting average of .281 in 14 big league seasons and a total of 586 stolen bases.

His contract with the team runs through 1981 and had an option for 1982. O'Brien said no decision had been made on Wills' role for the rest of the season.

What Argyros and O'Brien meant by "interim manager" was uncertain.

"We're all interim," said O'Brien. "Rene's contract goes through 1981. At the end of 1981 we'll look at it again. Hopefully we'll go much beyond that."

Players Were Expecting Wills To Be Fired

SEATTLE (AP) — It was time for a change in the Seattle Mariners' baseball club, team members said of Manager Maury Wills' sudden but not unexpected firing.

Players and management were mixed in their sentiment on the firing, but agreed that the Mariners — last in the 14-team American League — needed a change in command if the club is going to turn around its .250 record.

"Maury's a fine man. I have a high regard for him. It just didn't work out for him in this place and time," said the club's principal owner, George Argyros.

Some Mariner players were less kind in their assessments of Wills' tenure.

"It was obvious a change had to be made," said designated hitter Richie Zisk, one of the few bright spots for the team so far this year.

"Something had to be done on a positive note," Zisk said. "It will change the atmosphere here. It was depressing. There are a lot of younger players here who had never been confronted with this type of situation. The atmosphere in the clubhouse was not good for them."

Pitching coach Wes Stock, who has been with the team since its inception, said, "You don't have to like your manager but you do have to respect him. I think Maury lost the respect of the players."

Rookie third baseman Dave Edler said, "Wills said one thing and did another. It got to the point where I was reading in the paper about what would happen to me. There was a lot of turmoil in this clubhouse — a lot of questions being asked about decisions Maury made."

"A manager is no better than his players," said Dan O'Brien, president and chief executive officer of the team. You have to have a cohesive performing unit and when that happens then the talent takes over and you start to play and start to win. And that wasn't happening," O'Brien said.

Wills' firing was "not only in his best interests but those of the club. It was best that we change the picture," O'Brien said.

O'Brien had praise for Wills and said the firing "certainly wasn't for lack of an all-out effort."

"I can't say enough about how cooperative he was to work with, how sensitive he is to people, perhaps sometimes too sensitive," said O'Brien.

He said he thought Wills was given ample opportunity to prove himself and the firing was not premature.

Wellcome got all it needed in the first inning, scoring once. Warren walked and moved around on three passed balls.

Andrew Perry led the Wellcome hitting with three.

The Jaycees scored first, getting a pair of runs in the second. The Kiwanis came back with one in the fourth, and after the Jaycees had scored two more in the fifth, tied it up with three in the bottom of the fifth.

It remained that way until the bottom of the seventh when Jason Galloway singled with one away for the Kiwanis. Then, after two were out, Russell Williams cracked a two-run homer to provide the Kiwanis with the victory.

Scott Davis led the Kiwanis hitting with three, while Williams and Galloway each had two. David Lee, Brian Wille and Brian Pierce each had two hits for the Jaycees.

Illini Consider Leaving Big Ten

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Illinois Chancellor John Cribbet said the university is "quite serious in considering" dropping out of the Big Ten as talk continues to circulate in the wake of sanctions imposed last week in the eligibility case of quarterback Dave Wilson.

"We would like to stay in the conference if entirely possible," said Cribbet. He also said in an interview Wednesday that the university does not have many options.

"We have not received any feelers from the Big Eight, nor have we put out any. We have not reached the point of looking where we might land," he said.

The university community still is reeling from the "severity" of sanctions imposed on it by the Big Ten in the Wilson eligibility case. The junior college transfer student played last season after taking the Big Ten to court when it failed to grant him permission to play.

Charges leveled by the conference against Illinois include misrepresentation, deception, lack of cooperation and failing to abide by conference rules.

A defense prepared by Charles Brown, chairman of the faculty senate's Committee of Athletic and Recreation, said the school never was guilty of willfully breaking any rules or deceiving anyone.

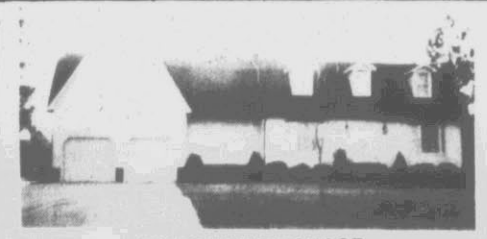

In addition to banning all Illinois teams from postseason play for two years — except for conference championships, the Big Ten placed the school on probation for three years and denied the Illini its share of the conference football and basketball pot for two years — a $1 million rap. Attached to the sanctions was an "understanding" the university can petition to have each penalty reduced by one year.

Cribbet said the penalties are far out of line "even if the findings were true...They are as bad as if we had done something evil."

The Daily Illini, campus student newspaper, quoted a "reliable source" Tuesday as saying that Neale Stoner, athletic director; Mike White, head football coach, and his entire staff would resign if the university accepted the sanctions without a fight."

"Stoner never made such a threat — and, of course, we are fighting," said Cribbet. "But we can see the effect (on Illinois athletics) over the long haul. And given the consequences of events, we can see where they would be thinking of leaving Illinois, maybe not this year, but in the future.

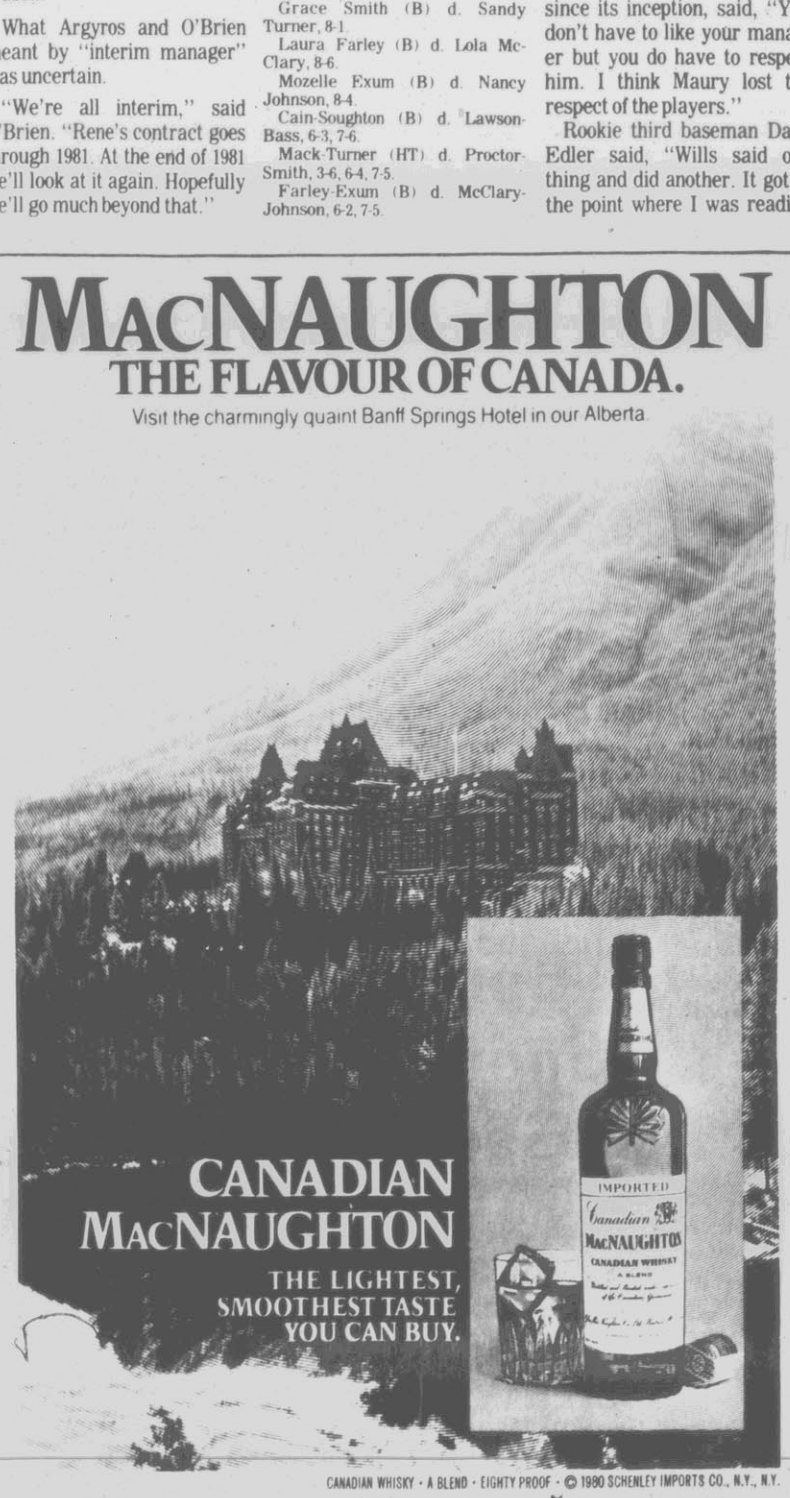

"At this time, we simply have to consider the consequences of dropping out of the Big Ten and its ramifications against the consequences of staying in under the findings and the sanctions which we think are inappropriate," said Cribbet. "We are trying to proceed with as much concern and cautiom as we can, but it is obviously a complex matter and it is not something that can be decided overnight.

Defense, Determination Key Celtics

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics aren't shooting well, but they're surviving on defense and determination. The Houston Rockets aren't rebounding well, but they're hoping to learn from their mistakes.

Trying to avert the transformation of their carriage back into a pumpkin, the Cinderella Rockets take on the Celtics tonight in the second game of the National Basketball Association championship series.

Despite 43 percent shooting and 19 turnovers, Boston staged a late surge Tuesday night to score a 98-95 victory in the opener of the best-of-seven playoffs.

"I'm not concerned with the offense," said Boston guard Chris Ford. "Defense is what wins championships. We've been playing tough defense when we have to. The offense will come."

The Celtics held Houston to just four points in the final 5:17, continuing the strong defense down the stretch they displayed in comeback victories in the final three games of their Eastern Conference championship series with Philadelphia.

The Celtics have trailed at halftime in their last six playoff games and have won four of them. They shot just 45 percent against the 76ers after hitting at a 50-percent clip during the regular season.

"This team can't lead at halftime for some unknown reason," said Boston forward Cedric Maxwell. "What's going to win the series for the teams is defense."

"We played only a couple of 'Philly Series' on defense," said Boston Coach Bill Fitch. "We would like to apply better pressure. Their guards were effective and Robert Reid played a great game."

Reid, Houston's small forward, led all scorers with 27 points but didn't get enough help from his teammates.

"We lost this one through mental errors and offensive rebounding," he said.

The Celtics, who have won 13 NBA titles, had a 25-19 advantage on the offensive boards and a 54-42 rebounding edge overall. In the final 10 minutes, they turned five offensive rebounds into baskets.

"We've got to forget this one because it's one that we let get away," said Houston power forward Billy Paultz, who had 14 points and seven rebounds. "We've got to box out our men deeper ... A lot of balls fell loose and the Celtics were able to grab them."

Houston led 57-51 at halftime and 81-76 after three quarters, but an eight-point run gave Boston the lead for good, 96-91, with 2:54 to play.

"This should have been our game," said Houston reserve guard Calvin Murphy. "We were in control for three quarters and half of the fourth. This was a crucial situation for us and we just let it go."

Reid and Paultz referred to the roughness of the game and the lack of fouls called in the closing minutes.

"You learn a lot in the first game of a series," said the 240-pound Paultz. "You learn how physical it can get. You learn how much the refs mean. If they (the Celtics) can push and shove, I can push and shove, too. It could be war out there Thursday night."

"In the last 2 minutes," Reid said, "you could have got a ladder, jumped on a guy's back and hog-tied him and they (officials Darell Garretson and Jack Madden) wouldn't have called a foul. They (the Celtics) did it and we didn't."

The foul calls were nearly even. Boston was tagged with 21, Houston had 20. But the Celtics made more of their chances, sinking 16 of 20 free throws to 11 of 14 for the Rockets.

While Houston learned it can play a little rougher, Boston picked up some useful information, too.

"We learned a lot about them tonight. We learned they could win without Moses Malone," said Larry Bird, who led the Celtics with 18 points, 21 rebounds and nine assists.

By denying him the ball and double-teaming him, Boston held Malone to 13 points, although he had 15 rebounds. While Houston didn't win, it came awfully close, and several Celtics admitted they weren't prepared.

"I know we'll be ready next game," Bird declared.

That should concern the Rockets, who are seeking their first NBA crown following a 40-42 season with playoff victories over Los Angeles, San Antonio and Kansas City.

Although the Rockets have lost their last 14 games against the Celtics and are decided underdogs, they haven't lost their confidence.

"We have a right to be here. We earned that right," Murphy said. "People think we should be thankful to be here. We have confidence that we can win."

After tonight's game, the scene shifts to Houston for games Saturday and Sunday. A fifth game, if necessary, would be here next Tuesday night.

Farmville finished the meet with 128 points, while North Lenoir was second with 95. Southwest Edgecombe, the host team, was third with 70, followed by Greene Central with 63. Charles B. Aycock was fifth with 62, with D.H. Conley close behind at 59. Southern Nash was last with 43.

Southwest and North Lenoir each had a triple winner, and they accounted for all of the firsts won by those two schools. Collin Hines of Southwest took the high jump, and the 100 and 200-meter dashes. North Lenoir's Norman Mitchell won the triple jump and both of the hurdle events.

Farmville matched those schools in wins, adding a record-setting performance in the 400-meter relay. The team of Carl Joyner, Patrice Payton, Arthur Wooten and Chris Sutton raced in for a 43.7 timing in that event. Farmville also won the pole vault, taken by Timmy Williams, the shot put, won by Ronnie Locust, and the 800-meter run, taken by Mike Owens.

Greene Central won two events, John Washington winning the discus and Doug Harrell taking the 3,200-meter run.

Conley won two events, the 400-meter dash, won by Stoney Speller, and the 1,600-meter relay, won by Carlton Best, Steve Wilkerson, Gary Nobles and Speller.

Ex-State Player Evans Traded To Buffalo Bills

CLEVELAND (AP) — Johnny Evans, one of the more maligned members of the Cleveland Browns last season, has been traded to the Buffalo Bills.

The Browns sent Evans, a punter, to Buffalo on Wednesday in exchange for an unspecified future draft choice, indicating they are confident his shoes can be filled by fifth-round draft pick Steve Cox of Arkansas or by one of three free agents they will examine.

"Certainly this strengthens Cox's position," said Browns Coach Sam Rutigliano. "The trade is in the best interest of Johnny Evans and the Cleveland Browns."

Evans averaged 38.3 yards per punt in 1980, ranking him 26th in the National Football League. He never fulfilled the Browns' expectations after recording a 44-yard average at North Carolina State in 1977.

"Johnny will probably realize his true potential as a result of this change," Rutigliano said. "Historically, with kickers, this is usually what takes place. If we had the answer to get Evans to play to what we think his potential is, we wouldn't have made the trade."

A three-year NFL veteran, Evans is also a quarterback.

Of Cox, Rutigliano said, "He can put the defense in great field position by kicking off and punting with a strong leg."

Cox, who is also a placekicker, first became a punter in his junior year at Arkansas after transferring from Tulsa. He averaged 43.8 yards per punt that year and improved to 46.5 yards to lead all National Collegiate Athletic Association punters last season.

Three other punters, all free agents, also will seek to replace Evans: Jay Kroeker of Tabor College in Kansas, Casey Murphy of Temple and Joe Restic of Notre Dame.

Holmes: I Have All To Lose

By HARRY ATKINS
AP Sports Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Larry Holmes says he has everything to lose and almost nothing to gain — except money — when he defends his World Boxing Council heavyweight championship in a June 12 bout with former champion Leon Spinks.

"Leon ain't got no money, ain't got no teeth; he ain't got nothing to lose," Holmes told a large gathering after the bout was announced at a news conference Wednesday by promoter Don King. "I have everything to lose. I'm fighting to be your champion. I want to be the people's champion."

Then Holmes flatly predicted he would retain his crown.

"I'm going to make a promise I've never made before in my life. I'm going to win," Holmes said. "If I don't win no more fights, I'll win this one."

The purse for the scheduled 15-round fight at Joe Louis Arena — a 20,000-seat arena along the Detroit River — hasn't been set, King said. It will be the first heavyweight title bout in Detroit since 1970.

Mayor Coleman A. Young said he had been trying for more than a year to get a heavyweight show into the arena to honor Louis, the longtime heavyweight champion who grew up in Detroit. Louis died three weeks ago.

The arena, which opened in December 1979 and hosted the 1980 Republican National Convention, never has been officially dedicated, nor does the building contain any pictures or statues of Louis.

"I think there's a touch of irony," Young said. "We wanted to have a dinner and invite Joe Louis here for a formal dedication, but Joe couldn't wait. He had a schedule of his own."

King and Young said the show came together only after General Motors Corp. agreed to a Detroit blackout by ABC-TV.

ACC Is Sued Over Television

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A Charlotte company is suing the Atlantic Coast Conference in an attempt to broadcast more ACC basketball games.

Raycom Inc. charges in the suit that the ACC has violated federal and state antitrust laws. The company also accuses the C.D. Chesley Co., a televison outlet, of violating antitrust laws through an agreement with the ACC to telecast ACC games.

The suit alleges that the ACC and Chesley have unlawfully prevented Raycom from telecasting ACC games.

Chesley's agreement with the conference gives Chesley exclusive rights to telecast ACC games. Other companies that want to telecast ACC games must get Chesley's permisson to do so.

The suit, filed late last week in U.S. District Court in Charlotte, asks that agreements between the ACC and Chesley be declared violations of federal and state antitrust laws.

Raycom also is seeking an order prohibiting the conference and Chesley's television from blocking Raycom's telecasting of basketball games involving ACC games not televised by Chesley or a national network. The firm seeks triple damages of an unspecified amount.

Smith Top Player In ACC

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — First baseman Brick Smith of Wake Forest, the Atlantic Coast Conference's all-time leading home run hitter, has been voted the 1981 ACC baseball player of the year.

The 6-3, 225-pound senior received 57 of 108 votes cast by players of the eight ACC schools, who were not permitted to vote for a member of their own team.

Smith finished the season as the Deacon's leading hitter with a .410 average. He hammered out 57 hits in 139 at bats, including eight doubles, one triple and a conference single-season record 18 home runs.

The Charlotte native also became the league's all-time leader in career home runs with 47.

On Wednesday, Smith and sophomore Joe Reto of North Carolina each were named to the first and second teams of the All-ACC baseball team.

Smith, the third player ever to be named first-team All-ACC Four consecutive years, was selected by fellow players as the all conference first-baseman. He was chosen for the second team as designated hitter.

Reto was named to the first team as designated hitter and to the second team as first baseman.

Reto, from Brielle, N.J., led the Tar Heels with a .406 batting average and had 45 RBI and 13 home runs.

Here is the 1981 All-Atlantic Coast Conference baseball team, selected by players for the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association, with votes received out of a possible 108 in parenthesis:

Get Mocap® Before nematodes get your soybeans.

Nematode damage can cost you 15 to 20 bushels of soybeans per acre. But thanks to Mocap® nematicide-insecticide, it's a loss you can easily avoid.

Mocap controls root-knot, sting and lesion nematodes that feed on the root system of soybean plants. By destroying these nematodes, Mocap helps insure the development of healthy roots that can channel important nutrients and soil moisture to your plants. And that can help you get the kind of yields you should be getting.

Mocap comes in two easy-to-apply formulations—Mocap 10G (granular) and Mocap 6 EC (liquid). And it's economical to use. So see us for the Mocap you need this season. And see the difference it makes in your soybeans.

Mocap® is a registered trademark of Mobil Chemical Company, Richmond, Virginia 23261
Use only as directed on the label and observe all use precautions fully Mocap 6 EC is a restricted use pesticide

Opening lead: Queen of ◇.

For an extra 70 points South elected to play in a no trump slam rather than in clubs. Unfortunately, his appetite was greater than his ability—to the tune of some 1700 points.

North made an intelligent bid at his second turn when he elected to raise his partner's suit with only a doubleton ace. After Blackwood revealed that North had the missing ace, we admit we would have bid a grand slam with the South hand, but this particular South was on a losing streak and was content to settle for a "sure" profit. His decision to place the contract in six no trump, however, was not the safest way to attain that goal.

West led the queen of diamonds, and declarer was quite happy with his dummy. It looked like there were thirteen tricks on top, so declarer won the king of diamonds, cashed the ace of hearts and entered dummy with the ace of clubs. He discarded a diamond on the king of hearts, then tried to run clubs. Unfortunately, East turned up with a club stopper. Since declarer could not come to twelve tricks without clubs, he surrendered a club to East. East led a heart to his partner's queen for down one.

South was as much a victim of bad luck as of his own voraciousness. Had he been content to play six clubs, he would have been in an unbeatable contract. More to the point, however, is the fact that six no trump should also have been made.

The only thing that can defeat six no trump is a 4-1 or 5-0 club division. Declarer can do nothing to overcome a 5-0 split, but he can counter a 4-1 break. After winning the diamond opening lead and cashing the ace of hearts, declarer should lead a low club to dummy's eight. East wins the trick, but he can do declarer no harm. South wins any return, crosses to the ace of clubs and takes a diamond discard on the king of hearts. He can get back to his hand with a spade to run the clubs, which are now high.

Rita Vowing Never Again

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Rita Jenrette says she regrets posing nude in Playboy magazine and will never do it again because "I have to establish my credibility now."

The estranged wife of former Rep. John Jenrette, D-S.C., told students at Nassau Community College Wednesday that she did the nude layout "to get money for my husband's defense" against his conviction in the Abscam scandal.

"You will never see me take off a stitch of clothes again, not even a shoe," she added.

Mrs. Jenrette, 31, also told the students that her husband is asking her for alimony while living with another woman in Miami.

Mrs. Jenrette said she is seeking a "quick, no-fault divorce" in Washington and said she did not intend to grant her husband's request for alimony.

"John has a lot of money, millions of dollars in property, but little cash flow," she said. "I have no intention of paying him anything."

Mrs. Jenrette addressed the students as part of a lecture tour to promote her memoirs, "My Capitol Secrets." ABC-TV is making her book into a movie, scheduled to be shown in November.

Have No Place To Stop

NEW YORK (AP) — A Rhode Island couple trying to row across the Atlantic Ocean now have "no place left to stop," according to a sister of one rower.

Kurt Saville, 24, and Kathleen Saville, 24, left Africa last month in a 25-foot boat on the 4,000-mile journey to Florida. If the trip, sponsored by the Explorers Club, succeeds, Mrs. Saville will be the first woman to row the Atlantic.

Lynne Saville said Wednesday that her brother and sister-in-law were currently more than 500 miles southwest of the Canary Islands.

See No Impact In Japan Curbs

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Japan's voluntary restrictions on exports to the United States will have no real impact on the domestic market because they apply only to new shipments, says the president of General Motors Corp.

James F. McDonald said Wednesday that Japanese automakers have 400,000 cars already stockpiled in the United States and available for sale.

Atlanta Police Search For A Seventh-Grader

ATLANTA (AP) — A 14-year-old student from a special school attended by one of 26 young black victims in a string of slayings has been reported missing, according to police.

Missing persons investigators were trying to located Eric Thompson, who was reported missing Wednesday by Brandon Southern, director of The Challenge School For Boys, said police spokesman Benjamin Sims.

The case was being handled by the missing persons unit of the Atlanta police bureau, but Sims said details of the disappearance were given to the special police task force investigating the deaths of 26 young blacks since July 1979. The task force also is assigned the case of 10-year-old Darron Glass, who disappeared last September.

Thompson's mother, Elizabeth Jackson, said she last saw her son when he left their southwest Atlanta home Tuesday to go to school.

Southern told police Thompson attended school on Tuesday and was spotted making a bus connection in downtown Atlanta after school Tuesday afternoon, Sims said.

But Mrs. Jackson said her son, who has run away from home before, did not come home after school Tuesday.

Thompson, who is 5-foot-3 and weighs 135 pounds, was last seen wearing a beige short-sleeved shirt and beige pants.

Thompson, a seventh-grader, has attended The Challenge School For Boys, a special facility for youths with juvenile records, for about a year, Mrs. Jackson said.

The school, which is located at the West Hunter Street Baptist Church in southwest Atlanta, also was attended by 15-year-old Terry Lorenzo Pue, who had been missing one day when his body was found Jan. 23 in suburban Rockdale County.

Another victim in the string of slayings, 14-year-old Lubie "Chuck" Geter, was known to have visited the school. Geter's body was found in a wooded area south of Atlanta on Feb. 5, more than a month after he was reported missing from a southwest Atlanta shopping center.

Both Pue and Geter had been strangled.

Earlier Wednesday, leaders of the task force told reporters the unit had gathered mountains of clues in the cases but was still looking for a lucky break that would lead to arrests and convictions.

"The question is not if we're going to solve them (the slayings) but when. And when is not a question we can answer at this time," said Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown. "The solution comes in many different forms and times."

The task force has "probably the most powerful and sophisticated computer technology ever used in a criminal investigation," said Brown. "We have not, however, achieved our ultimate objective at this point" of solving the cases, he said.

Search Goes On For Dead In Explosion Of C-135

By LINDA DUFFIELD
Associated Press Writer

WALKERSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Air Force crews were searching a remote barley field today for the last of 21 people who died when a missile-tracking jet on a training flight blew up and crashed, scattering documents and debris.

The area was cordoned off and state police were scooping up the papers amid conflicting accounts about whether they were classified.

All those aboard the $50 million advanced range instrumentation aircraft were killed in the Wednesday morning crash, which occurred about a mile from this western Maryland community of 8,000, said Air Force Maj. William Campbella.

Twenty bodies, many dismembered, were found before the search was called off for the night, officials said.

The Pentagon said the aircraft was based at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, where it was assigned to the 4950 Test Wing. The flight was to have been a "routine training flight" that ended back in Ohio, said Air Force Lt. Thomas Larock.

The EC-135 four-engine jet, the military version of the Boeing 707, is used to track missiles and unmanned satellite flights.

A Pentagon source said the plane was carrying classified documents—when it went down, but Wright-Patterson spokesman Maj. Edward Robertson denied that report.

Papers from the plane were strewn over the area, and state police worked to retrieve the documents, which were sodden from a light rain which fell throughout the day.

Local radio stations were asked to broadcast state police requests that residents who found documents turn them in, said Jane English of WZYQ-FM in Frederick.

Newspaper photographers at the crash site reported having their film confiscated by authorities. But the film later was returned.

The cause of the crash was not determined immediately.

Area residents who saw the accident said the plane was a masslof flame before it struck the ground.

"It looked like a ball of fire," said Edward Watson, vice president of operations for the Maryland Midland Railroad, which halted service on its line adjacent to the crash site because a piece of wreckage fell on the rail.

Nancy McCullough, a resident of a nearby housing development, said the plane "went over our development and then I heard this explosion that sounded like a long, loud, thunder clap."

"Within minutes, the entire development was covered with a yellow substance that seemed like fiberglass insulation," she said.

"It apparently blew up in the air," said A.E. Appleby, police communications officer at the Frederick state police barracks.

A spokesman at Andrews Air Force Base said that all witness reports indicated that the plane was exploding as it came down.

Campbell said an Air Force investigation of the accident could take several months to complete.

The Baltimore Sun reported today that the aircraft was flying at 28,000 feet when it disappeared from radar in the Washington Air Traffic Control Center, where it was being tracked.

The crash area in central Frederick County was sealed off by state police, and military officials from nearby Fort Detrick and Andrews Air Force Base were on the scene.

Veiled Attack From Portillo

MEXICO CITY (AP) — In a veiled attack on the United States, President Jose Lopez Portillo lashed out at enemies of Nicaragua who he said are seeking "in the name of democracy" to destroy a democratic country.

Welcoming the leader of Nicaragua's Sandinista National Liberation Front, Daniel Ortega, the Mexican president accused the Reagan administration Wednesday night of promoting an international public opinion campaign aimed at destabilizing the leftist government of Nicaragua.

Ortega, coordinator of Nicaragua's ruling junta, flew here Wednesday to meet with Lopez Portillo. Diplomatic sources said he was looking for ways to offset U.S. pressure on his nation.

"The campaign against Nicaragua is carried out in the name of democracy," Lopez Portillo said. "It is no small paradox that it proposes the destruction of a democratic regime."

The Reagan administration has accused the Sandinista government of allowing Soviet arms shipments to be funneled through Nicaragua to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador. It also warned that Nicaragua could be used as a Communist foothold in Latin America.

Lopez Portillo, who is scheduled to meet with President Reagan in Washington next month, ridiculed "the expedient of presenting Nicaragua as a transcendent domino in a vast conspiracy to destroy Western democracy."

"A false idea does not become true if it is repeated millions of times," he said, "but its repetition stereotypes it as a propaganda formula that fulfills determined political objectives.

"Mexico will be consistent with its principles and compromises — Mexico will defend as its own the cause of Nicaragua."

Court Order Is Dismissed

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — A Craven County Superior Court judge dismissed Wednesday another judge's action ordering county officials to improve acoustics in the county courtroom.

Judge Herbert Small ruled that the Craven County Board of Commissioners had made efforts and had plans to improve the acoustics. But he praised Judge Michael R. Bruce for bringing the problems to the attention of county officials.

JUDGE R.M. BRUCE

The ruling comes during a long feud between Bruce and the county commissioners over control of the courtroom air conditioner, which Bruce said was too noisy.

The hearing resulted from a civil complaint filed April 10 in which Bruce ordered Sheriff C.B. Bland to get an engineer to improve the acoustics of the courtroom at county expense. The county argued that the order was unnecessary.

When Assistant County Manager Tyler Harris refused last month to give Bruce access to the air-conditioning controls, Bruce ordered Harris jailed for contempt.

That contempt order was dismissed April 23 by another judge.

Scholarship Is Established

ECU News Bureau

A memorial scholarship fund in honor of Jennifer Elizabeth Lambeth has been established by family and friends to aid graduate students in rehabilitation counseling at East Carolina University.

Beth Lambeth, the daughter of Dr. H.D. Lambeth Jr. of Greenville and the late Mrs. Virginia Neighbors Lambeth, died as the result of an accident May 15, 1980. The tragedy occurred a few months before she would have completed the master's degree in rehabilitation counseling in the School of Allied Health and Social Professions.

Miss Lambeth's father is a professor in the ECU Conseling Center.

First recipient of the Beth Lambeth Scholarship Memorial Award is John Robert Hunt of Stantonsburg, who was chosen on the basis of leadership and scholarship, professional bearing and academic promise. Hunt is the son of Mrs. Pauline Adams of Wilson County.

According to Donald L. Lemish, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement and Planning and Dr. Sheldon Downes, chairman of Rehabilitation Counseling, Beth Lambeth Memorial Scholarship awards will, in the future, go to two or more recipients selected in the graduate program of the Department of Rehabilitation Counseling.

Miss Lambeth, who was 24 years old at the time of her death, had been an honor student at Rose High School, and received the A.B. degree in psychology at ECU and was a member of the League of Scholars. She was also a talented musician and artist and was active in church service.

In a statement, her family said, "It is the hope of the family in establishing this memorial to Beth Lambeth that the students selected to receive the scholarship award will distinguish themselves in this profession and bring honor to themselves and the university while serving their fellow men.'

Oil Is Already Moving In Superport's Pipes

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The nation's first "superport" officially opens today, but Arabian crude oil from a supertanker already is flowing through the 19-mile pipelines of LOOP — the Louisiana Offshore Oil Port.

Pumping through the pipes of the $575 million installation began Wednesday, despite rough seas that hampered technicians completing the last delicate tests.

"At first light, we started pumping," said Ralph Dailey, LOOP operations vice president. Crewboats filled with dignitaries and reporters were scheduled to be on hand for opening ceremonies.

LOOP, which looks like a large offshore oil drilling and pumping rig, was designed to cope with the problem of deep-draft supertankers that cannot enter shallow American ports. Five oil companies pooled their resources to build LOOP because hauling crude by supertanker is cheaper than using smaller freighters.

Now, instead of transfering cargo to smaller vessels, the supertankers can simply moor to the offshore port, hook up hoses and pump their cargo to storage facilities ashore through a big underwater pipeline.

On Wednesday, workers began clearing the water from the lines leading from the port to pumping and storage stations on shore.

"That involves pumping 35,000 to 40,000 barrels of oil at a pretty fast rate. That will move salt water out of the lines," Dailey said.

On Tuesday, the supertanker "Texaco Caribbean" pumped for about an hour to test hookups to one of the port's three 48-foot-high buoy stations.

The huge ship is scheduled to move to a second buoy Friday and clear those lines, pumping off a total of 1½ million barrels of light Arabian crude oil before departing. The last buoy will wait until a later delivery, Dailey said.

The rough weather slowed some final tests, he said, such as sending divers to check out connections at the seabottom.

The superport first was designed in 1972 and stands on steel legs in 110 feet of water, 19 miles off the nearest beach and about 60 miles south of New Orleans.

The oil is expected to flow through the port at an initwal rate of 200,000 to 300,000 barrels a day. By September, the LOOP should be receiving crude at a rate of 700,000 barrels daily — or about half its receiving capacity, officials said.

Tankers will pay an hourly fee and a per barrel charge to the port. The total charge was estimated to average about 50 cents per barrel, which officials said is competitive with other methods.

Plans call for eventually storing the oil in hollowed-out, huge underground salt domes.

For now, the cargo will be sent by pipeline to a terminal in St. James, La., 130 miles away, where it feeds directly into a major pipeline that crosses the nation to Chicago, LOOP officials said.

Profs Protest Budget Cuts

Faculty members of East Carolina University's Department of Sociology and Anthropology have protested proposed federal budget cuts in the social sciences, saying the cuts represent a "dangerous blow" to total eduction.

"If budget cuts are to be made, they should certainly be equitably distributed throughout the sciences," the faculty members said in a letter to members of the House and Senate budget committees and to North Carolina members of Congress.

The letter said the U.S. educational system is a product of "our support of total education rather than a narrow view of education focusing only on technique." It said the proposed social science budget cuts would affect both student aid and research funding.

It was signed by 13 members of the department of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Some 'Raw Meat' By Younger Critics

By PETER J. BOYER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There are occasions — say, upon opening a package from one of the networks and finding a piece of raw meat inside — when it may occur to the dedicated TV critic that he has been unduly harsh in his analyses, that, just maybe, so much of TV isn't as bad as it seems.

It's a sobering thought, suggesting insensitivity if not downright malevolence, and it's capable of inducing painful guilt feelings. Fortunately, it is usually a fleeting thought, easily cured by an evening in front of the tube.

It also helps to have correspondents such as Mrs. E.M. Herman of Johnstown, Pa. Mrs. Herman was kind enough to send a couple of articles from her local newspaper, in which some of the young locals expressed their opinions on television. Yipes! Their acid could eat concrete.

In a column called "Youth Opinions," eight Johnstown-area high school students told which TV series were beginning to bore them.

My favorite budding critic was a young lady named Diane, who responded:

"'One Day at a Time' is basically the same thing all the time. 'Barney Miller' is a dumb show. It's not realistic at all. 'Family Feud' is really just a kissing game. 'Flo' is just a stupid idiot show. 'Charlie's Angels' is the same type of show always. 'Lou Grant' is an all crime and violence show."

Take that, you crybaby network PR types! I must say, though, that while Diane seems especially astute in her observation regarding "One Day at a Time," I've never really thought of "Lou Grant" as being "all crime and violence," at least, not in the traditional television sense. Maybe it's all that punching on the computer typewriter keys.

A senior named Lacie was no less acerbic, and managed to assert herself as a youth chauvinist, to boot. "Shows like 'The Brady Bunch' and 'The Big Valley' bore me," she said. "They've been on TV ever since I was in training pants..." Back off, Lacie. I was your age when "Brady Bunch" was on.

"...The kids on there never seem to grow up and none of them has up to date problems. And if that's not enough, they had the same problem three or four times in one month. It's the same with 'Big Valley.'"

"Brady Bunch" was mentioned by three of the eight high schoolers, suggesting that the family Brady has some closet fans. It's hard to admit you watch "Brady Bunch." A senior named Dave doesn't like the show either, but consider his opinions on some of the other stuff he apparently watches but doesn't like:

"...all the cartoons that are on Saturday. The dumb detective movies they have because they just drag on and on. The really meaningless, stupid, silly programs like 'Batman and Robin' or 'Spiderman.' A lot of the game shows and soap operas bore me too; not that I really watch soap operas."

Sure, Dave.

Of current network fare, the most common complaint seems to be the lack of originality, or, as freshman Steve put it, "It's practically the same thing every week."

Where have I heard that before?

So, thanks to Mrs. Herman, and keep up the good work, kids. And remember: When the lady in the school cafeteria asks how you like your mystery meat cooked, a TV critic has but one choice:

Rare. Very, very rare.

Playboy Casino Bunnies Fed Up

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The high heels make it hard to stand, the fluffy tails make it hard to sit down and the whole outfit makes it almost impossible to take a quick bathroom break, say some of the bunny dealers at the new Playboy Hotel & Casino.

And their bunny mother, who claims she is "fighting for my girls," has quit the hutch in protest.

Sandee Vogelson has resigned her post as bunny supervisor at Playboy's new $150 million, 500-room casino hotel on the Boardwalk.

Mrs. Vogelson contended her 148 bunny dealers have encountered serious problems in their first three weeks on the job, including occupational hazards springing from the scanty uniform that marks the Playboy bunny.

But Playboy spokeswoman Lori Teblum said Wednesday that Mrs. Vogelson's recent resignation was "a personal matter" not completely related to bunny concerns.

Most Playboy bunnies, Mrs. Teblum said, "are thrilled to be bunnies."

Mrs. Vogelson charged that Playboy bunnies who work as dealers are shivering in the chill of the air-conditioned, three-level casino. Pit bosses, she said, tell the women to "think warm."

Also, she said, bunny dealers are forced to work 10-hour shifts while bunny cocktail waitresses work only six hours.

Bunny dealers then must stand in high heels and cannot sit down correctly because of their fluffy tails, Mrs. Vogelson said.

Consequently, she said, many bunny dealers "ache all over" after work.

The bunny dealers earn $3.50 an hour plus tips, the same amount as Playboy's regular male and female dealers.

Bunny waitresses, Mrs. Vogelson noted, make much more in tips and work less time. Casino waitresses can keep their tips but all dealers, bunnies or not, must pool their tips under the state's casino law.

And then there is the outfit.

One unidentified bunny dealer told The Bulletin of Philadelphia that getting in and out of the little suit is "rather complicated."

"It took me 20 minutes the first few times, with two people helping," she said. "And the suit isn't exactly constructed to make it easy to get into and out of for a bathroom break.

"It can take me my whole 20-minute break to lower and raise the back zipper, unfasten and refasten the hooks in the back, and deal with the fur tail," the bunny said.

However, Mrs. Teblum said being a bunny dealer "is not any harder than any other dealer or cocktail server."

"There are a lot of bunnies who are thrilled to be bunnies. It is special," Mrs. Teblum said. "As many whose feet hurt and are a little uncomfortable in the costume, you'll find more who are very willing to put up with a little inconvenience."

Follow Script In Harris Case

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The defendant, judge and jury members look like their real-life counterparts. The courtroom is precisely duplicated, down to the wall clock, judicial portrait and the "In God We Trust" inscription behind the bench.

NBC-TV's two-part dramatization tonight and Friday of Jean Harris' trial for the shooting of Scarsdale Diet developer Herman Tarnower doesn't depart from the trial transcript. Tarnower, Mrs. Harris' long-time lover and a millionaire cardiologist, is not portrayed.

But the lawyer for the former headmistress says the program shows a "blatant disregard for the rights of the defendant, whose case is still on appeal."

Corrections officials said Mrs. Harris, convicted of murder and sentenced to 15 years to life, would watch "The People vs. Jean Harris" in prison.

But her lawyer, Joel Aurnou, said she "vigorously opposes" the TV dramatization and contends any trial re-enactment will jeopardize her legal position.

He said neither he nor Mrs. Harris had consented to their portrayals by Martin Balsam and Ellen Burstyn and had not been consulted.

Because of her opposition, only those events that are a matter of public court record can be reproduced.

Thus there is no portrayal of the 69-year-old Tarnower, shot to death in the bedroom of his Purchase estate last year, no scene with Lynne Tryforos, the 37-year-old divorcee whose relationship with Tarnower allegedly drove Mrs. Harris to murder.

Paul Klein, the executive producer, said the trial re-enactment was drawn from actual testimony to show the "real drama," and that a courtroom artist and the trial stenographer both were used as consultants to aid in faithful reproduction.

The movie includes some of the duller moments of testimony about Tarnower's bullet wounds.

Omitted is the revelation by Tarnower's housekeeper that she kept diaries of his overnight female houseguests.

The movie begins with a portion of Mrs. Harris' testimony, which did not actually occur until two months into the trial.

"I simply wanted to get dying over with," Mrs. Harris says, explaining why she drove to Tarnower's home from The Madeira School for girls in McLean, Va., where she was headmistress.

She contended her lover of 14 years was shot by accident when he tried to prevent her suicide. The prosecution said she shot Tarnower in a jealous rage over his romance with Ms. Tryforos.

As the stylish defendant, Miss Burstyn wears silk and pearls, as did her real-life model. As Aurnou, Balsam is mostly confined to asking Mrs. Harris questions that elicit such emotional statements as "I was a person sitting in an empty chair." But he doesn't cry as Aurnou did at his client's words.

Peter Coyote as the young prosecutor, George Bolen, has the task of accusing the 58-year-old Mrs. Harris of being a liar.

Coyote's reading of the "Scarsdale Letter," in which Mrs. Harris vilifies her younger rival, is similar to Bolen's dead-pan reading of the document that jurors later said helped destroy Mrs. Harris' credibility.

Richard Dysart as trial judge Russell R. Leggett has copied Leggett's folksy dialogue.

Samples Out Of Hospital

ATLANTA (AP) — Television comedian Junior Samples has been released from Northside Hospital after spending 10 days for treatment of hardening of the arteries, according to hospital officials.

Dr. Fred Bennett said Samples, a regular on the country music television show "Hee Haw" since 1969, was hospitalized April 27 after suffering chest pains.

He said the hefty actor was released from the hospital Wednesday.

Liz On Stage Despite Fever

NEW YORK (AP) — Although Elizabeth Taylor is battling bronchitis, the 49-year-old actress isn't about to let a 102-degree fever interfere with her Broadway debut tonight, according to a press agent.

Pat Dale, publicist for "The Little Foxes," a revival of the Lillian Hellman play previewing at the Martin Beck Theater, said the Wednesday matinee was canceled on the advice of Miss Taylor's doctor.

According to officers, the Wilson car cut back into the Dixon vehicle, causing the cars to run off the road, with the Dixon vehicle striking a utility pole.

Damage was estimated at $4,000 to the Dixon car, $900 to the Wilson vehicle and $500 to the pole, a mail box, a sign, and other property.

Wilson was charged by police with careless and reckless driving.

Civil Rights Veterans Recall Voting Rights Fight

By MIKE SHANAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vernon Jordan recalls the days when a black with a doctorate degree from Tuskegee Institute was denied the right to vote. Benjamin Hooks remembers Southern blacks going to the polls and being asked questions like "How many bubbles are there in a bar of soap?"

With sometimes dramatic descriptions, the two civil rights veterans provided vivid accounts for a House Judiciary subcommittee Wednesday of attempts to keep Southern blacks disenfranchised before enactment of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

The subcommittee is considering proposals to renew the voting rights legislation before key provisions expire in August 1982.

Hooks, executive director of the NAACP, and Jordan, head of the National Urban League, said the extension is essential to protect progress made since the 1950s and early 1960s, when some white police officials did all they could to block blacks from voting.

"I have been there," said Hooks, a Mississippi civil rights lawyer.

He recalled his feelings after he was threatened for going to court to make it possible for blacks to register and vote. "There is a fear that walks with you and stays with you," he said.

Southern blacks seeking to vote were often asked by voting registrars to answer such questions as "How many bubbles are there in a bar of soap?" or "How far can a little dog run through the woods," Hooks said.

Jordan, a native of Atlanta, described a conversation between an 82-year-old black man registering to vote for the first time and a federal registrar sent into Mississippi after the voting law was passed in 1965.

Why didn't you ever register before the voting rights law was passed by Congress, the man was asked, as he patiently waited to register.

"I never believed in putting myself in the way of trouble a'comin'," the man told the registrar, referring to white resistance to black voter registration.

Then why are you registering now, the registrar persisted.

"I am here because trouble isn't a'comin' like it used to," the man replied.

Hooks and Jordan were joined by AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland in urging extension of important provisions of the law by a conservative Congress.

The extension would run for 10 years and continue a mechanism under which seven Southern and two Western states and parts of 11 others would be required to report to the Justice Department whenever they change their voting rules or laws.

Civil rights organizations say that only through that practice can states, mainly in the South, sustain increases in voting by blacks and other minorities.

Recalling the days when "white racist registrars would deny PhDs from Tuskeegee Institute the right to vote," Jordan said: "There are some people who would like to bring that day back."

Despite the improvement that has resulted since enactment of the 1965 law, Hooks said, "We still have a long, long way to go. It is human nature to fall back."

He said there are now 5,000 black elected officials in the country, which represents only 1 percent of the nation's total elective offices.

Opponents of extending the act, including Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., a subcommittee member, are urging formulas under which civil rights groups would have to go into court for each voting rights violation, a burden civil rights groups say would spread their resources too thin.

Symphony's Musicians Urge Funds

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A spokesman for the beleaguered North Carolina Symphony's musicians urged the board of trustees Wednesday to find a permanent conductor, not to shorten the season and not to reduce the size of the orchestra.

"We musicians are simply out of work. We have no guarantee of work for next season at this time," said Robert Anderson, chairman of the symphony's orchestra committee. "If we are offered work for next season, we must still face 18 weeks of unemployment."

Anderson told the trustees during their monthly meeting in Raleigh that they are now "trustees of a symphony orchestra society that does not have a symphony orchestra."

Anderson criticized a board committee's proposal to cut the symphony by almost two dozen and reduce the season by several weeks, saying some musical compositions would be impossible to perform with a smaller orchestra.

"Implementation of this plan would destroy the North Carolina Symphony orchestra," Anderson said. "We barely have enough players as it is."

Symphony management ended this season several weeks early, citing a lack of money.

Calling on the board to find a permanent conductor, Anderson said: "First-rate conductors are not coming to a sinking institution. They will join an institution in a crisis if he perceives that every person in that institution is committed to a product of excellence."

The search for a replacement for John Gosling is now in its second year.

This week, Anderson said several symphony members have begun looking for work elsewhere. He said flutist Martha Aarons has already accepted a position with the Cleveland Symphony in a search for job security.

The symphony is still without a contract, which led musicians to strike last year. Anderson urged the board to correct that problem.

Unless the symphony has a contract, it may be liable for $130,000 in umemployment as well as the $40,000 already incurred by canceling the remainder of the season.

Anderson offered suggestions for keeping the symphony alive and at full strength. He said concerts could be scheduled in more cost-effective ways and suggested playing in some areas in alternating years and using the media for publicity and fund-raising.

"The future of the North Carolina Symphony can be made secure. Any action by this board which would damage the product itself would damage the symphony forever," Anderson said.

The board took no official action on Anderson's statement, but symphony president R. Max Abbott said the board would attempt to bring the symphony back next season.

"We're going to be back next year," Abbott said. "We're going to be back strong next year."

No Effects On River By Clam Deaths

ECU News Bureau

Scientists have determined that the die-off of several million clams in the Pamlico River nearly two years ago had no significant effect upon the existing clam population.

Studies conducted by two East Carolina University biologists and a state environmental monitoring official indicate a mortality rate of less than one per cent in August, 1979, die-off. Also, they said, it is not unusual for large numbers of the Rangia cuneata, a common estuarine clam, to die within a short space of time.

Usually the dead clams remain on the bottom and residents along the waterway are unaware of what has happened. In this case, the clams floated to the surface and were then blown ashore by the wind. Thus nearly five million clams rotting on the beaches between Washington, N.C., and Broad Creek resulted in considerable attention.

Actually, according to Drs. Graham Davis and Donald Jeffreys of the ECU department of Biology, and Barry Adams, regional coordinator for environmental monitoring, the dead clams represented only a tiny fraction of the total live clam population remaining in the river.

Following the die-off, David conducted a survey at Swan Point on the Pamlico. He found that 4,774 clams had washed ashore along the 21 meter segment of the beach, but a sampling of clams in the river indicated that living clams in a 12 meter wide zone extending outward to midstream numbered approximately 1.75 million. Surveys at other stations confirmed these findings. The most abundant size was slightly less than one inch.

The cause of the die-off probably will never be known, but the scientists said that lack of oxygen and high water temperatures, pollution or microbial infections are all possibilities.

Findings on the Pamlico clam die-off were presented by Davis, Jeffreys and Adams at the recent meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Science.

South Korea's Leadership Talking Up 'New Era'

By EDWIN Q. WHITE
Associated Press Writer

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — "Few periods in history have figured as momentously in the destiny of a nation as the early months of 1981 promise to do in the Republic of Korea."

Thus opens a new book put out by the government and entitled "Forging a New Era — The Fifth Republic of Korea." Illustrated lavishly with color photographs, it goes on for 127 pages to praise President Chun Doo-hwan and what are hailed as his steps toward creating a democratic, welfare state on this divided peninsula.

It has been more than two months since the 50-year-old former army general formally was given the overwhelming vote of a presidential electoral college to begin a new, seven-year term. He had ruled since last August as interim president after rising to power with military backing in the turbulent times that followed the October, 1979, assassination of President Park Chung-hee.

Chun has cited the Korean saying, "Sijagi panida," meaning well begun is half done, but the period since his election is regareded as too short to properly assess the start of something as big as an era. Things still are in a shakedown stage, one of officially proclaimed steps toward government and social reforms and economic recovery, but still a time of tentative testing.

Chun's election followed a series of fast-moving developments that were climaxed with an official visit to the United States and talks Feb. 2 with President Reagan. Significant portions of the new government book make the most of that trip.

Officials here say now that there is no question that the relationship between Washington and Seoul has improved markedly since Reagan took office. There were sharp frictions during the Carter administration, centering chiefly on human rights issues and then-President Carter's plan, later suspended, to withdraw U.S. ground troops from South Korea.

As they have since Chun firmly established his power, Western sources say economic development will have an important, perhaps key, bearing on short- and long-term prospects for the regime. After setbacks last year and the effects of a lingering recession, official figures now are being put out on trade and production which claim to show the economy is improving.

"It's true," said one Western expert, "things are starting to move again. But, of course, it isn't as good as the government says, not yet anyway."

Korean consumers also find they are continuing to be hit in the pocketbook. Recently they were told that the prices of oil products, coal and electricity were being raised substantially. A 14 percent increase took the cost of a gallon of premium gasoline to about $5.67. The price of coal, still commonly used for heating and cooking here, was boosted 20 percent to 25 cents for 10 pounds, and electricity charges 10 percent to $8 per 100 kilowatt hours.

The higher costs were blamed on increased prices of imported crude oil and the declining value of South Korea's currency, the won.

After the increases were announced, Deputy Prime Minister Shin Byong-hyun said the government was certain it will "be able to hold this year's inflation at an annual rate of between 20 and 25 percent as originally targeted."

In other fields, the government has proclaimed new campaigns against corruption, favoritism and influence peddling, traditional blights on the official structure and business operations in South Korea.

It also was reported recently that a new five-year development plan is in the works that will put heavy emphasis on social benefits such as housing, education and public health. There also has been a drastic shakeup in the country's judiciary with a new chief justice appointed, a number of judges dismissed and the positions or functions of many others changed.

Despite the government moves, plans and appeals for joining in the forging of a new era, the elements of cynicism and indifference remain in some quarters.

Restrictive laws and regulations largely control dissent or open criticism. More than 500 former oppositoion politicians and dissidents still are on an official purge list, taking no part in the work of a newly installed National Assembly. Although the lifting of martial law in January formally ended censorship, the media generally is not critical.

Spring brought a few small student protests, the scattering of anti-government leaflets and efforts at stirring demonstrations. The number of those participating was small and the outbursts were short-lived with ever-alerted police units moving in quickly to put them down.

Rail Crossing Are Dangerous

The most dangerous spot on any road is, "a highway-rail grade crossing," Carl Whitfield, field representative for the Governor's Highway Safety Program told members of the Greenville-Martinsborough Lions Club Tuesday night.

The speaker said "complacency" is the main reason so many accidents and deaths occur at grade crossings. "The driver has crossed the tracks so often when there is no train, he forgets the possibility that a train could ever be present. So he frequently crosses the track without looking."

It's up to each of us to see that his or her name isn't added to the list of grade-crossing accident statistics," he said.

Gil Davis New Chairman

AYDEN — Gil P. Davis has been elected chairman of the seventh annual Collard Festival to be held in Ayden September 7-13. Davis is recreation director for the town of Ayden, and in the past has been active in civic affairs. He is a member of the Kiwanis Club of Ayden-Grifton.

In addition to Davis' election to the festival's top post, J. Pierce Sumrell, a retired Ayden businessman, was elected vice-chairman; Becky McLawhorn was elected secretary and Penny Bladree, treasurer.

SEEKS SUPPORT

MOSCOW (AP) — Leading Soviet dissident Andrei D. Sakharov has appealed for international support for Alexander Bolonkin, an imprisoned mathematician who Sakharov says faces a third term in a labor camp.

After 144 Years, New Jersey Is Using Money

By DAVID KAYE
Associated Press Writer

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Back in 1836, the federal government divvied up a $28 million surplus among the states. But there were strings attached: If the secretary of the Treasury ever wanted it back, the states would have to hand it over.

After 144 years, those strings were quietly cut in the waning moments of the Carter administration.

And New Jersey, which had salted away its share in a special trust fund all those years, now has three-quarters of a million dollars to spend.

"I can't say we're turning cartwheels, but it will help," said Robert Cubberly, supervisor of the bureau of the budget.

Dubbed "found money," New Jersey's $764,670.60 is being transferred out of the trust fund and will be used to help balance the budget, according to Daniel J. O'Hern, chief counsel to Gov. Brendan Byrne.

The fund came into being under the Revenue Sharing Act of 1836, when the federal government found itself with a surplus far above the $5 million it was allowed by law to keep.

"The money apparently was distributed according to the proportion of members in the House and Senate, but there's no documentation of that," U.S. Treasury staff accountant James Zurawski said Tuesday. "We don't know the nitty-gritty of how it was computed."

He said $28,101,644.91 was paid out in three installments. There was to have been a total of four payments, but the last was rescinded "because of changes in the economy and the goverment at the time," said Zurawski.

The states had the use of their share — and the interest if they chose to bank it — with the proviso that they return the money if the secretary of the Treasury ever wanted it back, Walter Jordan, assistant controller of finance for the Treasury Department, explained Monday.

But the federal government never asked for the money, and each year New Jersey withdrew the interest, transferring it to the state's general fund or investing it.

New Jersey officials were unable to calculate the total interest that had accrued since 1836. But the interest for fiscal year 1979 totaled $47,911, said Harry Fitzwater, section supervisor of the state Bureau of Accounting. For 1980, it was $54,273.

Since 1978, the interest has been transferred to the New Jersey Cash Management Fund, which invests the state's "working capital," Fitzwater said Tuesday.

The obligation for New Jersey and the other states to return their original shares to the federal government ended because of a law signed by Jimmy Carter on Dec. 28, 1980, Jordan said.

The Treasury Department alerted the governor to the law last month. Since then, part of the principal has been transferred, and officials are in the process of closing down the fund, Fitzwater said.

"It will make a nice addition to the general fund," Cubberly said.

"But when we're talking about needing $220 million, $760,000 plus is great, but it doesn't solve any problems. I can't say we're turning cartwheels, but it will help."

Hard Luck Bangladesh Taking Steps To Recovery

By JAMES W. HATTON
Associated Press Writer

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — In the 10 years after breaking from Pakistan and becoming a nation on its own, Bangladesh faced monumental problems. It has been buffeted by cyclones and other violent storms, drowned in a tidal wave, starved by famines, afflicted by epidemics and assailed by economic and social problems endemic to all poor countries.

A hard-luck country — "an international basket case," former U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger once called it.

But Bangladesh recently hosted an 18-nation film festival, modest in scope and importance, but a clear mark of the progress that the country has begun to make.

The festival was, as Information and Broadcasting Minister Shamsul Huda Chowdhury said in his welcoming speech, mainly a way to expose local film makers to modern techniques.

But back in the days just after independence — proclaimed March 26, 1971, and achieved nine months later after a war with Pakistan — a film festival would have been unthinkable.

The problems of post-war reconstruction were enormous, and complicated further by disasters inflicted by nature.

At its birth, Bangladesh still was recovering from a monstrous cyclone the year before that killed an estimated 300,000 people and destroyed vast tracts of land. A tidal wave in 1974 took some 2,500 lives, and famine that followed claimed tens of thousands more.

In 1978, a violent spring storm off Bangladesh in the Bay of Bengal sank 100 boats and killed 1,000 people, while a flood a month later left more than 400,000 people homeless. Yet another flood and another famine hit the nation again in 1979.

A variety of epidemics throughout the 1970s also claimed hundreds of Bangladeshi lives.

The struggling new nation became the world-wide symbol of poverty. Posters of crying children with distended bellies touched hearts and emptied pocketbooks. Aiding Bangladesh became a global movement.

There was no time for frivolities in this crowded South Asian of 90 million people shoe-horned into a land the size of Wisconsin.

Kissinger called the country a basket case in 1974, but there was a new turn two years later, when an army colonel, Ziaur Rahman, took over in a coup and immediately began urging his people to work harder, produce more and help him pull the country out of its troubles.

One of President Rahman's pet projects has been a program of canal-building to irrigate vast tracts of farmland, and in response to his call, legions of Bangladeshis have volunteered their labor.

He also has coupled his bootstrap patriotism with a policy of accepting help offered by the outside world.

Unlike neighboring Burma (which has virtually isolated itself) and India (which preaches self-sufficiency and scorns much outside aid), Bangladesh welcomes all currencies (57 percent of its current budget comes from outside aid). It also accepts, with grace, the inevitable strings attached.

This has meant grants and loans to develop improved varieties of seed grains and to build factories that produce fertilizers. It has meant that after four disastrous crops and a resulting famine in 1979-80, Bangladesh has come back with four successive bumper crops, including one now ready for harvest.

Further, Bangladesh is on the verge of agricultural self-sufficiency — within a few years, Western experts predict — and some day could even become a grain exporter.

The opening up of the country also has given Dacca, the capital, a Western-Japanese hue.

Telly (Kojak) Savalas and Rex (My Fair Lady) Harrison vie for viewers during the several hours of daily programming on Dacca's two television channels. Western products, particularly soft drinks and toiletries, are readily available. Foreign-made automobiles (mostly Japanese) ply the streets, though Dacca remains still basically a city of bicycle-drawn rickshaws.

Despite these improvements, Bangladesh still faces major problems, some of which seem insoluble.

Planning Minister Fasihuddin Mahtab wrote last May in the preface to the country's second five-year plan that development efforts in the previous decade had been geared mostly to pumping life back into the war-ravaged economy, and as a result, "mass proverty has further widened."

"The per-capita income of 1,992 takas (about $120) per annum is an indicator of many kinds of deprivations," Mahtab wrote. "It is estimated that over three-fourths of the population are below the internationally accepted poverty line. About 30 percent of the labor force is unemployed, while 50 percent of the rural population has no land or less than one acre from which to scratch a living."

Bangladesh still is saddled with an exploding population, high inflation, the propensity for natural disasters, a hog-tied economy and a basic lack of resources.

President Rahman has long been aware that a mushrooming population — officially pegged at 2.7 percent a year — is Bangladesh's most serious problem.

For years, he has preached "two (children) are enough," and lately he has been heard to remark that "one is enough." In a speech in March marking the 10th anniversary of the independence proclamation, the president warned that Bangladesh might even "cease to exist" if its population is allowed to exceed 100 million.

The government also announced recently that inflation was 10 percent during February. Western observers, however, say the rate is much higher. Both the government and the observers agree the rate was well below that of a year ago during the famine.

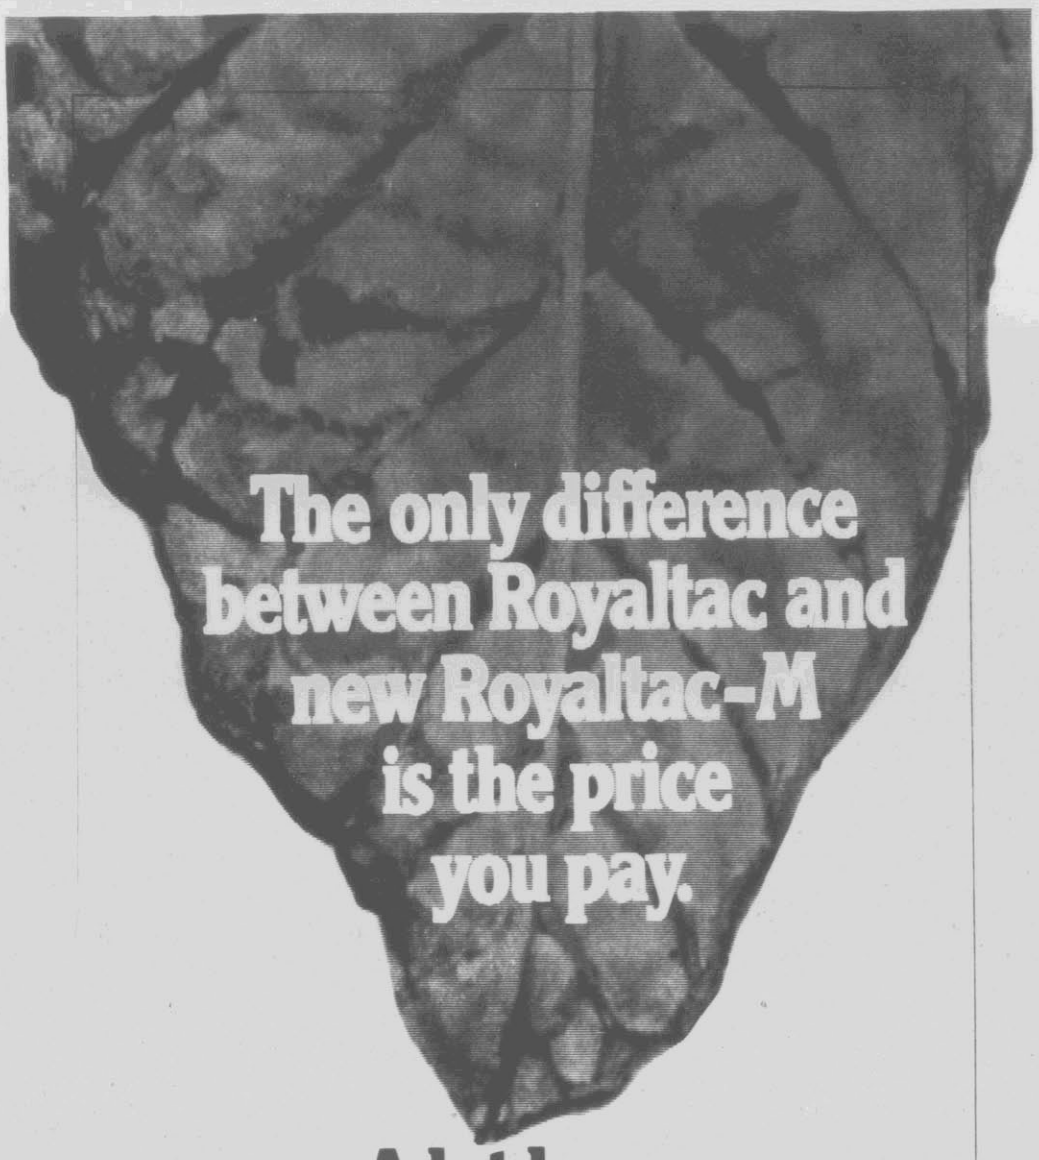

Situated on the Bay of Bengal, Bangladesh is prey to all kinds of freakish weather. Even with improved seeds, fertilizers and growing methods, a delay of just a few weeks in the annual monsoon rains can mean the difference between enough food and having to go to the world grain markets — at the cost of precious foreign reserves — to avoid famine.

That Bangladesh's foreign reserves continue to dwindle is the result of its heavy dependency on jute for its export earnings. One bad crop leaves the country with little to sell abroad.

One particularly bright spot, however, is the potentially huge reserves of natural gas. They have not been measured, but experts estimate they could run in the trillions of cubic feet. If the natural gas industry can be developed as planned, Bangladesh not only would have a second and highly lucrative export but would simultaneously be able to reduce its imports of expensive oil.

SURVIVOR — John Thompson, 39, can understand what is said to him and even smile, four days after a seven-foot crowbar smashed through his brain in an auto accident. The bar was in the back of the automobile and flew like an arrow through his head. The resident of Boston's Hyde Park section is on the danger list, in fair condition, at Boston City Hospital. Israeli Right-Wing Party Is Seeing New Support

By GALINA VROMEN
Associated Press Writer

KEDDUMIM, Occupied West Bank (AP) — By claiming that Israel has a God-given right to all captured Arab lands, a small splinter party is gnawing at Prime Minister Menachem Begin's support among the very people who helped bring him to power — ultranationalist Israelis.

With the approach of the June 30 election in which occupied Arab lands will be a key issue, the Tehiya (Resurrection) Party is confident it will win enough votes to play a role in shaping policy toward these territories.

Tehiya is going heavy on youth and patriotism, bombarding the country with full-page newspaper advertisements featuring a handsome young man holding up a huge Israeli flag.

For its first national convention April 22 it brought about 1,000 supporters to this a Jewish settlement of 135 families in the heart of the West Bank of the Jordan River. They sang songs, sipped coffee from thermos flasks and listened to Tehiya leaders denounce Begin for supposedly being soft on the Arabs.

Begin's Likud Bloc is parading settlements, such the one here at Keddumim, as its greatest achievement in its four years in power. But Tehiya complains that much more could have been done.

The party is hoping for the votes of Israelis who supported Likud in 1977 because it promised a tough policy toward the Arabs, and who now feel let down by the 1979 Camp David peace treaty Begin signed with President Anwar Sadat of Egypt.

Tehiya accuses Begin of trading oilfields and strategic military bases in the Sinai Peninsula for promises on paper, and of renouncing Israel's claim to the West Bank and Gaza Strip by offering autonomy to the 1.2 million Arabs of these areas. Tehiya wants to halt the withdrawal from Sinai, scheduled for completion next April, and to proclaim the rest of the occupied lands part of Israel. The Sinai and the Gaza Strip, along with the Golan Heights of Syria, were taken by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war.

The party was founded by Geula Cohen and Moshe Shamir, members of Parliament who split with Likud over the peace treaty. It finds much of its support among the 29,000 Jews living in 127 settlements in occupied areas — Jews who fear they will lose their homes as the peace treaty with Egypt expands.

Tehiya leaders talk confidently about winning about eight seats in the 120-member parliament, the Knesset. Opinion polls predict the party will win four seats, but even these could make or break a coalition government if the race between Likud and the opposition Labor Party is as close as forecast.

What lifts Tehiya above other ultranationalist parties running in the election is its alliance with Gush Emunim, the mystical "Bloc of the Faithful" which has been the prime mover behind settling Jews in the West Bank.

Gush Emunim formerly backed the National Religious Party, the senior member of every coalition government that has ruled Israel. But in the campaign for this election Gush Emunim has thrown its support to Tehiya to punish the National Religious Party for backing the peace treaty.

Tehiya is the only party that captures the atmosphere of religious fervor around the West Bank yet retains its appeal to secular right wingers. Its leader, Professor Yuval Ne'eman, is an eminent physicist and a secular man. Hanan Porath, who is high on Tehiya's list of candidates for the Knesset, is a Gush Emunim figure and strictly Orthodox Jew.

Tehiya has already shown its potential by manipulating Likud and the Labor Party into backing a Parliament bill last July that strengthened Israel's annexation of Arab Jerusalem.

At the convention here, Ne'eman vowed that next on the list would be the Golan Heights and other areas of the West Bank.

"... Jews, Judea and Sa... (the West Bank's bi... names) are sacred," say... Yael Weiler, a 20-ye...r-old woman who said she plans to vote for Tehiya. "What we won in the 1967 war was God-given and Israel doesn't have the au...ority to turn it over to the Palestinians, Jordanians or anybody else."

Is There A President Among Freshmen In House?

By ARNOLD SAWISLAK
UPI Senior Editor

WASHINGTON (UPI) — When the 80th Congress convened in 1947, 91 freshmen were sworn in as members of the House of Representatives. Nine of them were to become senators, four were future governors and two of the youngest became president of the United States.

The 97th Congress opened shop on Jan. 5 with 74 new House members taking the oath.

It was impossible to tell if there was a John Kennedy or Richard Nixon standing among the 1981 freshmen that day, but if recent past experience is any guide, many of the nation's leaders of the future probably were in the House chamber with their right hands raised.

Contrary to popular belief, the House, not the Senate, was the starting place for most recent presidents.

Four of the last six presidents began their political careers in the House as young men. Kennedy, Nixon and Lyndon Johnson went on to the Senate, but Gerald Ford never served anywhere else in government before becoming President.

And, while Ronald Reagan continued the trend of former governors becoming president that began with Jimmy Carter, the new vice president, George Bush, is a former House member.

The freshman class of 1981 includes 22 new members age 35 or less. It is this group that should attract the most attention, again for historical reasons. Both Kennedy and Johnson were elected to the House at age 29; Nixon was 33 when he came to Washington; Ford, the oldest at 35.

The youngest of this year's crop is Rep. John LeBoutellier, 27. He is only months older than two other 27-year-old Republicans, Reps. John Hiler of Indiana and Christopher Smith of New Jersey.

In all, the GOP sent seven new members in their 20s. Reps. David Drier of California, Vin Weber of Minnesota and Jack Fields of Texas are 28; Rep. Steve Gunderson of Wisconsin is 29.

The rest of the 35-and-under freshman class includes Reps. Bob McEwen, R-Ohio, Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, and David McCurdy, D-Okla., all 30; Royden Dyson, D-Md., Dennis Hertel, D-Mich., and Ron Wyden, D-Ore., all 31; Duncan Hunter, R-Texas, and Samuel Gejedenson, D-Conn., both 32; Bill Lowery, R-Calif., Judd Gregg, R-N.H., Claudine Schneider, R-R.I., and John Napier, R-S.C., all 33; James K. Coyne, R-Pa., 34; and Larry Craig, R-Idaho, 35.

This group's ideological coloration spans the spectrum from right to left, but many of them share a common difficult experience — they had to knock off incumbent House members to get to Washington.

Although some might say the new Republicans rode Reagan's coattails, taking a House seat away from any sitting member is regarded as a feat. Hiler, who beat House Democratic Whip John Brademas, probably brought down the biggest trophy, although Smith's defeat of Frank Thompson, chairman of the House Administration Committee, was no mean accomplishment, despite the incumbent's Abscam indictment.

Other Republicans who beat Democratic incumbents were Hunter, LeBoutellier, Coyne, Schneider, Fields, Gunderson and Napier, who also knocked off an Abscam defendant, John Jenrette.

The lone young Democrat to beat a GOP incumbent was Dyson, who defeated Rep. Robert Bauman after the congressman was charged with making homosexual advances to a minor.

There are some other common threads among the new young lawmakers: Seven were members of their state government, usually as legislators, and several others were active in local government. Attorneys, as in the Congress at large, dominate the freshman class, but two, Schneider and Weber, come from the media. And two others, Drier and Hiler, listed themselves as marketing executives.

The best known of the young freshmen members may be LeBoutellier, who was dubbed the "enfant terrible" of the conservative movement by Newsweek magazine.

Like William F. Buckley in an earlier generation, LeBoutellier got national notice in his early 20s by writing a scathing book about his Ivy League college, in this case Harvard.

His attack on the school's intellectual biases drew attention from such well-connected conservatives as Justin Dart, one of Reagan's close friends, and former Treasury Secretary William Simon. They helped LeBoutellier in his long shot Long Island race against Democrat Lester Wolff.

As soon as he had won, LeBoutellier abandoned observance of the Washington folkway that freshmen congressmen should keep their eyes and ears open and their mouths shut for at least their first two-year term.

He was quoted as describing the Reagan cabinet selections as "boring," and denouncing Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., about to become chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, as a "wimp" and an "idiot."

LeBoutellier's performance to date has raised some eyebrows.

In a profile of the new congressman, the Washington Star quoted an unnamed New York House member as saying: "You can't keep mouthing off the way he does and expect to survive. Personally, I think he's way too arrogant for his age and just a spoiled rich brat."

Precocious young congressmen actually are nothing new in Washington. David Stockman, Reagan's Budget Director and economic "point man," was elected to the House in 1976 at age 30 after six years experience as a congressional staffer.

He reportedly upset a number of both his elders and his peers when he offered to dispense free advice to his freshmen colleagues at a briefing for new members in 1977. There were a number of predictions then that a new member that cocksure would never amount to anything.

A pair of more typical young freshmen congressman are Republican Hiler, 27, of LaPorte, Ind., and Democrat Wyden, 30, of Portland, Ore.

Hiler is older only than LeBoutellier in the new class, but he got a lot of attention because he pulled off the GOP coup of the year in 1980 by defeating John Brademas, who was third in the House Democratic power structure.

Slim, modishly dressed and quick to smile, Hiler's conversational style is crisp and studded with terms that reflect his background as a marketing executive.

Asked about his victory over the 22-year congressional veteran from South Bend, Hiler ticked off an impressive list of campaign accomplishments: 800,000 pieces of direct mail, thousands upon thousands of telephone calls to voters and "10,000 yard signs ... can you picture 10,000 yard signs in one congressional district?"

Hiler paid a kind of tribute to Brademas in saying the incumbent "never backed off" from his liberal positions and that helped Hiler stake out his own conservative position that big government was fueling inflations and hurting "long term growth" of the economy.

That, plus "a loss of district identification" and "a low tolerance for criticism" hurt Brademas, Hiler said.

Others may be impressed by Hiler's feat, but he has no feeling of having done anything special.

"When you get here, you realize that getting elected, which was everything in the district, is no big thing. After all, 434 others did the same thing," he says.

Hiler sees his chore now to earn his spurs "by doing the nitty gritty work" of Congress: working in committees and on the House floor, attending to district business.

The last is a special concern for Hiler. Determined not to get tarred with the brush of inattention to the people who elected him, the young congressman returned to Indiana four times in the first six weeks of the session.

He was interviewed the day after the week-long Lincoln Birthday recess, and had to be fetched from a lengthy subcommittee meeting by aides who said he had been gone all day and was falling behind on his appointments.

But he was bouncy and fresh when he returned to his office in a corridor that offers views of an interior courtyard (the most desirable offices look out on the Capitol) and talked about Topic A — the Reagan budget cuts.

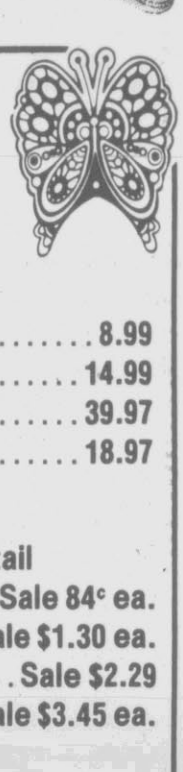

"I was told everywhere, 'You've got to support the President.' There was not a single case of someone saying, 'Don't cut here.' People have a realization that we've got to get a handle on this spending."

Ron Wyden's office is in the same place as Hiler's on another floor of the Longworth Office Building, which is considered the least desirable of the three big structures used by members of the House and their staffs.

Wyden, a former college basketball player at the University of California-Santa Barbara and University of Oregon law graduate, looks somewhat like Judd Hirsch.

Boston Has Building Boom Amidst Financial Woes

By FRED BAYLES
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — In the middle of financial bust, Boston is undergoing an unprecedented building boom.

Seven hotels, boasting 3,400 rooms, are under construction. Four new skyscrapers are going up, sparking a downtown revitalization that will create 4 million square feet of new or renovated office space. This after two decades of prosperity and renewal.

Yet the city's 64,000 public school children attend classes under a court order while its City Council haggles over how it keep the bankrupt system open until June. And demonstrators tie up rush hour traffic to protest layoffs of police officers, firefighters and city employees.

"People are wondering what's going on," Mayor Kevin White says. "One minute they hear Boston is in great shape and the next minute you hear she's falling apart."

Great shape — a liveable city of theaters and parks, a once-ramshackle maze of abandoned warehouses polished up and now fancy, expensive waterfront condominiums, refurbished and bustling Faneuil Hall Market drawing 1 million visitors a month.

Falling apart — a city over $75 million behind in property tax repayments ordered by a state court and looking ahead to a $118 million drop in revenues next year, with 5,000 of its 12,000 municipal workers facing layoff.

And its increasing inability to borrow money via the bond market has meant that Boston's spending for bridges, tunnels and roads is roughly half what it was early in the decade, according to a new study by The Urban Institute in Washington. As a result, three-quarters of the city's bridges are in need of major repair, and other repairs are way behind.

White blames the financial problems on Proposition 2½, approved by Massachusetts voters, including nearly 90,000 Boston residents, last November. The measure limits property tax to 2½ percent of market value. With a tax rate approaching 10 percent, the city was hit hard.

"Boston has a thriving economy caged in an antique governmental and government finance system," says David Rosenbloom, commissioner of city hospitals and head of a special budget committee advising the mayor.

"Since fiscal 1975, the city has spent $121 million above appropriation," says Samuel Tyler, associate director of the Boston Municipal Research Bureau which monitors the city's financial health for the local business community.

"The city has had the practice of spending beyond appropriation and then raising taxes to cover it," Tyler says. "Last year the city spent $25 million above its budget."

In the past, the city could roll over deficits to the next year and raise taxes. Proposition 2½ prohibited that.

The current school crisis is an example of the problem. The school system has overspent its budget every year since 1972; it has survived six violent years of court-ordered busing and a 25 percent drop in enrollment.

The city's problems are compounded because it is property poor. Only 20 percent of the greater Boston area is actually in Boston; other major cities take up about two-thirds of their metropolitan area.

In addition, this center of New England intellectual life — with its many universities, research hospitals, theaters and museums, pays a price for its cultural advantages. Fifty percent of the city land is tax-exempt; 75 percent of that is public property, largely owned by the state.

Despite the attention given ritzy waterfront condominiums and the old money of Beacon Hill, there are also few affluent neighborhoods. A U.S. Labor Department survey in 1978 showed Boston had a per capita income of $7,700 while the greater Boston area registered a per capita income of $8,300.

Alexander Ganz, research director of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, says Boston has 20 percent of the metropolitan area's population, but contains 40 percent of the families living under the poverty level.

"Boston is emerging as two cities," says Ganz. "There is a rapid growth in the northern, downtown section of the city. The southern section — the other city — has been improving with housing and public facilities, but it is still losing population and has a concentration of lower income households."

Critics say for a poor city, Boston's spending is way over national averages. Tyler says U.S. Census figures show that Boston spends $124 per capita for police protection, more than any other U.S. city of comparable size. Its fire protection is also the most expensive — $85 per capita or nearly double any comparable city.

Local officials also complain that state-mandated programs have pushed te cost of municipal government up, forcing local governments to raise property taxes. In Massachusetts cities can only raise money through property taxes; state law does not allow other local taxes.

The local officials note that reliance on property taxes is greater in Massachusetts because state aid to municipalities is relatively low.

"The principal problem is that the power to spend has been divorced from the power to tax," says Rosenbloom.

Finally, White has been criticized as a free spender. Known as "Mayor Deluxe" to some City Hall wags, White told reporters last month that his staff — including 12 public relations people — was as important to the city as police or firefighters. He planned, then canceled, a $90,000 city hall lunchroom.

"I'm no spender," the mayor says. "I will match my spending against anyone in the state. I manage this city very, very well."

Most believe the city will be in good shape if it can get past the current crisis. But there are questions about what kind of city will be created in the frenzy of building.

Tyler points out that outside the thriving downtown area, much of Boston's resources are limited to "very poor, residential neighborhoods."

"If you're looking at the gross numbers, it's pretty good," he says. "But it really doesn't affect the residents of the city. You've got great looking office towers that provide jobs for people who live in the suburbs when there are supermarkets closing in the neighborhoods."

Judge Bars Letter Sale

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge has granted a request from tennis star Billie Jean King to temporarily bar her former homosexual lover from selling some 100 letters that Mrs. King wants to keep "forever private and confidential."

Documents filed by Mrs. King's lawyer allege that Marilyn Barnett had been threatening for two to three years to publish personal letters Mrs. King wrote to her during their affair "if Billie Jean King did not give Marilyn Barnett what she wanted."

The documents say Ms. Barnett claimed she had been offered $25,000 by the National Enquirer for rights to some 100 letters which Mrs. King wrote to her during their love affair.

Neither Ms. Barnett nor her lawyer could be reached, and there was no immediate comment from the newspaper.

Meanwhile, the Women's Tennis Association urged Mrs. King to remain its president. WTA Executive Director Jerry Diamond said that 10 of the WTA's 15 board members had been polled following King's offer to resign after she admitted to the relationship with Ms. Barnett and all favored her staying on.

PAPAL APPOINTEE

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II has named Monsignor Antonio Petti, an Italian, to the Vatican post which investigates whether a person is qualified to be beatified or canonized.

STING MAN — Jesse Richardson of Jacksonville (N.C.) tries to coax this swarm of bees in one of his peach trees in his back yard to enter the hive he has for them on the ground. Richardson said that it was the largest swarm he has ever seen in his years of keeping bees for a hobby. Richardson claims they rarely sting him but they got the photographer several times before he got away. (AP Laserphoto)

Million-Dollar Home-Buyer Also Must Go Hunting

By The Associated Press

Even for the home buyer with a million dollars in his pocket, the hunt is not always easy. Those price tags are hard to find. But once found, the homes are — in a word — lovely.

In an elegant section of San Francisco, a two-story home with nine generous rooms, three bathrooms, a garage, terraced garden, heated pool and cabana is on the market for $1.1 million.

The home, built in 1925 and redecorated in 1971, has a spacious foyer and a large living room with an antique marble fireplace, French doors and a garden view. A second-floor master bedroom has an office alcove, another marble fireplace and French doors opening to a balcony over the garden.

In Los Angeles, a long driveway leads to the iron gates outside a ranch-style million-dollar home on 3.5 acres of land overlooking the valley.

The house, with 7,200 square feet of living space, has tennis courts, an Olympic-sized pool, four bedrooms, six bathrooms, three fireplaces and a maid's quarters. There is a separate guest house, a chauffeur's quarters over the garage and a poolhouse with his and her dressing rooms.

A two-story Georgian-style house in Dallas has a $1.6 million price tag. The five-bedroom home, only three years old, has 9½ baths, a pool, formal living room, dining room, den, study, walk-in wine closet and a marble floor in the foyer.

It has alternate master suites — one upstairs and one down. There's a music room, a guest suite, cabana with the pool, sauna, tennis court, hot tub and putting green.

In Miami Beach, on Biscayne Bay, "a dream house on Millionaire's Row, elegant and private" is a steal at $990,000, a real estate agent says.

Built in 1934, it has a 250-foot frontage on the bay, three bedrooms and three baths on the first floor. A formal dining area, modern kitchen and game room, too.

Two bedrooms and two baths with a sitting room and library are upstairs and you can get there by elevator. The house has an alarm system, a detached two-bedroom servants' quarters, a three-car garage, outdoor dance pavilion and patio, pool with cabana and a large dock. Pineapple and palm trees cover the lot.

In Chicago, $1 million buys a classic three-story red brick home on more than four wooded acres with a winding ravine near Lake Michigan. The home has a morning room, a music alcove, two guest powder rooms, a plant room and an office — and that's just on the first floor.

A circular staircase or elevator takes you to the second floor's six bedrooms and two marble fireplaces. A large entertainment room takes up much of the third floor. The wine closet and work room are in the basement.

In Louisiana, restored homes with million-dollar price tags are found about halfway between New Orleans and Baton Rouge. Most of these spreads have a long driveway, an eight-acre lot and a stable. The houses have 12-foot ceilings, modern kitchens, parlors, dens, dining rooms and — of course — studies.

In the Birmingham-Bloomfield Hills area of suburban Detroit, the president of one of the automakers recently bought a $900,000 home on 1½ acres with 400 feet of lakefront. The home has 14 rooms, including four bedrooms, an indoor swimming pool and three fireplaces.

Seasoning Not All Salt

DAVIS, Calif. (UPI) — Seasoning food doesn't have to mean salting it, says Bernie Schweigert, chairman of the food science and technology department at the University of California at Davis.

Schweigert's suggestions include:

—Try to buy fresh or unprocessed foods instead of canned or packaged counterparts.

—Sprinkle herbs on poultry, meat, fish, vegetables and soft cheese, or into the bread batters in place of salt.

—Lemon, lime and orange juices are also good flavoring alternates to salt.

—So are wine and other alcoholic beverages, especially for sauces or marinades. But avoid cooking wines — most have sodium added.

—Avoid frying — it demands salt for flavor.

—To help break the salt shaker habit, place shakers of parsley, garlic powder or dill on the table instead.

—For extra nutrition, taste and eye-appeal, use toppings of chopped, hard-cooked egg, chopped mushrooms, green onions or chives. Toast sesame or sunflower seeds, wheat germ or bread cubes in a broiler and sprinkle on vegetables, fruits, soups and casseroles.

—Serve fruits and vegetables raw. They have more flavor than the same things cooked, and require less seasoning.
