Traffic Snarls May Be Here To Stay

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

In the past few years, motor vehicle traffic in and around Greenville has increased as more and more people have come here to live, work, shop, study and receive medical attention. And as the city continues to grow, so will the traffic.

What were once bypasses — Greenville Boulevard and Memorial Drive — now carry more traffic than any other streets or highways in the area. Some merchants along Greenville Boulevard even say the heavy traffic along that route hurts business because it's too hard to get on and off the roadway.

Traffic on other streets is building too. The area around Elm and Tenth Streets is a bottle neck at 5 o'clock. Traffic on Dickinson Avenue, Evans Street, 14th Street, Arlington Boulevard, and others, is heavy during rush hours.

According to the latest Department of Transportation average daily traffic counts, some 26,200 cars and trucks passed along Memorial Drive, just south of the Greenville Boulevard intersection in 1979 as compared with 13,500 per day in 1976, while 19,400 vehicles traveled the roadway a quarter-mile north of the Greenville Boulevard intersection (14,000 in 1976). The traffic count on Memorial Drive just south of West End Circle showed 20,700 per day in 1979 as compared with 2,000 a day in 1976. Still further north, just south of the Tar River Bridge, some 16,560 vehicles per day are listed, compared to 12,400 in 1976.

Along Greenville Boulevard, 16,400 vehicles are listed just east of the Memorial Drive intersection, as compared with 13,500 in 1976, while at the railroad crossing west of the Evans Street intersection, 22,300 cars and trucks were reported (18,400 in 1976). To the east of the Evans Street intersection, 19,300 vehicles are reported (16,000 in 1976), and at Pitt Plaza, the count was 22,800 (20,300 in 1976).

In 1976, 3,400 vehicles per day were reported using the Stantonsburg Road between Memorial Drive and the site of Pitt Memorial Hospital. In 1979, the traffic count in front of the hospital totaled 6,200 vehicles per day.

On Evans Street, just south of the Greenville Boulevard intersection, the count jumped from 3,500 vehicles per day in 1976 to 5,600 per day in 1979, while the traffic on Evans, just south of the Tenth Street intersection rose from 7,000 vehicle per day in 1976 to 9,600 in 1979.

Suzuki Minister Quits As Japan Mounts Crisis

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's foreign minister quit Saturday, and a seasoned diplomat replaced him in an apparent attempt to stifle criticism that Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki let President Reagan maneuver him into a dangerous, new military relationship with the United States.

Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito announced he was quitting to "accept responsibility" for the crisis. Sunao Sonoda, another ruling party stalwart who served two previous governments as foreign minister and is now minister of health and welfare, took over the crucial post.

Sonoda was a paratroop officer in the Japanese Imperial Army in World War II and is a master of Japanese martial arts. The Foreign Ministry's No. 3 official, Vice Foreign Minister Masuo Takashima, also resigned but Sonoda will decide his fate, spokesmen said.

Ito's decision to resign was in a time-honored Japanese tradition in which senior officials quit their jobs to take the blame for their own or their colleagues' failings or misdeeds.

The uproar has focused on the wording and the timing of the joint communique issued by Suzuki and Reagan after their May 7-8 summit in Washington — in particular its reference to the existence of an "alliance" between the two governments.

Opponents, led by the minority Japan Socialist party, and press critics charged that the "alliance" would violate Japan's post-World War II constitution prohibiting any but defensive military forces, and commit Japan to joining the United States in a future war.

Suzuki has denied the charge, saying the word "alliance" added nothing to the existing relationship based on the longstanding U.S.-Japan mutual security treaty. He called the word simply another way to express "a general relationship of our two countries which share such values as democracy and freedom."

Out of apparent concern that the issue might reverberate beyond Japan, perhaps generating new problems in the U.S.-Japan relationship, Foreign Ministry officials characterized the crisis as a purely "domestic" one, politically motivated and not directly related to the communique's substance.

CELEBRATION — Marine Pfc. Garwood Wins Acquittal, Says He's 'Come Home To America'

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Marine Pfc. Robert Garwood, convicted of collaborating with the enemy in Vietnam, was acquitted Saturday of sexually molesting a 7-year-old girl. He said tearfully that he felt he had "finally come home to America."

Garwood, who is appealing his military conviction for collaboration, was found innocent by a state jury on charges that could have brought a life sentence. His military conviction carries no prison term.

Tears ran down Donna Long's face as she said of her fiance: "Three times he fought for his life, once against the government of Vietnam, once against the government of the United States and once against the state."

And the 35-year-old Garwood, smiling for the first time in public since the trial began, said: "For the first time since I was 19 years old, I'm free."

The 12-member Superior Court jury acquitted Garwood after a total of about 2½ hours of deliberations. The verdict Saturday morning after about 35 minutes of deliberations came as a surprise — Friday night, jurors told Superior Court Judge Robert Rouse Jr. they were a long way from a decision.

Jurors cleared Garwood of a first-degree sex offense, attempted rape, attempted first-degree sex offense and taking indecent liberties with a 7-year-old girl.

The girl's parents, Michael and Dorothy Gallen, had been friends of Garwood's. Gallen pushed his way through the crowd in the courtroom, saying, "Get away from me, get away from me!" and that he would "have plenty of comments later." His wife cried.

The jury was hustled out and its members were not available for comment. The prosecutor declined to comment.

Garwood was a 19-year-old Marine when he was captured by the Viet Cong, and returned to the United States voluntarily in 1979. In February, a military jury convicted him of collaborating with the enemy during his years as a prisoner of war, and he was sentenced to a dishonorable discharge and forfeiture of pay. He is on leave pending appeal.

Flanked by Mrs. Long and his attorneys, Vaughan Taylor and Edward Bailey, Garwood said after the verdict:

"I want to thank everyone and everybody that has written letters to me and supported my family and me. They've given me a lot of encouragement to keep on going.

"I fought so long, so hard," he said in a whisper, tears spilling onto his cheeks and his 34-year-old fiancee's head on his shoulder. "God bless America. Thank you."

He said his plans included returning to a Virginia hospital for psychiatric treatment, and that he and Mrs. Long would announce a wedding date later. He left the hospital May 4 after undergoing treatment since shortly after his court-martial in February.

Mrs. Long, a widow, has two sons, aged 10 and 15. Garwood has been living with the family in Jacksonville.

Summer Jobs Outlook: Farm Work Or Nothing

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

Young people looking for work this summer are facing a virtual certainty — work in agriculture or forget it. Adults can't really hope for more.

Pitt County's unemployment rate has remained constant for several weeks at just over 7 percent, and that leaves little leeway for inexperienced or temporary employees to find non-agricultural jobs, according to Employment Security Commission manager James Hannan.

A survey of fast-food restaurants and industries in the Greenville area backs up Hannan's assessment.

Bojangles opened a restaurant in Greenville May 7 and found itself innundated with job applications. Gerald Forrest, manager of the restaurant, said he stopped counting applicants at 1,500 but that several hundred more filled out job forms before he hired 52 workers.

A McDonald's restaurant manager, Glenn Letchworth, said "we are getting flooded" with applications, including "an unusual number for full-time jobs."

"They are people just looking for a (full-time) job," said Letchworth, "and we hired a bunch."

An assistant manager at a Hardee's assessed the situation at his restaurant, which has only two openings to replace college graduates: "We can be kind of picky" because of the number of applications on file.

Hannan said construction firms were doing limited hiring now, but mostly were seeking skilled workers. "And they can find them," he said.

Some of the major employers, such as Procter & Gamble and Eaton, are not taking applications. Procter & Gamble spokesman Tim Norris said his company has not hired anyone since mid-1980 and "we're guessing there will be no hiring until the end of this year or early next year."

A spokesman at Empire Brush said applications are being taken three times a week, but jobs are scarce.

A similar situation exists at Fieldcrest Mills, where personnel manager Carroll Riggan said applications are being taken although there are no openings. Fieldcrest laid off 37 employees earlier this year, but Riggan said the company now "is bringing most of them back in.

"It looks a lot better now," he said, but cast doubt on any new hiring until after the first of July.

Burroughs Wellcome does have some openings for clerical, technical and professional jobs, according to personnel spokeswoman Willie Carney. "We do not have that many openings, but we are accepting applications," Miss Carney said.

Burroughs Wellcome cut off acceptance of applications for production work last month when its file reached 1,500 names. Now, Miss Carney said, many of those who first sought production work are filing new applications for the clerical or technical jobs.

"It seems they are saying, 'Just let me in and I'll move over later,'" she said.

She said the number of applicants has increased steadily as the general economy remained stagnated.

Burroughs Wellcome has a summer program for young people, but those 40 positions have been filled for some time.

Personnel spokesmen at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the East Carolina School of Medicine said applications were continuing to be taken at each facility but no guarantees of jobs were available.

Melvin Brock, personnel director at the medical school, said it averages about 3,000 applicants annually. "We had some summer vacancies but we filled them, mostly with students," he said.

Hannan said the over-all employment picture would improve in the next few weeks as agricultural work becames available. He said that would be especially true for the 2,000 or so students actively seeking summer employment.

"If they are interested in agricultural work, we probably can place most of them," he said.

In general, Hannan said, the summer job picture is "not good at all ... (but) no worse than last summer."

Improving Pope To Give Prayer

ROME (UPI) — Pope John Paul II was taken off pain-killing drugs Saturday and his condition improved so dramatically that preparations were made for him to give his regular Sunday prayer broadcast from his hospital room.

Meanwhile, police revealed the pontiff was hit by two bullets instead of three in last week's assassination attempt.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, joined a stream of visitors Saturday to the pontiff's glass-enclosed, air-filtered hospital room. Other visitors included Italian President Sandro Pertini and John Paul's old friend and his 25-year personal physician from Poland, Dr. Gabriel Turowsky.

"The pope's constitution is one of the strongest I have known in my career," Turowsky said.

Rome's police scientific branch released a report saying two bullets, and not three as indicated previously, caused the wounds to the pope and two American women, Ann Odre, 60, of Buffalo, N.Y. an Rose Hall, 21, of Ayer, Mass, now a resident of West Germany.

Mrs. Odre, whose spleen was removed, is no longer on the critical list and Mrs. Hall underwent surgery on her left elbow Friday.

A medical bulletin issued by Gemelli hospital said the pope's intestines were functioning normally

Some Teachers Also Seek Summer Work . . .

By SUE FERNALD
Reflector Staff Writer

Come summer-time teachers are temporarily out of jobs, but these days most have to find work to keep up with the rising cost of living, while others choose to stay home to catch up on house chores.

Three area teachers discussed their plans for the summer giving insight into what educators do in their "time off."

Barbara McLawhorn, a business teacher who has been at D.H. Conley High School for 10 years and with the Pitt County School System for 23 years, says she has no special plans but her summer appears to be well organized. Her home suffered smoke damage while she was attending a workshop this year, and she plans to do some needed work.

In the past Mrs. McLawhorn, a former "teacher of the year," sold cucumbers and worked in tobacco to make extra money. "This is the first year I haven't had to pick cukes or tobacco," she said.

However, she wants to spend some time in her strawberry patch for her own pleasure, but is not going to sell any of the produce.

Further plans for the summer may include a computer workshop, she indicated, and perhaps a short time with her daughter, who is graduating this summer.

"In the past I've worked almost every summer. I'm single and have to supplement my income," says Arlene Murphy, a 14-year teacher with Wellcome Middle School and also a former teacher of the year. Her past jobs have included tutoring in her own home, serving as executive director of Operation Sunshine for three years, working at Brody's at Pitt Plaza and teaching summer school.

Traffic. . .

intersection rose from 7,800 vehicle a day in 1976 to 8,200 a day in 1979, while increasing from 3,300 in 1976 to 4,000 a day near the Greenville Boulevard intersection.

Strangely enough, traffic along Dickinson Avenue and Tenth Street decreased between 1976 and 1979.

The count on Dickinson Avenue between Hooker Road and West End Circle in 1976 totaled 12,700 vehicles per day while the 1979 count indicated only 8,800 cars and trucks each 24 hours. Likewise, some 14,600 vehicles a day were recorded east of the Southern Railroad overpass in 1976 as compared with 12,800 vehicles in 1979.

On Tenth Street, east of the Evans Street intersection the traffic count in 1976 was 11,200 vehicles, while in 1979, the count totaled 8,800. Further toward the east, between Charles Street and East Carolina University, 12,700 vehicles were reported in 1976 as compared to 10,700 in 1979. The count just west of the Greenville Boulevard intersection in 1976 showed 14,600 cars per day, while only 12,200 vehicles were reported in 1979.

According to Ron Sewell, director of engineering and inspections for the city, Dickinson Avenue is, "loaded," with 15,000 vehicle per day now. "Greene Street is pretty close to 10,000."

In February, the average daily count on Arlington Boulevard, 250 feet east of Evans Street was 7,606 while 250 feet west of Evans the count was 4,360. In downtown Greenville, some 10,000 cars a day pass through the intersection of Fifth and Reade Streets...about 7,000 on Fifth and 3,000 on Reade.

Greenville's traffic problem is a relative thing, according to Sewell. "What are you used to? People from Raleigh say we don't have any problems.

"We don't have the time delays a lot of places have," Sewell said. "There are periods, say for 15 minutes or so," during peak times, "when traffic on Dickinson Avenue is backed up three or four blocks. In 15 minutes it's gone.

"Is it worth spending that amount of money...however much it would cost...for 15 minutes of inconvenience? I don't know."

The City of Greenville, earlier this month, asked the N.C. Department of Transportation to include in its 1981-1987 Transportation Improvement Program a western loop to join the proposed 4-lane US 264 to the Eastern By-pass, a four-lane Dickinson Avenue from Eighth Street to West End Circle, a 4-lane 14th Street from Charles Street to Secondary Road 1726, a 4-lane Evans Street from 10th Street to Cannon's Cross Roads, and a 4-lane Arlington Boulevard, from Hooker Road to N.C. 43.

"If we don't get some additional tax money, I don't forsee anymore construction anywhere," DOT Second Division engineer Charlie Snell said last week. "Some people don't believe that. But I'm telling you the truth. We may even have to cut back on maintenance. It's just going to be bad."

According to Snell, "if we get the money, there will be some type of construction." But he pointed out that the only projects now in the seven-year TIP is the 4-laning of U.S. 264, N.C. 11-U.S. 13, and 4-laning N.C. 33 in front of Rivergate Shopping Center.

"If we include anything else," in the TIP, Snell said, referring to the city's requests, "without the money, it would not mean anything."

"It's really a serious problem that we are facing. We've got a lot of need. We simply don't have the where-with-all to do the work."

The city's big problem too, is money, according to Sewell. "The way money is right now," everything is, "long-range."

The only project in site from the city's standpoint in the 4-laning of 14th Street from the Seaboard Coast Line Railroad to Charles Street — nine blocks at a projected cost of $850,000. Bids for that project, financed through Community Development block grant funds, are scheduled to be opened within the next few months.

"Inflation has killed us on 14th Street ... driven the price out of sight," Sewall noted. "Five years ago we could have done it for $300,000."

With the high cost of construction and no money, "about the only thing we can do these days is re-time signals," Sewell suggested. By re-timing signals, using flashing lights at night and possibly removing some traffic lights, where possible, traffic can move more freely and, "can be a great savings to motorists," by conserving fuel.

The city's thoroughfare plan calls for a one-way system between Fourth and Fifth Streets. "It's long range," Sewell said. "We would like to upgrade the signal at Fifth and Elm Streets," but it would cost $20,000, he noted.

"Highways are designed for capacity level service," Sewell pointed out, "bumper to bumper but moving." But capacity is not always what the motorist desires."

Projecting that traffic along Greenville Boulevard and Memorial Drive will continue to increase, the best thing, according to Sewell, would be to, "start all over...build a by-pass." Since that's not possible in the forseeable future, he suggested, "Memorial Drive can survive like it is if a western loop is built." The completion of Arlington Boulevard to N.C. 43 would also help ease traffic on Memorial Drive and take some traffic off Greenville Boulevard as well.

As for Greenville Boulevard, he said the three traffic lights in the area around Pitt Plaza could be controlled with a master coordinating unit which would evaluate the demands of the traffic and automatically change the timing of the lights, "to give a better progression."

However, Sewell said such a project would cost $50,000 or more.

At the present time, Sewell pointed out, the city is having a computer analysis run to determine, "what is the optimum," for timing of traffic lights within the city. "We should get it within a month," but "it's not going to work everytime. It's just the best you can get."

"Over the next few years, I think you'll see cities, in general, in the worst of times," with new areas developing, needs increasing and funds decreasing. "All of a sudden we'll say, 'What will we do? We've got this big problem and there's just no money to do anything...'"

Teachers . . .

One summer she toured the Greek Islands. This summer she is in graduate school at East Carolina University, where she is pursuing a degree in administration supervision. Miss Murphy also plans to work part-time and has applied for several jobs.

One area she is particularly interested in is local industry. " I would like to learn what goes on in the operations of a plant so I could teach it during the school year," she said.

Chicod Elementary teacher Ann Davis intends to work around her home, "do a little gardening, painting, having fun and relaxing." In the past she says she has worked with Pitt County Schools in the library media program, and if it is in operation intends to help again. Mrs. Davis is the media coordinator for K-8 at Chicod.

As for inflation, she says it is a problem for her but not to the extent that it is with others.

Teachers with four years of college are paid $12,390 per year if they are certified "A-0", according to Donna Arp with Pitt County Schools. This certification applies to beginning or first year teachers. The scale increases up to 14-year teachers who receive $16,230 per year and are certified "A-13."

Judge Drops Anti-Publication Order

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A Superior Court judge dissolved a restraining order Saturday morning that prevented The Daily Times-News of Burlington from printing documents involving allegations of sexual harassment filed against a former Alamance County school principal.

Judge D. Marsh McLelland dissolved the restraining order in an unusual hearing after an attorney for former principal Henry G. Bright Jr. said his client had no further need to prevent publication of the information.

McLelland left the door open to future prior restraining orders, saying that he could find "no constitutional or statutory provisions exempting the press from prior restraint, including the First Amendment."

Bright's attorney, John Robert Kernodle Jr., said that the restraining order was no longer necessary because a peer review board in the case had concluded its review of the allegations.

"Circumstances have changed and Mr. Bright may respond to the charges against him," Kernodle said.

Bright was suspended Feb. 27 from his job as principal of Elon College Elementary School after six female employees employees filed complaints of sexual harassment.

E.E. Hatley, chairman of the state provessional review panel, said a decision was reached Thursday night on what to do about the allegations, and that both Bright and Alamance County school superintendent Robet Nelson would be notified of the action on Monday.

Playhouse To Stage 'I Do, I Do' Musical

The Pamlico Playhouse of Washington will present the musical comedy "I Do, I Do" at the Casablanca Resturant on May 22-23.

The production, dealing with marriage, begins with the wedding of Michael and Agnes, the only two characters in the show, and ends with them leaving the home they shared for 50 years. The show is based on the comedy "The Four Poster" by Jan deHartog.

The roles of Michael and Agnes are played by Christy Braswell and David Scearce. Braswell, from Grifton, has apeared in productions such as "Dark of the Moon," "Forum," "The Appletree" and "Magnolia" in Kinston. Scearce's experience includes "The Crucible," "Oklahoma," and "Hello Out There" in Kentucky. Scearce won the Louisville Region Best Actor Award and the Kentucky Best Actor Award.

"I Do, I Do" is being produced by Bevill Scearcy, and musical direction will be done by Alisha Weatherton of Greenville. Weatherton is also the pianist for the three-piece ensemble.

Musical selections for the show include "Flaming Agnes," My Daughter is Marrying an Idiot," "What Is A Woman," and "Where Are The Shows of Yesteryear?"

Dinner will be served at 7 p.m. The show, which begins at 8:15 p.m., will run 2½ hours. Tickets are $15 per person. Reservations can be made by calling 752-3304.

Board To Meet

The Sheppard Memorial Library Board of Trustees will hold its regularly scheduled meeting at 7:30 p.m., May 21, at the East Branch Library on Cedar Lane, from 7:30 to 8 p.m.

The trustees invite members of the public to come and state their opinions about library service and meet the trustees.

This meeting is an effort to encourage library patrons to express their concerns and interest in the branch. A similar meeting will be held at the Carver Branch July 16 at 7:30 p.m.

The regular trustees' business session will be held at 8 p.m. Items on the agenda will include a report on the proposed 1981-81 budget, revision of the current operating budget and reports from various committees.

Half Of Nation's Cities Face Deficits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half the nation's cities surveyed for a congressional panel had operating deficits last year and more than three-quarters expect their budgets to be in the red this year, according to a report released Saturday.

The nation's largest cities foresee the sharpest financial troubles in this fiscal year, according to the survey conducted for the Joint Economic Committee.

Collective bargaining agreements expire this year for 55 percent of the unionized municipal workers in the largest cities surveyed, meaning government officials could face pressure to bring the workers' salaries up to levels keeping pace with inflation, said the report.

"There's something like a crisis ahead," said Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., chairman of the Joint Economic Committee

Reasons cited by Reuss and the report for the financial troubles include the high rate of inflation, inept city management in some cases and disregard of cities' plights by some state governments. The Reagan administration's plan to reduce federal money to state and local governments adds to the problems and "spells trouble," said Reuss.

Without the help from the federal government, cities will be forced to raise local taxes, user charges, auto fees and building permits to maintain the existing level of services, said the report.

The result "could well create another round of urban emigration" by middle-class residents and businesses to the suburbs, said the study of 275 cities with populations of 10,000 or more.

"Thus, the federal government may have to develop a policy for dealing with municipal default on other than an ad hoc basis," it said.

The researchers were encouraged by a trend found among the cities — a sharp increase in spending to maintain and rehabilitate sewage systems, roads, bridges and the like. Capital expenditures went up an average of 19.4 percent for the cities surveyed, the report. Such expenditures were praised as necessary to the economic development of those cities.

"However sanguine this finding may be, it is tempered by the fact that with reduced federal assistance, many of these activities may be slowed or halted," the report.

The report said, however, that benefits from reductions in personal and business taxes, as proposed by the administration, may be felt over time.

Clay Kirkman Says . . .

With spring on the way out and summer fast approaching, so comes the beauty and color of summer flowers. The annuals that you purchases should now be full of blooms. One of the blooming annuals that you most likely have in your garden is the petunia. Petunias, unlike other annuals such as marigolds and impatients, will need help to increase branching and flower production.

The number of flowers that a plant has is dependent on the number of stems. Naturally the plant with the most stems will have the most flowers. Pinch back your petunias to induce branching. As the summer progresses, you may need to pinch them several times. Pinching off the faded flowers also encourages blooming.

Now is also a great time to put hanging baskets outside. Here are a few things you should consider. When selecting plants, be sure to note whether they are sun loving or shade plants. When hanging the plant, be sure to place it where it will not be in the way.

There are many different plants that can be used for hanging. Petunias, impatients and ivy geranium are always good for summer color. There are many more foliage plants that make excellent hanging baskets, such as the wandering jew. If you are making you own baskets, you may want to consider plastic containers for the plants. Plants in these containers will not require as much water as those in a wire or other type of basket. Remember that these plants are going to require a lot of water anyway because they are outside.

Come by Belk Tyler Garden Shops and pick up several hanging baskets today. We also have a wide variety of containers and plants for you to make your own.

Private Support Necessary

East Carolina University, as a state supported institution, can expect continued and expanded support from state funds.

However, if the university is going to reach its full potential, it must have ever greater financial support from alumni, business and friends of the school.

There is evidence that this private support is increasing. In 1977-78 private giving was $50,000 from 1,600 sources. In 1980 the figures stood at $74,000 from 5,000 alumni and the goal this year is $215,000 from 7,000 sources.

The alumni association this year increased its merit scholarship program from 40 to 65 in each class. It is hoped that this can be increased to 100 a year.

Chancellor Thomas Brewer sees this private support as providing the "margin of excellence" the university so badly needs.

East Carolina is still far from having the alumni support that much older institutions have, but the university is still a young school. Chancellor Brewer points out that 80 percent of the ECU graduates completed their work in the last 20 years.

"Our alumni have just reached the age of success," he notes.

The numbers of successful alumni will grow as time passes, and hopefully this will be translated into increased financial support for their alma mater. And financial support is not limited only to those who attended the university. Others who have ties have contributed.

ECU is just now entering the phase of seeking significant private financial support and we think that support will be forthcoming.

Alert Security People Best Defense

Once again following the shooting of Pope John Paul II last week our nation and the world are looking for ways to single out crazed gunmen who want to try to take the lives of world leaders.

The answers still elude us. Government leaders, as well as the Pope, have been protected by trained security men; yet the assassination attempts continue.

Some say gun control measures would be effective but if a convicted murderer can slip from Turkey to Italy undetected what could possibly stop him from illegally obtaining a gun?

Clearly if leaders were less accessable to the public there would be less opportunity for assassination attempts, but this solution is not a probable one in Democratic societies, or for a Pope who wishes to move among the people.

In sum there are no easy answers, except to provide the best security possible. After all, in the most recent two attempts, the gunmen could have been successful if it had not been for alert security personnel.

Early Retirement Mulled

By BILL NOBLITT

RALEIGH — Reduction in Force has become the byword in state government as the money squeeze makes it obvious that saving rather than spending must be the pattern for the forseeable future.

Budget pressures throughout state government make trimming back on numbers of employees critical, but the situation is particularly tough in both the Department of Transportation and in the public schools.

Declining school enrollments are making it mandatory that some classroom teachers and other personnel be cut because the numbers of employees are based on numbers of pupils, and the General Assembly is delaying reduction of classroom size which will relieve some of that reduction.

And along with his gas tax hike proposal, Gov. Jim Hunt is pledging cuts in the Department of Transportation totaling $20 million, some part of which must come from reduced personnel.

Already, senior employees are worried that the older, more experienced people who are higher paid will be the ones squeezed out while those earning less remain, and complaints of that actually happening are increasing.

Meanwhile, Hunt's personnel specialists are checking into the possibility that allowing early retirement for some employees would help relieve the situation.

Personnel director Harold Webb is compiling statistics on numbers of people in each group within 10 years of being 65 and eligible for retirement, and those with less than 30 years of service but nearing retirement eligibility. Then, the study must determine how much early retirement benefits would cost the state compared to how much savings would result.

It will be months before a clear picture emerges and a proposal can be formed, but top state officials don't expect the budget crisis to end soon and so they are proceeding with a view to letting voluntary early retirements take up some of the reduction in force.

Short-Time

The day may come, when North Carolina's Fair Sentencing Act is in full effect, that a defendant will ask the judge to add a few months to his sentence.

The catch is a requirement that prisoners be released 90 days before the end of their term so they re-adjust to freedom while still under supervision. The pre-release condition is mandatory for all inmates with sentences of 18 months or more.

So, a person sentenced to less than 18 months may not get that 90-day break.

The result will be that a person on a 12-month sentence will get one day off for each day served without causing serious trouble. That's six months. The person on an 18-month sentence will get good time making the active term nine months — less 90 days pre-release time; that's six months.

Future Jobs

A statewide survey by the Employment Security Commission shows that while unemployment remains a problem in some job areas, others remain unfilled.

The ten hardest-to-fill job openings, and they're likely to remain so for a few years, are registered nurses, electronics technicians, maintenance mechanics, machinists, mechanical or electrical assemblers, electricians, sewing machine operators, licensed practical nurses, refrigeration-heating-air conditioning specialists, and carpenters.

THE INSIDE REPORT

Closing The GOP's Gap

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

TRENTON, N.J. — The end of 70 years of internal Republican strife seemed in sight when Thomas H. Kean, a blueblood pillar of the Eastern Republican establishment, appeared at a New Jersey statehouse press conference flanked by two tigers of the Republican right: Rep. Jack Kemp of New York and Jeffrey Bell.

Bell, a longtime Reaganite and Senate nominee here in 1978, supports Kean's front-running campaign for the Republican governor nomination. Kemp was in Trenton to endorse Kean's tax-cutting package. Seated alongside them was Rep. James Courter, an aggressive conservative who is Kean's state chairman. In the audience was Washington-based, right-wing political consultant Roger Stone, who directs Kean's strategy.

What's a nice liberal Republican like Tom Kean doing with all these ferocious warriors of the right? The answer: They are tied together by a common thread: supply-side economics, bridging political and cultural differences that have divided the GOP since the great schism of 1912 and were widened still more by Barry Goldwater's coup in 1964.

Closing the party's gap here and elsewhere is based almost solely on tax-cut ideology first preached by Kemp six years ago. Kean transformed the nature of the June 2 primary to a debate on tax reduction and attracted conservative support because his program is compatible with President Reagan's. Thus, hopes for not only Republican success but party unity depend on the fate of the tax-reduction movement.

Kean is the embodiment of the liberal Republican aristocracy that provokes the party's populist right. An ancestor served in the Continental Congress, and he is the fifth generation of Keans in New Jersey. His grandfather was a U.S. senator, and his father served 20 years in the House. In a state where a majority of Republican county chairmen are Italo-Americans, Kean's upper-class accent sounds more like New England than Jersey.

Kean was national youth director for William Scranton's futile campaign for the 1964 presidential nomination, and eight years later became Mr. Environment in the New Jersey legislature as the 36-year-old speaker of the Assembly. In 1978, he vainly fought for liberal Sen. Clifford Case against Jeff Bell's Republican primary challenge.

Defeated for the 1977 nomination for governor, Kean knew he must expand his base or perish. He sought out Bell for support and hired Stone, who had impressed Kean with his tenacity in

MARTYRDOM

The word "martyr" comes from a Greek word, "martus", which means a witness. Because Christian witnessing down through history has so often resulted in suffering and death and the hands of persecutors, we have come to regard a martyr as one who dies for his faith. The word originally meant, however, a person who lives for his faith and bears witness to its validity.

Although there are many people theoretically willing to die for their faith (and "theoretically" might be stssed in this connection), even a cursory reading of the Bible makes it apparent that God is primarily interested in having men and women live for their faith.

Agonizing as martyrdom is in the generally accepted sense of the word, living an upright, conscientious, believing life also calls for high courage. The martyrdom involving torture and death is glorious, but so is the life involving patience and trust in a world where it is hard to meet temptation and sorrow and surmount them. — Elisha Douglass

By ALVIN TAYLOR

Sunday Morning Notes

(Staff Writer Carol Tyer substitutes for Alvin Taylor today.)

Patrick Hess's brother, Steve, pulled a coup in retaining former U. S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark to bring the sentencing error in his brother's case back to the attention of Judge David Reid here recently.

Ramsey Clark is a controversial figure worldwide, making unpopular trips to trouble spots like Northern Ireland and Iran, but he's a person who demands respect because of how he spends his life — going to bat for underdogs and unpopular causes.

The Hess case is just such a cause. There was strong sentiment in this region against Patrick Hess, a Dixon, Ill. man convicted in 1978 of the 1971 stabbing death of a fellow Marine's wife at Camp Lejeune. The young nurse, who had been a friend to Hess during the sorrowful time after his brother's death of cancer, was found dead, stabbed 18 times. Hess was questioned at the time, but never charged and went on to further military service in Japan. Later, while applying for a job in Illinois, he reportedly admitted the killing and was sent back to North Carolina to stand trial.

"Patrick was depressed at the time of the admission," Steve asserts, " — mixed up. His marriage had failed and he was out of work. The death always did bear heavily on him, but we're going to prove yet that he did not do it. We believe we have new evidence to show who did."

Clark, seeking a reduction in sentence, contended that

Hess was wrongly sentenced by Judge Reid to 25-to-40 years based on the second-degree sentence guidelines which came into effect in 1973, two years after the alleged crime was committed. He maintained that Hess's attorneys at the time, Jerry Paul and Sam Whitehurst, were remiss in not making sure that their client was sentenced under the procedures in force at the time of the act to which he pleaded no contest.

Clark submitted letters from 12 persons, mostly North Carolina Central Prison officials, about Hess's good behavior, his superior work as a radiologic technician and his A and B grades in college. Betty Hess, the prisoner's mother, and Hess himself took the stand to plead for a shorter sentence so he could reassume the responsibilities of parenthood to his two sons, Patrick Jr., 13, and Jeremiah, five.

The elder Hesses, who've already reared seven children of their own, are now responsible for their grandson, Patrick, who sorely needs his father, they say. Jeremiah, in the custody of his mother, is growing up not even knowing what his father looks like.

Judge Reid reduced the sentence to 15-20 years, making Hess eligible for parole soon.

Interviewed briefly in the Pitt County Jail while he waited outside the room where the Hess family was allowed a short visit with Patrick, Clark said the only legal cases he takes now are those that interest him as human rights issues. Many of them are capital cases, because fighting against capital punishment is one of Other Editors Say What's Happening?

(Mount Airy News)

Everyone, at some time or another, has read about incidents in a faraway metropolitan area where a desperate victim of some sordid crime lay bleeding, begging for help only to be passed by one person after another.

Yesterday the news story was closer to home. In fact, according to Mount Airy Police Officer Jim McHone, the incident occurred on one of our busiest streets around 2:30 in the afternoon. Officer McHone's account of the story follows.

A young woman was walking up Pine Street between Renfro Street and Main Street. She was barefoot and before she realized it, she was walking on a bed of broken bottles; glass piercing both of her feet. She was in severe pain and both of her feet were bleeding profusely. She was yelling and screaming at the passing motorists for someone to help her. In her best estimate, she lay there for at least 30 minutes.

According to the police officer's report a gentleman walking from the business district came to her assistance. He flagged down a passing motorist who, like the man, was willing to get involved in spite of any possible risks. The victim was placed in the motorist's car, bleeding feet and all, and taken to Northern Surry Hospital.

We can be grateful for the care and concern of the two individuals who willingly assisted someone in need, never giving thought to circumstances. But what of all those who passed the bleeding, suffering young lady, ignoring her cry for help?

What causes someone to pass by a person in need? Apathy? Indifference? Fear? Who knows?

McHone expressed his concern and that of other officers in the department for this type of incident. One of the officers recalled an incident of a man suffering an attack of epilepsy on the corner of Independence Boulevard and Main Street; his need for help unnoticed by one passerby after another. The police department was called,

Or the time when the Police Department was called to assist a young woman leaning against a building on Oak Street in the midst of a miscarriage, bleeding severely, her need for help seemingly ignored.

We are becoming increasingly concerned over acts that are reported to us that are barbaric in nature. Most recently, one of our older citizens attempted to cross a street when a car with two young men sped by and threw a six-pack of beer bottles at her feet. Glass scattered everywhere as the two sped away laughing.

Loves Those Bears

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

CHEAT MOUNTAIN, W.Va. (AP) — Joe Reiffenberger sometimes wonders how many tombstones it will take before his black bears are safe in the mountains they once ruled.

As West Virginia's bear officer, Reiffenberger has spent years tending to the animals' problems and giving them a voice in the outside world. With peppery jokes and a homey philosophy, he has fought to save the bears from extinction.

"The sheep farmers up here hate bears. But I tell them that everything's going nylon and the bears will inherit the earth," Reiffenberger said.

In remote sections, a fear of bears that stretches back to pioneer days survives, turning the shy creatures into howling monsters, Reiffenberger said.

"People are becoming more tolerant. We're finally learning. The old hatred is disappearing as the old pioneer ethic dies out. But every tombstone still increases a bear's chances," he said.

A stocky, powerful man who roars about having to play nursemaid to a bunch of "danged" bears, Reiffenberger talks about the animals as so many wayward children. But the indignation is a facade and the deep, growly voice always gives way to a laugh and a joke about his bears.

"I'm a lousy bureaucrat. I'm a good philosopher," he said. "That's the problem."

With a steady stream of jokes, Reiffenberger will tell you about bears — their personalities and habits — naming his favorites, and recalling when one had cubs or wandered into a town.

"Bear is an awful intelligent creature. Each one has a differant personality and there are some weird bears," he said. "I guess I sound possessive about them."

Reiffenberger once gave mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a bear. During a program to tag hibernating bears, a dart gun was accidentally fired twice while game workers were creeping up on a bear in a cave.

World Markets Barely Blipped

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — It is a remark by Josef Stalin, of all people, that helps explain why sensitive markets for gold and stocks and currencies barely blipped when the pope was shot Wednesday.

"How many divisions does the pope have?" the Soviet premier once asked derisively.

The pope has none. His is a spiritual empire, and the Vatican's few Swiss guards, bedecked in Mjchelangelo costumes dating to the 1500s, are as much for decoration as protection. They fight no wars.

If the guards were capable of doing so, the markets might have reacted differently, as they threatened to do in the uncertainty that followed the atttempted assasination of President Reagan.

A mighty material power, the United States and all its weaponry and wealth, were involved in the Reagan incident. Would it mean a change in economic policy? Would enemies exploit a weakened United States?

Without hesitation, domestic stock markets were slammed shut while the situation was assessed. Otherwise, it was assumed prices would have plunged because of the great uncertainty and fears that existed.

There was no panic, or seemingly any potential for panic, when Pope John Paul II was shot at the Vatican, at least in part because it seemed not to portend any great economic or political upheavals.

It was the difference between spiritual and material power. A New York currency dealer explained:

"It is one thing to attempt to assassinate the political, economic and financial head of a nation and another to attempt to assassinate a spiritual head of what you could call a state that does not have a political, economic or financial impact on the rest of the world."

There were other explanations too.

Some European markets were closed at the time; they could not react. First reports also tended to minimize the likelihood of a fatality, much as they did in the initial reports about Reagan.

And, people wondered, was the world better prepared for, or maybe resigned to accepting, this latest violence, as if it conditioned by a run-through of the script six weeks earlier in Washington?

That final possibility was expressed another way by a bullion trader here who commented that "indications of craziness in the world don't make the price of gold jump anymore."

Feels Office Is No Career

By GEORGE GALLUP

PRINCETON, N.J. — American voters believe that holding high political office should represent a period of service to the public, not a career.

When the Gallup Poll recently offered two proposals to the public that would limit to 12 years the tenure of U.S. senators and representatives, it found 2-to-1 support for such limitations.

Specifically, a proposal for limiting senators to two six- year terms receives the approval of 61 percent, with 32 percent disapproving. A proposal for restricting service in the House of Representatives to three terms of four years each is favored by 59 percent of the public, with 32 percent opposed.

These two proposals were last put to the public for a vote in 1977. Despite dramatic changes in the political composition of both houses of Congress — with the Republicans now holding a majority in the Senate and picking up 48 House seats in last November's election — public opinion has not varied significantly since 1977 and remains at a high level.

The same degree of support for these proposals is found in all population groups, including partisans of the major political entities. For example, 63 percent of Republicans, 61 percent of Democrats and 60 percent of independents vote in favor of the Senate limitation. Similarly, the opinions of college-educated persons are the same as those with less formal education.

Presidential Advocates

The plan to limit senators to two terms of six years each has been advocated by at least two presidents — Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower.

Eisenhower stated the case for the two-term limitation as follows:

"If senators were limited to two terms of six years, each man so serving would tend to think of his congressional career as an important and exciting interlude in his life, a period dedicated to the entire public, rather than as a way of making a living, or making a career of exercising continuous political power. Possibly, each would spend less time keeping his eyes on the next election, and more in centering them on the good of the nation. A more rapid turnover in the membership of both houses, with its constant infusion of new blood, would largely eliminate the 'career politician' in Congress."

Two-Term Limit For Presidents

Although Americans have consistently rejected the idea of one six-year term for U.S. presidents, their views on a two-term limit shifted sharply. In the late'30s, survey evidence showed that a majority of the public was opposed to a two-term limit. However, in 1943, majority opinion shifted in support of this limit, with subsequent surveys continuing to show widespread support.

Limit To Senate Terms

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
LATEST (April 3-6)	61%	32%	7%
1977	60	30	10
1971	48	39	13
1966	50	38	12
1964	49	38	13

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
Republicans	63%	34%	3%
Democrats	61	31	8
Independents	60	32	8

This question was also asked:

"A law has been proposed which would limit a member of the House of Representatives to three terms of four years apiece, or a total of 12 years. Would you favor or oppose such a law?"

And here is the trend:

Limit To House Terms

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
LATEST (April 3-6)	59%	32%	9%
1977	59	31	10
1964	48	37	15

And here are the latest findings by political affiliation:

	Favor	Oppose	No opinion
Republicans	62%	34%	4%
Democrats	58	32	10
Independents	59	30	11

The results reported today are based on in-person interviews with 1,545 adults, 18 and older, conducted in more than 300 scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period April 3-6.

Cheaper Than Prison, But.....

Probation Officer Says Very Few Are Helped

By TIMOTHY HARPER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — B. Wallace Cheatham is a probation officer. When criminals are put on probation instead of behind bars, it's his job to help them stay out of trouble.

In fact, Cheatham said, he helps very few people stay out of trouble.

"Probation doesn't really do anything here," said the New York City probation officer who has a caseload of 160 probationers — more than twice the national average of 66.

With his heavy caseload, Cheatham said he has barely enough time to conduct required investigations of those who are re-arrested, let alone keep tabs on those who have stayed on a straight path. In a 40-hour workweek, it works out to 15 minutes per man or woman, if the phone doesn't ring.

Cheatham's probationers are supposed to report to his Brooklyn office once a week for the first six months, but few do. On the day he was interviewed, 15 probationers were scheduled for personal visits. Eight showed up.

He could, technically at least, recommend that probation be revoked. But revocation requires that a hearing be squeezed onto overcrowded dockets, and that the probationer be squeezed into overcrowded jails.

A judge would laugh at him, Cheatham said, if he tried to send someone to jail simply for not reporting.

"I am an authority figure without authority," said Cheatham, head of the ad hoc Committee to Save NYC Probation.

"The probation system is supposed to be an integral part of the criminal justice system," he added, "but it's falling apart."

Nationally, an estimated 1.2 million people — nearly one American in every 200 — are on probation. According to a new study by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, probation is ordered for nearly two-thirds of all convicted criminals in the United States.

In a speech to the American Bar Association, Chief Justice Warren Burger recently called for expanded use of probation and increased spending for training, education and counseling.

But if, as Cheatham says, 47 percent of the people placed on probation in New York City are re-arrested within eight months, why is anyone put on probation?

To begin with, it costs more than $10,000 a year to keep a man in prison, and less than $1,000 to put him on probation. In New York City, the cost is $15,000 a year for incarceration and $240 a year for probation.

In addition, research in California, Wisconsin, New Mexico and Connecticut over the last 15 years says probationers are less likely to commit future crimes than those who go to prison.

"The studies show that people on probation do as well, sometimes better but never worse, than people sent to prison," said Jim Galvin, who compiled the NCCD's probation report.

In other areas of New York, said Cheatham, the caseloads are 55 instead of 160 and the re-arrest rate is 18 percent instead of 47 percent.

However, the effectiveness of probation is not without debate. A study conducted by Ohio State University said research to date is insufficient to determine whether probation is more or less effective than prison in cutting crime.

Galvin explained the problem is that various studies have used different definitions of recidivism, types of crimes and criminals and have been conducted in communities with different rehabilitative services.

He noted studies have shown that juveniles are more likely to stay out of trouble with more stringent supervision, while the amount of supervision of adults appears to have little to do with their chances for success.

A 1976 study in Alaska, for example, showed that 22 percent of those under strict probationary supervision committed new crimes, compared with 24 percent of those left without supervision.

"There's no apparent difference between probation supervision and a simple suspended sentence with no supervision," Galvin said.

"The resources available to the offender and how receptive the community is are more important. That's where probation is going to succeed no matter how much supervision or what kind of treatment they get."

Even when probationers show up, Cheatham has time for just a few minutes. How are they doing? Still working? Any prospects of work? Any more problems with drugs? Been avoiding the bars and the

Adobe Home Keeps Out The Cold And The Heat

By Gail Michaels

CANYON, Texas — Tired of the hot summer sun, cold winter winds and his high energy bills, Guy Hamblen of Canyon decided to do something about them. Now, two years later, he no longer hears the shrieking wind nor feels the sting of soaring temperatures, and his energy bill is cut in half.

This is the result of a new home Hamblen built from the oldest known construction material — mud.

Americans everywhere are rediscovering homemade, sun-dried adobe brick. Fire resistant, vermin proof and sound-deadening adobe is also remarkably inexpensive. And since the good earth is an excellent insulator, houses made of mud are great energy savers, too. They're also attractive. Adobe has a natural earth-tone beauty all its own.

The use of adobe as a building material goes back to the very dawn of civilization. Many references to "bricks" are made in the Bible and in other ancient documents. But excavations at King Solomon's mines, and at other historical sites, have shown that these early "bricks" were adobe rather than the masonry bricks we think of today. It makes sense that ancient people of many different parts of the world (Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, American and others) built with mud. It is, after all, available almost anywhere.

Adobe is traditionally a mixture of dirt, sand and water with a small quanity of straw or grass added for strength. Today, adobe brick makers often add a bit of asphalt or tar as well as to give the bricks added resistance to rain and snow.

Modern-day adobe structures in this country represent a blending of three cultures: Indian, Spanish and English. Indians were using a variety of mud-construction methods long before European folk arrived. Casa Grande, a prehistoric ruin in Arizona, was built with mud "bricks" that were molded in baskets, then stacked to create a golden-brown, multi-storied city.

Spanish colonists then brought their tradition of adobe construction which featured attractive arches and the idea of building around an interior courtyard.

When settlers of English ancestry came along, they added the use of sawn beams, boards and nails for trim and glass for window panes. These settlers also added a coat of lime plaster or stucco to protect mud structures from the wearing forces of nature.

In his battle against nature's forces, Guy Hamblen armed himself with books on adobe, found an architect from New Mexico to help with design, and set to work making a home from mud. It became a family project when his two teenage daughters pitched in to help make the brick.

The family spent a summer stockpiling the bricks, which they'd poured into wooden forms and left in the sun to dry. When the next summer rolled around, Hamblen was ready to begin construction.

"The more adobe you use," he explained, "the more energy efficient the home will be — interior walls and all." The new home is tighter and sounder than any he's ever been in, Hamblen said, and quieter. Traffic noises find it no easier to penetrate the eight-inch walls than do heat or cold.

Roof-top sky lids and louvres which open for sun and close in its absence complement the energy efficiency of the adobe home.

"We occasionally turn on the heat in the early morning," Hamblen said, "but only in the coldest weather. So long as the sun is shining, we're comfortable in here, no matter how cold it is outside."

The best feature of the Hamblen home may be its promise of durability. In Sante Fe, N.M., stands the oldest house (excepting pre-historic Indian dwellings) in the United States. The house, still in good condition, is nearly 800 years old. It too, was made of mud.

A Lot Of Changes Made In Just One Brief Year

By Gail Michaels

The beauty of the earth's renewal had special meaning for me this spring as I celebrated my son's first year of life. In 12 short months my placid infant who complained only when his milk was not immediately forthcoming has blossomed into an energetic toddler determined to get his way in every situation.

The path his progress has taken has not made the past year easy, but then babies have nothing to do with convenience. Their task is to grow, and growth causes growing pains, especially for the parents.

I must have aged five years for Zachary's one. A major factor in this rapid aging has been a chronic ear infection that is impervious to antibiotics and requires nightly attention.

Almost as aggravating as his ears is his penchant for taking things apart, like the stereo. He likes to readjust things, too, like the dishwasher and the vacuum cleaner and the clock. I haven't known the correct time in six months.

But he has taught me so much that I really can't complain. For instance, he has taught me the meaning of "no." When he hears that word he doesn't stop what he's doing. He simply changes hands.

He has also taught me that a tea cart can have a variety of uses. He prefers to use it as a modified surfboard. When he bellyflops on the bottom shelf, he can propel it across the room with the efficiency of an Evinrude.

He reminds me often that joy can be aroused by the most insignificant event. Prancing around the kitchen with a colander on his head is an occasion for irrepressible mirth as is holding onto Mommy's wiggly big toe.

And he is already a big help around the house. His favorite chore is editing my columns. I'm sure my other editors have noticed a tremendous difference in my copy since Zachary started assisting me with the typing.

There have been many times during the past year when the medical bills have seemed overwhelming or when our childless friends have written us about their vacations to San Francisco that I've wondered about Phillip's and my decision to have children. Still, nothing could make me regret it. I like to think that a family can be compared to a garden. A garden that produces only two kinds of vegetables can provide a hearty meal. But the meal from a garden which produces more than two kinds is more varied and much more exciting, even if it does require more work.

There is a limit to this analogy. If you plant too much, you could end up with indigestion.

Life with Zachary is definitely exciting. He's just like any other one-year-old. He's inquisitive; he's irritating; he is shy at times and aggressive at others. He is stubborn. He is charming.

Then again, he is entirely different from any other one-year-old. He's mine.

organizing the state for Reagan in 1980. Together, they determined to break out of a Republican contest to be toughest against crime and for capital punishment and instead to go all out on supply-side issues.

The program was drafted by Professor Mark Miles of Rutgers University, co-author with supply-side guru Arthur Laffer of a new economics textbook. The three-year plan would cut the state business income tax in half, eliminate the business property tax and slash the state sales tax by 20 percent. The intent: to increase tax revenue by bringing business back to New Jersey.

"A disaster!" cried Mayor Pat Kramer of Paterson, supported by the remnants of the state party's liberal leadership. Kramer, along with millionaire businessman Bo Sullivan, is Kean's principal challenger. While other Republican candidates hurriedly ground out alternative tax schemes, Kramer insisted on budget reductions first. He thus plays George Bush to Kean's Ronald Reagan — albeit a patrician, non-conservative Reagan.

It was a close enough impersonation to bring Kemp here to defend Kean's tax program. New Jersey conservative activist Harlan Schliker, supporting State Sen. James Wallwork as the authentic candidate of the right, tried to dissuade Kemp and even asked White House political aide Lyn Nofziger to keep Kemp out (Nofziger replied he wanted no part of it).

Present as Kemp praised Kean in the State Assembly chambers was yet another symbol of Republican peacemaking: political consultant John Deardourff, a former Nelson Rockefeller aide who in 1978 advised his California client running for governor to oppose the Proposition 13 tax cut. In 1981, he has designed Kean's television commercials that stress tax reduction for growth.

Deardourff and Kemp have been at odds for so long that before attending the statehouse news conference, Deardourff offered to stay away. When it was over, Kemp sought out Deardourff, shook hands and said: "John, it's good to be on the same side." What was the origin for the rift? "Something about Kemp undercutting Rockefeller and working with Nixon back in '72," Deardourff replied. "I can't quite remember."

Ending half-remembered feuds derives from Kean's belief that Kemp and Bell, pressing for economic growth with tax rate cuts, follow the old Republican moderate tradition of optimistic faith in progress. Whether or not the tax issue nominates Kean, it has temporarily bridged real cultural, political and ideological differences between Tom Kean and Jack Kemp. The resulting common purpose is the hope of the Republican Party.

Missing The Point On Great Laetrile Debate

By JAMES J. KILPATRICK

WASHINGTON — The results of the Great Laetrile Study were made public a couple of weeks ago, and what do you know? The study found Laetrile "not effective" in the treatment of cancer. So chickens lay eggs, and two plus two makes four, and what else is new?

This particular frittering away of taxpayer's money cost us $500,000. For nine months the study diverted scores of doctors, technicians, lab attendants and statisticians from projects on which they might better have spent their time. The results were as predictable as the phases of the moon. The results also were irrelevant to the only point that matters.

For the record: Laetrile is a formulation of amygdalin, a substance found widely in nature. It is most easily extracted from apricot pits. Forty or 50 years ago the notion took root that Laetrile, in combination with various vitamins and enzymes, was effective in treating some forms of cancer in some victims. The Food and Drug Administration declared Laetrile worthless, but many hopeless patients kept demanding it anyhow. In an effort to settle the question of efficacy once and for all, the FDA in 1980 commissioned the Great Laetrile Study.

Under the direction of Dr. Charles G. Moertel of the Mayo Clinic, the study went forward under an impeccable protocol. Four institutions cooperated in testing Laetrile on 156 patients, most of them with cancer of the colon, lung or breast. These were patients who had not responded, or were not likely to respond, to conventional treatment by surgery, radiation or chemotherapy. While not precisely on the verge of death, they were terminal patients. Of the 156 victims, 102 are now dead; the other 54 are dying. In only a handful of cases did Laetrile appear to produce even temporary respite. Quod erat demonstrandum, and all that sort of thing.

Dr. Moertel's report to the American Society of Clinical Oncology set off a splendid chorus of "I told you so." Dr. Arthur I. Holleb, chief medical officer of the American Cancer Society, said the news confirms what the society has been telling cancer patients for a generation — that Laetrile is of no proven value. The New York Times weighed in with a smug editorial denouncing Laetrile as quack medicine. How many desperate patients, asked the Times, will continue to squander their money on the stuff? The findings, said the Times, certainly should dispel "the misguided belief that patients should be free to choose their own medicine."

In that revealing line, the Times almost had the point and let it slip away. For the only controversy that matters is not the controversy over the effectiveness of Laetrile. The only controversy that matters deals with individual freedom in a free society.

Why are governments instituted among men? Jefferson answered that question 200 years ago. Governments are created to keep our rights secure. What rights? The rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. In the matter at hand, no one seriously charges that Laetrile is a danger to life; the drug is about as toxic as Tums. This being so, it simply is no business of government in a free society to deny a citizen access to it.

The government's responsibility, as I see it, begins and ends with the issue of safety. If there is botulism in the vichyssoise, by all means let the Commerce Clause be invoked. If meat is contaminated, or automobile tires are fatally defective, or a drug is found to have nighly dangerous side effects, the government's obligation is clear. The right to life is involved.

Beyond that, no. The terminal cancer patient, having tried every form of conventional therapy, has every right to "squander his money" on Laetrile or gum drops or an extract drawn from the eyes of frogs. Governments may warn, and governments may inform, but in a free society governments should have no power to block a human being's pursuit of his own idea of happiness.

It occurs to me, finally, that the doctors who are giving forth with snorts of triumph have mighty little to crow about. The death rate from cancer has gone up from 149.2 in 1960 to 181.9 in 1978. For all their vaunted "conventional treatments," cancer still claims 400,000 lives a year. If an informed patient would rather die on Laetrile than die on chemotherapy, isn't this his precious right of choice?

Complex Issues Face Supreme Court During Final Six Weeks

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A host of complex issues, ranging from the constitutionality of all-male draft registration to whether a president is legally free to approve unlawful wiretapping, face the Supreme Court as it enters the final six weeks of its 1980-81 term.

Since the court's opening day in October, the nine justices have heard oral arguments in 153 cases. They have handed down 70 written opinions and are expected to hand down another 65 before the late June recess.

The most controversial case yet to be decided is whether the males-only registration unconstitutionally discriminates against men.

Last July, a three-judge district court in Philadelphia declared the statute invalid on discrimination grounds. Excluding women served no "important governmental objective," the panel said. That judgment contradicts Congress' express decision to bar women.

The court's ruling places on the Supreme Court doorstep a quagmire of social and legal issues.

Women's groups have flagged the case as a key test of equality, not only in the military, but in the workforce. The court's failure to strike down the law would undercut women's rights by allowing judges to review sex bias cases against an easier standard for the government or an employer to meet, the groups say.

The administration views the case as the watershed for the future of the military and its ability to respond to national emergencies. The government says conscripting women would hamper military flexibility and reduce the pool of combat-eligible troops. Women are barred from combat by law, the high court was told.

The justices will have to decide whether to give traditional deference to the wishes of Congress in national defense, despite testimony that increasing numbers of women are successfully serving in the military.

Another legal frontier of sex discrimination faces the court this term when it rules in a case involving pay discrimination by sex.

The issue is called "comparable worth" and centers on whether women are victims of discrimination because they hold jobs stereotyped as "women's jobs," such as secretarial positions, that pay less than jobs considered "men's work."

The case, brought by jail matrons in Oregon who want the same pay as their male counterparts, could be the first in a line of cases measuring how much different job categories are worth as compared to other similar jobs.

Beyond that field, a headline-grabbing case on the court's full docket is a challenge by Richard Nixon and three former aides to a ruling that persons whose constitutional rights have been violated by their acts may sue for money damages.

Morton Halperin, a former White House national security aide, sued after he learned his telephone had been wiretapped for 20 months despite no evidence he leaked confidential information. Nixon claims "absolute immunity" from suits for actions taken in office.

Another pending case with political overtones questions the right of the State Department to revoke the passport of controversial ex-CIA agent Philip Agee on grounds he is a national security risk. Agee, who lives in Germany, argues his passport may not be lifted without Congress' express authority.

Two major regulatory cases before the court have probably been sidelined indefinitely. The Reagan administration has asked the court to postpone a decision in a case contesting regulations for worker exposure to cotton dust.

When the court first accepted the case, it was hailed as a major test of whether the government must measure the costs of controlling hazardous substances against the benefits. The cotton industry says federal controls are too costly and would put some cotton mills out of business.

The administration says it wants to re-examine the issue and has asked the high court not to decide the case now. What the court decides to do in that case — which could be announced as early as Monday — will determine whether the court decides to review a challenge to the government's lead standard.

Equally important are pending constitutional challenges to the 1977 federal strip mining law that requires total reclamation of some mined land. Those opposing the law say its requirements amount to unlawful "taking" of property without just compensation.

Also in the government regulation area, the court will decide two major election law cases. One involves a challenge by three television networks to a Federal Communications Commission decision that they acted unreasonably by refusing to sell prime television time to President Carter's reelection committee.

The court will rule in an important case testing federal election law that limits contributions to political action committees. A California medical group says the $5,000 limit infringes on free speech and political association.

barflies?

"I can't say I really know any of my people," he said.

If he had time to really get to know his people, to visit them in their homes and talk to their friends and co-workers, and if there were adequate educational, training and job placement programs, Cheatham believes fewer probationers would be re-arrested.

In Cheatham's office, a 17-year-old high school dropout on probation for theft showed up unannounced. He had been on probation for six months but had never reported. He was there now because he had been re-arrested; the judge was threatening 45 days in jail. Could Cheatham help?

Not much. Cheatham gave him the address of a vocational training program. If he enrolled, the judge might go easy on him.

Cheatham drew out that the young man started most days with six or eight cans of beer in the afternoon; some days he didn't remember a lot after that. They talked about drinking, working, jail and a free program that might help the young man learn to read.

Then he was gone. With no time for Cheatham to follow through, it would be up to the young man alone to try to straighten out his life.

"A kid like this could be helped if I could see him for a couple hours every week," said Cheatham. "He needs someone to help him get into something and help him think about his future."

Ross Umans, a supervising probation officer in Cheatham's office, said the public's get-tough attitude on crime is keeping more probation officers from being hired.

"Even though it's more cost-effective," Umans said, "probation is not popular with the public. The view is that if you give probation, you're coddling the offender."

"Bear is a powerful individual," said Reiffenberger, recalling the incident. "He don't smell too good either."

Bears are proud and intelligent creatures who must be treated with respect, Reiffenberger said. When transmitters were put on some bears as part of a study on their habits, each one was given a name.

"It seemed so impersonal just to number them. The first time we put a bug on one was when Nixon was having his little problem, so we called it 'Watergate.' Then we called them things like 'Gannymede.' I wasn't going to have any of this 'Rover' stuff."

Some of bears loved the radios and seemed to show them off, while others quickly found ways to remove them. "If one was too tight I knew that bear would come down and die on the courthouse steps. Make a federal case out of it," he said.

"Her grandmothers worry about what will happen to her when Georgia and I can no longer take care of her. I worry, too, and that's possibly one reason I try to do what I can to make this a more loving, compassionate, morally aware world, so it will be safe for Ronda after we're gone."

IRA Says Two More Hunger Strikers Blind And 'Extremely Weak'

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A Catholic butcher who refused IRA orders to close shop for the funeral of hunger striker Francis Hughes was found murdered in his bed Saturday, with five shots in the head. The IRA said two more hunger strikers were blind and "extremely weak" on the 56th day of their fasts, and probably would die this week.

There were reports the Irish Republican Army had launched an all-out campaign in Catholic areas of Belfast ordering a boycott of British goods, but the reports could not be immediately confirmed.

Police said the killing of butcher Patrick Martin, 38, was a "carefully planned operation" in which he was shot with a silencer-equipped firearm. Telephone wires in the street had been cut, they said.

Martin's wife and 14-year-old daughter, sleeping in an adjoining room of the family home in Ardoyne, a Catholic area in north Belfast, told police they heard nothing. Martin's body was discovered by his daughter when she went to wake him for work.

Most Catholic-owned shops closed during Hughes' funeral Friday at his home village of Bellaghy, 40 miles south of here. About 10,000 mourners attended the IRA military funeral for Hughes, 25, who was convicted of killing a British soldier. He died last Tuesday on the 59th day of his fast in the Maze Prison outside Belfast, where 440 protesting IRA guerrillas are jailed.

Sinn Fein, political front for the IRA, said hunger strikers Raymond McCreesh and Patrick O'Hara, both 24, had gone blind, had difficulty hearing and would probably die this week. O'Hara was also reported suffering "very bad pains and severe headaches." Both men were refusing medical aid.

Sinn Fein reported later that McCreesh was visited by members of his family and they said he was lapsing into a coma.

McCreesh is serving a 14-year term on conviction of attempting to murder a British soldier. O'Hara is a member of the Irish National Liberation Army serving an eight-year term for possession of a hand grenade. Like the IRA, the INLA is fighting to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland and unite it with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

The hunger strikes began March 1 to support demands that Britain grant political status to jailed Irish nationalist guerrillas. The British refuse. The first hunger striker to die was Bobby Sands, on the 62nd day of his fast May 5.

A leader of the militant Protestants' Ulster Defense Association said Friday night the British government should initiate prison reforms to "defuse current tension."

"We don't believe the Provos (members of the extremist Provisional wing of the outlawed IRA) are seriously interested in prison reform or political status. They are simply using it as an excuse for further violence," Andy Tyrie told a Belfast news conference. "So long as the government refuses to give political status they're simply playing into the Provisionals' hands."

There are some 400 Protestant militants in the Maze and 13 UDA prisoners staged a six-day hunger strike last year. Tyrie said the UDA prisoners have "never asked for political status. What we are saying is they are special prisoners and should be treated as special prisoners" and not common criminals.

"They've never been involved in criminal activity," he added. "Things are not normal here. There's a war going on."

The UDA is a legal organization and the largest of Northern Ireland's militant Protestant groups. Security forces blame UDA extremists for scores of assassinations over the years.

Police and troops staged dawn raids Saturday and discovered three gasoline bomb factories in Catholic districts of Belfast and two in Londonderry, the province's second largest city. Police said they found 29 acid bombs behind the Sinn Fein center in Londonderry's Bogside area.

A police spokesman said the bombers were using a new ingredient, sugar. "It means the flames will stick to the skin and are much harder to put out," he said.

The spokesman said the hauls of more than 300 ready-made bombs, gasoline drums and other bomb-making equipment was "probably the largest quantity of petrol bombs we have ever found."

Britain's commercial radio station, Independent Radio News, reported the IRA's Provisional wing distributed thousands of leaflets ordering the boycott of British goods.

Two big newspaper distributors, Menzies and Easons, said 30 news agents in Catholic west Belfast had stopped taking British newspapers, which are widely read in Northern Ireland.

In Dublin, a spokeswoman for the National H-Block Armagh Committee, a reference to the H-shaped cellblocks at the Maze, said it had launched a nationwide campaign through its 282 action groups to stop the sale of British newspapers in the Irish Republic and to boycott British goods generally.

Police in the Irish Republic reported two masked gunmen broke into the County Kerry country home of a retired British judge and his wife late Friday, ordered them out and set their home on fire. The couple were not injured.

In Ireland's County Meath, an unoccupied stately home now owned by an advertising executive was damaged by fire, while in renewed disturbances in Dublin Friday night gasoline bombs were hurled at a bar, and several cars were burned, police said.

Two Accidents

An estimated $5,900 in property damages occured here Friday and Saturday in traffic accidents according to reports of the Greenville Police Department.

Cars driven by Melanie Diane Manning of 1405 Broad St. and Henry McDaniel of 207 Martinsborough Rd., collided Friday at 4 p.m. on Arlington Blvd. A passenger of the Manning vehicle, Joy Harper of West End Trailer Park, was injured in the accident. She was taken to Pitt Memorial Hospital where she was treated and released. Manning was charged with a safe movement violation. Damage to the Manning vehicle was estimated at $4,000 and $1,000 to the McDaniel vehicle.

Saturday at 11:15 a.m., a vehicle driven by Caroline Edwards Hardee of Route 3, Box 231, struck a parked car on Oak St. Estimated damage to the Hardee vehicle was $700 and $200 to the parked car. No charges were made.

TWO PERSONS INJURED — Teresa Mills of Route 2, Greenville, and Sheila McLawhorn of Route 2, Winterville, were listed in satisfactory condition at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, a hospital spokesman reported Saturday, with injuries received in an accident on 8th Street that heavily damaged the car above late Friday night. Police said Ms. Mills, who was identified as the driver, was thrown from the vehicle when it struck a tree. Ms. McLawhorn was pinned temporarily in the car. Damage to the car was estimated at $2,000. Police issued a citation for careless and reckless driving and a stop sign violation. (Reflector Photo by Tommy Forrest)

Compromise Possible On Social Security

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan is willing to compromise on Social Security, his secretary of health and human services said Saturday.

Richard Schweicker told UPI the plan presented last week — a 10 percent cut for future beneficiaries, lower payroll taxes in 1985 and stiff penalties for persons choosing early retirement — was what the president had decided upon.

But he made clear the president would be willing to consider other approaches if Congress passes another version.

"We would certainly strongly consider working out a bipartisan bill. We would have to ascertain how many elements from our package are in it and how many elements from a Senate package or Congressman Pickle's proposal were in it," Schweiker said in an appearance on the "UPI Roundtable" broadcast.

"Certainly you're going to have to do some give and taking. It's a little premature to say whether we'd sign any particular package as yet, but I think we're certainly willing to look at a reasonable proposal and blending of diffeent ideas."

Reagan's plan follows a five-month administration study on how to avert predicted bankruptcy for Social Security next year and avoid serious problem in the next century when the "baby boom" generation retirees.

Schweicker acknowledged the Republican-controlled Senate has approved a bill that limits cost-of-living increases, and the House Social Security subcommittee, on which Democrats are a majority, favors raising the retirement age gradually from 65 to 68.

He said those two measures plus the administration approach were a "three-cornered stool."

Reagan is previously on record as opposing a change in the cost-of-living formula, but has never taken a clear position on the age question.

"I wouldn't rule anything out, but I wouldn't rule anything in until he says yes or no," Schweiker said.

Guard's Body Is Found

AMENIA, N.Y. (AP) — The body of a female prison guard hired a month ago was found Saturday in a landfill near the maximum-security facility where officials believe she was slain and left in a trash bin.

The body of Donna A. Payant, a 31-year-old mother of three from Dannemora, N.Y., was discovered after more than 200 searchers had spent Friday night combing the grounds of Green Haven Prison for the missing guard, said Corrections Department spokesman Louis Ganim.

The chief investigating officer, Capt. Francis DeFrancesco of the State Police in Poughkeepsie, said the woman's clothed body was found shortly after 11 a.m. An autopsy was being performed Saturday night, but it was not known when the results would be available.

DeFrancesco said authorities did not know whether Mrs. Payant was killed by an inmate.

"My only belief is that the murder was committed inside the prison," he said.

Mrs. Payant was a recent graduate of the state corrections academy and had been assigned to the maximum-security prison for men on April 16. Her husband, Leo, is a guard at the state prison in Dannemora.

Ganim said there had been no threats against Mrs. Payant or other officers at Green Haven.

Gov. Hugh Carey called the slaying "an act of unconscionable violence which will be met with a swift response" and ordered flags in the state flown at half-staff in Mrs. Payant's memory.

Ganim said it was the second slaying of a New York corrections officer since the 1971 riot at Attica State Prison. The most recent was the 1977 death of an Attica cook.

He said Mrs. Payant was last seen alive about 2 p.m. Friday in a corridor between two cell blocks at Green Haven. A search began when she failed to report for a 4 p.m. assignment at the prison.

More than 200 members of a special response team searched the prison overnight, Ganim said. Prisoners were "locked down" in their cells at 6 p.m. Friday — four hours early — and remained confined all day Saturday.

Ganim said two garbage bins at the prison were searched Friday night, then taken to a landfill Saturday morning, where officers then found the woman's body.

Island Residents Found Shelter In Bat Caves

AGANA, Guam (UPI) — All 53 people on the tiny Pacific island of Pagan huddled together in bat-infested caves to escape molten lava and flying ash spewed across the island in the eruption of a long-dormant volcano, they said Saturday.

"I thought we were all going to die," said Ben Aldan, a resident of the island — 450 miles north of Guam — whose main exports are fruit bats and coconut crabs.

The 53 survivors — the entire population of Pagan with the exception of its mayor who was on another island — were picked up by a Japanese freighter freighter and transferred to the U.S. Trust Territory vessel Fentress out of Saipan in the Northern Marianas.

The eruption Friday, which sent volcanic ash 60,000 feet into the air, began with "earthquakes, and the whole island was shaking," Aldan reported by radio.

"Before we could think about it the mountain just blew up. I grabbed by wife and two children and headed for the beach. We jumped into a canoe and paddled across the bay to the south end of the island away from the volcano."

As they paddled, Aldan said, ash rained down and broiling heat radiated from one of the island's volcano.

Once on the south side of Pagan, Aldan said the islanders, who belong to a Mariana race called the chamorros, crept into caves filled with thousands of fruit bats.

Republicans Stop Short Of Full Budget Support

EASTON, Md. (AP) — Republican office-holders, voicing concern with public reaction to President Reagan's proposed Social Security cuts, voted qualified support for that plan Saturday but suggested alternate measures might also be possible.

Participants at the fourth annual Tidewater Republican Conference departed from their prepared agenda to tackle the controversial subject. But the conclave of more than 100 elected Republican officials from around the country stopped short of offering full support for the Reagan package of cuts.

They adopted a resolution praising Reagan "for properly focusing national attention on the immediacy of the financial problems of the Social Security system."

They vowed to "seek equity among our reforms and assure those who are now concerned that no particular age group or segment of our population will sustain an unfair burden of the reforms."

Rep. Carroll Campbell, R-S.C., told the conference he was particularly concerned with the possible effect of the Reagan plan on those between the ages of 62 and 65 whose plans to retire had already been made.

"There are those on the brink of retirement who think the rug is going to be pulled out from under them," Campbell said.

One portion of the Reagan plan, unveiled last week, would sharply reduce benefits of those who retire before age 65.

It was the first time the four-year-old conference has met when a Republican has been in the White House and participants were clearly edgy about the possibility of appearing to repudiate positions advocated by the president.

Representing the administration, special U.S. trade representative Bill Brock appealed to the conference to steer away from specifics on Social Security overhaul and to place blame for the current situation on Democrats who have controlled the White House and Congress in the past.

To suggestions by Republican leaders that a bipartisan approach ought to be sought, Brock said, "I get a little queasy feeling when talking about a bipartisan effort. ... The Democrats have created the mess we've got."

The Social Security resolution that was adopted both praises the president for wrestling with the problem and "recognizes the president's program as one viable option but not the only alternative," Campbell said.

The resolution calls for a successful plan to save the Social Security system from financial collapse by October 1982.

It calls the current financial difficulties of the system "a product of the abysmal neglect of Democrat-dominated Congresses which have accelerated the benefits far beyond the ability of the system to pay for them."

Brock later said the Reagan administration could live with the resolution as adopted by the Republican conference even though it did not specifically embrace Reagan's specific program. "I don't think any of us suggested we had the only answer," Brock told a reporter. "This resolution adopted today is a very good general statement."

The conference, attended by 117 Republican senators, House members, governors and others, also adopted resolutions urging that cutbacks in federal programs be accompanied by more flexible grants to states and calling for prior congressional approval for future one-category trade embargoes like the one on grain sales to the Soviet Union.

The conference voted overwhelmingly by voice vote to re-affirm the party's commitment to the president's tax cut plan now before Congress. That plan calls for a three-year, 30-percent slash in personal income taxes across the board and more liberal depreciation rules for business.

While the resolutions are not binding, they reflect something of a consensus of current GOP thinking around the country, according to Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the conference chairman.

It was clear from the outset that participants weren't going to give blanket approval to administration positions.

On the first item, the conference recommended legislation that any future trade embargo be across-the-board and "not restricted to one segment of the economy" unless first approved by Congress.

It was part of a resolution promoting a lowering of trade restrictions in an attempt to reach an ultimate situation of worldwide "free trade."

Brock, tried to get the conference to adopt instead a general philosophical statement calling free trade a national goal but saying that it could not be achieved until the nation's economic health was restored.

Fonda Recuperating, Observes Birthday

He was reported in good condition after undergoing the surgery Friday.

The hospital said only that the surgery was exploratory and resulted from a diagnostic evaluation that Fonda had undergone since his admission to the hospital May 4.

John Springer Associates, the public relations firm for the actor, said the surgery involved opening a small hole in the chest to examine a membrane that was constricting the heart.

"They found it," Gary Springer said, referring to the membrane, "and as far as I know there's nothing new scheduled."

Fonda, who has been a box office favorite for more than half a century, has had several serious illneses in recent years. A pacemaker was implanted in his chest in 1974 to correct a heart disorder.

Talks Break Up In Disagreement

PARIS (AP) — Two days of talks on Japan's exports of cars to Europe broke up in disagreement Saturday, with European automakers warning their Japanese counterparts that Japan risks a "protectionist chain reaction" if it does not limit car shipments.

The meetings were called by the European Community Car Manufacturers Committee in response to Japan's agreement earlier this month to limit exports to the United States. The Europeans say the same "consideration" is due them.

The committee, which represents the 10 top car manufacturers of the European Community, or Common Market, contends the Japanese Automobile Manufacturers Association has not honored a pledge made last November to moderate exports to the 10 Common Market nations.

Bomb Rips Air Terminal, Injures Man Critically

NEW YORK (AP) — One man was critically injured Saturday when a bomb exploded in a rest room at Kennedy International Airport, and a jetliner was evacuated after the caller who warned of the restroom blast falsely claimed a bomb also was aboard the plane.

Port Authority police said a man with a Spanish accent telephoned Port Authority headquarters at Kennedy minutes before the 9:40 a.m. blast, warning that two bombs — in the Pan American World Airways terminal and on a plane to Guatemala — were set to go off in 15 minutes.

The caller said the bomb was planted by the Puerto Rican Armed Resistance Group, Port Authority police said. That group previously claimed responsibility for two pipe bombs that exploded in lockers at Manhattan's Pennsylvania Station last Dec. 21, causing damage but no injuries.

The group is believed to be a splinter of the FALN, a Puerto Rican nationalist organization which has claimed responsibility for numerous bombings across the country.

The restroom was "pretty badly damaged" but was not structurally harmed, said Pan Am spokeswoman Lou Hammond.

The bomb, left in a dark-colored bag in one of the stalls, was described by arson and bomb squad specialists as having "quite a bit of powder in it." It was made to "cause considerable damage and possibly death," police said.

Hundreds of people were evacuated from the terminal after the blast while police searched it, using dogs trained to sniff for explosives. The terminal was reopened about two hours later.

Pan Am's Flight 403 to Guatemala was on the runway waiting to take off when the restroom explosion occurred.

The Boeing 727 was immediately towed to an isolated area and its 80 passengers were evacuated. It was searched for nearly three hours.

The flight was cancelled and passengers transferred to a later flight. Four other flights — to San Francisco, Orlando and Palm Beach, Fla., and Tokyo — were delayed between two and three hours while the terminal was closed.

The injured man, airport employee Alex McMillan, 19, of Queens, was alone in the lavatory when the bomb exploded, police said. Police said he suffered extensive injury to his groin and that one arm was severed. He was hospitalized in critical condition.

Several others who were outside the restroom were treated at the scene for minor injuries.

There was some dispute about a possible delay in evacuating the terminal. Port Authority police Lt. Ernest F. Rossano insisted that the bomb went off less than 10 minutes after the call was received, but city Deputy Inspector Peter Prezioso said the explosion occurred 14 minutes later.

Title I Support Urged

Participants in the Pitt County Title I Program have been urged to maintain their support for the program regardless of possible budget cuts.

The advice was offered by the program's regional coordinator, Wendell Hall, during the annual Parent Advisory Council Dinner at Ayden-Grifton High School. Parents and administrators from the county's 19 advisory counciles attended the meeting.

Hall expressed "the need for continued parent support no matter what cuts occur."

"Faith in the system and faith to succeed must be maintained," said Hall. "Working together to provide a sound education for our kids is most important."

PAdvisory council chairpersons across the county received certificates of merit for their contributions to the Title I program during the past year.

Greetings were given to the guests by Bill McLawhorn, board of education representative from Ayden, and Bill Wiggins, principal of Ayden-Grifton High School.

School Teaches Guards To Shoot, Salute... And To Use A Fork

By MICHAEL SULLIVAN

QUANTICO, Va. (UPI) — When the U.S. embassy in Tehran was captured by Iranian terrorists in November 1979, specially trained Marines "buttoned up" the building for two hours, a delaying action that allowed time for the destruction of secret documents.

Before being ordered to surrender, the 13 members of the Marine Security Guard battalion — the "elite of the elite" of the corps — did exactly what they were taught to do at the Marines' sprawling base in Quantico, 30 miles south of the nation's capital.

"You stay busy ... no dead minutes in my school," says Maj. Allen D. Guins, a 20-year career Marine, who is the training and operations officer of the MSG battalion.

A strapping 6-footer, the crew-cut, ram-rod-straight career officer looks as though he just stepped off a recruiting poster.

Marines from throughout the corps, all volunteers, come to Quantico five times a year to undergo embassy training. Before being assigned to one of 118 posts in 102 countries, students will go through either a six-or eight-week training school.

Trainees are put through a varied curriculum that ranges from instruction in marksmanship to the social graces. Not only must they know how to shoot and salute, but they must learn which fork to use at the ambassador's dinner table.

Trainees are taught to handle .38-caliber revolvers, riot shotguns, nightsticks, tear gas and the Israeli Uzi 9mm submachine gun. A student is dropped from the course if he fails to qualify with the revolver.

But the use of weapons, it is stressed, is a "last resort" to be employed only in self defense or at the command of the ambassador or chief of mission.

"There's a certain breed that can take embassy duty and do well in it," says Gunnery Sgt. Walter E. Ellard, 33, who teaches classes in security and etiquette.

Those who do, says the 16-year Marine veteran who has done embassy duty in the Ivory Coast and Mauritius, are the "elite of the elite ... the uppermost upperclass" of the corps. Marine guards are part of an embassy's social circle, attending formal dinners, cocktail parties and other functions. To acertain that they look and act properly in this social role, they are issued dress blue uniforms and attend etiquette classes.

"You take a Marine," says Ellard. "They know how to eat in a mess hall and they know how to eat out in the field, but they don't know how to eat in an ambassador's house."

Those assigned to embassies in Zambia, Guyana, Somalia and China, where uniforms are not worn for political reasons, are given a $400 allowance to buy civilian clothing.

After graduation, the Marines must serve 30 months at two embassies, where they serve under the jurisdiction of the ranking State Department official, either an ambassador or chief of mission.

The host country has the responsibility for external security of embassies, so the primary duty of the Marine guards is the protection of classified documents within the embassy.

"In the event of a mob action ... their prime job is to button the joint up and keep them out until the local government takes its responsibility to protect the place," explained a senior instructor.

The Marines' first post will be a "hardship post," in locations such as Lebanon, El Salvador, Yemen, China or Moscow. Duty in El Salvador and Lebanon, two of the most sought after postings, provides $65 a month in combat pay.

About 30 U.S. embassies worldwide, such as those in Libya, Chad and Uganda are unguarded at the request of the host country.

MSG strength around the world is 22 officers and 1,150 enlisted men. Between five and 32 Marines guard an embassy, Guins says, with the average detachment being nine.

"We need to graduate about 100 per class five times a year," Guins says, adding that the wash-out rate is about 25 percent per class.

"Suitability screening" to obtain "reliable, dependable, mature" Marines is one of the battalion's most important functions, says Guins.

Those chosen for the school must hold the rank of private first class or higher and meet rigid Marine and State Department standards. Upon completion of the course, a private first class is promoted to lance corporal before being sent overseas.

Training of MSG personnel is carried out jointly by the Marine Corps and the State Department. All Marine instructors are former embassy guards, and the State Department instructors have done duty in the foreign service.

Another instructor, Gunnery Sgt. Patrick J. Eagan of Portland, Ore., is a 13-year Marine veteran who saw action in Vietnam and has done two tours of embassy duty, once in 1971 and again in 1977.

"Number 10, you're dead," he shouts at a student who failed to reload his revolver fast enough.

"I like working with quality Marines, good Marines," Eagan says of his students.

Embassy security is a young man's duty. The average age of Marines currently going through the school is only 20 or 21. In Iran, Staff Sgt. Michael Moeller, the non-commissioned officer in charge, was an old man at 29.

Guins says lessons learned during the seizure of the U.S. embassy in Tehran have been incorporated in the Quantico program. As for the Marines who were captured by the Iranians, he says:

"They did a superb job in captivity ... maintained morale. I'd say they handled it (captivity) in an excellent to outstanding manner."

Marines with the rank of sergeant or below go through a six-week "security package" course covering all aspects of internal security, guard service, riot control, weapons training, access control and alarms.

They must nave excellent records, pass a top security clearance and have 32 months of service remaining upon completion of the school.

In addition, they must be unmarried and remain so for the duration of their embassy tour.

On The Young Side

By Elizabeth Ito

As the school year draws to a close, several organizations at Rose are electing officers for next year. The student body elected SGA and class officers after run-offs in several of the races.

Chip Little was elected president of the SGA with Juanita Gray, vice president, Wendy Walsh, recording secretary, Venetia Pruitt, corresponding secretary and Tim Shank, treasurer.

Upcoming sophomores voted Hunter Bost class president, Tracie Ebron, vice president and Susan Carter, secretary-treasurer. Ken Waters will serve as president of the junior class assisted by Lynette Hammond, vice president and Lori Little, secretary-treasurer. Elected to represent the senior class were Martha Ann Ferrell, president, Billy Stallings, vice president and Lou Taft, secretary-treasurer.

The Juniorettes, a community service club sponsored by the Junior Women's Club, elected upcoming senior Janet Banks to serve as president next year. Other officers include Kathryn Yorke, vice president, Marsha Tart, treasurer, Kristy Jennette, secretary, Virginia White, historian and Lisa Mills, chaplain.

Assuming leadership positions in the Spanish Club next year will be Dawn Morgan, president, Gordon Walker, vice president and Kipper Hair, secretary-treasurer.

A Vocation Co-op banquet, involving students in cooperative home economics, industrial cooperative training, office occupations and distributive eduction classes, was held Thursday at the Casablanca. The annual event is held to honor community employers who participate in the Vocational Cooperative Education program at Rose.

The speaker for the evening was Burley Mitchell, executive secretary for the N. C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

The food service class continus to stay busy with several culinary projects. In addition to preparing dessert for the Vocational Co-op banquet, the students made refreshments for the prom and planned a banquet for their parents.

Students in the child development class worked at day care centers throughout the city this past week. The centers included Loving' and Learnin', Moyewood, Meadowbrook and Children's 24.

The Rose and Aycock choirs, directed by Patricia Hiss and Linda Willis, performed in concert Wednesday evening. Vocal soloists included Vicky Evans, Kelvin Micheal, Sonya Morris, Shelton Sutton and Venetia Pruitt. Marc Shannon was accompanist.

"Stairway to Heaven" was the theme of this year's junior-senior prom held Friday night in the school cafeteria. "Celebration" provided musical entertainment for the evening.

Door Opens For Tax Proposals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration sent out more signals Saturday that it is interested in discussing new tax proposals, when its budget director acknowledged that its commitment to a three-year 30 percent tax cut could better be described as a preference.

"No one writes a sacred text for budget, tax or any other policy that doesn't get some kneading and shaping as it moves through the process," said David Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Stockman made his remarks as he initiated a new public relations effort — a weekly meeting with reporters to issue a score-keeping report each Saturday on how the administration's economic efforts fared in Congress over the previous seven days.

He said that Congress, by agreeing to limit growth in spending to 5.2 percent in the coming fiscal year, had joined the administration in setting "an abrupt and radical shift" in the federal government's spending patterns.

It was a week that gave Stockman much to crow about: The administration won, in his words, "unprecedented enforcement powers" to make its budget ceiling stick; its food stamp plans were adopted by the Senate Agriculture Committee, at a projected savings of nearly $2.1 billion, and the committee agreed to scale back by about $4 billion a major farm bill.

Most important, House and Senate members reached agreement on a budget blueprint setting spending levels in fiscal 1982, which begins Oct. 1, at $695 billion, nearly exactly what President Reagan sought.

But when the budget director's attention was turned to the coming weeks' economic priority, the president's plan to cut taxes by 10 percent a year over three years, Stockman was less certain.

During the past week, a variety of administration officials, from White House chief of staff James A. Baker III on down, have signaled their interest in hearing new proposals, spurred apparently by word from House Republican Leader Bob Michel that he could not muster the votes to pass Reagan's plan untouched.

Stockman said Saturday that, "I'm skeptical of headcouts this early in the game."

But, discussing the nuances of the past week's signals, and never acknowledging that a compromise was being sought, he said "there have been some discussions" with the Democrats, who control the House but not the Senate.

Asked about the fact that the administration's spokesmen and other officials were now saying the president "preferred" a three-year, 30 percent tax cut rather than that he was committed to such a plan — as they said he was originally — Stockman said "we probably nuanced it incorrectly" at first.

As reporters tried to pin him down about whether Reagan would accept anything less than a three-year plan if the Democrats make an offer, the budget director said, "we'll see what they propose."

"There's got to be that longer-term certainty," he said, making it clear the president remained opposed to a one-year tax cut.

"You've got to put a proposal on the table. There's only one on the table. It's ours. We think it's the best, it's preferable," he said.

FOREST PLANE CRASHES ... Merton R. Jackson of Kinston, a state Forest Service pilot, was killed in the crash of his plane near Ellis Airport at Jacksonville on Friday. Investigators were still seeking the cause of the crash on Saturday. (AP Laserphoto)

Forestry Pilot Dies

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Investigators Saturday were still trying to determine the cause of a plane crash which resulted in the death of a 56-year-old Forest Service pilot on Friday.

Merton R. Jackson of Kinston was flying a two-seat, single-engine Forest Service plane to assist in battling a 30-acre forest fire in the Back Swamp area when the plane crashed into a heavily wooded area north of Lake Catherine near the Duplin County line.

Jackson was spotting for another plane fighting the fire when the crash occurred.

The cause of the crash has not been determined, according to Forest Service spokesman Jim Sheppard.

Rescuers carried out an elaborate plan Friday for moving Jackson from the heavily wooded crash site near Albert Ellis Airport to Onslow Memorial Hospital.

A bulldozer was used to cut through the trees to reach the plane and Jackson, Sheppard said.

Town Starts Water Pumps

RNERSVILLE, N.C. (UPI) — The Forsyth County town of Kernersville has reopened its old water reservoir, closed for nearly four years by a chemical spill.

Town Manager Kelly Almond said the reservoir's pumps were turned on Friday morning, and the water will be tested daily to ensure that it is safe.

"It's as safe as we can guarantee it to be," Almond said. "I don't know what else we can do."

The reservoir was closed in June 1977 after being contaminated by 30,000 gallons of chemical wastes from the Destructo Chemway Corp., which later became Carolawn Co. Inc. It had not been used since then except during a fire at the Adams-Millis plant at Kernersville in March.

Almond said water from the reservoir will be treated with the town's regular treatment systems plus a filter made of powdered, activated carbon. He said more carbon than normal will be used for the next few weeks. The carbon is supposed to filter any pollutants, he said.

Russell & Axon, the town's engineering consultants, have approved use of the water with the carbon filter. The water also has been tested by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Almond said he was planning to open the reservoir Monday, but because drought has caused a severe water shortage in the town's new reservoir, the decision was made to open the old reservoir Friday.

The water level in the new reservoir, which the town was using in addition to the city-county water system, had dropped to within six inches of the intake valve to the town's system, he said. A small whirlpool was beginning to form above the intake valve, Almond said, sucking air into the pumps.

He said turning the water on Friday instead of Monday would prevent clogging of the pumps over the weekend.

Discourage By Beeper

BENTON HARBOR, Mich. (UPI) — A refrigerator that beeps continously if one of its doors remains open too long is just the thing to discourage midnight raids by sneaky dieters.

But that's not the reason a Benton Harbor manufacturer has introduced a refrigerator-freezer with a beeper.

The beeper is part of a solid state performance monitor. During normal operation, the monitor displays "OK" and four dots continuously scan across the panel. If something goes wrong, the OK symbol disappears, the dots stop moving and one of four symbols appears to alert the owner that something is amiss.

An open door symbol shows when one of the appliance's three doors is ajar. If the door remains open more than three minutes, the beeper sounds off, and continues until the door is closed.

When a thermometer symbol shows, indicating refrigerator temperature is too high, the beeper also sounds.

A triangle is the alert symbol, indicating that "door open" or "too warm" conditions have prevailed for more than 10 hours.

Pay Hike Is Urged

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said Saturday the American people should "not shirk from paying the bill" for increased military pay and allowances which he said are essential to maintaining an all-volunteer force.

Urging support for the Reagan administration's proposal for a 5.3 percent pay raise for the nation's more than 2 million uniformed men and women effective this July and a 9.1 percent boost in the fall, Weinberger said "these are not bonuses or unwarranted increases."

In a speech prepared for an Armed Forces Day ceremony, Weinberger said the proposed increases "represent simple equity, for they are essential to bring military compensation up to the level of comparability with the civilian sector that was promised when our nation instituted the all-volunteer force almost a decade ago."

As he has before, Weinberger stressed that he and President Reagan are committed to defending the nation "with a volunteer force, if at all possible."

"I am hopeful that we can do so," Weinberger said.

"The price — fair pay and allowances, an appropriate expression of pride in those who serve — is a small one indeed for all the blessings of peace and freedom.

"Let us not shirk from paying the bill."

The Reagan administration's revised defense budget proposes about $3.5 billion in increases in items for improving what it calls "the quality of life" for U.S. military personnel. About two-thirds of that amount would go for pay increases.

The ceremony here was held in MacArthur Square, named for Gen. Douglas MacArthur, one of the top U.S. commanders in World War II.

Weinberger, who served on MacArthur's intelligence staff in the Pacific campaigns of that war, announced that he has ordered a corridor in the Pentagon dedicated to MacArthur's memory.

GRADUATION

Michael G. Suggs was awarded a B.S. degree in industrial arts education during commencement exercises at North Carolina A&T University in Greensboro May 3. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Raymond Earl Suggs of Winterville.

Astronauts, 'Star Wars' Composer Get Degrees

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Space shuttle astronauts John Young and Robert Crippen strode to the president's platform for commencement exercises at the University of South Carolina Saturday as music from the movie "Star Wars" filled Carolina Coliseum.

Appropriately, John Williams, composer of the Oscar-winning music, also marched to a seat of honor before a crowd of over 10,000, who had come to see the pilots of America's first successful space shuttle flight and to watch the largest graduating class in the university's history receive degrees.

Young and Crippen, who were 11th-hour additions to the spring commencement program, received honorary doctorates from the university "for their unsurpassed mastery of the sciences of aeronautics and astronautics" and for their "unique services to all mankind in extending the frontiers of human daring and achievement."

Williams, also conductor of the Boston Pops, was given an honorary doctor of humane letters degree for his accomplishments as composer of the Oscar-winning film scores for "Fiddler On The Roof," "Jaws" and "Star Wars" as well 10 Grammys.

Young and Crippen received a standing ovation as they were introduced and again as they received their degrees.

Young, who logged 71 hours on the surface of the moon as lunar module pilot of Apollo 16, told the audience that the space shuttle program "demonstrates that when the American people set out to do something ... they can do it."

He urged the graduates to eliminate the word "can't" from their vocabulary. He said he read the week before the space shuttle was launched on April 14 that the Columbia couldn't fly, "but it did."

Crippen echoed his partner's remarks. "People — as John said — said it wouldn't fly, but it did fly."

Recalling the three years of training that preceded the flight last month, Crippen joked that one of his colleagues had remarked they "had enough hours for a doctorate in space shuttle."

The university also awarded honorary doctorates to Arthur Middleton Williams, chairman of the board of South Carolina Electric & Gas Co., and to George Curry, a transplanted Briton who has served the university in many different capacities since the 1940s.

Despite Illness, She Gets Perfect Grade

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Only six of the 2,869 graduates at the University of South Carolina Saturday finished their courses of study with perfect 4.0 grade point averages.

Laura Cathey, 21, of Irmo was one of them. What makes her feat even more extraordinary is that she has been fighting life-threatening leukemia for the past three years.

Because of her illness, she says she wants to become a pediatrician. She already has been accepted as a student at the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston.

But the road to recovery has been nearly as long as the road to medical school. Miss Cathey knew something was wrong during her freshman year at a college in Mississippi.

"I had been having joint pains sporadically during my freshman year," she recalled during a telephone interview. "I was being treated for tendonitis, which I didn't have."

"When I got back to Columbia, I started running a fever with it (the joint pains)," said Miss Cathey.

Doctors at Richland Memorial Hospital examined her and suggested that she go to Duke University Medical Center at Durham, N.C., where Dr. Harold Silberman first diagnosed leukemia and began treatment.

Miss Cathey said that she felt relieved when she learned it was acute lymphocytic leukemia. "I was afraid that I had rheumatoid arthritis, and I was actually relieved that the leukemia was treatable.

"The doctors were optimists," she said. "It took me longer to get into remission than they had anticipated."

She missed the fall term of 1978 while undergoing chemotheraphy but later made it up with summer courses so that she could finish on time.

"I got it (leukemia) at a good time. I was able to cope with it," she said.

She had a relapse last May and underwent more chemotheraphy last summer.

Checking-in by phone can mean a lot to friends and family or business associates. If you're running a little late or had a change in plans, Carolina Telephone's network of public phones can keep you close. And when you are on vacation, it's a great way to keep in touch.

To make your "check-in" even more convenient, a Telephone Credit Card is the way to go. Your card puts an end to fumbling for change. In fact, it's the easiest way to call long distance from any public phone. And since your monthly statement gives you an instant record at tax time, you can charge all business calls to your credit card number. Just call your Carolina Telephone business office and ask for "the calling card that gives you credit."

So when you're traveling, check-in with the public telephone system, and then check-out a

State Colleges Graduate 5,800

By The Associated Press

Graduation ceremonies were held Saturday for 5,800 students in Raleigh, Wilmington, Laurinburg, Charlotte, Boiling Springs and Wingate.

At North Carolina State University, where more than 3,000 students were graduated, the commencement address was given by Dr. Frank H.T. Rhodes, president of Cornell University.

Rhodes paid tribute to the graduates and also to the university's faculty and staff, saying they "have established North Carolina State's position as one of the nation's major research universities."

He also praised William C. Friday, president of the 16-campus university system, for his "foresight, wisdom and success."

In Boiling Springs, the Rev. William Tanner, president of the Southern Baptist Convention's home mission board, told the 240 graduates that commencement speakers usually lie.

He said he would not lie to the students and would not gloss over the realities of the world the graduates would face. He cited Abscam, Watergate and crime in the cities to illustrate what he called a decline in ethics.

He said there was an old solution — hard scholarship, committed lives and religious conviction — to the new problems.

"One of the most important things for young people today ... is the ability to distinguish between what is real in life as opposed to the things that are illusory," he said.

At UNC-Charlotte, where 1,750 students were graduated, Chancellor E.K. Fretwell Jr. talked about the students' relationships with their families, faculty and the future.

Referring to Alvin Toffler's "Future Shock" and his new book, "The Third Way," Fretwell stressed the need for the students to live with change.

To this, he said, he would add "the absolute necessity for better understanding on how live fruitfully with other human beings in an increasingly crowded and competitive setting."

At UNC-Wilmington, Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green delivered the commencement address for 578 students.

Green told the students they would have to create their own opportunities.

Priest Killed

JACKSON, Tenn. (AP) — Police are looking for a man seen near a church rectory where a popular Roman Catholic priest was found slain, apparently shot to death when he interrupted a burglar.

The Rev. John J. Jackson, 35, a former newspaper reporter who was ordained to the priesthood last July, was found in a bedroom of St. Mary's Parish rectory shortly after 8 a.m. Friday. He had been shot twice in the back of his head with a large-caliber weapon, police said.

Police Chief Ed Alderson said it appeared that Jackson had struggled with a burglar before he was shot to death Thursday night. Papers were strewn across the floor, a table was overturned and Jackson's head and arms were heavily bruised.

Jackson's pockets were turned inside-out, and an undisclosed amount of money was missing from the rectory.

A sliding glass door at the rear of the house had been broken. Alderson said detectives took plaster casts of several footprints found in the yard.

A part-time groundskeeper was taken to police headquarters for questioning after Jackson's body was found Friday.

PCC To Dedicate Buildings, Hold Open House Today

Pitt Community College will hold dedication services today for the Vernon E. White Building and the Kathryn Van Nortwick Whichard Building.

The service will be held on the PCC campus from 3-5 p.m., with Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green delivering the dedicatory speaker. An open house will follow the dedication.

White, a farmer, politician and civic leader, was born in Hertford County but has lived near Winterville for several years. A graduate of Wake Forest University, White has represented the 6th District in the state Senate since 1969 and is now second in seniority in that chamber of the Legislature.

White also served as a member of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners from 1963-66 and served as its chairman in 1966. He has been a PCC trustee throghout the school's 20-year history, and has served as vice chairman and chairman of the board. He also is a trustee of Chowan College.

He has been a member of the Board of Deacons of Winterville Missionary Baptist Church for 22 years, holding the office of chairman on five occasions. He has directed the church Sunday School for 21 years.

White is a member of the Ruritan Club, Loyal Order of the Moose and the Kiwanis Club. He has also been affiliated with the N.C. Veterinary Medical Foundation Inc., N.C. Tobacco Foundation and the Carolina Charter Corporation.

White is married to the former Louise Ange of Winterville and they have one son, Charles Vernon White.

KATHRYN V. WHICHARD

VERNON E. WHITE

Kathryn Van Nortwick Whichard is a native of Greenville. She is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Oliver Van Nortwick. She is a graduate of the Greenville City school system and obtained her post-secondary education at Ward-Belmont Junior College in Nashville, Tenn., and Duke University, where she earned a B.A. degree in English. She has done graduate work at East Carolina University and Northwestern University.

Mrs. Whichard was an organizer, charter member and first president of the Greenville Jaycettes. She has also been instrumental in Scouting and has served as coordinator of a volunteer reading program for the Greenville City Schools, providing assistance to students with reading problems.

She has served on the board of directors of the Pitt County Mental Health Association and as a director of the Greenville Museum of Art.

A charter member of the board of trustees of Pitt Community College, Mrs. Whichard has served successive terms since her original appointment in 1961. She currently holds the office of vice-chairman. During her 20-year tenure, she has provided counsel to the board and has been a liaison between the college and the local community.

She has served on each of the major committees of the board of trustees and has for eight years been chairperson of the board's personnel committee.

A member of Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church, Mrs. Whichard serves as a director of that church. She also serves as a director for the United Methodist Women. She is a member of the Pickwick Book Club and the Lenoir-Pitt Committee of the Colonial Dames of America.

Mrs. Whichard is the mother of three children — Mrs. William C. Poston, D. Jordan Whichard III and Miss Virginia Whichard.

Ski Slope Operators Pushing Law Change

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina ski slope operators, who earned more than $60 million last year, are pushing a bill in the General Assembly to shift much of the responsibility for skiing injuries from them to the skiers.

The bill, introduced by Sen. George Marion, D-Surry, would establish a legal recognition of skiing as a dangerous sport regardless of safety precautions taken by the slope owners.

Marion says the bill is needed because North Carolina's growing ski industry is finding it increasingly difficult to get insurance coverage. By establishing who is liable for what kinds of injuries, Marion says insurance should be easier for slope owners to find.

The bill is in the Senate Insurance Committee, where a subcommittee is looking at it. One member of the panel, Sen. Don Kincaid, R-Caldwell, introduced a similar bill in 1979 which failed to win approval.

Marion's bill would require skiers know their limits and not try to ski on slopes too difficult for them. It also would make skiers — not the ski area owners — liable for injuries caused by terrain or running into utility poles and other obstructions.

The bill would relieve ski area owners from responsibility for injuries in collisions between skiers. "This may cut out the problem of some horseplay on the slopes," Marion told the Senate panel recently.

But Howard Kramer, a Raleigh attorney and lobbyist for the North Carolina Ski Operators Association, said a skier still could prosecute if he found the slope operators allowed too many people to ski at one time.

Kramer said the bill will recognize "you have not just rights to ski, you have obligations too." The immediate effects of the bill, he said, probably would be an effort by slope owners to educate skiers about their responsibilities. That could come in the form of signs or notices, he said.

Skiers' other obligations under the bill would include getting on and off lifts at designated areas only, not throwing objects off the lift, learning to use the lift properly and wearing retention straps on skis.

In 1957, Carolina Telephone received approval by the North Carolina Utilities Commission to increase rates to its customers. This increase was needed because of the growing cost of running an efficient communications system. Eighteen years later, a second increase was requested and granted for the same reason as the first; to cover the rising costs of providing the most up-to-date phone service available.

Of course, you've seen rising prices over the last ten years on just about everything. But that doesn't mean you'll ever get used to it. And neither will we.

It's 1981 and your telephone bill is increasing for the third time in 24 years. And again the increase, though small compared to the overall inflationary trend, is necessary because of the ever escalating expense of providing telephone service. Improved technology has contributed greatly to our ability to hold down telephone rates. However, even new technology is expensive to introduce during periods of high inflation. Since old equipment has to be replaced, we have no choice but to spend the dollars necessary to ensure adequate communication service.

But if inflation is controlled, our operating costs will not rise as fast as they have — and phone bills will reflect the improvement. That's why we're optimistic about the current economic proposals now being considered in Congress.

Our nation has the opportunity to turn around runaway spending, unemployment and inflation. We must convince the lawmakers and other opinion leaders that we demand a change.

Carolina Telephone has urged its employees to speak out; to express their feelings and ideas about the American economy to their elected representatives. And we'd like to encourage the people of eastern North Carolina whom Carolina Telephone serves to voice their opinions as well. Let's all make it known that we're ready for a change in the economy now.

With a little push from all of us, promising economic proposals could soon be put into action. And that could mean brighter days ahead for the American economy. So take pen in hand, and take a stab at inflation!

JOY TEMPLE REVIVAL

Revival services will be held at Joy Temple Holiness Church, 410 Howell St., Monday through Friday.

Bishop Columbus Arrington of Williamsburg, Va., will be the speaker. The pastor and congregation invite the public to each of the 8 p.m. services.

Homes Offer Personal Care For Elderly

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Several years ago, an elderly woman crawled across the crumb-strewn floor of a central Pennsylvania boarding home, locked her arms around the legs of a visiting nurse, and pleaded, "Get me out of here."

Her plea was finally answered several months ago, after the first court test of a new state licensing program for personal care boarding homes.

When the elderly residents were moved from the dilapidated Petticoat Junction Party House in Altoona, the visiting nurse and several social workers were on hand for the exodus. All had been horrified for years by sagging ceilings, festering disease, meager meals, abuse, filth and fire hazards.

"It turned out to be very emotional," says state inspector Susan Marshall. "As the last three drove away, I started to cry."

Unlike commercial rooming houses, personal care homes serve elderly or mentally disabled people who need help with dressing, bathing, medication, meals or transportation.

They cannot live independently, but they are not sick enough to be in hospitals or nursing homes. And the boarding home facilities available to them often fall through bureaucratic cracks, ignored until raging fires or dog food dinners catapult them into the headlines.

The U.S. House Committee on Aging estimates that 130 boarding home residents died in 10 multi-fatality fires in a recent 18-month period. In New Jersey alone, the committee said, four fires killed 64 people in seven months.

New Sub Launched

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — More than five years after its keel was laid, the nuclear-powered attack submarine Jacksonville officially joined the U.S. Navy on Saturday.

The submarine, which will join the Atlantic Fleet at its home port of Norfolk, Va., becomes the 12th of its class in active service in the Navy. It is the seventh of the 688-class submarines built and launched by the Electric Boat shipyard.

The commissioning ceremony attracted much less attention than the launching of a sister ships last month. The launch of the USS Corpus Christi drew several hundred demonstrators, many of them protesting the religious derivation of the sub's name, which is Latin for "Body Of Christ."

The Jacksonville displaces 6,900 tons and is 360 feet long. Armed with Harpoon anti-submarine rockets and anti-submarine torpedoes, the vessel will carry a crew of 12 officers and 115 enlisted men. Its speed is classified but 688-class subs are estimated to be able to travel at about 30 knots when submerged.

Launched on Nov. 18, 1978, it is the first Navy ship to carry the name of the Florida city.

First Lady Christens Cruiser

PASCAGOULA, Miss. (AP) — Nancy Reagan broke a bottle of New York champagne against the bow of the Navy's new $930 million guided missile cruiser Saturday, officially christening it "Ticonderoga."

Mrs. Reagan, on her first solo journey as first lady, had approached the task with trepidation, since she tried it once before — years ago — and the bottle refused to break. Clearly delighted that she'd accomplished her mission Saturday, the first lady affectionately patted the ship's gray bow as a crowd of 5,000 looked on.

Her success this time was virtually guaranteed. Well in advance of her robust swing, an official called the White House to report: "Tell her the bottle has been etched."

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who accompanied Mrs. Reagan to Ingalls Shipbuilding, the firm that built the ship, told the crowd the Ticonderoga was "one of the most powerful, one of the most extraordinary ships in the Navy's history."

"We are christening the most capable anti-air warfare system ever put to sea," he said. "Aegis, the computer integrated weapons system, will be able to detect hundreds of targets simultaneously, then identify, track and destroy enemy targets using her own missiles and weapons from other units."

Weinberger said the warship could "defeat any threat to naval forces known or projected."

Adm. Thomas B. Hayward, chief of naval operations, acknowledged the ship's price tag was high but said it was far superior to a new, more-expensive battle cruiser the Soviet Union will put to sea this year.

"We have more firepower, we are more sophisticated and we have more class," Hayward said. "We are building the right kind of Navy and we are proud of it."

Weinberger, in his speech, said the Navy "must be capable of establishing maritime superiority," but in talking to reporters beforehand refused to say whether he considered the Soviet or American navy superior right now.

Nevertheless, he told the audience, "President Reagan and I remain convinced that the United States Navy must — and will — reign supreme on the high seas."

This ship, the fifth to be named after Fort Ticonderoga in New York, was launched three weeks ago but still is under construction and will not join the Navy fleet until early 1983. Work on the ship, the first in a new class of guided missile cruisers, began here in 1979 by Ingalls, a division of Litton Industries.

Bess Truman Said Improving

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Former first lady Bess Truman, still battling complications from hip surgery 10 days ago, was in "improved" but still serious condition Saturday, her physician said.

The 96-year-old widow of Harry S. Truman has experienced heart, kidney and lung problems since undergoing surgery May 7 at Research Medical Center to correct a broken hip.

Dr. Wallace Graham, the Truman family physician since 1945, said Mrs. Truman's left lung appeared to have cleared, her temperature had returned to normal and her other signs had stabilized.

However, "Mrs. Truman is not out of danger yet," he cautioned. "I would still say she is in serious condition. We are still administering diuretics to help her kidneys along."

But she experienced her best night since the surgery, Graham said, and said "good morning" to him when he visited her.

Reagan Speaks At Notre Dame

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Reagan will make a sentimental journey to Notre Dame Sunday where he will promise the graduating class a bright new future and condemn "doom criers and cynics who say the best is past".

In a preview, acting press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan's commencement address at South Bend, Ind., "will be tinged with nostalgia, hope and challenge."

It will be the president's first trip out of town since he was shot and wounded by a would-be assassin nearly seven weeks ago. There were indications security precautions would be tighter than usual.

Some student groups apparently planned demonstrations on several issues, including U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

Reagan spent Saturday polishing the speech, which Speakes said also will deal with the "economic stagnation" and say "the cost of that stagnation in human terms, mostly among those who are least equipped to survive it, is cruel and inhuman."

Speakes said Reagan will urge the graduates "to use their youth, strength and idealism to help us make right that which is wrong."

"He condemns doom criers and cynics who say the best is past," Speakes added, and quotes Reagan as saying, "You will have opportunities behyond anyting we've ever known."

Speakes said the film was the "turning point" in Reagan's life its message made a "deep impression" on him.

Kentucky Derby Victor One Leg Away From Triple Crown

Pleasant Colony Edges Bold Ego To Win Preakness

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Preakness finish line was looming up and Pleasant Colony was having difficulty passing Bold Ego. "I said to myself, 'What's going to happen?'" said Jorge Velasquez.

Pleasant Colony came up with an answer that pleased his jockey. He finished one length ahead of Bold Ego to add a victory in the Preakness to his triumph in the Kentucky Derby and move a step closer to the Triple Crown.

Pleasant Colony reared in the post parade and trainer Johnny Campo, clad in a rust-colored suit, ran up and down the track shouting instructions to Velasquez.

But once the gate opened, Pleasant Colony was all business and, at the end of the 13-16 mile race, the trainer they call "The Fat Man," was beaming instead of anxious.

"He's a great racehorse, and don't nobody forget it," said Campo. "He's three-fifths of a second off of the track record and he played with these horses. He's playing now. Just wait 'til he gets good.

"This horse does it for fun."

Pleasant Colony and Campo will try to have another good time June 6 in the Belmont Stakes, the final leg of the Triple Crown.

Pleasant Colony completed the race in 1:543-5. The stakes and track record was 1:54 by Canonero II in 1974.

After the first three-quarters of a mile, Pleasant Colony was sixth as Bold Ego led the 13-horse field. Then on the turn, he made a big move on the outside — he had gone inside with his winning move in he Derby — and he moved to challenge the leader. With an eighth of a mile remaining, he was second and two lengths behind Bold Ego, and Velasquez was beginning to have some doubts.

But Pleasant Colony would not be denied, and he collared Bold Ego with less than 70 yards to go, then drew away to his length victory.

Bold Ego finished two lengths in front of Paristo, whose owners had paid $10,000 to supplement the colt into the race. Thirty Eight Paces was another five lengths back.

Pleasant Colony, owned by Thomas Mellon Evans, paid $5, $3.40 and $3.20. J.D. Barton and Joseph Kidd's Bold Ego, who had finished 10th in the Derby after engaging in an early speed duel with Top Avenger, paid $4.60 and $4.20. Paristo, a 70-1 longshot, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Fineberg, returned $17.80 and earned $20,000, which at least paid back his owners' faith in him.

Once Velasquez got Pleasant Colony outside of the turn, it was smooth and fast sailing. The winner and Bold Ego dueled through the final three-sixteenths of a mile in 181-5 seconds, which ties the Preakness record for the final three-sixteenths. Little Current in 1974, Affirmed in 1978 and Codex last year also completed the race in 181-5.

His departure from Baltimore was almost as swift as his race. Shortly after the race, Campo announced that the colt would leave for his home base at Belmont Park in New York at 8 p.m. EDT.

Velasquez said he ran into traffic problems going into the first turn. But Eddie Delahoussaye, who rode 11th-place finisher Woodchopper, indicated there were traffic problems throughout the race. "I got wiped out between the half-mile and three-eighths pole and almost got dropped. It was a rough-run race and there was a lot of bumping."

But as the most crowded Preakness since Little Current beat 12 rivals seven years ago, there were no foul claims or controversy. Last year, Jacinto Vasquez, who finished second on Kentucky Derby-winning filly Genuine Risk, claimed a foul against the winner, Codex, and Angel Cordero Jr. The stewards disallowed the claim, which brought an outcry from certain quarters and an appeal to the State Racing Commision by the filly's owners, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Firestone. The commission upheld the stewards.

A record Preakness crowd of 83,455 watched the filly lose a race many thought she should have won last year. A new record turnout of 84,113 watched Pleasant Colony have fun.

After Pleasant Colony had worked a half-mile in 462-5 at Pimlico Wednesday, trainer John Camp said: "It didn't look like he was going that fast if you watched him. He must be getting good." Then he added, "I honestly believe we have yet to see how good this colt is."

THE DAILY REFLECTOR
Sports
SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 17, 1981

Well, the leggy Virginia-bred son of His Majesty has been good enough to win the first two legs of the Triple Crown, and on June 6 he will see if he is good enough to win the Belmont Stakes and sweep thoroughbred racing's most famous series.

In earning a Preakness record $200,800 for his third straight win and boosting his career earnings to $720,147, Pleasant Colony returned $5, $3.40 and $3.20. Bold Ego, owned by J.B. Barton and Joseph Kidd, returned $4.60 and $4.20. The surprising Paristo, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Fineberg, returned $17.80. He went off as a 70-1 shot.

Completing the order of finish after Thirty Eight Paces were: Partez, Highland Blade, Escambia Bay, Bare Knuckles, Double Sonic, A Run, Woodchopper, Flying Nashua and Top Avenger. Each starter carried 126 pounds.

Partez had finished third in the Derby, while Woodchopper had chased Pleasant Colony to the wire, just three-quarters of a length back. But Woodchopper was never in contention on this cool, partially sunny day.

Thirty Eight Paces was the first out of the gate, but Bold Ego quickly took over. He led the field through the first quarter in 244-5 seconds and the half in 473-5. That was 22-5 slower than the first half-mile speed duel between Bod Ego and Top Avenger in the Derby.

The time for the first three-quarters was 1:13, and Bold Ego, the Arkansas Derby winer, reached the end of the mile in 1:362-5.

Bold Ego, Thirty Eight Paces and Paristo were the first three horses into the backstretch, and they maintained that order in the run to the half-mile pole. Velasquez and Pleasant Colony were back in thr pack at this point. Then they were on the final turn and suddenly Pleasant Colony was flashing by horses in a charge at the leader.

He was second to Bold Ego with a quarter of a mile to go and had dead aim on the leader as they dueled through the stretch.

Pleasant Colony, sort of an ugly duckling colt, with a scar on his left flank and some hairless spots on his right flank, collared the leader inside the 16th pole and victory belonged to him and Campo, his talkative trainer, known as "The Fat Man."

The victory was the 43-year-old Campo's first in seven Preaknesses while the 34-year-old Velasquez was winning this classic for the first time in six tries. The Panamanian had finished second on Iron Constitution behind Seattle Slew in 1977 and was second again on Alydar to Affirmed in 1978.

Both Seattle Slew and Affirmed went on to win the Triple Crown, and now Velasquez finds himself being chased toward that goal instead of doing the chasing.

The victory continued the winning relationship between Pleasant Colony and Campo. The round trainer from the streets of New York didn't start training the colt until after he had finished fifth in the Florida Derby March 6. In his first start under Campo, Pleasant Colony won the Wood Memorial April 18. Then it was the Derby two weeks ago, and now it's the Preakness.

Fourteen 3-year-olds were entered Thursday, but Pass The Tab was scratched Friday in favor of the May 25 Pennsylvania Derby at Keystone.

Unser Captures Pole Position For Indianapolis 500

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — High-flying Bobby Unser captured the pole position for the 65th Indianapolis 500 with a sizzling four-lap qualifying run of 200.546 mph Saturday at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

The 10-mile sprint by Unser, a 47-year-old veteran from Albuquerque, N.M., gave him the first over-200 mph qualifying speed since 1978, when all three front row cars were over that magical hurdle.

The speed was well shy of the qualifying record of 202.156 mph set by Tom Sneva in 1978, but it was far more than he needed to put his sleek Norton-sponsored Penske PC-9B at the front of the traditional 33-car field for the May 24 race.

Ironically, Sneva, a 32-year-old former school principal from Spokane, Wash., was faster than Unser but was not eligible to sit at the front of the grid, winding up 26th on the grid.

Sneva lost his chance to win the top spot a week earlier. He waved off an early attempt in one of his team's cars after three laps in the high 180s and the car he qualified Saturday was not in the original line of cars eligible for the pole.

Sneva's fast lap of 202.429 on Saturday was short of his single-lap track record of 203.620, set during that record run in 1978.

Unser easily bounced four-time Indy winner A.J. Foyt off the provisional pole, which the 46-year-old Texan grabbed a week earlier with an average of 196.078 mph during the rain-interrupted first-day of time trials.

Mike Mosley put Dan Gurney's stock block Chevrolet-powered in the middle of the front row, between Unser and Foyt. Mosley, a 34-year-old from Fallbrooke, Calif., turned four fast laps at 197.141.

Unser, a two-time Indy champion and the pole winner in 1972, started his qualifying set by driving his Cosworth-powered car to a lap of 200.714 mph. He followed that with a blistering 201.342 lap around the 2½-mile Speedway oval.

His third trip around the asphalt track was timed at 200.758 and he slipped to 199.380 on the fourth lap.

"It was a pretty good run until the last turn of the last lap," a smiling Unser said. "I had a heckuva deficit up in turn

Lady Pirates Fall To UNC, Finish 3rd In AIAW Tournament

RALEIGH — North Carolina scored once in the first inning and added two more runs in the second before holding off an East Carolina rally in the last two innings to defeat the Lady Pirates, 3-2, Saturday afternoon in the consolation bracket of the AIAW National Slow-Pitch Softball Championships.

The win moved the Tar Heels into the tournament finals where they were beaten, 4-1, by Florida State, giving the Seminoles the national title. UNC finishes second in the nation and East Carolina third.

Florida State, which finished the season 54-7, held on to a 1-0 lead until the sixth inning when the Seminoles pushed across three runs with four consecutive singles. The Tar Heels scored one run in the seventh.

North Carolina, which defeated N.C. State earlier in the day, 14-4, to advance to the consolation finals, jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first inning against ECU and scored twice more in the third for a 3-0 lead.

The Lady Pirates, who finish the season with a 44-7 record, did not score until the sixth, when they Kathy Riley scored to cut the deficit to 3-1.

With one out, Riley singled and raced to second when the leftfielder was slow in returning he ball to the infield. Cynthia Shepard then reched on an error to score Riley.

One inning later, ECU was back for more, and, except for an outstanding play by UNC pitcher Susan Speer, the Lady Pirates might have advanced to the championship game.

Mary Powell singled to lead off the seventh and Lillon Barnes came in to run for her. Shirley Brown then reached on an error and former Greene Central star Melody Ham came in to run for her.

Ham was subsequently out at second on a force play when Ginger Rothermel grounded into a fielder's choice but managed to keep the Tar Heels from completing the double play.

Tammy Parham followed with a single to score Barnes and the Lady Pirates trailed 3-2. Then, with a 3-1 count and Riley on deck, Hooks ripped a line shot straight up the middle that Speer stabbed for the final out. Had Speer not caught the ball the Pirates would have scored at least one run and perhaps two.

As it were, however, Hooks was out and the Pirates had finished third in the tournament.

"I was very proud of the way our girls played," ECU coach Alita Dillon said. "I know they're disappointed that the team didn't win because they knew we should have beaten North Carolina.

"But I think we've had an outstanding season. We will be losing some very good players but we've got some good players coming in and we should be right back up here next year."

Florida State placed five players on the all-tournament team, UNC four and ECU three. For the Lady Pirates, Riley, Rothermel and Cynthia Shepard were named to the all-tournament team.

Riley and Shepard were two for three against the Tar Heels. Riley had a double among her two hits. UNC, which ends the season at 48-22, was led by all-tournament selection Lisa Perry. Perry had two hits in three at bats and scored two runs.

Riley, a senior, is one of three players being considered for the Broderick Award, an annual award given to the nation's best slow-pitch softball player.

In the running also for the award, which will be announced in the next week or so, are Florida State sophomore shortstop Darby Cottel and UNC senior shortstop Laurie Bailey.

On the all-tournament team from Florida State were pitcher Susan Painter, first baseman Charlotte Cates, third baseman Carol O'Domski, outfielder Natalie Drouin and Cottel.

Ayden-Grifton—The 1981 ECC Champions

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

LITTLEFIELD — When Ayden-Grifton opened the 1981 season with three losses in its first four games, Charger coach Allan Wilson was not ready to hoist the white flag of surrender.

Not this year. Wilson sensed it wouldn't be long before the Chargers would right themselves. One game later, the Chargers were on their way to doing just that.

It was Tuesday, April 17. Ayden-Grifton was playing host to Roanoke, a team the Chargers had beaten a week earlier, 9-8. But this was another day, another game.

After only two innings Ayden-Grifton found itself down 10-0 and staring at its fourth loss in five games. In past seasons, the Chargers might have given up. Not this year.

In the final five innings Ayden-Grifton rallied to escape with a 23-15 win and start a six-game winning streak, its longest of the season.

"We've always gotten off to a bad start," Wilson said. "Had we lost to Roanoke were would have been 1-4. But we won and that got us within one game of .500, which was one of our goals this season, to play .500 baseball. We did a little better than that, though."

Indeed. The Chargers wound up the regular season with a 14-9 (.608) overall record and a 12-4 league mark, good enough to give Ayden-Grifton its first Eastern Carolina Conference championship in five seasons.

Along with the league title comes an automatic berth in the state 3-A playoffs. Ayden-Grifton will face to Roanoke Rapids, which won the Northeastern Conference title Friday night with a 6-5 victory over Edenton. The game will be played next week but the date has yet to be decided on.

The ace of the Chargers staff, Gay finished the season with a 9-4 record and had 12 complete games. In 87⅔ innings pitched he allowed 44 hits, walked 39 and struck out 142 and had an earned run average of x.xx. Gay, a sophomore, has now struck out 246 batters in 162⅔ innings in his high school career.

Making Gay all the more tough going into the playoffs, however, is the fact Wilson has been able to rest him for nearly two weeks.

"When he's sharp, he's tough to hit. We feel like Tyrone can dominate a game when he's right. He can set the tone of the game, striking out 16 or 17 a night. They have to get to him early, too, because he gets stronger as the game goes along."

So, too, do the Chargers. Ayden-Grifton has had a penchant of winning games in the late innings this season. Of its nine losses, eight have been by one run.

Today In Baseball

Sunday, May 17

On this date in baseball in 1979:

Chicago's Dave Kingman belted three home runs, while Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt blasted two, including the game-winner in the 10th inning, as the Phillies beat the Cubs, 23-22, in one of the wildest games in major league history.

On this date in 1970:

Atlanta's Hank Aaron beat out an infield single against Cincinnati's Wayne Simpson to become the ninth player in big league history to collect 3,000 lifetime hits. Despite Aaron's heroics, the Reds topped the Braves, 7-6 in 15 innings, to complete a doubleheader sweep.

On this date in 1963:

On this date in 1953:

Today's Birthday:

North Stars Look To Increase Tempo

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — As any good musician knows, it's all in the tempo.

And, as most of the Minnesota North Stars realize, their chances of winning the Stanley Cup will depend on who sets the pace for the rest of the National Hockey League finals.

"We have to get our own flow to the games," said North Stars center Bobby Smith as his team prepared for Sunday night's third game of the best-of-seven finals. The North Stars trail the defending NHL champion New York Islanders two games to none after dropping a pair of 6-3 decisions on Long Island.

"We've got to get every possible advantage and we can best do that with a faster tempo.

"We have to be realistic. The Islanders aren't playing with boots on their feet. We can still have a fast game no matter how disciplined they are. We don't expect to get them running around because that won't happen.

"At least from our own players, we have to get a better flow to the game, get guys moving out of our zone with a head of steam."

It won't be easy because the Islanders aren't the type of team to be distracted from their patient style.

"We're back in the groove now," said Islanders defenseman Denis Potvin, who had two goals and an assist in the second game to give him 100 career playoff points. "Being in the final for the second time is a more comfortable feeling. You don't put nearly as much pressure on yourself."

The North Stars, newcomers to the last step in the chase for hockey's most coveted prize, are under a great deal of pressure — a loss Sunday would just about wrap up the title for New York.

"We can talk all day about being ready and about strategy," said Steve Payne, Minnesota's leading goal scorer in the playoffs with 14. "But we have to go out on the ice and do it. We can't get down 3-0 and come back. Maybe it happened once before somewhere but it doesn't happen anymore, not against teams like the Islanders."

So Payne, and many of his teammates on the young North Stars — who dress as many as seven rookies for a game — feel they are in a must-win situation. In fact, Payne indicated that Minnesota needs to win both games here if it is to have a true shot at wresting the Cup from the grasp of the experienced Islanders.

"They are not a team to get behind of," added Payne. "The Islanders didn't let us get a chance to get into our game in the first game. We got going a bit in the second game but they're as good as anybody at maintaining a lead."

The North Stars will send veteran Gilles Meloche — who started Game 1 — back to guard their net Sunday after rookie Don Beaupre played the second game. Neither man was particularly effective, though Beaupre did keep the Stars in the second game until New York's three-goal blitz in the final period.

Minnesota defenseman Brad Maxwell hurt a shoulder muscle and isn't expected to play Sunday but rookie center Kevin Maxwell has responded well to treatment of his back spasms after missing the games in New York. He probably will suit up for Game 3.

"We're confident we have the talent, provided we use it to a maximum, to play with the Islanders," said Payne. "This is it, for the Cup. We have to be just as hungry as they are and match their intensity.

Ford Helps O's Shut Out Minnesota

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Dave Ford pitched seven shutout innings in relief of sore-armed Steve Stone, the American League's 1980 Cy Young winner, as the Baltimore Orioles blitzed Minnesota 7-0 Saturday.

Stone, off to a 2-3 start, lasted just two innings before complaining of a numb pitching elbow. Ford, 1-0, started the third inning and allowed just four singles — two by Roy Smalley and one apiece by Gary Ward and Glenn Adams.

"Whenever you have to take a guy out because he has pain in his elbow, that's not good," said Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver. "We won't know anything until he's examined on Monday or Tuesday."

Stone, who was 25-7 a year ago, was asked if he feared for his career.

"Anytime your arm is numb, it's not any cause to throw a party," he replied. "It's been getting progressively worse. The numbness started about a week ago, but it's been feeling bad for two weeks. I've got to get something done."

Rick Dempsey keyed the Orioles' 14-hit attack with a home run and two doubles. In the last three games, Baltimore has collected 17, 19 and 14 hits, respectively.

The Orioles got three runs in the third inning off Jerry Koosman, 1-6. Dempsey hit his third homer of the year, a solo shot with one out, and Bob Bonner followed with a double. Koosman walked the next two batters before Eddie Murray doubled home two more runs.

Kansas City 7
Boston 6

BOSTON (AP) — Willie Aikens and Hal McRae triggered a six-run fourth inning with consecutive homers and the Kansas City Royals held on Saturday for a 7-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

The Royals, who picked up a run in the first on a double by Willie Wilson, an infield out and a sacrifice fly by Aikens, unloaded against Dennis Eckersley, 3-3, in building a 7-0 lead in the fourth.

With one out, Aikens hit his fifth homer of the year, 10 rows deep beyond the 420-foot mark in center field. McRae followed with his first homer, a liner into the bleachers in straightaway center.

Amos Otis doubled and came around on bloop singles by Jamie Quirk and Frank White. Cesar Geronimo then singled home Quirk. Chuck Rainey replaced Ecksersley and White scored on an infield out. Wilson singled home Geronimo with the final run of the inning.

New York 7
Seattle 5

NEW YORK (AP) — Reggie Jackson's first triple of the season knocked in two runs and sparked a four-run, first-inning rally that started the New York Yankees to a 7-5 victory over the Seattle Mariners Saturday night.

Consecutive doubles by leadoff hitter Willie Randolph and Bobby Murcer scored the Yankees' first run. Dave Winfield then lined a single to left, moving Murcer to third, and Jackson drove them both home with a triple, the fourth straight hit off loser Jerry Don Gleaton, 2-6. Jackson scored later on an infield hit by Aurelio Rodriguez.

Seattle scored three runs in the top of the second to trail by one when Gary Gray hit a three-run homer, his first of two in the game.

The Yankees, however, scored the eventual winning runs with two more in their half of the second on a throwing error by Seattle catcher Terry Bulling, Bucky Dent's RBI grounder and a sacrifice fly by Winfield.

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim Morrison and Bill Almon drove in two runs each in a five-run second inning, and Harold Baines collected four hits and scored three times to lead Britt Burns and the Chicago White Sox to a 9-1 victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday night.

The triumph was the first for the Sox after four straight losses to the Rangers and came at the expense of Danny Darwin, 4-3, who was seeking his fifth successive victory.

With one out in the second, Baines singled and Chet Lemon doubled. Tony Bernazard was given an intentional walk and Morrison doubled for two runs. Almon singled across two more, stole second and scored on a double by Ron LeFlore.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Jackson Todd pitched a six-hitter and Buck Martinez drove in three runs to spark the Toronto Blue Jays to a 4-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

Todd, 2-3, struck out two and didn't walk a batter in his second complete game of the season. Cleveland's Rick Manning tripled to open the bottom of the first but Todd retired the next three hitters and did not allow another runner to advance beyond first until the eighth inning.

Toronto, ending a 32-inning scoreless streak which included Len Barker's perfect game for Cleveland Friday night, got two runs off Wayne Garland, 2-3, in the third inning.

DETROIT (AP) — Lou Whitaker's three-run homer highlighted a four-run second inning and John Wockenfuss added a solo shot in the fifth as the Detroit Tigers withstood three California homers and beat the Angels 7-5 Saturday.

N.C. Wesleyan Nips Lynchburg

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Tom Haverkamp singled in the winning run in the bottom of the 10th inning Saturday to give North Carolina Wesleyan a 4-3 win over Lynchburg College in the NCAA Division III South Atlantic Region baseball tournament.

N.C. Wesleyan, 31-10, one of only three teams to beat the Hornets during the regular season, had a 3-0 shutout going through eight innings.

The Hornets, 21-4, picked up three runs in the top of the ninth on a two-out, two-run triple by Bobby Garrett and a single by Walker Sports that scored Garrett.

Mike Desola singled in the bottom of the 10th, moved to second on a sacrifice and scored the winning run on Haverkamp's hit.

Cavs Sign W. Va. Star Jimmy Miller

PRINCETON, W.Va. (UPI) — Jimmy Miller of Princeton, the "Player of the Year" in West Virginia high school basketball, has signed a letter of intent with the University of Virginia.

The 6-foot-8 Miller averaged 23 points and 10 rebounds in leading Princeton to the state Class AAA championship for the second time in three years. He was named captain of the all-state team two years in a row

Miller also was recruited intensely by West Virginia, Wake Forest and Duke. The high school center, who likely will play forward at Virginia, said Saturday he "felt more comfortable at Virginia."

"That had a little bit to do with it," Miller said. "And, with (Jeff) Lamp and (Lee) Raker gone, I felt I had a chance to contribute next year."

Lamp and Raker were the Cavaliers' starting forwards, flanking All-America Ralph Sampson. Miller also is used to playing man-to-man defense, and that's what Terry Holland coaches mostly at Virginia.

"He went to the school where he thought he would fit in," said Princeton coach Ralph Ball. "I think he's got a good chance to contribute."

Craig Littlepage, the Virginia assistant who signed Miller, noted the Cavaliers lost six players by graduation.

"In Lamp and Raker we lose a great deal of scoring potential," Littlepage said. "Jimmy is one of the players we expect to contribute a great deal next year."

Strohs Tennis Finals Today

John Eatman will battle Ron Hignite Sunday at 1 p.m. for the Men's Over 35 singles championship of the Strohs Tennis Tournament at the River Birch Tennis Center.

Eatman, ranked 12th in the state, and Hignite, ranked seventh, are both of Greenville.

In other matches Sunday, Geoffrey Kokiko will battle Paul Gaff and Herb McKim will face Coleman Long this morning for the right to advance to the singles finals.

The men's doubles finals will pit Long and McKim against Alan Whitaker and Kokio. In the men's over 35 doubles title match, Hignite and Wes Hankins will meet Lee Horne and John Wilson.

In the men's over 55 singles championship, Tom Norfleet will face Kelly Abeyounis of Bethel.

Ayden-Grifton: 1981 ECC Baseball Champions

"They've done that and it seems strange," Wilson said. "We've tied or went ahead in a lot of games this season in the sixth and seventh inning. We've also done a lot of scoring with two outs.

"I don't think the kids are giving up this year. They might get down, but they always seem to come back."

Before the season began, few observers picked the Chargers to win the league crown. Undeterred, Wilson and his club took the ECC lead early and stubbornly clung to it.

Ayden-Grifton won its first five ECC games before dropping a 4-2 decision to Southern Nash. The Chargers followed that streak by winning their next six conference affairs before dropping their last three games — all against ECC foes — after clinching the league title.

"Every year I try to be optimistic," Wilson said. "I tell the kids we've got a chance, but especially this year I felt I had some fellows back I felt could give us an opportunity to finish up at the top.

"When we won our first and second conference games the kids gradually began to realize we had a chance," Wilson said. "When we continued to win the conference games and got a one game, one-and-a-half game lead, the kids started becoming confident they could win it and they started working harder."

The hard work paid off. Nearly every player on the team has improved from last year, led by Bernard Ricciarelli and Brandt Allen.

Ricciarelli, a junior second baseman, leads the Chargers in hitting with a .416 average, up from a .269 average a year ago. Allen, a senior pitcher/first baseman, has improved his average from .175 to .315 and has driven in 20 runs, second on the team.

Terry Locust, a junior outfielder, is second on the team in hitting with a .361 average. Gay is third with a .357 mark and also leads the team in runs batted in with 22.

As a team, the Chargers are hitting at a .302 clip (195 hits in 646 at bats). They have also stolen 36 bases, led by Chris Strickland and Ricciarelli with seven each.

Defensively, the Chargers have committed 54 errors, just over two a game. But over half of those mistakes occurred in the first half of the season, when Wilson was making a number of changes.

After Ricciarelli made two errors in the Chargers 9-8 win over Roanoke in the third game of the season, Wilson decided to make a change. He moved Ricciarelli from the outfield to second base. Locust, who had been at second, took Ricciarelli's place in left field.

"He had told me all along that he'd rather play the infield," Wilson said. "He told me he thought he could be more of a leader in the infield."

Another change, perhaps even more important, was moving freshman Doug Coley from the outfield to catcher 17 games into the season. Coley replaced another freshman, Roger Moye, who was later removed from the team for disciplinary reasons.

Since taking over for Moye, who hit .244 in 16 games but committed nine errors behind the plate, Coley has committed but one error and has hit .299. With Coley moving to catcher, the Chargers lineup was solidified.

All season long Wilson said the Chargers have felt the pressure to win. Then, when Farmville Central defeated Southern Nash to clinch the ECC title for Ayden-Grifton, the pressure was relieved.

Without the pressure to win, the Chargers approached their last three games less intense than usual. The result was three straight losses, Ayden-Grifton's longest losing streak of the season and one the Chargers will take with them in the first round of the state playoffs.

"The whole season we've known we've had to win and we did," Wilson said after the Chargers' season-ending 4-3 loss to Greene Central. "When the pressure wasn't there, we let up a little.

"We didn't get up for the games like we had earlier in the season. But I don't think the three losses will hurt us. I think we'll be ready. The kids realize this is a new season and if you lose you go home.

"When we've had to win this season, we have. We're a small team but we're scrappy. We don't look pretty sometimes in the things we do, but they'll fight you. If they get one or two runs down they don't quit."

Rose Outpoints Ahoskie, 134-99

Rampants Capture NE Sectional

TARBORO — Rose High School's Rampants pulled away from Ahoskie in the final three events to capture the Northeastern Sectional Track and Field Championships Friday.

The two teams were closely contested going into the 200-meeter dash, but Rose took first and second in that event, following that up with a first and third finish in the 3,200-meter run, and a second place finish in the concluding mile relay.

That allowed the Rampants to end the day with 134 points, while Ahoskie was second with 99. Fike finished third with 58, followed by Beddingfield with 41 and Tarboro with 34.

Roanoke finished tied for tenth with 12 points, while Williamston and D.H. Conley tied for 15th with six and Farmville Central was tied for 18th with four points.

Rose qualified 12 individuals for the Eastern Regionals, to be held Thursday at Wilson Fike High School, while Roanoke managed one qualifier. No other area athletes made it beyond the sectional, as only the top three in each event advance.

Rose had two double winners in the meet, with Erskine Evans winning the 100 and 200-meter dashes, and Harry Williams taking the 1600 and 3200-meter runs.

Chris McLawhorn finished second in the long jump and ran a leg on the second place mile relay team, along with Tyrone Forbes, Edward Frazier and Donald Johnson. McLawhorn also finished fourth in the 400-meter dash.

Evans, in addition to winning the 100 and 200, also ran a leg on the winning 440-yard relay team, combining with Roderick Harrell, David Sherrod and Frazier.

Frazier added a second place finish in the 200-meter dash, and also had a slot on the second place 880-yard relay team, joining with Harrell, Forbes and Sherrod.

Marty Barnes rounded out the Rose qualifiers with a third place finish in the 165-meter low hurdles. Barnes also finished fifth in the 110-meter high hurdles.

Other area athletes who did not qualify but placed included: Roanoke's Ricky Highsmith, fourth in the triple jump; Rose's Stuart Ward, fifth in the discus; Williamston's Speller, fifth in the pole vault; Rose's Ashley Ferrell, sixth in the pole vault; Conley's Stoney Speller, fifth in the 400; Williamston's Washington, sixth in the 400; Rose's David Steffensen, sixth in the 800; Rose's John Ormond, sixth in the 3200, Farmville Central's 440-yard relay team, which finished fourth; and Conley's and Williamston's mile relay teams, which finished fourth and sixth respectively.

Meyers Ties Ritzman For Lead At Coca Cola Classic

PARAMUS, N.J. (AP) — Pat Meyers was playing for a few beers, but came within striking distance Saturday of winning enough money to buy drinks for the entire LPGA tour as she tied for the second-round lead in the $125,000 Coca Cola Classic with an 8-under-par 65.

Meyers, with a combined two-round score of 8-under 138, birdied five of her six holes on the front nine and three more on the back, bringing her even with Alice Ritzman.

Ritzman, who had a 2-under-par 71 in the first round, shot a 6-under 67 in the second.

First-round leaders Janet Coles and Kathy Whitworth dropped to 5-under 135s, tying with Cathy Mant for second place. Amy Alcott, Jane Blalock and Beth Daniel tied for third at 134.

The winner of the 54-hole Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament takes home $18,750.

A brief shower disturbed but did not delay the round on the 6,151-yard, par-73 course at the Ridgewood Country Club.

Meyers, whose only LPGA victory came at the 1979 Greater Baltimore Classic, sais she was betting Blalock, with whom she was paired, that whoever came out ahead would buy the other a beer.

Lea Pitches 4-Hitter; Braves Fall To Cards

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Montreal right-hander Charlie Lea failed in his bid for a second consecutive no-hitter Saturday — but there was nothing wrong with his performance.

Lea, who fired a no-hitter against San Francisco last Sunday in Montreal, pitched a four-hitter and blanked the Giants 5-0.

"I threw the same way I did against them in Montreal — whatever Gary Carter called," Lea said of his catcher. "I didn't shake him off once in either game and I went basically with my slider, fastball and changeup."

Lea insisted he wasn't thinking about a second straight no-hitter. "The press kept bringing it up but I put it out of my mind," he said. "Stuff like that can only add extra pressure."

Lea, 2-1, who hadn't pitched a complete game in 22 previous major league starts prior to the no-hitter, held the Giants hitless this time until Mike Sadek led off the third with a ground single down the third base line.

"There's no way I can keep Charlie out of the rotation now," said Manager Dick Williams, who had been using him as a spot starter. "He snapped a three-game losing streak the last time and a four-game streak today."

Tom Griffin, 3-3, blanked the Expos until the fifth, when they erupted for four runs, two on an error by Herndon in left field.

Larry Parrish doubled with one out and Chris Speier walked. With two away, Tim Raines lined a two-run double into the left field corner. Raines went to third on Rodney Scott's bunt single and Scott stole second.

Andre Dawson then hit a fly to left which was misjudged by Herndon. He raced back toward the fence but the drive was held up by the wind and Herndon failed to make a diving catch while charging toward the infield. The ball grazed his glove for a two-base error and both runners scored.

Cincinnati 4
Pittsburgh 0

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mike LaCoss scattered five Pittsburgh singles and Ron Oester and Mike O'Berry each doubled home a run as the Cincinnati Reds extended their winning streak to five games with a 4-0 victory Saturday over the Pirates.

LaCoss, 2-4, struck out two batters, didn't give up a walk and did not permit a runner past second base as he hurled his first complete game of the season and dropped the Pirates' record at Three Rivers Stadium this year to 2-7.

The Reds took a 2-0 lead in the fifth against Rod Scurry, 1-2, when Dave Collins walked, went to third on a single by Sam Mejias and scored on Dave Concepcion's hit. Mejias, who entered the game when center fielder Ken Griffey twisted his left knee, scored on George Foster's sacrifice fly.

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston right-hander Nolan Ryan scattered six hits in seven innings, allowing only an unearned run, and Craig Reynolds slugged three triples to lead the Astros to a 6-1 triumph over the Chicago Cubs Saturday night.

Reynolds drove in four runs. His three triples tied a major league single-game record held by many and accomplished last by the New York Mets' Doug Flynn last season.

Ryan, 3-1, struck out eight and walked three before giving way to Joe Sambito to start the eighth.

The Astros fell behind 1-0 in the third. Chicago's Ivan DeJesus singled and stole second. When first baseman Danny Heep left the bag for an error on a throw from shortstop Reynolds, DeJesus moved to third, and Bill Buckner followed with a sacrifice fly.

Houston got Ryan the lead by scoring three runs in the fifth, highlighted by Reynolds' second triple. Ryan drew a walk from loser Randy Martz, 1-2, and Terry Puhl singled. Both scored on Reynolds triple down the right field line. Denny Walling's sacrifice fly to right scored Reynolds.

Puhl also hit a bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the eighth, and Reynolds followed with his third triple, driving in two runs.

Art Howe's single in the Astros' second increased his hitting string to 16 games, the longest in the National League this year.

ATLANTA (AP) — George Hendrick smashed a two-run homer and also had a run-scoring single to back right-hander Silvio Martinez to his first victory since last September, a 6-2 decision Saturday night over the Atlanta Braves.

Martinez, 1-2, went 82-3 innings and did not give up a run until one was out in the ninth when Dale Murphy singled home Chris Chambliss, who had doubled. Luis Gomez then was safe on a fielder's choice, Bruce Benedict singled and Rafael Ramirez chased Martinez with an RBI double.

Zoeller Takes 1-Shot Lead At Colonial

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Former Masters champion Fuzzy Zoeller managed a one-under-par 69 despite an ailing back and took a one-shot lead Saturday in the rain-delayed second round of the $300,000 Colonial National Invitation golf tournament.

Zoeller, who has chronic back troubles, had a 36-hole total of 136, four strokes under par on the 7,190-yard Colonial Country Club course that remained wet, soggy and soaked from heavy rain that forced a postponement of Friday's play and spread the second round over two days.

Zoeller, who hasn't won since taking the 1979 Masters title at Augusta, Ga., faces a double round, 36-hole finish Sunday, and isn't pleased with the prospect.

"Thirty-six is tough," he said. "I'd rather we play 18 Sunday and stay over until Monday, but they say go 36 so we'll go 36.

"I'm kind of interested to see what happens. I don't think I've played 36 holes in a day since I've had the back problems."

The ailment, stemming from a high school injury, bothered him in the cool, wet, threatening weather, Zoeller admitted. "It was a little stiff," he said. "I'm hoping for warm, sunny weather tomorrow."

Zoeller played his entire round Saturday. Most of the elite, invitational field of 102, only finished off the round they started Friday, which was interrupted by a series of thunderstorms.

Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, played only the 17th and 18th, making par on each, to complete a 68 that left him one stroke back at 137.

Tom Kite, with a 71, and Keith Fergus, with a par 70, were at 138.

"I'm very optimistic about tomorrow," Kite said. "I'm playing well and looking forward to it. It should be exciting. Playing 36, anybody that makes the cut has a chance to win the golf tournament."

Jerry Heard, who shot a 65 before play was held up Friday, veteran Don January and Scott Simpson were at 139. Simpson had a par 70 and January finished off a 69.

Rik Massengale topped a big group at 140 after shooting the best round of the tournament, a 6-under-par 64.

Are These Celtics As Good Past Boston Champs?

By ALEX SACHARE
AP Sports Writer

How do the current Boston Celtics, winners of the 1981 National Basketball Association championship, stack up against past Celtics' champions?

Is there any possibility that this Boston team will be the start of a dynasty approaching that of the Celtics in the 1950s and 1960s, when they won 11 NBA titles in 13 years?

Or will this Boston team follow the lead of the past 11 NBA champions and relinquish its title in the very next season?

There was little talk of dynasty following Boston's 102-91 victory over Houston Thursday night that gave the Celtics the title, four games to two. The players were caught up in the celebration of the moment, with the usual post-championship champagne showers and raucous cheering.

But even then, the ghost of Celtics past was in evidence. This was, after all, not just any team that won a title — it was the Boston Celtics.

"We finally got off 13 and onto 14," said Red Auerbach, the Celtics' president, referring to the number of NBA titles Boston has won. "These guys showed great character all the way through. I'm as proud of them as any other championship team."

The Celtics had shown their character by overcoming a 3-1 Philadelphia lead, and double-digit deficits in each of the subsequent three games, to beat the 76ers in the Eastern Conference final — winning the final three games by a total margin of only five points. And while the other three teams in NBA history to successfully overcome 3-1 deficits eventually lost in the final, the Celtics bounced back from a slow start with two good games to beat Houston for the title.

"It didn't come easily and that's why this championship is so satisfying," veteran guard Chris Ford said amidst the tumultuous post-title celebration. "Nothing worthwhile ever comes easily in this life. You don't know what it's been like. I don't know how much weight my wife and I have lost together in the past month. Neither of us has been able to eat or sleep. We're wrecks."

They're also winners.

"You have to be very fortunate, very lucky, to win a championship," said Ford. "There are so many little intangibles that have to fall in the right place. We were down three games to one in the Philadelphia series and everyone gave us up for dead. All they needed was to score one basket and we wouldn't be here.

"But I've always believed you do it as a team. This game was invented to be a team sport, five men working as a team. And that's the way we play. That's why so many people in America like this team."

Yes, they are America's team, the closest thing pro basketball has to a national franchise, right up there with the New York Yankees or Dallas Cowboys or Notre Dame. Ford also touched on the factor that makes the Celtics so good, and why a new dynasty is highly unlikely.

Boston plays a team game. The whole is greater than the sum of its individual parts. Other NBA clubs also play a team game, but they don't have the benefit of Larry Bird in their lineup.

Bird is the quintessential team player, a 6-foot-9 forward who makes everyone else on the Celtics markedly better just by his presence on the court. He has the strength to go inside and the skills to play outside and is most effective in Boston's fast break, when he is on the run and able to make use of his passing ability and innate court sense.

He also is a player who leads by actions and not words, the kind who wants the ball when the game is on the line — like when he hit a three-point basket with 1:36 left to stem a Houston comeback in the finale.

"When Houston closed the gap I was worried but not scared," said Bird. "I wanted the basketball. The three-pointer, as far as I was concerned, was just another shot."

It is that kind of leadership that made these Celtics champions. But the fact remains that they barely made it.

Any one of three teams — Boston, Philadelphia and Milwaukee, which took the 76ers to seven games in the Eastern Conference semifinals, losing the finale by one point — could have won the title. All were championship caliber clubs.

And Houston's presence in the final after a 40-42 regular-season record, and its ability to come within two victories of the title, only underscores the fact that there is a lot of talent among the league's 23 teams.

Boston dominated the league at a time when there were only eight to 12 teams in the NBA. Thus it was assured of at least one top-notch rookie every year, even if it drafted last. But with 23 teams, there is no such assurance of a steady influx of talent.

Besides that, the old Celtics' teams had a dominating, defense-minded center as a hub. Robert Parish, the current Celtics' center, had a very good season, but hardly rates comparison to Bill Russell.

What's more, this Celtic team does have its weaknesses. The outside shooting is spotty and the starting guards, Ford and Nate Archibald, are each 32 —an advanced age for NBA backcourtmen. And there never is a guarantee that disharmony won't set in, as it did with the 1980 champion Los Angeles Lakers during the latter part of this season.

It's inappropriate to measure these Celtics against the dynasty teams. It's more accurate to rate them wth the 1974 and 1976 teams — very good clubs that won championships with solid play.

Babe Ruth

Action Movers 12
Planters Bank 2

Action Movers exploded for six runs in the third inning en route to an easy 12-2 decision over Planters Bank Saturday in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

Action Movers jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first inning and then scored a run in the second, which was all the winners needed.

With one gone in the second, Mury Harris singled, went to second when Billy Goodley reached on an error and scored on Toby Fisher's single to give Action Movers a 3-0 lead.

Action Movers then added six runs in the third, sparked by Dryal Pettis' double which drove in two runs, and then added three more runs in the fourth for its total.

Planters scored single runs in the fifth and sixth.

Godley and Mike Walsh had two hits for Action Movers. Planters did not have anyone with more than one hit.

Wachovia 15
Pepsi-Cola..... 4

Wachovia struck for seven runs in the third inning as it demolished Pepsi-Cola, 15-4, Saturday in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

After taking a 1-0 lead in the first, Wachovia pushed across three runs in the second to take a it never relinquished.

Dwight Smith led off the second with an inside-the-park home run. Then, with one out, Andre Wooten reached on an error, went to second on a passed ball and later scored on Marc Gatlin's bunt. Gatline subsequently scored on Tom Moore's single.

Wachovia added seven more runs to its lead in the third and then scored twice in the fourth and fifth for its total. Pepsi-Cola scored all four of its runs in the seventh.

Smith led Wachovia with three hits. Moore and Jeff Howard had two hits for the winners. Pepsi-Cola did not have anyone with more than one hit.

Home Builders 1

Coca-Cola jumped out to a 5-0 lead after two innings and coasted to an 8-1 victory over Home Builders Saturday in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

Coca-Cola scored twice in the first inning and added three more runs in the second to take a lead it never lost.

First State 14
Elks 2

First State erupted for six runs in the second inning en route to a 14-2 victory over Elks Saturday in a Prep League baseball game.

With the score tied at 1-1 after the first inning, First State scored six times in the second to all but clinch the win

Robert Evans, Kelly Parrisher, Tod Castellow all walked to load the bases. Then Robert Fornville walked to force home Evans. Another walk to Daniel Corey brought home Parrisher and First State led, 3-1.

Then, after Scott Kee struck out, James Matthews tripled home Castellow, Fornville and Corey and First State led, 6-1. Matthews later scored on an error.

First State added two more runs to its total in the third and scored five times in the fourth. Elks scored its other run in the fourth.

Matthews led First State with two hits. Elks managed just two hits against pitcher William Smith, one of those a leadoff double in the first by Mitch Phillips.

Auto Speciality..... 7
True Value 0

Sterling Edwards hurled a one-hitter and hit a two-run homer to lead Auto Speciality to a 7-0 victory over True Value Saturday in a Prep League baseball game.

Edwards, who struck out 11 and walked 11, gave up his only hit in the fourth, a two-out single by Jim Hall.

Auto Speciality, now 2-0, broke a scoreless tie in the third with two runs and added three runs to its total in the sixth and two more in the seventh.

In the third, Monte Atkinson singled with one out before Edwards launched his home run to give Auto Speciality a 2-0 lead.

Little League

Carroll & Associates 3

Mark Holloman's single brought home two runs to spark a four-run first inning and Chris Meeks' three-run homer led a four-run sixth inning outburst as First Federal bombed Carroll & Associates, 12-3, Saturday in a Little League baseball game.

First Federal jumped out to a 4-0 lead in the first inning and never trailed after that. With John Bolen on third following a single and Rodney Harris on second with a doubler, Holloman singled to score both runners.

Brian Joyner followed with a double to score Holloman and Joyner later scored on an error.

The winners then added three more runs in the third, another run in the fourth and four runs in the sixth for their total. Carroll * Associates scored once in the third and twice in the fourth.

Frankie Pugh and Harris both had two hits for First Federal. Travis King was three for three for Carroll & Associates. Eric Jarman had two hits for A & C.

Union Carbide 21
Coca-Cola 0

Union Carbide sent 15 men to the plate in the first inning and scored nine runs and then coasted home with a 21-0 victory over Coca-Cola Saturday in a Little League baseball game.

Union Carbide wasted little time in establishing its dominance. Walks to Tim West and Billy Turcotte and a fielder's choice by Kevin Fisher loaded the bases in the first for UC. Morris Johnson then singled home two runs and Steve Williams walked to reload the bases.

Then, with one gone, Paul Powers reached on an error to score two more runs and Brayom Anderson singled home Williams. A walk to Greg Davis followed before Tim West sacrificed home Powers.

Davis then scored on Turcotte's single. Fisher then walked and scored on an error for UC's final run of the inning.

UC added two more runs in the second, three in the fourth and seven in the fifth for its total.

Johnson led UC with three hits in five at bats. Davis, Turcotte and Williams each had two hits for the winners. Coca-Cola did not have anyone with more than one hit.

Bears Beat Bullets, Close In On Title

BEAR GRASS — Ricky Harrison drove in three runs and Clay Gardner knocked in two to lead Bear Grass to an 8-4 decision over Jamesville and move the Bears one step closer to the Tobacco Belt Conference championship.

The win leaves the Bears at 16-2 in the league, one-half game of Manteo, which was to have played Bath Friday night but rescheduled the game for next Saturday.

Bear Grass plays host to Manteo Tuesday night at 8 p.m. A win by Bear Grass would clinch one of two playoff berths given to the conference. Jamesville drops to 15-3 in the league with the loss.

Jamesville jumped out to a 1-0 lead in its first at bats but the Bears countered with two runs in the bottom of the inning and never trailed again.

Walter Bullock reached on an error and went to third on William Roberson's single. Both runners scored on Harrison's single and the Bears led, 2-1.

Bear Grass added another run to its lead in the third and led 3-1 going into the bottom of the fourth when the Bears erupted for four runs.

Bob Peele led off the inning by reaching on an error. Roberson walked and both runners then scored on Gardner's double. Harrison followed with a double of his own to score Gardner. Jody Peaks then reached on an error to score Harrison and the Bears led, 7-1.

Jamesville made a brief run at the Bears in the seventh. With two outs, Keith Waters and Clarence Thomas singled. Carl Ange then reached on an error to score Waters before Greg Sullivan tripled home Thomas and Ange to cut the Bullets' deficit to 8-4.

That's the way it stayed, as Jeff Rogers flied out to the first baseman to end the game.

Gardner went the distance on the mound for the victory. He struck out seven and walked just one.

The Bears were led at the plate by Roberson and Gardner, both of whom were two for three. Bullock and Harrison were both two for four for the Bears. Jamesville did not have anyone with more than one hit.

Lady Pirates Split Pair In Tournament

RALEIGH — East Carolina University's Lady Pirates split a pair of games on Friday in the AIAW National Slow-Pitch Softball Championships, and faced a battle through the losers' bracket finals for another chance at Florida State in the championships on Saturday.

The Lady Pirates, seeded second in the tournament, downed number three seed North Carolina, 4-1, in their first game of the day Friday, but then lost to top-seeded Florida State, 12-3, in an eight inning contest.

Saturday, N.C. State and North Carolina were to meet at 10 a.m., with East Carolina facing the winner at 11:30 a.m. for the right to meet Florida State for the championship at 3 p.m. A 4:30 p.m. game would be played to decide it all, if FSU loses at 3 p.m.

In other games Friday, Florida ousted Wilmington of Ohio from the double elimination field, 4-1. Auburn then dropped out Lakeland of Ohio, 9-0, and Northern Kentucky sent Western Carolina home, 6-5. South Florida eliminated Georgia Southern, 6-4.

South Florida then sent Florida packing with a 2-1 win, and Auburn eliminated Northern Kentucky, 1-0. State beat South Florida, 8-1, and North Carolina sent Auburn home, 1-0, in a ten-inning game.

East Carolina scored single runs in the first and second innings to gain a 2-0 lead over Carolina in the first game of the day for the Lady Pirates. They added a third run in the fourth. Both teams scored single run sin the sixth inning for the final 4-1 margin.

Mitzi Davis led the East Carolina hitting in the contest, getting two in two trips, while Kathy Riley added a double. Laurie Bailey led the Lady Heels, going two-for-three.

It took eight innings before Florida State finally overcame the Pirates in the second contest. The Lady Pirates took a 2-0 lead in the first inning, but FSU came back to take a 3-2 lead with a trio of runs in the third.

East Carolina quickly tied it up in the fourth with a run, and it stayed that way until the top of the eighth.

But Darby Cottle, who went three-for-five in the game, sparked the Lady Seminoles in the eighth. She led off with a single, eventually coming around with the first run. Then, she capped off the uprising by closing out the scoring with a three-run homer.

Natalie Drovin and Charlotte Cates also went three-for-five for the Seminoles.

East Carolina was led by Cynthia Shepard with a three-for-three evening, while Fran Hooks added a double.

Riley, a key figure in the only ECU win over the Seminoles in three earlier meetings, was given intentional walks three times in the game. She missed the first two games the two teams played, once still with basketball, and the other time nursing a sprained ankle. She was then a basic factor in the ECU win in the third meeting of the two, and the FSU coach explained that in this meeting the Seminoles simply "took her out of the game by walking her."

Boston's 'Other' Forward Gets Job Done, Too

HOUSTON (AP) — Larry Bird usually gets the headlines, but the Boston Celtics' "other" forward, Cedric Maxwell, gets the job done, too.

Never was this more apparent than in the National Basketball Association championship series, when Bird suffered through a shooting slump for the first five games and Maxwell picked up the scoring slack.

Although Bird broke out for 27 points in Thursday night's 102-91 victory over the Houston Rockets that wrapped up Boston's 14th NBA crown four games to two, the award for Most Valuable Player of the championship series went to Maxwell by a 6-1 vote, with Bird getting the lone dissenting ballot.

Bird is a multifaceted star who just naturally attacts attention because of his flashy passing and because the Boston offense so often revolves around him. Maxwell is most effective around the basket, a quietly efficient player who works hard without the ball and makes the most of his chances when he gets them.

The two Celtic forwards complement each other perfectly. Bird is an inch taller than Maxwell at 6-foot-9, but he plays the role of the small forward. He roams around the floor, gets out quickly on the fast break and makes maximum use of the open court. That leaves the role of power forward to Maxwell, a strong offensive rebounder who roams the baseline and has the knack of getting free under the basket.

Maxwell led the NBA in field goal percentage in 1979 and 1980 and was third last season, a testament to his shot selection. And he has learned to live in Bird's shadow, although he doesn't always enjoy it.

"I'm considered just the other forward on this team," said Maxwell. "I understand that it's because Larry Bird is an excellent basketball player, but I have pride, too. It's a tremendous boost to my ego to win MVP."

Maxwell led the Celtics with 17.7 points per game in the title series and was their No. 2 rebounder with a 9.5 average. In the pivotal Game 5, when Boston took a 3-2 lead in the series, Maxwell led the way with 28 points and 15 rebounds. And in the final game he scored 19 points, including four free throws in the last 1:19 as Boston held off a Houston rally.

"For me, this has been a four-year wait," said Maxwell, who joined the Celtics in 1977 and suffered through 32-50 and 29-53 seasons before Bird arrived to help turn things around.

"When I came here I could see that this was a championship caliber team," said Maxwell. "But there was so much animosity and jealousy among the players. It was frustrating. Then we got players like Larry Bird, Chris Ford and Kevin McHale and it all turned around.

"This year it's been completely different. Everyone got along well with one another, and it's paid off. We have the best basketball team in the world right now, and this is by far the finest moment of my career. This is like a dream come true."

Barker's Sharp-Breaking Curve Helps Indian Hurler To Down 27 Straight Batters

CLEVELAND (AP) — It wasn't exactly the way Rick Bosetti wanted to get into baseball's Hall of Fame, but Len Barker's perfect game assured him of a spot in a showcase at the baseball museum in Cooperstown.

"I'll be hanging right on that wall — Bosetti, 0-3," the Toronto Blue Jays centerfielder said, after Cleveland's Barker tossed a dazzling 11-strikeout effort to give the Indians a 3-0 victory Friday night. "He's made sure we'll be in the Hall of Fame."

Barker, 3-1, a 25-year-old fastball expert who led the American League in strikeouts last season, relied heavily on a sharp-breaking curveball to set down 27 straight Toronto hitters and keep the Indians in first place one game ahead of Baltimore in the American League East.

"I couldn't have done it without these guys," he said, praising the fine defense that supported him. "Maybe people are going to start believing in us now. They should have been believing us already."

The perfect game was the first ever thrown in Municipal Stadium, which became the Indians' home in 1932. It was the 11th in big league history.

The last came May 8, 1968, when Oakland's Jim "Catfish" Hunter blanked the Minnesota Twins 4-0.

The last American League no-hitter was thrown by Barker's teammate, Bert Blyleven, when he pitched for Texas. That was on Sept. 22, 1977, against California.

Blyleven also took a no-hitter into the ninth inning against weak-hitting Toronto last week before settling for a two-hit victory.

On Friday, Barker's control was nearly perfect, as he threw just 103 pitches and never allowed more than two balls on any one hitter or five balls in any one inning.

"I felt awesome," he said. "I was bearing down all the way. I had to keep thinking. I didn't want to let up."

His powerful curveball caught the eye of pitching coach Dave Duncan before the game even began.

"He warmed up good," Duncan said. "The curveball had a tight rotation and a sharp break to it. When it's like that, it looks like a fastball when it leaves his hand — but then it breaks."

Sixty of his 103 pitches were curves, 41 were fastballs and two were change-ups.

Five balls were hit to the Cleveland outfield, one to left and four, including the game's final out stroked by pinch hitter Ernie Whitt, to centerfielder Rick Manning, both of whom also figure to be on display in the New York shrine.

"I knew it was an out," Manning said. "It wasn't getting away. We blew one in the ninth last week."

The Indians scored a pair of unearned runs in the first inning to doom Blue Jays starter Luis Leal, 2-4. Manning singled, moved to third on an error by Toronto first baseman John Mayberry and scored on Andre Thornton's sacrifice fly.

Ron Hassey's RBI single drove in the second Cleveland run. Jorge Orta's solo home run in the eighth, his second, closed the scoring.

More important was the Indians' defense, which was solid early in the game and became fired up after third baseman Toby Harrah dived into the stands to grab a foul pop hit by Cecil Upshaw.

"Playing hard on defense effects the team in such a positive way," Harrah said. "It gets you going. The fans kind of like it, too. I'd dive into the stands every day when you get that kind of reaction."

Shortstop Tom Veryzer and second baseman Duane Kuiper also turned in solid defensive efforts to preserve the perfect game. Veryzer nipped speedy Alfredo Griffin on a first-inning slow roller, and Kuiper got Griffin on a bouncer far to his left in the seventh.

Kuiper also grabbed a short-hop line drive to his right and threw out Bosetti in the sixth.

"I think most ballplayers in that situation really want the ball hit to them," Kuiper said, "because they're confident. I knew the condition of the field. The only thing I was concerned about was, I didn't want a cheap one, a slow roller past the pitcher, to go for a hit. So I played a little shallower."

The Blue Jays, though, would have settled for anything.

"I've never seen so many guys pulling for someone to get a hit in my life, or a walk, error — anything," said Mayberry.

"I would have loved to break it up," Bosetti said. "But I kind of had mixed feelings. I was getting into the people yelling. Lenny's going to get a $50,000 raise just for this."

The game was played before 7,290 fans in a misty rain with temperatures in the 40s — conditions to which both teams are accustomed.

"We're used to playing in this kind of weather," Barker said. "It really didn't bother us. I'm always wetting the ball and rubbing it up to get a better grip. The mist just gave me more moisture to work with."

PERFECT Form

A 'Perfect' Moment For Barker

By The Associated Press

Len Barker has had a lot of good moments in baseball, but Friday night was just perfect.

"His curveball was awesome," said Cleveland Indians pitching coach Dave Duncan. "He and (catcher) Ron Hassey recognized that early."

The Toronto Blue Jays knew it, too, especially after nine innings of brilliant pitching by the 25-year-old fireballer, who hurled the first perfect game in the major leagues since 1968 with a 3-0 shutout.

"I know I pitched a perfect game, but it really hasn't set in yet," said Barker. "I pitched no-hitters in American Legion ball, but I always walked nine or ten batters."

Noted for one of the hardest fastballs in the American League, Barker relied heavily on a sharp-breaking curve against the Blue Jays. Duncan said 60 of the 103 pitches thrown by Barker were curveballs.

"I was thinking about it all the way," said the 6-foot-4, 225-pound Barker, a 19-game winner last year for Cleveland. "But you can't take it all that seriously until the last inning. You've still got three guys to go and any one of them can get a hit, a blooper or something."

A mist at Cleveland's Municipal Stadium seemed to benefit, rather than hinder, Barker. He said: "I'm always wetting the ball and rubbing it up to get a better grip on it. The mist just gave me more moisture to work with."

Barker's control was flawless from start to finish on a cool evening. The high-kicking right-hander from Fort Knox, Ky., struck out 11 and never threw more than two balls to any one Toronto hitter.

The last time a perfect game was pitched in major league baseball was back on May 8, 1968, when Oakland's Catfish Hunter hurled a 4-0 classic against the Minnesota Twins.

Barker's no-hitter was the second in a week in the majors, following Charlie Lea's 4-0 classic for Montreal against San Francisco last Sunday, but only the third in two years. Last year, Los Angeles' Jerry Reuss pitched the only no-hitter in the big leagues, against the Giants.

Barker's beauty was the first no-hitter thrown in the American League since Bert Blyleven did it for Texas against California on Sept. 22, 1977. Ironically, Blyleven pitched no-hit ball against Toronto for eight innings May 6 and finished with a two-hitter in a 4-1 victory.

The Indians scored all the runs Barker needed Friday night with two in the first inning on Andre Thornton's sacrifice fly and Ron Hassey's RBI single. They added a run in the eighth on Jorge Orta's home run.

Brewers 3, A's 0

Ben Oglivie drove in two runs with two singles and a triple, while Pete Vuckovich and two relievers combined on a six-hitter, leading Milwaukee over Oakland. Jamie Easterly and Rollie Fingers finished up for Vuckovich with Fingers posting his fifth save.

"Hitting is contagious," said Milwaukee Manager Buck Rodgers, who thought that his Brewers may be coming out of a recent slump with their 11-hit attack. "Whatever it was, it was a step in the right direction."

Red Sox 4, Royals 3

Carney Lansford's bases-loaded single with two out in the ninth snapped a 3-3 tie and lifted Boston over Kansas City. Renie Martin retired the first two batters before walking Carl Yaztrzemski. Yastrzemski moved to second on Jim Rice's single and then gave way to pinch-runner Reid Nichols. Tony Perez walked on a 3-2 count to load the bases for Lansford.

Orioles 9, Twins 4

Ken Singleton drove in four runs and collected three hits, including a two-run homer, and reliever Sammy Stewart hurled four scoreless innings as Baltimore defeated Minnesota.

Singleton belted a two-run homer to help Baltimore take a 3-0 first-inning lead after Rich Dauer had an RBI single. In the eighth, Singleton lined a two-run single to make the score 7-4.

Tigers 5, Angels 1

Rookie first baseman Rick Leach, the former star quarterback from the University of Michigan, drove in a pair of runs as Detroit defeated California behind the six-hit pitching of Jack Morris.

Rangers 2, White Sox 1

Ferguson Jenkins and Steve Comer combined on a three-hitter and Al Oliver's sacrifice fly scored the winning run in the seventh inning as Texas beat Chicago. Bump Wills led off the Texas seventh with a double and took third on a balk by White Sox starter and loser Richard Dotson, 4-2. Oliver's fly ball to left brought Wills home.

W7000 Microprocessor Based Load Control System

The Honeywell W7000 System: the answer to spiraling energy costs. Energy. There is no way your business can do without it. Yet, spiraling energy costs are making utility bills a major factor in every month's P&L statement.

Some managers believe that there really isn't any practical, cost-effective way to manage and reduce energy costs. But, there is: the Honeywell W7000 Microprocessor Based Load Control System. Honeywell's W7000 System brings your energy usage under control and substantially reduces your energy costs. It pays for itself rapidly, usually with 2 to 3 years and keeps on saving. For example, the W7000 System can be used to control:

- ☐ Air conditioning units and exhaust fans
- ☐ Interior & exterior lighting
- ☐ Compressors and other refrigeration equipment
- ☐ Electric heating equipment
- ☐ Electric water heaters
- ☐ Disposals & compactors

The Q7000Communications Module may be field-added to any system installation and provides the following functions over standard dial-up telephone lines:

- ☐ Building address, W7000 model installed and current time.
- ☐ Remote programming.
- ☐ Recall of programs.
- ☐ Check for malfunctions.
- ☐ Determine which loads are OFF or On at any given moment.
- ☐ Detailed energy audits (only on models with control) which include peak, time of peak, kilowatt hours and the maximum minimum and average outdoor air temperature for each day and the last 30 days.

You can "talk" to your W7000 System with the Q7000 Communications Module from any standard computer terminal. It formats data in the English language, so your computer terminal operator need not be a computer programmer.

How The Honeywell W7000 System saves you money. Most utilities base their monthly charges for electricity on two separate items: consumption charge and demand charge. Consumption is the total amount of electricity used during the billing period. The demand charge is the highest rate or peak at which electrical energy is consumed.

The W7000 System works to reduce both your consumption and demand. Most light commercial buildings can reduce their demand between 10% and 25% and consumption by 5% to 15% with a load control system. Depending upon local utility rates, this can mean a total bill reduction of 10% to 20%.

How The Honeywell W7000System works. There are three load control functions available in the W7000 System which work to lower consumption and limit demand. These include Time-of-Day Programming, Demand Limit Control and Duty Cycling. Models are available with any or all of these three functions and those selected will depend upon the specific requirements of any given installation.

Demand Limit Control reduces the peak rate of electrical energy usage. Demand Control measures the rate of energy consumption in your building and when this rate exceeds a limit you select, the Demand Limit Control will temporarily turn off energy-consuming loads on a preprogrammed basis. When the energy usage rate drops below the limit, equipment is automatically restored to normal operation.

Duty Cycling is defined as repetitively turning energy-consuming loads OFF and ON during a preprogrammed cycle. The purpose of the DUTY Cycler is to reduce unnecessary equipment operation and also to increase equipment efficiency. A sophisticated Duty Cycler will match the amount to duty cycling with actual load conditions. For example, as outside air temperature increases, the load on air conditioner also increases and the W7000 reduces duty cycling.

Time-of-Day Programming allows you to individually program precise OFF and ON times for your energy consuming devices with different programs for each day of the week. The Time-of-Day Programmer is also a labor-saving device by automating those tasks that are frequently overlooked in manual operations.

Human-engineered for ease of program entry. LED readout provides prompting and signals programming errors.

Duty Cycler includes two programs per channel based on outside air temperature, automatically rotates loads ON and OFF, and permits special program to eliminate all duty cycling at predetermined outdoor temperature level.

Settings for MAXIMUM SHED, MINIMUM SHED and MINIMUM ON protect against short cycling.

Continuous display of kw consumption and energy history capability keeps a 30-day log of kwh used and the size, month, day and time-of-day of the kw peak.

10 or 20 program channels and at least three ON/OFF pairs per channel afford maximum programming flexibility. Total control.

Easily programmed to account for as many as 25 holidays per year, daylight savings time and leap-year calender variation.

Communications option (internal) gives read/write and energy audit capability via dial-up telephone lines. It's also automatically programmable on site.

D.H. Conley Sets Sports Banquet

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's annual Sports Banquet will be held on Friday, May 22, at 7 p.m. in the school cafeteria.

The banquet will celebrate ten years of athletics at the school, and an open invitation to attend has been extended to all 1971 Conley graduates.

After-dinner speakers will be former athletes from the school, including Steve Evans, now a realtor, and Bennie Thompson, lawyer.

Special guests will include former coaches Jerome Patterson, Glenn White, Hugh Porter, Carol Ann Tucker and Steve Morgan.

Tickets for the banquet at $5 per person, excluding current athletes at the school.

Tickets may be purchased prior to the banquet at Conley, at Dixie Queen Restaurant in Winterville and at Bond's or Hodges in Greenville.

Brook Valley Country Club

Brook Valley Country Club is holding its annual Club Championship for men and women this weekend. The tournament winds up today.

The club will hold a Memorial Day Match Play Tournament on May 23-25. The three day, two-man team format will flight into eight-team groups. This is the first match play tournament to be held in years at the club.

A Mixed Guest Spectacular will be held on June 13-14. A two-day ringer style tournament will be held.

The Member-Member tournament will be held June 27-28. This will be a ringer event also for net awards, and a 36-hole best ball for gross awards.

Several Brook Valley women were winners in the Eastern League finals held at Falling Creek Country Club in Kinston. Jeanette Thomas took low net in the championship flight. Sue Hallow had second low gross in the first flight, while Evelyn Ward had first low net in the third flight. Mary Bruton had second low gross in the third. Jan Kanetzke had first low net in the fourth flight, while Ginny Hill took second low net in the same flight.

The team of Billy Clark III and Tom Saunders took first low gross in the first flight of the Member-Guest Tournament recently held at the club. They fired a seven under 137. Low net went to Lou Hall and George Hall with a 54. Net scores were figured on a ringer system (best ball for 18 holes), while net was regular best ball for 36 holes.

In the fourth flight, Ron Wins and Tim Hogan won low gross with a 156, while Joe Ward and Charley White took low net with a 55.

The team of Tommy Boone, Ernie Holt, Glenn Cox and Fred Kanetske took first place in a Superball Tournament held at the club which attracted 22 teams. The winners took first on the basis of a scorecard playoff with the team of Bill Brannigan, Dick Stephenson, Bill Goodwin and Skip Browder. It took 14 holes to decide it, however. Both teams finished with 61's.

Third, with a 62, were W.L. Allen Sr., George Wenzel, Al Haverty and Gary Hess. Fourth, with a 63, were Lou Hallow, Bill Brown, Lloyd Mills and Marty Goldfarb.

Farmville Golf and Country Club

The Farmville Golf and Country Club will hold its men's club championship on next Saturday and Sunday. The tournament covers 36 holes of medal play. The defending champion is Vance Taylor.

The women's club championship will be held May 31. This is an 18 hole tournament. Jennifer Counterman is the defending champion.

Greenville Country Club

The Men's Match Play Tournament is now underway at Greenville Country Club. The following men have already advanced to the second round: Joe Murad, John Wooten, Bill Clark, Bill Bilbro, Ray Evans, Earl Wilson, Andy Warren, Don Wilkerson, K. Joe Davis, Ron Thiele, Skip Bright, Ed Munroe, Ed Leahy, Bob Dail, Joe T. Davis, Danny McNally, Tom Parrish, Don McGlohon, David Nichols, Bill Brinson, Will Hickman, Ray Edwards, and Dallas Clark.

Second round matches must be played by June 6.

A beginners tournament will held this past week for ladies. In the "Red" Group, Pat Evans took first with a 49, followed by Becky Howard with a 54. In the "White" group, Barbara Franklin won with a 26, followed by Ruggie MacKenzie with a 31. In the "Blue" group, first went to Ann Davis with an 18, followed by Gail Blanton with a 21. The Red played nine holes, the white, five, and the blue, three.

Reds Win On Ninth-Inning Error

By The Associated Press

For Pittsburgh first baseman Jason Thompson, it's been a case of "no field; no hit." But the season is young.

Thompson came to the Pirates from California in a deal that was supposed to keep him moving along to the New York Yankees, a deal that fell through because of Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's money ceiling on trades.

Thompson, who hit .317 with 70 runs batted in for the Angels last year, is hitting only .138 with eight RBI this year and is trapped in a 1-for-34 batting slump.

"I'm saving up a lot of hits, and they're going to be coming, believe me," he said. "You just have to keep from going crazy at times like this."

On Friday night, his glove deserted him, too, as he kicked away a ninth-inning, bases-loaded grounder that allowed the first of three unearned runs and gave Cincinnati a 4-1 victory.

"I have a lot of confidence in Jason and I know that someone is going to have to pay for what he's going through," said Chuck Tanner, the Pirates' Manager.

George Foster opened the Reds' ninth with an infield single and was sacrificed to second. Joe Nolan was intentionally walked, the runners moved up on Enrique Romo's wild pitch, and pinch-hitter Larry Biittner also walked to load the bases.

Thompson then booted Ron Oester's grounder to permit the Reds to break the 1-1 tie. Grant Jackson took over on the mound and gave up Junior Kennedy's sacrifice fly and Sam Mejias' RBI single. Oester singled home the Reds' first run in the seventh inning.

Braves 11, Cardinals 3

Glenn Hubbard, who recently flexed his muscles with a pair of game-winning home runs, left the power to Bruce Benedict, but kicked in with some timely RBIs in the Braves' romp over St. Louis.

Benedict hit a three-run homer in a seven-run sixth inning and Hubbard drove in four runs with a single and a double.

"I've been struggling really since those doggone stupid home runs," said Hubbard. He said he'd just as soon not try for the long ball because "it just messes up my swing."

Giants 4, Expos 2

But Manager Frank Robinson knew Herndon was having his problems hitting Steve Rogers, so he benched his star — and Martin came through with a triple in the second inning (he scored on Milt May's single) and a homer in a three-run third for his first extra-base hit of the year.

"I had no idea I was playing when I came to the park," Martin said. "It's been a tough year so far. But I hit the triple on the first pitch and it boosted my confidence. I kind of wondered when I'd hit a ball out of the park."

Dodgers 6, Mets 5

Steve Yeager and Pedro Guerrero homered, then Ron Cey's one-out, bases-loaded single in the bottom of the ninth inning gave Los Angeles its fifth consecutive victory and stretched the Mets' losing streak to five games.

Astros 5, Cubs 0

Joe Strain had three hits for Chicago. Unfortunately for the Cubs, Leon Durham got their only other one off Joe Niekro. And Niekro's catcher, Alan Ashby, highlighted a three-run fourth inning with a two-run double for the Astros.

Phillies 2, Padres 1

Pippin Hurls One-Hitter As Tigers Whip Ahoskie

WILLIAMSTON — Ed Pippin hurled a one-hitter and Greg Thomas drove in three runs to lead Williamston to an easy 11-1 victory over Ahoskie Friday night in the Tigers' season finale.

Williamston, which ends the season at 7-14 overall and 4-10 in the league, trailed 1-0 after the first inning when Mike Roundtree tripled to drive home Ahoskie's lone run of the game.

It was also the Cougars only hit of the night as Pippin struck out eight and walked just two en route to the decision.

Williamston got all the runs it needed in the second when the Tigers scored twice. Sterling Mizelle and Durward Taylor singled and Brian Leggett walked to load the bases. Greg Thomas then singled home Mizelle and Taylor and the Tigers led, 2-1, and were never to trail again.

One inning later the Tigers were back for more, scoring four times. Tim Hines singled and scored on Greg Johnson's triple. Tony Rogers then singled home Johnson and Williamston led, 4-1.

Mizelle followed with a double to score Rogers and Pippin then singled home Mizelle to give Williamston a 6-1 lead.

The Tigers scored three more runs in the fourth and added single runs in the fifth and sixth for their total.

Williamston was led by Mizelle, who was three for four with a double and an RBI. Pippin and Greg Thomas were both three for five. Thomas had three RBIs and a double and Pippin had one RBI.

Rogers and Taylor were both two for three with two RBIs and Victor Thomas was two for five with a double.

USC Opponents Include Iowa, DePaul In 1981

"I am hustling to line up games and (USC athletic director and football Coach) Jim Carlen is all booked up something like 1990," he says jokingly.

Two home games — against San Francisco and longtime opponent Notre Dame — are on CBS-TV's national schedule.

A total of 27 different opponents are on the 29-game schedule. Only cross-state rival Clemson and Florida State are home-and-home opponents for the independent Gamecocks.

"Our biggest concerns are building rivalries and getting an attractive home schedule," Foster says.

He's retained games against in-state foes Clemson, Furman and The Citadel, added national independent rivals Nevada-Las Vegas and Penn State, and picked up some games against conference members such as Texas and Iowa.

The contest with Wake Forest of the Atlantic Coast Conference would be the first of a four-year series but may be delayed until the following season.

Pearson On Mason-Dixon 500 Pole

DOVER, Del. (AP) — David Pearson took the pole position here Saturday during time trials for the 13th annual Winston Cup Grand National Mason-Dixon 500 stock car race at Dover Downs International Speedway.

Pearson, in an Oldsmobile Cutlass, was the 11th driver out to take on the "Monster Mile" for Sunday's race. It was his first appearance at Dover in two years and his first pole at Dover in six years.

The race will mark the first time the smaller-sized cars will be run in the Northeast under NASCAR rules issued earlier this year.

Pearson was clocked at 138.425 mph, followed by Rookie-of-the-Year candidate Morgan Shepherd in a Pontiac Grand Prix at 138.249 mph and Neil Bonnett in a Ford Thunderbird at 137.826 for the top three positions.

Bonnett was followed by Ricky Rudd in a Buick Regal who set a time of 136.773 mph. Pulling the fifth position was Darrell Waltrip, whose Buick Regal clocked in at 136.333 mph.

Cale Yarborough, who set the qualifying record of 138.814 mph last year at Dover, was the first driver out in a Buick Regal, completing only one of two laps. Yarborough placed sixth in the field, clocked at 136.276 mph.

Petty complained of oil on the track, apparently spilled earlier by a driver qualifying for the International Sedan Series run Saturday afternoon.

The time trials were delayed until the track was restored to safe conditions with Yarborough completing another lap while Petty took two complete laps.

Petty placed ninth with a speed of 135.998 mph.

Pearson, whose top spot marked the 19th year in a row he has won at least one Winston Cup Grand National pole, now has the record, breaking a tie with Petty at 18 years in a row.

The legendary "Silver Fox" said he knew the time trials would be close, but he was still confident.

"We knew it would be close, but I had the fastest practice time yesterday (Friday). We just didn't tell anybody," he said, adding, "The track is just great. It's in good shape. It's fast. Yesterday's rain helped a lot. It took all the oil away."

Bobby Allison, the defending champion, placed eighth in the line-up. He was clocked at 136.075 mph in his Buick Regal.

Forty-two cars were expected for the time trials, but only 32 showed and track officials said that number would probably hold for Sunday's race.

x-Dallenbach qualified the car for Mario Andretti, who was in Belgium for a Grand Prix race. If Andretti is substituted as the driver in the race, the car must start in 33rd position with each car now in ninth through 33rd moving up one spot in the starting lineup.

Unser On Pole...

four; I lost it for a little bit. But it still came across good. I didn't lose it all the way. It just wiggled a little bit and that was about all."

Unser, who had recorded the month's fast lap in practice at 201.387, said he had to "lift" — come off the accelerator — at that point. "I lost about 600 rpm (revolutions per minute). But I had to get way off of it. I was in a dangerous situation."

The only other drivers over 200 going into Saturday's time trials were Unser's teammate Rick Mears, Sneva and Danny Ogais, who also was ineligible to run for the pole because he passed his turn on the first weekend after encountering a starter problem.

Mears, driving an almost identical PC-9B, brought many in the sun-drenched crowd, estimated by track officials at 135,000, to their feet as he started his run with a lap of 200.938. However, Mears slowed to 199.956 on his second circuit, then abruptly pulled down onto the track apron and drove slowly into the pits with what was later diagnosed as a bad ignition coil.

Ongais, driving an Interscope-Cosworth prepared by master mechanic George Bignotti, wound up as the third fastest qualifier, but joined Sneva and Mears in the potent ninth row.

His first lap was timed at 200.401 and he wound up with an average of 197.694, although the other three laps all were well under 200.

Gordon Johncock, the 1976 Indy champion, took the inside of the second row at 195.429, with first-week qualifier Johnny Rutherford — the defending champion — beside him at 195.387 and Mexican rookie Josele Garza on the outside at 195.101.

Bill Alsup, the third member of the Penske team, was on the inside of the third row with his first-week qualifying speed of 193.154, with Wally Dallenbach at his side in a car that likely will wind up at the back of the field and Gordon Smiley, another first-week qualifier at 192.988.

Dallenbach, who retired as an active race driver in 1979, put Mario Andretti's Patrick Wildcat comfortably in the lineup at 193.040 for his friend, who is in Europe for Sunday's Belgian Grand Prix.

The rules state that Andretti will have to start at the back of the field if he replaces Dallenbach in the cockpit.

Little League

Jaycees 11
Optimists 2

The Jaycees romped to an 11-2 victory over the Optimists Friday in the North State Little League.

The Jaycees pushed over six first inning runs to take the lead for good. Brian Wille led off with a walk and David Lee singled. Carl Wille reached on a fielder's choice, and Jody Barnes singled in a run. Micharl Garris and Brian Pierce both grounded out, scoring runs, and Barnes scored on a wild pitch. Mark Coburn singled and moved to third on two passed balls, scoring on a wild pitch. Bruce Koonce singled and came around on an error.

The Jaycees added four more in the second and one in the third. Both Optimist runs came in the third.

Koonce hurled the win, allowing three hits by the Optimists, two of them by David Tinglestad. No one had more than one hit for the Jaycees.

Pepsi-Cola 6
Exchange 5

Pepsi-Cola held off an Exchange rally to gain a 6-5 Tar Heel Little League victory Friday evening.

Pepsi took the lead in the third inning, scoring five times. Exchange came back with two in the bottom of the inning.

The winning run came over for Pepsi in the fourth. Owen Cox singled and moved up on a wild pitch. Paul Kelly's out moved him to third, and he scored on Bobby Sullivan's single for a 6-2 lead.

The Exchange rallied for two in the fifth and one in the sixth before finally failing to catch up when the potential tieing run was cut down at the plate for the final out.

No one had more than one hit each for either team.

Bullet Girls Move Closer To Loop Title

BEAR GRASS — Jamesville's girls romped to a 21-2 victory over Bear Grass in Tobacco Belt softball Friday, moving closer to clinching the league title.

Jamesville scored five times in the first inning to put the game out of reach. The Lady Bullets added three in the second and three more in the third. Four crossed in the fourth before the Bears finally broke the ice with one in their half of the inning.

Diane Spence led the Lady Bullet hitting with three, including two homers and a double. Tammy Williams added a homer and two singles.

Bear Grass was led by Lynn Whitehurst and Ernestine Laughinghouse, each with two hits.

Jags Boys, Girls Win

WILSON — E. B. Aycock Junior High School got back on the winning side of the legder Friday after suffering its first loss earlier in the season. The Jaguars downed Wilson Fike, 5-2.

Pat Rand led the Aycock hitting with two hits, while Tony Taylor, Eric Woodworth and Michael Walsh also contributed to the offense.

Aycock is now 11-1, and plays host to Bertie on Tuesday in the final game of the season.

Margaret Barnes banged out four hits and Wendy Jones and Jackie Green each had three to lead E.B. Aycock to a 21-10 victory over Wilson Fike Friday afternoon in a junior high softball game.

Aycock, now 4-5, had seven girls with two hits or more, led by Barnes, Jones and Green. With two hits in four at bats for Aycock were Shelia Carmon, Joanne Green, Amanda Smith and Greta Blount.

Aycock plays host to Bertie Tuesday.

Heavy Traffic

Racing History? Campo Shrugs

BALTIMORE (AP) — Johnny Campo, who trained Pleasant Colony through two-thirds of the Triple Crown, just shrugs his shoulders at the possibility of becoming part of racing history.

"What's the difference?" Campo said Saturday after his colt added the Preakness to his Kentucky Derby victory.

"So what? Look at Lucien Laurin and Billy Turner. Both got fired after winning it. But I'm glad today for Mr. Thomas Mellon Evans (who bred and owns the colt).

"I'm a good trainer; I'll survive."

Campo said he would put Pleasant Colony in a category with Triple Crown champions Secretariat and Seattle Slew. Laurin trained Secretariat and Turner saddled Seattle Slew.

Campo said he would ship the colt Saturday night back to Belmont Park where the third leg of the Triple Crown, the Belmont Stakes, will be held June 6.

Puffing on a cigar in the Pimlico barn area, Campo said the fact that he would be competing for the Triple Crown in his stomping grounds of New York had no special meaning.

"I'm going back to New York to work 25 horses," said the rotund trainer who failed in six previous Preakness tries. "I like to win anywhere."

As for his colt's one-length, come-from-behind triumph over pacesetting Bold Ego, Campo said: "Wait till this horse gets good. He was a May 4 foal, so he wasn't even a 3-year-old when he won the Derby."

In a sharp exchange with reporters, Campo said: "I know what kind of horse he is. Just give him credit. John Campo can be a bum, but just watch the horse run and give him credit."

Campo also took exception about reporters writing about the hairless patches on the colt's right flank. Some said it was a rash.

"How about that rash?" Campo said mockingly to the media. "He wins with it."

Then Campo said the marks weren't a rash.

What are those marks?

"None of your business," said the 43-year-old trainer.

—ECU's Jones Beaten In N-S Finals—

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Corey Pavin of Oxnard, Calif., grabbed an eagle three on the 26th hole to clench the 1981 North and South Amateur Golf Championship Saturday at the Pinehurst Country Club.

Pavin, a senior at UCLA and former World Juniors champ, took eight of nine holes during one stretch of the the morning round of the 36-hole final match in his 11 and 10 victory over Greenville's Steve Jones.

Pavin said he called former North and South champion Harvey Ward seeking advice prior to the final match.

"I called Harvey up before the round and talked to him about what it would be like to win. He told me to set my sights on a score for the morning round and then just play steady, par golf in the afternoon.

"As it turned out, I was looking to shoot about two-under in the morning, and that's just what I did. Then, in the afternoon, I kept playing steady."

Jones managed to win only two holes on the day. He chipped in from 35 feet on the first hole of the match and took advantage of Pavin's double bogey on the second hole of the afternoon round for his second.

"All the bad shots I hadn't hit all week I hit today," said Jones, a senior at the University of East Carolina.

Jones and Pavin both won six matches to reach the finals.

Jones called Pavin and fine champion and a great golfer, and said he was pleased to get as far as he did in the tournament.

Pavin said the victory Saturday would boost his chances for inclusion on America's Walker Cup team.

"That's been a goal of mine, a major one, as long as I've been playing," he said.

Plucknett Sets Discus Record

Plucknett's throw, on his final try, eclipsed the old mark of 233-5 set by Wolfgang Schmidt of East Germany on Aug. 9, 1978, in Berlin.

The record toss was almost 10 feet farther than Plucknett's previous best of 223-8 recorded last July 14 in Stuttgart, West Germany.

Prior to his final throw Saturday, Plucknett's best toss of the day was his opening effort of 222-6.

The 27-year-old from San Jose, Calif., said he was surprised by his record.

"I know where I am physically and technically. It shouldn't really have happened," he said.

Plucknett credited a world-class field with providing incentive. Art Burns had a throw of 233 feet just before the finals, and Plucknett said, "that has the tendency to scare some people."

Hawaiian Contends Tickets Fraudulent

By GORDON SAKAMOTO

HONOLULU (UPI) — Clarence N.S. Shak says the traffic ticket system in the United States is unconstitutional.

"The whole ticket system is a fraud," he says. "And I can use the word 'fraud' because fraud is defined as accepting money under false pretenses.

"When they tell you you're paying a fine without stepping into the courtroom, by its very definition it's a fine. It's a fraud. Bail can only be paid by an arrested person."

That, in effect, makes the traffic ticket system in all 50 states illegal, reasons Shak, 59, a one-time electrical engineer who has been battling big government for 20 years.

"If you pay for a traffic ticket so as not to appear in court," he said in an interview, "you are the victim of 'extortion' by the government.

"A traffic ticket is a threat to start legal action. A traffic ticket gives a person an opportunity to pay off what is either referred to in various states as a 'fine' or a 'bail forfeiture.'

"Well, it's neither. When people pay for a traffic ticket because they don't want to go to court, they're actually paying because they don't want their cases to start officially."

To Shak's way of thinking, the system raises another question — one that covers due process.

"It also relates to the Fourth Amendment, the right of the people against unreasonable seizure," he said. "The ticket is a threat to make an unreasonable seizure, which has been defined under the law as seizure made without probable cause."

Shak's jousting with the authorities began in 1962.

"The thing that got me started on all this was when I had to wait for a red light to turn green at 3 o'clock in the morning," he says. "There was no traffic around and I wondered why I had to stop for a red light when there was no common sense reason.

"The only reason I had to stop was that the law required me to stop. In effect, it was telling me it was unsafe to go. I thought there must be a better way of controlling traffic than these false indicators."

A short time later, a parking violation citation got Shak going on what has become his traffic ticket crusade.

"In this town, I became known for my parking in red zones. To me, they were not illegal spaces. When I took the case to court, neither the prosecutor nor the judge knew it was not illegal to park next to a curb that was painted red.

"It is illegal to park next to a curb that is painted red if that red space is next to a fire hydrant or something else that made that space illegal."

There's no doubt in Shak's mind that people handling today's traffic problems are making things worse.

"And the worse it gets, the more rules they make, the more tickets they give out. Tickets get to be the basis on which the whole traffic control system is operated and that's why nobody wants to change it — because nobody in government wants to change the present system which is such a revenue producing operation."

To fight his battle against the system, Shak has formed Transportation Inc.

For a $10 lifetime membership fee, Shak said participants would be assisted in contesting traffic tickets by making it more attractive to go to trial than pay fines.

The payment would entitle members to free legal representation at trial, reimbursement for any fines or court costs and $300 payment for time spent at trial.

The Hawaii Office of Consumer Protection has looked at similar plans with a jaundiced eye in the past, but Shak remains undaunted.

Three Charged In House Theft

Investigation by the Pitt County Sheriff's Department of a May 6 break-in and larceny incident at a Route 6, Greenville, home has resulted in the arrest of three Edgecombe County residents.

Sheriff Ralph Tyson reported that Columbus Curtis Smith, 31, of Route 4, Tarbo,ro was charged with breaking, entering and larceny at the William Cherry Cobb residence. Sylvester Housor, 27, of Route 4, Tarboro, was charged with receiving stolen property, according to the sheriff, while Milton Junior Sherrod, 29, of Route 1, Tarboro, was charged with being an accessory after the fact.

The three men were placed in Pitt County Jail under $5,000 bond each, Tyson said.

He noted that a portable television set, .22 caliber rifle, 12 gauge shotgun, various rings and an assortment of other jewelry items were reported stolen in the daytime break-in. Value of the items was placed at approximately $1,700, Tyson said. He said a television set and three class rings have been recovered.

Damage to the house, including a broken window and broken storm door glass, was estimated at $100, he reported

Livestock, Meat Prices Drop Off

By PAULINE JELINEK
AP Businees Writer

Live and feeder cattle fell their 1.50-cent daily allowable limit across the board, with the spot contract closing at 66.70 cents a pound and 65 cents a pound, respectively, on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. And pork bellies slumped their 2-cent limit in sympathy with beef, which analysts said sold off mostly in response to the latest cattle-on-feed report.

The report, released by the U.S. Agriculture Department after the close of trading Thursday, said cattle being fed for slaughter in seven major beef producing states totaled 7.03 million head on May 1, up 3 percent from a year ago. The suggestion of plentiful supplies ahead, discouraged buying in the cash markets and prompted selling on the futures market, analysts said.

"Before the report came out, the cash market was quite strong, but immediately afterwards the cash market came to a halt," said Bob Kuhn, livestock analyst in Chicago with Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., "Even the cash people said 'well, why should we go out and buy cattle when it would appear that we have a very ample supply in front of us.'"

Pork bellies for delivery in May closed at 42.45 cents a pound and June delivery hogs dropped 0.65 cent to 47.95 cents a pound.

Grain prices on the Chicago Board of Trade closed mixed and soybean prices lower as weather continued to play a large part in the market.

Analysts said soybeans, which lost between 6¾ cents and 13¾ cents, were pressured by forecasts for weekend rain in the Midwest. They said there is the feeling that wet conditions will delay field work beyond the normal corn planting time and prompt farmers to plant soybeans instead, increasing the supply of soybeans.

The contract for May delivery was $7.43½ a bushel.

Corn held higher for much of the session until just before the close, when local traders began selling contracts for delivery through the summer. More distant delivery months closed higher, getting some support from USDA cattle figures because more animals will mean more demand for corn, the major feed grain.

Corn closed 2½ cents lower to ½ cent higher, with the contract for delivery in May at $3.41½ a bushel.

Wheat was ½ cent lower to 2½ cent higher, with the contract for delivery in May at $4.02½ a bushel; oats were 1¼ cents to 6 cents higher, with the May delivery contract at $2.29½ a bushel.

Gold prices fell in a bout of selling late in the session to settle as much as $10.20 lower, with the contract for delivery in May at $476.40 a troy ounce on the Commodity Exchange Inc. in New York.

Trade was slow earlier in the day amid a lack of any strong directional news and some pre-weekend book squaring, said Jack Boyd of Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc., in New York. But later the U.S. dollar regained some strength, a factor which tends to lure investors from the the metals markets into currencies.

"So people simply reckoned with the dollar and ran for the barn," pushing gold lower on the day, Boyd said.

Coffee prices declined dramatically, falling as 5.25 cents to 117.48 cents a pound for delivery in May.

By DAVID E. ANDERSON
UPI Religion Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. Lutherans, divided more often by ethnic heritage than matters of faith, are beginning an intense debate that could lead to the merger of three major denominations.

That the debate is even taking place, consuming time and energy, is the biggest argument against union, according to opponents of plans for merger of the American Lutheran Church, the Lutheran Church in America and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

The debate has put the bishop-presidents of the two largest groups — Dr. David Preus of the American Lutheran Church and Dr. James R. Crumley of the Lutheran Church in America — on opposite sides of the merger fence.

It has divided the denominations' theologians and seminary faculties and left grass roots Lutherans confused.

A committee on Lutheran unity has presented a series of four options to the 5.4 million parishoners in the 11,000 congregations of the three bodies and delegates to the denomination's spring and early summer regional district and synod meetings will vote on their preference.

At the two extremes of the four options are those calling for retaining the present separate structures and calling for establishment of one merged and integrated church. In between, are options that would join some of the national bureacratic functions of the three bodies and one that would join some of the regional structures while maintaining three denominations.

Both the American Lutheran Church and the Lutheran Church in America are themselves relatively recent products of merger. The ALC was formed in 1960 as a result of a merger of German, Norwegian and Danish bodies. The LCA was formed in 1962 from four different bodies, including large numbers of Swedes, Finns and Danes as well as Germans and Norwegians.

The Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches, with 113,00 members in 267 congregations is the youngest and smallest of the three groups. It was formed in the mid-1970s by moderates leaving the conservative Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. The Missouri Synod has shown no interest in the unity effort and is even considering cutting back its limited relationships with its two sister churches.

Lutherans have been talking and acting on merger plans almost constantly since 1910 in an effort to bring the immigrant-splintered churches together.

Preus, president of the 2.4-million-member American Lutheran Church, has been the most outspoken opponent of any effort to join the three churches at this time.

"The major question is not one of unity, but how the churches can be most effective in mission," he said.

"God-given Lutheran unity is (already) being expressed, audibly and visibly," according to Preus. "Very little would be added by a massive nationwide organizational restructuring."

But Preus' opposite number, Bishop Crumley, head of the larger and more liberal Lutheran Church in America, is an outspoken advocate of merger "at this time."

"Any division in the church is unacceptable," he said. "I yearn for wider union with other Christians and I would like to be able to say more than these three churches — but we must begin where we are. This union is possible. As churches we are in agreement on basic issues such as the understanding of the Gospel. We live in the same context. We share a vision of the church and the church's mission."

It is precisely over the issue of mission that Preus and his anti-merger supporters, primarily within the American Lutheran Church, balk on union talks.

They suggest that merger and mission are either-or alternatives.

"I see the dismantling and rebuilding of church bodies required by a merger to be a major distraction from the church's chief task," Preus has said.

The Rev. Paul Ofstedal, coordinator for congregational life in the American Lutheran Church's Iowa district, agrees with Preus, arguing that merger would not result in the "renewal" of the three churches.

"A more promising alternative would be for the ALC to invite the Lutheran Church in America and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches to walk with us in a quest for renewal in life, mission, and witness as our first priority," he said.

Preus and other opponents of merger, however, face strong opposition within the ALC, especially from theologians and seminary faculty. There is little apparent opposition on the official level within the Lutheran Church in America and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches.

Among Preus' ALC opponents, E. Clifford Nelson, one of the church's most influential theologians, has been one of the most critical. He called Preus' argument "theologically unconvincing, logically absurd and historically irresponsible."

Among other things, Nelson said, merger would eliminate "the functional and geographic overlapping in the pursuit of our common mission."

Another ALC leader, the Rev. L. David Brown, president of the church's Iowa District, said it would be "tragic if a preoccupation with merger talks made us less effective in mission than we now are."

"But the fact is, we're not doing well in witness now," he added. "We lack the zeal that gives birth to strong evangelism," he said. "I think the merger discussions could be a catalyst for igniting that zeal."

Perhaps one of the strongest calls for immediate merger came from the leaders of theological education in the three denominations.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
1981 by Chicago Tribune

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I know that you play four-card majors, and that you stress those methods in your books. You have also maintained that there is not all that much difference between a four-card and five-card major structure. My teacher claims that you are talking through your hat, and that your methods are hopelessly outdated, no matter what you say in you columns. I'd like to hear your answer—L.Joseph, Brooklyn, N.Y.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—If I had to choose between talking through my hat or wearing it pulled down over my ears so I can't hear what people say, there's no doubt about which I would choose.

By and large, it does not make much difference what system you play. Find something that is comfortable and compatible for both you and your regular partner and spend some time going over your bidding agreements to make sure that there will be no misunderstandings.

Then forget about system and concentrate on mastering the fundamentals of contract bridge. Winning bridge players are those who make fewest errors. It is better to play the world's worst system faultlessly than to make errors trying to learn the most complicated system, even if it is also the best in the world.

I would like to make just one point in defense of my stand on this subject. At the recent Spring North American Championships, B. Jay Becker came out of retirement to play on a team in the Vanderbilt Team Championship. At the tender age of 77, he was making his first appearance in a national event in five years. Mr. Becker, as he is known to his friends, plays four-card majors with a minimum of conventional bids. Indeed, it was not all that long ago that he was convinced to adopt the Stayman Convention—he claims that he was always able to get along without it.

Mr. Becker played with each of the other four players on his team. He faced many of the country's leading players, experts on systems such as Precision, the Orange Club, Eastern Scientific with its five-card majors and forcing no trump, and the exotic Polish Pass. At the end of six grueling days, it was Mr. Becker and his teammates who emerged triumphant. Who knows. Had he been playing five-card majors and modern methods rather than "hopelessly outdated" ones, he too might have been among the also-rans.

Q.—What do you lead from an ace-king combination against a suit contract? I led the king and was roundly criticized for it!—B. Fox, Charleston, S.C.

A.—There is little to choose between leading the ace and leading the king. I still go by the old fashioned method and lead the king, but I recognize that proponents of leading the ace have sound arguments on their side. Experts are more or less evenly divided about the merits of the two methods.

Tulips Bring Back WWII Memories

By PATRICIA MOORE

The tulips bloomed as usual this spring in Bartje Pace's front yard — yellow and red ones. Some were planted around a lantern pole; others flowered in front of a split rail fence at her Greenville home.

A Dutch citizen, Mrs. Pace grew up with tulips and they bring back memories, some of them happy, but some shaded with fear and insecurity. One of the most vivid memories is the 1944 "Hunger Winter" of World War II, when her mother, like other Dutch women, found that cooked tulip bulbs could provide food and nourishment they couldn't get elsewhere.

Mrs. Pace was five years old when the war erupted in The Netherlands on May 10, 1940. Her father, a physicist and chemist, was employed by the Dutch government in the colony of Indonesia, where the family lived. But when the war broke out, he was on leave with his family in Holland.

"One day in June, after the war started, I was home alone with my father. There was a knock at the door. He went to the door and there were German soldiers," she said. "I have a vivid picture of him kneeling in front of the closet packing the suitcase and I asked him where he was going. He told me to tell my mother he was going on a trip. He was trying not to frighten me about what was happening. He was put in a truck and driven off to Buchenwald."

Fortunately for the Boleman family, Mrs. Pace's father was considered a hostage of the Germans and he not only survived the war but was released before it ended. Mrs. Pace explained that at the outbreak of war, the Dutch imprisoned all the Germans in Indonesia, which they then controlled. In retaliation, the Germans imprisoned people like Dr. Boelman.

From time to time over a period of three and a half years, the family heard from her father, but sometimes they didn't know where he was.

After his sudden departure, the family was forced to leave their coastal home because the Germans suspected that any residents who lived beside the sea would try to escape over the water.

Mrs. Boelman packed the family belongings, took her three children, her mother-in-law and Dr. Boelman's Indonesian nanny and found half a house for rent at Oosterbeek near Arnhem.

Because the Germans had destroyed or taken possession of so many Dutch homes and no new housing was being constructed, there was a shortage of living space. Somehow, Mrs. Boelman had enough money to rent living quarters. However, the first arrangement didn't work out well and the family had to move.

Their second home was part of a house that overlooked the Rhine River and the Arnhem bridge — the same bridge author Cornelius Ryan wrote about in his book, "A Bridge Too Far," which was later made into a movie.

Mrs. Pace recalls that "It was a beautiful place. A beautiful view."

She also remembers her father's reunion with the family in that house. "One night I was in the little bathtub. We filled it with our ration of water and took turns bathing. There was a knock on the shutters. It was a scary thing. You never knew what that (knocking at night) meant. My mother went to the front door and she did not come back for awhile. And then there was my father. I had not seen him for three and a half years. The first thing I asked was, 'Do you have to go back?'"

The next morning when her father woke up, he looked out the window and saw the river and the bridge.

"We are going to move from here because this is where the invasion will be," he said. It was the summer of 1944 and people laughed at him.

"We moved and two months later there was the battle of Arnhem. The house we had lived in was destroyed. If we had stayed there, we would not be living," Mrs. Pace says.

The third move was to The Hague. The problem of shelter was solved, but this house was not safe from danger, either. The Germans were firing V-2 rockets from an area behind the home. If the missiles were fired correctly, they endangered England. "If one went wrong, it was going to bomb our house," Mrs. Pace recalls.

At times during the wars, the family was without water, electricity, fuel and food. They could not buy new clothing.

Her mother coped with the clothing shortage the same way everyone else did: she mended and patched. "You would take two old dresses and make one. You would take an adult dress and make one for a child," Mrs. Pace explained. "Every night my mother repaired clothes. She made some dresses from white jackets that had belonged to an uncle who had been a physician. Those were constant worries, the food and the clothes. There were no shoes. I remember the last pair of shoes. You would cut the top and leave the soles to allow for children's growing feet. In the summer, we went barefoot as much as possible."

"The last winter of the war, which was 1944, was called the 'Hunger Winter.' All the electricity was shut off. We had no coal. And no food. Once a day you went with your pail to a central kitchen that every neighborhood had. You would get a spoonful of what they called soup. It had no meat. It was cabbage water. For awhile we got half a loaf of bread. Then none," she said.

But the Dutch people had plenty of tulips. "When we fould out we could eat them, it was just wonderful. After all, we could not export them then," Mrs. Pace said. Her mother peeled off the outer skin, cut out the inner green sprout and boiled what was left. "Then you could eat it as a potato," she said. Her mother also made pies from tulip bulbs and the family was able to obtain sugar beets.

However, the problem of food was more serious than just acquiring it. There was no gas to fuel the stoves. Trees were down, so wood was not an alternate energy source.

People in the cities resorted to small cookers placed on top of their stoves. Sometimes they could obtain a tidbit of coal. "At the end (of the war) we chopped up the asphalt from the street because that would burn a little bit. If there was a bombed house, people would go in there and get the wood," Mrs. Pace said.

Children attended schools in makeshift places. "The school we went to had been moved 13 times. You would go half a day. Two schools shared a building, but the Germans kept taking the buildings," she said.

Complicating the hours schools could operate was the fact that the European winter days got dark at 3:30 in the afternoons and did not become light until 9:30 in the mornings.

"Mother tried to teach us a little at home. She had a little bit of hair oil. She would take a cup and fill it with water, put a tiny bit of oil in it with a wick. She then put a mirrow with a red frame behind it for increased light and she would read. Then the calamity happened when my mother broke the mirror. We could not get another one," Mrs. Pace remembers.

While finding shelter, clothing and food during wartime were material challenges, equally important was what Mrs. Pace calls "the battle against deterioration. My mother said we had to keep the spirit going."

"You always kept a tablecloth on the table. You could not get on an animal level. If you let your standards go down, your spirit of life goes down, too," she says. People flocked to churches, even though some had to walk miles without shoes.

Everyday people became heroic, too.

When Germany assembled its manpower to serve in the armed forces, its factories were without sufficient workers. Dutch men and youths were sent to Germany to fill the void.

To avoid this situation, Dutch people dug crawl spaces under the houses so that the men could hide. Mrs. Boelman had such a space under her kitchen stove. When German soldiers came for house searches, the women moved the stove, allowed the men hiding in the upstairs portion of the home to move underground, and put the stove back atop the trap door. Fear and risk were involved for the hidden and their helpers. "Human nature was such that you could not trust anybody," Mrs. Pace remembers.

Because more food was available in rural areas than in the cities, Dr. Boelman and his two sons, who were 10 and 11 years old, left The Hague and went to a relative's farm. He had reasoned that the women would get more food with the coupons he left with them and that the boys would not only have more food, but also be safer.

Finally, spring brought an end to winter and to the cold, starvation and deprivation. Slowly but surely Holland was being liberated, although The Hague was the last large city the Allies freed.

On April 29, American and British planes flew over and dropped food. "When the planes came, my mother began to cry. All the pent up strength she had left her. It was her release," Mrs. Pace says.

For two weeks, however, the family ate crackers like everyone else. "Meat and cheese are bad for starved people. We had to work up to better food," Mrs. Pace explained.

On May 4, 1945, the German forces in The Netherlands surrendered. "We thought the liberation was there," Mrs. Pace said. The family dressed in their best clothes, which were mended, and ventured out into the streets. During the night, the German soldiers became drunk and began shooting. "We had to steal home. I had to take off my wooden shoes and walk in my stockings. The next day, the American and Scottish tanks drove in and the Polish people came and they really liberated us," she said.

She considers herself a bystander of the war and her mother the heroine who sustained the family's morale.

Now the wife of a Greenville physician, Mrs. Pace says, "I appreciate the kind of life I lead. I understand how life can be when bad things are inflicted by other people and I can understand people who do not have freedom."

"I think the happiest memories during the war were of our little backyard," she said. "We planted flowers. We had water and we had a beautiful backyard. My mother was trying to keep our spirits going."

As for the tulips, she says, "It's amazing how such things can be so beautiful and can bring back such memories, too."

Launched On New Career

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Marta Istomin recalls that in her 17 years as the young and beautiful wife of the great cellist Pablo Casals she never left him for more than a day — "He wanted me there," she says.

During the first years of her subsequent marriage to famed pianist Eugene Istomin, she went along on 90 percent of his tours. As with Casals, she says, "He wanted me to be there and I wanted to be there."

Now, Mrs. Istomin is launched on a career of her own as the artistic director of the Kennedy Center. It makes her a leading impresario in a city whose reputation as a place of culture has risen steadily in the center's 10-year history.

Mrs. Istomin, a striking 44-year-old Puerto Rican with raven hair, spoke to a reporter recently about her plans for the Kennedy Center to present a summer "Festival of Festivals."

The festival helps meet her goal to make the Kennedy Center a national center by bringing selected concerts from the Aspen (Colo.) Musical Festival and the Carnegie Hall Festival Concerts and Lincoln Center's Mostly Mozart Festival in New York.

But her voice rose in excitement and she gestured with Latin exuberance when she began to talk about her life with Casals — whom she invariably referred to as "Maestro Casals" — and Istomin.

She was 20 when she married Casals, her teacher and 60 years her senior. She put aside her own career as a young cellist who already had given several concerts.

Did Casals want her always at his side?

"Oh, yes! I never left him. Of course, he was an older person but I never remember having left him for ... more than a day, in 17 years," she said.

"Maestro Casals was over 80 and it was my belief he needed me also. I felt I had to attend to everything and I was always concerned about his health ... but also because I enjoyed being with him."

It has been little different with Istomin, 56, a close friend of Casals. They were married in 1974 two years after Casals' death.

"I think I also was with my present husband for all his concert tours until I took this job," she said. "He wanted me to be there and I wanted to be there ... not only because I loved him but I also enjoyed it."

One reason they wanted her with them was that she helped their "trac" — the anxiety she said most great artists, including her husbands, experience before a concert or performance.

"What can I tell you?" she said. "It happens every time to most great artists. Maestro Casals was always almost sick before every performance with trac ... anytime, anytime, every, everytime."

Her description of the symptoms of trac was graphic:

"Usually, it was a question of being very quiet, stomach cramps, dizzies, 'I think I feel dizzy,' 'I am sleepy.' When you have a great nervousness you feel like yawning and sleeping. Sometimes it would manifest itself by their saying 'I'm sleepy' or 'I have stomach cramps' or 'I feel dizzy.' Other times it was over excitement, being cranky, being short-tempered, everything is wrong. Somebody calls and 'Oh! why is he calling?'

"You see them become pale. There is something of a glaze in their eyes. They're no longer with you. They're talking with you but they no longer are looking at you or really concentrating on you because they're already ahead, concentrating on the performance.

"That is true of my husbands," she said.

But it is this empathy — as well as a deep concern about detail — that she feels has prepared her for the post she assumed 14 months ago.

"I know what artistic expression is. I've lived with it all my life. Perhaps I have that little extra understanding and feeling that I can contribute to the other part of artistic endeavor which is putting all those elements together so that unique moment can happen."

There is a baby grand piano in her office but she hasn't touched it. She concedes she hasn't played the cello in "a long, long time."

"I am basically a musician. My soul is that of a musician. I love it. But at the same time, during these 24 years I've been involved in administration or organization, I also find fulfillment," she said.

"I'm an artist. But on the other hand I am a great believer in detail of precision. That's how the whole machinery works. You have to be very creative but then you have to follow up with everything else."

PARMESAN PUDDING

A new version of one of our favorite nooodle puddings.

- 4 ounces broad (½-inch wide) egg noodles
- ¼ cup butter, soft
- 3 ounces cream cheese, soft
- 2 large eggs, separated
- ½ pint commercial sour cream, at room temperature
- ½ cup grated Parmesan cheese

Cook noodles according to package directions and drain. Beat together the butter and cream cheese until blended; add egg yolks and sour cream and beat until smooth. Fold in the noodles and ¼ cup of the Parmesan. Beat egg whites until stiff; fold in. Turn into a 1½-quart baking dish (10 by 6 by 1¾ inches). Sprinkle with remaining Parmesan. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until set and golden — 25 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

Miss Miller Is Bride

HURDLE MILLS — Jan Elizabeth Miller and Robert Joel Dunn were married Saturday afternoon at three o'clock in the Little River Presbyterian Church here.

MRS. ROBERT JOEL DUNN

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. James H. Miller of Durham and Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy E. Dunn of Winterville.

Dr. James A. Freeman conducted the double ring ceremony. A program of wedding music was presented by Olive Jenkins of Hillsborough, harpist, with a flute solo by Susan Dunn of Winterville.

The honor attendant was Terry Palmer of Durham. Bridesmaids were Mrs. James Miller of Durham, sister-in-law of the bride, Nell Cash of Timberlake, cousin of the bride, and Susan Dunn, sister of the bridegroom.

The bridegroom's father was best man and ushers were Charles T. Dunn of Ayden, cousin of the bridegroom, James Miller of Durham, brother of the bride, Thomas Vandiford of Greenville and George Franke of Chapel Hill.

Daniel and Kimberly Miller of Durham, nephew and niece of the bride, were ring bearer and flower girl.

The bride, given in marriage by her parents, wore a formal gown of white silk organza over peau de soie. The bodice was fashioned of re-embroidered alencon lace accented with seed pearls. It featured a sweetheart neckline defined with seed perls and short lace sleeves trimmed with crystal pleated organza. The skirt extended into a chapel train with appliques of lace and a flounce of crystal pleated organza at the hemline. Her veil was a waltz length mantilla of silk illusion bordered with alencon lace worn over a Juliet cap. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses and baby's breath.

Each of the attendants wore a formal gown of rose crepe with shirred, fitted bodice and spaghetti straps. An elbow length cape of chiffon and a circular crepe overskirt featured handkerchief points. The attendants carried bouquets of miniature pink carnations and baby's breath and wore baby's breath in their hair. The flower girl wore a floor length dress of white chiffon with a fitted bodice, round collar and flared skirt with a bustle. She carried a natural wicker basket filled with rose petals.

The mother of the bride selected a mauve formal gown of lace and chiffon. The bridegroom's mother chose a formal gown of sea green lusterglo and chiffon. Grandmothers of the bridegroom, Mrs.Robert E. Boyd and Mrs. Guy C. Dunn of Winterville, wore street length dresses in pastel colors and all were given orchid corsages.

After the wedding ceremony a reception was given by the bride's parents at the Colonial Inn, Hillsborough. Following the rehearsal Friday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Dunn and Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Boyd entertained at a buffet dinner at the Colonial Inn.

Both the bride and bridegroom are graduates of UNC-CH and are employed by SYSGEN, Inc., Durham.

After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will be living in Chapel Hill.

Couple Weds Saturday

CLINTON — The wedding ceremony of Betty Dove Woody of Rockingham and Ralph Edward Ward of Greenville was solemnized Saturday afternoon at four o'clock on the lawn at the home of the bride's uncle, Lt. Col. Willard Woody.

The bride's parents are Mr. and Mrs. James Claybrone Woody of Clinton and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Haywood Ward of Tarboro are parents of the bridegroom.

The bride was given in marriage by her parents and her honor attendant was Mrs. Yvonne H. Futterer of Rockingham.

The brother of the bridegroom, Ernest Etheridge Ward of Tarboro was best man. Ushers included James Claybrone Woody Jr. of Greenville, brother of the bride, Raymond Michael Ward, brother of the bridegroom, Charles Flowers and Charles Warrington III, all of Tarboro and Bill Futterer of Rockingham.

The bride wore an ivory imported embroidered voile wedding gown with an overlay of English embroidered net fashioned with a high lace neckline and elbow length sleeves. The full bodice was enhanced with Venise lace bands and the natural waistline had a lace tie belt. The full flowing skirt was bordered with a ruffle. She carried a bouquet of English ivy, lilacs and tube roses.

The couple will be living in Greenville after a wedding trip to The Cloisters, Sea Island, Ga.

The bride attended Meredith College and graduated from UNC-CH with a B.A. and from ECU with a M.S. She is now a clinical services supervisor with the Wadesboro Developmental Evaluation Center, N. C. Division of Health Services.

MRS. RALPH EDWARD WARD

The bridegroom graduated from ECU with a B.S.B.A. and is a CPA and partner in the firm of Farley, Prescott, Mizelle and Co., Inc.

MRS. ELTON CONROY MCKENZIE

Miss Reid Is Bride

FARMVILLE — Miss Annette Reid and the Rev. Elton Conroy McKenzie were united in marriage at three o'clock at Mount Moriah Holy Church here. The double ring ceremony was officiated by the Rev. Otha Hayes of Greensboro.

The church was decorated with a 15 branch candelabra flanked with two nine branch candelabra entwined with greenery. The unity candle was used and the couple knelt on a prie-dieu for the wedding prayer.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Reid of Farmville and the bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Naomi McKenzie of Whiteville and the late Mr. Wilson McKenzie.

A program of music was conducted by organist Johnny Wooten of Greenville, Mrs. Molly Small of Greenville and Miss Angela Johnson of Durham, soloists, who sang "You Are The Sunshine" and "Together With Jesus."

Given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a formal gown of white organza over white peau de soie designed with a high neckline encircled with white floral silk Venise lace beaded with clusters of pearls. The empire bodice was enhanced by a sheer yoke of point d'espirit lace with sequins outlined in beaded silk floral Venise lace. The sheer bishop lace sleeves were cuffed in scalloped chantilly lace and the modified cathedral length train were accented with a lace flounce bordered. Beaded appliques of lace were scattered over the gown and train. She wore a chapel length mantilla edged in chantilly lace attached to a semi Camelot cap overlaid in matching lace with pearls and carried a bouquet of white roses with blue trimming and streamers.

Marcia Foskey of Farmville, sister of the bride, was honor attendant and bridesmaids included Mrs. JoAnn Ward of LaGrange, Mrs. Myrtle Ormond, Miss Evelyn Reid, cousin of the bride, Miss Evelyn Tyson, all of Farmville and Miss Shirley Murphy of Greenville.

The maid of honor wore a floral gown of dotted swiss over taffeta. The under dress had narrow straps. The bodice had a high neckline encircled with lace and the sheer bishop sleeves were cuffed with lace. The skirt was gathered. The bridesmaids each wore similar gowns in blue and white dotted swiss with a taffeta underdress. They each carried a long-stemmed white silk rose with blue trimming and blue streamers.

Gerry Wilson of Greensboro was best man and groomsmen included Darrly McKenzie of Whiteville, brother of the bridegroom, Donnie Gay, Leonard Reid, brother of the bride, and James Phillips, brother-in-law of the bride, all of Farmville and Johnny Freeman of Raleigh.

The wedding was directed by Mrs. Mary Herring of Goldsboro.

The bride is a graduate of Farmville Central, Pitt Community College and A & T State University, Greensboro. The bridegroom is a graduate of A & T State University and is a salesman at Western Auto, Greensboro.

A reception was held at St. John Free Will Baptist Church, Farmville. Miss Blondie Tyson and Miss Pearl Isler presided at the guest register.

Mrs. Mary Newton served cake and Mrs. Betty Joyner poured punch. Mrs. Mary Barrett, Mrs. Edna Joyner, Mrs. Mary Tripp and Mrs. Janet Corey assisted in serving.

An after-rehearsal party was given for the wedding party at Mount Moriah Holy Church and hostesses were the bride's mother and Mrs. Gay Bertha Isler of Farmville.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will live in Greensboro.

Couple Marries Saturday

GASTONIA — Rebecca Lee Faust, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tyrus R. Faust of Gastonia, and Kenneth Aaron Rakestraw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Rakestraw of Reidsville, were married Saturday afternoon in the First Presbyterian Church here.

The Rev. Frank Mayes performed the double ring ceremony at high noon. A program of wedding music was presented by John Siler, organist, Bo Stroupe and Mrs. Wes Styer played carillion bells.

Given in marrige by her father, the bride wore a southern styled gown featuring a bare neckline accented with pleats of chantilly lace. Seed pearls and lace qppliques adorned the bodice and the full skirt was finished with pleats and lace and extended into a cathedral train with a white satin sash at the waist. Her veil was edged with matching lace and seed pearls and she carried a cascade of white azaleas dotted with pink and ivy.

Bridesmaids included Mrs. Amelia Stone of Hampton, Va., sister of the bridegroom, Mrs. Dorinda Simpson of Reidsville, Mrs. Laura Greene of Greenville, Mrs. Alice Hughey of Washington, Miss Barbara Saltzer of Durham, Miss Karen Ritchie of Dobson and Miss Joanna James of Raleigh.

Miss Courtney Stone of Hampton, Va. was flower girl and the honor attendant was Robin Faust of Greenville, sister of the bride.

The attendants each wore a dusty rose floor length dress styled with spaghetti straps and a matching chiffon coverup with lace appliques. They carried cascades of pink azaleas and ivy. The flower girl selected a white eyelet dress with a matching sash tied into a bow at the waistline. She carried pink petals in a basket and wore a pink azalea blossom in her hair.

The father of the bridegroom was best man while ushers were John Somers of Richmond Va., Major Larry Stone of Hampton, Va., Ronald Greene and Alex King of Greenville, Ty Faust of Gastonia, brother of the bride, Len Fuqua of Hillsborough and Jerry Fay of Union, Conn.

A reception was held around the pool at Southampton Racquet Club, Gastonia. Guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Simpson. Music was provided by Jerry Goodman, accordion player.

A rehearsal dinner was held at the racquet club Friday evening given by the parents of the bridegroom followed by a party for out-of-town guests at the club with music being provided by John Hook.

The couple will be living in Greenville after a Caribbean cruise.

The bride graduated from Lenoir-Rhyne College and from Bowman-Gray School of Medicine. She is employed by the National Health Service Corps, Walstonburg, where she is a physician assistant with Greene County Health Care.

The bridegroom graduated from Oak Ridge Academy and is now attending ECU.

Miss Lang, Mr. Coltrain Wed

SIMPSON — Laura Catherine Lang and Thomas David Coltrain exchanged wedding vows Saturday at 5:30 p.m. in a double ring ceremony performed by the Rev. James G. Lupton in the Salem United Methodist Church.

A program of music was presented by Stephen W. Vaughn, organist and Martha L. Shealy, who sang "The Lord's Prayer" and "The Wedding Song." Otto Dykstra played the accordian.

The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Catherine Gibson Lang of Greenville and the late Major Gen. USAF John A. Lang Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Columbus Coltrain of Greenville are parents of the bridegroom.

The honor attendant was Martha Lang Shealy of Lake Worth, Fla., twin sister of the bride, and Deborah Coltrain Muse of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, was bridesmaid.

The father of the bridegroom was best man and groomsmen included Dr. John A. Lang III, USAF major, brother of the bride of Alexandria, Va., William Coltrain and Jefferson Smith of Greenville and Roy A. Shealy Jr. of Lake Worth, Fla.

Given in marriage by Richard Gibson Lang and her mother, the bride wore a formal gown of white chantilly lace over peau de soie designed with an open Queen Anne neckline, empire bodice and sheer Victorian long sleeves. The southern belle skirt and attached cathedral train were enhanced by six cascading tiers of ruffled chantilly lace. She carried a cascade of white roses, lily of the valley and accented with baby's breath and greenery.

The attendants were each dressed in a formal gown of pink val spray lace over pink taffeta designed with a high collar of scalloped lace, a sheer yoke edged in matching lace with pushup sleeves. The full skirt fell from a natural waistline encircled with pink satin tie from which fell a peplum flounce. They each carried a colonial nosegay of miniature pink sweetheart roses accented with baby's breath and tied with pink satin ribbons.

The mother of the bride wore a floor length pink waffle chiffon dress with Maderia embroidered lace collar and cuffs. The mother of the bridegroom selected a floor length gown of blue chiffon. Both carried a hand nosegay of sweetheart roses, purple statice and baby's breath.

After a wedding trip to Myrtle Beach, S. C., the couple will live in Simpson.

The bride completed three years at ECU and graduated from Pitt Community College. She is associated with Carolina Family Practice Center. The bridegroom graduated from Rose High School, attended Pitt Community College and is employed by TRW, Inc.

The wedding was directed by Katherine Vinson.

Mrs. John B. Spilman presided at the bridal register, which was placed on a table holding a single rose.

Betsy Tysor and Ruth Bambauer served cake and punch and champagne were poured by Mrs. J. N. Gibson Jr., Mrs. John A. Lang III and Mrs. Richard Long. The bridal table was accented by a epergne featuring pink snapdragons and yellow tulips.

The parents of the bridegroom gave a rehearsal dinner at the Moose Lodge Friday evening for members of the wedding party, friends and out-of-town guests.

Wedding Vows Said In Garden Ceremony

TRENTON — Sheri Lynn Mozingo and David Kent Davenport were married in a garden wedding ceremony held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Davenport here Saturday. The double ring ceremony was performed at two o'clock by the Rev. Robert Ratz.

Daughter of Mrs. Joyce Killingsworth of Greenville, the bride was escorted by her brother, Gary Mozingo and given in marriage by her mother. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Davenport of Trenton.

A program of music was presented by Christy Braswell of Grifton, guitarist and soloist.

The honor attendant was Mrs. Sherrie Hodges of Winston-Salem and bridesmaids included Anne Jackson and Linda McKinney of Wintston-Salem, Judy Davenport of Trenton, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and Rhonda Snipes of Kinston, cousin of the bride.

Niki Davenport, niece of the bridegroom of Trenton was flower girl and Randall Snipes of Kinston, cousin of the bride was ring bearer.

The father of the bridegroom was best man while ushers included Cecil Rhodes, Charles Dow and Wally Wray of Raleigh and Bobby Davenport, brother of the bridegroom of Trenton.

The bride wore a formal gown by Mendicino of white organza over peau de soie designed with an open Queen Anne neckline. The bodice was overlaid in re-embroidered alencon lace and was embellished with florettes of petals. The long fitted sleeves of English net and re-embroidered lace were overlaid in an open split sheer organza sleeve with cuffs of matching lace. The front of the modified A-line skirt was enhanced by panels of beaded lace. The attached chapel length train and skirt were bordered at the hemline with peau d'ange lace. She wore a wide brim hat overlaid with white organza and carried a bouquet of daisies.

The flower girl wore a formal mint green dress with a white eyelet overlay and carried a basket of apricot flowers.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held at Quaker-Neck Country Club, Trenton. Mrs. Betty Thompson, Mrs. Linda Langley, Mrs. Pam Sachs and Mrs. Rita Wynns assisted in serving.

A rehearsal dinner was given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Davenport, brother of the bridegroom. Abridesmaids luncheon was held Friday given by the bride's mother at King's Restaurant, Kinston.

The couple will be living in Raleigh after a wedding trip to St. Thomas.

The bride and bridegroom are graduates of Jones Senior School. She graduated from Meredith College, Raleigh and is presently a third-year law student at Wake Forest University, Winston-Salem. The bridegroom is a graduate of NCSU and is completing a Master's in mechanical engineering there. He is an engineering consultant with Newman Machine Co., Greensboro.

A reception was held after the ceremony at the Greenville Country Club.

SOLAR HOUSE PLANS

Two new passive solar houseplans have been added to the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service's houseplan service.

The plans, ranging from 1,000 to 1,200 square feet are designed expressly for low and middle income families says Charlotte Womble, extension housing specialist, NCSU.

The houseplans emphasize proper orientation, insulation in attic, walls and under the floor, double glazed windows and mass walls that absorb heat in the daytime and release that heat into the rooms at night.

TOY STORAGE

Try using colorful plastic dishpans for storing children's small toys such as miniature cars and building pieces, suggest extension home economics specialists at NCSU.

These toybins are easy to clean and they are portable for pickup time. Be sure to arrange the dishpans on shelves that are placed low enough for a young child to reach easily.

The miracle on Jarvis Street.

Once, before the advent of pre-packaged cheese slices and fancy french bottled sparkling water, patrons of local markets rightly expected to be able to fill their entire grocery list with a single shopping trip. The old supermarkets had everything. No matter which day was more convenient for you to shop.

But then came the "modern" supermarkets and special "stocking days". You see, it's much more efficient for these big modern markets to let their stocks dwindle until the days they decide to restock. If they are out of bread, then you may eat cake.

People forgot. They forgot that truly super supermarkets are supposed to have what you need, when you need it.

But, at Overton's, we didn't forget. We still stock our shelves every single night. So if you want Del Monte stewed tomatoes, you get Del Monte stewed tomatoes. If you want Ivory soap, we'll have all you need. And, if you prefer bread, ours just arrived. All at low "super" market prices.

Some big grocery people say it's a miracle that we can still stock our shelves every day and stay in business. It's no miracle. It's just the way we've stayed in business here on Jarvis Street for the past 35 years. Come see us.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Every once in awhile I get a craving to see a mature woman delivering the six o'clock news.

I know I'm talking crazy, but sometimes I think if I see another silken-haired nymph with capped teeth and wet lips wrapped around the failing economy, I'll scream.

At times when I like to have died from sitting there figuring out how many ways there are to tie a scarf, I'd turn on Walter Cronkite and try to imagine him with hair parted in the middle and rolled into a bun at the nape of his neck.

One of the things people liked about Walter was that he not only delivered the news with wisdom and experience ... he gave you the impression he was going to do something about it.

An older woman could do that.

Experience could be an asset to a mature woman newscaster. Take the other night. I saw a young anchorperson ... no more than 12 years old ... shove a microphone into the face of a 23-year-old woman who had just given birth to five children, had four others at home, a husband out of work and she asked, "How do you feel?"

A woman over 30 would have known the answer before she asked the question.

The print media, somehow, do not indulge themselves in that kind of discrimination. We have scores of mature women writers who wear glasses, suffer from paleness, sweat, frown, have poor posture, small eyes, buy boring coats, and don't care diddly about the weather.

I used to know a lot of women who were involved in broadcasting 10 or 12 years ago. One of them had hips. When the School for the Terminally Serious began to turn out women graduates, they were reassigned to small booths in radio stations and eventually phased out. Most of them are underground now, leading beige lives and watching their old tapes.

Granted television personalities should look attractive, but a word to the eyeliner and lip gloss set — inside everybody is a mature woman fighting to get out.

I'll never forget the late Totie Fields who appeared one day on the Mike Douglas show. When a sex symbol joined them the audience nearly went crazy, Totie walked out into the audience and shouted, "What are you applauding HER for? Every one of you in the audience looks just like me!"

Engagement Announced

VICKI ALLIGOOD. . .is the daughter of Mrs. Ginger Finney of Washington, who announces her engagement to Richard C. Belthoff Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Belthoff of Dover, N. J. A June 13 wedding is being planned.

State Officers Attend Meeting

Present were Mrs. Margaret Highfill, North Carolina Branch president and Mrs. Astrid Dougherty, North Carolina Branch secretary. Both are from Greensboro. Mrs. Cllara Shackell introduced Mrs. Highfill, who spoke on her theme for the year, "This is the day that the Lord has made, let us rejoice and be glad in it."

Miss Annie Turner, chairman of American Indian Affairs, stated that 6,200 Campbell Soup labels had been mailed to Southwest Indian School, Peoria, Ariz. She reported she had received a note from the American Indian scholarship recipient, Ludy Darlene Graham, who will be studying law at Campbell University this fall.

Mrs. Jean Weaver reported 96 pairs of eyeglasses had been mailed.

Stamps, labels, old jewelry, unused eyeglasses and plastic egg cartons were collected.

Mrs. Highfill gave a report on Branch activities including four scholarships awarded this year. A Chatauqa scholarship has been awarded to Jimmy Dougherty of Greensboro to attend a six-week session there this summer. She said that 25-year members will be honored at the convention to be held here this fall.

Mrs. Highfill and Mrs. Dougherty were guests of Mrs. Shackell and were entertained at a poolside breakfast at the Holiday Inn by Patient Circle President Mrs. R. E. Corbett Jr. They were also honored at a luncheon at the Greenville Country Club by Mrs. Shackell.

DINNER FOR SIX

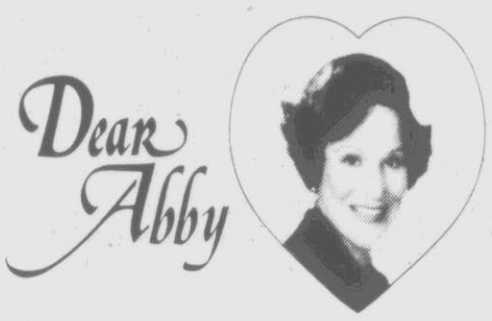
Baked Ham — Potato Souffle
Asparagus — Rolls
Lemon Tarts — Beverage

POTATO SOUFFLE

Attractive and hearty.

4 medium potatoes (1½ pounds scant)
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper to taste
¼ cup Parmesan cheese, grated
3 large eggs, separated
1 cup half-and-half

Pare potatoes and quarter; boil in unsalted boiling water to cover until tender; drain and rice; measure 2 firmly packed cups — use any remaining potato some other way. With a spoon, stir the salt, pepper, cheese and egg yolks into the potatoes; gradually stir in the half-and-half, keeping smooth. Beat the whites until stiff; add to potato mixture; gently beat until blended. Turn into an ungreased 1-quart souffle dish (about 6¾ by 3 inches). Draw the tip of a teaspoon held about 1 inch from the edge of the dish around the top surface. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until puffed and browned — 40 minutes. Serve at once. Makes 6 servings.



What's in a Name? In This Case, a Lot

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: When I married Roger Campbell four years ago, I kept my maiden name, which is Conklin. My husband agreed to this, so there is no problem there. We now have two children, so we hyphenated my name and my husband's and the children are James Conklin-Campbell and Jane Conklin-Campbell.

Our problem is my husband's family. They absolutely refuse to acknowledge the children's name or mine. They insist on sending birthday cards, letters, etc., addressed to the "Campbells" only, ignoring my legal name as well as the children's.

My husband and I have pointed this out to them several times, but they tell us we are "stupid" — that the hyphenated name will cause confusion and problems for our children when they reach school age.

Please help us, Abby. I know this isn't an earth-shattering problem, but there must be others in our boat.

PATRICIA CONKLIN

DEAR PATRICIA: There's a hyphenated name for people who refuse to honor another's simple request, and choose instead to ridicule it: bull-headed. Tune them out.

DEAR ABBY: I invited my husband's parents and his grandmother (she lives with them) out for dinner at a very nice restaurant on my husband's birthday.

Early that morning, my mother-in-law called and asked to talk to Dick. I thought she was going to wish him a happy birthday, but instead she told Dick that unless we invited his sister, her husband and their children (2 years and 6 months old), they couldn't make it either!

I heard Dick tell his mother that Doris (that's me) must have "forgotten," and, of course, his sister and her family could come. Abby, we didn't invite them in the first place because it would have been too expensive.

I had hired a sitter to stay with our kids because I didn't want any children at the dinner, so Dick's sister brings hers and spoils everything. The baby cried endlessly and the 2-year-old had to be the center of attention, saying "fish" all evening because she said it so cute. It was a miserable evening and I was angry and unhappy.

When we got home, I asked Dick why he didn't tell his mother that we didn't invite his sister and her family because we couldn't afford it — which was the truth. He said the first thing his mother said was, "Dad will pay for everything," so how could he say no?

Was Dick wrong for giving in to his mother? And if so, how could he have avoided it without raising a stink?

STILL STEAMING

DEAR STILL: Dick was wrong. He should have told his mother that you had planned an evening out sans children — that he appreciated Father's offer to pick up the tab, but thanks anyway. I can't guarantee that a "stink" wouldn't have been raised, but Mother would think twice before trying to blackmail Dick again.

Norfolk Planning Harborfest On Friday

NORFOLK, VA. — The fifth Celebration of Life on the Chesapeake Bay, Norfolk's big annual Harborfest, will get under way on Friday, May 22, for a four-day run of festive events.

The Downtown Norfolk Waterfront is the place where boats and men who work the waters of the Chesapeake and the people who live and play on the Bay will converge to see and take part in activities.

The first event is to be a sail race into the Norfolk harbor marking the conclusion of the Harborfest Chesapeake Bay Challenge Cup sail race from Norfolk to Wolftrap Light and back.

A large number of boats and ships of all kinds, from tall ships to tugboats, will be coming into harbor. Among the graceful tall ships scheduled to visit Norfolk during Harborfest are elegant vessels such as the brig Meka II, the schooner Young America, and the sloop Providence. The Providence is a replica of the first commissioned U.S. Navy flagship captained by John Paul Jones.

The tall ships are coming in from all over the world and are stopping in at Norfolk en route to New York Harbor for Operation Sail.

One of many water events planned will be a mock naval engagement in the Elizabeth River by the Meka II and the Providence. Morning-to-night entertainment is planned for 400,000 visitors expected to attend Harborfest.

One of the most lavish spectacles planned for Harborfest is a gala Caribbean Festival with a torchlight street parade featuring imported music by reggae, steel drum and calypso bands along the waterfront Friday evening. Entertainment will also be provided by the Mocko Jumbi stilt walkers from the Bahamas, fire dancers and rio dancers and 20-giant costumed Caribbean dancers. Floats and Caribbean foods, fruits and drinks will add to the carnival atmosphere.

Events on Saturday will include an outdoor concert by the Virginia Philharmonic Orchestrato be followed by a show of fireworks by Felix Grucci and his family. This is to be the first presentation to an American audience of the whow which won the World Fireworks Championship in Monte Carlo two years ago.

The Cousteau Society, which is headquartered in Norfolk, will exhibit equipment used in the famous undersea explorations of Jacques-Yves Cousteau. The society will take part in an elaborate exhibition in conjunction with other ocean science groups.

On Saturday and Sunday, races on the Elizabeth River will be held between rafts, customized bathtubs, dinghys, tugs, trawlers, sail boats, model boats and power boats. On shore, races will pit crab against crab in the first annual Crab Trot. There will also be a 10,000-meter foot race through downtown Norfolk and a bicycle race along Waterfront Drive.

Clarinetist Artie Shaw Teaches Class On Swing

By JACK V. FOX

CAMARILLO, Calif. (UPI) — On the slateboard of Mrs. Schiller's 9th grade classroom at Los Altos Junior High School is chalked the definition of the word "anachronism."

"Anything which is out of time or place. For example, a movie with a Roman centurion wearing a wristwatch."

And who is standing up there at Mrs. Schiller's desk? Twenty guesses. A hundred guesses. Ten thousand guesses. Wrong.

It's Artie Shaw. "Begin the Beguine." Lana Turner and Ava Gardner. The clarinetist who made that horn sound like the siren call of Circe. The big bandleader with the intellect.

So what is Artie Shaw doing in classroom 2-A this spring evening?

Artie is conducting a seminar on swing music. And every seat is filled. That means he has an attendance of 35.

They have paid $16 apiece for the three-session program sponsored by the Oxnard College Community Services Department. Oxnard is a small town north of Los Angeles. Carol Burnett got in trouble, in addition to her National Enquirer problems, when she referred on TV to someone having the sophistication of an 11-year-old in Oxnard.

An audience of 35! Artie remembers a time in the Paramount in New York when there were 3,000 kids packed in the theater and one jumped from a box onto the stage and broke his leg and Shaw said: "John Wilkes Booth, I presume."

This night no one is jumping from any loges. They are mainly 60 year olds who simply want to hear about and listen to the music of their youth — Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey, Glenn Miller, Stan Kenton, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Woody Herman.

And guess what is the first song? What else? Hogy Carmichael's "Stardust." (Anyone who doesn't know "Stardust" quit reading here).

First, Shaw played a record of "Stardust" made by Jan Garber in the 1930s. Then he played his own haunting rendition of the song and that was how he began his course on swing music.

"Swing is a verb, not a noun," said Shaw. "Of course, it has also taken on another meaning today."

He should know.

Then there was Dorsey's "Getting Sentimental Over You" and Goodman's "Please Don't Feel That Way." Shaw played a couple of records with his clarinet solos, "I Cover the Waterfront" and "Summertime."

So what is Artie Shaw doing in Camarillo, which is a suburb of Oxnard if that is possible.

He says he likes to teach and that he needs to communicate with people, to learn from them. He is finishing a novel called "The Education of Albie Snow." Shaw says it is about someone much like himself but it will be fiction because "you can write the truth as fiction but if you do it as fact they will sue you into the grave."

Lawrence Welk. "I take music seriously. Therefore I cannot take Welk seriously."

Benny Goodman. "He had a great technique. But he was very rigid. He was a musical curiosity. He had a bag of tricks but he was finished with anything new after 1936. He had no sense of humor."

Glenn Miller. "He was not a swing musician."

Shaw these days looks fit. He wears an open necked shirt, a gold chain at his throat and a blue, billed cap which makes him look something like a Dutch house painter about to start his job.

Art Museum Schedules Events

WINSTON SALEM — A special calendar of events is scheduled at the N.C. Museum of Art for Sunday, May 17. Brief details are:

— 2:15 p.m. — "Antique Arms and Armor in Art," a gallery talk in recognition of yesterday's Armed Forces Day. Docent Alston Grimes will discuss paintings depicting suits of armor and weapons from several periods of history. Among the works to be discussed is "The Armorer's Shop" by David Teniers the Younger.

— 3 p.m. — Piano recital. Works by Mozart, Brahms, Liszt and Ravel will be performed in the Kress Galleries of the N.C. Museum of Art by pianist Lydia Gatling. Ms. Gatling, a visiting artist at Edgecombe Technical College in Tarboro, has appeared as a soloist with the Savannah Symphony, the Columbia Philharmonic and others.

On exhibition at the N.C. Museum of Art now through May 31 — "Recent Works by Paul Hartley," chairman of the Painting and Drawing Department at East Carolina University. Collectors gallery, first floor.

The N.C. Museum of Art is located on 107 E. Morgan St., Raleigh, and is open Tues.-Sat., 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and Sunday 2-6 p.m. Admission is free. For more information, phone 733-3248.

Young Actor Offers Best In 'Light Bulb'

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — When Woody Allen's "The Floating Light Bulb" opened here, various and sundry scribes sought interviews with the stars, Bea Arthur, Jack Weston and, they hoped, the reclusive author.

All are famous, Miss Arthur via "Maude," Weston via films and Broadway, and Allen via his comedy, his writing, acting and directing in films.

On the other hand, there's Brian Backer. At 24, he's an unknown, even though he, too, is in "Light Bulb."

"This is my second interview — in my entire life," he says with a shy grin.

The major critics generally knocked the play. But not Backer, who not only made his Broadway debut in it, but also his debut as a paid stage actor.

They cheered his supporting work as a shy, stuttering, 17-year-old budding magician in the blue-collar Brooklyn family of which Allen writes in "Bulb."

"I didn't read the reviews until the next morning," Backer says. "My heart was in my mouth. But they were so good, so kind to me."

It's been said Backer's character probably is that of a young Woody Allen. And that he bears a striking resemblance to a young Allen, small in stature, shy, a little hesitant in speech. Only the owlish glasses are missing.

Both hail from the Flatbush section of Brooklyn. But there are many differences. Backer, for example, says he lacks a comic mind.

Moore, More Strike Out On Broadway

By GLENNE CURRIE
UPI Lively Arts Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — I love singer Melba Moore, but not when she adopts a grotesque Georgia accent as a comical angel in a stultifyingly unfunny play like "Inacent Black."

I've enjoyed Welsh lyricist Julian More's work in the past, but not much in the Broadway version of his "The Moony Shapiro Songbook."

The latter opened at the Morosco Theater May 3 — and closed the same night.

The former opened at the Biltmore May 6, on a wing and a prayer.

The angel in "Inacent Black" comes to earth in human form to sort out the problems of a middle class black family operating a real estate business in New York. It's full of characters which blacks would deride as stereotypes if it were written and produced by whites.

As it is, it is a clumsy, formless work with the biggest laughs coming from stereotyped accents, clothes and mores. Gregory Miller gets an A as the youngest son of the house, and Reginald Vel Johnson a B minus as the eldest son. The rest is silence.

"The Moony Shapiro Songbook" is a revue of parody and pastiche songs by More and his composer Monty Norman which went over big in London. I don't think it was bad enough to die opening night, but it wasn't very good either.

Moony Shapiro is an imaginary English-born American songwriter active from the '20s through the '70s. The show is a retrospective of his work — in itself a mild spoof of all the retrospectives we've seen in recent years of pop composers and lyric writers.

The format gives Norman and More, who also collaborated on the book, an opportunity to spoof 50 years of movies, musicals and Tin Pan Alley: Irving Berlin, Cole Porter, George and Ira Gershwin, Fred Astaire, Rudy Vallee, Yves Montand, Edith Piaf, Benny Goodman, Vera Lynn, Marlene Dietrich, Bing Crosby, Dan Dailey, Mario Lanza, Ethel Merman, "Finian's Rainbow," "South Pacific," Humphrey Bogart ("Play it again, Sam"), the Beatles, Bob Dylan, Al Jolson, Bette Midler and Tom Lehrer.

Once you get tired of playing "name that star" you realize that the talented quintet doing all the work probably could have done just as well without the help of Norman, More, director, choreographer, and producers.

Off Broadway, The Manhattan Theater Club is giving the American premiere of Brian Friel's "Translations," starring Barnard Hughes, April 14-May 17.

The scene is an Irish village in 1833, when the Irish language was giving way to English and the old homegrown "hedge schools" based on Latin and Greek were being supplanted by public schooling. It was a time of transition just before the potato famine, when hatred — and murder — of the English was at a peak.

Much of the impact of the play in Friel's original must have been in the orchestration of Gaelic and English. In this version it's hard to tell when English is supposed to be English or supposed to be Gaelic. And too often you can't understand the Irish-accented English. Maybe director Joe Dowling, artistic director of Dublin's Abbey Theater, couldn't tell the effect on American ears.

"Translations" needs to be considerably changed if other American productions are planned.

Everything is coming up roses on both stages.

At ABT, I saw the historic April 30 "Giselle" during which Fernando Bujones launched into his incredible series of entrechats six and huit.

It had nothing to do with "Giselle," but it was hair-raising and heart-stopping. When Bujones really winds up and lets go, there's no American dancer can touch him.

This "Giselle" is Mikhail Baryshnikov's abbreviated version, which unforgivably even eliminates the first act peasant pas de deux, one of the delights of the ballet even if it does not advance the main plot.

Neither Bujones as Albrecht nor Cynthia Gregory as Giselle managed to create the dual characters required, but Gregory's second act Wili was one of the best in memory and would have seemed even better if Bujones had not set the audience first buzzing and then cheering with his rubber-ball act.

Junior Historians Mark Anniversary

RALEIGH — From disco dancing to cemetery searching, activities will be many and varied for the more than 500 Tar Heel Junior Historians from all over the state who will converge in Raleigh this month. Among clubs represented will be History Unlimited of Aycock Junior High in Greenville.

The annual Tar Heel Junior Historian Awards Days, May 18-19, will feature all kinds of activities for the elementary and junior high students who will celebrate the end of a year's work on history projects. The observance marks the 28th anniversary of the program.

At the event at Peace College, students will participate in workshops in several subjects, a cookout, local tours, student entertainment and a disco, plus the presentation of awards in several categories. Students and their advisers will be recognized for individual and group projects they have worked on throughout the year, many of which are of benefit to the community, such as cemetery cleanups and preservation efforts.

During the school term almost 5,000 students in 109 history clubs from 56 counties were involved in the active study of state and local history.

More than 70 projects are competing for the awards, among them models of the the Round Top Baptist Church in Waxhaw, the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse, Rock Ridge Mill, Piedmont Springs Hotel in Danbury, and a cross stitch map of North Carolina showing main industries and points of interest.

On Tuesday, the N.C. Museum of History Associates will recognize students who participate in a statewide artifact search, and Raleigh's Bloomsbury Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution will present book award awards. The Tar Heel Junior Historian Association will name its adviser of the the year at the meeting.

Several new clubs will be welcomed to awards days for the first time. They include "The Moratoc MarConians" of E.J. Hayes School, Williamston, and the "Et Cetera Project" of North Everetts School, Everett.

Stamp News

The American flag has appeared on U.S. stamps many times and in many designs. The latest of the American flag stamps are now being issued in three different designs featuring the same flag across the top and a scene beneath highlighting a phrase from "America The Beautiful." The new stamps come in sheet, coil and booklet forms. The denominations are 18 cents.

The sheet stamp bears the legend "...for amber waves of grain." The vignette shows a midwestern wheat field with a piece of harvesting equipment in the background.

The coil stamp has the legend "...from sea to shining sea." The design depicts the South Portland Head Lighthouse on the coast of Maine.

The sheet stamps are being issued in panes of 100, while the coils are being issued in 100, 500 and 3,000. The $1.20 vending machine booklet contains a single pane of eight stamps — six 18-cent and two 6-cent stamps. The 6-cent design bears a "6 cents" in the center, surrounded by a circle of 13 stars. "USA" is centered at the bottom of the design.

First-day cancellations may be obtained in the customary two methods. If you purchase the stamps from your local post office, affix them to the envelope and address on the right side near the bottom. Mail to "Flag Stamps, Portland, ME 04101." Deadline date for postmarks is June 8.

Should you prefer the USPS to affix the stamps, remember the cost is 18 cents for each stamp to be affixed to covers, and you must clearly indicate whether sheet stamps, coil or booklet panes are desired. Include a money order for the exact amount and mail to "Flag Stamps, Postmaster, Portland, ME 04101." Requests must be postmarked no later than June 8.

Almanac Schedule

WASHINGTON — Almanac, WITN-TV's public affairs program (channel 7), hosted by Dick Jones and Jim Mallory, will begin the week Monday at 6 a.m. with a visit from Pete Armstrong, coordinator of the Tar River Raft Race. Armstrong will detail the rules and regulations of the May 30 race, sponsored by the Rocky Mount Arts Council.

Tuesday morning, Dabney Coddington Jr., a representative of Tryon Palace, will discuss the upcoming New Bern Spring Arts and Tryon Palace Colonial Living Day Festivals.

Harvey and Gayla Estes, a husband and wife clergy team from Washington, will be on hand Wednesday to discuss the advantages and disadvantages of their work.

Thursday morning, Erving Jones, a member of the Snow Hill Lions Club, will discuss the upcoming clogging contest sponsored by his organization.

The entire show Friday will be devoted to a discussion with Vernon Bevill, executive director of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

Artist Offers View of British Wildlife

Gordon Beningfield is an artist who records one man's view of the rapidly fading glories of British wildlife and the plants, flowers, meadows and woodlands that make up the unique scenery of the British Isles.

A fervent conservationist, Beningfield believes that unless the habitat of wildlife is protected, animals, birds and insects will be in danger. Butterflies — the most beautiful of insects — are decreasing as a species not only in Britan but throughout the world.

Butterflies are the subject chosen by the Post Office as one of its special stamp issues of 1981. Forty-four year old Beningfield designed the stamps, featuring the Small Tortoiseshell; the Large Blue; the Peacock and the Chequered Skipper.

"The whole problem is that our countryside is being destroyed", says Beningfield.

Varied Topics Are Featured

Topics related to Mental Health Month and Senior Citizens Month will be featured on "Hospitality House", Channel 7, today from 12 to 1 p.m. with hostess Kay Currie.

Brenda Gray of Greenville, director of Pitt County Mental Health Association, will discuss mental health. Also featured on mental health will be two creative events including New Bern's Spring Arts '81 with guest Stevie Zaytoun. Also, the Carteret County Arts and Crafts Coalition scheduled for May 23 and 24 will be previewed with guests Lisa Hale and Bill Ward of Morehead City.

Concert Set At Immanuel

The Hendricks Chapel Choir of Syracuse University will perform in concert at Immanuel Baptist Church at 8 p.m. Friday, May 22.

In recent years, the choir has toured throughout Europe, New England and the Western United States. On this, their first tour of the Southern United States, the choir will prform at Disneyworld, the Washington Cathedral and the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception.

Works on the program at Immanuel will range from the 1500s to the 20th century, incuding compositions by Britten, Brahms and Gershwin.

There is no admission charged, and the public is invited to attend. Immanuel Church is located at 1101 South Elm Street in Greenville.

Hartley Art On Display At Museum

What could Mickey Mouse, Albert Einstein and Humphrey Bogart have in common? Paul Hartley, art faculty member of East Carolina University and Charlotte native, whose works are on display in a new Collectors Gallery exhibit at the N.C. Museum of Art in Raleigh, uses these classical images of contemporary life to tantalize viewers with nostalgic mysteries.

"Recent Works by Paul Hartley," which runs through May 31 in the Collectors Gallery on the first floor of the Museum of Art includes 20 works, all for sale or rent.

For the past eight years Hartley has explored the artistic possibilities of the "time warp." According to a museum spokesperson Hartley places a person, used as a subject for his work, in a period where he does not belong. "The person is not out of place, it's whimsical," says Hartley.

The 38-year-old artist is also known for his shadow-boxes, wooden machines and a series of expressionist circus paintings. Several shadow boxes and mixed media works on paper are included in the exhibit.

The N.C. Museum of Art, at 107 E. Morgan St. in Raleigh, is open Tuesday-Saturday, 10 a.m.-5 p.m.; Sunday, 2-6 p.m. For information on weekends, phone 733-3248.

New Bern Plans Festival

NEW BERN — Several sites of downtown historic New Bern are being used for the first Spring Arts and Colonial Living Day. The celebration, the first for New Bern, will be held on Saturday, May 30, beginning at 9 a.m. and continuing until 5 p.m.

The Spring Arts and Colonial Living Day is being jointly sponsored by Craven Community Arts Council, Craven Community Recreation and Parks Commission, the New Bern Recreation Department and the Tryon Palace Commission.

Festival sites are in downtown New Bern on Middle Street, at the Bicentennial Park, and on the grounds of Tryon Palace.

Among activities scheduled for the day are displays, demonstrations and sales of arts and crafts by professional, student and amateur artists.

More than 35 colonial craftsmen will display their talents and crafts throughout the palace grounds. These will include shingle making, spinning, quilting, fiber dyeing, basket making and other crafts.

Performing artists will entertain viewers in Bicentennial Park. Among those scheduled to provide entertainment are Touch, a mime group from the North Carolina School of the Arts, Winston-Salem; Ground Speed, a bluegrass group of Eastern North Carolina; Nichols to Diamonds, a jazz group; Waccamah-Siouxon, an Indian dance group; and a number of local groups from New Bern and Craven County.

New Bern's first historical outdoor drama, "Kaleidoscope of Time," a 45-minute production, will be shown at 7 p.m. on the south lawn of Tryon Palace. At 8:15 p.m., a comedy by Woody Allen, "Don't Drink the Water," with an all teenage cast, will be presented at New Bern's Saax Bradbury Playhouse.

Harp Concert Scheduled

Pol Sofras, visiting artist from Rowan Technical College, will present a Harp concert Tuesday, May 26, at 11:30 a.m. in the lobby of the Graham Elliott Building on the Beaufort County Community College campus.

The concert will feature music of Handel, Bach, Debussy and Brahms. The concert is free and open to the public.

Seminars Are Offered

During July and August, the North Carolina Museum of Art will sponsor six seminars for classroom teachers of kindergarden through sixth grade who wish to use art as a teaching tool. All areas of art will be explored — visual arts, dance, creative writing and drama.

Of the five seminars scheduled two will be held at the Fayetteville Museum of Art and the Raleigh N.C. Museum of Art.

Teachers completing the five-day seminar will qualify for three units of renewal credit through North Carolina State University.

A maximum of 40 participants per museum may enroll on a first-come basis. Teachers should check with local museums to confirm the enrollment number. No prior art education or experience is required. Applications are due on or before June 10.

Rescheduled

GOLDSBORO — The performance of the North Carolina Symphony Chamber Orchestra in Goldsboro, originally planned for May 11, has been rescheduled for Thursday, Oct. 8, at 8 p.m. in the Goldsboro High School East Auditorium.

Tickets for the October concert may be purchased by contacting Ann Hunter at 778-0828. Tickets for the May 11 concert will be honored at the October concert.

Faulkner Wins Top Kerr Lake Awards

HENDERSON — Walter Faulkner of Greenville was a multiple-award winner in the Annual Kerr Lake Photography Contest held earlier in May. He won six awards.

His first place winner in the portrait division was also given the Best-In-Show trophy. Other wins by Faulkner include a third place ribbon in the portrait categroy, second and third places in the landscape category, and third place in the unclassified category.

The show, sponsored by the Kerr Lake Photography Club, limited each participant to five pieces.

After the competition, the works chosen for the show were exhibited at the Glass House Recreation Center at Satterwhite Point and then were shown at the Henderson Shopping Mall.

The winning exhibits will further be used as the Kerr Lake Club's traveling exhibit for the next 12 months. The collection is available to banks, libraries, shopping centers and public buildings upon request to officers of the club.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By MERIDITH FOLTZ

If, in your reading, you have met such puzzling place names as Hyperborea, the Castle of Udolpho and Rootabaga Country, an ordinary dictionary or gazatteer may not have given you a sufficient explanation. Available now in Sheppard Library's reference collection is "The Dictionary of Imaginary Places" by Alberto Manguel and Gianni Guadalupi.

The authors, after examining fiction for suitable entries, chose to include only places imagined to be on earth and to exclude heavens, hells, futuristic locales and real places disguised by imaginary names. Here, in alphabetical order, are places mentioned in such familiar and unfamiliar classic and modern literary works as Homer's "Odyssey," the Welsh "Maginogion," J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings," and Richard Adams' "Shardik."

Certainly "The Dictionary of Imaginary Places" will serve to identify quickly a particular strange place, but its wealth of peculiar names will also tantalize you into reading further in stories of fantasy.

Another guide to intriguing places is Paul Doherty's "Atlas of the Planets." Following a general discussion of our solar system, each of the planets except earth is described.

The emphasis throughout the book is on learning about the planets through careful scientific observation. Indeed the author has based his large, vividly colored illustrations on his own frequent observations of our solar system neighbors. Whether you are a beginning or experienced astronomer, the "Atlas of the Planets" will instruct you in how to look at planets and how to understand what you see.

The "Mammoth Book of Fascinating Information," by Richard Manchester, is an amusing aid to understanding many of the earthbound things you see and use in everyday life. Subtitled "an uncommon history of the commonplace," this book traces the development of almost one hundred foods, games, machines, plants, animals, pieces of furniture and clothing, vehicles, instruments of writing and reading, and processes. Explained here are the history of the bathtub, toilet, and toothpaste; backgammon, pinball machines, and soccer; alphabets, paper, and copy machines. You can learn from this book the preferred methods for acquiring and preparing for table lobsters, truffles, caviar and eggplants.

The "Mammoth Book of Fascinating Information" offers answers to questions you may have never thought to ask.

ECU Artist's Work Shown in Alabama

An exhibition of the drawings of eight regional artists in the Southeast opened May 10 at the Huntsville, Ala., Museum of Art. Intended as a complement to the museum's 1980 exhibition, the "Southeastern Print Invitational," the exhibition of 37 works presents an overview of the diverse approaches to the theme, that is, drawing and drawing quality, and will be on view through June 21.

Among artists represented is Michael Ehlbeck, a faculty member of the School of Art, East Carolina University.

School Of Arts Plans Events

The calendar of events scheduled at the North Carolina School of the Arts for the coming week is as follows:

Underground Sects Thrive Despite Soviet Laws

By DAVID MINTHORN
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Underground Christian sects are thriving in the Soviet Union, holding illegal prayer meetings and seeking new converts despite strict laws limiting religious activities.

Pentecostalists, Baptists and Seventh-day Adventists are the largest underground congregations, with combined memberships estimated at up to half a million by Western sources with church contacts.

Smaller Christian groups not affiliated with organized denominations have also sprung up around the Soviet Union, the sources claim, but these congregations are so secretive that membership figures are unknown.

One technique for promoting evangelical Christianity in the Soviet Union is by distributing handwritten chain letters urging Soviet people to declare themselves for God. Soviet newspapers have repeatedly condemned this method.

"A family that made nine copies of this letter in a week found great happiness after 36 days," said one such letter placed in a Moscow mail box. "If you don't follow suit, your family may suffer a great misfortune."

Congregations that refuse to be registered are branded outlaws by Soviet authorities, and must worship in secret in private homes much like early Christians, who met furtively in the Catacombs of Rome.

Dispersals of prayer meetings by police, arrests and finings of members, confiscation of Bibles and prayer books, losses of jobs and urban residence permits and ostracizing from Soviet society are penalties applied to members of illegal congregations, some of the Christians said in interviews with The Associated Press.

"Authorities even circulate rumors that we sacrifice our children at religious services," complained a Pentecostalist, who asked not to be named for fear of police retribution.

Creeds differ among these underground fundamentalist sects, but the congregations share the conviction that the Soviet registration law is a blatant interference in their right to worship as they choose.

Soviet authorities don't dispute the existence of underground congregations, but they claim the numbers are greatly exaggerated by "anti-Soviet" organizations in the West. They insist that registration aids, rather than hinders the believers, by giving congregations official status with local authorities.

"Registration is designed to protect the congregations from the government," said Igor I. Sokolov, spokesman of the Soviet Council for Religious Affairs, the state agency that monitors religious cults.

He estimated the number of unregistered Baptists, Pentecostalists and other Protestants at about 25,000, and said legally registered Christian congregations boast half a million members.

"Protestant sects in the Soviet Union are a minor problem, but they want to create big problems through anti-Soviet groups in the West," said Leonid V. Shcherbakov, another spokesman for the agency.

He charged that Western groups that monitor alleged persecution of Christians in the Soviet bloc, such as the Stockholm-based Slavic Mission, were financed by Western intelligence agencies.

"Westerners often forget that these sects are alien to Russia's eastern religious tradition," Shcherbakov said.

The legally registered Russian Orthodox Church, the traditional religion, has a membership estimated by the Soviet Council of Religious Affairs at 30 million. Some Western sources put it at 40 million or more.

The Roman Catholic Church also is registered.

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — GIANT KNAVE KNEW HOW TO THROW KNIVES STRAIGHT.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: Y equals A

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Robots Have Arrived ... And More Are Coming

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — They paint cars, command milling machines, weld automobile parts, hoist turbine blades, and, in an experiment in Australia, they are shearing sheep.

Furthermore, they never call in sick, go on strike, come to work with a hangover or pick a fight with the boss. And they'll work a double shift without a squawk, never file an insurance claim or take a vacation.

They are robots, and they're no longer coming.

They're here.

An estimated 3,2000 to 4,000 in the American marketplace and more than double that — possibly triple — in productivity-conscious Japan.

And industry leaders say that's just the beginning. The industry has been climbing a dizzying 35 percent a year but that pace is expected to be eclipsed as the world moves into what is being called the robot revolution.

The prospects are electrifying — a three-day work week, a whole new definition of the work ethic, a robotized home. And yes, it will do windows.

One robot expert says that in 15 years there will be no more coal miners, only robots. Robots will be in other hostile environments as well, robots underseas repairing cables, robots in space repairing satellites. There'll be robots in the factory ordering new parts.

Organized labor is keeping a wary eye on robots. They're not great themselves, says the AFL-CIO's Dennis Chamot, "but the robots themselves are not the only problem. We're in the midst of a revolution of how work is defined. The entire workplace, blue collar and white, is being transfomed by microelectronics, automation, the robots."

Harley Shaiken, a former skilled machinist in Detroit and now a research felow at MIT, says the technology may have outpaced the ability to deal with its social implications.

While conceding that robotics will create jobs, Shaiken is skeptical of the auto industry's contention that a worker displaced by a robot is free to pursue more creative work.

"He's free to stand in an unemployment line," says Shaiken. "If you defer the social costs you won't avoid it, you'll just make it more difficult later."

But anyone who took "Star Wars" and R2D2 too seriously need not fear a robot takeover. The mortals that program them and try to improve them say they are indeed dumb. As they are now.

At Carnegie-Mellon University's Robotics Institute in Pittsburgh, the largest of the academic research centers, students and faculty are working hard to implant "artificial intelligence." In one experiment in these basement laboratories, an arm-like robot is hooked up to a television camera and then to a smaller precision robot that looks like a sewing machine and normally is used in assembling small parts of a watch.

Researchers are trying to program the computer so the arm-like robot can "see" what it's picking up and give it to the smaller robot for insertion into the precise electronic circuit board. In another room, one of the larger robots, Cincinnati Milacron's T3, is hooked into a milling machine which its computer operates. Researchers are trying to program this big gold and blue robot to be able to sense what its "hands" pick up. And another group of students is working with a robot that will perform at the sound of the human voice far more complicated tasks than keyboard input.

The robots with "artificial intelligence" will be able to see and feel and then evaluate it to make decisions from a number of programmed options.

A robot can be programmed within minutes to do another job, for instance, but remember the old job when it's time to do that again. The robot that looks like the little oil pump is Unimation's PUMA and it can be used to pack chocolates and shear sheep.

Now it's projecting sales of up to $75 million by 1982. Close behind Unimation is Cincinnati Milacron.

N.C. Facilities Used In Whistling Swan Study

Text And Photographs By Joe Albea

A team of ecologists at John Hopkins University is conducting a long-term study of the Whistling Swan, in collaboration with biologists from federal, state and provincial agencies in the United States and Canada, and with the help of private individuals and foundations.

Through research they are endeavoring to learn how to minimize swan-aircraft hazards; what impact human environmental change has on swan behavior; what effect the oil industry will have on their breeding grounds, and why swans are now often seen feeding in fields instead of shallow water.

Using North Carolina Facilities

Using the banding facilities at Mattamuskeet and Pungo National Refuges in North Carolina has given the researchers a chance to band the swans while the birds are concentrated on their wintering grounds.

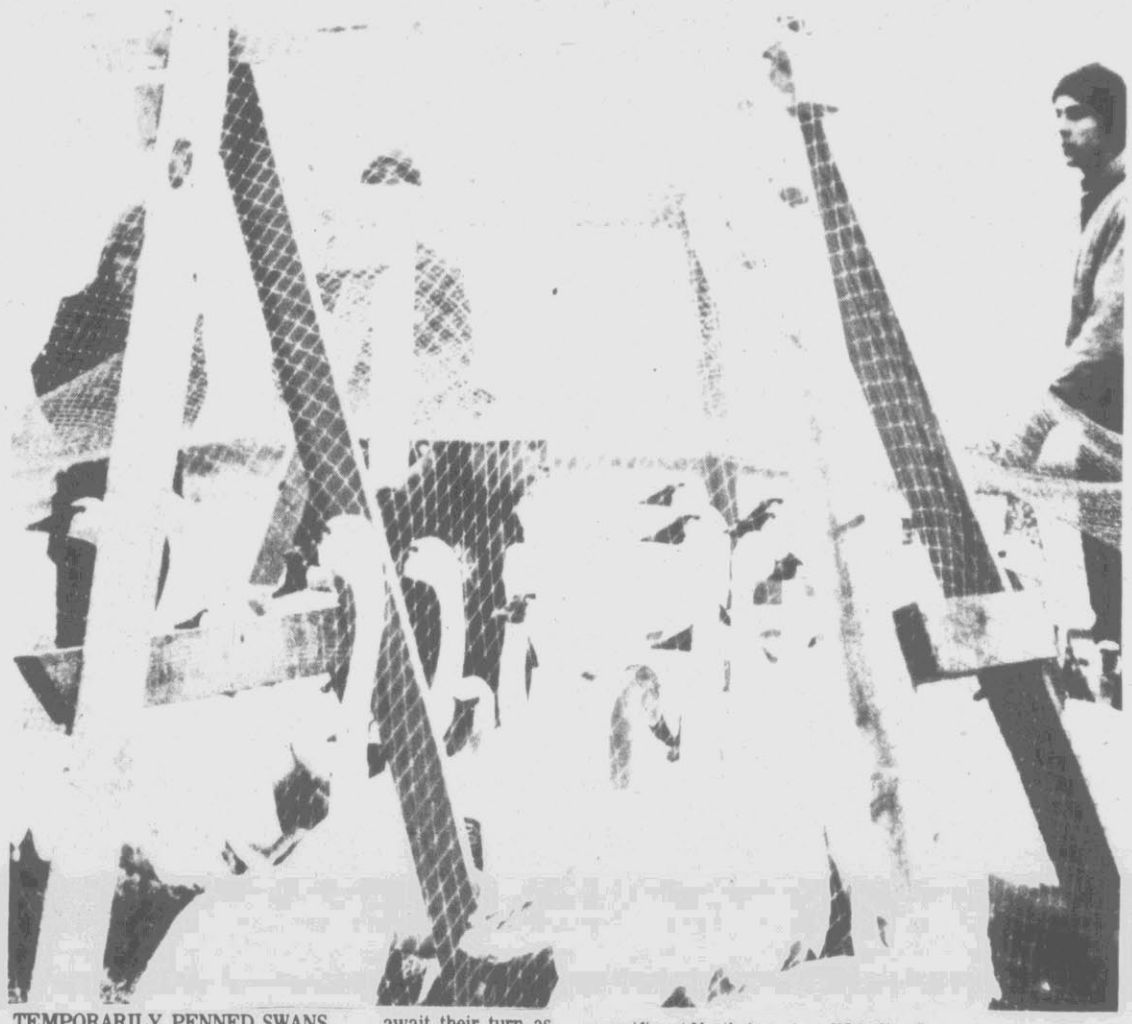
Swans are being marked with colored plastic neck and tarsus (leg) bands which are inscribed with a code consisting of letters and numbers. The color of the band tells where the bird was banded. The identifying letters and numbers can be read from a distance without disturbing the bird.

Recognize Without Recapture

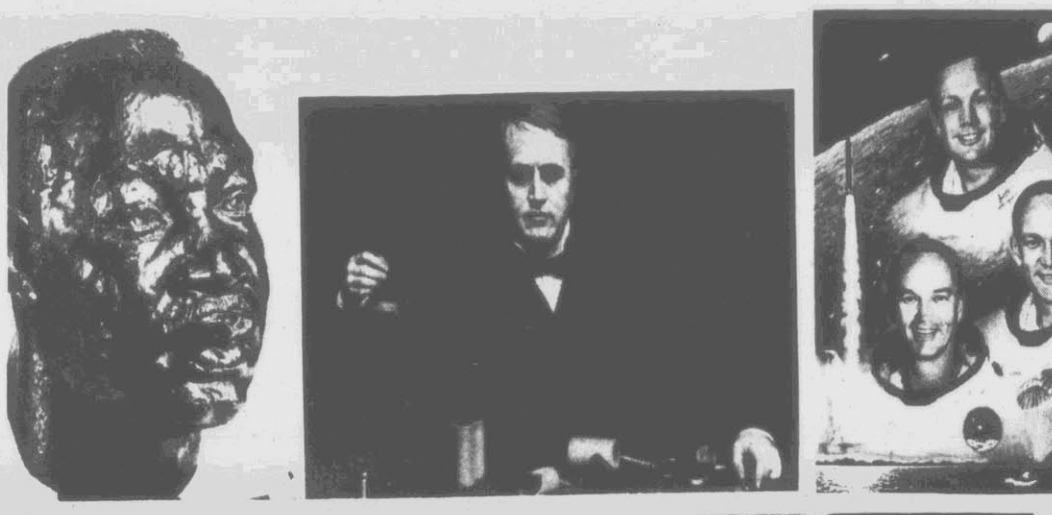
This marking system offers the unique ability to recognize individual swans from year to year without recapture.

Sightings of these marked swans are yielding fascinating information on population structure, migratory pathways, family and group relationships, distribution and longevity.

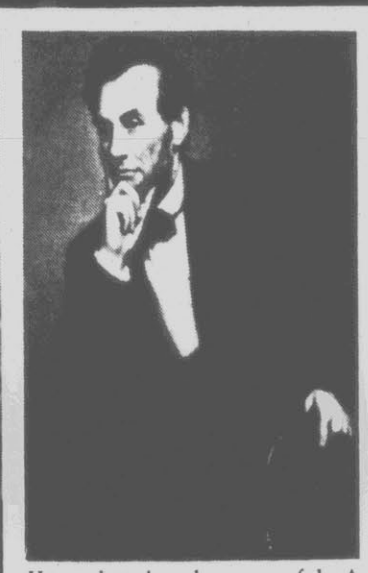
The overall concern of the researchers is to help sustain the continued well-being of the magnificant North American Whistling Swan and to learn how we can better live in harmony with them.



TEMPORARILY PENNED SWANS . . . await their turn as trained personnel carry out a banding process of a group of the magnificant North American Whistling Swan.



"The Jolly Flatboatmen" by George Caleb Bingham, from the collection of Sen. Claiborne Pell, on loan to the National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.



Heroes have long been part of the American cultural landscape, though the kinds of heroes we admire change with and reflect the times. Among them have been (clockwise): Martin Luther King, Thomas A. Edison, the Apollo 11 crew, Babe Ruth, Douglas MacArthur, Abraham Lincoln and Buffalo Bill. These portraits are in the collection of the Smithsonian's National Portrait Gallery in Washington, D.C.

The American Hero

By DAVID M. MAXFIELD
Smithsonian News Service

"There are no more American heroes." — Herbert Gold, author.

"We do have heroes; we have had them throughout history." — Jack Santino, folklorist.

For some years now, many Americans have said they felt something missing in their lives: heroes, those charismatic, larger-than-life public personalities once so deeply entwined in the nation's identity.

"We have no heroic leaders, no religious or philosophic or artistic heroes, no inspiring military heroes," novelist/critic Herbert Gold wrote when the American hostages returned home in January. In their place, he and others see nothing but a fast-changing clutter of celebreties, "the fat-food throwaway version of a hero," extending even to the freed Americans.

Viewing these men and women as heroes is wishful thinking, Dr. Robert Jay Lifton, professor of psychiatry at Yale University, believes. "Americans are really hungry for heroes," he says, "and there's a great temptation to project onto the hostages that role."

But wait; take a second look, suggests Jack Santino, the Smithsonian Institution's Folklife Program expert on American heroes and folklore. "The hostages truly were heroic," he says. "They behaved well under a certain set of circumstances; they behaved with grace, courage and dignity." Moreover, he believes they are the latest in the long line of American heroes, a varied and complex cast that has mirrored the nation's history, changing images with its cultural development.

American history divides into four major periods, each with its own particular life style and set of hero figures, folklore historian Richard M. Dorson writes in "America in Legend." The first, the time if the religious man, dominated the nation's colonial period. Heroes then were godly men, Puritan leaders like William Bradford, John Winthrop and Cotton Mather, who dedicated their lives to serving the Lord and safeguarding their new religious societies.

Next came the era of the democratic man, lasting well into the 19th century. The heroes were paternalistic, aristocratic statesmen yet advocates of democratic ideals — George Washington, father of the nation; Thomas Jefferson, architect of the Declaration of Independance.

Following their lead came more common men: Andrew Jackson, "The Hero" to Americans moving westward, and then log-cabin-born Abe Lincoln, savior of the Republic and to Dorson "the most legendary of our presidents." Davy Crockett, perhaps the quintessential American folk hero, appeared, too, "a rough full-blooded hero who somehow seemed to spring from the people," Santino says, "One who represented their drives, ambitions, labor and humor."

The third era, that of economic man, beginning in the mid-nineteenth century, yeilded a glittering roster of self-made Americans, the captains of steel, rails, banking and other industry. "But they did not capture the people's imagination," Santino says. Celebrated instead were U.S. workers, who had been exploited and foreclosed by business interests, and famous outlaw figures such as Jesse James. The labor movement, struggle for individual rights and the nation's world wars later added to the U.S. stock of heroes.

Along about the 1960's, a fourth period emerged, the time of the human man, represented perhaps, by the late John Lennon, who message lyrics seemed to be that twentieth century man was too agressive and needed to change his ways. But other heroes concurrently crossed the cultural landscape: political and sports figures, media stars, those who have achieved the unusual or extraordinary — the astronauts, Elvis Presley, Martin Luther King, John F. Kennedy and Muhammad Ali.

"Because we live in a large, complex society, our heroes now tend to be very stratified," Santino says, explaining why it may seem as though Americans may have lost their idols. "Heroes to one group today may not even be known in another circle."

Some well-known personalities who seem bound for hero ranking don't quite make the grade, however. Witness the recent national flirtation with Jimmy Carter. "Carter was all set," Santino recalls. "He was portrayed as a man of the earth, the humble peanut farmer who called upon other working Americans to help him change the ways of Washington.

"Everyone was waiting for him to become a folk hero, but he did't live up to the opportunities that were there," he adds.

So who qualifies for hero ranking? Santino lists six criteria that he feels go into making the American hero:

— Correspondence to tradition — Heroes usually personify the American dream, Santino says.

— A personal iconography — The hero will almost always have some personal feature that is attractive and unique and that later becomes symbolic.

— A sense of heroism - "Heroes have a great sense of viewing themselves as heroic," according to Santino.

— A credulous biographer — In the making of the hero, there is a real need for someone to get the information out to the public. Both Crockett and Lincoln were themselves skillful at telling tales, inserting themselves into the story line. "Crockett was brilliant at making himself a hero," says Santino. "Now the media often builds heroes."

— Personal concern - Beatle fans, for example, felt the British rock group was writing lyrics directly for them.

— Mastery of the uncontrollable — The hero seems to have control over his environment and ultimately even over death, Santino says. "the hostages reflected this, and people still think of Elvis as being alive, that he somehow has transcended mortality."

Two stories of traditional charm mark the facade of the Armagne, an engaging Tudor-inspired design. With its dominant half timers, stucco, small-paned windows, and arched doorway, the exterior is a visual delight.

Inside, the intent is purely contemporary, with a family-oriented traffic pattern, a kitchen/dining area and family room, and a first floor parents' retreat.

A closeted foyer allows entry to the stately dining room with bay window or to the beamed family room at rear. The family room spans more than 21 feet, merits a wood-burning fireplace, and opens to the rear yard or patio. It also adjoins the substantial kitchen/breakfast nook. More formal dining takes place in the elegant dining room, thoughtfully closed off from the kitchen by double doors.

A final tribute to the practicality of the floor plan is its double garage, conveniently close to the kitchen, utility room, and powder room, and provided with an integral storage area.

Bedrooms begin on the first floor with the spacious parents' room and private bath. Indulged with corner tub, shower stall, and double vanity, the master bath also includes a dressing area with two walk-in closets. Upstairs, plans call for three bedrooms, an extra large bath, and two sizable hall closets, one with access to storage space under the eaves.

Mirror Offers Innovative Means Of Aiding Total Design Package

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Mirrors have long been thought of as looking glasses in which to discover something about physical appearance to one's advantage or detriment.

But there is a move afoot to separate the mirror from the image, to use mirrors as architectural and decorative devices.

"In the past decade with soaring costs, shrinking space and dwindling energy, designers have sought materials that maximize the effects of lighting and provide the appearance of spaciousness," said Ann Cain of PPG Industries, suppliers of glass to the mirror industry, at a recent showing of new bronze mirror treatments in New York.

"And," continued Ms. Cain, "the innovative way to use a mirror is less as a looking glass and more as a material to blend into the total design plan."

—Mirrors used as a reflective background wall to impart a floating character to furniture such as a breakfront or a cabinet.

—Mirror panels to provide ribbons of brightness to break up space and to end the monotony of plain or patterned walls.

—Mirrors used as a reflective base on which lattice and other decorative moldings are overlaid.

—Mirrors installed boldly as multiple wall surfaces and even ceilings in a few dramatic instances.

The increased use of mirrors as decorative accessories is documented by the fact that mirror sales have almost doubled in the past decade. Today, nearly 300 million square feet of mirror a year are sold, according to PPG.

Some of this consumption is in the form of custom wall treatments and some goes into framed mirrors sold in accessory departments and gift shops.

According to Ralph Buchan, president of Carolina Mirror Co., the number and variety of framed mirrors is also on the increase. For example, he said, bronze-tone mirrors are in demand in framed as well as custom installations. Even though the product is not new (architects have been using it for years in office buildings), the domestic use of bronze-tone mirrors is new.

Other products in demand include slender mirror strips that are used either singly or together to form mirrored walls, antiqued mirrors with gold veining, and small mirrors in brass frames.

Designer Shirley Regendahl, who designed a bronze-mirrored living room-dining area, said she had been "overwhelmed" when she got her assignment.

"I thought it might come out terribly. But because we used the bronze-tone mirrors there was a softness, an elegance I hadn't expected.

"I'd say though that if you decide on a large expanse of mirror in your room, make sure to add softness in the form of color and nattern."

If mirror installations become as popular as their promoters anticipate, consumers will be sure to start doing it themselves. But this could pose a problem, according to Sheldon Kantor, a New York mirror installer who specializes in custom installations.

"If it is custom work, such as installing a mirrored wall, expertise is very important. Do-it-yourself installations are very risky." In fact, even a glazier who is used to installing windows may botch the job, he said.

Here's the Answer

Q. — We are considering buying new shingles for our roof, since the old ones are nearly 30 years old and are showing signs of wear. The five types we are thinking about are asphalt, asbestos-cement, wood, slate and aluminum. Can you tell us something about the relative costs and which lasts longest?

A. — The Small Homes Council-Building Research Council of the University of Illinois recently gave this appraisal, which fits your case: "Asphalt shingles are low cost with short or medium life; asbestos-cement and wood shingles, medium cost with medium life; slate or aluminum shingles, expensive but with long life and minimum maintenance costs." To that analysis can be added the reminder that there are different price ranges and durability factors within each type of material. For instance, asphalt shingles have a life expectancy between 15 and 25 years depending on the kind you buy. Generally, the heavier the shingle, the longer its probable life. An exception is asphalt shingles with a fiber-glass base mat, which are comparatively lighter than those with an organic base mat of equivalent life expectancy.

Q. — I have to replace a couple of window panes soon. I know about putting in the pane and the necessity for using putty, but I don't know how many glazier's points must be put in.

A. — Generally, two glazier's points are used on each side for an ordinary window, but there is nothing to prevent you from using as many as you want. Don't, however, use less than two for each side.

Q. Is there any problem with using bath water or dish water to water my garden? (W.C., Spring Lake)

A. Not if you will be careful. I would suggest dividing the water into two basic categories. The first would be relatively clean, clear water, such as bath water, dish water, or the water from the final rinse cycle of the washing machine. This water can be used on garden vegetables without any problems. The second category would be relatively "dirty" water. It would contain heavy concentrations of bleach, fabric softeners or detergents, which may be high in sodium and could eventually change the structure and nutrient balance of the soil. This water could be used around trees and shrubs but not in the vegetable garden. If you use recycled water extensively, have the soil tested to determine if the pH needs to be adjusted. Here's another tip for making your water supply go further. Route gutters and downspouts into barrels and use this water for your ornamentals and vegetables. Rain barrels are a common fixture out west. (Kim Powell, extension landscape horticulturist)

Q. I have had a problem with getting a good stand of lima beans and melons this year. Do you think I purchased bad seed? (M.G., Cary)

A. No, your problem was more likely cold soil at planting time. Crops such as lima beans, snap beans and melons need a soil temperature of 60 to 70 degrees for best germination.

ON THE HOUSE

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

It is doubtful whether any single object catapulted so many millions of Americans into the do-it-yourself arena as did the paint roller.

People who never would attempt to paint either the insides or the outsides of their houses with brushes found that they could handle rollers wih much less skill and in considerably less time.

When it became apparent that this new painting tool was being used so much, professional painters hunched up their backs and tried, in one way or another, to restrict its use. But little by little, the pros found the paint roller saved so much time that they, too, embraced it wholeheartedly.

Even the simplest of tools, however, must be used properly to get the best results from it. And even though you may learn how to manipulate a roller to obtain the maximum from it, you still must choose the proper roller for the job at hand.

How to select the right roller depends on the kind of job that is to be done. The rule of thumb is that the smoother the surface to be painted, the shorter the nap of the roller cover. Or, to put it another way, the rougher the surface, the longer the nap.

Thus, shorter-napped rollers are proper for such surfaces as smooth plaster, dry walls, metal, woodwork and some kinds of acoustical material. Medium-napped rollers are for slightly rough surfaces, such as light stucco and fairly smooth concrete. For rough masonry — brick, block, heavy plaster, heavy stucco, etc. — use long-napped covers.

In addition, there are many kinds of covers for special painting purposes, as for painting metal fences, as well as various roller shapes for different requirements.

Most rollers come as parts of sets. A roller set will have, in addition to the roller, a metal or plastic tray with a slope in it and an irregular surface. That irregular surface is to prevent one of the most common mistakes — saturating the roller with paint. Each time the roller is dipped into the tray, it should be rolled out a bit on the slope so it won't be overloaded.

When working on walls, the first stroke should be upward. Continue taking upward strokes, then downward, then across. Don't press down on the roller and don't spin the roller at the end of a stroke. As the cover begins to get dry, don't roll more vigorously to get more paint out of the tool. Redip the roller into the tray, roll over the corrugated portion, then resume painting, moving from a dry area into a wet one.

On a ceiling, the first stroke should be away from you. Consider the use of a long-handled extension so that you can do most of the painting from a solid position on the floor. For places where the walls and ceilings meet, use an edging roller or, much better, a paint brush.

Drought Affects Everyone

By ROBERT INDERMAN
United Press International

Robert Lee could have taught city dwellers a lot about the menace of an empty sky.

It was the Dust Bowl drought of 1934 that drove him, his wife Martha and their two daughters — one of them my mother — from their Hayworth, Okla., peanut and potato farm to the relative safety of a steady income at a Texas munitions plant just south of the Red River.

It took a mild stroke and an early retirement to return him to his one true love — farming, or rather in those late years, backyard gardening. There, sweating in the heat of yet another Texas dry spell, he talked about the vicious cycle of drought and deluge, of being bound to a profession almost completely dependent on the natural elements.

"A farmer has only God and the future to believe in," he said, stirring up a dust devil with his hoe. "And when God fails him — gives him nothing but cloudless skies and hot winds — there just ain't no future."

On a recent Saturday, the catastrophic balance of forces invisibly shifted. The drought-dry Midwest got its first thoroughly quenching spring rain of the season.

It wasn't all that much — a series of isolated cloud bursts, barely enough to dampen the roots of the emerging wheat crops. But it sent many residents of Kansas City gamboling about the streets in a spontaneous spring celebration. "Drought-breaking" parties erupted on hundreds of screened-in porches about the city.

That's the way city dwellers view a drought — one rain and it's over.

But there was considerably less frolic by the ranchers of Strong City, located in the heart of the Kansas Flint Hills where one knows by instinct that a rainstorm — no matter how heavy — does not necessarily signal the end of a dry spell.

"The boys have got a lot to be concerned about," said Harold Bayer, proprietor and chief cook of Buck's Dine-in & Carry-out, a seven-booth cafe where Chase County ranchers can spend a rainy afternoon eating hamburgers and talking about the weather.

"This little rain will green up the hills, but it's dry, really dry. The South Fork is more a trickle than a stream, and come July and August, it's going to be tough," he said.

"That's all they talk about — what if the drought continues another year? What if it's as hot as last summer? Last summer, that's pretty much on everybody's minds. They just don't think their herds — their ranches for that matter — can survive another summer like the last one."

"And I'm scared that they are right."

$20 billion loss

The Summer of 1980 is perhaps the one aspect of the nation's current drought that urbanites can relate to. By various counts, 1,200 Americans died from the heat during those devastating months — most of them in uncooled, shuttered apartments and homes located in cities.

But in the country, the heat exacted another fearful toll that will not be soon forgotten. Corn and peanut crops failed throughout the Midwest and the South. Pig and poultry farms were virtually wiped out by three-digit temperatures. Forests were decimated by lack of moisture.

All told, the heat cost the nation perhaps $20 billion in agricultural damage.

Carl Anderson, agricultural economist at Texas A&M University, says a continuation of that drought — or just another hot, dry summer like the last — could cause an 18 percent increase in U.S. food prices. Tack on an additional $9 in expense for a family buying a shopping cart full of $50 in groceries.

"We need 1981 to be a good crop year," said Texas Agricultural Commissioner Reagan Brown. "We have no real backlog of grain in storage. If we have another drought, it would be terrible, an absolute disaster for this country."

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC FLUORIDE FOUND IN DRINKING WATER

Smith's Trailer Park reports that recent tests of the drinking water showed a higher level of Fluoride than is allowed by the State and Federal drinking water regulations.

The concentration of Fluoride in the water is well below the level which would cause any serious health effects. Continued use of the water supply might cause mottling of teeth in children. Older people should have no ill effects from this problem.

Smith's Trailer Park is working with the Division of Health Services to determine the best solution to this problem. Alternatives being considered are possible new sources of water and installation of treatment equipment which would reduce the Fluoride level.

We will continue to notify you of the status of this problem quarterly until it is corrected.

The six important questions to ask before listing your house.

When you're ready to sell, you want to make sure you list with someone who has all the tools to help you best sell your house. The most important thing is this: Don't just list with anybody.

To compare, ask these six questions:

1. Do you have a referral network so you can send me potential buyers from all across the country?
2. Do you have a display of photos in your office so people can preview my house?
3. Are all your salespeople professionally trained?
4. Do you advertise extensively in newspapers and on the radio?
5. Will you put into writing exactly what you will do for me or else I can cancel the listing?
6. Do you spend over $20,000,000 to advertise on television so effectively that more than 9 out of 10 potential buyers recognize your sign in front of my house?

There is only one real estate sales organization that can answer yes to all these questions. CENTURY 21.
At CENTURY 21, We'll Give Our Word To You.™

NOW YOU CAN CHOOSE YOUR HOURS

Sounds almost too good to be true, but in Pitt Memorial Hospital's supplemental staff pool, you cannot only choose your working hours but also name your work days and service. You'll spend all your nursing time in direct patient care. Our extensive clinical orientation lets you get back into nursing at your own pace, if you've been out of the field for a while, and effective July 1, we'll pay you $7.25 an hour or more to start, depending on your experience. Licensed RNs only, please.

For more information on how we can fit into your life, please call Helen Abbott, Director of Nursing Recruitment at 757-4470.

Clark Hosts Daytime Emmy Awards

There's a lot of feverish activity taking place in the elegant Empire State Ballroom of the Grand Hyatt, one of New York City's newest hotels, where the telecast of the Eighth Annual Daytime Emmy Awards will originate Thursday, May 21 (3-4:30 p.m. on ABC-TV).

The National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences presents the Daytime Emmys for outstanding achievement in daytime and children's programming, and more than a thousand guest, many of them famous figures in the entertainment world, will be on hand for this year's gala.

Dick Clark, one of the most dynamic personalities on television, will host the telecast and also introduce performers who will be presenting the awards. Vidoetaped segments showing both the programs and the performances of the nominated stars will form an integral part of the telecast.

Clark, who received his own Emmy in 1979 as host of "The $20,000 Pyramid," currently hosts "American Bandstand" and "The $50,000 Pyramid."

A key factor contributing to Clark's success is his ability to communicate with young people. Over the years he has brought to the air such youth-oriented programs as "Where the Action Is," "Swingin' Country," "Happening," "Get It Together" and has turned out such feature films as "Psycho-Out," "The Savage Seven" and "Killers Three," as well as several telefilms — "Elvis!," "Birth of the Beatles" and "The Man in the Santa Claus Suit." As an actor Dick has starred in "The Young Doctors," "Because They're Young" and "Killers Three."

Clark is currently planning for the 30th anniversary next year of "American Bandstand," which he has hosted since 1952. The show, easily the most popular teenage music and dance series in America, is telecast each Saturday afternoon.

Born and reared in Mt. Vernon, N.Y., Dick was president of his senior class at A.B. Davis High School and in 1947 he entered Syracuse University. There he worked on the student radio station as a disc jockey, newscaster and actor. After graduation, he was hired as staff announcer by radio station WOLF, in Syracuse and then he went on to WFIL in Philadelphia. When he became host of "American Bandstand" on WFIL-TV in 1952, his career took off. The program joined the ABC network in 1957.

DYNAMIC Dick Clark will serve as host of the Daytime Emmy Awards airing live from New York City Thursday, May 21 (3-4:30 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Walters' Guest

First Lady Nancy Reagan, Katharine Hepburn and Lauren Bacall will be the featured guests on the next "Barbara Walters Special," to be telecast on ABC later this spring.

Mrs. Reagan will be interviewed in the White House, and Hepburn was interviewed in Los Angeles on the set of "The West Side Waltz," a play in which she is touring. Walters talked with Bacall at the Palace Theatre in New York, where the actress is starring in new musical, "The Woman of the Year."

The title of Bacall's show, in fact, is the theme of Walters' special. Hepburn starred in the motion picture of that name — her first starring role with Spencer Tracy — a film on which the Broadway musical is based. Mrs. Reagan, of course, as the First Lady, is the woman of the year.

Drama Based On Reality

States Embassy in Tehran had been held hostage by Iranian revolutionaries for approximately three months on the afternoon of Jan. 28, 1980, when, in another part of the Iranian capital, Canadian Ambassador Ken Taylor locked the door of the Canadian Embassy behind him and hung on it a hand-painted sign: "Closed for Canadian National Holiday."

Taylor was actually closing his Embassy indefinitely, having quietly shredded its more sensitive documents and destroyed its secret coding and communications equipment. He had first sent one final message home to Canada: "Duties completed. Mission discharged. This is Festung (Fortress) Iran signing off."

The mission, secret as it had been, was to be headline news around the world in a matter of hours. It was also to become the subject of "Escape From Iran: The Canadian Caper," to be broadcast Sunday, May 17 (8-10 p.m.), on CBS-TV.

Gordon Pinsent stars as Taylor. Others with key roles are Chris Wiggins, Tisa Chang, Diana Barrington and James Douglas.

Taylor and a handful of his staff had planned and executed the escape from Iran of six United States Embassy staff members who had come to the Canadians for aid after having slipped away when the Iranian militants were taking their fellow diplomats hostage on Nov. 4, 1979.

After walking away from his deserted Embassy, Taylor headed for the Tehran airport where the six Americans, who were then out of Iranian airspace, had taken off earlier in the day en route to Washington, D.C., via Western Europe, with forged Canadian passports. He was leaving behind a home, many belongings, the danger he had lived with for 12 weeks, and mixed memories of a country that had changed around him.

SIX AMERICANS (clockwise from top), Lee Schatz (R.H. Thomson), Joe Stafford (Larry Audbrey), Bob Anders (James Douglas), Cora Lijek (Matsu Anderson), Mark Lijek (Robert Joy) and Kathy Stafford (Julie Khaner) board a plane in "Escape From Iran: The Canadian Caper," a dramatic new motion picture-for-television airing Sunday, May 17 (8-10 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

PATTY DUKE ASTIN stars in "The Violation of Sarah McDavid," a new motion picture-for-television to be presented on "The CBS Tuesday Night Movies," May 19 (9-11 p.m.).

Michelle Will Tell

Q: I would like to know if Brian Kerwin, who's on "Lobo," is related to another actor named Lance Kerwin. W. SETTLEMYRE, HICKORY, N.C.

A: There's no relation. Lance is a native of Newport Beach, Calif., and his career was 'launched' by a fan letter he wrote to Clint Eastwood, which ended with " . . . if you ever need a kid like me, just give me a call." Clint didn't, but director Ted Post did. Brian, the son of Chicago (Ill.) physician, intended to follow in his father's footsteps, but a yen to act won out and he changed career directions after one year in medical school.

Q: What happended to "The Doctors"? It used to come on WXII-TV in Winston Salem. Is it shown on any other station? I.M., MOUNT AIRY, N.C.

A: WXII has dropped the daytime drama and replaced it with "Piedmont." 'Doctors' is still a 'mainstay' in NBC's programming, however, and if you can pick up another affiliate of the network you're in luck!

Q: Is there any way of finding out how many times Lisa Coleman, a character on "As the World Turns," has been married? M.B.P., HICKORY, N.C.

A: I doubt that even Eileen Fulton, who plays the scheming gal, can answer your question! Lisa trapped and cornered poor Bob Hughes into marriage, had several affairs with other men, then finally divorced Bob. Then she married a string of cads and rogues who proceeded to provide her with only a little happiness. About this time a sweetheart of a guy named Grant Coleman came along, whereupon Lisa mellowed, tied the knot again and settled down. Now he's 'split' the scene and Lisa's on the prowl again!

Q: Has "Knots Landing" been taken off permanently, or is "Nurse" just a replacement? J.W., Hickory, N.C.

A: "Nurse," a 'limited' series, will end soon, and 'Knots' will return via reruns. CBS should be announcing its 1981-82 schedule anyday now, which means we'll know the fate of both shows soon.

Q: Why don't we ever see Clint Walker in a series? 'CURIOUS' IN FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Clint's last stab at episodic television was "Kodiak," that aired during the 1974-75 season. Prior to this he'd starred in "Cheyenne," a hit show of the mid-50s. After the demise of "Kodiak," Clint decided to opt for telefilms and theatrical releases.

Q: Who played Bennu in a film titled "The Phoenix"? Has he ever been on a series? PENNY S., RED SPRINGS, N.C.

A: A young actor named Judson Scott was cast as the young man who was brought back to life by scientific means. He's guested on several shows, but has never been a 'regular' on any series.

Morgan Dons New Character

Watching Harry Morgan portray a priest in "Rivkin: Bounty Hunter," one is reminded of another character the actor has played for years — Col. Sherman Potter, on "M*A*S*H."

Father Kolodny, as the new Morgan character is called, goes about his life quietly, taking care of his personal business and befriending those around him. When he so chooses, though, he can deliver devastatingly funny one-liners, while staring at the world with an expressionless countenance — much like Col. Potter.

Morgan's Father Kolodny, a retired parish priest, is a key character on "Rivkin," to be broadcast on The CBS Wednesday Night Movies, May 20 (9-11 p.m.). The drama is based on the real-life exploits of Stanley Rivkin, a New-York-based bounty hunter who has been tracking down bail jumpers for more than 20 years. Ron Leibman stars in the title role.

Anyone who has seen Morgan as Col. Potter on "M*A*S*H" knows that the veteran actor can deliver a funny line with the best of them. In this film, Morgan, as the soft-spoken priest who looks after the wheelchair son of the bounty hunter, adds comic spice to a number of scenes with his whimsical humor and flawless timing.

Asked whether there are any screen comedians who have influenced his performance in 'Rivkin,' Morgan replied: "I've never thought of myself as a comedian, particularly, and there hasn't been anybody specific I've borrowed from. I do know how to read a funny line, of course, and I guess I have a sort of antic sense of humor. But it's just a facility I've acquired over the years. There have been comedians I've greatly admired; I'm thinking of people like Charlie Chase, W.C. Fields, Laurel and Hardy, and Edward Everett Horton, for example."

John Belushi Stars

John Belushi and Tim Matheson star in "National Lampoon's Animal House," the blockbuster comedy about the outrageous antics of the fun-loving members of a college fraternity. Others in the film, returning to NBC Friday, May 22 (8-10 p.m.), include Donald Sutherland, John Vernon, Thomas Hulce and Verna Bloom.

The movie, which was hailed as "the funniest film of the year" by critics across the country, spawned a following on scores of campuses as students identified with more memorable sequences.

"Animal House" is set at fictional Faber College during Rush Week of 1962. When students make the rounds of various fraternities, they are amazed at the remarkable contrast in style as they're welcomed to Delta House.

A ramshackle affair, the house thrives on an uninhibited atomosphere that runs counter to all that the Greek establishment on campus represents. And while the fun-loving group is a center of strong camaraderie, the members' often outrageous antics remain the source of constant irritation to other students and the school's administration.

As Dean Vernon Wormser (Vernon) vows to follow-up his probationary edict with the ultimate dissolution of the defiant house, the chapter responds by throwing a hugely successful toga party.

Outraged, the Dean calls a session of the student court and ramrods a case against Delta House. Stunned at being thrown off campus, the brothers spend several hours in the doldrums. It doesn't take long, however, for them to reunite in their resolve to face off against the opposition. They concoct a grandiose plan to disrupt a major campus event, managing to leave all of their enemies in dazed humiliation.

Dramas Honored

Two dramas that aired on CBS-TV last season, "Gideon's Trumpet" and "Playing for Time," have been honored with 1980 George Foster Peabody Awards recognizing "the most distinguished and meritorious public service rendered each year" in broadcasting.

Carroll O'Connor was also a recipient of the prestigious award for his sensitive portrayal of a grief-stricken widower in a episode of "Archie Bunker's Place" that was telecast last November.

More Than Runners

Elmore Banton, track coach for Ohio University, feels that he is preparing his runners for more than just running races. "I ask them to give 100 percent of themselves every time they go out to run," he says. "Otherwise, when they go out looking for after a job college, they won't be totally competitive; thus, hurting themselves.

Call Them 'Simply Successful!'

Every Saturday afternoon during baseball season Joe Garagiola and Tony Kubek slip on their headsets and move to the edge of their seats to call the play during the NBC-TV's Major League Baseball Game-of-the-Week. As they do this, there's one primary objective in their minds — to involve viewers in the game.

As Garagiola puts it, "If I say something on a broadcast that you, as viewer, never thought of, then I've got you because you're participating."

Participation has been the watchword for Garagiola and Kubek since they first joined forces as regular baseball broadcast partners in 1976. Together the two former major leaguers have a special chemistry that enables them to blend their knowledge, with an enthusiasm for the game which evolves into commentary that's both informative and entertaining. Much of their appeal is due to their appreciation of what their audience wants. Kubek voices the 'fan first' attitude: "We worry about the fan sitting at home. He wants to know what the score is, how many outs there are, and what the situation is. To us, those fans are most important."

With the collective baseball insight of Garagiola and Kubek, fan involvement seems to come naturally. "I can name you things that Tony has picked up," says Garagiola. "For instance, you see a pitcher come to the set position on your screen and you hear Tony say, "Early Wynn said if he looks over his shoulder and can't see the runner, he knows the lead is too big.' Now you're sitting at home and you say, 'I never thought of that.'"

Kubek's reputation for saying what he thinks has won him applause as well as criticism from baseball's fans and management alike. His candor however, has never damaged his relationship with his broadcast partner.

The team also enjoys the free reign given them by NBC to call plays and issues as they see them. Kubek says, "Never on the air have I been told what I can say and what I cannot say. In effect the network is saying to us, 'You're out there to express your opinion and we're behind you.'"

While their comments draw viewers closer to the game, both men are aware that a big part of being good TV broadcasters is knowing when to let the picture do the talking. In certain situations they let the cameras work alone. Says Garagiola, "When you have a Carlton Fisk dancing on first base, what can you say about that; the dogs in Philadelphia behind home plate, what can you say about that; Tug McGraw's wife sitting there working with that handkerchief, going one-on-one with God, what can you say about that?"

What can you say about the broadcast team of Garagiola and Kubek? Simply successful!

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — Even though LYNN REDGRAVE's baby isn't due until July, the "HOUSE CALLS" co-star and her hubby, JOHN CLARKE, have already selected a girl's name. Results of medical tests recently revealed the sex of the couple's third offspring.

Can you picture ANGIE DICKINSON clerking in a sleazy, low-class department store? Apparently nobody else could — especially Angie! In view of this, her new series is being completely re-written in order to give her character some respect.

Since BARBARA EDEN was so successful popping in and out of a genie bottle, CBS must figure she can do anything. Now the vivacious blonde actress will be riding a motorcycle in her upcoming telefilm, "THE EAGLE ROCK REBELS RIDE AGAIN." What's more, the movie will be shot on location in and around Jackson Hole, Wyo., pretty rugged terrain for even the most seasoned chopper riders. Barbara's already in the process of learning to ride the two-wheeler.

Moments after ANDREW STEVENS had filmed a guest stint on "THE JOHN DAVIDSON SHOW," he collapsed in the NBC parking lot. An ambulance rushed him to a nearby hospital, where he was placed in traction for a back injury suffered earlier while playing racquetball.

One of the busiest people around Hollywood these days is BOB CONRAD, whose TV movie "THE COACH OF THE YEAR," drew such impressive viewer response that NBC's tagged him to launch it as a series. First, however, he's got to wrap his starring role in another telefilm, "WRONG IS RIGHT." Meanwhile, "WILL," Bob's movie based on G. GORDON LIDDY's Watergate memoirs, is sitting on 'ready' in NBC's stock pile.

Just a few months ago, CBS execs had decided to cancel the long-running "WALTONS" series. Now there's a strong chance that it may yet return for another season.

GABE KAPLAN, who's returning to episodic TV next fall in an NBC series, is scouting for an actress to co-star as his wife. Gabe's first choice was JACKLYN ZEMAN, one of the 'mainstays' on "GENERAL HOSPITAL," but her duties with the 'soap' are too confining and the cute gal had to decline.

There'll be a big celebration in Albert Lea, Minn., next month when the "HAPPY DAYS" mama arrives for a three-day bash, aptly titled "MARION ROSS DAY." The home-town gal-who-made-good will see all her childhood chums and also be feted by the state's top officials, including the governor.

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question on a postcard, to "Ask Them Yourself," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

Last of the big-time lenders.

FOR JAMES A. BAKER III, White House Chief of Staff.

● I'm glad you asked. This is a problem area that President Reagan is bound and determined to do something about. A recent report indicated that the Government is owed slightly over $175 billion, consisting primarily of outstanding loans. Of this amount, $25 billion is delinquent. The Reagan Administration is in the process of examining in detail various approaches to solving the problem of overdue debts. We are confident that we will make significant inroads in improving the Government's ability to collect its debts in a timely fashion, as we cannot afford the needless expense of defaulted and delinquent debts.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

We often hear that today's stars don't measure up to those of yesterday. How and why? — N.R., Odessa, Texas

● Writer-producer Andrew J. Fenady told us: "I've had the good fortune to work with some of the best and the biggest, and it's true, the bigger they were, the nicer they were. John Wayne, Ray Milland, Helen Hayes, Agnes Moorehead, Broderick Crawford, Dick Powell, Robert Taylor — they had more grace, dignity and charm in their little fingers than most of the current crop have in their entire bodies. They were professionals, cognizant of other people. Never late on the set, always knew their lines. What I mean is that these stars had a glow that nothing could dull. Kids today make it too fast via TV. There are a few exceptions of course — De Niro, Pacino, Hoffman, Redford."

Andrew J. Fenady: Bigger is best.

FOR MELISSA MANCHESTER, composer-recording star

Why have you become interested in teaching? — P.D., Decatur, Ala.

● I want to help college-level students who want to become singers, songwriters and musicians. They need guidance in a difficult field that frequently rips off beginners. If they learn the rules of the game, they will be able to detect the sharpies. It will prevent shock and career headaches.

FOR JENILEE HARRISON, star of Three's Company

Are you thinking of quitting acting and going into real estate on a full-time basis? — G.A., Sacramento, Calif.

● No. I suppose your question is based on reports that I manage my own income. Investments are something my parents prepared me to handle. I like the challenge of investing. It's not only financially rewarding but also creative. The sensation of making a good deal is as exhilarating as the roar of applause. I feel secure in the world of high finance.

FOR CLARA R. JACKSON, mother of baseball star Reggie Jackson

Did you expect your son to turn into a superstar, and what's your favorite piece of advice to him? — P.R., Panama City, Fla.

● I suppose I expected Reggie to turn out the way he did because he had all the natural talent in the world. We knew he was going on to bigger things. He always said, "I'm going to be a super player." I tell him, "Make sure to say your prayers and all will be well."

FOR LEWIS REGENSTEIN, executive vice president, The Fund for Animals

● To satisfy the demand for fur, millions of animals are caught each year in steel-jaw, leg-hold traps. These devices are so painful that a trapped animal will often chew off its own leg in order to escape. The rationale that the animals used in a fur coat are already dead is not valid. The next shipment is still alive.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

Are Bo Derek and husband John becoming involved in the horse-owning craze? — C.R., Savannah, Ga.

● The answer is probably yes. The Dereks recently bought tickets to a horse auction in Scottsdale, Ariz. The day was big for horse-breeder Al Jardine of the Beach Boys who sold "Frye-Love" for half a million dollars. Among the celebrity ticket holders for the auction was Barbra Streisand. As for Bo Derek, perhaps she was looking for a "10" to match her figure.

FOR TICHI WILKERSON MILES, editor and publisher of the Hollywood Reporter and founder of Women in Film

Are there people who don't take you seriously in your business because you're a woman? — J.M., Dover, Del.

● I believe that during office hours a woman must affect a businesslike attitude and dress seriously. If you do that, men will respect you and the difference in sex will not be considered. In other words, I am always taken seriously.

PRO AND CON

Should Mail Delivery Be Reduced to Five Days as an Economy Measure?

PRO Senator J. James Exon, (D.-Neb.), Senate Budget Committee

Saturday mail delivery in metropolitan areas should be discontinued to help get Federal spending under control. There are higher priority needs for our Federal dollars, not the least of which is reducing the Federal deficit. Discontinuing Saturday delivery in metropolitan areas would save hundreds of millions of dollars without major sacrifice, since those who want to receive mail on Saturday could walk to their local post offices, which would remain open. Delivery should continue in rural areas where distance prohibits making a journey to the local post office.

Question submitted by L.D. Frappier, Albany, Ga.

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

CON Senator Ted Stevens (R.-Alaska), chairman, Postal Operations Subcommittee

Presently 95 percent of mail is delivered within three to four days. Without Saturday service, mail delivery would take seven to eight days at least. This could cause the Postal Service to lose large volumes to delivery services, and result in substantial loss of revenue, requiring increased rates — primarily for first-class mail. Elimination of Saturday mail would not result in large savings for taxpayers, nor is it necessary. The Postmaster General has said that the President's recommended $300-million cut in postal subsidies will be absorbed without the elimination of Saturday service.

If a prize is not generally available at sweepstakes end, a substitution of equal or greater value will be made; otherwise, no prize substitutions or transfers. The Seven-Up Company is not responsible for illegible, lost, delayed or damaged entries.

Winners will be drawn at random by Product Exposure, Inc., an independent judging firm. Prizes will be assigned to winning entries in descending order. The first entry drawn with the correct sequence of sporting events will be awarded the Bonus Prize in addition to the regular sweepstakes prize. Odds of winning are determined by the number of qualifying entries received. All decisions of the judging organization are final. One prize per person, family or address.

5. Sweepstakes open to U.S.A. residents except where prohibited, restricted or taxed by law. Employees of The Seven-Up Company, employees of affiliated companies, bottlers, advertising agencies, the judges and their immediate families are not eligible. Winners may be required to execute an affidavit of eligibility and release.

All taxes are winner's responsibility. Trips must be taken before December 30, 1982. Travel accommodations are by sponsor's choice. Season tickets will be for 1982 season and are subject to availability.

What Has Carol Burnett Wrought?

Many people saw her libel decision as a victory for truth. But truth is elusive and, says the author, "we should be very careful about the lessons we carry away from this show trial."

By J. Anthony Lukas

After a California jury concluded this past March that she had been libeled by the National Enquirer and awarded her a whopping $1.6 million in damages, comedienne Carol Burnett was asked at a news conference what principle had been vindicated.

"The principle," she said, "is truth."

That same night, a continent away in New York, singer Mel Torme was interviewed on a talk show about the implications of the Burnett verdict. Weren't celebrities like himself fair game for the press, the host asked.

"Sure," replied Torme. "We're in the public eye. We're fair game — with one condition. They have to write the truth about us."

And so it went. Across the nation that week, show-business personalities from Johnny Carson to Elizabeth Taylor rejoiced for their friend Carol. And nearly everywhere the same lesson was drawn: It was a great victory for truth.

But was it? Is that really what was at stake in the ballyhooed Burnett case?

From a strictly legal standpoint, the answer is: no. The test in libel cases is not truth or falsehood. The standard which a judge or jury must apply in determining if a public figure has been libeled is whether the reporter and journalistic institution have displayed "malice." And there are, in turn, two criteria for that judgment. Have they published an item knowing that it was false? Or have they shown a "reckless disregard for truth," that is, have they failed to take the steps normally considered necessary in the profession to determine the truth or falsehood of such an item?

To some readers, this may seem a quibble, designed to becloud a simple issue. But to reporters, editors and publishers, it is an essential distinction, vital to the performance of their professional duties. And if Thomas Jefferson was right in holding that a free press is the best guarantee of a free society, then it is a distinction which should be important to all Americans.

Justice William Brennan gave the most cogent analysis of the dangers lurking in the simple standard of truth. In the Supreme Court's landmark libel case, New York Times vs. Sullivan (1964), he wrote, "A rule compelling the critic of official conduct to guarantee the truth of all his factual assertions — and to do so on pain of libel judgments virtually unlimited in amount — leads to 'self-censorship'... Under such a rule, would-be critics of official conduct may be deterred from voicing their criticism even though it is believed to be true, and even though it is in fact true, because of doubt whether it can be proved in court, or fear of the expense of having to do so. The rule thus dampens the vigor and limits the variety of public debate."

Carol Burnett after her Enquirer victory: "The principle is truth"

But there is still another danger in such a standard, which goes to the very nature of truth itself. To many readers and viewers, truth may seem a simple commodity. Either it's there or it isn't. If it's there, you report it. If it isn't, you don't.

But professional newspeople — not to mention scholars and scientists — know the truth is much more elusive. There is no simple litmus test to detect it. In many complicated stories, a reporter may feel his way for months before he reaches anything that could be called even a rough approximation of truth. In other instances, he never gets that far. The "truth" lies out there somewhere, always the reporter's goal but rarely something on which he can put his hands and cry, "Eureka! This is it! This is true!"

Only a few days after the Burnett verdict came a story which demonstrated all too dramatically the ephemeral nature of truth. With the first reports of an attempted assassination of President Reagan, all three television networks plunged into live newscasts. The reports — confirmed, partly-confirmed, unconfirmed — hurtled across TV screens. The President had escaped injury. The President had been shot in the ribs. The President was undergoing open-heart surgery, a life-threatening operation for a 70-year-old man. The President was having open-chest surgery, a relatively routine procedure. Presidential Press Secretary James Brady was dead. Brady was alive.

None of this is cited here as criticism of hard-pressed newsmen chasing a difficult story. But the assassination attempt did give viewers a rare glimpse of able professionals conducting their search for truth — and frequently coming up considerably short of the mark.

Ultimately — by the next morning, at least — the combined efforts of the Washington press corps arrived at something that could be called a rough approximation of the truth in the Reagan shooting. But can the same be said of the John F. Kennedy assassination 18 years ago?

The truth in that case was so difficult to determine that a Presidential commission had to be appointed to sort out the conflicting versions. Once the prestigious Warren Commission had delivered its conclusion — that Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone — a consensus seemed to coalesce around it. But later revelations about the methods used in that study and about the evidence withheld from the commission have shaken that conviction. Today, I know of few well-informed people who believe that Oswald acted alone. Yet just who conspired with him and to what end are matters now probably lost forever in the mists of time.

And what of Watergate, probably the biggest news story of recent years? At first, the break-in at the Watergate office building seemed a simple enough crime, a "third-rate burglary" as Presidential Press Secretary Ron Ziegler described it. Only later, as a few reporters began gnawing away at the case, were some disturbing questions asked: What were an official of the Committee to Re-Elect the President and a consultant to the Committee doing at the scene? Why was the burglary apparently financed out of a "secret fund" maintained by campaign treasurer Maurice Stans? Was "hush money" being paid to the defendants to keep them quiet?

Search For Truth

Not until March 23, 1973, when Judge John J. Sirica read in open court a letter from convicted Watergate burglar James McCord, was the true import of the burglary revealed. And it took 15 months more — hearings before the Senate Watergate Committee, a searching inquiry by the Special Prosecutor's Office and a meticulous review of the case by the House Impeachment Committee — before the President's abuse of his powers was fully displayed to the country.

Even now some intriguing "dark holes" remain in the Watergate story: Just what was the purpose of the burglary itself? Who was "Deep Throat" and what was his motive for leaking information to the Washington Post? How much did the Central Intelligence Agency know about what the Nixon White House was up to and how did it try to exploit those activities? What role did Howard Hughes and the shadowy men around him play in the episode? We may never know the answers to these questions.

But enough was known to force the resignation of a President. Because we still don't know the full "truth" of Watergate, should we have suppressed those piecemeal approximations of truth which forced Richard Nixon out of office. If Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein had been held to a rigid standard of "truth" in the early days of their Watergate reporting, very little would have appeared on the story because very little was verifiable as absolutely true. The story was built — as most complex stories are — out of hints, intimations, accusations, denials, doors shut in a reporter's face, the look on an official's face when he asked a question.

But what, it will be asked, do Watergate and Presidential assassinations have to do with gossip about movie stars? If reasonable latitude should be given to reporters searching for truth in matters of state, why need it also be granted to sensation hunters seeking for smut or titillation in the lives of celebrities?

Nothing here is intended to defend the National Enquirer or the kind of gossip journalism it exemplifies. There is no evidence that the Enquirer made any serious effort to check out its allegations that Carol Burnett drunkenly insulted Henry Kissinger in a Washington restaurant. That is "reckless disregard for truth" and deserves to be punished.

But precisely because the Enquirer is such a widely read gossip sheet, because Carol Burnett made such an appealing plaintiff and because other celebrities have trumpeted her victory to justify their own anger at such stories, we should be very careful about the lessons we carry away from this show trial.

The First Amendment is indivisible. If, in our outrage against publications like the Enquirer, we begin requiring that reporters not only search for truth but find it — and prove they have found it — we will create a climate in which it will be much more difficult to arrive at even a rough approximation of the truth on matters which touch us all. GARDENING

Super Summer Gardening Tips

By C.Z. Guest

Gardening is a terrific hobby — whether you're a homeowner with a big backyard or an apartment dweller with just one good window for houseplants. But even the most enthusiastic gardener can sometimes run into difficulties and require a little help. I thought I'd share a few of the interesting questions I've received recently from celebrities. Their gardening problems may be similar to yours, and thus the advice I offer them will help you get your garden off to a good start this season.

Q. I have a house in New York City facing south. There is a huge sycamore at one end of the garden and a mountain ash doing well in the center. But tall buildings cut the light, and though ivy thrives, wisteria seldom flowers, and impatiens tend to get stringy. Shall I just give up?

Katharine Hepburn

A. Katharine Hepburn give up? Never! Ivy is nice but your garden still needs some color. Get your wisteria under control by pruning it back severely and then pinch off all straggly impatiens shoots. If these still don't do well, try some other colorful flowers such as geraniums, petunias, primroses, hostas and begonias. Make sure they are planted where they can get the most sun.

Katharine Hepburn

Andy Warhol

Q. What can you grow in a Campbell's soup can?

Andy Warhol

A. You can grow absolutely anything in your soup cans, but you must punch some holes in the bottom for drainage and add some stones before putting in the potting soil. Then decide what you want to grow. Why not try an herb garden? Chives, basil, rosemary, oregano, savory, mint and sage will grow year-round in a sunny window.

Q. I live in Hyannis Port on Cape Cod in the summer, very close to the ocean. What plants do you suggest for my terrace?

Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy

A. There are many different plants and flowers that thrive in the salt air and mist. I live near the ocean and I love big pots of scented geraniums (apple, peppermint, rose, lemon) and dwarf fruit trees in terra-cotta pots. Hydrangeas are another favorite of mine, but they should not face the sea because the salt spray is the worst thing for them. They come in lovely shades of white, pink and blue. Be sure to water any of these plantings three times a week.

Rose Kennedy

Norman Mailer

Q. My children have a vegetable garden at my place in northern Vermont. We were told to use hay to keep the weeds down. We also found it kept the bugs away. Why?

Norman Mailer

A. Your children had a lucky season. Hay mulch usually does the opposite and invites snakes and slugs.

Q. Can you please give me some information on plants that can be brought back to the United States from other countries?

Douglas Fairbanks

A. I personally think the best thing to do is stick to the nurseries that specialize in selling plants to people returning to the United States. These plants are already inspected. Other plants and cuttings have to be inspected by government officers and sometimes quarantined. Of course, this depends on the type of plant. If you want to import plants, you can apply to the U.S. Department of Agriculture and it will issue you an identification number, which makes the procedure easier.

Q. If you were designing a greenhouse, how would you go about it? What exposure, how much light? Estee Lauder

GARDENING

A. There are many different kinds of greenhouses, but whatever type you decide to build, the four essentials are heat, ventilation, water and electricity. Your greenhouse should be oriented so that the long side has a southern exposure and can receive full sun for at least half the day in the fall and winter.

Q. My daisies and zinnias are delightful in May and June, and, in the cooler days of fall, chrysanthemums, a variety of marigolds, later-blooming zinnias and dahlias are beautiful. But in the very hot summer, the pickings in my garden are slim. Do you have any suggestions for getting bright flowers to bloom in central Texas during July and August?

Lady Bird Johnson

A. I know that you are an avid gardener and nature lover — the planting you did in Washington, D.C., brought joy and beauty to millions and we thank you.

There are many annuals that will tolerate heat and drought. One of the most colorful is the annual phlox which blooms especially well in Texas from July to September. The star-shaped flowers come in shades of pink, purple, lavender, red and white and make perfect cuttings. A second choice for your Texas garden is the nasturtium. It, too, makes beautiful cuttings with bright flowers in a wide range of colors from yellow to salmon-pink, scarlet and crimson. It will bloom from June to September.

Q. What is the best time to prune roses, and what is the correct way of doing it? You can imagine what an amateur I am when it comes to gardening.

Bob Hope

A. You may be an amateur gardener, but the question you've asked is a very important one. The rose just happens to be one of my favorite flowers, so I know quite a lot about it. If roses are improperly pruned or not pruned at all, they will not grow well. In your area, the best time to prune roses is around the first of December. Since you live in Palm Springs, they don't need as much pruning as they would in northern areas. Cut each branch back only one-third of the way and always cut on a slant. After pruning, don't feed your roses for three months — it's time for them to rest. Toward the end of February, they'll start to wake up, and then it's time to start their cycle all over again. You don't prune again until next December.

Bob, I've also looked up a few of the roses that will grow best in your area. Try some of these if you haven't already: Tropicana, Cayenne, Color Magic, Prominent, Pristine, First Prize, and King's Ransom.

Roses are a sign of love — maybe that's what's kept you so young all these years!

(We regret that we will be unable to answer all questions.)

I decided to ask The Muppets to send me gardening questions. I was sad to receive the response from Miss Piggy that she "isn't interested in growing flowers — just in acquiring them by the carload from adoring admirers." What a snob! Happily, though, I received questions from Gonzo and Kermit.

Kermit The Frog

Gonzo The Great

Q. How can I raise edible toadstools to sit on? It ought to be easy, since I've got a green thumb (and everything else).

Kermit the Frog

A. Kermit, it's O.K. to raise toadstools to sit on but be sure you don't eat any. They're poisonous and we don't want to lose you. What would Miss Piggy do? Anyway, I don't think there are toadstools big enough to hold you. Stick to lily pads!!

Q. As I guess you know, I'm crazy about chickens. I understand there's a plant called hen and chickens, or something like that. Can you tell me how and where to grow it? Also, will it have beautiful feathers and an adorable beak and a terrific figure like my gorgeous girlfriend, Camilla?

Gonzo the Great

A. Sorry Gonzo, hen and chickens don't look anything like your lovely Camilla. However, they're probably easier to manage. They'll grow any place that's dry, and they multiply quickly to form mats of pink and red rosettes which completely cover the ground. FW

BEHAVIOR

Fired! How to Survive the Blow

By Kate Jordan

On a Friday afternoon last winter, the family of David Mason, a senior manager at a large manufacturing plant, was gathered at home, awaiting his arrival and the start of the weekend. It was an evening this family would remember well, for when Mr. Mason, husband, father and breadwinner, walked through the door, it was with the news that he had been fired.

Mary Lopez

The involuntary termination of employment hits all types of workers with particular force in these inflation-ridden times. Recent figures released by the U.S. Department of Labor show that there were 3.8 million persons "separated from their jobs" by dismissal or layoff in March of this year.

A job loss places a strain on a family both financially and emotionally. "Your job takes up a huge chunk of your time and your identity," says Leonard Greenhalgh of The Amos Tuck School of Business at Dartmouth College. "The loss is bound to have cumulative effects on the people around you."

According to Dr. Laurence Stybel, assistant professor of business management at Babson College and head of Stybel-Peabody outplacement service, open discussion about the family's role in this difficult period helps to pinpoint trouble spots and ease the family through them. Stybel and his partner, Mary Anne Peabody, often conduct support workshops with a married couple at the same time they help the unemployed spouse find a new job.

"Mourning" and Anger

The initial reaction of wage earners who have lost their wage is often akin to the grief that follows the death of a close relative. Dr. Stybel points out that many dedicated employees feel that their colleagues are sort of a secondary family. "After you're fired, that family begins to treat you like a pariah," he explains. "And you realize it was all a mirage. What usually follows is a reawakening of need for the primary family."

Family members usually rally at this stage, making every effort to cheer the worker up and let him know that they still care for him, regardless of his job status. But, true to the pattern of mourning, the stage which follows can try everyone's patience. The worker becomes angry over his loss, and this may occur just at the time when he should be looking for another position.

If attempts to find work are unsuccessful and the family begins to seem less sympathetic, a profound depression and withdrawal may follow. "I can remember wondering if I could continue going home each night to a husband who had sat alone all day," remembers the wife of a laid-off teacher. "I wanted to scream."

If your husband or wife has been fired, try to understand the depression that has resulted. You can bolster your spouse's confidence by calling to mind all the skills and strengths he or she has as a worker, partner and parent. Be a sounding board and, rather than simply offering advice, ask questions that will help your mate reflect on what his or her job assets and liabilities are.

Money Worries

To allay money anxieties, couples should assess their finances realistically and decide what will become a priority and what can be given up. "You can't do everything, so you decide on your trade-offs," says Dr. Stybel.

Helping the Children

Children will usually take their cues on how to react from the fired parent. If the parent is increasingly withdrawn, children are likely to feel frightened. A parent who appears to be coping well will ease a child's fears.

A realistic explanation of family finances will help children understand the luxuries they have to give up.

And, most importantly, sharing your hopes and plans with your children can give them invaluable lessons in strength, empathy and cooperation during adversity. FW

Grow New Hair!

NO CREAMS, OILS OR LOTIONS—NO HORMONES OR VITAMINS—
NO WIGS, HAIR WEAVES, IMPLANTS OR TRANSPLANTS—IN FACT, NO GIMMICKS, NO GADGETS, AND NO BULL! *

HAIR BURNERS:

For centuries, men have gone bald by the millions, and witch doctors (both ancient and modern) have promised clever solutions by artificial means. How many smart, desperate men have been burned by someone peddling false hope in the form of some "miracle" product "imported from Europe"? Perhaps you are among them. And the solutions that aren't rip-offs are just expensive cover-up's!

NOTHING TO SELL:

Let me put your mind at ease right now: we have absolutely nothing to sell you—nothing in a tiny jar, no painful surgery, no dangerous medical treatments—we're not even selling hats! Just knowledge...

MARGO'S IMPOSSIBLE DREAM:

Natural, real new hair growth.

Margo's method achieves what none of the expensive medical and cosmetic substitutes can—it helps you grow new hair! It's that simple. And we mean your own hair. Real, healthy, shiny hair—the kind you had when you were a boy. And other than the price of Margo's book (just $7.95), it will not cost you one single penny. We know it sounds impossible—like another of those "miracle cure" hair ads. Please, for your own sake, don't stop reading!

THE NIGHTMARE:

Hair loss is practically an epidemic these days, and the mental torture it causes otherwise strong men is pathetic. Even worse, the misconceptions about hair loss perpetuate the suffering by making it seem hopeless. The worst of these is the nightmare of MPB—Male Pattern Baldness.

MALE PATTERN BALDNESS:

Most common patterns of MPB.

For decades we have been told that MPB is hereditary and genetic, that it is a result of being male (having male hormones), and that nothing can be done to halt and/or reverse MPB. This is needless frustration, turning confident, aggressive men into helpless victims of nature, unable to do anything about their most important (and visible) symbol of virility and pride—their hair.

ARTIFICIAL ALTERNATIVES:

Most so-called hair experts are quick to tell you that your hair loss is due to factors over which you have no control whatsoever. How consoling! Your only alternative is dependence upon the medical and scientific establishments, which offer three choices: (1) resign yourself to your fate, (2) buy a wig, (3) buy a hair transplant. But no man is ever really happy with any of these substitutes for the real thing.

SECRET TEARS:

"I remember one of my husband's friends, an athletic hulk of a guy," Margo relates, "who was not one to display his emotions. He was going bald, felt terrible about it, and was searching frantically for a cure. One day he told me that he had never in his adult life allowed himself to cry until he began losing his hair. He confided in me that he had shed tears over his hair loss, and I'm willing to bet there are millions of men out there who are crying right now—inside or out—for the same reason."

MARGO

You've seen her on TV and read about her. Growing New Hair has created a bookstore sensation for weeks! Hairstylist to some of the nation's leading athletes, show business celebrities, prominent politicians and professionals, Margo is a trichologist specializing in the study of hair and its diseases as well as a master barber who has practiced for thirteen years. Her salons are located in Boston and Newton, Massachusetts.

WAITING PASSIVELY:

None of us really wants the artificial cover-up's, and we know that the chemical concoctions (no matter what the ingredients) don't really get to the root of the problem. So, we wait impatiently for medical research to discover an "amazing breakthrough." But since the cause of MPB is believed to be hormonal, medical science is seeking a cure in the form of an antihormone. Margo clearly explains the fallacy of this, and other hair loss theories—false theories that leave us standing around waiting for a laboratory miracle that will never come—while every day more precious hair goes down the drain!

MARGO'S METHOD:

What's her secret? It's so simple and logical that you may resist at first. But after you read the entire text, including testimonials from many of the 10,000 men Margo has helped during her 13 years of practice, you will know that this is the answer we've all been waiting for! Margo explains how hair grows, how hair is nourished and what goes wrong to cause MPB. She explains the simple steps by which you—NOT SOME HIGH-PRICED DOCTOR—can correct the problem and stimulate new hair growth!

* [illegible] FDA [illegible]

STILL SKEPTICAL?

Make no mistake, this is NOT a "maybe" method. You are not taking another "wild shot in the dark." Margo states plainly, "I can guarantee anyone, without reservation, that if he is in the process of thinning, he can put an end to his hair loss and begin to reverse it the moment he starts following my advice. My goal is to bring an end to MPB, and I know from personal experience that it can be done!"

FOR WOMEN TOO:

Although Margo's book is primarily aimed at men, the same basic techniques can be successfully applied to the millions of women in this country who have thinning hair.

YOUNGER AND SEXIER:

In her book, Margo also takes a serious look at the pro's and con's of all the cosmetic and surgical hair replacement methods—from anti-androgen scalp injections to the three transplant systems—and offers grooming advice for the male face and body—advice to keep you looking younger and sexier. It's all here in one of the most delightful books you've ever enjoyed reading.

GETTING "HIGH"

Margo's book will leave you feeling hopeful and "high"—with firm knowledge that you can solve your hair problems with your own two hands—permanently! it will change your appearance, your attitudes, and your relationship with yourself and those you love most. You'll look better—more healthy and handsome—and you'll feel better—more open and dynamic.

PLEASE DON'T WAIT:

Make this the last hair ad you ever need to read. Please don't hesitate out of fear and doubt. Every day you wait, you lose more hair—when you could be GROWING NEW HAIR!

FAMILY CAMPING

THE JOY OF THE OUTDOORS

BY TOM BROKAW

As a child growing up along the Missouri River in South Dakota, I led an idyllic life of hunting, fishing and camping in the hills and prairies surrounding my hometown. In those days before lightweight camping equipment and freeze-dried food, I lugged an odd assortment of Army surplus and Boy Scout gear to favorite camping sites such as "Cow Chip Flats" or "The Artesian Well," familiar but not exactly picturesque gathering places for weekend outings with half a dozen of my friends.

We started young, at age 10 or 11, and it was a valuable lesson in personal responsibility. When the temperature dropped during the (continued)

FAMILY CAMPING

Joy of The Outdoors

South Dakota nights or the pot of chili burned, there were no mothers or fathers handy to offer a warm bed or another meal. Within my circle were a number who were skilled outdoorsmen by their early teens.

Some of our trips were more ambitious than overnight treks a few miles out of town. One summer, a group of us backpacked through the Black Hills for a week, often going off established trails to find our way by compass to the next campsite. Even though there were a couple of adults along, it was a heady taste of freedom for a group of 13-year-olds. However, the adventure was not a crystal ball on anyone's chances for success or failure in later life. One of my pals, now a respected high-school principal, started the trip with a complete set of new equipment. He then proceeded to lose it piece by piece so that by the time we returned home he was down to trousers, shoes and a borrowed T-shirt.

By the time I was 14 I had graduated to the role of Boy Scout counselor at a camp several hundred miles from home. For eight weeks I lived in a tent and taught swimming, canoeing and basic camping skills with such enthusiasm that no one who knew me then could imagine me later giving up that life. I did, though — for girls, cars, sports and the other attractions of high-school and college years. My camping equipment grew musty and rusty in the basement of my parents' home, and I rarely thought of it as I chased my career goals from Omaha to Atlanta to Los Angeles.

Then, in California, a friend rekindled the old spirit when he returned with his wife from a 10-day backpacking trip through the High Sierras. Moved by their magnificent photographs, my wife, Meredith, and I quickly decided backpacking was just what we were looking for: Clean air, good exercise and an escape from the pressures of big-city life.

Since Meredith was a rookie, we decided to begin with a weekend Sierra Club trip to Mineral King, a beautiful valley in the Kings Canyon National Park.

Meredith was eager but a trifle apprehensive.

"What about bears?" she asked.

"Don't worry," I said, "they won't be around. And if they do show up, rattle this pan with a spoon. That will scare them away."

The first night out we spread our sleeping bags on a level spot and, since the skies were clear and the forecast favorable, we decided to forgo a tent. Just as we were dropping off to sleep, Meredith uttered a final, weaker note of concern.

"I guess there won't be any bears," she said.

If you had to hike here, you'd still be hiking.

If you're planning to walk to the great outdoors, you could miss a great deal.

Because a lot of the places worth going to are too far to hike to.

Introducing the 1981 CT110 and the CT70, two Hondas that'll take you almost anywhere a trail leads.

A dual-range for wherever you range.

This year, the CT110 features Honda's handy dual-range transmission.

Instead of one set of gears, it has two. A low range that'll pull you up hills, a high that'll zip you down the trail.

So wherever you range, it can handle the trip.

Automatically easy to ride.

The slightly smaller CT70 is designed for slightly smaller riders, but it still has a lot in common with the CT110.

Including an automatic clutch that lets you concentrate on the scenery, completely street-legal lighting so you can keep riding after you return to civilization and a reputation for the kind of gas mileage and reliability that made Honda famous.

See the CT110 and the CT70 at your Honda motorcycle dealer. They're for all those places that are too far to hike to.

And too good to miss.

"Nah." I reassured her.

When I awoke the next morning Meredith was looking at me with a small, embarrassed smile.

"I almost woke you up in the middle of the night," she said. "I was sure I heard a bear snorting around, but then I realized it must have been a dream or my imagination."

I gave her my best Dan'l Boone smile of understanding and went off to retrieve our nearby backpacks — which turned out not to be nearby.

"Meredith," I asked, "where did you move the backpacks?"

"I didn't move them," she said.

My city instincts took over. "Someone must have stolen them," I thought. Quietly, I began movin toward other campsites, hoping t catch the thieves, when suddenly stumbled over our bags — upende at a bend in the trail. They were i pretty good shape except for punc tures in the compartments where th food was stored. Even a city boy realized instantly that the puncture were the shape and size of bear claws.

Fortunately, the rest of the week end was bear-less and so rewarding we became firmly hooked on back packing. Every summer now we try to pick a new area to explore, often just the two of us, making our way across a piece of the Rockies or the High Sierras, guided by topographical maps and our ever-expanding understanding and appreciation of the wilderness.

Since that first weekend our exposure to bears has been limited to viewing a large grizzly from a comfortable distance in western Montana's Glacier National Park. However, there are other hazards we have learned to take in stride. As you might expect, weather is a big factor. Although never welcome, inclement weather certainly makes a trip memorable. Two summers ago, Meredith and I were assaulted by steady rain and hail during a climb into the Beartooth Wilderness area of Montana. Finally, after two days, the skies cleared, and we left our campsite to go fishing in a small lake about a mile away. We were well above tree level so there was no real protection and, shortly after we arrived, another storm roared up the canyon, catching us with no place to hide. We huddled in the crack of a large boulder and pulled our ponchos tight around us. Face to face, with the water dripping off our noses and lightning flashing overhead, I said to Meredith, "Think of all the people you would not want to have with you at this moment." For the next half-hour we giggled through a long list of unlikely companions. The laughs didn't keep us dry, but they did help pass the time and, who knows, maybe they even chased the rain away because the rest of the trip was all blue sky and sunshine.

Our early trips were so intoxicating that nine years ago we decided to bring along our daughters: Jennifer, then 6; Andrea, 4, and Sarah, 2.

We figured a weekend trip to Se quoia National Park was the place to begin, and we had visions of the girls hiking cheerfully through the redwoods. The imagined scenario went like this: After a hearty dinner around a cozy fire, they'd retire quietly to the tent while Meredith and I enjoyed the starlit night in a double sleeping bag on a soft bed of pine needles.

It wasn't the first time in my life that expectation and reality didn't mesh.

To begin with, as we unrolled the tent we quickly learned one of the fundamental truths of camping with young children: They aren't much help in an activity where a lot of help is needed. Meredith and I were, in effect, their hired hands, even more so than we were at home. And somehow in all our descriptions of the fun of camping, we had failed to mention the realities of outdoor toilets. They looked at us in disbelief when we said, "Yes, that's where you go." For a while there I worried that one weekend would undo years of toilet-training.

Bedtime was not an easy sell, either. First they embarked on a final romp, playing monster games in and out of the tent. Monster Sarah was so effective she collapsed the tent by repeatedly throwing her tiny body against the outside wall while giving off yells eerie enough to do Bigfoot proud.

Finally, they settled down — but only until we were comfortable in our sleeping bag outside. Then, in a discordant chorus, the complaints began: Something creepy was crawling across Andrea's face and Jennifer was taking up too much room and Sarah wouldn't be quiet and how do we know a bear won't come? Reluctantly, we agreed to join them. And in a tent meant for three people, this was quite a trick. Unfortunately, our presence did not end the presence of things that go bump in the night or crawl over Andrea's face, and we certainly didn't quiet Sarah. She chattered brightly until dawn, insuring that she'd fall asleep during the next day's hike.

Subsequent camping trips with the girls were better organized and more realistic in their scope. And camping has become an important part of our family life, principally because we have not pushed it on our children. We let them help pick the trips and set the pace. And, of course, we do have some wonderful memories as well as those that aren't so wonderful. We have canoed together on pristine lakes in Maine; slept under the broad skies of North Dakota before going on a long trail ride with cousins who are real cowboys; watched an eagle raid a gull's nest in northern Canada; climbed a fire tower in a national forest; slid down a waterfall in South Dakota's Spearfish Canyon; searched for a lost lake in Colorado, and even gotten momentarily lost ourselves (Dad's fault) in a Connecticut state park.

There have been sunburns, poison ivy, complaints about the trail (too steep or too long), mosquito bites and dirt in the food.

But if there is a constant it is this: There's never a dull moment. Furthermore, if you want a warm feeling, think of all those parents stuck around highway-adjacent motel pools as you watch your own children step into a clear mountain stream for the first time. FW

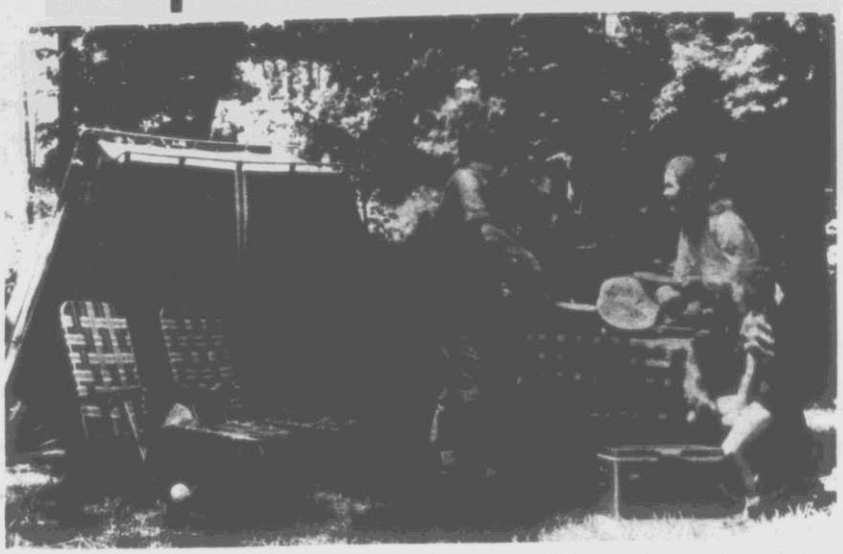
Best Bets for Campers On a Budget



Eating outdoors is one of the joys of a camping vacation

By Ginny Ade

Have you been promising yourself that someday you'll take the kids to see the Grand Canyon, Yellowstone National Park or the nation's capital? That someday you'll all watch the Indy 500, fish trout streams in Montana, see the graceful plantation homes of the Old South, tour the picturesque New England states, or ride the cable cars in San Francisco?

Before your somedays slip away, why not take action. Sure, inflation and the high cost of gasoline have made traveling expensive, but there's a way to have a cost-efficient, fun-packed vacation: by camping.

Homeowners and apartment-dwellers who turn to tenting and/or towing a lightweight, fold-down camping trailer will find that this mode of vacation travel offers the perfect respite from the daily treadmill of work and home, a chance to put aside status and strivings and an opportunity to make new friends.

"Have fun in a tent?" you ask incredulously. Well, a tent or a tent-trailer is merely a means to an end. It's basically just a place to sleep after a day of travel, fishing, hiking, horseback riding, tennis or swimming. In fact, many campgrounds now offer all the amenities of a country club — pool, tennis courts and games and activities for children. The family can be together, yet each member can enjoy the vacation activity he likes best. And you can't beat the price.

Admittedly, a family traveling by car for any reason will have to budget more this year for car expenses. In its recently released annual computation of estimated driving costs, the American Automobile Association (A.A.A.) states that the average cost of a gallon of gas is $1.40.

This means it will cost around $7.50 for every 100 miles, based on travel in a car that gets 20 miles per gallon. If you're towing a tent-trailer, you should figure $8.40 per 100 miles because the towing will add an extra gallon for every 100 miles traveled.

By camping, though, you can stretch travel dollars significantly when it comes to lodging and meals. A.A.A. estimates that the average cost of lodging for two in 1981 will be $44 a night (25-percent lower in small towns; a whopping 75-percent higher in large cities and resort areas). Campers, on the other hand, paid only an average of $7.91 a night in 1980, with a high of $15 and a low of $3.

The couple eating in restaurants while traveling and vacationing will shell out $44 a day according to A.A.A.'s estimate for 1981, whereas food costs for a camping couple can usually be kept within the normal amount budgeted for weekly groceries at home — around $50 a week.

such as charcoal for the campfire and flashlight batteries, but you can balance out the cost of these extras with smart shopping. For instance, because you'll be cooking on a grill, you can get away with less expensive meats — everything tastes good grilled.

What's the bottom line for a two-week vacation for two? The box at right gives a trip comparison based on 2,000 miles of travel. It's easy to see that the family that camps can enjoy a two-week, 2,000-mile vacation for considerably less than the family staying at motels and dining out.

Here's an idea for a couple who'd like to try camping: If you own motorcycles, you might consider camping via your bikes — with your camping gear strapped on the back. Even with the extra weight, most bikers get 40 miles per gallon, thus spending only $3.50 for every 100 miles traveled.

Bikers who want to take along more than the bare camping essentials can purchase a cycle-trailer to tote their tenting gear. Believe it or not, among them are a lot of "empty nest" couples with silver in their hair.

And families that can't afford or don't want to make the initial long-term investment for basic tenting equipment or a tent-trailer do have alternatives. Many private campgrounds and some state parks rent tents or trailers equipped for camping. Just bring your own sleeping bags, cooking utensils and a small supply of staples, and move in. Camp stores stock all camp supplies. To locate these campgrounds, consult the campground directories found on newsstands. These directories will also include the franchise campground chains such as Jellystone, Holiday Trav-l Parks and Kampgrounds of America, Inc. (KOA).

In some of its campgrounds, KOA, has tent villages — six-sided structures built on concrete foundations. In each one, there are six pie-shaped, partitioned areas which provide a tenter with a sheltered space for cooking and eating, including a cabinet for locked storage, counter hooks, an electric outlet and a picnic table.

Making tent-site reservations in advance not only helps you to avoid headaches, but it saves money, too — you won't have to drive around looking for space.

Keep reservation costs down by calling on weekends when telephone rates are lowest. For example, a three-minute call from Chicago to reserve a tent site in California costs only 54 cents if made between 8 A.M. Saturday and 5 P.M. Sunday.

Many campgrounds now allow you to use your credit card to book a space in advance. If you don't want to plan so far ahead, park operators will book ahead for you from one campground to the next, just like motel operators, for a minimal charge to cover telephone costs.

Another new program KOA is adopting to attract small-car tourists and tenters who don't always want to set up are cabins on campgrounds. Plans are in the works to build up a network of cabins across the country so that some tourists can travel from coast to coast carrying only sleeping bags and a few supplies.

The rustic cabins have a porch and include windows for ventilation and four to six bunk beds. No utilities are offered, but water is available nearby, as is the case with tent sites. A picnic table and grill are also furnished.

Another way to keep camping cost-efficient is to be on the lookout for campgrounds that offer some type of discount program. KOA, for example, with more than 500 franchise parks involved in the program, has a KOA Value Card. It offers a 10-percent discount on campsite fees at participating KOA parks, plus express check-in, best available campsite and a money-back guarantee within one hour of check-in if the site doesn't please you. These cards are available at any KOA Kampground for $2, or you can mail your $2 (check or money order) to KOA, Inc., Box 30558, Billings, Mont., 59114.

Before Going: A Camper's Checklist

Whether you're a first-time camper or fancy yourself another Daniel Boone, an outdoor vacation is going to be easier and much more fun if you plan what to take ahead of time. Here's a list of the basics. Don't leave home without them.

Tents. The usual camping rig consists of a ground sheet and tent, set up with poles. A 9 × 12 or 10 × 15-foot tent should be comfortable, and you can buy your own or rent one at a state park or private campground.

Food and Kitchen Gear. You might survive outdoors without shelter, but not without food. Those who don't plan to backpack their supplies everywhere (campground users, for instance) should pack canned goods (soups, juices, fruits and vegetables), seasonings, cooking oil, baking soda, flour, powdered milk, cereals, dry mashed potatoes, cheese, jams, bread, buns and crackers. You'll also need a camp stove, either liquid or gas-fueled (a three-burner would do nicely). You should also take a cooler, ice blocks (they last longer than cubes), a coffee pot, paper towels, plates, cups, cooking utensils, pans, a kettle, a pitcher, plastic containers, plastic garbage bags, soap-filled scouring pads, aluminum foil, a water jug, a can and bottle opener and matches.

Bedding. Campers must bring their own sleeping bags. One with two or three pounds of down or a good synthetic fiberfill is adequate for use from spring through fall. Bags cut to about 36 × 75 inches are roomy enough for most adults up to six feet in height. For both warmth and comfort it's a good idea to buy an air mattress or foam-rubber pad to go under your sleeping bag. You'll also need your own towels, toiletries, soap, toilet paper, mirror and clothespins.

Tools and Equipment. Essentials include a lantern, a six-volt, waterproof, floatable flashlight, flares, an electric extension cord, nylon cord, repair tape, a first-aid kit, candles and bug spray. You should also carry a knife (with a four or five-inch blade), an axe for chopping and a small shovel for extinguishing fires. When you venture off the road, take a local topographical map and compass and always let someone know where you're going.

Once You Get There: A Tenter's Top Tricks

If you've never set up a tent before, don't panic. Just keep these guidelines in mind, and you'll pitch your tent without a hitch:

- Before you go: Practice setting up your tent a few times in the backyard. You'll also want to waterproof it: If your tent is nylon, apply "sealer" to the seams; if it's canvas, apply beeswax to the seams in the canvas part and "sealer" to the seams in the nylon floor. You can buy beeswax and "sealer" at your camping store. Canvas tents should also be hosed down: This shrinks the material to its proper size.
- Choosing your site: Every park has rules about where you can camp. Be sure to obtain these from the ranger station before pitching your tent. Stay away from hollows and low, marshy areas. Aim for a level, dry spot near but not under the trees — bird droppings stain canvas and can damage nylon. The ground should be reasonably soft, not sandy or rocky.
- Pitching the tent: The following procedure, suggested by Hudson's Camping Headquarters in New York City, applies to most family-size tents: Clear the area of loose rocks and debris; unroll your tent and stake out the corners; insert the top poles first, then the end or side poles, and the center poles last.
- Remember the environment: Observe your park's environmental regulations. Don't clear away underbrush (if undergrowth is too thick, find a cleaner site). Don't break off boughs to make a "bed" for your tent (a foam pad under your sleeping bag will cushion just as nicely). And don't dig a rain trench around your tent. Tent floors are waterproof, but if you want extra protection use a nylon or plastic drop cloth underneath.
- Bear-proof your tent: To keep bears, mice and other hungry animals at bay, store your food and cooking utensils outside your tent. Either put them in your car or pack them in a knapsack and, using a nylon cord, swing the sack over a tree branch at least 12 feet off the ground and at least 50 feet away from your tent.

A Sportsman's On-Target Approach

By Norm Froscher

A 79-year-old wonder who has stalked big game from Alaska to Africa, Fred Bear couldn't have a more appropriate name. Yet, paradoxically, Bear is also known as a conservationist, primarily because of his hunting method. He uses bow and arrow and must trek deep into the woods, going eyeball to eyeball with his prey.

With wildlife diminishing rapidly, Bear sees this approach as the future of hunting. "The people who take up hunting with bow and arrow are assuming a big handicap because while it is a deadly weapon, it's a short-range one," he explains. "You have to get real close and therein lies the thrill of the hunt with the bow.... A couple of deer taken in minutes by a hunter with a rifle might afford a very interesting week or two weeks or month for half a dozen people with bow and arrow."

Reared in the hills of central Pennsylvania, Bear was the son of a gun-hunting father and grew up with the outdoors at his side. He recalls that a turning point came in 1933 when he shot a monster deer in upper Michigan. "It was so easy that there was no challenge, no thrill," he says. "I decided that from then on I would do it with a bow."

There was a lack of good equipment available, however. So Bear set up a workshop in his garage and began producing his own. By the end of World War II, his archery business had outgrown several buildings, and then the advent of fiberglass really helped his business hit the bullseye.

Bear realizes that hunting as he's known it is rapidly disappearing: "Most of the big game is pretty much gone....We're taking away the wildlife habitat at the rate of several thousand acres a day. When you take away the wildlife habitat, you're going to have to be satisfied with less wildlife."

Bear and his wife of 34 years, Henrietta, now live in Gainesville, Fla., and he still puts in 40-hour weeks at the headquarters of Bear Archery and the Fred Bear Sports Club, an organization of some 25,000 members worldwide who are dedicated to bowhunting and wildlife management.

Almost an octogenarian, Bear, amazingly, still hunts, going after turkey in Florida ("a smart bird, difficult to get with bow and arrow") and deer once a year in Michigan. He's also hoping to make it to Alaska for one last hunt.

Age has brought its handicaps, however. "I don't go running up and down mountains anymore," he admits. "I really enjoy the outdoors, but I don't have the yen, the zest, to shoot things like I once did. I have to be more selective, thinking about carrying back what I've shot."

But as he says, "You don't go hunting to kill, you go hunting to hunt. There are hunters and there are killers. To the true sportsman, the kill is an anticlimax." FW

When it says Ray-O-Vac Sportsman, you're getting a light that will deliver top-notch performance, even under rugged conditions.

Take our Sportsman Fluorescent Camping Lantern. The hood and base are the same material used in pro-football helmets. The clear globe is shatter-proof. And two long-life fluorescent tubes give 360 degrees of bright, battery-powered light, night after night.

So there are no delicate mantles to fiddle with. No fuel. No flame. No danger. It's weatherproof, to shine through rain, snow, wind. Nothing else on the market can match it.

Need a smaller version? Consider our single-tube fluorescent Sportsman lantern. It's tough, impact-resistant. Lightweight, compact. Yet it throws 180 degrees of light where you want it. There's solid-state, all-transistorized circuitry. Weatherproof construction. And all the flame-free advantages of the larger lantern.

Finally, the Sportsman Flashlight. Without doubt, the standard of the industry. Each one is extruded from a solid slab of steel. Then double chrome-plated. For a body tough enough to withstand years of dropping and tossing. And a finish that resists rust and corrosion. The bulb and lens are spring cushioned to reduce breakage. The reflector produces a bright, round, even spotlight. And the switch—all steel and brass for better contact—has three positions (constant beam, flasher, off).

So whether you need a rugged camping lantern, or a flashlight made to last a lifetime, turn to the Ray-O-Vac Sportsman line of lights. But choose carefully. You'll have them for a long, long time. Favorite Food Take-Along for Family Camping Trips

It's fun to relax in the great out-of-doors when you know that you have made wholesome snacks ahead of time for the whole family to enjoy.

By Marilyn Hansen

Camp out the carefree way with Heavy Duty Reynolds Wrap.

This is the aluminum foil that lets you be creative. It's the heavyweight foil, a full 18 inches wide, so you can cook in it, improvise a reflector oven, insulate a cooler, and do so much more. It's fun and there's no messy cleanup.

Lemon Rainbow Trout

2 whole trout, dressed
1 lemon, sliced thin, then cut in half-slices
4 Tbsp. butter

Pre-mix seasonings, seal in foil:
¼ tsp. pepper,
¼ tsp. gran. onion,
2 tsp. parsley,
½ tsp. celery salt

Place each fish on 4 half-slices of lemon on a length of Heavy Duty Reynolds Wrap (3-4 times width of fish). Season cavity and skin. Dot cavity with 1 Tbsp. butter, add 3 half-slices of lemon. Close cavity, dot top with butter. To seal foil, double-fold over fish and at ends. Cook about 20-25 minutes over medium-hot coals, turning once.

The good food wrap.

Reynolds Wrap

37½ SQ. FT.

BACKPACKERS' SUPERBARS

½ cup butter or margarine
¾ cup packed brown sugar
½ cup quick-cooking oats
½ cup unsifted whole wheat flour
½ cup unsifted all-purpose flour
¼ cup toasted wheat germ
2 teaspoons grated orange rind
2 eggs
1 cup whole blanched almonds
¼ cup raisins
¼ cup flaked coconut
½ cup semi-sweet chocolate bits

1. In medium bowl of electric mixer, beat butter with ½ cup of the brown sugar until soft and blended.
2. At low speed, beat in oats, whole wheat and all-purpose flour, wheat germ and orange rind. Pat into an ungreased 8 × 8 × 2-inch square pan.
3. Mix eggs, almonds, raisins, coconut, chocolate bits and remaining ¼ cup brown sugar; pour over the base and spread evenly.
4. Bake in preheated 350°F. oven about 30 to 35 minutes or until almonds are golden brown.
5. Cool, then cut into 12 bars or squares: Wrap with plastic film to keep moist.

Makes 12 bars

HEALTH LOGS

3 cups chopped, dried apricots
3 cups chopped, pitted, dried dates
½ cup slivered almonds
½ cup sunflower seeds
½ cup wheat germ
¼ cup orange juice
1 pkg. (6 ozs.) semi-sweet chocolate bits
Flaked coconut

1. Combine all ingredients except coconut. Shape into 2 logs. Roll in coconut.
2. Wrap tightly in plastic wrap and store in refrigerator (will keep for several weeks).

Makes 2 logs

HOT COCOA MIX

1½ cups sugar, preferably superfine granulated
1 cup instant, nonfat, dry milk powder
1 cup nondairy coffee creamer powder
¾ cup unsweetened cocoa
1 vanilla bean, split, optional

1. In a large bowl, stir together sugar, nonfat milk powder and creamer powder. Sift in cocoa; stir to thoroughly blend all ingredients.
2. Fill a 1-qt. size jar with the mixture. Insert vanilla bean down center of jar to add flavor. Screw on jar cap tightly. Store in a cool, dry place.
3. To make one serving, place 4 to 6 heaping teaspoons mix in a large cup or mug; add boiling water and stir. Vary measure of mix and water to suit own taste.

Makes about 4 cups mix, enough for 16 one-cup servings

STAMINAS

½ cup molasses
⅓ cup shortening
⅓ cup sugar
1 egg
1 cup sifted all-purpose flour
¼ cup dry skim milk solids
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon soda
¼ teaspoon each, nutmeg and cinnamon
1¼ cups quick or old-fashioned oats
1 cup grated carrot or grated raw sweet potato
¼ cup raisins

1. In large bowl, cream together molasses, shortening, sugar and egg.
2. Sift together flour, dry skim milk solids, baking powder, salt, soda and spices; stir into creamed mixture.
3. Add oats, carrot and raisins; mix well. Drop by level tablespoons on greased cookie sheet. Bake 8 to 10 minutes in preheated 400°F. oven.

Makes 3½ dozen (45 cookies)

RUSSIAN TEA

1¼ cups (or one 9-oz. jar) orange-flavored instant breakfast drink
½ cup sugar
⅓ cup instant tea
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
Dash salt
Boiling water
Cinnamon sticks, optional

1. To prepare Russian Tea, combine instant breakfast drink, sugar, instant tea, spices and salt. Stir well. Store in tightly covered labeled jar.
2. For each serving of hot Russian Tea, place 2 well-rounded teaspoons of mix in a cup. Add boiling water; stir until dissolved. Serve immediately, garnished with cinnamon-stick stirrers, if desired.
3. For 1 qt. of hot Russian Tea, combine ½ cup of the mix with 1 qt. boiling water in a heat-proof pitcher or serving bowl.

Makes 2 cups mix, enough for 4 qts. or 24 (5-oz. size) cups

Country Maron

WHEAT GERM GRANOLA

2¼ cups quick oats
¾ cup flaked coconut
¾ cup chopped almonds
4 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup packed dark brown sugar
¼ cup honey
1½ teaspoons vanilla extract
½ cup wheat germ, regular or sweetened
½ cup dark raisins

1. Spread oats, coconut and almonds in a greased 15½ × 10½-inch pan. Bake in a 300°F. oven for 20 minutes, tossing occasionally.
2. In a small saucepan, combine butter, sugar and honey. Simmer over low heat until butter is melted. Remove from heat and stir in vanilla.
3. Increase oven heat to 350°F. Add wheat germ to toasted mixture and drizzle with sugar mixture. Toss with a fork to coat evenly. Bake 5 or 6 minutes. Add raisins; mix well. Press mixture down firmly in pan. Bake an additional 5 minutes or until golden.
4. Remove from oven and let cool. Break into pieces. Store in an airtight container.

Makes 6 cups

QUICK ENERGY GORP

½ cup raisins
½ cup cashews or peanuts
½ cup candy-coated chocolate
½ cup coarsely chopped dried apricots, prunes or dates
½ cup sunflower seeds
½ cup coarsely chopped dried apple slices
1 cup granola

1. Mix ingredients in large bowl. Divide among several plastic bags and seal.

Makes 4 cups

BEEF JERKY

1½ lbs. flank steak, partially frozen
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon liquid smoke
⅓ teaspoon garlic powder
⅓ teaspoon ground black pepper
⅓ teaspoon monosodium glutamate
1 teaspoon onion powder
¼ cup soy sauce
¼ cup Worcestershire sauce

1. Slice flank steak in thick slices diagonally across the grain.
2. Combine seasoning mixture and brush on both sides of meat. Arrange meat slices on two 10 × 15 × 1-inch jelly-roll pans.
3. Place in preheated, very low 200°F. oven for 8 to 12 hours, turning meat several times to dry out evenly. Or hang outside on string, away from animals, in cool, airy place to dry.
4. Store in plastic bags in refrigerator or freezer.

Makes ¾ pound

PEANUT BUTTER SUPREMES

1 pkg. (12 ozs.) semi-sweet chocolate bits
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
1 cup nonfat dry milk powder
½ cup creamy peanut butter
¼ teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cups unsalted, dry roasted peanuts
1 cup raisins

1. In top of double boiler over simmering water, melt chocolate with butter. Remove from heat.
2. Beat in dry milk powder, peanut butter and vanilla with a wooden spoon until fairly smooth. Stir in peanuts and raisins.
3. Spread in buttered 13 × 9 × 2-inch pan. Chill until firm. Cut into bars.

Makes 48 two-inch bars

The Jumpsuit— Now Wear It Everywhere

By Rosalyn Abrevaya

Smart piped jumpsuit in Creslan and cotton. By Felco Sport USA.

The jumpsuit has long been a staple of science fiction and daring-young-men-in-their-flying-machine movies, but this year it has landed smack in the middle of the fashion scene. In its many variations and fabrics, the jumpsuit is bidding for "most versatile" status.

This season there's a jumpsuit to serve your every mood and activity, whether you're the sporting kind or enjoy frequent candlelit evenings out.

The jumpsuit actually dates back to World War II and, as its name implies, was worn by parachute troops and adopted by civilians for speedy dressing during air raids. A spirited Winston Churchill was a fashion harbinger in those days as he swept about in his "siren" suit.

Until recently, only models, movie stars and women with great figures could wear jumpsuits. But the good news is that fit is no longer a problem: Most jumpsuits now have an elasticized waistline — or no waistline at all.

Top designers this season are turning out jumpsuits in elegant, after-five silhouettes or directing their talents toward innovative sports looks or designs with a bit of fantasy thrown in.

"The jumpsuit, in beautiful jersey fabrics, is superb for evening," says designer John Anthony. He believes it fills a void in a woman's wardrobe, especially if she wants to look dressy but not too formal when going out for dinner and dancing.

Perry Ellis, one of the newer talents among American designers, believes the jumpsuit's popularity can be traced to its one-piece design. "Not only does it make a woman look taller and slimmer, but it's comfortable and easy to wear," he states.

Designer Dianne B has shown jumpsuits consistently for the last few seasons. "A woman can slip on a jumpsuit and, with a smart belt and some jewelry, she's all put together," says Dianne. "And, in the summer, a jumpsuit can go from the seashore to dinner effortlessly," she adds.

Betsey Johnson, a veteran designer with a flair for fantasy, doesn't fall short in designing jumpsuits. She reports that two of her current best-selling styles feature elasticized harem-type pants, one with a Victorian U-neck bodice and long leg-o-mutton sleeves, the other preening a strapless, corset-type look coming to a pointed ballerina waist.

The variety of jumpsuits is endless. They are being shown with plunging necklines, spaghetti straps, halter and camisole tops; with short sleeves, long sleeves, roll-up sleeves; ankle length (sometimes elasticized), mid-calf length, knicker length, short-short.

Fashion Tips

1. Do check for proper fit. Be sure the jumpsuit does not bind anywhere; that armholes and crotch portion are not cut so deep they actually constrict your movement and that there's enough material through the legs and seat and across the back not to put a strain on seams when you're active.

2. If you're wide or short-waisted, choose jumpsuits with undefined waistlines, then cinch with a narrow belt in the same color or fabric as the jumpsuit. If you're long-waisted, wear wide belts to make the waist appear higher. Ideal now would be a soft wrap belt.

3. If you're narrow-hipped, you'll look good in a jumpsuit with hip pockets or one that is softly gathered. If hips are too wide, avoid fullness at the hipline, as well as shiny, filmy fabrics and tight pants bottoms — which also would tend to accentuate thighs. FW

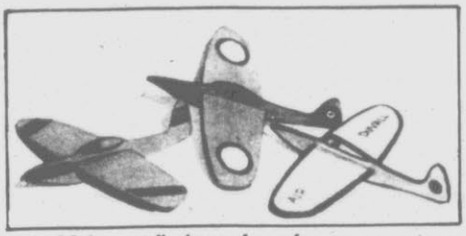
Look What You Can Make With Plastic Foam!



Make small planes from foam egg cartons.

Make a wall plaque with yarn design.

A pretty basket from foam trays.

You won't need to go any farther than your refrigerator to find the plastic foam egg cartons and food trays that can be used to make everything from pencil holders to toy planes.

Both kids and adults will discover how much fun it is to make and "fly" foam planes. Because of their light weight, they're safe for indoors or backyard play.

You also can create surprisingly attractive wastebaskets from foam cartons. They can be multicolored or in a single color, depending on the cartons available. These lightweight baskets are also handy containers for your knitting or crochet.

Plastic foam is an excellent material, too, for making unusual ink stamps, which can be coated with ink or poster paint. Use the stamps to personalize stationery and note paper, design your own greeting cards or print unique wall plaques. With practice, you can create prints that resemble woodcuts.

Nifty storage boxes can also be designed from foam trays. Using permanent ink marking pens, paint or adhesive-backed plastic for decoration, you can disguise them so well that no one will guess they originally held meats and vegetables.

For beginning sewers, foam trays can be used for simple embroidery — to make three-dimensional pictures or a plaque for a child's room. It's a good way to use pieces of leftover yarn.

The bottoms of egg cartons can be turned into small-change holders (for hanging on the wall) or silly, roly-poly toys that act like Mexican jumping beans. These are good for party favors, too.

Complete instructions, including photos or illustrations of the projects mentioned, are included in a leaflet. For your copy of "Fun With Foam," booklet #344, send $1.00 plus 25 cents postage and handling to:

Family Weekly Magazine
P.O. Box 438, Dept. T
Midtown Station

Be sure to include leaflet number and your name, address and ZIP code. (New York State residents, please add sales tax.) FW

PEOPLE QUIZ

Is Self-Esteem A Key to Happiness?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE

1. Your happiness depends on your self-esteem.

2. How much you think of yourself depends on what you do for a living.

3. How you feel about yourself depends on how physically adequate you feel in a love relationship.

4. Spending a few minutes each day in meditation will increase your sense of self-worth.

5. If you are quick to infer from people's behavior that they dislike you, your low self-esteem is causing you to project these negative feelings.

ANSWERS

1. True. In studies at Boston University, subjects were administered tests designed to show their degree of happiness. Finding: "The degree of happiness correlated positively with the degree of self-esteem."

2. False. Subjects in the same study represented four socio-economic groups: blue-collar workers, white-collar workers, professionals and people with alternative lifestyles. Evidence failed to indicate that the professionals possessed a significantly higher degree of self-esteem than the other three groups. How well you perform your work, rather than the nature of your work, is what contributes to your self-esteem.

3. True. But only for a man, as evidenced by a study conducted by investigators from Kean College (N.J.), William Paterson College (N.J.) and Fordham University (N.Y.), which showed that feelings of inadequacy in the love relationship "had the most impact on the self-esteem structure of males." The study reports that the satisfactory physical relationship factor had no self-esteem component for females; that also, unlike the males, females have two sources of self-esteem that are totally detached from their sexuality: social-ability confidence, based on items related to interaction skills and social-acceptance confidence, based on items related to likableness.

4. True. In studies conducted by a team of behavioral scientists at the University of Queensland (Australia), subjects were divided into two groups: meditators and nonmeditators. All were subjected to a battery of standard personality tests. Results showed meditators to have a higher overall level of self-esteem than nonmeditators.

5. True. Research both at the University of Massachusetts and at Germany's Marburg University has demonstrated that a person's self-esteem strongly affects the inferences he draws regarding another person's feel is toward him. The studies showed that persons lacking in self-esteem consistently fancied slights when none were intended. FW

QUIPS & QUOTES

OPENING REMARKS

Automatic doors fly open
At supermarkets and such.
They work in some mysterious way
Without the slightest touch.

And yet it takes all confidence
And faith I can command
To keep on walking straight ahead
And not lift up a hand.

Some day, I'm sure, the opener
Won't work, and though I pass
From out to in, you'll see a scene
Of blood and broken glass.

—Richard Armour

GARDEN VARIETY

Perfection is a state that man
Can never hope to gain
Because Adam sinned in Eden
And started raising Cain.

—Janice J. Baker

We the People: Each morning Grandpa takes a walk around the backyard before his usual walk around the block. He claims that it's the preamble to his constitutional.

—George Bergman

COMMAND PERFORMANCE

This is true. We witnessed it in one of the aisles of broken dreams in our supermarket. A man was pushing a cart containing a screaming, thrashing, bouncing boy baby. The man kept repeating such admonitions as "Don't yell, Brian," and "Keep calm, Brian. Don't get excited, Brian." A woman standing next to him said, "You certainly are to be commended, young man, for trying to soothe your son, Brian." The man looked at her and said, oh so soberly, "Lady, I'm Brian." —Al Batt

HEALTH

Why a Cough May Be Nothing to Sneeze at

By Paula Dranov

There's nothing simpler than coughing. All of us do it and for all sorts of reasons — to clear the throat, as an automatic response to fumes or other irritants in the air and as a means of ridding the respiratory tract of bits of food or unwanted liquids.

Some coughs are nervous habits. These tend to worsen under stress, but they do cease when you sleep, a pretty good indication that there's no physical malady involved.

But coughing can also be a symptom — a significant one — of ailments ranging from the common cold to heart disease and cancer.

It's the cough that won't go away that is most worrisome — even though what's causing it may be as common and non-threatening as postnasal drip. Sometimes this condition is caused by sinusitis (inflammation of a sinus), an allergy or irritation of the mucous membranes of the nose, but usually it is the result of an overactive production of mucous by the glands of the nasal lining. Unfortunately, there's not much you can do about it although sleeping on two pillows can help as can running a vaporizer at night in the winter to counteract the effect of breathing in dry heat conditions.

A cough that won't go away can be a key symptom of ailments ranging from the common cold to bronchitis to heart disease.

A bad cough is also the main symptom of both acute and chronic bronchitis. In acute bronchitis, the cough usually starts as a tickle in the throat but becomes worse and worse — particularly at night — before it begins to get better.

When a youngster develops a persistent cough, doctors usually suspect that an allergy is to blame, says Dr. Isadore Rosenfeld, a New York physican and author of The Complete Medical Exam. But, he warns, tuberculosis can't be ruled out if the child is from a crowded household that includes someone who has the disease. Although tuberculosis isn't the threat it once was in the United States, its incidence is on the upswing, probably because the bacteria that cause it are developing a resistance to drugs used to treat the disease.

Chronic morning coughing is common among heavy smokers, although Dr. Rosenfeld cautions that long-standing coughs of this type might be the first sign of bronchitis, heart failure or lung cancer. A smokers' cough will disappear a few weeks after a person quits smoking.

Dry, wheezing coughs and those that wake you in the night and force you to sit up for relief may be signs of heart failure, even though an earlier and far more noticeable symptom is shortness of breath during exertion.

The most frightening coughs, of course, are those that produce foul-smelling phlegm or blood. Green or yellow odorous phlegm usually means infection, while coughing up blood can signify one of many ailments including pneumonia and tuberculosis. If this happens, it's important to see a doctor immediately.

Whatever the cause, a cough that persists for more than three weeks after a cold or flu or develops for no reason should not be ignored.

Doctors do remain puzzled about chronic coughs that can't be traced to such obvious sources. "Many factors appear to influence coughs," explains Dr. Arthur Banner, a respiratory specialist at the University of Chicago Medical Center. He is working on a study of the problem of chronic coughing, trying to evaluate the effectiveness of various treatments. "Some people have coughs which seem to get worse with changes in weather," adds Dr. Banner. "Cold air acts as a stimulus for the cough. Others appear to be affected by air pollutants."

Doctors believe coughing is a response to the irritation of nerve endings, called receptors, which are located in the respiratory tract, the nose and the pharynx. They suspect that patients with chronic coughs have receptors which are overly sensitive to irritation.

As part of the Chicago cough study, patients are exposed to such mild irritants as citric acid and cold air in an attempt to identify the trouble-making substance. Once the irritant is established, medication can be prescribed to treat the problem. Later, the patients are retested to determine the treatment's effectiveness. So far, says Dr. Banner, about 50 percent of those participating in the study have gotten significant relief.

Drug store remedies aren't considered effective in treating any persistent cough. In fact, experts fear they may do more harm than good if they mask the cough and delay diagnosis of the underlying cause. FW

Larry Holmes: Shadowboxing The Legend of Ali

UPI

By Eliot Kaplan

Imagine you're the crooner scheduled next on stage after Sinatra's just belted out "My Way." And then imagine not only following someone so revered, but also having to beat him up.

When you can imagine that, you can understand the task heavyweight champion Larry Holmes faced on the night of Oct. 2, 1980, when he pummeled his mentor and friend — and one of the planet's authentic living legends — Muhammad Ali. After 10 tortuous rounds, the fight was mercifully ended and Holmes retained his crown.

Let's face it — Larry Holmes has a problem. The problem is a.k.a. Muhammad Ali. "Ali is a phenomenon," explains sportswriter Red Smith, who has covered boxing for over 50 years. "And having to follow him...well, to a whole generation, Ali is the greatest thing since girls." As Holmes himself declared before the Ali fight, "All I want to do is go out there and get the monkey off my back."

Has he? Today, Holmes says, "Yeah, the monkey's gone, man. In some people's minds it's still there, but I'm not gonna worry about it 'cause as long as I get paid to do a job, that's all that matters. And I'm doing a helluva job, knocking those suckers out."

As Casey Stengel would say, you can look it up: The 6-foot-3-inch, 215-pound Holmes has had 37 wins in 37 fights, 27 by knockout, a string he hopes to continue in his upcoming fight against Leon Spinks.

Still, in the chaotic world of pro boxing, a world of hype and jive and boast, maybe Holmes is too stable a personality. He is what he is, a quiet guy who likes to stay home with his wife and daughter. All fine and good, except it's not "The Rope-a-Dope," "The Shuffle," "The Greatest."

Holmes further contributes to his undefined image by avoiding the glare of the New York/L.A. circuit, living instead in small, working-class Easton, Pa., his home since he was 6. "There's not a lot of excitement here in Easton," explains Holmes, sitting in his office and propping his feet up on the desk. "It's a quiet town where you can raise your kids. Big cities are just too fast, and I don't want to live fast. I just want to live nice and slow."

If Holmes, at 31, seems content to sit back and take life easy, it's perhaps understandable. The seventh of 12 children born to John and Flossie Holmes, Larry's done it the hard way. His dad left when Larry was in 7th grade and he dropped out of school to shine shoes, work at the car wash and in the steel mills, drive a truck. He loved football ("I could have put Tony Dorsett out of business"), but he realized that without a college degree there'd be no pro career. So he decided that the quickest way out of the ghetto was to fight his way out of it. It was an idea, however, that Mama frowned upon. "I remember he told me he was gonna box, and I said, 'Oh no you're not,'" recalls Flossie Holmes. "But he said, 'Mama, I'm tired of this. I'm going out to make some money.'"

Today Holmes is worth in the neighborhood of $3 million — a posh neighborhood indeed. He's held the title for three years now since defeating Ken Norton in June 1978. But it was a long time coming, a long time of dark gyms and cold locker rooms and small purses in places like Scranton, Pa., and Pensacola, Fla. As he says, leaning forward, "People think Larry Holmes got to the top overnight. It didn't happen overnight. It took 14 years. Nobody gave me anything. I did the hitting and I took the shots. My jaw's twisted; my hand's been broken; my arm's gone out of place. Still, guys say, 'You're getting X million to fight this guy.' They forget the $65 paycheck for my first fight or the $100 for my second. I made $900 one year. Everything I got, I earned."

Ironically, it was Ali who helped him earn it, by taking Holmes on as a sparring partner in the early 1970's and getting him preliminary fights before his own bouts. And Holmes's gratitude toward Ali put him in an emotional vise during their fight. He knew Ali had nothing from the start, and though he jokes now that "$5 million makes anything easy," he seemed truly torn throughout the fight. When it was finally over, Holmes ran across the ring, tears in his eyes, hugged Ali and whispered, "I love you."

But of course, it was Ali, even in defeat, who grabbed the headlines when he claimed that a steady diet of diet pills — not the flurry and fury of Holmes's fists — had sapped his strength. "Everybody needs an excuse," shrugs Holmes. "If he'd beaten me, I'd have said I was sick. All the other fighters do it, I guess, but no, I never thought Ali would have to."

Holmes has learned a few things from Ali's follies. For one, unlike Ali's huge entourage of hangers-on, who've robbed him of precious time and money, Holmes keeps only a small circle of advisers, mostly family, old friends and, more and more, promoter Don King. And Holmes has invested wisely. It's doubtful you'll see him fighting strictly because he needs cash, doubtful you'll see him taking on a sumo wrestler as Ali did in 1976. "The interest alone on my money will take care of my family, their family and then their family, too," says Holmes.

That interest is indeed sizable, and Holmes has spread the wealth around. "I paid over $1 million in taxes last year," he boasts. "And I remember where I came from. I don't have amnesia." He helped keep the Easton Boys' Club afloat and recently built a $150,000 training center for youngsters and a disco in town. As for his family, at least five brothers work for him in some capacity, and Mama doesn't mind her boy's choice of vocation so much anymore — Larry built her a new house. Holmes's father died a decade ago, and Larry reflects: "He knew I was a boxer but never saw me fight. And sometimes I wonder, What would he think of his son if he knew he was heavyweight champ."

Holmes also recently built a $500,000 dream house on 2½ acres outside of town for his wife, Diane, and their infant daughter, Kandy Larie. (Holmes has two older daughters from a previous relationship who live in Easton with their mother.) The palatial showplace features a five-car garage, nine bathrooms and, something even Ali would envy, an indoor swimming pool shaped like a boxing glove, with a Jacuzzi built into the thumb. "I've always been a loner," says Larry. "Even as a kid, everybody had a real buddy-buddy, but not me. And that's why I built this house. I can just stay home with my family and relax, go in the pool, the steambath, the sauna, just do whatever I want and not have to go out."

Still in his prime, Holmes is talking retirement, perhaps as early as the end of this year. He has little left to prove, and the only opponent who might give him a decent test is Gerry Cooney — a matchup that's being discussed for September.

Whether Larry Holmes will ever get his due as a boxer is doubtful. Red Smith, for one, says he'll go down in pugilistic lore "near the top of the second rank of heavyweights, along with Max Schmeling, Jack Sharkey and Jim Braddock." Fine fighters all, but not Dempsey, not Louis, not Marciano. Not Ali.

But frankly, Holmes is unconcerned. He may finally realize that Ali's shadow will always loom, but that as shadows go, maybe it's not too bad. And, as he points out, "I have my priorities, the things that keep me going."

Those are simple enough to decipher. Before the Ali fight, Holmes taped a large, hand-printed sign to the wall of his hotel suite. The sign read: FIRST: MY WIFE. MY CHILDREN. MY FAMILY. MY HOUSE. P.S. MY POOL. FW

WHAT IN THE WORLD

FREE HELP IN DIGESTION

It's estimated that some 23 million Americans suffer from digestive disorders — ulcers, gallstones, constipation, heartburn and the like. Aware of their misery, the American Digestive Disease Society last year established Gutline, a phone-in service that enables the public to ask doctors questions on these disorders. The service is currently available in three cities. But this week, you can reach Gutline toll-free from anywhere in the country. From Sunday through Wednesday, you can call between 11 A.M. and 2 P.M. (Eastern Time) and then again from 4 P.M. to 8 P.M. (E.T.) The number is 800-223-0292.

One of a rotating group of gastroenterologists will discuss symptoms and problems in general but will not offer a personal diagnosis or prescription. Nor will the doctor's name be disclosed (to protect him from charges of soliciting business).

SAFETY SECOND

Having concluded that America is being buried under a morass of Government regulations and safeguards, Dale Lowdermilk has decided to fight back — with satire. So last year he founded NOT-SAFE, the National Organization Taunting Safety and Fairness Everywhere.

Lowdermilk's purpose is twofold: "To get people into the political process and to have a little fun." To that end, he proposes such tongue-in-cheek regulations as providing free psychotherapy to dogs being housebroken ("for the trauma"); banning hot dogs ("Half of children's deaths under the age of 12 are from choking, and in ⅓ of the cases, hot dogs are the culprit"); and forbidding the elderly to play bingo ("could lead to poker or even the dreaded blackjack").

Richard Bennett

NOT-SAFE claims about 400 members, including Steve Allen and 16 U.S. Congressmen and three Senators who prefer anonymity. Concludes Lowdermilk, "Anything can be dangerous if you follow it down an extreme path. These regulations began with a noble purpose, but the bureaucracy made them into collective dumbness."

For information, write: NOT-SAFE, Box 5743, Montecito, Calif. 93108.

THE MEDIUM IS THE MESSAGE

The latest way of saying Happy Birthday — or words to that effect — is a New York City service called Strip-A-Gram, and it's taken off so fast that branches are due soon throughout the country. For $80, Strip-A-Gram will send a man or woman dressed as a party guest, office worker, etc., to deliver a surprise greeting; $150 brings two strippers, either of the same sex or a male-female combo. It's all aboveboard, too. The strippers, aspiring actors and dancers, show no full nudity and offer no sexual services. Nonetheless, it was reported that a Strip-A-Gram delivered during a session of the New York Stock Exchange stopped trading for 15 minutes.

HIPPOCRITIC OATH?

Many American doctors have been accused of being callous technocrats — highly skilled physicians with little regard for their patients.

And the cause may lie in our medical education system, suggests Charles LeBaron, a third-year student at Harvard Medical School, whose new book, Gentle Vengeance, sensitively chronicles his first year of study. According to LeBaron, med students hardly ever see patients and rarely discuss the humanistic aspect of healing. Instead they are required only to memorize reams of complex chemical formulas.

When students finally do see patients, it's often in grueling, 36-hour hospital shifts. "Patients may be complaining of pain — either real or imagined — and all you can think about is going to sleep," says LeBaron, adding, "And I think this impersonality is carried over when doctors enter private practice. It's hard to ditch behavior learned over a decade."

LeBaron, who began med school at age 34, after 10 years working in inner city clinics, suggests admitting students to med school only after they've gotten practical experience in dealing with sick people. "Being admitted to med school now is strictly dependent on grades and test scores," he says. "Volunteer work is considered merely an ornament to your résumé."

HOW MUCH IS THAT DOGGIE IN THE WINDOW?

To an adult, inflation might mean putting off that new car. To a child, it might mean one fewer comic book. So-called "kidflation" is viewed as child's play by many adults, but it's serious business both for kids themselves and manufacturers vying for the $45 billion youngsters aged 6 to 16 spend annually. And since every nickel increase in the cost of typical kid items means huge percentage leaps, kidflation has in some cases outpaced the adult variety.

While adults often get cost-of-living raises, children, whose chief source of income is usually mom and dad, are losing out. "The money kids earn hasn't changed much over the past seven years," notes George Moschis, a marketing professor at Georgia State. "And many parents are making their kids go out and work or else do household chores for their allowance."

CELEB NOTES

From the new book Celebrity Trivia by Edward Lucaire, here are a few tidbits we bet you didn't know: Young Marlon Brando used to stray so frequently on the way to kindergarten that his sister had to take him to class on a leash...Comedian Lou Costello loaned Dean Martin

For over two hundred years, the old idea of the encyclopaedia remained the same. But now, to meet the demands of our changing world with its vast amount of information . . . now there is Britannica 3.

This is a completely re-designed encyclopaedia. It is written in clear, readable language . . . the language of today . . . so that even the most complex subjects become much easier for your children to understand.

What makes Britannica 3 unique?

Britannica 3 is more than an encyclopaedia. It's a revolutionary Home Learning Center . . . America's only encyclopaedia arranged into three distinct parts.

1. The 10-Volume Ready Reference lets you get at facts quickly and easily. Ideal for homework.

2. The 19 Volumes of Knowledge in Depth for readers who want to explore entire fields of learning.

3. The One-Volume Outline of Knowledge — your guide to the entire encyclopaedia . . . permits you to plan your own course of study on any subject under the sun.

Britannica 3 covers more subjects more completely. It is more responsive to the current [illegible]ily. And when you judge by its 43 million words, you'll agree that Britannica 3 delivers more value per dollar than any other accepted reference work. So if you want more-up-to-date facts about more subjects than you'll find in any other single source, you want Britannica 3.

Preview Britannica 3 FREE

Britannica 3 is like no other encyclopaedia you have ever seen. Indeed, it's the first new idea in encylcopaedias in 200 years. That's why we've created a special full-color booklet which pictures and describes this achievement in detail. This booklet is yours free . . . no obligation . . . so please send for it today.

Thousands have paid dollars more for this world-famous knife!

The World's most Luxurious folding hunting knife, Now Only $6.99! (Belt Holster Included)

FREE BONUS GIFT

Leatherette Belt Holster for folding hunting knife included FREE of charge

RETAIL VALUE $1.99

Here's a classic, folding hunting knife you'll be proud to carry, proud to use out there in the great outdoors. It's a fully-featured knife, 4" long, with a barrel and bolsters forged from a massive block of solid brass. And handles are rivited to the body to give you a safe, sure grip.

The blade is razor-sharp, hand honed stainless steel, 3¼" long. And, it's probably the safest folding knife ever made. When you snap open the blade, a spring-steel bar locks the blade in place. It simply can't be closed until you release the lock.

This is the knife for hunting and fishing, for camping, for just plain cutting up around the house. Similar knives sell for up to $25, and this exact same knife is nationally advertised for dollars more than our low $6.99. And, if you order now, we'll even engrave your initials FREE in a solid brass plate on the side of the knife.

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Fence is missing. 2. Ball is missing. 3. Briefcase is different. 4. Price is different. 5. Pot handle is missing. 6. Glass is missing.

● HOUSE CALLS! Ever had a house guest who wore out his or her welcome? This droll observation on the subject is attributed to William Dean Howells: "Somep eople canst aylon gerin anhou rthan other scani naweek." Rearrange spacing for sense.

"Some people can stay longer in an hour than others can in a week."

● Find a U.S. state in each sentence: 1. I do miss our intimate talks. 2. They cut a hit record. 3. Ida hoped for more. 4. Oh, I owe you so much.

1. Missouri. 2. Utah. 3. Idaho. 4. Ohio.

● Round Number! My top and bottom are round as a ball, but without my top I am nothing at all. What number does this suggest?

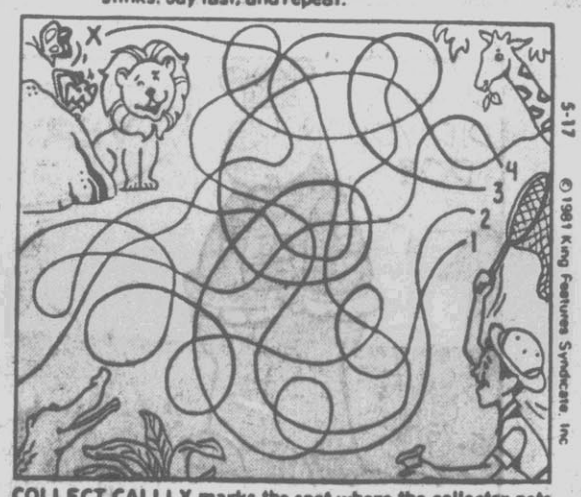
Number eight.

● Tongue Tests! Bill Briggs' brother Bob bought a box of books for a buck. Saucy Susie sifted several sacks of sooty cinders. Sarah Skink's short story stinks. Say fast, and repeat.

BEAT STRENGTH WITH MAGIC!

Ask a strong person to place one fist atop the other, as shown above. Insist that you can separate his or her fists with a flick of your index fingers. Then demonstrate, using fingers to force the fists left and right, as indicated by arrows.

Now, hold out your own fists and challenge your adversary to part them similarly. Should be a cinch, right? Wrong. In placing your fists together, slip your lower thumb into your upper hand, and alakazam!, when struck, your fists won't budge.



COLLECT CALL! X marks the spot where the collector nets the butterfly. Which route leads to its capture?

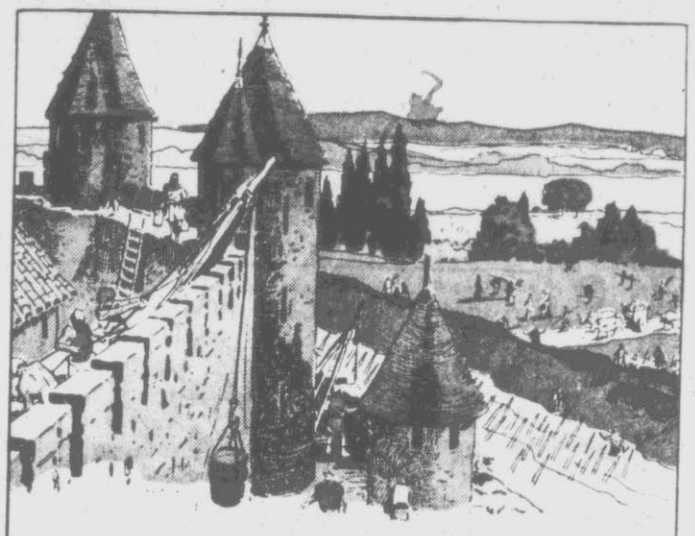
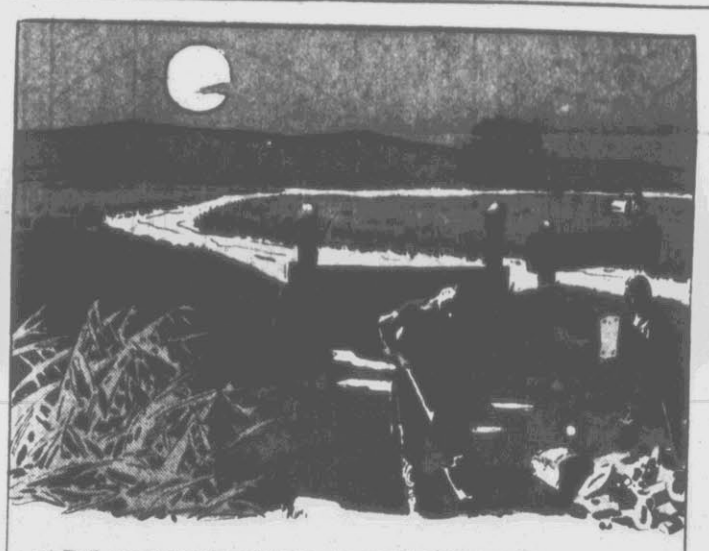
CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: TWO WEEKS HAVE PASSED, AND MORDRED'S BARBARIANS HAVE OVERCOME EVERY OBSTACLE THROWN IN THEIR PATH. ANOTHER WEEK, AND THEY WILL BE AT CAMELOT'S GATE. NOW KING ARTHUR MUST PREPARE TO FACE THE MOST TERRIBLE WEAPON OF WAR: THE SIEGE. FIRST THE REFUGEES ARE MOVED OUT OF THE WAY--WEST, TO CORNWALL, ALONG THE ONE ROAD STILL OPEN. MORDRED WILL HAVE NO USE FOR THEM.



SHEEP AND CATTLE ARE HERDED INSIDE THE WALLS, AND FROM THE GREAT CISTERN BENEATH THE PALACE CASKS OF WATER ARE HAULED TO THE ROOFTOPS IN CASE OF FIRE. THE GRANARY IS FILLED, THE FOREST CLEARED FOR FUEL, AND THE MOAT PIERCED LIKE A PINCUSHION WITH A THICKET OF SHARP STAVES.



IN THE MOONLIGHT, PRINCE VALIANT AND SIR GAWAIN RIDE TO THE EDGE OF "MUCKEN MIRE," WHERE DIKES AND CANALS HAVE WRESTED FARMLAND FROM THE BOG. BY OPENING ONE LOCK AND CLOSING ANOTHER THEY DIVERT A SMALL STREAM, AND IN ITS MUDDY BED THEY BURY THE ROYAL TREASURE. THEN THE WATERS FLOW ONCE MORE.

FROM TINTAGEL, THE GREAT CASTLE NEAR LAND'S END WHERE ARTHUR WAS BORN, GALAN AND THE TWINS SAIL TO HIBERNIA WITH THE OTHER CHILDREN OF CAMELOT. GALAN IS SURPRISED THAT HIS BOYISH BRAVADO REFUSES TO DECAY INTO TEARS--EVEN WHEN HE IS ALONE AT NIGHT; EVEN WHEN THE TWINS TWIT HIM AND THERE IS NO MOTHER TO RUN TO. FOR ALETA REMAINS BEHIND.

THE SUN'S COSY FINGERS MELT THE MIST AND TINT THE PALACE OF WONDER AS MORDRED DEPLOYS HIS TROOPS. "CAMELOT," HE EXCLAIMS, "YOU ARE MINE!"
