City Rescue Service Will Remain At Same Level

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

Like it or not, emergency medical service in Greenville will probably remain at the same level for at least another year.

Those who like it include Fire-Rescue Chief Jeness Allen and Mayor Don McGlohon. Those who dislike it include Dr. Jack Allison, director of emergency services at Pitt Memorial Hospital and the ECU School of Medicine, and Dr. Herbert Hadley, chairman of an ongoing committee to promote rescue service in Greenville.

"Rescue service is the best it has ever been," Allen said.

"The level of service we are trying to render is being rendered very well," McGlohon said, adding that the city is "in no position" to sponsor a higher level of emergency service.

"I don't think the service is that weak in terms of what is offered. (But) the emergency department phsyicians are disgruntled with the situation ... because we know just how good things could be for the people of Greenville," Allison said.

"It's just deteriorating," Hadley said.

Their divergent opinions reflect a controversy that simmered in Greenville for several years and flared to a boil in early 1980 when the city's volunteer rescue squad disbanded, leaving emergency medical service in the hands of a jointly operated Fire-Rescue Department.

A year later there appears to be no immediate solution, although a special Mayor's Advisory Committee headed by Dr. Wallace Wooles recommended earlier this month that the entire medical service be turned over to the county.

"That's typical," County Manager Reginald Gray responded to an inquiry about his reaction to the Wooles committee's recommendation. He summed up his sentiments about the proposal by saying, "There are no funds in the county budget for a rescue service."

"I have felt all along that emergency medical service should be county-wide," McGlohon said. "The entire county should determine what the level of service should be.

But, he said, "We will continue to maintain our level of service in the city. This suggestion of the Mayor's Advisory Committee will have to be discussed jointly with the county. We will consider, and must consider, everything.

"How quickly ... It may take us longer to respond than it did for them to recommend."

Historically Greenville has been considered a leader in rescue service in North Carolina. It's mostly volunteer squad, which was formed in the late 1940s, won several state, national and international awards — many of them for heavy-duty rescue, the type requiring physical extrication of a victim from wreckage or buildings.

Over the years concern developed, especially among the volunteers, that the rescue squad was not receiving proper support from city officials. A special contention was that rescue should have direct access to the city manager and the City Council, instead of being forced to go through the Fire Department's chain of command. Volunteer spokesmen said the existing Fire Department's administration was not responsive to their needs.

Queen Escapes Injury As Teen Fires Pistol

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — A British teen-ager, described as a jobless former marine wearing a Prince Charles and Lady Diana souvenir button, ran up and fired six blanks at Queen Elizabeth II from a range of 10 feet Saturday as she rode horseback through London in a pageant watched by millions.

The monarch was startled but unhurt and continued on to the Trooping of the Color, the biggest ceremonial event of the royal calendar marking her official birthday.

Several policemen and a scarlet-coated British army guardsman pounced on the young man, who reportedly had been waiting hours for the monarch to appear. As he was dragged away in handcuffs by agents of Scotland Yard's Special Branch there were shouts in the crowd of "lynch him."

Authorities identified him as 17-year-old Marcus Simon Sarjeant of Folkstone, England, and charged him under the 1842 Treason Act with "willfully discharging at the person of Her Majesty the Queen a blank cartridge pistol with intent to alarm her."

The charge carries a maximum penalty of seven years in prison. Sarjeant was scheduled to appear Monday in Bow Street magistrates court.

The 55-year-old monarch's horse, Burmese, reared at the noise of the blanks, and one witness reported a "look of fear" flashed across the queen's face. Her husband, Prince Philip, and the heir to the throne, Prince Charles, spurred their mounts to shield the queen, seen by thousands in the crowd and millions more watching on television.

But Elizabetn, dressed in a scarlet military tunic and black riding skirt, controlled the horse, and within a minute she was again smiling and waving.

Scotland Yard sources said the attack was certain to lead to a tightening of security around the royal family — particularly before the wedding of Prince Charles to Lady Diana Spencer on July 29. Masses of visitors are expected to jam London for the event.

Neighbors of Sarjeant described him as a "quiet, well-behaved youth who never got into trouble."

Friends said he joined the Royal Marines last year but left after three months because he did not like the "bullying." The British military allows enlistees a three-month trial period.

Sargaent had been unemployed since leaving the military, his friends said, and was living with his family in a modern, three-bedroom home.

"I have known him for some time now," Sean Dixon, 16, said. "But I couldn't call him a close friend. He just wasn't like that. He never got close to anyone."

A Scotland Yard spokesman said the gunman, who had been standing in the crowd lining the royal route, fired the blanks from a "good replica" pistol — a realistic copy of a handgun that can be adapted to shoot bullets.

David Wright, 35, watching with his 9-year-old daughter Debrah, said: "I saw plumes of smoke just above ground level and heard the shots. The man was within 10 feet of the queen, alongside her.

"It was utter chaos with people shouting and screaming. Policeman ran in from everywhere. Some of them got on top of the man and hustled him off."

Rescuers Abandon Effort For Boy In Well

FRASCATI, Italy (AP) — Weary workers abandoned efforts Saturday to save 6-year-old Alfredo Rampi, trapped in a muddy well more than 72 hours and feared dead. Italians by the thousands cursed the decision and offered last-minute rescue suggestions in telephone calls to authorities.

"There has been no sign of life for more than 12 hours and it's unrealistic to expect him to be alive," said Dr. Evasio Fava, one of two physicians who had been monitoring the child's condition with listening devices.

An amateur cave explorer who slithered 200 feet down the well near Frascati, a hillside community nestled among vineyards and olive trees 15 miles south of Rome, reported at dawn that the child's body showed no signs of life.

"He's rigid. He's stiff," 24-year-old Donato Caruso told red rescue workers at the surface via walkie-talkie. A crowd of several hundred bystanders, including President Sandro Pertini, groaned. His mother, Franca, left the site in tears.

The 4-foot-3-inch Caruso entered the shaft after five other volunteers failed to rescue Alfredo from the well, which townspeople dubbed "Il Maladetto" — "The Damned" — after the child's fall Wednesday. The spelunker tried to attach a handcuff to the boy's wrist, but it slipped off.

After Caruso emerged, shivering from the cold, authorities said they would not send anyone else down the well. "It's not worth risking other human lives," a supervisor told the Italian news agency ANSA.

Instead, he said, workers would finish drilling a parallel shaft in hopes of reaching the boy's body — a process expected to take at least 24 hours.

Alfredo's father, Fernando, rushed back to the site in panic when he heard that workers had decided to resume drilling the parallel shaft.

"If the drill starts again my son will fall even deeper to where the water is ... and then it really will all be over," he said. The well is believed to be about 260 feet deep.

ANSA said a high-powered microphone lowered into the well picked up only background noise, and rescue workers planned to lower a camera into the shaft.

Drilling was not likely to start until the tests offered proof the boy was dead, the news agency said.

Since young Alfredo stumbled into the well Wednesday evening while playing at his grandparents' home, millions of Italians have followed the dramatic rescue effort in live televisison broadcasts from the scene.

In bars and restaurants, people gathered to hear the latest bulletins, and on Rome's fashionable Via Condotti, shoppers carried transistor radios.

Italy's 84-year-old president, Sandro Pertini, his dark-blue suit covered with dust, kept an all-night vigil near the mouth of the well.

Pope John Paul II sent a message to Alfredo's parents through a local bishop offering his blessing and prayer.

Police and fire officials and the state-run RAI television network reported switchboards had been flooded with calls offering advice — some from as far away as the United States and Argentina.

"Why don't you pour water through a pipe and let him float?" shouted one woman in a call to a Rome police station. Another angry caller asked why the cave explorer was not using cloth gloves to get a better grip on Alfredo's body. Still another suggested non-Italian NATO technicians be brought in "because Italians can't seem to do it right."

Twister Kills 3 In Ohio

CARDINGTON, Ohio (AP) — A tornado smashed through the center of this small town Saturday afternoon, uprooting trees, crushing cars and tearing the roofs off buildings. Three people, including one infant, were killed and at least 20 others injured, officials said.

Every store in the nine-block downtown area sustained damage as the twister ripped through town. Many parked vehicles were crushed by flying bricks and falling trees.

John Harbough, a supervisor at Morrow County Hospital in nearby Mount Gilead, said, "Donald William Carson, 9 months, died during treatment."

Harbough said another person also died during treatment, and that the third was dead on arrival. Identifications were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Gov. James A. Rhodes called out state National Guardsmen to secure the area and traveled to the north-central Ohio town of about 2,000 with the head of the state disaster services agency, said Rhodes spokesman Chuck Shipley.

Shipley said at least 20 people were injured in the storm.

The tornado ripped down Main Street, heavily damaging an apartment complex, then cut through the downtown district.

Wooles Says Financial Needs Pressing

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

What's to be done with "The Report to the Mayor and City Council from the Mayor's Advisory Committee"?

"That's up to the City Council," Dr. Wallace Wooles, general chairman of the advisory committee, said last week after the committee presented 83 recommendations to the governing board following a comprehensive study of city services that began shortly after the advisory committee was named by Mayor Don McGlohon in August 1980.

"Our committee has no authority. It is strictly an advisory committee," Wooles said, "which made recommendations to the City Council and the mayor. Further action must be up to the City Council."

The recommendations of the committee concerned a wide range of items, from annexation (such areas as the industrial park north of the city to Brook Valley, Oakgrove Estates and the Pactolus Highway area) and staggered terms for City Council members to fire and police department manpower problems.

"The most generalized problem that the committee discovered in its investigation was that Greenville, typical of smaller cities, had maintained an artificially low tax rate for many years" through reductions in the number of employees, delaying or abandoning capital improvements, not replacing equipment, "and by postponing projects that meet immediate and future civic requirements," the report emphasized.

"In my personal opinion," Wooles said, "every one of the recommendations is important. Obviously the committee feels those recommendations which would redress and correct the financial situation of Greenville are the most immediate and therefore the most important.

"We feel that revenues for the City of Greenville need to be increased to meet the present needs and the unmet needs of the past."

Also considered of major importance by Wooles and a suggestion that the council should "very seriously consider" is the recommended four-year staggered terms for City Council members. This, the committee chairman said, would give "more stability" and "ease long-term planning."

Another major point in the report, Wooles suggested, is the recommendation that the city and county set up a committee to "study a combined form of government. It will not happen in the next few years," he said, "but I think the process should be started."

The chairman noted, "What we have agreed as a committee to do is volunteer our services to speak to any interested civic or social club to explain the report and discuss it with anybody who would care to invite us.

"The report is of such a large magnitude it may require some explanation for the people. We'll be happy to talk to them and try to answer their questions."

Love 22 ... Again

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Love 22, the numerologist whose funny money was ruled legal by a magistrate on Friday, was arrested Saturday for selling it in the French Quarter without a license.

He said he posted $50 bond and was ordered to show up in court on Monday.

The $22 bills which Love 22 sells at five for a dollar first got him into trouble with the Treasury Department. U.S. Magistrate Ingard Johannesen ruled Friday that the bills don't look enough like legal tender to be illegal.

Government's So Big You Can't Say Where It Begins

By SAUL PETT
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — We begin with the sentiments of two Americans two centuries apart but joined in a symmetry of indignation.

One said this: "He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance."

The other said this: "The government is driving me nuts. The forms are so complicated I have to call my accountant at $35 an hour or my lawyer at $125 an hour just to get a translation."

The latter opinion belongs to Roger Gregory, a carpenter and small contractor of Sandy Springs, Md., a man of otherwise genial disposition.

The first statement was made by Thomas Jefferson of Monticello, Va., in the Declaration of Independence, in the bill of particulars against the king of England that launched the American Revolution.

"The government of the United States is so big you can't say where it begins and where it ends. It is owned by everybody and run by nobody." It has frustrated presidents and defied definition. It is now the subject of great debate. Here is the first article in a three-part series that offers a look at the processes, sometimes ennobling, sometimes maddening, by which the government came to be what it is.

It is one of the ironies of history that a nation born out of a deep revulsion for large, overbearing government is now itself complaining, from sea to shining sea, about large, overbearing government.

Somewhere between Thomas Jefferson and Roger Gregory, something went awry in the American growth hormone. And now, in our 40th presidency, Ronald Reagan is trying to saddle and tame a brontosaurus of unimaginable size, appetite, ubiquity and complexity.

One is often told that in a democracy the people get the government they deserve. In the process, do they also get more government than they want? Does anybody recall voting for the regulations which resulted in three years

Wooles...

"The report is of such a large magnitude it may require some explanation for the people. We'll be happy to talk to them and try to answer their questions."

Wooles emphasized, "What is important is that the issues we raised be discussed by the public. If people get informed about the issues, then people will get what they want. If nothing else happens to the report, we hope it stimulates people to study.

"I think the Council will do what is possible and practical ... give it a fair hearing."

"In general terms," according to the mayor, "the council will be discussing various of these recommendations in workshops as we go along.

"What we will try to do is priortise those that we feel need our beginning consideration ... those that relate to just the city function that we can consider without discussions with other agencies.

"Some of the recommendations we may attempt to go ahead and implement if we feel it is in the best interest of the city."

"Those recommendations involving other governmental bodies ... we'll find the time to discuss them jointly with them."

According to McGlohon, "We feel we should and must respond to the recommendations. But it will take some time for us to study and digest the report ourselves."

In the mayor's view, the recommendations which "have the most dramatic impact" on the city are "ones dealing with the turnover from the Utilities Commission, the question of annexation and its related concerns ... services that must be provided ... this type of thing," and "one or two items dealing with the county and city ... emergency medical service recommendations..."

Acknowledging, "Quite honestly, I have not read it all word for word," McGlohon said, "those three areas have the greatest impact on the community. The next one might well be four-year staggered terms for council members."

Library Program To Begin

The summer schedule of children's programs at Sheppard Memorial Library will begin Monday and run through Aug. 18. A highlight of the schedule will be the "Extra! Read All About It" reading incentive program.

Story hours for children ages 3 through 6 will be presented at the Main Library each Wednesday at 10:30 a.m., East Branch each Tuesday at 10:30 a.m. and Carver Branch each Thursday at 9 a.m. These activities will include a combination of reading, fingerplays and other educational techniques.

Films for youngsters will be presented at the Main Library each Thursday at 4 p.m., East Branch on Fridays at 4 p.m. and at Carver Library each Tuesday at 3:30 p.m.

A puppet workshop which will allow youngsters in grades 2-6 to prepare and present puppet shows will be offered at East and Carver branches. Registration will be required. This activity will be held at East Branch on Wednesdays and Fridays from 10:30-noon from June 15 to July 10. At Carver, the program will run from July 13 to Aug. 7. Times will be scheduled dependent on the registrations.

At the Main Library, an hour of book related activities, entitled "Extra Fun Club," will be held each Tuesday at 10:30 a.m. From June 16 to July 7, children in grades 1-3 can participate, while youngsters in grades 4-6 may attend July 21 through Aug. 11.

East Branch will also offer a "Dungeons and Dragons Club" each Thursday from 10:30-noon. Open to all ages, this program will feature the popular game of wit and imagination, "Dungeons and Dragons." Players must bring their own playbook and registration is required.

Tobacco Study Set For Pitt County Youth

A tobacco seminar for Pitt County youths aged 8-19 is scheduled Tuesday from 9 a.m.-4 p.m.

The seminar, which begins in room 201 of the county office building, will be sponsored by the Agricultural Extension Service, according to Dale Poanaro, Pitt County 4-H coordinator. Interested persons are asked to register as soon as possible by calling 752-2934. A fee of $1 will be charged.

The program will include a discussion by extension specialist Bill Collins of North Carolina State University of the importance of flue-cured tobacco in world tobacco trade, the different types of tobacco grown in the world and his recent trip to China.

A film also will be shown on cultural practices for tobacco. Other sections of the program involve a discussion on marketing, including the grading process.

Lunch will be followed by a tour of the Pierce farm near Farmville, where the youth will see tobacco in the field.

R.J. Reynolds has provided a grant to underwrite the seminar, which is open to all youngsters.

PCC Instructor Heads Symposium

Kay Clemens, a quilting instructor at Pitt Community College, has been named chairman of the 1982 North Carolina Quilt Symposium which will be held in Greenville on May 13-15.

Pat Reep, also a PCC instructor, will serve as co-chairman for the symposium. The event will be co-sponsored by Pitt Community College and East Carolina University. Persons who wish to be on the mailing list for the 1982 symposium may contact either Pat Reep or Kay Clemens.

Ms. Reep and Ms. Clemens studied with nationally known teachers in the quilting field during the annual North Carolina Quilt Symposium held at Guilford College in Greensboro during the week of May 30.

Should Utilities Finance City?

The Mayor's Advisory Committee, in addition to recommending county assumption of some city services, recommended additional utilities turn-over to the city and industrial area annexation as a solution to meeting some of the city's needs.

Among the suggestions was a feasibility study to determine advantages of combining agencies and services of the city with Greenville Utilities. It was also recommended that the city not pay for electricity it uses. ($240,000 is the annual figure given in the report.)

Our advice would be to go slow on this. Greenville Utilities is uniquely set up as a separate entity owned by the city. It has operated as a publicly owned corporation which, we feel, makes it a business-like operation. And, if the city pays the utilities nothing for the electricity it uses, who is to pay for the cost of purchasing the power and distributing it? Obviously it will be the customers of Greenville Utilities . . . or it will come from capital improvement funds, something we could pay a dear price for in the future.

If the Utilities becomes a department of the city it will be administered by the City Council . . . and it will be so easy to transfer Utilities construction funds to the general fund to avoid a tax increase.

Increasing the annual turn-over is fine — if we are not taking money that will be needed to keep the electric, water and sewer systems expanding and providing adequate service to Greenvillle Utilities customers. It has been our observation that negotiating a higher rate of turn-over is something that has gone on between the Council and the Commission for many years. There is nothing wrong with that and, in fact it is a good system for avoiding draining too much revenue from necessary utilities projects.

The commission has been valuable to the city in many ways, including annual return on investment, credit for work in urban renewal areas and providing the expansion of utilities needed for growth. We shouldn't move too quickly to upset something that has worked so well.

Even Pleading Won't Help Budget

The Associated Press reports the sheriff of Mecklenburg County, John K. Wall took to his knees in an effort to get more money from the county commissioners for his department.

"I implore you and ask you to give us some assistance," he pleaded in a kneeling position. "If it takes getting down on my knees, I'll beg. I ask you for some help."

Did all this bring even a tear from the hard hearted commissioners? Not on your life.

"It was good drama," one commissioner commented.

"I just don't let myself respond to lobbying tactics that are over and beyond the facts," said another.

These days politicians are bent upon depicting themselves as being tightfisted with the public's money. Turning down the pleas of a public official just helps the elected people build their image.

Sunday Morning Notes

Joanne King of the newspaper's production department was busily cleaning nickels, dimes and quarters in our lounge one day last week.

A look at the uncleaned coins showed them to be blue.

Your puzzled columnist asked the computer operator, "How did you come up with blue money?"

She explained, "They were in my purse . . . and my eyeshadow broke."

That explains it.

A pretty girl we know was eating fruit cocktail for lunch and an apple on break following the weekend.

"Why the light eating?" we asked.

I'm losing weight," she answered.

"You're losing weight?" we said. "Why, you don't have an excess ounce on you."

"Well," she explained poutingly, "I was at the beach with two guys this weekend. I had on a cute one-piece swim suit and they kept ogling all those girls in bikinis."

Clearly it was not a weight problem. The answer to this dilemma is to get a bikini.

And Hal Smith, former local resident now with Johnson Technical Institute, dropped us a line recently.

"The claim of the 'best barbecue' is always around," he said. "A town as small as Smithfield has several restuarants specializing in this Eastern N. C. meal. They even claim to furnish the raw material on four legs. But possibly someone admitted that Johnson County may raise the pigs but needs to import experts for the cookin'! One restaurant had a handlettered sign in the window: 'Bar-b-cue Pitt Cooked'."

The question was, of course, did the "Pitt" mean the cook came from Pitt County?

Well, everybody knows that authentic barbecue is synonymous with Pitt County. All that other stuff is just a crass imitation. . .

Hal also noted that the byline on the column of our esteemed conservative writer James J. Kilpatrick had shown up a couple of times as "John J. Kilpatrick."

We rushed back to the production department, found the incorrect line and tossed it away.

Change

WASHINGTON (AP) — For nearly 20 years, Republicans have been arguing among themselves over the way to rebuild the dwindling ranks of their party.

In simplest terms, the debate went this way: Conservatives called for ideological realignment of the parties to give voters a clear choice, while liberals and moderates said the way to do it was to broaden the base of the GOP even if that meant programs and policies with a Democratic flavor.

While the rival wings disputed those rival theories, the roster of voters who call themselves Republicans declined steadily.

Now that trend has turned, and dramatically so. Riding a conservative groundswell and the coattails of a popular Republican president, the GOP comes out just about even with the Democrats when pollsters ask voters which party they prefer.

"We're on the threshhold of majority status," says Republican National Chairman Richard Richards.

"In the next few years, if we relate properly to the American people, we will be the majority party," adds Richards' deputy, Chuck Bailey. "If we're successful, and I think we will be, we will involve all Americans."

Not long ago, Republicans were bemoaning their status as a shrinking minority, even while they held the White House.

But the mainstream has changed course. These are conservative times.

One of President Reagan's favorite lines is that government is not the solution, it is the problem.

Balanced budgets are popular with the voters and with both political parties. Some Democrats argue that Reagan doesn't plan to balance the budget fast enough.

There is talk, promoted by Republican leaders, that some conservative Democrats will switch parties and join the GOP before the 1982 elections. "I think we may see ... a realignment of parties, and some of these people coming over to join us," Richards says.

That's what conservatives were saying all those years. But it hasn't happened yet. Nor is there any way to measure the durability of the Republican climb in the polls, at least not now. Congressional elections are nearly 18 months away, and the success rate of Reagan's economic programs will be a major factor in shaping that campaign.

Still, the Republicans are doing very nicely in the only measurements available now.

An Associated Press-NBC News poll showed more Americans say they would vote for Republican congressional candidates than for Democrats if the elections were held now — the first time since the Dwight D. Eisenhower era that Republicans have held the lead in such surveys.

Forty-three percent of those questioned said they would vote for the Republican candidate for the House, 35 percent picked the Democrat, 22 percent weren't sure.

The survey on May 18-19 showed a dramatic shift in party identification as well. Twenty-eight percent of those questioned said they usually think of themselves as Republicans, 31 percent identified with the Democrats, 36 percent called themselves independents, and the rest weren't sure.

When the same 1,599 people were asked how they lean in preference between the two major parties, it came out 41 percent Republican, 40 percent Democratic and the rest insisting they were firmly independent.

Richard Wirthlin, Reagan's pollster, said his survey on a similar question showed 39 percent of Americans regard themselves as Republicans, 40 percent as Democrats, 21 percent as independants.

A year or so ago, surveys like those were showing a 20 percentage point margin in favor of the Democrats.

Tar Heels May Head Top City, County Groups

RALEIGH — Never before has North Carolina provided a top leader for either the National Association of Counties or the National League of Cities.

Richard Condor, chairman of the Richmond County Board of Commissioners, is first vice president of the National Association of Counties, and was to step up to the presidency in 1982.

But John Spellman, that group's president-elect, was elected governor of the state of Washington, so Condor will take office in July at the meeting of counties in Louisville, Ky.

Fred Harrison, mayor of Scotland Neck, had been elected second vice president of the National League of Cities last fall, putting him on track to become first vice president and then president.

But St. Louis Mayor James F. Conway lost a re-election bid and dropped his post as first vice president of the league.

Tobacco Tax

Nearly half of all cigarettes made in the United States are made in North Carolina. Future expansion of that industry in this state should be on the minds of legislators who are now mulling a manufacturer's tax of two-cents per pack, says Phillip H. Smith, executive director of the Greater Concord Chamber of Commerce-Merchants Association.

Smith, who heads the economic development organization in an area where a new Phillip Morris plant is under construction, warns that the proposed tax would amount to $320 million per year which is nearly as much as the entire wages and salaries paid in cigarette manufacturing in 1979, which totaled $397 million.

George Bush Says 'We Need To Do Better'

WASHINGTON — George Bush, while determined to be a vice president who never disagrees with his president, contends "we need to do better" in convincing minority groups that Ronald Reagan believes in fair play for them.

"I think we've got a problem in this whole field of communication with blacks and Hispanics and women," Bush told us in an exclusive interview in his White House office. But he hinted no disagreement with President Reagan on this or any other issue.

On the contrary, Bush revealed he was following "some fair advice" from his Democratic predecessor, Walter F. Mondale: "If you disagree or have something that is a personal observation about the way something's running ... It's better to do that in private (rather than) speak up in a Cabinet meeting with a dramatic (announcement)." According to Bush, Mondale advised him to tell the president "what you think" but "don't make some crusade" in public.

In fact, Bush agreed to the interview with us only on the basis of conditions intended to prevent possible friction with Reagan: no discussion of the White House struggle with Secretary of State Alexander Haig; no discussion of personalities in the administration; no discussion of meetings in the administration; no information provided off the record or on a background basis.

What he called an incorrect perception of Reagan's attitude toward minority groups was stressed by Bush as the condition that most needed changing.

"I feel very comfortable with what I know the president's approach to be," Bush said. "But I don't think we've gotten that clearly across to people." This failure, he added, is "heightened by some of the (black) leaders, who claim this crowd doesn't care. We do care."

Bush's comments suggested he is becoming Reagan's emissary to the black community. He said "one of the great civil rights leaders" (whom he declined to identity) had questioned whether it was wise for the vice president to deliver the commencement address at predominantly black Howard University in Washington last month.

Bush quoted the black leader as saying: "How can you do it? What are you going to say?" According to the vice president, "I said, 'Don't worry about it, I'll go out there and do all right — get out in one piece.' I think it worked out that way."

He said Reagan "cares very, very deeply" about the murders of young blacks in Atlanta and personally approved financial help asked by the city that was "very difficult in terms of the budget." Bush said it was "a manifestation of concern, but I don't know that others know that."

Bush indicated fear of an adverse reaction from blacks resulting from Reagan administration proposals, not yet determined, to change the affirmative action program. "I think what counts is what you really feel in terms of discrimination or a fair chance at the starting line," Bush said. "He (Reagan) feels very strongly."

Similarly, Bush expressed concern about black reaction to a change in the Voting Rights Act likely to be proposed by Reagan. The administration will have to make clear that its proposal "is motivated by a sense of fair play, and I do think we need to do better on it."

While putting himself forward as defender of the president on minority questions, Bush refused to play liberal critic of the administration's conservative stance on social issues. He said he backs Reagan in supporting a constitutional amendment to prohibit abortion, which was opposed by Bush as a presidential candidate last year.

Does that switch to the anti-abortion position bother Bush? "No," he said, adding: "If it did, I wouldn't discuss it, because I don't think the way to be effective is to highlight differences.

"I feel very compatible and comfortable with the major thrusts the man is making in both foreign and domestic policy. It's a good job. Everyone knocks it, but I also notice a helluva lot of people have wanted it."

Declaring "I don't think I've every worked harder," Bush said he was "not looking for" specific duties other than his chairmanship of the regulatory task force. That, he said, was his only designated regular responsibility. The highly publicized selection of Bush instead of Haig as crisis manager gave him a post, Bush said, that is "a very limited, surrogate thing for the president."

Tenn-Tom Has Gone Too Far To Quit Now

WASHINGTON — Of all the political ailments that afflict the Congress, none is more irritating than the condition known as Macbeth's syndrome. We are seeing it today in the matter of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway. Those who oppose this costly project may as well concede defeat. My brothers, we have been bamboozled.

For those unfamiliar with the aches and pains of congressional exercise, let it be said that the syndrome develops from this quandary: shall we throw good money after bad? Is it better to go ahead with a doubtful project or to end the venture and absorb the losses?

This was the problem that troubled the late Lord Macbeth. He and his lady had embarked upon an enterprise that he couldn't get out of. "I am in blood stepp'd in so far," quoth he, "that should I wade no more, returning were as tedious as go o'er." Macbeth kept going; and he came, as they say, to a Bad End.

So it goes with the Tenn-Tom. This is the 232-mile waterway — the largest project currently under construction by the Corps of Engineers — intended to connect the Tennessee River with the existing Black Warrior-Tombigbee Waterway down in Alamaba. From the very beginning, the justification of this project has been doubtful. Strong opposition developed when the Tenn-Tom was authorized in 1946. More opposition mobilized before construction began in 1971. Two or three times since then, the project has barely survived attempts to kill it.

But we are now in this intractable situation: The waterway is 53 to 55 percent complete. More than $1 billion has been spent on this colossal ditch. If construction were stopped dead in its tracks tomorrow, perhaps $600 million in further outlays might be prevented — but the billion dollars already invested would be lost. What to do?

Such a question is now unknown on Capitol Hill. A few years back, Macbeth's syndrome affected a plan to subsidize construction of a prototype supersonic transport plane. There the decision was to stop the loss and get out. The situation arose again in the matter of another palatial Senate office building; in this case the decision was to plunge ahead. Opposing forces still are battling over the proposed breeder reactor at Clinch River: Do we kiss that investment goodbye, or do we keep going?

My own view, for whatever it may be worth, is that the Tenn-Tom never should have been started in the first place. The principal justification was that vast amounts of money could be saved in shipping costs if mid-America could be linked to the Deep South by a waterway winding up in Mobile and the Gulf. The Tenn-Tom, it was said, would provide an alternate water route for use at times of low water in the Mississippi. Other justifications were thrown in as makeweights — recreational opportunities, increased employment, social uplift, picnic tables, waterskiing, you name it.

A new study from the General Accounting Office, just released, once gain casts doubt upon the rosy visions of the Tenn-Tom sponsors. The projected savings in freight costs are still ephemeral. Whatever is gained by the barge operators will be lost by the railways. If the Tenn-Tom ever is to pay its way, in terms of a benefit-to-cost ratio, still more money must be spent between Demopolis and Mobile — perhaps as much as another $960 million over the next 16 years. Before the turn of the century, the taxpayers could be dragged step by step into a $3 billion venture.

To say that Tenn-Tom never should have been started isn't to say much. Things have gone too far to quit now. The waterway will have to be compelted at least to Demopolis, and a sinking feeling tells me that three or four years hence, Congress will have to yield to irresistible arguments that the Demopolis-Mobile improvements be undertaken also.

Under the circumstances, we may as well as accept the situation. Perhaps coal exports will justify the heavy investment by Alabama in new port facilities at Mobile. Other navigational improvements of doubtfull justification have turned out well. The Tenn-Tom may yet prove its critics wrong. I've been wrong lots of times before.

To the Editor:

Almost everyone readily accepts the right of a Lamaze-prepared couple to share in the natural birth of their baby. Hundreds of Greenville couples have had the opportunity to experience this most joyous of events. But what about the couple who discovers several weeks, hours, or even minutes before the expected arrival of their infant that it will have to be born by cesarean. Are the emotional needs of the cesarean couple being met?

Not so, as was exemplified in a recent television interview with Bob and Susan Nasnher, a local couple who are expecting a baby by cesarean. Mr. Nasher's request to remain with his wife through her surgery and receive their newborn infant was denied. The Nashners will have their baby at a hospital in Winston-Salem that allows husbands into the operating room.

This practice is not unusual in many other parts of the country — indeed it has become the norm. It is accepted in hospitals as nearby as Morehead City, Jacksonville and Goldsboro. Greenville prides itself in being the hub of progressive, optimum health care for eastern North Carolina, but it appears that Pitt Memorial could learn much from these smaller hospitals concerning policy changes that would benefit the needs of the cesarean family.

A cesarean support group has been formed in Greenville and we would welcome letters reflecting community concern. Our address is P.O. Box 2144, ECU Station, Greenville, N.C. 27834. We are a totally non-profit organization dedicated to supporting and encouraging policy changes that will improve family-centered cesarean care, providing education and information concerning the cesarean birth experience and extending emotional support to cesarean families.

Billy Arthur Did 'The Tasks I Could Do'

Back around 1959, on a day when eastern North Carolina was blanketed with snow, the reading clerk of the state House of Representatives did not show up for his chores. Instead, Billy Arthur sent the speaker a telegram from his home in Chapel Hill saying he couldn't get to Raleigh because he was up to his middle in snow.

The message did not exaggerate matters much, for Billy was and is only 42 inches tall. It was not only an accurate description, but it reflected the sense of humor that helped him become an entertainer, newspaper reporter, columnist, editor, publisher, legislator and businessman.

Billy simply did not permit his short stature to dwarf his achievements. People who know him well soon forget about his size.

"My family never treated me as if I were something curious and different," Billy told a reporter a few years ago. "They treated me as a human being who, like any other human being, could do some things and couldn't do others. I was given the tasks I could do."

In 1925, when he was only 14, Billy made his debut as a radio entertainer on WBT in Charlotte, doing a weekly song show. He was billed as "A Yard of Fun."

Before enrolling at the University of North Carolina in 1930, he toured Lowe's Vaudeville Circuit, singing "ballards and tearjerkers." He belted out "Carolina Moon" to audiences from Montreal to New Orleans.

Billy remembers Jimmy Durante as the "finest man I ever met in show business." From vaudeville, he landed a spot lin a musical comedy called "Heigh Ho" which folded before it reached Broadway. That cast included dancer Russ Brown, trumpeter Henry Busse and a brother-sister dance team billed as Fred and Adele Astair.

Billy graduated from UNC in 1933 with a journalism degree and had planned to attend law school. But on the day he enrolled, a hurricane struck the coast and publisher N.G. Gooding offered Billy a job on the New Bern Tribue.

"I put up a sign, 'Law Books for Sale,' and took the job at $9 a week," Billy recalled.

After seven years of reporting and writing a column for the Tribune, Billy bought a weekly newspaper, The Jacksonville News and Views, becoming his own boss just before the advent of the Camp Lejeune Marine Base sent population in Jacksonville and Onslow County soaring. It also helped Billy transform his paper into a profitable five-day daily.

Billy was elected to the 1943 and 1945 Legislatures, but he says "the finest thing that happened to me there was I met Edith."

Edith Harris of Elizabeth City, an attractive woman of normal height, was serving as an agricultural extension home agent when she met the young publisher. They were married in 1950.

Four years later, after Billy sold the newspaper, they moved to Chapel Hill where they built a comfortable, spacious house designed to meet the needs of little people — with doorknobs and lavatories nearer the floor than usual and with outside exits from each bedroom to improve safety in case of fire.

The house reflected what must have been the disappointment of Billy's life: His children, Annis and Billy Arthur Jr., also are dwarfs — "shorter than I am," says Billy. Family friends said doctors assured Edith and Billy when they were married that any children born of the wedlock would be of normal height.

At Chapel Hill, Billy senior wrote a column — "Aint it so?" — for 22 weeklies, did public relations work, ran a clipping service and worked for the Chapel Hill Weekly before he and Edith opened a hobby and craft shop.

Billy served as reading clerk for the House from 1955 through the 1961 session.

To the editor:

I cannot believe that Winn Dixie, who splashed the fact that they are entirely "American" owned in a full-page ad in this paper, could so easily forget the spirit of free enterprise that is an American way of life. To so deliberately take away from the grand opening of FoodTown is a low blow and to make it sould like it was an all-American good deed to the people of Greenville was even lower.

Granted, we may not need another supermarket chain in town, but "Free Enterprise" is the name of the game and FoodTown should have just as much chance as any other chain to serve the people of Greenville.

I hope Greenville citizens are not as narrow-minded as W/D and will at least give the new business a chance to prove or disprove its claims. I for one will.

Reagan

PRINCETON, N.J. — The public's confidence in President Ronald Reagan's ability to make good on three important campaign pledges — to roll back inflation, to reduce the size of the federal government and to increase respect for the U.S. abroad — has increased markedly since last November, with solid majorities now believing he will be successful in these efforts.

In fact, President Reagan's continued high level of popularity may be largely due to these perceptions on the part of the public.

Increased optimism in these areas is common to most population groups but is especially striking among Democrats.

Six Americans in 10 now believe Reagan will be able to reduce inflation. In addition, as reported recently, a majority of the public thinks the Reagan administration's economic plan will work and only one-third believe the budget cuts the plan entails are too drastic.

In a Gallup Poll conducted three weeks after Reagan's victory last November, only 46 percent of Americans thought he would be able to reduce inflation in contrast to 60 percent at present. Public expectations that the president will be able to increase respect for the U.S. in the world have also grown, from 62 percent in November to the current 68 percent.

On the issue of reducing unemployment, no change in the public's expectations has been found, with 47 percent and 48 percent in the November and May surveys, respectively, feeling Reagan will be able to accomplish thia goal.

Following are the questions asked and a comparison of the national findings from the November and May surveys:

"Do you think the Reagan administration will or will not be able to:

— Reduce inflation?
— Reduce unemployment?
— Reduce the size of the federal government?
— Balance the budget?
— Increase respect for the U.S. abroad?"

Money-Tree Blues

NEW YORK (AP) — As any struggling American household knows, money doesn't grow on trees. But it certainly does on charts and graphs that aren't adjusted for the almost constant changes in dollar values.

If you chanced upon an unadjusted bar graph of family incomes, for example, you would find yourself gazing at what appeared to be a giant redwood showing 1970's $10,000 income had soared to $22,477 in 1981.

But if you then adjusted that 1981 income for the ravages of inflation and taxes you would find that what appeared to be a redwood was more akin to a stunted pine. The $22,477 would buy no more than the $10,000.

This analysis comes from the Conference Board, that ubiquitous, non-profit, largely business supported, economic and business research and educational organization that deals in realities rather than dreams.

As one of its projects, it decided to find out how much a family of four would have to earn (pretax) in 1981 if it were to have the same financial power as in 1970, when its pretax income was $10,000.

In 1970, it determined, the $10,000 income would have been lessened by $986 in federal income taxes and $374 in Social Security taxes, leaving after-tax buying power of $8,640. Actually, the net would be even less because of local and state taxes, but since these vary from area to area the Conference Board decided to omit them from comparisons.

Running the figures through its computers, it then found that the same family in 1981 would have to earn $22,477 simply to stay even in terms of buying power. The numbers had soared; the buying power had not.

The greatest loss, no less than $9,746, was to inflation. Federal income taxes took another $2,597, and Social Security taxes accounted for a deduction of $1,495. The net in 1970 dollars: $8,640.

Stated another way, says the Conference Board, inflation and taxes have shrunk the 1970 dollar to only 47 cents today. The median income family, it concludes, is better off today by only 656 real dollars.

The illusions will continue to persist, however, and so will the disillusionment of a people nourished on the notion that, materially, things almost always get better and better in the United States.

How, people ask, can you figure out where you are financially if the calibrations on the measuring stick keep changing? Confusion abounds.

— A middle-age doctor winds up in the office of a financial counselor because, his income having tripled in the past decade, he decides to put financial sacrifices behind him and buy a Mercedes.

— A young couple, buying no more than they did two years ago, finds to their shock that the're running one overdraft after another in their checking account.

— Americans prepare to celebrate in 1982 the world's first $3 trillion economy when, measured in constant dollars, the gross national product at that time will likely be only a bit more than half that.

It takes a while. Many people — and institutions such as the U.S. government — still haven't adjusted to the idea that the all-American dollar is a shifty thing rather than an exemplar of stability.

They look at the forests of charts and graphs and they see redwoods. If they examined the trees, of course, they'd find stunted scrub pines.

Rock Salt Fills The Bill... Too Late

That afternoon was miserably hot and sticky. Zachary was toddling around the house in only a diaper, his hair matted to his head with perspiration. Meg and I were on our way to the swimming pool in hope of getting an hour's respite from the heat.

All I can say in my defense is that my mental capacity drops as the temperature rises. Otherwise, I would never have even considered Phillip's suggestion.

"Why don't I try out the new ice cream freezer?" he had asked.

I could almost taste the sweet coldness running down mu throat. "Great! That's a fabulous idea!" I hurried to find a recipe for strawberry ice cream and to write down the ingredients that he should buy at the store.

"Strawberries, a large can of evaporated milk, vanilla extract, whole milk," I wrote as Meg tugged at my bathing suit and implored me to make haste.

That was my first mistake. Sending Phillip to the grocery store with a checkbook is like sending a wino into a liquor store to buy a bottle of Club Soda on credit.

My second mistake was to allow Phillip to mix anything more elaborate than scrambled eggs.

Meg and I got back from the pool expecting to find delicious refreshment awaiting us. Instead, the kitchen looked as if the cast of Saturday Night Live had just filmed a food fight there.

Two coolers full of ice cream sat on one counter. Four large dirty bowls, two measuring cups, and every utensil including the potato masher littered the other counter. The beaters were dripping egg onto the base of the mixer. Yellow goo was spattered everywhere. Zachary was examining the contents of the trashcan while Phillip threw ice at the freezer humming in the sink.

I looked around in dismay. "I thought you'd be finished by now."

He was confident. "It took me awhile to cut up the strawberries, but it won't be long now."

"But I have to fix supper."

"Go ahead."

I picked my way through the clutter to the refrigerator. When I opened the door, I found three gallons of whole milk, each with an expired freshness date. "Why in the world did you buy so much milk?" I groaned.

"I didn't know how much I would need."

I got a sick feeling in the pit of my stomach. "Haven't you made ice cream before?"

"No, but there's nothing to it."

An hour passed as I drew water from the bathroom and made supper. (I couldn't get within three feet of the kitchen sink.) Still, the ice cream wasn't done.

"It sure is taking a long time," I said. "Are you sure you put in enough salt?"

He looked puzzled. "What salt?"

"Rock salt - you know, the kind you make ice cream with."

"Oh, that salt. Do we have any?"

Twenty minutes later we sat down to the contents of the freezer. Only the strawberries were frozen. I was finding it hard to speak civilly to my spouse, but he didn't seem to notice. "Now tell me truthfully," he said as he slurped the thick soup. "Wasn't it worth it?"

I surveyed the wreckage of my kitchen and thought about the supermarket checkout slip for $16.47 lying on the counter. Then I choked down my strawberry, checked to see if my fillings were intact, and gave him my answer.

"No!"

Facing South: 'Good Old Boy' Lives On

LAVONIA, GA. — Every now and then a newspaper story pops up claiming the Good Old Boy is an endangered species in the South. Don't you believe it. Whoever writes those things must travel exclusively by interstate highway. If you want to see beasts of the Southern wild, you've got to follow country roads and the side streets and alleyways of the small towns.

I worked six years for as many newspapers in the backwaters of North Carolina and Georgia. One evening not long after I had assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in a small Georgia mountain town, I turned on the local TV news and saw the man called "Brown" for the first time. He had an unusual way with wasps that got him three minutes of air play.

Brown was news, and he lived in the southern part of the county, my county. If I'd been working for a daily paper, I'd have gulped my coffee, grabbed my noteboook and camera and rushed off to interview him. But since I was working on a weekly, I finished my breakfast, refilled my cup and crawled back into bed to do the crossword puzzle.

One afternoon a couple of days later, I was sitting in the office looking out the window when I saw a city councilman coming down the street, headed my way, intent, I knew, upon engaging me in a meaningful dialogue about the town's sewage system. 'Ere he laid a hand on the doorknob, I was out the back and on my way to interview Brown.

Brown lived in a shack at the end of a dirt road on the bank of Ruin Creek. "I'm 78 years old," he told me. It was a lie. He wasn't more than 60. His close-cut white hair and ruddy complexion made his eyes seem all the more blue. They sparkled with pure devilment.

Brown's talent was possibly unique and definitely strange. He could go up to a wasps nest, catch the little blighters by their wings, put them down his shirt and in his mouth and not get stung. Why he cared to do this remained unclear. When asked how he managed to escape injury, Brown looked me squarely in the eye and said: "You gotta have faith."

Brown's only other employment was harvesting wild ginseng root in the woods. He hung them to dry from the rafters of his tin-roofed porch and sold them at the co-op in town.

He had a dog. "A pure bred toy shepherd," he said. Take my word, it was a goat.

All you had to do was shuffle a deck of cards and Brown would appear like a genie conjured from a Mason jar. He was a notorious cheat, but it was easy to send him packing. If anyone brought out a new deck, he'd look at his watch and say: "Oh, Lordy me! Is it that late? I got to be getting home!"

As he raked in a pot, Brown was fond of saying: "Gentlemen, I don't want your money. I just want your friendship."

"Well in that case, can I have my money back?" I asked.

"Ain't that friendly."

One sunny spring afternoon, Brown took an adjustable wrench and knocked out A.C. Newcome's teeth over some difference of opinion. It wouldn't be mentioned if it had ended there. But Brown had a real flair for things. He took the teeth and glued them to the hood of his pickup truck along with a sign identifying them as "A.C. Newcome's Teeth" and rode up and down Main Street, a one-man parade.

He came by the newspaper office and wanted me to take a picture of him and his trophy for the next edition. I took the picture, all right, but not for the paper. I thought a jury might find it enlightening. The matter never came to trial, however. It was generally agreed that Brown had ample provocation.

I edited the newspaper there for a year before moving on. I keep the picture as a reminder. Of what, I don't know.

Strength For Today

Americans have always been known in some parts of the world as dollar-chasers. According to some recent medical reports, this tendency can have some very unfortunate physical side-effects. Doctors have found that emotional upsets over money can cause all sorts of symptoms of physical illness. Headaches, stomach trouble, and back pains are among the ailments which can be traced to "money-sickness".

Since the beginning of recorded history, the greatest religious leaders and philosophers have preached the dangers of materialism. Their words are still true. Money alone will not bring happiness. Financial, social, political success will not bring happiness. Happiness comes from spiritual, not material success — from the inside, not from the outside.

Try it yourself! See if going to church won't do you more good than going to the bank. — Elisha Douglass

Oil Glut Is Bringing Old-Time Gas Wars...Except For The Prices

By ROZ LISTON
United Press International

The world oil glut is beginning to give American motorists a long-awaited break at the pump, but analysts say even gasoline price wars will bring only modest reductions.

In May wholesale gasoline prices dropped by 1.8 percent and heating oil prices by 1.2 percent — the first decline in more than three years — because of cost-inspired conservation, the Labor Department reported.

Last week six of the largest U.S. gasoline marketers cut wholesale gasoline prices by as much as 3.2 cents a gallon primarily in the Midwest and South, reflecting intense local competition to lure motorists to the pump.

"There is fierce price sensitivity in the marketplace," said Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Los Angeles-based Lundberg Letter, which tracks gasoline prices.

"Under President Reagan's Jan. 28 decision that decontrolled domestic crude oil and gasoline prices to stimulate U.S. energy production, the consumer has gotten a better deal from the free market than from years of regulation," he said.

Industry observers said gasoline price wars have erupted in some parts of the Midwest and the South despite the arrival of the summer driving season, when pump prices historically have risen to take advantage of peak demand.

"Last week's moderate price drops must be viewed in light of the fact that oil companies are making market-by-market adjustments after almost 10 years of regulated supplies and prices," Lundberg cautioned. "These price declines are a true reflection of supply and demand on a regional basis."

Decontrol added almost 8 cents a gallon to the average U.S. pump price, which hit a record $1.377 a gallon in March, as refiners passed along higher domestic crude costs to the U.S. motorist, Lundberg said.

The average retail gasoline price now has fallen by 2.3 cents to $1.354 a gallon.

But Lundberg dismissed projections by some analysts that the global oil surplus — now running 2 to 3 million barrels a day in excess of demand — could trigger a 10 cent-a-gallon price retreat at the U.S. pump by yearend.

"Such a reduction would mean that the 5.6 cents a gallon that remains on the pump as the result of Reagan's decontrol order would be wiped out, which is an impossibility since the nation's producers have already made large capital investments in expanded domestic drilling and exploration," Lundberg said.

Analysts said U.S. refiners are reluctant to mark down gasoline and other petroleum products substantially until they have firmer evidence that world oil prices will buckle.

Haig Plans Defense Talks With Chinese

HONG KONG (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. will explore ways to bolster China's defenses against increasing Soviet military pressure during his visit to Peking, a senior U.S. official said Saturday.

Haig, who is carrying a letter from President Reagan for China's leaders, will leave here Sunday for a four-day visit to Peking, the first by a top official of the Reagan administration.

Officials declined to discuss the contents of the letter, but it was believed to contained an invitation for Premier Zhao Ziyang to visit the United States.

A U.S. official who briefed reporters on the trip Saturday said a main topic in the talks with Chinese leaders, including Defense Minister Geng Biao, will be ways of confronting Soviet military moves in the region.

"We plan to listen to his views on how the United States might be helpful in insuring China has an adequate defense against increasing Soviet pressure, direct and indirect — indirect primarily through Vietnamese proxies," the official said.

The official said Haig is willing "to discuss the broad framework" of arms sales to Peking. However, officials have said they don't anticipate much Chinese interest in purchasing large quantities of U.S. arms.

Foreign military experts said China is more interested in upgrading its armed forces with sophisticated technology, rather than in purchasing expensive jets or tanks.

The official briefed reporters with the understanding he not be identified. But he holds a very senior rank in the State Department and in the administration and is in a position to accurately reflect Haig's own thinking.

Haig was in Hong Kong for two days of rest and preparation for his visit to China. Following his visit to Peking, he will travel to the Philippines and New Zealand for high-level conferences before returning to Washington to report to the president.

The senior official said Haig's trip to China is a clear demonstration of "President Reagan's own appreciation for the importance of our relationship with the People's Republic of China, a friendly non-aligned country with which strategic relations are a strategic imperative."

"This trip is, in effect, a continuation of a long-standing, hard-fought and delicately managed process that began almost 14 years ago," the official said. Formal diplomatic relations were established in 1979.

The official also said that the relationship between the United States and China is "far more important" now than previously because of "the growing presence of Soviet military capability in the region, bridging off the close Hanoi-Moscow relationship."

He specifically cited a threat to the region from the Soviet use of a naval base and sophisticated "intelligence collection facility" at Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam.

He said a growing Soviet naval presence in Southeast Asia poses a threat to key shipping lanes in the Pacific and to U.S. bases in the Philippines.

He said the "sensitive subject" of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan may be raised by the Chinese during the visit.

Breakfast Gets Funds For Hobby

DURHAM, N.C. (UPI) — About 200 supporters of indicted state AFL-CIO President Wilbur Hobby gathered Saturday for a $10-a-plate breakfast to raise money for Hobby's impending federal court battle.

Hobby and two other men were indicted by a federal grand jury in February on charges of conspiracy and fraud involving the use of money from the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act at a printing company owned by the state labor leader.

Organizers of Saturday's breakfast said they raised more than $2,000 for Hobby's defense.

The Rev. W.W. Finlator, a Raleigh minister who is chairman of the North Carolina Civil Rights Advisory Commission, told Hobby's supporters the federal charges may be a blessing in disguise.

"It may be that we are going to find a blessing out of the prosecution of Wilbur," Finlator said. "We are not here to defend Wilbur but to defend the powerless."

Hobby supporters have charged he is being prosecuted because of a "vicious and well-financed attack" funded by the Congressional Club, a conservative political organization with close ties to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

Rescue ...

That concern developed into all-out animosity in 1979 when the volunteers again sought direct access and were greeted with a City Council decision to establish a joint Fire-Rescue Department with each paid employee cross-trained for rescue and firefighting capabilities. That training began and, in February 1980, the volunteers bowed out.

In the next few months, Greenville's paid rescue personnel rebelled. Seven of 13 left within a few weeks. Of the six remaining paid rescue personnel, those who were trained in intravenous techniques volunteered their off-duty services to the Winterville Rescue Squad — which provides the highest level of emergency service in Pitt County.

Allen says the unrest within the department has subsided, and labels morale as being good. He noted that 10 fire-rescue personnel have "volunteered" to assist in emergencies during their off-duty hours. Those men have been provided radios by the department to facilitate their call back when needed.

According to Allen, all but five employees of the department have been trained in both rescue and firefighting.

Allison and many of the former volunteer and paid rescue personnel have called for advanced levels of rescue in Greenville, utilizing the medical assistance at PCMH, as the basis of improved EMS procedures in the 29-county area served by the hospital.

Allen expresses indifference to any advancement of the service level, although some of the former paid rescue personnel had been trained in the use of IVs — the next step before going into a full paramedic program.

Although he said "any additional training is good," Allen observed that "'paramedics' is getting into doctor business."

"I think the bottom line is that fire, rescue and police departments are a first response. It doesn't matter what happens, they are the first responders," Allen said.

Under the current system, Allen said personnel assigned to rescue vehicles routinely respond to fire calls with assigned firefighting personnel.

Asked if he would welcome assistance from the former volunteers, Allen replied: "I feel like there's always room to use good volunteers. But in these days when just about everybody works ... Whether or not you can really depend on a volunteer is the bottom line."

The Wooles committee, reflecting criticism from the volunteers, recommended that Allen move toward "regular scheduling to reflect the primary area of interest of each person involved" in his department. The committee also suggested that a "concerted effort be made to develop a career path plan for each individual."

The committee concurred in the concept of crosstraining, but Allison reaffirmed his declaration earlier this year that the program "has been a bust."

"I think it's pretty much the same situation. There are two major problems: morale — the EMTs (emergency medical technicians) who were intimately involved in rescue have felt shortchanged, and the fire people did not really want rescue. That's one of the burning issues. Also, the preeminence of the Greenville Rescue Squad has fallen in statute. They used to be competitotrs internationally, and now that's no longer a rallying point."

Overall, Allison said, "Basic rescue services are at a high standard in Greenville city in spite of the political problems.

"I feel that one of the major issues is that in Pitt County, and especially Greenville city where we have a high density of rescue calls, we do not have the advanced capability of which we are capable. We do not have an intermediate capability or the full paramedic capabilities that would allow us to administer IVs and drug therapy in the pre-hospital phase.

"The Greenville fire-rescue component averages 200 to 250 calls per month. Out of that we are definitely seeing a high proportion of calls that would necessitate advanced procedures, IVs, drugs, etc., in order to just help people breathe," Allison said.

"What I would propose is that we would, relatively soon, evolve through the intermediate level on to the paradmedic level here in Greenville city and have the capability of major response here in the city. We (physicians in radio contact) could help them make a diagnosis and ask that oxygen therapy be instituted and an IV — a 'lifeline' — and medications as needed."

Allison also stressed that he does not want to see a volunteer squad forgotten. "I think they are absolutely essential," he said.

Hadley, chairman of the Committee for Continually Improving Rescue Services to Greenville, said his group is still active but has kept a low profile recently in hope the city would act to upgrade the rescue service. His committee supported the volunteers' call for separate agencies.

"We feel it (fire-rescue) should be separated for administrative purposes. The fire department was created when there was a need. The police department was created when there was a need. There's a need for a rescue department, and I see nothing wrong with creating a new department.

Hadley said he does not believe the joint Fire-Rescue Department is "working out."

"I think it's just deteriorating. There's no question in my mind ... I hate to see it go through another year. I think a public service as important as that is ... when a change in administrative direction can destroy that, and it has destroyed it. There's no doubt about it."

There is no factual or statistical information available to compare the present rescue service with that of the volunteers. Rescue squads are virtually autonomous, and are not subject to governmental control except for periodic certification of their training.

Mayors Criticize President's Economic Policies

By DON McLEOD
AP Political Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The nation's mayors opened their annual meeting Saturday with a blast at President Reagan's manners as well as his economic policies, accusing him of snubbing their chairman and proposing budget and tax cuts that could destroy the cities.

Mayor Henry Maier of Milwaukee even called Reagan's treatment of Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Ind., "shameful," and demanded a White House apology.

Republican mayors fought back as a highly partisan split developed among the mayors, but even the GOP city executives called for more local voice in the programs that Reagan wants to turn over to the states through block grants.

While local officials have been aiming most of the rhetoric, criticism and fears recently at state governments which would administer the new grants, the fire turned directly on Reagan Saturday in the first frontal assault on the new president by a major block of public officials.

Hatcher, the conference president, accused Reagan of "a cavalier abandonment of the cities," in his plan to turn over to the states many programs now funded and directed from Washington.

But Hatcher and Maier, both Democrats, also accused Reagan of deliberately shutting Hatcher and other critics out of White House conferences on the economic program and of offering mayors "a snow job" instead of serious consultation.

"Just this past week about 60 mayors have been invited to the White House," Hatcher said. "There was a purposeful exclusion of the president of the U.S. Conference of Mayors from those meetings."

Maier was even more critical, saying "I don't think that there is any parallel in my memory" to the White House treatment of Hatcher. He said mayors had met with past presidents of both parties and "didn't go in there to get a snow job, and I can't remember but one instance when a member of the opposition was blocked from entering the White House."

"This has been a horrible thing for Mayor Hatcher," Maier said. "This man particularly has had to do a great deal of soul searching, and he has had to come out expressing his views. And I think it is shameful that the office of the president allows itself to be soiled by this kind of pettiness ..."

"I also think it is a bad mistake to just take our mayors in there and not allow them to come forward, or ask them to come forward with our views," Maier said.

Maier said as a Democrat he had argued forcefully with former President Carter when such issues had come up at the Carter White House, "and I think that all the mayors should have the same opportunity with the present White House."

"I think an apology is due Mayor Richard Hatcher," Maier said, "not just because he's president of this conference, but because he's one of the outstanding men in America today."

Hatcher, speaking at the conference's opening news conference, said Reagan plans "to dismantle the intergovernmental relationship that has developed over the years between the federal, state and local government."

Abortion Stand Avoided

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. (AP) — Restating its position that the legal option of medically-supervised abortions should be kept open, the annual conference of the Western N.C. United Methodist Church refused to take a stand against abortion during its Saturday morning session.

The conference also refused to approve petitions calling for prohibition of avowed homosexual ministers since the church already has adequate provisions against homosexuality.

The church stated opposition to any efforts to limit or reduce funding of needed abortions for poor women. It also urged United Methodists to acquaint themselves with proposals such as the Helms-Hyde legislation that would make it illegal to terminate a pregnancy under any circumstances.

Rev. Frank Edwards, chairman of the Board of Ordained Ministry, made reference to several portions of the Discipline that deal with the issue.

"We do not condone the practice of homosexuality and consider this practice incompatible with Christian teaching," Edwards said.

COSTLY SMUGGLING

BULAWAY, Zimbabwe (AP) — The government is cracking down on emerald and currency smuggling, which Home Affairs Minister Richard Hove says costs the country as much as $14 million a year in lost revenue.

A SYMBOL OF GOOD WILL — Mayor Donald C. McGlohon presented 1981 Student Ambassador Shaun Wallace, a rising senior at J.H. Rose High School, with a key to the City of Greenville Friday. Easter Seals Softball Event Under Way

"The biggest event of its kind in the state," is how organizer Jeff Peyton describes the second annual Miller Time Softball Marathon for Easter Seals being held this weekend.

Peyton said more than $4,000 was turned in by competing teams before Saturday's softball games. More was expected before the marathon ended today.

Betsy White, co-owner of the New Deli on Cotanche Street and organizer of the New Deli team, said her team "went out and got quarters, nickels, anything"in raising $1,238.80 to lead the competition. Singer Furniture took second place in the money-raising event by accumulating $915.87.

Team play began Saturday and will extend through today until 8:30 tonight. Peyton said 70 teams were competing, compared to 38 last year.

Each team committed itself to raising $200 plus an intial registration fee of $15 per team.

The money is used through Easter Seals to benefit children in various ways. For a $350 team gift, a handicapped child is sent to Camp Easter for two weeks. A $600 gift buys a wheelchair and wins a keg of Miller for teams. Those topping last year's big winners, Hamilton Beach, will receive a Miller team trophy and the chance to have the Miller Draft Wagon and a party specialist to the location of their choice.

"The emphasis of the game is more on fun than on a tournament," Peyton said.

The Miller Marathon is endorsed by the Amateur Softball Association.

East Carolina Earns 2nd Citation For Fund Effort

ECU News Bureau

WASHINGTON, D.C. — East Carolina University has been recognized for the second time as a winner in the 1981 U.S. Steel Foundation's Alumni Giving Incentive Awards Program, according to an announcement by the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE).

The award is for alumni fund raising improvement during the past year. ECU will receive $1,000 from the U.S. Steel Foundation.

Vice Chancellor Donald L. Lemish said ECU had a record 1980 annual fund year with an increase of 50.14 percent in alumni annual fund donors to 5,761 and a 37.27 percent in gift dollars to $131,678.

This year 1,500 institutions were entered in the competition and 300 were evaluated in the final round of judging. Of these, 41 institutions will receive awards. Presentations will be made at the CASE Annual Assembly in Washington, D.C. in July.

In addition to Lemish, ECU staff in alumni and development responsible for the results include Rick Robins, annual support director; F. Douglas Moore, director of development; Mrs. Betty-Blaine Worthington, planned support director; Don Leggett, alumni director, and Bill Bedsole, alumni field director.

School Says Students Browbeat Teacher

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Five students are receiving blank diplomas from Hope High School because school officials say they were among 12 teen-agers who intimidated their 61-year-old teacher into giving them passing grades.

The unidentified, 61-year-old English teacher was left "on the verge of a nervous breakdown" after being berated by the students and some of their parents last Wednesday, says Acting Superintendent Robert Ricci.

He said that after being told the teacher was giving them failing grades, one of the students smashed his fist through a plaster wall, one pounded on her desk and another had to be restrained from pursuing her down a hallway.

There was no physical contact with the teacher, "but it was a very threatening and intimidating situation," Ricci said.

Ricci said he restored the 12 students' original failing grades after reviewing their records.

"I have decided that her decision to give all 12 a passing grade was just a way of trying to avoid further intimidation and confrontation and not a reasoned and rational decision," he said.

The five students who were to be allowed to go through the motions of graduating Sunday have the option of going to summer school to raise their grades or appealing his ruling to a review board.

He said he was allowing them to attend graduation in an effort to be "as fair as possible."

The other seven don't have enough credits to graduate, even with a passing grade in English, he said.

Ricci noted that one of the 12 was absent without an excuse for 164 days this past year. "It's inconceivable that a teacher with more than 20 years experience intended to reverse her decision and give such a student a passing grade."

Ricci said the teacher's doctor "has advised me she is on the verge of a breakdown and has ordered her not to go to work for at least two or three weeks."

The students all received a copy of the school rules at the beginning of the year and knew what was required to pass a course, said Marsha Reback.

Syrians Down Israeli Plane

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Syrian jets shot down an Israeli spy plane near Damascus Saturday and Syrian armored units began war maneuvers, the military announced. Israel conceded a pilotless drone was apparently shot down over Syria or Lebanon.

The action rekindled the six-week-old missile crisis between the two Middle East antagonists that had been dormant since Israeli warplanes raided and destroyed Iraq's nuclear reactor near Baghdad last Sunday. U.S. envoy Philip C. Habib flew to Saudi Arabia to continue efforts to defuse the crisis.

Syrian armored forces, backed by air force jets and helicopter gunships, staged war excercises designed to train in rapid intervention to "repulse a surprise enemy attack and then crush enemy defenses," the official Sana news agency reported.

The location of the drills that were shown later on Syria's state television was not disclosed. The commanding general of the maneuvers was quoted as telling his troops to "keep up combat readiness for the decisive battle against the enemy."

A military communique on the downing of the plane said "air force jet fighters intercepted the intruding aircraft and shot it down northeast of Damascus." It did not indicate what kind of plane was brought down or whether it was piloted, saying only "the wreckage has been collected."

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli military command said an unmanned drone failed to return to base and apparently was downed during a "routine flight" over Syria and Lebanon.

It was the sixth such Israeli aircraft Syria claimed to have downed since it deployed surface-to-air missiles in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley and the first reported downed by Syrian warplanes rather than missiles.

Israel has conceded losing four planes, including the one downed Saturday, since the confrontation started with the Syrian missile deployment April 29.

Habib was in Saudi Arabia on his second visit to the oil-rich kingdom since the missile crisis arose. Diplomatic sources could not say how long Habib would stay but said he was to meet Prince Fahd in Riyadh after a briefing by U.S. Ambassador Robert Nuemann in Jidda.

Saudi Arabia sent two emissaries here for talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad after Habib's trip to Riyadh last month.

Habib's efforts to defuse the Mideast tensions have been complicated by Israel's destruction of a French-built nuclear reactor on the outskirts of Baghdad, the Iraqi capital, a week ago.

The Israelis used U.S.-supplied warplanes in what was seen in Washington as a possible violation of its ban on Israeli use of American arms for offensive purposes.

The U.N. Security Council opened debate Friday on Iraq's request, supported by the 21-member Arab League, that Israel be punished by an embargo on arms or related aid it could use against Arab states.

The debate continued Saturday and was expected to come to a head later in the week. Britain and the United States, which temporarily halted delivery of four F-16 fighters to Israel after the raid, are expected to veto any sanctions.

THREE ACQUITTED

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Three men accused of plotting to overthrow the year-old military government of Sgt. Samuel K. Doe have been acquitted for lack of evidence, a military tribunal spokesman said.

New East Carolina Music Dean Named

ECU News Bureau

Charles F. Schwartz, widely known, conductor, choral director and music educator, will become dean of the school of music at East Carolina University July 1.

Schwartz, 47, has been dean of the school of fine arts, California State University in Long Beach since 1978 and was dean of the conservtory and professor of music at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., from 1972 to 1978.

CHARLES F. SCHWARTZ

He has served as director of choral activities and associate professor of music at the University of Minnesota for eight years and was co-founder and coordinator of a high school musicians project in Minnesota. High school choruses in this project performed regularly with Minneapolis, St. Paul and university symphony orchestras.

Schwartz was selected for the ECU deanship from a field of more than 100 candidates considered during a nationwide search by a committee chaired by Vice Chancellor-Academic Affairs Robert H. Maier.

ECU Chancellor Thomas B. Brewer said "Dr. Schwartz is among the top music school administrators in the nation. East Carolina is indeed fortunate to attract a leader of such high qualities. His leadership will help assure continued success in our school of music, which has a national reputation for excellence."

Schwartz succeeds Dr. Everett Pittman, who relinquished the ECU deanship last year to return to his teaching career. Dr. Charles Stevens of the ECU music faculty has served as acting dean during the interim.

A native of Detroit, Schwartz received his undergraduate and graduate degrees from Indiana University and received the Ph.D from the Indiana School of Music in 1966. He also attended Eastern Kentucky State University and in 1960-62 was chairman of the department of music, Lindsey Wilson College, Columbia, Ky.

Schwartz's administrative experience includes major functions and activities of fine arts and humanities councils, service to community cultural, public schools and church music programs. He served recently as consultant to the music department at Trinity College, San Antonio, Texas.

The ECU School of Music anticipates an increased enrollment with additional numbers of incoming freshmen and in its graduate program. The school includes more than 350 majors annually.

Atlanta Begins 'Safe Summer' Recreation Project For Youngsters

ATLANTA (AP) — A city fearful that a child killer may treat summer's school vacation as an invitation to kill again has launched an ambitious summer recreation program called "Safe Summer '81."

About 8,000 children aged 6 to 15 streamed to 61 recreation sites this past week to ensure that, as one 11-year-old boy said, "We won't be killed."

Children at Anderson Park Recreation Center seemed carefree at play under the hot sun, but they knew why they were at the park in northwest Atlanta.

"So we won't be kidnapped," one boy said.

"We need this," another added.

The program is a response to the series of 28 unsolved murders of young blacks in the city since July 1979. All but five of the victims were children or teen-agers, and most apparently were abducted while they roamed the city's streets alone.

Officials say they hope the program of all-day activities eventually will attract 15,000 youngsters and that private agencies will draw up to 17,000 more. In addition, Fulton County and suburban DeKalb County this week will start programs expected to serve several thousand more children, county officials said.

The agencies involved got partial federal funding to operate the $4 million program, which is costing Atlanta $1.2 million more than its normal summer recreation program.

Security measures include three daily roll calls, color-coded T-shirts for children and staff and frequent checks by police. Officials even require reporters to get one-day permits to visit.

Anti-Regulation Fight May Save Up To $18 Billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's war against federal regulations has produced a potential savings of up to $18 billion for business and consumers and will bring even bigger benefits in the future, the administration claimed Saturday.

"It's only really the tip of the iceberg, only the beginning," vowed Vice President George Bush, chairman of a presidential task force on regulatory relief.

However, Bush and other officials cautioned that their estimate was a rough calculation, in part because various departments did not use a uniform system in gauging savings.

Since Reagan took office, 181 regulations have been placed under review for possible change or have been modified or withdrawn. Most of them — 113 in all — originated from the Transportation Department, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Environmental Protection Agency.

In its first major accounting, the administration calculated that the regulation-cutting campaign has produced a potential one-time savings of $15.5 billion to $18.5 billion, largely from investment costs that industry and local governments would be spared as a result of not having to comply with environmental regulations.

Beyond that, there would be a recurring savings of $5.5 billion to $5.9 billion annually, chiefly from reduced operating costs, the administration estimated in a series of reports.

The administration claimed success by other measures, also.

For example, it said the number of proposed rules published daily in the Federal Register has been cut in half since January, and that the Federal Register itself is about a third smaller than when Reagan took office.

The Energy Department has abolished 20 forms and reduced the paperwork burden it puts on industry by 820,000 hours, the administration calculated, largely as a result of Reagan's decision to decontrol oil prices.

The administration said that for various reasons, its costs estimates involved rough figures.

On the one hand, a cost estimate was calculated for only 57 of the 181 affected regulations — suggesting that the savings figure might be low.

On the other hand, the figures generally represent savings that would result only if a regulation were eliminated. In many cases, the affected regulations will go on the books in modified form.

"Those figures are fairly crude estimates," acknowledged James Miller, executive director of the task force. "But they're in the ballpark."

Most of the estimated savings stem from an easing of environmental restrictions.

For example, the single largest one-time savings was calculated from an anti-pollution regulation requiring double holds in oil tankers. If abolished, it would produce an investment savings of $5 billion to $6 billion for industry, according to the administration.

However, those savings might not be realized because the status of the regulation is still up in the air. It is under review and could be abolished, modified or allowed to go on the books unchanged.

In another area, the administration estimated a savings of up to $3.4 billion in one-time investment costs through the elimination of two EPA requirements — one governing pollution discharges from electroplating plants into municipal sewage treatment systems and the other dealing with effluent limits for industries that discharge non-toxic pollutants.

In both instances, the regulations have not been abolished but are being reviewed.

Outside the environmental area, the administration estimates a $2.6 billion savings in one-time .

So far, we've saved you $44 million.
Now, we need some help.
What better way to care for the physically, mentally, emotionally or economicaly handicapped people than to give them useful, productive jobs training?
This is the function of the Eastern Carolina Vocational Center. And conservative estimates place the value of that training in excess of $44 million in productive employment and tax dollars left unspent.
Give the handicapped an opportunity to develop their fullest potential with your deductible donation.
But now, ECVC needs help. The completion of our $5.1 million expansion will help us go on training people who might otherwise be unproductive. It will help us go on helping the handicapped reach their potential. And it will help us go on saving you tax dollars.
But we're thousands of dollars short of our goal for completion.
Won't you please contact one of our people listed below and make your tax-deductible pledge?
Fact is, you'll not only be helping future generations of handicapped people, you'll be saving yourself money as well.

New Chancellor To Stress Fiscal Plan

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (UPI) — Edward B. Fort, the Wisconsin educator who assumes control of North Carolina's largest predominantly black university next fall, says his top priority will be organizing the school's fiscal affairs.

"I intend to install — from the day I come in, hitting the ground running — a valid and viable system of fiscal accountability," said Fort, who Friday was formally appointed the chancellor at North Carolina A&T State University in Greensboro.

On Sept. 1, Fort inherits responsibility for a university that has experienced management problems in recent years. The problems surfaced publicly last year when a state auditor's report found its fiscal records a shambles and "essentially unauditable."

The school of 5,500 students has been without a permanent chancellor since Lewis C. Dowdy resigned last October. Two key administrative positions at North Carolina A&T — vice chancellorships for fiscal and academic affairs — are vacant, as are the top posts at the nursing school and school of arts and science.

Calling himself an "education evangelist," Fort, who has directed 14 two-year liberal arts colleges in the University of Wisconsin since 1974, said he looks forward to addressing the problems at A&T.

"Somehow my whole leadership career has dealt with the issue of coming into an institution... that has problems," Fort said.

Southern Cities Show Job Gains

ATLANTA (AP) — The three largest Southern cities — Atlanta, Miami and Tampa-St. Petersburg — were among the cities which showed the greatest increases in employment in 1980, the U.S. Department of Labor reported Saturday.

Of the nation's 36 largest metropolitan areas, Miami ranked second in employment growth in 1980, Tampa-St. Petersburg ranked sixth and Atlanta ranked 12th, said Donald M. Cruse, regional commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Miami showed a 5.4 percent boost in employment, Tampa-St. Petersburg showed a 4.3 percent increase and Atlanta had a 2.1 percent increase over 1979 levels, the bureau said in a release.

Average employment in Miami was 726,900 jobs in 1980, compared with 689,600 in 1979. Tampa St. Petersburg had 543,500 jobs on the average in 1980 compared with 521,200 in 1979, and Atlanta had 960,300 in 1980 compared with 940,200 in 1979, the bureau said.

Job growth in the Southeast, Southwest and West continued its two-year upward trend, while cities in the Northeast and Midwest continued to show the slowest growth, the bureau said.

San Jose, Calif., showed the greatest increase with a 6.1 percent job gain in 1980, followed by Miami; Dallas-Fort Worth, 5.3 percent; Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove, Calif., 4.3 percent; and Houston, 4.3 percent.

For the second straight year, Detroit showed the largest decline in employment — 5.8 percent, the bureau said. St. Louis, Kansas City, Buffalo, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Philadelphia and Cincinnati also registered declines in employment.

Tampa-St. Petersburg and Miami showed a faster-than-average growth rate in manufacturing jobs, which had an effect on those cities' overall growth, the bureau said.

Shed Had A Shell

HARPSWELL, Maine (AP) — Tearing down an old outhouse attached to his home proved to be a more delicate task than Edward F. Sylvester expected.

The carpenter Sylvester hired to take down the outhouse found a 1945 U.S. Army howitzer shell tucked under a shed outside the outhouse and refused to work around it.

The Cumberland County sheriff's department called up the Army's Fort Devens at Ayer, Mass., which sent an explosives disposal team Wednesday.

Sylvester says the 32-inch long M106 howitzer shell, which was partially filled with powder, was taken back to Fort Devens.

Sylvester says he noticed the shell in the shed several years ago but thought it was an anchor.

Sylvester said it was not known how it got there.

Irish Leader Loses Majority But Will Try Again

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Prime Minister Charles Haughey said Saturday he will try to form a government despite his party's failure to win a parliamentary majority and the loss of two seats to IRA guerrillas jailed in Northern Ireland.

Haughey's Fianna Fail won 78 seats, six short of a majority in the 166-seat Dail, or lower house of parliament, after the complicated tabulation from Thursday's polling ended Saturday. His party had a 17-seat majority in the last Parliament.

The leader of the main opposition party, Gerald Fitzgerald, also announced he would attempt to form a ruling coalition. Fitzgerald's Fine Gael party won 65 seats.

The remaining seats were divided among 15 members of the Labor Party and eight independents, including the two Irish Republican Army guerrillas whose victories were considered a propaganda coup for the hunger strike by five inmates at Northern Ireland's Maze prison.

One of the two prisoners elected, Kieran Doherty, 23, is among the hunger strikers and has been fasting since May 22.

In a nationally televised interview, Haughey, 55, did not discuss what steps would be taken to form a coalition before the Dail meets June 30 to choose a prime minister. His party has ruled Ireland all but 10 of the past 49 years.

Neither side conceded. Fitzgerald said, "Following the defeat of Fianna Fail this party will offer an alternative government to our people."

The Fine Gael and Labor Party had said they would form a coalition government if they gained a majority, but their combined total fell four short of the 84 seats needed for parliamentary control.

That should leave Labor or the independents holding the balance of power when the Dail convenes. The independents include six hardline Republican nationalists pressing for a tougher policy on uniting the British province of Northern Ireland with the Irish Republic.

They also include Doherty and convicted IRA gunman Paddy Agnew, 26, who is serving a 16-year sentence in the Maze for bombing attacks on British security forces.

He won one of the four seats in Louth, a county bordering Northern Ireland's Armagh county, where the IRA has killed more than 60 British soldiers in its guerrilla campaign to end British rule in the province and reunite it with the Republic.

Election officials said Doherty, serving a 22-year term for hijackings and possessing weapons, won a seat in the border district of Cavan-Monaghan.

Cavan-Monaghan is an IRA stronghold adjoining the Fermanagh-South Tyrone area of the North where hunger striker Bobby Sands was elected a member of the British Parliament April 9. Sands died May 5, 66 days after beginning his fast on March 1.

Three other hunger strikers have died since in a campaign to force the British to treat jailed nationalists as political prisoners rather than as common criminals.

Agnew and Doherty were among nine guerrilla prisoners — four of them on hunger strike — running to protest Haughey's failure to back their demands.

The jailed guerrillas, who polled an unexpected 10 percent of the national vote, were allowed to run because the Irish constitution does not recognize the 1921 partition of Ireland. It was unclear whether new elections would be required to fill the seats, since they will be unable to attend Parliament.

Pre-election opinion polls showed that the Northern Ireland question was not a major issue among most of the Republic's 2.28 million voters. The polls indicated they were preoccupied with the country's 11 percent unemployment rate, or 126,000 people, 21 percent inflation and record $5.25 billion national debt.

Election results took a long time to tabulate because of the country's complicated transferable voting system. Voters list their top three choices in order of preference.

Snipers Hurt Two In Ulster

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A policeman was shot in the neck and seriously wounded in a Londonderry shopping district Saturday and snipers wounded an off-duty British soldier in an ambush in a rural area west of Belfast, police said.

The foot patrolman was struck once by a bullet apparently fired from a rifle at a distance as afternoon shoppers milled about the area, said Jim Craig, a spokesman for the Royal Ulster Constabulary here. The officer was admitted to a hospital in serious condition.

Craig said the gunman fled and a rifle later was found nearby.

The off-duty soldier, a part-time member of the British Army's Ulster Defense Regiment, was hit three times in the shoulder while driving a car during the early hours on a rural road between Ballygawley and Dungannon, which is about 40 miles west of here.

Craig said at least two snipers ambushed the soldier's car and he returned gunfire before driving himself a few miles to nearest army base. The fleeing gunmen stole and car from a nearby house and fled.

The soldier was taken to a hospital but was not believed seriously hurt, Craig said.

Security forces, meanwhile, pressed their search for eight Irish Republican Army guerrillas who shot their way out of Belfast's Crumlin Road jail Wednesday.

Police and British troops sealed off a housing complex in mainly Roman Catholic West Belfast for four hours and searched all 200 homes in the complex. They found no weapons or any sign of the escapees.

Four of the eight fugitives were convicted in absentia Friday of killing a British army captain in 1980, and three others were found guilty of weapons offenses. The eighth guerrilla is awaiting trial.

U.N. Members Denounce Israel

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — A host of nations denounced Israel in the U.N. Security Council Saturday as Arab diplomats worked on the draft of a resolution imposing sanctions on the Jewish state for its attack on an Iraqi nuclear reactor.

The United States was certain to veto the Arab resolution. Diplomats said it probably would come to a vote next week.

Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sabah al-Ahmed al-Sabah, opening the second day of debate in the emergency council session, charged Israel was a threat to all Arab states.

"Israel considers all Arab countries targets for its strikes," al-Sabah said. "It is in the interest of morality and international peace that your august council must adopt a resolution calling for the imposition of sanctions against the aggressor."

Indian Ambassador Natarajan Krishnan described last Sunday's raid by Israel as "stark adventurism and blatant intervention" and said it deserved "universal condemnation."

Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Blum, observing the Jewish Sabbath, did not attend the debate.

But on Friday, he defended the air raid against the nuclear reactor near Baghdad as an act of self-defense to prevent Iraq from developing an atomic bomb.

In the council's conference rooms, Arab League foreign ministers and envoys discussed details of a draft resolution that would direct all U.N. member countries to refrain from supplying Israel with military, economic and technical assistance.

Government...

of litigation between the city of Los Angeles and the U.S. Department of Labor over whether the city was guilty of discrimination against the handicapped by refusing to hire an assistant tree-trimmer with emotional problems?

The government of the United States is so big you can't say where it begins and where it ends. It is so shapeless you can't diagram it with boxes because, after you put the president here and Congress there and the judiciary in a third place, where do you put the Ad Hoc Committee for the Implementation of PL89-306? Or the Interagency Bird Hazard Committee?

The government of the United States is so unstructured it is owned by everybody and owned by nobody and run by nobody. Presidents run only a part of it. Presidents can't even find and sort out the separate parts.

Jimmy Carter tried. On the crest of promises to streamline and make sense out of the federal bureaucracy, he began by looking for the blueprint. He appointed a panel, but it's members couldn't find it.

"We were unable," the panel concluded, "to obtain a single document containing a complete and current listing of government units which are part of the federal government. We could find no established criteria to determine whether an organizational unit should be included or excluded in such a list."

Other presidents have found the bureaucracy an immoveable yeast. Franklin Roosevelt ran into so much resistance from the old departments, he created a flock of new agencies around them to get action. Harry Truman complained the president can issue an order and "nothing happens." He tried to reorganize the bureaucracy with the help of Herbert Hoover but not much changed. John Kennedy said it was like dealing with a foreign power.

It was all much easier when Mr. Jefferson was president. Then, the entire federal establishment throughout the nation, civilian and military, numbered fewer than 10,000. They wouldn't fill half the Pentagon today.

Since 1802, the population of the United States has multiplied 55 times while the population of government has grown 500 times. Since 1802, and most especially in the last 50 years, the government has been transformed, far beyond the ken of the men who started it, in size, power and function. The capital of capitalism now subsidizes rich and poor, capital and labor.

The number of civilian personnel (2.8 million) and military personnel (2.1 million) employed by the federal government has remained fairly constant in recent years. But federal programs have brought vast increases in state and municipal personnel.

Thus, government in the United States on all levels now employs 18 million people. One out of six working Americans is on the public payroll. Government on all levels now costs more than $832 billion a year. Clearly, it is the nation's largest single business and the least businesslike.

Governments are rarely designed for efficiency, especially democratic governments, and most especially this one. This one has grown spectacularly as people demanded more and more of it and as politicians and bureaucrats saw or stimulated those demands. This government was designed for accommodation and consensus. It began on the docks of Boston, not the other side of town, at the Harvard business school.

Baptists Disagree... But Stick Together

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — As longtime buddies, the two Texas ministers traveled together to the big Southern Baptist Convention, roomed together, ate together, sat together in the sessions. But they voted differently.

That contrast, generally aligning them on opposite sides in the vying between conservatives and moderates in the nation's biggest Protestant denomination, didn't in the least, however, dampen the pair's solidarity.

Their case, in miniature, typified that of the assembled multitude of Southern Baptists, sticking devotedly together despite sharp tactical disagreement.

"It doesn't affect our friendship at all," says the Rev. Robert Renfro of Somerville, Texas, a conservative who in eight out of nine key votes took an opposite side from his close friend. "That's Baptist democracy."

The Rev. Maurice Hill of Orange, Texas, a moderate, added, "We thought it was funny. We're all Bible believers despite varying approaches to it. Our unity in Christ remains no matter what our differences."

So the word went round of unflagging mutual caring, commitment and dedication even amid the conservative-moderate frictions, which generally resulted in a sort of draw in the three-day gathering that ended Thursday.

"It was a reconciling convention," commented the Rev. Jaroy Weber of Dallas, a former president of the denomination of 13.6 million members in more than 35,000 congregations across the country.

"I think that both sides hereafter are going to abandon the extremists that are causing the trouble."

While the recently strongly organized conservatives succeeded in re-electing a Bible literalist and their favorite, the Rev. Bailey Smith of Del City, Okla., as president, moderates rallied an unprecedented large opposition vote to an incumbent.

Customarily, an incumbent gets an unopposed second term, but despite that tradition, a strong 40 percent vote went to the moderate challenger, Abner V. McCall, chancellor of Baylor University.

An "encouraging vote," commented a moderate, the Rev. Jack Snell of Jacksonville, Fla. "It strengthened the position of moderates and demonstrated that their position has to be taken seriously into consideration."

After the show of strength, relatively balanced in the exceptional circumstances and surprising to some in the generally conservative Baptist territory of California, the convention of 13,550 "messengers" turned gentle and genial.

Conservatives dropped plans to press for stricter requirements on interpretations of the Bible and joined with moderates in virtually unanimous reaffirmation of a long-time statement of faith.

It calls the Bible unerring, authoritative truth, but also recognizes the historic Baptist principle of individual freedom to interpret it, something moderates had felt threatened by recent conservative pressure to require a literalist view.

But after reaffirming the old policy, a move initiated by the Rev. Herschel Hobbs, an Oklahoma City moderate and past president, conservatives including Smith joined others in acclaiming it as adequate and reconciling.

In a closing sermon, the Rev. Perry R. Anders of Lafayette, La., said "we Southern Baptists have had a running battle of words about this Book" — the Bible — but it "needs not our defense nearly so much as it needs our proclamation."

On The Young Side

By Elizabeth Ito

"The Fool Who Is Wise Gets The Prize" was the topic of the baccalaureate sermon delivered to the graduation class by the Rev. Anton Wesley of St. John Missionary Baptist Church.

The service was held Sunday afternoon, June 7, in the Rose gym. Also participating were Father J. Paul Byron of St. Peter's Catholic Church, who delivered the invocation and scripture lesson and David Goehring of Jarvis Memorial, who delivered the benediction. Linda Boyd Davis, organist, accompanied the graduates in the processional and recessional.

Several of the seniors wore colored chords in the baccalaureate and commencement services. These chords are awarded to students involved in such activities as Quill and Scroll, dark blue, marshaling, light blue, National Honor Society, gold, and the Honor Thespian Society, red. Additionally, the senior class officers wear white chords while the SGA officers have green.

The Rose Jazz Band and Chorus performed at the first Sunday in the Park concert of the season June 7 at 7 p.m.

The class of 1981, a group of approximately 375 excited yet melancholy seniors, marched into Ficklen Stadium a little after eight o'clock Tuesday evening, ready to make the transition from high school seniors to high school graduates.

The band played the familiar "Pomp and Circumstance," a piece which many seniors have restlessly hummed to themselves the past few weeks. Following the processional, the band played the national anthem and Karen Wheeler, secretary-treasurer of the class, delivered the invocation. Terry Mooring, vice president, provided the thought for the day, a quote from John F. Kennedy. President Mark Douglas introduced the speakers, six seniors who have maintained high academic averages during their years at Rose. The topics of the speeches were selected by the students and included: "Success," Teresa Little; "Roles of Blacks," Mary Gay; "Virtues of Failure," Michael Tucker; "Tolerance," Alison Keek; "Friends," Charles Carman; and "Appreciation," Sarah Houston.

Following the speeches, Glenn Cox, superintendent of the Greenville City Schools, officially presented the class of 1981. Diplomas were awarded by Principal Howard Hurt and Chairperson of the Greenville City School Board Nancy Jenkins.

Karen Wheeler said "We've been waiting a long time for this," and instructed the graduates to turn their tassels. Immediately the air was filled with shouts and flying mortar-boards.

As a graduate of Rose, this is my final column. The "On The Young Side" columnist for the next two years will be Lisa Wang, a rising junior at Rose.

Stadler Leads Westchester By One Over Trio

Scores on page B-7

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Low-key Craig Stadler took a casual and unconcerned view of his one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $400,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Golf Classic.

"It doesn't matter," Stadler said Saturday. "I've lost tournaments being ahead and I've won tournaments being ahead."

Stadler, winner of the Kemper Open two weeks ago, got ahead in this one with an 18th hole, six-foot birdie putt moments after the national televison cameras had left the air. It finished off a no-bogey, 3-under-par 68 and lifted Stadler out of a four-way tie for the top.

That gave him a 54-hole total of 205, eight shots under par and one in front of J.C. Snead, Ray Floyd and Tom Kite going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

They had varying assessments of their chances.

"Not very good," said Snead. "It's pretty tough to get excited because I'd not driving it in the fairway. It's hard to be aggressive when you're always hitting it out of the rough or trees or something. I'm confident in my irons and I'm confident in my putting, but my driver is driving me crazy."

"It's a lot like a lot of tournaments recently," said Kite, a winner at Inverrary earlier this year. "There's a lot of people close. No matter who wins it, me or Ray or Craig or J.C., he'll have to be a little bit lucky. I'm playing well, the best I've ever played. We'll just have to see what happens. It should be interesting."

"I'm tickled to death to be within one," Floyd said. "That's within the area code to get there. I've got a good chance."

Snead, in a long slump and still fighting an erratic driver, put on a birdie-eagle finish for a 4-under-par 67. Floyd, winner of two tournaments earlier this season, and the steady Kite, who has finished seventh or better in his last six starts, each had a 68.

Kite had an excellent chance to join Stadler at 7-under par, but left a six-foot, downhill birdie putt a quarter-roll short on the 18th.

Ron Streck, whose 5-under-par 66 represented the best round of the day, and Gibby Gilbert, who has a habit of playing well on this suburban New York layout, were at 207. Gilbert, twice a runner-up here and a coleader after 36 holes, matched par 71 in the warm, hazy weather.

Leonard Thompson, who was tied with Gilbert for the lead after two rounds, slipped to a 73 and was four strokes back at 209.

"I've always been a streak player," said Stadler, a two-time winner last season. "I haven't had a good year but I've been playing well the last few weeks and that's the difference."

Players Say Strike Could Be Lengthy

By The Associated Press

Some major league players predict the first mid-season strike in baseball history could be lengthy as the walkout entered its second day Saturday and fans settled in for a weekend without the summer game.

The 650 big league players went on strike Friday following a deadlock with owners over the controversial free-agent compensation issue.

Negotiations ended following a fruitless 2½-hour session Friday and, according to mediator Kenneth Moffett, the earliest that talks may resume between both sides would be Monday or Tuesday.

"My personal feeling is that I don't think the players will bust ranks for quite a while, if ever," said Atlanta Braves pitcher Gene Garber.

"This is something no player wants, but supports," he said.

First baseman Chris Chambliss of the Braves predicted that some owners eventually would break ranks in an effort to end the strike.

"The owners can't afford not to play the games for the remainder of this season," he said.

"As for the players breaking ranks in such a situation, the teams would break ranks before we would. The owners don't want their TV contracts canceled," Chambliss said.

"The current situation exists because the owners have gone so far now they just wanted to see if the players would go ahead and do it," he said.

"None of the players want to strike," said Biff Pocoroba, Braves reserve catcher and infielder. "But the owners just want everything. We don't want to lose everything we've worked for, even if it means striking all year."

At least one club president said his team should be able to meet all financial obligations during the strike, despite the loss of gate revenues.

But President Calvin Griffith of the Minnesota Twins suggested he might have to take a pay cut to make ends meet if the strike lasts too long.

"When uncle Clark Griffith died in 1955, the Washington ballclub owed him $550,000 in back salary. Uncle Clark took only enough money during hard times with the Senators to put food on the table. I may have to do the same thing if it comes to that with this strike," said Griffith, who earns an estimated $125,000-$150,000 annually.

"We don't have our Twins' player payroll during the strike, but we've got 10 players optioned to the minor leagues off our roster who we have to pay, plus our manager, coaches, trainer, scouts and our personnel in the front office," he added.

A last-minute move to thwart the players' walkout ended Friday when the National Labor Relations Board in Washington delayed a decision to appeal a federal judge's ruling that originally eased the way for the strike by the Major League Players Association.

Meanwhile, ballparks slammed their gates, fans made other plans and ballplayers did, too.

Pitcher Bill Lee of the Montreal Expos said: "I'm going to Toronto on a bicycle and after that to Prince Edward Island for the Shakespeare Festival. Then I'm going where there are no telephones and no newspapers. I don't want to know when this strike is over."

"I don't want to talk about it anymore," said St, Louis Cardinals pitcher Mark Littell. "Just let 'em go at it. I'm going to get in some fishing."

Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees went to St. Paul, Minn., to fulfill a promise to youngsters in his former hometown. Had the Yankees-Twins game been played, Winfield promised 1,500 youngsters tickets for Friday's game at a cost of $4,500, He also was to help sponsor health exams for youngsters needing checkups.

Instead, Winfield saw to it that 200 children received the exam and dinners at his old high school, St. Paul Central.

The strike centers on the issue of whether teams losing a free agent are entitled to another major league player as compensation.

In essence, owners want to be fully compensated for a player if he becomes a free agent and leaves for another team.

The players aren't happy with this stipulation, saying it would greatly reduce the value of free agents in the eyes of other teams if they have to give up an equal "quality" player, as the owners insist, for their new acquisition.

Players and owners were no closer during Friday's negotiations than they have been over what type of compensation would be agreeable for teams losing free agents.

"Every indication is it's a total roadblock, and we don't have any answers," said Rusty Staub, the New York Mets' player representative, following Friday's session in New York.

For many years, the only compensation awarded to a team losing a free agent had been a first-round pick in the amateur draft. But last February, the owners implemented their compensation plan into the labor contract. That plan would require

O's, Rookie Dealing With Strike

Cub Catcher May Start Looking For Job Soon

ATLANTA (AP) — If the major league baseball strike lasts more than two weeks, Chicago Cubs rookie catcher Jody Davis says he'll have to come home to Gainesville, Ga., to find a job.

Davis, 23, said in a telephone interview from Chicago he felt the strike would be especially rough on younger players like himself.

"We want and need the playing time and we're not as financially secure in the game as the older, more experienced players."

Nevertheless, Davis said he supported the strike, because "the players have too much to lose."

The catcher said he would remain in Chicago without playing for up to two weeks, then return to Gainesville to find a temporary job.

Meanwhile, Atlanta Braves' players questioned about the strike said most of the players support the strike even though they didn't want it.

"None of the players want to strike," said reserve catcher and infielder Biff Pocoroba, "but the owners just want everything. We don't want to lose everything we've worked for, even if it means striking all year."

Pitcher Gene Garber also said the players are prepared to wait it out.

"My personal feeling is that I don't think the players will bust ranks for quite a while, if ever. This is something no player wants, but supports," he said.

First baseman Chris Chambliss predicted some owners eventually will break ranks in an effort to end the strike.

Baltimore Sends Coaches Back To Minor Leagues

BALTIMORE (AP) — It may not seem like a strike to Baltimore Orioles Manager Earl Weaver and his coaching crew.

While Oriole players are off the job as the major league players walkout continues, Weaver and company are being farmed out to help in the team's minor league system.

Weaver has been told by team officials he'll be sent to Rochester, N.Y., along with pitching coach Ray Miller. Miller is to report to the triple-A Red Wings of the International League next week and Weaver is to arrive sometime later, team officials said.

Other assignments will scatter the team's other coaches throughout the farm system — with Cal Ripken and Ralph Rowe going to the rookie club in Bluefield, W.Va., Jimmy Williams helping out with the double-A Charlotte, N.C., Orioles, and Elrod Hendricks shuttling between Miami and Hagerstown, Md., where the Orioles and the Cleveland Indians jointly sponsor teams.

Team owner Edward Bennett Williams spoke determinedly about bringing an end to the strike, but also expressed disappointment.

"I feel so down and so depressed about what's happened," he said. "I just find it incomprehensible that we're in this situation."

He added, "It must be resolved and I won't give up."

Asked about the anticipated affects of the strike which began Friday, Williams said, "I assume that the impact will be the same all over, but maybe we will feel it more acutely in Baltimore because of the tremendous enthusiasm shown by our fans."

UNC-W Sweeps Pair From East Carolina Nine

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

Earlier this week, the UNC—Wilmington Seahawks played a doubleheader against Campbell. In that twinbill, the 'Hawks got only six hits, three in each game. It helped send one of the pre-season North State College League favorites to its second and third losses without a win.

Saturday night at Harrington Field, however, the Seahawk frustrations came to an end, and the frustrations for East Carolina's batters were monsterous.

Wilmington's Mike Antle handcuffed the Pirates on just two hits in the first game of the doubleheader, as he and his teammates pounded five Pirate hurlers for 13 hits in a 16-2 victory.

Then, in the nightcap, Jaymie McGuire allowed only one hit as he hurled the Seahawks to a 9-3 sweep of the Pirates.

Mike Sorrell broke up the no-hitters each time. In the first game, he got the first hit off Antle in the fifth inning. David Wells later got a pinch-hit double in the seventh.

In the second game, the Pirates went into the seventh inning hitless before Sorrell again did the trick, but this time it was the only hit.

The two gems were not all that great, however. Antle walked seven and struck out two. McGuire, who had to have help from Donnie Walker to get the final out, struck out just three, but walked 11.

But it was the Wilmington bats that really did the trick. In the first game, the Seahawks banged out 13 hits, seven of them for extra bases — five doubles and two homers. In the second game, Wilmington added 11 more hits, including three doubles and a homer.

Antle, who hit for himself in the first game and was the designated hitter in the second, did a lot of damage by himself. He picked up five hits in seven trips to the plate.

Paul Murr, Tom Jones and Clyde Holley put together four-hit nights for themselves. Murr and Jones had two in each game, while Holley had three in the opener and one in the nightcap.

All-in-all, it was just too much for the Pirates, who now find themselves with a 2-3 league record. Wilmington is now 2-3 also.

Wilmington got all it needed in the first game in the second inning, scoring four times. Holley opened the inning with a single up the middle and Johnny Slaughter walked. Antle doubled in both runners, but courtesy runner David Price was thrown out at third on Kelly O'Donnell's infield grounder. Buck Barber's grounder was errored on the play to second, leaving runner Jeff Newsome safe. Tommy Phillips singled in Newsome, and when Tim Whitehead reached on a fielder's choice, an error let Barber score the fourth run.

The Seahawks added two more in the third. One scored when Jones walked and scored on a double by Holley. Holley came around on a hit to left by Antle that was at the plate in time, but kicked away on the slide.

A walk and a double by Jones brought in the seventh run in the fourth.

Wilmington put the game further on the back burner by pushing over six runs in the sixth. A triple by Murr brought in one, and after an error and a walk loaded the bases, Slaughter greeted Anthony Willis' first college pitch with a drive over the wall in right for a grand-slam homer. A pair of walks and a hit by Phillips brought in one more.

The final three scored in the seventh. Murr hit a lead-off homer, and a single and double by Jones and Holley followed. Richard Foy singled both of them in.

East Carolina got its first run in the second when Charlie Smith walked, moved up on a walk and a fielder's choice and scored on Robert Wells' sacrifice fly.

The other came in the seventh. David Wells got a pinch-hit double, moved up on two walks, and scored on a wild pitch.

In the second game, Wilmington let up a little, but not much.

The Seahawks scored twice in the first. Whitehead led off with a single and was sacrificed up. Holley reached on a fielder's choice and Slaughter walked, loading the bases. Antle singled in Whitehead, and an error on the play let Holley come around too.

Czechs Ready To Invade Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Wimbledon, the world's most prestigious tennis tournament, is a week away, and the army of young Czechoslovakian players is on the march.

Hana Mandlikova, 19, won the Australian Open last December and the French Open last week. Ivan Lendl, 21, took Bjorn Borg to five sets in losing the French Open final and is an obvious contender for Wimbledon, starting June 22.

The French Open is played on some of Europe's slowest clay courts, and whether they can do as well on the fast, skidding grass of England has to be seen. But one thing is certain. Czechoslovakia, which has always produced its share of good players, is now a major tennis power.

How and why has it happened? The other communist countries of Eastern Europe have highly developed sports training programs, but none of them has turned out tennis players to match the Czechoslovakians.

Pavel Korda, who coached Czechoslovakia to its first-ever Davis Cup triumph this year, suggested two possible reasons.

"Our young people love to travel," he said. "If they do well at tennis they have the opportunity. So they have an incentive to succeed.

"And successful tennis players become national heroes and heroines. Thousands of youngsters want to copy them. Once you have a few stars, others follow."

Lendl and Mandlikova are not the only Czechoslovakians who could do well at Wimbledon. Tomas Smid and Pavel Slozil are ranking players. Regina Marsikova and Renata Tomanova have come on fast among the women.

Czechoslovakians have made their mark in the past. Jaroslav Drobny was one of Wimbledon's most popular champions at 33, downing the 18-year-old Ken Rosewall in the highly emotional final of 1954. But Drobny had been in exile for six years and was living in Britain at the time.

Jan Kodes won Wimbledon in 1973, but with reservations. Most of the pros boycotted the tournament that year and he came through a weak field. But he got his name on the Wimbledon honor roll, and no one will ever erase it.

Hagler Retains Crown With TKO

BOSTON (AP) — Middlewieght Marvin Hagler turned Vito Antuofermo's face into hamburger Saturday night and retained his World championship when the battered former title-holder failed to come out for the fifth round.

Antoufermo gushed blood from a deep gash on his forehead within a minute of the first round and by the end of the fourth was bleeding from at least two other cuts.

The challenger's trainer Freddie Brown demanded that referee Davey Pearl immediately call the fight a draw after the first round because he believed Antuofermo was the victim of an illegal butt. Brown refused to let his fighter come out for the second round.

But after a delay of several minutes — with Massachusetts boxing Commissioner Walter Byers shouting, "Get him (Brown) out of the ring!" — the fight resumed and Hagler pounded Antoufermo with left hooks and straight rights that took a devastating toll.

Hagler, from Brockton, Mass., dropped Antoufermo with a left hook in the third round and after the champion opened cuts under Antuofermo's left eye in the True Value 17

Elks 14

True Value scored 11 runs in the third inning to erase a six-run deficit and then scored three times in the fifth to break a 14-14 tie en route to a 17-14 victory over Elks Saturday afternoon in a Prep League baseball game.

Both teams scored three times in the first inning, but Elks scored six runs in the top of the third to take a 9-3 lead. The inning was highlighted by a two-RBI triple by Anthony Coward and a double by Mitchell Phillips.

The lead, however, was short-lived. True Value countered the Elk outburst with an 11-run surge in the bottom half of the inning. The inning included five hits, all singles. Chris Hilliard and Steve Iaboni had two singles each in the inning and Tyrone Jones had one.

Elks narrowed the gap to one in the fourth with four runs, thanks, in part, to three walks and a Lindsey Grime double. But, once more, True Value answered the Elk challenge. This time, True Value scored three times in the bottom of the fifth to take the lead for good.

Bobby Erhmann walked to open the fifth and went to second on an error and then stoel third. He scored on Iaboni's single. Paul Sullivan then tripled home Iaboni. Sullivan later scored on Robert Joyner's single, giving True Value a 17-13 lead.

Elks scored once in the top of the seventh, when Kelly Barnhill singled and scored on Michael Sasser's single, but could get no more as True Value held on for the victory.

Elks was led by Coward and Sasser, both of whom had two hits. Iaboni had three hits for True Value while Jones added two.

Auto Speciality 17
1st St. Bank 13

Auto Speciality scored four runs in the top of the eighth inning and then set First State Bank down in order in the bottom half of the inning to come away with a 17-14 decision Saturday afternoon in a Prep League baseball game.

First State Bank pushed across four runs in the bottom of the seventh to tie the game and send it into extra innings. The inning was sparked by James Mathews' double and singles by Donell Corey, Lee Lewis and William Smith.

But Auto Speciality wasted little time in regaining the lead in the top of the eighth. John Richard singled to open the eighth and went to second when Hal Priestly reached on an error.

Sterling Edwards then sigled home Richard to give AS a 14-13 lead. After two strike outs, Van Alston singled home Priestly and Edwards. Alston subsequently scored on Curtis Perkins' single and AS led, 17-13.

First State went down in order in the bottom half of the inning on two strike outs and a ground out to the pitcher to end the game.

AS jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first, spurred on by Edwards' solo home run. Edwards hit the first pitch of the game for his four-bagger.

Both teams scored three runs in the third to make the score 5-3. AS added four runs in the top of the fourth for a 9-3 lead, but First State immediately countered with a three-run bottom of the fourth to cut the lead to 9-6.

AS added three runs to its total in the fourth but First State matched that in the fifth to make the score, 12-9. AS scored another run in the top of the seventh before First State tied the game with four runs in the bottom half of the inning and send the game into extra innings.

Edwards led AS with three hits, including his homer and a triple. Smith had three hits for First State. With two hits for FS were Lewis, Robert Formville and Robert Evans.

Little League

Kiwanis 10
Optimist 3

Kiwanis scored six runs in the fourth inning to break a 3-3 tie and defeat Optimist, 10-3, Saturday afternoon in a North State Little League baseball game.

Kiwanis led, 1-0, after the second inning but Optimist scored three runs in the top of the third to take a 3-1 lead. Kiwanis tied it up in the bottom of the third with a two-run surge.

One inning later, Kiwanis took the lead for good with a six-run fourth. Charlie Crandall reached on an error to lead off the fourth and Russell Williams reached on a fielder's choice in which no one was out.

Jason Galloway then singled home Crandall. Then, with one out, Jimmy Gillahan singled home Williams and Robbie McDonald doubled to score Galloway and Gillahan. McDonald later scored on Tim Bland's single. Bland subsequently scored on John Chambliss' single.

Kianis' final run came in the sixth.

McDonald led Kiwanis with three hits. Gillahan and Chambliss had two hits each for the winners. Optimist managed just two hits off Galloway, who started, and McDonald, who came on in relief in the third.

Car. & Assoc. 15
Exchange 11

Travis King drove home five runs and Eric Jarman added three RBIs to lead Carroll & Associates to a 15-11 victory over Exchange Saturday afternoon in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

Both teams scored two runs in the first inning but Exchange pushed across six runs in the top of the second to take a 8-2 lead. Four walks and singles by Axel Smith, Brit Erwin and Chris Coble highlighted the inning.

C & A scored three runs in the bottom half of the second to cut the deficit to 8-5. Exchange scored twice in the third while C & A managed one run to make it 10-6 going into the fourth.

It was then that C & A took its first lead, scoring five times for an 11-10 advantage. The inning was sparked by five walks and a solo home run by Billy Carr.

Exchange tied the game with ar un in the top of the fifth, but C & A scored four times in the bottom of the inning to take the lead for good. King had a two-run double to spur C & A on in the inning.

Tim Clark led Exchange with three hits. Clark also ahd four RBIs. With two hits for Exchange were Smith, Coble and Dwain Williams. C & A was led by King, who had three hits, two of which were doubles.

Wellcome 6
Pepsi 4

Anthony Cobb's two-run home run in the top of the sixth broke a 4-4 tie and lifted Wellcome to a 6-4 victory over Pepsi Saturday afternoon in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

Dallas McPherson singled to open the sixth, went to second on a passed ball and to third on a ground out. Cobb then hit his home run to give Wellcome a 6-4 lead.

Pepsi loaded the bases in the bottom of the sixth on three walks with two outs, but did not score.

Pepsi led, 3-1, after the first inning, thanks to four walks and two Wellcome errors. Wellcome cut the deficit to 3-2 in the second but Pepsi got that run back in the third and led, 4-2.

Wellcome tied the game in the fifth on Terry Warren's two-run homer after Greg VanScoy singled. One inning later, Wellcome took the lead for the first time, never to relinquish it.

Vicki Parrott led Wellcome with two hits. Pepsi managed just two hits off Wellcome hurler Terry Warren.

Fans, Kids Divided Over Strike

By The Associated Press

They played baseball Friday night in a lot of places where kids dream of making it to the majors. And those kids — not directly affected by the big-league players' strike — expressed support for the guys whose jobs they'd love to have some day.

But many of the fans who pay to see games in New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, etc., expressed dismay or outrage.

Deprived of their national pastime, a lot of fans blamed the players, citing the high salaries. Others blamed the owners, who pay those salaries.

And players who'd love to be getting those six- and seven-figure salaries were pitching, hitting, running and throwing on Friday night, sometimes receiving attention unlike any they'd gotten before.

The famed San Diego Chicken wound up with a bunch of other birds — the Toledo Mud Hens (a Minnesota Twins farm team), for their game against Pawtucket (Boston's top minor league club). And a cable television network, giving baseball-hungry fans a taste of what they were missing, gave coast-to-coast coverage of the Tidewater Tides (New York Mets) International League game against the Columbus Clippers (New York Yankees).

Andre Robertson, the Clippers' shortstop, seemed to sum up the opinion of a lot of the minor leaguers' sentiments about the major leaguers' strike. "We all follow it," said the second-year pro, who has never had earned a big-league paycheck. "Personally, I don't know that much about it. I really don't know what's going on, but I realize when we get up (to the majors), it's going to help us. So I'll go along with it."

John Pacella, who pitched last year for the Mets and now is in the Yanks' farm system, added: "I read about it. I watch it on TV. But it really doesn't affect us. It affects our careers. They're (the major league players) doing it to help us, and we're all together in that. But we're still going to play."

Tucker Ashford, the Columbus second baseman who played in the majors with San Diego and Texas, observed: "I'm happy we're not going on strike, so I get to play. In an indirect way, I realize it affects us, but I don't think it's a big issue" in the Clippers' clubhouse.

Brad Gulden, the Clippers' catcher who has played with the Yanks, expressed greater interest than his teammates and offered: "I'm glad they did something now than waiting until next year. This way, we know next year we're going to play baseball for sure."

Most of the 26 club owners remained silent as the strike began. But George Steinbrenner, the outspoken owner of the Yankees, observed after his team lost in its final game (for the time being) Thursday night in Chicago: "With all the problems we have in this country, a baseball strike is 10th on my priority list."

Dick Wagner, president of the Cincinnati Reds, sounded more dismayed than Steinbrenner. "I just can't believe people strike," Wagner said, "not people who make $225,000 a year — that's the National League average — for seven months work. It's just inconceivable ... In certain ways, our game is sinking to the level of the rest of the country."

People making a lot less than the NL's $225,000 a year expressed dismay, too. "How am I going to live if there is a strike?" said John Molinaro, a New York stock boy who supplements his income by selling beer at Shea Stadium during Mets games. "I need two jobs just to live. I don't care about the issues, man. I care about living!"

For Bill Scott of Seattle, baseball is his living. He sells beer at the Kingdome. "For me, it's really going to be tough because it's the only job I have, really," Scott said. "Real estate is the other job I have and with the high interest rates there's nothing doing on that."

In Oakland, 19-year-old Steve Holt, a batboy for the A's for the past four years, said he usually makes about $12 a game, including tips from the players. "It's not much money but I really enjoy it and I'd like to work my way up, get a job in baseball," Holt said. "I guess a lot of people don't realize how many people besides the players will be out of work."

Meanwhile, some of those players were getting ready to do a bit of easy living. "I'm going to drive down to Detroit and rest up," Toronto catcher Ernie Whitt said, looking forward to a trip home. "I haven't had a summer off in years."

East Carolina rallied for one in the bottom of the inning. Sorrell walked and was sacrificed up. He went to third on a fielder's choice and scored on a sacrifice fly by Todd Evans.

Wilmington struck for a third run in the second. David Price singled, stole second and took third on a wild pitch. He scored on Whitehead's sacrifice fly.

The winning run came over in the third. Holley reached on a two-base error and scored on Antle's second hit of the game.

The Seahawks picked up two more in the fourth on a double by Holley after an error and an infield hit put men on. The final three came in the sixth. Whitehead doubled and Murr singled. A passed ball scored Whitehead, and Jones followed with a homer to left, making it 9-2 at that point.

East Carolina's second run had come in the fourth, again without benefit of hit. Jay Carraway walked, and two more free trips loaded them up. A wild pitch brought Carraway in.

The other ECU run scored in the seventh. Sorrell broke the no-hitter with a single to left, and moved up when a pickoff try went awry. He took third on an out, and scored when Evans grounded out.

East Carolina is idle until Wednesday, when it hosts the University of North Carolina at Pikeville's Charles B. Aycock High School field.

Gaylord Perry 'Horsing Around'

BALTIMORE (AP) — Atlanta Braves pitcher Gaylord Perry isn't just sitting around while major league baseball players are on strike.

Perry, a Cy Young Award winner, was at Pimlico Race Course in Baltimore Saturday to watch his 3-year-old filly Bay Bee I'm Back have her first workout, a three-furlong breeze in 40 seconds.

The filly, bred in North Carolina by Perry and his wife Amy, is stabled at Pimlico. The Perry's have a farm in Easton, N.C.

"I was supposed to pitch in Philadelphia last night against the Phils," Perry said. "But with the strike, we decided to stop off at Pimlico to see the filly."

Bay Bee I'm Back was sired by Spy Back, an offspring of Carry Back, who won the Preakness Stakes at Pimlico in 1961.

"In a month from now, I'll either be in Houston or hopefully at the All-Star game," Perry said.

Czechs At Wimbledon...

Vera Sukova was a popular losing finalist in 1962 against Karen Hantze. She slipped on the stairs at her hotel the night before the final and hobbled painfully to defeat.

But when Martina Navratilova came on the scene in the mid-1970s, the tennis world realized Czechoslovakia meant business.

Navratilova used her talent to escape from her communist homeland, settled in America and became rich on the pro circuit before winning Wimbledon in 1978 and 1979.

Czechslovakian authorities have taken steps since then to keep their tennis talent at home. Instead of handing over their prize money to their national tennis federation, as Navratilova had to do in her early days, they keep most of it.

The Pragosport agency, a government body, handles players' contracts and overseas travel arrangements. After deducting expenses, Pragosport gets 20 per cent of the earnings of all players over 21, and 50 per cent from the younger ones.

The players keep the rest. So stars like Lendl and Mandlikova live in a different world from the thousands of young Czechoslovakians who participate in sport for fun.

Lendl's prize money totaled $583,906 last year, Mandlikova's $379,642.

Only the youngest players keep nothing for themselves. The Czechoslovak Physical Training Union — the state, in effect — pays for the youngstars who are getting onto the circuit for the first time, and collects their winnings. Once they get established, they move to Pragosport.

But it's a lonely life travelling on the tennis circuit from a communist country. The players usually have no coaches or family with them.

Lendl has said that in the early part of his pro career loneliness was the worst problem he had to face.

Mandlikova carries around letters from her father. She said she takes them out and reads them when she is lonely and depressed.

They are not stereotyped products of a communist sports training machine. You could not imagine two young people more unlike each other.

Lendl, dark haired and poker faced, is deadly serious both when he is playing and when he is off court. Mandlikova unwinds as soon as a match is over and has an impish sense of humor.

In the French Open she partnered Ilie Nastase of Romania in the mixed doubles. A reporter asked why she didn't play with Lendl.

Mandlikova wrinkled her nose and made a funny face.

"It's fun playing mixed doubles," she said. "Ilie is fun. Ivan — he's not fun."

But they follow each other's progress in the big tournaments and clearly have great respect for each other.

Mandlikova acknowledges a big debt to her father, Vilem Mandlik, a former Olympic sprinter.

"He encouraged me to take part in sports, but never forced me," she said. "When I started playing tennis he watched me. When I lost he took me aside and talked to me about why I lost. I don't know what I would have done without him."

Czechoslovakia has 19 regional centers for training young players. Between them they have 300 promising youngsters. Boys and girls are sent to these centers at age 11 or 12 if they look like good prospects for the future.

The best youngsters graduate to six higher training centers. These have about 50 trainees at the moment. They ape coached in strict privacy. No journalists and no foreigners are allowed in — not even Russians.

Korda, who oversees men's training, said there are no special secrets. But Czechslovakian training differs from that in most Western countries in one respect — the emphasis is on all-around sports development. Many of the country's best young tennis players are equallyng Czechoslovakians learn their tennis on clay courts.

Strike Could Be Lengthy...

teams losing a "ranking" free agent in the re-entry draft get a roster player from the team signing him.

Under an agreement reached last May, the players were given the right to strike over the free-agent compensation issue, but they would have to do so by June 1 or lose their right to walk out over compensation for the remainder of the agreement.

That deadline was extended by a mutual agreement between management and the players' union just before a May 29 strike date set prior to the season by the players.

The NLRB, acting on a request by the players, sought an injunction to delay implementation of the owners' plan for one year. But U.S. District Judge Henry Werker, sitting in Rochester, N.Y., denied the injunction, setting the stage for a strike.

Since the NLRB didn't act Friday to appeal Werker's ruling, an NLRB spokesman said no appeal could be filed with federal courts in New York until Monday.

While the players have no strike benefits, according to Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players Association, major league owners have $50 million in strike insurance and a mutual assistance fund reportedly worth as much as $15 million.

After 152 games are canceled by a strike, the insurance guarantees each owner $100,000 per game until the $50 million runs out, or until around Aug.1.

Nevertheless, Pittsburgh Pirates vice president Pete Peterson said Friday, "It's going to cost us a lot of money."

Added team treasurer Douglas McCormick: "This is the worst weekend of all weekends that we've played this year for a strike to happen."

He estimated that the Pirates' three scheduled weekend games against the Los Angeles Dodgers normally would being in $400,000 to $500,000 in team revenue.

The strike, undoubtedly, also would start affecting a player financially.

"There is no salary, no benefits during a strike," American League vice president Bob Fishel said Saturday. "The clubs are under no further obligation to the players."

Fishel said any costs incurred as a result of accident or injury suffered by a player during the strike would be born by the individual player.

Mark Belanger, Baltimore Orioles' player representative, suggested to his teammates that they not be part of any organized workouts.

"There's no telling how long a strike will last," he said. "It could be two days, two months, a week. It's our feeling if the players are together working out every day, the owners will never get serious about negotiations.

"They'll think that because the players are out and working, they are anxious to get back. If that happened, they would never make a move. They'd feel there was no reason to negotiate at the bargaining table," he said.

Meanwhile, there were attempts being made to humor the baseball fan suddenly left with no baseball.

In Houston, it was to be baseball as usual Saturday night for KENR, the flag station for the Houston Astros' network, which planned a rebroadcast of the first game ever played by the Houston franchise April 10, 1962.

In Portland, Ore., Saturday's Oregonian ran a headline that said: "Mantle's blasts fail to stop Chisox."

"To help ease the boredom of baseball fans during the strike, The Oregonian will run edited versions of stories and boxscores that ran in this newspaper on this date in other years," the newspaper said in an editor's note to its readers.

Hagler Retrains Crown...

Brown held his fighter in the corner, stopping the fight.

It was Hagler's second successful title defense since winning the championship from Alan Minter in London last September, and avenged the only blot on Hagler's record since 1966, when he last lost a fight. Hagler and Antoufermo fought to a draw when the Brooklyn resident held the title in November 1979.

Antuofermo's manager, Tony Carione, said, "We stopped it."

Antuofermo, claiming he wanted to continue, shouted, "I got robbed. He didn't beat me. He outbutted me."

Hagler, however, had stung the challenger repeatedly with short blows as Antuofermo sought to pin the champion against the ropes for a brawl at close quarters.

He had used the same tactic when the two fighters fought to a draw when Hagler claimed he won.

For Hagler, the victory was his 52nd in 56 bouts, while Antuofermo took his sixth loss in 54 fights.

The stage for the controversial finish of the fight was set Saturday afternoon at the weigh-in when the Massachusetts Boxing Commision declared Hagler weighed 160 although the scales read 161 — one pound over the middleweight maximum. Meyers claimed the scales hadn't been balanced in advance and the fight went on despite the weight controversy.

In retaining the only boxing title recognized by both the World Boxing Association and the World Boxing Council, Hagler continued his undefeated string of fights marred only by the draw, dating to March 1976. And Antuofermo lost a chance to regain the title he held for only two fights in 1979-80.

In preliminary bouts, Hagler's brother Robbie Simms won the New England middleweight championship, stopping Dom DiMarzo at 1:55 of the second round in a scheduled 10-rounder.

Simms, of Brockton, Mass., knocked down DiMarzo, of Boston, once in the first round and twice in the second before referee Tommy Rawson stopped the fight.

Heavyweight Dino Dennis of North Attleboro, Mass., retained his New England title with a split decision against Don Halpin of Lowell, Mass.

In an eight-round preliminary, Fernando Fernandez of Pawtucket, R.I., won a split decision over Ed Campbell of New York.

In the 10-round semifinal, veteran middleweight Mike Baker of Baltimore outpointed another veteran, Tony Chiaverini of Kansas City.

Baker, winning his 37th fight in 51 bouts, staved off a barrage of left hooks by the southpaw Chiaverini, now 38-7-2.

The loudest cheer during the semifinal, however, came when heavyweight contender Gerry Cooney took a stroll around Boston Garden and waved to the crowd.

Caponi Leads LPGA Championship By 2

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Donna Caponi went on a birdie binge on the first nine holes Saturday and then held up on the back side to shoot a 2-under-par 70 and expand her lead to 2 shots in the weather-plagued Ladies Professional Golf Association Championship.

The 36-year-old veteran, bidding for her fourth major championship in 17 professional seasons, birdied five of the first nine holes, with three of them coming in a row. That helped her to a front side of 5-under-par 31.

Caponi ran into a double bogey on the 10th hole and then, after NBC-TV cameras cut away, she bogeyed the 13th hole to slip to a 39 on the back side.

Caponi, the 1969 and 1970 U.S. Open champion and the 1979 winner of this major, had a 54-hole total of 207, nine under par for three trips around the Jack Nicklaus Sports Center Grizzly Course.

Jerilyn Britz, the 1979 U.S. Open winner, birdied the last two holes, playing in the last threesome with Caponi. That sliced the leader's margin in half and gave Britz a 71.

Pat Meyers, the other member of the final group, matched par of 72 and stood at 210, six under, for three rounds over the 6,258-yard layout just north of Cincinnati.

Douglas Hurls Legion Past Wilson

By RICK SCOPPE
Reflector Sports Writer

Pitt County coach Pat Smith knew during preseason the measure of his team's success would, in large part, be determined by its pitching. Friday night, the pitching overfloweth for Post 39.

Propelled by Gordon Douglas' three-hitter, Sammy Hodges' two-run single in the eighth inning and Post 39's second triple play this week, Pitt County defeated Wilson, 4-1, Friday night in an American Legion baseball game at Harrington Field.

The win left Pitt Count 4-1 overall and in the league. Wilson is now 7-5 overall and 2-3 in the league.

Douglas struck out nine and walked just one en route to his second decision in as many outings this season. Douglas, a right-hander, had a one-hitter going into the ninth before giving up two straight singles. The inning ended moments later on a triple play.

"I thought Gordon pitched just a super ballgame," Smith said. "He only gave up one run and his ball was really moving. (Catcher) Emmett (Walsh) said he was having a little trouble hanging on to his ball.

"And how about Sammy Hodges? He had a great game. He did an outstanding job. He made some exceptional plays in the infield and got two big hits for us tonight."

The biggest hit came in the eighth with two outs and Pitt County clinging to a none-too-secure 2-1 lead. Mitch Brann looped a single over the third baseman's head to open the inning and went to second when Kenny Barnes walked on four straight pitches.

Both moved up a base on Walsh's second sacrifice bunt of the night but remained at second and third when Douglas fouled out. Roger Williams, who had two RBIs on the night, was then intentionally walked. Enter Hodges.

The only player on either team with two hits, Hodges sent an 0-1 pitch between third and short for a single to score both Brann and Barnes. Barnes scored three of Pitt County's four runs.

"No, I wasn't worried when they walked Williams," Smith said. "That's part of baseball. I don't think they were walking him to get to Sammy, but to set up a force play.

"We needed those two runs. Had Sammy not gotten that hit they would have bunted in the ninth and we could have been in trouble."

Going into the ninth, Wilson had managed just one hit off Douglas, a third inning single by Donald Williams that scored Donald Doster and gave Wilson a 1-0 lead. That quickly changed in the ninth.

Charles Simpson, who was picked in the third round by the Pittsburgh Pirates in the recent amateur baseball draft, singled up the middle and Joel Patterson followed with a single to give Wilson runners at first and second with not outs.

Out came pitching coach Billy Davis to talk to Douglas. Not to worry. Before Davis had time to sit back down in the dugout, the game was over.

Al Hardison hit a line shot back up the middle that Douglas stabbed. Gordon then threw to his brother Mark for a force out at second. Mark threw to first to get Patterson to complete the triple play, Post 39's second this week. Pitt County had a triple play against Rocky Mount in Tuesday's 3-2 win.

"When you get one of those line shots and there are runners at first and second, things like that came happen," Smith said. "It's a tough play for them and a very good play for us."

The game was destined to be low-scoring from the start. Douglas, usually a slow starter on the mound, was extremely sharp two innings. He struck out three of the first six men he faced before walking Randy Prince to lead off the third.

Prince injured his hand while diving back to first and was replaced by Doster, who later scored Wilson's only run of the game on a single by Williams.

From there, Douglas became somewhat wild. He hit one man and nearly hit two others. "I think he was just wild enough to make him effective," Smith said. "I guess I got a little tired out there," Douglas added. "This was my first start in three weeks and I didn't feel like I threw real hard. But they (the coahes) said I was."

Douglas' opposing number, Richard Little, got off to a rocky start. Mark Douglas singled and Brann walked to open the first, but Barnes hit into a double play and Walsh flew out to end the threat.

It was not until the fourth, however, that Pitt County touched Little, a right-hander who throws sidearm.

Barnes was hit by Little to lead off the fourth. Gordon Douglas then singled to the hole to move Barnes to second. Barnes raced to third when the throw from shortstop Chris Bradberry bounced past first. Barnes subsequently scored on Williams' sacrifice fly to tie the game at 1-1.

Post 39 took a lead it never lost two innings later. Barnes singled to center to lead off the sixth, went to second on Walsh's sacrifice bunt and scored on Williams' single to left, giving Pitt Co. a 2-1 lead and putting them on the road to its third straight victory after an opening-season loss to Wilson.

"It's still early, and we haven't played the best two teams in the league yet, but I'm pleased with the way the kids are playing," Smith said. "Like I said, I knew we were going to have the type of team that had to get good pitching (to win)."

Wolfpack Rallies To Hand ECU First Summer League Defeat

RALEIGH — Thursday night, it had been the turn of the Campbell University Camels. Friday night, it was the turn of the East Carolina University Pirates.

The turn? What turn?

The turn to lose their first North State College Baseball League game of the young season.

Campbell opened the year with three straight wins before bowing to N.C. State on Thursday. Then, Friday night, the Wolfpack, in their first year in the league, did it to the Pirates, 3-2, knocking them out of sole possession of first place.

The loss ended a two-game winning streak for the Pirates.

It took a bottom of the seventh pinch hit single to do the job, however, spoiling Kirk Parsons' bid to capture his first win of the season. Parsons started the contest hot, and had a perfect game going through the first three and two thirds innings.

But after East Carolina had grabbed a 1-0 lead, the Wolfpack rallied to tie it up twice before finally pushing over the winning run in the final inning of the game.

East Carolina grabbed the initial lead in the contest in the second inning, scoring once. After two men were out, Jay Carraway drew a walk off State's Mark Roberts, then raced around to score when Jack Curlings cracked a double.

But State managed to break Parsons hold on the Wolfpack in the fourth — after two were down. Chris Baird doubled, then came around to score the tieing run on a single by Jim Toman.

East Carolina quickly regained the lead, however, pushing over a second run in the fifth. With one down, Mike Sorrell walked and was balked to second. He came around to score when Todd Hendley reached on an error.

But again, State came back to tie it up, scoring in the bottom of the inning. Nelson Carlton doubled and scored when Leo Thomas singled.

The Pirates were unable to crack the scoring column again against Roberts, who settled down, allowing only five hits during the night.

The Wolfpack, meanwhile, finally pushed ahead in the seventh scoring the game-winning run.

With one down, Thomas got a single and Mo Barbour followed with a hit. Jeff Hudson then came up with a pinch-hit single, driving in Thomas with the game-ender.

The loss dropped the Pirate record to 2-1 on the season, while State evened its record at 2-2.

East Carolina, following a scheduled doubleheader against UNC-Wilmington on Saturday night, is idle until Wednesday, when it entertains the University of North Carolina in a 7:30 p.m. game at Harrington Field in Greenville.

Rogers' Decision Due Monday On Canada

MONTREAL (AP) — Middle linebacker Tom Cousineau finally reported for the final two days of the Montreal Alouettes' training camp in Victoriaville, Quebec, on Friday but the Canadian Football League team still is awaiting the arrival of wide receiver James Scott.

Cousineau, who missed two weeks of training camp because of a misunderstanding with General Manager Bob Geary, had been expected to arrive Thursday but he was delayed because of car problems.

Scott, the former member of the Chicago Bears of the National Football League who was acquired as a free agent by the Alouettes, has been missing since the opening of the team's rookie camp May 24 despite several reports that he was on a flight to Montreal.

Scott said through his agent, Jack Childers, that he still planned to honor his three-year contract with the Alouettes and will report to camp on Monday.

Cousineau refused to discuss his situation "until I have a talk with Coach (Joe) Scannella."

Meanwhile, Geary expects to hear soon whether the Alouettes have landed George Rogers, the Heisman Trophy winner who was drafted by New Orleans Saints of the NFL last April.

Rogers's agent, Jack Mills, said his client will give his final decision on Monday where he will play football this season.

"It's hard to guess what Rogers is going to do, but I think we have a good chance," said Geary. "I've told both him and his agent I believe he has a better future in Canada than playing for the Saints.

"Playing for (Coach) Bum Phillips could prove to be a real meat-grinder situation for the kid."

Geary said he had put Rogers in contact with a tax agent who can show him how to get a better tax break in Canada than the United States.

In another development, the Alouettes acquired Canadian linebackers Darrell Burko and Rick Kalvaitis from the Toronto Argonauts Friday deal for future considerations.

Geary hopes to complete another trade with the Calgary Stampeders early next week.

Angry Holmes Batters Spinks In Three

DETROIT (AP) — The anger blazed in Larry Holmes' eyes.

He had just defended his World Boxing Council heavyweight championship, destroying Leon Spinks Friday night with a barrage of punches that bordered on awesome. Now he had a message for the world.

"I may sound arrogant or bitter," he began, "but I'm going to tell you what it's really all about. I'm rich already. I don't fight for money. I fight because I have to convince you people that no one can beat me."

Then he wheeled and began a cheering chant with his brother, Jake.

"I'm the champion. I've proved it day in and day out. I'm bad! I know I'm bad! You know I'm bad! Nobody can beat me! You bring 'em in and I'll beat 'em!"

Holmes was basking in the glory of one of his most impressive victories. Trainer Eddie Futch, handling Holmes for only the second time, offered an explanation of why the champion was so high after his 38th professional victory and 28th knockout.

"He feels he showed a lot of doubters that he is truly the champion," Futch said. "He has some frustration over what he considers shabby treatment by some people. It builds up and it has to come out."

Respect has come grudingly for Holmes, who fought for so long in the shadow of more glamorous heavyweights. But Holmes put himself right up there with the best of them — Muhammad Ali, Joe Frazier, and other great heavyweights — with the impressive show against Spinks.

The fight started the way both men had said it would. Spinks swarmed in on Holmes, pumping punches at the champ the way a street fighter might. Holmes seemed content to score points with an effective left jab and quick, accurate rights, but Spinks seemed intent on turning the bout into an alley brawl.

The pattern continued in the second round which included a tremendous toe-to-toe exchange on the ropes. Then, in the third, Holmes tagged the challenger with a devastating left. Suddenly, Spinks was backing up and Holmes was swarming in, showering punches.

The champion landed close to a dozen straight punches and Spinks finally fell to the canvas. When the ex-champ got to his feet, he was clearly in trouble and Holmes closed in, determined to finish the job. He had Spinks trapped on the ropes and was raining carefully measured punches on his man when Leon's cornermen threw in the towel and referee Richard Steele signalled the end of the fight at 2:34.

"Leon almost got hurt tonight because the referee didn't do his job," Holmes said. "He should have stopped the fight after the first knockdown. Leon was taking several punches on the side of his head. There was a gash under his eye. He was groggy in his corner."

During Holmes' final attack, Leon's brother, light heavyweight contender Michael Spinks, jumped up on the apron of the ring, shouting "Stop it! Stop it!" But the fight went on for at least another minute with Leon catching leather.

When it finally ended, Holmes had a message for Michael.

"I told him, 'Take care of Leon. Make these people take care of Leon.' I don't think they've treated him properly."

Jerry Sawyer, Spinks' manager, said he thought the referee had acted properly and that Leon, who was fighting for the heavyweight crown for the third time in 15 professional bouts, would be back.

"He fought the best fighter in the world today," Sawyer said. "He's only 27. He'll fight again."

So will Holmes, 31, and the man in the on deck circle may be Gerry Cooney. Before Friday night's fight, Promoter Don King offered Cooney $5 million to fight the Holmes-Spinks winner. But Cooney apparently already has a fall date set with World Boxing Assciation champion Mike Weaver and isn't about to climb into the ring with Holmes right now. That fight, though, is tied up in a WBA dispute.

Holmes was bitter when Cooney's name came up and tried to get at the young heavyweight, who was at ringside, taking pictures of the bout.

"I'm not interested in Gerry Cooney, unless he signs," Holmes said. "If he comes in here today, I'll punch him in the mouth for free. He's a deformed kid with only a left hand. He's fought nobody. He's a white hope. If he was black, he'd be nowhere.

"I'm going on vacation with my wife," he said. "I'm gonna drive my Rolls Royce. If I see him on the road, I'll blow the horn at him."

Then Holmes added the final insult for Cooney.

"A few years ago, I began working with mentally retarded kids," he said. "I think he was in one of the camps."

Holmes' job on Spinks was the third quick heavyweight knockout on Friday night's card, which attracted about 12,000 fans to Joe Louis Arena.

Earlier in the evening, Greg Page knocked out Alfredo Evangelista at 40 seconds of the second round, and Michael Dokes kayoed John L.Gardner, the European champion, at 1:54 of the fourth round. The victories kept both young heavyweights undefeated, Page at 16-0 and Dokes at 21-0-1.

In another bout, WBC Super Lightweight champion Saoul Mamby scored a unanimous 15-round decision over Jo Kimpuani.

For Holmes, the Spinks fight was his 10th title defense and ninth knockout since he won the crown on a decision from Ken Norton June 9, 1978. Ironically, his original shot at the crown came when the WBC stripped Spinks of recognition because Leon insisted on giving Muhammad Ali a rematch after beating Ali for the crown Feb. 15, 1978.

But it was only when Holmes beat Ali for his eighth straight knockout Oct. 2, 1980 that he began getting recognition as a top-quality champion. Now, his destruction of Spinks has cemented that claim.

Card Pleased Most - Except For Losers

DETROIT (AP) — Everyone appeared to have a good time except boxers Leon Spinks, John Gardner, Jo Kimpuani, Alfredo Evangelista, Bob West, Charles Wooten, Angel Castro and Bruce Granham.

Those were the only losers among about 15,000 festive people who saw World Boxing Council heavyweight champion Larry Holmes score a devastating third-round knockout over Spinks in the main event at Detroit's riverfront Joe Louis Arena.

Tuxedoed fight promoter Don King crooned that the fight game was back in Detroit to stay as he gazed over a crowd sprinkled with comparatively few of the elegantly-clad celebrity types who frequent championship matches in posh arenas like Caesar's Palace in Las Vegas.

"We'll be back," he said, "as soon as we get another top card together."

King would not specify what kind of boxing card could lure the return of his promotional efforts. But some in the crowd would have sparred verbally with King's contention that anybody — who really wants to — can afford the price of admission, ranging from $25 to $500 a ticket.

In an effort to boost lagging sales — due in part to Detroit's high unemployment rate and lack of available cash for high-priced entertainment — the price of 1,500 tickets was slashed in half to $25 on Thursday.

About 500 people gathered outside the arena Friday night in the vain hope that more tickets would be bargain-priced.

"We hoped to get one but we just didn't luck out," said T-shirted Ken McGrann, 25, from the nearby suburb of Garden City. McGrann, who wound up paying $50, also was disappointed at Spinks's defeat. "I thought this was Larry's time to lose," he said.

Except for the brutally quick departure of England's Gardner at the hands of heavyweight Michael Dokes and Kimpuani's begrudging loss to super lightweight champ Saoul Mamby, the ring's early attraction was a bevy of young women hired to introduce upcoming rounds.

"People don't seem very interested (in the fights)," said Joe Matton, 65, who's hawked refreshments at the stark 20,000 seat arena since it opened on the banks of the Detroit River in 1979. The arena was formally dedicated to the late heavyweight champion Joe Louis in brief ceremonies preceding the Holmes-Spinks bout.

The 10 card girls, mostly in their early 20s, auditioned with about 200 other young women after promoters placed an advertisment in the Detroit Free Press.

"This is fun because they (the audience) don't know I'm Miss Nude Dayton, Ohio, when I go up there," said dancer Paula Frank, 20, of Detroit.

"I feel like I'm in Hollywood. This is the big time," said Terry Harris, 21, of Lansing.

Another Lansing 21-year-old, Toni Williams, said the fans "like the fighters, but they love the girls."

"I hate to see them hit each other like that," said Williams as Mamby delivered a flurry of eighth-round blows to Kimpuani and the crowd began to warm up to the fights. When Kimpuani took a wicked uppercut, several more conversations stopped in their tracks.

Spinks and Holmes captured the crowd's attention when they finally stepped into the ring. Howard Cossell at ringside, the card girls, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, former Detroit Tigers baseball star Ron LeFlore no longer distracted the crowd.

"The whole arena started to go nuts," said Moe Ulrych, 28, of Detroit. "There's more umph when there's a local prospect like Spinks."

"This fight perked the city up for one night," said Steve Blum, 27, of Detroit, explaining the crowd's apparent preference for Spinks. "Detroit is so down they wanted someone to represent it. Detroit needs a shot in the arm," he said of Spinks, who lives in the Detroit area.

Larry Holmes Takes Page From Book Of Muhammad Ali

DETROIT (AP) — It was Tarzan of the Apes after slaying a lion. It was Attilla the Hun, William the Conqueror and Caesar marching through Gaul. It was Muhammad Ali at his bombastic, boastful best.

"No one in the world can beat me," Larry Holmes bellowed after crushing a tough alley fighter named Leon Spinks in 2:34 of the third round to remain WBC heavyweight boxing champion of the world.

"You're going to get people hurt. I don't want to hurt anybody. Leon Spinks almost got hurt tonight because the ref didn't do his job."

This is the new Larry Holmes, winner of all his 38 fights, 28 by knockout — once an easy-going, low-talking practitioner of his art now blown to a state of defiance and arrogance by his own success and failure of the public to recognize what he is.

There was hardly a bead of sweat rolling down the champion's 17½-inch neck when he strode into the interview room of the Joe Louis Arena Friday night after his thunderclap victory over Spinks.

He wore a red sweat suit and stood straight and tall beside his petite wife, Diane, also attired in red, on the dais as cameras flashed and newsmen pushed and shoved to get within earshot. "I'm gonna stand up and say a few words," he roared. "A lot of you don't know what's happening. I don't want to seem arrogant or bitter. I just want to tell people how it is."

The press corps was awestruck. Was this the slick, gentlemanly boxing artist from Easton, Pa., who remained obscured by the shadow of the legendary Ali while building one of the most impressive records in boxing history?

Upon what meat doth the great Caesar feed?

"This is my wife, Diane, she gives me desire," he said at the top of his voice. "I don't need money. I am a multimillionaire. I have my house paid for, my bar paid for and my seven cars.

"I fight to win, that's all."

Holmes showed open resentment that the press already was building up a hard-hitting young Long Islander, Gerry Cooney, winner of 25 professional fights, 21 by knockout, to take his crown.

"I am not interested in Gerry Cooney," he snapped angrily before the first question could be asked. "If he came in here now, I would punch him in the mouth.

"He is a deformed kid with only a left arm. I proved tonight I have two arms."

Promoter Don King formally offered Cooney, who was at ringside and later pushed his way to the apron to take movies of the fight, $5 million to meet Holmes in a fall battle.

"Just lies, all a show," the 6-foot-6 Cooney said. "King knows we have signed to fight Mike Weaver (the WBA titleholder) in October."

"Cooney never fought nobody," Holmes said. "If he was black he would be nobody."

Then the 6-foot-3 champion rallied to the defense of the man who moments before he had first dropped with a shattering right, then battered into near insensitivity before a white towel was tossed into the ring by Spinks' kid brother, Michael, with 26 seconds left in the round.

Television, he said, had exploited Spinks' arrest on a drug charge.

"We all sin," he insisted. "Leon Spinks is not perfect. I am not perfect. You are not perfect.

"Tonight I beat the best man. Spinks is the No.1 challenger. People have been taking advantage of Leon. All he needs is somebody to help him."

Holmes said he never was hurt in the shortened fight — "only thumbed once" — and he was connecting with right-hand shots from the very start.

He argued that the referee should have stopped the fight after the knockdown earlier in the round.

"I hit him with a left, then two good shots to the head. He had a gash over the right eye. I could see he was groggy in the corner. I was measuring him when Michael ran up and yelled, 'Stop it.' Leon could have been seriously hurt."

Holmes said he complained to the referee, Richard Steele, and told Leon's brother: "Make these people take care of Leon."

The champion reminded listeners that he was 31 and wouldn't be fighting forever.

"My wife and I, we're going on vacation with our baby," he said. "If we pass you on the road, we'll blow our horn."

Friday's Youth Baseball Roundup

Babe Ruth

Pepsi 8
Coca Cola 6

Pepsi scored five runs in the top of the sixth to erase one-run deficit and then held off Coca Cola in the bottom half of the inning to escape with an 8-6 victory Friday afternoon in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

Pepsi trailed, 4-3, going into the sixth but rallied for five runs to take the lead. With one gone, Ted Stanley singled, stole second and went to third on Bobby Casey's single.

Then, with two gone, Patrick Rand singled home Stanley. Rand then stole second and went to third on a wild pitch, which allowed Brent Langley, running for Casey, to score.

Bill Messick then reached on an error to score Rand. When the ball was finally retrieved, Messick was on third. He scored on Hunter Bost's double. Bost went to third on a balk and scored on Les Turner's single, giving Pepsi an 8-4 advantage.

Coke scored twice in the bottom of the sixth but went down in order in the seventh to end the game.

Rand led Pepsi with three hits in four at bats. Turner was two for three and Bost two for four for the winners. Traye Fugua and Eric Woodworth were both two for four for Coke.

Wachovia 3

Aaction Movers managed just three hits but took advantage of seven Wachovia errors, including three in a eight-run sixth, and got a one-hit pitching performance from Steve Wall to capture a 13-3 decision Friday night in a Babe Ruth baseball game.

Wall struck out four and walked five en route to the victory.

The game was tied at 2-2 after the first inning and Wachovia then took the lead with a run in the third. It was Wachovia's final run of the game.

Aaction Movers scored three times in the fifth to take its first lead of the game, a lead it never lost. Billy Godley walked to lead off the inning, stole second and third and scored when Darryl Pettis reached on an error.

Pettis then stole second and scored on Jay Wynn's double. Steve Wall reached on an error to send Wynn to third. On a double steal, Wynn scored AM's final run of the inning.

Aaction Movers added eight runs to its lead in the sixth, thanks to three errors, three walks and a single by Godley.

Neither team had anyone with more than one hit.

Little League

First Federal 27
Exchange 6

Chris Meeks banged out four doubles and First Federal struck for nine runs in the fifth inning to easily defeat Exchange, 27-6, Friday afternoon in a Tar Heel Little League baseball game.

Exchange led, 2-0, after the top of the first but First Federal countered with a four-run bottom of the first to take the lead. The inning included the first of four doubles by Meeks.

Exchange regained the lead in the top of the second with a four-run outburst, keyed by Axel Smith's grand slam home run. But First Federal again countered in the bottom half of the inning, this time scoring five runs to take the lead for good.

Three of the five runs scored on passed balls. In all, seven of FF's 27 runs came via passed balls. The inning was also highlighted by Meeks' double and a single by Billy Anderson.

First Federal added six more runs to its total in the third and then scored three times in the fourth, thanks to Brian Joyner's three-run home run. FF's final nine runs came in the fifth. That inning included a double by Meeks and singles by Joyner and Rodney Harris.

FF was led in hitting by Meeks, who was four for five. Joyner had three hits for FF followed by Harris with two. Harris also scored five runs.

Exchange managed just four hits and no one had more than one.

Jaycees 2
Union Carbide 1

Mark Coburn's ground out in the top of the eighth scored Jody Barnes to lift the Jaycees to a 2-1 victory over Union Carbide Friday afternoon in a North State Little League baseball game.

Union Carbide took the initial lead with a run in the third but the Jaycees tied the game in the sixth when Michael Garris singled, moved to third on two sacrifices and scored on Coburn's single.

Two innings later, the Jaycees were back for the winner. Barnes was hit by a pitch to lead off the inning and went to third on two straight passed balls. Coburn then grounded to second, allowing Barnes to score the go-ahead run.

UC went down in order in the bottom of the eighth to end the game.

David Lee led the Jaycees with four hits in four at bats. Brian Willie was two for four for the winners.

UC managed just two hits off Coburn, who started, and Lee, who came on in relief in the fourth.

Winterville League

Thompson Ins. 6
Pizza Inn 0

WINTERVILLE — Thompson Insurance gained a 6-0 forfeit victory over Pizza Inn in the Winterville Little League Friday night.

The game was forfeited in the fifth inning of the six-frame contest when Pizza Inn had a player ejected, and was unable to field the required nine players.

Mark Smith led the Thompson hitting with two, one of them a home run. Joe Deloach led Pizza Inn with two hits.

Pizza Inn is now 9-1, while Thompson Insurance is 1-8.

Dr. Cohen 22
A'ridge & S'erland . 12

WINTERVILLE — Despite getting only one hit, Dr. Cohen romped to a 22-12 victory over Aldridge & Southerland in the Winterville Little League Friday night.

The lone Dr. Cohen hit was made by Scott Bond. Aldridge & Southerland was led by Matt Stocks who had three hits.

Dr. Cohen is now 6-5, while Aldridge & Southerland is 2-8.

Spinks Avoids Meeting Press

DETROIT (AP) — Leon Spinks had little success at dodging Larry Holmes' powerful punches Friday night, but he succeeded at avoiding reporters.

"He just took a beating and he's not ready to meet with the press," said publicist Murray Goodman following the third-round knockout by Holmes.

Spinks, who was attempting to regain the boxing glory in which he basked three years ago, declined to meet with reporters at Joe Louis Arena, then later failed to show for a scheduled news conference.

The 27-year-old Spinks lasted less than three rounds in his second heavyweight title fight in just 15 professional bouts. Del Williams, Spinks' trainer, said his fighter "just took some good punches" from Holmes.

Jerry Sawyer, Spinks' manager, said Spinks was disappointed with the devastating defeat, which dropped his record to 10-3-2.

"He fought the best fighter in the world today," Sawyer said.

The fight came to an end at 2:34 of the third round after Holmes pummelled Spinks with a flurry of punches. Michael Spinks, Leon's brother, stood at the edge of the corner pleading with referee Richard Steele to stop the bout.

The end came when one of Spinks' cornermen threw a towel into the ring.

"Larry Holmes ain't no slouch," said Michael Spinks, a leading light heavyweight contender. "He knows hmw to finish someone."

Spinks was in top physical shape for the bout, for which he received $500,000. He trained for several weeks at a secluded northern Michigan resort lodge, ironically the same site where he trained for his June 6, 1979, bout against Gerrie Coetzee in Monte Carlo. In that fight, Spinks was knocked out in the first round — the only other time he has been knocked out.

COMPARE SNAPPER VERSATILITY. CAN THE OTHERS MOW, BLOW, BAG, VACUUM, MULCH, SHRED AND DE-THATCH?

Every SNAPPER mower, depending on how equipped, can mow, blow, bag, vacuum, shred and mulch. Self-propelled models, with six forward speeds, can also de-thatch. Built-in SNAPPER quality includes "high vacuum" power for bagging during high moisture conditions, full-length solid steel axles, large rear wheels and easy cutting height adjustment. Available in 19 or 21 inch, with 2 or 4 cycle 3 HP engines, and 3-1/2-5 HP 4 cycle engines.

SNAPPER mowers are worth more because they do more and their price is competitive with other quality mowers.

Moses Wins 62nd Straight 400 Race

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The incomparable Edwin Moses added another stadium record to his list Saturday in winning his 62nd consecutive 400-meter hurdles race, timed in 48.29 seconds at the Brooks Invitational track and field meet.

Moses, the 1976 Olympic champion who holds the world's record of 47.13, finished a full second ahead of David Lee in Saturday's race at the University of California's Edwards Stadium.

A pair of collegians, sprinter Roh Brown of Arizona State and shot putter Mike Carter of Southern Methodist, were among the other winners early on the 15-event program.

Waltrip Grabs Pole For Hodgdon

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — It's first or famine on the stock car tracks for Darrell Waltrip this year. He has won four races but also finished in 30th place or worse in four other races because of mechanical troubles.

Waltrip has done a good share of his feasting the past two years at the twisting Riverside International Raceway, where the Warner G. Hodgdon 400 kilometer NASCAR race will be run today. The driver from Franklin, Tenn., won the pole position for today's race when the first 20 places were filled in Friday's qualifying.

At Riverside, Waltrip is driving a 1981 Buick Regal built specifically for the track. He averaged 114.419 miles per hour to win the pole position. The runnerup in qualifying was 1980 NASCAR driving champion Dale Earnhardt of Kannapolis, N.C., who averaged 113.459 mph in a 1981 Pontiac.

"I like to run here. It's a pleasant phange," Waltrip said, "You're used to going around in circles, and you come out here and go the opposite way. It's a lot of fun."

The remaining 15 qualifiers were to be determined Saturday at the 2.62-mile track that has eight right and left turns along with hills and reverse banking that stock car racers rarely see.

Waltrip was a split second slower than the course record off 114.711 he set here last January in a qualifying session. He won that race, and has captured three of the last five NASCAR events at Riverside.

"With the exception of the four races where we finished 30th or worse, we've son four races and this is our third pole," Waltrip said. "At times we've been dominating and at times we've fallen right out."

The car prepared for Riverside by Junior Johnson was driven by Waltrip for the first time in competition. After today's race they plan to put it on blocks and not use it again until the NASCAR drivers return to Riverside for the final race of the season in November.

Third in the qualifying Richard Petty of Level Cross, N.C., 112.747 mph in a 1981 Buick; followed by Neil Bonnett of Hueytown, Ala., 112.603 mph in a 1981 Thunderbird.

Allison of Hueytown, Ala., 112.381 in a 1981 Buick.

Qualifying leaders Friday for the Warner G. Hodgon 400 kilometer NASCAR grand national stock car race to be held today at the 2.62-mile Riverside International Raceway road course:

1. Darrell Waltrip, Franklin, Tenn., 81 Buick, 114.419 miles per hour.
2. Dale Earnhardt, Kannapolis, N.C., 81 Pontiac, 113.459 mph.
3. Richard Petty, Level Cross, N.C., 81 Buick, 112.747 mph.
4. Neil Bonnett, Hueytown, Ala., 81 Thunderbird, 112.640 mph.
5. Benny Parsons, Ellerbe, N.C., 81 Thunderbird, 112.603 mph.
6. Ricky Rudd, Chesapeake, Va., 81 Buick, 112.394 mph.
7. Bobby Allison, Hueytown, Ala., 81 Buick, 112.381 mph.
8. Harry Gant, Taylorsville, N.C., 81 Pontiac, 111.816 mph.
9. Terry Labonte, Corpus Christi, Tex., 81 Buick, 111.771 mph.
10. Morgan Shepherd, Conover, N.C., 81 Pontiac, 111.261 mph.
11. Hershel McGriff, Bridal Veil, Ore, 81 Buick, 110.914 mph.
12. Elliott Forbes-Robinson, Glendale, Calif., 81 Buick, 110.828 mph.
13. Kyle Petty, Randleman, N.C., 81 Buick, 110.803 mph.
14. Roy Smith, Victoria, B.C., Canada, 81 Buick, 110.466 mph.

At the recent Ladies Day, a flag day tournament was held. First place went to Sue Castellow, followed by Vertie King. Sara West was third. On a flag day, golfers take half their handicap, add it to par, and see how far on the course they can go with that many strokes. The one going the fartherest is the winner.

Thursday, a "Turkey Convention" was held. First gross was won by the team of Harrison Gaskins, Bill Mitchum, Sonny Lea and Dallas McPherson. Low net went to Richard Holloman, Charles Gaskins, Charles Vincent and Thomas Gardner with a 46. Second net went to Larry Land, Garry Pegram, Gordon Fulp and Nicky Herrin with a 47.

The match play tournament is continuing at the club. Advancing to the third round are Paul Evans, Joe Murad, Bill Clark, Ray Evans, Kelly Barnhill, Don Wilkerson, Richard Holloman, Ron Theile, Skip Bright, Bob Dail, Danny McNally, Don McGlohon, Clifton Edwards III, Mike Aldridge, Will Hickman and Ray Edwards. The next match must be completed by June 20.

A junior clinic will be held July 13-16.

Rose Says He Can Wait For Hit

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pete Rose says he waited 18 years and two months for his chance to break Stan Musial's career National League hit record, so he can wait until the major league baseball strike is solved.

"Hit No. 3,631 will have to wait another day or two, or whatever it takes," said the 40-year-old Rose after he learned the players were on strike.

Rose tied Musial's record of 3,630 Wednesday night when he singled in the first inning off Houston's Nolan Ryan.

Rose had hoped to break the record Friday night in the opener of a three-game series against Atlanta's Gaylord Perry.

The strike, over the free agent compensation issue, struck him out on that as clubs canceled games until further notice.

Rose said he would just have to go along with the decision by the Major League Baseball Players Association.

"Just because I'm going after a record doesn't make me feel any different. I wish there was baseball, but there's not," he said.

Rose appeared in the Phillies' clubhouse Friday to pick up his personal belongings. The players aren't allowed to take any team property.

Now that the series with Atlanta is wiped out, Rose said he's concentrating on perhaps getting the record Monday night against the Cincinnati Reds.

That would be ironic, since Rose played 16 years for the Reds, playing out his option and taking advantage of the free agent rule to sign a four-year, $800,000-plus per season contract with the Phillies.

He projected even further.

"What if the strike goes the whole homestand? Maybe I'll have to go to Houston Wednesday and try to break it off Ryan," Rose said.

After giving up the single to Rose Wednesday, Ryan struck out the first baseman three times.

"I'll just hang in there and hope they get this resolved quickly," Rose said. "Maybe the owners now know the players are serious."

Rose said that while he was concerned about himself and the other players, he was worried about the affect the strike might have on the fans.

"I don' want the fans to get down on baseball," said Rose, adding that he may go to Cincinnati to work out.

"I'll hang around here a while, and if it drags on I'll go home to Cincinnati where I have better facilities to work out," he said.

Rose said he was disappointed about the strike, but added "if this is what it takes to settle things, it's all right with me.

"I appreciate the job the players association has done the last 10 or 12 years. The free agency system helped me," Rose recalled.

Davis Claims NFL Changed TV Position

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Al Davis, managing general partner of the Oakland Raiders, has testified that the National Football League changed its position on the issue of television proceeds as a result of the Raiders' antitrust lawsuit against the NFL.

Davis claimed in testimony Friday in U.S. District Court that originally the league had held each of the 28 teams would be on its own in making contracts for cable and pay television.

Although not on the witness stand, NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle told reporters Friday that it had always been the policy of the league that TV revenues be shared equally.

Davis testified the audience in the Los Angeles area would be much greater than that in the Oakland area and even without that expected future revenue, his team would have made $4 million more in 1980 if the NFL had permitted it to move to Los Angeles.

Davis was questioned by NFL attorney Patrick Lynch who asked him about cable television and pay TV. Davis testified it was his belief that league teams would not share equally on cable or pay TV.

Davis, who will again be under cross-examination Monday, claimed in response to one of the NFL attorney's questions that the NFL had tailored its position to suit the court case. He said he wanted to be in the best market to make as much as he can. He noted Los Angeles is the second largest television ouolet in the nation, and Rozelle previously had indicated that teams would strike their own deals on cable and pay TV.

In the courthouse hallway Rozelle denied he had changed his position. "It had been assumed," he said, "that teams would share equally in all television revenue."

Davis said it would take a great deal of money to run a winning football team in the '80's and "there is tremendous competition to be No.1, to get the best talent."

Because higher salaries are demanded by players, Davis said, teams will need added revenues.

"There is an awful lot of money in it." Davis said of pay-TV. "It's not going to be shared equally."

Some TV money from networks is shared equally, each team getting an estimated $5.8 million annually.

Davis insisted he doesn't want to make substantially more money than other football teams, saying "I'm not looking to be ahead. I just want to be equal."

"By not coming to Los Angeles, we lost a lot of money last year," Davis said of the league action to block his team's move from Oakland, and he estimated the overall sum at $4 million.

"I just want to have the same opportunity of everyone else in the NFL and I think it's only right," said Davis.

Driesell Son To Maryland

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Chuck Driesell, the son of Coach Lefty Driesell, will attend Maryland and play basketball for the Terrapins next season.

The 6-foot-1 younger Driesell hasn't been awarded a scholarship yet.

But "he'll make the team," his father said Friday.

"I haven't decided whether to give him a scholarship or not," Driesell said. "I'll wait and see how things go. It's not a big deal because he can come to Maryland for practically nothing.

"Members of the faculty get one-third off the cost of attending school," the coach noted.

The younger Driesell starred for Springbrook High School last season, averaging more than 18 points per game and helping the team reach the semifinals of the state Class AA tournament.

He had considered attending the Naval Academy and playing basketball, but "Navy didn't show that much interest in him," his father said.

Driesell has at least two scholarships available and could hand one to his son. But that move might create a stir from his critics.

So he said he will wait to see how well the young Terp plays before making a move on a possible scholarship for his only son.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF
1981 by Chicago Tribune

ASK OMAR

Q.—We play four-card majors. There's something that bothers me, and I am not sure what to do, whether I'm opener or responder. As opener, suppose partner responds to my opening bid with one of a major suit; or as responder, suppose that partner opens one of a major. When do I raise with only three trumps, and when don't I?—B. Allen, Oak Park, Mich.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A.—First of all, stop thinking of it as a problem that afflicts only those players who use four-card majors—it applies to all players. No matter whether you favor four- or five-card majors, on most of the hands where you open one of a major suit you will hold five cards in the suit. We have explained why on numerous occasions, so we won't go into it again.

Secondly, the problem only arises when the raiser has a minimum hand and wants to make a single raise. Where the raiser has a hand good enough for a double raise, he should find some bid other than a jump raise. A jump raise promises four-card support, whether as a response or as a rebid by opener.

Once we get that out of the way, we can give reasonably sage advice. Raise partner with only three trumps when that is the natural bid to make! If you think that I am trying to be facetious, you are wrong. I might not like raising partner with three low trumps—if I must raise, I prefer to hold three to an honor, or four trumps. But if the hand calls for a raise, I raise. Consider these two hands:

a) ♠AKx ♡xxx ◇AQxxx ♣xx
b) ♠AKx ♡xxx ◇AQxx ♣xxx

Assume that you open the bidding with one diamond and partner responds one heart. With hand a) you should raise to two hearts, while with hand b) you should rebid one no trump. Why the difference?

The raise of partner's suit is more encouraging than bidding no trump. While the high cards in the two hands are identical, in hand a) you have a potential ruffing value in clubs. Therefore, hand a) is a better hand for a suit contract than hand b). Incidentally, don't rebid two diamonds with that hand. On the given sequence, that tends to suggest at least six diamonds, or certainly a very good five-card suit, which you don't have.

Now let's consider what to do where partner opens the bidding with one heart and we hold:

a) ♠Axx ♡xxx ◇Kxxx ♣xxx
b) ♠Axxx ♡xxx ◇Kxxx ♣xx

The same general rule applies. With hand a) you don't want to encourage partner, so you respond one no trump. Hand b), however, is improved by the potential ruffer, so you raise to two hearts.

Don't make the common error of responding one spade with hand b). If partner now rebids two clubs and you take a preference to two hearts, partner won't be sure that you have three-card support for his first-bid suit. Even worse, he might raise spades, stranding you in a weak 4-3 fit when you have a superior 5-3 heart fit available. It is better to raise partner immediately on hands worth only one bid.

Group Fights Child 'Kidnapping'

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — For Harold Miltsch, the thought of a parent not knowing whether he or she will ever see their child again is about the worst part of divorce.

"Imagine how it is not knowing if you'll even see your child, not knowing if he's dead or alive, not knowing what tomorrow will bring," says Miltsch. "It's like having a lost prisoner of war."

Miltsch, a marketing consultant, is the director of Stop Parental Kidnapping Inc., a non-profit organization he founded two years ago to help parents find their children. The group also attempts to educate the public about the problem.

The children the organization tries to locate, however, are not victims of kidnapping by an unknown abductor. They are "stolen" from their homes by an "abductor" who was one of the victim's own separated or divorced parents.

Miltsch said the Library of Congress estimates that more than 25,000 children are kidnapped in that fashion each year. He said parental kidnapping has increased because parents are not subject to prosecution under federal law and just a handful of states vigorously pursue child stealing incidents as criminal cases.

In the Rochester area, Monroe County officials have cleared all but one of more than two dozen cases.

"The main difference with us is that we have recognized that it's a serious concern and treat it as a criminal violation," said Monroe County District Attorney Donald Chesworth. "Traditionally, a lot of law enforcement officials have seen it as a dispute between parents and have failed to see the damaging things that can happen to the child.

"The child is really the victim in these cases," Chesworth said. "We perceive it as a crime and recognize that it's not merely a family dispute."

The Stop Parental Kidnapping group has begun a newsletter with pictures and descriptions of the kidnapped children to schools and pediatricians. Parents pay $300 to have the picture listed.

Professor Starts Move To Counter Moral Drive

NEW YORK (UPI) — The new American right is "taking all the fun out of life," says a Columbia University professor who has started a countermovement — the "Immoral Majority" — to see that doesn't happen.

"This is a spontaneous gesture by people wishing to defend their right to sin," said James Shenton, an American history professor at Columbia.

"I feel uneasy in a world in which I'm confronted with people who feel they know what is best for everyone. A world without sin would be terribly dull," he said, with tongue in cheek.

Shenton said his group really doesn't advocate wrong-doing. Members of the Immoral Majority want only to defend "our right to diversity."

The professor said his next move will be to issue an Immoral Majority pin to members.

Maine Refuge Takes On Life Of Polish Grandeur For Nazi Victim

By CHARLES W. GOLDSMITH

KENNEBUNK, Maine (UPI) — Eyesight still perfect, couched in an armchair, 86-year-old Nathalie Zamoyski reads a letter from a Polish friend signed, "One of the 11 million of Solidarity."

"They don't know what's going to happen from day-to-day," the white-haired, green-eyed woman says in her broken English. "They have nothing, only enormous queues for everything, including bread."

Life 50 years ago for Mrs. Zamoyski was anything but uncertain, rather a garden of abundance on her 110,000-acre estate called "Adampol" near the eastern Polish town of Wlodowa.

The 40-room house of Konstanty and Nathalie Zamoyski was surrounded by forests in which there were wild boar. There were so many servants a Catholic church was built on the estate. Her jewelry box overflowed with diamonds and black pearls.

That was before the Germans marched into Poland in the late 1930s and early 1940s. The jewels soon proved priceless "pebbles."

The Gestapo seized Adampol, which means Adam's field, grabbing those brilliant gems and throwing Mrs. Zamoyski's husband into prison.

When the family was finally able to flee Russian-controlled Poland in 1957, Nathalie found herself cleaning toilets at Boston's New England Conservatory of Music — a Catholic aristocrat turned custodian.

Mrs. Zamoyski and her daughter, Christine Panek, are landowners once again — presiding over five acres of fertile soil surrounded by southern Maine's blueberry plains.

And they're happy.

"I love it. I've always loved gardening, and I've always loved earth, the soil, it's so clean," Nathalie said. "I'm 86, I can't do much."

But she spends at least three hours in the garden every day, clad in boots and long green apron, tilling the soil by hand for beans and corn.

The six-room gray wooden house owned by mother and daughter is filled with a fresh litter of young dachshunds — and mementos of a life that was, that shall never be again.

Photo albums capture three different estates: "Kruszyna" in central Poland, former home of Nathalie's mother, "Rozanka," her father's homestead, including a 14th century castle destroyed in World War I, and "Adampol," built during the 1920s on the same site as "Rozanka."

Christine Panek was 14 when the Gestapo seized Adampol in 1942 and killed 30 prize race horses stabled there. The Germans forced her to dig up Russian land mines poised to explode in eastern Poland.

"The Germans trained us how to do it because they wanted us as labor and not all blown up," said Mrs. Panek, who escaped from a Russian jail after the war, settling in 1947 in Boston.

None of the family are Jews, but Mrs. Panek's husband Julius, a Polish judge, was thrown into four concentration camps during the war — including Auschwitz and Dachau.

He later served as a translator during the Nuremberg war crimes trial — for Polish Jews describing their role as "guinea pigs" in the Auschwitz "medical laboratory."

Mrs. Panek and local writer Fred Holmberg have completed a book on the family's experiences, tentatively titled "Zamoyski — A Story of Poland," describing the years from Christine's birth to shortly after her prison escape.

It is the story of those jewels that Nathalie Zamoyski remembers best.

Her husband Konstanty was condemned to death as a political prisoner in 1943 after suffering severe beatings.

A German lawyer knew the gem-seizing was illegal under wartime law of the Third Reich. He told Mrs. Zamoyski he could secure her husband's release for a price — half the jewels he recovered. She agreed.

Zamoyski was released from jail within two weeks. German authorities surrendered the gems. Nathalie and the lawyer divided the treasures.

"I was so glad he was freed, I wouldn't have minded giving him all the jewels," she says. "I think he was very honest to give me half."

The gems came "from great-grandfathers and grandfathers and were something fantastic," said Christine Panek. "But when it came to getting my father out of prison their value suddenly changed from jewels to just pebbles."

Konstanty Zamoyski, who became a security guard at Boston's Museum of Fine Arts, died in 1963. Julius Panek died in Boston in 1969.

Nathalie worked at the music conservatory until 1974, becoming chief housekeeper. The school gave her a professor's chair upon retirement.

She visited her younger sister in the Polish city of Krakow five years ago.

"It's about the same as when the Germans were there," she said. "There's this feeling when you speak that you always look around, which is very annoying."

Adampol, to which she did not return, is now believed to be a medical center.

"I'm afraid it will end with the Russians coming," Nathalie said. "If they think it's too great a risk they won't come, but if they see they can come like Afghanistan, they will."

Christine Panek had become good friends in Boston with Anna Roberts, widow of novelist Kenneth Roberts, who lived in the adjoining Maine town of Kennebunkport.

"We always said once we retired we'd make our home in Maine," she said. "It reminds me very much of home, it's very quiet here, it's pleasant.

"There's an old Russian saying, 'God forbid it should be any better.'

More Stamp Users Seeking Jobs

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Nearly one-fourth of all food stamp recipients in North Carolina are now required to conduct active job searches to remain eligible for the aid, the state Employment Security Commission says.

Legislation which became effective June 1 eliminated a provision of federal rules that required many people receiving food stamps only to register with the Job Service program.

"All food stamp recipients referred to Job Service for work registration will be evaluated for job readiness," said Janice E. Brown, food stamp coordinator for the commission. "Those judged ready for work will be required to develop and follow a job search program for up to eight weeks each year.

"If they do not register with us, or if they do not meet the goals of their job search plan, food stamps to their entire household may be jeopardized," she said.

The new law tying a job search to food stamps will affect about 25 percent of the 602,000 people currently receiving the aid in North Carolina, Ms. Brown said.

Recipients who do not comply with the regulation could lose their food stamp privileges for two months, she said.

Some people who qualify for food stamps do not currently have to register with Job Service and will remain unaffected by the new regulation, Ms. Brown said. She said people under 18 years of age or older than 60, or those with permanent disabilities, are exempt from having to register with the Job Service.

Of those people that do register with the Job Service, some may be exempt from the job-search requirement if they live too far from potential employers or if they are migrant seasonal farmworkers away from their home base.

Job Service will also refer people not immediately ready for employment to training and other support services, Ms. Brown said.

Meanwhile, other changes in federal social programs has forced the Employment Security Commission to eliminate appeals hearings on unemployment compensation at its branch offices.

People in outlying areas of the state seeking to appeal their awards will have to travel to ESC offices in the larger cities, said Commission Chairman J.B. Archer.

Appeals hearings will no longer be conducted in Carthage, Chadbourn, Eden, Kenansville, Roxboro, Smithfield, Tarboro, Thomasville and Wadesboro.

The cutbacks are part of an effort to reduce travel costs by 10 percent, Archer said.

"By eliminating these hearing sites, we are eliminating expenses to the agency as required by Reagan budget cuts, but ironically there is not really any cost saving to the citizens of the state," Archer said. "The cost of travel is simply being shifted from ESC to the employers and claimants who need to attend the hearings."

People living more than an hour from a main ESC office may be allowed to have their appeal hearing conducted over the telephone, officials said.

Judge Orders Clarkton To Restart Home Project

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The town of Clarkton has been ordered by a federal judge to restart construction of 50 low-income housing units because of a ruling that the decision to stop construction was racially motivated.

U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryant of Alexandria, Va., made the ruling late last week. He said in his ruling that the mayor and town commissioners were not guilty individually of racial discrimination. But he added that they were aware that racial opposition from the mostly-white town formed a significant part of the town's resistance.

Bryan ordered that the project be built within the town limits and that the town pay court costs and legal fees for the attorneys representing plaintiff James Smith in the suit.

Smith, a black resident of Bladen County, had sued the town for $200,000 damages, claiming his constitutional rights had been violated by the commissioners and by Mayor J.D. Fort Jr. in denying him housing.

However, Smith was awarded no damages in Bryan's ruling.

An attorney representing Clarkton in the lawsuit, W. Leslie Johnson, said no decision would be made on a possible appeal of the ruling for at least three weeks. Meanwhile, the ruling means the town will have to alter its current plan to build a 20-unit project for the handicapped and elderly on the 15-acre site bought for the housing project.

The town decided in April to build unit and recently had let a survey contract.

It was a year before, in April 1980, that the Clarkton Board of Commissioners approved the housing project, but reversed the decision after a straw poll of the residents showed they were opposed to the construction of low-income housing.

Although Clarkton voted to end the project, the housing was to have been built, with federal funds, and administered through a housing cooperative that included Elizabethtown and Bladenboro as well.

Two months after the Smith filed suit, the former executive director of the housing cooperative requested that the U.S. Justice Department investigate the town's actions on the housing project.

George H. Gardner, executive director of the North Carolina chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, said Friday that the ruling had "ample precedent" in earlier court decisions on school busing and redistricting cases.

THE NORTH CAROLINA ATTORNEY GENERAL, MR. RUFUS L. EDMISTEN, DENIES MAKING SURVEY CLAIMED BY WINN-DIXIE

On June 9th, Winn-Dixie ran a full page ad in the Daily Reflector, Greenville, N.C., in which they made the following claims:

1. WINN-DIXIE CLAIMED: There's a new food store coming to Greenville that will make a lot of claims about having the "Lowest Food Prices In North Carolina" (LFPINC).

   FACT: Food Town does have the Lowest Food Prices In North Carolina (LFPINC).

2. WINN-DIXIE CLAIMED: However, the North Carolina Attorney General's office did an independent survey that proved they didn't even have the lowest food prices in Charlotte, much less the rest of the State! As a matter of fact, they were the highest of all stores surveyed!

   FACT: The North Carolina Attorney General, Mr. Rufus L. Edmisten, denies making survey claimed by Winn-Dixie.

3. WINN-DIXIE CLAIMED: At Winn-Dixie, we don't make wild price claims that we can't back up. We believe you, the food shopper, are smart enough to determine for yourself who has the best food buys. We urge you to compare our "Super Saver" low shelf prices plus deep-cut specials with the new food store in town and make up your own mind.

   FACT: Survey made on May 12, 1981, showed Winn-Dixie higher on 39 of 47 items purchased. For details see shopping cart on display at Food Town. Total results: Food Town $50.84 - Winn-Dixie $58.02 - Difference $7.18 -Winn-Dixie 14% Higher.

4. WINN-DIXIE CLAIMED: As an added incentive, we'll match anything in their Grand Opening ad at either of our two stores. This includes Sale merchandise, buy 1 and get 1 free items, etc. (On identical merchandise if we carry it or on comparable merchandise of equal value if we don't.)

   FACT: If Winn-Dixie wanted to bring you low prices, why did they wait until Food Town opened to offer to match a few Food Town prices.

5. WINN-DIXIE CLAIMED: After you make your own price comparisons we are are confident that you'll discover what hundreds of thousands of North Carolina (and Greenville) food shoppers already know . . . nobody saved you more than Winn-Dixie!

   FACT: Millions of Food Town shoppers save $4 - $8 weekly with Food Town's LFPINC. We invite Winn-Dixie's customers (or anyone's) to list the price paid for items in their pantry and then compare at our store on 115 E. Red Banks Road.

5th Set Of Twins

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Break out the bananas and get ready to celebrate — Carolyn has done it again.

For the fifth time in her mothering career, the University of Oklahoma's 26-year-old chimpanzee has given birth to twins.

Officials here say chimpanzees normally bear twins only once in every 87 live births — the same frequency as humans.

Carolyn also has produced single births between each set of twins, totaling 14 offspring, officials said Thursday.

The latest births were Tuesday at the school's Institute for Primate Studies. The births were about 35 days earlier than expected.

Carolyn has refused to nurse her premature infants. The male chimps, Pharez and Zerah, are in incubators and have been under human care since birth, officials said.

Coffee Futures Close Strongly

By PAULINE JELINEK
AP Business Writer

Capping a week of sharp price moves, coffee futures closed strongly Friday in anti-cipation of some positive price developments this weekend and next week.

On the Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange in New York, coffee gained as much as 5.71 cents and closed at 103.63 cents a pound for delivery in July.

Factors which encouraged buying included forecasts for some cooler weekend weather in Brazilian growing areas. Adding to the effects of those forecasts were reports that interests in Brazil had stepped up buying, possibly "in fear of a (crop-damaging) frost," said Pamela Rockley, analyst in New York with Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc.

She said there was good business among roasters and there was other buying which appeared to reflect optimism ahead of an emergency meeting scheduled by the International Coffee Organization. Officials are planning to meet Monday to discuss what to do about the recent slump in prices.

Prices have been weak in the face of projections for a large harvest this year in Brazil, the world's leading coffee producer. High interest rates also have played a part in price declines, as has slack consumption created by recessions in Europe and North America, Miss Rockley said.

Grain futures prices closed higher and soybeans sharply higher on the Chicago Board of Trade. Some analysts said there may have been some buying following unconfirmed reports of Russian demand for grains, but others said the major factor in the market appeared to be prospects for continued rain delays this weekend in spring planting.

The U.S. Agriculture Department has reported that rain and water standing in fields has put farmers further behind this year in harvesting their winter wheat crop and planting the spring crop.

FINISHED COURSE

Alan D. Burns, a PBX installer repairman for Carolina Telephone in Greenville, recently completed a Focus II EPABX course.

The course was taught by the company in Rocky Mount.

SERVICES ADDED

Western Union announced that Greenville is now both a Telex I and Telex II exchange city.

The city's business community, it was noted, will be able to subscribe to Western Union's services without paying for leased extension facilties to another exchange city, as formerly was required.

GRAND OPENING

Grand opening activities were held Friday for the Life Force Center, located at 620 S. Pitt St., according to Daniel Clifton, owner, who said the center offers a program aimed at renewing the mind, body and appearance.

Clifton said services include a family hot tub spa, sauna, suntan booth, hair salon, hatha yoga and meditation classes, and a nutrition and dieting program, all designed to stimulate self-awareness and confidence.

Operating hours will be Monday through Saturday from 7 a.m. until 10 p.m.

Frank Grooms, membership committee chairman of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, took part in the ribbon cutting ceremonies.

TRUST SCHOOL

Some 45 bankers registered to attend the 12th Resident Session of the Southeastern Trust School, underway through June 19 at Campbell University.

The school is sponsored by the Trust Division of the N.C. Bankers Association in cooperation with Campbell University. Bankers from North Carolina, the District of Columbia, Florida, Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia were scheduled to attend.

TRADE SHOW

The 14th annual trade show of the Purchasing Management Association of Carolinas-Virginia opens on June 18 at Myrtle Beach, S.C.

The display of industrial product lines from packaging to mill supplies will feature over 300 regional and national companies. The show is sponsored by over 900 industrial purchasers who are members of the association.

COMPUTER PROGRAM

North Carolina National Bank said it has installed a new computer program in its Greenville NCNB 24 automatic teller machines that will improve machine performance, speed up withdrawals and improve communications with customers.

NCNB said the computer program has been refined to allow the machine to remedy problems that used to require the attention of a bank employee. The change, it was suggested, should increase in-service time by nearly 25 percent.

A "quick cash" option will allow one-button service to receive $20 from checking.

Business Notes

BANKING GRADUATE

Greenville native William H. Wilkerson, vice president of Hibernia National Bank of New Orleans, La., was among 389 bankers graduated from the School of Banking of the South at Louisiana State University.

The three-year program provides graduate level study of all aspects of banking, economics and related subjects.

Son of Mrs. E. C. Wilkerson of Greenville, the banker is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

SAFETY AWARD

Rom Webber, director of safety for Burroughs Wellcome here, has received the 1981 H. S. Baucom Safety Award in recognition of his contributions to the N.C. Satewide Safety Council during the past 23 years.

The award was presented during the 51st Statewide Safety Conference held in Charlotte.

Webber, a certified safety professional, has directed the safety programs at Burroughs Wellcome's facilities in North Carolina, Kansas and California for eight years, the company said.

ACTIVITY REPORTED

Savings and loan associations in the state experienced net savings outflows and increased lending activity during April, according to information reported to the Federal Home Loan Bank of Atlanta.

Net savings outflows during April amounted to $16.4 million compared with net inflows of $17.2 million for the same month a year ago. Gross inflows, which include new deposits and interest payments, totaled $545.9 million and were offset by withdrawals of $562.3 million.

Lending activity was above the year-earlier level. Mortgage loans made totaled $117.4 million compared with $65.6 million last April.

Violence Troubles Once-Quiet India

By JAMES W. HATTON
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Across two lands, Mohandas K. (Mahatma) Gandhi preached peaceful change. Without firing a shot or raising his voice, the "Great Soul" of India led his followers to a better life first in Africa and then to freedom in his native land. His campaign of non-violence against British colonial rule became world-famous.

But today in this burgeoning land of 684 million people, violence is widespread and rooted, experts maintain, in the country's fast-changing society:

—On April 19, two youths burst into a hut in a squalid New Delhi slum, poured kerosene over a teen-age girl and set her on fire, burning her to death. Police said the youths were angry because they had been reprimanded by the girl's father for teasing her.

—In June, 1980, members of a backward tribe in a remote area of northeastern Tripura state raced through a village populated by immigrants from neighboring Bangladesh. They slaughtered every man, woman, and child they saw and went looking for more. At least 1,000 people were killed in three weeks; some estimates put the toll 10 times higher. The tribal people claimed the immigrants were taking their jobs.

—On April 25, a young bride in a village in northern Uttar Pradesh state was strangled by her new in-laws, allegedly because she did not include a motorcycle in her dowry.

—In early May, more than 50 people were killed in several days of Moslem-Hindu rioting in Biharsharif sparked by a quarrel at a liquor store. It was a fairly common occurrence. A recent news story estimated there have been more than 5,000 communal riots in India in the past decade.

—Last December, police in Bhagalpur admitted they had deliberately blinded more than 30 pre-trial prisoners with large needles and sulfuric acid in an effort to make examples of them as a deterrent to crime. Not only did fellow officers back the policemen involved, but so did many members of the community. Most of the accused policemen are back on duty today.

Although the concept of non-violence is associated with India through Gandhi — no relation to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi — violence is nothing new in this sprawling land.

"I'm sure there was a great deal of violence in the past," said Andre Bateille, head of the Sociology Department at Delhi University, in an interview.

"One could even say that it is precisely in societies which have a deep undercurrent of violence that one expects an apostle of non-violence to come up," he added. "After all, what would be the need for an apostle of non-violence if non-violence were to be a part of everyday life?"

But Bateille acknowledged there has been a dramatic upsurge of violence in the years since the British granted India independence in 1947 after centuries of subjugation.

"This is part of growing up politically for the society as a whole, and particularly the growing up politically for the depressed and downtrodden — for people who never had all that many rights and don't have all that many rights, no matter what the constitution guarantees," Bateille said.

He maintained, however, that the violence of the past was different, more limited and rather muted.

"For example, the beating of untouchables (the lowest caste) was a fairly common thing," Bateille said. "But the difference is this. In the past if an untouchable was cheeky or the landlord didn't like the way he walked, he might just call him and beat him with his slippers, and probably the matter would end there."

On April 28, a British tea planter in West Bengal state was attacked by about 250 of his workers and hacked to death in the garden of his home. Police made 26 arrests. The workers claimed they had not been paid in months.

Bateille also suggests that Indian society is changing dramatically. "It was relatively immobile, relatively static, relative rigid. And now all of this has been formally, officially repudiated," he said.

"So you are repudiating the traditional heirarchy. You are telling people that men are born equal and that the untouchable has the same rights as the brahmin (highest caste). But what are you doing about giving the untouchable the same effective rights? I will not say that nothing is being done, but the nature of the case (is that) the fulfillment cannot meet the promise even half way....

"The gap between the expectation that has been created and what has been done creates problems on both sides," he added. "Landless laborers, for example. They're very aggressive. On the other hand, the things to go around are not all that easily available, so there is the backlash as well from the people who are in control of the land."

Women also have fared poorly in the new India, though they always have been treated as inferior to men. Newspapers here overflow with stories of rape. Yet most of these are not acts of passion: rape is a common way of demeaning women and "keeping them in their place." It also is used to keep families and even villages in line.

Today, however, it is more difficult to get away with abusing women, Bateille claimed. The media and the professions have focused a glaring spotlight on their treatment.

Still, "violence against women, I'm afraid, will increase because the position of women in this society is changing rapidly and I just don't see men taking it..." he said.

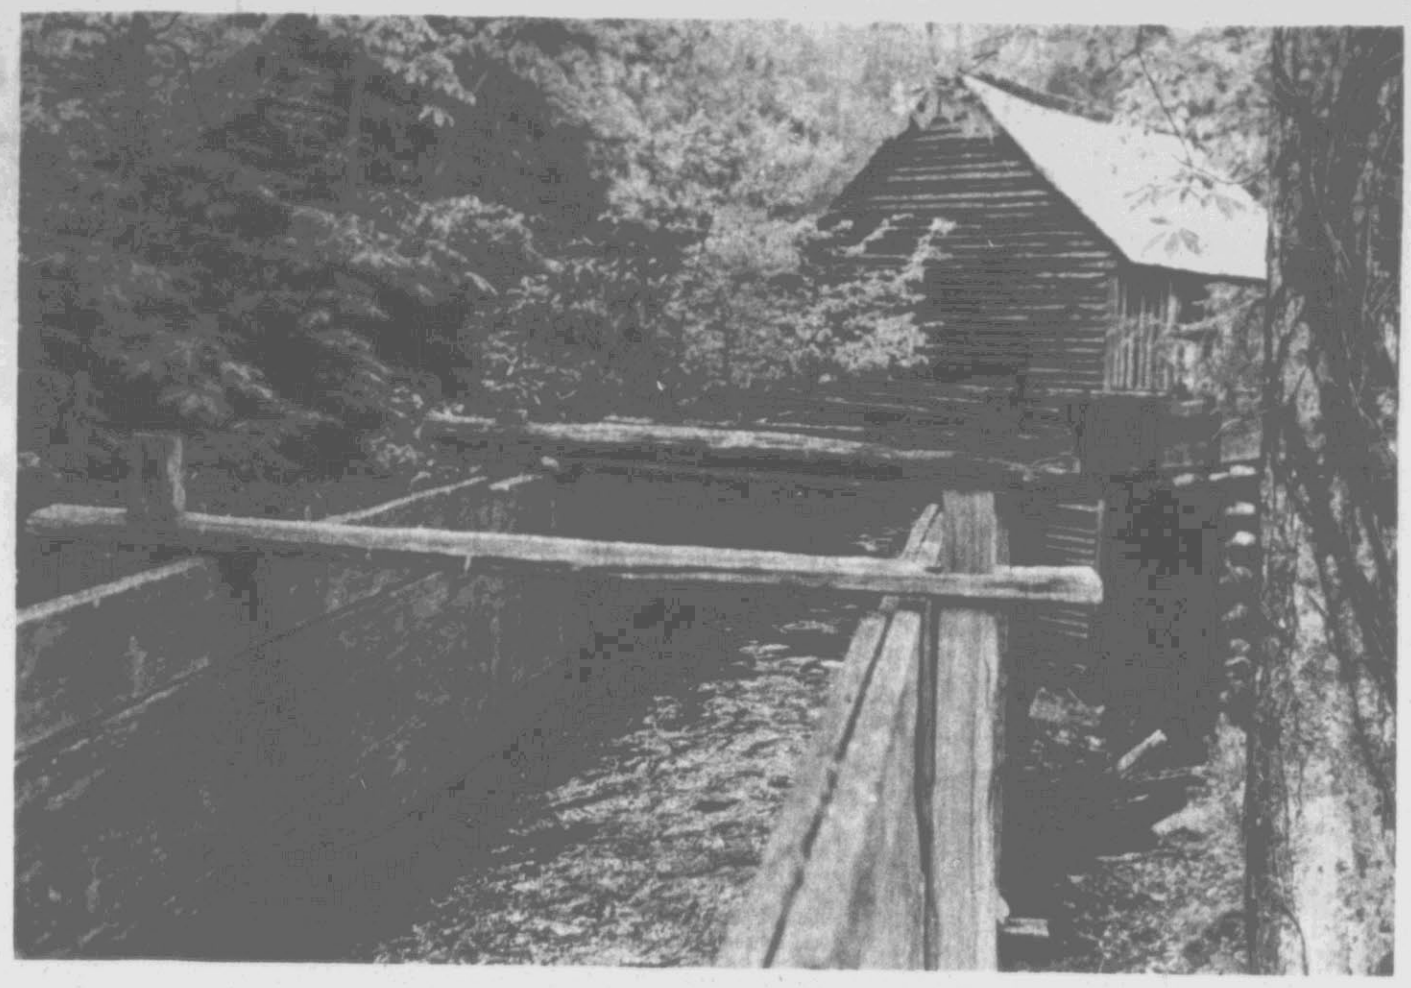
THE WATER WHEEL. . .this overshot wheel turns the grindstones to grind the corn into meal.



COOL MOUNTAIN WATER. . .this flume carries the water from the stream, almost a mile away, to the mill. The flume is supported by logs arranged into box supports, such as the one that can be seen in the background.

Mountain Mill Offers A Glimpse Of The Past

The John P. Cable Mill is one of many attractions in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in western North Carolina and eastern Tennessee. The mill is in the Cades Cove area of the park, located between Townsend and Gatlinburg, Tenn. The mill is the only remaining grist mill in the park to use an overshot-type water wheel to turn the grindstones. Most mills built in the mountains used the easier-to-build and operate water turbines. Corn is still ground there, and visitors can purchase the meal at the visitor's center. The Cable mill operates daily from 10 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. from May 1 — Nov. 1. The Smoky Mountains National Park, designated an International Biosphere Reserve by the National Park Service, is one of the 10 busiest national parks in the country.

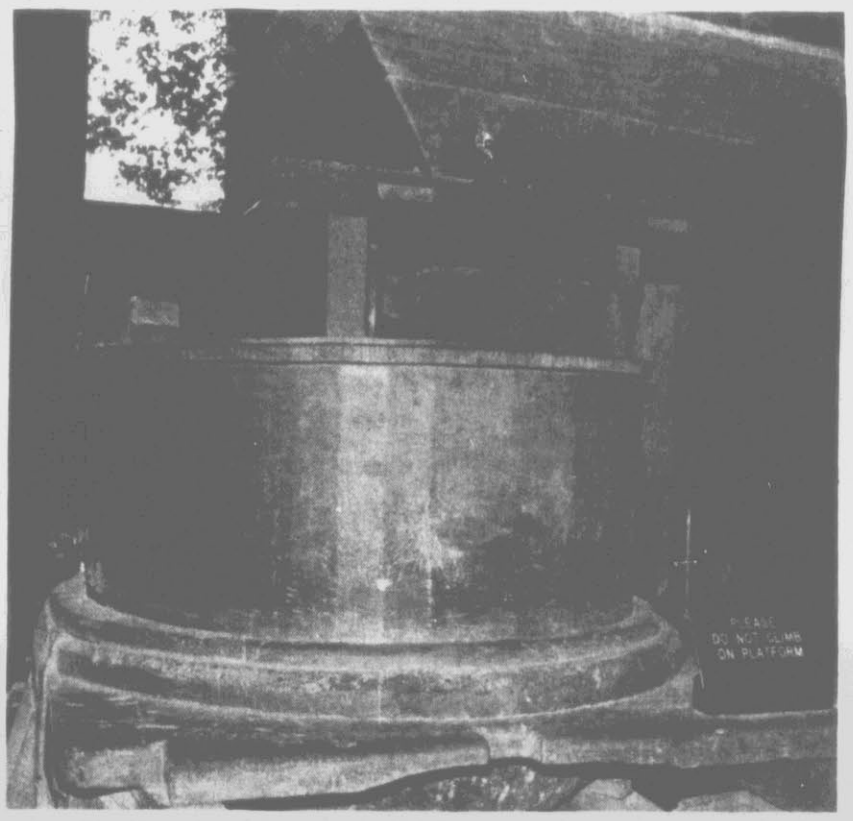
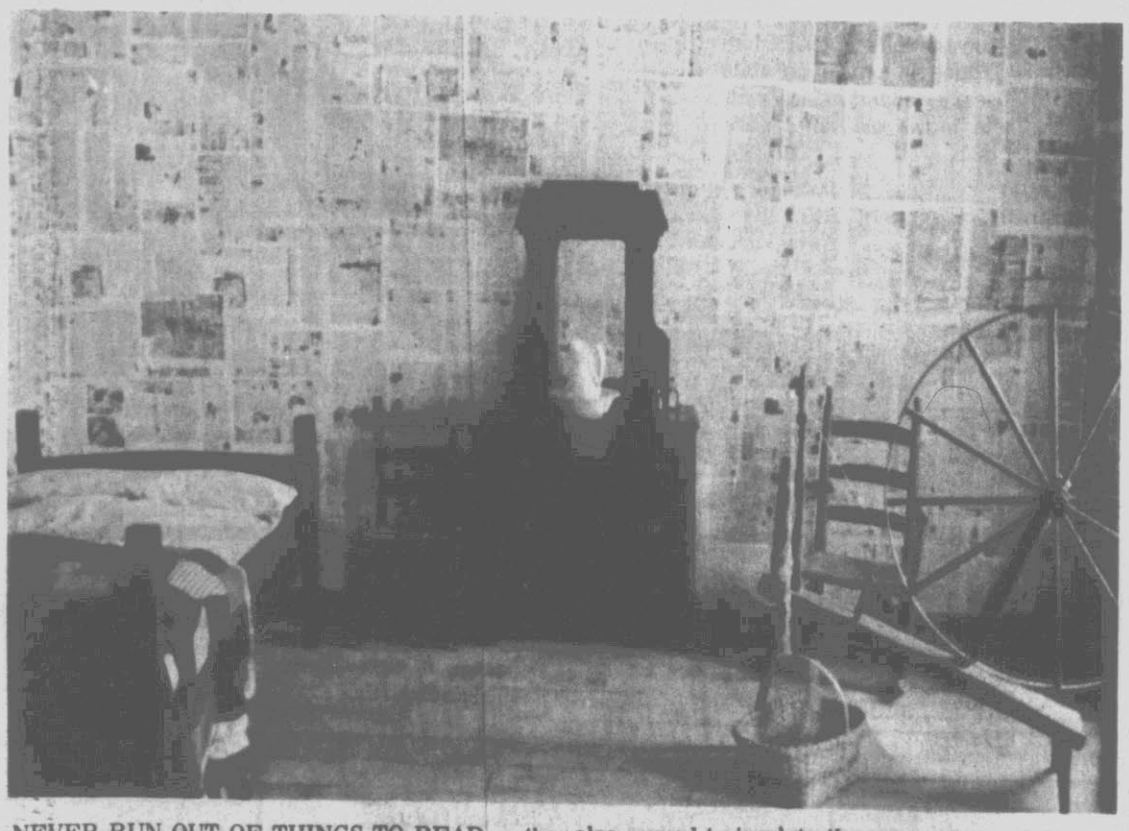
THE CABLE HOMESTEAD. . .shows unusual design, as the entrance to every room is from the outdoors with no connections from the kitchen to the bedrooms, although the two bedrooms are connected. The second opening from the left is a stairway that leads to the attic for storage.



GRINDING THE CORN. . .corn kernels are put into the hopper on top of the grindstones, and fed to the stones. The finished meal comes out in a bin on the back of the device.



NEVER RUN OUT OF THINGS TO READ. . .the bedroom of the house is papered with newspaper, an inexpensive and abundant material. The paper also served to insulate the rooms and cut down on drafts. The spinning wheel and straw mattress are common items in such rooms.

KEEPING FLIES AWAY. . .torn newspaper hung from a bar above the table kept flies away from the family's dinner. The wood stove served as a source of heat for the house as well as a way to cook. On the back wall are several gourds which were used to store foodstuffs.

Camille Smith And Brad Parker Marry

Camille Smith and Ernest Bradford Parker were united in marriage Saturday at high noon in Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church. The Rev. James H. Bailey performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Bonner Smith of Greenville. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Carson Parker of Halifax.

Nuptial wedding music was presented by Mrs. Frances Cain, organist. Joanie Stauffer sang "The Wedding Song" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of ivory organza. The empire bodice was overlaid with English net and re-embroidered pearled and crystalled alencon lace and featured a V-neckline. The long sleeves were of English net and alencon lace and had self-covered buttons. The full A-line skirt featured a border of matching scalloped lace and flowed into a full chapel length train. She wore a walking length candlelight illusion mantilla edged in re-embroidered alencon lace in a scalloped pattern. The Juliet cap featured imported re-embroidered floral lace centered with clusters of pearls. Iridescents and pearls also trimmed appliques of alencon lace that were scattered over the entire veil. She wore a strand of pearls belonging to her mother. She carried a full cascade of butterfly white roses, ivory daisies and pink sweetheart roses with sprays of English Ivy tied with ivory satin.

MRS. ERNEST BRADFORD PARKER

Laurie Smith, sister of the bride of Greenville, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Mrs. Carl Crawford Jr. of Greenville and Rebecca Lynn Smith of Arlington, Va., sisters of the bride, Lisa Parker of New York, N.Y., sister of the bridegroom, Tori Clement and Karen Jeffreys of Greenville, and Belle Butler of Pittsboro. They wore formal gowns of ivory chiffon with a floral print of lilac, rose and avocado green. The gown was designed with an open draped cowl neckline and blouson bodice with split sleeves. The waistline was encircled with an avocado green tie sash from which fell the modified A-line skirt featuring a flared peplum flounce. They carried classic bouquets of shades of pink miniature carnations, off-white daisies and baby's breath tied with mulberry satin.

Honorary bridesmaids were Gigi Smith and Amy Smith of Nakina, cousins of the bride, and Gwen Tyson of Greenville. Carl Crawford III, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

The bridegroom's father served as best man. Groomsmen were Max Ray Joyner Jr., Challie Arnette, Ted King, Carl Crawford Jr., brother-in-law of the bride and Larry Price, all of Greenville, Rock Pickard of Mooresville and Graves Clayton of Atlanta, Ga.

The mother of the bride wore a mago chiffon floor length gown detailed with embroidery. She carried an orchid fastened to her bag. The bridegroom's mother chose a lavender silk organza floor length gown. She wore a purple throated cymbidium orchid at her waist.

The bride's grandmother, Mrs. Carl W. Ward of Nakina and the bridegroom's grandmothers' Mrs. J.B. Reid of Roanoke Rapids and Mrs. Edward Clegg Parker of Lyons, Ga., wore cream daisy corsages.

Following the ceremony the bride's parents entertained with a reception in the church fellowship hall. The buffet table was centered with an arrangement of spring flowers consisting of lavender, pink and white flowers flanked by five branched candlabra. Presiding at the guest register were Mr. and Mrs. John Hassel. Guests were directed by Gina Whichard, Mrs. Kay Whichard, Mrs. Mary Rose Stocks, Mrs. Sarah Shannonhouse, Mr. and Mrs. J. Knott Proctor Jr. and Mr. and Mrs. Karl Turner. Mrs. Wally Miller and Mrs. Nell

Odum-Isley Vows Said

Beverly Agelia Isley of Burlington and Charles Boyette Odum of Greenville were united in marriage in an outdoor ceremony at two o'clock in the afternoon Saturday at the home of Sarah Kirkman, the bride's aunt of Pleasant Garden. Orval Dillion of Pleasant Garden performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Luther L. Isley and the late Laura K. Isley of Burlington. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Odum of Greenville.

A program of wedding music was presented by Pam Laws, pianist, Dennis Stamper, guitarist, and Mrs. Vickie Isley, sister-in-law of the bride of Graham.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white formal gown of sheer organza over white peau de soie designed with an off the shoulder gathered center. The natural waistline was encircled with white satin ribbons with flowers, bows and streamers at center front. The full skirt and attached semi cathedral train of the antebellum gown were enhanced by a gathered sway pickup overskirt caught up with rosette flowers. A flounce edged both the skirt and train at the hemline. She wore a fingertip length double tiered illusion veil edged in seed pearls in a scalloped design held in place by a Juliet cap overlaid in silk floral Venise lace embellished with seed pearls. Scattered appliques of floral silk Venise lace were featured over the veil. She carried a cascade of white and lavender carnations with white roses enhanced with purple statice and baby's breath.

MRS. CHARLES BOYETTE ODUM

Mrs. Vivian Harrington of Ahoskie, the bride's sister, was honor attendant. She wore a floor length dress of solid lavender. The gown featured a gathered skirt with ruffled bottom tied at the waist with a sash. It was enhanced with eyelet trim on the bodice which served as sleeves and trim for bottom. She carried a cascade of white and lavender carnations enhanced with purple statice and baby's breath.

Jill Isley of Burlington was her sister's bridesmaid. She wore a gown identical to that of the matron of honor and carried an identical cascade of flowers.

Lara Harrington of Ahoskie and Robin Isley of Graham, both nieces of the bride, were flower girls. They wore floor length dresses of lavender featuring small floral necklines enhanced with eyelet trim. They carried baskets of lavender and white carnations.

Terry Peede, cousin of the bride, resided at the guest register, and Mrs. Kay Coltrain of Pleasant Garden directed the wedding.

Charles A. Odum served his son as best man. Ushers were Joe Harrington, brother-in-law of the bride of Ahoskie and Dickie Isley, the bride's brother of Graham.

A reception was held in the dining room of the home of Ms. Kirkman following the ceremony. The bridal table was decorated with a lavender underlay and lace cloth. The bride's aunts were hostesses. Mrs. Lillias Crews poured punch and Mrs. Elaine Bowman served cake and Mrs. Sue Morgan assisted.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents. A buffet style meal was served at Fran's Front Porch.

The bride is a graduate of Southern Alamance High School and attended East Carolina University. She is employed by GKN of Mebane. The bridegroom is a graduate of J.H. Rose High School and attended Appalachian State University. He is employed by A.M.P. Inc. of Greensboro.

After a wedding trip to unannounced points, the couple will reside in Burlington.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Levy C. Todd of Lewiston announce the engagement of their daughter, Katrina Bernice, to Kenneth Frederick McDuffie, son of Mr. and Mrs. James F. McDuffie Jr. of Winston-Salem. The wedding will take place July 11.

MRS. TIMOTHY WARREN HAMILL

Wedding Vows Are Solemnized

Martha Elizabeth Clyde of Chapel Hill and Michael Bryant McGlohon of Greensboro were united in marriage Saturday at two o'clock in the afternoon at the First Christian Church here. Dr. Will R. Wallace performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wallace Alexander Clyde Jr. of Chapel Hill. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bryant McGlohon of Greenville.

A progam of nuptial wedding music was provided by Tom Hawley, organist and Mrs. Julie Tucker, both of Greenville, who sang "One Hand, One Heart," "The Ring" and "The Lord's Prayer."

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of white silkened organza and Venise lace over peau de soie. The empire bodice of English net appliqued with motifs of Venise lace featured a sheer yoke with schiffli embroidery and colonial neckline of Venise lace. Bridal buttons closed the long fitted sleeves adorned with lace motifs. The front of the A-line skirt was enhanced with scattered motifs, while a border of Venise lace encircled the entire skirt and train. Her waltz length mantilla of silk illusion bordered with lace, featuring motifs of Venise scattered at the top was attached to a Juliet cap of lace and pearls. The bride carried a bouquet of white roses, daisies accented with blue silk sweet peas, trailing springerii fern and baby's breath.

Susan Ann Clyde, the bride's sister of Durham, was maid of honor and wore a formal gown of dark blue silesta knit fashioned with a halter top and sunburst pleated skirt. A cape of silk chiffon bordered with Venise lace and flowerettes was wore over the shoulders. She carried a bouquet of white daisies, deep pink miniature carnations, yellow button pom pons accented with blue silk bell blossoms and baby's breath. She wore a hairpiece of blue silk and baby's breath.

Bridesmaids were Lisa Leggett, Camille Leggett and Mrs. Nancy Corbett, the bridegroom's sister, all of Greenville, Diane McGlohon, the bridegroom's sister of Ayden, Ann Bavolack of Hamden, Conn., Mrs. Kathy Wahl of Farmville and Carla Simmons of Fairfield. They wore formal gowns of light blue silesta knit fashioned with a halter top and sunburst pleated skirts. A cape of silk chiffon bordered with Venise lace and flowerettes was worn over the shoulders. They carried bouquets of white daisies, deep pink miniature carnations, yellow button pom pons accented with blue silk bell blossoms and baby's breath, tied with silk ribbons. They wore hairpieces of blue silk and baby's breath.

Lewis Bryant McGlohon served his son as best man. Ushers were Kevin Clyde, the bride's brother of Chapel Hill, Carlton Corbett, brother-in-law of the bridegroom of Greenville, Mose Stocks of Wilson, Gorham Clark and Richard Meeks, both of Greenville, Robert Walters of Charlotte and Mike O'Connell of Durham.

A reception followed the ceremony in the church parlor. Mrs. J.D. Wilson directed the wedding and Mrs. Gail Deans, both of Greenville, presided at the guest register. Mrs. Maggie McGlohon, aunt of the bridegroom, cut the cake. Mrs. Ellen Bradford, aunt of the bridegroom, poured punch.

The bride is a graduate of Chapel Hill High School, attended East Carolina University and graduated from Pitt Community College. The bridegroom graduated from J.H. Rose High School, attended East Carolina University and also graduated from Pitt Community College. He is employed by Beaman Corp., Greensboro.

After a wedding trip to Colonial Williamsburg, the couple will reside in Greensboro.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the Colonial Inn, Farmville.

Agee, aunts of the bride, poured punch.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents at the Ramada Inn, followed by a party at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Bill McConnell, given by friends.

The bride-elect was honored at a bridesmaid luncheon on Friday by Mrs. J.E. Clement and Tori Clement at the home of Mrs. Clement.

The bride and bridegroom are attending East Carolina University majoring in business administration.

After a wedding trip to Colonial Williamsburg, the couple will reside in Greenville.

The wedding was directed by Mrs. Ramona Tucker.

Miss Dunn Is Married

FALKLAND — Sonja Gay Dunn of Falkland and Timothy Warren Hamill of Fountain were united in marriage at eight o'clock Friday evening at the Falkland Presbyterian Church. The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Marshall Tredway.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Martin Dunn of Falkland. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lee Hamill Jr. of Fountain.

A program of wedding music was presented by Gail Clark, organist.

Given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of silk chiffon over taffeta and re-embroidered chantilly lace. The empire waistline featured a V-neckline and chiffon sleeves. The fingertip veil of silk Venise bordered with cluny lace motifs was attached to a Juliet cap accented with beaded pearls. She carried an orchid on her Bible.

Terri Eastwood of Farmville was maid of honor. She wore a formal gown of pale lavender featuring miniature rolled straps accented with an embroidered cape. She wore a wide brim matching hat accented with a satin bow. She carried a long-stemmed lavender mum.

Vickie Hamill and Connie Adams, both of Greenville and sisters of the bridegroom, were bridesmaids. They wore formal gowns identical to that of the maid of honor.

Thomas Lee Hamill Jr. served his son as best man. Ushers were Charles Harris and Ronnie Hamill, bothers of the bridegroom, both of Falkland, and Jeff Hamill of Greenville.

The mother of the bride wore a formal gown of lilac matte jersey and chiffon with the bodice overlaid in lilac chiffon. The mother of the bridegroom chose a formal length blue knit gown featuring a V-neckline. The gown was complemented by a caplet sleeves. The mothers and grandmothers were remembered with white carnation corsages.

Immediately following the ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. The bridal table was covered with a white lace cloth centered with candles and magnolias and had streamers of ivory and wedding bells. Lousie Murphrey served cake and Joy Collins poured punch. Julia Lawrence and Hollie Hamill assisted in serving. The wedding was directed by Hillie Hamill and Sandra Squires.

A rehearsal dinner was given at the Galley Restaurant by the bridegroom's parents Thursday night.

The bride is a senior at Farmville Central High School. The bridegroom is a graduate of Farmville Central High School and is engaged in farming. After a wedding trip to Wrightsville Beach, the couple will reside in Fountain.

At Wit's End

By Erma Bombeck

Every time I make a commencement speech, I have to fight the impulse to dismiss the graduates and speak to the parents. I want to say:

Dear parents of the class of 1981:

You're on the horizon of a new world too . . . trying to shift gears into the next phase of your lives . . . a little scared, a little apprehensive, a lot in debt.

You have brought to full term a human being who, for all purposes, is educated, responsible, and ready to assume his or her place in the world. Are you ready to assume yours?

How many times has your child said, "When are you going to stop treating me as a child?"

And you answered, "When you stop acting like one!"

It was a glib, slick answer and you knew it.

Have you been so busy talking for the last 16 years that you haven't listened to what you were saying?

"I WANT YOU TO GROW UP!"

"YOU HAVE TO LEARN TO LIVE WITH YOUR OWN MISTAKES."

("Look, Daddy and I will pay to have your car repaired and you can pay us back later.")

"IT'S TIME YOU WERE RESPONSIBLE FOR YOURSELF."

("I've made a dental appointment for you Tuesday and picked up your cleaning. Put your library books out and I'll return them.")

"BE INDEPENDENT!"

("You can live at home. It's rent free. Just remember, dinner is at 6!")

"MAKE YOUR OWN DECISIONS."

("What do you mean you're not going to Grandma's? You haven't been there in two weeks. Get in the car!")

Vows Spoken Wednesday

Sidney Charlene Hoggard and Ronald Matthews were united in marriage at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday at the home of the bridegroom in Greenville.

The Rev. Roy L. Matthews Jr., associate pastor of the First United Methodist Church, Roanoke Rapids, and brother of the bridegroom, performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Hoggard of Rt. 4, Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy L. Matthews Sr. of Greenville.

The bride wore a colonial peasant style gown of tiered lace with a matching train and a broad brimmed bridal hat lace. She carried a bouquet of mixed spring flowers.

Mrs. Joanne M. Briley of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, was the honor attendant. She was attired in a street length dress of royal blue. The mother of the bridegroom wore a two-piece white and navy blue street length dress.

Jerry Raynor of Greenville was best man.

The bridegroom is employed at Ormand Wholesale, Greenville, and the bride is employed at Foodland, Washington.

The couple will make their home in Greenville.

MRS. RONALD MATTHEWS

A TRIBUTE

1980-81 was a great school year,
Many students and teachers,
They ALL came here.
Time flew so very fast
That before we knew it
The term had passed.
And yet for two of our teachers
This was to be their LAST.
Thirty eight years is a mighty long time
To spend ones' life
Enriching young minds.
But to Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Gregory
TIME wasn't nearly as important
As teaching, you see.
The 1st grade team will surely miss
Their warm, friendly smiles—
For they BOTH brought this.
And so to both of you,
We wish our very best,
We hate to see you go.
You're both TWO GREAT GALS
And we really LOVE YOU SO!

Dear Abby

Exchanges Vows For A Visa

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Put yourself in my shoes. Here's the situation: Your husband works with a 21-year-old foreigner who is in this country on some sort of two-year exchange program to learn a profession. His visa will expire in two months, and he is not yet qualified to practice his profession in his home country. In order that he might stay in this country longer to earn his professional ratings, he is marrying an 18-year-old American citizen. This girl works part time with both your husband and the young foreigner, and is head over heels in love with him. She has accepted his proposal of marriage and is planning a big church wedding for the end of June.

Your husband tells you that the young foreigner has told him that he is marrying the girl only so he can stay in this country a while longer, and has no intention of taking her home with him when he returns to his native country. You have only a speaking acquaintance with this girl, yet you are upset to know of her fiance's less-than-honorable intentions toward her. What would you do, if anything?

NAMELESS

DEAR NAMELESS: I would abide by the old caveat: "Let the buyer beware." But first I would find some way to make the "buyer" (namely, the bride) aware.

DEAR ABBY: When my granddaughter asked me when she would be 6½, I counted the months and days with her. We celebrated with half a cake and six and a half candles!

I gave her half a birthday card and my husband put in a half-dollar. We sang "Happy Half-Birthday."

The next year she reminded me when her half-birthday was due, and her brothers also marked their half-birthdays on my calendar. Now my granddaughter is learning to play "Happy Half-Birthday" on the piano.

My husband says I was foolish to start this celebration. I claim the kids enjoy it and it does no harm. What do you think?

FLORENCE B.

DEAR FLORENCE: I think it's clever and fun. Tell Grandpa if he doesn't want to go along with it, he doesn't half to.

Dinner Meet Held By Club

The meeting of the Junior Woman's Club of Greenville was held Wednesday at the Woman's Club Building. The welcome was given by President Kathy Hunnings.

Following a covered-dish dinner, the following guests were recognized: Susan Lassitor; Lynn Hodges; Mary Shearman; Kathy Kozier; Becky Taylor; and Betsy McDonald.

Sandra Garner, Laura Shivar and Lucine Barker, department chairmen for 1981-82, welcomed their members.

Scott Allen, juniorette advisor, announced Juanita Bryant, incoming national president of Woman's Clubs will be the guest speaker at Juniorette Jamboree to be held in Greenville in July.

The club passed a board recommendation that the Watson Memorial Fund be established as a separate organization in order to continue its existence. This fund assists needy Pitt County children between the ages of birth and 16.

Dot Harrigan will be the club's advisor for the 1981-82 year.

Hostesses for the meeting were Cathy Crawford, Lucine Barker, Karen Rogers, and Mary Vojtecky.

The next regular meeting will be held in September.

Couple Marries On Saturday

ROSELAND, Va. — Marion Loving Harvey and David Reid Tyler, both of Greenville, were married Saturday at two o'clock in the afternoon at Bethlehem Methodist Church here. The Rev. David L. Sandridge performed the double ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bland Harvey of Melfa, Va. The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Jack Loyd Tyler of Greenville.

A program of wedding music was presented by Mrs. Geneviere Higginbotham, organist.

Given in marriage by her father and escorted by her parents, the bride wore a formal gown of white organza over peau de soie designed with an open portrait neckline and draped off the shoulder with a bodice accented with silk floral Venise lace appliques. The waistline, which was encircled with a crushed cummerbund, also featured lace appliques at the back. The southern belle skirt and attached chapel length train were enhanced by a ruffled flounce at the hemline topped by a pick up skirt of scalloped flowers featuring lace appliques. Her elbow length circular veil of illusion was styled with a scalloped edge of seed pearls and attached to a semi-Camelot cap overlaid in silk floral Venise lace and pearls. The bride carried a prayerbook centeredwith a white orchid, white rosebuds and ivy which belonged to her maternal grandfather and was carried by her mother on her wedding day.

Melanie Harvey, the bride's sister of Melfa, Va., was maid of honor. She wore a formal gown of spring floral voile fashioned with an off the shoulder ruffle. The pinched in waist was tied with a bow at the back. The full skirt was edged with lace matching that on the ruffle. She carried a bouquet of white carnations touched in blue and baby's breath.

Bridesmaids were Courtney Harvey, sister of the bride of Melfa, Va., Julie Hatcher of Maplewood, Minn. and Anne Berrey of Pompano Beach, Fla., both cousins of the bride, and Christy Tyler, the bridegroom's sister of Greenville. They wore gowns identical to that of the maid of honor and each carried a single carnation touched in blue and baby's breath.

MRS. DAVID REID TYLER

Francee Harvey of Melfa, Va., the bride's sister, was flower girl and wore a dress identical to the honor attendant's and carried a basket of matching flowers. John Hatcher, the bride's cousin of Melfa, Va., was ring bearer.

Jack Tyler served as his son's best man. Ushers were Gerald Tyler of Virginia Beach, Va. and Loyd Tyler of Greenville, brothers of the bridegroom, Steve Worsley, the bridegroom's cousin of Wilmington, and Chuck Hatcher, the bride's cousin of Maplewood, Minn.

A reception was held following the ceremony at Winton Country Club in Clifford, Va.

The bridal couple were honored at several prenuptial parties prior to their wedding day.

The bride is a graduate of East Carolina University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She will be employed as a social worker at the Wayne County Health Center. The bridegroom is a graduate of East Carolina University and is employed by Ferren Planning Group in Greenville.

After a wedding trip to Florida and the Bahamas, the couple will reside in Greenville.

NEW YORK (UPI) — Milk and dairy products, limes, lemons, oranges, pork, broiler-fryers, turkeys, eggs, raisins and dried prunes, rice and dried beans and peas are on the USDA's plentifuls list for June.

The lime crop is 15 percent greater than last season's.

Turkey supplies will be 36.42 percent above average for the month, says the USDA's monthly Food Marketing Alert newsletter.

Town Unveils Old Roman Baths

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE
Associated Press Writer

BATH, England (AP) — Barry Cunliffe, Oxford University professor of archeology, is digging up the baths at Bath — the ones the Romans built.

"Treasures unseen for 1,500 years will come to light," he says, standing in a trench under a naked light bulb beneath the shored-up floor of the Pump Room, where his excavators are trowelling away.

Below the cellars here is undisturbed evidence of the way of life of the Roman conquerors, who could not bear to do without their daily bath.

The modern city fathers are so confident that delights from the diggings will attract even more visitors to their lovely city that they have allocated $860,000 to a two-year project to expose the buildings of the Roman baths complex to public view: the temple of Sul Minerva and the thermal bathing establishment.

The dig in progress went on view to the public this Easter, with viewing galleries for visitors to the existing Roman Baths Museum.

The Romans founded the spa city of Bath, which they called Aquae Sulis (Waters of Sul), 104 miles west of London, because hot water was naturally on tap. It still is the only hot springs in Britain.

From a source of great heat and power deep under the earth, the water gushes out of the ground, 250,000 gallons a day at 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

"The water comes from many thousands of feet down and is about 10,000 years old," Cunliffe says. "The earliest human traces here are as old as that, so Mesolithic man who sat here then was rained on by the water emerging now. That's the cycle."

The Romans came to Britain in 43 A.D. and left some 400 years later, when they were needed back home to save the Empire from the barbarians. Deprived of maintenance, the outfall drain of the baths complex eventually failed and as the springs still flowed, the land around turned into a steamy swamp.

Slowly, the splendid buildings fell into ruin and subsided into the morass, but not before an unknown, 8th-century Saxon recorded the mournful splendor of the "giants of the past" in a poem, a fragment of which survives.

From a little watering place, Bath boomed in the 18th century into the capital of fashion, when everyone who was anyone came to take the mineral waters for kidney ailments, gout and other ills from the excessive eating and drinking of the times.

Not exactly wine, the taste of the water was compared to a "warm flatiron" by Sam Weller in Charles Dickens' "Pickwick Papers."

The center of fashion was the Pump Room, where the water could be drunk, gossip exchanged, whist played and seductions and marriages arranged under the eye of the master of ceremonies, Richard "Beau" Nash.

What can already be seen of the baths attracts some 700,000 visitors yearly. Enthusiastic over Cunliffe's expansion project, Denis Easterby, Bath's director of leisure and tourist services, says, "When I heard the words 'sacrificial altar,' I knew we were made."

Trial excavations through the Pump Room cellar floor began in 1964 to see if anything survived of the temple.

Six feet below the floor, which is some 12 feet below present street level, stone slabs of the Roman floor were found, mixed up with inscribed stone blocks which had tumbled from the surrounding buildings.

Digging up the Romans can be a messy job. The whole area is crossed by latter-day sewers and nobody in Cunliffe's team wanted to get down to it beneath one sewer pipe that was dripping. When they finally steeled themselves and scraped away six inches of dirt, they revealed a stone block with an inscription by the donor, one Lucius Marcius Memor, to the temple goddess.

"It was clear that beneath the Pump Room lay the remains of a Roman monument without parallel in Britain," said Cunliffe.

Studies Show Pet's Death Brings Guilt

By JACK REED

NEW YORK (UPI) — Veterinarians and clinical psychologists are studying a new phenomenon these days — man's inability to rationalize the loss of a pet.

The phenomenon is supported by a limited number of clinical studies which conclude that pet loss can be devastating to the owner, especially among senior citizens whose pets often assume a critically supportive role.

A social epidemiologist with Michigan's Department of Public Health, John Thrush, told a seminar here the results of one study demonstrate "the loss of significant attachment (among senior citizens) can be life-threatening."

Thrush was among more than 100 veterinarians, psychologists and social workers attending the three-day pet loss and human emotion seminar sponsored by Columbia University, the Foundation of Thanatology and New York's Animal Medical Center.

The Foundation studies and reports to health professionals and the public the hazards inherent in the trauma of death and dying.

"There are a variety of studies that indicate there is a relationship between death and loss and depression as well as physiological symptoms including nausea, anorexia and severe headaches," Thrush said. "The individual's ability to cope with day-to-day life may be severely limited."

The study conducted among 209 veterinarians in counties of Florida and Arizona, where the ratio of people 65 years of age and older is highest, found that nearly 75 percent of the veterinarians thought death of a pet might result in illness for its owner.

Today's Sunday In Park Features Marches, Berlin, Ellington

There's lots of music on tab of a range wide enough to please many people for the Sunday In The Park concert at 7 p.m. today. Barry Shank is directing the 40 piece orchestra, the Sunday In The Park Wind Ensemble. The concert is to take place in the Sunday in the Park area east of Reade between Third and Fourth Streets. There is no admission fee and the public is invited to attend.

Selections to be played in the first portion of the program will be Clifton Williams' "The Hermitage;" Aaron Copland's "An Outdoor Overture;" and a well-known jazz piece, "A Child Is Born" by Thad Jones.

One of the major attractions on today's concert will be Haydn's "Two Derbyshire Volunteer Calvary Marches." In the interlude between the two marches, Shank will play the trumpet call in an "18th Century Cadance and Calvary Call" and will be answered by other trumpets.

Two American composers, Irving Berlin and Duke Ellington, are being featured in segments of today's program.

Six Berlin songs are included in "A Symphonic Portrait." These are "There's No Business Like Show Business," "Say It With Music," "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Easter Parade," "White Christmas," and "God Bless America."

The "Ellington Portrait" segment includes "It Didn't Mean A Thing," "Sophisticated Lady," "Mood Indigo," "Azure," "I Let A Song Go Out Of My Heart," "Solitude," "Caravan," and "In A Sentimental Mood."

Another collection of special music will be the performance of an "Anthology of Marches." This group includes mostly lesser known marches by composers who are known as march kings — Karl King, Edwin Franko Goldman, Kenneth Alfred, Henry Fillmore, and John Phillip Sousa.

Novelty in music will be provided by the an eight-member group on non-electrical kitchen items banging their way through Don Gillis' "Variations On A Kitchen Sink." Student conductor Bruce Smith will lead the music clankers as they play a dishpan, a wash tub, skillets, an egg beater and other kitchen appliances.

Another special event will be the performance of three ragtime pieces by a saxophone quartet led by saxophonist Brad Foley.

The program today opens with an observance of honor for the American flag, with the audience joining the Pledge of Allegiance. Stuart Aronson will lead the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner."

In the event of rain, the program will be held at 7 p.m. Monday at the same site.

A TOUCH OF NOSTALGIA . . . Barry Shank, white trousers, leads an orchestra in a Sunday in the Park performance in 1975. Shank, who has conducted a program every year since Sunday in the Park opened, will be on hand again today conducting the Sunday in the Park Wind Ensemble. Today's concert will focus on marches and the music of Irving Berlin and Duke Ellington.

Hospitality House

WASHINGTON — Adopt-A-School is the theme highlighted on Kay Currie's "Hospitality House" show airing from noon to 1 p.m. today over WITN-TV, Channel 7, Washington.

Guests discussing the adoption of schools are Dr. Kenneth England, superintendent of Washington City Schools; Susan Dawson, a volunteer parent; Pat Norris of Washington Garment Co., the first industry in Beaufort County to adopt a school, and Addison Booth, coordinator of the program.

Tobacco, America's golden leaf, is another subject on today's show. The guest is Ann Broder, assistant to the president of the Tobacco Institute of Washington, D. C. She talks about the cigarette controversy.

In the kitchen, Chinese cooking is featured with Hsu, chef and proprietor of the Chocowinity Chinese Restaurant.

Daniel Clifton of Greenville makes a second appearance on the show, demonstrating another yoga exercise.

Two women, Sharon Carson and Joy Crawford of the seaside village of Sea Level, both dressed in old fashioned finery, give details on the upcoming June 20 Sailor's Snug Harbor Day in Sea Level.

Four ECU Artsts Had Work In Show

RALEIGH — Four Greenville artists, all faculty members of the School of Art, East Carolina University, are among the 32 North Carolina artists whose work was exhibited in "The Art of North Carolina," an exhibition sponsored by E. R. Squibb & Sons Inc. and shown recently at the Squibb Gallery near Princeton, N.J.

Paul Hartley, Mel Stanforth, Henry Stindt and Clarence Morgan are the four from ECU whose art was selected by a jury from the N. C. Museum of Art, Raleigh, for the show.

"The Art of North Carolina" was praised by various art critics, including John Caldwell of the "New York Times." In the May 24 edition of that paper, Caldwell wrote, "Much of it would have seemed completely at home at the recent biennial exhibition at the Whitney Museum in New York," and added that "most of us probably think of art in North Carolina in terms of the wood and other crafts for which the state is known, but most of the art shown here is uncompromisingly new painting and sculpture."

Portions of the show are now being shown at the Duke University Museum of Art and will be on view there through July 29.

Gallery Talk

RALEIGH — "The Triumphant Trio: The Symbolic 'Three' in Art" is the topic of the gallery talk to be given by docent Dida Turner at 2:15 p.m. today at the N. C. Musuem of Art. She will examine art in which trios of entities or ideas are emphasized and works in which traingles, trefoils and other three-related forms appear. There is no admission charged and the public is invited to attend.

WOOW Classics

Classical music is now being offered to radio listeners over WOOW-AM Radio, 1300 on the radio dial.

The two-hour program of classics, scheduled on the air from 10 p.m. to midnight, is making its debut tonight, with Karen Hause as the hostess.

Compositions to be aired on tonight's premiere program include three by Aaron Copland — "Fanfare for the Common Man" and four dance episodes from Copland's ballet "Rodeo," performed by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, Donald Johanos conducting; and the orchestral suite from "Appalachian Spring" performed by the Boston Symphony with the composer conducting.

The final composition scheduled for tonight's broadcast is Resphigi's "Ancient Airs and Dances," a lyrical 19th century composition performed by the Philharmonia Hungarica, Antal Dorati, conductor.

The show's hostess, Mrs. Hause, is a music teacher-performer. She is an alumna of the University of Michigan where she received the BM degree in piano performance. Mrs. Hause has been an accompanist for numerous recitals and oratorio performances in the Greenville area in recent years.

'Blithe Spirit' Next At Ayden

AYDEN — The Ayden Theater Workshop this week is presenting Noel Coward's well known stage play of comic confusion involving ghosts and people, "Blithe Spirit" as its last play of the season.

There will be three performances. The opening performances at 8 p.m. on Thursday, June 18, a second performance on Saturday, June 20 at 8 p.m., and a matinee performance at 3 p.m. on Sunday, June 21.

All will take place in the Ayden-Grifton High School Auditorium.

John Willilams has the role of the British author, Charles Condomine, who in the course of research on the occult unexpectedly encounters and brings to his household the ghost of his mischievous deceased first wife, Elvira, played by Christy Braswell.

Paula Pyle has the role of Charles' current wife, Ruth, and Anita Brehm portrays the colorful, brassy medium, Madam Arcati. Don Watson and Ann Whitehurst are cast in the roles of the two house guests, Dr. and Mrs. Bradman. The zany maid, Edith, is protrayed by Debbie Adams.

Kim Dale directs, and Mitchell Riggs is stage manager.

Tickets are priced at $2 and will be available at the door.

DANCE FESTIVAL OPENS THURSDAY . . . The 1981 American Dance Festival will open on Thursday, June 18, at 8 p.m. in Duke University's Page Auditorium. Performances in the early days of the festival will be given by the North Carolina Dance Theater and Senta Driver's dancers. (The two dancers shown here are members of the N.C. Dance Theater). Other dance groups scheduled to perform in the festival during June and July include the Dance Theater of Harlem and Pilobolus Dance Theater, among others. Ticket information on all performances is available by calling 684-4059 between 9-4 Mondays through Fridays.

Graham Recipient Of ADF Dance Award

DURHAM — Martha Graham, the 88-year old famed pioneer of American dance, has been selected as the recipient of the first annual $25,000 Samuel H. Scripps American Dance Festival (ADF) Award. Announcement of the award was made by ADF president Charles Reinhart.

Established to honor choreographers who have made a lifetime contribution to American modern dance, the newly established award is believed to be the largest one offered on a regular basis in the performing arts. The award also marks the first of its kind ever presented in American dance.

"Considering the trailblazing contributions that Miss Graham has made not only to dance but to 20th century art in general, the panel felt it fitting that she be the first recipient," Reinhart said.

"Miss Graham's extraordinary achievements, which have been likened to Picasso's effect on art, include choreographing 169 ballets, creating a dance technique that has become the basis of the education of hundreds of thousands of dancers around the world, and establishing a new form for dance and 20th century theater. Her courageous innovations opened the way for generations of choreographers," Reinhart added.

Miss Graham, who has been associated with the American Dance Festival since its inception at Bennington College in 1934, premiered many of her classic works at the festival, including "Letter to the World," "El Penitente," and "Diversion of Angels."

The 1981 award, established through a contribution to the American Dance Festival by Samuel H. Scripps this April, will be presented to Miss Graham at the American Dance Festival in Durham sometime in the middle of July.

Black Artists Festival

KINSTON — The Black Artists' Guild Inc. of Kinston will present its first annual Harambee Cultural Arts Festival at Holloway Park, Kinston, from noon to 6 p.m. on Saturday, June 20.

Exhibitions of the visual arts, crafts, and a program of continuous performances will be presented.

Featured performers will be the Second Marine Division Band, Camp Lejeune; Manozii the Magician from Baltimore; the Revelation Gospel Singers, Goldsboro; the Cultural Movement African Dance Company, Goldsboro; and the Yusuf and Friends Jazz Ensemble with vocalist Eve Cornelious of Durham.

Teh Harambee Cultural Arts Festival is produced with a partial funding through the Community Council for the Arts and a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Center Specials

CHAPEL HILL — North Carolina writer Reynolds Price, the youthful Greek conqueror Alexander, Tar Heel music woman Elizabeth Cotten, and an opera based on the supernatural are among people and topics to be aired this week over The UNC Center for Public Television. Locally, the programs can be seen over Channel 25, Greenville.

The center's specials this week include:

— Today, 7 p.m. — Tar Heel folk musician Elizabeth Cotten joins Dirt Band regular John McEuen on a guitar picking session on Austin City Limits.

— Today, 9 p.m. — The first of a five-part dramatization of Balzac's novel, "Cousin Bette." The role of a woman engaged in a life-long campaign of revenge of the family she feels portrayed her is played by Margaret Tyzack.

— Today, 10 p.m. — The turbulent life of Alexander the Great, the handsome Greek youth who became a world conqueror 2,500 years ago is the subject of "The Search for Alexander the Great." Filmed in Greece, the four-part series premiering today stars Nicholas Clay as Alexander. Host is James Mason.

— Monday, June 15, 9 p.m. — William Grant Still's opera, "A Bayou Legend," makes its TV debut, with an all-black cast starring Gary Brugess and Carmen Balthrop as the supernatural lovers; Raeschell Potter as Clothilde and Peter Lightfoot as Leonce. Leonard de Paur conducts the orchestra. The opera was taped on location near Vicksburg, Miss., with the Yazoo River providing a backdrop for the ghostly tale.

— Monday, June 15, 11:30 p.m. — North Carolina writer Reynolds Price is Monday's guest on The Dick Cavett Show, which returns to public television. Other guests at this time spot during the week are Tommy Tune on Tuesday; Lena Horne on Wednesday; and Paris nightclub owner Charles Groden on Thursday.

Returns From Tour

Greenville's Rusty Knott, one of eight American boys who have just completed a European tour sponsored by America's Boychoir Federation, has returned home from the tour.

In Europe, the boys sang in churches, snyagogues and concert halls in France, Belgium, Germany and the Netherlands. In Brussels, the boys attended a festival and received coaching and choral direction from Maitre Francis Delvin, director of the Belgian Boys Choir.

In Paris, they visited the Louvre and sang in the American Church of Paris and also in a concert held in the square outside the cathedral of Notre Dame de Paris.

Rusty was given an official Federation Internationale des Choeurs d'Enfants portfolio to be presented to his choir director, Thomas E. Hawley, Jr. He was also given a print of Notre Dame de Paris to present to Hawley

U.S. Is Leader In The Study Of African Art

By FREDERICK M. WINSHIP
UPI Senior Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — The United States has quietly become the world center of scholarship in the field of African art and culture, a development proclaimed by an encyclopedic exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum.

Once relegated to ethnic collections in natural history museums and the basements of art museums, the art of Black Africa has come a long way in the past decade. Now museums across the country — Los Angeles, Chicago, Dallas, Seattle, Portland and Detroit — are proudly displaying growing collections of wood sculpture, pottery, bronzes and other artifacts.

The Museum of African Art in Washington, an independent institution for 20 years, has just become a part of the Smithsonian Institution, making it in essence the national collection similar to those in London, Paris, Brussels and Berlin. The Metropolitan Museum will open its new Michael C. Rockefeller Wing in November to house its primitive art collection.

Scores of colleges and universities offer courses in African culture and art and there are more American scholars active in Africa than from any other country. Great private collections are being assembled, notably the De Menil collection in Houston and the Tishman collection in New York.

A show of some 150 of the more than 350 African sculptures acquired by Paul Tishman, member of a real estate development family, and his wife, Ruth, opened at the Metropolitan Museum June 3 to run through Sept. 6.

When asked what decided him and his wife to collect African art, Tishman replies, "How does one fall in love?"

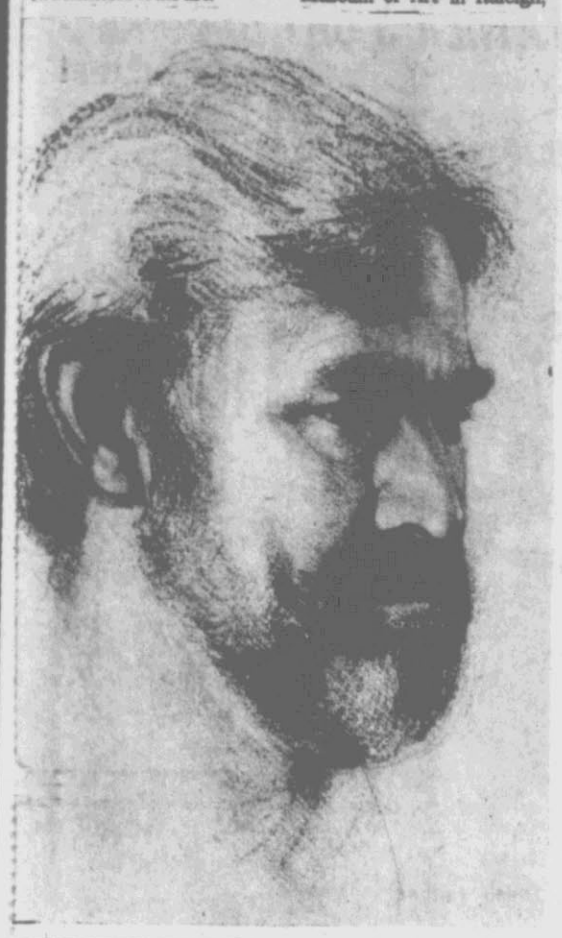
Fresco Show At NCMA

By ANN LASSITER
N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — Fresco, a technique of painting popular in Europe from the 13th through the 17th centuries, was one used by artists like Michelangelo and Raphael, two masters of the art.

Today, this technique is rarely used by contemporary artists, so that opportunities for the public to get an idea of what it's like are few and far between.

Now, at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh, the public has a chance to find out something about fresco painting in an exhibit to be on view through July 5.



HEAD STUDY, MALE SERVANT . . . is a charcoal on paper drawing by Ben Long. This and other studies for his fresco paintings are included in an exhibition now on view at the N.C. Museum of Art, Raleigh. The exhibition opened on June 6 and will be up through July 5. (Photo courtesy NCMA).

On June 6, an exhibit, "Studies for a Fresco: Ben Long," went on view at the museum. The exhibition includes the full-scale preliminary drawings and studies of Jesus and his apostles in a composition of "The Last Supper" developed at Holy Trinty Episcopal Church near Glen Springs in Ashe County.

The exhibit includes 36 drawings in a variety of media — charcoal, conte, sanguine chalk, silver point and ink. Also included are nine oil paintings.

A slide/tape program shown in conjunction with the exhibit outlines the technique of fresco painting. "This show offers a glimpse into an art form seldom practiced today," said Jen Wilson, curator of the show.

Artist Long, of Statesville, attended UNC-Chapel Hill and studied in Italy with Pietro Annigoni, a master of the fresco painting technique.

In addition to "The Last Supper," Long created three frescoes for another Ashe County church. For another fresco, "Mary Great With Child," the first of three frescoes at St. Mary's Episcopal Church in West Jefferson, Long become the first contemporary artist to win the International Leonardo di Vinci Award. He also has frescoes in several Italian churches.

The North Carolina Museum of Art is located at 107 E. Morgan Street. Hours are 10-5 Tuesdays through Saturdays, 2-6 on Sundays, closed Mondays

Show Of Nigerian Art

ATLANTA, GA. — The most spectacular loan of African art ever made to the United States will open at Atlanta's High Museum on June 20 and will be on view through Aug. 16. The rare treasures are being shown under the patronage of the government of Nigeria.

The show, entitled "Treasures of Ancient Nigeria; Legacy of 2,000 Years," consists of 100 objects, including Benin bronzes and the earliest West African art discovered in recent archaeological explorations.

Among works represented are ones from the Nok culture, from the site of Igbo-Ukwu, and the court art of the city-states of Ife and Benin. Objects from the span of 20 centuries include works in bronze, terracotta, ivory and stone.

In conjunction with the exhibition, six lectures and a series of films will be featured during the run of the show. High Museum is located at Peachtree and 15h streets, and is open 10-5 Tuesdays through Saturdays, and noon to 5 on Sundays. Special group tours can be arranged for this exhibition by calling Evelyn Mitchell at 404-892-3600.

A Review

Entertaining Tidbits In Local Book

"If children had the itch — which they did regularly — the standard cure for that was to mix sulphur and grease (lard) and rub you all over with that and put on your long drawers and wear them for three days. Of course, you smelled so bad nobody could come near you, but it did cure the itch." This gem is provided by Pitt County writer Ida Wooten Tripp, one of dozens of contributors to "A Team of Mules and A One Room School — Memories of Pitt County."

The just released publication is a joint affair involving the efforts of students throughout the county who took part in the Pitt County Oral History Project.

The project, funded by a $2,500 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities and sponsored by Pitt County Schools and Sheppard Memorial Library, involved 74 seventh and eighth grade students working in five groups scattered throughout the county. Meredith Foltz of Sheppard Memorial Library was project director; Alice Keene represented the Pitt County Community Schools; and Clair Pittman, poet and teacher at Wellcome Middle School, was coordinator of group advisors.

Basically, the material contained in this local history publication is a compilation of selected quotes gathered by the students from a wide range of older citizens in the county. Interviews were taped and recorded between December 1980 and April 1981.

The material is presented under a number of subdivisions — "Going to Church," "Staying Home," "Seeking a Cure," "Shining Rails," "Special Memories," etc.

In "Staying Home," Maybelle Evans recalls "when you got ready to kill a chicken, you'd go out and catch you one and put him in the pen for three or four days . . . I'd wring a chicken's neck and throw him down and think he was dead and he'd get up and run off."

That the status of teachers today is vasty different than in past years is evident in the recollection by Mrs. Walter Latham of Bethel. After noting that most teachers arrived by train and were met and inspected by townspeople, principals and school board members, she relates "Everybody was looking to see what they (the teachers) were like. They (people of the community) were very much against short hair and teachers were not allowed to bob their hair. They had to stay in town . . . (and) were allowed to go off one weekend a month. They were supposed to go to church . . . if they didn't, they wouldn't be hired back."

Some of the more prevalent superstitions included not carrying out ashes during the 12 days of Christmas, not washing bedsheets between new and old Christmas, and having a man, not a woman, be the first to visit a home on New Year's Day.

The youthful preoccupation of Pitt County's current generation of older citizens were very much caught up in the excitement of the growth of modern transportation. Steamships and river steamers, horse drawn sleighs and wagons were on the way out, trains were at their zenith.

"A Team of Mules and A One Room School — Memories of Pitt County" is an enjoyable collection of snippets of fact and nostalgia from the past, recalled by those who were part of the transitional days from 19th to 20th century lifestyles.

The book, a small format paperback, is enlivened with about 30 black and white photographs, some a bit murkey, others crisp and clear. Group photos of the students taking part in gathering the material are also included.

Check at your local library to see a copy of this little book. Its entertaining and informative.

Aycock Brown Winner Of RIHA Distinguished Service Award

MANTEO — Aycock Brown, photographer and long-time promoter of North Carolina's Outer Banks, received the Roanoke Island Historical Association's Distinguished Service Award Friday night at the opening of the 41st season of "The Lost Colony."

Sen. Jesse A. Helms presented the award to Brown in brief ceremonies prior to the opening of the drama. It was also announced that the entire 1981 season would be dedicated to playwright Paul Green, author of the outdoor drama, who died May 4.

Brown was cited for "his unselfish devotion in presenting the story of 'The Lost Colony' to the world through his photographs and stories. The Roanoke Island Historical Association is indebted to him for his loyalty, both past and present."

Brown, a native of Happy Valley in the mountains, joined "The Lost Colony" as publicity and news director in 1948. Later he became manager of the Dare County Tourist Bureau. In his position with "The Lost Colony" and later with the Tourist Bureau, Brown's photos and bylines became familiar to potential Outer Banks visitors the world over.

Now retired, Brown is still active as a photographer, and remains involved in presenting the story of the first colonists and travel opportunities of the Outer Banks.

The Roanoke Island Historical Asociation, producing agency of "The Lost Colony," presents the Distinguished Service Award only occasionally to a person who has demonstrated unusual devotion to the outdoor drama and the association.

Brown is the fifth person to win the award. Other winners are Mrs. Mabel Basnight, box office manager of "The Lost Colony" since 1937; Cora Mae Basnight, who has performed the role of Agona for 24 seasons; Irene Smart Rains, costumer from 1946 to 1980 and a member of the production staff since 1938; and Mabel Evans Jones, who wrote the script for the 1921 silent film version of the colony.

TV Appearance

Beverly Cotten, Pitt Community College's visiting artist during the 1980-81 academic year, is scheduled to appear on nationwide public television Wednesday at 10 p.m. Greenville station WUNK will carry the program.

Miss Cotten's performance was taped at "International Spoleto" held in Charleston, S.C., recently. The event featured traditional American music, folk music and drama. The television portion will also spotlight the classical arts, plays, chamber music and opera.

During the summer, Miss Cotten will tour the United States and Canada, presenting her folk music and dance. Next fall she is expected to continue as a visiting artist with one of North Carolina's 58 community colleges and technical institutes.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Louise Wilkerson Perry

"There's no business like show business," goes a popular refrain, and Sheppard Memorial Library has acquired several new "show biz" biographies for summer readers.

"Dolly" is a great American success story, based on extensive interviews with Dolly Parton herself, as well as with others who have known her all her life. Author Alanna Nash brings us the complete Dolly — dynamic and sexy, yet gentle and innocent. We follow her right from her backwoods Tennessee childhood to her crossover from country to pop music.

With her strong determinatin to succeed, Dolly's life is proof that childhood fantasies can indeed come true. Also included in the book are many photographs and a complete discography of her all her recordings.

"It's time for people to know the truth about Elvis and not just the best or the worst of it," says stepbrother Rick Stanley. And thus is born "Elvis: We Love You Tender" by Dee Presley, Elvis' stepmother and her sons Billy, Rick and David Stanley.

Not only was Elvis the sun around whom a generation revolved but he was also the brightest and shiniest star in the constellation that was his family. They and their very lives revolved around serving and satisfying Elvis. This book is their story about living with and loving the man who was their life's blood. Dee Presley met and married Vernon Presley, Elvis' father, in the years just following Elvis' rise to success. She and her sons became Elvis' aides, confidants and bodyguards.

As each boy grew old enough to leave school, he would join Elvis as part of the "Memphis Mafia." Every minute was spent waiting on Elvis hand and foot, entertaining him, guarding him, handling his temperament and his moods, even administrating to his nightly needs, both drugs and girls. They were with him through everything: the early years when all was rosey, the plateau years when he began taking drugs, and through his whirlwind comeback just before he died.

A SMALL COVE . . . along the Currituck Sound at Waterlily is typical of numerous attractive shoreline vistas which abounds in myrtle, pin oak and the spice tree, a rare tree in North Carolina. In many places, the shoreline is surprisingly steep for eastern North Carolina. The northern stretch of Bodie Island with the Currituck County settlement of Corolla is barely visible in the distance.

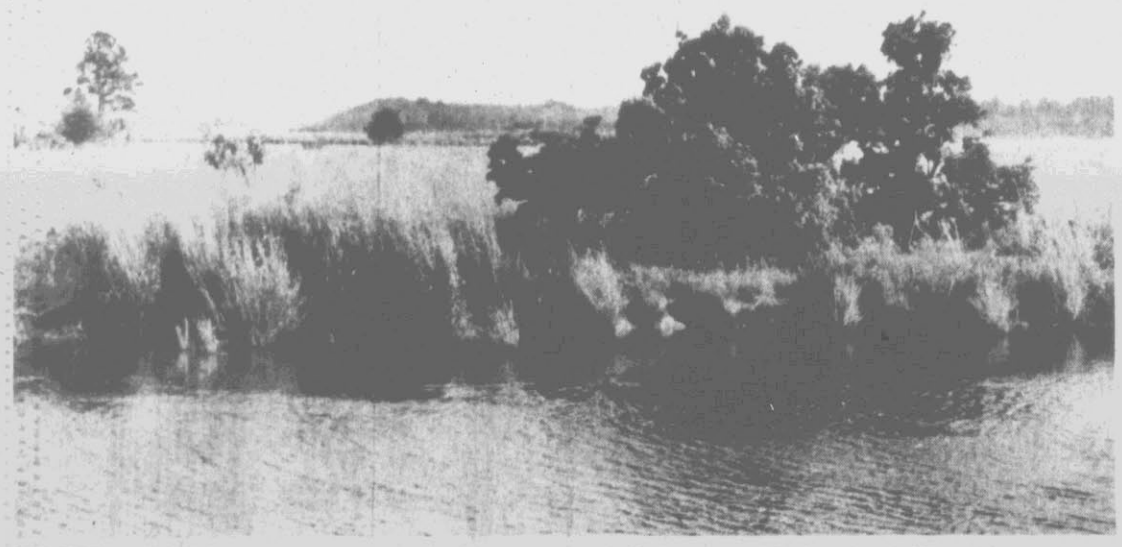
Coinjock And Waterlily

Two of the nearly two dozen unincorporated settlements that make rural Currituck County a paradise for visitors in coastal North Carolina.

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

A DEAD TREE . . . adds a starkly dramatic note to densely foliaged trees lining the shore along Currituck Sound. A species of tree known locally as the spice tree is said to be known in North Carolina only in the Currituck Sound area.



MRYTLES AND PINES . . . singly and in clumps dot the stretches of bronze marsh grasses along the two roadside canals bordering the highway from Coinjock to Waterlily. Wildflowers bloom along the banks, casting brilliant reflections in the dark water, and clusters of waterlilies ride the surface of the water. The grassy roadsides are favorite fishing spots for fishermen trying their luck for bass and perch.

North Carolina's water-washed most northeasternly situated county, Currituck, is a place of marvelous rural coastal beauty and serenity snuggled just beneath the sprawling military and ship-yard-building metropolitan complex of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Virginia Beach and Chesapeake, Virginia.

One of the state's ten smallest counties, it has a total land area of 246 square miles. Two long tapering fingers enclosing a stubby jut of land form the shape of the county. One finger, the narrower of the two, is the thin Atlantic Ocean fronting strip of Bodie Island, in actuality an elongated Outer Banks peninsula, a barrier of duned sand that stretches from Virginia Beach to Oregon Inlet.

Eastward, across Currituck Sound is the mainland area of Currituck, a land mass that becomes a peninsula from Coinjock south, surrounded by Currituck Sound, North River and Albemarle Sound.

The stubby projection of land lying between the mainland and the Outer Banks is part of another Virginia peninsula, known as Knotts Island, with a settlement of the same name.

Along with its bordering sister county of Camden to the east, Currituck is one of two North Carolina counties without a single incorporated township. Nonetheless, Currituck literally bristles with small settlements bearing distinctive names. On the 52 mile stretch from Moyock next to the Virginia border, down to Point Harbor at land's end, a traveler passes through Snowden, Sligo, Currituck (the county seat), Barco, Coinjock, Bertha, Grand, Jarvisburg, Powells Point, Mamie, and Harbinger. Settlements off the main north-south road are Gregory, Shawboro, Waterlily, Aydlett, Poplar Branch and Spot. The lonely outpost of Corolla is the only settlement in the thirty miles plus stretch from Duck to Virginia Beach. A free six-car capacity state ferry crosses the Currituck Sound between Currituck and Knotts Island.

Colorful Communities

Coinjock and Waterlily are two of Currituck's colorful communities. Both are endowed in bountiful measure with nature's blend of green forests, brooding marsh areas, numerous dark water streams, and the lure of blue sound and ocean waters that characterize so much of North Carolina's superb multi-faceted coastline.

At Coinjock, a magnificant old wooden building sinks into the last stages of deterioration, enveloped in a lavish growth of vines and pink climbing roses. Fifty feet distant, the signal bell of the drawbridge of the Intercoastal Waterway periodically signals the approach of another of many boats that pass across the highway each day. Two general merchandise stores flank the road near the bridge, with pick up trucks and tractors mingling with tourist cars.

Coinjock's townspeople proudly provide the history of any building or family for miles around. Mrs. Louise Vick, for example, proprietess of Vick's General Store, keeps handy for visitors a copy of a history of Currituck County published a few years ago.

The short trip from Coinjock to Waterlily is a marvel of forest and marsh beauty. Canals with water dark as India ink line each side of the road, and wild flowers reflect their brilliant hues in the water. Fish break and swirl among the waterlily pads. Large heron take slow-winged flight, and song birds perch on stiff stalks of cordgrass to pour forth serenades.

Waterlily is undoubtedly one of the most appealing of North Carolina's small coastal settlements. The single road curves along the shoreline. Spice trees with white bark are said to grow only in the Currituck area.

Farmer Jim Markert speaks with pride of the farming operations carried out by himself, his father, his brothers and others of the family. In an area where soybeans and corn are king, they are successfully cultivating alfalfa hay. "I've lived here all my life, 33 years, except for a six year period I was away training race horses," he commented. "It's a fine place to live in." He says the Whitsons, the Curles, the Twifords and the Morrises are among other families who have lived on this verdant peninsula for generations.

Ties To Greenville

Traditionally Currituck County residents are oriented to nearby Norfolk. However, there's a number of close ties with Greenville as well. Increasingly, young people of the area attend East Carolina University. In recent years, area people have began using medical facilities in Greenville, and quite a few spoke of family ties in Greenville.

The pride of family and traditional ways come across strongly in talking to the permanent residents of this area. While admitting that change is inevitable, they are nonetheless apprehensive about changes taking place too quickly or too drastically.

One old timer mentioned that in the ten years from 1970 to 1980, Currituck's population nearly doubled — from 6,900 to over 11,000. Much of this increase, he noted, is due to retired government workers and military personnel from the Norfolk area moving in, seeking quiet and peace from the big city. It's not that Currituck people want to be isolated, yet they express an understandable desire to pass to their children the best of the rural heritage that is theirs.

GOING THROUGH THE DRAWBRIDGE . . . The Jefay IV of Newark, Del., glides through the open Coinjock drawbridge at the Intercoastal Waterway station on U.S. 185. A large number of boats of many types passing through at Coinjock make this an ideal post for boat watching. The extensive water traffic also frequently ties up motor traffic on 158, a major highway connecting Nags Head with Norfolk and Elizabeth City.

FIREWOOD STACKED . . . in a Waterlily side yard provides a study in shape and texture. Many of the attractive homes in the community have name signs, with names such as "Dock Side" and "Mockingbird Hill."

Federal Budget Cuts Are Trimming Some Frills In National Parks

By MARK FRANKEL
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Visitors to the national parks and forests this summer may find the amenities provided a little leaner than past years because of budget cuts.

Federal allocations that have not kept up with inflation and deep cuts in the funds available for seasonal workers may translate into less frequent garbage collection, fewer ranger patrols and a little less fresh paint splashed about in some areas.

Except for the elimination of some remote campsites, however, officials of the National Park Service and the National Forest Service stress that service cutbacks will be minimal and little felt by the hundreds of millions of visitors to the great outdoors.

The 300 million people touring the more than 330 National Park areas can expect "slight difference in service provided," according to Jay Sahd of the park service budget office.

While the Park Service 1981 budget was fattened to $494.6 million, inflation has undercut much of the increase. Today's thinner dollars, Sahd said, "buy less supplies and materials ... to continue the same amount of services. You must curtail some place."

Maintenance cutbacks will bear much of the burden, Sahd said. Cuts will also be felt in fewer patrols of the service's 31,129 campsites, and tours and craft demonstrations for tourists may be scantier.

"It is hoped this will not inconvenience visitors; that is not the intent," Sahd said.

The more than 220 million people expected this year to use the 190 million acres comprising the National Forest Service will find things slightly more austere than last year.

Those planning to enter one of the 154 national forests can "expect a lower quality recreation experience because of reduced services, lower quality facilities and lack of adequate amenities," according to Bob Gordon, Forest Service budget office.

While the service recreation budget tops $111.5 million this year, it is only $5.1 million more than last year and a "net decrease in real terms," Gordon said. In addition, the $1.93 billion Forest Service budget was slashed from the $2.17 billion 1980 allocation.

As a result, while most of the forest service's 91,000 campsites will be open, some "low use, remote sites" may not open or close early in the autumn. Amenities, such as garbage collection, will also be reduced, according to Gordon.

While standards may be "less satisfactory" than in past years, Gordon expects no vacations will be ruined because of the crunch.

Manpower will also be reduced. Fewer summer-only seasonal employees, used to patrol trails, assist visitors and enforce the Forest Service regulations, will be hired than in past years, he said.

The congressional decision to eliminate the Youth Conservation Corps and the Young Adult Conservation Corps over the next two years will also cut into the muscle available to the service for tasks like trail construction and maintenance.

The YCC and YACC, funded by the departments of Interior and Labor, provide about 6 percent of the service's manpower requirements, mostly in the eastern half of the country.

"Basic human services that involve health or human safety, we're trying to maintain as we always have," said Edward Therrien, information officer at the White Mountain National Forest, spread over 747,400 acres in New Hampshire and Maine.

"We've managed to open everything this year," Therrien said. Back country patrols in the forest, which last year was visited by 6 million people, will be reduced, he said, because of fewer seasonal employees, but the cuts "will not be obvious to the average person coming here."

Officials at the Superior National Forest in Minnesota anticipate no major service reductions at their 25 developed fee-required campgounds, according to spokesman Allan Wolter.

PLAN YOUR HOME — The SunGlow

Energy Efficient Classic Styling

By Jerry Bishop

With today's trend in back to basics, there is now a design that combines the latest in energy saving features with the beauty and charm of early Americana.

A 2-story traditional styled home designed for a growing family. This home displays the classic look of country living combined with passive solar energy saving extras. A split landing stairway leads to the 3 large bedrooms and 2 full baths on the upper level which also features the conveniently located laundry room. The master suite occupies the entire east wing of the upper level and shows a large walk-in closet and a private bath. Over the garage is a large storage area which could easily be converted to a game room. The main level features a combined dining and living area with a large fireplace as the focal point.

Open spaces are accented with a breakfast bar separating the kitchen from the dining area. Also on this level is a bath, pantry and lots of storage space.

An air-lock entry in front and back adds to the energy saving design. Walls have R-23 insulation, the second floor ceiling has R-36 insulation. In the St. Louis climate, 61% of the heating requirement is furnished by the passive solar system.

AREA	SQ. FT.

Decorate Home To Offer Better Sound For Entertainment Center

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

One result of the current proliferation of home electronics equipment is that for some people the concept of a home entertainment center is no longer merely academic.

Some families already own large-screen projection TV sets, videocassette players and a library of TV games as well as stereo equipment for listening to and recording music.

These people have the basics of a home entertainment center. It remains only for them to organize their listening and watching environment for greatest convenience and enhancement of their equipment.

According to one components manufacturer, the living room is usually the place where the equipment is used. Decorating decisions made there can serve either to enhance or to detract from the sound and viewing quality of the room.

The basic requirements for a good listening room are two, according toDel Eilers, audio technical service manager for 3M Co. First of all, you have to make sure that the parallel surfaces contrast hard and soft materials. And second, it is important to break up the boxiness of the typical square-ish room with a variety of surfaces off which the sound can bounce.

The soft surfaces will absorb the sound, while the hard surfaces will cause it to reverberate into the room. So a combination of these surfaces at various angles will create the richest sound.

The ceiling and the floor present the most obvious example of the principle. By carpeting the floor and leaving the ceiling bare, you have made a decorating decision that conforms to good acoustical practices.

To provide soft surfaces on two of the remaining four walls, draperies, textured wall coverings and fabric-covered walls are possible choices. It is not necessary to cover the entire wall surface. Approximately 75 percent to 80 percent coverage is adequate, said Eilers.

Today's popular diagonal room arrangements can contribute to good listening since a bulky mass set on the diagonal breaks up the parallel surfaces. The three-panel screen is another decorating device that can improve the sound in your room. A screen placed on the diagonal in one corner of the room provides a new surface for the sound to bounce off.

In general, highly textured materials such as tweed and linen are better for acoustics than smooth, slick materials such as vinyl and silk. On the other hand, don't opt for a totally fabric-swathed room. This leads to a condition of sound deadening in which all the sound is "swallowed" by the furnishings, said Eiler.

Good acoustics enhance all activities in a room, including television viewing. But if you're thinking of installing a large, projection TV set, you will need an area of at least 9 feet by 12 feet, according to Tom DeVesto, Kloss Video Corp., a manufacturer of projection television sets.

The receiver should be installed at least nine feet from the screen and viewers should be seated at least 10 to 12 feet away from the huge, movie-size screen, he said.

Requirements include carpeting or an area rug in front of the screen to absorb light reflections in the room that might otherwise reduce picture brightness.

To minimize the decorative distraction of a large, blank 6-foot television screen in the room, mount the screen in a bookcase wall behind shutters, blinds or curtains, suggested DeVesto.

Home entertainment centers should be furnished for comfort, so opt for easy-care fabrics and sturdy furniture that can be rearranged. Planning ample storage room for records, cassette tapes and other accouterments should be simple if a wall storage system is used. The storage systems on the market today provide many options and usually can be designed to accommodate any sort of equipment on the market.

Adequate ventilation at the rear and some method of distributing the wires and of access for inevitable repair are factors to consider when choosing wall system components.

Today's electronics equipment is proliferating so that it seems as if it would soon outrun the space available to store it. But one manufacturer noted that help is on the way.

Q. — Somebody told me that she read in your column that it is all right to use toothpaste to take out a white ring on a wooden dining-room table. My husband says he will not try that method until he is sure that's what you said. We have tried rubbing the area with furniture polish without much result. The ring has disappeared just the tiniest bit, but that's about all. Is that the advice you gave?

A. — Yes, but with reservations. I didn't say it definitely would remove the ring, but suggested it as one of several products that could be used in an attempt to get rid of the stain. Sometimes one thing will work and another will not, for various reasons, but sometimes because one spot was caused by water and another by something else. Toothpaste and even cigarette or cigar ashes are abrasives, which often do the job. Other products that sometimes work are cooking oils, petroleum jelly and camphorated oil. In all cases, you must start out with the idea that refinishing of some sort may be necessary, since a substance that takes out a ring may also dull the finish in that area.

Q. — A mildew constantly forms in the grout between the joints of the tiles on our bathroom walls and floor. I use a liquid that removes the mildew, but it seems to form again after a few weeks or months. Can you tell me what is causing this and what to do about it?

A. — Mildew is a growth that occurs only in the presence of dampness. Simply put, your bathroom is too damp. Until you get rid of the dampness, you won't get rid of the mildew. You should leave the window open as much as possible on dry days. This is impractical under certain circumstances and in certain kinds of weather, so your best bet probably is an exhaust fan.

Q. My strawberry beds (rows) have become quite wide. Give me some advice on narrowing them. (W.C., Siler City)

A. Narrow the beds as soon as the harvest is over.Take them back to 12 inches or less. One way of doing this is with a rototiller with the middle rotors removed. Plants left in the beds should be thinned (with a hoe) to six or eight inches apart. Leaving too many plants is a common mistake, especially with varieties that tend to make heavy runner growth. (Barclay Poling, extension horticulture specialist)

Q. I have several pecan trees in my yard and a small pecan orchard in a nearby field. For some reason the yard trees seem to do better than the field trees. (T.W., Kinston)

A. Are you cutting around your field trees with a heavy disc? Although pecan trees have a tap root they also have many feeder roots within the top foot of soil. Yields can be reduced if these roots are severed. (Mel Kolbe, extension horticulture specialist)

Q. I have been told that I need to put Red Devil Lye to my pecan trees. Is the kind labeled "Red Devil Lye-Drain Cleaner" the right kind? (C.F., Newton)

A. Red Devil Lye is absolutely useless when placed around a pecan tree, according to all the information that I have on the subject.

If you want to make your concrete weak, put too much water into the mix.

If you want to make it porous and leaky, put in too much water.

If you want to make it dusty, produce scales on the surface and be susceptible to cracks, put in too much water.

Obviously, then, the amount of water you add to the mixture of portland cement, coarse aggregate and fine aggregate is vital to the quality of the concrete. Other things are important, too, especially the way in which the installed concrete is "cured" or kept moist, but if you start with an excessive amount of water, you are halfway to a poor result. Also, the water should be free of acids, oils and other materials that might taint the mixture and have a bad effect on the completed job. How can you tell whether the water is suitable? If it's clean enough to drink, it's good enough for a concrete mix.

How much water to use depends on what the concrete is for and whether there is too much water already in the fine aggregate or sand. Professionals, especially when working on large jobs, place enough mixture in a cup to fill it, then quickly turn it upside down on a flat surface. If the form holds its shape roughly, it has the right amount of water. If it slumps a bit but does not completely fall to the ground, it is a little too wet but can be used for some purposes. If it collapses completely, it is too wet.

Whether you buy a standard-size sack (94 pounds) of cement or a bag of premixed concrete, requiring only the addition of water, follow the instructions on the container as to the amount of water to be used. In most regular mixtures, the proportions are one part of cement, two parts of fine aggregate or sand and three parts of coarse aggregate. In mixtures intended for heavy work, the proportions might be one part of cement to three parts of fine aggregate and four parts of coarse aggregate, which could be gravel, crushed stone or any one of several other materials.

There are some products on the market which, added to the mixture, will limit concrete shrinkage, increase bonding and provide waterproofing. The bonder is especially good when putting a layer of new concrete on a layer of old concrete.

When water in the concrete evaporates too quickly, all kinds of problems occur, one of which is reduced wearability.

Autos Test Mankind In Finding Space At Yosemite Tourist Sites

By LLOYD G. CARTER

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, Calif. (UPI) — Inside the granite walls of the ice-carved mountain valley naturalist John Muir called a cathedral, autokind competes with mankind for the available pews.

While the master plan adopted in 1978 calls for "ultimate" removal of the million cars, buses, trucks and recreational vehicles that jam into Yosemite Valley annually, park superintendent Bob Binnewies concedes that may not happen anytime soon.

"First of all, I think we have to grant that the transportation issue in Yosemite is exceedingly complicated," says Binnewies.

"I really don't feel that someone can sort of wave a wand and say tomorrow we're going to change to this type of transportation system. I think its going to be an ongoing process that will go right up to and into the 21st century."

Binnewies is a former top official of the Audubon Society. But, having been at Yosemite for 18 months, he says "the bottom line, clearly is that people always have to have the opportunity to come to Yosemite and people, including myself, are very devoted to their cars."

Binnewies' staff and experts from the Department of Transportation are conducting a computer study of traffic patterns to and within Yosemite Valley. It is scheduled to be finished by early 1982.

"Let's face it, we don't have, at this day and time, an alternative to the private automobile," says Dan Card, a Yosemite official who is coordinating the transportation study.

"If the goal was simply to exclude cars from Yosemite Valley, the logical step would be to say, "Okay, if you're not on a bus, then you can't come here,"' Card adds, "but that's not a realistic goal here today because there's this whole wad of population that we would exclude. And that is definitely not going to happen."

But both Binnewies and Card say the perception of Yosemite Valley as one huge parking lot is inaccurate and based on old news photographs "which keep showing up" that reveal huge lines of cars backed up trying to get into the valley.

"A lot of those photographs were taken before we had a campground reservation system (instituted three years ago)," says Binnewies, "when cars would stack up, I guess two or three miles, just waiting to get to a campground."

Nowadays, there are 2,000 campsites and 5,000 beds in Yosemite Valley hotels and tent cabins (which must be reserved) and while there are no limits to the number of day visitors, people without reservations now know they must make other plans.

On a busy summer day, some 40,000 people still crowd into the narrow valley which is seven miles long and just a mile wide, containing 30 miles of roads. They come in an estimated 8,000 or more vehicles.

Binniwies says, on a crowded August Saturday "12 or 13 cars might be stacked up waiting to get through the stop sign at the main intersection and there certainly are cars on the roads and people walking around but I think there's an image that in Yosemite there's almost rush hour-type traffic in the summertime and it's just not that way at all."

"Even though annual visitation remains at 2.5 million, because of various things that have occurred in the past decade, the reality of congestion has been reduced, I think distinctly, in Yosemite," he adds.

As examples, Binnewies mentions the one-way road systems, more carpooling among friends, campground and hotel reservations, the "skyrocketing" surge in foreign visitors (currently 10 percent) and Americans now coming to the park on tour buses, and the tendency for more visitors to arrive in the fall, winter or spring.

Yosemite Transportation Co. buses now meet Amtrak trains in Merced and Fresno and park officials say bus tour companies in Los Angeles and San Francisco are springing up regularly.

In addition, parking lots, the bane of environmentalists, have been moved to less visible locations. The east end of the valley has been closed to private vehicles.

The area in front of Yosemite Village — where park headquarters, the supermarket, restaurants and the Ansel Adams Gallery are located — was once the valley's biggest parking lot. It is being transformed into a landscaped area that will only be available to pedestrians and bicyclists. Parking was moved behind the buildings.

Many of the 1,000 buildings in the valley will be relocated outside during the next few years to further reduce congestion. But Binnewies says the old idea of building parking lots at the valley's entrance is now being downplayed.

"I think if we're going to be talking about places for people to park their cars and get on some kind of a public system to reach Yosemite, we're talking about people parking their cars in the urban centers and getting on the public system at that point," he says.

"I think the issue lies in the convenience of transportation from major travel hubs, airports, cities, train stations and not from big, multi-tiered parking garages built right at the entrance gates to Yosemite National Park."

Binnewies says Ed Hardy, president of the park concessionaire, Yosemite Park and Curry Co., is committed to preserving "the integrity of the park" and the Sierra Club has also been supportive of his efforts to solve the transportation problem.

Becky Evans, chairwoman of the Sierra Club's Task Force in San Francisco, agrees she has "not one" complaint about Binnewies' performance so far.

CITY OF GREENVILLE BUDGET HEARING

New Attorney For City Staff, Police Named

City Manager Ed Wyatt announced at Friday night's City Council meeting that DeWitt F. McCarley has been employed by the city as staff attorney/police legal advisor for a period of one year.

Wyatt said McCarley presently serves as assistant general counsel for the N.C. League of Municipalities and has worked with the League since 1977.

He received his B.A. degree in 1974 from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and his law degree in 1977 from the UNC School of Law.

Judy Kornegay, the city's fulltime staff attorney and legal counsel here, has been awarded a fellowship for one year of study at UNC-Chapel Hill and has taken a one year leave of absence from her duties here.

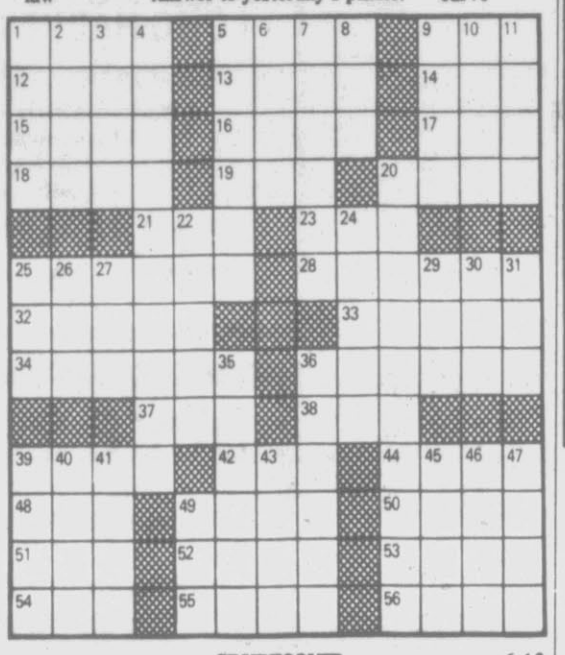
Answer to yesterday's puzzle.



CRYPTOQUIP 6-13

J Y U H V T Z Y R S V I B J P Z V H Z B J R P H S B Z S P B Q V J I Y C P C Q U Y T V

Yesterday's Cryptoquip — LOVE IN A COTTAGE CAN GET TO BE ENVIABLE.

Today's Cryptoquip clue: C equals T

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle. Single letters, short words, and words using an apostrophe can give you clues to locating vowels. Solution is accomplished by trial and error.

Okinawa Unsettled Despite Changes

NAHA, Okinawa (AP) — Nine years after the United States returned the islands of Okinawa to Japan, this famed World War II battleground remains a somewhat unwilling host to a large U.S. military force. It also is an unhappy dependant on economic help from Tokyo.

Yet, booming is one word for Okinawa.

Jumbo jets fly to this capital daily to disgorge thousands of honeymooners and other tourists seeking its sub-tropical charms. New hotels, shops and public facilities are expanding at a frantic pace.

But the people here still consider themselves an abused stepchild of the industrial giant to the north. Almost a decade after becoming Japan's 47th prefecture (state), people still refer to "Japan" as if it were a foreign country.

Per-capita income among the 1.1 million Okinawans is only 70 percent of that on the main islands, a slight improvement from pre-reversion days. Prices are generally higher, and unemployment, spurred by cutbacks of Japanese personnel at U.S. military bases, is 5.3 percent, almost three times the national average.

Okinawa is the name that applies to the main island and also to 70 others, 50 of which are inhabited, in the Ryukyu chain nearly 400 miles south from Japan's principal islands.

Okinawans in particular resent the idea that their islands, equivalent to only one-one hundredth of Japan's total land area, hold 53 percent of the total area of U.S. military bases in Japan, with 17 percent of the densely populated main island used by the Americans.

Some 31,000 of the 45,000 U.S. military personnel in Japan are stationed at the Kadena Air Base, largest in the Pacific, and at about 50 other installations.

Along with the traditional base-related problems of noise pollution, crime and outcast children of mixed parentage, Okinawa has now been swept into the controversy over whether U.S. nuclear arms have been introduced into Japan.

"We believe the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty is at the foundation of Japan's defense," Gov. Junji Nishime of Okinawa said in an interview. "But the government must clearly state its position on nuclear introduction for the sake of public peace of mind. The current controversy is regrettable."

Nishime, a pro-U.S. conservative elected in 1978, said the presence of the U.S. military is a fact "which we have to live with."

Hiroaki Fukuchi, chairman of the Okinawa Conference against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, said, however, that there is "increasing fear" that Okinawa might again become a victim of war.

"We believe facilities for nuclear weapons built before reversion are still intact. Tokyo can only alienate us further by continuing to lie about nuclear weapons," he said.

On April 1, 1945, U.S. forces invaded Okinawa, cut the island in half in a quick cross-island dash, and began a three-month campaign to wipe out the defending Japanese Imperial Army.

Before this bloodiest single battle of the Pacific war ended on June 23, 1945, 100,000 Japanese soldiers, 100,000 civilians — one-fourth of all Okinawans — and 12,500 Americans had died.

Many Okinawans still feel the Tokyo government sacrificed them to save Japan's main islands from invasion, and forced them to endure 27 years of military occupation while the rest of the nation was enjoying the benefits of economic rejuvenation.

The official reversion of Okinawa on May 15, 1972, 20 years after the U.S. occupation ended in Japan proper, was hailed in Tokyo as "the final chapter ending World War II." In Okinawa, demonstrators rioted to protest the continued presence of the U.S. military.

HERE'S A UNIQUE OPPORTUNITY

MONTGOMERY WARD

WILL BE CONVERTING THE PRESENT COMPANY OWNED OPERATION TO A HOME-OWNED HOME-OPERATED BUSINESS IN GOLDSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA.

We're looking for Sales Agents - ambitious husband/wife teams with an urge to break out on their own. And, we may have just what you're looking for in an established business.

Our unique Sales Agency store program offers an exciting opportunity to operate a business of your own with a moderate investment, and also gives you the opportunity to take advantage of the investment we're already made, as well as over a century of Catalog business experience. Once you become a Sales Agent, you can use Wards name, catalogs and credit. Sell our branded merchandise with over 100,000 items, and have access to the same systems, concepts and materials we use to operate our company-owned stores. Best of all, your investment will probably be considerably less than would be required for a regular retail business with similar sales volume.

If you are willing to accept responsibility in return for a future in your own business, we'd like to talk about your personal qualifications, and give you more details about our plan. Write today to:

Tears, Cheers Come With Crown

When the new America's Junior Miss is crowned at the 24th annual "America's Junior Miss Pageant," to be telecast, live, from Mobile, Ala., Thursday, June 18 (8-9 p.m. on CBS), she will be swept away in a wave of emotion, tears, cheers, crowds and unending flash bulbs.

Less than 15 minutes later, she will be in front of television cameras, answering the first of countless questions that interviewers will ask her during the next year. All this instant fame and unprecedented attention can be pretty heady stuff for a teenage girl who a few minutes earlier was anonymous to America.

Last year, Julie Marie Bryan of Thomasville, Ga., was crowned America's Junior Miss. Since then she's been asked numerous questions by interviewers across the country, and she has answered them all with grace and aplomb.

But when she recently was asked what the biggest surprises have been, she was momemtarily at a loss for words.

"I don't think I had a lot of anticipation going into the Pageant," the University of Georgia student finally replied, "but I certainly didn't anticipate this past year to be as great as it's been."

She thought about her answer for another moment, then added: "But the biggest surprise came from my traveling. Our family lives on a farm in Georgia, and it's wonderful to grow up in a small town. It's so reassuring. People are supportive, and you actually develop a relationship with the town. When I returned home after winning the Junior Miss title last summer, there were about 3,000 people in the streets to welcome me.

"Before this year, I hadn't traveled much outside the South. When I became America's Junior Miss, I certainly was wary about traveling up North. I expected people to be quick-tempered and even rude. So, if I'm going to be completely honest, I'd have to say that my biggest surprise this past year has been discovering that people in the North are so wonderful."

After crowning her successor, Julie will return home to Georgia, with a year's worth of memories that will last a lifetime. But then, time plays funny tricks on a Junior Miss. As Julie explained, "It seems like it's only been a month since I received my crown, and yet I feel as if I've matured ten years."

JULIE BRYAN, 1980 America's Junior Miss, will relinquish her title on CBS-TV, Thursday, June 18 (8-9 p.m.) when the new America's Junior Miss is crowned

Black Entertainment Television
Friday, June 19
11:00 p.m.
Movie: "Melinda" Starring Rosalind Cash. A smooth disc jockey puts his life on the line in trying to solve the murder of his girlfriend.

JAN-MICHAEL VINCENT stars as an urbane businessman of Indian descent who is menaced by supernatural forces in "Shadow of the Hawk," a suspense thriller airing Sunday, June 14 (9-11 p.m.) on ABC-TV.

Bizarre Forces Battled

Jan-Michael Vincent stars in "Shadow of the Hawk," a suspense-filled drama making its television premiere as ABC's Sunday Night Movie, June 14 (9-11 p.m.). His character is a young city dweller who flees his urban surroundings with a pretty reporter to discover the roots of his Indian heritage. But his search soon plunges him into a battle against bizarre tribal rituals that could destory him and the woman he loves.

Marilyn Hassett portrays Maureen, the attractive freelance reporter accompanying Mike (Vincent) on his journey. Chief Dan George is seen as Mike's grandfather, Old Man Hawk, an aged Indian medicine man who persuades him to forget his urban lifestyle and return with him to the reservation to be tutored in the ancient rites of his people.

A powerful evil force, seeking the occult powers of the shaman (medicine man), has brought suffering and death to the village. Soon, Mike, Maureen and Old Man Hawk are plagued by inexplicable accidents. Beasts and inanimate objects become possessed by the spirit of Dsonoqua (Marianne Jones), an evil sorceress. Only the supernatural powers of Old Man Hawk save them as Dsonoqua, who was put to death by the tribe 200 years before, seeks her revenge.

Garment Care
THINK BEFORE YOU BUY

DICKY ROOK

Buying new clothes can be exciting, but in all the excitement, don't get so absorbed in selecting the right style or in keeping to your budget that you forget about cleaning and laundering. The time to begin thinking about the care of a garment is before you purchase it. Good care practice begins with the inspection of labels and tags, and asking questions before you buy.

Apparel makers are required to attach labels to garments which supply the information required to safely dryclean or launder the items you buy. Look for this information when you are considering a purchase. The care necessary to keep something clean and attractive may be important in deciding whether or not to buy it in the first place.

A CLEANER WORLD says that garments which can be laundered and drycleaned may be labeled "washable" with no mention of drycleaning. However, most garments labeled washable can also be drycleaned.

Think about cleaning care before you buy!

Q: How do I obtain tickets for tours of various studios in Hollywood, Calif.? A READER IN FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: Your best bet is to write to the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and ask for all available information pertaining to tours of movie/television studios. Check with your local C. of C. regarding the address.

Q: Is Lisa Loring, who's a 'regular' on "As the World Turns," the same actress who played on "The Addams Family"? L.H., BELHAVEN, N.C.

A: It's the same Lisa Loring, who was only six when she was seen as 'Wednesday' on "The Addams Family." Now in her early 20s, she is doing an excellent job portraying 'Cricket' on the daytime drama.

Q: I'd like to know something about the actor who plays 'Harris' on the "Barney Miller" series. DENISE M., GOLDSBORO, N.C.

A: In the debonair department, actor Ron Glass bears a strong resemblance to his character on 'Barney.' But Ron hastens to add that he's a "bit more casual" than Harris! A graduate of the University of Evansville (Ohio), Ron guested on several other series prior to becoming one of the boys assigned to New York City's 12th Precinct. A bachelor, Ron somehow combines his interest in such sports as handball, bowling and water skiing with singing and dancing studies.

Q: My husband says that Nick Adams starred in "Wanted: Dead or Alive," but I believe Steve McQueen had the lead. Who's right? M. REDFORD, GOLDSBORO, N.C.

A: You are! McQueen starred as the rugged bounty hunter named Josh Randall in "Wanted: Dead or Alive," that aired 1958-61 on CBS. Adams toplined another 'rough-an-'ready' series of the same era, titled "The Rebel." His character was Johnny Yuma, whose adventures on the Western frontier just after the Confederate War were the basis of the series' segments.

Q: I'd like to know something about Sorrell Booke, who plays 'Boss Hogg' on "The Dukes of Hazzard." M. HARRIS, ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C.

A: Booke is a native of Buffalo, N.Y. who began his acting career via a small part on a radio program when he was only six years old. He studied drama at Columbia University and Yale and was active on Broadway for years prior to being lured to Hollywood by a part on the "Route 66" series. He's since been featured in over 150 series, ranging from "Soap" to "What's Happening."

Special To Air

"Man, Myth and Titans," a one-hour special starring Burgess Meredith, will be distributed worldwide by MGM-TV.

The program explores the affinity of films for the classic tales of mythology and was filmed at various locations in Greece and England.

Included are excerpts from the earliest science-fiction/fantasy films including "The Oracle of Delphi," directed by George Melies in 1902 and his next film, "A Trip to the Moon," as well as two of Willis O'Brien's movies — "The Lost World" and "King Kong."

Conaway Signed

Jeff Conaway has been signed to star in "Nashville Grab," a motion picture that will air on NBC-TV during the upcoming season.

Gene Kelly To Host 'Opryland'

MULTI-TALENTED host Gene Kelly is joined by guest star Debby Boone on "Opryland: Night of Stars and Futurestars," airing Tuesday, June 16 (9-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Is it harder for young performers today to get started as opposed to when such great entertainers as Gene Kelly first began to polish their craft? Kelly, who's hosting "Opryland: Night of Stars and Futurestars" (Tuesday, June 16, 9-10 p.m. on NBC-TV), thinks so.

"I have to quote George Burns on this. It's more difficult for young people today to find a place to fail," said Kelly. During the program, young performers — singers, dancers and instrumentalists, — drawn from the ranks of those appearing in Nashville at Opryland U.S.A. musical theme park, get a chance to share the spotlight with show business headliners. They will also compete amongst themselves for the title of 'Futurestar.'

"Young people today are expected to be good right away," continued Kelly. "This inculcates in them a hope for quick success, but also establishes for them the parameters of quick failure. I think it is more difficult these days.

"The reason why I'm interested in Opryland is that it's most akin to our old version of summer stock, where most of us learned our trade. In the generation ahead of me it was vaudeville. Right before I came to Broadway I worked on the Theatre Guild stage in Westport, Conn., during the summer. It was invaluable.

"The analogy here is that at Opryland the young people are singing and dancing in front of a live audience. And I think this contact is important to the performers for its feeling of entertainment, timing and the participation of the audience in the work that they do. Opryland is helping these young people get that experience."

Among the stars who will be joining Kelly on the musical special are Debby Boone, Glen Campbell, Tanya Tucker, Ben Vereen and Mickey Gilley.

Grant In Telefilm

Oscar/Tony/Emmy/Obie Award winner Lee Grant and her daughter, 1980 Tony Award winner Dinah Manoff, have key roles in "For Ladies Only," a telefilm now in production in New York City.

Grant portrays a magazine editor and Manoff appears as an aspiring singer.

Grant received an Oscar for her performance in "Shampoo"; Emmys for "The Neon Ceiling" and "Peyton Place"; a Tony for "Detective Story"; and an Obie for "The Maids." She was nominated for the Academy Award on three other occasions — for "Voyage of the Damned," "Detective Story" and "The Landlord." She received an additional Emmy nomination for her title-role portrayal in the "Fay" series.

Manoff won a Tony Award for her performance in "I Oughta Be in Pictures," a role she will recreate in the film version of the play. She also appeared in "Ordinary People."

Alexander recreates role

Jane Alexander re-creates the role of Mary MacCracken, a woman deeply committed to teaching emotionally disturbed children, in "Lovey: A Circle of Children, Part II," returning to CBS-TV, Tuesday, June 16 (8-10 p.m.).

Mary is an affluent surburban housewife who found personal fulfillment as a volunteer in a special school. When the drama begins, she is a full-time teacher at that same school, torn between her own needs and those of her students.

Mary's college-age daughter, Elizabeth (Karen Allen), realizes her mother has sublimated her needs into those of her students. Mary, herself, begins to realize that she feels safest in the classroom, and perhaps does not spend enough time in the adult world. But the children's problems are so pressing and so serious that Mary's primary interest remains with them. She must get Brian ready to enter regular school in the fall, encourage Rufus to continue his enormous progress, teach Jamie to communicate more; and she must deal with her newest addition, a severely disturbed little girls named Hannah, or, as she's nicknamed by Mary, Lovey.

Hannah is Mary's most difficult student, and her problems are a real test of Mary's abilities. But Mary's devotion to and love for the little girl produce remarkable results.

Ronny Cox stars as Cal, an understanding man who falls in love with Mary and tries to teach her that she deserves, and can have, a more balanced life.

Drew Buettow, who makes his television debut portraying Jamie, had a particular empathy for the production, because he is a victim of dyslexia — a reading impairment with no known cause or cure.

Drew modestly downplays his achievement in successfully completing the special. He claims that as complicated as it may seem, everyone helped him out and made it manageable. He also notes that his speaking part was very small, which cut down on the amount of reading he had to do. "It wasn't that hard because we were only doing three to five pages of script a day," Drew said.

Bronson Stars In 'Telefon'

A garage owner answers a phone call and then drives his truck into the side of an Army base building, causing a massive explosion. A helicopter pilot answers another phone call and proceeds to dive his 'copter into a naval communications center, but is shot down before he crashes.

Those are the opening sequences of "Telefon," returning to the small screen as The ABC Wednesday Movie, June 17 (9-11 p.m.). The film stars Charles Bronson and Lee Remick.

Bronson portrays a KGB agent dispatched to the United States to eliminate a diehard Stalinist (Donald Pleasence) intent on sabotaging detente by detonating human time bombs with a secret code.

The action begins when a demented Stalinist escapes a purge, and flees to the U.S. The higher echelon of the KGB are concerned because the man is acquainted with an elaborate plot against the U.S. that was conceived before the Soviets adopted a policy of detente.

In drug-induced hypnotic states, 50 KGB agents were trained to impersonate Americans. They were given the identities of deceased Americans and successfully infiltrated into American life, posing as average citizens. And they don't even know that they're agents themselves.

The passing of time has made the plot obsolete, and the targets are no longer a threat. But nobody thought to deactivate the agents: They can still carry out their kamikaze missions by merely hearing a couple of lines of Robert Frost's "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening."

The KGB, in a panic because they never told their premier of the plan, send their best agent to stop the crazy from making any more phone calls. That's Charles Bronson, of course.

He then connects with the KGB's agent in the U.S. — Lee Remick's character — so they can pose as husband and wife.

Meanwhile, the CIA is trying to figure out why ordinary citizens are going around destroying useless, outmoded military bases and themselves.

Welcome Back

Jana Taylor has returned to daytime television after a five-year absence in the recurring role of a social worker on "The Young and the Restless." The actress, best known for her portrayal of Angie Costello on "General Hospital" for four years, gave up acting following the birth of her son five years ago.

TV Sleuths Are Targets

An all-star cast portrays eight super-sleuths in an irreverent comedy entitled "Murder Can Hurt You!," returning as the ABC Friday Movie, June 19 (9-11 p.m.). These actors, who could well be mistaken for some TV heroes, band together in a battle of wits against a common foe, the brilliant but deadly Man in White.

The tale begins when the criminally demented Man in White messes up Lambretta — the first victim in his lethal scheme to eliminate his old adversaries one by one. The members of the 'Some of the Best Cops in the World Club' form a hilarious alliance to outwit the schemer before he gets them.

The deadly game is on, with our heroes seemingly coming in second best as they race from one cliff-hanger to the next while constantly being haunted by the maniacal laugh of the Man in White. The chase leads them through a lollipop factory, the bowels of a laundry, a weather balloon factory, then to the trashy elegance of Miss Trickwood's "private school for young ladies." Eventually they land in their own clubhouse for what appears to be their final gathering.

'Murders' To Air

Dorian Harewood and Sam Elliot will share top-billing in "Murders," a true story about a black man falsely charged with killing two policemen in Riverside, Calif.

Ranchers' Problem Will Be Examined

That fabled institution — the small American family ranch — is being threatened, and "The Changing West — Reflections on the Stillwater," probes the reasons behind this dilemma. Tom Brokaw helms the program, airing Friday, June 19 (10-11 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

"This program is about family and people," says Brokaw. "Absarokee, Montana, has a population of 750; it has rugged, snow-capped mountains and the Stillwater River is cold, flashing and clear. The Stillwater Valley consists of small ranches, grassy meadows, herefords, cowboys and quarter horses. It is America's image of the West and it has the small-town family values we still consider basic to our national character. But, like the American bald eagle, these ranch families are an endangered species."

According to Brokaw, the family operations, faced with runaway land prices, condominium development, mining exploration and expanding agriculture demands on their ranch land, are struggling with elements more threatening than the fickle forces of Montana weather. One of the valley's most successful ranchers, an aging cowboy, has joined his sons in a fight to keep the mining companies out and the population down. "Don't like a lot of people around," he says.

Most family members work very hard with the haying, calving and fence-mending, but many find they must hold outside jobs to help keep their places going. One of the problems in the valley is a lack of available work. Ninety-five percent of the valley's young people must leave because there are no jobs.

Yet, many who leave the valley return and work the family ranch with a vengeance, trying to build it into a paying operation so they can continue the cowboy life they love so much.

Producer Tom Spain and a film crew spent nearly six months in Stillwater Valley gathering material for the special.

Together Again

Annette Funicello and Frankie Avalon, who starred in several memorable 'Beach' movies years ago, are in the process of putting a nightclub act together.

Sister To Star

Candi Baugh accompanied her twin sister, Randi, to an interview for a specific role in a film titled "Thursday the 12th." But the movie's producers were so impressed with the lovelies that they changed the solo role into two so both Baughs will be featured.

Speaking Spanish

Dodger pitching sensation Fernando Valenzuela received much acclaim during the first two months of the 1981 season, but his catcher Mike Scioscia also deserves some credit.

Fernando speaks very little English so communications between he and Scioscia are for the most part, in Spanish. Fortunately, Mike picked up some of the language playing winter ball in the Dominican Republic. Mike admits, "I'm not fluent, by any means, but I can speak enough Spanish to let Fernando know what I feel we have to do."

HOLLYWOOD — The old adage, "The show must go on," certainly rang true for MARY McDONOUGH, one of the regulars on "THE WALTONS." In spite of the fact that she'd sustained a slight concussion and severe whip lash in an auto accident, Mary reported to work — bruises and all — to film her cameo role in the motion picture titled "LONELY BUT DEADLY."

BO HOPKINS has asked permission to leave "DYNASTY" so he can devote his time to films. "There's just no action for my character, Matthew Blaisdel," says Bo. "In fact, there's no action, no fighting and no oil."

GENIE FRANCIS, of "GENERAL HOSPITAL," is the latest to join the "Sexy Superstars of Soaps" in a layout in Playboy magazine. But she's assured us that she'll be covered by considerably more than soap bubbles!

LANI O'GRADY must have thought she was having a nightmare. In one week, her "EIGHT IS ENOUGH" series was cancelled, she filed for divorce, and also started filming a TV movie "THE KID WITH THE BROKEN HALO."

MARK HAMILL, of "STAR WARS" fame, just made his Broadway debut with the title role in "THE ELEPHANT MAN." He's the eighth actor to tackle the role, incidentally.

SAMMY DAVIS JR., CAROL CHANNING and TANYA TUCKER are among the most recent superstars to sign aboard for guest stints in segments of "THE LOVE BOAT."

One of the busiest actresses on the Tinseltown scene is EDIE McCLURG. In addition to her regular roles in "HARPER VALLEY PTA" and "WKRP IN CINCINNATI," she's just been signed to portray the mother of a teenager in "THURSDAY THE 12TH."

ASK THEM YOURSELF

Send the question on a postcard, to "Ask," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022
We'll pay $5 for published questions. Sorry, we can't answer others.

Collisions: when size counts most.

FOR DREW LEWIS, Secretary of Transportation

Which cars have a higher accident rate — domestic or foreign? — W.O., Bangor, Maine

● We cannot answer this question with any precision because our data base presently contains information only on fatal accidents, not all accidents. We believe, however, that foreign cars are involved in accidents at about the same rate as domestic cars of similar size. A major factor in fatal-accident statistics has been the size class of the car. The shift to small cars, combined with a traffic mix that includes larger cars and trucks, will increase the number of collisions between vehicles with large weight differences. This will increase the number of deaths and injuries for occupants of smaller, lighter cars.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

How does Jackie Onassis behave when she goes out to restaurants? Does she act as though they belong to her? — N.C., Elgin, Ill.

● We checked with some well-known New York places, and, according to the owners of Serendipity (whose patrons include Sylvester Stallone, Neil Simon, Diane Keaton, Paul Anka, Farrah Fawcett, Ryan O'Neal, Candy Bergen, Diana Ross, to name a few), the one who is most memorable is our former First Lady. They said: "No one has her grace, style or humility. She'll sit anywhere, which is more than you can say about many others. If there is only one table available that's not one of our best, she'll take it. She's extremely polite to our waiters and doesn't mind waiting. She is friendly — and a good tipper."

Former First Lady first in grace.

FOR JACKIE COOPER, former child actor; now TV director and author of Please Don't Shoot My Dog

Is it true that you and Mickey Rooney haven't seen one another since childhood? — L.H. Saginaw, Mich.

● Almost. We recently got together after 45 years — that's the movie business for you. In 1936 we were together in The Devil Is a Sissy, about juvenile delinquents. I was 13; Mickey was 15. I got $2,000 a week. Mickey's pay was around $350. He stole the picture, so the studio dropped me.

FOR FARLEY GRANGER, movie actor

So many stars of your age group are telling all. Do you approve? — K.L., Gadsden, Ala.

● I neither approve nor disapprove. I am just not interested because I'm not a nosy person. That was the way I was reared. Telling all is a very personal thing. I don't care about anyone's romances, whom he had affairs with — or wanted to. Private lives are a bore. I've more important things to think about. I'd rather hear about other people's professional lives.

FOR THE "ASK" EDITOR

How do superstars treat lesser actors on the set? Since Robin Clarke worked with Marlon Brando and George C. Scott in The Formula, perhaps he can answer my question? — T.M., Grand Island, Neb.

● Robin says: "An actor can do a movie with a star and never meet him unless they happen to be in the same scene. In The Formula I appeared in the first scenes, and Brando and Scott did not. Only time Scott and I played a scene together, I was a bullet-riddled corpse."

FOR SUSAN FLANNERY, star of Dallas

How can you call the show "trash," when it's your job and it has done a lot for you? — R.C., Great Falls, Mont.

● I was misquoted. I referred to it as "Class Trash," or "A-One entertainment," and there is a world of difference between the two. I think the series is marvelous entertainment and no way would I slight it. It's a program that came along at the right time and in the right place. It's good for western clothing, wonderful for western music and perfect with Larry Hagman.

FOR JENNIFER WARNES, recording star

What do you remember most about your lean years? — M.R., Ogden, Utah

● Your question implies I'm out of them. I'm still in them. Would you believe that I never made or saved a cent from five LPs I made. Main cause for my mismanagement is not having a father or a brother who's a lawyer. Obvious details escaped my attention. I'm a mixture of idealism, stupidity and naiveness. Mix that together with a few mistakes, and the result is a mess.

FOR IRENE KASSORLA, psychologist and author of Nice Girls Do

Is it difficult to treat patients with whom you are friendly? — M.J., Staunton, Va.

● Definitely not. When someone walks into my office, that person is a patient, not an individual with whom I had been socializing the night before. I watch every movement and listen to every word during therapeutic sessions, and my concentration is so intense, I am not conscious of the person's identity.

PRO AND CON

Should Advertising Be Sold on U.S. Postage Stamps?

PRO Representative Barry M. Goldwater Jr. (R.-Calif.)

Last year the Postal Service was $306 million in the red and that was after you subsidized the Postal Service with one and a half billion of your tax dollars! Furthermore, stamps now cost 18 cents! By allowing advertising on some stamps, we can lower stamp costs, eliminate your tax-dollar subsidies and maintain needed revenue for mail delivery. It was previously successful in the U.S., and Japan is now trying it. If the advertising is in good taste and in the public interest, why not allow this idea to reduce our stamp costs?

Question submitted by Daniel Paley, Hollywood, Fla.

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

CON Col. James T. DeVoss, executive director, American Philatelic Society

If as many as 40 corporations were allowed to advertise on stamps, as is proposed, millions of collectors would be discouraged, leading to a sharp drop in stamp sales, with a loss of millions added to the postal deficit. Then, too, rampant speculation could result as more than 20 million collectors vied for the necessarily limited printings of each issue. But worse is that if great events and individuals were replaced by advertising slogans, the reputation of U.S. stamps would sink lower than that of the issues of the sand-dune sheikdoms.

COVER STORY

Why Our Children Are Troubled

It's true that children growing up today need love and understanding, but this Pulitzer Prize-winning author offers an additional—and surprising—recommendation: We must ask of our children instead of just giving to them.

By Robert Coles

For 20 years I have been working with American children of all kinds: rural and urban; rich, poor and middle-class; black and white; Eskimos, Chicanos and Indians; children from the North and South and West. I was trained first in pediatrics, then child psychiatry, and I have tried to understand how social forces come to bear on the young — how, for instance, poverty or discrimination affects the physical and psychological growth of boys and girls.

In the early and middle 1960's, I was fairly hopeful about what I was seeing in regard to children. Black children were in trouble down South, but communities were — against great odds — initiating school desegregation with remarkable success. White children, under the same historical circumstances, were learning how to accommodate themselves to a new social and racial reality. Among the children of the poor, there was hope; among the more affluent children I knew, there was idealism, which is also a kind of hope.

By the late 1960's, however, and certainly all through the 1970's, I began to notice troublesome developments, even in the homes I had come to know and judge as solid, stable and untouched by serious problems. All of a sudden, I was hearing about marijuana and various pills and cocaine and even heroin — drug highs, drug accidents, drug addiction.

All of a sudden, too, I was noticing (as one does when one keeps up with particular families over a long span of time) that marriages were breaking up, that children were often at home alone or coming home from school many times to an empty house. Soon I was hearing the expression "day-care center." I went to look at one and found it woefully inadequate to the needs of the children who spent hours in it. True, I have since seen some first-rate day-care centers, but my observations, alas, coincide with what survey after survey has told us: Far too many children pay the price in neglect for the obligations their parents either must bear or voluntarily choose to assume.

Barred from meaningful contact with parents, a child can feel sad, lonely and unsure: "Children need loving care, discipline, a sense of purpose and a notion of right and wrong."

Does one have to be one of America's multitude of "experts" to conclude that a child turned over to an inadequate nursery school or given, at best, custodial care, is a child in potential jeopardy — prey to sadness, loneliness, a growing self-doubt? Does one have to be an "authority" on children to comprehend that a child whose parents divorce, a child left at the mercy of the street, a child dragged from one place to another by adults who are themselves suffering the consequences of aimless or confused or harassed lives, can be considered a child whose emotional future is clouded indeed?

We are a very child-conscious culture, in certain respects. We know about vitamins, we know about "shots" to prevent an array of once-dreaded diseases. We even know about the various "needs" of the young, as told to us by Dr. Spock, and the many doctors and psychologists concerned with children. And so, we try to help our young ones get through various impasses and hurdles — their feeding and toilet-training problems, their outbursts and tantrums.

Once children enter school, we are, supposedly, attentive to their learning difficulties (if not the parents, then, one hopes, the teachers). Always the emphasis is on "understanding," on trying to do the very best for the child — know him or her, help him or her. Even when, as is increasingly the case, we fall short of the ideal (spending less time with our sons and daughters because of separation or divorce or because of the necessities of work) we tend, nevertheless, to have in mind what our children should be getting: lots of "support"; lots of affection and, again, all the understanding we can muster.

Yes, unquestionably, children need every bit of attentive, loving care we can give them. But they also need discipline, a sense of purpose and a notion of what is right and what is wrong. After all, in other times there were extremely poor or hard-pressed families whose children managed to do quite well — even without pediatricians and child psychiatrists, even without manuals on child-rearing and even with severe adversity and sometimes constant danger as facts of daily life. Such children had struggling parents; such children had to struggle themselves. They were part of a frontier family or a family in turn-of-the-century urban, immigrant America.

Why is it that we, who are so much better off than those families of yesterday, must struggle in quite different and dismaying ways — with a rising incidence of drug abuse and alcoholism among our children, with a shocking incidence of teen-age pregnancies, with rampant delinquency and the prevalent phenomenon of the runaway child? Why do so many children who are lucky, incredibly lucky by the standards of the past — and the standards of the present in much of the world — end up being perplexed, unsure of themselves, and yet we have all these troubles and here we are, just kids, and you see pain on the faces of your friends, and you have to pinch yourself, and say yes, it's you and it's people you know that it's happening to!"

An unfortunately familiar series of observations, in my experience. An American child of fairly secure social and economic background was all too 'that's boring,' or they say, 'what a big bore!'

"What you see is this," she continued. "The parents are split, or the parents might as well be split because they're working all the time to pay the bills, to keep up with the inflation, and the kids are left to do as they please, and if they say 'ouch,' or complain, the parents buy them something to trying to understand our "needs" and the "needs" of our children. But we have not spent enough time considering what really matters to us in this life, what is utterly right and needs to be done, what is utterly wrong and requires our refusal, our resistance.

Put differently, we are eager to "express" ourselves, gain possessions for ourselves — but we don't quite know how to live: What is the purpose of life, what is the meaning? And similarly, we offer our children opportunities, read books about their development, try to figure out what is going on in their heads, give them one thing after another, but we are less willing, it seems, to ask of them.

Ask what of our children? Ask of them that they learn how to live a good and decent life! Ask of them self-control, self-discipline — in the service of certain ideals!

PEOPLE QUIZ

Men or Women: Who Are Friendlier With Ex-Mates?

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Some men don't want their wives to look good.
2. Husbands who lack self-confidence are the most likely to take a dim view of their spouses' efforts to improve their appearance.
3. Husbands who are extroverts are less likely to divorce their mates than introverts are.
4. Husbands and wives differ regarding the relationship they prefer to maintain with a previous spouse.

ANSWERS

1. True. University of Michigan studies show that many men discourage their wives' attempts to improve their appearance. It was found, for example, that "some husbands actually encourage their wives to be overweight as a means of holding power over them. They can always have the final say in an argument by referring to the wife's excessive weight and calling her 'a fat slob'...."
2. True. The University of Michigan investigators conclude that the insecure husband may worry that if his wife loses weight, or otherwise makes herself more attractive, she will be unfaithful. A typical case of this kind is cited, in which the wife lost 100 excess pounds and looked sensational. Nearing her goal, she continued to keep regular appointments with a weight-loss clinic. When her repeated absence came to her husband's attention, he concluded that she was having an affair and confronted her with his suspicions. It nearly destroyed the marriage.
3. False. Studies directed by University of London psychologist H.J. Eysenck, showed that personality factors — notably a husband's extroversion — play a definite part in driving a couple to divorce. The studies showed that extroverted men tend to have more romantic relationships than introverts do.
4. True. Western Kentucky University studies of divorced and remarried couples revealed an intriguing sex difference: Men tended to be on much better terms with a previous wife, while women much preferred to maintain a greater social distance from a previous husband. FW

Good Cook's Resource

The Cookbook Hall of Fame

By Marilyn Hansen

The Cookbook Hall of Fame was founded in 1976 as an outgrowth of the annual Tastemaker Awards for Cookbook Excellence, sponsored by the R.T. French Co. The Tastemaker Awards Committee, a group of writers, editors, cookbook authors and publishing-company executives, selects the books, based upon their historical contribution to the development of American cuisine. The sponsor provides an annual grant of $500 to a student chosen by the College of Human Development at Syracuse University to research the history of the selected book and to design and produce an exhibit concerning it.

This year's cooking classic is Craig Claiborne's The New York Times Cookbook (Harper & Row). It joins a distinguished group of time-honored cookbooks: The Settlement Cook Book (installed, 1977); Joy of Cooking (installed, 1978); The Fannie Farmer Cookbook (installed, 1979), and The Cordon Bleu Cook Book (installed, 1980).

One of the recipes in Craig's book, Royal Egg Yolk Velvet, comes from the days when he was studying at the Hotel School in Lausanne, Switzerland.

ROYAL EGG YOLK VELVET

2 cups sugar
½ cup water
8 egg yolks
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup rum or cognac
6 cups heavy cream, whipped

1. In a saucepan, combine the sugar and water. Bring to a boil and cook until the syrup registers 236°F. on a candy thermometer. If a candy thermometer is not used, cook to the soft-ball stage. To make this test, spoon a few drops of syrup into cold water. If a soft ball forms, it is ready to be used.
2. Beat the egg yolks with the salt until they are very thick. Add the syrup in a fine stream while beating and continue beating until the mixture forms peaks when the beater is withdrawn. Chill the mixture.
3. Add the rum or cognac and fold in the whipped cream.
4. Turn the mixture into several small molds or paper cups and freeze.

Makes about 4 quarts

The Settlement Cookbook (Simon & Schuster), written at the turn of the century and published for the first time in 1901, was the first book installed in the Hall of Fame. We might say that it is the cookbook that helped make Milwaukee famous, as the author, Mrs. Simon (Lizzy) Kander compiled the book as a result of teaching American-style cooking to immigrants at the settlement house in Milwaukee. The little book was a success from the beginning, and new editions were prepared in 1903 and in 1976.

The Settlement Cookbook is one of those basic cookbooks that have been used by generations of American cooks. Here is a recipe from the book.

LINZER TORTE

1 cup butter
1 cup sugar
3 eggs, separated
1 lemon, grated rind and juice
1 tablespoon brandy
½ lb. almonds, chopped fine
2 cups flour, sifted 3 times
1 teaspoon baking powder
12-oz. jar of jam or preserves

1. Preheat oven to 350°F., a moderate oven.
2. Cream butter and sugar well. Add yolks, flavoring and almonds. Add flour mixed with baking powder and fold in the stiffly beaten whites. Roll out or pat ⅔ of the dough in a greased and floured 9-inch spring form, having the dough a little thicker on the bottom than the sides. Fill with jam.
3. Roll remaining dough, cut in strips, and place crisscross on top. Bake for 40 minutes. Before serving, fill hollows on top with jam.

Makes one 9-inch cake

In 1980 The Cordon Bleu Cook Book was installed in the Cookbook Hall of Fame. It is as French as Fannie Farmer was American.

Dione Lucas pioneered televised cooking lessons in the 1940's, and wrote The Cordon Bleu Cook Book in 1947. The book is regarded as the first American cookbook that portrayed cooking as an art form and led to the development of gourmet cooking in the United States on a broad scale.

Here are several recipes from the book.

FISH BUTTERS

GREEN BUTTER

Handful spinach
Handful sorrel
Handful beet tops
Little chopped dill
3 tablespoons creamed butter
Salt and pepper

Blanch the vegetables; drain well and rub through a strainer. Mix this and the dill into the butter and add the seasoning. Chill in the refrigerator. Makes about ¼ cup

MAITRE D'HOTEL BUTTER
(for sole, mackerel or salmon)

4 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
1 dessert spoon lemon juice
Salt and pepper

Beat the butter to a cream with a wooden spatula and work in the parsley and lemon juice by degrees. Add seasoning. Leave to harden before serving.

Makes ¼ cup

In 1979 The Fannie Farmer Cookbook was the third cookbook installed in the Cookbook Hall of Fame. The book was published originally in 1896 under the title of The Boston Cooking School Cookbook, and the author was Fannie Merritt Farmer.

Through its 85 years in print, The Fannie Farmer Cookbook has sold more than 3 million copies in 12 different editions. The unique contribution of Miss Farmer's first book was her use of precise measurements, making it possible to duplicate recipes exactly, time after time.

In 1979 the book was completely revised by Marion Cunningham, who updated some recipes, added a few new ones and left some completely as they were in the original. Here is one recipe from the book.

HEALTH SANDWICH

¼ cup fresh bean sprouts
¼ cup grated Cheddar cheese
3 tablespoons grated carrot
2 tablespoons raisins
2 tablespoons chopped walnuts
1 slice good whole-grain bread
2 teaspoons honey
2 teaspoons lemon juice
4 tablespoons yogurt
2 tablespoons alfalfa sprouts

1. Toss the lettuce, bean sprouts, cheese, carrot, raisins and walnuts together and place on the bread.

2. Combine the honey, lemon juice and yogurt and blend until smooth. Spoon the dressing over the vegetables and sprinkle alfalfa sprouts on top. Makes one sandwich

Joy of Cooking, the second cookbook installed in the Cookbook Hall of Fame in 1978, celebrates its 50th birthday during 1981. The Bobbs-Merrill Company has published the book since 1936. The classic volume has sold more than 8.5 million copies in its 50 years.

The book was written by Irma S. Rombauer, and the recipes were tested by her daughter, Marion Rombauer Becker.

Joy of Cooking is considered the best reference work in the English language for the American cook and has been used consistently around the world.

BRAISED CHICKEN WITH FRUIT

Frying chickens, 2 (3-lb. size)
Butter, ½ cup

Sauce:

1 cup orange juice
¼ cup honey
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon ground curry powder
1 teaspoon salt

1. Preheat oven to 350°F. Clean and quarter chickens.

2. Heat butter in skillet; add chicken pieces and saute until brown.

3. Stir together all sauce ingredients. Dip browned chicken into sauce.

4. Arrange the chicken in a baking dish, skin side down; cover with the sauce and bake, uncovered, 20 minutes. Turn the chicken over and add one of the following or in combination: whole preserved kumquats, peaches, pears or plumped prunes, apricots or raisins, strips of orange rind.

5. Baste the fruit with the sauce; bake 30 minutes longer or until chicken is tender.

Allow ¾-pound of chicken per person

BODY GUIDE

O.K. Smarty. Where's Your Frenum Lingae?

By Brie Quinby

Chances are, you look at yourself in the mirror at least once a day, and you would probably say that you know your body pretty well. But while you could possibly describe everything down to the tiniest detail, do you know the specific names for some of the physical characteristics you take so much for granted? Here's a guide to body parts you may not know the name for.

1. The small groove of skin running between the nose and the upper lip: philtrum. The word is derived from the same Greek root as the word philter (love potion) meaning to charm or fascinate.

2. The membrane that connects the tongue with the floor of the mouth: frenum lingae. Frenum comes from the Latin word rein; it refers to any membrane which checks or limits the movement of an organ.

3. The tiny, punching bag-shaped piece of skin that dangles from the roof of the mouth: uvula (from the Latin word, grape). According to Dr. Harry Goldsmith, a general surgeon at Mary Hitchcock Medical Center in Hanover, N.H., "when the uvula vibrates, it's what makes people snore."

4. The correct anatomical name for the outline of the lips: cupid's bow.

5. The red part of the lips: vermillion.

6. The rounded tip of your nose: the lobe.

7. Another name for your nostrils: nares (pronounced nareez).

8. The white part of the eye: sclera. Sclera comes from the Greek word for hard, and this firm, unyielding fibrous membrane helps maintain the eye's global shape.

9. The hard ridge that lies along the outer rim of the ear, and which is sometimes missing on people with prominent ears: antihelix. Dr. John Grossman, a plastic surgeon who practices in Denver, says that "plastic surgeons can now create them for people who were born without them."

10. The part of the breastbone in the center of the chest, just below the collarbones, where it can be felt prominently (on some people this bone sticks out quite far): angle of Louis.

11. The correct anatomical name for your funnybone (the nerve resting on the elbow): the ulnar. As you know, it's not so funny when you accidentally hit it.

12. The webs of skin that connect the fingers and toes: interdigital web spaces.

13. The white part of the nail: the luna (from the Latin meaning moon).

14. The diamond-shaped depression in back of the knee: popliteal.

15. The sole of the foot: the plantar. FW

The United Nations presents an original work of art in the great tradition of fine porcelain

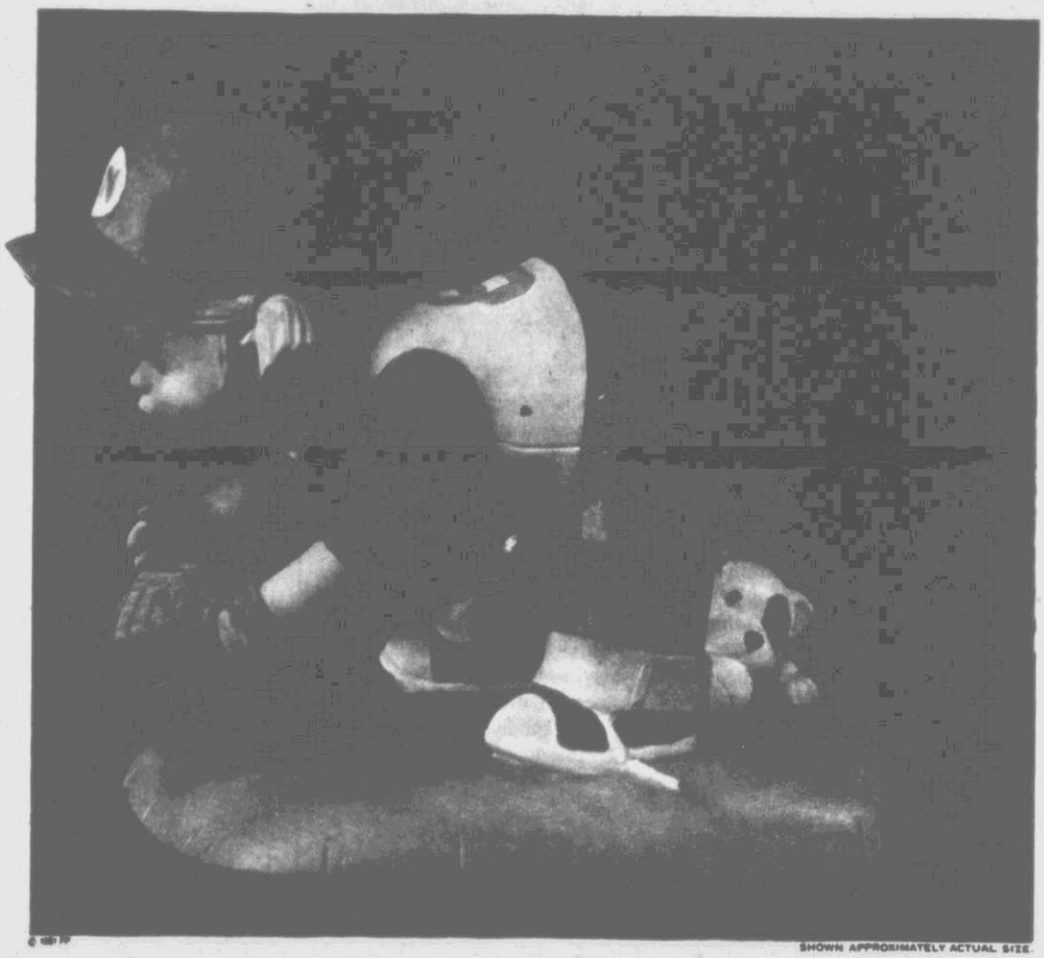
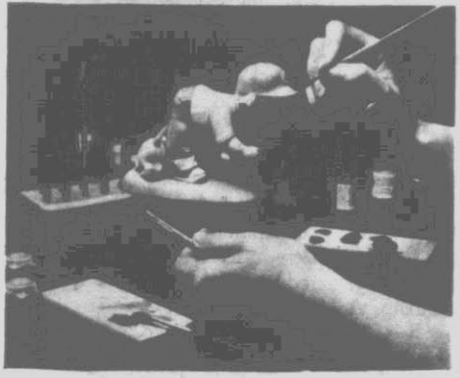
Little Miss Shortstop

An official United Nations
porcelain children's figurine.
A strictly limited edition—
at the unusually attractive price of $50.



SHOWN APPROXIMATELY ACTUAL SIZE.



Figures of children are among the most widely collected of porcelain sculptures. For they have about them a wit and sensitivity which allow them to fit perfectly into any setting . . . any room.

And now you have the opportunity to acquire one of the most captivating figures of children ever crafted in fine porcelain. A hand-painted sculpture distinguished not only by its charm and beauty, but also by its status as an official issue of the United Nations.

This sculpture is called Little Miss Shortstop. Like the most cherished works of its kind, it captures forever a wonderful moment in time. And, despite the fact that Hummel figures and other porcelain children's figurines of comparable size and quality are selling today for more than $100 each, you may acquire this charming figurine of an all-American girl and her dog for just $50.

The sculpture has been designed exclusively for The U.N. Children collection by the gifted British artist Carol Lawson, whose work in porcelain is known around the world for its gentle touches of humor and insight. Examples of the figure will be created for the United Nations, under the supervision of Franklin Porcelain, in Japan, Mexico, Korea, the United Kingdom and other of the world's leading porcelain craft countries. Each figurine will be marked with its country of origin and, testifying to its status as an official United Nations issue, each will bear the letters "UN" worked right into its design, plus a special backstamp that will permanently identify it as one of The U.N. Children.

In the tradition of fine porcelain, moreover, Little Miss Shortstop is to be issued in a single, strictly limited edition. It will be available only until the end of the calendar year 1981, with a further limit of just one figurine per order. After all valid orders have been filled, the molds and master model will be destroyed, and this marvelous porcelain sculpture will never be issued again.

In keeping with its status as an official limited issue of the United Nations, the figure will be accompanied by a special Certificate of Authenticity. In addition, each registered owner will receive private notification of the other new U.N. Children figures for 1981—but will be under no obligation to buy.

Little Miss Shortstop is an original work of great charm and whimsy. It will provide an engaging focal point for any room in your home . . . a conversation piece to be admired by friends and family alike—and a treasured heirloom for future generations.

But remember: this work is being made available during this one year only. And, since each figure will be individually handcrafted and hand-painted, it will take considerable time to complete. So to be sure of receiving your figurine as soon as possible, it is important that you return the Order Form below no later than June 30, 1981.

Observations

Fitting feats. Who were the greatest male and female athletes of the first half of the 20th century? Sportswriters named Jim Thorpe, from an obscure Pennsylvania Indian school, and Mildred "Babe" Didrikson Zaharias, daughter of an immigrant carpenter. She starred in baseball, basketball, bowling, tennis, golf; he in football and baseball—but both rose to the Olympic gold in track and field. It's a sport with limitless opportunity for anyone, from Jesse Owens, an Alabama sharecropper's son, to today's kids running to victory from mean city streets. That's why Mobil is so proud to sponsor and promote the U.S. Track and Field Team.

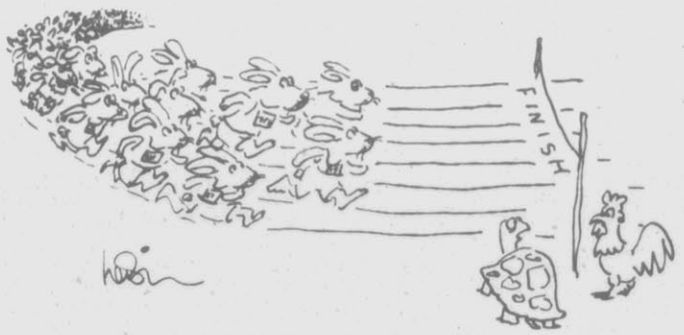
Trouble's afoot. There's inspiration in track and field for young and not-so-young alike: Bob Mathias winning the 1948 decathlon when he was only 17. (How would he celebrate? "Start shaving, I guess.") Or gold-medalist Al Oerter training last year to throw the discus in his fifth Olympics...at age 43. But America's athletes missed the adrenaline boost of the Moscow Games—and the resulting surge in public interest. They need encouragement, financial support, and inspiration—just as Jesse Owens' homecoming parade in 1936 inspired Harrison "Bones" Dillard to his own Olympic gold-medal track career.



"Weren't there just two at the start?"

Ready, get set... "Going all out to build up the nation's amateur athletics is important," Dillard says, and we agree. That's why we asked him to be Mobil's track and field advisor. And why we're putting $2 million over four years into track and field for competitors' travel expenses and for prize money to their home clubs so more athletes can be trained. Our sponsorship allowed The Athletics Congress to launch something unprecedented: an official Grand Prix competition. At five outdoor meets around the country, top athletes have been piling up points in 10 events. Along with those 10 categories, an additional five events at the upcoming USA/Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships June 19-21 complete the Grand Prix.

Running start. We'll be honored to display the winners' names on the Mobil Cup, which we hope will runneth over with growing support all around the country. That's the American way—not government subsidies for athletes as in so many other nations, but free-enterprise support from you...and from the other companies we hope will be inspired by the USA/Mobil Championships. America's pursuit of competitive excellence is not just for world-class athletes (which the U.S. has aplenty in track and field). It's also for feisty competition "in the economic arena as well as the athletic arena," as "Bones" Dillard puts it. Tomorrow's leaders—doctors, lawyers, industry chiefs; movie stars, politicians, and pro sports greats—are today's outstanding amateur athletes. Good sports...good business. Go!

It's a fact: You'll find the best of the USA/Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Championships on ABC-TV's "Wide World of Sports." Check local listings, and watch for it.

HEALTH

New Help for Menstrual Pain

By Paula Dranov

Most women suffer only minor discomfort with the approach and onset of their monthly menstrual periods, but for a significant number — perhaps as many as 20 percent of all women — menstruation can mean severe pain.

And menstrual cramps are only part of the problem. Many women experience distressing premenstrual symptoms, ranging from abdominal bloating, weight gain and sore breasts to irritability, depression, fatigue, headaches and backaches.

Though women have detailed these problems for years, their complaints have evoked little medical concern. About the only hope doctors could offer women virtually incapacitated by menstrual cramps was that they would probably abate "after you've had a baby." The prevailing medical attitude toward premenstrual syndrome (PMS) was that "it's all in your head."

Fortunately for millions of women, these notions are fast giving way to recognition that both cramps, known medically as dysmenorrhea, and PMS are real physical problems and that there are new and better ways to treat them.

Gynecologists are now taking dysmenorrhea very seriously, and a medical symposium was held recently on the subject. While psychological factors weren't discounted entirely, severe menstrual cramps were attributed in most cases to overproduction of the hormone prostaglandin, which triggers the contractions that produce the pain.

In her book From Woman to Woman (Alfred A. Knopf), gynecologist Lucienne Lanson explains that there are two kinds of dysmenorrhea — primary dysmenorrhea, which usually afflicts teen-agers and young women in their 20's, and secondary dysmenorrhea, more common among older women and usually traceable to a specific pelvic problem. In the latter case, once the underlying problem is corrected, the cramps subside.

To determine that a young woman troubled by severe cramps actually is suffering from primary rather than secondary dysmenorrhea, a thorough gynecological examination must be completed. The first step in treatment may be aspirin or one of the non-prescription drugs for cramps taken at the first twinge of pain. A heating pad applied to the lower abdomen or a long, warm bath can also be soothing. A prescribed exercise routine helps sometimes. And, for adult females, many doctors recommend an alcoholic drink, which may help by dilating the pelvic blood vessels, thus easing the pain.

Should all this fail, the next step may be a prescription painkiller, something stronger than over-the-counter remedies. The most recent treatment for severe cases of dysmenorrhea involves drugs such as Motrin, Anaprox and Ponstel, which inhibit the body's production of prostaglandin. Doctors aren't sure whether they directly suppress the painful contractions or whether the contractions abate in response to the lowered prostaglandin production. In either case, the treatment is considered effective 65 to 100 percent of the time.

Cramps and premenstrual symptoms are very real physical problems and today there are new and better ways to treat them.

Treatment for PMS isn't quite so clear cut, however. In a recent medical update on the subject, Drs. Robert L. Reid and Samuel S.C. Yen of the University of California in San Diego estimated that between 70 and 90 percent of all women experience recurrent premenstrual symptoms and that 20 to 40 percent report "some degree of temporary mental or physical incapacitation."

Just what happens in the body to produce the physical and emotional changes that characterize PMS isn't clear. Drs. Reid and Yen have suggested that periodic hormonal changes in the brain may be responsible while others have blamed an imbalance of female hormones, specifically estrogen and progesterone.

There is considerable medical controversy about how to treat this syndrome. Dr. Michelle Warren of New York City's Roosevelt Hospital usually prescribes "TLC" (tender, loving care) and only occasionally drugs. "A majority of cases clear up on their own," she reports.

Doctors do agree that the problem can be reduced in many women by restricting salt intake for a week to 10 days before menstruation. This lessens water retention believed responsible for the bloating, swelling and constipation. Diuretics and tranquilizers also may be prescribed if a reduction in salt intake doesn't help. FW

Slugger George Brett: Splendor on Astroturf

An early-season slump notwithstanding, Brett is clearly the best hitter in baseball. On the field and off, his approach is the same: stay loose and "have as much fun as you can."

Wide World

The sweet science: Invoking memories of Ted Williams in all his glory.

Wide World

With older brother Ken (left): From beach bum to Midwestern millionaire.

By Mark Goodman

George Brett of the Kansas City Royals is everything you could ask for in an American League batting champion and Most Valuable Player. He's handsome, congenial, humorous and generally accessible.

But note the qualifier, "generally," because events in the past year have conspired to force even the easygoing Brett to draw the line. Here it is: "Don't ask me how I feel, don't ask me about my operation and don't ask me where the Royals are going to finish this year, and I'll talk. What bothers me most is having to deal with the same questions all the time."

"See," Brett continues, "I'm thinking about having a good year because what else would someone with confidence in himself think about? If I hit .400, fine, but it's not going to be an obsession with me. I think you should try to have as much fun as you can in everything you do, and that's my approach to baseball."

Indeed, baseball is fun for George Brett, especially since he's so wondrously good at it. At 28 he has supplanted Pete Rose and Rod Carew as the best pure hitter in the game. Going into this season, the Kansas City third baseman already has two American League batting championships to his credit, and his prowess at the plate is acknowledged throughout the league.

Says Detroit Tiger pitcher Milt Wilcox: "He hits anything. He's the hardest man to pitch to in the league." Adds Oakland's Rick Langford: "Everybody knows Brett is a great hitter, but there's more — it's that intangible something that makes one hitter stand out above the others. Brett has it."

He has enough of it that, in 1980, he became the first ballplayer since Carew to make a serious run at batting .400, a feat that is arguably more difficult than hitting 60 home runs. In fact, the last man to accomplish it was Ted Williams (.406) back in 1941. That Brett even came close (.390) was quite a testimony to his skills — particularly because he was plagued throughout the year with so many injuries that there was a question of whether he would come to the plate often enough to qualify for the batting title. As if that weren't enough burden (along with, of course, the pennant race, which Kansas City won) there was the press, dogging his spikes and charting every pitch, every swing of the bat.

George, friendly fellow though he is, found it all exasperating, especially on those dog days down the stretch when he would have a bad day. "Don't you guys understand," he finally told a cluster of reporters one day, "that when I go 0-for-4, I really don't feel like talking about it?"

The price of genius is ever-rising expectations, and there were people who seemed to feel that Brett had somehow failed because he didn't collect a full four hits in every 10 times at bat in 1980. But the harshest spotlight was reserved for postseason play. After leading the Royals to a playoff victory over the New York Yankees, Brett developed a serious hemorrhoid condition. He managed to play on, after minor surgery, through the team's disastrous World Series showing against the Phillies. And so the jokes about his plight had to be borne on top of defeat.

Brett took it all in stride, however (with a few jokes himself — "I think all my problems are behind me"), and none of his problems diminished his glory a whit. "I'm not uncomfortable being a celebrity," he admits, and he has enjoyed his status to the hilt.

No Kansas City parade, for instance, is complete without Brett in his favorite Western garb, waving to the crowd and smiling his toothy grin. On television he hawks soap and chewing tobacco. He drives a Mercedes and a Bronco as befits a heartland celebrity with a million-dollar-a-year contract. He throws handsome barbecues at his four-bedroom bachelor's home on Lake Quivera, west of Kansas City.

Bachelor Brett's surfer looks and good ol' boy charm keep him swinging. Here he collects a double.

UPI

The point of it all, Brett maintains, is to have a corking good time. It must be said that George Brett grew up in the capital of fun — Hermosa Beach, Calif., where time is usually consecrated to pursuing the endless summer. Not in the Brett household, however. George's father, an accountant, sent his four sons into professional baseball. (John, 34, and Bobby, 30, played in the minor leagues before turning to business; Ken, 32, is now a relief pitcher with Kansas City.)

A self-confessed beach bum, George nonetheless signed with Kansas City in 1971 as a shortstop and spent three years in the minor leagues. When he moved up to the majors in August of 1973, Brett concedes, "I never thought I'd be anything but a utility player and a bullpen catcher."

But in 1974 he was taken in hand by Charlie Lau, probably the finest batting coach in the history of the game. Lau taught Brett how to negotiate a tension-free swing, how to hit through the ball. Within a year Brett — who'd hit only .200 his first year — was hitting .308, and within two years he had hit .333 and won his first batting crown.

Now Brett walks that finest of lines — trying to enjoy the madding crowd without it trampling him. Says brother Ken: "George has to have his privacy and time by himself to unwind or he'd go crazy." George is puckish enough to parry the most ridiculous questions and driven hard enough to bang the trash can around the Royals' dugout (and even hide in it) when one of his best drives is run down and caught by a rival outfielder.

But really, it's all just part of the fun. As teammate Jamie Quirk explains it, "The thing about George is, he really loves to play baseball." FW

BEHAVIOR

Street Savvy: How Not to Be a Crime Victim

By Susan Gordon

According to a recent Harris survey, 68 percent of Americans feel that crime is on the increase in their communities. Yet when it comes to street crimes such as mugging, purse-snatching and pickpocketing, many people actually contribute to their own victimization, according to Detective James Wegman, spokesman for the Crime Prevention Section of the New York City Police Department.

Detective Wegman insists that as individuals we can all assume a more active part in increasing our own safety — and teach our children to do the same. Here are some precautions to take.

Heightening Your Awareness

- Be aware of your surroundings at all times (you don't have to be paranoid, just alert). Notice who enters your "personal space" — the distance you like to keep between yourself and strangers. Is a stranger close as a natural result of walking in a crowd or being jostled on a bus, or is he moving right up against you? Let him know you've noticed him with an unmistakable glance. If you suspect someone of pickpocketing, alert police or an official presence such as a bus driver.
- Don't let embarrassment prevent you from avoiding a situation that makes you instinctively uncomfortable. For example, if you hear footsteps behind you, turn around to see who's coming. Detective Wegman notes, "If there was a mean dog on the street, you'd go around the block to avoid him; do the same if you sense trouble in the form of an elevator with just one person inside, a poorly lit sidewalk or a cluster of rowdy teen-agers. Many crimes have occurred because the victim had been reluctant to offend the individual who turned out to be a criminal."
- Don't attract attention on the street by wearing valuable jewelry, points out Lt. Joseph Brann of the Santa Ana, Calif., police. And never flash your money.
- "Carry a pocketbook close to the body, a wallet in a front pants pocket," advises Sgt. Fred Whitley of the Crime Prevention Unit of the San Antonio, Texas, Police Department.
- Learn "positive walking," an especially valuable technique for tourists, who are an easy mark for pickpockets and purse snatchers. Walk assertively, with a sense of purpose, in a natural, comfortable gait. Police have long been aware that muggers choose as victims individuals who appear weak or out of their element: tourists, the elderly, window shoppers, stragglers. A study reported recently in the Journal of Communications goes further. It concluded that people who walk with an unnatural, arhythmic gait (interpreted as a sign of abnormality or nervousness) are more likely to be chosen as victims.

Detective Wegman advises taking a "bowling alley approach" to the sidewalk: "Walk in the middle, avoiding parked cars on one side, doorways and alleys on the other. Look around you and take in your surroundings as you walk."

- Always lock your car, even if you're only stopping for a quart of milk, advises Investigator Paul Healy with the Colonie, N.Y., Police Department, an authority on suburban crime prevention. Never leave packages on the seat, even in a locked car.
- Have your keys ready in hand when you reach your front door. If you suspect that someone has been inside, don't go in; call the police from a neighbor's home.

If you're on foot and think you're being followed, run into the nearest store or public place and call the police.

Trudi Smith

Positive Walking: Walk assertively in a natural, comfortable gait. Hold handbag close to your body.

If You Are Confronted

- Give up your valuables, urges Detective Wegman. "Your valuables are all replaceable and don't amount to a hill of beans in comparison with your life."
- Do what you can to minimize the violence inherent in any confrontation, and by no means introduce violence yourself. Try to remain calm and let the mugger do the talking — this way you help "disarm" him by removing the element of fear. Also, if you stay calm, you can concentrate on getting a physical description of the mugger for the police.

If the mugger has no weapon and you are within earshot of other people, some authorities advise that you scream as loud and long as you can. A strong scream can be a formidable tool you can use to frighten an assailant.

- If you are knocked down, stay down. Forget about your pride.
- If you witness a confrontation, don't get physically involved; you'll end up just exchanging one victim for another — yourself. Get involved intelligently, advises Detective Wegman. Go to the nearest telephone and call the police. If you're a safe distance from the situation — say you see it from your window — shout to distract the assailant and to let him know he's been observed. Then call the police. FW

Are you [illegible] of the [illegible] out of who have not prepared a will?

When you die you must leave behind everything for which you have worked and saved. The question is, "TO WHOM?" If you have a will, you have already instructed the State, attorneys and judges to act according to YOUR wishes.

but if you don't have a will the State will simply distribute your estate according to law.

Without a Will you let the State determine the disposition of your assets, the welfare of your spouse and the guardianship of your children. Probate costs, taxes and fees increase. What's worse, you rob yourself of the privilege of continuing stewardship through designated gifts.

DON'T MAKE THE MISTAKE OF THINKING:

- only wealthy people need a will
- that drawing a will is too complicated
- or that it is too expensive

Take the first step toward doing something about that which you own . . . for your peace of mind and benefit of those you hold dear.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

BANNER SYMBOL

If any work of art is symbolic of Sunday's Flag Day celebration, it's this painting, which, after being done for the 1876 Centennial, "disappeared" for 95 years.

Entitled "One Hundred Years Ago," it is the work of William H. Willcox, a 19th-century artist of the Hudson River school of painters. The original 30 × 23-inch canvas shows nine Revolutionary War scenes, including the Battle of Bunker Hill and the surrender at Yorktown. The painting's whereabouts after 1876 are unknown. In the early 1970's it was found at a Vermont antique shop by Kenneth Newman of New York City's Old Print Shop. He then sold it to Berry-Hill Galleries, where it remained until 1980, when it was transferred to its permanent home, Pittsburgh's National Flag Foundation.

National Flag Foundation

"We wish we knew where the painting was all those years," says Flag Foundation president George Cahill. "We know Willcox was born in 1831 in Williamsburgh, Long Island, and we can trace him to Philadelphia, New England and Pennsylvania. But after the Centennial, we lose track of him."

By the way, Willcox slipped a little trick into the painting. Hold this copy at arm's length and gradually squint one eye until it's almost closed. A famous American's face will appear. Honest.

TREAD ON ME

Looking for a way to save money on your car? When it's time for new tires, check into retreads. They could be as much as two-thirds cheaper, reports the Automotive Information Council. It's the tire's casing — not the tread itself — that makes up from 50 to 70 percent of the tire's total cost. On retreads, only carefully inspected casings are used, and the modern retreading process firmly attaches and blends the new tread with the body of the tire. Airlines and truck companies have been using retreads for years (one-third of all truck tires sold are retreads) as have police departments and even race-car drivers. It is expected that more than 26 million passenger retreads — or about one-fourth the replacement total — will be sold in 1981.

A FINE LINE

After spending hours interviewing him for a recent magazine article, here's the impression journalist Dave Hirshey got of comedian Andy (Taxi) Kaufman: "He's the strangest and most dangerous entertainer of our times. He's the sort of person whose idea of a good bit might be to pull out a gun and pretend to shoot himself on live television. He's always fudging the line between reality and comedy. He's like a cross between a nuclear scientist and a street wacko — he's demented, yet brilliant."

ABC

SWITCHEROO

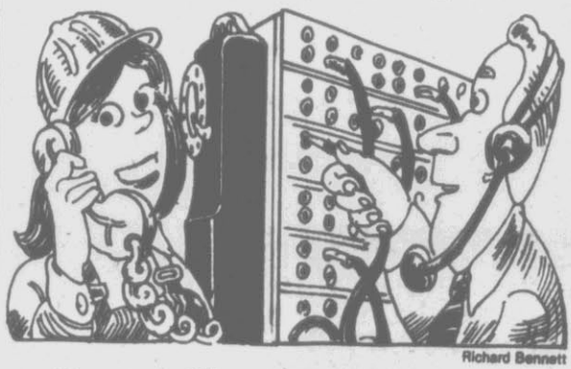
It seems that turnabout is fair play. Both men and women are now taking on jobs previously thought to be the exclusive domain of one sex or the other. From 1972 to 1979, the number of male schoolteachers increased 15 percent; librarians, 38 percent; telephone operators, 108 percent; secretaries, 56 percent; nurses, 105 percent; all according to The Urban Institute, a research organization in Washington, D.C.

The number of female foremen (forewomen?) rose 81 percent; female janitors, 82 percent; carpenters, 220 percent; women in painting, construction and maintenance, 200 percent, and machinists 650 percent.

But these figures can be misleading. For example, of roughly 1.22 million registered nurses in the U.S. only 3 percent are men, while women make up 1 percent of the nation's 1.26 million total carpenters.

BUCKLE IN; DRINK UP

If you're planning to travel by air anywhere, here's a quick tip from Evelyn Echols, president of International Travel Training Courses, Inc., a chain of schools for travel agents: "Most people don't realize that because of the [aircraft] cabin pressurization, there is a strong tendency for dehydration. So make certain that while you're in flight, you remember to drink a glass of water for each hour you're off the ground."



Richard Bennett

RUNNING INTO TROUBLE

Women who regularly run long distances may have difficulty achieving pregnancy, according to new research at Emory University School of Medicine. A study there of 168 women between the ages of 18 and 48 who regularly run more than 30 miles a week shows that the women often suffer menstrual dysfunction, with some reporting as few as nine periods a year.

The study's author, Edwin Dale, an associate professor of gynecology/obstetrics, theorizes that running can disrupt the menstrual cycle in several ways: by reducing body weight; by reducing the percentage of total body fat; by imposing stress on the body, and by reducing the level of certain hormones.

Tracy Garner

Dale advises women who wish to get pregnant to cut their running down to perhaps 10 to 15 miles per week. He also adds a word of caution to everyone: "Running is not an effective method of birth control."

● FORTUNE COOKIE! A graduate venturing into his own business might pay some heed to this old Chinese saying: "Amanw ithou tasmi lingt acemu stnot opena shop." Rearrange spacing for sense.

A man without a smiling face must not open a shop.

● True or False: If I can see the eyes of another person in a mirror, that person can also see my eyes. What do you say? Give it a try.

● SUM CODE! Challenge: Crack this code and compute the answer. ZCC DHFG$ $N $VDMSX ZMC LTK$HOKX AX $GQDD. P.S.: It involves simple arithmetic.

Answer is 84 (Change each letter to next one in alphabet)

● Riddle Me This! Which country is in a hurry? Urgentina. Which animal stomps on grapes? The wine-ocerus. What's it like to have a gravelly voice? It's the pits.

CASH FLOW PROBLEM!

Cosmos and Larkspur have the same amount of money. Cosmos has more than Zinnia, and Zinnia has more than Petunia. Aster, who has less than Cosmos, but more than Petunia, does not have as much as Zinnia. Larkspur has less than Marigold.

One of the lot has only $5, which is $5000 less than the one who has most.

Question: If differences are based on $1250 steps, how much has each?

Petunia has only $5. Aster has $1255. Zinnia $2505. Cosmos $3755 and Larkspur have $3755 each. Marigold has $5005

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

Our Story: GALAN HAS DISCOVERED RORY MOR AND HIS STRANGE PRISONER LAUGHING ALOUD IN THE WOODS. THEY DO NOT KNOW THEY ARE BEING WATCHED. FRIGHTENED AND CONFUSED, GALAN RUNS TO HIS SISTERS. "SOMETHING IS VERY WRONG HERE," HE SAYS....

"....WE MUST LEAVE AT ONCE." A JUVENILE BUT EFFECTIVE STRATEGEM RENDERS THE GUARD AGREEABLE.

BY MORN THEY HAVE BOOKED PASSAGE ON A MERCHANT "HAFSKIP" BOUND FOR ICELAND -- A TREACHEROUS VOYAGE THROUGH THE ICE FIELDS. THE NORTH STAR WILL GUIDE THEM UNTIL MASTER SIGURD SPIES THE SCAVENGING SEABIRDS AND FOLLOWS THEM TO THEIR ROOSTS ON THE ICELANDIC COAST.

THEY HAVE SAILED BUT TWO DAYS WHEN SIGURD PUTS IN AT THE SHETLANDS TO AWAIT A FAIR WIND FOR THE CROSSING OVER OPEN SEA. ONLY THEN DO SLIM WARSHIPS STRIDE OVER THE WAVES AND SURROUND THE MERCHANT VESSEL. AN ANGRY RORY MOR CLIMBS ABOARD.

"YOU ARE A HOTHEADED LITTLE RUNT," HE EXCLAIMS. "I MUST ANSWER TO YOUR FATHER, BUT YOU WILL ANSWER TO ME."

GALAN REPLIES WITH COLD STEEL AND A CHILLY GAZE. "I DO NOT KNOW YOUR SECRET BUT I KNOW YOU HAVE ONE," HE SAYS. "EXPLAIN YOURSELF OR COME NO FARTHER." RORY MOR, HIGH KING OF IRELAND, RELISHES THE LAD'S BRAZEN SWAGGER. HE LAUGHS FOR A FEW MOMENTS BEFORE A SWIFT KICK SENDS THE BOY TO THE DECK.
