Med School Now 'Part Of The Group'

By MELVIN LANG
Reflector Staff Writer

East Carolina University's School of Medicine, so politically sensitive a decade ago that mere mention of such a school would cause veteran legislators to shudder, has come of age.

In the span of a few days, the ECU school graduated its first four-year class of 28 physicians and received notice that it had earned unqualified accrediation by the national Liaison Committee on Medical Education.

"We are now part of the group, full-fledged members," is the way Dr. William E. Laupus describes the result. Laupus is dean of the ECU school, and has spearheaded its development from an idea on paper to a functional, recognized school of medicine.

Laupus, in a recent interview, displayed obvious satisfaction that East Carolina's medical school has become just that in such a short time. He acknowledges surprise that the accrediting team granted a full four-year certificate so quickly, but accepts it with professed gratitude that the action will free his expanding faculty and administration to concentrate on other areas of development.

"In my opinion we now have a firm and solid foundation to expand our resources and our capacity to meet" the mandates set down by the General Assembly when, after years of bickering and back-room politicking, it authorized the ECU school.

Those mandates, as envisioned by Laupus, include development of:

— A school for primary-care physicians.

— A regional program of health care to bring eastern North Carolina into the mainstream of medical care.

— A program to give minority and disadvantaged individuals greater access to the field of allied health, including medicine.

Laupus said the school's original goal in meeting those mandates remains applicable.

"Our emphasis continues to be in family medicine and primary care, and for the foreseeable future, it will remain the same," Laupus said, adding: "Our focus is on the education of a limited number of students who primarily will meet the medical needs of North Carolina, wherever it (their practice) is."

Miami Jurors Recess

MIAMI (AP) — Four blacks and eight whites deliberated for almost six hours Saturday without reaching a verdict on state charges that a young black fatally smashed the head of a white motorist during Miami's 1980 riots.

The presiding judge asked jurors to return Sunday morning and to skip church services because of the possibility that a minister might discuss the trial.

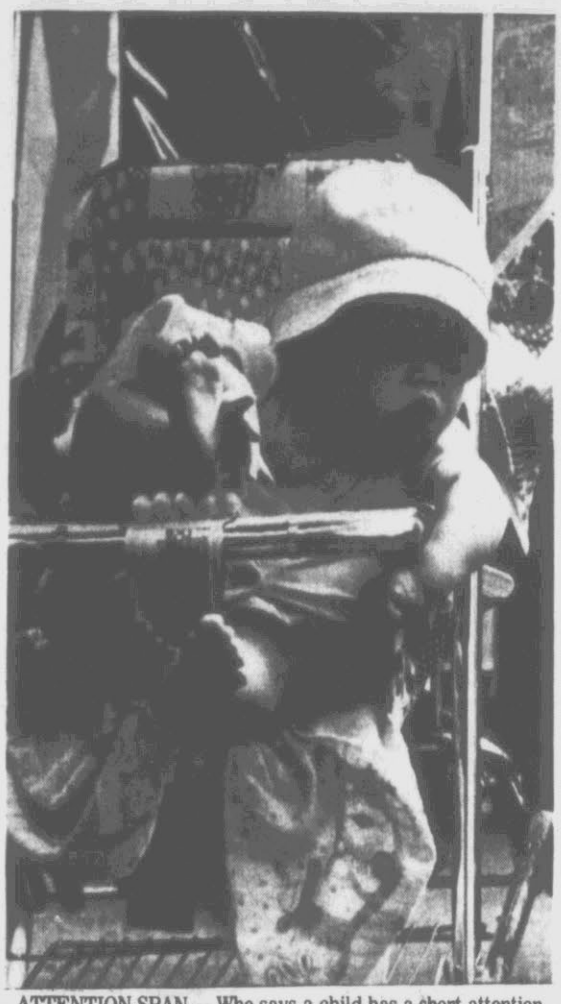

The retrial of a first-degree murder charge against Nathaniel Lane, 19, in the mob-beating death of Benny Higdon, 21, on May 17, 1980, went to the jury Saturday morning after the defense rested without presenting witnesses.

Because prosecutors decided against seeking the death penalty, the charge carries a maximum of life in prison, 25 years before parole.

In his closing argument, Assistant State Atty. Robert Kaye told the jury that the case was "one-on-one" — the testimony of Doris Jones against Lane.

"There was chaos in the streets that night, terror and violence; hatred," Kaye said of the first of three nights of rioting that eventually claimed 18 lives. "Doris Jones ... identified Nathaniel Lane in this courtroom as the man she saw bringing this rock down on Benny Higdon's head. Not once, but twice."

Kershaw said Ms. Jones "described it as a mob scene. And that's what it was, a mob scene.

Alabama Loses Effort To Block Court Order Freeing 277 Prisoners

By PHILLIP RAWLS
Associated Press Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Cell doors swung open Saturday to free 277 inmates after a U.S. Supreme Court justice lifted his ban on a court-ordered mass release designed to relieve overcrowding in the state penal system.

A cheer went up in state prisons as word spread that Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. had removed the temporary stay he issued late Thursday, six hours before the releases were originally scheduled to begin.

Inmates carrying their belongings in brown paper bags began leaving the prisons shortly after noon Saturday. With $10 from the state and a bus ticket home, if they desired, many were ferried in prison vans to bus stations.

Meanwhile, state Attorney General Charles Graddick made a last-ditch attempt to keep at least some of the inmates from getting out.

He sought a second temporary stay from Chief Justice Warren Burger and filed a motion with the U.S. District Court in Montgomery saying the court's original order mandating the prisoner release was no longer valid because it was dated for Friday, not Saturday.

On Saturday evening Graddick said he had not heard anything from either court and that the issue was virtually dead. "The fact that they turned them loose immediately just about mooted our chances of any further relief," he said.

U.S. District Judge Robert Varner ordered the releases from state prisons and county jails after Alabama officials failed to meet his deadlines for reducing the backlog of 2,100 state prisoners in overcrowded jails. Varner said the overcrowding constituted "cruel and unusual" punishment.

Powell, at Graddick's request, issued the temporary stay so he could review the case. Graddick argued that Gov. Fob James, court-appointed r3ceiver for the prison system, had not pursued alternate means of housing prisoners and that the inmates were "bad, dangerous people."

Powell, in a five-page order Saturday, said Graddick did not prove he was the proper official to push a claim that state residents would be harmed by the release.

He said James "apparently is satisfied that the people of Alabama suffer no irreparable injury," but the justice added he was not reaching the "substantial issues" in the case, including the propriety of the release.

James, who fought Graddick's legal bids to stop the release, was on a fishing trip Saturday, his press secretary, Windy Leavell, said.

Varner's order said all of those due for release were "inmates with good conduct records who are closely approaching their normal release date." Graddick contended said James and Varner were given "inadequate information" about the inmates, who included seven convicted killers and a rapist.

Watt Defends His Stand On Lands

By MARY ANNE RHYNE
Associated Press Writer

WILMINGTON, N.C. (AP) — U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt criticized environmentalists Saturday, saying they have attempted to "deny American the benefits of our public lands."

At a fundraising dinner which highlighted this weekend's N.C. Republican Convention, Watt said the "liberals are furious that their positions of power have been opened up to all Americans."

"The furious frustrations they experience are because they have lost priveleged access and privileged positions of power because when we Republicans came in, we opened the door for all Americans," Watt said.

Watt charged the Carter administration, spurred on by environmentalist groups, allowed national parks to deteriorate and built up a mass of bureaucratic red tape.

He promised to open up access to 768 million acres of government-owned land in the U.S.

Earlier in the day, Watt told a news conference he did not know how he would respond to a lawsuit filed by Gov. Jim Hunt that requests six tracts of land off the North Carolina coast not be auctioned off for oil-drilling next month.

"I don't know if it's just a political lawsuit or one of real substance," Watt said. "There may be very little interest in those six tracts. If there isn't, they won't be bid on."

Watt said similar tracts must be explored because "the United States is vulnerable to a natural resources war."

Watt discounted the danger of an oil spill reaching the North Carolina coast. He said the chances of a spill are almost zero. If there were to be a spill, he said the chances were 25 percent that the oil might reach the beach.

In a related matter, Watt said emphasis will be placed on protecting the Cape Hatteras lighthouse. The lighthouse has been endangered by erosion.

Sen. Jesse A. Helms, R-N.C., who accompanied Watt to the news conference, said his Congressional Club would probably join with Hugh Morton in setting up "a private subscription" fund to save the lighthouse. He said

The state's $11.7 billion budget, the gas tax increase and redistricting were the major items handled by the General Assembly session which ended July 10, Pitt County's Senate and House members agreed last week.

"The General Assembly itself was a very peculiar session ... different from any I ever served in in that we didn't have a sense of direction so far as the budget was concerned," Sen. Vernon White noted. "We didn't have a goal in setting the budget because we didn't know what we would get from the federal government. That kept us in a position without a sense of direction."

Lawmakers did, however, adopt a budget which provides the same services as in the past, but will return to Raleigh in the fall — after the federal budget is approved — to make any necessary changes in the state's expenditures.

"The budget has tripled since I've been there (1971)," Rep. Sam Bundy noted, adding that "this General Assembly was faced with more uncertainty than any I've been in."

"It was a session which made it necessary for legislators to squarely meet decisions on such major issues as the gasoline tax, redistricting, insurance, tobacco tax, hazardous waste and education," Rep. Ed Warren explained.

As for the gasoline tax increase, "I don't think anyone in the General Assembly wanted to increase taxes. But at the same time ... we had to come up with some plan to protect the highways and there was no other plan presented other than the governor's," according to White.

Bundy noted, "We've got good roads," which are attractive to industry and tourism, "78,000 miles to maintain. For the best interest of the state in the long run, I voted for the 'good roads' package."

Warren explained that of the 3-cents per gallon tax added to gasoline, "one and three-eighths cents per gallon will be returned to the municipality or county in which the gasoline was purchased in Powell Bill funds," for construction and maintenance of local streets and roads.

"I fought strongly against the tobacco tax," Bundy said, as did White and Warren. However, Bundy said, "There was more sentiment to tax tobacco products this time than in any session I've been in Raleigh. We'll have our hands full in 1983 or 1985 to keep the tax off."

As for redistricting, which the lawmakers said caused a "road block in the legislative session," the 1st Congressional District represented by Walter Jones lost Jones County and picked up Northampton County.

The Pitt-Greene County House District represented by Bundy and Warren remained intact, while the Pit-

Guards Held Hostage

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — Two armed inmates held three guards hostage for five hours Saturday at the Missouri State Penitentiary and surrendered once prison officials agreed to send them to a federal medical facility, officials said.

No injuries were reported, and the inmates surrendered without a struggle, officials said.

Shortly before they surrendered, the prisoners gave up two handguns they were using in an escape attempt, the officials said.

State Corrections Division Director David Blackwell said the inmates also demanded to see a Jefferson City man, who had worked as a volunteer in the prison, as a condition for releasing the guards.

The man, whose name was not released, was brought to the prison and was directly involved in the negotiations between the prisoners and Warden Donald Wyrick.

Blackwell said the two inmates, whom he declined to identify, demanded to be taken to the Federal Medical Center for Prisoners in Springfield, Mo., but he did not know why.

One of the inmates is in prison for murder, the other for burglary and stealing, officials said.

Blackwell said the inmates apparently had been using a cutting torch in an escape attempt about 3 p.m. when they seized the three officers, who also were not identified. Blackwell said officials did not know how the prisoners got the cutting torch or the handguns.

ECU Professor Did Research On New Sweetener

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Dr. Paul Fletcher of Greenville says he's pleased with the Food and Drug Administration's announcement last week of its approval of aspartame, an artificial sweetener on which he did research in 1974-76.

Aspartame should be on the market, first to food processors and then directly to consumers in about six months, according to the FDA and G.D.Searle and Co., the developers and marketers of the sweetener.

"It really has no aftertaste at all," Fletcher said of aspartame, the first sugar substitute to win FDA approval in nearly 25 years, "and should be very useful to people who have to restrict their intake of sugar."

Fletcher's research, done while he was a post-doctoral fellow at Rockerfeller University in New York City, showed that the product breaks down very quickly in the human body. He worked under Nobel Prize-winning biochemist Dr. Stanford Moore on the project.

"We learned about the Searle Company's synthesization of this very simple protein, a combination of two amino acids," Fletcher said, "and thought its study would fit well into our speciality, the study of protein structure. (Proteins are made up of varied numbers and sequences of amino acids.) So we asked for and received a sample to test.

"We were able to publish our findings that the product breaks down in human blood in about two hours. The fast breakdown of the product means that it will only be useful for sweetening by the food and beverage industries of cold and dry products like cold cereals, drink mixes, instant coffee and tea, gelatins, puddings and pie fillings, and chewing gum. Once it's mixed with liquid, especially hot liquid, it breaks down within about 10 minutes. So you can use it to sweeten your tea at the table, but you couldn't mix up a container in advance, keep it in the refrigerator and expect it to stay sweet till you're ready for it."

Substitution of aspartame for sugar can reduce calories in many food and beverages as much as 95 percent, a Searle company statement said. The Calorie Control Council, which represents the diet soft drink industry and other saccharin users, said the FDA action "will provide food technologists an opportunity to develop new and exciting low-calorie foods."

Fletcher says he knows of only one instance in which aspartame may be unsafe. Persons who have PKU — phenylketonuria — cannot assimilate phenylalanine, one of the two amino acids from which the sweetener is made. The FDA has announced that products containing aspartame will have to carry a warning for those who suffer from PKU. These persons must severely restrict their intake of many protein foods, including meat.

Fletcher, who grew up on a tobacco farm in Lenoir County, was in high school when the Soviet Union sent Sputnik into orbit in 1957 and science started being emphasized and science fairs started being held in Eastern North Carolina. He liked science and took part in and won science fairs held during his last two years in high school.

As an undergraduate at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, he went to see a microbiology professor to get ideas for a science project for his younger brother, Jim, still in high school, and received an offer to work in the professor's microbiology lab. This opportunity helped him discover how much he liked research.

He went on to get a master's degree in biology as one of the first males at UNC-Greensboro; then to Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., for his Ph.D. It was while he was a student there that he met and was able to work with Dr. Moore, a Vanderbilt alumnus then at Rockefeller University.

Fletcher recalls, "One day toward the end of my doctoral program, during one of Dr. Moore's visits, he asked me what I was going to do when I graduated. I looked at him in amazement, 'Why come and work for you, of course,' I said. He agreed it seemed like a good idea."

While working with Moore at Rockefeller, Fletcher met his wife, Mary Ann, an assistant to Dr. George Palade, another

White House Says Reagan Stands Behind Casey

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan believes CIA Director William J. Casey "definitely ought to remain on the job" if his only fault was poor judgment in picking the chief of the agency's clandestine service, a White House spokesman said Saturday.

However, said presidential spokesman David Gergen, if there are other findings against the embattled CIA director — such as new evidence of wrongdoing in his past financial dealings — the president would have to review the matter.

Meantime, a source close to the Senate Intelligence Committee said Saturday that the panel will decide Tuesday whether to hire Fred Thompson, a Nashville, Tenn., attorney, as special counsel for its Casey inquiry. Thompson, a close associate of Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, served as minority counsel of the Senate's Watergate Committee in 1973.

The source, who asked not to be named, also said the panel's inquiry will look into the possibility that Casey may have given inconsistent testimony about his role in a Securities and Exchange Commission investigation in 1972 of financier Robert L. Vesco.

Casey has testified in court and before Congress that when he chaired the SEC, he relayed a White House request to postpone an SEC interview with Vesco until after the 1972 presidential election. SEC investigators refused to comply with the request.

A large contributor to then-President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign, Vesco later was accused of looting an investment fund and has fled the country to avoid prosecution.

In another development, some members of the House Intelligence Committee have written to Reagan, protesting a planned CIA covert action in Africa, said Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., a committee member. The action was proposed by Casey's team at CIA but committee officials refused to disclose details of the operation or its location in Africa. Zablocki, however, ruled out Libya as the location.

"There was some reservation about the covert action," Zablocki said. "I think the committee has a right to voice its concern."

A source close to the House Intelligence Committee said there was no indication that Reagan had decided to call off or alter the covert action because of the committee's criticism, made within the past few weeks.

Reagan's support for Casey, relayed by Gergen, puts the president firmly at odds with Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

Goldwater publicly criticized Casey and called for his resignation last week for selecting Max Hugel, a businessman with little experience in the intelligence field, for the highly sensitive job of spymaster. Hugel has already resigned in the wake of charges about his own business dealings.

Casey's business background is being reviewed by the Intelligence Commttee in the wake of a judge's finding that he and other directors of a now-defunct company knowingly misled stockholders.

and to 64 in 1982. It was authorized by the Legislature to enroll up to 80 freshmen, but Laupus hinted that the maximum may be somewhat less, placing the most efficient level at somewhere between 64 and 80.

Freshmen so far have come only from North Carolina and that practice probably will continue for some time, although Laupus said he favors the addition of at least one out-of-state student as a means of broadening the scope of the class.

On the same basis, Laupus said the 1981 graduates were encouraged to serve their internships out of state to broaden their education. About half of the 28 new doctors went out of state, but Laupus said most have indicated they plan to return to North Carolina.

As for the future of the ECU school, Laupus said little will be changed — only more of it will be noticed.

As an example, Laupus noted that, in the early 1970s, eastern North Carolina had the poorest health statistics in the state so far as such factors as child deaths were concerned.

"The first thing we did was to begin work with the health department here in Pitt County in the area of baby care. We developed an intensive care unit for regional purposes, and also strengthened the obstetrical program to reduce the number of stillbirths, premature births, et cetera, and to insure the chances of living," he explained. "This program is now just beginning to reach full bloom."

Laupus said the maternal aspects of the neonatal, or newborn, program, will be expanded as Pitt County Memorial Hospital expands its bed capacity. As a result, he said, "We anticipate more women with high risk pregnancies will be coming to Greenville for care and, in some cases, for extended hospitalization," he said.

More emphasis also is planned on treatment of cancer. In line with that, the University of North Carolina is expected to approve next Friday a proposal calling for a $5.4 million radiation therapy facility to treat cancer at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The facility, which won approval last week of the governors' planning committee, would be used in conjunction with the ECU medical school.

Laupus also predicted that research will be expanded at ECU, although not on a disproportionate basis. "This will be part of the evolutionary thing. We are trying to be the East Carolina School of Medicine, not Chapel Hill, not Duke, not Harvard," he said.

The school's program will remain fairly constant for a decade or so, Laupus said, as it attempts the "formidable" task of meeting the region's needs, especially a shortage of physicians and a population which, for the most part, is trained to see a physician only in times of need. He said more stress will be placed on educating the populace in the need of seeking preventive medicine.

"This takes a whole new approach, to train people to seek care ... and to have it there for them when they seek it," he said.

In line with that program, Laupas said he expects to have more ECU students and faculty members visiting community hospitals in eastern North Carolina for first-hand examination of local problems and to assist the local staff wherever possible, using PCMH as a regional backup facility. The faculty will be expanded, also, as the student population expands.

"Ouy plan really is to have a program here that is second to none," Laupus said.

Pitt and Martin will form one district, while Edgecombe and Halifax will form a second district.

Banking industry, insurance and hazardous waste bills also received legislative approval during the term.

"I think one of the things that is going to have an impact on North Carolina in the future is the hazardous waste law we passed. North Carolina is one of the leading producers of wastes, and we passed a very workable bill," White noted.

The insurance legislation "keeps surcharges off safe drivers," Bundy noted, while the banking bills maintain an 18 percent interest rate for credit cards, but provides a "floating ceiling" tied to the Treasury Note interest rate for other consumer loans.

"We have a 5 percent assessment on a ton of fertilizer and feed that farmers assess themselves. The money goes to N.C. State University for research and supplemental salaries," White noted. That hasn't changed in over 20 years.

"We passed a bill that will allow the people to vote on assessing themselves 10 cents a ton for research. Inflation has caught up to them."

Only money matters will come before the fall session. Other bills will have to wait until next year.

Two bills which can be considered in the fall, however, are measures introduced by Warren.

One he said "is to increase the inheritance tax exemption from $200,000 to $340,000. The other bill will increase the personal income tax exemption from $2,200 to $2,400 and increase exemptions for dependents."

Nobel Prize-winning cell biologist. They were married but soon went to Yale University, where they remained until coming to ECU.

Fletcher says he and his wife couldn't be happier with their situation as clinical professors of microbiology and microbiology researchers at the East Carolina University School of Medicine here.

"Mary Ann and I have a second-to-none laboratory here," he said. "We can communicate with our colleagues anywhere in the world, yet we're a few miles from my mother and other family in Lenoir County and we're raising our son, Paul, in a very wholesome environment. If such a fine medical school had not been developed here, I would never have been able to come home and at the same time, pursue the work I love."

Fletcher's mother, Isabel Fletcher, is a Lenoir County commissioner. His brother, Tave, tends the family farm and another brother, Jim, is associated with UNC-Chapel Hill as a computer specialist.

The Fletchers' lab work at ECU focuses on the investigation of protein structure. A major project at this time is the study of what happens during pancreatitis. During the couple's honeymoon in Trinidad, they happened to hear that sugar cane harvesters bitten by a scorpion there are very likely to contract pancreatitis. So since then, they've obtained scorpion venom from Mexico and Brazil to study. Now, however, they must have the Trinidadian scorpion venom and since they can find no other source, Paul expects to be making a trip to Trinidad soon with a Mexico City colleague experienced in the milking of scorpions.

In answer to the comment about adventuring in the name of science, he said, "It's a necessary part of the job. I'd rather be right here in the lab any day. This is where I'm happiest."

Helms said Morton was instrumental in bringing the battleship U.S.S. North Carolina back to the state as a memorial.

Watt arrived in North Carolina Friday. Before returning to Washington, he said he would fly over North Carolina's barrier islands and look at the lighthouse.

Outside the Hilton Inn, where Watt delivered his remarks to GOP delegates, about 25 members of area environmental groups carried signs saying "Dump Watt" and "We Know Watt's Wrong." No incidents were reported.

Inside the hotel, North Carolina Republicans reveled in their party's newfound national strength Saturday.

They were joined by such dignitaries as President Reagan's budget director, David Stockman, and the president's special assistant for political affairs, Lee Atwater.

Some 1,200 party delegates and alternates — wearing elephant pins, buttons and stickers — were in Wilmington to hear the administration's representatives boast of new clout in Washington and seek additional support for Reagan's tax-cutting plans.

Republican state legislators, congressmen and GOP Sens. Helms and John East also appeared to rally the delegates behind the party. Several of the delegates greeted the senators in T-shirts showing Helms and East riding an elephant across North Carolina with a lance in their hands.

The convention began Friday and ends Sunday with a meeting of the party's executive committee.

Stockman began by answering criticism of Reagan's proposed tax cut, which is expected to come up for a vote this week in Congress. He also commented on the administration's budget cuts.

Tuition Increase Approved

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — The University of North Carolina's 16 campuses will increase tuition for both in-state and out-of-state students this year under a schedule approved Friday by a committee of the UNC Board of Governors.

Tuition will climb by $48 to $72 dollars a year for students who qualify as North Carolina residents.

For out-of-state students, the increase will range from $100 to $186 a year, according to L. Felix Joyner, UNC vice president for finance.

Final approval of the tuition hikes is expected when the full UNC board meets next Friday.

The proposed tuition increases are lowest for UNC's four-year baccalaureate schools and highest for the system's three doctoral institutions, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, North Carolina State University and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, Joyner said.

The increases were necessary because of mandates from the Advisory Budget Commission and the 1981 Legislature.

In presenting its budget recommendations to the General Assembly, the commission suggested that the UNC system increase by 11 percent or more than $6.2 million a year in revenues from tuition receipts. The commission left it to the UNC board to set individual campus rates.

Reagan Backs Off Social Security, Will Stress His Tax-Cut Program

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has dopped plans to talk about the financially troubled Social Security program in a nationally televised speech Monday and will focus his remarks chiefly on his embattled tax-cut program, the White House said Saturday.

Stepping up his lobbying for the tax plan, Reagan also will fly 14 Democratic congressmen to the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., for an outdoor barbeque and sales pitch Sunday afternoon, said presidential spokesman David Gergen.

The sudden change in strategy for Reagan's speech stemmed from a plea from Republican congressional leaders for the president to confine his remarks to taxes and stay away from the politically touchy subject of Social Security.

The Democratic-controlled House will vote Wednesday on whether to approve the president's tax proposal or a Democratic alternative.

Gergen said the outcome of Wednesday's vote is still in doubt. "But we believe the president is beginning to close the gap and were encouraged by that. We anticipate it will be a very close vote."

From the same podium Friday, Gergen had announced that Monday's address would be a twin-edged speech on taxes and the Social Security program.

In reversing direction Saturday, he acknowledged there had been suggestions that Reagan should not cloud the tax fight by re-igniting the political uproar triggered by the administration's plan to cut Social Security benefits.

Gergen said Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker and House Minority Leader Robert Michel sent the White House a letter in the past day urging Reagan to confine his remarks to the tax-cut bill.

The two GOP leaders indicated they would prefer that Reagan talk about Social Security some other time, Gergen added.

Gergen said that with the change of plans, there may be some secondary mention of Social Security in the speech, or there may be no mention of it at all.

Reagan flew by helicopter to Camp David in a rainstorm Saturday, taking along drafts of his speech to review.

In an attempt to win over Democrats for his legislation, the Reagan administration unveiled a rewritten tax bill Friday that included $65 billion worth of changes.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill, chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, said Reagan "has won the game of one-upmanship" with his plan.

"We do see signs momentum is shifting to the president on the tax bill," Gergen said.

Earl Butz Leaves Prison

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (UPI) — Former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz, having served 25 days in jail for income tax evasion, spent his first full day of freedom at home Saturday.

"I'm not making any statement at all so there's no point in you bothering me," said Butz, 72, who served as agriculture secretary under Presidents Nixon and Ford.

Butz was released from the Metropolitan Correctional Center in Chicago Friday, five days early for good behavior.

"He received good time for being a unit orderly — taking care of the unit and keeping it clean," said Bob Guzik, MCC unit manager. "He was a model prisoner. We had no problems with him."

U.S. District Judge Jesse Eschbach in Fort Wayne sentenced Butz on June 19 to 30 days in prison and five years probation for failing to report $148,114 of taxable income in 1978.

Eschbach said he considered Butz' age, lack of previous offenses and long record of community service in deciding to convert all but 30 days of the prison sentence to probation. He also fined Butz $10,000.

Butz pleaded guilty May 22 to the 1978 charge, in exchange for the Internal Revenue Service dropping a charge concerning 1977 income.

Butz admitted filing a 1978 return showing taxable income of $97,814 and taxes due of $39,621. U.S. Attorney David Ready said Butz actually had taxable income that year of $245,928, on which he owed taxes of $113,678.

Butz said the undeclared income came from fees for lectures he gave around the country. He said the income was legal and not tied to his term as agriculture secretary from 1972 to 1976.

"I recognize, you honor, what I have done is wrong," Butz told Eschbach after pleading guilty. "These past months have been a nighmare for me and Mrs. Butz."

Butz said he had cash flow problems in 1979.

Friends and colleagues of the former Purdue University dean of agriculture Saturday refused to comment on Butz's conviction and prison term.

"I'd just as soon not comment, and I think you'll find a lot of people will be reluctant to comment because he is a very popular man," said Arthur G. Hansen, university president. "When people are friends, they don't want to say anything."

Food Poisoning Cited In Deaths At Rest Home

STILLWATER, Minn. (UPI) — An outbreak of salmonella food poisoning at a nursing home has killed five elderly women and sickened 48 other people, officials said Saturday.

It was the first report of fatal salmonella illness in Minnesota in five years. The five women died between July 17 and Wednesday, the Ramsey County Medical Examiner's Office said. Their ages ranged from 79 to 103.

Joleen Waalen, administrator of the Greeley Health Care Center, said the nursing home first reported the outbreak to the State Health Department on July 20, the date of the third death.

Thirty-six of the other 70 residents and 12 nursing home employees also were affected, Michael Osterholm, the Minnesota Health Department's chief of acute disease epidemiology, said.

Three more patients, admitted to Lakeview Memorial Hospital early this week, were being treated with antibiotics and intravenous feedings, a nursing supervisor said. They were listed in stable condition.

He said salmonella was a "significant contributing factor" in the deaths, and the age of the victims prevented their bodies from withstanding the illness.

Outbreaks caused by salmonella bacteria are common but very seldom fatal, Osterholm said. He said no deaths related to the organism had been reported in Minnesota in the past five years.

Inequities Exist In Populations Of Pitt Districts

County officials say that preliminary figures show there will be no change in the composition of the Pitt Board of Commissioners for this year, meaning this decade.

That may be true for Greenville township which gained a second representative in 1967.

There are, however some major inequities in other districts of the county. Alton Gardner's district of Ayden, Grifton and Swift Creek includes 20,248 people, according to the preliminary figures. Bob Martin's district of Bethel, Belvoir, Pactolus and Carolina Townships includes only 13,255 population, as shown by the preliminary figures.

Burney Tucker's district includes Winterville, Chicod and Grimesland and its preliminary population figure is 18,396. Bruce Strickland represents Falkland, Farmville, Fountain and Arthur and the preliminary population figure is 12,570.

Thus we can see that the population of Bruce Strickland's district is 7,698 less than Alton Gardner's. Strickland's district has some 38 percent less population than Gardner's.

While there can be some leeway in providing representation based on population it can be seen that Strickland's district is greatly below the largest district in populatiom.

It is an inequitable situation and it is not one that the county commissioners should ignore. When the final population figures are in the situation should be studied with an eye toward providing a more equitable representation.

Air Conditioning Welcome Addition

Editors across the state smiled, and often reprinted, the editorial speculation of the Transylvania Times that maybe there was still a use and a place for the old "funeral parlor fan" that made summer's heat a bit more bearable in churches, gathering places, and porches in years gone by.

Reality dictates the old hand fan is unlikely to see any great revival of popularity.

Modern buildings are so designed that air conditioning and forced circulation of air is a pre-requisite. Many businesses and plants, too, utilize sensitive equipment that requires near-constant levels of temperature (those thermostats); and air conditioning is as essential to operation as are the very people who utilize those machines.

As the automobile changed the way people live, so too has the advent of controlled temperatures.

During these hot, humid days of our Carolina summer, we appreciate the change.

Sunday Morning Notes

And it's tobacco market time. The area markets opened with smiles and the best opening day prices ever were recorded.

Fortune also smiled on tobacco farmers, who harvested a vintage crop after early season drought scares.

Still, market openings aren't like they used to be. For one thing, they now come in the middle of the summer when many people still have their minds on vacations and other summer fun.

There was a time when the markets opened in September, and it was a signal for things to come to life. There was one noticeable thing that made everyone aware that the tobacco selling season was here. That was the whistles. Tobacco processing plants were located in the Tenth and Dickinson Avenue area. Person-Garrett, Imperial, Ficklen, Greenville and Export all cranked up their re-drying facilities. The plants required steam and a steam whistle was a logical adjunct. The whistles called the workers to the plants and experienced observers could tell you which plant was calling.

It's not quite that way anymore, but still even non-farmers heave a sigh of relief when tobacco sells well on opening day.

There are some who speculate that the day of the automobile is passing, what with oil and cars costing what they do.

That may be but the day of the drive-in (or is it drive-through) is still very much with us.

There's hardly a bank which doesn't have at least one drive-in lane and most have several with the outer ones serviced by pneumatic tubes.

Most of the fast food places have drive-in windows. Hardee's on Cotanche Street had the problem of seating areas located on both sides of the food serving area.

Recently a drive-in window was installed and the problem was solved. A conveyor from the window carries the money to the interior of the building. Then the conveyor returns the food to the waiting customer. Long live the auto!

Patsy Moore, our free lance feature writer, noted the items about personalized license plates here. She says she saw one at Emerald Isle which read "Maalox."

On the same trip Patsy noted an auto sales lot and a sign which read, "You Auto Buy Now."

Someone called and asked that no names be used, but that one of those portable illuminated signs appeared in front of a local residence. It read, "Nifty-----Is Fifty. Blow Your Horn For Birthday."

The sign appeared early in the morning and most motorists were obliging.

Sadat

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Israel's heavy attack on the Palestinians in Beirut and southern Lebanon is undermining President Anwar Sadat's campaign to bring peace to the Middle East, Egyptian officials and Western diplomats say.

Although Sadat remains optimistic about the long-term chances for peace, the sources say, some Egyptians are questioning the wisdom of his policies because of the Israeli escalation.

Sadat and and one of his last allies in the Arab world, President Gaafar Nimeiri of Sudan, issued a joint communique Wednesday charging Israel with aggression that they said was "a threat to peace and stability in the area."

However, that is not likely to improve Sadat's standing with other Arab leaders who accuse him of selling out the Palestinians and Syria when he signed the 1979 peace treaty with Israel and ended the threat to the Jewish state of the Arabs' most powerful armed forces.

"Because of the peace treaty, Israel is sure of no retaliation from Egypt when it attacks other Arab countries," said one of several foreign diplomats and Egyptian officials interviewed by The Associated Press.

The sources all asked that their names not be used.

Sadat maintains that the Camp David agreements are the only possible basis for achieving Palestinian autonomy in the occupied territories and peace between Israel and all the Arab countries.

"We believe we still have to continue the dialogue with the Israelis," said an official in the Foreign Ministry. "It's the only way to achieve a proper climate where we can talk about the Palestinians.

"The Israeli action is to be considered as another obstacle in reaching a comprehensive peace in the area. In meeting the Israelis, we make it very clear we do not approve their actions."

Only a few opposition voices in Egypt have criticized the peace treaty since it holds out the prospect of prosperity for a war-drained economy. And although the Israeli attacks have become an issue domestically, diplomatic sources say Sadat's popularity is still sound.

"Sadat is basically liked," said one diplomat. "He has critics, but he incarnates so much of what is Egyptian. He's basically on target, basically in tune with what the Egyptians think."

The Egyptian-Israeli negotiations to work out a plan for Palestinian autonomy in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip have been deadlocked for more than a year, stalling the so-called Camp David peace process.

The Israeli military action came as Sadat was preparing to leave Ad. 2 for talks in Europe and Washington that could breathe new life into Middle East peace initiatives.

In Washington, Sadat will have his first meeting with President Reagan.

In London, he will meet with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her foreign secretary, Lord Carrington. He is the current head of the European Common Market's council of ministers, which is seeking direct involvement of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the peace process.

In Vienna, Sadat will meet with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, who has good contacts with the PLO.

A meeting between Sadat and Begin that had been set for the end of July has been postponed until August or September. Egyptian officials say it was postponed because of scheduling problems, not because of the Israeli attacks.

But one West European diplomat, commenting on hopes of getting all sides talking to each other, said: "The Israeli aggression in Lebanon doesn't make it any easier."

RALEIGH — The heavy hand of politics smothered a host of actions which might have otherwise taken the spotlight in the recently adjourned session of the North Carolina General Assembly.

Two issues — the gas tax and redistricting — so occupied the energies and minds of the legislators that attention was diverted from other matters.

Perhaps the most significant negative result is in the courtrooms of the state. Early on, high state officials including Gov. Jim Hunt, Crime Control Secretary Burley Mitchell and key legislators all pledged major action on improving the courts.

The rallying cry has been "swift and certain punishment" as the greatest deterrent to a rising crime rate. The state's Speedy Trial Law was supposed to be moved into place with a 90-day limt. That has been delayed until 1983 and the present 120-day limit remains in effect.

The so-called "Fair Sentencing Act" was much amended to allow lighter sentences to satisfy some legislative worries that prison overcrowding would result. Also, plea bargaining agreements were exempted from the law, and this leaves a majority of criminal sentences no longer subject to the presumptive terms which were supposed to make certain sentences for specific crimes a deterrent to the wouldbe criminal.

Then, far from making sure sentences a deterrent, the General Assembly enacted a law which allows first offenders — if the prosecution and defense agree, and after allowing the victim to be heard — to be put on probation without a trial, conviction, or record.

The Courts Commission, established by Gov. Hunt to produce a sweeping array of changes, will continue to function; but future Legislatures will be called upon to handle the many measures which earlier had been expected to be considered this year.

The matter of removing minor traffic offenses from the courts by establishing an administrative procedure is one of the most promising methods now in sight for both relieving the court backlog, and allowing more time for court officials to handle important cases. The debate over whether public defenders should be provided, or whether private lawyers should be assigned indigent cases, remains unresolved.

District attorneys continue to run the courtrooms without administrative assistance or upper level supervision, leaving unresolved the question of whether a trial court administrator would work well in calendaring trials, rather than allowing that process to continue subject to political pressures and favoritism as happens on occasion.

Reagan Offers Hard Line To Stress A Point

OTTAWA — In his first meeting at the Western economic summit, President Reagan displayed drastic change in Washington by warning West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt it would be risky for Bonn to buy natural gas shipped through the Soviet Union's new Siberian pipeline.

Neither Gerald Ford nor Jimmy Carter would have so directly confronted the imperious dean of Western summiteers. Nor was that the original intention of foreign policy bureaucrats preparing Reagan's strategy here. But on the Siberian pipeline as on other key issues, politically-appointed Reagan administration officials beat the bureaucrats.

The result was Reaganism at the summit. "The only thing we wanted to accomplish here," one senior presidential aide told us, "was showing that Ronald Reagan stood for something." They succeeded If Reagan at home is accused of formulating no foreign policy, Reagan at Ottawa left no doubt where he stands.

Officials of the other industrialized democracies, who often complained Carter did not stand for anything, grumbled here that Reagan standa for too much. At Ottawa, they learned as have congressional Democrats, that behind his warm personality and pleasant chatter, Reagan is rigidly ideological as no other American president has been.

The Ottawa summit came at an unpropitious time for Reagan, quite apart from interfering with his tax bill fig nd coinciding with the newest Mideast crisis. His lone natural ally here, British Prime Minister Maragret Thatcher, is in political extremis. The accession of Socialist Francois Mitterrand to the French presidency pushes leftward the ideological balance of the industrialized democracies.

Under these conditions, the diplomatic bureaucracy in Washington advised Reagan to sweet-talk his way to leadership at Ottawa. Thus, early position papers for the summit urged accommodation toward the wish-lists of Bonn, Paris and Ottawa — including the Siberian pipeline.

But the defense department intervened to insist that was not Ronald Reagan's policy. When Reagan arrived here, he immediately warned Schmidt of dependence on Soviet energy. The chancellor responded that the piline would supply only 5 to 10 percent of German energy needs. Reagan persisted, suggesting U.S. help in providing alternative energy sources — coal and nuclear — in place of Soviet gas.

This U.S. hard line in Ottawa came only after internal battling in Washington, and the same was true of Reagan's position on so-called North-South issues. State Department positions on aid to the underdeveloped Southern Hemisphere Secretary of State Robert Hormats, who was a senior official in the Carter administration.

Freedom Of Information Act Is Being Abused

WASHINGTON — Three centuries ago an English moralist laid down a rule for the ages: Stain not fair acts with foul intentions. Let me commend that maxim to a House sub-committee studying the Freedom of Information Act.

The FOIA of 1966 was a fair act indeed. It remains, at bottom, a fair act. The whole purpose of the law was to promote open, accountable government' Those of us who fought for the FOIA — mostly journalists, scholars and contemporary historians — were in open revolt against the cover-up tendencies of the federal bureaucracy.

Let me dwell upon that problem for a moment. Things are better now than they used to be, thanks in substantial part to the FOIA, but we still war constantly against the closed meeting, the classified document, the stone walls of bureaucratic secrecy. Human nature does not change. If a federal program has been mismanaged, be certain that the managers will move heaven and earth to conceal their mistakes. Time after time, the FOIA has made it possible to disclose blunders and to hasten their correction.

This was the primary foundation for the act. The law also was intended to help individuals who believed they had been treated unjustly by an agency of government. The law was designed to let them pry loose the government's records. So far as the FOIA operates for these admirable purposes, the act of course must be preserved.

But 15 years of experience suggest that, just as the moralist warned, the fairest act may be stained by foul intentions. That is what is happening here.

In his statement opening House hearings, Glenn English, D-Okla., spoke of "the importance of the public's right to know." The familiar phrase demands definition. The public's right to know what? Plainly, the public does not have an absolute right to know everything in the government's files. The law itself creates nine areas of exemption. The public's right to know, it seems to me, goes chiefly to the actions of government agencies and employees, and to the records they themselves create.

The FOIA has not worked out that way. A fair guess is that only 10 percent of the requests for information have come from journalists and scholars. The overwhelming bulk of requests have nothing whatever to do with "the public's right to know." At the Department of Justice, 93 percent of the requests come from lawyers seeking an advantage in antitrust cases, or from felons seeking access to FBI files, or from underworld figures on fishing expeditions. At the Drug Enforcement Administration, 60 percent of the requests come from the criminal element.

The most widespread use of the FOIA comes from businessmen seeking access to their competitors' records. Mr. English pooh-poohed this argument. He wants proof of "industrial espionage" and "piracy." The committee's actions, he said, "must be based on facts and not on perceptions."

Some of the witnesses have offered facts. The National Meat Association cited massive, unwarranted disclosures of trade information to the meat packers union. Another witness testified to Sikorsky Aircraft!s decision to refuse a government helicopter contract rather than risk disclosure of technical secrets. Procter & Gamble told of its submission in 1980 to the Food and Drug Administration of a new, confidential chemical. The FDA, responding to an FOIA request, proceeded to release the total package of confidential and non-confidential information to the dominant competitive firm in that market."

Jack D. Early, representing the National Agricultural Chemicals Association, gave a plausible explanation for the sparsity of horror stories: "In our industry, case histories of competitive injury are not broadcast because the slightest suggestion that certain protected data have become available would only serve to increase the harm already created by such release."

The point is that perceptions do matter. If the FOIA is perceived as a loose sieve for trade secrets, or as a risk to informants in criminal cases, the wells of information will dry up. Newsmen love the FOIA. We brought it into being. It is our law. But sad to say, our law is being badly abused.

To the editor:

The forces of growth impacting on Pitt County are significant and demand the services of a professional planner. I am dismayed to learn that the County Commissioners have eliminated that position from the budget.

Even though the need to keep taxes down was an overriding mandate, I feel sure the loss of a County Planner will prove shortsighted. Planning is basic to orderly growth, and it anticipates problems before they develop. Good planning integrates development with the larger scheme of land use and community needs. The salary of a competent planner is a small price to pay to avoid poorly conceived and haphazard designs for a dynamically changing and growing area.

Earl Trevathan, M.D.
Greenville

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the two letters you printed in the July 21 Hotline column concerning the intersection of Red Banks Road and Highway 43. Also, the adjacent traffic area.

My usual lack of concern gave way to rage as I rethought the responses of Mr. England (district traffic engineer). In my final judgment, they were "Typical Bureaucratic Rhetoric."

I would like to make the following points:

I, too, have seen the traffic signal at this intersection cycle in an irregular pattern, thus, causing excessive reaction to get stopped when you expect to have a green light for more than three or four seconds.

I agree that the Highway 43 speed limit should be reduced to 35 mph from approximately the Fast Fare to Greenville Boulevard.

I do not understand what the "amount of developed land" has to do with the situation, when the volume of traffic is of such a magnitude in this area.

This intersection and stretch of Highway 43 handle traffic from four major apartment complexes, one complex of condominiums, approximately 10 business, not including doctors' offices, and other construction just to mention the immediate area. Also, Highway 43 is one of the two main highways entering Greenville from the South.

I agree that a warning device on Highway 43, north and south of the intersection, would be most appropriate in this congested area.

If a 35 mph speed limit in this area is not appropriate and would "congest the area," per Mr. England, what is appropriate?

This issue brings to mind what it took to get railroad crossing warning lights and barricades at Greenville Boulevard and 14th Street Extension — MANY DEATHS. I think four deaths are already too many, and it's time for Mr. England and his organization to stop saying what we can't do and start action on the rights things to be done.

Lastly, I took Mr. England's final statement to infer that not obeying the traffic signal caused the accident resulting in three deaths. He is not the final judge of this and I feel this to be most inappropriate and in very poor taste. I would hate to think that a malfunctioning traffic signal and/or excessive allowable speed limits were the real causes in light of his apathy.

Chrysler Did It 'For Uncle Sam'

NEW YORK (AP) — Lee Iacocca says he won it for Uncle Sam. The coach of the amazing Chryslers eked out a quarterly profit for his embattled team at a time when even Las Vegas had almost given up quoting odds.

Amid a gray cloud of doubt about the ability of Americans to compete, he told a National Press Club audience in Washington that "The progress Chrysler has made over the past two years is living proof of how much Americans can accomplish if they work together."

He left no doubt that henceforth he considers himself a spokesman not only for Chrysler Corp., which nearly had been written off two years ago, but for all U.S. industry, which he claimed is still the world's best.

However, Iacocca made an omission.

Those in the audience quietly added to the list another reason for Chrysler's survival so far: a $1.2 billion bailout with federal government loan guarantees, designed to reassure lenders and help develop their otherwise uncreative lending instincts.

But with his chest thrust toward the future, cocky Iacocca offered only pity for the defeatists, "angry because we didn't have the good grace to walk away and let Chrysler die."

They had, he said, believed "Detroit builds nothing but junk, assembled with disregard for the corporate good by American workers who never come to work on Mondays or Fridays."

There was a pause. "Baloney," he snapped.

The idea that the Japanese are superior industrialists who have left American manufacturers in their wake is a myth, he said. He wondered aloud if Americans were "suffering from a kind of national amnesia about our industrial and technological past."

Nobody, he said, "has ever convinced me the Japanese build better cars than we do."

Because it squeezed a second-quarter profit of $11.6 million from sales of $3.09 billion, after losing $536 million in the comparable three months a year ago, Coach Iacocca seemed convinced that Chrysler workers, shareholders and buyers should be dancing in the streets.

Iacocca said Chrysler has installed the latest technology; become the industry's front-wheel drive leader; formed a new relationship with unions; come up with creative financing; and introduced "the best product lineup in our history at the right price."

And some critics have raised their assessments of Chrysler, but the company has much rebuilding to do.

A third-quarter loss is likely; a fourth-quarter loss is possible; and for the year, there's likely to be more red than black in the book of statistics.

In short, Chrysler still could go under.

Reagan Steps Out With Foreign Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — With one major summit conference behind him and another coming in the fall, President Reagan has a chance to shore up his standing in the area the pollsters see as his major weakness with the public: foreign affairs.

As always, the American president was a leading man at the economic summit just concluded in Ottawa. Reagan will be in that role again next October, when world leaders meet at Cancun, Mexico, to discuss the relationship between developed and developing nations.

Reagan has been somewhat defensive of late in the face of suggestions that his administration has not advanced a clear foreign policy. He says that it has, and is, and that there is no need for him to deliver a set speech that would be a blueprint of his goals abroad.

But the latest AP-NBC News poll shows a majority of Americans feel the president has not made his foreign policy clear. The poll indicates a far higher level of confidence in his handling of domestic matters.

That is due in large measure to Reagan's concentration on cutting the federal budget and reducing taxes, with other issues subordinated or left until later.

It also is a leftover item from the 1980 campaign, in which Democrats stressed Reagan's inexperience in foreign affairs and tried to plant the notion that he might lead the country into war.

He overcame the campaign issue. But there still is evidence that the voters aren't nearly as satisfied with his foreign policy leadership as with his program at home.

The AP-NBC poll showed that 51 percent of the public feels Reagan has failed to make clear just what his foreign policy is. Thirty-two percent said they felt the administration course was clear.

Forty percent rated Reagan's foreign policy record good or excellent. Thirty-seven percent said it was fair, 14 percent poor, and the rest weren't sure.

That was Reagan's lowest job rating in any of the presidential performance areas measured by the poll taken July 13-14. It is well below the 55 percent good-to-excellent rating the public gives his work as president overall.

The poll was conducted before the Ottawa summit, at which Reagan acknowledged that he was "still in the first-year class," but also said that the economic talks had built common understanding and purpose among the seven leaders.

Summit conferences are almost invariably pronounced successful, or at least productive, by the government leaders who conduct them. And they usually help the image at home, too.

Jimmy Carter's standing in the polls picked up nicely after his first major trip abroad in 1977.

Auto Quotas Upset Japanese Manufacturers

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese automakers have long been targets of criticism in the United States and Europe, but the government's enforced curtailment of exports to those two markets has brought about harsh words here, too.

The car companies are angry at the government for giving in to foreign pressures to cut sales in their two big overseas markets, they are angry at their foreign competitors, and they are angry at each over what they consider unfair divisions of the export pie.

The cutback in exports to areas that account for 60 percent of Japan's car sales has left the Japanese scrambling to make up their losses in a "car war" at home and in untapped markets abroad.

The sharp reductions in export quotas for 1981, based on sales of each company in 1979-80, hit at a time when vehicle production is expected to exceed the record 11.04 million units that rolled off Japanese assembly lines in 1980.

"There is real concern in the industry about developments running contrary to the interests of free trade," says Shoichiro Toyoda, newly appointed president of Toyota Motor Sales Co., the marketing arm of Toyota Motor Co., Japan's largest automaker.

He says the U.S.-Japan agreement is a "disservice to the best interests of auto users around the world and makes us heavy of heart."

In addition to the unhappiness over the export curtailment, the automakers are upset over the quotas set by the government.

"They (the government) told us they would spread the unhappiness around evenly, but some of us are more unhappy than others," Toyoda says.

Toyota and rival Nissan Motor Co., maker of Datsun cars, both contend that the government gave "special consideration" in setting quotas for smaller makers which have not yet established the sort of U.S. sales network that last year gave Japan about 25 percent of the American car market.

The smaller makers such as Honda Motor Co. Ltd., Isuzu Motors Ltd. and Mitsubishi Motors Corp. are not happy with the quotas either, however. They accuse the "Big Two" automakers of increasing their U.S. exports in anticipation of a cutback agreement.

The quotas stem from a May 1 agreement with the United States to cut Japanese car shipments to 1.68 million in fiscal 1981, from about 1.82 million in 1980. The "voluntary restraint" has no legal authority, but the car makers reluctantly agreed to comply. The cutback is to last through 1982, but may be extended a third year.

Neither the government nor the companies have disclosed details of the agreement, but rough estimates put Toyota's quota at 518,000 vehicles, down about 7,000 from its 1979-80 average. Nissan's quota is estimated at 453,000 units, a cut of 6,000.

The cutbacks will be an economic hardship for Japan, an island nation with few natural resources that depends heavily on exports. Many industry officials say that placing controls on the leading export industry by Japan's own government has ominous undertones. The action apparently is unprecedented, although in the past the United States has placed its own restrictions on Japanese textiles, television sets and steel.

Domestic sales account for only about 40 percent of Japanese car sales. The U.S. market takes roughly 40 percent, while Europe takes 20 percent.

Really, Now, Who Misses Baseball?

Several weeks ago "Sunday Morning" aired a segment bemoaning the absence of baseball from this year's summer scene. The implication was that the dispute between owners and players has in some way devitalized the entire American populace. In fact, the strike has in many instances caused intense cultural deprivation, at least according to the Chicago ghetto residents who, with faces straighter than a line drive to center field, told interviewers that without baseball poor people had nothing to do.

Well, I'm sorry, Charles Kuralt, but as far as I'm concerned, you're way off base on this one. I couldn't even bat an eyelash over that particular sob story. In the first place, anyone who can't find anything better to do with his free time than watch the Cubs ought to be locked in a Shea Stadium dug-out where he can't harm himself or other people.

In the second place, anyone who can convince me that he is both poor and can afford baseball tickets, too, ought to be selling snake oil in Beverly Hills. With the money it costs to see one major league game, a man could attend a production at a dinner theater, make a week-end of it at an amusement park, throw a party with mixed drinks and a live band, play the horses, or open a small business.

I find that I can muster less sympathy for the players than I can for the spectators. I have never understood how those prima donnas can pull down six and seven figure salaries for flexing, on the average, fewer muscles per game than I flex when hanging out the wash. At the risk of being branded as un-American, I would rather sit and watch Phillip nap than watch a pro baseball game.

I realize that major league baseball has its exciting moments. Somewhere at the bottom of a box of memorabilia I have a little card that certifies my presence at the Atlanta Stadium when Hank Aaron hit his 500th home run. But the thing I remember most about the pro baseball games I've attended is that, for the most part, the people in the stands present a far more interesting spectacle than the people on the field.

What's more, that kind of local color is at least equally available at a minor league or a sandlot game, and the public is treated to more coverage of it as sportswriters and sportscasters turn their attention to these less sterile forms of the sport. I think of this as cultural enrichment, not as cultural deprivation. It calls for far more imagination than just reading a list of scores.

One sportscaster got so imaginative during this strike that he went out and covered a tricycle race, complete with interviews of the participants, who proved to be far more articulate than the average pro ball player.

This cultural enrichment also extends to the family. For two whole months or more I have been spared the sight of a grown man riveted to the television drama of other grown men as they scratch, chaw and spit.

As I write this, I am listening to one cautious but hopeful sportscaster predict that the strike may soon be over. Too bad. If the wives of America could just figure out a way to keep sports off TV through football season, we might even be able to stop worrying about the survival of the American family.

Facing South: Hot Air Rises, Cool Air Falls

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — In 1920 or thereabouts, Birmingham's Carolyn Smith — one of the South's first woman architects — designed a cooling system to "lower the interior temperature of houses many degrees." Now 86 years old, Mrs. Smith still lives in one of the houses she desigend.

"During the last 50 years, the house's annual cooling load has been so effectively dealt with," says Mrs. Smith, "that neither air conditioning nor fans need to be used so long as windows remain open."

The house's cooling system is built in the simple principle that hot air rises and cool air falls.

Mrs. Smith knew as a child that she wanted to build houses, and later had to overcome her parents' qualms about her ambition, as architecture was not considered a proper career for a woman of that day. Architectural schools were rare in this country, and none was located in Birmingham. So Mrs. Smith taught herself.

She built her first house in 1914, opened a series of lumber yards and continued building until she had constructed literally hundreds of naturally cooled houses. (Her cooling system works on natural principles, without an active energy source, such as electricity or oil.

In 1923, Mrs. Smith built her own house. Of an English style with its long axis oriented north and south, the house is about 3,000 square feet large. it is framed in 2-by-4 balloon framing, with stone laid up to the framing on the outside. The walls are hollow between the stone, the framing and the plaster. Cool air comes into the house from four awning windows — encompassing about 24 square feet — placed all around the house and opening from the basement into the wall cavities.

To increase the effect of her ventilation system, Mrs. Smith raised many of the other windows in the house to ceiling height, to circulate the hot air that otherwise would stagnate. The first floor has casement windows, while those upstairs are double-hung. There is also an exposed fireplace chimney stack which increases ventilation. Since the house is mostly one room deep, a tremendous amount of cross-ventilation occurs. The essence of the system, according to Mrs. Smith, is to have the "whole house sheathed in moving air."

Let's take a look ar how the house operates on a typical hot, humid Birmingham summer day. The morning finds the ground covered with dew; the temperature is in the low-to-mid 70s. The grass in front of the basement windows is cool, and cool moist air falls into the basement. This heavy air pushes warmer, lighter air up through the wall cavities and eventually out of the house.

The sun comes up and starts heating the eastern wall. As the elements of the system warm, more air moves tharough the cavity, absorbing this heat and carrying it up and out pf the exhaust vents in the attic. The amount of heat the sun delivers to the system determines the volume of air moving through the system, and consequently the amount of heat removed from the house. It's a tidy, self-regulating process.

Night-time comes, but outside it's still hot as a cloud cover keeps the heat hovering over the city. The basement of the house is still the same temperature that it was in the morning, and cool air from it continues to push hot air up and out. Although the sun is no longer heating the house, the walls and roof have absorbed enough sun during the day to keep the hot air rising through the house and out the attic vents. Most of the heat that the house receives in a 24-hour period is thus removed before it has a chance to warm the inner skin of the building. Mrs. Smith's simple cooling system also dehumidifies the house, through the motion of the air and the action of the sun.

George Gallup

Poll

PRINCETON, N.J. — As President Ronald Reagan rounds out his first six months in office, 61 percent of Americans approve of his handling of his presidential duties while 28 percent disapprove — about the same levels found in Gallup surveys conducted since early June.

Consistent with earlier survey results, Reagan gets generally lower marks for his performance in office from Democrats, women, persons with little formal education and blacks than he does from other segments of the population. In the current survey, for example, Reagan receives a positive job rating from 55 percent of women, 43 percent of Democrats, 44 percent of persons with only a grade school education and 13 percent of blacks.

The president's positions on ERA and abortion and his generally "hawkish" military stance have bothered some women. Democrats and socially-disadvantaged groups, including many blacks, are fearful about the effects of the Reagan administration's proposed cuts in social programs and the perceived inequities of the planned tax reduction.

Yet the latest findings show President Reagan to be disproportionately popular as a person not only among groups which generally approve of his overall job performance but also among those which have been more critical.

Currently, eight in 10 Americans, 79 percent, say they approve of Reagan personally, an 18-point improvement over his 61 percent competency rating.

The greatest disparities between personal and performance ratings are recorded for women (23 points), Democrats (27), the grade-school-educated (29) and blacks (28 points).

Although three times more blacks express positive attitudes about Reagan as a person than approve of his performance in office, they remain the only demographic group in which less than a majority approves of Reagan, the man.

The following table compares President Reagan's job approval ratings with positive assessments of him as a person.

Reagan Approval Ratings

	Approve of Reagan's job performance	Approve of Reagan as a person	Percent difference
NATIONAL	61%	79%	up 18
Republicans	85	89	up 4
Democrats	43	70	up 27
Independents	61	82	up 21
Whites	66	83	up 17
Blacks	13	41	up 28
College education	69	82	up 13
High school	61	79	up 18
Grade school	44	73	up 29
Under 30 years	58	80	up 22
30-49 years	64	79	up 15
50 and older	60	78	up 18
Men	67	80	up 13

Intensity Of Job Approval

Analysis of the intensity with which the public holds its views on Reagan's job performance shows that 34 percent approve "very strongly" and 27 percent "not so strongly." The overall disapproval figure breaks down into 11 percent, mild, and 17 percent strong, disapproval.

The strength of President Reagan's appeal is such that it is only among the latter group that more disapprove than approve of Reagan as a person.

The following table compares Reagan's personal ratings on the part of those who disapprove of his performance in office:

Reagan's Personal Vs. Performance Ratings

	Disapproval of Reagan's job performance
	Total	Strong	Mild
Rating as a person:
Approve	53%	71%	40%
Disapprove	33	18	44
No opinion	14	11	16
	100%	100%	100%

The results were based on in-person interviews with 1,281 adults, 18 and older, conducted in scientifically-selected localities across the nation during the period July 17-19.

For results based on a sample of this size, one can say with 95 percent confidence that the error attributable to sampling and other random effects could be four percentage points in either direction.

President Reportedly Called Off Harsh U.S. Attacks On Begin

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan personally ordered a reversal of what was a harsh, concerted and mounting campaign by top administration officials to condemn Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, according to a knowledgable administration official.

"Everybody was mad as hell at Begin — except one man," said the official who watched the byplay from a ringside seat. "He was the man who counted."

Anger with Begin followed Israel's attack on PLO positions in a heavily civilian neighborhood of Beirut. U.S. officials were quick to denounce Begin, first off the record, then publicly.

But by week's end, largely through Reagan's intercession, the focus had shifted from Begin's hard-line strategy to ending hostilities in southern Lebanon, a change in direction smoothed by U.S. mediator Philip Habib's success in achieving a cease-fire.

The only top adviser said to be "in synch" with Reagan all along was Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. He held his fire while lower-level officials accused Begin of trying to split the United States from its moderate Arab friends and, as one put it, "rubbing our noses in it" by launching the Beirut attack shortly before the administration was to resume jet shipments to Israel.

Delivery of 10 F16s was subsequently suspended.

"Reagan has a very special affection for Israel," said the official who watched the turnabout. "It came out during the campaign and it was and is genuine. You have to look at the president as someone who sees Israel as an oasis of democracy in the area, and a loyal ally."

Besides, the official doubts the strategy of trying to moderate Begin's policies could succeed since his domestic critics probably would rally behind their leader if he was under concentrated U.S. attack. The official did not want to be identified by name.

When the official attacks on Begin went public on Wednesday, it seemed to reflect a solid administration line.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger unloaded on Begin in a nationally televised interview. Deputy Secretary of State William Clark, a longtime Reagan confidante, weighed in at just about the same time during a breakfast meeting with reporters.

Weinberger said envoy Habib was on the verge of a breakthrough in his Mideast negotiations when Israel launched the air strike on the Palestinian Liberation Organization outposts Beirut.

Clark was assumed to be reflecting Reagan's views when he declared "our commitments are not to Mr. Begin but to the nation he represents" — thereby drawing a line between the prime minister and the Israelis.

White House Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes underscored the criticism of Begin by saying Weinberger was speaking for the administration. He was wrong.

Reagan gave the first signal of his disapproval of his subordinates' stand when he spoke to reporters Wednesday afternoon on his return from a horseback ride. He reminded them that the Israelis were under PLO fire.

"They are subject to repeated rocket attacks on civilian quarters themselves," he said. "We want an end to the violence on both sides."

The strategy then was to stress that Weinberger and Clark had expressed what another official described later as "their personal assessment" of Begin, not the administration's.

"We all talked about how we might handle it," said the official, who insisted on anonymity. "We wanted to make it clear those were their personal views and that there was no disagreement on our wanting a cessation of hostilities."

The ink was barely dry on Thursday morning headlines when Reagan's chief of staff, James A. Baker III, had breakfast with the same reporters as Clark. He told them:

"There's no change in relations between us and Israel. To the extent that Clark and Weinberger made value judgments with regard to Begin, they were speaking for themselves. To the extent they were calling for restraint and moderation on the part of all in the Middle East, they were speaking for the administration."

Pressed on the subject of Clark's personal friendship with the president, Baker said "Clark does not see the president with the frequency he used to."

IRA Supporters March Peacefully

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — More than 7,000 supporters of Irish nationalist hunger strikers in Northern Ireland trudged peacefully through Dublin Saturday, watched by 3,000 helmeted police in driving rain.

With a 650-man battalion of armed troops standing by, the marchers made no effort to approach the British Embassy, scene of bloody clashes between thousands of demonstrators and police a week earlier that left more than 200 injured.

Authorities had feared a repetition of violence, but police said there was no serious trouble. Three men from Dublin were arrested for possession of potential weapons and a nailed club, a slingshot with ball bearings and a pointed steel pole were confiscated.

Marchers chanting "Brits out" and flanked by several hundred Dublin police delivered a petition to Leinster House, seat of the Dublin government, asking Irish Prime Minister Garret Fitzgerald to pressure Britain to negotiate with the hunger strikers.

After last week's march by 10,000 protesters, Dublin police put heavy guards outside Irish government buildings and the British Home Stores department store on O'Connell Street, the Irish capital's main street.

Saturday's parade began at the adjacent general post office, emotional symbol of Irish nationalism and center of the 1916 Easter uprising against British rule. Ireland was partitioned in 1922, with the 26 overwhelmingly Roman Catholic southern counties forming Eire, an independent Irish Republic, and the British retaining control of Ulster, the six Protestant-dominated counties in the north.

Bernadette Devlin McAliskey, a Roman Catholic civil rights reformer in the north, former member of the British parliament and leader of the national H-Block committee which is coordinating support for the hunger strikers, appealed to the marchers to be "dignified and peaceful."

"The sons of your countrymen are dying the most painful death you can imagine," Mrs. McAliskey told a rally before the march.

Jim Gibney, another H-Block committee leader, told the demonstrators they could soon "be counting the lives of hunger strikers who die in double figures. The hunger strike has gone for nearly 150 days and could go until the new year."

Gibney called on the Dublin government "to save these men's lives" by standing up to Britain. "Tell them that these men are political prisoners. Support the prisoners. That is the only way to end the hunger strike."

The Irish Republican Army and its splinter groups are fighting to oust the British from Northern Ireland, where Protestants outnumber Catholics by 2-to-1, and unite it with the Irish Republic.

At Northern Ireland's Maze Prison outside Belfast, two hunger strikers were "lingering on the verge of death," according to Sinn Fein, the legal political wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army.

Kieran Doherty, 65 days without food, and Kevin Lynch, on hunger strike for 64 days, were in critical condition in the Maze hospital wing, Sinn Fein said. Both men are 25 years old. Doherty was elected a member of the Irish Parliament on June 11.

Patrick Quinn, another hunger striker in the Maze, was reportedly displaying the same symptoms as Martin Hurson, who died July 13 in the 45th day of his hunger strike. Sinn Fein said Hurson died after internal organ failure.

Six hunger strikers, starting with Bobby Sands on May 5, have died in the protest fast by convicted guerrillas of the IRA and the Irish National Liberation Army, an IRA splinter group.

Britain has refused to negotiate with the eight surviving hunger strikers on their demands for special privileges the British claim amount to prisoner-of-war status.

Indians' Claim Rejected

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A federal judge has thrown out a suit brought by Oneida Indians claiming 5 million acres in upstate New York and almost 200 years of rent payments.

In the first of several Indian land cases pending before him, U.S. District Judge Neal McCurn ruled late Friday that the Oneidas had no legal basis to claim the land, which includes the cities of Binghamton, Watertown, Rome and Oneida and affects as many as 125,000 landowners.

McCurn said that the Oneidas sold the land to New York and that the fledgling state had the authority to buy it under treaties dating to 1785 and 1788, when the country was governed under the Articles of Confederation.

The Oneidas had argued that under the U.S. Constitution and the Non-Intercourse Act of 1791, only the federal government had the power to purchase land from Indians.

"Crucial to the plaintiffs' argument is their assertion that the Constitution was in effect on Sept. 22, 1788 — the date on which the treaty was concluded," McCurn wrote in his 102-page decision.

Polish Demonstrators Protest Food Shortage

KUTNO, Poland (AP) — Hundreds of protesters marched through this central Polish town calling for an end to food shortages Saturday, and the independent union Solidarity threatened to call strikes if necessary to keep meat rations from dropping.

A crowd of several hundred gathered in a driving rain in Kutno, about 60 miles west of Warsaw, but the downpour ceased when the march began and the number of demonstrators swelled to about 1,000.

Protesters carried placards that said, "We demand economic reform, not price increases" and "We demand life on the level of a civilized country."

Their route took them past shops with empty shelves, including a bakery with a sign saying it had not had any goods since July 12. At their destination, "Freedom Plaza," union leaders read a resolution sent to Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski outlining the town's complaints.

The crowd cheered wildly on hearing the resolution, which blamed the government for food shortages, and railed against "inefficiency, incompetence, and ignorance of basic principles about supplying the market."

"At a moment when the whole nation should concentrate on work on the ruined economy, we think only about one thing: when and what to buy," the resolution said.

"We are unable to think about anything else."

HANDS OFF?

NEW YORK (AP) — The national shortage of word processor training programs may result in millions of dollars of equipment laying idle, warns the head of a national temporary office service.

"Training manuals now widely used are no substitute for the regular, supervised keyboard practice 'hands-on' training provides. After all, you wouldn't learn to drive a car by watching a movie or reading a book on the subject," William Olsten says.

BEACH DRAGON — Tourist Sal Bianco of Scarsdale, N.Y., found a way to pass the time while vacationing at Myrtle Beach, S.C., by building this replica of the dragon portrayed in J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Hobbit." Bianco said it took him four hours to build the sand dragon. (AP Laserphoto)

Air Controllers Expected To Reject Pact

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Air traffic controllers are all but certain to reject their tentative contract this week, bringing back the threat of a nationwide controllers strike that could severely interrupt air travel next month.

Both sides in the protracted labor dispute have said they want to resume negotiations if the contract is rejected as it is widely believed it will be.

The votes are to be tallied Tuesday with the results expected to be announced Wednesday, union officials said.

Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis has repeatedly said the Reagan administration will provide no more money than the $40 million package that is now before the union's rank and file. He has said the union can shift the package around to best meet their needs.

But the question is whether that will be enough for the controllers who have loudly denounced the $40 million wage and benefits offer tentatively agreed to by negotiators after all-night bargaining June 22.

The package amounts to a 6.6 percent yearly increase over the next three years in wages and benefits. The government says it would amount to an average $2,000 a year increase for the controllers, but union officials have said that because many controllers would not receive all of the benefits, the increase is actually less.

The package would be in addition to an expected 4.8 percent wage hike that all government employees will receive later this year. Controllers now earn an average of about $33,000 a year, with a low of $20,500 and a high of $49,200.

Robert E. Poli, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, has been touring the country to get not only a clear impression of what the 15,000 unionized controllers want, but also to determine how much true support there is for a strike should he want to call one.

In the closing hours of negotiations June 22, Poli failed to get 80 percent approval for a strike as is required by union rules, but many union members believe enough votes are there now for a strike if the administration fails to come up with more money.

The controllers are employees of the Federal Aviation Administration, which has a contingency plan aimed at keeping half of the commercial air traffic flying in case of a strike. Nevertheless a walkout would cause widespread disruption and could cost the airline industry up to $100 million a day, industry officials said.

Neither union leaders or officials of the Transportation Department would speculate in interviews what will transpire if the tentative contract is rejected, although that it is certain the union will immediately seek to reopen negotiations.

New talks might not begin, however, until next week and by some accounts the threat of a strike probably would not surface for another week.

Sources on both sides of the dispute, while asking not to be identified by name, emphasized that any attempt to forecast a strike would be guesswork.

"We just don't know what they're going to do," one administration official said. Another government source implied that the administration probably will spend several days examining the request for new negotiations before giving a response.

Nevertheless, FAA officials have made it clear that the government will move swiftly to seek both civil and criminal prosecution of the controllers if a strike is called.

Because the controllers are government employees, they are prohibited by law against striking.

At the same time the Justice Department has advised U.S. attorneys around the country to prepare the paperwork to take quick legal actions against any controllers who walk off their jobs.

Andrea Doria Survivors Recall Tragedy At Sea

NANTUCKET, Mass. (AP) —. The menu at Saturday's Gifford family reunion featured a "leak pate," with "floating islands" for dessert.

But despite the jokes, there were grim memories of the sinking of the Andrea Doria — the spectacular sea disaster that six members of the family survived.

Twenty-five years ago, on July 25, 1956, K. Dun Gifford and his family were aboard the Italian luxury liner when the motor vessel Stockholm appeared out of the fog and rammed the Andrea Doria amidships, opening a hole in the great liner's side.

The 29,000-ton ship sank in 235 feet of water 11 hours later, claiming 50 lives. Another 1,660 people survived, including the Gifford family.

"There is a thankfulness that we all got out with no injuries,' says Gifford, who was 18 in 1956 and now is chairman of the board of Nantucket Electric. "But we all do have unpleasant memories of the injured, the panic and the fear."

The Giffords were returning from a tour of Europe. One day out of New York, Gifford was in the ballroom, sitting on a couch and "having yet another stinger." His family was downstairs, packing.

As Gifford talked to friends, he saw the red glow of lights approaching the ship. He didn't know it at the time, but the lights were from the Stockholm, bearing down on the liner.

At 11:09 p.m. the Stockholm's bow, reinforced to push through the winter ice of Scandinavian harbors, drove into the liner's starboard side, opening a 45-foot gash from its keel to its weather deck.

Blame for the collision was never established. Although there was heavy fog in the area, both ships were equipped with the latest in radar and navigation equipment.

Gifford said the impact threw him in the middle of the dance floor. Lights went out. The ship began to list almost immediately. There was panic.

"The list was so bad you couldn't stand," said Gifford. "You had to lie down or brace yourself against something."

When the lifeboats began loading, Gifford was faced with an angonizing decision: To stay with his father, Clarence, or leave with his mother and the other children. His parents decided it would be better if Gifford used his sailing skills aboard the lifeboat.

"It was a terrible moment," he recalled. "I was so torn because I was in the middle. I was 18 and wanted to stay with my father and the other men, and I knew it was important that I go."

The scene aboard the lifeboat was eerie. It was quiet, the only light came from the emergency lights aboard the stricken liner.

"Then all of a sudden, like a giant billboard in the sky, was the Ile De France," he said. "People cried and cheered."

After getting his family settled on the deck of the French liner, Gifford went in search of some word about his father. While wandering the passageways, he came upon his father.

GARAGE FIRE — Greenville firefighters work to put out a fire in a garage apartment at 207 Raleigh Ave. late Friday. The fire apparently started in the downstairs garage area of the structure, causing heavy fire and smoke damage to the contents of the garage, the kitchen and bedroom upstairs, and the wood-frame building. The cause of the fire had not been determined. (Reflector Photo By Larry Zicherman)

Williams' Statements May Have Role In Trial

ATLANTA (AP) — Statements Wayne B. Williams gave police when they questioned him in the Atlanta murder cases could play a prominent role in the prosecution's case against him, an Atlanta newspaper reports.

Williams, a 23-year-old free-lance photographer and self-styled music promoter, has been indicted in two of the 28 murders of young blacks here. He came to police attention when officers staking out a Chattahoochee River bridge heard a splash in the river around 3 a.m. on May 22 and noticed a car moving slowly over the bridge.

Williams explained his presence on the bridge at that hour by saying he had been to a nightclub and was trying to locate the home address of a woman he wanted to interview before auditioning her, police said.

But The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution said in their Sunday edition that law enforcement officers contend they are prepared to show both claims are false.

Such a demonstration in any criminal proceeding could prod jurors into asking themselves why the defendant would have lied to police, the newspaper quoted area prosecutors as saying.

Williams has been charged with the slayings of Nathaniel Cater, 27, whose body was found in the river two days after police questioned Williams near the bridge, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21. His attorney, Mary Welcome, contends he is innocent.

Asked about investigators' reported attempts to disprove some of Williams' statements, Ms. Welcome said, "I don't have any response. That's just about as ridiculous as some of the other things they're trying to do," the newspaper reported.

Fulton County District Attorney Lewis Slaton has turned aside qu stions about possible evidence or strategies for prosecuting the case.

A trial date has not been set.

Williams was questioned near the Chattahoochee River bridge on May 22 and then released but placed under surveillance.

Drought Adds Salt To Rivers

BELHAVEN, N.C. (UPI) — The long-running drought is helping make eastern North Carolina's streams and sounds saltier, a change that brings some problems but also many benefits.

Officials say that, because there isn't enough rainfall to flush salt water out of the streams and into the ocean, the Pasquotank River at Elizabeth City now has about eight parts of salt to 1,000 parts of water.

"It usually runs abut 1 part per 1,000," said Harold B. Johnson of Elizabeth City, coordinator for the state Division of Marine Fisheries.

Meanwhile, the Pungo River near Pamlico Sound is twice as salty as usual. As a result, places like the Pungo area are almost clogged with jellyfish, a creature that normally resides in the ocean.

Don Whitley, retired general manager of the Daily Advance in Elizabeth City, said fishermen are catching salt water bluefish in the middle of his town.

"I've talked to some of the old folks who hang around the marinas and they say they never remember bluefish being in here this time of year," he said. "Some people from Rocky Mount who usually go to the ocean to fish for bluefish are stopping off here instead."

James T. Brown, chief of fisheries services for the state, said the drought isn't the only cause of the increase in salinity. He said northeast winds are driving in "wedges" of salt water up the rivers and creeks.

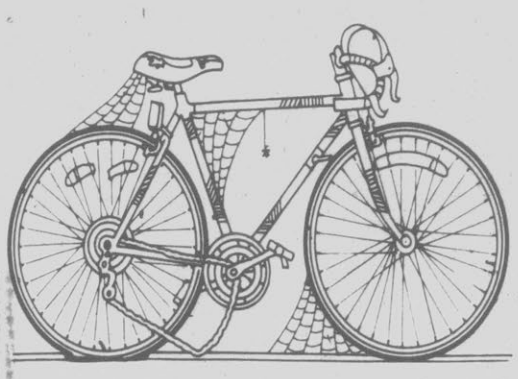

The increase in salt disappoints some fresh water sportsmen because it drives their kind of fish out of the usual fishing holes. But Brown sees some advantages to the change for commercial fishermen.

"It could help the shrimp harvest by creating a larger nursery for shrimp," he said.

Brown added that the high salt content could negate some of the algae problems in area rivers caused by fertilizer that runs off nearby farm soil. And he and Johnson say outbreaks of "red sore" disease — a bacterial fungus that infects fish — will be hampered by the salt water.

The jellyfish cause problems, but they are not considered dangerous. Janet Mercer of Washington's Beaufort County Hospital said no one has come to her emergency room for treatment of jellyfish stings.

"Most people just treat themselves," she said.

Tehran Radio Reports Victory For Rajai

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Mohammad Ali Rajai, the standard-bearer of Iran's ruling Moslem fundamentalists, won a landslide victory in Iran's violence-plagued presidential election, Tehran Radio reported Saturday.

The state-run radio also said another man was shot to death in a submachine-gun attack in Tehran, raising to 14 the number of people killed in the campaign by anti-government militants to disrupt the election.

The broadcast quoted an Interior Ministry statement as saying Rajai received 9.6 million votes — more than 90 percent — of a total 10.4 million counted by Saturday night.

A ministry spokesman said it would take at least one more day for the vote tally from Friday's polling to be completed, and the total number of votes cast was not announced.

Rajai was not formally proclaimed president.

Tehran Radio said leftists attacked a southwestern Tehran police station and killed one civilian in a burst of submachine-gun fire. One of the group of attackers was apprehended before he could toss a grenade, it added.

Pars, the official Iranian news agency, said Reolutionary Guards seized several members of the outlawed Paykar organization and a large cache of weapons and ammunition in a Tehran house Saturday. It did not say how many members of the Marxist group were captured but said the weapons included 120 handguns, 60 rifles, 40 submachine guns and 1,200 hand grenades.

The Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, in a statement broadcast by the radio, said 11 guards were killed in the bomb explosions and shootings that marked Friday's day of polling. The radio said two pedestrians also perished in a bomb explosion under a suburban Tehran bridge.

Authorities attributed the violence to the underground leftist Mujahedeen Khalq, which had promised to disrupt the balloting to choose a successor to ousted President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr.

Voters also chose 39 members of the Majlis, or Parliament, filling vacant seats.

The three other candidates for president had said they planned to vote for Rajai, a 48-year-old former high school mathematics teacher endorsed by the ruling Islamic Republican Party.

The dominant fundamentalist Moslem clergy had engineered the ouster of Bani-Sadr in June, 18 months after the secular-minded, Western-educated economist was elected.

Bani-Sadr, a fugitive, appealed for an election boycott in a clandestine radio broadcast the night before Iranians went to the polls. But Tehran Radio said the voter turnout was "extraordinary," without giving figures.

Tehran Radio said that at a Cabinet meeting Saturday Rajai accused the Mujahedeen Khalq of waging a "merciless campaign of savage terrorism to reach their blind goals" and of becoming "counter-revolutionary puppets."

Minister of State and governmejt spokesman Behzad Nabavi then briefed the Cabinet on what was called the joint campaign by Bani-Sadr and Mujahedeen Khalq to "create disorders and disturbances" on election day, the radio said.

Nabavi was quoted as saying the clandestine radio station of the Kurdish Democratic Party, seeking autonomy for northwestern Kurdistan province, gave Bani-Sadr "extensive propaganda help." The ex-president reportedly is hiding among the Kurdish insurgents.

Bani-Sadr had the support of leftist, moderates and others who favored a secular regime.

Palestinian Rockets Mar Truce In Lebanon Again

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Palestinian gunners disrupted the U.S.-mediated truce again Saturday, firing more than 100 rockets and artillery rounds at the Israeli-backed Christian enclave in southern Lebanon, a U.N. spokesman said.

It was the third Palestinian breach in less than 24 hours after guns were silenced at 1:30 p.m. Friday following 15 days of cross-border fighting that killed more than 450 people in Lebanon and six in Israel.

Israel's military command said one resident of Marjayoun, the headquarters of Christian militia leader Maj. Saad Haddad, was injured in the latest barrage, but Israeli and militia gunners did not return the fire.

The United Nations, which keep 6,000 peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon, protested the shelling to the Palestine Liberation Organization in Beirut, spokesman Timor Goksel said. PLO officials called the shellings mistakes by local commanders in the armistice zone.

Israel reported two other Palestinian barrages of rocket and artillery Friday night, hours after U.S. emissary Philip C. Habib announced the truce. At least one rocket landed on the Israeli side of the border, but Israeli gunners did not shoot back, Israel's military command said.

The U.S. envoy left Jerusalem Saturday for Washington to brief President Reagan, who withheld shipments of F-16 fighter jets to Israel because of its attacks on Palestinian targets in Lebanon.

Israeli Justice Minister Moshe Nissim said official U.S. criticism of Israel, particularly toward Prime Minister Menachem Begin, had ended with the truce.

"There is no need to be overly concerned," he said. "Let's not deepen a crisis that doesn't exist."

Deputy Defense Minister Mordechai Zippori, asserting the truce would serve Israel and the Palestinians, called it "an offer Israel could not refuse."

Earlier, the PLO asserted its guerrillas agreed to a cease-fire because of pleas by the U.N. Security Council, not Habib, who also said he had not spoken with PLO representatives before the truce.

Israeli leaders also denied the PLO had been a direct partner in truce talks. The Jewish state has long rejected the possibility of negotiating with the PLO, which in turn refuses to recognize the Israeli government.

"The arrangement was reached between the governments of Israel and Lebanon," Nissim said. "The PLO is involved in the matter, but the arrangement is under no circumstances between the PLO and Israel."

Arafat Pledges PLO To Adhere To Truce

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Yasser Arafat reaffirmed Saturday that his Palestine Liberation Organization would adhere to a cease-fire in southern Lebanon, but another Palestinian guerrilla organization vowed to continue shelling Israel.

The radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, General Command, said in a statement it will continue operations "and hit the Israeli enemy with all our capabilities and through all Arab fronts."

The Libyan-backed organization led by Ahmed Jebril said it was responsbile for the Friday and Saturday shellings of northern Israeli towns and Christian-controlled villages in southern Lebanon after the U.S.-mediated cease-fire went into effect.

"Our rockets and artillery shelled the occupied lands despite the cease-fire, because we believe that the revolution should continue, whatever the circumstances and difficulties," the PFLP-GC said.

"Every shell on our people at Sidon and Tyre will be met with tens of heavy shells and rockets as happened Friday night and Saturday," it added.

Those two cities in southern Lebanon are major PFLP-GC bases. The PFLP-GC is a guerrilla band that is a member of Arafat's PLO, an umbrella organization for half a dozen guerrilla groups. PFLP-GC bases were among the main targets of the recent Israeli air raids and shelling.

Arafat, speaking to reporters in a basement near his Beirut headquarters, called the recent 15-day battle with Israel an important "turning point" in the PLO's fight for autonomy.

USS New Jersey Returns To Sea Monday

BREMERTON,. Wash. (UPI) — The USS New Jersey — an aging veteran called back to active military duty for a fourth time — heads out to sea Monday after more than a decade in mothballs.

The 888-foot battleship, launched just a year after Pearl Harbor, will be cut loose from a Puget Sound Naval Shipyard pier and towed by tugs to California for a $330 million revitalization.

Critics of the Reagan administration's plan to reactivate four Iowa class battlewagons call them useless relics of past styles of warfare. Defenders insist they are the quickest and cheapest way to give the U.S. Navy a lot of much-needed new firepower.

"Reviving old battleships is like trying to revitalize the Army by digging up old Gen. Custer," scoffed Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., a longtime friend of the military.

But Secretary of the Navy John F. Lehman Jr. said the huge ships have the potential for carrying more long-range missiles than any other vessels in the fleet.

"I guess you can sum it up that the only real disadvantage to the battleship is that there are only four of them," he said recently.

The New Jersey was launched Dec. 7, 1942, one year to the day after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor destroyed much of the U.S. Navy, and fought in World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

The ship, which weighs in at 58,000 tons in full battle dress, last was decommissioned on Dec. 17, 1969, after 328 days of providing bombardment support off South Vietnam.

It has shared a pier at Bremerton with its more famous sister ship — the USS Missouri, on whose decks the Japanese surrendered to Gen. Douglas MacArthur and ended World War II.

Despite a decade in port, the New Jersey wears a splendid coat of paint on the blue side of gray. Its teak decks have taken on a weathered, driftwood color, but scrubbing and stoning will turn them almost white again.

Inside, the ship is in beautiful condition, said Capt. Edward K. "Ted" Walker Jr., commanding officer of the Navy Supply Center at Bremerton.

"I took a tour of her about three weeks ago," said Walker, who saw his first sea duty as an officer aboard the ship after his 1954 graduation from Annapolis.

"The inside looks like the inside of a fine Swiss watch. Every member of the crew who put her out of commission deserves a medal. I walked into the main battery plot — the area where the gunfire computers are. We turned on the lights and there wasn't any dust anywhere.

U.S. Sending Four More Advisers To El Salvador

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Four Army medics and two helicopter safety specialists will be added to the contingent of U.S. military advisors now in El Salvador, defense sources report.

Fifty-six American advisers were sent to the embattled Central American country earlier this year, but only 35 remain, they said. Three are in the Navy, the rest in the Army.

The departure date for the four-man medical group and pair of helicopter safety assistance specialists has not been set.

The sources said the transfers are part a long-term strategy to strengthen the armed forces in El Salvador in hopes of neutralizing leftist guerrillas so economic and political reforms can be introduced.

Further, the administration is studying a request from the government of President Jose Napoleon Duarte to send an engineering team to El Salvador to train Salvadorans in repairing roads, building bridges and carving out helicopter landing pads, the sources said.

The United States and the Duarte government agree a military solution to the guerrilla problem is impossible but that if the current situation continues, "the guerrillas in the long run will persevere," the sources said.

"The U.S. assessment is quite pessimistic," said one source with access to confidential material. He requested anonymity.

The United States has given El Salvador $35.4 million in military gear since the beginning of the year, including 10 helicopters.

Senior officers in the 11,000 man Salvadoran army and 4,000 man national guard are reportedly sympathetic to Duarte's hopes for reform and eventual elections.

But the sources report that the younger officers — the captains and the lieutenants — "want a military solution in the short term."

Headless Bodies Found

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Twenty-five people were killed in a battle between leftist guerrillas and troops on a farm and the headless bodies of another 16 victims of political violence were found, officials said Saturday.

An army spokesman reported about 100 guerrillas ambushed an army patrol at a farm near San Nicolas Lempa in central El Salvador Friday and he said in the fight that followed 13 guerrillas, 9 soldiers and 3 bystanders were slain.

Ten decapitated bodies washed up on a beach of Lake Coatepeque in the eastern part of the country and six others were found in a ditch along the Pan American Highway, police said.

It was believed they were the victims of right-wing death squads. An estimated 26,000 people have been slain in fighting between right-and left-wing extremists and security forces since centrist military officers overthrew the conservative government of Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero in October 1979.

Pahlavis Still Secluded Year After Shar's Death

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — In the year that has passed since Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi died in Egyptian exile, his family has led a quiet, secluded life.

The one exception was last October when, on his 20th birthday, the shah's oldest son Reza proclaimed himself heir to the Peacock Throne, the fabled symbol of the wealth and power of imperial Iran.

The youth's chances for ever returning to Iran and re-establishing the monarchy toppled by the Islamic revolution in 1979 are open to conjecture. But since his self-coronation, Reza Shah II has sent messages to the Iranian people urging rebellion against the regime of Ayatoll$h Ruhollah Khomeini.

The Pahlavis arrived in Cairo in March 1980, and the deposed shah died of lymphatic cancer on July 27 at Maadi military hospival.

His widow, the former Empress Farah Diba, and their four children have remained in Egypt, living in a former royal palace on the outskirts of Cairo. They are guests of the Egyptian government.

Reza enrolled briefly at the American University here, but soon withdrew because, university sources said, his presence on campus left him too exposed to security risk. His younger brother Ali, and sister Farahnaz attended an American school in a suburb south of Cairo. Cairo press reports last week said the 18-year-old Farahnaz had graduated from high school and was planning to go to a university in the United States, but had not chosen one yet.

Two of the children were said to have taken brief vacations abroad this summer — Reza to Switzerland and Ali to the United States — their first trips out of Egypt since their father's death.

When the Pahlavis venture out of the palace in Cairo, they are surrounded by cautious security guards.

In March, the former empress and Reza attended the finals of the Cairo international tennis tournament, surrounded by security guards. Farah Diba also meets occasionaly with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and his wife Jihan, and has made at least two secret trips to Europe to relax with friends, sources close to the family have said. Members of the former royal family have also been seen individually or jointly dining at Cairo restaurants.

Diners who were present in restaurants when the Pahlavis entered gave the following description:

First security men entered, and with restaurant management, questioned and screened the guests already seated. Anyone considered a security risk was asked to leave.

Once the restaurant was considered safe, the Pahlavis entered and dined at one table while the guards ate at the next.

The Pahlavi family, on the rare instances when it chooses to communicate with news organizations, uses a telex to send messages.

Reza's claim to the throne was transmitted in this way a few days before the actual ceremony took place, attended only by five or six journalists and a handful of security guards.

So have his intermittent condemnations of the Islamic regime in Iran, his call on Iranians to topple that regime, and his expression of joy at the release of the 52 American hostages held in Tehran for 444 days.

A few days before the first anniversary of his father's death, a telex went out to news agencies advising them the observance of the anniversary Monday would be a private affair.

"The commemoration ceremony of his late imperial majesty Mohammed Reza Pahlavi Shahanshah Aryamehr will be celebrated privately in Cairo on July 27, 1981," the statement said. Shahanshah means king of kings. Aryamehr is the title meaning "light of the Aryans" the shah gave himself.

"All Iranians who wished to participate in this ceremony are kindly requested to celebrate it in their country of residence," the statemente concluded.

Nurses, State Employees Strike

By The Associated Press

Firefighters in Portsmouth, Ohio, were back on the job Saturday after a three-day sickout while nurses struck a major Massachusetts medical center and Minnesota's governor warned striking state employees their walkout could lead to layoffs.

In Providence, R.I., meanwhile, no end was in sight for a public employees's strike prompted by the firings of 51 garbagemen.

And in Los Angeles, negotiators for 73,700 clerks and 1,277 supermarkets returned to the bargaining table at the behest of a federal mediator in an effort to stave off a threatened Wednesday strike that could affect millions of consumers.

The employers, representing 21 major chains that sell 85 percent of the groceries in 12 Southern California counties, have offered an increase of 22 percent in wages and fringe benefits over three years, while the union was demanding 56 percent. A top-scale clerk now earns $9.10 an hour in wages and $4.12 an hour in fringe benefits.

Portsmouth was left without fire protection when firefighters began calling in sick in protest of city cutbacks.

Representatives of the firefighters and the city met Friday afternoon in an effort to resolve the dispute, and "made some really good progress," said Phillip Hancock, president of the International Association of Firefighters Local 512.

Neither side would reveal details of the bargaining session.

In Minnesota, Gov. Al Quie said the first statewide strike by state employees may lead administrators to review the work force to see if all employees were needed.

"That's a part of the process and a risk that those who walk out take," Quie said.

Council 6 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, representing some 14,000 workers, struck Monday in a dispute over wages and health benefits. Union leader Robert Currie said he was prepared to discuss a package when talks resume Tuesday, but would not say if the package represented a new offer.

In Pittsfield, Mass., nurses seeking higher wages threw up picket lines Saturday around Berkshire Medical Center, the largest health facility in the western part of the state. Hospital officials said the facility would stay in operation.

The center has the area's only trauma unit for people with multiple injuries. Comparable facilities are located 30 to 40 miles away, in Springfield and Albany, N.Y.

Farmers Fear Medfly Quarantine

FRESNO, Calif. (UPI) — California's prime-area farmers, living in the richest agricultural region in the world, say the threat of a Mediterranean fruit fly invasion doesn't scare them. But a quarantine does.

Producers of more than half the nation's fresh fruits and vegetables, farmers in the fertile Central Valley have never had to face the onslaught of insects that has plagued eastern and southern states.

"Let's face it," said one government agriculture researcher, "it has been paradise here."

But the year-long battle against the Medfly infestation in the smaller Santa Clara Valley, just across a range of coastal hills, caused six southern states to try to quarantine all California produce.

Included was the entire inventory of the state's ground-grown food business coming out of the two great valleys, the Sacramento and San Joaquin, running 400 miles through the stem of the state and together called the Central Valley. In California, farming is a $14.2 billion business and the growers of the fertile valley bring in the bulk of the harvest.

The quarantines were broken in U.S. District Courts while the U.S. Supreme Court was asked to wipe all of them out. If they held, it would have cost the valley growers billions. Gross farm income in one six-country region of the San Joaquin Valley was a whopping $6.4 billion last year, much of it in the 200 Medfly host crops.

The possibility loomed that if quarantines could be made to stick in some places, they would crop up elsewhere, including lucrative foreign markets such as Japan.

With so much at stake, California farm officials spent a hectic week filing suits in southern cities to break the quarantines and threatened quarantines in Texas, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama.

Only if quarantined produce is fumigated may it cross checkpoints, and there are few fumigation facilities in the Central Valley.

In addition, agribusiness interests in Fresno, Tulare and Kern counties sent a contingent of farm officials and local government leaders on a hurried, three-day tour of southern states to assure officials with their own produce to protect that farm interests will act swiftly and decisively if a fertile Medfly turns up in the Central Valley.

Central Valley farming interests long ago advocated aerial spraying of pesticides in the infested Santa Clara Valley, which Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. opposed, and they hold the governor responsible for the current spread of the insect.

They say Brown, a probable candidate for a U.S. Senate seat next year, was playing politics by opposing aerial spraying early in the Santa Clara Valley infestation, hoping to gain the support of environmentalists.

In the Central Valley, they say, where aerial spraying of pesticides occurs every summer, there would be no delays in dealing with the Medfly. Malathion, the chemical sprayed at the rate of 2½ ounces per acre in the infested area south of San Francisco, is routinely rained on crops in the Central Valley at the rate of 30 gallons per acre.

"I don't believe the Medfly could infiltrate the valley in sufficient numbers to do much damage before it is discovered," said Fresno County Agricultural Commissioner Cosmo Insalaco. "Once we know it is here we are prepared to see to it that it doesn't get established."

Both Insalaco and Tulare County officials say any sign of the pest, which lays eggs and produces maggots capable of destroying 200 varities of host fruits and vegetables, would trigger an all-out war.

"We'll hit them with everything we have,' said Bill Clark, assistant Tulare County Agricultural Commissioner. "We are prepared to go into an area where fertile flies or larvae are found with aerial bait spraying, ground spraying, tree stripping, soil treatment and anything else it takes to stop the Medfly."

Egypt's major crop is cotton. It is grown mostly in the Delta. It has been cultivated since ancient times and was continually improved until it now is said to be the finest cotton in the world. Maize production has steadily expanded and has now become a major agricultural crop. Dates are Egypt's commonest fruit, but they earn only a small proportion of the country's agricultural income.

FBI Studying Employee Misconduct Allegations

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Aeronca Inc. in Pineville is under investigation by the FBI and the Securities and Exchange Commission for alleged employee misconduct, according to the FBI.

FBI spokesman Charles Richards in Charlotte said the investigation was being conducted "with the support of Aeronca management."

Neither company officials nor the FBI would name the individuals being investigated, but Richards did confirm that possible charges include theft, embezzelment and fraud by wire.

Documents filed by the aviation parts manufacturer with the SEC this week disclosed that agency's probe of the company, which involves employees at the Environmental Systems Group in Pineville.

GE Will Shift California Production To Asheboro And Singapore

By ROGER GILLOTT
Associated Press Writer

ONTARIO, Calif. (AP) — For most, the news was of marginal interest.

General Electric said it was closing its metal flatiron-making plant here in February and shifting all its production to plastic irons made in Asheboro, N.C., and Singapore.

A changing market dictated the decision, the company insisted, and it would be too costly to retool to Ontario facility to handle plastics.

But that was little consolation to the 1,000 workers who will be getting their pink slips. Some families had been making flatirons for generations and know little else. In one family, 24 people — husbands and wives and children, brothers and sisters, cousins and nephews and nieces — work for GE and will lose their livelihood.

To them, the plant, which began production in 1904, was going to be there forever. It was something solid in which they could invest their careers and lives.

"It's a shock," says Warren Ellison, 39, who has been with GE just one month short of 16 years. His wife, Minnie, has worked there 15 years.

"I don't know what comes next," says Ellison, who has 22 other relatives working at the plant, one of the major employers in this San Bernardino County community of 65,000, known as the iron capital of the world.

Last February, the plant's assembly line turned out its 150 millionth flatiron. Its output for 1980 was just under five million, while total production worldwide was nine million.

"This community has had a good marriage with General Electric all these years, and it is regrettable to see it end this way," says Ontario City Councilman Homer Briggs. "It's easy for a decision like this to be made in Bridgeport, Conn., 3,000 miles away, where GE is headquartered. But it hard for us to live with. Certainly it raises questions of corporate responsibility."

Briggs, state Assemblyman Jim Cramer and other officials were to join workers, their families and supporters in a mass rally Saturday in an effort to bring pressure on GE to keep the plant open.

One of those planning to be at the rally was a bitter Jack Long, who has worked at the GE facility for 16 years.

"I feel the government is totally responsible for this problem," he said. "They let big businesses go out of the United States for cheaper labor. Then the companies bring the product back to the United States to sell it to Americans who don't have jobs."

GE workers in Ontario now earn between $7.65 an hour and $10.82 an hour, the union says, while wages in Singapore are about 43 cents an hour.

While local officials concede the local economy will recover, the impact on individual families may be devastating.

"We bought our home in 1967, but we had to take out a second trust deed, and now we are mortgaged to the gills," Ellison says glumly. "I hope I will find gainful employment elsewhere, but that is wishful thinking. Jobs here are very tight, and I doubt if many employers will be willing to take on a man with back and heart problems."

The Ellisons have three children — a son just entering college, a daughter in high school and a son in junior high school.

"We hope our son can stay in college," Ellison says. "We've already talked to him about taking at least a part-time job to help pay his way."

The GE closure isn't the first shock to the economy of this section of San Bernardino County. Within the last year, Kaiser Steel laid off 3,000 workers as it cut back its operations in nearby Fontana, and rumors are rife it may dismiss more than half its remaining 4,000 workers. A trucking line, Freightliners, closed down its operations, putting 850 people out of work.

Unemployment in the area was 8.8 percent in April, well above the state average. Only in May did it begin to recede, dropping to 7.9 percent in Ontario. Statewide, the May rate was 6.5 percent.

But more businesses are coming into the area, attracted by real estate costs far below those in nearby Los Angeles and Orange counties.

Prices, Strong Demand Highlight Tobacco Sales

By United Press International

Record prices, improved quality and strong demand combined to produce an auspicious start in tobacco sales across the Carolinas last week.

Warehouses in South Carolina and the Border North Carolina Belt were the first to open, and by week's end the Federal-State Market News Service reported 22.64 million pounds of leaf sold for $153.60 per hundred pounds, up $30.32 per hundredweight from the average for the first four days of last season.

South Carolina contributed 12.32 million of that poundage at $150.65 per hundred pounds, while North Carolina's border auctioneers sold 10.3 million pounds at $157.12 per hundred pounds.

Opening week prices were up $22 to $42 per hundred pounds for most grades, with top money going for fair lemon cutters — $186 per hundredweight.

Quality was improved, volume light to moderate and only 0.6 percent of gross sales went to the Stabilization Corporation, the service said. Last year 22.1 percent of the crop went to the cooperative during the first four days.

Sales opportunity in South Carolina and the border belt this week is 32.7 million pounds.

The Eastern Belt swung into action Wednesday with good results. Gross sales totaled 15.65 million pounds at $160.93 per hundredweight — up $43.06 per hundred pounds from the same period last year.

The service said quality improved over last year, with lugs and primings comprising 90 percent of the offerings. Nearly 70 percent of the grades were ripe.

The Stabilization Corporation took just 1.2 percent of the crop, compared to 17.4 percent during the first two days last season. Sales opportunity in the best next week is 31.7 million pounds.

The Old and Middle Belt's Sandhills warehouses moved 1.76 million pounds in two days at an average of $157.97 per hundred pounds. That's $34.49 per hundredweight over last year's average for the first two days.

Prices ranged from $20 to $39 per hundred pounds above last year's initial bids for most grades. The service said the substantial improvement in quality was one reason why.

The Flue-Cured Stabilization Corporation took 1 percent of gross sales compared to 3.1 percent for the same period in 1980.

The rest of the Middle Belt markets will open Tuesday, with the Old Belt opening Aug. 4. Sales opprotnity for the belt this week is 9.17 million pounds.

East Says It's Difficult To Find Tobacco Support

PINEHURST, N.C. (UPI) -- Sen. John P. East says his most difficult job as senator so far has been rounding up support for the tobacco price support program.

"I spend more time on that issue than any other single thing," East told the North Carolina Press Association Friday. "It is an issue that is not going to resolve itself easily. There's no other one issue that comes close to it."

East said senators' views on tobacco cross the usual lines separating parties and moderate-conservative tenets.

"You have to work on it," he said. "You do have to make it clear to them that this is a vital interest to you."

East found, partly to his dismay, that he had to court the Reagan administration as well as his fellow senators to assure the tobacco program's support.

"I'll be candid," East said. "I've been disappointed in Secretary of Agriculture (John R.) Block. Quite candidly, I have complained to the administration about it."

On other topics, East said he spends a lot of his time simply traveling to and from the Senate chamber for various votes — a problem hampered by his being confined to a wheelchair because of polio.

"In the U.S. Senate, they still vote by a roll call vote," he said. "You must be there physically to vote, so you spend a great deal of time running back and forth — in my case, rolling back and forth — from the Senate office building to the Senate chamber to make these votes."

Despite the difficulties, East said, he has missed just four of 182 votes.

The senator also said he preferred print journalists to telvision reporters.

"I've found your newspaper reporters are wiling to take your answer and use it," he said. "Television reporters are looking for something very provocative and titillating. If they don't get it, they don't use (the film footage)."

Singapore Launches Drive For Courtesy

By KENNETH L. WHITING

SINGAPORE (AP) — The signs that say "make courtesy our way of life" are being dusted off again as Singapore prepares its annual campaign to abolish bad manners.

Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew has given his countrymen until 1990 to "file down the ragged corners of our social behavior which can grate on each other."

No statistics are available on how much more polite the 2.3 million people in this island republic have become since the first courtesy campaign in 1978, which was aimed only at those who dealt with foreign tourists.

A year later, Lee refocused the drive to cover the entire population because he said it was absurd to be polite only to visitors. The original campaign slogan of "courtesy is our way of life" was switched to the less assertive "make courtesy our way of life."

The Ministry of Culture, which is organizing the month-long campaign, has produced 800,000 copies of various publications on courtesay and eight films on the subject.

Polite motoring will be stressed this year, a ministry spokesman said, and so will good neighborliness.

In earlier campaigns, traffic cops seeking particularly courteous motorists for special recognition had to lower the minimum standard of highway politeness before the quota could be filled.

If the 1981 drive follows the pattern of other years, "courtesy spies" will snoop on civil servants who come in contact with the public.

A spokesman for the Ministry of Health said it has already issued questionnaires to 1,200 staff members covering bedside manners, how they greet each other and other key points.

Poetry, cartoon and essay contests are planned in the schools. Thousands of store clerks, taxi drivers and others will sport the campaign badge: a round yellow face with two dots for eyes and two lines forming a grinning mouth.

Prime Minister Lee set the 1990 goal last year because by then 76 percent of the population are expected to be owners of government-built apartments. Their neighbors would likely be lifelong ones and everybody would have a stake in smooth relations, he said.

The courtesy campaign is only one of a series of official efforts to raise civic consciousness. Unlike the anti-littering and don't-jaywalk drives of a few years ago, violators won't be fined. That was touched upon in the winning entry in a joke contest in last year's courtesy drive:

"After paying a fine for littering, another for smoking in a cinema and yet another for jaywalking, an unhappy Singaporean was asked by a tourist, 'How would you describe Singapore?'

"The diplomatic (and courteous) answer was 'fine, fine, fine'."

Windward Islands See Doubt In Offer Of Help

By MARC D. CHARNEY
Associated Press Writer

ROSEAU, Dominica (AP) — Here in the Windward Islands, some of the world's tiniest and most vulnerable nations listen avidly to Washington talk of increased aid for the Caribbean.

But despite the recent agreement in Nassau, Bahamas, on a joint development plan by the United States, Canada, Mexico and Venezuela, U.S. friends in this key area want to know how much aid will come, and when. They worry whether talk of boosting private investment means less public funding for infrastructure.

U.S. diplomats in the area say they have no answers.

Area leaders questioned by The Associated Press noted that the Nassau meeting of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and his counterparts from the other three nations produced no specific plan, and one local leader said he expected no details for at least two years.

Lennox Honeychurch, the press secretary of Dominica's pro-U.S. government, said he wonders if the United States is offering "platitudes" and is asking Dominicans to "fill our bellies with democracy."

This year, Dominica has weathered threats by marijuana-growing terrorists and a takeover by U.S.-based mercenaries. One government in St. Lucia has fallen and its centrist successor is shaky. St. Vincent is plagued by labor troubles. Grenada's Cuban-allied revolutionary government is cracking down on dissent as U.S. pressure on it mounts.

Beneath it all is a mounting threat to stability from rising numbers of young unemployed. Many analysts express the belief that those unemployed are a major force behind a growing marijuana trade — and the main support for radical movements like that which took over Grenada.

Here in Dominica, 30 percent of the workers are unemployed and as many as two-thirds of those are under 25. After two devastating hurricanes in as many years, Dominica depends on foreign aid and loans amounting to half its $40 million annual budget.

The United States and Britain are helping build coast guard units to repel mercenaries, catch smugglers and cut the danger of aggression throughout the Windwards, which extend outward from near Venezuela in the eastern Caribbean.

Local governments recently formed an Organization of Eastern Caribbean States to strengthen ties and present a unified approach to aid-donating nations.

But the lack of specific development plans both before and after the Nassau meeting is troubling those islands with moderate governments.

Prime Minister Mary Eugenia Charles of Dominica said she welcomed the Nassau meeting but felt matters should not be delayed for further consultation since the eastern Caribbean states had stated their case clearly at a Washington meeting only a few weeks before the Nassau gathering.

"It was a great disappointment to go up to a group meeting in Washington to find this situation," she said, "because it was there I had expected a commitment to be made."

Her counterpart in St. Lucia, Windston Cenac, returned from the same meeting and announced aid pledges from Canada, Venezuela, Britain and the Netherlands but not the United States.

Wedding Wednesday To End Courtship That Infatuated A Nation

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles spent 14 years playing the field and in the end proposed to the blushing girl next door.

Lady Diana Spencer marries the future King Charles III on July 29, after a year-long courtship which has infatuated a nation wearied by a rundown economy, the troubles in Northern Ireland and recent street rioting.

A Cinderella-like glass coach will take the future 48th queen of England to St. Paul's Cathedral where she will enter the royal family, the House of Windsor, perpetuating a monarchy which began with Saxon kings over 1,000 years ago.

Of the promised spectacle, Charles said: "It's the sort of thing we do well in this country. If 600 million people are going to watch it, I want to give them a run for their money."

In every corner of the world, TV networks will carry live pictures of the glittering horse-drawn carriage procession from Buckingham Palace to Sir Christopher Wren's domed cathedral. More than a million people, standing 20-deep and some having camped out for days, are expected to blanket the two-mile route.

Fanfares will announce the bride's arrival at the Renaissance church where the envied ticket-holders will see 20-year-old "Diana Frances" exchange vows with "Charles Philip Arthur George," 32-year-old heir to the British throne. She will sign the marriage register as Princess of Wales.

Diana's swept-fringe, ash blonde hair style and liking for ruffled blouses became a fashion craze as the nation was captivated by her bachelor-girl charm.

But the days of popping into Harrods to pick out a skirt or joining flatmates for a bite at a favorite restaurant are over.

From now on, her public appearances will be formal. Lots of handshaking and smiling, polite conversation and the royal wave.

Charles hesitated before subjecting Diana to the inevitable loss of personal freedom.

"I wanted to give her a chance to think about it, to think if it was all going to be too awful," he said when announcing their engagement on Feb. 24.

Lady Diana chipped in: "Oh, I never had any doubts about it."

And so the daughter of the 8th Earl Spencer — one of England's most noble lords and equerry to the queen when Diana was born — will become the first English girl to marry a future British king since 1677.

The product of his mother Queen Elizabeth II's "open" reign, narrowing the distance between royalty and commoner, Charles is the first Prince of Wales not to submit to an arranged marriage. His 20 predecessors had no choice, including the last one to be married, Prince Albert Edward, later King Edward VII, who was matched with Princess Alexandra of Denmark in 1863.

The Spencer family's ancestry is "impeccable," said Patrick Montague Smith, former editor of Debrett's Peerage, the who's who of British bluebloods.

The Windsor and Spencer clans can be traced back to King Henry VII. Charles and Diana, it turns out, are 16th cousins once removed. Diana is also descended on the wrong side of the blanket from mistress-loving King Charles II, according to geneologists.

And she is one-eighth American. Her great-grandmother Frances Work was the daughter of the Vanderbilt family's stockbroker.

Prince Charles' romances began when he was a history student at Cambridge University and fell for Lucia Santa Cruz, daughter of the Chilean ambassador.

Later, as he travelled the world, captaining a Royal Navy minesweeper, playing polo, windsurfing or skiing, the press linked him with a series of debutantes and hopefuls. Princess Marie-Astrid of Luxembourg was ruled out because she was a Roman Catholic. As head of the Protestant Church of England, Charles was barred from picking her.

The prince admitted he was a man "who falls in love easily." But on a tour of India last year, he lamented to the royal press corps: "It's all right for you chaps. You can live with a girl before you marry her. But I can't. I've got to get it right from the word go."

Front-runners included Diana's sister, Lady Sarah, 25, who spoiled her chances by telling a women's magazine, "I am not in love with him." The prince was not amused.

Unwittingly, Sarah had already played Cupid for her younger sister. In 1977 she invited Charles to come hunting on her father's estate at Althorp, Northamptonshire.

"We met in the middle of a plowed field," Diana later recalled.

Although he had seen Diana previously, the blooming 16-year-old made a great impression. "I remember thinking what fun she was," said Charles.

Their romance began in earnest last August when Diana, who left private school at 16, went to the royal family's summer retreat at Balmoral, Scotland. Her other sister, Lady Jane, wife of the queen's assistant private secretary Robert Fellowes, was expecting a baby there.

"We began to realize then that there was something in it," said the prince.

"Love?" The couple was asked.

"Of course," Lady Diana said.

"Whatever 'in love' means," added Charles, raising ungallant speculation that perhaps he had taken too seriously the advice of his father, the Duke of Edinburgh, to hurry up and find a wife "or there won't be anyone left."

What of the 12½-year difference in their ages?

"I've never really thought about it," said Diana. Her future husband, who takes care to cover the bald patch on the crown of his head, noted: "Diana will certainly keep me young."

In a hereditary monarchy, producing heirs is paramount and while the royal family is not short of them — the queen has four children and Princess Anne has given her two grandchildren — the nation looks to Charles to preserve the line.

Lady Diana's uncle, Lord Fermoy, went to the extraordinary lengths of a public statement to cut short press insinuations that she might have had serious boyfriends in the past. "Lady Diana, I can assure you, has never had a lover," he said point-blank.

The public had not been troubled by this possibility, falling instantly for the blue-eyed, 5-foot-9 kindergarten assistant who always seems shy because of the way she droops her chin.

Four kings, five queens, five princes, three princesses and a grand duke are among the crowned heads of Europe and other royalty who will attend the wedding, including Princess Grace of Monaco.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government has declared July 29 a public holiday.

Eleven stately carriages, drawn by 32 ornately harnessed horses from the Royal Mews, will convey the wedding party. If it rains, covered coaches will replace open carriages.

Inside the cathedral, the prince will not have a best man but two "supporters," his brothers Prince Andrew and Prince Edward. Andrew will hand over the wedding ring.

Lady Diana will be given away by her father. There will be five bridesmaids, including Clementine Hambro, 5-year-old great-grand-daughter of Sir Winston Churchill, and two page boys.

Thousands of police, some armed, will line the route peering into the crowd.

Sewers will be combed for explosives, every building on the route will be checked, and remote control TV and surveillance helicopters will monitor crowds held back by 8,000 police barriers.

"It's the biggest security operation we've ever mounted," says Scotland Yard's deputy assistant commissioner, John Radley.

The Irish Republican Army, fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland, has declared the royal family legitimate targets.

The lone gunman is also feared. On June 13 a young man standing within a few feet of the queen during the ceremonial Trooping the Color fired off six blank shots.

Wedding trivia has filled the newspapers for months.

In London's East End, pubkeepers Alan and Dora Cross changed the name of their Dalston hostelry from the Prince Arthur to the Lady Diana, while breweries are producing 60 different "wedding ales."

C & C Bedding of Lye got the contract to build the 5-foot-6 wide royal bed; Janice Ruthen, a 33-year-old mother of twins, fed silkworms at home eight times a day to help produce the silk for Lady Diana's dress; a ferret lured by a piece of bacon was employed to pull TV cable through an underground duct outside Buckingham Palace.

The English Tourist Board expects 1.5 million tourists in London, spending some $380 million. Some are taking royal wedding tours past the $190,000 Coleherne Court apartment Diana's father bought for her to share with three friends in Kensington.

Lunch with Diana's father and stepmother at Althorp and tea with her step-grandmother Barbara Cartland, the romantic novelist, were part of a $1,399 tmur for Americans.

For the less affluent there are an estimated 1,600 different souvenirs for sale, from a 5-cent box of matches to a sterling silver cutlery set bearing the prince's coat of arms from Garrards, the royal jewelers, at $14,250.

Badges warning "Don't do it Di" sold alongside jigsaw puzzles, thimbles, T-shirts, mugs, tea cosies and other mementoes cranked out by manufacturers hoping to reap a $760 million bonanza.

Bartenders produced cocktails in red, white and blue, schoolchildren set to work on gifts — the prince said please don't send any pets or plants — publishers rushed out books of royal wedding lore, and 70 countries printed special postage stamps.

Handshake Decision Causes Stir

LONDON (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan's decision to shake Queen Elizabeth's hand rather than curtsy when she meets the British monarch caused a stir in Britain Saturday.

The London tabloid The Sun devoted two pages to the story Saturday under a banner headline, "I Won't Bow, Says Nancy!" The Daily Mail printed the news under the heading, "Nancy Won't Curtsy to Queen."

"I really think it's been blown out of proportion," Mrs. Reagan's personal secretary, Elaine Crispen, said Saturday. "She's an American citizen, not a British subject. So I don't see why she would be expected to curtsy."

Mrs. Reagan, 58, announced her protocol decision Friday. She will meet the queen Monday evening at a reception at Buckingham Palace.

The first lady is the official U.S. representative to the July 29 wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer. U.S. Embassy officials said President Reagan chose not to attend the royal nuptials because of a busy schedule and because he did not want his first European trip as president to be for a social event.

Miss Crispen said the question of how Mrs. Reagan should greet the queenhad not been a major issue in White House discussions about her trip to London, despite one British newspaper report indicating the president had taken up the matter with his closest advisers.

Buckingham Palace said Mrs. Reagan's hand-shaking decision was neither unprecedented nor improper.

"Mrs. Reagan can shake the queen's hand if she wishes to. There is nothing to say she cannot," a palace spokesman said. "Normally there is a bow or curtsy but if Mrs. Reagan wants to shake hands that'll byYfine."

Patrick Montague-Smith, an expert on aristocracy and the former editor of the British royalty who's who, Debrett's Peerage, agreed.

"Foreigners in this country are under no obligation and a handshake is quite in order," he said. "But nevertheless, many do decide to bow or curtsy out of courtesy."

The issue of an American curtsying to British royalty caused a stir earlier this summer when Leonore Annenberg, wife of former U.S. Ambassador to Britain Walter Annenberg, curtsied to Prince Charles during his visit to the United States. Mrs. Annenburg's husband is now Reagan's chief of protocol.

Critics of Mrs. Annenberg's curtsy said it was improper for an American to show such respect to the royal institution against which the United States fought during its revolutionary war.

"I think the matter of Mrs. Annenberg's curtsy was a totally different matter," Miss Crispen said. "She had lived in Britain as the ambassador's wife and was very familiar with the country's customs."

Mrs. Reagan's week-long stay in Britain is the longest separation from her husband in their 29-year marriage.

She was scheduled Saturday to attend a dinner hosted by Princess Alexandra, the queen's cousin and one of the most popular members of British royalty.

Earlier, she attended a luncheon hosted by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at Chequers, the sprawling, 416-year-old Tudor mansion that is the official country residence of the prime minister.

The Annenbergs and actor Sir Lawrence Olivier were also among the 46 invited guests.

Tearful Diana Leaves Match

LONDON (AP) — Lady Diana Spencer burst into tears Saturday and left a polo match where Prince Charles was to play, apparently overcome by attention she was receiving four days before her wedding to the future king.

"The occasion was just a bit too much for her," Charles told a photographer for the British news agency Press Association after the prince was seen comforting his fiance.

The incident took place at the annual polo match between the British army and Royal Navy at Tidworth, in Hampshire, shortly after Lady Diana arrived.

"She was weeping and you could see she was upset. I think she was overcome by the press of people," said one woman in the audience.

Other audience members said Diana was apparently distrought over being constantly photographed and stared at as she waited for the match to begin.

"She was red in the face and obviously distressed and looked as if she was crying," a bystander said.

After the incident, Prince Charles returned to the game and scored the winning goal to give the navy a 4-3 victory.

Earlier Saturday, Charles and bride-to-be arrived at a Royal Navy training base in a helicopter flown by the prince, a former naval officer.

As he inspected a parade of sailors, a band serenaded a blushing Lady Diana with "Isn't She Lovely," by American pop music star Stevie Wonder.

"She's really nice," said 10-year-old bystander Dean Brown, who talked to the future princess after he climbed chairs, wriggled through a large crowd and sat on the grass to be near her.

Charles was scheduled to play polo Sunday against a Spanish team. Live television coverage was planned and a large crowd was expected.

The prince's sporting pursuits so close to his wedding have aroused fears he might hurt himself. Charles has taken several well-publicized falls from horses.

Several British newspapers reported Charles' grandmother, the Queen Mother Elizabeth, might not attend the wedding because of fever that forced her to cancel appointments three days last week.

Officials at Clarence House, residence of the 80-year-old queen mother, said she would attend and that she had left for her weekend home at Windsor.

"That should be indication enough that she is much better," a spokesman said.

British newspapers also reported President Reagan's wife Nancy Reagan will not curtsy when she meets the queen.

"Mrs. Reagan will not even incline her head in anything that may be taken as a bow. She will simply shake hands," said an official at the American Embassy in London.

Much of Britain plans to celebrate the royal wedding this week. A massive fireworks display is planned in London Tuesday night. Charles will light the first in a chain of beacons stretching across the nation.

One of the three national television channels said it was airing a biography of the prince Sunday and its main rival had a film on exploration narrated by Charles.

Whitworth Leads Open By One Stroke

Kathy Whitworth

LA GRANGE, Ill. (AP) — Kathy Whitworth viewed her one-stroke lead Saturday in the U.S. Women's Open, a tournament she has never won, philosophically.

"A one-shot lead means I can make one more mistake tomorrow," said Whitworth, who finally wrested the lead from Bonnie Lauer. "I can't be cautious. I'm just going to try to make as few mistakes as possible. I made someltoday, I just couldn't help it."

Whitworth, a 41-year-old Hall of Famer from Texas with 81 tournament victories, shot a 1-under-par 71 for her third straight sub-par round and a 54-hole total of 210, 6 under par for 54 holes.

It put her one shot ahead of Lauer, who has won only once on the tour. She fashioned a 72 Saturday after tying the La Grange Country Club course record with a 67 on Friday.

"Nobody goes into thz final round of the Open without feeling pressure," said Whitworth. "You just have to ignore it. I can only be concerned with the golf tournament and not records. I want to win to win not to set records.

"I'm not apprehensive about tomorrow," said Whitworth. "I'm playing well and doing what I have to do. You can't have a game plan. Just play the situation. You don't play conservative, you play realistic and always try to get into position to hit the best shot."

Whitworth will take a one-shot lead over Lauer going into the final round and a two-stroke lead over Beth Daniel who shot a blazing 69 for 212.

Lauer, who said she had been so frustrated a couple of weeks ago that "I was thinking about quitting for a while because nothing was happening," was satisfied with her round, even though it put her off the lead which she had shared with Whitworth after the second round.

"Today was very important for me," said Lauer, a former national collegiate women's champion out of Michigan State, "especially after shooting that 67. I had a solid round, I kept it in the fairway, but I had a couple of three-putt greens.

If Whitworth wins she will have her 82nd victory to tie the record held by the now-retired Mickey Wright. It will be her first Open triumph in 23 attempts, and she already is assured of enough prize money to become the first woman golfer to reach the million-dollar mark.

Whitworth and Lauer, playing together, went into the third round tied 5-under-par 139. Whitworth birdied the first hole to break the tie, but Lauer matched that with a birdie on No. 3. Whitworth again snapped the deadlock with a birdie on No. 5 and never lost the lead.

Lauer three-putted No. 8 to fall two shots behind and then bogeyed No. 11 to trail by three strokes. Both bogeyed No. 13, but Lauer closed the gap with a birdie on No. 15 as Whitworth took a bogey 5.

They went to the final hole still one stroke apart and both scrambled with identical birdies on the par 5 18th by coming out of the rough, pitching close to the pin and sinking their putts.

Daniel, last year's leading money winner with a record $231,000, started the round in a three-way tie with Marlene Floyd and Debbie Massey at 1 under par and four shots behind the co-leaders. Daniel birdied the last two holes for a 35-34—69 for her 212 total.

Still in serious contention entering the final round at the 6,204-yard, par 72 LaGrange Country Club course was Massey, who had a 72, for 215; Cythia Hill who closed with birie-eagle for 69 and 215; Floyd with a 73 and 216; and JoAnne Carner with 72 and 216.

Wild Pitch Defeats ECU In Title Game

BUIES CREEK — Kelly O'Donnell scored the winning run in the seventh inning on Rick Ramey's wild pitch Saturday night, and UNC-Wilmington took a 3-2 victory over East Carolina to gain the North State College League baseball championship.

East Carolina gained a berth in the championship game when John Hallow's bases-empty home run in the fourth inning proved to be the game-winning blow as the Pirates gained a 10-7 victory over North Carolina State and eliminated the Wolfpack from the tournament.

With one out, O'Donnell reached on a single and moved up when Tim Whitehead was hit by another Ramey pitch. Paul Murr's infield out moved the runners up one base.

Following a conference between Ramey, catcher Jack Curlings and ECU coach Gary Overton, Ramey uncorked the pitch high and inside to Roger Hudson. The ball sailed to the backstop and allowed O'Donnell scored standing up.

The Seahawks took a 1-0 lead in the third on an O'Donnell single and a Murr double. They increased their lead to 2-0 in the next inning on a Mike Antle homer.

ECU had a chance to take a lead in the top of the seventh, but an umpire's judgment call quashed the rally. With runners at first and second, the umpire ruled that a Pirate baserunner blocked Murr's effort to complete a double play and called both runners out.

UNC-W starter Mike Antle stymied the Pirates with no-hit ball through 5⅓ innings. But the ECU rally in the sixth knocked him out of the box, and Jamie McGuire wriggled out of two jams to get the victory.

Ramey, who relieved Smith in the fifth, was the loser.

ECU scored five runs in the second and two in the third and then held off a late charge by N.C. State to win the opener last night.

Raleigh Downs Snow Hill, 16-12

RALEIGH — Two of the best American Legion teams in the state got together Saturday night and put on something less than a sparkling performance.

In a game that featured 36 hits and 11 Snow Hill errors, Raleigh Post #1 saw a 13-run cut to four before holding on to defeat Post 94, 16-12, last night in the first game of the Area I championship series.

Snow Hill will return to Raleigh Sunday for the second game of the best-of-seven series. The third, fourth and fifth games are set for Snow Hill Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. A sixth and seventh game, if necessary, will be played in Raleigh Thursday and Friday.

Raleigh, which won the Area I West title from Johnson County, three games to two, scored 15 runs in the first six innings and led, 15-2, going into the seventh.

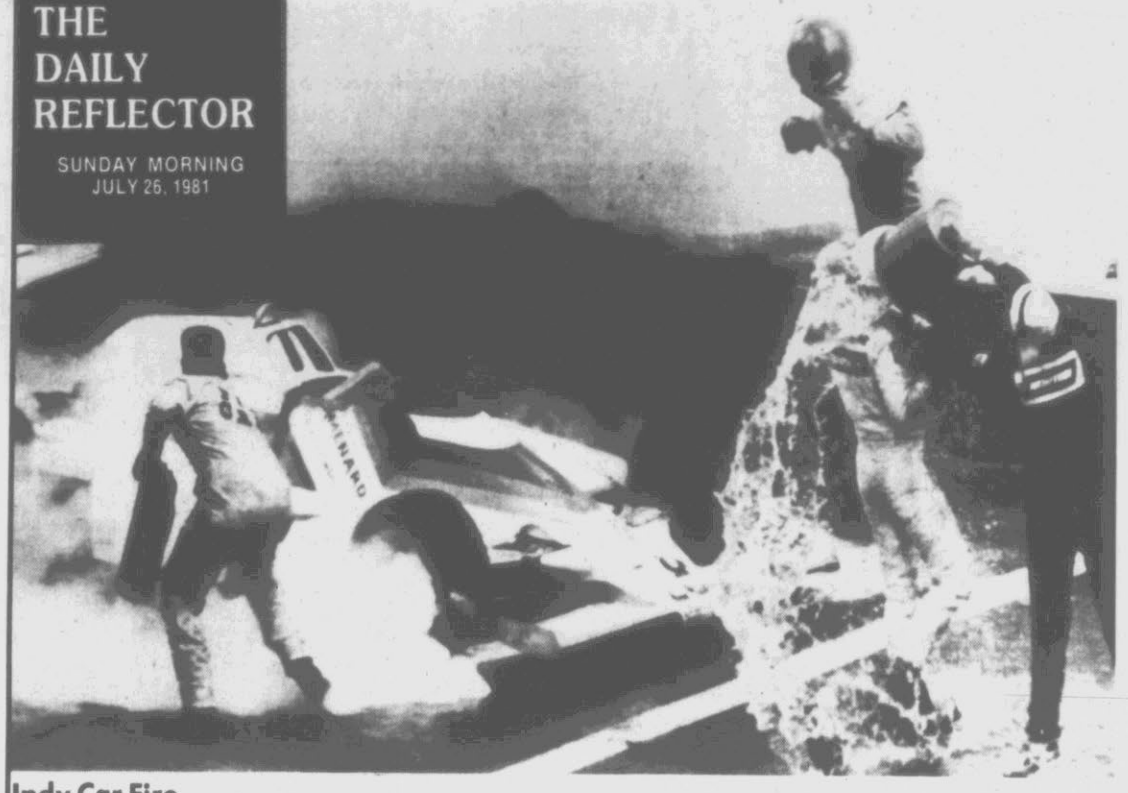

At that point, Snow Hill had managed just six hits. But over the next three innings, Post 94 scored 10 runs and managed 13 hits. Still, it was not enough to overcome an 11-error performance.

Only two Snow Hill starters — first baseman Kevin Korpi and rightfielder David Kester — did not commit an error.

Ahead 4-2 after two innings, Raleigh struck for four runs in the third, sparked by Steve Gahagan's two-RBI single. Post #1 was back for five more runs in the fourth, led by Hugh Fox's two-RBI single.

Indy Car Fire

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Fourteen people were injured Saturday when fire broke out in fuel tanks in the pits of Michigan International Speedway during the running of the Norton Michigan 500 Indy-car race.

Twelve people were treated at the track first aid station and released, said spokesman Jan Shaffer. Two others were hospitalized — one in nearby Jackson and the other in Ann Arbor.

The fire broke out when driver Herm Johnson of Eau Claire, Wis., stopped to refuel with methanol, the fuel used in Indy-cars and which is invisible when burned.

The hose from his 240-gallon pit fuel tank to his car malfunctioned, spraying him with methanol which ignited on the hot engine of the car, said race spokesman Mike Knight. Then the hose burned through, further fueling the flames.

Johnson leaped from his car and, while pit crew firefighters attempted to extinguish the blaze around him, the flames were blown to two adjacent fuel tanks, each spaced about 30 feet apart.

"It blew fuel all over," said Steve Gehrig, 28, a fireman from the Hudson, Mich., Fire Department, who was stationed in Johnson's pit with an extinguisher. "All you could feel was the heat and see the ground getting wet from the fuel. People hollered 'Fire!' and it (the invisible flames) started driving us back. One guy was down a little bit and was hollering he was on fire."

Johnson was among those injured, suffering "minor facial burns," Shaffer said.

Graig Nelson, a Johnson crew member, suffered first-and second-degree burns on his feet and was taken to the University of Michigan Burn Center, about 30 miles to the east. Jay Signore, a crewman for Bobby Unser, suffered a cut leg in the incident and was hospitalized in Jackson.

Besides Johnson, treated and released for minor injuries were Steve Edwards, safety director for CART, the sanctioning organization of the race; Dan Cota, Johnson's crew chief; and three track firefighters, Nick Sergeant, Orville Huff and Dale Wampler.

The other six injured were identified as Steve McGee, a Chelsea, Mich., firefighter; Dewey Link, Eau Claire, Wis., Johnson's pit crewman; Robert Upton, Brooklyn, Mich., fireman; Todd Brayton, Coldwater, crewman for driver Scott Brayton; John Doyle, Irish Hills, Mich., fire department captain and Ron McClure, Irish Hills, Mich., firefighter.

All were treated for minor injuries or heat exhaustion and released.

Track fire crews could not contain the blaze, which swept to equipment piled near the tanks. An air compressor near Johnson's tank exploded, sending about 100 people scattering and prompting gasps and screams from a crowd of some 60,000.

Firefighters from the Cambridge Township Department were summoned and finally extinguished the blaze in about five minutes.

Carter Survives, Wins Mich. 500

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Pancho Carter survived an early spin, a 97-minute race delay caused by a serious fuel fire and a late charge by Tony Bettenhausen to win the accident-marred Norton Michigan 500 Indy-car race Saturday at Michigan International Speedway.

The 15th and most serious injury was suffered by veteran driver A.J. Foyt, who crashed into a wall and was hospitalized for multiple injuriey.

It was the first Indy-car victory for the 31-year-old Carter His best previous finish since joining the Indy circuit in 1974 was second on five occasions. He averaged 132.34 mph in a race slowed by 13 caution periods.

Bettenhausen was the only driver on the same lap with Carter, finishing just 1.6 seconds behind.

He was knocked unconscious briefly when his Coyote-Cosworth struck the wall on the second turn of lap 80 on the two-mile MIS oval, car owner Jim Gilmore said. It then took crews several minutes before they could pry Foyt from his wrecked auto.

Only two cars finished the entire 250 laps and just 11 of the 37 starters remained at the end.

Carter, who pocketed $65,000 of the $500,000 purse, spun his PC7-Cosworth on lap 25, but managed to keep from crashing. A lap later, the caution light came out, prompting many of the drivers to make pit stops.

A fire broke out in the pit of Herm Johnson, igniting him and several of his pit crew. The blaze, triggered by a malfunction in the hose to his 240-gallon pit tank of volatile methanol, spread to at least three other tanks, exploded an air compressor and burned tires.

Fourteen people, including Johnson, suffered a variety of burns and injuries. Most of those injured were firefighters and pit crewmen. Twelve were treated at the track although two people were hospitalized.

Strike Continues; Players Executive Board To Meet

By The Associated Press

With a quarter of the baseball season gone, management of at least one team has taken its case directly to the players, while the players' union leaders prepared to meet in Chicago to brief their executive board on the progress of the strike.

Meanwhile, Al Thornwell, executive vice president of the Atlanta Braves, said his team has voted in favor of a plan that would divide the 1981 season into two parts if the strike ends. The voting came in an informal poll by the office of Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

"The Braves voted for the split season concept that would award the (Los Angeles) Dodgers the division title for the first half of the season and start over the for the second half," Thornwell said.

Through Saturday, 526 games had been canceled because of the walkout.

Boston Red Sox owner Haywood Sullivan sent mailgrams to his 25 players, outlining management's latest proposal to end the 44-day-old work stoppage. He said he would follow the mailgram with a full-six-page proposal.

"To be sure that you personally know the clubs' current position at the bargaining table, here is a summary which it is hoped you will read with care and a realization that 40 million fans are hoping for the return of baseball as soon as possible," the mailgram read in part.

"We want the information out to our players now because of the time element involved," Sullivan said. "If we sat back and let the normal process take its course, it might be 6-7 days, and there would be no baseball season."

The Major League Players Association Executive Board, composed of the 26 player representatives, will meet in Chicago Monday to discuss the situation. Donald Fehr, the union's chief counsel, said the board also will be asked to approve a series of regional meetings where members of the negotiating team could brief as many players as possible.

Federal mediator Kenneth Moffett has said he would wait until after the executive board meeting to call the two sides back to bargain, with Wednesday a probably date.

Three of the players who have expressed dissatisfaction with certain aspects of the strike — Davey Lopes of the Dodgers, and Champ Summers and Dan Schatzeder of the Detroit Tigers — have been invited to attend the board meeting.

In another development, Baltimore Orioles owner Edward Bennett Williams charged that Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association, has "lost control of the union."

Williams, who has been critical of the owner's negotiators in the past, said of Miller: "I have to believe that when a negotiator who has always made his own deal has to go back to talk to his group, there is a strong basis to believe that he has a problem controlling his own members."

Miller was unavailable for comment on Williams' statement.

Byers Upsets Maree In 1,500-Meter Run

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Tom Byers of Eugene, Ore., upset Sydney Maree in the 1,500-meter run Saturday, and world record holder Bill Barrett of UCLA won the 200-meter individual medley for his third swimming gold medal in the National Sports Festival.

Byers' time of 3 minutes, 44.84 seconds was not impressive, but the victory was his second such coup in a month. Last month in Oslo, he beat world record holder Steve Ovett.

Saturday, Byers led most of the way, falling behind Ross Donoghue only briefly. He got the lead back and held off Maree down the stretch. Maree's time was 3:45.09.

The victory was sweet confirmation that the Oslo victory was not just a fluke for the 26-year-old Byers, who was the Big Ten Conference mile champion in 1974 but who had faded into the background since.

Going into the last turn, Byers had to sneak between Donoghue and Maree. "I knew I had to make a break there," he said.

"I had a lot of respect for Sydney. I knew he had a good kick and I had to run well the last lap." The last lap was covered in just over 54 seconds.

Barrett won the men's 200 individual medley by nearly three seconds over John Smith of Akron, Ohio. His time of 2:06.74 was three seconds off the world record he set last summer, but he did not taper down his training for this meet. He is still aiming for the U.S. Swimming Long Course championships next month.

"My goal was 2:05 but my time was better than it was at this time last year (when he set his record at the Olympic Trials in Irvine, Calif.)," Barrett said. "I'm about on the right track. I'm where I want to be this season. I have some sprint work to do, then I should be ready for Nationals."

Some track and field athletes had been complaining that the new $500,000 track at Sunnycrest Park was too soft and would not yield good times. But, wind-aided, some times were particularly good.

Stephanie Hightower arrived in Syracuse late Friday night from Bucharest, Romania, where she had won the 100-meter hurdles in 13.03 in the World University Games. When she got here, her baggage didn't. Running in borrowed clothes and shoes, she won the 100-meter hurdles in 13.05, aided by a wind of 3.22 meters per second. The allowable wind factor for record purposes is 2.00 meters per second.

Evelyn Ashford, the American record holder in the 100 and 200 meters, won the 100 in 11.01 with the wind at 3.15 meters-per-second. Her mark was .11 off the national mark of 10.90 she set earlier this week in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The wind had whipped up to 4.16 meters per second when James Sanford of the Southern California won the men's 100 in 10.03, second fastest time in the United States this year.

VanBiesbrock, 17, of Detroit, stopped 25 shots, many of them acrobatically. Afterward, he seemed taken aback by all the attention he was getting from the media.

"The competition is just great out here," he said shyly. "New England played very well, and our guys were just great. I'm really just happy to be here."

Meanwhile, Carpenter, the Peabody, Mass., schoolboy who was drafted by the Washington Capitals in the first round of the National Hockey League draft, did not show much of the stuff that has kept him tied up in interviews all week. He didn't have much opportunity. He and his

Payton Example Of What Baseball Strike About

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Any edition now, Walter Payton will sign a new contract with the Chicago Bears and once more the farce of free agency in the National Football League will be exposed for everybody — particularly striking major league baseball players — to see.

There is no better testimony to what the baseball strike is all about than Payton's situation. Here is one of football's premier players, a ball carrier of superior talents, available for the right price. Yet his move on to the marketplace was greeted with absolute silence from the clubs who might have bid for him.

Now don't misunderstand. It's not that Walter Payton, owner of five straight NFC rushing titles, couldn't have helped somebody around the league. His awesome running abilities dwarf the ground games of most teams.

But there are no George Steinbrenners or Ted Turners roaming the NFL countryside, wallets bulging and mouths watering to bid on an expensive new man. No sir. The socialist system in the NFL, where all teams share revenue equally, tends to reduce the incentive to sign hot-shot free agents to fat contracts.

Can you imagine Dave Winfield shopping around and not getting any interest on baseball's free agent marketplace? Is Winfield any better a baseball player than Payton is a football player? Nope. He was just smart enough to pick the right sport.

Baseball's re-entry draft system is a study in free enterprise working at its best, allowing players to sell their services on the open marketplace with no restrictions except those the individual clubs place upon themselves.

That's exactly why the club owners aren't terribly thrilled with it. So far, some clubs simply haven't been very good at restricting themselves. So, they did an entirely sensible thing. They asked the players to help by accepting direct compensation, a system of taxing teams that have the audacity to sign premier free agents, by forcing them to surrender replacement players. And, bad sports that they are, the players balked. That, in a nutshell, is why there has been no major league baseball for six weeks now.

If Walter Payton had signed with another NFL team, football's not-so free agent system would have called for compensation in the form of two No.1 college draft choices to be delivered to the Bears. That discouraged any serious bidding for Payton, just as it has for almost every other free agent to come down the pike since the NFL adopted this system in 1977. Norm Thompson, a defensive back who moved from St. Louis to Baltimore, remains the only football free agent to change teams under this system. It is an enviable record — for the owners, but not the players.

That explains why Ed Garvey, football's boyish-looking version of Marvin Miller, has made a generous offer to surrender free agency in the next collective bargaining agreement.

But you must understand that the basic economics of sports dictates that nothing is free in this world. For his free agency concession, Garvey has attached the modest asking price of 55 percent of the gross earned by the clubs.

But because he is not an unreasonable man and understands the give and take of collective bargaining, Garvey has even indicated a willingness to negotiate.

"We'll take 52 percent," he has said.

That's certainly sporting of him, wouldn't you say?

Well, Garvey has as much chance of getting 55 percent ... or 52 percent, for that matter ... as Marvin Miller has of being elected by the owners to succeed Bowie Kuhn as baseball commissioner. Although, come to think of it, that might not be such a terrible idea.

The NFL basic agreement expires after the 1981 season and from this distance, it seems that negotiations for a new deal will be stormy at best. And if the time comes when picket signs must be drawn up, the football players can turn to their baseball brethren for lettering lessons. Experience, it has been said, is the best teacher.

U.S. Edges USSR In Double OT

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — A wild U.S.-Soviet semifinal in the World University Games basketball tournament overshadowed record-setting gold medal performances at the track and swimming pool Saturday as the flashy Americans downed the Soviets 113-107 in double overtime.

A mostly Romanian crowd of about 1,600 turned the tiny Giulesti gymnasium into a hotbox, cheering the moves of Villanova's John Pinone and LSU's Howard Carter as well as some hotly contested officials' calls that went against the Soviets.

Sergei Fesenko of the Soviet Union set a Games' record in winning the men's 200-meter individual swim medley and Olympic silver medalist Alexandr Chaev won the 1,500 freestyle in meet-record time.

Cliff Wiley, wheezing with asthma, outran teammate Walter McCoy to give the United States a 1-2 finish in the men's 400 meters in 45.18 seconds.

Kathy Smallwood won the 200 meters to give Britain a clean sweep of the women's sprints. The dual Olympic finalist won in 22.78, emulating Bev Goddard's 100-meter victory earlier in the week.

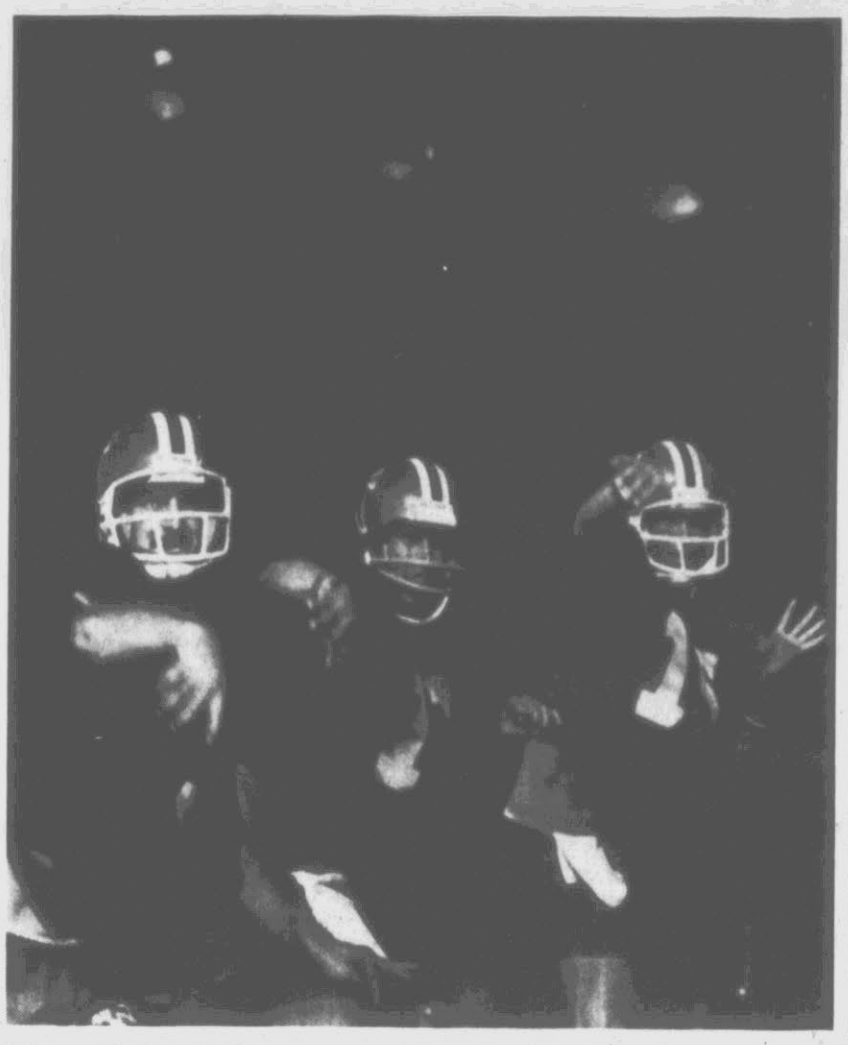

West German Klaus Ploghaus heaved the hammer 255 feet, 1 inch, breaking his two-year-old Games' record.

But empty seats were abundant at the 70,000-capacity track stadium, while spectators tried to squeeze past security guards into the gym where Americans and Soviets clashed on the basketball court.

Carter scored 28 points, most of them from the outside, and Pinone collected 27, many against 7-foot-4 Soviet center Vladimir Tkachenko under the basket.

John Bagley of Boston College, Kevin Boyle of Iowa and Kevin Magee of California-Irvine worked an acrobatic inside offense against the big Soviets, and combined with North Carolina State's Sidney Lowe to shake up the Soviets on defense.

Atlanta To Open Preseason In Nine Days

The problem is twofold. First — and this is a problem any NFL team would enjoy — the Falcons' starting lineup for 1981 was pretty well set before camp even opened. Second, the Falcons veterans will have had only nine practice days before opening their exhibition schedule.

Adding to the problem is the fact that the first exhibition game calls for a different approach than the usual preseason opener. It's the nationally televised Hall of Fame Game at Canton, Ohio, on Aug. 1 against the highly regarded Cleveland Browns.

"The Hall of Fame Game does put on extra pressure," notes Falcons coach Leeman Bennett. "It's the sort of game you'd like to win, more so than the normal preseason game. We'll start our regulars and probably play them about three-fourths of the game. We'll do some substituting, but I haven't decided how much or at which point."

Bennett points out that if he sticks to the schedule of past Falcons camps, "We won't have time to work on our kicking game. We usually put that in about eight or nine days after practice begins. We'll have to play it by ear this year, just see what we can work in."

The Falcons, who figure as few as six newcomers may make the final 45-man squad this season, invited fewer free agents to camp ths summer.

"I figure we've been working with about 11 less than usual," says Bennett. "This has enabled us to get a better look at our newcomers and get more work done. But also, if our veterans are in shape, it could mean shorter practices."

Some veterans, especially the quarterbacks, came into camp a week early with the rookies and free agents, but the majority didn't have to report until 10 days before the Hall of Fame Game.

"We've had more time than that in the past, but I don't see any reason it won't work out okay," says Bennett. "The Vikings, for example, have always done it this way and it hasn't seemed to hurt them."

The Falcons, favored to win the NFC West again this year, don't appear to need to spend as much time as in the past looking at their newcomers since there aren't all that many holes to fill. Bennett probably will start the same lineup against the Browns he used at the close of last year's best-in-the-NFL 12-4 campaign.

Atlanta's offense, ranked third in the entire NFL last season (behind San Diego and Los Angeles) when it averaged 353 yards per game, appears set — both in the backfield where quarterback Steve Bartkowski and running backs Williams Andrews and Lynn Cain are expected to have banner seasons — and in the line.

At this moment, the only returning starters who appear in jeopardy of losing their jobs are a couple of the defensive backs who will have to fight off challenges by rookie Bobby Butler, the Falcons' first round draft choice out of Florida State, and second-year man Earl Jones.

"We really don't plan any drastic changes this season," says Bennett. "We feel we have the nucleus of a good football team and are looking for people to build on that nucleus.

"I doubt there is ever an NFL team that doesn't help itself in the draft although I suppose sometimes your No. 1 can't break into your starting lineup," says Bennett. "We'd certainly like to be in that position."

Two veteran reserve defensive backs, both former starters, have vanished in the past week; Rick Byas retiring and Frank Reed traded (with reserve linebacker Dewey McClain) for Green Bay safety Steve Luke. Although Luke started for the Packers, there are questions about his pass defense and whether he'll even stick with the Falcons.

"There are two ways to improve your team. One, of course, is by getting several outstanding players in the draft who are good enough to move right into your starting lineup. The other is to build from the bottom up. Every time you bring in a player who is better than one of your border-line reserves, you strengthen your team."

Stabler: Retirement Is Final

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Ken Stabler says his decision to retire as quarterback of the Houston Oilers was a spur of the moment thing — and it's final.

Stabler, whose attorney notified the Oilers of the decision last Thursday, said in an interview with Ron Gollnick of WALA-TV that as the time came to report to training camp, "I just didn't want to do it again.

"My body has taken enough physical abuse over the past 12 seasons. I wanted to go out while I was on top, while I was a winner."

Stabler led the Oilers to an 11-5 season, below expectations, last year. He quarterbacked the Oakland Raiders to a Super Bowl triumph in 1977.

"In spite of all the controversy," he said, "I enjoyed my years in the National Football League. I hope I was able to give back all that I got out of the game."

Stabler said he had a number of options to look into, including coaching. He said, "I want to coach a midget football team this fall, and maybe even a Little League baseball team next spring."

Shortly after the interview, Stabler and some companions left for an indefinite cruise on the Gulf of Mexico.

Meanwhile, Stabler's attorney said that despite speculation and questions, Stabler simply was ready to hang up his cleats.

Lawyer-agent Henry Pitts said in an interview with The Selma Times-Journal, "I'm sure there are a lot of people putting a lot of innuendos and speculation about his retirement.

"They're saying he did it because (head Coach) Bum Phillips left, that he was disappointed about this and the other, that he wasn't pleased with his salary, that he wanted to be traded.

"Believe me, none of that had anything to do with it. There came a time and he said, 'Hey, I don't want to play anymore.'"

Pitts notified Oilers officials on Thursday that Stabler was retiring. He said Stabler had thought about retiring for a long time, even though he worked out during the spring and summer.

"I think anytime you've got somebody who has played as many years as he has, the subject of retirement comes up in casual or serious conversation. He's thought about it over the years," Pitts said.

He added, "I think he got serious about it this summer. The first time I knew he had decided was this week."

Pitts said Stabler contacted him last Wednesday and asked him to notify the Oilers.

"I was saddened by the fact he retired," Pitts said. "I, like other people, knew he brought a lot of joy to a lot of individuals, from the times he played at Foley High School, to the University of Alabama, to his many years in the National Football League.

"I'm saddened with the fact that I won't be able to see an athlete like him compete any more. He'll go down as one of the all-time greats."

The attorney said he was sure that Stabler's decision was final, and that there were other business ventures for him to get into.

"There are a lot of different possibilities open," he said. "He has a very succeseful club open in Houston. I've got a recording contract on my desk that I've never discussed with him.

"He's got a very successful television show in Houston that has received excellent ratings. There are some avenues that have opened up that I'm not at liberty to talk about."

Pitts said, "You should give the man credit for doing what he's done rather than have any misgivings about his decision. There's no doubt about it, he's a man's man."

ECU Falls, 3-2,...

Wells doubled home Evans. Mike Sorrell followd with a single to score both Smith and Wells. Todd Hendley then hit a a home run over the leftfield fence and ECU led, 5-0.

The lead quickly went to 7-0 in the third. With one gone, Evans, Pete Persico an Smith singled for the first run of the inning. Then, with two gone, Wells singled home Persico.

The Wolfpack countered with two runs in the bottom of the inning, but John Hallow got one of those runs back for the Pirates in the fourth with a home run.

NCSU then erupted for five runs, sparked by Tim Barbour's two-run home run, in the bottom of the fifth to narrow the gap to 8-7.

ECU however, stretched its lead three with two runs in the sixth. Sorrell singled and moved to second on Hendley's sacrifice. Hallow then reached on an error rightfielder Tracy Black.

Jack Curlings was intentionally walked to load the bases. The strategy backfired, however, when Evans ripped a double to score Sorrell and Hallow and give ECU a 10-7 lead.

Court Gives NFL Big Setback

LOS ANGELES (AP) — U.S. District Judge Harry Pregerson ruled Friday that the National Football League is not a single entity, handing the league a major setback in its court battle with the Oakland Raiders and Los Angeles Coliseum Commission.

The 10 jurors in the antitrust trial will thus not have to include in their deliberations the question of whether the league acted as a partnership — one of the NFL's frequently stated contentions — when it blocked the Raiders' proposed move to Los Angeles.

Final testimony in the trial concluded Thursday, with closing arguments scheduled to begin next Monday. The jury is expected to get the case later in the week.

"We think this was a stunning victory," said attorney Joseph Alioto, the former mayor of San Francisco who is representing the Raiders and their managing general partner, Al Davis, in the case.

Perry To Be At Tourney

AYDEN — National League pitcher and Williamston native Gaylord Perry is scheduled to throw out the first pitch Monday at the 9-12-year-old Babe Ruth baseball tournament being held here.

Perry's toss will open the four-day tournament and will come at around 7 p.m. when Winterville is scheduled to meet Greene County in the tournament's opening game. Farmville will meet Ayden in the second game, set for 9 p.m.

The double elimination tournament is being played on the Ayden Little League baseball park behind Ayden Elementary School and will continue through Thursday. All games will be played at 7 and 9 p.m.

The two top teams emerging from the tournament will advance to the state tournament set for Kinston beginning August 3.

Strange Tied For Classic Lead

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Hometown favorite Curtis Strange preserved a course-record, 7-under-par 64 with a scrambling par on the final hole and surged into a three-way tie for the third-round lead Saturday in the $300,000 Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

Strange, who represents the Kingsmill Golf Club on the PGA Tour and whose home is only a mile away, compiled a 54-hole total of 209. He was four shots under par on the hilly, 6,822-yard layout that has been the subject of considerable criticism from some of his fellow tourists.

He shared the top spot with former PGA champion John Mahaffey, who had a third-round 70 in the hot, humid, hazy weather that blanketed the Virginia tidewater country, and Howard Twitty, who birdied the 18th hole for a par 71.

"I'm extremely pleased for a couple of reasons," said Strange, who was followed by a huge gallery of friends, neighbors and relatives as he came from eight shots off the pace.

"First of all, it got me back in contention when I thought I was out of it.

A single stroke back at 210 were former U.S. Open titleholder Andy North, George Cadle and Mike Sullivan. North closed up with a 67, Cadle shot 68 and Sullivan 69.

Second-round leader Wayne Levi, Lyn Lott and veteran Butch Baird were a 211, only two back. Levi slipped to a 74. Lott shot a 67, Baird 68.

South African Gary Player had a 68 and topped a group at 212. There were a five at that figure placing a total of 14 men within three strokes of the top spot — and 25 within four shots — going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $54,000 first prize.

Strange, a native of nearby Norfolk, Va., but now a resident of this resort community, missed only one green in his remarkable effort over his home course. That was the 18th, where he drove into trouble, had no chance of reaching the putting surface, played his third to within about 12-15 feet of the hole and made the par-saving putt.

"Boy, I'll tell you I made some of the damnedest putts over those hills and knolls today," Strange said.

He played his front side in 33, with the highlight a wide-breaking 40-footer on the extremely difficult eighth, scored from about 20 feet on the 11th, then birdied three in a row beginning on the 15th, where he hit a sand wedge to within six feet.

On the 16th, his drive came to rest on a cartpath and Curtis opted to play it off the pavement rather than drop in deep rough. He threw it up over a hill to the green and made a 25-footer. He followed that spectacular effort with a 5-iron shot to two feet on the 17th and the saving par on the 18th.

Payton Signs With Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears running back Walter Payton has signed three one-year contracts worth close to $700,000 a year, Payton's agent said Saturday night.

Reached by telephone at his Hattiesburg, Miss. home, agent Bud Holmes said the signing — announced without details by the Bears earlier in the day — would bring Payton between $1.8 million and "a little over" $2 million over three years.

"A clause in the contract prevents me from giving out details, but the money will be enough to keep Walter the highest paid player in the NFL," Holmes said. "It's arranged in a way that benefits Walter from the tax point of view."

The agent said Payton was "very satisfied" with the pact. "Walter has never been a demanding person," Holmes said. "He's never wanted to get involved in negotiations."

Indiana's Landon Turner Hurt, May Be Paralyzed

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Indiana University basketball star Landon Turner suffered some paralysis in both legs and hands Saturday after a one-car crash earlier that day on a winding road about 50 miles southeast of Indianapolis.

The 21-year-old Indianapolis resident, who was a starting forward-center for the 1981 NCAA champion Indiana basketball team, was listed in serious but stable condition, Price said.

"He is not in a life-threatening situation," Price said, adding Turner was in traction because of a fractured spine and other injuries.

Turner also has head injuries — the extent of which was unknown — and was drifting in and out of consciousness late Saturday afternoon, he said.

Price said doctors needed to run more tests and had no plans to operate yet.

Pete G. Schroeder, a former IU basketball team student manager staying at Coach Bobby Knight's home at Bloomington, said Saturday he had been unable to reach Knight, who was on vacation in Idaho.

According to Bartholomew County sheriff's deputy Steven Moore, the accident occurred at 8:45 a.m. Saturday about eight miles east of Columbus on Indiana 46.

Turner was driving when he apparently lost control of his car on a curve. He and three friends were en route to Kings Island amusement park at Kings Island, Ohio, Moore said.

Moore said the car swerved off the road onto a grassy area, back onto the road and off again before striking a cement culvert at the end of a driveway and flipping over.

A small fire broke out in the engine of Turner's car but no one was burned, police said.

Both Collins and Miss Storey were treated and released from Bartholomew County Hospital, authorities said.

Turner was transferred by ambulance from the Columbus Hospital to Indianapolis early Saturday afternoon.

The 6-foot-10 Turner was the second leading rebounder as a junior for IU, which finished a 26-9 season on their way to winning the NCAA title over North Carolina.

Indiana also won the Big Ten Conference title with a 14-4 record.

A. J. Foyt Hurt In Crash

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Veteran driver A.J. Foyt was hospitalized after a crash Saturday, while driver Herm Johnson and 13 others were injured in a pit fire in the accident-marred Norton Michigan 500 race for Indy cars at Michigan International Speedway.

Foyt, the 48-year-old winner of four Indianapolis 500 races, had to be cut from his car with tools after his car hit an oil slick on the 80th lap and slammed into the wall on the second turn.

Dr. Steve Olvey, medical director for the sponsoring Championship Auto Racing Teams, said Foyt suffered an apparent compound fracture of his right arm, a puncture wound and possible fracture of his left leg. The driver from Houston was taken by helicopter to the University of Michigan Hospital, about 30 miles away in Ann Arbor, where he was being treated in the emergency room.

Kalamazoo businessman Jim Gilmore, owner of the Foyt team and one of the first to arrive at the wreck, said Foyt was unconcious briefly but was alert when placed on the chopper.

"When he came to, A.J. said, 'I'm really hurting,' He was pretty badly shaken up," Gilmore said. "He hit hard. He's a fine, tough guy, though. He's going to be OK."

The other injuries resulted from a fire in the pits when Johnson's car was taking on fuel and methanol contacting the hot car ignited.

The fire started as the fuel hose was being removed from Johnson's car. The hose continued spraying fuel when a shutoff valve malfunctioned and the fire spread from Johnson's pit to the pit of Dick Simon. An air compressor exploded, spreading the burning fuel even further.

The fire spread on to the pits of Roger Radar and Jerry Karl and then back toward the Bobby Unser pit while MIS firemen tried to control it.

"One guy was down a little bit and hollered he was on fire," said Steve Gerig, a firefighter at Johnson's pit. "It blew all over."

Gerig said extinguishing the blaze was even more difficult because methanol, which the racing cars use, cannot be seen when it burns.

"All you can feel is the heat and see the ground getting wet from the fuel," Gerig explained.

Twelve of those injured in the fire — including Johnson — were treated and released at the MIS first aid station, one was treated and released from a hospital in nearby Jackson while the other was listed in good condition at a burn center in Ann Arbor.

By lap 116, they had lost 16 of the starting 37 cars and 47 laps already had been run under the yellow caution flag.

because of rain last weekend, was halted 97 minutes.

The race was the first 500-mile affair for the high-banked Michigan track and ended in the early evening dusk some 5½ hours after it began.

Rick Mears finished third, two laps back, followed by Bill Alsup and Tom Bigelow, each three laps behind.

He first went ahead on lap 144, lost the lead to Al Unser at lap 179, lost it briefly again during a pit stop but paced the field for the final 55 circuits.

Tom Sneva, who started from the pole after qualifying at 200.892 mph, dueled the first third of the race with Johnny Rutherford and Mike Mosely. But Sneva encountered gearbox problems, Rutherford succumbed to a blown tire and Mosely ran out of fuel and then blew an engine.

Three-time Indy 500 winner Al Unser also made a bid, leading for 37 laps, but he, too, blew an engine.

For Bettenhausen, whose father won at Indianapolis twice in the 1950s before dying there in a crash, the second-place finish was his best ever. He was making just his 11th start in a championship car.

Bobby Unser, whose first-place finish at Indianapolis in May was disallowed because of a rule infraction, never was a factor. He nipped a wall early in the contest, damaged his brakes and was unable to compete with the leaders.

There were 18 lead changes and the race was slowed by 13 cautions, leaving 78 of the 250 laps run under yellow.

About 60,000 fans attended the event, which was broadcast nationally by NBC.

The fire was reminiscent of a blaze in May at the Indianapolis 500. In that fire, a fuel hose broke on Rick Mears' car and he caught fire. Mears and his crew criticized the Indianapolis track firefighters for allegedly being inept

"It was just like Rick Mears at Indy," Edwards said. "I was on fire and knew it. There was a lot of things happening around me, but it was put out and I'm OK."

Saturday's accident occurred on the 25th lap of the scheduled 250-lap event on the two-mile oval about 90 miles west of Detroit. The event had been scheduled for last Sunday, but was postponed then by rain.

When the race was halted at 2:41 p.m. EDT, polesitter Tom Sneva was in the lead. It was resumed 97 minutes later.

Many cars were in the pits at the time because of a caution light brought on by a spin by Larry Dickson on lap 25. The cars continued to run under yellow for four laps until race officials waved the red flag and halted the event.

Waltrip Zooms To Pocono Pole

Waltrip's speedy trip earned him the pole for the fifth time this year and tightened his hold on a quest for the $25,000 Busch Pole prize.

The 34-year-old Waltrip was the 25th of 35 qualifying drivers to make a run and was successful on the first of his two circuits around the track as he ousted Neil Bonnet from the coveted pole position.

Bonnet, third on line for qualifying, was clocked at 149.943 mph and will line up alongside Waltrip in the first row of the grid.

"I won three races from the pole this year," said Waltrip, driving a Buick Regal. "But this race is going to be most difficult to come through again. Everybody hangs tough in here and good pit stops may well be the key. I've lost races in the past by staying in the pits too long.

"My foot still bothers me. I suffered third-degree burns in that Nashville race and I'm still on antibiotics. It's peculiar the way it happened. The tail pipe, which generates heat up to 1,500 degrees, was too close to the floor of the car. Gradually, the back of my foot began to burn. I never felt anything that painful."

Benny Parsons, the 1977 Pocono winner, had the third best time at 149.562 mph and is on the second row with Richard Petty, who turned in a 149.433. The third row is made up of Terry Labonte, 149.034, and Harry Gant, 148.975.

Ricky Rudd made only one run when his engine began acting up and he didn't want to risk the motor throwing his car into a spin. His 148.881 put him in the fourth row with Dale Earnhardt, 148.837.

"We're changing engines for the race," said Waltrip. "Because of the stiff competition for the pole position, we used a special engine just for qualifying. It's only a difference of 20 horsepower, but we abused that engine, knowing it just had one use — to get us through those two laps at the fastest speed possible."

Waltrip's crew took about 45 minutes to install the race engine after qualifying so he could take a number of practice laps in preparation for Sunday's race.

Kyle Petty, who drives a Buick Regal similar to his dad's car, was clocked the ninth fastest at 148.781.

"We did pretty good today," said Richard Petty of the family qualifying attempt. "Kyle ran a good lap and I couldn't let him beat me. I figured I had to do better or else people would think I'm getting old."

Baseball Strike Continues...

three-member panel as a means of ending the strike.

Fowler and 15 other members of Congress sent letters to Miller and Ray Grebey, director of the Players Relations Committee, management's bargaining arm, outlining his proposal.

Under Fowler's plan, the panel would include one person selected by the owners, one chosen by the players and a third agreed upon by both parties.

"This relatively small group of negotiators would be sequestered together away from the glare of publicity until an agreement was reached," Fowler said.

"We have tried to do this right, and we are not seeking publicity," the congressman said. "We have tried to keep our noses out of it. But we are baseball fans who have been trying to figure out a way to get this off dead center.

"It has gone beyond a sports problem with all sorts of implications, such as loss of tax revenue."

The letter also contained a veiled warning of congressional interest in baseball's antitrust exemption.

"Congressional intervention is not approporiate or desirable," Fowler said. "But when we sent the letter to Kuhn (several weeks ago), it received considerable publicity. Soon after that, we had 20 members talk about dropping in a bill to take away the antitrust exemption.

"We tried to head that off. If the strike continues, I think you are going to see more of those attempts."

The talks, which had been moved from New York to Washington last Monday, broke off Thursday. The PRC later released details of the latest owners' proposal which was rejected by the players' negotiators.

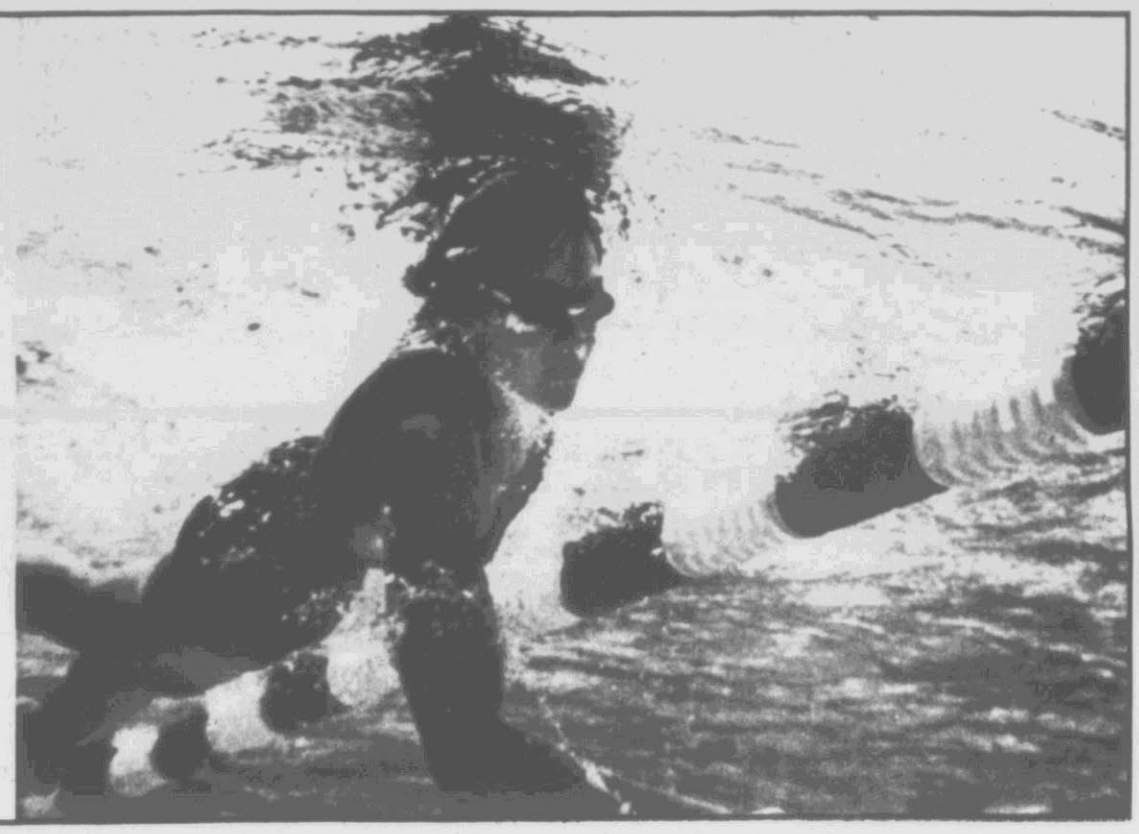

As one of two alternatives, the owners' plan provides for clubs losing free agents ranked among the top 20 percent in statistics from the previous two seasons to select professional compensation from a pool of talent, as the union has demanded. The other alternative is direct compensation, which the players have rejected.

But the pool plan also provides that clubs signing such premium free agents would have to contribute four more players to the pool than non-signing clubs. Signing clubs could protect only their best 24 players, while non-signing clubs could protect their best 26.

In addition, up to five clubs would be allowed to take themselves out of the pool by declaring that they would not sign ranking free agents for three years.

Grebey said the owners proposed a maximum of eight ranking players requiring pro compensation in this year's re-entry draft, with 10-player limits in each of the next two years. Theretwould be no carryover for unused selections, he said.

The players rejected it, saying what the owners called a pool plan was direct compensation disguised as a pool.

teammates appeared disorganized, though he did get an assist on Andy Brickley's goal midway through the third period.

VanBiesbrock is not eligible to play for American colleges because he received a small amount of money playing for Ste. Sault Marie of the Ontario Hockey League, the top level of junior hockey in Canada. He was drafted in the fourth round by the NHL New York Rangers.

Much has been made of amateur hockey being a purer, less violent sport than the pro version, but the New England-Great Lakes game included 29 penalties and several minor scuffles.

Sara Linke of Walnut Creek, Calif., gathered the most medals in swimming, with six, including golds in the 200 butterfly and a relay, silvers in the 400 individual medley, 200 IM and a relay, and a bronze in another relay.

Barrett, his fellow 1980 Olympian Chris Cavanaugh of Mountain View, Calif., and Patty Gavin of Ardmore, Pa., each had five medals. Barrett also had a relay gold Saturday, adding to his gold in the 100 breaststroke and his silvers in the 200 breaststroke and 800 freestyle relay.

Cavanaugh, who was on two winning relay teams Saturday, also had a gold in a relay, a silver in the 100 freestyle and a bronze in the 200 freestyle.

Gavin, who won the 200 individual medley Saturday, also had a gold in the 400, a silver in a relay and bronzes in a relay and the 200 butterfly.

Robin Leamy of Palos Verdes, Calif., also was on two winning relay teams Saturday to finish with three golds.

Olympian John Moffet of Balboa, Calif., who lost to Barrett in the 100 breaststroke Friday, outlasted him in the 200, pulling away in the last lap. Moffet was timed in 2:24.96, four seconds ahead of Barrett, who was second.

Rick Carey of Mount Kisco, N.Y., the top American Olympian in backstroke, easily won his second event in two days in that discipline. He defeated second-place finisher John Engs of Reno, Nev., in the 100 backstroke by two seconds with a time of 57.51.

Still another 1980 Olympian, Terri Baxter of Palo Alto, Calif., captured the women's 100 breaststroke in 1:14.21, edging Polly Winde of Ellicott City, Pa., who won the 200 breaststroke on Friday.

Unknown Goalie Sparkles In Victory Over N. England

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Bobby Carpenter, the schoolboy phenom from Peabody, Mass., received most of the attention in the few days leading up to the start of the hockey competition in the National Sports Festival.

Not a word was uttered, or written, about John VanBiesbrock of Detroit, Mich., a 17-year-old goalie and a virtual unknown in national hockey circles.

But the two youngsters switched roles Saturday when their respective teams met in the first game of the Festival's four-team round-robin. The diminutive VanBiesbrock, the youngest player in the ice competition, stopped 25 shots — many of them in spectacular fashion — as he helped Great Lakes beat Carpenter's New England squad 4-1.

The Central team, getting two goals apiece from Mike Lauen and Brian Mullen, beat the Midwest team 7-4 in the second half of the doubleheader Saturday at the Onondaga County War Memorial.

Carpenter was drafted third in the first round by the Washington Capitals of the National Hockey League and also was the recipient of a hockey scholarship from Providence College, if he chooses to take it. He and his teammates fell victim to long periods of disorganized play.

The young center did get an assist on a pretty drop pass to teammate Andy Brickley, who got in close on VanBiesbrock and fired it through the goalie's legs midway through the third period. But Carpenter's only other entries on the score sheet were a pair of minor penalties.

VanBiesbrock lost his American college eligibility by earning money playing for Ste. Sault Marie of the Ontario Hockey League, the top level of junior hockey in Canada, after his senior high school season. He played 56 games for the Greyhounds and was then drafted in the fourth round by the New York Rangers of the NHL.

The 5-foot-9, 165-pounder seemed a bit bewildered to be singled out from his teammates for media attention after the game.

Barrett Outclasses Field In 200 Individual Medley

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — World record-holder Bill Barrett of UCLA outclassed the field in his specialty, the 200-meter individual medley, and tied several other swimmers with his third gold medal Saturday at the National Sports Festival.

Mary Wayte of Mercer Island, Wash., had three gold medals on Friday, but she finished no better than third in two individual events and a relay Saturday, which completed the 30-event Festival agenda.

Robin Leamy of Palos Verdes, Calif., and 1980 Olympian Chris Cavanaugh of Mountain View, Calif., both were on two winning relay teams Saturday to join Wayte and Barrett with three golds. Barrett also had a relay gold Saturday.

Sara Linke of Walnut Creek, Calif., had the most medals with six, including two golds, three silvers and a bronze. Cavanaugh, Barrett and Patty Gavin of Ardmore, Pa., who won the 200 individual medley Saturday, had five medals overall.

Barrett won the men's 200 individual medley by nearly three full seconds over John Smith of Akron, Ohio. His time of 2 minutes, 6.74 seconds was three seconds off the world record he set last summer, but he did not taper his training for this meet, waiting instead for the U.S. Swimming Long Course championships next month.

Olympian John Moffet of Balboa, Calif., who lost to Barrett in the 100 breaststroke Friday, outlasted him in the 200, pulling away in the last lap. Moffet was timed in 2:24.96, four seconds ahead of Barrett, who was second.

Rick Carey of Mount Kisco, N.Y., the top American Olympian in backstroke, easily won his second event in two days in that discipline. He defeated second-place finisher John Engs of Reno, Nev., in the 100 backstroke by two seconds with a time of 57.51.

Still another 1980 Olympian, Terri Baxter of Palo Alto, Calif., captured the women's 100 breaststroke in 1:14.21, edging Polly Winde of Ellicott City, Pa., who won the 200 breaststroke on Friday.

LIETZKE'S GOALS

NEW YORK (AP) — Bruce Lietzke, one of the stars of the PGA tour, is not sure that he wants to go down in history as one of the greats of golf.

"I don't know if I want to be in the same class as Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson," Lietzke said. "There is a level I'm trying to reach but I'm not sure I'll know it when I get there. But I know I will never stop trying to improve."

Gomez Shocks Lendl, In Semis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ecuador's Andres Gomez knocked off top-seeded Ivan Lendl and Czechoslovakia's Stanislov Birner surprised 12th-seeded Mel Purcell Saturday to advance to the semifinals of the $200,000 Washington Star International Tennis Championships.

Gomez, whose victory will mark his first appearance in a semifinal round as a singles player in 1981, beat Lendl 2-6, 7-6, 6-4.

Birner, who qualified for the tournament field after winning three matches in a qualifying round, came from behind for a 1-6, 6-3, 6-1 victory.

Birner, who earlier admitted he never figured to survive the first round, has now beaten second-seeded Gene Mayer, Terry Moor, No.14 and Purcell in his quest for the clay-court title.

The 21-year-old Gomez, who is better known for his doubles play, credited is ability to make the big points for his victory.

"I hit out on the big points. This is what you have to do to beat him," Gomez said.

Lendl, the world's fourth ranked tennis player, was guilty of numerous errors in the match. "If you think they are unforced," Lendl angrily challenged a reporter, "pick up a racquet and try to hit them back."

Gomez, who lost the first set 6-2 and trailed 4-2 in the second, said he was confident he could come back.

"His (Lendl's) game doesn't scare me. I played him before in the French Open and went to five sets," Gomez said.

That match, like Saturday's was played on clay, Gomez' best surface.

On Saturday, Gomez broke Lendl three times in the final set, the last time with Lendl serving at 4-4.

"I am trying to rush the net more to take better advantage of my size," the 6-foot-2 Gomez noted. Last week produced Gomez' first win ever over Eddie Dibbs. This week, before Lendl, Gomez stopped seeded players Yannick Noah and Jose Higueras.

Gomez, Ecuador's top player and ranked 74th worldwide, is respected as one of the world's great doubles players. Teaming with Chile's Hans Gildemeister, Gomez has won eight doubles titles in the last two years, including last year's Washington Star. His best showing in singles play included 1981 quarterfinal appearances at Vina del Mar in Chile and in Brussels.

Chandler Retains Title With KO

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The fight was still suspenseful when World Boxing Association champion Jeff Chandler let go with two punches that ended Julian Solis' bid to regain the title Saturday.

"I could see from the initial punch that he was pulling away from the jab. He was looking for a long shot. I just stepped in and put in the right. It was a clean punch," said Chandler, who felled Solis in the seventh round of their scheduled 15-rounder.

Before the sudden combination, Chandler, of Philadelphia, was ahead on the cards of Judge Paul Cavaliere, 59-57, Judge Eva Shain, 58-57, and Richard Murray, 60-54.

"He's a very crafty fighter, and I'm a very careful fighter," Chandler said. "He was getting his face in the way, down low. I couldn't hit him with the upper cuts too good."

A left jab and a right cross sent Solis to the canvas and he was counted out at 2:58 of the round by referee Tony Perez. The dazed Solis was taken to Atlantic City Medical Center for observation.

It was the third successful title defense for Chandler, who outpointed Jorge Lugan in January and battled to a draw with Eijiro Murata in April.

Throughout the first five rounds here, Solis had successfully crowded Chandler, while clutching him and working the body. Solis, of San Juan, Puerto Rico, also was able to repeatedly elude Chandler's wild overhand rights.

But, midway thorugh the sixth round, Chandler pushed Solis into the ropes and landed a solid combination to the jaw. He peppered Solis from long range in the seventh round before landing the final, telling combination.

Perez warned the fighters several times for holding on during the fight, but there were few telling exchanges until the last two rounds.

Board Hoping Protests Won't End Rugby Tour

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The president of the South African Rugby Board said Saturday that he was hopeful the Springbok rugby tour of New Zealand would continue despite a mass protest that forced the cancellation of the second game.

Danie Craven said, "I am certainly full of hope that the tour will continue." He added the decision of whether to continue was up to his counterparts in New Zealand, but his board would not call it off.

A correspondent of the government-run South African Broadcasting Corp., reporting from Hamilton, New Zealand, said the team's players were committed to continuing.

But the correspondent, Trevor Quirk, said the team would not fly to the next match, scheduled in New Plymouth on Wednesday, until the New Zealand Rugby Union meets Sunday and decides whether to go ahead with the remaining matches.

The Johannesburg Star reported that there was virtually no chance of the tour continuing. Cuthbert Loriston, president of the South African Rugby Federation, said in Cape Town that additional demonstrations like those on Saturday would mean "we've had it."

The cancellation of Saturday's match was an especially bitter pill for this rugby-cracy nation, long isolated from international sports because of its apartheid policies. Many South African television viewers had gotten up before dawn to watch the match against Waikato at 4 a.m. South African time.

Instead, viewers saw hundreds of anti-tour protesters mob the rugby grounds. Police, unable to quickly disperse the demonstrations, called off the game.

Loriston said, "It is difficult to judge from thousands of miles away but from what I saw on television this morning I think the New Zealand police should carry part of the blame that the match was finally canceled.

"I would have expected firmer action from the police and I can tell you such a situation would never have developed in South Africa."

New Zealand Police Commissioner Bob Walton described the Saturday protest — which included an alleged attempt to steal a light plane and crash it into the rugby stands occupied by some 27,000 rugby fans — as the worst in his 35 years as a policeman.

Walton said he would meet with rugby officials Sunday to discuss the future of the tour.

There was at least one voice of dissent on the tour within South Africa. M.N. Pather, secretary of the anti-apartheid South African Council of Sport, praised the demonstrators and said they had "magnificently contributed to a cause that is essentially South African."

Craven argues that South Africa already has made great strides in integrating its sports teams. British, French and Irish rugby national sides have agreed and toured South Africa within the past two years.

EAST-WEST FOOTBALL & BASKETBALL

Rocky Mt. Coach Henderson To Lead East In Hoop Clash

GREENSBORO — If Coach Reggie Henderson of Rocky Mount decides to mix in a little humor during his practice sessions for the East All-Star boys' basketball team, he will only need to dig out a few of the players' nicknames.

Woo and Iceman may form one of the East's top scoring combinations, but they'll be rivals in the near future as they head for different ACC schools. And then there are also Pipeline and Q-Tip to further bolster the East forces.

Meanwhile, West coach Ralph Hargett may have come up with few nicknames of his own — among them, Stawman and Squirrel — to break the tension as the All-Stars prepare for their game in the Greensboro Coliseum on July 28.

UNC coach Dean Smith tracked down Woo for his Tar Heels. He is Lynwood Robinson, the 6-1 backcourt gem who helped Southern Wayne to a state 4-A championship while a junior. He averaged eight assists that season, 7.5 a year later to go along with a 17.1 scoring average.

In recent years Maryland has lured a few of the state's top prospects, including such standouts as John Lucas and Buck Williams. The latest is Ed "Iceman" Farmer of Wilson Beddingfield. Farmer averaged 18.9 points and 12.3 rebounds in his final high school season.

Jeff "Pipeline" Carmichael left little undone at Pinecrest where the 6-7 East forward averaged 21.4 points and 14 rebounds a game last season. David "Q-Tip" Glover handled a vital role while Chapel Hill rolled to the state 4-A title this past season. He's headed to Baylor.

Rivals experienced difficulties stopping Edward "Strawman" Coe of North Forsyth. Coe, a 6-3 guard, averaged 20.6 points a game and is headed to Temple University.

Eric "Squirrel" Boyd, a three-year starter at Charlotte Independence, ranks as the school's all-time assist leader and also averaged 19.7 points a game this past season. Boyd, a 6-4 guard, is headed to North Carolina A & T.

Charlotte Football Player Walking And More For West

GREENSBORO — Andy Hearn does not remember the early days when it was a struggle just to walk. His hips were twisted, his knees loose and his arches were nonexistent.

"In the beginning we just thought he didn't walk well because he was big for his age," his father recalled. Trips to the doctor's office revealed the real problem — crooked leg bones.

A specially-designed brace, extending from his hips to his shoes, allowed movement while forcing Andy's legs to straighten as he grew. He started wearing the brace when he was four years old. Three years later, after having worn the braces for 24 hours a day every day, they came off.

"While many fathers think about their son being an athlete some day, we just hoped Andy would be able to walk right," his father said. Their hopes were not in vain.

Today, Andy is the picture of success. He was an honor roll student with a 3.3 average at Charlotte Catholic and plans to attend Georgia Tech where he hopes to study electrical engineering.

"We give athletics and the doctor credit for Andy being where he is today," his father said. Where Andy will be come Thursay night, July 30, is in Greensboro to play in the 33rd annual East-West All-Star football game set for Greensboro's Jamieson Stadium.

The West all-star selection comes just a few months after Andy became the first player ever selected from Charlotte Catholic to play in the Shrine Bowl. At Charlotte Catholic, Andy was an all-conference center and also played defensive tackle.

During his four years, Charlotte Catholic posted an overall 38-8 record, won four conference titles and one state 2-A crown. He also competed in swimming in high school, taking over 50 first-place awards.

After going through weight training and adding 40 pounds, Georgia Tech awarded Andy a football scholarship. "I'm sort of surprised at some of the things he cane do at his age," Georgia Tech coach Bill Curry said.

Cards Sign Dierdorf

ST. CHARLES, Mo. (AP) — All-pro tackle Dan Dierdorf came to terms Saturday with the St. Louis Cardinals, signing a series of one-year contracts as practices began for veterans.

The signing of the 6-foot-3, 290-pound Dierdorf, beginning his 10th National Football League season, reduced the roster of unsigned St. Louis players to five. In addition, the Cards have yet to sign linebacker E.J. Junior, their top draft choice.

Dierdorf, who once played in 128 straight games, missed most of the 1979 season with knee surgery. He returned last fall and performed in all 16 games.

Quarterback Jim Hart, who leads active NFL passers in yards and touchdowns, had still not come to terms as St. Louis prepared for an evening workout at Lindenwood Colleges. Additional prospective holdouts included defensive end Ron Yankowski and wide receiver Mel Gray.

Regular Season Champs

Former UNC Defender After Starting Position With Colts

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Competition in the National Football League is such that a rookie with a shot at a starting job is a rare occurrence.

But the Baltimore Colts must consider Donnell Thompson a rare find because they have swung the door wide open for the newcomer from North Carolina.

Last week the Colts traded veteran defensive end Fred Cook to Washington, opening a position for the 6-foot-5, 270-pound Thompson, the team's first-round draft choice from North Carolina.

"The job is his as long as he can perform," a team spokesman said, adding that the coaching staff has high hopes for the big rookie.

So Thompson had more to look forward to than most rookies this week when he showed up at the Colts training camp. But Thompson is getting a slow start on his big opportunity because he came limping into camp. He acquired the limp only a week before when he pulled a hamstring in a "freak accident."

"I pulled it chasing Lawrence Taylor at school (in Chapel Hill)," Thompson said, referring to his former teammate and the New York Giants No. 1 draft choice. "We were playing a tag game. I was chasing him and boom, I pulled the ham."

The Colts are not taking any chances. Thompson is not involved in any contact work and spends most of his practice time running — to stay in shape and allow the hamstring to heal. Thompson says it has slowed his time in the 50-yard dash from 4.7 seconds to 4.9 seconds.

But he expects to be 100 percent by next week and is anxious to start hitting.

"I was working out twice a day during the summer getting ready," he said. "But now I've been here three days and I haven't hit yet. I just want to get into some kind of football action. That's all I want to do."

Other than Taylor, Thompson is the only rookie from the Atlantic Coast Conference with a solid shot at a starting job. While three of his teammates made the first, second or third team All-America squad, Thompson only got an honorable mention. And he came off an impressive defensive squad at North Carolina where he was only the fourth-leading tackler. Of course his 87 tackles last year would have led many teams.

But his speed is what Thompson considers his biggest asset, especially in the switch from tackle to end.

"I think the position change will be a big help to me," Thompson said. "I can get free more and use my speed more. I can use it a lot more than I did at Carolina. And with the four-man front they use here, I'll be going more man-on-man. With the three-man front at Carolina, it was two-on-one a lot."

His transition from college to the pros has been pretty smooth, so far.

"It's been great so far," he said. "Of course, it may change some when the veterans all get here next week."

As for Baltimore, Thompson has not had much of a chance to see much of the town to know whether he likes it or not.

"I don't even know what downtown looks like," he said, not too enthusiastically. "We start here at 7 a.m. and I don't get in until about 10:30 at night."

But Thompson is taking it all in stride, and that includes the prospect of a starting job.

"I can't worry about the injury," he said. "I wish it hadn't happened but I keep telling myself it could have been worse. I could have been sitting out for 10 weeks.

"But my only goal here is to do the best I can do. I guess everybody wants a starting job, and if I get it that's OK, that's what I want. But if not, I'll play as much as I can and learn as much as I can from the older guys."

Webb Leads Buffalo Open

CHEEKTOWAGA, N.Y. (AP) — Wayne Webb, back on the Professional Bowlers Association tour after three weeks off to cure a "burn out," averaged 255 for his first four games to grab the opening-round lead Saturday in the $95,000 Greater Buffalo Open.

Webb, of Tucson, Ariz., 1980 PBA Player of the Year and fifth in this season's money standings, had games of 264, 257, 221, 278 and 223 for a 1,457 total. The 23-year-old right-hander averaged 242 overall to lead Steve Ray of Fort Worth, Texas by 17 pins.

"I had been bowling for six straight months and was getting kind of burned out," Webb said of his layoff. "I didn't even practice until a couple of days before I was due to come here so I'm surprised my timing clicked as well as it did."

Randy Lightfoot of St. Charles, Mo., was third with 1,375. Last week's Canadian Open winner, Mike Aulby of Indianapolis, Ind., was fourth with 1,368. Gary Smith of East Peoria, Ill., rounded out the top five with 1,361.

Webb has earned $74,470 this year and captured two championships. He took the Greater Buffalo Open in 1979.

Two more qualifying rounds remain for the 192-man field before the top 24 bowlers advance to match play Sunday night. After three more rounds of head-to-head competition, the leading five bowlers will be seeded into the finals where the top prize is $12,000.

The Friday Front/ A Roundup of Friday Night's Results

ECU Rallies, Eliminates Campbell In Tournament

BUIES CREEK — Campbell romped to the North State College League regular season title, but the Camels stumbled when it came time for the league's post-season tournament. UNC-Wilmington and East Carolina made sure of that.

After losing to the Seahawks, 6-2, in the opening-round of the tournament, Campbell fell victim to second-place ECU, 3-2, Friday night. The loss eliminates the Camels.

ECU was to have played N.C. State Saturday for the right to advance to the tournament finals against UNC-Wilmington.

After a scoreless first inning, Campbell took a 2-0 lead in the second when catcher Wayne Dale connected on a two-run home run off ECU starter Charlie Smith.

The Camels did not score again. Which is not to say they didn't threaten. In the first four innings, Campbell left eight men stranded, including the bases loaded in the fourth, but came away each time empty.

Not so with ECU. The Pirates scored three runs in the bottom of the fourth to take a one-run lead, a lead that reliever Kirk Parsons protected the final three innings.

Parsons, who along with Smith entered the game with 5.50 earner run averages, allowed just one hit after coming in for Smith in the fourth. That, combined with ECU's three-run fourth inning, was enough to eliminate the Camels and keep the Pirates' hopes alive.

With one gone and Smith on first with a fielder's choice, Jay Carraway doubled. Smith, on third after the double, then scored on Robert Wells' sacrifice fly.

Mike Sorrell followed with a double to score Carraway. An error by Campbell third baseman Kelly Hoffman on Todd Hendley's grounder scored Sorrell with what proved to be the winning run.

The Seahawks ripped through the Wolfpack for four runs in the first inning on a series of singles by Roger Hudson, Mike Antle and Richard Foy. Antle and Tim Whitehead each added home runs in the rout.

Mike Sprouse singled home one Wolfpack run in the fourth and Tim Barbour added a home run in the sixth.

Ramey, Sorrell Named To League All-Star Team

RALEIGH — East Carolina's Rick Ramey was the only unanimous selection to the North State Summer Baseball League all-star team announced Saturday as voted on by the coaches.

Joining Ramey, who was 7-3 going into last night's game with N.C. State, on the all-star team from ECU was utility man Mike Sorrell. Sorrell played second base this season for ECU.

Campbell shortstop Terry Strickland, who led the North State Summer Baseball League in batting with a .465 average, was voted the Most Valuable Player by a vote of the players of the five league teams.

The Whiteville junior led the league in hitting throughout the season, helping Campbell to a first place regular-season finish. He also finished in a tie for home runs with five, placed fifth in stolen bases with six and was the leader in hits with 41.

Strickland was among five Campbell players selected by the coaches to the league's all-star team. They were catcher Wayne Dale, pitcher Derin Cloninger, second baseman Bobby Spicer and centerfielder Herb Williams.

Coastal Plains South In Finals

Babe Ruth

C. Plains (S).....2
Kinston 1

MANTEO — Scott Galloway hurled a three-hitter and Coastal Plains South scored two runs in the first inning to defeat Kinston Lenoir, 2-1, Friday night and advance into the finals of the 17-18-year-old Babe Ruth tournament.

The victory leaves Coastal Plains South as the only unbeaten team in tournament play entering Sunday's (2 p.m.) championship. CPS's opponent has yet to be determined.

Galloway, a left-hander, struck out 14 and walked three en route to the decision. His opponent, right-hander Quinton Barnes, did nearly as well. Barnes struck out six and walked three and gave up only five hits, three of which came in the first inning.

Roy Lassiter and Dixon Page singled to open the first and each moved up a base on a passed ball. Lassiter then scored on an error and Page followed him home on Sammy Tucker's single.

Kinston, held in check most of the game by Galloway, scored its only run in the fifth and did not threaten again.

Pitt Co.....4
Kinston 2

KINSTON — Mike Elks drove in two runs and Pitt County scored twice in the first inning to defeat Kinston Lenoir, 4-2, in the 13-15-year-old Babe Ruth tournament.

The loss eliminates Kinston. Pitt County was to have played the winner of lastn night's New Bern-Edenton Chowan game yesterday afternoon. The winner there was to have played the loser of Friday's Wilmington-East Wake game Saturday night. The championship is set for Sunday.

Shannon Peede was the winning pitcher. Elks led Pitt County with two hits in four at bats. He had a double for one of his two hits. Scott Rawls and Randy Mills each had one RBI.

Some Players Say '81 Season Over

By The Associated Press

After 44 days and 525 canceled games, the major league baseball players' strike over free-agent compensation doesn't appear close to solution. Some players already are writing off the season.

"My feeling right now is that I was looking forward to getting back to work," said Oakland A's third baseman Wayne Gross, "but this is something we're going to stand behind as long as we have to. And we aren't going to be shaken off our stand."

"Yes, I do want to get back on the field but not just to please the owners," said Phillies shortstop Larry Bowa. "It's disgusting that the parties can meet for so long and come up with nothing."

"I'm beginning to wonder if I'll ever play again," said California Angels shortstop Rick Burleson. "Pretty soon they may call off the season. How are you going to justify a 100-game season? Call it off, wait until next spring so the players who want to work can go ahead and do it."

Added Burleson's teammate, catcher Brian Downing, "After another week, it won't be worth playing. It'll be time to start thinking about going to work."

Minnesota's Roy Smalley thought the two sides might have become too stubborn to reach a settlement.

"When you get this kind of stonewalling in the negotiations, everyone becomes more entrenched in their views," he said. "I think that people are dug in now, and that scares me."

Many players are making up for the lack of baseball earnings by taking temporary employment that might well turn into permanant work for the rest of 1981 if the season is scratched.

Cleveland Indians pitcher Wayne Garland, who is working in an auto repair shop, said the players "got pushed into a corner and we're going to stand behind Marvin Miller. Every time we've made a proposal they reject it. Then they break off negotiations."

"I'm adjusting to a different lifestyle," admitted outfielder Bobby Clark of the Angels, who has less than a year of major league experience. "Life goes on, and I'm not a ballplayer now. I have no control over it, so until someone tells me to come back and play, I'm just another worker."

Clark is working in an oil refinery in Long Beach, Calif.

"It's more important to work than to work out," he said. "I've got a wife and a kid-to-be. I've played baseball since I was a kid just so I can reach the major leagues. So now I sit on strike. I don't like it."

A few players expressed displeasure with their own side earlier this week but, except for those outbursts, the players have stood firmly behind Marvin Miller, executive director of their union, and league player reps Doug DeCinces and Bob Boone.

Davey Lopes of the Los Angeles Dodgers questioned whether DeCinces, of Baltimore, and Boone, of Philadelphia, had the background to be heavily involved in the negotiations. And Detroit's Champ Summers and Dan Schatzeder complained about a lack of communication between Milt Wilcox, their player rep, and themselves.

Glory, Misfortune, Surprise First-Day Recipe At Festival

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A measure of glory, equal parts of misfortune and surprise, and a touch of confusion made up the recipe for the first full day of the National Sports Festival.

The athlete reaping the glory Friday was swimmer Mary Wayte of Mercer Island, Ga., who outswam several Olympians in winning three gold medals in as many tries. And the 16-year-old Wayte was only one of a few swimmers who stroked into the spotlight.

World record holder and 1980 Olympian Bill Barrett won the 100-meter breaststroke, Rick Carey, another Olympian and America's premier backstroker, won his event easily, and Sara Linke of Walnut Creek, Calif. took a pair of golds and a silver in her events.

Nolt, of Hershey, Pa., practicing a lift position for the pairs competition with her brother, Jeffrey, was hurt when he apparently caught a skate and tripped, bringing them crashing to the ice. She was in stable condition at a hosital. Dr. Roy Bergman, the U.S. Olympic Committee physician, said she was alert.

Connie Carpenter of Madison, Wis. won the 5 0-kilometer cycling after Heiden was involved in a three-bike spill. Heiden, also from Madison, is the former speed skating champ and the world cycling champion last year. She got her front wheel tangled with the back wheel of the bike ridden by Sarah Docter, also of Madison, went out of control and collided with two other riders. Heiden and the other two suffered cuts and bruises, while Docter stayed upright and finished second.

The surprise of the day came when it was learned that former professional track and field performers shot-putter Brian Oldfield and pole-vaulter Steveith had been granted a preliminary injunction allowing them to compete in the games this weekend. The injunction was granted in Syracuse by New York Supreme Court Justice William Roy, who said he decided the sponsoring U.S. Olympic Committee did not have the authority to exclude them.

Oldfield and Smith have been added to the West squad in the four-team regional track and competition, which began today and continues through Monday.

While Festival officials were digesting that news, some track and field athletes were complaining the new $5 00,000 track at Sunnycrest Park is too soft and that times may not be very fast.

Competitions were held Friday in 24 of the 33 sports in this six-day event, held by the USOC in non-Olympic years to provide competition and exposure for America's amateur athletes. Swimming had the biggest schedule of the day, with 14 events.

Wayte won the women's 200-meter freestyle and 200 backstroke, then combined with Linke, April Cox of Glendale, Ariz. and Lynda White of Whittier, Calif. to take the 800 freestyle relay for the West team, which took a big lead in the competition.

Wayte's time of 2 minutes, 4.12 seconds in the 200 freestyle was the first of 13 times Friday that bettered 1979 Festival records. She beat second-place finisher Cox by a second and 1980 Olympian Libby Kinkead of Wayne, Pa., who was fourth, by three seconds. Wayte swam the 200 backstroke in 2:19.62, with Kinkead, a backstroke specialist, second in 2:21.14.

Carey's 2:04.5 4 in the men's 200 backstroke was eight seconds better than the 1979 Festival mark.

Gus Williams Out To Return To Stardom

Former Seattle Star Hopes Summer Ball Step Back To Top

NEW YORK (AP) — The gym is a sweatbox on the fringes of Greenwich Village, nearly 3,000 miles and more than a few light years away from the Kingdome in Seattle, where Gus Williams is accustomed to strutting his stuff.

Instead of wearing the green and gold of the Seattle SuperSonics, whom he helped to the National Basketball Association championship in 1979, Williams' uniform is a pair of faded lime-green shorts and a white mesh shirt emblazoned with "Gems" on the front — and "Budweiser" on the back.

Williams is playing two nights a week in the New York Pro Summer League, a loosely structured organization that features some pro stars but is primarily a place for lesser-known college players and free agents to get their bodies and their games in shape for the job-hunting season — the fall training camps, where they'll shoot for spots in the NBA, the Continental Basketball Association or one of the European leagues.

Williams, a whippet-like guard who led Seattle in scoring for three years in a row, sat out the 1980-81 NBA season after becoming a free agent because he and his agent, Howard Slusher, were unable to reach contractual agreement with the Sonics or any other NBA team. That situation was resolved two months ago, when the Sonics signed Williams to a contract reportedly worth $3.5 million over five years.

But signing a contract is one thing; reclaiming his position among the game's premier guards is another.

"I know there's going to be pressure on me," said Williams. "This past year, when I didn't play, I got more publicity than in the five years I played. I know all eyes will be on me when I come back. I'll just have to be ready to deal with it."

One thing he isn't worried about is the physical aspect of coming back.

"Basketball is my game," he said simply. "I'll be ready."

But getting ready isn't easy. Sweat poured from his brow after just five minutes of action in a game last week, when Williams' Gems dropped a 123-118 overtime decision to the Uptowners, whose most recognizable players were ex-LSU stars Al Green and Lionel Green and former Oral Roberts standout Arnold Dugger.

In summer ball, however, the play's the thing, not the score. And Williams, teaming with his brother Ray of the New York Knicks, made his share of plays.

There was a classic move on a 2-on-1 break when Gus faked the pass before pulling up for a 15-foot jumper. There was a cat-quick lunge to pick off an inbounds pass and turn it into an easy layup. There was a solo move where he dribbled right, showed the ball to his defender, then took it back and slithered left for a floater.

And there was one 60-second sequence that had the 1,000 basketball fanatics — the gym at Xavier High School has bleachers that accommodate about 600, but with an admission price of only $2 the sponsors aren't about to stop there — really rocking.

First Ray Williams swooped in from the right side for a rim-rattling one-handed stuff. Then Ray rebounded a missed shot and fed an outlet pass to Gus, who faked the defender on a 2-on-1 break and set up Jim Bostic for a dunk. And then Ray grabbed another rebound and whipped it to Gus, whose spectacular off-balance pass found Mike Linden alone underneath for a layup.

"I know it's not the NBA, but it's competition and that's what

Q. How can I tell when an eggplant is ready to harvest? (W.C., Winston-Salem)

A. You have asked a tough question and you may have to sacrifice a few eggplants to find the best answer. Eggplants may lose part of their luster as they mature, but basically they do not change colors. Also, the size and shape depend on the variety. Florida Special, for example, is shaped like a teardrop. It is six to seven inches long and three to four inches in diameter at maturity. Other varieties are spindle-shaped, getting only one or two inches in diameter. Once an eggplant is spongy, it is over mature.

Q. My azaleas are bleaching out and turning yellow. What should I do? (D.D. Raleigh)

A. Your azaleas are infested with azalea lace bugs. These are small bugs which feed on the bottom of azalea leaves. Spray a pesticide such as Cygon (2/3 teaspoon per gallon of water) to the lower leaf surface. You may have to repeat the application in a week or ten days.

Q. Neither my tomato nor bell pepper plants have as much fruit on them this year as last. Any thoughts on what might cause his? (B.R., Smithfield)

A. Yes. My guess would be the extremely high temperatures in early June and early July. Temperatures of 95 degrees and above will severly limit fruit set on tomatoes, peppers and lima bens. They will also cut the yield on snapbeans and squash.

Q. Can cranberries be grown in North Carolina? (S.C., Moravian Falls)

A. Not likely. Cranberries require highly acidic soil — soil with a pH of 3.2 to 4.5. Ordinary garden or farm soil is not suitable. Cranberry production in the United States is highly specialized, and confined to acid bogs in Massachusetts, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

'Sunshine' Girls Tour Bath Area

The girls viewed a film of historic Bath and visited at the Historic Center. They then toured the Palmer Marsh House, St. Thomas Church and the burial grounds, attended the outdoor play "Blackbeard" and visited the Bonner House.

From there the girls spent the afternoon at Mrs. T.S. White's cottage in Bath for lunch and swimming.

Grain Prices Close Mixed

By PAULINE JELINEK
AP Business Writer

Grain futures prices closed mixed Friday as traders anticipated announcement of the first Soviet grain purchase since the partial embargo against them was lifted three months ago — an announcement that would not come until after trading ended.

After the close, the U.S. Agriculture Department said the Soviets bought 450,000 metric tons of corn for delivery after Sept. 30. Analysts said expectations and rumors of the purchase fueled buying during all of Fri-day's session.

"To the largest extent, today's trade was just people trying to figure out rumors about possible sales," said Jim Tometz, analyst with Cargill Investor Services in Chicago.

Early in the day, Agriculture Secretary John Block announced that the United States was awaiting Soviet confirmation on a proposal to hold new grain trade talks next month in Vienna. A bit later, the rumors grew that the Soviets already had made a large purchase but the USDA did not indeed confirm the development until trading ended for the day.

Ever since President Reagan lifted the partial grain embargo — imposed by President Carter in retaliation for Soviet intervention in Afghanistan — traders had been wondering how much, and for some, if any, the Soviets, would buy. Market participants became skeptical in recent weeks when purchases from Canada and Brazil were reported, because it appeared to some that the Soviet Union was avoiding the United States as a grain supplier.

When the sale was finally announced Friday, some analysts said they were disappointed that it was not for a arger amount of grain. Others said it would be hard to guess how the market will react to the sale and its size.

"I think everybody was thinking that sooner or later the Russians were going to come in and buy," said George Van Horn, also with Cargill in Chicago. He said some people tried to assign importance to the fact that the Soviets bought before the new talks could be held in Vienna. He said there also was a feeling that they may have made other purchases of U.S. grains, but that the corn purchase is the only one that has "worked its way through the USDA reporting system — if they were buying corn maybe they also were buying wheat."

The five day rally in coffee futures turned more tame Friday as traders sold to take profits from sharp advances this week. Prices settled mostly lower, while the September contract fell 4.15 cents to 125.43 cents a pound. Prices had surged Monday through Thursday after it was reported that coffee trees had been damaged by a cold snap in southern groves of Brazil, the world's No. 1 producer.

Forecasts for more bad weather this week, which also propped coffee prices through the week, were revised Friday to show that the groves may be bypassed by any damaging temperatures and frost this weekend, said Phil Spinelli, analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Blind Man Used Perception To Become Expert With Computers

AP Newsfeatures Writer

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — The motor car was a fact before Henry Ford painted it black and made it available to everyone. In the 1950s, before anyone knew they needed a copier, there suddenly appeared a copier — and everyone needed one.

The future is a strange phenomenon. There is no true clairvoyant. Largely, new things are shaped by persistent and patient people, adding up one and one, two and two, changing a mind here, improving a mousetrap there.

One of these people is Edward L. (Ted) Glaser. His expertise is computers, what they can do, what they cannot. He designed the first desktop computer nearly 20 years ago, and invented a stylus so that a computer user could make notes in the computer memory by writing them on the display screen.

For Ampex, the electronics company that made its name supplying videotape equipment for the television industry, his job is not looking into the future, but designing it.

Take the microprocessor, those tiny chips that are revolutionizing the computer industry. Glaser did not invent the microprocessor, but he could see what it could do — and that is the soul of innovation.

"I've been accused of having superb far vision, but my near vision isn't too good," he says blithely. Ted Glaser cannot see at all with his eyes. He has been blind since he was 8½ years old. His sight never was very good.

Now, he says, "If the light hits me just right, and the phase of the moon is proper, and the month begins with an X, I can get light discrimination and that's all."

His thinking, however, has 20-20 vision.

This 51-year-old, slightly plump, happy-voiced, optimistic man who frequently rubs his squinting eyes, is acutely aware of one anthropological fact: Man creates the tool, and the tool changes the man.

For that reason he is much preoccupied with the design of computers, the direction they are taking society. Just as mass production locked mankind into a way of life, improving it no doubt, but dehumanizing it a bit too, so do computers have the potential for changing the world, for better, for worse, and maybe both.

Computers should be extensions of the individual, he says, but to be that the computer designer must know individual needs.

"In the past," he explains, "we've said let's design 'systems' and then give people access to them. I see a much healthier thing happening now, which is designing systems around people for what they want. They'll be able to plug into other systems.

"Personal computers in the past have meant hobby computers or games. But to me, the personal computer is something that does for me what I need to have done. Tailored to my needs."

The big development of the 1970s — the microprocessor, the tiny chip that can do all kinds of chores if it is designed right — makes that possible. It turned computer design around. Ted Glaser saw it coming.

In the early 1970s, before there were microprocessors, Glaser headed an industry committee looking into the future. The big thing then was the "computer facility." Designed by computer experts, these electronic centers, with their whirring reels of stored information, acted like a bank. You dialed in, extracted the information or the service, and hung up. You made deposits the same way. It centralized computer services, but it was in the control of a few people, the bankers so to speak.

"There was the attitude three or four years ago that you could use those computers if you used them their way. That won't work anymore."

Glaser, as head of the industry committee, could see in research reports that that marvelous microprocessor was coming. The rest of the committee agreed, but what could those little chips do?

"The argument was that the chip was nothing but smaller, faster and more efficient. Right? The same thing could be said of a hydrogen bomb.

"A change of degree if large enough can become a change in kind."

Glaser grew up the only sightless member of a family of five, and his parents treated him the same as they treated the others. His blindness, he learned, was not a handicap, only an inconvenience.

His self-assurance stems at least partly from that. "I learned very early that when I went looking for a job and there were two of us sitting in that room, at least one of us better be convinced he could do it."

He learned long ago to look for those compatibilities between his ideas and those of other people and build bridges from there.

"I don't know how to turn an organization 90 degrees," he says, with a hint of a grin. "But I do know how to turn it one degree — 90 times."

Senator Says Abortion Foes Offer Strong Lobby

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Mark Hatfield says that of all the pressures he has endured because of his stands against the Vietnam War, military spending and the gun lobby, none compares with pressure exerted by foes of abortion.

"We hear a great deal about the effectiveness of the NRA (National Rifle Association) lobby. Let me tell you, this anti-abortion lobby has every bit, if not more, effective communications," says the Oregon Republican.

"They have just as mean, uncompromising, unloving spirit as anyone I've faced on Vietnam or Panama Canal or any other controversial issue."

Hatfield, perhaps the most prominent evangelical Christian in the nation's capital, was not speaking as an advocate of abortion rights. One of four original sponsors of a constitutional amendment to outlaw abortion, he still insists, "There's no one who feels any stronger about abortion than I do."

The controversy grew out of the latest stand Hatfield has taken counter to many of his Republican and evangelical brethren.

During a 90-minute interview with UPI, the 59-year-old Hatfield reflected on a controversial career as a liberal Republican spanning two terms as Oregon governor and 14 years in the Senate.

As chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, he is one of the most powerful men on Capitol Hill and a key member of the Senate establishment and the Reagan administration team.

It is a role in which he is not totally comfortable. For generally, Hatfield has been the lonely prophet:

Fighting for civil rights planks at Republican conventions in the 1950s; casting the only negative vote in 1965 when the nation's governors voted 49-1 in support of Lyndon Johnson's conduct of the Vietnam War; confronting Richard Nixon at the National Prayer Breakfast in 1973 during the Watergate cover-up by talking about the difference between "the God of an American civil religion and the God who reveals himself in the Holy Scriptures."

Even this year, he cast the only vote in the Senate against the $222 billion military appropriations bill and waged an unsucessful fight to keep the Pentagon from embarking on a nerve gas program.

Hatfield, one of the nattiest dressers in the Senate, does not look like an ancient prophet with flowing hair and sackcloth. During the interview in his antique-furnished Senate office, he was wearing an apricot suede sportcoat.

"I have a schizophrenic role, a dual journey," he said. "I've got my philosophic, spiritual commitments; I have my political roles. Where there is conflict, my philosophic will prevail.

"But I believe to be effective, you have to fight within the structure. If I chose the sidelines, the grandstand, the bleachers, that would be one thing. But I'm on the track, in the structure.

"So how can I influence Caesar the most? By being part of Caesar's household ... to try to influence from within the household."

He has nurtured friendships with the Senate elders and President and Mrs. Reagan. His son, Mark Jr., is a White House advance man.

But Hatfield's mind kept going back to the anti-abortionists.

In May, trying to keep an appropriations bill free of riders, Hatfield voted against the so-called Hyde amendment prohibiting federal funding of abortions. It was the first time he voted against the amendment, and he did so not as an abortion proponent, but to maintain a pure bill.

"The minute I moved to strike the Hyde amendment, the corporate combined leadership of the various anti-abortion groups telegraphed their message out... their precious Hyde amendment had been snatched from them by my actions. I had performed a Judas Iscariot role, a traitor....

"These people are so myopic, so single-issue mentality, that if you don't dot the 'i' at precisely the moment they dot the 'i' then you are an enemy and you've got to be destroyed."

He charged they manipulated Mother Teresa, the Roman Catholic nun with a ministry among the poor in Calcutta, during her June visit to Washington to speak against abortion.

'Addiction Theater' Tells How It Is Being Hooked

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Martha Boesing had something to say about addiction.

She wanted to put it on stage, with real addicts playing the parts. People who knew what being a junkie is all about — and had something to say themselves.

So the 46-year-old playwright scouted around, held auditions and finally selected her cast of seven women. As it turned out, she says, three of them weren't aware of the only "requirement" and joined the production expecting to portray something they weren't.

Instead they discovered that maybe they were.

At the Foot of the Mountain is a traveling troupe based in Minneapolis which lately has been evolving a production called "JUNKIE!"

It's not a play in the usual sense of the word — it's a "collage piece" that changes with every performance. But the same black thread runs through each. Addicts are obsessed and can't control their compulsions, whether it be drinking alcohol or coffee; eating or refusing to eat; mainlining or smoking; work, or sex, or violence.

It's also about realization, acceptance and recovery.

"It must be startling to see these women up there, so open, really telling what it feels like to be hooked on anything," Ms. Boesing says.

The performers don't remain on the stage; they wander through the audience offering a slug of whiskey or a joint. They ask advice of people in the fourth row. They compliment, they demand. They let observers know that they are a part of this.

The set is stark. So are the players, clothed in black and white and shades of gray.

The colorlessness is purposeful, says Ms. Boesing, for "the richness of life drains out of you" with every fix.

Holly Franzen, portraying a drug addict, says there are plenty of dramatic recovery stories of throwing away needles or tossing out a bottle. But addiction, at least for her, "has been the death and darkness that comes in so many forms."

The company is professional and paid, though salary ranges from a bare $100 to $150 a week. The membership, women of various ages and backgrounds, has changed over the years since Ms. Boesing founded the company in 1974 as a theater of protest.

"JUNKIE!" reflects the company's collective experience with addiction — their own, their families, and people they care about. It was created in three months without a script. Instead, Ms. Boesing set up what she calls "improvs" or situations, and the players filled them in. Here is a mother, tired and aching for a beer. Here is her daughter, walking an eggshell line when she objects.

"I think addiction is a national disease," the director says. "We really are an obsessive people, spiritually poverty-ridden."

In the nearly two-hour performance, the traditional concept of a junkie is ripped apart, with scenarios zipping by without giving the viewer a chance to analyze them. That's intentional, says Ms. Boesing; the aim is to hit people on an emotional level.

An alcoholic mother shouts at her daughter, the girl tries to soothe, but the players behind her, portraying her feelings, are cringing. The scenes tear away at the idea that most junkies live in ghettos and quiver with heroin overload.

Addiction extends much further, the piece maintains, to virtually anything a person finds uncontrollable.

Her laughter continues without break against a background chant by the rest of the players until, without changing in sound, it becomes a hollow, wrenching cry.

Involvement is central to the women's project.

The director opens each performance by disclosing what made her a junkie. Both her mother and brother were alcoholic and she followed suit with her own brand of addiction.

"My problem was that I had the disease by living in that system," she says. It betrayed itself in compulsive eating and obsessive relationships, she says, adding that she also has undergone treatment for marijuana abuse.

One of the original players, who came to the company not thinking herself an addict, recently dropped out to seek treatment — and told an audience beforehand that it was a relief to admit she had a problem.

Her illness, a form of anorexia nervosa, is not typically considered an addiction. But it fits under the label given by the At the Foot of the Mountain players: trying to gain control through obsessive behavior, in this case not eating.

Ms. Boesing maintains that this is a nation of virtual addicts, that everyone has had an obsessive relationship at one time or another — or will — and that's all it takes to be a junkie.

Auctioneers To Compete

DANVILLE, VA. — Tobacco auctioneers from across the country will gather in Danville in September to compete for top honors in the world's first Tobacco Auctioneering Championship.

The event, sponsored by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., will be held Saturday, Sept. 12, and is expected to draw thousands of spectators from the nation's 22 tobacco-producing states.

The winner will take home a $2,500 cash prize, a trophy and a schedule of guest appearances for the next year. The runner-up will receive $1,500, and the third place winner will get $1,000.

Tobacco auctioneers sell the farmer's tobacco as rapidly as possible and at the highest possible price. Chanting at a rate of about 400 words a minute, a good auctioneer usually can sell at least 500 piles of tobacco an hour, or over eight piles a minute. Because of the speed involved in the auction system, the auctioneer must be able to recognize signals from the buyers quickly.

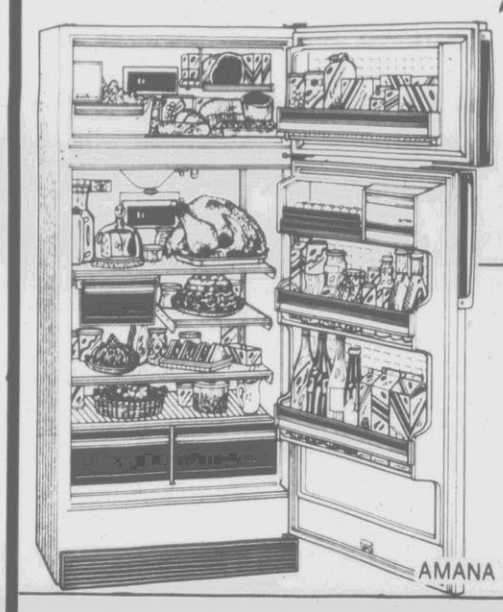

"Tobacco auctioneering is one of the most colorful aspects of this industry and we feel it's time that masters of the art are recognized and rewarded for excellence in this demanding occupation," said Charles K. Waddell, secretary and treasurer of the Danville Tobacco Association.

He added that Danville was chosen as the site for this world championship as the modern auction system was started in that city. It was more than a century ago that the first melodic chant of a tobacco auctioneer rang out across a warehouse floor in Danville.

The contest will get under way at 7 p.m. The championship is part of Danville's annual Harvest Jubilee festival which will take place in the city's downtown and warehouse district Sept. 11-13.

Clowning Around

On A Small Scale

IS THIS REALLY NECESSARY? ...seems to be the question asked by student clowns Amy Donahue, Allison Rogers and Lisa Donahue. The three check their appearances in a large mirror as they apply the white base for their clown faces.

IT'S A TIE . . During the first class' "graduation," a contest was held to determine the most beautiful clown in Greenville. Clown judges could not reach a decision, and decided that they were "all tied up"

"All the kids had a lot of fun. They have really enjoyed this clown class," said Sandra Harshberger, alias Sillie Sandy of the Greenville Clown Alley, about the Kids and Clowns class offered by the Greenville Parks and Recreation Department.

"This is the first time that the Parks and Recreation Department has offered this class. We had a fantastic response to the the two sessions. In fact, they had to limit the size of the classes, but we hope to offer more classes like this in the future".

"For the summer we like to have programs that let children do things that let them be creative, but have fun as well," Charles Vincent, superintendent of recreation, said. "They are creative enough during the school year, so during the summer we like them to be able to have fun, too. We always watch while the class is going on, and the kids always look like they are having such a good time. It makes us happy to see a summer program go so well."

"It takes years to develop a clown character, and while no child is walking out of here a clown, they have done a lot of work on their characters and they seem to have gotten a lot out of it," Mrs. Harshberger said.

The Greenville Clown Alley has been in existence since 1976. There are 12 members, including three children known as "associate clowns."

"National Clown Week is Aug. 1-7," Mrs. Harshberger noted, "and the local alley hopes to do a lot of clowning around in celebration of it."

Cooking Is Fun

PIGNOLI COOKIES

½ cup unsalted or slightly salted butter, soft or cut in thin pats
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons honey
2 teaspoons calvados or applejack
1 cup fork-stirred all-purpose flour
½ cup pine nuts (pignoli)

Beat together the butter, sugar, honey and calvados until blended. Gradually stir in the flour until smooth. Stir in the pine nuts. Cover tightly and chill until firm enough to handle. Shape level tablespoons of the mixture into balls. Place, an inch apart, on a large ungreased cookie sheet. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until tops are golden and edges are lightly browned — 10 to 12 minutes. With a metal spatula remove to a wire rack to cool. Store in a tightly covered container. Makes about 2 dozen. Pine nuts now available from China have excellent flavor; they are a good size and usually a good buy.

PRALINE YAM

1 large (8 ounces) yam
1 tablespoon butter
Salt to taste
2 tablespoons maple syrup, preferably Grade B
2 tablespoons coarsely chopped pecans

Peel yam; quarter and steam until very soft — 20 to 30 minutes; drain. Mash with butter and salt — there should be about 1 cup. Turn into a shallow, 1½ cup broiler-proof baking dish. Pour syrup over top. Broil 6 to 8 inches from high heat until hot through and bubbly — about 4 minutes. Sprinkle with pecans and continue broiling until they brown — another minute.

At Wit's End

You have to understand about Doris.

We've never been too crazy about her. She's the type of woman who, if you said you were going to give birth to a Savior next week, would say, "Me, too!"

For the last five years, we've invited Doris to go into town and have lunch with us. We need her. She is the only woman we know who can remember where we parked the car.

The rest of us have tried it with no success. We have tried writing it down. We have tried to memorize it through word association. We have even assigned the level to one to remember, the color to another and the direction to another. But it's no use. We end up wandering around and around until we faint from exhaustion or emissions.

We have come to the conclusion that finding your car is a gift. You either have it or you don't. Doris has it. We first discovered it one day when we were wandering through a garage in absolute panic. Helen said, "Can't any of you remember anything about the level we parked on?"

Grace said., "Of course. We were facing a lot of signs that said, "DO NOT ENTER!"

"But what color was it?" I asked.

"Red. All the signs were in red."

"Not the signs. The level."

"If we could just find the car door I scraped while opening mine, we're parked right next to it," said Helen.

"Frankly," I said, "I think the car has moved. Did you put the emergency brake on, Grace?"

"I thought you put it on," she said.

"Why would I put it on? You're driving."

"Oh," she snapped. "You could have fooled me."

We had just decided to go to a movie and wait until all the cars cleared out and take the one that was left when we ran into Doris.

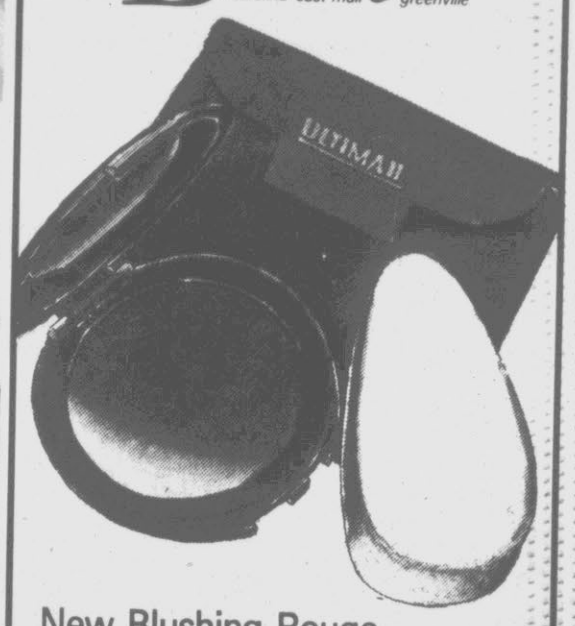

"Looking for your car?" she chided. "It's in Section A on the Red level, East concourse, Stall CRE-CZI, the third from the end, parked next to a Japanese import with a Japanese dog in the window that bows when the brakes go on."

"How did you know all that?" we asked.

"I saw you when you drove in."

Doris is a bore, she's uncouth, she brags about her kids, she borrows money for lunch, she never pays full price for anything you have just bought, and she's never ready when you drop by for her, but we wouldn't leave home without her.

The gown featured a Queen Anne neckline and sheer lace bishop sleeves and was accented with lace appliques and simulated pearls. The train was chapel length and her veil was trimmed in matching lace. She carried a bouquet of silk flowers featuring blue carnations and white roses.

Sheryl Gardner of Ayden, sister-in-law of the bride, was honor attendant. She wore a blue gown designed with a pleated skirt and capelet. She carried a nosegay of blue and white flowers and white ribbons.

Bridesmaids were Carol Rynex of Vienna, Va., sister of the bridegroom, Melody Baker of Tarboro, Susan Copeland of Bethel and Cindy Hines of Greenville. They wore gowns identical to that of the matron of honor and each carried a nosegay of blue and white flowers with blue ribbons.

Flower girl was Nikki Gardner of Ayden. She wore a light blue dress with dark blue ribbons and carried a basket of blue and white flowers.

Best man was Donnie Stouffer of Vienna, Va., brother of the bridegroom. Ushers were Tony Gardner of Winterville and Keith Gardner of Ayden, brothers of the bride, Ted Rynex of Vienna, Va., brother-in-law of the bridegroom and Ronnie Copeland of Bethel.

The bridegroom is in the U.S. Army stationed at Ft. Carson, Colo. as a personnel specialist. The bride is in the Army National Guard.

FUR TALK

NEW YORK (AP) — Natural ranch mink is the choice of more women than any other fur, says Maurice de la Valette, vice president of Revillon Furs. He estimates that ranch mink accounts for at least 65 percent of furs sold in the United States.

Mink as well as beaver and muskrat are being sheared like sheep this year, adds de la Valette. The idea is to make it possible to cut and drape the fur more like cloth for a sportier and more high fashion look.

Seven out of eight Americans die without a will, sending $100 million through probate courts each year.

Candlelight Wedding Performed Saturday

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Brant A. Johnson of Benson. Parents of the bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Madison Lee Sr. of Winston-Salem.

Diana's Dress Is Secret

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) — Lady Diana's hairstyle and favored ruffled blouses are familiar to fashion watchers in and out of Britain, but the world won't get a glimpse of her bridal dress until she steps into the glass coach on her way to marry Prince Charles.

At least, that's the idea. Young British designers David and Elizabeth Emanuel, the husband-and-wife team who are dressing Lady Diana for her July 29 wedding, have hired security guards for their showrooms in London's Mayfair district.

The blinds are permanently drawn to help keep the secret that could be worth up to a million pounds (nearly $2 million) to a manufacturer who got out first with copies.

The Emanuel teams are actually making three dresses in different colors and designs and plan a last-minute switch in case there's a leak.

"All the dresses are suitable," said Elizabeth, 27. "But we know the dress we'd like to see Lady Diana in — and of course it's the design she likes best."

David, 28, added: "Obviously we want to make her look regal. But after all, she's a beautiful girl of 20 and anything will look marvelous on her."

The wedding silk was spun by worms at Britain's only silk farm, Lullingstone, in Dorset. Owner Robert Gooden, 47, sensed royal romance last fall and bred tens of thousands of worms in the farm's biggest-ever operation.

When mulberry leaves for the worms' diet were in short supply, villagers scoured the countryside for fresh ones.

But Gooden won't say how much material was produced. It might give a clue about the dress being made in the Emanuel workrooms, where regular wedding gowns cost about 3,000 pounds (nearly $6,000).

They put Lady Diana in a breathtaker for her first public engagement — a night at the opera — after the Feb. 24 announcement that she would marry Prince Charles. The dress was a strapless, low-cut black evening gown.

But it is the hairstyle, the high-necked, ruffled blouses and the low-heeled shoes which have become the trademark of the 5-foot-9 royal bride — only an inch shorter than her fiance.

Britons fell in love with Lady Diana wearing a see-through skirt, half-ironed shirt and sleeveless sweater. That was last September when photographers caught her at the London kindergarten where she taught.

Since then, she has developed a style of her own.

The Lady Diana style includes silk suits for the royal enclosure at Ascot, a trim sailor-collar dress for a formal daytime portrait with Queen Elizabeth II, and pretty, flouncy blouses and dresses in silk, chiffon and taffeta.

Kevin Stanley, a hairdresser in London's Kensington district who gave Lady Diana that hair cut before she was famous, still does her hair. Stanley isn't saying whether she'll keep the style thousands now copy or switch to a more traditional royal off-the-face one on July 29 — so people can see her better.

Engagement Announced

LISA ANNE THOMAS. . .is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Thomas of Robersonville, who announce her engagement to James Henry Haislip, son of Mr. Herbert Haislip of Robersonville and the late Mrs. Bernice Hopkins Haislip. The wedding will take place Aug. 30.

ANNUAL AIRING

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — An estimated 10,000 American companies are scheduled to hold annual meetings this year, but the time and expense involved in getting to the meeting sites will prevent many shareholders from attending.

Emery Air Freight came up with an electronic solution to include as many as possible interested stockholders, as well as a large segment of the public, in its report on the past year's operations.

The company is said to be the first to air a national cable TV broadcast of its annual meeting here, with highlights of the meeting beamed by satellite for 30 minutes to nearly 5 million homes in all 50 states and Puerto Rico.

The wedding was directed by Rhesa Davis.

Husband Should Clear The Air

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My husband had a disagreement with his mother a year ago when we were building our first home. Even though we had saved up a large amount of money on our own, he came up short and asked his well-to-do mother if we could use her money as collateral on a low-interest loan. She refused, and my husband and his mother haven't spoken since.

In the meantime, I became pregnant soon after we moved into our home. I had the baby recently and she died shortly after birth. My husband is extremely upset because his mother never acknowledged our baby's death.

I think my husband should call his mother and get his feelings off his chest. By the way, my husband's sister sided with his mother, and we have not heard from her either.

USE NO NAMES

DEAR USE: If your husband stopped speaking to his mother because she refused him a financial favor, shame on him. However, his mother should have broken the silence to express her sympathy and offer support and comfort when she learned of your tragic loss. I agree with you. Your husband should call his mother and clear the air.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I recently moved to the suburbs. Our home is set back away from the road, but our neighbors can see our property from both sides and across the road.

My husband has always slept in the nude, but now he's started to get the morning paper in the same state! He says nobody will see him, but I'm afraid somebody might and he'll be arrested for indecent exposure. It's as though he is playing some sort of game of chance and gets a kick out of the risk he's taking, although he insists that the thought has never entered his mind. I have trouble looking our neighbors in the face, wondering if they have seen my husband picking up our morning paper.

I might add that he is not all that gorgeous. He's 53 years old and 40 pounds overweight. I think you owe me a solution, Abby, because he says he can't wait to see what Abby has to say.

NUDIE'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: Next time Old Nudie goes out to fetch the morning paper, lock the door behind him. The result could be funnier than an old Laurel and Hardy flick. It could also cure him.

DEAR ABBY: In response to ASHAMED IN SAN ANTONIO: I have a wonderful mother, alive and well, thank God. She is 72.

Mama gave me and my three brothers so much love over the years that I have plenty to go around!

Abby, please send me the name and address of the poor lady who was so ashamed of being forgotten on Mother's Day that she sent herself flowers, and I promise you she will never have to send herself flowers on her day again.

Klan Offers KKK Youth Camps As Its Alternative To Scouting

By KURT FRANCK
United Press International

A 10-year-old boy listens attentively to his white-robed elder, then joins in a pledge of allegiance to the American flag — and the Ku Klux Klan.

Klan leaders claim such scenes are common in "Youth Corps" camps that are springing up in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Kentucky, Louisana, Texas and as far north as Pennsylvania and Connecticut.

But the size of the KKK's "Youth Corps" is hard to determine because Klan officials refuse to discuss numbers.

"We are striving to make the Klan 'Youth Corps' an alternative to the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts," said Bill Wilkinson, Imperial Wizard of the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the KKK.

"Most of the camps are informal affairs at someone's summer place. They are all day camps — no overnights — where kids can go just to have some good, segregated fun," he added. "We teach patriotism — they are forced to pledge allegiance to the flag. We teach Christian values and they are required to say prayers before meals."

Wilkinson, an electrical contractor from Denham Springs, La., formed an adult commando training camp near Cullman in northern Alabama last fall. Members of the adult camp carry guns, wear army fatigues and prepare for what Klansmen believe is an inevitable race war.

The youth camps are run differently than the adult "Special Forces" camps, Wilkinson said. Both groups are instructed how to use guns, but Wilkinson claims the youngsters do not get paramilitary training.

"This is purely gun safety, how to handle a gun, how to hit what you're shooting at — a target," said Wilkinson, who is known to take a pistol to Klan rallies. "Every kid loves guns. We are not out to teach them how to shoot people.

"These are not Hitler youth camps. We are not preparing these kids for a race war. We just have a place for kids to play in a segregated atmosphere where they can fish, play ball and roast wienies.

"We are not brainwashing them."

While Wilkinson says his faction does not promote paramilitary training, a Texas Klan leader says his group does teach youngsters guerrilla warfare tactics.

"Instead of playing baseball or being out kicking a football around, they are learning how to survive," said Louis Beam, Texas grand dragon of the rival Knights of the KKK.

"We are training them for that possibility of a collapse, but we're also training them for urban survival because they have to live until the collapse."

Beam said the Knights of the KKK operate three youth camps in Texas — one near Houston, another near Dallas and a third near San Antonio.

"I'm not going to give numbers," Beam said. "How many were on the Mayflower? It doesn't take a lot. When God's on your side, you don't need a lot."

BILL WILKINSON, imperial wizard of the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the KKK, leactures a group of recruits at a Klan youth camp near Cullman, Ala. Such camps have been developed in several Southern states and as far noth as Connecticut. (UPI Photo)

Both Klan groups operate weekend day camps every four to six weeks. Beam said his faction also has a four-night encampment once a summer.

Wilkinson refused to say who foots the bill for his camps. Beam said campers pay no fee because adult Klan "members pass the hat around for gas money for the instructors."

Beam said his recruits are given firearms training with at least two kinds of rifles and at least three types of hand guns, including a .357 magnum.

Wilkinson, however, said the Invisible Empire's youth gun program is "straight out of the Boy Scout merit manual."

Both Klan leaders declined to allow interviews with any of the young recruits and their parents. They said the media has presented a distorted picture of the effort.

"The media is chopping up the story and taking it out of context. They seem to be giving a biased report and emphasizing what is done with the guns," said Wilkinson.

Wilkinson said the average day at one of his faction's camps begins with swimming, volleyball, softball or horseshoes. Lunch is followed by a short lecture on the Klan philosophy and a brief class on gun instruction.

"We teach them patriotism and they learn segregation is Biblically correct," he said. "We do not teach them to hate other races but that they should segregate."

Wilkinson said the youth learn an oath "that goes something like: 'I pledge allegiance to the flag and the white race that made it great.'

"They are also taught not to socialize with other races, and if they have to, to keep it on a business-like basis."

While the Klan is tight-lipped about its recruitment, foes of the white supremacy group are outspoken in their opposition.

The National Education Association, fearing the KKK is mounting a recruiting drive to draw schoolchildren into its hooded ranks, has unveiled a new curriculum guide to promote classroom discussion of the white supremacist group.

"We do not believe we are over-reacting to the reports of KKK youth recruitment," said NEA President Willard H. McGuire. "A resurgent Klan represents a threat that can't be ignored."

The NEA Reporter, the labor organization's magazine, recently featured a cover picture of a hooded and grim-faced Klansmen holding hands with a little boy. The display was illustrated with the headline, "The KKK wants your students."

"The Ku Klux Klan is back," the magazine said. "In nearly every part of the country, Klansmen are burning crosses, hiding under sheets — and targeting youngsters as young as age 10 for the new KKK 'Youth Corps.'

Tennessee Moving Ahead On 1982 World's Fair

By TOM EBLEN
Associated Press Writer

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — In a muddy downtown gulch, the 1982 World's Fair, the first ever in the Southeast United States, is taking shape.

With less than 10 months left before the May 1 opening, crews are working furiously to finish construction around the 70-acre site between the downtown business district and the University of Tennessee campus.

Knoxville International Energy Exposition Inc., a corporation set up to organize and promote the fair, expects 11 million people — an average of 60,000 a day — to pay just under $10 to visit the six-month exposition built around the theme "Energy Turns The World."

Also taking shape is the list of participants, which now includes 11 nations, the 10-nation European Economic Community, three states and almost 20 corporations.

Major entertainers scheduled to perform include Bob Hope, Patricia Neal, the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra and the Grand Kabuki Theatre of Japan.

But after five years of preparation, promoters are still trying to recruit nations, states, corporations and entertainers.

They also are still trying to convince skeptics that this Appalachian city of 183,000 can host a world-class extravaganza. And they're trying to ignore critics who say the fair is a publicly financed money-making scheme for a group of political buddies.

Promoters are quick to point out that the event will have 113,000 square feet of international exhibit space — more than any other U.S. fair sanctioned by the Bureau of International Expositions since World War II.

The Paris-based bureau gave its recognition recently to U.S. world's fairs in Seattle; San Antonio, Texas, and Spokane, Wash. — but not to the 1964 World's Fair in New York.

Foreign nations sponsoring individual exhibits are Australia, West Germany, France, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, Canada and South Korea.

Promoters are negotiating with nine other nations, including China, which wants corporate financial help to dismantle part of the Great Wall and rebuild it on the site.

The Soviet Union had indicated interest in sponsoring a pavilion, but hasn't said much since its invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979 and the U.S. boycott of the 1980 Olympics in Moscow.

While fair officials say they haven't received an offical "no" from the Russians, they are no longer reserving pavilion space for them.

The United States is building the fair's largest pavilion — a six-story, $21 million structure on the shore of a seven-acre, man-made lake that is to be the focal point of a city park when the fair ends.

The fair's symbol will be the 266-foot-tall Sunsphere — reminiscent of Paris' Eiffel Tower and Seattle's Space Needle — which will have a restaurant and observation areas inside the bronze globe at its top.

Tennessee is sponsoring a $3 million amphitheater with a $750,000 stage show. Alabama will have an exhibit, and the North Carolina Legislature recently appropriated $414,000 for a booth. Kentucky is a likely participant.

Corporate participants include General Electric, Coca-Cola Co., Delta Airlines and a host of utility associations. Conspicuously absent from the energy-theme event are major oil companies and automakers.

The theme was a natural for Knoxville, headquarters of the seven-state Tennessee Valley Authority, a federal agency that is the nation's largest electric utility.

About 25 miles to the west is Oak Ridge, a city carved out of the hills during World War II to build the world's first atomic bombs and nuclear reactor.

Oak Ridge National Laboratory remains a center of energy research, and the government operates a nuclear weapons parts factory and one of the nation's three uranium enrichment plants there. The controversial 3.2 billion Clinch River Breeder Reactor is planned for a site just outside town.

The fair was organized in 1976 by a group of businessmen headed by Knoxville banking magnate Jake Butcher, chairman of the fair's board of directors and an unsuccessful Democratic gubernatorial candidate in 1974 and 1978. It was promoted as a way to pump life into a dying downtown.

The event and related site redevelopment are being financed with $43.15 million in federal funds, $3 million in state money, an $11.6 million city bond issue, $31.87 million in county revenue bonds and $29.6 million in loans arranged by Butcher through a group of 43 banks.

A University of Tennessee study commissioned by fair organizers estimates the exposition's total economic impact at $400 million, including tax revenues of $12.1 million for the city and county, $28.5 million for the state and $40.2 million for the federal government.

COMBAT BOOTS ... The Army is testing this suede-like brown combat boot to determine if it should replace the standard, black combat boot. Cancer: Town Seeks The Cause

By TIM PETTIT
Associated Press Writer

NANTY GLO, Pa. (AP) — John Martin's mother-in-law had traveled 20 miles to another town for medical treatment. At the clinic, she mentioned she lived in Nanty Glo.

A woman seated next to her quickly rose and walked to the far side of the waiting room.

Henry McHugh's neighbor was working in the coal mines that honeycomb southwestern Pennsylvania when another miner asked to drink from his bucket.

It is a valley [illegible] folks today. Ther[illegible] resident here, it [illegible] doesn't know of a [illegible] friend or relative who hasn't had cancer in Nanty Glo.

"It's been a major topic of conversation for years, but nobody ever seemed to care enough to look at what might be causing it," says Catherine Gabriel, a clerk in a furniture store.

That all changed this past winter, after 12-year-old Ricky McDonald became the sixth child in town who was stricken by cancer.

Some 30 volunteers went door-to-door to 1,200 families to ask questions about cancer victims. Their answers were translated into colored pins on a detailed street map, pins that smothered some of the street lines.

Twenty-three cancer cases on Roberts Street. Sixteen on tiny Christoff Street.

All told, the ski-slope steep streets of Nanty Glo bore 175 cancer pins, covering the years between 1970 and 1980.

That's only slighty higher than the rate for cancer cases and deaths in all of Pennsylvania but residents still regard the town as a cancer hotspot.

Equipped with their map, Nanty Glo residents persuaded skeptical state officials to investigate further, and a state task force has been planned to interview the town's cancer victims.

A preliminary state review of the Nanty Glo survey showed that the cancer figures for most of the decade "are relatively high, but unfortunately not too different from the rates for many other Pennsylvania communities."

But a single year — 1978 — had a cancer death rate almost double that of the rest of the state, and that prompted the Health Department to create the task force.

"There is no cause for alarm, but there are pieces (of the survey) we have questions about," says Deputy Health Secretary Donald Reid.

One thing the medical investigators are looking at carefully is the "cluster" of cancer cases in several areas.

Regardless of what the state team uncovers, "I still think this area is high," says Nanty Glo undertaker Harry Ondirezek Sr. "The number of deaths concerns me."

Rev. Kenneth Bischko, a Franciscan priest and son of a Nanty Glo coal miner, lives in the midst of the cancer cluster on Roberts Street.

He wonders "how the people would feel if they had three typhoid cases on a street."

The economy and jobs are still big issues here. A mound of coal waste that towers over the southern entrance of town is a bleak reminder of the now-closed mine that burrows beneath the streets.

But front page stories in the Nanty Glo Journal and television news reports from Pittsburgh and Johnstown have townspeople asking a lot of questions about the source of the cancer.

Are there carcinogens floating in Blacklick Creek or the town reservoir? Or is it air particles that funnel in the valley from the Johnstown steel plants and the Homer City generating plant? And why is Roberts Street so riddled with victims?

Soldiers Test 'No Shine' Boots

By JOHN W. FRECE

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUNDS, Md. (UPI) — Gung-ho officers and grizzled sergeants accustomed to the Army's spit-polish tradition may have trouble getting used to the suede brush approach of the "brown boot" Army of the '80s.

In a grove of locust trees at this test base, 32 members of today's volunteer force are giving new meaning to the term "foot soldier."

Since mid-May, the 27 men and five women have walked in small circles five days a week, up to 15 miles a day, all to test a new suede-like brown combat boot that never needs shining.

The Army wants to know whether the boot, made with a fiberglass toe and the cowhide leather turned inside out, should replace the standard, black combat boot most American soldiers have worn since about 1959. The Army isn't switching to suede for style, or to avoid the need for a shoe shine. Soldiers, after all, have been spit polishing for nearly as long as armies have used leather.

The Army has determined that an enemy can pick up the shine on the old black boots with infrared detectors used for nighttime surveillance. And there are other factors.

The Army is testing not only for comfort, but for durability under various conditions, for mud retention, for water resistence, for drying time, traction and even for how long it takes to lace them up or to take them off.

So those 32 soldiers keep walking, in rain, heat and humidity. They have been bombarded by black flies, chewed by mosquitoes, attacked by woodticks and surprised by a black snake.

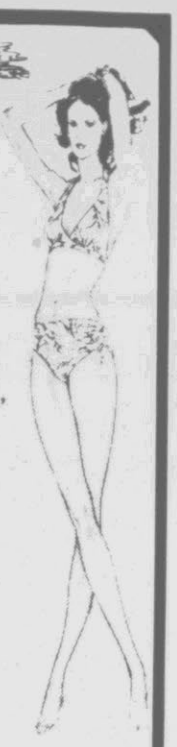

If there's any notion that these pedestrian sacrifices mean marching comfort for generations of soldiers to come, it's obscured by blisters that some have on their toes and heels and insteps.

Virtually all agree the monotony of the one-sixth of a mile circular obstacle course they must walk every working day until September is the hardest part.

"If the course was longer, it'd be better. But now, I'm just thinking about getting out of the Army," said Sgt. Gerry McElroy, 25, a six-year veteran from Levittown, Pa., who said she joined up to be a tank turret mechanic — not walk in circles.

"If I had a choice, I'd take the brown boot," she said. She found the test boot developed by the Army's Natick Research and Development Laboratory in Massachusetts easier to break in, more flexible and generally more comfortable.

North Carolina Art By Vic Gillispie Being Shown In Greenville

A COASTAL SCENE . . . depicting boats, a boathouse and tall grass is typical of Vic Gillispie's art on coastal North Carolina subjects. A showing of Gillispie's work goes on view at the Frame It Yourself Workshoppe on Arlington Boulevard at 7 p.m. Thursday, July 30, and will be shown through Saturday, Aug. 8. Gillispie will also be a guest on "Carolina Today" Thursday morning.

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

For the past several years Piedmont native Vic Gillispie has made his home in Manteo on Roanoke Island. The artist, in his late 30s, has gained considerable attention for his realistic paintings, prints and drawings of the Outer Banks scene — old beach houses, coastal wildflowers, lighthouses, boats, stretches of sand dunes and grasses — in short, the typical objects of visual beauty that are landmarks of North Carolina's coast.

His subjects, whether coastal or inland or mountain landscapes of North Carolina, or a study of flowers or still life, are the kind that appeal to art lovers who respond to straightforward, representational work. Gillispie's style of painting, too, finds favor with that large segment of the public who prefer art to reflect nature as it is, in the splendor of its seasonal colors, in readily recognizable shapes and textures.

Gillispie and his art will be on the local scene during the coming week. On Thursday morning, July 30, he will be a guest on "Carolina Today." That evening, at 7 p.m., he will have a show of his work on view at the Frame It Yourself Shoppe on Arlington Blvd. A reception will be held from 7 to 9 p.m., with the public invited to attend. Light refreshments will be served.

The show at the Frame It Yourself Shoppe will remain on view through Saturday, Aug. 8. On Sunday, Aug. 2, Gillispie will make an apperance on Kay Currie's "Hospitality House" aired on Channel 7, WITN-TV, Washington.

Earlier this year, Gillispie was honored by having his art chosen as the visual counterpart to actor Andy Griffith's commentary in a series of public service announcements for television. The campaign, directed to get Tar Heel people to know their home state better, is entitled "I Like Calling North Carolina Home," and features 13 original landscapes painted by Gillispie.

Speaking about his art, Gillispie says that his direction in painting comes from his viewpoint of the world in which he lives. "I look at the world we live in visually. I try to create the essence of what I'm looking at, of what I feel about it," he said.

"I have to be excited about what I'm doing, and I don't feel I've captured in art what I feel unless the end result expresses the inner response I have experienced."

Gillispie, a native of Danville, Va., is in the truest sense a bonafide Tar Heel man. His family moved to Swepsonville in Alamance County when he was still an infant. And Swepsonville is what Gillispie means when he refers to "home."

For much of his life, Gillispie enjoyed drawing and painting as a satisfying pasttime. It was not, however, until he was far away from home in the jungles of Vietnam during the mid-60s that he received the impetus that turned his thoughts to art as something other than a casual avocation.

Infantryman Gillispie was asked to paint scenes on a mess hall wall. Murals on walls of public places was one way homesick servicemen had of being reminded of things back home, and was a widespread practice when conditions were settled enough to permit this artistic luxury.

"This experience made me realize how much I enjoyed painting," Gillispie recalls. The 40 wooden panels he painted for that Southeastern Asian assignment are long gone — destroyed by enemy shellfire.

After completing his military stint in 1968, Gillispie returned to North Carolina and resumed his former work as a surveyor. The painting bug, Gillispie discovered, was as strong as ever. He constantly sketched. His employer, seeing some of these, encouraged Gillispie to think about training. As a result, he enrolled in the two-year commercial art and advertising program at the Technical Institute of Alamance in Burlington.

The fact his first show was successful, with everything in the show being sold, became a turning point for Gillispie. Since then, he has devoted himself full time to painting. Watercolors and acrylics are his favorite media, but he also paints in oils, washes, and makes numerous sketches in pen and ink and pencil.

Gillispie, though pleased with the favorable public recepition his art is receiving in most circles, is aware that being a good artist involves a willingness to continue to experiment, to change. "I hope that as an artist I can grow, and that down the line I will be able to see that I am achieving better things in my work," he commented.

PROFITABLE CATCH

They received top honors, worth $25,000 in cash and merchandise, in a field of 4,000 fishermen.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By JUNE PARKER

Sheppard Memorial Library has added a new service, "Value Line Investment Survey," to its business collection.

"Value Line" is a weekly survey of 1700 stocks in over 90 industries. It employs a research staff of 80 security analysts, statisticians, economists, librarians, and computer programers.

The survey is designed for the private investor who manages his own or his family's capital. Professional analysts and corporate executives have also found "Value Line" useful.

The survey is divided into three sections: Summary and Index, Ratings and Reports, and Selections and Opinion. The weekly Summary and Index calls attention to very recent changes in rank or earnings estimates.

The main body of the survey is the Ratings and Reports which contains full-page reorts, which are updated at least once every three months, on all the 1,700 stocks listed. These reports cover such areas as price, price/earnings ratio, dividend yield, highest and lowest price of the year, number of shares traded, statistical milestones of the company, condensed summary of the business, 400-word report on recent developments and prospects, indices of financial strength, price stability, price growth persistence, earnings predictability, capital structure, record of insider decisions, decisions made by the largest institutions, and total return.

The Selection and Opinion section includes a general business prospect, stock market outlook, and advisable investment strategy. It also highlights a stock that is likely to outperform the market as a whole in the year ahead and offers editorial opinions on political decisions such as tax legislation, regulation, tariffs, and other government actions.

Two newsletters have also been added to the business collection. The "Wachovia Business Index News Release" reports the level of business activity in North Carolina. It records statistics in such areas as hourly earnings, number of hours in the workweek, employment, production and spending in the state. The Index itself is a number, based in 1967 as 100, which reflects the total business activity in North Carolina.

The second newsletter is "North Carolina Economic Indicators" compiled by the North Carolina Office of State Budget and Mangement. It analyzes current conditions and forecasts future business conditions. Each issue contains a variety of business statistics which have been made available for that month. Both of these newsletters have been obtained at no charge from the agencies which produced them.

ROYAL WEDDING STAMPS — The marriage of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer at St. Paul's Cathedral, London on July 29 is being commemorated by the British Post Office with an issue featuring the Royal couple. Denominations for the two stamps of identical design are 14 and 25 pence. The profile of Queen Elizabeth II and the date of the wedding appear on the stamps. The stamp portraits are from a photograph taken by Lord Snowdon. Collectors interested in securing these stamps can write to StanGib Limited, 1325 Franklin Avenue, Garden City, N.Y., 11530. A Tale Of Two Mothers Is A Fascinating Autobiography

Mother, Mother. New York. Congdon & Lattes Inc. 1981. Hardbound, $12.95.

I like autobiographies, so I've read a few and seldom have I read such an honest and well-written assessment of oneself as James Stingley's Mother, Mother.

The book held my attention to the degree that I had crammed finishing it into the first 18 hours after I first laid eyes on it.

Stingley is a journalist, a former Raleigh News and Observer and Los Angeles Times staff writer, and his style is journalistic. His is the best kind of journalism, with lots of conversation and character interreaction to show the reader events and feelings rather than tell him about it and with characters kept to a limited number — surely there were other principals in his life through the several years the book covers — and extremely well depicted.

At times I got extremely impatient with Stingley. I wanted him to wake up and realize that it didn't really matter about all the circumstances surrounding his birth, to know that Mother — Edith Stingley of North Carolina — and Mother — Ria Dammeron of Beverly Hills — both loved him in their imperfect fashions, that their fault was not in their love for him, but in themselves and their humanness. Yet I knew that this is not how humans — and he was human and therefore lovable and forgivable even at his worst — perceive their problems. He had to work through it all and hurt and struggle for what he already possessed if he had only been able to realize and accept it, the love of the woman who gave birth to him and also the love of the woman who arranged for his birth by another woman so she could give her husband a child.

There were times in the first pages when I believed that Stingley might be stretching the truth. After all, what adoptee would really discover that his biological mother is a Beverly Hills socialite and philanthropist who lolls in Rolls Royces munching giant prawns, and supplies new found sons designer wardrobes and the wherewithal for Porsches. But as I read on, I came to believe him, if for no other reason than the circumstances of his arranged-for conception by his father (his adoptive mother's husband) and an intelligent and good-looking young girl were not all that dramatic in many ways. What was more compelling was the emotional yin-yang he went through as he sought to make his two mothers' story of the events surrounding his birth jibe and of his ambivalent feelings toward both.

Both women, he learns in the end, love him, but both had trouble conveying it to him — Edith because she never knew affection herself in her childhood and because she failed to understand his sensitivity and need till his childhood years were past; Ria, because, for all her expansive personality, money and social status got in the way. More importantly, though, he has trouble accepting the love they do express.

The child in Stingley pouts and demands more than either can give from each of these women and what he nearly accomplishes is destroying himself. Only the love of another woman, one who agrees to become the mother of his child, saves him from the "the pitiful little soul that had screamed so loud, so long."

Stingley is now a man living with and loving a wife and son in the mountains of North Carolina. He says he doesn't have all the answers about the real story of his birth, but knows it no longer matters. However, I'm glad he chose to share his hellish search for that story in this, his first book.

Folk Heritage Committee chairman Jerry Israel says tickets are on sale at the Asheville Area Chamber of Commerce and at the Asheville Civic Center. Tickets cost $4 for Thursday and Friday nights, and $5 for Saturday nights. There is no reserved seating.

BIG INDIAN, LITTLE INDIAN — Two of the Indians in "The Lost Colony" are shown backstage last week during a visit by Lindsay C. Warren Jr. of Goldsboro. At left is Robert Midgette of Manteo, who plays the role of Manteo, and the young Indian is Mike Smith of New Bern, who portrays Wano. It was Warren's late father, Lindsay C. Warren Sr., who persuaded the N. C. General Assembly to authorize the appointment of a commission to plan the quadricentennial. Tar Heel Authors Published

LAURINBURG — Books by two North Carolina writers, both from Southern Pines, will make their debut late in July.

One is by Sam Ragan, editor and publisher of The Pilot newspaper. The other is by the late Susan Kinnicutt, a native of Moore County who also lived in Arizona and Vermont and for a time in Hartford, Conn.

Ragan's book is a volume of poetry, "Journey Into Morning," which, according to Ronald H. Bayes of the St. Andrews Presbyterian College Press, "starts with reference to spring and ends with the affirmation Yes." Both books are being published by St. Andrews Press.

Ragan, North Carolina's first secretary of art, culture and history, and former managing editor of The News & Observer of Raleigh, is a prize-winning poet who has written several other volumes of poetry, including "To The Waters Edge" and "Tree In The Pasture."

He is chairman of the board of the Weymouth Foundation and former chairman of the North Carolina Press Association.

Susan (Sibley) Kinnicutt's first novel, "Woodsmoke," was hailed as "striking and timeless" by the Houston Chronicle and the Hartford Courant called it "well constructed and fascinating."

The new volume, "Somebody Killed Reddy Fox," gathers six short stories previously published in far-flung literary magazines and precedes the late Mrs. Kinnicutt's second novel, due from Avon Press this summer.

The Ragan and Kinnicutt books will officially be launched at the North Carolina Writers Conference in Raleigh this weekend, a spokesman for the St. Andrews Press has announced.

The books will be available in book stores or may be ordered by mail. Each is priced at $6 postpaid and can be ordered from: St. Andrews Press, St. Andrews Presbyterian College, Laurinburg, N. C., 28352.

HOUSTON — Houston Ballet and the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, will co-sponsor "The Diaghilev Heritage," a series about the collaboration of artists in dance, music and art. The series will consist of three major events and will be held at the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston, Sept. 11-17.

Tarboro To Hold Tobacco Exhibit

TARBORO — The Edgecombe County Memorial Library has received a $2,795 grant to present a program entitled "Tobacco Perspectives" in October of this year, according to R. Oakley Winters, exective director of the North Carolina Humanities Committee.

Library director Mary Jo Godwin noted the funds will enable the library to bring to Edgecombe County materials for a month-long exhibit on the past, present and future of tobacco, and will also provide funds for speakers to give lectures and take part in public forums on the subject of tobacco.

The program of lectures and public forums will take place from Sunday, Oct. 11, through Tuesday, Oct. 13. Mediator will be Dr. Gene Purcell of the department of philosophy, Atlantic Christian College, Wilson.

The exhibit of tobacco-related items will be on view at the library's Pender Room throughout the month of October. Items will be on loan from the Duke Homestead Museum, from Thrope & Ricks Inc. of Rocky Mount and from a number of private and industrial collections.

Any area resident who wishes to volunteer his time to help with the program, or to lend an item for the exhibit is asked to contact Meade Horne at the library, 823-1141.

One Week Closure

The Greenville Museum of Art will be closed for a one-week period beginning July 28 and continuing through Monday, August 3.

The museum will reopen on Tuesday, August 4. At that time, a show of sculpture in wood designs by James Rouse will be exhibited in the museum's south galleries.

Also, recent acquisitions will be on view in the north gallery downstairs. Upstairs in the Rachel Maxwell Moore Permanent Gallery and in the Children's Gallery, works from the permanent collection will be shown.

Mary Ann Pennington, director of the Greenville Museum of Art, notes that the upstairs galleries have been renovated for the display of works from the permanent collection.

A Big Black Bear Statue Erected In Bear Grass

THE BEAR GRASS BEAR . . . This seven-foot erect black bear, placed on a six-foot pedastal, now near completion, stands on the grounds of Bear Grass School in the Martin County village. Area citizens have helped local sculptor Henry Cowen create the authentically scaled bear as the focal point of their village. BEAR GRASS — After decades — a couple of centuries even — of only having an occasional live bear make an appearance in their village, the citizens of Bear Grass in Martin County are now getting a permanent, authentically scaled American Black Bear sculpture.

The bear, all erect seven feet, stands on a six-foot pedastal on the grounds of the Bear Grass School. Work on the statue is nearing completion, with only a stone-like finish on the pedastal remaining to be completed.

"The real driving force behind the creation of the Bear Grass Bear is Henry Cowen," Dink Mills, principal of Bear Grass School commented. "Henry's a local man who's really very gifted, and likes to create sculptures. Some time ago I was admiring a sculpture of a Confederate soldier he made for his back yard. It occurred to me that perhaps he could make one of a bear for the town. When I mentioned the possibility to him, he was all for it."

A proposal for a grant was drawn up, and funds for the material have been provided by the North Carolina Arts Council.

"Once funds to cover the costs of materials were received," Mills remarked, "Henry has been right on top of the project. He has donated a lot of free time to creating the bear. To make sure the bear would be authentic in proportions, Henry spent a full day in Kinston sketching to scale a black bear in a taxidermist's shop."

Cowen mixed black dye in his materials so that weathering in future years will not result in a faded color. To make the sculpture sturdy, he used steel vertical and horizontal rods as well as the rat wire to shape the bear's body. Rods extend into the pedastal to provide secure anchorage.

Mills explained that "another local man, Jimmy Peaks, has been instrumental in helping with the project. Jimmy constructed the platform and is going to do the work to finish it off so that it will have the appearance of stone.

"And several Bear Grass students have put a lot of time into the project," Mills added. "Right off hand I can think of Jennifer Roberson, Derek Price, Laura Cowen, and Cindy and Pammy Taylor. There may be one or two others also who have helped Henry with the bear."

Carrying out the touch of authenticity, a decision was made to order the eyes for the bear rather than try paint them in. "We found a company in South Dakota that specializes in making bear eyes, glass ones," Mills said.

"We are going to landscape the statue and will be using the Yucca plant as a prominent part of the landscaping," Mills said. The sharp-leafed plant with its cluster of waxy white flowers is locally known as bear grass.

Last year, for the first time, Bear Grass received funds for an art teacher and an arts program. A one-story house on the school grounds, formerly the home for the school's principal, was converted into a Bear Grass Community Cultural Arts Center. An art teacher, Pam Davis, was hired to teach at this center and also at nearby Rodgers Elementary School.

"This year's funding does not provide for a teacher," Mills explained. "However, the people in the community were so enthused about the program that we applied for funds to keep the center open. We have received a grant for equipment and for bringing in consultants, so we are working on a maintaining a continuing community program.

"There's a dark room, a potter's wheel and easels that people can use. We are also thinking about bringing in people in different fields on a consulting basis.

"People in and around Bear Grass are really excited about their bear, and about art in the community. It's good to see all this interest generated in our community."

Variety Show For Sunday In The Park Today

MUSIC MAKERS . . . Two of the performers to be appearing in the "Greenville Variety Show" at today's Sunday in the Park 7 p.m. are Joe Distefano (left), director of the program, and Duane Logue, who will sing a couple of his own songs. Others on today's program include soloists, groups and a couple of dancers. There is no admission charge and the public is invited to attend this last Sunday in the Park event for the summer.

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Today's Sunday in the Park, the final of eight entertainments for the 1981 summer, is a special offering involving singing, composing and dancing talent from Greenville and the adjacent area, entitled "The Greenville Variety Show." The theme behind the show is "Greenville Sure Looks Good To Me."

The variety show begins at 7 p.m. on the slope east of Reade Street between Third and Fourth streets. Sunday in the Park is funded by the city of Greenville, is under the supervision of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

The public is invited and there is no admission charged.

"The Greenville Vareity Show" is directed by Joe Distefano, who will be conducting the Contrast Dance Band. Individuals to be performing in today's attraction are vocalists Stuart Aronson, Carolyn Green Ipock, Jeanne Resua and Duane Logue. Others to be performing are dancers Lynne Barnhardt and Robin Webb, the Michels Duo of Kinston and the group, By Prescription Only.

Aronson, singer, teacher and playwright, in past summers appeared in a number of Summer Theater productions. He is the author and director of the Bath outdoor drama, "Blackbeard: Knight of the Black Flag" and is also coordinator of the Sunday in the Park programs.

Mrs. Ipock, the former Carolyn Greene, a Virginia native, received both her undergraduate and graduate degrees in music from East Carolina University. During her student years, she performed in several Summer Theater productions and sang a number of roles in ECU Opera Theater productions. She also sang for a number of civic and private groups in Greenville. Before returning to Greenville to marry, Mrs. Ipock lived in Atlanta where she performed professionally with the Robert Shaw Chorale and the Atlanta Symphony.

Vocalist Jeanne Resua, a music major at ECU, from Annandale, New Jersey, has performed professionally as a singer in New Jersey and in the Greenville area during the past two years.

Duane Logue, professor of Speech, Language and Auditory Pathology at ECU, will be singing a couple of songs, "Wishing" and "Precious Time" from his album "Words." The album, recorded last year in Nashville, is now being considered for national distribution. Logue has had 40 songs published, and presently he is being considered to do the score for a movie.

Dancers Lynne Barnhardt and Robin Webb are both dancers in the dance program at East Carolina University. Ms. Barnhardt of Hickory, is presently performing as a dancer and as the lady pirate Mary Reed in "Blackbeard." Ms. Webb is from Wilson. Both have performed in Dance Theater productions at the ECU Playhouse.

Kinston optometrist Dennis Michels and his wife Jan comprise The Michels Duo. Songs the pair will sing include "Love The World Away," and "You Light Up My Life."

A local music group, "By Prescription Only" features four female singers who work at the pharmacy at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The four are Carol and Donna Whichard, both of Stokes, Brenda Bunn of Falkland, and Elizabeth Smith of Greenville.

Distefano, today's program director, is a faculty member of the School of Music, ECU. He is also a pianist, band director, and composer. Among his compositions are musical scores for two outdoor dramas, "Blackbeard" and the Halifax drama, "First For Freedom." Other work include original music which has been performed by the ECU Wind Ensemble and the ECU Jazz Band, and special music written for the recent Miss North Carolina pageant held in Raleigh.

August 1 Deadline

RALEIGH — The North Carolina Arts Council is sponsoring a touring program for 1982-83 to encourage North Carolina professional performers to tour the state. Deadline for application is August 1.

Dancers, musicians and performing companies qualifying for touring support will be eligible to receive Arts Council funds indirectly as partial payment for performances while on tour. The money awarded for their performance will be administered by local sponsors.

Performing artists and organizations who apply will be judged on artistic excellence, management, touring history and other criteria relating to professionalism. The Arts Council is also awarding grants to help non-profit performing arts groups prepare promotional materials. The grants, up to $2,000, will be used to help pay for materials such as posters, photographs and press kits.

Professional touring organizations may apply in both the touring support and promotional categories.

Funds for Arts Council programs come from the N. C. General Assembly and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Because of the nearness of the deadline date of August 1, interested people or groups should immediately call the Arts Council at 733-7897.

Greenville's Wilderness Park On The Tar River

IN THE LOW AREA . . . of the park near the Tar River, a broad, clear path leads through pools of dark water and stands of large gum and cypress trees. Within this water-forest area, gold light dramatically filters into the darkness of the forest canopy, creating a mysterious world of luminous jade and emerald lights.

Those who like taking their nature strolls southern style, passively without having to do anything but to look and enjoy, have a perfect place in Greenville's Wilderness Park north of Tar River.

In the six years since the City of Greenville acquired the 343 acre tract with a mile long frontage on Tar River, the park has taken on a lush verdancy that surrounds and encloses the still waters of the park's four irregularly shaped ponds.

Native willows, less lacy than their famed weeping cousins but still a graceful tree, form overhanging stands around the pond shores. In the flood area bordering the Tar River towering cypresses filter emerald touched light on the dark waters at their feet. In this hushed area, Lizard Tails, Marsh Pennywort and other water plants grow.

In spring, summer and autumn the park offers seasonal displays of wildflowers. At this time of year, frilly purple and cream Passsion Flowers, nectar laden ivory and gold Button Bush flower globes, orange-stranded Knotweed, tall stems of lavendar Trilisa, dull silvery clusters of Rabbit Tobacco, and many other summer flowers are at their peak.

Sturdy growths of Trumpet Creeper vines put forth their brilliant flower clusters, and along with Virginia Creepers, climb over shrubs and trees, then cascade down to create bowers of vines.

Area people have discovered the quiet pleasures afforded by Greenville's preserved wilderness area. The wide dirt trail that runs through the park is never crowded, and fishing, on the shore or on boat is fun whether or not the catch is spectacular.

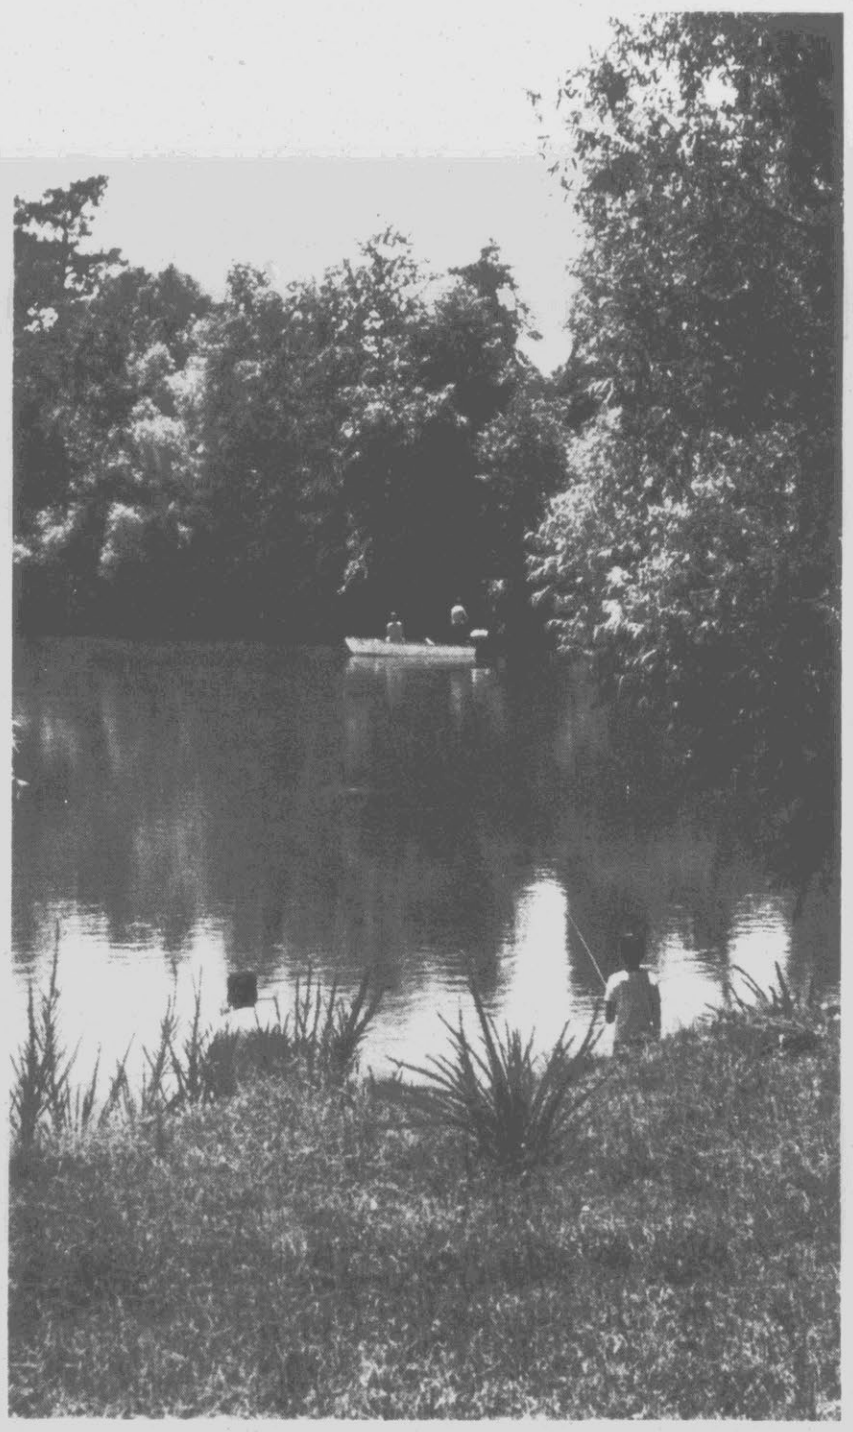

Boyd Lee, director of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, notes that long range plans call for added facilities, but with the concept of a nature area being a paramount consideration. Future plans include one pond devoted to paddle-boats, upgrading the pond or ponds to be set aside for fishing, construction of wooden walkways over the watery areas in the flood plain, and riverfront campsites. Such campsites could be reached by boat or canoe from the Tar River and would be minimum sites for those who like camping in the rough.

Greenville is fortunate in having this sizeable area to develop as a nature site. Originally, the land was given by Barrus Construction Company to the East Carolina University Foundation. The Foundation in turn sold the site to the city of Greenville for $75,000. The park was acquired with one half of the purchase price coming from Community Development Funds, and the State of North Carolina providing a one-time purchase grant for the other half.

Though basically undeveloped, the park has been cleared sufficiently to permit safe use of the area (with sensible precautions). The entry point is on Mumford Road, with parking space provided along Mumford.

SEVERAL PONDS . . . exist within the park, and each has its own distinctive appearance due to slight variations in slope of shores, types of trees ringing the shoreline, and color hues of water. This inland pond has old fallen trees supporting plant growth.

FISHING IN ONE OF THE PONDS . . . whether on shore on from a boat, is a pleasant way to while away sunny hours, whether the catch is reasonably rewarding or non-existent. Native willows are plentiful, and add to the feeling of contentment as their branches sway to even the gentlest breeze.

The Elfencroft

Five Bedrooms Furnish Home

By Jerry Bishop

Generously supplied with bedrooms, baths, and balconies, the Elfencroft, a two story contemporary, provides a workable design for a large family.

On the exterior, the design is dominated by wood balconies and sliding glass doors, in contrast with horizontal siding. Inside, the emphasis is on space, and the floor plan calls for a 23-ft. master bedroom, a family room, living room, eat-in kitchen, and a total of seven balconies.

Guests enter a closeted foyer, with living room to their right. The living room shows a front-facing balcony, plus a folding door at rear that minimizes cross-traffic while allowing host or hostess access to the kitchen.

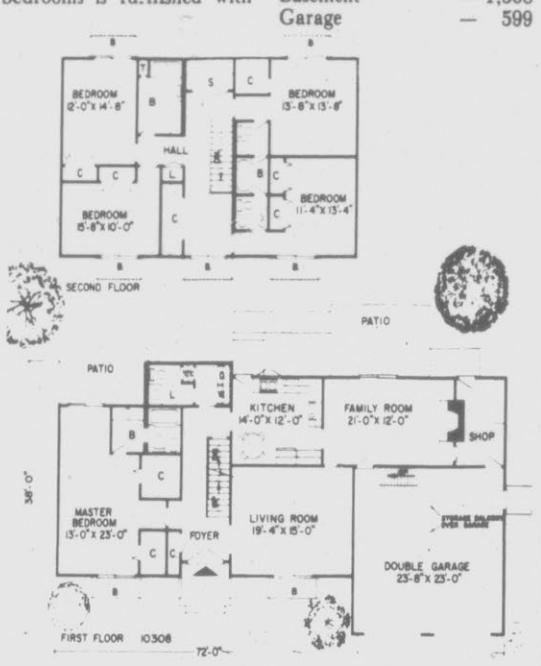

The kitchen is functional and boasts extras such as counter space adjoining the refrigerator, dining space, and an entry to the patio. At right, the 21-ft. family room enjoys a wood-burning fireplace and sliding glass doors to the patio.

Reached from garage or family room, a small shop with built-in workbench offers an ideal area for hobbies or woodworking, and the double garage shows a balcony for storage.

Completing the first level is the expansive master bedroom with nearly 300 sq. ft. of floor space. Besides the two large closets and private bath with dressing area, the master bedroom also merits two pairs of sliding glass doors, one to balcony and one to private patio.

Upstairs, each of the four bedrooms is furnished with sliding glass doors to its own balcony. Closets are generously sprinkled throughout the level, and two and one half baths are included.

Dining Reflects Changing Trend

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Whoever said politics and home fashions have nothing in common?

If anyone did, he is being proved wrong. Today's conservative political climate appears to be mirrored in a corresponding rise of conservatism in home furnishings. Nowhere is this more evident than at the dinner table.

"In the mid '70s, young people didn't want to do the things their parents had done. They rejected weddings and sterling silver," said Tony LaChapelle, an executive with Reed & Barton.

But now, many young adults are not rejecting their parents' version of the good life. "We've noticed a return to traditionalism in the past two to three years," added Lachapelle.

The results of this return are better sales for the finer things such as china, crystal and silver, according to manufacturers interviewed recently during and after the New York tabletop market.

Among trends that showed up at the market, which consumers may expect to see on retail sales floors and in illustrated magazines in the near future, is a return to the formal table. New dinnerware in pastels and with floral motifs was widely shown at the market, as were revivals of old, florid patterns.

The mixing of patterns on the table is an idea advanced several years ago which is catching on with consumers, according to those who watch the trends. And the interest in setting a lovely table is also leading to a wider array of accessory products, such as table linens and decorative centerpieces.

The need to satisfy consumers seeking more information about how to coordinate their tables will lead to tabletop boutiques in stores in the future, according to one china firm. In place of several departments, Valerie Mascia of Mikasa expects to see one department combining glassware, china, linens and accessories within a few years.

The new trends were made known in a market dominated by the introduction of conservative merchandise. Both china and silverware manufacturers reported that many best-selling patterns are revived designs dating from the earlier part of the 20th century.

In flatware, renewed appreciation for traditional has been leading to greater demand for ornate patterns.

"Traditional patterns are always the best sellers in sterling. Modern patterns do not have staying power," said Edward Mulligan, chairman of Towle Mfg. Co.

If there has been a change, he would characterize it as an increased interest in the more heavily embellished patterns instead of simpler, more classical designs.

In stainless flatware, contemporary styles used to be popular.

"But we can't give contemporary away in expensive stainless. When they pay $30 and up for a place setting, people want stainless that looks just like sterling," Mulligaan said.

At least two flatware companies, Oneida and WMF, recreated old silver patterns in stainless steel at the recent market.

A return to the past also was seen in the popularity of more elegant china patterns.

"Choices for the table are getting more formal. You see it in all aspects including crystal and china and even less expensive earthenware for casual dining," said Bob Sullivan, vice president of Lenox China.

Another company where the consumer demand for traditional china has been noted is Rosenthal, which is known for its advanced modern designs. As a result, Rosenthal has increased its line of traditional china in the U.S. and also has started showing more decorative modern designs than the severe styles for which it is known.

Here's The Answer

Q. — We would like to cut the noise between two rooms, only one of which is already in place. We have heard that the best way to do this is to place insulation between the walls, Is that all that is necessary?

A. — Insulation between the walls will help considerably, but that is only part of the solution. Sound travels through metal, under baseboards and even through electrical outlets. There are special non-metal connectors and insulation materials that can be used wherever noise might travel. Your best bet is to go to a dealer that sells this kind of sound-absorbent and deadening materials, explain what you plan to do and ask his advice. That's because each situation presents special problems and requires special solutions. Only an expert who knows your specific problems can give you accurate answers.

Q. — I have to replace some broken window panes soon and would like to cut the glass myself. When I have tried this in the past, I always seemed to run into trouble when doing the cutting with a glass cutter. Either the glass cracks while cutting or the line begins to chip or the cutter skips in places and I have to go back over it. Is there something I am doing wrong?

Q. — The painted wooden floor in our family room is in excellent condition, with no signs of peeling, blistering or cracking, but there are two spots where most of the paint has worn away. In repainting the entire floor, should these spots be given special treatment?

A. — Yes. Take a small quantity of the paint and thin it a bit with turpentine or mineral spirits if it is oil paint or water if it is latex paint. Paint the spots with this mixture and allow it to dry for at least a day. Now paint the floor the regular way.

From various sources come these bits of information of interest to the home owner:

Federal regulations are making it easier for lending institutions to get adjustable mortgage loan rates to make up for the fact that these lenders must pay higher rates to attract savings. But Housing Magazine predicts that the long-term, fixed-rate mortgage will survive because many investors, including pension funds, want a fixed rate of return. A kind of compromise would be a fixed payment mortgage with variable rates. Payments would remain level even when interest rates rise and fall. The proportion of the steady monthly payment that goes for interest charges would be adjusted to the prevailing interest rates. One drawback for consumers would be the possibility that the life of the loan would be extended beyond its original term.

A New York manufacturer has been awarded a patent for a new insulation product consisting of tiny beads of pre-formed, expanded polystyrene. The company says it is an alternative to urea formaldedhyde without its controversial effects. The new material is made of the same kind of beads used in producing the insulating material for drinking cups for hot liquids, coolers and supermarket meat trays. The company discovered that bonding these beads with a special liquid binder during injection into any closed cavity wall created a dense aggregate mass with excellent insulating properties.

If smoke is coming out of your chimney, there is incomplete combustion. Some of those smoke particles are coating the internal surface of your heater, thereby reducing future efficiency, says the Better Heating-Cooling Council. In the heating trade, this smoke is called flue gas and is often nearly invisible. The Council says that if you see this smoke, have the situation looked into by a professional.

Exhaust fans can reduce humidity and lessen the danger of house damage caused by mildew and condensation. Also, says Scoville consumer consultant Marian Finney, whole-house ventilators cut cooling costs when used as a substitute for air conditioning. They are usually installed in a hallway and produce a steady breeze throughout the house to offset outside temperatures of up to 85 degrees Fahrenheit. Even an old-fashioned paddle fan can make you feel 6 to 8 degrees cooler, says Ms. Finney, while an attic fan exhausts the hot air so the house stays cooler over extended periods.

Prison Conducts School In Diving

By RITA BEAMISH
Associated Press Writer

CHINO, Calif. (AP) — Prison inmate Andy Ramirez admits he has been to the depths, in more ways than one. And he can't wait to go back.

But it won't be to return to the low life that found him one night in drunken "craziness" robbing a store, or to the bleak yards of San Quentin prison. Ramirez is heading for the depths of the world's oceans.

Newly graduated from the diving school at the minimum-security California Institution for Men in Chino, 40 miles east of Los Angeles, Ramirez, 28, is embarking on a career as a professional diver.

"This school is the turning point in my life," says Ramirez, who will dive for an offshore oil company in the waters off Saudi Arabia.

Like most of the dozen inmates who graduated with him this spring, Ramirez lined up a job before his prison sentence was completed, hired by one of the major commercial diving companies that seek out recruits from the Vocational Diver Training Program, one of several vocational rehabilitation programs at Chino.

Ramirez — who served a three-year sentence for armed robbery — could barely contain his excitement about his future.

"This is it. This will be my profession now," he says.

Prisoners from institutions all over the state clamor to get into the diving school so they can say the same thing, according to Bob Schelke, the program's director. Schelke, a former Navy diver and instructor, travels annually to the state's various prison facilities explaining the requirements for transfer to the program.

"I've had everything from first-degree murderers, robbers, second degree, assault, bad check writers ... You name it, we've got it," Schelke says of his students.

But criminal backgrounds are not important once the inmates pass the requirements for entrance to the program, including a rigorous physical performance test and individual interviews, Schelke says.

"This place has a reputation in the joints," says recent graduate Michael Maloney. "It has a very highly respected, looked up-to and talked-about aura. No phonies can make it; you've got to be for real."

School is held in a one-time cannery left from the days when the prison had its own crops. The 18,000-square-foot, warehouse-like structure is outfitted with a melange of diving and welding gear, most of it donated; deep diving tanks filled with water, and a weight training room.

Starting with a daily two-hour physical workout, the program blends classroom study with deep water diving practice in a comprehensive course that also includes underwater welding and photography, first aid, rigging and salvage, explosive safety and offshore oil field technology.

There is no room for anyone who uses drugs or shows other lack of dedication, Schelke says.

"Here if a guy doesn't measure up, we just get rid of him," he says. In the recent class, 13 of the 33 who began the program in May 1980 made it to graduation in March 1981.

Shelke says the school also serves successfully as a placement service for its students, and Chino graduates have tested the waters from Singapore to Borneo. Schelke says that in the program's 10-year history, about 10 percent of those who graduated returned to criminal activity.

"I've found them to be more than eager to go out and get the job done," says Frank Sayle, operations manager in Morgan City, La., for Oceaneering International, a Houston-headquartered contract diving firm that has hired Chino divers for several years. "All I'm looking for is an honest day's work. I found these guys more than willing to give us that."

An official from another Louisiana-based diving company says he also hires Chino graduates, but didn't want to talk about it because the last time his comments on the subject got into a newspaper, he started getting calls from "every convict in the United States" asking for a job.

Ramirez figures to make $33,000 in salary and bonuses in his first year. Schelke says "saturation" divers, who stay in a pressurized deep water chamber for days at a time, can make up to $780 a day.

But the money is not the real lure, says Ramirez, who comes from the little town of Corcoran in California's rural Central Valley. "The challenge and the adventure of it, that's what got me into it."

"It's not the salary; it's the opportunity to break out and show myself," says Maloney, who will also work in Saudi Arabia after his release. Maloney says he once "hated every minute" he spent behind his desk at a white collar job. So he quit, and eventually became involved in "weekend rowdy type stuff," which led to his arrest for burglary and then parole violation.

In Ramirez' opinion, prisoners are ideally suited to what others might feel were claustrophobic conditions of saturation diving.

"I've been locked up in a cell 6-by-11 feet," he says. "Us prisoners can handle it. It's nothing new to us. I've been in Quentin. I've walked the yards. Once you've been in there, you can live anywhere."

Schelke notes that with about five major diving companies seeking recruits each year, the school's reputation has developed considerably since a group of inmates who enjoyed recreational diving came up with the idea 10 years ago. "With the great ingenuity of inmates," Schelke says, they wrote letters to recruit instructors and to get funding.

The federal government initially funded the school through the Manpower Act, and the Navy and UCLA were among those donating equipment. In 1973, the state Department of Corrections assumed funding, and today the total budget for the program runs about $65,000 a year, Schelke says.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES H. GOREN
AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q:—I was always taught to lead fourth-best from my longest and strongest suit when defending against an opposing no-trump contract. Now someone in our game tells me that I am dreadfully old-fashioned and that a singleton is often a good lead since it might hit my partner's long suit. Can this be so? What advice do you give?—G. Drew, Portland, Ore.

(This question has been awarded the weekly prize.)

A:—Bridge has developed tremendously over the past decade or two, but most of the changes have occurred in the bidding, not in the play. There has been little if any in basic card-play technique in that time. For example, Watson's "Play of the Hand," written in the '30s, is still a classic textbook on card play.

Leading fourth best from a long suit against a no trump contract is a maxim as old as the game itself, even dating back to the days of whist, and this sound principle is still generally followed. Alternatively, if you have a strong sequence, you might prefer that.

A singleton, however, is usually about the worst lead you can make against a no trump contract—unless partner has bid the suit. It is far more likely to help declarer pick up the suit than to develop tricks for your side. In addition, it may give declarer time to gain control of the hand.

Consider how much partner must have in a suit if your lead of a singleton is to be helpful. And if he does have all that much, how come he didn't enter the auction with a lead-directing bid?

There are times when it is correct to lead a short-suit. For instance, take the case where you have an entryless hand and your long suit consists of five low cards. There is little chance that you can establish and cash long cards in the suit, so you might try to hit partner's suit. But in those cases it is preferable to lead from a three-card suit rather than from a doubleton. Rarely, if ever, do you lead a singleton against no trump in a suit that partner hasn't bid.

Q:—In a recent column you mentioned that, in October, the world team championship will be held in the U.S. Can you tell me where and whether spectators are permitted?—A. McCarthy, Philadelphia, Pa.

A:—In the last two weeks of October, the Bermuda Bowl for Open Teams and the Venice Cup for Women's Teams will be played off in the Rye Town Hilton, Port Chester, N.Y. The matches will be shown to the audience on the Vu-Graph screen with a panel of commentators on hand to analyze the bidding and play. Spectators are most welcome and the fee for watching is nominal.

Send any questions for this column to: Charles Goren and Omar Sharif, care of this newspaper. Each week a prize of a copy of the new "Goren's Bridge Complete," a $9.95 value, will be awarded for the question judged the best received.

Charles Goren and Omar Sharif personally cannot undertake to answer all questions submitted.

Company Name Change Can Prove To Be Costly

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

Major corporations have spent as much as $100 million in their quest for a new identity. And there are other costs, too. Japan's Nissan Motor Co., for instance, spent $60 million just last year to promote its "Datsun" model cars and trucks in the United States but has now decided to change the name to Nissan.

Companies change their name to establish an image, unite a broad range of businesses under the same corporate umbrella, or shed old names that tie a corporation to one location or line of business.

Whatever the reason, a decision to change a name can be a complicated and time-consuming affair, often calling for the services of consultants and lawyers and a facelift for factory signs, letterheads and trademarks.

Nissan, Japan's No. 2 automaker, decided to replace Datsun with its own name over the next three years in an effort to improve worldwide identification with its line of vehicles.

It could spend $100 million just changing signs on dealerships, says Andy Schupack, a spokesman for Nissan U.S.A., the U.S. distributor of Datsuns.

And many of the 1,102 Datsun dealers in the United States are angry.

"I don't see how a dealer in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is going to benefit," says Jim Miller, an owner of Miller-Harries Datsun in Cedar Rapids. "It's not going to help me, it's just going to hurt me."

Miller says he understands that a name change may help Nissan worldwide, but he adds that he expects to have to pay up to $10,000 just to change the sign on his dealership, plus the expense of changing letterheads and business cards.

Schupack notes that Nissan began advertising to identify its Datsun cars as Nissan products in 1978 and began including "By Nissan" tags on the vehicles in 1979. This fall, the subcompact version of the Datsun 510 will be introduced as Datsun's Nissan Stanza.

A company official in Japan says, "As the name Nissan becomes more established, perhaps dealers will think it's more profitable to change." Nissan now sells cars under the Nissan name only in Japan and Kuwait, and under the Datsun name elsewhere.

Peter Slater of Danbury, Conn., executive director of the Datsun Owners Club, which claims more than 3,000 members with interests in auto racing, calls the name change ill-advised.

"It seems strange to advertise and promote a name, as has been done with Datsun for more than 20 years, and then change the name to Nissan," says Slater. "It would be like General Motors calling its Chevrolets 'GMs.'"

But Nissan is not alone.

A total of 285 U.S. corporations changed their names in the first half of 1981, up 38 percent from the first six months of last year, says Anspach Grossman Portugal Inc., a New York-based consulting firm that specializes in name changes and corporate identity programs.

About 40 percent of those changes resulted from mergers and acquisitions, 6 percent involved subsidiaries shed by parent firms and 40 percent involved changes just for the sake of a new identity.

"A name change is indicative that a corporation has gone through a self-examination process," says Russell R. Anspach, owner of the consulting firm. "Usually it occurs in an environment when a lot of other changes are going on."

"We asked ourselves if our name made it difficult for people to understand what we do," Powell says.

In addition to chemicals, Allied has interests in electrical products, fibers, petroleum, uranium, auto seat belts and packaging films. But at the same time, the company realized that its name was well known, because Allied is one of the companies included in the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks. Thus, the company dropped just the "Chemical."

"The benefits (of the name change) are intangible," says Powell. "It will enable us to do corporate advertising. ... There will be better identification of the separate operating units with the corporation and each other."

Powell put the cost of the name change at between $3 million and $4 million. But he notes that even without a name change, the company still has to periodically reorder new stationery and repaint its railroad cars used to carry soda ash and liquid fertilizer.

Anspach says name changes can be particularly expensive for retail-oriented companies, which have to change the name on products, and for companies with many plants and offices.

"It's not something a company should go into frivolously," Anspach says.

Exxon had been known as Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey) for 80 years before changing its name in 1972, a move that required new signs at more than 25,000 service stations and about 138,000 gasoline pumps.

The cost of the change has been estimated at about $100 million. Exxon spokesman Jim Morakiss says that figure is fairly accurate, although it includes expenses that the company would normally incur in periodical modernization of its service stations and equipment.

Exxon's name change efforts began in 1969, when it lost its final appeal in a court battle to market gasoline and other petroleum products under the Esso name nationwide.

At the time, Exxon was selling gasoline under the Esso, Enco and Humble brands, and Morakiss said the company wanted to be able to advertise nationally and to use the same packaging for its motor oils.

It still uses the Esso name overseas and in Canada, but Exxon was selected in part because it has no meaning in any language and because the double-x combination is found only in the language used in Malta.

Experts Differ On How To Replace Cut Funding

By MARIANNE OHE
United Press International

No, say experts on this sprawling, diverse portion of the economy — often called the "third sector" — which makes up roughly 5 percent of the nation's gross national product.

Almost anything that doesn't fall into the government or private business segments of the economy lands in the third sector — private universities, the Girl Scouts, company athletic clubs, "public interest" lobbies.

Corporations contribute about 1 percent of their pretax profits to voluntary organizations. They increasingly donate manpower as well in a bid to take on some of the responsibilities that in recent years have become the province of government.

Reagan sees voluntary activity as a way to make up for part of his $128 billion cut in funds over the next three years.

Republican Party leaders say plans are underway to encourage direct GOP participation in voluntarism at all levels. Some Republicans suggest failure to do so could result in defeat by voters favoring a more concerned, caring party.

However, experts on the third sector say stepped up private giving and voluntarism can't possibly make up for the Reagan budget cuts, $27 billion of which are reductions in direct aid to charitable organizations, according to an Urban Institute study.

The irony, they say, is that federal sources of revenue make up about one third of all nonprofit sector income. So, they say, Reagan is crippling the very sector it expects to take on more responsibility.

"Our chairman Dick Richards is very much for volunteer aid through the Republican party," says GOP deputy national chairman Frederick Biebel. "Presently it is happening in some places. With a strong push from Richards we can have more of it."

A series of GOP meetings last February on future directions of the party spawned a recommendation that said:

"If, as a party, we advocate and execute a program that removes services and does nothing to fill the resulting void, we will be defeated either by those who are being deprived, or by those who, while they may not need assistance today, nonetheless want leadership in this country to be vested in a concerned, caring party."

It suggested the GOP, in addition to promoting voluntarism at all party levels, "should itself be in the service business," taking on community service functions ranging from beautification programs to services for the elderly and handicapped.

But John Simon, a Yale University law professor heading an interdisciplinary project to explore nonprofit sector issues, terms it "extroardinarily unlikely that you can ever increase the amount of giving that much."

Says Fred Schnaue, spokesman for the American Association of Fundraising Counsel, "Some charities are going to go out of business, some programs will no longer exist, and recipients of the benefits of those programs — I don't know what they're going to do."

Responds GOP's Biebel: "How much of that $27 billion is administrative costs that are not needed? I bet you there's a tremendous amount of cost involved in administrative red tape which would not be necessary if you gave it back to the communities. If you do something on a volunteer basis, you can do it a heck of a lot cheaper and faster."

Among businessmen who believe private industry should donate not only money but also leadership and manpower to the nonprofit sector is Robert V. Van Fossan, chairman and chief executive officer of the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co. of Newark, N.J.

"The nation has indicated that it is at least skeptical, if not downright turned off, to the notion of government playing such a large role in the delivery of services and the solving of community problems," he says. "Those of us who would applaud such an attitude now have an obligation to provide the leadership that the volunteer sector needs to meet this challenge."

Based on 1977 Census figures, the Urban Institute projects total expenditures of the nonprofit sector — excluding the religious segment — at $122 billion for 1981, calculated in 1980 dollars. Figuring in the religious sector as 16 percent of the whole — the same share it occupied in a 1974 study — the total comes to roughly $145.2 billion.

More than a third of the sector's revenues come from the government. A little less than a third comes from private giving, including individuals, corporations, bequests and foundations. The rest comes from income on investments.

MONTGOMERY WARD

WILL BE CONVERTING THE PRESENT COMPANY OWNED OPERATION TO A LOCALLY-OWNED LOCALLY-OPERATED BUSINESS IN GOLDSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

We're looking for Sales Agents — ambitious husband/wife teams with an urge to break out on their own. And, we may have just what you're looking for in an established business.

Our unique Sales Agency Store program offers an exciting opportunity to operate a business of your own with a moderate investment, and also gives you the opportunity to take advantage of the investment we've already made, as well as over a century of Catalog business experience. Once you become a Sales Agent, you can use Wards name, catalogs and credit. Sell our branded merchandise with over 100,000 items, and have access to the same systems, concepts and materials we use to operate our company-owned stores. Best of all, your investment will probably be considerably less than would be required for a regular retail business with similar sales volume.

If you are willing to accept responsibility in return for a future in your own business, we'd like to talk about your personal qualifications, and give you more details about our plan. Write today to

Former Minister Retains Power

By JIM ABRAMS
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Watergate sank Richard M. Nixon. African diamonds tarnished former President Giscard d'Estaing of France. Masonic activities dislodged the Italian government. In Japan, Kakuei Tanaka was forced to resign as prime minister because of questions on how he made his fortune.

But Tanaka is unique — neither his 1974 resignation nor his arrest two years later on charges of accepting bribes in the Lockheed payoffs scandal has weakened his clout as one of Japan's most powerful political godfathers.

The 63-year-old politician is back in the limelight with the growth of his faction in the governing Liberal Democratic Party to unprecedented size and talk that he is looking for a comeback as Japan's top political leader.

Tanaka still makes regular appearances at the Lockheed hearings, where he is accused of accepting 500 million yen ($2.17 million) from Marubeni Corp., the trading firm that was sales agent for Lockheed, to influence sales of the American aircraft in Japan.

He also sees some 300 petitioners and loyalists daily at his mansion in central Tokyo, and oversees a political empire capable of exerting great influence over the leaders and policies which direct Japan.

With the addition of three this month, Tanaka heads a faction of 105 Diet (parliament) members, the largest in the Liberal Democratic Party, a loose grouping of conservative factions which held power in Japan almost continuously since the end of World War II.

Although Tanaka has not been an official party member since the Lockheed scandal, he is consulted on all major party postings. Four of his faction members hold Cabinet posts, the same number as occupied by Suzuki's followers.

"The first objective of a politician is to be elected," said Tanaka's secretary, Shigemi Hayasaka, explaining why the aircraft scandal has not deterred young politicians from gathering under Tanaka's wings. "He is very sensitive to the needs of his faction. If someone is in trouble he'll be there."

"The faction leader is expected to help his followers in getting elected, receiving posts, and making good on constituent requests, and no one can do this better than Tanaka," Tachibana said.

Tanaka recently referred to his faction as a "general hospital" in which there is a specialist for every complaint. Surrounded by former bureaucrats, he is said to have allies in every niche of government.

Tachibana said that even in 1976, the year he was arrested, Tanaka escorted a Construction Ministry official to his home district in Niigata in northern Japan to hear the petitions of his constituents for public works projects.

The writer said that "Tanaka is like a god in Niigata," a poor rural state that, thanks to Tanaka's efforts, is one of the nation's biggest recipients of public-works largesse.

Britain's Royal Wedding Receives Live Coverage

The pomp and pageantry surrounding the Royal Wedding of Britain's Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer will be covered by all three networks in live and taped reports from July 27 to July 31. The wedding itself will take place in the wee hours of the morning on July 29.

Broadcasts will include the wedding procession leaving Buckingham Palace on its way to St. Paul's Cathedral, where the ceremony will take place, the entire ceremony, the trip back to Buckingham Palace and the honeymoon procession to Waterloo Station. The networks are also preparing special features on both families and on many of London's historical sites.

Since the royal engagement was announced in February, the wedding has received wide international attention, partly because Charles' long search for a suitable bride has already been well-publicized, partly because Lady Diana was relatively unknown to the world, and, ultimately, because Britain will finally have its future monarchs.

The royal wedding is a complex affair, bathed in tradition. The plans are being arranged under the watchful eye of Lord Maclean, the head of the Queen's household and the master of pomp and ceremony. Under him, Lieut. Colonel John Johnston and a comptroller's staff of 13 are planning carriage processions and orchestrating protocol. The wedding promises to be full of pageantry.

Thousands of people are expected to gather in Trafalgar Square to watch the wedding procession. Although Britain has been plagued with financial and civil problems, a recent survey reveals that 90% of those polled favor keeping the monarchy, in spite of its large yearly pricetag, which last year topped $46 millon.

With Lady Diana's marriage to Prince Charles, she will become the first Princess of Wales since 1910. She is expected to appear at more than 170 official engagements each year, including such annual events as Wimbledon, the Opening of Parliament and the Cowes Regatta.

Greer Following His Luck

"Lady luck and fate have been on my shoulder and I'm thankful for all the chance help I get," says Brodie Greer, who portrays Officer Baricza on NBC-TV's "CHiPs," which airs on Sundays (8-9 p.m.).

"I started in the business sweeping stages at Universal Studios. That's what I did for a year to keep bread on the table and to pay my rent," he adds.

About that time, Greer's good luck started. On a fluke, he looked up the name of a theatrical agent in the Yellow Pages, rang him and got an appointment.

"I couldn't believe that I actually got through, and after the interview the agent signed me," says Greer.

A few months later, Greer had another stroke of luck which actually launched his career. While with a friend who was interviewing for a part on "Days of Our Lives," he flippantly asked the producers if there was a part in the show for him. They answered by giving him a continuing role on the show that lasted for four months.

During his "Days of Our Lives" stint, Greer met producer Rick Rasner. "The meeting was accidental in the commissary when we shared a table in the crowded dining room. He told me he was putting together a pilot show called 'CHiPs' about the California Highway Patrol.

THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK

Perspiration Stains —

With summer's hot and sticky weather, perspiring is our body's system to regulate its internal temperature. But if it's healthy for our bodies, it isn't necessarily so for our garments.

Fresh perspiration is an acid that turns alkaline through bacterial reaction, causing a deteriorating effect on some dyes and fabrics. Misuse of deodorants and antiperspirants can also contribute to color. A CLEANER WORLD suggests that you have your garments cleaned more often during the hot summer months to minimize the possibility of damage from perspiration.

To help you with your cleaning budget A Cleaner World will give you 10% off your cleaning bill when you present this ad.

Michelle Will Tell

Q: I would like to know about John Schneider. NOSEY CYNTHIA, HOLLISTER, N.C.

A: One of TV's biggest heartthrobs, John Schneider is definitely single. He has a younger brother Bob living in New York and a step-brother in Florida. Stars are sometimes funny about giving their ages, but we figure he must be in his late twenties. You can write to John in care of CBS-TV, 51 West 52 St., New York, N.Y. 10019.

Q: Who is the beautiful lady that plays "Kathy" on "Search for Tomorrow"? A.T.V. FAN IN HICKORY, N.C.

Q: Who was the star of "Little Darlings?" I say it's Kristy McNichol but my friend says it's Tatum O'Neal, who's right? M.R., FAYETTEVILLE, N.C.

A: You both are! Kristy and Tatum starred together in "Little Darlings."

Q: On the show "Barbara Mandrell & The Mandrell Sisters," how come Irlene, the youngest doesn't sing by herself? SHELLEY C., ELM CITY, N.C.

A: Irlene Mandrell is a very talented young lady. She sings and plays the drums well. Maybe the show's producers will see fit to let her solo soon. Keep watching!

Q: 1) Are Lynn Redgrave and Vanessa Redgrave sisters? 2) Have Robert Duvall and Al Pacino ever won an academy award? and 3) Where do I inquire about requesting the movie "The Strange Case of Doctor Jekyll & Mr. Hyde" to be televised? C. WILLIAMS, GOLDSBORO, N.C.

A: 1) Yes. Both are the daughters of famed actor Sir Michael Redgrave: 2) No. We agree that both Pacino and Duvall are extremely talented actors. However, The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' members are the ones who decide who gets the OSCAR and they're usually right; 3) Your local channel would be a good start.

Q: What happened to the original Darren Stevens (Dick York) on "Bewitched"? WONDERING IN ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C.

A: Dick York was seriously injured in an automobile accident and had to bow out of the series. He has just recently returned to his acting career.

JOE SPANO STARS as Det. Henry Goldblume on "Hill Street Blues" airing Tuesdays (9-10 p.m.) on NBC-TV.

Priest Becomes Actor

Joe Spano, who portrays the philosophical police detective and hostage negotiator, Henry Goldblume, in NBC-TV's "Hill Street Blues" on Tuesdays (9-10 p.m.), once took the advice of a nun, and divinely inspired, left school at 13 to join the seminary and become a priest.

He lasted two weeks.

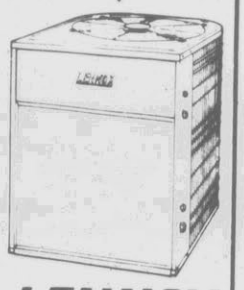

"I got homesick," he confessed. "I think it was that cloistered existence. Some of the impulses that made me want to be a priest made me want to be an actor. The Catholic Church has a lot of theatricality to it."

Born and raised in San Francisco as the son of a doctor, Spano rejoined his family. Working in a produce market, he put himself through the University of California at Berkeley at a time when the campus was at the vanguard of the anti-war student movement in the mid-1960s.

"As a Cal student, I was semi-involved in the demonstrations," he said. "It was an exciting time, although I didn't always know what we were doing."

He graduated in 1967 with a B.A. degree in drama, having been compelled to study acting as a result of seeing a production of Pirandello's "Enrico Quatro."

Movie Star Kidnapped

The CBS Tuesday Night Movie (July 28, 9-11 p.m.), "Stunt Seven," as the name implies, is an adventurous, action-packed drama, abounding in bold and innovative stunts.

The daredeviltry includes a rescue attempt using hanggliders, a series of underwater demolitions, and, as was the vogue when the film was made several years ago, an obligatory battle with a killer shark.

Boudreau (Patrick MacNee), her kidnapper, is a modern-day pirate who bases his world of crime in Freeland, a sovereign fortress state located on stilts in the middle of the Gulf of Mexico. Boudreau holds Miss Wayne in his house there and demands a ransom of $10 million to be paid in 72 hours or he will kill her.

The director of the movie (Bill Macy) and the producer (Peter Haskell) are in an uproar over the abduction, and, in desperation, they accept the offer of a stunt man, Hill Singleton (Christopher Connelly), to organize a rescue team to beseige Freeland.

Singleton heads the "Stunt Seven" of the title, which includes four other stunt men and two stunt women. Each stunt person has a specialized skill that is presumed to make them especially effective in battling the villainous Boudreau.

The daring confrontations between the stunt persons and Boudreau take place on land, sea and in the air before culminating in a predictable denouement.

Sommer says of her association with the real stunt people used in the film, "I understand stunt people perfectly. They're as insane as I am. I do plenty of crazy things. I raced an off-road jeep race in 109-degree desert heat, and won! There were just nine men and me. I won a Cherokee Jeep with everything on it. That's the best prize I had ever won."

Poignant Drama Airs

James Vincent McNichol and Joy Le Duc star as two teen-agers who together attempt to reach the pinnacle of figure skating competition in "Champions: A Love Story," a drama starring Shirley Knight with special guest star Tony Lo Bianco, to rebroadcast on Wednesday, July 29 (9-11 p.m.) on CBS-TV.

Jennifer Warren, Richard Jaeckel and Anne Schedeen also star in the poignant motion picture-for-television that traces the story of two adolescents whose personal relationship blossoms and whose professional relationship matures as they work together towards their common goal — the national figure skating championships.

McNichol stars as Peter Scoggins III, an avid hockey player who gets suspended from the team much to the chagrin of his father (Jaeckel) who wanted his son to follow the masculine, family tradition of hockey.

Le Duc stars as Carrie Harlich, a gifted and skillful figure skater who is pressured into competition by her domineering mother (Knight). Despite the support of her coach, Damschroeder (Lo Bianco), Carrie doesn't have the stamina or the temperament to compete in singles.

Peter finds that without hockey there is a void in his life and Carrie suggests that figure skating might be able to fill it. Peter's love for skating is satisifed and he's challenged by the difficult and athletic aspects of figure skating. Carrie convinces him that they can skate as a pair.

Apart, neither Carrie nor Peter could make it. But together, they stand a chance. And in the face of opposition from Carrie's mother and Peter's father, the two undertake the grueling training necessary for them to try to reach the top, and the glory of competing in the nationals.

John Sacret Young, who produced and directed "Champions: A Love Story," has a first-hand knowledge of drama and success on the ice that goes back to his high school when he played ice hockey.

A Big Family Helps

While Marie Osmond portrays her mother, Olive, in the Project Peacock two-hour special "Side By Side: The Story of the Osmond Family," two other Osmonds are portraying Marie in the film. Brother Wayne's four-year-old daughter, Amy, has been cast as the young Marie and brother Donny's new baby boy will play Marie as a pretoddler.

Sinclair To Host

Madge Sinclair, co-star of "Trapper John, M.D." series, has been set to host the Miss Black America Pageant currently being prejudged in her native Kingston, Jamaica.

Robert Klein On His Own

Robert Klein will present his second comedy special, "The Robert Klein Show," on NBC-TV on Friday, July 31 (9-10 p.m.).

Klein's style of comedy has been described as "Carsonesque." Coincidentally, Klein made his first network television appearance on "The Tonight Show" over thirteen years ago.

"Carson felt secure enough in his own element to give support to a new face trying to make the big time," says Klein. "How can you ever forget something like that?

"Remember, at that time my material was considered hip, different. Johnny helped make me a hit and I was back two weeks later."

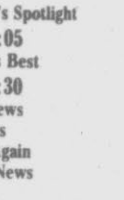

Of his own comedy specials, Klein explains, "Frankly, I wouldn't be in something I wouldn't watch. Look, I'll be as irreverent as anybody, puncture as many sacred balloons as the next guy . . . but I insist it be done with taste, with at least an attempt at class."

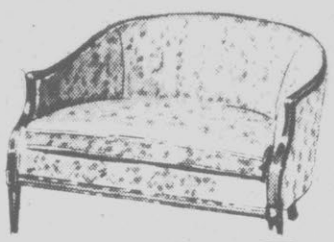

Somebody quoted a contemporary axiom in the comedy and music businesses. "Class doesn't sell tickets." And Klein responded, "Sure, there are plenty who dish out coarseness to get laughs or to fill a theater. But I firmly believe they won't keep an audience for very long. You can be decently intelligent and funny and entertaining at the same time."

Golf Championship Airs

ABC Sports will present live, exclusive coverage of the conclusion of the $150,000 U.S. Women's Open Golf Championship from the La Grange Country Club in La Grange, Illinois, Sunday, July 26 (4-6 p.m.), on ABC-TV. The winner's purse for the U.S. Women's Open is $22,000.

Announcers Jim McKay and Peter Alliss will be joined by Ryder Cup team captain Dave Marr to provide the viewing audience with expert commentary throughout the action packed tournament. USGA Assistant Director Frank Hannigan will provide viewers with rule interpretation and the historical background of the La Grange Country Club and the tournament. Bob Rosburg and Bill Flemming will also be present to serve as roving reporters. ABC will utilize 14 cameras to cover the back nine holes. This special coverage will also include closeups of the top golfers, including Amy Alcott, defending champion, and Beth Daniel, currently ranked eight on the 1981 LPGA money list.

1980 U.S. Women's Open Champion, Amy Alcott, who set a scoring record of 280 last year will defend her title against a field of formidable opponents. Ms. Alcott will be challenged by ten former Women's Open champions including three time winner Susie Berning. Other title holders contending will be 1979 champion Jerilyn Britz, 1977-78 champion Hollis Stacy, 1971 and 1976 title holder JoAnne Carner, 1975 winner Sandra Palmer, 1969-70 champion Donna Caponi, 1966 title holder Sandra Spuzich, 1965 winner Carol Mann, 1963 title holder Mary Mills and the 1962 U.S. Women's Open Champion Murle Lindstrom. The amateur entrants are led by Juli Simpson Inkster, the 1980 U.S. Women's Amateur Champion; Patti Rizzo, the runner-up for that title; and Carol Semple, a semi-finalist.

Ms. Alcott's most pressing challenge is expected to come from 1978 LPGA Champion Nancy Lopez-Melton, whose earnings on the tour this year exceed the $100,000 mark, and Sally Little, winner of the 1980 LPGA Championship.

La Grange is a picturesque, tree-lined course which dates back to the turn of the century. The 6,204 yard, par 72 course is very narrow and extremely flat.

Pike's Peek

HOLLYWOOD — Funny thing happened to MARK HAMILL in New York. He no sooner finished filming a "do-you-know-me?" teleblurp with KARL MALDEN than he applied for an American Express Card — and was turned down.

Twenty-seven-year-old JOHN TRAVOLTA has flipped over sixteen-year-old BROOKE SHIELDS. Thus far they have had two dates and her mama Teri has been along as chaperone — but friends insist this could become one of the great romances of the '80s.

PAT HARRINGTON, the wisecracking, sloppy Schneider on "ONE DAY AT A TIME," has gone on the Beverly Hills diet and to date has dropped 20 pounds. In trying to drop his series image PAT has accepted a serious role in a made-for-TV-movie, "Brothers," currently filming for the new season on CBS.

PAM DAWBER (Mork's Mindy) has had to temporarily bow out of her co-starring role in L.A.'s "PIRATES OF PENZANCE" because of hemorrhaging nodes on her vocal cords.

TAMMY WYNETTE'S first husband, Euple Byrd, is suing the country singer for the way he was portrayed in the recent TV movie of her life.

Police protection had to be called in during intermission at the Greek Theatre in L.A. for ERIK ESTRADA and his current love, BEVERLY SASSOON. It seems "CHiPs" fans just cannot control themselves when they see ERIK in person.

Ever thoughtful FRANK SINATRA knew how to cheer up ailing ELIZABETH TAYLOR. He had a whole box of fresh cracked Maryland crab flown to New York for her. LIZ, who loves crab, was thrilled at the gesture.

PAUL NEWMAN will make his starring TV debut in a biography of Walter Lippman, to co-star his wife, JOANNE WOODWARD. It will be his first TV movie.

JOAN COLLINS and hubby RON KASS are giving thanks for a medical miracle. Their daughter Katy, who was in a coma for months following a car accident in London, and was not expected to survive, is not only approaching 100% recovery, but mystified medical experts agree that her intellectual capacity has increased by 20% over its evaluation before the accident.

FOR JAMES B. EDWARDS, Secretary of Energy

● Less than one percent of the nation's energy is provided by wind turbines. The biggest wind turbines in the world are currently under construction at a site in the Goodnoe Hills near Goldendale, Wash. Each of the three turbines will stand 350 feet tall and will have blades 300 feet in diameter. Each turbine will generate 2.5 megawatts, for a total combined output of 7.5 megawatts, enough to power 2,000 homes. President Reagan's recent action to lift controls on oil prices will encourage the development and use of wind energy and other renewable energy sources by making oil reflect more realistically its true economic costs.

● When Lena Horne opened on Broadway in The Lady and Her Music, she immediately became the toast of the town, earning herself a special Tony Award and a Drama Desk Award. No one was more surprised at the tremendous ovation and outburst of love than Lena herself. She said: "I did not expect all of these wonderful criticisms, so I'm still a bit suspicious. But if you all rewrite next week what you first wrote, t'hell with you. I've got my prizes."

What did you learn from your father, Duke Ellington, apart from a love of music? —F.N., Green Bay, Wis.

● He taught us the way in which we would know what was the right and natural thing to do and that the most important thing was to make yourself into something worthwhile. I always wanted to be like him, and I think I succeeded. I copy his ways and mannerisms. And I think I have his sense of stick-tuitiveness.

FOR HALSTON, couturier

● Impetuous buying. When investing in something that is intended to be meaningful, always go back twice, even a third time, to look at it. You might spot things on those return trips that you did not notice before. Clothes bought in haste rarely please on a long-range basis. Also, these days, when people are buying less, what they do get should be what they really want.

FOR EILEEN FULTON, star of TV's As the World Turns

You're so skinny, and I'm wondering if you ever have a craving for junk food? If you do, how do you resist? —P.L., Waco, Texas

● I'm from the South, and a lot of relatives and friends are Italian, and that means there's always piles of food around, including junk stuff, which sticks where it's least needed. To sidetrack the dangers of junk, I have a rule that when I feel like swallowing, I sip iced tea in the summer, hot tea in the winter.

FOR CAROL BURNETT, co-star of The Four Seasons

Would you have been any different as a mother had you not been an actress? —R.I., Redondo, Calif.

● No, because even if I wasn't a performer, I'd still work. I'm not the kind of person to stay home — I like to be active. If you lead an interesting life, then you are more interesting at home, and to your kids. There are many women who love being at home. That's O.K., but it is a crime the way some stay at home because they feel they have to.

FOR PEGGY GLENN, author of How to Start and Run a Successful Home Typing Business

Are there any Government funds for starting up a home-typing business? —M.G., LaPorte, Ind.

● Unfortunately, Government loans aren't very practical for an aspiring home typist. But you don't need a lot of money to get going. Start with a rented office-quality typewriter. This $50-to $60-a-month investment and start-up supplies are all you need. With effective advertising, this investment can be recovered in weeks.

PRO AND CON

Should the Home Mortgage Interest Deduction Be Substantially Reduced to Help the Economy?

Send questions of national significance, on a postcard, to "Pro & Con," Family Weekly, 641 Lexington Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022. We'll pay $10 for those published.

PRO Rolf Goetze, housing consultant, researcher, Harvard-M.I.T., Joint Center for Urban Studies

People believe that this deduction must be preserved to make housing more affordable. In fact, it enables sellers to obtain much higher prices. It is a cause of housing inflation, not a solution. It induces home owners to remain deeply mortgaged, driving up interest rates. A 25-percent tax credit and a $10,000 cap on deductions would prevent the most affluent from overinvesting in housing, from turning apartments into condominiums and from tying up too much credit in these investments, thereby depriving others of decent housing.

CON Senator Jake Garn, (R.-Utah), chairman, Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee

No. The home mortgage interest deduction should not be reduced. It is a much needed tax break for many Americans. Lowering the deduction would make it even more difficult for people to afford homes — adding to the troubles of the already beleaguered housing industry. I believe it's important for the Government to encourage home ownership. Owning a home is the most solid investment most people in this country have, and substantially reducing the deduction would be a disincentive for home ownership.

What to Watch for When

The Prince Takes His Bride

The Prince is getting married in the morning, so if you plan to tune in, prepare to rise early. But never fear — our insider's guide will wake you up to what's going on.

By Mary Ellin Barrett and Kate White

This Wednesday, July 29, Charles, Prince of Wales, will take Lady Diana Spencer as his bride. The wedding will feature pomp and circumstance never witnessed at even the most spectacular of American weddings, and if you plan to attend via satellite, you'll be in for a royal delight.

One minor drawback: To see a live broadcast of this extravaganza will mean getting up at the crack of dawn. The wedding begins at 5:00 A.M. (E.S.T.) — 11:00 A.M. British time. ABC and NBC will carry the ceremony and related events live as part of expanded additions of Good Morning America and The Today Show, respectively. If you do plan on joining 600 million global TV viewers for the actual ceremony, you may be a bit groggy, so we offer this special wedding guide.

What to Watch for On the Big Day

● Spruced up and looking in his prime, Prince Charles will depart from Buckingham Palace in a 1902 horse-drawn carriage. Lady Diana and her father will follow in a marvelous glass coach, used for every royal bride since 1910. As you watch the procession, see if you can spot the automobile carrying David and Elizabeth Emmanuel, the hot young designers who have created Lady Diana's wedding dress. They will have helped Diana dress that morning at Clarence House and then will rush to St. Paul's Cathedral where they'll stand unseen just inside the door to make sure everything is perfect.

● When Lady Diana arrives at St. Paul's, Lady Sarah Armstrong-Jones, daughter of Princess Margaret and the head bridesmaid, will help arrange the bride's train before she ascends the cathedral steps.

● Take in the fabulous facade of St. Paul's. This is the first royal wedding to be held in St. Paul's since Prince Arthur, brother of King Henry VIII, married Catherine of Aragon in 1501. (Unfortunately, Catherine, who later became the first wife of Henry VIII, wasn't very lucky in love.) The old St. Paul's was leveled in the Great Fire of London in 1666 and then redesigned by Christopher Wren. Royal weddings are usually held at Westminster Abbey, but Prince Charles made this his choice. His decision probably had to do with the fact that St. Paul's is roomier than Westminster Abbey, allowing plenty of space for 2,300 guests and around 350 of an estimated 1,500 journalists covering the event.

● The music you hear upon Lady Diana's arrival will be provided by the State Trumpeters of the Household Cavalry. Prince Charles, a music lover and a musician, has made all the instrumental selections himself and has asked three orchestras of which he is a patron to play. The music will include Crown Imperial March and, of course, Pomp and Circumstance.

● As the cameras take you inside the cathedral, watch for the seating arrangement of Lady Diana's family. Lady Diana's parents are divorced, and both her mother and stepmother are coming. Former spouses are generally not seated together and the seating could thus prove to be, as the British say, quite a sticky wicket.

It's been announced that Diana and Charles are seventh cousins once removed and have a common ancestor in Charles II. But Barbara Cartland, author of the new book, Romantic Royal Marriages (Beaufort), told us that Di is actually descended from William the Conqueror, whose wife was "the first real queen of England."

The Archbishop of Canterbury (right) officiating at Princess Anne's wedding. Note his ornate cope and miter.

● Glancing to the right side of the cathedral, you'll see the Royal Family. Note the color-coordinated outfits worn by the royal women: A member of the English Speaking Union who has been following the wedding closely explained to us that the royal ladies planned their outfits for the big day together so each of them would look distinct but wouldn't clash on TV.

● But don't expect any closeups of the Royal Family inside the cathedral. Buckingham Palace has sent a special request (read: strict order) that TV cameras film no closeups of the wedding couple or Royal Family during the actual ceremony.

● As Lady Diana moves up the aisle, take note of how graceful her movements are. As a child she studied to be a ballerina but her height (5 feet, 10 inches) ruled out a dancing career. She's planning to keep up with her lessons, though, after the wedding.

● Also, try to catch a glimpse of the bride's bouquet. It will contain a small sprig of myrtle — a symbolic touch. The myrtle will have been picked from a bush that grows on the grounds of Osborne, Queen Victoria's estate. It is said that Queen Victoria planted the bush itself from a sprig of myrtle that she carried on her wedding day. Since then, all royal brides have done likewise.

● Officiating at the traditional Church of England wedding ceremony will be the Archbishop of Canterbury, and this will be a special treat for him because he doesn't usually "do" weddings. According to Thomas Campbell, president of Thomas Campbell Vestments Ltd. in New York City, the Archbishop will wear an ornate outer vestment, probably brocade (called a cope and worn like a cape), and a miter on his head.

has tradition behind it. It has been made from the remains of a large gold nugget — from a Welsh mine — which has already produced four royal wedding rings: for the Queen Mother, Queen Elizabeth, Princess Margaret and Princess Anne. The Prince won't receive a wedding ring.

- When the new Princess of Wales leaves the altar with her husband, she'll curtsy to the Queen. Elizabeth may be Diana's mother-in-law now, but she's still the Queen.
- From the cathedral, the couple will head for the wedding reception. Unlike most American receptions, this one will be a breakfast affair and more exclusive than the ceremony. Only a select 120 people have been invited. (The others will just have to eat cake of their own.)
- The menu for the wedding breakfast is under lock and key at this moment. We do know that the cakes (15 in all) are being made by the Royal Navy Cookery school and one will be marzipan-covered fruitcake. There'll be a champagne toast, and there's a wee chance that the bubbles will be pink — Prince Charles loves pink champagne.

A Peek at Diana's Enchanted Past

For the average American to spend an afternoon with Lady Diana Spencer today would take nothing short of a miracle. But a few years ago, a group of women from St. Louis on a specially arranged tour of England had lunch with Lord and Lady Spencer (Diana's stepmother) and the children at Althorp, the family's ancestral home in Northamptonshire.

"We had champagne in a downstairs hall by a grand piano. The girls, including Diana, were very nice — tall and willowy with perfect skin. They were dressed modishly and expressed a particular interest in our clothes. They wanted to know all about us.

"After the champagne, we had lunch in a dining room with a view of cows and rolling hills. Lady Spencer, who is very gracious, went out of her way to put us at ease. I asked the Earl, who is very outgoing and looks like Winston Churchill, if they came to Althorp often. He said they frequently gave parties at the house. He added that he wanted his children to know there was more to life than eating in a London steakhouse. After dessert, Lady Spencer took out a gold compact. That seemed to be the signal that lunch was over."

Will the Bride Wear Pink?

As we mentioned earlier, the Emmanuels have designed Lady Diana's wedding gown. It is safe to say that the dress will be nothing short of spectacular and may even be a bit daring. After all, the Emmanuels designed the sexy black strapless gown Lady Diana wore for her first public appearance as the Prince's fiancée. That dress — and Shy Di's decolletage — drew oooooohs and ahhhhhs from around the world.

Bettmann Archive

It has been rumored that the wedding dress may even be pink. Author Hugo Vickers, says that there is absolutely no statute stating that the wedding dress has to be white. He points out that many royal brides in Victorian times wore wedding dresses covered with multi-colored flowers.

As far as Prince Charles' wedding attire goes, he'll be wearing a blue naval commander's uniform and the blue sash of the Order of the Garter. FW

Royal Wedding Gaffes From the Past

Every wedding has its mishap(s) and royal weddings are no exception. The Palace has guarded against disaster as much as it can. For instance, there are supposedly five copies of Lady Diana's wedding gown, just in case of spills, tears and the like.

Here are a few gaffes from royal weddings past, provided by Hugo Vickers, author of Debrett's Book of the Royal Wedding (Viking).

- On the night of the rehearsal for Queen Elizabeth II's wedding, Prince Michael of Kent punched his cousin, Prince William of Gloucester, in the nose. The Queen Mother took Prince Michael aside and from that moment on kept a fixed eye on him.
- Also at Queen Elizabeth's wedding: A distant cousin of the Queen was angry because she hadn't been asked to be a bridesmaid. So she sat in the King's seat in the church. She was asked to sit elsewhere, and, according to an exaggerated account, the Queen Mother used her umbrella to hook the cousin out of the King's seat.
- And a minor gaffe on the part of the press at Princess Anne's wedding. One BBC commentator, who was giving fashion commentary, had a practical joke played on her by her camera crew. When she told the TV audience to observe two society women in matching hats, the camera focused on two nurses from an ambulance corps watching from the sidelines.

FOOD

Blueberry Recipes From an Old Collection

By Marilyn Hansen

Every summer my family would spend weeks at the Tobin farm in Dutchess County, N.Y. When blueberry season arrived we would spend a day or two picking the ripe berries. Mrs. Tobin made all kinds of delicious dishes with them, and here are several recipes I remember from those times.

BLUEBERRY MUFFINS

2 cups unsifted all-purpose flour
½ cup sugar
3 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup fresh blueberries
1 cup milk
⅓ cup vegetable oil or melted vegetable shortening
1 egg, slightly beaten
Sugar

1. In large bowl, combine flour with sugar, baking powder and salt. Stir in blueberries. Preheat oven to 400°F.
2. Combine milk, oil and egg; beat with fork to mix.
3. Make a well in center of flour-blueberry mixture. Pour in milk mixture all at once; stir quickly with fork, just until dry ingredients are moistened; do not overmix. Batter will be lumpy.
4. Spoon batter using rounded ¼ cup measure into greased muffin-pan cups. Sprinkle tops lightly with sugar.
5. Bake 20 to 25 minutes or until golden and cake tester inserted in center comes out clean.
6. Let cool 3 minutes, loosen muffins carefully with spatula and turn out. Serve hot with butter. Makes 12 large muffins

BLUEBERRY CRAM – SWEDISH STYLE

1½ cups water
½ cup sugar
1 pt. fresh blueberries, 3 cups
2 tablespoons cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 cups half and half, light or heavy cream

1. In medium saucepan, combine 1¼ cups water and sugar; heat to boiling, stirring until sugar dissolves.
2. Add blueberries and cook, stirring until mixture comes to boiling.
3. Blend remaining ¼ cup water and cornstarch smoothly. Stir rapidly into boiling blueberries and cook, stirring constantly until mixture returns to boil. Boil for 1 minute.
4. Stir in lemon rind and juice.
5. Serve at room temperature or cold, with a little cream poured over each serving. Makes 1 quart, 6 to 8 servings

BLUEBERRY PIE

Pastry for 2-crust, 9-inch pie
4 cups blueberries
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon grated lemon rind
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon or ground nutmeg
Dash salt
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 tablespoon butter or margarine

1. Line bottom of 9-inch pie pan with pastry. Preheat oven to 425°F.
2. In large bowl, combine blueberries, sugar, flour, lemon rind, cinnamon and salt. Turn mixture into pastry-lined pan.
3. Sprinkle berries with lemon juice and dot with butter cut in small pieces.
4. Roll out top crust and top pie; seal edges and flute or crimp with fork as desired. Cut a few vents for steam.
5. Bake for 35 to 40 minutes or until crust is golden brown and filling is bubbly. Serve warm or cool. A little vanilla ice cream on top makes a very delicious addition. Makes 8 servings

Do Trade Schools Make the Grade?

By Susan Lapinski

At 19, John Williams enrolled in a private trade school, the Herzing Institute, in Birmingham, Ala. Within six months, he was a computer operator. Now, two jobs and several promotions later, he earns as much as his co-workers, all of whom have college degrees. Referring to the years he worked for pay while his colleagues studied, Williams says. "They were living hard while I was living well."

There are many young people like Williams who are heading for private, postsecondary trade schools rather than colleges. But they aren't the only ones choosing a fast lane to high-demand fields such as data processing, electronics, auto maintenance and medical services. So are housewives returning to the job force, laid-off workers and people in mid-life who want to try a second career.

With a 25-percent jump in enrollment over the last two years to more than a million students, trade schools are shaking their old image as shady operations with matchbook-cover ad campaigns.

Gaining skills quickly in a tight job market is a big factor in choosing a trade school. The majority of courses take between six weeks and a year to complete. "We don't claim to give a general education," says Marvin Barab, president of the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools (NATTS), "just the skills needed for career competency."

Job placement is another consideration. Ethically and legally, trade schools cannot guarantee employment, according to Barab, but most have placement offices which try to match graduates with jobs.

Trade schools are thriving right now, charging an average tuition of $1309 and churning out 250 different kinds of tradespeople, including bakers, carpenters, legal secretaries, machinists and makeup artists. A study last year, financed by the Government's National Institute of Education, found that trade school students dropped out less often than students in publicly funded community colleges, joined the labor market sooner — due to shorter course work — and earned as much at their jobs.

But traditional educators refute some of the study's findings. They say that publicly funded schools — community colleges, technical institutes, postsecondary vocational-technical schools — can offer students similar courses at a fraction of the cost. "There are some excellent public-school programs," says Dr. Gene Bottoms, executive director of the American Vocational Association, which represents publicly financed vocational programs.

Despite growing acceptance, there continue to be complaints about the practices of some trade schools. For example, the New York State Education Department's Bureau for Proprietary Vocational Schools receives about 15 complaints weekly regarding students' problems with financial aid, refund policies and course substitutions. But Michael E.F. Millar, bureau supervisor, says at least some of these problems originate with the students, not with the schools. "Students aren't always aware of the procedures involved in financial aid," he says, "or sometimes they haven't read the refund clause in the school's catalogue carefully enough."

Most states now have licensing laws to weed out bad schools, and the industry has its own voluntary accreditation system (a school invites NATTS to study its teachers, classes, completion rates, etc., to determine if the school should be accredited). Federal Trade Commission officials plan to push for additional rules on refund policies this year.

- Check to see if the school is licensed by the state and accredited by NATTS.
- Visit the school to sit in on classes and to ask administrators and teachers about completion rates, tuition, financial aid, employment-counseling and job referrals.
- Call prospective employers in the area to ask if their companies use the same kind of equipment the school offers instruction on, and if they regularly hire its graduates.

You can also write for a free handbook listing all accredited private trade and technical schools (NATTS, 2021 K Street, N.W., Suite 315, Washington, D.C. 20006). Fw

By John E. Gibson

TRUE OR FALSE?

1. Men tend to base their self-esteem on their sexuality — the number of romantic conquests they have — while women base their self-esteem on other considerations.

2. Men get madder than women when they are provoked.

3. When it comes to making decisions, women are swifter on the uptake than men, faster to assess the pros and cons of a situation and decide on the best course to take.

4. The more masculine a man is, the better women like him.

ANSWERS

1. True. Fordham University, Kean College and William Paterson College investigators found that "males had only one confidence factor and this factor blended high sexual activity with general social confidence and self-esteem; the lead item was frequent sexual activity." They concluded that males who feel confident, in general, consider the amount of such activity rather than the quality of their performance when making self-judgments. Females detach satisfactory sexual activity from both social-acceptance and self-evaluation. Unlike the males, the satisfactory sexual-activity factor has no self-esteem or social-acceptance components. Also females have two sources of self-esteem that are detached from their sexuality: social-ability confidence based on items related to interaction skills and social-acceptance confidence based on items related to likableness.

2. False. Studies sponsored by the National Institute of Mental Health cite findings showing that women are just as aggressive as men and often as openly hostile. The latter, however, is by no means always the case. Women may, on occasion, be actually seething with anger and hide it for reasons of diplomacy under a cloak of polite sociability. A further finding: While most men became most hostile and aggressive when provoked by a male opponent, an opponent's sex "had no effect on the degree of aggression in females."

3. True. Studies at the University of Western Australia on Sex Difference in Decision Time resulted in an interesting finding: Women were found to perform faster on the decision part of various tasks and situations, while men performed faster in translating the decison into action. This may well indicate that women have quicker cognitive abilities.

4. False. In studies at the University of Connecticut, men and women students were given personality tests to assess the masculine and feminine characteristics present in their makeup. Women were then asked to indicate the personality type they most preferred in a man. Results indicated that the women — regardless of how feminine they scored on the tests — did not prefer the most masculine male types but liked significantly more those males whose personality characteristics included not only essentially masculine traits and attitudes but also the sensitivity and empathic understanding found more abundantly in women. The World's MOST EXPENSIVE BRIAR AT OUR RISK

Typical Shape

We comb the world's briar markets and we bid the highest for the world's most expensive briar for our custom made pipes selling from $15 to $30. Rich grained beauties from the best Mediterranean briar fields. Because we're fuss pots, we set aside the briars that have slight surface flaws (which are guaranteed not to affect the marvelous smoking quality). During the slack season, we finish them up as "Goodwill" pipes, no paint, no varnish, no attempt to "cover up" the blemishes. To make new friends, we'll send you one of these sweet smoking beauties to test smoke at our risk. Send us nothing for the briar, we've written it off . . . just send $1 to cover postage and handling. If, after you test-smoke your pipe, you're not delighted, break it in pieces and return to us for your $1 back. Only 1 to a customer on this non-profit transaction. U.S.A. only.

WHAT IN THE WORLD

HIS DOGMA

Forget astrology, tea leaves and tarot cards. There's only one foolproof way to predict what people are really like, asserts Dick Haefner in his book, How to Judge Your Personality by the Dog You Own.

Here's what he says to expect from owners of these dogs: Collie ("When you go to dinner with a collie person, do not expect him to pick up the check"); Boxer ("Sing too loudly in church, are uninhibited burpers and put bumper stickers on their cars"); Beagle ("On Saturday morning, while other men are out playing golf, you will be doing the family wash"); Spaniel ("Easygoing and genial. If you knock over someone while running for a bus, you are lucky if he is a spaniel person"); Chihuahua ("The idea of visiting faraway places appeals to you, but who would water the asparagus fern?").

Joanne Kaplan

Haefner, by the way, owns a Yorkshire terrier, which makes him "active, mobile, involved" — and possessed, appropriately enough, of "a lilting imagination."

WALKING TALL

When Hollywood thinks little, it sure does it in a big way. For the upcoming comedy film Under the Rainbow, starring Chevy Chase and Carrie Fisher, Orion Pictures found 150 dwarfs (or "little people"as they prefer being called) to re-create the roles of the Munchkins from The Wizard of Oz.

Orion Pictures

The film also stars Hollywood's most famous midget actor, Billy Barty. Barty, 56 years old and 3 feet 9 inches tall, has been in some 130 films, including Foul Play, also with Chase. ("Chevy was great with the little people in Rainbow. He got down on his knees and danced.") In 1957 Barty founded Little People of America, an organization to educate both average-sized and little people (those under 4-10) about the unique problems of the short-statured. Today LPA claims as members 3,500 of the estimated 100,000 little people in the U.S.

"We've come a long way in the past 20 years," says Barty who is married to a 4-foot-3-inch woman and is the father of two children, one a little person, one average-sized. "But there are still people who think we can't do much mentally and physically, who don't realize that with adjustments we can do most anything. And, of course, they still stare. But that's O.K. They stare at Wilt Chamberlain when he walks down the street, too, don't they?"

SUCKER!

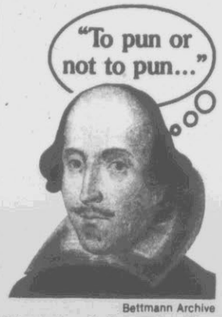

"There's a sucker born every minute," P.T. Barnum used to boast. But according to the book The Odds on Virtually Everything, chances are 100,000 to 1 against this being so. In spring, however, the odds drop to 1,000 to 1. Why? Because spring is spawning season for the North American sucker fish.

DO KIDS BRING HAPPINESS?

The notion that having children will make one's later years more satisfying may be false, according to a new survey of some 2,600 adults over age 50 by the National Opinion Research Center. People over 50 who have had children are no happier than those who never did, and some are less happy, reports Psychology Today. The survey's researchers note that other studies on older people show that friendships, particularly with people of the same age, are "often and perhaps usually more satisfying to older people than are relationships with offspring, grandchildren and other relatives."

HERE COMES THE PUN

In import, it hardly ranks up there with saving the whales, but in case you missed it, four years ago The International Save the Pun Foundation was born.

Bettmann Archive

The pun has had a long and illustrious history, explains the foundation's kingpun, John Crosbie, author of Crosbie's Dictionary of Puns. Among puns' prime proponents were Lewis Carroll, S.J. Perelman, Ogden Nash and William Shakespeare, who punched up his plays with some 1,066 plays on words, notes Crosbie, punctiliously.

Unfortunately, the pun has always suffered from bad punblicity, usually eliciting more groans than guffaws. "People who groan at puns are those who can't appreciate them," says Crosbie. "An ordinary person can tell an ordinary joke, but the pun requires a fresh mind."

To become pun supreme, Crosbie suggests always looking askew at life and practicing — but first in your own room. "If you tell too many at a cocktail party," he notes, "You'll soon become the center of inattention."

Groan.

PAYING THEIR DUES

In 1913 Blackburn College was down to 18 students and almost broke. Then school officials got an idea — put the kids to work.

And ever since, every student at this Carlinville, Ill., school has been required to put in 15 hours a week of free service to the college. In fact, every nonacademic, nonadministrative job at Blackburn is held by students, including such positions as cooks, janitors, clerks, even construction workers. Of the 16 buildings on campus, nine were built by students. All work is monitored by fellow classmates, although townspeople sometimes act as consultants.

Blackburn estimates it saves some $1.2 million annually in construction and maintenance, which helps hold total costs for the 525 students down to $4,100 a year (compared to $6,885 for the average private college). Besides its economic rewards, many parents appreciate the school's good old-fashioned work ethic. As Blackburn's public-relations director, Fred-Otto Egeler, notes, laughing, "My daughter is coming here next year, and I've already talked to the people in construction about her."

● FISH STORY! Fisherman Phil scolded his partner for talking too loud, reeling in too soon and using the wrong bait. But what really irked Phil most was this: HiXspXarXtnXerXcaXugXhtXalXltXheXfiXsh. Drop X's and respace for sense.

His partner caught all the fish.

● Sum Fun! Sue's age five years from now will be twice what it was five years ago. How old is she now? Answer in one minute.

She's fifteen.

● Sign Off! A four-way sign indicating directions at a crossroads lay uprooted in a ditch. How may a traveler use it to tell which way to go?

Stand it up so that it points to place from which person came.

● Riddle-Me-This! Which bats travel with the circus? Acro-bats. Which city stretches the imagination? Elasti-city. Which bugs have beards? Old chiggers. If you have a riddle, send it in.

Just equal are my head and tail,
My middle's slender
Whether I stand on head or heel,
'Tis all the same
to you or me.
But if my head
should be cut off,
The fact is true, although 'tis strange,
My head and body
severed thus,
Immediately to nothing change.

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

CREATED BY HAL FOSTER

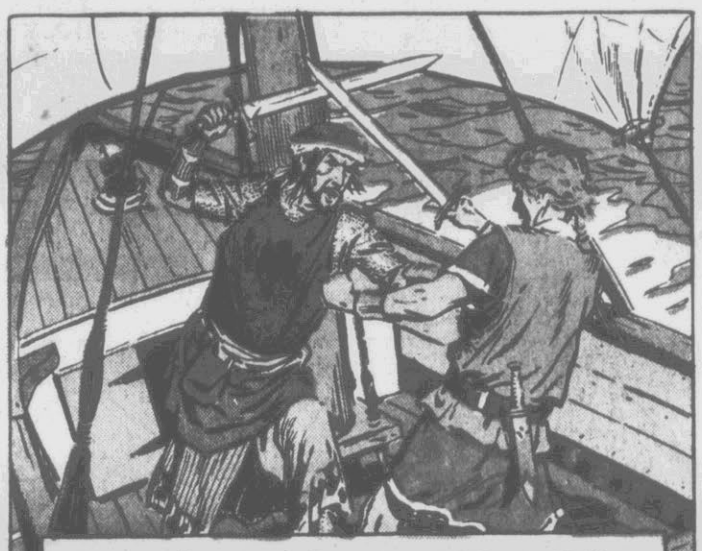

Our Story: STUNNED BY THE SURPRISE ATTACK ON THREE SIDES, MORDRED'S FORCES RETREAT FROM CAMELOT IN PANIC. MORDRED HIMSELF PAUSES ONLY LONG ENOUGH TO REPRIMAND HIS TOP COMMANDERS FOR THEIR STUPIDITY. THAT DONE, HE FLEES.

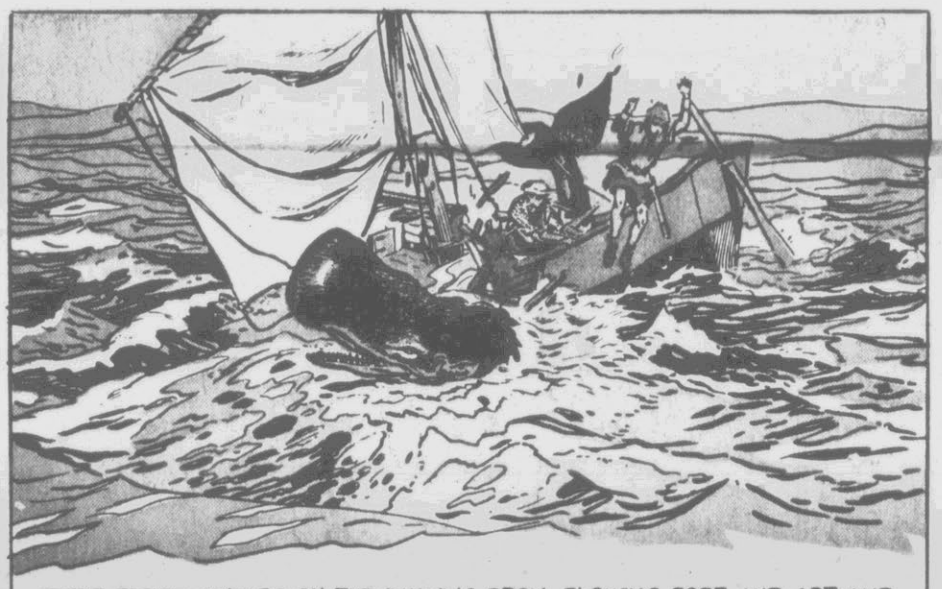

THE ESCAPE WAS WELL PLANNED. KING AGUAR, IN PURSUIT, IS AT A LOSS.

WHERE NOW? THAT, TOO, HAS BEEN PLANNED. A BOAT LIES HIDDEN AND MORDRED, ALONE, SETS OUT FOR THE LITTLE COLONY OF GREENLAND. NO ONE KNOWS HIM THERE. SOMEDAY HE WILL RETURN. HIS DREAMS ARE INTERRUPTED BY THE FALL OF STEPS.

IT IS ARN. "YOU SHOULD HAVE MADE SURE YOUR GENERALS WERE DEAD," HE SAYS. "WE CUT THEM DOWN JUST IN TIME. THE ONES WHO COULD STILL TALK TOLD US ABOUT YOUR LITTLE SHIP." MORDRED'S REACTION IS NOT THAT OF A GENTLEMAN.

THEIR BLOOD MINGLES ON THE SWAYING DECK, FLOWING FORE AND AFT AND SIDEWAYS. SUDDENLY THE BATTLE ENDS. THE WINNER IS THE UNKNOWN SEA. ARN CLINGS TO A FORLORN FRAGMENT AS DAY TURNS INTO NIGHT. HIS WOUNDS ATTRACT UNWELCOME ATTENTION.
